Higgins' bonds set at $2.6 million

Sheriff's Office releases more details about deputy killing

From staff and wire reports

The man who is charged with shooting a Midland County deputy was being held Saturday on two bonds totaling $2.6 million, according to a report released by Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter on Saturday afternoon.

Dan William Higgins, 37, was being held on a $2.5 million bond for the capital murder charge and a $100,000 bond for the sexual assault charge relating to an August 2013 incident.

Painter's report also included a detailed account surrounding Thursday's fatal shooting of Midland County Sheriff's Office Sgt. Mike Naylor.

Naylor, according to Officer Down Memorial Page website, is the first law enforcement official to die in the line of duty inside Midland County in more than 50 years.

Painter said in Saturday's press release that Naylor and other deputies arrived at about 2 p.m. Thursday at a home in the 3800 block of North County Road 1247, where Higgins was believed to reside.

Deputies worked alongside the Lone Star Fugitive Task Force and the warrant section of the sheriff's office to attempt to execute an arrest warrant for a first-degree felony charge of continuous aggravated sexual assault of a child under 14 years of age.

Deputies went up to the residence, but the suspect did not come to the door. The deputies broke out a window to make visual and verbal contact with Higgins, but he refused to come out, Painter said.

During the verbal exchange, Naylor attempted to get Higgins to voluntarily surrender, but he would not. Higgins then fired a shot toward Naylor's head. Naylor dropped instantly, and a supervisor on the scene notified via radio that an officer was down, according to the release.

Deputies then returned fire and pulled Naylor to safety in order to apply first aid to stop the bleeding. Naylor was placed in a patrol vehicle and taken down the street to a waiting ambulance and transported to Midland Memorial Hospital in critical condition, according to the release.

Naylor never regained consciousness and was pronounced dead at 4:19 p.m. by Precinct 3 Justice of the Peace Judge Billy Johnson.

Numerous law enforcement agencies from across Midland and Ector counties arrived at the scene to assist in getting the suspect out of the residence.

Higgins surrendered at about 5:30 p.m. Thursday and was transported to Midland County jail.

Naylor remembered as passionate leader

By Tessa Duvall

Crashing thunder and flashes of lightning coincided with a crescendo of sirens heading south on North Big Spring Street.

The wind blew faster, kicking up dust and whipping around the 10 American flags held by community members outside Nalley-Pickle & Welch Funeral Home.

Rain began to fall — lightly at first, but quickly poured hard.

"God is talking to us up there," one of the flag holders said.

Sgt. Mike Naylor, 46, of the Midland County Sheriff's Office was shot and killed by a suspect while serving an arrest warrant Thursday afternoon. After an autopsy in Fort Worth, Naylor was given a fallen hero's welcome in Midland late Friday afternoon, escorted into the city by a procession of more than 20 vehicles from the sheriff's office, the Midland Police Department, the Department of Public Safety and the Midland Fire Department. Even the weather reflected the day's somber mood.

Naylor was the commander of the sheriff's office's Honor Guard and the sergeant of the Crisis Response Team. His colleagues remember him as a loving husband, a man of tremendous Christian faith and a dedicated leader with a passion for serving his community. Before serving his county, Naylor served his country. He retired from the Air Force after 26 years with the rank of master sergeant.

Eleven of his comrades gathered Saturday afternoon at the Midland County Annex to share their favorite memories of

Our View

Community will be there for the family of Sgt. Mike Naylor

Our hearts ache today.

We are not supposed to lose the good guys. They protect us from the bad guys. They keep the peace. They come to our rescue.

The shooting of Sgt. Mike Naylor of the Midland County Sheriff's Office doesn't make sense.

We don't have magic words for our readers who are trying to understand what happened. All we can say is — it's OK to mourn. It is proper to be sad. It is human to be angry.

Naylor left us too soon. He left this world because of the actions of another person, a gunman who robbed our community of a protector and a friend.

It is right for Midlanders to pray for Naylor's family. He leaves behind his wife, Denise Naylor, and his mother, Mary Harmon. He also leaves behind men and women at the sheriff's office, who were like a second family. They are hurting, too, and may never recover from the events of Oct. 9, 2014.

Today is the Sabbath, and maybe Midlanders will receive an explanation in churches and others places of worship. Scripture often provides answers when nothing else does and also can provide solace.

At some point, our community will focus its attention on the alleged shooter. We hope for swift justice, but the process requires patience. Some people may not care that the accused person has rights, but he does. This is America, after all.

This community will come together. We will support Sheriff Gary Painter and his department. We will be there for Naylor's family. That is what Midlanders do.

Tragedies, such as the loss of Naylor, are never easy to overcome. But in the words of former Mayor Wes Perry after the 2012 Show of Support parade tragedy that killed four veterans and left a community in shock: "We will be stronger on the other side." He was right then, and we expect this sentiment will hold true now.

Worried Iraqi capital sees militant push around it

By Vivian Salama
Associated Press

Associated Press

Iraqi federal policemen search a car at a checkpoint in Baghdad, Iraq, on Saturday. On the western edge of Iraq's capital, Islamic State group militants battle government forces and exchange mortar fire, only adding to the sense of siege in Baghdad despite airstrikes by a U.S.-led coalition. Military experts say the Sunni militants won't be able to fight through both government forces and Shiite militias now massed around the capital. It does, however, put them in a position to wreak havoc in Iraq's biggest city with its suicide attacks and other assaults.

BAGHDAD — On the western edge of Iraq's capital, Islamic State group militants battle government forces and exchange mortar fire, only adding to the sense of siege in Baghdad despite airstrikes by a U.S.-led coalition.

Yet military experts said the Sunni militants of the Islamic State group, who now control a large territory along the border that Iraq and Syria share, won't be able to fight through both government forces and Shiite militias now massed around the capital.

It does, however, put them in a position to wreak havoc in Iraq's biggest city, with its suicide attacks and other assaults further eroding confidence in Iraq's nascent federal government and its troops, whose soldiers already fled the Islamic State group's initial lightning advance in June.

"It's not plausible at this point to envision ISIL taking control of Baghdad, but they can make Baghdad so miserable that it would threaten the legitimacy of the central government," said Richard Brennan, an Iraq expert with RAND Corporation and former Department of Defense policymaker, using an acronym for the Islamic State group.

The siege fears in Baghdad stem from recent gains made by the Islamic State group in the so-called Baghdad Belt — the final stretch between Anbar province, where the group gained ground in January, and Baghdad. The group has had a presence in the Baghdad Belt since spring. Iraqi officials said, but recent advances have sparked new worries.

Last week, Islamic State group fighters seized the towns of Hit and neighboring Kubaisa, sending Iraqi soldiers fleeing and leaving a nearby military base with its stockpile of weapons at risk of capture. The U.S.-led coalition recently launched two airstrikes northwest of Hit, U.S. Central Command said Saturday.

Perhaps most worrying, Islamic State group fighters now battle Iraqi forces in Abu Ghraib, the town home to the infamous prison of the same name that's only 18 miles (29 kilometers) from the Green Zone, the fortified international zone protecting Baghdad-based embassies and government office.

A senior military official in Anbar told The Associated Press on Saturday that government helicopters fire on targets daily in Abu Ghraib, though the town remains in the hands of security forces.

To the south of Baghdad, security forces fight to hold onto the town of Jurf al-Sukr, and to the north, one Sunni tribe has held onto the town of Duluiyah despite an Islamic State group's onslaught. However, Islamic State group fighters have taken over a number of towns in Diyala province, east of Baghdad.

Yet, authorities believe an assault to take Baghdad remains unlikely. An Iraqi military and intelligence official each told the AP that as many as 60,000 government security personnel, including soldiers and police officers, are currently in position outside the city along the Baghdad Belt. A plot by the Islamic State group to enter Baghdad in September through the Shiite al-Kazimiyah neighborhood was foiled, the officials added.

Both Iraqi officials spoke on condition of anonymity as they were not authorized to speak to journalists.

Since that initial September assault, Baghdad largely has been spared and remained relatively calm, considering the intense sectarian bloodshed residents saw in 2006 and 2007 after the U.S.-led invasion to topple Saddam Hussein. Still, many remain worried.

"It's scary," said Maha Ismail, who recently visited one of Baghdad's new shopping malls. "But we have seen a lot worse than this so we are gathering despite all the warnings."

A U.S. counterterrorism official who spoke to the AP said Baghdad would remain a target for Islamic State group attacks, though seizing it outright would be nearly impossible.

"Attacking Baghdad is probably still in (its) playbook, but its leaders must know they would face overwhelming odds in striking the city," the U.S. official said, speaking on condition of anonymity as he was not authorized to talk to journalists.

The Islamic State group said it has a foothold inside Baghdad, having claimed responsibility for a number of attacks in the city, particularly in the Sadr City neighborhood — a Shiite stronghold. In August, the group claimed responsibility for an attack on a Shiite mosque in New Baghdad and another in the Shiite-majority district of Utaifiya in Baghdad, which together killed 26 people.

Some attacks go unclaimed, raising fears that other groups may look to capitalize on the tensions provoked by the Islamic State group. On Saturday, a series of unclaimed car bomb attacks in Iraq's capital killed 30 people in Shiite areas, authorities said.

Yet analysts, like Brennan from the RAND Corporation, said capturing Baghdad remains beyond the Islamic State group's ability. At its worst, the group might "start pressing into the western areas of Baghdad, going into the Sunni areas of Baghdad and pressing up against the Tigris (River) — if not controlling it, then at least testing the control of the central government," he said.

Air Force Col. Patrick Ryder, a U.S. Central Command spokesman, said Saturday that the Iraqi military "continues to maintain firm control of the city and there is no imminent threat of an effective" offensive by the Islamic State group.

"While there are pockets of ISIL in the vicinity of Baghdad, (Iraqi security forces) continue to conduct operations to engage these elements and push back with the support of U.S. airstrikes when necessary," Ryder said.

Beyond the U.S.-coordinated airstrikes and the massing of Iraqi troops, the country's religious and ethnic lines likely will staunch any advance by the Sunni militants of the Islamic State group. From Baghdad further south, Iraq's population is overwhelmingly Shiite, and the lands there are home to some of its most important shrines.

Already, Shiite militias back up government forces in Baghdad and elsewhere in Iraq — their flags and symbols provocatively displayed across the capital. Such militias, like Iran-supported Asaib Ahl al-Haq and Muqtada al-Sadr's Mahdi Army, "are battle tested," said David L. Phillips, the director of the Peace-building and Rights Program at Columbia University. Challenging them likely would become a bloody slog for the Islamic State group, he said.

"The militias are not bound by rules of war," he added. "They and (the Islamic State group) share one thing in common: Neither is bound by the Geneva Conventions."

Beyond marriage, other gay-rights challenges loom

By David Crary
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Even as they celebrate epic victories in the push for marriage equality, gay-rights activists acknowledge that other difficult issues remain on their agenda. There's the persistent high rate of HIV infections, the struggles to expand transgender rights, and the striking fact that even in some states allowing same-sex marriage, people can lose their job for being gay.

For many activists, the top priority after marriage is federal legislation that would outlaw a broad range of discrimination against lesbians, gays, bisexuals and transgender people. There's no such federal law now, and more than half the states do not ban discrimination by employers or public accommodations based on sexual orientation.

"There's absolutely no good reason — if you can get married — why you should be denied a hotel room or a job," said Fred Sainz, a vice president of the Human Rights Campaign. "There will be a fair number of states where you can get married and be fired the same day for having gotten married."

Anti-LGBT discrimination is among several issues likely to gain more attention following the Supreme Court's Oct. 6 decision to turn away appeals by five states seeking to preserve their bans on same-sex marriage. The number of gay-marriage states — previously 19 — is expected to nearly double soon, and continue growing toward what many Americans now assume is inevitable expansion to all 50 states.

As a whole, the LGBT population is elated by the expansion of gay marriage. Yet according to a 2013 Pew Research Center survey, about 40 percent of LGBT adults aren't interested in getting married, compared to 24 percent of the general public. And nearly 40 percent of the LGBT respondents said the marriage issue had drawn too much attention away from other concerns.

A look at some of the challenges that remain:

HIV/AIDS

While marriage developments have kindled joy in the gay community, news regarding HIV and AIDS is sobering.

According to the latest data from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, gay and bisexual men, who represent about 2 percent of the U.S. population, accounted for 62 percent of new HIV infections. Each year, about 50,000 new infections are tallied.

A CDC report last month said only about half of gay and bisexual men diagnosed with HIV, the virus that causes AIDS, received continuing treatment for the virus.

Many AIDS activists and health professionals hope the infection rate can be slashed through wider use of Truvada, a drug that has proven effective in protecting uninfected men who engage in gay sex. The CDC has endorsed the preventive use of Truvada; so have many big-city health departments.

Progress has been slow, says Scott Schoettes, HIV Project director for the LGBT-rights group Lambda Legal. He said some health-care providers refuse to prescribe Truvada even when a patient requests it.

"It's a misplaced perception that anyone who wants it must be promiscuous and taking risks that they shouldn't be taking," Schoettes said.

New York City's health department is working to overcome such attitudes by sending staff into clinics and doctors' offices to promote the preventive option among providers who up until now have been uninterested.

Another problem is lack of awareness. A recent survey by the Kaiser Family Foundation found that only about one-fourth of gay men knew of Truvada's preventive potential.

New York's health department is trying to combat that with an outreach program using social media, including gay dating apps. "That's where the risk is happening," said Dr. Demetre Daskalakis, the department's assistant commissioner for HIV/AIDS control and prevention.

A few vocal critics — notably the Los Angeles-based AIDS Healthcare Foundation — argue that preventive use of Truvada is misguided. In an ad campaign launched in August, the foundation said many gay men fail to adhere to Truvada's once-a-day regimen and described government promotion of the drug as "a public health disaster in the making."

Non-discrimination

For all their advances, activists remain deeply frustrated by the lack of federal legislation barring discrimination based on sexual orientation or gender identity.

A long-sought bill called the Employment Non-Discrimination Act finally passed the Senate last November, with 10 Republicans joining majority Democrats in a 64-32 vote. But GOP leaders in the House have not taken up the measure.

Rep. Jared Polis, D-Colo., has been trying to orchestrate a "discharge petition" that would force the bill to the floor for a vote. It would need nearly 20 GOP votes as well as solid Democratic backing.

"We should have a federal statute," said Polis, who is gay. "You shouldn't be able to be fired based on who you love."

Gay-rights groups are looking ahead to the next session of Congress. Sainz of the Human Rights Campaign said there will be an aggressive push for a comprehensive LGBT civil rights bill that would seek anti-bias protections even beyond the workplace — in realms such as housing and access to credit.

In past years, broad GOP support for such a bill would have seemed impossible, but Sainz foresees a new era.

"The constant expansion of the marriage map changes the reality for Republicans," he said. "With every passing day, those who oppose LGBT equality increasingly look like dinosaurs."

Outside of Congress, activists will keep pressing for state and local anti-bias laws. Only 21 states have employment non-discrimination laws that cover sexual orientation; 18 also cover gender identity.

Transgender rights

Transgender-rights activists view their own array of causes in a good-news, bad-news context.

There's relief over some recent legal victories for people who lost jobs because they were transgender. And there's encouragement over the positive portrayals of transgender characters on TV shows, such as "Orange is the New Black" and "Transparent."

"There's definitely more visibility than ever, and that's wonderful," said Masen Davis, executive director of the California-based Transgender Law Center. "But a minority of Americans know a transgender person, and that makes us somewhat vulnerable."

Davis said negative stereotypes are still widespread, and violence persists — notably attacks on black and Latina transgender women. Another problem, he said, is that many transgender people have difficulty getting needed health care.

Among the groups expanding work on transgender issues is the National Center for Lesbian Rights. It has represented many transgender students who felt their rights were infringed at school and is promoting transgender-inclusive policies for student athletes.

Shannon Minter, the center's legal director, said the "breathtaking progress" on marriage equality shouldn't weaken the broader drive for LGBT rights.

"Every day, LGBT people are fired from their jobs, kicked out of families and stigmatized in their communities," Minter said. "Our future work must assure that every LGBT person, no matter who they are or where they live, enjoys equality, dignity and justice."

Washington man killed by bus at Idaho corn maze

HAUSER — A bus carrying paintball players struck and killed a Washington state man inside a zombie attraction at a corn maze in northern Idaho, authorities said Saturday.

Jeremy T. McSpadden Jr., 18, of Spokane Valley, Washington, was a role player in the "Zombie Slayer Paintball Bus" attraction at the Incredible Corn Maze in Hauser on Friday night, the Kootenai County Sheriff's Office said. Dressed as a zombie, he emerged from his hiding place and ran toward the modified school bus, but he tripped and fell in front of the rear passenger-side tires, witnesses reported.

He was run over and apparently killed instantly. Because of the uneven terrain of the corn maze, the bus frequently rocks, and the occupants did not immediately notice what had happened.

"It was not until the bus had traveled away from the victim's location and the role players began to reset for the next bus to come along that anyone realized something was wrong," the sheriff's office said.

Beal Parkway meeting

The city of Midland is planning a public meeting to discuss the proposed extension of Beal Parkway to Thomason Drive. The meeting is 7 p.m. Tuesday at the cafeteria of Jones Elementary School, 4919 Shadylane Drive.

Engineers will be available to answer questions from the public regarding the project during an open house that is to start at 6:30 p.m. The formal presentation is to begin at 7 p.m.

The proposed project is intended to improve traffic circulation and access to properties along the Loop 250 frontage road. The extension of Beal Parkway would provide a new connection to Thomason Drive and will reduce traffic in adjacent neighborhoods. A roundabout is also proposed at the intersection of Thomason Drive and Illinois Avenue to provide a safer interchange of traffic between the three roadways.

Maps and drawings regarding the project will be displayed at the public meeting. Additionally, display materials will be available in Suite 510 at City Hall, 300 N. Loraine St. until Oct. 21.

Bicycle rodeo

A bicycle rodeo is scheduled for 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday in front of the new Midland Pediatrics location, 4214 Marnies Circle (next to Fit Family Fitness and right behind a Soft Suds car wash located on Wadley Avenue).

The Midland Police Department will teach about bike safety, and firefighters will talk about emergency response and show off a Midland Fire Department truck. There will be a station that will make ID badges for kids, food, a face painter and the "Bike Blender."

The first 150 kids to compleie the course will receive a free bike helmet.

DA: Naylor murder case will be a long process

By Rye Druzin
rdruzin@mrt.com

Midland District Attorney Teresa Clingman told the Reporter-Telegram on Friday that the capital murder case surrounding the killing of Midland County Sheriff's Office Sgt. Mike Naylor "will not be a quick process."

The alleged shooter, Dan William Higgins, is accused of shooting and killing Naylor, who was trying to serve a warrant on Higgins. Clingman said evidence is being gathered and will be reviewed before her office makes a decision on whether to pursue the death penalty.

Higgins is being held on a $2.5 million bond for the capital murder charge and a $100,000 bond for a separate aggravated sexual assault charge relating to an August 2013 incident.

"We have to have all of that information so that we can really make a review of it and make a decision as to whether or not to seek the death penalty," Clingman said. "Seeking the death penalty is no small undertaking, and you have to act with not just your heart but with your head and with the law."

Ian Cantacuzene — the attorney listed for Higgins on the sheriff's office website's "currently held detainees" page — did return calls to the Reporter-Telegram.

But local criminal defense lawyer Steve Hershberger said that in his opinion such a case holds a 50-50 chance of returning a death penalty conviction against Higgins. Hershberger said that Midland County does not have a history of returning death penalty punishments and he believes the defense will focus more on the mental state of Higgins than on what happened.

"It looks like it would be undisputed that the suspect shot the officer, and, honestly, it's clear that the officer died from the gunshot wound," Hershberger said. "So the whole trial will be on mental state."

Higgins was arrested Aug. 1, 2013, for aggravated sexual assault and had been released on a $5,000 bond, according to the sheriff's records department. Naylor and another officer were serving a warrant for this charge when the confrontation occurred.

Hershberger said his biggest concern for a client like Higgins would be his safety within the criminal system and that he would ask for segregated confinement. Hershberger believes the aggravated sexual assault charge combined with the capital murder charge could leave him open to retaliation. But he doesn't think there would be any issue from county officials when it comes to doing their job to protect Higgins.

"I think they will do a very professional job, and I'm sure it's tough on the sheriff and the staff there because it's one of their fellow members and one of their brothers that has been killed. But I think they would rise above that and be very professional," Hershberger said.

Clingman said that if a grand jury reviews the evidence and decides to indict Higgins on the capital murder charge, then she and the other attorneys in the office will have to decide whether to pursue the death penalty.

She said this case will not be over quickly.

"This type of case is not a case that is resolved quickly," Clingman said. "As much as we're used to watching TV programs and everything gets over in an hour, this will not be a fast process because we absolutely have to make sure that we do things right so that there are not grounds for some sort of appellate point in the future."

Members of law enforcement gather after a possession to bring the body of Midland County Sheriff's Office Sgt. Mike Naylor to Nalley-Pickle & Welch Funeral Home on Friday. Naylor was killed in the line of duty Thursday.

NAYLOR

their fallen brother.

Lori Fuson, a lieutenant in the Honor Guard and investigator on the Crisis Response Team, said Naylor started both the Honor Guard and Mental Health Unit, which is now called the Crisis Response Team. She said Naylor was more than just a go-getter.

"You've heard of taking the bull by the horns?" Fuson said. "He done picked up the bull and threw it."

Lt. Benny Matlock, Naylor's supervisor, said his passion for his job was "unbelievable."

"His leadership abilities came from his heart, and that's something that comes from God," Matlock said. "You can be a supervisor. Every organization has some that are supervisors because the boss says so, but leaders come from within, and that's what Mike was."

Art Nunez, deputy commander of the Honor Guard, said Naylor never talked about leadership.

"He just did it," Nunez said.

Naylor's Crisis Response Team investigators recalled a man who would allow them to take the lead and use their best judgment but who would show up to assist at a scene on a moment's notice. "See you later" from Naylor meant he was on his way to help.

Fuson said that Thursday morning before Naylor was shot, they responded together to a different call.

"We had a subject who wanted to jump off a bridge, and he looked me square in the eye and he goes, 'Well, you've got your negotiator certificate. Do you want to handle this?'" Fuson said Naylor asked her. "He let me take the lead on that call.

"He could have very well done it, but he gave me the chance to take the lead."

They also remembered a man who loved to talk and excelled at it.

"Every morning, Monday through Friday, I'd hop in my car, boot up my computer, get on the radio and I'd sit there on the phone," David Richardson, a sergeant on the Honor Guard and a Crisis Response Team investigator, said. "Ring. Mike Naylor. 'Mornin'.'"

"And that's all you got to say," Fuson said.

Matlock talked about the time he and Naylor went on a call together and got a flat tire between Sterling City and San Angelo. Matlock changed the tire in the 100-plus-degree weather and ruined a pair of pants in the process. He said he wasn't happy when he got back in the car.

"(Naylor) had never shut up," he said. "He never quit talking. I finally said, 'Mike, if you'll be quiet until we get to San Angelo, when we get to Austin, I'll buy you dinner anywhere you want to go.'

"And I didn't end up buying dinner. He had the right to remain silent, but not the ability."

Outside of work, Mike loved horses and roping, but most of all, he loved his wife, Denise. An online fundraiser to support Denise had raised more than $9,700 as of press time Saturday night.

"They were soul mates," Matlock said. "Mike, when he got home, he took off his pants and his boots, and he left them outside because she wore the pants in that family."

Fuson said Denise will continue to be a part of the office's family.

"'You will always be sister; you will always be family,'" she told Denise. "And that's the thing with Denise — she didn't call us by name. 'Hey sister!' 'Hey brother!' We were sister and brother."

Honor Guard members said Naylor's passion for precision in paying tribute to the deceased in many ways readied them to handle his own services.

"After everything he would teach us and tell us, he was really preparing us for his funeral," Nunez said. "He was preparing us to do it for him."

Fuson said though they know what to do, they feel a bit lost without Naylor in the lead.

"We will handle our daily business like Mike is on a road trip, and we will do what he expects us to do," she said. "He is on the longest road trip/shortest road trip he ever took.

"It didn't take him long to get there, but it's a long ways away."

Former OPD chief: 'It's like you have lost a family member'

By Stewart Doreen
sdoreen@mrt.com

If there is anyone who can understand what Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter is going through after Thursday's shooting of Sgt. Mike Naylor, it is former Odessa Police Department Chief Chris Pipes.

Pipes was in charge on Sept. 8, 2007, the day a man opened fire on his men, killing three. At the time, there hadn't been an officer-involved death in Odessa in nearly 20 years, and that was due to a motorcycle accident.

Losing Cpl. Abel Marquez, Cpl. Arlie Jones and Cpl. John "Scott" Gardner was like being hit with a sledge hammer, Pipes said Thursday night in a conversation with the Reporter-Telegram.

"Usually you don't lose somebody. The odds are actually against (it happening)," said Pipes, who has been in law enforcement for 25 years. "When you do, it is painful."

For the Midland County Sheriff's Office, it had never happened until now. Painter said Thursday that he didn't know of an instance when a deputy was killed in the line of duty.

There also is no record of it happening, according to Officer Down Memorial Page website (www.odmp.org). Midland PD has lost three officers, although the last one died more than a half-century ago.

"You could see Painter coming out from emergency room to talk to the media," Pipes said. "It was a horrible, painful thing. I really feel for him."

On Sept. 8, 2007, Pipes was in his fifth year as police chief when the unthinkable happened. Larry Neil White shot and killed Marquez, Jones and Gardner with a shotgun after they responded to a domestic disturbance call at White's home, according to reports in the Odessa American. In a split second, leadership involved managing the emotions of a group, which like the rest of the community was looking for answers. There was plenty of anger, sadness, reluctancy to believe that OPD lost three of the city's finest.

"(Painter) is having to mourn and buck up and go out there for Mike Naylor's family," Pipes said. "He is having to say the right words when there are not any words."

Pipes told the Reporter-Telegram it really doesn't matter if you lose one or three members of your department.

"You have worked together," Pipes said. "It's like you have lost a family member. If you have lost a loved one, do you get over it? It is the same thing."

Ultimately, though, Thursday's shooting and the shootings in 2007 highlight the risk that comes with being in law enforcement. Pipes said "when a man puts on a badge and a gun, that is a possibility." There is also the reality that there are no days off for a law enforcement team. Even Thursday night, deputies went about their business on Midland County's streets and inside Midland County jail.

"You are angry and reaching for someone to strike back. You are depressed and miss him," said Pipes, whose brother, Dennis, is a retired Midland police officer. "You also have to go about your job. You took an oath to do it."

Comet is about to come very close to Mars, and NASA is ready

By Deborah Netburn
Los Angeles Times

"Normally you send spacecraft to comets. Here, the comet is coming to our spacecraft."

Kelly Fast, NASA programming scientist

A speeding comet the size of a mountain will come within 87,000 miles of Mars on Oct. 19, and NASA is planning to observe it with just about everything the agency's got.

In a news conference Thursday, officials described how they will use more than a dozen NASA assets including three Mars orbiters, two Mars rovers, and a suite of telescopes to see comet C/2013 A1, also known as comet Siding Spring, from several different angles and in different lights.

"Normally you send spacecraft to comets," said Kelly Fast, a program scientist at NASA. "Here, the comet is coming to our spacecraft."

Comet Siding Spring was first spotted in January 2013, near the end of its million-year journey toward the sun. Scientists estimate that its nucleus is between half a mile and 5 miles wide. The gas cloud that surrounds its head is 12,000 miles across. Its massive tail extends the distance between Earth and the sun.

And it will be going fast. When the comet makes its closest approach to Mars at 2:27 p.m. EDT, it will be hurtling through space at 126,000 miles per hour.

Scientists are eager for any opportunity to study the bodies that zip through our solar neighborhood, but Siding Spring is especially enticing. That's because it gives humanity our first chance to get an up-close look at a comet from the Oort cloud, a collection of icy bodies at the edge of our solar system.

Embedded in the nuclei of these comets are primordial materials from the dawn of the solar system that have been in a deep freeze for billions of years, researchers say. But as the comet moves toward the sun, the ices trapped in its nucleus begin to melt, releasing ancient gases into space.

"This particular comet has never before entered the inner solar system, so it will provide a fresh source of clues to our solar system's earliest days," said John Grunsfield, associate administrator for NASA's Science Mission Directorate, in a statement.

NASA's various assets in space, on Mars, and here on Earth will be deployed to look at the size and shape of Siding Spring's nucleus, the composition of the gases in the comet's coma, and how much water it is spewing into space. The Curiosity and Opportunity rovers will turn their cameras toward the Martian sky and, fingers crossed, capture the first image of a comet from the surface of another planet. The orbiters will study how the Martian atmosphere responds to the comet's flyby.

The researchers said the first images from the flyby should be released by Oct. 20. There will also be more information coming next week about how to follow along through social media.

Comet's are notoriously unpredictable, so scientists cannot say for sure what will happen when Siding Spring approaches Mars. All of us, even the experts, will have to wait and watch.

Olive Garden seen through an unlimited pasta pass

By Candice Choi
Associated Press

Associated Press

This image provided by Darden Restaurants shows Olive Garden's "Never Ending Pasta Pass." The Italian-themed chain had just announced to let 1,000 people pay $100 for the pass that gave them unprecedented free reign to its pasta. The passes sold out less than an hour after they went on sale online.

NEW YORK — The "Never Ending Pasta Pass" card from Olive Garden not only promised weeks of unlimited pasta, but a look into why the chain is fighting to hold onto customers.

The Italian-themed chain sold the $100 card last month that allowed 1,000 people to dine on endless pasta, breadsticks, soup and salad for 49 days. The passes sold out in less than an hour, with some turning up on eBay for hundreds of dollars.

It was a successful publicity stunt for Olive Garden's parent company, Darden Restaurants. But the company's troubles aren't over: It's fighting to hold onto customers, with sales at its flagship chain declining for each of the past three years. On Friday, activist investor Starboard Value succeeded in its bid to replace all 12 of Darden's board seats with its own slate of nominees.

Starboard said it's looking forward to working with Darden's management to improve results for shareholders.

Darden had already been making changes to turn around business. That includes modernizing its menu with "small plates" like crispy risotto bites and updating its marketing.

To get a firsthand look at Olive Garden's troubles, I paid for a Pasta Pass. I mostly enjoyed my meals, but the reactions of my companions shed some light on why the chain is struggling. Some think the menu is overwhelming and the service is slow. Others feel bad about eating all the empty calories.

And one colleague who ordered the meat lasagna said: "I can make this at home."

The food

Olive Garden has become a punchline in some circles that don't see it as serving authentic Italian food. One night, I asked my fellow diners what they thought about the criticism.

Eric McGarvey, 40, said he considers Olive Garden's food to be "American Italian" and likes the consistency it provides.

I found the food to be tasty too, if basic. My main complaint is that the noodles are on the soft side, but others might not prefer their pasta al dente. The bigger issue is nutrition: My go-to dish of corkscrew pasta with meat sauce and meatballs probably wasn't the best option. The dish is 920 calories.

Olive Garden did add a "Lighter Italian Fare" two years ago with options that include a chicken breast served with potatoes and spinach at 550 calories. But those aren't part of the pasta promotion.

That does, however, bring me to another problem Olive Garden has: an overwhelming number of options. Executives acknowledge the need to simplify the menu, which has been criticized for mushrooming to nearly 100 items, including burgers. Still, Darden president Eugene Lee recently said it's hard deciding what to get rid because "everybody has their favorite."

The prices

The other common complaint among my companions was that the prices are too high, with dishes like Fettuccine Alfredo costing $18 in New York City. A steak and potatoes dish cost $30.

Olive Garden notes prices vary by market but that in most places, those dishes cost $9.49 and $19.99, respectively.

Still, Olive Garden acknowledges it needs to get better at offering value. In fact, the Pasta Pass was intended to promote its Never Ending Pasta Bowl, which lets people eat as much pasta as they want in one sitting for $9.99.

That promotion has run every year since debuting in 1995. Like other aspects of its business, though, Olive Garden has acknowledged that it hasn't been as effective as it could be. As a result, the promotion was pushed to late September this year, instead of early August.

Jay Spenchian, Olive Garden's executive vice president of marketing, said Olive Garden realized the idea of a hot bowl of endless pasta isn't as appetizing when it's hot out.

The Never Ending Pasta Bowl is Olive Garden's most popular deal, but I never saw it advertised in the restaurants. That's likely because the chain doesn't want to distract customers who are likely to pay more for something on the regular menu.

While it may make sense from a business perspective, it was inconvenient and confusing. I had to look up the options for pasta, sauce and toppings available on my phone or ask the waiter.

Another problem? The Never Ending Pasta Bowl made Olive Garden's regular prices in New York seem more inflated. Just a single plate of pasta and meat sauce costs $17 on the regular menu.

A waiter told me on one visit that a man at a nearby table was on his seventh bowl, so maybe he got his money's worth. But Olive Garden said about a third of people don't even ask for a second plate.

Some changes Olive Garden customers might see

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Changes are likely in store for Olive Garden with a new board of directors at the helm.

Activist investor Starboard Value on Friday succeeded in its push to replace all 12 seats on Darden Restaurants' board with its own nominees. It's not clear yet how Starboard will try to shake up the company right away. But last month, it issued a 294-page presentation detailing what it thought Darden's management was doing wrong.

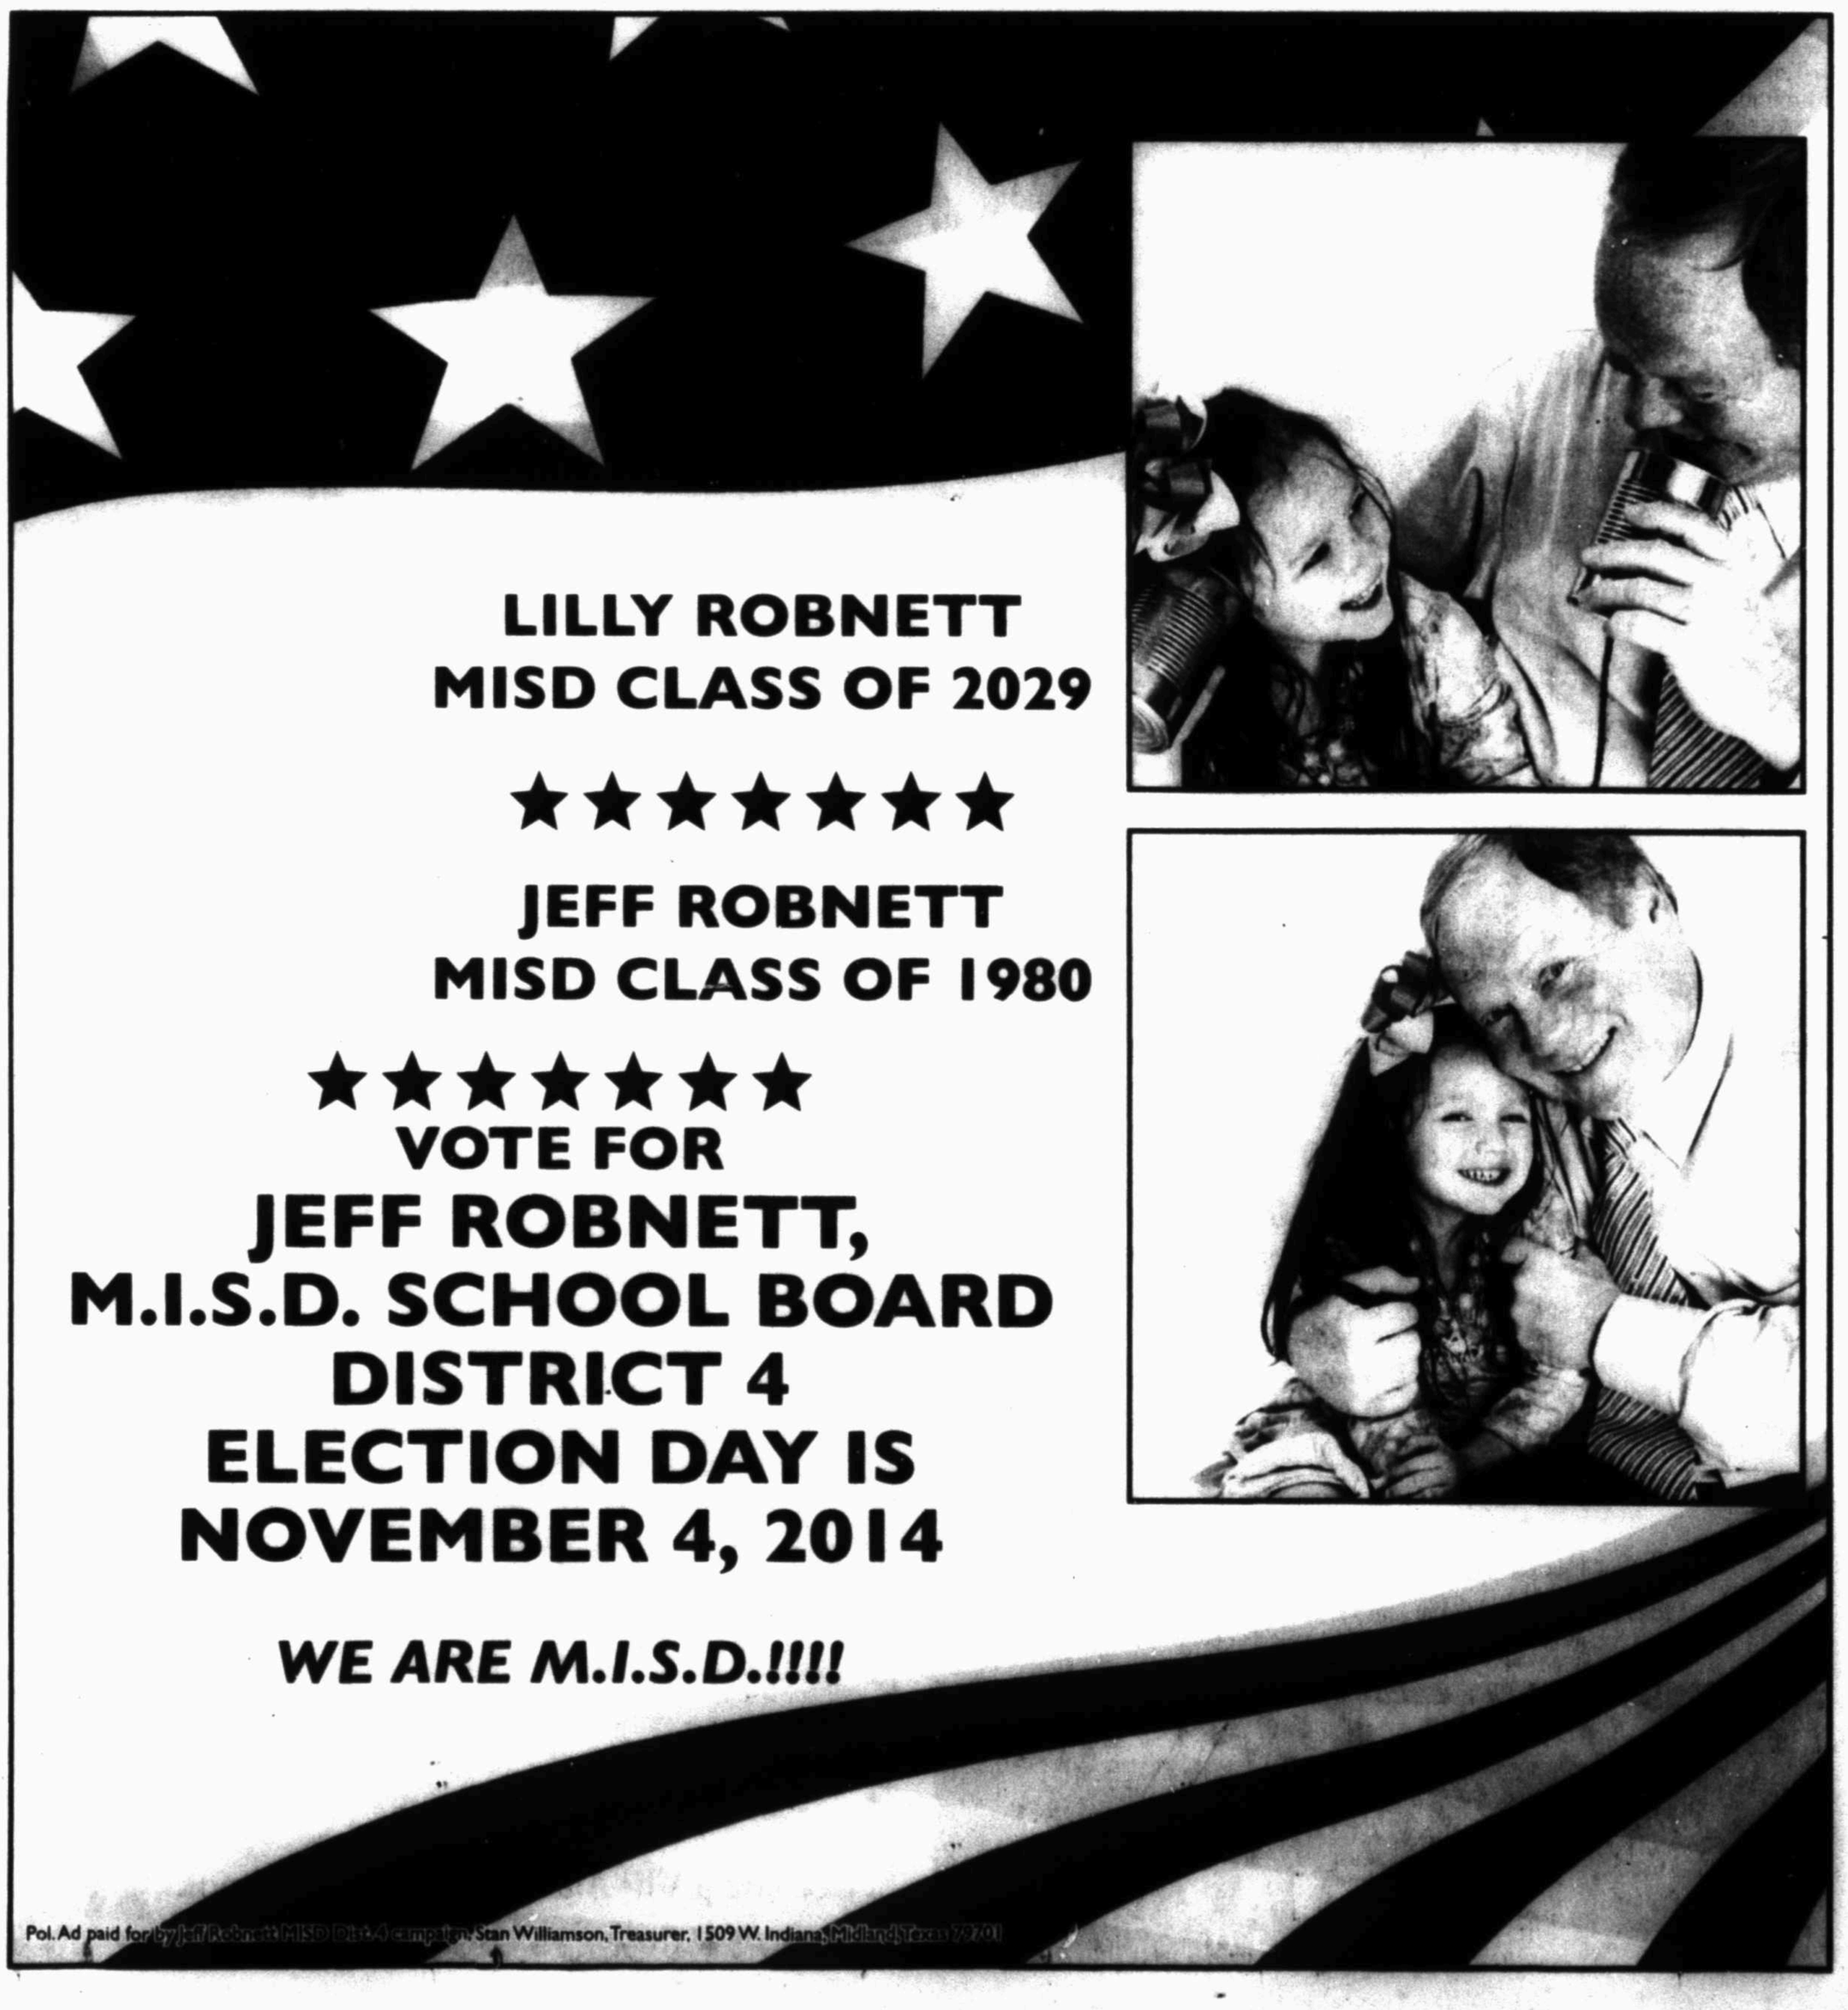

Here are some of Starboard's criticisms that might give a clue on changes diners might see:

■ SALTIER PASTA: Starboard took issue with Olive Garden for failing to salt its pasta water. "How does the largest Italian dining concept in the world not salt the water for pasta?" it asked.

■ BREADSTICK CONTROL: Olive Garden's famous unlimited breadstick policy also came under criticism. Starboard says servers need to be more disciplined in how many they bring out at a time.

■ SIMPLER ITALIAN MENU: Menu items like burgers, Spanish tapas and fried foods like "Lasagna Fritta" were criticized for being inauthentic or unappealing. It also noted Olive Garden's menu has mushroomed to 96 items. Darden executives have acknowledged the need to simplify.

■ WINE WITH THAT? Alcohol should account for a higher percentage of sales, given how well it pairs with Italian food, according to Starboard. Alcohol only accounts for 8 percent of sales, which Starboard said is "unacceptable."

Unequal Pay: Must be a lot of good karma out there

By Barbara Ortutay

Microsoft CEO Satya Nadella speaks to students at the Talent India 2014 program in New Delhi on Sept. 30. Nadella's foot-in-mouth statement that women shouldn't ask for raises echoed throughout the tech industry and beyond Oct. 9, earning him quick derisions on social media and leading to a later apology.

NEW YORK — Don't ask for a raise. Keeping quiet will give you "superpowers" that will translate into employer trust and other "good karma" that will eventually come back around to your purse.

Microsoft CEO Satya Nadella was widely derided Thursday for his foot-in-mouth statement at an event celebrating women in computing. During his stage interview, Microsoft director Maria Klawe asked Nadella to give advice to women who want to advance their careers but are uncomfortable asking for promotions and raises. His pearl of wisdom? Just trust that the system will reward you "as you go along." He didn't say if he has employed that philosophy during his decades-long career at Microsoft. He later apologized.

Men are eight times more likely than women to negotiate salary when taking a job, according to a study by Linda Babcock and Sara Laschever for their 2007 book Women Don't Ask: The High Cost of Avoiding Negotiation and Positive Strategies for Change.

So how's that good karma working out?

■ On average, women in the U.S. working full time were paid 78 cents for every dollar that men earned in 2013, according to Census figures.

Where you live matters

Louisiana has the nation's largest gender pay gap — women make about two thirds of what men are paid. The District of Columbia has the narrowest with women averaging 91 percent of men's salaries.

This likely has to do with the types of jobs available. Washington boasts highly paid jobs going to a highly educated workforce. In Louisiana the more lucrative jobs are in the oil and gas industries, which employ mostly men.

Your technology job is cutting-edge — your paycheck isn't

■ Women in the computer technology industry earn an average of $6,358 a year less than men, factoring in education, age, region and occupation differences. That's according to a recent study by the nonprofit American Institute for Economic Research. You're a mom too? The "child penalty" will cost you $11,247 a year.

■ Female engineering majors earn an average of 88 percent of their male counterparts' salaries a year after graduation. Female majors in computer and information sciences earn 77 percent of men with the same degree, said a study by the American Association of University Women based on the Education Department's 2008-09 Baccalaureate and Beyond Longitudinal Study. It included about 15,000 graduates.

■ Most of the technology companies that have revealed diversity figures this year say women comprise less than one-third of their workforce. At Microsoft Corp., women make up 29 percent of employees.

■ Facebook's Chief Operating Officer Sheryl Sandberg continues to publicly champion women in the workplace with her "Lean In" book and campaign. But women make up only 31 percent of Facebook Inc.'s total workers and only 15 percent of its tech employees, mainly in engineering.

■ Thirty percent of people who work at Google Inc. are women, but when it comes to leadership positions, the number drops to 21 percent.

Want to work on Wall Street? Stay single

■ The pay gap is even bigger in the financial services industry, where women earn $14,067 a year less than men, said the American Institute for Economic Research. Brides earn $16,491 less than single ladies and all men.

■ Just 6 percent of partners in U.S. venture capital firms are women, according to a recent study from Babson College. That's down from 10 percent in 1999.

Top jobs scarce

■ Only 5 percent of Fortune 500 companies are led by women. The 25 female CEOs are represented across most industries, including IBM Corp.'s Ginni Rometty, PepsiCo's Indra Nooyi and General Motors' Mary Barra. In 2009, Ursula Burns became the first African-American woman to lead a Fortune 500 company when she was named CEO of Xerox Corp. Safra Catz was recently named one of software giant Oracle Corp.'s two CEOs, along with Mark Hurd. Defense contractor Lockheed Martin Corp. named its first female CEO, Marillyn Hewson, last year.

■ About 17 percent of corporate board seats are held by women in the U.S., according to the nonprofit Catalyst.org, which tracks issues surrounding women in the workplace. Norway boasts the highest percentage at more than 40 percent; Saudi Arabia has the lowest at 0.1 percent.

Financial leaders pledge 'bold' action on recovery

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — World financial leaders on Saturday promised "bold and ambitious" action to boost a global recovery that has shown recent disturbing signs of weakness.

That pledge from the International Monetary Fund's policy-setting committee comes after a week of stomach-churning swings in the financial markets triggered by growing fears that parts of Europe could be in danger of slipping into another recession.

The 188-nation IMF called increasing economic growth an "utmost priority" and pledged to make the necessary structural changes that would stimulate greater growth.

The commitments came in a closing statement from the IMF's steering committee at the fall meeting of the IMF and World Bank.

Officials also endorsed the IMF's efforts to support three West African countries battling the Ebola crisis.

Managing Director Christine Lagarde said at a news conference that the IMF has made $130 million available to Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone, and that the IMF and other international agencies stood ready to do more.

The IMF and World Bank meetings were preceded by talks among finance ministers and central bank presidents of the Group of 20 nations, which comprise 85 percent of the global economy. Those discussions focused on the recent growth slowdown and troubling signs that some countries in Europe could be close to another recession.

Killings force change in focus for Mexico leader

By E. Eduardo Castillo and Christopher Sherman
Associated Press

Associated Press

President Enrique Pena Nieto adjusts his microphones as he arrives at a press conference to express his outrage over the recent disappearance of 43 students in Guerrero State following a violent confrontation with the police, in Mexico City on Oct. 6. Guerrero state officials worked Monday to determine whether 28 bodies found in a clandestine grave are students who were attacked by police suspected of drug gang links in the southern state of Guerrero.

MEXICO CITY — Since taking office nearly two years ago, President Enrique Pena Nieto has sought to project an image of Mexico on the move, beating back chronic drug violence and pressing ahead with historic constitutional and economic reforms, even offering to contribute soldiers to UN peacekeeping missions in other parts of the globe.

The problem is that, back home, Mexico's grotesque cycle of violence continues, with soldiers and police implicated in recent atrocities. Pena Nieto's determination to focus on Mexico's moment has been derailed by Mexico's mess.

International human rights groups are calling an alleged massacre of 22 suspected gang members in southern Mexico this year a test case for the president, and the world is demanding answers in the disappearance of 43 college students, who are feared buried in mass graves discovered since they vanished Sept. 26 following a clash with police.

Pena Nieto addressed the violence twice this week as everyone from outraged Mexicans to the United Nations and the U.S. State Department called for a full accounting in both mass killings.

He said he has exhorted his security Cabinet to step up the investigation.

"This tarnishes the collective national effort we have to truly turn Mexico into a country of greater progress and development," he said, referring to the disappearance of the 43 students from a teachers college.

Until now, Pena Nieto had left security to his interior minister as the administration restricted the release of information and played down drug-related crime.

The macabre headlines probably are not what Pena Nieto was hoping for during a period in which his security forces nabbed two top drug traffickers and the president was awarded the Global Citizen Award by a U.S. think tank. In the case of the missing students, many of the bodies in the mass grave were burned. One victim of the police violence had his skin peeled from his skull. More than two dozen local police have been arrested in the case.

"It has become increasingly evident that in the process of not allowing this single issue to hijack this administration, he has made the mistake of ignoring it altogether," said Tony Payan, director of the Mexico Center at Rice University's Baker Institute for Public Policy.

Pena Nieto took office vowing to change the narrative after his predecessor's bloody war on drugs, portraying Mexico as ready to lead and as fertile ground for foreign investment. His administration has pushed through reforms to the education system, changed the tax code and opened the energy sector to more foreign investment, among other achievements. He can also point to a string of high-profile drug arrests including that of Juarez cartel leader Vicente Carrillo Fuentes, whose capture was announced Thursday, and Hector Beltran Leyva, who was apprehended last week while eating fish tacos in a central Mexico seafood restaurant.

But the taking down of capos also has grim side effects. As major drug organizations were dismantled under Pena Nieto's predecessor, smaller and often more-violent bands have taken their place, causing a spike in crimes such as kidnapping and extortion. The students in the southern state of Guerrero allegedly went missing at the hands of corrupt police working with the Guerreros Unidos, which was born out of the breakup of the once-powerful Beltran Leyva cartel.

The mayor of Iguala, where the students disappeared, is on the run amid accusations that he and his wife were linked to the drug gang and to killings, allegations that date back at least to last year.

Some are calling this the biggest crisis so far for Pena Nieto's administration, a watershed moment similar to scandals decades ago that led to the establishment of the National Human Rights Commission and the dismantling of a government organization for political spying.

Pena Nieto on Thursday called on all levels of government to do their jobs and coordinate in fighting violence.

"This is a moment for new ideas, not just telling us to all to behave well," Milenio newspaper columnist Carlos Puig wrote Friday about Pena Nieto's response so far. "It's time for something much more serious than just 'coordination.'"

So far, there don't seem to be many new ideas.

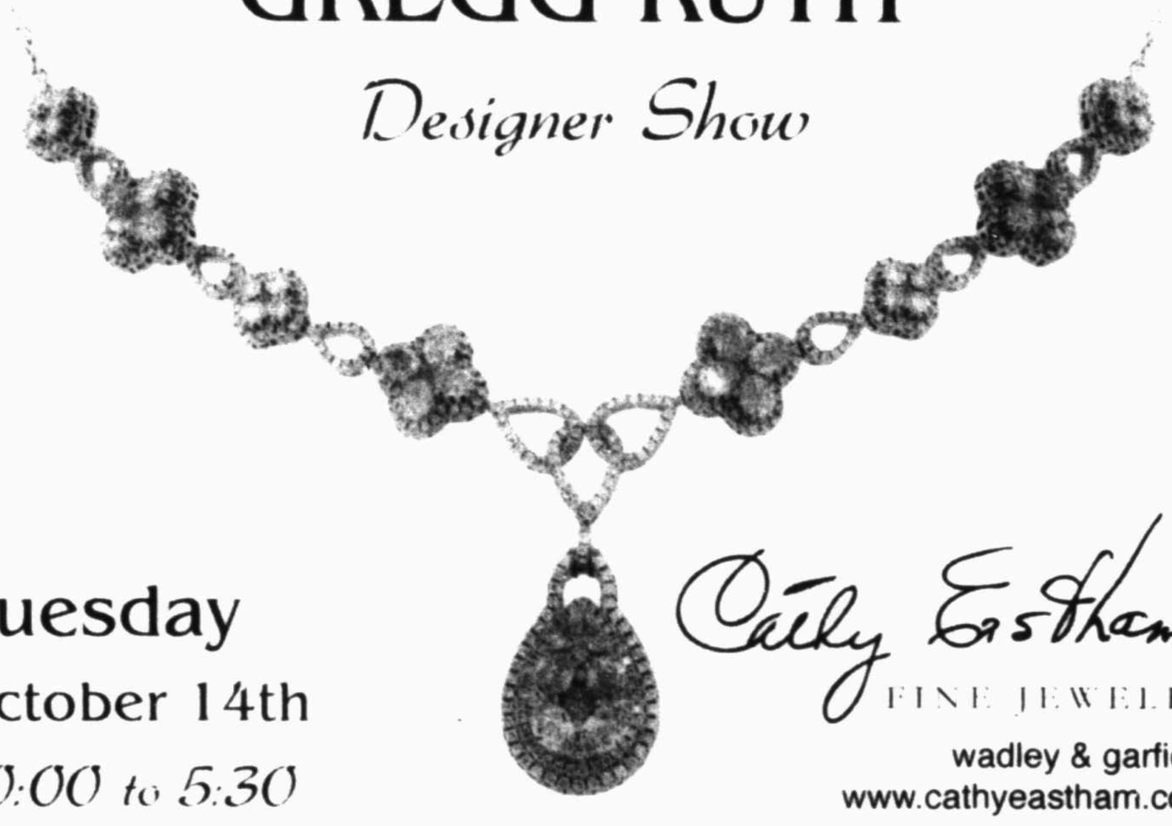

"The objective is to keep everything under the rug, but it doesn't work for very long," said Erubiel Tirado, a security expert with the Iberoamerican University.

It now appears that federal and state officials have known for some time about the drug-cartel ties of Iguala Mayor Jose Luis Abarca, who has been pictured with Pena Nieto and several of his Cabinet members.

And the government version of what happened during a June 30 confrontation between soldiers and suspected gang members keeps evolving, ever since a witness described it to the media as an extrajudicial massacre. The witness, who has not given her name for fear of reprisals, said 21 of the 22 were killed after surrendering.

The army originally said all 22 died during a fierce gunbattle with troops, but the story changed in recent weeks to pin the killings on three rogue solders now charged with murder.

FAA, flight attendants square off over electronics

By Jessica Gresko
Associated Press

A passenger checks her cell phone before a flight in Boston in 2013. The nation's largest flight attendants union says it wants airline passengers to return to stowing cellphones and other electronics during takeoffs and landings, but the group's arguments didn't seem to fly Friday in court.

WASHINGTON — The nation's largest flight attendants union said it wants airline passengers to return to stowing cellphones and other electronics during takeoffs and landings, but the group's arguments didn't seem to fly Friday in court.

A lawyer for the union argued before a three-judge panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit that aviation officials acted improperly last year in clearing passengers to use small electronics during takeoffs and landings.

The union says the devices can distract passengers from safety announcements and become dangerous projectiles. The union also says that in letting passengers keep the devices out, the Federal Aviation Administration changed an agency regulation without steps required by law.

But the judges hearing the case suggested they won't be prying portable electronics out of passengers' hands.

"Airlines have always had discretion on how to handle this," Judge Harry T. Edwards told a lawyer for the union, the 60,000-member Association of Flight Attendants.

The FAA announced late last year that it was changing guidance that had for years resulted in passengers stowing cellphones, tablets, and music and video players during takeoffs and landings. Under new guidance, airlines can let passengers use the devices during those times as long as the plane is properly protected from electronic interference and the airlines get the FAA's approval. Cellphones still must be in airplane mode when in use.

The FAA said that since the announcement, it has cleared 31 airline operators to let passengers use small electronics on takeoffs and landings. Last year, those operators together carried 96 percent of U.S. commercial passengers.

Union lawyer Amanda Dure told the judges that "anyone who has been on a plane in the last year has seen a huge change."

But Dure argued that in greenlighting the expanded use of electronics, officials violated the federal Administrative Procedure Act. The act requires government agencies to give the public notice and the ability to comment when a rule is changed. That didn't happen properly, the union argues.

Judge Janice Rogers Brown asked about the flight attendants' concern that allowing passengers to keep out electronics leaves "more things to fly around" the airplane cabin during turbulence. But a lawyer for the government, Jeffrey Sandberg, told the judges that cellphones and other small devices are no more dangerous than books that passengers have been allowed to keep out.

The government argued in court documents that the judges hearing the case don't have authority to review the issue and that the FAA's action didn't trigger public notice and comment requirements. The FAA did request and receive public feedback before updating its guidance, attorneys wrote, telling the judges the agency considered some 1,000 responses including one from the union.

Still, the government said FAA just notified airlines that it believed small electronics could safely be used during takeoff and landing, a departure from previous guidance that encouraged airlines not to permit them during those times. The airlines themselves have long determined whether and when passengers can use electronics and that hasn't changed, the government said.

The court will issue a written ruling at a later date.

OPINION

Panetta's not wrong to question leadership

■ The president took a chance that the outcome in the Middle East would be different

MICHAEL GERSON
Washington Post Writers Group

Disloyal or not, former Defense Secretary Leon Panetta has delivered a root-and-branch critique of President Obama's approach to the Middle East.

In his new book, "Worthy Fights," and in surrounding interviews, Panetta contends that the White House was "eager to rid itself of Iraq"; that in 2011 an agreement to preserve American influence in that country was allowed to "slip away"; that this outcome endangered Iraq's "fragile stability"; and that he warned the White House this might result in "a new haven for terrorists to plot attacks against the U.S." Panetta argues that aiding Syrian rebels in 2012 would have allowed America to "know whether or not there is some moderate element in the rebel forces" and that Obama's failure to act in 2013 after the Syrian regime crossed his chemical weapons red line "sent a mixed message, not only to [Bashar al-] Assad ... but to the world." During the last two years, Panetta argues, Obama "lost his way" on security issues.

Panetta emerges as a public official who was often right and often ignored. He was the consistent loser in a running, heated, internal administration policy debate on the Middle East — which can happen to someone who serves at the president's pleasure. But the manner in which he lost raises additional questions about the organization of the White House and the leadership of the president.

Panetta and others have testified to a highly centralized process in which decisions are generally sucked into the White House. This is the continuation of a long-term trend: the concentration of executive authority in the Executive Office of the President (his immediate staff in the National Security Council, the Office of Management and Budget and other White House offices) rather than in government departments (State, Treasury, etc.).

But the Obama White House seems to have intensified this tendency. Senior figures such as Panetta and Defense Secretary Bob Gates were kept on short leashes by relatively inexperienced members of the White House staff, with the resentment eventually spilling out in memoirs.

This approach is designed to tighten control of the decision-making process and tamp down risk. It might work for an organization of 300 people. But the federal government is vast and the White House staff is small. A river is forced through a water pipe. Since the senior staff can focus on only a few matters at a time, some urgent issues (witness Ebola) get attention late. And a centralized decision-making process (as most executives will tell you) can easily become a bubble. A narrow pipe tends to exclude contrary, inconvenient information.

Panetta also (politely) raises questions about the quality of Obama's leadership — speaking aloud what many congressional Democrats and administration officials will only whisper to reporters on deep background. While praising Obama's intelligence and good intentions, Panetta describes a reticent, lawyerly, even passionless leader who has disdain for his opponents without the motivation to engage them.

My own view is not quite so polite (though I do not doubt the intelligence and good intentions part). The foreign policy translation of the leadership traits that Panetta describes is endless deliberation often resulting in grudging, time-limited, scaled-down action (such as in the Afghanistan surge) or a more natural choice to avoid or defer action. For nearly three years in Syria, the administration had no apparent strategic design. American policy was the accumulated result of avoiding decisions that involved risk and hoping that events would take a more favorable turn.

Obama's decision not to enforce his chemical weapons red line in 2013 should be remembered as the embodiment of his leadership approach. The president followed his natural inclination toward inaction, even at a serious reputational cost to America. He justified it, remarkably, by pointing to American war weariness (an argument that is apparently no longer convenient). And the final decision, by all accounts, was made by two people — the president and his chief of staff — on the South Lawn of the White House.

All presidential leadership traits, of course, are judged in light of outcomes. If the Middle East were at peace, Obama's lawyerly process might appear brilliant. But the outcome we've actually seen is directly related to the reticent, insular leadership style Obama has often exhibited. Problems in the Middle East do not improve like wine with time; they rot like meat.

You go to war, however, with the president you have. And all should hope he finds his way.

OPINION EXTRA

Davis attack on Abbott is political hackery at its finest

As we know, the goal of American politics is to make the opponent look bad. Sometimes that means finding and distributing the worst possible photo of the opponent — preferably while eating something, preferably something sloppy that nobody looks good eating.

And sometimes it means conflating words and numbers to make something that might be nothing look like it might be something, preferably a scandal that earns a word ending in "gate." I admire the political hacks who do it best. This, my fellow Americans, is why the best of them profit handsomely during campaigns while the rest of us just suffer through them.

KEN HERMAN
Cox Newspapers

All of you who yearn to get into the political consulting racket can learn from a current back-and-forth between the Wendy Davis and Greg Abbott gubernatorial campaigns. There are pros on both sides.

Team Davis touched it off Wednesday with an email headlined: "Greg Abbott Spent $45 Million of Taxpayer Money on Travel." A subheadline said, "Under Abbott, Attorney General's Office Spends $45.9 Million Jetting Around."

Where's this guy been going? Vegas? Paris? Saturn?

"Greg Abbott has spent more than $45 million in taxpayer money on his office's travel during his time in office," the email said, leading into this quote from Zac Petkanas, the Davis campaign's communications director: "Talk about traveling in style — Abbott spent more than $45 million of Texas' taxpayer money on travel during his time as attorney general. Just imagine what he'd spend if he gets a promotion."

OMG. Scandal. How can we possibly let such a profligate spender of our money become our governor. End of race. Make your plans now for the Gov. Wendy Davis inaugural festivities in January.

The numbers are there, taken from State Comptroller's reports. Abbott's state-funded travel ranged from $3.4 million in 2003 to $5.3 million in 2008. It's hard to argue with numbers, isn't it? Not always.

The fact is the key words in the Davis camp's blowhard hyperbole are in the opening line, the one saying Abbott spent "more than $45 million in taxpayer money on his office's travel during his time in office."

So wait, not every penny of the $45 million in taxpayer money was spent on Abbott's personal "jetting around?" Correct, and Team Abbott folks pounced on that fact. Watch how they skillfully parried this into an attack on what they want you to see as a heartless opponent.

"You are correct," Abbott spokesman Matt Hirsch told me when I asked if the $45 million actually was spent on lots of attorney general employees, including bunches of lawyers, doing lots of travel for lots of state-business reasons. "It spans a decade and includes the more than 4,000 employees at the AG's office."

And — and here's where a real pro shines — Team Abbott countered with this from Deputy Communications Director Amelia Chasse, who very righteously noted that Davis' complaints about the travel expenditures clearly show she is a bad person: "It's insulting that Sen. Wendy Davis thinks that caring for crime victims, fighting to secure child support payments for single parents, prosecuting sex offenders and training sexual assault nurse examiners across the state is a waste of taxpayer money."

Petkanas is sticking with the original attack, noting the release twice says the travel money was spent on Abbott's "office."

"Including before the line 'jetting around,'" Petkanas said.

"No," he said, responding to my notion that maybe the attack was a bit over the top. "I don't think it's unfair to let the public know that Greg Abbott authorized $45 million of taxpayer money in travel expenses while he was in office."

On Thursday, the Davis campaign followed up with a release noting Abbott "has billed taxpayers more than $75,000 to jet around in the state's private plane."

Again, some of this travel is by staff, not Abbott.

Is $45 million scandalously too much to spend on 10 years of travel for a 4,000-employee agency doing important state work? I don't know. But I'm sure it would be scandalous if, as the Davis folks kind of want you to think, it all had been spent on Abbott.

Let's circle back Petkanas' zinger about Abbott, the one in which he said, "Just imagine what he'd spend if he gets a promotion."

I imagine he might spend less. The governor has a smaller staff than the attorney general.

Obama conducts a war for show

■ When Jimmy Carter thinks president is too passive, it's time for soul-searching in the Situation Room

RICH LOWRY
King Features Syndicate

Compared with President Barack Obama, even Jimmy Carter is John McCain. The former president practically synonymous with American weakness and retreat thinks Obama was too slow to act against ISIS and gives his current strategy only "a possibility of success," provided it involves (unspecified) ground troops.

When you are too passive for Jimmy Carter, it's time for some soul-searching in the Situation Room. The late-1970s are calling and want their foreign policy back.

The war against ISIS so far is desultory and occasional, a campaign of underwhelming force. ISIS has still been on the verge of taking the Syrian town of Khobani, abutting the Turkish border, and on the offensive in Iraq. The erstwhile JV team is defying all the military might that the world's lone superpower is willing to muster.

There has been renewed talk of how, as former Secretary of Defense Leon Panetta put it the other day, the fight against terrorism will be a 30-year war. At this rate, it will be a generational struggle merely to get ISIS out of Mosul.

To this point, almost everything has lent credence to the skeptical interpretation of Obama's war: That in reaction to a spectacular media event (the horrific ISIS beheadings), the president staged his own media event, an inconsequential bombing campaign accompanied by a tough-sounding, prime-time speech.

The experience of the surge in Afghanistan, the red-line fiasco and now this suggest that Obama is a hawk precisely to the extent he feels the politics don't allow him to wiggle out of it.

His talk of Afghanistan as the good war in the 2008 campaign was too fresh for him to countenance an immediate defeat. So he ordered the surge and tried never to speak of it again, and now wants to completely liquidate our military presence on the failed model of Iraq.

He had seemed determined to strike Syria after Bashar Assad used chemical weapons last year, then found a way to crab-walk away from his own earnest warnings.

The war against ISIS happens to be just enough to placate the public's hawkish mood without getting too far out in front or taking actions that will fully commit the president.

The Powell Doctrine is to use maximum military power to achieve a clear objective; the Obama Doctrine evidently is to use minimal military power to create a vague impression. Message: I care about defeating ISIS, for now.

If the president intended to catch up to public opinion, he hasn't gotten there yet. A Fox News poll last week found that 57 percent of people think our actions against the Islamic State haven't been aggressive enough. Sixty percent of Democrats (Jimmy Carter apparently among them) don't think Obama has been tough enough in taking on Islamic radicals.

The critics include two of his former defense secretaries, both of whom have taken the extraordinary step of publicly criticizing him. Who knows what Chuck Hagel eventually will have to say?

The anti-ISIS campaign is a brilliant tactical success, in the sense that we are hitting what we target. But it is a strategic nullity.

It is too small to make much of a difference, and there are limits to how much can be done exclusively from the air anyway. We can bomb fixed targets — refineries and bridges — and perhaps tanks and large troop movements. The problem is that ISIS is a guerrilla force not highly vulnerable from the air, and it becomes even less so once it is entrenched in cities.

Regardless, there are no American ground controllers on the front lines, and they are essential to meaningful precision targeting. If they are ruled out — together with the troops necessary to provide protection and logistics — the campaign against ISIS looks like a holding action.

It caused a minor furor when Obama said a few weeks ago that he didn't have a strategy against ISIS yet. The scandal is that, with American planes dropping bombs in two countries, he still doesn't.

Pipe water from the Gulf instead of using potable water for fracturing

Approximately 27,000 wells have been fractured in Texas since the Energy Policy Act of 2005. Depending on who you believe, each fracture (oil and gas wells are often fractured multiple times) 30,000 to 1.2 million gallons of water are used. Take an average of 500,000 gallons per fracturing times 27,000 and you have a staggering 13.5 billion gallons of water used in Texas for fracturing in the past nine years.

This rough calculation is only to say that fracturing for oil and gas uses a lot of fresh potable water — our drinking water. And once used for fracturing, it is taken out of the system, never to return. In other words, fracturing water is too toxic to be used for anything other than fracturing again. The recycling track record for oil companies is about 7 percent. Where does the other 93 percent of fracturing water go? Back into the earth in a segment of production know as deep injection, i.e. down another hole.

What about a pipeline? A 500-mile pipeline from the Texas Gulf to the Permian Basin — a 48-inch diameter poly pipeline taking saltwater to the oil fields.

Desalinate along the way, using flared gas to power the equipment, pump salt water inland, pump back spoiled water and contract to clean it at the Gulf Coast, where 98 Texas refineries are doing the same thing with crude oil every day.

The benefits? An end to the colossal grabbing of our limited drinking water and a stop to pumping toxic water back into the earth — desalinate and repurpose.

Couple the pipeline with a high-speed rail system to bring in the imported drilling muds, cement and pipe. Why pay a truck a dollar of fuel per ton mile from the Port of Houston to Midland when a rail system could do it for a fifth?

Too expensive? President Obama says we've a hundred-year play on shale hydrocarbons. Financed over a century, it's nothing. I'd pay another 25 cents a gallon for gasoline knowing my children's water supply is not being wasted. Would you?

Media seems to be infatuated with Davis

Judging from two West Texas newspapers, the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal and the Midland Reporter-Telegram, it appears that much of the media may be infatuated with Texas gubernatorial candidate, "aging Barbie" and Fort Worth lawyer Wendy Davis.

The Avalanche-Journal on Sept. 5 carried a front page photo and lead-in article of Ms. Davis, a photo and longer article on Page 2A and a third larger and longer article on Page 3B. The latter two are releases from the Associated Press, the most liberal media outlet in the U.S. These articles not only take us on a trip through her two abortions (two of four pregnancies), but also into the very private sanctuaries of the hearts and souls of her and her husband. The longer article makes a pitch for her pre-election released book, "Forgetting to Be Afraid."

The Reporter-Telegram carried a Cox media release (late last month) arguing that Ms. Davis did not have a meltdown in the gubernatorial debate in Edinburgh. A final AP release in the Reporter-Telegram on Sept. 28 was titled "Here's how a Wendy Davis loss could help Texas Democrats." Winning by losing seems to parrot Obama's "leading from behind — losing."

Most of lawyer Davis' donations have come from liberals in New York and California, paragons of freedom and democracy. No doubt, trial lawyers from Texas and elsewhere have donated heavily.

The ploy of releasing an autobiographical book detailing her two abortions is distasteful. The AP releases are so obviously biased toward Ms. Davis and Democrats, they should have been designated "paid political ads."

More officers needed to control speeders

Will our law enforcement ever patrol our streets, highways, county roads and the interstate again? The only time they are ever seen is following a wreck. Maybe some of those killed or injured in wrecks would still be alive if there was any kind of enforcement on these motor speedways.

One never sees law enforcement with radar set up on any of our roads. If one sets the cruise on the set limit, the only time you will ever pass another vehicle is when they are exiting or stalled. Tailgating and speeding is now a national pastime in our area.

Trust me, Midlanders, wherever you are going will still be there when you get there, even if you drive the posted speed limit. I know our law enforcement units are understaffed, but even using an empty car with a camera or radar set up might slow down some folks. My wife and I hate to go to the market or downtown anymore because of the out-of-control speeders.

So, City Council, mayor, county commissioners or whoever is in charge — please set the budget and hire more police officers and sheriff's deputies and get control of our streets and roadways to once again make it safe for nonspeeding citizens to get out and enjoy our town and not have to worry if someone will run you down. Thanks.

What is Islamists' agenda?

Call a spade for what it is. Do you suppose we would have even gone into Iraq if Cheney were not the CEO of Halliburton? Halliburton and its subsidiaries made a fortune in Iraq. Dick Cheney is a war profiteer, plain and simple.

Now we have ISIS. I can't believe these clowns call themselves Muslims. I was in jail many years ago with a guy who called himself Mohamed. He was a peaceful sort. He taught me that Jews, Christians and Muslims were all the children of Abraham. I can't see any agenda of the Islamists other than to subjugate — enslave the women folk.

When there was slavery in America, there was the underground railroad to help slaves escape. I think we need an underground railroad in the Middle East to help their women escape. I say we bring the women to America, help them get educated so that they can return to the Middle East and run it themselves. That might serve as a "fair amount of glue."

Honor flight is special way to honor veterans

On behalf of my 91-year-old father, Midlander William Bowlin, a World War II veteran, I would like to extend a heartfelt thank you for your support of the Texas Permian Basin Honor Flight. This trip to Washington, D.C., on Sept. 17-19 to visit and tour the memorials was a most special way to honor veterans from World War II, the Korean War, the Vietnam War and the Iraq and Afghanistan wars. My father, for one, would not have been able to travel to Washington, D.C., for this once-in-a-lifetime trip had it not been for this support.

Accompanying my father on the trip, I became very aware of the countless organizational hours that must have been expended in order to successfully execute an endeavor of this magnitude. I would like to extend a special thank you to Jack Barnes, retired from the U.S. Navy, director of the Texas Permian Basin Honor Flight, and to Jeremy West, chairman of the honor flight committee, as well as all of the other volunteers for their dedication to this program. From the send-off rally, the trip itself and ending with the welcome-home rally, no stone was left unturned to honor these veterans, and we are deeply grateful for your efforts.

Thank you again for your patriotism, and may God bless you.

Curbside trash pickup would be costly

Before moving to Midland in 1979, I lived in two communities that had curbside trash pickup. It was obvious to me then and now that Midland's alley trash pickup with Dumpsters is a much better system. I would venture a guess that at least 75 percent or more of residents in Midland currently enjoy the convenience of alley trash pickup.

Why would I want curbside trash pickup where I would have to drag a large trash receptacle full of garbage out to the street every week and then drag the empty container back after the trash is picked up. And by the way, many residents will get tired of doing this, so they will just leave the receptacles in the street, which is ugly, dirty and would be dangerous to traffic on many Midland streets. It should also be mentioned that some elderly senior citizens are not physically able to move these type of trash receptacles.

Curbside pickup would be costly and labor-intensive, and residents of Midland would shoulder the additional costs. Private recycling companies and some former city councilmen may lobby the Midland City Council to change the current system, but I would encourage the council not to do so.

Too many owners give up their pets

What is it with so many Midlanders surrendering their "pets" to the Animal Shelter? I am with a foster-based rescue, and out of the 20 dogs I am currently fostering, 13 were owner releases. Do owners not realize what can happen to these dogs? Almost every dog in there is a "good dog" — yours isn't any different. Almost every dog in there is "cute and sweet" — yours isn't going to stand out.

Between 200 and 300 adoptable dogs are euthanized every month. Chances are, your dog isn't going to make it out. Owner releases are available immediately, for either adoption or euthanasia. The rescue I am with has more than 100 dogs in foster homes right now.

Another problem is the strays. These dogs get 72 hours to get claimed. At that point, they are available immediately. Canine-spread disease is unavoidable, and although the shelter received a large donation to improve conditions, distemper, parvo, kennel cough and URIs can never be 100 percent eradicated. So, a dog sitting there for three days or more has a greater chance of catching something.

The number of unspayed and unneutered dogs in this town is mind-boggling. If you live inside the city limits and can show proof of residency, you are eligible for a $70 spay/neuter voucher to offset the cost of the surgery.

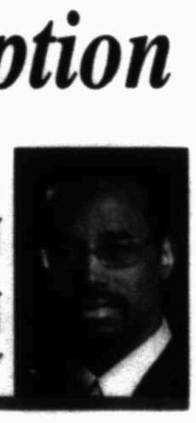

If you have lost your pet, please go the shelter and look at the dogs in their kennels. There are numerous Facebook sites dedicated to reuniting lost pets with their owners. Social networking has reunited many dogs with their owners.

When you get a dog, you need to think about the fact that you will be dedicating your time to this dog for the next 15 years or so. There are very few instances in which releasing a dog to a "kill shelter" is unavoidable. If you aren't in it for the long haul, then get a goldfish.

Keeping Ebola out of America is best option

■ We have no other choice if we are truly going to fight the deadly disease

BEN CARSON
Creators Syndicate

As the Ebola infection rate and death toll continue to rise rapidly on the African continent, many of us have become complacent with the measures we have taken to protect Americans from this deadly disease.

Other nations, such as England, have gone so far as to ban flights emanating from the affected regions of Africa. The Centers for Disease Control and various infectious-disease specialists have done a yeoman's job in their efforts to prevent infected individuals in our country from contaminating others. They have put excellent protocols in place that would virtually guarantee complete safety. Unfortunately, all of those valiant efforts cannot preclude human error, which remains an ever-present danger, regardless of intellect.

For this reason, I and many others are not comfortable with the idea of bringing infected individuals into our midst when we can readily treat them elsewhere and happily receive them back once the infectious danger has passed.

When one does a logical benefit-to-risk analysis, it is clear that the worst things that could happen by intentionally bringing this dangerous disease to America are far worse than the best things that could happen. Some say if we bring infected individuals here, it will accelerate research endeavors and a potential cure or effective vaccination. Others say not bringing infected citizens back demonstrates an insensitivity toward wonderful people who risk their lives for others. I am sympathetic to these arguments, and if we did not have safer alternatives, they would convince me.

Perhaps we should be concentrating on stopping the spread of Ebola in Africa and eradicating it from Earth. Like the war on terrorism, we should fight it elsewhere to decrease the likelihood of needing to fight it here. African lives are every bit as valuable as lives in America or anywhere else, and this humanitarian crisis has enormous health implications for the whole world. If, as some officials say, bringing infected individuals back here expedites the acquisition of knowledge that could lead to a cure, as all components of the disease could be more carefully studied, why not transport more researchers and facilities to the heart of the epidemic and dramatically accelerate the process?

I have no desire to induce panic, but we must realize that some viruses are known to undergo mutations that make them even more virulent. If the Ebola virus becomes even more pathologic, the ensuing panic and destruction of human life could go far beyond what is currently being acknowledged. This means there is some urgency to getting the outbreak in Africa under control.

The point is, this is an extremely dangerous disease with the potential to spread throughout several African countries and, subsequently, into other parts of the world, including the United States. Most crises prompt warnings, which, if heeded and acted upon, can avert disaster. On the other hand, if arrogance and mistakes characterize the response, horrendous results are likely to ensue.

If we stop trying to prove we are right — whatever our opinions are — and instead concentrate our efforts on halting the spread of the disease where it is concentrated and finding a cure, perhaps we could avert needless panic and death throughout Africa, America and the world.

Economic growth brings benefits, responsibility

In 1966, amid an economic slump and a slowing of the global thirst for oil, a 38-unit apartment complex was built off Colorado in downtown Midland. It was small by current standards and beige in color. It featured an in-ground pool and a Saltillo tile roof. It was nice and convenient to downtown offices, shopping and night life. But frankly, there was nothing overly unique about this new construction — except for one thing. Sadly, it would be the last apartment complex built in downtown Midland for 48 years.

Nearly a half century later, in November of this year, the Wall Street Lofts will open its doors to downtown's newest residents. With a waiting list of more than 500 hundred prospective tenants, the construction of this apartment community not only serves a pent up demand for housing driven by an roaring economy, but more importantly it symbolizes those things we enjoy about these good times. Even as we wait in long lines, experience bad traffic and see prices of everyday items sky rocket it is important to remember everything we enjoy about good economic times. Because the benefits of the boom (corporate expansion and job creation, retail and restaurant choices, population growth) clearly outweigh its downsides.

Think about what we know. At least three major players in the oil and gas industry have chosen to invest hundreds of millions of dollars in corporate office construction. Concho Resources has made a tremendous commitment to building a downtown Midland campus. Pioneer Natural Resources is completing its new offices at Big Spring and the loop. Chevron has traveled west near the Scharbauer Sports Complex to create its new corporate home. Combined, these companies have or are investing almost a half billion dollars in corporate expansion creating great paying jobs. It would take the construction of 1,667 new $300 000 homes (and the people to buy them) to equal this level of tax base expansion. Taxpayers would share the costs of infrastructure and other improvements to these homes. Corporate investments actually help keep taxes low for homeowners. Moreover, these companies and others just like them are investing in our schools, our nonprofits and additional training and education for their employees.

What we also know is that we didn't and still don't have enough people to fill all the jobs that are being created. Nor do we have enough housing to house all the newcomers who want to enjoy the economic prosperity for themselves and their families. But our population is exploding anyway. By some estimates Midland will exceed 150,000 residents by 2016 (if we haven't already). People are flocking to Midland from all over the country and the world to fill these jobs. And thank goodness. Imagine the choice that XCOR or Cimarex would have if no one would come here to work (although we still struggle in this area). They would be reluctant to choose Midland. Sure there would be less traffic. Sure there would be shorter lines. But there would also be fewer restaurants and retail choices. Chipotle, Cinergy Cinemas, Basin Burger House and a second or even third H-E-B would not choose Midland. They couldn't choose Midland. There would not be enough people to support choosing Midland.

The momentum of economic growth is hard to stop. But even if you could, would you want this to end? Would we want fewer new businesses instead and fewer job opportunities for everyone, including many of our children who are coming back? Would we want fewer restaurant and retail opportunities to get fewer people? Would we want less commercial construction for higher taxes? Our guess is no because cities are either growing or dying. We are fortunate to have all the benefits of a boom. Communities around the nation would probably do anything to have new people, new apartments, new houses, new restaurants, new retailers, new corporate headquarters, new schools and new roads even if it meant more people, longer lines and more traffic sporting license plates from all over the country. But simply enjoying the benefits of the boom come what may is not enough. That's not what we're saying. We do have a responsibility here. If we are to continue enjoying all the good coming from this incredible economy, we must do at least two things.

First, we must remind ourselves of all that is great about Midland and share it with the new companies and the new residents. Second, we must help our local leaders craft a vision for Midland's future and keep them focused on achieving long-term orderly growth. And who knows, maybe we'll have some suggestion in future columns.

Keg stands, illicit kisses spice Louisiana races

By Charles Babington

AP file photo

Fifth District U.S. Rep. Vance McAllister sits with his wife Kelly in their home in Swartz, La., on June 30. McAllister announced Monday that he's changed his mind and intends to run for re-election despite the scandal caused by a video showing him kissing a married female aide. Louisiana remains a rollicking and colorful battleground, even if that's not always intentional.

PINEVILLE, La. — In what's turned out to be a largely joyless midterm congressional election, one state has upheld its reputation as a rollicking and colorful battleground, even if that's not always intentional.

Want to see a three-term senator squirt beer into a football fan's mouth as the fan does a "keg stand"? Come to Louisiana.

How about a crusty character trying to return to Congress after a decades-long absence? Actually, Louisiana has two such candidates, but only one spent eight years in prison.

Elsewhere, campaigning has been marked by torrents of negative ads, numbingly familiar attacks on President Barack Obama's health law and millions of dispirited voters — or perhaps nonvoters.

To be sure, there is serious campaigning and high stakes in Louisiana.

Republicans' effort to oust Democratic Sen. Mary Landrieu is crucial to their goal of netting six new seats to control the Senate. Republican Gov. Bobby Jindal isn't on the ballot, but he's positioning himself for a possible presidential run in 2016.

Still, Louisiana is the only state where the "Duck Dynasty" TV stars abandoned the "kissing congressman" and made ads for a relative — that would be Zach Dasher of Ouachita Parish — who got into the 5th Congressional District race.

Candor is often missing at political events, but it flowed at a recent Chamber of Commerce forum in Pineville. Eight men running for the 5th congressional seat filled the stage.

The Green Party's Eliot Barron explained his tardiness, saying, "I don't know my way around Pineville." Chamber members grimaced, but they seemed even more perplexed when he said he wants to "reintroduce big game into national parks."

Clyde Holloway asked voters to return him to the seat he held from 1987 to 1993. He has stayed busy since then, winning election to the state's Public Service Commission but losing bids for governor, lieutenant governor and Congress.

Holloway called for tougher immigration policies. "We ought to know every person who's crossing our border," he said, "whether they're Hispanic or whether they're Muslims or whatever."

"I'm not politically correct," he said, lest anyone miss his point.

The message from political neophyte Dasher, whose uncle is Phil Robertson, star of Louisiana's popular "Duck Dynasty" show, was largely in line with the others. He denounced "the federal takeover of our state rights and individual liberties."

In a radio ad, Robertson says his nephew "has been officially and thoroughly vetted by the Robertson clan for 36 years."

The Robertsons previously backed the lawmaker Dasher wants to oust, Republican Rep. Vance McAllister.

McAllister initially said he wouldn't seek another term after a videotape showed him passionately kissing a friend's wife. But McAllister's wife publicly forgave him, and he decided to run.

Speaking last at the Pineville forum, McAllister chastised those who pledged to fight Obama on every front. "You want to be extremely conservative? Then the district loses," he said. "You have to be pragmatic" to secure grants and other benefits for constituents.

McAllister's scandal might end his political career. But it won't land him in prison, where Democrat Edwin Edwards spent eight years on corruption charges.

The state's most flamboyant politician since Huey Long, Edwards served seven years in Congress, then 16 years as governor over a 24-year span. Acquitted on fraud charges in 1985, he won a 1991 election backed by signs saying "Vote for the Crook."

The joke seemed less funny when he entered prison in 2002.

Now 87 and campaigning with his young wife and their toddler son, Edwards seeks to succeed GOP Rep. Bill Cassidy, who is running for the Senate, in the 6th Congressional District.

This year, a Republican opponent has printed yard signs saying, "Don't Vote for the Crook."

In Louisiana's "jungle primary," all candidates compete on the Nov. 4 ballot, regardless of party. If no one exceeds 50 percent, the top two finishers enter a runoff.

Louisiana's fiercely contested Senate race produces fewer chuckles, but Landrieu manages to have fun at college football tailgate parties. She did a line dance, "the Wobble," with fans at Southern University. At Louisiana State University, she indulged requests to hold the beer nozzle as a young man guzzled, upside down, during a "keg stand."

When critics tut-tutted, Landrieu told them to "get a life. That's how we roll."

At a Senate forum in Kenner, which Cassidy skipped, Landrieu stifled a laugh when minor candidate William Waymire Jr. cited her 18-year Senate career.

Warner says he's finding his role in US Senate

Associated Press

RICHMOND, Va. — Sen. Mark Warner doesn't often sound like he's working at his dream job.

He frequently expresses frustration with the Senate's slow pace and partisan gridlock, and he even considered quitting in 2012 to run for his old job as Virginia's governor.

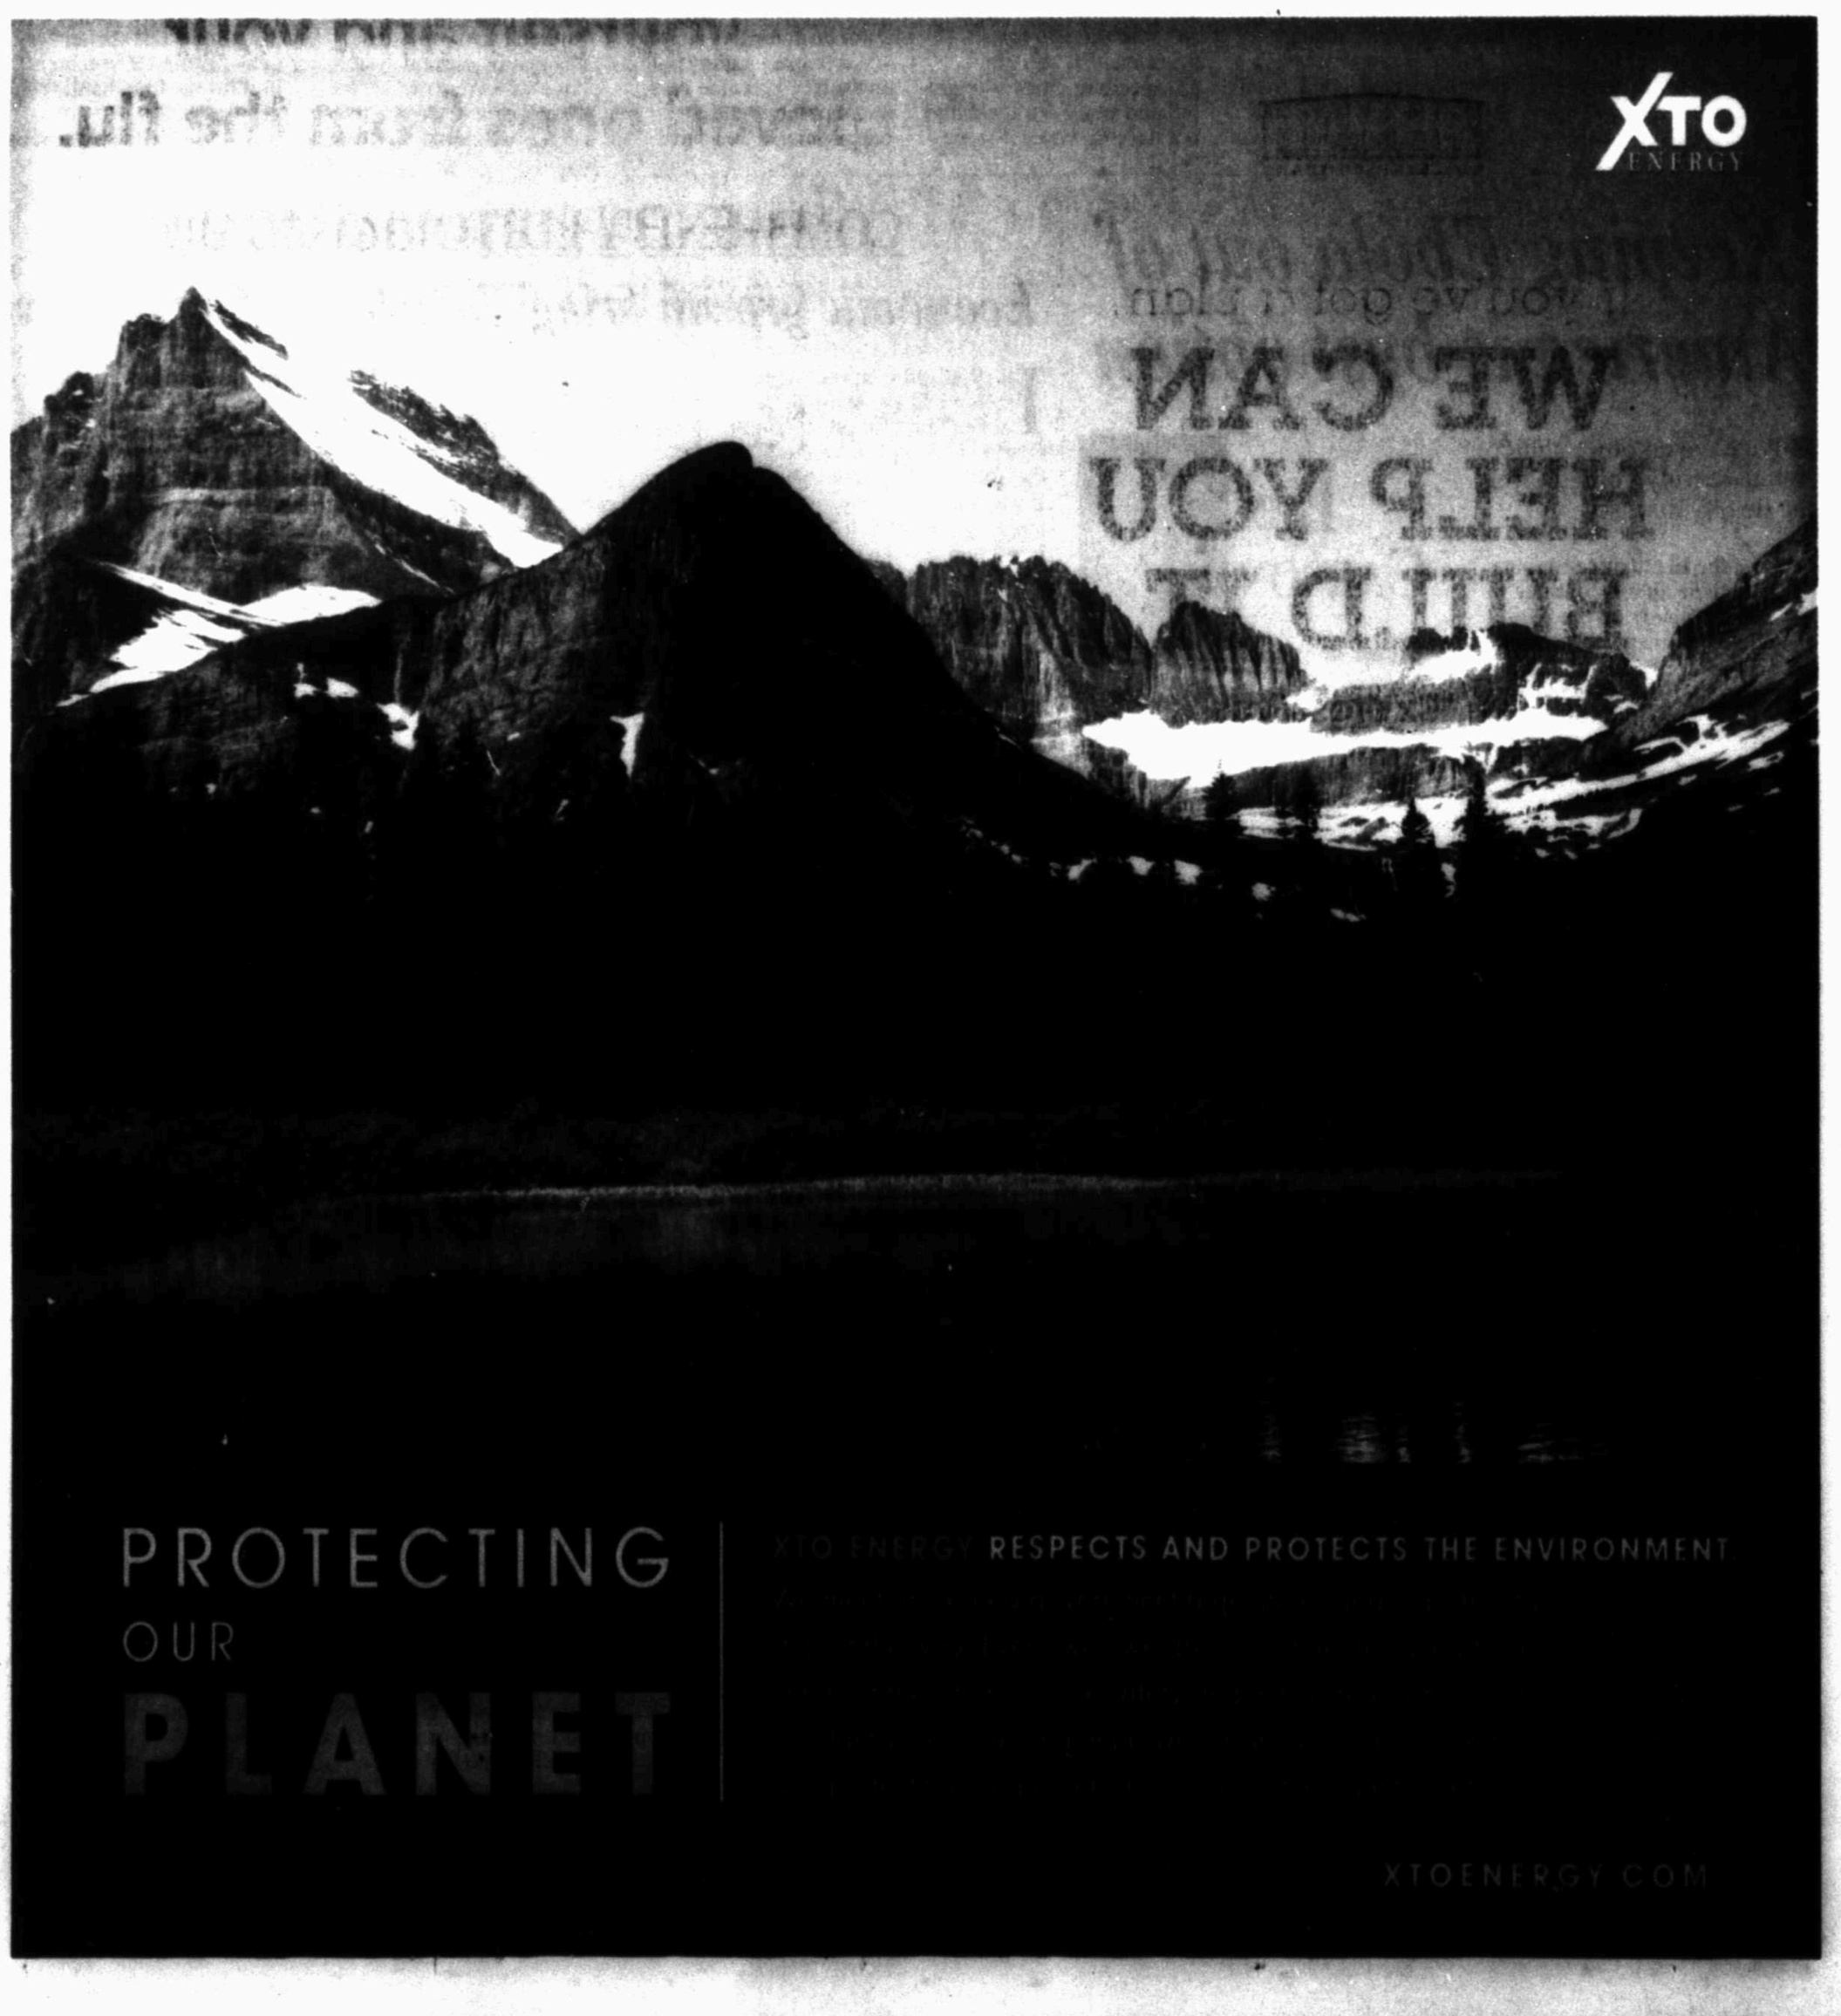

The former cellphone pioneer and venture capitalist is a multi-millionaire — one of the richest members of Congress — and certainly doesn't need a senator's salary to pay the bills.

So why does he want a second term?

Warner, a Democrat, said he's begun to figure out how the Senate works and how he can make it a better place.

"Everything I've done in life has not had a straight path to success, it's had pitfalls along the way," Warner said in an interview with The Associated Press. "And coupled with that, I refuse to acknowledge the notion that America's not going to continue to be great — and the only way it can be great in our democracy is if you have people who can find common ground."

Warner is facing challenges from Republican Ed Gillespie and Libertarian Robert Sarvis in next month's election. While Warner's Democratic colleagues in several other states are facing tough re-election prospects thanks in part to President Barack Obama's sagging popularity, public polls have shown Warner with substantial leads.

As Mexico cracks down, drug money comes to US

By Elliot Spagat
Associated Press

CHULA VISTA, Calif. — For a company that booked $12 million in annual sales importing snacks like chile- and lime-flavored chips from Mexico, Baja Distributors Inc.'s offices were oddly quiet. There were no signs outside. Its small warehouse was almost empty. Phones went unanswered.

Investigators say there was a reason for the anonymity: The business was laundering money from Mexican drug traffickers. Baja Distributors, whose executives denied laundering drug money, brought more than $17 million from Mexico in 18 months.

U.S. front companies for cartels aren't new, but U.S. officials say they took a more prominent role after Mexico capped dollar deposits in cash at $7,000 a month for businesses in 2010, later raised to $14,000. As a result, they say, cartels sought companies to deposit money in American banks and wire it back in pesos under the guise of international trade.

San Diego, the largest American city on Mexico's border, became a magnet for cash coming to the country from Mexico, according to an Associated Press analysis of customs declarations since 2009.

Mexican President Enrique Pena Nieto lifted the restrictions last month, saying the anti-money laundering measure harmed honest businesses. The move sparked concern among some U.S. officials that cartels may go back to walking into Mexican banks to deposit sacks of drug-tainted dollars.

"If one day you have a restriction and the next day that restriction no longer exists, one would think logically that it now becomes easier," said Joseph Burke, head of U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement's National Bulk Cash Smuggling Center.

Pena Nieto's move came two days after U.S. agents raided businesses in downtown Los Angeles' fashion district that were suspected of funneling drug money to Mexico and seized $70 million in cash.

Drivers have always stuffed trunks with cash from drug sales in the U.S. and went to Mexico undetected. That's never changed but, with Mexican banks out of the picture in 2010, cartels needed other ways to convert profits to pesos to fund their operations and luxurious lifestyles.

Couriers brought dollars back to the U.S. and often declared them to customs officials, as required for any amount of $10,000 or above, U.S. officials say. The Treasury Department imposed additional reporting requirements on armored car services at San Diego border crossings in August, calling it a response to Mexico's regulations.

U.S. border inspectors have little power to stop cash, and money laundering charges are difficult to prosecute, which leads some to believe the scheme will continue even without Mexico's restrictions. Investigators say bringing money back and forth across the border makes it more difficult for either country to track.

There was $3.73 billion declared at U.S. ports of entry from Mexico last year, up from $3.15 billion in 2009, the year before Mexican regulations took effect, according to the AP's analysis of customs declarations. Declared money from Mexico totaled $3.96 billion during the first eight months of this year.

At San Diego's Otay Mesa border crossing, declared cash soared from $10.6 million in 2009 to $1.17 billion in 2011 and $1.78 billion last year.

It's unknown how much of that was legitimate trade, but the U.S. Senate Caucus on International Narcotics Control reported last year that couriers were bringing a "significant" amount of drug dollars to the U.S. through land crossings with Mexico.

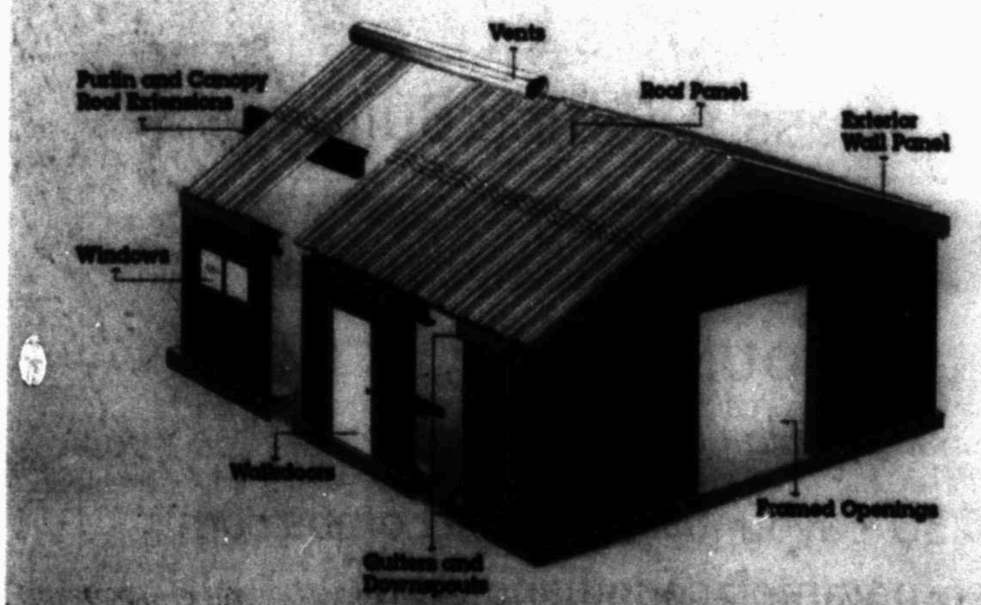

In Calexico, a border city east of San Diego, couriers came from Mexico with sacks of dollars after Mexico's regulations took effect, some on scooters, said Vince Piano, a Phoenix police lieutenant and executive director of the Southwest Border Anti-Money Laundering Alliance, a group of law enforcement officials.

Baja Distributors caught the eye of Immigration and Customs Enforcement agent Nick Jones last November when he was scouring customs declarations. Numerous transactions jumped out, according to a search warrant affidavit that linked the activity to Mexico's banking restrictions.

The company declared $17.2 million on 274 trips through San Diego's San Ysidro port of entry from April 2012 to September 2013. Money was wired to Mexico from American bank accounts.

Jones thought the company's suburban warehouse was too small and quiet for the revenue it reported. Interviews with competitors led him to believe there was no reason to bring so many dollars from Mexico.

The founder of Baja Distributors and two coworkers received suspended sentences of one year in jail, which they won't serve if they complete three years of probation. They pleaded guilty in state court to engaging in an unlicensed business after prosecutors agreed to drop money laundering and other charges.

Stepped-up Ebola screening starts at NYC airport

By Karen Matthews
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Customs and health officials began taking the temperatures of passengers arriving at New York's Kennedy International Airport from three West African countries on Saturday in a stepped-up screening effort meant to prevent the spread of the Ebola virus.

Federal health officials said the entry screenings, which will expand to four additional U.S. airports in the next week, add another layer of protection to halt the spread of a disease that has killed more than 4,000 people.

"Already there are 100 percent of the travelers leaving the three infected countries are being screened on exit. Sometimes multiple times temperatures are checked along that process," Dr. Martin Cetron, director of the Division of Global Migration and Quarantine for the federal Centers of Disease Control and Prevention, said at a briefing at Kennedy.

Cetron added, "No matter how many procedures are put into place, we can't get the risk to zero."

The screening will be expanded over the next week to New Jersey's Newark Liberty, Washington Dulles, Chicago O'Hare and Hartsfield-Jackson in Atlanta.

Customs officials say about 150 people travel daily from or through Liberia, Sierra Leone or Guinea to the United States, and nearly 95 percent of them land first at one of the five airports.

Passengers arriving at Kennedy said the process of taking people aside for screening was orderly.

"They asked us a few questions, if we had been sick in the past few days," said 14-year-old Johnson Nellon, who flew from Liberia with his 17-year-old brother.

One man said his temperature was taken even though his country, Niger, does not have an Ebola outbreak. "They checked everything and everything was fine," Moussa Halidou said.

Public health workers use no-touch thermometers to take the temperatures of the travelers from the three Ebola-ravaged countries; those who have a fever will be interviewed to determine whether they may have had contact with someone infected with Ebola. There are quarantine areas at each of the five airports that can be used if necessary.

There are no direct flights to the U.S. from the three countries, but Homeland Security officials said last week they can track passengers back to where their trips began, even if they make several stops. Airlines from Morocco, France and Belgium are still flying in and out of West Africa.

A traveler from Nigeria, which has been lauded for its successful effort to contain Ebola, said she was screened twice in her native country, once in Lagos and again in the capital, Abuja, where she had a connecting flight.

"Nobody's panicking in Nigeria right now," the woman, Nonye Ike, said. "Everybody that has any fever or something, you'll just be isolated. I'm so grateful."

President Barack Obama has said the new screening measures are "really just belt and suspenders" to support protections already in place. Border Patrol agents already look for people who are obviously ill, as do flight crews.

AP Enterprise: How Ebola kills

Associated Press

Despite five days of intensive treatment, Thomas Eric Duncan's condition was deteriorating.

By the morning of Oct. 2, nurses noticed blood in the Liberian man's urine, and his stools were getting darker. Lab tests revealed worrisome signs of liver and kidney failure. Doctors suspected the 45-year-old welder was slipping into acute respiratory distress.

Then, suddenly, a hopeful sign. Duncan was hungry.

At 3:45 p.m., nurses raised the patient into a sitting position and gave him a snack — a packet of saltine crackers and some Sprite. It wasn't much, but no miracle was too small for the staff at Dallas' Texas Health Presbyterian.

"Patient states that he is 'happy right now,'" the nurse noted in the log.

Six days later, Duncan was gone. The first person ever to be diagnosed with the dreaded Ebola virus on United States soil was the first in this country to die of it.

Grieving and angry family members wonder whether the man they called Eric might have survived had health care workers not sent him home when he first presented himself at the hospital, Sept. 25, and whether doctors really did everything in their power to save him. "We're trying to get to the bottom of it," said Josephus Weeks, Duncan's nephew.

On Sept. 28, an ambulance carrying Duncan pulled into the hospital's emergency bay. It was just after 10 a.m.

Not 55 hours earlier, Duncan had come to the same emergency room complaining of a headache and abdominal pain. His temperature spiked to 103 at one point, and on a scale of one to 10, he rated his pain as an eight.

Doctors ran CT scans of his head and abdomen and did extensive blood tests before deciding it must be sinusitis. They sent him home with a course of antibiotics and told him to follow up with a doctor the next day.

A nurse's note said Duncan told her he recently had arrived from Africa. Somehow, that information did not make it to the attending physician.

Now, Duncan was back, only this time his symptoms included vomiting and diarrhea. His temperature was 103.1 degrees.

This time, the nurse's notes made it clear that Duncan had "just moved here from Liberia." This time, the doctor got the message.

"I followed strict CDC protocol," wrote Dr. Otto Javier Marquez-Kerguelen, referring to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention guidelines for treating potentially infectious patients. Wearing a mask, gloves and full gown, Marquez-Kerguelen began his examination and took a history.

"Pt states he has not been to any rural areas or funerals recently," he noted. "Pt denies any sick contacts. Pt denies chills. The pt does not do (sic) any other associated signs of sx (symptoms) at this time."

Among the possible diagnoses: malaria, gastroenteritis, influenza and Ebola.

Duncan was put into isolation. The nurses notified county officials; the doctor called the CDC.

By evening, Duncan was suffering from explosive diarrhea, abdominal pain, nausea and projectile vomiting. Efforts to bring down his fever failed.

Three more doctors were put on the case. Duncan received intravenous fluids to counter the dehydration, but there was still no firm diagnosis.

Shortly before noon on Monday, Sept. 29, Duncan asked the nurse to put him in a diaper, "because he feels too tired to keep getting up to the bedside commode." His fever spiked again to 103, and Duncan was wracked with chills.

Finally, at 2 p.m. on Sept. 30, doctors received the confirmation that all had been dreading: "Patient has tested positive for Ebola ..." The staff attending to Duncan traded their gowns and scrubs for hazmat suits and attendants would scrub the room with bleach.

By Oct. 1, sepsis had set in. Doctors ordered aggressive IV care in hopes of preventing kidney and liver failure.

Duncan tried to remain upbeat.

"Pt requested to watch an action movie," the doctor noted. "States he is feeling better."

Duncan told his nurse he wanted to try solid food, then refused his lunch tray.

The next morning, Duncan told his attendants that his abdominal pain had lessened. He said he was "trying to keep up good spirits and 'stay strong.'"

But there was now blood in his urine. Worried about his lung function, doctors added advanced antibiotics to Duncan's medication.

That afternoon, he ate his crackers and drank less than 2 ounces of Sprite.

In the morning note on Friday, Oct. 3, a nurse-practitioner wondered, "concern for liver failure?"

Nurses were urged to tempt Duncan with applesauce, bananas and other bland foods; at one point they offer ice cream. A nutritionist wanted to start total parenteral nutrition, a kind of IV feeding used in the severely ill, and the doctors sought advice from the CDC.

That afternoon, a doctor's note declared Duncan's kidney function "much worse."

Stymied, physicians contacted Chimerix, a small pharmaceutical research firm based in Durham, North Carolina. They wanted to try the firm's experimental antiviral drug, brincidofovir.

The Food and Drug Administration gave its blessing.

"They were not holding anything back," said Dr. Amesh Adalja, an infection disease and critical care specialist at the University of Pittsburgh Medical Center who reviewed the records for the AP. "They were trying to support every organ system."

Just after midnight Oct. 4, nurses noted that "patient is restless. Coughing." Duncan's oxygen levels were dropping, and he went into multiple organ failure.

"Patient's condition is life-threatening and without immediate intervention would deteriorate," a doctor wrote. They placed a tube in Duncan's airway to help him breathe.

The body can compensate for a while, Adalja said. "But then "you go over this cliff."

"He's not slowly coming to a wreck, veering off the road. It's crashing," Adalja said.

Later that morning, a shipment of brincidofovir arrived and Duncan got the first dose.

The following day, Sunday, Oct. 5, the Texas doctors consulted with their colleagues at Emory University in Atlanta about additional options.

Monday morning, as doctors increased Duncan's dialysis, Weeks was picking his way across Louisiana in a hail storm. Riding with him were his son, Josephus Jr., Duncan's sister, Mai Wureh, and Duncan's mother, Nowai Korkoyah.

So close in age, uncle and nephew were raised more like brothers.

After more than a week of listening to his uncle's failing voice over the phone from his home north of Charlotte, North Carolina, Weeks decided it was time to go to him.

That evening, hospital staff escorted the family members to a room in the basement of Texas Presbyterian. It was the only way they would be allowed to see Duncan was via closed-circuit television.

"My son is dead!" Korkoyah cried out when she saw him. To Weeks, the immobile, expressionless face was "like a mask."

Haunted by the image of her son with a tube protruding from his mouth, Korkoyah could not sleep that night. When they returned to the hospital with the Rev. Jesse Jackson around noon on Tuesday, the mother declined the doctors' offer to turn on the screen.

As infectious in death as he was in life, Duncan's body was cremated.

Americans for Prosperity builds political machine

By Michael J. Mishak and Philip Elliott
Associated Press

MIAMI — Over scrambled eggs and croquettes, Andres Malave gave a last-minute pep talk to about a dozen volunteers in a Cuban restaurant before they left to meet voters.

"Don't just deliver a message," he said before beginning his own 3½-hour shift knocking on doors. "Try to get them engaged."

It's a strategy playing out in New England diners, Midwest truck stops and West Coast cafes: conservative organizers train and send out thousands of volunteers holding an iPad and an interest in helping fellow activists shift America's politics to the right.

They are the backbone of Americans for Prosperity, the flagship organization of the political network backed by industrialist billionaires Charles and David Koch. While the group's spending in Senate races has attracted national attention, it's these less noticed field efforts that could have greater impact and help reshape the Republican Party heading into the 2016 presidential election.

The organization has more than 500 paid workers in 35 states and has become one of the conservative movement's best organized, most powerful outside groups. Building on the community-based approach President Barack Obama used successfully in 2008 and 2012, it now has a political footprint unmatched among GOP-affiliated operations and is racking up legislative victories.

The group scuttled efforts to raise taxes to build a downtown campus for the well-regarded zoo in Columbus, Ohio, and derailed plans in Florida's Legislature to subsidize improvements to the Miami Dolphins' football stadium. It helped fend off a recall effort against Gov. Scott Walker, R-Wis., and pushed pro-business workplace laws in Michigan and Indiana.

It didn't shy away from going after traditional allies, as was the case when Gov. Rick Scott, R-Fla., briefly considered expanding Medicaid, a core component of Obama's health care law. Americans for Prosperity mobilized supporters, the Republican-led Legislature quickly rejected the idea and Scott dropped his proposal.

Tim Phillips, the group's president, said Americans for Prosperity had helped usher in "a once-in-a-generation renaissance for economic freedom policies," and was poised to keep financial issues prominent in 2016.

"For the first time, we have the infrastructure on our side to sustain these policy battles," he said.

This fall, Americans for Prosperity is campaigning against a sales tax increase in South Carolina's Greenville County, as well as trying to elect conservatives to office. Unlike what it has done for most of this year, the group now is engaging in explicitly political messages for the campaign's final weeks.

Potential presidential contenders have taken notice.

GOP Sens. Rand Paul of Kentucky and Ted Cruz of Texas spoke at the group's annual summit in August. Sen. Marco Rubio, R-Fla., headlined the Koch brothers' seminar for major conservative donors this year.

Americans for Prosperity sprung up in 2004 but has gained heft during the past two election cycles. Its budget has grown from less than $3 million in 2004 to more than $130 million for the 2012 election cycle.

In many places, the group has more trained and paid operatives than the traditional political parties have. Nowhere is this more obvious than Florida, where the group has 10 offices, its single largest field operation.

In the group's Orlando outpost, Phillips recently met with 15 volunteers who were wearing bright green T-shirts with Americans for Prosperity's torch logo.

Using iPads, they had spent the morning asking voters to take an issues survey that included the federal health law, government spending and taxes. The information helps them develop messages and test which arguments resonate with voters.

"That doesn't mean always knocking on the door and telling people 'Obamacare' is bad," Phillips told the volunteers. "That's important, but the goal is to bring some good and build relationships over the long term."

That strategy has become central to the Koch network of organizations. This year, they are trying to help Republicans pick up the six seats they need to win control of the Senate — Americans for Prosperity spent $25 million on TV ads alone — but it is not what drives the organization.

"People say our biggest goal is a Republican Senate. Not true," Phillips said. "Florida is our biggest imprint."

As the Nov. 4 vote nears, it's all about voter-to-voter contacts, relationships that could pay dividends in 2016 and beyond.

Despite demands, Syria no-fly zone a no-go for US

By Bradley Klapper
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Obama administration's promise to limit U.S. military engagement against Islamic State militants makes it difficult to accept Turkey's terms for joining the fight in neighboring Syria.

Turkey and other American allies want the U.S. to create a no-fly zone inside Syrian territory. Yet doing that would mean embracing one of two options President Barack Obama long has resisted: cooperating with Syrian President Bashar Assad's government or taking out its air defenses, an action tantamount to war.

There are increasing demands for the creation of a secure buffer on the Syrian side of the border with Turkey.

The U.S. and others in the coalition fighting the militants are pleading with Turkey, a NATO ally, to prevent the fall of Kobani, a border town where the United Nations is warning of mass casualties.

A "safe zone" would require Americans and their partners to protect ground territory and patrol the sky, meaning enforcement of a no-fly area.

For Turkey, a buffer might stem the flow of refugees and could give Syrian opposition fighters a staging ground for their drive to oust Assad, an Ankara aim.

The U.S. wants to keep the focus on combating Islamic State militants who have captured large areas of northern Syria and Iraq.

Some of America's closest partners and Obama's fiercest foreign policy critics are sympathetic to Turkey's request.

France came out in support this past week. The Republican leader of the House Foreign Affairs Committee believes Arab countries would shoulder the load. Even Secretary of State John Kerry said a no-fly zone is worth examining.

Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel has shown little enthusiasm, saying American leaders are open to discussing a safe zone, but creating one isn't "actively being considered."

For the U.S. military, there are red flags about establishing an area in Syria safe from attacks by the Islamic State group and Syria's air force.

Gen. Martin Dempsey, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, has estimated it would require hundreds of U.S. aircraft and cost as much as $1 billion a month to maintain, with no assurance of a change in battlefield momentum toward ending the Syrian civil war.

That means U.S. enforcement could become open-ended.

The Pentagon learned that lesson in Iraq, when in 1991 in the aftermath of the Gulf War, it established a no-fly zone over northern Iraq to protect Iraqi Kurds and another protective zone over southern Iraq to protect Shiites. Those zones were enforced by U.S. Air Force and Navy pilots for a dozen years, until the March 2003 invasion of Iraq.

A zone in Syria would set the stage for a direct confrontation with one of the Mideast's most formidable air defenses, a system bolstered in recent years by top-of-the-line Russian hardware.

The Syrians possess multiple surface-to-air missiles providing overlapping coverage and thousands of anti-aircraft guns capable of engaging attacking aircraft at lower levels.

Moscow infuriated Washington last year when it confirmed that it would sell to Syria its S-300 anti-aircraft missiles, considered to be the cutting edge in aircraft interception technology.

The political challenges of a no-fly zone may prove even greater.

Given the threat to U.S. pilots, the Pentagon would need rescue personnel stationed nearby, perhaps in Turkey or Iraq. If a plane were downed, American troops then would have to hit the ground in Syria, which Obama repeatedly has ruled out.

Direct military action against Assad's government also would stretch the United States' already tenuous claims that intervening in Syria is legal under U.S. and international law.

Many members of Congress are challenging Obama's justification for war on the basis of the Bush administration's 2001 authorization to fight al-Qaida. The Islamic State group grew from the al-Qaida movement, but the two now are enemies. The U.S. has no U.N. mandate to wage war in Syria.

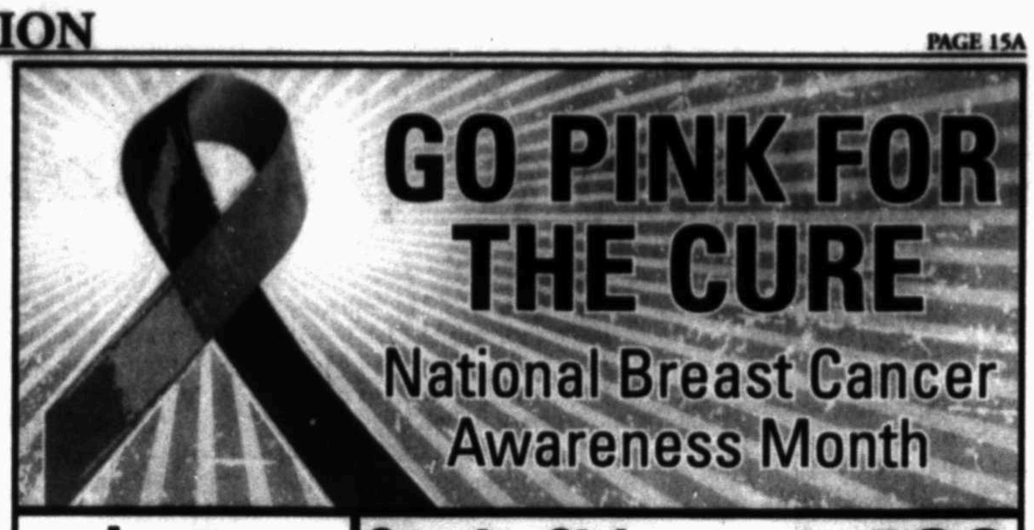

The U.S. could try for an accommodation with Assad. But even if Syrian forces are similarly battling the Islamic State militants, Obama has ruled that out because of alleged human rights violations and war crimes by those forces. Western governments and human rights groups cite massacres of civilians and opposition forces and chemical weapons attacks by Assad's troops.

Washington is searching for an alternative approach with Turkey.

On Friday, retired Marine Gen. John Allen, the U.S. special envoy, and his State Department deputy Brett McGurk met in Ankara with Turkish officials and NATO's secretary-general. More U.S.-Turkey talks were set for this coming week.

Turkey has agreed to support efforts to train and equip the Syrian opposition.

Kerry, who was heading to a conference in Cairo on Gaza reconstruction this weekend, was expected to discuss the effort against the Islamic State group with officials from Arab countries that are pressing for more robust American action.

New Jersey prep football case puts hazing in focus

By David Porter and Sean Carlin
Associated Press

PARLIN, N.J. — The investigation at a New Jersey prep football powerhouse that has led to sex crime charges against seven teens prompted an almost unheard-of sanction — the cancellation of the beloved program's season — that shook this solidly middle-class town and reignited a broader debate over dealing with hazing.

Authorities have released few details about the allegations against the seven Sayreville War Memorial High School students, but the school's superintendent called the abuse so pervasive he had no choice but to call off the season — a decision that has angered team parents but drew applause from advocates who called it the kind of bold stand necessary to confront hazing.

In a park across the street from the high school on Friday night — around the time Sayreville was to have played its homecoming game — Matt Norcross said football is a big part of the town's identity. Its team — the Bombers — has won three sectional titles over four years.

As he watched his 12-year-old stepson's youth football team practice, Norcross said only those responsible should be held accountable — not the entire team.

"Every football player gets hazed, but that goes way over the line," Norcross, 27, said. "If it is true, the people who did it should be prosecuted."

Stuart Green, founder of the New Jersey Coalition for Bullying Awareness and Prevention, praised Superintendent Richard Labbe's decision as one that could change the conversation on the issue of bullying.

Though he sympathized with those who feel it unfair to punish an entire team, Green said responsibility for such conduct generally extends beyond the individual players.

"When these problems arise they're never primarily a function of the individual kids or players," he said. "These problems primarily arise because of the behaviors of the adults and leaders who manage these environments."

No coaches have been charged, and it isn't clear if any knew about the alleged incidents. In his first public comments, head coach George Najjar told the Star-Ledger of Newark on Saturday that he would comment on the allegations but that "now is not the time."

The allegations involved attacks on four students over a 10-day span last month, authorities said. Six defendants were arrested Friday and the seventh surrendered Saturday. Their names were not released.

One of the attacks involved sexual penetration upon one of the alleged victims, Middlesex County prosecutor Andrew C. Carey said.

In a statement on the arrests, Labbe said the district will "come together as a school district and greater community to harness the strength required to support the young men who may have been victimized and then to begin the healing process for our beloved community."

The arrests came four days after the rest of the season was called off, prompting angry responses from parents of players. At an emotional school board meeting Tuesday night, some players denied seeing any of the alleged incidents occurring, and one parent said the cancellation "victimizes the kids who had nothing to do with it."

Reports of hazing surface regularly around the country, but rarely do they result in a sports season's cancellation.

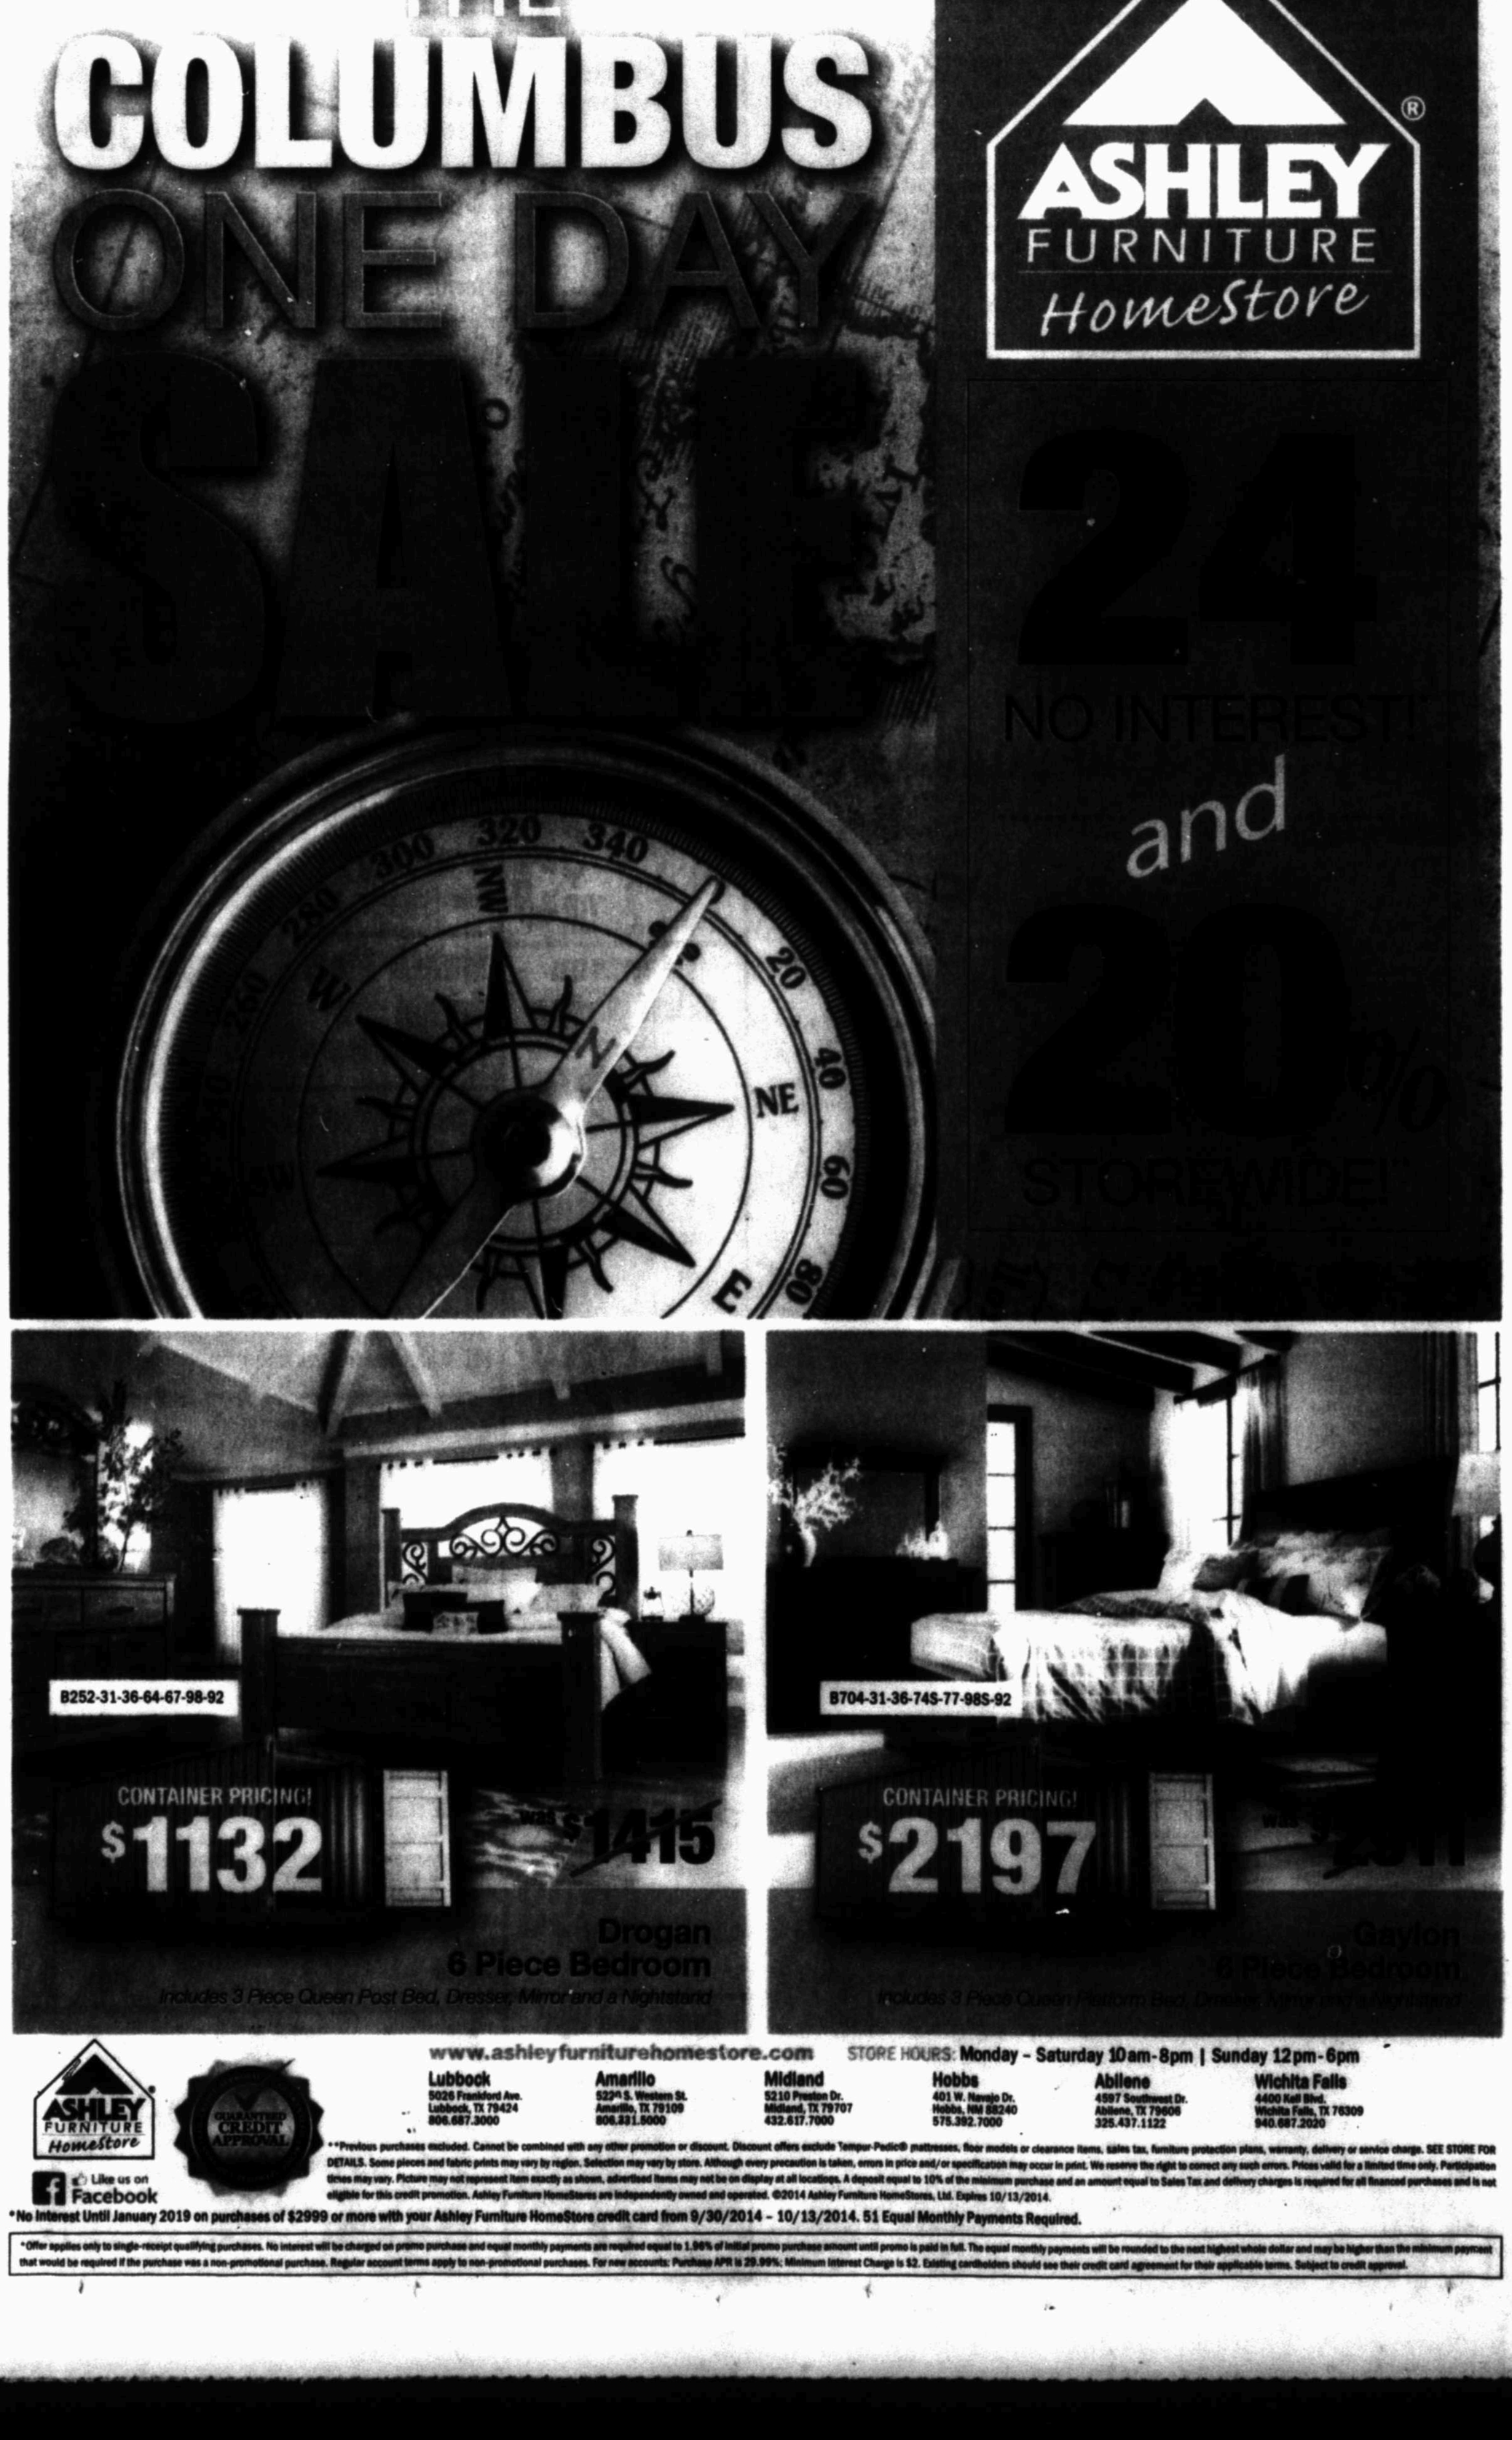

One well-publicized exception was Mepham High School on New York's Long Island, which canceled its 2003 season after reports of alleged sexual assaults by upperclassmen on younger players during a preseason trip to Pennsylvania.

Steve Timko, executive director of the New Jersey State Interscholastic Athletic Association, said he couldn't recall any seasons being forfeited because of hazing-related allegations in his 38 years involved with scholastic sports in the state.

Hazing can be hard to define and harder to detect precisely because it occurs within the confines of a closed group such as a team, fraternity or sorority that wields it as a requisite for inclusion, experts say.

"Getting to the root of the problem is difficult when victims, for the most part, are trying to become part of an inner group," said Brendan Dwyer, assistant professor at Virginia Commonwealth University's Center For Sport Leadership and a former college football coach. "They're willing to be part of a hazing ritual if they're going to be accepted on a team."

Sayreville now faces the disorienting prospect of an autumn without its football team, a point of pride in the community and one of the forces that helped restore a sense of continuity after Superstorm Sandy caused massive flooding two years ago.

Old courthouse site topic at council retreat

Possible configurations include new City Hall, renovated Midland Center

By Joseph Basco
jbasco@mrt.com

A green plot of land downtown. A renovated Midland Center. Green space rife with shade. Retail space and restaurants. A splash pad, food trucks, a performance stage and, possibly, a new hotel or new city hall. All of these are part of a newly proposed concept for the former Midland County Courthouse property and adjacent city-owned property.

On Friday, Rhotenberry Wellen Architects presented City Council and city staff with an idea of what to do with the land encompassing the courthouse, Centennial Plaza and Midland Center, which was referred to by the city and architects as the City Center. The City Center, as defined by architects Jim Rhotenberry and Mark Wellen, is the heart of downtown Midland and has historically belonged to its residents.

"The essence of what we're proposing is that the City Center will create a public space for the entire community," Rhotenberry said.

He listed public green space as the No. 1 priority for the City Center. An expanded Midland Center was second, a new city hall, library or historical museum was third, and supporting retail was fourth.

Wellen said the green space will support the buildings and development surrounding it and, likewise, the surrounding buildings will support the green space.

"You're trying to create a good public space that's open in the middle, that serves other public properties and, very importantly, enhances everything else around it," Wellen said.

The architects said the City Center concept also would preserve the property for future generations, catalyze adjacent downtown development, enhance a work-and-live downtown environment and reinforce the council's commitment to downtown, according to the presentation.

Architects offered three options that the city could pursue with the City Center. The first option is an expanded Midland Center with a park. The second adds a city hall in the northern portion of the center. And the third is a private hotel taking up the entire western portion of the City Center next to a park and expanded Midland Center.

E-cigs' popularity brings shops to Midland

By Rye Druzin

Since 2003, e-cigarettes and vaporizers have grown from a small group of users to a global market worth more than $1.8 billion in 2013, according to figures provided by Wells Fargo tobacco analyst Bonnie Herzog.

The rapid rise of e-cigarettes and vaping has led to a burgeoning market both online and on the ground, as some entrepreneurs open stores exclusively for vaping and e-cigarettes. There are two such store in Midland: Tall City Vapor Works and the Vape Shack.

Tall City Vapor Works was started by Brian Evans in response to demand for his custom e-liquid, which is the only liquid he sells at his four stores. Vape Shack also produces some of the e-liquid it sells. Owner Melvin Herron opened a store here because customers were driving from Midland to his Odessa store.

Both stores use similar core ingredients in their e-liquids: propylene glycol, or vegetable glycerin, nicotine and flavoring. Propylene glycol is used in food processing as a preservative and is generally recognized as safe by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration. Vegetable glycerin is also used as a preservative in products like frostings.

The two stores have opened at a time when the e-cigarette and vaping community have faced increased scrutiny by local governments and communities, even global organizations, such as the United

Not being understood by wife is No. 1 frustration

Some things really frustrate me. This is the part of real life that has to be dealt with every day.

All of us have things in our lives that totally put us off our game, and, ultimately, it's how we handle these frustrations that determines how we get through the day.

We really need to identify these frustrations because it helps to deal with the problem. Recognition is a key ingredient in working through the frustration.

I've been making a list of things that frustrate me the most during the course of a normal week.

So, here are the Top 10 frustrations:

1. When the wife doesn't understand me.

Hey, guys, we've all been here before. If you are like me, this is a place we visit often. And why doesn't the wife want to watch the football game?

2. When the holder is out of toilet paper.

You reach for the toilet paper and you are sickened by the feel of a cardboard roll. It happens more than you think.

3. Fees.

It's such a simple little word, but it creeps into our lives daily. It's getting where you never know the cost of anything because of hidden fees. I really get mad when I go into a store expecting to pay a certain amount of money only to find out it really costs more.

4. Grass grows.

It's a fact of nature if you have a yard, grass will grow. That means you have to mow the grass. Why can't we plant grass and it just stays the same height? And, please, don't talk to me about laying down fake grass.

5. When you have to depend on other people.

The world works great until you place the ball in someone else's hand. Does anyone do what they say they are going to do? Now you know why politicians rarely live up to expectations.

6. Doom and gloom.

I hate mopers and complainers. It's hard enough to be positive in this world without the people around you constantly dragging you down. If the world is

Ebola patient displayed symptoms at first ER visit

By Emily Schmall, Holbrook Mohr & Nomaan Merchant
Associated Press

DALLAS — The man said he'd recently traveled from West Africa, was in severe pain — rating it an eight on a scale of 10 — and had a fever that spiked to 103 degrees, enough to be flagged with an exclamation point in the hospital's record-keeping system.

Thomas Eric Duncan, displaying symptoms that could indicate Ebola, underwent a battery of tests during his initial visit to the Dallas emergency room before eventually being sent home with a prescription for antibiotics, his medical records show.

The Liberian man would become the only person to die from the disease in the U.S.

Duncan's family provided his medical records to The Associated Press — more than 1,400 pages in all. They chronicle his time in the ER, his urgent return to the hospital two days later and his steep decline as his organs began to fail.

In a statement issued Friday, Texas Health Presbyterian Hospital said it had made procedural changes and continues to "review and evaluate" the decisions surrounding Duncan's care.

Duncan carried the deadly virus with him from his home in Liberia, though he showed no symptoms when he left for the United States. He arrived in Dallas on Sept. 20 and fell ill several days later.

When he first showed up at the hospital, the man reported severe pain. Doctors gave him CT scans to rule out appendicitis, stroke and numerous other serious ailments. Ultimately, he was prescribed antibiotics and told to take Tylenol, then returned to the apartment where he was staying with a Dallas woman and three other people.

"I have given patient instructions regarding their diagnosis, expectations for the next couple of days, and specific return precautions," an emergency room physician wrote. "The condition of the patient at this time is stable."

After Duncan's condition worsened, someone in the apartment called 911, and paramedics took him back to the hospital on Sept. 28. That's when he was admitted and swiftly put in isolation.

Duncan died Wednesday, almost two weeks after he first sought help. He was 45, according to the records. Relatives said he was 42. The discrepancy could not be immediately resolved.

Josephus Weeks, Duncan's nephew, said his uncle's care was "either incompetence or negligence."

Either way "there is a problem, and we need to find the answer to it," he said, adding that it was "conspicuous" that all the white Ebola patients in the U.S. survived "and the one black man died."

Only a fraction of the documents are related to the first visit. Most are related to Duncan's care after he was admitted to the hospital.

Dr. Amesh Adalja, an infectious-disease specialist at the University of Pittsburgh Medical Center who reviewed some of the records, said the care after Duncan's second ER visit was "impeccable." Physicians immediately signaled concern about Ebola and "spared no measure to try to keep him alive."

The documents also show that a nurse recorded early in Duncan's first hospital visit that he recently came to the U.S. from Africa, though he denied having been in contact with anyone sick. There was no indication in the paperwork that he was asked any follow-up questions about his travels.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention had alerted hospitals nationwide to take a travel history for patients with Ebola-like symptoms.

The hospital said it had made changes to its intake process and other practices "to better screen for all critical indicators" of Ebola.

Doctors who evaluated Duncan did not respond to messages left at their offices by the AP.

A spokeswoman for the Texas Department of State Health Services said the agency was considering investigating the hospital for compliance with state health and safety laws.

The hospital has repeatedly changed its account of what the medical team knew when it released Duncan from the emergency room early on Sept. 26.

A few days later, on Sept. 30, it initially said Duncan did not tell the staff he had been in Africa. On Oct. 1, it said Duncan's nurse had been aware of the Africa connection but did not share that information with the rest of the medical team.

The next day, the hospital blamed a flaw in its electronic health-records systems for not making Duncan's travel history directly accessible to his doctor.

A day later, on Oct. 3, the hospital issued a statement saying Duncan's travel history had been available to all hospital workers, including doctors, who treated him during his initial visit.

Duncan's travel history was listed in a nursing notice but not in the physician's note, Adalja said.

The patient's 103-degree fever might warrant "a little more investigation," Adalja said. A chart showed Duncan did not arrive with a fever but left with one.

After it became clear that Duncan was suffering from Ebola, another option would have been to give him a transfusion from an Ebola survivor in the hopes that antibodies in the blood could help him fight the disease.

But Duncan did not receive a transfusion because the blood types did not match, the hospital said.

Dr. Kent Brantly, the first American flown back to the U.S. for treatment of Ebola, confirmed that account, saying he spoke with a doctor caring for Duncan and was willing to donate blood. But their blood types were incompatible, he said Friday in an interview with Abilene Christian University's alumni magazine.

Christine Mann, spokeswoman for the Texas Department of State Health Services, said Friday that Duncan's remains have been cremated, but she did not say when, where or by whom. Meanwhile, drums of potentially contaminated material taken from the apartment where he became ill was incinerated Friday at a hazardous material processing center in Port Arthur.

Also Friday, the World Health Organization announced that the Ebola death toll had surpassed 4,000 confirmed, probable or suspected Ebola deaths. All but nine were in Liberia, Sierra Leone or Guinea.

Aryan Brotherhood brings terror over tattoo

By Dane Schiller
Houston Chronicle

HOUSTON — With the Aryan Brotherhood in Texas, it's all about "the patch."

"The patch," a tattoo, is to be worn only by members of the infamous prison-born gang, where belonging is for life and betrayal means death.

If a member gets kicked out, or someone is found to be wearing the patch as a poser, then the pain is coming.

One of the gang's enforcers, Kenneth Michael Hancock, was sentenced in Houston this week to 15 years in federal prison for using a blowtorch to burn one of the tattoos off the rib cage of an ousted member. In another instance he was part of a crew that made a man who was not part of the gang burn a tattoo off his own body.

"When gang members are using blowtorches to inflict punishment, it strengthens our resolve to see every last one of them prosecuted," Robert Elder, head of the Houston division of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives, said Thursday.

Members have been known to wear tattoos of neo-Nazi symbols, such as swastikas and lightning bolts. But the most coveted tattoo is the patch.

One victim later died

It usually includes a shield with a sword, and a swastika with the letters "A" and "B" above it and "Texas" below it, according to court papers.

It is held sacred in the race-based gang.

Hancock was acting on orders from his superiors when he and two other gang members burst through the front door of Albert "Sidetrack" Parker's North Texas home in May 2010, according to prosecutors.

Parker, who apparently disrespected one of the gang's leaders, was beaten, dragged outside and stuffed into a sport utility vehicle for a ride of terror into the countryside.

It was there that he again was kicked and punched before Hancock pulled out a blowtorch and went to work.

"As Parker screamed in agony and fell in and out of consciousness, the ABT gang members continued to beat and burn him," noted a plea agreement in the case.

Parker was dumped along a lonely road, where he was later found by a passer-by who called 911.

He spent several months in a hospital, where he fought an infection from the burning and underwent several surgeries, according to court papers.

He would recover, sporting the scars and skin grafts of his past.

Hard times continued to follow Parker. He was found dead in May, just days after getting out of state prison, where he served a short stint for methamphetamine.

It remains unclear if his death is tied to the gang, and authorities won't say how he was killed.

"He was found in a pasture," said Lt. David Russell, of the Grayson County Sheriff's Office. "No charges are pending at this time."

Horrifying ultimatum

Two months after Parker was burned, the gang was back at it over another man's tattoo.

Tommy Slaughter, who lived in the North Texas community of Richland Hills, was accused of wearing the brotherhood's signature lightning bolts without having earned them because he was not a member of the gang.

Aryan Brotherhood of Texas gangsters surrounded Slaughter.

He was handed a blowtorch and given a horrifying ultimatum: Burn the tattoo off yourself, or the gang will take care of it.

As Slaughter melted the tattoo from his skin, gangsters berated him with obscenities and threats to pummel him, according to court papers.

While Hancock the enforcer got 15 years Wednesday, his gang superior, James "Chance" Burns, who ordered that Parker have his tattoo burned off, was sentenced to 20 years.

The men were convicted as part of a Houston-based probe that has notched 73 convictions of the gang's members and associates in various parts of the state.

Man accused of assaulting woman with belt

A 34-year-old Midland man was arrested Thursday for punching, kicking and beating a female family member with a belt, according to court documents.

Gonzales

Daniel Gonzales Jr. was being held Saturday on a $76,500 bond for a second-degree felony charge of aggravated assault causing serious bodily injury and a class A misdemeanor charge of terroristic threat against a family or household member.

A Midland County deputy responded to a disturbance at about 12:33 p.m. Thursday in the 1900 block of North County Road 1130.

The deputy entered a mobile home and saw a woman crying and holding herself around her stomach and ribs as if she was in severe pain, according to the arrest affidavit. The woman did not speak English, but two witnesses translated for the woman.

They told the deputy that Gonzales arrived intoxicated and began banging on the mobile home's front door.

He entered the residence and began punching, kicking and beating the woman with a belt, according to the affidavit. The woman said she was scared to call for help because Gonzales said he would kill her if she called the police, according to the affidavit.

The deputy said in his report that the woman appeared to have been tortured.

If convicted, Gonzales faces up to 20 years in prison for the felony charge and up to one year for the misdemeanor.

Woman accuses man of assaulting her for denying sex

A 55-year-old Midland man was arrested Thursday for allegedly beating a woman with a baseball bat when she refused to have sex with him, according to court documents.

Jordan

David Jordan was being held Saturday on an $80,000 bond for a first-degree felony charge of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon on a date, family or household member.

A Midland police officer responded to a disturbance with weapons at about 12:40 p.m. Thursday in the 700 block of Kent Street.

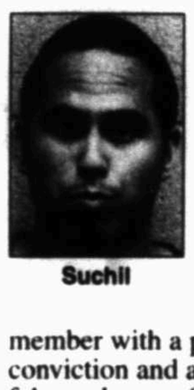

The officer detained Jordan at the scene after the alleged victim identified him. The woman had multiple bruises and injuries consistent with being struck with a baseball bat, according to the arrest affidavit.

She said Jordan became angry with her because she would not have sex with him and grabbed a silver baseball bat and began attacking her, according to the affidavit. Jordan hit her on the right leg, but she was able to get the bat away from him and began defending herself, according to the affidavit.

If convicted, Jordan faces five to 99 years in prison.

Man accused of assaulting woman, endangering infant

A 23-year-old Midland man was arrested Thursday for allegedly assaulting a family member and endangering a 5-month-old girl he was holding, according to court documents.

Suchil

Victor Jonathan Suchil was held Saturday on a $100,000 bond for a third-degree felony charge of assault on a family or household member with a previous conviction and a state jail felony charge of abandoning or endangering a child with criminal negligence.

Midland police officers responded to a disturbance at about 7:15 p.m. Thursday in the 1100 block of West College Avenue.

The officers detained Suchil after a woman at the home said he assaulted her.

The woman said she noticed a "hickie" on Suchil's neck, and questioned him about it. She said he then became verbally aggressive and eventually threw food at her, according to the arrest affidavit.

She then tried to walk outside but Suchil pulled her back and threw her down, causing her head to slam onto the floor, according to the affidavit. She said that while Suchil was assaulting her, he was holding a 5-month-old girl in his arms. The baby began screaming in a way that implied that she was hurt, and Suchil handed the woman the baby while she was lying on the floor, according to the affidavit.

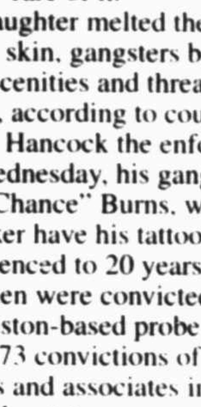

The woman told police that Suchil held her in a room after the struggle and took her phone and keys. The woman's father arrived at the home around the time of the incident, and assisted her.

Suchil claimed that the woman got physical with him and that he had tried to leave the home to get away from her, according to the affidavit.

If convicted, Suchil faces up to 10 years in prison for the third-degree felony and up to two years for the state jail felony.

Man arrested for allegedly delivering meth

Gomez

Israel A. Gomez was being held Saturday on a $30,000 bond for a first-degree felony charge of manufacturing or delivering a controlled substance between 4 and 200 grams.

A Midland police officer pulled over Gomez after he failed to use a turn signal at about 12:40 a.m. Thursday near the 3400 block of West Wall Street.

Gomez was acting very nervous and the officer searched him, according to the arrest affidavit. The officer found methamphetamine on Gomez, who said he was transporting the drugs for a friend in exchange for about $250, according to the affidavit. He said he has delivered meth two or three times in the past.

The meth weighed about 7.6 grams.

If convicted, Gomez faces five to 99 years in prison.

Thank you, Meghan and Kaitlynn!

Meghan and Kaitlynn Salazar recently celebrated their birthdays and chose to have a party on the same day. Instead of presents, though, they asked that those attending the party bring food for the needy. They brought us over a cartful of canned goods, and the toys that were given to them were also donated to us for our Christmas gift giving. Meghan, 9-years-old is a student at Bush Elementary and her 4-year-old sister Kaitlynn is anxiously waiting to attend school herself. They are both parishioners of St. Stephen's Catholic Church, and are the children of Albert and Priscilla Salazar. Thank you, ladies, for your incredible, selfless compassion for the needy. May you be richly blessed!

And please keep in mind that Christmas is just around the corner. If you or your organization is looking for a Christmas project, we can always use food and toys to give to the families that we help during the holidays. The more help that we get means that we can provide assistance to just that many more families. The families that we assist at Christmas are chosen from MISD's Project Head Start program. They have been chosen because they live at far below the poverty level. They struggle each day just to keep a roof over their heads and electricity on. The thought of toys and clothes for their children for Christmas is something that they cannot provide since they struggle so hard just to exist from day-to-day. Many of these parents are handicapped, either physically or mentally, and survive on disability income. Please help us, as Meghan and Kaitlynn did so magnificently, to help these families, and especially those precious children, have a joyous Christmas! For information on how you can help please call (432) 528-6265 anytime! Thanks, and God bless!

Panel discusses comics, memories inspired by superheroes

By Jared Wilson
Odessa American

ODESSA — During Saturday's "Bang! Pow! Zoom!" panel at Books in the Basin, readers young and old were given the opportunity to relive their favorite characters and the memories that came along with those characters.

"These are some of my absolute favorite authors, and all I wanted to do was get them all in a room so we could talk about comics so I decided to throw a book festival just for this panel," Randy Ham, executive director of the Odessa Council for the Arts and Humanities, said while laughing.

For an hour panel members discussed their inspirations and how they got involved in writing stories of superheroes and why the genre was something they, like many, could relate to.

Books in the Basin was designed to encourage and share the passion of reading by bringing together several authors who discussed their books as well as their inspiration for writing and reading.

"One book or comic will lead you to another," Ham said. "You start reading in a niche, and you didn't even realize that you did, and that's really an amazing experience."

Author Stephen Graham Jones had a much more personal approach when reflecting on his career and how the stories / still impact him.

"I discovered comics at a young age like most of these guys here on the panel," Jones said. "Comics don't draw the lines between anything. Often these superheroes we read about are living two lives between the personal life and the private life, and I can identify with that, and I think a lot of people can identify with that, as well."

For many of the authors, comics were just the beginning of their writing career, but because of their experiences with the iconic stories, new doors and ideas were opened up to them.

"I grew up on comics," Joe Lansdale said. "So when I read those comics they really opened up my mind to so many things and when people ask me how I blend all of these things together in my writing I just tell them it was because of comics."

The panel also discussed how the comic book, and in general, the superhero genre, has changed and developed to compete with new technology available in movies and television.

"Accessibility has changed things because books and comics have become a specialty thing," A. Lee Martinez said. "You can buy a lot of DVDs in the bin for what comics cost now."

Authors also discussed the challenge writers have in comparison to television and movies and how, when comics were most popular, they could capture more in the writing than what technology would allow for TV or movies.

Despite all of the changes, Ham said there will always be a place for comics and superhero stories.

"I think what keeps people coming back to comics and superheroes are that the stories are just so inspirational," Ham said. "That's what people want; they want to read the positive inspirational stories."

Lansdale agreed with Ham and recalled the feeling many have when they look back at the iconic stories and how the kid inside comes out.

"Just looking at the covers of old comics, I am so inspired because the feelings I had at that age are still there," Lansdale said. "The emotions I had are still there and the way I viewed those adventures then are still there, so it means a lot to me to go back and look at all of the comics that I have. They re-inspire me."

Jeramy Kraatz of Odessa, center, is introduced during a panel discussion "Bang! Pow! Zoom!" with authors offering their views on writing about super heroes that was one of several presentations that were part of Books in the Basin Saturday at Odessa College.

RETREAT

is optional, Wellen said. It is an option the city and City Council will be considering, along with proposals from developers that want to work with the courthouse property, as previously reported.

"The critical thing is to keep this in the public realm, so that it services everybody and reinforces the private development around it," Wellen said.

RWA unveiled Midland Center renovation plans in 2012. Those plans were put on hold for two years because the Energy Tower at City Center project was to be built next to Midland Center.

The renovation plans Rhotenberry and Wellen reintroduced on Friday call for larger space, a major overhaul of the lower level conference room area and an overall maintenance of the building's condition. The architects estimated the project to cost $14.8 million.

As far as Midland Center and City Center parking, Wellen said there are limits to the distance people will walk on a day-to-day basis.

"The fact is, we live in West Texas and most people want to drive right up to the door, get out and walk in," Wellen said.

The closest city-owned parking options identified for the concept include the Wall Street Lofts parking garage, the current city hall parking spaces and the Arrington Buildings lots at the corner of North Big Spring Street and West Illinois Avenue. The architects suggested that the city collaborate with Midland County for parking at the county-owned lot on Baird Street.

Regarding how the public will receive the City Center proposal, Mayor Jerry Morales said feedback from residents indicates that they wanted green space and an amphitheater at the courthouse site if Energy Tower was not built.

Wellen said he can't imagine anyone being opposed to the City Center idea because the community already patronizes the current Centennial Plaza area. He said the City Center proposals would provide better use of the space.

Wellen said that city centers — urban, mixed-use spaces with vitality — are not new concepts, referencing New York City's Central Park, Midland's downtown and Klyde Warren Park in Dallas. Wellen said a lot of strides are already being made, including the soon-to-be-finished Wall Street Lofts, set to open in November.

Wellen said that when the old Midland County Courthouse was established at the corner of West Wall Street and North Colorado Avenue, green space surrounded the courthouse and a hotel on the site of the current Midland Center. That area was considered a central green space for downtown Midland. So in some respects, Midland would actually be reverting to the concept if City Center is established, he said.

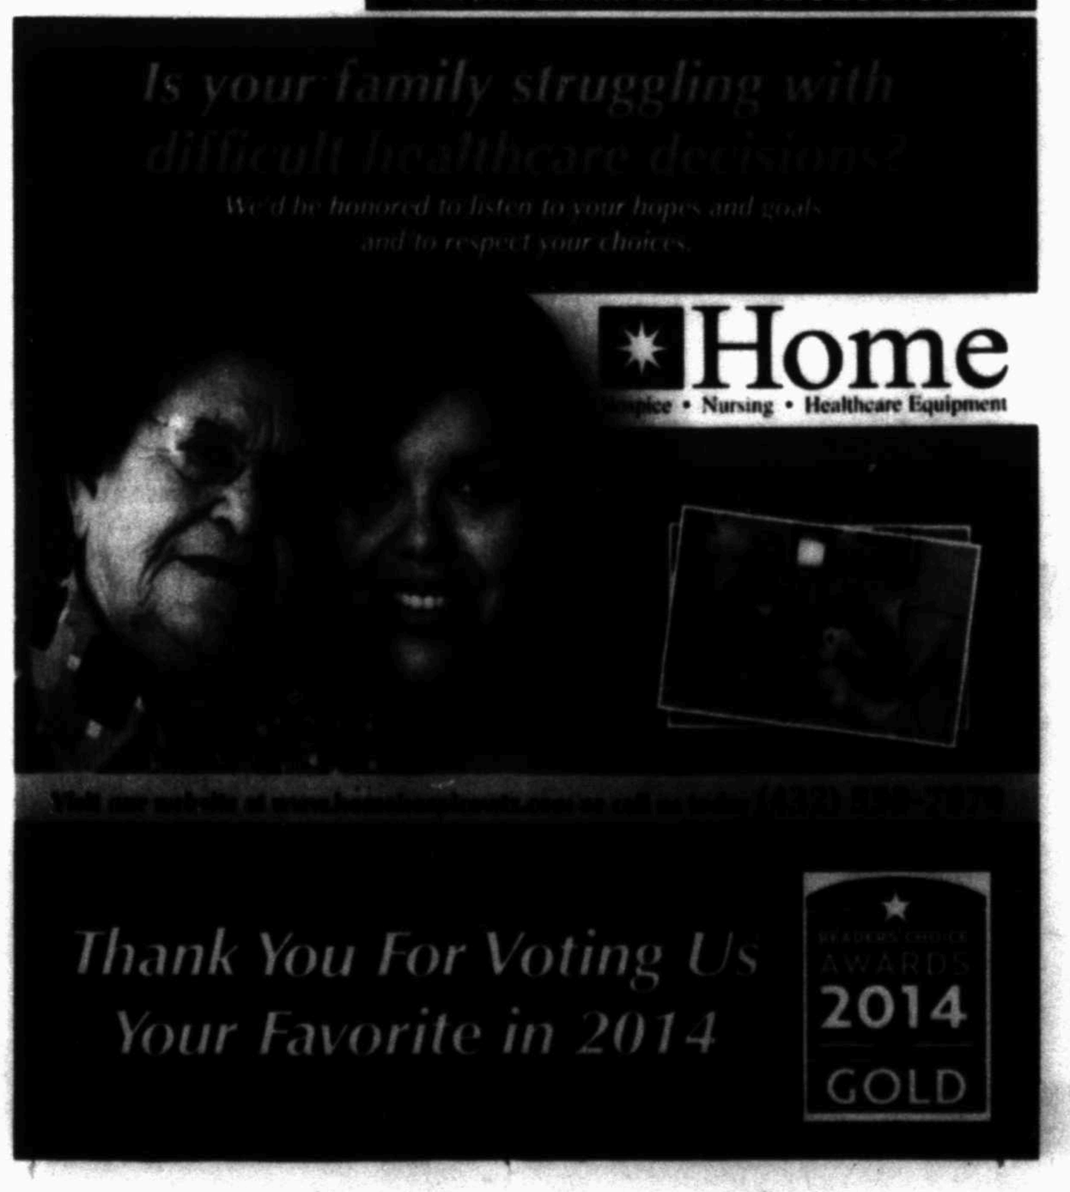

"(City Center) is virtually the same idea, the same concept (as other cities' downtown green spaces), which is nothing new," Wellen said. "Cities are realizing that they were always a good idea, and they're coming back it."

coming to an end, do I really need to know about it?

7. Last in line.
I suppose someone has to be last in line, but it freaks me out when I go to a restaurant or the car wash, get at the end of a very long line and absolutely no one gets in line behind m. I keep thinking, if I had waited 20 more minutes, this line wouldn't even exist.

8. Sitting with the wrong fans.
Have you ever gone to a football game and the people who usually sit around you have sold their tickets to the opponents' fans? As for me, I always pull for the rotten teams, so it's awfully hard sitting with people who are actually having fun.

9. When the sound is too loud.
The wife says I'm hard of hearing, but that's only her theory. She may not know the difference between someone being hard of hearing or someone who ignores. Anyway, movie theaters drive me up the wall with their glorified sound systems. Someone needs to explain that louder is not better.

10. When I can't get my new electronic gadgets to work.
I love electronics, but they frustrate me to no end. These things are supposed to make your life easier, but they end up testing my patience. I keep thinking the next generation of electronics will somehow be simple. I know it's a dream, but I keep hoping.
What are the Top 10 things that frustrate you? I bet you will find these are only the tip of the iceberg.

Thought for the Week: "I tend to advise people frustrated by feeling surrounded by ineptness and mediocrity that they should instead try thinking of it as 'I am a genius amongst zombies.' When I tell people this they look really very suddenly relieved." — Morrigan.

2 injured in ride honoring teen killed in wreck

By Tyler White
twhite@mrt.com

A motorcyclist and a pickup driver suffered non-life-threatening injuries Saturday night during a memorial ride honoring a Permian High School student who died Tuesday after a serious car wreck, according to Midland police.

The two injured were transported to Midland Memorial Hospital after emergency personnel and police officers responded at about 8:25 p.m. to a wreck on State Highway 191, west of Farm-to-Market Road 1788.

An officer at the scene said the crash involved at least five vehicles. Several other vehicles participating in the memorial ride — which was traveling from Odessa to Midland and back — also pulled over during and after the crash occurred, the officer said.

Citations are pending in the ongoing investigation.

The ride was in remembrance of Hunter Miller, who died Tuesday from injuries suffered in a car wreck last Sunday, the Odessa American reported.

The Permian High teen was driving on Tanglewood Lane when his pickup collided with a vehicle crossing the intersection of Springdale Drive at about 12:41 p.m. Miller was ejected from his pickup, according to the Odessa American.

Texas voter ID law blocked by federal judge

CORPUS CHRISTI — A federal judge, as she promised two days before, has filed a permanent injunction against enforcement of a tough Texas voter ID law.

U.S. District Judge Nelva Gonzales Ramos filed her one-paragraph order Saturday in Corpus Christi, likely paving the way for an appeal promised by Attorney General Greg Abbott.

The order was a formality as Gonzales Ramos had issued a 147-page opinion late Thursday night finding the voter ID law to be discriminatory and unconstitutional.

The ruling comes just weeks ahead of the November elections. It's a defeat for Republican-backed photo ID measures that have swept across the U.S. in recent years.

vaping community. Vaporizers, as they are officially known, heat and vaporize e-liquid into a vapor form that consumers then inhale into their lungs.

Evans smoked cigarettes for 12 years. His preferred smoke? Marlboro Lights. But after only six months of vaping, he quit smoking, and four years later, Evans hasn't looked back.

"Back when I used to smoke I was an auditor and I flew all over the country. I would notice when I would go down the stairs to terminal E (at George Bush Intercontinental Airport) that I'd get winded," Evans said. "After I quit smoking altogether, probably two or three months afterward, I went down the stairs and I was like, 'that's kinda weird, I'm not winded.'"

Evans said that he has seen gains in his personal health, and that since he has started vaping he has made it his mission to help people stop smoking cigarettes.

"I wasn't concerned with (making) a whole ton of money," Evans said about starting Tall City Vapor Works. "My motivation was that I wanted to help people quit smoking."

Tim Fischer/Reporter-Telegram

The sampling table and menu of flavors available at Tall City Vapor Works.

From hobby to full-time job

When Evans decided to start the company in July 2013, he was working a full-time job. But help from his family got the company off the ground.

"I took the initiative, I registered the company and then I basically rallied my wife and her family," Evans said. "And I said 'come on, let's do this,' and I had gotten them all into vaping (and to quit smoking) so they were like, 'Yeah man, it worked.'"

With $3,000 of his own money, Evans bought inventory from the Chinese e-liquid company Dekang and started hosting "vape" parties, where people try out vaping.

"They were basically like Tupperware parties, and we would just talk vape," Evans said of the events. "And we had a really good turnout from that, built up a little bit of capital and opened up our first store over here off Midland Drive."

Since then, the company has grown to three other stores in Texas — Odessa, Alice and Lubbock. Evans plans to open another five stores by the beginning of next year, bringing Tall City Vapor Works to Corpus Christi, Bay City, Big Spring, Plainview. He also plans a second Midland store. An online store opened a month ago for Tall City's e-liquid customers who have moved out of the area.

While his business continues to grow, Evans said he will slow it down over the coming year.

"It was never in the plan to grow this quick. And, honestly, we're going into the first of next year, and I'm going to hold the horses a little bit and slow it down just a bit because once we get to nine or 10 stores, there's going to be a lot of logistics that we're getting perfected," he said.

As far as his plans for the future, Evans knows one thing.

"I'm going to saturate Texas before I leave these borders. I'm a Texas boy, and you know other states are going to be a pain. What I can tell you is that we will be a dominant Texas company before we leave these borders."

Safety is key

Evans' Midland store is non-descript, wedged between an animal boarding house and a tattoo parlor. The blacked-out windows keep people from looking inside, and a sign on the front door warns off anyone under 18.

"I was really adamant about making sure that (e-liquid) wasn't going to fall into the hands of minors," Evans said, his tone reflecting the seriousness of his intentions. "And I have a niece who's 17 years old, and I didn't want ..." Evans trailed off. "That's always been a major concern of mine."

But when you walk past the sign and the blacked-out windows, you enter a room full of dark wood paneling, simple display cases and the inoffensive smell of dozens of e-liquid flavors.

A tasting table serves as the centerpiece of the store. On it sits a lazy susan with more than 60 different e-liquid flavors, charged up and ready to sample. The tasters don't contain nicotine, but customers can buy e-liquid ranging from no nicotine up to 24 milligrams of nicotine.

Evans said trying to compare the amount of nicotine in e-liquid with levels of nicotine in a traditional cigarette is difficult, and the multitude of brands and strengths of tobacco-based cigarettes make it extremely hard to compare the two. But in his experience, Evans said that someone who smoked a pack of cigarettes a day would, on average, consume a 15 ml bottle of e-liquid a week.

Evans said his company operates a food-grade mixing facility out of a back room in its Odessa store. He said the room is kept on a "lockdown" status, and that his background as a certified public accountant drove him to limit access to only two individuals.

"I just don't want Joe Blow off the street to have access to my room, because what if he goes in there and puts a pound of crack in it," Evans said. "That's potentially dangerous to my customers, and I'm not going to allow that."

New wind farm coming to eastern N.M.

Associated Press

HOBBS, N.M. — Eastern New Mexico is set to be the home of a new wind farm.

The Anderson Wind Farm is under construction in Lea County — in the heart of the state's oil and gas country — and could start generating power by December, the Hobbs News-Sun reported.

The facility featuring nearly two dozen 264-foot-tall wind turbines will sit west of Lovington near Maljamar, officials said.

The project will use 1.85- and 2-megawatt wind turbines, said Chris Copeland, construction manager with BayWa Energy Resources. "December 1 is our target Certificate of Delivery," he said.

The power generated by the farm will go directly into the Lea County Electric Cooperative's system.

The cooperative signed a contract that allows it to buy power from BayWa so it can cut its dependence on Xcel Energy's network, cooperative executive director Gary Hurse said. Under the contract, the cooperative must completely wean itself from buying power from Xcel Energy by 2026.

"It is kind of a unique situation," Hurse said. "We are doing it behind the meter. We are reducing our energy requirements from Xcel Energy by using the power from the wind farm directly."

The new wind farm will actually be several small 7-8 megawatt farms, which are small enough to provide power behind the meter, Hurse said. If the farms were larger, they would violate behind-the-meter regulations and have to be on the open market.

The cooperative must cut another 35 megawatts of power from Xcel by 2017. The wind farm will help with that goal, and the rest of the power will be purchased from Western Farmers Power Cooperative, which Lea County Electric Cooperative joined in 2012.

Customers could soon notice changes in their bills, but not because of the wind farm, Hurse said.

"We are trying to stabilize our pricing now," he said. "The EPA Clean Air Act is trying to reduce CO2, and that is directed more to coal plants. We are going to see more pressure to decommission coal, and we have to find other ways to provide more efficient resources."

EXPANSION

From 1B

Nation's World Health Organization, which in August released a statement calling for tougher regulations and reduced advertising for e-liquid and vaping and citing concerns that big tobacco companies were getting involved.

The European Union voted overwhelmingly February on legislation meant to tighten restrictions on e-cigarettes, including a ban on advertising and modest health warnings on packaging. The FDA followed in April with proposals to limit samples of e-cigarettes and increase regulation and reviews of e-cigarettes and vaporizer technology. It has yet to take any firm measures.

Herron and Evans agree there should be regulations on who should be able to access e-cigarettes and what ingredients should be used for e-liquids, two core issues with opponents of the industry.

"Nobody should be allowed to sell anything vape-related to anybody under the age of 18," Herron said. "As far as we don't know the health risks — we know it's healthier than cigarettes — but we can't say to what degree. I won't say that vaping is perfectly healthy for you. I think that if God meant us to inhale vapor, then the air would be made out of vapor."

But Herron, who smoked tobacco cigarettes for more than 30 years, believes that e-cigarettes and vaping are a better alternative to traditional cigarettes.

"Do I think it's healthier than cigarettes? I know it's healthier than cigarettes, because I'm living proof," Herron said. "I feel better, I breath better, I can work on my feet longer, I don't run out of breath as fast. I can feel it. I have 70-, 80-year-old customers who have tried everything in the world to get away from cigarettes, and they started vaping, and they immediately stopped smoking. What does that tell you?"

Several studies have also reinforced some of the vaping community's claims. A study by Dr. Igor Burstyn of Drexel University's School of Public Health concluded that "there was no evidence of potential for exposures of e-cigarettes users to contaminants that are associated with risk to health at a level that would warrant attention."

Evans and Herron said their mixing stations are rated at kitchen-grade cleanliness and are controlled environments and Evans was vehement about his support for regulation of companies, such his own, that mix their own e-liquids.

"Anybody in the vaping community that tells you it shouldn't be (regulated) doesn't need to be in the vaping community," Evans said. "There are guys out there who are making e-liquid in their garage in unsanitary situations and are selling it online, and you don't really know what you're getting. And people are getting sick from it. Those guys need to be shut down. Bottom line. They have no concern about the health risks of what they're doing."

While the manufacturing of e-liquid is one concern, another has been the second-hand effects of vaping. With no official government policy regulating e-cigarettes and vaporizers — and their use in public places — businesses, campuses and communities throughout the country have tried to come to grips with how to enforce current smoking bans that pertain to traditional cigarettes.

For restaurants in the Midland-Odessa area, the regulation of e-cigarettes and vaporizers is made on a case-by-case basis by individual businesses, according to Robert Barnes, the president of the Permian Basin Restaurant Association, which represents more than 200 local restaurants.

"So far, it's such an unknown, and I think everybody is really challenged by it because it's become a bigger deal," Barnes said. "To be honest with you, it hasn't been a big issue. I think a lot of restaurants just have a policy where they don't allow it."

With the jury is still out on the effects of e-cigarettes and vaporizers on non-users, Barnes said restaurants are caught in a catch-22 situation where they don't want to offend either the vapers or the non-vapers.

"We're just waiting to see what happens, what other people are doing, what other places are doing, what the government does if they step in and make a decision and what comes out from all the research that they're doing on it," Barnes said.

Some businesses and institutions in Midland already have decided to take action and implement their own rules. Midland College has had smoking restrictions in place for 20 years — smoking is limited to designated smoking areas (DSAs). The policy recently was expanded to include e-cigarettes, and the transition has gone smoothly, according to Rebecca Bell, dean of community relations and special events.

"(E-cigarette use) was noticed, and in order to make it a more comfortable environment for all of our students we included (e-cigarettes) within our original policy," Bell said. "Everyone is now going to the DSAs, and we've had no complaints."

On the other side of the coin, Cigar Frog's Piano Lounge, which allows patrons to smoke cigarettes and cigars indoors, also allows vaping.

"You can have them, we don't care. We just don't prefer to sell them," said Kaitlin Craft, the lounge's manager.

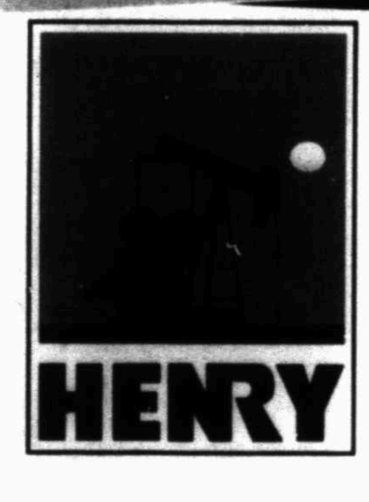

Craft, who doesn't smoke any tobacco products, said that being able to smoke is an individual's business. But she can understand why other places wouldn't want people to smoke.

"I could see where businesses would (ban e-cigarettes). Nobody wants to smell fruit loops coming out of your e-cigarette all the time. It's kinda annoying. No one wants to smell your cigar smoke or cigarette smoke all the time," Craft said.

Herron believes each business should set its own policy.

"If it makes your customers uncomfortable to have people vaping in your business, then go up to somebody and let them know or post a sign saying we don't allow vaping in here," Herron said. "You don't have to give a reason. If someone doesn't respect that, that's on them. If somebody wants to go in there vaping when somebody doesn't want them to, that's disrespectful, in my opinion."

By Lucy Gutierrez

After working at a prison 10 years, I could hardly pay my bills and buy groceries. I saw no future. I decided to go to nursing school and was accepted into South Plains College.

I made the hour commute from my home in Lamesa, Texas, but the gas was more than I could afford so I would leave my daughter with my sister during the week, pack a suitcase, and live out of my car. Most nights I would roll the windows up to keep the mosquitos out and fall asleep sweating in my car.

Eventually my situation became to difficult to maintain and I failed my clinicals. In a moment of desperation, I was told about Buckner Family Place in Midland, Texas. I applied immediately and was overjoyed when I found out I was accepted into the program.

My daughter and I finally had a beautiful home. We had never lived in a nice place like that before – a place that was all our own, where everything worked and we felt safe.

Prior to Family Place I was lost, confused and felt unloved. Buckner gave me more than a home. I am now the first in my family to finish high school and the first to go to college. I learned to have hope in life again.

Today my journey has come full circle as I am now a Buckner employee. When women come into my office I do my best to encourage them while extending the same compassion that was shown to me.

Family Place By the Numbers:

- Started in 2003
- Served 144 displaced single-parent families and 467 individuals to date
- Two-year program
- Residents graduate with higher education while learning self sufficiency
- Part of Buckner International, a global Christian organization dedicated to making life better for orphans, vulnerable children and families.

Family Place provided Lucy Gutierrez and her daughter, JoBenet, an escape from homelessness along with the opportunity for Lucy to complete her education. Lucy is now the newest member of the Buckner team in Midland where she is able to encourage single mothers who are working to overcome situations similar to her story.

Family Place, a miracle-in-waiting

Sitting in a shelter with her four young children, Erika Barrios was broken. Eleven years of marriage to a drug and alcohol addict can do that to a person. A final forceful threat pushed her beyond her limits, and she fled not knowing what her future might hold. She had no education, no plan, no hope.

"Inside of me, I was dying," she said. "I'd never experienced something like that before."

Pondering her predicament, she struggled to find her place in the world. Surely, she thought, there must be somewhere for mothers like her -- women who simply wanted a better life for them and their children.

That's when someone pointed her to Buckner Family Place, which was exactly what she imagined. The program provides furnished housing for single parents pursuing higher education to better support their families. In addition to housing, the ministry offers counseling, skills development and emotional support in a nurturing environment.

Erika Barrios and her four children say Buckner Family Place changed their life. "Buckner gave me hope and a plan for success," she said. Today Barrios is enrolled at Midland College where she is working toward her dream of becoming a registered nurse.

"I honestly didn't think it was real," Barrios said. "I thought, 'Wow, a miracle.'"

Eight months into the program, Erika and her children's lives have changed radically. She and her children are happy, even hopeful. She's become a better parent and has enrolled in school. She has a plan and is following through with it.

"It was a huge change," she says. "It was just about getting to know who I am, what kind of good person I can be. I was like a little flower that can bloom."

Construction continues at COM on 50-meter pool

Construction workers continue construction for a new 50-meter pool at COM Aquatics on Wednesday.

■ The project is expected to be finished by spring of 2015

By Len Hayward
lhayward@mrt.com

Brad Swendig has been part of other major building projects for City of Midland Aquatics, but the one he's overseeing now is bigger than anyone has imagined.

Many of those other projects were met with some skepticism from those inside and outside the Tall City's aquatic community. Some questioned the building of a rehabilitation pool, and others questioned building an Olympic-style diving pool.

But as the process continues for the new FMH Foundation Natatorium at the COM Aquatics complex, Swendig said there has been very little, if any, skepticism.

Some of it has to do with the need for an indoor 50-meter or Olympic-length pool in West Texas, but much of it has to do with the excitement of the project itself.

The pool was originally slated to open in 2014, but because the organization is doing a major construction project in a booming Tall City, an estimated completion date has been pushed back until the spring of 2015.

Even though the project has not been completed when many expected, the delay has done little to damper how those in the area's aquatic community feel about the project and what it means for the future of aquatic sports in the Tall City.

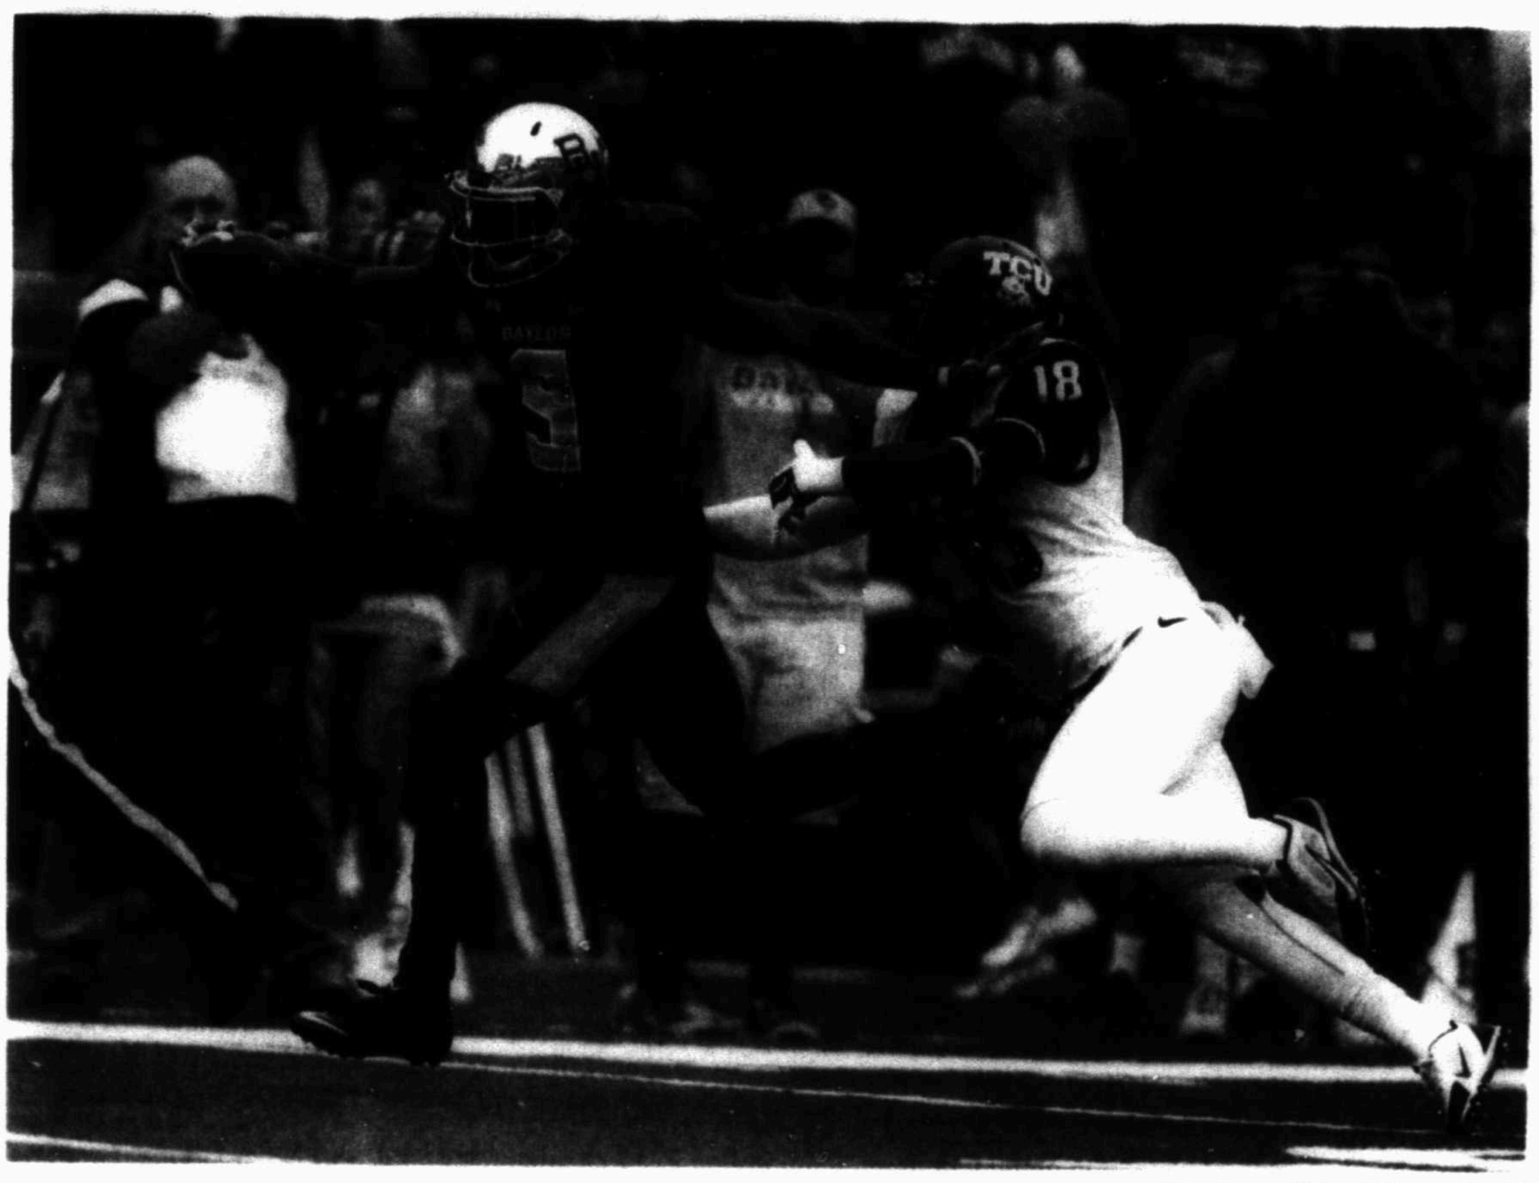

"I think it's real easy to be understanding when it's a conceptual thing," Swendig said from his office at COM Aquatics last week. "But when the reality hits, it can be different, but I think everybody is really excited about this project, internally and even in Midland from non-COM people. There is a lot more knowledge and a lot more excitement than I think we've had with previous projects."

Bears storm back

Baylor wide receiver KD Cannon (9) scores ahead of TCU cornerback Corry Omeally, right, in the first half Saturday in Waco. The Bears rallied from a 21-point deficit in the second half for a 61-58 win over the Horned Frogs.

WACO — Quarterback Bryce Petty had done all he could do, bringing Baylor back from 21 points down in the fourth quarter and McLane Stadium back to life.

With 4 seconds left, the Heisman Trophy contender handed it over to the kicker who had made only one of six field-goal attempts coming into the game.

Petty gave a few words of encouragement to Chris Callahan, to focus only on himself and his job — and then he went over to the sideline and was too nervous to watch as Callahan completed one of the greatest comebacks in Baylor history.

Callahan kicked a 28-yard field goal as time expired and No. 5 Baylor scored 24 points in the final 11 minutes to beat No. 9 TCU 61-58 on Saturday in a crazy Big 12 scorefest.

"I don't think I could play kicker," Petty said. "That's too much pressure."

Wiping out a 21-point, fourth-quarter deficit, though, seemed like a breeze for Petty. The senior threw six touchdown passes for the Bears (6-0, 3-0), including a 25-yarder to Corey Coleman with 4:42 left in the fourth that tied it at 58. Petty passed for a career-best 510 yards and threw two interceptions.

"He was on tonight," Baylor coach Art Briles said.

TCU moved to midfield and faced fourth-and-3 from the Baylor 45 with 1:17 left in the fourth. Instead of punting, the Horned Frogs elected to try to keep the ball and end it in regulation.

Horned Frogs coach Gary Patterson used two timeouts trying to decide how to play fourth down. He said he considered a fake punt.

"We make it ... you have an opportunity to go down and kick a field goal and you win it," he said. "Their field goal kicker did well today, but he had not kicked well before it got to today."

Trevone Boykin tossed a sideline fade toward Josh Doctson that the receiver couldn't come up with. TCU (4-1, 1-1) was looking for a pass interference call on Ryan Reid but didn't get it and Baylor took over with 1:11 left.

"Basically, you have a guy who has great ball skills and you basically just try to give the guy a chance," Boykin said of the play. "That's what we tried to come out and do. The defensive guy just made a better play."

With the help of a pass interference call on TCU and some good running by Shock Linwood, the Bears marched to the TCU 11 and left it up to Callahan.

"There's a certain spot I hit on the ball every single time; inside left low. I just focused on that," said Callahan, who finished 4 for 4 on field goals. "Once I got there, I didn't even look up. I just took off running because I knew that thing was good."

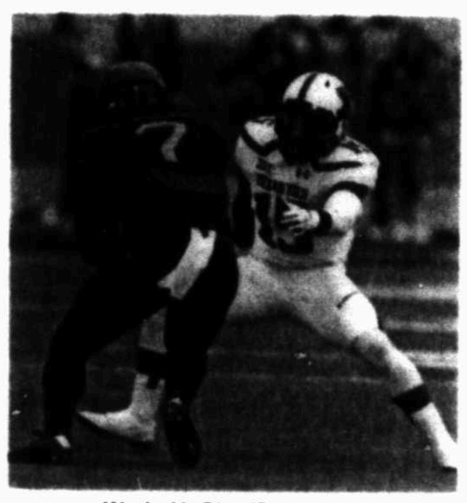

The 5-foot-9, 185-pound redshirt freshman set off the first celebration of its kind at Baylor's brand new, $250 million on-campus stadium. The bright-yellow clad student section poured onto the field to party with their team on the BU logo at midfield.

B.J. Catalon scored three touchdowns, including a 94-yard kickoff return in the first half, for the Horned Frogs. Boykin passed for 287 yards and a score.

All of Petty's touchdown passes covered at least 25 yards in a wild game filled with huge gains. Baylor finished with 782 total yards. TCU had 485.

LUBBOCK —

How many times have you seen a team let an opponent hang around, only to see the missed opportunities come back and bite it in the end?

Texas Tech was Exhibit A on Saturday afternoon at Jones AT&T Stadium as the Red Raiders blew a 14-point lead midway through the fourth quarter against West Virginia. Then they saw Josh Lambert kick a game-winning 55-yard field goal as time expired to give the Mountaineers the 37-34 come-from-behind victory in front of 58,505 fans.

This one's going to sting awhile for the Red Raiders (2-4, 0-3 in Big 12), who dropped their third straight game this season and eighth straight in Big 12 play, and it should.

Penalties came back to haunt the Red Raiders, settling for field goals instead of touchdowns and a pair of three-and-outs on offense at the most critical time in the game contributed to the loss.

Texas Tech is finding ways to lose, and in all honesty that's the sign of a team that is on a one-way road toward a losing season.

"We just don't know how to finish," Tech coach Kliff Kingsbury said.

The young coach needs to learn along with his players.

With the game tied at 34 late in the fourth quarter, the Red Raiders drove to the West Virginia 46-yard line but faced a fourth-and-3.

DALLAS — Sure, Oklahoma coach Bob Stoops was feeling a little bit frustrated at halftime when his 11th-ranked Sooners had only 29 total yards on offense

But the Sooners had some big early returns that put them ahead to stay while taking away some offensive chances in the Red River rivalry, a 31-26 win over Texas on Saturday.

"A little bit of that, the rhythm of it, you lose an offensive possession when you return the kick for a touchdown, the offense doesn't get their possession when you return an interception for a touchdown," Stoops said. "I'm not complaining about the touchdowns, but it does throw you off."

Alex Ross had a 91-yard kickoff return and Zack Sanchez scored on a 43-yard interception return before the Sooners (5-1, 2-1 Big 12) finally got a couple of offensive touchdowns along with 202 total yards in the second half in another bounce-back victory under Stoops.

In each of the Sooners' 11 losses overall since 2009, they have beaten that team the next season, now avenging that unexpected loss to Texas a year ago.

Oklahoma, whose loss last weekend at TCU was among an unprecedented series of upsets across the country, is also 32-0 in regular-season games after a loss since the start of the 2000 season.

"This win was about getting back to basics," Sanchez said. "Last week it was just mental busts, not physical."

Trevor Knight threw a 24-yard touchdown pass to Sterling Shepard for Oklahoma late in the third quarter. Samaje Perine then had a 13-yard TD run with 12:50 left that made it 31-13, before Tyrone Swoopes threw his second touchdown pass to John Harris and ran 12 yards for a score for the Longhorns (2-4, 1-2) in a

LEN HAYWARD

lhayward@mrt.com

This and that as TCU and Baylor proved again that in the Big 12 defense is optional:

■ There is nothing like the intensity of a district game in football. It's hard to get excited for non-district games, even big matchups because you know in the end they really are just warm-up games for the real thing.

There is an air of excitement not seen any other time early in the season during district play, and you can feel the pressure on both coaches and players.

Even in Friday night's Lee-Odessa Permian game at Grande, a game the Panthers took control of early and won handily, both teams were playing with a purpose that's not seen in non-district games.

It makes this time of year fun because seasons are made or broken over the next few weeks. Even in the era of four playoff teams, there is still something to be said for making the playoffs. The next month of football is the best time of the season.

■ While many believe that the College Football Playoff committee will have things shake out over the next few weeks to help their decision in picking the four playoffs teams, I firmly believe we could be headed for complete chaos.

Fans wanted a playoff, and they got a playoff. Now the question will be what happens if a big-time team is left out of the four? Get ready for the howls.

In a decade, there will be an eight or 12-team tournament in college football, and all it will take to come to that is one team not making the four with enough pull to make it happen.

■ It's always fun when the Dallas Cowboys have a good start to the season because the fans who have been quiet for the last few years begin to come out of the shadows and starting hollering loudly.

Trust me, I know a lot of die-hard Cowboys fans who have been frustrated the last few years, and it's good to see them rewarded with a good team. But it's the bandwagon jumpers that have driven me crazy through the years.

No matter the outcome today in Seattle, it looks as if the Cowboys have the type of team that can make a run at the playoffs and actually win a game. OK, it's only October but Dallas has one of the league's youngest offensive lines and teams overall. And in the NFL that youth can be big.

■ The website Deadspin.com posted a video this week showing Lee grad Cedric Benson working out in Austin to show NFL teams he is ready for a come back. But at 31 years old, it's going to be hard for Benson to find work.

The shelf life of an NFL running back is very short, and 31 is considered ancient these days for ball carriers. Hopefully, he can find some work, though, because he might be able to help a team late in the season.

■ Just in case you didn't know, the NHL season started this week.

■ The Kansas City Royals are proving that no matter what kind of payroll you have, it's about developing players through your minor league system and complementing them with right-fit free agents.

The Cardinals do the same thing. It's one thing about baseball that is frustrating for our what-can-you-do-for-me now sports fan culture, but to see teams like that continue to win shows that management in baseball is just as important as talent.

Plus, this year's playoffs have been fun to watch, even though some of the games have gone a long time.

■ Also, I need to give some props to Midland Christian grad Carson Smith. Smith made his major league debut on Sept. 1 with the Seattle Mariners. Smith pitched in 10 games for the Mariners and didn't allow an earned run in 8 1/3 innings. Congrats Carson.

■ And finally, I think someone else just scored in the Baylor-TCU game.

Royals take 2-0 lead over Orioles in ALCS

Royals.....6
Orioles.....4
Kansas City leads series, 2-0

By David Ginsburg
Associated Press

BALTIMORE — The Kansas City Royals prefer to simply savor their exceptional performance at Camden Yards rather than ponder the historical ramifications of where it's gotten them.

Alcides Escobar doubled in the go-ahead run in the ninth inning, Mike Moustakas extended his home run-binge and Kansas City remained perfect in the playoffs, beating the Baltimore Orioles 6-4 Saturday for a 2-0 lead in the AL Championship Series.

Now, the Royals head back to Kansas City with the knowledge that no team has ever lost a best-of-seven LCS after winning the first two games on the road.

"We don't want to be the first team to do that," designated hitter Billy Butler said. "That's all I get from that."

Lorenzo Cain had four hits, scored twice and drove in a run for the wild-card Royals, who are 6-0 in the playoffs this year, including 4-0 on the road. The Orioles hadn't lost two in a row in Baltimore since June 28-29, but Kansas City found a way to quiet the towel-waving, screaming crowds.

"The atmosphere here is great. It didn't affect us," Butler said. "Now we'll go home and see if they can play in our atmosphere."

Moustakas homered for the fourth time in five games as the Royals won their ninth straight in the postseason, a string dating to the 1985 World Series.

"To come in here and win two games against a great team like that, it's huge for us," Moustakas said. "A lot of confidence going back home."

Game 3 is Monday at Kauffman Stadium. Former Oriole Jeremy Guthrie will start for the Royals against either Wei-Yin Chen or Miguel Gonzalez.

"We know they're a good team," Royals closer Greg Holland said after earning his second save of the series. "You can't really get too high on yourself."

The Orioles and manager Buck Showalter's team now must buck history to get Baltimore its first pennant since 1983.

"If one team can do it, it's us," slugger Nelson Cruz said.

"The series ain't over," insisted Adam Jones, who hit his first playoff home run. "If you guys (are) thinking it's over, why are we going to show up on Monday?"

After squeezing out an 8-6 win in 10 innings on Friday night, the Royals again took apart the Baltimore bullpen with a late uprising.

With the score tied at 4 in the ninth, Omar Infante beat out an infield roller off Darren O'Day, the losing pitcher for the second straight day.

Zach Britton entered, and Moustakas laid down a bunt that moved pinch-runner Terrance Gore to second. Escobar then sliced an opposite-field grounder inside first base to bring home Gore.

Cain added an RBI single to become the only Royals player other than Hall of Famer George Brett to have a four-hit game in the postseason.

For the second time in two games, Wade Davis earned the win and Holland got three outs for the save. Holland struck out Steve Pearce with a runner on to end it.

"If you could go home 1-1, you're going to be really, really happy," manager Ned Yost said. "If you can go home 2-0, that's as good as it gets."

Baltimore's Bud Norris allowed four runs and nine hits in 4 1-3 innings. Royals rookie Yordano Ventura left in the sixth with tightness in his right shoulder after giving up four runs and six hits.

"He's fine," Yost said. "I don't anticipate him missing this next start."

Moustakas, the No. 9 hitter, hit a solo homer that put Kansas City up 4-3 in the fourth. Although he homered only once in the last 49 games of the regular season, Moustakas now stands tied with Willie Aikens for most homers by a Royals player in a single postseason.

"Getting good pitches to hit and not missing them," he said. "That's pretty much it."

UP NEXT

Royals: Guthrie said his emotion Monday will come from competing in the playoffs, not pitching against his former team. "I think history will be put, not even on a back burner, but on some kind of ... Lazy Susan or something," said Guthrie, who's 2-1 against Baltimore since being traded in February 2012.

Orioles: Baltimore went 46-35 on the road this season and clinched the Division Series with a 2-1 win at Detroit.

STREAKS

Royals: Kansas City began its postseason winning streak by taking three straight from St. Louis to win the 1985 World Series. The Royals beat Oakland in the wild-card game this year, then swept the Los Angeles Angels in the ALDS.

Orioles: Cruz had his sixth consecutive multihit game, the longest streak in postseason history. The run began in 2012. Also, Joseph snapped an 0-for-33 skid with his first hit since Sept. 10.

Kansas City's Terrance Gore (0) is congratulated by teammates after scoring on a double by Alcides Escobar during the ninth inning of Game 2 of the American League Championship Series against the Baltimore Orioles on Saturday in Baltimore. The Royals took a 2-0 lead in the series with a 6-4 win over the Orioles.

Harvick moves into 3rd round with win at Charlotte

By Jenna Fryer
Associated Press

CONCORD, N.C. — Kevin Harvick moved into the third round of NASCAR's championship race with a victory Saturday night at Charlotte Motor Speedway, where tempers flared after the race and two drivers had to be restrained from fighting Brad Keselowski.

Harvick had to win a two-lap sprint to the finish to grab his third victory of the season, but attention turned quickly to two near-brawls in the garage involving Keselowski. Denny Hamlin was held back by his own crew from going after Keselowski, who appeared to try to wreck Hamlin after the race.

Then Matt Kenseth appeared to jump on Keselowski from behind between two haulers and multiple team members had to pull back Kenseth. Kenseth and Keselowski made contact racing for the lead on a late restart, and Kenseth was livid that Keselowski hit his car after the race.

"It was really the safety. He was doing something with Hamlin. I had my seatbelt off, my (head-and-neck restraint) off and he clobbers me," Kenseth said. "The race is over, come back to pit road. If you want to talk about it like a man, go do that. But if you want to wreck somebody on the race-track with people standing around, that's just inexcusable.

"There's no excuse for that. That's a champion and he's supposed to know better than that."

It capped a terrible night for three of NASCAR's biggest stars: Keselowski, six-time and defending champion Jimmie Johnson and Dale Earnhardt Jr. all go into next Sunday's elimination race at Talladega needing a victory.

Keselowski finished 16th, Johnson was 17th and Earnhardt was 20th — last in the 12-driver Chase field. Earnhardt broke his shifter early in the race and it put him in a deep hole he couldn't climb from.

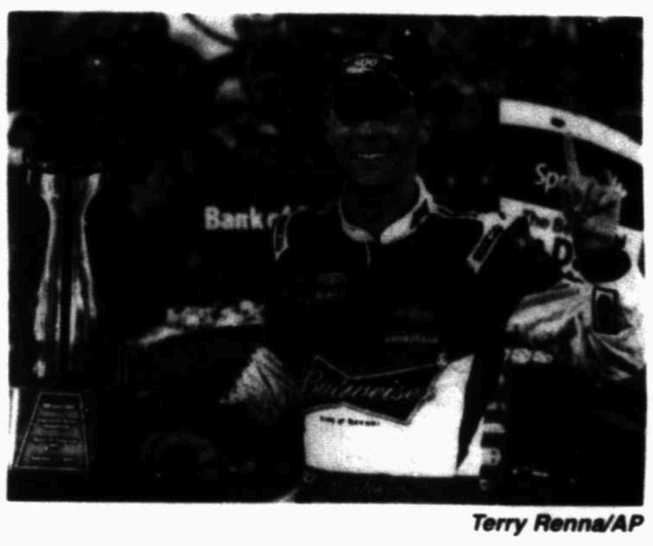

"The vibration broke the shifter in half," Earnhardt said. "The car wasn't handling well and the vibration was giving us problems."

The four drivers now in danger of being eliminated next week are Kenseth, Keselowski, Johnson and Earnhardt.

Kenseth also had his own rough night and didn't even make it to the green flag before things went awry.

NASCAR ordered him to drop to the back of the field at the start of the race because his Joe Gibbs Racing team was penalized for making an unapproved change to his Toyota.

"They are out of control. Absolutely out of control," crew chief Jason Ratcliff radioed about NASCAR.

Bumgarner tames Cardinals, Giants take NLCS lead

Giants.....3
Cardinals.....0
San Francisco leads series, 1-0

By R.B. Fallstrom
Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Madison Bumgarner pitched shutout ball into the eighth inning and the San Francisco Giants combined just enough hitting with a couple of defensive flubs by St. Louis to beat the Cardinals 3-0 Saturday night in the NL Championship Series opener.

Bumgarner set a major league postseason record with 26 2-3 consecutive scoreless innings on the road.

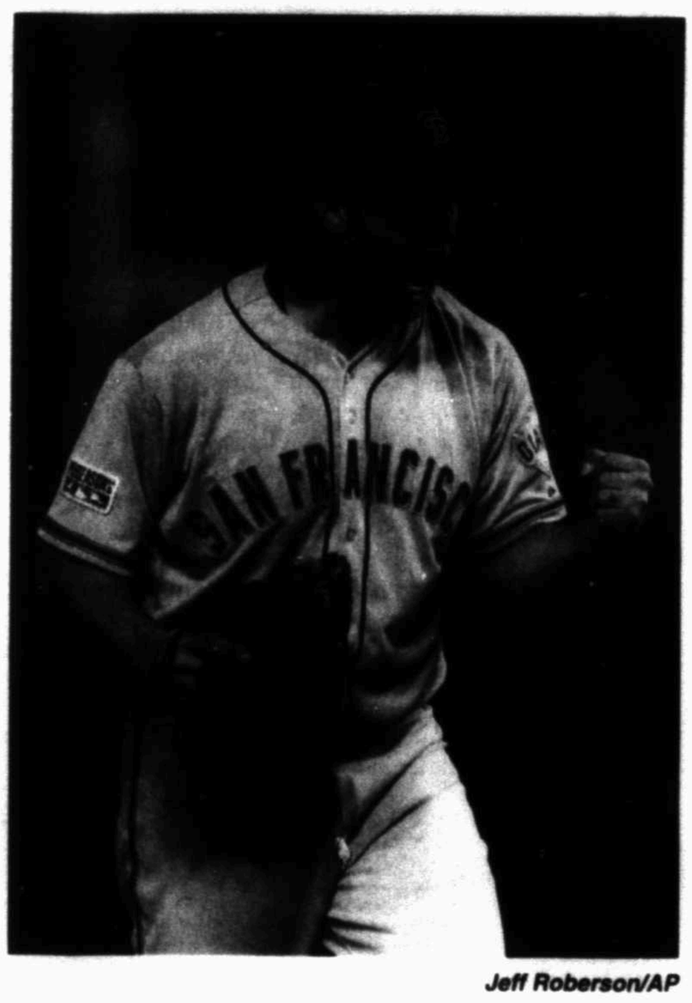

The Giants lefty was in complete command while 20-game winner Adam Wainwright failed to last even five innings for the Cardinals.

San Francisco has won 12 of its last 13 in the postseason, including three straight to erase a 3-1 deficit in the 2012 NLCS against St. Louis.

Jake Peavy gets the Game 2 start for the Giants on Sunday night against Lance Lynn.

Bumgarner, who began the playoffs by throwing a shutout at Pittsburgh in the wild-card game, gave up four hits in 7 2-3 innings.

Bumgarner bested the mark of 23 straight postseason scoreless innings on the road set by Art Nehf of the New York Giants from 1921-24.

Jeff Roberson/AP

San Francisco starting pitcher Madison Bumgarner reacts after striking out St. Louis' Tony Cruz during the seventh inning in Game 1 of the National League Championship Series in St. Louis.

The Cardinals' threatened against him only in the seventh on consecutive one-out singles by Yadier Molina and Jon Jay, but Kolten Wong tapped out and pinch-hitter Tony Cruz fanned.

The Giants' bullpen finished with hitless relief as Sergio Romo got the last out in the eighth and Santiago Casilla closed for a save.

Wainwright failed for the second straight postseason start. And this time, there was no late comeback against a lefty for the Cardinals — they twice did it against Dodgers ace Clayton Kershaw in the NL Division Series.

Wainwright was 20-9 during the regular season, including 5-0 with a 1.38 ERA in September with two complete games and a shutout. He's piled up a major league-high 512 2-3 innings the last two years, and perhaps the workload is finally getting to him.

The right-hander admitted before this series that his pitching elbow had bothered him during a start in the division series, but insisted he was fine.

In two October starts this year, Wainwright has permitted eight earned runs in nine innings. He's 0-4 with a 5.14 ERA in his last five postseason appearances — he lasted 4 2-3 innings against the Giants after going just 4 1-3 innings in the NLDS opener vs. the Dodgers.

Bumgarner and the Giants silenced a sellout crowd of 47,201 in a game that began in 55-degree chill.

The Cardinals twice failed to seal the deal defensively in the Giants' two-run second.

PGA

FRYS.COM OPEN: At Napa, California, Bae Sang-moon took the lead early and expanded it late Saturday in the Frys.com Open, closing with three big putts for a 7-under 65 and a four-shot lead going into the final round.

The final three holes at Silverado dumped everything.

They enabled Matt Kuchar and Brooks Koepka to get back into the hunt, but only briefly because of the great finish by Bae.

The South Korean was on the verge of making a sloppy bogey on the par-5 16th. Leading by two, he went into a hazard, hit a poor chip that barely got onto the fringe and then holed the 15-footer to save par.

With the tee moved forward on No. 17 to make it play about 292 yards to an elevated green, Bae hit drive to just inside 6 feet and holed that for eagle, and then made a 15-foot birdie putt on the 18th hole.

He was at 16-under 200, four shots clear of PGA Tour rookie Zach Blair, who made a late birdie for a 69.

Kuchar hit driver to 5 feet on the 17th for an eagle and shot a 66, putting him in the penultimate group and still with a shot of winning just two weeks after the Ryder Cup.

Koepka had a birdie-birdie-birdie finish — with his power, he only needed a 3-wood on the 17th to reach the green — and shot 67. They were at 11-under 205, along with Scott Langley (69) and Martin Laird (71).

LPGA

LPGA MALAYSIA: At Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, Thailand's Pornanong Phatlum birdied seven of the first 10 holes and finished with a 6-under 65 to take a three-stroke lead in the LPGA Malaysia.

Phatlum, winless on the LPGA Tour, had a 14-under 199 total at Kuala Lumpur Golf and Country Club.

Japan's Ayako Uehara was second after a 69.

South Korea's So Yeon Ryu, the second-round leader, had double bogeys on Nos. 17 and 18 for a 72 to drop into a tie for third at 10 under with compatriot Chella Choi (68), China's Shanshan Feng (69) and New Zealand's Lydia Ko (70).

The 17-year-old Ko can take over the No. 1 ranking from Stacy Lewis if she wins and Lewis ties for 12th or worse. Lewis, the first-round leader after a 65, had a 72 to fall into a tie for 20th at 5 under. She had a double bogey at the par-3 seventh, where she also dropped a shot in the second round.

Champions

SAS CHAMPIONSHIP: At Cary, N.C., Kirk Triplett holed out from 143 yards for eagle on the par-4 18th hole to take a two-stroke lead in the Champions Tour's SAS Championship.

Triplett, the ACE Group Classic winner in February for his third victory on the 50-and-over tour, finished with a bogey-free 9-under 63 to reach 11-under 133 at Prestonwood.

PGA European

PORTUGAL MASTERS: At Vilamoura, Portugal, France's Alexander Levy had a three-stroke lead in the Portugal Masters after the completion of the second round in the event cut to 54 holes because of rain.

Levy shot a 10-under 61 on Friday, while most of the players finished the second round Saturday. He had an 18-under 124 total at Oceanico Victoria.

POOL

ics' president and executive director, and many long-time COM supporters and board members, the project is a labor of love that they began looking at seriously about 2000. It was then that they did the first feasibility study on building an indoor 50-meter pool.

Swendig said that had he known how much it would've cost a few years ago, he might not have done it. But he said that once the fundraising campaign began in the fall of 2012, they have secured nearly $9 million in donations and pledges, making the decision much easier.

It's a dollar amount Swendig is still surprised about, but it also shows the kind of commitment that the community has for the project. And considering COM Aquatics' last major project cost $2 million in 2007, raising that much money has been important.

"We have some amazing people that have always been great fundraisers for the COM swim team and that have worked for us throughout the years," said Midland ISD swimming and diving coach Jennifer Mangum. "This town has been well known as being a phenomenal fundraising town. This is a project that involves kids, and I wasn't surprised to be able to raise the funds."

James Durbin/Reporter-Telegram

A construction worker helps put together a 50 meter pool at the COM Aquatics Center on Wednesday.

Construction moving forward

After an official groundbreaking ceremony in June 2013, dirt didn't start moving in earnest until May. Many of the delays are due to acquiring permits from the city and because of contractors and subcontractors trying to hire the workers needed in a booming community for the multi-million dollar project.

Plus, the builder — Fluidra — is based in Spain, and even though they are experienced at building large pools throughout the world, Swendig said at times there is a language barrier.

Swendig said the project is in the final stages of having the concrete work finished, which he admitted has taken longer than anyone expected because of the concrete contractor struggling to bring in crews. Once the concrete work is finished, the final stages of the building can begin.

He added they have had to cut a few amenities out to keep construction within budget, but he said they can be added later.

"Obviously, fundraising is the hardest part, but right now it's dealing with a general contractor that has a very difficult time getting subcontractors," Swendig said. "The cost of things are higher now because subcontractors by and large have more work than they can handle."

What about water?

A major question the organization has faced is water. As the city grows, water usage is something that Swendig takes very seriously, but he also says many have a misconception about how much water the organization uses for their facilities.

Swendig said once the water is in the pool, it doesn't come out and is constantly being filtered and recycled. He said the water in the Abell pool, where many practices and meets are held for swimming and diving, has not been drained in nearly two decades.

He said about the only water lost is when those in the pool come out and it drops on the deck, adding that there are humidifiers in the building to prevent evaporation.

"If you have swimming pools in the back yard for a family of five, they are probably going to drain it once a year, and whatever is lost through evaporation," Swendig said. "It's used by a handful of people for a few months. This is going to be used by thousands of people for years, over and over again."

Swendig said the goal is to use city water for the initial filling, but he is looking at different options if needed. He added that the goal is to take the water from the Abell pool and put it in the new natatorium pool and do some repairs on the Abell pool. But he said the timing has to be right.

The future

Even though the project has yet to be completed, many are beginning to think of the possibilities that the new facility will bring.

There is the chance to host more and larger swimming meets as a bulkhead on the pool will allow the facility to host both long course and short course swimming events.

The biggest benefit might be for COM Aquatics' programs and the city, in general.

COM's programs are already filled to capacity, but the new pool will allow for expansion of those programs and also provide additional opportunities for revenue.

For those involved in the project, though, what they've seen are people who no longer have children in COM Aquatics' programs offering support and financial help and showing how committed the organization is committed to making something like this happen.

"I think it just shows we are a program that's all about excellence," Mangum said. "We are committed to excellence all the way along. We train in the facilities that we own, and some organizations have to pay a city. It's great that we've put together such a phenomenal facility for the community."

Nystrom, Rinne lead Predators past Stars

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Eric Nystrom had a goal and two assists to lead the Nashville Predators to a 4-1 win over the Dallas Stars on Saturday night.

Shea Weber, Paul Gaustad, and Roman Josi also scored for Nashville and Pekka Rinne stopped 17 shots to help the Predators open the season with their second straight win.

Antoine Roussel scored for Dallas, and which has lost their first two.

Gaustad and Nystrom scored 1:21 apart midway through the third period to put the Predators ahead 3-1.

Gaustad to the tiebreaking goal at 8:33 on a wraparound from the right side. Then, with the teams skating 4-on-4, Nystrom took a cross-ice pass from Gaustad before lifting a backhand past Dallas goalie Anders Lindback from the right side.

Josi added an empty-netter with 3 seconds remaining.

Lindback finished with 29 saves.

The assist on Nystrom's goal completed a Gordie Howe hat trick for Gaustad, who got into a fight with Dallas' Vernon Fiddler in the first period.

Roussel put the Stars ahead at 7:14 of the opening period. From the left point, Trevor Daley passed to Roussel at the right faceoff dot, and Roussel skated to the bottom of the circle and sent a shot that deflected off the skate of Nashville defenseman Ryan Ellis and past Rinne.

Weber tied it with less than a minute remaining in the second as he elevated a wrist shot from the right point that ended up skipping between Lindback's pads. It was his second goal in two games.

Weber prevented the Stars from opening a two-goal lead midway through the second when he stopped a shot by Tyler Seguin from the right circle while Rinne was out of position after making a save seconds before.

A seventh round draft pick of the Predators in 2007, Lindback spent two seasons in Nashville as Rinne's backup. After spending the last two seasons with Tampa Bay, he signed with the Stars on July 1.

NOTES: Nashville has given up the first goal in both of their games this season. ... Weber led NHL defensemen in goals last season with 23. ... The home team won all five games between the two teams in 2013-14.

Bryant-Sherman marks showdown of mutual respect

By Schuyler Dixon
Associated Press

IRVING — For all the drama Dez Bryant created on and off the field early in his career, the Dallas receiver has never really had a public spat with a high-profile rival.

Tony Romo's top target isn't going to start with Richard Sherman, the talented Seattle cornerback who's been known to call out opposing receivers in pointed ways.

"I feel like at times he says what he feels and that's what he believes," said Bryant, who will try to match his second-longest touchdown streak at five games when the Cowboys (4-1) visit the Seahawks today. "There's really nothing wrong with what he's doing. He has issues with other players that are a conflict, but that's not here. We have respect."

Days after dismissing Washington's Pierre Garcon as a receiver who "doesn't matter," Sherman had entirely different words for Bryant, one of the league's most productive receivers since the Cowboys drafted him in 2010.

The timing might have had a little to do with it because Bryant had just made one of the best catches of his career — a leaping, juggling 37-yarder on third down to set up the winning field goal in a 20-17 overtime victory against Houston.

"He made a fantastic play for them last week, which is indicative of what he can do when the ball is in the air," Sherman said. "He's definitely physical throughout the route."

The Cowboys bring a surprising record and NFL rusher leader DeMarco Murray to Seattle (3-1), and the matchup of Murray against the league's top rushing defense is certainly a talker. But Sherman against Bryant is probably the most intriguing one-on-one battle in the game.

It's unlikely that Dallas will follow the lead of other teams and simply stay away from Sherman. The Cowboys have generally been better when they've found ways to get the ball to Bryant, whose 44 scoring catches through 64 games are more than twice what Drew Pearson had and 15 more than Michael Irvin at the same point in the careers of those No. 88s for Dallas.

"They have really good players all across their defense, so I think if you got into that game with these guys you wouldn't really snap the ball," Cowboys coach Jason Garrett said. "They're awfully good. Just put the tape on. But we have to do what we do."

Even if Sherman took aim at Bryant the way he did with San Francisco's Michael Crabtree, it's unlikely he would get much of a response from Bryant. While the fifth-year receiver had a petty sideline moment as recently as last season when he went to the locker room before the clock expired in a loss to Green Bay, he usually dances away from headline-grabbing sound bites.

He wouldn't oblige reporters Thursday when asked if he considered himself the best, and after Garrett playfully pushed him away from the conversation, he came back for one more answer — and a politically correct one at that.

done previously, Kingsbury had decided to punt it in hopes of pinning the Mountaineers deep in their own territory with 54 seconds left.

"We ended up kicking it in the end zone, and on second thought, had we known that, we probably would have (gone) for it," the coach said.

Quarterback Davis Webb, who was 28-of-46 passing for 348 yards, three touchdowns and one interception, backed Kingsbury's decision.

"If we didn't (get the first down), that's a heck of a field position for them," Webb said. "We should have completed that pass (on third down). That's my fault."

In hindsight, the Red Raiders should have gone for it. Up to that point, the defense had probably done all it could and was exhausted. And considering that this young team needed a positive in the worst way after a sluggish start to this season, it would have shown a belief that the team could get three yards.

Instead, the Mountaineers (4-2, 2-1), which came into the game with a potent offense behind quarterback Clint Trickett (28-of-44 for 301 yards, 2 TDs) and outstanding wide receiver Kevin White (13 catches, 123 yards, 1 TD), did what that offense was supposed to do, and that was put together a drive to give their strong-legged kicker an opportunity.

But one also can't point to the final two possessions of the game as the determining factor.

There were several missed opportunities for the Red Raiders:

■ Right before halftime, Webb throws an interception on a pass intended to D.J. Polite-Bray, who had double coverage down the far sideline. Jakeem Grant was actually open down the middle. A touchdown there would have given Tech a 28-10 advantage going into the locker room.

■ The Red Raiders' first drive of the first half ended at the WVU 35 when running back DeAndre Washington (29 carries for 132 yards) was stopped for no gain on fourth-and-1. A quarterback sneak with the 6-foot-4 Webb might have done the trick.

■ Then on the following possession, the Red Raiders faced a first-and-goal from the WVU 3 but settled for the field goal to go up 24-13. One run and two incomplete passes equaled a 1-yard loss.

■ And oh yes, there were the penalties. The Red Raiders racked them up again with 12 penalties for 115 yards, including three for 25 on one drive that, needless to say, went nowhere in the second half.

Oh yes, this one is going to hurt.

"I'd have to say it was (frustrating)," said sophomore safety Keenon Ward, who had a game-high 16 tackles. "We came out and played pretty well, and it was obvious we should have won that game. When you lose games like these, it's pretty tough."

Added Webb: "This is by far the worst loss I've ever had in my life. I've lost on a last-second field goal before, but it doesn't come close to this because we had so many opportunities to put this game away and we didn't execute."

Where do the Red Raiders go from here?

Will they let this loss linger or will they take away the positives and the fact that they did play one of their better games of the year and move forward?

Webb hopes it's the latter and it carries over into next week's home game against Kansas.

"We've got to come together," he said. "No one believes in this team besides those guys in that room. We've got to stay strong and get ready for Kansas."

At this point of the season, any win would be nice for the Red Raiders, who are off to their worst start since 1994.

Mariota leads No. 12 Oregon to rout of UCLA

| Bruins | 30 |

PASADENA, Calif. — One snap after Oregon's defense recovered Brett Hundley's fumble deep in UCLA territory, Marcus Mariota found an edge and scampered around it, diving for the Ducks' first touchdown.

With those back-to-back plays, the Ducks demonstrated why it has been seven years since they lost back-to-back games in the same season — and why it certainly wasn't about to happen again at the Rose Bowl.

Mariota ran for two touchdowns and passed for 210 yards and two more scores as No. 12 Oregon rebounded from its first defeat with a 42-30 victory over No. 18 UCLA on Saturday.

Royce Freeman rushed for 121 yards and two touchdowns for the Ducks (5-1, 2-1 Pac-12), who built a 42-10 lead early in the fourth quarter with systematic superiority over UCLA, a preseason Top-10 team. Thomas Tyner and Pharaoh Brown caught TD passes as Oregon coasted home in its sixth straight win over the Bruins (4-2, 1-2).

A week after a 31-24 home loss to Arizona, Oregon showed no symptoms from the loss.

"It says a lot about the character of this team that they were able to flush (last week) and just keep chugging," Mariota said. "We came out this Monday, and you could feel the intensity pick up. ... We believed in what we could do."

Left tackle Jake Fisher's return from injury boosted the offense and encouraged Mariota, who had been sacked 12 times in the past two games without Fisher watching his back. The defense kept Hundley uncomfortable for most of the day, giving up just 232 yards in the first three quarters while Oregon built an insurmountable lead.

"I know that our guys were ready to go today," Oregon coach Mark Helfrich said. "It meant a ton to them in every phase, and they earned it."

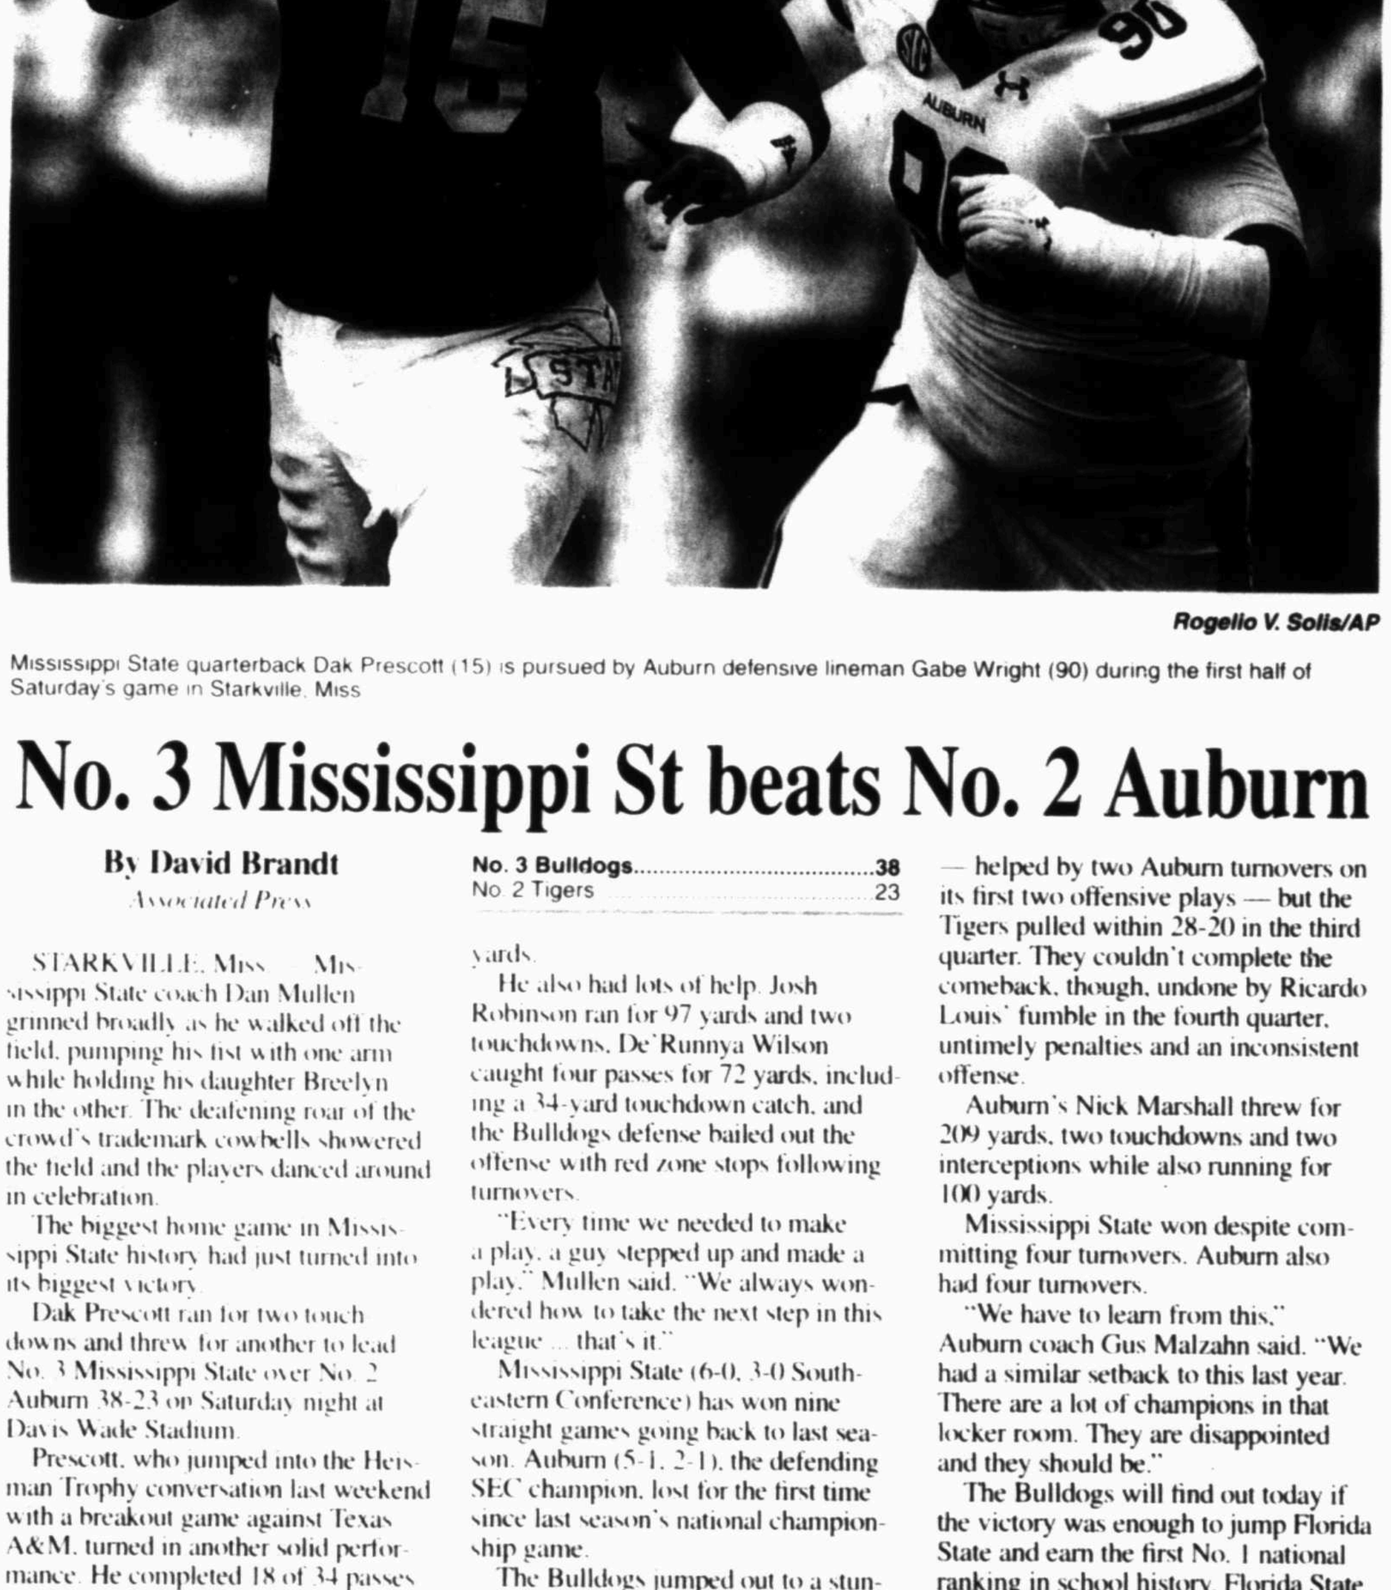

Mariota also made the game's most entertaining play when he recovered his own fumble while rushing for a 23-yard score early in the second half, impressing his teammates and coaches with his dribbling skills.

| No. 3 Bulldogs | 38 |
| No. 2 Tigers | 23 |

STARKVILLE, Miss. — Mississippi State coach Dan Mullen grinned broadly as he walked off the field, pumping his fist with one arm while holding his daughter Breelyn in the other. The deafening roar of the crowd's trademark cowbells showered the field and the players danced around in celebration.

The biggest home game in Mississippi State history had just turned into its biggest victory.

Dak Prescott ran for two touchdowns and threw for another to lead No. 3 Mississippi State over No. 2 Auburn 38-23 on Saturday night at Davis Wade Stadium.

Prescott, who jumped into the Heisman Trophy conversation last weekend with a breakout game against Texas A&M, turned in another solid performance. He completed 18 of 34 passes for 246 yards while running for 121 yards.

He also had lots of help. Josh Robinson ran for 97 yards and two touchdowns, De'Runnya Wilson caught four passes for 72 yards, including a 34-yard touchdown catch, and the Bulldogs defense bailed out the offense with red zone stops following turnovers.

"Every time we needed to make a play, a guy stepped up and made a play," Mullen said. "We always wondered how to take the next step in this league ... that's it."

Mississippi State (6-0, 3-0 Southeastern Conference) has won nine straight games going back to last season. Auburn (5-1, 2-1), the defending SEC champion, lost for the first time since last season's national championship game.

The Bulldogs jumped out to a stunning 21-0 lead in the first nine minutes — helped by two Auburn turnovers on its first two offensive plays — but the Tigers pulled within 28-20 in the third quarter. They couldn't complete the comeback, though, undone by Ricardo Louis' fumble in the fourth quarter, untimely penalties and an inconsistent offense.

Auburn's Nick Marshall threw for 209 yards, two touchdowns and two interceptions while also running for 100 yards.

Mississippi State won despite committing four turnovers. Auburn also had four turnovers.

"We have to learn from this," Auburn coach Gus Malzahn said. "We had a similar setback to this last year. There are a lot of champions in that locker room. They are disappointed and they should be."

The Bulldogs will find out today if the victory was enough to jump Florida State and earn the first No. 1 national ranking in school history. Florida State defeated Syracuse, 38-20, on Saturday.

PLAYOFF SPECULATION

Saturday didn't feature quite the upheaval of last week but the playoff picture isn't any clearer.

Yes, it's only mid-October and four teams separating from the field is something many didn't expect at this time of year, but other than Florida State there really isn't a team that has an inside track.

Still it's always fun to speculate. So here goes.

CONTENDERS

Florida State — Notre Dame is next week and that could be a big obostacle to overcome to make the playoff.

Mississippi State or Mississippi — At press time, the Rebels were leading Texas A&M, but if either one of these two teams can run the table in the SEC they will get a berth.

Baylor — The Bears dodged a huge bullet on Saturday against rival TCU, but still have to win out to guarantee a spot.

Ohio State or Michigan State — Don't look now but the Big Ten powers both have one loss and are creeping back into the conversation.

Notre Dame — If the Irish beat Florida State, look out.

OUTSIDE LOOKING IN

Auburn and Alabama — These two teams aren't necessarily eliminated but their game in November could be the equivalent of a national quarterfinal.

Oklahoma — The Sooners can get back in the conversation by beating Baylor in a few weeks.

Kansas State — The Wildcats are winning quietly and if they run the table, that loss to Auburn looks really good.

STARS

■ Bryce Petty, Baylor, threw for 510 yards and six TDs, including a tying 25-yarder to Corey Coleman with 4:42 left in the No. 9 Bears' 61-58 win over No. 9 TCU.

■ Melvin Gordon, Wisconsin, rushed for 175 yards and four TDs to help the Badgers hold off Illinois 38-28.

■ KD Humphries, Murray State, threw six TD passes, including the winner in a 44-41 overtime victory over Southeast Missouri.

■ Justin Worley, Tennessee, threw three TD passes and ran for two more scores in a 45-10 victory over Chattanooga.

■ Sam Richardson, Iowa State, threw for a career-high 351 yards and three second-half TDs in a 37-30 victory over Toledo.

NO GURLEY, NO PROBLEM

No Todd Gurley? No problem for Georgia.

This time, anyway.

Freshman Nick Chubb rushed 38 times for 143 yards and one touchdown as the 13th-ranked Bulldogs shut out No. 23 Missouri 34-0. Georgia wore down the Tigers early, possessing the ball for more than 42 minutes and gaining 379 total yards on 87 plays.

Gurley was suspended indefinitely on Thursday while the school investigates an alleged violation of NCAA rules. It was a stunning blow for Gurley, who had been making a strong case for Heisman contention. The reason for the investigation hasn't been disclosed, but SI.com reported that Gurley allegedly received $400 to sign 80 pieces of memorabilia on the Georgia campus.

Georgia looked undaunted by his absence — even as fans held up "Free Gurley" signs from the stands.

NUMBERS

3—Defensive touchdowns, including two in the first quarter, by UAB in its 56-21 win over North Texas.

10—Years since Duke had beaten Georgia Tech before knocking off the No. 22 Yellow Jackets 31-25.

13—Tackles for losses by Rice in a 41-21 victory over Army.

1,267—Combined yards in No. 5 Baylor's 61-58 win over No. 9 TCU.

NO. 1 FLORIDA STATE 38 SYRACUSE 20

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — With more distractions swirling around him, Jameis Winston was nearly flawless, throwing for 317 yards and three touchdowns, Mario Pender scored twice, and Florida State beat Syracuse.

Florida State (6-0, 4-0 Atlantic Coast Conference) has won a school-record 22 straight games, the longest streak in the nation, and 19 in a row in the conference.

The Orange (2-4, 0-2) lost their fourth straight, again saddled by too many failures in the red zone, scoring one touchdown in four trips inside the Florida State 20 behind two rookie quarterbacks who combined to throw three interceptions.

Rarely pressured, Winston was 30 of 36 for his fifth 300-yard passing game on the road. Tight end Nick O'Leary had a career-high eight catches for 97 yards and one touchdown.

The game was played with more controversy surrounding Winston. Florida State decided Friday to publicly detail its own timeline of events since Winston was accused of sexual assault in December 2012.

The school also is investigating Winston for a possible code of conduct violation involving the alleged sexual assault, and the Department of Education is investigating the university on how it handles reports of sexual assault after Winston's accuser filed a complaint.

NO. 6 NOTRE DAME 50 NORTH CAROLINA 43

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Everett Golson threw three touchdown passes to overcome his three turnovers that led to North Carolina scores and Notre Dame remained unbeaten.

North Carolina's Marquise Williams threw two touchdown passes, ran for another score and caught a 23-yard TD pass from receiver Quinshad Davis late in the third quarter to give the Tar Heels a 36-35 lead.

But a roughing-the-center penalty against the Tar Heels (2-4) kept alive a Notre Dame drive that led to a 9-yard TD pass from Golson to Tarean Folston. Then, Irish cornerback Cole Luke intercepted a pass to set up Folston's third touchdown.

Williams threw an 18-yard TD pass to Mack Williams with 47 seconds left, but North Carolina failed to recover the onside kick.

The Irish (6-0) are at No. 1 Florida State next week.

NO. 7 ALABAMA 14 ARKANSAS 13

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — Blake Sims threw two touchdown passes and No. 7 Alabama narrowly avoided its second straight Southeastern Conference loss with a 14-13 victory at Arkansas on Saturday night.

The Crimson Tide (5-1, 2-1 SEC), a week after a 23-17 loss at Mississippi, struggled for much of the game — fumbling four times.

However, despite being outgained 335-227, Sims put Alabama up with a 6-yard touchdown pass early in the fourth quarter.

NO. 8 MICHIGAN ST. 45 PURDUE 31

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. — Connor Cook threw three touchdown passes, Nick Hill ran for two scores, and Darien Harris had a late interception return for a touchdown to help Michigan State hold off Purdue.

Michigan State amassed 532 total yards. The Spartans (5-1, 2-0 Big Ten) have won four straight overall, including seven straight conference road games.

NO. 13 GEORGIA 34 NO. 23 MISSOURI 0

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Hutson Mason completed 22 of 28 passes for 156 yards and a touchdown and ran for another score in Georgia's first game without suspended running back Todd Gurley.

Freshman Nick Chubb rushed 38 times for 143 yards and a touchdown as Georgia (5-1, 3-1 Southeastern Conference) wore down the Tigers (4-2, 1-1) early.

NO. 19 EAST CAROLINA 28 SOUTH FLORIDA 17

TAMPA, Fla. — Shane Carden led three long second-half touchdown drives and No. 19 East Carolina shrugged off a slow start to come back and beat South Florida 28-17 on Saturday night.

The Pirates (5-1, 2-0) overcame a 10-point halftime deficit to remain unbeaten in American Athletic Conference play and are off to their best start since 1999.

DUKE 31 NO. 22 GEORGIA TECH 25

ATLANTA — Anthony Boone threw for 123 yards and a touchdown, Josh Sneed ran for 102 yards and a score, and Duke snapped a 10-year losing streak against Georgia Tech.

Backup quarterback Thomas Sirk had a couple of short TD runs for the Blue Devils (5-1, 1-1 Atlantic Coast Conference), who won in Atlanta for the first time since 1994 and showed they aren't going to give up their Coastal Division title without a fight.

Big 12

NO. 16 OKLAHOMA STATE 27, KANSAS 20

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — Tyreek Hill returned a kickoff 99 yards for a fourth-quarter touchdown, and No. 16 Oklahoma State held on to beat upset-minded Kansas 27-20 on Saturday.

Daxx Garman threw for 161 yards with a touchdown an interception, and Desmond Roland ran for 87 yards and another score as the Cowboys (5-1, 3-0 Big 12) were nearly caught looking ahead to next week's showdown with ninth-ranked TCU.

Michael Cummings threw for 288 yards and ran for a touchdown in his first start for Kansas (2-4, 0-3) since 2012. Corey Avery also ran for a score for the Jayhawks.

Oklahoma State led 20-7 at halftime, but the Jayhawks rallied to tie the game 20-all late in the fourth quarter in their first home game under interim coach Clint Bowen.

IOWA STATE 37 TOLEDO 20

AMES, Iowa — Sam Richardson threw for a career-high 351 yards and three second-half touchdowns Saturday, rallying Iowa State to a 37-30 victory over Toledo.

Unable to finish drives in the first half, Richardson and the offense got rolling in the second and gave the Cyclones (2-4) a much needed victory in a rare October break from Big 12 play.

Toledo (4-2), which had a three-game winning streak broken, ran the ball well and pulled into a 23-23 tie in the fourth quarter. But the Cyclones took the lead on Richardson's 5-yard TD pass to E.J. Bibbs and secured the victory with a 16-play, 85-yard drive that Richardson finished with a 14-yard scoring pass to Alan Lazard, making it 37-23.

Richardson finished with a school-record 37 completions in 53 attempts and connected with nine different receivers, including a lineman.

Texas

UTEP 42 OLD DOMINION 35

EL PASO — Autrey Golden caught two late touchdown passes from Jameill Showers and UTEP held on to defeat Old Dominion 42-35 on Saturday night.

The Monarchs answered quickly when Taylor Heinicke passed to Marques Little for a score.

UTEP (3-3, 1-1 Conference USA) then ran out the clock for the win.

The Miners had a 21-7 lead at the half, but were outscored 21-7 in the third. UTEP has been outscored 83-20 in that quarter in six games.

Showers completed 17 of 26 pass attempts for 152 yards while Aaron Jones rushed for 103 yards.

Heinicke led Old Dominion (3-4, 1-3), throwing for 196 yards and three touchdowns. Ray Lawry rushed for 121 yards and two scores.

RICE 41 ARMY 21

WEST POINT, N.Y. — Driphus Jackson completed 15 of 21 passes for 209 yards and three touchdowns and Rice defeated Army 41-21 on Saturday.

Rice's defense recovered two Army fumbles and held Army to a 5-for-13 mark on third-down conversions.

ABILENE CHRISTIAN 55 AVE MARIA 14

Abilene — Parker McKenzie threw for 304 yards and one touchdown in three quarters to lead Abilene Christian to a 55-14 win over NAIA's Ave Maria on Saturday.

ACU (4-3) jumped out to a 17-7 lead early in the second quarter when Herschel Sims, who finished with 86 yards on 10 carries, broke for a 39-yard score.

PRAIRIE VIEW 34 ALABAMA ST. 24

PRAIRIE VIEW — Quarterback Jerry Lovelocke ran for two second-half touchdowns Saturday to help Prairie View beat Alabama State 34-24, snapping a four-game skid against the Hornets.

Alabama State (4-3, 3-2 Southwestern Athletic Conference) marched 74 yards — capped by a 7-yard touchdown run from Khalid Thomas — to open up a 7-0 lead with 12:36 left in the first quarter.

SAM HOUSTON STATE 38 MCNEESE STATE 22

HUNTSVILLE — Jared Johnson ran for two touchdowns and threw for two more to lead Sam Houston State to a 38-22 upset victory over McNeese State on Saturday.

Sam Houston (3-3, 2-0 Southland Conference) jumped out to an early 14-0 lead and held on to knock off the Cowboys (3-2, 1-1) who were ranked No. 4 in the FCS national polls. SHSU was unranked.

UAB 56 NORTH TEXAS 21

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — The UAB defense scored three touchdowns — including two in the first quarter — and Cody Clements accounted for three more to lead UAB past North Texas, 56-21, on Saturday.

UAB's Jontavious Morris returned a fumble, forced when Harris Gaston strip sacked Dajon Williams, 40 yards for a touchdown and, on the next North Texas play from scrimmage, Lamarcus Farmer picked off Williams and returned it 22 yards to give UAB (4-2, 2-1 Conference USA) a 14-0 lead.

HOUSTON 28 MEMPHIS 24

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Gary Ward Jr., making his first start at quarterback, threw for a touchdown and ran 64 yards for another in leading Houston over Memphis 28-24 on Saturday night for the program's 400th victory.

Ward threw a 25-yarder to Markeith Ambles for Houston's first lead, 28-21, with 13:34 left. Memphis (3-3, 1-1 American) followed by driving to the Cougars 3 before settling for a field goal.

STEPHEN F. AUSTIN 42 NICHOLLS 20

THIBODAUX, La. — Gus Johnson ran for 202 yards and three touchdowns and Zach Conque passed for 291 yards and ran for three touchdowns as Stephen F. Austin defeated Nicholls 42-20 on Saturday night after a 50-minute lightning delay.

Johnson, who rushed for over 200 yards for the second game this year, scored on a 34-yard run to give SFA (4-2, 1-1 Southland Conference) a 14-7 lead to begin the second half. Nicholls (0-7, 0-3) answered when Tobias Lofton broke for a 66-yard scoring run with 9:30 remaining in the third. Conque, who rushed for 51 yards, scored from the 1 for a 21-13 lead with 6:14 left in the third. SFA quickly added another touchdown when Johnson scored from the 1.

UTSA 16 FIU 13

SAN ANTONIO — Sean Ianno kicked a field goal to tie the game with 1:54 left, and Florida International fumbled the ensuing kickoff to set up Ianno's 39-yard game-winning, last-minute field goal for a 16-13 UTSA victory Saturday night.

The Roadrunners (2-4, 1-1 Conference USA) tied the game at 13 after FIU went three-and-out at its own 12. Glenn Coleman returned Ianno's kickoff 23 yards before Duke Wheeler forced the fumble and UTSA took possession for what would be the game-winning drive.

CENT ARKANSAS 70 HOUSTON BAPTIST 0

CONWAY, Ark. — Taylor Reed threw two touchdown passes and ran for a third as Central Arkansas shut out Houston Baptist 70-0 Saturday night.

Reed threw touchdowns of 36 yards to Desmond Smith and 46 to Damien Watts in the first quarter. Reed's 6-yard scoring run was the first of five touchdowns in the second quarter by the Bears (4-3, 3-0 Southland).

SE LOUISIANA 61 LAMAR 34

Bennett had touchdown runs of 1 and 3 yards to give the Lions a 17-13 halftime lead. Xavier Roberson ran for a 75-yard touchdown and Bennett ran for a 64-yard score to stretch Southeastern Louisiana's lead to 31-13 early in the third quarter. Bennett added a 16-yard touchdown pass to Jarrell Bennett in the fourth.

NORTHWESTERN ST 49 INCARNATE WORD 12

Adkins hit Tuff McClain with a 12-yard TD pass, then scored on a 40-yarder to Ed Eagan and a 3-yarder to Corey Simmons. Imoan Claiborne recovered a fumble and Adkins hit Cody Jones with a 3-yard TD pass five plays later for a 35-3 halftime lead.

3 things learned in the Big 12

It was a wild day in the Big 12, and the championship picture got a little clearer, but note quite out of murky territory yet.

Here are three things we learned from Saturday's Big 12 slate of games.

Coaches will need more than Tums

All five games on Saturday, including the non-conference game between Iowa State and Toledo was decided by seven or less points.

West Virginia beat Texas Tech by three; Oklahoma beat Texas by five; Oklahoma State held off a game Kansas team by seven and Baylor won a shootout by three on a last-second field goal.

If this keeps up, it's going to be fun for fans, but coaches such as the once seemingly ageless Kliff Kingsbury will have gray hair earlier than they want.

Baylor shows that it could be conference's best team

The Bears pulled off a come back for the ages on Saturday by erasing a 21-point fourth-quarter deficit to beat rival TCU, 61-58, with Chris Callahan's 28-yard field goal.

Baylor still has to play Oklahoma and it's Sooner state brother, but that win will be big for confidence moving forward for the Bears.

Upsets are coming

What Saturday showed was that it's going to be tough for a Big 12 team go to undefeated through the conference schedule, and that means it might make it tough for a Big 12 champ with one or two losses to earn a College Football Playoff spot.

There's still nearly two months left in the season, and plenty can happen.

BEARS

From 1C

Marcus Mallet returned an interception 49 yards for a score with 11:38 left to make it 58-41. Save for the purple patches in McLane Stadium, the Bears' home next to the Brazos River was silent.

No problem.

"I just knew looking at guys' faces that we were going to come back in that game," Petty said. "With our offense and the way that we play defense, 21 points isn't a big deal for us."

Like a blur, Baylor came back.

It took 59 seconds to cut the lead to 14 with Devin Chafin's 7-yard touchdown run.

The next Baylor drive took 1:23, covered 92 yards and ended with Petty hitting Antwan Goodley from 28 yards out. 58-51.

Another Baylor stop. Another lightning-strike drive, 91 yards in 59 seconds. Petty to Coleman. Tie game.

Now McLane was rocking. Music blaring. Dancing in the stands and on the sideline with 4:42 left in the fourth.

When it was over, the 110th meeting of TCU and Baylor and the first with both as ranked teams became the highest-scoring game ever between two teams in the AP Top 10. The Bears extended their home winning streak to 13 games and matched the largest comeback in school history.

Baylor is still relatively new to the national stage, the high rankings and title talk. The Bears won the Big 12 last season for the first time, but flamed out in the Fiesta Bowl loss to Central Florida. There's still some reluctance by the college football world to welcome the Bears into the nation's elite.

Petty and his teammates seem a little tired of hearing about what they haven't done.

"For us it's just another statement game," he said. "It's another chance to prove that we're here to stay."

RIVALRY

span of 3 1/2 minutes.

"We're resilient. The group has a great attitude, great team chemistry and we just got to keep fighting," Stoops said. "We've made some mistakes or bad plays through the game, but you have to keep after it. Make other plays that make up for it."

This was the first time Stoops coached the annual game at the State Fair of Texas against anyone other than Mack Brown. Stoops was 9-6 against Brown, and is now 1-0 with a much-needed victory for the Sooners against new Texas coach Charlie Strong.

A second loss by the midpoint of the season would have made it difficult, maybe impossible, for Oklahoma to get back in the mix for a spot in the new four-team College Football Playoff.

"I feel like we're improving as a team. Do I like everything that happened today? Heck no," Stoops said. "We've got a lot to work on, that's obvious, but it always good when you win and you didn't play well and you know you've got things you can correct."

Texas, which was also a two-touchdown underdog when it beat Oklahoma a year ago, is off to its worst start since going 1-9 in 1956, the year before Darrell Royal became the coach in Austin.

The Longhorns had five false start penalties, three on the game-opening drive along with a delay of game penalty before they kicked a field goal. Ross went the distance on the ensuing kickoff.

"Overall, I was very pleased with the way we played, but you just can't give away opportunities," Strong said. "You have to take advantage of everything."

Oklahoma went up 17-3 early in the second quarter when Sanchez had his Big 12-leading fifth interception. He has picks in seven of the past nine games.

Despite pressure, Swoopes hung in the pocket on third-and-12 before finding Harris for a 38-yard touchdown, and Rose kicked his second field goal just before halftime to get within 17-13.

Swoopes, who was 27 of 44 passing for 334 yards, scored on a 12-yard keeper with just under 5 minutes left. The Longhorns kicked the ball away after Swoopes was stopped short on a 2-point try.

The Sooners then picked up a couple of first downs before punting, leaving Texas only 18 seconds. Texas had an incompletion and another penalty before a game-ending incompletion from their 10.

"Overall, it's a good team win in that we score on special teams, get a defensive touchdown and the offense gets a touchdown in the second half when we needed it," Stoops said.

"I was pleased we were able to run the clock out at the end of the game when we needed it. It's those types of things that are all positive. Everybody had a hand in it."

Because of it, they take the Golden Hat Trophy back to Norman and keep their hat in the playoff chase.

Legal & Public Notices

TEXAS COMMISSION ON ENVIRONMENTAL QUALITY

Notice of Draft Federal Operating Permit

Draft Permit No.: O3260

Application and Draft Permit. Northern Natural Gas Company, 1111 South 103rd Street, Omaha, Nebraska 68124-1072, has applied to the Texas Commission on Environmental Quality (TCEQ) for a renewal of Federal Operating Permit (herein referred to as Permit) No. O3260, Application No. 21297, to authorize operation of the Spraberry Compressor Station, a Natural Gas Transmission facility. The area addressed by the application is located at 13401 East County Road 230 in Midland, Midland County, Texas 79702-8200. This link to an electronic map of the site or facility's general location is provided as a public courtesy and not part of the application or notice. For exact location, refer to the application. You can find an electronic map of the facility at: http://www.tceq.texas.gov/assets/public/hb610/index.html?lat=31.854722&lng=-101.796111&zoom=13&type=r. This application was received by the TCEQ on April 21, 2014.

The purpose of a federal operating permit is to improve overall compliance with the rules governing air pollution control by clearly listing all applicable requirements, as defined in Title 30 Texas Administrative Code § 122.10 (30 TAC § 122.10). The draft permit, if approved, will codify the conditions under which the area must operate. The permit will not authorize new construction. The executive director has completed the technical review of the application and has made a preliminary decision to prepare a draft permit for public comment and review. The executive director recommends issuance of this draft permit. The permit application, statement of basis, and draft permit will be available for viewing and copying at the TCEQ Central Office, 12100 Park 35 Circle, Building E, First Floor, Austin, Texas; the TCEQ Midland Regional Office, 9900 West Interstate 20 Suite 100, Midland, Texas 79706-2636; and the Midland County Public Library, 301 West Missouri Avenue, Midland, Texas, beginning the first day of publication of this notice. The draft permit and statement of basis are available at the TCEQ Website:

At the TCEQ central and regional offices, relevant supporting materials for the draft permit, as well as the New Source Review permits which have been incorporated by reference, may be reviewed and copied. Any person with difficulties obtaining these materials due to travel constraints may contact the TCEQ central office file room at (512) 239-1540.

Public Comment/Notice and Comment Hearing. Any person may submit written comments on the draft permit. Comments relating to the accuracy, completeness, and appropriateness of the permit conditions may result in changes to the draft permit.

A person who may be affected by the emission of air pollutants from the permitted area may request a notice and comment hearing. The purpose of the notice and comment hearing is to provide an additional opportunity to submit comments on the draft permit. The permit may be changed based on comments pertaining to whether the permit provides for compliance with 30 TAC Chapter 122 (examples may include that the permit does not contain all applicable requirements or the public notice procedures were not satisfied). The TCEQ may grant a notice and comment hearing on the application if a written hearing request is received within 30 days after publication of the newspaper notice. The hearing request must include the basis for the request, including a description of how the person may be affected by the emission of air pollutants from the application area. The request should also specify the conditions of the draft permit that are inappropriate or specify how the preliminary decision to issue or deny the permit is inappropriate. All reasonably ascertainable issues must be raised and all reasonably available arguments must be submitted by the end of the public comment period. If a notice and comment hearing is granted, all individuals that submitted written comments or a hearing request will receive written notice of the hearing. This notice will identify the date, time, and location for the hearing.

Written public comments and/or requests for a notice and comment hearing should be submitted to the Texas Commission on Environmental Quality, Office of the Chief Clerk, MC-105, P.O. Box 13087, Austin, Texas 78711-3087, or electronically at www.tceq.texas.gov/about/comments.html and be received within 30 days after the date of newspaper publication of this notice. If you communicate with the TCEQ electronically, please be aware that your email address, like your physical mailing address, will become part of the agency's public record.

A notice of proposed final action that includes a response to comments and identification of any changes to the draft permit will be mailed to everyone who submitted public comments, a hearing request, or requested to be on the mailing list for this application. This mailing will also provide instructions for public petitions to the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to request that the EPA object to the issuance of the proposed permit. After receiving a petition, the EPA may only object to the issuance of a permit which is not in compliance with the applicable requirements or the requirements of 30 TAC Chapter 122.

Mailing list. In addition to submitting public comments, a person may ask to be placed on a mailing list for this application by sending a request to the Office of the Chief Clerk at the address above. Those on the mailing list will receive copies of future public notices (if any) mailed by the Chief Clerk for this application.

Information. For additional information about this permit application or the permitting process, please contact the Texas Commission on Environmental Quality, Public Education Program, MC-108, P.O. ## THE COFFEE OFFICE

By PATRICIA RIVERA
CTW Features

If you need a change of scenery, try heading to a "coffice" – you know, the local coffee shops where people also linger to work, negotiate and present.

Once a makeshift office of choice for creative types, coffices are becoming increasingly more popular with professionals from a variety of industries who have some degree of flexibility in their jobs. In fact, the trend inspired Toronto entrepreneur Sam Title to start thecoffice.biz, an online community for people who work from coffee shops.

"We see it as phenomenon that is growing not only in North America but across the world," Title says.

With greater access to mobile technology, the option to work remotely continues to grow, leaving many people who might typically work at home to settle into a coffee shop for meetings and even to give small presentations. For people who work as independent consultants, telecommuters or entrepreneurs, the idea of going to an "office" also adds structure to their lives.

"As a former employee, I recall the work style culture shock of a missing daily commute and office space," Title adds.

But working in a coffee shop does require some planning and common sense considerations. Title offers the following tips to maximize the use of your work time at a coffee shop.

• Research in advance. You don't want to learn on deadline, or prior to an important meeting, that the coffee shop you've chosen for the day lacks enough electrical plugs. Check online for reviews or even call to ask about conditions.

• Budget for it. Expect to make at least one purchase for every hour that you spend at a coffee shop. Be cognizant of the fact that shop owners are business owners, who expect to make money from your visit. You can't stay all day with the purchase of just one cup of coffee.

• Be courteous and respectful. Don't hog the Wi-Fi and power outlets. Don't spread yourself out. Title says you should make it possible for others to share your table, if needed. Also, treat the staff with respect and clean up after yourself.

• Avoid the comfy seats. If you are at a coffee shop to work, you don't want to settle into a lounge chair that will trick your mind into thinking you can relax for a bit. The more comfortable seats also attract people who want to chat and socialize. Title says find the hardest chair possible, preferably away from the center of the shop, and get to work.

• Take headphones and music. Prepare for the fact that you might not like the shop's music. Your choice of music of background noise will help you stay focused.

THE MORE THE SCARIER

GROUP INTERVIEWS CAN BE INTIMIDATING. HERE ARE SOME TIPS TO HELP PREPARE

By PATRICIA RIVERA
CTW Features

What's worse than dreaming you're naked at a job interview? For some, it might be dreaming that you're exposed in front of not just one interviewer, but a whole panel of them.

Group interviews continue to rise in popularity because they're more effective and cost efficient for certain jobs, even though they give applicants the jitters.

"Even the best candidates occasionally get so nervous in an interview that they lose all perspective. That's when the balance of power shifts and the interview tanks," says Roy Cohen, a New York City executive and career coach.

Group interviews come into two forms. The first involves a group of candidates who are vying for similar jobs, often high-volume, customer-centric positions. The second, and the more common, place a single job candidate in front of as many as 10 interviewers at once.

In either scenario, applicants must put on a performance to stand apart and to show their confidence, Cohen says.

Robert Half Senior District President Brett Good says that group interviews allow companies to observe the interpersonal skills of multiple candidates at once. Sometimes, in demanding jobs, the hiring managers will give an in-depth description of the job responsibilities and performance metrics, and then ask candidates who don't see themselves in that role to leave.

If you are interested in the position, express it. But don't try to compete with the others. Your interpersonal skills are on the spotlight. Show respect for other candidates and treat them in a diplomatic manner.

Cohen – also author of "The Wall Street Professional's Survival Guide: Success Secrets of a Career Coach" (FT Press, 2010) – likens a group interview to competitive running.

"If you look over your shoulder to see what others are doing, then you can break your stride and lose the race. So in a job interview, just focus on you and not what others are saying and doing," he adds.

For panel interviews that involve one candidate and multiple interviewers, embracing the perseverance of a mentally tough runner also helps. You might encounter, for instance, a good cop/bad cop technique. Interviewers take opposing approaches to a topic, leaving you confused or unsure of their intent.

Stay focused, Cohen suggests, much like that resilient runner who visualizes his goals and does not let anything keep him or her from reaching it.

Good adds that it's also helpful to know as much about the interview process and the interviewers before the big day. Research each person's background and make eye contact with each one when you meet. Ask them for business cards so you can send each interviewer a customized thank you note.

Cohen notes that interview success is about executing your plan based on sound preparation. When the interviewer connects with you and understands your answers, takes your lead and offers encouraging body language, you'll know that you've done well.

Cohen offers more tips:

• Keep it succinct. Never tell a long-winded story even if the story is epic. Make sure that whatever you share is relevant and makes sense given the job you're interviewing for. You might begin with a brief summary that explains who you are and the core themes that define your career.

• Pick and choose your stories. If you have a long work history, start at an inflection point, perhaps in the middle. That's the point where there's been a critical development that will be of great interest and is most valuable to your interviewer. Don't provide detailed descriptions initially. Too much information will be lost in the translation and your interviewer will tune you out.

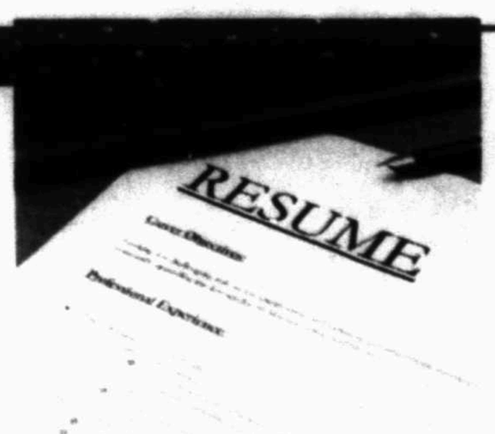

• Engage with good questions. Always have questions prepared in advance. Good questions demonstrate your motivation, interest and passion. It's also a good way to engage the interviewer. Ask about issues and challenges the company faces, and how performance and success are measured.

RESUMES

WHAT'S NOTABLE

As managing director for the recruiting firm Whitehouse Pimms, Mark Rich reads "thousand of resumes each year."

Although many of them "list personal accomplishments that [the jobseeker] is proud of, like playing a musical instrument," Rich says, "most of the time it's pretty basic stuff."

But lately, Rich notes, more resumes contain a number, which in itself is noteworthy if it falls within a certain range: the applicant's SAT or GMAT score.

The SAT, a college admission test, as well as the GMAT, the entrance exam for graduate business programs, are becoming "expected by certain businesses, like management consulting and investment banking when they're hiring younger workers for professional roles," says Rich.

But jobseekers should only include test scores on a resume if the numbers are stellar. "Clients often want the 95th percentile," says Rich.

But distinguishing oneself with these types of accomplishments – usually listed in the leisure/volunteer activities section of a resume – could backfire unless the applicant can discern how the potential employer will view it.

For instance, "tech managers are looking for problem-solvers, so participation in 'hackathons' could be something to highlight on a resume," says John Reed, senior executive director of Robert Half Technology.

"Or," adds Reed, "a company working on 'gamification' projects might view your passion for video games as relevant."

On the other hand, "A lot of people view gaming as a hobby, and not an activity with real world applications," Reed adds.

But anything you're really proud of, and that represents an accomplishment not many others share, is probably resume-worthy.

"I've seen people who put that they earned all their college costs themselves. That's pretty impressive," says Reed.

Waterfront Homes

Nationwide, the typical oceanfront or lakefront, single-family home is worth more than double the median value of all homes, and in some communities the median waterfront house could be worth ten or more times the median value of non-waterfront houses, according to a new analysis by Zillow. In the U.S. at the time of this analysis, the median single-family home was worth about $171,600, while the median waterfront house was valued at $370,900, a waterfront premium of 116.1 percent. "The allure of ocean and lakefront living is powerful and undeniable, and millions of homeowners nationwide dream of one day owning a home on the water. But those dreams come at a price," said Zillow Chief Economist Dr. Stan Humphries. "Waterfront properties are both relatively scarce and highly coveted, and that high demand and limited supply leads to higher home prices. Additionally, added insurance, floods, environmental mitigation and infrastructure costs are often part of the tab when buying a waterfront home. Still, as long as buyers understand the added costs and potential headaches, waterfront living is likely to remain one of life's simple pleasures for many, many years to come." The median waterfront home value represents the median value of all single-family waterfront homes in a given community. The index includes single-family homes located 150 feet or closer to the waterline of an ocean or lakes with a total combined size of 10 square kilometers or greater. Properties separated from direct waterfront by a road with a speed limit of 25mph or less are also considered waterfront. Riverfront properties were not included in this analysis, nor were condominium or co-op housing units. Source: NMP Daily Financing is readily available for these types of properties.

THE REALTOR SELLING YOUR HOUSE NEEDS YOUR HELP.

We are pleased to have the listing of your house. Since you are planning to sell, we offer you this list of helpful suggestions in order to make the selling of it a more pleasant experience for all. The prospect we bring to your door is looking at your house as a future home, so first impressions are very important. Here's how you can help:

PROSPECTS SEE THE OUTSIDE FIRST. In order to show your lawn, your shrubbery, your flower beds, and your trees to their best advantage, a little time and work will pay big dividends. You should keep the grass well cut and trimmed neatly around walks and drives. Weed out the flower beds, trim the shrubbery if necessary, cut dead limbs from polish doorknobs. Careful maintenance of little things gives your house that well cared for look.

CONSIDER PAINTING THE HOUSE BEFORE SHOWING IT. If you would have planned to paint the house within the coming year. A new paint job will normally enhance the sales value by a good deal more than the cost of the paint. This applies to both inside and outside.

If woodwork is not repainted before showing, it should be washed. Clean and wax floors. Steam clean carpets. PEOPLE WILL PAY FOR CLEANLINESS.

DON'T HIDE THE SKELETONS. Throw them away. You are planning to move anyway so get rid of the accumulations that you will probably dispose of upon moving. If your closets are cluttered, see if you can't sell or give away the excess, or stow it in boxes in a suitable place. Those things which remain in a closet should be arranged with maximum neatness so as to make it clear that there is adequate closet space.

GARAGE AND ATTICS ARE USEFUL. They too should be clean, and their contents well organized to leave maximum floor space. Clean out the garage and hose down the floor. If necessary, paint it.

LUBRICATE STICKING DOORS, WINDOWS, AND DRAWERS with a candle stump to make them move easily. Fix loose door knobs and dripping faucets. Cracked plaster and torn screening should be repaired.

CURTAINS AND BLINDS SHOULD BE FRESH AND CLEAN. Have the mirrors, picture frames and glasses covering the pictures been cleaned? Are the lamp shades in good condition? Are the electrical connections plugged in? Are the light fixtures shining and are there bulbs in all fixtures? Are the book shelves neat and have they been dusted. Are your magazines in order?

IS YOUR HOUSE CHEERY? Open the blinds and have plenty of lights on. If it is winter, light a little fire. Houseplants should be around the house, even if you have to buy or rent some. Bathrooms and kitchen should gleam.

KEEP THE PETS OUT. As much as you love them they can be offensive to a prospect and keep him from considering your house. Remove kitty litters and make sure there is no tell-tale odor: burn candles or add air fresheners if necessary.

Place a list of recent repairs where it can be easily seen. If your utility bills are unusually low, make a list of the last year's bills for prospect to see. Turn off the TV.

YOUR SALES REPRESENTATIVE NEEDS THE PRIVACY OF YOUR HOUSE. If you have done all the preceding things, you have given the house a chance... now give the salesman a chance. You may express your regrets that you and the children are going to have to leave the house. Tell the prospect that you have been very happy there, but go no further. Let your house and the salesman do the selling.

Thanks for your help. HERE'S HOPING YOU GET THE HIGH DOLLAR!

Homebuyer Checklist: Find Out What Matters Most

If you're embarking on the exciting process of searching for your first home, you may be feeling a bit overwhelmed. After all, from choosing the right location to securing the necessary financing, there are many important details to tackle.

These details can often cloud your judgment when looking at prospective homes to buy. However, in order to be happy in your new home for years to come, you must choose a property that embodies what's most important to you. The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) recommends answering the following questions as a guide to selecting a new home:

1. What part of town neighborhood do you want to live in?
2. What price range would you consider? Establish the maximum price you'd consider.
3. Are schools a factor and, if so, what do you need to take into consideration (i.e., the school system's ranking, whether the kids can walk to school, etc.)?
4. Do you want an older home or a newer home (less than five years old)?
5. What kind of houses would you be willing to see (i.e., ranch, two-story, split level, condo, etc.)?
6. What style house appeals to you most (i.e., contemporary, traditional, colonial, etc.)?
7. How much renovation would you be willing to do?
8. Do you need to be close to public transportation?
9. Do you have any physical needs that must be met, such as wheelchair access?
10. Do you have any animals that will require special facilities?
11. What criteria does the lot the property sits on have to meet (i.e., acreage, fenced yard, two-car garage, patio deck, views, etc.)?
12. What criteria does the interior of the home need to meet (i.e., number of bedrooms, number of bathrooms, square footage, etc.)?
13. Which of the following features of the home are most important to you? Important! Consider must-haves vs. would-like-to-haves:
    - Air conditioning
    - Wall-to-wall carpet
    - Hardwood floors
    - Eat-in kitchen
    - Separate dining room
    - Formal living room
    - Family room
    - Separate den or library
    - Basement
    - Fireplace
    - "In-law" apartment
    - Lots of windows (light)

Answering the above questions will help you hone in on what's most important to you and what you can let go of. This exercise will also help you narrow your home search and find your new home much sooner.

What's the Right Paint for Your Home Interior?

By Nancy Baldwin | CTW Features

A fresh coat of paint is the quickest and easiest way to transform a home. However, selecting paint goes beyond choosing the perfect color.

The right paint will produce fast, even, durable coverage and ensure walls and trim are protected from humidity, fading and dirt. With so many options offered by stores and manufactures, choosing the best paint for a project can be overwhelming.

Here are a few tips to help with selecting the correct paint for any interior room.

Buy Quality

Top quality paints cover well, lower application time and perform better over long periods.

"If you choose the cheapest version, it's probably not a great product. You need to have something that hides well," says Nick May, owner, Walls by Design, Littleton, Colo.

"The more expensive the paint, the better the hide. Manufacturers all have an option for an upper end vs. a middle vs. a lower end. If you're not spending at least $35 on a gallon of paint, you're spending too little."

Go with Low VOC

Many paints have high levels of volatile organic compounds (VOC's) which reduce drying time. These compounds emit chemicals that are a contributor to ground-level ozone pollution and may result in irritation to eyes and the respiratory system.

"You want environmentally friendly products," says Andres Matheu, owner, Homm Certified Painting Systems, Alexandria, Va. "Paint has chemicals that evaporate when the paint cures. They get expelled, and you breathe them. If you have allergies, go with no-VOC or low-VOC paint."

Consider the Surface

Has the existing surface been painted before? If not, a primer is likely needed.

"If it's raw wood or raw drywall, it needs a primer, or if the surface has something that can bleed through. Crayon and marker can bleed through. Use a bonding primer, something for the paint to grab on to," says May.

Walls by Design

Sophisticated and chic: Non-reflective grey paint on walls brings calm to any atmosphere

While some manufacturers offer a primer and paint combination, this product may not be the best choice.

"In my opinion, the primer-in-one is more for better coverage. It does not mean you can get away without a primer on a bare surface," says Matheu.

The type of surface to be painted, and the environment, will determine the best kind of paint to be used. The most common types of interior paint are water-based (latex) and oil-based (alkyd or enamel).

Water-based, latex paint can be used almost anywhere in a home. This versatile paint cleans well with soap and water, dries quickly, has little odor, and is non-flammable.

An oil-based paint is better used for areas that may rust or stain, or for high-traffic, frequently touched areas.

"Oil-based paints are for doors, trim, edges. Metal surfaces work best with oil-based paint. It's a harder paint. It will be very shiny, but it will last longer," says Matheu.

Select a Sheen

Sheen is the level of shine a surface has once the paint dries. The most common sheens are flat/matte, eggshell, satin, semi gloss and gloss.

Flat and eggshell paints have the lowest sheen and are most forgiving when used on surfaces with imperfections.

"Flat paint is designed not to reflect light. The more deflection, the more imperfections you'll see. Most people will keep flat paint on a ceiling. We recommend that," says May.

When used on walls, flat paint creates a calming atmosphere.

"The less sheen you have makes for a more comfortable space," May says. "For areas where there are children, I want to have at least something more than flat. An eggshell will give people plenty of durability for normal wiping."

Semi-gloss paints are best used for areas of high humidity or that need frequent cleaning, such as bathrooms and kitchens, while gloss paints highlight and protect trim, molding and doors.

With so many choices, lern the benefits of each and determine the right paint for your job.

Last-Minute Harvest Time

Get ready for Thanksgiving dinner now with fresh, homegrown herbs for every dish

By Bev Bennett | CTW Features

Although managing herbs may not be tops on your list of fall garden chores, this is a great time of the year to nurture or plant perennial culinary varieties.

Unlike basil and cilantro, both delicate annuals, hardier sage, thyme and chives will survive cooler weather. The pay-off for your attention now will be the savory flavors and aromas of your own fresh picked herbs for your Thanksgiving meal.

The difference between fresh and dried is dramatic.

"Fresh sage is so much better than dried," says Rose Marie Nichols McGee, president of Nichols Garden Nursery, Albany, Ore. You'll also appreciate the bargain your own herbs deliver when compared with supermarket herbs.

If you're currently growing herbs, your challenge will be to keep them thriving until you're ready to cook. Otherwise, you can plant herbs now and harvest at Thanksgiving.

Herbs in the garden can tolerate some frost, but shouldn't be completely exposed.

Protect the base with mulch after the first frost, McGee says.

Along with exposure, neglect can damage herbs, according to Tammi Hartung, co-owner with her husband of Desert Canyon Farm, a wholesale greenhouse operation in Canyon City, Colo.

"People forget they still have to water during the fall and winter if they live in arid climates. What kills [herb] plants is if they get dehydrated," says Hartung, author of "The Wildlife-Friendly Vegetable Gardener: How to Grow Food in Harmony with Nature" (Storey Publishing, 2013).

Gardens that aren't already resplendent with herbs can be planted during the fall. "The beauty of planting herbs right now is that they don't struggle with horrible heat. It's easy for them to settle in," Hartung says.

During this time of the year you're most likely to find herbs at farmers markets or at your garden center's perennial displays. Be sure to buy enough for cooking and growing.

Thyme, garlic chives, chives and Madalene Hill rosemary, which withstands lower temperatures, are among Hartung's favorites.

Plant sage, thyme and rosemary with full sun, if possible. Chives can take partial shade.

Again, water herbs regularly.

If it pains you to trim your herbs think of the good you're doing them, says McGee.

Chives, for example, should be cut all the way down to the base to allow new leaves to grow.

"If you leave a four-inch stump, you'll always have a four-inch stump," McGee says.

Thyme looks better with a buzz cut.

Grab at the base and cut across the top. Because you're cutting across you'll have a nicely shaped plant in the spring.

How to save cut herbs

When your herbs no longer thrive outdoors, harvest your crops for winter cooking.

For herbs you'll use within a week or two, cut off the top part of the plant including leaves and about two inches of stem. Wrap the stem part in a damp paper towel; place in a plastic bag and refrigerate. Dampen the paper towel every few days.

For longer storage either dry or freeze herbs.

Tammi Hartung likes to use baskets for drying because it's easy and creates an attractive display.

Pick the herb leaves and arrange in a single layer in an open-weave basket. Toss the herbs every few days so all the leaves dry.

"Once the herbs are dry it's important to put the herbs into proper storage: [covered] glass jars or paper container; not plastic," she says.

The herbs should last for one year.

Culinary herbs such basil, mint, lemon verbena and chives freeze well.

Hartung's technique is simply to pick the herb leaves, rinse, shake off the excess water and toss in freezer containers.

You can also separate the leaves, place on a flat baking sheet and freeze. Remove the frozen leaves to a freezer container.

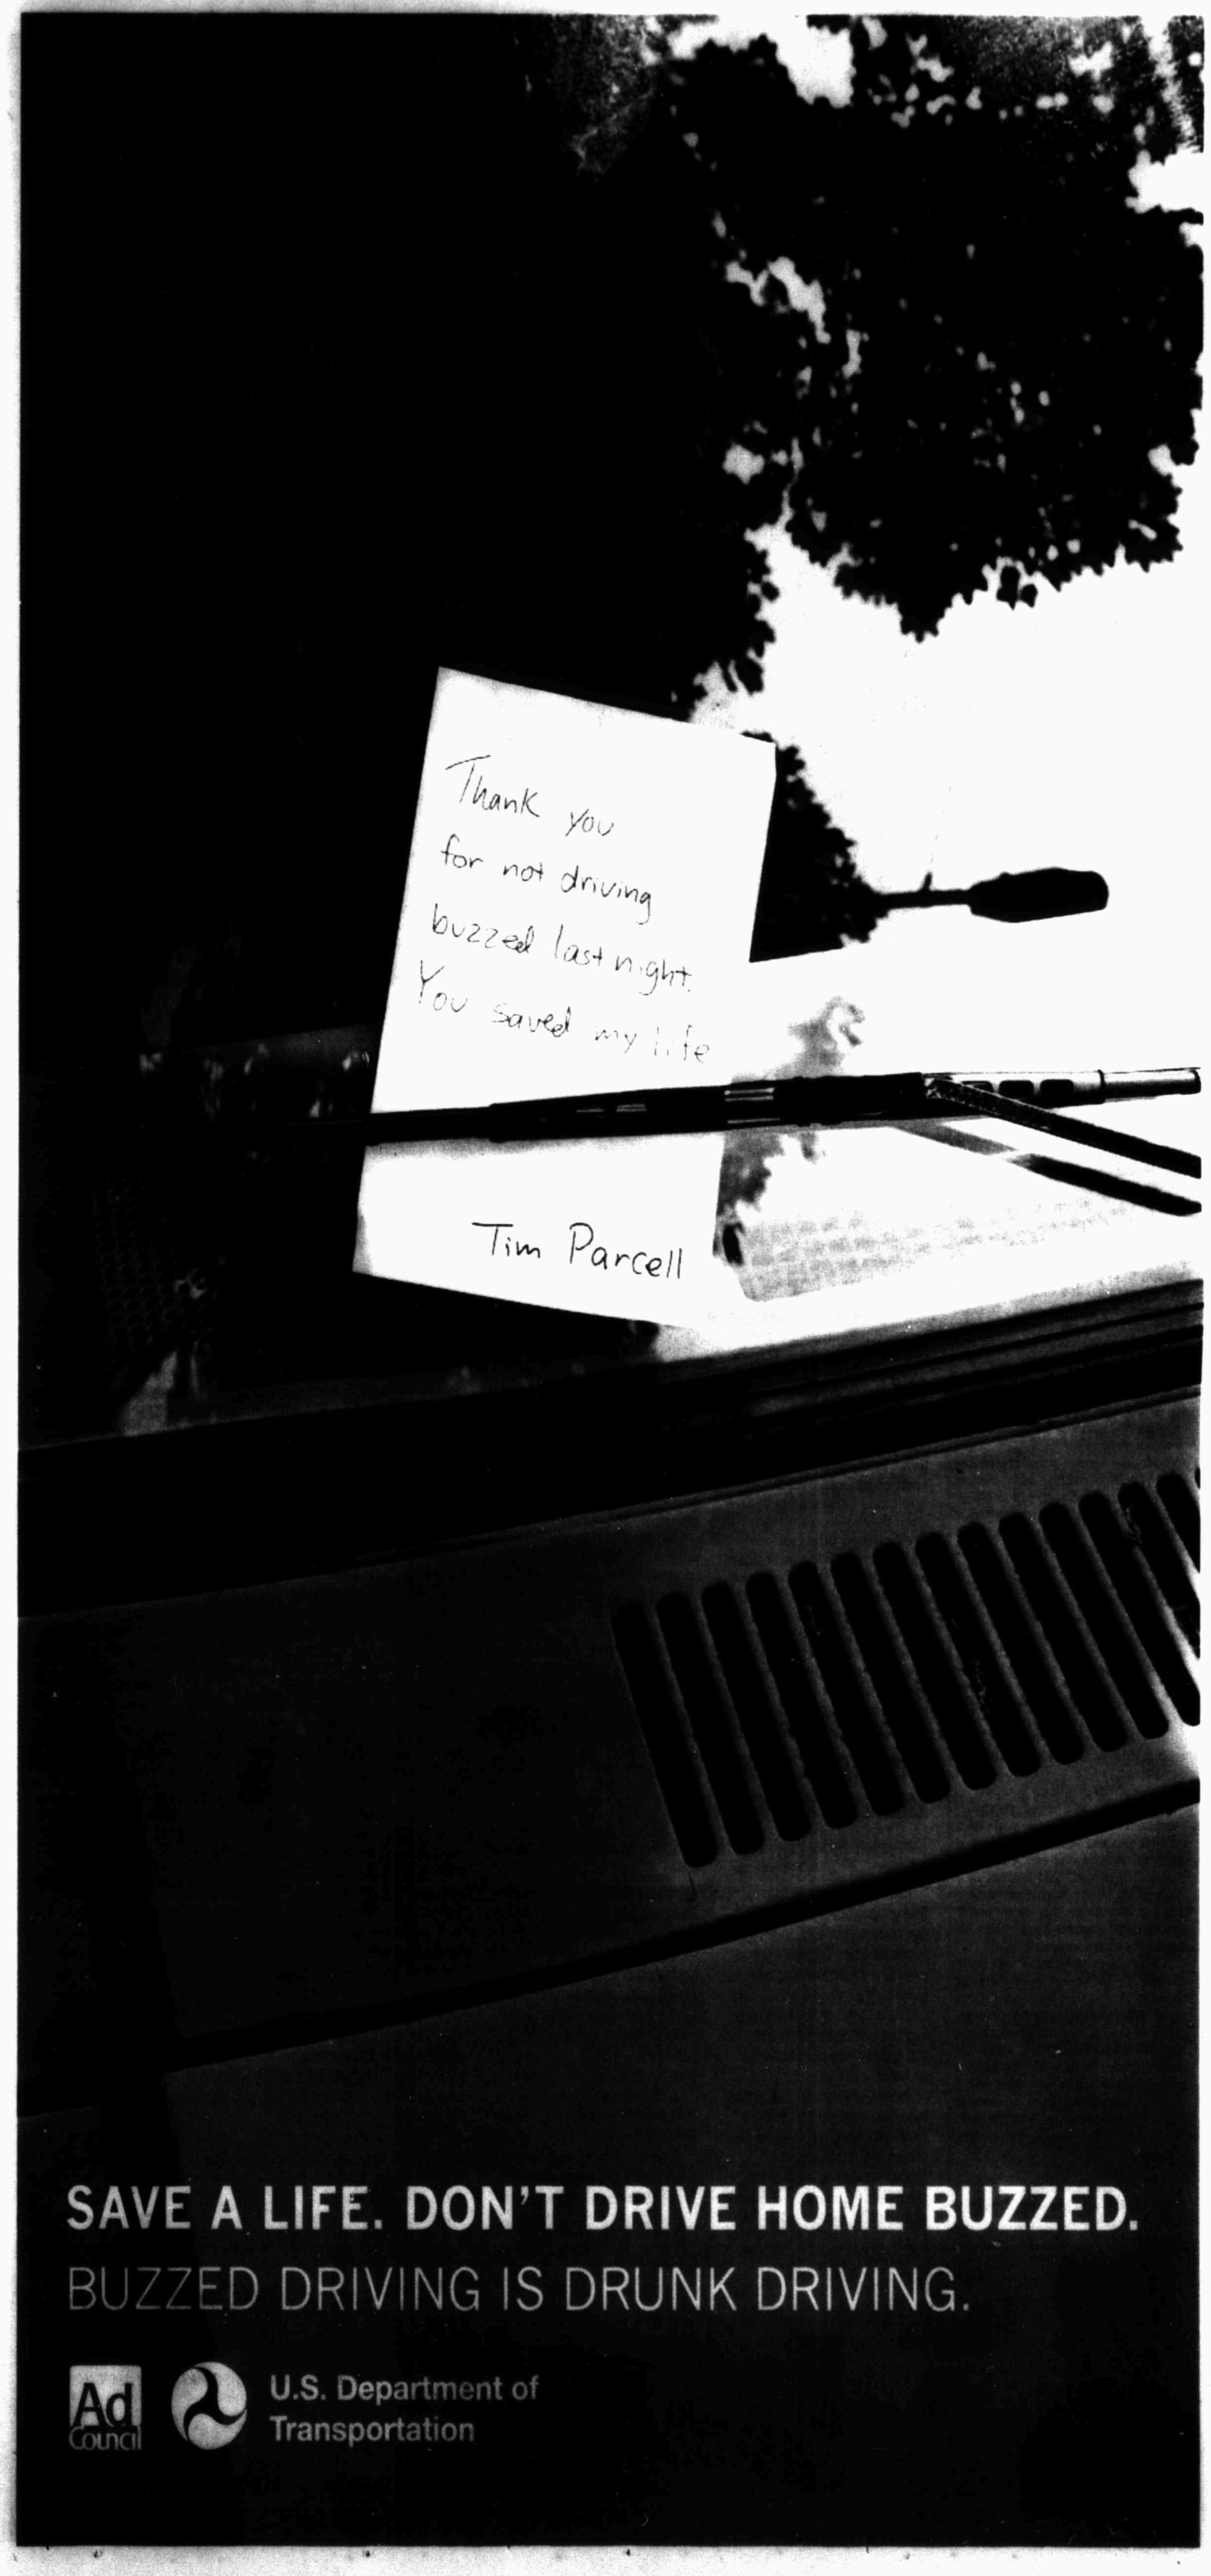

Either way, once frozen, herbs turn dark green with a slippery texture and should be used in cooked dishes, not as garnishes.

WHY THE CREDIT CAUTION?

QUESTION:

We are in the process of buying a home and our lender has issued a strange and ominous warning. Do not use a credit card, do not open a new account, and do not make any big purchases. What gives?

ANSWER:

What your lender is looking for might be described as a "quiet period," a few weeks of financial hermit-like living when credit use is held to a minimum between the time the purchase agreement was signed and closing actually takes place. The lender very much wants to protect your interests, and here's why.

It used to be that when you applied for a mortgage the lender ran one credit check in an effort to find all of your monthly debts. This allowed the lender to figure out your required monthly payments for auto loans, student, credit card payments, etc. Once your credit was run the lender could determine your monthly payments and whether you had too much debt to qualify.

Swing ahead to the new underwriting era – today – and the lending process is very different. Your lender is going to check your credit and figure your monthly payments just like in the old days. Then your lender is going to check again, maybe daily, and the lender will do this until closing.

The reason for the repeated credit checks is that the lender wants to get the loan right, and that means having a mortgage that meets certain standards. If the loan is wrong it's possible that the lender will have to buy back the mortgage from an investor, not a cheap or happy prospect.

What the lender fears are undisclosed debts. Imagine that during the quiet period you go out and buy a new big-screen TV. The appliance store offers you 10 percent off if you will sign up for their new credit card. Sounds great, and in 60 seconds you have a new TV and a new credit card.

You may not see it as a big deal, but the new debt increases your required monthly payments. For marginal borrowers this means you may increase your costs to point where they pass a given limit, say a 43-percent debt-to-income ratio. As a result your loan might be lost – and with it the home and maybe your deposit.

Is this a real problem? You bet.

"Almost one-fifth of all mortgage borrowers, including those with solid credit scores and debt-to-income ratios apply for at least one new trade line during this period," said Equifax in a 2013 study. "Many borrowers simply don't realize how this new 'undisclosed debt' impacts their ability to qualify for their mortgage."

A mortgage application was once a static event, you handed in your paperwork, and that was about it. No more. With multiple credit reviews you can count on lenders to check and re-check paperwork right up until closing. In fact, in one case a lender called while my wife and I were riding home from a closing. The lender's question? Was my wife still employed! Happily, the answer was yes.

ONE HOUSE, MULTIPLE GENERATIONS

HOW TO SHOP FOR A HOME THAT CAN ACCOMMODATE EXTRA FAMILY HOUSEMATES

By ERIK J. MARTIN
CTW Features

In a tight economy, many American homes today are proving to be a haven where the extended family – from Grandma to the new college graduate – flocks together for comfort, convenience, and, increasingly, financial practicality.

As proof, consider that 14 percent of all home purchases made between July 2012 and June 2013 were by a multi-generational household, comprised of adult children, adult siblings, parents and/or grandparents, according to a recently released study by the National Association of Realtors. The main motivations for a multi-generational home purchase were adult children moving back home, and to save money (each cited by 24 percent of survey respondents); other reasons included caretaking or health of aging parents (20 percent) and spending more time with aging parents (11 percent).

"In past years, most individuals and families lived in their own residences. Today, more people in all age segments are living together under one roof. It starts with younger unmarried adults but is now growing to include married couples and families, and in coming years it will include extended families," says Dennis Torres, director of real estate operations at the Graziadio School of Business and Management at Pepperdine University in Malibu, California. "Also, the trend is not exclusive to low-income segments of the population."

The good news for homeowners now hosting boomerang children or aging or care-dependent parents is that there's strength, solace and savings in numbers: It's cheaper to move an elder relative in with you than pay for an expensive assisted living facility; adult children can help with home maintenance; and the move-in can bring the family closer together.

The bad news is that it can be difficult to comfortably accommodate and plan for extra inhabitants, as they will likely have their own spatial preferences. Such living arrangements may require shopping for a bigger or more flexible residence, or plans for these future needs may need to be included during a current hunt for a new home.

"You need to look for qualities in your next home that will support multi-generational living," says Linda Lenore, a green building professional and universal design specialist with Green Chi Designs in San Francisco. She recommends considering several key amenities, including:

• A stairless first-floor setup – with bedroom, adjacent bath, and kitchen nearby on the same level – to make it easier particularly for disabled/elder residents.

• A bedroom with an adjacent private bathroom, far away enough from the master suite/master bath, for adult children.

• Universal design elements, including wider hallways, door openings and baths for wheelchairs and walkers.

Annmarie Pluhar, author of "Sharing Housing: A Guidebook for Finding and Keeping Good Housemates" (Homemate Publishing, 2011), says, at very least, long-term houseguests desire a bedroom, sitting room and bathroom of their own.

"Kitchens need to be big enough – sometimes having two refrigerators makes life easier," Pluhar says. "Having a way for grandparents to retire away from children noise also is great. And independent adults like to be able to come and go easily and quietly."

Having a living space that's connected to the main home but also has a separate entry point can go a long way toward helping multi-generational households maintain peace and prevent conflicts, says John Egnatis, co-founder/CEO of Grenadier Homes in Dallas, who adds that buyers need to forecast future remodeling needs carefully.

"Sometimes you cannot add space (via renovation) due to zoning issues, which is why you may want to buy a home that already includes a built-in, multi-purpose flex space with a separate entrance and exit," Egnatis says. "These flex spaces can also be used as an in-home office, so the space is still usable if your family circumstances change."

Lastly, try to opt for a home near quality health care facilities, parks and trails, and evaluate if the property has room for multiple vehicles.

HOW TO GET EVERYONE UNDER YOUR ROOF

3 ways to prepare your home for a boomerang child or aging parent

Dreaming of the day your kids finally move out and you can downsize to a smaller, low-maintenance home? Considering how expensive renting/owning is likely to be for your moved-out children and how costly dependent care facilities can be for aging relatives, that fantasy may need to be put on hold.

Indeed, chances are that, before long, you may end up hosting a multi-generational household consisting of you, your adult offspring, and one or more of your elder parents or in-laws. But don't panic or start searching for a bigger house just yet: There are three steps you can take now to future-proof your current abode:

1. Evaluate your current layout and determine if you have any available flex space to host a long-term housemate – perhaps in the spare bedroom, first-floor office or basement – without having to undergo an expensive remodel.

2. Consider remodeling within your existing footprint if you lack flex space.

"When multiple generations live together, it's extremely beneficial to have your own space in order to coexist peacefully," says Linda Lenore, a green building professional and universal design specialist with Green Chi Designs in San Francisco. "If possible, create a separate master bedroom with a private bath, and have two different living rooms and/or kitchens."

3. Explore an addition, build-out or detached space.

This choice allows you to keep your existing interior space intact without reshuffling rooms and provides ideal privacy and spatial independence for your new housemate. Three popular accessory dwelling unit options include an attached in-law studio, backyard cottage, and detached granny flat, says Kevin Casey, CEO/founder of New Avenue Homes in Emeryville, California.

Before going the remodeling route, formulate a realistic budget and determine how best to finance your renovation project, adds Monica D. Higgins, founder of Remodel Einstein in Los Angeles. "In addition, compare the cost and value of remodeling with the cost of purchasing a new home," Higgins says. "You may find that improving your current home could make it more valuable as well as be more convenient than selling."

Martial arts school focuses on breast cancer awareness

By Steve Kuhlmann

As breast cancer awareness month continues, there's a wide variety of ways local organizations and businesses are supporting the cause. While some are focusing on the medical side of things, Matthews Martial Arts plans to raise awareness with fun female empowerment and education at its annual Fight Like a Girl event.

The evening will consist of a self-defense seminar, skits featuring women showing off their skills against an aggressor, a breast cancer education table run by medical professionals and more.

"We don't want it to be, like, going to the doctor; that's not what we do," said Monica Morse, an instructor at Matthews Martial Arts. "We're going to do what we do best, which is teach self-defense and empower women. We're going to have the information there available and, of course, we'll talk about how we want to challenge them to take care of themselves, but at the same time everybody will be in pink belts and we'll have 'Fight Like a Girl' shirts. It'll be a lot of fun."

While this is the fourth time the school has hosted the event, it holds a much deeper meaning this year — particularly for the Lady Warriors group who lost one of their own this year to breast cancer.

A special, women-only group within the martial arts school, the Lady Warriors meet for quarterly seminars that focus on self-defense with a woman's perspective in mind. Open to all ages, the group also works with young girls to develop a positive self image.

While the group began four years ago with only six women, it has grown to include more than 80 women.

"What makes this year extremely special and important to us is that one of those original six Lady Warriors developed breast cancer," Morse said. "It really made us all come together."

Morse said her friend's death made her look at the Fight like a Girl event in a new light.

"It just really made it more of a priority to me because, honestly, through the years, I've gotten busy and our school has just grown (so much) that I just didn't make this event a priority and if I missed it, it was no big deal," Morse said. "I've really made this my mission of the year."

Laura Bond, a member of the Lady Warriors group and an instructor at the school, said their friend's death was "brutal" on the close-knit group, providing them with an added motivation to get the message out.

"Everything we do for this event will go toward breast cancer awareness," Bond said. "We're going to pink out the school, everyone is going to wear pink and we're going to really focus on it."

As the founder of the Lady Warriors group, Morse said the loss of her friend was particularly difficult.

"As her personal instructor, spending many hours of private instruction with her, I knew her really well," Morse said. "When you know someone on that level, they don't just talk to you about karate, they talk to you about every fear, every goal, every dream, just everything. To know her on all of those deep levels and to have lost her at such an early age was rough."

In addition to the Fight like a Girl event, the martial arts school will be selling pink belts for their students to wear all month long, serving as a visual reminder and signal of support to those whose lives have been impacted by breast cancer.

"I've had more boys than girls coming to buy those pink belts," Morse said. "The entire month of October, all of these guys from age 4 up to 40 are (wearing) the pink belts, so the event is all month long, it's not just one day. Every time they put on that belt or they walk in to class, we're talking about breast cancer awareness and this month is dedicated to it in our school."

Bond said while the Lady Warriors group's primary focus is on self-defense and instilling a positive self-image, they are also active in the community. In addition to their work with breast cancer awareness, the group also participates in anti-bullying campaigns, works with the soup kitchen and more.

"We just try to give back to the community and show that strong women can be any age," Bond said.

This drive to be a positive force in the community sets Matthews Martial Arts apart from other martial arts schools, Morse said.

In addition to the school's outward focus, student Tina Ritter said that the school's own community and atmosphere keeps her coming back.

"This is my family time," said Ritter, adding that her husband and two children attend classes at the school, as well. "It's brought out the best in myself and in my kids. I think it's the discipline and — of course I'm partial to my school — I think that the family atmosphere that this particular dojo offers is great. There's not the 'let's brawl' attitude. People are here for the same reason I'm here, which is to spend quality time with their family doing something that everybody enjoys."

The free Fight like a Girl event will be held 6-8 p.m. Friday at the Matthews Martial Arts school.

Personal responsibility best weapon in war on addiction

DEAR ABBY

Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I had my last cigarette and drink of alcohol 50 years ago. Back then, excessive drinking, smoking, overeating or nail-biting were signs of weak will, sinfulness, bad upbringing and who knows what else.

Fortunately, over the years the pendulum swung, making it possible for literally millions of people to get into recovery for what we now know is a disease — ADDICTION.

Unfortunately, the pendulum is now swinging back again. Now EVERYONE has a "disease" over which they have no control. Therefore, they have an excuse to drink too much, overeat, eat sugar while taking their insulin — the list goes on and on.

Sadly, this business of taking no responsibility for one's own health and — worse yet — often blaming someone or something else for the problem, takes away from those who are taking responsibility for themselves. Getting by with a third DUI, or verbally abusing your spouse, being excused for being late to work for the fourth time because of one's "disease" all contribute to the continuation of the stigma which many of us have been fighting for so long.

Addiction IS a disease, and there are many avenues of recovery: mental, spiritual, medical, intellectual and philosophical. What they all have in common is they require a commitment to getting well and, more importantly, a determination to recover.

It is true that there are people with serious maladies that cannot be controlled by any means. My heart goes out to them. Fortunately, they are few and far between and the medical profession is working hard to find answers for them.

Abby, I want to reinforce your dedication to promoting personal responsibility. It is desperately needed! — ROBERTA MEYER, FORMER PRESIDENT, NATIONAL COUNCIL ON ALCOHOL AND DRUG DEPENDENCE, CALIFORNIA

DEAR ROBERTA: Your letter contains many important truths, and thank you for taking the time to write. As I have said in columns past, the first step in solving a problem is admitting there is one and deciding to do something about it. The same is true for addiction. That's why 12-step programs are so effective. In these programs, people gain emotional support from others who are traveling the same path to recovery.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I are in our 70s and have been married five years. I don't understand his telling me that the reason we don't have sex is because I always have too many clothes on. He says it's too much trouble.

I wear normal clothing, and I undress for the occasion. What am I not understanding about his thoughts on this subject? — CONFUSED IN THE MIDWEST

DEAR CONFUSED: I suspect your husband may not be giving you a straight answer because he's embarrassed. When a man says sex is "too much trouble," it's usually because he's having trouble performing. The problem may be his sex drive has diminished or it could be physical. But it won't be resolved unless he's willing to have a frank conversation about it with his doctor. For your sake, urge him to do it.

Teen finds purpose in grief after losing her father

By Martha Irvine
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Genevieve Liu sits back in bed each night, still thinking of her father before she sleeps. He used to sing the same song to his children at bedtime, often before he'd head to surgery to save the life of someone else's child.

"I'm leaving on a jet plane," Don Liu would sing. "Don't know when I'll be back again."

Then, incredibly, he left in a way no one could have anticipated: On a family outing in 2012, he drowned in Lake Michigan. That he died helping two children get to safety on a windy, choppy day did not surprise those who knew him.

His eldest, Genevieve, witnessed the horrid moments when her father was swept under by a rip current. She remembers the shrieks and tears before his body was found, and afterward. She describes sitting quietly, staring into space at a fast food restaurant during the trip from Michigan back home to Chicago.

"My dad was, by far, someone who understood me like no one else. Like, he always knew — everything," said Genevieve, who was 13 at the time.

"You wonder if you are going to be able to live the same life you always felt like you were supposed to."

It seemed inconceivable that she could get through the overwhelming grief. Yet, over the last two years, she has worked at it — helping herself, in part, by helping others like her.

Genevieve's mom, Dana Suskind, was determined to help her three children through this, somehow.

"None of us can crawl into a fetal ball, even if that's what we really want," said Suskind, a surgeon and researcher at the University of Chicago Comer Children's Hospital, where her husband had been surgeon-in-chief. "So what do I do to help take them to the other side of adulthood, so they can be stable and happy adults?"

Finding ways to help a child adapt to a parent's absence is key, says Julie Kaplow, director of the Trauma and Grief Center for Youth at the University of Texas Health Science Center — though not always easy, since even healthy grief isn't always pretty.

At first, Genevieve spent a lot of time in her room at the family's Chicago home — listened to music, slept a lot and didn't eat much.

She remembers entering eighth grade, not wanting to be known as "that girl whose dad died." But the label was inevitable, and ultimately isolating.

"I got so much of my support from, like, grief counselors, friends, my parent," Genevieve said, shaking her head at those last two words. "My 'parent' — that sounds so weird."

Still, she felt alone. She remembers not wanting to see a lot of friends, not wanting to feel like she had to explain her grief.

There also were fights with her mom, and brother Asher, now 12, and sister Amelie, now 9.

What she wanted, she says, was a return to the "unit" that this family was — the melding of the lives and cultures of two young doctors, one Jewish and the other an American of Chinese descent, raised in Taiwan, who converted to Judaism.

She said her mother was strong for her and that she regrets not making life easier for her. "But I needed her to be the same person that she was with my dad, and that just wasn't possible."

A turning point came when her mom asked a girl from Genevieve's class who'd lost her mother to cancer to come over.

Genevieve was hesitant, but recalls how they lay on the floor of her room, talking about life — everything and nothing.

"It's almost like you don't have to talk because so much is already understood," Genevieve said.

That experience prompted her to search online for support groups, and other teens who'd lost parents. But she found nothing.

That's when she decided to start a website, which she calls SLAP'D — Surviving Life After a Parent Dies.

The site includes a monitored forum, interviews with adults who've lost a parent, advice from experts, and tribute pages with photos, poetry and songs.

"People will share so much, nothing like they would in real life, face to face," says the 15-year-old, who hopes the site might eventually be taken up by an organization for grieving children.

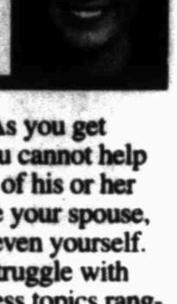

In one recent post, in which a young woman who lost her father describes arguments with her mother, Genevieve offers advice, and the young woman responds, "I'm glad there's someone who knows how I feel."

Face-to-face interactions have been equally helpful.

Having lost his own father when he was 4, Chris Freeman, her former teacher at the University of Chicago Laboratory School, also offered his support and told Genevieve how his older sisters had reassured him how much his father loved him — and how much that helped him.

Hearing that, Genevieve vowed to be more compassionate toward her siblings.

Centers, library challenge perceptions of mental illness

ABBIE KAUFFMAN

Centers for Children and Families

Therapists and staff at Centers for Children and Families have covered topics ranging from parenting to assertiveness to the realities of living with mental illness in this column. Unlike this group of qualified licensed professional counselors, I am not offering advice, but an invitation I hope starts a broader conversation in the Permian Basin and sheds light on the issues our staff tackle every week in print and in the community.

As a nonprofit, Centers is tasked with improving the quality of life in the community through several channels, including education and awareness. We invite you to join Centers for Children and Families and the Midland County Public Library for the exhibit "Fine Line: Mental Health/Mental Illness" opening Oct. 22 at Midland County Public Library Centennial branch. This undertaking by Centers and the library directly addresses this shared component of our missions.

Our staff believes this artful and beautiful presentation will challenge the way viewers perceive the taboo topic of mental health and mental illness, which is often talked about in whispers or not talked about at all. We hope the conversation moves beyond these whispers to clear converstions to counter misinformation and misunderstanding and to humanize the experience of mental illness.

Phenomenally gifted Texas photographer Michael Nye is responsible for this documentary effort and the many hours it took to capture the very essence of his subjects on film and audio. A former attorney, Nye left the legal field behind to capture complex topics like mental illness, teen pregnancy and hunger in the first world, approaching each topic with dignity and respect. In a simple, eloquent narrative, these incredibly detailed photographs are paired with an audio recording of approximately four minutes that invites viewers into the reality of each subject's life.

This exhibit does exactly what Nye intended to do: confronts stereotypes and reveals the courage and fragility of those living with mental illnesses. As you get inside each subject's head, you cannot help but identify with some aspect of his or her struggle. This person could be your spouse, your children, your friend or even yourself. The 55 faces in "Fine Line" struggle with mental health and mental illness topics ranging from depression and anxiety to anorexia, obsessive-compulsive disorder and autism.

The subjects include Jaime, a pregnant woman with piercing eyes who discusses her chronic pain, PTSD and crippling panic attacks. Another subject, Michael H., is a newspaper editor who found himself one day crying for no reason on the onset of major depression. Peter has a genius-level IQ, but because of addiction, struggled for years to find his niche. One of the children in the exhibit, Dylan, is pictured with his mother, Cyndi, who had him screened for autism after a stranger at McDonald's commented on the child's behavior.

We hope Midlanders take the opportunity to attend this exhibit during its stay in the Permian Basin. I challenge you to explore this topic with a statement from the artist: "This exhibit is about the Fine Line that moves through all of our lives as we weave our ways forward. It is about the recognition of our vulnerabilities and the fragility of control. I ask each person coming into the gallery to listen carefully. Throw away your old definitions of mental illness and start over."

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Self-cleaning oven setting works for cast-iron cookware

Dear Heloise: I read your column every day in The Decatur (Ala.) Daily. If you have cast-iron cookware that has a buildup on the outside, you can clean it in your self-cleaning oven. Afterward, be sure it is completely cool, then wash in warm, soapy water and wipe down inside and out with a thin coat of shortening. I even have put mine in a 300-degree oven for an hour or so at times for minor cleaning. — Dot B. in Alabama

Dot, don't you love this tried-and-true Heloise hint on how to easy clean a cast-iron skillet? Because you need to put it on an oven rack, just leave one rack in the oven when doing this. Many readers leave both racks in when self-cleaning the oven. They may get dull, but they won't be damaged. — Heloise

Microwave mistakes

Dear Readers: Microwaves are pretty much a standard appliance to have today. They sure make cooking or heating up some leftovers a snap. However, there are some very important don'ts for a microwave. Make sure you keep the following items out of the microwave, as the U.S. Department of Agriculture says they aren't safe, and that's good enough for me:

- Containers with metal handles.
- Any foam-insulated items, such as carry-out containers.
- Food wrapped in aluminum foil.
- Cold containers that are used to contain yogurt, cottage cheese, margarine, etc. These should be used only for storage and not for microwave cooking.
- Brown paper bags.

— Heloise

Stubborn jars

Dear Heloise: I have a problem opening glass jars. Do you have a hint for how to do this? — Olga V. in New Jersey

Hola, Olga! Readers, Olga wrote to me in Spanish. I read and speak just a little (solo un poco), so I can answer her question. My trick is to wrap the lid in a thick kitchen towel, then whack the side of it in several spots with a heavy utensil, or tap it (just the lid, not the whole glass jar!) on the floor. You can use a bowl of hot water and turn the jar upside down just until the water covers the lid. Since heat expands, the metal lid should loosen a little. — Heloise

Easy trash takeout

Dear Heloise: I traded out my large garbage can for several small ones, placed in the corners of my kitchen. The one by the sink is for messy trash and is handy for meat trimmings and leftovers. It's easy to lift the small can to wherever the mess is, tie it up and toss. — D.M.L. in Mississippi

Quick dry

Dear Heloise: I reuse 1-gallon plastic bags, but they are hard to dry. Recently, I put a bag over a roll of paper towels. I rolled it around several times and dried the inside of the bag. — Addie W. in North Carolina

Tomato rice soup: A speedy bowl of creamy comfort

By J.M. Hirsch
Associated Press

When I was a kid, creamy tomato and rice soup was one of my go-to comfort foods.

My mom would make it for me, and she would make it from a box. The soup was cloyingly creamy-sweet and the rice was overcooked and mushy. I didn't much care. It was happiness in a bowl. I've been pretty much chasing that flavor memory ever since. And I'll just say, whenever I've come close, it hasn't involved a box.

But I'm not opposed to cracking a few cans. Of tomatoes.

This creamy tomato and rice soup is my work-in-progress attempt to replicate the comfort food of my childhood, but with better results and much better ingredients. For depth of flavor (but still tons of ease), I start with canned whole tomatoes. They get a brief stint under the broiler to caramelize the sugars and deepen the flavors.

For even more flavor, the rice is cooked in a blend of chicken broth and the tomato juices strained from the cans.

But it's the creaminess the puts it over the edge. Instead of cream, I use cashew butter. It's just as rich and creamy, but less sweet. Nuts and tomatoes work wonderfully together, and this soup is a fine example. The cashew butter (sold alongside peanut butter), keeps the overall flavor of the soup savory without sacrificing the creaminess we find so comforting.

Speedy roasted tomato and rice soup

Start to finish: 30 minutes
Servings: 6

- Two 28-ounce can whole, peeled tomatoes
- 2 cups low-sodium chicken broth
- 1/2 cup long-grain white rice
- 2/3 cup smooth cashew butter
- 2 tablespoons chopped fresh thyme
- Salt and ground black pepper
- Hot sauce, to taste

Heat the oven's broiler. Line a rimmed baking sheet with foil, then mist it with cooking spray.

Holding a mesh strainer over a large soup pot, strain the tomatoes. Set the pot aside, reserving the tomato juice.

Split each tomato in half and arrange on the prepared baking sheet. Mist the tops of the tomatoes with cooking spray, then set on the oven's middle rack and broil for 5 minutes, or until lightly charred. Use tongs to flip the tomatoes and broil until the second sides are charred, another 5 minutes.

Meanwhile, add the broth to the pot of tomato juice. Bring to a simmer over medium-high heat. Add the rice, return to a simmer, cover, then reduce heat to maintain a simmer and cook for 15 minutes, or until the rice is tender. The rice will not absorb all of the liquid.

When the tomatoes are charred, use tongs to transfer them to a blender or processor. Add the cashew butter, then puree or process until very smooth. Add the tomato-cashew mixture to the rice, then return to a simmer. Add the thyme, then season with salt and pepper. Taste, then stir in hot sauce. Aim to add just enough hot sauce to heighten the flavors, but not add a discernible heat.

Cutting the sugar? Up the zest

By Melissa D'arabian
Associated Press

When it comes to sweets, I have a surprising trick up my sleeve. And the best part about it? It probably won't cost you a penny because most likely you already have it, but throw it in the trash.

I'm talking about orange zest, the thin outer skin of an orange. I don't mean the white part, called the pith. That's bitter. The zest is just the paper-thin layer of colored skin, which has tons of fragrant and flavorful oils. Those oils are perfect for tricking us into thinking something is sweeter than it really is. I use zest in cakes, muffins and cookie doughs, and to bring out the sweetness in root vegetables, such as roasted beets or carrot soup.

It's easy to build a stock of this ingredient. Any time you grab an orange for a snack, take an extra minute to run a wand-style grater or vegetable peeler gently over the peel, being careful not to extract any of the pith. The zest can be saved either by freezing it in a small container or by drying.

To dry zest, place it in a 200 F oven, turn off the heat and let it sit undisturbed until the zest is dry, about 30 to 60 minutes. Let cool completely, then place the dried zest in a clean spice jar. Very quickly you'll have a supply of flavor ready to go in either your pantry or freezer. Note that you may need to chop up larger pieces, and the zest will lose some potency as it ages, so just add a smidge extra when following recipes that call for fresh zest.

I'm sharing a seasonal favorite in our house — orange zest pudding with shaved dark chocolate. I use low-fat milk to make the pudding, but add an egg yolk at the end to impart just enough richness to make the pudding feel custardy and decadent. I like it because it's not overly sweet and it features one of my favorite food combinations — orange and chocolate.

Orange zest pudding with shaved dark chocolate

The best tool for zesting citrus is a fine wand-style grater. These very sharp graters are easy to use and do an excellent job of removing the flavorful zest without getting the bitter white pith beneath it.

Start to finish: 20 minutes, plus cooling
Servings: 4

- 1 3/4 cups low-fat or reduced-fat milk
- 2 1/2 tablespoons cornstarch
- 1/4 cup light brown sugar
- Zest and juice of 1 large orange
- 1 egg yolk, lightly beaten
- 1 teaspoon vanilla extract
- Pinch of salt
- 2 ounces dark or bittersweet chocolate, shaved using vegetable peeler or wand-style grater

In a large saucepan over medium heat, whisk together the milk and cornstarch until dissolved. Add the brown sugar and continue to whisk while bringing the mixture to a gentle simmer. Cook, whisking constantly, until the milk thickens to a thick pudding, about 2 minutes.

Whisk in the orange zest and juice, then remove the pan from the heat.

Place the egg yolk in a small bowl. One at a time, while whisking, add a few tablespoons of the hot pudding to the egg. Transfer the egg-pudding mixture to the saucepan with the remaining pudding.

Return the pudding to low heat and cook, whisking constantly, until it just begins to bubble. Remove from the heat, whisk in the vanilla extract and salt, then divide between 4 parfait glasses. Chill for at least 1 hour. Just before serving, top each cup with shaved chocolate.

Midlander explores creative life from artists' unique perspective

GLEN AARON
Columnist

In 2008 I bought "Living The Creative Life: Ideas and Inspiration from Working Artists" by Midlander Rice Freeman-Zachery. Since then, I have wanted to write a review but stalled. I suppose I had a mental block because the book is about art with delightful pictures of creative works. I am not an artist. In fact, I couldn't draw a straight line.

This book is about living the creative life and is written from the perspective of artists, including Rice. Who would know more about the manifestations of the mental block and getting past it than artists? I now see this book is for everyone who finds creativity necessary for daily life.

Those chattering conversations we constantly have in our minds are, in fact, some form of creativity. While we generally think of artists as the purveyors of creativity, on some level gardeners, business entrepreneurs, lawyers, engineers, thespians and writers also search for the creative spark. When the spark does not light, there is the blockage.

Throughout this beautifully illustrated book, 15 successful artists in a variety of mediums bare their souls and their studios and their art so that readers can identify a picture of what it means to constantly live the creative life. When I revisited the book I noticed several places throughout with concise insets titled "Try This." After reading each one, I knew I could review "Living The Creative Life."

After all, Freeman-Zachery is not only an artist, she is a successful author, having written numerous magazine articles and authored many books through North Light Books publishers. Her books have been distributed not only in the US, but Canada, the UK, Europe and Australia. What she presents is not only good creative therapy for artists but also for authors. Indeed, because we all live a creative life in some form — even if we haven't noticed that is what we are doing — the knowledge and wisdom of the artists who share in "Living The Creative Life" gives insight to each of us.

I find it amazing there are so many talented artists and authors in West Texas, as evidenced by the Books In The Basin festival sponsored by the Midland and Ector County libraries. Creativity is alive and well here, but to express what it is — to identify the dynamic as this book does — is a gift to readers.

Freeman-Zachery and her husband, Earl, are Midlanders. She blogs at "Notes from the Voodoo Cafe." Go to www.voo-doo-cafe.com or voodoonotes.blogspot.com to read her blog and for information about workshops, appearances and book signings — as well as the creative life in general. Her most recent book is "Destination: Creativity, The Life-Altering Journey of the Art Retreat."

It is great fun reading her books and the art in them can captivate readers for hours. All of Freeman-Zachery's books can be viewed and purchased online at Amazon.com.

New book tells of digital revolution

Associated Press

Associated Press

Author Walter Isaacson poses before an interview at his home in New York on Oct. 3. Isaacson's new book, "The Innovators," offers history of digital age.

NEW YORK — Walter Isaacson has a different way of looking at history.

Mention the second half of 1969 and he won't talk about Woodstock or the moon landing but the development of the microprocessor and the first time separate computers were connected. And the 1990s? Not the Clinton-Lewinsky scandal or "Seinfeld."

"In the end, the microchip had far more impact," he said.

The author of best-sellers about Steve Jobs, Albert Einstein and Benjamin Franklin, Isaacson has long prided himself on making science and technology accessible to the general public. After books focused on one man's story, he has taken a broader approach and written what he hopes will become the first major chronology of computers and the Internet: "The Innovators: How a Group of Inventors, Hackers, Geniuses, and Geeks Created the Digital Revolution."

"The Innovators" includes stories of Jobs, Bill Gates and other familiar names in the field, but it also honors such lesser-known pioneers as the 19th-century mathematician Ada Lovelace, daughter of the Romantic poet Lord Byron and among the first to express the concepts for digital technology. "Poetical science," she called her work.

The geeks may find this old news, Isaacson said. But others — readers of Isaacson's previous books — may be open to know more about the people who made their gadgets possible and about the gadgets themselves.

"Because I think the reader might want to know: How does a transistor work? What is a semiconductor? Why do a lot of transistors on a circuit allow it to perform logical tasks?" he says. "And those are beautiful concepts and I want to do them justice while explaining them in terms that an average reader who hasn't studied technology can enjoy."

Isaacson, 62 and a resident of Washington, D.C., spoke recently at his pied-a-terre in Manhattan that overlooks Central Park, an Apple store just a short walk away. Wearing slacks and a light blue shirt, he says he had planned the book for more than 20 years, since he was editor of new media for Time magazine. He was also encouraged by Gates and Jobs, both of whom believed the digital revolution was made possible by the intersection of personal computers and the Internet.

"The Innovators" was in the top 10 on Amazon.com upon its Wednesday publication and has already been adapted by Geoffrey Cowan for a graduate course he teaches on entrepreneurship and new media at the University of Southern California. "I want to show my students examples of how the innovators broke rules and took chances," said Cowan, an author and playwright and USC's former dean of journalism and communications.

Bookstore featured on 'Portlandia' faces closure

Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. — The real Portland, Oregon, store used in comedy sketches about a feminist bookstore on the TV show "Portlandia" is in financial trouble and could close by February, its leaders say.

The store called In Other Words has been dubbed Women & Women First in the IFC show. It has gained attention from the sketches featuring Fred Armisen and Carrie Brownstein as proprietors whose politics and attitudes — "We can order that for you. It will take a year to get here" — can be difficult for a variety of customers played by the likes of Steve Buscemi.

In 2011, after the first season of the series, Armisen and Brownstein appeared at a fundraiser for the store. But the attention hasn't meant financial success, The Oregonian reported.

Like other independent American booksellers, In Other Words has been pressured by changes in the business, first from chain stores and then from the advent of digital technology and e-readers. Losing textbook sales a few years ago cut income by half, the store's board members said.

It has tried to compensate by emphasizing organizing around feminist and community issues but it's still losing $600 a month, board member and treasurer Madeline Jaross said at a general meeting Sunday.

The show pays a fee to use the store a few times a year, said another board member, Jane Knechtel, but "we are not rolling in money from 'Portlandia,' and we never have been."

The store's lease ends Feb. 28. Another meeting on the future of In Other Words will be held next month, Jaross said.

Sinead O'Connor memoir with 'sexual dirt' due 2016

Sinead O'Connor has a book deal, and she's not writing for kids.

Penguin Random House imprint Blue Rider Press announced Tuesday the Irish singer and musician is working on a memoir that will come out in March 2016. The book is currently untitled.

O'Connor has been married four times and has described herself as three-quarters heterosexual and one-quarter gay. In a statement issued through her publisher she promises to dish "the sexual dirt" on all former partners.

Taiko drumming is a full-body experience

By Linda Lombardi
Associated Press

When I started studying taiko, I expected it to be a musical challenge. As a former singer, guitarist and woodwind player, I often felt lost with nothing but a rhythm to hang on to. But what was more surprising was how tired and sore I felt.

"Taiko is full-body drumming," says performer and teacher Mark H. Rooney, who lives in the Washington, D.C., area.

Taiko, a style of ensemble drumming that takes its name from the Japanese word for "drum," isn't one of those elegant, restrained Japanese traditional arts. It's full of powerful, visually striking movement, and it's loud.

"It goes back over a thousand years in Japan, and as a lot of folk music does, it has some religious connotations," says Rooney, who studied in Japan and with prominent American performers. "Taiko historically was used in festivals to entertain or awaken the kami, the spirits."

Traditional taiko generally involves one drummer on one big drum, playing the same rhythm for hours on end. It's great for dancing in the streets, but not exactly something you'd want to sit and watch in a concert hall. In fact, what I study and what you'll see performed in the U.S. is actually a modern form that developed in Japan in the mid-20th century.

"What you see presented on stage might have its roots in tradition but largely is much more contemporary," says Rooney.

The first organized American taiko groups were in California, and at the start in the 1960s it was about more than just music.

"There was a little bit of protest, a sense of reclaiming cultural identity — we're talking only 20 years after Japanese-American internment," says Rooney, who is of Japanese heritage on his mother's side.

Now there are an estimated 300 groups across North America, and the music incorporates influences from jazz to Latin to hip-hop.

"A lot of taiko groups are rooted in Buddhist tradition, and there are people who get into because of their Buddhism," says Rooney.

Others, like me, discover it while pursuing a general interest in Japan: I was studying the language and stumbled across a performance at a festival in Los Angeles where I was looking to buy Japanese food and souvenirs.

Meghan Clyne of Palo Alto, California, first saw taiko in Japan, where she lived as a teenager, but didn't get a chance to play and appreciate the range of the form until she was living back to the U.S.

"What a lot of people don't realize, and what I didn't realize before I started playing, is the stunning breadth and depth of taiko," she says. "People think, 'It's just a drum.' But they don't realize how many different sounds and styles can come from one drum, and that there are in fact many drums, played in many different ways. And when you consider all the different mixes and matches of movement, sound, style, positioning, ensemble playing, etc., the possibilities are infinite."

As taiko has spread and developed, some players come to it purely as another form of world music, says Rooney.

The attraction might be to both the musical and physical aspects of taiko.

"I've spent my whole life doing some form of music and some form of movement," says Heather Mitchell-Buck of Frederick, Maryland, who had experience in yoga, dance, singing and a variety of musical instruments that never quite suited her.

Kid's ready for a rock festival? One dad's tips

By Steve Knopper
Associated Press

A few months ago, I had an epiphany that a good father would take his 12-year-old daughter to a super-cool summer rock festival like Coachella or Bonnaroo.

Instead of dragging her halfway across the country to stand in a field in the blazing sun for three days though, I gently nudged her into a practice run — on a Sunday afternoon in mid-September, we went to Riot Fest, a punk-rock extravaganza in the parking lot of Sports Authority Field at Mile High, a 1.5-mile bike ride from our house in Denver.

Rose and I have been to several concerts, but until Riot Fest, they were all geared to her tastes and not mine. We've seen Taylor Swift three times at the local basketball arena, including once when 9-year-old Rose hauled in a homemade sign festooned with glitter-paint letters and multicolored glow sticks. We've seen Paul McCartney (she's a Beatles fan) and Imagine Dragons.

But this time, we carved out a portion of the festival that happened to contain dinosaurs such as Bob Mould and the Violent Femmes.

Mould and his super-tight (and super-loud) trio were heavy on H 5/8sker D 5/8 classics like "Something I Learned Today" and "I Apologize" as well as Sugar's "Changes." He closed by flinging his guitar around and shouting "YEOW!" — but Rose was unimpressed. She spent most of his 45-minute set texting, and shooting video of her shoes on the pavement. I tried to explain why this incomprehensible noise was important — it's the link between the Ramones and Nirvana! — but a bald guy with a guitar isn't the way to reach her.

Associated Press

This Sept. 21 photo shows a ferris wheel, fries and punk rockers at Riot Fest, a punk-rock extravaganza held at Sports Authority Field at Mile High in Denver.

Next we wandered around the festival, tallying dudes with mohawks (three) and remarking on the profane slogans on kids' T-shirts. (She was intrigued that Riot Fest would sell "RIOT FEST SUCKS" baseball caps.)

We found ourselves sitting on a haystack — nice touch, although couches are cozier — listening to a Fort Worth indie-rock band called the Unlikely Candidates. This was more Rose's idiom. They were somewhat loud, but smooth and catchy, and the singer had long hair, a goatee and a hunky manner. Unlike Mould, he sang words to "Kubla Khan" and a version of "House of the Rising Sun" so we could hear them.

"They're weird," she said, observing the drummer's face bathed in pink light. "Let's move up closer."

We checked in on a band called Touchi Amori, and after two seconds of loud guitars and aggressive shrieking, Rose made the universal "let's go" sign.

"Sometimes," she said, "I can tell I don't like a band if I sing other songs in my head while they're playing."

After two hours, we were dragging. I thought the Violent Femmes might be the cure — Rose likes "Blister In the Sun," and the veteran Milwaukee trio opened with this '80s smash — but their set was clogged with people. Three feet from us, a guy was smoking pot, and that made Rose uncomfortable. (Pot is legal in Colorado, but you still can't indulge in public.) By the time we moved to a spot far enough away from the Femmes to feel less claustrophobic, we could barely hear "Add It Up" and "Do It All the Time."

I'd hoped we could stay through the entire Femmes set, and maybe add on one or two other bands, if not stay for the school-night headliners, The National and Wu-Tang Clan. But by 4:15 p.m., Rose was done. She insisted she's OK with festivals, just not this festival.

"If Lorde, Taylor Swift, Two Door Cinema Club and Imagine Dragons were here at the same time, that would be amazing," she said. "And Ellie Goulding."

That sounds more like Coachella or Bonnaroo, so maybe next year.

And I'll be armed with these tips I learned for taking my pre-teen to a long, grueling but frequently exciting rock festival:

■ Build in escape routes. If you've committed to a $250 festival ticket, plus hotel and airfare, and your kid suddenly decides she's hot and hungry and doesn't like the music, resist the temptation to say, "But the Replacements reunion comes on in 15 minutes!" Be prepared to bail out at any time and, for God's sake, provide plenty of food and water.

■ That goes for parking, too. You'll almost certainly be leaving early, so don't land in one of those lots where the attendants surround your car with three or four others. Pay extra for a VIP lot, or park farther away if you have to. Being trapped is the worst.

■ Should you VIP? Yes, if you have the money. Some VIP packages are ridiculous. Coachella's $6,500 air-conditioned safari tents and Lollapalooza's $30,000 "Roll Like a Rockstar" tour-bus-and-gourmet-meal package may seem like the antithesis of rock 'n' roll, but some special treatment is worth it to give your kid comfort breaks. Some of the more minimalist packages offer private restrooms and air-conditioning.

■ This is about your kid's musical enjoyment, not yours. You had your fun in the mosh pit at Lollapalooza 1993. It won't kill you to sit through Imagine Dragons when Beck is playing at the same time. Festivals are for fun, not for spooning out music-history medicine.

■ Bring distractions. It sounds crazy that a music festival filled with carnival games, Ferris wheels and at least two bands playing at any given moment could seem boring, but sometimes overstimulation is duller than under-stimulation. Keep those phones charged.

■ Whenever possible, avoid falling into the generation gap. Telling funny stories about the old days is one thing, but insisting that your generation is somehow musically superior because you listened to Wham! and she listens to One Direction is just patronizing. Then again, Bob Mould is great, and no whippersnapper can say otherwise.

MRT: Describe your ideal last meal.

McRae: The pace is casual; the atmosphere is calm. My surroundings are clean and well-tended to. There are no televisions and I don't have to raise my voice to be heard by the person sitting next to me. The food is imaginative, flavorful, well-cooked and attractively presented. There's something about the meal that I can't get anywhere else.

MRT: Your not-so-secret indulgence.

McRae: It's no secret I am a cocktail drinker, but I don't just have them for the sake of drinking. At home, we limit ourselves to one reasonable drink a day, so it's got to be something special. I like curious and unique cocktails that excite my imagination.

MRT: What's in your car/home music player right now?

McRae: I have Pandora tuned to my "New Age Writing" station. It's playing David Arkenstone at the moment. Oh wait! No, it just switched over to Enya.

to purchase 2,000 bound notebooks, one for each fourth-grader to use during the field trip and take home for future art or writing inspirations. Every fourth-grade teacher received a flash drive that is loaded with educational materials for their classroom. This year, the museum is again thankful for the support of the Moore Foundation as well as Betty and Don Tomlin.

The Museum of the Southwest field trip is a long-standing tradition with MISD. Last year, a teacher remarked that she remembered her class field trip as a young girl and now she was able to see the museum with a whole new perspective. "The experience guides did a great job of questioning and allowing kids to speak their minds; there were lots of opportunities for depth, complexity and higher levels of thinking," she said. Yes, touring 2,000 fourth graders in fewer than 20 days is a feat; but watching an entire class raise their hands when asked the question, "who in this room is an artist?" is worth all the chaos.

Opening lead: Eight of ♣

The double of an artificial bid is a "lead-directing double." Partner is asked to lead that suit. West made such a double, and North, who had denied four hearts, redoubled to show a good three-card holding in hearts. South was Jeff Meckstroth, who played it right there.

Dummy's queen of clubs held the first trick, and Meckstroth continued with the jack of clubs for another finesse. When that held, South played a diamond to his ace and led a low heart, winning dummy's jack when West played low. A second diamond came next. East didn't want to ruff away partner's possible diamond winner, so he discarded a spade. Declarer won the king and led another heart, this time winning dummy's nine. The queen and jack of diamonds were next, shedding a club from dummy, followed by a spade to the ace and a spade ruff:

EAST

SOUTH

South led his diamond and West was ruined. Three hearts redoubled making with three redoubled overtricks! Ouch!

A lead-directing double requires enough length and strength in the suit to defeat that contract.

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Sunday, Oct. 12, 2014.

This year you experience a lot of unexpected development in your relationships. These changes are not necessarily bad or good.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) ★★★ You could be unusually capricious and full of fun. A child or close loved one can't seem to stay away from you. Tonight: Curb spontaneity.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) ★★★ You might be expected to pick up the tab for others. If you feel uncomfortable, say so. Tonight: Treat a loved one to dinner.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) ★★★★ Though you communicate with ease and get smiles from others, you could have an unexpected outburst. Tonight: All smiles.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) ★★★ Much goes on behind the scenes that you might not want to discuss. You could feel confused by someone, as he or she seems to be transforming right in front of you. Tonight: Let others treat you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) ★★★★★ You'll smile and simply enjoy those around you. Get together with friends, even if it is for something like a ballgame. Tonight: Catch up on calls.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) ★★★★ Your interest in handling a situation a certain way could attract others' attention. Tonight: Could be out till the wee hours.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) ★★★★ Reach out to someone at a distance. You will be more upbeat after your chat, whether it is on the phone, in person or through email. Tonight: Be entertained.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) ★★★ Curb your spending. You could find yourself a lot tighter financially than you want to be. Tonight: Let the fun begin.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) ★★★★ You might want to listen to the other side of a problem before you get angry. Tonight: Go with someone else's choice.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) ★★★ You'll need to pace yourself in order to et some much-needed errands done. Tonight: Make it early.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) ★★★★ You could be full of questions and want to ask them. You might want to understand why a partner has been acting so different. Tonight: Flirty and fun.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) ★★★ Spend the day with your family. Fatigue seems to be playing a strong role in your plans. Tonight: Head home early.

Children get directly into art at 'Framed' exhibition

By Rich Lopez
jrlopez@mrt.com

Acting almost like a portal, the large frame that opens "Framed: Step Into Art" at the Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum immediately sets the tone for the new exhibition.

Works by John Singer-Sargent, Clementine Hunter, Grant Wood and Diego Rivera are translated into life-size versions for visitors to place themselves within the art.

"The purpose of this exhibition is to engage all of the senses into the art experience," museum director Annelorre Robertson said.

Produced by the Minnesota Children's Museum, the exhibition is an impressive one that features the art piece stations as well as many interactive smaller stations for visitors to express their creativity. The entire exhibition is presented in both English and Spanish.

Robertson expressed appreciation for the bilingual aspect of the exhibit because a large percentage of Children's Museum visitors are bilingual or Spanish-speaking.

"That's something I keep trying to bring in," she said. "At least 40 percent of our clientele are (Latino). The children might speak English but the parents don't, so it's hard to get them to interact with the works."

And "Framed" is all about interaction.

The exhibition has both hands-on and technological aspects. Visitors can step into John Singer Sargent's world through its campsite complete with tent and gear. But they can also interact with a light show featuring foliage apropos to the area and even smell the aroma of a campfire.

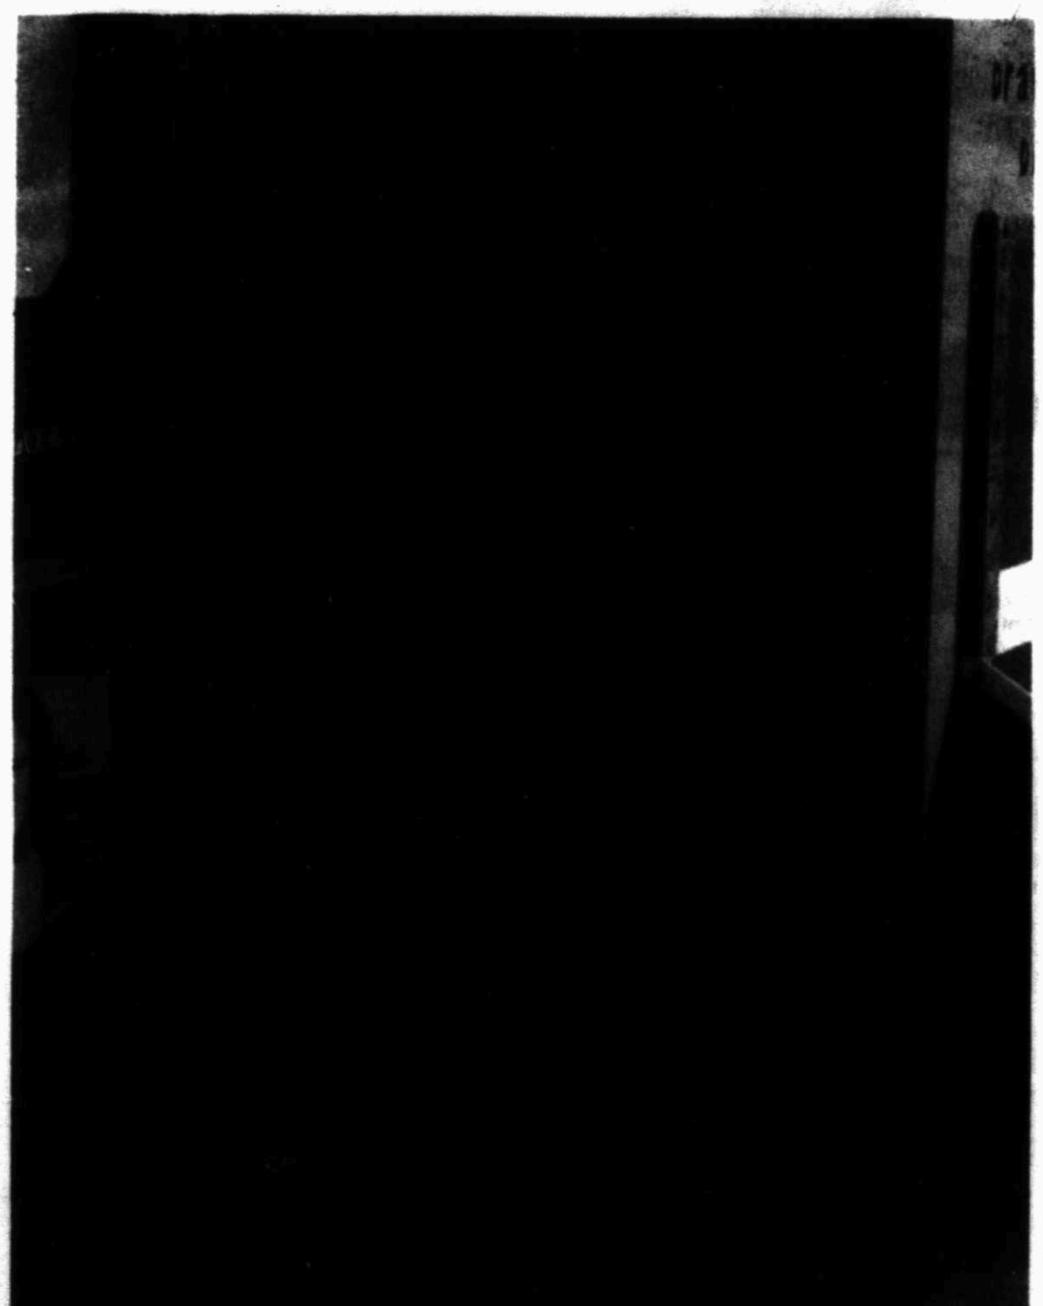

On the tech side, kaleidoscopes can be created at a smaller station on a touch screen.

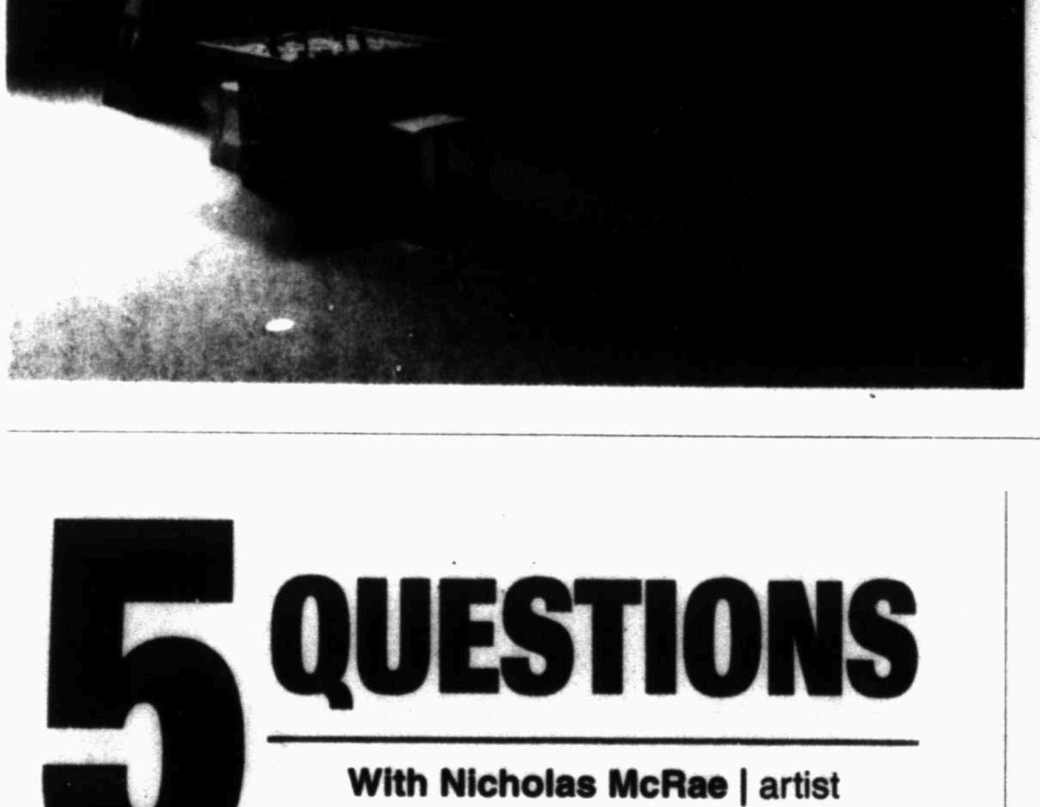

"It's an app that adds an interesting element because we want to remind that we are tech-minded as a museum," Roberston said. "And both kids and adults have been enjoying that."

The Many Monas shows off the prevalence of the Mona Lisa in cuiture and people can even become the iconic masterpiece via the cutout.

Beyond the interactive and enjoyable aspect of each display, the exhbit should remind and teach that art isn't just what's seen on a wall, but that there is also a person behind it.

"Framed: Step Into Art" at the Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum through Feb. 1. Museumsw.org.

5 QUESTIONS

With Nicholas McRae | artist

Nicholas McRae is a local Renaissance man with his creative finger in all pies. From fiction to artwork, McRae displays his vibrant personality in a number of ways — even down to the purple tint of his hair. His talents and interests touch on the "other side" as McRae has even been ghost hunting.

MRT: What inspires your creative designs and/or writing?

McRae: I'm inspired by everyday paradox and curiosity, when things happen without apparent cause or seem to contradict the rules of reality. I love when my imagination has room to run wild with fanciful explanations for the unexplained. These little mysteries don't even have to be big things — in fact, it's better when they're not. I find far more inspiration in hearing about the strange bumps and groans that come from someone's "haunted" 1915 ranch house (with updated piping and new metal roof), than from age-old speculations about places like the Bermuda Triangle or Stonehenge.

MRT: Who are your literary heroes?

McRae: Rick Riordan, Kathy Reichs, Frank Herbert and Sharyn McCrumb, whose novels broke me out of a lifelong rut when it came to reading. Margaret Weis and Michael Stackpole, whose instruction at a number of writing seminars gave me the courage to become an author.

Field trips give young Midlanders a hands-on art experience

KRISTEN WAGSTROM

Curator of Education at Museum of the Southwest

Imagine seeing a parade of school busses pulling up in front of you and watching 120 students excitedly line up with their teachers before they explore all the Museum of the Southwest has to offer. It's an exhilarating — and somewhat intimidating — sight. However, encouraging students to create their own artwork and listening to them tell you about their own experiences making art or writing stories is truly endearing. For many children in Midland County, this field trip might be the first time they've set foot in any museum.

October wouldn't seem like one of the busiest months for a museum, but the campus at the Museum of the Southwest comes alive as 2,000 MISD fourth-graders visit for their annual field trip. While this program is a huge undertaking for museum staff and volunteers, it is always well worth the organization and preparation. These students are given the opportunity to learn museum manners, explore art alongside a trained experience guide and create their own works of art. This year students will visit the Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum where they can step into iconic works of art and murals by notable artists such as Diego Rivera, John Singer Sargent and Grant Wood. This exhibition entitled "Framed: Step Into Art" is on loan from the Minnesota Children's Museum. Students also will travel through time to the 19th century by exploring the exhibition "Winslow Homer and the American Pictorial Press." Students will view "Tales of the Mayan Skies" in the Blakemore Planetarium and also tour several sculptures on the museum's grounds.

This program takes a lot of teamwork, and the end of each daily tour brings lots of laughs, smiles and inspiring stories. In 2013, one experience guide said one of her students had proclaimed himself as, "sculptures' No. 1 fan," while another guide was thrilled to see how many students enjoyed drawing their own sketches in the gallery and telling the stories of their favorite works of art.

Last year, the museum was thankful to receive a generous grant from the Wayne and Jo Ann Moore Charitable Foundation, which allowed for the purchase of a new 360-degree dome show entitled "Tales of the Maya Skies." This show was chosen for its alignment with fourth-grade curriculum and was a big hit among both teachers and students. This grant also allowed the museum

STORE GETS MAJOR OVERHAUL

Sam's Club completes $5.7 million renovation

By Mella McEwen
mmcewen@mrt.com

After approximately six months and $5.7 million, including a new $1.2 million gasoline island, the Sam's Club at 1500 Tradewinds is showing off its new look.

A grand reopening celebration was held Friday with Midland Mayor Jerry Morales and members of the Midland Chamber of Commerce in attendance, along with the Army National Guard presenting colors and Sam's Club Associate Mirenda Wallace performing the National Anthem.

Renovations were undertaken with a focus on healthier living. A new pharmacy was installed that is open to both members and the public and which offers $4 and $10 generic prescriptions. Discounts are available to Sam's Club Plus members. Other services include flu shots.

The expanded optical center now offers eye exams in addition to filling eye prescription. A new hearing aid center carries premium technology in hearing aids and personal listening devices while also offering free hearing tests and services administered by a licensed hearing aid fitter and dispenser.

The new centers are "a great addition to the club for our members and our associates. As associates we use these benefits all the time for prescriptions, eye exams and hearing exams," said Rueben Rivera, club manager.

He said the changes came about in part from suggestions made by members.

Beyond offering assistance in healthier living, the renovations increased the seating at the cafe, which, like the pharmacy, is open to the public. The remodeled vestibule now has front entry and exit locations to provide better access. The restrooms have also been remodeled and expanded.

Rivera said the store plans to offer the occasional open house for shoppers who aren't Sam's Club members.

Midland's Sam's Club opened in 1986 and was one of the first to open in Texas, just three years after Wal-Mart founder Sam Walton opened the first Sam's Club location.

"We're excited about the renovations, our members are excited. We'll be celebrating the success of this club for almost 20 years," Rivera said.

As part of the celebration, local Sam's Club associated selected several area organizations to receive Sam's Club Giving community grants. The grants are being presented to the Midland Police Department, Midland Fire Department, Midland YMCA and the West Texas Food Bank.

Take a spin with Wal-Mart's savings app

By Michael Lee
Associated Press

Price-matching at the grocery store has always promised to save some money — and create a lot of work.

The Savings Catcher service from Wal-Mart promises to do some of that work for you on your weekly trip for bread, laundry soap and shampoo. And it succeeds, but not without a few hiccups and only if you're prepared for a wait.

How it works

Wal-Mart has long matched competitors' advertised sale prices at the checkout. That meant some serious study for dedicated bargain-hunters, combing the weekly sale ads to find better prices. To take the legwork out of the process, Savings Catcher lets you scan the receipt with your smartphone or type the receipt number into Wal-Mart's shopping app, available on Apple's App Store or Google Play, or on Wal-Mart's website.

Then, Wal-Mart compares what you bought with its competitors' sale prices. When it finds a lower price, it lets you put the difference between that price and what you paid on an electronic gift card.

After you scan the receipt, the service takes up to three business days to tell you whether you're getting any money back. Ostensibly this is to compare prices with competitors, but it may also be a way to keep people from exploiting mistakes or other loopholes in the system. There is also a limit of seven receipts per week.

Some of the fine print: The app mostly compares grocery and health and beauty items, so don't bother scanning your receipt for that TV. In addition, store-brand items aren't going to get you any money back, because they're not sold anywhere else. So your Savings Catcher mileage will vary based on what you buy.

And just like any store loyalty program, the Savings Catcher gives Wal-Mart data on your purchasing habits, even if you pay in cash.

Associated Press

This screen shot shows Wal-Mart's Savings Catcher app. Savings Catcher lets you scan the receipt with your smartphone or type in the receipt number into the app. Then, Wal-Mart compares what you bought with its competitors' sale prices. When it finds a lower price, it lets you put the difference between that price and what you paid on an electronic gift card.

The savings

Over several small shopping trips and one large one, I got back $11.99, on roughly $300 spent. The big shopping trip, on which I spent $214, netted $7.92 back. It's not massive savings, but it adds up to real money I wouldn't have had otherwise.

The dollars stored on the electronic gift card don't expire. A regular Wal-Mart grocery shopper could conceivably sock away a fair chunk of change during the year and use it for holiday shopping, for example.

What I didn't like

I wish the price comparisons were faster. Even if the process isn't instant, it would be nice to see the savings by the next day. The wait, which generally took the full three business days, feels out of step with the instant gratification that we expect from our smartphones. Using Savings Catcher is more of a process: Scan receipt, wait, request gift card, wait.

In addition, there were a few technical problems. Scanning the receipt worked most of the time. But on occasion, the scanner refused to recognize the QR code that sums up the purchases, possibly because of poor printing or low light. If that happens, you can type in a single 16-digit number on the receipt.

And on one occasion, when it came time to get the money back, I didn't get the email with the gift card information and had to have the website resend it.

The verdict

For the casual shopper who doesn't want to do much work, Savings Catcher is a fairly painless way to get some money back.

But even for dedicated bargain hunters who are looking to save every dime and don't mind doing the heavy lifting to get the traditional price match at the register, Savings Catcher is a good backup.

Texas has room for improvement on personal income

Overall Texas earnings are rising faster than those of any other state. For the second quarter in a row, the Bureau of Economic Analysis (BEA — part of the U.S. Department of Commerce) found that earnings growth here surpassed the gains in all other states. Economic strength is certainly the root of this good news, with all major industrial sectors showing increases.

The BEA looked at "personal income," which is income received by all persons from all sources. It includes earnings from wages and salaries as well as proprietors' income, property rental income, dividends, and interest. It is measured before personal income taxes and other personal taxes, though contributions for government social insurance are excluded. No adjustments are made for inflation.

Total U.S. personal income rose by an estimated $149 billion between the first and second quarters of this year. The increase in Texas was $19.2 billion, with California next at $16.9 billion. This is particularly noteworthy in that California started from a larger base, and the pace of income growth in that state (at 1.5 percent) was significantly slower than in Texas (with 2 percent).

Looking at the pace of expansion (rather than the overall size of gains), Texas ranked sixth. The states growing faster are generally smaller economies with a surge of oil and gas exploration and production (such as North Dakota). For Texas income to expand by 2 percent in a quarter given the large and diverse economy here is an

Add Stocks for Performance

Q I'm invested in a bunch of mutual funds. Should I invest in some individual stocks, too, for additional diversification? — L.L., Naples, Florida

A Diversification is important in a portfolio. If you have too much of your assets in one holding or sector, you can get hurt badly. Some mutual funds alone can provide sufficient diversification, as they're invested in several hundred different securities. (Note that many mutual funds are very similar to each other, offering more duplication than diversification.)

The main advantage of adding individual stocks is to possibly boost your portfolio's performance. If a stock holding appreciates in value, it can make a significant difference in your portfolio. Let's say you invest 5 percent of your money in Sisyphus Transport Corp. (ticker: UPDWN). If it doubles, your portfolio's value will increase by 5 percent. If you instead own Sisyphus through a mutual fund, where it represents a fraction of a percent of the fund's value, its surge will make less of a difference.

You need to know what you're doing when you select stocks to buy, though. You can learn more at fool.com/how-to-invest and investopedia.com. If you don't have the time or interest, consider just sticking with low-cost broad-market index funds that automatically mirror the stock market's performance.

Q What are "government securities"? — B.H., Watertown, Wisconsin

A Also called Treasuries, they're debt investments, ranging from bills (maturing in less than a year) to notes (maturing within one to 10 years) to bonds (maturing in more than 10 years). Backed by our government, they're viewed as ultra-safe, with little risk of default — which is why they offer relatively low interest rates. You can buy or sell Treasuries via many brokerages or at treasurydirect.gov.

Have the Odds In Your Favor

Investing is far from a game, since your hard-earned dollars are at stake. Still, there are valuable investing lessons we can draw from poker:

• Have an edge. In poker, you'll do best when playing against those who are less skilled than you, who are using poor judgment or who are exhibiting "tells." In investing, your edge is learning more than other investors and not succumbing to emotions such as greed or fear.

• You don't have to play every hand. Waiting for a long-shot hand will usually disappoint you, while something like a pair of kings gives you a much better chance of seeing a return on the money you're wagering. In investing, you'll usually do better investing in solid and predictable performers that you can buy for a good price, rather than investing in shaky long shots. Seek great, growing companies at attractive prices.

• Don't be afraid to pass, or get out. In both poker and investing, you're faced with continually changing information. The best poker players and investors are those who not only make the most accurate analysis of the available information, but also use that analysis to make good decisions.

• Understand why people are betting against you. When you invest in a company in the usual way, expecting it to rise, you're said to be "long" in the stock. There are those who are "short," too, who expect it to fall. It pays to consider their views — because sometimes they're right.

• Go "all-in" selectively. Top-notch poker players have run through a lot of mental math to determine that the odds are heavily in their favor before they make a big bet. If your all-in investing moments are restricted to times when the market is trading near or below its long-term average valuation, then you can shift the odds of market-beating returns further in your favor. It's rarely smart to go all-in on a single stock, though — diversify away that risk.

• Have patience. Wait for the best investment opportunities, when you're convinced the odds are in your favor.

My Smartest Investment

The Sawtooth Shape

Many years ago, I bought 1,000 shares of a small oil company because its stock-price graph had an unusual "sawtooth" shape. Contrary to the adage of "buy and hold," I've sold increments of the shares over the years and have more than tripled my money. I haven't found a stock with a similar wave shape since. — J.S., Homer, Illinois

The Fool Responds: You were engaging in "technical analysis" there, which most of us at Fool headquarters avoid, as it's focused mainly on stock-price movements instead of the health and prospects of the underlying company. We prefer "fundamental analysis," which examines growth rates, competitive advantages, financial health, management candor and skill, and so on. You may not have found another similar wave shape, but there have been gobs of great investments over the years, available for those who read up and do some research.

Meanwhile, we do prefer to buy and hold, as long as a stock seems healthy and growing and isn't very overvalued. That doesn't mean we won't sell if we need some cash, or want to buy an even more compelling long-term investment.

Curing Your Portfolio

Imagine a drug that doesn't just treat a terrible disease, but cures it in most patients. That's hepatitis C drug Sovaldi. The stock of its maker, Gilead Sciences (Nasdaq: GILD), has been surging.

Gilead is a Goliath in HIV treatment, with five different medicines that could hit billion-dollar blockbuster status this year. Its Atripla and Truvada are top drugs prescribed for HIV in the U.S., and Gilead's HIV drug sales totaled more than $9 billion last year. It has an approved cancer drug, too — Zydelig, tackling chronic lymphocytic leukemia and indolent non-Hodgkin's lymphoma.

The company's multibillion-dollar hepatitis-C drug franchise is fattening up Gilead's balance sheet. Since December, Gilead's cash hoard has jumped from a bit over $2.5 billion to more than $9.5 billion exiting the second quarter. That's largely due to Sovaldi, which costs $84,000 for a 12-week course of treatment and generated more than $5 billion in the first half of 2014.

Biotechnology stocks are not for the faint-hearted. They can be volatile, as their fortunes are tied to drugs whose patent protections expire over time, and to drugs in lengthy development processes that don't always end up approved for sale. Still, risk-tolerant investors should consider Gilead. It's huge and growing well, and with a recent P/E ratio in the mid-20s, it's appealingly priced. (The Motley Fool has recommended shares of Gilead and owns shares of it.)

Icahn wants more Apple buybacks, sees $200 stock

By Brandon Baily and Tom Murphy
Associated Press

Carl Icahn just can't help himself.

The billionaire activist investor lobbied Apple earlier this year to buy back billions worth of its shares to boost value to shareholders. In April Apple boosted its buyback plans by $30 billion and even split its stock for the first time in nine years. Satisfied? Never. Icahn's taking another swing at getting Apple to buy back more stock, saying the shares could double to more than $200 apiece.

In a letter Thursday to Tim Cook, the iPhone maker's CEO, Icahn called on him to throw his weight behind more share repurchases. In return, he promises that he wouldn't sell back any of his roughly 53 million Apple Inc. shares. That represents about 1 percent of Apple's total 6 billion shares outstanding.

Icahn said in the lengthy letter that he's not criticizing Cook, whom he called the "ideal CEO for Apple." But the investor pushed his belief that the Cupertino, California company's shares are incredibly cheap.

"You have said that the company likes to be 'opportunistic' when repurchasing shares and we appreciate that," Icahn wrote. "With this letter we simply hope to express to you that now is a very opportunistic time to do so."

Apple shares closed at $100.80 on Wednesday — half of what Icahn thinks is "appropriate," given his bullish growth forecasts and the company's $133 billion cash stockpile. Speaking on CNBC on Thursday, the financier suggested Apple conduct "a massive tender offer" of as much as $100 billion, although he added, "maybe I'm exaggerating a little bit."

"We always appreciate hearing from our shareholders," Apple responded in a statement. "Since 2013 we've been aggressively executing the largest capital return program in corporate history. As we've said before, we will review the program annually and take into account the input from all of our shareholders."

Icahn said he had a "very friendly" conversation with Cook before making the letter public. He said Cook agreed that Apple's stock is undervalued but didn't indicate if he would support a buyback.

Hacking is a big danger for small businesses

By Joyce M. Rosenberg
Associated Press

NEW YORK — It's not just big businesses like JPMorgan Chase, Target and Home Depot that get hacked. Small companies suffer from intrusions into their computer systems, too.

The costs associated with computer and website attacks can run well into the thousands and even millions of dollars for a small company. Many small businesses have been attacked — 44 percent, according to a 2013 survey by the National Small Business Association, an advocacy group. Those companies had costs averaging $8,700.

JPMorgan Chase said the attack on its computer servers this summer compromised customer information from about 76 million households and 7 million small businesses. Target Corp., Michaels Stores Inc. and Neiman Marcus have also reported breaches of their computer systems in the past year, as did Home Depot Inc., whose customers include small contracting companies.

Typically, businesses must have a computer expert find the source of the attack and systems have to be purged of harmful software like viruses. When websites are shut down revenue can be lost.

Making matters worse, if customer data was breached, companies often must pay to notify each person or business affected. In some states, they're encouraged to pay for credit report monitoring for customers, says Matt Donovan, head of technology insurance underwriting for the insurer Hiscox USA.

In almost every state, companies must notify people when information has been breached, says Samuel Cornish, a commercial law attorney with Genova Burns Giantomasi Webster in Newark, New Jersey. Companies can also be liable for damages in lawsuits brought by customers, he says.

Small businesses are particularly vulnerable to attacks because many owners believe they don't have the time and money to invest in software programs or consulting services to make systems more secure.

Many businesses are ignorant of risks they face or possible solutions, says Jeff Foresman, a consultant with Rook Security, an Indianapolis-based computer security company. They may not realize an attack can happen from a seemingly harmless source. For example, a perfectly normal-looking email from a friend's computer that was attacked without the owner's knowledge could lead to trouble.

"They don't know what they don't know. They don't understand the sophistication of these attacks," Foresman says.

Berkeley Varitronic Systems' bank account was hacked earlier this year and $50,000 was taken, CEO Scott Schober says. He got the money back, but considers the incident a lesson. He had already invested $50,000 in security for his own systems and plans to add another $20,000.

Schober believes his Metuchen, New Jersey-based company was attacked via its bank because its business is computer security.

"We are a target. Thieves like to send that message," he says.

No system is hacker-proof, but there steps, some of them inexpensive, businesses can take to shore up defenses and mitigate damage from attacks that get through:

■ Hire computer security consultants to evaluate computers and websites and suggest ways to protect them.

■ Buy insurance to cover financial losses. Premiums can be as low as $1,000 a year for $1 million in coverage.

■ Install free antivirus and anti-malware software available online. Also add firewalls, which block attempts to access, says Joe Caruso, CEO of Global Digital Forensics, a computer security company based in New York.

■ Make sure email is secure by using an email provider that has proper security systems, Caruso says.

■ Avoid having customers' credit card information stolen by using a separate company to process orders. The company should guarantee that its systems are secure.

■ Use a service that helps weed out fraudulent credit card transactions, says Jason Opdyke, director of online commerce for Berkeley, California-based BearExtender, which sells Wi-Fi equipment. It uses such a service to try to avoid becoming a victim of attempted fraud.

In this March 5 file photo, Senate Finance Committee Chairman Sen. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., speaks on Capitol Hill. In remarks prepared for a Senate Finance Committee event Wednesday in Palo Alto, Calif., Wyden, a leading Senate critic of online surveillance, wants the government to stop spying on phone calls, texts and emails, saying the "digital dragnet" doesn't make the country safer, and only hurts the U.S. economy.

Sen. Ron Wyden: NSA tech spying hurts the economy

By Brandon Bailey
Associated Press

PALO ALTO, Calif. — Google Chairman Eric Schmidt and other Silicon Valley executives say controversial government spying programs are undercutting the Internet economy and want Congress to step up stalled reform.

"We're going to end up breaking the Internet," warned Google Inc.'s Schmidt during a public forum Wednesday convened by U.S. Sen. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., who has been an outspoken critic of electronic data-gathering by the National Security Agency. Schmidt and executives from Facebook Inc, Microsoft Corp. and other firms say revelations of extensive NSA surveillance are prompting governments in Europe and elsewhere to consider laws requiring that their citizens' online data be stored within their national borders.

Rules like that would drive up costs and create technical obstacles to the way the Internet currently operates, making it "profoundly difficult in terms of our ability to deliver services," said Facebook general counsel Colin Stretch. Brad Smith, general counsel for Microsoft, said some European customers are worried their data will be more vulnerable to U.S. government snooping, although he declined to give specific examples.

"The reality is this is a real problem for American tech companies," said Smith. "If trust falls, then the prospects for business are hurt."

Wyden, a member of the Senate Intelligence Committee and chairman of the Finance Committee, convened the roundtable in the Palo Alto High School gym, where he played basketball as a student in the 1960s. He said he will take the executives' message back to Washington, where bills to curb surveillance have stalled. Prospects for passing a reform bill this fall are shrinking, Wyden told The Associated Press.

"I'm going to my best to use this. What I'm going to do is say there's a clear and present danger to the Internet economy," Wyden said.

Wyden contends that the government's "digital dragnet" of phone calls, emails and online communications doesn't make the country safer, and only hurts the U.S. economy.

"When the actions of a foreign government threaten red-white-and-blue jobs, Washington gets up at arms. But, even today, almost no one in Washington is talking about how overly broad surveillance is hurting the U.S. economy," he said in opening remarks.

Microsoft's Smith acknowledged that concerns over recent terrorist incidents in the Middle East may have undercut some public support for surveillance reform. However, he contends that "laws that the rest of the world doesn't respect will ultimately undermine the fundamental ability of our own legal processes, law enforcement agencies and even the intelligence community itself."

When former NSA contractor Edward Snowden made details of NSA surveillance tactics public, tech executives and industry experts warned that consumers and business customers would fear that U.S. technology companies can't protect sensitive data from government prying. Some analysts estimated last year that U.S. tech companies could lose tens of billions of dollars in sales, particularly after European firms began marketing themselves as being more secure than U.S. competitors — or less vulnerable to legal demands from the U.S. government.

Most of the impact has been anecdotal, however. A few companies, including Cisco Systems Inc. and Qualcomm Inc., have said they believe they lost some deals in China and other emerging markets because of concerns about U.S. spying. Germany did cancel a contract with Verizon this summer, citing a fear that it may provide customer phone records to the NSA. Some tech startups and telecommunications companies in France and Switzerland have claimed an increase in sales to customers who are wary of U.S. providers.

What's next for funds when Fed stops buying bonds?

By Stan Choe
Associated Press

NEW YORK — In less than three weeks, a big change is nearly certain for investors. Few will be surprised, but some will be nervous.

On Oct. 29, virtually all economists expect the Federal Reserve to announce the end of its program that bought bonds every month in order to boost the job market. The purchases are widely credited for fueling price increases of all kinds of investments.

Investors have had a lot of advance notice that the end is coming, and the hope is that the announcement won't cause big markets swings given all the time they've had to prepare. Many mutual fund managers say their bigger concern is when the Fed will start raising short-term interest rates, which the central bank has said won't be for a "considerable time." Rising interest rates would knock down prices for bonds, and it could also sap demand for stocks. Most managers expect the first rate hike to happen next year and for it to have a bigger impact than the end of bond buying, which is also known as quantitative easing or QE.

But some fund managers say this time may not be different from past instances that QE has ended, and they're preparing to see jolts in both the stock and bond markets. That's what happened in 2010 and 2011.

"Every time that the Fed has ended QE, rates have gone down, and stock prices have gone down," says Jim Keegan, portfolio manager of the $1.1 billion RidgeWorth Total Return Bond fund (CBPSX). "That seems to be holding true again."

At least be prepared to see higher volatility, says Wasif Latif, who oversees $28 billion in mutual-fund assets at USAA Investments, invested in everything from corporate bonds to emerging-market stocks.

Notwithstanding some recent wobbles, it's been a remarkably calm climb for stocks in recent years. The Fed's bond-buying program helped the stock market not only to surge but to do so in nearly uninterrupted fashion, even when the economy was improving only modestly. The last time investors saw a 10 percent drop for the Standard & Poor's 500 index was three years ago.

But this week's bumpy ride — where the S&P 500 sank 1.5 percent Tuesday, only to jump 1.7 percent Wednesday and then fall as much as 2.1 percent on Thursday — may be a preview of things to come after QE ends.

To be sure, conditions are different from past instances when the Fed ended QE programs. The economy is stronger, and the unemployment rate is at its lowest level since 2008. The central bank has also been steadily tapering the pace of its monthly bond purchases since January, down to $15 billion from $85 billion, and investors have already had their chance for a first reaction given all the advance notice.

Nationally, virtually all industries tracked by the BEA (22 of 24) contributed to the gains. Earnings in the health care segment were up $17.4 billion, and professional services were a close second with $17.1 billion. Retail trade and durable goods manufacturing rounded out the top sectors. Durable goods manufacturing was the largest component of earnings growth in 15 states; expansion in a basic sector is particularly good news in that industries such as manufacturing tend to have relatively high multipliers (meaning that they generate a lot of activity in related businesses supplying necessary input goods and services).

For Texas, the only segments of the economy with earnings declines between the first and second quarters of this year were the military, civilian federal employees, and a miscellaneous category of services. Among the non-farm sectors, the largest gains were wholesale trade; real estate and rental and leasing; administrative and waste management services; management; and professional, scientific, and technical services.

The Lone Star State still compares favorably when looking at a somewhat longer period of growth. Between 2011 and 2013, total personal income in Texas grew by $108.4 billion. That gain is just over 10.3 percent and significantly better than the nation as a whole (7.3 percent). The only state with more rapid advancement was North Dakota, where personal income was up almost 17.4 percent. While impressive, North Dakota is a case of a small economy with a rapid energy sector-driven expansion, and the overall gain was less than $5.7 billion. Utah (also a relatively small economy) came in just below Texas; California and Wyoming (at 10.1 percent) were the only other states to top the 10 percent growth threshold.

Personal income data is critical in analyzing economic conditions. After all, an overarching goal of business activity is to generate money for business owners and employees. The data is also used by federal government agencies in decisions regarding fund allocation and matching grants to states. Research organizations, economists, and many others look to trends in personal income to draw conclusions regarding the well-being of the populace, efficacy of public policy, and many other topics. Additionally, personal income is the source for most of the money used in for consumer spending, which drives about two-thirds of the US economy.

The fact that Texas is gaining ground in earnings is good news. Even so, the state remains in the middle of the pack on a per-capita basis. While our relatively lower cost of living helps to some extent, there is still room for improvement. To move ahead, we need to prepare our young people for the well-paying jobs of the future. We also need to continue to attract industries which enhance prosperity. We're going in the right direction in terms of personal income in Texas, but we need to keep moving.

Finance officials face global economy under threat

By Martin Crustinger
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Though braced by a resurgent United States, the global economy is under threat from other regions — from Europe and Latin America to China and Japan — where growth is stalling and prospects remain dim.

That's the bleak picture facing global finance officials who are meeting this week in Washington to consider policies to address the world's uneven growth. Their meetings follow downbeat assessments of the global economy issued this week by the International Monetary Fund, the Brookings Institution and the Federal Reserve.

The talks began Thursday with discussions among finance ministers and central bank presidents of the Group of 20 nations, which includes traditional powers such as the United States, Japan and Germany and emerging economies such as Russia, China and India. Next will come meetings of the 188-nation International Monetary Fund and its sister lending organization, the World Bank.

In a global forecast prepared for the meetings, the IMF downgraded its outlook this year because Europe is at risk of slipping back into recession and persistent weakness is slowing Japan, China and Brazil. The IMF called the recovery uneven and said global growth this year would be 3.3 percent, one-tenth of a percentage point below its forecast in July. And it lowered its outlook for 2015.

Brookings' report spoke of the United States as "the sole major economy still showing signs of strength."

"The world still seems to be counting on riding the coattails of the U.S. economy," said Eswar Prasad, a Cornell University economist who was among the authors of the report. "That is not going to produce a sustainable recovery."

Fed officials took note of the weakness in overseas economies and the strengthening dollar at their September meeting, according to minutes released Wednesday. The minutes indicated that officials worried that sluggish economies in Europe, Japan and China could depress U.S. exports.

Concerns about Germany's economy — Europe's largest — have been mounting. The most recent figures show that industrial production, exports, factory orders and business confidence have all endured sharp declines.

OILFIELD ACTIVITY STRONG DESPITE SOFTENING PRICES

Texas Permian Basin index up 10.3 percent in August

By Mella McEwen | mmcewen@mrt.com

Crude oil prices may have softened, but Permian Basin oilfield activity continued strong in August, and indications are that activity could remain strong.

The Texas Permian Basin Petroleum Index in August was up 10.3 percent over August 2013, fueled by record drilling permits and a high rig count.

Amarillo economist Karr Ingham, who prepares the index, said crude prices fell about $6 a barrel from July to August and the August average of $92.70 is down 10.1 percent from an average $103.09 last August. For the year, the price is averaging $96.97 a barrel, up 3.6 percent from $93.62 in the first eight months of 2013.

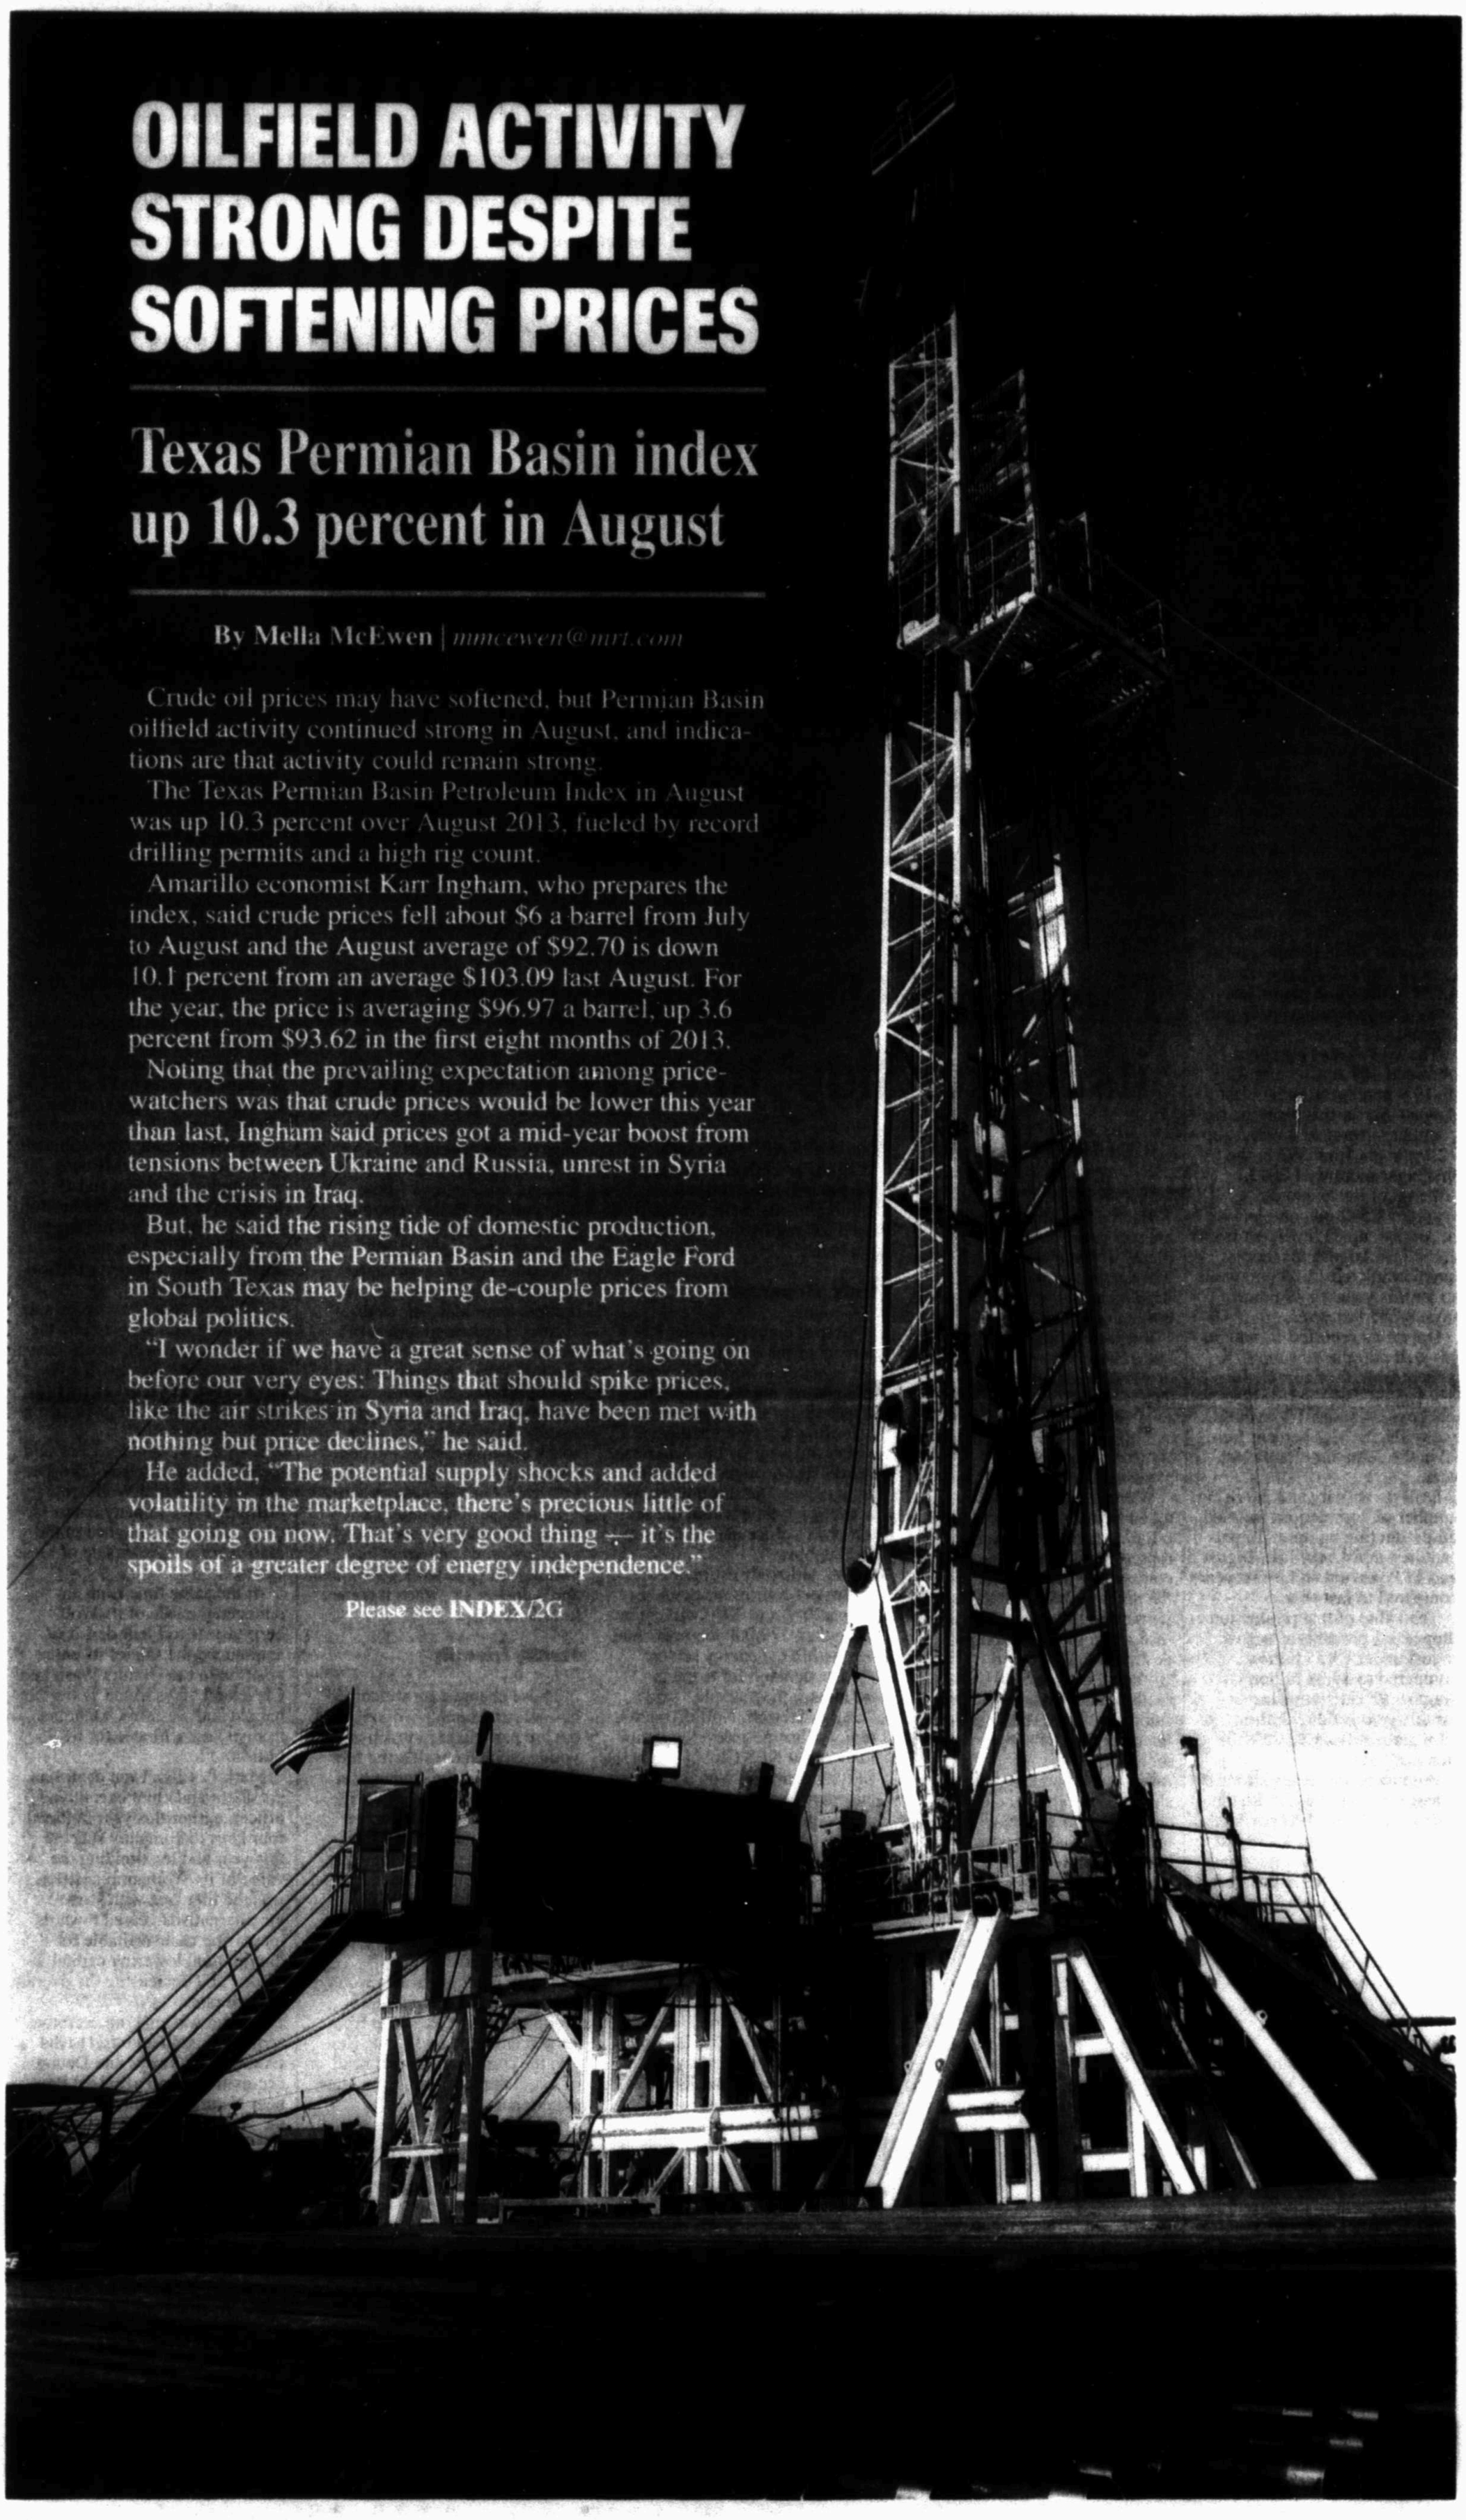

Noting that the prevailing expectation among price-watchers was that crude prices would be lower this year than last, Ingham said prices got a mid-year boost from tensions between Ukraine and Russia, unrest in Syria and the crisis in Iraq.

But, he said the rising tide of domestic production, especially from the Permian Basin and the Eagle Ford in South Texas may be helping de-couple prices from global politics.

"I wonder if we have a great sense of what's going on before our very eyes: Things that should spike prices, like the air strikes in Syria and Iraq, have been met with nothing but price declines," he said.

He added, "The potential supply shocks and added volatility in the marketplace, there's precious little of that going on now. That's very good thing — it's the spoils of a greater degree of energy independence."

Judge upholds non-listing of dunes sagebrush lizard

By Mella McEwen
mmcewen@mrt.com

A judge in United States District Court for the District of Columbia has upheld the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's decision to not list the dunes sagebrush lizard as endangered.

Judge Rudolph Contreras late last month struck down a lawsuit filed by the Defenders of Wildlife and Center for Biological Diversity asking that FWS be required to reconsider its decision.

"We are very pleased," said Ben Shepperd, president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association. "We understand there may be a period of time where the decision could be appealed but we feel the court sent a strong message."

Listing the lizard as endangered could have had "an incredibly devastating economic impact," Shepperd said.

While the association intervened on behalf of the FWS in this lawsuit, it has filed a lawsuit, along with four New Mexico counties, of the service's decision to list the lesser prairie chicken as threatened. He said action on that lawsuit is expected some time in November.

In a statement, Texas Comptroller Susan Combs applauded Judge Contreras' ruling, calling it a "huge victory" for the Texas Conservation Plan for the lizard.

The plan was developed with a broad group of stakeholders, including oil and gas companies, private property owners, agricultural interests, state and federal agencies and biologists to protect the lizard while allowing continued economic activity in the Permian Basin. The Permian Basin, Combs' press release noted, accounts for 57 percent of the state's total crude oil production and supports 47,000 oil and gas-related jobs.

Judge Contreras said in his ruling that the FWS decision was based on the best scientific and commercial data available," as required by the Endangered Species Act. The judge added that environmental groups "proffer no scientifically superior data from the administrative record that FWS failed to consider."

The judge agreed with Combs' contention that the conservation plan provided protection for the lizard, rejecting the plaintiffs' argument that the lizard was not being adequately protected because the plan was voluntary and because participants in the plan were providing too little information to the FWS.

Combs' office reported that currently more than 227,000 gross acres and more than 108,000 habitat acres are enrolled in the plan, and 575 acres of land have been used for conservation. Only 30.6 acres of habitat have been disturbed by those enrolled; that is 1.4 percent of the total amount allowed for the first three years.

Ingham said it shouldn't be a surprise if oil prices fall because U.S. producers are adding so much to the nation's oil supplies.

"We continue to displace imports, but we're bringing so much product online, that will have an impact," he said.

Ingham described the unprecedented increase in production from the Permian Basin and elsewhere in Texas and the nation as "fabulous" but pointed out that "you can't increase supply in a vacuum."

"More supply may lower prices," he said.

Prices remained strong enough to encourage future activity. The Railroad Commission issued 1,179 drilling permits in August, 70.6 percent more than the 691 issued last August, a record high, according to Ingham. The commission has issued 7,748 permits so far in 2014, up 11.8 percent from 6,933 in the same period last year, also a record according to Ingham.

The West Texas rig count averaged 464 rigs in August, up 19.9 percent from 387 last August. So far this year, the rig count has averaged 439 rigs, up 12.1 percent from 392 in the first eight months of 2013.

Permian Basin operators reported 1,592 oil completions in August, up 37.7 percent from 1,156 last August. Operators have completed 13,241 oil wells so far this year, up 49 percent from 8,885 last year.

Operators reported 15 natural gas well completions, up 275 percent from four completions last August. For the year, operators have completed 96 natural gas wells, up 33.3 percent from 72 in the same timeframe last year.

Drilling activity and the rising number of completions boosted oil production volumes 10 percent in August over last August and 11.9 percent so far this year compared to last year.

The value of that production dipped 1.1 percent in August to just under $3.35 billion compared to $3.38 billion last August. Production value so far this year is $26.9 billion, up 15.8 percent from $23.27 billion last year.

Producers are seeing stronger prices for natural gas, with the August average $3.69 per Mcf up 8.8 percent from $3.39 last August. Natural gas prices have averaged $4.46 so far this year, up 24.2 percent from $3.59 last year.

Stronger prices have boosted production volumes, which surged 9.4 percent in August compared to last August and are up 9.2 percent so far this year over last year.

The value of natural gas production climbed 16.4 percent to $422.6 million from $368.1 million last August. Value so far this year is $3.88 billion, up 34.6 percent from $2.88 billion last year.

Employment in the Permian Basin oil patch also continues to climb, with the August average of 33,670 up 11.3 percent from 30,245 last August. Employment so far this year is up 8.6 percent to an average workforce of 32,290, compared to 29,725 a year ago.

Halliburton is adding a femine touch to the gift items it distributes at job fairs and conferences in a bid to encourage more women to join its ranks.

The world of roughnecks presents its 'softer side' to recruit women

By Ryan Holeywell
Houston Chronicle

Energy industry conferences are notorious for producing plenty of swag — usually things like notebooks and miniature flashlights that collect dust at the bottom of a briefcase.

But when Halliburton officials know they'll be speaking in front of an audience of mostly women, they use a different type of give-away: containers of nail polish and lipstick — in the company's signature "rig crew red" — complete with the company logo.

While it may seem like a token gesture, officials at the oilfield services company say it represents something broader: a concerted effort to try to dispel the boy's club image that has permeated the energy sector and instead promote the company as a destination for women.

"You'd be surprised — they really spark that conversation," said Lisa Finch, Halliburton's manager for global diversity and inclusion. "We work in a predominantly male industry. We want to show there's a softer side."

Halliburton is joining other industry players in trying to make inroads with female job candidates by beefing up company presence at college campuses and women's professional groups, among other steps, to increase their appeal.

"You're going to put on work boots and jumpsuits and go out into the field, which is not something young women have been raised to expect to do," said Jamie Belinne, assistant dean of career services at University of Houston's Bauer College of Business.

But as oil and gas companies face what they call the "great crew change" — an onslaught of baby boomer retirements poised to place a dramatic strain on the industry's workforce — there's a growing recognition that the sector will need all the help it can get to close the employment gap.

"We're seeing we have a large opportunity here to maximize our workforce," Finch said. "It's no secret than in the past the industry overall has been predominantly male. We haven't been leveraging the talent pool out there."

Only 19 percent

Women comprise about 19 percent of the oil and gas and petrochemical workforce, even though they represent more than 45 percent of U.S. employment, according to a study published earlier this year by the American Petroleum Institute, an industry association. The shortfall exists in every job type within the sector except office and administrative support.

The API study estimates that the loss of retiring workers between 2010 and 2030 will create more than 579,000 job opportunities within the energy sector.

"The demand for talent is far outstripping supply," said Carolyn Stewart, North America regional business development manager at NES Global Talent, a staffing company with a focus on the energy sector. "The message companies are putting out is 'we need women; we need everyone.'"

That hasn't always been the case. In the mid-1980s, a collapse of oil prices set off an industry slump that made it difficult — and often undesirable — to get a job in the energy sector.

But the industry renaissance that unfolded over the last decade has prompted a glut of job openings and a shortage of workers, all at a time when women represent about 57 percent of college students, according to the most recent federal data. Industry officials say they don't want to run the risk of losing qualified candidates to other sectors.

Making changes

"When they realized they had to hire again, suddenly more than half of their candidates were women," Belinne said. "If they want access to that talent, they'll have to make changes."

That's already starting to happen, said Belinne whose help connects employers with graduates from the University of Houston's business school.

Until about five years ago, most of the energy sector's recruiters were men, she said.

Now, a growing number of women working as recruiters are making female prospects more comfortable with the industry.

Energy companies also are sending high-ranking women to speak at campus events to demonstrate the potential for women to advance in the energy sector.

And more companies are offering employees on-site day care, generous maternity leave policies, flexible work schedules, and a greater say when it comes to relocation.

Family friendly

Those changes are welcomed by male and female workers alike but are particularly attractive to young women considering how they'll balance the demands of work and family as they decide where to launch their careers. "The companies that are able to demonstrate they're family friendly have more students to chose from," Belinne said.

Companies also are setting goals for hiring and advancing female workers.

BP, for example, wants women to comprise 25 percent of its group leaders by 2020, up from 18 percent now, said Linda Emery, the company's global head of talent attraction and candidate experience.

Other companies have set similar targets and are enacting requirements that a minimum number of women or minorities be considered for each job opening.

It makes for good public relations, but companies also believe they can improve the way they're run if they have a diverse group of thinkers within their ranks.

Linn sells Wolfberry assets in adjustment

By Mella McEwen
mmcewen@mrt.com

As part of a four-point strategy for 2014, Linn Energy undertook a close review of its portfolio in order to maximize the value of its Midland Basin and Granite Wash assets.

To that end, the company has made several moves, including two swaps with ExxonMobil of Midland Basin assets for assets in the Hugoton and Belridge Field of California. The company also agreed to buy $2.3 billion of assets in five operating areas from Devon Energy.

To pay for that Devon acquisition, Linn has agreed to sell its Wolfberry position in Ector and Midland counties to Fleur de Lis Energy LLC for $350 million.

The Permian Basin properties being sold include approximately 7,200 net acres, 4.6 MBoe/d of current production and 19 MMBoe of year-end 2013 proved reserves. Currently Linn has budgeted $95 million on these assets and is running a two-rig vertical drilling program.

Following the close of the sale to Fleur de Lis, expected by the end of the year with an effective date of Aug. 1, Linn will still have about 6,600 net acres and daily production of 8,000 barrels of oil equivalent.

A spokeswoman for Linn said the remaining assets are prospective for horizontal Wolfcamp drilling. The company continues to see strong interest in the market for a trade or sale of these assets.

At the same time Linn announced the sale of its Wolfberry assets to Fleur de Lis, it announced the sale of its entire position in the Granite Wash and Cleveland plays in the Texas Panhandle and western Oklahoma to EnerVest affiliates for $1.95 billion.

Mark E. Ellis, Linn chairman, president and chief executive officer, earlier this year outlined four keys to company success this year and maximizing the value of its Wolfcamp position was the first key, with strategic alternatives geared towards increasing cash available for distribution, lowering capital intensity and decreasing the overall decline rate.

Second was making accretive acquisitions. In addition to the ExxonMobil swaps and Devon acquisition, Linn acquired Pioneer Natural Resources' assets in the Hugoton Basin of Kansas for $340 million.

The third key was to reduce capital intensity while increasing efficiency by executing a high-graded capital budget and making acquisitions and strategic alternatives that were geared toward portfolio enhancement.

Finally, the company looks for the potential to improve its balance sheet and reduce interest costs.

"It's critical to us we attract the best talent we can," Emery said. "That talent comes in male and female form."

Competition for women in engineering is fierce. "They are perceived to have skills which are of value to many different industries," Emery said. "What we find is we're competing not just with engineering firms and energy companies but also with investment banks and consumer services. It's a very sought after group of individuals. If I had a daughter I'd be saying 'study engineering.'"

But men still dominate the energy sector's core academic disciplines. Women earned about 40 percent of four-year science degrees in 2011, the latest year federal figures were available. They earned 20 percent of engineering degrees and just 15 percent of petroleum engineering degrees that same year.

"It's just the reality you have to deal with," said Vita Como, senior director of the engineering career center at University of Houston. "We have to reach back to middle school to start (convincing) young women of the fact that they're smart and they can do it."

Unwelcome feeling

Energy companies are partnering with universities and high schools to promote awareness about engineering and science careers, and they're hosting workshops and competitions for even younger students to stir interest in the fields among girls. "We've introduced them to the discipline while giving them the Halliburton brand," said Finch, the diversity manager there.

The message worked for Sofia Olivas, a Halliburton engineer working in South Texas who was recruited at University of Texas Pan-American before she graduated in 2010. "They give you a lot of opportunities to advance your career," Olivas said.

The industry is trying to develop those opportunities partly by creating employee resource groups — internal networks of workers within a company — focused on career development for women.

"It helps with mentoring and sponsorship," said Tamara Morytko, vice president of the southern geomarket at Baker Hughes. Though not every energy company has them, those that do often use them as a recruiting tool. "It's a selling point for any company," Morytko added.

Still, it will take more work to close the industry's gender gap.

A quarter of female engineers in the energy sectors say they don't feel welcome in the industry, according to a survey last year by NES Global Talent.

"I feel welcome, for the most part, however there have been occasions in the past — especially offshore — that I have felt regarded as a novelty and not taken seriously," read one response in the survey.

The same survey of 272 respondents found that nearly half of the female engineers felt they didn't get the same amount of recognition as their male counterparts, and nearly 20 percent were considering leaving the industry.

"Sometimes women sell themselves short," said Tonya Williams, Shell Oil Co.'s development lead for Auger, a platform in the Gulf of Mexico. "They don't always feel they have confidence within a male-dominated organization."

Advancement opportunities may be limited, to an extent, since the path to leadership at oil and gas companies often requires a stop in a dangerous or exotic location abroad.

"There's still a lot of companies where you need to be open to suddenly relocating to Nigeria," Belline said. "Men are still more likely to take those jobs."

Stabilis Energy, Flint Hills plan LNG facility in Odessa

Stabilis Energy and Flint Hills Resources announced plans for their joint venture to acquire property in Odessa for the proposed construction of its second planned Liquefied Natural Gas (LNG) facility.

The plant is expected to have a capacity of approximately 100,000 gallons per day and would serve high horsepower oilfield fuel applications in the Permian Basin of West Texas. Stabilis Energy will begin taking orders for LNG supply immediately and production could begin in 2016.

The joint venture's first LNG production facility is scheduled to open in January 2015 in George West, Texas. This 100,000 gallon per day facility will produce LNG for customers in the Eagle Ford Shale.

"Stabilis is pleased to lay the groundwork for our second LNG liquefaction facility in Odessa," said Casey Crenshaw, president and chief executive officer of Stabilis Energy. "Stabilis strives to provide oilfield engine operators with a reliable source of LNG fuel that helps reduce costs and improves environmental performance. The West Texas facility will complement our existing operations in South Texas and provide our customers with a complete LNG fuel solution across the region."

"We are excited to take this step toward realizing the joint venture's second LNG facility and we're very pleased to be doing it in Odessa," said Darren Tiemstra, General Manager of LNG for Flint Hills Resources. "It's an excellent location from which to serve customers in the Permian Basin and the property allows for future growth."

The Odessa LNG liquefaction facility project is subject to receiving final approval from management at both companies. If approved, construction is expected to begin early next year with production starting in 2016.

Pipeline growth points to infrastructure demands

More oil is flowing through the nation's network of pipelines as it expands to accommodate a flood of crude coming out of U.S. wells today.

Some 192,400 miles of pipelines ferried crude oil, refined petroleum products and natural gas liquids across the country in 2013, marking a 9.3 percent increase in overall mileage from 2008, according to a new report from the Association of Oil Pipe Lines and the American Petroleum Institute.

And last year nearly 15 billion barrels of crude oil and petroleum products traveled through U.S. transmission pipelines — a 10.6 percent boost from 2008. About 8.3 billion barrels of that was crude.

The numbers underscore the surge in energy infrastructure — and demand for it — that is accompanying the domestic drilling boom. As crude production has grown — up 3 million barrels per day since January 2011, according to the Energy Information Administration — producers are searching for ways to get it to market.

Startup raises $700 million to tap aging Permian fields

One of the executives behind Kinder Morgan's carbon dioxide flooding business has lined up $700 million to launch a Houston startup with plans to develop enhanced oil recovery projects.

While oil companies in West Texas rush to turn the Permian Basin into a playground for horizontal drilling rigs, the months-old Windy Cove Energy wants to pump money into the region's aging wells that could prosper again with CO2 injections, the company's founder told Fuelfix in an interview on Wednesday.

"We're focusing on what's being left behind by the rush," said Windy Cove CEO Chuck Fox, who left his post as vice president of Kinder Morgan CO2 Co. last year to form the new company. "A lot of companies that are investing in shale plays may also have older conventional properties they no longer want."

Developing enhanced-recovery projects take about $200 million, first to buy the land and then to drill injection wells and add the compression technology that would inject carbon dioxide into those wells. That would push 10 to 15 percent more oil out of the old, vertical oil wells that have fallen out of style in the Permian Basin.

Thanks to the private equity firm Blackstone, Fox said, the new five-person firm, which moved into a Houston office a few months ago, has the financial muscle for about three or four projects, most likely in the Permian Basin. The company's management team comes from Kinder Morgan, Shell and Texaco. The firm might buy existing waterflood oil fields and do its own drilling, or it might form a joint venture with an operator and invest in CO2-flooding technology, he said.

Typical water injections "leave a lot of the oil behind," he said. "If you've ever tried to get o.l-based paint off of something with a garden hose, you know it's hard to get off. CO2 acts like a solvent."

Fox had a key role in Kinder Morgan's CO2 infrastructure company since the Houston pipeline company bought his old employer, Shell CO2 Co., 14 years ago. With both CO2 pipelines and oil production operations in the Permian, Kinder Morgan — a giant pipeline and terminal operator — is actually one of the largest oil producers in Texas, according to the Texas Railroad Commission.

Kinder Morgan operates the Yates oil field in West Texas, one of the biggest — and oldest — in the nation. It uses carbon dioxide to goose oil out of the mature wells there.

Windy Cove is trying to exploit a niche of midsized CO2-flooding projects that would likely be too small to draw the eye of its bigger rival Kinder Morgan, Fox said.

"We're hoping to close our first deal in early 2015," he said.

Chevron sells 30 percent stake in Canadian play

Chevron is selling a 30 percent stake in the Duvernay shale play in Canada to a subsidiary of Kuwait Foreign Petroleum Company for $1.5 billion, the company announced Monday.

Chevron, which last year increased its footprint in the Duvernay in west-central Alberta, said in a statement that the play is "among the most promising shale opportunities in North America." Conservative estimates say the formation could hold 44.1 billion barrels of oil and 353 trillion cubic feet of gas, according to a May 2013 report by Deloitte summarizing the characteristics of North American shales.

The deal expands Chevron's relationship with Kuwait Foreign Petroleum Exploration Company, creating a partnership to develop about 330,000 net acres in the liquids-rich Kaybob area of the Duvernay shale, about 124 miles northwest of Edmonton, Alberta.

Chevron Canada, a subsidiary of San Ramon, California-based Chevron, has drilled 16 wells since it began exploring the Duvernay in 2011 and has reported initial well production rates of 7.5 million cubic feet of natural gas and 1,300 barrels of condensate per day, the company said. The company increased its stake in the Duvernay in August 2013 when it bought 67,900 net acres from Alta Energy Luxembourg SARL, according to a Reuters report.

"We remain encouraged by the early results of our exploration program and view the Kaybob Duvernay as an exciting growth opportunity for the company," Jeff Shellebarger, president of Chevron North America Exploration and Production Co., said in a statement.

After the deal closes, likely in November, Chevron Canada will hold a 70 percent interest and remain the operator, the company said.

EXCO Resources sells stake in Compass Production

EXCO Resources Inc. has signed an agreement to sell its 25 percent interest in Compass Production Partners LP and its 50 percent interest in Compass Production GP LLC to an affiliate of Harbinger Group Inc. for $118.75 million in cash. The effective date of the transaction is Aug. 1, 2014 and it is expected to close during the fourth quarter of 2014.

The sale reflects EXCO's continued focus on improving its balance sheet and simplifying its corporate structure. EXCO intends to use the proceeds to reduce the revolving commitment under EXCO's Amended and Restated Credit Agreement.

As of Sept. 30, 2014, EXCO had $222.5 million of outstanding indebtedness under the revolving commitment of the EXCO Credit Agreement. Upon the closing of the sale of the partnership, EXCO will have received cash consideration of $701.8 million from the sale of non-core assets and the rights offering of our common stock since Sept. 30, 2013.

Cardinal's TRAC-III logging helps locate pay zones and water zones

Horizontal drilling, hydraulic fracturing, exciting new plays in the unconventional shales—it's all great if you know exactly where your pay zones and water zones are. Cardinal Surveys' TRAC-III Annulus Production Logging can help you see what zones are producing what in beam-pumped wells, and make adjustments that can improve production and reduce water.

Because the TRAC-III production logging tool has an OD of just 7/8" it fits perfectly between the tubing and the annulus in wells with 5-1/2 inch casing and 2-7/8 inch tubing or even 4-1/2 inch casing and 2-3/8 inch tubing. This allows for real-time logging during production, eliminating the need to shut a well down to run the log.

Quantity and volumetric logs allow producers to closely identify production zones to identify the sources of water and of oil.

Once the log is run, Cardinal's team of experienced analysts goes to work uncovering the well's secrets. Cardinal President Steve McLaughlin explains that the more information his team gets about the well's history, the more accurately they can interpret the logs.

TRAC-III logging is not only useful in new wells, it can help with workovers of depleted wells. Reliable data allows accurate and precise design of remedial workover procedures. This leads to more efficient and cost-effective well recompletions, and, in some cases, results in workover designs that would otherwise be impossible. Knowledge gained from the production log may also lead to different completion techniques for future wells. In one recent case study, an operator reduced the number of completion stages after TRAC-III logs proved them unnecessary, saving significant costs.

Cardinal Surveys has been successfully logging wells since the 1960s. Many other formations benefit equally from real-time production logging. In fact, case studies prove well performance can be radically improved after workover, including elimination of water and significant increases in hydrocarbon production.

Digital signal processing, digital links to downhole tools, real-time recording and display—all these and more advancements have continued to keep Cardinal Surveys at the forefront of the downhole information business.

Find out what is actually contributing to production, reduce water flow, establish a baseline for a new well—all these uses and more allow TRAC-III logging from Cardinal Surveys to pay for itself over and over during the life of your wells.

Eliminate the guesswork by calling Cardinal Surveys and getting the information you need.

Cardinal Surveys can be reached at (432) 580-8061. Their website address is www.cardinalsurveys.com.

Knowing where and how much oil and water are coming from a well helps producers identify both zones. Call Cardinal at 580-8061 to learn more about TRAC-III Annulus Production Logging.

Protect your pipe with internal plastic coatings for harshest conditions

Whatever temperature or corrosion the oilfield can throw at your pipe, Permian Enterprises has the right internal plastic coating to protect it.

For the harshest conditions (up to 350°F or with H2S at 2-3 percent) there is IPC 2000. For temperatures up to 300°F and 6-8 percent concentrations of hydrogen sulfide, you will want IPC 1850. IPC 1505 is perfect for 250°F and IPC 101 is good for lower bottom hole temperatures.

Internal coatings do more than just protect against corrosion. Durable and smooth internal coatings increase fluid dynamics, speeding the flow of liquids and requiring less horsepower to move your payload. They also prevent paraffin from sticking to the pipe walls, keeping flowlines clear.

Among all its coating products Permian Enterprises has shipped over 150 million feet across the Permian Basin and elsewhere, with among the lowest failure rates in the industry. That means millions of feet of downhole tubulars keep working for years and years, saving clients huge amounts of money in repairs, downtime and lost production.

The company's Director of Development, Roy Pickett, says there are many reasons the IPC and Permian's other pipe coatings are so reliable. Before and after coating any pipe the Permian Enterprises team inspects it to see if it is able to be coated and afterwards if the coating is free of any flaws and or defects. Any defect could prevent the coating from adhering to the pipe, even in a tiny pinhole area, that could result in enough damage to destroy the pipe.

The first step in production is to apply a primer that will help the coating form a strong chemical bond to the pipe surface. This is done by a combination of computer and human controls, using the best of both assure a permanent bond.

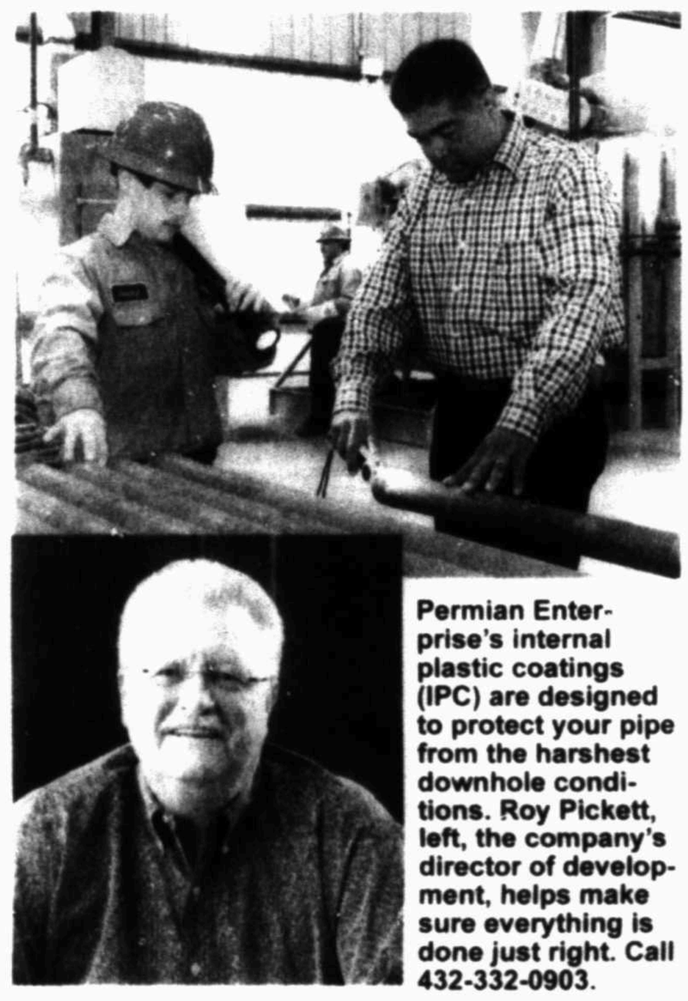

Next, the coating is applied under the same rigorous guidelines. After curing, the pipe is thoroughly inspected again to make sure every square inch is properly coated, before being sent out to the field.

That combination of the latest technology and human supervision brings producers some of the most reliable coatings in the business. Everyone on the Permian Enterprises team treats every customer as family. The company is locally owned and operated, so when you call you'll talk to an expert right here at home—no one needs to get an answer from Houston or elsewhere.

Plus, many members of the Permian Enterprise team have been on the job for 30 plus years. When you call, you'll likely talk to someone who remembers you from your last job or, if you're a first-time customer, will welcome you to the family. When you call for your next job, they'll have your information on hand.

The 170 local people at Permian Enterprises are looking forward to getting your pipe protected from the harshest downhole elements. The company has been doing this since 1948.

Ryt-Wrap™ is your best bet in corrosive environments.

Why gamble on your wells? Since 1982, Permian Enterprise's Ryt-Wrap™ has been applied to casing and tubing used in the most corrosive downhole conditions in the Permian Basin including the San Andres and Coleman Junction. In fact, we've got over 30 million feet of Ryt-Wrap in the ground for 229 customers with reliable and proven performance.

But don't take our word on it. Our customers wouldn't drill without protecting their casing and tubing with Ryt-Wrap.

"We've run Ryt-Wrap™ on everything that penetrates the San Andres...over 100 wells. And we've had no failures. To date, we've no reason to think it won't last the life of the well. Ryt-Wrap™ is standard operating procedure for us now. We're not a big company, but they treat us like we are."

Victaulic Series 727 high-pressure ball valve is NACE compliant

727 now features male threaded option for bare valve and valve-with-handle options

The Victaulic Series 727 Ball Valve is a high-pressure NACE compliant valve with grooved ends. Call Victaulic at 432-332-1480 to order. The web address is www.victaulic.com.

The volume of a flow line is only as good as all of its valves and connections. Anything that restricts flow affects the output of the line.

To increase capacity in high pressure flow lines in both production and storage piping, Victaulic offers the Series 727 ball valve, with a pressure rating of 1500 psi. Preliminary testing has shown that the valve improves flow by more than one-third compared to competitive standard port valves, allowing faster transfer of product to tanks or trucks.

The Series 727 is also NACE compliant meaning it meets all the standards for corrosion resistance—a must for transferring the corrosive liquids in the Permian Basin.

This two-piece valve features the grooved-end joining system Victaulic is known for, providing a tight and durable connection. Its floating ball requires less torque to achieve a tight close in the off position. The valves are capable of handling pressures of up to 1500 psi/10350 kPa in sizes from 2-6 inches or 50-150 mm.

The internal design has been streamlined in order to provide excellent flow characteristics, which accounts for its ability to increase flow over competitive valves. It offers an electroless nickel-plated carbon steel ball and stem. The seat material is lubricated nylon.

The Victaulic Series 727 comes with manual handles with an integral tamper-resistant lock and seal.

It is important to note that Vic-Ball valves are designed for full open or shutoff service; throttling is not recommended with standard ball valves, because high velocity flow over the exposed seat may cause damage to the seat.

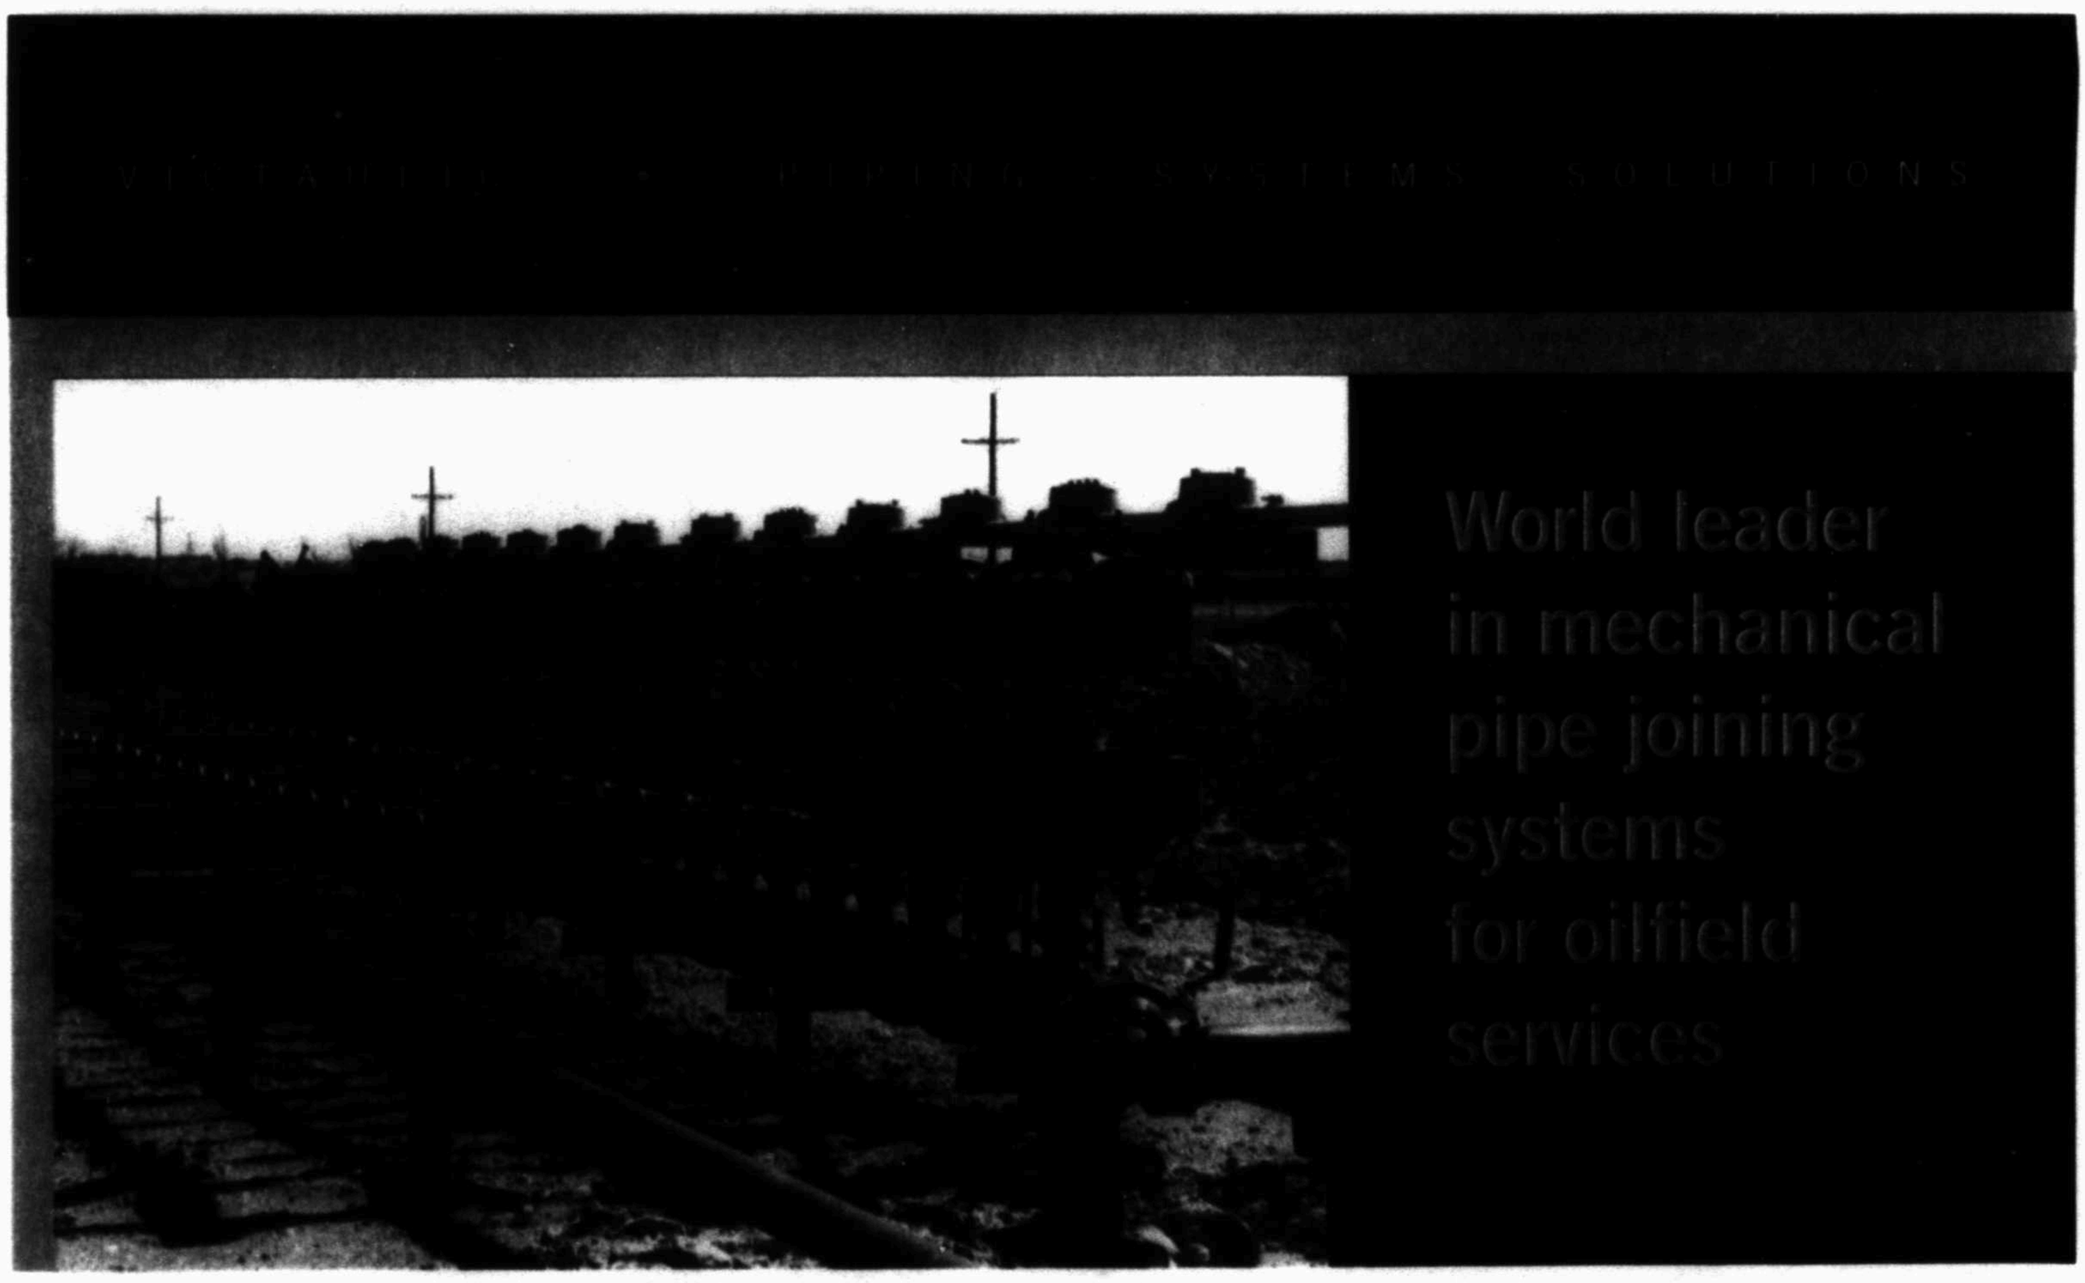

As with all Victaulic connections, the grooved-end joining system on the Series 727 is designed to eliminate leaks at all pressures for which the valve is rated. No leaks means no costly loss of product. It also means there are no environmental hazards from a properly connected Victaulic joint.

The company has recently expanded the 727's options to make it even more versatile. It is now available with a male threaded option for bare valves and valves with a lever handle. This will give customers the option to connect at the tank outlet, joining the valve to outlets, pipe and even flanged pieces. This threaded version is designed for tank and equipment connections.

It also has a freeze port option in the upstream side—a relief hole that expands in the event water in the ball cavity freezes, preventing severe damage to the valve.

Invented more than 90 years ago, the Victaulic grooved connection system has proved itself time and time again. The company reports that couplings installed 80-plus years ago are still in service today, with connectors and gaskets intact. All Victaulic products, including the Series 727, are manufactured to the same rigorous standards, so you can expect similar results.

Talk to Victaulic this week to learn how they can help you increase flow rates at your plant or field location.

Designed for pressures up to 2500 psi the Victaulic line of couplings, valves, fittings and accessories is a complete single source system.

Call today to find out how Victaulic can help you on your next piping project.
