Legislature's pace accelerates without much drama

Flush with cash, lawmkers don't face drastic cuts or emergency items

By Chris Tomlinson

■ ANALYSIS

AUSTIN — The 60-day warm-up at the Legislature of ceremonial resolutions and four-day weekends for the Senate is over. Time for lawmakers to roll up their sleeves.

Folks around the Capitol like to grouse about how little gets done in the first few weeks of the 140-day legislative session, but the Constitution prevents lawmakers from passing bills during the first 60 days. The idea is to give legislators a chance to figure out what new laws the state needs and for legislators to get to know each other. The newbies need time to figure out how to work the levers of power.

The last 80 days are a rapidly accelerating whirlwind, but this year lacks the drama of the 2011 session. For the first time since taking office, Gov. Rick Perry did not declare any emergency items.

As he laid the groundwork for his presidential bid in 2011, he named state enforcement of immigration laws, strict voter identification regulations and sonograms before abortions as emergencies.

Those bills set off a partisan firestorm last year, fueled by a Republican super-majority in the House. A Democratic lawmaker waved a trans-vaginal sonogram wand on the floor and civil rights activists rallied on the south steps of the Capitol to unsuccessfully fight the conservative steamroller.

Ultimately, though, conservative business leaders defeated the immigration measure behind closed doors, while federal judges threw out the voter ID law and redistricting maps because they discriminated against minorities. Republicans, chastened by 2012 election results that took away their supermajority, are now sensitive to the growing Hispanic electorate and have no desire to resurrect those issues this year.

And money always helps.

Lawmakers are flush with cash after State Comptroller Susan Combs low-balled the revenue estimate. That means no new cuts to public schools, which lost $5.4 billion in funding in 2011. Democrats have tried to make public education a major issue this year, but so far Republicans have placated them with promises to add more money before the session is over, if they play along.

On Wednesday, the Senate Finance Committee unanimously passed a draft budget that boosted spending by 7.7 percent to $94.1 billion. The House Appropriations Committee will likely pass out their version of the budget this week, and then lawmakers will hammer out the differences in a conference committee. Early drafts have

Hundreds of children and their parents dressed in red white and blue for the 50th annual Children's Parade in July 2012 to celebrate Independence Day. Council to review events covered on city insurance

Midland City Council members will discuss at their March 26 meeting if the 13 special events currently listed on the city's insurance policy should remain and whether others should be added to the list.

"The list could change. They will decide if they want to make any amendments to that list and add any events as city-sponsored events," said Sara Higgins, the city's public information officer.

Events currently included on the city's insurance policy are the Martin Luther King Jr. Day parade, National Night Out, Run from the Cops, Star-Spangled Salute, Toys for Tots, the city's Christmas parade, Make-A-Wish's Race for Wishes, Show of Support Parade, Juneteenth Celebration, 4th of July Children's Sidewalk Parade, Miracle on Tyler Street and the Lee and Midland high school homecoming parades.

Higgins said the council members will discuss why these events are included and whether the city should sponsor them.

A new city ordinance regarding special events and parades went into effect March 1. It requires all groups that want to host an event, even those listed on the city's insurance plan, to have comprehensive general liability insurance covering up to $2 million per occurrence for their event. In addition, the group must submit their application at least 30 days in advance of the event.

Currently, each entity holding a special event, regardless if they're listed on the city's special events policy, needs to have individual insurance for their organization, Higgins said.

"Just because you're city-sponsored doesn't mean you don't need your own insurance," Higgins said. "All it means is we're waiving application fees and possibly providing a city facility free of charge. ...You need to go in front of City Council to become city-sponsored and to waive the need for insurance."

A template of the certificate of insurance that an entity needs to provide when applying for a special event is kept at the city attorney's office at City Hall, Higgins said.

Groups wishing to obtain city sponsorship — in the form of waived fees — or hoping the council will grant a waiver of

Panhandle wind energy business is booming

By Kevin Welch
Amarillo Globe-News

AMARILLO — The Texas Panhandle's wind energy industry is about to be blown away.

An international mix of companies has committed to more than doubling the region's production capacity by spending more than an estimated $3.3 billion on construction of wind farms in the next two years.

The Amarillo Globe-News reported the area currently has the capability of producing about 1,500 megawatts, but that will go up by another 1,644 megawatts if projects now under contract go through.

Cross Texas Transmission and Sharyland Utilities are approaching the end of construction of transmission lines that will take locally produced electricity to places such as Dallas, Austin, San Antonio and Houston. That has lit the fuse, and wind farm developers and the transmission companies have begun filing agreements with the Public Utility Commission of Texas to make some of their formerly closely guarded commitments public.

Cross Texas has finished its Phase I construction from near Childress to south of Pampa and then to the White Deer area.

"Cross Texas Transmission is working with (the Electric Reliability Council of Texas) and other transmission service providers to schedule the energization of these facilities. Cross Texas' Phase II facilities are approximately 70 percent complete with construction," said Cameron Fredkin, director of project development at Cross Texas. "Completion of the Phase II facilities is expected late summer or early fall."

The company is building more than 200 miles of line at a cost of about $425 million. It has used local companies for some of the engineering, construction and supplies, as well as other needs.

"Local companies and many others throughout the state of Texas and United States have played a large role

MIDLAND 101

8 Midlanders on list of wealthiest in 1982

Four months ago, in November 2012, The Atlantic magazine noted that Midland was the second richest metro area in the country, behind Bridgeport, Conn. The same month, Forbes magazine ranked Odessa and Midland as first and second on a list of the best cities in the country to find work. The magazines' revelations aren't so much revelations as they are widely known current reality: Our turbocharged oil-based economy, and all that comes with it — both good and bad — is riding a wave of prosperity like never before.

Midland isn't the most glamorous place to live, and it might not provide a scenic mountain backdrop with a temperate climate — travel mags wouldn't know us if we paraded in front of them with party hats and streamers. National business periodicals, however, are on a first-name basis with us. In fact, business journalists have long had their eyes on us.

As recently as last week, Mayor Wes Perry was a guest on the "Stuart Varney Show" on the Fox Network, a tradition of national media exposure for Midland that began at least 70 years ago when Life magazine was writing features on both the oil industry and the old Midland bombardier school. Nationally written articles on the petroleum industry were not uncommon in the 1950s, and the town experienced its first huge population boom brought on by the discovery of the Spraberry.

Today, with out-of-towners coming to Midland looking for work, sometimes with literally no more than what they can fit in their cars, these times are as robust as ever. The wealth is more evenly distributed in this particular up cycle — check out what fast food establishments, such as McDonalds, are paying for workers.

Texas grapples with the rapid advent of drones

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Texas cities and legislators have struggled with the benefits and potential harm of drones in terms of privacy and public safety.

The Austin American-Statesman reported Sunday that several police departments in the state currently test drones and two of them currently operate the aircraft. The Federal Aviation Administration only allows use of drones in urban areas when life in is imminent danger.

FAA records show that, aside from the Border Patrol drones that fly mostly over unpopulated areas of the Rio Grande, the largest users of drones in Texas are universities that use them for emergency response training, natural resource studies, aeronautical engineering and to monitor river and wetland habitats.

Reactions from the public to police drone testing programs have been varied. Sgt. Christopher Cook with the Arlington police department said there was not much pushback because they've "made it very clear the privacy of our citizens is of paramount importance."

Meanwhile, Austin chief of police Art Acevedo killed a drone testing program after learning about the insurance costs of a leased $120,000 aircraft. That, and concerns of how it would be perceived. "I knew it would invoke a lot of suspicion and paranoia," Acevedo said.

Most of the drones being tested or used by police in the state are different from the large Unmanned Aerial Vehicles used by the military or federal agencies that operate them from hundreds or thousands of miles away. The police drones are much smaller and in most cases are flown within sight of their operator.

With vast swaths of uninhabited ranchland and university aerospace programs that do research in drone technology, the state wants to make the case that it is a good candidate to become one of six chosen by the FAA as test ranges to understand how commercial drones can fly safely and be allowed in the national airspace.

If successful, the effort backed by Gov. Rick Perry and Texas A&M at Corpus Christi could mean up to $800 million in economic activity and up to 15,000 jobs in research and manufacturing.

Currently, the FAA has issued less than 400 permits for drones, but the number is expected to rise to 30,000 over the next two decades.

U.S. Rep. Ted Poe, R-Texas, co-sponsors the Preserving America Privacy Act, which would mandate that governments obtain warrants before using a drone "to collect information that can identify individuals in a private area" and would prevent them from equipping the drones with weapons. It would also allow even tougher state laws to supersede federal policy.

A bill by state Rep. Lance Gooden of Terrell seeks to bar drones from recording images of private property without a search warrant. The plan has garnered the support of about 100 House members from both parties.

Texas lawmakers seek to curtail governor's power

Some Republican and Democratic legislators have joined forces on measures aimed at curtailing Gov. Rick Perry's power, benefits and number of terms.

The Dallas Morning News reported Sunday that at least six bills, proposed constitutional amendments and budget decisions would reduce the governor's power or perks. Although some of the efforts might not affect Perry directly, they seem to be inspired by his actions as governor.

Perry took office in December 2000 when fellow Republican George W. Bush resigned in order to become president and for the last decade he has enjoyed the backing of a GOP-controlled Legislature. Perry was elected to four-year terms in 2002, 2006 and 2010.

One proposed constitutional amendment seeks to impose a two-term limit. And yet another would make legislators and officeholders resign if they choose to run for a candidacy other than their post and have less than 13 months left on their terms.

Another would have the governor pay his security costs when traveling for personal or political trips. Perry, during his failed 2012 presidential bid, spent 160 days out of state — costing taxpayers $3.7 million.

Perry draws $90,000 a year in state retirement benefits while he still collects a $150,000 yearly salary. Another bill would block such arrangements.

EL PASO

Lawyer convicted of corruption resurfaces

A West Texas lawyer who in 2007 was the first person convicted in an El Paso public corruption scandal has resurfaced after years of being absent from public life.

The El Paso Times reported Sunday that John Travis Ketner now practices law in San Antonio after having his license suspended for five years.

He recently published in the Texas Bar Journal an article titled "The Top 10 Things I Wish Someone Had Told Me When I Began Practicing Law."

In the article, Ketner talked about ethics and how important it is for young lawyers to find the right mentor. "If you cannot find someone, call me and I promise to help you," Ketner wrote.

Ketner pleaded guilty in 2007 to conspiracy counts related to bribery and fraud. He was chief of staff for a now-former county judge, Anthony Cobos, who faces trial later this year on corruption charges.

"Once appointed as chief of staff, (Ketner) was advised by (Cobos) that his primary job responsibility would be to find opportunities in which (Cobos and other people also indicted,) could receive compensation from vendors seeking contracts with the county, seeking contract renewals with the county and/or seeking contract retention with the county regardless of non-performance or lack of competence as the vendor on the contract," said Ketner's guilty plea.

He lost his law license for more than five years until Sept. 2012. His federal criminal sentence remains under seal. But it appears he was not sentenced to prison time, because a Texas Supreme Court decision states that lawyers who are sentenced to time in prison must be disbarred.

More than two dozen people have been charged in the public corruption case in which a network public officials, businessmen and lawyers conspired to get city and county contracts in exchange of bribes.

City hires tech manager with alleged fake resume

A Dallas information services department manager who began work after a hiring scandal has been charged with stealing a dozen city iPads.

Antoine Deon Flowers last September took charge of the city's desktop computer systems with his resume that included software engineer for NASA, service in the Army with top-secret security clearance and fluency in Spanish.

The Dallas Morning News reported Sunday that investigators believe most of the resume was made up or grossly exaggerated. Flowers was arrested Feb. 14 and charged with theft.

City officials declined comment. Flowers, who resigned in January, wasn't listed in jail records as being in custody Sunday and couldn't immediately be reached for comment.

The newspaper in 2011 reported another information services leader bypassed civil service laws to hire his church friends.

NEVADA

County hopes plan prevents sage grouse listing

RENO — Officials in a rural northeastern Nevada county have approved a pilot project designed to keep sage grouse off the endangered species list by killing ravens with poisoned eggs and by reducing wildfire threats through livestock grazing.

Elko County commissioners said the program set to begin on the 15,000-acre Devils Gate Ranch is needed because wildfires and ravens pose the biggest threat to the imperiled chicken-sized bird. They said fires destroy sagebrush the birds rely on, while ravens are by far its most common predator.

It's the first such private-local government agreement to stave off a federal listing, commissioners said, and was prompted by concern that listing the large ground-dwelling bird could result in federal restrictions on grazing, mining, oil and gas drilling and other activities on public land.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service announced in 2010 that sage grouse across the West deserved protection under the Endangered Species Act. The agency pledged to make a final listing decision by late 2015. Sage grouse populations have fallen 90 percent in the past century, and habitat has declined 50 percent.

Prince delivers funk-filled finale at SXSW

How did Prince close out South by Southwest Music Festival's weeklong showcase of rock 'n' roll?

By naturally throwing a totally different kind of party: a grooving, brass band-backed funk fest that stretched to 3 a.m. and outlasted many fans lucky enough to get inside the exclusive show that also featured A Tribe Called Quest.

As Justin Timberlake and the Smashing Pumpkins headlined other SXSW wrap-ups nearby, Prince prevailed as the toughest ticket Saturday night by performing for only 300 people in his first appearance at the annual music festival that drew 2,200 bands and artists this year.

Prince towered over them all — but his concert at the tiny La Zona Rosa club that sits on the fringe of the SXSW mayhem was no grandiose spectacle. He performed for 2½ hours on a spartan stage behind a giant video board. He contentedly played bandleader instead of superstar, often disappearing backstage for stretches as the band jammed.

"They called our people and said they wanted some funk in Austin," said Prince, before belting out the last bars of a gentle rendition of "Purple Rain."

A 12-piece brass band joined the latest incarnation of Prince's New Power Generation for a run of hits like "1999" and "Cool" that jammed with a soulful backbone.

Obsessed fan who shot player, inspired movie, dies

Associated Press

CHICAGO — She inspired a novel and a movie starring Robert Redford when in 1949 she lured a major league ballplayer into a hotel room with a cryptic note and shot him, nearly killing him.

After the headlines faded, Ruth Ann Steinhagen did something else just as surprising: She disappeared into obscurity, living a quiet life unnoticed in Chicago until now, more than a half century later, when news broke that she had died three months earlier.

The Cook County Medical Examiner's Office confirmed Friday that Steinhagen passed away of natural causes on Dec. 29, at the age of 83. First reported by the Chicago Tribune last week, her identity was a surprise even to the morgue employees who knew about the 1984 movie "The Natural," in which she was portrayed by actress Barbara Hershey.

"She chose to live in the shadows and she did a good job of it," John Theodore, an author who wrote a 2002 nonfiction book about the crime. The story, with its elements of obsession, mystery, insanity and a baseball star, made it part of both Chicago's colorful crime history and rich baseball lore.

College mourns pregnant coach killed in crash

GREENSBURG — A small Catholic college outside Pittsburgh mourned the loss of a women's lacrosse coach who died along with her unborn child when the team's bus crashed on the way to a game, remembering her Sunday as warm, outgoing and a natural leader.

Students and staff filled Seton Hill University's century-old Saint Joseph's Chapel a half-hour before the start of a Sunday night memorial service for lacrosse coach Kristina Quigley and other victims of the crash. The program for the service reads: "In Loving Memory of Kristina Quigley and Son"

Earlier Sunday, team members and fans at a Seton Hill baseball game observed a minute of silence for the two crash victims. With the players in the background on a cold day, students and other mourners visited a tribute set up in front of a lacrosse net next to the baseball field that featured bouquets of flowers, stuffed animals, a lacrosse stick, a whistle and a candle sat in front of a team photo and signs reading "In memoriam - Kristina Quigley - Forever a Griffin."

Players and coaches from Seton Hill were among 23 people aboard when the bus crashed into a tree Saturday morning on the Pennsylvania Turnpike outside Harrisburg. The team was headed to an afternoon game at Millersville University, about 50 miles from the crash site in central Pennsylvania. Police are investigating the cause.

Quigley, 30, of Greensburg, died of her injuries at a hospital, Cumberland County authorities said. Quigley was about six months pregnant, and her unborn son didn't survive. The bus driver, Anthony Guaetta, 61, of Johnstown, died at the scene.

Saturday's game and a Sunday home game were canceled after the crash Seton Hill is a liberal arts school of about 2,500 students that sits atop a hill in western Pennsylvania's Laurel Highlands.

Colleges track former students to boost degrees

Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Carmen Ricotta knows being a college graduate could mean higher pay and better job opportunities, and it's not like St. Louis Community College hasn't been practically begging her to wrap up her two-year degree.

The school has been calling and emailing the 28-year-old electrician's apprentice to get her to return and complete her final assignment: an exit exam. But life has gotten in the way and Ricotta has been too busy to make the 30-minute trip from her suburban home near Fenton to the downtown St. Louis campus.

St. Louis Community College is among 60-plus schools in six states taking what seems like an obvious but little-used step to boost college graduation rates: scouring campus databases to track down former students who unknowingly qualify for degrees.

That effort, known as Project Win-Win, has helped community colleges and four-year schools in Florida, Louisiana, Missouri, Michigan, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Virginia and Wisconsin find hundreds of ex-students who have either earned enough credits to receive associate degrees or are just a few classes shy of getting them.

Backed by financial support from the Indianapolis-based Lumina Foundation for Education, the pilot project began several years ago with 35 colleges in six states. As it winds down, some participating schools plan to continue the effort on their own.

Ricotta said at this point, she's not sure if getting her two-year degree is all that necessary.

"It's a pain," she said. "I don't feel like going down to the college to take a test I don't need. Yeah, I don't have the degree, but I still took all the classes."

Her seeming indifference to retroactively obtaining her degree points to just one of the challenges facing two-year schools in particular as they strive to fulfill President Barack Obama's challenge of raising college completion rates to 60 percent by 2020: convincing not just the public, but even some of their students, of the value of an associate's degree.

At central Missouri's Columbia College, the hunt for students on the verge of graduating worked so well that the school plans to broaden its efforts to find bachelor's degree candidates who are just one class shy of donning the cap and gown.

The private liberal arts college has already awarded nearly 300 retroactive degrees, including one given posthumously to the mother of a deceased former student. Another two dozen students returned to campus to finish up after hearing from the school.

"If this was being done nationwide, it could make a difference," said Tery Donelson, Columbia College's assistant vice president for enrollment management.

Like his counterparts in St. Louis, Donelson and his team of transcript detectives also encountered skepticism, if not outright disbelief, from some of the prospective degree awardees.

"If you received a letter saying, 'Congratulations, you've earned a degree,' what would you be thinking?" he said. "That this is a scam. We had to get beyond them.

"We told them they earned a degree, and all they had to do was acknowledge it," Donelson continued. "We didn't want to send a degree to anybody who didn't want it."

Participating schools pared down their initial lists by eliminating students who received degrees elsewhere or were currently enrolled. Expired addresses or disconnected phone numbers eliminated many more.

The Institute for Higher Education Policy, which oversaw the project, initially estimated a potential increase of 25,000 new degrees if its efforts took hold nationwide. But most schools found the exercise more difficult than expected, said Cliff Adelman, a senior associate with the Washington-based policy group.

"It ain't as easy as you think," he said. "You can't use a magic wand and have this kind of thing happen."

In Oregon, a review of more than 6,000 students' academic records at the state's 17 community colleges found 109 degree-eligible students and another 905 who might qualify. Virginia's Tidewater Community College awarded 34 degrees and convinced 15 more students to return to campus from its initial pool of 651 prospects.

Today in history

Today is Monday, March 18, the 77th day of 2013. There are 288 days left in the year.

Today's highlight:

On March 18, 1963, the U.S. Supreme Court, in Gideon v. Wainwright, ruled unanimously that state courts were required to provide legal counsel to criminal defendants who could not afford to hire an attorney on their own.

On this date:

In 1937, some 300 people, mostly children, were killed in a gas explosion at a school in the Texas town of New London.

In 1942, President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed an executive order authorizing the War Relocation Authority, which was put in charge of interning Japanese-Americans, with Milton S. Eisenhower (the younger brother of Dwight D. Eisenhower) as its director.

In 1974, most of the Arab oil-producing nations ended their embargo against the United States.

Ten years ago: A jury in Corpus Christi cleared Bayer Corp. of liability in a $560 million lawsuit that accused the pharmaceutical giant of ignoring research linking the cholesterol-lowering drug Baycol to dozens of deaths.

Today's birthdays: Country singer Charley Pride is 75. Rapper-actress-talk show host Queen Latifah is 43. Republican National Committee Chairman Reince Priebus is 41.

in the success," Fredkin said.

Sharyland is making progress on several segments of 300 miles of line it is building in the Panhandle and South Plains, including the one running north and then east from Hereford to White Deer. Other segments include White Deer to Silverton, Silverton to Cottonwood and Silverton to Hereford. The company expects to meet the Dec. 31 deadline set by the state for putting the lines into service.

The estimated cost is about $630 million.

On Thursday, crews were working with a helicopter between Hereford and Wildorado, preparing towers averaging 125 feet high for the lines they will hold.

"Helicopters allow the wires of the transmission line to be strung quicker than using bucket trucks from the ground. We use them for hanging insulators and the stringing dollies (large pulleys that hang temporarily from the bottom of the tower arms)," Sharyland spokeswoman Jeanne Phillips said. "We also use them for stringing the smaller wires connected to the tops of the towers and pulling in the P-line, which is a rope."

Workers attach the rope to the cable that carries the electricity and use a powerful reel to pull the cable through the pulleys. One of the smaller lines intercepts lightning and disperses it while the other holds fiber optic lines used to control the flow of electricity.

As the construction wraps up, the focus turns to securing customers.

"A couple of customers have signed interconnected agreements to connect wind energy facilities to the Cross Texas Transmission system," Fredkin said. "These customers plan on constructing their facilities in 2013 and energizing their facilities in late 2013 and early 2014."

Sharyland is also making progress with four agreements filed, Phillips said. These are EC&R Development, whose parent corporation is headquartered in Germany; RES America Developments, based in England; Spinning Spur Two, a partnership of an Austin company and a subsidiary of a French company; and Mariah North West, a partnership of Pariner County landowners and businessmen and a Norwegian company.

Cross Texas has at least one connection agreement with Pattern Panhandle Wind, whose parent is based in San Francisco.

The spending estimates do not include the facilities to make the connections between wind farms and transmission lines, which will cost millions. One such project is estimated to cost about $36 million. Also, the wind developers have to get their energy to the connection facilities, and the distance can vary from a few miles to more than 40.

The path has not always been smooth, going through Palo Duro Canyon and along the Canadian River Breaks in addition to across flat fields, but the end of this phase is in sight.

"Other than the blizzard of 2013, and some high wind days that delayed tower erection and stringing conductor, Sharyland Utilities is pleased with the pace of construction," Phillips said.

Most of the approximately 1,500 megawatts of wind energy produced in the Panhandle and eastern New Mexico is flowing into Xcel Energy's lines, while the new transmission lines will take power downstate from new wind farms.

But that doesn't mean Xcel wouldn't like some more wind power.

On Friday its subsidiary Southwestern Public Service announced it will take proposals, essentially bids, to provide additional wind energy.

"SPS is requesting proposals for wind generation resources that could begin delivery to SPS on or after January 1, 2014 (but no later than December 31, 2015)," according to a news release.

The proposals are due by 5 p.m. April 12.

"We don't have a set number of megawatts in mind with this (request for proposals)," said Wes Reeves, an Xcel spokesman. "We're simply looking to see if there is some wind to be had for a good price. We've made some really good deals in the past, and wind has played an important role in helping us meet growing electricity demand."

the state adding $1.5 billion to public education in the next two-year budget.

Chairman Tommy Williams, R-The Woodlands, acknowledged that no one got everything they wanted in the proposed budget, but he called it a good compromise. Sen. John Whitmire, D-Houston, said this year's finance committee was the most collegial that he could remember.

Perhaps the hottest topic of the year is Medicaid. Republican and Democratic lawmakers are negotiating a compromise that will allow Texas to expand the health program for the poor and disabled to add more than 1 million people. An investment of $19 billion in state money would bring $100 billion in federal matching funds over the next 10 years.

Gov. Rick Perry's hardline demand for an exemption from federal regulation could make a deal elusive, but that both sides are even talking reveals a surprising readiness to compromise.

None of this is to say that stark differences don't persist; only that House Speaker Joe Straus has delivered the serious, workman-like session he promised, and so far Lt. Gov. David Dewhurst has not created what he said would be the most conservative state Senate in Texas history.

Conservative lawmakers have introduced new restrictions on abortions, bills to allow guns in more public places and plans to expand funding for charter schools. Hearings on those topics have turned out hundreds on both sides of the issues and sparked partisan debate, yet none have dominated the session.

Next week, lawmakers will start passing bills for the governor to sign in greater and greater volume. The question is whether the Republican majority in both chambers will tie up the must-pass bills by prioritizing the divisive measures, or will the let's-get-this-done attitude prevail.

First National Bank and the long economic dry spell that followed, Forbes Magazine noted that eight Midland millionaires were among the richest people in the country. There were 67 millionaire Texans on the list that year, and of those, 21 were from Houston, 20 from Dallas and eight from Midland. Twelve percent of the wealthiest Texans named on the 1982 list were from Midland.

Together, those eight Midlanders had a combined estimated total wealth of $2.45 billion, and included Cy Wagner and Jack Brown, each with a personal wealth of $550 million; Carlton Beal ($400 million), John L. Cox ($350 million), Clarence Scharbauer Jr. ($250 million), John Hendrix ($150 million), Clayton Williams Jr. $100 million) and Fred M. Allison Jr. ($100 million).

Forbes acknowledged the list might not have been "absolutely correct" and published that it chose to be ultraconservative in its estimates so that all who deserved to be on the list would be included. Editors also said that not everyone named would consider it an honor to be included. Five years after the 1982 list appeared, the Scharbauer family, of Midland, requested that it no longer be included in the rankings.

In October 1983, just 13 months after the 1982 Forbes 400 issue was released, wealth itself — as well as Midland's future economic outlook — changed dramatically with the failure of First National Bank.

SXSW: Selling stars, brands and baby bands

JON PARELES
N.Y. Times News service

Two images linger from this year's South by Southwest Music festival, which ended Sunday after five nights and days with hundreds of performances. One has been the major part of SXSW for all of its 27 years: sharing the crowded sidewalks with sleep-deprived but bright-eyed musicians toting their own equipment to the next gig. The other is more recent: a 62-foot-high outdoor stage built to resemble a snack-chip vending machine that turned into a six-story video billboard when it wasn't showing live performances.

It's the mixture of the venerable SXSW of baby bands looking to advance — to find an agent, manager, tour mates, licensing deal or label — and the newer SXSW of sponsorship, of branding and of marketing spring releases by well-known headliners. They're almost, but not quite, two different festivals, since many of the baby bands would be delighted to profit from the kind of commercial exploitation they can see all around them.

SXSW, which also runs a film festival and a tech-oriented "interactive" festival in the days before SXSW Music, serves and reflects the businesses it convenes. And it is now thoroughly geared to the music business as disrupted by the Internet: where sales of recordings have fallen but avenues of exposure have multiplied, where selling a song for a commercial or soundtrack can be a rare windfall for an unknown band and where all acts, new or established, are constantly scrambling for attention.

A band at South by Southwest can perform literally day and night, from an eye-rubbing morning radio show broadcast to a midnight club show; all that effort lingers in shows archived online by sponsors, radio stations and stray YouTube contributors.

But about that vending machine. A previous version of it arrived at last year's SXSW and was roundly reviled as the most obnoxiously commercial manifestation of the festival. The sponsor obviously doubled down, with an added fillip. The stage's prime lineup this year was a gathering of longtime hip-hop luminaries: LL Cool J, Doug E. Fresh, Public Enemy and Ice Cube. In the 1980s Public Enemy and Ice Cube made their reputations with angry, socially conscious lyrics that showed hip-hop how to be political. Now, cashing in on chips, they seemed to prove that absolutely everything is for sale.

That was one thread of SXSW: big names and big productions with corporate tie-ins. There were also large sponsored shows — secret until nearly the last minute — by Prince and Justin Timberlake. And there were official SXSW showcases for well-known acts introducing new material or riding current hits, among them Green Day, Depeche Mode, Iggy Pop, Iron and Wine, Vampire Weekend, Nick Cave, Richard Thompson, Macklemore & Ryan Lewis, the Mexican band Cafe Tacvba (performing for thousands of fans on the outdoor Auditorium Shores stage), Natalie Maines (of the Dixie Chicks, going solo) and the duo of Emmylou Harris and Rodney Crowell.

Disc jockeys from the upper echelons of electronic dance music were willing to play smaller rooms and shorter sets than usual to make a SXSW appearance. Rappers brought their posses on their coattails, as did Trae tha Truth, or expanded their solo ambitions, as Earl Sweatshirt from Odd Future did. Musicians can also pick up improbable collaborators at SXSW: The R&B singer Usher appeared halfway through an afternoon set by the Afghan Whigs, an indie-rock band fascinated by romantic strife, and suavely proved that his croon could sail over churning rock versions of his songs.

Yet there were also more than 2,000 lesser-known acts struggling to get noticed — and for me they are the core of SXSW. They offer glimpses of whatever ideas are spreading across pop — which, this year, meant more electronics. In my very limited sampling it was clear that the big pomp-rock anthem, anchored by a march beat, is still thriving; some baby bands are seeking arena-scale sounds. Electronic dance music is also slipping into rock in both obvious and subtle ways.

Baby bands or not, I wasn't going to miss one big event: Prince's club show, at La Zona Rosa. With sponsorship money from Samsung, it was an elaborate production — he had a wraparound LED screen for a backdrop and a large band including a full horn section — and a euphoric show of professionalism that was funky down to the last backbeat.

Prince didn't take the easy choice of playing an entire set of hits. He clearly wanted the audience to savor the physical effort and preparation that went into the music, from elaborately arranged horn-section interludes to the way the band followed every cue. And he earned the crowd's whoops, squeals and nonstop dancing as a performer, one who's more seasoned and confident than any baby band could be.

Man injured in two-vehicle crash

By Tyler White

One man was transported to Midland Memorial Hospital with minor injuries Sunday afternoon after a two-car collision near downtown Midland.

Midland police and the Midland Fire Department responded to the crash at 1:29 p.m. at the intersection of North Big Spring Street and West Scharbauer Drive.

A silver car ran a red stop light while heading north on Big Spring Street and collided with a red car westbound on Scharbauer Drive, according to an officer at the scene.

A passenger in the silver car was transported to MMH; there weren't any other injuries reported.

The silver car's driver was cited for failure to yield at a stop light, the officer said.

insurance requirements are encouraged to begin the application process more than 30 days in advance to ensure it is completed correctly, Higgins said.

"If you start the application early, we can be flexible and walk you through the process," Higgins said. "We've had people turn in applications very, very close to the event in the past, and we want to give both parties time to work together to open that line of communication so things will work smoothly."

The 30-day requirement is meant to ensure groups that want to go before the City Council can be placed on the appropriate agenda in a timely manner, Higgins said.

To date, no group that has applied for a permit has been denied, Higgins said.

"Change is hard and people are having to realize that what they're doing now might not be the same as last year as far as planning and scheduling," Higgins said. "The one thing that we ask is that applicants get started in the process earlier than they're used to."

To streamline this process and make it easier for applicants to understand, Higgins said the city is developing a "Cliff Notes version of everything that's under this ordinance" that will be available online next week. It is meant to provide more guidance to potential applicants for special events.

Special event applications are available in the city manager's office on the third floor of City Hall.

2 Ohio football players convicted of raping girl

Associated Press

STEUBENVILLE, Ohio — Two members of Steubenville's celebrated high school football team were found guilty Sunday of raping a drunken 16-year-old girl, and Ohio's attorney general warned the case isn't over, saying he is investigating whether coaches, parents and other students broke the law, too.

Trent Mays, 17, and Ma'Lik Richmond, 16, were sentenced to at least a year in juvenile prison in a case that has rocked this Rust Belt city of 18,000 and led to allegations of a cover-up to protect the Steubenville High team, which has won nine state championships. Mays was ordered to serve an additional year for photographing the underage girl naked.

They can be held until they turn 21.

The two broke down in tears after a Juvenile Court judge delivered his verdict. They later apologized to the victim and the community. Richmond struggling to speak through his sobs.

"My life is over," he said as he collapsed in the arms of his lawyer.

The crime, which took place after a party last summer, shocked many in Steubenville because of the seeming callousness with which other students took out their cellphones to record the attack and gossiped about it online. In fact, the case came to light via a barrage of morning-after text messages, social media posts and online photos and video.

"Many of the things we learned during this trial that our children were saying and doing were profane, were ugly," Judge Thomas Lipps said.

Immediately after the verdict, Ohio Attorney General Mike DeWine said he will convene a grand jury next month to investigate whether anyone else should be charged. Noting that 16 people refused to talk, many of them underage, DeWine said possible offenses to be investigated include failure to report a crime.

"This community desperately needs to have this behind them, but this community also desperately needs to know justice was done and that no stone was left unturned," he said.

Among those who have been interviewed are the owners of one of the houses where parties were held that night, the high school principal, and the football team's 27 coaches, many of them volunteers.

Text messages introduced at the trial suggested the head coach was aware of the rape allegation early on. DeWine said coaches are among officials required by state law to report child abuse. The coach and the school district have repeatedly declined to comment.

Mays and Richmond were charged with penetrating the West Virginia girl with their fingers, first in the back seat of a moving car after a mostly underage drinking party on Aug. 11, and then in the basement of a house.

"They treated her like a toy," prosecutor Marianne Hemmeter said.

Prosecutors argued that the victim was so intoxicated she couldn't consent to sex that night, while the defense contended the girl realized what she was doing and was known to lie. The girl testified she could not recall what happened but woke up naked in a strange house after drinking at a party.

"It was really scary," she said. "I honestly did not know what to think because I could not remember anything."

She said she believed she was assaulted when she later read text messages among friends and saw a photo of herself naked, along with a video that made fun of her and the alleged attack.

Three other boys, two of them on the football team, saw something happening that night and didn't try to stop it but instead recorded it with their cellphones. Granted immunity to testify, they confirmed the girl was assaulted and said she was so drunk she didn't seem to know what was happening.

Evidence at the trial also included sexually explicit text messages sent by numerous students after the party. Lawyers noted how texts have seemed to replace talking on the phone for young people. A computer forensic expert documented hundreds of thousands of texts found on 17 phones seized during the investigation. In sentencing the boys, Lipps urged parents and others "to have discussions about how you talk to your friends, how you record things on the social media so prevalent today and how you conduct yourself when drinking is put upon you by your friends."

After the arrests, the case was furiously debated on blogs and social media, with some people warning of conspiracies and conflicts of interest. On Sunday, Hemmeter, the prosecutor, criticized efforts by the hacker collective Anonymous to publicize the case, saying the attention had a chilling effect on those willing to testify. After the verdict, the accuser's mother rebuked the boys for "lack of any moral code."

"You were your own accuser, through the social media that you chose to publish your criminal conduct on," she said.

Americans should no longer be silent on rape

■ Actress who plays TV detective is on a crusade to process rape kits and put offenders behind bars.

KATHLEEN PARKER
Washington Post Writers Group

Mariska Hargitay, better known as "Law & Order: Special Victims Unit" Detective Olivia Benson, is the human intersection of life and art.

Precisely, the line between the fictional role she plays and the role she has carved out in real life is approximately a hair's breadth. The passion television viewers witness on the popular crime show — the rage, the disgust, that curled lip, the twitching eye — may be part of the actor's toolbox, but it's no act.

Philosophically, at least, Olivia and Mariska (pronounced Marish-ka) are one and the same. This much was clear when Hargitay visited Washington recently to launch her "No More" campaign related to her victims' advocacy group, the Joyful Heart Foundation (joyfulheartfoundation.org).

"No More" means no more bystanders to crime, no more silence about domestic violence and sexual assault. The motto comes with an icon — a blue donut, more or less — that Hargitay hopes will become a unifying symbol as familiar as breast cancer's pink ribbon.

Hargitay's transformation from an actor into a powerful voice for victims began about 15 years ago when she began researching the role that would make her a household name. In the process, she stumbled upon the appalling statistics about sexual assault, domestic violence and child abuse. Especially offensive was the fact that hundreds of thousands of rape kits remained unprocessed.

This meant that hundreds of thousands of victims, mostly women, were never taken seriously or given an opportunity for justice — and their rapists were free to rape again. Why is there no outrage?

Hargitay set about to make her own outrage known, creating her foundation, which advocates for justice and the sort of prosecutorial zeal one wishes weren't only on TV. Speaking at the National Press Club, she urged an end to the silence that feeds shame and posed the question: "Think how helpful it is to a criminal if we refuse to talk about it?"

A rape kit, as fans of "L&O: SVU" know, is the evidence collected during a medical exam following a rape, including DNA swabs. Typically, it costs $1,200-$1,500 to process a kit; hence, in part, the backlog. But more to the point, a rape kit takes several hours and is both invasive and humiliating for someone who already has endured a violent attack. This alone should be sufficient to dissuade those who assume that many rapes are not "legitimate." Why, otherwise, would anyone put themselves through such a hideous ordeal?

As Hargitay put it, the rape victim's body is a living, breathing, feeling crime scene. "After a four-to-six hour invasive exam, you'd think they'd be eager to process." Instead, old attitudes persist, relegating rape kits to cold storage and awarding rapists free passes.

Hargitay, who became emotional several times during her luncheon talk, conceded that the characters on her show are not typical. The sympathy, empathy, psychological sophistication and compassion displayed toward fictional victims are also mostly fictional. More often, there is only passing regard for real women alleging rape, some of whom may be perceived (because of behavior or dress) to have been responsible for whatever happened.

In a time of cost-cutting and smaller staffs — not to mention other immediate cases — it is difficult to argue that old rape kits urgently need to be processed. But Hargitay's persistence has paid off. In Detroit, where 11,000 rape kits have been collecting dust for as long as 20 years, 23 serial rapists have been identified from the recent processing of just 400 kits. Three resulted in convictions, according to Wayne County prosecutor Kym Worthy.

New York — which has a DNA databank that, thanks to Hargitay's lobbying efforts, includes samples from anyone convicted of a crime — has cleared its backlog of 17,000 kits. The result: an arrest rate that leapt from 40 percent to 70 percent, according to Hargitay. Similarly, Los Angeles has cleared its 12,669 kits.

There are still tens of thousands to go, but Hargitay has succeeded in demonstrating that one ticked-off cop can make a difference — even if she is only a TV cop. These days, the pretend character is learning from the real-life woman who plays her. Hargitay admitted that what you see on television is often informed by the work of her foundation. The lesson she hopes to convey is as no-nonsense as the lip-curling Olivia Benson: Rape victims are victims, period. And perps will be prosecuted.

OUR VIEW

The times call for a great pope to lead

When 76-year-old Cardinal Jorge Mario Bergoglio, of Argentina, stepped onto the balcony of St. Peter's Basilica on Wednesday as Pope Francis, he ushered in a new era for the Catholic Church. We hope his reign is one that becomes a positive influence on the world.

The cardinals' selection of the former archbishop of Buenos Aires is historic. Francis is the first pope from the Americas, the first Jesuit raised to the papacy and the first non-European pontiff since Gregory III — who was from what is today Syria — was seen in 731.

These are staggering departures from the old and traditional paths of the Catholic Church. The very fact that the cardinals elected a non-European to be pope ends a 1,000-year-old tradition.

The man who has been described as humble and with a common touch, is in a position of influence, not just with the world's 1.2 billion Catholics, but within the worldwide community. The eyes of the world will be on Pope Francis for numerous reasons — among them how he works to bring back those who seem to have lost their faith and how he works to repair the image of the church in the wake of the sex abuse and alleged corruption scandals.

Certainly, Pope Francis already has a major stage on which to work. The question remains if he can maximize his opportunity with the needs of the time. Of course, that is a question that has to be answered by all great leaders. It is our hope that Pope Francis is up to this challenge because we need great men in this challenging time.

GUEST VIEW

The first pope from the Americas is historical

The new pope, Francis, will have ample opportunity to make history in dealing with the challenges facing the Catholic Church. But the cardinals who chose him Wednesday already have made history in selecting the first pope from Latin America — Cardinal Jorge Mario Bergoglio.

Implicit in this conclave's decision is the notion that the church's strengths are as important as its areas of weakness or decline.

Latin America — and we'd add under this umbrella a large immigrant Catholic community in the United States — is where a plurality of the world's Catholics reside. Brazil and Mexico have the largest Catholic populations in the world, 133 million and 96 million, respectively. And Mexico, of course, is the richest source of immigration to the United States.

Going into the conclave, the debate outside was, as with every papal selection in recent memory, whether the church would step out of Europe for its next leader. Latin America has a sizable Catholic population, Asia and Africa have the fastest growth and the U.S. and European church are struggling with scandal and issues involving a more secularized society.

But the real significance might be that the choice of a non-European indicates a desire to reform church administration, a desire not thought to motivate the more traditionalist Italian cardinals.

This reform, however, might not extend to other areas that will please the church's progressives. Bergoglio, now Francis, has reportedly clashed with President Cristina Fernandez de Kirchner over gay marriage and contraception. But this cardinal, known for his humility, could just change the church in other ways.

"In our ecclesiastical region there are priests who don't baptize the children of single mothers because they weren't conceived in the sanctity of marriage," Bergoglio told priests last year. "These are today's hypocrites. Those who clericalize the church. Those who separate the people of God from salvation."

No, he is not the U.S. pope some hoped for, but he is the first from the Americas. This selection is fraught with history and portent.

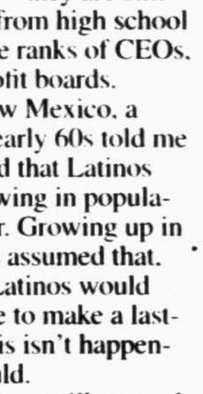
Latinos grow in population, not in power

■ It is hard to see a Latino being elected pope and then see the doors being shut in America.



RUBEN NAVARRETTE
Washington Post Writers Group

What a mind-blowing experience it is these days to be Latino and living in the United States.

The nation's 52 million Latinos look around the world and see endless opportunity, power and influence. Yet, closer to home, they see closed doors, glass ceilings, little power and even less influence.

Which reminds me. Now that a Latino — Cardinal Jorge Mario Bergoglio of Argentina — has been elected pope for the first time in the 2,000-year history of the Catholic Church, do you suppose that President Obama could find just one Latino to serve in his second-term Cabinet?

Despite reports that Thomas Perez, assistant attorney general for civil rights, is Obama's choice for secretary of labor, there hasn't been an official announcement. The top three available Cabinet posts (State, Defense, Treasury) went to white males. Once again, for Obama, Latinos are an after-after-after thought.

Not only that. Putting Perez at the helm of the Labor Department would be an insult to Latinos. First, the job is small potatoes as Cabinet posts go. Next, a Latino has already occupied this space. Obama's first labor secretary was Hilda Solis, a Mexican-American. So, unlike having a Latino pope, there is no history being made here. And finally, Perez was responsible for trying to prove that Sheriff Joe Arpaio of Maricopa County, Ariz., violated the civil rights of Latinos. The case was dropped before last fall's election, which didn't sit well with Latinos.

Of course, Cabinet positions are only one example of where Latinos in the United States get the short end of the stick. They're shortchanged by the school system, treated as scapegoats in the immigration debate, ethnically profiled by law enforcement officers, deported in record numbers by the Obama administration, written off by Republicans, neglected by Democrats, ignored by Hollywood, left out of the media, overlooked in a black-and-white paradigm and treated disrespectfully by the rich and powerful.

Imagine how it feels for U.S. Latinos to watch non-Latinos gather on Sunday talk shows and not hesitate to offer their insights into the Latino vote, or what to do about immigration from Latin America, or how Latinos are changing U.S. demographics.

Imagine how it feels for U.S. Latinos to watch a film such as "Argo" get the Academy Award for Best Picture despite the fact that the central character, Hispanic CIA agent Tony Mendez, was played by non-Hispanic actor Ben Affleck. Latinos don't even have the skills to play themselves.

Imagine how it feels for U.S. Latinos to learn that — as hard as they're working — they are still lagging behind in graduation rates from high school and college, underrepresented in the ranks of CEOs, and scarce on corporate and nonprofit boards.

Not long ago, during a trip to New Mexico, a Mexican-American woman in her early 60s told me that she was surprised and saddened that Latinos were going backward. They're growing in population, she observed, but not in power. Growing up in the 1950s, she said, she had always assumed that, when she reached retirement age, Latinos would have accumulated enough influence to make a lasting contribution to this country. This isn't happening — not to the degree that it should.

Every time we mention how Latinos will, according to Census estimates, account for 25 percent of the U.S. population by 2040, it only backfires by scaring non-Latinos into battening down the hatches and closing more doors.

And then these U.S. Latinos look toward Rome, and they see in the cardinals' choice of a new pope — Spanish-speaking and born in Buenos Aires, to Italian immigrant parents — an acknowledgement of the fact that Latin America is now home to more than 480 million Catholics. That is more than 40 percent of the 1.2 billion Catholics on the planet.

They see church leaders paying their respects to a population that will likely keep the institution afloat for the rest of the century. Latin America is a young neighborhood. These people see that at least one corner of the globe is changing, adapting, growing and becoming more inclusive. And they feel proud — and inspired. It's nice to be acknowledged.

Then these U.S. Latinos look closer to home and come back to reality — that hard place where all they can do is keep working hard, and never give up, and wait for the United States to catch up with the world.

Must voters have to prove citizenship to register?

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court will struggle this week with the validity of an Arizona law that ties to keep illegal immigrants from voting by demanding all state residents show documents proving their U.S. citizenship before registering to vote in national elections.

The high court will hear arguments today over the legality of Arizona's voter-approved requirement that prospective voters document their U.S. citizenship in order to use a registration form produced under the federal "Motor Voter" voter registration law that doesn't require such documentation.

This case focuses on voter registration in Arizona, which has tangled frequently with the federal government over immigration issues involving the Mexican border. But it has broader implications because four other states — Alabama, Georgia, Kansas and Tennessee — have similar requirements, and 12 other states are contemplating similar legislation, officials say.

The Obama administration is supporting challengers to the law.

If Arizona can add citizenship requirements, then "each state could impose all manner of its own supplemental requirements beyond the federal form," Solicitor General Donald B. Verrilli Jr. said in court papers. "Those requirements could encompass voluminous documentary or informational demands, and could extend to any eligibility criteria beyond citizenship, such as age, residency, mental competence, or felony history."

A federal appeals court threw out the part of Arizona's Proposition 200 that added extra citizenship requirements for voter registration, but only after lower federal judges had approved it.

Arizona wants the justices to reinstate its requirement.

Kathy McKee, who led the push to get the proposition on the ballot, said voter fraud, including by illegal immigrants, continues to be a problem in Arizona. "For people to conclude there is no problem is just shallow logic," McKee said.

The Associated Press reported in September that officials in pivotal presidential election states had found only a fraction of the illegal voters they initially suspected had existed.

In Colorado, election officials found 141 non-citizens on the voter rolls, which was 0.004 percent of the state's nearly 3.5 million voters. Florida officials found 207, or 0.001 percent of the state's 11.4 million registered voters. In North Carolina, 79 people admitted to election officials that they weren't citizens and were removed from the rolls, along with 331 others who didn't respond to repeated inquires.

Opponents of Arizona's law see it as an attack on vulnerable voter groups such as minorities, immigrants and the elderly. They say Arizona's law makes registering more difficult, which is an opposite result from the intention of the 1993 National Voter Registration Act.

Proposition 200 "was never intended to combat voter fraud," said Democratic state Sen. Steve Gallardo, of Phoenix. "It was intended to keep minorities from voting."

With the additional state documentation requirements, Arizona will cripple the effectiveness of neighborhood and community voter registration drives, advocates say. More than 28 million Americans used the federal "Motor Voter" form to register to vote in the 2008 presidential elections, according to the U.S. Election Assistance Commission.

An Arizona victory at the high court would lead to more state voting restrictions, said Elisabeth MacNamara, the national president of the League of Women Voters.

Opponents of the Arizona provision said they've counted more than 31,000 potentially legal voters in Arizona who easily could have registered before Proposition 200 but who were blocked initially by the law in the 20 months after it passed in 2004. They said about 20 percent of those thwarted were Latino.

Arizona officials said they should be able to pass laws to stop illegal immigrants and other noncitizens from getting on their voting rolls.

The Arizona voting law was part of a package that also denied some government benefits to illegal immigrants and required Arizonans to show identification before voting.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the voter identification provision. The denial of benefits was not challenged.

Opponents "argue that Arizona should not be permitted to request evidence of citizenship when someone registers to vote, but should instead rely on the person's sworn statement that he or she is a citizen," Arizona Attorney General Thomas C. Horne said in court papers.

TRIP TO CUBA

Seasoned travelers Marion and John Kimberly had a most unique and educational trip earlier this year. They were part of a group of 35 people, who traveled to Cuba under the auspices of John's alma mater, Williams College.

The eight-day trip, "Cuba: Culture and Politics," began in the capital city of Havana. Founded in 1515, it is one of the oldest cities in the western hemisphere.

The group was able to visit the people of the Caribbean island that was off-limits to Americans for approximately 50 years.

The trip was arranged so they could meet with the local people and community leaders and get insights into how the Cubans live. By visitsing homes and studios of some of Havana's leading artists, they learned about many aspects of their culture. The arts have presented Cubans with an opportunity to cautiously express their views on society, according to material participants received before their departure.

Throughout the trip, special guests, including architects, artists, museum directors, students and others, were invited to join the group, so the tourgoers could engage them in conversation and learn more about life in Cuba.

There were tours of Old Havana, focusing on its four main squares; Colon Cemetery, with monuments that commemorate Cuban heroes, statesmen and novelists; the National Museum of Fine Arts, focusing on the Cuban art collection; and the Museo de la Revolucion, which documents the founding of the current government. They also enjoyed a performance by the Contemporary Dance Company of Cuba.

The group took a side trip to the small, hilltop village of San Francisco de Paula to visit the house where Ernest Hemingway lived for 20 years. His fishing boat, the Pilar, could be seen on the grounds.

En route to the resort town of Varadero, the group stopped in Matanzas, where they learned about the Afro-Cuban religious tradition, and toured the Pharmacy Museum, Xanadu, the former DuPont mansion built in the 1930s; and the site where books are made by hand.

The trip ended with two days spent at Varadero, which is noted for its beautiful white sand beaches.

MUSEUM FUNDRAISER

Museum of the Southwest's triennial fundraiser brought in $400,000 according to Brian Whisenhunt, the museum's executive director.

"Everyone had a wonderful time at Auction 2013, but it wouldn't have been possible without the help of Debra and Fred Westmoreland, the sponsor chairs (of The Roaring Twenties); Jaime Alexander and Shelly Robertson, the auction co-chairs; and Kristi Leeper, decorations chair. The museum is greatly indebted to them for their hard work and dedication," he said.

The museum especially expresses thanks to its Board of Governors and Board of Trustees, as well as major sponsors, including Karen and Spencer Beal, Emily and Kevin Blonkvist, Anne and George Hover, Mary B. Kenney, Lissa Noel Wagner, Anthem Oil and Gas Inc., Alison and Jamie Small, Amy and Tim Leach, Marion and Tim Goudeau, Jaime and Roger Alexander, Shawnna and Beau Boren, Karmen and Billy Bryant, and Shelly and Phillip Robertson.

In addition to Leeper, who decorated and advised on most of the public spaces for the auction, decorators who made the night memorable include Shellie Alvarado of You're Invited by Shellie, Kenye Kay Butts, Chris Collum of Flowerland, Elena Corrales of Corrales Décor, Julie Emery of Van Stavern Interiors, Ashley Lamb Interior Designers, Blackbird Interiors and Susie McCauley of Alldredge Gardens.

Many of the guests were adorned with 1920s glam that added to the festive air of the evening. Actors and greeters in period costumes welcomed guests.

The proceeds from the auction will support the museum's operations and capital projects for this year, as well as 2014 and 2015. This includes exhibitions, programs and activities in the Juliette and Fred Turner Jr. Memorial Art Gallery, Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum and Marian Blakemore Planetarium.

The auction, originally scheduled for 2012, was moved forward by one year, so that the next one will coincide with the museum's golden anniversary celebration in 2016.

BRIDAL TEA

Former Midlander Shanna Sissom, of Plainview, recently was honored at a bridal tea hosted by Patricia Schneider at her Midland home. Sissom is the bride-elect of Sigfried J. Iverson III, of Midland.

The bride-elect wore a silver-gray silk suit and Schneider wore a lavender-gray silk dress.

The table was adorned with a 4-foot centerpiece of pink roses, pink tulips and yellow forsythia on a white Battenburg lace tablecloth.

Debra Bounds served tea from a silver tea service, and Audrie Palmer served almond punch from a silver punch bowl. Sandwiches, fruit, vegetables and petit fours of lemon squares and pecan cups were served to about 40 women, including the bride's mother, Carolyn Sissom, of Houston, and the groom-elect's aunt and cousins' wives — Janna Iverson, Susan Iverson and Tonya Iverson, all of Midland.

The couple will be married April 27 at Little White Church in Houston, followed by a reception at Willow Fork Country Club and a honeymoon trip to Maui. The couple plans to live in Midland.

MCT's SHREKFEST

Midland Community Theatre hosted SHREKfest on March 3. More than 300 people attended the family-friendly event.

Before a special matinee performance of "Shrek the Musical," the youngsters took part in a variety of activities. There were two bounce houses located in the theater parking lot, a face painting station, and Gingy cookie decorating. They also could make princess wands or knight swords to keep as souvenirs. Guests were able to mingle with characters from the show and have their photos taken in the Shrek character's cutout board.

After the show, the cast signed copies of "The Prompter" and posed for pictures with members of the audience.

The Pickwick Players, MCT's teen performing group, along with several other volunteers, assisted in monitoring the craft stations.

The show was held over two weekends because of its overwhelming success. The two remaining performances are Friday and Saturday.

SORORITY CELEBRATION

Pi Beta Phi and Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority alumnae recently celebrated their joint heritage with their annual Monmouth Duo. Both sororities were founded at Monmouth College in Monmouth, Ill. — the Pi Phis in 1867 and the Kappas in 1870.

This year's party was hosted by the Pi Phis at the home of Abbie Giraud. Co-hostesses were Natalie Prieto and Laura Earl.

The women enjoyed wine, cheese and cookies in the shapes of the sorority badges — the Pi Phi Arrow and the Kappa Key — that were iced in each group's colors.

In attendance were former longtime Midlander Jane Ann Kelly, now of Amarillo, at the function, with her daughter, Emily Kelly. Among others in the crowd were Carolyn Roden, Kathy Nobles, Frances Carlton, Jennifer Ready, Amy Robnett, Mary Katherine Spinks, Brooke Mueller, Janet Stoltz and Sally Reeder.

MCC LADIES ASSOCIATION

The Odessa College Jazz Band entertained the Midland Country Club Ladies Association at its February luncheon meeting.

Eric Baker, director of the band and chair of the OC Music Department, also plays trumpet with the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale's Lone Star Brass.

The lively program also included dance performances to the live music. Tracy and Randy Davis entertained with demonstrations of the cha-cha and the West Coast swing. They were followed by Sophia Andres and Gary Covington, who demonstrated the tango, and Joyce Leffingwell and Max King, the East Coast swing.

Sara St. Clair was winner of a door prize from Joanne's Fine Gifts.

Other luncheongoers included Cindi Thoma, Carol Jo Blake, Melinda Williamson, Bonny Power, Jann Wiesenfeld, Beth Qualia and Shirley Qualia.

MIDLAND FAMILY CARE

Study asks: Can you stand to be healthier?

By Lyden Odukwu, M.D.

LYDEN ODUKWU, M.D.

Most people who work in an office or who drive a truck or a taxi for a living spend hours and hours a day sitting. According to a recent study by researchers from Australia and Kansas State University suggest that too much sitting could lead to chronic health problems such as cancer, diabetes and heart disease.

The study, involving 63,000 men in New South Wales ranging in age from 45 to 65, found that those who sat for four hours or less each day were much less likely to have conditions like cancer, diabetes, heart disease or high blood pressure than were those who sat for more than four hours daily.

The more hours of sitting, the greater the amount of chronic diseases, even when accounting for a person's age, weight and other variables.

While this study does not address the "chicken or egg" issue of whether the sitting contributed to the disease or the disease caused the sitting, other studies have shown that the majority of us need more exercise than we're getting.

To combat this, some companies have redesigned workspaces so workers can stand up most of the time. Where this is not practical, it is probably a good idea to stand up regularly and do some moving about. Please note, this should not be an excuse to spend more time at the water cooler.

Chaps hope home course leads to success this week

By Len Hayward
lhayward@mrt.com

The Midland College golf team left Sugar Tree Golf Club last week knowing it could have played better.

The Chaparrals ended up fourth in the NJCAA District 2 Preview/Sugar Tree Invitational, and after winning two tournaments earlier this spring, it was a disappointment to finish fourth.

But that disappointment only helped to fuel the squad as it prepared for this week's Omega Treating Chemicals College Invitational at Green Tree Country Club.

The annual tournament hosted by Midland College will begin today with 36 holes, and then conclude on Tuesday with 18 holes on Green Tree Country Club's North and East Courses. MC will be joined by Odessa College, New Mexico Military Institute, Trinidad State (Colo.), Hutchinson (Kan.) Community College, and Garden City (Kan.) Community College in the tournament field.

Midland College is not only playing on a course it sees multiple times during the week, but it's a place the team has the confidence to win at.

"This tournament is massive for us," said Sean Lawrie, a sophomore from Aberdeen, Scotland. "It's big in the long run if we can win this tournament because it will give us plenty of confidence at state and district."

Lawrie Ryan Nee

Prior to last week's event in Dennis, the Chaps won two straight tournaments in New Mexico, and the team had plenty of confidence. Even with the frustrations last week at Sugar Tree, the team hasn't lost focus on the ultimate goal of winning a national championship.

"The last tournament wasn't quite what we wanted, and that's as bad as we've played as a team and we still finished fourth," said sophomore David Ryan. "We are still pretty confident that we are going to put in a good performance."

What long-time coach Delnor Poss said what he likes about this year's team is that it already has some good chemistry, and he's seeing some leadership from the likes of Lawrie, Ryan, and Blake Brorman, who are complemented by players such as Sean Nee, Tyler Brown and Russell Lara.

"I feel like there's some maturity shown among all of them that have been playing," Poss said. "It's a really good group of guys that have a good attitude, and they are looking forward to some good competition."

Poss said that his top four players are set for this week as Lawrie, Ryan, Brorman and Lara will occupy those spots, but he said the fifth spot is still up for grabs.

Playing as an individual last week, Brown finish tied for seventh, while Nee struggled. Nee said he's had some struggles with his putter lately, but said he's slowly getting some of his confidence back.

The Midland College Lady Chaparrals chant before the game against Weatherford College on March 9 at the Rip Griffin Center in Lubbock. Team chemistry has been important to the Lady Chaps' success this season.

Close-knit Lady Chaps open NJCAA play today

By Oscar LeRoy
oleroy@mrt.com

It didn't take long for Darnetta Jackson to realize that this year's Midland College women's basketball team was going to be a cohesive group.

Whether it was basketball that brought the team together or just their desire to play to win and for each other, that chemistry helped the Lady Chaparrals earn their first NJCAA National Tournament berth since 2010 this season. No. 13 seed Midland College (26-7) begins tournament play at 2 p.m. today against No. 20 seed Volunteer State (23-4) at Bicentennial Center in Salina, Kan.

"From when we first had parties at Coach (Ron) Jones' house, I just knew we had great chemistry," said Jackson, a sophomore guard from Humble. "We just kept it real with each other, we were honest, there was no lying, and that brought the chemistry on and off the court."

Unlike Jackson, Catherine Kruschke was one of the nine newcomers to this year's team and she also could sense that chemistry develop early.

"We clicked and we've never had any drama," said Kruschke, a forward from Dublin, Calif. "We all look out for each other and we all bring something to the team. It felt in the beginning, like in preseason, we started connecting. Some of us had a lot of things in common, and then basketball brought us together and we have a great bond."

Added sophomore Achiri Ade, "We're always talking and supporting each other. When we get on the court, we have to trust that our teammate is going to make the shot or make the right decision."

Considering that this is a young team — eight of the 11 players are freshmen — and the fact that the 11 players are from four different countries and three different states, for that chemistry to develop as well as it has is impressive even for a veteran coach like Jones, who is in his 19th season at MC.

"I think they have made steady progress as far as maturing and understanding how to do things," he said. "For that reason, I think we were able to weather the storm a little bit and didn't get too rattled when we were down against Weatherford."

No Texas teams in NCAA tourney, 1st time since '77

By Stephen Hawkins
Associated Press

Texas has no teams in the NCAA tournament for the first time since 1977.

When the 68-team field was announced Sunday, the Lone Star State was completely shut out. There were no Texas Longhorns, Baylor Bears, Texas A&M Aggies, Texas Tech Red Raiders or Rice Owls.

And not even any Lumberjacks. Southland Conference regular-season champion Stephen F. Austin (27-4) lost its league tournament championship game and didn't get an at-large NCAA berth, and instead had to settle for a first-round NIT game at Stanford on Tuesday night.

Baylor (18-14), the NIT runner-up four years ago before two NCAA regional finals the previous three seasons, also made the 32-team NIT field. The Bears host a first-round game against Long Beach State (19-13) on Wednesday night.

Prairie View (Southwestern Athletic Conference) and Texas-Arlington (WAC) also made it to their conference tournament championship games, but both also lost Saturday with automatic NCAA berths on the line.

Only three years ago, Texas matched an NCAA record by sending seven teams to the tournament, and had sent at least three teams each of the last six years. Texas also holds the record for most schools that have appeared in the tournament (23).

This March, the only NCAA men's tournament action in Texas will be games played in the state.

Second- and third-round games will be played this week on the University of Texas campus in Austin. The South Regional final will be played at Cowboys Stadium in Texas.

Texas (16-17) had been one of only six schools to play in the NCAA tournament each of the previous 14 years, and needed the Big 12's automatic berth to keep their streak alive. But the Longhorns lost 66-49 to 11th-ranked Kansas State in their first conference tourney game.

Louisville top overall seed in NCAA tourney

By Paul Newberry
Associated Press

Louisville is the top seed in the NCAA tournament after a topsy-turvy season in college basketball, capped by another round of upsets over the weekend.

That other team from the Bluegrass State won't even get a chance to defend its national title.

While the Big East champion Cardinals surged to the top of the 68-team bracket released Sunday, joined by fellow No. 1 seeds Kansas, Indiana and Gonzaga, the school that won it all a year ago was left out of the field. Kentucky was hoping the committee would overlook a dismal performance in the Southeastern Conference tournament, but the Wildcats had to settle for a spot in the second-tier National Invitation Tournament.

"You've got to earn it each and every year," said Mike Bobinski, the Xavier athletic director who chaired the selection committee.

As if that's not bad enough for Kentucky fans, Louisville (29-5) gets to rub a little more salt in its rival's wounds by opening the tournament about 75 miles from campus on Kentucky's home court, Rupp Arena in Lexington. The Cardinals will face either Liberty or North Carolina State in a second-round game Thursday. Kentucky plays an NIT game Tuesday — on the road because Rupp is taken for the NCAAs — at Robert Morris.

The selection committee had its work cut out after five teams swapped the top ranking in The Associated Press poll, capped by West Coast Conference champion Gonzaga (30-2) moving to the lead spot for the first time in school history. Bobinski said six teams were in the running for No. 1 seeds on the final weekend, the result of a season in which no school established itself as a clear-cut favorite.

Of course, only four spots were available at the head of each bracket. The top one went to fourth-ranked Louisville, which stumbled through a three-game losing streak in January after rising to No. 1 in the poll, and came up short in an epic five-overtime loss at Notre Dame a few weeks later.

The Cardinals have ripped off 10 straight wins since, capped by a stunning turnaround in the championship game of the Big East tournament. They trailed Syracuse by 16 points early in the second half, but put on the full-court pressure and won in a romp, 78-61.

The Big East, in its final year before the basketball-only schools break away to form their own league, led the way with eight teams in the NCAA field.

"We are ecstatic to be the No. 1 seed, particularly after finishing off one of the greatest conferences in the history of college basketball with a Big East championship," Louisville coach Rick Pitino said. "Our players showed incredible grit to come back from 16 points down. We know we will be challenged right away in one of the toughest brackets that I've seen in quite some time. I think our guys are up for the challenge."

No. 7 Kansas (29-5) moved up to take the second overall seed after an impressive run through the Big 12

2013 NJCAA DIVISION I WOMEN'S BASKETBALL NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP NO. 13 MIDLAND COLLEGE VS. NO. 20 VOLUNTEER STATE (TENN.)

When/where: 2 p.m., Bicentennial Center, Salina, Kan.

Records: Midland College 26-7; Volunteer State 23-4

On the web: www.ihigh.com/njcaatw/

How they got here: Midland College was an automatic qualifier after making the championship game of the Region 5 Tournament. MC won the tournament by defeating Weatherford College, 79-74, in the championship game. Volunteer State qualified for nationals by making the Region 7 championship game, but lost, 80-44, to Walters State.

Notes & quotes: This is the first national tournament appearance for the Lady Chaparrals since 2010 but sixth overall appearance. ... MC shared the Western Junior College Athletic Conference title with South Plains College and New Mexico Junior College, and despite being the No. 3 seed at the regional tournament, defeated No. 18 Collin County, No. 25 South Plains and No. 16 Weatherford to win the title. "I'm just excited and happy for the girls that they're going to get a chance to play at the national tournament," MC coach Ron Jones said. "I think we've got a little momentum right now and I think that Weatherford game was a confidence builder." ... Jones said he doesn't know much about the Lady Pioneers other than the fact they have several shooters and run an offense with a lot of screens to give their shooters open looks. "As far as offenses, at this time of year we've seen about everything there is to see, so we should know how to defend seven minutes of the game. There's going to be a lot of good teams (at nationals), just like ourselves, and everybody is coming in there to work hard. We just have to compete and work as hard as the other team."

Jones said he feels good about his team's chances this week because he believes his team is in a good place mentally thanks to the Lady Chaps' desire to get better and the leadership of sophomores Ade, Jackson and Meghan Braeuer.

"I think the sophomores have been very business-like and matter of fact about getting better, keep working and keep improving," Jones said. "I think they've done a good job of making sure the freshmen do the same thing."

Added Kruschke about the sophomores, "They keep us pumped up, they keep cheering us on and tell us not to give up and to keep pushing ourselves."

The Lady Chaps now hope that their togetherness, work ethic and their desire to win will be the perfect recipe for success at the national tournament.

"I want to win nationals," Jackson said. "I think we've got a good chance if we play good defense and rebound well."

Added Ade, "It's pretty exciting to get to the national tournament. This is the first time both the sophomores and freshmen have been there and we just want to go and play hard and do the best that we can. Our main goal is to win the national championship."

LADY CHAPS

From 1C

That game against No. 16 Weatherford College in the NJCAA Region V championship game last weekend probably said as much about the unity and the belief of this Lady Chaps team than anything else. MC fell behind by double digits in the first half, then after fighting back to get to within one point, Weatherford went on another big run to take a double-digit lead with less than 14 minutes remaining in the game. Instead of panicking and folding like many teams would have done, the Lady Chaps kept fighting and pulled away in the final minutes for a 79-74 victory.

"I think playing in our conference and playing in as many tough games as we did helps a lot," said Jones about his team's willingness to keep fighting. "I think it says a lot about their togetherness."

Ade, the forward from Baltimore who averaged a double-double of 15.6 points and 12 rebounds per game at regionals, said the key in her team's comeback was its energy.

"We're coming out hard and we're not giving up," said the Western Junior College Athletic Conference MVP. "(Winning regionals) gives us a lot of confidence. It lets us know that if we play hard, good things come out of it. In the championship game, we were down but we came back in the last six.

"I wasn't playing bad, it's that some of the other guys played their way past me," said Nee, a 24-year old freshman from Atlantic City, N.J. "I just don't need to worry about everybody, and just play my own game."

And playing their own game is something Poss said he will remind his team this week as the Chaps are playing on a course they know so well, but one that they can sometimes take for granted.

"I think they take things for granted sometimes instead of realizing they've got to execute just like they do any place else," Poss said. "It's really about concentrating on the shot at hand."

TEXAS

From 1C

The Longhorns went to the Final Four in 2003, and made it to regional finals in 2006 and 2008.

Baylor had boosted its status for a potential at-large berth with an 81-58 victory over Big 12 champion Kansas in the regular-season finale and went to the Big 12 tourney as the No. 3 seed.

But the Bears fell behind by 20 in their opener against Oklahoma State before tying the game in the final minute. The Cowboys then made two go-ahead free throws before Pierre Jackson's attempted 3-pointer at the buzzer hit off the back of the rim.

Stephen F. Austin lost, 68-66, to Northwestern State in the Southland Conference tournament final Saturday, the second time this season the team from Louisiana beat the Lumberjacks, which led the nation allowing only 50 points a game.

Prairie View (15-19) scored the last six points in the SWAC tournament final, but lost, 45-44, to Southern University. Texas-Arlington (19-13) lost, 64-55, to New Mexico State in the WAC championship game.

Texas A&M (18-15) completed its first SEC season by shooting a season-low 24 percent in a 62-50 SEC tourney loss to former Big 12 rival Missouri.

SMU (15-17) finished its first season with Hall of Fame coach Larry Brown and last in Conference USA by losing 16 of its last 23 games.

TCU (11-21) made its Big 12 debut with new coach Trent Johnson, and its only conference wins were against Kansas and Oklahoma. Texas Tech (11-20) played this season under interim coach Chris Walker, who got that role in October, shortly before the start of the season, when Billy Gillispie abruptly resigned.

tournament, punctuated by a 70-54 victory over rival Kansas State in the title game. No. 3 Indiana (28-6) is third overall despite falling to Wisconsin in the Big Ten semifinals. The Zags claimed the last of the coveted No. 1 seeds, edging out Atlantic Coast Conference champion Miami.

The top spots are significant in at least one respect: A No. 1 has never lost to a 16th-seeded team.

"It's going to happen. A 16 is going to beat a 1 eventually," Kansas coach Bill Self said. "This is a unique tournament. I haven't studied the bracket, but I would expect the unexpected. There will be a lot of mild upsets in this tournament."

Miami, known more as a football school, became the first ACC team to be denied a top seed after winning both the regular season and the conference tournament.

"We try to control the things we can control," coach Jim Larranaga said. "We have no control over that. Wherever they seed us, wherever they send us, whoever we play, we'll get ready just like we do for every game."

The Hurricanes were among the No. 2 seeds with conference rival Duke, Georgetown from the Big East, and Big Ten tournament champion Ohio State.

"If we had five spots, Miami would be there with us," Bobinski said. "In the final analysis, we put Gonzaga just ahead of them. But it was very, very close."

Duke, which had been atop the RPI rankings, cost itself a shot at a No. 1 seed with an upset loss to Maryland in the quarterfinals of the ACC tournament. Georgetown lost in the Big East semifinals and settled for a No. 2 as well, but Indiana was in no danger of dropping off the top line, despite its loss to the Badgers. Bobinski said the Hoosiers' overall body of work was good enough to ensure they didn't fall below one of the top four spots, no matter what happened Sunday.

The tournament begins Tuesday with a pair of games in Dayton, Ohio.

Everyone is trying to get to Atlanta for the Final Four, which starts April 6 at the Georgia Dome.

If Louisville advances to the round of 16, there's a chance Pitino would get to match up with Oklahoma State coach Travis Ford, a regional MVP on Pitino's Kentucky team that made it to the Final Four two decades ago.

"I hope we get the opportunity. That would be nice," Ford said. "I agree with the NCAA committee that they're the No. 1 overall seed, after watching them play (Saturday) night and what they've done lately in the Big East."

On Thursday, Gonzaga takes on Southern in the second round of the West Regional at Salt Lake City. The Zags will be relishing their first No. 1 seed, though they are hardly a tournament neophyte; this is their 15th straight NCAA appearance, a mid-major program that has shown it can hang with the big boys.

This season, they come into the tournament on a 14-game winning streak.

"In our judgment that's a very complete and very strong basketball team," Bobinski said.

On Friday, Kansas stays close to home in Kansas City, Mo., facing Western Kentucky in a South Region second-round game, while Indiana opens in Dayton, Ohio, against either LIU Brooklyn or James Madison, another of the "First Four" contests.

One thing is for sure in this most uncertain season: There won't be a repeat champion.

A year after taking its eighth national title — only UCLA has won more — Kentucky's success in restocking each year with the best one-and-done prospects hit a roadblock. The Wildcats never meshed as a unit, then lost the best of the freshmen when Nerlens Noel went down with a season-ending knee injury. An upset over Florida boosted their stock heading to the SEC tournament. But the Wildcats turned in a miserable performance in Nashville, Tenn., losing to Vanderbilt 64-48 in the quarterfinals.

"That was a tough way to finish if you're going to impress upon us that you're one of the best teams in the nation," Bobinski said.

Kasey Kahne wins 1st career race at Bristol

By Jenna Fryer
Associated Press

BRISTOL, Tenn. — Kasey Kahne won his first career Sprint Cup Series race at Bristol Motor Speedway after Brad Keselowski struggled on the final restart.

Tempers flared after the race when Joey Logano leaned inside the car window of former teammate Denny Hamlin to complain about Hamlin spinning him during the race. At the time, Logano was racing Jeff Gordon for the lead.

Logano was pulled away from Hamlin's car by crew members for both drivers in a classic post-Bristol clash that delighted the crowd. "They're fighting! It's Bristol!" yelled Clint Bowyer, who saw the action on the infield big screen.

Logano wouldn't discuss what he told Hamlin.

"That is for me to know and Denny to know. Frustrating," he said. "I had a really fast ... Ford and I felt like it was capable to win the race."

Hamlin shrugged it all off.

"He said he was coming for me," Hamlin said. "I usually don't see him, so it's usually not a factor."

The two sparred briefly on Twitter after the season-opening Daytona 500, when Hamlin complained Logano ruined the closing laps of the race. But he said Sunday's flap was not a carryover.

"It didn't have anything to do with that," Hamlin said. "You've really got to control your car and he slipped up into me. Really, he would have been in the garage with no radiator in it if I had not checked up twice. I meant to run in to him. I didn't mean to spin him out, but his day was fine. We finished bad and he finished bad. It's even."

Their feuding may have played a role in the outcome of the race.

Keselowski was the leader on the final restart with 39 laps to go and lined up next to Kane. Hamlin was lined up behind Keselowski, with Logano lined up behind Hamlin. When the flag waved, Keselowski didn't go and Kahne rocketed to the lead and never looked back.

NASCAR Sprint Cup Series driver Kasey Kahne (5) celebrates after winning the Food City 500 on Sunday in Bristol, Tenn.

Although it appeared Keselowski spun his tires, he was adamant after the race about what happened — "I got ran over!" — and that prevented him from breaking away on the restart.

Hamlin backed up Keselowski's account.

"The 22 (Logano) ran into me and shoved me into (Keselowski)," Hamlin said. "Sorry to the 2, but I was the pinball in the sandwich. Once he throttled up, the 22 lifted me up and just flat out pinned me up against the 2."

Logano seemed to think Keselowski spun his tires and that created the bottleneck, but Keselowski believed he had help from behind.

"I haven't seen the replay, I just know my rear tires were off the ground before I got to the restart zone," he said. "Eventually I got hit so hard it pushed my foot in the gas pedal, made myself look like a (fool). That was the deal. Never had another chance."

Nobody came close to Kahne, who drove his Hendrick Motorsports Chevrolet to the win by 1.7-seconds. Hendrick drivers have now won two of the first four races this season.

Kyle Busch snagged second from Keselowski, who took over the Sprint Cup Series points lead as the only driver to open the season with four top-five finishes. Kurt Busch finished fourth and was followed by Bowyer and Dale Earnhardt Jr.

Ryan Newman was seventh, Brian Vickers was eighth and Paul Menard and Jamie McMurray rounded out the top 10.

The race changed dramatically with 110 laps to go in a bizarre crash between leaders Gordon and Matt Kenseth. Gordon was out front when he suddenly lost a tire and his car darted up the track into the wall. Kenseth had nowhere to go to avoid him and drove directly into the back of Gordon, causing heavy damage to both cars.

"You all right?" crew chief Alan Gustafson radioed Gordon.

"Yeah, I'm OK. Did we take out Matt, too?" Gordon asked.

With the top two cars in the garage, the rest of the field headed to pit road to reset for the final 100 laps.

"I hate that for Matt Kenseth," Gordon said. "He was coming, and it was just a matter of time before he caught us. We needed points. This definitely isn't going to get us many."

Kenseth, winner of last week's race at Las Vegas, said the crash was unavoidable.

"There's not a lot either one of us can do about that," he said. "There was nowhere to go."

Before the Gordon-Kenseth crash, Gordon and Logano were dueling for the lead. Gordon used a two-tire stop with about 175 laps to go to gain eight spots on pit road and take the lead. Logano chased Gordon around the 0.533-mile bullring, pulling even with the four-time champion as he exited the corners only to lose ground on the straights.

Month after fiery crash, Brown wins Gatornationals

By Mark Long
Associated Press

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — Exactly one month after a fiery crash in the NHRA season opener, Antron Brown picked up a victory at the Gatornationals.

Brown used the fastest pass of the day to edge Clay Millican in the Top Fuel final Sunday. It could be a huge turning point for the defending Top Fuel champion, who endured a scary wreck at Pomona on Feb. 17 and was eliminated in the semifinals two weeks ago at Phoenix.

His win was his 22nd in Top Fuel and gave Don Schumacher Racing its 200th career victory. Only John Force Racing has more wins (218) in NHRA history.

Johnny Gray beat Del Worsham to win the Funny Car division. Allen Johnson won the Pro Stock class, and Hector Arana Jr. won the Pro Stock Motorcycle division.

PGA

TAMPA BAY CHAMPIONSHIP: At Palm Harbor, Fla., Kevin Streelman finally won in his 153rd start on the PGA Tour with a game that looked as if he had done it many times before.

Streelman didn't make a bogey over the final 37 holes on the tough Copperhead course at Innisbrook. He didn't miss a shot over the last 11 holes on his way to a 4-under 67 Sunday for a two-shot win in the Tampa Bay Championship.

Boo Weekley, who teed off three hours before the leaders, had a tournament-best 63 and waited to see if it would be enough.

Streelman, locked in a battle with Justin Leonard over the final hour, came up with one clutch shot after another. He hit 5-iron into 6 feet on the par-3 13th hole, the toughest at Innisbrook in the final round, to take the lead for good.

LPGA

LPGA FOUNDERS CUP: At Phoenix, Stacy Lewis won the LPGA Founders Cup to jump to No. 1 in the world, taking advantage of Ai Miyazato's collapse on the 16th hole.

A day after Lewis was penalized two strokes for her caddie's blunder on the short par 4, the American took a two-stroke lead with a birdie on the hole after Miyazato made a double bogey following an errant approach shot that left her with an unplayable lie in a desert bush.

Champions

TOSHIBA CLASSIC: At Newport Beach, Calif., David Frost won the Toshiba Classic, shooting a 65 to defeat Fred Couples by five strokes and tie the tournament record of 19-under 194 set by Jay Haas in 2007.

Frost joined 2011 winner Nick Price as the only golfers to lead the event wire to wire in its 19-year history. It was his fourth career Champions Tour victory and first since last year's AT&T Championship in San Antonio.

PGA European

AVANTHA MASTERS: At Greater Noida, India, Thomas Aiken of South Africa clinched the second European Tour title of his career, winning the Avantha Masters after shooting a 5-under 67 to finish at 23-under 265.

Aiken led overnight and had three birdies on the front nine and two more on his way back to maintain a three-shot lead over the chasing pack.

Japan

THAILAND OPEN: At Bangkok, Prayad Marksaeng shot a final-round 64 for a 24-under-par total of 264 to win the Thailand Open by two strokes over Scott Strange of Australia.

The 47-year-old Thai, who was runner-up here in 2011, trailed Lucas Lee of Brazil by three strokes at the start of the day, but sank nine birdies against just one bogey. Strange had a 67 in the final round of the Japan Tour event.

Wedding for bride on rebound should be small, subdued

DEAR ABBY

Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069. Her column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

DEAR ABBY: My 26-year-old daughter was married last year, but four months after the wedding her husband was arrested for child molestation that had occurred years before. She filed for divorce immediately.

In the meantime, she has met someone and is now pregnant. They want to be married as soon as her divorce is final. My question is: what kind of ceremony would be appropriate in this case, especially since her father and I are church pastors in a small town? — SMALL-TOWN WEDDING

DEAR SMALL TOWN: If your daughter had written to me, I would have advised her not to rush into another marriage so quickly, and that if she hasn't already done so, she should seek some counseling because of what she has been through.

However, because she and the father of her baby are determined to tie the knot as soon as possible, their ceremony should be low-key, with a few close friends and family attending. The ceremony could be either a religious one or a civil one, depending upon their preference. I hope their union will be a happy and successful one.

DEAR ABBY: At what age should parents stop worrying about you? I am 41 years old, but in my parents' eyes I am still a child.

I am an independent woman, and feel like I am not living the life I deserve, and I don't think it's fair. I do everything by myself, and I want them to know that if something happens to them, I'll be fine, and they should stop worrying. Am I wrong to feel this way? — DEBORAH IN OHIO

DEAR DEBORAH: You are not wrong. However, your parents might be clinging to you not because they are worried about what will happen to you if something happens to THEM. They may be clingy because they are worried about what will happen to THEM if something happens to YOU.

DEAR ABBY: My husband of eight years had an affair with an old girlfriend who is also married. I have spent the last nine months trying to forgive him, but he keeps breaking my heart because he can't seem to get over her.

First he was sending her emails, then trying to call her because he felt so guilty over the affair and "needed someone to talk to." Next, he went over to her house to see her. I know he loves me, but I know without a doubt he loves her, too. I'm expecting and due in the short-term, and I don't know how to heal.

The last time they talked — about a month ago — he told her she had ruined his life and he never wanted to see or think about her again. But I know he still searches her profile on Facebook every day, and I know she blocked him, so he must be going nuts because he can't see her and her kids' pictures. I haven't confronted him about this yet, but feel I need to. Please help me. — BROKENHEARTED IN BUFFALO

DEAR BROKENHEARTED: The old girlfriend seems to be doing her part to end the affair. Whether your husband is "going nuts" because he can't see her on Facebook is HIS problem, so please don't make it yours.

Bide your time, have your baby, and then when you're strong enough, DO confront him. Insist on marriage counseling for both of you. You need to understand why he strayed before you or the marriage can heal.

Bidding Quiz

Q 1 — Neither vulnerable, as South, you hold:
♠ 10 9 7 ♥ K 9 6 5 2 ♦ K 10 9 8 4 ♣ Void
The bidding has proceeded:

WEST	NORTH	EAST	SOUTH
1♣	1♥	3♣*	?

*pre-emptive
What action do you take?
A — Who knows who can make what? No matter — you should make it as difficult as possible for the opponents to describe their hands while you are looking for a safe spot. How high? We like four hearts.

Q 2 — Vulnerable, as South, you hold:
♠ A K Q 8 7 ♥ A K 7 3 ♦ Void ♣ A J 9 3
Partner opens the bidding with three no-trump, showing a solid seven-card minor and no stopper in any other suit. What do you bid now?
A — You can count 13 tricks — three spades two hearts, one club and seven diamonds. However, you do not necessarily have them at no-trump since you probably do not have an entry to partner's hand. Bid seven diamonds.

Q 3 — Both vulnerable, as South, you hold:
♠ K 5 ♥ 9 8 4 ♦ 8 4 3 ♣ A K Q 8 3
The bidding has proceeded:

NORTH	EAST	SOUTH	WEST
1♠	Pass	2♣	Pass
2♥	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A — You have a choice between two flawed actions — a fourth-suit forcing bid of two hearts or a spade raise with only a doubleton. To use the fourth suit only postpones the problem — what do you intend bidding should partner bid two no-trump or three clubs? We prefer the raise. Surely K x is as good as three low cards in the suit.

Q 4 — As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠ K Q 9 8 4 ♥ J 7 6 ♦ A Q ♣ A J 5
What is your opening bid?
A — Not too long ago we would have opened one in our five-card major. Recently, there has been a raft of hands where nine tricks only are available in either the major or no-trump. Your best shot at a good score is to start with one no-trump.
