Reagan's health will be closely monitored

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
AP White House Correspondent

BETHESDA, Md. — With four stark words — "the president has cancer" — the government's top cancer surgeon cast a shadow of uncertainty over Ronald Reagan and his presidency. Although doctors say a recurrence is unlikely, the once extraordinarily healthy president will be watched closely for any new sign of malignancy.

The finding Monday that the tumor taken from Reagan's colon 48 hours earlier was malignant and had spread to the wall of his bowel won't change the plan to discharge the president from Bethesda Naval Hospital this weekend or early next week, his doctors said.

This morning's White House medical update said the president slept well during the night and was examined by physicians at 8 a.m. EDT. It described him as being in excellent spirits and said, "His condition is excellent; his vital signs — temperature, pulse, blood pressure, respiration — are within normal ranges."

The president spent part of the morning reading newspapers and watching television.

Reagan walked around his suite Monday and planned to do so again today. "The president experienced some abdominal discomfort when moving, but has not required any pain medication," the statement said.

On Monday, Navy Capt. Dale Oller, Reagan's chief surgeon, said that the chief executive "continues his superlative recovery."

Reagan already has returned to doing some work. Spokesman Larry Speakes said the president signed an executive order Monday creating a commission to review defense contracting practices and read his daily update on national security developments.

Vice President George Bush, meanwhile, canceled trips to Missouri and Ohio to help lobby for Reagan's tax plan at meetings the president had planned to attend.

Reagan may, as one of his doctors predicted, be horseback riding on his California ranch a month from now.

"He's ebullient," Oller said, "in excellent spirits."

But for the rest of his life, the 74-year-old Reagan will be scanned, tested and probed for signs the cancer has come back. And if it does, it may kill him. Next to lung cancer, colon cancer is the second most deadly form of the disease.

"There is greater than a 50 percent chance that the president now has no cancer whatsoever — that there are no cancer cells in his body — and he is completely cured," said Dr. Steven Rosenberg, the chief of surgery at the National Cancer Institute and, as such, the government's No. 1 cancer surgeon.

"However, there is a chance that the tumor may recur at some time in the future," Rosenberg said after announcing the cancer diagnosis.

"The majority of patients in exactly the president's situation would certainly survive five years and beyond," said Rosenberg, who was the cancer specialist on the president's medical team.

Oller said the president told him, "Well, I'm glad that that's all out" after the doctors informed Reagan the tumor had been malignant but they thought they had removed all the cancerous tissue.

Americans hurt in accident with Soviet vehicle

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — A Soviet military vehicle was involved in an accident with a U.S. military vehicle it had been following last weekend in East Germany, injuring an American soldier, a U.S. military spokesman said today.

Lt. Col. Robert Ahrens, spokesman for the U.S. Command in Berlin, said he did not know how seriously the American soldier was injured or whether Washington had filed a protest in the incident.

Ahrens said only that he could confirm a report in a West Berlin daily newspaper, the Tagesspiegel.

The newspaper reported that a vehicle belonging to the U.S. military mission in Potsdam, East Germany, was being followed by the Soviet vehicle last weekend. The Soviet vehicle then was involved in an accident with the American vehicle, although the specific location in East Germany was not reported by the newspaper.

"Everything that was in the article took place," Ahrens said in a telephone interview with The Associated Press. "I can confirm that the incident took place."

Ahrens said he had no further details and did not release the name of the injured American soldier.

The accident last weekend was the third reported incident involving Soviet and allied forces in East Germany in less than four months.

Last month, Britain protested to the Soviet Union over an "incident" that occurred between British and Soviet military forces in East Germany on June 4. No one was hurt in the incident.

The British released no specific details of the incident.

Health officials have information on colon cancer

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

With national awareness of colorectal cancer heightened by the diagnosis of President Reagan, local health officials are prepared to help residents seeking information on the little-discussed disease.

"We don't have any kind of test here, but you can get early detection kits at local pharmacies," said Kathy Hicks, of the American Cancer Society.

Ms. Hicks stated that the kits are similar to early pregnancy detection tests in that they give an indication of a possible situation, but are not 100 percent foolproof.

"The test is just an indicator," she said. "If the test is positive, it should be followed by an examination by a doctor."

According to Paul Keel of Graham's Pharmacy, the kits just recently were made available to the public.

"There are several out on the market right now," he said. "We have three — Hemoccult, Fleet Detect-a-test and Early Detector."

Keel echoed Ms. Hicks in warning consumers not to rely on the test alone.

"The test is a simple home test that detects hidden blood in the stools which can be an early sign of cancer or colorectal disorders. But a positive test does not mean cancer."

First indictments issued in prison brutality probe

By VIRGINIA ELLIS
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

AUSTIN — In the first federal indictments stemming from an alleged era of brutality in the Texas prison system, two former corrections officials and four guards were charged Monday with conspiracy to injure and intimidate two inmates.

Nearly three years after Scott E. Licklider and Mark A. Griffith were allegedly stripped, handcuffed and repeatedly beaten, a Houston grand jury returned a four-count indictment accusing their alleged attackers of violating the prisoners' civil rights.

Prison officials said that it was the first time that federal indictments had been issued in any of the many allegations of prison guard brutality that have been made by a federal court monitor and an internal investigating team.

William Bennett Turner, a lawyer for inmates who filed a civil rights action against the prison system more than a decade ago, said that he was surprised by the grand jury's actions because he had long since abandoned hope that severe measures would be taken against prison officials accused of brutality.

"It's an extreme sanction, but it's an extremely necessary one," Turner said. "It's criminal behavior a lot worse than many of the inmates in the Texas Department of Corrections are there for."

Named in the indictments are Robert Minor Lawson II, a former assistant warden of the Texas Department of Corrections' Wynne Unit, and Donald L. Shiver, a former captain at the same unit.

The guards indicted are Leonel Leal Jr., 24; Morris Ray Bigham, 26; Nathan Bryant White, 37; and Henry E. Farris, 37, all of whom are still employed by the department of corrections.

The indictments were announced in Washington, D.C., by Assistant Attorney General William Bradford Reynolds, who heads the Department of Justice's civil rights division.

Reynolds said that all six men were accused of conspiring to "injure and intimidate" Licklider and Griffith "in violation of their constitutional rights not to be deprived of liberty without due process of law, not to be subjected to summary punishment, and to be kept free from harm while in official custody."

The indictments said the beatings occurred on Oct. 29, 1982, when Licklider and Griffith were returned to the Wynne Unit by local sheriff's deputies after an escape attempt.

At the time, Licklider was serving a 20-year sentence for aggravated robbery, and Griffith was serving a 35-year sentence for murder. Licklider remains in prison, but Griffith was paroled in 1984.

According to the indictments, Lawson, Shiver and about 25 guards met the two prisoners at the back gate, stripped them of their clothing and prodded them to go naked and handcuffed to the major's office. There, the indictment said, both men were repeatedly beaten and Griffith was burned with a cigarette by Leal.

Afterward, the indictment said, Lawson and Shiver filed reports "falsely stating that Griffith had accidentally fallen and hit his head."

The indictments apparently were prompted by information provided to the Department of Justice by Paul Belazis, one of several monitors hired by Special Master Vince Nathan to oversee the department's compliance with a federal court order.

The 1980 order, issued by U. S. District Judge William Wayne Justice as a result of Turner's suit, directed the Texas prison system to institute a series of reforms.

Prison Board Chairman Robert Gunn said here that board members did not learn of the incidents of brutality that occurred in the 1970s and early 1980s until years later.

"That was in the (former prison director) Jim Estelle era and we didn't hear about those things at that time," he said.

Now, he said, as a matter of policy, the department investigates and reports incidents of brutality as soon as they become known.

"I can assure you that the attitude of the board and the staff today is that these things will not happen," he said.

If convicted on the charge of conspiracy to violate prisoners' constitutional rights, each of the defendants could face a maximum penalty of 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Attorney doubts effectiveness of prison settlement

By MICHAEL L. GRACZYK
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON — The attorney for inmates in a 13-year-old civil rights lawsuit against the Texas prisons said he is skeptical that officials will comply with an agreement to end overcrowding in the nation's second-largest corrections system.

"It's not in the nature of the prison beast to make changes," William Bennett Turner said Monday after U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice agreed to the out-of-court settlement. "I am not euphoric about the settlement. This provides just the barest of minimums. We made every compromise we reasonably could make."

The settlement addressed the final civil rights issue raised in a landmark case filed in 1972 by inmate David Ruiz, a convicted robber.

Justice in 1980 used the suit to find Texas prison practices unconstitutional and ordered sweeping reforms. The overcrowding issue had been slated for trial earlier this year but attorneys for the inmates and the state reached an out-of-court settlement.

Among other things, the settlement puts a ceiling of 32,500 inmates in Texas prisons. The population now is about 38,000.

Prison officials acknowledged that compliance with the agreement would be difficult, particularly with the time stipulations on new prison construction.

"It's nice that their lawyer says they're going to comply," Turner said. But he predicted the compliance would hinge on whether the department had the staff and money, whether the changes could get through the prison system bureaucracy and whether the will existed to make the changes work.

"The oldtimers would like to get back to the good old days," Turner said. "It used to be cowboy boots and hats. Now it's more gray and bureaucratic."

State prison board Chairman Robert Gunn agreed with Turner's skepticism, but insisted officials "are going to get the job done."

"We would not have entered into an agreement we could not comply with," said Rick Gray, the state's attorney in the case.

Under the settlement, prison officials have promised that trusty camps and new prisons will take care of any increase in the number of inmates.

"We're going to give it our best effort," said Lane McCotter, who took over last month as director of the Corrections Department. "I'm sure we can do it. But it's the mammoth construction undertaking that's worrisome."

Belgian government resigns in soccer dispute

By PHILIPPE NEURAY
Associated Press Writer

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — The coalition government of Prime Minister Wilfried Martens, splintered by a dispute over its handling of soccer riot last May, resigned today, the Royal Palace said.

The center-right government's future remained unclear, however, because King Baudouin did not immediately accept the resignation.

The palace issued a three-sentence statement saying Martens had presented the resignation to the king during a meeting at the palace. "The king holds this resignation in suspension," the statement said.

Martens made the decision to resign the government during an emergency Cabinet meeting Tuesday morning, according to Employment Minister Michel Hansenne and Education Minister Daniel Coens.

Belga, the Belgian national news agency, reported that Martens had gone to the Royal Palace to ask King Baudouin to dissolve the Parliament.

Under Belgian law, national elections would have to be held within 40 days after the king official dissolves Parliament. A regular election had been scheduled for Dec. 8.

The crisis was triggered on Monday by the announcement of Deputy Premier Jean Gol that he was resigning to protest the failure of the Martens government to accept any blame for the riot at the European Cup final between British and Italian teams in Brussels.

Five other Cabinet members of Gol's French-speaking Liberal Reformers party later said they would resign, too, in sympathy with Gol.

During a weekend parliamentary debate on the riot, the interior minister, Charles-Ferdinand Hothomb, a Christian Democrat, refused to accept responsibility for allegedly inadequate security measures at the soccer match and Martens backed him.

The riot broke out when British fans attacked Italian fans in the soccer stadium before the match began. Most of the casualties came when a wall collapsed.

Fumes from plastics fire force residents to flee

By CYNTHIA BENJAMIN

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa (AP) — Up to 10,000 people were evacuated after a dense cloud of choking, foul-smelling fumes from a smoldering plastics fire spread over the southern part of the city, officials said.

The fumes apparently were created when firefighters sprayed water on a burning plastic dome at an old sewage treatment plant, which is being demolished, shortly after the fire began about 2:30 p.m. Monday, authorities said.

Susan Neely, an aide to Gov. Terry Branstad, estimated 8,000 to 10,000 people had been evacuated, and police Capt. Howard Gardner estimated between 5,000 and 10,000 people had fled their homes.

The evacuation area extended about five miles south of the fire at the old Cedar Rapids Water Pollution Control plant, said police Capt. Ron Hansen.

"Then we're talking about, I would guess, another five miles east and west in width in some areas," Hansen said.

The area evacuated included a housing complex for the elderly, a children's home and a mobile home park near Highway 30.

At least 900 people went to Red Cross shelters, but "we do estimate that we are housing only percentage of those who have been evacuated," said Gerald Claton, director of the Red Cross in Cedar Rapids.

"At the present time the winds have died, so we are not at this point evacuating additional areas," he said. "However, that could change at any moment, depending on the wind. We do know that all people who have been asked to evacuate have evacuated."

At least seven people were treated at city hospitals and released after complaining of scratchy throats and burning eyes.

"I know some people became sick from the fumes, some of the law officers and then we've had some reports from citizens," said Hansen.

"They've not put out the fire, they're just trying to still contain it and set up a plan to put it out — whether they're going to use dirt or explosives or what," Hansen said.

At least 100 people took shelter at Taft Junior High School, some of them relocated from two other schools — Wilson Junior High and Grant School — when spreading fumes threatened the area.

Many evacuees were staying with friends or relatives and "some of them are just driving around," Hansen said. Outside the city limits, hundreds more were advised to leave their homes, or as a "poorer alternative" to remain inside with air conditioning running, the Linn County sheriff's department said.

The treatment facility was being demolished when a worker's torch apparently ignited a foam insulation material, officials said. Flames and thick dark smoke belched into the air and drifted from the site on a breeze.

Hansen said the area burning at the old plant "is like a big dish or a big saucer" covered with a plastic dome.

The American Red Cross, Linn County Sheriff's Department officials and Cedar Rapids police officers were helping in evacuation and sheltering the residents.

"It came down on us like a mist rain. It was so thick you could cut it with a knife. We had to get out of there," said Debi Fields of the Hyde-Away Manor trailer court, who was evacuated to Taft Junior High School.

"We saw the billowing smoke this afternoon, but it didn't hit the court until 10:30," she said.

"It was thick. You could walk right through it. And every breath I took, it went right inside me," Mrs. Fields said.

Car bomb's death toll rises to 14 persons

■ Related story — Page 5A

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The death toll from Monday's car bombing in south Lebanon rose to 14 today as rescue workers digging through a demolished building found three more bodies and said more victims might be buried under the rubble.

More than 13 civilians were feared by police to have been caught in the explosion after the bomber, identified by Lebanon's state television as Hisham Abbas, 20, blew himself up in a white Peugeot 504 flying the Red Cross flag near the village of Kfar Tibnit.

The car, carrying explosives, blew up on the rim of Israel's so-called security zone — a buffer ribbon of land stretching across south Lebanon and patrolled by Israelis and surrogates of the South Lebanon Army militia.

First reports from Tel Aviv said the bomb killed seven Lebanese civilians, two men of the 2,000-strong South Lebanese Army, and the car bomber.

But hospitals, police and Red Cross officials said at least 13 people, excluding the attacker, were killed and more were feared dead. Three survivors of the blast were ferried to hospitals in Marjayoun, administrative capital of the security zone, the sources said.

Israel sealed off its cordon sanitaire from the rest of Lebanon after the bombing. Lebanese Red Cross workers todays were awaiting permission to cross into the zone to collect bodies and wounded.

In Geneva, the International Committee of the Red Cross said the use of the Red Cross flag by the bomber was a "doubly odious" act that threatened to jeopardize its humanitarian work in Lebanon.

It also confirmed that 10 ICRC vehicles were stolen at gunpoint in Beirut in the past three months, raising fears of further attacks by suicide bombers.

In Tel Aviv, the Israeli daily Maariv newspaper quoted Syrian Social Nationalist Party spokesman Habib Firouz as saying 100 more men and women had volunteered to carry out similar suicide missions.

Abbass, who staged Monday's attack, was the third Lebanese to blow himself up in car bombings aimed at Israeli and Israeli-backed soldiers in south Lebanon this month.

In a pre-recorded message broadcast on state television Monday night Abbass described himself as a member of the Organization of the Baath Party, a Lebanese branch of Syrian President Hafez Assad's ruling party. Assad, power broker among warring Moslem and Christian militias in Lebanon's 10 year civil war, is Israel's main foe in the Middle East.

Thatcher addresses American lawyers

By R.W. APPLE JR.
New York Times News Service

LONDON — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher told more than 6,000 American lawyers on Monday that democratic nations "must try to find ways to starve the terrorist and the hijacker of the oxygen of publicity on which they depend."

Speaking at the opening assembly of the American Bar Association's annual meeting, the largest convention ever held in Britain, the prime minister said in her speech at Albert Hall that Britain, the United States, and their allies abhorred censorship.

But, she asked, "Ought we not to ask the media to agree among themselves a voluntary code of conduct, under which they would not say or show anything which could assist the terrorists' morale or their cause while the hijack lasted?"

In Britain, as in the United States, there has been widespread condemnation of how the American television networks covered the hijacking last month of the Trans World Airlines jet in Beirut.

The appearance by Mrs. Thatcher at the Albert Hall and that of the country's senior legal officer, Lord Hailsham of St. Marylebone, the lord chancellor, at another ceremony in Westminster Hall showed how seriously the British are taking this gathering — the largest influx of Americans to this country since World War II.

Before the week is out, the four Inns of Court, the centers of British legal education, will have held lavish receptions for the American visitors, flourishing antique silver and other hoary traditions.

This is a chance for the British to impress and perhaps to influence people who carry considerable weight back home. Equally important, it is a chance for the British tourist industry to make a killing in what is already shaping up as a record year.

Nearly 10,000 lawyers, and a roughly equal number of spouses, friends, and children, have checked into 188 London hotels. There is hardly an empty room in London this week. London tourist officials expect the visitors to spend $40 million in the capital and elsewhere in Britain before the meeting ends on Saturday.

Most of that amount will be tax-deductible, since the convention is categorized as "an educational experience." Indeed, for the serious minded, there are plenty of thought-provoking sessions — more than 300 at latest count.

But the schedule also lists an organized pub crawl, which must seem to most Britons a contradiction in terms, a fashion show at a flashy restaurant, and a day trip to Boulogne, across the channel in France.

The British newspapers have been running long stories about the convention for several weeks. Many of the articles have reported, with more than a little awe, that the average bar association member earns $57,000 a year and that the partners in big firms often make $200,000.

Michael Davie, a columnist for The Observer, a liberal Sunday newspaper, expressed wonderment at the names of some of the firms. Mentioning Haight, Gardener, Poor & Havens of Washington, Davie said it was "the only time the word 'poor' crops up in the program for the convention."

Perhaps inevitably, people have sought comment from John Mortimer, the barrister and writer, whose "Rumpole of the Bailey" television series has made him Britain's best-known lawyer. His verdict: "It has always been my aim to avoid the company of lawyers whenever possible."

The bar association has met in London three times before, in 1924, 1957, and 1971. The organization likes to come here, said its president, John Shepherd, because "it's a nice place to bring the family" and because of the American bar's links to common law.

Those links came up Monday morning when, Lord Hailsham, bewigged and attired in ceremonial robes, greeted the American visitors in Westminster Hall, a cavernous building in the same complex as the House of Commons that was built by William Rufus, son of William the Conqueror, in 1097.

He reminded the Americans that the law had its frailties and that lawyers made mistakes, recalling that Sir Thomas More, another lord chancellor, had in the same hall been "falsely convicted of treason under an unjust statute passed by a homicidal prince on the perjured evidence of his solicitor general."

But the dominant note of the day was the need to combat terrorism, which Mrs. Thatcher described as "a savage threat" to free people.

She said "civilized societies" must learn to work more closely against terrorists, but she made no direct comment on President Reagan's appeal to European countries to halt flights to Beirut. Mrs. Thatcher has said that Britain would do so only if all Common Market countries agreed. The prospects are slim for such agreement.

"We have behind us many declarations and communiques of good intent," she said in her speech on Monday. "We need action, action to which all countries are committed until the terrorist knows he has no haven, no escape."

REAGAN

Mrs. Reagan's press secretary said the first lady felt drained and alone after returning to the White House but "very relieved" after the doctors told her there was no indication the disease had spread beyond the colon.

Cancer specialists don't regard patients diagnosed with the disease as cured until they have survived five years without a recurrence, but Rosenberg said that in the president's case, "We have no evidence that this cancer has spread, and I think the chances are good that no spread will take place."

The most likely place for a recurrence would be in the liver, where it is extremely dangerous.

"I would recommend that the president undergo a colonoscopy in six months and every year thereafter," Rosenberg said. It was Reagan's first colonoscopy, a visual examination of the inside of the large intestine, that revealed the presence of the tumor on Friday.

"I would recommend that he have periodic blood tests (every two months) to check the status of the internal organs as well as certain markers of a colon malignancy, which can now be tested for," Rosenberg added. "He needs regular X-rays of his chest, of his lungs, of his liver. That would be part of the standard follow-up of patients who have had this diagnosis made."

But because surgeons removed all the potentially cancerous tissue they could find and there is no evidence that radiation or chemotherapy is effective in treating colon cancer, "No further therapy is indicated at this time," the physician said.

Nevertheless, he added, the National Cancer Institute will conduct a thorough study of the latest findings in search of any information that might affect Reagan's case.

Rosenberg said he would advise Reagan to resume his active lifestyle after recovering from the surgery and said there is no reason for him to consider retirement.

The findings did show, however, that the cancer in the tumor discovered on Friday had invaded the muscle wall of the bowel, which means doctors caught it after it had begun to spread. That increases the likelihood the disease will show up again in the liver or elsewhere.

But Rosenberg said, "This tumor has not invaded beyond the wall of the intestine." If it had, his chances for long-term survival would decrease markedly.

Oller and Rosenberg went to Reagan's suite at the military medical center outside Washington at 2:40 p.m. EDT to inform Mrs. Reagan of the pathologists' findings. The president's chief of staff, Donald T. Regan, Speakes and White House physicians sat in on the half-hour conversation in a sitting room adjacent to the president's bedroom.

The doctors and Mrs. Reagan then went into the president's room to give him the news.

CANCER

Keel recommended a doctor's examination if home test results are positive.

The test kits, which average $6 to $7, all work "about the same," Keel indicated.

"Most of them require tests on three separate bowel movements to insure accuracy," he said.

Keel stated that acceptance of the tests has been slow, both because they are new and because people aren't aware of them.

"I've noticed a lot of doctors have started recommending the home tests as a follow-up to a check-up now," he said.

The American Cancer Society recommends three tests to detect the cancer which each year, strikes 123,000 people and kills 60,000. The stool blood test now can be performed at home using one of the kits. The other two require a visit to the doctor's office. One, the digital rectal examination, "allows a physician to feel a tumor in the rectum if one is present," and the other, the proctosigmoidoscopy or "procto" examination, requires the physician insert a hollow, lighted tube into the rectum and lower colon, and view the intestinal tract.

The disease appears heavily in people over age 50 and occurs slightly more among women and people with family histories of colon cancer, polyps in the colon or ulcerative colitis, according to the ACS.

Early detection of colon cancer has not been successful in the past, both due to lack of public awareness and the historically taboo nature of the disease.

"It's a disease that no one has wanted to talk about," said Ms. Hicks.

White says valley citrus industry bouncing back

HARLINGEN (AP) — The Texas citrus industry is on the way back, but Gov. Mark White is stressing to businessmen that diversity could mean prosperity.

The Rio Grande Valley has been plagued in recent years by peso devaluations, which have hurt border communities, and winter freezes, which have damaged the citrus and vegetable industry.

But while the citrus industry is on the rebound, Mexico's peso problems continue and the governor said Monday other businesses must help attract more people to the Valley.

"I have been very active in trying to develop additional tourist attractions as well as develop connections between our airline and tourist industry," White told reporters and area elected officials.

"I am very pleased to see our citrus industry coming back," he said.

Citrus growers lost an estimated $100 million after a December 1983 freeze destroyed about 60 percent of the citrus acreage in the Valley.

White said other areas must help pick up the economic slack.

"One of the things we're meeting with this group here today is to help broaden that economic base," White said.

Earlier in the day in Brownsville, White talked to shrimpers, who have said federal regulations, too many shrimpers and not enough shrimp are driving many out of business.

Shrimpers recently lost an court hearing to stop the U.S. Coast Guard from enforming the Lacey Act and seizing shrimp caught in Mexican waters.

"I understand there are options being discussed today with Mexico and I think it's vital we work together with Mexico in helping solve this problem," White said.

"I know it is vital to this industry

> "I have been very active in trying to develop additional tourist attractions as well as develop connections between our airline and tourist industry...I am very pleased to see our citrus industry coming back."

It's also vital to this part of the state. And I think it's truly vital to Mexico as well," he said. "To me, when you see that type of common interest then I think we have some hope for resolution of those problems."

White met later with the shrimpers and community leaders privately.

White also met with teachers and students in La Joya earlier in the day.

Housewives testify against books

Women say housewives not fairly portrayed

AUSTIN (AP) — Several housewives say history textbooks proposed for use in Texas classrooms portray housewifery as a less than noble occupation.

Jennifer Amo of Hurst, who called herself a "domestic engineer," told the State Textbook Committee Monday that her children have questioned her about her decision to work at home.

"I have personally made a choice, not an echo, in determining my lifestyle," she said. "My children have been influenced by much of this biased textbook material. They've asked me why I didn't work. It's demeaning."

The committee, which will recommend textbooks to the State Board of Education, opened three days of hearings Mondays with public comments about history books. Mrs. Amo and other women complained that textbook publishers have gone too far to satisfy feminists.

Ada Ferguson, an Austin PTA official, said young girls should be taught not to feel "put down, unelightened or unfulfilled" if they decide to become housewives. She also complained some of the books do not mention Phyllis Schlafly, a leader of the anti-Equal Rights Amendment movement.

Mrs. Amo agreed, saying, "It is impossible to present an accurate view of the women's movement or the ERA without even mentioning Phyllis Schlafly of her successful campaign against ratification of the ERA.

Hurst housewife Jennifer Amo, who described herself as a "domestic engineer," testifies before the State Textbook Committee in opposition to some proposed textbooks.

"Irrespective of biased opinion against the non-feminist philosophy, it is history and it cannot be censored," she said.

Textbook critic Mel Gabler of Longview offered brief remarks and a lengthy printed analysis of the history texts. He said many of the books do not meet state law.

It "ignores or understates the challenge of Soviet imperialism in Vietnam and Grenada," said a typical Gabler comment about one book.

People for the American Way, an anti-censorship organization, praised the proposed texts as a "significant improvement" over books used in past years.

"Fundamentalist critics have uniformly attacked all the books being considered on a series of issues ranging from the U.S. role in Vietnam to the importance of slavery in the Civil War. In effect, they claim that authors, editors and all publishers have conspired to misrepresent these topics. Is this really credible?" said Michael Hudson, the group's Texas coordinator.

Eleanor Hutcheson of Fort Worth complained about little pictures of George Washington.

"With the exception of one text, there's not a picture of George Washington larger than the picture you see on a one-dollar bill. You can see more history of our country on money than you can in these texts," said Mrs. Hutcheson, representing the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Man pleads guilty to murders in family feud

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A 23-year-old man who had been charged with three murders in a long-running family feud at a housing development has pleaded guilty to two murder charges.

In exchange for a 20-year sentence and the dropping of other charges against him, Joe Patlan accepted a plea-bargain arrangement after a morning of intense negotiations and pleaded guilty Monday to the Dec. 9 shooting deaths of David Cardenas and Juan Gonzales.

Patlan's plea occurred in an atmosphere of strict security in 187th District Court. Spectators were required to pass a metal detector before entering the courtroom lined with extra bailiffs.

The security was to guard against further violent outbreaks between the Cardenas and Garcia families, whose vicious feud in the San Juan Courts housing development on the city's west side has left five people dead over the past year.

Patlan is a cousin of the Garcias.

"This is the most unusual case I've known in the five years of my practice," prosecutor Jody Tullos said. "It's like TV, like Perry Mason. Of course, it's also unusual in that we've lost so many witnesses between trials."

In accepting Patlan's plea, District Judge Pat Priest also agreed to Tullos' plans to drop three other cases related to the family feud — murder, attempted murder and aggravated asssault.

Originally, the state had planned to prosecute Patlan for the Oct. 21, 1984, beating death of Ernesto Cardenas. However, Tullos characterized the state's chances of winning that case as a "toss-up" because so many witnesses have been murdered since the incident.

Contributing to the necessity for a plea-bargain was Patlan's insistence that he was not involved in Ernesto Cardenas' murder or the other incidents for which he had been charged, Patlan's attorney said.

"He felt he had a moral obligation not to confess to a murder he was not involved in," attorney Ralph Lopez said.

By contrast, he added, Patlan freely admitted to killing David Cardenas and Gonzales with a .22-caliber pistol after the two allegedly threatened him at a Garcia family picnic.

In pleading guilty to the two murders, Patlan cut short an anticipated week-long trial and shortly will join cousin Ruben Garcia in the Texas Department of Corrections. Garcia, 25, was found guilty last month of participating in Ernesto Cardenas' death and sentenced to 25 years in prison.

But before Patlan was taken away yesterday, Tullos pledged to cooperate with authorities to prevent him from threatened retaliation from people already in prison.

"There are some members of the families at TDC who for several months have directed rumors at Ruben Garcia and Joe Patlan and said that if they ever went to prison, there would be retaliation," Lopez said.

Two New Mexicans die in wreck near Big Spring

BIG SPRING (AP) — Two people from Lovington, N.M., including a teen-ager trapped in a burning van died Monday after the van went over an overpass on Interstate 20, authorities said.

The driver, identified as Andy Dunlap, 34, of Balch Springs, was listed in stable condition at Malone-Hogan Hospial, a hospital spokesman said.

His mother, Wanda Landers, 54, and his nephew, Eric Deaver, 14, were pronouced dead at the scene by Howard County Justice of the Peace China Long.

Their van was westbound just east of here on I-20 about 5 p.m. when it struck a curb on the inside lane and traveled about 500 feet out of control, a Department of Public Safety spokesman said. The van then rolled on top of the overpass guardrail for about 70 feet before falling over the overpass and striking a concrete embankment about 12 feet down.

Mrs. Landers was then thrown from the vehicle, which continued to roll end-over-end down the embankment and caught fire.

A passing motorist was able to free Dunlap from the van, but the boy was trapped in the back of the van. Flames engulfed the vehicle before he could be freed.

'Most wanted' man caught

AUSTIN (AP) — A second man from the "most-wanted" lists of parents delinquent in child support payments has been arrested.

Attorney General Jim Mattox announced Monday that Daniel Soto, 24, was arrested following tips from neighbors who said Soto was moving.

The attorney general last week announced the program under which names of "most-wanted" suspects are being made public in five cities. Those on the list are chronically delinquent in child support payments, Mattox said.

On Thursday, the day the program was launched, authorities arrested a Fort Worth man. Soto was arrested late Friday, Mattox said Monday, adding that the man allegedly owed $1,822 in support payments. Mattox said another man on the San Antonio list saw his name and voluntarily contacted the attorney general's regional office, paying $1,300.

WTU to give bigger refund

ABILENE (AP) — The 175,000 customers of West Texas Utilities may get an even bigger break on their utility bills than they had earlier expected.

West Texas Utilities said Monday it wants to refund another $3.9 million to its customers, bringing to $17.6 million the total amount it has proposed refunding.

For the average customer, that would mean an additional $9 added to the average refund of $32, the company said.

The utility, which serves a 52-county area of West Texas, had said July 2 it would refund $13.7 million.

Company officials said Monday the additional refund amount reflects the fuel cost savings achieved in June and a lump sum refund of the remaining balance reconciled in the company's last rate case.

Jury awards $27.3 million

BEAUMONT (AP) — What has been called the longest civil trial in Jefferson County history has ended with what is believed to be the largest monetary verdict in the area, district court officials said.

A jury on Monday awarded Lebo Mancuso Jr., Reagan duPerier and Michael deBlanc $27.3 million after they contended they were defrauded by Crown Central Petroleum Co. of Baltimore.

The three accused Crown of fraud in the purchase of their Lafayette, La.-based oil company, Teche Petroleum, for $1.5 million in 1981.

According to the plaintiffs, Crown gave them three-year employment contracts, tax benefits to compensate for the sale of their company and stock benefits from Crown.

The plaintiffs' attorneys said the men were fired "one by one by the company in violation of the employment agreement."

Experts doubt cancer will reoccur during Reagan term

WASHINGTON (AP) — If President Reagan has a recurrence of his recently removed cancer, it probably will not occur during the remainder of his presidency, nor affect his performance greatly even if it does reappear, say some cancer experts.

Following disclosure that the polyp found in Reagan's colon contained a cancer on the verge of escaping his intestine, specialists said Monday that the president's chances of staying cancer-free are relatively good.

Odds of holding off the disease for another three years, or of even working with a resurgence of cancer before Reagan's second term ends in January 1989, also look promising, some say.

Doctors attending Reagan said it appears the adenocarcinoma in the two-inch polyp surgically removed Saturday remained confined inside the intestine and did not invade outside tissues.

"The majority of patients in exactly the president's situation will certainly survive five years and beyond. It's certainly greater than 50 percent," said one of his physicians, Dr. Steven Rosenberg, chief of surgery at the National Cancer Institute.

Tests done at the Bethesda Naval Hospital, where Reagan is being treated, showed that cancer in the villus adenoma polyp was confined within the bowel wall muscle of the two-foot piece of intestine removed, said Dr. Dale Oller, head of the surgical team that treated the president.

The examinations, confirmed by the National Cancer Institute and the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology, indicated the cancer had not spread to the blood vessels, nerves, fatty tissue and lymph nodes near the polyp, he said.

Lymph nodes are nodules found throughout the body that filter waste and unwanted microorganisms from a fluid called lymph that comes from blood. Doctors consider spread of a cancer to this widespread lymph system a bad sign for checking the disease.

Based upon pathological grading of the tumor and its spread, statistics drawn from colon cancer studies indicate the president has between a 50 percent and a 75 percent chance of surviving for five years without a return of the malignancy.

"There is no evidence that this cancer has spread," Rosenberg continued. "I think the chances are excellent that this tumor will not recur again."

Other physicians also were optimistic about the possibility of the president's cancer being cured, the measure of which is normally staying cancer-free five years after treatment.

Dr. Arthur I. Holleb, the American Cancer Society's senior vice president for medical affairs, said the president's tumor appeared to be a localized cancer with a good prognosis.

"I would anticipate a full recovery for the president and a normal life span," Holleb said.

Dr. Oliver Alabaster, director of cancer research at George Washington University Medical Center in Washington, said there was probably an 80 percent to 90 percent chance that Reagan's cancer had not spread. But it is possible some cancer cells could have escaped undetected through blood vessels, he said.

"Many patients who have what the president had have recovered," Alabaster said in an interview. "But because colon cancer is such a slow-growing disease, it often does not occur for years if it does recur.

"Chances are that it will not recur during his presidency," Alabaster continued. "But if it does, it probably is not going to make a difference in how he does his job. People who have colon cancer can still function very well for a time. It's not a type of cancer, like lung cancer, that drags people down right away."

But if the cancer springs up in other organs, such as the lungs or the liver, other experts said, the outcome may be swifter and more deadly.

Dr. Marshall Bedine, a colon cancer expert at Johns Hopkins Medical School, said he felt Reagan had better than a 60 percent chance of five-year survival based upon the information released by the White House.

"With proper followup, I think he has a reasonable chance of living through his (presidential) term with no problem," Bedine said.

Once a person has had colon cancer, he is at greater risk of having a future cancer in the colon or in a nearby organ, particularly the liver, where cells from the original tumor may have migrated, specialists say. Continued testing for later cancers, hopefully leading to their early diagnosis and treatment, is required.

Most physicians contacted about the president's case endorsed Rosenberg's suggestions that Reagan get a thorough exam of his colon in six months, including a repeat of the colonoscope test that discovered the polyp last week. In this test, doctors view the entire large intestine through a flexible tube device.

They also said the president should have CT-scan X-ray studies of his liver and other abdominal organs at the same time, as well as chest X-rays, and that the tests be repeated annually.

Rosenberg also called for blood tests every two months to tip doctors to the possibility of a hidden cancer. The tests use antibodies to detect CEA, or carcinoembryonic antigen, a protein not normally found in adults that is secreted by certain cancer cells, including colon cancer.

CEA tests and looking for blood in feces can give some of the first clues to an undetected tumor.

Experts also suggested that Reagan consider a slight alteration in his diet. Evidence indicates colon cancer is less common in people who eat low-fat, high-fiber diets, Rosenberg said. Eating less fatty meat and more whole-grain breads, fruits and green, leafy vegetables might be beneficial.

Most cancer experts said there was little evidence that supplemental therapy, such as radiation or anti-cancer drugs, decreases chances of recurrence or increases survival in colon cancer cases.

Dr. LaSalle D. Leffall Jr., chairman of surgery at Howard University's School of Medicine in Washington and past president of the American Cancer Society, said no therapy other than surgery is required in cases where colon cancer has not spread to other tissues or organs.

Radiation, which doctors sometimes use with surgery in treating colon cancer that has spread from the primary site, also is not indicated in Reagan's case, he added.

Nancy Reagan 'calmly' takes news of Reagan's cancer

NATION

BETHESDA, Md. (AP) — Nancy Reagan, feeling drained and alone during President Reagan's surgery ordeal, listened "calmly without blinking" as doctors told her the large growth removed from her husband's colon was cancerous.

While the president read a book in his room and waited to hear the outcome of pathological tests, Mrs. Reagan was told of the findings in a 30-minute meeting with his doctors, letting her come to grips with the news before she went in to to see her husband.

"She asked clear, concise questions of them and listened very intently as they spoke," said presidential spokesman Larry Speakes. He was with the first lady and White House Chief of Staff Donald T. Regan as they heard the doctors' report in the sitting room adjacent to the president's bedroom at Bethesda Naval Hospital.

Mrs. Reagan had cried alone three days earlier when she learned that the growth might be malignant, but she was dry-eyed when those fears were confirmed, officials said.

Doctors told her they thought all of the cancerous tissue was removed before it spread to other parts of Reagan's body.

"She took it very calmly, without blinking — looked straight ahead," Speakes said.

Asked if she was upset, Speakes said, "Well, of course, as always, as anyone can imagine, certainly she's concerned and curious and has questions. But Mrs. Reagan accepted the news in a very calm fashion."

Determined to change her schedule as little as possible, Mrs. Reagan returned to the White House on Monday afternoon to substitute for Reagan as host to the Washington diplomatic corps at a concert of the Boston Pops on the South Lawn. The orchestra is celebrating its 100th anniversary.

In the limousine ride from the hospital, Mrs. Reagan said "she was relieved to hear the report that all the cancer has been removed," Speakes said.

Standing before the diplomatic audience in sweltering heat, she did not mention the president's illness, saying only, "My husband is sorry he can't be with you, and I'm sort of a stand-in. But he's asked me to give you his very best wishes and his regrets."

After the concert, she invited the 422 guests into the mansion, where she stood in a receiving line for nearly an hour, shaking hands with diplomats and thanking them for their expressions of concern about the president.

While Mrs. Reagan appeared composed in public, she was described by her press secretary, Jennefer Hirshberg, as feeling "drained and a sense of aloneness."

Mrs. Reagan spent the night at the White House, as she has since the president entered the hospital last Friday. She talked to friends and family members by telephone, Ms. Hirshberg said.

"She didn't want to leave the hospital but he wanted her" to go ahead with her schedule, the press aide reported.

Even so, Mrs. Reagan will cut short a trip Wednesday to the aircraft carrier USS America, returning to the White House after a few hours' visit instead of spending overnight. The trip is intended to let her see a Navy program to combat drug abuse aboard ships.

Even before Mrs. Reagan went to the hospital on Monday, she expressed apprehension about what she would hear. "I can't wait for this day to be over," she was quoted as saying by Ms. Hirshberg.

The first lady arrived at Bethesda carrying a balloon emblazoned with the words, "Get Well." When the president saw it, he said, "OK by me."

It was 2:40 p.m. EDT when Dr. Dale Oller, chief of surgery at Bethesda, and Dr. Steven Rosenberg, chief of surgery at the National Cancer Institute, informed Mrs. Reagan of the test results. Also present, in addition to Speakes and Regan, were White House physicians Burton Smith and John Hutton.

As the White House staff members waited outside, the four doctors and Mrs. Reagan went in to present the news to the president.

In contrast to the half-hour discussion with Mrs. Reagan, the doctors spent only five minutes with the president.

Reagan cancer leads news abroad

Associated Press

News that the tumor removed from President Reagan's bowel was cancerous received front-page treatment in Europe today. Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain, one of Reagan's closest allies, conveyed her "love, affection and best wishes."

The announcement Monday that cancer had been found in Reagan's colon was the lead item on British television and radio, and front page news in all 10 daily newspapers published in London.

Mrs. Thatcher called Reagan's chief of staff, Donald Regan, at the White House on Monday night and gave him a message for the president. Her office said she asked Regan to convey a message of "love, affection and best wishes."

In Sweden the national newspaper Aftonbladet said in a commentary that Reagan's illness and the ascendancy of Mikhail S. Gorbachev in Moscow might change U.S.-Soviet relations.

"The Americans were used to being represented by a healthy and mobile cowboy-figure in stark contrast with palpably ill, perhaps dying, men in the Kremlin: Brezhnev, Andropov, Chernenko...Now the Soviet Union has a manifestly young vital leader, Mikhail Gorbachev, who in a few months will be standing side by side with Ronald Reagan in Geneva. And in the eyes of the world, the comparison this time won't be to the advantage of the American. This must surely effect the self-esteem of the Americans and, thus, U.S. policy in the near future," the newspaper said.

The news came too late for most morning newspapers in Asia.

In Tokyo, the chief Cabinet secretary was quoted today as saying he was surprised at the news that the tumor removed from Reagan's colon Saturday was cancerous, but expressed hope the president would recover early.

"I was pleased that the operation was a sucess," officials of the prime minister's office quoted Takao Fujinami as saying.

The Sun, Britain's top-selling newspaper with a circulation of 4.1 million, said of Reagan: "In his years in the White House he has done much to revive the U.S. economy and to restore American pride in their country. He has also proved a courageous and resolute leader of the entire Western world, leaving the Kremlin in no doubt whatsoever of our willingness and ability to defend ourselves. This morning Ronald Reagan should be in all our prayers."

London's Daily Mirror, which supports the socialist opposition Labor Party, scorned remarks by Reagan's doctors that he was making an amazing recovery. I wished Reagan "a genuine recovery, not a public relations one."

TWA purser buys jet fuel with her credit card

NEW YORK (AP) — TWA purser Uli Derickson, who was widely praised for heroism aboard hijacked Flight 847, twice used her personal credit card to buy gas — $11,000 in all — as the jet shuttled between Algeria and Lebanon, airline officials say.

TWA spokeswoman Sally McElwreath confirmed the incident Monday, and said the airline would pay Ms. Derickson's bill. "We don't have the bill yet, so we don't know what company," Ms. McElwreath said.

Newsweek magazine, in this week's editions, quotes TWA Capt. John Testrake as calling the charge card incident "the most bizarre episode" of the hijacking.

According to Testrake, when the hijackers demanded the jet be refilled with fuel at the Algiers airport, airport officials refused because TWA did not have a charge account with them.

When one of the airport crew began shouting for a Shell credit card, Ms. Derickson pulled one out of her purse and the Algerians used it to charge 6,000 gallons of fuel. The same thing happened when the plane returned to Algiers from Beirut, Testrake said, and Ms. Derickson wound up with about $11,000 in fuel charges on her card.

Jack Doherty, a spokesman for the Shell Oil Co. in Houston, said the company had no record of an account with Ms. Derickson or any unusually large purchases on a Shell card around the time of the hijacking.

However, he said, the card could have been issued through any of the Royal Dutch Shell companies around the world.

Women make voting agreement

WORLD

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — U.S. and Third World delegates to a U.N. women's conference reached a compromise on voting procedures that may help determine what the conference says about the status of women in several politically sensitive areas.

Both the United States, which demanded consensus approval of all resolutions, and the developing countries which form the largest voting block and sought majority vote, claimed victory in Monday's agreement.

Under the compromise, the delegates to the U.N. Decade for Women's final conference will seek consensus on each resolution but individual resolutions may be put to a vote.

U.S. delegation leader Maureen Reagan, President Reagan's daughter, called the compromise "a moral victory ... a victory for the conference."

Ms. Reagan said the compromise meant "a great deal of our work is going to be a lot easier," but added: "It doesn't mean that we won't have trouble, and there will be people who will test us."

But Third World delegates said the victory was theirs and the United States had saved face. Majority votes would almost assure passage of their resolutions.

Voting procedure is important because such issues as the the status of black women in white-ruled South Africa and Arab women in territory occupied by Israel may pit the United States against a combination of Third World and Eastern bloc delegations.

Ambassador Alan Keyes, the only man in the U.S. delegation, said the compromise put delegations under "a moral obligation .. . a commitment of trust" to try for consensus.

Keyes, who is the U.S. representative to the U.N. Economic and Social Council, said any country moving away from consensus would "bear the onus of introducing those divisions into the conference."

The compromise came a few hours after the opening of the conference, which marks the end of a decade dedicated by the United Nations to the advancement of women. It has attracted more than 3,000 official delegates along with about 11,000 observers and participants at non-governmental workshops that started July 10.

Fiji's decision praised

SUVA, Fiji (AP) — The U.S. secretary of state told officials of the South Pacific island nation of Fiji today that their decision to reopen ports to all U.S. warships was a wise move that would improve security in the region.

George P. Shultz spoke during a four-hour stopover in Fiji on his way home from a meeting of Southeast Asian nations, and talks in Australia. He is also due to stop in Honolulu.

Fiji's decision last year to lift a ban on visits by U.S. nuclear warships made the Pacific more secure, Shultz said. He characterized it as a "bold and wise" move.

Shultz also said the United States would begin providing Fiji with $1.5 million a year in aid on Oct. 1.

Banzer's lead widening

LA PAZ, Bolivia (LAT) — Former President Hugo Banzer, a conservative candidate for the Bolivian presidency, pulled into a substantial lead Monday in unofficial returns from Sunday's general election, but not enough to avoid a runoff contest in Congress.

Banzer was winning with more than 37 percent of the estimated total of 1.7 million votes cast as the unofficial vote count reached 650,000. Victor Paz Estenssoro, also a former president, trailed Banzer with 24 percent of the votes counted.

In third place was Jaime Paz Zamora, 46, candidate of the leftist Revolutionary Left Movement, with nearly 10 percent of the vote. The rest of the votes were dispersed among 15 other candidates, including Roberto Joran Pando, running for the left-wing coalition now in power under President Hernan Siles Zuazo.

The vote was a clear protest against the incumbent government under which Bolivia is suffering inflation at the world's highest level, with a 10,000 percent increase in the consumer price index in the past 12 months.

Little progress noted

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — The chief Soviet negotiator at the superpower arms talks in Geneva, Viktor P. Karpov, today said there had been no progress in the second round of the talks.

Karpov, speaking to reporters before the start of the final session of the second round, said progress in the next round "depends upon the other (U.S.) side."

The final session at the Soviet mission to the United Nations, which included all six principle negotiators and their aides, lasted about one hour. The U.S. negotiating team of about 15 people, led by Max M. Kampelman, made no comment.

Speaking to reporters in Russian before the U.S. team arrived, Karpov said, "There has been no progress. None."

Police action praised

LONDON (AP) — Police in Northern Ireland are winning praise from Roman Catholic politicians who see tough police action against Protestant marchers as a radical shift to a more even-handed approach toward feuding religious factions.

The praise is coming both from Catholic politicians in the British-ruled, Protestant-dominated province and from the government of the Irish Republic to the south, which until now generally regarded the Royal Ulster Constabulary, or police, as a tool of Protestant domination.

Portadown, a town of 14,000 people, is a Protestant stronghold 25 miles southwest of Belfast. Every summer for 150 years the Orange Order, a Protestant brotherhood with die-hard allegiance to the British crown, has paraded through Portadown's Catholic enclave in a show of supremacy.

The Marching Season, as the summer parades are known in Northern Ireland, or Ulster, commemorates the Protestant heroes of centuries ago who made their corner of Ireland a part of Britain, and they drive home the message that Protestants outnumber Catholics 2-1 in the province.

Latin debt to be topic

MEXICO CITY (AP) — President Fidel Castro of Cuba will convene a meeting of Latin Americans in Havana July 30 to discuss their nations' huge foreign debts, which he has urged them not to pay, the official Cuban news agency reported.

Most of the hundreds of billions of dollars in debt is owed to U.S. banks.

The official Cuban news agency Prensa Latina, in a dispatch monitored in Mexico, said Monday political and union leaders, journalists and intellectuals from the region would attend.

Confrontations continue in South Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Three days of clashes between black protesters and police in a string of black townships have left at least eight people dead and dozens injured, police and witnesses said.

Police reports said at least 20 communities erupted in violence from the south coast as far north as Johannesburg and at least 45 blacks were arrested.

The outbreaks are the latest in 10 months of anti-segregationist rioting that has claimed at least 450 black lives.

About half of those were killed by police, and the others perished in criminal assaults, attacks on blacks viewed as cooperating with whites, and fighting between different groups opposed to apartheid, the government's institutionalized racial separation policies.

South Africa's 22 million blacks cannot vote or hold citizenship and are ruled by a white minority of 5 million.

In Masizakhe township near Graaff Reinet, about 100 miles north of Port Elizabeth, residents said unrest carried into a third day Monday, with police firing tear gas and rubber bullets at individuals and crowds of blacks for at least five hours.

The residents, speaking on condition they were not identified, reported that police opened fire on a crowd Sunday night, killing a man and wounding more than 20 people.

They said the violence apparently stemmed from a general strike called Saturday to protest the slaying by unknown assailants of Matthew Goniwe, a teacher from nearby Cradock whose dismissal caused one of the first school boycotts in early 1984 and made him a nationwide symbol of resistance.

Their accounts differed with a police report from a spokesman at national police headquarters in Pretoria, who said police in Masizakhe broke up a stone-throwing crowd Monday and arrested one man.

The spokesman, who declined to be identified following department procedures, said six policemen were injured in Monday's upset, and a black protester died earlier.

Masizakhe residents said they did not take the wounded to doctors' offices out of fear the police would arrest them. They said they transported casualties to doctors as far as 155 miles away.

West of Masizakhe, in the township of Darlington, a man's charred body was found under a stack of burning tires, police said Monday.

In Orange Free State, police dispersed a crowd hurling stones, they said Monday. One woman was killed and 21 men were wounded, they reported.

The South African Press Association said pupils rioted and torched two schools in Theunissen, and several were wounded when police arrived to put down the uprisings.

About 300 people attacked government buildings and destroyed homes of two black officials after a high school principal refused to allow a meeting of the militant Congress of South African Students, the agency said.

Police headquarters said it had only a report of a minor incident at Theunissen.

In Ratanda township east of Johannesburg, a youth was shot dead by police and residents burned three policemen's houses, said George Phake, a member of the township Civic Association.

He said the violence followed the police detention of two civic association members after residents refused last week to pay government-ordered rent increases.

Elite Syrian police units now patrolling Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Elite police units armed with automatic rifles and shoulder-fired grenades patrolled main streets of west Beirut today, spearheading a Syrian-sponsored effort to close militia offices and keep armed militiamen off the streets.

Twenty patrols, each made up of five men from the Squad 16 anti-riot police, rolled jeeps out of their mid-city barracks at first light to enforce the new plan, a police statement said.

A newly formed rapid deployment force of 300 Sunni and Shiite Moslem army soldiers was put on alert in two downtown and seafront barracks to back the police force. However, the police said that by mid-morning they had encountered no resistance.

The Syrian-backed plan was approved by leaders of the Druse and Shiite militias, who had issued orders to their fighters to close down offices and clear the streets before the new plan was set in motion at daylight today.

All militia offices along the city's main commercial thoroughfares appeared abandoned today. Party flags, barbed wire fences and sand bags were removed from street corners where the offices had been manned by heavily armed militiamen.

A seven-man committee representing the militias, the army and police met with six Syrian army observers at Prime Minister Rashid Karami's office to assess progress of the plan. Twenty-nine other Syrian officers also were expected.

Karami earlier told reporters police and the rapid deployment force had been empowered to arrest any uniformed or armed militiaman spotted on the streets.

Squad 16 checkpoints were set up on all key crossroads in the city. Policemen in red berets were seen stopping and searching cars and patrolling on foot along streets where banks and government offices are located.

The security plan was negotiated by leaders of the Shiite, Sunni and Druse sects in a two-day meeting last week in Damascus, the Syrian capital.

In Christian east Beirut, the Phalange party and the Lebanese Forces militia said in a statement that they had unified, ending a mutiny launched earlier this year by militia commanders protesting Syria's increasing influence on President Amin Gemayel, a Christian.

Reagan's recovery

The hopes of the American people are with President Ronald Reagan as he continues his recovery from surgery over the weekend. Reports surrounding his recovery to this point all are positive, which marks a blessing for the American people.

An extraordinarily popular president, Reagan's physical and mental health — for a man 74 years old — continues to astound Americans.

The signs are good that Reagan will recover rapidly from this illness. Doctors at Bethesda are optimistic, noting that although a cancerous growth was found inside the president's large intestine, it appeared to have not spread and that all the cancer was believed removed in the surgery. In fact, Navy Capt. Dale Oller, chief of the surgical team that performed Reagan's operation, said the president is doing better than "99.9 percent of all patients who undergo this type surgery. That includes all patients, much less one who is 74 years old." And the president himself is, as usual, cheerful.

But the surgery is a blow to presidential leadership. It makes it unlikely that any meaningful compromise will be reached on the budget bill. Senate Republicans, led by majority leader Robert Dole of Kansas, are unhappy that Reagan did not support them more strongly in the matter of a Social Security freeze and pension cuts, against the opposition of the Democratic House. Dole, it is said, is particularly unhappy because a fellow Republican in the House, Jack Kemp of New York, successfully urged the president to drop the proposal for a pension freeze. Now the budget tangle is not likely to be resolved without active presidential leadership.

So the prospect is that in August the president will go to his ranch and the Congress will go on vacation without any real prospect of reducing the federal budget deficit. That deficit continues to be the nation's most critical problem and must occupy front burner when the Congress resumes its work.

On the positive side is the competent way the president and the White House have handled matters during his surgery.

First, the 25th Amendment was brought into play for the first time when Reagan signed a letter before going under general anesthesia, notifying Vice President George Bush that he would be serving as acting president with full power until the president recovered from the anesthetic. The White House, not wishing to set any precedent, said the new amendment had not been invoked. But it obviously had been, and a sound precedent was established. Reluctant as any chief executive and his staff are to give up full power and responsibility, even temporarily, it must be done in these circumstances. Otherwise there could be confusion in case of a nuclear attack, which could come with scarcely a moment's notice. It is a remote possibility, but one that must be taken into account.

Second, the White House has continued the policy, established first under President Eisenhower, of full disclosure of the medical details of the president's condition. That's good; nothing less would do, despite the embarrassment occasionally caused to the president and his family. Public confidence rests upon full public information.

White House chief of staff Donald Regan, Vice President Bush and Nancy Reagan are in strongly supportive roles. The president himself is the focus of national attention, and we have every reason to believe he will take it all in stride. That is, after all, the Ronald Reagan style.

A worthwhile topic

Sooner or later, it had to happen. With all of the people going into space for longer and longer periods of time, the idea of sex in outer space had to be addressed.

With $8 billion being invested on a permanent space station that will house men and women astronauts for periods of more than three months, NASA researchers have raised Topic No. 1.

Although both the Soviet Union and the United States have sent women into space, NASA doesn't believe there's been any hanky-panky — yet. Whether sex should be considered a factor in the space race isn't clear, but we don't know what might happen if the Soviets were to get ahead of us in the sexual revolution.

To prevent the development of a dangerous gap between the great powers in this field, we suggest that the Soviet Union and the United States proceed at once in Geneva to negotiate a treaty relating to sex in space.

That should make the latest round of treaty negotiations at least more interesting.

Another View: One-party Mexico

Mexico's electoral system, as again displayed this week, is an undemocratic anomaly. Citizens may vote for parties of their choice but only one of them, the Institutional Revolutionary Party, is allowed to win. This puts Mexico in the uncomfortable company of Chile, Haiti, Paraguay, Cuba, and Nicaragua — the other Latin governments that permit no significant opposition. That is odd company for a society long associated with the cause of Latin American democracy.

Why Mexicans put up with this anomaly is something of a riddle. They have largely surrendered their political life to the electoral machine of the Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI. For 56 years, they have permitted it to elect every president, every state governor, most mayors, and the overwhelming majority of each national Congress.

The party used to boast, with some justice, that it repaid this trust by substituting stability, liberty, and economic development for the pre-revolutionary upheaval and decline. But those gains have long since been absorbed. Modern Mexico is an increasingly urban, industrial, and complex society that should not have to suffer monopoly rule.

The unofficial election results from this week's balloting suggest a desire for change. But they also suggest that the desire will continue to be frustrated.

The National Action Party was thought to have a shot at one or two state governorships in northern Mexico. To beat back the challenge the PRI used all its weapons, from the open flaunting of patronage to instances of apparently outright fraud. Reports accumulate about absent poll watchers, suspicious voter lists, missing ballot boxes, taxis full of uncounted ballots, subtotals reported in implausibly round numbers.

Yet despite these obstacles, the National Action Party may have captured an unprecedented number of congressional seats — it claims 16 of the 300 directly contested seats. In the last Congress the PRI held 299.

The PRI's component units are theoretically providing indirect representation for groups of workers, peasants, and other population sectors. But it has become mainly a permanent bureaucracy, governing through patronage and riddled with corruption clear to the top. Mexico preaches something better, and deserves it.

French have better 'difference'

WASHINGTON — There's a whale of a difference between the way the French military buys its weapons and the way it's done in this country. U.S. defense contractors and their Pentagon pals may well cry gratefully, "Vive la difference!"

Jack Anderson

But American taxpayers would save billions if only the Defense Department would adopt the no-nonsense, superbly efficient French military-procurement system.

Believe it or not, someone high up in the Pentagon knows this and has cited the advantages of "la methode francaise" in a hard-hitting memo that was obtained by our associate Indy Badhwar.

The memo makes some impressive claims for French efficiency, economy and incorruptibility. If their procurement system were adopted here, the memo indicates, it would virtually depopulate the Pentagon, drive the "Beltway Bandits" out of their lucrative consulting jobs — and bring the military budget back to earth.

Here's the memo's explanation for these promised wonders:

Although France is the world's third largest arms producer (after the United States and the Soviet Union), its military contracts are handled by "an astonishingly small bureaucracy." At most 25 experienced, well-paid professionals in the Armament Directorate "do the work of, quite literally, tens of thousands of us bureaucrats in the Washington area," the Pentagon memo discloses, adding sardonically: "Of course, most of us are writing memos to each other."

According to the memo, a senior French official was asked how they managed and replied: "But of course. Twenty-five people is plenty. How long does it take a well-informed person to decide at a ministerial level that this missile or that aircraft is a good or bad idea? It is not any more a question of detailed studies but a question of common sense and political courage."

If the Pentagon patterned its procurement after the French Armament Directorate, "tens of thousands of bureaucrats would be unhorsed," the memo states, adding:

"There would also be a ripple effect because tens of thousands of people in the engineering-support-consultant-think tank-defense-intellectual business (generically called 'Beltway Bandits') would also be superfluous because there would be nobody left to read the tons of drivel they turn out every year."

Furthermore, the memo gloats, "lobbyists, congressional staffers and the diamond cufflink-Gucci set in the Washington offices of the major corporations would be out of work because the people left in the bureaucracy would be too busy and too smart to bother with them."

What is there about the French system that would achieve these miracles? For one thing, the defense minister is the procurement czar and the military chiefs of staff "have little to do with procurement besides being the end users and defining requirements," the memo explains. A chosen few officers from the combat branches are allowed to move into the Armament Directorate; they "are highly qualified, spend their entire careers at the job and get very good at it." And they are not forced to retire at an early age.

Furthermore, "anyone who negotiates any kind of contract is forbidden from going to work for the contractor for five years," the memo notes, adding: "They enforce this rule and are perfectly willing to impose prison sentences on miscreants."

Summing up, the memo lists the features of the French system that the U.S. system lacks: strong checks and balances, a tiny bureaucracy, thoroughly trained personnel with good job security and, finally, "incentives to do the right thing and not the wrong thing."

Footnote: In fairness to the Pentagon, we should note one crucial factor the French procurement system lacks that ours has in abundance: interference from legislators hungry for home-state defense contracts.

SCANDAL OF THE WEEK: The government has kissed off complaints by veterans who took part in atomic tests between 1946 and 1962, claiming that these ex-GIs show no greater incidence of cancer than the general population. But today (July 16) the National Association of Atomic Veterans will present statistics to Congress showing that their cancer rate is a lot higher than that of veterans who were exposed to little or no radiation: 34 percent higher, in fact.

The fallacy in the government's position is that ex-GIs started out as the healthiest part of the U.S. population, so the only fair comparison is atomic veterans vs. non-atomic veterans.

WATCH ON WASTE: The Bonneville Power Administration promised to repay the Treasury about a billion dollars over the 1981-84 period. How much did Bonneville actually repay? A scant $2 million.

• • •

MINI-EDITORIAL: Last month the Democratic National Committee rubber-stamped Chairman Paul Kirk's slate of 25 at-large members for the 377-person committee. According to a spokesman, the traditional purpose of the at-large seats is to create a better balance for groups that may be under-represented on the national committee. Surveying the Democrats' disaster at the polls last November, it's fairly obvious that some groups are under-represented in the party councils: business people, farmers and young people. So who got the 25 seats? Labor, blacks, Hispanics and women. There's none so blind as those who will not see.

RUSSELL BAKER

Only fools want service for junk!

NEW YORK — The United States now has a service economy.

This is why the service you get is even worse than the service you got in the last economy we had, which was a throwaway economy.

Russell Baker

In a throwaway economy, service is so rotten that people with things that need service are jeered at if they try to obtain service instead of throwing the stuff away.

The new service economy carries things one step further. In this type of economy you, as the customer, are expected to double as the service department for the company that's taking your money.

Almost everybody must now know about the telephone service. Those who don't are lucky.

The exciting idea behind the new service is to make the customer install his own telephone. No wonder AT&T was bankrupt; its customers were not paying for the fun of working for it.

When a customer ordered a phone the company paid somebody to install it, then charged the labor cost to the customer. Now the customer not only has to install it himself; he also has to pay the company for doing its work for it.

Obviously I am irrational on this subject.

And I have every right to be.

You'd be irrational, too, if you had flunked out of MIT for failing Doorbell Installation 101 and then, late in life, had been charged exorbitantly for the privilege of learning to install your own dandy new Touch-Tone telephone and — despite a dozen puncture wounds — had finally got the thing hooked up, only to discover that the wire in your house was incompatible with the Touch-Tone phones, with the result that — with the result that the dandy new phone had to be undone, sent back to the shop as useless, replaced by a rotary-dial phone, which had to be reinstalled at a cost in time, patience and life force which —

Do I sound as though I am coming unhinged? This is what the service economy does to people. Oh, I could tell you tales worse than the tales told by people who have been pressganged by telephone companies, but recitations of sufferings are pointless. It is better to understand why suffer we must.

The explanation lies in the service economy's nature. In a service economy there is little interest in manufacturing. Making things, in fact, has become a nuisance to American business because of high domestic labor costs and other costly social, tax, and economic complications involved in the manufacturing business in this country.

So American business goes abroad and hires sweated foreign labor to provide more and more of our consumer goods and the raw materials that go into them.

Very quickly, traditions that once created pride in workmanship fade and die. Industrial America becomes not so industrial anymore, but more and more just an importer and marketer of foreign goods. Cynicism about the product as junk becomes widespread.

Financial markets with their skittish daily judgments of what is valuable begin to dominate corporate thought. The need to improve the corporate stock performance each quarter lessens the long-range importance once assigned to planning for growth and long-term improvement and intensifies management's urge to make money, more and more money, at whatever cost in everything else.

Increasingly, top management jobs go not to people who know how to run airlines, make cars, build better light bulbs, but to those who know how to manipulate Wall Street, play the tax game so they can show even more profit next quarter, finagle big bucks out of the Pentagon.

There are a lot of ways to make money that have nothing to do with producing a useful product or service. There is the Wall Street merger game. Or you can take advantage of the tax law's freakishness and turn footling enterprises into hefty profits. Some companies even use bankruptcy for profit.

So we get the service economy. It makes very little that's useful. Blockbuster movies, best-selling books, junk foods, TV mini-series, summer football exploitations — junk. And it provides no very useful services, unless you think it useful to have accountants to wrestle with the tax authorities and lawyers to sue your doctor and your newspaper.

If the business community views the market as a junk bazaar, it's probably natural for service to disappear. Only fools want service for junk. Yet some services remain essential. That is why we have ended up with telephone companies that charge us for doing their work.

CHARLEY REESE

Middle East battle lines in place

A Middle East crisis, such as the recent hijacking, is like a rain in the desert: it causes American ignorance of the area to reappear like new blooms on desert plants.

Charley Reese

I saw in one analysis a reference to Egypt and Jordan as American allies. They are not our allies. They have both explicitly and publicly so stated. They have both taken pains recently to establish good relations with the Soviet Union. The United States has, in fact, not one single ally among the Arab nations. Not one will allow an American military base on its soil.

Americans must realize that the Arab countries see themselves as a separate entity. They are not and they do not want to be a part of either the American or Soviet bloc. That does not mean they will not play one off against the other. The Syrians and Libyans are loading up with Soviet weapons and the Egyptians are tapping our treasury but in all instances they see themselves as simply using the superpowers. The Soviets drive a tougher bargain than we do. Our State Department puts pink strings on our aid. The Kremlin put heavy ropes on it aid. Nevertheless, what all the Arab leaders fear most is getting caught in the middle.

Another ever-blooming American myth about the Middle East is that our support of Israel is the main cause of hostility between the Arab nations and us. Nonsense. The entire history of the West and Islam is a history of conflict. Both the Arab and Ottoman Empires attempted to take over Europe and were beaten back. In between, Europeans invaded the Islamic countries and hung on for about 200 years before being driven out. Then Europeans colonized the Islamic countries.

It is more truthful to say that the reason some Arab leaders hate Israel is because they see it as an intrusion of the West into an area they consider as their own. What Islamic fundamentalists hate about the West is not our aid to Israel but us, our culture, and our values which they see as a threat to theirs. They don't like us for the same reason the Rev. Jerry Falwell doesn't like Hugh Hefner and his Playboy empire.

Still another myth is the American belief that Arab leaders may be categorized as moderates or extremists. The favorite "moderate" of American journalists is King Hussein of Jordan. King Hussein is a dictator with a well-oiled secret police. He slaughtered between 20,000 and 30,000 Palestinians, including women and children, in his famous assault on the PLO. He continues to sentence to death West Bank Palestinians for the "crime" of selling their own property to a Jew. He has attacked Israel every time he thought he could get away with it. He desecrated or destroyed Jewish holy places and property while he illegally occupied East Jerusalem and the West Bank. He has decreed a policy of Judenrein — no Jew can live within Jordan's borders. He flat refuses to sit down at the negotiating table with Israel. What in Allah's name is moderate about him?

There is no difference in the degree of hostility of Arab leaders toward Israel. They differ in tactics and they kill each other over tactical differences. If you want to call a man who wants to destroy Israel one way a moderate because another wishes to destroy it in a still different way, you can, but you are a blockhead.

The worst myth is that there is a solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict. In my judgment, there is not. The position of every Arab leader I have talked with or read about is that the establishment of a non-Arab state on what they consider to be Arab land was an act of aggression by Western colonial powers. Arabs know with a fatalistic certainty that 3.5 million Jews cannot survive as a nation indefinitely in a sea of 130 million Arabs.

In the long term, the only hope for Israel's survival is either to become a nation of 6 to 8 million Jews or to come to terms with the Arabs. The Arabs would not come to terms when Israel was more powerful than they were; I certainly see no reason why anyone should think they will now that Israel steadily grows weaker than they are.

Contemporary Americans, of all the people on the Earth, dislike most facing unpleasant truths. Reality is not affected, however, by our perceptions of it. As Western military power has declined and Soviet military power has increased, the balance of power between Israel and its Arab foes has tipped in favor of the Arabs. More than once the Soviet Union has completely re-supplied Arab armies defeated at great cost by the Israelis and done it virtually overnight. The U.S. does not have that capability.

Those Americans who thought the military balance between the United States and the Soviet Union was a minor issue are about to learn how terribly wrong they were — in the Middle East and elsewhere.

Perfumes' supposed 'scent-sual' effects surveyed

Copley News Service

Do you feel Chantilly? Are you a Tigress or a Scoundrel?

Whatever your mood or income bracket, perfume manufacturers have got you covered.

Perfume is big business, and because the sense of smell triggers emotions and sexual responses, psychologists have paid a lot of attention to it.

What they've found is that perfume choice is closely related to the wearer's personality — and lifestyle, income and cultural interests can be reflected by it.

Psychologist Dr. Joachim Mensing of a West German university also learned that choices of fragrance are based on three conscious and subconscious criteria: (a) desired lifestyle, (b) special occasions and (c) emotions and associations. If all three are met, the perfume will fit the user like a "second skin."

In his study on the psychology of perfume, Mensing learned that "to some people, certain perfumes are seen as symbols of being able to afford the finest." The study also showed that women buy perfume for particular situations or occasions.

A third test was for emotions, attitudes and associations. "Here, the past mingles with the present to create good or bad feelings about scents," said Mensing.

Using a classic, psychological color test to determine introversion/extroversion and mood stability on a sample of female perfume users, he categorized them into the seven basic fragrance families, which proved to him that one's basic personality and mood affect fragrance preference.

Women who like bright, happy color combinations are usually extroverts, says Mensing, and their preferred perfumes tested out to be fresh-floral scents.

Introverts like softer, less contrasty color combinations and Oriental scents, while emotionally ambivalent types who are introverted have a fragrance need for Oriental-floral scents.

THOSE WHO are introverted, with changing moods, will reach for aldehydic, floral and balsamic scents, and emotionally stable, extroverted types will want the chypre scents.

Those who want to appear classy and sophisticated will gently douse themselves with a classic scent that's well-known and respected, and those who care more about being fashion-forward will reach for something trendy.

CNS Photo

Perfume is as invisible as the fabled emperor's new clothes, yet long after one has left a room the scent's impression can linger on.

Heavy, musk-type scents will be worn by those looking for romance, and light, fresh scents will be common for office and leisure time.

Totally unscientific — but fun — is the casual study of perfume's personality by perfume salespeople. Dealing with thousands of customers over the years, these professionals sometimes feel they can tell what kind of fragrance a woman will buy by judging her appearance.

A perfume saleswoman, who asked not to be identified ("My customers will hate me!"), said casual dressers will most likely ask for Chanel 19 or Calandre, both known for a light and refreshing fragrance.

"Young women — high school through mid-30s — will request Tatiana, Lauren and Anais-Anais," she says, "and elderly ladies will most often ask for Shalimar and Youth Dew."

The perfumes that most shoppers will run to a counter for and spray on themselves are Chloe and Anais-Anais, says the saleswoman. And the perfume that seems to be the most popular with all types of women is L'Air du Temps.

SANDY MISSO has been selling perfumes for more than 10 years. She says top sellers are Anais-Anais, Oscar de la Renta and Opium, but mentions Joy as a classic favorite.

While men always have been interested in their women wearing perfume, many perfume salespeople, like Misso, feel the focus is now on the men's fragrance counter.

What's hot at the men's fragrance counter? Misso says Pierre Cardin, the first Oriental blend for men, continues to be a popular classic, as are Polo, Aramis and Paco Rabanne.

The newest scents, however, belong to Drakkair Noir, Kouros and Giorgio for Men.

Want to be an expert on perfume? Here are some tips from the experts:

— Use perfume sparingly because it's concentrated. Just a dab behind the ears, in the crook of the arm, on the back of the knees or at the wrists is plenty.

— Perfume does spoil, so buy small bottles and use quickly. The best storage place is cool and dark, such as a drawer, where it should keep for about six months.

— The reason we no longer can smell our perfume after a few minutes is because our sense of smell has grown tired and overwhelmed by it. But don't let it fool you into believing nobody else can smell it.

— The fragrance of perfume can change if the wearer eats spicy food.

Clothes do make the woman

By ERMA BOMBECK

I've never been a believer that clothes would do anything for you ... beyond keeping you from getting arrested. As my Mama always said, "It doesn't matter what you look like on the outside, dear. Your pure thoughts, inherent love of mankind, and a nice present to your mother on Mother's Day will create an inner beauty that will dazzle and turn men's heads."

We talked about this a lot of Saturday nights as the two of us died from the excitement of playing 500 rum and reading cocktail napkins out loud to one another.

To some extent, I believed her. I had to hang on to the hope that flashy clothes disguised a bubblegum mentality.

A few weeks ago, it was suggested I do a stint at an ABC affiliate meeting on the stage of Radio City Music Hall wearing a "Dynasty" dress. The dress had been designed by Nolan Miller and worn by Joan Collins and was shortened to accommodate me. (There were a lot more alterations, but I don't want to take up space boring you with all of that.)

As the peach sequined dress was welded to my hips, my entire body snapped to attention. It had never done this before. I slid into the three-inch silver heels and instinctively my hands rested confidently on my hips. I don't usually stand that way. By the time the sequined hat with the veil was in place, my head nearly came off my neck and my lips pursed. I turned to the woman who zipped me up and without meeting her eyes said, "Thank you, darling. You can go now."

Outside the dressing room, a young page was standing guard. "How old are you?" I snapped.

"Nineteen," he said.

"Old enough," I said winking at him.

At the stage, someone directed me to walk across it to the microphone. I surveyed the distance, turned to an electrician and said, "Be a dear and call me a limo."

I cannot begin to tell you what that dress did for me. I nodded a polite hello to John Forsythe, buzzed celebrities with all the warmth of a food processor and sipped wine with a man who made plans with me to take a lunch and take over McGraw-Hill.

At the evening's end, I slipped my Melmac body out of the Lenox dress. My stomach grew back. The dimples reappeared in my elbow and I knew I was in for a restless night of leg cramps. "Do you want the rest of your wine?" asked the dresser. "I don't drink wine," I said. "Alexis does."

There is no doubt in my mind that my mother lied to me.

Later, I called her and said simply, "You lied to me, Mother. The dress does make the woman."

"Nonsense," she said, "it's still what is underneath."

"You don't understand," I said patiently. "I sat next to Linda Evans. I was sober and I knew what I was doing. I would never have done that dressed as me."

She said, "We'll talk."

I have to put that dress back on first before I can do that.

DEAR ABBY

Woman shares past to spare pain

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Ashamed in Amherst," the young woman who left a good husband and two babies for a married man she thought she couldn't live without. She soon realized she had made a terrible mistake, and messed up her life so badly she couldn't go back. She seriously considered suicide.

Abby, this letter will be long, so you have my permission to shorten it or change it any way you wish, but I beg you to print it. — BEEN THERE IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR BEEN THERE: Your letter is long, but I'm running it just as you wrote it:

DEAR "ASHAMED": When I was 23, suicide looked pretty good to me, too.

My husband and I had two beautiful children, ages 2 and 3, our own home, good jobs and lots of nice things, but I had to leave to "find myself."

Leaving was especially easy when I found out that a couple of my "good buddies" at work wanted to be more than good buddies. I was Queen of the May and it was party time. My husband filed for divorce and I went along, figuring it was what he wanted. (I found out later it wasn't.)

Fun-time became less and less fun. And a year later I was living with one of my good buddies who wanted to get married, but I didn't. What a mess I'd made of my life! I'd left a wonderful husband and babies for what? I wanted to go back, but I was too ashamed. I considered all the different methods of suicide I'd ever heard of, trying to decide which would be the least difficult for someone to clean up. And what if I failed? I could be paralyzed, have half a brain, or be permanently damaged somehow. If I succeeded, what was waiting for me after this life? Who would find me? My boyfriend? Someone in my family? A stranger?

My children's precious faces kept popping into my head, and I saw people pitying them and whispering to one another, "Their mother killed herself, you know." Worst of all, my adorable babies would always think it was their fault because children feel guilty about anything that goes wrong in their family, and mine already had my divorce to contend with. I had to tough it out for them.

I'd always believed in God, so I prayed. I told him: "God, I've messed up my life, so from now on I'm not going to do anything unless you tell me to do it. Please, just take over my life and do what you want with me."

Maybe you've never believed in God, but if you have just the faintest idea that he exists, give him a try; that's all he needs to get you started. How he answered my prayer is another long story, with an enormously happy ending.

I'm married again, to the most terrific guy in the world. We've been married for eight years, and it's getting better all the time. (It was only nine years ago that I wanted to end my life.) We have a beautiful 14-month-old daughter, and I'm happier now than I ever thought I could (or deserved) to be.

Abby cares, your babies care, and I care. That's four people right there, and there are many more who would let you know they care, too, if they even suspected how hopeless you feel.

In faith, hope and love ... "BEEN THERE"

DEAR "BEEN THERE": I and countless others are indebted to you for your inspiring testimony. Too bad you'll never know how many lives you've touched because you cared enough to write.

Chance for rain forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

Continued hot temperatures and a slight chance of rain are forecast for the Midland area through Wednesday, according to the National Weather Service.

Forecasters expect partly cloudy skies to hang over the area through Wednesday bringing a 20 percent chance of rain tonight, decreasing to a less than 20 percent chance of isolated late afternoon thunderstorms Wednesday. Tonight's expected low in the upper 60s will warm to a high Wednesday in the mid-90s. Winds will be light and variable tonight, increasing from the south Wednesday at five to 10 mph.

Monday's high of 96 was six degrees below the record set in 1964. This morning's low was five degrees above the 1975 record of 63.

STATE

A weak cool front extended over Northern Texas early this morning all the way from the Red River into the Panhandle and South Plains. A few widely scattered showers were associated with the front, stretching from near Wichita Falls to north of Lubbock.

Elsewhere, high pressure over the northern Gulf continued to dominate the weather pattern, bringing fair to partly cloudy skies.

Overnight temperatures were in the low to middle 70s statewide except for the Davis Mountains, where readings were in the upper 50s.

Behind the cool front, a light northeast wind breezed from Oklahoma into northern portions of Texas, particularly in the Panhandle. Winds were generally south to southeast about 10 mph elsewhere, except along the lower Texas coast, where light and variable winds were reported.

NATION

Thunderstorms spread across the South, East and sections of the West today after shutting highways and knocking out electrical power in New Jersey and spawning a tornado in Colorado.

Showers and thunderstorms moved across eastern Arkansas, southwest Tennessee and northern Mississippi, rumbled along the northern Atlantic Coast and across northern Maine, and were widely scattered across the southern and central Appalachians, southern Georgia and northern Florida.

Thunderstorms that swept across New Jersey Monday evening and early today disrupted electrical power to thousands and closed sections of two major highways over the Raritan River, officials said.

Who's the best? Debate will rage long after tonight

By Wayne Lockwood
Copley News Service

MINNEAPOLIS — The National League is calling Sparky Anderson's bluff.

Sparky, in case you hadn't noticed, has taken lately to offering such opinions as "All the best teams are in the American League. No question about it."

Well, yes, there are some very fine teams in the American League, and Sparky certainly has one of them — the defending world champion Detroit Tigers.

But it has not escaped the notice of those in the National League that their side has won 12 of the last 13 All-Star Games, not to mention 20 of the last 22. Overall, National Leaguers hold a 35-18-1 advantage in this mid-summer exercise.

Surely, there must be someone in their league who can play.

SO, IN effect, the National League has issued a challenge to Anderson, the 1985 American League manager.

You think you're that good? Tell you what. We'll play you with one hand tied behind our backs.

Remember the team you beat last year in the World Series? Well, we'll start five of their players, and put two more on the roster.

We'll start a third baseman whose owner in your league described three years ago as being "in the twilight of his career."

We'll start a pitcher who was 13-18 in your league last season.

We'll use the same manager and coaching staff you beat in the World Series.

AND IF that's not enough, we'll spot you more. We'll start a kid outfielder who's hitting .229.

We'll make sure the only 15-game winner in the major leagues feels insulted and doesn't show up. We'll even arrange a pitching staff with only one left-hander on it.

There you go, Sparky. Take it away. Sure would be embarassing if you didn't win though, wouldn't it?.

That is the scene for this evening's playing of baseball's 56th All-Star Game.

Anderson could be proven right. Perhaps the National League has become a shelter for the too young and the too old.

He also could be proven wrong. Perhaps Darryl Strawberry and Dwight Gooden are not too young, or Pete Rose and Graig Nettles too old.

IT WILL be interesting to see. It will be particularly interesting for those in San Diego, whose connection to this game is more direct than it has been during the previous 16 years of the franchise's existence. Combined.

Only three Padres have started an All-Star Game since the franchise came into being in 1969 — and two of those, Tony Gwynn and Steve Garvey, earned that honor just last year.

The largest previous San Diego delegation to an All-Star game, including coaches, was three. Tonight, it will be 11.

For better or for worse, the Padres will have a great deal to say about the conduct of this game.

Three of the San Diegans were voted into the starting lineup by fans — Nettles, Garvey and Gwynn.

Manager Dick Williams and coaches Deacon Jones, Jack Krol and Ozzie Virgil earned spots by virtue of the Padres' 1984 National League championship.

WILLIAMS, WORKING in concert with other National League managers, selected LaMarr Hoyt and Goose Gossage to his pitching staff and Garry Templeton as an additional infielder.

And, when Gary Carter was injured, catcher Terry Kennedy — runnerup in the fan voting — was added to the roster.

To complete the Padre stamp on this affair, Williams nominated Hoyt (12-4) as his starting pitcher.

Astros' Cruz just hoping to see action

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Finally, Jose Cruz made it back to the All-Star Game. This time, he might even get to play.

His name is not as well-known as those of his National League teammates-for-a-day, guys like Garvey and Nettles and Parker.

He never finishes highly in fan voting for starting All-Star spots. He rarely gets any of the national attention he deserves.

And still, Jose Cruz, a month away from his 38th birthday, manages a pleasant and easy smile when he talks about life in the outfield with the Houston Astros.

"I've been hiding in the backyard," he said Monday prior to a workout at the Hubert H. Humphrey Metrodome. "That's why you never see me."

FOR YEARS, Cruz and the All-Star Game have formed a paradox. Here's a guy who has hit over .300 five times in his career, has knocked in more than 900 runs and has a .287 lifetime average for 15 seasons.

All this, and he's only been chosen for the All-Star team once. That was back in 1980, and what happened was poetic justice in reverse.

Of the 20 non-pitchers on the NL roster for that game, Cruz was the only one who did not play.

"I really don't know why I didn't play," Cruz said. "I was the only one to sit on the bench. I expected I would have at least pinch hit.

"At first, it bothered me. But that went away."

Slowly, and long overdue, Cruz is gaining recognition for being one of the best and most consistent players in baseball. Not enough to match the number of All-Star selections for longtime favorites such as Steve Garvey (10), or Graig Nettles (6), or Dave Parker (5), but at least some.

"I THINK maybe it's because of where I play," said Cruz, without a trace of remorse or animosity. "In Houston, we did not win too many games."

Many veteran Cruz watchers have blamed the lack of notoriety on the Astrodome, considered one of the worst hitter's parks in the major leagues.

Angels washed again

From Staff Reports

The Midland Angels can get no more than a split with the Jackson Mets this season, on the road at least.

The fifth and deciding game of the series between the two Texas League clubs was postponed because of rain Monday night. The Angels, who have won six of their last eight games, continue their Eastern road swing with a game tonight against the Arkansas Travelers. It is the first of a five-game set with the champions of the first half in the Eastern Division.

In other Texas League action, it was Arkansas coming back to beat Beaumont 5-4, El Paso defeating Tulsa 5-2 and Shreveport beat San Antonio, 9-7 to complete a five-game sweep.

Report has Bell to Reds for youths

ARLINGTON (AP) — Texas Rangers third baseman Buddy Bell probably will be dealt to the Cincinnati Reds today for a package of young players, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported, quoting sources close to the negotiations.

The newspaper said that the deal reportedly wasn't finalized, but that it appeared likely that Cincinnati — Bell's first choice all along — had emerged from an original pack of 10 clubs he had agreed to be traded to, the newspaper said.

"Exactly whom the Reds would give up was unclear, but possibilities included 28-year-old outfielder Duane Walker, who had also asked to be traded, and one to three pitchers from a group of Paul O'Neill, Jeff Russell, Fred Toliver, Rob Murphy, Bob Buchanan, Jay Tibbs or Kal Daniels," the newspaper added.

Bell, who must approve the deal before it can go through, insisted he had not yet done that, but has made it clear he would be happy to go home to Cincinnati, where he was raised and still lives, the newspaper said.

"The only thing I can tell you is that there were four or five teams who were still interested the last time I talked to (Rangers General Manager) Tom Grieve," Bell said from his in-season Arlington home.

Grieve said Monday that he has set a timetable of completing the trade by the time play resumes Thursday, when the Rangers begin a four-game series at Detroit.

It was learned that the Yankees had made an offer Sunday that the Rangers had yet to reject.

Players set zero hour, hope for serious negotiations

By John Nelson
AP Sports Writer

MINNEAPOLIS — A baseball official who shall remain nameless for the sake of tranquility paraphrased what he understood to be the union philosophy: "They never negotiate until we set a strike deadline. Until then, nothing ever gets done."

He was being facetious, naturally, then he added, much more seriously: "What do they think we've been doing all this time?"

Facetious or not, this is precisely the feeling of many of the players gathered for tonight's 56th All-Star Game. On Monday in Chicago, the executive board of the Major League Players Association set Aug. 6 as the deadline by which it will strike if no contract agreement is reached.

"Setting a date to shoot for is part of negotiations," Steve Garvey of the San Diego Padres said. "Until you set a definitive date, the other side doesn't really have to negotiate.

"ONCE A date is set, hopefully negotiations will begin seriously right away," he said. "As you know, negotiations never begin until the 11th hour anyway."

Pete Rose, player-manager of the Cincinnati Reds, said the two sides would "dicker and dicker before they realize that both sides are serious. That's when they'll get on to business."

In response to the union's action, Lee MacPhail, president of the owners' Player Relations Committee, issued a statement that voiced the obligatory regret, then added: "We do not want a strike. It would be a failure on both our parts and unfair to our fans. We will make every reasonable effort consistent with our obligations to the game and the public to reach an agreement before the August 6th deadline."

Like Garvey and Rose, two veterans of the 1981 strike, most players said they felt a deadline was a necessity, but not necessarily a precursor to a strike. And, they agreed with MacPhail that they do not want a strike.

"A settlement can be reached in 48 hours if they really want to," Garvey said.

ST. LOUIS second baseman Tommy Herr, who leads the NL with 68 RBI, said the theory behind a strike deadline was "to encourage some serious negotiations to reach a settlement. It seems like in the past when we've set a deadline, that's when negotiations begin. I sure don't want a strike, but this is something that has to be done."

Representatives of baseball's owners and the players association have been negotiating toward a new agreement since November. The old agreemnt expired on Dec. 31.

While players seemed unanimous in agreeing they didn't want a strike, few were sufficiently informed to predict the outcome of negotiations.

"I really don't know much about it," Oakland relief pitcher Jay Howell said. "You're really asking a guy who is awfully happy just to be playing in his first All-Star Game."

Ozzie Smith, the Cardinals' All-Star shortstop, said few players had the time to keep abreast of the situation.

"Playing every day, you don't have a chance to sit in on negotiations," Smith said. "I don't really know how the progress is going. We have to rely on our player reps to tell us that.

"On our ballclub, we don't really talk about it very much. If you dwell on it too much, it would drive you crazy," Smith said.

STILL, PLAYERS have thought about the possibility of a strike like the one that cut 50 days out of the middle of the 1981 season.

"I hate to be thinking about stuff like that at a time like this," Dale Murphy of Atlanta said. "But it has crossed my mind. ... It's kind of depressing to think about it. It's really sad to go this long and get to a point where we have to set a date. It really scares me.

"But we've negotiated agreements before. There's nothing to stop us now."

Gorman's 'Camp of Champions' no paradise lost

By JOHN STURBIN
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

TOLAR — A southerly breeze was whipping up the chicken barbecue that — along with the macaroni and cheese, beans and Paul Reyes' homemade hot sauce — was about to make one fine meal.

Beer in hand and his head shaded by an old oak tree, David Gorman decided it wasn't about to get much better than this.

"This is country," said Gorman, alluding to the 230-acre farm the boxing manager has converted into a training camp outside this tiny community "six-seven miles" south of Granbury.

"It'll get hotter'n hell out here in the afternoon, and then a couple of hours after the sun goes down it'll cool right off," Gorman said. "You could sleep inside there tonight without even having the air conditioner on."

Of course, it has been getting a little bit crowded inside the Spanish block building unofficially christened "The Camp of Champions."

"Most of the people around town don't know what we're doing out here," Gorman said, "although some of 'em will wave when they see the guys out running. I'm fixin' to put up a sign over on the fence, something that says: 'Beware of Mad Dog,' and see if they can figure it out."

HE WAS referring, of course, to Gene Hatcher, the reigning World Boxing Association junior welterweight champion scheduled to make the second defense on his 140-pound title in a rematch this month against No. 1 contender Ubaldo Sacco in Italy.

Texas Topic

Also training at the farm this summer were Donald Curry, the World Boxing Association and International Boxing Federation champ, who defeated Pablo Baez in a junior middleweight fight in Atlantic City in June, and West Texas' pride, lightweight contender Robin Blake, who lost in an attempt to take the International Boxing Federation's 135-pound title from Jimmy Paul in Las Vegas last month.

A total of eight boxers, three coaches and one super valet have made up what is decidedly a man's world at the farm. The tell-tale signs are all around, beginning with the paper plates and cups that became part of the regimen a few full kitchen sinks ago.

"We started out with glass cups and dishes," Gorman said, "but, man, none of these guys knows how to drink out of the same glass twice. So we put an end to that."

ALSO, GOOD luck on finding a towel, much less a clean one, in the bathroom.

There are card games, and some kill time before the 37-inch color television set. A good supply of fight tapes is available for the video cassette recorder, and somewhere among the scattered newspapers and socks is a copy of "KO Magazine" with Curry's countenance gracing the cover.

Part of the reason for being here is to get away fom all the "distractions" afforded by family and friends, to "get ornery," as Hatcher suggested.

"No wimmens," said Hatcher, training away from his wife and children. "That's why it's so boring. You're around nothing but men, but at least you can be yourself."

Directions? Suffice it to say it is approximately 50 miles from Gorman's Super Pros Gym on South Main in Fort Worth to this hideaway. The original brick farmhouse is the year-round residence of Gorman's daughter, Cindy, and son-in-law, Mark Irvin.

"HAVING ALL the guys up here, it's a little more crowded than what I had in mind when I had it built," Gorman said.

The new 2,000 square-foot combination gym and living quarters began to take shape in February, with Gorman's son, David Jr., doing the masonry work. He did such a good job with the mortar that they made him the camp's full-time cook.

"Only thing they won't eat is scrambled pancakes," said David Jr., whose day of slaving over a hot stove begins early.

Trainer Joe Barrientes issues the first wake-up call for seven miles of road work at 5:30 a.m.

"You can stay up late as you want," said Doug Jackson, Curry's long-time friend and the camp's super valet. "Yeah, you can stay up until 4:30 (a.m.) if you want — but you gotta get up at 5:30."

"Ooooh, Papa Joe will chew your butt out if you're not up at 5:30," said featherweight Steve Cruz. "And you know, nobody will hardly say nothin' all night — until we go to bed. Then everybody starts talking, mostly telling a bunch of lies."

WBA welterweight champ Donald Curry in training near Tolar.

THIS IS, remember, a man's world, where the "lies" revolve around money, food, fast cars, even faster women, who's gonna' whip whom and how to cope with life down in the boondocks.

"It is that," Hatcher said. "Me and Robin went into town there looking for the bowling alley," which is advertised on a sign leading into Tolar.

"They told us that sign has been there for three years and there is no bowling alley," Blake said. "They got one drive-in movie here, but I think it's just open on the weekends. So there's not a lot to do."

This is hardly Palm Springs, Calif., or Phoenix or Miami — all past Curry training sites. But in these days of boxing's continuing malaise, there is less training expense money being doled out by the networks and promoters. Gorman said Curry got only $5,000 this time out for training, and Blake and Hatcher nothing.

"YOU COULD run up a bill for over $8,000 in less than a week at Palm Springs," said Gorman, who swears he has a hotel statement somewhere to prove it. "Here they don't have a lot to do but train, eat properly, watch fight films and relax. It's still pretty draining — especially in this heat. But at least everything here is boxing.

"And sure, we'll cut up and put on some barbecue because we don't want to make it seem like a prison. But it is demanding. I think they like it."

"But at least here, he's close to home," said Reyes, Curry's trainer. "And I'm even enjoying myself," especially in his role as picante sauce chef.

"Everybody makes their hot sauce different," said Reyes, and he spooned out a nice portion. "I like to add some garlic salt and oregano and spices, and I fry up the peppers instead of boiling them. It's the same way my mother used to make it. It's hot. Try some on the side, in case you don't like it."

Top pick Brooks a no-show at Cowboy rookie camp

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Defensive end Kevin Brooks, like 23 other first-round draft picks, was a holdout when the Dallas Cowboys opened their training camp, but Cowboys president Tex Schramm says the pressure will be on them, not the National Football League clubs.

"When all of the camps get started, when all the teams get in, the pressure will be very much on the players," Schramm said Monday.

"Everyone is going to have 70 to 100 players in camp, and everything will be going on as usual. Players will be competing, and teams are not going to miss one or two players," Schramm said.

"With the players, however, it will be extremely important from a personal standpoint. Once the camps open, the pendulum of pressure swings very strongly on the player."

Brooks is one of four who weren't on hand Sunday when the Cowboys became the first NFL team to set up camp. Also missing were offensive linemen Matt Darwin and Matt Moran and defensive end Kurt Ploeger.

DEFENSIVE END Jim Hermann and wide receiver Leon Gonzalez signed Sunday afternoon and running back Robert Lavette signed late Saturday.

Brooks is the first No. 1 pick not to report to the Cowboys' camp on time since 1971, Brandt said.

Brooks is asking for a four-year package worth about $1.5 million, including a $500,000 signing bonus. Cowboys personnel director Gil Brandt is believed to have offered him about $1.5 million over five years, including a $400,000 signing bonus.

Brooks actually came to camp in hopes his agent, Mike Trope of Los Angeles, and Brandt would work out a deal. But after four hours of negotiation, Trope decided not to accept the club's offer, and Brooks had to leave the California Lutheran campus where the Cowboys train. He said he planned to stay with friends near Thousand Oaks.

Brandt and Cowboys coach Tom Landry have warned rookies that missed time in camp will result in a lower signing bonus.

Landry also said rookies will have a more difficult time making the roster since the National Football League has reduced its team rosters from 49 players to 45.

"A ROOKIE misses valuable time now because this is when he gets a foothold," Landry said. "This is where you get your basic foundation. Now you can work with them as individuals. Later, when the veterans report, you don't have that luxury."

Former USFL fullback Todd Fowler was scheduled to arrive Sunday with the rookies, but Landry changed his decision about Fowler's reporting date.

Fowler, who just finished a season with the Houston Gamblers, is now is scheduled to come in next Sunday with the veteran quarterbacks, running backs and wide receivers.

"It would just be asking too much for a guy to come to camp two weeks after his season ended," running back coach Al Lavan said. "Tom decided to give him an extra week to get his legs back under him."

Zola Budd admits fault in collision with Slaney

SEATTLE (AP) — Barefoot runner Zola Budd of South Africa has admitted publicly for the first time that she caused the collision with Mary Slaney at the 1984 Summer Olympic Games in Los Angeles.

In a copyright interview with Seattle television station KING, Budd said she cut in too close causing Slaney, then known as Mary Decker, to fall with 1,300 meters left in the 3,000-meter women's race.

Budd's coach, Pieter Labuschagne, also told the station his star pupil was to blame for the collision.

Slaney has always maintained Budd was responsible for the collsion, but she told the television station she accepts a large share of the blame for failing to reach out and let Budd know she was too close.

SLANEY SAID she wrote to Budd, who now lives in Guildford, England, in March and apologized for hurting her feelings with her comments after the race. Slaney told Budd "Don't bother" when she came over to apologize after the race and critiziced her at an Olympics news conference.

Budd, running for the British team in the Olympics, said she was forced to cut in on Slaney by teammate Wendy Sly.

"We came around the bend and I was running next to her (Slaney)," Budd said. "And Wendy Sly began to run close to me and I had to go forward. Otherwise, she would have run into me and would have blocked me.

"And I think that's what made me to cut in shorter than whatis the right way.

"AND BECAUSE, everybody was boxed in at that stage, we were boxed in, I think we were four athletes at that stage and — and Wendy Sly tried to pass. As she did, she made me to go closer to Mary. I think that's why I had to cut in short."

Oil Bowl gets new lease

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — The Oil Bowl game is on after all.

The longstanding high school football contest between Texas and Oklahoma all-stars, which had been threatened by the NCAA with decertification, is set to go Aug. 10 as planned.

The NCAA earlier had refused to sanction the 1985 game because last year's game failed to make a 40 percent profit for charity, and a report concerning the charitable proceeds was turned in more than seven months late.

The 1984 game made only a 24 percent profit, which was donated to crippled children's hospitals in Texas and Oklahoma, according to Oil Bowl officials.

If the NCAA had not agreed to sanction the game, then any player participating would lose one year of eligibility at any NCAA college he attended, officials had said.

THE NCAA High School All-Star Games Committee sanctioned the game Monday after a conference telephone call with Oil Bowl chairman Nick Seitz and an official of the Maskat Shrine Temple, which sponsors the event.

After getting approval, Seitz said, "I can guarantee we'll meet the deadlines, but I can't guarantee all the profits. The NCAA has given us the opportunity to have the game. Now it's up to us to prove we can do it."

Jimmy Smulcer, a Shriner official, said the 47-year-old Oil Bowl was in a "do-or-die" situation.

He said the game will not be able to meet the required profit ratio if Wichita Falls doesn't support the event.

"There will be a vote on Aug. 10 as to whether the people want to keep this game or not,"

Wilander takes U.S. Pro

BROOKLINE, Mass. (AP) — He's young. He has all the shots. And he's aggressive.

He is Sweden's Mats Wilander, the 58th U.S. Pro tennis champion.

Wilander carried the title, and a check for $35,700, on a flight home today after whipping Argentina's Martin Jaite 6-2, 6-4 Monday night on Longwood's clay center court.

"There's no time to rest," said Wilander, the world's third-ranked player. "I'm playing in the Swedish Open, a Grand Prix tournament, and my first match is Wednesday.

"However, I'll be back. I'll play Davis Cup matches and in Cincinnati. Then I'll be at the U.S. Open."

Wilander, who won his second French Open last month before being upset in the first round on grass at Wimbledon, relished his return to clay. The 20-year-old Swede, who also has won the Australian Open twice, swept five matches in straight sets in pushing his earnings for the year over $400,000 as the No. 1 seed here.

Memphis State's Kirk under fire

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — A former official with Memphis State says he gave basketball Coach Dana Kirk $12,000 four years ago to help him in signing star forward Keith Lee, a Memphis newspaper reports.

"I just gave him the money, and he said he was going to get the best basketball player he ever had," the former MSU official told The Commercial Appeal of Memphis on Sunday.

The former official, who was not identified, said Kirk later told him the player was Lee, a 6-foot-10 forward became Memphis State's all-time scoring and rebounding leader.

Kirk's secretary said the coach was out of town Monday and could not be reached for comment. A woman who answered the telephone at Kirk's house and identified herself as his wife said he could not be reached at another number.

Memphis State Athletic Director Charles Cavagnaro declined comment.

"I can't comment on something I don't know anything about," Cavagnaro said.

Charles Holmes, a spokesman for Memphis State, said Thomas Carpenter, the school's president, also would decline comment.

Holmes said he did not know if Kirk's superiors have questioned him about the newspaper report.

It is against rules of National Collegiate Athletic Association for college officials to give money to their athletes.

The former MSU official said he took out a $12,000 personal loan in August 1981 to raise the money he said Kirk wanted.

In June, The Commercial Appeal reported that Bob Patterson, a former athletic director for Memphis State, was questioned by the FBI about a $12,000 loan he took out in August 1981.

CRUZ

And some say that Cruz may be the prototype of a great player who no one notices.

"Everyone looks for the big power hitters, guys who hit 30 home runs," Cruz said. "But there are lots of guys who hit 30 home runs and drive in 70 runs. So what is that?"

Cruz has never hit more than 17 home runs in a season, and has never knocked in 100 runs. But in 1983, he led the NL with 189 hits, batted .318 and had 92 RBI. Last season, he batted .312 and drove home 95 runs.

EVEN SO, neither year saw him in the All-Star Game.

"At first, I cared about that a little," he said. "But over the years, I didn't so much."

"He may the first one into the Hall of Fame who no one knows," said Enos Cabell, who was traded from Houston to Los Angeles last week.

On Tuesday night, Cruz will once again be wearing the NL uniform at the All-Star Game. Yet he has been in that situation once before, and went home disappointed.

"I hope I get to play," he said. "But there are never any guarantees."

"I'm a little embarrassed, but also very proud that we have five members of the San Diego Padres in the starting lineup," he says.

He is particularly proud of Hoyt, whose nomination as starting pitcher was the one choice solely his.

"He's had a fine year," said the Padre manager. "He deserves to start."

SO, OF course, did Joaquin Andujar (15-4) of St. Louis. But Joaquin removed himself from consideration (and the team) in a snit when Williams suggested that his nomination was not automatic.

"I would love for Joaquin Andujar to be here," said Williams. "Unfortunately, he decided not to come."

Whatever Andjuar's reasons for abstaining, Hoyt gladly accepts the benefits.

"Actually, I'm pretty happy Joaquin decided not to come," LaMarr admitted.

There are a number of pitchers who would consider it a sentence rather than an opportunity to oppose a starting lineup consisting of Rickey Henderson, Lou Whitaker, George Brett, Eddie Murray, Cal Ripken, Dave Winfield, Jim Rice and Carlton Fisk.

THIS IS particularly true when the game will be played in a ballpark so cozy it has been nicknamed the "Homerdome."

But if the thought made Hoyt nervous, he concealed it well.

There is another lineup Hoyt fears, however. His own.

"I look at what Jack (American League starter Jack Morris) is facing, and I'm just glad I don't have to go against them," he says.

"I don't like the look of that squad," said Anderson, studying the National League starters.

"That's a fearsome lineup. They would have to be a big favorite. I hope they don't just beat on us."

Right, Sparky. Now take your tongue out of your cheek.

It's time to stop playing games and start playing The Game. It's time to put up or shut up.

First City Bank to offer home mortgages

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

First City Bank of Midland will join 63 other member banks in offering a variety of home mortgage loans, according to a bank spokesman.

In announcing the formation of the First City Mortgage Banking Unit, Betty Sue Peabody, executive vice president of retail banking, said, "The addition of mortgage loans enables us to meet one of the most basic consumer needs, that of owning one's own home. We plan to be extremely active in this market, and will offer customers a wide array of mortgage products at competitive rates."

First City will offer both fixed - and variable - rate mortgages in amounts from $50,000 to $1 million. Both FHA AND VA loans are available, according to Peabody.

"We are very excited to get into the mortgage business," said Alan Hale, senior vice president, real estate lending at First City Midland. It is unusual for commercial banks to have a 30 year product, but we feel this additional service will blend very well with present services and enable us to help our customers with financing of land and property."

Hale said to his knowledge First City was probably the first commercial bank in the state to offer mortgage banking statewide through all its facilities.

He said First City was fortunate in that it already has a network of expertise in place to deal with mortgage banking and that the Midland bank would lean heavily upon that expertise.

Hale said the brokered funds in the new mortgage banking service would generate additional activity for the bank and the real estate market. He said the Midland real estate market was very active now, despite a continuing surplus of homes, with 100 sales per month being recorded for the past four months.

Named manager of the First City Mortgage Banking Unit was Fred C. Homeyer. Homeyer began his First City career in 1969 in the real estate department of First City National Bank of Houston. He subsequently was named senior vice president and manager of the department. In 1982, Homeyer was elected president of First City Bank of Northline, a position he held until 1984.

Before joining First City, Homeyer was president of Northport Federal Savings & Loan, and earlier wa president of Home Savings Associa tion. He is a graduate of Texas A & M University, with a B.S. degree.

Assistant manager is R. Dan Sher rill, who until recently was vice pres ident for administration and second ary marketing for Texas Mortgag Resources, Inc. Earlier, Sherril spent 13 years with First Mortgag Company of Texas, where he serve in a number of capacities, reachin the position of vice president-res dential loan operations. The Vernon Texas, native received his B.B.A. de gree in marketing from North Texa State University.

IPAA calls for changes in proposed FERC regulations on natural gas

WASHINGTON (SWN) — In a document prepared for filing with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) on Monday, the Independent Petroleum Association of America (IPAA) calls for sweeping changes in the proposed Commission rulemaking (RM 85-1) covering new regulations related to natural gas transporation and pricing.

Commenting on the filing by the IPAA in its behalf and in behalf of more than 30 state and regional oil and gas associations, Lloyd Unsell, IPAA executive vice president said, "As spokesman for producers we cannot sit back without warning the Commission and the public of the potential adverse supply implications which could result from this rulemaking.

"Just because we appear to be in the midst of a so-called 'gas bubble', does not mean all is well," Unsell said. "Today's drilling numbers are tomorrow's supplies and those numbers don't look good.

The statement was prepared in response to the FERC's May 30, 1985 Notice of Proposed Rulemaking.

Among the key recommendations of the producer associations' filing:

–General endorsement of the non-discriminatory transportation provision for moving gas directly from producers to local distribution companies and end users;

–A questioning of the value and impact of so-called take-or-pay relief afforded pipelines and a suggestion that if "buy outs" of take-or-pay are allowed, that "buy outs" of other contract provisions such as pricing be included;

–That the Commission scrap block pricing in favor of a new national "just and reasonable" rate on old gas absent congressional decontrol of that gas;

–That if the Commission does maintain its block pricing concept, that all NGPA era gas be included in block 1, or;

–That if not all NGPA era gas is not included, all forever regulatored categories of gas be included;

–That as a minimum, consistent with NGPA intent under both pricing and incremental pricing titles, stripper gas, high cost gas and dollars attributed to contractual "buy outs" be included in block 1.

Real Estate Commission meets in Midland to honor local realtor

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Thirteen members of the Texas Real Estate Commission were in Midland Monday for the group's regular meeting and to honor Midland Realtor, Don Harvey with a plaque for his five years of service on the Commission.

Harvey was saluted for his selfless efforts on the commission which seeks to protect the public of Texas through the administration of real estate laws and ethics. Harvey, the 1984 chairman of the commission, was honored by Gene Stimmel, Bedford, Texas real estate broker and current chairman of the Texas Real Estate Commission, which administers the licensing of 160,000 real estate brokers and salesmen in the state.

Stimmel said the group normally meets in Austin and only ventures outside the capital for meetings once or twice a year. He said the trip to Midland was mainly to honor Harvey.

The commission chairman said the Texas real estate industry generally remained healthy, despite a few spotty problems, and that more individuals than ever were seeking to make real estate a career.

Wallace Collins, executive administrator, for the commission pointed out that 35,000 broker and salesmen license had been granted to date in the fiscal year, as compared to 28,000 for the same period last year.

"I think it is because the industry enjoyed a healthy year in 1984, and the declining interest rates point to a continuation of a healthy industry," said Collins.

Stimmel pointed out, however, that despite the high interest in the real estate industry, it still has a high mortality rate, with about eight out of ten dropping out.

Stimmel said the industry was having only spotty problems with over building in areas such as Houston, and in the office market in Dallas-Ft. Worth. "Of course, the condo market, is generally soft all over the state," he said.

He said that despite what one hears about alternate housing, there was still resistance to condos, with families still prefering the single family detached home.

Stimmel said the industry was also being aided by the the fact that that housing prices are remaining stable while interest rates come down. "Every time the interest rate drops a half percent it brings thousands of potential buyers back into the market," said Stimmel.

Pool Well Servicing lays off San Angelo workers

From Staff Reports

Pool Well Servicing Co. of San Angelo has begun laying off employees at its manufacturing facility in that city, according to news reports.

The firm expects to reduce its payroll from 40 to approximately 10 within the next two to three weeks. The San Angelo Chamber of Commerce spokesman also reported that the firm was trying to sell the land on which the facility is located.

The firm which manufactures and re-manufactures drilling rigs is being trimmed back as a result of declining drilling activity and the demand for drilling equipment, said a Pool spokesman. During the peak of the boom period of the early 1980's, the manufacturing shop employed between 250-300.

A company spokesman said remaining employees would be retained on the basis of senority and skill and that effort would be made to absorb those employees being laid off into other Pool divisions.

The regular monthly meeting of the Midland Chapter of the Society of Independent Professional Earth Scientists is scheduled for Wednesday. The luncheon meeting will be at 11:30 a.m. at the Midland Country Club.

Featured speaker will be Tim Dunn. Dunn is the Senior Vice President and Manager of Oil and Gas Lending with the First City National Bank of Midland. His topic will be "Oil & Gas Financing for the Smaller Independent."

Officials expect gas prices to drop

WASHINGTON (AP) — Retail gasoline prices that have continued to rise despite the declining cost of crude oil should begin dropping this fall, Energy Secretary John Herrington says.

After testifying before a House subcommittee Monday, Herrington told reporters his department already was "carefully" looking at why the price motorists pay for gasoline has jumped nearly a dime a gallon since February despite a $2 a barrel drop in crude oil prices the past 12 months.

"I've asked the question; I don't have the answer," he said. "After the summer and heavy driving days are over, I would be amazed if there is not a price break."

Historically, gasoline prices have dropped or risen about 2½ cents per gallon for every dollar decrease or increase in the price of oil.

Herrington said the traditionally heavy demand for gasoline during the summer vacation months and seasonal inventory adjustments by refiners may be responsible for the failure of lower crude prices to find their way to the motoring public.

According to statistics compiled by the government and private energy analysts, crude oil acquisition costs for refiners have dropped from an average $28.79 a barrel a year ago to $26.75 this month. Meanwhile, gasoline prices have increased from an average $1.14 per gallon in February to an average $1.24 for all grades in July.

Consumer groups and independent service station owners have blamed the widening difference between crude oil and gasoline prices on efforts by U.S. refiners to increase their profit margins or reverse losses they incurred in 1983 and 1984.

During Monday's hearing before the House Energy fossil and synthetic fuels subcommittee, Herrington said the administration flatly opposes efforts by some domestic energy producers to impose protective tariffs or quotas on imported oil, petroleum products, coal and uranium.

"There is no question that oil is still overpriced," he said. "The American consumers rode that rollercoaster up and they ought to enjoy the ride down."

Rep. Mike Synar, D-Okla., said a drop in the price of oil from its current $26-$28 a barrel to $20 would bring many independent producers in his state closer to bankruptcy and threaten the health of several banks with large energy loan portfolios.

Levi Strauss family makes offer to buy back company

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — From the day in 1850 when a Bavarian immigrant made his first pair of jeans for miners looking to strike it rich in California's gold rush, Levi Strauss & Co. has been a family operation.

So it's not surprising that after 14 years of public ownership, descendants of founder Levi Strauss now want to take the company private again by acquiring all stock not held by family members.

"The family has run the company the whole time," said David Jackson, an analyst with Morgan, Olmstead, Kennedy and Gardner in Los Angeles. "They've always been in the key management positions. I think they'd be much more comfortable" as a private company.

Levi Strauss sold some of its shares to the public 14 years ago to raise money, said Jackson, but he said the company that controls 30 percent of the U.S. jeans market might prefer not to make disclosures about plant size, employees, advertising, spending and income that public ownership requires.

Peter E. Haas, chairman of Levi's board, and his brother Walter A. Haas Jr., who heads the executive committee, own 17 percent of the company. Members of the Levi Strauss clan own 36 percent of the company stock and occupy four seats on the board. Trusts controlling another 4 percent are expected to support the deal.

Walter's son, Robert, is the great-great-grandnephew of Levi Strauss and president and chief executive of the company.

It was Robert Haas who made the proposal Monday at a board meeting to return the company entirely to family ownership. He's offering $50 cash per share for Levi's stock, which was selling around $35 a share last week and closed Monday at a little more than $47 a share. The board appointed an independent committee to study the proposal.

The deal could end up costing more than $2 billion, according to the company, when acquisition, working capital and debt are added up.

W.T. Grimm & Co., a Chicago consulting firm, said that would easily make it the largest merger or acquisition in the history of the apparel industry. In fact, 34 mergers in 1984 had a total value of $1.4 billion.

The move comes after a year that saw sales and earnings drop amid reports that the market for blue jeans was shrinking to fit a new generation that's more concerned with designer labels than rugged demin pants.

In the early 1970s, Levi's "was growing at a very rapid rate and needed to raise capital to finance expansion," said Jackson. A public offering netted $47.8 million in 1971.

But cash from the public market is no longer needed as sales and strategy become the keys to continued success.

Although Levi's has branched out into other types of clothing, jeans still account for 60 percent of its sales.

Sales of blue jeans surged during the 1970s. In the year Levi's went public, sales were $432 million and income was $19.7 million. By 1980, revenues had topped $2.8 billion and income was $223.7 million.

But the past five years have brought a drop in Levi's revenues from $2.85 billion in 1981 to $2.51 billion in 1984.

Earnings took a big nosedive in 1984, dropping to $41.4 million from $194.5 million the year before. One reason was the $24.5 million writeoff the company took to finance plant closings, combined with thousands of layoffs in a reorganization designed to help it adjust to the changing jeans market.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Boxes are safe in bank failure

By BILL DOYLE

Q. In all the bank failures I have observed on television, the banks have locked their doors and would not open them for anyone. This makes me worry about my safe deposit box. If my bank fails, will I be able to get to my box?

Doyle

A. Yes, but you might have to wait a bit. How long depends on the circumstances of the particular bank failure. Most likely it would be no more than a few days — a week at most.

We're assuming that your safe deposit box is at a bank that is a member of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. or a savings and loan association that is a member of the Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp. When a federally insured bank or S&L goes bust, regulatory authorities get things squared away.

In the vast majority of cases, the bank or S&L doors are not slammed shut on depositors and safe deposit box holders. More often than not, the failed institution is merged into another bank or S&L. As far as customers are concerned, business continues as before: Only the name of the institution changes.

When a bank or S&L fails and is in such bad financial shape that it can't be merged, FDIC or FSLIC takes over and pays off depositors in short order. Safe deposit box holders usually have quick access to their boxes.

No one can give you ironclad assurance that if your bank goes under today, you'll be able to get to your safe deposit box tomorrow morning. But chances are that would be the case.

I suspect those TV reports you saw were about Ohio savings banks and Maryland S&Ls, which were not federally insured.

Q. I have in mind putting $5,000 in my safe deposit box, in case my bank fails and I'm in need of money. Good idea?

A. Terrible idea! As long as your bank is federally insured, you're covered up to the limit of $100,000 per depositor and you'll have no long wait making withdrawals.

By putting cash in your safe deposit box, you would lose the interest that money could earn. Even if you have the $5,000 in an old-fashioned savings account at 5.5 percent straight interest, it earns $275 a year. Compound interest increases that number. And you can get more than 5.5 percent by having a money market deposit account.

Besides, many safe deposit box contracts specifically prohibit keeping cash in the boxes. That's a requirement in some states.

Q. A little over a year ago, I opened a $10,000 money market deposit account at a local bank. I call this my "slush fund" for emergencies. I do not touch it. The interest just accumulates and the statements I receive show the balance in the account keeps growing.

I believe there is some rule regarding regular savings accounts whereby, if there is no deposit or withdrawal within a certain period of time, the bank turns the money over to the state. Then it is almost impossible to claim it.

Can that happen to my money market deposit account?

A. It could, but it's unlikely it ever will.

You're talking about the "law of escheat," which makes the state the owner of any property whose owner cannot be found. It applies to all types of accounts at banks, savings and loan associations and credit unions. Even contents of safe deposit boxes and property held in trust by banks are subject to that rule.

Considering how long you have had that account, you have no reason to be even remotely concerned. The rule varies from state to state. But an account has to be dormant and the depositor apparently unknown for anywhere from five to 25 years before the state gets the money.

Also, a depository institution must make every effort to reach you — usually through certified mail and public newspaper notices — before turning your money over to the state. Because you have a "statement" account, your bank knows your address.

Anyone with a passbook account should make a deposit or withdrawal within the escheat period, or simply have interest posted in the passbook.

Even when an account is turned over to the state, the owner can still get the money back — by proving ownership. The only thing lost for good is interest. The state won't pay interest from the date it received the money.

STOCK CODES

All Stock Codes are based on industry standard Ticker Symbols provided by your broker or available from any Standard & Poor's Stock Ticker Guide. Codes are made up of a series of two-digit numbers, each representing one of the letters in the Ticker Symbol.

To determine the two-digit code for any letter of a Ticker Symbol, remember: The first key to be depressed is always the one on which the letter appears. The second key is always a "1," "2" or "3" indicating that letter's position on its own key (first, second or third position). EXAMPLE: "IBM" = "43 22 61"; "BX" = "22 92." Remember to depress the star key (*) after entering each code.

Students discuss proposal to close school campuses

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland students are "up in arms" over a proposal that would confine them to campus during the noon lunch hour.

Hundreds of students representing Midland and Lee High schools gathered Monday at the LHS Youth Center to voice their opinion concerning the possible "closing" of the campuses — open to students since 1979.

The student forum resulted after a group of Midland parents asked the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees to close the campuses to help curb congested traffic and substance abuse problems which have been reportedly associated with students leaving the school grounds.

MISD president Bill Jackson on June 25 appointed a 13-member committee, comprised of parents, teachers, students and administrators, to study "all of the facts" and make a recommendation to trustees on July 23.

Local law enforcement officials, leaders of various substance abuse programs and the majority of school board members are said to be in support of the movement.

The forum Monday served as a "brainstorming" session for students, according to committee member Seree Whitlow. "What they (the students) do here will have a lot to do with the way people react to them."

Standing before a signed covered with student signatures supporting the open campus, Mrs. Whitlow said the committee will review the students' suggestions and that those opinions will "weigh heavily" on the committee's decision when it presents its recommendation to trustees.

MHS senior Jason Bessire told committee members that the parents who signed the petition "are not representative of the entire community and are incorrect in assuming that every time a student goes to lunch he indulges in alcohol, drugs and driving recklessly."

> "Why punish everyone for crimes that a small percentage of students commit?
>
> — Jeff Burchard, LHS junior

A closed campus would result in "no improvement at all," he said. "What goes on at lunch can go on at any time."

Calling the alleged drinking and drug problem a "completely mute issue," Bessire said the question in need of answering is whether the "open campus inhibits the learning process.

"I can assure you that the whole school is not on drugs," he said.

LHS junior Jeff Burchard said a closed campus would be unfair to the majority of students.

He asked, "Why punish everyone for crimes that a small percentage of students commit?

"More kids come back to school sober that they do drunk," Burchard added.

According to MHS senior Bryan Dubose, MISD would have difficulties enforcing a closed campus policy on all students, and athletes in particular.

"We're at the stadium and we have our own cars," said the member of the MHS football team. "It's kind of different for us."

Asked whether he would leave campus knowing it would be in violation of school policy, Dubose replied, "I don't know. I guess it would depend on what the coach said, but a bunch of (athletes) would."

Odessa doctors' suit alleges libel, slander, civil rights violations

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

A lawsuit seeking $945 million, filed by two Odessa doctors against Medical Center Hospital and some 27 other defendants, continued in federal court in Midland before U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton today.

Stephen and Edward T. Driscoll, physicians who operate the Driscoll Orthopedic Clinic in Odessa, allege in their suit filed in January, defendants named in the suit libeled and slandered them, interferred with their business relationships, violated their civil rights, as well as federal and state antitrust laws, and engaged in and conspired to engage in racketeering.

The Driscoll lawsuit specifically alleges actions of the defendants were "intended to eliminate them from the competitive market." The doctors contend one of the reasons they were targeted by defendants is because they (the Driscolls) would not participate in the undervaluation of insurance claims.

The lawsuit further specifically alleges Medical Center Hospital staff members conspired to "blacklist" them by telling injured workers, hospitals, employers, other doctors, lawyers, pharmacies, the Texas Medical Association, and others the Driscolls were "knife happy" and "incompetent."

During a hearing after the suit was filed in January, Bunton granted a temporary restraining order that was to allow the doctors to operate at Medical Center Hospital until their lawsuit is resolved.

Robbery suspect pleads guilty to violating federal banking laws

From Staff Reports

A 39-year-old man, Margarito Camacho, pleaded guilty in federal court in Midland Monday to violation of federal banking laws in connection with the June 6 robbery of InterFirst Bank in Odessa.

Camacho told U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton he agreed to the use of his car in the robbery in return for $300. Bunton is scheduled to formally sentence Camacho next week.

Camacho was arrested June 7, the day after the drive-in-walkup facility of InterFirst Bank located at East 7th Street and North Jackson was robbed of about $12,000. He has remained in the Midland County jail in lieu of $50,000 bond since his arrest.

The man identified by the FBI as the triggerman in the robbery, Tyler Davis Bingham, 38, was arrested June 19 in Cheynne, Wyo., by local police and FBI agents. Special Agent-in-Charge Ron Hoverson said it would not be necessary to extradite Bingham, that he would be returned to Midland as soon as possible.

A third suspect sought in the robbery remains at large. He is Antonio Martinez Rivera, 36, who is known mostly by the nickname of "Fish".

Rivera is said to have a scroll tattoo on the back of his right hand and the letter "A" tattooed in the web area of his left hand.

ANNTOINETTE MOORE

None of us powerless in combating hunger

I was pretty far away from Woodstock, N.Y., in the summer of 1969 — Austin, Texas. But I felt, along with the rest of the country, the repercussions from the three-day rock extravaganza at Woodstock.

Midland is about 1,800 miles from Philadelphia and an entire ocean away from London. But the Live Aid concert has blasted its message through the intervening distance to the Permian Basin.

I watched the concert on television with some fear and trepidation, not to mention skepticism. Yes, I bought the Band-Aid album and "We Are the World." But I also know about media hype and superstar hype and rock hype. World hunger has been a serious issue with a lot of people for a long time and here were these rock stars stepping in and appropriating all the glory.

What happens, I thought, when world hunger is not the charitable fad of the moment and another chic social cause takes over the rock idols' calendar?

What kind of commitment will these stars demonstrate when world hunger is passe and the West is caught up in other vital issues such as nuclear disarmament or combatting terrorism?

But these concerns shouldn't diminish the incredible — dare I say good — results of the Live Aid concert:

1). Millions of dollars have been raised for famine relief from people who usually are untouched by the fund-raising efforts of traditional relief agencies;

2). Millions of people around the world were exposed, at least briefly, to the fact of world hunger and to some of its consequences;

3). Thousands of people from at least 150 nations cooperated in a tremendous logistical effort to make this concert happen — for a common cause;

4). Many rock stars showed that they could do more than just sing about love, peace and justice.

"I just realized that this...is the best day of my life," said Bob Geldof, Irish musician and chief organizer of Live Aid.

It was the best day of his life because he made his life count for something. Geldof saw a great need and responded to it, rather than pretending the need didn't exist or bemoaning his powerlessness in the face of such a large and complex problem.

Geldof wasn't limited by others' ideas of what he could do to end world hunger. He used his talents as a musician and his influence on the rock music scene to fight apathy and ignorance.

"I met Mother Teresa," Geldof said in an interview during the concert. "She said 'You're not me and I'm not you. You can do things that I can't do.'"

And it's as difficult to imagine Mother Teresa getting some 60-odd rock groups together to raise more than $50,000,000 as it is to imagine Geldof of the Boomtown Rats ministering to the despised and dying in Calcutta.

Each of us can do something to feed the world's hungry people. We are not powerless; we affect the world around us.

We have a choice. We can choose to do nothing about ending world hunger and thus continue to cope with the problems created and made worse by having millions of starving people in the world.

Or we can take a little time out and educate ourselves about the who, what, how, where and particularly the why of world hunger.

We can attempt to understand the politics of hunger. Hunger didn't "just happen" as the inevitable result of supernatural forces beyond our control. The hungry aren't always with us "because that's the way things are." Choices were made; decisions were taken.

Generally it's the poor and the powerless who tend to go hungry; the world's elite rarely die of starvation.

And it's not only the poor and powerless living thousands of miles away in the Third World who suffer from hunger. We can't comfort ourselves with the naive thought that no Midland child went to bed hungry last night.

Hunger exists here in the Tall City, although it doesn't manifest itself in hordes of starving people roaming the streets. Most of Midland's hungry have fallen through society's cracks; elderly people living on the one meal each day they can afford, illegal aliens who don't qualify for aid from government agencies, children whose parents have fixed, marginal incomes.

But ending world hunger isn't a hopeless cause. India and China, both scenes of famine earlier this century, now produce enough food to feed their combined populations of almost 2 billion people.

Once there was another great "necessary evil" which existed throughout the world: slavery. Many people said it had always existed and therefore would always continue to exist. It was futile to try and end it, they said.

Fortunately, not everyone bought this argument. Today slavery, while not totally eradicated, is rare.

World hunger can be ended. We can do it; we have the necessary resources. We can join together in a truly "pro-life" movement and end the misery and suffering of millions of people.

We have a choice.

Water permit amendment requested

The Texas Water Commission has set a hearing Sept. 4 on a request by the Colorado River Municipal Water District to amend a permit to change the purpose of use of 15,000 acre-feet of the industrial water authorized for diversion annually from the proposed Stacy Reservoir in Coleman, Concho and Runnels counties.

The district seeks to change the purpose of use of the water to "municipal purposes" and to transport the water by pipeline from the reservoir on the Colorado River for use by the City of Abilene and its customers in the Brazos River Basin in Jones and Taylor counties, the TWC staff reports.

The district also seeks to add a diversion point on the reservoir, and to increase the diversion rate allowed for municipal purposes from 160.4 cubic feet per second to 191.34 cubic feet per second from the reservoir, according to the staff.

Jury selection begins in Odessan's manslaughter trial

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The involuntary manslaughter trial of a 35-year-old Odessa man began in 244th District Court with jury selection this morning.

Frank Granado Fierro faces a total of three involuntary manslaughter charges stemming from a fatal traffic accident west of Odessa May 18, 1984, which killed three people and injured three others. Fierro is expected to face separate trials on each of the charges.

An Ector County grand jury indicted Fierro on the three charges, alleging he was intoxicated at the time of the accident that claimed the lives of Wesley Durr, 26, of Canyon, and two of his children, Erica Durr, 3, and Cody Durr, five weeks old.

Durr's 30-year-old wife, Laverne, a 5-year-old daughter, Heather, and a friend, Harold Hanning, 34, of Fritch, Texas, were seriously injured in the accident, which occurred when the McMinn Furniture Co. van Fierro was operating reportedly swerved from the outside westbound lane of Interstate 20 about 3.5 miles west of Odessa, struck the rear of a passing semi-trailer rig, went out of control, crossed the center median, smashed through a guard rail and collided head-on with the Durr vehicle that was westbound on the north service road, according to reports.

Mrs. Durr, on behalf of herself and her daughter, subsequently filed a civil lawsuit in 244th District Court against Fierro and the furniture company. She was awarded $1.5 million, with nearly $100,000 of the award ordered placed in trust for for Heather Durr by District Judge Joe Connally.

PUC: Bell customers deserve rate cut

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas residential and business customers of Southwestern Bell are entitled to an average rate cut of 10.2 percent, according to Public Utility Counsel Jim Boyle.

Boyle, who has called for a $124 million cut for Bell in Texas, filed testimony Monday calling for the bill decrease.

Bell has asked for a $277 million hike that would add about $1.50 to monthly residential bills.

In expert testimony filed Monday, Boyle's witnesses said Bell wants local ratepayers to finance a price break for long distance telephone companies such as AT&T Communications. The long distance companies pay Bell for use of the local network.

Also Monday, state lawyers filed testimony against the Bell hike. Up to $9.5 million of the increase sought by the company could come from state government, according to Attorney General Jim Mattox.

"We oppose Southwestern Bell's annual attempt to pick the pockets of Texas ratepayers. Bell has not shown a need for all the additional revenues they are seeking. Indeed, our analysis of Bell's books indicates the Public Utility Commission should reduce, rather than increase, most rates," said Mattox.

The PUC hearing on Bell's request entered its third week Monday.

Three-year-old boy drowns in pool

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 3-year-old boy was pronounced dead at Medical Center Hospital last night after being found at the bottom of a swimming pool at the Rivera Apartments, 1101 E. 19th St.

According to Odessa Police Lt. Sid Lyle, the mother of Jose Auden Rodriquez was alerted to the fact something was wrong when the boy's 19-month-old sister, Gracie Medina, went into the family's apartment about 9:08 p.m. Monday repeating the word "water."

Investigating officers said the mother, Virginia Ortega Medina, went out to the swimming pool but couldn't see her son. She called apartment manager Kathy Stazas, who dove into the pool and found the little boy at the bottom of the deep end.

The youngster was taken to Medical Center Hospital, where Peace Justice R.G. Hungerford pronounced him dead about 11:20 p.m.

Protek Shine Shoppes lists hot tips, cold facts

Solar control film from Protek Shine Shoppes solves lots of problems for you - whether it is applied to your vehicle, office windows or windows in your home.

This virtually invisible film not only filters, absorbs and reflects harmful heat and ultra-violet radiation, it reduces heat flow by as much as 70 percent to 80 percent, keeping it warm in winter as well as cool in summer.

On your home or office windows solar control film cuts out your biggest heating and cooling problem - the sun.

The sun plays havoc with temperature controls.

That's why today's home and building owners, as well as architects and engineers are looking to solar control film to insure tenant comfort, reduce the load on the heating and cooling systesm and save on energy cost.s

Because window tint is so inexpensive to install, payback is rapid - You start saving from the very first day.

It also works in in its quiet way to protect your esxpensive carpets, drapes and furniture from the ravages of the sun, as well as the interior of your vehicle.

Solar control film reduces glare and enhances your view as no blinds or drapes can do. Viewed from the outside, one of the attractive shades available will compliment your home's exterior.

It has a clean, modern look that will end forever the patchwork appearance of blinds and draperies.

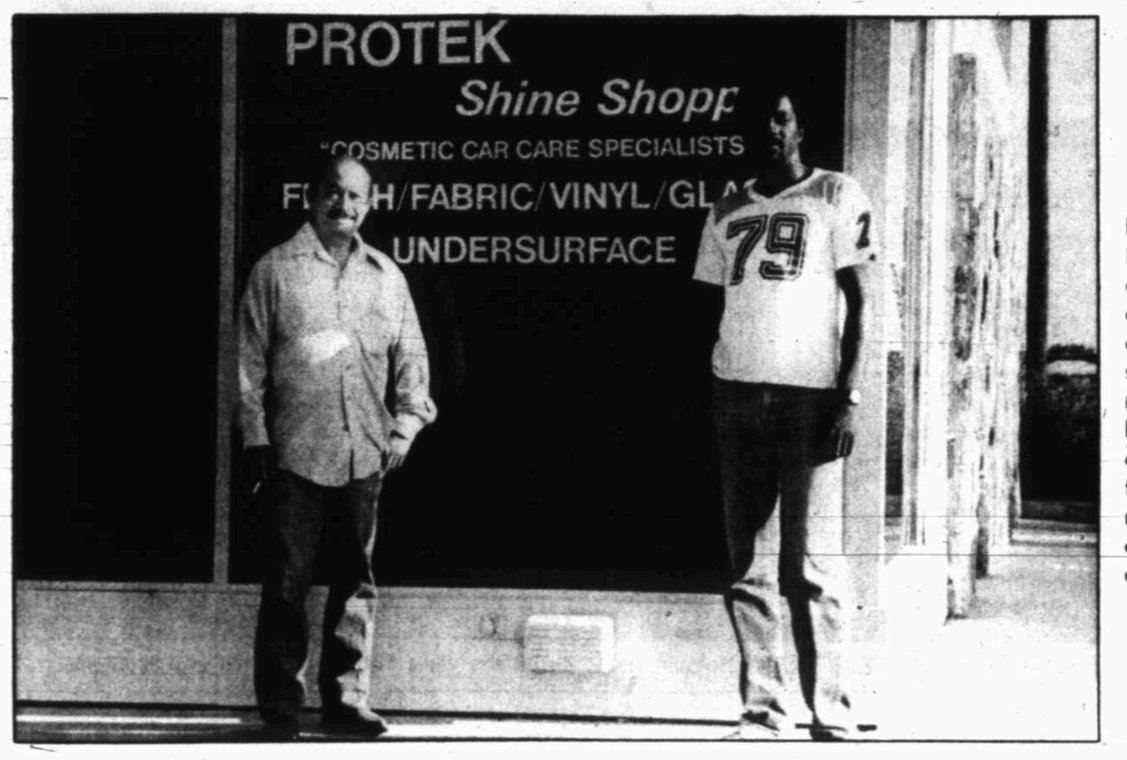
Your windows will be more shatter resistant reducing losses due to accidents or vandalism. Moreover, window tint provides daytime privacy.

The application of window film is an art, says Protek owner, Richard Dennard. "And our applicators are professionals."

So call 699-5477 or go by 4402 Illinois and ask one of them to come to your home or office building for a free estimate.

Protek Shine Shoppes' claim to fame includes the detailing and shining of your vehicle, too - exterior wax, interior cleaning and steam cleaning of the motor. Protek's wax jobs are guaranteed for one year and when special Teflon coating is used the guarantee is five years!

With window tint, a shine and your choice of accessories availalbe at Protek, you can make your present car look like it just rolled off the showroom floor.



Protek Shine Shoppes, 4402 W. Illinois, knows that profesisonal application of solar window film on your auto, home or office will enhance the appearance and save you money. Harry Barron (left) and Aubrey Murphy will be happy to come out and give you a free esitmate. Call 699-5477 for more information on their many other services including complete auto detail, pinstriping and accessories.

Stop Smoking Clinic deals with physical and psychological need

"You can stop smoking!" says Fran Nobles, a former smoker and manager of Midland Stop Smoking Clinic in Mission Square. Even better, you can stop without the agonies of withdrawals and without unwanted weight gain.

Surveys reveal that 85 percent of all smokers want to quit but don't know how. They've come to depend on a cigarette to calm them when they're upset, to comfort them when they're sad and to help them celebrate when they are happy.

At the same time many smokers believe that quitting will make them feel good about themselves. And when you feel better, you look better.

Likewise, as more research reveals the link between smokeless tobacco and cancer of the mouth and throat, precancerous lesions in the mouth, and progressive gum disease, people are looking for a way to break the habit.

Stop Smoking Clinic has a proven program that guarantees that you can stop in five days! Even if you have smoked for 40 years! Even if you smoke four packs a day! Even if you have tried to quit a dozen times! Whether you're a teenager or senior citizen!

Fran recently received a letter from a client that testified to the effectiveness of this amazing program. "Fran, Everything is going as you said. I'm very thankful this has worked like the miracle I wanted. Thanks again! Beverly"

Susan, another recent participant, said this program really turned her life around. She is absolutely pleased with the results.

Why is this program so effective? The Stop Smoking Association's program deals with the psychological needs of clients along with the individuals' physical needs. The program centers around a guaranteed, aversion-type therapy which does not use drugs or hypnosis.

Each session is scheduled at the client's convenience and the program is set up on a contract basis.

The key to this five day program is the dual focus on breaking the physical need for cigarettes or smokeless tobacco, as well as the psychological need.

Because the habit is established by association of pleasure or reward, the habit must be broken in the subconscious. The Stop Smoking Clinic deals with this association so that their clients don't experience the severe withdrawal often caused by quitting "cold turkey."

Fran Nobles, a former smoker who started the Midland Stop Smoking Association franchise, went through the program in January of 1984. This program was designed by Doris Fayo of Odessa.

Having experienced the success of the Stop Smoking Association program in Odessa, Fran opened a franchise in Mission Square for Midlanders. To successfully quit, she says, a smoker must want to do it for himself not just for someone else.

The program is guaranteed if it is followed for five days, so there is nothing to lose. To sign up just call Fran Nobles at 682-7333 or the Odessa office at 335-8175. There are family and office discounts though the program will be individualized for each person involved.

Fran Nobles credits the success of the Stop Smoking Clinic to the program's dual focus. The five day program is guaranteed. Call 682-7333 for more information.

Screen-A-Window offers SunScreen to block the heat, glare

Jose Cuevas, owner of Screen-A-Window, and Manager Victor Holguin demonstrate the remarkable, energy-saving SunScreen.

Screen-A-Window, located at 1301-A North Lamesa Road, proudly announces the availability of Sun Screen, an absolutely revolutionary energy saving solar screening.

Owner Jose Cuevas points out that unlike films or glass coatings, SunScreen stops the sun's heat and glare before it hits your windwws and sliding glass doors. It's like haveing a shade tree in front of your home or office window without blocking the view. Exterior shading can be many times more effective than most interior devices.

SunScreen is a woven vinyl-coated fiberglass screening. It is virtually maintenance free. It is non-combustible and will not rust, corrode, shrink, scratch or stain.

SunScreen instantaneously reduces the amount of solar heat gain by up to 70 percent. As a result, summertime air conditioning costs may be significantly reduced. In fact, the savings on energy costs alone will usually pay for installation of SunScreen in two summers or less. Manager Victor Holguin says, "It's amazing how much difference it makes in a room. Especially on the west side of a building."

Cuevas and Holguin custom make and install your solar screens for years of carefree enjoyment. SunScreen is available for all types and shapes of windows and doors. Since SunScreen serves the dual purpose of reducing the sun's heat and blocking even tiny insects, regular insect screens are no longer necessary. Yet the unique open weave construction of SunScreen still allows soft light and gentle breezes to enter, while providing privacy.

This revolutionary product is available in a variety of colors including charcoal, bronze, chaqua, gold, silver gray, antique white, and white. The color-fast material will enhance the exterior.

Holguin says Screen-A-Window offers bronze and bright aluminum frames. Sometimes, the original frames can be used. Do-it-yourselfers can experience even greater savings.

Screen-A-Window is open 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. at 1301-A Lamesa Road. Go by for a full demonstration or call 682-3988. Holguin will let you experience the tremendous SunScreen before you make one of the best home investments around.

Carmen's: a Mexican marketplace shopping spree without the drive

A Mexican market is full of colorful, decorative, useful items. It's a place of real bargains and fun shopping- a far away place. Whoa- it is a terrific place to shop for bargains on all sorts of things, but for Midlanders it is anything but far away.

Carmen's Mexican Imports, Midland's own Mexican market, is easy to find at 410 N. Terrell. You'll feel like you're right in the middle of a market in Mexico when you step through the front door and see the big case full of turquoise jewelry, leather wallets and all sorts of goodies. Examine the wide selection of velvet pictures, big and small, of stars and landscapes.

Racks of leather purses and skirts, along with embroidered dresses and blouses in many colors for ladies and girls look just like those found in your favorite Old Mexico market place. Panchos, leather belts and straw hats for big men and their little shadows will be found at Carmen's. Even suits for those favorite sons are at Midland's Mexican market.

That's only the beginning of any Mexican market shopping spree, but you're off to a good start at Carmen's. Next, the children will want to explore the musical bride dolls, soft dolls, zipper coin purses, little rockers and chairs of red and yellow, a vast array of pinatas. Meanwhile, adults will seek out the many decorative items for their home and yard. Spanish Chandeliers, statues small and large, illuminated, musical floral arrangements, clocks with floral decorations, lamps with umbrella shades, and woven baskets.

On to the cares of outdoors with little donkeys drawing carts for flowers and such. Huge clay pots, wrought iron plant racks, bird cages, tables, chairs, even rocking love seats are perfect for the patio (or indoors).

The many musical instruments should not be overlooked. Guitars, tamborines, and more.

When you've worked up an appetite your head will be turned by Mexican spices, bean pots, bowls of graduated sizes, corn grinders, tortilla presses, rolling pins, and iron skillets. Placemats, a pitcher with matching mugs, and oil/vinegar sets will help you set the perfect table in the midst of a baker's rack, unusual cookie jars, sugar cannister, and beautiful brass pieces.

Then Carmen's Mexican Imports also has some things that you probably wouldn't expect to find at a Mexican market. Centennial Sewing Machines, home stereos, car stereos, adjustable height floor fans and desk fans, televisions and other appliances.

It's time for a Mexican market shopping spree and Carmen's Mexican Imports at 410 N. Terrell offers all the fun without the long, long trip.

Roy and Carmen Hearon are the owners of Midland's own Mexican marketplace, Carmen's Imports, 410 N. Terrell.

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Trust your hunches in the months ahead and you will improve both your job performance and financial position. Small businesses and partnerships get a welcome boost in September and again in February. Romance has you on pins and needles. Make up your mind about the kind of mate you really want. A strong attraction to a newcomer could mean the end of a long-term relationship. Renew old friendships. A former employer could recommend you for a special job or honor. CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: actors James Cagney and Donald Sutherland, Diahann Carroll, Phyllis Diller, Art Linkletter, Lucie Arnaz, baseball's Lou Boudreau.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A business venture started today will produce fine profits in the near future. Joint finances demand more of your time and energy. An older person is a valuable ally. Romance heats up.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Do not mistake someone's aloofness for a lack of interest. This person is strongly attracted to you! An unexpected legacy or bonus reduces financial pressures. Keep up the good work.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A good day to reappraise methods and procedures. Get rid of outmoded ideas or equipment. Profits rise when you become better organized. Investigate a "high-tech" approach. Your social life accelerates.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Review your insurance coverage if you have a new addition to your family. Seek financial advice from experts only. Delegating routine work to others will leave you more time for creative projects.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Act immediately on new ideas, or the competition could beat you to the punch. Refuse to let others steal your glory. Loved one may act impatient. Keep an old friend's secret.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A good day to tie up loose ends. New challenges come your way, but you meet them successfully. Good timing is the key to your extraordinary success. Keep your plans quiet.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Others will pitch in and help if you confide in them. Discuss a financial problem with someone influential. Romance takes a temporary back seat to career. Show appreciation for mate's understanding.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A relative's advice may be well-intentioned but impractical. Romantic partner's body language reveals what he or she is really thinking. Be more diplomatic. Recycle an old idea to make new profits.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Reckless spending could leave you in a financial bind. Practice small economies such as taking your lunch to work. A second job or weekend employment brings extra cash, new contacts.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Seek solitude when working on a complex project. You need quiet in order to concentrate. Original ideas are a big hit with someone influential. You move up the ladder of success.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Do not be afraid to try new methods and ideas. A relative stranger will soon play a major role in your personal or professional life. Sharpen your skills if you want a raise.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your sense of humor helps you deal with ridiculous requests. Exercise self-discipline, and a solo project can be finished by lunchtime. Keep any diet or exercise resolutions.

Preemptive bidding is a two-edged sword. Sometimes it will achieve its objective and prevent the opponents from reaching their optimum contract. Occasionally, however, it will push the opponents into an inferior contract that cannot be defeated as the cards lie. Here is an example from the recent International Team Trials held in Memphis, Tenn.

After West's three diamond preempt, North had no convenient method to describe his good hand. He might have tried three hearts, but a raise to four hearts would have left him on the horns of a dilemma—should he pass or show his spade support? Since three spades would have been competitive, he compromised by jumping to four spades. That, not surprisingly, got South very interested in slam. When his club cue-bid elicited a heart cue-bid from his partner, South leaped to slam—little dreaming that his trump suit had a hole.

In response to his partner's lead-directing double, West led a heart. Declarer realized that there was no way that he could avoid a diamond loser—he did not have the entries to set up and cash a long heart after drawing trumps. Therefore, the fate of the slam was going to depend on the trump finesse.

To cater for a 3-0 trump break, declarer won the ace of hearts in dummy and led the jack of spades. Had East not covered, declarer would have run the jack. When East covered and the 3-0 split was revealed, it was a simple matter to cross to the board with a club and take the marked finesse for the ten of trumps.

In the other room declarer also made the technically correct play in the trump suit. However, his side was only in five spades, and he suffered a substantial loss on the hand even though he made the same number of tricks as his opponent.

Puerto Rican becomes Miss Universe

MIAMI (AP) — A "really, really excited" Deborah Carthy-Deu of Puerto Rico, the crown of Miss Universe 1985 still fresh on her head, attributed her success to hard work, faith and holding on to a dream.

Miss Carthy-Deu, a 19-year-old, hazel-eyed brunette from San Juan, was crowned Monday night by Miss Universe 1984, Yvonne Ryding of Sweden, before an audience of 5,000 people in the James L. Knight International Center and an estimated 600 million television viewers around the world.

The university student, who wants to become an actress, won a $175,000 prize package, that includes $120,000 in cash, a Mazda RX-7 sports car, a mink coat, a Hollywood screen test, a New York City apartment for a year and five years worth of makeup, suntan lotion and panty hose.

"New York, here I come," said the 118-pound, 5-foot-8, new Miss Universe in a news conference after the two-hour pageant emceed by game-show host Bob Barker and actress Joan Van Ark.

Miss Spain Teresa Sanchez, 20, was first runner-up; Miss Zaire Benita Mureka, 18, was second; Miss Venezuela Silvia Martinez, 20, third; and Miss Uruguay Andrea Lopez, 17, fourth.

The remaining semifinalists, chosen in competition last week, were: Laura Martinez-Herring, 22, of El Paso, Texas; Marcia Giagio Canvezes, 21, of Brazil; Karen Tilley, 21, of Canada; Claudia Van Sint Jan, 19, of Chile; and Olivia Tracey, 24, of Ireland.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Debra Winger, who lost out on the title role in a new Francis Ford Coppola film because of a hiking injury, is negotiating a new role for later this year, her publicist says.

Winger

Ms. Winger, 29, is about 70 percent recovered from a ruptured spinal disc she suffered during a fall while hiking in January near a cabin she owns in New Mexico, publicist Pat Kingsley said Monday.

She is "doing a lot of swimming and walking" and undergoing physical therapy, Ms. Kingsley said.

Ms. Winger lost the title role in Coppola's "Peggy Sue Got Married" to actress Kathleen Turner because of her injury. She currently is negotiating for a movie in the fall — when she will first be able to return to work — but Ms. Kingsley said she could not disclose further details.

ST. LOUIS (AP) — After 23 years of bringing animals and their habitat into America's living rooms, Marlin Perkins is retiring as the guide to Mutual of Omaha's "Wild Kingdom," partly the result of his battle with cancer.

Perkins

Perkins, 80, is leaving the show immediately because of his age and his battle with cancer, Len Tondl, a Mutual of Omaha vice president, said Monday.

Jim Fowler, co-host of "Wild Kingdom" for many years, will become host of the longest-running wildlife show on television, Tondl said. A new co-host has not been chosen.

Perkins, who lives in suburban St. Louis, has spent much of the past year undergoing chemical and radiation treatment, but continued making trips to the studio to film opening and closing segments for "Wild Kingdom."

"He had some cancer cells behind his left eye that were causing him great pain," Richard Reinauer, an associate producer, said in a telephone interview from his office at Don Meier Productions in Chicago.

"Since the eye was removed about a week ago, he is free of pain and is feeling much better," he said. "I talked to him on the phone this weekend. He sounded bright and chipper and he said he's getting his strength back."

MONTEREY, Calif. (AP) — Rock Hudson, who joined Doris Day in films like "Pillow Talk" and "Send Me No Flowers," shared a stage with the actress and her new co-star, a dog, as they introduced "Doris Day's Best Friends."

Hudson, Eva Gabor, Merv Griffin and the dog, 1-year-old Buster, attended a news conference Monday when Miss Day introduced the new cable television show about pets. The half-hour program will air beginning Oct. 6 on the CBN Network.

Miss Day, 61, a veteran of about 40 films, including three with Hudson, is the founder of the Doris Day Pet Foundation in Los Angeles.

The show marks Miss Day's first regular television appearances since 1972.

TORONTO (AP) — The Queen Mother, who ends a five-day visit to Toronto today, had to put her royal foot down on one occasion so changes could be made in her minutely planned itinerary.

Even the weather acquiesced Monday as dense morning fog blocked the Queen Mother's demand for a trip up the CN Tower, then rain ruled out a planned visit to historic Fort York, then sunshine led to another request to see the tower.

Dressed in pale-grey silk dress with lilac-flower design, matching chiffon coat, lilac-colored hat trimmed with grey and lilac flowers on its side, she sat in the revolving restaurant atop the tower and sipped lemonade.

From the 1,825-foot height of the world's tallest free-standing structure, the Queen Mother gazed fondly down at the city she first saw in 1939 with her late husband King George VI.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Associated Press on Friday erroneously reported that "At Close Range," a movie starring Sean Penn to be released next year, will be a docudrama.

The movie's publicist, Katherine Moore, said the film is a study of relationships inspired by a 1978 murder case, but it is not a true story.

NEW YORK (AP) — James F. Parker, an artist and director of the Paris campus of the Parsons School of Design, died Monday of cancer. He was 51.

A painter and former dean of students at Columbia University School of Engineering and Applied Science, Parker taught courses on color theory and painting at Parsons for 10 years. As director of the Paris campus since Aug. 1, 1984, he coordinated activities in France for the New School for Social Research, Parsons' parent institution.

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Lily May Ledford, a banjo-playing singer who once performed at the White House for the King of England, died Sunday of cancer at a Lexington hospital. She was 68.

Miss Ledford, known also as Lily Ledford Pennington, died two months before she was to accept the National Endowment for the Arts' Heritage Fellowship Award.

She performed at the White House in 1939 with the Coon Creek Girls in a program to show King George and Queen Elizabeth various styles of music. She was Berea College's artist-in-residence in 1979 and 1980.

Petroware offers state-of-the-art software and continuous support

Petroware, the world's leader in petroleum software, offers state-of-the-art software systems for both the accounting and engineering needs of the oil and gas industry. Don Lawler, Sales Manager of the Midland Petroware office at 110 W. Louisiana, emphasizes that Petrowar-e's most important product is outstanding software support.

Possibly the biggest problem software buyers face is that the development company might be out of business soon after they buy the software. It happens far too often, particularly in a volatile industry like petroleum.

Petroware will be in Midland to support their clients for a long time The largest client base in the industry means solidarity and responsiveness.

Petroware's accounting package includes ten integrated systems: General Ledger; Accounts Payable; Accounts Receivable; Production Accounting; Joint Interest Billing; Revenue Distribution; Investment Accounting; Land Records: Lease Management; Depreciation, Depletion and Amortization; Payroll and Petroleum Economics.

All Petroware accounting systems can be used individually as stand-alone programs or integrated into one coordinated system.

Petroware also offers a fully integrated relational database of scientific engineering software, EnPAK. EnPAK is comprised of four integrated systems; Reserves and Economics, Volumetric Oil in Place, Volumetric Gas in Place, and Production Curve Analysis.

En PAK engineering software provides many product features.l Each system is a fully-relational workstation which stores and supplies data to all programs. A full-color graphics package gives users immediate visualizations and presentation capabilities. EnPAK also offers a unique expert/novice option with windows and pop-up screens for easy explanation and use.

Like Petroware's accounting system EnPAK was designed to use the capabilites of microcomputers, rather than emulating a batch mode main-frame system. Combine this with competitive pricing, and the oil and gas industry finally has the finest in accounting and engineering software from one company.

Petroware considers the job only begun when the software is sold. This is because the most important product Petroware sells is outstanding software support. Training, consultation services, hotline telephone support, and on-going system programming are all part of Petroware support.

Petroware has developed a suport program second to none. Petroware's on-going system programming includes a "wish list" for clients to request enhancements to the system, industry required enhancements necessary to keep clients up-to-date with accounting and engineering changes in the industry, and incorporation of new technologies in the Petroware system. Linda G. Hayes, president of Petroware, said that the client "wish list" has proven very valuable in product development.

"The biggest benefit from the 'wish list' though, is all of the little tweaks and enhancements we make in our exisiting products as a result of the list... Having over 500 clients really makes the 'wish list' important. That many clients means that the Petroware products stay user-driven and responsive. All of these enhancements and ideas are passed on to all clints, so everyone benefits," says Hayes.

Petroware's claim to more clients than anyone else in the industry means solid support that you can count on for years to come. Any software company can manage to get 25 to 50 clients. Then they stop growing. Other software companies do not realize how much commitment support requires, and they don't structure their companies to meet that commitment. With 500 clients, support requires an extremely diligent effort. Petroware has over 500 clients because the sell support.

Call 687-0401 or go by 110 W. Louisiana, Suite 170 and ask Don Lawler or Frances Edwards what Petrware can do for your company.

Petroware Sales Manager Don Lawler and Support Representative Frances Edwards point out that Petroware has more clients than anyone else in the industry. For customers that means solidarity. Call 687-0401 to find out how Petroware can help you cut margins.

House panel OKs Medicare tax for some recipients

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House subcommittee, while rejecting an administration proposal for an across-the-board increase in Medicare health insurance premiums, has approved a new Medicare tax to be paid by elderly recipients with incomes above $20,000.

The House Ways and Means subcommittee on health approved the tax Monday as part of a package of Medicare changes that could go to the full Ways and Means committee next week.

It would affect individuals with incomes above $20,000 and couples with incomes above $40,000 who participate in Medicare, the government's health insurance program for the elderly and disabled.

Rep. Pete Stark, D-Calif., the subcommittee's chairman, said the proposal was drafted as an alternative to the Reagan administration's plan to raise premiums for Medicare Part B coverage, which pays doctor bills. The administration proposal would have raised the monthly fee for everyone by the same amount.

Stark did not call it a tax, instead referring to the measure as "an income-related premium collected by the Internal Revenue Service." By whatever name, he said, it was fairer than a flat increase.

"This is an attempt to hold those low-income folks' contribution as low as you can," Stark told reporters following a closed-door drafting session. "It's an attempt to spread the cost on a progressive rather than regressive means."

In his 1986 budget proposal, President Reagan said individuals are paying too little of the cost of their Medicare Part B coverage. When the coverage was established, he said, individuals paid 50 percent of the cost. But the premium increase has been sharply restricted, he said, and the current premium of $15.50 a month pays less than 25 percent of the program's costs.

Reagan's proposed solution would have boosted the premium to $16.80 in 1986, and continued boosting it by two percentage points a year for the next four years. By that time, he said, premiums would pay 35 percent of the costs.

Stark's subcommittee agreed to increase the income from premiums by about $400 million over three years, so the premiums would pay 25 percent of program costs. But he said the subcommittee did not want to increase the premium for poor people.

Under the panel's bill, the general premium would be frozen at somewhere $15 and $16 a month.

He said the tax rate is being recalculated, but predicted the total premium expense would be less than $200 a month at the highest. Even at that level, he said, coverage remains a bargain.

"I have not seen any insurance companies breaking down my door and saying they wanted to provide this coverage," Stark said. "It's still an awfully good bargain."

Overall, Stark said, the bill approved by the subcommittee will save $10 billion "give or take a couple of hundred million" through spending cuts and increased revenue.

The bill would require newly hired employees of state and local governments to come under Medicare coverage beginning next year, a decision that would bring in an estimated $500 million in payroll taxes over three years.

It rejected the administration's freeze on Medicare payments to hospitals and physicians. Instead, it allows a 1 percent increase for hospitals, which still trims some $5.36 billion over three years from the anticipated cost.

A special review commission recommended a 2.1 percent increase, but the administration proposed a freeze at 1985 levels.

For at least two years, the bill also would provide extra income for urban hospitals treating a disproportionate number of poor people. The administration has been cool toward that idea, arguing that no one has shown such extra payment is justified.

And, the bill would require all hospitals to give emergency care when needed, regardless of the patient's ability to pay. That requirement would be backed by civil penalties for hospitals and criminal penalties for doctors who knowingly turn away patients needing care.

The provision is aimed at profit-making hospitals that "dump" charity cases on non-profit hospitals without regard for how badly emergency treatment is needed.

NATION IN BRIEF

Tainted cheese blamed on two more fetal deaths

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The toll of deaths and stillbirths linked to a bacteria found in tainted cheese rose to 64 as county health officials blamed the bacterial infection for two more fetal deaths.

Listeriosis, the disease caused by the bacteria, was detected in four additional Los Angeles-area mothers and their newborns and in a 39-year-old man with a chronic illness, health department spokeswoman Myrtha Woolley said Monday.

Investigators blame some of the listeriosis deaths in California and six other states on a bacteria-tainted Mexican-style cheese. Two types of cheese found to be tainted with the Listeria monocytogenes germs have been recalled.

Newborns, the elderly and those with chronic illness are particularly susceptible to the bacteria, two strains of which have been detected so far.

Mortuary has recordings

BOSTON (AP) — A funeral home operator who wanted to make it easier for residents of tightly knit East Boston to find out who from the community had died has started a telephone service called "Dial-An-Obituary."

Callers hear a recording listing the name of the deceased, date of death, surviving relatives who live in East Boston, the funeral home making the arrangements, the date, time and place of the funeral and burial and where donations can be sent in memoriam.

Louis Vazza owner of Di Pietro and Vazza Funeral Home in East Boston said the service was started June 10 and has averaged about 50 calls a day.

"It's quite unique, isn't it?" said Vazza, 52. "It's going over quite well. No complaints whatsoever."

Although other funeral homes names are identified, "It's a form of advertising (for his business). I hope it works. You can never tell," Vazza said of the gimmick.

Tom Star, whose voice the caller hears, says, "The main thing is that it does not sound morbid."

Ex-officer faces prison

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A former policeman faces four years in prison after pleading guilty to planting a bomb aboard an Olympic bus and later removing it to make it appear he was a hero.

Jimmy Pearson, 41, who resigned from the police force shortly after the incident pleaded guilty Monday to possessing explosives. Sentencing will be Sept. 20.

Pearson was accompanying a bus carrying luggage of Turkish athletes to Los Angeles International Airport after the Games last Aug. 13. At the airport, he claimed to have discovered the pipe bomb, then removed it and disarmed it.

Pearson was at first hailed as a hero, but after an all-night investigation and interrogation, police announced he had been accused of planting the bomb because he apparently felt he was being overlooked by his superiors.

Ex-Coke employee sues

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. (AP) — A former Coca-Cola bottling company employee who says she was fired because her fiance, a co-worker, switched to Pepsi has filed a $600,000 defamation and violation of privacy lawsuit.

Amanda M. Blake, 28, claims in her suit filed Monday in Hampshire Superior Court that her employer gave her an ultimatum in April: she either break off with David J. Cronin, who had left Coke to work for Pepsi, or have him quit.

When Ms. Blake rejected the order, she says, she was fired.

The lawsuit seeks $150,000 each from Coca-Cola Bottling Co. of Northampton Inc., plant president Alfred Griggs, personnel director William R. Coradetti and comptroller Charles Parisher. It claims the firing violated Ms. Blake's right as an employee, her privacy and constitutional rights and was a breach of contract. The suit also alleges she was defamed by the implication that she could not be trusted.

"It made me sad that they didn't trust me. I was more sad than mad after all the hours and time I put in, and then they didn't think twice about firing me," said Ms. Blake, who joined Coke in 1977.

Aborted shuttle mission rescheduled

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — NASA has rescheduled the aborted liftoff of space shuttle Challenger to July 29 and delayed two other launches and a test firing of the engines on the newest shuttle, Atlantis.

Officials on Monday also raised the possibility of combining two late-year missions into one if the schedule gets tight.

Challenger's launch was reset for about 3 p.m. on July 29, but National Aeronautics and Space Administration spokesman Charles Redmond said it could be two days earlier or two days later, and will depend on a July 23 assessment of the condition of the shuttle's three main engines.

The launch was aborted Friday when a computer sensed that a valve in engine No. 2 did not close properly and ordered the engines to shut down just three seconds before seven astronauts were to have lifted off on a science mission.

Because the engines fired up, they will have to be thoroughly checked and tested before a go-ahead for launch can be given. Engineers said a preliminary look found them in good condition.
