PAMPA -- A Louisiana man was in the Gray County jail today after his forced return to Pampa for alleged violations of parole. Sedrel Allon McGuffin, 35, Mary, La., convicted of the aggravated sexual assault of a child five years ago was returned to Pampa Monday by the Gray County Sheriff's office. Charges filed against McGuffin include theft, a class B misdemeanor, and issuance of a worthless check.

AMARILLO -- Secretary of Energy Hazel O'Leary will be in Amarillo Thursday to speak to the first meeting of the Sarpalius Congressional Club at 7 p.m. in the Grand Plaza Room of the Amarillo Civic Center. Membership to the Sarpalius Congressional Club is $250 annually. Members tickets for the dinner and O'Leary's speech will be $15.

MANASSAS, Va. (AP) -- A woman who cut off her husband's penis was upset over his insensitive love-making and only later claimed rape, a defense lawyer argued at the start of the husband's sexual assault trial. Gregory Murphy, attorney for John Wayne Bobbitt, read portions of Lorena Bobbitt's statement to police in which she complained her husband was a selfish lover who "always has orgasm and he never waits for me to have one."

In the same statement, Mrs. Bobbitt, 24, complained her husband had initiated sex without taking off all her clothes. "That does not sound like the statement of a woman who has been raped," Murphy said.

WASHINGTON (AP) -- The rap group 2 Live Crew is asking the Supreme Court to rule that copyright holders cannot ban song parodies such as the rappers' raunchy takeoff of the rock 'n' roll classic "Oh, Pretty Woman." The song's copyright owner maintains the group is only trying to cash in on the enduring popularity of Roy Orbison's 1964 hit. A ruling is not expected for months, perhaps not until July.

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) -- King Hussein won a free hand to pursue peace with Israel when Jordan's first multiparty elections since 1956 weakened his Muslim fundamentalist and leftist opponents in parliament.

AUSTIN (AP) -- District Judge Bob Perkins, who appointed the people who selected the Travis County grand jury investigating U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison says he contributed $300 to her Democratic rival during this year's U.S. Senate race.

The Republican senator said the investigation of her actions as state treasurer is a partisan maneuver to hurt her re-election chances. The Austin American-Statesman reported today that Federal Election Commission reports also showed that one of Mrs. Hutchison's attorneys, Michael Tigar of Austin, contributed $1,000 to Krueger's campaign.

SAN ANTONIO (AP) -- Inexperienced rescuers' attempts to help an injured whooping crane may have contributed to the rare bird's death, an authority says. Had High Sky been handled differently, it might still be alive, Dr. Mel Richardson, a San Antonio Zoo veterinarian and a national coordinator for whooping crane activity, said Monday.

Richardson's remarks came after results of a necropsy released Monday showed that the bird had not been shot, as first was believed, but died from respiratory failure. The 3-year-old bird was found last week on a ranch near Midland, suffering from a broken right wing, shock and blood loss. Midland wildlife rehabilitator Midge Erskine nursed the bird before it was flown Thursday to San Antonio for medical treatment. It died the next day.

HUNTSVILLE (AP) -- A death row inmate faces almost certain execution Wednesday because he has refused to have appeals filed on his behalf.

Anthony Quinn Cook, 32, was to die before dawn Wednesday for killing a University of Texas student five years ago.

A year early, campaign has begun

By MICHAEL HOLMES
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) -- A year away from the 1994 general election, the Texas gubernatorial campaign is in full swing.

Republican George W. Bush launched his gubernatorial bid Monday with promises to change the status quo and a slap at Democratic Gov. Ann Richards.

Richards said Bush is aiming awfully high for someone with little experience in public office.

"I think you need to show the people that you've been there all along, that you've at least participated on a school board or perhaps been a participant on a crime commission, that you can show that your public spirit has had you truly involved in all these issues if you are going to project yourself as being the one who is going to solve the problem," she said.

Bush, 47, eldest son of the former president and managing partner of the Texas Rangers baseball team, said he was running because he's not happy with the direction Texas is taking.

"I worry Texas is changing and not for the better," he said, adding that he sees property taxes going up, the quality of Texas schools going down, crime threatening all Texans and government growing rapidly.

Bush, whose brother Jeb is running for governor of Florida, said Richards may be popular but she's not effective.

Bush criticized what he said has been a 47 percent increase in state government. He said two-year state spending had risen from $48 billion when Richards entered office to $71 billion for 1994-95.

"That's four times as fast as the rate of inflation, nine times as fast as population growth, 11 times more than the average of the other 49 states, more than twice as fast as our paychecks grew, and more than 4 1/2 times as fast as our federal budget is projected to grow," he said.

Bush proposed a study to determine the costs of a solid, basic education and having the state pay for that. He called for abolition of the regulatory powers of the Texas Education Agency.

He urged no parole for sex offenders and said he favored making it illegal for anyone under age 18 to have a gun without adult supervision.

Rodeo time again...almost

The Top O' Texas Rodeo executive board met this week to start outlining next summer's rodeo. The new board includes, clockwise from top left, Joe Bailey, president; Jerry Foote, first vice president; Billy Scribner, second vice president; Bobby Chase, secretary; Bob Chambers, treasurer; J.R. Baggett, director-at-large, and Floyd Sackett, past president. (Pampa News photos)

Feisty Mrs. Clinton steps up criticism

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) -- Hillary Rodham Clinton calls it "a shakedown period" in the debate over health care, and the first lady is getting feisty as she takes on the critics.

If they "want a real battle ... they'll get it," she told a group of reporters Monday as she also stepped up her criticism of rival health care proposals circulating on Capitol Hill.

Mrs. Clinton said the White House is open to suggestions for changes in President Clinton's proposed health care plan. But she made clear the critics must first demonstrate they have a better way of guaranteeing all Americans health coverage with a broad package of benefits.

The issue of universal and comprehensive coverage is not negotiable, she insisted as she also had during a speech to medical educators over the weekend.

If anyone wants to reduce the amount of premiums employers must pay, "they're going to have to tell us where that money comes from" so that small businesses and low-income workers can be helped in their premium payments, she said.

Mrs. Clinton, who last week accused health insurers of lying about the Clinton plan in their paid television ads, continued her sharp criticism.

"If the forces arrayed against reform want a real battle in which their self-interest is exposed and their real agenda is made public, they'll get it," she promised.

The first lady intensified her criticism of a rival management competition health care proposal being pushed by Rep. Jim Cooper, D-Tenn., and Sen. John Breaux, D-La.

Cooper's bill, supported by 27 other Democrats and 22 Republicans in the House, would not require people to buy health insurance, but provide universal access to such insurance and subsidies to low-income families.

But Mrs. Clinton said that doesn't meet the test of providing coverage for everyone.

"I don't know anyone who has looked at his plan ... who believes it achieves universal coverage," said Mrs. Clinton.

She maintained that under the Cooper-Breaux proposal a national board would determine benefits and insurance companies could make their own adjustments. But Cooper said Congress actually would establish benefit levels.

Cooper also denied a charge by Mrs. Clinton that his bill would make workers pay taxes on their health benefits unless they chose the lowest priced plan in their area. The bill would scale back tax breaks for corporations, but not individuals, he said.

Mrs. Clinton said that only two proposals before Congress, other than the president's plan, would provide universal coverage: a Canadian-style plan backed by liberal Democrats to let the government pay all medical bills, and the proposal by Sen. John Chafee, R-R.I., and 23 other Senate Republicans to mandate that individuals buy health insurance.

She said the White House is willing to negotiate on many of the issues as long as the concept of universal coverage with comprehensive benefits is maintained.

Mrs. Clinton said, for example, the administration was willing to listen to suggestions for lowering the amount employers must pay on premiums if somebody can come up with a way to do it that is fair.

White House hopes NAFTA debate will debunk Perot criticism

By RON FOURNIER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) -- The White House hopes to debunk the loudest critic of the North American Free Trade Agreement tonight in an unusual policy debate: Gore vs. Perot. Tune in.

Vice President Al Gore and former presidential candidate Ross Perot star in the made-for-TV debate on CNN's "Larry King Live."

The verbal exchanges over NAFTA may not tear oodles of viewers away from King's competitors on CBS, NBC and ABC, but the wide-open debate could be more entertaining. There is certainly more at stake.

The White House was still about 30 votes short of approving the trade deal in the House just eight days before the critical vote. Opponents of the deal nervously claimed the votes Monday to scuttle the pact, but the White House had not given up.

"We have the votes now, but of course we need more," said House Democratic whip David Bonior, a NAFTA foe from Michigan. Critics of the trade agreement say they're concerned that Clinton could still peel away votes.

Supporters, who believe dropping trade barriers would create thousands of jobs in the United States, Mexico and Canada, said neither side could yet be sure of prevailing.

Perot, the irrepressible billionaire who got 19 percent of the vote in the 1992 election, will seize the chance to paint the trade deal as a job-loser and a creation of the corporate and political elite.

Gore sought the debate, a move Perot labeled as desperate but a challenge he immediately accepted.

White House officials said they're confident Gore can win the day, but some privately worried that Perot's quips might overshadow Gore's studious arguments and the vice president's sometimes wooden style.

It will not really be a formal debate, but more of a discussion. Officials in both camps expect somewhat of a free-for-all.

Either way, millions of Americans will miss the debate.

Only 60 percent of the nation's households receive the cable network, and King's audience is about 1 percent of the nation's TV-viewing households on a good night.

On the East Coast, the debate goes up against ABC's "Roseanne" and "Coach" and a Barbara Walters special. The film "Die Hard 2" will be on CBS. NBC is airing the final hour of "Victim of Love," a made-for-TV movie, and "Dateline NBC."

Meanwhile, the White House continued pressure lawmakers to support the trade agreement, which would end tariffs and allow the free flow of goods across all of North America.

Wavering lawmakers were invited to the White House for private meetings with Clinton.

Car cost drop pushes producer prices lower

By DAVE SKIDMORE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) -- Prices paid to producers unexpectedly declined 0.2 percent in October, pulled down largely by a peculiarity in the way the government calculates new car prices at the start of a model year.

The drop in the Labor Department's Producer Price Index, issued today, marked the fifth time in six months that prices have either fallen or held steady on a seasonally adjusted basis. They had risen 0.2 percent in September after plunging 0.6 percent in August.

For the year so far, prices paid by wholesalers and others to producers such as farms and factories were increasing at only a 0.4 percent annual rate, compared with a 1.6 percent rise for all of 1992.

Analysts are pleased with inflation this year at both the producer and consumer levels, despite the fluky auto number in the latest report. The slow recovery has kept unemployment high and factory operating rates relatively low, both factors that tend to restrain inflation.

"The bottom line ... is there isn't much inflation out there," said economist Donald Ratajczak of Georgia State University. "There's no evidence the underlying rate is going up and very little evidence it's going down."

In advance, economists were expecting a 0.2 percent increase in producer prices in October. The unanticipated drop allayed financial markets where traders recently have become worried that the stronger economic growth experienced lately could end a period of exceptionally low inflation this year. Prices rose and interest rates fell on the bond market immediately after the report's release.

Without the seasonally adjusted 3.9 percent decline in new car costs, prices overall would have edged 0.1 percent higher. Unadjusted, prices paid to car producers actually increased 5 percent.

The Labor Department adjusted the figure not only to screen out the usual seasonal increase but also to account for the increased quality of new models.

State OKs religious license plate

OREGON CITY, Ore. (AP) -- Gloria Iversen won the right to have vanity license plates that exhort fellow drivers to "Pray."

"Hallelujah, Jesus!" she exclaimed when she learned of the ruling Monday.

The businesswoman and lay minister had sued the state Motor Vehicles Division, claiming its ban on plates that "promote or discourage any form of exercise of religious belief" violates the U.S. and Oregon constitutions.

Circuit Court Judge Sid Brockley agreed, ruling that the state had "created a limited public forum" by allowing car owners to "purchase the right to express their personal ideas and opinions" on custom plates.

The agency may appeal.

Report: Overcharges cost Texans

AUSTIN (AP) — Texans paid almost $25,000 extra to stores last year because of electronic scanner errors, according to state officials.

Overcharges were found on 1.7 percent of 70,350 items checked in 1992-93 by the Texas Department of Agriculture. But consumers also got a break, with undercharges rung up on 1.4 percent of items in the 2,345 inspections.

The average overcharge was $1.21. But the small amount per transaction hasn't stopped state officials from fining hundreds of stores more than $90,000.

"If you were leaving the store and ... someone actually reached in your pocket and took $1.25 out of your pocket, how would you feel about that? And (what if) it had to happen each time you went?" asked Kevin Zarling, Agriculture Department attorney overseeing the scanner inspections.

The chance of being overcharged on at least one item in a selection of 30 varied around the state, according to data collected by Texas Department of Agriculture inspectors on grocery and retail stores.

In Wichita Falls and McAllen, the odds of an overcharge were more than 70 percent. But inspections in Longview and Abilene found no overcharges.

Statewide, 31 percent of inspections found overcharges, usually on one or two of the 30 items checked per inspection. Twenty-six percent found undercharges.

The retail and grocery industries say inspections are subjective and error rates are low.

Retailers also say undercharges often offset the items that ring up too high. But stores and cities with the most frequent overcharges were not the ones with the most frequent undercharges, the Austin American-Statesman reported.

For example, the chance of being undercharged in McAllen was about 10 percent. In Wichita Falls, undercharges occurred during 20 percent of store inspections. But the figure was 50 percent in Abilene.

Zarling said consumers shouldn't think stores are overcharging on purpose.

"The biggest problem would be sale prices not getting into the computer when advertising goes out or when the sale's off and the price gets changed in the computer, but sales signs are not pulled down," he said.

Lefors council pays off loan

LEFORS — Lefors planned to pay off outstanding loans today.

Lefors City Council voted unanimously on Monday to pay back a total of $6,000 in loans to the city that had been made by Lefors Credit Union and by John Deere leasing company in Dallas.

The payment was expected to be made today, said Phyllis Crutcher, city secretary for the city of Lefors.

Also on Monday, Lefors City Council delayed taking action on purchase of a trash-compactor truck for the city's sanitation department. The truck is expected to cost about $6,750, Crutcher said.

Lefors council members discussed a problem of insufficient pumping by the new municipal water well that began during the summer, Crutcher said.

Jamie Johnson, engineer for O.J.D. Engineering of Wellington, is working on the pumping deficiency problem, Crutcher said.

LEFORS — Lefors school board tonight is expected to discuss the campus improvement plan and AEIS report.

Also on the agenda for tonight's school board meeting, the Lefors school board is expected to discuss football-field lighting and consider approval of a waiver to Texas Education Agency rules concerning teacher in-service training.

Gun battle leaves five wounded in Mission

MISSION (AP) — At least one witness heard voices yelling "FBI" before a shootout that left five people wounded, prompting investigators to consider that some of the gunmen may have been posing as narcotics agents.

Two of the victims remained in critical condition late Monday.

David Neubauer, spokesman for the Hidalgo County Sheriff's Department, said investigators were checking the possibility that the incident late Sunday began as an attempted robbery in which the assailants posed as federal agents making a drug bust.

None of the victims cooperated with the investigation; the spokesman said. No charges had been filed as of Monday.

The shooting occurred outside a trailer home northeast of Mission where two of the victims, Lucas Resendez and his brother Mariano Resendez, lived.

Investigators said three brothers — Juan, Gilberto and Ruben Villarreal, all of Mission — entered the home about 11 p.m., Neubauer said.

Investigators believe that after the Villarreal brothers exited the home, the Resendez brothers opened fire and the Villarreal brothers fired back.

"It was like 'Gunfight at the OK Corral' here," Neubauer said.

Neubauer said details were sketchy because the victims and neighbors weren't helping investigators.

The victims from each family made their own way to Mission Hospital, authorities said.

According to nursing supervisors late Monday:

— Juan Villarreal, 35, was treated and released for two gunshot wounds to the left hand.

— Gilberto Villarreal, age unknown, was in critical condition with a wound to the forehead.

— Ruben Villarreal, 30, was in stable condition with wounds to the chest and arm.

— Lucas Resendez, 25, was in stable condition with a gunshot to the back.

— Mariano Resendez, age unknown, was in critical condition with a chest wound.

White Deer ISD to keep method of trustee election

WHITE DEER — White Deer Independent School District will retain its method of electing school board members.

White Deer school board on Monday voted to continue its system for electing members to the White Deer school board, a spokesman for the school district said.

Under the system, seven members of the White Deer school board are elected to the board on a district-wide basis.

In deciding to continue with the system, White Deer school board rejected a proposal to reduce the number of school board members elected on an at-large basis from five to two.

The proposal called for electing five board members individually from smaller voting precincts in which they reside.

The proposal for revising the system under which White Deer residents are elected to the school board had been prompted by a desire to assure Skellytown residents of greater representation on the White Deer ISD school board.

Five of the seven members of the White Deer school board reside in the White Deer area, although the board president, Bruce Brame, is a resident of the Skellytown area.

Miami ISD finances receive commendation from auditor

By JOHN McMILLAN
Staff Writer

MIAMI — An annual financial audit of Miami school district found no irregularities in management of the school district's finances.

At the Miami school board meeting on Monday, Anna Booze, audit manager for Lewis Meers Certified Public Accountants in Pampa, commended the Miami school district administration for the effectiveness of its fiscal management.

"We always enjoy coming here," Booze told the Miami school board. "It's a clean audit."

The audit report concerns the fiscal year that ended Aug. 31, a fiscal year in which the operating budget was $1,553,987.

Booze said that Miami ISD's 1992-93 fiscal year incurred a net surplus of $476,962 as of Aug. 31, offering the district a reserve fund that could run the school district for three to four months in the event of an emergency. The surplus compares with a $480,909 net surplus from 1991-92 fiscal year.

The Texas Education Agency recommends that a public school district maintain a fund balance representing three to five months of the district's

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

It's simple — parents can just pull the plug

Last month, U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno took a bead on the television industry for showing too much violence. She threatened that if "immediate voluntary steps are not taken and deadlines established to reduce depicted violence, government should respond, and respond immediately."

Let's put this in perspective. Some 40 percent of American homes now own personal computers. These computers are advancing into homes at the rate television advanced into homes in the 1950s. Soon, virtually every American home will be hooked up to an inexpensive computer (costing about the same as a TV set) wired through phone lines to the outside world.

Electronic computer bulletin boards are coming on-line at a rapid rate, opening a world of knowledge and entertainment at a small price. But boards also exist that include violent games and pornography. If parents are not vigilant, children can get into these boards. Despite this danger, not even Reno has recommended censoring computer lines — yet.

Just as the First Amendment right to free speech protects computer bulletin boards, so it protects the television industry, and those who choose to watch. Unfortunately, government censorship of broadcast media was sanctioned by the misguided Supreme Court of the 1930s. The excuse for control was that the airwaves were limited. Whatever validity that excuse might have had 60 years ago (and the validity was dubious even then), such an excuse no longer exists in a world of interlinking computers and cable hook-ups offering potentially 500 channels.

Since the court decision, the federal government has used the powers of licensing by the Federal Communications Commission mainly as a force for political control. The sort of "values control" advocated by Reno has been an excuse for political control. According to University of Texas Law Professor Lucas A. Powe, an expert on the communications industry, the FCC posed as the protector of public morals. "But apparently (the real key to getting a license) was having the right politics."

Instead of tightening government control, Reno and the rest of the Clinton administration should advance the complete decontrol of this medium.

When, last April, Reno ordered the assault on the Branch Davidian headquarters in Waco, did the television coverage of the awful event encourage adolescent imitators? Should the news cameras have been restricted? Indeed, Reno explained her appalling decision by claiming she wanted to protect the children in the compound. In the ensuing inferno, 85 people died, including some 20 children.

In her concern about children seeing too much violence on television, Reno should avoid incinerating every American's First Amendment right to free speech.

All that's needed to protect children from violence on television is for parents to pull the plug, and to be more careful about what videotapes they rent and show in the home.

Surpassing Hitler and Stalin

The box of tea looks like any other. It contains 100 bags of black tea marketed under the brand name Yingteh, imported from China, bought for $2.69 at a California supermarket in 1990. Only one thing distinguishes it from any other box of tea: It was produced by slave labor in concentration camps.

China's economy has been one of the world's great successes over the last decade and a half. Its total gross domestic product now exceeds that of every country but the United States and Japan. Most of China's growth has come from the dramatic relaxation of government controls that stifled progress under Mao Zedong. One important part of it, though, is production by prisoners in the Chinese version of the Gulag Archipelago.

The Chinese communists, who surpassed Hitler and Stalin in mass slaughter, have also outdone them in the use of forced labor. The author of one book on the subject, Jean-Luc Domenach, characterizes the system as the "biggest enterprise of slavery" in the 20th century.

Hongda Harry Wu, a Chinese scholar who spent 19 years in various labor camps as a political prisoner and has written another recent book about the system, estimates that 50 million people have passed through the gulag and that at least 16 million remain there — many for offenses that wouldn't merit imprisonment in the civilized world.

Seeing the conditions they endure would make a sadist smile. Wu says that in the 1960s, he and his fellow inmates were given only two steamed buns a day to sustain them, and he himself was thrown into solitary confinement in a tiny cell, where he nearly starved to death. Today, he writes in Laogai: The Chinese Gulag (Westview Press), "hunger is a constant fact of life" for all inmates, and those who are too ill to work sometimes get no food at all.

Medical care is often denied. Prisoners work at strenuous physical jobs for 12 to 14 hours a day, seven days a week. Beatings are common, as is torture, including the liberal use of electric cattle prods on genitals and other body parts. One of the clever innovations of the Chinese system is forcing many prisoners to stay long after they have completed their sentences — in some cases, for life.

The original purpose of the camps was thought reform — to purge counterrevolutionary ideas and create a "new socialist person." Though political indoctrination remains a regular part of the routine, it takes a back seat nowadays to providing labor for state concerns.

Wu says that because the labor is so cheap, this type of production is "highly efficient and, predictably, very profitable." The output of the camps makes up a substantial share of the economy and sometimes ends up being exported, an achievement that could only inspire envy in the overseers of Nazi and Soviet labor camps.

Writing in the latest issue of the British journal The China Quarterly, Jean Pasqualini (another alumnus of the Chinese prison system) notes that "electronic appliances, towels and hosiery made by (Chinese) prison labor can be found in any French supermarket." The United States, unlike France and many other Western countries, bars the import of prison-made goods, but Wu has found that some slip through — like that box of tea bought in California.

If Hitler were still in power and exporting products made by Jewish concentration camps, Americans wouldn't dream of allowing them across our borders. The Bush and Clinton administrations, to their credit, have made some effort to block such commodities, without much cooperation from the autocrats in Beijing. In 1992, the United States reached an agreement with the Chinese to stop the shipment of prison-made products and to investigate alleged violations, but the Chinese government does not make a fetish of keeping its word.

The United States has raised 31 different suspicious instances. The response from the other side, as Assistant Secretary of State Winston Lord recently told a congressional committee, includes "poor communications, slow and cursory responses to investigation questions and stonewalling or rejections of requests for visits." U.S. officials have been allowed to visit only one requested site.

The administration says that unless the Chinese do better by next year, it will have to revoke normal trade relations, a step that would steeply increase tariffs on Chinese goods. That would be a mistake because it would punish the many companies producing in the increasingly free private sector for the sins of the government.

The United States should certainly make every effort, though, to deny the Beijing regime the profits of slave labor and to expose these practices for all to see. The Chinese government has made considerable progress on human rights since the era of Mao, but the world shouldn't overlook its persistence in one of the greatest human rights abuses of our time.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Tuesday, Nov. 9, the 313th day of 1993. There are 52 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Nov. 9, 1938, bands of Nazis began roaming the streets of Germany and Austria, looting and burning synagogues as well as Jewish-owned stores and houses in a pogrom that became known as "Kristallnacht" or "Crystal Night."

On this date:

In 1872, fire destroyed nearly 1,000 buildings in Boston.

In 1918, Germany's Kaiser Wilhelm II announced he would abdicate. He then fled to the Netherlands.

In 1953, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld a 1922 ruling that major-league baseball did not come within the scope of federal antitrust laws.

In 1963, twin disasters struck Japan as some 450 miners were killed in a coal-dust explosion, and 160 people died in a train crash.

Old everybody-else-was-doing-it

Perhaps for the first time ever, the old everybody-else-was-doing-it defense seems to have worked.

I know I've been trying it for years, but have never gotten anywhere with it. There was the time a group of us were in the woods with our air rifles.

We came upon an abandoned house. Somebody decided it would be fun to shoot out the windows of the house with our air rifles.

It was fun. Great fun. Glass going everywhere.

Later at home the phone rang.

My mother uttered those fateful words into it. "They WHAT?"

Turned out the house wasn't nearly as abandoned as we had thought it was. It was abandoned only to the extent the people who lived there were at work when we decided to shoot out their windows.

My defense? "Everybody else was doing it, mother."

My mother spanked me, took away my air rifle privileges and sent me to bed with supper. Whenever I did anything wrong, my mother spanked me and sent me to bed with supper. She made me eat liver.

When I was married, I missed a dinner with my wife's aunt or somebody. That's because I was at a bar with a group of my friends.

My excuse? "Everybody else stayed late," I said.

It didn't work then, either. My wife locked me out of our bedroom and forbade me more valuable privileges than that of the use of an air rifle.

Lewis
Grizzard

The everybody-else-was-doing-it defense was always met with that inevitable question that always made you feel like an idiot.

Remember that?

"Everybody else was doing it, mother."

"Well, if everybody else jumped off a bridge, would that mean you would have to do it, too?"

"Of course not," you always wanted to say. "That's not the same thing."

But you never said that, because you knew everybody-else-was-doing-it was a lousy defense in the first place, and you had used it only when you figured out there was no chance of lying your way out of the situation.

But now we go to Los Angeles and the Reginald Denny trial. There's a videotape that shows clearly a defendant hitting another man in the head with a brick.

The blow nearly killed the man. Put him in a hospital for weeks.

The defense? There was a riot going on at the time and the defendant really didn't intend any harm.

Everybody-else-was-doing-it.

The jury bought it.

I can just see my mother on that jury.

"Well, if everybody else in South Central Los Angeles had decided to jump off a bridge, then would he have done THAT, too?"

My ex-wife would have voted to hang.

I wasn't at the trial. I wasn't a member of the jury. And nobody is yet to arrive at a better way to determine criminal guilt or innocence better than by getting a dozen folks together to listen to evidence and argument and then vote their convictions based on those two elements.

So I am not here to cry about the travesties of justice, racial polarization and the fear of conviction based on what might transpire afterwards.

I'm just here to ask what, if anything, endures. For as long as there have been transgressions, it seems they could never — inside or outside a courtroom — be explained away by saying one just sort of got caught up in the spirit of the moment, in the push of the crowd, in a fit of emotional contagion and find a sympathizing ear.

I never could, and I ate a lot of liver and watched a lot of cars drive out of a lot of driveways as a result.

Clinton needs a new secretary of state

To grasp what is really wrong with President Clinton's malfunctioning foreign policy machine — and how to fix it — we'd best start back in New Hampshire, 1992. Remember what happened every time someone asked about (of all things) health care reform?

Paul Tsongas had a plan and an answer. Bob Kerrey had a plan and an answer. Bill Clinton had no ready plan, no ready answer — but he knew this was a major problem that demanded both, even though his team of advisers had produced neither. So, when pushed to respond about health reform in a debate or interview, Clinton invariably launched into a filibuster of sorts, rambling, thinking as he spoke, trying out phrases that sounded like policy yet left wiggle room.

Now fast-forward to Clinton's response when he was challenged on foreign policy the other day by interviewers from The Washington Post. What he produced was a transcript that is revealing and unsettling. It is a portrait of a foreign policy president as a young man. To read it is to feel as though we are sitting in a college dormitory with an earnest but still unformed student-leader who has engaged us in a discussion that has gone late into the night. There is requisite rambling, seemingly on-the-spot rethinking. At times we can almost sense the gears shifting in mid-sentence, to test a new thought or avoid admitting an old mistake.

Was the president satisfied with his foreign policy team's performance?

Martin
Schram

"Yes ... I think it hasn't anything to do with the foreign policy team being asleep at the switch. In the last month or so we've been very busy dealing with Russia and the Middle East ... both of which, in terms of our immediate national interest, are far more significant than our obligations in Somalia. But I think we learned some things, and I don't think — I think we will not make those — those problems won't rise again."

How can the United States be a world leader while focusing on domestic priorities?

"... You've got people in the Congress that may be making talks about how America should be the world's leader, but look at what they do to the foreign aid budget of a lot of the other things. I don't think you can divide the two. ... But let me back up and say, my belief is you're never going to have the American people looking outward again, except when they think their interests are affected and then they can see it clearly. They got it on Russia and I made the case early and I made it strong, but they got it. ... They understand, the American people do, how the difficulties in the Middle East foster worldwide networks of alienation and terrorism. So I think they have that. ..."

Our dormitory bull session on global leadership has the makings of an all-nighter. But it's time for our domestic policy-oriented president to stop thinking he can get by with just cramming for his foreign policy tests. He can start by getting a first-class team leader who can properly prepare him for these years of non-stop exams.

Clinton can start by hearing and heeding the well-intentioned jibbs from fellow Democrats in Congress for the resignation of his secretary of state. Warren Christopher is a solid and stolid lawyer who is simply unequipped to best serve this president in this age without rules and whereas Clinton requires a foreign policy conceptualizer.

Now consider: Secretary of State Zbigniew Brzezinski — a return of sorts for the former Carter national security adviser who backed Clinton in 1992 (at Clinton's urging) after endorsing George Bush over Michael Dukakis in 1988. Recall Christopher's so-called effort yet, when he so bungled the attempt to persuade Europe to stand more strongly against ethnic cleansing in Bosnia. Surely a Secretary of State Brzezinski would have handled the matter more adroitly.

Clinton knows the commitment it required to shape a health reform plan and master its details. He dare give us no less for foreign policy.

Youth arrested in connection with Anaheim fire

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A 17-year-old was reported arrested in connection with a wildfire that burned two dozen homes in Anaheim.

Anaheim Councilman Irv Pickler said Monday that the teenager confessed to starting a blaze that burned 750 acres last month. As many as five other youths may have been involved in something that "got out of hand," Pickler said.

City officials scheduled a news conference today to discuss an arrest but refused to provide details.

An outbreak of 26 wildfires from Ventura County to the Mexican border 200 miles to the south has killed three people and destroyed hundreds of homes in Southern California since late October. Investigators say 19 of the fires were arson.

Firefighters on Monday attacked hot spots in the only fire that hadn't been quenched — the Malibu blaze that destroyed 390 houses on some 19,000 acres.

A homeless man has been charged with causing a wildfire that destroyed more than 100 houses in Altadena after he set some brush on fire to warm himself.

And on Monday, Thomas Lee Larsen, a 43-year-old convicted child molester, was charged with mailing letters threatening to set fires in Southern California to get even with the government for seizing his property.

Federal prosecutors said they haven't tied Larsen to any of the wildfires.

Investigators said Larsen admitted writing a letter signed "Fodbuster" that was sent in August and September to about 35 law enforcement agencies and to Los Angeles County homes picked at random.

"If I get no satisfaction by the time we get a real good volatile fire season you'll really regret it you'll see," the letter said. "They burned me now I'm going to burn back. I fight fire with fire."

The writer demanded apologies from the judge, prosecutor and agents involved in a case against him. Larsen was apparently angry over the 1977 seizure of a duplicator, camera equipment, printer and station wagon in connection with a counterfeiting investigation, FBI Special Agent Richard G. Palacios said in an affidavit.

Larsen was held without bail. He could get up to five years in prison and a $250,000 fine.

He has a criminal conviction dating to 1971 that includes convictions for child molestation, counterfeiting and assault with a caustic chemical, according to the FBI.

Court records also show Larsen has been arrested twice on arson charges, once at age 9, when he was accused of trying to set fire to a church, and again in 1976, when he was accused of trying to burn the Sands hotel in Las Vegas.

AIDS workers, doctors upset by tainted blood hysteria

BERLIN (AP) — Workers at this storefront AIDS center are cynical about the tainted blood scandal that has tripled calls to their hot line. They think the government and media have encouraged unwarranted panic.

"The press and the government have created all this hysteria," Gerda Hansen, head of Berlin's AIDS Forum, a counseling and outreach office, said Monday. "It is making our work a whole lot more difficult."

Hansen said callers who have a high risk of infection are now in the minority. She said the new breed of frantic callers includes the elderly man who got blood during gallbladder surgery, or the young mother given a transfusion after delivering a child.

"The risks of people getting AIDS in blood transfusions is minimal," said Hansen, who would rather focus on therapy sessions for kids with AIDS or on educating the public.

Since federal Health Minister Horst Seehofer announced last month the discovery of blood products infected with the virus that leads to acquired immune deficiency syndrome, hardly a day has gone by without a media blast.

The cover of Monday's editions of the respected magazine Der Spiegel says it all: "AIDS Angst —

Dirty Business With Blood."

Last week, the hysteria hit a crescendo after authorities announced they had traced four cases of HIV infection to the company UB Plasma, which stands accused of illegally cutting corners in testing and then selling a contaminated product.

Seehofer recommended that anyone who has had a transfusion since the early 1980s and feared they might be infected should get tested.

The country's largest-circulation daily, Bild, followed the suggestion with a front-page headline suggesting three in 16 Germans would be doing just that.

First Amendment gives difficulties to trying to restrict violence on TV

By DIANE DUSTON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress seems intent on passing a law to restrict television violence, but protectors of the First Amendment are betting no such measure ever will be enforced.

The courts won't allow it, lawyers for the American Civil Liberties Union and the television networks say.

Nevertheless, the bipartisan momentum in Congress for legislation to reduce violent TV programming is strong.

Eight bills have been introduced. They range from a requirement that TV sets be manufactured with a computer chip that could be programmed to block violent shows to a mandate that the Federal Communications Commission make reducing TV violence a condition of television station license renewal.

One or a combination of them is likely to start moving toward enactment at the beginning of next year.

Attorney General Janet Reno told the Senate Commerce Committee recently that several of the bills would pass constitutional muster. But she acknowledged later that she was not familiar with all the case law, so the Justice Department is continuing to review the subject.

The concern is and always has been that TV violence causes the real thing, particularly among young people. Supporters of the legislation say the courts have allowed restrictions to protect children and point to limits on indecency.

But indecency is different, say First Amendment advocates.

It has been specifically defined as references to excretory functions and sexual organs. Although a ban on such talk has been rejected by the Supreme Court, the broadcast industry has generally accepted that it should be restricted to between 8 p.m. and 6 a.m.

Violence, however, has never been defined by law.

And even if it were, lawmakers see some violence on television as beneficial. News shows, for example, would be exempt from restrictions and "good" violence, such as war dramas or depictions of brutality designed to deter such behavior, also would be all right.

Lawmakers oppose "happy" violence, which is akin to slapstick, and sensationalistic or gratuitous violence.

But imagine the questions the FCC will have to ponder if a law is passed and the commission must draw the boundaries.

Would it be acceptable to show a woman shooting a rapist in self-defense, but not a mugger shooting an innocent victim?

How much spilled blood would be needed to illustrate the horrors of war without being gratuitously gory?

The National Coalition On Television Violence defines violence as "the deliberate and hostile use of overt force by one individual against another."

Using that definition, would a drama about the Civil War be allowed on the air when children might be watching?

The creative community has traditionally made these judgments and critics of the push for new legislation say the public should complain to them, not to Congress.

"The law can't tell the difference between good and bad violence," says attorney Floyd Abrams, a First Amendment expert who successfully defended NBC against charges that a rape shown in the 1978 made-for-TV movie Born Innocent caused a similar real-life incident.

"When you start talking about banning or limiting or channeling the amount of violence on TV, you are talking about directly interfering with First Amendment rights," said Abrams. "Speech about violence is not only integral in the most important works of film and literature in our history, but has been explicitly protected."

A full-blown First Amendment battle over the issue has never been waged. The TV networks aren't girding for one now, but the American Civil Liberties Union is.

"We think this is a very critical fight and has implications for the information superhighway we are about to have," said ACLU legislative counsel Robert Peck.

Peck said the concern among lawmakers is that some individuals cannot separate television fiction from real life. He argued those concerns could be resolved by teaching media literacy in school, instead of restricting speech.

Meanwhile, the networks are trying to convince Congress that they're as concerned as everyone else about the level of violence in society.

Besides producing the tamest TV season in 25 years this fall, they plan to simulcast a special about violence and alternatives to it. They also plan public service announcements against violence along with scripts and story lines that deal with the issue.

Lawyer posts Kevorkian's bail, thwarts hunger strike

DETROIT (AP) — A lawyer angry that Dr. Jack Kevorkian's jailhouse hunger strike was getting so much attention bailed him out to thwart the publicity.

"I think they've reduced the issue of suicide and assisted suicide to a hysterical bunch of rhetoric that has no meaning," John DeMoss said putting up the $2,000 that got the 65-year-old Kevorkian released Monday.

Kevorkian had been dragged off to jail in an assisted suicide case Friday rather than post bail himself, and had threatened suicide by hunger strike.

The doctor said that he was disappointed to learn that the bond was posted but that there was no way he could refuse to leave jail because "that would be unconscionably headstrong."

DeMoss said that he is sympathetic to terminally ill people who want to end their lives but that he does not support Kevorkian and his backers.

"If I can get him out of jail and get those people to stop protesting in front of the jail and saying, 'Free Jack' and so forth, then I think my $2,000 is well spent," the lawyer said.

DeMoss met Kevorkian at the Wayne County Jail. The two shook hands, and Kevorkian, who was unshaven and appeared sallow after fasting on juice and water, thanked DeMoss.

Kevorkian has been present at the deaths of 19 people since 1990 and is awaiting trial in two suicides. He was jailed after Judge Thomas Jackson raised his bail to $20,000 and required him to put up $2,000.

Prosecutors had requested the increase to keep Kevorkian from violating Michigan's 8-month-old ban on assisted suicide.

Wharton resigns No. 2 State post

WASHINGTON (AP) — The administration is looking for a foreign policy heavyweight to replace the first key member of President Clinton's national security team to resign.

Clifton Wharton, the State Department's No. 2 official, blamed "sustained anonymous leaks to the media" for his departure after only eight months as one of the administration's highest-ranking black officials.

He said in a written statement released Monday night that the leaks were impairing his effectiveness. Wharton said he decided to step down rather than allow his effectiveness to be eroded.

A senior U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Secretary of State Warren Christopher met with Wharton last Saturday and discussed the possibility of Wharton's serving as an ambassador or in some other capacity.

But no agreement was reached, said the official, and Wharton decided to resign.

Wharton's criticism of media leaks surprised some analysts, who had not detected any such campaign against him.

Clinton and Christopher expressed regret over Wharton's departure and praised his contributions to the administration.

Although no successor has been decided on, the administration seemed intent on recruiting a professional with broad experience.

One official prominently mentioned was Thomas Pickering, who took up duties as U.S. ambassador to Moscow only a few months ago and is highly respected by his peers at the State Department.

Also mentioned was Winston Lord, the assistant secretary for East Asian and Pacific affairs; and Michael Armocost, a former ambassador to Japan who retired recently from the foreign service.

'Remains of the Day' proves huge draw in limited release

By JOHN HORN
AP Entertainment Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Remains of the Day, an elegant drama set in England on the eve of World War II, opened strongly at the box office, outdoing by some measures such low-brow fare as Look Who's Talking Now.

Tim Burton's The Nightmare Before Christmas was the No. 1 movie over the weekend, making $7.7 million in its fourth week of release, while Remains of the Day, playing in just a few theaters, made $1.5 million, Exhibitor Relations Co. reported Monday.

The film about a butler's devotion stars Anthony Hopkins and Emma Thompson. Although it finished 13th overall, glowing reviews and strong word-of-mouth may give it the same success enjoyed by last year's Howards End, which had the same co-stars and was produced by the same team.

Remains of the Day, one of five films making debuts over the weekend, averaged $16,266 per theater location. By comparison, the sequel Look Who's Talking Now made $4 million in its premiere for sixth place, but averaged an anemic $2,165 per theater location.

The worst debut was that of A Home of Our Own. The family drama starring Kathy Bates made a weak $808,000 for 17th place.

Flesh and Bone, a thriller starring Meg Ryan and husband Dennis Quaid, opened at No. 2 with $4.5 million. Robocop 3 made $4.3 million in its first weekend for third place.

Here are weekend's top 20 films, according to Exhibitor Relations. Estimated ticket sales are from Friday through Sunday, with distributor, weekend gross, number of North American theater locations, average per location, total gross and number of weeks in release.

Figures are based on actual receipts and projections where actual figures were not available.

1. The Nightmare Before Christmas, Disney, $7.7 million, 1,671 locations, $4,599 per location, $26.7 million, four weeks.

2. Flesh and Bone, Paramount, $4.5 million, 1,200 locations, $3,764 per location, $4.5 million, one week.

China offers to let Red Cross have access to prison inmates

BEIJING (AP) — In a gesture likely to boost goodwill at next week's U.S.-Chinese summit, China's foreign minister said today his government was willing to consider allowing the Red Cross to visit its prisons.

In the past China has insisted its treatment of prisoners is an internal matter. Allowing the Red Cross access to inmates could help China satisfy U.S. conditions for renewing China's low-tariff trade status next year.

Foreign Minister Qian Qichen also said China hopes the summit will put relations back on a "normal track."

"We believe at present that Chinese-U.S. relations are at an important juncture," Qian said at a news conference as he prepared for the encounter between President Clinton and Chinese President Jiang Zemin.

The two men will be attending a Seattle meeting of the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation forum.

It will be the first U.S.-Chinese summit since early 1989, when President Bush visited Beijing. Two months later, Chinese students began pro-democracy protests that China violently suppressed. Relations declined.

Clinton, who took office pledging to push China to stop punishing political dissidents, recently switched to an approach of frequent high-level contact.

Qian ticked off a list of issues he said China is willing to negotiate but pointedly left off its most-favored nation trade status, which guarantees low tariffs on China's products. He also avoided linking the prison visits to the trade issue.

Rather, he reiterated China's longstanding position that the United States should not impose political conditions in exchange for most-favored nation trade status for China. "Trade is trade," Qian said. Imposing conditions "is a means left over from the Cold War."

Most countries exchange MFN status as a matter of course.

But Clinton has imposed conditions for next year's renewal and said one factor would be whether China makes progress on human rights, including allowing visits to prisons.

Qian said China could not allow all humanitarian groups access to its prisons because there were too many. But he said his government would allow the Red Cross to visit, though that organization had not asked to do so.

"I believe if the International Committee of the Red Cross makes such a request, we can give it positive consideration," he said.

The Red Cross does not make its findings public unless the host country does so.

The head of the committee's regional delegation, Christophe Swinarski, said the Red Cross would seriously consider the offer. But Swinarski, speaking by telephone from his Hong Kong office, said the visits could take years to arrange.

With few exceptions, and then only to show off model prisons, China has barred foreigners from its prisons.

Released political prisoners have described harsh treatment, including use of painfully tight shackles and lengthy detention in cells too small to stand up in.

"When the word gets around China that the Red Cross is going to be visiting prisons, I think this will have a salutary effect on wardens," said John Kamm, an American human rights activist based in Hong Kong.

On other issue, Qian said putting pressure on North Korea would not help resolve the dispute over international inspections of its nuclear facilities.

Justices refuse to let Hawaii schools hire only Protestants

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court Monday refused to let two religious schools in Hawaii hire only Protestants as teachers.

The justices, without comment, rejected the schools' argument that they qualify for a federal job-bias law's exemption for some religious schools.

The Kamehameha elementary and secondary schools in Honolulu are operated by a private, non-profit charitable trust created in 1884 by the will of Bernice Pauahi Bishop, a member of Hawaii's former royal family.

Her will said all of the school's trustees and teachers must be Protestants, but the will did not restrict them to any particular denomination.

The schools require children to take religious education classes and participate in daily prayers. Students in grades 7 through 12 must attend a weekly devotional service in a chapel on the school grounds and are encouraged to join religious organizations.

The exclusive hiring policy was challenged in 1989 by Carol Edgerton, a non-Protestant who sought employment as a substitute French teacher.

Edgerton complained to the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. The agency sued the school, contending the Protestants-only rule, violated a law known as Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

A federal judge decided the school qualified for the law's exemption for schools that can show they are a "religious educational institution."

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reversed, ruling that the Kamehameha schools may not require all of their teachers to be Protestant because the schools are not "primarily religious."

The schools' non-religious courses are taught from a secular perspective, and the schools do not try to persuade their non-Protestant students to become Protestants, the appeals court said.

In the appeal acted on Monday, lawyers for the schools said the appeals court "relies on nothing other than its own view about what is religious."

The 9th Circuit court's ruling threatens the religious character of hundreds of religious schools and colleges that are not owned or operated by a church group, the appeal said.

Justice Department lawyers urged the high court to reject the schools' appeal. They said the appeals court ruling still allows independent schools to win an exemption as long as their purpose is primarily religious.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR READERS: When "Fed-Up Stepmother in Lancaster, Pa.," asked my readers to respond, the mail came pouring in. There are many frustrated stepmoms out there, but there are others who are happy. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: The day my son was born, I sat in the hospital and cried. I knew being a parent was the hardest job in the world. The day my first husband and I divorced, I sat in the courtroom and cried. I knew being a single parent was the hardest job in the world. The day I married my second husband (and his two kids), I sat at the reception and cried. I knew being a stepparent would be a breeze after what I had already been through.

Then reality set in. Nothing is harder than raising another woman's children. You are a constant reminder to them that their mother left them. And for some reason they just know it's your fault. Daddy and Mommy aren't together anymore. Somehow that is also your fault. They also have to share Daddy with "her."

I strongly believe the fathers of these children are just as much to blame for the problems. They do not believe their children are anything less than perfect. They allow these kids to control them through guilt and manipulation. These men refuse to make a united stand with their wives because their guilt would kill them. They are cowards.

I've been to hell and back with this so-called "blended family." I could write a book, but who has the time? I sleep with one eye open and my back to the wall, emotionally exhausted. I have begged my husband to face reality, but after five years, it's like banging my head against a wall.

I started counseling two years ago to save this marriage and family. Thank God, I realized I needed to save myself from any more humiliation and abuse. I love my my husband, but I'm starting to love myself more. I am regaining my self-esteem. I'm getting a job, and I'm taking my kids away from this hell. I just wish I could see my husband's face in 10 years, when his kids are gone and he starts looking around the house for me. Sign me...

A REAL MOM FIRST

DEAR ABBY: This is for the upset stepmother: It's time to step down. I don't know how long you have been one, but having suffered the same fate for almost 30 years, let me tell you - it doesn't get any easier.

When the kids are young, it's fights and tantrums; when they're teen-agers you get pouting, rebellion and "You can't tell me what to do — you aren't my mother!" You suffer through their miserable relationships, their failed marriages, and they give you their children to raise. Then your husband dies and you are the wicked stepmother who stole their inheritance.

Take my advice: Learn to drive an 18-wheeler, throw your bags in the cab and ask for long cross-country hauls. And when you're too old for the road, drive far, far away, leave your belongings into a wheelbarrow, push yourself to the nearest elderly housing project, and get an unlisted phone number.

BEEN THERE

DEAR ABBY: I was moved to write after reading the letter from "Fed-Up Stepmother in Lancaster, Pa." How sad for her!

I fell in love with the father of three children, whose ages were 7, 5 and 2. Before we tied the knot, we had many discussions regarding my role as a stepmother.

Well, 14 years and a few bumps and "learning experiences" later, I am proud to call these charming young adults mine, and I love and enjoy them as my own.

PROUD AND HAPPY MOM IN COLORADO

Photographer finds her niche in a blind

By D.W. PAGE
Associated Press Writer

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Elbows and egos made Lynda Richardson reassess her career in news and corporate photography.

In 1986, she traded in the rush and fury of daily picture deadlines for the patience and guile needed to wait nearly a month in a watery blind to get a picture of a timid Central American duck.

Now the 34-year-old Richmond resident is considered one of the rising stars of wildlife photography, with a current exhibition touring natural history museums.

After graduating from Mary Washington College in Fredericksburg with a degree in art, Richardson apprenticed with several studio photographers. That led to a job as an amusement park photographer.

In her spare time, she worked as a stringer for The Associated Press in the early 1980s, shooting everything from college basketball to the General Assembly.

"It was high stress, rush, rush, rush.... Maybe because I am so short, I was always getting elbowed out of the way by the other photographers," said the 5-foot-2 photographer.

At weekends she pursued her long-time fascination with animals and photography. When she was in third grade, her father had given her her first camera, a small box camera, and she'd promptly begun taking pictures of everything and anything.

"My eyes and mind would suck all the wildlife pictures out of magazines and books my parents got me," she said. "Those visual images reinforced my feeling for animals. Animals are so dependable. They give me a feeling of fulfillment."

On weekends away from politics and sports, Richardson said she found her love of the outdoors and her avocation for photography meshing.

"I realized I was tired of the hustle and bustle, the stress, all the politicians, CEOs, star athletes and their attitudes. I got tired of the egos and the elbows," she said.

Her husband, free-lance photographer Tim Wright, encouraged her to turn full time to wildlife photography.

Since then her job has taken her all over the United States, to Africa and to Central America. She has shot for National Geographic publications, the Smithsonian Institution, the National Wildlife Federation, the Sierra Club, and news and wildlife magazines and publications in this country and overseas.

John Nuhn, photo editor of National Wildlife magazine, says Richardson has a style of her own. "Lynda... maps out what she wants to shoot to illustrate the story. She researches the animals and the people involved," he said. "She can make things happen without disturbing the animals."

Richardson's work has brought her face to face with a rare canebrake rattlesnake at a range of 18 inches. And in Africa, she met a bull elephant on a very personal basis: "We crawled out on our hands and knees to within 5 feet of him."

Her guide suggested she not move, no matter what — as long as she and the guide remained on their hands and knees, the elephant would take them for warthogs.

"I was somewhat offended by that characterization," she said, laughing.

NEW YORK (AP) — L. e. n Deighton, whose fiction has included "The Ipcress File" and "Funeral in Berlin," offers a volume of non-fiction in "Blood, Tears and Folly." In this objective look at World War II, Deighton offers an analysis of the failures and successes of both sides and how they affected the war's outcome.

Toronto is the setting for Margaret Atwood's new novel, "The Robber Bride." It's the story of the beautiful, ruthless and manipulative Zenia, who wrecked the lives of three women colleagues during the 1960s. They thought she had died until they spot her years later while they are dining at a restaurant.

John Grisham's "A Time to Kill," Grisham's first novel, is again available in hardcover. This Mississippi courtroom drama tells of a father who kills two men accused of brutally beating his young daughter.

FOOTBALL

BEREA, Ohio (AP) — The Cleveland Browns waived Bernie Kosar, ending a short and stormy relationship between the quarterback and coach Bill Belichick.

Kosar, who agreed to a non-guaranteed, seven-year, $26 million contract extension five weeks ago, had been benched by Belichick in favor of backup Vinny Testaverde, who was signed as a free agent during the summer.

Kosar, who turns 30 on Nov. 25, started 105 games in nine seasons after Cleveland chose him in the 1985 supplemental draft. A native of nearby Boardman, Ohio, Kosar led Miami to the national championship in 1983.

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Tampa Bay linebacker Jimmy Williams said a confrontation with a Detroit Free Press reporter was in no way related to her being a woman.

Williams and Michelle Kaufman exchanged words after the player pushed past her to get to his locker following the Buccaneers' 23-0 loss to the Lions on Sunday. He said he nudged her so he could pick up his coat and bag to leave and spend time with family members, who live in Detroit.

Kaufman, who was interviewing linebacker Hardy Nickerson at an adjacent locker, said Williams shoved her and said: "You don't belong here."

The NFL is investigating the matter.

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Pittsburgh cornerback Rod Woodson said a Cincinnati player made a racial slur at him during the Steelers' 24-16 victory Sunday.

The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette reported that two unidentified Steelers said Bengals receiver Carl Pickens taunted Woodson with the phrase, "Jungle Fever," a reference to a film about a white woman who falls in love with a black man. Woodson, who has a black father and a white mother, is married to a white woman. Pickens is black.

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Pro Bowl guard Carlton Haselrig returned to the Pittsburgh Steelers, six weeks after leaving the team to enter a substance-abuse treatment center for the second time this year. The Steelers are expected to seek a one-week roster exemption for Haselrig, who has not played since the Sept. 5 opener against San Francisco.

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Dallas Cowboys quarterback Troy Aikman, limping after injuring his left hamstring in Sunday's 31-9 victory over the New York Giants, said he might try acupuncture in an effort to play against Phoenix on Sunday.

CHICAGO (AP) — Chicago Bulls forward Scottie Pippen will miss at least five games after being placed on the injured list with chronic tendinitis in his right ankle. Pippen underwent minor surgery on the ankle during the offseason.

PHOENIX (AP) — The Phoenix Suns traded guard Negele Knight to the San Antonio Spurs for a future second-round draft pick. Knight, who averaged 6.1 points and 2.8 assists in 52 games last season, is eligible to become an unrestricted free agent at the end of the season.

LAS VEGAS (AP) — A six-year infractions case involving the UNLV men's program is expected to be resolved today when the NCAA announces sanctions.

The settlement, agreed to by UNLV and NCAA officials, caps a probe that began in 1987 and centered on the recruitment of Lloyd Daniels. UNLV has admitted to 28 violations.

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — Sheryl Swoopes, who led Texas Tech to the women's NCAA title last season, won the 1993 Babe Zaharias Female Amateur Athlete of the Year Award. Swoopes played professionally in Italy before quitting in October to return home.

BASEBALL

DENVER (AP) — After failing to sign free agent Andres Galarraga, Colorado Rockies general manager Bob Gebhard said the club will begin shopping for possible replacements for the National League batting champion.

Gebhard said the team could not tie up the estimated $11 million to $12 million it has offered Galarraga any longer. Galarraga hit .370 with 22 homers and 98 RBIs last season.

NEW YORK (AP) — Former baseball commissioner Fay Vincent agreed to serve on the New York Mets' board of directors after declining to join the team as vice president of business operations.

EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — Edmonton Northlands, the non-profit organization that runs the Coliseum, has been granted an interim injunction preventing Oilers owner Peter Pocklington from taking further steps to move the team.

Northlands vice president Bob Westbury said the organization sought a ruling from the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench in Calgary because Pocklington has openly negotiated with Minneapolis officials.

Aikman may be sidelined against Phoenix

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

IRVING (AP) — Dallas coach Jimmy Johnson said he might wait until 2:30 p.m. Sunday to decide whether Troy Aikman will test his injured hamstring against the Phoenix Cardinals.

"It's a day to day deal," Johnson said.

Aikman limped around Valley Ranch with the first pulled hamstring of his athletic career Monday but the Dallas Cowboys quarterback said he would even try acupuncture to get off the doubtful list to play next Sunday against Phoenix.

The good news for the Cowboys was that Aikman didn't tear the left hamstring when he went down in a heap in the third period of Sunday's 31-9 victory over the New York Giants.

"It's pretty sore and I'm sure there is some bleeding but doctors don't believe it's tearing," said Aikman said. "I'm day to day this week. Nothing has been ruled out. But you'd have to be optimistic to say I'll play this week."

Aikman said he's treating the injury with ice packs.

"There are some other players who have had success with it, so I'll give it a try," Aikman said. "I'll look into it."

Aikman said he had never pulled a hamstring in his high school career at Henryetta, Okla., or in college at both Oklahoma and UCLA.

"I didn't even know what it felt like," he said. "I didn't know how to act. It just popped. There's been very little swelling. It's amazing I've never had any problems before considering the fact my hamstrings are tight."

Aikman said if the game against the Cardinals was Monday "I couldn't play."

He added "If I can't help the team and I can't move I wouldn't jeopardize it (the injury). I'll listen to the doctor on this one."

As Aikman spoke a teammate came by and took his lunch order, a double cheeseburger with fries and a shake.

"At least there are some benefits to this thing," Aikman quipped.

Dallas coach Jimmy Johnson said he will take the conservative approach in dealing with Aikman's injury, considering his Super Bowl MVP quarterback has never had a pulled hamstring.

"I've seen several hundred of them," Johnson said. "We want to make sure Troy is healthy and ready to go before we bring him back. We want him 100 per cent well."

Jason Garrett, who replaced Aikman on Sunday, and Hugh Millen will be carrying the practice load.

"If Troy is unable to play, Garrett will start," said Johnson. "Jason did a fine job Sunday."

Johnson said he might wait until kickoff on Sunday to decide whether to play Aikman.

"It's a day to day situation with Troy and it might be 2:30 p.m. on Sunday before I make a decision," Johnson said. "We don't expect Troy to be out any significant amount of time."

Johnson added "the team has a lot of confidence in Jason." Aikman has a streak of 24 consecutive regular season starts, second-longest among NFL quarterbacks.

Aikman's long list of injury problems include an operation for a herniated disc in June, operations on his right elbow and shoulder, and the index finger of his left hand.

He's also been bothered by a slightly separated left shoulder and injured ribs.

"Well, at least this hamstring has made me forget my ribs," Aikman said.

Pampa quarterback Joel Ferland (12) gets set to pitch to teammate Matt Garvin during last week's District 1-4A game against Randall. The Harvesters meet Plainview at 7:30 p.m. Friday at Canyon's Kimbrough Memorial Stadium in bi-district playoff action. (Pampa News photo by David Bowser)

Preparing for the playoffs

Friday, Nov. 12. Mark it on your calendar. That's when Pampa and four area teams go into the bi-district round of the football playoffs.

The Harvesters (8-2) take on Plainview (10-0) at Kimbrough Memorial Stadium in a Class 4A clash. The two teams met during the regular season with Plainview coming away with a 14-8 win on Sept. 17.

Pampa and Randall are district co-champions, but the Raiders are the No. 1 seed after beating the Harvesters, 30-10, last week.

Canadian and Wheeler are both representing District 2-2A this season. Canadian (9-1) meets Spearman (7-2) in Pampa's Harvester Stadium while Wheeler (5-4-1) goes against Stratford (9-1) at Sanford-Fritch.

Canadian won the District 2-2A title while Wheeler won a coin flip against Clarendon and Panhandle to emerge as the District's No. 2 playoff seed.

Canadian (9-1) hasn't lost since the season opener Sept. 3 against West Texas High. Wheeler (5-4-1) made a big turnaround after finishing last in the 2-2A standings last year.

White Deer (8-1-1) meets Hart (9-1) at Canyon in a Class 1A showdown. After finishing fourth in the District 1-1A race a year ago, the Bucks went through the district unbeaten this season.

In the six-man ranks, Groom (8-1) hosts Chillicothe (7-3) in a rematch of last season. The Tigers were unbeaten in district play and earned the right to play on the home field after losing a coin flip last year.

"Last year we had a home and home coin flip and Chillicothe won. The rules state that we play at home this season since we played there last season," said Groom head coach Terry O'Dell. "This will be an on-going thing as long as we play Chillicothe."

All of the playoff games are scheduled to start at 7:30 p.m.

Light contact drills secret to Gunter's success

By JAIME ARON
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Because Gunter players cut down on contact drills early this season, they're still alive for the state title. At least, that's how coach David Gage sees it.

Gage eased his players into the season hoping to keep them fresh down the road, building toward the goal of a state title. His plan has worked as the Tigers have climbed to the top of The Associated Press' final regular season high school football poll.

Also notable in the final ranking released Monday is the culmination of a wire-to-wire season atop Classes 4A and 3A by defending champions Waxahachie and Southlake Carroll.

Dallas Carter, which opened the season ranked second, took Class 5A's regular-season crown and pre-season No. 5 Boyd finished the season atop Class 2A.

Gage's group entered last weekend No. 2, then pounded Prosper 58-0 as top-ranked Crawford fell 9-7 to Riesel. That combination impressed 24 of the 27 sportswriters and broadcasters across the state enough to vote the Tigers No. 1.

"That's the way to do it," Gage said. "Early in the year, we made up our mind that we didn't want to peak too early. So we slowly put things in and we've been real consistent doing what we want to do."

One of the big things Gage changed was the amount of hitting in two-a-day practices and early season hitting.

"We just wanted to save some intensity for later this season," he said. "We're pretty simple in what we do. We just tried to keep the kids in good spirits all year."

The team's main cog is senior Cody Bounds, a star receiver and defensive back who Gage said has sacrificed personal numbers for the team's benefit this season.

"He's done a little bit of everything," Gage said. "He returns punts and kickoffs, plays wide receiver, carries the ball some as a wingback and on defense he's a great centerfielder at safety."

"We've been real good about not giving up big gains and he's one of the main reasons. He covers a lot of ground out there."

Gunter is off this weekend, enjoying a first-round bye in the playoffs. Next weekend, the Tigers will face the Lindsay-Mildred winner.

The time off hurt them last season when they were eliminated 35-20 by Valley View in the area finals.

No matter how this season ends the future is bright for Gage and Gunter. The second-year coach has a lot to look forward to with seven underclassmen starting on each side of the ball.

Following Gunter are Bremond, Tenaha, Overton and former No. 1 Crawford. Celeste, Alvord, Sudan, Collinsville and Runge round out the list.

Carroll just completed its seventh-straight undefeated season, tying a national record held by five other teams. The Dragons also extended their state record by winning their 71st-straight regular-season game.

Bob Ledbetter's crew was one vote away from a unanimous top spot, with No. 3 Marble Falls earning the lone dissenting vote.

Sweeny is second, Gainesville is fourth and Reagan County is No. 5. Coldspring, which lost last season's title game to Carroll, is sixth, followed by Van, Port Arthur, Austin, Tatum and Vernon.

Carter's 55-14 trashing of then No. 5 Dallas Kimball cemented the top ranking for the Cowboys. They're seeking their first state title since 1988, which they later lost in court.

Preseason No. 1 Converse Judson finished the season second, followed by DeSoto, Odessa Permian and Galveston Ball.

Houston Yates, which lost the Division II title game last season, finished the season sixth, followed by last year's Division I title loser Euless Trinity, Houston Cy Creek, Lewisville and Dallas Kimball.

Waxahachie capped a dominating season in which the Indians were seldom threatened by whipping Midlothian 37-3. They enter the season as the favorite for a second straight 4A title.

La Marque overtook Highland Park for second, moving the Scots to No. 3.

Austin Westlake is fourth, followed by Stephenville, Plainview, A&M Consolidated, CC Calallen, Bay City and New Braunfels Canyon.

Playoff fever at Fort Elliott

Playoff fever has hit yet another area team, and believe it or not, it has absolutely nothing to do with football. Class A Fort Elliott, which boasts the area's most successful team, is still playing volleyball as of today.

The Cougars will take the court tonight against Water Valley, in a match which will determine the Area champion.

"I really feel like we should be able to compete [tonight]," head coach Janet Tayrek said. "They're beatable."

Last weekend, Fort Elliott beat out Chillicothe, 5-15, 15-9, 15-4, and was declared the bi-district titlist for the third year in a row. But this may be the year the Cougars go well beyond the Area playoffs, as Tayrek sees a special quality in this season's squad.

"I have a very close team this year," she said, noting that a good deal of Fort Elliott's 16-6 record is due to the players playing as a unit. "Our success is based around how good that all of them are."

Tayrek and her team is confidently looking forward to the match, which will be held in Knox City at 7:30.

"If we play our game and do the best that we can, we can knock them out of the playoffs," she said.

Cougars going to state, White Deer to send two runners

Fort Elliott cross country put its school on the map Saturday, winning third place in the Class A regional meet in Lubbock. By virtue of that ranking, the entire team qualified to run in the state meet in Georgetown Saturday.

"It's the first time that any Fort Elliott team has gone to State for anything," Fort Elliott head coach Curtis Smith said.

The Cougars ran up 86 total points, just one behind second-place finisher Lazbuddie. Plains won the regional meet with 40 points, and White Deer came in fourth with 110 points.

District champ David Helton was the fastest Cougar on the course, placing third with a time of 16:56. Also in the top ten, Jake Swaggart ran a 17:13 to finish eighth.

Other Fort Elliott runners were: Jonathan Lester 16th (17:41), Steve May 23rd (18:19), John Moffett 36th (18:53), Johnny Brannen 37th (18:59) and Justin Westbrook 40th (19:09).

"They all ran their best times," Smith said of his team. "We're just real happy because we never thought we'd beat White Deer."

The running Bucks qualified two for the Class A state meet this weekend. At regionals, competing against runners from 16 other teams, Duane Coffey placed second with a time of 16:40 and Alex Rapstein came in eighth finishing 17:08.

Last year, Coffey placed 10th at state, and Saturday both he and Alex are expected to run well. But White Deer coach Susan Coffey isn't predicting how the two will do.

"It's just kind of hard to say," she said. "There's always runners that you don't know much about."

Oilers' Marshall will miss more games

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Oilers linebacker Wilber Marshall thought he was going to play in Sunday's game against Seattle. So did coach Jack Pardee and defensive coordinator Buddy Ryan.

But General Manager Mike Holovak assessed Marshall's progress from arthroscopic surgery on Aug. 6 and decided he needs more time to heal and Marshall was placed on the inactive list for Sunday's 24-14 victory over Seattle.

"I could have played two weeks ago and now it's going to be four weeks when I could have been doing something," Marshall said. "That's how I feel."

But they pay me so I do what they say." Marshall missed the first two regular season games and then returned for three games. He suffered an ankle injury after he returned.

"When I've watched him, I haven't seen him be quite as fast as he will be," Holovak said. "We don't want to do anything to set him back. He came back too early when he played against San Diego and we don't want to do that again."

Marshall worked with the first defense last week but Joe Bowden started against the Seahawks.

"It's frustrating for an athlete of my caliber and intensity to sit there," Marshall said. "I was angry. I'm a competitive person and I'm ready to play."

Injury-riddled Bulls still roll past Hawks

CHICAGO (AP) — The key operatives in the Chicago Bulls' three straight NBA championships weren't there, but it was the Atlanta Hawks who forgot to show up. The Bulls, depleted by the retirement of Michael Jordan and an injury to Scottie Pippen, needed neither Monday night in a 106-80 rout of the Atlanta Hawks. The Bulls also were without the injured Scott Williams and John Paxson, which did little to brighten the mood of Atlanta coach Lenny Wilkens. "I want them to learn from this game," Wilkens told his players in a 20-minute closed-clubhouse lecture. "I thought this was a game we should have had." Wilkins said he had hoped his club wasn't thinking it would be easy because of the players Chicago was missing.

Tickets going fast for showdown between Florida State, Notre Dame

By RON LESKO
AP Sports Writer

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — They're already telling tall tales about Florida State-Notre Dame, and the game won't even be played for four more days.

The subject of the chatter: ticket prices. More specifically, prices for tickets bought second-hand.

Good seats for Saturday's game between the No. 1 and No. 2 teams in the country have been going for $1,000 or more in recent weeks. The price dropped a bit this week, but people still are clamoring to buy and sell seats, ticket agents said Monday.

A South Bend man who identified himself only as Mike said a woman wanted to charge him $10,000 for a pair of tickets. Mike passed and was holding out hope of paying about $200 apiece.

"I've heard all the stories," said South Bend ticket agent Andy Kostielney. "Some guy said he sold two tickets for $22,000, but I haven't seen it."

Kostielney's most expensive seats, two on the 30-yard line, went for $750 apiece.

Most tickets to 59,075-seat Notre Dame Stadium have a face value of $27.

Scott Goldberg, owner of All Season Tickets in Los Angeles, said his top selling price was $850 apiece for four seats near the 25-yard line. But Goldberg said he has heard of tickets going for as much as $1,100.

"Other than Super Bowls, this is the biggest football game I've ever had to deal with," he said. "I think this is the biggest regular-season college ticket ever."

The Florida State-Notre Dame game has drawn more attention from ticket agents than other big games primarily because it is being played at Notre Dame, Goldberg said.

The stadium is small compared to other schools, and the aura is immense, he said. Saturday's game will be only the third time that the nation's top two teams have played at 64-year-old Notre Dame Stadium since The Associated Press poll began in 1936.

No. 2 Notre Dame lost to Purdue in 1968, and No. 1 Notre Dame beat Iowa Pre-Flight in 1943.

After naming their price and getting it for weeks, ticket agents have seen a marked reversal in inquiries. People looking to sell far outnumber those interested in buying, and supply has surpassed demand.

South Bend distributor John E. Green sold three end zone seats for $600 each, but he was asking only about $300 apiece Monday. An answering machine at another South Bend outlet was advertising two end zone seats at $500 apiece and two goal-line seats at $600 each.

"Smart people are going to do some shopping," said Green, who still had six tickets left Monday.

Goldberg said most of the people looking to sell tickets through his agency are from the South Bend area, which surprised him.

He believed more Florida State fans would be looking to sell rather than take a chance on northern Indiana's unpredictable November weather. Saturday's outlook calls for high temperatures in the low 50s with a chance of showers.

Daly banned again from PGA Tour

MEXICO CITY (AP) — John Daly traveled south of the border today to get ready to play golf in the only tournament on the continent this weekend that he'll be allowed in.

Daly, banned once again from the PGA Tour, will be the main attraction in the Mexican Open. He will address his second suspension of the year during a press conference today after playing an exhibition at Chapultepec Golf Club.

Daly, a former PGA champion and the longest hitter in golf, has not spoken publicly since his suspension Sunday for picking up his ball without holing out in the second round of a tournament in Hawaii.

Daly, while playing in Friday's second round of the Kapalua International, picked up after missing a birdie putt on No. 11 following double-bogeys on Nos. 7, 8 and 10. Despite the disqualification, Daly remained on the course to finish the round with his four pro-am partners.

PGA Tour commissioner Deane Beman met with Daly after the tournament Sunday and suspended him through at least through the start of the 1994 tour.

The Mexican Open, not part of the PGA Tour, runs Thursday through Sunday at the 7,020-yard, par-72 Club de Gold La Hacienda.

If All Our Readers Ran To The Bathroom Right Now, They Still Wouldn't Miss A Single Ad.

There's nothing TV reps love more than telling you who's watching what show when. Armed with stacks of tiny numbers, they know it all. What age, what sex, what income level is guaranteed to be watching any given show.

Unfortunately, the one audience they can't tell you diddly about is the one watching your commercial. Because, often, it's going to end up playing to an empty room. Recent studies bear it out. At the first sign of commercial break, 50% of the viewers either head for the bathroom, the kitchen, change the channel or just turn off the sound.

That's something people can't do with a newspaper ad. And according to the late 80's Scarborough Report, they don't want to. The reason is simple. Consumers rate newspapers as the most helpful, believable source of advertising information. That's where they turn to first for buying advice. And nowhere is that more apparent than in

THE PAMPA NEWS.

Read by over 45,000 people a week, The Pampa News reaches the TOP O' TEXAS market. Most importantly, it reaches them at their request. They want the information and they are willing to pay for it. Dispute with coach may result in Mavs trading Harper

FORT WORTH (AP) — Dallas Mavericks veteran guard Derek Harper says a trade seems more likely than ever because of ongoing disputes with rookie coach Quinn Buckner.

The two have been at odds since training camp when Buckner moved Harper from starting point guard to second-team off-guard. The feud escalated Saturday night when the two got into a shouting match in the fourth quarter of a loss to Golden State after Harper failed to retrieve a rebound.

They met Monday morning before practice to discuss their differences.

"We both agreed that we may have overreacted a little bit," Harper said.

"... I don't think we have to like one another to get along. I respect Quinn as my coach. That's the important thing because I have nothing personal against him. I want to move forward but this is going to take some time."

Buckner said he believes his relationship with Harper will improve with time.

"I respect him as a man and as a player on this team. He still is very

Study claims junk food ads health hazard for kids' TV

ATLANTA (AP) — Violence-packed cartoons are not the only potential hazard of too much Saturday morning TV. A study finds a sharp increase recently in ads for high-fat foods aimed at youngsters.

Criticism of children's television usually focuses on the mayhem in the programs themselves. However, earlier research has shown that the more TV youngsters watch, the fatter they are and the higher their blood cholesterol levels.

The latest study, released Monday, shows that the advertising for fast-food chains and packaged meals, such as canned spaghetti, has suddenly doubled after remaining constant at about 20 percent of commercials for two decades. And an even bigger proportion of these ads than ever before are filled with images of fatty fried chicken, hamburgers and pizza.

"You can get a healthy meal at a fast food restaurant. But a child watching television doesn't get to see those," said Lisa C. Cohn, a nutritionist who conducted the study with Dr. Thomas J. Starc at Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center in New York.

Cohn and Starc set out to see what happened on television after the National Cholesterol Education Program drew up new dietary guidelines for children and teenagers in 1991.

The eating rules suggest that youngsters cut their daily intake of fat to less than 30 percent of total calories. Saturated fat should make up no more than 10 percent of calories. Currently, U.S. children get about 36 percent of their daily calories from fat, and 14 percent is saturated fat.

The researchers compared Saturday morning broadcasts from 1989 and 1990 to those in 1993. They presented their findings at the annual scientific meeting of the American Heart Association.

They found that a youngster who watches five hours of TV on Saturday morning sees 65 food commercials, or about one every five minutes.

The researchers found that this year, 38 percent of Saturday morning commercials were for fast and packaged foods, and 92 percent of these ads showed high-fat foods. In 1989, 20 percent of the ads were in this category, and 64 percent of them were for high-fat items.

"Current recommendations for low-fat foods are being ignored by commercial television ads aimed at children," Starc said.

"You can eat well in gourmet fashion with low-fat food," commented Dr. Richard Carleton of Brown University. "It's terrible disturbing what they are doing to our children."

Cereal makes up 38 percent of the food ads aimed at children, and the researchers found that none of the cereals promoted were high in fat. About 20 percent of the drinks and 40 percent of the snacks advertised were high-fat.

The most common fast-food items advertised were hamburgers, which made up 43 percent of the fast food pictured, and pizza, which was 28 percent.

Starc recommended that food advertisers develop more healthy foods for children and promote them in their ads.

"These are 6-year-old kids who are watching these ads," said Starc. "They are not college-educated adults who know how advertising works. Kids need new ideas about what to eat."

Pope cites anguish of priest scandals

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II on Monday said he felt the pain of sex scandals involving clergymen, and restated the Roman Catholic Church's commitment to celibacy.

The pope told bishops from Canada's Atlantic provinces that the sexual scandal "has been a source of great suffering for the church in Canada."

"I wish you to know that I have personally shared this anguish with you," he said.

A report three years ago described child sex abuse by priests, former priests and others connected with the church in Newfoundland. The scandal led to the resignation of Newfoundland's archbishop, Alphonsus Penney, and prompted a lawsuit against the church.

John Paul on Monday rejected "cultural considerations" and a shortage of priests in some places as a reason to relax the church's celibacy requirement.

"Priestly celibacy is not just a legal requirement imposed as a condition for ordination. It is profoundly connected with a man's configuration to Christ, as the good shepherd and spouse of the church," he said.

Cigarettes blamed as major cause of strokes

ATLANTA (AP) — A 10-year study of more than 22,000 healthy male doctors found that smokers were twice as likely as nonsmokers to have strokes, which kill or disable a half million Americans each year.

A separate study by the same researchers found that women survivors of heart attacks or strokes could cut their risks of further trouble by eating spinach, carrots and other fruits and vegetables with vitamins C, E and B-2 and beta carotene.

Both studies were presented Monday at the annual meeting of the American Heart Association.

The first study found that those who smoked less than a pack of cigarettes per day had 1.8 times the risk of non-smokers; those who smoked more had 2.4 times the risk, said Dr. JoAnn Manson of Harvard Medical School.

The study "just re-emphasizes the terrible product that tobacco is," said Dr. James Moller, the heart association's president. "The American public should demand some action in terms of more regulation."

The study provided good news for smokers who decide to quit. It found that former smokers' risk of strokes declined quickly after they quit. Within a few years, former smokers' risks were as low as those who had never smoked.

"Less is known about preventing strokes than preventing heart disease, so finding a modifiable risk factor is important," Manson said.

In the study of vitamin-rich diets in women, the researchers found that those whose diet included the most vitamins A and C and beta carotene had a 33 percent lower risk of heart attack and a 71 percent lower risk of strokes, the researchers found.

"A modification of diet may have a dramatic effect on subsequent risk of heart disease," even in women in their 60s who might think it's too late to cut their risks, Manson said.

"The bottom line is it's never too late to eat more fruits and vegetables," she said. Spinach and carrots are potent sources of antioxidants, and citrus fruits are good sources of vitamin C.

"These are exciting new observations," Moller said. He said the heart association is awaiting more studies before recommending specific vitamins. Eating more fruit and vegetables is a widely accepted recommendation.

Manson said she and others are now evaluating whether vitamin pills lower risks as effectively as fruits and vegetables containing the vitamins. In the meantime, she recommends that people get the vitamins in food, not pills.

Beta carotene, a precursor of vitamin A, is found in carrots, spinach and broccoli. Vitamin B-2, or riboflavin, and vitamin E are found in green leafy vegetables. Vitamin E is also found in nuts, milk and eggs, and vitamin C is found primarily in citrus fruit.

The stroke study did not address the question of how cigarettes raise the risk. But previous research suggests that part of the problem might be changes that occur immediately with the first drag on a cigarette.

"Some studies suggest the risk of a stroke rises while a person is smoking or immediately after," Manson said.

Within minutes, smoking produces changes in the blood that promote the formation of blood clots. Blood cells called platelets become stickier, and levels of a clotting substance called fibrinogen rise.

Those changes can increase the risk of a so-called ischemic stroke, in which a clot interrupts blood supply to part of the brain, causing that part of the brain to die.

But smoking also boosts blood pressure, increasing the risk of bleeding in the brain, which can also destroy brain tissue, Manson said.

State attorneys general push for smoke-free fast-food restaurants

NEW YORK (AP) — Officials from 16 states asked fast-food restaurants Monday to ban smoking, saying it is hurting young customers and workers.

"Every day millions of children and teen-agers in this country spend time eating, playing and working in fast-food restaurants," New York Attorney General Robert Abrams said in a statement.

"Because smoking is permitted in almost all of these restaurants, young customers and workers are exposed to passive smoke, a carcinogen for which no safe levels of exposure have been established."

Passive smoke is responsible for 45,000 deaths a year in nonsmokers in the United States, according to a U.S. Environmental Protection Agency estimate disputed by the tobacco industry.

Abrams joined attorneys general from Arizona, Connecticut, Idaho, Iowa, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Mississippi, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Oregon, Texas, Utah, Vermont, and Wisconsin, along with the Hawaii Office of Consumer Protection in preparing a report titled "Fast Food, Growing Children and Passive Smoke: A Dangerous Menu."

Gary Gerdemann, a spokesman for Kentucky Fried Chicken Corp., said the request to ban smoking is misguided.

"If the will of the people and the politicians elected by them decide it's not right for society to smoke in restaurants, they need to pass laws that we can follow, rather than pressuring us to conduct public policy experiments," he said. "We're a private industry, simply trying to serve the needs of our consumers. Pass laws and we will fulfill them."

Of KFC's 5,000 U.S. restaurants, 3,000 are franchised, and smoking policies are up to the franchise owners. Of the 2,000 corporate-owned facilities, Gerdemann said that where size permits there are always non-smoking sections.

Burger King's spokesman Michael Evans declined to comment, saying he had not seen the report. He said of Burger King's 6,000 restaurants, 5,200 are franchised, and about 10 percent of those don't allow smoking. Of the 800 company-owned restaurants, all offer non-smoking areas.

Fast-food leader McDonald's did not immediately return a call for comment.
