MISD weighs revenue options

Needed repairs for school hang in balance after bond election defeat

■ To generate $1 million, trustees would have to raise property tax rate about 3 cents; another solution would be to take money from reserves.

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Midland school board trustees need another $1 million to create a better environment for at least 700 students. With the failure of the June 1 bond election, the proposed $2.6 million renovation of Travis Elementary School hangs in the balance.

Trustees had set $1.6 million aside in the budget to rebuild classrooms at the school that was built in 1953. In order to generate an additional $1 million to redo the school, trustees would have to raise the $1.38 cent property tax rate about 3 cents. Other options would include taking the money from reserves, but that could lower the district's bond rating, said Midland Independent School District Superintendent Joseph Baressi Jr.

School administrators had planned to have Travis — the most overcrowded school in the district — serve a dual purpose, according to Wilson Heidelberg, MISD executive director of auxiliary services. Instead of renovating the existing building, the plan was to add onto the campus' two new buildings — called pods — built behind the elementary school.

Administrators discovered it would cost the same to add onto the new buildings, which house 14 classrooms, as to renovate the old. Construction plans would add 20 classrooms to the existing 14 pod classrooms.

Travis Principal Michael Worley said one pod was built in 1982 and one in 1989. "They match, and are in very good shape," he said. The principal said one of the proposed renovation features that would really benefit students would be enclosing the walkways, since classroom doors open directly to the outside and the elements.

The school, which serves an all-day kindergarten, second, third and sixth grades, had more than 700 students last year. The proposed renovation also would enlarge the school cafeteria and office space.

Once the new classrooms are constructed at Travis, it will free up the old campus building for another use.

"Then, we could use the old building to house elementary school students as

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

STANTON — Martin County Hospital's 24 EMS volunteers returned to active status on a provisional basis Tuesday following the temporary reinstatement of nurse-paramedic Kevin Barnes as Emergency Medical Service director.

"We need our EMTs (emergency-medical technicians) back working," said Gwen Sawyer, chairman of the hospital's board of directors.

The EMS volunteers, including paramedics, EMTs and emergency-care assistants, resigned Monday to protest Barnes' removal from the EMS post after his promotion as trauma coordinator and staff nurse. Barnes was promoted after he became a registered nurse through Midland College's nursing program.

'The response of the EMS organization is that we are back on the ambulance service in a provisional manner.'

— Gary Reid, a paramedic

Last week, Martin County Hospital Administrator Rick Jacobus appointed Walt Haislip, 42, as EMS director to succeed Barnes, 25, who had been the EMS director since November 1992.

Haislip had served as the EMS director from the late 1980s until Barnes replaced him. Haislip had been in charge of the patient-transfer ambulance service at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center.

After the volunteers resigned, the hospital board held an emergency meeting to resolve the conflict. The board reinstated Barnes to appease the volunteers.

His reinstatement is effective at least until Sept. 19, when the board will meet with Jacobus, Barnes and the volunteers and name a new director.

"It was, hopefully, a way to get our EMTs back working," Mrs. Sawyer

SAN DIEGO — Masking his anger at an embarrassing defeat, Bob Dole appealed for party unity Tuesday as several moderate GOP governors raised the prospect of a divisive fight over abortion at next week's Republican convention. Dole, rebuffed Monday in his effort to make the platform more acceptable to abortion rights supporters, was making a last-ditch attempt to avoid a convention floor battle. Page 6A

Rising food prices

A nickel here, a dime there. Sometimes a whole dollar. Americans are watching their grocery bills creep upward because of storms and drought in the nation's farm regions. Still, smart shoppers will be able to find sales and specials on some of the very items that have been going up in price. Moreover, supermarkets say the increases are being offset by falling prices on other products. Page 5A

N.Y. Times News Service

Scientists studying a meteorite that fell to Earth from Mars have identified organic compounds and certain minerals that they conclude "are evidence for primitive life on early Mars."

The discovery of the first organic molecules ever seen in a Martian rock is being hailed as startling and compelling evidence that at least microbial life existed on Mars long ago, when the planet was warmer and wetter. The molecules found in the rock, which left Mars some 15 million years ago, are being described as the fossil trace of past biological activity.

In a statement issued Tuesday, as unofficial word of the discovery spread, NASA Administrator Daniel Goldin confirmed that scientists had "made a startling discovery that points to the possibility that a primitive form of microscopic life may have existed on Mars more than three billion years ago."

A detailed description of the research, conducted at the Johnson Space Center in Houston, is to be given at a NASA news conference at 1 p.m. today in Washington. The journal Science is publishing a full report on the work in its Aug. 16 issue.

Judges redraw congressional districts, order new elections

HOUSTON (AP) — Plunging Texas politics into turmoil, a panel of federal judges Tuesday redrew the congressional map, threw out the results of primaries in 13 of the state's 30 House districts and ordered new elections.

The redistricting was done to conform to recent U.S. Supreme Court rulings outlawing the drawing of districts primarily on the basis of race.

Incumbents in the 13 districts include House Majority Leader Dick Armey, his deputy Tom DeLay and Ways and Means Committee chairman Bill Archer. The three powerful Republicans are in districts that probably will continue to be GOP-dominated.

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled in June that the Texas Legislature improperly drew two districts in Houston and one in Dallas to create a majority of voters who were black or Hispanic.

A panel of three federal judges decided that redrawing the unconstitutional districts could not wait until the Legislature meets in 1997, so they redrew the lines themselves.

Correcting the three illegal districts meant adjusting surrounding districts: the new map affects seven Houston-area

Woman already aborted twin in controversial case; hospital says

LONDON (AP) — Reports that a woman planned to abort one of her twins because she couldn't afford two babies led to a public outcry and offers of large amounts of cash — until a hospital revealed Tuesday the fetus already had been aborted.

Anti-abortion groups even went so far as to get a court order Tuesday to prevent the woman from going through with the procedure, before the truth emerged.

"The operation has taken place," Hammersmith Hospitals Trust said in a terse statement confirming earlier reports on the BBC. It said the unidentified woman was "adamant she does not want any more details put out."

The agency did not say when the abortion was performed at Queen Charlotte Hospital. BBC radio said it was as far back as March, and Dr. Robert Winston, a fertility specialist, told BBC TV he believed it took place about a month ago.

Further details about the woman were not immediately available — including whether she had given birth to the other twin. Media reports described her as 28 and unmarried with one child, and said she sought the abortion because of financial difficulties.

The case received enormous media coverage and outraged anti-abortion activists just one week after a controversy over the destruction of about 3,300 frozen embryos unclaimed by couples treated at fertility clinics. The embryos were destroyed under a law limiting storage to five years.

The story appeared first in the Sunday Express newspaper this weekend, and by Tuesday, anti-abortion advocates pledged more than $77,000 in an effort to dissuade the woman from getting the abortion.

Sue Douglas, editor of the Sunday Express, defended the newspaper's account that the abortion hadn't yet been performed, saying that was what the woman's obstetrician, Phillip Bennett, indicated when he was interviewed.

She said Bennett had even checked the story for accuracy before it was published.

"From our point of view, the situation is very simple: the doctor in question talked to us last Wednesday. I've checked the tapes again of the interview, and he said he had discussed with his colleagues — he uses the word 'today' — the termination of the pregnancy," Douglas told The Associated Press.

Mark Purcell, a spokesman for the hospital trust, said the misunderstanding arose when Bennett was providing background information for a Sunday Express story on the destruction of the frozen embryos and mentioned the twins case.

He then started giving incorrect information to create a "bit of a smokescreen" to protect the woman's identity, Purcell said.

He said Bennett gave the impression the abortion had not yet occurred so that when the story was reported, "the lady wouldn't recognize herself."

Bennett was not immediately available for comment, Purcell said.

The flurry of cash pledges to the woman included $38,750 from a London couple, the Society for the Protection of Unborn Children said Monday.

A London-based Christian radio station, Premier, reported that a businessman called offering $31,000, and an Italian organization, Movement for Life, offered to pay the woman $217 a month.

Another British anti-abortion group, Life, said it had offered $1,550.

Dr. Wendy Savage, a gynecologist with the group Doctors for a Woman's Choice on Abortion, described the cash offers as "part of the anti-abortionists' campaign to whip up sympathy for their position that all abortion is wrong."

"I find it horrifying that a woman is having her private medical history bandied around and that people as it were are auctioning her unborn child," she said in a BBC radio interview Tuesday.

"I think this whole question of how this got into the public domain is a real ethical problem in itself," she said.

Earlier Tuesday, the Society for the Protection of Unborn Children won an injunction against Queen Charlotte Hospital preventing the abortion until 10 a.m. today.

Britain legalized abortion in 1967, and in 1990 lowered the cut-off from 28 weeks of pregnancy to 24 weeks. Some 165,000 abortions are carried out each year.

Chechen rebels attack strategic sites in Grozny

GROZNY, Russia (AP) — Chechen rebels launched their biggest assault in months Tuesday, seizing several strategic sites in the center of Grozny while Russian jets and helicopters fired bombs and rockets.

The attack is part of a continuing Russian offensive in the southern mountains, in defiance of two separate cease-fire agreements. It comes just three days before President Boris Yeltsin's inauguration in Moscow for a second term. Yeltsin promised during his campaign to end fighting in the separatist republic.

Hundreds of heavily armed rebel fighters attacked Grozny, the Chechen capital, from several directions at dawn. The heaviest fighting was around the railroad station, government buildings, a bank and police stations. Rebels took control of several main roads, Russian military officials said.

Fighting continued late into the night.

Rebel forces were backed by tanks and armored personnel carriers. Rebel snipers kept main streets under constant fire, and dark smoke rose from the southwestern factory district.

Russian fighter jets bombed Chechen-held areas, and frequent explosions shook the shattered city center. Helicopter gunships fired hundreds of rockets at buildings sheltering rebel fighters.

The rebels claimed to have shot down two Russian helicopters, but the report could not be confirmed.

Sixteen Russian soldiers were killed and more than 50 wounded, Gen. Anatoly Kvashnin, head of the North Caucasus military district, told the Interfax news agency.

The Chechen Interior Ministry told the news agency that 13 pro-Moscow Chechen policemen had also been killed and 45 wounded. Many of the rebel attacks were against facilities of the Moscow-backed Chechen government.

The separatists said two of their fighters died in the battle, but the Russians reported heavier rebel losses.

Rabbi sends archaeologists home, sparks fears of religious interference

MODIIN, Israel (AP) — Israel's deputy housing minister has evicted archaeologists from the country's largest construction site, exacerbating fears that newly elected Orthodox leaders are imposing their values on the rest of the country.

Rabbi Meir Porush, whose decision was announced Tuesday, said it is more important to protect Jewish graves than to study the Holy Land, a precedent-setting decision that could spur religious politicians to stop digs elsewhere in Israel.

"Once they stop the archaeologists from their research, we lose our ability to study history, the origins of this country. ... It affects our culture, our knowledge of history, and the ability to live a normal life in this country," said Yoram Tsafrir, former head of the Archaeology Department at Hebrew University.

Israel is a treasure trove of ancient artifacts. Tsafrir said he expects many digs and construction projects to be halted in the future because "in every place in Israel you will find bones."

Ultra-orthodox Jews believe tampering with remains of the dead violates Jewish law, and believe strongly in protecting the sanctity of graves.

Religious parties who want Jewish law to play a stronger role in Israeli society won 23 seats in the 120-member parliament in the May elections and their representatives have been appointed to key government positions. Since then, ultra-Orthodox leaders have pushed through several policies to promote their beliefs and benefit their communities.

For example, the government decided to shut down a Jerusalem thoroughfare for most of the Jewish Sabbath, and the Housing Ministry plans to build 20,000 homes for ultra-Orthodox Jews.

Only about 10 percent of Israel's Jewish population, about a half million people, belong to the country's ultra-Orthodox minority. The ultra-Orthodox usually live in separate neighborhoods, obey their own rabbis and courts, and live by a strict interpretation of Jewish law.

Unlike other Jews in Israel, the ultra-Orthodox rarely serve in the army and do not attend public schools. They believe a true Jewish state will arrive only when the Messiah appears.

The dispute between archaeologists and ultra-Orthodox Jews over Jewish burial sites has flared many times in the past, often leading to violent clashes between demonstrators and police.

Until now, archaeologists have been called in to conduct salvage digs before the Housing Ministry gives the go-ahead for construction. About 200 of the 300 excavations run every year by the Israel Antiquities Authority are salvage digs at construction sites.

Porush, who is from the ultra-Orthodox United Torah Judaism party, on Sunday sent home archaeologists from a salvage dig at Israel's largest construction site in Modiin, halfway between Jerusalem and Tel Aviv.

The government plans to complete 7,000 apartments on the site over several years in the first stage of what is eventually to be Israel's third-largest city.

"Since the construction is financed by the Housing Ministry, we have instructed that this be checked with those who know how to preserve the graves of Israel," Porush told Israel radio.

"If there are Jewish graves, there is no reason why the grave of my grandfather's grandfather should be destroyed without checking if there is another way to develop the site."

Yossi Levy, an archaeologist with the Antiquities Authority, said the decision marked the first time the Housing Ministry has halted a dig because of a suspicion that graves were in the area.

Until now, it was customary to dig up the bones and rebury them elsewhere.

Faction's new leader 'thinks as an American, but feels like a Somali'

By Hrvoje Hranjski
Associated Press

MOGADISHU, Somalia — Hussein Mohamed Aidid doesn't look exactly at home in Villa Somalia, the official residence of Somali leaders for the past 36 years.

Shy, rocking back and forth in his chair, the clean-cut, former Marine looks more like an American college student than the leader of Somalia's most powerful faction.

But since Sunday, the 34-year-old son of Gen. Mohamed Farrah Aidid, who died last week from wounds received in a recent battle, has a new, unexpected job. He's been named president of the Republic of Somalia by his father's followers.

The post is hotly contested by his father's archrival — Ali Mahdi Mohamed.

"Professionally, I think as an American," Aidid, a naturalized U.S. citizen, said Tuesday at the heavily guarded south Mogadishu residence during his first interview as faction leader and president. "But I feel like a Somali."

At least 20 advisers, colleagues and friends of his father crowded into the room, hanging onto their new leader's words.

Appearing somewhat uncomfortable but still trying to show he was in charge, Aidid turned several times to his father's foreign minister and long-time aide, Jama Mohamed Ghalib, to ask for help.

Ghalib, who is believed to exercise strong influence over the younger Aidid, listened intently, intervening several times.

In Somali society, Hussein's young age would generally be considered a disadvantage for a leader. He doesn't think it is.

"There are many people from my age group who are stepping in," he said.

The younger Aidid first came to public attention when he was serving as a Somali-English interpreter in December 1992 as part of a U.S. Marine contingent that spearheaded Operation Restore Hope.

The U.S.-led United Nations mission was intended to safeguard the distribution of food to Somalis who had been cut off from supplies by the late 1980s clan war that ultimately destroyed the modern Somali state.

Aidid was known then as Cpl. Hussen Farrah and was not immediately associated with Gen. Aidid, the staunchest Somali foe of international intervention.

Cpl. Farrah served only from Dec. 18, 1992, to Jan. 5, 1993, in Somalia before returning to the United States, where he had lived since 1976 with his mother, who had divorced the senior Aidid.

After receiving a university degree in civil engineering, Aidid decided to enlist in the U.S. Marine Corps reserves in 1987. He was assigned to Battery B, 14th Marine Regiment in Pico River, Calif.

"I always wanted to be a Marine. You know how it is watching Marine soldiers," he said in soft, Somali-accented English. "I'm proud of my background and military discipline. Once a Marine, always a Marine."

But even while wearing the Marine uniform and with his U.S. passport in hand, Aidid said he never forgot the importance of clan and family in Somalia. He returned to Mogadishu last year with his Somali wife and small son.

"We Somalis always stick together," he said, sitting beneath an official photo of his father and framed verses from the Koran, the Muslim holy book.

WEATHER WATCH

Sunny skies, high in mid-90s today

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for mostly sunny skies, a high in the mid-90s with southeast winds at 5-15 mph, according to the National Weather Service.

Tonight's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies, less than 20 percent chance of rain and a low in the lower 70s.

Thursday's forecast calls for partly sunny skies, 20 percent chance of rain and a high in the low to mid-90s.

The high for Tuesday was 98, compared to the record high for that date of 107, set in 1964.

Tuesday's low was 76, compared to the record low of 61, set in 1975.

STATE

It was the same song, different verse, for Texas weather on Tuesday.

Scattered rain showers and thunderstorms drifted with the sea breeze over parts of the upper Texas Gulf Coast from Corpus Christi to Port Arthur. Scattered showers also marked parts of the West Texas mountains.

Otherwise, skies were generally clear to partly cloudy with mid-afternoon temperatures ranging from a rain-cooled 87 in Houston to 102 at Fort Hood's Gray Army Air Field, near Killeen.

Afternoon temperatures were generally in the 90s, although highs in North Texas were not as hot as they had been during the weekend, with southerly breezes gusting to near 20 mph.

The North Texas forecast calls for low morning clouds with a chance of afternoon showers and thunderstorms extending from Waco and Temple over East Texas. Otherwise, skies will be partly cloudy. Highs in the mid- to upper 90s. Lows in the mid-70s.

Tropical moisture will still bring scattered afternoon showers and thunderstorms to the Texas Gulf Coast through today. Otherwise, skies will remain partly cloudy. Highs in the 90s. Lows in the 70s, except for lower 80s on the beaches.

West Texas should see partly cloudy skies with isolated to widely scattered showers and thunderstorms through today. Precipitation bill be likeliest over the Panhandle and South Plains tonight and Thursday. Highs from the upper 80s in the West Texas mountains to around 105 along the Rio Grande. Lows in the 60s and 70s.

NATION

Cool weather settled over the Northwest on Tuesday, while thundershowers fell over the Carolinas and Nebraska braced for more rain in the face of floodwaters.

Heavy thunderstorms were developing over a hot and humid eastern Nebraska, bad news for communities hoping that flood waters would recede after several days of rains.

The small town of Winslow was forced to evacuate when sandbagging efforts failed to hold back the swollen creeks.

"We were about to get somebody hurt. Water is in houses," said Winslow Fire Chief Marty Klein.

In eastern Kansas, severe storms diminished into showers by afternoon.

In the Southeast, thunderstorms brought heavy rains to the South Carolina coast, where days of heavy rains have saturated the ground and more flooding was expected. Other storms started up along the Gulf Coast of Alabama and Georgia.

It was a sweltering afternoon in Michigan, where temperatures soared to 91 in Kalamazoo, and parts of the Northeast felt like a sauna.

But from the Pacific Northwest to the northern Great Basin, cool air brought record lows in the early morning. Temperatures in Pueblo, Colo., dropped to 50 degrees, tying a record set last year.

EMS: Hospital reinstates director said. "It was what they wanted, and we thought the citizens of Martin County came first."

Mrs. Sawyer characterized the volunteers as a "very dedicated group of EMTs. And I admire them for sticking together. It makes you even more proud of them."

She said Haislip would be assigned to another position in the hospital.

"I am going to take care of Walt (Haislip)," Jacobus said Tuesday. "I owe that to him."

Haislip was not available for comment following the board's action in removing him as EMS director. But earlier Monday, Haislip said that even without the EMS volunteers, "we do have all the ambulances covered" in Stanton and neighboring Ackerly, apparently through hired EMTs. There will be "no lapse of (EMS) service."

Mrs. Sawyer said she did not know why the volunteers did not want to work with Haislip.

However, Gary Reid, a paramedic in the EMS, said the volunteers were "not out to 'get' Walt (Haislip). We are out to keep Kevin (Barnes)" as EMS director. "First and foremost ... (concern is for) what is best in patient-care for the citizens."

Mrs. Sawyer said that Barnes "will continue as the EMS director" during the search for a "suitable replacement" of paramedic status, which is the highest level among EMTs. "He is a very smart young man."

Barnes said he had proposed that he could "supervise the whole (EMS) thing" even after a new EMS director is approved but that the hospital board "didn't want that."

Barnes expressed concern that "if the EMTs don't like" the new director, "I guess they could walk again" until there is a "suitable replacement to make them happy."

Reid, 47, said that Monday's walkout was the first in the estimated 15-year history of the EMS volunteer organization in Stanton. "This walkout is not to be taken as an affront to the people" of Martin County. "We are back on because the (board) put Kevin back."

Barnes will have input in the selection process for the replacement director, Reid said. "Our complete trust is in Kevin ... who cradles the same love and ideals that we do."

"The response of the EMS organization is that we are back on the ambulance service in a provisional manner," Reid said. "I don't want the citizens of Martin County to think that we are going to walk out any time we don't get our way. We are dedicated to them and to the pre-hospital care we give them. We want the people to know that they can depend on us. We will stand up for what is right."

Reid said that the EMS volunteers "started this entire deal (walkout) in support of Kevin and the values that we hold dear."

In a letter that Reid and the other EMS volunteers sent to the Reporter-Telegram before Monday's board meeting, they wrote, "It is with heavy hearts" that the Martin County Hospital EMS volunteers "will no longer provide professional medical services to the Martin County Hospital Ambulance Service until Kevin Barnes is reinstated as EMS director."

The EMS director "should be a person who can organize the energies and talents of this group and motivate the personnel." In his almost four years as EMS director, "Kevin Barnes ... has become a proven leader," they wrote.

"We believe Kevin was not treated fairly (when Haislip was appointed Aug. 1) and was not given the opportunity to prove to the Hospital District that he could continue to adequately serve as our EMS director."

Reid said that the volunteers appreciate the hospital board's effort in resolving the matter." The board members "did go through a lot of trouble. I think we have a better understanding of them, and they have a better understanding of what we believe and stand for."

Correction

An article in Sunday's edition incorrectly stated that the World War II German military-service pistol, the P-38, is the same as the German Luger.

The Reporter-Telegram regrets the error.

MISD: Board needs $1 million for Travis Elementary

their schools were renovated," Heidelberg said. "It would speed up construction. Otherwise, we are limited to doing construction during the summer months when kids are gone."

The administrator said the plan — if the bond election had passed — was to use Travis to house students for five or six years during district renovations. "Then it would probably be torn down," Heidleberg said.

If a bond election doesn't pass this year — to at least renovate the district's oldest elementary schools — Baressi said renovations could drag out over 16 years with one elementary school a year being repaired.

MISD officials said the dual purpose for Travis could still work if money is put into the budget through a tax increase or through a successful bond election in December or in the spring.

If the board votes to raise the property tax rate at the Aug. 27 meeting, Heidelberg said construction on Travis could begin soon after.

At a board meeting Monday night trustees questioned raising the tax rate and then convincing voters to vote for a bond election that would also raise the tax rate.

Trustee Jackie Hamilton said that voters in the Travis area did not vote in favor of the June 1 bond election (according to precinct reports) that would have funded renovations for the school. Some Travis students, however, are bused in from a wide area.

Trustees are looking at about a $94 million operating budget for next year. Each penny that the tax rate is raised generates approximately $360,000.

Art Martin, MISD executive director of business services, said MISD's property tax rate of $1.38 per $100 valuation is below other area school districts including Lubbock, San Angelo and Ector County ISD.

Martin said trustees will have a budget to study at Tuesday's board meeting. Although the school board won't vote on a budget until the Aug. 27 meeting, Baressi said trustees will have to decide whether or not to request bids on Travis' construction at Tuesday's regular meeting.

He said the question trustees will grapple with is "to either bid Travis or take it out of the budget."

districts and six around Dallas, accounting for a third of Texas' 9.7 million registered voters.

"Relatively few voters have been moved into new or unfamiliar districts," the judges wrote.

Still, candidates and incumbents who won primaries in March may suddenly find themselves facing one or more rivals — some from their own party — who feel the new district boundaries give them a chance.

Some candidates will find themselves running in communities where they haven't campaigned before, rushing to build name identification and political ties.

Candidates have until Aug. 30 to qualify for the new races, which will coincide with the Nov. 5 general elections. If no one gets a majority in any race, the two top vote-getters will compete in a runoff on Dec. 10.

In a similar case last month in North Carolina, a three-judge panel decided redistricting could wait until next year. Two of those judges were appointed by Democrats.

The three judges in the Texas case were all appointed by Republicans, and Democrats feared they would redraw districts favoring the GOP.

Rep. Martin Frost of Dallas, chairman of the House Democrats' campaign committee, said only two Democratic districts will become more Republican under the judges' map.

"It could have been worse, that's all I'll say," he sighed. "It could have been worse."

In June, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the three-judge panel's decision two years ago that three districts were unconstitutional.

They are a mostly black district in Houston held by Democrat Sheila Jackson Lee, a mostly Hispanic district in Houston held by Democrat Gene Green and a predominantly black district in Dallas held by Democrat Eddie Bernice Johnson.

"(The redrawn districts) hurt Democrats and help Republicans," said Green, who planned to appeal. "Those decisions ought to be made by elected officials, not a three-judge panel."

But Edward Blum, one of the six Republican voters whose lawsuit forced the change, welcomed the decision.

"No longer will the citizens of our state be forced to endure a system that is racially unjust and immoral," he said. "The Legislature will no longer be allowed to classify and segregate citizens by race to further the electoral ambitions of some self-serving politician."

Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock said the judges "struck a balance that can serve Texas. The plan does not smack of politics or needlessly change boundaries that already had been set."

The districts will last for just one election, before the Legislature redraws them again next year.

SIGNS: Other scientists say findings are not convincing

(From 1A)

A draft of the Science paper, written by a team led by Dr. David S. McKay of the Johnson Space Center, identified the telltale compounds as polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons, called PAHs, which often have biological origins and are associated with coal and diesel exhaust, and the minerals magnetite and iron sulfide, both of which are related to bacterial action on Earth. In addition, they found some carbonate globules that are similar in texture and size to materials produced by bacteria on Earth.

"The PAHs, the carbonate globules and their associated secondary mineral phases and textures could thus be fossil remains of a past Martian biota," the researchers concluded.

Although the authors of the paper were under orders from NASA not to talk before the news conference, scientists familiar with the research spoke in unusually enthusiastic terms about the work.

One scientist called the results "unequivocal." Another said it was one of the most stunning discoveries in the solar system in recent decades. But they cautioned that it would take more research to assess the full implications of the discovery for the longtime quest for extraterrestrial life.

Dr. David C. Black, director of the Lunar and Planetary Institute in Houston, praised the research as being "very, very cautious" work that would not have been possible two or three years ago, before new analytical instruments for electron microscopy were available.

"The signs are all consistent with biological activity," Black said. "But what makes the case much more interesting is that the compounds are found all together in proximity within the meteorite. That is really suggestive."

Reservations about the interpretation of the discovery were expressed by Dr. Jack D. Farmer, a geologist and paleobiologist at the Ames Research Center in Mountain View, Calif. He said the meteorite, as one of the oldest rocks ever identified in the solar system, contained evidence that Mars had water early in its history and that this environment, with liquid water and organic molecules, was one where life could have existed.

"We didn't know this about Mars until now," Farmer said. "It gives us a lot of compelling reasons to go back to Mars. But it doesn't tell us anything definite about life. It's interesting, but not convincing."

Because of its possible scientific and philosophical ramifications, Goldin briefed President Clinton and Vice President Al Gore last week about the discovery. They were reported to be "excited" about the research.

After the space agency makes its formal announcement, White House officials said, Clinton is likely to call for more study of the question of fossil life on Mars and may propose adding resources to ongoing NASA projects to place unmanned spacecraft and roving vehicles on the planet.

The last major thrust of Mars exploration by the United States was the Viking project, which landed two robotic craft on the cold, arid surface and conducted weeks of tests, sampling the soil for any trace of biological activity.

The results appeared to rule out any lingering hope of Martian life in some microbial form, though other investigations showed that water must have flooded the Martian surface in the distant past, raising the possibility that life existed there soon after the planet's formation 4.5 billion years ago and then disappeared.

The scientific plans for future missions call for focusing on searches for fossils in regions where water once stood and might still be present in a kind of subsurface permafrost.

The meteorite bearing the organic molecules is one of only 12 identified as having come from Mars, based on analyses of their chemistry, compared with that of Martian surface materials examined by the Viking instruments. It is the oldest, having crystallized from molten rock about 4.5 billion years ago, in the planet's infancy. The carbonates, chemicals closely associated with the PAH molecules, dated from 3.6 billion years ago.

About 15 million years ago, scientists estimate, a huge asteroid collided with Mars, gouging many pieces of rock from beneath the surface and scattering them into space. One of them eventually fell on the icy Allan Hills in Antarctica about 13,000 years ago.

Scientists found the meteorite in 1984 and named it Allan Hills 84001, but identified it as Martian only recently. Experts believe that many other fragments of Mars probably lie unrecognized in meteorite collections.

As soon as the meteorite was found to be Martian, McKay and his colleagues began investigating its pitted and fractured dark surfaces, making thin slices of the rock where they detected the organic molecules. The work involved scientists from the Johnson center, Stanford University, the University of Georgia and McGill University in Montreal.

The scientists described the PAH molecules, which contain multiple connected rings of carbon atoms, were clear and distinct. They studied the samples further to make sure the organic molecules had originated on Mars, not as the result of terrestrial contamination.

One telling piece of evidence was the fact that the concentration of the molecules increased as the analysis moved inward; if those molecules had been contamination, they would have been concentrated on the surface.

These PAH molecules are common on Earth, and many of them have biological origins related to bacteria. They are abundant, for example, in ancient sedimentary rocks, coal and petroleum, the residue of the chemical changes that occurred to the dead marine plankton and plant life that were the source of these rocks and so-called fossil fuels. The PAHs also occur during partial combustion, as when a candle burns and when a steak is grilled on charcoal.

The scientists began to sense they might be approaching a big discovery when they noted other characteristics of the rock's chemistry and mineralogy. The highest concentrations of PAHs were associated with carbonates. The carbonates, found in the rock fissures, were younger than the rock itself. The magnetite and iron-sulfide particles inside the carbonate globules are in many ways similar to particles produced by bacteria on Earth.

In their planned journal report, the scientists wrote: "None of these observations is in itself conclusive for the existence of past life. Although there are alternative explanations for each of these phenomena taken individually, when considered collectively, particularly in view of their spatial association, we conclude that they are evidence for primitive life on early Mars."

The authors of the report, other than McKay, were Dr. Everett K. Gibson Jr., of the Johnson Space Center; Dr. Kathie L. Thomas-Keprta, of Lockheed Martin in Houston; Dr. Hojatollah Vali, of McGill University; Dr. Christopher S. Romanek, of the University of Georgia's Savannah River Ecology Laboratory in Aiken, S.C.; and Dr. Simon J. Clemett, Dr. Xavier D.F. Chillier, Dr. Claude R. Maechling and Dr. Richard N. Zare, of Stanford University in California.

Dr. Ray Arvidson, a planetary geologist at Washington University in St. Louis, said that McKay had a reputation as an extremely careful scientist and that his findings could be trusted. "If this holds up," Arvidson remarked, "this is pretty darned exciting."

Goldin said NASA "is ready to assist the process of rigorous scientific investigation and lively scientific debate that will follow this discovery."

With the recent detections of planets around other stars and the planned return of robotic spacecraft to Mars, with launchings beginning late this fall, the space agency has stepped up efforts to explore the possibilities of life elsewhere in the universe.

Despite Watergate reforms, corporate money flows to conventions

By Connie Cass
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Corporations with numerous interests before Congress will foot about a third of the bill for the Democratic and Republican conventions this month — despite reforms two decades ago designed to keep their money out.

Philip Morris, Amway, United Airlines and Anheuser-Busch are just a few of the donors who will be paying for everything from stages and lighting to daiquiris and dance bands.

AT&T, which donated $1.5 million in services and money to each convention, is one of the sponsors of a state fair-themed party for new Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, an important player in the recent overhaul of telecommunications law.

Such events "give us a chance to recognize members of Congress who we feel have played key roles in issues important to AT&T," company spokesman Jim McGann said.

The bulk of each convention's roughly $30 million cost will be borne by national and local taxpayers through a post-Watergate system of public financing that was created to chase corporate money away from the political conventions.

It didn't work out that way.

In San Diego, more than $12 million in private money has been raised for the Republican National Convention that begins Monday. More than 45 companies gave at least $100,000 apiece, guaranteeing them two or more tickets into the convention hall and invitations to golfings, horse racing, countless cocktail parties and a dinner-under-the-stars gala with nominee Bob Dole.

In Chicago, private donors have chipped in more than $9 million toward the Democratic National Convention, which begins Aug. 26. More than 65 companies wrote six-figure checks and will be rewarded with invitations to events still being planned.

At least a dozen corporations gave $100,000 or more to both conventions.

They include major defense contractors Lockheed Martin and Tenneco and corporations in heavily regulated industries: United Airlines, BankAmerica Corp., and medical companies Abbott Laboratories and Baxter International.

Others are Anheuser-Busch, Chrysler, Browning-Ferris Industries, and Archer Daniels Midland, the giant food processor and ethanol producer known for giving huge sums to both political parties.

Philip Morris, which is fighting the Clinton administration's attempts to regulate tobacco, is a major sponsor of the Republican convention; the company's Kraft Foods division sponsors the Democratic convention.

Why support both Democrats and Republicans?

"They want friends in both parties. It's that simple," said John Herrington, chairman of the California Republican Party.

Other contributors are unabashedly partisan. Amway Corp. — one of the GOP's most generous backers — gave $1.3 million to San Diego's visitors bureau to cover the cost of airing the Republican National Convention on cable TV.

Corporations also sponsor fundraisers planned around the conventions — in San Diego, for example, a $96-per-head beach party and a train trip with House Speaker Newt Gingrich and others pulling in as much as $5,000 per ticket.

In addition, businesses and labor unions will set up unofficial hospitality suites and private parties for convention-goers.

It's legal, even though political parties have been prohibited from taking contributions to pay for their nominating conventions since 1974, when the system of taxpayer financing of conventions began.

"Obviously, corporations and money interests still have enormous influence," said John Bonifaz, executive director of the National Voting Rights Institute, a non-partisan group that supports complete public financing of elections.

Each party receives $12 million in federal funds to cover convention costs — and is limited to spending that amount under election law.

In addition, the city of Chicago and state of Illinois have kicked in $10 million for the Democratic convention, and San Diego is spending $6.5 million on the Republicans.

Report: Straying husbands, lovers may be causing spread of cervical cancer virus

Risk of cervical cancer (in a study group) was increased 11 times for wives of men who had 21 or more other sex partners.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Unfaithful husbands may give their wives cancer.

That's the conclusion of a study that found women are five to 11 times more likely to develop cervical cancer if their men frequent prostitutes or have many sexual partners. The cancer is directly linked to human papillomavirus, or HPV, a virus that is commonly spread by sexual intercourse.

"Male behavior is the important thing in this cancer," said Dr. Keerti V. Shah, a professor at the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine. He said men who have many sexual partners are very likely to carry home the HPV virus and that up to 97 percent of cervical cancers are infected with virus.

"In effect, the husband takes cancer home to his wife," said Shah, co-author of a study on cervical cancer to be published Wednesday in the Journal of the National Cancer Institute.

Although the study showed that men brought the virus home to their wives, any woman can put herself at increased risk by having many different sexual partners, said Shah. The cancer risk for women, he said, increases with the number of either direct or indirect sexual exposures.

The study, conducted in Spain, compared the sexual patterns of husbands whose wives have cervical cancer with a control group of husbands whose wives were healthy. The study took into account other lifestyles influences, such as smoking. The study also took genital swabbings to test for the presence in both spouses of the HPV virus.

In the study group were 183 women with cervical cancer and their husbands. The control group had 171 couples.

Risk of cervical cancer was increased 11 times for wives of men who had 21 or more other sex partners. The cervical cancer risk was eight times greater among wives of men who frequented prostitutes, the study found.

Dr. Willard Barnes of Georgetown University School of Medicine said the study reinforces evidence that "cervical cancer in many ways is similar to classic venereal disease."

"HPV is a very common type of virus," he said. "It has been known for some time that it places women at a higher risk of cervical cancer."

There are more than 75 different strains of HPV virus. Some cause ordinary warts on the hands, arms or legs. At least two, strains number 6 and 11, cause genital warts. Most cervical cancers are related to HPV numbers 16 and 18.

In the study, Shah said the researchers found all different types of HPV strains in genital specimens taken from the husbands.

There is no treatment for HPV infections, but the body's own immune system usually eradicates the virus within six to 18 months. The infection, however, can be restarted, over and over, if there is new exposure. And the more exposures, Shah said, the greater the chances that one infection will lead to cancer.

Correct use of condoms can lower the risk of spreading HPV, Shah noted. And women can protect themselves from cancer through regular gynecological examinations and Pap smears.

Cervical cancer develops in stages and Pap smears can detect the abnormal, precancerous cells. Those cells then can be removed by freezing, burning or surgery and this generally will prevent the cancer, Shah said.

Cervical cancer rates in the U.S. have declined since the 1970s, according to National Cancer Institutes statistics. In 1973, the cervical cancer rate was 14.2 per 100,000 American women. In 1991, the last year figures are available, the rate had dropped to 8.6 per 100,000. Shah attributes this to routine medical screenings.

Detected early, cervical cancer has a five-year survival rate of about 90 percent. At later stages, when the cancer has spread to distant sites, the five-year survival rate is 11.6 percent.

Drought, storms in farming regions drive food prices up

By Joyce M. Rosenberg
AP Business Writer

'It seems like everything you buy is too high. I usually go ahead and buy it anyway.'
— Grocery shopper Ann Thoren, Des Moines, Iowa

A nickel here, a dime there. Sometimes a whole dollar. Americans are watching their grocery bills creep upward because of storms and drought in the nation's farm regions.

Still, smart shoppers will be able to find sales and specials on some of the very items that have been going up in price.

Moreover, supermarkets say the increases are being offset by falling prices on other products.

A spot check by The Associated Press in several big U.S. cities found prices inching upward between late June and early August on bread, pasta and meat. These increases come on top of a surge over the past year.

But the survey also found stores putting meat, cereal and bread on sale, in the expectation of making up the discounts from other items.

"It seems like everything you buy is too high," said Ann Thoren, shopping at Aldi Foods in Des Moines, Iowa. But she added: "I usually go ahead and buy it anyway."

The government and many economists are warning that food prices will continue to rise into next year.

The failure of the winter wheat crop in parts of the Midwest is expected to push prices for bread and pasta as much as 8 percent higher.

"I always look at the ads before I go to to the store. I find out what is on sale and tune my menu to what's on sale. If chicken is on sale, I'll cook chicken," said Celeste Nip, a shopper in Honolulu.

In South Portland, Maine, Theresa Kent said she's been buying more store-brand items.

So far prices for bread seem to be rising slightly. A loaf of Wonder bread that cost $1.59 in two Columbus, Ohio, stores in late June now goes for $1.65. At a Dallas Tom Thumb store, Wonder rose 20 cents to $1.49.

Meat and poultry prices also showed signs of rising, although supermarkets are continually putting a variety of cuts on sale, as they traditionally do. In Kansas City, Mo., Marsh's SunFresh store charged $1.99 a pound for Tyson split chicken breasts, up 20 cents from late June.

For the time being, a shopper's overall food bill may not rise that much, said Paul Bernish, a spokesman for Kroger Co., one of the nation's biggest supermarket chains.

Bernish noted that coffee prices, which shot higher last year because Brazil's crop was reduced by about half, have come back down. And companies like Kimberly-Clark Corp. and Procter & Gamble Co. have cut prices on things like toilet paper.

Cereal makers don't seem to be passing their higher costs on despite the rising cost of wheat. In recent months, Kellogg, Post, General Mills and Quaker Oats all cut prices to increase their market share.

At a Honolulu Safeway store, the price of a 12-ounce box of Trix fell from $5.49 to $5.19 over the past six weeks. At an A&P in Wallington, N.J., Kellogg's raisin bran was $1 off, at $2.99.

FBI searches Jewell's apartment complex

ATLANTA (AP) — FBI agents searched several buildings Tuesday in apartment complex of the prime suspect in the Olympic Games bombing, but failed to get him to read a transcript of the 911 warning about the bomb.

Richard Jewell has been interviewed numerous times by the FBI, and agents have obtained samples of his hair and fingerprints, but his attorney, G. Watson Bryant, there was a limit to his cooperation.

The FBI said it believes a white male with no distinguishable accent made the call from a pay phone near the park, saying "There is a bomb in Centennial Park. You have 30 minutes," before hanging up.

"They wanted him to read the 911 call statement 12 different times. That seems excessive to me," Bryant said. "They've already got him on tape for an hour. There's also a self-incrimination issue."

Jack Martin, a more experienced criminal defense attorney hired by Jewell on Sunday, met with Jewell and Bryant late Tuesday morning and emerged alone six hours later, saying, "We're looking at the case and developing facts."

FBI agents returned to the northeast Atlanta apartment complex where he lives with his mother, searching the laundry room and the manager's office.

Last Wednesday, investigators said they found bomb fragments in the apartment. Bryant has said the metal and wood scraps were merely souvenirs given to Jewell by other guards. And after bringing Jewell back to his apartment Tuesday evening, Bryant said they weren't from the bomb.

Jewell was praised for spotting the pipe bomb in a knapsack shortly before it exploded on July 27 and scattered shrapnel into a concert audience, killing one woman and injuring 111 people.

Bryant and Martin have tried unsuccessfully to get federal documents unsealed to better determine the FBI's case.

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Masking his anger at an embarrassing defeat, Bob Dole appealed for party unity Tuesday as several moderate GOP governors raised the prospect of a divisive fight over abortion at next week's Republican convention.

"If there is a floor fight, New Jersey will be there," vowed Gov. Christie Whitman.

Dole, rebuffed Monday in his effort to make the platform more acceptable to abortion rights supporters, was making a last-ditch attempt to avoid a convention floor battle.

In the meantime, he tried to change the subject to tax cuts, suggesting his new economic plan would expose President Clinton as a tax-and-spend liberal.

"How can anyone believe Bill Clinton when it comes to taxes?" Dole said in a satellite address from Washington. "After all, he ran for president promising middle-class tax relief, then as president hit the American people with the largest tax increase in history."

But in San Diego, Dole's economic package was barely an afterthought as Monday's stunning platform victory by GOP abortion foes raised the question of whether Dole was in charge of his convention — or of the party he will lead into the November election.

Emboldened by their victory, several leading social conservatives said they would fight any fresh efforts to soften the platform's anti-abortion tone. Several said flatly that the strength they demonstrated Monday should serve as a reminder to Dole as he narrows his search for a running mate.

Veteran anti-abortion activists Phyllis Schlafly and Gary Bauer said Dole had no choice but to pick an abortion opponent for the No. 2 spot on the ticket. If Dole picks an abortion-rights supporter, "I think that there will be chaos," said Texas delegate Cathie Adams, a member of Schlafly's Eagle Forum.

Moderates, on the other hand, vowed not to take another convention drubbing from social conservatives without a fight.

"I don't want to drum the pro-lifers out of the party," said Massachusetts Gov. William Weld. "I just want there to be room for me and them." Weld said he was working with Whitman and Gov. Pete Wilson of California and Sen. Olympia Snowe of Maine on a strategy for an abortion floor fight if the platform committee made no concessions to moderates.

Significantly, New York Gov. George Pataki said he might join the effort. Out of loyalty to Dole, Pataki has been quiet on the subject but spoke up after Dole's overture to abortion-rights backers was defeated.

Like Pataki, Whitman chose her words carefully. Both said they would vote with abortion-rights supporters if there was a fight on the convention floor but did not flatly commit themselves to trying to bring the issue to that point.

Whitman said a floor fight would almost certainly damage Dole, but she also said, "If we send a message of intolerance, I don't think we're going to put him in a position of winning."

Democrats delighted in the chaos, suggesting it would hurt Dole's efforts to focus on his economic plan.

"It is a sad day when a presidential nominee can't convince his own party to preach tolerance, much less practice it," said Connecticut Sen. Christopher Dodd, general chairman of the Democratic National Committee.

Democrats approve party platform with little dissent

N.Y. Times News Service

PITTSBURGH — With little dissent, the Democratic Platform Committee on Monday approved a party platform that espouses the Clinton administration's policies on jobs, education and crime, promises tax breaks to help offset the costs of attending college and embraces the Republican-drafted welfare bill that the president has promised to sign.

Holding fast to New Democrat ideals that shaped Bill Clinton's 1992 presidential campaign, the platform calls for smaller government, for law and order, and for a shifting of more authority from Washington to the states.

Although the 34-page document adopted on Monday requires approval of the delegates to the party's national convention, in Chicago at the end of the month, there is little in it that breaks ground different from that of the 1992 platform, or that most Democrats would find contentious.

The platform sprang mostly from a draft that another party panel, the Platform Drafting Committee, produced in early July in Kansas City, Mo. That draft, written by the administration, was rubber-stamped on Monday, with only a few changes, by the 186-member Platform Committee at a meeting that took just three hours.

Committee members said the platform drew a sharp distinction between Democrats and Republicans on a variety of issues — minimum wage, gun control, gay and lesbian rights — but none more so than abortion, which is expected to be a major issue in the presidential and congressional elections this fall.

"The Democratic Party stands behind the right of every woman to choose, consistent with Roe vs. Wade, and regardless of ability to pay," the platform says.

The platform is peppered throughout with attacks on House Speaker Newt Gingrich and on Bob Dole, Clinton's apparent opponent.

The committee's meeting, in a hotel ballroom, was open to the public, and the only discordant voices came from two spectators in a public gallery at the back of the room, who denounced the committee and Clinton for supporting the welfare bill that Congress passed last week.

"The Democratic Party is turning its back on the poor," one protester, Daniel Kovalik, a labor lawyer from Pittsburgh, said before he was hustled out of the room. "I for one will not be voting for Bill Clinton, because of the welfare bill."

About an hour after Kovalik had been ejected, the other protester, Joni Rabinowitz, a Democratic committeewoman in Pittsburgh, stood and said, "This welfare bill is the most vicious, anti-human and pernicious bill that I have ever seen."

Welfare was one of the few subjects on which the committee was led to rework the platform. As originally drafted, the platform attacked two earlier Republican-drafted welfare bills, which, although similar to the one that the president has said he will sign, were vetoed by him.

Then, after Clinton's announcement of support last week, committee officials amended the platform's language, while ignoring the Republicans who wrote the legislation.

"Now," the new language says, "because of the president's leadership and with the support of a majority of the Democrats in Congress, national welfare reform is going to make work and responsibility the law of the land."

Investigators still unable to explain crash of TWA Flight 800

N.Y. Times News Service

SMITHTOWN, N.Y. — Another body and more wreckage from TWA Flight 800 were brought up from the bottom of the sea Monday, but investigators said they are no closer to finding out why the jumbo jet exploded and crashed 19 days ago.

Robert Francis, vice chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board, said he was "mildly disappointed" with the slow pace of the probe.

Francis also said that laboratories in Washington, which he visited Monday morning, have finished an analysis of the airplane's two "black boxes" — the flight-data and cockpit-voice recorders, which often contain vital clues to how an accident happened. However, in this case no conclusions could be reached, he said.

Officials reported earlier that a loud noise could be heard on the voice recorder's tape just before the plane's electrical system shut down. However, Francis said analysts have been unable to identify the noise.

"We're talking about fractions of seconds here," Francis said. "These are not modern recorders."

James Kallstrom, the FBI assistant director in New York, said a few days ago that many pieces of the plane had been flown to the FBI crime lab in Washington for analysis — especially for any chemical traces of a bomb. However, he would not comment Monday on whether any such traces had been found.

■ For updates on the Flight 800 story, call Cityline at 560-2400; enter category 6204

Progress also has been slow in unraveling the pieces of the cockpit — the nerve center of the plane — that were brought up Saturday night and taken to a nearby hangar.

Francis said Sunday the cockpit was such a "mass of spaghetti-like wire" that technicians would have to untangle the mess before putting it back together again.

Monday he said, "The study of the untangling has begun."

Technicians have discovered that the mass of metal and cables includes not only the cockpit but much of the electronics bay underneath. The condition of the cockpit and the electronics could tell much about where the explosion took place and whether it came from inside or outside the aircraft.

Meanwhile, the two Navy salvage ships in the area, the USS Grasp and the USS Grapple, continue to bring up wreckage.

Rear Adm. Edward Kristensen said Monday the entire area beneath the Grapple, where the cockpit was found, has been cleared away.

The body recovered Monday brings the total to 195.

There were 230 passengers and crew on the plane.

Editor's note — Poachers killed nearly all of Africa's black rhinos, reducing the population from 65,000 in 1970 to 2,400 in 1992 as prices soared for rhino horns which are ground up for medicine in Asia or carved into dagger handles in Arabia. Now the rhinos are coming back.

By Karin Davies
Associated Press

NAIROBI NATIONAL PARK, Kenya — A 5-year-old rhinoceros with a tranquilizing dart in her rump staggered through scrub brush until she fell with a thud in the dusty wash of a helicopter's blades.

The rhino is a victim of her own species' survival success. She's being moved to a region less-crowded with rhinos.

She might lose part of her distinctive horn on the trip, but there's less danger these days that she will be killed and the horn carved into dagger handles or ground up as medicine.

Under the watchful eyes of park rangers and the protection of international laws, the population of African black rhinos, once almost extinct, is on the rebound.

Already heavily decimated by white hunters in the 19th century, African rhinos beginning in the 1970s decreased by 96 percent as prices for rhino horn soared and agriculture hemmed in their habitat.

Now, under strict control, the population of black rhinos has risen to at least 2,500 in and around parks and on private land in eastern and southern Africa, an increase of 100 from three years ago.

The white rhino population is doing even better. There are 7,600 on the continent, most of them in South Africa.

"It shows that if you put in the commitment you can save these animals," said Esmond Bradley Martin, consultant to the World Wide Fund for Nature and an expert on the trade in endangered species.

National and international efforts to crack down on poachers and those who sell rhino horns to make dagger handles in Arabia and medicines in east Asia are working, he says.

In fact, there were 64 of the two-horned beasts at Nairobi National Park, too many for its 44 square miles.

The population boomlet is the result of the Kenya Wildlife Service's 12-year-old policy of providing fenced sanctuaries to protect breeding rhinos. Kenya now has 425 black rhinos, up from 350 in 1987.

Not a single rhino is known to have been lost to poachers in four years.

"In the short term, sanctuaries or intensive protection zones hold the best hope for the recovery of the black rhino," said Timothy Oloo, director of the wildlife service's rhino program.

As evidence the policy is working, the young female rhino zapped by the tranquilizer was being moved to a closely guarded, but unfenced area at Tsavo National Park. In one of the worst slaughters in history, poachers killed at least 8,000 rhinos there in the 1970s and early 1980s, nearly wiping out the population.

From a helicopter, the wildlife services chief veterinarian, John Wambua, fired a 2-inch-long, drug-filled dart into rhino's well-muscled haunch.

Within minutes, she toppled.

Rangers swiftly blindfolded her, and used a chainsaw to lop off the tip of her 12-inch horn, not to deter poachers but to prevent her from breaking her horn off as she is loaded in a crate and transported 130 miles southeast to Tsavo.

An antidote failed to revive the groggy 2,600-pound animal, so the relucant rhino was provoked to action by a blast of water in her ear.

"They'll charge anything from a steam locomotive to a butterfly," Martin said, standing well clear of the angry animal. Dozens of rangers tugged on a rope around the rhino's neck to pull her into the crate.

Eight rhinos recently were moved from Nairobi to Tsavo National Park. There are now 19 wild rhinos in the sprawling reserve, each equipped with a radio transmitter so that rangers can keep track of them.

Poachers armed with modern weapons killed nearly all of Africa's black rhino population in the 1970s and '80s. The population fell from 65,000 in 1970 to 2,400 in 1992.

The poachers were motivated by a dramatic expansion of the market for African rhino horns. In Yemen, the rhino horn dagger handle — traditionally a status symbol of the rich — suddenly became affordable to thousands of Yemeni men flush with earnings from Saudi oil fields.

The price for rhino horn shot up from about $15 a pound to almost $300 a pound in the 1970s, enough to buy off some of the park rangers who were supposed to be protecting the animals.

Alarmed, conservationists put pressure on range countries and importers of rhino horn.

Now Kenya has 425 black and 122 white rhinos; Zimbabwe has 315 blacks and 138 whites; Namibia has 598 blacks and 107 whites; and South Africa has 1,024 blacks and 7,095 whites.

"These countries have put more resources into looking after the rhinos," Martin said. "Also there is a general awareness of the importance of saving rhinos."

"There's no great mystery to this," he said, outlining his prescription for saving the rhino.

"You need to have enough manpower and equipment on the ground to look after the rhinos. You need a good intelligence service within the country, and also a good one outside to catch the international traders. And also what you need to do is prompt the use of substitutes."

It costs at least $740 per square mile per year to provide a safe haven for rhinos, Martin said.

"The most effective money is put into intelligence," Martin said. The best example is Namibia, where nearly every poacher and middleman is caught.

In Zimbabwe, for example, a shoot-to-kill policy against poachers did not work. More than 160 were shot, but the country has lost most of its rhinos.

In addition to better policing in countries with rhinos, international agreements banning the trade of endangered species also have been effective.

Asia, especially South Korea, China and Taiwan, are doing a better job now of preventing the trade, Martin said. "You just don't see the stuff there anymore."

As much as 4 tons a year were shipped to Yemen in the 1970s. That fell to 1.5 tons in the early 1980s, and about 200 pounds annually in recent years. Yemen outlawed horn imports in 1982.

Despite the drop in supply, the price of rhino horn in Yemen has been stable since 1985 at about $50 a pound.

"The explanation is, they're using substitute materials in a huge way," Martin said.

Yemenis make 150,000 new daggers a year, mostly from water buffalo horn or wood. More recently, plastic and semiprecious stones such as agate have been used, replacing the highly valued multihued, translucent rhino horn.

The distinctive spike on the rhino's head is made not of bone but of keratin.

In east Asia, substitutes for rhino horn are being used as medicine.

Despite widespread belief, rhino horn is not used as an aphrodisiac in Asia, Martin said.

The campaign to promote the use of substitute materials must continue, he said.

"We need to make a very simple point. We need to tell dagger-makers, traditional healers and doctors that if they continue to use rhino horn, there won't be any rhinos left," Martin said.

Rhino revival

The mammal family Rhinocerotidae originated in Europe 60 million years ago and spread to most continents. More than 30 species have been found in the fossil record.

The number of species has fallen to five. All but one, the white rhino, are endangered. Some facts about the remaining rhino species:

WHITE RHINO: Ceratotherium simum, also called the square-lipped rhino. This 4,500-pound animal, 6 feet tall at the shoulder, is second only to the elephant as the world's largest land animal. It survives in two subspecies. The northern white rhino may be the rarest large mammal on Earth with just 28 left in the wild, all in northeastern Zaire. The southern subspecies is found mainly in South Africa where there is a healthy population of more than 7,000.

BLACK RHINO: Diceros bicornis. The estimated 2,500 survivors of poaching in the 1970s and 1980s are scattered in and near parks of southern and eastern Africa. Despite their bulk — 3,000 pounds and 5 feet tall at the shoulder, they are remarkably agile, and may reach a speed of about 30 mph. The black rhino is ill-tempered and unpredictable, and may charge any unfamiliar sound or smell.

JAVAN RHINO: Rhinoceros sondaicus. Habitat loss as well as poaching has nearly killed off this 3,500-pound, 5-foot beast. Just 50 remain in Java's Ujung Kulon Nature Reserve, created in 1921 for its protection, and 12 in Vietnam.

INDIAN RHINO: Rhinoceros unicornis. The 4,000-pound, 5 1/2-foot, one-horned rhino takes readily to water, even swimming in wide rivers. Strict protection in India and Nepal has boosted its numbers to 2,000.

SUMATRAN RHINO: Dicerorhinus sumatrensis. The smallest of rhinos at 1,700 pounds and 4 1/2 feet tall is covered with bristly hair. Only an estimated 270 survive in Burma, Malaysia and Indonesia.

Dole tax-cut plan mostly political

Talking big tax cuts is good political strategy and Bob Dole, who watched Ronald Reagan get elected president twice by promising both big tax cuts and a balanced budget, has embraced the tax cut bandwagon to the tune of $548 billion.

Dole has even asserted that he could balance the budget at the same time and "finish the job Ronald Reagan started."

But even during Reagan's supply-side economics presidency, the federal deficit and debt grew at phenomenal rates. It has taken years to begin controlling the deficit — and we're still a long way from eliminating that problem. True, during Reagan's terms congressional spending went on at a high clip which may mean it was not a good test of supply-side economics.

That said, there certainly are some kinds of tax cuts that would benefit the nation currently. Specifically, Dole mentions lower capital gains taxes as a means of decreasing capital venture costs and creating jobs. And tax cuts that would encourage parents to save for their children's college education would be wise.

Dole goes even further, talking about the possibility of replacing the Internal Revenue Service system with a flatter, fairer tax system. No doubt Americans could embrace such a change.

But we can't see Americans throwing away the hope of deficit reduction for Dole's big tax cut proposal. It simply doesn't make sense. Hopefully, Americans will over the next month or two tell Dole and his campaign staff that a more moderate approach is needed in the way of tax cuts and the deficit so that a proper balance can be struck.

There was a time when Americans might have blindly grabbed for the tax cut ring Dole is extending, but Americans are more savvy than to fall for such a ploy today.

Episode adds chapter to German spydom

WASHINGTON — The recent espionage conviction of a close aide to the late West German Chancellor Willy Brandt adds another chapter to an era in Germany riddled with traitorous secret agents.

Brandt, the most famous and influential leader in post-war West Germany, should have been more astute about spotting these turncoat aides. For as a young man, Brandt himself had been a spy for the American Central Intelligence Agency.

Anderson

Karl Wienand, 69, was recently found guilty of spying for Stasi, the East German secret police. He was sentenced to two years in prison and fined $660,000 — the amount the prosecutor charged Stasi paid Wienand for secret information from the 1960s to 1989.

Before Brandt died in 1992, he was told by an ex-Soviet ambassador that Wienand had been Communist agent, according to the former chancellor's handwritten notes.

Brandt's reluctance to raise a public stink about the information may be a result of his own days as an informant for U.S. intelligence — or an unwillingness to believe that yet another of his former aides had betrayed the government.

Brandt's distinguished political career — which included the 1971 Nobel Peace Prize — came to an abrupt halt in 1974 (five years after he was elected chancellor), when he was forced out of office by an espionage scandal. Another of his closest aides had been revealed as a longtime East German spy. As chancellor, Brandt had continued to show secret documents to the aide long after being warned that the man might be a spy.

What made the story more interesting at the time was the growing evidence that Brandt had once been a spy himself. We first reported on Brandt's clandestine activities 15 years ago based on information supplied by four longtime U.S. intelligence officials. One of these officials claimed to have personally paid Brandt for information. The stories caused a stir in West Germany, where Brandt had remained an influential leader of the Social Democrats.

Brandt vehemently denied the allegation, saying it was beneath him to share information with other nations. As far as we know, the former chancellor never admitted he had been an intelligence agent in his youth.

Still, the evidence continues to point to this early role for Brandt. If true, it would make him one of the few — if not the only — spies ever to win a Nobel Peace Prize.

While still in his teens, Brandt joined a far-left political group and battled the Nazis during the tumultuous years before Adolf Hitler was named chancellor in 1933. When Hitler took over, Brandt fled to Norway, where he became a journalist. When the Nazis invaded Norway in the spring of 1940, he fled once again, this time to Sweden.

It was in Stockholm, according to our sources, that Brandt established ties with both U.S. and Soviet intelligence. American embassy files from that period, which we have reviewed at the National Archives, indicate that he was considered an astute, reliable source.

After the war, Brandt returned to his devastated fatherland. A certified anti-Nazi, he was regarded by U.S. officials as a politician on the rise and a good source of secret information.

Among those encouraging the CIA's interest in Brandt was Eleanor Dulles, the State Department's German expert and sister of CIA Director Allen Dulles.

According to one former CIA agent, Brandt provided "sensational information on East Germany and Russia" during the height of the Cold War. At the time, Brandt was in Berlin, a hotbed of East-West espionage. Times were hard in the postwar years, and one route to survival for well-placed Germans was the sale of information to the CIA and British intelligence — or to the KGB.

Our sources indicated the CIA continued to pay Brandt until at least 1956. One respected CIA agent told us he personally delivered an envelope he was told contained at least $25,000 to Brandt at a West Berlin restaurant in February 1956.

In 1969, Brandt became West German chancellor. There is no evidence that he provided intelligence information to the CIA during his years as chancellor.

Despite denials from Brandt and the State Department when our columns first appeared, we later learned that the CIA ordered removal of details of Brandt's covert activities from a book ("The CIA and the Cult of Intelligence") written by Victor Marchetti, a former high-level CIA official.

Jewell had some help achieving his notoriety

ALBANY, N.Y. — In one way, Richard Jewell, the itinerant security guard, brought suspicion on himself as the Olympic bomber whose act left two dead and injured more than 100.

After all, he pushed himself onto national television and courted newspaper interviews about his role in helping to clear the area around what turned out to be a pipe bomb stashed in an abandoned green knapsack in Atlanta's Centennial Olympic Park.

That behavior led to his being fingered as a person who in the past craved the hero's limelight. It became clearer that Jewell's personal history fit the profile of a likely bomber.

But Richard Jewell did not achieve the role of chief suspect by himself. He could not have done it nearly as well without the essential collaboration of the print and electronic news media.

First, the Atlanta Journal & Constitution carried word to the people of Atlanta with the publication of an afternoon extra edition naming him. In an instant, television, especially CNN, disseminated the news around the nation and the world, linking him for eternity to the bombing.

The trouble is that at that point, and even at this writing days later and after hours of intense FBI investigation of his person, his residence, his truck, his country cabin, Jewell remained at liberty, neither arrested nor charged.

As a philosophical abstraction, that's not all that terrific, either for law enforcement or journalism. Somewhere in the journalistic canon there is a predisposition not to name suspects before they are officially identified.

In the seminars, conventions, roundtables, and discussions groups where journalistic ethics and behavior are debated, it is relatively simple to subscribe to a formula that we in the press shouldn't — even wouldn't — do such a thing.

But in the workaday world, where competitive pressures burn with an intense and steady flame, noble sentiments give way, almost always, to getting the story and getting it first. It's what gives a news organization stature in the trade and an audience among consumers.

It would be wondrous if it were otherwise. Take what happened in Atlanta last week. In a town stuffed with Olympic tourists and news media, the identity of the bomber was of surpassing interest.

Through the customary relationships between reporters and law enforcers, the fact that official attention was focusing on Richard Jewell as suspect became known. Even as this word was making the rounds, the FBI went to Jewell's apartment, with neighbors out in the street watching along with a host of journalists.

In that situation, given what the Atlanta Journal & Constitution already knew from sources, and witnessing the open interest of the FBI in Jewell, editor Ron Martin and his staff, after some agonizing, decided they had no choice. With all the out-of-town newshounds in attendance this story could break any minute.

One of the more painful embarrassments in journalism is to be beaten on a big story in your own backyard. The Journal & Constitution decided not to wait until its regular publication schedule. Instead it published that extra Tuesday afternoon.

For the rest of the media world, that decided it. Some papers apparently spent difficult moments debating whether to go with the information while the suspect remained uncharged. Others did not bother, seeing as how the cat was anyway out of the bag once television got hold of it.

Either way, hesitantly or unreflectively, both sorts of publications published, almost all on page one, almost all prominently above the fold.

To hold out would have been finely ethical and Pyrrhic at the same time. A publication making that choice might, in the light of the morning after, stood alone, with its readers asking why their favorite paper failed to tell them about this signal development in a case very much on the minds of the American people.

Would playing the story less prominently, or putting it inside the paper (as the New York Times did, albeit with a page one reference key) have made a difference? In the larger scheme, not really, as Richard Jewell was still named as a suspect.

The past, in journalism, is little guide to the present. For in the past, many of these publications have made different decisions. In Atlanta, it would have taken an almost inhuman self-restraint for the local paper not to share with its readers what evidently so many people already knew. That differs from what happened in the William Kennedy Smith rape trial, when NBC, the New York Times and a weekly scandal sheet had named the complainant. Most other newspapers continued not to identify her.

As these disparate examples show, the particularities of each govern what the press will do. The guidelines of the New York Fair Trial Free Press Conference ask journalists to remember that "no one's reputation should be injured needlessly." It is the meaning of the final word of that injunction that will start the trouble.

ANOTHER VIEW

Jetty project needs a closer, serious look

No doubt many North Carolinians were pleased to see U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms, a Republican, and Gov. Jim Hunt, a Democrat, agreeing about something recently at a hearing in Washington. But making a pitch for two rock jetties at Oregon Inlet that would stretch for more than a mile into the Atlantic Ocean is not a public project even election-year bedfellows ought to be promoting.

Taxpayers who pause to weigh the public tab projected at Oregon Inlet may also be a lot less excited about the Helms-Hunt togetherness. This isn't a friendly game of tossing pennies at a line drawn on the beach.

First, there's the outside (probably conservative) estimate of $120 million for building the jetties from Bodie and Pea islands into the temperamental Atlantic. ...

Second, there's the expense (and the tricky engineering) of preventing erosion the jetties, left alone, would cause to areas below them. Sand trapped by the upper jetty would have to be pumped periodically through an underwater pipeline or transferred otherwise past the lower jetty on Pea Island.

Over the project's 50-year-life, the sand shuttle could cost $500 million or more. There's a possibility of offsetting a good part of this through reduced inlet dredging costs, but there's no guarantee.

Questions about the jetties go beyond capital outlay and cost-effectiveness. Coastal scientists have long raised concerns about other possible environmental effects. ...

Prodded by politicians of both parties and with an initial green light from Congress in 1970, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers has floated the jetty project around Washington and Raleigh for more than a quarter of a century. The Corps has yet to receive either the land or the money it needs for the jetties — meaning that, so far at least, better heads in Congress and the Department of the Interior have prevailed.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, August 7, the 220th day of 1996. There are 146 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On August 7, 1942, U.S. forces landed at Guadalcanal, marking the start of the first major allied offensive in the Pacific during World War II.

On this date:

In 1782, George Washington created the Order of the Purple Heart, a decoration to recognize merit in enlisted men and noncommissioned officers.

In 1934, the U.S. Court of Appeals upheld a lower court ruling striking down the government's attempt to ban the controversial James Joyce novel "Ulysses."

In 1947, the balsa wood raft Kon-Tiki, which had carried a six-man crew 4,300 miles across the Pacific Ocean, crashed into a reef in a Polynesian archipelago.

In 1964, Congress passed the Gulf of Tonkin resolution, giving President Johnson broad powers in dealing with reported North Vietnamese attacks on U.S. forces.

In 1974, French stuntman Philippe Petit walked a tightrope strung between the twin towers of the World Trade Center in New York City.

In 1976, scientists in Pasadena, Calif., announced that the Viking 1 spacecraft had found the strongest indications to date of possible life on Mars.

In 1989, a plane carrying Rep. Mickey Leland, D-Texas, and 15 others disappeared during a flight in Ethiopia. (The wreckage of the plane was found six days later — there were no survivors.)

Ten years ago: The Soviet Union announced it had granted political asylum to Edward Lee Howard, a CIA agent who had disappeared in September 1985.

Five years ago: The five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council agreed to authorize Iraq to sell as much as $1.6 billion in oil over six months to pay for food, humanitarian supplies and war reparations.

Good thing Hitler wasn't handled like these guys

There is not too much action on the war criminal trial front concerning Bosnia and Serbia. The reason is that the allies, including the United States, don't want to offend the Serbs or Croats or Muslims -- or any other rapists and torturers who have been running the show for such a long time. While not condoning war crimes, the West still insists that it's none of our business.

Buchwald

Based on the present behavior of the West it doesn't take much to wonder how the Allies would have handled the Hitler dilemma in 1945 had they played by the rules of the Serbian atrocities.

The U.S. diplomats find Hitler in his bunker. He is about to commit suicide when an assistant secretary of state says, "Adolf, don't kill yourself. We're here to make a deal."

"It better be good," Hitler says, toying with a poisoned cream puff.

"We're willing to forget the past if you resign as chancellor of Germany and guarantee a cease-fire."

"Does that mean I can no longer resort to murder, torture, rape and pillaging?"

"We're afraid so. If you agree to observe human rights in the future, we'll even forgive all your past misdeeds."

"Can I keep my house in Berchtesgaden?"

"Of course. You also get to keep your bunker here in Berlin. The West holds no grudges once a war is over."

Hitler confers with his mistress Eva Braun. Then he asks, "Do I have to be tried at Nuremberg?"

"The United States can arrange for the court to come to you. We don't want you to be inconvenienced in any way."

"Why are you so willing to make this deal?"

"Because, Adolf, we don't have the authority to bring you to trial in chains. All we can ask you to do is appear in front of the war crime tribunal and explain why you slaughtered so many innocent people. If you do this for us, we'll find you a nice job in Argentina."

"Am I the only one being offered amnesty?"

"No, everyone is, including Martin Bormann, Hermann Goering and Heinrich Himmler. Our only concern is making Germany quit the war, and we'll let bygones be bygones."

Hitler was deep in thought. "I would like an apology from the Allies for destroying my army and all my buildings."

"We don't have the authority to do that."

"Well, get it."

"Now don't get excited, Adolf, everything can be worked out. The secretary of state is aware of all the terrible acts you have committed, but we have to think of our own self-interests. Anything is possible if you resign and let Germany have free elections."

Hitler asks, "Will Britain and France agree to let bygones be bygones?"

"Of course, otherwise we wouldn't be here."

Rising costs of disposal prompts plant to reduce its nuclear waste

By James Minton
Associated Press

ST. FRANCISVILLE, La. — The River Bend nuclear power plant here "owns" a tiny bit of the Chernobyl reactor that exploded and burned 10 years ago.

Buried underground at a disposal site in Barnwell, S.C., are rainwater filters which collected radioactive dust that had slowly made its way around the world to fall on the Entergy plant, about 95 miles northwest of New Orleans.

"We looked at the isotope and saw it was cesium 137. We knew then it wasn't ours, but because we found it, it's ours now," said River Bend official Bill Odell.

A nuclear facility in the United States never really gets rid of its radioactive waste.

"We're responsible to the point where it goes underground. Then, we're the owner of record at the burial site," Odell said.

Radioactive waste falls into two categories: high-level and low-level. Spent fuel rods are considered high-level waste. The Department of Energy has spent billions of dollars to develop a Nevada depository for the nation's high-level waste, but no opening date is in sight.

River Bend, like most nuclear plants, stores its spent fuel in a pool of water that is constantly monitored.

Low-level waste includes contaminated protective clothing, wrapping materials, valve packing, old parts and other material taken out of the plant.

The "hottest" low-level wastes are resins used to extract radioactive material from water used in the plant.

A 1985 federal law mandated regional agreements among the states to develop low-level waste storage sites, but court battles, like one surrounding a facility in Nebraska, have slowed the proposed openings.

While nuclear plants can generate large amounts of radioactive waste, their owners have an incentive to control volume: tremendous disposal costs.

Once the disposal cost was about 80 cents per cubic foot, but the state of South Carolina now levies a $230 per cubic foot surcharge for wastes buried at Barnwell. The site operator charges an additional $200 per cubic foot.

In 1994, River Bend collected an estimated 52,880 cubic feet of dry radioactive waste, but the figure was calculated by less-than-precise visual measurements.

Last year, the plant began weighing its waste and calculating the volume at 10 pounds per cubic foot.

Under that formula, the plant set a goal of reducing the waste volume to less than 17,700 cubic feet for the year.

It won a company award for reducing its waste volume to only 3,614 cubic feet, more than a 70 percent reduction from the goal.

"The cost drove it. When it was relatively inexpensive, we didn't have to think of ways to minimize waste," Odell said.

An employee team found that 40 percent of the waste involved protective clothing: shoe coverings, tape, gloves and other coverings.

The plant switched to a washable shoe covering, or "bootie," with a harder sole, which eliminated a lot of trash.

Cloth gloves worn under rubber gloves were once thrown in with radioactive waste, although they were sealed with protective tape. Now the cloth gloves go out with the "clean" trash.

To further cut costs during the last refueling outage, River Bend brought in specialized, mobile laundering equipment to wash reusable protective clothing.

The team has removed trash cans from the reactor building as a "conditioning tool," said Davey Wells, a radiation control supervisor.

"When a guy goes in there, he knows there's no trash cans. So, he removes all the wrapping from the parts he's carrying on the outside," Wells said.

The plant also has begun more extensive use of incineration to reduce waste volume. It ships waste to a firm in Tennessee that burns it and ships the radioactive residue back to River Bend for disposal.

Entergy Corp. has utility customers in Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi and Texas.

Ski bums turned entrepreneurs lick money shortage with sales of gourmet ice cream

By Martha Mendoza
Associated Press

TAOS SKI VALLEY, N.M. — There weren't many people wanting to lick a buffalo chip until a couple of ski bums named Jamie Leeson and Todd Fortune came along.

Now the two young entrepreneurs have fans across the entire West yearning for a taste of their buffalo chip gourmet ice cream.

"It's definitely good stuff. I eat about three cones a day myself," said Fortune, a gangly Generation Xer.

Fortune, 28, and Leeson, 27, started their Taos Cow ice cream company three years ago in a tin-roofed adobe in the quiet village of Arroyo Seco, just a few minutes from the world-famous Taos Ski Valley resort.

They wanted to make good ice cream with a Southwest flair, maybe make some money, have a little fun.

These days they're sending little tubs of goodies all the way to the West Coast. They're working nonstop and are possibly on their way to becoming a biggie in the world of gourmet frozen dessert.

"All of a sudden it's happening and like whoa, we're just trying to control it," says Fortune.

A native of the sun and surf town of Laguna Beach, Calif., Fortune got a bachelor's degree in political science at the University of California at Berkeley. Leeson is from Narragansett, R.I., and majored in philosophy at Boston University.

After graduating, Leeson and Fortune both headed for northern New Mexico to be ski bums. They met on the slopes through mutual friends.

The snow was terrific, but finding ways to pay for lift tickets was a bit tougher. They soon were roomates, and were working at restaurants as cooks, busboys and waiters.

At the time, Ben and Jerry's gourmet ice cream was not available in the area, and urged on by friends, Leeson and Fortune decided to have go at the ice cream business.

They quickly became do-it-yourself experts: They took a correspondence course called Ice Cream Manufacturing from Penn State University, called friends and strangers in the business and went to libraries for research.

Then they began to work, passing out samples at local stores, testing recipes on friends and family, brainstorming logos and pumping out gallons and gallons of ice cream.

They went from 100 days of skiing four years ago to just nine this winter, working 90-hour weeks instead. Their vacations consist of trade shows, festivals, pow wows and fiestas, where they set up booths and sell 50 gallons in a weekend, one scoop at a time.

But they're quick to point out they're not just selling another tub of high-butterfat ice cream.

"There's lots of Eastern ice creams. We're the ice cream of the West," says Fortune.

With flavors going by such names as Adobe Chunk, Pinon Caramel and Buckshot Malt, they may have a point.

Taos Cow also uses many ingredients indigenous to the area — milk that is certified free of bovine growth hormones, brown sugar instead of white, less sugar than most ice cream and all natural ingredients.

These days Leeson and Fortune pump out 1,000 gallons a week of their creamy concoctions — one flavor at a time — from their Arroyo Seco shop.

Music plays, magazines are scattered about and the walls are dotted with signed ski posters and "Taos Cow: Made In The Shade" T-shirts.

The rest of their ice cream — about 12,000 pints a month — is now being made at their co-packer, the Poudre Valley Creamery in Fort Collins, Colo., where their recipes and guidelines are strictly followed.

With Poudre's help, Taos Cow went West this summer.

Fortune and Leeson have now wrangled their way into health food freezers in 12 Western states: California, Oregon, Idaho, Texas, Utah, Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico, Nebraska and Washington. Next summer, they hope plan to go national, nestling in freezers along with Ben & Jerry's, which has arrived in Taos since Fortune and Leeson began their venture.

"We like to think of them as competition, but I don't think they've heard of us," says Fortune.

The Vermont ice cream company founded by former hippies Ben Cohen and Jerry Greenfield has grown into a $150 million-per-year operation.

Environmentalists say late-night frog hunts need to be banned

FROG CITY, Fla. (AP) — Sour-smelling swamps, muggy nights and the jumpers that got away — hunting for frogs has been practically a rite of passage for boys growing up in the Everglades.

Froggers in airboats creep through the grassy swamps at night, shine a spotlight into the dark water, look for the frog's diamond-like eyes and pierce the jumper with a four-pronged spear.

"It's like poker," said 45-year-old Dan Zocco of Homestead. "It's been just an excuse for guys to get together and it used to be a lot of fun."

And tasty. Frog legs, which are often pan-fried and taste like chicken, are a delicacy around Frog City, about 30 miles west of Miami.

But now environmentalists want to slap a limit on how many frogs can be caught and ban airboats at night in national parks.

"Now they're throwing us out of our playground," Zocco complained.

Pig frogs, which can grow up to 1 1/2 feet long, are the prizes of the swamp. Although the frogs aren't endangered, environmentalists say the air boats — flat-bottomed vessels that glide through the swamp, propelled by giant fans — are damaging the marsh grass needed by other species.

Environmentalists have petitioned the National Park Service for a 50-frog per-day limit and a ban on the boats from 11 p.m. to 5 a.m.

"These requests are not punitive in any way," said Don Barger, spokesman for the National Parks and Conservation Association, which filed the petition along with the Biodiversity Project. "The absence of regulation at this point is a concern to us."

The state doesn't limit the number of frogs that can be caught for personal consumption, but commercial frogging is illegal in Florida nature preserves.

"Many of them just say they were harvesting them for a Sunday barbecue," said Bill Carroll, chief ranger at the Everglades' Big Cypress National Preserve. "Obviously many of these guys are commercial froggers, but it's hard to prove in court."

The environmental groups said the Everglades yielded a bumper crop of pig frogs earlier this year when it reopened after being closed for two years because of high water. In February and March, more than six tons of frogs were taken from Big Cypress, they estimated.

The result, Barger said, was squashed marsh grass. Marsh grass sustains a long food chain in the Everglades, home to such species as the endangered Cape sable seaside sparrow, the wood stork and the snail kite hawk.

"The park knew about the damage and did nothing to protect the resources," said Brian Hunt of the Florida Biodiversity project. "Now we're going over their head and asking Washington to enforce the regulations."

The park service hasn't said when it will decide on the request.

With rising costs of fuel and upkeep of their airboats, few froggers can make a living at it. Full-time froggers can make about $18,000 a year, and part-timers can pull in about $100 a week.

Most froggers say that they would agree to a limit but that a ban on night-time airboat operation would kill the sport. The frogs are almost impossible to find without the help of darkness and a spotlight that will bring out the glint in their eyes.

"It's just eliminating a way of life for a handful of people whose fathers and grandfathers did it and now they won't be able to do it," said Wayne Cone, 53, of Fort Lauderdale.

As for environmental damage, froggers say they are careful not to run the same trail and have seen more growth in the swamps than ever before.

Sally Jackson-Smith, owner of the Frog Pond restaurant, said she struggles to find local frog legs to serve with alligator tails and other delicacies of the Everglades.

"My place is called the Frog Pond and I sell frog legs. I'm going to tell people I don't have frog legs? I don't think so," she said. "We'll have to keep getting them imported from Japan, Jamaica and Argentina."

After years of tolerance by city, state cracks down on San Francisco marijuana providers

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A club that openly sold marijuana to people with AIDS, cancer and other diseases briefly reopened its doors on Monday, a day after state drug agents cleaned out its cupboards.

By late afternoon, at the state's request, a judge ordered the club shut, and members were scrambling to decide their next move, said Lee Sisneros, who works at the front desk.

"We're closed, we're closed," volunteer Tony Derenzo advised people who wandered by.

The Cannabis Buyers' Club has sold marijuana to the seriously ill since it was founded in 1991. Boasting 11,000 members, the club operated from a storefront on busy Market Street.

Club leaders made no secret of the fact they sold the illegal drug, and city police, under orders from elected officials, didn't disturb the operation.

But on Sunday, state agents burst into the club, seizing more than 100 pounds of pot, documents and more than $60,000 in cash. In raids on five homes in San Francisco, Oakland and Millbrae, they also seized 400 marijuana plants, along with more than 50 pounds of cookies, brownies, and muffins that may have been laced with the drug.

The raid came after a two-year investigation during which undercover agents allegedly saw minors buying pot and people selling the drug to "patients" with "doctor's notes" scribbled on napkins or scrap paper.

Although the club claimed to sell only small amounts of marijuana to treat individual members, undercover agents once videotaped club founder Dennis Peron selling two pounds of the drug for $1,800.

"These are not doctors or health care providers. These people are drug dealers," said Joe Doane, chief of the state's Bureau of Narcotics Enforcement.

Doane also showed photographs that appeared to show young children at a bar where marijuana was being smoked, and a videotaped interview with a 15-year-old boy who said he had made a purchase at the club.

While no arrests were made, Doane said, "I think we have a very solid case...all the hallmarks of a good criminal prosecution."

Peron, who was out of town during the raid, insisted the club has rigid restrictions on who should be sold marijuana, and said he has thousands of doctors' notes as proof. Some marijuana users say it can stimulate appetite and relieve the nausea caused by chemotherapy.

Several club supporters said they believed the raid was motivated by politics.

Proposition 215, a statewide initiative legalizing the sale of marijuana for medical purposes, is on the November ballot, and the second floor of the Buyers' Club served as local campaign headquarters. Attorney General Dan Lungren opposes the measure.

"From my perspective, it's calculated to inflame those who can be inflamed so that the medicinal marijuana initiative fails," said Tony Serra, Peron's lawyer.

Bill Zimmerman, campaign manager for the Yes on 215 campaign, said: "This is a nakedly political action on the part of Lungren. I can't remember a time when an elected official used police powers to interfere in an ongoing political campaign."

State officials said agents for Secretary of State Bill Jones entered the club first Sunday and made sure no campaign literature was disturbed, even sealing off a room that appeared directly related to the campaign.

But District Attorney Terence Hallinan, a former city supervisor who has voted in support of medical use of marijuana, said he was angry that state officials hadn't notified him of their probe.

"I must say I'm very disturbed that a state agency would come in like this without contacting local officials — this is highly unusual," he said.

State agency praises city water quality

'Taste out of Midland's hands,' TNRCC regional director says

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The state's water regulation agency recognized the city of Midland Tuesday for its safe drinking water.

Among 65 water facilities monitored in a 17-county area last year, Midland was among a dozen that were found to operate "excellently" and the water "extremely safe," said Jed Barker, regional manager for the Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission (TNRCC).

"The fact that sometimes it doesn't taste too good is out of the hands of Midland," Barker said.

Taste is a reflection of the water sources: lakes and wells. The TNRCC awards for outstanding water facilities is based on chemical and bacteriological testing and operation practices.

The TNRCC tests the water for chemicals and the city tests the water for bacteriological content.

City of Midland Utilities Director Ken Jones said this was the first year Midland has not had a bad bacterial sample, which isn't necessarily a reflection of bad water.

"Ninety-nine percent of the time we get a bad sample it's because of a bad sampling technique," he said.

The city of Midland takes water samples at about 25 houses a week. If bad, water from the same location is retested, along with samples tested from the residences immediately upstream and downstream.

"Out of that 1,200 samples we had no bad samples this (past) year," Jones said. "That's a heck of an effort."

The city also received an award for not having any violations at its waste water treatment facility — among 48 looked at in the Permian Basin — at Midland International Airport. That facility — closed July 24 when all waste water was routed to the main treatment plant — had received similar recognition in the past.

Midland and other award winners were honored by the Odessa regional office of the TNRCC during an annual water school sponsored by the Permian Basin Water Utilities Association. The three-day school included several classes by the Texas A&M Engineering Extension Service, TNRCC presentations on regulations and a feature on the city of Midland's sludge and effluent management program.J2

Others recognized in a 17-county area for drinking water were: Andrews, Fort Stockton, Goldsmith, Monahans, Odessa, Pecos, Loop Water Supply Corp., Madera Valley Water Supply Corp. No. 1, Pecos County Water District No. 1, Texaco E&P Kermit Sub Area and Upton County Water District No. 1 McCamey.

And waste water facilities noted were: Air Liquide America Corp., Andrews, Big Spring (WWTP), Iraan, Kermit, Lamesa, Monahans, Odessa, Seagraves, Toyah, Wickett, Wink, Ector County Independent School District (Cavasos and Murray Fly elementary schools), Airline Mobile Home Park and Ozark-Mahoning Co.

Hutchison says GOP will unify despite abortion controversy

AUSTIN (AP) — Despite the failed efforts of Bob Dole's campaign to make the GOP platform tolerant on abortion, U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison said Tuesday the party will emerge unified from its national convention next week.

Presumptive GOP presidential nominee Dole's insistence on a platform plank seeking tolerance on abortion dissolved Monday under pressure from social conservatives.

"Women may disagree on the issue of abortion, and many women do, but we can all come together and say you can disagree on that one issue," Mrs. Hutchison said Tuesday at a state office building dedication.

Mrs. Hutchison, who supports limited abortion rights, said she doesn't object to having a preamble to the GOP platform that includes a tolerance plank with no specific reference to abortion.

"I have always said that I think a tolerance plank in the preamble that says to people, 'If you disagree with us on some issues in the platform and you want to be a Republican, you're welcome,' that's good," she said. "And I think we will be unified."

Mrs. Hutchison was at the center of a fight at the state GOP convention in San Antonio in June. Anti-abortion forces targeted her for defeat as a national delegate because she supports a woman's right to an abortion in the case of rape, incest or when the mother's life is in jeopardy.

Mrs. Hutchison barely won election as a delegate after negotiations between the Dole campaign and conservative leaders of the Texas GOP ensured that an overwhelming majority of the state's 123 delegates would be strong abortion oppo-

MISD gives copy of 'Celebrations' to parents for review

Four Midland parents got their copies of the multicultural social studies curriculum "Celebrations" Tuesday morning, and called it a "bittersweet victory."

"It's bittersweet because we got the copy, but didn't have much of the summer to look over it," Janet Harris said.

MISD Superintendent Joseph Baressi Jr. said that social studies teachers were given a rough draft to edit. "Teachers have been editing it on their own time, over the summer," he said.

Midland Independent School District had been reluctant to release the curriculum since it was a work in progress, he said.

W. Texas physician takes health-care model to S. Africa

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

A Midland physician recently returned from a two-week tour of South Africa, where he and a group of physicians attempted to help solve the crisis of health-care delivery in that country.

Dr. Mark A. Fredrickson is a specialist in physical medicine and rehabilitation with HealthSouth Rehabilitation Hospital of Midland-Odessa.

He also is president of West Texas Physician Alliance, a group that he said is dedicated to providing quality health care at a low cost in the Permian Basin.

Fredrickson was invited on the tour to discuss not only the latest practices in physical rehabilitation, but to discuss the West Texas Physician Alliance as a possible model for health-care delivery in South Africa.

South Africa is unusual in that it is comprised of both First World and Third World cultures. The country has some top quality medical facilities, but also has decrepit, undersupplied and understaffed hospitals serving people in vast rural areas.

In his lectures and discussions with physicians in that country, Fredrickson outlined the structure of the West Texas Alliance and discussed ways to adapt this kind of a health-care delivery system to South African society.

The physicians' group was composed of 14 doctors from the United States, one from Canada, one from Mexico and about five from Europe, Fredrickson said.

The group was part of an overall reconstruction and development program pushed by President Nelson Mandela.

This program is designed to bring the country together and on a par with other First World countries by addressing needs such as a lack of medical care and the country's 40 percent unemployment rate.

Although the country is strikingly beautiful and a potential tourism paradise, the economic conditions are stifling development, he said. The country's murder rate is about 50 times that of the United States, Fredrickson said.

"Because of all the poverty, the streets are very unsafe," he said.

Despite these challenges, the country is making progress, and, given the vast number of tourist attractions and the country's inherent mineral wealth, could one day join the rest of the world's western, First-World countries, Fredrickson explained.

"The people there are very, very dedicated," he said.

Extension Service reports drought increases salinity

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Although the drought is most commonly associated with water shortages, it is also causing problems with water quality, reports the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

With less water flowing into surface water bodies, concentrations of salt and other nutrients will be affected.

Dr. Mark McFarland, Extension soil fertility specialist of College Station, said that as the volume of water in a water body decreases, its ability to dilute concentrations of things such as salt also decreases.

"The Rio Grande River, for example, has a higher salt concentration right now because there hasn't been enough water flowing in to dilute it," said McFarland.

McFarland said that producers using surface water should be careful of this decreased dilution problem, but that well water users should not really be affected.

"In general, if you're using well water, it won't have the elevated salt concentrations like the surface water will," McFarland said.

For producers whose water has a history of problems, McFarland suggests that they have it tested for salt concentration as well as nutrient concentration levels. He said that water with past problems may have even higher concentrations in a year such as this one.

As an alternative to using surface water with high concentrations of salt, some agriculture producers are turning to municipal waste water. However, McFarland cautions against this usage.

He said, "Municipal waste water will have different levels of salt and other nutrients than surface water would have so producers need to watch for this."

McFarland said that producers need to consider the crop which they have planted or will be planting and its specific tolerances for salt, especially.

Another option for producers is to dilute the water they are using with fresher, better quality water. However, McFarland said that this is not an option for all producers because they may not be able to get the better quality water.

McFarland said that the main thing to worry about is the salt concentrations.

"What we normally depend on is good rainfall to leach salt out of our plants and our crops, but we just haven't had that this year," he said.

This is made possible through the strong public support given Mandela's efforts. During his tour there, Fredrickson saw citizens wearing and selling T-shirts with the lettering, "Mandela: The World's Greatest President."

"It amazed me that the people love him so much," he said.

Physicians on this tour provided expertise in various fields of medicine that is absent in South Africa.

Fredrickson is continuing his analysis of medical problems there and is planning a return trip, he said.

Having learned to provide quality medical care at affordable prices in rural areas of West Texas, much of what Fredrickson has learned can be applied in South Africa, he said.

si said, the final document will be available for public inspection using the same process as adopting textbooks.

"The final document will be on display for three or four weeks and we will accept public input in some kind of public forum," the superintendent said.

Baressi said the school district's attorneys thought the materials didn't need to be released until they were finished.

On Monday night, school board trustees approved copyrighting the fifth- and sixth-grade curriculum.

Ms. Harris said she regretted that she and three other parents "had to retain and pay an attorney to legally and formally demand that MISD turn this over. We feel like it's the only reason why we have it today."

MISD administrators said they had planned all along for the lessons to be ready for parent perusal this month. Copies of the rough draft will be available if requests are made to Baresi's office.

HUTCHISON: Predicts GOP unity

nents.

Mrs. Hutchison said she didn't think women voters who support abortion rights would be alienated by the GOP.

"I think we've got to open up and look at the issues that affect women," Mrs. Hutchison said. "We need to talk to the women of this country about what we, as Republicans, care about for them.

"We are increasing breast cancer research funding. We are providing for homemaker retirement security. We are providing for personal security in the best efforts we can make, and we are going to try to help with job security by providing a good economy.

"I think that's what women care about, and we are going to talk about our accomplishments," Mrs. Hutchison said.

Party leaders and conservatives said a deal eliminating a specific reference to tolerance on abortion in the national platform cleared the way for Dole to focus on the $548 billion tax cut plan he introduced in Chicago on Monday.

But abortion-rights Republicans vowed to take the fight to the full platform committee. Ann Stone, head of Republicans for Choice, said "we are going to take a good shot at trying to roll back what happened ... and if that fails, then next Monday we plan to take it to the floor."

Branch Davidian sentences to be reconsidered

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Five of David Koresh's followers will get a chance at a shorter sentence for their parts in the firefight that killed four federal agents and six Branch Davidians near Waco, Texas.

However, the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals did not order Judge Walter Smith to reduce their sentences — only to consider whether cult members used or carried machine guns during the battle on Feb. 28, 1993.

"Should the district court find ... that members of the conspiracy actively employed machine guns, it is free to reimpose the 30-year sentence," it wrote.

The order was part of a 2-1 ruling in which the 5th Circuit upheld the convictions of six members of the cult, saying that federal agents did not use excessive force.

The gun battle started when 76 heavily armed agents of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms tried to arrest Koresh and search his compound at Mount Carmel.

A 51-day stalemate followed the gun battle, ending when Koresh and 80 of his followers died by fire or gunshots six hours after the FBI started filling the compound with tear gas.

Renos Avraam, Brad Branch, Jaime Castillo, Graeme Craddock, Paul Fatta and Kevin Whitecliff were among 11 defendants tried in 1994. Four were acquitted; two did not appeal their convictions.

The 5th Circuit upheld the 10-year sentences given to Avraam, Branch, Castillo and Whitecliff for voluntary manslaughter, the 15-year sentence given to Fatta for converting semiautomatic weapons to fully automatic and the 10 years given to Craddock for one firearms violation.

But it ordered Smith to take another look at the 30-year sentences imposed on Avraam, Branch, Castillo and Whitecliff for using a firearm in a violent crime and another 10-year sentence imposed on Craddock for that crime. At issue was the defendants' access to machine guns.

The law sets different sentences for people who use different sorts of firearms during drug crimes or crimes of violence. A sentence of five years can be increased to a maximum of 30 years for those who use a machine gun, "a destructive device," or a gun equipped with a silencer or muffler.

When Smith sentenced the men in 1994, he found only that there were machine guns available for any of the defendants. He did not determine whether any machine guns were used.

In 1995, however, the 5th Circuit ruled in an unrelated case that stricter standards were needed. It said the sentencing guidelines require the court to find that a given sort of firearm actually was used or carried in the crime, not just that it could have been.

"There is evidence from which it could be found that machine guns and other enhancing weapons were used by one or more members of the conspiracy in the firefight ..." it wrote. "The jury was not required to do so and the district court entered only those findings then required."

The court also upheld Smith's order that the six men pay the government $1.1 million in restitution.

However, it overturned his order that the money come only from "any contract which relates to the depiction of the crimes for which they were convicted."

"The defendants argue, and the government concedes, that such a limitation would violate the First Amendment," the judges wrote.

Opposition comes out in force to speak against dump

SIERRA BLANCA, Texas (AP) — The voice of opposition was strong Tuesday as Texas opened hearings on a proposed dump for the low-level radioactive waste generated by the state's hospitals, utilities and universities.

Public officials from across the state and across the U.S.-Mexico border denounced the siting of the depository in isolated Hudspeth County and aired concerns over the potential threat to the environment and human health.

"It threatens all of us," said Jose Antonio Alba, a state representative in the Coahuila legislature. The Mexican state borders Texas.

Alba echoed the concerns of several speakers at the state hearing who said the waste Texas proposes to bury near Sierra Blanca, 90 miles east of El Paso, could contaminate ground water supplies and eventually run off into the Rio Grande, a source of water for millions of border residents.

Dump proponents were expected to testify later in the day that the site was scientifically chosen because it wouldn't create such problems.

The hearings, which will continue over the next few weeks in other cities, are part of the licensing procedure for the dump, which would be operated by Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Authority.

At least 200 people attended the Sierra Blanca meeting, which was held in the high school gym, across the street from a library constructed using state funds given to the county because of its designation as the dump site.

Many cheered anti-dump statements. Activists in the back of the gym held up a banner reading: "Don't waste our time with low-down 'low-level' lies. No national nuke waste in Texas."

Two hearings officers from the State Office of Administrative Hearings will collect public testimony and evidence on the waste facility then make a recommendation to the Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission.

If the commission approves the license this year, construction could begin as early as next summer and the facility could be operational by 1998.

The facility has been designed to take in 45,000 to 50,000 cubic feet of waste each year.

Congress is also scheduled to consider a compact that would allow Texas to accept waste from Maine and Vermont.

The facility has proven to be a divisive issue in Sierra Blanca, a town of about 600, and throughout the region.

Many local officials support it and the money it would bring into the community, estimated to be in the millions over the projected 30-year life of the facility.

Hudspeth County Judge James Peace told the hearings officers that if the site proves to be scientifically sound "I am in full favor of a license being issued."

Other officials concurred.

But authorities from neighboring counties protested the prospect of having the waste shipped through their communities en route to Sierra Blanca.

County Judge John Conoly of Culberson County, just east of Hudspeth County, called for a referendum on the issue in the affected areas.

Outside the hearing room, he said the chances of the state calling such a vote were negligible.

"We've been heard, but there's been no consideration," Conoly said. "We feel it's been crammed down our throats."

Texas legislators to hear report on fire ant plans

N.Y. Times News Service

AUSTIN, Texas — Think about fire ants swarming over your foot, biting into your ankles before you realize that's not grass brushing your leg.

Think about the itch, the sting, the pain.

Think about revenge.

Texas legislators will hear a report on a new state plan they ordered last year that would launch a $16 million, six-year war on the imported South American fire ants overrunning two-thirds of the state.

Much of the $16 million would go to researchers like University of Texas zoology chairman Larry Gilbert, who would import a Brazilian fly that preys only on the imported fire ants, not the Texas domestic ants.

The fly, the size of a speck on a penny, not much larger than Lincoln's nose, attacks individual ants, punches through their skin and injects larvae into their bodies.

The larvae grow and kill ants they grow in, like the creature in Alien.

Just hearing about the fly can be cathartic for anyone who's had to soak their swollen ant bites in ice water, Gilbert said.

People love these things, he said of his flies.

The South American ants have run rampant through the South since they landed around Mobile, Ala., in the 1930s.

To combat the invaders, the new plan, to be heard today by state House Committee on Agriculture and Livestock, recommends an attack that includes community teamwork and public education as well as research.

The report also emphasizes that its goal is to manage the imported fire ants, not eradicate them.

We think the whole discussion of eradication has been a pipe dream, Gilbert said.

But the plan would help pay for natural weapons targeted only at the imported ants, such as another research project in Gilbert's lab — one involving a chemical telling worker ants to kill the queens because the colony has too many.

Thus, fewer eggs.

Thus, fewer fire ants.

At $16 million, it's something to think about.

Nuevo Laredo workshop maintains ancient art of glass blowing

NUEVO LAREDO, Mexico (AP) — It is a hot, dark and dusty workshop in which tools so primitive, yet so practical, are used by novice and skilled artisans to create glass treasures. The tools also preserve the Bejines family's tradition of "sopladores de vidrio" or glass blowers.

"Many people see broken glass every day, everywhere and think of it as an eyesore, but we who work this craft see it as something we can use to create a thing of beauty, or a useful vessel," explained Malaco Bejines, who oversees his family's glass blowing and exporting shop in Nuevo Laredo.

Malaco's brother, Lucio Bejines, handles the business end, while the former is general manager of the workshop.

Brother Salvador, or "Chava," is one of the workers who actually does some of the glass blowing. He also serves as an equipment maintenance technician.

"Our sisters take care of the stores we have in town where we sell our wares," Malaco said. "So, as you can see, it is a family business. We all pitch in to help out."

The Bejineses have been at their Nuevo Laredo location east of the city on Leona Vicario Street for the past 25 years. The family hails from Guadalajara, where artisans abound.

In addition to supplying their own stores and Mexico in general, the Bejineses export glassware to the U.S. They are currently working on a contract for several thousand items featuring the famed Mickey Mouse design.

'Many people see broken glass every day, everywhere and think of it as an eyesore, but we who work this craft see it as something we can use to create a thing of beauty.
— Malaco Bejines, glass blower

As he preparing to show visitors how the glassware is created, Malaco warned warned of the extreme heat the shop's two furnace kilns produce.

"There can be no room for error on the part of anyone," he noted. "If you get burned with one of the tools that carry or blow the glass, that's a first or second degree burn to the skin. If you come in contact with the hot glass, that's an automatic third degree burn and that's serious."

Movements by the workers, who create as many as 300 pieces a day, look like a well-choreographed play.

The "apontilladore" uses a 4-foot steel rod to select the amount of crystal and colored glass that is to be used for a specific piece.

That piece is then transferred to the "soplador" who uses a hollow, round and tapered 4-foot section of stainless steel through which he blows and begins to form the piece.

He then hands the piece over to the "pasador," who takes the piece back to the kiln. Inside the central brick kiln, temperatures are measured in thousands of degrees as natural gas generates the needed heat to melt the glass and colored sand.

From several feet away, unmelted glass can be seen through the open mouth of the kiln, jumping in the air like popcorn as it begins to melt in the infernal temperatures and slide down into a floating pool of glass, or crystal.

"Our maestros can make the most beautiful glassware fit for a king," he said, "but if the arquero drops the piece or does not cure it just right, it will bend or break and all that work will be for nothing.

"It's hard work, but it is honorable work, and we take pride in creating the things we manufacture," Malaco says, wiping his brow.

GAO questions policies of development bank created to help NAFTA passage

WASHINGTON (AP) — The development bank created to make passage of the North American Free Trade Agreement more palatable to skittish lawmakers has yet to loan the first dollar of the $1.5 billion available to improve conditions along the impoverished, polluted U.S.-Mexico border.

Congressional investigators, in a report being released later this month, contend that the North American Development Bank's policies may inhibit loans to poor communities on both sides of the 2,000-mile border.

Designed to respond to criticism that NAFTA would add new pressures on an already overburdened border infrastructure, NADBank has been capitalized with $224 million from the U.S. and Mexican governments. That money will be used to leverage private-sector funds, bringing the San Antonio-based bank's available lending capital to $1.5 billion.

But in the 18 months since NADBank has been able to loan money, no projects have been green-lighted.

At the same time, lack of basic water, wastewater and sanitation services continues to affect the wellbeing of many of the 10 million Mexicans and Americans who live along the border, the General Accounting Office says in its report.

"Although the United States and Mexico have made some progress in improving the border region's environmental infrastructure, serious pollution problems persist that pose an ongoing threat to the health of residents and the environment," GAO said.

Cleaning up the border and bringing basic services to communities dotting the region would cost $8 billion over a decade. Apart from NADBank, the U.S. and Mexican governments are pledging $1.4 billion in grants over a decade for border improvements.

NADBank officials and other advocates argue that it's far more important for them to take the time necessary to approve viable projects than to rush out loans.

"We just don't think that enough time has been given to determine whether or not they are going to have any success," said Albert Jacquez, chief of staff to Rep. Esteban Torres, the California Democrat who pushed for NADBank's creation. "I certainly think the jury is still out."

But GAO, in a report requested by NAFTA skeptic Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., questions whether NADBank's structure is suited to make loans for water, wastewater, pollution abatement and other infrastructure projects.

The problems are threefold, GAO suggests:

— NADBank's congressionally-decreed mandate that loans must be made at or above market rates, making other, cheaper sources of financing more attractive.

— The small, unincorporated subdivisions on both sides of the border, known as "colonias," most in need of NADBank help don't have the resources.

— Mexican communities are barred under the Mexican Constitution from borrowing directly from foreign lenders, meaning that NADBank loans must be made through Mexico's Treasury.

"Although the NADBank offers financing for some of the border region's environmental infrastructure needs, it is unclear whether poorer communities on either side of the border will be able to afford these loans unless they are combined with grants or with low-interest loans from other sources," GAO said.

Scientist finds himself at center of debate on global warming's cause

By William K. Stevens
N.Y. Times News Service

LIVERMORE, Calif. — Dr. Benjamin D. Santer — a shy, even-spoken, 41-year-old American climatologist who climbs mountains, runs marathons and enjoys a reputation for careful and scrupulous work — is the chief author of what may be the most important finding of the decade in atmospheric science: that human activity is probably causing some measure of global climate change, as environmentalists have long assumed and skeptics have long denied.

The finding, issued for the first time in December by a panel of scientists meeting under U.N. sponsorship in Madrid, left open the question of just how large the human impact on climate is. The question is perhaps the hottest and most urgent in climatology today.

Santer is in the forefront of a rapidly unfolding effort to answer it, and he has been itching to get back to the chase now that he has finished his stint as main author of the crucial chapter 8 of the U.N. report, which details where the quest has led so far.

Dr. Benjamin D. Santer is the chief author of what may be the the most important finding of the decade in atmospheric science: that human activity is probably causing some measure of global climate change. The finding leaves open the question of just how large the human impact on climate is. The question is perhaps the hottest and most urgent in climatology today.

Ordinarily he is so absorbed in the work of analyzing the effects of heat-trapping carbon dioxide and other industrial emissions on climate that he has programmed his computer here in a small, spare room at the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory to sound a cuckoo-clock alarm every hour. Otherwise, he says, his absorption becomes "catatonic."

LATELY, THOUGH, HE has been able to accomplish little. His role on the U.N. panel, which he did not seek, placed him squarely in the sometimes dangerous intersection of science and politics, provoking so much contention that he has had scarcely a moment to deal with anything else.

Instead of plunging back into his research, he has been forced to engage in public combat with a tiny but vocal group of industry lobbyists and contrarian scientists, including Dr. Frederick Seitz, a former president of the National Academy of Sciences and of Rockefeller University. They charge that unauthorized and politically inspired changes were made in chapter 8 after it was approved in Madrid, and that the changes served to underplay uncertainties about the effects of human activities on climate.

Santer "must presumably take the major responsibility" for "a disturbing corruption of the peer review process," Seitz wrote in a June 12 op-ed article in The Wall Street Journal.

Santer has struck back hard, like the trim middleweight he resembles, throwing verbal jabs and crosses. He and he alone did indeed alter chapter 8 after the Madrid meeting, he said, because the scientists gathered there accepted the chapter, after long discussion, only on the condition that he do so. The result, he maintains, is a clearer and more accurate statement of the relevant science than the earlier draft. And he points out that the revised chapter devotes a long and detailed section to uncertainties.

THE POST-MADRID revisions left unchanged the chapter's basic conclusion that the scientific evidence so far points toward a human influence on climate. The chapter, which did not require line-by-line approval, provided the underpinning for the Madrid group's official finding — formally approved word by word — that "the balance of evidence suggests a discernible human influence on global climate." That conclusion, contained in a separate summary for policy makers, also remains unchanged.

The panel advises the world's governments, which are negotiating reductions in greenhouse emissions, on climate change.

Santer says that neither his industry critics nor Seitz contacted him or anyone else associated with chapter 8 for their side of the story, and that by failing to do so, Seitz "failed to behave as a responsible scientist should." Further, he says, Dr. Seitz, a nuclear physicist who is not a climate expert, is unqualified to judge the science of the case. And he says that his critics have done no peer-reviewed research on the question; that they, not he, are the ones subverting the science and that their charges "would be ludicrous if they were not so serious."

TOP OFFICIALS OF the U.N. panel have strongly backed Santer, calling the accusations "rubbish" and saying that the alterations were faithful to the mandate of the Madrid group. Most governments, including that of the United States, have endorsed the revised report. And many climate experts have flocked to Santer's defense.

The criticism "has actually rallied a lot of the serious scientists around him," said Dr. John F.B. Mitchell, a British climatologist who was Santer's Ph.D. examiner a decade ago. This, says Mitchell, has been "counterproductive from the standpoint of those trying to weaken the conclusions" of the U.N. report.

The critics have not relented. In Congress, conservative Republican allies of the critics have also weighed in, raising questions about the role of the Department of Energy, which has contracts with Lawrence Livermore, in financing the work of chief authors of the report, including Santer. This has raised fears among climate scientists of political intimidation.

As for himself, Santer says, "I've been taken out of science" by having to deal with the critics' attack.

Santer is widely regarded by colleagues as being among the most careful and thorough of scientists and the straightest of straight arrows, and as being apolitical. "I have no politics," he said. Dr. Karl Taylor, a colleague at Livermore who has worked with him closely, says that Santer "has set very high scientific and ethical standards for himself" and "that's why he's upset" by the criticism.

MITCHELL SAID IT was "quite ironic that somebody like Ben should be accused of things like this, because I don't think you could find anyone less likely to do that sort of thing."

One of the chief critics says no personal attack on Santer was intended. "There wasn't any implication that we thought he was doing anything wrong," said John Shlaes, director of the Global Climate Coalition, an industry lobbying group that first raised the questions about chapter 8. Shlaes complained that the post-Madrid changes in the chapter were not publicly revealed, discussed or formally approved before the report was published. "It was basically the process we were addressing," he said.

Santer, like his forebears, has been no stranger to the character tests imposed by adversity. Two of his grandparents died in a Nazi concentration camp. His Jewish father fled Nazi Germany and migrated to the United States, where he joined the American Army. He later landed and was wounded at Normandy, served as an interpreter at the Nuremberg war-crimes trials, met and married his wife in Munich and then became a businessman in Washington, where young Ben was born in 1955. He attended the public schools of Bethesda, Md., moving to Germany at the age of 10 when his father was transferred there.

IN GERMANY, HE went to a school for the children of British army personnel, where, on the first day, the English teacher grabbed his exercise book "and whacked it around my head, and said, 'Santer, we're in a British school, and you'll write in pen, not in pencil.'"

"In the end," Santer said, "I got an excellent education." He graduated with top honors in 1976 from the University of East Anglia in Britain with a degree in environmental sciences.

To his dismay, his British education availed him little in the job market when he returned to his parents' home, then in the Baltimore area. He bounced around for the next few years, working at various times as a soccer teacher, a German teacher for Berlitz and an assembler in a zipper factory, at which point, he says, he found himself "down and out in Seattle." He made two stabs at a doctorate at East Anglia, abandoning both.

About that same time he nearly died after falling into a crevasse in the French Alps, where some friends had invited him on a mountain-climbing holiday to take his mind off his troubles. He painstakingly worked his way toward "a little blue slit of sky" at the top of the crevasse, and the experience, he says, has "made me realize that there are things much more serious than the present controversy over chapter 8."

HE SOON MADE a third attempt to earn a doctorate at East Anglia, which boasts one of the world's top climatology departments, and this time he succeeded.

"I found it fascinating," he said, "the idea that humans could have a potentially large impact on climate." In his dissertation, Santer used statistical techniques to investigate the accuracy with which computerized models of the climate system simulated regional climates.

He soon moved to another leading climatological laboratory, the Max Planck Institute for Meteorology in Hamburg, where he worked for the first time on the problem of detecting the signal of human-caused climate change, especially global warming — the "greenhouse fingerprint." He also met his wife, Heike, during the Hamburg stint, and they now have a 3-year-old son, Nicholas.

Since moving to Livermore in 1992, Santer has grappled with the related problems of testing the validity of climate models and searching for the greenhouse fingerprint.

Considerable progress has been made on the fingerprint issue in the last five years. Until recently, most efforts to detect a human impact on climate focused on the average global temperature, which has risen by about one degree Fahrenheit in the last century. But it proved too difficult to tell whether this small amount of planetwide average warming was the result of human activity or of the climate's natural fluctuations. So a small group of researchers, including Santer, turned to a different strategy.

BEHIND THE RISING average global temperature lies a widely varying spatial pattern: some parts of the world have warmed more than others, and some have actually cooled. The idea of the new strategy was to examine observed patterns of temperature change to see whether they matched the unique patterns expected to result from the combination of growing industrial emissions of heat-trapping gases like carbon dioxide, on one hand, and sulfate aerosols that cool some parts of the planet, on the other. According to this reasoning, the pattern produced by the combination of greenhouse gases and aerosols would be markedly different from that produced by any natural cause.

Santer likens this approach to that of a doctor looking for the telltale diagnostic pattern of a specific illness to explain a general rise in body temperature.

But how would one know what kind of pattern the greenhouse-gas and aerosol emissions should produce? By using climate models to simulate their effect. In comparing the resulting temperature pattern with the global pattern actually observed, Santer and other researchers have found that reality corresponds markedly with the model-generated expectations. The correspondence has grown stronger over the years, as would be expected if increasing greenhouse gases were changing the climate. Statistical analysis determined that the correspondence was unlikely to have arisen by chance.

Santer and some colleagues recently published a paper in the journal Nature reporting a similar correspondence when vertical temperature patterns in the atmosphere are analyzed.

These pattern results, when combined with other signs associated with a human influence on climate — a rising sea level, water vapor increases over tropical oceans and more frequent bouts of extreme weather in North America, for instance — are beginning to tell "a coherent story," Santer said. This emerging portrayal was the basis for the chapter 8 findings.

Already, he says, a number of laboratories are starting to strengthen the pattern studies by including other variables along with temperature — precipitation, for instance, and atmospheric pressure.

N.Y. Times News Service

A string of more than 4,200 earthquakes since July 16 off Hawaii may signal the latest in a series of undersea volcanic eruptions that could one day add a new island to the vacation paradise.

More immediately, Hawaii officials have feared the activity at the Loihi seamount, 3,200 feet under the Pacific surface, 20 miles south of the "big island" of Hawaii, could trigger a huge, sudden tidal wave that could inundate nearby coastline with as little as 15 minutes' warning.

As of late Tuesday, the burst of ocean-floor movement — the most intense swarm of earthquakes in Hawaii's recorded history — seemed to be slowing.

"We're down considerably from last week, but it's not over yet," Jennifer Nakata, a technician at the US Geological Survey's volcano observatory near Hilo, said in a telephone interview.

"There have been only a few earthquakes a day recently compared to a few hundred a day" in late July, Nakata said. More than 40 of the quakes have exceeded 4.0 on the Richter scale.

"How long it's going to be is anybody's guess," said Roy Price, a spokesman for Hawaii's civil defense agency, which is continuing to monitor Loihi's rumbles. Honolulu, home to a third of Hawaii's 1.1 million residents, is about 300 miles from Loihi.

Researchers from the University of Hawaii left Monday for a six-day cruise on a research vessel to inspect the three-mile-high undersea mountain. Just offshore from the Hawaii Volcanoes National Park, it is the only known active undersea volcano in US territory.

If weather and safety considerations allow, researchers plan to send the three-person submarine Pisces 5 down to collect rock and water samples and observe any eruption, according to Dave Epp, director of the National Science Foundation's marine geology and geophysics program, which is funding the expedition.

Gary McMurtry, an oceanography professor at the University of Hawaii who has been studying Loihi since 1980, said all signs indicate an eruption at Loihi. Over millennia, lava eruptions building up from miles below the ocean surface created each of the state's eight major islands and hundreds of islets.

Scientific estimates of how soon Loihi's flowing lava might reach the surface range from several centuries to 100,000 years. "It grows by buildup and lava flow, but it also shakes itself down," McMurtry said.

Epp said, "Probably what is happening is a succession of slumping events as the steep sides of Loihi collapse." A lava collapse big enough to generate a tidal wave would occur only from an earthquake of Richter scale magnitude 6.0 or larger, big enough to be felt on the Puna and Ka'u coasts of the big island.

"The problem is that the travel time of a tsunami from Loihi to the co ' is only a few minutes," Epp said. For residents of those areas, Epp said, "The moral is clear: If you feel the earth shake, get away from the ocean" to higher ground.

McMurtry said that is no idle warning: Geological evidence indicates that Hawaii was hit by a 700-foot-high tsunami, triggered by an earthquake dropping vast chunks of lava into the Pacific, about 100,000 years ago.

More information about Hawaii volcanic and seismic activity is available through the state Pacific Disaster Center's home page: http://www.pdc.org and the USGS Hawaii Volcano Observatory: — http://www.soest.hawaii.edu:80/hvo/

Officials seek home for 'vampire' rapist when he's released

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Prison officials are scrambling to find a home for the "Vampire Rapist," who served 10 years behind bars for raping a hitchhiker and drinking her blood.

John Crutchley will be free to leave prison Thursday, but no one wants him. West Virginia, where his mother lives, has told Florida to keep him away. In Melbourne, where he was convicted, a Christian mission has offered to house him and help him find a job, but city officials are against it.

"I can't be convinced that he's not going to do it again," Melbourne Police Chef Keith Chandler said.

Furthermore, he said, given the community's lingering hostility toward Crutchley, "I'm not sure we can guarantee his safety if he comes here."

Crutchley, 49, was an engineer at Harris Corp. in Melbourne when he was charged with kidnapping and raping a 19-year-old California woman he picked up hitchhiking in 1985.

She said he subdued her, then drained and drank nearly half her blood using surgical equipment over an 18-hour period. She escaped through a bathroom window when he left her alone for a short time in his home.

'Legally we can't hold him past Thursday. We certainly can't let him out the front door and not know where he's going.'

— Debbie Buchanan, spokeswoman, Department of Corrections

Crutchley pleaded guilty to sexual assault and was sentenced to 25 years in prison followed by 50 years probation. But under prison rules then in effect, he received enough time off automatically and for good behavior that his sentence was cut to little more than 10 years.

"Legally we can't hold him past Thursday," said Debbie Buchanan, spokeswoman for the Department of Corrections. "We certainly can't let him out the front door and not know where he's going."

The lawyer who represented him at trial, Joe Mitchell, said Crutchley would still be in prison if prosecutors had accepted his offer to plead guilty to six murders in exchange for life sentences.

Mitchell said Crutchley made the offer after his arrest in November 1985 in order to avoid the electric chair. At the time, police and prosecutors were trying to tie Crutchley to a number of unsolved murders in Brevard County and Fairfax County, Virginia, where Crutchley used to live.

Six months later, Crutchley pleaded guilty to sexual assault.

But Norm Wolfinger, the state attorney for Brevard County, said he wasn't aware of any plea offer, and it would have been pointless anyway because investigators never could link Crutchley to the killings.

Meanwhile, Wolfinger said he is closely watching the state's efforts to relocate Crutchley and has been in contact with the victim, who is now 29.

"She's a victim of a violent crime," he said. "I'm sure she has some concern about his release."

Coalition seeks to stop measure making it easier to sue HMO

AUSTIN (AP) — A coalition representing state health maintenance organizations is trying to make sure a proposal that would make it easier for Texans in managed care health plans to sue their HMO doesn't surface in the Lone Star State.

Texans for Quality Health Care president Bud Shivers said Monday that proposals are emerging across the country that would make it easier for managed care subscribers to lump their doctor and HMO together when suing for failure to provide care.

Under current Texas law, coordinated care plans and physicians are held accountable for their own actions, Shivers said.

"It transforms health care professionals and plans working cooperatively for quality health care into warring parties squaring off against one another in contentious lawsuits," Shivers said of the proposals.

Such a measure was approved by the Florida Legislature before being vetoed by the state's Gov. Lawton Chiles. Chiles said such a measure would drive up health care costs.

"Texas employers will not support legislation that increases litigation costs and liability or creates an adversarial relationship between patients, providers, purchasers and payers of health care," Shivers said.

Connie Barron, associate director of legal affairs for the Texas Medical Association, said the TMA is considering throwing its weight behind a proposal similar to the one approved by Florida lawmakers.

"If a patient is denied medical treatment and then goes home and dies, or has a stroke or heart attack, then you have to ask yourself who is responsible for that," Ms. Barron said.

"If an HMO is going to make those decisions, they should make those decisions carefully and have responsibility for the outcome. There is certainly a clear association with the decision of the HMO to pay or not to pay and the patient's ability to get medical services," she said.

Ms. Barron said the TMA would wait to make a decision on pushing legislation similar to Florida's until an interim Senate committee has had time to evaluate the pros and cons of the measure.

"We want to see what recommendations the committee thinks are necessary for the marketplace and to ensure that when managed care organizations are making decisions that they make them carefully," Ms. Barron said.

In 1995, the Texas Legislature approved sweeping tort reform that severely limited a Texans ability to sue for punitive damages.

David R. Pinkus, president of Small Business United of Texas, said he hoped the Legislature's movement toward tort reform continues.

"We would hope that they (lawmakers) wouldn't be inclined to support a proposal similar to the one in Florida," Pinkus said. "But we just want to get the word out now because the attempt could be moving across the country."

YOUR HOROSCOPE

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 7, 1996

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Partnerships of all types enjoy favorable influences. Be open to change. Good things happen when you spread your wings professionally! Singles will find romance especially exciting in December. If married, show more respect for your mate's opinions. An older person plays an increasingly important role in the career decisions you make. Build a strong financial foundation before purchasing luxury items. Trying to keep up with the Joneses is bad idea.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DAY: civil rights leader Ralph Bunche, marathon champion Alberto Salazar, actress Lana Cantrell, World War I spy Mata Hari.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Get busy with a constructive project. Your creativity motivates an associate to branch out. Wait until tomorrow to conclude a financial deal. A short delay works to your advantage.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Stop fretting over what others are saying. You do not need to take a back seat to anyone! An unusual gift is part of the picture. Share the benefits of your prestige with family members.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Answers come quickly when you heed your intuition. Be open-minded if someone suggests a new way of doing business. Progress occurs when everyone gives their best.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A new hobby could become a source of income. Work at home if possible. Many of you want to renovate your home. Be your own interior decorator. Borrow books on design from the library.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do not ignore the suggestions of those who share your surroundings. Reaching a compromise will take an open mind. Be willing to change your previous stance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You can expect to be closely questioned by an ally or family member now. Make certain you are prepared to answer in full. Refuse to allow others to dictate your friends.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Conflicting beliefs or theories provide you with food for thought. Give top priority to work projects that will increase profits. Make up your own mind regarding a difficult situation.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You benefit from a friend's or associate's mistake. Those who procrastinate will lose valuable ground. Settle a matter involving your status at work.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Refuse to let others burden you with their problems. Encourage self-reliance. Consolidating your bills will make payment easier. An older individual finds you captivating.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A positive approach works better than ultimatums. Pick up after yourself and encourage family members to follow suit. Take advantage of a company training program.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Influential people love your work! Starting a project without higher-ups' approval would be a mistake. Your personal life begins to gel when you embark on a delightful new relationship.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Teachers, accountants and health-care workers do especially well now. Keep your certification up to date. Career progress is linked to your attending seminars and classes. Be diligent. Tackle routine chores

Opening lead: Queen of ♡

The eye can deceive. It is no replacement for logic.

The North hand is a whit too strong for a forcing jump raise to three spades, so North made a temporizing bid of two clubs. When South raised, North became slam conscious and correctly showed the diamond fragment en route to raising spades. After South cue-bid the ace of hearts, North proceeded posthaste to the spade slam.

West led the queen of hearts, taken by the ace. Since the slam was cold if the queen of trumps was either singleton or doubleton, declarer cashed the ace and king. When her majesty failed to appear, declarer had to get rid of the losing hearts in hand before West could ruff a minor and score the setting trick in hearts.

Since declarer's combined holding in diamonds was two cards fewer than in clubs, declarer tried to cash three rounds of diamonds first. That was no great success — down one when West ruffed the third round and cashed a heart.

If declarer reasons out the position, it is obvious that the club suit should be tackled first. Since declarer needs to get two heart discards, West must hold three clubs, so declarer should first play three rounds of that suit. When East shows out on the third round, it is perfectly safe to cash a fourth club for a heart discard! Now the slam is safe as long as West holds two diamonds, for declarer will be able to discard the second heart as West ruffs the third diamond.

Maybe fourth marriage will be charm for supermodel Christie Brinkley, 42

NEW YORK — Christie Brinkley is going for an architect this time around.

The supermodel said yes when Peter Cook popped the question over the weekend, her assistant Mimi Jennings said Tuesday.

The marriage will be the fourth for Brinkley, 42, who last year divorced developer Richard Taubman after less than a year of marriage. Brinkley ended her nine-year marriage to singer Billy Joel in 1994.

The never-married Cook, 37, works in the fashionable Hamptons, on Long Island. The two have been dating several months.

LOS ANGELES — Robert Urich, who played a tough Boston detective in TV's "Spenser: For Hire," has been diagnosed with a rare form of cancer.

Doctors discovered the synovial sarcoma, a soft-tissue cancer, after a routine physical last week, his spokeswoman Cindy Guagenti said Tuesday.

Urich, 48, will undergo chemotherapy for several weeks at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center, and "the prognosis for recovery is excellent," said Dr. Gerald Rosen, the actor's physician.

The 6-foot-2 Canadian-born actor stars as the title character in the syndicated Western "The Lazarus Man" and is expected to return to the TV show, which is on summer hiatus, when the chemotherapy is completed.

LOS ANGELES — Scott Bakula says he has something in common with Michael J. Fox — the same harasser.

Scott Bakula is granted court order warning woman to stay away from him.

Bakula, who starred in the NBC series "Quantum Leap," was granted a court order Monday warning Tina Marie Ledbetter to stay at least 100 yards from him, his girlfriend and family members.

Ledbetter, 36, was convicted in 1989 of threatening Fox. She got three years' probation and was ordered to get psychiatric counseling.

Bakula said Ledbetter sent unsigned letters to him and his girlfriend Chelsea Field, accusing him of betraying his fans by leaving his wife.

TRURO, Mass. — Al Gore and family are vacationing in what he probably thought would be friendly territory.

The vice president, wife Tipper and their four children are staying in this Cape Cod town that voted overwhelmingly for the Clinton-Gore ticket in 1992. The Gores arrived Monday for a one-week stay at the home of their friend Martin Peretz, publisher of The New Republic.

There will be some inconveniences, though. Part of the beach and road in front of the house has been closed, and environmentalists planned to protest Gore's inaction on the poisoning of gulls that prey on endangered species.

LONDON — Princess Diana was a perfect house guest while carrying on an affair with James Hewitt, his mom says.

Shirley Hewitt told the British magazine Hello! that Diana never minded doing the dishes and loved chocolate cake, but that she was very unhappy.

Former Army Maj. Hewitt, 38, had a five-year affair with Diana, 35, while teaching riding to her sons. He sold his story when the relationship became public.

Mrs. Hewitt said her son regularly brought Diana home and after the first few times she realized they were lovers.

"As she came more often it became easier. She and James would go riding," said Mrs. Hewitt. "She was very helpful. She would always help carry the things out after lunch."

Diana even once tackled a cupboard packed with old bottles and saucers.

"She said, 'What's all this? It's disgusting,' and cleared the whole lot out and gave the cupboard a good wash!" Mrs. Hewitt said.

A charity auction on Martha's Vineyard reaped $12,500 for an eight-mile bicycle ride around the island's Gay Head community with JFK Jr.

"My wife, Carolyn, and I have always admired the Kennedys, and she really wanted the bike ride," said the winning bidder, John Connors. "We came to buy it. I was prepared to get it at any price."

Proceeds of the annual celebrity auction went to Martha's Vineyard Community Services.

Guest auctioneer Carly Simon sang "Nobody Does It Better" to encourage higher bids for the bike ride.

"I don't know if you get to ride on the same bike, in tandem or behind John, which is what I would want to do, especially on curves," Simon said.

Bailey vs. Johnson?

TORONTO — Donovan Bailey's agents are toying with the idea of matching the Olympic 100-meter champion against U.S. star Michael Johnson over 150 meters.

"It's purely speculative at this stage," Ray Flynn, one of the Bailey's agents, said Tuesday. "We haven't gone past just the idea."

Bailey, of Oakville, Ontario, won the Olympic 100 with a world-record time of 9.84 seconds. Johnson won the 200 in a world-record 19.32 and took the 400 in an Olympic-record 43.49.

Flynn said he and partner Mark Block haven't talked to Johnson's agent, Bred Hunt, and that so far there is nothing in the works.

Bomb search

ATLANTA — For the third time in a week, federal investigators Tuesday searched the apartment of Richard Jewell, the Atlanta security guard who remains a suspect in the July 27 bombing at Centennial Olympic Park.

While agents combed the apartment Jewell shares with his mother, the 33-year-old suspect spent more than seven hours in a law office with his lawyers, Jack Martin and G. Watson Bryant Jr. A law-enforcement officer, presumably with the FBI, kept watch on the office from an unmarked car, as did more than 20 reporters who have been tracking Jewell's rare movements around town.

Rebels gearing for training camp

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

LEE FOOTBALL

Without spring training under the belt, Midland Lee head football coach John Parchman gets to put his Rebels on the football field a week earlier than the Class 5A teams that held the spring practice rite, like cross-town rival Midland High.

The Rebels will take to the practice field at 7 a.m. and 4 p.m. today as they begin preparation for the Sept. 6 season opener against El Paso Coronado in the Sun City. Morning practices will run two hours while the afternoon sessions will probably be one-half hour longer.

In between now and that opening date, Lee has some bridges to cross, leaving Parchman anxious to hit the practice field, knowing that his squad has a chance to produce an outstanding season.

Even though Lee has been snubbed in preseason Top 10 poll rankings by virtually all publications, no one argues the fact that the Rebels possess the makings of one of the finest defensive units in the 5A field with nine players who started at least some games last season, including safety John Norman, who was named the state's most valuable defensive player as a junior.

Lee's two-a-days must be limited to shorts until Monday when the pads come out. That means a lot of conditioning will be done during the first week.

"We've got to see what kind of shape the kids are in," Parchman said. "We think most of them will be ready to go since we've seen a lot of them up here working on their own this summer," Parchman said. "I'm excited about getting started and we think we'll have everyone pretty much on the field when we get started."

But Monday is the day Lee coaches are casting anxious eyes toward. When the pads come out, decisions will be made, especially in the offensive line.

"We pretty much got all our offense and defense in last spring without spring training," Parchman said. "The one thing we couldn't do is see who our contact players are. For that reason, we promised our offensive linemen that no decisions on starting positions would be

10-4, good buddy: Angels top Diablos

■ Matt Beaumont gets plenty of run support as he pitches the first complete game of his career, beating El Paso.

MIDLAND ANGELS

Midland pitcher Matt Beaumont got plenty of run support from a potent Angels' offense at Christensen Stadium Tuesday night to beat the El Paso Diablos, 10-4, recording his first complete game as a pro.

Beaumont (7-13), who started his professional career in 1994, had never tossed a complete game or recorded a shutout. The shutout eluded him, but the complete game is now his to savor.

The 6-foot-3, 210-pound lefty, limited El Paso to just seven hits and just two through the first five innings while striking out six batters to raise his Texas League-leading strikeout total to 119.

And he was a bulldog when it came to the complete game. About the only real mistake for the Texas League All-Star was giving up a three-run homer to Hector Ortega in the sixth inning, but he was holding a sound 8-1 lead at the time.

He was touched for an unearned run in the second inning when Midland newcomer David Davalillo made an error on a grounder by Jonas Hamlin. Hamlin later scored.

But Beaumont wanted the complete game.

"I'd never had a complete game as a pro," Beaumont said. "I wanted to stay in there."

PGA major concern for Montgomerie

By Doug Ferguson
AP Sports Writer

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Unless Colin Montgomerie can overcome the heat and a game that strayed badly at the British Open, he will end the year as one of the best players in the world without a major championship.

It was a label he figured to shed this year, along with the 40 pounds he lost through a diet and exercise regimen.

"It's been a disappointing year as far as the majors go," he said.

Montgomerie showed signs this might be his breakthrough year with a solid showing in The Players Championship. He led by one until Fred Couples caught him with an eagle-birdie-par finish.

But he never got untracked in the Masters, shooting rounds of 72-74-75-75 to finish in a tie for 39th. He faltered over the

With the success of this year's USA Olympic softball team, the only question is who will replace today's legends down the line.

The answer will likely take the field as the future of American softball takes the stage this week in Midland for the Amateur Softball Association's 14-Under National Championships.

The best 73 teams will introduce themselves to Midland at the opening ceremonies before kicking off the action at the Bill Williams Softball Complex. The ceremonies begin at 6 p.m., and the players and city couldn't be more ready.

Big League

HOMESTEAD, Fla. — Here they come out of the loser's bracket again. Midland Mid-City defeated Miami Dade 5-2 here Tuesday to force an "if" game in the Big League Southern Regional Tournament championship round. It was the third time in a row the Midland 16-18 year old team forced an "if" game to determine a tournament champion.

The teams meet today at 7 p.m. for the national tournament berth.

Clay Johnston doubled home two runs in the sixth inning to give Mid-City a 5-1 lead. It was the third game in a row Johnston got a hit for extra bases. Mario Mendoza, son of Midland Angel manager Mario Mendoza, hurled the win for the Midland team giving up one run in three innings. He combined with Jason Rogers, who gave up a run on one hit in four frames of relief, for a one-hitter.

Mid-City scored the first three runs of the game. In the first Johnston reached on an error and later scored on a wild pitch. Rogers then doubled and came home on a Mike Carrasco single.

In the second Chad Villarreal reached base and moved to third on two wild pitches. Mendoza singled him home for a 3-0 score. With the score 3-1 in the sixth inning, Joel Bermea singled and Rich Davis walked to set up Johnston's two-run hit.

NFL

MONTERREY, Mexico — The American Bowl, meant to introduce the NFL to the world, played to a full house that already knows a lot about this game.

For the two teams involved, it mattered little that the Kansas City Chiefs thrashed the Dallas Cowboys 32-6 in Monday night's exhibition.

But for Mexican fans hungry for American football, it was only the second time in two years they had a chance to see NFL play south of the border.

So Jesus Trevino and his two sons sprang $160 for three seats on the 35-yard line. This in a country where the minimum wage is $3 a day.

The Trevinos wore NFL souvenir pins and Cowboys caps because they root for the team everyone knows as the "Vaqueros."

"I've been a fan all my life," said Trevino, 57, a personnel manager, who has watched NFL broadcasts in Mexico since the 1960s. "I follow it for the discipline, the values that it represents — like hard work and team loyalty."

Elster homers, Texas wins

Associated Press

AL Roundup

DETROIT — Kevin Elster homered in his fourth straight game and Ivan Rodriguez hit a two-run shot to propel Texas to a 4-2 win Tuesday night over the Detroit Tigers, just the Rangers' second victory in their last six games.

Elster's 19th homer, off Richie Lewis in the ninth, tied a Ranger record for homering in four straight games held by three others. Juan Gonzalez was the last to do it, in 1992.

Ken Hill (12-6) scattered seven hits, including a home run by Andujar Cedeno, with seven strikeouts and two walks in eight innings. Mike Henneman came in after Tony Clark homered in the bottom of the ninth off reliever Ed Vosberg and got the last two outs for his 23rd save.

Felipe Lira (6-9), who has both of Detroit's wins over Texas, gave up three runs on five hits in six innings. He walked four and struck out three.

Red Sox 3, Blue Jays 2

BOSTON — Mike Maddux, making his first start of the season, turned in a strong performance and Jeff Frye and Darren Bragg delivered RBI doubles as Boston downed Toronto.

Maddux (1-1), sidelined since May 4 with a strained right elbow, allowed only one run and six hits in six innings. Heathcliff Slocumb worked the ninth for his 16th save.

Royals 9, Athletics 2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Michael Tucker hit a two-run home run and Craig Paquette added a three-run shot to power Kansas City past Oaklan, sending the slumping Athletics to their ninth loss in 12 games.

Royals starter Tim Belcher (11-6) gave up 11 hits in seven innings. He struck out six and did not walk a batter. Mike Magnante relieved at the start of the eighth and finished up, allowing two hits and one walk and striking out two.

Oakland starter John Wasdin (6-5) lost his third straight decision and is winless in six starts after the All-Star break. He gave up both homers in just 3 2-3 innings. In his last start, Wasdin gave up five runs in only four innings against Chicago.

Orioles 13, Brewers 3

MILWAUKEE — B.J. Surhoff went 4-for-5, hit two solo home runs and scored three times to lead the Baltimore Orioles over the Milwaukee Brewers 13-3.

Mike Mussina (13-8) didn't allow a hit until Matt Mieske doubled leading off the sixth. He allowed four hits in eighth innings, struck out four and walked one.

Ben McDonald (10-6) lasted three-plus innings. He gave up eight runs and seven hits.

Surhoff homered in the second and fourth, raising his season total to 18 with his third career multi-homer game. Eddie Murray was 2-for-2 and had three RBIs.

Baltimore broke open the game with an eight-run fourth that put the Orioles ahead 9-0.

Yankees 9, White Sox 2

NEW YORK — Darryl Strawberry homered in his first three at-bats, leading the New York Yankees to a 9-2 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

Strawberry lined his fourth homer of the season into the right-field seats in the second inning before unloading a 409-foot shot into the upper deck in right in the fourth off Kevin Tapani (10-6) to give the Yankees a 4-1 lead.

With a chance to become the 13th player to hit four homers in a major league game, Strawberry flied out to left in the seventh and was replaced by Gerald Williams in left field. It was the second three-homer game of Strawberry's career.

Kenny Rogers (9-5) settled down after shaky first and second inning to win his third consecutive start. The left-hander allowed a home run to Robin Ventura opening the second, but held Chicago to just five hits before leaving after eight.

Cecil Fielder went 1-for-4 with a single in his Yankee Stadium debut.

MLB owners make threats in labor talks

■ Labor talks intensify as owners threaten to resume a court battle with the players union over the collective bargaining agreement.

By Ronald Blum
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK — Baseball's labor talks intensified Tuesday, with the owners' threat to resume a bitter court fight adding more urgency to the negotiations.

The owners' ruling executive council is scheduled to meet Wednesday in Milwaukee, and management negotiator Randy Levine is to brief his bosses on what could be an ugly month for baseball's already-battered image.

According to several management sources who spoke on the condition they not be identified, owners will make a "final" offer next week if there is no progress toward a deal. About a week after that, they would ask U.S. District Judge Sonia Sotomayor to lift the injunction keeping the expired labor agreement in force, the first step toward declaring an impasse and unilaterally imposing work rules.

"Any attempt to shut off negotiations can't make things better," union head Donald Fehr said. "If they choose to go back to court and publicly re-air all our disputes, I have a hard time believing that's positive."

Sotomayor's injunction, issued March 31, 1995, caused players to end their strike after 232 days. The court order prevents work rules from changing unless there is either an agreement or Sotomayor agrees that talks have reached an impasse.

Players and owners agree a deal wouldn't contain a luxury tax this season, but would contain one in 1997, 1998 and 1999. They also agree there won't be a luxury tax in 2000, but the union also wants owners to accept a tax-free year in 2001.

A luxury tax would slow spending on players by making it harder for payrolls to climb over preset levels.

Owners have proposed the tax start at $49 million in 1997 and that no more than five or six teams pay a tax.

The tax rate, still not agreed to, would be between 30-40 percent, meaning that a team with a $55 million payroll such as the New York Yankees would pay a $2 million tax at that level.

"We discussed all the issues," Levine said. "We're going to meet again on Friday."

Also on tap for the executive council meeting is a discussion of Drayton McLane's desire to reopen negotiations about possibly selling the Houston Astros to a Northern Virginia group headed by William Collins.

It appears that McLane wants to have the option of negotiating with Collins in order to force a better deal for a new stadium in Houston, a source familiar with the situation said Tuesday.

However, many owners would like to keep Collins available to purchase an expansion team in the future.

ANGELS: Molina, Glenn provide power

two outs. He also gave up a leadoff single to Cecil Rodriques in the ninth, but a double play grounder, one of three double plays turned by the Angels, ended the game.

"I didn't know the complete game was in the bag until the final out," Beaumont said.

And while Beaumont was doing his job on the mound, the Midland offense was pumping. Leon Glenn started the onslaught in the second with a two-run triple and scored on a sacrifice fly by Ben Molina. Molina then hit a three-run dinger for his fourth RBI of the night in the fourth for a 6-1 lead.

Eddie Christian toyed with a cycle performance. He singled in the first off the body of El Paso starter Travis Smith (5-3), who was 10-5 for Texas Tech in 1995. Christian tripled in the fifth and hit a solo home run in the sixth. He needed a double to complete the cycle in the eighth, but grounded out to short.

"I was conscious of the cycle going into that last at-bat, but you can't control what kind of hits you get," Christian said.

The Angels have now won six of their last eight games, but the ease of this one was a welcome relief. In Midland's last 26 games, the Angels have played in 17 games decided by one run. A romp in the park was a nice break.

ANGEL DUST: Keith Luuloa and Rob Bonanno joined the big league Angels in Monday's Hall of Fame exhibition game at Cooperstown, N.Y., against Montreal. Luuloa was 1-for-3 while Bonanno pitched two inning and allowed three hits, all home runs in a park that is 350-feet to center... Greg Shockey's nine-game hitting streak came to an end with 0-for-2, but he scored twice... Aaron Guiel has hit in five straight with 11-for-17, eight runs scored and four RBIs... Luuloa has hit in six straight (10-22)... Former M-Angel pitcher Phil Leftwich (from Vancouver) has replaced Adrian Hollinger, who was sent to Lake Elsinore... Davalillo joins the club, replacing Freddie Diaz, who was promoted to Vancouver... Bo Ortiz, who once led the Texas League in the hitting race, went 0-for-5, falling to .319 and is 14 points behind El Paso's Todd Dunn (.333)...

California's Lachemann resigns

By Ken Peters
AP Sports Writer

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Many of the California Angels saw telltale signs on Marcel Lachemann's face.

Following a 1-5 road trip that included three losses to Detroit, owner of the majors' worst record this season, Lachemann announced Tuesday that he was stepping down as the Angels' manager.

"It's something that I think we as a team could see coming for two or three weeks," shortstop Gary DiSarcina said. "Marcel hasn't been himself lately, hasn't been smiling too much.

DiSarcina described Lachemann as a perfectionist who had difficulty accepting the way the Angels have been playing as they slipped deeper into the AL West cellar.

Sparky Anderson, who is the third on the career victory list and now works Angels games from the broadcast booth, thought Lachemann might want out.

"I know Marcel very well and I don't think he is one of those people who enjoys being in the limelight," Anderson said. "I really believe Marcel enjoyed being a pitching coach so much. ...

PGA: Montgomerie winless in '96 majors

final nine holes the U.S. Open, then missed the cut in the British Open for the fourth time in five years.

"This is the last chance this year of winning a major. If it doesn't happen, it doesn't happen," he said. "My next goal after — if this doesn't work out — will obviously be the money list in Europe again."

Montgomerie last year became the first player since Seve Ballesteros to win the Order of Merit three years in a row, and he is the leading money list again this year.

"I always feel that if I can remain No. 1 in Europe on a money list playing the limited schedule I do that I must be improving every year," he said. "And eventually if I keep on improving every year, well, I'll win a major one day."

Montgomerie has lost two majors in a playoff — the 1994 U.S. Open, which Ernie Els won in a three-way playoff, and last year's PGA Championship, when Steve Elkington beat him with a 20-foot birdie on the first extra hole.

"I can see Steve Elkington's putt drop in the hole now, and that's a year ago; I can see that as clear as a bell," he said. "To get close again, it's difficult to accept sometimes. But you get on with and you play."

NO SPLIT ON SEVEN: One of the greatest risk-reward shots at Valhalla Golf Club won't be coming into play in the PGA Championship.

A large pond divides the fairway on the 605-yard seventh hole, which bends to the left. By hitting the small landing area left of the pond, players would have a mid- to low-iron left to the green. This week, however, that area has been declared out of bounds.

"That's one of these things that you can speculate on all you want to," Tom Kite said. "I think the PGA, for whatever reason, decided that they didn't want the hole playing that way, and that's as we find it.

"It's a nice golf hole playing it around to the right-hand side, but it's considerably longer."

So much longer that few players, if any will be able to reach it in two.

"This is Colin Montgomerie here, not John Daly," the Scotsman replied when asked if he could get home in two at No. 7. "No chance. I hit a good drive and had 320 to the front. No."

DALY DOINGS: John Daly, the 1991 champion, comes into this year's tournament off a bizarre finish in the Scandinavian Masters, where he finished 18th.

Daly, who had been having problems off the tee all week, sent his drive on the par-5 seventh hole "miles to the right." He laid up with his second shot, then hit an 8-iron into the water in front of the green.

As he walked past the hazard, Daly took his Wilson prototype driver out of his bag and tossed it into the water before finishing the hole with a double-bogey 7.

"I wasn't mad," Daly said. "I just tossed my driver into the water because I didn't ever want to see it again. I'm going to use a GD Killer-Ti driver in the future. It's not out yet, but I'm going to have one."

HOMETOWN HERO: Fuzzy Zoeller is a gallery favorite no matter where he plays. This week, there are some familiar faces in the crowd from his hometown of New Albany, Ind., about 10 miles from Valhalla.

"My phone started ringing about two year ago when they announced they were coming here, and I don't think it's stopped yet," Zoeller said.

A major championship hasn't been played in Kentucky since 1952, when Jim Turnesa won the PGA Championship at Big Spring Country Club in Louisville. This year's championship sold out more than a year ago.

"These people are starving for something like this, a major championship, and I'm very proud to be from this area," Zoeller said.

ASA: City's softball facilities 'impressive' land's West Texas Heat. "We have the home-field advantage and support. The whole town will be here.

"Usually America is the best. So these are the best players in the world."

In this Olympic year, that point was driven through with a gold medal by the USA softball team. The players say that that makes this tournament much bigger.

"It (the national tournament) gives you something to strive for," said Jennifer Van der Linden, a shortstop and pitcher for the Southern California Stealth team from Woodland Hills, Calif.

It is third time in just over a year that the softball is again showcasing its top talent in the Tall City. Last year, the national 16-under tournament was played for five days before won by the Anaheim (Calif.) Bat Busters. Then, this summer the USA Olympic team made Midland one of its stops en route to Georgia. For the Midland Softball Association, things couldn't have gone better.

But the MSA's ability to bring in tournaments comes from its outstanding host record. The MSA has been awarded five-straight years by the ASA for its top-notch competitions.

"We are now known as a No. 1 site for a tournament," said Freddie Ezell, the Tournament Director and MSA Facilities Director. "I don't think I have bid for a tournament and not got one. That speaks highly for MSA and the city of Midland."

Ezell and his wife, Virginia, have worked hard with Midland businessman Bill Williams to bring these tournaments to the city. They have already secured the 12-under tournament for next summer. That will make 18 nationals tournaments since 1984.

"The people from the 16(-under) team said Midland ran a fine nationals and I heard Freddie Ezell puts on a great show," Stealth coach Donald Harris said.

However, the benefits for Midland and its citizens go beyond just being able to see athletic competition. It extends into city's coffers as Midland accommodates the teams, their players, families and followers.

"It is great for Midland and the community," Ezell said. "It makes big bucks for the city."

The teams that have already arrived are already pleased with what they have seen.

"I'm impressed with the facilities," said coach John Bashor of the California Dynasty. "They are great for youth softball. I wish the California city council people could look at what other small towns do."

Coming into Midland are teams from all over the United States, but the teams to beat should come from California.

The best of those, according to Travel Ball Magazine, are the Dynasty and Stealth, ranked No. 1 and 2 respectively.

Dynasty, which retained nine of the players from a national title winning 12-under team two years ago in Indianapolis, is very excited about this year's tournament.

"It has been their goal to win this tournament," said Bashor, whose team is 141-16 and won 12 tournaments including the Pacific Coast Regional. "The girls get themselves up for the tournament."

The Stealth, 51-6 since Memorial Day, was fourth last year in Chattanooga, Tn. (site of the 1995 14-under tournament) with a mostly 13-year-old ball club.

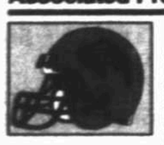
Included in the 73-team field are the champions of the 15 regions, state champions and at-large teams. Midland, by virtue of being the host, will have the West Texas Tornados and Heat participating in the five-day, double-elimination event.

If a better reason to attend is needed to go out to the national tournament, just remember Lis Fernandez and the rest of the U.S. Olympic Softball team were once 14.

ASA NOTES: Texas and California tied for the states with the largest contingencies. Each has 16 teams in the tournament...The West Texas Heat will play today at 7 p.m. at Bill Williams Softball Complex field B. The West Texas Tornados will play immediately following that game. The other teams will find out when they start at the first round draw today.

Colorado has talent, but unity a question

Associated Press



BOULDER, Colo. — Coach Rick Neuheisel has 19 seniors on his 1996 Colorado football team, and the Buffs have talent, speed and depth.

If the team is to shake off the Nebraska jinx, as quarterback Koy Detmer calls it, it could be in the Big 12 Conference championship playoff, and a bid for the national championship.

The unknown ingredient is unity, which is needed now, and must remain until January.

The other components are in place for a run at Nebraska and an even bigger reward, the coach said Monday.

Neuheisel believes if CU, 10-2 in his debut season last year, can match the attitude shown by the 1994-1995 squads, "then I think we're going to be a juggernaut."

"I think we're going to be a team that looked like Kentucky did in the NCAA basketball tournament — like sometimes they had six players on the court against the other team's five," he said.

Neuheisel said he believes the team has "great speed, unbelievable explosiveness. We've got a defense that finished the season as strong as any defense in the country... I mean, we've got the horses. We've got the guys who can flat play this game."

"Now, can we get them all to enjoy it with one another? Can we get them all to root for one another and go down that tunnel each and every time we play with one heartbeat?

"If they buy into it, we care going to be dynamite," Neuheisel said. But the coach said that's the challenge, not how good CU can get, but how close it can get, and that's really a choice for the seniors.

CU was No. 5 nationally in last season's final Associated Press poll. It has been ranked no lower than 11th among 15 preseason polls already published. Most sports publications have CU in their top five.

"We can't continue to be second fiddle and call that good enough."

CU hasn't beaten Nebraska since 1990, and meet the Big Red in Lincoln on Nov. 29.

Sick coach steps down at Boise St.

Associated Press

BOISE, Idaho — Boise State football coach Pokey Allen, diagnosed with a recurrence of cancer, took a medical leave of absence Tuesday.

University officials said Tom Mason, the team's assistant head coach and defensive coordinator, will take over as interim head coach.

Allen, 53, said he had a lump in his chest and doctors found cancer in both his lungs during a checkup after his return from the recent Big West Conference meeting in Dallas. A biopsy was performed Monday, and Allen learned Tuesday that the cancer had returned.

He will go to Seattle next week for surgery to remove the tumors. After that, doctors will determine whether it will be necessary for Allen to go through chemotherapy again. Allen told a news conference he was less optimistic than when the cancer was first discovered.

"I am a little scared," he said. "I'd like to act braver than I am, but I'm scared."

He was diagnosed with a rare, deadly tissue cancer in his right triceps in December 1994. The tumor was removed in March 1995. And after eight months of exhaustive chemotherapy and a stem-cell transplant procedure, Allen's cancer was declared in remission last December.

But his doctors said then that the rhabdomyosarcoma could always return and that Allen had only a 35-percent chance of surviving the cancer.

Allen is 23-14 in three years at Boise State. He led the Broncos to a 13-2 record and the NCAA Division I-AA championship game in 1994, losing to Youngstown State. Boise State moved from the Big Sky Conference to the Division I-A Big West Conference this season.

Dr. Alice Forsythe, a cancer specialist, said Allen had a 1-inch tumor in his right lung and the tumor in his left lung is about half that size.

Dr. Ernest Conrad of the University of Washington will perform the surgery, she said. Allen said he had an appointment with Conrad next Tuesday and the operation will be performed Aug. 15.

Allen said he was stepping down now because he didn't want to start the season and then have to quit.

Gilliam heads to Bucks

Associated Press

NBA Notes

MILWAUKEE — The Milwaukee Bucks signed free agent forward Armon Gilliam to a four-year contract, the team announced Tuesday.

Gilliam, who is entering his 10th season in the NBA, enjoyed his best season last year with the New Jersey Nets, averaging 18.3 points and 9.1 rebounds per game.

Over nine seasons, the 6-foot-9 forward has averaged 15.4 points and 7.5 rebounds per game.

Gilliam will add much-needed depth to the front court, coach Chris Ford said in a statement released by the team.

Gilliam was selected by Phoenix as the second pick in the 1987 draft. He has also played for the Charlotte Hornets and the Philadelphia 76ers.

Grizzlies sign Abdur-Rahim

VANCOUVER, British Columbia — The Vancouver Grizzlies, seeking to get bigger and stronger in the front court, said Tuesday they have signed Shareef Abdur-Rahim, the club's top pick and the third player taken overall in the NBA draft.

The 6-foot-9, 225-pound freshman from California signed a three-year contract with the second-year club, general manager Stu Jackson said.

Under terms of the rookie salary allocation in the labor agreement, Abdur-Rahim will receive $1,821,600 the first season, $2,094,800 the second and $2,368,100 thew third.

Abdur-Rahim, 19, was the first freshman in Pac-10 history to be named the conference's player of the year. He averaged 21.1 points a game and set Cal freshman records for points (590), scoring average, field goals (206) and free throws (170) while leading the team in scoring, rebounding (8.4 a game) and steals (1.86 a game).

The Grizzlies believe the native of Marietta, Ga., will need time to develop defensive skills in the NBA but expect him to be a starter at small forward.

The club said Abdur-Rahim will be the fifth-youngest player in the league this season, behind Kobe Bryant of the Los Angeles Lakers, Stephon Marbury of the Minnesota Timberwolves, Predrag Stojakovic of the Sacramento Kings and Jermaine O'Neal of the Portland Trailblazers.

"We are very excited to have Shareef under contract," Grizzlies GM Stu Jackson said.

Three-pointer: Knicks sign picks

■ New York solidifies its team for the next several years by signing three first-rounders.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — The New York Knicks signed first-round picks John Wallace, Walter McCarty and Dontae' Jones to three-year contracts Tuesday.

New York selected Wallace, a former Syracuse star, with the 18th overall pick, took Kentucky forward McCarty with the No. 19 selection and Mississippi State forward Jones with the 21st pick.

Wallace was limited to $2,257,900 over three years under the NBA rookie pay scale, $654,500 this season, $752,600 in 1997-98 and $850,800 in 1998-99. McCarty is limited to $2,156,300 and Jones $1,987,200.

"We are extremely happy to be able to announce the signings of all three of our draft selections," said Ernie Grunfeld, the team's president and general manager. "There are three extremely talented young players."

Wallace, a second-team All-America selection, averaged 22.1 points and 8.7 rebounds as a senior. He led the Orangemen to the NCAA title game.

"I've been looking forward to this day for a long time," Wallace said. "When I actually put my name on the dotted line, it was one of the greatest feelings I ever had. Just to know I'll be able do whatever I want for my mother and the rest of the family is a great feeling."

McCarty averaged 11.3 points and 5.7 rebounds as a senior for NCAA champion Kentucky. Jones averaged 14.7 points and 6.8 rebounds as a junior at Mississippi State, following two years at NE Mississippi Community College.

"All of them have excellent potential," coach Jeff Van Gundy said. "Now it's up to them to fulfill that potential."

They are rookies, they are joining a talented team and playing time will be difficult to come by.

It will be difficult for any of New York's three young forwards to play regularly. If the season started now, Van Gundy said, he would lean toward using an eight-man rotation — Patrick Ewing, Charles Oakley, Larry Johnson, Allan Houston and Chris Childs as the starters, with John Starks, Buck Williams and Charlie Ward coming off the bench.

But there is an opportunity for one of the rookies as a backup small forward. And if Oakley or Johnson should suffer an injury, the Knicks will need one of the rookies to step forward quickly.

The Knicks know Wallace can score, but for him to play regularly his defense and conditioning must improve.

The 6-foot-8-inch Wallace played a lot of zone defense at Syracuse, which allowed him to rest, and he has trouble defending against quicker small forwards.

With former Orlando center Shaquille O'Neal moving to the Western Conference, the balance of power in the East has shifted, Van Gundy said, and he said he thinks the Knicks can be a force.

Spurs shoot for business ticket sales

By Lesli Hicks
San Antonio Express-News

SAN ANTONIO — The San Antonio Spurs unveiled a plan Monday to boost corporate season ticket sales, anchor the team in San Antonio and ultimately draw more fans from along Interstate 35.

In a marketing strategy unique to this National Basketball Association franchise, the Spurs have teamed with seven of the 13 area chambers of commerce to improve the crucial mix of corporate and individual season-ticket sales.

Unlike other NBA cities, only 30 percent of season tickets sold here are bought by businesses, while the balance 70 percent are purchased by individual fans.

Although that speaks volumes about the loyalty of local fans, that ratio elsewhere in the league is reversed.

"The Spurs are committed to stay in this city and we realize that a successful San Antonio franchise must come about through a successful partnership with the San Antonio business community," said Spurs Chairman Peter Holt, unveiling the VIB (for Very Important Business) program Monday afternoon.

Joe Krier, president of the Greater San Antonio Chamber of Commerce, said at the news conference that different chambers of commerce don't have to be rivals.

"It gives members the opportunity to not only support the San Antonio Spurs, but to support their own businesses in their marketing and community relations efforts," he said.

Members of six other area chambers — Alamo City, North San Antonio, Randolph Metro, San Antonio Hispanic, San Antonio Women's and South San Antonio — are eligible to participate.

Roenick prepared to leave Blackhawks this season

By Mike Nadel
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO — Jeremy Roenick has sold his house, moved to Massachusetts and pushed the Chicago Blackhawks out of his consciousness.

Until recently, Roenick's stock answer to all questions about his free-agent status was that he hoped to stay in Chicago, his NHL home since 1990. Tuesday, however, he said: "I just want to play hockey. I love the game and I want to play, and that's how I'm going to leave it."

Roenick's agent, Neil Abbott, hasn't negotiated with the Blackhawks since January. He's been talking with several teams, including "very serious discussions" with the New York Islanders, but called reports of a seven-year, $35 million offer from New York speculative "guesstimates."

"It's very simple — we want to leave Chicago," said Abbott, who postponed a trip to Sweden to work on Roenick's situation. "We tried hard to work a deal with them and couldn't, and we became free agents for a reason. It's not a negotiating ploy. Jeremy sold his house. He's ready to leave."

Because he is a restricted free agent, Chicago could match any offer and keep the 26-year-old center, who has 596 points in 524 career games. If Chicago lets Roenick go, the Blackhawks would receive five first-round draft choices from the signing team as compensation.

Blackhawks GM Bob Pulford repeatedly has said he will match any offer for Roenick — the team's most popular, exciting, creative, physical and emotional player.

"It's been a big soap opera," he said. "I've been trying to get my bearings straight, but I'm a little lost right now. I sold my house and it's tough — not having a place to live and not knowing where I want to be."

Abbott advised Roenick to sell his suburban home. "When it became a very real possibility that he wasn't going to stay there," the agent said, "I thought selling was the smart move."

Roenick is coming off a five-year contract that paid him $1.4 million last season. He averaged 50 goals and 106 points the first three years of the deal, but his production fell because of leg injuries the last two seasons. He had 67 points in 66 games in 1995-96.

"I've been working hard to get my legs strong. They feel great," Roenick said. "I'm in great shape and I'm ready to go."

HOW TO READ THE MARKET IN REVIEW

Here are the 1,675 most active stocks on the New York Stock Exchange, 925 most active on the Nasdaq National Market and 405 most active on the American Stock Exchange. Stocks in bold are worth at least $5 and changed 5 percent or more in price. Underlining for 50 most active on NYSE and Nasdaq and 25 most active on Amex. Tables show name, price and net change, and one to two additional fields rotated through the week, as follows:

Name: Stocks appear alphabetically by the company's full name (not its abbreviation). Names consisting of initials appear at the beginning of each letter's list.
Last: Price stock was trading at when exchange closed for the day.
Chg: Loss or gain for the day. No change indicated by ...
PE: Price-earnings ratio. Derived by dividing closing price by company's earnings per share for the most recent four quarters.
PPE: Projected price-earnings ratio. Derived by dividing closing price by company's projected earnings per share for upcoming 12 months. PPE supplied by I/B/E/S, Institutional Brokers' Estimate System. Is a consensus forecast of all analysts following the company. Only companies with three or more analysts following them have a PPE.
How to use: In general, if PPE is lower than PE, analysts believe earnings will be going up. If PPE is higher, they expect earnings to fall. The numbers can be helpful in following stocks but as with all financial data are only one of many factors to judge a company by. Consult your financial advisor before making any investment decision.

Prices slump

Energy futures prices retreated Tuesday on the New York Mercantile Exchange after the State Department announced United Nations negotiators have agreed to terms for monitoring emergency oil sales by Iraq.

The resumption of Iraqi oil exports is likely to come at an awkward time, said analyst Gerald E. Samuels at ARB Oil Inc. in Los Angeles. Iraq could be bringing 700,000 barrels of oil a day to market at the end of the summer driving season and before cold weather arrives, he said.

Heating oil futures led the losses as investors took profits on the recent sharp rise in prices, but all energy contracts rebounded toward the end of the session ahead of the late-afternoon weekly release of supply reports.

West Texas Intermediate for September delivery fell 10 cents to $21.13 a barrel.

September natural gas fell 9.1 cents to $2.124 per 1,000 cubic feet.

Dollar gains

NEW YORK — The dollar ended slightly higher against most major currencies Tuesday, retaining some gains made after a bomb explosion in Moscow created apprehension about Russian political stability.

In New York, the dollar traded at 1.4847 marks, up from 1.4826 Monday. The dollar traded at 106.79 yen, up from 106.60. The British pound cost $1.5375, down from $1.5440.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Monday: 1.2073 Swiss francs, up from 1.2023; 5.0655 French francs, up from 5.0360; 1,519 Italian lire, up from 1,515; and 1.3735 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3738.

Markets rise

NEW YORK — Stocks struggled higher Tuesday, erasing more of July's pullback, as interest rates held firm in the bond market despite a new round of heavy government borrowing.

But trading was slow and cautious for the second straight session as investors found few incentives to bid an increasingly pricey market back into record territory.

The Dow Jones industrial average rose 21.83 to 5,696.11, having recovered from an early 26-point deficit and briefly moving above 5,700 for the first time since early July.

In just three weeks, the blue-chip barometer has snapped back by more than 500 points from the depths of last month's selloff, and is now less than 82 points from its record high at 5778.00, set May 22. Similarly, the Standard & Poor's 500-stock index, up 2.15 to 682.38, is also back within range of its all-time best finish.

The quarterly government refunding, fairly large at $39 billion, prompted the usual concerns over how well the Treasury market will absorb the new notes and bonds. But the first phase, Tuesday's auction of $19 billion in three-year notes, failed to erode last week's gains in bond prices or send interest rates higher.

The yield on the 30-year Treasury bond — a key determinant of corporate and consumer borrowing costs — actually eased further, heartening stock investors who've been envisioning lower operating costs and rising revenues after last week's pullback in long-bond interest rates.

The NYSE's composite index rose 0.84 to 353.65, and the American Stock Exchange's market value index rose 0.15 to 548.74.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — U.N. negotiators have agreed to terms for monitoring emergency oil sales by Iraq, leaving only a few technical details to be worked out before sales can begin to pay for food, medicine and war reparations, the State Department said Tuesday.

Spokesman Nicholas Burns said the agreement puts in place more monitors to oversee both oil exports and the import of food and other relief supplies than did a plan the United States blocked last week at the United Nations.

He said a final accord was expected shortly now that "the United Nations has resolved the major problem," ensuring President Saddam Hussein does not get to the proceeds.

Determined to block Saddam from new oil riches, the United States s asked the U.N. Sanctions Committee for tight control over the $2 billion deal that would allow Iraq to pay for food and relief supplies over six months.

The U.S. delegation gave no reason for its objection, but Burns suggested Monday it was to ensure "that Saddam Hussein has no chance to enrich himself, and that's been our bottom line all along."

Renewing U.S. support for the deal, which eases U.N. sanctions that have ruined Iraq's economy and imposed severe shortages on the Iraqi people, Burns said, "Progress is being made and has been made over the last couple of days."

Nabil Najam, Iraq's envoy to the Arab League, said Monday in Cairo that Washington's refusal to accept the plan earlier prolonged the suffering of the Iraqi people under what he called "the unjustified sanctions" against Iraq.

Meanwhile, the United States and other members of the sanctions committee are reviewing an application from Turkey for partial exemption from the trade sanctions imposed by the U.N. Security Council on Iraq as punishment for its invasion of Kuwait in 1990, Burns said.

Jordan has been granted an exemption, allowing it to purchase oil and to export some goods to Baghdad.

Merger creates nation's largest real estate firm

N.Y. Times News Service

Indianapolis — In the real estate business, bigger is usually better, and before the summer is out, no one will be bigger than a combined Simon Property Group Inc. and DeBartolo Realty Corp.

Simon is in the process of buying longtime rival mall developer DeBartolo in a transaction valued at about $3 billion, creating North America's largest real estate company. Shareholders of both companies approved the acquisition Tuesday.

The combined company, to be called Simon DeBartolo Group, will control about 7 percent of all shopping mall space in the country, comprising 110 million square feet in 32 states. It will be twice as large as its nearest competitor, General Growth Properties Inc.

"They are now the big dog on the block," said Robert Steers, chairman of Cohen & Steers Capital Management, managers of the $992 million Cohen & Steers Realty Shares mutual fund.

Being the big dog has advantages.

The move will allow Indianapolis-based Simon to expand in the fast-growing Sunbelt states where DeBartolo has many properties, and cut costs to combat lackluster retail sales and a string of chain-store bankruptcies.

And as the nation's largest retail property landlord, investors and analysts expect Simon will gain a cozier relationship with the important anchor tenants, who are essential in drawing shoppers to a mall, and more leverage in negotiating leases with the smaller tenants than any of its competitors.

Though Simon won't admit it, its larger size could also permit the company to pick and choose certain tenants to move into high-performing malls in return for higher rents elsewhere or persuade popular retailers to locate a store in an underperforming property.

The transaction joins two of the country's largest shopping-center operators, family-run companies that were pioneers in the development of shopping malls.

Though both companies survived the recession and real estate slump of the early 1990s, DeBartolo took a few more lumps.

During the 1980s, DeBartolo borrowed heavily to fund aggressive development. By 1992, the company was floundering under the weight of $4.4 billion of debt when its bankers stepped in and agreed to extend the loans for another five years and lent DeBartolo an extra $300 million.

Two years ago, DeBartolo initiated a $500 million plan to upgrade its malls and other properties, but analysts and investors didn't expect the company would have the money to finish the job.

Simon — now run by Mel's 35-year-old son David Simon, a former investment banker — has the cash that's needed to renovate the aging, yet well located, shopping malls. Many of DeBartolo's malls are located in the South, with a concentration in Florida. Simon's malls are located in the Midwest and Southwest, with a concentration in Texas.

Union and management officials at the General Motors Wilmington, Del. plant celebrate the news that they have been selected to build Saturn's new generation of vehicles. New Saturn model targets young families

Associated Press

DETROIT — General Motors Corp. has decided to build a midsize Saturn to give young buyers of the smaller Saturns something to trade up to as they settle down and start families.

The roomier vehicle, known by its project name Innovate, will be assembled at an existing plant in Wilmington, Del., making it the first Saturn built outside GM's innovative assembly line in Spring Hill, Tenn., which cultivated a down-home image of workers who crafted a car as a team.

It will be based on the Opel Vectra that GM makes and sells in Europe. It will hit showrooms in 1999.

"You'll know it's a Saturn," Saturn spokesman Jim Farmer said Tuesday. "The product will be uniquely Saturn with all the Saturn styling designs and cues. It will be manufactured the Saturn way at a Saturn plant by Saturn team members." A final name for the car hasn't been chosen yet.

Saturn dealers have been pleading for years for a larger car. The Innovate is designed to compete with popular Japanese-brand models such as the Honda Accord and Toyota Camry.

"It's going to allow us to retain the customers we've gotten back from the imports, whose families have gotten a little bigger," said Tom Delke, vice president of Saturn North, a dealership in Clarkston, Mich.

The Spring Hill plant is running at near full production and could not accommodate a larger model without expansion, which GM has declined to finance.

For its six years of existence, GM's small-car subsidiary has made much of its Spring Hill plant, where assembly workers are deeply involved in making decisions. In its folksy advertising, Saturn had assembly workers talk about how they stop the line if they find a defect.

Analysts said they doubt consumers will care that the car is being built in Wilmington, Del.

"The fact is that most of Saturn's success is in sales and marketing," industry consultant James Harbour said. "I'm not so sure it makes a difference where it's built."

The Spring Hill plant operates under a unique, non-expiring United Auto Workers contract separate from GM's national pact. The Delaware plant will continue to operate under the national agreement, but UAW spokesman Reg McGhee said that like all local versions of the contract it will have some differences.

Farmer said the Saturn decision-making process will not change.

Settlement with NASD expected this week

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Securities and Exchange Commission is expected to announce its settlement with the parent of the Nasdaq stock market this week, criticizing the group for lax regulation of brokers and their firms, industry sources said Tuesday.

"It's going to take us to task for, in their opinion, not adequately policing the market," said one source with the National Association of Securities Dealers Inc., who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Another industry source briefed on the case, also speaking on condition of anonymity, was hopeful the SEC's report could be toned down as talks between the NASD and the agency reach conclusion.

Officials at the NASD are expecting the case to be brought this week, perhaps Thursday, the sources said.

NASD boards of directors have been holding telephone conference calls in recent days to discuss progress of the SEC settlement discussions. Directors remain on call while final discussions continue, which one of the industry sources described as "fast-paced, ongoing discussions at very high levels."

The SEC's settlement with the NASD will not involve a financial penalty.

The SEC and NASD declined comment.

The Washington, D.C.-based NASD, an industry self-regulatory group, is best known as the parent of the Nasdaq stock market. It also plays an important role policing Wall Street, overseeing registration and conduct of 510,000 professionals and 5,400 firms.

The NASD refers many cases, such as insider trading violations, to the SEC for federal enforcement action.

The SEC investigation focuses on allegations that the NASD failed to punish Nasdaq dealers who don't honor their quoted prices for stocks, a serious offense known as "backing away." Another charge involves failing to punish firms for reporting trades late. In addition, the NASD's district business conduct committees, where disputes are first aired, have faced allegations of being lenient and dominated by industry.

Last month, the Justice Department reached a settlement with 24 major Nasdaq dealers in a wide-ranging investigation of price-fixing in the quotation of Nasdaq stock prices. The firms, which did not admit wrongdoing, agreed to tape record brokers' conversations and enhance monitoring to prevent a practice that Attorney General Janet Reno said cost investors "many millions of dollars."

Capriati wins first match since French Open

Associated Press

MONTREAL — Jennifer Capriati, in her first match since the French Open in May, beat 11th-seeded Irina Spirlea of Romania 6-4, 6-2 on Tuesday in the du Maurier Open women's tennis championships.

Capriati, 20, won her first match since March and advanced to a second-round match against Lori McNeil, a 6-3, 6-7 (7-5), 7-5 winner over Italy's Silvia Farina.

"I'm just happy to be back playing," said Capriati, playing in only her sixth tournament of the year after sitting out more than two years because of legal and personal troubles. "I'm taking it one step at a time and see where it lands me. I'll just try to play well — do what I do best."

Defending champion Monica Seles won a second-round match, routing Slovakia's Katarina Studenikova 6-2, 6-0. Studenikova beat Seles in the second round of Wimbledon.

Seles won last year at Toronto in her first tournament following a two-year absence after being stabbed by a spectator in Germany. "I can't reproduce the feeling I had last year in Toronto, ever," Seles said.

In other second-round matches, Virginia Ruano-Pascual of Spain ousted 1986 champion and 14th-seeded Helena Sukova of the Czech Republic 7-5, 3-6, 6-4 and qualifier Rennae Stubbs of Australia downed 12th-seeded Katarina Habsudova of Slovakia 6-2, 6-4.

Sixth-seeded Magdalena Maleeva of Bulgaria beat Lisa Raymond 6-4, 6-3 and Mary Pierce of France got by Russia's Elena Makarova 2-6, 6-3, 6-3.

In her glory years in the early 1990s, Capriati was ranked among the best in the world. She became the youngest du Maurier Open champion ever at age 15, when she won in Toronto in 1991. Two years later, she lost to Steffi Graf in the final.

But after the 1993 U.S. Open she came undone and left the tennis tour. A shoplifting incident and two stints in drug rehab caused her to play only one match in 2 1/2 years.

Becker out of Pilot Pen

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — Plagued by the same wrist injury that forced him to default at Wimbledon, Boris Becker withdrew from the Pilot Pen International.

Becker ruptured a tendon in his right wrist at Wimbledon when he mis-hit a service return in a third-round match against qualifier Neville Godwin.

The 28-year-old German, this year's Australian Open champion and three-time Wimbledon winner, wore a cast for several weeks and has been undergoing physical therapy to rehabilitate the injury. His doctors advised him that the wrist is not fully healed.

"I know this has been a serious blow to him in what started out as a great year," Pilot Pen chairman Jim Westhall said. "We all hope to see him healthy for the U.S. Open."

Becker is the 1994 champion of the Volvo International, the tournament's former name before Pilot Pen took over sponsorship this year. The Pilot Pen will be played at the Connecticut Tennis Center the week of August 10th.

ATP Championships

MASON, Ohio — Sergi Bruguera, drained after winning the silver medal in the Atlanta Olympics, was routed 6-1, 6-4 by Patrick Rafter in the ATP Championship.

"I was here without energy," said Bruguera, who came to the ATP straight from Atlanta, where he lost in straight sets to Andre Agassi in the gold-medal match Saturday.

"Even practice was very, very tough for me. The Olympics go for two weeks like a Grand Slam event, and I've never played in a tournament the week after a Grand Slam."

In the first match on stadium court, Rafter won the last five games of first set. The Australian had lost all five of his previous matches against Bruguera, four of those losses on clay.

But Rafter's serve-and-volley attack proved too much on the hardcourt for the Spaniard.

Rafter, who reached the second round of last week's Infiniti Open in Los Angeles also confessed to being tired.

Agassi teased Bruguera about his Olympic loss before saying that he, too, was tired.

"I beat up on him didn't I?" Agassi said. "It was definitely draining, especially with all the security involved and the daily protocol of just getting into the locker room. It might take me a little longer to get going again, but I don't think it will be too much of a problem."

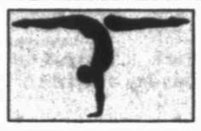
Miller honored with parade

By Angie Bluethman
Associated Press Writer



EDMOND, Okla. — Shannon Miller, one of the Magnificent Seven of the U.S. women's gymnastics team, returned to her hometown Tuesday to the cheers of thousands who turned out to see the teen-ager who struck gold in Atlanta.

"You won't ever know how great it is to come home to a welcome like this," Miller said in a short address.

"It so amazing to go away and compete for your country and your coach. But I think it means a lot when you compete for your community and have one as great as mine."

After Miller finished speaking, parade dignitaries surprised the gymnast with a new Chevrolet Camaro. Miller also was given a car after returning from the Barcelona Olympics, but she wasn't old enough to drive then.

Waving pompoms, signs and "10.0s," people sitting on lawn chairs and blankets filled the streets as children stared down the block waiting to welcome Miller. One person hoisted a sign that read: "Shannon, it's hard to be humble when you know how to tumble."

Young gymnasts turned somersaults as they moved down the street. A band played and people waved signs that gave Miller a "10" for her performances.

Miller, now 19 years old and about to enter college, said the Olympics in Atlanta were probably her best and might be her last, although she hasn't given up on the idea of competing in Sydney, Australia, in 2000.

Olympics to earn slight profit, organizers say

■ Privately-funded games received strong ticket sales which could put the Games in the black.

By Marc Rice
AP Business Writer

ATLANTA — The Atlanta Olympics, privately funded and run on a nail-bitingly tight budget, probably will turn a slim profit, the organizers' top money man said Tuesday.

The games, staged at a cost of $1.7 billion, began with organizers still needing about $100 million. But surprisingly strong sales of tickets, souvenirs and refreshments and a profit-sharing agreement with NBC helped nudge the Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games into the black, said A.D. Frazier, the committee's chief operating officer.

"Everybody's been planning our demise since the beginning," Frazier said. But he added: "We've done a good job."

Committee members predicted early on that the games would make a sizable profit, but that expectation evaporated as the games approached. When the games began, the committee said its aim was to break even.

On Tuesday, Frazier said: "There's not going to be a big windfall for anyone, I'll tell you that right now. If there's anything at all, it's going to be low numbers."

Frazier said it could take months before the committee knows for sure how big the profit is.

The major expense left to pay is $30 million to convert the Olympic Stadium into a baseball park for the Atlanta Braves. The committee also is facing lawsuits related to the construction of the stadium and the death of an ironworker during the project.

Unlike Olympic organizing committees in most countries, the ACOG has no government safety net and it is unclear what would happen in the event of a shortfall.

"We'll worry about that when we get to it. We don't anticipate ending up in the red," said former Mayor Andrew Young, committee co-chairman.

Others are not so rosy.

"ACOG tends to be more optimistic than we are," said George Berry, chairman of the Metropolitan Atlanta Olympic Games Authority, which has limited oversight authority over ACOG finances. "We want to see all the numbers before we feel comfortable."

If the committee posts a loss, the taxpayers are not responsible for covering it, Berry said. But the completion of the Braves stadium would be at risk.

The committee sold more than $450 million worth of tickets before the Olympics, then sold about $12 million more during the games. Organizers were surprised by the added sales, since nearly all ticket-buying in past Olympics was done in advance.

Souvenir and concession sales also exceeded expectations. The committee also got a small cut of NBC's advertising sales.

The committee's contract with the International Olympic Committee requires that any profit be divided among the IOC, the U.S. Olympic Committee and sports programs in the United States.

NBC draws Olympic-sized ratings

Associated Press

NEW YORK — NBC's Olympics coverage attracted 209 million viewers, more than any event in U.S. television history, and reached 91.7 percent of the nation's 88 million households with television, the network said Tuesday.

The 1994 Winter Olympics in Lillehammer drew 204 million viewers.

On average, the 17-day coverage earned a 21.6 rating and 41 share, a 26 percent increase over the coverage of the same events at the 1992 Games in Barcelona. Those Games earned a 17.1 rating and 33 share for 16 dates.

The Atlanta average is the highest prime time rating for the summer Games since the Los Angeles Games in 1984, which drew a 23.2 rating and 44 share.

The rating is the percentage watching a program among television households in the United States. Each point represents 959,000 homes. The share is the percentage watching a program among those televisions in use.

Top pick Johnson signs with Jets

Associated Press

NFL Camps Roundup

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. — Keyshawn Johnson, the No. 1 pick in the NFL draft, agreed Tuesday to a $15 million, six-year contract with the New York Jets, acknowledging his 24-day holdout has left him behind in his quest for a starting spot.

"There are some things that I know, but there are some things I have no clue about," said Johnson, who will have slightly more than three weeks to get ready for the regular-season opener in Denver on Sept. 1.

The contract includes a $6.5 million signing bonus and offers Johnson a chance to earn an additional $2 million in incentives if he reaches two of four standards in each of the first two years — 12 TD catches, a Pro Bowl selection, 85 receptions and 1,000 yards receiving.

Johnson will not play in the Jets' exhibition at Philadelphia on Thursday night, but hopes to see some action the following week against the New York Giants. The former Southern California star has been working out regularly since the draft, at first with NFL and former college teammates.

Indianapolis Colts

Linebacker Trev Alberts likely will miss the entire season as he recuperates from surgery on his left shoulder, Indianapolis Colts coach Lindy Infante said Tuesday.

"We're looking at four to six months of rehabilitation, and the injury should heal fine," Infante said after Tuesday's practice at Anderson University. "It's going to take a period of time, and he is one of these guys who works hard and he's been through these things before."

Alberts also missed most of his rookie season in 1994 because of an elbow injury. After Monday's surgery, the Colts did not put him on injured reserve, which means he could rejoin the team this season if his rehabilitation progresses quicker than expected.

Atlanta Falcons

The Atlanta Falcons have reached an agreement with holdout quarterback Jeff George. Maybe.

The Falcons released a statement Tuesday saying George had agreed to a one-year, $3.64 million contract and was expected to report to training camp after missing 2 1/2 weeks of practice and the first exhibition game last weekend.

However, team officials began backtracking before the day was out, saying George had not actually signed the compromise deal.

George's agent, Leigh Steinberg, said an agreement in principle had been reached that would allow the quarterback to play one more season with the Falcons, then become an unrestricted free agent at the end of the year. George had sought a multi-year deal with Atlanta, but the sides never agreed on a price.

Green Bay Packers

Green Bay traded defensive end Wendall Gaines to the St. Louis Rams for a conditional, undisclosed draft choice.

Gaines spent his first two seasons in Arizona, much of the time on the practice squad. He moved back and forth between defensive end and tight end and was signed by the Packers in May.

Denver Broncos

Coach Mike Shanahan, who went all last year without naming a No. 2 quarterback, has picked six-year veteran Bill Musgrave as the backup to John Elway with the Denver Broncos.

Shanahan said that even with rookie Jeff Lewis' strong showing against San Francisco, in which he directed the game-winning drive, Musgrave still will be the first alternative to Elway.

St. Louis Rams

Two St. Louis linemen, ends James Harris and Alberto White, are injured.

On Monday, the Rams signed end-linebacker Antonio Armstrong, a pass rush specialist who was drafted by the San Francisco 49ers out of Texas A&M last year.

Armstrong finished last season with the Miami Dolphins but was released in June.

Carolina Panthers

Starting outside linebacker Lamar Lathon will miss Saturday's exhibition game at Denver after undergoing arthroscopic surgery on his left knee.

Coach Dom Capers said Lathon should be sidelined for less than a week.

Washington Redskins

Although the Redskins have been hit with a spate of two-to-four week injuries to key players, Coach Norv Turner said that things haven't reached a critical point.

"In some cases, it has a positive effect," Turner said. "All of a sudden, there's someone who gets to go practice and you find out he might be a little better than you thought. I don't think the type of injuries we've been having will have any effect on how productive we can be."

Tampa Bay Buccaneers

Besides the score, there was one other aspect of Tampa Bay's otherwise encouraging exhibition opener that didn't sit well with first-year coach Tony Dungy.

One of the trademarks of Dungy's defenses as a long-time assistant with other teams was takeways. But the Bucs had none in a 13-10 exhibition loss to Miami, so forcing turnovers will be a priority this week against Atlanta.

Eight players missed Tuesday's workouts because of injuries.

Buffalo Bills

Buffalo's Bruce Smith had a contract extension last year, and he wants another one this year. He probably won't get a new deal soon, so he wants assurance that one will come someday.

Smith has grumbled privately about his contract since the beginning of training camp before speaking publicly for the first time this week. The Pro Bowl defensive end is scheduled to earn a $2.2 million base salary.

New Orleans Saints

What has happened to the New Orleans Saints tight ends?

Paul Green broke three ribs early in training camp. Irv Smith was sidelined three weeks with a pulled hamstring. Backups Henry Lusk, Kirk Botkin, Steve Brooks and John Davis are mostly untested. And Wesley Walls is catching the football for the Carolina Panthers.

Oakland Raiders

Oakland Raiders running back Joe Aska is getting some of the attention he missed during the preseason last year when he got lost in the shadow of fellow rookie Napoleon Kaufman.

With Kaufman established at running back along with veterans Derrick Fenner and Harvey Williams, the Raiders are pushing Aska during this year's training camp.

In exhibition games against Dallas and Arizona, Aska has 19 carries for 189 yards and a touchdown.

Kendall injury may be bruise, Switzer says

Associated Press

Cowboys Camp Notes

AUSTIN — Dallas Cowboys coach Barry Switzer said tight end Kendall Watkins' injury to his right knee may just be a deep bruise, but more tests are being done to be sure.

Watkins, the Cowboys' powerful blocking tight end, injured his knee during Dallas' 32-6 preseason loss to Kansas City on Monday night.

SIGNS OF LIFE: Cowboys' coaches are impressed with the play of rookie Randall Godfrey at middle linebacker.

Godfrey, a second-round draft pick this year out of Georgia, took over the middle last week when starter Fred Strickland suffered a calf injury.

Switzer said he was impressed with several plays made by Godfrey in Monday's preseason loss to Kansas City. He repeatedly fought off blocks and tracked down ball carriers to make plays, Switzer said.

Broderick Thomas, Dallas' strong side linebacker who was released by Minnesota after last season, also was impressive against the run and in defending against the pass.

VETERANS TO RETURN: Several veteran players recovering from offseason injuries or surgeries are expected to return to practice on a limited basis.

Among those expected back are center Ray Donaldson (ankle); defensive ends Charles Haley (back) and Tony Tolbert (both knees); cornerback Kevin Smith (Achilles); offensive tackle Erik Williams (toe); safety Brock Marion (groin); and defensive ends Hurvin McCormack (ankle) and Kavika Pittman (groin).

Bowl champions. But it was the Chiefs, in their exhibition opener, who provided the pyrotechnics.

Before wholesale substitutions began, the Chiefs led 13-3 at halftime on a touchdown pass from No. 2 quarterback Rich Gannon to running back Todd McNair, and two field goals.

For the game, Gannon completed 10 of 11 passes for 143 yards. Starting quarterback Steve Bono looked rusty during three series, finishing with four completions in 10 attempts and one interception, by safety Darren Woodson.

Mexico's first American Bowl, in 1994 in Mexico City, drew a league-record 112,376 in Aztec Stadium. Played in a city ringed by the majestic eastern Sierra Madre, Monday night's American Bowl was the 27th in an international exhibition series that began in London in 1986.

Monterrey, celebrating its 400th anniversary this year, preened before TV audiences across both countries. With a metropolitan population of 3 million, Monterrey is a leading exporter of steel, glass and cement and a poster city for the North American Free Trade Agreement.

That makes Monterrey fertile ground for NFL promotion in a country where football is known as soccer.

Boosters say their city could sustain a pro team, and fans made their case Monday night. They clapped on cue to "Start Me Up" and "We Will Rock You." They even roared for "The Star-Spangled Banner," sung by two Dallas and Kansas City cheerleaders.

"I think that has really made our offensive line people work hard this summer because they know they have a chance to earn a starting position" Parchman said. We don't have a Toby McCarthy (a center, headed for Texas A&M), but we have about 10 guys who are in the 6-foot, 220-pound range. Come Monday we are going to find out who our contact players are.

"If our offensive line comes along, like we feel it will, we're going to have a chance at being a good football team."

Parchman has maintained all along that the team is mostly set after the spring off-season program. However, among his list of "contact players" he says he would like to find another tight end and a defensive linemen. Those positions, too, will be looked at with a close eye come Monday.

Lee does have a couple of new move-ins. Linebacker Kyle Anderson started as a linebacker at Tomball last year and Jose Primera played in the offensive line at Sherman in 1995. Primera did attend eighth grade at Abell Junior High, and is now back.

Lee will hold two practices in pads next Monday at 9 a.m. and 2 p.m. School starts Tuesday. Parchman said that the team's first intra-squad scrimmage is set for 9 a.m. Saturday, Aug. 17.

The Rebels are also allowed to conduct two scrimmages with other schools since they didn't participate in spring training. Parchman has set up a scrimmage with El Paso Riverside on Saturday, Aug. 24, in Pecos at 7 p.m. The second scrimmage, on Friday, Aug. 30 in Fort Stockton, is very interesting since it comes against El Paso Socorro, a team that Lee narrowly defeated, 28-26, in the area playoff game at Memorial Stadium last year.

San Angelo Central, under new head coach Gary Gaines, also begins workouts today. All other District 4-5A teams held spring training and they must wait until next Wednesday to begin work in shorts.

Gaines, who has also coached at Abilene High and Odessa Permian, where he won a state football championship, has a tough job ahead of him. He didn't accept the Bobcat position until after school was out, meaning that he missed the entire off-season program with his team and the option of holding spring training. Also, Central had over 50 players graduate. Anytime that happens, the following year is considered a "teaching" year by most coaches, and Gaines doesn't have much time to put into place his new system.

Midland High, with new head coach David Browning at the reins, did hold spring training, so the Bulldogs should be able to enter the season without having to get to know each other.

Excitement is also high at Odessa High where the Bronchos will enter the season under new head coach Randy Quisenberry, a former assistant coach at Midland High and Odessa Permian.

Cool weather is probably more than a month away, but 1996 football officially arrives today with Lee's 7 a.m. practice.

Workman awaiting sentence

Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio — A sentencing date had not been set for Indianapolis Colts tailback Vince Workman, who was convicted Monday of drunken driving.

A Franklin County Municipal Court jury deliberated about eight hours before convicting the former Ohio State football player.

A State Highway Patrol trooper stopped Workman's car on Interstate 270 in May 1995 after radar clocked the Mercedes at 95 mph. A breath test registered a blood-alcohol content of 0.152 percent. Motorists with 0.10 percent are considered impaired under Ohio law.

The test result was not entered as evidence. The prosecution was denied permission to use it based on Municipal Judge Anne Taylor's ruling last month that the Ohio Department of Health had done a poor job in testing a solution used to calibrate breath-testing machines.

Chefs create summer recipes

Move over hot dogs and hamburgers. Make way for raspberry-strawberry sauce — paired with your favorite grilled foods — and key lime pie.

This summer's hottest grilling menu includes recipes by Jeff Blank, chef-owner of Hudson's On The Bend in Austin, and Mary Bergin, executive pastry chef of Spago in Las Vegas.

Blank has created Raspberry-Strawberry Sauce, which can be used as a sauce for grilled chicken or pork tenderloin. Serve green beans as an accompaniment. Bergin has put a tart twist in classic Key Lime Pie. (The secret: use key limes instead of regular limes.)

RASPBERRY-STRAWBERRY SAUCE

Chef-owner Jeff Blank, Hudson's On the Bend, Austin

1 pint fresh raspberries
1 pint fresh strawberries
¼ cup raspberry vinegar
1 lemon, juiced
½ cup (1 stick) unsalted butter
1 tablespoon minced garlic
1 tablespoon minced shallots
¼ cup granulated sugar
1 teaspoon salt

Place berries, vinegar and lemon juice in a blender container. Cover and blend until pureed. Set aside.

In a large, heavy saucepan, melt butter over medium heat. Add garlic and shallots. Cook until tender, 2 to 3 minutes. Add berry puree, sugar and salt. Simmer for 5 minutes. Strain sauce to remove seeds, if desired. Serve sauce with grilled chicken or pork tenderloin. Sauce can be stored, refrigerated, for up to 7 days. Reheat before using. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

KEY LIME PIE

Executive pastry chef Mary Bergin, Spago, Las Vegas

4 whole eggs
4 egg yolks
1 cup granulated sugar
½ cup key lime juice
11 tablespoons unsalted butter
9-inch pre-baked pastry shell

In a large heatproof bowl, whisk together the whole eggs, egg yolks, sugar and key lime juice. Set bowl over a large pan of simmering water. Whisk until mixture becomes very thick, about 10 to 12 minutes.

Remove bowl from heat and whisk in butter a little at a time. Cover surface of mixture with plastic wrap. Let cool at room temperature for 30 minutes. Pour into pie shell. Refrigerate at least 4 hours or overnight. Makes 8 servings.

WHAT'S COOKING?

She's a little bit home-style, he's a little bit gourmet

By Linda Anderson

Rod and Jane Phares of Midland share a marriage, a life, a family, a home — and kitchen duties. In addition, both have careers that keep them busy: Phares is a consulting geologist and his wife is executive director of the Petroleum Museum in Midland.

While they don't exactly take turns cooking, they both are wonderful cooks and specialize in different recipes and styles.

"The cooking that I do, most of it I learned from my mother," Mrs. Phares said, "because I would help my mom. I would watch her (cook), especially when I knew I was going to leave before long and would have to do my own cooking.

"She wasn't a gourmet cook, so I'm not a gourmet cook. It's just what you eat every day. Now I watch Rod — he's a gourmet cook!" she said.

Her husband laughed. "She cooked for the first 20 years; it's my turn."

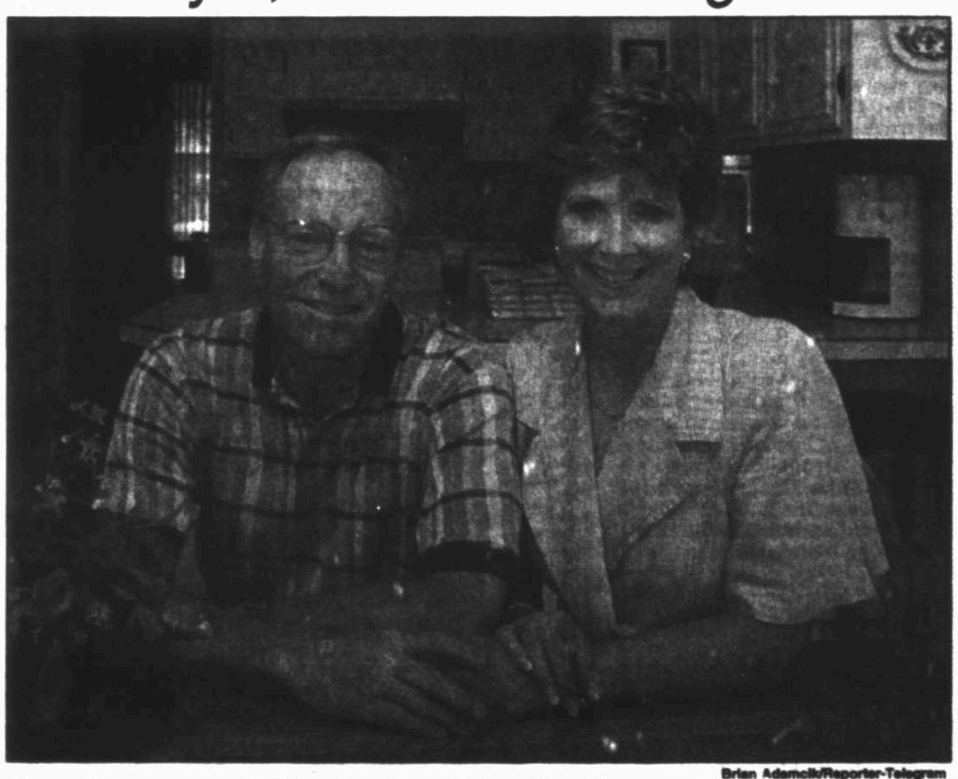
While his wife specializes in what many might call home-style cooking, Phares enjoys preparing more exotic recipes. "I cook all the stuff she doesn't," he said. "I cook all the game — quail, pheasant, duck. When we find things we like, I'm usually the one who tries it out — blackened orange roughy, smoked turkey...

"When we bake or roast or something like that, she cooks that."

This division of cooking chores has been going on throughout their marriage, the couple said. "When we were first married, for a birthday or anniversary or something like that, I would kick her out of the kitchen and make something we wouldn't ordinarily have," Phares said.

Mrs. Phares fondly remembered one Valentine's Day when her husband not only prepared a fabulous meal, including a flaming dessert, but he also "cleaned up afterward!" she laughed, adding that the cleaning-up part made the most impression on her.

Now, she said, he still usually cleans up if he cooks.



Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Since both have careers that keep them busy, Rod and Jane Phares say they share kitchen duties at home. Mrs. Phares' specialties are more home-style while her husband's culinary skills lean more towarda gourmet cooking style.

Potato Snaps rate neutral in taste test

By Linda Anderson

Anderson

Several months ago we got a box from Mother's cookie and snack company — you know, the people who make those pink and white frosted and candy sprinkled animal crackers you know and love — and inside the package were four boxes of the company's new Potato Snaps. These snacks are like a cross between potato chips and crackers, but a little different from both. And they come in four flavors: Original, Sour Cream and Onion, Bar-B-Que and, my personal favorite flavor, Salt and Vinegar.

Here at the office we did manage to empty all four boxes and form opinions on all four, but ran into a little problem when it came time to do the taste test: One of the women from the company called to ask if we were going to be able to actually do a taste-test on this new product, and I had to tell her that I'd love to do one, but I couldn't find a local store where Potato Snaps were sold.

Well, guess what! I recently found Potato Snaps in my favorite local supermarket, so let the taste-test begin!

A 5.64-ounce box of Potato Snaps costs $2.29. That's expensive for potato chips, but about what other boxes of crackers cost.

Label advertising claims these "Oven Baked," "Not Fried" snacks have "50 percent Less Fat Than Potato Chips."

The back of the box advertising bows to Shakespeare: "To Snack or Not To Snack is no longer the Question! Potato Snaps are the delicious and healthy alternative for those who love potato chips!"

Nutrition information shows that one serving (1 ounce or 22 snaps) contains 120 calories with 30 of them from fat. And that's about it a far as nutrition goes, so I don't really know how "healthy" Potato Snaps are. They don't really have any nutrition — no vitamins listed and only 2 percent of the iron suggested by the Recommended Daily Allowance — they just don't seem to have much of anything. Maybe it's more a lack of harm than a boost to health, you think?

The actual taste test was several months ago, but let me see if I can remember how it went: Potato Snaps don't really taste like potato chips, so they won't soothe your craving there. They don't really taste like crackers either, but closer to that than to chips. They don't have a greasy feel or taste, which is good, but they don't necessarily satisfy either.

Most tasters liked the Sour Cream and Onion flavor and the Salt and Vinegar flavor (if they already liked salt and vinegar-flavored chips), but no one really liked the Original or Bar-B-Que flavors. They weren't offensive, just not favored.

DEAR ABBY

'Too young' remarks anger bride

By Abigail Van Buren

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Ever since my fiance and I became engaged six months ago, something has been bugging me. I'm 19 years old, and the man I love with all my heart is 20.

We plan to be married sometime next spring. Meanwhile, whenever I tell people our marriage plans, instead of offering congratulations, most respond by asking, "How old are you?" Abby, I think this is extremely rude and insensitive. Worse yet, when I say that I'm 19 and my fiance is 20, I usually receive another rude comment such as, "Tsk, tsk ... you are so young!"

Abby, how should I respond to such insensitive remarks? In my opinion our ages should not be an issue, since neither one of us is a minor. — IRRITATED

DEAR IRRITATED: Please don't be too hard on those who ask your age. You obviously look much younger than you are.

When people say, "Tsk, tsk, you are so young!" smile and reply, "Thank you." Then take pleasure in the knowledge that you will probably always look younger than your years, which will be an advantage as you grow older. Trust me.

DEAR ABBY: As a young woman, I was considered very beautiful and had so many suitors that it was difficult to choose. All of my husbands (I had several) were aggressive and successful. Although they pursued me with a vengeance, I never felt that any of them loved the "real" me. I was treated like a trophy to be shown off — but not a person with needs. Had I been happy in any of those superficial relationships, I could have remained in any of the marriages.

Middle age has been such a blessing. I now have the loving relationship that eluded me in my youth. My present husband met me when I turned 40. Although I'm still considered attractive, I'm too old to stop traffic. But he loves me for myself.

I was always a good and loving person, but now, at last, I'm judged by my character and accomplishments — not my face and figure. — HAPPY AT LAST

DEAR HAPPY: You have written a thought-provoking letter. Has it occurred to you that with each of your failed marriages you grew, until in middle age YOU were sufficiently wise to choose a husband who was not seduced by appearances?

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I were recently invited to the wedding of family friends.

The couple was registered at one of the best stores here, so we sent what we considered an appropriate gift. We attended their wedding (which was very beautiful), then went to the reception at a nearby facility where we were greeted with a cash bar! Only the soft drinks were complimentary.

Abby, please tell me, are we out of touch, or is this being done now? — CONFUSED IN CONNECTICUT

DEAR CONFUSED: Obviously, since these people did it, it is "being done." Had you asked me, "Is it proper?" I would have replied, "No."

COOKS: Couple enjoys sharing kitchen duties

(From 1D)

Like many people these days, the Phareses are very conscious of fat content in foods, and are trying to eat healthier. Most of the time they dine on "pasta, Caesar salad, fish and chicken," Phares said.

They also like to prepare recipes they learned during the years when Phares worked for a major oil company and the family was living in Libya, Norway and Egypt.

Here are some of their favorite recipes:

HUMMUS
(Chickpea Dip)

1 can (16 ounces) chick peas (garbanzo beans), rinsed and drained
¼ cup to 1 cup cold water
1 teaspoon salt
3 medium-sized garlic cloves, finely chopped
¼ cup lemon juice
1 cup tahini (sesame paste)
Cayenne pepper to taste
1 tablespoon olive oil

Combine (puree) garbanzo beans, water, salt, garlic and lemon juice. Slowly add tahini. Add cayenne pepper to taste. Arrange on plate with tablespoon of olive oil in middle. Serve with pita bread. Makes 2 cups.

DOOLEY COFFEE CAKE

Blend:
1 cup sugar
¼ cup shortening
1 egg
Add alternately with 1 cup milk:
2 cups flour
1 teaspoon salt
2 teaspoons baking powder
Brown sugar and cinnamon to taste

Pour batter into 9-inch round cake pan. Spread with ¼ cup melted butter and top with brown sugar and cinnamon to taste. Bake for 30 minutes at 350 degrees.

TURKEY DRESSING

2 large loaves white bread, broken
1 pound ground pork sausage, browned
2 cups finely chopped celery
1½ cups finely chopped onions
2 teaspoons powdered sage
1½ teaspoons salt
1 teaspoon pepper
1 stick melted butter
1 egg, slightly beaten
1 tablespoon chopped parsley
1 cup chopped pecans

Mix all ingredients together and stuff turkey. Makes enough for 20 pound bird.

QUAIL DISH WITH GRAVY

6 to 12 quail
1 large onion, cut into quarters
½ green bell pepper, chopped
2 stalks celery, chopped
1 can beef consomme
1 cup white wine
Season to taste with:
Ground pepper
Bay leaf
Thyme
Marjoram

Combine all ingredients in 4-quart crockpot. Add water to cover birds. Cook on low for 6 to 8 hours. Remove quail. Strain broth and put in skillet over high heat. Reduce broth and add corn starch to thicken, and drop of Kitchen Bouquet for color. Served with mashed potatoes.

Chicken-fried steak empire crumbles

By Art Chapman
N.Y. Times News Service

With the closing of the ancient Massey's restaurant, Fort Worth, Texas, has been thrown into a sort of equilibrium dilemma. It is a moral and spiritual crisis. Where is Mecca? What now is the holy temple of chicken-fried steak?

I'm not suggesting that Massey's was really the home of the best chicken-fried steak in town, at least for the past 10 years. Some die-hard, never-say-change purists insist it was, but they are the people who still think the Fort Worth Cats, which folded in the early 1960s, have a chance to win the Double A Texas League.

But Massey's was at least a compass point when it came to chicken-fried steaks. Now there is nothing, and people are in search of their chicken-fried bearings.

Places will emerge eventually; we've tried to do our part by surveying area restaurants, but taste is subjective and it will take time for a place to emerge as the best.

Outsiders probably won't understand this dietary vertigo we're going through here. Texas cuisine, real Texas food, has to operate between two strict goal posts: barbecue on one side, chicken-fried steak on the other. Chicken-fried steak might be the more important of the two. Other states have barbecue, some of it pretty good, but once you cross the Texas boundaries, it becomes more and more difficult to find a decent chicken-fried steak.

Oklahoma has some; New Mexico, too. I've never had one in Louisiana, and I try not to eat in Arkansas.

Texas is pretty much the ancestral home of the chicken-fried steak, and the recipe hasn't changed much since the cow camp cooks dragged the tougher cuts of meat through a little flour and dropped them in to some sizzling bacon grease.

We don't use bacon grease much now; it's too fat-laden. Still, cooking it at home is just about the same as it always has been. Somewhere along the way, people got the idea that chicken-fried steak is an unhealthful dish. It's not necessarily.

You can't eat a piece of meat the size of a saddle blanket, but 3 or 4 ounces of tenderized round steak makes a decent portion. If you have a nonstick skillet, you can cook the steak with only a tablespoon or two of oil.

The lean meat and the low oil make for a reasonable meal.

Much of the taste, for me at least, comes in the gravy, anyway. For a long time, even I thought you couldn't make a decent gravy without grease. I have learned differently.

I'll offer a recipe, but to tell you the truth, the best way I've found is to go to the grocery store and buy a packet of Pioneer No-Fat Country Gravy Mix. The packet makes 2 cups of creamy gravy that has no fat, no cholesterol.

When it comes to the meat, you can buy round steak and pound it yourself, or you can buy the cube steaks that have already been tenderized.

The only trick to cooking chicken-fried steak on your own is controlling the heat. If the pan is too hot, the batter will burn before the steak is cooked. Chicken-fried steak is not a dish to be eaten rare.

If the heat is too low, the batter will never crisp and you'll end up with more of a smothered steak than a chicken-fried one.

There is no magic formula. It all depends on your frying pan, your stove, your steaks and your likes. Practice is the only answer. Here is a recipe provided by the Texas Beef Industry Council. It's not perfect, but it's a place to start.

LOW-CAL CHICKEN-FRIED STEAK AND CREAM GRAVY

Serves 2
2 cups skim milk
2 tablespoons egg substitute
2 (4-ounce) tenderized round steaks or cube steaks
2 tablespoons flour
1 teaspoon vegetable oil
Salt and pepper to taste
Cream gravy (recipe follows)

Combine skim milk and egg substitute in a shallow bowl. Add meat and marinate for about 30 minutes. Combine flour, salt and pepper in a plastic bag, close top and shake to coat with flour. Heat oil in skillet with nonstick surface. Place steak in skillet over medium-high heat. Brown on one side, turn and brown other side. Remove from skillet and keep warm while making gravy.

CREAM GRAVY

Combine 1 tablespoon flour and 1 cup skim milk in a jar with a lid; shake until flour is blended. Pour into the skillet in which meat was cooked. Stir to loosen bits of flour stuck to the pan. Cook over low heat until gravy is thickened. Season to taste with salt and pepper.

U.S. approves urine test to detect HIV

N.Y. Times News Service

Federal health officials Tuesday approved the first urine test to detect HIV, the AIDS virus, but said it was not as accurate as the standard blood test.

The urine test was approved as a supplemental diagnostic test, but is not meant to substitute for the standard blood test to screen donors at blood banks, officials of the Food and Drug Administration said.

The reason is that studies showed that the number of times the urine test failed to detect evidence of HIV in an individual known to be infected was higher than for the standard blood test. Also, the urine test indicated that some people were HIV-infected when it was known that they were not.

Those who test positive for HIV with the urine test are advised to get a second urine test, and if that is also positive, they then need a blood test for confirmation. The FDA has advised doctors who use the test to counsel those who use the urine test and explain that a negative test is not a guarantee of being free of infection.

Dr. Curtis Scribner, an official of the Federal Food and Drug Administration, said that with further improvement the urine test "could develop into" a first-line test for HIV.

A urine test "could become a significant weapon in the battle to slow the AIDS epidemic because it makes testing safer, easier and more accessible" compared with the standard blood test, Darrel Cummings, deputy executive director of the Los Angeles Gay and Lesbian Community Services Center, said in a statement released by Calypte Biomedical Corp. of Berkeley, Calif.

Calypte developed the test, which detects antibodies to HIV present in simple plastic-cup specimens of urine. Calypte has licensed Seradun Inc. of Indianapolis to market the test under the name Sentinel.

The urine test does not require specially trained health-care workers to administer it or needles that could pose hazards to those who withdraw blood from an individual's vein.

The FDA limited its approval for the urine test to health professionals so that individuals would have to give urine samples to doctors in hospitals, offices and clinics. The test may also be used in examinations to obtain insurance.

Dr. Luc Montagnier, a co-discoverer of the AIDS virus and a scientific adviser to Calypte, said the relative simplicity of the urine test "holds particular important promise for developing countries" where trained health professionals are in short supply.

Calypte's stock rose $2 Tuesday to close at $9.625 on the NASDAQ. The company went public in late July.

Approval of the urine test was based on comparing it with the blood test in several studies involving more than 800 individuals known to have AIDS, to be HIV-infected, or to be at high risk for

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Air Force has punished 16 officers in connection with the crash that killed Commerce Secretary Ron Brown, including reprimands to a general and a colonel for "dereliction of duty," officials announced Tuesday.

The April 3 crash of the Air Force CT-43 in Croatia killed Brown and 34 others.

Brig. Gen. William E. Stevens, commander of the 86th Airlift Wing at Ramstein Air Base in Germany, and his operations commander, Col. John E. Mazurowski, were given letters of reprimand under Article 15 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice. It is the most serious punishment possible in the military short of a court-martial.

The men had been stripped of their commands in June. The actions are considered ruinous to their careers.

However, criminal charges will not be brought, and the reprimands close their cases, Air Force officials said

A two-star general also received a letter of reprimand. Maj. Gen. Jeffrey Cliver, former director of operations for U.S. Air Forces in Europe, was faulted for "failing to exercise effective oversight" over his organization.

Such a letter also is considered a significant form of punishment to so senior an officer.

In June, the Air Force said an investigation into the crash found Air Force commanders in Europe had violated regulations in allowing Brown's plane to land at Dubrovnik's Cilipi Airport. Also, although Air Force headquarters had issued an order against landing at a foreign airport without first conducting a safety review, that order was ignored, the report found.

As the report was announced, a grim-faced Air Force chief of staff, Gen. Ronald R. Fogleman, said, "How can we have an Air Force instruction in the field that was not being complied with at the mission command level?"

A letter of reprimand also was given to Col. Roger W. Hansen, the former vice commander of the 86th Airlift Wing, faulted for "failing to take appropriate measures" to ensure the wing complied with directives. Hansen already was stripped of his assignment in June.

Stevens was punished "for dereliction of duty for negligently failing to ensure" that government directives had been followed in regarding reviews of airport safety under his command.

Mazurowski was penalized for "dereliction of duty for willfully failing to ensure" that the same directives had been followed.

Letters of admonishment went to four colonels and two lieutenant colonels. Letters of counseling went to two lieutenant colonels and two majors, while two lieutenant colonels received verbal counseling, the Air Force said. None of those individuals were identified.

Gen. Michael Ryan, commander of U.S. Air Forces in Europe, took the decisions, which were announced at the Pentagon.

"The actions taken today reflect the Air Force's commitment to ensure accountability for, and to learn from, the tragic events of April 3," the Air Force statement said.

The Article 15 reprimands meted out by the Air Force are the U.S. military's highest form of nonjudicial punishment, one step below a court-martial.

The two officers who received Article 15 reprimands could have rejected their punishments and asked to go to court-martial.

The Air Force said in its statement that since letters of admonishment and counseling are "lesser sanctions ... designed to be corrective in nature," they would not identify those officers involved.
