A steelworker, one of 540 still with a job at the Johnstown Works of U.S. Steel Corp., leaves the plant at the end of his shift. U.S. Steel announced two days after Christmas that six plants, including Johnstown Works, will be closed permanently this spring. A total of 14, 610 steel workers, 790 at Johnstown Works, will be out of a job.

State economy being dragged out of recession

DALLAS (AP) — A 44-year-old purchasing agent laid off in Galveston got a job last summer after five months of unemployment. The Tony Lama boot company in El Paso has plan for another 200 jobs. Lone Star Steel fired up its East Texas furnace in December for the first time since August 1982.

All across Texas, the signs are small but unmistakable.

As the national economy spurs demand for houses, cars and consumer products, the state is slowly being dragged out of a 16-month recession — its worst in more than a decade.

For the state's economy, 1984 looks better than 1983.

"We've seen the worst — it bottomed out this summer," said Houston economist Nat Eisenberg. "The positive trend will continue through 1984, with Texas experiencing lower unemployment and a faster growth rate than the nation as a whole."

A construction surge is under way in some areas. Retail sales are getting back to normal. Once-shattered factories are reopening. And furloughed employees are going back to work, though often at less pay than they previously earned, the Dallas Times Herald reported Sunday.

Bobby Joe Raper of Irving lost his job when Braniff folded in 1982 but was rehired in May by another air carrier.

"In 1983 we started crawling to our feet," he said of his family. "We're now on our knees, and by early 1984, I expect we'll be on our feet and off and running."

Experts said the resurgance is restoring some, though not all, of the tens of thousands of jobs lost since the slump began in the summer of 1982.

Texas unemployment, which peaked at 8.8 percent of the working population in February, fell to 6.8 percent in November, according to the Texas Employment Commission.

"The gradual improvement will probably continue," said Tarrance Travland, assistant chief of the TEC's economic research department in Austin.

Hal Holland, the 44-year-old purchasing agent from Galveston, sent out 150 resumes after he lost his job and filled out applications with "50 to 60" companies. His new job pays 30 percent less than the old one, but he says he's happy to have a paycheck.

At least three key Texas industries hard hit by the recession are leading the recovery — computers, electronics and chemicals, industry experts said.

Between 1983 and 1986, U.S. production of computers is expected to grow 24 percent, electronic equipment manufacturing 25 percent and chemical production 18 percent, according to Thomas R. Platt, research economist at the Bureau of Business Research of the University of Texas.

Experts say an increase in business travel is already helping the transportation sector of the Texas economy to rebound, and even embattled agriculture is expected to have a better 1984.

Oil refining, though, should stay at current levels because of continuing conservation by consumers, the Times Herald said. Oil drilling did pick up slightly in the middle of 1983, however.

Most experts say oil and gas won't again be quite what it once was to the Texas economy.

"It used to be a quarter of our gross state output, but from now on it will be a little lower — we're replacing it with manufacturing," said George Kozmetsky, director of the Institute for Constructive Capitalism at the University of Texas.

Construction is reported up across the state, although few cities are booming as much as Tyler.

Jim Hardy, executive vice president of the Tyler Chamber of Commerce, said the value of construction permits there more than doubled, from $85 million in 1982 to $190 million in 1983.

One reason, he said, is that "many big national chains have penetrated all the major national markets and (are) looking at secondary markets like Tyler."

The computer and electronics industries are doing well in Dallas and in the "Silicon Gulch" — a 75-mile stretch of hi-tech industries between Austin and San Antonio.

Plant shutdown blow to families

JOHNSTOWN, Pa. (AP) — In this blue-collar city where trouble is no stranger, U.S. Steel's decision to close its Johnstown Works is the latest blow to residents already staggered by the loss of thousands of jobs.

Social workers, noting heavy unemployment has led to growing family problems in the area, are worried about the effect of the plant shutdown.

"If it closes, it will mean that even more despair will set in," said the Rev. Noah S. Martin, executive director of New Day Inc., a Christian group offering free counseling to families. "It will add wood to the fire that's already burning, and that's a nice way of putting it."

Two days after Christmas, U.S. Steel Corp., the nation's largest steel producer, announced that by April it would eliminate 15,400 jobs, curtail operations at 24 plants and close six, including the complex of red brick and black metal buildings on Johnstown's east side.

About 3,100 positions will disappear in South Chicago, Ill., nearly 2,600 in Gary, Ind., and more than 3,800 at six plants in Pittsburgh's Monongahela River Valley. Johnstown stands to lose only 790, including those of 250 plant workers already laid off.

But Johnstown, nestled between the steep slopes of the Conemaugh River Valley and noted for its catastrophic floods, already was suffering and can stand little more pain.

"Things are getting brutal," said Daryl "Doc" Dawson, community outreach director for New Day.

Only 10 months ago, Johnstown had the highest urban unemployment rate in the United States, a punishing 25.9 percent. That figure has since declined to 15.1 percent.

But there are still precious few opportunities in a city of 35,000 people and a two-county metropolitan area of only 260,000 to absorb 790 workers on top of the 15,900 who were jobless as of October, said state labor market analyst Bill Findley.

"We've seen Johnstown move from a goods-producing to a service-producing economy," Findley said. "But the problem is that coal and steel, the two industries that were the backbone of the economy for so long, have declined so far."

Coal and steel provided more than 38,000 jobs in 1950 in Cambria and Somerset counties. As of October, 6,500 jobs were left in the mines and 5,600 in the mills, Findley said. The sharpest decline in steel employment, a drop of nearly 50 percent, has come in the past three years.

Woman passes bar without law school

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — No fancy law school diplomas adorn the office of attorney Myrna Oglesby. But the longtime legal secretary, who set up practice last week in her employers' firm, is an honors graduate — of the school of practical knowledge.

Mrs. Oglesby, who never attended college or law school, learned the profession in 24 years on the job, spending the last five years putting in four hours of daily study under the tutelage of her boss, Mendocino County attorney Jared Carter.

By last July she felt ready to take the California Bar exam, and apparently she was. She passed the three-day test on the first try.

"I started a little late in this, so I didn't have time to waste taking tests twice," the 48-year-old mother of five grown children said in a telephone interview from her home in Ukiah.

Of the 7,684 people who took the exam with her, 51 percent failed. Only 10 people in the test-taking pool had, like Mrs. Oglesby, studied under a practicing attorney rather than at law school, and just three, including Mrs. Oglesby, passed.

Protesting that she is "pretty ordinary," she said she knows "at least three, probably five, other ladies who could have done the same thing."

For five years, she rose at 5 a.m. daily to study books assigned by Carter, a former Stanford University law professor and partner in the Ukiah firm of Rawles, Hinkle, Carter, Brigham, Gaustad & Behnke.

"I think Myrna had reached the stage in her job where she had done everything," Carter said.

Mrs. Oglesby estimates she read more books than a law school student would have, and admits, "I probably overdid it."

She believes that her intensive preparation followed habits learned when she took her first job at 16 and became fascinated by the law.

"Every good legal secretary goes beyond the call of duty," said Mrs. Oglesby, whose husband is a clerk for a supermarket chain. "You read books on the side constantly because the law is constantly changing. The law changes every time the Legislature has a session. You cannot keep up with it."

It was Carter who recommended that she attempt the step up from legal secretary to lawyer, and he offered to guide her. "I would never have tried it without him," Mrs. Oglesby said.

"I set out with the idea that I'm learning lots of things I don't know, that this is going to be beneficial no matter what I do," she said. "I wasn't going to kill myself if I didn't pass (the bar exam). I had a job already and everybody liked what I was doing."

Ex-CIA heads call for Marines' withdrawal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three former CIA directors say U.S. Marines should be withdrawn from Lebanon because they are too vulnerable to enemy attack and too few for the stated mission.

William Colby, Stansfield Turner, and James R. Schlesinger each said Sunday that the 1,400 Marines in Beirut should be pulled out if their peacekeeping mission remains unchanged.

"Unless we are prepared to change the balance of force in the region, we are putting ourselves in a position in which the Syrians can play cat and mouse with us," said Schlesinger, director of the CIA under President Nixon.

"If we are not prepared to change that balance, then we have a choice of getting out. The worst of all policies is simply to hang in there, because the cost to the United States will rise. It is probably a blunder to have gotten in," Schlesinger said on the ABC-TV program "This Week With David Brinkley."

On NBC's "Meet the Press," Turner said the Pentagon's recent report on the suicide bombing that killed 241 U.S. servicemen in Beirut showed "we were putting too much emphasis on the military options..."

"The president has an option for pulling out gracefully. He can move those Marines back to the Navy ships just off shore, he can cycle back onto the airfield every day those Marines that have been doing the job. In short, we can reduce the vulnerability of our forces, yet maintain the kind of presence the president deems necessary," said Turner, who headed the intelligence agency during the Carter administration.

"We are now seen as a protagonist, not a peacekeeper," Turner said.

Colby, CIA chief during the Nixon and Ford administrations, also appeared on "Meet the Press." He said it was a mistake to use Marines

Jackson meets with Syria's Assad; Decision on Goodman expected

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — Presidential candidate Jesse Jackson met today with President Hafez Assad of Syria and said after the 90-minute session that Assad would decide later if he will free Lt. Robert Goodman Jr., the captured U.S. Navy airman.

Jesse Jackson

Jackson refused to answer questions after he made a brief statement to reporters. "We are at a very sensitive stage of this appeal" for Goodman's release, said Jackson, an ordained minister, civil rights leader and a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination.

He said his meeting with Assad was "warm" and that the Syrian leader "listened intently."

"It was a good meeting. We remain very hopeful," Jackson said. "A final decision will be made later. Hopefully before the day is over we will have a final judgment."

Jackson was taken to Assad's suburban villa, about 10 miles south of Damascus, at about 1 p.m. Only three members of his delegation and none of the Secret Service agents escorting him were allowed to go along.

When the Secret Service agents were told by Syrian guards that they could not accompany Jackson, they objected strongly. After a few minutes, Jackson agreed to leave the Secret Service agents behind.

In a statement after seeing Assad, Jackson said he decided to give up Secret Service protection for a short time "in respect to the soveignty of Syria, of this government and in confidence in its ability to secure us..."

According to the four Western photojournalists allowed into the villa, a small, stucco building, Assad emerged to greet Jackson. The two shook hands, then went in for the meeting.

Scheduled to last 30 minutes, the session went on for 90. For the last 20 minutes, Jackson and Assad were said to been alone, except for an interpreter.

Assad shook hands with Jackson again outside the villa at the meeting's end. Jackson returned to his hotel in Damascus.

Industry faces $30 million loss

WESLACO (AP) — Citrus growers in the Rio Grande Valley have placed the price tag for a devastating Christmas Eve freeze at $30 million, and say the total impact to the South Texas economy could reach $100 million.

Analysts say that as a result of the record-setting cold, consumers should expect some increases in the price of oranges, grapefruits and some vegetables.

"This won't break us, although we will have to go to the bank to borrow production expenses for next year's crop, if we have any trees left," said Charlie Rankin, a Valley citrus grower. "But a lot of growers may not have enough collateral to do that..."

Citrus growers are hurrying freeze-damaged oranges to processing plants to get what they can out of a growing season they have now written off.

"We've made an estimate that there's a minimum of $30 million loss to the growers and the impact on the entire economy here in the Valley may approach $100 million," said Ray Prewett, executive vice president of Texas Citrus Mutual, an industry organization.

"We have lost the entire fresh fruit crop of oranges and grapefruit," Prewett told the Dallas Morning News in a story Sunday. "On top of that, we've had some tree damage which will effect next year's crop."

Gov. Mark White toured the far South Texas area Saturday and called on state agencies to marshal special services to help poor residents who now face the loss of their jobs in the region's agricultural industry.

White asked electric companies not to shut off power to residents who may have trouble paying higher bills. He also announced creation of a $1 million emergency program to pay unemployed farmworkers to make needed home repairs.

"Unfortunately, even $1 million cannot rehire all the farmworkers out of a job and cannot cover the cost of all needed home repairs," White said.

White said many of up to 100,000 farmworkers and their families are without food, shelter and heat. The governor said Willacy, Starr, Hidalgo and Cameron counties are eligible for the $1 million jobs and repairs program.

Before the freeze, it appeared the 1983 crop was going to be one of the best in recent years, Prewett said.

"We had back-to-back crops here that were good-sized, but the main thing that distinguished this year's crop was the quality," he said. "This was the best-quality crop we've had in five years."

Other fall and winter goods, such as cotton, peanuts and sugar beets have not suffered much, authorities say.

"Most of our crops were already harvested," said Archie Olsen, head of the crop section for the Texas Crop and Livestock Reporting Service in Austin. "We were about 96 percent done on the cotton, and that's about the only thing that's left."

The far South Texas region was not the only area of the state to suffer from the record cold snap that finally broke just before the New Year's weekend. Farmers, ranchers and foresters from one end of the state to the other also are tallying up their losses and problems.

One of the worst fish kills in 30 years has left thousands of dead sport fish on Gulf Coast beaches. Marine biologists won't know for about a week whether any shrimp were killed as a result of the record cold.

If shrimp were affected, the state's multi-million dollar commercial fishing industry could be devastated, officials said.

Shrimp and oysters account for about 96 percent of the state's $185.7 million-a-year commercial seafood industry.

"The last time it happened this bad (in 1951), it was really about a year before fishing got back to normal," said Bill Barton, who owns a bait and tackle shop on Padre Island near Corpus Christi.

Dr. Robert MacLean, deputy commissioner of the Texas Health Department, told the Houston Chronicle state officials fear the fish kill may be worse than first thought, and are on alert for fishermen who man try to net dead fish on the surface.

Eating fish that have already started to decompose can cause serious stomach ailments, MacLean said.

The cold air froze bays and lowered temperatures along the 367-mile coastline and dead trout and redfish were washing ashore by the thousands, officials said.

"It looks bad. We've had reports from Port Arthur to Port Isabel of dead fish," said Paul Hope, a spokesman for the Texas Department of Parks and Wildlife.

Ranchers in the Panhandle are facing skyrocketing expenses as they buy extra food to keep livestock provided with the extra calories to keep their herds warm, said Brad Morrison, assistant county extension agent in Deaf Smith County in the Panhandle.

"You just have to increase their food intake," Morrison said. "They use the food to increase body heat, so it's reducing their weight gain. But as far as physical harm, the cold isn't affecting them. As far as deaths and losses, it hasn't been anything more than what we'd expected."

Meanwhile, the cold has been a mixed blessing to the East Texas timber industry. Low temperatures have stopped the spread of the Southern Pine Beetle, but the frozen ground has delayed planting 50,000 acres of trees, officials say.

Planting of East Texas timber forests has come to "a screeching halt," said Bill Rose of the Texas Forest Service in Jacksonville.

Nearly 36 million pine trees were to have been planted between December and March, but forestry officials say they may have to wait until later this week before starting planting operations.

Executive: Divestiture could spawn revolution

ATLANTA (AP) — The head of a holding company spawned by the breakup of American Telephone & Telegraph Co. says divestiture of the huge conglomerate also may give birth to a telecommunications revolution.

"The possibilities for technology are limitless," said John L. Clendenin, chief executive officer of the Atlanta-based BellSouth Corp., one of the seven new regional holding companies created by the AT&T breakup, which took effect Sunday.

"There have been staggering advances in technology and our company, situated in a high growth area, is in the forefront of this technology," Clendenin said in a statement released Sunday.

BellSouth's operating companies are South Central Bell and Southern Bell, which provide telephone service in Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana.

"Technology has leaped forward into the information age," Clendenin said. "There is a real link between the telecommunications industry and the information age itself.

"The desire for home information is spawning. By the early 1990s, predictions are that more than 100 million people will own personal computers. Those who don't have a home computer will probably use a computer transmission line. Information services will be a lot different than they are today."

BellSouth already is exploring new markets in home information technology. Clendenin cited the recent introduction in Miami of Viewtron, a videotex service marketed by BellSouth and Knight-Ridder newspapers and which allows subscribers to shop, bank and pay bills electronically.

In other areas, Clendenin said BellSouth is exploring possible joint ventures in both regulated and unregulated parts of the telecommunications industry.

"The telephone network is one giant computer, and because we are very big and have a need for computer based systems, we have very large internal computer information systems capabilities," he said. "We've developed some information management systems for our own use which are very attractive to other utilities."

Clendenin said BellSouth is studying possible joint ventures with cable television companies to provide and bill pay-per-view programing, to build and maintain new cable systems and to handle trouble reports and billing for cable television.

"Technology is pushing our industries toward one another," he said, "and I think there are some mutually beneficial opportunities ahead."

BellSouth is the largest of the seven holding companies created by the breakup of AT&T. With assets of about $21 billion, it ranks within the top 15 of the Fortune 500 industrials.

Jackson meets with Assad about Goodman

The delegation members accompanying Jackson were two ministers, the Rev. William Howard and the Rev. Jack Mendelsohn, and a member of Jackson's staff, Tom Porter.

Jackson and his group are here to try to win the release of Goodman, held by the Syrians since his A-6E Navy jet was shot down Dec. 4 during a bombing attack on Syrian anti-aircraft positions in the central Lebanese mountains. Goodman was the navigator-bombardier on the plane. The pilot died after the crash.

On Sunday, Jackson said the Syrians had assured him that he would meet Assad today and have another meeting with Foreign Minister Abdul-Halim Khaddam, but the meeting with Khaddam apparently was cancelled.

"I will make an appeal to him (Assad) to release Lt. Goodman as a humanitarian gesture — a move that will have great impact upon the American public, a move that will have a great impact upon the negotiating process, a move that will contribute to a process now going on within our nation to withdraw troops (from Lebanon)," Jackson said Sunday.

There was still no indication from the Syrians that they were considering releasing Goodman, but Jackson said the time they were taking for what he called "serious deliberations" was a good sign.

"It doesn't take very long to say no," he added.

as a peacekeeping force to support the embattled Lebanese government of President Amin Gemayel.

"If the purpose is to support the Gemayel government, we should be doing it with a military aid system and advisers, not Marines," Colby said.

Turner said recent comments by White House spokesman Larry Speakes that he had reduced intelligence gathering capability during his tenure at the CIA were false.

"During the Carter administration we did not reduce emphasis on human intelligence, we strengthened it," said Turner.

"This (Reagan) administration has been in that White House for three years. They're trying now to cast the blame for what's gone wrong in their watch on the previous one," Turner said.

Schlesinger agreed that Speakes' blame was misplaced. He said one reason for a weakened intelligence force in the Mideast is that several top experts in the region were killed last April when a terrorist bomb exploded at the U.S. Embassy in Beirut.

"In no way can that be blamed on the Carter administration," said Schlesinger, who also served as Carter's energy secretary. "We have great national assets and we were not using those assets effectively to bring the intelligence that was available to the commanders in the field."

Plant shutdown blow to Johnstown families

For blue-collar households, the upheaval has created shock waves that extend even into some bedrooms.

"The men don't feel like men because they're not out earning the bread," said Mary Duranko, president of the Wives Action Committee. "The husband can become impotent and you can't even salvage the private moments you once had."

The committee, one of about 10 social service agencies helping the unemployed, conducts a monthly forum where the couples among its 3,500 members discuss marital problems aggravated by unemployment, Mrs. Duranko said.

"They get rowdy, but it relieves the tension on husbands and wives so they can get it out of their systems," she said.

Mrs. Duranko, whose husband was laid off for 30 months, said she helped form the Wives Action Committee after her family was humiliated to have to accept welfare.

"Did you ever live in a house where you were afraid to answer the door for fear that it was the sheriff or a bill collector?" she asked.

"The welfare system strips them down to nothing," said Dawson, a former millwright at Bethlehem Steel Corp. who now earns less than half of what he made in the mill.

"The chronically unemployed know where to get help. They have their routes all mapped out," said Martin. "But the newly unemployed don't know how to play that game, and some of them don't want to learn."

The number of domestic disputes, including wife-beatings, rose in Johnstown along with the unemployment rate, said Martin, who supervises the family counseling arm of New Day.

"Our caseload has doubled in the last year and there's a four-to six-week waiting list," he said.

About 800 clients are being counseled through New Day, Martin said.

"Psychologically it's affecting the children, too," Mrs. Duranko said. "They can no longer sit in the classroom and concentrate on their studies. Their minds are back home, wondering if mom's going to leave, if dad's going to leave, 'Is it my fault?' "

U.S. Steel Chairman David Roderick said that in the face of cheap steel imports, labor costs at Johnstown have priced the plant's products out of the market.

Campers stake out position along parade route

By The Associated Press

Thousands of people camped on the streets of Pasadena, Calif., for today's queen of the New Year's parades, and millions more settled back for a festival of college football as the nation enjoyed an extra-long holiday weekend.

Five thousand campers staked out Pasadena sidewalk space as early as New Year's Eve to assure choice viewing spots along the 5½-mile route of today's 95th annual Rose Parade. By late Sunday, up to 15,000 more had joined them in their wait for the floral spectacle, with Danny Kaye as grand marshal, 60 floats, 24 bands and 200 horses.

Around the country, state police were crediting a crackdown on drunken driving for keeping inebriated revelers off the roads late Saturday and early Sunday. Taxi and subway operators in New Jersey, Atlanta and elsewhere offered free trips home for partygoers.

"It's been unbelievably quiet," Indiana State Trooper Stephen Hose said Sunday in Terre Haute. "I think the propaganda war is really what's been doing it."

The National Safety Council had predicted that 250 to 350 people would die in traffic accidents, many the result of alcohol-impaired drivers, before the three-day holiday ended at 6 p.m. today. By 5 a.m. today, 157 highway deaths had been reported nationwide.

Celebrants in Philadelphia kicked off 1984 on Sunday by packing the sidewalks to watch 25,000 flamboyant mummers strut and strum in their annual gala.

Undaunted by the 34-degree water temperature in Lake Michigan and fortified by champagne and brandy, 60 members of Milwaukee's Polar Bear Club waded in Sunday to the cheers of about 700 onlookers.

"It is such a nice, sultry day," said 24-year-old Tracy Jarvis of Australia, who arrived with a Christmas tree and barbecue grill. At least one startled spectator slipped on an icy ledge and plunged into the frigid lake.

A 74-year-old member of New York City's Polar Bear Club died of an apparent heart attack after plunging into icy waters off Coney Island, where the air temperature was in the low 30s and the water was measured at 43 degrees. Phil Forlenza, who had a heart condition, collapsed on the beach following his swim.

New York City officials attempted to make a clean sweep of litter-infested Times Square, where an estimated 250,000 revelers screamed and cheered at midnight Saturday as a giant, illuminated apple-shaped ball slid down a flagpole and marked the start of 1984.

Extra security around public buildings, aimed at preventing a recurrence of last New Year's Eve's bombings by a Puerto Rican pro-independence group, proved needless, police said.

The air temperature was about 22 degrees Fahrenheit Sunday as tavern patrons leaped into Upper Nemahbin Lake near Nashota, Wis., during a second-annual fund-raising affair. The icy dip is a spinoff from the day's annual "Polar Bear Club" splashes at Lake Michigan beaches.

Propane tank cause of blast

DENVER (AP) — An explosion and fire that ripped through a Wells Fargo office, blasting a cleaning woman through a window and destroying 75 percent of the building, apparently was caused by a ruptured propane tank, officials said.

The blast on Sunday, which blew off the roof, tore a huge hole through the entrance and smashed all the windows, apparently occurred when a boiler touched off a ruptured 100-pound propane tank stored in the basement boiler room, Assistant Fire Chief Jim Leiker said.

Investigators planned to continue their probe today, he said.

The cleaning woman, Dia Cha, 22, was listed in critical condition today in the burn unit of University Hospital. A hospital spokesman said she suffered second-and third-degree burns over 20 percent of her body as well as numerous cuts from broken glass.

Two other custodial employees and an architect who were inside the building at the time of the blast escaped injury.

Architect Miles Lantz, whose company of Lantz and Boggio was located in the building, said he was removing Christmas decorations from his second-floor office when he saw Ms. Cha "blown out of the building" by the force of the blast.

Lantz said he thought the propane was being stored in the basement for use in thawing water pipes during the recent cold spell.

The two-story brick and concrete building also housed the Denver branch of the Wells Fargo Bank of San Francisco, the brokerage firm of Merrill Lynch.

Reagan spends vacation in Sunnylands

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan, ending a vacation of perfect California weather and lavish parties, flies back to the cooler climate of Washington today to face the harsher realities of the New Year.

In coming days, the president must confront a move in Congress to limit the Marines' stay in Lebanon. On Friday, he will receive the Kissinger Commission's report on Central America. And still to be settled are budget questions stemming from his resolve not to raise taxes in 1984.

But such concerns took a back seat during the last week as Reagan retreated behind the walls of a sprawling, flower-bedecked estate called Sunnylands.

There, at the corner of Bob Hope and Frank Sinatra Drives, the heavily guarded gates opened Saturday night to a procession of limousines bringing some 90 wealthy and powerful guests to a glittering New Year's Eve party at which Reagan and his wife, Nancy, were the stars.

The party, a tradition for the Reagans over the last decade, was given by Sunnylands' owners, millionaire publisher Walter Annenberg, the former ambassador to Great Britain, and his wife, Leonore, Reagan's first chief of protocol.

"We're giving our usual party," was all Mrs. Annenberg would say of the festivities. She declined to tell a local newspaper who was invited, but the White House released portions of the guest list which included about a third of the Reagan cabinet.

Among the celebrity guests on the list were comedian Bob Hope and his wife, Dolores, and singer Frank Sinatra and his wife, Barbara.

As guests arrived at the New Year's Eve soiree, an orchestra played soft music in the pink marble foyer of the Annenberg home, which is perpetually filled with exotic orchids grown on the estate. A Rodin bronze of Eve decorates a relecting pool at the entrance.

Young marks decade as mayor of Detroit

DETROIT (AP) — Mayor Coleman A. Young marks a decade in office today, and at 65 the Motor City's first black chief executive says he hopes to occupy the seat for another 10 years.

"I expect to be kicking around somewhere," said Young, the longest-serving mayor in city history. "I might determine that it's just as well to be here."

A former autoworker, labor organizer, cab driver and state legislative leader, Young took office Jan. 2, 1974, and says he plans to seek a fourth four-year term in 1985 — and perhaps a fifth after that.

"There's never a dull moment," he said recently. "I cannot say that I'm bored."

In 1974, more than half the population of the nation's sixth-largest city was black. That figure has risen to two-thirds.

Among his first goals as mayor was erasing Detroit's nickname of "murder city," with one of the highest murder rates in the country.

"I issue an open warning now to all dope pushers, to all ripoff artists, to all muggers," Young said in his first inaugural address. "It's time to leave Detroit. And I don't give a damn if they are black or white...Hit the road."

Tuxedo-clad reveler falls to his death in elevator shaft

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — A tuxedo-clad man who had been celebrating New Year's Eve at a Syracuse hotel fell 100 feet to his death when he tried to jump from a stuck elevator to the floor below, police said.

The accident occurred at 2:30 a.m. Sunday at the Hilton Tower of the Hotels at Syracuse Square, when an elevator carrying 15 to 20 people stalled between the 10th and 11th floors, according to Syracuse police Investigator Rod Carr.

Two men pried open the elevator doors, jumped down to the 10th floor and started helping other people down from the car, Carr said. But when Brian Fahey jumped, he landed in a crouched position, lost his balance and fell backward down the elevator shaft.

Fahey, 31, of Syracuse, was pronounced dead at the scene by the Onondaga County medical examiner. The death is being treated as accidental, Carr said.

Female doctors earn less than men

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. (AP) — Female doctors who graduated between 1962 and 1982 earned a third less than their male colleagues, according to a survey of women who attended medical school in West Virginia.

However, the 99 respondents didn't complain about getting lower pay, with salaries averaging $61,000, said Dr. Ruth Phillips, a West Virginia University medical school professor.

"None of the women voiced great concern about this," Ms. Phillips said. "It was just accepted."

Supermarket roof caves in

OGDEN, Utah (AP) — An engineer was checking the stability of remaining sections of a supermarket roof that caved in under the weight of melted snow, slightly injuring three people and causing thousands of dollars in damage, a fire official said.

Disabled plane lands safely

BOSTON (AP) — With a 20-minute warning to the control tower, Logan International Airport was ready for the worst as a loaded cargo plane with disabled landing gear circled before safely making an emergency belly landing.

As crews sprayed it with foam to keep flying sparks from catching fire, the craft skidded three-quarters of a mile to a jolting stop, and the pilot and three crewmen emerged unhurt, officials said.

The plane, on its way from Puerto Rico, was nearing its destination of Worcester, in central Massachusetts, on Sunday when the landing gear became disabled, airport officials and the plane's owners said.

Pilot Marvin Beier of Greensboro, N.C., radioed that there was trouble with the aircraft, owned by Blue Bell Aviation Inc. of Greensboro, said Pat Moscaritolo, a spokesman for the Massachusetts Port Authority. The plane was carrying 24 tons of computer parts, including some video games.

The runway could not be foamed in advance because crews were uncertain where the plane could land, said Charles Arena, the airport's director of public safety. However, the runway was clear of ice and landing conditions were good when the plane came in.

Also born on this date: British Prime Minister Clement Attlee and famed Russian ballerina Anna Pavlova. The business outlook is very bright in the coming months. Financial pressures subside. Count on family life to become less stressful and more rewarding. A former romantic partner returns. You are unsure whether he/she wants friendship -- or something more. Better go slow. You have other commitments now. Someone influential is interested in helping your career.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your skill at predicting trends lets you stay ahead of the competition. Work on a project you began yesterday. Involvement in community activities could help your career aims.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): It is mind over matter if you want to succeed today. Marriage brings a great change in the way some people think. Friends in high places come through for you. Romance soars!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Work is sheer joy to some, poison to others. Success depends largely on your attitude. Ambition drives you to make that extra effort. Variety makes romance much more exciting.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A positive attitude wins you new friends. Reach out to those who can help you at place of employment. Hasty decisions will work against you. Slow down and do things right.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Logic is the key to winning a challenge. Restrain your generous impulses before they wreck your budget. Your personal charm helps romance along, but emotional outbursts could do you in.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): It is impossible to win everyone's approval. Follow your conscience and you will do just fine. Bring a romance to an end if you are spending most of your time battling.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): An unconventional approach will take you straight to the top. Do not become too involved in a cause until you know that it is legitimate. A business deal needs more study.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You have a cure for what ails loved one. Be sensitive to your own needs. A new scheme is not as wild as it sounds. An office romance could mean big trouble.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A relationship that has been sluggish begins to pick up. Togetherness enhances romance if you are careful not to overdo it. Talk with the boss about a problem that is hurting productivity.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You are inspired by something you hear or say today. Act on the information you already have; it will be enough. Do not be intimidated by threats. Justice will be served.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A fine time to investigate a new job opportunity. You reaffirm an old love. It is not as difficult to communicate your thoughts as you supposed. Lost objects can be recovered.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Say all the conventional things when welcoming a newcomer. A child shows you a practical use for an unusual idea. Call someone you love and patch up an quarrel.

Show tells intimate details

PARIS (AP) — Once a month, a man and woman reveal the most intimate details of their personal lives before millions of people on France's hottest, most controversial new television show.

The first edition of "Psyshow" was broadcast in late October and featured a wife who had taken a lover with her husband's consent because of the husband's inability to satisfy her sexually.

What followed was more than an hour of tears, searing confessions and childhood recollections before a small studio audience, a respected French psychiatrist, Serge Leclaire, and the host of "Psyshow" TV weatherman Alain Gillot-Petre.

What followed that was a flood of letters to the Antenne 2 network and a storm of protest from those who found the show offensive.

Bernard Pons, secretary-general of the opposition Rally for the Republic Party, denounced the show as a "scandal" and an attack on the nation's morals. Others said it was pandering to "voyeurs."

Exerpts from the show were broadcast on Antenne 2's news programs and there was a heated debate in the newspapers and in the French psyciatric community about the merits of televised psychodrama.

The letters ran about 60 percent favorable, according to the station, and producer Pascale Breugnot said about 500 of those were from couples who outlined their personal problems and indicated a willingness to appear on the show.

"The problem is that most of those people either had very severe problems, or weren't really willing to discuss them in public, or had minor problems and just wanted to get on television," said Leclaire, the respected 59-year-old psychiatrist who participates in the broadcast.

"Psyshow II," broadcast in November, was something of a letdown for viewers looking for a repeat of the first show's explicit sexual nature.

It featured 31-year-old Yvon, a telephone company employee who described his difficulty in expressing emotion, and Francoise, the 29-year-old woman with whom he had been living for six years.

Again there were tears, and at one point Francoise turned to Yvon and said: "You're killing me! You're killing me!" before burying her head in her hands. Viewers also learned that Yvon liked to cook, but Francoise did not like to eat, that Yvon's mother never showed emotion, and that Francoise was kicked out of her home at age 16.

The first show attracted about six million viewers, according to Antenne 2 spokesman Gilles Tissot.

ANSWERS TO BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQJ82 ♡A95 ◇J62 ♣94
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—When you have adequate support for partner, it is usually advisable to show it as soon as possible. Here, however, you have a dead minimum opening bid, so you should do little to encourage partner—any move he makes toward game should be of his own free will. Rebid two spades.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQJ63 ♡Q95 ◇5 ♣AK84
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—You certainly have the values for a game in hearts. However, your hand could easily produce a slam. You should bid out your shape. Start by bidding three clubs (a "high reverse"), and then raise hearts at your next turn. That describes your hand perfectly.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠QJ5 ♡A8753 ◇96 ♣A76
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
1 ♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Don't rebid your hearts simply to show that you have five—two hearts would show a weaker hand with longer hearts, and three hearts is game-forcing, showing a very robust suit. You have a balanced hand, and your most probable game, if you have one, seem to be in no trump. Raise to two no trump.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠872 ♡K1065 ◇954 ♣AJ3
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
1 ♠	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—This is not the hand where you should take a preference to partner's first-bid suit. With such a sound stopper in the unbid suit and a balanced hand, you can describe it well by rebidding one no trump.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠872 ♡K1065 ◇954 ♣QJ3
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
1 ♠	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—You have a dead minimum responding hand, and with a minimum you should not make more than one bid unless you are forced to. There is no reason for taking a preference to partner's first-bid suit—one spade should be perfectly playable if the opponents allow you to buy the hand there. Pass. Don't rebid one no trump—reserve that action for hands that are slightly better than dead minimum.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠8763 ♡KQJ4 ◇95 ♣762
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—You have an unpleasant hand to bid. If you bid three no trump, partner will expect you to have a solid spade stopper and he might pass when there is a superior contract available. You can't reverse in spades or rebid your hearts, and you shouldn't raise partner's second suit with only three-card support. That leaves just one option—you must take a false preference to three diamonds and wait for partner's next move.

Sincere threat

Finally United States officials are beginning to at least talk tough to United Nations officials about cleaning up their act. It's about time.

State Department officials, speaking for President Reagan, have given UN officials a year — until Dec. 31, 1984 — to clean up the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

If they don't, American officials say they'll pull out of UNESCO, taking with them their monetary contribution that amounts to about a quarter of the agency's annual budget.

The decision wasn't reached overnight, by any means. It's difficult to withdraw from any organization supposedly committed to the betterment of mankind.

And the move isn't necessarily akin to the United States taking its ball and going home, thus stopping the game. That parallel smacks of the United States storming away from the game because it didn't get its way.

But that's not the case. The United States has gone along with UNESCO's increasingly anti-Western leanings, funding much of the agency's nonsensical approaches, until the growth of the agency just became too-much of a drain for the return. UNESCO became a bad investment.

Reagan administration officials have called the organization "fatally flawed," but others have held out hope that the agency can be reformed to, in fact, work for the purposes for which it was organized.

We hope so. It's sad to see an organization founded with such lofty ambitions become nothing but a communist propaganda tool. It's also sad to pour taxpayer money down a bottomless hole only to see it turned against you.

It's a big step, but we hope U.S. officials are sincere in their threat.

Speaking of peace

President Reagan has set an optimistic tone for his administration's foreign policy in the new year.

He told the press he continues to believe that peace is possible throughout the world, and that there is less friction among nations than may appear on the surface. He made these three important points:

— First, he addressed himself to the Soviet Union, saying that "If the Soviet government wants peace, there will be no war, because I know for a fact that no other country wants war with the Soviet Union. The ball is really in their court."

— Second, he suggested that heated international debates do not always reflect actual conditions. "There has been," he said, "more heat in rhetoric. There has not been more heat in the actual relationship."

— As for peace in the Middle East, President Reagan remains hopeful. He said that he does not agree with those who are saying that the Camp David accords were violated by the recent meeting between Egypt's President Hosni Mubarak, and the leader of the Palestine Liberation Organization, Yasser Arafat.

These three remarks tell the American public a good deal about what to expect from President Reagan on the international front in the new year. He will work for peace, as he has throughout his first three years in office, but in the end it will be up to the Soviet Union to make peace work.

Another View:

Nicaraguan courage

We are waiting to hear condemnations of the latest outrage by Nicaragua's Marxist government from all those who have been vocal in their doubts and criticisms of the Reagan administration's intentions and policies in Central America.

A few days ago, the Sandinistas charged that Roman Catholic Bishop Salvador Schlaefer and other American clergymen had been kidnapped by anti-Sandinista rebels in an eastern province as part of a CIA campaign against the government.

The Nicaraguan Foreign Ministry issued a communique saying that rebels of the U.S.-backed Nicaraguan Democratic Force kidnapped Bishop Schlaefer, 63, of the Capuchin missionary order in Nicaragua and originally of Campbellsport, Wis.

Subsequently, the Nicaraguan government announced that anti-Sandinista rebels killed the American bishop during an escape attempt — that he was "assassinated ... by counterrevolutionary forces when he offered resistance."

The announcement was broadcast on national ratio and television, and the Sandinista government also offered the information that his body had been found in a remote village in northeastern Nicaragua.

However, Schlaefer crossed the border into Honduras alive. His "captors" were some 1,300 Miskito Indians joining thousands of other Indians in fleeing indoctrination and repression by a government they oppose.

He said he voluntarily chose to accompany them as spiritual leader on their march into Honduras. "They did not force me," he said. Asked about reports he was abducted, he said he was treated like "the king of the whole group there."

As for danger to his life, he reported that government planes and soldiers pursued and shot at the refugees during their three-day journey. Perhaps it was a Sandinista attempt to keep people from "voting with their feet" for democracy, as President Reagan put it.

Furthermore, Schlaefer openly accused the Sandinistas of persecuting the Catholic Church and the Indians, and said that one Miskito village "has become a Nazi-style concentration camp."

The 38-year veteran of religious service in Nicaragua who returned to the United States to spend Christmas holidays with his relatives has courageously vowed to go back to Nicaragua to promote human rights.

We wish American liberals would as courageously face up to the nature of the Sandinista government in Nicaragua — a precondition to fostering democracy and genuine peace there and throughout Central America.

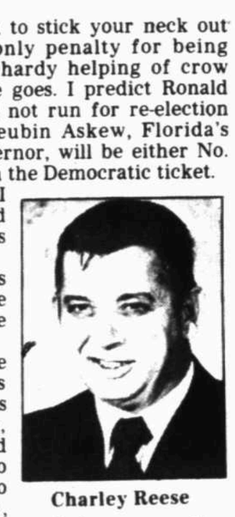
Cartoonists look at candidates

CHARLEY REESE

Reagan won't run; Askew will!

It's fun to stick your neck out when the only penalty for being wrong is a hardy helping of crow pie. So here goes. I predict Ronald Reagan will not run for re-election and that Reubin Askew, Florida's former governor, will be either No. 1 or No. 2 on the Democratic ticket.



Charley Reese

Actually I have said these things before. Nothing has caused me to change my mind.

At the President's last press conference, he looked entirely too relaxed to be a man, age 72, contemplating a grueling presidential campaign which if he wins will only keep him in the White House pressure cooker for four more years. Four more years that he must know will be decidely less pleasant than the first four.

The $200 billion deficits and even bigger ones looming ahead into the out years must either be painfully reduced or they will kneecap the economic recovery. The odds are better than even that Republicans will lose control of the Senate, thus saddling Reagan with a Congress entirely dominated by his opponents.

So why should a man who feels good about himself put himself through that meat grinder? You see, Reagan is one of the most mentally healthy presidents we've had in quite a while. He's not insecure like Jimmy Carter and Richard Nixon. Reagan has no inferiority complex. Nor does he have a monstrous ego like Lyndon Johnson. The only thing that could persuade him to run again would be an appeal to his strong sense of patriotism, but since he does not feel that he is indispensable, I don't think that will sway him.

Reagan is too old and he knows that. He loves that ranch of his out in California. If he steps aside now, he steps aside as a well-liked and generally successful president. And I think that's just what's he's going to do — quit while he's ahead.

In the case of Askew, of whom not many have yet heard, I base my prediction on the fact that he has a sound strategy and good advice. Bob Strauss, the former Democratic national chairman, outlined in an interview in the New York Times what he would advise a presidential candidate to do — if he were advising any. Everything he said, Askew is doing. I know Strauss is fond of Askew and I suspect he is his unofficial strategist.

The Askew strategy is to keep a low profile, especially a low media profile, and position himself on the issues in the center. This leaves Fritz Mondale, Alan Cranston, Gary Hart, George McGovern, and Jesse Jackson to compete for the center-left vote. It leaves the center-right vote to Askew and John Glenn. Half of the center-right is likely to be a lot more than a fifth of the center-left. If there were all that many center-left votes in the Democratic Party, then a politically wounded Jimmy Carter would not have trounced Sen. Ted Kennedy.

The second phase of the strategy is concentrate time and money in Iowa and especially New Hampshire. The national political press is like a pack of Pavlov's dogs — very easy to predict. having discounted Askew, just as he preferred, they will see it as big news when he does well in Iowa and New Hampshire. The pundits aren't going to admit they just mis-judged the race; if he does well, they will present it as a thunderous surprise upset and Askew will be bathed in media coverage at exactly the most appropriate time.

Remember, with seven candidates in a race, a guy could conceivable win with only 15 percent of the vote.

Furthermore, right after New Hampshire there are a string of Deep South primaries where Askew will be stronger than his center-left opponents. The ERA crowd, organized labor, and teachers' unions have minimum clout in the South.

I believe that Askew has thought out the race correctly and that his strategy is the right one. The rest of the Democrats are stuck in a time warp. They are running campaigns geared to the late 1960s. What I don't know is if Askew can execute his plan and by that I mean organize and spend his money effectively in Iowa and New Hampshire.

My guess is that he will. I've know him for 25 years and he's never failed at any political campaign yet. He's wanted to be President since he was a child and he knows this is probably his one and only shot. Behind that boyish Presbyterian face is a very sharp mind and a very tough competitor.

So don't be surprised if the pundit pack reports a stunning upset in the New Hampshire primary.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Demos' Senate hopes fading

WASHINGTON — The quadrennial hand has come around again to a presidential year, which for a political reporter is the time of maximum stimulation. It is the time when public interest in political reporting reaches that high plateau normally reserved for sports news and sex crimes.

But in 1984, the presidential-year fever may not spread far beyond the political partisans and activists. The voters at large are not sufficiently frightened by Ronald Reagan or stimulated by Walter Mondale, the two likely contenders, to run up a temperature.

Jack Anderson

The outlook on this opening day of another campaign year is that President Reagan will be re-elected. Mondale appears destined to become the latest in a succession of undistinguished, uninspiring Democratic candidates of the Jimmy Carter and George McGovern genus.

The Democrats' dream of winning back a Senate majority is also fading. "My judgment now is that a Democratic majority is about a 50-50 proposition," says Brian Atwood, director of the Democratic Senate Campaign Committee.

It had been thought that the retirement of Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., and Sen. John Tower, R-Tex., would dampen Republican prospects. But Cici Cole of the National Republican Senatorial Committee now believes, "we'll hold."

Some GOP candidates had been apprehensive about the Reagan shadow; now they are eager to bask in his reflected glow. Asked what would be the single worst thing that could befall his Republican opponents this year, Atwood said dryly, "Ronald Reagan deciding not to run again."

Something is transmitted in Reagan's appearance, demeanor and natural amiability that appeals to the public's need for patriarchal reassurance. He will be portrayed by the Democrats as a president surrounded by plutocrats, without compassion for the poor and the blacks. But Reagan has a capacity to float placidly above the partisan squalls that he may himself stir up.

Mondale, for all of his quiet competence, comes across as the Democrats' answer to Sominex. With his heavy lids and hangdog expression, he sometimes seems to be putting himself to sleep. His best chance would be to choose as his running mate a woman, who would attract the political spotlight from him.

The battle for control of the Senate will likely be decided in five states where the Democrats are mounting their strongest challenges. My reporters William Montague and Lucas Rivera interviewed political experts in these crucial states. Here's how the races are shaping up:

— North Carolina: Republican Sen. Jesse Helms, darling of the New Right, was 20 points behind his Democratic challenger, Gov. Jim Hunt, a few months ago. But Helms is the acknowledged champion of fund-raisers and, therefore, will be able to outspend Hunt by a big margin. Helms has already closed the gap to nine points in the polls, and he has barely started spending yet.

— Texas: The likely Democratic candidate will be former Rep. Bob Krueger, a moderate who has oil industry support and is close to the state's Hispanic leadership. But his opponent is expected to be Rep. Phil Gramm, the Boll Weevil Democrat who switched parties and won re-election easily as a Republican. Texas has a wide conservative streak, and Reagan is popular. Gramm could ride the president's coattails into the Senate.

— New Hampshire: Conservative Republican Gordon Humphrey's New Right rhetoric — for school prayer and against the Equal Rights Amendment — has alienated many voters. Humphrey is trying to soften his ultraconservative image, and he's sure to outspend Democratic Rep. Norman D'Amours. A tossup.

— Iowa: Incumbent Republican freshman Roger Jepsen faces an uphill battle against Rep. Tom Harkin, a popular moderate Democrat. The Democrats hope to court moderate Republicans by painting Jepsen as a puppet manipulated by Reagan. Harkin is ahead.

— Tennessee: Sen. Howard Baker's withdrawal left the Republicans in bad shape, and Democratic Rep. Albert Gore should be an easy winner. He has the name — his father was an immensely popular senator — and solid backing by the party hierarchy. State Sen. Victor Ashe is the GOP front-runner, but he'll need big help from Reagan to upset Gore.

Kidnappers free Italian boy

REGGIO CALABRIA, Italy (AP) — A 10-year-old Italian boy for whom Pope John Paul II recently pleaded was freed by kidnappers who had held him for seven months, police report.

They said Rocco Lupini was released Sunday in the southern town of Oppido Mamertina, near his hometown where he was abducted last May 18 with his mother, Fausta Rigoli Lupini.

Mrs. Lupini, a doctor and the wife of lawyer Guiseppe Lupini, was released Nov. 22.

The Italian news agency ANSA quoted unidentified sources as saying the kidnappers initially asked for a $3 million ransom but later dropped the sum to $1 million.

Red Brigades inmates end fast

NUORO, Sardinia (AP) — Seventeen Red Brigades inmates ended a 26-day hunger strike after the government announced new prison reforms that met some of their demands, prison officials report.

Officials of the Badu e Carros prison said Sunday that 11 members of the leftist terrorist gang stopped their fast Saturday after the government agreed to ease application of a controversial prison law for top-security prisoners. Six Red Brigades prisoners who had been hospitalized because of the hunger strike ended their fast earlier Saturday.

The 17 inmates at the maximum-security section of the prison began fasting Dec. 5 to press for changes in a law which allows prison officials to restrict visitation rights, recreational time and other services for top-security prisoners.

Taiwanians invited to mainland

PEKING (AP) — A senior Chinese leader has issued an unprecedented invitation to the people of Taiwan to work, lecture or study on the mainland.

Deng Yingchao, widow of former Premier Chou En-lai and a member of the Communist Party Politburo, also said in a speech Sunday that the Nationalist Chinese government on Taiwan should propose suggestions for peaceful reunification.

The invitations were the latest in a series of Peking initiatives begun in 1979 under the leadership of Deng Xiaoping, 79, who has listed reunification as a major goal of the 1980s.

Prison fire kills six foreigners

BERLIN (AP) — A fire in a West Berlin prison which killed six foreigners awaiting deportation may have been caused by a suicide attempt, authorities say.

Rescuers led 36 other male prisoners at the four-cell Lichterfelde Detention Center to safety, authorities said. One was hospitalized in serious condition.

A Fire Department report suggested that the blaze that broke out at 1:30 a.m. Sunday might have been started by an inmate trying to kill himself, but a police official, Martin Lippok, said no proof of that had been determined. He said firefighters used a crowbar to break into one cell, where they found the bodies of six inmates who apparently died of smoke inhalation.

Afghan males ordered to serve

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — The Soviet-backed government of Afghanistan has ordered all men above the age of 18 to report to the nearest army garrisons for compulsory military service, according to Radio Kabul.

The order, which warns failure to comply would invite "strict punishment," reflected government concern over the shrinking Afghan armed forces. It is believed the military had some 90,000 officers and men in December 1979, when Soviet troops entered the country to help the Marxist government battle anti-communist rebels.

Western analysts now estimate that only 35,000-40,000 remain in the armed forces due to defections, desertions and deaths in the conflict. They say the Soviet Union still has about 105,000 soldiers in the country.

Violence mars celebrations

By The Associated Press

U.S. troops stationed in Frankfurt, West Germany, welcome 1984 with a brawl and a footbridge packed with holiday strollers collapsed in Brazil, killing at least four people, as accidents and violence marred many New Year's celebrations around the world.

Police in Castro, Brazil, said more than 60 people plunged 35 feet into the fast-flowing Iapo River when a suspension cable and foundation post snapped on a wooden footbridge.

Four people drowned and 15 were missing, police spokesman Altamir Martins Rodrigues reported from Castro, 550 miles southwest of Rio de Janeiro.

In Frankfurt hundreds of U.S. troops brawled for more than six hours with fireworks and fists, leaving 30 soldiers injured.

Police said the fighting started New Year's Eve when some 500 U.S. Army and Air Force troops began tossing fireworks at each other. U.S. military police were called in to help German police break up at least 35 fistfights, and authorities confiscated more than 500 fireworks during the skirmishes. No arrests were reported.

In Holbaek, Demark, police used teargas grenades to smoke out a drunekn man who killed a 73-year-old woman with a shotgun Sunday.

New Year's Eve revelry injured 661 people in Italy, officials said, nearly twice the number of casualties recorded a year ago.

The port city of Naples, which often tops the list for New Year's wounded, did so again with 202 injuries — several of them bullet wounds — as residents heralded 1984 by firing pistols, the Interior Ministry said.

In Milan, a 21-year-old policeman, Giovanni Bottaro, was in critical condition after accidentally shooting himself in the stomach as he drew out his pistol to fire into the air, hospital officials said.

Sardinians followed a slightly less risky tradition by tossing old belongings out of the house. Carpets, shoes, chairs, books and vegetables flew from balconies and windows as the clock struck midnight.

In the Naples suburb of Pozzuoli, which has been shaken for more than a year by almost daily earth tremors, families abandoned festivities as 24 mild earthquakes shook the town.

In the Philippines, seven people were killed in shooting or stabbing incidents and about 250 others were injured, mostly by firecracker explosions, according to police and hospital reports.

Millions of Brazilians welcomed the new year by dressing in white, going to the beach, and making solemn voodoo-like offerings to a sea goddess called Yemanja.

Rio de Janeiro's famous Copacabana and Ipanema beaches were the most popular sites for this yearly ritual, practiced by people of many social groups who believe in Umbanda, an African-based spirit cult.

Bombs explode on train, at station

PARIS (AP) — A wave of bomb scares is sweeping France following two terrorist bombings over the weekend that killed four people and injured at least 39, many seriously.

Just four hours before the French rang in the New Year, and at virtually the same moment that President Francois Mitterrand expressed his New Year's wishes on national television, bombs exploded Saturday night on a high-speed train running from Marseille to Lyon and at Marseille's main railway station.

On Sunday, newspaper and railroad offices received a half dozen calls claiming responsibility for the bombings. None of the claims was verified and police said they had no indication what group might be responsible.

As investigators picked through the wreckage at St. Charles station in Marseille, a suspicious suitcase aboard a train Sunday afternoon forced authorities to begin an evacuation until the bag was claimed by its owner.

On Sunday evening, in the Riviera city of Nice, the railway station was evacuated after an anonymous caller told officials at the station that a new bomb had been planted.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Cause of AIDS not known

Dear Dr. Solomon: Will you explain what causes AIDS and what can be done about it? Is there any kind of a test to see if a person has AIDS? — Russ, Philadelphia

Dear Russ: The cause of the Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome is not known. However, it is possible for members of certain groups that are known to be at high risk to take precautions. For example, homosexual men may lessen their risk by limiting the number of sexual partners they have, and intravenous drug abusers can enter drug treatment programs.

Once the cause of AIDS is determined, it may be possible to devise a test to screen patients for the disease or to diagnose people with the disease.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Why aren't newborn infants screened for such diseases as Tay-Sachs? You often write that the earlier a condition is diagnosed, the earlier treatment can begin, and this makes sense. — Ann, NYC

Dear Ann: Dr. Lewis Waber, of the Johns Hopkins University School of Medcine in Baltimore, points out that screening newborn infants for such diseases as Tay-Sachs is not feasible since there is no treatment for it. Screening for other conditions might not be appropriate if the infant would die before the results of the screening became available.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I would like to address a question/answer that appeared in your recent column. The subject was a boy in the first grade who had poor motor coordination, which was affecting his ability to learn.

As the director of a clinic providing diagnostic testing and remedial therapy for learning disabled children and adults, I must commend the teacher who recognized the relationship between motor skills and academic achievement. Unfortunately, most educators are unaware of the connection and usually overlook, misdiagnose or mistreat learning deficiencies. Special education programs usually serve severely physically and emotionally handicapped children and overlook the bright children who are not achieving at their expected levels. Most schools (public and private) do not have adequate programs to address this type of learning disabled child.

Although a pediatrician should be able to provide a diagnosis of a child's physical health, comprehensive, multi-disciplinary testing is called for to ascertain specific learning disabilities and to provide an effective treatment program. Fortunately, in recent years there have been tremendous advances in therapy for learning disabilities (e.g., interneurosensory therapy) and there are a growing number of private organizations who are meeting the special needs of this large population.

Learing disabilities can originate from a variety of sources and the symptomology is even more varied. Since these deficiences have such an extensive and pervasive impact in the life-long history of competence, performance and happiness of a person, my advice to the parent or teacher who has uncertainty or concern for a child not performing optimally is "check it out with a professional in the field." — Dr. Edward C. Wortz, Glendale, California

For Stacey, The Bronx, New York: Individuals who abuse drugs will generally develop a tolerance to the drugs. That is why they require increasing amounts.

DEAR READERS: HAPPY AND HEALTHY NEW YEAR.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Splitting genes helps spot cancer in early stages

BOSTON (AP) — Splitting genes with chemical knives has given doctors a new way to spot early cases of blood cancer, a study published today shows, and a researcher says the technique may be used "within a few years" to detect other tumors.

The test uses the chemical dividers, called gene probes, to differentiate between healthy cells and cancerous ones.

"It will help us define which patients would respond better to therapy," said Dr. Ajay Bakhshi, one of the researchers.

In some forms of blood cancers, the body churns out genetically identical copies of runaway blood cells. The new diagnostic tool pinpoints cells with look-alike genes so doctors will know that they are cancerous.

The goal is to detect cancer early and diagnose it accurately so physicians can pick the best treatment for the patient.

The work, directed by Dr. Andrew Arnold at the National Cancer Institute, was published in today's New England Journal of Medicine.

So far, the experts have used the technique to diagnose 10 difficult cases in which doctors suspected that patients suffered from a kind of blood cancer called lymphoma.

Blood cancers sometimes strike a form of white cell called B cells. These cells are essential to warding off disease because they make antibodies that destroy such foreign invaders as bacteria and viruses.

Healthy people have many different kinds of B cells, each finely tuned to make a single antibody that attacks a different invader. The variety of antibody that the B cell makes is governed by its genes.

Every cell contains three sets of these antibody genes. They are shuffled to produce the right combination of blueprints so that the B cells will produce the particular antibodies that are needed.

When cancer strikes, however, the body turns out many identical B cells, each with the same set of genetic instructions. The new test is able to find the cancerous B cells by singling out those with identical combinations of genes.

The doctors use enzymes called gene probes to slice the genes wherever they find a particular stretch of genetic code. All B cells have these pieces of code, but in the cancerous cells the code always appears in the same spot. So when doctors cut the genes, the fragments from the cancerous cells are all the same length, while those from the healthy cells are of random lengths.

The test was able to spot malignancy even when only 5 or 10 percent of the genetic material analyzed was taken from cancerous B cells.

Other forms of cancer, such as some lung tumors, contain specific genetic defects called translocations. Part of one string of genes called a chromosome breaks off and attaches itself to another chromosome.

"There are people who believe that almost all malignancies have characteristic translocations," said Bakhshi. "I think within a few years, when we have probes for these breakpoints, we should be able to use the same technique to identify almost any malignancy."

Medical students resume studies outside Grenada

By the Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

For the 600 students of St. George's University Medical School who were airlifted from their Grenada campus last fall during the U.S. invasion, the interruption of their educations has turned out to be suprisingly short-lived.

Most of the students who left the island soon after U.S. forces landed there on Oct. 24 have been attending classes in temporary quarters provided by Long Island University in Brooklyn, N.Y., and Rutgers Medical College and St. Barnabas Medical Center in New Jersey.

And when registration for the new semester begins next week, 222 of the students will be back in refurbished Grenada classrooms. The rest will be scattered among two other campuses on nearby Barbados and St. Vincent islands, as well as at Long Island University.

Between 400 and 500 more advanced St. George's students are taking clinical clerkship training at hospitals in the northeastern part of the United States and in England.

"We are the gypsies of medical education," Chancellor Charles R. Modica said in a telephone interview from the school's Bayshore, N.Y., headquarters.

The fact that the St. George's students are still receiving their instruction, however, is a remarkable tribute to the persistence of parents, faculty and friends — along with the help of influential politicians — that has been a trademark of the school during its seven years.

St. George's was established to handle students unable to enter U.S. medical schools and has continued to draw students despite the strong feeling of many U.S. medical experts that too many doctors are being trained for practice in this country.

About 1,000 of its 1,200 students are Americans; about 30 percent have a parent who is a physician. About half of the American students come from New York and New Jersey, with a smattering from other states, including about 120 from California.

Unlike some other Caribbean medical schools, St. George's has established a good reputation for academic excellence. It ranks second among all foreign medical schools in pass-rate of the exam that all foreign-trained students must hurdle before they can practice in the United States.

Raiders run wild against Steelers, 38-10

Allen's rushing shreds Steel Curtain

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Coach Tom Flores of the Los Angeles Raiders said he wasn't worried so much about the Pittsburgh offense as he was about his own. As it turned out Sunday, the Steelers sputtered from start to finish while the Raiders — Marcus Allen in particular — ran wild.

"We played as well today as we've played in a long time," Flores said after the Raiders roared past Pittsburgh 38-10 and into next Sunday's American Conference championship game against the surprising Seattle Seahawks, the final step before the Super Bowl.

"I thought we could do a pretty good job defensively," Flores said. "I was glad we were able to score so many points. I was concerned about how we would do against their defense."

It was the Raiders' defense, namely cornerback Lester Hayes, which got LA started, jolting Pittsburgh with an early interception for a touchdown, before Allen made two dazzling touchdown runs.

Hayes picked off a pass by Cliff Stoudt, starting once again in place of injured Terry Bradshaw, and ran it 18 yards for a TD with 5:31 left in the first quarter, wiping out Pittsburgh's 3-0 lead.

"It was a zone pass coverage," Hayes said. "Stoudt never saw me. He was expecting man-to-man coverage, probably. The touchdown was inevitable.

"The last time I scored was a playoff game against Houston in 1980. It seems as though I play my best ball during the playoffs."

Allen, who gained 121 yards on 13 carries, scored on runs of 4 and 49 yards, the first a soaring dive over the line in the second period, the next a sprint through a mammoth hole in the line in the third. In each case, a block by Frank Hawkins sprung Allen loose.

"It's a great way to start the new year," Allen said. But he cautioned: "We have a game next week, so we can't get too overjoyed."

His TDs, along with Chris Bahr's 45-yard field goal just before halftime and scoring runs of 9 yards by Kenny King and 2 yards by Hawkins in the third quarter enabled the Raiders to easily withstand Stoudt's 58-yard scoring bomb to John Stallworth in the period.

THERE HAD been speculation that Coach Chuck Noll of the Steelers might turn to Bradshaw to inspire the Steelers — but Noll said tersely: "My quarterback all week was Stoudt."

The victory by the Raiders, 12-4, and the AFC Western division champion, sends them into the conference title game against wild-card survivor Seattle, 9-7, which beat Los Angeles twice during the season. The Seahawks upset Miami 27-20 on Saturday.

Stoudt's first pass of the game was a 44-yard heave to Wayne Capers to the LA 20-yard line. Pittsburgh got to the Raiders' 1, but when nose tackle Dave Stalls stopped Frank Pollard within inches of the goal line on third down, the Steelers settled for Gary Anderson's 17-yard field goal.

With Allen scampering every which way and Jim Plunkett pouring passes into the Pittsburgh secondary — he finished with completions on 21 of 34 attempts for 232 yards — Los Angeles ran up the next 31 points before Stallworth made his 10th postseason touchdown catch. That one tied the National Football League record set by the Raiders' Fred Biletnikoff.

Stoudt, sacked five times by the Raiders, completed 10 of 20 passes for 187 yards and the one big interception before Mark Malone took over midway in the final quarter. Plunkett sat out the final four minutes.

Stoudt also was the Steelers' leading rusher with 50 yards on nine carries.

DESPITE apparent lethargy by ticket buyers earlier in the week, every one of the 92,434 seats in the Memorial Coliseum was sold by kickoff. The turnstile count of 90,334 set an NFL playoff record, surpassing the 90,038 the Raiders and New York Jets attracted here a year ago.

The crowd also was the fourth-largest for a postseason NFL game, exceeded only by three Super Bowl games in the Rose Bowl, each of which drew more than 103,000 fans.

Stoudt's first pass was the 44-yard bomb along the right sideline. The second one blew up in his face — the interception by Hayes, who had been beaten by Capers on first pass. This time, as Stoudt lofted his pass toward Calvin Sweeney along the left line, Hayes timed it, stepped in front of the receiver and carried the ball aloft in triumph into the end zone.

A Pittsburgh punt just before the end of the first period began the Raiders' next scoring drive of 80 yards in nine plays.

Allen began it with a 13-yard run and kept it going with a 17-yard catch to the Steelers' 39. On the next play, Plunkett threw a 5-yard flip to Cliff Branch on the left side and he spun away from cornerback Mel Blount and picked up 20 more yards to the 14.

Three plays after that, Allen took the ball and, with one enormous stride, sailed over the tangle of bodies at the scrimmage line, tumbling into the end zone for a 14-3 lead 3:27 into the second quarter.

With 1:38 to go in the half, the Steelers had the ball at their 12-yard line but had it for only 35 seconds and punted to the Raiders' 30. LA used all but six of the remaining 63 seconds setting up Bahr's field goal, the big plays Allen's 21-yard run on a draw play and Plunkett's 17-yard pass to Branch.

THE RAIDERS took the second-half kickoff and promptly widened their lead to 24-3. First, Plunkett completed passes of 18 and 13 yards to Todd Christensen and 14 and 11 yards to Malcolm Barnwell. Then King took a handoff, started to his right, found himself trapped, cut back to the left behind blocks by Plunkett and tackle Bruce Davis and, carrying the ball high in his left hand like a torch, scored on a 9-yard sprint 4:55 into the third quarter.

Pittsburgh's Craig Colquitt, who had never had a punt blocked in his five-year pro career, had one deflected by Hayes midway in the period. The ball went only 9 yards to the LA 42 and, in two plays, the Raiders had another score.

District 4-5A play resumes tonight

Midland Lee, coming off a four-game tournament in Slaton, and Midland High, dormant since Dec., 22, return to District 4-5A girl's basketball action tonight against Odessa High and Odessa Permian.

The Lady Rebels, tied for first in the standings at 2-0 with San Angelo, are off to a good start toward defending the district crown they won last year with victories over Midland High and Abilene Cooper.

In the Slaton Tournament over the New Year's weekend, Lee posted a 2-2 record to up its season mark to 13-4.

Led by three-year starter Felicia Farias with a 17.3 per game scoring average, the Rebels have a three-way double digit attack to rely on when points are needed.

Tunya Mayberry, in her first year of varsity play, is No. 2 for Lee with an 11.3 average while two-year starter Stacy Harmon is chipping in 10.7 per game.

The Rebels host trouble-ridden Odessa High in the Lee Gym tonight at 8 p.m. OHS has yet to win a district contest and is only 5-12 on the year.

Lee-OHS sophomore play is scheduled for 4 p.m., followed by junior varsity at 6:15.

MIDLAND HIGH, the No. 2 team in 4-5A play last year, is currently in a four-way tie for third place with Abilene Cooper, Big Spring and Odessa Permian (tonight's 8 p.m., opponent at Odessa's Ector High Gym).

The Bulldogs rely heavily on a two-pronged attack led by two-year starters Denise Lanz with a 13.8 average and Orvetta Johnson at 11.3.

The MHS-Permian sophomore game is slated for 4 p.m., followed by JV action at 6:15.

FOR THE Midland High and Midland Lee boy's basketball teams, 4-5A play will get underway Tuesday night.

Midland High, 17-3 in pre-district play, hosts Odessa Permian, 9-5, at Midland College at 8 p.m.

Midland High has three shooters with a double-figure average led by Chris Rooker at 20.8, Darrell Davis at 11.4 and Kenneth Johnson at 10.8.

The Lee Rebels, already enjoying a vastly improved season with a 10-7 record, open their district schedule against defending 4-5A champion Odessa High, also 10-7, tonight on the Bronchos' home court.

Returning starters from the 1982-83 season Alvin Henry and Derek Westbrook pace the Rebel attack with 13.7 and 12.0 points per game respectively. Sophomore Anthony Dickens is also a scoring threat with a 10.4 average.

Redskins show no mercy: Pulverize Rams, 51-7

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Los Angeles Rams, who learned last week how far they have come, learned Sunday how far they still have to go to reach the top of the National Football League.

The Washington Redskins, unleashing the most potent offense in league history and dominating every facet of the game, trounced the Rams 51-7 in a National Conference semifinal mismatch before a soldout crowd of 55,363 at Robert F. Kennedy Stadium.

The victory set up next week's NFC Championship here against the San Francisco 49ers.

"They had better eat their Wheaties," said Rams' veteran defensive end Jack Youngblood of the 49ers' prospects. "They are in for a real fight."

Rams' Coach John Robinson, who watched his team be beaten by the Redskins 42-20 six weeks ago, has seen more than enough of the defending Super Bowl champions.

"I've had enough of them, twice is enough. I don't know how good they are but they could have beaten us today in a parking lot, on an ice skating rink or anywhere else," Robinson said.

The Rams, who finished the regular season at 9-7 but upset Dallas last week to advance to Sunday's game, proved no match for the 14-2 Redskins.

JOHN RIGGINS and Joe Theismann, the heroes of last year's Super Bowl championship season, led the way again Sunday as the Redskins opened a 38-7 lead at halftime.

Riggins, who would finish his day's work with 119 yards on 25 carries, scored three touchdowns in the first half and Theismann threw two more as the Redskins took a 38-7 lead into the dressing room at the half.

"We were ready to play and just jumped on them from the start," said Redskins Coach Joe Gibbs.

"We got out of the blocks early and shut down their main weapon — (Eric) Dickerson," said Redskin defensive end Todd Liebenstein.

The NFL Rookie of the Year, who gained 1,808 yards in the regular season, was held to 16 yards on 10 carries.

"I can't run through five or six people, I'm not Superman," said Dickerson. "They don't give you any holes," said the SMU grad, placing extra emphasis on the "any."

As dominating as they were, it wasn't enough for some Redskins, who have set their sights on a second Super Bowl.

"You can't be satisfied with any game. Once you're satisfied you get fat and complacement," said defensive tackle Dave Butz.

THE GAME was the most lopsided playoff game here since the Chicago Bears beat the Redskins 73-0 in the 1940 NFL championship game.

Riggins rushed for 78 yards and three touchdowns in the first half as the defending Super Bowl champions opened a 38-7 lead at intermission.

Theismann picked apart the Rams secondary, completing 18 of 23 passes for 302 yards on a cold, clear day in the nation's capital. In the first half, Theismann was near perfect, connecting on 13 of 16 passes for 250 yards, including touchdowns passes of 40 and 21 yards to Art Monk.

Dominating every phase of the game, the Redskin defense stopped the Los Angeles ground attack cold, holding Rookie of the Year Eric Dickerson to 16 yards on 10 carries.

The Redskins, who set an NFL record for scoring with 541 points during the regular season, came out firing, driving 65 yards on their first possession.

Riggins, who rushed for 100 yards for a record fifth straight playoff game, carried six times for 23 yards on the drive, picking up the final three yards behind the left side of the Redskin line for a 7-0 lead six minutes into the game.

Theismann, meanwhile, was looking for and finding wide receiver Charlie Brown. Brown, who burned the Rams for eight catches for 140 yards six weeks ago when the Redskins trounced the Rams 42-20, would finish Sunday with six catches for 171 yards, including a 48-yard reception over two Ram defenders.

Washington Redskins Larry Kubin (50) and Alvin Garrett (89) take down Los Angeles Ram wide receiver Henry Ellard during Sunday's NFC playoff game.

ON THE Redskins' initial possession, Brown beat cornerback LeRoy Irvin twice for gains of 29 and 13 yards, setting up Riggins' touchdown run.

The Redskins' second drive began at their own 48 following a 29-yard punt by the Rams John Misko.

On a third-and-10 from the Rams 40, Theismann found Monk wide open on a deep sideline pattern. Irvin, defending again in man-to-man coverage, was beaten after slipping at the line of scrimmage.

Rams quarterback Vince Ferragamo, who had thrown three touchdowns last week as the Rams upset the Dallas Cowboys 24-17 at Texas Stadium to advance to Sunday's semifinal game, went to the air to try and rally his troops.

The Redskin secondary, which had intercepted 34 passes this season, including four Ferragamo aerials in Los Angeles, was ready.

On the first play from scrimmage following Theismann's touchdown to Monk, Ferragamo was picked off by Anthony Washington.

The Redskins marched 45 yards in seven plays before Mark Moseley, the NFL scoring leader, kicked a 42-yard field goal to hike the Redskins' advantage to 17-0 with less than a minute to play in the first quarter.

The Redskins picked up where they left off in the second quarter, as Nick Giaquinto, playing for the injured Mike Nelms, returned a Misko punt 48 yards to the Rams 11. Two plays later, Riggins banged over from the 1-yard line for a 24-0 lead with 13:47 remaining in the first half.

THE RAMS finally got on the scoreboard via a Ferragamo to Preston Dennard 32-yard touchdown pass midway through the second quarter, as the visitors closed to 24-7.

Any thoughts of a comeback were quickly put to rest by Theismann, who guided the Redskins on a 76-yard drive in under two minutes.

The drive included passes of 43 and 28 yards to Brown and ended with a 21-yard scoring strike drilled to Monk, slanting in between strong safety Nolan Cromwell and linebacker Carl Ekern.

Field goals of 36 and 41 yards by Moseley upped the Redskins' lead to 44-7 at the end of three quarters.

The Redskins closed out the scoring in the final period as rookie Darrell Green intercepted a Ferragamo pass and returned it 72 yards for the score.

PGA gets off to early start

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — The long, lucrative PGA Tour gets an earlier-than-usual start Monday with the $1 million-plus Sieko-Tucson Match Play Championship.

Competition in the two-pronged event, a new addition on the tour, begins the day after New Year's with 32 matches in two brackets — seniors, and members of the regular tour. Some of the favorites in both sections, however, aren't expected at the Randolph Park Municipal Golf Course until later in the week.

It's the start of the busiest season pro golf has had. In all, there are more than 70 tournaments — 40-plus on the regular tour, 10 on the Tournament Players Series and 20-plus on the expanding seniors tour — with more than $27 million in total prize money.

The Tucson tournament is the first match-play event on the American schedule in a decade. But some liberties were taken with the format to assure that at least a few of the more prominent players would be around for the weekend.

"We worked with literally dozens of ideas," tour Commissioner Deane Beman said. "We wanted to have the match-play format, but we also wanted — for the sake of television as well as the local gallery — a format that would insure some of the leading players being in competition on the weekend."

As a result, the eight leaders from the 1983 Seiko Grand Prix points list — Fuzzy Zoeller, Hal Sutton, Tom Watson, Lanny Wadkins, Cal Peete, Tom Kite, Ben Crenshaw and Gil Morgan — won't begin play until the fifth round Saturday morning.

The next eight on that list — David Graham, Craig Stadler, Ray Floyd, Andy Bean, Fred Couples, Mark McCumber, Wayne Levi and Curtis Strange — drew first-round byes and begin play Wednesday.

The tournament is broken into two segments: The regular-tour section, with 128 players competing for $708,000 in prize money, and the seniors section, with 24 players and $306,000. First prize in each section is $100,000. Play in the two sections will be held simultaneously on the same course.

In the seniors section, Seiko Grand Prix leaders Miller Barber, Don January, Gene Littler, Billy Casper, Gay Brewer, Rod Funseth, Charles Sifford and Dan Sikes are exempt from first-round play.

The first round will be spread over two days, with 28 regular-tour and four senior-tour matches each Monday and Tuesday. Second-round play is Wednesday, with 32 regular-tour and eight senior-tour matches.

A break from competition is scheduled Thursday, which is given over to the pro-am.

Tournament play resumes Friday, with seniors quarterfinals and two rounds of regular-tour action.

Senior semifinals will be held Saturday and the finals Sunday.

The eight exempt regular-tour players — Watson, Zoeller, Sutton, Wadkins, Crenshaw, Morgan, Peete and Kite — face the eight survivors of earlier action in regular-tour fifth-round play Saturday morning. The winners of those eight matches advance to the afternoon quarterfinals.

Semifinals and the finals will be held Sunday.

Judson's Pryor named football player of year

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — Chris Pryor, record-breaking running back with Class 5A state champion Converse Judson, has been named Texas' outstanding high school football player by the Amarillo Chamber of Commerce.

Pryor is the fifth San Antonio-area player to win the award since it was established in 1962. He established a Class 5A rushing record with 2,804 yards and scored 36 touchdowns to lead the Rockets to a 15-1 record and the state title. The rushing record had belonged to Craig James of Houston Stratford.

Hawerchuk's goal lifts Jets to tie

WINNIPEG, Manitoba (AP) — Center Dale Hawerchuk's goal with 10 seconds remaining in regulation enabled the Winnipeg Jets to tie the Calgary Flames 3-3 in a National Hockey League overtime game Sunday night.

The Jets trailed 3-1 at one stage in the third period, but Morris Lukowich narrowed the deficit at 14:41 when he beat Calgary goaltender Reggie Lemelin on a 2-on-1 break with Hawerchuk.

Then, with Winnipeg netminder Doug Soetaert on the bench for an extra attacker, Hawerchuk picked up a loose puck, skated past the sprawling Lemelin and scored his 18th goal at 19:50.

Lucien DeBlois got the other goal for the Jets, his 20th, at 17:28 of the second period with the Flames holding a 2-0 lead.

Calgary, which now has two wins and three ties in five games with the Jets this season, got its goals on power plays with Hakan Loob, Eddy Beers and Allan MacInnis beating Soetaert.

"Love that Spirit!"

Victory over Miami will give Huskers first title since '71

The "Irresistible Force" meets the "Immovable Object" in tonight's Orange Bowl.

"We do have the ability to be a great momentum team. We have some people who can put numbers up there awfully quickly," said Nebraska Coach Tom Osborne as he prepared his high-powered Nebraska football team for Miami.

The undefeated and top-ranked Cornhuskers, featuring what former Notre Dame Coach Ara Parseghian calls "the most awesome offense ever assembled," can win their first national championship since 1971 by beating Miami.

But they'll have to overcome one of the nation's top defenses to do it.

While the 12-0 Cornhuskers scored a record 624 points this season, the 10-1 Hurricanes finished fourth nationally in total defense and third in scoring defense, allowing just 9.6 points per game, compared to Nebraska's average offensive output of 52 points per game.

"People have heard a lot about our offense — and we do have a good offensive team," said Osborne, "but we probably haven't played a defensive team as good as Miami."

The contest between Nebraska and fifth-ranked Miami is one of five bowl games today.

SECOND-RANKED Texas, 11-0, meets No. 7 Georgia, 9-1-1, in the Cotton Bowl; third-ranked Auburn, 10-1, meets No. 8 Michigan, 9-2, in the Sugar Bowl and No. 4 Illinois, 10-1, plays unranked UCLA, 6-4-1, in the Rose Bowl.

Monday's other bowl game, the Fiesta Bowl, involves two teams — No. 14 Ohio State, 8-3, and No. 15 Pittsburgh, 8-2-1 — without title hopes.

Nebraska ranks first nationally in scoring (52 points a game), second in total offense (546.7 yards) and first in rushing (401.7) for the third time in the last four years. The Cornhuskers are led by the explosive backfield trio of Heisman Trophy-winning tailback Mike Rozier, quarterback Turner Gill and wingback Irving Fryar.

There has been some talk that the Cornhuskers rank with the greatest teams in college football history; Osborne thinks otherwise.

"Oklahoma State pretty well took care of that for us (Nebraska won 14-10)," he said. "A national article came out and talked about us being a great football team. But we had hit five nonconference teams at the right time and that made us look better than we really were.

"I told the team that basically we were five games into the season and we hadn't played a great team yet. I told them, 'You're good, but you're not as great as the story says yet.' "

A victory in the Orange Bowl also would equal the club's finest record, the 13-0 mark the Huskers compiled in 1971, the second of two straight national championship seasons. A loss by Nebraska, however, would leave the championship door open for as many as four other teams, including Miami, all playing their traditional New Year's Day bowl games one day late because the holiday fell on Sunday.

TEXAS, OF course, had to win earlier to have any chance at all for the national title. While the Longhorns were playing for a possible national championship, the Bulldogs were trying to prove they can win a postseason game without Herschel Walker.

Georgia pulled off the unexpected by going 9-1-1 after Walker skipped his senior year for a big contract in the United States Football League.

"We aren't as good a team this year without Herschel," said Georgia Coach Vince Dooley. "But we proved that we had a senior class that was more than Herschel Walker. This was a team without a star or unusually skilled players, yet they won."

Georgia has not been so lucky in postseason games, having lost six of its last seven.

"We are having more fun this year," said Georgia fullback Barry Young. "The pressure of a national championship is not there so we are relaxed. We proved we can win in the regular season without Walker and now we want to prove we can win a bowl game without him."

AUBURN AND Michigan will be meeting on a football field for the first time.The Southeastern Conference champions are favored by four points over the Wolverines, who finished second in the Big Ten.

The game in the Louisiana Superdome marks the first Sugar Bowl appearance in Michigan's history and the second for Auburn, which lost to Oklahoma 40-22 in the 1972 New Orleans event.

"They're as good a football team as I've seen all year," said Michigan Coach Bo Schembechler of Auburn. "Not many people give us much of a chance in this ballgame. We like that. We're not shrinking violets. We're as ready as we can be."

Philadelphia's Moses Malone goes over Portland's Wayne Cooper for two of his season-high 38 points, leading the 76ers to a 115-103 victory over the Trail Blazers Sunday.

Malone cans 38 points in Sixer victory

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Moses Malone scored a season-high 38 points — 30 in the second half — as the Philadelphia 76ers broke a two-game losing streak with a 115-103 National Basketball Association victory over the Portland Trail Blazers Sunday night.

Malone and Julius Erving led a 76er charge in the third quarter, Erving scoring 13 of his 30 points, while Malone added 16 more. The 76ers outscored Portland 35-25 in the third period to stretch a 47-46 lead to 82-71.

The Blazers, now 21-13, rallied in the fourth period behind rookie Clyde Drexler and Kenny Carr, pulling to within three points of Philadelphia on three occasions.

But Philadelphia solved Portland's full-court pressure and fed Malone and Erving in the last four minutes to put the game away.

Philadelphia, now 22-7, is 3-2 in this current seven-game road swing. The 76ers had lost two straight games for the first time this season.

Malone also grabbed 17 rebounds as the 76ers outrebounded Portland 39-32.

In handing the Blazers their fourth straight loss, Philadelphia' Andrew Toney added 22 points and had 10 assists.

Mychal Thompson led the Blazers with 19 points and eight rebounds, Jim Paxson added 16 points, and Carr and Drexler scored 14 each.

It was only the second loss in 17 home games for the Blazers this year. The earlier loss was to Los Angeles. It was the first victory for the world champion 76ers over Portland since Jan. 20, 1982.

LSU beats Vandy to start SEC play

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Coach Dale Brown called it an unhappy New Year's, even though No. 9 Louisiana State University opened its Southeastern Conference season with a 73-66 victory over Vanderbilt.

"I'm disappointed," Brown said. "In spurts, we looked good, but at 7-1 I'm not happy. I'm not one darn bit happy."

Brown said LSU, which squandered a 15-point lead and had to play catch-up, seemed to be trying to "play it cool and, when you do that, you can get frozen."

College Basketball

LSU was up by 15 points at halftime, but Vanderbilt rallied behind Phil Cox and Jeff Turner for a 60-57 lead with five minutes remaining.

LSU won on two clutch field goals in the closing moments by Leonard Mitchell, who had 11 rebounds and led Tiger scorers with 18 points.Reserve Jonnie Jones' steal and layup and a field goal by Jerry Reynolds at 3:56 gave LSU the lead for keeps at 61-60.

Mitchell then followed with a rebound basket with 2:08 remaining, and with another 32 seconds later to boost the Tigers' lead to 65-60.

"The fact is that we had them by the throat — and if we didn't make those two turnovers we were in a position to win the ballgame," said Vanderbilt Coach C.M. Newton.

"I was very proud of our team's courage and poise in the second half," Newton said. "A lot of teams down by 15 points against LSU would have folded."

The Tigers scored their last eight points from the free-throw line.

Derrick Taylor added 16 points for LSU, while freshman reserve Anthony Wilson followed with a career-high 12.

Cox topped Vanderbilt, 4-5, with 20 points and Turner added 19. Turner and Cox had 30 of Vandy's 39 points scored in the second half.

In other games, Luther Burden scored a season-high 33 points to spark St. Louis to a 71-61 win over Drake. Burden popped in 10 of 21 from the field and sank 13 of 14 free throws as the Billikins handed the Bulldogs their fourth straight loss.

Tony Hampton dropped in a pair of free throws with 16 seconds left in overtime to provide the winning margin as Montana State nipped Eastern Illinois 65-64.

KC's Blue begins serving his time

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Vida Blue, who was both the Cy Young Award winner and the American League's Most Valuable Player in 1971, arrived at the Federal Correctional Institute Sunday night to begin a three-month sentence on a drug possession charge.

Blue joined former Kansas City Royals teammates Willie Wilson and Jerry Martin in the minimum security prison, where the other two began serving three-month terms last month.

"He arrived about 8 p.m." a spokeswoman said of Blue, 34, who was released by the Royals last August after posting an 0-5 record and a 6.01 earned run average.

Blue, who pleaded guilty to a charge of possessing cocaine, was caught up in a federal investigation of drug traffic in the Kansas City area, along with Wilson, Martin and Willie Aikens, who had been the Royals first baseman. Wilson, Martin, who was released by the Royals at the end of the season, and Aikens, pleaded guilty to charges of attempting to possess cocaine.

Aikens, who is involved in a drug rehabilitation program and was traded to the Toronto Blue Jays after the season, is due to begin serving his three-month term Thursday. He, Wilson and Martin were suspended for one year without pay by Commissioner Bowie Kuhn, though each will have his case reviewed in mid-May for possible reinstatement.

Kuhn has delayed action against Blue pending a completion of the federal investigation.

Blue's 24-8 record with the Oakland A's in 1971 gave him a rare distinction of winning the league's top two awards that year. The lefthander also won 20 games in 1973 and 22 in 1975, pitched in three World Series and four All Star Games.

"Turns out, the telephone I've got in my home comes with some mighty attractive options. Not the least of which is to keep it right here where it is. I can continue to lease my phone from AT&T, or I can buy it.

New Atari chairman says he's optimistic

By The Los Angeles Times—
Washington Post News Service

SUNNYVALE, Calif. — James J. Morgan, the new chairman and chief executive officer of Atari, says that he's an optimist. Industry observers from Silicon Valley to Wall Street are trying to figure out why.

Less than five years ago Atari was the fastest-growing company in the history of American business.

Launching and riding the videogames boom, the Warner Communications subsidiary exploded from a multimillion dollar venture into a multibillion dollar behemoth that swaggered across the market like a monopolist.

Everything the company made, it sold. PacMan became as ubiquitous as Mickey Mouse. In 1982, Atari's biggest year, the company earned over $320 million profit on slightly more than $2 billion in sales.

Then all those profits vanished.

Battling in a newly competitive market, burdened with huge inventories and a victim of its own shortsighted and self-indulgent management practices, Atari took a meteoric dive into red ink.

In the first nine months of this year the company reported losses of over $535 million and teetered at the edge of survival. Then-chairman Ray Kassar "resigned," and the highly regarded Morgan was wooed away from a top marketing post at Philip Morris to take command.

The idea was that Atari needed someone who could bring stability to a haphazard management structure and, just as important, give the company a coherent mission.

Since September, Morgan has been balancing the company's short-term survival needs with its long-term strategic direction. He emphatically denies all reports that Atari will be sold and insists that though the company is practicing radical financial surgery, it's doing so only to position better itself for the future.

Last year Atari laid off more than a third of its 10,000 employees, slashed project budgets and deferred or eliminated new-product introductions. Much of the cost-cutting was done before Morgan's arrival, but he does not rule out future layoffs.

"We've taken 40 percent of the overhead out of this company, and we're the better for it," says Morgan, who had never been in a corporate turnaround situation. "That's over $100 million in overhead costs. Expenditure reduction — I really do think that's the main issue short-term. The company will get the benefits of the cost reductions next year."

"It's inexcusable for a company that sells a billion dollars worth of goods not to make a profit," he says. However, he declines to say when he thinks Atari will return to profitability.

He has dismissed all the management-consulting firms Atari had hired under previous management and, unselfconsciously using phrases like "corporate culture," Morgan insists that his top managers meet every morning at Atari's Sunnyvale headquarters before going off to their respective divisions.

He is trying to turn around a company that could once do no wrong and was widely known throughout Silicon Valley for a broad streak of corporate arrogance. He says his "No. 1 priority is to make the company reliable with a capital R. We are not going to announce any products that we aren't ready to ship."

If he's going to succeed, Morgan has to change both Atari's style and finances, do it quickly and do it in one of the most volatile industries around.

"I'd say the biggest rap on me is that I'm either too naive about the ability of this company to change or that I expect it to happen too fast," he says. "That's a reasonable assessment. If I really threw cold water on my face and said, 'OK, turkey, is that timetable realistic?', I'd have to say no."

Some employees are wary, and although they say they like Morgan personally and believe he is a savvy marketer, they are unusre of his grasp of the technology, and whether he really understands what he wants to sell.

Regardless, Morgan is pressing ahead both to educate himself in the bits and bytes of home computerdom, and to instill his brand of consumer marketing into Atari's mindset.

To force Atari's various divisions to communicate and co-operate, Morgan recently established a 10-man "product committee" to assess the profit potential of new ideas and then fund them to fruition. Despite this short-term emphasis, Morgan says he wants to maintain Atari's heavy commitment to research and development.

The man who once managed Philip Morris's giant domestic-cigarette operation (earning him the sarcastic sobriquet of 'Pack-Man' in some Atari corridors) has even defined his new company's mission: "We're in the business of enhancing people's lives through interactive electronics," he says.

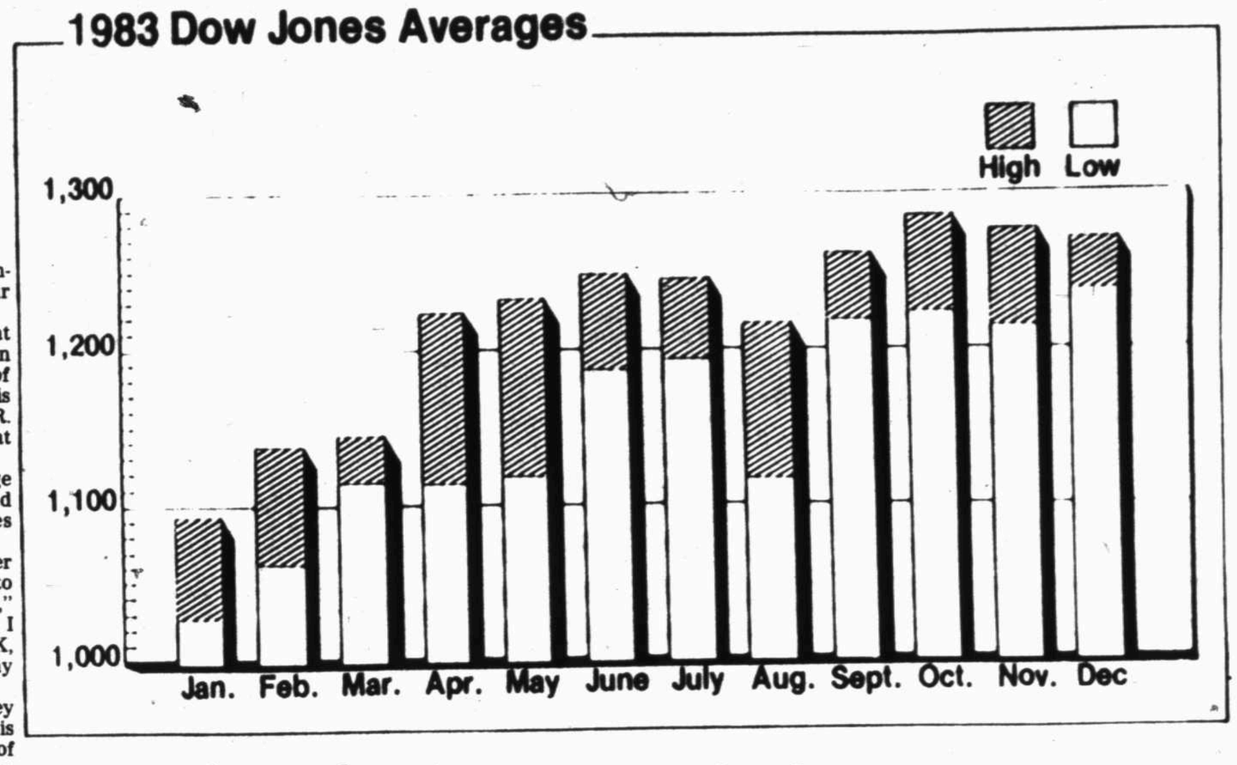
Though that may be Atari's new mission, the current reality is that the overwhelming majority of the company's revenues come from its non-home-computer games consoles and video-game cartridges.

That market may simply no longer be there in significant volume. Analysts contend that the video-games-cartridge craze is over, and so is Atari's brief reign at the top.

The consensus is that home computers have taken over, and that all the Alan Alda television advertisements in the world won't make Atari a major force in that market.

"They bring nothing to the table anymore," says Lee Isgur, an analyst with Paine Webber.

"The cynics about this industry are talking more than they're thinking," says Morgan. "The basic issue facing the video-games industry today — the absolutely essential issue — is the same issue that faced the movie and record business."



New banking commissioner wants profitable state-chartered banks

AUSTIN — Recently appointed banking commissioner, James L. Sexton has been given a green light by the banking section of the state Finance Commission for changes intended to help state-chartered banks remain competitive and profitable.

Sexton has said he hopes to eliminate unnecessary and duplicative regulatory requirements, and allow banks to expand into new areas, where they may make money without endangering depositors' funds.

That approach is getting the support of banking section members, who have approved Sexton's plans to end the department of banking's practice of annual approval of reserve agents and "call reports" which duplicate requirements by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

Those changes will save an estimated $150,000 annually in administrative costs which Sexton says is a relatively small amount, but which indicates the department's direction.

Sexton, who was named to the commissioner's post in October, also plans to have the department take a more active role in the examination of bank holding companies — a power which the department has but hasn't exercised to any extent in past years.

Section members agreed that with increased use of the holding company structure, and growth of holding companies, additional supervision at that level may be required.

Section members also indicated they plan to be more active than in the past in setting policy for the department — with an overriding concern being preservation of the dual state/federal banking system in Texas.

One area coming in for attention by the section is the growth of loan production offices in Texas — which the section will consider at future meetings.

Concern was expressed that such offices are being used by both Texas and out-of-state banks to avoid the prohibition in the Texas constitution against banks doing business in more than one place.

That prohibition, Sexton said, may be avoided if the offices are set up through a holding company.

Gerald Smith, Houston, section member, argued use of such offices is "another party issue" for state and national banks.

The section also approved changes in the form of examinations for state banks, and indicated interests in seeking legislation allowing the banking commissioner to determine how frequently banks should be examined.

Members also discussed — but took no position on — the question of real estate development powers for state banks. That was proposed during the regular session of the 1983 Legislature, but drew strong opposition from some real estate interests.

Supermarket prices rose in December

By The Associated Press

The old year went out with a round of price increases at the supermarket, but decreases earlier in the year made 1983 a winner for consumers at the grocery.

An Associated Press marketbasket survey shows the average cost of a randomly selected list of 14 food and non-food items was almost 1 percent lower at the start of 1984 than it was a year earlier, despite a price boost of more than 1 percent in December.

Meats were a key reason for both the ups and downs. They decreased in price early in the year because of poor demand due to the recession, but they have started to rise because of the summer drought and the recent cold.

The items in the AP survey were first priced in one supermarket in each of 13 cities on March 1, 1973. Prices have been rechecked on or about the start of each succeeding month. The findings are not seasonally adjusted. Nor are they weighted to reflect what portion of actual family spending each item represents.

Among the highlights of the latest survey:

—The marketbasket bill went up during December at the checklist store in eight cities, rising an average of 3.3 percent. The bill went down in five cities, dropping an average of 2.1 percent. Overall, the marketbasket bills rose an average of 1.2 percent last month, the biggest rise since a 1.3 percent jump in May 1982.

December was the second month in a row of rising prices. The marketbasket bill went up in the checklist store in nine cities during November and down in four, for an overall rise of eight-tenths of 1 percent.

—Comparing prices today with those at the start of the year, the AP found that the marketbasket bill was up at the checklist store in six cities, down in six cities and unchanged in one, for an over-all decrease of nine-tenths of 1 percent during 1983. That compared with a 2.9 percent average increase in the marketbasket bills in 1982.

—Meats led the list of items rising in price in December, but they also were a major factor in the 12-month decline. Meats accounted for one-fifth of the items on the AP checklist; they represented two-fifths of the December increases. The price of pork chops went up at the checklist store in eight cities last month; chopped chuck was up in seven cities.

At the same time, however, the average price of a pound of pork chops dropped from $2.61 to $2.43 from the start of 1983 to the start of 1984 and the price of a pound of chopped chuck rose only a penny — from $1.82 to $1.83 — in the same period.

—The dairy counter held bad news for bargain hunters looking for an alternative to meat. Eggs, which usually go up in price during the winter, followed the pattern. The price of eggs was up at the checklist store in seven cities during December.

The weather is to blame for many of the price increases. The summer drought destroyed the corn crop and pushed up feed prices for cattle, hogs and poultry. Egg and chicken prices rose. Some pork and beef producers sold their livestock rather than paying the higher prices, causing a temporary increase in supply and bargains for meat shoppers. That left fewer animals to come to market later, however, and paved the way for price boosts that are expected to continue through next spring. The December freeze also cut supplies of meat coming to market, putting further upward pressure on prices.

A look at the overall number of items in the AP survey showed fewer increases during December than November. During December, 24.7 percent of the items increased, 22 percent decreased, 46.2 percent were unchanged and 7.1 percent were not available.

During November, 29.1 percent of the items increased, 19.2 percent decreased, 45.6 percent were unchanged and 6.1 percent were unavailable.

The day of the week on which the price check was made for the AP survey varied according to the month. Standard brands and sizes or comparable substitutes were used, and items not available on one of the survey dates being compared were not counted in the totals.

The AP did not try to compare actual prices from city to city — to say, for example, that eggs were more expensive in one place than another. The only comparisons made were in terms of percentages.

The items on the AP checklist are: chopped chuck, pork chops, frozen orange juice concentrate, coffee, paper towels, butter, medium white eggs, peanut butter, fabric softener, laundry detergent, tomato sauce, whole milk, all-beef frankfurters and granulated sugar. A 15th item, chocolate chip cookies, was originally included in the survey, but was dropped when the manufacturer discontinued the package size used as a check.

The cities in the survey are: Albuquerque, N.M.; Atlanta, Boston, Chicago, Dallas, Detroit, Los Angeles, Miami, New York, Philadelphia, Providence, R.I.; Salt Lake City and Seattle.

GM weighing major consolidation

By The Los Angeles Times—
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — General Motors Corp. is reported planning to consolidate its five car divisions into two groups for large and small cars.

GM's board of directors is expected to vote on the proposed major reorganization of the nation's largest auto-maker at a meeting Jan. 9, according to reports in Automotive News and other car-industry trade publications.

GM officials would neither confirm nor deny the report.

However, in recent interviews with The Washington Post, some GM officials acknowledged that the company has been studying ways to eliminate the proliferation of look-alike cars rolling out of GM's Chevrolet, Buick, Pontiac and Oldsmobile divisions and, in one case, out of the company's Cadillac group.

Consolidation of divisions into basic product groups would be one way to improve product differentiation, said the officials, who emphasized that consolidation is by no means certain.

The reported reorganization would put the Cadillac, Oldsmobile and Buick divisions — which produce GM's most expensive models — into the large-car group. Small cars would be manufactured by the company's Chevrolet and Pontiac divisions.

Approval of that consolidation plan would mean that Buick, Oldsmobile and Cadillac would lose their sub-compact and compact J- and X-body cars.

That would eliminate some consternation for Chevrolet dealers who, for example, have seen some of their J-body Chevrolet Cavalier sales go out the door to Cadillac dealers who sell the same car under the Cimarron nameplate.

Likewise, the change would do away with big-car competition between Buick and Chevrolet dealers who have been trying to convince consumers that there really is a significant difference between a Buick LeSabre and a Chevrolet Caprice.

Marketing and administration responsibilities currently handled by each of the five divisions would be transferred to the heads of the large- and small-car groups.

GM already is moving toward building up the Chevrolet division as its overall small-car leader. The company is planning to build small cars with Toyota Motor Corp. in a joint venture based in Fremont, Calif., and it is also planning to import nearly 300,000 small cars annually from Isuzu and Suzuki.

Dollar up in first trading of 1984

LONDON (AP) — The dollar made marginal gains against a handful of European currencies today in the first trading session of 1984.

But most key financial markets, including Zurich, London and Paris, remained closed for the New Year holiday.

The London and Zurich gold markets were also closed.

Dealers in Frankfurt, the only major financial center open in Europe today, reported little news to influence the U.S. currency.

They said the only new factor was a $1.6 billion rise in the U.S. money supply for the week ended Dec. 21. Financial circles had expected a drop of about 1 billion dollars.

The military coup in oil-producing Nigeria gave sterling a boost against the dollar. Although the London market was closed, the British pound opened in Frankfurt at around $1.45.

It cost $1.4510 to buy one British pound in London last Friday.

The Tokyo market was also closed. But the dollar was quoted in Frankfurt at 231.65 yen against Friday's close of 232.00 yen in Tokyo.

Also in Frankfurt, the dollar was pegged at 2.18 Swiss francs, a slight gain over Friday's closer of 2.1795 Swiss francs in Zurich.

NFPA's 'test kitchen' is helping to improve quality

By The Los Angeles Times—
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — On the third floor of the modern office building on the corner of 14th Street and New York Avenue here, the desks are gone. Instead of letters being typed, cans are being torn apart, vitamins are getting filtered through soup samples and ketchup droplets are being examined under microscopes. This is the "test kitchen" of the packaged set, the new downtown laboratory of the National Food Processors Association.

At the same time that fresh-and-simple is gaining momentum, 60 billion containers of food are still being processed each year. The members of the NFPA have spent more than $3 million to outfit their new lab, in which about 40 chemists and microbiologists will be doing what they can to help the industry maintain, or improve upon, that position. The association represents more than 600 members — manufacturers of processed fruits, vegetables, fish and meat that come in jars, cans, pouches, boxes. Del Monte, Libby's, Hunt-Wesson, Pillsbury, to name a few.

A major function of the lab is fact-finding and double-checking when a member company "wants a lab to back up their research," said Harry Mussman, NFPA executive vice president. (Example: The State of Nebraska food and drug office questioned the thiamine content on the label of canned carrots and the affected company asked NFPA to analyze the product.) The association only provides the statistics; the companies determine the course of action.

ALTHOUGH NFPA has maintained scientific facilities since 1913, the new set-up, says the association, "will enable the association to expand significantly its research capabilities." So besides doing work for member companies, the lab is equipped for full-scale research operations. (Nutrient profiles of bananas and heat resistance of spoilage organisms in mushrooms are two past topics.)

Mussman, who estimates that between 50 and 100 members are in touch with the lab during any given week, said that the laboratory "is looked upon by different members in different ways." Larger companies with labs of their own will use NFPA's facilities for corroboration or validation; smaller firms who don't maintain in-house labs may rely entirely on NFPA for fact finding.

In addition, USDA subcontracts to NFPA for various nutrient studies, among them statistics for the agency's "Handbook 8" publication.

NFPA also may work in conjunction with the FDA in the case of recalls. NFPA sent microbiologists to Alaska and Europe in 1982 to determine the cause and extent of canned salmon contamination; about 60 million containers were eventually recalled.

"IT IS ONE of the few trade associations that has a solid scientific capability," said FDA spokesman Jim Greene.

Spanning an entire 10,000-square-foot floor, the lab includes equipment to measure pesticide residues and space for a soon-to-be installed electron microscope that can magnify an object (container corrosion, for instance) up to 100,000 times.

There's also a small room with a couple of computers programmed with government food processing specifications (in the midst of processing 3,000 cans of green beans, a canning company's power is short circuited. Are the beans spoiled? Can they be reprocessed? The company calls NFPA, which enters into the computer data such as the size of the can, the machinery that was used, the temperature at which it was processed and the amount of time the electricity malfunctioned. The computer prints out a solution).

IT'S LATE ON a Monday morning and with its test tubes and bunsen burners, the chemistry laboratory looks like an alchemist's studio. Only the potion this time is cream-style canned corn. After receiving five consumer complaints of an off taste and smell, the corn company sent samples to the NFPA. Swishing back and forth in a bulbous test tube, the corn will undergo gas chromatography in the hopes of identifying the suspected contaminant.

Past the creamed corn, in the vitamin room, piles of canned soup sit in little plastic packets identified only by number and generic title, not company. Clad in white chemist coat and goggles, technician Nancy Tomasevich is running a vitamin analysis, measuring the amount of carotene in each sample.

With a collection of funnels and filters, Tomasevich first extracts the pigment out of a reddish sample (tomato soup?) using the solvent acetone. Then she passes it through a separatory funnel, and after using a series of other solvents, finally pours the pigment through a column. Out comes the carotene.

"Food Must Not Be Stored In This Refrigerator," warns the sign on the icebox in the microbiology lab; this is not for mid-afternoon snacks. Along another wall of the lab are clear-paned incubators with stacks of petri dishes filled with colored solutions (red, green, yellow) that look like stacks of Jell-O waiting to gel. These are media, in which bacteria will grow, if present. Sitting on one refrigerator rack are plastic Baggie-size packages of chocolate milk, spaghetti sauce and ketchup. Companies send in food samples returned by consumers, and the lab examines them for indications of food poisoning or foreign objects, often feeding them to test animals.

LAB CHIEF Dane Bernard makes out lab reports and sends the samples and the test results back to the requesting company. If the results do not show contamination, Bernard checks off the lab report's space next to Human Feeding Test (HFT), which simply means that he tasted it, "just to say it was eaten."

NFPA may also submit evidence in court when a claim is made against a member company. According to spokesman Roger Coleman, the association has acted as expert witness in 19 cases of alleged food poisoning this year. All the cases were ruled in favor of the processors, said Coleman.

In the next room, the general microbiology area, according to Bernard, the lab deals with "problems like cans looking like footballs," spoilage analysis or container problems. NFPA also acts as a referee between suppliers and member companies, checking to see if the suppliers' raw ingredients, such as sugar or spices, meet in-house standards. In the case of sugar, for instance, requirements would be granular size or uniformity of crystals.

IN MICROBIOLOGY'S isolation lab, there are pathogens locked in refrigerators. It is in this carefully controlled environment that Bernard and his group perform thermal death time studies — determining how long, and at what temperature, it takes to destroy certain organisms. If the canner is packing peas, for instance, said Bernard, the staff may be trying to determine times and temperatures for destroying botulinum.

In a one-pound can, there are 60 square inches of steel, NFPA knows not only that, but the measurements of any given part of a can. In the facility's container-testing laboratory, technicians use a standard formula for tearing down cans, and then analyze them with the use of a profile projector, a machine that projects a magnified image of the can's seams or top onto a screen. It measures the angles and distances from one part of the can to another, and indicates if the metal has been formed properly, if it's too thick or too thin.

The lab tears down an average of 8 to 10 containers a day, trying to ascertain if the can was the culprit in allegations of spoilage, for instance. A recent tear down involved a canned vegetable in brine that had corroded in storage. Was it the seam, or the inner structure of the container? If a leak is suspected, a compressing machine may be used to force helium through any free membranes.

NFPA ALSO TESTS for lead content in cans (the association recently did a retail market survey that showed that since 1974, the average lead level in 14 products declined 52.5 percent, from 0.4 ppm to 0.19 ppm), and is acting as consultant to companies interested in aseptic packaging.

Back in the executive offices above the labs, Mussman is talking about the food processors' past. In the '70s said Mussman, there was a "reluctance on the part of the industry" to get involved. The industry attitude was "don't tell us about the problems, they'll go away," Mussman said. While Mussman said later that there still is a "residual" hesitation for individual companies to "be all that visible," he said the industry has "an obligation to the consumer to face up to what's in the food."

Loffland Brothers Co. sets record

TULSA — Loffland Brothers Co. reports setting another world record. This time, Loffland has set a record for holding the longest, continuous contract with one company for drilling oil wells on land: 15 years.

Loffland Brothers was contracted by Caltex Pacific Indonesia (CPI), in 1968 to drill in Sumatra, Indonesia. Rigs 56 and 139 began drilling that same year.

Rig 300 joined Rigs 56 and 139 in 1971. By June of 1983, the three rigs had drilled 4,399,463 feet in the course of completing 1,179 wells for CPI on the island of Sumatra.

New company developing robots for military usage

By The Los Angeles Times—
Washington Post News Service

DENVER — Robots have found their niche in the factory, and some are trying to help out around the house. But a local company is developing a robot that could prove quite handy for another type of customer: the military.

Using sensors and riding on tracks similar to those on a tank, the "Prowler" — or Programmable Robot Observer With Logical Enemy Response — would serve as a sentry at air bases, survey front lines for the Army and search out and destroy enemy armored vehicles.

The Prowler is under development at Robot Defense Systems Inc., a small company spun off last May from Denver-based Fared Robot Systems Inc. by Fared's founder, Christy A. Peake.

ACCORDING TO documents filed in accordance with a public stock offering last month — which raised more than $3 million for the new company — a pre-production prototype of a "Basic" Prowler should be completed by March or April. The first production model robots could be ready by the end of 1984.

The company admits that there is no guaranteed market for its Prowler, but says it has spoken to the U.S. Air Force and the Israeli government about possible sales.

And while the idea of "killer" robots may seem farfetched, battlefield robotics is a hot topic in the military.

BESIDES PERFORMING such functions as remote-control disposal of bombs, the military envisions robots capable of increasing its firepower against a numerically superior force, and extending the eyesight of dispersed commanders.

According to a recent article in Design News, U.S. military spending for robotics science and technology leaped from $17.9 million in fiscal 1982 to $27.6 million in fiscal 1983. And although the Army failed this year in an attempt to get nearly $8 million for demonstration robots, observers say the interest in such projects is as strong as ever.

"The military is quite interested in robotics, especially robotics in the field," says Ben Wellington, a vice president at Denning Mobile Robotics, a Woburn, Mass., company that is developing a $35,000 to $50,000 mobile robot to patrol banks, warehouses and other industrial locations.

RECONNAISSANCE AND sentry applications "are two of the hot areas in battlefield robots," according to Azad Madni, vice president of artificial intelligence and robotics at Perceptronics Inc., a Woodland Hills, Calif., company that does robotics work for the federal government.

And Robot Defense Systems isn't the only company with an interest in super-intelligent, mobile military robots. "Every major airframer (aerospace firm) is involved," says Madni. Wellington adds: "It's very difficult for a new company to get on the approved list" of companies that do regular business with the military.

Indeed, competition with larger and better financed companies is one of 29 items listed under "Risk Factors" in a Robot Defense Systems stock prospectus. Company officials declined to be interviewed because of the 90-day quiet period that follows registration for a public stock offering. But in the prospectus, the Basic Prowler is described as follows:

"THE BASIC PROWLER will be programmed to travel between two fixed points with random obstacles placed in the path. Onboard sensors (including digital, infrared, ultrasonic and optic sensors) will detect the obstacles and the Basic Prowler will maneuver around them.

"A movable target will demonstrate the Basic Prowler's ability to detect, track and react to an intruder. At the destination point, when the target is detected, a synthesized human voice will command the target to halt. If the target does not halt, a simulated weapon will fire at the target."

The robot would be self-controlled, and would communicate with another vehicle or other station. It would be battery-powered, the prospectus says, with eight hours of operating time, and would be covered with a lightweight, composite-based armor skin.

Standard Oil approves 1984 budget

CHICAGO — The board of directors of Standard Oil Co. (Indiana) approved the 1984 capital and exploration budget of $5.1 billion, with 73 percent of the total designated for projects in the United States.

Chairman Richard M. Morrow said that the 1984 budget is about $680 million — or 15 percent — above the estimated 1983 expenditure level. Expenditures have been flat during 1982 and 1983 at approximately $4.4 billion.

Morrow said the 1984 budget reflects increased activity in the Gulf of Mexico, where Standard spent $638 million in 1983 to acquire leases on 130 tracts. The company has 780,489 net acres under lease in the Gulf and has begun an active program to evaluate that acreage. Worldwide exploration and production will account for more than 78 percent of total spending.

Standard's ability to carry out the budgeted program is dependent upon the generation of adequate revenues, Morrow said. Important factors in 1984 will be the level of demand and the prices for natural gas, petroleum products and crude oil as well as the extent to which additional taxes may be imposed on the petroleum industry by U.S. and foreign governments and by state and local authorities.

Land Management Bureau holds sale

The Bureau of Land Management's Dec. 15 competitive oil and gas lease sale brought in a total of $1,392,700 in high bids. The sale, held in Santa Fe, New Mexico, offered 35 parcels in New Mexico and 12 parcels in Oklahoma in known geological structures. One parcel of acquired land in Oklahoma was also offered. There were 238 bids offered for the tracts.

The highest single bid was $200,000 for a 320 acre parcel in Rio Arriba County, New Mexico, submitted by Amoco Production Co. of Houston. The highest Oklahoma big was $131,185 for 86.92 acres in Dewey County by TXO Production Co. of Dallas.

The totals were:

New Mexico, 35 parcels, 6,951.51 acres, $1,242,523.23; Oklahoma, 12 parcels, 387.24 acres, $150,177.22.

The bonus bids are a one time amount offered for the lease. The lessee will also pay the govern-

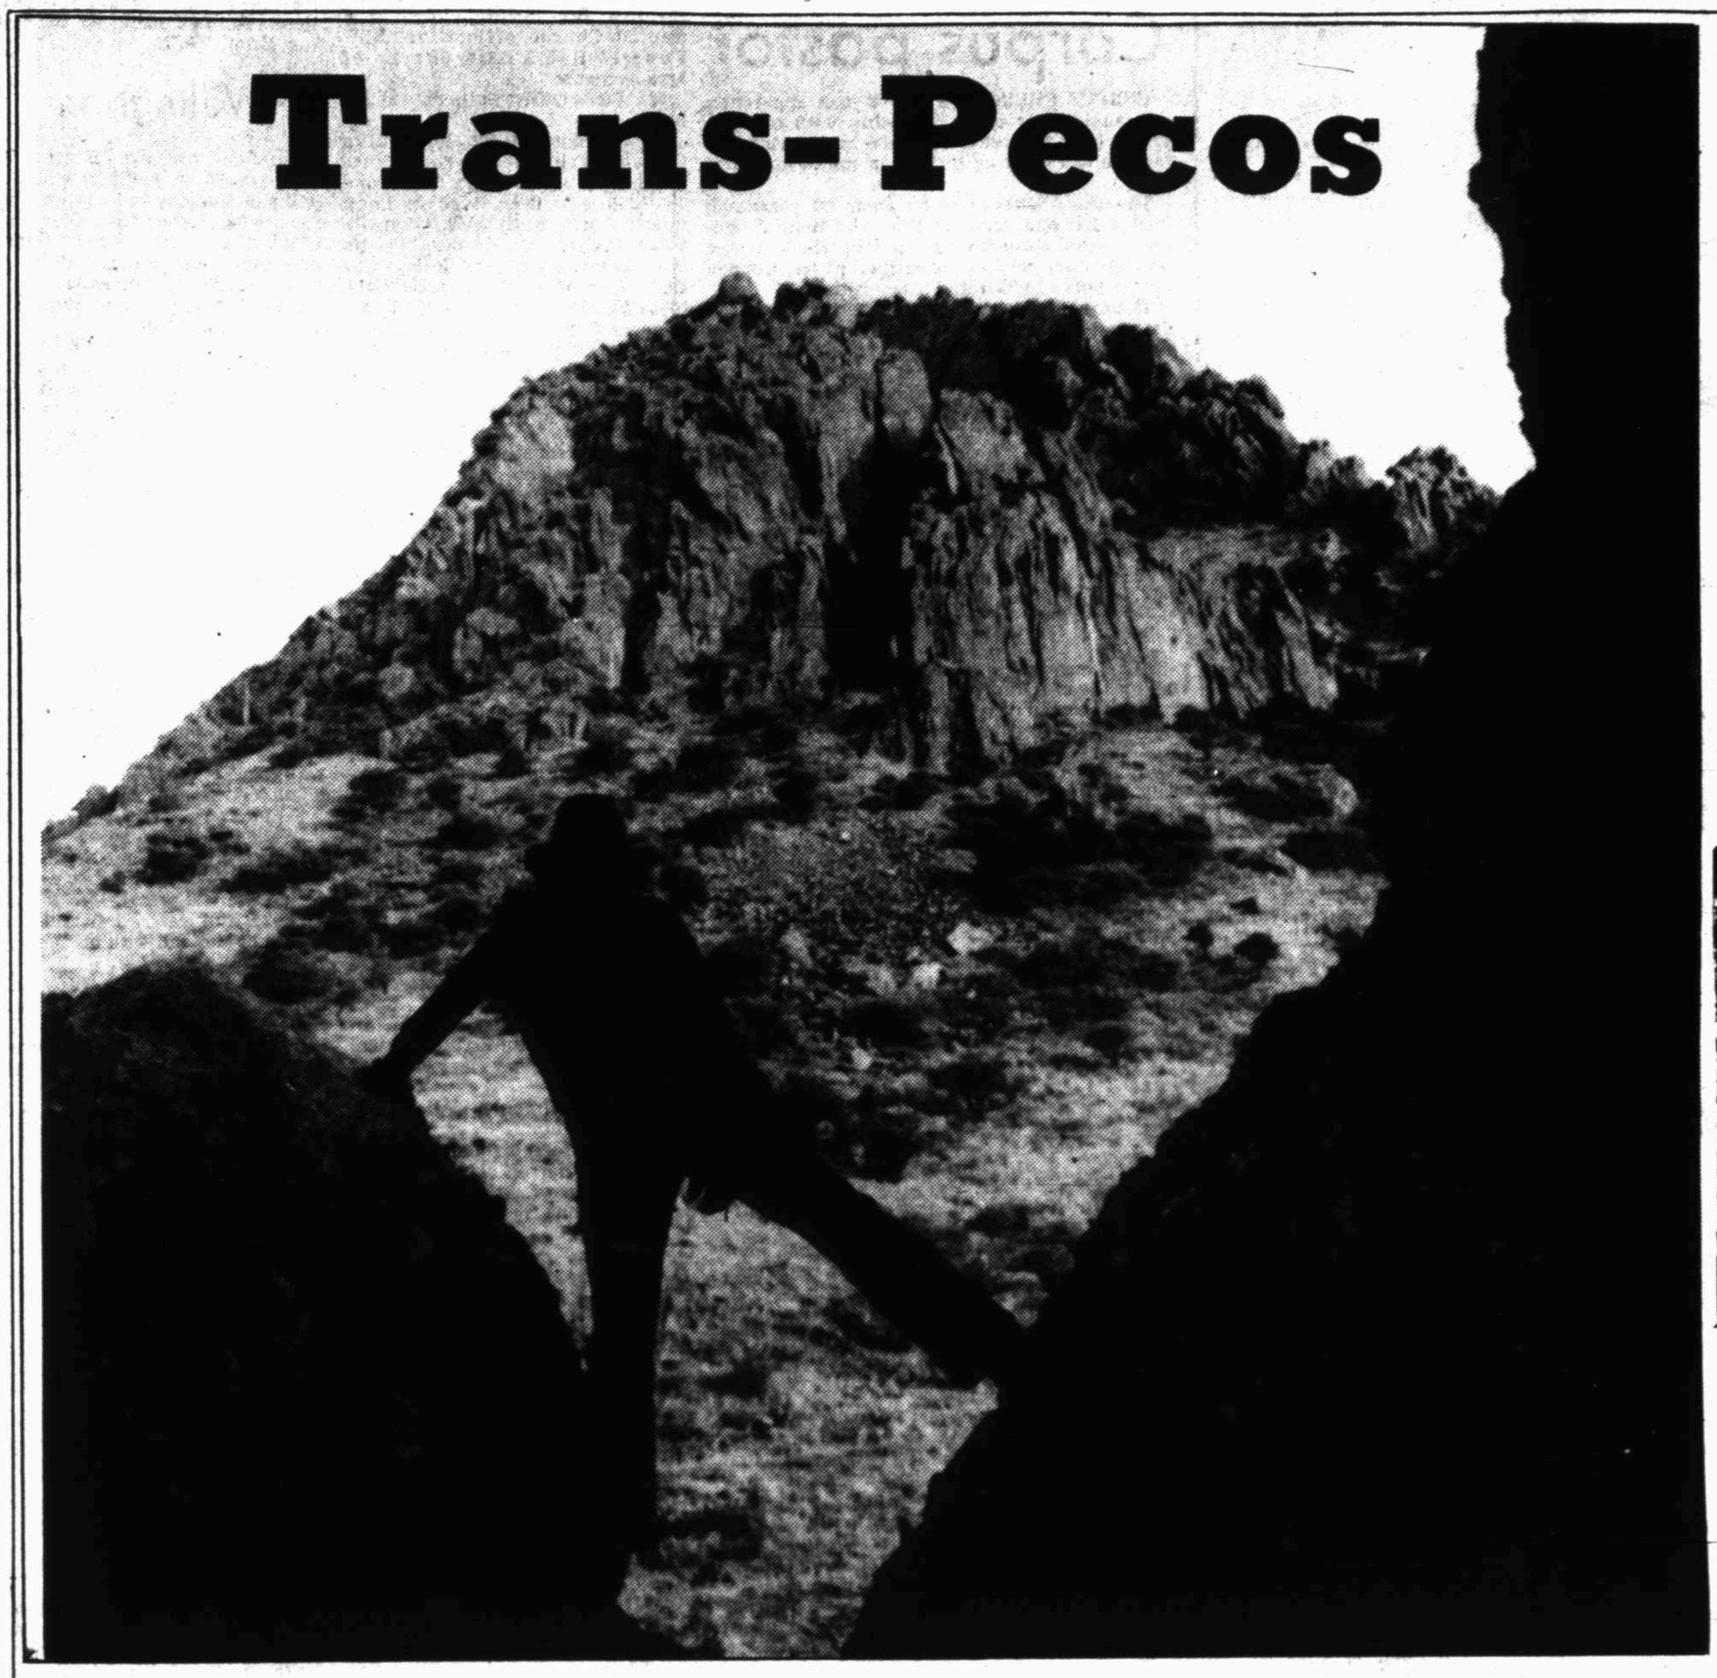
Trans-Pecos



A hiker seeks the heights of Mitre Peak, 6,100 feet of rock framed against the sky.

Paisano Pass is framed by the limbs of an oak high on a rocky peak in the Davis Mountains.

They are the places which stir man's lifeblood.

Mountains castellating cloudward. Canyons yawning wide. Deserts unfurling toward the horizon.

And civilization diminishing to but memories.

They are the hidden places of Trans-Pecos Texas, where few human feet have trodden and the Stone Age seems only a couple of days past. There, the fire of nature burns bright, warming the hands of a man who seeks and instilling within him a sense of oneness.

He may begin his odyssey by following the snaking Pecos River south from Sheffield, where earth juts skyward battlement-like and cedars hug the plateaus. There, on the ranch of David Slaughter, the bowels of the Trans-Pecos can swallow him, lead him on a quest through darkness.

IT IS known as Bat Cave, though the flying mammals no longer frequent its three massive chambers. Here in the depths of a hill, says legend, infamous western gunslinger Black Jack Ketchum hid himself and his loot., Ketchum long-since has returned to nature, the gallows of Clayton, N.M. decapitating him, but the Stygian tomb of his evil-doings remains as evidence of Biblical truth:

"Men come and go, but earth abides."

It abides as no where else in the Big Bend of the Rio Grande, a landscape so unearthly that early NASA astronauts used it for lunar exploration training. Here, Grapevine Hills are anything but similar to gentle California knolls rich in vines; they bespeak of cataclysm, upheaval, that beyond man's conception.

They are a bizarre never-never land of boulders — some upright as though sentineling the nearby Chisos Mountains, others piled like battlefield casualities. Geologists say they came as the result of molten lava flowing upward, creating a dome on the earth only to have erosion leave them exposed. But to others, they are mis-placed Easter Island monuments that conjure up "2001: A Space Odyssey" images of primitive man dancing about a monolith.

THE TEMPORAL is evidenced in the giant daggers which slash skyward in the Trans-Pecos Chihuahuan Desert. Many persons may shun them and their environs, for it is a land where the sun bakes flora and skulls alike. But to stand in the desert crags and stare up at a living thing, identifying with it and realizing that it too will die someday, is to find a beauty that reaches deep into soul.

If it is self-discovery a man seeks, he may find it in the heights of the Davis Mountains, where precipitous ridgebacks are silhouetted against billowing clouds as though they are the backbones of gargantuan behemoths. The rock outcropings stand guard over forests of ponderosa pine and pinyon, seas of green hugging canyon and slope like storm-wrought waves.

To view them from above is to feel a sense of dominion, of belonging, and, most of all, a reality of life.

Nowhere are those emotions closer to man's grasp than in the hidden places of the Trans-Pecos.

A natural portal large enough to accomodate a truck lies hidden in Grapevine Hills in Big Bend National Park.

A giant dagger is framed against the sky in the Chihuahuan Desert of Brewster County.

Man kills self after releasing Corpus pastor

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A man apparently distraught over his relationship with his girlfriend held a Seventh-Day Adventist pastor hostage before shooting himself in the head, police said.

The man, believed to be about 32 years old, died at 2:17 a.m. today at Memorial Medical Center, a hospital spokeswoman said. He had shot himself once with a .38-caliber pistol, Corpus Christi police Lt. Garland Riner said.

The man's name and address had not yet been determined because he had conflicting identification papers, authorities said.

The incident began shortly before 7 p.m. Sunday when the man went to the home of the Rev. George Morales and took him and his family hostage.

The gunman asked the pastor for help in patching up an argument with the his girlfriend, police said.

The man told Morales' family that if they called police he would kill them all, police said.

Morales's wife and her three children jumped out a window and fled to a neighbor's home across the street where they called police, said police Capt. Sonny Crisp.

Police surrounded the house and began searching for the man and Morales.

The abductor, unaware that police were outside, tried to get Morales to drive him to his girlfriend's house. They were in the garage getting ready to take Morales' car when the man spotted police, Crisp said.

"We didn't say anything but motioned for the man to get out," Crisp said, "Instead, the man turned Morales loose, went back into the house and put a gun to his head."

The man pulled the trigger once and the gun did not fire, Crisp said. The man pulled the trigger a second time with the gun still at his right temple, and the revolver fired.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

Sunset process working, director says

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Few folks outside of the state government are likely to know who Bill Wells is, or what he does.

But any state agency head can provide that information, or certainly should be able to do so.

Wells is director of the Sunset Commission, which oversees the review of state agencies for the Legislature.

The "sunset" process has been described as an attempt to see that "civil servants" remain civil and that they're truly of service to the public.

Texas legislators established the process in 1977 with the passage of SB 54, the Texas Sunset Act, which established a 12-year lifespan for 175 agencies, boards and commissions.

Those bodies must secure new legislation periodically — after review through the sunset process — or they simply go out of existence.

In 1983, the sunset process dealt with some of the major agencies of state government, including the Railroad Commission, Public Utility Commission, Board of Insurance and various financial regulatory agencies.

And at the end of the process, those agencies were approved for continued existence, after considerable wrangling and political battling.

In 1985, some other major agencies, such as the Air Control Board, Department of Water Resources and Parks and Wildlife Department, are up for consideration.

And when the process is over, no one will be surprised to see them surviving.

There was one notable casualty in the 1983 battling — The Texas Energy and Natural Resources Advisory Council, which was perhaps more a victim of legislative annoyance and tight money than the formal sunset process.

Many lawmakers felt TENRAC had become an obstruction to the operation of other agencies, and that it had engaged in empire-building far beyond the scope originally envisioned for it.

TENRAC's demise came as something of a surprise, Wells says.

But Wells also stresses that his agency isn't simply a group of scalp hunters seeking to eliminate other agencies, despite the fact that some agency officials seem to see them in that role.

"I think what happened last session, in the changes that were made to the larger agencies, proved that sunset does have an effect," Wells says.

"It goes beyond just eliminating useless agencies; it goes into correcting major program difficulties.

"I think that session also proved the fact that sunset can operate within a very political climate," Wells comments.

"Everybody's fear was that the agencies would be such a political issue that the sunset process would snarl up the session, but that didn't prove to be so."

"It was handled and managed so that everything came out with major changes accomplished."

Indeed, the Railroad Commission and Public Utility Commission were the focal points of various industry, lobby and political fighting, over such matters as deregulation of the trucking industry, and handling of utility regulation.

Insurance and financial industry interests were also much in evidence, as they watched efforts to overhaul the agencies which regulate their industries.

Wells predicts that the current round of sunset activity will probably see the number of interest groups in the process multiplied.

"The health department will pull out all the health care providers interest groups; Parks and Wildlife will pull out the environmentalist groups, sports fishermen, hunters...The Health Facilities Commission will pull out the hospital associations...I think we'll have a greater variety of groups."

Wells says he's aware that some agencies feel the Sunset Commmission attempts to force all agencies into a standard format — and that agencies feel that despite the time spent with them, the commission frequently fails to understand agencies' operations.

"We do have a standard set of recommendations that have been developed over the last seven years, that essentially present a kind of blueprint on how any state agency should deal with a certain situation," he says.

For example, he reports, the commission feels any state agency should have an "on-going process where they inform board members and employees of situations where they face potential conflict of interest" — and that's needed by any board or commission.

Wells also says that "it's probably a fair assessment" that the commission "zeroes in on programs that don't work effectively," while ignoring those which do.

But, Wells comments, "our goal is making recommendations to the Legislature on making agencies run better."

"We figure the agencies are their own good boosters — and will be able to put their programs forward."

Man refused service sets Austin restaurant on fire

AUSTIN (AP) — A man who was refused service at an Austin restaurant because he appeared drunk returned later with a can of gasoline and set the business on fire, police said.

Robert More, 22, was being held in lieu of $5,000 bond today, charged with arson in the blaze early Sunday at Harpoon Henry's restaurant. Damage was minor, and there were no injuries.

Employees told police a man came into the restaurant late Saturday, ordered a drink and put his head on the bar. The bartender refused to serve the man, and when he was asked to leave, he cursed and made an obscene gesture, police said.

About 30 minutes later, the man returned and was thrown out of the bar, police said. Before he drove away, he threw a tire iron at an employee in the parking lot.

Five minutes after that, the restaurant received a series of six threatening phone calls. The caller threatened to kill "everyone in the restaurant," police said.

At 12:40 a.m. employees noticed that the kitchen was filling up with smoke. Firefighters were called and the blaze was confined to the back porch and the kitchen door.

Arson investigators determined that the fire had been set with gasoline that had been poured on the porch and ignited. They found a gallon-sized anti-freeze container filled with gasoline.

More was arrested a short time later, police said.

Electrical short blamed for fire

An electrical short is being blamed for a fire that gutted the bedroom of a Midland home New Year's Day.

Firefighters were called to 305½ S. Benton about 2 p.m. and were able to confine the blaze. The house, owned by Dora Jones and occupied by Linda Monroe, suffered heavy damage.

Another fire broke out that evening, at 1400 Connell. A storage building owned by Allen Rollwitz suffered moderate damage. Officials believe the fire began about 9:30 p.m.

A man attempting to unfreeze his water pipes accidently caused a third New Year's Day fire. David Terrell reported a small fire at the rear of his home, 1930 English Drive, about noon. The blaze was put out before firefighters arrived.

DPS calls on drivers to slow down, sober up

By The Associated Press

State officials, saying they were hopeful that Texas' holiday traffic toll could be held below the predicted 39 for the New Years weekend, were calling on drivers to slow down and sober up as the death count reached 19.

The Department of Public Safety predicted that at least 39 people would die in accidents in Texas by midnight tonight. The death count began at 6 p.m. Friday.

"We're hopeful we can stay below the 39 estimate, but there are a lot of hours left," DPS spokesman David Wells said Sunday.

Wells said the greatest danger would be from motorists who insisted on driving too fast and drunken drivers, who face provisions of the state's tough, new DWI law calling for mandatory jail terms for repeat offenders.

The latest fatalities reported to the DPS included a two-car, head-on collision on U.S. Highway 281 in Blanco County that killed the two drivers and injured three passengers Sunday afternoon.

Dead at the scene were Luther Viron Crossley, 79, of Marble Falls, and Ysbal Anita Delao, age unknown, of Clinton, Okla. Three passengers in Ms. Delao's car were in stable condition at Brooke Army Medical Center in San Antonio, Wells said.

A 36-year-old man, Joseph Leo Paul, was struck and killed by a hit-and-run driver about 7 p.m. Sunday as he walked on the shoulder of Farm Road 160 in the Ames community of Liberty County, the DPS said.

Two members of a Dallas family were killed New Year's Day when their van was struck head-on by a pickup truck traveling on the wrong side of the road, police said. The victims were identified as Maria Ramirez, 52, and her granddaughter, Lisa Ramirez, 8.

Two Paige men who were killed in a one-vehicle rollover at 1 a.m. Sunday on Texas Highway 21, two miles north of Bastrop. The victims were identified as Arbon Mack Murphy, 42, and James Arbon Murphy, 21.

A pedestrian, identified only as Isaac LeMasters, was killed as a result of a hit-and-run accident in Pearland about 4:30 a.m. Sunday. He died of his injuries at a Perryland hospital at 9:25 a.m.

A head-on collision Sunday morning on Old Seguin Road in San Antonio claimed the life of Ralph Robert Baylor, 25, of San Antonio.

Michael Dwayne Kennedy, 34, of Crane, was killed when his car ran off Farm to Market 1901 in Pecos County about 1:15 a.m. Sunday.

A rollover accident killed 22-year-old Jose Angel Tamez, of Nixon, about 2 a.m. Sunday. The wreck took place on Texas Highway 123 about seven miles south of Seguin.

Jana Michelle Gogburn, 16, of Eastland, was killed in a rollover accident just south of Eastland on Farm to Market 2214 at 4 a.m. Sunday.

Man who passed up party helps neighbors flee fire

DALLAS (AP) — A 26-year-old man who passed up a New Year's party to stay at home and read magazines helped 15 neighbors escape a five-alarm fire that destroyed their apartments, authorities say.

Mike Darnell said he was reading a magazine on model airplanes early Sunday morning when he discovered the fire that had engulfed an apartment building next to his.

Darnell's neighbors say they are glad he passed up the party.

Kathy Thompson, 25, said it was Darnell's pounding on her door just before 7 a.m. Sunday that saved her and about 14 other neighbors from burning in their six studio apartments.

"He saved our lives," she said. "We probably wouldn't have seen 1984 if it hadn't been for his pounding and yelling."

A fire investigator, Capt. Doug Preston, said the blaze appeared to have been set. It destroyed the east building of the complex, causing $450,000 in damages and leaving the 15 residents homeless, officials said.

Darnell said he heard yelling and fighting from an apartment unit across the street from his apartment about 6:30 a.m. and a half-hour later saw smoke and flames pouring from the roofs of the adjacent apartment building.

"All I could think about were all those people asleep and not knowing what's going on," he said.

Darnell said he then picked up his cordless telphone and began dialing the fire department as he ran through smoke and flames along the corridor of the burning building and knocking on his neighbors' doors.

"People just weren't getting up," Darnell said.

Man injured in reported assault

A 22-year-old Midland man is in satisfactory condition today after a reported aggravated assault Sunday evening.

Humbarto Sanchez Aquilar told police that, during an argument, he jumped on the hood of a car when the juvenile driver drove off. He fell from the vehicle, suffered a broken ankle and was taken to Midland Memorial Hospital.

However, according to police reports, two male juveniles in the car disagreed with Aguilar's version of the 6 p.m. incident which occurred on the 1100 block of Wadley Avenue.

Crane resident killed in mishap

A Crane resident died in a one-car rollover New Year's Day.

Michael Dwayne Kennedy, 34, was southbound on Farm-to-Market Road 1901 about seven miles south of McCamey when the accident occurred at 1:15 p.m. According to Department of Public Safety reports, he lost control of the pickup, it rolled 2¼ times and he was thrown from the vehicle.

He was pronounced dead at the scene an hour later by Justice of the Peace Louise Christian and taken to Box Funeral Home in Crane.

Hunters drown trying to save dog

SAN MARCOS (AP) — A pair of rabbit hunters fell through a thin layer of ice and drowned while trying to rescue one of their dogs, authorities said.

Joseph George Williams, 26, and his cousin, Claude Ray Williams, 18, both of Stockdale, were hunting Sunday with a group of friends when one of their prized greyhounds scampered onto the ice of a frigid stock pond.

The ice under the dog gave way and the animal fell into the water, said Hays County Sheriff's deputy Ike Herrington.

"One of these boys (Joseph Williams) went out there to get his dog and he fell through the ice, too," Herrington said. "The other boy (Claude Williams) went out there to get his cousin and he drowned, too."

Frank Burleson of San Marcos, who had been hunting with the Williamses, said the two men drowned before he and other hunters could reach them.

Cold December gives way to milder January

From Wire Reports

It was the coldest December ever in at least nine Texas cities, but January got started with mild temperatures ranging from the 50s to low 70s and mostly cloudy skies.

A weak cold front was pushing slowly south over Texas this morning but pre-dawn temperatures over most of the state were above freezing and skies mostly clear.

Forecasters were predicting clear skies and temperatures in the upper 40s for today's Cotton Bowl game between Texas and Georgia in Dallas.

At 6 a.m., it was 28 at Amarillo, 31 at Dallas, 47 at Houston, 52 at San Antonio, 62 at Brownsville and 44 at El Paso.

The warmer readings continued to be welcome news in San Antonio and Amarillo, which suffered their coldest month at any time of the year in December, the National Weather Service said.

Mirrors brighten up dining space

By BARBARA HARTUNG
Copley News Service

Q. I am terribly depressed because I don't have an attractive dining room in my new condo. All I have is a dining space at the end of the living room.

Please suggest how to create a fresh atmosphere for dining in a relatively small space. — R.N.

A. Consider the use of mirrors to expand your dining area — in fact, your whole room.

Use mirror strips if you can afford to and cover the whole wall. Or if that is too much on your budget, try alternating strips and walls. Or consider the use a very large wall mirror.

Don't weight down the room with heavy draperies. Instead use fluffy sheer floor-to-ceiling curtains.

If your dining furniture is nondescript and not valuable, consider painting it a color that will blend with your living room decor. Add a particularly dramatic fabric for the tablecloth and chair cushions.

Place an attractive and lacey ficus in front of part of the mirror to enhance the reflection.

Q. I'm wanting to remodel my bathroom and I especially wanted a round window. However, I find the construction cost of converting my rectangular one into a round design is prohibitive.

I am something of a do-it-yourselfer but not that accomplished. Do you have any suggestions on a next-best solution that will give me a dramatic window? — P.C.

A. I have seen the look of a round window created by a wooden frame.

Measure a piece of lightweight plywood the size of your window. Frame the window with wood and hinge the plywood to it. Before attaching the two, cut out as large a circle as you can accommodate, considering the size of the window.

Thin horizontal venetian blinds can be used inside the wood frame to control light and privacy.

You can do all sorts of dramatic things with the frame and the blinds using a variety of colors.

Q. I'm just remodeling my kitchen and I need a dinette space.

I have some space in one unused corner of the room but it isn't quite enough for a table and chairs. I'd like to be able to seat four people.

The space is not in a place that would make it good for a breakfast bar because the space is square. What would be a good plan? — L.G.F.

A. Perhaps you have the space for a built-in banquette to provide the seating on two sides, attached to the walls. A small table to fill in the L-shape and two additional small chairs would take less space visually. Or perhaps the built-in seating could provide four places without the need for chairs.

Anger: 'Most destructive' force often also valuable tool

By MARK SAUER
Copley News Service

The police chief of Washington, D.C., watched in amazement recently as a man whose car was stuck in mud got a gun from his trunk and proceeded to shoot out the tires and windows before emptying his weapon into the vehicle's body.

"Worst case of autocide I've ever witnessed," said the chief.

"A typically American reaction," said Neil Clark Warren, a Pasadena, Calif., psychologist who has researched anger.

Warren contends that the adrenal rush known as anger is nothing more than our biological response to hurt, fear or frustration. He insists that even though anger is arguably the most destructive force known to man, it can be harnessed and used.

Anger's aftermath provides a continuous stream of grisly grist for newspapers. This fall, a San Diego father admitted shaking his 2-month-old daughter so hard that she suffered fatal injuries. A month before, a schoolteacher was ordered to stand trial after shooting her husband to death upon discovering his extramarital affair.

MASTERING ANGER is a skill, Warren said, one that can be taught but seldom is in the two-fisted land where handguns and he-men are revered; where an estimated 10 million children and 6 million women are beaten in their homes each year by those who love them most, and where some 22,000 people are murdered, 81,000 women are raped and more than one-half million people are assaulted annually.

"Contrary to popular conceptions, anger is neutral physiological energy," Warren contends. "The capacity to have anger is a magnificent piece of biological design. If we didn't have anger, we wouldn't have the energy to respond to things that cause us hurt.

"I make a big distinction between anger and aggression," he continued. "Aggression is behavior designed to bring pain to another person. But that is only one of hundreds of ways of expressing anger. It can be expressed in constructive ways."

WARREN, WHO HAS written a book entitled "Make Anger Your Ally," offered a parable about Lee Iacocca, the gritty chief of the revitalized Chrysler Corp., as an example of how a person can "get on top of anger, to manage anger instead of allowing it to manage him."

"In a commencement speech this year to graduates at the University of Michigan, Iacocca said the Wall Street Journal had asked in an editorial awhile back: 'Mr. Iacocca, why don't you let Chrysler die with dignity?' Iacocca said that really made him angry. He said he showed it to a bunch of colleagues and they got really angry, too.

"They reprinted that article for workers, union leaders, some suppliers and others and it flickered strong feelings among many of them. From that fairly insignificant point, they got together and marshaled their resources and finally were able to literally double their productivity and pay off federal loans years early."

One reason behind the violent statistics, Warren said, is the way anger is modeled by the media, especially TV and movies.

"Too often, the idea is to handle your anger immediately, usually in an explosive way with guns or knives or cars or fists or a tongue lashing. Kids watch that four or five hours a day," he said. "Now, how can we expect them to react differently when they get angry?

"While anger is the most powerful and dangerous of our emotions, no one ever is trained how to handle it," Warren said. "Society seems to assume that as you grow up, you will automatically become able to handle your anger. That isn't true, obviously.

"Anger management is a skill. Don't expect to handle your anger immediately or easily — you have to work on it, and you have to work on it before you get hot."

WARREN TEACHES that when an angry moment arrives, we should be able to relax on command.

"You need an inner sense of how it feels to be tense and how it feels to be relaxed and read our bodies. The way to regulate adrenalin — to manage your anger — is by taking deep breaths to relax and to talk to yourself in hot moments about maintaining control."

Handling anger passively is not the answer, Warren said.

"A lot of passive people have a lot of anger and it's almost always expressed ineffectively. I call the 'Casper Milquetoast' type underhanders; they don't ever say much, but they just don't cooperate. That's not taking responsibility for your anger.

"I know people who never say much, but get anger out by having affairs with their wives' best friends, others who drink too much and embarrass their spouse or boss and others who pout. All these are destructive displays of anger."

Anger can be made an ally, Warren said, by successfully answering three questions: Why am I angry? What do I want from this? How can I get what I want?

"You can almost always assume that you're angry because you've been hurt, frustrated or threatened. Why is the critical question because too often anger is misdirected at a spouse or the family dog instead of the source.

"The second question is important because too often we lose sight of what we want to get done, what we want to solve that is making us angry. We must always play toward our goals.

"The third question often takes time; a strategy must be developed."

Bowl-For-Breath event scheduled

Members of Midland's "Strike Force" to fight cystic fibrosis will hold the annual Bowl-For-Breath on Feb. 4, according to Nancy White, chairperson of the event.

"Everyone can be a winner," said Ms. White, "because the awards are based on the number of sponsors participants sign up rather than point scores."

Each bowler must complete three games as his or her part of the nationwide event which has become a major source of funding for research to control and find a cure for CF.

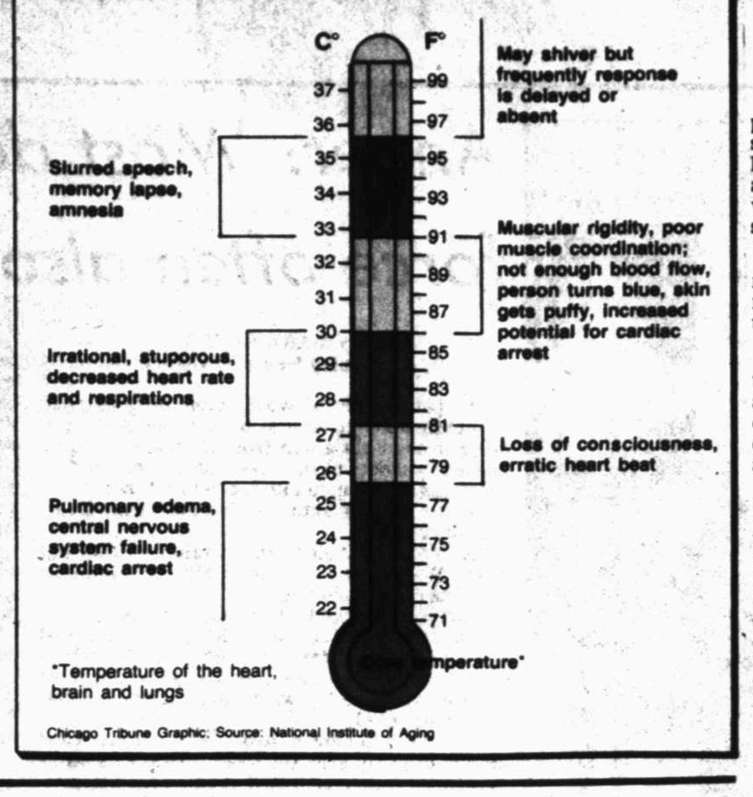
White said that under the rules each contestant signs up sponsors — friends, relatives, co-workers, club members, etc. — who pledge a minimum of one cent for each point scored. After bowling the required three games at Dellwood Lanes or Fairmont Park Lanes, bowlers collect their pledges, turn them in and receive prizes for their efforts.

"We hope that many children and adults come out on Feb. 4 to spend a healthy day bowling. The biggest reward of all is knowing that your efforts will help thousands of children and young adults who suffer from this respiratory and digestive disease," said Ms. White.

"They have to fight for breath," she added. "We can bowl for their chance to breathe."

Sponsor forms for the Bowl-For-Breath "Strike Force" may be obtained at Dellwood Lanes or Fairmont Park Lanes, or by calling 699-4484 or 697-0458.

Hypothermia symptoms



Chicago Tribune Graphic; Source: National Institute of Aging

Cold weather health hazard

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Extremely cold weather should be met with precautions both indoors and out, health officials say. The danger of hypothermia, or excessive loss of body heat, is ever-present, particularly among the very young, the elderly, and those who are immobile or are taking certain prescription medicines.

Preparing for the cold is crucial, as hypothermia can become a threat in as little as 15 to 20 minutes of outdoor exposure to frigid temperatures, experts say.

Hypothermia, which is defined as any body temperature below 95 degrees Fahrenheit, also is a danger to those who never leave their residences, particularly with weather and economic conditions shutting off heat in some apartments and homes throughout the nation.

Health officials advise people to:

— Maintain room temperatures of 65 degrees in most households, 68 degrees if the household includes elderly persons, infants or invalids.

— Dress warmly, with several layers. Wear hats and scarves when going outside, even for as short a trip as taking out the garbage. If sufficient heat is a problem, wear a hat or some headgear inside, especially at night. This can be crucial, for body heat is lost most rapidly through the head.

— Wear wool clothing, not cotton. No matter how rugged denim blue jeans feel, they are made of cotton, which loses 90 percent of its insulating power when wet and acts as a wick to remove heat from your body. Wool dries from the inside out, giving more protection, even when wet. Also, mittens keep hands warmer than gloves.

— Do not skip meals, as cold tends to sap a person's strength. Do not drink alcohol, as it constricts blood vessels, making you colder.

— Keep warm while sleeping by using electric blankets, hot water bottles, wearing socks, nightcaps and layers of blankets.

— Keep moving, inside and out, to keep body heat up. Do not lick your lips while outside.

The warning symptoms of hypothermia include grogginess, dizziness and shivering. It can develop unobtrusively, with sluggish-thinking victims denying that they are cold. In most cases, hypothermia causes people to appear disoriented and have slurred speech.

Those suffering from cold should be warmed slowly, no more than a degree an hour, to avoid shock to the nervous system.

Warm, nonalcoholic liquids should be drunk. Victims should be dressed in warm, dry clothes and wrapped in blankets.

In the last several years, exposure deaths have claimed hundreds of lives nationwide. Some experts believe that the number of deaths may be even greater, since victims may be listed as having died of heart failure or other related causes.

DEAR ABBY

Tuberculosis not uncommon

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Thanks for your article saying that just because a person's TB test came back "positive," that doesn't condemn him for life.

I was drafted for the first World War, but I was put on "hold" when my test for tuberculosis showed "positive." After going through the clinic and having regular checkups, my TB tests showed negative.

Today I am 89 years old, and I'm still active delivering "Meals on Wheels" to the sick and shut-ins. — JOHN V.H.

DEAR JOHN: Good for you! Although there is far, far less TB today than there was 70 years ago, it's definitely still with us. An estimated 50 million Americans are infected with TB germs; many of them should be treated, but most of them don't even know they're infected. (Some have chronic coughs they attribute to too much smoking; others just feel tired all the time.) A simple test will show whether they have TB.

Times have changed; TB patients no longer go for long hospital stays. Most do not go to a hospital at all. New medicines make it possible for them to get treatment at home, live normally and keep their jobs.

For a free, up-to-date pamphlet explaining how TB is "caught," the symptoms, and how easy it is to cure once detected, contact your local American Lung Association (the Christmas Seal people). Look in your telephone book, or call information. It's a matter of life and breath.

DEAR ABBY: I am really on the spot. I am planning a lovely church wedding with bridesmaids, ushers and "the works," as they say.

My mother just assumed that my brother's children, Cindy, 4, and Richard, 7, will be in the wedding party as flower girl and ring bearer, so she went ahead and mentioned it to my sister-in-law, and now the kids are "practicing."

Abby, I definitely do not want any children in my wedding party! What should I do? — THE SOMETHING BLUE IS SUE

DEAR SUE: Tell your mother to go ahead and "mention" to your sister-in-law that she spoke too soon because you're not having children in your wedding. (And wear a blue garter.)

DEAR ABBY: "L. in Seattle" complained about receiving unwanted or duplicate magazine subscriptions as Christmas presents. L. wrote: "It bothers me to know that a well-meaning friend has spent money on a gift that is unread, then tossed out."

Surely there is a convalescent home in L.'s town — or a veterans' hospital or a jail.

Believe me, my donations of magazines, new or used, are greatly appreciated. And if you don't want your name and address spread around, cut out the label. — S. IN NORWICH

DEAR S.: You get an "A" for an OK suggestion.

(If you've put off writing your thank-you notes because you don't know what to say, send for Abby's complete booklet on letter-writing. Send $2 and a long, stamped (37 cents), self-addressed envelope to Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Researcher: Many X-rays unneeded

ORANGE, Calif. (AP) — Chest X-rays routinely ordered before surgery probably won't reveal any useful information unless the patient is at risk for heart or lung disease, and doctors should reconsider the practice, a researcher said recently.

"There are a lot of technologies in medicine we have accepted for a variety of reasons which people need to re-examine and be skeptical of," said Dr. Lloyd Rucker, an internist at the University of California-Irvine Medical Center in Orange.

With the high cost and radiation dangers of chest X-rays now "big issues," doctors have an obligation to prove them "useful rather than to use them simply because it's been a tradition," Rucker said.

The study by Rucker and his colleagues, published in a recent Journal of the American Medical Association, found that "if the (medical) history and the physical examination don't provide any clues that the patient has some disease in his heart or lungs, then the likelihood is very low that doing a chest X-ray is going to provide any information that will contribute to the patient being healthier or having a more successful surgery."

The researchers examined the medical charts of 905 patients who had chest X-rays before undergoing all types of surgery at UCI in late 1981. The patients were divided into those at risk of suffering heart or lung disease and those without such risks.

Risk factors included cancer, heart valve disease, asthma, tuberculosis, chronic bronchitis, emphysema, cigarette smoking, high blood pressure, occupational exposure to materials that cause lung disorders or a history of stroke, heart attack or heart pain.

Of the 368 patients found to have no such risk factors, chest X-rays found an abnormality in only one patient, Rucker said.

Using an average cost of about $69 per chest X-ray and related fees, Rucker concluded that the 367 other patients would have saved a total of $25,500 if the X-rays had not been ordered.

"There has been an attitude in medicine ... that we should look for everything and do everything — the same kind attitude that promotes the yearly physical exam with all sorts of tests," Rucker said. "It turns out in general that most of that stuff isn't very useful in a patient that doesn't have any complaints."

Rucker said his study found that ordering a preoperative chest X-ray for a patient without risk factors "isn't useless, but I would say it's not useful."

Ski tips offered

Common household articles such as toothpaste and kitchen towels along with unused air sickness bags from jetliners can come in handy at ski resorts, according to a list of consumer tips compiled by Denver-based Frontier Airlines

Small articles can be put together in the jet bags, for example, then carried in a single pocket while a skier schusses down the mountain.

Other tips are:

— Use toothpaste to remove scratches from ski goggles. Place a small amount of toothpaste on the goggle surface, let it dry, and rinse.

— Use kitchen towels —instead of expensive scarves—to keep necks and shoulders warm.

— Apply protective waterproofing material to waterproof regular denim jeans instead of purchasing expensive ski pants.

— Use regular automobile wax to condition the tops of skis before a ski trip.

— Use all-cotton socks as liners for mittens.

Texas oilman leaves legacy to Tyler playschools

TYLER (AP) — Plenty of Texas oilmen have left fortunes to colleges, research centers and other institutions of higher learning.

But D.K. Caldwell of Tyler may be the only one who left a legacy to institutions of lower learning.

This fall, for the 47th year, the Caldwell Playschools opened their doors to a new batch of Tyler 4-year-olds.

The 266 preschoolers make crafts, take music lessons, play outdoor games and go on field trips — including a visit to the Caldwell Zoo.

The cost to parents — $15.

And that's for children attending three days a week. For those attending two days a week, the tuition is $10 a semester.

The two Caldwell Playschools and the 30-acre zoo were the pet projects of Caldwell — a pioneer East Texas oil producer who didn't marry until he was 63 and never had children.

But Caldwell dearly loved children. And today his affection and generosity are carried on by his widow, Lottie.

"He would spend hundreds of dollars for play equipment for children, but he would tie together his own broken shoelace," Mrs. Caldwell said.

One of the schools is in the old Tyler High School building, and the other is in a grand Georgian-style mansion built in 1888.

Both buildings have been refurbished and equipped with toys and supplies for creative play.

Not only are the Caldwell schools inexpensive, they are regarded highly by education professionals. All but two of the nine Caldwell tachers are certified by the State of Texas, and two hold master's degrees.

"The Caldwell school is an outstanding early childhood education program. It's one of the finest programs I have ever observed," said Dr. Barbara Wagner, an assistant professor of early childhood education at the University of Texas at Tyler and director of the university's preschool program.

The Caldwell school began in 1936 when Caldwell, then a bachelor, made the lower floor of his two-story home available for a school operated by the American Association of University Women.

Caldwell later took over the program, working for a while in partnership with the City of Tyler and the Tyler school district.

The school gradually outgrew Caldwell's home and moved into several small buildings in his back yard.

Mrs. Caldwell was a librarian at Tyler Junior College when she married Caldwell in 1950. After the wedding, she quit her job and took over much of the administrative work for the schools.

Caldwell built cages in the back yard for rabbits, then squirrels, then a monkey and then an alligator. In the afternoons, after school was over, the back-yard menagerie attracted children from all over the city.

One afternoon when 60 children were in the back yard visiting the animals, Caldwell decided the children needed a real zoo. He bought 125 acres on the city's north side and opened a zoo in 1962.

The zoo, which has grown continuously, now houses 475 animals. A $4 million expansion program began in 1977 that includes an elephant house, a giraffe house, a monkey island, an administration and education complex, a farm exhibit that will include a 12,000-gallon aquarium.

As it has always been, admission to the zoo is free.

Caldwell took a personal interest in operation of the schools and the zoo because it allowed him to be near the children.

"He personally supervised every bit of the construction and operation of the zoo. He was out here at least three or four times during the week and every weekend," said Caldwell's nephew, Hayes Caldwell, director of the zoo.

"One of his trademarks was carrying around a roll of uncirculated dimes. He would walk around on Saturdays passing out those dimes to kids, telling them to help the economy by getting the dimes in circulation," Caldwell said.

Couple creates art by binding themselves

NEW YORK (AP) — For Linda Montano and Tehching Hsieh, the tie that binds is an eight-foot-long nylon rope, fastened to their waists on July 4 to ensure that they spend 31,536,000 consecutive seconds — one year — together.

They eat, bicycle and shop together. They also sleep together in a SoHo loft, but in twin beds, four feet apart; they are not allowed to touch.

"For me, it's an isolation duration sort of psychological, physiological experience, using my body and mind to understand and antidote fear and guilt," says Ms. Montano, 41, originally of Saugerties, N.Y.

Her partner is more straightforward. "I have to try to do new work — new art," says Hsieh, 32, formerly of Taiwan.

Art is what the Montano-Hsieh project is all about — performance art, a relatively new medium in which artists try to create art with their lives.

Their previous forays into performance art have been well documented. Hsieh punched a time clock every hour, on the hour, for a year; he lived in a cage for a year; he spent a year on the streets of New York.

Ms. Montano was handcuffed to a fellow artist for three days; lived in a gallery for five days, adopting the personalities of five people; lay still on a chicken bed, dressed like a "saint-chicken."

Now she has eschewed feathers for her work with Hsieh. She has also put from her mind the four years she spent at a convent and a Zen monastery.

Instead, she says, she is seeking a new form of discipline, "to see life's struggle in a different way" through the year-long project with Hsieh.

"We are isolated but we are together," Hsieh says. They keep a record of the times they have touched inadvertantly — more than 60 at last count — and walk gingerly to avoid coming in contact or tripping over their rope.

And their relationship is strictly platonic. "This piece has a lot to do with sex without having any sex," Ms. Montano says.

The projects has had its difficulties. In a rehearsal earlier in the year, they chose the wrong kind of rope, one that shrank after they showered. They were sitting in a restaurant when Hsieh began to change color.

"He kept saying, 'My lope vely tight, my lope vely tight,'" Ms. Montano recalls. They cut him loose, and decided to use nylon rope istead.

Hsieh once entered an elevator just as it closed, leaving Ms. Montano outside. He managed to open the door, but Ms. Montano says she still shakes when she imagines being pulled through the ceiling to the second floor.

Most difficult, they say, has been adjusting to a lack of freedom. Tehching likes to go to Chinatown to eat; Linda tires of Chinese food.

There have been "emotional flare-ups," Ms. Montano says, and many compromises. "One year is really like a 10-year marriage," Hsieh says.

Public reaction, so far, has been mixed. People who see Hsieh and Ms. Montano on the street rarely look twice — "I think New York City people know people do anything," Hsieh says, laughing.

No one, it seems, suggests that they untie the rope when nobody's looking. "Oh, no, we're real respected. People know our past work," Ms. Montano says.

For Linda Montano and Teching Heisch, the tie that binds them is an 8-foot nylon rope fastened to their wastes. Bound together last July 4, the rope ensures that they spend 31,536,000 seconds — one year — together. AP Laserphoto

Proscrastinators make predictions — for '83

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Procrastinators of America have gotten around to putting out another annual list of predictions, and as usual they're 100 percent accurate — since they're for the year just ending.

The 1983 forecast, in rhyme for the first time, was issued by the Philadelphia-based group last week, with just days remaining before the year ends.

Again this year the prognostication fell to Les Waas, who has the title of "so-called president" because the group has put off scheduling another election since 1956, the year he won the job.

This year, he said, the group predicts:

"Cowboys being rammed
"Out of Super Bowl play;
"Videos brightening
"Our musical day;
"A black Miss America,
"The end of M*A*S*H,
"Diaries of Hitler
"Getting thrown in the trash."

Waas also showed his penchant for puns with predictions about the first American woman in space, Sally Ride, and former U.S. Interior Secretary James Watt resigning after a controversial comment:

"A rider named Ride
"Sallying forth into space —
"The first astronant with femine grace...
"Watt's-his-name making much more than a ripple,
"With 'a black, a woman, two Jews and a cripple.'"

Waas, who works in the advertising business, said 4,000 Americans are card-carrying Procrastinators. "We also have a half-million members who haven't signed up yet," he said.

The group puts out an irregular publication called "Last Month's News Letter," and occasionally throws parties, such as the recent bash to celebrate the Procrastinators' 25th anniversary — two years late.

Waas said the benefits of procrastinating include a longer life, and that's not just because procrastinators put off dying.

Blind announcer tells how Rose Parade feels

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Radio announcer Doug Wakefield clambered over flower-covered floats, touching buds and seeds and everything within reach so he could describe to blind listeners how today's Rose Parade would feel.

Wakefield, who is blind, spent two days gathering sensations and figuring out ways to put the annual New Year's spectacle into perspective for those unable to see the 5½-mile pageant.

"You don't know how much you're missing," Wakefield said Sunday as he prepared for the live broadcast to some 50 cities via National Public Radio satellite.

"There is so much more to explain for those floats. There is more to them than just the color and the flowers."

What sighted people miss, he said, is the detail revealed by touch that shows the floats to be artful works of sculpture.

Wakefield, 42, works in the Agriculture Department's broadcast section in Washington, D.C. He announced the parade last year for the first time.

His partner on the air is Ken Kramer, who can see. Kramer introduces the floats, then turns the microphone over to Wakefield for his unique perspective.

"Ken might say, 'Doug this is the International House of Pancakes float. If you'll recall, last year this is the one that caught fire,'" Wakefield said.

Wakefield draws on his recollection of the details he found with his hands, and is also wired to an assistant who can refer to notes made during the pre-parade inspection.

But he doesn't ignore the traditional type of description, reasoning that "just because you don't see doesn't mean you're not interested in color."

"We will mention the colors but we'll also be talking about how big things are — trying to draw some way to describe things so even if you've never seen something that huge you'll have some reference."

Wakefield uses comparisons with everyday objects to convey a float's size to the listeners who cannot visualize dimensions.

With an enormous reclining Santa Claus, for example, "I was able to 'see' how big his hands were — and his hands are truly gigantic. The thumbnail is almost the size of a medium size plate."

Orwell's adopted son grateful he lacks English author's name

NEW YORK (AP) — Even the omnipresent Big Brother would have trouble keeping an eye on Richard Blair, who shies away from discussing his life as the adopted son and sole heir to "Nineteen Eighty-Four" author George Orwell.

"It's not something I talk about," said Blair, 39, who keeps a low profile at his home near Warwicke, England. "If my name were Orwell, there would be a problem. I'm grateful it isn't."

Blair, who is quoted in the Jan. 9 issue of People magazine, said the thing he admired most about his father's work was its simplicity.

"When asked why he made pigs the villains in 'Animal Farm,' he said it was because he didn't like pigs," he recalled.

Blair, who is married with two children, writes sales manuals for a farm equipment company. He said he has only fragmented recollections of Orwell, who died at the age of 46 in 1950, when Blair was 6.

ATLANTA (AP) — Former Gov. Lester Maddox, returning to the Bahamas today for further prostate cancer treatment, says he has felt better in recent months and is trying not to gain too much weight.

"I have a lot more energy than I did earlier," Maddox said recently. "I was about to blow away about a year ago, and now I have trouble keeping my weight down."

The flamboyant 67-year-old politician said he now weighs 160 pounds, 20 pounds more than last summer.

Maddox, elected governor in 1966 and lieutenant governor in 1970, also said a visit to his doctor three weeks ago indicated the cancer diagnosed last year has not spread "to my blood or bones."

He said he doesn't know whether to credit his treatment at Dr. Lawrence Burton's Immunology Researching Center on Grand Bahama Island, "but I wouldn't dare turn it loose."

Maddox and his wife, Virginia, spent five weeks in Freeport last spring. During the stay, Maddox gave himself daily inoculations of blood serum in a treatment Burton contends builds up the body's immune system. The treatment is not licensed in the United States.

LONDON (AP) — Charlie Watts, drummer of the Rolling Stones rock group, was not at home when fire broke out at his 17th-century mansion, Haldsen House, Dolton, destroying thousands of dollars worth of furniture and antiques.

The alarm was sounded Sunday by friends staying at the home.

Firefighters said the blaze, confined to two rooms, started when a wooden beam over an open fire ignited. The exact value of the damage was not immediately known.

Watts, 41, is vacationing with his family in Thailand.

1984 came early at calendar firm

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — For the Thomas D. Murphy Co. of Red Oak, Iowa, 1984 is nothing new. At the nation's oldest major calendar printing company, the new year arrived several months ago.

Despite the highly noticeable number of glossy calendars on the market, rural banks, insurance companies and stores are continuing the tradition of giving away free, no-frills datekeepers, said a spokesman for Murphy.

He should know — the company sells around 3.75 million of the timely datekeepers every year.

For those looking for something a little fancier — and there are hundreds of possibilities to choose from — the B. Dalton bookstore chain says its best seller features Garfield, that lovable cartoon cat. "We sell literally thousands of them," said Felicia McCann, a buyer for Dalton.

POSITIVE THINKING

'Chief duty of human being is to endure life'

By DR. NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

It was New Year's Eve on the battlefront in Korea. The temperature was 42 degrees below zero. Eighteen thousand American Marines were facing one hundred thousand Communist troops. The situation for every man was, of course, precarious.

Newspaper correspondents assigned to the troops were standing around trying to keep warm. One became philosophical. He noticed a big Marine whose clothing had frozen hard as a board. His beard was encrusted with mud; hand were blue with cold. He was eating beans out of a can with a trench knife — cold beans at 42 below zero!

This philosophical newspaper correspondent said to the big Marine, "Look, if I were God and could give you one thing you'd rather have more than anything else in world, what would you ask for?"

The Marine mulled it over for a while then said, "I would ask you to give me tomorrow." Deep within every human being is the desire for the continuation of life. Years come; years go; they multiply; they add up until they become — in some cases — very many. What would you perhaps say, "Give me tomorrow, the assurance of life and health?" Perhaps that is why we extend the old greeting, "Happy New Year!"

William Arthur Ward, a quotation expert, was working around with this phrase, "Happy New Year," when it occured to him that there were three words in the phrase.

No magic is attached to the number 3, perhaps, but when you consider the usage of three works, it does seem to have some kind of deep, psychological meaning. Think of the many familiar three-word phrases: "Come unto me," "Be not afraid," "I love you," "I forgive you," "God bless America," "Happy New Year."

Sitting idly at my desk, I wrote down the word "life, l-i-f-e." And noticed something I have never seen before. Right in the middle of that word is the word "if," l-if-e. Of course there indeed is a big "IF" in life. "IF I do this," "IF I do that," "IF this happens," "IF that happens."

But we can regulate this "IF." The psychiatrist, Freud, said, "The chief duty of a human being is to endure life." There are many things we have to endure, but a greater concept is that the chief duty of a human being is to master life, to take hold of the "if" that is built into life and control it.

The old year has gone — put it in the past where it belongs. Be glad you're alive. You have tomorrow. Happy New Year.

Activists 'liberate' lab animals

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — It was a busy Christmas season for Sonya, a season of cross-country plane trips under assumed names, surreptitious meetings in airports and coded telephone calls and whispered conversations.

It was a season for committing felonies.

On Christmas Day, Sonya and several others broke into a research lab at Harbor UCLA Medical Center here and stole — they would say "liberated" — a dozen dogs being used for research purposes, including five that had been implanted with heart pacemakers. Two days earlier, Sonya and some others broke into another lab at Johns Hopkins University in Maryland and stole six rats being used in experiments on brain damage.

The "actions" at UCLA and Johns Hopkins were Sonya's eighth and ninth felonies on behalf of "exploited" animals. She is tired. She has flown across the country at least twice to perform the thefts, and she is eager to get home to her dog and whatever family she may have. She will not say where home is, or what she does, or who she is. Sonya is not her real name. She is a semi-underground member of the Animal Liberation Front, the radical animal rights group that planned and executed the thefts at the research laboratories.

Their stated purpose is to get publicity for the conditions of research animals. They speak with great emotion of monkeys with electrodes in their brains, of rabbits with eyes burned by caustic substances, of rats with "scrambled brains."

Father Seraphim, one of the monks living at the ancient monastery on Meteora in the mountains of Greece, finishes the ringing of the bells as an offering to God. The monasteries are a refuge to the handful of Greek Orthodox monks who are hoping to live their lives of Chrisitan perfection on the isolated summit.

Meteora's monks

Greek Orthodox monks still cling to a lifestyle established 1,000 years ago at monasteries on the imposing rocks of Meteora in northern Greece.

The wildness and inaccessibility of the terrain made Meteora the refuge of men fleeing marauders who invaded Thessaly for centuries. The rocks provided safety. Later, Orthodox monks forsaking the world chose to live on the isolated summits in hopes of seeing God more clearly and of living more perfect Christian lives.

In the beginning these hermits prayed alone in primitive chapels. Gradually, they joined forces and built the monasteries. Until recently, the monasteries could be reached only by nets suspended by rope to the daring visitor.

Twenty-four monasteries once housed hundreds of monks. Now only five are in use. The Monastery of the Holy Trinity is home for two of the remaining monks, Father Christopher and Father Seraphim.

Their days are spent in prayer and in repairing the monastery which needs constant restoration because of its age.

"We are blessed to be able to live between heaven and Earth," Father Seraphim said. "Our lives are rich, we have blue sky and full hearts."

Father Seraphim prays in one of five ancient monasteries high up in the imposing rocks of Meteora in the northern mountains of Greece.

The Monastery of Rousanou, far right, hangs precariously on the edge of the mountain. Meteora, crowned with the ancient monasteries, once was refuge for men fleeing various invaders, and now is home for the monks. Father Chrisostomos, right, lights a candle before evening mass.

Cuba celebrates 25th anniversary

An Analysis

By GEORGE GEDDA

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cuba began the second quarter-century of its revolution Sunday, somewhat chastened by a series of foreign policy setbacks that American officials hope will induce President Fidel Castro to scale back his overseas ambitions.

After 25 years, few of the great issues that have divided Castro and his critics have been resolved. Cuba, having rid itself of capitalist exploitation, hails its social improvements and defiantly calls itself the "first free territory of the Americas." His enemies claim Castro has substituted American domination for the Soviet brand and also foisted totalitarian rule on his people.

Although Castro's grip on power appears unquestioned, the consensus here is that recent events have demonstrated that his ability to influence events beyond Cuba's borders is limited.

Cuba's outlook was brighter five years ago when, at age 20, the revolution was picking up allies in Central America and the Caribbean and Castro was elected chairman of the 95-member Non-Aligned Movement, an honor that mocked U.S. efforts to isolate him internationally.

Nowadays, Castro is on the defensive. The ouster of the pro-Cuban regime in Grenada appears to have eliminated the hopes Castro once had of promoting establishment of an anti-American bloc in the Caribbean.

Cuban influence in Jamaica waned in 1980 when conservatives ended eight years of socialist rule. A year ago, Suriname, on South America's north coast, seemed promising for Cuba but Castro's diplomats and technicians were abruptly expelled last fall, part of the ripple effect of the U.S.-led invasion of Grenada.

The Sandinista revolution in Nicaragua gives Cuba a foothold in Central America for the first time but a CIA-backed rebellion there has prevented the regime from consolidating its power.

Outside the hemisphere, Angola has been unable to stem the advance of a pro-Western rebel group despite the presence of 25,000 Cuban soldiers. Vietnam, Cuba's closest ally in Asia, is bogged down in an inconclusive military struggle in Cambodia and is viewed with hostility by other neighbors, especially China.

Still, Castro, now 57, can cite a number of achievements. He has eliminated many of the worst abuses that characterized the rule of his pro-American predecessers and he points with pride to Cuba's welfare system, which has enabled his country to meet the basic human needs of its people better than that of most any other Latin American country.

Also, the Soviet Union has proved to be a reliable partner for Cuba, providing an estimated $4.7 billion in economic assistance annually, making Cuba one of the most generously subsidized countries in the world per capita.

His own countrymen may endure rationing and other economic hardships, but, to some, the outlook is even more discouraging for some American friends in the hemisphere, where the problems range from Brazil's unrestrained debt burdens to El Salvador's unrepentent death squads.

This past spring marked the end of Castro's three-year chairmanship of the Non-Aligned Movement, a grouping of Third World nations. He hoped to utilize that role to advance his overseas objectives but instead it was a dispiriting period for him.

Almost immediately after assuming the chairmanship in late 1979, the Soviet Union invaded Afghanistan. Castro's support for Moscow ran counter to majority sentiment in the movement, and appeared to reinforce the sense that Cuban dependence on Moscow was overwhelming.

After the Soviet invasion, Cuba also had to deal in rapid succession with the mass exodus of 125,000 disaffected Cubans aboard the Mariel boat lift, the defeat of his ally, Prime Minister Michael Manley, in the Jamaican election and, finally, the election of Ronald Reagan. During Reagan's tenure, there has been a decided deterioration of U.S.-Cuban relations.

Globally, American officials say Castro seems less relevant as a role model for other developing countries than he once did. But they seem doubtful that Castro has changed much despite the recent setbacks, suggesting that the uneasy intimacy between Cuba and the United States of the past quarter century is likely to continue for the foreseeable future.

Castro says revolution is 'inevitable'

SANTIAGO, Cuba (AP) — President Fidel Castro, in a fiery speech under a tropical downpour, declared that Latin American revolution is "inevitable" and the United States cannot prevent it.

"One way or the other, the United States will have to resign itself to living in this hemisphere with different social systems," he said Sunday night.

Castro's speech was the keynote event on the 25th anniversary of the Cuban revolution, a revolution he said has now become "a reality...with all promises kept."

The familiar green fatigue-clad Castro, his beard now going gray, spoke from the same city hall balcony where as a 31-year-old guerrilla leader, he delivered his first victory address Jan. 1, 1959, after dictator Fulgencio Batista fled Cuba and Castro's rebel forces poured into the island's cities from the mountains.

In the small, park-like plaza Sunday night sat 4,000 invited guests, including Communist Party and government leaders and revolutionary veterans.

Before he spoke, Castro conferred the honor of "Hero of the Republic of Cuba" on this eastern city for its role as "a cradle of the revolution."

The umbrella-less throng sat through a steady shower. But their spirits were undampened — they applauded and cheered their long-time chief three dozen times during his 72-minute address.

After 25 years under communism, Cuba has severe economic problems, seen most clearly in its continued rationing system for meat, rice and other staples, and its critical housing shortage.

Cuban officials had said the relatively low-keyed nature of the 25th anniversary celebration — without military parades or major events in other cities — stemmed from the current austerity drive.

But Castro maintained an upbeat tone throughout his address, reaching a crowd-pleasing crescendo with his attacks on the United States.

Over the 25 years, the Cuban revolution "did not tremble" before the "threat and aggression" of the United States, he said repeatedly.

"Cubans, men and women alike, will fight...there will be enough weapons for all who want to fight when the time comes to defend our freedoms," he said.

Today, Castro said, "tensions have increased throughout the world as a result of the aggressive policies of the present U.S. administration."

The Cuban leader said "social changes are inevitable" in economically distressed Latin American countries. He specficially mentioned Chile, Uruguay and Brazil and he spoke powerfully in defense of Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista revolutionary government and leftist guerrillas trying to topple the U.S.-backed government of El Salvador.

"Cuba cannot export the revolution," he said. "Neither can the United States prevent it."

Castro brought the throng to its feet for the final 10 minutes of his speech when he declared the Oct. 25 U.S.-led invasion of Cuban-supported Grenada "will never be forgotten."

The excited Cubans chanted, "Fidel! Fidel!"

"A fighter never ceases his struggle! There can never be a dishonorable pact with the enemy" the Cuban leader concluded.

At one point, Castro described the "Yankee imperalists" as "Nazi, fascists...connivers."

Earlier in his speech, Castro listed what he described as the accomplishments of the revolution, including advances in health and education, and the virtual eradication of unemployment in Cuba.

"Our economy, despite the Yankee economic blockade, has grown at an average rate of 7 percent since the triumph of the revolution," he said, claiming this was one of the highest growth rates in Latin America for the period.

Castro did not mention, however, that Cuba depends heavily on Soviet aid — estimated by U.S. officials to total $4 billion a year, about one quarter of the Cuban gross national product.

Andropov's mind seemed 'first class'

MOSCOW (AP) — "What he really needs to do his job is his mind, and it seemed absolutely first class," said one of the last outsiders to meet Yuri V. Andropov, who has been out of public view for the last four of his 13 months as leader of the Soviet Union.

The statement was made by U.S. Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., who with eight other senators met Andropov on Aug. 18 in Moscow and was asked by reporters to assess the Soviet leader's health.

The meeting with the senators was the last time Andropov was photographed or televised for the public and the last time an outsider could assess the stamina and alertness of the ex-KGB chief who took over after the death of Leonid I. Brezhnev on Nov. 10, 1982.

A meeting with South Yemen's leader in September was reported by Tass, the official news agency, but there were no photographs or mention of Andropov's health.

Last week's semi-annual meeting of the Communist Party's Central Committee and the Supreme Soviet (parliament) had been widely expected to be the forum at which the 69-year-old state president and party chief would reappear. As chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, and general secretary of the party, his presence was considered a must.

The sessions were the most delayed of any of the fall gatherings in 20 years, presumbably in the hope that Andropov by then would be recovered from the "cold" that was officially cited for his absence from the Nov. 7 Red Square military parade commemorating the Bolshevik revolution in 1917 and a Kremlin gala two days earlier — both "musts" for party leaders in Soviet eyes.

Andropov did not appear last week, saying "temporary causes" kept him away. Reports have circulated — none confirmed — that he is suffering a kidney ailment and is in the hospital.

The closed Central Committee plenum, which received that explanation from Andropov in a written speech distributed to the more than 300 members, issued no major foreign or domestic policy statements, although it approved four leadership changes that are believed favorable to those allied with Andropov at the top and may have reflected Andropov's continuing hold on power. The plenum drafted a 1984 budget and economic plan, which the Parliament approved without dissent.

Even Andropov's written speech on economic performance in 1983 and expectations for the new year lacked the robust language of criticism and exhortation that characterized his first nine months in office, and which was welcomed by older Soviets tired of the stagnation of the last Brezhnev years and by the younger ones frustrated by the corruption.

Those early statements by Andropov and others around him, said a senior Western diplomat who asked not to be identified, created "really high hopes for reform, for big changes, doing things better, getting away from the stick-in-the-mud under Brezhnev when no one was making decisions." A year later, he added, the emphasis on change seems shoved aside.

"Either for health reasons, or not having enough power in his coalition, he's not been able to do the things he wanted to do, or at least that his friends said he wanted to do," the diplomat speculated.
