37 rescued from listing freighter

POMONA, N.J. (AP) — A Soviet freighter carrying flour to Cuba rolled onto its side in rough seas 200 miles off New Jersey on Saturday, and Coast Guard helicopters plucked all 37 people off the ship in a dramatic rescue, officials said.

The mission 210 miles out in the Atlantic Ocean was "wet and dangerous," said Coast Guard Lt. Keith Comer, who directed the rescue in 45-mph winds as 25-foot waves crashed over the ship.

The ship was listing "dramatically" by the end of the rescue, which Comer said was conducted "just in the nick of time."

Only one of those aboard the 482-foot Komsomolets Kirgizii was injured, suffering a cut finger, officials said.

A Coast Guard cutter and at least one Soviet vessel were en route to the freighter Saturday evening, said Coast Guard Lt. David Hill in New York.

"We don't know if it sank," he said, adding that if its cargo got wet, the ship likely went down in waters about 12,000 feet deep.

When the aircraft arrived at the ship about 11:20 a.m., the freighter was listing about 30 degress and being pummeled by waves, he said.

"The entire port side was awash," Comer said. "We immediately dropped a basket to them. We had a little bit of trouble in the beginning."

The first two people rescued were a woman and child, he said.

In the next half-hour, 13 more people boarded the first helicopter, which started back when a second craft arrived. The next craft picked up 16 and a third picked up the remaining six, including the skipper.

"The pilot of the third helicopter said the ship was very low in the water at that point," Comer said.

"We made it just in the nick of time," Comer said. By the time the rescue was completed, the ship was listing dramatically in the water, he said.

The ship's engine apparently had stopped because of an oil problem, said Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Tony Willett.

"I think the engine ceased, the boat turned broadside and waves hit it, which caused the flour to shift."

The three Coast Guard helicopters that rescued the sailors landed shortly after 2:30 p.m. at the FAA Technical Center here. The sailors, carrying life perservers, were led into a hangar nearby.

While awaiting the arrival of U.S. State Department officials and a Soviet vice consul from Washington, D.C., the Soviet crew members "are just sitting and smoking more cigarettes than I think are humanly possibly," said Willett.

Most of the Soviets did not speak English and "could only communicate a very little bit," Comer said.

"They seemed to be scared and when I got on the scene I could understand why."

The helicopters were dispatched from Cape Cod, Mass., after an automatic distress cry was received at the Coast Guard station at nearby Cape May, N.J., from the listing ship.

"We can't say who called who," but communication from ship to shore was established about 8:45 a.m., Coast Guard Petty Officer James Graham said from New York.

The ship apparently began its roll about 8 a.m., Graham said, and was slowly moving toward capsizing.

Midlander Bobby Holt, who sits high up in Vice President George Bush's fundraising apparatus for a 1988 presidential bid, makes a point in his First National Bank Building office.

Independent oilman Bobby Holt serving as 'money man' for Bush

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Midlander Bobby Holt is on a mission, but it's one often ignored by those who analyze the strategic machination known as a presidential campaign.

Every week, Holt jets to Washington, D.C., and meets with other close advisers to Vice-President George Bush. He returns fisted with enthusiasm to raise the $21 million necessary to power the engines of a presidential campaign.

Holt, a long-time independent oilman, former Midland City Council member and mayor pro-tem, is a money man, the vice-chairman of finance for the month-old Bush for President committee.

Second only to Chairman Bob Mosbacher in the committee's hierarchy, Holt talks freely about the push to put Bush, a close friend since the early 1960s, in the White House.

"We think we have a better team than any, and I'm proud of it," Holt said, adding of the impending campaign, "This is the biggie."

Holt said the genesis of his involvement in the committee came nearly two years ago, when he was asked to join a political action committee, or PAC, called the Fund for America's Future.

Bush was the fund's honorary chairman.

Between its formation in May 1985 until December 1986, Holt helped raise $9.3 million for the committee, he said. Of that amount, more than $1.5 million were contributed to Republican congressional and Senate candidates. The PAC raised more money than those of any other potential presidential candidate, an important distinction when PAC money serves as an indication of a candidate's drawing power.

Angelo likely appointee to SSC site panel

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Former Midland Mayor and Republican Party leader Ernest Angelo is a probable appointee to a new governor's advisory council that will help the Texas National Laboratory Commission select one or more "supercollider" sites.

Angelo

Although Angelo said Saturday that the governor's office has only contacted him about the "possibility of serving" on the council, Commission Executive Director Edward Bingler confirmed that Angelo is among 14 council appointees.

The advisory council membership is "open-ended" and the governor may appoint more members as needed, Bingler said.

Angelo, the Texas Republican National Committeeman, said his membership would give West Texas another "opportunity for input" into the selection process for the coveted physics lab.

Odessa oilman Charles Perry is among the nine members serving on the state commission that the new body — dubbed the Superconducting Supercollider High Energy Research Facility Advisory Council — will assist.

Bingler said the advisory council will focus on gathering information for the commission to help it prepare its site proposal for the U.S. Department of Energy.

The state commission has the next four months to select one or more sites to present to DOE by August.

Texas is considered a front runner — along with California and Illinois — in snaring the lab that would employ up to 3,000 top physicists and generate an annual payroll of up to $270 million.

The lab's 52-mile underground tunnel would allow physicists to break up atomic particles and study the essential elements of matter.

The advisory council will perform the commission's "legwork," visiting prospective statewide sites, Bingler said.

Dave Dorchester, a member of the West Texas SSC engineering committee, said the advisory council's chairman, J. Fred Bucy of Dallas, and Bingler will fly over the Garden City site Thursday. The proposed site is about 40 miles southeast of Midland.

After viewing the Garden City site, the two men will tour another prospective site near Amarillo, Dorchester said.

Angelo said he would like the commission to present more than one site to DOE because the unfolding national selection process may reveal advantages in one site over another.

"Texas is so diverse and big. We would have a better chance if we had more than one site," he said.

The commission, which had its first meeting March 9 in Austin, has not decided whether to present one or more sites to DOE.

Angelo, 53, served as Midland mayor from 1972 to 1980. He is president of Montero Operating Inc.

'Old' STDs still cause for concern

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Waves of hysteria created in the wake of the AIDS epidemic have overshadowed concerns about the old slew of sexually transmitted diseases (STDs) which nonetheless affect millions more each year.

Initially, the onslaught of an STD such as chlamydia, gonorrhea or syphilis, may not be as noticeable as a full-blown case of AIDS. Left untreated though, syphilis can kill just as well as AIDS, while chlamydia and gonorrhea can cause chronic infections in women's ovaries and sterility in men and women.

Statistics show the most ubiquitous STD in America is chlamydia, a bacterial infection which affects men and women about evenly.

In 1986, the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta recorded 4.6 million new cases, a figure about 200 times greater than the number of new AIDS cases reported that year.

Dubbed the "silent STD," chlamydia is similar to gonorrhea, said Texas Department of Health Disease Intervention Specialist Tommy Langham.

Although chlamydia has "been around forever," Langham said, not until recently have researchers developed a test for it.

Named for the Greek word "chiamys" (to cloak), chlamydia has long been responsible for causing a eye disease — trachoma — which can lead to blindness, Langham said.

The bacteria grows in the back of the throat, eyes, rectum, urethra and in the cervix of the woman.

Symptoms in the male and female — sometimes present, sometimes not — include discharge from the genitals, abdominal discomfort in the female and pain during urination in the male.

Treatable with common antibiotics such as tetracycline or erythromycin, chlamydia left to itself can eventually cause sterility, Langham said.

Herpes, the "in" plague of the late 1970s and early 1980s, was only responsible for 500,000 new cases in 1986, CDC figures said.

Once thought to be the worst STD to get, herpes victims today relish in the thought they are at least able to live with their disease, albeit for the rest of their lives.

In 1986, herpes affected more females than males, the CDC said.

Although there is no known cure for the painful blisters, Langham said a drug called acyclovir, an antiviral drug, works well to control the outbreaks.

"Everyone who's had a cold sore has had herpes simplex 1," Langham said, though genital herpes is referred to as herpes simplex 2.

The virus resides in the nerves and only when it comes out do the painful blisters break out, Langham said.

Women should be cautious because herpes can infect their insides as well, but may go unnoticed.

When herpes is left untreated, men appear not to be at risk of contracting complicating ailments, though women have an increased potential of cervical cancer, the CDC report said.

"Syphilis was the AIDS before penicillin was invented," Langham said.

FACTS & FIGURES

In typical Texas style, the Lone Star State records one of the largest AIDS populations in America.

Figures released March 2 from the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta show Texas ranks fourth in the nation in reported cases of AIDS, behind the leaders — New York, California and Florida.

Fourteen have died from AIDS in the 17-county region known to the Texas Department of Health as the Permian Basin, TDH official Tommy Langham said.

Another four Permian Basin residents are currently battling the disease.

Langham said not all four are homosexuals.

Of those who have gone to the Ector County Health Department for AIDS testing — including Midlanders — about 50 have tested positive for the AIDS antibody, the biological mechanism formed when the virus gets into the bloodstream, Langham said.

Since June 1981, Texas has reported a total of 2,096 cases of AIDS or 6.5 percent of the entire picture.

During that same time frame, 31,834 cases of AIDS have been reported nationally.

Between March 2, 1986, and March 2, 1987, Texas called in 1,080 new cases, a figure practically double that of the year prior.

Speaking in terms of cities, Houston and Dallas rank fourth and ninth respectively in the nation for having the most cases of AIDS.

Since June 1981, Houston has reported 1,036 cases of AIDS while Dallas had 569 for the same period.

Nationally, the nine cities with the highest populations of AIDS victims are New York City, N.Y.; San Francisco, Calif.; Los Angeles, Calif.; Houston; Miami, Fla.; Washington, D.C.; Newark, N.J.; Chicago, Ill.; and Dallas.

New York City has 31.1 percent of all the AIDS cases in America or 9,891.

Runner's miles dedicated to friends lost to AIDS

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Running 10,000 miles around America's border because you want to educate people about a deadly disease is a lofty ideal and a mighty chore.

Just plain running is difficult for many.

But Brent Nicholson Earle sees it as running 322 miles per every friend he's lost to AIDS.

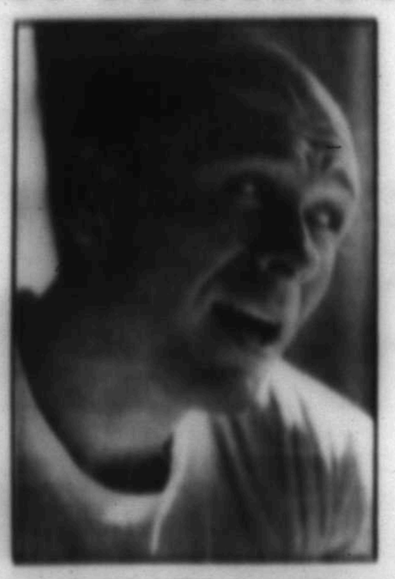
And sadly, he'll tell you that number — upped to 31 just 10 days ago — increases daily, just like national AIDS statistics do.

Earle, 36, began running his daily 29-mile mini-marathons around the country in March 1986.

The 12th month of his run brought him to Midland, a place some like to think is immune to the ugliness of the "real" world.

"It's going to get a lot worse. Other folks say we're over-saturating people with talk of AIDS. But is it just a "gay" disease? No! The time has long past for America to wake-up and educate itself about safe sex.

"We have a vaccine for AIDS...it's called the condom!" Earle said.



"But is (AIDS) just a 'gay' disease? No! The time has long past for America to wake-up and educate itself about safe sex.

"We have a vaccine for AIDS...it's called the condom!"

— Brent Earle, runner

Kent Porter-Reporter-Telegram

A New York City playwright by vocation, Earle began this quest after losing one friend to AIDS and then running a 13-mile race around Central Park. It just sort of hit him, he'll say.

"People thought I was a crack-pot at first. I went to the Gay Men's Health Crisis Center in New York...they told me they couldn't help. But God told me to do it...the message persisted until I couldn't stand still any longer," Earle said.

So he, with help from his 70-year-old mother Marion and a friend, Bill Konkoy, formed AREA — The American Run for the End of Aids which has headquarters in New York City.

They left New York on March 1, 1986, in a 30-foot Winnebago, another "pace car" that follows him on his runs. He also said he received inspiration from a deceased Canadian athlete, Terry Fox, whose bout with cancer took its toll in the middle of his fund-raising run for cancer through Canada in 1984.

Donations come from new friends met on the road and the sale of AREA T-shirts and buttons. So far, $160,000 has been raised, though Earle said he set a reasonable goal of $10 million when his run began.

"Just one penny for each mile I run would only be $100...heck, you could pay the thing off in instalments!"

With AREA, Earle said he hopes to raise funds in support of the National AIDS Network and in support of local AIDS service organizations.

"People bet $6 billion on the Super Bowl...yet the federal government has budgeted $60 million for AIDS education this year," he said.

1985 letter may indicate Bush involvement

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President George Bush suggested in a 1985 letter that a Guatemalan physician interested in supplying medical aid to the Nicaraguan rebels contact White House aide Lt. Col. Oliver L. North, according to a published report.

The letter to Dr. Mario Castejon, dated March 3, 1985, was written at a time when aid to the Contra rebels was forbidden by Congress, according to The Miami Herald, which obtained a copy of the letter during a two-month investigation.

Castejon, a Guatemala City pediatrician who heads the National Conservative Party in Guatemala and is currently campaigning for president, requested U.S. help in setting up an international medical brigade to help the Contras, according to the Herald.

Reagan advised against arms deals

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, admitting his own errors, said Saturday that Secretary of State George Shultz and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger strongly advised him not to pursue the sale of arms to Iran, but he decided the initiative was worth the risk.

"It turned out," Reagan said, "they were right and I was wrong."

Reagan's admission of his own error in the Iran-Contra affair was the strongest he has made to date. In his State of the Union address on Jan. 27, he said, "I took a risk with regard to our action in Iran. It did not work, and for that I assume full responsibility." In his televised speech on March 4, he said, "It was a mistake."

The radio address drew immediate criticism from Rep. Tony Coelho, D-Calif., the House majority whip, who said in a statement, "I'm glad the 'see no evil, hear no evil' twins have finally been embraced by their 'speak no evil president.'"

"I wish Mr. Reagan would spend as much time solving the budget crisis as he does throwing kisses to his Cabinet secretaries," he said.

Coelho was referring to the Tower commission's conclusion that although Shultz and Weinberger opposed the arms sales, they "distanced themselves from the program."

In an interview, Coelho said, "The president ... shouldn't be spending time trying to pacify (Shultz and Weinberger) based on the mistakes that they made. ... They shouldn't try to involve the president in trying to make apologies for them."

Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., in the Democratic response to the radio address, noted that the president indicated he should have listened more closely to advisers.

"Mr. President, today we're asking you to listen more closely to the American people about Central America," Sasser said.

"The American people don't want bungled secret operations in Nicaragua. They don't want their tax dollars disappearing into flawed military ventures. ... They don't want a chaotic policy that could lead ultimately to American boys losing their lives for no reason in the jungles of Central America."

Sasser, a leading Senate opponent of aid to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels, also said the House vote last week to freeze $40 million in aid to the Contras "should send a clear message to the president, the message that the Congress ... wishes to pursue a diplomatic rather than a military solution to the strife in Central America."

Reagan, in his weekly radio speech delivered from the presidential hideaway at Camp David in western Maryland, praised Shultz and Weinberger as "men of strong conviction" who always gave him their "unvarnished views" on national security issues.

Although he did not mention the Feb. 26 report of the Tower commission, the president's account contrasted with the commission's conclusions on the role Shultz and Weinberger played in the Iran-Contra affair.

The commission said it was the two Cabinet secretaries' obligation "to give the president their full support and continued advice with respect to the program or, if they could not in conscience do that, so to inform the president. Instead, they simply distanced themselves from the program. They protected the record as to their own positions on this issue. They were not energetic in attempting to protect the president from the consequences of his personal commitment to freeing the hostages."

Reagan, in his March 4 response to the commission report, said, "Its findings are honest, convincing and highly critical, and I accept them."

Both Shultz and Weinberger, however, publicly took issue with the commission's conclusions on their own role in the affair.

On March 6, responding to the criticism of the report by Weinberger and Shultz, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said: "The president accepts the report. And Mr. Shultz and Mr. Weinberger can speak for themselves."

But last Friday, Fitzwater said Weinberger had argued his case at the White House, prompting the president to make his remarks. Shultz had a regularly scheduled meeting with Reagan on Friday, but it was not known whether the Tower commission report was discussed.

Weinberger, in a statement issued by the Pentagon immediately after the president's radio speech, said, "I thought it was a very fine, typically generous statement by the president and I appreciate it very much."

Shultz also issued a statement, saying, "I appreciate the president's generous remarks."

HOLT

Last August, Bush and his advisers formed an "exploratory" committee to test the waters for the a Bush presidential bid, said Holt, who was named the organization's sole officer — treasurer.

Formation of the committee shows that Bush and his advisors "were in the ball park and were realistic as to whether or not he should or shouldn't (run for president)."

The committee's findings led to formation of the Bush for President committee last month.

Holt said the latter committee expects to raise $21 million for the coming campaign, not including $12 million in matching funds from the federal government.

Bush probably will announce his candidacy in late summer, he said.

Meanwhile, efforts to raise campaign funds are in full swing. As Holt surveys a copy of Bush's hectic daily schedule for the next five months, the campaign advisor also looks over lists of people to be contacted before the candidate's visit to Florida this week.

"If you haven't got the money, you haven't got the race," Holt said of his importance to the effort.

After Ronald Reagan was elected to his second term in 1984, Holt was given a nearly impossible task. As chairman of the Presidential Inaugural Trust, he was responsible for raising $17 million in the short interim between the election and the following January to help fund inauguration activities. And he did it.

Holt considers himself a top fund-raiser because he is a top motivator — and because he likes the challenge. In addition, "I like working for George Bush," he said.

"It gives me a challenge, gives me a goal," he said. "But this is a team effort. There aren't any heroes."

When talk turns to polls, trends, and especially the current Iran-Contra arms scandal, Holt measures his words carefully.

He recounted a recent telephone call from conservative columnist George Will. The campaign advisor told Will he was unfamiliar with two employees in Bush's office supposedly involved in the affair.

"You mean you go up there every day and you don't know them?" he quoted Will as saying.

He said a reporter from the Washington Post also called, and wanted to know why he did not know the employees.

Holt, who equates his job with simple motivation, was confident that the Iran-Contra scandal won't hurt the committee's fund-raising efforts.

"I have called probably 70 people in the last 24 hours, just to motivate them to motivate other people," he said.

"Now, politically, they might look to Mr. Bush," he added.

Of the vice president's reaction to the scandal, "It disturbed him," Holt said. "It would disturb me of something of that nature happened.

"It is definitely a down side, and there will be other down sides, but the up sides are what are important," he said.

Holt said he does not busy himself with thoughts of other Republican contenders.

"I am not concerned about running an offensive game," he said. "I don't ever want to, in the fundraising side of it, get into what the other guy is doing. I think anytime you get into the defensive thing you are going to start losing."

Holt remains confident that Bush will be nominated and elected.

"Yes, I think he is electable, and I think he is the prime candidate," he said. "On the facts, anybody would have to agree that his track record and credentials are unmatched."

AIDS hospital no longer accepts indigents

HOUSTON (AP) — The nation's first AIDS hospital will stop accepting indigent patients because of more than $2 million in losses caring for patients who have been unable to pay their bills, officials say.

Officials of the Institute for Immunological Disorders, which opened in September, denied the decision means the hospital is in serious financial trouble or that it might eventually be forced to close.

Institute spokeswoman Lynn Walters said Friday that treatment for patients already being treated for acquired immune deficiency syndrome would continue and only new patients would be affected by the policy change.

In the future, indigent patients who are residents of Harris County will be referred to the Harris County Hospital District, she said.

"The highest priorities of the institute are to continue to provide care of the highest quality to its current patients as well as to continue its research programs directed toward eventual elimination of this disease,' the institute's board said in a prepared statement Friday.

"The need for services by patients who are without health insurance and have no other financial resources has reached a point that threatens the ability of the institute to serve these two priorities," the statement said.

Dick Durbin, chief administrtaion for the hospital district, said officials of the institute and the district discussed the issue several times before the decision was made.

"All we said was that we are a publicly supported institution, and it is our responsibility to care for the residents of this county," he said.

The AIDS hospital, operated by American Medical International, has provided $2 million in services to impoverished patients since it opened.

STD

Last year, 90,000 cases of syphilis were reported to the CDC, an amazing 70 percent of those being men. In the olden days, Langham said syphilis was the reason that many people went insane.

Left untreated, syphilis kills. It is a three-stage disease.

For the first five weeks after infection, there may or may not be reddish-brown sores on the mouth and/or genitals which usually disappear, Langham said.

Then for as long as ten more weeks, the bacteria is dormant and there are really no clues to let the person know he has syphilis. During a following two- to five-week period, the disease returns in the form of a widespread skin rash.

It may go away, Langham said, though he noted in the first and third stages, a person is considered infectious.

Treatment with antibiotics such as penicillin clears it up and prevents possible paralysis, convulsions, brain damage and death often brought about by syphilis.

Gonorrhea affected 1.8 million or twice as many people in 1986 as syphilis did. It's symptoms are similar to those of chlamydia, Langham said, and it is treated with antibacterial antibiotics as well.

Though easier to detect than other STDs, when gonorrhea is left untreated it can cause arthritis and meningitis in addition to pelvic inflammatory disease and eventual sterility, the CDC said.

In 1986, there were 76 cases of syphilis and 724 cases of gonorrhea reported to the TDH in the 17-county Permian Basin area. Of those number, Midland had 41 cases of syphilis and 285 cases of gonorrhea, while Odessa had 20 cases of syphilis and 312 cases of gonorrhea.

Langham said those two STDs, the only two besides AIDS that are reported to local and state health departments, have dropped in frequency since 1985.

This, as well as an overall drop in other STDs, can be partially attributed to the more common use of the condom, Langham said.

While these "love bugs" aren't as unalterably deadly as AIDS, Langham said every effort is made to find the past sexual partners of persons stricken and get them into his office for treatment as well.

RUN

Earle said he was tested for evidence of the AIDS antibody (the test which give evidence of infection) a few days ago while running through El Paso.

"I wouldn't be surprised if I tested positive. Seventy to 80 percent of the male population in New York City could test positive."

He said he'd been living life as if he had AIDS anyway, but a doctor friend in El Paso coaxed him into having the test.

"But (if he found he had it) I make every moment of life...I'd deal with it."

Lying in bed at night, Earle said he often talks to God. "I praise Her...I get mad at Him."

He believes in God certainly, he said, but not in a God "who sends diseases down to Earth." Earlier in the run, Earle had a chance to meet with Californian Ryan Thomas, 5, whose childhood case of AIDS and subsequent controversy in going to school with other children has made most national headlines.

"God's going to do that?"

Earle said while AIDS is transmitted sexually, he doesn't believe it is a "sexual" disease.

Instead, he said AIDS is just a sign of the times or a "reflection of where our consciousness is collectively."

"Look at our planet. We have been drastically suppressing our immune system — through nuclear waste, pollution...it makes sense the disease would have started in suppressed countries like Africa or Haiti or in the population of homosexual men," Earle said.

But Earle said the AIDS epidemic, now claiming about 32,000 victims in the U.S., has brought him to realize more about different aspects of life as well.

And before his run ends in New York City next Halloween, he hopes to teach people to practice safe sex and inform them of AIDS' unfortunate bottom line.

"Hey, we're all living under the gun," Earle said.

PANEL

West Texas Chamber of Commerce member cities Big Spring, Midland and San Angelo have each contributed $50,000 to fund a lobbying effort to bring the project to Garden City. The Odessa Industrial Development Corporation also matched the $50,000 lobbying pledge last week.

Along with Chairman Bury, other Dallas-area members serving on the advisory council include J.S. "Jerry" Barrington of Texas Utilities, Robert Strauss of Akin, Gump, Strauss, Hauer & Feld and John Dixon of E-Systems.

The three Austin-area council members are W.L. "Bill" Fisher of the state Bureau of Economic Geology, Frank McBee of Trevor Inc. and Steven Weinberg of the University of Texas at Austin.

Houston-area members are F. Russell Hunson of the Texas Accelerator Center, Robert Mosbacher of Mosbacher Energy Co. and W. Arthur "Skip" Porter of the Houston Area Research Council.

The remaining members are Peter McIntyre of Texas A&M University at College Station, John Roach of the Tandy Corporation in Fort Worth and Burtell Zachry of H.B. Zachry in San Antonio.

RESCUE

"That's fairly rough conditions out there," said Coast Guard Lt. Cmdr. Marc Wolfson. "The winter has been very rough in the Atlantic."

Graham said the freighter, carrying 10,292 tons of flour, was traveling from Nova Scotia to Cuba.

Efforts to right and recover the ship, if it stays afloat, will be delayed until the weather is calmer, he said. At 1:30 p.m., Coast Guard observers saw water breaking over the pilot house, the tallest point on the vessel, and said the vessel appeared about to capsize.

There was no oil leak sighted, Graham said.

The evening duty officer at the Merchant Marine Ministry in Moscow, who declined to give his name, said he was not authorized to comment on the incident.

Wreck saves man's life

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — A man choking to death was saved when the ambulance he was in collided with a car, the Aftonbladet newspaper reported Saturday.

It happened on Friday the 13th.

The 30 year-old Swede, whose name was withheld, was lunching in a restaurant in downtown Norrkoping, 80 miles southwest of this capital, when a piece of steak stuck in his throat.

"When we arrived he was lying on the restaurant floor, his face blue," the paper quoted ambulance driver Lennart Jelke as saying.

Jelke said the man was dying as the ambulance rushed toward the nearest hospital. A few hundred yards from the hospital, the ambulance collided with another car.

It was not a serious collision and no one was hurt. But the impact dislodged the chunk of beef and the man resumed breathing, the paper said.

Personal defeat described

Ashley Montagu, American writer-anthropologist, noted: "The deepest personal defeat suffered by human beings is constituted by the difference between what one was capable of becoming, and what one has in fact become."

Galveston to get naval homeport

GALVESTON (AP) — County officials have signed an agreement with the U.S. Navy to provide $8 million to help finance construction of a naval homeport on the east end of Galveston Island.

The port, when completed, is expected to provide $25 million annually for Galveston County.

Galveston County Judge Ray Holbrook's signature Friday brought one step closer the construction of a Navy base which will be home to two frigates, two minesweepers and a patrol vessel.

Keith E. Eastin, principal deputy assistant secretary of the Navy, who signed the agreement with Holbrook for the government, said he expects Congress to approve about $22 million in the 1988 federal budget to build the Galveston homeport and another $5 million in the 1989 budget.

Eastin said James Webb, an assistant secretary of defense in line to succeed retiring Secretary of the Navy John Lehman, has indicated he will continue Lehman's plans to disperse the U.S. fleet in various ports.

Galveston officials began vying for the port in July 1985, hoping to get a Navy battleship group to the island. The Navy chose Corpus Christi as the battleship homeport but elected to station the frigates and minesweepers in Galveston.

"This is yet one more step toward getting our ships here in Galveston," Eastin said of the signing Friday. "It's a complicated process of budget constraints, environmental constraints and scheduling problems, and I think right now Galveston is leading the way in showing us how the process can be done and done successfully."

Galveston Mayor Jan Coggeshall signed a separate agreement promising that the city will get private lenders to pledge $2.5 million in home mortgage loans for Navy personnel at the lowest possible interest rates.

The county used $8 million in road bonds approved by voters in November 1985 to secure $8 million cash from the Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation. The money will be turned over to the Navy in August.

The money is earmarked for road and drainage improvements, shoreline protection, erosion control and dredging at the 100-acre homeport site adjacent to the U.S. Coast Guard's Fort Point, located at the entrance of the Galveston Ship Channel.

The Navy expects to have contracts for construction of the port out in the fall, Eastin said.

A&M chartered plane lands amid Falklands spat

STATE

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — A plane chartered by a Texas A&M University research program was the first non-British civilian aircraft to visit the Falkland Islands since the 1982 war — and it landed right in the middle of a minor diplomatic spat.

A Boeing 747 chartered by the Ocean Drilling Program landed at the Royal Air Force's Mount Pleasant base in the Falklands Thursday, carrying about 100 crewmen, technicians and scientists.

The group flew to the Falklands to board a ship that will drill core samples from the Atlantic ocean floor. The research should tell scientists about environmental conditions and ocean circulation in the south Atlantic during the last 67 million years.

The diplomatic flare-up stemmed from Argentina's protests over the ODP research ship. Though its invasion force was defeated by the British in 1982, Argentina still claims the Falkland Islands.

Great Britain moved in February to pre-empt an Argentine protest of the ODP ship's use of the Falklands base by announcing that the U.S. military was not involved in the research.

The British stressed that the research vessel will be engaged in purely scientific research.

Yet despite reassurances, Argentine officials raised questions about the port call, say officials at A&M and the U.S. National Science Foundation.

Lee Stevens, an NSF official involved in the Ocean Drilling program, said the Argentinians may fear that the ship is looking for oil in the south Atlantic.

"The issue of mineral deposits in Antarctica and the surrounding waters has been an important subject of discussion within the Antarctic Treaty," Stevens told the Bryan-College Station Eagle.

But Stevens said he believes the Argentinians have raised the issue in part to dramatize their claims to the islands.

A&M officials said core samples will only be taken in international waters. Philip Rabinowitz, Ocean Drilling Program director, said all information from the cruise will be freely available to all interested persons.

"They just want to insure that we're abiding by the law of the sea," Rabinowitz said. "I don't think we're violating any rules or regulations, and they'll realize we're not."

The Argentine embassy issued a statement saying that "It is notable that a scientific activity that takes place within the jurisdictional waters covered by the Antarctic Treaty made use of an airport constructed for military purposes in an archipelago that is not only close to the Argentine mainland, but over which Argentina claims sovereignty.

The Antarctic Treaty, which the U.S. signed in 1959, guarantees that Antarctica and its surrounding waters will be used only for peaceful purposes.

State being trapped by its 'fiscal dilemma'

Levine

AUSTIN — Like an old war movie where the attacking commander orders his troops to seal off the enemy's left and right flanks before assaulting the center, mounting circumstances are rapidly cutting off the state's routes of escape from its fiscal dilemma.

What started out as simple, $5.8-billion mismatch between state needs and available revenue has become a ticking time bomb desparately seeking a leader who knows how to defuse it. Each passing day brings the state:

— Closer to $24 million-a-month fines against an unconstitutional prison system;

— Closer to a House-Senate-governor impasse over spending and taxes;

— Closer to the June 1 end of the regular legislative session; and — Closer to the time when Treasurer Ann Richards must ask Wall Street investors for $1 billion in short-term loans to meet September's pay roll.

When lawmakers went home last summer and left the Treasury with a $1 billion deficit — that's a real deficit, not a shortfall based on anybody's wish list — Comptroller Bob Bullock warned that Wall Street wouldn't like it. New York formalized that concern Tuesday — one week before the scheduled issuance of $150 million in bonds for water treatment projects — as Moody's Investors Service Inc., dropped Texas' bond ratings from Aaa to Aa.

While the pincers are closing in on all of state government, attention at this point has to focus on Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby. The most senior of the state's leaders, Hobby has developed a reputation for riding to the rescue. The House-passed tax bills are now in his court, and an un-Hobby-like blunder at this point could jeopardize his possible 1990 run for the Governors Mansion.

Hobby and the Senate have several options for dealing with the $2.9 billion sales and gasoline-tax hikes the House sent them, and none of them are overwhelmingly palatable. The easiest — and least likely — procedure would be to simply approve them, but that would leave the Treasury about $3 billion short of meeting the needs Hobby has identified.

The Senate could add to the size of the increases, but Texas' 5.25-percent sales tax rate and 15-cent-a-gallon gasoline tax are already among the stiffest in the nation. Jacking the rates up would make the taxes even more regressive, adding to the relative burden of the poor and middle class.

Badly needed tax reform — rewriting the corporate franchise tax, broadening the sales tax base to include untaxed sectors of the state's economy — best fits Hobby's agenda but is fraught with numerous political stumbling blocks. First, it would need a majority House approval to OK expanding the bills beyond their original, simple intention. Then it must make it through a House-Senate conference committee. Then the House would have to approve the final product.

That brings Gov. Bill Clements into the action. Clements has already vowed to veto any tax bills that bring in more than $2.9 billion. That veto threat applies to any of the options that come close to meeting Hobby's revenue-raising goals.

Tarnished though he is by the SMU payola scandal, Clements should still be able to hold the allegiance of the 56 House Republicans — six more than the 50 votes necessary to block a veto override. Unless.

Unless more Ponygate revelations further erode the governor's credibility. Unless Wall Street applies more pressure either by another reduction in Texas' bond rating or through subtle warnings to the business and financial community that commands Clements' ear. Unless citizens revolt over the possible elimination of services they have rightly come to expect the state to provide.

Or unless House Speaker Gib Lewis can swing another miracle. Whether he's used threats or promises or logical arguments, Lewis has developed a knack for delivering the votes in the House when it counts. Nine of his committee chairmen and 10 of his vice chairmen are Republicans.

The speaker demands — and usually receives — loyalty from these lieutenants. But never in his five-year reign has Lewis had to ask them to publicly embarrass their leader. We don't know whether he can pull it off in a more-and-more bi-partisan state.

Listen closely, sounds like artillery fire in the background.

'Animal' McFadden trial may leave county 'belly-up'

GILMER (AP) — Poor counties like Upshur may end up going "belly-up" because of budget-wrecking trials such as the one pending against Jerry "Animal" McFadden, worried officials said.

One day after a pre-trial hearing concerning the capital murder case against McFadden last week, Upshur County commissioners were asked for more money to continue with the case. Prosecutors say they need over $1 million to do the job properly.

"We simply don't have the type of money they want," Commissioner Gaddis Lindsey said. "That's 25 percent of the county's overall budget. We don't have that kind of money and we don't know where we are going to get it."

Commissioners are scheduled to meet in special session Monday to discuss the dilemma, but Lindsey said he doesn't know what solutions will come out of the meeting.

"We set up our budget each year to pay for our county expenses and we are having a tough time just making ends meet," Lindsey said.

"Our revenue has already declined about 25 percent (from decreased oil and gas revenues), and now we have a $1 million trial bill dumped on us. McFadden isn't in our budget. None of these trials are budgeted. You just don't figure stuff like that in at budget time."

Lindsey said he can only hope Upshur County can get some state financial assistance for the McFadden trial. But with the state budget being tightened and the Governor's Office on Criminal Justice Division already giving Upshur County $40,000 for prosecuting McFadden, the outlook for more aid is dim.

STATE IN BRIEF

Youths try to aid man afire

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Two children used their hands and school books in an attempt to extinguish the burning clothing of a man who later died of his injuries, authorities said.

Clemente Salas, 70, died at Brooke Army Medical Center early Friday. He suffered burns over 65 percent of his body in a fire Thursday afternoon that roared through a two-bedroom house where he lived with 14 other people, officials said.

Bexar County Fire Marshal Carl Mixon said the blaze began near a living-room couch and may have been caused by an electrical space heater.

Brenda Reyna, 12; her sister, Beverly, 7; and her brother, Billy, 9, were returning from school Thursday when Salas ran out of the home with his clothes on fire.

"She (Brenda) burnt her right hand," said Linda Reyna, the children's mother. "Her jacket and books were also burned. Beverly also tried to put out the fire."

Mrs. Reyna, her husband, three daughters, a son, two other sons with their wives and children and another family friend are without a permanent place to live.

Charged murderer cleared

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A jury acquitted a man Friday of charges he murdered his wife after buying a $500,000 life insurance policy the month before she died.

A Nueces County jury returned its verdict in the trial of Jolyn English, a chiropracter in Devine, a town 30 miles southwest of San Antonio. The trial was moved to Corpus Christi's 105th District Court on a change of venue.

English claimed the shooting of his wife, Sharon, the afternoon of Oct. 2, 1986, was an accident. He testified he had picked up the gun to clean it and that it discharged when he tripped and fell toward the bed.

Defense attorney Charles Butts put 30 character witnesses on the stand to say they knew English well and that he could not have killed his wife on purpose.

Bridge permit 'not' granted

EL PASO (AP) — An announcement that the U.S. State Department had issued a permit for a new $6 million eight-lane international bridge was "premature" and no such permit has been granted, officials said Friday.

The announcement was in a press release by U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm, and was confirmed Thursday by El Paso Mayor Jonathan Rogers.

Rogers had said a 15-member delegation of State Department and Mexican federal officials would meet in El Paso Friday "to dot the i's and cross the t's" on the projected bridge construction.

State leaders fear 'abandonment' of federal programs

NATION

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The federal government, unable to afford new social programs, must give states more flexibility to find their own ways of creating jobs and moving people off welfare, Midwestern political and business leaders said Saturday.

"The concept of Washington as a bottomless money-well has disappeared," Sen. Alan Dixon, D-Ill., said Saturday at the 1987 Midwest Economic Summit.

The two-day conference, which attracted 100 legislators and businessmen from 10 states, focused on ways to improve the Midwest's sagging economy.

Much of the discussion centered on the region's above-average tax burden, which was called a hindrance to economic growth. Robert Genetski, chief economist at the Harris Trust & Savings Bank of Chicago, warned that the Midwest's economy will continue to lag unless taxes are cut.

"If we stand still, then I'm afraid we're going to go through another decade where the Midwest's economic performance falls below the rest of the country," he said.

But many of the participants said the federal government could spur growth in the region by continuing to relinquish its control to local and state governments.

Missouri Gov. John Ashcroft said his state is trying to initiate reforms in welfare programs but has had trouble getting federal approval.

"There is a process under way of an abandonment of programs on the federal level for states to pick up," he said. "We really want to try and get things moving. But sometimes the inflexibility of the federal bureaucracy is unyielding."

Gov. Tommy G. Thompson of Wisconsin, who also is trying to revamp the state's welfare system, echoed this sentiment.

"The problem is there's a drastic difference in what's being said in Washington and what's being done there," he said. "Congress has become so big and so paralyzed, it causes a great deal of consternation to us."

ABM battle may have major impact on 'Star Wars' funding

WASHINGTON (AP) — The fight over President Reagan's attempt to reinterpret the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty is likely to have a major impact on how much money Congress approves for "Star Wars," according to lawmakers on both sides of the issue.

Several congressmen also said the opposition of Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga. to the reinterpretation of the ABM pact is a new and major hurdle for Reagan to clear to win support for the missile defense program.

Nunn, chairman of the Armed Services Committee and one of Capitol Hill's most influential legislators on national security issues, said last week the administration cannot unilaterally change the rules on the ABM treaty.

The pact limits the type of missile defenses each superpower can build, test and deploy, and the existing interpretation would ban tests of the Strategic Defense Initiative, the formal name of Reagan's four-year-old Star Wars program.

But Reagan has asserted that his administration could switch to a "broad" view of the ABM pact, which would allow SDI testing to go ahead. Nunn and other opponents disagree, arguing that the Senate ratified the treaty under the more restrictive reading.

Meanwhile, the House and Senate, both controlled by Democrats, are preparing to make decisions on a Star Wars budget for the fiscal year starting Oct. 1. Reagan wants $5.6 billion for Star Wars, which would be a 77 percent increase over the current $3.6 billion spending level. The president also is seeking $500 million more for the current year to pursue his dream of building a high-tech shield against nuclear attack.

"This SDI spending level is hostage to the dispute over the ABM treaty," said Sen. John Warner, R-Va., ranking Republican on the Armed Services Committee and a key administration supporter.

Rep. Jim Courter, R-N.J., one of Congress' strongest SDI backers, agreed. "This whole fight over the ABM treaty is going to have to be resolved before we can begin dealing with the key issues on SDI."

Courter disputed Nunn's view of the ABM treaty, but added, "I'd sure rather have him on my side than on the other side. Clearly, Sen. Nunn has a lot of clout and his views will be closely listened to."

Sen. William Cohen, R-Maine, joined with Nunn last year in a bipartisan effort to reduce the administration's requested funding for SDI.

"I think it would be a mistake now to move to some type of speeded-up deployment, which is why the administration is talking about changing the view of the ABM treaty," Cohen said.

"Clearly, what motivated the administration in proposing this change is that they were running up against the ABM treaty with the SDI program and so they decided to go back and take another look at the treaty and see if there wasn't a way to get around it. And they came up with a way," Cohen said.

He said he still agrees with Nunn and will again seek a compromise on SDI. "There are people on the left who want to cripple it and people on the right who want to push it too fast, which will eventually cripple it," Cohen said. "I agree with Sam that we need to maintain the centrist coalition that wants to increase the program, but not too fast."

Sen. Albert Gore Jr., D-Tenn., also agrees with Nunn, explaining, "when this was first proposed in October 1985, I felt it was absolutely preposterous to change the way the treaty was viewed. It is intellectually dishonest to come up with a new view in such a tortured way. And I think it comes from people in the administration who are so opposed to arms control in any form that they want to scrap the last remaining effective U.S.-Soviet treaty before Reagan leaves office."

Bill Took His First Step Today

In Admitting That He Is An Alcoholic

Bill is 36 years old, married, with one daughter. He is civically active, a successful businessman and an alcoholic. Thanks to his wife he got help. It's a real struggle to admit that a family member has a drinking problem. Everyone suffers. The family and the person suffering with the problem feel guilty and embarrassed by the situation and often deny that a problem exists. But alcoholism is an illness and it won't get better on its own.

At Charter Plains Hospital, we help those people suffering from an alcohol or drug dependency. Our intensive inpatient treatment begins with the safe withdrawal from toxic substances in a medically supervised environment. We include the whole family in the healing process. This helps the patient and the family to confront and understand the addictive process. Through this therapeutic approach, everyone learns to deal openly and honestly with the situation while developing skills to maintain recovery. An individualized After-care Program is established which usually incorporates active participation in twelve step recovery programs like Alcoholics Anonymous (AA), Narcotics Anonymous (NA), Alanon and Alateen.

Take the first step. It can mean the beginning of a new life.

Buzzards make return in middle of feud

HINCKLEY, Ohio (AP) — The buzzards make their annual return to Hinckley Sunday, but this year they will be flying into the middle of a feud over who is authorized to be their official greeter.

In Ohio's answer to the Capistrano swallows, thousands of people gather in Medina County's Hinckley Township each March 15 to welcome a flock of turkey vultures to their roost in a local park.

For 29 years the festivities have been sponsored by the Hinckley Chamber of Commerce. But a rival group, formed in 1984, wants to have a hand in the event.

Bill Kasmarek, president of the newer Hinckley Chamber of Commerce Inc., says his group secured a charter from the Ohio Chamber of Commerce when it was discovered the original chamber had let its charter lapse some years ago.

"We felt over the years the only time they would surface would only be for Buzzard Day," Kasmarek said Friday. "I think a chamber of commerce should be more active in the community."

For this weekend the old chamber has arranged "Buzzard Sunday" festivities at the Hinckley Elementary School, the site of a pancake breakfast and a souvenir sale. A live buzzard will be on display at the school.

HOW THEY VOTED

House action calls for freeze of Contra Aid

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Votes of area members of Congress on key issues during the week ending March 13, 1987:

KEY HOUSE VOTES

HOUSE APPROVES FREEZE ON CONTRA AID

In a largely symbolic gesture, the House March 11 voted 230-196 to impose a moratorium on $40 million in aid to the "contras" until the Reagan administration accounts for funds already allocated to the Nicaraguan rebels.

The House action was aimed at delaying, and possibly killing, the remaining $40 million of a $100 million package of military and non-military aid to the contras approved by Congress last year. But it was seen as little more than a slap at the administration's longstanding campaign to help what President Reagan calls Nicaragua's "freedom fighters."

Many believed it unlikely that the bill will be successful in blocking the release of the money. The bill already faces an uncertain future in the Senate where Republicans are threatening to filibuster, and even if adopted, President Reagan is expected to veto it.

However, Democrats opposing contra aid said the vote lends credence to claims on Capitol Hill that Congress later this year will reject Reagan's $105 million request for contra aid for fiscal 1988.

Supporters of the measure pointed out that the contras are unable to sustain a successful military campaign against the Sandinista government, and that the Reagan administration instead should throw its weight behind attempts to reach a peaceful settlement. They also said that in light of the Iran-contra scandal, the United States has an obligation to track down the money already allocated to the contras before it releases additional funds.

But contra aid supporters argued against the bill, insisting that the United States should maintain support for the rebels to block the spread of communism and Soviet influence in Central America. They also reminded House members that the United States has an obligation to release aid already promised to the contra rebels.

Voting for the contra aid moratorium: Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-San Antonio.

Voting against: Reps. Lamar Smith, R-San Antonio; Larry Combest, R-Lubbock; Charles Stenholm, D-Stamford; Beau Boulter, R-Amarillo.

Homeless cleanup rally stirs action

LOS ANGELES (AP) — City officials have reached a tentative agreement with the American Civil Liberties Union over a recent cleanup campaign launched against makeshift shelters erected by the homeless.

The settlement announced Friday still must be approved by the City Council, said Deputy City Attorney Pamela Victorine.

The ACLU filed suit last month challenging the constitutionality of the cleanup drives and asking a court to prohibit the city from further efforts.

Under the proposed settlement, the city agrees to notify transients at least 24 hours before moving in to clear out cardboard shacks, tents, old furniture and other possessions the homeless collect for their sidewalk shelters.

NATION IN BRIEF

'Kilted' man settles suit

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — A man who claimed he was denied membership in a volunteer fire company because he wore Scottish kilts has settled his lawsuit for $1,600, his lawyer said Friday.

The South Lockport Volunteer Fire Company agreed to pay Rodger Schermer, 56, of Lockport last week, said Bruce Fenwick.

Schermer, however, won't join the fire company, Fenwick said. "He decided that he wasn't going to make that part of the settlement."

His lawsuit, filed in 1985, charged discrimination on the basis of national origin.

Schermer said he had belonged to several other firefighting organizations, and previously had no problems. He said he occasionally wore kilts to fires.

IRS ahead of schedule

WASHINGTON (AP) — All of the 10 Internal Revenue Service centers where tax returns are received are ahead of last year's pace in processing individual returns, the IRS said Friday.

Through March 6, the service centers had processed almost 62 percent of the nearly 98 million returns they had received. At the same time last year, the centers had received almost 40 million and processed 53 percent of them.

Processing is 6.4 percent ahead of last year's level, and most taxpayers who are due refunds are getting them within about five weeks after they file. Already this year the IRS has certified 12.6 million refunds, totaling $9.5 billion, an average of $756.

FDA recalls contraceptive

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Food and Drug Administration said Friday that G.D. Searle of Chicago is voluntarily recalling all of its Gynex oral contraceptive because of possible mispackaging.

The action is being taken, the FDA said, because some of the blister-pack cards may contain out-of-sequence tablets. If oral contraceptives are taken in the wrong order or skipped, the likelihood of pregnancy is increased.

State leaders fear 'abandonment' of federal programs

NATION

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The federal government, unable to afford new social programs, must give states more flexibility to find their own ways of creating jobs and moving people off welfare, Midwestern political and business leaders said Saturday.

"The concept of Washington as a bottomless money-well has disappeared," Sen. Alan Dixon, D-Ill., said Saturday at the 1987 Midwest Economic Summit.

The two-day conference, which attracted 100 legislators and businessmen from 10 states, focused on ways to improve the Midwest's sagging economy.

Much of the discussion centered on the region's above-average tax burden, which was called a hindrance to economic growth. Robert Genetski, chief economist at the Harris Trust & Savings Bank of Chicago, warned that the Midwest's economy will continue to lag unless taxes are cut.

"If we stand still, then I'm afraid we're going to go through another decade where the Midwest's economic performance falls below the rest of the country," he said.

But many of the participants said the federal government could spur growth in the region by continuing to relinquish its control to local and state governments.

Missouri Gov. John Ashcroft said his state is trying to initiate reforms in welfare programs but has had trouble getting federal approval.

"There is a process under way of an abandonment of programs on the federal level for states to pick up," he said. "We really want to try and get things moving. But sometimes the inflexibility of the federal bureaucracy is unyielding."

Gov. Tommy G. Thompson of Wisconsin, who also is trying to revamp the state's welfare system, echoed this sentiment.

"The problem is there's a drastic difference in what's being said in Washington and what's being done there," he said. "Congress has become so big and so paralyzed, it causes a great deal of consternation to us."

ABM battle may have major impact on 'Star Wars' funding

WASHINGTON (AP) — The fight over President Reagan's attempt to reinterpret the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty is likely to have a major impact on how much money Congress approves for "Star Wars," according to lawmakers on both sides of the issue.

Several congressmen also said the opposition of Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga. to the reinterpretation of the ABM pact is a new and major hurdle for Reagan to clear to win support for the missile defense program.

Nunn, chairman of the Armed Services Committee and one of Capitol Hill's most influential legislators on national security issues, said last week the administration cannot unilaterally change the rules on the ABM treaty.

The pact limits the type of missile defenses each superpower can build, test and deploy, and the existing interpretation would ban tests of the Strategic Defense Initiative, the formal name of Reagan's four-year-old Star Wars program.

But Reagan has asserted that his administration could switch to a "broad" view of the ABM pact, which would allow SDI testing to go ahead. Nunn and other opponents disagree, arguing that the Senate ratified the treaty under the more restrictive reading.

Meanwhile, the House and Senate, both controlled by Democrats, are preparing to make decisions on a Star Wars budget for the fiscal year starting Oct. 1. Reagan wants $5.8 billion for Star Wars, which would be a 77 percent increase over the current $3.6 billion spending level. The president also is seeking $500 million more for the current year to pursue his dream of building a high-tech shield against nuclear attack.

"This SDI spending level is hostage to the dispute over the ABM treaty," said Sen. John Warner, R-Va., ranking Republican on the Armed Services Committee and a key administration supporter.

Rep. Jim Courter, R-N.J., one of Congress' strongest SDI backers, agreed. "This whole fight over the ABM treaty is going to have to be resolved before we can begin dealing with the key issues on SDI."

Courter disputed Nunn's view of the ABM treaty, but added, "I'd sure rather have him on my side than on the other side. Clearly, Sen. Nunn has a lot of clout and his views will be closely listened to."

Sen. William Cohen, R-Maine, joined with Nunn last year in a bipartisan effort to reduce the administration's requested funding for SDI.

"I think it would be a mistake now to move to some type of speeded-up deployment, which is why the administration is talking about changing the view of the ABM treaty," Cohen said.

"Clearly, what motivated the administration in proposing this change is that they were running up against the ABM treaty with the SDI program and so they decided to go back and take another look at the treaty and see if there wasn't a way to get around it. And they came up with a way," Cohen said.

He said he still agrees with Nunn and will again seek a compromise on SDI. "There are people on the left who want to cripple it and people on the right who want to push it too fast, which will eventually cripple it," Cohen said. "I agree with Sam that we need to maintain the centrist coalition that wants to increase the program, but not too fast."

1787 Constitution Daybook

Associated Press

Thursday, March 15, 1787
PHILADELPHIA TODAY

In the Pennsylvania Assembly today, a bill was passed to establish a road from the Potomac River in Virginia to the banks of the Ohio River. It was hoped that this would help increase the settlement of the western parts of Pennsylvania.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

After his fourth day on board ship from Connecticut, William Samuel Johnson landed in New York at 3 o'clock. His passage and provisions cost him 40 shillings.

Congress, in session today, received a resolution from New Hampshire appointing two delegates of that state in Congress to the Federal Convention at Philadelphia in May.

The postmaster general sent Congress a resolution suggesting a reduction in postal rates, to be effective Jan. 1, 1788.

Gov. Edmund Randolph of Virginia expressed his apprehensions to the Virginia delegation in Congress that Spain was expected to attack Kentucky.

Today the Providence, R.I., United States Chronicle reprinted George Washington's circular letter to the state executives. This letter, written from Newburgh, N.Y., in June 1783, called for increasing the powers of Congress, payment of the public debt, and uniform organization of the militia. It also urged the states to abandon "local prejudices and policies."

Reprinting the letter now was timely, in the light of the convention called for in Philadelphia to revise the Articles of Confederation. Further, the paper's editor was hoping that the letter might encourage Rhode Island to send delegates to the convention.

DELEGATES TODAY

George Washington wrote James Mercer on attending the convention. He noted that he was desirous "to comply with any commands of my Country... ," but he was not sure that he could, "with consistent conduct, attend the proposed Convention to be holden in Philadelphia in May next." He then gave the same reasons he had offered to others. He had said "adieu to all public employment...(and) written and dispatched circular letters to the several State Societies of the Cincinnati informing them of my intention not to attend the General Meeting which was to take place about the same time (in Philadelphia). ...Under these circumstances, to attend the Convention might be considered disrespectful to a worthy set of men for whose attachment and support on many trying occasions I shall ever feel the highest gratitude and affection."

One of the problems facing the delegates appointed to the Constitutional Convention was that they would need to be away from their livelihoods for some period of time. This concern was reflected in John Blair's letter to Gov. Randolph of Virginia today. Blair and George Wythe noted that the Chancery Court's May term could not be held while they were in Philadelphia, which would cause several cases to be dropped. He hoped the governor would use his influence to have the court postponed until the fall.

Benjamin Franklin today paid John Hall 30 pounds for carpentry work on his rental properties on Market Street in Philadelphia.

LOOKING BACK
Benjamin Franklin's Tenant Houses

Fairly early in the development of Franklin Court, Benjamin Franklin had purchased tenant houses on Market Street. But when he returned from France in 1785, he realized that the land was much more valuable since it fronted the just-completed extension of the public market to Fourth Street. He hired workmen to demolish the old structures in the summer of 1786 and designed new, more substantial houses in their place.

The two new buildings were nearly identical, three stories high, and with an arched passageway built to divide the structures and provide an entrance to the court. Franklin was 80 years old when he started the project; he already had a number of public responsibilities and he was suffering from gout and kidney stones. But he decided to supervise all of the work himself, commenting that "building is an Old Man's amusement."

Franklin fireproofed the houses with brick construction throughout, including brick partition walls on the interior. Normally exposed wood surfaces, such as stairways, walls and ceilings were covered with plaster. Finally, there was a trap door from the attic to the roof, designed so the tenants could douse the shingle roof with water if necessary.

On the whole, the tenants benefited from the safety features of these houses, but Franklin also profited, from the handsome rents he charged. Further, he saved money on his fire insurance. The Mutual Assurance Company reduced the rate for each 100 pounds of insurance by 10 shillings, because of the fire precautions.

Amy Carter will have to come up with cash

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Citizen's Auto Body doesn't accept checks from people whose cars it has towed. Not even from the daughter of a former president.

For that reason, Amy Carter was turned away Wednesday from the lot where her car has been sitting since it was given the Denver boot and towed last month because of unpaid parking tickets.

Boston radio station WROR-FM paid the $335 in tickets and fines Monday, and Miss Carter showed up at municipal court Wednesday to sign a release form for the car.

She left the court, form in hand, after clerk Bob Joyce made her show her driver's license for identification, and proceeded to Citizen's.

Mike Russo, the owner of the lot, wouldn't accept her check.

He said the company has had problems in the past with bouncing checks.

"That's the only reason," he said. "It's not to be cruel to any one person. But it's a policy we have to abide by."

Miss Carter left; her car stayed.

Miss Carter, 19, a sophomore at Brown University, could not be reached for comment. She has an unlisted telephone number and declines interview requests.

The daughter of former President Jimmy Carter was among 20 Brown students placed on school probation Thursday for disrupting a trustees meeting with an anti-apartheid protest.

Her car has remained at Citizen's. The towing and storage bill stood at $166 as of Friday and grows by $8 each day.

Boy Scouts pick permanent site for Jamboree

BOWLING GREEN, Va. (AP) — The Boy Scouts of America has chosen an Army post that was the scene of a dioxin scare two years ago as a permanent site for its Jamboree, which attracts thousands of Scouts every four years.

"We plan to be coming back from now on for years to come," said Frank Hebb, a spokesman for Boy Scouts of America in Irving, Texas, announcing the selection of Fort A.P. Hill.

The next weeklong Jamboree will be held in August 1989 and is expected to attract more than 32,000 Scouts and adult leaders. Tourism officials estimate that an additional 100,000 people visit the Jamboree site.

Now that the site, about 50 miles south of Washington, D.C., is permanent, Boy Scouts of America officials will have additional water systems installed, make road improvements and build a warehouse, Hebb said.

The last two Jamborees, in 1981 and 1985, were held at the Fort A.P. Hill, but some Scout officials had speculated that the next Jamboree would be moved to a Western state.

In 1985, plans for the Jamboree were in doubt for two months after the Army received reports that the ground under a shed near the campsite had been contaminated with dioxin, a highly toxic chemical.

The Army demolished the shed, removed the soil and fenced off the area before the Jamboree was held, and Scout officials said at the time that it was perfectly safe.

Chief Scout Executive Ben H. Love has called the military post just outside Bowling Green "an exceptional setting for our program."

"The rich historical significance of the area is important to us," Love said. Numerous Civil War battles were fought in northern Virginia.

The jamboree attracts Scouts from all 50 states, from U.S. territories and from dozens of foreign countries. Among the list of VIP visitors to the 1985 jamboree was Nancy Reagan.

Hostage Terry Anderson marks two years in Lebanon's turmoil

By CHARLES J. HANLEY

On the morning of March 16, 1985, Terry A. Anderson was sucked up into the eye of a Mideast storm. Two years later — years of family grief, of dashed hopes, of repercussions that reach to the Oval Office — the American journalist, captive of Shiite Moslem extremists, remains lost in Lebanon's turmoil.

Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, is the longest-held of eight American hostages in Lebanon.

Two recent events seemed to dim the chances for a hostage release: The political uproar in Washington over the White House's Iran arms-for-hostages deal, and the disappearance of hostage mediator Terry Waite in Lebanon.

But another event, the Syrian military intervention in Beirut's civil conflict, raises new hopes that the lawlessness of Lebanon may be brought under control.

Anderson's sister, Peggy Say, has never given up hope in her non-stop efforts to win her brother's release.

"I keep closely in touch with the various embassies of governments with influence in the region, and I am coming away with a feeling of their commitment to a resolution," she said in a telephone interview from her home in Batavia, N.Y.

"I would certainly hope their efforts and those of my own government mean that we are on the move toward resolution," she said.

For one thing, Mrs. Say said, she is encouraged by former President Jimmy Carter's planned trip to the Middle East later this month.

During his scheduled stopover in Damascus, she said, she hopes Carter will bring up the hostage situation with Syrian officials.

WORLD

The free-the-hostages effort has a spiritual side as well.

The American Baptist Churches in the U.S.A. has designated Sunday as a national day of prayer for Anderson, 39, and the other captives, focusing on a special service at the First Baptist Church in Washington, D.C.

Mrs. Say, who is Baptist, will join other hostage relatives and the freed hostage Rev. Lawrence Martin Jenco, a Roman Catholic priest, in meeting with reporters at a news conference Monday at Baptist headquarters in Valley Forge, Pa.

On that morning 24 months ago, when four armed men shoved Anderson into a green Mercedes and roared off, four Americans were already being held hostage.

Two — Jenco and the Rev. Benjamin Weir, a Presbyterian minister — were later released. Another, U.S. Embassy political officer William Buckley, died after torture, American officials say. A fourth, Peter Kilburn, a librarian at American University of Beirut, was found shot to death.

Since Anderson's abduction, the kidnappings of Americans, Frenchmen, Britons and other foreigners in Beirut have averaged more than one a month. At least seven have been killed, and 26 are still missing, including seven Americans besides Anderson.

— Thomas Sutherland, 55, of Fort Collins, Colo., agriculture dean at American University of Beirut, kidnapped June 9, 1985.

— Frank Herbert Reed, 54, a native of Malden, Mass., and director of elementary education at Beirut's International College, kidnapped last Sept. 9.

— Joseph J. Cicippio, 56, of Norristown, Pa., American University's acting comptroller, kidnapped last Sept. 12.

— Edward Austin Tracy, a Rutland, Vt., native and free-lance writer. His abduction was announced last Oct. 21.

— Alann Steen, 47, an American University journalism professor and longtime California resident, kidnapped with other professors Jan. 24.

— Robert Polhill, 53, of New York, an American University business professor kidnapped Jan. 24.

— Jesse J. Turner, 39, an Idahoan who taught mathematics and computer science at American University, kidnapped Jan. 24.

A few groups have claimed responsibility for the dozens of kidnappings, but one came to the fore — the fundamentalist, Iranian-aligned Shiites calling themselves Islamic Jihad, or Islamic Holy War, who took responsibility for 14 abductions, including Anderson's.

Disastrous ferry voyage 'mystery'

ZEEBRUGGE, Belgium (AP) — More than a week after the sinking of the Herald of Free Enterprise ferry, big questions remain unanswered about the critical 20 minutes that led to one of Europe's worst peacetime sea disasters.

At 7:08 p.m. on a cold, clear March 6, the jumbo ferry pulled out of Berth No. 12 in Zeebrugge harbor.

At 7:28 p.m., with little warning, it flopped onto its port side and sank with stunning speed — in less than one minute by some accounts.

One hundred thirty-four people are believed to have died in the disaster, although most of the bodies have yet to be recovered.

The toll could be higher.

Investigators quickly established that the ship took on massive amounts of seawater through its bow loading doors. But they have yet to answer fully a series of equally important questions.

Why were the bow doors open? What happened to allow seawater to enter the doorway, which normally clears the water line by at least eight feet?

Why is the capsized vessel facing back toward the harbor instead of toward the open sea?

Accounts by survivors have shed little light on the exact cause of the accident, and the official Belgian and British investigating teams have said they will not comment publicly until their studies are completed.

After a grueling series of recovery efforts, 55 bodies have been found. Official estimates of the number of bodies entombed in the half-submerged ship vary. But Townsend Thoresen, the ferry's operator, says it believes 79 bodies will be found when the wreckage is recovered.

The ship lies in 30 feet of water, the port side resting on the sandy bottom.

"In a real sense, it is a grave," says Peter Ford, the ferry company's chairman. Many of those in it, he says, may never be identified.

Four hundred and nine people, including the ship's captain, 46-year-old David Lewry, survived. Most had been in the cafeteria and other upper sections of the triple-deck ferry. Some suffered only minor injuries. Many, however, were cut or smashed by waves of glass, steel and people that swept the decks as the ship heeled over.

Survivors have said the 7,951-ton Herald of Free Enterprise began to list to the port side almost immediately after it left the harbor entrance and entered the North Sea. The entire ship would have become submerged if it had not sunk in relatively shallow waters.

Some managed to save themselves and others by scrambling above the water line, breaking through plate-glass windows and hoisting themselves out of the stricken hull. There were reports of people forming human chains to pass one another up into the open air of freedom.

One man was seen carrying a young girl to safety by grasping her shirt in his teeth.

Rescuers who arrived on the scene minutes after the accident are credited with saving many lives.

Townsend Thoresen and the Belgian and British authorities have heaped praise on the emergency crews and volunteers who responded to the crisis. But none yet has been able to explain exactly how it happened.

Townsend Thoresen has acknowledged that the ferry's vehicle hold was flooded by seawater that entered through the bow's steel loading doors. But there has been no official explanation of what let the seawater in.

Some witnesses said the bow doors were not closed when the ferry left the harbor. That doesn't explain, though, what caused the bow opening to dip low enough to reach the water line. The seas were calm that evening.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Ecuador takes emergency measures in quake disaster

QUITO, Ecuador (AP) — The government imposed emergency economic measures Saturday to deal with earthquake-induced disasters that crippled Ecuador's oil industry and forced the nation to suspend payments on its foreign debt.

Prices of fuel, gasoline and public transportation were increased.

The government froze the prices of basic foods and vowed to respond with an "iron hand" to speculators who might try to profit from the disaster. There were reports Saturday that staples including sugar and rice were selling at two and three times above their normal price.

President Leon Febres Cordero said Friday that 1,000 people were dead or missing in mudslides and flooding resulting from a series of earthquakes March 5 and 6.

The quakes destroyed a 30-mile stretch of this Andean nation's main oil pipeline, forcing a production and export halt of the resource that provides 60 percent of the country's foreign exchange.

Officials said the pipeline would take five months to repair.

Febres Cordero on Friday announced the suspension, for at least the rest of the year, of payments on Ecuador's $8.2 billion foreign debt. The president said financial losses from the disaster could reach $1 billion, more than half of the $1.8 billion 1987 budget.

Ex-Politburo member eyed

MOSCOW (AP) — An ousted Politburo member will be investigated by Communist leaders in Kazakhstan to determine possible links to corruption and other abuses in the republic, the official Tass news agency reported said Saturday.

It said the decision to investigate Dinmukhamed Kunaev was made at a meeting of the Kazakhstan Communist Party's Central Committee.

A holdover from the era of the late Soviet leader Leonid I. Brezhnev, Kunaev was removed as party secretary in Kazakhstan, a central Asian republic, in December. He had served in the post since 1964.

The ethnic Kazakh's replacement by a Russian, Gennady Kolbin, touched off rioting in the Kazakhstan capital of Alma Ata on Dec. 17-18. Two people were killed and cars and a store were burned in the disturbances, according to the local media.

The Communist Party Central Committee removed Kunaev from the ruling Politburo in January, apparently as part of Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's continuing change in the party's old guard.

Recent articles in the Soviet press have chronicled the misdeeds of high-ranking officials under Kunaev.

Five officials in the republic are under investigation by courts or already have been convicted of various offenses.

Iran fears power struggle

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini told Iran's government chiefs Saturday that "big power conspiracies" were trying to divide the nation's leadership, the Islamic Republic News Agency reported.

The official agency, monitored in Nicosia, said Khomeini urged the officials to be vigilant for any effort to turn them against each other.

It said Khomeini spoke to an audience at Jamaran mosque, near his residence in north Tehran, that included President Ali Khamenei, Prime Minister Hussein Musavi and Parliament Speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani.

IRNA quoted Khomeini as saying the "big powers," which he did not name, wanted to trigger a power struggle in Iran to weaken the Islamic revolution that toppled pro-Western Shah Mohamnged Reza Pahlavi in 1979.

ENERGY APPRECIATION WEEK

The "coming out" party for optimists

"Turn around", is the theme for the Permian Basin's Energy Appreciation Week. We've seen the bottom and we're ready to start back up. Attitude will play an important part in our climb back and Energy Appreciation Week will be the pivot on which the turn around begins.

On Tuesday, March 24th the Midland Reporter-Telegram will contribute to this much needed event by publishing an Energy Appreciation edition. It will focus on the businesses and individuals who have with-stood the downturn and are ready to move forward.

We feel the time is right for this event and this edition and that both will be well received. If you're an optimist and wish to show the Permian Basin that you too are here to stay call our advertising department at 682-5311.

In North Texas, mostly cloudy east, generally fair central and west Sunday. Warm with highs near 75 areawide. Increasing cloudiness and warmer areawide Sunday night with widely scattered showers east. Lows 51 northwest to 67 southeast. Considerable cloudiness.

In West Texas, increasing cloudiness most sections Sunday. Mostly cloudy Sunday night and Monday with scattered thunderstorms north and widely scattered to isolated thunderstorms south. Highs Sunday low 60s north to the upper 70s south and low 80s Rio Grande.

In South Texas, mostly cloudy through Sunday night. Occasional drizzle Sunday with a chance of rain Sunday night, west and central. Cloudy Monday with a chance of thunderstorms, mainly west. Continued warm days and mild nights. Lows each night from the 60s to the 80s.

Thunderstorms due in Basin

From Staff and Wire Reports

Midlanders should catch all the sun they can today as thunderstorms are expected to creep into the Permian Basin tonight.

Forecasters with the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal said today will be partly cloudy, with a high in the upper 70s. Winds will be from the west at 10 to 20 mph, shifting to the southeast by the afternoon.

Tonight will be mostly cloudy, with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms. The low will be in the mid 40s.

A 30 percent chance of thunderstorms is forecast for Monday under mostly cloudy skies. The high will be near 70.

Saturday's high of 78 was eight degrees cooler than the record of 86, set in 1939. The low of 45 was 23 degrees warmer than the record of 22, set in 1962.

STATE

An intense low-pressure system centered over Kansas continued to produce gusty winds across much of Texas Saturday, but except for South Texas, skies were mostly fair.

A high-pressure ridge over the Gulf pushed moisture into South Texas, where skies were mostly cloudy, the National Weather Service said.

Winds were southwesterly across most of the state at 15 to 25 mph with occasional higher gusts. However, lighter northwest winds breezed the Panhandle.

Afternoon temperatures were mainly in the 60s and 70s. The 3 p.m. extremes ranged from 64 degrees at Sanderson and Guadalupe Pass in Southwest Texas to 80 degrees at Childress.

In the forecast for North Texas, skies should be mostly cloudy in the east and generally fair central and west Sunday. Monday should be considerably cloudy with a chance of showers. Lows should be in the 50s and highs in the 70s.

NATION

A windy storm blew snow and rain into the Northwest on Saturday and produced tornadoes in California, while snow fell across the northern Plains and from the lower Great Lakes into the Ohio Valley.

A tornado that touched down west of Corning, Calif., in the Sacramento Valley, on Saturday afternoon caused damage estimated at $75,000 to a turkey farm, officials said. No injuries were reported. Another tornado was sighted near Marysville, the National Weather Service said.

California gets only a few tornadoes a year, which typically cause little damage.

Low oil price still affecting area economy

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Quarterly sales and use tax analysis reports from the Texas Comptroller's Office for Midland-Odessa through the third quarter of 1986 show depressed oil prices continued to impact on wholesale and retail sales in the area.

While quarter-to-quarter comparisons from 1985 to 1986 showed dramatic declines, the downturn began to moderate in some sectors of the economy from quarter to quarter, in a few instances, last year.

However, overall, gross sales in all industries through the 3rd quarter of 1986 showed a decrease of 29.6 percent in Odessa and a drop of 22.4 percent in Midland. The actual dollar decline in Odessa amounted to slightly more than $633 million and nearly $390 million in Midland.

From the 1st to 2nd quarter last year, gross sales in all industries in Midland declined 17.4 percent and 18.4 percent from the 2nd to 3rd quarters. In this same category, Odessa sales dropped 20.1 percent from the 1st to the 2nd quarter and only 6.8 percent from the 2nd to 3rd quarter.

Total sales in all industries in Midland through the 3rd quarter 1986 were nearly $1.4 billion and Odessa showed slightly more than $1.5 billion.

Total retail sales in Midland for the three quarters of 1986 amounted to nearly $563 million, down 29.1 percent from 1985. Odessa total retail sales through the same period were nearly $721 million, down 17.6 percent from 1985.

Troy Gifford, Midland city finance director, takes exception to the figures published by the state comptroller's office, terming the figures "fictitious numbers." Because of various adjustments made when reporting outlets are mistakenly credited to either Midland or Odessa, he said, the reports from the state comptroller "lead you to erroneous conclusions, badly erroneous conclusions," Gifford stated.

"I don't care what the reports say," the Midland finance director said, I can show and prove to you that retail sales at the point of sale are not off in Midland County more than 10 percent."

Concerning adjustments made to Midland or Odessa accounts because of mistakenly credited reporting outlets, Comptroller's Office spokesman Tony Proffitt said, "Those errors get credited and changed long before those (quarterly sales and use tax analysis) reports get cranked out."

According to Proffitt, totalling report figures for the three quarters of 1986 to determine increases or decreases "should produce a valid figure and if it's invalid it won't be invalid by very much," he stated. Proffitt observed that, "while the reporting system is not perfect, it's the best yardstick we've got."

Odessa Fiscal Services Director Frank Muser doesn't disagree with the state of that city's economy as reflected by figures produced by the state comptroller's office. "The figures merely show how the economy was performing several months ago, he said.

A more accurate indicator of what the economy is going to do is the rig count, says Muser. "Everything else (retail sales and the unemployment rate) seems to be behind. It (the rig count) is the only thing that seems to give any advance indication of what to expect," he said.

The figures disputed by Gifford are contained in quarterly Sales and Use Tax Analysis by County reports produced by the State Comptroller of Public Accounts. The reports usually lag each quarter from five to six months.

In addition to showing gross sales by county, the reports show sales activity for such industrial categories as agriculture and forestry, mining, construction, manufacturing and transportation and utilities.

Under the wholesale trade category are the sales of durable and non durable goods.

The retail category shows total sales of building materials, general merchandise, food stores, automotive (parts and accessories only), clothing, home furnishings, restaurants, drug stores, liquor stores and miscellaneous sales.

Also included in the reports are categories such as financial services, general services, public administration and nonclassifiable sales.

Kyle Averitt, president of the Martin County Jaycees, is heading up a project to restore the old monastery, which later became a convent, in Stanton. The convent and academy were abandoned following a tornado which struck Stanton in 1938.

Rebirth of convent contemplated

By ED TODD

STANTON — The old weathered monastery-convent may be restored to a renewed life.

Or it may wither and return to dust.

But the Martin County Jaycees, under the leadership of history buff Kyle Averitt, offer hope that the two-story adobe and weatherboard building may be reborn.

"We've got a lot of people excited about it," Averitt said. "Our hope is to make this into a showplace for Martin County."

The monastery was built in the new West Texas settlement of Marienfeld in 1892 and 1893 by Carmelite monks from Kansas as a center to train young men for the priesthood.

The community originated in 1881 as a Texas & Pacific Railway Co. station house called Gretton. That year, German-Catholic settlers successfully petitioned the railroad to change the name to Marienfeld — Field of Mary — in honor of the Virgin Mary.

But in 1890, following a severe drought and blizzard in 1889 and 1887 and an exodus of many Catholics and an influx of Protestants, the community's name was changed to Stanton as an apparent tribute to Edwin Stanton, President Abraham Lincoln's Secretary of War.

The colony of monks, under the guidance of Father Anastasius Peters, expanded the adobe monastery, which was used as a theological center. A parochial school, operated by the Sisters of Divine Province of San Antonio, was established here in the 1890s.

The severe drought and blizzard in the mid-1890s forced the close of the school. In 1894, the school was reopened by the Sisters of Mercy from San Francisco. Three years later, the Carmelite monks disbanded and sold their property to the Sisters of Mercy.

The old Carmelite monastery became the Convent and Academy of Our Lady of Mercy. The U-shaped complex of four buildings — convent, classrooms, dormitories, and church — operated until mid-1938. It was then — on June 11, 1938 — that a tornado severely damaged most of the complex, but left the original monastery building relatively intact.

Today, the historical "facts" surrounding the monastery, convent and academy largely "depend on whom you talk to and on the books you read," said Averitt, a 31-year-old Stanton banker and president of the Jaycees. Most records were destroyed in the tornado and rain storm.

Averitt, who has an interest in preserving landmarks as a tangible link to the past, inspired the Jaycees to undertake the monastery-convent project. The Jaycees raised funds to purchase the abode and weather board building, which they call "The Convent," from Carlsbad, N.M., businessman Pete Pelletier for about $30,000. Previous owners included Tinnie Mercantile Co. of Roswell, N.M.; Jim Kelly of Stanton, and his granddaughter, Francheile Moore of Midland.

"I was really pleased," Averitt said of the sale. "We had a lot of support from the community."

Since 1938, the building had been used as a residence and most recently as a spook house operated by the Jaycees. There also was a proposal to convert the edifice into a resplendent restaurant, had Stanton voters approved the sale of liquor here, but that hope failed.

And since the early 1970s, the monastery-convent has been left vacant.

The Jaycees, Averitt said, were criticized for using the old monastery-convent as a "spook house" — as if such a use were sacrilegious.

"We think that was a waste of resources," said Averitt, who pledged that the building never again would be used as a haunted house.

As funds increase, the Jaycees plan to re-roof the building before they began restoring the interior and weathered woodwork. Many artifacts, including statues and icons, have been removed either by previous owners or through theft and vandalism.

"The convent is slowly deteriorating and becoming just a memory," Averitt said of "the grand old building."

Blount to be asked for explanation

DALLAS (AP) — Sherwood Blount, an agent who represents several NFL players, will be called before the NFL Players Association to explain his involvement in the football scandal at Southern Methodist University, the Dallas Times Herald reported Saturday.

A lawyer for the players association said similar questions will be asked of sports agent Ron Horowitz, a business associate with Blount in Dallas-based Athletic Associates Inc., a sports talent company formed in 1985.

NFLPA rules forbid sports agents accredited by the union from paying athletes while they are in school. An agent who violates that regulation could have his accreditation revoked, according to an NFLPA attorney.

Blount, a once-active SMU booster now banned for life from involvement in the university's football program, is an accredited NFL agent. He or his business associates actively have wooed several SMU athletes who turned professional.

The Times Herald earlier identified Blount, a Dallas real estate developer, as the booster who ran a slush fund that paid about $61,000 to 13 student athletes over an 18-month period. Blount has refused to comment on the report.

Horowitz and Blount were among the nine SMU boosters banned from associating with the school's athletic program for varying terms because of NCAA recruiting violations.

NFLPA official Mark Murphy recently sent a letter to Blount asking him to explain his role in the SMU affair.

"It asks him to give his side of what went on," said Tom DePaso, a lawyer for the players association.

The players association may make additional inquiries after receiving the response or summon Blount before the group's disciplinary committee, DePaso said.

"There are various sanctions that can be imposed upon the agent," DePaso said. "Anywhere from a written reprimand that is put in his file up to suspension and then expulsion."

The players association regulations have been in effect since September 1983, he said.

"There's just tons of guys (agents) I think, that enter into relationships with players prior to their eligibility," DePaso said. "I think it's rampant, to be honest with you. And you hear rumors here, there and everywhere."

Last week, New York agent Norby Walters admitted he has given cash to college athletes in an effort to sign them as clients. Walters said former Auburn running back Brent Pullwood and former Tempie running back Paul Palmer were among the players who received money from him during their college playing careers.

Blount represents a number of professional football players, including several former SMU players.

One of the athletes represented by Blount's company is Reggie Dupard, a New England Patriots running back who was an All-America at SMU in 1985 and a first-round NFL draft pick in 1986.

Dupard was one of the former SMU athletes linked to cash paid by an athletic department intermediary during the 1985-86 season, but he has denied receiving money to play for the Mustangs.

Blount also represents Craig James, another New England running back who once starred at SMU. Other former SMU players represented by Blount's company include zone tackle Michael Carter of the San Francisco 49ers and Harvey Armstrong of the Indianapolis Colts. They have not been linked to improper activities in the SMU scandal.

SMU bishops hire Austin attorneys

AUSTIN (AP) — United Methodist Church bishops have hired Austin attorneys to help investigate the role of the Southern Methodist University Board of Governors in improper payments to football players.

The firm was hired last week by a bishops committee investigating the board.

The investigation is the result of a revelation by Gov. Bill Clements that board members were aware payments were being made to football players and decided to gradually phase them out, instead of halting them. The payments violate NCAA regulations.

"The law firm was hired to help us ascertain the truth. We have no subpoena powers, and we're not trying to build a lawsuit. But the lawyers will take sworn depositions and the Board of Governors will answer question under oath, although not in a court of law," said Spurgeon Dunnam III, spokesman forn the bishops committee.

The investigation will focus on which football players received money, who was involved in making the payemnts and which officials knew about the scandal and took part in it.

Clements once pledged never to reveal names

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Gov. Bill Clements met with a group of Southern Methodist University officials and boosters in 1985 to negotiate an agreement under which the university would never reveal the names of boosters who had been accused of making illegal payments to student athletes, the Dallas Morning News reported Saturday.

The newspaper quoted Dallas Developer George Owen, one of nine SMU boosters banned from associating with the university, as saying Clements met with two members of the university's board of governors, three boosters and lawyers representing the school and the boosters.

The meeting was held in the office of SEDCO Inc., the oil drilling company Clements owned at the time. At the time of the meeting, Clements was not governor and was chairman of SMU's board of governors.

"They said they would never announce our names," Owen told the newspaper.

"They've already violated that (the confidentiality part)," Owen said. "My name has been in the papers at least 100 times since then, and what happened yesterday (Thursday) was just ridiculous."

SMU officials on Thursday listed the name of Owen and eight boosters who had been banned for various lengths of time from associating with SMU officials and the athletic department because of the football player payoff scandal.

The release of names was made Thursday by SMU officials in their attempt to show the National Collegiate Athletic Association that steps were being taken to clean up the football program.

The NCAA last month invoked the so-called "death penalty" against the university's football program. The NCAA suspended the Southwest Conference school's football program for the 1987 season and placed other sanctions that will severely limit the football program for years to come.

Not long after the action was taken, Clements told an Austin news conference that he and other members of the university's board decided that the practice of paying student athletes would be "phased out" and that payments would continue to honor the obligation the school had made with the players.

Several board members have denied they had any knowledge of the illegal payments.

The harshest punishment ever handed down to a university by the NCAA was given SMU because an investigation revealed that boosters had continued to make illegal payments to student athletes even after the NCAA had placed SMU on three years probation in 1985 for recruiting violations.

The university had been given until Thursday to reveal to the NCAA what action officials had taken to clean up the program and to show why further sanctions should not be placed on the program.

The newspaper said the meeting in Clements office was held a month before the SMU was to appear before the NCAA Committee on Infractions and was for the purpose of telling the boosters that they would receive officials letters banning them from athletic programs.

The News identified those attending the meeting as Owen, Sherwood Blount and William P. Stevens, three of the nine banned from SMU athletics, Clements and board members and Dallas banker Robert H. Stewart III and former Dallas Mayor Robert Folsom, then-SMU athletic director Bob Hitch and John McElhaney, a lawyer who had represented SMU in NCAA proceedings.

"We were telling them (the boosters) they would be getting the letters," said Stewart.

Some of those attending the meeting told the newspaper Clements offered them anonymity in return for their pledge that improper recruiting be stopped.

Rape victim lobbies for tougher laws

By MIKE COCHRAN

ABILENE (AP) — An Abilene woman whose testimony sent rapist William Ted Wilhoit to prison says she is coming "out of the closet" to campaign for legislation that could extend the time Wilhoit and others spend behind bars.

"Some good has got to come out of this evil for me to accept it," Deborah Hankins, 35, said of the September 1978 assault at gunpoint in her Abilene home.

A jury convicted Wilhoit, 33, of aggravated rape and assessed a 40-year prison term in the Texas Department of Corrections at Huntsville.

Authorities say the onetime Abilene Christian University ministerial student could be released as early as 1992 after serving about one-third of his sentence.

Mrs. Hankins, a mother of two, said her decision this week to come forward and identify herself as a rape victim was triggered by a recent Associated Press series of stories that focused on the near-fatal shooting in 1974 of a Texas Christian University student named Janelle Kirby.

Hankins

The series ran last week in newspapers around the state and will begin Monday in the Reporter-Telegram.

Wilhoit confessed to the shooting last summer, 11 years after a Fort Worth jury had convicted a young Vietnam veteran named Kenneth Leslie Miller of the crime.

Miller, now 37, fled the courtroom after his conviction and was a fugitive on the run until his capture in Las Vegas in July 1986. He was released after Wilhoit admitted the shooting.

Mrs. Hankins said the Wilhoit revelation had a profound effect on her eight-year struggle to overcome feelings of fear, anger and guilt associated with the sexual assault.

"Until last summer, I couldn't talk about this without crying," she explained. "I got past that when I discovered Wilhoit tried to kill Janelle Kirby when she had fought back.

"That's when I accepted the fact that I didn't fight back and that it was OK.

"Before that, she said, she was unable to forgive herself for not resisting.

"I am a fighter, a strong person," she said. "I got Wilhoit convicted and I got him in jail. I saved a lot of other girls a lot of heartache, and it took a strong person to do that.

"But because I was so strong, I could not accept the fact that I had not fought back. That burden was lifted when I found out how violent he is."

The stress associated with the episode, while almost unbearable, was preferable to death, she said.

"How could my children have coped without me?" she wondered aloud.

Mrs. Hankins said she and her husband Elton, a pharmaceutical salesman, decided to speak out on the Wilhoit affair after discussing it with the children, Rebecca, 13, and Matthew, 11.

"The kids concurred with the decision to go public," she said. "We decided to put all the facts on the table."

The legislation she endorses has been incorporated into House Bill 680, which lawmakers say is part of Speaker Gib Lewis' anti-crime package.

Rep. Pan Morales, D-San Antonio, is sponsoring the measure, which would change the current "automatic release" provisions in the law.

At present, Morales said, there are two ways an inmate can get out of prison, including parole granted at the discretion of the State Board of Pardons and Paroles. The other is the automatic release provision that frees prisoners once their good conduct time plus calendar time served adds up to the length of the sentence.

"I don't think it makes any sense for automatic release from the Department of Corrections when we have a parole board established and in place, staffed with professionals who make these decisions every day," Morales said.

Suspect sought in sexual assault case

From Staff Reports

Midland police and sheriff's investigators are looking for a black man in connection with the alleged aggravated sexual assault Saturday of a teenage girl.

Police said the girl was assaulted about 1:30 a.m. at County Road 1125 and CR 60 East and was taken to the Midland Police Department where she filed a complaint.

The suspect apparently was driving a 1976 Buick Riviera, according to reports.

In other weekend complaints, police said charges of felony possession of marijuana and possession of cocaine are pending against a 29-year-old Midland man after he was arrested about 8:30 p.m. Friday at a northside apartment complex.

Narcotics officers seized an undisclosed amount of marijuana and more than five grams of cocaine in the raid.

The suspect remained in city jail late Saturday in lieu of $10,000 bond. Charges are expected to be filed Monday.

A 14-year-old Midland girl was treated and released at Midland Memorial Hospital for injuries she received in an apparent beating early Saturday, police reported.

According to reports, the girl received injuries to the calves, arms, thighs, lower neck, mouth and right side of the head. No arrests have been made in connection with the assault, police said.

A 25-inch color television set, clothes dryer and sewing machine were among property stolen during a burglary at 425 W. Dormard Ave., police said.

According to reports, the burglary occurred between March 7 and Saturday. The property is valued at more than $800.

The decline in wholesale and retail sales doesn't surprise economist Jim Williams, a principal of Texas Business Forecasts, who notes that in the 3rd quarter 1986, wage and salary employment in Midland declined 11 percent overall. "Hardest hit," he says, "were manufacturing (-21%), mining (where oil and gas figures are tabulated) — (-19%) and construction (-33%)."

There was a 17 percent overall wage and salary decrease in Odessa during the same period, Williams says. Again, as in Midland, the hardest hit areas were manufacturing (-24%), Mining (oil and gas) and construction were both down 34 percent, he said.

"Since wages in these three areas tend to be higher than many other segments of the economy," Williams stated, "it is not unreasonable that figures from the comptroller's department reflect significantly decreased retail sales."

However, on the upside, he said, "The recent rally in crude oil prices indicates a potential for some improvement over the next six months."

Midland wholesale sales through the 3rd quarter of 1986, compared to the same period in 1985, were off 33 percent, or nearly $124 million. Odessa wholesale sales in the same period declined slightly more than $209 million, or 44.8 percent.

Midland manufacturing sales were off 42.4 percent (about $177 million) through the 3rd quarter 1986. Odessa sales in the same category were off only 25.4 percent, or nearly $51.1 million through the same period.

Mining (oil and gas) activity in Midland through the 3rd quarter 1986 was down 49.3 percent, slightly more than $91 million, compared to 1985. Odessa activity in that category was off 29.6 percent, nearly $24 million) in the same period.

Construction activity in Odessa was down 25.8 percent, slightly more than $25 million, through the 3rd quarter 1986, compared to 1985. Midland construction activity was down 17.7 percent (more than $7.2 million) in this category during this same period.

Building material sales in Midland through the 3rd quarter 1986, compared to 1985, were down 28.2 percent (nearly $9 million). Odessa building material sales in the same period were down only 16.2 percent, slightly more than $7 million.

In the area of general merchandise sales, Midland faired much better than Odessa for the first nine months of 1986. Midland sales in this category were down only 4.4 percent (slightly more than $2.4 million) compared to 1985. Conversely, Odessa general merchandise sales were off 33.7 percent (nearly $33.2 million) in the same period.

In the retail sales sector, Midland food store sales declined 7.2 percent (nearly $6.9 million) through the 3rd quarter 1986, compared to 1985. Odessa during the same period increased 5.5 percent, nearly $8.3 million.

Liquor store sales for the first nine months of 1986 declined 33.4 percent (nearly $2.63 million) in Odessa. The decrease in Midland during the same period was only 6 percent, or slightly more that $373,000.

Midland restaurant sales through the first nine months of 1986 were off 9.3 percent, nearly $5.7 million, from 1985. Odessa sales in this category, however, were up 2.9 percent, slightly more than $1.75 million in the same period.

Clothing store sales in Midland were down 6.36 percent, slightly more than $2 million, through the 3rd quarter 1986 compared to 1985. Odessa sales in this area were up 4.8 percent, more than $1.3 million, in this same period.

Odessa home furnishing sales through the first three quarters of 1986 were down 21.5 percent, nearly $5.4 million) from 1985. Midland sales decreased 17.3 percent, nearly $5 million, in the same period.

Midland miscellaneous sales declined 21.7 percent (nearly $49.6 million) through the 3rd quarter 1986, compared to 1985. Odessa lost 28.7 percent (nearly $70 million) in this category from 1985.

Statewide, according to comptroller reports, gross sales for all industries were down 6.38 percent through the first nine months of 1986, compared to 1985.

However, as in Midland-Odessa, the decline in sales appeared to be moderating from the first through the third quarter of 1986.

Final figures for the fourth quarter of last year, according to Proffitt, probably won't be available until mid-May or early June.

CONVENT

"If you tear down a piece of history, you cannot replace it," he said, adding, "We owe it to coming generations to protect and preserve this important segment of our history."

He said that "the whole structure" is architecturally sound.

Once the monastery-convent is restored, the Jaycees plan to open the building to meetings, weddings and other functions at nominal fees to help maintain the property.

Support for the restoration seems firm.

"Of course, I'm a strong supporter of the project," said Martin County Sheriff Dan Saunders. "It's a great historic edifice that must be preserved. I love history, and I love to preserve our past. If we don't, it will be gone. I think it would be a shame not to restore it, because we not only want to preserve it for Stanton and Martin County but for this entire area."

Martin County Judge Bob Deaven-port said that the Jaycees "are to be commended for their leadership in this effort."

Lubbock businesswoman Grace McWhorter LeMonds, who has sentimental ties to Stanton, said that she "just can't stand for that beautiful convent to sag down into a pile of stones."

Memories of the convent and academy are still extant.

"It's a very dear place to me," said 86-year-old Villa Tom Wilkinson, who attended the academy from 1909 to 1918. "It just broke my heart to see how it has been abused.

"We learned reading, writing, arithmetic, penmanship, music, debate, allocution," she said. Boys and girls, including those from ranches and farms in the Stanton area, attended classes together, shared the same dining room but had separate dormitories and playgrounds, Mrs. Wilkinson said.

The convent, the former monastery, was used as a chapel and a dormitory for the sisters.

Mrs. Wilkinson said that the Jaycees' restoration project is "wonderful."

Eleanor Houston Poe, who first attended the academy at age 9 in 1928, said the school offered a good curriculum.

"And the kids that went to school there really learned a lot," she said.

She noted that the project is ambitious and represents a financial challenge.

"I hope that something good will come out of it," Mrs. Poe said of the the restoration project. "Times are pretty hard around here."

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

MC's basketball team spending spring break in NJCAA tourney

By H. A. TUCK

For the basketball team, spring break is a week in Hutchinson, Kansas, for the 40th annual National Junior College Athletic Association's championship tournament. That's also where many of the students, faculty, administrators and fans will be this week.

The Chaparrals won their fifth Region V title a week ago in Waco to earn the Kansas trip. And they go without having to face San Jacinto in a bi-regional game.

For Coach Jerry Stone and the four sophomores, it makes up somewhat for last year's 33-0 mark that was spoiled in Fort Worth when San Jacinto brought in its own undefeated record, knocked off the Chaps, then won the NJCAA title in Hutchinson. This year's team finished second in the conference, but swept through the three-game Region V tournament and appears to be finely tuned for the national tourney.

Ed Clements, who broadcasts all the Chap games on KCRS, suggests Midland College might want to host an appreciation banquet for the TSTI-Waco team. The fourth-place North Conference team just knocked off New Mexico Junior College and South Plains before running out of emotion and into a poised MC squad in the finals. That allowed Midland to play three teams from the North Conference, rather than a third meeting with NMJC or a fifth with South Plains.

MC will be closed this week because of its Spring Break, re-opening on Monday, March 23.

EDUCATION

Bob Templeton, Allison Professor of Journalism at MC, is speaking at the Rocky Mountain Collegiate Press Association meeting on March 21. However, it's not as big a trip as it might sound. The meeting is being held at Odessa College.

Templeton helped arrange for two presentations, in addition to his own talk. He's speaking on "Business Journalism," stressing the many other avenues for employment in journalism other than radio, television and newspapers.

If you missed it the past two days, there's still a chance today to visit the annual Home Improvement Show at Chaparral Center. Hours for the show today are noon to 6 p.m. It's something to do on a Sunday afternoon and you might find ways to improve your home.

Joe Williams seeks out top-quality competition for his tennis teams. That's taking them on a spring break tour that covers lots of ground and includes as many matches as possible. In fact, they began yesterday in Gainesville against Cooke County Community College, one of the many good Texas junior college teams.

During the remainder of the week, they'll be competing against the University of Arkansas-Little Rock, Northeast Louisiana in Monroe, McNeese State in Lake Charles, Southwest Louisiana in Lafayette, and Alvin Junior College in Houston.

Since many of his players are from other countries, Williams also will be serving as tour guide along the way. But on the court, the Chaps just speak one language and it might be called "Winning Tennis Matches The Williams Way!"

In their first "dividend" to the community, members of the new Abell-Hanger Scholars Club last week presented $500 to MARC (Midland Aids Retarded Citizens) executive director Ray Unterbrink. Club leader Ronda Womack made the presentation on behalf of all the students attending Midland College on the Abell-Hanger Scholarship for local 1986 high school graduates.

Club members had earned the money by serving as parking valets and doormen for a recent Junior League of Midland event. They've planned other fund-raisers for later this spring.

Students receiving the Abell-Hanger Scholarships wanted to do something to express their appreciation for the funding they receive, and have chosen to make contributions to various community non-profit groups as their gesture of thanks. It's something the students hope will become a tradition, since the Abell-Hanger Foundation has agreed to extend the scholarships to the 1986 class for their second year at MC and made the scholarships available for the 1987 graduates of Midland, Lee and Greenwood high schools.

Senseless deaths

That old nemesis of collegiate life, hazing, is no joke when it gets out of hand. Fearing that's where it's headed, if not already there, the Texas Senate this week approved a bill that would significantly toughen the state's 50-year old hazing ban. That's a good move — even though it would be ludicrous to assume that it would end the practice.

The legislation just passed is the result of the hazing death of a University of Texas freshman who, evidence showed, had been taken for a "ride" by fraternity members. An autopsy revealed that the freshman, Mark Seeberger of Dallas, had died of acute alcohol poisoning after being returned to his dormitory room. His blood-alcohol content was more than four times the legal intoxication limit in Texas, which is 0.10 percent. But Seeberger's death isn't merely a singularly frightening case when the others like it across the nation are tallied. Nationally, 40 college students have died in hazing incidents in the past nine years and while that figure may not be staggering when compared to other types of deaths, those 40 deaths were entirely avoidable.

There will be arguments that "kids will be kids" and that no type of legislation can be effective in deterring hazing. But that circumvents the point. The statistics reveal all too graphically that hazing which may be intended only as a fun ritual for college students can also turn into a truly monstrous activity. These "kids" must be made aware of the gravity of what they are doing; they must be alerted to the fact that the law will hold them responsible for the deaths of others in hazing activities.

No, toughening the hazing statute will not prevent all future cases. More deaths likely will come about as the result of "kids being kids." But, hopefully, this legislation will send the signal to college campuses across Texas that hazing is viewed as a serious affair and will be treated as such by college officials and the courts.

Perhaps in that way this growth of hazing can be discouraged before it becomes a torrent of senseless deaths.

Korean War memorial

Somewhere along the line of tributes to our honored war dead, memorials have properly been installed except for one glaring omission — that of the American role in the Korean War.

That conflict, which lasted officially for three years, cost the U.S. alone 54,246 lives. Another 4,675 were captured. Our Defense Department concluded that more than 6,000 American troops perished after falling into the hands of the enemy North Korean and Chinese Communist forces. There are still over 8,000 listed as missing-in-action — MIA's.

Although the conflict was of relatively short duration — except that armistice negotiations still continue at Panmunjom where North Koreans under the guise of discussion seek still to penetrate into South Korea — our vigilance and that of allied South Korean units must be maintained.

Ironically, only one American organization, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, has consistently urged that a memorial be set up in tribute to the Korean veterans.

Interestingly, a South Korean firm has even offered $1 million to help construct such a memorial.

The Congress repeatedly has discussed the merits of a memorial befitting the Korean Vets similiar to those we have for fallen heroes in other wars.

Those discussions have never seen fulfillment in creation of a proper monument. But in view of the enormity of the casualities we suffered and names like "Pork Chop Hill," the Korean War will be remembered as long as surviving vets are around to tell the tale.

We believe it is long overdue for Washington to enact legislation so that veterans of the Korean War will, at long last, be recognized for the sacrifices they made.

Another View: Cave-in syndrome

After the Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted 11-9 to halt U.S. aid to the Nicaraguan freedom-fighters. Democrats said they had a positive alternative to President Reagan's policy of resisting the spread of communism in the Western Hemisphere.

It appears to be the same alternative they had to resisting the spread of communism in the Eastern Hemisphere — caving in.

Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., called the Contras' struggle "a war that cannot be won and cannot serve our national interests."

Not every American will agree with Cranston that the restoration of freedom in Nicaragua "cannot serve our national interests."

Even Cranston would have a hard time explaining how our national interests are served by the Nicaraguan Soviet-backed government's suspension of civil liberties, persecution of the church, shutdown of the independent press, the role of its thousands of Warsaw Pact "advisers" and its big imports of communist bloc weapons.

Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., wants the freedom-fighters to quit fighting and instead go the way of peaceful negotiations with the Marxist-Leninists regime. That is like asking them to put their heads on chopping blocks. The Marxist-Leninists do not give a hang about making the freedom-fighters happy.

The Marxist-Leninists have total power. They obviously intend to hold on to it. That is why the freedom-fighters began fighting in the first place.

On the Foreign Relations Committee, opponents of the freedom-fighters have a slight edge. But an 11-9 vote is no avalanche. And if the congressional majority goes along, as it likely will, and votes against the freedom-fighters, the president is sure to veto the legislation, and its supporters admit Congress would be unable to override the veto.

If Dodd, Cranston and their associates really wanted to strike a blow for freedom in Nicaragua they would demand, as a price for helping the regime, the restoration of civil liberties, resumption of freedom of the press, amnesty for the freedom-fighters, free elections and an end to persecution of the church.

If they insist on pursuing their present course of cutting off help to the Contras, while the Cubans, Soviets and other communists bloc countries keep sending help to the dictatorship, it will be only a matter of time until the communist tide reaches the Rio Grande.

JACK ANDERSON

Iranian speaker trying for arms deal

WASHINGTON — Incredible as it seems, the high-level Iranian official who first dickered with the White House for arms and then blew the whole deal has continued to make secret overtures to the United States.

Jack Anderson

Hashemi Rafsanjani, speaker of the Iranian parliament and a possible successor to the Ayatollah Khomeini, recently reopened an undercover negotiating channel with the U.S. Navy. He did this even as he was loudly denouncing the botched arms-for-hostages deal and ridiculing President Reagan's explanation of the affair.

Rafsanjani, whom Reagan still considers a "moderate" in the Tehran government, was behind all the arms-hostage negotiations carried on in secret by the National Security Council staff. He then exposed the behind-the-scenes dealing, perhaps to save his own skin from disapproving Iranian hard-liners.

Unbeknownst to congressional investigators and the Tower Commission, Rafsanjani had also been the power behind separate but parallel negotiations with the Navy over much of the same period. We disclosed the Navy effort in two recent columns.

The Navy wanted to buy back some fancy aircraft maintenance equipment from Iran as a money-saving move. But the deal fell through early last year, we reported, when the Iranians demanded U.S. missiles and other weapons instead of cash for the aircraft equipment.

We have since learned, however, that the same Navy man who conducted the aborted negotiations in 1985-86 met with his Iranian contact in a London military club Jan. 9, 1987 — reopening the negotiations with Rafsanjani. Here's what knowledgeable Navy sources told us:

The Navy man, a reserve officer on active duty, discussed the Navy's need for the equipment — diagnostic "test benches" for F-14s — with a Naval Air Systems Command official on June 3, 1985, and agreed to contact the Iranians through a millionaire British friend who did business with Tehran.

Navy intelligence analysts had determined there were at least six of the test benches in Iran, five of them never used. They had been sold to the shah with a shipment of F-14s. It hoped to buy the Iranians' on the cheap, since Tehran had only a handful of F-14s in decent enough shape to need the electronic diagnostic machines.

The Navy reservist set up his contacts with Tehran in the summer of 1985. But he refused to make any substantive step until he had a letter of authorization from the Navy. This he got in September.

The negotiator also got authority to proceed from a Navy lawyer, Attorney General Edwin Meese and State Department legal adviser Abraham Sofaer.

In the first week of October 1985, the Navy man flew to London for his first meeting with Rafsanjani's emissary, a young Iranian engineer living in Paris and London. The American had gone on leave from active duty — a technicality that would give the Navy "deniability" and also allow the negotiator to collect any eventual finder's fee for bringing off the deal.

The Iranian told the American there were nine test benches, not six. The American began the bidding at $6.25 million and gradually worked his way up to $10 million over a period of several days.

To the Navy's delight, the Iranian negotiator accepted — not knowing that the American could have gone to $20 million, the amount Congress had appropriated for F-14 testing and evaluation. The Navy figured this move would eliminate the more than $100 million cost of restarting the test-bench production line, and also would not require a wait of 18 to 26 months for the equipment.

But the Navy rejected an Iranian suggestion that it help Tehran repair some of its F-14s in return for resale to the Navy of other Iranian F-14s at a discount. The Navy's refusal to help Iran militarily must have puzzled the Iranians, who had recently taken delivery of U.S. weapons through Israel in the secret White House deal.

Details of the Navy delivery were hammered out in London in mid-November. The Navy would deposit the money in the same Swiss bank — Credit Suisse — being used in the White House deal. The test benches would then be flown by Iran Air to Frankfurt, West Germany, or possibly Karachi, Pakistan, where Navy experts could inspect the equipment.

Jack Anderson is a syndicated columnist who along with Joseph Spear and Dale Van Atta writes this column for United Feature Syndicate.

GEORGE F. WILL

Thatcher realism: No equality of wealth

LONDON — Britain's loony left causes sensible people to daydream about a surgical procedure known as "vasectomy of the vocal cords." And some Labor Party politicians, who would like to win elections, feel likewise.

George F. Will

British newspapers are full of stories about the activities of left-wing bureaucrats from what is being called the "race-relations industry." The bureaucrats have become "thought police," telling primary schools, for example, not to use pictures of teddy bears, steam engines and elves because such images are "European and, on the whole, middle class" and therefore unfair to the children of immigrants.

Such local governments are as injurious to Labor's national image as the 1972 McGovernite convention was to the Democratic Party. This Labor affliction is partly a result of one of Prime Minister Thatcher's successes. By democratizing trade unions, she made them less hospitable to extremists with Eastern European mentalities, and they fled to local governments.

Labor's leaders in Parliament are reduced to arguing that it is unfair to infer from local looniness the probable behavior of a Labor government. However, between 25 and 35 percent of Labor's parliamentary candidates are of the "hard" (rather than the "cuddly") left.

Roy Hattersley, Labor's shadow chancellor of the exchequer, may be a sensible man in a silly party. Or he may be a silly man because he remains in a party so many are fleeing. Whatever, he knows American politics and admits another parallel Labor has with the problems of the Democratic Party. He says intra-party "democracy" has played into the hands of intense minorities. It has led to the "colonization" (his word) of the party by groups (homosexuals, feminists, etc.) that now have been institutionalized within the party.

Actually, the antics of extremists distract attention from the intellectual decay of the Labor Party.

The core of the traditional socialist canon is this: Capitalists cheat workers of their fair share, so politics must be redistributionist. But capitalism, tamed by the welfare state, no longer seems rapacious. And the public understands that government redistribution of wealth presupposes wealth-creation. That requires capitalism, and redistributionist policies cripple capitalism.

Socialism has become (in the words of a critic) a theory of distribution without a theory of production. It despises, yet presupposes, capitalism.

Hattersley was an admiring observer at the 1984 Democratic National Convention in San Francisco when Walter Mondale promised a tax increase. Hattersley believes that Mondale's trouncing, which Hattersley endured bravely, is not an ominous portent for Labor. Why not? Because of the (Hattersley does not put it this way) incorrigible statism of the British public.

Hattersley says that if you ask British voters if they would prefer an across-the-board tax cut of, say, four billion pounds, or the retention of that sum by government for social services and job creation, 70 percent favor retention. But Norman Tebbit, chairman of the Conservative Party, says the answer depends on how the question is asked.

Tebbit says, of course you get an anti-tax-cut majority if you ask: Do you want a few pounds off your monthly tax bill or an educational system so fine you need not send your children to expensive schools? Public transportation so good you can leave your car at home? And so on. But the price of the social services promised is much more than the sum of the tax cut.

Hattersley acknowledges that if taxes are first cut, and then the question is asked, "Should taxes be put back up?," voters say "no". And taxes probably will be cut soon. The Conservative government can call the next election anytime between now and June, 1988, and can time budget decisions to coincide.

According to Hattersley, Thatcherite individualism is discordant with the British national character. He says the average employee does not "feel committed to the economy." Americans, he says, believe in the fact of social mobility. They believe that any child can grow up to be president of General Motors. The British have no such animating ideology of individualism. Instead, they must be motivated by a "Swedish" ethic of collective provision through government. Hattersley says the assumption must be: We shall all do better if we pull for one another through public services.

Socialism has historically been a class-based movement with a moral vision. But the class — the industrial working class — has been transformed by the change to a post-industrial world. Parties of the left almost everywhere are in decline among skilled workers. The moral vision of traditional socialism was of an egalitarian society. It has foundered on this fact: The public is not interested.

As one clear-eyed analyst has noted, Thatcher understands what left-wing ideologues refuse to recognize. People do not want to be equal to their neighbors. They want to be richer than their neighbors.

If you don't like presidents, blame television!

NEW YORK — Television news is being wiped out by game shows. It doesn't mean We the Audience of the United States are getting dumber. It just means We don't look to TV for the serious stuff anymore, just for light entertainment.

Russell Baker

This is television as foreseen by Fred Allen — "chewing gum for the eyes" — and it explains why we are having this run of inadequate presidents. Presidential politics turned into television long ago, television turned into light entertainment and, inevitably, presidents turned into light entertainers.

We now see the ultimate fruit of the process in poor, bewildered Ronald Reagan, who is light entertainment from toe to pompadour. He is baffled by all the hostility since the discovery that he wasn't much good at governing.

It is tempting to sympathize. Didn't the public know all along that details of governing were not his department? He never pretended to be a details man. That details-of-governing business — that wasn't why the country elected him.

It had had details-of-governing with Jimmy Carter — couldn't keep his hands off any detail, even assigned time on the White House tennis courts, can you believe the guy?

Everybody had laughed about that because look what it got him: the curse of the systolish, ruin, defeat, a loser's reputation as Old Doctor Feelbad, the contempt of the new hands-off White House, so smooth, so wonderful at making everybody feel good, so ... so entertaining.

Reagan never said he would manage, and nobody who understood the management of large enterprises ever expected him to. Corporate tycoons adored having him in the White House, but when asked, "Would you hire him to run your company?" recoiled in surprise at the question, as if to say, "Egad, man, are you mad?"

Later, as his detachment from the work grew noticeable even to less astute observers, his defenders argued that managing was not necessarily part of being president. The essential task, this argument ran, was to create an example of confidence, optimism, spiritual strength and good humor that would inspire these same virtues in the nation.

Presidents like Reagan were bound to result from the game-show campaigning which evolved after politics became television, forcing politicians to entertain or die. Once presidential campaigns ceased to be about running the country and became competitions for television ratings, the chances of getting anybody competent into the White House diminished.

Recent news has exposed us to several men — former Sens. Baker, Muskie and Tower among them — who are, obviously, more competent at governing than Reagan. None of them, however, is entertaining enough to have given the gipper of yore much of a tussle in the Nielsen ratings.

It will probably become even harder to get well-qualified people elected president unless the business of nominating candidates is taken away from television. It is this monstrous process — starting with the Iowa caucuses and New Hampshire primary — that provides the entertainment format for turning an election into a game show.

With the connivance of the press, which ought to know better, television uses these two utterly inconsequential events to create an entire season of game shows. The "prize" is the presidency. It is always referred to as "the prize." There is no hint that the winner may soon wish he had listened to his common sense when it warned him to stay off television.

As in games shows, too, the "prize" is always presumed to be glorious, despite 200 years of evidence that it is very likely to be a misery. This is consistent with game-show law forbidding "hosts" to disturb a winner's ecstatic spasms by pointing out that the IRS will tax the booty as income, using the inflated price quoted on the show as its true value.

The importance attached to the few thousand unrepresentative ballots cast in Iowa and New Hampshire is not based solely on the media urge to get a show off to a fast start, but also on the belief of politicians everywhere that Iowa and New Hampshire reveal who has the charm to win in the Nielsens and who doesn't.

The usual result is that competent candidates never get out of the chocks, and as the charm competition heats up with Super Tuesday and other entertaining primaries, teeth and haircuts become criteria of greatness.

The solution? Settle for the lesser evil: abandon the present nominating process and let the party professionals pick the candidates. At least they know who can cut the mustard.

Mark White was right about need for education

Modisett

I was no big fan of Gov. Mark White and I make no bones about where he and I differed politically. In that regard, we simply didn't see eye-to-eye in our approaches to social problems. He probably didn't care for my position on most issues; generally speaking, I thought his stunk.

But on one topic we were of like mind — education. I believe that the cause Mark White embraced in pushing the critical topic of education to the front burner of Texas concerns is one every Texan concerned about the future of this state's people must share. Education is the future. It's as plain and simple as that and we need to recognize that fact, and act like we do.

In another time, another Texan named Lyndon Baines Johnson, 36th president of the United States, addressed the import of education when he said:

"At the desk where I sit, I have learned one great truth. The answer for all our national problems — the answer for all the problems of the world — comes to a single word. That word is 'education.'"

Johnson may have been a bit prejudiced, of course. Before entering politics, he was a teacher by profession.

But one can't deny facts and the facts reveal unequivocally that the rapid progression of technology is threatening to segregate segments of the American population even more dramatically unless education is stressed diligently.

All around them Americans have the technological marvels of an advanced society — television, handheld calculators, computer-assisted machinery and automobiles, lasers for fine surgical procedures, and much more. But all that technology is essentially useless without the general knowledge necessary to bring about its workforce usefulness.

It's true that even one Albert Einstein makes a difference for society. But take the knowledge that Einstein brought to man, spread it evenly across the breadth of society and witness the difference. That is the purpose of education. That is the purpose of the public school system.

But it won't happen easily in the years and decades ahead. Societal pressures threaten to destroy the hope for a world made bright by an educated populace. Achieving that goal will require the vision and determination of a lot of Mark Whites and Lyndon Johnsons who recognize education as the one hope for society.

Yet the road to an educated society has never been an easy one. It is always pocked and bumpy. And it is always traveled with the assistance of individuals like Albert Einstein who helped to pave the way for all who will follow.

Still, it must be traveled. As Lyndon Johnson noted, it remains "the answer for all the problems of the world."

'Propagandists' would do better to sign names

As a response to Julie Hillrichs' news article of March 3, concerning "Youth Propaganda," an underground newspaper at Lee High School, let us examine how misguided these "liberals" really are.

We have the awesome privilege and responsibility of living in one of the freest societies ever known to man. Benny Existential, Harley Marx and friends are enjoying the privileges without accepting the responsibilities. If their motivation is a desire to make a statement and "stimulate thought," their result is about as stimulating as an anonymous phone call. If, in their estimation, "an intellectual wasteland" exists, perhaps the reason can be found in the very definition of Benny's last name.

Existentialism is the doctrine that there is no difference between the external world and the internal world of the mind. If one imagines that a speeding truck is not really there, then the truck is harmless. If one imagines that anonymity is the key to intellectual superiority, then it must be so. If one imagines that anonymity is the key to freedom of speech, then it must be so. After all, we are free, aren't we? And "we'll fight anyone who challenges our Constitutional right to freedom of speech."

That freedom, however, was bought with a price and that price was paid by real people with real names. Benny, imagine all those students in your "intellectual wasteland" who sign their real names to homework and term papers. Imagine the athletes and academic competitors who list their real names on the roster. Imagine the teachers and administrators who put their real names on the doors of their classrooms and offices and have their real names listed in the phone book. And, tell me, were those letters which contained the grammatical mistakes and which gave you many laughs signed by Icabod Illiterate or by real people?

Since you are so good with your imagination, Benny, imagine that in New York harbor there is a Statue of Responsibility standing alongside the Statue of Liberty. Our forefathers pledged their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor for what they believed and they accepted full responsibility for that pledge. And, by the way, they did not sign the Declaration of Independence as Freddy Freedom and Danny Democracy.

Benny, would your statements be so bold if you took off your mask? I'll fight right along with you to defend your right to freedom of speech, but first I would like to know who is beside me in the foxhole.

Concert electrifying despite hardships

Despite the 30-minute delay in opening the doors while a large crowd waited outside in the cold climate; despite the long lines of people waiting to utilize the restrooms or long lines of people waiting to buy beer or mixed drinks; despite having to stand for hours during the concert because seating was not provided; despite all these negative events, the positive, electrifying energy was not dampened for those fortunate enough to attend the Thunderbirds and Stevie Ray Vaughn concert Saturday, Feb. 28, at the Holiday Inn Convention Center in Midland.

When Stevie Ray Vaughn began to play, at least 50 percent of those attending the concert began dancing in the aisles. It looked like a massive aerobics class and felt like the New Orleans Mardi Gras in Midland!

Thank you Holiday Inn and concert promoters for the concert of the decade!

Thanks to the Midland County Sheriff's Department for the quick and efficient action that enabled us to enjoy this concert given by the Vaughn Brothers.

'Platoon' opportunity to see horror of war

Recently, my husband and I attended the movie, "Platoon." Most of the Vietnam war was fought during my childhood, partially resulting in my inability to understand it. Reflecting on it, most of what I remember hearing was negative comments about our military, our government, and the draft dodgers.

Only in the last few years have I learned the tragedy of Vietnam. How can our country reject the men that served for her, losing lives, limbs, and the peace of mind most of us take for granted? I highly recommend "Platoon" for others like me that need to know the horror and reality of this war. However, I must caution against the strong language and violence for some viewers. Maybe we can begin to understand and appreciate the sacrifices made on our behalf.

In the theater, we had the privilege of sitting near a Vietnam veteran. As the movie ended, the crowd silently filed out, trying to deal with the impact of what they watched on the screen. This veteran sat alone, silently crying as he tries to deal with this impact each day of his life. As we left, my husband and I shook his hand and thanked him. I hugged him and cried my own tears, vowing to do more for these men if I can. He is a hero in our eyes, as are the thousands of other veterans. It is our hope that other people will join us in thanking these men for their bravery and thanking God for our freedom.

Letters Policy

The Reporter-Telegram welcomes letters on various topics. We prefer typed or printed letters. Typewritten letters should be double-spaced and should not exceed two pages. Shorter letters are preferred. Handwritten letters must be legible. They should be signed and contain writer's address and telephone numbers, home and work, for possible verification. However, only the writer's name will be published.

Libelous letters or letters deemed in bad taste will not be published. We do not publish anonymous letters, letters addressed to particular groups or the general public ("open" letters) or copies of letters sent to others. We reserve the right to condense and correct spelling, grammar and punctuation. Letter writers ordinarily are limited to one publication per month. No particular day of publication can be promised, but to appear in a Sunday or Monday newspaper, letters must be received by 8 a.m. Friday. Otherwise, letters must be received two full days prior to publication. Letters may appear any day of publication.

Cause-linked marketing could be on way out

Many corporations have recently engaged in cause-related marketing, contributing a few cents from each sale to one or more charities or causes. Other corporations publicize their contributions to a variety of similar organizations.

But these actions have spawned questions concerning the propriety, ethics, and even the legality of these contributions. Although the good will engendered does accrue to the corporations, some of the corporate stockholders maintain that these monies come from earnings, those funds over and above capital investments and operating expenses. These earnings are looked upon as the return-on-investment that by rights belong to the shareholders.

Some stockholders oppose the non-consent contributions per se. Others are not in favor of the particular charities or causes chosen, some diametrically opposed to the delegated recipients. And they maintain that such contributions are a dilution of their equity in the corporation. In analogous cases, the Securities and Exchange Commission has ruled that dilution of the stockholders' equity is irregular and has forbidden such actions.

Other opponents of this corporate largesse claim that it is a form of "taxation without representation," a misappropriation of funds. They maintain that the end does not justify the means and demand that corporate officials cease squandering their equity without their approval. Most likely, efforts will soon be made to restrict such contributions through the courts.

'Sound of Music' struck only beautiful chords

I would like to add my name to the host of people who came away from "The Sound of Music" performance at the Midland Community Theatre with nothing but accolades for the fine performance.

We are indeed fortunate to have a community theatre of this caliber in Midland. My hat is off to the many fine performers who give their time and talents freely for the benefit of us all.

Reagan's strength, wisdom pays off with Gorbachev

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.

Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — In less than 10 days a momentous event has occurred that shows President Reagan is a far stronger and more effective leader than the American people have been led to believe because of the Iranian arms deal fiasco.

The president may not be a meticulous genius about details and he may have placed too much trust in those to whom he delegated authority in his compassionate eagerness to secure release of American hostages, but on the big issues that are vitally important to us, our children and grandchildren, his strength, firmness and wisdom have paid off in the manner of outstanding statesmanship.

At the Reykjavik summit meeting with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev last October, President Reagan refused to abandon development of an anti-missile system to defend America against nuclear attack. When, at the final meeting, Gorbachev insisted on that as the price for far-reaching nuclear arms reduction agreements, the president picked up his notes and walked out. He was blamed for the collapse of the summit and accused of blocking any possibility of arms control agreements with the Soviets during the rest of his presidency.

What happened? A week ago Saturday, Gorbachev amazed the world by announcing he was no longer linking abandonment of the president's strategic defense program to agreement on the president's original "zero option" proposal for removal of all medium range nuclear missiles in Europe.

What a victory for President Reagan! Once again, he has been proved right in his handling of the Soviets. While critics assailed him for spending too much on defense, he restored America's military strength so we would not have to negotiate from a position of weakness. When the Soviets refused to remove their SS-20 missiles targeted on western Europe which had no medium range missiles, the president deployed the medium range Pershing II artillery and cruise missiles which can reach Russia. That is the major reason why Gorbachev wants the "zero option" agreement."

On Monday the Soviets presented to the U.S. negotiators in Geneva Gorbachev's plan for de-linked conclusion of a separate pact for removal of all Soviet and American medium range missiles in Europe.

Bernard Kaplan, our chief European correspondent, reported this week that our allies suspect Gorbachev's objective is to "decouple" the U.S. and NATO. However, the European allies approved "zero option" when the president first proposed it, and he didn't intend any decoupling of America from Europe.

The allies also fear, Bernie reported, that with no medium range missiles available, NATO would have virtually nothing to counter the several hundred Soviet short range missiles that are deployed in East Germany and Czechoslovakia. That, of course, is not true. Even without the Pershing II and ground-based cruise missiles, NATO could respond to a Soviet attack with submarine-launched cruise missiles, the British and French nuclear forces and, ultimately, America's land based strategic forces.

Furthermore, Gorbachev said he is willing to negotiate elimination of the Soviet short range missiles, although he now wants to keep those negotiations separate from the medium range negotiations. This represents a backward step from his position at Reykjavik and will be unacceptable to the Western allies. The White House has already made clear that President Reagan is not going to rush into a medium range missile agreement at the expense of western Europe's security.

National Security adviser Frank Carlucci, in an exclusive interview in Washington this week with John Wallach, our foreign affairs editor, said:

"We don't want to be pushed into too rapid an agreement. We want to reach an agreement as soon as possible but we want to be certain it is a good agreement." He described verification and the short range missile problem as the two "principle issues" that must be satisfactorily settled as part of a "zero option" agreement with the Soviets.

"The only reason the Soviets are negotiating now," he added, "is because Ronald Reagan has restored America's strength and he's adopted a firm negotiating position."

That's the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, and let's not forget it.

EDUCATION IN BRIEF

UTPB seeks applicants

ODESSA — The University of Texas of the Permian Basin invites international students to apply for Summer Crossroads 1987, a week-long program scheduled from May 30-June 13 in Los Angeles.

Participants will live with a local family and meet with community leaders in the arts, government, business and media.

To be eligible, students must be at the graduate level and plan to return home no later than May, 1988. A limited number of partial travel grants are available.

Summer Crossroads offers an opportunity to meet with American, as well as other international students, to compare educational experiences of colleges and universities and talk over other aspects of life in the U.S.

Discussions also will focus on the problems of culture shock and reentry into the home culture.

For information or applications, call Vickie Gomez, Foreign Student Adviser, at 367-2210.

Crime lecture offered

ODESSA — C. Ray Jeffery, professor of Criminology at Florida State University in Tallahassee and a world-class criminologist, will lecture on "Bioenvironmental Aspects of Crime Causation" at 7 p.m. Wednesday at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

Jeffery, former president of the American Society of Criminology, is the bounder of bio-criminology, a study of genetics, chemical imbalance and crime.

A wine-and cheese reception will follow the lecture, which is open to the public at no charge.

Women's works shown

ODESSA — In celebration of Women's History Month in Texas, the library at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin will exhibit works that recognize outstanding contributions women have made to the state's heritage.

Library hours are 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday-Thursday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday, 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday and 1 to 6 p.m. Sunday.

Depression to be topic

ODESSA — In its continuing series on health issues, the Women's Center at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin will host a brown bag seminar on depression.

Joel Greenspoon, professor of psychology and coordinator of Behavioral Sciences at UTPB, will present "Depression: Healthy or Dangerous" at 12:15 p.m. Wednesday in the Devonian Room. Warning signs of depression, coping methods and resources for help will be included in the discussion.

Fee for the seminar is $5. To register, call 367-2218.

Nine short courses to begin soon at Midland College

From Staff Reports

The Midland College Department of Continuing Education will offer nine short courses beginning March 23.

Courses include Speaking for Advancement, Stained Glass II, Cake Decorating II, Aerobic Dancing, Comparative Religion (Eastern), Bookkeeping Fundamentals II, Crochet, Tole Painting II and Concrete Masonry.

Dr. Tyler Tindall will teach Speaking for Advancement from 7 to 9 p.m. Mondays through March 30. Effectively communicating can either make or break our relationships with others. This course provides suggestions for making that important first impression through voice, appearance, and message. The course fee is $7.

Stained Glass II will be taught by Joyce Low from 7 to 10 p.m. Mondays through May 4. Students will learn to design and construct a leaded panel complete with rebar, weatherproofing, and installation. Prerequisite is Stained Glass I or the equivalent. A supply and equipment list is available the first night of class. Supplies purchased for Stained Glass I will be used. The class is limited to 16 students and the fee is $28.

Doris Muehlbrad will teach Cake Decorating II from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. Mondays through April 13. Instruction covers intricate flowers, lily cup flowers, garlands, roping, and setting up wedding cakes. Prerequisite is Cake Decorating I or the equivalent. The class is limited to 20 students and the fee is $19.

Aerobic Dancing will be taught by Marsha Teaff from 7 to 8:30 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays through May 5. The course is directed toward increasing cardiovascular endurance and stamina, decreasing body fat and improving body tone. Both exercise and dance movements, accompanied by disco, ballroom, and ballet music, are included. Students should wear comfortable clothing and bring a towel. The class is limited to 60 students and the fee is $28.

Dr. Charles Simmons will teach Comparative Religion (Eastern) 7 to 9 p.m. Tuesdays through May 12. Students will comparr and study the religious experience of Eastern peoples from their beginnings to the present. The great religions will be discussed along with ethical and moral imperatives. The course fee is $25.

Bookkeeping Fundamentals II will be taught by Brent Holloway from 7 to 10 p.m. Wednesdays through May 13. This course is a continuation of Bookkeeping Fundamentals I, covering combination journals, general and subsidiary ledgers, payroll systems, and inventories. Automated data processing also will be introduced. The class is limited to 30 students and the fee is $37.

Peggy McClay will teach Crochet I from 7 to 9 p.m. Wednesdays through April 29. Students will learn the steps to crocheting, including terminology, various stitches, yarns, threads, and needles. A supply list is available at the Continuing Education Office. Supplies cost is about $5. The course fee is $19.

Tole Painting II will be taught from 7 to 10 p.m. Thursdays through May 7. For students who have experience in Tole Painting, this course begins with a brief review of basic procedures and advances to more difficult designs and objects. Required supplies cost about $10. The class is limited to 15 students and the fee is $28.

James Thomas will teach Concrete Masonry from 9 a.m. to noon and from 1 to 5 p.m. Saturdays through May 2. Students will study concrete masonry walls, construction details, properties and mixing of mortar, workmanship and masonry practice, painting, waterproofing, and architectural patterns. Students also will participate in the actual laying of concrete for both men and women. The class is limited to 14 students and the fee is $55.

For information, visit the Continuing Education Office or call 685-4518.

Learning Disability Screening Clinic

Help is waiting for your child March 15-21 at a special Dyslexia Screening Clinic.

Dyslexia. It's a word most people don't understand. But, if your child is one of the millions who suffer from dyslexia, you understand the pain and frustration this disability can cause.

You know your child isn't lazy...stupid...or disobedient, as many have said. Although the strict definition of dyslexia is "a disturbance of the ability to read," you realize that it affects every aspect of your child's life.

Dyslexia has made reading almost impossible.

Aside from difficulty with reading and composition, your child shies away from sports involving eye/hand coordination. He has trouble following directions and is often clumsy and insecure. These are just a few of the symptoms that can make the life of a dyslexic child confusing and miserable.

Now, a special Dyslexia Screening Clinic, affiliated with Dyslexia Centers of America, offers you and your child hope for a normal life.

Sponsored by Boyd Chiropractic Clinics of Midland who have served the health care needs of the area for over 40 years, the clinic will feature the world's foremost chiropractic experts in the treatment of dyslexia.

During the Clinic, Dr. Boyd will instruct other professionals in his treatment methods which involve no drugs or anesthesia. The treatment, which centers around adjustments of the spinal and cranial structures, along with kinesiological and muscular balancing has brought about a marked improvement in a majority of cases.

Call 684-5436 to schedule an appointment for your child's free screening and examination. The initial meeting determines whether your child will benefit from the procedure. If your child is diagnosed as receptive to future care, a reasonable fee may be discussed to cover all aspects of possible correction. We will be happy to discuss your insurance coverage.

For convenience and accessibility, the Clinic will be held at the Holiday Inn Country Villa, 4300 W. Highway 80 in Midland.

Appointments may be scheduled from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

MHS girls win first title

Cumings, Edwards pace decisive relay

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

ODESSA — The Midland High girls track team not only ended the four-year reign of Odessa Permian in the West Texas Relays here Saturday, but the Lady Bulldogs recorded school history.

"We had never, ever even won a team title before," said Midland High coach Sonja Pittman. "This is going to do wonders for our program and we're thrilled."

Midland High won the 1600 relay in record 4:01.67 time, the final event of the day, on great legs by Amy Cumings and Ethel Edwards to haul down 85 points for the day to come from behind to defeat Abilene High, which finished with 76 points.

Midland Lee's girls finished third with 64¼ points for third in a day that was wrought with problems.

"We drop the baton in the sprint relay and Tami Woodberry is leading in the 100 hurdles until she hit the last hurdle and ended up second in a rare loss for her," said Lee coach Janice Baulch. "It was Friday the 13th a day late."

San Angelo won the 5A boys division with 88 points while Permian finished second at 78 and Lee third at 76 in a battle that was expected to be that close.

"We didn't win it, but these sophomores and juniors we have are competing," said Lee coach Eddie Wolski. "It's an adventure every time out with these kids."

Lubbock Estacado won the 4A division by a 145-122 margin over surprising Big Spring while Slaton took a narrow 69-63 margin over Kermit in the 3A division.

The MHS girls won only the 1600 relay and the 100 in the competitive 28-team field, but had quality points with two second places in the other two relays.

Edwards' 11.99 in the 100 was the first time she had broken 12 seconds and she defeated Odessa High's Kasandra McDaniel, who beat Edwards last week.

"I was fanatical today about beating McDaniel, but I'm sure she's going to be after me the next time we meet," said Edwards.

The Lee girls also won two events, both from Roz Eaden in the long jump and triple jump. Eaden won the long jump on Friday and took the triple jump Saturday with a 35-6¼.

The Lee boys won only one event with junior Jimmy Fennell taking a season best 14.24 in the 110 hurdles.

"I wanted to break 14.0, but this is close enough for this early in the year. The other will come in time," said Fennell.

Lee, however, placed second in both relays and got seconds from sophomore Anthony Keys (49.36 career best) and senior Mike Garza in the 1600.

The MHS boys got a second from Anthony Adkison in the 100, a third in the mile relay and a fourth from John St. Germain in the 110 hurdles.

Adkison finished second to two-event winner Patrick Wilson of Permian in the 100, and said, "Wilson was better today, but I guarantee you I'll get him before we get through this year."

In the 4A division, Big Spring's Brian Mayfield set a division record in the high jump with a 6-8½ and Greenwood's Steve Popham set the 3A division record in the 100 with a 10.91.

Big Spring also got victories from Mario Gonzales in the 3200 and Ben Gonzales in the 1600.

Tradition at Three Rivers rivals MC's

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Midland College has developed an enviable winning tradition under the astute tutelage of Coach Jerry Stone, collecting Western Junior College Athletic and Region V titles like they were baseball cards.

The Chaparrals' opening round opponent in the National Junior College Athletic Association tournament at Hutchinson, 6 p.m., Tuesday, not only has a tradition, but it's a longer, older one.

It's not certain how many cups of coffee that will buy without a quarter at this year's nationals, but you've got to be impressed by figures that list 12 conference titles, eight trips to nationals and a national title.

That's the record Gene Bess has compiled since taking over at Three Rivers Community College in Popular Bluff, Mo., back in 1969.

WITH ITS 90-83 win over Burlington, Iowa, Three Rivers won a berth in nationals with a 32-4 record.

It was the heroics of Jeff Ford, a 6-6 sophomore with a 17.2 average per game, and bench depth that pulled Three Rivers through against Burlington. Ford scored 28 points and grabbed 17 rebounds.

For the Chaps and Stone, playing Three Rivers may be a little bit like looking into a mirror, no rafter-scrapers, but good overall scoring balance and a bench that provides a lift when the going gets tough.

Three Rivers averages 76.5 points a game and surrenders 62.7 defensively.

The Chaps have six players averaging in double figures with Mookie Blaylock 18.0, Lincoln Minor 15.0, Todd Duncan 14.0, Billy Ray Smith 12.0, Herman Henry 10.0 and Alex Stanwood 10.0. Blaylock, Minor and Duncan give the Chaps a zone-busting three-point goal threat, but a threat that has its disadvantages.

There was a stretch when the Chaps relied too heavily on the outside shooters as the inside scoring threat withered on the vine. However, the Chaps went back to basics late in the season and it has paid off.

Defensively, the Chaps surrender 70 points a game, but that's something you can afford to do when you are scoring at a 94.0 clip.

Bess normally recruits from the Missouri, Iowa, Illinois area. Ford, an Oklahoman, is the only starter not from Missouri.

Irish use Rivers' free throw to oust TCU, 58-57

Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — To Notre Dame's David Rivers, it was an obvious foul that gave him a chance to deliver a Fighting Irish victory. For Texas Christian's Jim Killingsworth, it was just the luck of the call.

Rivers sank the front end of a one-and-one with four seconds remaining and 18th-ranked Notre Dame advanced to the semifinals of NCAA East Regional Saturday with a 58-57 victory over No. 19 Texas Christian.

"We've lost games this way, now we win one this way," said Notre Dame Coach Digger Phelps.

Notre Dame, 24-7, meets the winner of the Michigan-North Carolina game, also played Saturday afternoon in Charlotte.

Rivers, who had a game-high 24 points, had plagued the Horned Frogs with 3-point shooting in the first half, hitting four of six. He cooled off in the second half, but Scott Hicks picked up the pace with two crucial 3-pointers, the second of which tied the score at 53 with 3:02 remaining.

The score was tied twice more before TCU's Norman Anderson drove to the basket uncontested, only to miss a layup with 12 seconds left. Mark Stevenson rebounded and passed to Rivers, who was fouled by Jamie Dixon along the right sideline.

Rivers hit the first free throw, but the second one rimmed out. Larry Richard grabbed the rebound for TCU, but Hicks intercepted the pass to preserve the victory.

"He just bumped me with the hip as I tried to go by him. There wasn't any doubt in my mind that it was a foul," Rivers said. "I saw how much room I had to work with, and I was just trying to penetrate and go around him."

Killingsworth, whose TCU squad dropped to 24-7, didn't want to argue the call after the game.

"There isn't anything that we can change. You can talk about all kinds of calls during a ball game," Killingsworth said. "I think we played well. It was just unfortunate we got a bad break at the end and that's about all there is to it."

Trailing 29-25 at halftime, TCU tied the score three times before Rivers sank a 3-point basket to give the Fighting Irish a 40-37 edge with 11:43 left. Richard's jumper got the Horned Frogs within one at 11:29, and a follow shot by Anderson gave TCU its first lead at 41-40 with 10:32 remaining.

Mark Stevenson's jumper at 10:05 gave the Irish the lead, but eight straight points by the Horned Frogs — six by Dixon on a 3-point basket and a three-point play — gave TCU a 49-42 cushion before Notre Dame's final rally.

"What hurt us was that they got the 3-pointer at a very inopportune

La Porte caps 40-0 season with 5A title

Associated Press

AUSTIN — La Porte overcame top scorer Charles McCovery's foul trouble Saturday night to keep its perfect record intact with a 64-58 Class 5A boys' state basketball title victory over San Antonio Holmes.

It was the first trip to the state tournament for both teams, and La Porte wrapped up a 40-0 season. Holmes finished at 32-6.

Held to two points in the first half, McCovery joined teammates William Gooden and Tommy Washington in La Porte's winning second-half surge, with the margin going as high as 14 points.

The crowd was listed at 15,076, short of the Texas high school record of 16,285 set Friday night for the Holmes-Dunbar game.

LA PORTE (64): Pearson 5-9 2-2 12, Gooden 8-18 3-5 19, Harris 1-3 1-2 3, C. McCovery 4-13 5-6 13, Washington 8-11 3-3 19, P. McCovery 0-4 0-0 0, Allison 0-3 0-0 0, Fantroy 0-0 0-0 0. Totals 26-60 14-18 64.

Dallas Hillcrest 51 Cleburne 42

AUSTIN — Dallas Hillcrest, tagged with 10 losses during the season, hit crucial free throws to win the Class 4A title over Cleburne.

For the second game in a row, Hillcrest, 24-10, made only one field goal in the final quarter but held on to win.

Hillcrest led after three quarters.

Bulldog divers heading to state

Neatherlin, Gruzins set sights on Top 10 finishes

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Midland High diver Nate Neatherlin only lost two competitions during the 1987 season, one of which was against teammate and good friend Alan Gruzins. Now, both are preparing for the state swimming and diving championships this weekend in Austin.

"I got beat by a kid from Amarillo, Mark Lively, and once to Al," said Neatherlin, who has been diving with Gruzins seriously for three years now.

"I've been diving since my sophomore year," said Neatherlin. "I've always been interested in diving. I'd mess around on the board but it wasn't serious until I was a sophomore."

"Me too, except I moved away my junior year to Australia for a year," said Gruzins.

The two divers have slightly different goals for the state tournament, goals based on the premis of not being able to win state championships.

"My goal is fifth place," said Neatherlin. "But, I'll probably finish, realistically speaking, seventh or eighth."

"Mine is the Top 10 but I'm just going to do the best I can," said Gruzins. I'm glad I made it."

"I had it in my mind I would make state but I wasn't over confident," added Neatherlin. "Regionals was the most nervous I've ever been at a meet and Al only qualified by a point and he even missed a dive."

Neatherlin and Gruzins also benefit from the diving experience of their coach, Jesse Marsh, a former diver who can relate his experiences.

"He's a great coach," said Neatherlin. "He treats us like people instead of students. He's been there and he can tell us what to expect. He really helps us a lot."

"Yeah, he helps us a ton," added Gruzins.

And, the competition against each other adds to their performances. In fact, Neatherlin is one of the reasons Gruzins enjoys diving.

"I like having the constant competition with my partner," said Gruzins. "Also, it's related to gymnastics and trampoline, which I also like a lot."

In diving, a diver's performance is scored by judges, rating up to a 10 on any given dive. Each dive also has a difficulty factor to multiply into the score.

"Ten is perfect, but you won't see that at the high school level," said Neatherlin. "Judges don't like to give high school divers 10s. They don't even like giving eights.

"I pulled an eight once on an inward one and a half and my best overall full score is a 376.20," said Neatherlin.

Gruzins hit his best score, a seven, on a front two and a half, which also happens to be his favorite dive because "it has the most height, the fastest spin and it's easy to put in," he said.

"I like the reverse dive," said Neatherlin. "It's probably overall, pound for pound, my best dive. I always score around seven on it. It's my bread and butter dive."

For the two divers to have a chance at finishing one-two this weekend, which has been common at meets this year, they'll have to hit far above their normal efforts.

The two divers are part of a large ensemble of Tall City swimmers to make the trip to Austin next week, including five MHS swimmers and one from Midland Lee.

MHS will send its girls 400 free relay squad of Becky Simpson, Michaela Hasek, Laura Morris and Shawna Voorhees, and Sam Perry, one of the favorites in the 100 backstroke. Lee's Alan Reed will join the fun in both the 200 and 500 events.

Hasek and Voorhees will also swim in two individual events.

Sweeny 66, Hughes Springs 64

AUSTIN — Sweeny fought off a furious comeback on the fourth-quarter shooting of Benford Williams to edge Hughes Springs for the Class 3A title.

It is Sweeny's second title in three years, and the narrow victory spoiled Hughes Springs' bid for a perfect season.

In the second half, 6-foot-5 senior Darrin Terry poured in 20 points for a game-high 28 as Hughes Springs erased the deficit and took its only lead, 58-57, on Jerry Martin's layup after a steal with 4:06 to play.

Williams' 16-foot field goal gave Sweeny the lead again, Helms followed with a goal after a rebound and Nick Bess' short jumper pushed Sweeny's margin to five points.

Morton 84 Liberty Hill 72

AUSTIN — Jerry Joyce scored 32 points even though he was hobbled for nearly a quarter with an ankle injury as defending champion Morton defeated Liberty Hill for the Class 2A title.

Morton, appearing in the tournament for the 11th time since 1970, won its fifth championship.

Morton pulled away after three quarters, 54-47, but Joyce crashed to the floor with 6:21 left in the game when he was fouled by Steve Smets of Liberty Hill.

Liberty Hill, 34-4, made 24 of 30 free throws, including 10 of 10 for Clay Cole, while Morton was 12 for 22 from the free throw line.

Paducah 71 Bronte 39

AUSTIN — Will Flemons scored 21 points and grabbed 16 rebounds as Paducah walloped Bronte for the Class A championship.

It is the first boys' basketball title for Paducah, which had reached the tournament only once before, in 1974.

Paducah, raising its record to 33-2, started four players 6-3 or taller, including the 6-6 Flemons, and out-rebounded Bronte 50-34.

Bronte's tallest starter was 6-2 Stephen Lee, who led his team in scoring with 12 points.

North Carolina 109, Michigan 97

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — J.R. Reid scored 15 of his 27 points in the decisive first half as No. 2 North Carolina advanced to the semifinals of the NCAA East Regional with a victory over Michigan.

North Carolina, 31-3, scored the first 12 points of the game, then used a 32-10 run later in the half to take a 23-point lead. Michigan, 20-12, never got closer than six points after that.

The Tar Heels will play Notre Dame, a 58-57 winner over Texas Christian, Thursday at East Rutherford, N.J. North Carolina, which has won 13 of its last 14, is the only school in the nation to advance to the final 16 in each of the past seven seasons.

Kenny Smith scored 22 and Jeff Lebo 16 for the Tar Heels, who had five players in double figures as they broke the 100-point barrier for the second straight game. North Carolina opened the tournament last Thursday with a 113-82 rout of Pennsylvania.

After a basket by Michigan's Garde Thompson pulled the Wolverines to within 22-21 with 12:36 left in the first half, Tar Heel guard Ranzino Smith scored eight points in a spree that ended with North Carolina ahead 54-31.

Michigan cut the deficit to 60-43 at halftime, then opened the second half with a 15-4 spurt to close to within 64-56. North Carolina, however, got points from seven different players in a 22-9 run that made it 86-67 with 9:40 left.

Duke holds off Xavier, 65-60

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Kevin Strickland sank four foul shots in the final 20 seconds, and No. 17 Duke beat Xavier, Ohio 65-60 Saturday in second round play.

The score was tied eight times before Strickland, who finished with 12 points, gave the Blue Devils a 62-60 lead with just :20 left on the clock.

Xavier's Byron Larkin put up a 17-footer in the final seconds, trying for the tie, but the shot bounced off the rim. Duke opened up the final margin with free throws in the final seconds.

The Blue Devils, 24-8, play No. 3 Indiana, the top-seeded team in the Midwest Regional, in the regional semifinals Friday at Cincinnati.

Senior guard Tommy Amaker scored 20, one less than his career high, to lead Duke. Freshman Robert Brickey came off the bench to score 12 for the Blue Devils, who played with leading scorer and rebounder Danny Ferry in foul trouble for most of the game.

Midwest Region

The first half was dominated by spurts. Xavier jumped to a 6-1 advantage as Duke went 3:23 before making its first field goal.

The Musketeers, playing in the tournament's second round for the first time, had four turnovers in the opening four minutes and were tied at 14 on two consecutive baskets by Brickey.

Indiana 107, Auburn 90

INDIANAPOLIS — Steve Alford scored 31 points and backcourt partner Keith Smart added 20 points and 15 assists as Indiana rallied from a 14-point deficit to beat Auburn in the second round.

Forward Daryl Thomas added 27 points for the Hoosiers, who finished with their highest point total in four years. Alford, an two-time All America, was held scoreless for the first 10 minutes but went on to hit seven 3-point goals, including five in the second half.

Auburn raced to an early 24-10 lead, but Indiana hit 14 of its last 19 shots in the first half to take a 53-48 advantage at intermission.

A late Auburn rally cut the margin to eight points at one point, but the Hoosiers put the game away with a closing 17-8 streak.

The victory moved Indiana, 26-4, into the regional semifinals at Cincinnati next Friday. Auburn ended its season at 18-13.

Friars impeach Governors in OT

Associated Press

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Providence Coach Rick Pitino had his team's second-round NCAA tournament game all figured out with more than five minutes left in regulation and Austin Peay leading by 10 points.

Providence, which was led by the 26 points of Ernie Lewis and 25 of Billy Donovan, defeated Austin Peay 90-87 in overtime Saturday to advance to Louisville for the regional semifinals Thursday.

"Rick told the team in the huddle that we were going to win," Providence assistant coach Gordon Chiesa said. "He said our press was making Austin Peay very tired."

Providence, 23-8, used a furious rally over the final 5:52 to erase a 75-65 lead by the Governors. Donovan had 11 of the points in a 15-4 run that gave the Friars an 80-79 lead with 2:29 to play.

Austin Peay, the 14th seed in the region which defeated No. 11 Illinois in the first round, went ahead 82-80 on a three-point play by Darryl Bedford with 57 seconds left.

Southeast Region

Delray Brooks of Providence missed a jumper, and Bob Thomas was fouled on the rebound.

Thomas, a senior who made four of just six free throw attempts during the regular season, missed the foul shot. Providence was able to tie the score on a jumper by Donovan with 16 seconds left.

Austin Peay, 20-12, ran the clock down to six seconds before Lawrence Mitchell, who finished with 27 points, missed a long jumper. Thomas was fouled on the rebound and went to the line with two seconds left for his sixth free-throw attempt of the game. Thomas missed again, sending the game into overtime.

Alabama 101, New Orleans 76

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Derrick McKey and Mark Gottfried riddled the usually tough University of New Orleans defense, leading Alabama into the round of 16 in the of the NCAA tournament.

McKey hit 10 of 12 attempts and had 26 points before going to the bench with seven minutes left in the game. Gottfried had 20 points on 7-of-9 shooting. Overall, the Tide shot 73 percent fro... the field.

Alabama's victory over New Orleans snapped a 10-game winning streak for the Privateers and put an embarrassing end to New Orleans' first trip to the NCAA playoffs. The 101 points exceeded by 14 the previous defensive high for New Orleans. Alabama's 58-point first half also was the biggest this season against New Orleans, which finished 26-4.

Alabama meets Providence, a 90-87 victor over Austin Peay earlier Saturday, in Louisville in the regional semifinals on Thursday. It's the third straight year for Alabama in the round of 16.

Alabama enters the round of 16 with a 28-4 record, only the second team in the modern era to win both the Southeastern Conference regular season and tournament titles.

Dembo's 41 sends UCLA packing, 78-68

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — Fennis Dembo scored a career-high 41 points Saturday to lead the University of Wyoming to a 78-68 upset of 15th-ranked UCLA in the second round of the NCAA basketball tournament.

The Cowboys, 24-9, took control in the final five minutes of the game to earn a shot at No. 1-ranked Nevada-Las Vegas next Friday at the West Regional semifinals in Seattle.

UCLA, 25-7, took the lead early in the first half and held it, but never by more than eight points, until Wyoming's surge. Wyoming outscored the Bruins 18-4 over the final 6½ minutes.

The Cowboys, winners of the Western Athletic Conference tournament, took the lead for good at 65-64 on center Eric Leckner's inside basket with 5:08 to play. Leckner scored again, for Wyoming's seventh straight point, to pad the margin to 67-64 with 4:36 to play.

The Pac-10 champion Bruins sliced the lead to one at 67-66 on Jackie Haley's fast break basket with 3:25 to play, but Wyoming reeled off seven straight points, all on free throws, to clinch the victory.

West Region

Dembo, a 6-foot-5 junior whose previous high was 34, hit seven three pointers, including 4-of-7 in the first half. He scored 23 points in the second half, including 10-of-10 from the foul line.

Nevada-Las Vegas 80, Kansas St. 61

SALT LAKE CITY — Armon Gilliam scored 24 points, and Freddie Banks added 15 as No. 1 ranked Nevada-Las Vegas overcame a sluggish first half and overpowered Kansas State.

The Runnin' Rebels, who trailed only once in the first half, went on a 12-1 run in the first 4:40 of the second half and led 48-28 as they moved into the semifinals of the West Regional.

Banks scored five points, including a 3-point goal, in the burst.

The Runnin' Rebels, who made only two of 16 3-point attempts in the first half, took the lead for good at 7:52 on a shot by Gary Graham from just inside the 3-point line.

UNLV, 35-1, of the Pacific Coast Athletic Association, lost the lead briefly early in the game when the Wildcats went on a 6-0 spurt to take a 19-17 advantage with 11:26 left in the first half.

CHAPS

Starting with Ford are Kevin Reiler, 6-4, freshman with a 10.5 ppg; Robert Ison, 6-5, freshman, ppg 11.4; Ray Pugh, 6-4, sophomore, ppg 14.1; and point guard Marshall Ayers, 6-1 sophomore with a 6.1 average. However, its Ayers who puts it all together, running the team and setting up teammates.

THREE RIVERS missed out on nationals last year, despite a 29-7 record and will be making its first trip to Hutchinson since 1984.

Midland College, in comparison, has a 6-2 record, but this is only MC's third trip to nationals. However, the Chaps have a .500 record for the event, winning it all in 1982 and taking a fourth in 1985.

This season has been hectic for the Chaps. After an early 13-game win streak, MC finished in third place in the WJCAC standings. Losses were to first place New Mexico Junior College, by two, 75-73, and one point, 103-102, and to Howard College by three, 78-75.

The latter NMJC and Howard losses were back-to-back and marked the season's low ebb.

BUT THIS was a team that bounced back to win the Region V tournament and post a 29-3 record.

Stone hopes that it is a team peaking at the opportune moment. At least, he saw signs of maturity and determination to make as much of their ability as they could in the three-game Region V sweep at Waco.

Most of all, perhaps, Stone saw signs of the leadership he had been hoping for all season as Blaylock was named the tournament's MVP.

CHAPSTYYQUES— Herkimer, N.Y., and Mesa, Ariz., are teams in this year's NJCAA field over which MC holds victories...For stay-at-homes, Ed Clements will be doing the play-by-play of MC tournament action and will also have a Jerry Stone and locker room show.....San Jacinto will be attempting to make it four championships in the last five years. Texas has won five championships in the last seven years with WJCAC entries Western Texas College and MC winning in 1980 and 1982....The only interlopers in that period were Westark, Fort Smith, Ark., in 1981 and Dixie, Utah, in 1985....

Astros' Thon takes a hike

KISSIMMEE, Fla. (AP) — Houston's Dickie Thon, expected to regain the starting shortstop position for the first time since a beaning incident almost ended his career in 1984, walked out of training camp Saturday.

Thon, who could not be reached for comment, did not speak to Manager Hal Lanier or General Manager Dick Wagner before leaving, hours before he was supposed to start an exhibition game against Atlanta.

"He didn't say anything to me and it would be unfair to make a comment until I've spoken wth Dickie," Lanier said.

Lanier had plans to end the shortstop platoon system with Thon and Craig Reynolds, but now he doesn't know what is on Thon's mind.

"That was the plan coming into spring training," Lanier said. "But right now, I don't know what will happen."

Thon hit .248 last season while sharing the position with Reynolds, who hit .249.

"He didn't speak to me and I'm not going to say anything until he does," Reynolds said. "Dickie doesn't need any pressure put on him right now. He's had enough of that already."

Reynolds said he knew of nothing troubling Thon although "he hasn't quite seemed like himself the last couple of days."

Aguirre lifts Mavs to win over Rockets

Associated Press

Mark Aguirre scored 30 points to help the Dallas Mavericks hold the lead from the second bucket on and defeat the Houston Rockets 118-109 in NBA play Saturday night.

The Mavericks trailed only once at 2-0, but had to withstand several Houston rallies to pull out their second victory in four tries against the Rockets.

Dallas, which led 68-54 at halftime — thanks to a 13-0 run at the end of the quarter — increased its lead to 78-61 with 7:36 remaining in the third period. Sam Perkins, who scored 25 points, made the Mavericks' first eight points in the quarter.

But the Rockets came on strong at the end of the third quarter and at the beginning of the final period, outscoring Dallas 20-4 to cut the margin to 90-89 with 9:34 left in the game.

Spurs 121, Suns 108

Walter Berry's 21 points led seven San Antonio players in double figures as the Spurs coasted to a victory over Phoenix.

San Antonio led from beginning to end and snapped a three-game losing steak. Phoenix lost its fourth straight, all on the road.

The Suns' Larry Nance led all scorers with 32, and Walter Davis added 25 to the losing effort.

Phoenix pulled within seven twice in the third quarter, the last time at 78-71, only to see the Spurs charge back to open their lead to double figures.

Pistons 98, 76ers 95

Joe Dumars' three-point play with 46 seconds left capped a 17-point Detroit comeback as the Pistons edged Philadelphia for their sixth straight victory.

Dumars hit a 12-foot jumper and was fouled by Philadelphia's David Wingate. His free throw put Detroit ahead 96-95, its first lead since the first quarter.

Philadelphia forward Cliff Robinson had a chance to put the 76ers back in front, but the 77 percent free-throw shooter missed two foul shots with 20 seconds to go. Robinson fouled Pistons center Bill Laimbeer three seconds later, and Laimbeer's two free throws gave Detroit its margin of victory.

Bullets 106, Bulls 105

Jeff Malone scored 31 points, including six in overtime, and helped hold scoring leader Michael Jordan to 13 points as Washington defeated Chicago.

Terry Catledge added 24 points and John Williams 17 as the Bullets broke a three-game losing streak. The Bulls lost for the fourth consecutive time.

Stewart uses 63 to gain Bay Hill lead

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Payne Stewart, so frequently a challenger and so rarely a winner, compiled an 8-under-par 63 and took a one-stroke lead Saturday in the third round of the $600,000 Bay Hill Classic.

Stewart, nine times a runner-up since his last victory in 1983, completed three trips over Arnold Pamer's Bay Hill Club course in 199, 14 strokes under par.

David Frost, the South African who held the second-round lead, did not make a bogey, shot a 66 — and saw Stewart storm right past him.

His long par-saving putt on the 18th hole — which e at 205, six strokes off the pace.

Pohl had a six-under-par 65 in the near-ideal playing conditions and Strange shot a 68.

It was three more strokes back to the international group of four led by U.S. Open champion Ray Floyd at 208.

Floyd matched par 71 and was tied with Bernhard Langer of West Germany, Tommy Nakajima of Japan and Denis Watson of South Africa. Nakajima and Watson had 68s, Langer a 69.

Greg Norman, the Australian who holds the British Open title, failed to make a move with a 71 and was at 215.

Rangers nip Jays in 10

PORT CHARLOTTE, Fla. (AP) — Mike Stanley's one-out single in the bottom of the 10th inning Saturday scored Bobby Brower with the winning run in a 7-6 exhibition victory over the Toronto Blue Jays.

Brower, who stole home in the bottom of the ninth of a 5-4 victory against Pittsburgh in an earlier "B" game, led off the inning by working Jeff Musselman for a walk.

Brower stole second as Alan Knicely struck out, and after an intentional walk to Tom Paciorek, Stanley delivered his game-winning hit.

Astros edge Braves

KISSIMMEE, Fla. (AP) — Craig Reynolds' pinch-hit single scored Gerald Young in the ninth inning with the winning run as the Houston Astros defeated the Atlanta Braves 4-3 in an exhibition game Saturday.

Bert Pena gave the Astros a 2-0 lead with a two-run double in the second inning. The Astros added another run on Paul Householder's run-scoring single in the eighth.

The Braves scored their first two runs in the third on a run-scoring single by Trench Davis and a two-out single by Ken Oberkfell.

Oberkfell collected four hits for the Braves.

Lee Freshman captures titles

From Staff Reports

The Midland Lee Freshman tracksters raced to their third meet title in a row Saturday in the seven-team Post Freshman Invitational.

The Rebs dominated the running events, winning both the sprint and mile relays, the hurdles, the 100, 200, 400 and 800 races. Lee, which totaled 237 points, outdistanced runner-up Post by 132 points.

In San Angelo, the Lee Freshman girls captured the San Angelo Junior Relays to win its second straight title. Lee outpointed runner-up Del Rio, 149-100 on the strength of wins in both relay events.

Trigg stuns Odessa's Almaguer

FORT WORTH (AP) — Charles Trigg of Houston frustrated Johnny Almaguer of Odessa with his jab-and-move strategy and upset the defending lightweight champion Saturday in the finals of the State Golden Gloves boxing tournament.

Two other 1986 champions were more fortunate as flyweight Sergio Reyes of Fort Worth won a unanimous decision over Ruben Nevarez of Wichita Falls, and light welterweight Booker Kidd of Dallas survived a 3-2 split decision over Darriel Collins of Houston.

Trigg's title was his first since winning the 1984 Silver Gloves.

"I just kept jabbing and moving," the 21-year-old Trigg said. "I knew he had a good left hook and I didn't want to box with him in the center of the ring. I have a lot of respect for him, but I knew if I kept moving and jabbing, I could win."

Collins was especially irked after losing to Kidd, and the decision was loudly booed by the crowd of 5,200.

"It was the same as last year," Collins said, referring to last year's state tournament when Kidd also won a close decision in the finals. But Kidd, 21, defended the decision.

"I won the first two rounds," he said. "I admit he won the last round. But you can't win a match with one round."

Kidd said he ran out of gas in the third and final round while Collins "kept busy and threw a lot of punches. But I piled up a lot of points to the body in the first two rounds."

Reyes also won for the second time over Nevarez. They had met in last year's semifinals. Reyes had expected the taller Nevarez to jab and move more than he did in the rematch.

"About midway through the first round, he stopped and looked like he wanted to go toe-to-toe," Reyes said. "I said to myself, 'come on. That's my kind of fight.'"

The bout was a rematch of last year's semifinal bout when Reyes also won a decision, but after rallying from a first-round knockdown.

"I went straight to his body last year and ran into a left jab," Reyes said. "I learned not to do that this year."

Twelve champions were to be decided, and the winners advance to the National Golden Gloves tournament in Knoxville, Tenn., April 13-18.

Rice homers prevent Red Raider sweep

LUBBOCK (AP) — Rice's Jay Knoblauh hit two homers — including the game-winner in the eighth inning — to lift the Owls to a 10-9 win over Texas Tech and a split of their Southwest Conference baseball double-header Saturday.

The Raiders' Mike Humphreys hit two in the opener to pace Tech to an 8-6 win. Rice is now 18-5 overall and 2-1 in SWC play, while Tech is 10-9 and 1-2.

Knoblauh had a grand-slam homer in the Owls' five-run second inning in the nightcap, added a triple and a run scored in the fourth, and gave the Owls the win with his solo shot off loser Khris Segrist, 0-1, in the eighth.

Paul Dishman had a bases-loaded double to account for Rice's first three runs.

After the Owls had jumped to an 8-0 early lead, Tech came back on the strength of four homers by Dan Spencer, Dave Gech, Tommy Hernandez and Coby DeHaven.

But Ken Sorensen shut out Tech on three singles over the last 3 1-3 innings for the win.

Humphreys's two home runs — a two-run shot in the first and a solo blast in the sixth — highlighted Tech's opening win. Knoblauh and Chris Tucker had solo homers for Rice.

MHS rallies past Lee in Abilene

From Staff Reports

ABILENE — Midland High rallied for four runs in both the fifth and sixth innings to trip Midland Lee 8-4 in both team's final game of the five-game Abilene Tournament Saturday, but the Rebels got the last laugh.

Though the Bulldog win sent both teams home with 3-2 records, the Rebels slid into third place in the 10-team field on the tiebreaking formula. Lee allowed less runs over the two-day affair.

MHS trailed 3-0 going into the top of the fifth, but the 'Dogs battled for four runs off Nickey Sanchez. Lee battled back to tie it at 4-4, but MHS belted reliever Durian Jenkins for four more runs in the sixth for the win.

Eric Boyt went the distance, allowing just six hits. It was the second win of the day for MHS, who earlier beat Plainview, 6-5. Joe Rendon worked the distance for the win in that one.

Lee had also picked up a win earlier, thumping Vernon 17-5 to set up the finale with the Bulldogs.

The real winner of the tournament was state-ranked Abilene Cooper which went 5-0; Lubbock Coronado finished second at 4-1.

Lee's Paul Bacon and Midland High's Tommy Yorkman were named to the All Tournament team, while Cooper placed six players, including MVP David Tolleson to the squad. Tolleson, who has signed a letter-of-intent with Texas, went 6-for-13, with two doubles, two triples and two home runs as well as hurling a two-hit shutout.

Midland High and Lee will square off again to open the District 4-5A season on Tuesday at 4 p.m. at Angels Stadium.

MHS tennis duo upset

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — After tournament titles in two straight weeks and four wins to reach the finals, Midland High's Jill Bramlett and Tami Hertel ran up against some stiff competition Saturday at the Fourth Annual Bob Clark Invitational.

The MHS duo fell in the finals of the girls doubles event to Tanya Hamilton and Lara Mahaney of Lubbock Coronado. For Bramlett, who went to the state tournament last year, Hamilton is no stranger. Both girls, playing with different partners, met up in the regional finals last year.

In their first match with new partners, it was Hamilton/Mahaney that came out on top in stylish 6-3, 6-0 fashion for the doubles crown.

But behind the Bramlett/Hertel second place finish, and a fourth place in boys singles from Chris Jauz, the Bulldogs came away with third place in the nine-team field.

Midland Lee, which came in seventh overall, was led by a sixth place from Steve Lintzen and a seventh by Jeff Probandt in boys singles.

...meeting the challenge

Christie B. Clark uses classified fairly often. She states, "I had previously placed an ad under child care, but received little response. I wanted to publish the ad again, but had a difficult time expressing in words what I needed. It wasn't until Leesa Stone, Classified Consultant, took over and rewrote my ad, that I had such wonderful response! The children pictured, Brant & Jordan Schroeder, are only two of the six children I now care for. Classified got me the results I was looking for!!!

Secluded apartment homes nested away from loop hassell, yet convenient to shopping centers and minutes away from downtown. Washer & Dryer. Ceiling Fans included in every unit.
516 N. Loop 250 689-9865

SINCLAIR PLACE
Sinclair Place is beautifully landscaped with tree lined streets that wind through charming clusters of rustic style brick and wood townhomes. Washer and dryer in every unit, plus fully equipped kitchen, covered porch or patio, fireplace, 2 car garage and swimming pool with club house. One & two bedrooms available.
4534 Sinclair Bldg #10, #101 689-8115

SUTTON PLACE
Sutton Place is beyond your expectations. Conveniently located just minutes from downtown, nestled among large old trees and gracious grounds. In the center lies a sparkling pool and cabana for relaxing moments. You probably wouldn't expect large spacious rooms, abundant closet space, fully equipped kitchens, private balconies or patios? But all these extras are standard at Sutton Place.
601-N. George #98 682-2423

GULF SHORE VILLAGE
Solidly constructed patio homes with beautiful brick fronts capture the charm of a quaint village with a secluded beach. High vaulted ceilings, large colonial glazed windows, trellised patios, and shingle accents enhance each design with romance of your own private seaside cottage and located right in the heart of Midland.
509 Delmar Dr. 689-8116

DEL MAR VILLAS
Like a charming country village, Delmar Villas are built in clusters of four to eight unit buildings that are quaintly arranged along private landscape drives. Quality amenities like brick hearth fire places, balconies, garage or carport, and fully equipped kitchens, including your own washer and dryer, serve the standard of living you have come to expect. The lovely pool and cabana complete the formula for year-round luxury living at Delmar Villas 1 & 2 Bedrooms.
509 Delmar 689-8116

SIGNATURE PLACE
Townhome living as personal as your signature, located in an established residential neighborhood and designed for your individual needs. Plus pool and cabana for residents and guests, washer/dryer connections, fireplace, all electric kitchens with self-cleaning ovens and some units with wet bar and breakfast area.
1907 Tarleton 699-9768 689-0781

THE ENCLAVE
The French term "enclave" refers to a small cultured group, living as an entity within a large community. The Enclave is nestled in a choice location at Godfrey and Boyd, convenient to shopping, theaters, restaurants, etc. All units are 2 bedrooms, 2 bath, with 2 car garage, fireplace, private courtyards, ceiling fans, self-cleaning ovens, microwave, and vaulted ceilings.
1907 Tarleton 689-0781 697-9768

NASSAU PLACE

Tying one on for spring and summer fashions are (clockwise from top left) Dorothy Deanda wearing the "Newport" fold in a brightly multi-colored Yves Saint Laurent scarf, Heather Reese showing the "Silk Pearls" fold in a black and fuchia Albert Nipon design, Ms. Deanda sporting the "Far West" fold in a pastel oriental design by Albert Nipon, Tammy Taylor wearing the "Monte Carlo" body wrap fold in a black,white and purple scarf by Elaine Gold and Susan Bain displaying the "Tour Eiffel" fold in a YSL white, blue and green scarf.

Go ahead and tie one on. That's right. Tie one on — on your head, around your neck, around your waist, over your hips. You can even stuff one in your pocket, drape one from your handbag, wrap one around your body or around your hat. It's a simple accessory, but you won't believe what you can do with it.

What is it?

A scarf.

Now don't get all tied in knots. This isn't like the scarf worn over the head and tied under the chin to keep your hair from blowing in the wind. It won't look like vintage clothing from great-grandma's attic or from an old black and white movie. Now there are numerous ways to use scarves to enhance your wardrobe or give it a new, updated quality.

Although scarves can still be worn in the simple tied-under-the-chin manner, there are many variations available making scarves a popular fashion accessory for the spring and summer.

Scarves can be used to add color, texture and character to a wardrobe. With the feminine, more romantic look being popular for the season, scarves can provide the perfect solution for giving a business suit a softer look. Scarves also provide the perfect alternative to give a softer look for those who abhor ruffles and lace.

For example, by adding a pastel silk scarf to a woman's business suit, the ensemble will have a softer appearance. The same scarf can be folded and tied in the same manner as a man's tie for a professional look, yet it will have a feminine style.

For more casual occasions, a red cotton bandana can be worn tied around the neck worn with a white shirt and jeans skirt. The same bandana can be folded to belt size and accessorized with concho plates, or twisted and worn as a headband.

Scarves as a fashion accessory are gaining such prominence that Hermes (pronounced "air-mes") of Paris has produced a 32-page booklet featuring different ways scarves can be worn.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

One of the highlights of the summer social season will be the double wedding of Tricia Jowell and Joe Cobb and Shelley Jowell and Chip Smith on June 6 in the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity. The brides-to-be are the daughters of Barbara and Bill Jowell.

To celebrate the forthcoming nuptials, a series of parties was held here last weekend.

Camille (Mrs. Bill) Leifeste's home was the setting for a Friday afternoon tea to honor the sisters. Co-hostesses were Elaine (Mrs. Fred) Gist, Helen (Mrs. Alan) Spinks, Peggy (Mrs. Gene) Schafer and Ann (Mrs. Ronnie) Williams.

A Saturday morning kitchen shower was held in the home of Wally (Mrs. Jerry) Fullinwider. Co-hosting were Roberta (Mrs. Charles) Fraser and daughter, Claire Aldridge of Austin, Frances (Mrs. John) Mills, Jean (Mrs. Wes) Pittman, Leila (Mrs. Bill) Seal and daughter, Sally Seal, Barbara (Mrs. Charles) Hartwell and daughter, Milby Hartwell of Washington, D.C.

That evening the home of Doris and John Redfern was the setting for a cocktail party. The other host couples were Suzy and Jim Boldrick, Nancy and Barry Beal, Donette and Mac Williams, Patti and Watson LaForce and Eloise and Bob Davenport.

The party whirl came to a close last Sunday at a luncheon hosted by the girls' grandparents, Lillie B. and Holt Jowell, in the Garden Room of Midland Country Club.

Out-of-town guests here for the festivities were Joe's parents, DeEtte and Joe Cobb, his brother, Robert, and his grandmother, Pauline Metzleur, all of Paris; Chip's parents, Virginia and Armand Smith, and his sister, Shannon of Clovis, N.M.; Tricia and Shelley's aunt and uncle, Billie and Sonny Tom of Andrews, and the Toms' granddaughter, Leigh Tom, also of Andrews, who is to be the flower girl in the wedding.

BACK FROM A DELIGHTFUL Hawaiian holiday are Midlanders Wanda and Mut Gunnels and Jonette Murphy, along with the Gunnels' daughter and Mrs. Murphy's son, Carla and Joel Murphy of Euless.

One of their favorite pastimes during their week's stay on Kauai (known as the Garden Island) was taking long drives to view the many scenic sights and points of interest. Highlights of their trip included a luau at the Coconut Plantation Resort, a Wailua River trip to the Fern Grotto, which is a famous spot for weddings, and a visit to the magnificent Waimea Canyon. Of course, they allowed plenty of time to enjoy the beach, as well as to do some snorkeling.

En route home, the group paid a visit to the U.S.S. Arizona during a layover in Honolulu.

AND AMONG THE GREEKS ... Five Midland women recently attended the Delta Delta Delta Texas State Meet in Lubbock. They were Nancy (Mrs. Alan) Meyers, president of the Midland alumnae chapter; Susan Askins, president-elect; Don Marie (Mrs. William) McIntire, Trisha (Mrs. Mike) McElwrath and Pat (Mrs. Charles) Dougherty, who is district chairman for Northwest Texas area alumnae.

Midlander Marta McNabb, a December graduate of Texas Tech and a Tri Delt alum, provided background piano music at the closing luncheon.

The Midland chapter received awards for hospitality, activities display and overall excellence.

Meanwhile, three Midland girls were initiated as charter members of the Zeta Alpha Chapter of Kappa Delta sorority at Texas Tech University.

They are Heather Fairchild, daughter of Marsha and Mark Fairchild; Sarah Schulte, daughter of Mary (Mrs. K.W.) Buckles and Jerry Schulte, and Kim Tomlinson, daughter of Sandy and David Tomlinson.

The new KD chapter joins 11 other sororities on the Tech campus.

The West Texas State University chapter of Alpha Tau Omega fraternity will honor four Midland men at its annual Founders' Day dinner on April 4 in Canyon.

All 1977 initiates, Danny Brown, Rusty Adams, Jake Banks and Jose Chavez are being recognized for 10 years of membership and service to the fraternity.

The affair, commemorating the founding of the fraternity in 1865 at Virginia Military Institute, will begin at 4:30 p.m. with a reception in the home of WTSU president, Dr. Ed Roach. It will be followed by an open house at the ATO Lodge at 5:30 and the dinner and awards ceremony at 6:30. All area ATO undergraduates and alumni are invited to attend, according to Mark Young of Amarillo, Alumni Association president.

Marilyn McKnight Harrison is social columnist for the Reporter-Telegram.

'How to Keep From Going Bonkers' subject of seminar

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

If one word can describe life in the second half of the 20th century, it would have to be "stress."

With two-career couples, one-parent families and children bouncing from ballet lessons to gymnastics class to karate school to football practice, it's no wonder being "stressed-out" seems so common.

Maureen Gail Mulvaney learned from personal experience how stress can devastate a life — stress cost her five years of hospital stays and surgery, she said — and she learned how to recover from the "stinking thinking" that caused her such problems in the beginning.

Ms. Mulvaney, who has a master's degree in counseling and psychology from Boston University and now has a private counseling practice in Phoenix, Ariz., and teaches at local colleges, will share her stress-management techniques in a seminar, "How to Keep From Going Bonkers," 7 p.m. March 23 at Midland Center, 105 N. Main. Sponsored by Uptown Chapter, Business & Professional Women, the seminar will cost $10 per person. For ticket information call 685-2967 or 683-5677.

Three important aspects of relieving stress are "Number one, have a balanced lifestyle," Ms. Mulvaney said. "We tend to become a little out of balance, especially us 'superwomen.'"

Second, Ms. Mulvaney said to learn how to accept all kinds of feedback. Many times women take comments too personally. "We tend to get our feelings hurt," she said. "We have to accept compliments or offhanded comments."

Third, Ms. Mulvaney said women must practice "having gratitude, which is a big stress release — start thinking about the things you have instead of what you don't have."

Ms. Mulvaney teaches the use of "space repetition," or internalizing a concept — saying something until it becomes a habit. "If you hear it more than six times, it's yours. If I hear enough times that I'm a winner, whether I believe it or not, I begin to act that way."

But, she added, "We have to be willing to take the information in and make a pledge or commitment to ourselves for at least 30 days — then it becomes a habit."

Ms. Mulvaney is one of 23 coauthors of the book, "The Stress Strategist," which has a forward written by Norman Vincent Peale.

"He uses a lot of these principles himself in his life," she said.

Stress level is the result of how you handle what comes in at you everyday, said Ms. Mulvaney.

Single mothers, who generally have an enormous amount of stress on a daily basis, should remember two ideas, Ms. Mulvaney said. "I want them to realize that you have to let go of something — one of the first things I let go of was housework."

They also should remember that "children are so important — enjoy them."

The key to making her system work, Ms. Mulvaney said, is "by working smarter, not harder."

SUNGLASS SELECTION

When selecting a frame for sunglasses, remember that the best-looking frames are those with a shape that contrasts the shape of the face. For instance, geometric frames with slightly squared-off lines are the best pick for a round face. After selecting the frame, pick and appropriate lens color. Gray, green and brown are the best all-purpose lenses because they filter out most of the sun's visible spectrum. Polarized lenses in these colors are best for those who drive frequently. Tennis players should try yellow lenses. They increase contrast, and many sports enthusiasts claim that this helps them see the ball better. Choose blue, rose and purple lenses for a second pair of glasses to be used on overcast days.

If the glare of sunlight seems unusually discomforting, it should be brought to the attention of your examining doctor. During an eye exam all concerns will be considered and the overall health of your eyes reviewed. Your situation will then be discussed and options reviewed. Even for non-prescription needs and preferences, it is important to decide upon the type of eyewear best for you. For attention to your visual health call the PHILLIPS EYE CLINIC, 3001 W. Illinois. Tel. 689-0323. Weekdays by appointment.

Hint:
The oval shape of aviator frames flatters a square jawline.

According to the American Cancer Society, one out of eleven women in the United States will develop breast cancer sometime in her lifetime. It is currently estimated that over 37,000 women die each year as the result of breast cancer.

Ninety percent of breast cancers are diagnosed by women or their physicians finding a lump in the breast. Women who are diagnosed with a lump large enough to feel have a 50 percent five year survival rate. A woman who is diagnosed as having breast cancer by mammography, before a lump can be felt, has a 97% five year survival rate and a 90% 10 year survival rate.

A mammogram can detect a cancer this small, ● even before it can be felt.

Appointments may be made by calling 561-9999

The Mobile Breast Cancer Detection Unit from Odessa Women's & Childrens Hospital will be in Midland at the 1st Baptist Church parking lot corner of Louisiana & Garfield St.

The American Cancer Society has established guidelines for mammography in asymptomatic women. (Women who have no symptoms of disease). Those guidelines have been adopted by the American Academy of Family Physicians, American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, and The American College of Radiology. Those guidelines are:

I. 35-40 years of age - One baseline mammogram.

II. 40-50 years of age - A mammogram every 1-2 years depending on breast type and risk factor.

III. 50 years of age and over - An annual physical examination and annual mammogram.

IV. Asymptomatic women under 50 years of age with significant high risk factors should be examined at appropriate intervals. These risk factors include previous breast cancer and family history of cancer.

V. A symptomatic woman should have a mammogram at any age when she experiences a mass, nipple discharge, skin changes or unexplained breast pain.

A screening mammogram is an x-ray of the breast using extremely low dosages of radiation (usually comparable to dental x-rays) and is designed to find very early cancers.

A female technologist who is highly trained in mammography will perform the examination.

The charge for the screening mammogram is $60.00. The Unit accepts cash, check, Visa, Mastercard and American Express.

Approved by the American Cancer Society

Poetry-publishing guide offered

Copley News Service

Admit it, you write poetry. OK, so you're no Tennyson — according to the few people you've allowed to read your stuff — but you do, from time to time, find yourself inspired to tackle a limerick, or perhaps a sonnet or two.

So what should you do after a poem's written? Publish it, of course. Easier said than done, you cry. Well, stop crying and send for the Poet's Guide to Getting Published. This valuable information offered by the American Poetry Association will put you on the road to seeing your words in print.

Presented in sections that address specific problems and considerations, the four-page guide tells you how to use literary market reference books, how to prepare submissions, how to keep records and what editors look for.

In addition, you'll find information about poetry contests, and where you can locate poetry groups and readings. Also, to motivate your creative juices, the association will invite you to submit a poem (or poems) for the next edition of its "American Poetry Anthology." Each poem you send will automatically be entered in the association's poetry contest, which offers more than $5,000 in prizes.

To find out how you can be published, send a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to American Poetry Association asking for Poet's Guide to Getting Published, Dept. FB-87, 250 A Potrero St., Box 8403, Santa Cruz, CA 95061-8403.

Limited-edition 'Quartet' available

NEW YORK (AP) — "Quartet," a limited-edition, fine press book, contains four essays by Lewis Thomas selected from his collected writings, which include "The Lives of a Cell."

Each essay is accompanied by an original color etching by Joseph Goldyne, specially commissioned for the edition.

An exhibition on the making of the book — comprising proofs, etchings and monotypes — is on view at the New York Academy of Sciences through March 27. It will then be shown at the Chicago Academy of Sciences, April 22-Aug. 23; the National Academy of Sciences, Washington, Sept. 17-Nov. 6; the California Museum of Sciences and Industry, Nov. 20-Feb. 15, 1988; and the Exploratorium, San Francisco, March 1-April 18, 1988.

Midland Writers' Club sponsors writing competition

Midland Writers' Contest, sponsored by Midland Writers' Club will open April 1 and close midnight, July 15. The competition has no entry fee, but contestants must be members to enter. To become a member, send $5 membership fee with the entry.

Categories are:

- Articles, 500-2000 words;
- Adult fiction, 1000-2000 words;
- Children's fiction, 200-2000 words; and
- Poetry, up to 36 lines.

First, second and third place will be awarded in each category.

Material must be original, unpublished and typewritten. Any subject may be used as long as it is wholesome reading.

For all categories except poetry, place mailing information on a cover sheet in the upper left hand corner. In the right hand corner state category and number of words. Place title in the center. Do not put a name anywhere on the manuscript. Judges will not see the cover sheet.

For the first page center the title eight double spaces down. Skip three spaces and begin story. Include category and page number on all other pages.

For poetry submit two copies of each poem with mailing information on one poem. The other poem should have the title and number of lines only.

All entries remain the property of the author. Manuscripts submitted without a self-addressed, stamped envelope will not be returned, but will be destroyed Sept. 15 for the writer's protection.

Send entries to Mary J. Goodwin, 2100 W. Wadley, #38, Midland, Texas, 79705.

"WHOLESALE" DIAMONDS

One of the greatest American "come-ons" is the lure of buying something "wholesale." Don't be fooled. All diamonds have a determinable value. If a stone has any worth, the seller can obtain a standard price for it and doesn't need to sell it "wholesale." Many so-called bargain or "discount" diamonds have first been marked up so they can be marked down. Remember, it costs no more, and perhaps less, to purchase from a reputable dealer.

"MAIL ORDER" DIAMONDS

When buying a diamond the quality of the stone is very important. Also important is the styling, the shape of the stone, size of the stone, style of the mounting, type of metal and the ring size. These decisions are most satisfactory made by seeing the piece of jewelry in person. It is very difficult to make an important purchase of this nature by mail, sight unseen. Returning unsatisfactory valuable merchandise by mail entails considerable inconvenience and may not even be permitted.

For 14-year-old Tracey, the transition from childhood to early adolescence is not the same as it is for others. She is bored and depressed and displays frequent outbursts of anger. Behaviors that once were excused as discipline problems now no longer are acceptable to parents, teachers and others. To her family, home life has become strained and filled with frustration. They don't know where to turn for help.

Chronic sadness, inability to communicate with others or repeated school failure may indicate a serious emotional problem. For many adolescents and parents, Glenwood can replace confusion and frustration with insight and understanding. We want to help people learn to cope with life and its problems. The bride is a graduate of Sul Ross State University and a teacher of the fourth-grade 1-2-3 program at Greenwood Elementary School. Her husband, a graduate of Ohio State University, is a pilot for Williams Aviation.

After honeymooning in Cabo San Lucus, Baja California, Mexico, the couple will live in Midland.

TYING

The scarf has long been a famous item from Hermes. They create 12 new designs every year and the collection now numbers somewhere around 750 designs. Due to the popularity of this accessory and the painstaking production of the scarves (each scarf's hem is hand-rolled and as many as 35 color applications may be necessary to achieve the correct hues), a Hermes has a price tag of $130. But there are silk scarves that can be purchased for much less.

Other designers such as Yves Saint Laurent and Albert Nipon have created designer scarves of silk ranging in prices from $35 to $60. If that price tag is still a little steep, scarves of fabric blends such as acetate and nylon can be found for less, and cotton bandanas can be purchased for as little as $1 on sale.

A few of the Hermes suggestions for ways to wear scarves follow. Each scarf used is 36 inches square.

NEWPORT

■ NEWPORT: 1) Fold the scarf in a triangle and drape it over the head. 2) Cross the ends under the chin. 3 and 4) Tie in a double knot at the nape of the neck or to one side.

SILK PEARLS

■ SILK PEARLS: Start with BASE FOLD shown. 1) Twist the folded scarf. 2 and 3) Make two progressively tighter knots on each side of the central knot to make five knots in all. 4 and 5) Now take the two ends of the scarf and tie them at the back of neck — like a necklace.

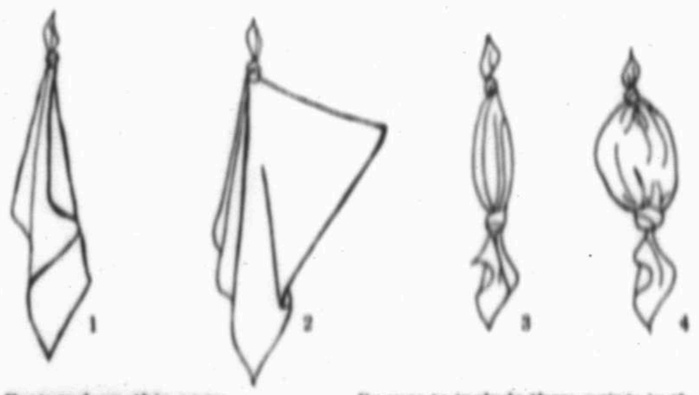
FAR WEST

■ FAR WEST: 1) Fold scarf in triangle and ceter it across your neck, adjusting evenly. 2) Cross ends behind the neck. 3 and 4) Tie in loose double knot at bottom of neck.

Scott Rathburn/Reporter-Telegram

Heather Reese models a red, green and black plaid Yves Saint Laurent scarf tied in the "Sophistique" fold which simulates a turban. This fold is great for those in a hurry who don't want to worry about their hair.

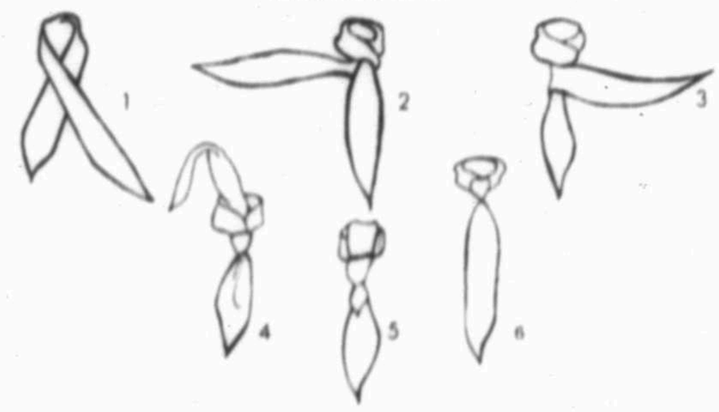
SOPHISTIQUE



Featured on this page:

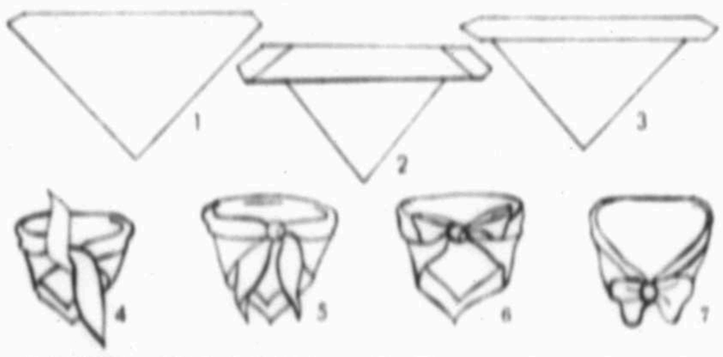
■ SOPHISTIQUE: 1) Hold the scarf out and make a knot at one end. 2 and 3) Make another knot where the two side triangles come to a point, about ⅝ of the way down. Be sure to include those points in the knot. 4) Fit it loosely over head, with the long end in front. Then tuck small knot underneath using the longer end and large knot to puff the front out and up.

TOUR EIFFEL



■ TOUR EIFFEL: Start with BASE FOLD shown. 1) Put scarf around neck with one end much longer than other. 2) Cross the long end under the short one once ... 3) then twice. 4) Bring the long end toward the neck ... 5) up and over and back into the triangular opening of the knot. 6) Pull as tightly as desired.

MONTE CARLO



■ MONTE CARLO: 1) Fold in a triangle. 2 and 3) Fold over long edge two times in strips about 2½ inches wide. 4 and 5) Double knot in back. 6) Tuck loose ends into the knot, giving the illusion of a bow. 7) Fluff out loops of "bow."

Love life can sabotage work performance

Associated Press

Too many women allow a messed up love life to sabotage the way they perform at work — and sometimes vice versa.

"These cross-currents can affect you for better or for worse," New York psychiatrist Jay B. Rohrlich said in an article in Cosmopolitan. He said what happens in our personal lives affects how we act at work and vice versa, but the impact does not have to be negative — even when things are going badly.

"Work, for instance, can be a tool to keep you sane when you're going through a turbulent time in love," he said. "On the other hand, you can let love trouble destroy you at work. It's a delicate balancing act, requiring a great deal of self-awareness and self-discipline, to manage these cross-overs so that they help rather than hurt you."

For women, one of the most common negative crossovers occurs when a troubled love affair seriously impairs job performance. Men, by contrast, almost automatically throw themselves into their work when something goes wrong in their personal lives.

Although women have become much more achievement-oriented in recent years, Rohrlich said, "personal life — a lover or family — remains more central to a woman's definition of herself than it is to a man's."

He said this applies to most of his women patients.

When you feel threatened in the part of your life that, at rock bottom, is the most important to you, it's apt to spill over into other areas. Because most men were raised to regard their work as primary, their emotional spillover tends to work in the other direction. When men are having terrible trouble at work, they're apt to let their personal lives slide.

The experts say women can change these behavior patterns.

"The first thing is to contain the damage," said Anne Boe, president of Career Networks Inc., a management consulting firm in San Diego, Calif. She added:

"There are times in life when you have to compartmentalize — just shut off thoughts about how your lover or husband is behaving so you can get on with your work."

She said work won't take the place of personal life, but it can be a source of self-esteem when you've taken a blow in love.

Some women still believe a "career woman" works only to compensate for an unsatisfying love life.

Such a woman may feel underneath that she's not really entitled to be happy in both aspects of her life," said New York psychotherapist JoAnn Magdoff. "When she's in a good relationship for the first time, she may begin to sabotage herself at work in order to live out this false idea."

Boe said women have enough problems with careers without sabotaging themselves as well.

As a therapist, Magdoff told Susan Jacobs in Cosmopolitan, "one of the greatest experiences for me is to see a woman moving along on all cylinders. Personal happiness ought to make work better; satisfying work ought to make us happier in private life."

Ambitious men have things in common

Copley News Service

What kind of men do you think are the most likely to become millionaires by the age of 35?

According to Srully Blotnick in the book "Ambitious Men," the 6,000 men he studied over a 27-year period had the following things in common.

They expressed a sense of detachment from their parents and peers at an early age.

They moved away from their hometowns in order to get a fresh start.

They often felt that everyone was just as ambitious as they were.

They devoted themselves to work and got into the "right" social circles.

Their families, friends and colleagues found it hard to describe the men.

Now that you know these findings from Blotnick's studies, do you still want to be a millionaire by 35?

Lifestyle policies

The policies for publication of announcements in the Lifestyle Department of The Midland Reporter-Telegram are:

Information for Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the information is to run. For example, an item for Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least two weeks before the wedding date. Wedding announcements must appear within one month of the event.

Engagements, weddings, anniversaries and club notices must be submitted in writing on forms available in the Lifestyle office. All materials must include the signature and telephone number of the person submitting them. These items appear in the Sunday paper only.

We cannot mail pictures or forms to persons using. Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication. Unclaimed photos are discarded after a month.

Photographs may be submitted with bridal announcements, but are not required. Portraits of the either the bride-elect or of the future bride and bridegroom together may be submitted with engagement announcements. Wedding photographs should be of the bride only.

Photos should be vertical, black and white, glossy finish studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Quality reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

DEAR ABBY

Tenant's secret surprises landlord

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I own and manage a very nice small apartment building. We've never discriminated against anyone, and have always rented to tenants based on their applications being approved through credit checks, references, etc.

We recently rented an apartment to "Douglas," a nice single man (or so we thought); then we noticed a strikingly glamorous woman leaving and entering his apartment with increasing frequency. One night last week we saw this woman, beautifully dressed, leaving Douglas' apartment, so I went out and asked her where Douglas was. She smiled and in a very husky voice replied, "I am Douglas, but when I'm in this attire, you may call me Melanie."

Abby, we certainly don't want this type of person in our building. How can we get him out? — IN SHOCK

DEAR IN: Unless he creates a disturbance, damages your property, falls behind in his rent, or in some way becomes an undesirable tenant, if he has a lease, you cannot legally get him out. "This type" of person isn't harming anyone, so if you've never discriminated against anyone, please don't start now, and give Douglas high marks for honesty.

DEAR ABBY: I'm having problems with my husband of six years and need your opinion. I am 5 foot 5, 110 pounds and I'm considered very pretty. Yet I've been feeling very down because "Tony" is more interested in his Playboy magazines than in me! I'm lucky if he makes love to me once every six weeks.

I was very jealous of the girls in Playboy, so I had some pictures taken of me by a top professional photographer. There was nothing showing except a little bit of breast underneath a sheer fabric. When I gave Tony those pictures for Christmas, he just put them aside and hasn't looked at them to this day.

Abby, I thought the pictures were lovely. They gave me a totally new image of myself. I felt like a beautiful, sexy woman instead of a rejected, unloved housewife. I did this for both of us. Your opinion? — HUNGRY FOR LOVE

DEAR HUNGRY: There's nothing wrong with fantasizing — but it shouldn't be a substitute for the real thing.

Tony should see his doctor for a thorough examination to determine whether his low sex drive is the result of a hormonal deficiency or some kind of medical problem. If there is nothing physically wrong with him, his next stop should be a marriage counselor with you at his side.

DEAR ABBY: A 78-year-old gentleman is renting my spare room. He's good-natured and even-tempered, but after living alone for 30 years, he has acquired some habits that are driving me right to the funny farm. He slurps his coffee. I don't mean just a noisy sip; it sounds like he's trying to suck up the ocean! He follows me around with his coffee, and after each slurp, he emits a long, drawn-out gasp, "Ahhhh!"

This morning I asked him nicely not to spit in the wastepaper basket. I need the rent, and he's a nice old fellow otherwise.

Anything you can suggest to make me more tolerant will be greatly appreciated. I wouldn't hurt his feelings for the world. — UP THE WALL

DEAR UP: Slurping his coffee is an unconscious habit, and unless you call his attention to it, he will never know that it irritates you. So tell him, nicely. But spitting in the wastebasket is more than an annoyance — it's a health hazard. Be firm about both, but doubly firm about the latter.

Teachers, students not always learning from mistakes

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — The old adage, "we learn from mistakes," is something neither high school math students nor their teachers usually profit from, says a University of Rochester education professor.

Raffaela Borasi says most students care more about getting the correct answer than thinking about why an answer is right or wrong.

Teachers use errors to diagnose problems, but rarely to encourage students to analyze mistakes and learn from them.

Working with students and teachers in the Rochester area, Borasi is conducting a two-year study she hopes will result in better educational materials — materials that will show both students and teachers how to profit from wrong answers.

'Dress for success' movement losing ground among professionals

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

For years there has been a lot of flap about "dressing for success." And it worked. The corporate ladder became alive with men and women in three-piece suits, monogrammed attache cases and polyester that breathed.

But somewhere along the line, we lost the "professionals" — people we entrusted with our children and our lives — who look like they just walked off the set of "Miami Vice."

I don't know the exact day when doctors started wearing blue jeans, sneakers and a three-day growth of beard (the men), but it seemed to be around the time people wanted to be judged on what was "inside"... not what people saw. It just seemed rather ironic that doctors became "cool" and left the starched, white, antiseptic coats to men who sell ice cream and peddle laxatives on TV.

What triggered all of this was a poll done recently among patients who were asked what they wanted their doctors to dress like. A majority of them said they wanted their doctor to look like Marcus Welby, not Howie Mandel of "St. Elsewhere." Most of them had no other way of determining trust or confidence.

If a doctor forgets to shave, what else did he forget when he read your X rays? If there's a button missing off his shirt, what kind of stitchery did he do on you? If he has dead goldfish in his office, it's something you don't want to think about.

Maybe teachers should begin to "dress for respect." They complain they have a hard time maintaining discipline and establishing authority. Frankly, if it weren't that students drove newer cars to school, you wouldn't be able to tell the difference between them.

I don't want my doctor walking around with his shoelaces untied. I don't want my kids' teachers to wear T-shirts they have to hide under a jacket when they see a parent coming. I don't want my tax man wearing a Hawaiian shirt with a racing form in the pocket.

It works both ways. I once dropped off in a showroom to look at a new car. I was dressed in a sunback dress and sandals with no hose. I couldn't have gotten a salesman to look at me if I set fire to myself. Later, I went in dressed like I could afford a car. I got service.

Right or wrong, the way we look is the only yardstick we have for measuring up people who want our trust, but that we don't know very well.

One night on the Carson show, I saw a sex symbol pacing the green room with arms held away from her body and holding dress shields in her hand until the last possible moment. Don't you think she wanted to sweat? But she had an image to maintain. No one would have respected her in the morning.

Population segments researched

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — There are more preschool youngsters in America today than at any time in the last 20 years, as the post-World War II Baby Boom generation produces an echo of itself, the Census Bureau reports.

The under-5 age group has grown by 10.9 percent since 1980, totaling 18.1 million as of last July 1, the bureau said in a new study released.

During that same period, the Baby Boomers themselves have made early middle age the fastest growing segment of society, while improved medical care has helped the elderly increase their numbers significantly also.

"There are now more preschool-aged children than there have been since July 1, 1967, when there were 18.6 million," reported the study on the age structure of U.S. society.

That increase is known as the "echo effect" of the massive Baby Boom generation, occurring because their parents, having completed school and started careers, are now settling into marriage and childbearing.

The youthful population bulge does not constitute another boom, however, because the actual rate of births remains low — it's just that there are so many people in the prime childbearing ages that the number of births goes up, even though the rate of births per 1,000 adults remains low.

Those new parents, meanwhile, are pressing toward middle age as they move into their late 30s and beyond.

That aging, combined with the rapidly growing number of elderly, is leading to a national population that is getting older, overall — and the focus of society may well change to reflect that, Census population expert Louisa Miller commented.

As of July 1, 1986, the median age of all Americans was 31.8 years, meaning half of the people were older than that and half younger. The median age was 30.0 in 1980 and has been increasing steadily since 1971, when it was 27.9.

Reflecting that, changes may occur in the development and sale of products and services and in the expectations of people and companies.

For example, the McDonald's fast food chain currently is trying to recruit older workers, a reflection of the shrinking supply of youngsters to work the counters.

Between the 1980 national head count and 1986, the number of Americans aged 35 to 44 increased 29 percent to 33.1 million, the new study said.

And the younger members of the Baby Boom group helped the 25-to-34 age group maintain its position as the largest single age segment at a total of 42.9 million in 1986. This group has grown by 15 percent since 1980.

While that 15 percent is a strong growth rate, it trails the performance of older Americans who, helped by improving health care, are extending their numbers as lifespans increase.

The nation's second fastest growing segment is aged 85 and over, a group increasing rapidly as the national life expectancy lengthens, Miller said.

Nationally, the age 85 and over group increased 24.8 percent to 2.8 million between 1980 and 1986.

That big percentage increase is helped by the relatively small total number of people in the group, Miller pointed out, but it still is a significant growth rate.

Among blacks, the jump was even more startling, with the over-85 segment increasing 33.9 percent to 213,000 people, the fastest growing group. The 35-to-44 age group among blacks increased 28.2 percent to 3.5 million, the report showed.

Black life expectancy, though still less than for whites, has improved more than white life expectancy has, Miller explained.

For example, between 1980 and 1985, life expectancy for whites increased by 0.9 years to 75.3, while for blacks it jumped 1.4 years to 69.4.

MISSING IN AMERICA

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of a three-part series on area Vietnam veterans.

Jada Thacker, a novelist from Odessa, fought the Vietnam War twice: first as an 18 year old infantryman; and then again, four years later as a war veteran with an ink pen and a legal pad, when he journeyed across the recesses of his mind to piece together the fractured images of his youth.

During the years of the Vietnam War, the warriors as well as the war were attacked by many. When Thacker was sent to Vietnam, he said he felt like a pawn, the chess piece of the least value — "seeking to gain advantage in a game resigned long before you made your opening."

It was 1971 and the United States had been pulling out of Vietnam since 1968. At that time, Thacker, the son of Dot Thacker of Odessa and the late James Thacker, was enrolled in Odessa College. Lacking sufficent funds to complete his education, Thacker decided to enlist in the Army and eventually use his military status to get an education.

WHILE ATTENDING a philosophy class at Odessa College, he heard the instructor make a passing remark, "The universe is absurd." Like a refrain of a sad song, the words haunted Thacker's waking hours. "If the universe is absurd," he thought, "I might as well enlist." Along with his best friend and fellow classmate, Gary Crenwelge, son of Eli and Ellen Crenwelge of Odessa, he did exactly that.

"Vietnam wasn't really much in the news," he said. "I didn't really think they were still sending people over there."

Ellen Crenwelge said, "Even though Gary's and Jada's numbers were low on the list (Selective Service Draft list) they decided to register and get their year of service over with."

But things didn't go quite as they had planned. Before Thacker could get his bearings, the familiar sunsets of West Texas were replaced with the alien sunsets of Da Nang, Vietnam. Crenwelge and Thacker were sent to Vietnam five days apart. "He was a clerk and I was infantry, so we managed to see each other only a couple of times."

Finally, the Novel

Jada Thacker (below) attends his boat, "The Protagonist," west of Key West, Fla., in June 1986.

A summer sunset over the South China Sea (middle right) taken from atop Monkey Mountain, just offshore of Da Nang, Vietnam, June 1972.

The peak in the ridgeline defensive perimeter around Da Nang (bottom) is similar to the "ridgeline" described in Thacker's novel, "Finally, the Pawn."

Mood, personality influence perception

Copley News Service

The perception of time may be all in the mind. But it's also in the mood and personality of an individual, according to Temple University psychologist Herbert Rappaport.

He claims people who doubt themselves and are indecisive see themselves more in the past than in the future. On the other hand, those who have a strong sense of identity emphasize the future more than the past.

Meantime, Rappaport says depressed people tend to live in the past. And drug users ignore the future by intensifying the present.

Thacker was made a combat infantryman with the 101st Airborne Division. He spent 11 months (5½ months in the bush) covering for troops being pulled out. His combat team was among the last to leave Vietnam in June of 1972.

"My biggest problem," Thacker said, "was dealing with the amount of fear we were experiencing. You don't normally spend months scared completely witless. In the bush I lived on the edge, in a constant state of emotion every second. Then coming home things all seemed so trivial and boring."

Because of the nightmarish reality of Vietnam and the traumatic level of fear experienced every second in the bush, Thacker was not able to leave the emotional trauma of Vietnam in Southeast Asia. Aside from the sudden social and environmental adjustment he needed to make, Thacker found that the war inside him raged on.

"I became physically ill and my stomach knotted up trying to explain something to people that they couldn't possibly know, something that I couldn't possibly understand myself," Thacker said.

LIKE MANY Vietnam veterans, Thacker felt he was fighting an individual war. Many believe this feeling of being alone was due, at least in part, to the Date of Expected Return from Overseas (DEROS) system, which meant that men were being sent to and taken from the war at different times. In previous wars the United States was involved in, men were sent to fight in units, as a team. They trained together, fought together and returned home together. This formed a bond between the units. But for Vietnam, each man was given his individual arrival date. One year from that date he would return home. He was put into a unit of men already fighting — some new, some about to go home and everything in between. Thacker said he never felt like a part of his unit.

"I was the first new person my platoon had seen in five months when I was dropped off. Not only did I not make friends with anyone right away, one of the men in my platoon even stole some of my equipment while I was sleeping," Thacker said.

P.G. BOURNE, in his book "Men, Stress and Vietnam," said, "The war becomes a highly individualized and encapsulated event for each man. His war begins the day he arrives in the country, and ends the day he leaves. He feels no continuity with those who precede or follow him. He even feels apart from those who are with him but rotating on a different schedule."

Thacker said his feelings of isolation continued even after he returned to the United States. He found himself saying the same things over and over to people. "I began writing my experiences down, to get it out. Now, it doesn't hurt so much," he said.

The somewhat cathartic result was "Finally, the Pawn," a paperback published in April 1986 by Avon. Avon printed 35,000 copies in their first run and it sold 1,000 copies a week for the first eight weeks it was introduced in bookstores.

WRITING THE book was a five-year process. Thacker began on Labor Day of 1977, two years after he graduated from the University of Texas at Arlington in 1975 with a bachelor's degree in political science. Within two years he had completed the first draft, then went back to college to earn his master's degree in political science at Texas A&M.

"During a break, I read what I had written. It was horrible. It was the worst thing I'd ever written," Thacker moaned. "I went through about a year of severe depression, knowing I'd have to do a major rewrite or throw it all away."

He decided to start from scratch again. The book now in print represents his second rewrite with about five revisions. Crenwelge took the whole manuscript, hand-written on legal pads, and supervised the input of the manuscript on a word processor.

"We (Crenwelge and Thacker) both survived Vietnam. We both came back and Gary gallantly had my entire manuscript typeset for me," Thacker said. Crenwelge earned a bachelor's and a master's degree in economics and has completed everything except his dissertation to receive a Ph.D. in finance. He teaches part-time at Texas Christian University and has his own financial consulting firm in Fort Worth.

THOUGH THACKER is living in Salisbury, Md., and Crenwelge is in Fort Worth, they still keep in touch.

"I've watched 'Finally, the Pawn,' go through a lot of metamorphoses," Crenwelge said. "Jada is an excellent writer and I think it is very seldom that you find a first novel as well written as his. It was not unusual for Jada to agonize over a single paragraph for days."

Thacker originally intended to write about a soldier returning home. He soon realized, however, that he would have to explain what Vietnam was like before he could ever hope for an audience to understand the conflicts of a soldier's homecoming. Then there was the problem of getting it accepted for publication.

"I had 20 agents reject the book before one accepted it. No one wanted to read about Vietnam," he said.

Thacker describes "Finally, the Pawn," as a thinly disguised autobiographical novel.

"The book is about Jake, who is trying to calm down after returning from Vietnam so he can start relating to people again," said Thacker, noting that the book is set partly in Vietnam and partly in San Francisco.

> 'It wasn't a lack of compassion that made men compassionless — it was the harsher honesty bred of survival. Everyone possesses an animal mortality and may kill everything in the universe before they allow themselves to die."
>
> — Jada Thacker

UPON THACKER'S abrupt return to the United States from Vietnam, he experienced the kind of culture shock his protagonist, Jake, describes. "Last week it had been the smell of burning bamboo, this week it was toast."

Thacker said, "Although some of it is fictionalized, the emotions are what I felt and the action is authentic."

He was pleased with his final result. "Usually, first novels are not good. You need to get outside of yourself to understand the experience," Thacker said. "Like Ernest Hemingway says, we should write 'not to illustrate life, but to illuminate it.'"

Thacker used a game of chess as a metaphor of the war.

"There are 16 pawns in a chess game and there were 16 men in my platoon. The metaphor was perfect." In the book, he called playing chess "a cheap metaphor for the complexities of life — cheap because it costs so little to lose."

--

DESPITE ITS "tough soldier" cover, Thacker said his book does not give glory to combat.

"The two combat scenes are directed at what it was like to be there. It shows the emotional trauma of the protagonist and the other characters rather than a minute by minute account of action. It focuses on the characters' last two weeks in Vietnam.

"I tried to avoid making an epic moral statement like 'Platoon' (the recent movie about one platoon's experience in the Vietnam war) tried to do. Instead I tried to focus on the individual idealisms the men faced. Reality is so altered in the bush," Thacker said.

"It wasn't a lack of compassion that made men compassionless — it was the harsher honesty bred of survival. Everyone possesses an animal mortality and may kill everything in the universe before they allow themselves to die."

THACKER SAID events described in "Platoon," especially the terrorism of villagers, were not similar to what he experienced.

"I went in after My Lai had happened, and the villages were off limits to us. I witnessed only minor acts of terrorism, such as soldiers throwing rocks off trucks at civilians," he said.

Although Thacker believes the movie has served a purpose in getting America's attention, he said, "The movie 'Platoon' is not unsurpassable as the coda for the Vietnam experience. I think 'Apocalypse Now' up to the point with the bridge scene, was more technically correct.

For instance in 'Platoon,' men referred to officers over the radio as 'sir.' We were taught never to do that because it tells the enemy that you are speaking to a superior. It was a matter of intelligence and a minor detail, but a glaring error, nonetheless."

THACKER HAS injected technical detail into his novel. One example is that all the members of his platoon wore their dogtags laced into their boots. "This is because if we stepped on a 'trip wire,' or mine, the boots may be all there would be left to identify us," he said.

Thacker also was in a much more youthful unit that the one portrayed in 'Platoon.' This experience transfers over to his novel, where the oldest man in Jake's platoon, "Pops," is 29 and described as "probably the oldest buck sergeant in Asia." He writes about young soldiers "sounding off" with "throats still shaped by high school fight songs."

In one passage, the youthfulness of the men becomes painfully clear to Jake, the protagonist.

Jake looked at each man's face as he collapsed in the leechy grass on the edge of the first bamboo grove. Their faces looked older than they had a right to, but you couldn't describe them as weather-beaten, or wise beyond their years, or even mature. What was in their eyes was like youth that had forgotten itself — an innocence dead from unnatural causes. At the average age of 19, they looked like they ought to have wrinkles, but didn't. 'Stay alive,' he said to each in his own hoarse whisper. 'Stay alive.' If they could all just manage to stay alive another minute, another hour, live to fight another day, another year, just stay alive, hey, you guys! Watch that leaf and shoot it if it don't shoot you first. A dialogue of eyes, that's what it was between Jake and his boys — words unspoken by men so young they had only begun to understand how much they had to lose.

IT WAS these memories that shaped Thacker's youth. Memories that he said he is only beginning to come to terms with.

"I don't buy the guilt trip that the media puts on the vets. Killing doesn't bother combat troops. They can't live without killing. I've talked to many veterans. The fighting was terrifying — but engaging, interesting and exciting."

Thacker says the adrenaline high he received in combat seems to be addictive. He blames this adrenaline addiction for the risk-taking — driving cars too fast, drinking too much, taking drugs — that some veterans indulge in. He believes they take these risks to try to achieve that type of high again.

"After hanging out of helicopters at treetop level shooting at people, it's hard to come down from such intense acts of violence," he said. However, his character Jake begins to make a gradual transformation for himself. Finally, in this excerpt from Thacker's book, 'the pawn' realizes that above all, he is a survivor.

And finally, the Survivor, whose triumph was only a grim pyrrhic dance, loved one of the dead and who has nothing else to love is — this Survivor who stands as hollow as the blooded gladiator in a deserted coliseum, who makes the hated discovery that life can exist without meaning or purpose or love, who must know that survival is beyond the highest good and is its own justification.

Thacker has been living an independent lifestyle since the publication of his novel. He spends time aboard his boat, the "Protagonist," where he does much of his writing while sailing off the East Coast.

HE NOW has "writing in his blood," and said he has ever since he was 13.

"I entered two poems in the Odessa Poetry Contest back when I was 13. Funny thing ... they were both about war," he said. Thacker said that writing is something he and his mother are both involved in now. His mother is a past president of the Odessa Writer's Club, has had quite a few short stories published in magazines and her first novel has been accepted for publication.

Being able to write about Vietnam helped Thacker put some of his most frightening experiences behind him. In the cover notes of his novel, he summed up his experiences. "In the chess game of Nam, the foot soldier is the pawn, he kills or he dies."

As for the future, Thacker said he is planning a sequel to "Finally, The Pawn," one that will begin Jake's life where it left off in its predecessor. The sequel will describe the impact of Vietnam on future generations, and will show what happens when "the pawn" increases its power as it moves across the board and gains control of the game. And maybe he will answer the final question in this book, the one that asks Jake what he really wants the pawn to be. It's something Jake, or rather the author, will know only when he pieces together the fractured images of his youth, to be whole again.

SPINAL COLUMN

DR. CHARLES A. SCOTT

SCIATICA...

Sciatica is a painful inflammation of the sciatic nerve. This large nerve originates from the last three lumbar vertebrae and the sacrum or tailbone. From there the sciatic nerve supplies the tissues of the thigh, calf and foot. The burning sensation of sciatic pain may be limited to parts of the leg or may run from the lower back to the heel of the foot. Patients often describe this devastating pain as comparable to a severe toothache with an exposed nerve root.

There are several causes of painful sciatica. The most common cause is a pinching of one or more spinal nerves roots by misplaced vertebrae. In some cases, a bulging or herniated disc may compress the nerve root. This huge nerve courses underneath the periformis muscle as it exits the buttocks. Occasionally, periformis muscle spasm will irritate the sciatic nerve resulting in sharp pain in the buttocks and back of the thigh. Rarely, a tumor may compress the nerve root as it exits from the spinal columns. A complete spinal exam consisting of X-Ray studies, orthopedic exam and other diagnostic tests is necessary to determine the exact cause of sciatica. Once the misaligned vertebrae has been located, chiropractic adjustments will release the pressure on the nerve and relieve the acute pain.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Adult children with seriously ill parents need support system

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

When a parent becomes seriously ill, adult children are often cast into the combined roles of supporter as well as decision maker. These situations may be emotionally difficult and extend for long periods of time. During such crisis periods, families not only need a supportive system among themselves, but also to be aware of other sources of help. To make things better than they are means getting help in time. Illustrations would include alternatives involving medical and nursing care. Is it possible to keep your parent at home with services provided on the premises? If the parents is a hospital patient, what will be the tentative length of patient stay? Upon leaving the hospital, is nursing home care required? Who will pay for this and how?

In making these determinations, check on the available community resources. Examples would include the American Cancer Society, Heart Association, Visiting Nurse Service, Hospice as well as other family service agencies. Good counsel and support makes all the difference in the world as to how a family weathers a storm. There may be though, avenues through which a person can find emotional release. This is especially true and important in confronting a terminal illness which is often both painful and prolonged.

In working with a patient who is terminally ill, realize that the attitude of caring does make a difference. Unfortunately, many people abandon dying patients at critical points in their illnesses. The patient may be described as "beyond feeling" when he or she is very much a feeling person. Working with the chronically ill or especially the terminally ill is not an easy task. In fact, a difficult concept to accept is that at times the most helpful action may be holding a patient's hand, listening to him or her cry or just listening. No matter who is around, patients invariably will ask the same questions. This would include doctors, nurses, friends and family members. Because our society has been such a death-denying one, often the more trained persons can avoid or escape these questions by not being around the patients. This leaves family members and friends to contend with the various stages concerning grief.

Due to the emotional stress brought on by a chronic or terminal illness, family members in particular need more time off. Family members should, if at all possible, rotate the shifts as well as the responsibility. Friends and the clergy should be utilized in a supportive system. This would include not only spending time with the patient, but also serving as an outlet for a family members just to talk and release some of these emotions.

Grief is not an easy task with which to deal. This is inclusive both from the patient as well as the family members' point of view. Yet it is extremely important for a family member working in a chronic or terminally ill situation to learn about the grief process and to be open in discussing feelings whether they be of guilt, anger, loss, depression or acceptance. When away from your parent and your obligation, family members should try to conduct their lives as normally as possible with as much pleasure as possible. Realize the emotional stress involved and try to be involved in some enjoyable activities. Above all, you should not feel guilty about enjoying yourself. Unless you take care of yourself then you will not be able to be a part of the strong support system when the patient may have his or her greatest needs.

Steve Edwards is executive director of Community and Senior Services and the Visiting Nurse Service of Midland.

Video visits 'significant innovation'

New York Times News Service

Long Beach, N.Y. — As a visitor pushed buttons to start the video cassette recorder in her room at a nursing home here, Dora Florio watched with anticipation. When the image of her daughter popped onto the screen, Florio smiled and said softly, "They love me so."

Florio, an 82-year-old resident of the Long Beach Memorial Nursing Home, was viewing a "video visit" — a videotape recording of a family member that the nursing home staff uses to supplement personal visits. The concept, which was recently recognized by the American Association of Homes for the Aging as a significant innovation, was developed by Cecelia Coyle, the director of social services at the Long Beach home and one of Florio's daughters.

"It's taking a very new concept and using it for the old," she said.

The idea has captured the interest — and imagination — of those who work with the elderly. A video visit, they said, could be increasingly important in a time when taking care of the elderly has become a growing concern for many Americans who live hundreds of miles from their parents.

"The positives are obvious," said Dr. Robert N. Butler, chairman of the department of geriatrics and adult development at Mount Sinai Medical Center in New York City. "It could help a person to feel a continuing relationship with a family member."

THOUGH SOME who work with the elderly caution that video visits must not be a replacement for personal visits, they add that the technology may have great potential for improving one's ability to care for older people. Variations being discussed include tapes of doctors reminding elderly patients to take their medication and cooperate with nurses. Some health-care professionals suggested that such "visits" may help calm an agitated elderly person and thus decrease the need for medication.

Videotapes can also help bring an event such as a wedding to someone who is bedridden. According to professionals and family members who have used the video visit, it can help an elderly person stop focusing on the past and become involved in the present.

Coyle, who has worked with nine families using video visits at the Long Beach nursing home, said the idea of making a video also can help draw out a family caring for an elderly relative.

"Family members can often be sad, angry, frustrated," she said. "They just don't know how to help their confused or agitated parents. We've given them another way to help."

Working with the New York Foundation for Longterm Care in Albany, Coyle is applying for grants to study the use of videotapes further.

"We feel it has the potential to decrease isolation and loneliness when a nursing home resident is away from a loved one," said Carol R. Hegeman, a research associate with the foundation. "But we also think it might help maintain the orientation of slightly disoriented older people."

BUT COYLE pointed out some of what she called the "downside risks" — considerations she wants to investigate before fully embracing the concept of video visits. Potential problems include the possibility that the tapes could make a person "more demented, more confused, more agitated," she said, explaining that "there is a limit to how much the elderly person can observe."

"We have to understand the risks more, but the bulk of this appears to be very positive," she said.

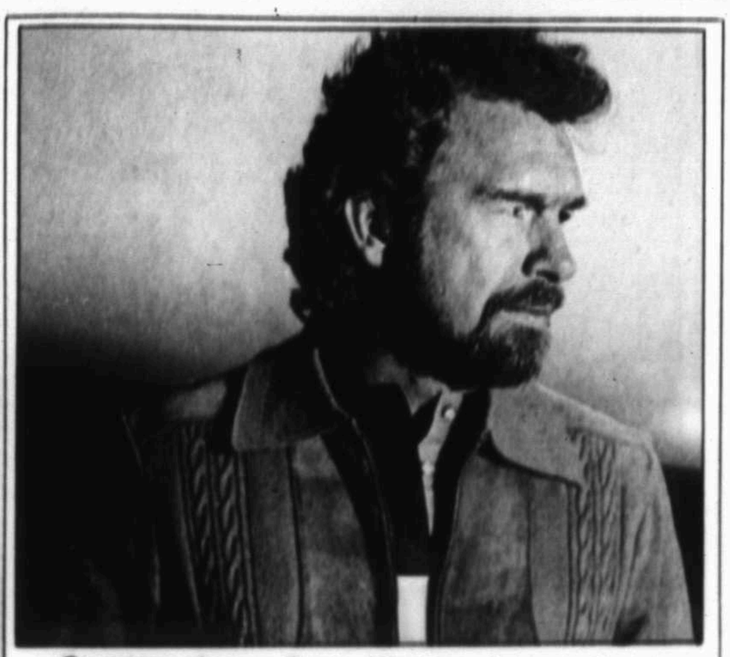
Staff members at the Long Beach home have used the tapes with patients who forget that their family members recently visited. One patient, five minutes after her son had left, would insist that he had not seen her for years. Videotapes of her son, however, soothed her.

Memories such as weddings or even insignificant events can be important for nursing home residents.

"Reminiscing is very crucial," Coyle said. "It is a way of the older person saying: 'I was a person — I was somebody. I'm not just the wrinkled old person you see here.'"

THE BENEFITS of reminiscing have been studied for more than 25 years, Butler said. People once thought that when the elderly constantly talked of the past, it was a sign of senility. But that is not true, he said.

"The reminiscent tendency helps to directly focus the thoughts of the elderly," he explained. "It's clear that it has an inherent value to people."



Country singer Gene Watson is not burning memories, but starting new ones for the Permian Basin Petroleum Association's Blow Out.

Watson will give concert for PBPA

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

The Permian Basin Petroleum Association is starting new memories with its first annual Blow Out, featuring country singer Gene Watson, scheduled for March 28 at the Holiday Inn Country Villa Convention Center.

"Those around for the first Terlingua Chili Cookoff, San Antonio Fiesta or Mardi Gras may not have been aware that they were witnessing history," says Charles Perry, president of PBPA.

"The Permian Basin Petroleum Association, sponsor of the first annual Permian Basin Energy Appreciation Week and Blow Out, is confident this petroleum affair can and will become an event of major proportions," Perry says. "We are confident it will be of great value to the Permian Basin, serving as a builder of optimism and a 'turnaround party' in the near term and focusing area-wide attention on the importance of the oil industry and our dependance upon it in the long term."

In addition to the dance/concert a BBQ Brisket Cook-off and Battle of the Bands will be held March 28. The outdoor events, also at the Holiday Inn Convention Center, will begin at noon. Doors open for the dance/concert at 6:30 p.m.

Tickets to the dance/concert, priced at $12 in advance and $15 at the door, may be purchased at Holiday Inns in Midland and Odessa, Luskey's in Odessa and PBPA office in Midland. For more information call 686-8784. Proceeds go to PBPA in support of its energy industry enhancement programs.

The dance/concert features a country artist who has for over a decade been scoring in the top 10 on the music charts. Watson first hit top 10-rating in the Billboard charts with his 1974 release of "Love in the Hot Afternoon," which became the No. 4 song for the year.

Paul Revere and the Raiders

...Their mad-cap antics are back

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Spike Jones & The City Slickers, the Three Stooges, Olsen & Johnson, the Marx Brothers and Benny Hill run amuck when "the last mad man of rock 'n' roll" brings his mad hatter antics to Midland for an 8 p.m. performance at the Holiday Inn Country Villa Convention Center Monday in a concert sponsored by radio station KODM.

Impossible? Critics and fans who have seen the show say, "No." Outrageous? "Yes."

In a world in which Tuesday's song becomes Wednesday's golden oldie, it may seem as if Paul Revere and the Raiders have been around since Revolutionary times. They haven't. First organized in 1958 by leader Paul Revere, the group hit the big time in the early 60s and became the first rock group signed by Columbia Records.

Revere and the Raiders have to their credit 25 consecutive hit singles such as "Kicks" and "Indian Reservation," 26 albums, of which five are gold, and have sold nearly 50 million records in the past 25 years.

In 1965 and 1966, the group was featured on an ABC-TV five-day-a-week series, "Where the Action Is," and in 1968 and 1969, Revere hosted an ABC series, "Happening," which featured the Raiders. Revere and the Raiders have a total of over 720 network appearances to date, making them the most televised musical group in the world.

Today, Revere is the only original Raider in the group. Two of the five band members, Omar Martinez and Doug Heath, have been Raiders since 1972. Other members are Ron Foos, Daniel Krause and Carl Driggs.

"I wouldn't call us a typical musical act," Revere says. His husky voice is intense over the phone. He laughs frequently during the interview and talks like a man who views having fun as a priority in his life. He says he doesn't take himself as seriously as those who have interviewed him do.

"It's hard to explain what we do. Basically, it's just good time rock 'n' roll with a lot of fun and craziness mixed in — kind of like if Peewee Herman had his own rock band.

The mid-60s revolutionary times return when Paul Revere and the Raiders rock 'n' roll at Midland Holiday Inn Country Villa Convention Center at 8 p.m. Monday. Revere, center, front row, organized the Raiders in 1958.

Tickets, priced at $9 in advance and $11 the day of the event, may be purchased at Endless Horizons, the Merit Stores, Friendly Pontiac Chrysler Plymouth, Reel Music and the Holiday Inn Country Villa Convention Center. A 7 p.m. Sock Hop will precede the 8 p.m. show. A dance party with Danny Raines and The Liquidators from Lubbock will follow the Raiders.

Revere and the Raiders hit the top at a time when craziness was in and having fun was expected. Then as now, it wasn't easy to break into star status.

"I think anything involving the entertainment business, if you're successful at it, is a series of accidents and luck that ends up working out for you," Revere says. "There's a lot of talented, hard-working people out there that have never gotten the right breaks. they were never in the right place at the right time, and they'll probably never make it.

"A lot of the acts that were in the right place at the right time and made it, maybe don't deserve it. I hope to think that we were one of the acts that made it that deserved it. I like to think that, anyway."

Throughout his life, Revere has been drawn to music and laughter.

"When I was growing up, I was always fascinated with Spike Jones & The City Slickers. I thought they were a riot. They played music, and they acted silly, and they looked silly, and they made me laugh.

Exploring world of the deaf

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

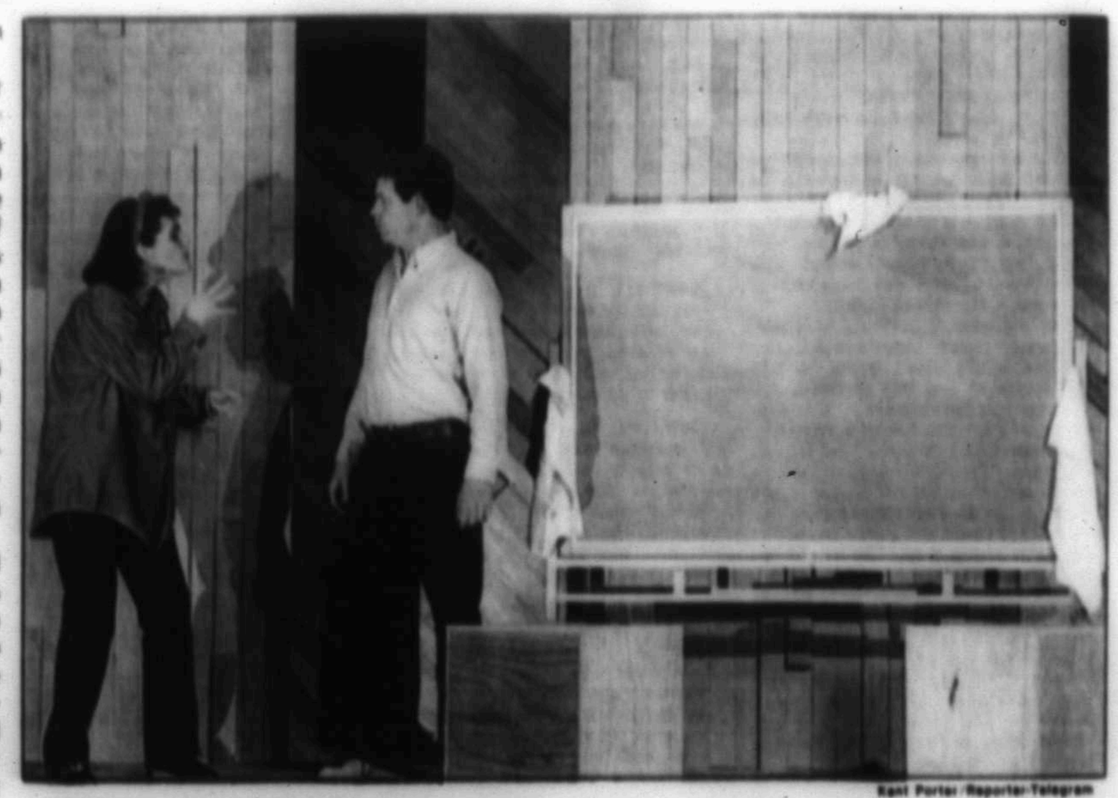
"Have you ever considered what it would be like to go through your entire life, no matter what you did or said, referred to by everyone in the third person — she wants, she says, she does, she means. Think about what that would do to you," says Sharyllynn Shaw, assistant director at Midland Community Theatre and director for MCT's current production of "Children of a Lesser God." It is onstage in Theatre Midland's Mabee Theatre II through March 28.

"I have discovered what it does to me, and it is not fun. I've found that I began to feel diminished, unimportant, left out of my own conversations, which, when I thought about it, I think gave me a new insight into Sarah's character," Ms. Shaw says. "The more directors understand about the play and the people in the play they are directing, the better they can communicate the needs of the characters to the actors and the better they can understand the actors' views of the characters in return."

Written by Mark Medoff for Phyllis Frelich, who played Sarah in the original production and on Broadway, "Children of a Lesser God" explores the world and the frustrations of the deaf. The play centers around a speech therapist at a school for the deaf who falls in love with and eventually marries Sarah, who is one of his students. Not only is Sarah deaf, but she refuses to learn how to speak. In MCT's production, the teacher is portrayed by Darrell Rhea; Kyla Black plays Sarah.

"I think its a wonderful play," Ms. Shaw says. "It's got the capacity to take you from hilarious laughter to tears within minutes. You'll be laughing and then, all of a sudden, it will get serious, and just when you think you can't stand the strain anymore, it gets funny again. It takes the audience on an emotional rollercoaster ride."

"Children of a Lesser God" avoids a problem Ms. Shaw has found in some scripts which deal with issues faced by a minority group.



Kent Porter-Reporter-Telegram

Sparks fly as Sarah (Kyla Black) explains how she feels to her new speech therapist, James Leeds (Darrell Rhea), in this scene from Midland Community Theatre's production of "Children of a Lesser God."

"In so many cases like this, when we're dealing with the problems faced by a minority group, the play can become preachy and try and beat you over the head with the message. This is not true in 'Children of a Lesser God.' Audience members do think and learn, but they think and learn either through laughter or through being touched by the experiences of the characters."

The original Sarah, Ms. Frelich, is deaf.

"Children of a Lesser God" was first performed on April 25, 1979, in a workshop production at New Mexico State University. In that production, Ms. Frelich played Sarah and her husband, Robert Steinberg, played James Leeds. The production was directed by the playwright, Medoff.

In October 1979, the play, directed by Gordon Davidson, opened at the Theatre Center Group, Mark Taper Forum in Los Angeles. By this time, several roles had been edited out of the original production.

John Rubinstein played James Leeds and Ms. Frelich was still playing Sarah. Both played the leads when the play opened in New York on March 30, 1980.

WATSON

Since that time he has remained consistent, turning out, among others, such hits as "Farewell Party," "Paper Rosie," "Pick the Wildwood Flower," "Should I Go Home (Or Should I Go Crazy)," "Nothing Sure Looked Good On You," "Fourteen Carat Mind," "This Dream's On Me," "You're Out Doing What I'm Here Doing Without" and "Memories to Burn." His most recent release is also the title song of his latest album, "Honky Tonk Crazy."

Of his career, Watson says, "I didn't find music; the music business found me.

"I was born with the talent, the voice is not mine; the big man upstairs gave me the voice, and he can take it away anytime. I've never had any type of vocal training. As far back as I can remember, I have been able to sing in meter; I've been able to carry a tune; I've been able to sing any song I wanted to sing."

A Palestine native who grew up in Paris, Texas, didn't plan a career in music.

"My lifelong ambition was working on cars, even when I went to school I worked on cars. My love for music gave me a pasttime I loved and enjoyed."

Times were hard when Watson was a child. Much of his early childhood was spent living near the sawmills sprinkled across East Texas. His father worked in the mills as a farm laborer and he moved his wife and seven children wherever there was work. The family traveled in an old remodeled school bus.

"We would go from crop to crop in that bus and work in the fields. I guess, when you don't know much about the finer things of life, you don't know if you're doing good or bad. We were poor, and it was a hard-working upbringing."

Those early years had a strong influence on Watson's singing.

"A lot of blacks usually lived around the sawmills. My dad also played the blues. I used to sing a lot of the old black blues. I loved it then, and I still do."

In the early '60s, Watson and his wife, Mattie, to whom he is still married, moved to a Texas boomtown — Houston. There he was pursuing his first career choice and describes himself as a "weekend warrior," working on cars by day and singing with a band he formed on weekends. Soon, he added nights to his playing schedule.

"Certain people heard the way I sounded and they said, 'Hey, this guy ought to be doing something besides mechanic work.' I had the offer presented to me about recording. I thought, 'What have I got to lose?' As much as I loved music, I couldn't believe it was happening."

He cut his first single in the '60s, but still considered his music as a pasttime. Then, Roy Stone took him to Nashville to cut a record.

"I never imagined being paid good money for being a recording artist. I wasn't so foolish that I didn't know it was an opportunity that I'd never dreamed of; one that a lot of people go through life and never have, but as far as being a top 10 major recording artist, the idea was so far-fetched, I never entertained the thought."

Although his career wasn't planned, from the time he went to Nashville, Watson says, "It seemed like every little piece fell into place."

Today in Watson's life, "music is first and cars are second."

He feels having a hobby is important in having balance in his life.

"One hundred percent music will drive you crazy; I can't live that way," he says. He laughs and adds, "I buy cars here and there and piddle around with them and fix them up, try to sell them and lose money on them. It's a good hobby, and it's a good pasttime, and it gets my mind off the music."

He lives in Houston, not Nashville, by choice.

"I would have too much of the music business, too much of the rat race, if I lived in Nashville. I don't want to be so close to the forest I can't see the trees."

Through the years, his sound has remained consistently his own.

Although, "some types of music can be taught, the feelings can't be taught," Watson says.

"It's like class. Class is not something you can buy. You've either got it or not. If you don't, you can't buy it. It's the same way with singing...I didn't develop a style, I just stopped trying to sing like anybody else and sing my feelings, and there was my style...I've always been blues oriented; I sing with a lot of slurs, which gives most anything I sing a blues flavor."

Watson has avoided trends.

"When the 'outlaw scene' came in, I avoided that. When the crossover scene came in, I avoided that and am still avoiding it. I've retained my audiences, gathered a lot more fans without making those changes. My music is more or less the same; I'd like to think, if anything, it's smoother."

For his past albums, Watson has served as producer and was backed by his touring band, Farewell Party. He altered that format on his upcoming album, which is scheduled for an April release.

"I just made a drastic change as far as recording," Watson says. "I didn't produce it, and I didn't use the Farewell Party band. Billy Sherrill served as producer. I liked the way it came out; it may be the start of something new to come as far as the future goes."

The reason for the change was simple.

"I felt like I was getting stale. I wasn't satisfied with the outcome of our productions. When that happens, it means you need to try something new. It doesn't mean change the style of the music. Something new means breath new life into what you're doing. It's like any job. The same job is going to get stale, and you have to figure out some way of making it fresh again and more interesting."

Watson's career goal remains the same.

"I'd rather be consistent inside the top 10, than try and break my back to have every song a No. 1 hit," he says.

His attitude about live performances is also the same as it has always been.

"When I go into a place to work, I'm bought and paid for. People paid their money to be entertained and whatever I have to do to pull that off, I'll do."

He has high hopes for the Epic album he cut with Sherrill as the producer.

I think it's by far the best album I've ever recorded. We came up with some real good material. It's a versatile album by one of the greatest producers in country music today."

Just as the PBPA is hoping its week of activities, which culminates in the dance/concert featuring Watson, is the start of something new in the Permian Basin, Watson has a similar wish for his upcoming album, appropriately titled "Starting New Memories."

RAIDERS

"I think I was a pretty typical kid in that I liked stuff that made me laugh, and I liked music. I think that's pretty natural for all young people or comedy and music wouldn't be the multi-million dollar business that it is or has been.

"When Bill Haley and the Comets made their appearance, that was my cue immediately because I loved rock 'n' roll. It was brand new...I put a little band together imitating everything I could get my hands on recorded by Bill Haley and The Comets or anything similar to that. Most of it was rhythm and blues kind of things at that time. I was getting records by Hank Ballard and the Midnighters, and the Clovers.

"We're going way back," he says. "I was a child of the 50s. I was in the class of 1955. I grew up on the early, early rock 'n' roll before it even had a name."

Just for fun, he started a band called the Downbeats.

"Then, when Jerry Lee Lewis came along, I was totally caught up in it. I was a piano player, and he played exactly the kind of piano that I had always played, but I didn't really realize that it was commercial. Then, when I heard his records, I thought, 'Hey, this is something I can do.'"

He recalls some of his first stage antics.

"One of my favorite things that I would do is rent halls and throw these dances. In those days you could buy old upright pianos for like $35 or $40, $50 tops. I used to tear 'em up. Jump on top, kick off the keys, tip 'em over and set 'em on fire. Kids loved it.

"For some reason, kids are fascinated with destruction. They love it. We started buying used guitars, cheap guitars in hock shops, and busted them up on stage. There was a fascination with busting up equipment. But, when we did it, it wasn't like a brutal, nasty motorcycle gang kind of mentality onstage, it was all done in fun. It was crazy; it was Spike Jones & The City Slickers coming out in my body. That personality of just craziness was there from the beginning."

In the initial stage of his career, he used a stage name. His real name is Paul Revere.

"I didn't use my name because I was tired of people asking me where my horse was. But then as time progressed and my sense of humor broadened, I knew I had to live with this name for the rest of my life." When he signed with Columbia Records, and the company flipped over his name, he reconsidered.

A representative at Columbia told him, "'You're crazy for not taking advantage of that. It's a great name. Nobody every forgets that.' Because I was a piano player, and at that time Liberace was very hot with his own television show, this guy immediately envisioned me sitting at a big grand piano with a candelabra in a colonial costume with a three-cornered hat, just tearing the hell out of my piano.

"I thought, 'That's a good idea.' I rented some colonial costumes one night at a costume shop, and I made the band put them on. We were playing a college dance, and we put them on at intermission to give the second half of the show a shot in the arm."

It worked.

"We always did steps and routines on stage. When we put the colonial costumes on, it was even funnier. We looked like these weird looking colonial soldiers marching around on stage, and the whole effect was just bizarre. And the more bizarre it was, the funnier I thought it was."

He pauses, then continues, a thoughtful tone in his voice.

"What's funnier than seeing a guy in a three-cornered hat tipping over his piano and setting it on fire playing rock 'n' roll — it made no sense whatsoever. And the fact that my name was Paul Revere, the colonial costumes made a thread of sense...

"The kids loved it. I was always for anything that would make people laugh. So, the colonial costumes just became a regular part of our look."

Although they were not known nationally at the time, the group experienced tremendous success in the Northwest part of the United States.

"We had a record called 'Louie, Louie' out, and it was the No. 1 song in the Northwest. Our version was the first version. And the Kingsmen was a group from the Northwest that learned the song from us.

"They had the national hit on it, but only because we were with Columbia Records. We were the first rock group to sign with Columbia, and they just didn't know what to do with a rock 'n' roll song. I don't even think they had a list of top 40 radio stations to send the record to."

At about the same time, Dick Clark was putting together a pilot for a television show. Clark's Caravan of Stars Show came to a town where the Raiders were performing and his low turnout prompted him to send a "spy," Jack Nance, the road manager, to the Raiders' show, Revere says. Nance discovered three to 4,000 teenagers going crazy and reported back to Clark.

"Months later, we were contacted," Revere says. "We seemed to be a logical choice because we were visual, which is important for television. But, we had to clean up our act. In today's standards, we were normal. Those days, we were the bad boys of rock 'n' roll in the Northwest."

On television, Revere says, "We were the cute little band in three-cornered hats that didn't do anything offensive.

"It was perfect timing," he says. "With the British music invasion, here was the answer, Paul Revere and the Raiders...red, white and blue costumes...we had every gimmick going for us...right time, television, hit record." He pauses, then adds, "The power of network television is just bizarre, we became an overnight sensation when we hit TV."

Revere says television was the Raiders' "big ace in the hole.

"My good sense tells me that any rock 'n' roll band on TV five nights a week is going to make a hit," he says, adding, "You become stars if you're on network television."

In the 1980s, Revere feels that videos, "the new, hot thing," are going to change the albums of the future.

"I think the albums of the future are going to be stereophonic videos. What's more fun than listening to a record? Watching a record. That's the wave of the future."

MCA approached the Raiders about cutting a video. "It's very special because it's a unique thing at this point; there're not that many they've done. I felt very flattered that they chose us."

The video, which is available to buy or rent on MCA homevideo, is titled "The Last Mad Man of Rock 'n' Roll."

"Most of our greatest hits are on it; it's a video of us live in concert. I think it turned out pretty good considering it's exactly what it appears to be, a live concert — no overdubbing, no fixing anything."

But for Revere, nothing beats a live performance.

"What I really do for a living is make people feel good," he says. "We have fun. I'm 49 years old, but I have refused to grow up. When I get onstage, I'm just a boy having fun, and it's genuine."

Revere says he wasn't 'awed' by fame

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

"Fame is like a suntan," says Paul Revere. "It looks nice when it's there, and then it fades away, and nobody can remember what it looked like."

Paul Revere and the Raiders rock 'n' roll at Midland's Holiday Inn Country Villa Convention Center Monday.

Revere, during a telephone interview, looked at the '60s from the Raiders vantage point at the entertainment business' pinnacle of success. The Raiders were not awed by fame, he says.

"First of all, in our case, we never just sat around and dwelled on it; we were too busy. We were on the road doing concerts and TV shows. We worked 300 days a year nonstop. We were just so busy that all we could think of was, 'Are we going to be able to get up in time in the morning?'

"We had a full-time job keeping up with our schedule...We didn't have time to sleep. Even when we were doing televison shows and millions of people were going to watch them, it didn't compute in my brain.

"We would look at Billboard to see where our record was on the charts, and it didn't compute that millions were buying this record or millions were listening to it.

"You get so caught up in the business aspect, you don't know what's going on. You monitor your records like stock you bought, how high the album is on the charts is a gauge of how successful the recording is."

CALLED "THE last mad man of rock 'n' roll" because of his sense of humor and the for-fun craziness he pulls onstage, Revere enjoyed reminiscing. His husky voice was soft, reflective as he spoke of the teen-aged followers who, along with television, helped the Raiders achieve stardom.

"During a personal appearance, it was a zoo. We ran out on stage, heard 10,000 screaming 15 year-old girls, yelling at this deafening high pitch. We never took it personally.

"It's hard to explain, but I never believed it was us personally. We were just filling a void in their life. Teen-age girls liked to have a rock 'n' roll band they could think was cute, buy records of and come to concerts and scream at. It didn't really register, it didn't mean a thing. If it wasn't us, it would be someone else."

At the time, magazines were looking for TV idols.

"They jumped on us with both feet and we had pictures and stories in all the teen magazines," he says. "They told harmless lies...nothing you could sue them over, not anything that made you look bad. You never were upset about it...as long as they print the name right."

The logistics of arriving at a performance were complicated; the Raiders would often travel by bus and sneak in and out of town.

Revere remembers, "Crowds screaming for the fun of screaming, it was part of the game." He laughs and adds, "Trying to chase the group to rip something off of them — like an ear — for a souvenir to put on the wall. Sometimes we'd play in different keys to see if anyone would notice, and nobody did.

"We'd have to have 10 or 15 policemen to run us from backstage to the bus — two buses usually. The policemen would get us onto the bus. A couple of thousand pushing, screaming, bouncing kids who never seemed to run out of energy or air, would chase the bus as fast as they could run, screaming...

"AIRPORTS WERE really bad news. Radio stations would always find out what time we would arrive...Usually, these airports weren't prepared. They'd be on top of the car, the hood." Trying to remove the kids was like "trying to shoo ants off sugar."

"During that whole era that was part of the game — the young girls just loved trying to figure out how we were arriving and what hotel we were staying in. Then, they'd run up and down the halls; it was a big exciting game for them."

Revere recalls one young girl who was screaming and hanging onto the trunk of the limousine when the car was going 30 or 40 miles an hour. She didn't realize that she could die if she fell off. They stopped, removed her from the trunk, only to discover when they started the car again that she was back on the trunk, screaming.

"It didn't register there was danger there. I was always worried someone would get hurt, killed."

When the Raiders' fans became young adults, Revere says, they put away "childish things" and the Raiders' records "were put in the with the Barbie dolls and early Beatles' records."

However, as more years pass, adults began taking another look at their teen years. They are perhaps viewed as "fun years," which were "special" rather than "corny" or "childish," he says. They may even become "the best years of their lives."

And, the mid-60s, Revere says, is a good era to remember with fondness.

"The music was interesting and fun. The kids were very into clothes, cars, a lot of materialistic, but fun things, and then in the late '60s, everybody got heavy.

"IF YOU wore anything but what you picked up at the Goodwill, you were considered materialistic, and if you listened to Dave Clark or Paul Revere, you were considered a mindless fool. All lyrics had to be meaningful; all songs had to have a message, and all groups had to have a cause. If you had a cool car, you were considered an idiot. The thing to drive was a beat-up Volkswagon. It went from one end to the other.

"I'm not arguing that there weren't good points — anti-Vietnam — but everything got very, very heavy, and having fun and enjoying being a teen-ager were put aside."

Revere was, "very upset with the drug situation in the late '60s. Fourteen, 15 and 16-year-old kids were emulating what their heroes were doing. Entertainers have a responsibility. If you've got young kids emulating you, you have to watch what you're doing. If you're going to be a creep, keep it quiet, don't spread it around. I just wouldn't want it on my conscious that somebody did something to harm themselves because they heard that I did it."

In the '90s, Revere foresaw the day the Raiders would work Nevada clubs, and they have been a successful act there since 1971.

"I foresaw the day we'd work Nevada clubs. I knew teen-agers grow up, and then we'd be performing for fans in places where adults go to play."

He finds among the Raiders' current fans many who grew up in the '60s.

"It seems like today that the masses of the people don't like to dwell on that heavy period of the 60s, but instead like to reminisce about their fun years mid-point in the 60s."

Seated behind a Ford Mustang front shell, which houses his keyboard plus numerous nutty objects including toy pistols, whistles and assorted crazy caps, the 49-year-old Revere revs audiences and his five-member band — not the original Raiders, but a group he's been with for over a decade, all of whom are 20 years his junior — backward in time to the mid-60s and rock 'n' roll.

This drawing by Ted Seth Jacobs of Phil Salvatore, a Martha Graham dancer, in sepia and Sanguine Conte on toned paper is in Jacobs' book "Drawing with an Open Mind" and originally appeared in his 1981 one-man show, "The World of Dance," at Coe Kerr Gallery, New York City. The works were drawn from life.

Artist Ted Jacobs will be conducting drawing workshop

From Staff Reports

Ted Seth Jacobs is conducting a figure drawing workshop in Midland March 30 through April 3.

"The highly developed or evolved work of art is the result of seeing experience clearly," Jacobs says in his book "Drawing with an Open Mind," published by Watson-Guptill Publications in 1986.

"The evolved artists thinks and feels the art of drawing thoroughly...Through drawing, the artist creates his own world, a personal vision and poetry. The philosophy expressed in an artist's work springs from his experience of the world."

Jacobs' book begins with the premise that errors in drawing are really flaws in philosophy, unfortunate attempts to fit experience into preconceived, standardized symbols. A person can change his drawing by changing his thinking. The book is divided into six general categories — drawing, drawing the figure, light, technique, color and concluding remarks.

His one-man exhibits include the Coe Kerr Galleries, New York City; The Drawing Shop, New York City; Galerie Mouffe, Paris; and the Francesca Anderson Gallery, Boston, Mass.

His work is included in the Museum of Modern Art, and he has done hundreds of portrait commissions, including portraits of William Shatner, M.R. Schweitzer, Gloria Swanson, the Fred Woolworth family, Jane Fonda and Abby-Ann Van Pelt.

The workshop will include instruction for all levels of experience. Enrollment is limited to 20 and will be accepted on a first come-first-serve basis. The fee is $200. Jacobs will give daily attention to each student as well as lecture and demonstrate.

He will be available for portrait commissions after April 3. For more information or to register call Karen Beal, 683-7212.

Ms. Black, who plays Sarah, in MCT's production is not deaf; however, she has experience working with the deaf. She's a teacher at Emerson Elementary School.

Supporting characters are A. Walker Estes as Orin Dennis; Lana Grubb as Lydia; Thomas Carrothers as Mr. Franklin; Nancy Johnson as Sarah's mother, Mrs. Norman; and Diane King as Edna Klein.

Several of the cast members have a special interest in the play's subject.

"Darrell, who works for one of the major oil companies, has, for the last four years, studied to become an interpretor and has become one," Ms. Shaw says. "Then, there's Walker, who lives at the Big Spring school and works as a teaching aid both in Midland and Odessa. Both he and his wife are deaf. His wife is a dorm counselor (at Big Spring). Then, there's Lana Grubb, who got interested in the deaf through some deaf friends of hers."

MCT's production of "Children of a Lesser God" has a PG rating. The language and the intimate relationship hinted at between the two leading characters before they marry keep the production from carrying a general audience rating.

"We have a very religious cast overall, and I told them we would remove every word they couldn't live with, and, in every case, they wrestled with their conscious and decided these needed to stay," Ms. Shaw says. "No other word would express the feelings as well. If it wasn't necessary, we didn't leave it.

"And, a lot of the humor is for a more mature audience. I think those 12 and under would enjoy what they understood of it, but it would be up to their parents if they wanted them to come where certain words were being used."

Ms. Shaw praised those working with her on "Children of a Lesser God."

"Elizabeth Lee designed the set, and it's only the second set she's designed since she's been at MCT," she says. "I think she's done an excellent job.

"And, Jon Clark is doing a very nice job with the lights, especially since we have three shows up, including a major musical, and don't have a vast number of instruments. We're a little short on lighting. To look at it, you wouldn't guess that he's working with so few instruments.

"Mae Dawson's been trying to juggle three shows, two of them opening the same night, and the third one coming in for cleaning this week. I think she definitely deserves mentioning for her costumes.

"And, Tom McKeown and Jane Phares, stage manager and assistant stage manager, have just been wonderful to work with. Jack Ratcliffe and Debbie Cooledge, both came to auditions to help and have been in and out during the whole production to help with signs and interpreting. They have been teaching signing to non-signing cast members who needed it and helping them get up to speed."

The other two productions being staged by MCT are "The Sound of Music" at Theatre Midland "Greater Tuna" at the Yucca Theatre. For reservations to any of the productions call 682-4111.

A choreographer and dance coordinator for MCT who has a master of fine arts from the University of Utah at Salt Lake City, Ms. Shaw has no training in sign language.

"I do, however, have a strong background in stage movement which includes the study of body language," she says. "I have found it to be a valauble aid in directing 'Children of a Lesser God.' A more physical type of communication seems to have been helpful in directing a play which deals so heavily in sign language."

Directing "Elephant Man," she says, may have helped prepare her for this play.

"That was dealing with a human oddity, but it was a complete and total human being deserving of recognition as such which is, to some extent, the same battle Sarah is fighting. Anytime some human being is different from the 'norm' then people tend to treat them differently in some way or the other."

She has felt the discomfort of having to deal through an interpretor.

"When dealing with the deaf, I have to have the interpretor just as any non-speaking deaf person would have to have in speaking to a hearing person, and it's surprising how disconcerting it is to be carrying on a conversation with someone who never looks at you.

"At first you think, 'Well, the only way they're going to understand what I'm saying is by looking at the interpretor.' Then you begin wondering if the interpretor is getting the right meaning, the right inflection, is doing it as well as you would be, but you have no way of knowing because the person that you are talking to is not looking at you. I think we all instictively think that what we're saying people will understand better from us than from someone else."

'Angel Heart' lacks intensity, artistry

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO
Lifestyle Writer

Steam rises from subway vents on a narrow street between claustrophobic tenements. The night is black, buildings are grey. Dingy streetlamps cast dim light upon the pavement revealing slush in varying tones of white and grey in a monochromatic palette. As the camera pulls back from a microcosm scene to a macrocosm, a man in a grey and black suit comes into view. He is sprawled in the street. We know he is dead even before the camera closes in on the vivid red blood oozing from a head wound.

The colors and the mood of this scene in "Angel Heart" are as unsettling as any scene in "Blue Velvet." Like "Blue Velvet," the final moments of "Angel Heart" will leave the audience wondering what was real and what was imagined. Like its predecessor, it will also polarize its audiences — some will like it, some will loathe it. But despite the similarities, "Angel Heart" is sorely lacking in the intensity and artistry present in "Blue Velvet."

"Angel Heart," a thriller with occult overtones, has succeeded in getting a lot of advance publicity due to its re-editing to receive an R instead of an X rating. Although "Angel Heart" doesn't have any more sex or violence than any other film in the "Friday the 13th" series, 10 seconds were cut from a sex scene in the original version in order to shed its X rating.

The scene in question involves private eye Harry Angel, Mickey (9½ Weeks) Rourke and "Cosby" kid Lisa Bonet as the beauty who is not above sacrificing chickens in Voodoo rites (What else could you expect from a young woman with a name like Epiphany Proudfoot?). The love scene is a nightmarish sequence, with the lovers oblivious to blood mixing with rain that is dripping from the ceiling and walls. The red rain begins pelting, then pouring down in torrents and for sheer squeamishness alone, this vision outdoes most horror films. It makes one wonder what in the world was cut.

Much of the rest of the film is as riveting visually, though not as original. The plot begins when Angel is hired by sinister character Louis Cyphre (Robert De Niro) to track down a former big-band singer, the mysterious Johnny Favorite. It seems that Favorite welshed on a "commitment" to Cyphre, who wants to collect his collateral. Cyphre wants Angel to find out if Favorite, a shell-shocked private who disappeared after World War II, is still alive. "I don't like missing accounts," he tells Angel.

Set in the 1950s, the search takes Angel from the heart of New York to the Louisiana bayous. He leaves a trail of dead bodies — a junkie physician, a guitar player and former friends of Favorite — in his wake that begins to implement him as the killer.

The pacing is fast enough and the acting is fine. Though it never quite takes us through the netherworld of "Blue Velvet," director Alan Parker presents eerie images of fans slowly turning, a shrouded figure, streets sweating rain and flashbacks of soldiers celebrating the victory of WWII.

Parker ("Midnight Express," "Shoot the Moon," "Birdy," and "Fame") is an eclectic film maker. Unfortunately, his moody camerawork seemed overdone. The repeated images get tedious, til you find yourself saying, "Oh no, not another fan." Instead of meshing with the plot, they occasionally are distracting.

The only touches of humor exist because Angel "has a thing about chickens," and one sight gag brings this full circle. The movie itself evolves into an odd, basically humorless fusion of private-eye melodrama and occult-horror film.

"Angel Heart" has punch and is definitely different, but the ending somehow seems disappointing. After all the character goes through to get to the end of the trail, it seems like a real dead end.

"Angel Heart," rated R for sex and graphic violence, is playing at UA Cine 4 on Cuthbert.

'Elm Street 3' special effects spectacular

The man of your dreams — er, nightmares — is back and the saga of the unfortunate "Elm Street Children" continues in the box office smash, "Nightmare on Elm Street 3: Dream Warriors." Believe it or not, the film that was No. 1 at the box office the first week of March wasn't "Platoon." No sir, fans of the immortal Freddy Krueger turned out in droves, earning the film $8,880,000 in its first three days out.

The evil protagonist Freddy Krueger, played by Robert Englund, is the burned, horribly scarred villain sporting razor-like knives from his fingertips, who is out to seek revenge against the children of the parents who burned him alive. He was killed (the first time — and there have been many times) by a lynch mob of parents after he was discovered to be a child murderer.

The most talkative and creative slasher in the genre has somehow achieved an almost cult status with teen-agers. Associated Press stories report that when "Nightmare 3" opened in Los Angeles, as soon as the lights dimmed, the audience began chanting "Fred-dy, Fred-dy," louder and louder, swelling to a shout. In New York, filmgoers stood up to shout warnings to the different characters as the story unfolded. In Syracuse, the mounted police were called out to control the crowds. In Midland, the most exciting thing that happened was that a crying baby had to be taken out to the lobby.

In the new film, many of the special effects mirror those in "Dreamscape," another fantasy movie. So it's not surprising to find that "Nightmare 3's" director, Chuck Russell, co-wrote "Dreamscape."

As usual, Freddy threatens teen-agers by haunting their dreams. He moves in mysterious ways. In Freddy's dreamland phones grow tongues, sink faucets become claws, and nothing and no one is safe.

The special effects are spectacular, and the plot is much better than "Nightmare on Elm Street Part II." The major flaw in this latest movie is the casting. Heather Langenkamp, a teen-ager who appeared in the original "Nightmare on Elm Street," is brought back as an adult. And let me tell you, a shock of grey hair and two-piece suits do not make a mature adult out of Langenkamp. Not for a single second is she believable as a social worker fresh out of grad school who has come to save Freddy's latest victims-to-be. Part of the problem is the lackluster, monosyllable dialogue she is saddled with. By the third time she says to a group of kids in a therapy session, "OK, just straight talk in here," throwing popcorn at the screen seems appropriate.

Langenkamp arrives at a psychiatric hospital where a group of teen-agers are united by a common bond — having the same nightmares. Freddy appears in all the nightmares and attempts to play on their worst fears, luring his victims to their death. If a teen-ager is a reformed drug addict, Freddy's fingers become syringes. If a person is paralyzed, he may devise an extra-special wheelchair. Oh well, you get the picture.

Wes Craven, the writer of "Nightmare 3," really goes for the gross-out with this one. It's no wonder that one of the teen-agers gulps down coffee crystals straight out of the jar in order to stay awake and avoid Freddy's pyrotechnics.

The most illuminating point in the film is the silly explanation of why Freddy grew up to be such a meanie. It seems his mother was captured by inmates of a prison, locked in a room, and raped hundreds of times by inmates. Freddy was conceived during this mania, making him "the son of 100 bastards." Shortly after his birth, his mom became a nun. (Who could blame her?)

Some of the tormented teen-age roles are well played (Patricia Arquette as one haggard insomniac, Jennifer Rubin as another). But the real star is Freddy himself, brought scarily to life by Englund. The makers of "Nightmare 3" have to be given credit for keeping the continuing saga of Freddy fresh. Not every horror film features a joint cameo by Dick Cavett and Zsa Zsa Gabor.

It is often unclear, how and when Freddy will enter the teen-agers dreams, why some will die and some will wake up with a mere scratch. But as in Freddy's dreamworld, there is no logic. As long as there is one fool left in the universe who will venture into a dark attic with a single match flame to check out noises, Freddy will find his way back. As usual, good triumphs, and Langenkamp says, "I think we can stop him this time for good." With box office receipts doing so well for "Nightmare 3," we know better.

"Nightmare on Elm Street 3: Dream Warriors," rated R for one heavy sex scene and lots of violence, is playing at Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

'Mannequin' too wooden, needs more life

Can a stockroom clerk aspiring to be an artist find happiness with a woman who is a bit of a dummy? Andrew McCarthy is the would-be sculptor who creates a mannequin that becomes a living doll. Kim Cattrall plays the woman who inhabits the mannequin when no one but McCarthy is around. You see, she is a 4,501 year-old Egyptian princess whose restless spirit arrives in McCarthy's century. She asked the gods to save her from a fate worse than death in her century — marrying a camel dung dealer.

The comedy opens with McCarthy being fired from a series of jobs, and moves fairly slow, with humor on the level of "I Dream of Jeanie." But it gets better when McCarthy is hired by a ritzy department store as a window dresser. With the aid of his mannequin, who is transformed into a beautiful woman every night, they manage to create crowd-pleasing windows.

Most of the gags hinge on the fact that the dummy is a live woman for McCarthy's eyes only. Genuine laughs are few in the movie as the actors try too hard with lines that often fall flat. McCarthy does well as the enthralled young teen who is not above being caught kissing a mannequin in the ladies' restroom. Though Cattrall is beautiful to look at, she tries too hard to be carefree. The most refreshing breath of humor is brought to the screen by Meshach Taylor, the emotional and flamboyantly gay Hollywood. Hollywood wears outrageous sunglasses, drives a hot pink convertible complete with a protective cover — electric blue with pink dots that with his name in a script that screams 'Hollywood' — and a license plate that says "Bad Girl."

Taylor has some of the best lines in the movie. When McCarthy leaves Taylor alone in the store one night because he has a date with Cattrall, Taylor woefully says, "Maybe I could get GI Joe and we could double date some time."

But no matter what the script, Taylor delivers his lines with a certain finesse and aplomb missing in the other actors' delivery.

Director Michael Gottlieb has a strong visual style with vivid shots of store interiors that are enchanting. The plot works well enough but the movie does not have the sustained comic sense or innocence that made "Splash" such a success.

One scene of man and mannequin cavorting in the store and trying on different outfits to the sounds of "Bangles"-like music is straight out of "Night of the Comet," but less inspired.

The ending gets silly with Keystone Cops chase scenes and McCarthy turning sappy, saying that he wants to "build things with character and dignity." When Cattrall asks him if they should name their first kid "Pinocchio," it's a grim reminder that this isn't a Walt Disney movie.

In all fairness, children under 12 seem to find "Mannequin" extremely enjoyable. It's easy to remember wondering what it would be like if mannequins could come alive. Unfortunately, "Mannequin" was just a little too wooden and needed more life.

"Mannequinn," rated PG for sexual innuendo, is playing at Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

'Hayride' plans talent shows with $50,000 prize

SHREVEPORT, La. (AP) — The "Louisiana Hayride," a longtime country music show, is moving to a bigger hall and planning to showcase new talent in a bid to attract fans of the Grand Ole Opry, promoters say.

"Eighty percent of the dyed-in-the-wool country and western fans who have been to the Grand Ole Opry want to go somewhere else" as well, Hayride chief executive officer Bill Starnes said.

Starnes announced earlier this week that the Hayride will begin its new 2½-hour program June 13, with talent shows featuring performers competing for a $50,000 grand prize. Viewers will be the judges by calling a 900 number, and winners will be announced on subsequent programs, he said.

The "Hayride" has spent the past 14 years in a small Bossier Parish hall, but is planning a return to Shreveport's Municipal Auditorium, its home in the 1950s and '60s. The 3,500-seat auditorium will hold eight times as many fans as the smaller, Starnes said.

Tickets are expected to cost about $7.50, and the show is to be divided into a one-hour live radio program, a 30-minute talk show and a one-hour television show, to be taped for distribution.

Broadcasts are to be carried by KWKH AM-FM of Shreveport, La., and sister radio stations in Wichita, Kan., Denver, Colo., Omaha, Neb., and Springfield, Mo., he said.

And Starnes said he expects the show to be syndicated in at least 50 television markets by mid-June, though no Shreveport station has signed.

Area museums to host conference

Museums in Midland and Odessa will co-host the 1987 Texas Association of Museums Annual Meeting and Trustees Conference, April 1-4. Participating local museums are The Art Institute for the Permian Basin, the Museum of the Southwest, the Petroleum Museum and the Presidential Museum.

Most sessions will be conducted at the Midland Hilton. Topics of discussion will focus on various aspects of museum management, including subjects such as personnel, finance and collections. Topics other than those relating to management will also be discussed.

Workshops will also be offered to conference participants. One such workshop, presented by Terry Chase, founder of Chase Studios, will be on the fabrication and casting of objects for natural history exhibits.

Another artist, sculptor Stanley Marcus will discuss his life-sized grouping, "The Cocktail Party," in the teaching gallery at UTPB. Participants will also see a molten metal casting demonstration.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

MONDAY, MARCH 16, 1987

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Be more idealistic about both love and your career. It will pay off big in the year ahead. Successful relationships depend on sharing. Let others know what is going on within you. Being too serious could work against all the positive things that could come into your life very soon. You will enjoy new business triumphs in April. Media job opportunities will offer you your chance in the fall and at the end of 1987. Family ties can be strengthened.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Weigh any travel plans very carefully; it might be better to stay put. A heightened sensitivity makes you highly perceptive — a tremendous asset in business and romance. It is time to make a decision.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Travel and scholastic or literary interests are in the spotlight. A lawyer can help you find a loophole if you want to get out of a contract. The answer to a question astounds you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Concentrate on business and career matters early in the day. Students learn of employment leads through professors and former teachers. Avoid discussing sensitive subjects even if others bait you. Keep any doubts to yourself.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A good time to deal with distant interests. A trip abroad could be postponed due to undertain world affairs. Increased social activity could lead to new employment leads. The entire family benefits.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Go over the budget and economize a little more. Complete important paper work. A conversation with a for VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Business or joint expenses demand attention. New wealth is indicated for many. Someone is working behind the scenes on your behalf. Plan on a large scale. Exciting doors are about to open!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Practical matters take up the lion's share of your time today. Be careful not to take on more than you can handle. Originality and creativity count big with influential people. Use your talents wisely.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Behind-the-scenes activities could have you worried. Stop stewing and concentrate on work assignments! Prepare a special presentation for a prospective boss. You need to look your best at all times.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Avoid acting in haste and using shortcuts. If you rush through an assignment, you will probably have to do it over. Tact and diplomacy will help you get what you want. Loved one may exaggerate.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Others may try to pressure you into making quick decisions. Stand your ground. You need more time. Legal papers, business deals and social occasions enjoy favorable influences. Indulge yourself with a special meal.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): New business progress and personal gains are part of the picture. Spend on quality rather than quantity. Meetings and presentations are in the spotlight. Focus on presenting yourself in a positive light.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Showcase your talents and pursue your dreams. Solutions and compromises could play hide-and-seek today. Be persistent and any opposition will fade. Go with your instincts in both business and romance.

Opening lead: Jack of ♠

On this site of the Atlantic, the common way to encourage partner to continue a suit is to play an unnecessarily high card. However, don't let signaling be a substitute for intelligence.

West's preemptive jump overcall placed North under considerable pressure. He wisely decided it was more important to show his spade support rather than rebid his excellent diamond suit, and a fair spade game was quickly reached.

Rather than attack with a heart, in which suit his side could hope for one trick at best, West led his jack of clubs. Declarer played low from dummy and East signalled enthusiastically with the ten. West would have loved to continue with another club through the king to his partner's marked ace-queen, but search as he might he could not find another one in his hand.

He shifted to the queen of hearts, in case his partner held the ace. South won and ruffed a heart on the table, then took the trump finesse. When that won and the suit split 3-2, declarer ended up losing only two club tricks and a trump.

As is often the case, the opening lead told the story. Since East was looking at the ten of clubs, he knew his partner's lead of the jack had to be from shortness. Signalling for a come-on was all well and good if the lead was from a doubleton, but more likely it was a singleton — West probably would have preferred a heart lead to a doubleton club.

East had available a play that would have catered to either possibility. He should simply have overtaken the jack with the queen and cashed the ace. Even if West had started with a doubleton, he would ruff the third club and East's sure trump trick would have netted a one-trick defeat.

Petroleum Museum planning 'Focus on Oil '87'

"Focus on Oil '87," the ninth annual photo contest and exhibit on petroleum-related subjects, will be held at the Petroleum Museum. The Permian Basin Petroleum Museum is the largest museum in the U.S. devoted to explaining the history and technical aspects of the oil industry, according to Carey Behrends of the museum.

"Focus on Oil" is open to any amateur or professional photographer who is a resident of the U.S. Photographers may enter prints in Amateur Color or Professional Color classes, and both amateurs and professionals may enter the Black & White class. There is a $5 entry fee per print.

The prints must portray any aspect of oil and gas exploration, drilling, production, transportation, or refining, including people working in the industry, but may not include end-product use. Cash purchase awards include $250 for best-of-show, $175 for first place in each category, $125 for the three second places, and $50 for each of the three third places.

As many as fifty photographs will be selected by the judges for exhibit in the museum during June and July.

Entries and entry fees must be received at the museum no later than May 15, for judging by May 24. More information can be obtained from the Petroleum Museum, 1500 I-20 West, Midland.

Glen Rose's annual Bluegrass Picnic April 3-5

GLEN ROSE — The 12th annual Bluegrass Picnic, at Oakdale Park in Glen Rose, will be held April 3-5. The event will include an outdoor arts and crafts fair.

Artists and craftsment will have booths set up in the outdoor stage area Friday and Saturday, 10 a.m.-6 p.m., and Sunday, 12 noon-5:30 p.m.

More than 70 booth spaces are available on a first come, first served basis, according to Mollie Bradbury, spokesman for the event. The cost to reserve a 10 foot by 12 foot space for one, two or three days is $20, plus $7 per day for electricity if needed.

Craftsmen must supply their own table and chair and demonstrate their craft part of the time. No imports or manufactured items will be sold.

The park charges no commission on booth sales, according to Ms. Bradbury, and each artist will be allowed to set his own prices.

Wreaths, fiber art, needlework and woodcrafts plus denim aprons, sweatshirts, quilted products and oil paintings are among items to be demonstrated and sold during the annual fair.

Bluegrass music will be played at jam sessions throughout the weekend. The public is invited to listen or bring their instruments (except electric) and participate.

Cabins, 250 full hook-ups and tent spaces are available for overnight guests.

For more information or to reserve a booth, contact Oakdale Park, P.O. Box 548, Glen Rose 76043, 817-897-2321. The park is located off Highway 67 and across Highway 144 from the Brazos River.

MAA's Spring Art Show will be at museum

The Midland Arts Association Spring Art Show will be held at the Museum of the Southwest March 28 through April 5. A limit of three entries may be submitted on March 21, 10 a.m.-5 p.m., at the Stables Gallery. The judge will be Kethleen Cook, PSA, from Kerrville.

There will be a reception at the Museum of the Southwest March 28, 7:30 p.m. Cash awards, honorable mentions and a Best in Show will be given.

A Brown Bag lecture will be held at the Museum on March 31 and April 1, noon to 1 p.m. The lectures will be on artists' inspirations and will be given by the winners of the show.

Artists interested in participating may pick up a prospectus from the Museum of the Southwest or Midland College. For more information, call Doris Spires at 682-8401 or Cynthia Wolf at 694-4952.

The public is invited to the exhibit, the reception and the Brown Bag Lecture. The museum is located at 1705 W. Missouri.

Haley Library art show, sale thid Saturday

The Ninth Annual Haley Library Western Art Show and Sale is scheduled for Saturday at the library located at 1805 W. Indiana Ave. This event is, according to Robin McWilliams, art show assistant, in keeping with an expressed purpose of the library: To promote and preserve Southwestern heritage.

"Another purpose," said McWilliams, "is to raise funds for the acquisition of fine art and rare books for the library's collections." He said the show had been successful on both counts throughout its history.

Directed by Jim Clark of Scottsdale, the sale will feature 150 works, all in miniature, by 50 western artists. Among those participating in this year's show are J. Chester Armstrong, Wayne Baize, Joni Falk, Veryl Goodnight, Buck McCain, Dan McCaw, Tom Ryan, and Vladan Stiha.

Ticket information is available from the Nita Stuart Haley Memorial Library. The library office can be reached at 682-5785.

Rankin will be holding arts, crafts exhibit

RANKIN — The Rankin Art Association will hold its eighth annual Arts and Crafts Exhibit Thursday through Saturday.

Local artists are invited to enter their works. Participants may enter works in the Professional, Open I (work done under teacher, workshop or class), Open II (works copied, but not under supervision), and Original categories.

Entries will be accepted at the Rankin Park Building, site of the show, from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Thursday.

There will be no entry fee for the children's division which consists of preschool, elementary, middle and high school categories.

Public viewing will be Friday from 1 to 5 p.m., and Saturday from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

For additional information, call 1-693-2770.

Institute hosts collection from Smithsonian

ODESSA — The Art Institute for the Permian Basin is hosting an exhibit of sculpture, drawings and watercolors by some of the world's most renown artists beginning Saturday. "A Collector's Eye," the personal collection of Olga Hirshhorn, is on loan from the Smithsonian Institution, Washington D.C., for its only Texas showing.

Her husband's massive collection is the foundation of the Hirshhorn Museum and Sculpture Garden at the Smithsonian.

Mrs. Hirshhorn has assembled a collection which began with gifts from her husband.

"Most of the works are small in scale yet remarkable in the spirit of theie concept," says a representative for the art institute. "they are testimony to the fact that the size of a work of art is never the measure of its power to delight us."

Located at 4909 E. University, the Art Institute is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. tuesday through Saturday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. Free docent tours of the exhibit are available by calling 1-366-7222. There is no admission charge.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Autograph party slated

An autograph party honoring B. Byron Price and J. Evetts Haley will be hosted by the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library from 3 to 5 p.m. March 22.

Price, the director of the National Cowboy Hall of Fame in Oklahoma City, is the author of a book published by the library, entitled "Crafting A Southwestern Masterpiece: J. Evetts Haley and Charles Goodnight: Cowman and Plainsman."

Both Price and Haley, founder of Midland's Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library and History Center, will be present to autograph copies of the book, now on sale for $20 in the library, located at 1805 W. Indiana.

Visitors to the party will also be able to view the library's ninth annual art show and sale which will be on display in the library's main room.

Jam Festival planned

The Permian Basin Spring Break Jam Festival will be held March 22, 6 p.m., at Midland Center, corner of Wall and Main. A portion of the proceeds from the jam will go to benefit Ronald McDonald House.

The show will feature Permian Basin bands Arial, Keller, Full House, and Silent Majority. Sound will be provided by Fitzco Sound of Midland.

Tickets are $7.50 in advance and $11.50 at the door. Tickets are available at Endless Horizons in Midland and Odessa, McDonald's restaurants in Midland, Odessa and Big Spring, Reel Music in Midland, and Midland Center beginning March 17.

For further information, call Midland Center at 682-6234.

Library program planned

The Children's Department of the Midland County Public Library has special programs planned for Tuesday and Thursday during this week of spring break.

A wool spinning demonstration and a video presentation of "Charlie Needs a Cloak," by Tomie de Paola, are planned for Tuesday, 2:30-3 p.m.

Two video selections, "Why Mosquitoes Buzz in People's Ears" and "The Foolish Frog," are scheduled for Thursday, 10:30-11 a.m.

All ages are welcome. There is no admission charge and registration is not required.

The Midland County Public Library is located at 301 W. Missouri. Call 683-2708 for further information.

Show may be previewed

ODESSA — The opening preview of the Odessa Art Association's second annual juried show will be held from 7 to 9 p.m. Tuesday at the Art Institute for the Permian Basin. The exhibition will features works in a variety of media by artists from the Permian Basin area.

The artwork was juried from OAA's 29th annual open show by juror Grace Knox of Carlsbad, N.M. The exhibit will continue through March 29.

The Art Institute is located at 4909 E. University, Odessa. Hours are 10 a.m.-5p.m., Tuesday through Saturday, and 2-5 p.m., Sunday. There is no admission charge.

Bank exhibits artwork

RepublicBank First National Midland is exhibiting art works of the members of the Midland Palette Club during March. Included in the exhibit are oil and watercolor paintings. The public is invited to view the show during regular business hours, according to assistant vice president Eleanor Josting.

The Midland Palette Club sponsors for its members workshops in various art mediums.

Hank Williams Jr. will open Six Flags Over Texas' season

Williams

ARLINGTON — Country singer Hank Williams Jr. will open Six Flags Over Texas' 1987 concert season with a performance April 4.

The performance will begin at 7 p.m. in the park's Music Mill Amphitheater.

All seats are reserved. A $5.50 concert charge will be made in addition to the regular Six Flags admission price.

Tickets are currently on sale through Rainbow-Ticketmaster outlets. Tickets will also be available at the concert box office at Six Flags' main gate on Saturdays and Sundays only for the park's opening day.

Temptations will give concert

The Temptations will be in Midland April 4 for an 8 p.m. performance at Chaparral Center on the Midland College campus. The opening act will be rhythm and blues performers, Junior Walker and The All Stars.

Sponsors of this concert of legendary R&B rockers are KMID-TV, KODM 98 FM Radio, the Midland Reporter-Telegram, and Las Manos Museum of the Southwest.

Tickets, priced at $15, are on sale now at Endless Horizons, Midland and Odessa, and at the Chaparral Center ticket office. Proceeds benefit the Musueu of the Southwest complex.

Office occupancy figures indicate soft market continuing

Twenty-five percent vacancy leaves room for expansion

By DEANNA J. NEAL
Business/Oil Writer

The tall buildings that make Midland's skyline impressively attractive are also indicators of the city's economic health. When they are full, the oil industry is booming and times are good, but, when times are tough in the oil patch, office occupancy rates reflect the downturn.

According to the latest Tall City office survey, occupancy rates indicate only a slight decline from the previous year. Local property managers say this could be viewed as a blessing, in light of the disastrous economic downturn in 1986.

Conducted annually by the Midland Chamber of Commerce's economic development department, the office survey shows only a two percent decrease in the amount of space leased in 1986 over 1985. Total occupancy in 1986 for Midland's 77 available multi-tenant office buildings stands at just under 75 percent, the survey indicates.

While office buildings are suffering from a lack of occupancy and have had to desperately cut rates particularly in older buildings there is still a positive side, says Bill Sandlin, property manager for Clay Desta Corp.

Said Sandlin: "Many of the major oil companies who are considering consolidations have taken a look at the Permian Basin, where a large part of their production is. If they see available office space for reasonable rates, that will play a big part in their decision to move employees to Midland.

"Texaco's recent consolidation of employees from their Denver office to Midland is one example," Sandlin notes.

"Although that was probably not the overriding factor in their decision to move, the availability of space in the building they are currently occupying was not a point of concern for them, and certainly may have facilitated the decision to move to Midland," he said.

"I was contacted earlier this week by another firm that is considering a consolidation of their Dallas office. They are looking to move people in from Dallas to their Midland office, and they were inquiring about rates and availability of space. That's encouraging, and it makes sense that firms maintain offices close to their production."

Sandlin has no doubt that the oil business will turn around, and he sees the extra space available as a positive point in the city's favor when that turnaround comes.

Suzan Conder/Reporter-Telegram

A recent Midland Chamber of Commerce survey of local office buildings indicates a slight decrease in occupancy rates during 1986, a decline that property managers say could have been much worse.

Mike Lewis, of Lewis & Associates, says actual physical occupancy is probably lower than the survey indicates. "Realistically, actual physical occupancy is probably closer to 65 percent. Many companies who have signed leases are still paying rent, even though they may have moved out of some or all of the space," he points out.

"So naturally, once those leases are up, they won't be re-letting the space."

Lewis notes that most of his business today is concentrated on movement from within. "People are upgrading to bigger and better buildings, or in some cases, are downgrading to economize. What little activity there is has come from within — we're seeing nothing new coming in."

Lewis has seen the property management business boom and bust with the oil industry. "When I came to Midland in 1981, a Class A office

Restaurateur whets appetite for success

Iranian emigre' hailed as top exec in El Chico chain

By DEANNA J. NEAL
Business/Oil Writer

When Jeff Sharifi became manager of Midland's El Chico restaurant in 1984, it was floundering for leadership and sales were in the basement — but no longer.

Two years later, sales have increased 100 percent. The local eatery even managed to post a 25 percent increase in 1986, when oil prices crashed and Midland's economy took its biggest nosedive in history.

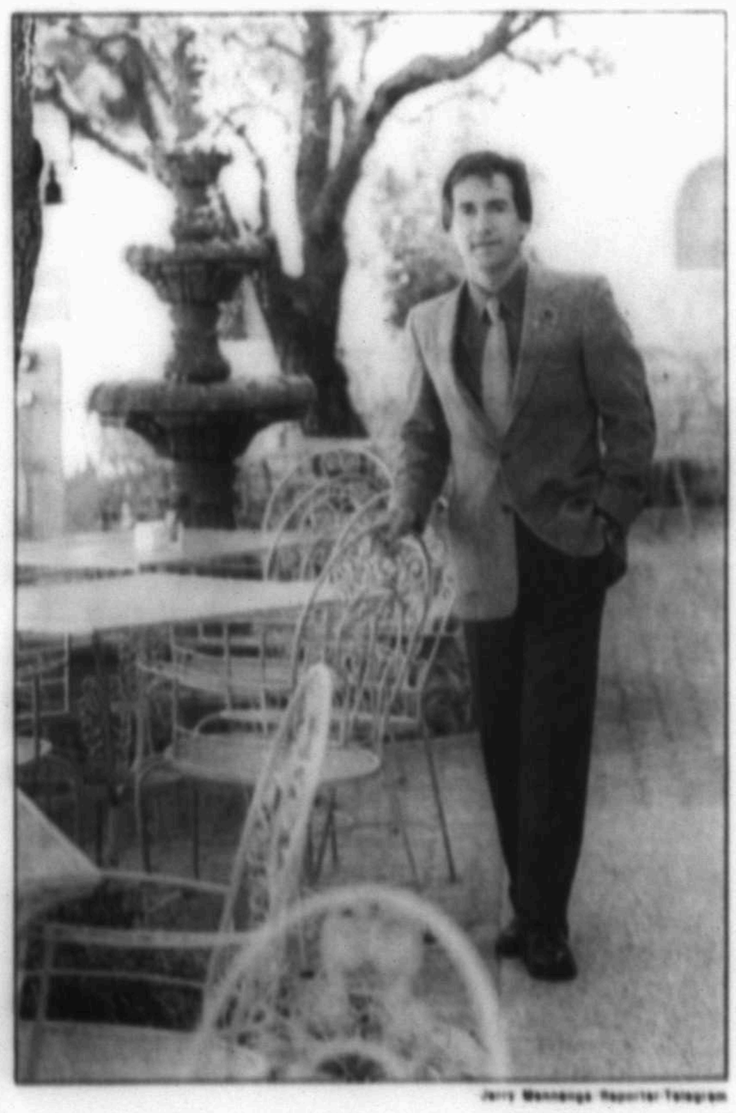
With such an impressive record, it comes as no surprise that the El Chico Corp. selected Sharifi as its 1986 Manager of the Year from among the firm's 102 restaurants in 10 states.

Sharifi's management feat is more impressive when one considers that the 36-year old Iranian-born immigrant could not even speak English eight years ago. An engineer by trade, Sharifi once built multi-million dollar projects during the Shah's regime, heading one of the largest construction firms in Iran. In 1978, he came to America.

In receiving the corporate honor, Sharifi was cited for his hard work, enthusiasm and leadership, but he gives much of the credit for his success to his adopted country.

"Owning a business in Iran is much different than owning a business in America. In Iran there is no competitiveness. Businessmen just sit back and wait for business to come to them," he said. "I love it in America, because you have to go after the business and bring it to you. The competition drives me and I enjoy it. Healthy competition makes you want to be on top."

Having had a couple of flings at the restaurant business before joining El Chico, he says he immediately saw the potential for the Midland El Chico and began to upgrade its service and food. His confidence in the store was contagious, causing the Dallas-based El Chico Corp. to pump $300,000 into a remodeling project resulting in a distinctive upscale atmosphere and additional seating.



Jerry Baumgras/Reporter-Telegram

Local restaurant manager Jeff Sharifi says the competitiveness of business in America is refreshing.

Seating and atmosphere were also enhanced by the addition of a Spanish-style patio that has been popular during the mild winter months.

Sharifi increased the number of El Chico employees from 21 to 47 and began working on employee morale. "We now have only a 2 percent turnover among our employees — that's very low for the restaurant business — almost nothing."

He says he has adopted the company's philosophy that "our customers are not just our customers, they are our guests." Sharifi takes that philosophy to heart, and much of his time is spent visiting with and greeting guests to make sure they are comfortable and satisfied.

Oilmen speak on conquering challenges

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

Finding an "Optimistic Approach to Petroleum Issues & Challenges for 1987" will be the unifying theme of three presentations sponsored by First City National Bank on Tuesday of Energy Appreciation Week, March 22 through 28.

Roswell, N.M. native Robert O. Anderson, former chairman of the board of the Atlantic Richfield Corp., will kick off the program addressing a noon luncheon at the Midland Hilton.

The afternoon will feature a pair of seminars. Arlen Edgar on the future of the oil and gas industry, and, Gerald Bennett on trends in the natural gas pipeline industry.

Luncheon speaker Anderson is now president and chairman of the board of Diamond A Cattle Co. of Roswell. He relinquished his post as chief executive office of Arco in 1982 and retired from the company's board in 1986.

Known throughout his 48-year oil industry career for his positive outlook on the business' future, Anderson has recently been acquiring producing and undeveloped New Mexico properties for Diamond A.

Edgar, a Midlander whose term as president of the 100,000-member American Institute of Mining, Metallurgical & Petroleum Engineers expired last month, will address the long-term prospects facing the global petroleum industry.

SPE/IADC conference convenes today

From Staff and Wire Reports

NEW ORLEANS — Drilling contractors, operators, engineers and managers will discuss strategies and techniques for overcoming today's economic challenges when the fourth SPE/IADC Drilling Conference convenes here this evening and running through Wednesday.

"Technology at the Rig" is the theme for the conference, cosponsored by the International Association of Drilling Contractors and the Society of Petroleum Engineers.

"Managing Drilling Operations in a Tough Economic Environment" is the lead session at this year's largest oil and gas drilling conference. The phrase also describes the international drilling industry's watchword for survival.

The keynote session on Tuesday will address insurance, tax reform measures, bankruptcy and project financing. Other meeting highlights include more than 100 technical papers that emphasize new drilling techniques, case histories and management concerns.

A panel discussion of current issues, presentation of the SPE Drilling Engineering Award and addresses by top SPE and IADC officers complete the schedule.

R. Thomas Fetters, president of the New Orleans-based CNG Producing Co., examines "Scenarios for the Future" in Monday's welcoming luncheon. Fetters will cover several topics including the pressures from low oil prices, industry consolidations in response to the low prices, implications for the service, supply and other industry sectors and his predictions for the future.

Keynote session speakers Tuesday are Jim Teff of Janson Green Ltd. — Lloyds of London, John H. Tompkins Jr. of Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co., John L. King of Fulbright & Jaworski and Grover R. "Gary" Castle of Chemical Bank, New York. Teff will discuss how to get the best value for insurance dollars and how much coverage is enough. Tompkins will examine the effects of U.S. tax reform on producers, drilling contractors and service and supply companies. King will address protection under bankruptcy statutes, as well as

Turnaround 1987: More than wishful thinking

Pitts

With Energy Appreciation Week and Blow Out in the chute, there's a lot of talk in the air about thinking positive, looking up and turning around. But can just thinking positive and feeling better really make any difference? And, for that matter, is there any real reason for thinking positive? I say "yes" on both accounts.

I hate to sound like Norman Vincent Peale, but positive thinking does have a bearing on what we do and what we become. If we think something is possible, it stands a far better chance of becoming reality than if we don't.

If we think things can get turned around in the oil patch, we will find a way to make it happen.

True, some things are beyond the control of positive thinking. Organizing a petroleum pep rally and shouting hurrah for Midland and crude oil may not melt OPEC hearts, budge fossilized presidential policy or make crude oil spot prices soar on NYMEX, but a good positive attitude can mitigate our response to our problems.

A positive attitude can make some troubled oil firms hold on longer, work harder, think smarter and shoot sharper to stay in the game. It can stretch corporate talents and resources to the limit, finding new ways to refinance, restructure and revitalize operations — and save jobs. Some positive-thinkers will take Chapter 11, then find a way to work out of it, paying off creditors and creating more jobs. The right attitude will make others stay with it until the day the IRS kicks in the door and the FDIC tows away the family car.

On the down side, the wrong attitude will cause some to give up at the first hint of adversity.

To the degree that attitude plays a big role in the destiny and well-being of the Permian Basin, events, gimmicks and pep rallies designed to restore right thinking and good positive attitudes can play a major role in a 1987 turnaround.

"If the Permian Basin Petroleum Association is successful in turning around just 10 percent of the negative thinking in the Permian Basin oil industry, we will consider Energy Appreciation Week a success," Charles Perry, PBPA president, told me this week.

Pointing to the fact that drilling activity is far below what it should be for the current price of oil, Perry attributes the gap to a bad attitude. "If it weren't for a bad attitude, we could probably have 1,400 rigs working instead of 800," he lamented.

But so much for attitudes, pep rallies and turnarounds. Are there real events that would give us cause to hope for a resurrection of the Permian Basin oil industry this year? There are.

We can be optimistic and expect to see genuine turnaround for a number of reasons.

A prime reason is that supply-demand factors now seem to favor higher oil prices in the near term. Surplus inventories built up during periods of OPEC over-production are now being drawn down, and the refiners will soon be looking to the tankers for supplies, says Oil & Gas Journal.

At the same time U.S. dependency on foreign crude is growing. Now 30 percent dependent on foreign crude, the U.S. will be 50 percent dependent by 1990, according to API sources. When that happens, OPEC will again be close to producing at 80 percent capacity. Traditionally, this benchmark calls for an energy crisis, like those of 1973 and 1979. Higher gasoline prices may not be good for the U.S., but it will be good for the oil industry. It will be even better if producers can manage to shake the Windfall Profits Tax before prices pass $30 again. While 1990 and $30 oil are a few years away, price increases leading to that era will begin this year.

In 1987, Mideast turmoil will continue to work for the good of the domestic oil industry. The Iran-Iraq conflict will divert capital and manpower from the development and production of reserves. At the same time, Iran — in order to finance its conflict — will continue to pressure (intimidate) Saudi Arabia to hold production down and allow prices to increase. It's no wonder the U.S. has played both sides in the conflict.

OFFICE

building downtown was leasing for $15 to $17.50 per square foot on a gross lease basis — with the landlord paying utilities and expenses. At that price, we were achieving 95 to 100 percent occupancy.

"Today, the same building will lease for $10 to $12 per square foot, and we can only get about 65 percent of the space rented."

Lewis notes a conservative trend among his clients. "Firms are doing today what they should have done several years ago — they are looking for the best lease space for the lowest overhead, getting efficient with their office plans, and taking a look at options for future growth."

He adds that when times were lucrative, not only did companies have a much larger employee base, but the average office was 20 ft. by 15 ft., compared to an average 10-by-12 office today.

Lewis says Midland is overbuilt in terms of office complexes. "Building during the boom of '80 and '81 was meant to handle demand during an inflated time. In '82, as we began to come back to reality, the city was overbuilt. Now, with the downturn, we are grossly overbuilt."

Lewis says with the high number of foreclosures and bankruptcies, financing will not be available for any new building in the next few years, and he sees that as an advantage. "We currently have a four-year supply of office space if the city remains in a normal growth pattern."

Lewis says one encouraging sign that has been prevalent over the last two to three months is a demand for longer term leases. "During most of 1986, clients were asking for as short a lease as possible. They simply didn't know if they were going to make it.

"For the past few months, however, the demand is rising for three- to five-year leases. I think people have decided we've reached bottom and those who are still hanging in there feel they're going to make it. They are taking advantage of low rates to tie up a good deal for as long a period as possible," Lewis said.

HBF Corp. vice president Kelly Cooke says a softening in the office market has caused landlords to be more competitive. "Rates are coming down and tenants are looking for longer term leases at lower rates."

Cooke says the majority of the market activity today is from within. "Companies are generally upgrading their office space. When you are renting a Class B or C building at $8 per square foot, it makes sense to move up to a Class A building for $10 per square foot," Cooke explains.

Sandlin said ClayDesta had a lucrative '86, noting two big renewals for more than 110,00 square feet. "In addition, we had 120,000 square feet of new leases during 1986."

Sandlin reiterates, "real estate is a long-term window. You can't take a snapshot of today's activity and get an accurate picture. You have to look at the long-term. Those of us who live in the Permian Basin know the industry will come back, and with available office space, we'll be ready."

SHARIFI

"We also take every customer comment very seriously. If there is something negative, we get to work on it right away. If something's positive, we try to continue it. My aim is to make friends with my customers."

One example of Sharifi's attention to customer desires is evidenced by the increased seating in the store's "no smoking" area. Once only about 25 percent of the restaurant was dedicated to non-smoking; now it has flip-flopped, with almost 75 percent reserved for non-smoking patrons. Sharifi says the change, a direct result of customer feedback, has resulted in increased sales.

Sharifi also uses some unique approaches to attract customers and make them feel at home: When was the last time you went to a restaurant and came out to find someone had cleaned the windows on your car? It happens frequently at El Chico. Female guests are often rewarded with a bouquet of flowers at lunch, and Midland school children are given a tour of the kitchen, a lesson in running a business and a free lunch.

He says the key to his success lies in his willingness to work hard and to go to any length to attract business. "You have to get out and really learn your industry, be it the restaurant business or anything else. You also have to know the community you're serving."

He says true success comes from his ability to enjoy and maintain an interest in the job being done.

Sharifi attended the University of Iowa to learn English and came to Texas during the boom of 1981 with hopes of purchasing some land with a group of friends. Plans to buy the land and build a hotel fell through, and Sharifi says he is thankful, because shortly thereafter, the economy took a dive.

The entrepreneur knew he wanted to go into business and took a shine to Midland.

Sharifi's recognition as manager of the year netted him a $500 cash award, a $1,000 gift certificate good for a trip anywhere he chooses, an engraved plaque and 200 shares of El Chico stock.

The El Chico chain was established in 1929 by the Cuellar family in Kaufman, Texas.

Besides his involvement in his industry, he is active in the community as a member of the Jaycees and the Rotary Club. Sharifi recently coordinated a fund-raising effort for the Permian Basin Food Bank and is currently working on a project to raise money for the Casa de Amigos program.

"Anything I can give back to the community is my honor; I have received so much during my time in Midland."

Sharifi summed up his feelings about his life this way: "The best thing about America is that those who work hard and are good are rewarded. That's why America is the best; in other countries, it doesn't matter what you do. I want to work hard to keep America the best."

We can also be optimistic because, for a change, the political hopper is full of proposed legislation favorable and not punitive to the U.S. oil and gas industry. With the political machine primed, there is every chance we will see some incentives and provisions given to the industry to improve its lot in 1987. Hopefully, at least one of the proposed bills will put a floor under oil prices, while others will eliminate some of the restrictive and antiquated regulations.

Nearly all industry experts expect to see the surplus gas bubble dissipate in the next 18 months and that alone is cause for optimism, provided the problems with pipelines and producers are worked out.

Probably the best news of all, however, is that there is little reason to expect a repeat of 1986 in 1987. There is simply nothing to be gained for the Saudis and OPEC to take oil prices back to the bottom. Even Saudi Arabia now recognizes that the oil price crash of 1986 was not a very smart move.

Couple these facts with the fact that many area oil operators, still smarting from last year's beating, appear ready to get back into the ring and drill some wells — even on $15 and $18 oil — and one can see, there are more reasons to look up than down in 1987.

Rig activity nosedives, falls below 800

The number of working oil and gas rigs in the United States took a nosedive this week, falling to 766, down 35 from a week ago, according to the Hughes Tool Co. rig count.

Rig activity in the Permian Basin showed a slight recovery after last week's fall. The count climbed three to finish the week at 108.

Leading counties were: Lea (21); Ector (10); Andrews (8); Midland (8); and Yoakum (7). District 8, based in Midland County, had 44 rigs working, while the Permian Basin section of Southeast New Mexico reported 30 rigs at work. Lubbock-based District 8A posted 20 working rigs and San Angelo, in District 7C tallied eight rigs.

Last year at this time, the U.S. count was 1,212, while the Permian Basin count was 142.

Rig utilization in the Permian Basin was up .8 percent to 19.3 percent this week, while U.S. rig utilization dropped from 17.3 percent last week to 17 percent this week.

January marks slight increase in activity

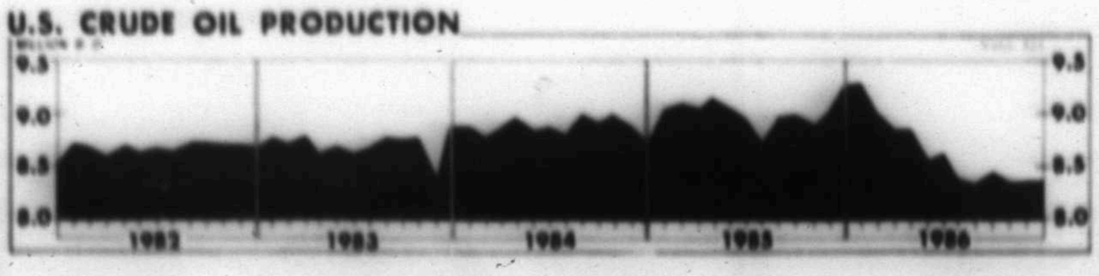
January drilling applications increased two percent from December, but were off by 41 percent from the previous year. The number of rigs running fell by 11 percent during January and were down 50 percent from last year. Well Completions rose eight percent during the month, but declined 70 percent from a year ago. Footage drilled increased 46 percent in January, but dropped 42 percent from 1985.

Oil production rose three percent during the current month under review but fell seven percent since 1985. Gas production rose three percent during the current period but fell 13 percent over the year.

Contract oil prices remained unchanged during February and were up by three percent over February, 1986. The spot price for West Texas Intermediate crude fell nine percent during February but was up by an encouraging 15 percent since last year.

The average gas price did not change during the month, although it was down by 35 percent since last year. Estimated oil revenue fell four percent for the month and 53 percent over the year. Estimated gas revenue fell nine percent during the month and 40 percent since last year.

U.S. CRUDE OIL PRODUCTION



Average U.S. crude oil production in 1986 declined from a high of 9.18 million barrels per day in February to 8.35 million barrels in December. This is the largest, most rapid production decline ever, and offset four consecutive years of production gains. Earlier EIA estimates of a 231,000 barrel per day decline have been revised to reflect an expected drop of 773,000 bpd.

Ex-executive finds new life at smaller agency

Creating gives 'kick' to ad man

NEW YORK (AP) — Burt Manning surveyed the breakfast menu, and decided a little more research couldn't hurt. He has been working on a new advertising campaign for Quaker cereals, so he ordered a bowl of granola.

"It's pretty good," the bearded adman said as he slowly chewed the nutty mixture. "But it's not ours."

To confirm the claim, he called over the waiter and asked what brand the cereal was. The waiter dutifully retrieved the empty box. Sure enough, it was Brand X.

The 55-year-old Manning's friends and business associates say he thrives on work, pushing himself well beyond the point when others have quit. He even brings it to breakfast.

Eighteen months ago, however, chances were slim that Manning's job would find him ducking into grocery stores, quizzing strangers about why they picked a particular cereal and agonizing over the psychological attachments some people seem to develop for breakfast food.

He was pulling down a six-figure salary as chairman and chief executive of J. Walter Thompson USA Inc., one of the nation's biggest ad agencies.

And he was one of three men being considered to head the domestic agency's parent, J. Walter Thompson Co., a move that presumably would have further removed him from the day-to-day chores of creating advertising.

But Manning was passed over for the job last March. Five months and several job offers later, he ended his 19-year association with Thompson by resigning to become a partner in a much smaller ad firm that his new partners renamed Jordan, Manning, Case, Taylor & McGrath.

"I had a big investment — emotional and financial — in Thompson," Manning recalled in August after announcing his move. "I could have stayed and built the company. It was a comfortable job at high income. But it was not giving me the kick I wanted."

The kick he wanted was the feeling of being immersed in creating advertising from start to finish, and the smaller firm offered that opportunity.

James Jordan, chairman of Manning's new agency, said he had tried twice before to get him to join the firm. After the 1986 managerial shift at Thompson, he tried again.

Jordan said his firm prides itself on promising clients the day-to-day involvement of agency partners in their advertising. He said adding Manning to the firm demonstrated the agency's depth of commitment to that promise.

As Manning joined the firm, it was preparing a presentation for Quaker Oats Co. which was looking for an agency to handle several cereal accounts, including the Quaker 100 Percent Natural brand.

Manning, who had worked on the Quaker account years earlier at Thompson in Chicago, went to work immediately and helped the agency win the assignment. "We had been sniffing around the edges of the door and I think Burt pushed that door open for us," Jordan said.

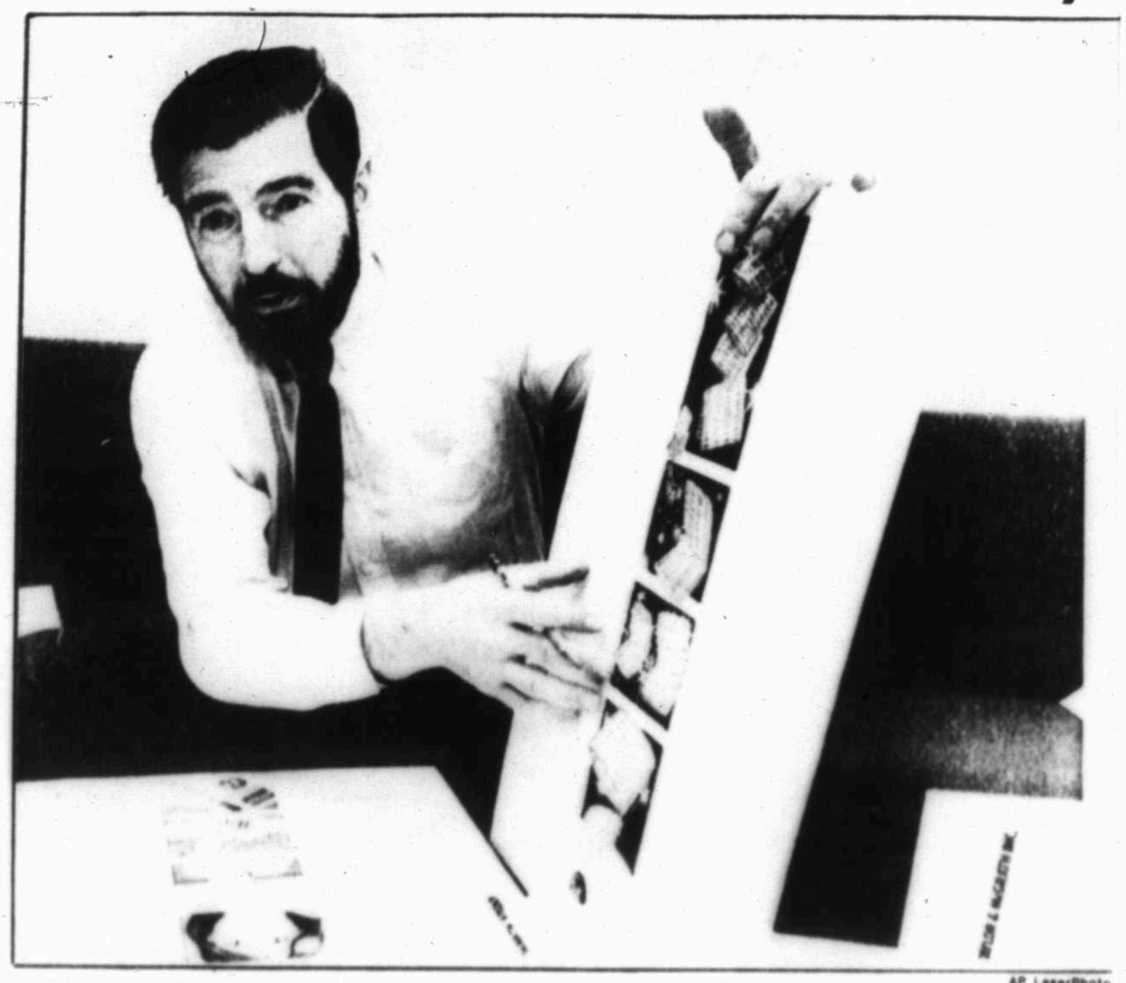
Taking responsibility for the newly won account, Manning started visiting grocery stores to watch how people buy cereals and listen to cereal users talk about their choices.

He was integrally involved again in creating advertising, something he had had to distance himself from on all but special occasions as he moved up Thompson's administrative ladder.

"As chief executive, I was consumed with better ideas than I thought were being done, but it would have been absolutely counterproductive to try to implement them," he said.

Doing anything more than suggesting ideas, he said, "would have put me in competition with people that I intended to do that job on a day-to-day basis."

Manning has been involved with a host of memorable advertising campaigns, and is generally given credit for a creative renaissance at Thompson.



AP Laserphoto

Burt Manning, 55 year-old ad executive, uses a story board as he explains an advertising campaign for Quaker Cereals. Friends and associate say he thrives on work.

Nearly 20 years ago, Manning helped develop the theme "When you are out of Schlitz, you're out of beer" even though he seldom drank beer at the time. His method of operation: He "just listened to (hundreds of people) talk about why they drank beer."

When he was assigned to the Ford account in 1972, he secretly arranged with a Ford dealer to let him pose as a car salesman so he could talk to car buyers.

"I found out the enormous ambivalence people have when they buy a new car. They have a tremendous desire to get it, but they also have a lot of fear that the dealer and the car companies were not looking out for their interests."

The result — a campaign that emphasized quality with the them "The closer you look, the better Ford looks."

In 1976, Manning helped Burger King begin shedding its image as a place where you needed "two hand to handle a Whopper" and recast as a family restaurant with the slogan, "America loves burgers and w are America's Burger King."

Coping with Texas' thrift crisis

Mattox contends FHLB overreacting

By ANDREW MANGAN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Imperiled by years of dangerous speculative lending followed by a shattering economic crash, debt-stricken savings and loans from the oil and farm belts have come crawling to Congress for help.

The insurance fund responsible for covering some $900 billion in S&L deposits in the United States has been sucked dry and, with more trouble on the way, the industry desperately needs more money, new rules and time to recover.

"In several states, some institutions are being caught in a general and deep economic decline," said Rep. Steve Bartlett, R-Dallas, who has authored one of several bills designed to provide relief to the industry.

Texas has taken the lead in pressing for change because it had dozens of S&Ls close their doors last year.

Officials believe another 58 of the state's remaining 290 institutions are in danger of insolvency.

Attorney General Jim Mattox traveled to Washington last week to try to persuade lawmakers to take a closer look at why so many S&Ls are falling by the wayside. He blames the federal regulators, who blame the greed of the S&Ls.

"There are a lot of troubled institutions out there, but the Federal Home Loan Bank Board has overreacted to the problem, particularly in Texas," Mattox said.

"They have been too aggressive in taking property from these S&Ls and then selling them at 'fire sale' prices," he said. "Congress will be making a serious mistake if it dosn't conduct extensive oversight hearings to look into the way the Federal Home Loan Bank Board handled the situation."

The cycle that left these S&Ls ailing began with deregulation in the early 1980s, which permitted the thrifts to move from home lending into the heady world of speculative development loans and direct investment.

Then came the falling price of oil which sapped the Texas economy, combined with a sharp decline in agricultural exports, which squeezed the flow of money, and S&Ls saw the value of their projects crumble.

When the loans started souring, the bank board began moving in and taking over, liquidating assets as it went, often at prices so low they wouldn't collect even half their original value.

"They would loan at a cheaper rate to get a percentage of the project," Mattox said. "They were getting up to 65 percent of the development deals. Instead of being lenders, they were partners. And it caused them to make some pretty bad banking decisions because of pure greed.

"What they have done is, on a wholesale basis, allowed all of the institutions to participate in virtually any project they wanted," he said. "It's been pure insanity the way they've handled foreclosures."

Roy G. Green, president of the Federal Home Loan Bank of Dallas, testified before a congressional subcommittee earlier this month that a majority of S&Ls are victims of the economic downturn and should get special consideration, but he also said a few deserve to be dismantled.

"The environment was so attractive that some less-principled entrepreneurs came in as well. funds were diverted, in some cases into their own pockets, and a disaster was left in their wake," Green said.

With property selling at the lowest prices in years, investors are walking away with big chunks of Texas. Prices are so low that even the state is looking at S&L liquidation sales for investments.

An additional headache for the government is that the marked-down property values are cutting ad valorem taxes for cities and the state, Mattox said.

The most immediate need, most agree, is a large injection of money to keep the FSLIC afloat.

A General Accounting Office report released last week indicated the fund, which insures S&L deposits up to $100,000, technically is $3 billion in the red.

The federal monetary system could not stand the collapse of public confidence that might follow bankruptcy of the FSLIC, industry and government officials say, but they add it is inevitable if Congress doesn't act quickly.

The GAO report suggested that even with a $25 billion rescue plan, the industry will be walking a tightrope for years.

Some bending of the rules also is needed to buy recuperation time for S&Ls that face collapse but are not crooked.

The bank board has been asked to ease tough rules used to determine the financial viability of a thrift, which were imposed a year ago when the extent of the industry's problems was realized.

Congress is expected to act in the coming weeks on a package of legislation that probably will include a recapitalization, along with some form of "forbearance" or easing of the rules.

Senators on the banking committee last week unanimously approved an amendment to their version of an S&L recapitalization bill authored by Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, setting specific guidelines federal regulators must follow.

Gramm's six-point plan would require the bank board to submit a report to Congress within 45 days detailing a flexible program designed to give troubled thrifts time to recover while minimizing the cost to the FSLIC.

Mattox believes Gramm is on the right track, but just hasn't gone far enough.

The Texas attorney general has prepared a lawsuit against the federal regulators in case he is not satisfied with the final congressional action, and he also wants assurance that the regulators will stop closing thrifts and liquidating assets without regard to the market problems brought on by the poor economic condition of the state.

Anguish to preside over museum board

From Staff Reports

The Petroleum Museum's governing boards, at a recent joint meeting, accepted the resignation of Russell Ramsland Sr., who served as president of the museum for the past 14 years. His resignation was accepted by the board of trustees, who elected Mrs. Buddy (Nancy) Anguish president.

Other museum officers include W.H. Collyns, first vice president; Conrad E. Coffield, second vice president; Joe B. McShane Jr., secretary; Bobby Holt, assistant secretary; H.W. Davidson, treasurer; and, Tom Welch, assistant treasurer.

The trustees elected four new trustees, to serve a three-year term. They are Collyns, a retired journalist; McShane, a consulting petroleum engineer with Wood, McShane & Thams of Monahans; Matthew P. Murphy, president and chief executive officer of RepublicBank First National Midland; and the president of the Santa Rita Club, currently Linda Borders.

Five trustees were re-elected to three-year terms: Nancy Anguish, Spencer Beal, Jack E. Brown, Robert B. Holt, and John E. Scherer.

The board of executors elected nine to serve five year terms: Joan R. Baskin, Midland Chamber of Commerce; Don L. Evans, president of Tom Brown, Inc.; Homer T. Jastrow, retired director of the museum; Kenneth Jastrow, independent oil operator; Don B. Jones, president of United Bank; John J. Redfern III, chairman of the board of Flag-Redfern Oil Co.; Richard B. Saxe, of Turpin, Smith, Dyer, Saxe & MacDonald; W.A. (Bill) Schaefer Jr., exploration manager for Santa Fe Energy Co.; Charles Spence, publisher of the Midland Reporter-Telegram; and Cyril Wagner Jr., partner in Wagner & Brown.

Re-elected to five year terms on the board of governors were W.H. Aikman, Ben Alexander, Mrs. Carlton E. Beal, George W. Bush, Robert A. Estes, R.W. Kuzmich, James D. McLaughlin, Dan Mendell III, Thomas Priddy and Thomas E. Rodman.

Officers for the board of executors are Ted M. Kerr, chairman; William S. Marshall, vice chairman; and John F. McGuigan, secretary.

Russell Ramsland was given special commendation for his 14 years as president of the board of trustees. He will continue to serve as a trustee.

The boards also gave "For Service" awards to six volunteers who have contributed significantly of their time in service for the museum. Recognized were Mrs. Leonard (Moira) Attwell, Ford Chapman, Richard (Dick) Donnelly, Kenneth M. Jastrow, Russel Ramsland Sr., and Mrs. Floyd (Rita) Wheeler. During the meeting, resolutions were passed to honor four board members who died during the last year: E.G. (Eddie) Durrett, Berte R. Haigh, L. Roy Prescott, and John J. Redfern Jr.

MEETINGS

Measurement group schedules meeting

The Permian Basin Measurement Society will meet Tuesday at the Ramada Hotel, 3100 W. Wall. Social hour will be from 6 to 7 p.m., with dinner from 7 to 8.

The program topic will be "Electronic Flow Computers," and will be a panel discussion led by representatives of Applied Automation, Daniel Industries, ITT Snyder, Sarasota Automation, and U.G.C. Industries.

Personnel managers to meet Tuesday

Deborah Sheperis, national accounts director with Personal Performance Consultants, will be the guest speaker at the Tuesday meeting of the Permian Basin Personnel Association. The meeting will begin at noon at the Ramada Hotel.

Sheperis' topic will be "Managing the Troubled Employee," focusing on reducing the effects of personal problems on employee attitude, attendance and productivity.

Reservations are $10 per person.

Diversification topic at SIPES meeting

The Midland chapter of the Society of Independent Professional Earth Scientists will host its monthly meeting on Wednesday at the Midland Country Club, beginning at 11:30 a.m.

Featured speaker will be Dr. H. Warren Gardner, vice president for academic affairs, the University of Texas of the Permian Basin. His presentation will cover "The Center for Energy and Economic Diversification." He is responsible for academic programs, planning and research at UTPB.

The luncheon is free for SIPES members and $10 for invited guests.

Gas contracts among PBGC courses offered

The Permian Basin Graduate Center has scheduled courses in computers, gas contracts, drill stem, and royalties and division orders.

"Understanding the Microcomputer - An Introduction to Computer Literacy" has been added to the Graduate Center's schedule. It will be held Monday and Tuesday, march 24-25 from 7 to 10 p.m. This course will cover lifting the veil of mystique, vocabulary, computerese for cocktail parties, what programming is, hardware, software, and word processing. Not a hands-on course. Ted Windecker, president, Computers for Business, will instruct. Fee is $40, $20 for each additional family member. Eligible for 6 CPE credits.

"Gas Contracts" is set for March 23-24 from 7 to 10 p.m. This course is designed to improve efficiency of those responsible for negotiating a satisfactory sales contract. Cover provisions such as take-or-pay, escalation, split stream, compressor charges, and effect of recentregulations on price provisions and new FERC prices. John Ochsner, Lone Star Gas Co., Midland, will instruct. Fee is $60, unemployed $10. Qualifies for 5 AAPL certification credits.

"Drill-Stem and Other Formation Tests" is scheduled for Wednesdays, March 25-April 22 from 7 to 10 p.m. A drill-stem test is a temporary completion of a formation which aids in the decision-making process: whether or not to set pipe on the zone. The course will cover the planning, running and interpretation of the data, as well as equipment and ways to meet the test's objectives. Engineers, geologists, independent operators, and technicians should benefit from the course. D.A. Warren, manager of reservoir services, Flopetrol Johnston Schlumberger, and Ralph H. Viney, engineering consultant, Ralph H. Viney & Associates, will instruct. Fee is $125, unemployed $20.

"Symphony: Word Processing," will meet March 25 from 7 to 10 p.m. This course will teach the word processing features on Symphony. It will include creating, editing and printing documents with an emphasis on integrating these documents with the Symphony spreadsheet. Ted Windecker will instruct. Fee is $60, $10 for unemployed. Eligible for 3 CPE credits. Registration limited to 10.

SEMINAR—

Long-term optimism is possible on a global scale in light of historic and current trends in oil reserves, production capacity and consumption, Edgar says.

Bennett, executive vice president of intrastate pipelines for Enron Corp.'s Gas Pipeline Group, will examine trends and developments impacting the natural gas pipeline industry. Prior to the merger of InterNorth and Houston Natural Gas Co., Bennett was president of Houston Pipe Line Co. and was formerly with Delhi Gas Pipeline Co. and Conoco Inc.

The two one-hour seminars, which begin at 2 p.m. are open to the public.

Cost of the luncheon and keynote address by Anderson is $12 with advance registration ($15 at the door, if space permits). Reservations are available through the Permian Basin Petroleum Association office.
