SENATE FAVORS LAND TITLE BILL

Jim Reed Ends Oratorical Career With Fiery Cruiser Plea

BIGGER NAVY TALK ASTOUNDS PACKED HOUSE

'Patrick Henry' of Senate In Greatest Ovation of 18 Years' Service

FOES LAUD SPEECH

All Nations Arming With U. S. as Probable Foe, Missourian Says

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30. (UP)—James A. Reed of Missouri, for 18 years the Patrick Henry of the United States senate, made the last oratorical stand of his career today in a plea for the cruiser construction bill.

He is voluntarily retiring from public life at the close of this session, March 4.

His Greatest Oration

The veteran's last big scene was characteristic. It flowed along smoothly with classical allusions and vivid figures of speech but bristled at times with sarcasm and belligerence. Many of his colleagues considered it the greatest oration of his career.

Even Senator Brookhart, Iowa Republican, the target for several of Reed's derisive shots, said the speech was "the greatest ever made by a disciple of the old school."

The burden of Reed's argument was that all the nations of the world are preparing for war, particularly with the United States, and that this country must be ready to defend itself in case of another world conflict.

Advocates New Cruisers

Reed advocated immediate adoption of the pending bill which would authorize construction of 15 cruisers and one aircraft carrier within the next three years.

Reading a compilation of figures showing the respective armaments of the great powers, Reed shouted:

"Listen, O you dreamers! Listen and you can hear the roar of furnaces which are forging the plates of great battleships! Listen and you will hear the chorus of mighty hammers shaping the keels of fighting men of the sea!

"Look and you will see great

SOONER PROBE AIRS COURTS

Branson's Actions Under Fire of Witness

OKLAHOMA CITY, Jan. 30. (AP)—The Oklahoma legislature's investigations centered today on the state supreme court, with only scattering shots directed at the office of Henry S. Johnston, suspended governor, scheduled to plead to eight articles of impeachment before the senate court tomorrow.

Oil Attorney Testifies

A house sub-committee brought forth a charge from Rush Greenslade, attorney for the Gypsy Oil company, that his company had been forced to settle a case before the supreme court for $250,000 in exchange for "the maladministration of justice."

Joseph Bailey, former United States senator from Texas, previously had testified that in his opinion the supreme court handed down erroneous decisions in two election contest cases in which Bailey was interested, and Owen Owen, former district judge, told the committee he had received a report concerning one of his clients which led him to believe the client "used his credit" with the court.

Rehearing Denied

Greenslade testified the Gypsy company had effected the $250,000 settlement in a suit with purchasers of the oil interests of Loula H. Foster, Creek freedwoman, after the supreme court twice had denied a rehearing on an adverse opinion written by Fred P. Branson, then chief justice. The opinion, Greenslade declared, reversed a succession of previous decisions of the court, and was withdrawn from the court's records after the settlement had been made.

Branson was defeated for reelection last November.

Three additional impeachment charges voted against the suspended governor were accepted by the senate impeachment court today and their hearing was set for Feb. 5.

Hundreds Expected to Attend Formal Opening of Weeks Farms

Civic Leaders See Beginning of New Era Here With Inauguration of Valley Development Saturday

By LOUIS T. HAMLETT

Hundreds of farmers and business men from Texas and Oklahoma will visit Wichita Falls Saturday to attend the formal opening of the 2,500 acres which form the Charles Weeks Intensive Little Farms community near Westmoreland swimming pool.

Civic leaders of Wichita Falls believe that this will mark the beginning of a new era for this section, with a rapid settlement of the irrigated valley and the development here of the dairy, poultry and truck gardening center of the Southwest.

The tract of little farms will be open for inspection all day Saturday, but the official program will start shortly after noon with music by the Wichita Falls High school orchestra and the Lions club band.

At 2 o'clock in the afternoon Mayor J. W. Akin will deliver the address of welcome in the pavilion at Westmoreland pool. He will be followed by Harry Hines, acting president of the chamber of commerce while Pres. Orville Bullington is in Washington, who will talk on "Co-operation."

Mr. Weeks will then make an address on the work to be done and will tell the visitors of the community of garden homes he expects to raise in the valley. J. A. Kemp will follow Mr. Weeks with a short talk. Other speakers on the program are Frank Kell, J. T. Harrell, J. Wilkie Talbert, Walter D. Cline and N. H. Martin.

YOUTH DENIES ROBBERY PART

Hostler Takes Stand in Own Defense

Freddy Hostler, 22, Dallas youth, charged with robbery with firearms in connection with the holdup of the Spoonts No. 1 drug store on Christmas night, went on the stand in his own behalf shortly before the defense rested in his trial before Judge Allan D. Montgomery Wednesday afternoon.

Good Samaritan

Hostler denied that he was the man who drove the car which took two other men to the store for the purpose of robbery. He said that after taking a string of beads as a Christmas present to a girl friend, he had gone back to town, met Joe Ireland, jointly indicted with him and chief witness for the state, found him intoxicated and in possession of a pistol, and had taken him to a room in the Dempsey hotel to keep him out of trouble.

Ireland testified earlier in the day that he and R. B. Nichols, also indicted, had driven in a Buick road-

BULLINGTON IN HOT REPRISAL ON PROTECTION

Wichita Man Bears Marque For Creager Faction Of Texas G. O. P.

SLAP AT WURZBACH

'Influence Traded for Contributions,' Bullington Tells Probers

Special to The Record News

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—Striking back at Representative Harry M. Wurzbach of the San Antonio district, the Creager faction of the Republican party in Texas through Orville Bullington of Wichita Falls, a voluntary witness told the senate committee on southern patronage that Wurzbach had accepted campaign contributions from federal officers.

Bullington presented a list of contributors to the Wurzbach campaign of 1926 and pointed the name of H. H. Holden, district attorney at Houston, listed as having contributed $100. Most of the other contributions were from Eagle Pass and ranged from $5 to $100.

Bullington Gives Reprisals

The regular Republican faction in Texas holds Wurzbach is largely responsible for the fight made against R. B. Creager, Eugene Nolte and other party leaders in the state. The testimony of Bullington was in the nature of reprisals, and he strengthened this impression when he asserted:

"It looks to me like Mr. Wurzbach has been trading his influence in congress for campaign contributions outside his district. I'm not making the charge and I won't say I believe it, but since the committee has been receiving a lot of hearsay testimony I might give you a little."

Cause of Troubles

Senator Brookhart, chairman of the committee, wanted to know why Creager and Wurzbach could not get along and Bullington replied that Wurzbach felt because he represented one district in congress he should be entitled to pass on the patronage of the entire state. Bullington asserted that Creager is a man of the highest standing and asserted this could be confirmed by calling any outstanding Democrat or Republican.

"I attended that meeting in Fort Worth in 1921, regarding which Colonel Hill testified yesterday," said Bullington, "and I saw no liquor there."

Creager Defended

"I am sure you had nothing to do with collecting money from office holders or giving protection to hotels against prohibition raiders," said Senator McKellar.

"I did not," replied Bullington.

New Judicial District Favored by Senate

AUSTIN, Jan. 30. (AP)—The Berkeley senate bill creating the 109th judicial district of Texas, already passed by the senate, today needed only the governor's signature to put it on the state's law books. The house passed the measure, which includes in the district Crane, Ward, Reeves, Winkler and Loving counties.

A second new district bill affecting Briscoe, Floyd, Motley and Dickens counties will be acted on tomorrow by the house, having been ordered engrossed today.

McCLOSKEY WINS

AUSTIN, Jan. 30 (AP)—Augustus McCloskey of San Antonio held his own here today. The state canvassing board corrected an error in the Guadalupe county returns and included the Bee county vote in the new totals for the district, giving McCloskey 319 more votes than Congressman Harry M. Wurzbach for the 14th congressional district seat.

The contest of Wurzbach and McCloskey now has been settled as far as the canvassing board is concerned. McCloskey was issued a second certificate of election.

Ruth's 'I Won't' Has Softened To Point of 'I Will'

INDIANAPOLIS, Jan. 30 (US)—Miss Ruth McConnell, young art student who recently was pursued across the continent by an airplane courier of Kenneth B. Coulter, today obtained a license to wed the wealthy invalid.

Coulter, 47, a broker and dairy farmer of Clifton Springs, N. Y., was present when the license was issued. He sat in a wheelchair with two attendants nearby.

Miss McConnell's dash from Buffalo, N. Y., to the west coast while a fast plane sought in vain to catch up with her train, was followed by her collapse in San Francisco. The girl sobbed:

"I won't marry him—I won't!"

MAMA'S BOY IN ROBBERY TRIAL

Pastor's Son Love Mad, Is Claim

DALLAS, Jan. 30. (AP)—A defense theory that a "mama's boy, born in a Methodist parsonage, rocked a Methodist cradle and reared in a Methodist home," was tempted to rob because of a mad desire to obtain money to marry the girl he loved, was related today in the trial of J. W. Meyers for the attempted robbery of a chain store here Christmas eve.

The Rev. E. M. Meyers of Tulsa, Okla., father of the accused man and a Methodist minister for 37 years, said his son was "a great mama's boy" and an obedient, respectful son. He expressed belief that his son now is insane.

Mother Tells of Pride

Mrs. Meyers testified similarly. She pictured her son as a model boy and said she always had been proud of him.

During her testimony Mrs. Meyers stopped and remarked: "I am not saying this to cause sympathy, I am saying this from my heart."

After Meyers met the San Antonio girl whom he intended to marry, his mother said she noticed a change in him and detailed "peculiar" things he did. Meyers had pleaded temporary insanity.

Robbery Related

The defendant related details of the attempted robbery. He said he had gone to a gunsmith to have his pistol cleaned and was on the way home when he chanced to stop and look in the store. He said he saw a man collecting money from the cash registers.

"I needed money," he said. "I could just see the things I could do if I had money. I could make payments on my car and go do see my girl. I didn't want to hurt anybody. I could just feel something pulling me, telling me to get that money."

Thermometer Here Registers Freeze

The thermometer tumbled to the freezing point early Thursday morning after having reached a high mark of 55 degrees in the middle of the afternoon Wednesday.

A northeast wind was blowing early Thursday morning, and the weather forecast by the Associated Press was "much colder Thursday."

'ANTI-GRABBER' MEASURE GOES THROUGH FIGHT

Engrossment of Clint Small Validation Plan Is Shown Favor

THREE-HOUR DEBATE

Support Given Bill Main Point of Argument In Upper House

AUSTIN, Jan. 30 (AP)—After three hours of wrangling during which charges were made that the oil companies and not the "old settlers" were backing the measure, the senate today voted the engrossment of the first of the Small "anti-land grabber" bills.

The vote was 21 to 8. It would validate patents to lands in streams now termed legally navigable.

Senators For Bill

Senators who joined with Small in the balloting were: Beck, Berkeley, Cousins, Cunningham, Deberry, Gainor, Greer, Holbrook, Martin, Parr, Parish, Patton, Pollard, Stevenson, Thomason, Williamson, Wirtz, Witt, Woodul and Woodward.

Opposing votes were cast by Hardin, Hornsby, Hyer, Love, McFarlane, Miller, Moore and Westbrook.

The debate was featured by debate between Miller and Woodward, whose desks are side by side.

"Do you know who's behind this bill?" Woodward asked after Miller had asserted that oil company counsel was interested in its passage.

"I do, but I'm not saying," Miller replied. "Perhaps you know better than I."

Small Pushes Bill

"Most certainly I know," Woodward countered warmly. "The poor, hard working people of Texas are backing the bill."

Small urged quick passage of the bill because he said land titles in the Panhandle were "up in the air and land transactions were at a standstill."

Under the gradient theory advanced by the attorney general's department, even titles to jails, courthouses and grave yards are beclouded on the grounds that they are a part of a navigable stream, Small said.

Owners' Protection

"The purpose of this bill is to protect the land owners in the titles which the state has held valid for 40 or 50 years and which 'land grabbers' now are seeking to becloud in order to get the oil," Small asserted with emphasis.

Small admitted that C. W. Trueheart, assistant attorney general, had held the bill unconstitutional but he asserted he was willing to place his judgment and that of his counsellors against that of the state official.

Moore, who shared the burden of the fight against the bill with Hyer and Miller, mentioned conferences of "lawyers for oil companies" which purportedly were held in

Einstein Called 'Moses of Science' As He Gives Latest Idea to World

By WILLIAM HILLMAN
Record News Special Wireless

BERLIN, Jan. 30. (US)—Prof Einstein was today characterized by German scientists as the "Moses of Science." His new work, which has been eagerly awaited the world over was published today by the Prussian academy of science. It codifies into a single mathematical formula the basic laws of gravitation and electricity, the two basic forces in nature.

It furnishes for the first time in the history of human knowledge a single world law by which all natural phenomena may be explained. It provides the key, according to Prof. Freundlich, head of the Einstein institute of Potsdam, and one of the greatest students of Einstein by which hitherto vast and unexplained mysteries of nature and life may be revealed.

Einstein's new theory, "Zur Einheitlichen feldtheoie," is contained in six printed pages of mathematical equations and formulas of physiodynamics and electricity which are utterly baffling to laymen. Prof. Freundlich says.

BULLINGTON IN HOT REPRISAL

Wichita G. O. P. Leader Defends Creager

"And I am sure Mr. Creager did not either. More than that, I am convinced no responsible member of the Republican organization in Texas did."

"Is Mr. Creager a man of wealth?" inquired McKellar.

"I would say he is worth from $100,000 to $200,000," replied Bullington, pointing to the fact that Mr. Creager is president of a bank in Brownsville and a substantial land owner.

Let Connolly Talk

Again reiterating his denial that Creager had ever agreed to give protection to any Texas hotels, Mr. Bullington suggested that the committee summon either Representative J. W. Gardner or Senator-elect Connolly, who, he said, could testify as to the honesty and integrity of the Texas Republican leader.

Chairman Brookhart expressed curiosity as to why the Republican organization in Texas is required to pay its secretary $10,000 and incur expenses of $25,000 a year. Bullington replied that the Democrats are being urged to establish the same kind of an organization.

Questioned as to the cause of the feud between Creager and Wurzbach, Bullington declared Wurzbach had sought to have the primary law in Texas amended so as to eliminate Creager's influence, that he had sent a contesting delegation to the national convention at Kansas City.

Wurzbach Replies

"He tried to beat Creager at Kansas City and now is trying to do it before congress," said Bullington. At this point Congressman Wurzbach interrupted to say that he had not sponsored an investigation which the senate is now making.

"The committee asked me if I would appear," he said, "and I could not refuse to do so."

Bullington then laid before the committee the list of the Wurzbach contributions in the 1926 campaign, and since some of these are from civil service employes, court action may follow if the charges are sustained.

The presentation of this list brought from Chairman Brookhart the observation that "a bad situation apparently existed in Texas," but he added "and I might say the new president is going to clear it up." There has been a hint about Washington that Brookhart's activities on the southern patronage situation was at the instance of President-elect Hoover, and the Iowa senator expects to make recommendations for clarifying it.

Resuming his testimony, Bullington made the declaration that Wurzbach had "traded Mr. Butte," Republican candidate for governor in 1924, so as to aid him (Wurzbach) in his race for re-election to congress.

"That is an absolute misstatement," declared Wurzbach with some heat, and Chairman Brookhart, seeking to pour oil on the troubled waters, suggested recess of the committee. He turned to Senator McKellar, the other member of the committee, for agreement.

Peace Efforts Told

"I'm not insisting on it," replied the Tennessean, "so long as our Republicans from Texas want to fight."

Bullington detailed efforts to make peace with Wurzbach and said it was through this had been done in 1924 but that a year later they were in a row again and that now Wurzbach will not speak to Creager or hardly any member of the regular organization.

Bullington declared that in their efforts to make peace with Wurzbach, leading Republicans, including T. P. Lee of Houston and even Creager himself, had contributed to Wurzbach's campaign fund, but admitted they had given no assistance in the last campaign.

Chairman Brookhart expressed surprise that Creager as national committeeman should not have been interested in the re-election of the only Republican congressman from Texas.

At the conclusion of the hearing Wurzbach announced that he would ask the privilege of being heard by the committee, replying to charges that he had accepted contributions from office holders. Until he appears before the committee, however, he said he would have no statement to make.

engineers planning and plotting how the American fleet can be destroyed—figuring the elevation of every gun."

The floor of the senate filled rapidly as word spread that "Jim Reed was making his last big speech." The galleries filled as if by magic.

The Age of Rivalry

"This is the age of rivalry," he continued. "Great cities strive against weaker cities; great corporations gobble up small corporations; great individuals break down weak individuals.

"The same rule applies to nations. If our commerce expands it hurts the others. Behind this situation is the prejudice of centuries which compels governments to yield even to the point of making war."

Replying to Reed later, Brookhart called Reed's thesis "the history of cannibalism," quoting the adage:

"He who lives by the sword shall perish by the sword."

Answering the speech made yesterday by Brookhart, Reed ridiculed the statement that cruisers are useless in modern warfare because of the airplane and submarine.

Calls Brookhart "Admiral"

"Had the German fleet been superior to that of Great Britain in 1914, the world war would have ended sooner," he said, "and yet there are five experts in this body who say that cruisers are useless.

"They are Admiral Brookhart, General Brookhart, Chief of Staff Brookhart, General Voice of the People Brookhart and Voice of Mankind Brookhart."

"You have forgotten to call me Mussolini Brookhart," interrupted the Iowan.

"I love the senator and I am treating him as gently as possible," Reed replied.

Later Brookhart reiterated his belief that cruisers are useless, quoting Admiral Simms to that effect. He said the two fish caught by President-elect Hoover from the battleship on which he went to South America represented the greatest return the country could ever expect on its investment in the vessel.

Hostler Denies Aiding Robbery

ger with Hostler within a short distance of the store, and that Hostler had waited in the car while the other two robbed the establishment.

Motion to exclude the testimony of R. A. Spoonts, proprietor of the store, who identified Ireland and Nichols, was made by E. F Fruechte, counsel for the defense after the witness admitted on the stand that he had spoken to "the boys" about the case during a recess of the court. Fruechte claimed that the rules of the court had been violated and asked exclusion. Judge Montgomery took the motion under advisement.

Spoonts on Stand

Before the recess Mr. Spoonts identified Freddy Hostler, the defendant, as one of the men who entered the store. Afterwards when Ireland and Nichols were brought into the court room, he told the jury that the light was in his eyes before and that Ireland was the man he had seen, not Hostler. Mr. Fruechte then asked the witness whether or not he had discussed the case during the recess.

Mrs. Opal Liken, called by the defense, testified that Hostler had come to her home on Brick street on Christmas night, driven in a car by a man she did not know, and had left the beads for her sister as a Christmas gift. The state contended that the car belonged to Jesse Jones, escaped convict, who was arrested on the night of the robbery.

Hostler and Ireland were arrested in a room in Dempsey hotel by S. O. Ham, state highway officer then acting as deputy sheriff, Ellis Summers, and M. A. Perdue, city policemen on the night of the hold up. A pocketbook found under the pillow of the bed and identified as belonging to Sam Young, employe of the store, and a pistol, also found in the bed, were introduced as evidence by the state.

Arguments are expected to be limited to thirty minutes to a side and the case is expected to go to the jury early Thursday.

LAND PATENT BILL FAVORED

Senate Takes First Action On Small Bill

Amendments Fail

"Only in recent months have the oil men come in and wanted to validate the titles to these lands," Moore said. "I am afraid we are validating the lands of Texas to the oil companies and not to the citizens."

Two amendments by Miller and Moore which would have increased the length of existence of patent to be validated from 10 to 15 and 10 to 25 years were voted down. Moore did not get a chance to send up an amendment which would make the bill not applicable to property now involved in court litigation.

The senate refused to suspend the rules to bring the bill up on its final passage. Barring a distinct realignment, the bill may be passed finally tomorrow.

BOURLAND PLEADS FOR SMALL BILLS

Special to The Record News.

FLOYDADA, Texas, Jan. 30—President Andy Bourland of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce brought his campaign for the validation of land titles to the plains of Texas, speaking before the Rotary club here today. Mr. Bourland pleaded for active and energetic support of the bills introduced by Senator Clint Small, which would give prior filing right to adjacent land owners when vacancies or excesses are found on land held in good faith by present owners through surveying errors made in granting patents to the land.

Another measure advocated would validate title to dry creek beds crossed by survey lines. The third measure would cause trial of land title cases in counties where such land is located instead of in Austin under present rules.

the world who will be able to understand it and it will take between two and five years for them to work it out and verify it."

Prof. Einstein declares that further investigation in needed to show whether the theory is "really adequate as an explantion of the physical qualities of space."

Unprecedented in the history of science is the interest of the world in Einstein's theory. The Prussian acedemy of science and the printing establishment connected with the academy has been swamped with orders for copies of the work No publisher of a popular novel ever found a more feverish public.

"There are two basic laws in science today," said Prof. Freundlich to Universal Service. "One deals with gravitation and the other with electricity. Prof. Einstein has formulated a basic law for [illegible] tation in his former work and Maxwell, the English scientist, established the basic law for electricity.

"Science has hitherto been unable to find the connection between gravitation and electricity, and has come to a blind alley in each of these fields. Physicists have declared: 'We cannot go ahead in our search for the fundamental nature of things because we have no formulae —no key.'

"The same is true in the field of electricity. Remember that though we harness electricity we do not know what it really is. And how can we bridge these two forces—electricity and gravitation? Do these forces meet somewhere, and cross, as two rivers do?

"Science has been unable so far to find out. But Prof. Einstein's new formula gives us a new place to stand. He has, figuratively speaking, climbed a taller mountain and looked down on the world from a height at which he can see where these two great forces—gravitation and electricity—cross and how they influence each other.

"He has taken his vision and expressed it in a formula, in a single law from which all laws may be derived."

Old Folks Say Doctor Caldwell was Right

W. B. Caldwell, M.D. AT AGE 83

The basis of treating sickness has not changed since Dr. Caldwell left Medical College in 1875, nor since he placed on the market the laxative prescription he had used in his practice, known to druggists and the public since 1892, as Dr Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

Then, the treament of constipation, billiousness, headaches mental depression, indigestion, sour stomach and other indispositions that result from constipation was entirely by means of simple vegetable laxatives, herbs and roots These are still the basis of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which is a combination of senna and other mild laxative herbs, with pepsin.

The simpler the remedy for constipation, the safer for the child and for you, and the better for the general health of all. And as you can get results in a mild and safe way by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, why take chances with strong drugs.

A bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will last a family several months, and all can use it. It is good for the baby because pleasant to the taste, gentle in action, and free from narcotics. In proper dose, given in the directions, it is equally effective at all ages. Elderly people will find it especially ideal. All drug stores have the generous bottles.

Do give it a trial, to prove how much Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can mean to you and yours.—Adv.

I Saw It Myself

HOLLIS, Okla.—Just one hour to drive this county seat of Harmon the "double O."

The main business street is an eye full, jammed with traffic, the curbs thronged with people wending their way in and out of stores.

The opulence of ornamentation displayed in the front of a new brick theater, said to be among the finest in southern Oklahoma, arrests attention.

Further down the Broadway of Harmon's capital is seen a new, brick hotel, soon to be opened, five stories in height.

Two weekly newspapers, liberally patronized, one Democratic, the other Republican, indicate progressiveness of Hollis merchants and division of opinion. Some oracles aver the latter is good for any town. Quien sabe?

Hollis' proudest claim to distinction at this time is that it has a hatchery with a capacity of 100,000 eggs every three weeks, owned by a concern that also operates a hatchery at Altus of magnitude approaching the one here. Another Hollis hatchery has a capacity of 40,000 eggs.

The hot winds of last August cut Harmon's cotton crop from 30,000 to an estimated 24,000 bales. The cotton farmer now is switching his bet to hens and cows, which he is coming to recognize offer a greater percentage in his favor. He is being helped along by Tom Marks county farm agent.

Tom Marks was at one time editor of the News at Jacksboro, Texas. What some editors know about farming could be written on an aspirin tablet, but Marks has a fund of knowledge in that line acquired in practical farm experience.

If you ask them, these farmers hereabouts will tell you that as a farm demonstrator this county's agent is a whole team and a dog under the wagon. He holds demonstration meetings over the county, helps out the Jersey club, directs a long list of boys' 4-H clubs, expects to complete terracing of 2,000 acres before next planting time, writes a farm column for the Democrat each week, from force of habit—what he does in his leisure time was not learned.

Manager Ward Ray of the Democrat gave the information that at a recent meeting of 400 Harmon county farmers preliminary organization of a Farmers' union co-operative exchange was effected and one-half of the proposed $10,000 capital stock had been subscribed. Its purpose is to market farm products operate a filling station and buy farm supplies to the advantage of the members.

This co-operative, it was said may eventually undertake building and operating a cotton gin, which has been profitable to the two co-operatives across the line over in Texas at Wellington, capital of Collinsworth county.

One of the co-operative gins at Wellington was erected last Fall and has already paid for itself, this writer was told. The other, in operation several years soon paid its cost and dividends now warrant a premium for the stock. None is for sale, however.

Wellington claims to have more gin equipment than any town in the world, believe it or not. Certain it is that Wellington has 11 gins, nine of 5 stands, 80-saw, one of 5 stands and one of 6 stands, 80-saw. There are 19 gins within the bounds of the county. These gins, the chamber of commerce estimates will have turned out between 47,000 and 50,000 bales of cotton before the close of the present season, now nearing an end.

Not many years have passed since Collingsworth county was known only as a wild and wooly cow country. Its more recent fame as a cotton producing county is secure but as in every other good agricultural region in the Panhandle, landowners and tenants, in their palabres, talk of little but "new fangled" farming; that is, feed crops, dairy cows and poultry.

The best indication of the state of mind of the land owner and farmer is to be found in the county seat newspapers, of which Wellington has two.

In one of these it was observed that column after column was devoted to farm topics and the advertisements of stock and poultry feeds, separators, incubators, stock sales and the like could not be contained in less than two pages. The old order changeth, here as elsewhere.

Mayor J. M. Shields, of Shields and Lewis, hardware dealers, whose principal trade some years back was in barbed wire and lariats, and later in equipment for cotton farmers, approves of the new order. His firm the last two or three years has had a lively trade in incubators and cream separators. Buyers of these are now paying cash, although their credit rating is better than ever.

Collingsworth is due for greater prosperity with the increasing change from cotton to other farm products. One of these days in the not distant future Wellington's railroad will extend to a connection with the Denver, Rock Island or Santa Fe. Wellington's population of 4,500 will then greatly increase. There will be new opportunities for industries and business men.

In driving over to Memphis with E. L. Winn, secretary of the Wellington Chamber of Comemrce, it was learned that the chamber was making a comprehensive survey of the resources of the county and that a big agricultural, dairy and poultry campaign is to be started immediately following the annual meeting of the chamber in the latter part of February. More bull circles will be organized and the establishment of a creamery and cheese factory will be sought.

Secretary Winn is of the opinion that training of farm boys and girls through 4-H club work will more effectually facilitate the result desired than any other method. He told of a farmer, bitterly opposed to innovation, but continuously in debt, who had come out of the red and had a nice balance in the bank after yielding to the advice of his son and employing the practices taught in the 4-H club work.

"Wellington's most urgent need at this time, in connection with dairy and poultry development," said Mr. Winn, "is a paved highway all the way into the Wichita Falls market. This is now in prospect. Citizens have presented a petition to the county commissioners for order of a bond election to supply funds to pave federal highway No. 4 from the north boundary of the county to the Childress county line, a distance of 32 miles. Paving of gaps in other counties probably will not long be delayed."

GULF PLANT TO HAVE BIG SITE

Refinery Location Bought At Sweetwater

Special to The Record News.

SWEETWATER, Texas, Jan. 30.—The Gulf Refining company's first official announcement, that it would erect a large refinery here, which would employ a minimum of 200 men for normal operation, was made by George H. Westbrook, representative. It is understood that the company has already purchased some 600 acres of land west of this city and several hundred additional acres some eight miles west of the city for the purpose of developing a water supply for the refinery. Part of these negotiations have not been completed, but are expected to be within the next week. The first unit will have a daily capacity of 5,000 barrels, it was stated.

Rumors and reports have been circulated throughout the oil fraternity for some little bit, but this is the first official announcement of the plans. Charles Stevens, general purchasing agent for the company is here and has already started negotiations for materials and supplies.

Crew of 200 Men

Immediately upon the completion of land negotiations, work will be begun and it is expected the refinery will be completed within 10 months from the time work is started. It would require some 500 men to build the plant, while the normal operating force after completion would consist of 200 men.

Mr. Westbrook, in making his official announcement said:

"The Gulf Refining company is conducting negotiations looking toward the purchase of land immediately adjoining Sweetwater. If these negotiations are satisfactorily completed the company will begin immediately the construction of a refining plant with a daily capacity of 5,000 barrels of crude oil.

"It is expected that construction can be completed and the refinery operating in about 10 months after starting work. During the course of construction there probably will be as many as 500 men employed at times, while after construction is finished and normal operations are in effect the working force will consist of approximately 200 employes."

The Gulf Refining company, one of the largest in the world, is a Texas corporation, located at Port Arthur with general offices at Pittsburgh, Pa. The company is now operating at Port Arthur one of the largest refineries in the world and is also operating a fair sized plant at Fort Worth. The Port Arthur plant has been operating continuously for 28 years and the Fort Worth plant for 17 years.

Transportation Is Factor

In commenting on the selection of Sweetwater as the location for the proposed plant, Mr. Westbrook said:

"Sweetwater has been selected as the site for this new plant after consideration of the operating conditions, transportation facilities and desirable living conditions for employes."

He explained that these included water supply, which is regarded as more plentiful here than elsewhere, "although," he added, "we will have to develop our own supply as the city cannot furnish us with what we will need." Test holes are now being put down on the land south of Roscoe to determine what water can be obtained.

DANE SENT UP AS FRENCH SPY

Action of German Court Arouses Ire

By WILLIAM HILLMAN

BERLIN, Jan. 30. (US)—Has Germany any military secrets?

This is the question being asked following a sentence of five years' penal servitude, just passed by the supreme court at Leipzig, on a Danish officer, Captain Lembourne who was charged with spying in Germany in the interests of France. The sentence is unusual in that foreign officers convicted of spying in Germany generally are sent to fortress imprisonment.

The exception made in this case is explained in the judgment which pronounces "entirely unworthy of credence" Captain Lembourne's assertion that he acted in the interests of his own country and that his principal object was to discover what preparations the German fascist organizations had made for an attack on the southern frontier of Denmark. On the contrary, the court asserted, the evidence had shown that his researches concerned mainly the reichswehr and the militarized portion of the police and that he consciously acted as an organ of the secret service built up by the military attache of a foreign power in Copenhagen.

Danish and pacifistic circles in Germany were startled by the sentence; according to the Versailles treaty Germany should have no military secrets, the pacifists declare.

SUFFERED 10 YEARS THEN TOOK SARGON ENDING TROUBLES

"Sargon and Sargon Soft Mass Pills are the most wonderful medicines I have ever used. I say this because they have brought back my health after I had been trying for ten years to find something that would relieve me of my suffering. My principal trouble was with my liver, for my complexion was always sallow and I often said my color was as yellow as gold. I believe my entire system was filled with poison, resulting from chronic constipation and liver trouble. I became dreadfully nervous. I did not sleep well and was losing my strength and energy rapidly.

"I also suffered terribly with intestinal indigestion and had always to be careful about my diet, but I would suffer with indigestion just the same. Gas would form and extend up around my heart and cause severe palpitation. I also had severe pains in my abdomen. These attacks would generally come on after meal time. Pains in my chest and shoulder also bothered me a great deal, and I was in a badly run-down and weakened condition.

"After taking two bottles of Sargon and one bottle of Sargon Soft Mass Pills I noticed a remarkable improvement in my condition. My appetite is splendid. I can now digest and assimilate food I hadn't dared touch before in months. I no longer suffer from those indigestion spells but the greatest blessing of all has been the relief from constipation from which I suffered for so many years. My complexion is now clear and healthy. I have gained some weight and feel greatly strengthened in every way.

"The Sargon Soft Mass Pills are wonderful. They are so gentle and yet so thorough and cause no bad after effects whatever."

The above statement was made by Mrs. Alexander Malcott, 1405 West 6th street, Oklahoma City. Mrs. Malcott is a member of St. Luke's Methodist church and is highly respected by a large circle of friends.

Sargon may be obtained in Wichita Falls from the Renfro Drug Co., Eighth and Scott streets, No. 1 main store, and Seventh and Indiana, No. 2; and in Electra from Lough's Drug store.—Adv.

Thedford's Black-Draught Praised by an Arkansas Lady Who Has Taken It As a Child and Grown Woman.

NORTH LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—Writing of her experience in the use of Thedford's Black-Draught in her home, Mrs. Maud Spells, 312 East Second street, this city, says: "My mother gave me Black-Draught when I was a child, for colds and biliousness, and it always seemed to help me.

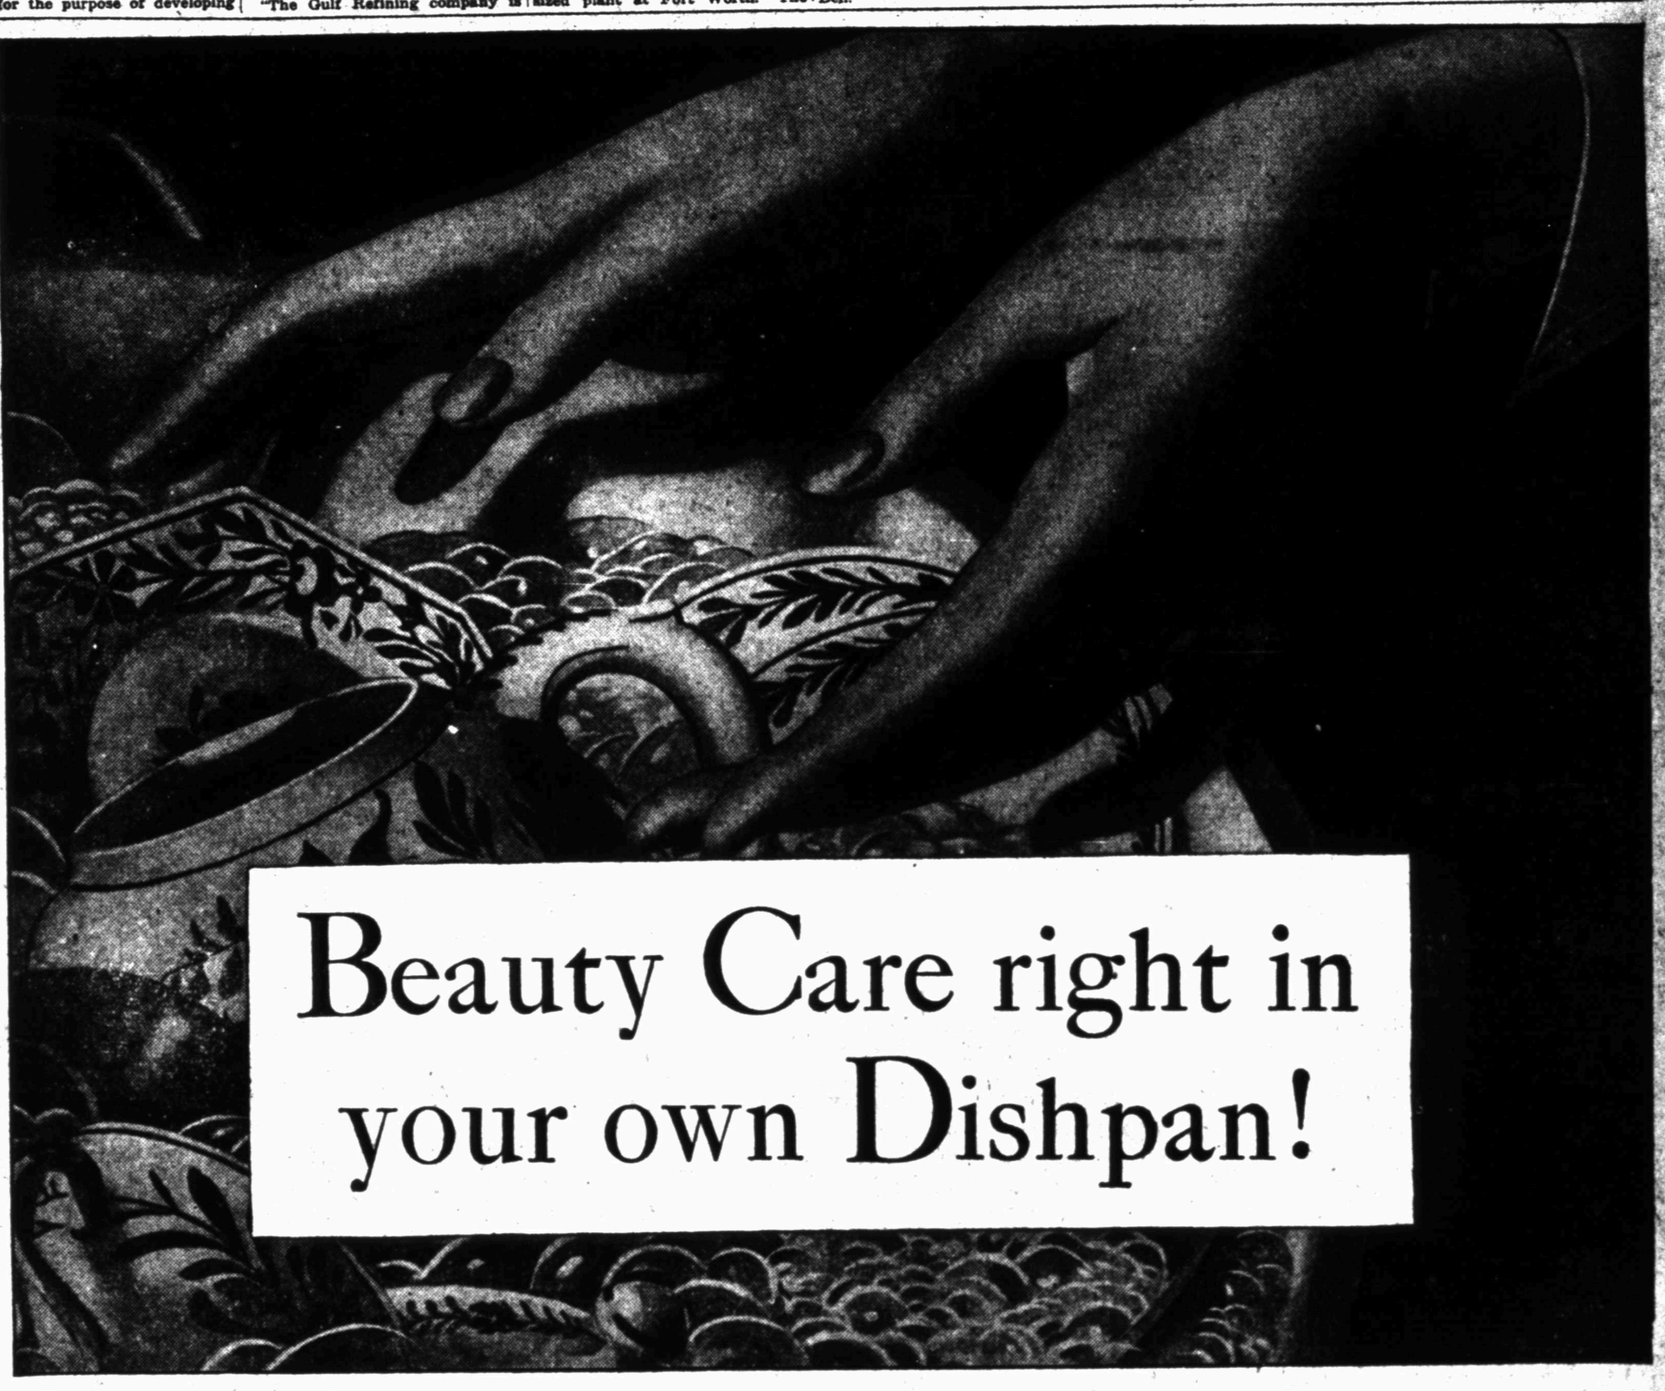

"After I grew up, I used to have severe headaches. The aching was right through my temple. Every morning, when I would get up, I would have a bad taste in my mouth.

"I was reading one day about Black-Draught, and decided to take it again. I found that it was just what I needed. It seems to cleanse the system and relieve me of the headache, so now, when I feel the least bit bad, I take Black-Draught and keep these headaches away."

Manufacture of Thedford's Black-Draught began in 1840, and many people tell of having taken it all their lives when in need of a laxative or cathartic medicine.

When you take Black-Draught, the digestive organs are helped in a healthful, natural way, and normal elimination is restored without the sickening effects that characterize the use of powerful minerals drugs.

Mable Drinkard and W. J. Howard Are Married in Simple Ceremony

Charming in its simplicity was the wedding of Miss Mable Drinkard to W. J. Howard Tuesday at high noon in the parlors of the First Presbyterian church, when Rev. N. F. Grafton performed the ring ceremony in the presence of a few close friends and relatives. The bridal party entered to the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march played by Miss Isabel Stone.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, G. T. Drinkard, was dressed in handsome frock of navy blue georgette with accessories to match and carried a bouquet of pink rosebuds and lillies of the valley. Miss Edna Bobo acted as maid of honor for Miss Drinkard and wore a frock of navy blue georgette and carried a bouquet of pink carnations.

The groom was attended by Jo Bailey Howard. The young couple left immediately following the ceremony for a short wedding trip and upon their return will make their home in Wichita Falls.

Mrs. Howard is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. T. Drinkard, 1510 Kemp boulevard, and is an accomplished musician. She is a popular member of the younger social set and finished the local high school. GROWING LADS NEED FOOD FACTS

Parents Should Explain the Place of Sugar in Nutritious Diets

Thoughtless parents sometimes tell their children that sweets are bad for them. This is misleading. An eminent specialist states positively that it is not good sense to deny children sugar. Sugar may properly form a part of the regular diet in the kitchen and on the table.

Proper nutrition to children is so important that patient parents take the time and the trouble to explain it in detail. Medical authorities are warning the public these days to see that growing children and young people understand the importance of eating enough nourishing food. Young girls must be watched or they will become victims of the dangerous craze for slimness—becoming thereby easy prey to tuberculosis and other diseases.

Teach your children that it is dangerous not to eat plenty of body-building, health-giving, energy-developing foods. Sugar is invaluable in making all kinds of healthful cereals, fresh and canned vegetables and fruits more palatable and enjoyable.

Children will eat nutritious foods with more zest if they are properly sweetened with nature's ideal flavor. Sugar is food in its least expensive form. Modern candies containing nuts, fruits, milk, chocolate and sugar make excellent desserts. Most foods are more delicious and nourishing with sugar. The Sugar Institute.

Daughters-in-Law Catch All the Preaching—Because They Need It

Who Is to Blame for the In-law Problem? Calling the Bluff of an Inconsistent Lover—How to Deal With the Wife Who Is a Quitter.

Dear Dorothy Dix—When mothers-in-law and daughters-in-law fail to get along together, do you think it is always the mother-in-law's fault? Haven't you seen a lot of young wives, untrained and inexperienced, and self-centered and selfish, who were so on the defensive that they resented every suggestion from their mothers-in-law as "butting in?" I have been a daughter-in-law for a long time, and am soon to be a mother-in-law and am trying to see both sides of the question. —MRS. M. L. W.

Answer: Certainly I think that there are two sides to the in-law question, and that when John's wife and his mother fail to hit it off together it is just as often the daughter-in-law's fault as it is the mother-in-law's.

If I preach oftener to mothers-in-laws than I do to daughters-in-law, it is because I hope the older woman will listen, and I know the younger one will not. There is no other such self-complacent creature on earth as a bride. She knows it all. She is sure of herself and of her opinions and her ability to handle every situation, and in vain do you hang red lanterns of warning before her.

Also, it is more important for the mother-in-law to get along amiably with her daughter-in-law than it is for the daughter-in-law to get along with her.

For John's mother is not essential to John's wife's happiness. She can get along perfectly well without mother-in-law, and whether mother-in-law likes her or not makes little difference to her, but it is vital to John's mother for his wife to be fond of her and friends with her, for that is the only way she can hold on to the son who is the core of her heart. Otherwise John's wife proceeds to alienate him from his mother. That is tragedy for mother.

So, if I am always urging mothers-in-law to avert catastrophe by not living with their daughters-in-law, and to eliminate as much friction as possible by keeping their tongues behind their teeth if they are forced to live in the house with their daughter-in-law, it is not because I think that the mothers-in-law are always in the wrong. It is only because peace at any price is worth while to the mother-in-law, and because the older woman should have more judgment, more self-control, more diplomacy, and should be able to handle the situation with more finesse than the younger one.

Inasmuch as most mothers-in-law have been daughters-in-law themselves, it does look as if they should have salvaged enough wisdom out of their own experiences to know how to deal with their sons' brides. Surely every woman must remember how she resented her mother-in-law's interference and advice, and that should teach her to keep her fingers out of her daughter-in-law's pies. Surely every woman should remember how determined she was to have her own way in unimportant things, and what stress she put on doilies and the right spoon when she was starting out in housekeeping, and that should enable her to make allowances for her son's bride, and to realize that if she lets her alone she will soon be asking for the very recipes she scorns when she is first married.

Certainly many young women enter their husband's families with chips on their shoulders. They make up their minds beforehand that they are not going to let mother-in-law put anything over on them. They are aggressive and bumptious and hard to get along with, but if mother-in-law has enough intelligence to let them severely alone they will get over that attitude, for you can't pick a quarrel with one who never interferes in your affairs.

Of course, it requires superhuman patience and forbearance for a mother to see an incompetent young wife poisoning her son on bad cooking and wasting his money on foolish extravagance, but when she tries to set her daughter-in-law right she merely makes a bad matter worse. She antagonizes the daughter-in-law and loses her son. Hands off is the only motto that works with in-laws.

—DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Miss Dix: I am a widower, 49 years old. I was very devoted to my wife and was very good to her, and we were happy together. Now I have fallen in love with my wife's sister, who is a widow and of my age. I love her because she is so much like my wife and has her little ways. Do you think it would be wrong for us to marry?

LEFT LONESOME.

Answer: Certainly not. I think it is just the right thing for you to do, and that you will be awfully happy together because you know each other so well, and will find it easy to adapt yourselves to each other.

Of course, in England it used to be against the law for a man to marry his deceased wife's sister, but modern enlightenment changed all that. People could see how a woman's sister could slip into the heart of a bereaved husband and fill her place more fully than any other woman could possibly do.

So I should say that a sister-in-law is a preferred risk in matrimony. She will know all of your little peculiarities and you won't have to tell her about all the little things you are fussy about. She will know whether you like your steak smothered in onions, or whether you can't bear the smell of them, and how much sugar you like in your coffee, and not to meddle with your papers, or clean your pipe.

She will know how you treated her sister, and if she is willing to take a chance on you, it's a pretty good recommendation. Furthermore, it is a compliment to pay your wife when you want to marry another woman as much like her as possible. DOROTHY DIX.

"Good to the last drop"

Richness . . . blended from many choice coffees

A GENTLEMAN of the Old South spent months of patient, skillful labor combining, testing, rejecting, re-combining the "winy" coffees of Arabia, the "mild" of Java, the "syrupy" pungent coffees of Brazil.

At last his persistence was rewarded with an entirely new coffee flavor—a blend, smooth, rich, mellow, full-bodied, yet full of life and sparkle.

This delicious blend got its first fame—and its name—from the celebrated old Maxwell House in Nashville, Tennessee, whose guests pronounced the coffee "good to the last drop."

Today Maxwell House Coffee is pleasing more people than any other coffee ever offered for sale. It will please you. Your grocer has it, sealed in tin to protect all its fine flavor.

Well-Clad Prince Sees Destitution at Worst

By ROBERT WELLES RITCHIE
Record News Special Cable

LONDON, Jan. 30. (UE)—Less than three months ago, the Prince of Wales was stalking the black-bearded lion in the jungles of Central Africa. Today he was in the midst of a three-day ordeal wherein he himself was stalked voluntarily by the specters of poverty, starvation and death in a hundred-mile square area, which included the stricken coal fields of Northumberland and Durham.

The prince went deliberately to survey Great Britain's most tragic area, not, as the London Press insists, as an emissary of Queen Mary, but, as Universal Service learned tonight, out of his own inspired and sole desire. He is visiting the coal fields in the double capacity of a councillor of state, and the heir to the throne. His aim is to glean first hand information on the condition of a million and a half of his putative subjects, due to the present collapse of the British coal industry.

Takes Modest Suite

Britain's heir apparent alighted from his private coach which was sidetracked at Newcastle at 8 o'clock this morning, and went democratically to a two-room suite at the Central Station hotel where he bathed and had breakfast. He was ready at 9 o'clock to set out, accompanied only by Sir Godfrey Thomas, his personal secretary, and Curtiss Bennett, secretary of the coal field's distress fund. The party traveled in a closed car.

It was snowing heavily, and the prince was wearing two overcoats, one a gray check, with an outer black ulster trimmed with fur. On his head was a derby hat, and he had a heavy muffler around his neck.

The party went first on an unprearranged visit to the village of Winlaton, where one Joe McKay lived, Joe having written to the lord mayor of Newcastle offering to show the prince around. Arriving at Winlaton unheralded, the prince went to Joe's house. He found Mrs. McKay dead, and the two daughters in mourning in a tiny bedroom—there was no food nor fire. The distracted husband, who is more than 70 years old, had gone away. He was walking to another village in the bitter cold to arrange for the funeral.

Such was the prince's introduction to this ghost-haunted coal field area.

Family's Sad Story

All he could do was to put an arm over the shoulders of the grieving daughters and say some stereotyped words of consolation. A reader with imagination may fill in the gaps of the picture—a lowly stone house in which the family members were bravely trying to hold up their heads, with the father out of work for two years, two grown up sons without employment for three years, and a third son working half time. Then the housewife succumbs and while Joe McKay tramps to a nearby village to arrange to sell some of their furnishings to pay for the funeral, there suddenly comes the Prince of Wales—a mythical figure—to stand beside the bier of the humble woman who died striving for her family.

It is safe to say that in all the varied experiences of the Prince of Wales, he never before faced such stark tragedy.

Later, in the village of Chopwell the prince met Joe McKay on his errand of selling furniture. He grasped Joe's hand strongly and said a few words in his ear. Afterwards he said to the secretary of the distress funds:

"Bennett, do something for this poor old chap."

War Veteran Visited

In Chopwell the prince visited the home of Taffy Lewis, a Welshman who had served in the Northumberland Fusiliers in war time. Taffy has had no work for four years and gets $5 a week from the "destitute funds" and after paying his rent has a little over $3 a week with which to support himself and wife and their five children all under 10 years.

The prince saw their beds without blankets and the barefooted youngsters huddled together around a hat full of coal in little fireplace, while a potato stew without meat was hanging on the crane.

So went the day with this heir to the throne bundled up in his two overcoats. In some of the villages he saw little children without stockings, their only footgear being rubbers. In the village of Blaydon he saw a group of miners who were so apathetic from their hunger that they could not raise a cheer, but only managed to murmur, "God bless the prince," as he waded by in three inches of slush.

A blessed interjection of a bit of comedy lightened the gloom for the prince when, at the village of Nighspen, he called at the humble home of Robert Ferrage, who had just returned from the night shift at the mines. He gave the prince his grimy hand and invited him in.

Mrs. Ferrage was not flustered by such an extraordinary caller. She summoned her daughter from the kitchen, and said:

"Daughter, this is the Prince of Wales. Prince, this is my daughter."

The prince laughingly acknowledged the informal introduction.

Tomorrow and the day after he will continue his resolute exploration of this inferno which the tragedy of economic conditions has created in a one time prosperous district.

NEW ELECTRIC DEVICE MADE

Invention Is Hailed as Great Discovery

NEW YORK, Jan. 30. (INS)—Invention of "the Deion circuit breaker," which is hailed as the electrical industry's most important development of recent years, was publicly announced for the first time today at the annual meeting of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers.

The device, which is revolutionary in character, is based on a fundamentally new method of interrupting an electric current. It is the only new method advanced in 25 years. The name "Deion" is derived from the essential feature of its operation, the deionization of an electric arc.

Slepian Is Inventor

Dr. Joseph Slepian, of whose engineering genius the invention is a product, told the assembled delegates of its theoretical and mathematical aspects. He is a member of the research staff of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing company.

The new circuit breaker, in accomplishing the deionization process, drives an electric arc over a metallic path at the rate of 2,400 miles per hour—much faster than a rifle bullet. The arc itself has a temperature of 5,000 degrees Fahrenheit, the highest temperature ever attained and one-half the estimated temperature at the sun's surface.

Just Like Switches

Dr. Slepian explained that the huge generators used in the generation and distribution of power are counterparts of the small electric light switches found in the home. The function of a circuit breaker, as the name implies, is to stop the flow of electric current by rupturing the metallic path over which the current passes. The Deion method eliminates entirely the use of insulating oil.

Circuit breakers embodying the Deion principle have been made in a variety of forms. Westinghouse officials are confident, it was announced, that the principle can be extended to solve a great host of difficult switching problems. The list of applications to date include small safety switches, electro magnetic switches for starting and stopping motors, small circuit breakers for 2,500 volt service and large breakers for 15,000 volt service.

Light Fuses to Go

It is claimed that development of the Deion break foreshadows the doom of the light fuses which stand as sentinels over the wiring systems of residences. Now, rather than replacing a blowout fuse when a current overload occurs, it is necessary only to push the handle of a small circuit breaker to reinstate electric service.

Street railways system and electric railroads will benefit greatly by the new development, it is declared.

B. G. Jamieson, electrical engineer of the Commonwealth Edison company of Chicago, who has been supervising tests of the new circuit breaker, said that it embraces features "of paramount interest to the power industry."

Other Benefits Seen

Other speakers expressed the opinion it may prove to be a revolutionary development in the control and distribution of electrical power throughout the great interconnected systems of the country. They said the circuit breaker should facilitate the switching of enormous quantities of electric current in normal service and could clear faulty circuits instantaneously with a minimum of the hazards present in equipment now in use.

Paraguay Willing To Exchange Prisoners

ASUNCION, Paraguay, Jan. 30. (UP)—The government has advised the Paraguayan legation at Washington that it is willing to arrange for an exchange of prisoners with Bolivia, it was learned on good authority tonight. The prisoners were taken in the recent Gran Chaco boundary clashes. Paraguay will insist, however, that Bolivia issue a list of the names of prisoners, as has been done here in regard to Bolivian prisoners.

FRIED'S SHIP OFF TO BREMEN

Rescue Hero Remains to Make Lecture Tour

NEW YORK, Jan. 30. (INS)—With Capt. George Fried remaining ashore and completing his plans for a tour of the country, the liner America sailed shortly after noon today for Bremen with Harry Manning, her 32-year-old chief officer, in command. Manning commanded the men who swung the oars in the lifeboat that rescued 32 officers and men from the floundering Italian freighter Florida last week.

To Visit Coolidge

Captain Fried, a nation's hero since the rescue, is soon to leave on a temporary lecture tour. Requests for his appearance have come from cities all over the country and the United States line has granted his a leave of absence. Among the cities Fried will visit will be Washington, where he will be received by President Coolidge Saturday.

Nelson Smith, the heroic wireless operator, failed to sail on the America because he was suffering from neuritis.

Captain Fried was among those on deck who congratulated Manning just before the ship departed.

"Good bye and good luck," he said. "Be sure and keep six inches of water under keel."

He gripped the young officer's hand. Then came a stentorian command: "All ashore that's going ashore."

Fried ran down the ladder from the bridge and down the gang plank. Slowly the liner moved away from the pier.

Parting Interview

Just before the ship sailed William J. King, assistant chief engineer of the America, appeared on deck. Manning said:

"I want you reporters to know that Bill here saved my life."

Manning explained that he nearly fell into the sea when boarding the America after the rescue, because of exhaustion, but that King saw his predicament and pulled him over into the ship's deck.

Salvatore Bracco, chief storekeeper, left the America just before it sailed, when he received a telegram from the Italian government commanding his presence in Italy to lecture on the rescue.

12 TOWNS BUY PECAN TREES

W. T. C. C. Offers Bargains To Buyers

STAMFORD, Texas, Jan. 30.—Thirteen different orders from 12 different towns have been received by B. M. Whitaker, agricultural manager of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce for pecan trees since the offer of reduced prices given if ordered through the regional organization was made public.

Halbert and Burkett varieties seem to be most popular, with Nugget also in demand. One order was received for the Success variety. Although three ages of trees, the two-year-old trees, those between three and four years old, and those between four and five years old, were offered, the preference is for the older trees.

G. W. Sexauer of Memphis, Texas, sent in his order for four three and four-year-old trees and two two-year-old, and left the selection up to the nurseryman. H. H. Howard of Water Valley, Texas, ordered his trees from the four to five-years stock from the Success variety.

The largest order was received from Wilbur S. Patrick of the Spur Chamber of Commerce. Fifty trees were ordered for the members of the board of directors. These ware 18 Burketts, 16 Halberts and 16 Nuggets. Ten of the oldest trees were ordered by Robert E. Bruce of the F. and M. bank at Ballinger, and six of the oldest trees were ordered by Mrs. F. E. Gillen of Fort Worth. She ordered two of each of the leading West Texas varieties.

J. P. Williams of Mineral Wells ordered 12 of the four to five-year-old trees to be sent to his brother, E. W. Williams of Post.

Other orders varying in quantity from two to 15 trees have been received from H. E. Hoover of Canadian, W Wirt House of Roscoe, E. C. Brand of Sweetwater, the Big Spring experimental station in Big Spring, Mike Walton of Haskell and A. C. Cooper and R. L. Penick of Stamford.

These orders have been sent to the nurserymen. Other orders are expected.

Storms Denies That Any Coalition Exists

OKLAHOMA CITY, Jan 30 (UP)—C. S. Storms, president pro tempore of the senate, today issued a formal denial that there is any coalition in the senate for the conviction or acquittal of anyone before the court of impeachment.

"We hope that the court of impeachment will not be further embarrassed,' Storms said, "by solicitations of friends or enemies accused or newspaper articles founded on rumors of what the senate court of impeachment may or may not do."

Here's the first bobbed head in Congress, Mrs. Mary Norton, Democratic representative from New Jersey, has lost her locks to modernism and now they're shorter than those of many a male legislator. Other congreswomen, it's said, soon are to follow Mrs. Norton's example.

LOCAL PENSION MEASURE LOST

House Defeats Proposal Of County Pensions

AUSTIN, Jan. 30. (AP)—A senate measure which would give county commissioners the discretionary power of providing pensions ranging up to a maximum of $30 monthly to persons over 70 years failed today in the house.

The bill, written by Senator Holbrook of Galveston and sponsored by Representative Helen Moore of Texas City, precipitated a sharp argument. Opponents contended that persons from other sections would flock into Texas in order to become beneficiaries.

Mrs. Moore contended that the bill would apply only after persons had lived in the state 10 years and in the county half that time.

DALTON LEAVES SHIPPING POST

Merchant Fleet Head to Quit on Feb. 28

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30. (US)—Gen. A. C. Dalton, vice president and general manager of the merchant fleet corporation, today submitted his resignation to T. V. O'Connor, chairman of the United States shipping board.

The resignation will become effective on Feb. 28, at which time General Dalton will accept an executive position with an internationally known shipping company.

General Dalton said tonight that his resignation was in no way connected with the proposal to sell the Leviathan and 10 other vessels to Paul W. Chapman & Co., Inc., of New York, for $16,500,000.

"I completed 40 years' continuous service with the government this month," said General Dalton, "and I decided that was enough. I have been importuned for some time to accept positions with private firms and upon rounding out my 40 years I made the decision to resign."

General Dalton served 37½ years with the army, where he rose from private to brigadier general, and two and one-half years with the merechant fleet corporation, known as the emergency fleet corporation when he was appointed its president in 1926.

He is recognized as an authority on water transportation, having had charge of the war department transport of troops, provisions and material to Europe during the world war. He also commanded the transport division of the Vera Cruz expedition to Mexico in 1914, and served in a similar capacity at the headquarters of the late Maj. Gen Frederick A. Funston at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, during the Mexican trouble in 1916.

Splendid Recipe To Stop A Cough That "Hangs On"

The best cough remedy that money could buy, can easily be made at home. It saves money and gives you the most reliable, quick-acting medicine you ever used. The way it takes hold of stubborn coughs and chest colds, giving immediate relief, is astonishing.

Any druggist can supply you with 2½ ounces of Pinex. Pour this into a pint bottle, and fill up with plain granulated sugar syrup or strained honey. It's no trouble at all to mix, and when you once use it you will never be without it. Keeps perfectly and tastes good—children really like it.

It is surprising how quickly this home-made remedy loosens the germ-laden phlegm, and soothes and heals the inflamed membranes. At the same time, it is absorbed into the blood, where it acts directly on the bronchial tubes, and helps the system throw off the whole trouble. Even those severe coughs which usually follow the "flu", are promptly ended.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway Pine, containing the active agent of creosote, in a refined, palatable form. Nothing known in medicine is more helpful in cases of severe coughs, chest colds and bronchial troubles.

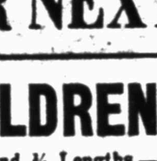

Do not accept a substitute for Pinex. It is guaranteed to give prompt relief or money refunded.

BIG RANCH TO BE MARKETED

Collingsworth Tracts Will Be Sold

By C. W. ROGERS
Staff Correspondent

WELLINGTON, Texas, Jan. 30.—It is announced here that a tract embracing 34 sections, one of the last of the big ranches in this county, probably will be placed on the market next year.

Many inquiries for low-priced land are being received at the offices of the Wellington Chamber of Commerce, nearly all indicating that the writers have slight information concerning Collingsworth county.

In supplying this lack of information the chamber is sending to inquirers matter setting forth that Collingsworth is 899 square miles in extent, embracing 574,720 acres, of which 500,000 acres is tillable land.

Prices Vary Widely

The average of land values, it is pointed out, lies between $20 an acre for raw land and $125 for improved land.

It is emphasized that the county has never had a crop failure, the mean average productivity for the last three years being: Cotton, .52 bales; wheat, 19.02 bushels; corn, 20.17 bushels; grain sorghum, 25.14 bushels.

Soil varies, including dark sandy loam, dark clay loam, ash gray and deep sand.

Production of cotton, the principal crop, was 52,974 bales in 1926, 46,000 bales in 1927 and between 47,500 and 50,000 in 1928 is estimated. These statistics apply to cotton ginned in this county, some coming from without.

Fruits Thrive

Fruits of many varieties thrive in this section; in particular apples, peaches, apricots, cherries, blackberries and strawberries.

Dairying and poultry raising are profitable, due to low cost of growing feed.

Wellington, Collingsworth county seat, has a population of 4,500. Practically all lines of business are represented, but increasing development of the county is attracting more competition. A strong wholesale grocery house is lacking. There is an immediate need and demand for a cotton oil mill and a creamery and cheese factory. A garment factory is an industry that would receive support from Wellington and surrounding territory. Fuel in the form of natural gas can be supplied industries in unlimited quantities at a minimum cost.

Jurney Takes Another Whack at Dry Laws

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30. (US)—"Had any other law proved as ridiculous a failure as the Volstead act, it would have been repealed or modified years ago. But at last the country is waking up to conditions and the fight is on."

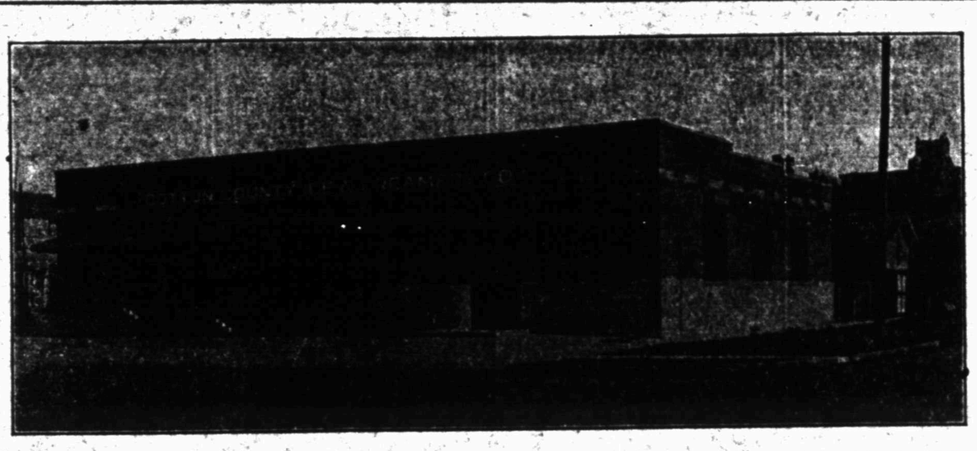

So declared Chester W. Jurney, president of the league for modification of the Volstead act, in a statement today welcoming President A. L. Lowell, of Harvard "to that group of educators having the courage to challenge the spirit of intolerance and advocate overhauling of the prohibition laws."

Legalized light wine and beer is the only solution of the prohibition problem, he said.

Restocking of Section With Game Discussed

BEAUMONT, Texas, Jan. 30. (AP)—In event a bill which would put an armistice on hunting deer and turkeys in Chamber and Liberty counties is passed by the state legislature, announcement is made here that the state fish, game and oyster commission will be requested to restock the section with game. Frank Hampe, district game warden, is fathering the move, which has been prepared in a bill by Senator Holbrook.

New $100,000 Creamery at Walters, Okla.

.....Plant of the Cotton County Ice and Creamery company at Walters, Okla., establishment of which was induced by the Walters Community club, aided by Editor Jim Nance. The enterprise represents an investment of $100,000.

Walters Editor and Club Responsible For Erection of Modern Creamery

(By Staff Correspondent)

WALTERS, Okla., Jan. 30.—Farmers in northern and eastern Cotton county are almost unanimous in declaring that a capable newspaper editor in connection with organized business interests of a town can accomplish any undertaking upon which they may concentrate their combined efforts.

This was said in reference to the movement initiated by Editor "Jim" Nance and the Community club of Walters, headed by "Bob" Lines, which eventuated in the construction of a modern creamery, poultry packing and cold storage plant which has been in successful and continuous operation since last Oct. 1, paying farmers hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Nance Starts Move

Editor Nance recognized the advantage to be derived from the establishment of a large creamery in Walters. In the clamor which he started the Community club and farmers promptly joined. Result—they got what they wanted, not only a creamery but a poultry packing plant and wholesale produce house representing a total investment of $100,000.

The creamery and packing plant is electrically equipped throughout, and every known method for the scientific production of the highest quality of butter is applied by experts in the industry.

Butter is encased in fancy cartons, bearing the legend: "Butter produced from Cotton county farmers; pasteurized and churned daily in a modern sunlight factory where cleanliness and sanitation are supreme."

In the poultry packing division the dressed fowls are graded and packed in cases lined with parafined paper. The "Blue Anchor" trade mark of the firm is branded on the cases. The process assures a standard of quality that commands a premium from discriminating buyers.

Ships Poultry

During the last three months of 1928 the plant shipped 15 cars of dressed poultry, for which farmers were paid $120,000. Farmers are now receiving, according to Manager L. B. Selman, upwards of $2,000 each week for cream.

It would be difficult to convince farmers in Walters territory that the Walters commercial organization and the Walters newspaper could be improved upon as agencies for getting them whatever they may desire, within the bounds of possibility.

Dandy Way to Tint Gray Hair

By MONA EVERS

I don't blame any woman for wanting to do something about gray, faded or streaked hair because there is nothing that makes one look older.

Whenever I am asked for a method of restoring gray hair I invariably recommend nothing more or less than a mixture of good old sage tea and sulphur. Common garden sage, when properly brewed and mixed with sulphur and a little alcohol, makes a wonderful recolorer of gray hair. You can either prepare the mixture at home yourself, or more conveniently, buy it already prepared and ready to use. All druggists carry it in the form of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, and since the cost is only 75c a bottle, there is really no need to prepare it yourself.

You simply moisten a comb or soft brush with it and draw it through your hair, one strand at a time. One application banishes the gray and one or two more completely restores your hair to its original color, so evenly, so naturally that no one can possibly tell you have used it. Everyone who tries Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur tells me he, or she, gets perfect results, so I don't hesitate to pass the secret on to others.—Adv.

'GRANDMA' USED AGAINST GANG

State Springs Surprise In Aged Witness

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Jan. 30. (UP)—Mrs. Eva Lois Neal, a gray-haired, motherly woman from Lenox, Iowa, was the surprise witness the state used today to positively identify Tony Bonello as one of the gang that killed Patrolman James H. Smith during the holdup of the Home Trust company June 14.

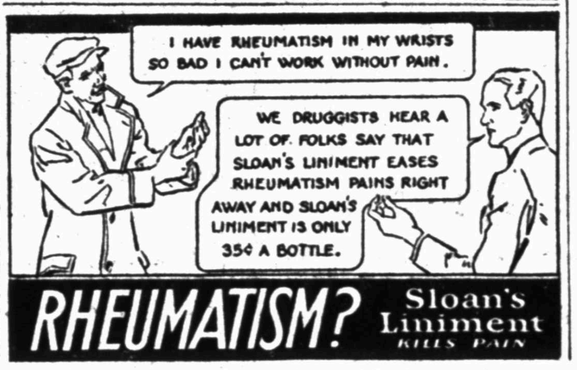

Mrs. Neal was a visitor at the Republican national convention here and was a witness to the holdup. Although almost deaf, she heard all of the conversation of the Home Trust company bandits before and after they entered the bank through a device which amplifies sound.

Bonello is the fourth member to go on trial for murder. Three others of the gang are now under sentence of death. Mrs. Neal was not used as a witness in the other trials because others were able to identify those bandits.

Our Life's Measure

A MERCHANT in Trenton, N. J., died the other day and left a very interesting will. This document, after directing the disposal of his property, ordered that his tombstone bear this inscription under his name—"Has lived and accomplished nothing."

Unless the merchant's family objects, that epitaph will be carved on his monument, to stir future generations to wonder briefly what sort of man was buried there.

Modesty is a great virtue, most of the time, and it is a bit refreshing to run across a man who is willing to admit that he has done nothing whatever worth mentioning. Yet too much modesty is as bad as too little; and no man on earth ever really deserved the epitaph that this Trenton merchant selected.

The sum of anyone's accomplishments is never easy to reach correctly. We ourselves seldom know just what we have done with the few years that are allotted us out of endless eternity. Sometimes we think we have done a great deal when we actually have done little; but, more often, we think we have done very little when we really have done much.

"Accomplished nothing." Who ever deserved to have that said of him? Not the sorriest failure you could find in any midwinter bread line. In reviewing a life you can't limit yourself to the things that mean money, power, success or fame. When a man reaches the last day those look rather trivial. Small, forgotten, unimportant things then grow bigger.

No man can go through life in a water-tight compartment. Every contact with the rest of the world contains the seed of an accomplishment. Suppose there is only a handful of trivalities—unremembered acts of kindness; moments when the soul wrestled with dark temptation and conquered it; times when fear, having lodged in the heart, was discovered and torn out; instances when a show of hope or a display of unselfishness helped convince someone else that the world, after all, was a better place than had been supposed. Suppose that is all there is when the record of a life is ended. Is that nothing?

Nothing? Such things are everything. Concrete achievements have a way of falling away to nothingness in the course of time. Fame is forgotten, great estates shrink, business enterprises drop out of sight—nothing remains. But these things—the forgotten, unimportant things that every living mortal achieves at some time or other—are everlasting. The seed of them is perennial. Slowly, year by year and century by century, they gather force. Eventually they will change the face of the whole world.

The Trenton merchant was wrong when he said that he had accomplished nothing. No man can say that. Every moment of vision, every act of kindness, every internal victory over the forces of darkness, is an accomplishment. They are not the kind that gets carved on tombstones. Yet they last forever.

Filene on the Tariff

EDWARD A. FILENE, Boston merchant, predicts that the American business man and industrialist will in the near future reverse his traditional position and come out for a lower tariff.

American prosperity, he declares, is coming more and more to depend on a successful disposal of our surplus production. This surplus, he says, can be sold to Europe in jig time if we lower our tarff walls so that Europe can also sell to us. He sees, as a result, a lower cost of living for the United States and a lower production cost in American factories, with consequent gains to both the American workingman and the American manufacturer and exporter.

Undoubtedly, there will be many to disagree with Mr. Filene's diagnosis. But it is worth considering, at all events. It offers a new method of approach to one of the oldest issues in our political history.

Golf in Industry

THE GAME of golf has helped bring about the humanization of industry and is one of the chief factors in the move toward the five-day week, according to Miss Frances D. Perkins, New York's new commissioner of labor.

Factory and business executives, she says, like to get away on Saturday to play golf. The game appeals to them so strongly that they are beginning to let their employes do the same thing. Officials who never before would have dreamed of curtailing work on Saturday are now reconciled to the idea because of the lure of the golf course.

We always knew golf was a fine game, but we never before suspected it was playing so big a part in our industrial field. If Miss Perkins' diagnosis is correct, the golf fanatic has one more reason for lauding the game he loves.

Germany's New Cruiser

DISPATCHES from Europe indicate that Germany has launched a new cruiser that may revolutionize warship construction.

Limited by the Versailles treaty to eight warships of 10,000 tons apiece, Germany has just launched her first one. While held in the 10,000-ton class, it is said to be far more powerful than any ship of its size afloat. It carries 11-inch guns, and is said to have a new type of armor far more effective than anything in existence.

It would be interesting if Germany, through improved technical methods, should be able to develop a fleet that could rank with those of her conquerors. Interesting, yet not surprising, after all. Modern war is becoming more and more a matter for technical experts, and Germany can meet any country in the world in that field.

GOVERNOR JOHNSTON'S DEFENSE

Friends of Governor Johnston are rallying to his financial support. From all sections of the state money is being sent the governor for use in employing counsel to represent him before the court of impeachment. Some Mangum friends of the governor are preparing to assist in this. Representative Bill Jones has introduced a resolution in the house providing $10,000 for Governor Johnston's defense. The governor, according to all reports, is in as bad financial circumstances as the rest of us. His bank account is overdrawn. He has no money. It would be entirely unjust that he be forced into trial without the benefit of able counsel. —Greer County (Okla.) News.

Relief for the unemployed

The Day Book of a New Yorker

Broadway Chatter by Grant Dixon

NEW YORK, Jan. 30.—"You New Yorkers don't know the meaning of peace," said the New England professor who wrote verse in his spare time, "and it won't do you much good to comfort yourself with the thought after I'm through speaking that you've been listening to an old rustic nursing his favorite grouch. Ten years ago, my friend, I was in the theatrical publicity game and got to know a little bit about this fair city of yours. In fact, I got to know so much that I decided to go in for higher education and the halls of learning.

"Since that time I've discovered a number of strange and wonderful things. For the first time I suddenly became conscious of the passing of the seasons. I grew to feel as I had never felt before the steaming richness of spring and the melancholy of a late autumn. I sat on top of a hill and saw more cold sky in that one winter night than I had seen in a dozen years of urban residence.

"For the first time I knew what it was to be tranquil, which is something you people will never know, even when your heads are bowed and your hands are shaking. There are hills where I live now which welcome you to their summits, instead of daring you to scale them.

"You start out with a friend in the early afternoon and you walk slowly. Where you are going you are not altogether sure, but you know that you don't have to be there on time. It's a curious thing but I've found that the sunset will wait for you twice as long as the average business man.

"So you keep on walking and possibly pass a few people on the road. It isn't long before you crawl under a wire fence or over a wooden railing and strike out across a field. The grass is thick at your feet and the intervals of stillness are accentuated by the plaintive chorus of a million insects.

"A faint breeze starts a conspiracy among the leaves. The air grows cooler and as the color of the sky darkens imperceptibly you become aware of the melting of the afternoon's loud singing into the thin and tender dirge of twilight.

"A brook creases its crooked way across the field and disappears into the underbrush of the foothills. Unwittingly you strike a wooded path and the pace becomes even more deliberate. The grade is easy but exacting. The lower branches of green saplings whip your body as you thresh past them. The burrs cling relentlessly to your jacket. There are a thousand colors in the sky which seem to be copyrighted by nature for no one has ever been able to reproduce them with any degree of integrity. Many of them have no names because no names have been invented to do justice to the spectral medley. Mid-way up the hill you stop and look around and out into the blue distance and are half afraid to believe that what you see is altogether real. Thirty feet more or so and you are on top of the hill.

"A star can be seen, another, and still a third. The blurred henna of the horizon vanishes almost while you look at it. The crescent of the moon hangs golden in the sergecolored sky and suddenly you are nestled in a great blanket of solitude. In the all-embracing silence of the evening there is little that can be said that will sound important or that will matter in the long run.

"Thus no word is spoken. You look at your friend sitting two feet away and read in his eyes the loneliness that the night has written there and realize that he likes you has nothing to say. At such moments, my friend, it becomes palpably evident that what you did yesterday and what you do tomorrow is of singularly little significance. At such moments the faculties of memory and anticipation are non-existent. There is no future and no past, only the present, only the things at hand; the rustling grass, the plaintive chirp of the beetle and the repetitive blinking of the stars.

"To a few of us these are worth a great deal. They are, in the words of the poet, conducive to repose. They have come to mean moments of clearer vision and a closer approach to the heart of things. They will continue beyond the last streamline effect and after the last dollar has been stuffed in the last pocket.

"That is what I meant when I said you New Yorkers don't know the meanings of peace. I often wonder what you do with all the time you are constantly saving. I should think there ought to be by this time a great residue of hours and days and weeks which you have stored away for future tapping.

"Come up some time when you stop hoarding it. Come up in the season of mist and mellow fruitfulness and get the municipal grime out of your eyes."

Mother was trying to teach little Sophia the meaning of fractions.

"Suppose," she asked, "I cut an apple into halves, how many pieces would I have?"

That was easy for Sophia. "Two," she answered.

"Now, if I cut the apple into quarters, how many pieces would I have?"

Sophia thought a minute, and carefully counting on her fingers, gave the correct answer.

"Very good," said mother. That's what fractions are."

Sophia was not satisfied, however. After a few moments she came back.

"If you cut an apple into tiny snips," she wanted to know, "how many pieces would there be?"

Mother thereupon decided to leave the lesson in fractions to teacher.

SUPPLY AND DEMAND

TIRANA, Albania—The law of supply and demand has played havoc with the marriage market in this country. A man may acquire a desirable spouse for $25, and there have been instances wherein a wife has been bought for a few sacks of potatoes or grain. In comparison a good pack animal will sell for $150 or more.

Lawrence Gray is a movie star. He is not related to Zane or Gilda. His folks wanted him to be a doctor, but Lawrence figured he'd rather cut up in a movie studio than to cut out in a surgery. When he reached Hollywood they let him play in a mob scene. When the picture was finished one of those critic minds of Hollywood decided that Gray had athletic sex appeal (whatever that is), and they made a star of him.

LAWRENCE GRAY

"I have an actor friend," Gray told me—"one who plays character roles—and as a beard was essential to his make-up he grew one. It was one of those long, flowing ones, and at the height of its growth the actor married. Not long ago he was cast in a picture and the story demanded that the bearded one be shaved. A few days ago I met him on the streets. He was bewailing the fact that his wife had quit him.

"'Well,' I consoled, 'it's leave or be left these days. Did the removal of your whiskers have anything to do with it?'

"'Yes,' he replied, 'when my wife saw me for the first time without a beard, she said:

"'Now I know why I never liked you!'"

The VICARION

The Astounding Story of an Invention Greater Than the Movies

Copyright by Gardner Hunting

By Gardner Hunting

Serialized by Ledger Syndicate

In the year 1935 Radley Brainard has invented the Vicarion, a device with which it is possible to re-create scenes out of the past. The invention is a sensational success, with all the theaters installing it in place of motion pictures. Complete Illusions, Inc., which at that time controls all the improvements on the movie, faces ruin, but when Ferdinand Mortimer and Jerry Ballard, heads of the company, call on him, Brainard refuses to make terms.

Brainard's records of the past are contained in "bombs," which hold liquid air and while he is projecting one of the "bombs," which was unmarked, he sees a beautiful gossamar-clad girl, with whom he falls in love, although he is engaged to Phyllis Norman. During the first demonstration of the Vicarion, with Phyllis and her family looking on, a strange man staggers in the studio. He is unable to tell who he is and Brainard names him Van Winkle, and makes him his aide.

Brainard calls in the operator who made the unmarked record, but gains no information from him. He orders Van Winkle to investigate the making of the bomb. Brainard projects one of the three remaining bombs containing the woodland scene in which the girl with whom he is infatuated appears and decides the records were made by Jeffry Homer, a criminal whom he has employed. Homer dies of fright while listening to the voice of his dead brother which Brainard projects by means of the Vicarion and Homer's secret of the "bomb," which contains the "sunrise nymph" passes into the hands of Mortimer and Ballard.

People surrendered to their new desire as men have surrendered to opium—lying down to it in deliberate substitution of its rewards for all others. No one seemed to think. One by one the newspapers ceased to come out. The last one Phyllis saw said that the race seemed to have lived its life and to be sitting down to review, like an old man drifting into his dotage. Uproars were anticipated but did not come. Public disturbances became rare. People snatched at food and rest, that they might see and hear and feel again. No one argued beyond today. Men worked only to convey the materials of their passion. It could not last—but day after day it did, and the paralysis of every day living grew.

Only neglected little children seemed alive to today's air and dirt. Some of them sickened and died.

The food supply became a problem, but nobody tried to settle it, except for an hour at a time. Of course there were a few who clung to the pursuits of necessity—the very poor and the very sane. They kept some babies from starving and some of the sick from dying of complete neglect. Phyllis found work to do—so much that she lost account of time. There was no Sabbath's pause to mark the week. Periodic rhythms of industry went awry, then ceased. Servants disappered—excepting only the faithful—or atrophied—Charles. It had been the object of men's work that they might live, they had now the opportunity to live without work. They could pack the experience of years—experience that had never been packed in single lifetimes before—into days or weeks. The commonplaces were gone, drudgery had vanished. Bodily wants were, after all, easily appeased. Families lived on fractions of what had been thought necessary food before. It was summer, and the harvests were in. People smuggled crusts about, and bits of fruit, and drank at public taps.

New demands arose, and people battened on them. But food was gathered for the hungry in order that the gatherers might possess means of immediate spending. Markets and great houses of supply gave place to little booths and stands. City streets became like fairs, where people were spending the day and not the year. And constantly the booths changed hands. In great centers of population it was said there was suffering—but information came as spasmodically and inadequately as it had formerly come by motion picture news reels. Vicarion views of New York showed sandwich and fruit and vegetable stands on Broadway. Fifth avenue was deserted. Stores, shops and hotels were empty, theaters were thronged. But for once New Yorkers were attending their own shows; while former transient patrons stayed at home with theirs. And neither class did anything else!

But nobody wanted to look at mere streets or mere crowds. It was the most rough, hot moment of passion—greed, hate, fury, love!—that they wanted. They got it. And the more they got of it, the more crazed was the demand. No one could analyze the situation, no one could predict the outcome. No one tried, it seemed. It was inconceivable that there was not somewhere authority that could interfere. But government is, after all, of and by and for the people. Officialdom was swept aside like a wisp before a mighty referendum. Never in all history had there been such an object lesson in government, but no one paused to observe. Kings, councils, congresses or creeds—they wield nothing if not the people's will! And the people willed to live in the deeds of the past! And so they lived.

The "Benefactor"

On a day—she had no idea what day, whether a fortnight or a month after she had seen him last, Phyllis found Radley in his private office. He was strangely shaven and sleek. So many men were not now! But to her vision his lips were steel and his eyes fire. She hardly knew what she said to him; her thoughts spoke.

"How are people going to live, Radley?" she asked.

He understood. "There has always been food enough in the world if the race would only recognize it," he answered, "grain, fruit, nuts herbs, game! Everything we eat was once a weed or an eater of weeds. When my world grows hungry I'll turn it out to grass."

His world! Joking still.

"But—cities full!"

"There's enough in cold storage to support this generation," he told her, grinning. "Why worry about the next? Maybe there won't be any next. And if there isn't, I'll be the great benefactor of the race; I shall have put them out of their misery."

He left her, with some excuse she did not hear; and he did not come back. She found herself later wandering in the halls of the building—at the door of a multiple-unit room. Organization was still here, apparently. Attendants were on duty; she wondered how Brainard kept them there. But if he could enslave a nation he could command individuals and groups.

But the employes were more nearly normal than the men and women who came and went. A girl passed her whom she had known as one of the gayest of the young society buds that spring; Evelyn Candlar—eating an apple, or a vegetable, or a sandwich, out of hand. A woman she knew as a leader in club work came in looking as if she had slept since she had combed her hair. A man came out of a booth as if after a night of debauch, his hair matted, his chin grizzled with graying beard, his unwashed skin waxy, his mouth scarlet and dry.

She stood aside and watched. Here were fops and butterflies who had dropped out of the social parade—forgetting to shave and to dress! Decency was bedraggled. Pretense was punctured, as in the presence of a public disaster. But if the youngsters startled her, the older ones were tragic. It was middle age that paid high for sensations. Boys and girls were jaded; their fathers and mothers were sapped. She saw men drink from flasks, alone, in the presence of others. She saw women sip at small vials, unashamed. They did not talk to each other; they slipped into booths and lay down, to draw hoods over their faces—and the curtains fell upon their surrender. People who had gone to underground dens in days past for their drugs had the grace to get out of sight. But nobody here seemed conscious of observation.

A woman came from a booth, her face wet with emotional tears, and demanded repetitions of what had made her weep. A man could be heard behind a curtain complaining like a whining child. Phyllis recalled what Brainard had once said about "increasing the dose." The only apparent consciousness of one another that passing "customers" showed was irritation. They seemed curious as to what others might have that they did not obtain—curious, jealous, envious. Sometimes they seemed almost to hate one another, if looks could tell the story.

What was it for which they envied one another? Did they covet a greater capacity to absorb—or more of the Liquid Life which they absorbed? Perhaps they envied those people of the past who really had lived those moments, the vital quality of which after all could not be fully savored second-hand! And hated them, as men always hate those who have more life than they!

She could not believe that this scene was typical of what was occuring in private exhibition rooms elsewhere. Then she knew it must be. But suppose it was; what of it? A great revulsion seized her. Why should she concern herself? It was nothing for which she was responsible, or that she could stop or delay. Of what moment was it to the sane that the insane should attempt to destroy themselves, or the method they might adopt? It was only revolting to see. The fit minority would survive—however small it might be! Was it then simply that taste was offended by physical self-neglect of the victims—or was there a far deeper horror at the plight of the victims themselves? No, the physical appearance was the mere symptom of the thing that mattered.

Physical appearance a mere symptom? Where—where did that idea lead in the consideration of this impossible situation?

"Everybody Happy"

She tried to run away from the scenes. But Brainard met her squarely in the doorway. She caught him by the arm.

"Radley, do you see what is happening to people here?"

"They're having the time of their lives," he answered, smiling grimly. "Have you any idea what they are paying me for it?"

"Is the same thing happening everywhere?"

"What's the matter? Nobody is suffering. Everybody is happy."

"Happy—on sensation?"

"Of course. They know what they want; and they've got it."

"But—but people can't just look on at life and—not live it any more!"

"Why not? If a man gets full satisfaction for his senses, what else can he live for? They're all he has. Not many of us can be philosophers and poets, and imagine we have anything else! Common sense is the first of all the senses—yes, the first of all the philosophies. Men in the mass are always right about what they want. The voice of the people is the voice of God!"

He was sneering.

"It isn't!" she cried. "Even the senses rebel if—if they are used too much!"

"Oh, you mean that any given sensation palls after a while? Well, Nature anesthetizes us, mercifully, when we can no longer enjoy. That's where the idea of Nirvana came from—it is the ultimate goal, after all!"

"But—but," stumbled the girl, staggered by this flippancy, "what about the children? Can they grow up—"

"Why sentimentalize about the child? He grows up by living. Give him a chance to live." He grinned again. "The Vicarian does that. He can grow up overnight."

"If you had a child——"

"I haven't."

"But—other people——"

"Let them take care of 'em. Why interfere in other people's lives?"

"But you are interfering!"

"Not me! If a man prefers bathing girls to matrimony, I'm not to blame. If a woman experiences motherhood vicariously and wants none of the first-hand thing, I'm not responsible for the population of the world."

"The race will die."

"So shall I! And nobody will do me a kindness to keep me alive after my pleasures are dead!"

"Then you think—that death is the end—the final period—the—exclamation point! That life is just an opportunity to exhaust the—the power of the nerves to react?"

"Pious people say that life is a preparation for something else, don't they? Then it's up to me to get all the preparation I can—even if I have to cram!"

He laughed.

"If people only live in the past," cried the girl, "they won't live at all! Now is the only time I can live!"

"My argument exactly! Then why prate about a future life?"

She leaned against the wall and stared at him. She was panting. Carol's phrase once used to her flitted across her mind. "You are the stuff of which reformers are made, Phyl!" The idea turned her sick. If there was anything more nauseating than newly sophisticated youth it was youth setting up as self-constituted savior of the world! But what could she do in the face of plain ruin? She changed her ground in the flash of a new thought.

"Then if you don't care what happens to anyone else, do you care what will happen to you?"

"What?" He grinned curiously, skeptically.

"You are changing the very standards of men on which you are at the same time calculating. How will you control them when you find their whole reckoning of values is altered? When everybody's skeleton is out, you can't frighten anybody turning a searchlight on his! In a world full of disgraced men you can't cow a man by threat of disgrace! You'll lose your power. You can't ruin a man by taking away his wealth in a world where all values are shaken! Men's very motives are changing; their incentives are different!"

He considered this for an instant. Then he smiled slowly.

"Oh, no, Phyl," he said. "When their incentives change they'll be already in Nirvana. Until the anaesthetic takes effect, the senses will continue to be the five little gods to whom man makes his prayers! My body fits in the world I find myself in—and what fits together was meant to go together. I'll worry about my soul when I get where I need one! I'm for the little old earth, and the earth is for me! The Vicarion has proved that action is the significant thing in life—and the whole world is recognizing it!"

"It's proving that action is what remains after all that made it significant is gone!" cried Phyllis. "The Vicarion shows what a man has done, but it doesn't show the man. A partial view of anything is a warped view—most of all of a human being! You can't compute a man by his past actions, because things like aspirations and ideals and remorse can't be translated into terms of action. You once said that life might be beautiful if we could see it all transparent—but you show us only bits! You compared the Vicarion's records to memory—but memory contains all a man's record! There is where his life is—in the composite of all his records. That is forever beyond you. This Liquid Fire is no elixir—it's a froth!"

He stared at her. Then he laughed again. "Bravo, Phyl! I had no idea you had it in you. After it's all over, why don't you go on a lecture tour—through Nirvana!"

The quip delighted him. Then he grimaced. "You are saying that all drama is an empty thing. It is axiomatic that action is the essence of drama."

"The essence of drama is the thing with which you, the onlooker, endow the action!"

"Then you justify Liquid Life at a breath!"

"Not as a substitute for living!"

His eyes suddenly grew hard. "The human race always lives on some substitute for life—and crowns the man king who furnishes it."

He turned away from her without excuse or apology. She stood still and let him go. Of a sudden all those ideas which she had thought of as convictions were shaken. After all, was not vicarious living a part of life itself? What was this "stuff of the performer" in her—a mere urge to tilt at something? A coward trait that merely refused to live and let live life as it is, fads, foibles, fanciers, frenzies and disasters! If it were lived, one life would be enough for one woman! Why play "anybody else's cards?"

She was standing beside a small door. Through it abruptly she seemed to hear her mother's voice. Curious! She tried the knob, only half realizing what she did. The door opened and she stepped into a small room in which she found herself almost upon her mother and John.

It was an echo of her own thought she heard and it held her spell-bound.

"Don't try to live my life for me, Mother," John was saying, smiling indulgently, but with determined young lips.

"I don't want to, son," said her mother. "But I can't help it, in a way, whether you know it or not. I've been watching my own old mother, lately, as she used to live mine. It's a way mothers have had, I guess, since before the Vicarion."

She smiled, and stroked his cheek. But he moved restively away from her hand. His gesture went through Phyllis like a knife; it would hurt her mother so!

"Well, then," he answered her, "get Rad to make some records of me and take it out on them." And he laughed and moved away.

In a moment he was gone, and Mrs. Norman turned, her face working with pain. Phyllis started forward.

"Mother!"

But her mother did not seem to hear. She covered her face and sobbed.

"Mother!" cried Phyllis, and ran forward to clasp the weeping woman in her arms.

But her outstretched hands clasped—nothing! No one was there! Color and form and scent and sound and warmth and the very stir of sobbing breath! But no substance! Emptiness! Where her very heart-strings had reached out to enfold a being infinitely dear she found a blank!

She staggered back. With a frightful sense that reality itself had failed, she still watched and heard the sobbing, sobbing of that figure that was not there!

But presently the scene which she had taken for real dissolved and went out. And Phyllis knew that she had tried to participate in action of yesterday. Past action—as lifeless as the discarded costume of an old play! Husks—that had once contained life, love, wisdom, power—in the moment when that past was now. Dead in the present. Now—because life does not pause or step back into its old clothes!

She had stepped into one of the Vicarion's very scenes. Then the thing had a normal explanation. Normal!

But after the scene was gone, the sound of sobbing continued. The white light from the lens at hand fell out into the darker end of the room, and Phyllis saw her mother seated there, her eyes covered with a handkerchief. She understood; scenes had been made of John for his mother.

The girl turned back to the door by which she had intruded here and slipped out. She had not been observed. She found her own face wet with tears. Dear Mother! The hurt human always tried to take refuge in the past—forever reaching backward for what only lay in the present and in the heart!

She slipped through the multiple-unit room and out into the hall. She tried to avoid a group there.

WEEKS FARM OPENING TO MARK NEW ERA FOR WICHITA VALLEY

EVENT DRAWS WIDE INTEREST

Heavy Attendance From Texas and Okla. Expected

ager of the community, as chairman. They will answer questions, show prospects over the lands and act as a general committee on information.

There are 2,500 acres of land in the project to be developed by Mr. Weeks. Two tracts will be ready for sale Saturday. They are the Westmoreland tract, which has been divided into lots, 100 by 250 feet in size, to be sold for small garden homes. The purchaser can combine several of these lots into a larger place if he desires, and three men have already bought locations of three lots each.

Model Home

The other tract which is ready for sale is the Rancho Vista addition, which is divided into farms of 5, 10, 15 and 20 acres each. Six farms have already been sold in the Westmoreland tract.

The model home near the swimming pool, which is being established by Mr. Weeks and which will be occupied by Mr. Yeths, is nearly completed. This is on one lot, 100 by 250 feet, and will care for 1,200 hens. The cost of a lot this size, with bungalow, chicken houses for 1,200 hens, fence and garage, is about $6,000 at the present time, Mr. Weeks told members of the real estate board at their regular weekly luncheon Tuesday.

Fruit trees will be trained to grow on fences around the garden homes and by intensive culture will be forced to bear heavily, Mr. Weeks has said. Mulch paper methods of gardening and truck farming will also yield heavy production and each member of the community will be expected to raise green feed for the hens on his place.

An association in the form of a stock company will be organized to market eggs and other specialized products of the community. Mr. Weeks believes that chain marketing will bring the highest current market prices to the farmers in the colony.

A school of intensive poultry and dairy farming will be organized by Mr. Weeks to benefit members of the community. Students will do practical work during the day and attend lectures at a community center in the evening.

Although the program does not begin until the early afternoon, the grounds will be open for inspection during the morning.

Mr. Weeks has been experimenting with intensive farming for 26 years. He has established two successful intensive little farm colonies in California. One is at Palo Alto, near San Francisco, and the other at Owensmouth near Los Angeles.

He is the author of "Egg Farming in California," "One Acre and Independence" and "A California Acre." He is editor of the Little Farms Magazine, a monthly publication.

Mr. Weeks believes in "intensive human culture" as well as intensive agriculture. In all his talks here he has stressed the importance of giving the farmer all the comforts of a city home in addition to the increased food luxuries from an intensive little farm that is self-supporting.

Mr. Weeks' program for out-of-town lectures during the next 10 days has been announced as follows: Vernon, Jan. 31; Electra, Feb. 1; Terrell, Feb. 4; Sherman, Feb. 5; Mexia, Feb. 6 and Temple, Feb. 7.

$7,500,000 Gold Cargo Arrives From England

NEW YORK, Jan. 30. (AP)—The first gold to be shipped to America from England since last November arrived on the Aquitania today and totaled $7,500,000. In addition $5,500,000 was taken in London by New York bankers, to be shipped on the Majestic, sailing tomorrow.

This brings the volume of the present movement to $13,000,000. Last fall about $50,000,000 was received from England, and about $58,000,000 has been received in recent months from Canada, but these totals have been offset by ear markings of gold by the Federal Reserve bank for the account of the Bank of France.

Government Agrees to Make New Farm Loans

BUENOS AIRES, Jan. 30. (AP)—In view of the present low grain quotations which do not cover even the cost of harvesting, the government today in agreement with exporters decided to make loans to farmers at five per cent interest, at the same time restricting exports.

MULCH PAPER METHOD WORKS

Weeks Explains Use of New Production Aid

By CHARLES WEEKS

Doesn't it seem strange that in many parts of the world famine stalks through the land, when there are millions of fertile acres lying untilled? Before people can attain to any degree of happiness they must first be well nourished. It seems to me that the best intellects of the world would concentrate on the best methods of bringing the poor, hungry and downtrodden into the lands that flow with milk and honey. It seems to me that the most essential facts in the welfare of the human race would be those truths related to the highest and most efficient production of food from the soil.

With the most modern and up-to-date methods of growing all kinds of food products, it takes such a little bit of land to grow enough for one family. How much simpler and easier it would be to create a living from your own garden, rather than to work long weary hours in unhealthy places, in close confinement, trying to earn dollars with which to purchase this living.

One of the latest ideas for increasing production is that of the paper mulch method. This method was accidentally discovered by a man in the Hawaiian islands, who was trying to keep down the growth of obnoxious weeds among his pineapples. He tried a roll of asphalt paper and found it worked far beyond his wildest expectations. Not only did it keep down the weeds, but it retained the moisture and eliminated cultivation.

Today mulch paper is being used by many gardeners, and this method of farming is gaining favor so rapidly that enough paper can hardly be made to supply the demand.

Last year I prepared my own little garden at Owensmouth, Calif. Having spaded and fertilized the soil thoroughly, I covered the ground with this new kind of mulch paper; through this paper I cut little slits and planted the many kinds of garden seeds, placing each according to its kind. The seeds came up through these slits and grew faster than any garden under any previous experience. The vegetables were so clean and grew so rapidly that they were crisp and tender and succulent. They were the best flavored vegetables we have ever eaten.

There are four main points gained by the use of this paper.

1. The paper being black, absorbs all the sun's rays, thus warming up all the soil beneath and retaining this heat throughout the night. This makes ideal conditions for plant growth.

2. The paper prevents evaporation, thus retaining all the moisture not used by the plants themselves. This creates ideal conditions for the growth of soil bacteria, and this tremendous growth of soil bacteria tends to fertilize the soil automatically. We have always known that soil in moist, shady places tends to grow richer all the time.

3. Mulch paper keeps down all the weeds, thus reserving all the strength from the soil for profitable plant growth.

4. The last, but not the least of the advantages, is that the paper eliminates the cultivation of the soil, thus saving a lot of arduous labor.

Some have called this a lazy man's garden. I would not say that; where the mind can think out an easier and more efficient way it makes possible more progress, growth and prosperity. Crops grown under mulch paper, in the experimental gardens have been known to be increased from 100 to 600 per cent. With the highest science in the fertilizing, and watering the soil, the paper mulch over same, there seems to be no limit to the possibilities in intensive production. Plants grown in these warm, moist, forcing beds have a wonderful flavor, and are far more palatable than those that are grown slowly under ordinary methods.

Mulch paper farming will be thoroughly demonstrated on our model farm at Westmoreland park, and is only one of the many new garden ideas in intensive agriculture.

It is proposed to grow vegetables in large quantities for market on the farms to be cultivated by the students in the contemplated practical poultry and intensive little farms school. This school is intended to be a place where all can come continually, for the highest examples in profitable agriculture. It is hoped that it will be a continual inspiration to all. We feel sure that the citizens of Wichita Falls, and county will be especially interested in the creating of a sufficient fund for the establishment of this much needed school. It will add more to the prosperity of the Wichita valley than any one institution that can be imagined.

We invite all interested to visit our demonstration farm from time to time, and see the progress made in this wonderful new way of farming with the mulch paper method.

CITY CONVENIENCES ARE MOVING TO THE PARK

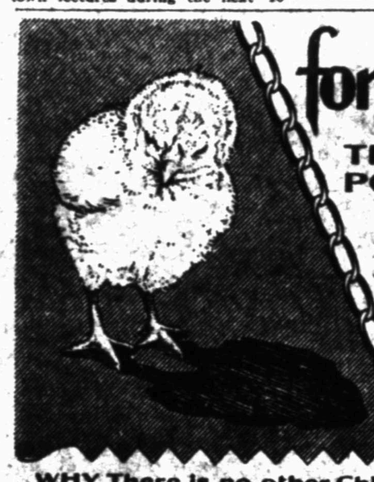

The city home, long the envy of the farm housewife, is sharing its glories with the farm hoouse. Electricity sweeps the rugs, washes the dishes and irons the clothes, refrigerates the food and makes ice, percolates the coffee, browns the toast and performs various other duties in the farm home today, just as efficiently as it does in the city home.

In the actual operation of the farm, electric power lights the barns, fills the silo, threshes the grain, milks the cows, incubates and broods the chickens, pumps the water and performs many other labor saving duties.

Electrically operated equipment has enabled the farmer to diversify his output, improve farm management, shorten his hours, increase his profits and generally improve his living and working conditions.

The Texas Electric Service Company is supplying electric power for hundreds of rural customers. Nature has been lavish with the Wichita Valley. The vision and courage of Wichita Falls men made the great irrigation system an added blessing to this fertile valley. The same vision and courage will make the Chas. Weeks Farms a glorious climax to this work. Electricity now makes living in the Wichita Irrigated Valley joyous as well as profitable.

WEEKS SCHOOL TO AID GROWER

Practical Instruction Aim of Farm Promoter

By CHARLES WEEKS

The production of food products from the soil is one of the finest arts, when done thoroughly and well. The development of the intensive little farm deals with the basic principles of life itself. We are dealing with realities, not with artificial or unnatural ways of living. To create from the earth water, sunlight and air, a little paradise on earth is the most interesting work that the human hands can perform. It is a work that will bring more health, greater peace to the mind, and a more solid contentment, than any other kind of labor. Too little thought has been put upon this way of living. Our schools have taught every other branch of industry more thoroughly than the agricultural lines, and while this way of living, in a garden home, is the most natural way on earth, we have been educated away from the soil.

If people only knew how to produce the choicest berries, vegetables, fruits and grapes, and to raise the finest and highest productive fowls and other animals, then the life on the farm would be made dignified and have a place with all the other vocations in life.

There is a great need of a practical school, where those desiring to enter into agricultural work can secure the accumulated knowledge of all time, and start in with the best and most approved methods to date.

I have been dreaming of such a school for many years, and after having lived this life myself for 26 years, I feel that the time has come when we can create a school of intensive agriculture that will be different from every other agricultural college. I wish to create a school where all ages, regardless of previous schooling, can come and learn just how people can produce the choicest products from the soil by doing the thing with their own hands. The old adage, "Learn to do by doing" is absolutely true, especially in the poultry business. No books, no teaching can make a poultry man. It requires an actual experience from day to day throughout the four seasons, before one can realize anything of how to make the business pay.

Aim Directly at Truth

The school that I would establish in this Wichita valley will not be an experimental or theoretical school. It will deal directly with the truths that have been discovered to date, and emphasize the one point of producing the very best in vegetables, berries, fruit or animals, and then showing how to realize the best price in the best markets. In other words, this school will be a business school, teaching first of all how to make an abundant living on the farm.

Each student will work daily at a given task, and meet in the class room at the end of the day and relate his experience of that day. By writing and relating the daily experiences he will not only learn to do the thing, but will become proficient in expressing himself.

It has long been said that the boys who work their way through college make the strongest and best men. It is the intention to make this practical school free to all, compelling each and every person to work his way through school.

In the poultry department, during the course of the year, each student will have his turn at the many different kinds of work during the season. He will have a stated period in incubation, brooding, feeding laying hens, trap nesting, grading and casting eggs. He will also have a working experience of how to plant and grow all the green feed crops used for poultry. He will have an accurate knowledge of how to plant, fertilize and water every kind of vegetable that grows in the garden, thus preparing him for earning the biggest part of his living direct from the soil. He will have a special course in the training of fruit trees and vines, showing just how to train the trees to make them produce the largest and best flavored fruit. In the training of grape vines, he will learn how to make beautiful arbors and shady places, and at the same time get the largest and finest bunches of grapes.

Actual Experience

If he should choose dairying as his line of farming, he will have the actual experience of feeding, milking and preparing the milk for market. In all lines of livestock raising, he will be taught how to select and breed the best animals.

In the poultry department all laying hens will be trap nested and accurately recorded.

Not only will he have an opportunity to learn how to fertilize the soil and grow every good thing for the table, but he will also get experience in growing beautiful flowers and vines to beautify the home.

It is hoped that this school will be an inspiration for the development of more aesthetic tastes in home building.

The daily work will furnish healthful exercise for all students so there will be no need for basket ball, baseball or football. There will be, however, a gymnasium equipped for the symmetrical development of the human body with the highest instruction possible in the physical care of the body. There will be no subject taught outside of the daily experiences received through the doing of the work in all of these agricultural lines. However, there will be enough bookkeeping and rhetoric and elocution to help make each farmer a capable business man, a better writer and a convincing speaker. Those who have musical tendencies should also have an opportunity to play some instrument, as this will increase very much the capacity for happiness.

To Be State School

The one major subject in this practical school will be that of how to create the most beautiful and productive home on the minimum amount of ground. A school conducted in this way should be not only self-supporting, but profit earning.

It is proposed to make this school not only a Wichita institution, but to make it a state school, opening the doors to all who want to learn this new way of living on an irrigated and highly fertilized little farm.

A school of this nature, dealing with the basic realities of life, should be the means of creating more health, happiness and prosperity, than has ever been attained in any other school.

It is hoped that every community in Texas will deem it a privilege to be able to add to the fund for the establishment of this school of life. If everyone will add a little, we will not only have money enough to erect a commodious building but will also be able to endow it for all time. Those who have been fortunate enough in life to have earned more wealth than they can use could not put their money to better advantage than to help in the establishment of this new efficient school of life.

More serious crimes in England are due to betting than to any other single cause.

A Dream Coupled With Reality

In the seventeenth century, Francis Bacon dreamed of his "New Atlantis." A century earlier, Thomas More brooded over a "Utopia."

Each was an ideal vision of a land where every man lived by the work of his own hands and was happy.

Four centuries ago, then, there were men who realized that human beings are happier when they are working together than separately.

Bacon and More were dreamers. In visioning a perfect land, they omitted a vital element—Property. Property is a great thing. Since prehistoric times when man wrested the protecting cave from the sabre toothed tiger, proprietorship has been a powerful element in human advancement.

And now, four centuries removed from Utopia, comes a man who has linked More's dream with the idea of proprietorship, and made of it a reality.

Charles Weeks has found an ideal commonwealth in the soil. His Intensive Little Farms will bring added wealth to Wichita Falls. His ideals will bring happiness to the inhabitants of the Little Farm Community.

Those who vision the best future of Wichita Falls will welcome this materialization of Charles Weeks' dream.

Wichita Falls the

Poultry Metropolis of the Southwest

The rich irrigated valley surrounding this city is growing more rapidly and more substantially than ever before. Today, Wichita Falls is taking her place as a poultry center of the southwest. No community has enjoyed the rapid expansion of the poultry industry as has this city. Almost overnight poultry raising of Wichita Falls has risen from an obscure one-man job to the establishment of one of the largest poultry ranches in the world. In addition numerous smaller farms are being established.

And Now:

The Charles Weeks "Chain" Poultry Farms

Added to the already growing poultry industry of Wichita Falls, is the Charles Weeks "Chain" Poultry Farm Plan, operated by individual owners on a cooperative basis. To the owner of the small farm, one acre means independence. To Wichita Falls, the advent of the cooperative plan will mean added population, added stimulus to business, and added prestige to the city as a poultry center. Thus Wichita Falls makes a step forward in her path of progress.

LITTLE FARMS PROVE SUCCESS

California Projects Show What Can Be Done

By CHARLES WEEKS

Some 15 years ago, after having experimented and worked for some 10 years, I surprised California and the agricultural world with having developed the most intensive little farm in the world at Palo Alto, Calif., near Stanford university. Thousands of people made pilgrimages to this little farm from everywhere, and it became an inspiration for better and more intensive work in agriculture.

In this way I had discovered a new way of living on the land, far different from the large farms with long weary hours and the poorest kind of living. The enthusiasm and encouragement of the many visitors led me to try an experiment in community building. Six hundred and forty acres of fertile land was subdivided into one-acre farms, surrounding my own poultry farm. Almost over night there sprang up a beautiful city of garden homes, that became world famous. Little did I know at that time that I was starting a national movement that was far reaching in its effects for beautiful homes and more profitable production on the land.

Seeing the work that I had accomplished at Palo Alto, Calif., along the lines of intensive agriculture, the chamber of commerce of Los Angeles sent their agricultural representative and expert to investigate our work. We were induced to go to southern California, and to make a long story short, took up a body of sandy loam soil in the west end of the San Fernando valley, 28 miles from the center of Los Angeles. Very soon there sprang into realization the second city of beautiful garden homes.

Today, after only six years, the Charles Weeks Poultry community at Owensamouth, Calif., represents an investment of over $5,000,000, and the market association last year handled $1,200,000 worth of products. Again, this second city of garden homes became famous and drew visitors from many parts of the world.

Decides to Come Here

Many visitors came from the state of Texas to see the wonderful work on the intensive little farms. Among these visitors there came to my little one acre farm one day, a man by the name of J. A. Kemp, who saw and believed in this great work of intensive production. The next year a group of some 40 progressive citizens of Wichita Falls made our one acre farm a visit, and after hearing my talk on the wonderful possibilities from soil, water, sunshine, and air, correctly utilized, they were also convinced, and urged me to make their city of Wichita Falls a visit, and see what could be done with the water from Lake Kemp in the Wichita valley. At that time I had no idea of leaving California. By continual suggestion, and a clear idea of the service such a move might make for the benefit of thousands of people that could not come to California, I finally decided to visit Wichita Falls, and investigate the possibilities.

It was last June that this visit was made, and I wish to state that here I met the finest and most enthusiastic group of business men ever. After a visit to Lake Kemp, and a trip through the valley, it gradually dawned upon me that here was the right location for a community center, showing the way for more beautiful and productive homes on less land. A second and finally a third trip was made, at which time we chose Westmoreland Park as the center of our intensive farms community, selecting here, around this park, some 2,500 acres, as the beginning of our development.

On Saturday, Feb. 2, will be held our formal opening of this contemplated city of garden homes beautiful. Already the model farm is being completed with the most scientific and modern poultry houses ever invented. Already sales of small farms are being made, and many new places are under construction. A temporary lecture hall and social center is being constructed, where lectures will be given on poultry raising and other lines of intensive farm work. An elaborate program is being arranged for Saturday, with music and talks by prominent citizens, and an address by myself.

We have a dream of making this city of garden homes beautiful even better than our first two ventures in California. While egg farming will be the principal industry, especially in the more intensive section, around the swimming pool farther out there will be large farms of five, 10, 15 and 20 acres, devoted to both cows and poultry. Also it is the plan to plant pecans very extensively, so that each little farm will be beautiful as well as productive. It is the plan to make each garden home just as beautiful as possible with flowers and shrubbery next to the cottage, with fruit trees and vines trained on all the fences. Grapes, berries and fruit of the choicest varieties, along with the luxuriant vegetable garden will be a part of the work on each little farm.

Already we have thousands of inquiries from many parts of the world, wanting to locate in our new city of garden homes. In our developments in California the prices of land have doubled, tripled and quadrupled. Oft times the home people sit by and watch a development of this kind and let slip a wonderful investment as well as a chance to obtain a beautiful homesite in the choicest part of the community. Right now is the time for the citizens of Wichita Falls, who are country-minded, to secure a location that will not only give them the finest residence site in all the country, but a profitable business as well.

This city of garden homes beautiful will not be only for those who desire to make an abundant living, but will appeal also to the people of wealth, who would like to have the most interesting place in all the world to live, surrounded by the beautiful trained trees and vines, and be able to keep enough poultry or cows, under the charge of educated and competent men, so that the country estate can be made to be a paying investment as well as the most luxuriant environment possible.

The tremendous growth of trees, vines, flowers, and vegetables will be made because of the abundance of fertilizer produced from the livestock kept on these little farms. We prophesy that many wealthy citizens will find this new way of living on the land more interesting than anything they could do with their money.

These garden homes will also appeal to the wage earner in the city, who would like to have his family in the garden out under the blue sky and in the fresh air, where they could earn a living and thus be able to save the wages earned in the city. A few hundred hens on a little farm, with the help of a family, will be a great help to the salaried man, who can keep his position and under our intensive methods, care for a large flock of egg producers.

To the man who has capital enough to develop a five, 10 or 20 acre farm, with both cows and poultry, our methods here will bring more profit than is possible on the large, dry farms.

So this is our vision of the city of garden homes beautiful for Wichita valley. "Where there is no vision, the nations perish."

Adequate Market as Essential to Poultry Success as Production

Barnes Stresses Need of Cultivating Steady Demand for Output of Farm Colony Produce

By O. K. BARNES
Chamber of Commerce Farm Expert

The success of the poultry industry depends on two fundamental porceases—production and marketing . One hundred per cent production is of no avail if a profitable market cannot be secured. The most successful marketing organization cannot function long unless it has something to sell. The first thing to do, therefore, is to provide the something to sell. The production of poultry products in any volume requires a number of conditions—climatic, and proper housing, feeding and management. If all these conditions are properly met, success will attend the efforts.

Texas is fortunate in having conditions that are very favorable to the poultry industry. It has a mild winter climate with few storms. A good part of the state is dry and there is not an excessive amount of moisture at any place. The seasons are long, furnishing time enough to grow an enormous amount of feed on the minimum acreage. It has a large city population that furnishes splendid home markets and is not far from the eastern markets for its surplus product. The seasons are such that it does not require expensive houses and the growing of green feeds through the winter months is not a difficult matter. The price of land is much lower than it is in many of the poultry districts and taking all these into consideration, it is possible to produce eggs in Texas at a less cost than in most other states. As a natural result the state that can produce eggs at the lowest cost, will eventually produce the most of them

Two Greatest Undertakings

That Wichita Falls has all the advantages that Texas has, is evidenced by the location here of two of the greatest undertakings in the poultry line that have ever been attempted. M. Johnson has laid the foundation for the largest poultry ranch under one management and when the plans of Charles Weeks have been carried through to a successful termination, the largest poultry community in the South will be a fact.

The production of poultry and eggs, however, is only one of the details to a successful business. The marketing of the products is an important part of the whole process. Without adequate marketing facilities the price is bound to be low. At the present time Wichita Falls has one of the best market outlets in the state. Two produce houses handle the production for a large scope of territory. Trucks bring in poultry and eggs from a radius of 100 miles or more and live poultry is shipped in by the carload from the Plains and the Panhandle.

The Wichita Poultry and Egg company has a very modern plant for handling all kinds of poultry products. For the month of January they have handled more than 20 carloads in and out. They have a feeding plant with a capacity of from 12,000 to 15,000 head and this is filled practically all the time. The fowls are fed in batteries containing from 90 to 120 head. These are fed a scientifically balanced ration for quick fattening. Semi-solid buttermilk is used extensively in the ration. In fact, they buy buttermilk by the carload. This gives a quality of meat that is very much in demand. Milk-fed chickens always command a higher price than those fattened on dry feeds. The batteries are 14 stories high and have troughs on the outside for the feed and the chickens are supplied with all they will consume. They fatten very rapidly and in a surprisingly short time they are ready for the killing room.

Further Processes

This is one of the busy departments. It is no figure of speech to say that in this room "the feathers fly." From 20 to 30 men, women, boys and girls are engaged in the picking room, and so expert do they become that the feathers seem to come off almost in one handful. An average day's work in this room is about 3,500 fowls dressed and ready for market. Two men are required in the killing room to keep the flow of birds into the picking department.

From this room the dressed fowls go into the storage rooms, where the bodies are thoroughly chilled, but not frozen, and they are then graded carefully by weights and sizes, packed in boxes and barrels and shipped in refrigerator cars to the eastern markets. The demand for these milk-fed chickens is always greater than the supply and there would be no difficulty at all in profitably marketing twice as much as we can supply in this territory at this time.

The storage department has various rooms in which the temperatures vary from 40 degrees to 15 degrees below zero. Where any of the fowls may be kept in storage they go into one of the cold rooms and are frozen and held until such time as they are wanted.

The handling of eggs forms an important department in this plant. During the egg season last fall this company shipped out as high as 20 cars of eggs in a month. They come into Wichita Falls from all over West and North Texas by truck, cars, wagons and trains. As a result of this successful handling of the egg business, the prices were maintained above the usual summer level and brought in hundreds of additional dollars to the egg producers in this section. There were only one or two days when this company paid less than 25 cents per dozen.

The eggs were candled and graded by experts and the upper grades went to market or into storage. The lower grades were broken and frozen and held in storage and sold as the demand called for that class of eggs. Practically all the lower grades of eggs now are shipped to breaking plants and are sold to bakeries, hotels and restaurants. The egg content is just as good as the upper grades but they consist of the cracked, checked, small and odd shapes that cannot pass the test. Breaking and freezing them makes a very convenient way to handle this class.

Depends on Market

The advantage of a market like this is of inestimable advantage to this section. The building up of the poultry industry in Texas depends on the kind of a market that can be provided for the products of the farms. It seems that the major industry is going to be the production of eggs, but there is a splendid opening for some one to engage in the keeping of the heavier breeds. The demand for the meat chicken is stronger now than it has been for several years and since the introduction of the system of milk feeding the demand has been growing steadily and undoubtedly will continue to grow.

With the development of the intensive little farms for egg production there will be an organization for the marketing of all the products carried along as a community enterprise. But for those who do not care to take advantage of that market, there will always be a profitable outlet for their surplus. The local demand for fryers and broilers is getting to be a thing to be taken into account. The supplying of this demand has been a profitable business for a number of poultrymen during the past year.

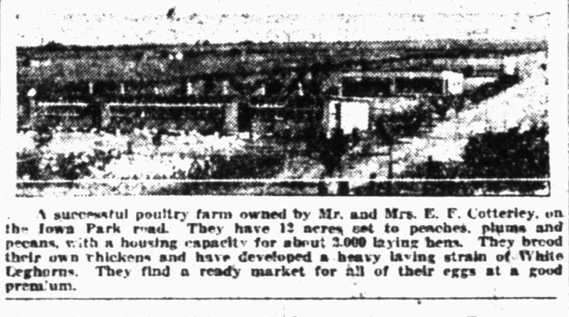

The fact that the growing of chickens is a business that does not permit of half-way measures is the thing that is going to prevent it from ever getting very badly overcrowded. Eternal vigilance is the price of success with chickens and one who is not willing to give them that necessary attention, will not stay in the business very long. To the one that will study the problems that are bound to come up, that will go in with the determination to make it pay, that will early learn the lesson that it is cheaper to prevent disease than to cure it, the chicken business offers a good, safe, assured income throughout the year. It is not hard work, but it is work that requires the closest attention to details. If one is willing to give this close attention, there is no need to fear the outcome if you want to enter this most profitable business.

De Lone Wolf, Kiowa leader of Mountain Park and a party of Comanches and Kiowas held a conference Monday with Indian bureau officials at Washington, who were prevailed upon to grant the distribution of funds.

This distribution means a payment of $50 per capita to members of the two tribes in this section of the state.

PAVING LAID IN WEST TEXAS

Much Road Construction Under Way

STAMFORD, Texas, Jan. 30.—While West Texas is not so muddy even when it rains, the policy of "getting West Texas out of the mud" in reference to paving is occupying the attention of many of the towns in the section.

Fourteen blocks of paving will be laid early this year in Plainview. Six blocks of brick paving will be laid on West Eleventh, extending it from Kokomo to Quincy street. Beach street from Second to Seventh street will be paved, as will Ash to Beach on Seventh, and Seventh to Eighth on Galveston, and on Houston to Eighth. This will provide Plainview with two paved streets through the residence section to the west end.

Road Work Begun

Actual work has started on the graveling of the road from Merkel to Noodle Dome, which will begin at Homer Patterson's pit and extend to the county line, approximately four miles. Ten days will complete the work. This road will lead in the direction of oil fields, while another stretch of paving between Merkel and Abilene in the vicinity of Tye is ready to be opened for travel. The Tye road leaves only one gap of about 6½ miles between Merkel and Abilene unpaved, and plans are being made to get this paved.

Three main business streets are likely to be paved in Turkey in the near future. They would service the Fort Worth and Denver City railroad depot, the hotel and the main business district of six or seven blocks.

MOTHERS! AVOID TOO MUCH DOSING FOR INFLUENZA
It May Upset Digestion and Thus Still Further Lower The Body-Resistance.
According to health authorities, a peculiarity of influenza is that its toxins upset the digestive system, especially in the case of children. Too much "dosing" still further disturbs the digestion, and should be avoided except on advice of a physician.
Vicks VapoRub is especially valuable because it is applied externally and so can be used freely with no risk of upsetting the digestion, nor can it interfere with any other treatment your doctor may prescribe.
Physicians advise that the chief danger in this epidemic is after influenza. Then, more than ever, colds attacking the weakened system, may lead to bronchitis, sinus trouble or pneumonia. Heed even the slightest cold as a danger-signal and treat it promptly—without "dosing." Just rub Vicks on throat and chest at bedtime.—Adv.

DAIRY BUSINESS IN ITS 'YOUTH'

Barnes Says Greatest Expansion Yet to Be Done

By O. K. BARNES

Viewed in the light of its potential possibilities, dairying in the Wichita valley, as well as the entire Red river district of Texas and Oklahoma, is in its infancy. Not enough has been done to even outline the tremendous industry that can be built up when this section has utilized the many natural advantages that it enjoys. That this section, and other parts of the South, will ultimately become the great producing center for manufactured milk products, is an assured fact. It is not an idle assertion that milk can be produced cheaper in Texas than it can in Wisconsin. It is conceded that at this time milk is being produced cheaper there than it is here, but the only reason for it is that in Wisconsin dairying is a serious business. It has been developed through many years of careful, conscientious study and work. Dairy herd improvement has been the dominant idea in the minds of the dairymen. The use of purebred sires has become universal. But the mere fact that an animal has been admitted to registry means nothing if there is not a record of production behind such an animal. The ultimate value of a cow is measured by the number of pounds of butterfat that she can produce in a year's time. The value of a sire lies in his ability to increase the production of the dams in the daughters.

It is in this respect that Texas is not grasping the opportunity that lies within her reach. There is too little a desire on the part of the mass of the farmers and dairymen to improve their herds. Production of milk is yet considered a sideline or as a means of providing milk for the family and in some instances for a few pigs and chickens. The profits that may come from commercial production of milk is not seen. And greater than that is the profit that will come to the farmer from the increased fertility of the soil, with its consequent larger yields of crops, that is possible from the use of dairy cows and other livestock.

Price of Success

Before dairying ever becomes very profitable in this section, however, there are a few fundamental things that must be done. The price of success in this line is careful breeding, close culling and proper feeding. The average production of dairy cows in Texas does not pay the feed cost. While this is true, yet it is undoubtedly a fact that by the right kind of feeding, the production of the average cow could be considerably increased. A cow can only give milk according to the amount and quality of feed that she receives. But even then, the average cow is not capable of giving a paying quantity of milk irrespective of feed. The ability of a cow to give milk must come through breeding. With this plan must go the close culling that will eliminate the low producer as soon as she is found out, and then the feeding that will enable the cow to do the best that she can.

During the past year there has been a considerable interest taken in the upbuilding of the dairy herds in this section. More interest has been shown in the breeding up of the herds. Many purebred sires have been added and many farmers are studying the production of milk as a commercial possibility. Poor cows are being culled out and better ones added. Feeding methods are being studied and there is a general awakening of interest in better dairy methods.

Many new herds have been assembled in the Wichita area. The first, and probably the most outstanding in point of breeding, was the herd of Holsteins brought in by Blair and Kemp and placed on their ranch near Kemp City. This consisted of about 50 head of purebred animals that had been developed by John T. Orr at Dallas and was rated as one of the finest herds in the South. It has many splendid individuals and when placed on official test practically all of them will receive the A. R. O. rating.

Others Outstanding

Another outstanding herd is that of Jasper B. Ferguson. This was one of the leading Jersey herds in Wise county. It has been in the cow testing association and the herd showed an average production of over 3000 pounds of butterfat per year. The herd sire is one that is capable of increasing the production of this herd in his offspring.

Jack H. Martin has begun the building up of a herd of purebred Jerseys, using as the foundation stock eight head of cows from the Lasater herd. He has a modern dairy plant and has the idea of building up a breeding farm that will supply the valley with purebred stock of the highest quality.

W. F. Palmer is assembling a herd of purebred and grade Jerseys. He started out with a rather unique plan. In addition to requiring that each cow he purchased must give a profitable quantity of milk, he used the Babcock test and only those cows whose milk tested five per cent or better were chosen. He purchased several cows from the Bullington herd as the foundation stock for his purebred herd. His herd sire is one of the best of the young bulls developed by Mr. Bullington.

Hobart Hall of Iowa Park purchased a carload of young heifers in the fall of 1927 and is now going into the production of milk as one of the main projects of his farming. He was one of the large cotton farmers in that community, but is not depending entirely on that as an income.

W. G. Shipman, also of Iowa Park, is one of the new dairymen. He had faith in the business and a determination to make it succeed. He went to Archer county and topped two of the good herds in the Windthorst and Scotland communities, getting 17 cows, grades and purebreds. He is succeeding and at this time has about 25 cows in production.

T. W. Williams, who lost everything he had in the cyclone on the Henrietta road last summer, selected the dairy cow to help him in his "comeback" and has a fine herd of grade Jerseys. He is doing well with them and has just completed a modern dairy barn.

Mr. and Mrs. W. B. O'Neal bought a part of the Tyson farm, northeast of town, and have started to build up a dairy herd. They have also erected a modern dairy barn and are equipped for furnishing grade A milk.

New Equipment

There are many of the farmers and dairymen who have been increasing their herds. There have been a number who have sold out their herds, but there has always been a good demand for the stock and, in many cases, in a short time these same men begin to reassemble a new and better herd.

Another evidence of the increased interest in the dairy business is seen by the number of new buildings that have been erected and the remodeling of old ones to meet the requirements of an up-to-date dairy. In nearly all of them the plans used for the structures have been secured through the office of Dr. Farrell. This plan was drawn by Dr. Ragan, city milk inspector, and the plan has been approved by both the state dairy department and the department at Washington.

K. M. Thaxton and W. R. Hammond, who have dairies on the Henrietta road are each building dairy barns of this approved type. J. M. Isbell is building a barn on his farm across the river on Tenth street and is assembling a herd of Jerseys. O. S. Richardson and C. J. Minnich of Burkburnett are both improving their dairy housing plants, making them better prepared to serve their patrons. Down in the Windthorst and Scotland communities there are a number of new barns going up and others are remodeling present structures with the idea of increasing their capacity and efficiency.

The dairymen and farmers are realizing more than ever that the success of the business depends more on the production of the individual cows than on the total number that they may be milking. Better breeding, better housing and better feeding is the key to success here.

Wichita Carpenter Was Just About All In, He States

Was Going Down Hill Fast When He Began Taking Orgatone—Feels Fine Now

"This Orgatone is a real medicine, there is no getting around that fact, and I am more than glad to recommend it for the good it has done me," said W. T. Jackson, a well-known carpenter, who lives on rural route No. 4, Wichita Falls, Texas, while in Allison's Drug Store, the other day.

"My trouble began about three years ago," continued Mr. Jackson, "and I had gone down hill so fast that I was just about all-in when I commenced taking Orgatone. I had lost so much in weight and strength that it was a drag for me to keep up my work. I suffered from stomach trouble and indigestion as well as frequent attacks of asthma. I was not able to get a good night's sleep, and was so nervous that often times I would wake up in the middle of the night and was unable to close my eyes before morning. I could just feel my strength and energy gradually leaving me day by day, and I was not able to find a medicine or treatment that would check this condition and start me up-hill again.

"The local papers were having so much to say about the good Orgatone was doing so many people, so I thought that if it had helped others so much, it ought to do me some good, and I commenced taking it. Well, Sir, before I had finished the first bottle of Orgatone I could see that it was doing the work for me. In a short time my appetite came back, and I noticed that what I ate didn't hurt me near as bad as it did before. I just kept on taking Orgatone until I am now enjoying better general health than I have in years. I have gained in strength and energy and feel like a different person. I have gotten a number of my friends to take Orgatone, and every one of them are highly pleased with the results. I will always be glad to say a good word for Orgatone, for it is the best medicine I have ever tried."

Genuine Orgatone is not a so-called secret or patent remedy but a new scientific treatment containing no alcohol or other false stimulating drugs and is sold in Wichita Falls, exclusively by the Allison's Drug Store, 716 Indiana avenue, under the personal direction of a special Orgatone representative. Out-of-town customers are being supplied promptly by mail upon receipt of price, one bottle $1.25 or six bottles $5.25.—Adv.

Future Wichitan Praises Climate In This Section

A letter praising the climatic conditions in Wichita Falls with regard to their adaptability to the Charles Weeks development project has been received by Mr. Weeks from W. B. Caston of San Fernando, Calif., who formerly lived in Wichita Falls.

The letter follows:

San Fernando, Calif.,
Sylmar Ranch, Rt. A.
Jan. 20, 1929.

Mr. Chas. Weeks,
Wichita Falls, Texas

Kind Sir—I received your letter a few days ago. I was glad to get the news that you were at Wichita, starting a poultry farm. I know you will make a success of it, for it is as you stated, you have everything there that we need for that kind of business, and you are surely the right man in the right place.

Your climate is good enough for that business, that is, I mean it is not too cold, or it is not too warm. It can hardly be any better.

You have also a crew of the best men that I ever saw to stand by and help you make a success at that business. A man can always get encouragement at Wichita, when he wants to do anything.

Wichita is my old home. I lived there six years, and I wish it were possible that I could come right back there and go to farming again, as I once did. But I can't come this spring.

I have been on your ranch near Owensmouth, and I found it to be a dandy, a perfect success. The people of Wichita can't conceive the idea of your work out here, even when you tell them. I know how I was when I was there. I never have believed the poultry business could be carried on in such a nice manner as you have out here. You can do the same thing there.

Sometime you write, when you have time, and tell me how much land you care to sell a man. How much do you put in a farm in that country?

Yours respectfully,
W. B. CASTON.

DAMAGE SUIT GOES TO TRIAL

Toy Autos Used to Explain Triple Accident

Testimony for the plaintiff in the suit of Mrs. Shelby Willis and husband against J. W. Simmons, Leslie Brothers, Inc., and A. B. Brown, for $15,515 damages, was still incomplete when the 89th district court adjourned at 5 o'clock Wednesday afternoon.

Mrs. Willis is asking the damages in connection with a three sided automobile accident which occurred on Seventh street between Ohio and Indiana avenue, in May, 1927. She alleges that her health has been permanently impaired as the result of injuries sustained at the time.

According to the plaintiff's allegations, Mrs. Willis was hurt when her car was struck by a Dodge coupe driven by J. W. Simmons Evidence was offered to show that the collision sent the Willis car out of its course, where it was struck by another car, driven for Leslie Brothers, Inc., and for A. B. Brown.

Incidents in the collision were illustrated in the court Wednesday by toy automobiles, moved about before the jury to show what happened at the time of the accident.

The plaintiff alleges that she suffered a fracture at the base of the skull from which she has not rerovered, that she suffered a disfiguring scar on one cheek and sustained other permanent injuries.

FOUR PRETTY CO-EDS ELOPE

Police Hunt for Miami College Students

MIAMI, Fla., Jan. 30.—(UP)—Four pretty co-eds, students at the University of Miami, and members of prominent Florida families, today were being sought by police following a mysterious quadruple elopement Monday. The girls disappeared and it was at first thought they had been kidnaped. Today they notified their parents that they had been married near Ocala, Fla.

They are Jane Bostwick, 18, daughter of William Bostwick, prominent Miami builder; Miss Agnes McCully, niece of one of Coral Gables' foremost surgeons; Jane Wood, 19, whose father is an outstanding business man in the same city, and a fourth girl whose name is withheld.

Miss Wood telegraphed her mother that she would remain in Ocala while "the three other kids" continued towards New Orleans. Police have been notified as far north as Atlanta to be on the lookout for the runaways.

One of the most mystifying features of the affair is the identity of the lucky men. Mrs. E. C. Nichols, aunt of Miss McCully, declared that the various families have checked up the entire list of probable husbands and have accounted for every one. No one was able to shed any light on the mystery.

According to relatives, the girls left for class Monday morning with no extra clothing. When they failed to return home Monday night police were notified.

MIAMI, Texas, Jan. 30 (AP)—Probably the oldest church bell in the Texas Panhandle, property of the First Methodist church in Miami and formerly owned by the Mobeetie Methodist church, has been rehung in the church here after being silent 10 years.

The bell was brought from Dodge City, Kan., to Mobeetie in 1888 and placed in the church there. In 1900 the church was destroyed by a tornado which wrecked most of the little town. Later the bell was sold to the Miami church and occupied its position in the bell tower of the old building until torn down to make room for the present modern structure. For some reason it was not decided to rehang the bell until recently.

Life May Be Revived After Death By Startling Russian Invention

Scientists After Four Years' Experimenting Create Artificial Heart Which Sustains Dog's Severed Head

Editor's Note: Following is the first of two articles describing experiments of Russian scientists, who are trying to find out how to continue or restore life in an apparently dead body. The experiments have been conducted with an apparatus designed to perform the heart functions and thereby continue life while an operation can be performed on the heart. First news of the experiments, published several weeks ago, aroused such interest that Eugene Lyons, United Press correspondent at Moscow, made an exhaustive investigation of them. correspondent at Moscow, made an exhaustive investigation of them.

By EUGENE LYONS
United Press Staff Correspondent

MOSCOW, Jan. 30.—Sober and intensive study of soviet scientists of the fascinating, yet terrifying, problem of life and death at last is producing results at the Moscow Scientific Chemico-Pharmaceutical institute.

The history of physiology is replete with experiments in attempts to revive dead animals and persons.

Today in Moscow, probably the most remarkable experiments of this nature are being carried out by earnest young physicians who are modest in regard to their achievements and who permitted press reports only after their work was completely recorded.

Four Years' Work

The experiments have been conducted for the last four years. The commissariat of health, impressed by the results, has just made a generous appropriation to the institute for continuing the work.

Dr. S. S. Brukhanenko and Dr. S. I. Chechulin are in charge of the experiments. They have succeeded in creating an "artificial heart" which has kept the detached head of a dog "alive," in so far as action and sensitiveness are concerned, for as long as three and one-half hours. The experiment has been performed before noted scientists.

The potentialities of an artificial heart in the sphere of practical surgery are unlimited, the scientists believe. It was pointed out that if an apparatus can be perfected which would keep a patient alive for even a few minutes by means of mechanical blood circulation, an operation could be performed to make necessary surgical repairs on the heart.

May Revive Life

Dr. Brukhanenko said that the experiments have shown that the body of an animal lives for at least three minutes after the heart stops beating. If the blood can be kept from congealing by chemical methods, he continued, there is the possibility that the animal may be revived. This is the theoretical basis of the experiments.

The process of death, according to the experiments, is active rather than passive; that is, it is a continuous process in which different cells and tissues cling to life longer than others. In testing this active process, the scientists point out that the fact that a dog's head has been kept in a state of life after severing it from the body, proves that the brain retained life after the body was "dead" and only needed to be fed blood and air again to "awake."

Only Beginning

This experiment, however, is considered as only the small beginning of the work, which aims to reveal the laws of death.

Dr. Brukhanenko conducted The United Press correspondent to the laboratory and demonstrated the apparatus. The artificial heart is a prosaic looking affair of glass, rubber and metal, attached to a dynamo. Its very simplicity is impressive to the layman.

Dr. Brukhanenko poured water into the central glass reservoir and turned on the current. Soon the heart was visible "beating" and the water was pumped into one set of glass "arteries," passed through a "breathing apparatus" where it absorbed oxygen and completed the circuit, being pumped back into the reservoir through another set of of "arteries." The entire action is automatic.

Of course, in the actual experiments real blood is used instead of water and the two sets of "arteries" are joined to corresponding real arteries in the severed neck of the dog.

Stewart Knocks Boasts Of Oil Victory

CHICAGO, Jan. 30 (INS)—The agents of John D. Rockefeller, Jr. are not winning as many followers in the "battle of proxies" for the Rockefeller interests as they expected, a statement issued here today from the office of Col. Robert W. Stewart, chairman of the board of directors, seeking reelection, stated.

The statement was issued in reply to the announcement from New York that Charles Evans Hughes had been retained by Rockefeller as general counsel for his interests in the fight to oust Stewart as chairman.

"T. M. Debevoise has acquired the habit of issuing daily claims of victory," the statement read. "The activity of Rockefeller agents throughout the country, including the retention of additional counsel, belie these claims."

This little home is well constructed and whoever the owner of this cottage shall be, he will have reason to be glad that it was built with more than a mere order for "BOARDS, BRICKS and NAILS"

Every part of a building and all of the details of its planning are so dependent on the correctness of every other detail that well balanced consideration should be exercised by an expert in each part of the work.

It is realization of this importance that induces the builders of Wichita Falls to have us "sit-in" on the planning of their buildings—large or small. We are well qualified to render expert advice in the selection of materials; in judgment of quality; in cutting costs and in insuring the minimum of depreciation.

SPORTS ARENA GREATER THAN NEW YORK GARDEN IS PLANNED

DEMPSEY MAY BE ASSOCIATE

Humbert Fugazy to Be Backed by Millionaires

By FRANK GETTY

NEW YORK, Jan. 30. (UP)—In nine days—on Feb. 8, to be exact—the realms of sport and finance are to be startled by an announcement which will make all previous blasts of fistic ballyhoo seem like the hushed whispers in the reading room of the public library.

At least if the above-mentioned realms are not startled and shaken, the fault will be theirs. Young Mr. Edwin Cole of the New York Coles, who sat upon the floor in Humbert J. Fugazy's Broadway office today, spinning air castles and mammoth sports arenas out of such stuff as dreams are made on, promises it. And young Mr. Cole—"Call me Ed, boys"—admits he has not made a mistake in eight years.

On that date set, Cole, a personable young promiser if ever there was one, promises to announce the names of six millionaires whose fortunes, applied to the erection of a monster fight auditorium in the heart of this city, will make the late Tex Rickard's 600 millionaires take to tin cups and lead pencils for a livelihood by comparison.

Dempsey in Project

Moreover, on the day following the Sharkey-Stribling fight, Cole proposes to be standing on Jack Dempsey's doorstep down in Miami Beach with a certified check a foot and a half long, containing more figures than a Zeigfeld chorus.

Dempsey, according to Cole, who is associating himself with Fugazy in the project, has promised these ambitious rivals of the Madison Square garden an audience before he lends one of his slightly cauliflowered ears to any other propositions.

"The size of the check will make Dempsey's eyes blink worse than Gene Tunney did," admitted Cole, refusing to deny that it would be for $500,000.

Record Sum for Jack

"We will offer Jack a record sum to fight either Paulino or Godfrey. But to get back to our arena . . . ."

The names of the six millionaires who are to put the 600 of Madison Square garden in the shade of comparative penury will rock and stagger the world of finance, Cole confessed.

The papers have not yet been signed, Cole said, but what's a mere signature when six millionaires get together to back a project of this kind for the ennobelment of fisticuffs and kindred sporting activities?

Maybe Yes, Maybe No

When the names of these philanthropic sportsmen—Cole intimated he would sink "a million of my own" in the new arena—are announced in nine days, the "to let" sign may be expected to go up on Madison Square garden any moment.

The new arena will be erected upon a site recently purchased—or at least considered—by Fugazy, Cole said, or it may be built a stone's throw from the present garden on the land now occupied by the old car barns, or possibly where the Woolworth building now stands.

"Moreover," said Cole, "you don't need to print a line of this in the newspapers, if you don't want to."

Sharkey and Stribling Are Well Matched

Whether either Jack Sharkey or Young Stribling is a worthy contender for the world's heavyweight crown probably will be shown when they meet at Miami Beach, February 27.

By JAY R. VESSELS

NEW YORK, Jan. 30. (AP)—There's one biggest day in the life of every man in every business or trade Even boxers have them.

February 27 probably will be the biggest day for William Lawrence Stribling. On that day at Miami Beach he fights Jack Sharkey for what may amount to first claim on the heavyweight championship of the world.

Sharkey has already had his biggest day. And he muffed it. His day was July 21, 1927. But he permitted Jack Dempsey to trick him into ignominious defeat.

Neither Stribling nor Sharkey was classed better than second raters as long as Gene Tunney and Jack Dempsey were in the game. Tunney's second defeat of Jack and his subsequent retirement left the field open, whereupon both Strib and Jack got busy.

Strib, who had been shuffling along with indifferent success, concentrated on a punch. He was successful, if 36 knockouts in his last 42 fights mean anything. Sharkey financially independent because of his heavy earnings in 1927, made a less pretentious start, but he rapped over the few opponents selected for his warmup bouts and is the choice of many a critic to make good in his second try for a shot at the title.

There isn't much difference in the men, as shown by scales and tape measure. Strib is taller than the six-foot Gob by three-quarters of an inch and has a superior reach by two and one-half inches, but Sharkey evens it up with his weight advantage of seven pounds. Stribling is 24 and Sharkey 26 years of age.

Both men profess to know something about the scientific end of boxing. Perhaps that is why both had so many unsatisfactory fights in the eyes of the fans a year or two back.

Strib's reputation as a wrestler was increasing with each engagement until he decided to literally punch his way into the picture. Sharkey's reputation was none too favorable because of the tolerant attitude he frequently took toward third and fourth-class opponents.

The victor probably will be matched with the winner of an early-summer bout between Tom Heeney and Paulino Uzcudum, for a September fight with the heavyweight crown as the prize.

CYCLONE HALL STOPS CULLEN

Scott Boxes Smart Fight To Whip Murdock

Cyclone Hall scored another knockout victory last night. The Childress middleweight was victor by a technical k. o. over Gene Cullen when the Austin scrapper failed to come out of his corner for the fifth round. Cullen had taken quite a shellacking in the fourth round, going down for three counts, of two, nine and five, with the bell intervening at the last knockdown.

Prior to the fourth round it was about an even duel. Cullen, conceding his foe a weight advantage, tossed a right cross that connected several times on the Cyclone's chin in the fourth round. Hall came back boring in and it was a slashing round.

Cullen Claims Foul

Cullen claimed a foul when he was sent to the canvas for the first knockdown in the fourth, but it was a solid smack to the midriff, a majority of ringsiders believed. Hall weighed 153; Cullen scaled in at 146.

Howard Scott, the fine-looking kid prospect from Electra, scored another vitcory of Kid Murdock of Sulphur, Okla., in the eight-round semi-windup. Scott forced the milling all the way and led throughout the bout. The cagey, veteran Murdock stayed within his shell most of the war and the canny Scott wisely forebore taking a chance of running into a haymaker. Howard had Murdock holding on in the last two rounds with some ripping clouts to the face.

Interesting Prelims

Kid Garland of Burkburnett was forced to quit in the third round for "lack of wind" in a bout that promised much attention with Henry Adams of Wichita Falls, his opponent. Jimmy Wilson of Oklahoma City and Virgil Oden of our burg fought four slashing rounds. Wilson landed frequently to the face but Oden showed skill at close-range. Lem Lewis and Ode Skeen engaged in a wild-slugging four-round affair.

A capacity crowd packed the gym at 821 Indiana avenue to see another excellent fistic show staged by Entrepreneur Alex Ross.

Baer Facts

By ARTHUR "BUGS" BAER

NEW YORK, Jan. 30.—Wilhelm the Twice of Holland celebrated his seventieth birthday amid his friends and relatives.

The fifth horseman is riding a bicycle now. The years have unwaxed his temperament and his mustache.

He has also grown a beard. Which is a sign of intelligence.

The next time he sticks out his chin he will have a mattress on it.

He attributes his present good health to the fact that he has not been defeated lately.

He wore a field marshal's uniform on his seventieth birthday. He ain't fooling anybody but his tailor.

A field marshal's uniform is quite a demotion for a man who used to wear an admiral's costume for pajamas.

There is nothing militant about Wilhelm these hot and cold days. Even his field marshal's uniform is outranked by one of Roxey's ushers.

He still retains the titles of all highest, majesty, kaiser and king. He thinks he is a quartet.

But he hasn't lost his humor. He is not sore at America nor does he continue to regard treaties as picnic plates.

He is bitter against France.

Why shouldn't he be?

France stopped the finest parade that Wilhelm ever started.

It was a beautiful procession until it reached the given point. Then Wilhelm sat on the point.

Wilhelm wants history to know that he was not responsible for trouble in Europe.

He says he didn't start the war.

This gives him a clean bill of health.

He didn't finish it either.

HERMAN'S K. O. OF SID PROBED

Commish Wants to Know What It's All About

NEW YORK, Jan. 30. (UP)—The New York Athletic commission today ordered an investigation of the Sid Terris-Babe Herman lightweight bout at St. Nicholas arena Monday night. Terris dropped Herman for a count of nine in the fifth round. In the next round Herman knocked Terris out with one punch.

Pending the investigation, the purse of Terris is being held up. The reports of Referee Mike Hylas and the judges will be heard by the commission.

Terris entered the ring a 6 to 1 favorite in the betting and two years ago scored a knockout over Herman in a bout at Cleveland.

1929 PENNANTS TO NEW YORK

At Least, Secretaries Pick Yanks, Giants to Cop

By GEORGE KIRKSEY
United Press Staff Correspondent

NEW YORK, Jan. 30. (UP)—It's the season when baseball men have just got to do a lot of talking.

With Miller Huggins wintering at St. Petersburg, Fla., and John J. McGraw basking in the sunshine at Havana, Ed Barrow, secretary and general manager of the New York Yankees, and Jim Tierney, secretary of the New York Giants, have put in their claims for the two major league pennants.

If for no other reason than to get away from the subject of holdouts, Secretary Tierney today predicted the Giants, Cubs and Pirates would fight it out for the National league pennant.

Secretary Barrow went Tierney one better and forecast the fourth straight American league flag for the Yankees.

Barrow's Deduction

"With Pennock, Lazzeri and Moore back in shape," Barrow said, "they'll make the Yankees stronger than last year. Lyn Lary will make good at short and improve the infield, with Koenig shifting to third. Ed Wells, the southpaw from Birmingham, and Gordon Rhodes, the young right-hander from Hollywood, will strengthen the pitching staff."

Barrow predicts the American league clubs will finish as follows:

1—New York.
2—Philadelphia.
3—Washington.
4—Detroit.
5—St. Louis.
6—Cleveland.
7—Chicago.
8—Boston.

Tierney sees the Giants beating the Cubs and Pirates out in a close race if John McGraw is able to keep actively at the helm of the club all season.

"I can't see who will stop us if McGraw isn't forced to let somebody run things," Tierney said. "We would have won last year if he hadn't been forced away from the team when he injured his leg in Chicago."

How Giants Figure

The Giants are counting on Tony Kaufmann, the reformed pitcher, and Fred Leach, acquired in a trade from the Phillies for Lefty O'Doul, to strengthen the outfield. The infield is airtight except at second base, where Andy Cohen and Andy Reese, under the coaching of Bert Niehoff, will battle for the berth.

The catching staff is all right with Hogan and O'Farrell, and perhaps occasional assistance from Ray Schalk, signed as McGraw's first assistant. The pitching staff of Benton, Genewich, Fitzsimmons, Hubbell, with possible aid from Carl Mays, trying a comeback; Bill Walker, Harry Kelly, a rookie from Memphis; Tiny Chaplin, Dutch Henry and Warren Ogden, is considered capable.

With the receipt of Warren Ogden's signed contract today, only seven Giants remain unsigned. They are Welsh, Leach, Lindstrom, Terry, O'Farrell, Cummings and Buckeye.

The Cardinals will have a hard time finishing in fourth place, according to Tierney, who predicts all kinds of trouble for the National league champions.

"The Cardinal pitching staff doesn't look good to me," he said. "Alexander is almost through. Southworth will have a tough time breaking in Selph and Gelbert, two youngsters, around second."

2 Games Tonight In Basket League

Two games are scheduled tonight in the Commercial Basket Ball league on the Junior college floor. The undefeated league leading Texas Electrics will meet the Junior college Indians in the opener and the Hub Clothiers, occupants of second place, take on Featherston-Hawkins-Vague in the final.

The Indian and F-H-V fives are tied for the cellar.

Rickard and Kearns Met at Bar And Arranged Dempsey-Willard Go

Manager "Sold" Fight to Toledo and Got $27,500 for Jack's End, After Holding Out for $50,000

By JACK LAWRENCE

(Copyright, 1929, by the New York American, Inc., and Universal Service, Inc.)

NEW YORK, Jan. 30.—When Tex Rickard and Jack Kearns were introduced to each other in the bar of the old Manhattan hotel on Forty-Second street, their friendship began in almost the same way that it ended nearly 10 years later—in a battle.

They were introduced by John J. McGraw.

Kearns, manager of Jack Dempsey, an obscure heavyweight, wandered into the Manhattan bar that night very "short in the reach," to use his own expression. To use another one of his pet phrases, he was looking for someone on whom he could "put the arm." He had the price of a beer or two and this would give him several round trips with stopover privileges to the best free lunch counter in New York. But he had no idea where tomorrow's beers were coming from.

Kearns, dapper, cool, colorful and broke, wedged his way to the bar and was just about to call for a pilsner when he found himself standing next to John McGraw.

"Make that a Martini," said Kearns.

McGraw picked up the check.

"John," said Kearns, "I wonder if I could put the lug on you for a sawbuck. I'll give you a slow note for it."

John Loaned Jack $20

McGraw, usually a push-over for a quick touch, took out a roll and peeled off a $20 bill. With a double sawbuck in his pocket Jack Kearns began to feel more at home. He ordered several more Martinis and McGraw continued to pick up the checks.

"Jack," said McGraw, "I want you to meet a friend of mine. You're both in the same racket and I think you ought to know each other. Shake hands with Tex Rickard. I guess you've heard of him."

That moment marked the bringing together of two personalities that were similar in many respects. They were so similar that they clashed and grated on each other for years afterward, but it was a highly productive friendship. Sharp, shrewd, fast thinkers, they eyed each other as John McGraw introduced them. There was a perfunctory hand-shake.

"Sure I know you," said Kearns coldly. "You're the guy that tried to steal Les Darcey away from me. Instead of shaking hands I ought to punch you right on the beezer."

"A punch on the beezer would get you a smack on the whiskers and you've got enough spots on that four-tracked suit already," said Rickard.

"Your own suit looks like it's been through a soup-storm," replied Kearns.

Master Minds of Boxing

That is the way the great collaboration of Rickard and Kearns began nearly 11 years ago and it flourished along those lines for almost a decade. Neither seemed able to outthink the other, but the pair could outthink any combination that ever lived.

With a magnificent gesture Kearns tossed McGraw's $20 bill on the bar, called for another round of drinks and began the business of selling Jack Dempsey to Tex Rickard. At the time Dempsey was living in one of those duck-in-and-duck-out hotels on Forty-fifth street and eating when and where he could. Rickard knew a little about Dempsey but was not at all enthused about matching him with Jess Willard for the world's heavyweight championship.

"Your boy may be a good fighter but he's too small for the heavyweight racket," said Tex. "He looks like a middleweight."

Jack Kearns wasn't so sure about Dempsey himself at that time, but he talked as though Jack was already the champion.

Although Rickard had Willard under contract at that time, having guaranteed the champion $100,000 to meet any challenger he might select, Tex was pessimistic in his talk with Kearns in the Manhattan bar that night.

"Willard wants too much money, there isn't an outstanding opponent and there's no place to hold the fight," he said.

"Give me $50,000 for Dempsey's end and I'll furnish you with a challenger who will punch Jess Willard's ears off and I'll go out and get you a place to hold the fight," Kearns declared.

"Don't give that man any more Martinis," said Rickard, addressing the bartender.

Kearns Hops to Toledo

Kearns was in that sort of a financial predicament where he would have let Jack Dempsey in for a shot at the title for nothing and before the two left the Manhattan bar that night he had Rickard's word that Dempsey was to be the man. They postponed the matter of terms until later.

Kearns borrowed some more money from another passerby and that night was on a train bound for Toledo. When Jack stepped off the train the mayor of that town was driving his car around the corner and holding out his hand to warn those behind him. Jack stepped on the running board, shook the hand vigorously and sold himself to the mayor inside of five minutes. Then he sold him and the Toledo Chamber of Commerce the Willard-Dempsey fight for the heavyweight championship of the world. He had the whole town in the bag before he started back to New York to tell Rickard about it.

"And all I want for Dempsey's end is $50,000," he told the promoter after Tex had agreed to the Toledo idea.

"Been hitting up those Martinis again?" asked Tex.

The two argued for hours over the money Dempsey was to receive.

Kearns would have taken the fight for nothing, but he talked in five figures to Rickard and the latter finally agreed to put the thing up to the newspaper men. The boxing writers conferred among themselves and decided that Dempsey's end ought to be $27,500. That is the sum that Jack Dempsey received for knocking out Jess Willard.

Health And Diet Advice

Pain and Remedies

Most diseases are simply efforts of the body to protect itself against toxic substances or irritating germs. The number of supposedly specific medicines against specific diseases is being decreased as more is being understood about the functions of the human body. The fact is that nature created no specific remedies to combat specific diseases.

Some diseases are caused by a lack of certain elements in the body and, when these elements are supplied, the disease disappears, but these remedies could scarcely be called medicines. They are foods which the body requires.

The use of a remedy to relieve a pain or alleviate serious symptoms for a time is often helpful but it must not be considered a cure. In this hurry up age it is undoubtedly pardonable to relieve physical distress as soon as possible, but great danger lies in the fact that pain is a warning symptom of the body, and removing the pain without removing the original cause of the trouble would be dangerous. It would be just as sensible to do away with fog horns, alarm bells, and whistles from locomotives because the noise is annoying.

How many home remedies are consumed by people who do not know what they are swallowing, and who do not consider the origin of their disease? When a pain appears in the body it is not enough that we discover some trick treatment to make the pain disappear. We should really make a thorough investigation at the same time to try to discover the real cause of the pain which is not usually removed by the remedy which relieves the pain.

If your automobile was broken down, it would of course be permissible for you to use any means of assistance for conveying your automobile to the nearest garage, but after it was there you would probably insist that the mechanic thoroughly fix the broken part. You should do at least as much for your body, which certainly is far more precious than any automobile.

Dr. William Osler, that famous dean of physicians, once aptly stated, "Medicines probably have no effect whatsoever upon the diseases for which they are administered." What do you suppose so eminent an investigator meant by that statement? Simply this: that at best drugs can only relieve symptoms and, if the disease disappears, the remedy given to stop the pain did not contribute in any way in removing the real cause of the pain.

The fact of the matter is that the body can often cure itself if it is given the proper assistance, or even in some cases if it is not too greatly handicapped. Often the patient gets well in spite of the treatment used. But I would like you to give more thought to the cause of the disease than to the effects. When the cause is not banished there will always be a return of either the same symptoms or of others more serious which, to a casual glance, might seem to have no connection with the former trouble.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Lumps in Legs

Question: Mrs. W. asks: "What would you advise for lumps in the right leg—lymphatic gland or nerve caused by a strain? Is it dangerous?"

Answer:—The lumps may come from a strain or be due to some disease of the lymph glands. It would be unwise for me to try to diagnose your case through this column.

Canned Greens

Question: L. F. writes: "I notice you advise greens in your menus, but one living in a small town could not get them often."

Answer: If you have difficulty in getting greens I would advise you to put in a supply of good canned greens such as spinach, string beans, asparagus, etc. Then you will always have some on hand when the fresh greens are not available.

Mono Diet

Question: O. D. asks: "Would it be wise to eat only one kind of food at a meal?"

Answer: All of our study about food combinations would be unnecessary if we could be satisfied to live on a mono diet. Under this plan one would eat only one kind of food at a time and as much as desired. The times for meals would be irregular, depending entirely upon the return of hunger. This is the way most of the wild animals eat, and it seems to be the natural way, but does not fit in with our hurry-up age when all of our hours must be regulated. Under our present plan of living it seems almost necessary to plan for having meals at certain times, and those who try the mono diet plan soon return to using a mixed diet. Centuries of habits are hard to overcome quickly, and a reformer is liable to lose all of his friends if he changes to too radical a mode of living.

DESERVES DEGREE

TUCKERTON, N. J.—Vera Rider recently performed a successful operation on her husband Paul, 35. She removed a needle from his skull that had been imbedded there since childhood. For the past two years Rider had complained of dull pains in his head. His wife, examining his head, found the needle protruding far enough so that she was able to grip it with her fingers and draw it out. It was two inches long.

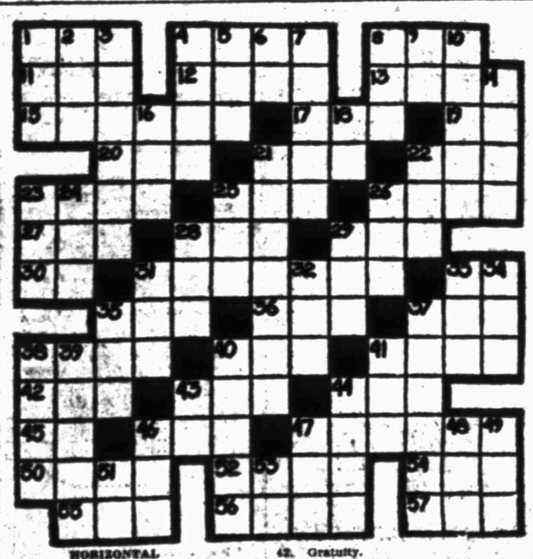

Two Black Crows

MORAN AND MACK

MORAN: Say, Big Boy, I ain't never heard of no meal like that.
MACK: Like what?
MORAN: Like one olive.
MACK: Say, a man kin order one olive if he wants to, can't he?
MORAN: Sure, but I thought olives comes in sets like checkers or poker chips.
MACK: Lissen, Egghead, is yo' goin' to argue with our customers?
MORAN: Well, I ain't going to cook one olive for nobody.
MACK: Yo' don't have to cook it. Th' man is desperate. He is goin' to eat it raw.
MORAN: Well, that's different.
MACK: Put a string on it.
MORAN: Put a string on what?
MACK: On th' olive.
MORAN: What for?
MACK: Well, if th' man don't like it, he wants to pull it back.

One olive is certainly a queer dinner. The service in the Two Black Crows' restaurant is very fast. You order something. And in two seconds it is on your vest.

OIL STANDS IN TAYLOR TEST

Abilene Area May Gain New Producer

Special to The Record News

ABILENE, Texas, Jan. 30.—With the bit one foot in a pay topped several days ago at 2384 feet, Mid-continent Oil and Gas company's No. 1 Taylor, wildcat test, in central Taylor county, had 700 feet of 40-gravity oil in the hole late Wednesday.

This operation is in lot 18 of the Guadalupe county school land, about a mile and a half northwest of View and 20 miles from the Noodle Creek pool, the nearest producing area.

When the first show of oil came in this test several days ago, drilling was suspended to allow running pipe to the bottom and to clean out cavings. That work was completed Tuesday and about 300 feet of oil rose in the hole. After the one foot of drilling was done Tuesday night and Wednesday morning the oil in the well increased considerably.

Local operators say the test is good for 10 barrels a day pumping as it now stands. If more saturated lime is found by deeper drilling they say a good well may be developed.

The operation is attracting considerable attention this week. Much interest in lease and royalty buying in the territory surrounding it is being manifested since the oil has been increasing.

Plan to Extend Probation Made

DALLAS, Jan. 30. (AP)—Extension of proration in the Howard-Glasscock county oil fields for three months, a possible increase in the daily run, under proration from 35,000 to 50,000 barrels, and the question of final segregation of widely diversified production interests at opposite ends of the field have been taken under advisement by the railroad commission after hearings here.

All three of the propositions have been agreed to by the producers and await only the approval of the commission. The present proration agreement expires Feb. 15.

About 50 representatives of the Gulf Refining company, the Sun company, Magnolia Petroleum and independent operators attended the meeting. The water situation in the field was discussed at length during the hearing on the proration question.

Continental-Humble Test Tops Pay Sand

Special to The Record News.

COLEMAN, Texas, Jan. 30.—With the topping of the pay sand at 2130 feet in Continental, Humble, Midwest, Anzac and Cheney No. 11 Overall, 200 feet south and east of the southwest corner of the J. H. Barclay survey No. 700, seven miles south of Coleman, a southwest extension to the Overall pool was promised today.

The test was spraying oil and was making approximately 5,000,000 cubic feet of gas when shut down for the connecting of flow lines and the erection of storage tanks. The well will probably be drilled deeper Wednesday. According to oil men the No. 11 Overall promises to be as good or better than the Overall discovery well completed a 700-barrel producer last October.

Continental, Atlantic, Midsun, Anzac and Cheney No. 4 Overall, 400 feet north of the No. 11 location topped the gas sand, found immediately above the Overall pay last Saturday at 2104 feet, but has been unable to drill in due to necessity of drilling out a liner stuck in the bottom of the hole. Operators expect to be able to complete the test either Thursday or Friday.

Santa Anna Field Gets New Location

It is a south offset to Howard Samuell et al. No. 1 J. A. Robertson, recently completed a 50-barrel producer.

Howard Samuell et al. No. 2 J. A. Robertson, east offset to the producer, has been spudded in, but is now shut down to make preparations for a more adequate water supply.

Gulf Coast Well in Deepest Pay Horizon

BEAUMONT, Jan. 30. (AP)—A record gulf coast oil bearing stratum was revealed when Yount-Lee Oil company's Chambers county No. 1 well at Barbers Hill came in flowing 4,000 barrels a day through a half-inch choker. The total depth of the well is 5260 feet.

The new well extends the deep producing area about a mile and a half south of the discovery well, Mills Bennett's Smith No. 1. At least five offset wells to the Yount-Lee producer will be started by the Gulf Production company on the west and the Sun Oil company on the east.

NEW YORK COTTON

NEW YORK, Jan. 30. (AP)—Early declines in the cotton market, attributed to renewal of liquidation and selling promoted by relatively easy Liverpool cables and a decline in Egyptian, were followed by comparatively narrow and irregular fluctuations in the cotton market today. Present crop positions were relatively steady. After selling off to 19.63, May closed at 19.71, or 8 points up from the lowest. December closed 19.05, or within a point of the lowest price for the day. The general market closed steady at net declines of 8 to 20 points.

The opening was barely steady at a decline of 10 to 12 points in response to the easier showing of Liverpool, and the decline in Egyptian cotton. Considerable liquidation and some local and southern selling caused the market to sell off to net losses of about 15 to 22 points. March declined to 19.62, July to 19.31. New October contract sold off to 18.98, but present crop positions seemed to attract more demand around these figures. It was attributed partly to trade buying and partly to covering and was sufficient to give the market a steadier undertone in the later trading.

Business, which had been fairly active on the early decline, tapered off as prices steadied, and the bulges seemed to meet a little further liquidation. At the close, old crop months showed rallies of 4 to 8 points from the lowest. The new crop positions were at nearly the low point of the day, and there seemed to be some selling of them against purchases of near months.

Early selling was believed to include liquidation by recent buyers for western and southwestern account. There was also considerable selling by brokers with Wall street connections. The steadier afternoon tone was accompanied by talk of an improved technical position after the rather heavier liquidation of the morning and the decline of about 80 points from the high prices touched during the middle of the month.

Private cables attributed the easier showing of Liverpool to hedging and liquidation inspired by weakness of Egyptian cotton, but said there was a fair cloth inquiry for India. The Alexandria market was 36 to 51 points lower. Exports today, 19,805 bales, making 5,541,968 so far this season. Port receipts, 25,613. United States port stocks, 2,294,089.

NEW ORLEANS COTTON

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 30. (AP)—Continued rather liberal liquidation and general selling caused cotton prices to work lower again today, but a good trade demand developed at the decline and absorbed offerings. The market closed steady at net losses of 8 points on all active months. May contracts after opening at 19.10 eased off to 19.02, but rallied later to 19.14 and closed at 19.08.

Liverpool cables were lower than due, and were reflected in an opening decline of 5 to 8 points here. Prices continued to ease off under rather general selling, probably induced by the weaker English market, and March traded to 19.01. May 19.06 and July 19.05, or 10 to 11 points net down.

After rallying a few points, the market turned easier again under renewed selling, and active positions traded to new lows for the day, with March at 18.98, May 19.02 and July 19.00, or 14 to 15 points below the previous close. The decline attracted liberal trade buying on the scale down, which checked the easiness and carried March back to 19.10, May 19.14 and July 19.11, or 11 to 12 points above the lows and new highs for the session.

In final trading there was a flurry of realizing, and final prices were 4 to 6 points under the best, with March closing at 19.04 and July 19.07.

Hedge selling and liquidation were given by private cables as the cause for the weakness in Liverpool, and the easiness there, coupled with reports of a general let-up in textile trading, were the main depressing factors.

Money Nervousness Acts as Whip To Keep Stocks in Rest Period

By BROADAN WALL

NEW YORK, Jan. 30. (US)—Several leading industrial stocks rallied today, but the market as a whole remained in a rest period with traders holding off due to money nervousness.

General Electric was the outstanding feature. It soared 12 points further as a result of investment buying. Westinghouse gained 3⅛, American Telephone recovered 2 points. Montgomery Ward jumped 3¾ and Carbide added 2⅛ to its advance.

Power stocks remained in favor with American Power & Light gaining 4 points. American & Foreign Power was up 9, and Public Service of New Jersey gained 2 points more.

Brooklyn Manhattan opened at a new high and held part of its gain but other local tractions did not do so well.

Steel was heavily sold early due to the disappointment that no extra dividend was declared and lost over 3 points for the day. Call money renewed at 7 and advanced to 8 as banks called in funds to make Feb. 1 payments. The turnover again held around the 4,000,000 share level.

Chrysler Advances

Selling of Chrysler attracted bearish operations to other parts of the motor list. Chrysler had a rather over-rapid advance but other motors are not out of line with present market conditions when earnings are considered. For this reason there is good support given to General Motors, Hudson, Nash and Hupp, for they all are showing a better ratio to earnings at current market levels than most leading industrials.

Gardner is one of the favored of the motor group at this time. Buying is due to expectations of results of its entrance into the aviation field. Big blocks of the stock have been taken up for the account of California interests who have been interested in aviation for the last several months. Eventually it is believed they will merge Gardner with a commercial aviation company which they control that is one of the most successful in operation west of the Mississippi.

Local Tractions

Brooklyn Manhattan featured the local tractions. No matter what the result of what is called "political monkeyshines," it is pointed out Brooklyn Manhattan is in good position whereas should plans of politicians and others as to consolidations, fall through, those holding other local traction issues would again have to "hold the bag" for many months.

American Telephone's renewed advance was accompanied by private brokerage advices telling of the benefits it derives from the success of inventions of Western Electric, its subsidiary. There is hardly a radio organization or talking movie company that is not using Western Electric products.

Rail Speculation

After the Utilities will come the Rails. Such is the expectations of leading bulls who quietly pick up Erie, New Haven and a few other speculative issues as well as Central, Atchison and the better grade carriers. Dividends on Erie first and second preferred is expected to be declared at a meeting late next month. Over-production continued to hold the oils back. Those who stay too long on the short side of Mexican Seaboard, however, may find their position uncomfortable. In the course of the next several weeks there is likely to be news from Mexico similar to that from California that caused the last advance in the stock. Allis Chalmers enjoyed a further investment demand following the issuance of a survey of agricultural prospects which emphasized the dominant position of Allis Chalmers in the tractor field.

Loan Report

Brokers loans are expected to show slight change for the week in the report to be issued after the close tomorrow. Most expect a slight decrease, and if shown, it may offset a little of the uneasiness resulting from month-end tightening in the money market.

More important than loans however is the attitude of leading banks which loan most money to the market. To one who has returned after a month's absence, the most striking development in that period was the material cut in collateral value of most leading stocks made by the largest banks. At the same time there has been wholesale passing on of many "pool pets." It is these two happenings that necessitate the most emphatic warning that the highest grade investment stocks offer attraction for the time being.

TEXAS LIVESTOCK

FORT WORTH, Jan. 30. (AP)—Even with an exceptionally light supply of cattle and calves offered here today, trading in most classes was very draggy, with buyers bidding a little lower on butcher and beef cows and slaughter yearlings and heifers. The sheep supply consisted of feeder lambs and sold steady, with hogs lower.

About four loads of steers made up the supply of that division. Two loads of fairly heavy cattle sold during the early trading at $10.35 and $10.65, barely steady.

Trading in bulls consisted of package lots and odd head that sold steady, with the better ones around $8.00 and the common, light bulls around $6.50.

A few fairly good cows offered in carlots with practically no early sales and buyers bidding lower. A few packages and odd head sold at slightly lower values. Canners and cutters moved at steady values to a fair demand.

The supply of slaughter yearlings fairly liberal and the demand very narrow with bids lower. The bulk of the supply due to sell at $10.00 to $11.00 in carlots, with an occasional individual at $11.50 to $12.25. One load to an outside buyer, averaging around 500 pounds, sold at $11.50.

The supply of calves was very light and contained nothing especially good. A load in the southern division sold at $10.50 and a load at $11.25, with package vealers about steady values. The bulk of cull calves sold around $6.00.

Not a great many stocker cattle offered in the day's trading.

About 10 decks of sheep offered and consisted of fall shorn feeder lambs at $13.50 and wooled feeder lambs at $14.00 and $14.50. Values considered steady.

Hogs today were 15c to a quarter lower, rail top $9.45, and the truck division having the most decline with a top of $8.75. Bulk 170 to 250-pound butchers at $8.25 to $9.45; packing sows at $7.50 to $8.25.

KANSAS CITY, Jan. 30. (AP)—(U.S.D.A.)—Increased receipts of cattle resulted in a slow draggy market, with prices unevenly 25 to 50c lower on most all killing classes. Choice long fed beeves, scaling 1395 pounds brought $15.10 at Chicago for the day's top. Short fed offerings predominated at the river markets, with the bulk selling from $13 down. Declining prices of fat cattle influenced a weaker undertone and feeders and prices ruled steady to 25c lower with feeders showings most of the loss. Choice yearling stockers averaging 585 pounds reached $12.40 at Kansas City. Total receipts were 43,600, an increase of 13,000 over a week ago and 1,000 in excess of a year ago.

Liberal supplies of hogs were responsible for a sharp break in values, and reports from most markets were unevenly 10@40c under yesterday's levels. Choice Chicago light-weight scored $9.85 on the opening at St. Louis, for the day's top, but at the close a comparable weight and grade sold at $9.55. Offerings totalled 132,400 against 92,637 a week ago and 148,514 a year ago.

Fat lamb values were under considerable pressure and final prices were quoted 25@50c under Tuesday's levels. Choice closely sorted fed lambs went at $17.10 at Chicago but the bulk of the better grades cashed from $16.60 down. The top at Omaha rested at $16.25 and most sales at the river markets were under $16. Nature sheep were scarce and final prices held steady. Total receipts were 47,850 as compared with 48,222 a week ago and 57,194 a year ago.

Cattle—Receipts, 1,400; market slow; butcher and beef grades she stock and slaughter yearlings extremely dull, weak to 25c lower, mostly 15@25c lower; slaughter steers and other classes cattle and calves generally steady; few fed steers $10.35@10.65; two loads good lightweight fed yearlings on heavy calf order, $11.25@11.50.

CHICAGO GRAIN REVIEW

CHICAGO, Jan. 30. —Unqualified official reports telling of widespread adverse conditions for domestic winter wheat had a decided stimulating effect on wheat values today. Besides, foreigners were purchasing wheat future deliveries here, and better export demand was apparent for wheat from North America.

Closing quotations on wheat were strong, 1⅛c to 2¼c net higher, with corn 1⅛@1¼c to 1⅜c up, oats ⅛@⅜c to ⅜c advance, and provisions unchanged to 25c down.

Prevalence of ice and lack of a snow blanket throughout many important winter wheat producing sections were given particular stress in today's government report from Washington for the week and in the Kansas state report as well. Simultaneously, a forecast of colder weather in the west was issued pointing to chances that the unsatisfactory crop outlook would be made worse, especially over the usual chief areas of United States winter wheat yield. Meanwhile, Liverpool wheat quotations were higher, instead of lower, as expected, and talk was circulated that India and Japan were in the market as buyers.

Corn and oats were responsive to wheat price upturns and to reports of a renewal of dry, hot weather in Argentine corn territory, as well as of bad roads throughout much of the corn belt in the United States. Besides, corn export demand at the eastern seaboard today was fair, and country offerings here were light. Primary receipts of corn were about 1,000,000 bushels less than for the corresponding day last year.

Provisions were under selling pressure from warehouse interests, hog values being generally 10c lower.

KRAFT PLANS NEW MILK LINE

Route May Reach Terral And Comanche, Okla.

Supplies of milk from Terral and Comanche, Okla., may be added to the increasing deliveries to the Kraft cheese factory here if plans now being formulated are completed successfully.

Charles L. Teissler, manager of the cheese plant, and O. K. Barnes, manager of the agricultural bureau of the chamber of commerce, will spend Thursday in the Oklahoma territory in the interest of the project, it was announced Wednesday. A truck line operating between Oklahoma City and Wichita Falls is the proposed carrier, and it appeared Wednesday that sufficient milk for sale to the cheese factory here would be available at Terrell and Comanche to make the arrangement almost a certainty.

Dairying activities are increasing in the neighborhood of Olney, according to reports from that point, and plans inaugurated about a month ago for the transportation of sweet milk from that city to the Kraft factory here probably will materialize with the usual large increase of milk during the spring months.

The production of milk in Wichita county at the present time is not as great as the number of milk cows would indicate that it should be at this season, according to dairying leaders here. A great many thoroughbred dairy cattle have been purchased by farmers and dairymen in the county during the last 12 months, and a considerable number are recently fresh, but the yield of milk has not increased at a normal rate. The shortage is attributed by most milk buyers to inadequate feeding during the fall months. A comparatively small number of farmers in the county raised feed crops last year, it was said, and it was regarded as probably that sufficient feed had not been bought to constitute an ample supply for milk producing cows.

Those who planted feed crops last year obtained very good yield, it was said, and found a very profitable market for any excess remaining over their local needs. According to Mr. Barnes, of the chamber of commerce agricultural bureau, sorghum crops have been consistently successful, year in and year out, in this section, but have not been given any considerable acreage regularly because of the prevalent favoritism shown to cotton, primarily because of its ready cash conservation.

Crops planted this spring in Wichita county, however, will include a large amount of kaffir corn, maize, and other feed stuff, distributed generally over the county, according to Mr. Barnes. Some of the larger dairying concerns were said to be giving serious consideration to plans for farming sufficient land for the production of practically all of the feed required for their large dairy herds, and for the erection of silos.

RECORD JAM EXPECTED AT TAX OFFICE TODAY AS 3,000 'PAY OFF'

LAST DAY FOR AUTO PLATES

Poll Tax Receipts to Show Heavy Slump

Three thousand Wichita county automobile owners and as many voters must get their lincense plates and their poll tax receipts between 7 a. m. and midnight Thursday in order to avoid delinquent penalties which become effective on the morning of Feb. 1.

Poll Taxes Law

Although the time limit for the payment of school, water, and city taxes may be extended, there is no constituted authority who can alter the limit for state and county payments, Roy A. Jones, chief deputy in the collector's office, announced Wednesday.

Less than 10,000 of the 13,780 poll tax receipts and exemption certificates expected for this year, had been issued when the main office closed at 7:30 Wednesday evening, Mr. Jones said. Last year the office issued 18,648 such receipts and certificates, but a 5,000 drop was expected from the election year total.

Mr. Jones said that citizens in the small towns and rural districts will appoint agents who pay the taxes for large numbers in a mass, reducing the crowd and saving time and travel for the outlying residents. These agents are expected to turn over their funds and greatly swell the total number of receipts Thursday.

Auto Owners Warned

Registration of automobiles is still 3,000 behind the total expected, with but one day to go, Mr. Jones added. Every capacity of the office will be strained Thursday to handle the crowds and the heavy business.

S. O. Ham, state highway officer, has announced that on Feb. 1 all drivers without the 1929 plate will be immediately subject to arrest.

Wichita-Vernon Party To Visit Rio Grande

About 30 men and women from Wichita Falls and Vernon will leave here Saturday night as members of a party conducted by Mrs. W. W. Gardner of this city and Mrs. J. D. Ferrell of Mission, Texas, on a trip to the Goodwin tract of irrigated land near Mission, and to other points in the Rio Grande valley, according to a statement from Mrs Gardner.

The party of Wichitans was announced to visit the valley about two weeks ago, but the trip was postponed because of illness of several of those planning to go, it was said. The party will return to this city on Friday, Feb. 8.

Conviction of Bellevue Banker Is Affirmed

AUSTIN, Texas, Jan. 30. (AP)—The six year conviction against W. I. Boyd, Clay county, for alleged false entry in books of the First State bank of Bellevue, while he was cashier of the institution, was affirmed by the court of criminal appeals here today.

The case of M. B. Roe, Floyd county, given five years for robbing Virgil Bennett of a $25 watch, was likewise affirmed.

Deaths

THOMAS DENNISON

Funeral services for Thomas Dennison, 56, who died in a local hospital Wednesday morning, will be conducted from the Merkle Undertaking company parlors at 2:30 o'clock Thursday afternoon. Burial will be in Riverside cemetery.

He is survived by two brothers, Charles and F. H. Dennison, both of Wichita Falls.

Itch Stopped In Few Minutes

Druggists now selling famous doctor's prescription

"Thousands of letters bear testimony to the fact that Dr. Dennis' famous prescription — D. D. D. — stops itching almost the moment it touches the skin. That is why druggists always have it on hand." It is surprising to see how quickly you can get relief from eczema, rashes, pimples, scales, blotches and other skin troubles. Just apply clear, cool, cooling D. D. D. Penetrates the skin, soothing and healing the irritated tissues. Stops itching instantly. Clear, greaseless and stainless, dries up almost immediately. A 35c bottle will prove the merits of this famous antiseptic, or money back. At all drug stores or D. D. D. Lab., Batavia, Illinois.—Adv.

THEATER GROUP HOLDS MEET

"Dulcy" Cast Presented At Luncheon Wednesday

Members of the cast of "Dulcy," the first production to be offered by the newly organized Little Theater, were formally presented to the membership at the first luncheon meeting of the group at the Y. W. C. A. at noon Wednesday.

After the presentation, Mrs. W. F. Pagan read "Tangled Wave Lengths," an original one-act play written by Jerry Moffett. Mrs. James P. Bowen presided.

Members present included Frederick Sehmann, Jerry Moffett, J. C. Straus Jr., Paul Barnett, Edward Smith, Mesdames E. J. Wilson, J. S. Pitman, Louise Williamson, Sam Kruger, Misses Erma Schnelle, Cleo Bowers, Eula Brown, Janie Sue Carpenter, Nira A. Dent, Mrs. Gertrude Green, Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Cravens, Mrs. W. F. Pagan, Misses Dorothy J. Campbell, Maud Gardner, James C. Campbell, Miss Gene Nelson, Don T. Haynes, Harry Bunnenberg, A. D. Montgomery, Temple Shell, Mrs. Joe Shipley, Mrs. R. W. Flournoy, Miss Helen Grace Gould, Mesdames A. C. Parks, A. Hallman, Miss Alice Thayer Welty, Mesdames Bentley Nelson, Guy C. Raley, Sterling Crumpler, Homer Karrenbrock, Harry Myers, J. D. Bright, Hugh Bassett, Dan Rubsam, Miss Dorothy Nolen, Everett Shipp, J. W. Akin, James Allred, Baldwin Montgomery, Miguel Orionez, Woodward Bass, James Hill, Trent Hill, Emil Hermann, Miss Lucia Powell, Ted Williams, Miss Zula McKay and Mrs. James P. Bowen.

The surprise of the wintertime for this column is the Tom Lewis company at the Olympic theater. They have been presenting "Top Sergeant," a dramatic show, for the past few days, and the way they have done it is more or less of a marvel.

Accustomed as the Olympic fans may be to the usual musical tab shows at the theater, they too must have been surprised at the unusual dramatic ability displayed by this company. "Top Sergeant" was done in a most excellent manner when compared with other shows of the past year at both the Olympic and the Mission.

* * *

Milton Sills' work in "The Barker" at the Strand is rather good when the more or less unsympathetic part he has is understood. He is playing the part of one of those tough babies who always likes to be threatening to ram his fist down someone's throat. It is the kind of a part that is supposed to arouse antagonism, to a certain extent, in the mind of the audience.

Both Were Right, Says Jury in Divorce Suit

A jury entrusted with the solution of marital difficulties outlined in a contested divorce suit in the 78th district court Wednesday morning abandoned its prolonged arguments and called it a draw.

After the wife had profusely accused her husband and he had answered in kind, two questions were put to the jury in the judge's charge.

"Did her conduct toward him make their marriage insupportable?" was question number one.

"Was his conduct sufficient cause to inspire her actions?" was the second.

To both of the questions the jury in its wisdom responded: "Yes."

Which left thte judge wondering just who got the divorce.

LOVE'S COURSE

Isn't Nearly So Rough As That of Jeweler In This Case

A $1,500 diamond ring, claimed to have been the engagement ring, is the bone of contention in a law suit to be tried before Judge W. W. Cook in the 78th district court Thursday. The jeweler who sold the ring is suing for the price of it, naming both the girl and her alleged one-time finace.

The young lady purchased the ring at the request of the man in the case, according to the papers filed in the suit. The dealer allowed her to tak it with the understanding that the groom-to-be would pay the bill. It is understood that the man so named will deny any part in the proceedings.
