Energy policy would help consumer

By MICHAEL GRACZYK

HOUSTON (AP) — Energy Secretary James Watkins hopes a national energy policy will even out price differences consumers experience around the country but warns Americans should not get cozy with energy prices they now may enjoy.

"Probably they (consumers) are the No. 1 reason why we're developing this energy strategy," Watkins said Monday of the Bush administration's efforts toward a national energy policy. "But I don't think the consumer possibly can look ahead and have any comfort in the price of energy they're going to have to pay through rate-paying or at the gas pump."

Watkins' comments came after a daylong hearing in Houston, where he heard from Texas oil industry and political officials who pleaded for reduction in regulations covering the industry and for government supports for oil prices if those prices dipped below a certain level.

Monday's hearing was one of six this month throughout the nation to get information for a national energy policy. The first draft of the policy is scheduled for release April 1, Watkins said. He said federal officials already have 400 documents from witnesses and more than 60 studies on energy policy from trade and state organizations.

"All of these will be pooled together in a base line of information upon which we can make judgments," Watkins said.

Texas Gov. Bill Clements suggested the support level for the oil industry be set at $20 per barrel and be in effect for five years.

"World oil prices are set by OPEC (Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries) and other nations which hold most of the world's oil reserves," Clements said. "That's why it is in our nation's best interest to establish a floor price."

Although U.S. Rep. Joe Barton, R-Ennis, agreed with the floor price idea, and U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, urged that oil producers be given tax incentives to boost production, Interior Secretary Manuel Lujan, who also listened to the testimony, cautioned that the Texas sentiment might not hold up elsewhere.

"I like to come to Texas because Texas is very supportive of energy initiatives, but one state does not a national energy policy make," he said. "As helpful as it is in Texas, we do have to look throughout the country and with the concerns in other parts of the country."

"I can assure you what we have heard today will not fall upon deaf ears," Watkins added. "We're going to document it, it's going to be in our record of hearings, so when we finally come up with a draft energy strategy for the president, that it is based on what we've heard from the nation as a whole — not generated by the Department of Energy, which frankly doesn't have all that much credibility these days in a number of other areas."

Watkins said the energy strategy goal is to provide energy for the least cost and in an environmentally sound manner.

"We are trying to eliminate the unfairness we find in the differential Americans are paying for energy throughout the nation and hopefully we can do that," he said.

Watkins came to Texas only after urging from Gramm and fellow Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen and was defensive in his initial remarks to reporters.

'Impossible task' awaits Wall's thrift replacement

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration is scrambling to replace M. Danny Wall, who is resigning as the nation's top savings and loan regulator after 2½ years of bitter struggle with Congress.

Wall, characterizing his job as a "thankless and perhaps impossible task," resigned in a letter to President Bush on Monday. He said he was leaving to spare his Office of Thrift Supervision the disruption that would be caused by continuing his fight for political survival.

Until Thanksgiving, the House Banking Committee was holding weekly hearings spotlighting Wall's failure to contain what could become the nation's largest S&L failure. The regulator was spending much of his time responding to his critics.

Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady praised Wall for his "public spirited" decision to resign and said the department had began the search for his successor.

Early speculation centered on three experienced regulators. According to an industry source they are:

—Richard F. Syron, president of the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston and a former president of the Federal Home Loan Bank of Boston.

—William H. Roelle, a long-time official of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. in charge of S&L rescue deals at the Resolution Trust Corp.

—William Taylor, a senior regulatory official at the Federal Reserve Board serving as an adviser to the administration board that oversees the RTC.

The source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said although all three men were well regarded by Treasury Department officials who oversee Wall's agency, other candidates also could surface.

Midland City Council today approved a 2.68 percent raise for firefighters. The increase was a reinstatement of wages cut four years ago.

Council approves, in part, raise sought by firefighters

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

Midland firefighters got today at least part of what a heated election campaign didn't bring them in November.

Responding to federal law and recent court decisions, City Council unanimously approved a 2.68 percent raise for firefighters. The raise was a reinstatement of wages the city took away four years ago.

However, a fire department representative said city officials may face a lawsuit if they don't also approve retroactive pay.

The U.S. Supreme Court, in a February 1985 decision applying the Fair Labor Standards Act to city and state governments, ruled that firefighters must be paid overtime after 53 hours per week.

Midland firefighters were working 56 hours, but rather than cut time, city officials cut pay by 2.61 percent in 1985.

City Manager Fred Poe said that with reduced hourly wages and three hours of overtime, the firefighters brought home about the same pay.

"The firemen agreed to that and the (U.S.) Labor Department said it was OK," Poe said. "We couldn't come up with any straight-forward schedule that would really fit 53 hours."

However, the U.S. Congress amended the Fair Labor Standards Act in 1987, and federal courts have recently ruled against cities that cut firefighter wages to comply with the FLSA.

The cities include Plainview, Greenville, Corpus Christi, Longview, Pensacola, Fla., and Murfreesboro, Tenn. Similar cases are pending in Paris and Wichita Falls.

Councilman Jose Cuevas said Midland officials had no choice in reinstating the wages.

"The courts have held in other cases that what we were doing was illegal," Cuevas said. "It was to our advantage to approve it and move on."

City Attorney David Reagan said it is unclear whether the city is responsible for retroactive pay. Courts in other cases have allowed firefighters to collect two years of back pay, Reagan said.

"There are some similarities, but there are also some major differences," Reagan said of other cases.

BOSTON (AP) — A woman who was subjected as a child to Josef Mengele's notorious experiments on twins said the Nazi medical data gathered from her suffering should never be used in scientific research.

Eva Mozes Kor told her story Monday at a Boston University conference on Nazi doctors and parallels in modern medicine. Some in the audience of about 300 people wept and when she finished many stood and cheered her.

"I'm hurt by scientists who say we should use Nazi data," Ms. Kor said. "I feel the victims have paid with lifelong suffering."

Negotiators still at work on comp issue

AUSTIN — Texas House and Senate negotiators sorted through different proposals for workers compensation reform Monday while House negotiators worked to switch stubborn Senate votes.

Four Democratic senators who opposed the business-oriented House version Friday and who are considered potential "swing" votes Monday said they will uphold the labor-oriented Senate position until they see substantial changes to protect lower-paid workers.

Pasadena Sen. Chet Brooks, Houston Sen. John Whitmire, Laredo Sen. Judith Zaffirini and El Paso Sen. Tati Santiesteban each said they will hold out for modifications in an impairment schedule the House has adopted, among other changes the Senate is seeking.

Rep. Richard Smith, R-Bryan, the lead House negotiator, conceded that the chances of arriving at a bill that could gain pass both houses and end up reducing costs for businesses is "not very good" as the two sides seek to resolve differences over benefits for injured workers and dispute resolution.

Bush briefs Cabinet on summit, NATO talks

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush, briefing his Cabinet today on the superpower summit, says Mikhail S. Gorbachev seems "very much in control" in the Soviet Union and committed to peaceful change as hard-line communist governments are swept from power.

While refusing to proclaim the Cold War over, Bush said Gorbachev's acceptance of dramatic reforms in Eastern Europe "absolutely mandates new thinking" by the West.

Bush returned to the White House on Monday night after two days of summit talks in Malta and a stop in Brussels to brief NATO leaders. He was greeted by his wife, Barbara, who got a kiss, and dog, Millie, who got a pat.

As soon as he got to his private White House quarters, Bush called Philippine President Corazon Aquino to express concern for the lives of Americans trapped in hotels in Manila by rebel forces trying to overthrow her.

Bush paid tribute to her courage in seeking to quell the rebellion, White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said. Mrs. Aquino, Fitzwater said, assured Bush her government was doing everything possible to protect Americans.

Bush, in a concession to possible jet lag from trans-Atlantic travel, pushed back his schedule one hour today, receiving his daily intelligence briefing in the Oval Office at 9 a.m. instead of 8 a.m.

But Bush's optimistic remarks about Gorbachev contrasted with comments by Vice President Dan Quayle in an interview published today in The Washington Post. Quayle, who has been more skeptical in his public comments on the Soviet Union than other administration officials, said there was no reason to believe Soviet foreign policy has changed.

"You're still dealing with a totalitarian government" that wants to "create instability" around the globe, he said.

Bush was in high spirits Monday after giving NATO leaders an assessment of the summit. Asked at a news conference why he risked riding on a Navy launch through 6-foot waves after talks with Gorbachev, Bush jokingly said: "You know these charismatic, macho, visionary guys. They'll do anything."

On a more serious note, Bush said he assured the allies the United States would maintain "significant military forces in Europe as long as our allies desire our presence."

Homeless in Northeast crowd shelters to escape bitter cold

Associated Press

Bitter cold sent homeless people throughout the Northeast to crowded shelters, while record low temperatures extended as far south as Florida.

Temperatures were below freezing all day Monday from the Great Lakes to the northern Atlantic Coast, with highs in the teens in northern New England.

As temperatures dipped into the teens in New York on Monday, officials said transit police did not evict the homeless from subways or stations except in extreme cases.

"Stations are not shelters or houses, but we recognize that it's cold out there," said Caren Gardner, a Transit Authority spokeswoman. "We're not cruel and inhuman, we're not going to put them out on the street."

The city's 24 shelters housed 8,900 people Sunday night.

"What concerns us most are people with not a lot of resources, who don't know where to go and are terrified of the shelters," said Keith Summa, spokesman for the Coalition for the Homeless. "Those are the people we read about in January and February, in the 1-inch story, going to the morgue."

In New Jersey, the year's first blast of severe cold weather also filled shelters as scores of homeless people escaped wind chill temperatures of minus 30 degrees.

"We had to send people away, right back into the cold," said Elizabeth Jones, a spokeswoman for the 16-bed Salvation Army shelter in Elizabeth. "There were more people than there was room."

Monday's low of 15 degrees, recorded at Newark International Airport, was far below the normal low of 32, said Harry Woodworth, a National Weather Service meteorologist.

"You don't need any detailed descriptions of it out there," Woodworth said. "It's cold. Period."

In Boston, the Pine Street Inn, which provides 730 beds for the homeless, was full Sunday, with some people staying in the lobby.

Meanwhile, the December deep freeze that has gripped Vermont is expected to continue with more bone-chilling weather, stiff winds and snow flurries.

"We may be lucky to hit the 32 mark all week," said Scott Reynolds, a National Weather Service meteorologist.

The high temperature Monday was 15 degrees in many parts of the state.

A low of 18 and wind chill of minus 10 to minus 25, plus already crowded shelters, forced Philadelphia officials to add 125 beds for the homeless, to a total of 2,975.

A ferocious weekend snowstorm in northern Maine left Caribou under 21 inches of fresh snow, for a total depth of 30 inches, and high wind Monday caused widespread drifting.

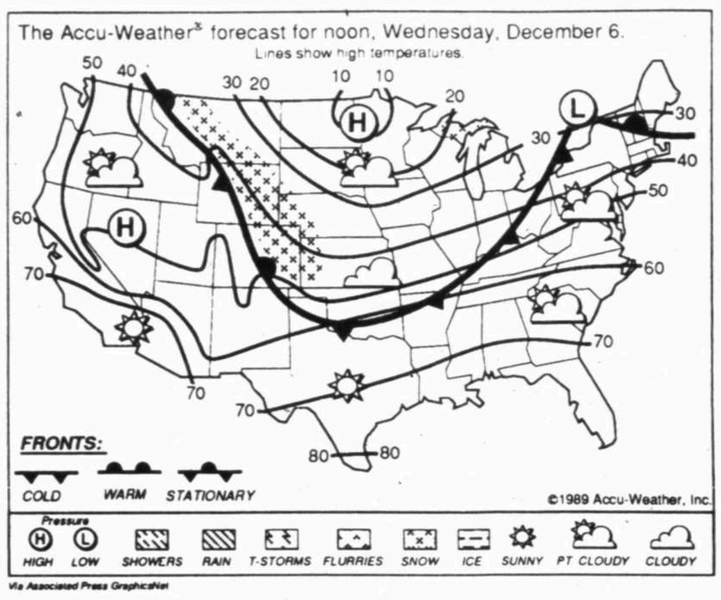

Schools were closed in two counties of West Virginia, where the remote community of Pickens, at an elevation of 3,500 feet, got 14 inches of snow.

Lake-effect storms fed by moisture from Lake Erie moderated after blanketing western New York. West Valley, south of Buffalo, received 18 inches and nearby Chaffee got 15 inches, with 20- to 30-mph wind piling drifts up to 3 feet high, the weather service said.

Squalls produced up to a foot of snow in northeastern Ohio and in western Pennsylvania.

In Florida, a high pressure system was expected to keep most of the state refrigerated through today.

Fair skies anticipated

From Staff and Wire Reports

Fair skies are in the forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be in the upper 30s and winds will be from the west at 5-15 mph.

Wednesday is expected to continue to be fair with the high near 70 and winds from the west at 10-20 mph and occasionally gusty.

Monday's high of 68 was 17 degrees cooler than the record high of 85 set for that date in 1954. The overnight low of 29 was 11 degrees warmer than the record low of 18 set for this date in 1950.

STATE

Fair skies and cool temperatures are expected across all of Texas tonight and Wednesday.

Forecasts are calling for those conditions to remain across the state through Thursday when temperatures are expected to start dropping with the arrival of another cold front.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 40s and 50s, ranging from the 20s in the mountains of Southwest Texas to the lower 60s along the coast in extreme South Texas.

Highs Wednesday will be mostly in the 60s and 70s, ranging from the 50s in the Panhandle to the lower 80s in the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

It was mostly cloudy early today across the coastal bend and in extreme South Texas and mostly clear over the rest of the state.

Early morning temperatures were mostly in the 30s and 40s, ranging from the 20s in extreme West Texas and in the mountains of the Big Bend area to the 50s in South Texas. Extremes ranged from 26 at Marfa in the Davis Mountains to 54 at McAllen and Corpus Christi.

NATION

Rain was turning to snow today in the wind-lashed Pacific Northwest as cold lashed much of the eastern part of the country.

Strong winds pounded the eastern slopes of Montana's Rockies with gusts of up to 64 mph at Livingston, Mont. Up to a foot of snow was forecast for western Montana.

A cold front brought steady rain in the northern Pacific Coast region Monday afternoon. Rainshowers extended across the Northern Plateau into the northern Rocky Mountain region.

Temperatures were below freezing all day Monday from the Great Lakes to the northern Atlantic Coast, with highs in the teens in northern New England.

WALL

Wall set no date for his departure, saying he would stay on for a transition period. He said he was looking forward to a job out of government but had no specific position in mind.

Most recently, Wall has come under fire for his handling of Lincoln Savings and Loan Association, an Irvine, Calif., thrift whose failure is expected to cost taxpayers up to $2.5 billion.

House Banking Committee Chairman Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, the first to call for Wall's ouster, faulted the regulator for rejecting a May 1987 recommendation from federal examiners in San Francisco that Lincoln be seized.

Wall said examiners had not produced the evidence needed to legally justify the seizure, which occurred in April. At a packed news conference, Wall said if he had it to do over again he might have ordered the seizure and let the courts take the blame for blocking it.

"It may indeed have been a no-win situation," he said.

Even before Gonzalez began probing the Lincoln case, Wall endured grueling congressional criticism for what proved to be grossly low estimates of the size of the S&L crisis and for a rash of S&L bailout deals in December 1988 driven by expiring tax benefits.

However, he is generally given credit for raising morale at his agency and rebuilding its depleted ranks of examiners.

Wall was "wrong, but not corrupt," according to Rep. Jim Leach, R-Iowa, a member of the banking panel.

Rep. Bruce Vento, D-Minn., also a member of the committee, said Wall "put politics first and good public policy second" and used "excessively bad judgment."

Gonzalez called for Wall's resignation in a letter to Bush in October. In recent weeks the committee chairman was joined by Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, three taxpayer-advocacy groups and several major newspapers.

Neither Brady nor Bush defended Wall in public and, according to government sources, White House Counsel C. Boyden Gray was pushing for his ouster.

Wall, however, said "this has been completely at my initiative" and passed up several opportunities to criticize the administration for lack of support. He said no one at the White House asked him to leave.

The regulator said he had offered to leave office last January, but the administration, which then was drafting proposed S&L bailout legislation, wanted him to serve out his term through June 30, 1991.

Wall reserved his most bitter remarks for Gonzalez, accusing the committee chairman of orchestrating "simplistic efforts to find a scapegoat to shoulder the blame for the entire thrift crisis." He said Gonzalez resorted to "corruption of the truth and abandonment of our historical devotion to fair play."

AUSCHWITZ

"No one should benefit from brutal crimes," said Ms. Kor, a Hungarian Jew and president of CANDLES, which stands for Children of Auschwitz Nazi Deadly Lab Experiments.

Some biomedical ethicists contend that the issue is moot, because Nazi research already has been cited in American and British journals. They argue that the data, despite its source, have the potential to save human life.

Benjamin Freedman, an associate professor at the McGill Center for Medicine, Ethics and Law, was scheduled today to present a defense of using data from Nazi experiments.

Ms. Kor's recollection of her experiences at the Auschwitz-Birkenau concentration camp in occupied Poland during World War II was one of the most dramatic at the symposium.

The 54-year-old Terre Haute, Ind., resident said the trauma of the camps has never left her. In 1987, she donated a kidney to her identical twin sister, Miriam, whose kidneys seriously deteriorated over the years as a result of near-deadly injections given them in the camps.

They were nine years old when taken prisoner.

Ms. Kor, her parents, two older sisters and her twin, arrived by packed train at Auschwitz in April 1944. She remembers her mother clutching her hand and her sister's hand when they were shoved off the train onto a platform. Her father and two older sisters disappeared into the crowd and were never heard from again.

Ms. Kor said a member of the SS yelled in German for twins and pulled her and her sister in one direction on the platform. Ms. Kor looked back and saw her mother being dragged away, arms outstretched toward the twins and crying.

The sisters were taken to the special barracks for twin girls, aged 18 months to 12 years where they began a grim routine that lasted until the camp was liberated on Jan. 27, 1945. About 3,600 twins were tested at the camp.

COMP

House Speaker Gib Lewis, D-Fort Worth, said the compromise may come down to what would cause two votes to switch in the 31-member Senate.

"If they can make two or three changes in the bill that would satisfy two or three members of the Senate to get the votes they need, I'm sure that's what they're looking for right now," Lewis said.

Brooks, who voted with the Senate majority that overhauled Democratic Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby's business-oriented workers compensation reform bill to make it more favorable to workers, said the long-sought compromise is nearly at hand.

"They're very close," said Brooks, dean of the Senate, who Friday warned the House 17 "iron votes" in the Senate would kill the House bill if it is resubmitted. Brooks said he expected a compromise by Wednesday, when the full House and Senate will meet again.

Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, lead Senate negotiator, was less optimistic but he said he was still talking about possible compromise language with Sen. Kent Caperton, D-Bryan, and Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, who helped craft the Senate bill but were left off the conference committee.

"I can't say we're making progress, but we're talking," Montford said.

Caperton sees little hope for a breakthrough. "If it's there, I don't see it," he said. "It's more elusive than that right now."

Parker said the Senate needs a conferee who will take the role of the legendary Texas Ranger who stopped a riot by walking into a prison and announcing, "This riot is over."

"We need a ranger to walk in and say 'This deal is over and this is the way it's going to be, if you want a bill,' and we'll have a bill about 30 minutes after our Senate conferees do that," Parker said Monday morning.

Sen. Gene Green, D-Houston, the only member from Friday's Senate majority on the conference committee, wore a "Lone Ranger" tag Monday afternoon as he offered amendments on benefits and dispute resolution similar to a proposal by Rep. Mike McKinney, D-Centerville, that the House rejected 86-61 this past week.

Green's amendments would provide an impairment schedule with supplemental benefits for back injuries but would use the current system with modifiers for observable injuries.

The amendments also would offer mediation and arbitration as options to contested case hearings and would provide for expedited appeals, Green said.

The committee will vote on the issues today (Tuesday), but Smith said he expected to oppose Green's amendments, as he did similar amendments on the House floor.

Smith is trying to convince senators that supplemental benefits to reimburse injured workers for proven lost wages, which was provided in the House bill, makes more sense than attempting to provide standard modifiers for different types of occupations.

Parker also played down an agreement to accept binding arbitration, saying Smith previously had agreed to arbitration but insisted on allowing the insurance carrier to veto the option.

"Arbitration is not a major hangup," Parker said.

Parker said he believes the 17-member majority will stick together and resist "cosmetic changes" the House has offered.

"I think it's insulting to all of us to think you can put pearl earrings on a sow and pass it off as Miss America," he said.

FIRE

But Brian Loose, Midland Firefighters Association, said other cases clearly indicate that retroactive wages are owed. Loose said his organization will consider filing suit if the city doesn't pay them.

"That has to be talked over with our members," he said. "It's a strong possibility."

Cuevas said councilmen will consider the retroactive pay but may not make a decision until pending cases are settled.

Poe said Midland's increased firefighter wages will cost the city about $85 000. The retroactive wages would cost the city about $85,000 for each year paid, he said.

The money for the pay will come from a $900,000 capital projects account, not from tax hikes or job layoffs, Poe said.

The city, though, will have to delay projects such as the animal shelter, senior citizens center, street improvements and drainage rights of way, he said.

It was the second raise this year for firefighters. City councilmen approved a 2 percent pay hike for firefighters and police officers earlier this year.

Dissatisfied with the raise, the safety officials decided to go to the voters for approval of an additional 10 percent pay hike. More than 55 percent of voters in the Nov. 7 election said "no."

City officials said they would consider a 4 percent or 5 percent raise for police officers and firefighters next year.

Reagan said the federal changes in the FLSA will not affect other city departments, such as police.

"The only department it poses a problem for is the fire department because of the types of shifts that it has," Reagan said.

Odessa City Manager Bill Brown said his city isn't facing the pay problem because officials there opted to compensate firefighters with extra time.

The firefighters, who also work 56 hours a week, can accrue the weekly three hours and use it as paid vacation.

"They like that," Brown said. "It gives them a chance to go hunting and stuff."

Twelve-foot-tall angels herald the lighting of the traditional Christmas tree at Rockefeller Center in New York City.

Tree lights up Rockefeller Center

NEW YORK (AP) — The bright lights of Christmas brought together some 50,000 spectators huddling in bitter cold for the 57th annual tree-lighting ceremony at Rockefeller Center.

"I love New York in the holidays," said Pat Polkowske, 31, of Hanau, West Germany, who spent the day window shopping with her two daughters, Leah, 7, and Wesle, 8. "There's a real special feeling in the Christmas season."

The crowd, pressing a little closer together than usual in the 26-degree chill, gasped as the 20,000 lights on the 70-foot tall Norway spruce burst into a kaleidoscope of color at the push of a button from David Rockefeller and youngsters in a truancy prevention program.

The crowd roared, oohed, and aahed while the Choral Society of the Hamptons joined in with "Joy to the World."

"It's fun that everyone came together for this one day," said Nicola Tuseo, 21, of Bayside, Queens, adding that past tree-lightings she watched on television don't hold a candle to the real thing.

The wintry weather, which with the wind chill felt more like 15 degrees, didn't dampen the crowd's spirits, some of whom serenaded police with Christmas carols.

Over the past two weeks, workers festooned the tree from Montebello, N.Y., with five miles of wire.

In a holiday blessing before the lighting, the Rev. Calvin Butts of the Abyssinian Baptist Church in Harlem said the lights on the tree symbolized thousands of voices seeking freedom in the cities of Eastern Europe and in the jail cells of South Africa. Butts reminded the crowd "to remember those children for whom there are no gifts."

BUSH

At the same time, Bush said he would "kick our bureaucracy" and urge other Western countries to complete work on a treaty between NATO and the Warsaw Pact to reduce troops, tanks, artillery and other conventional forces in Europe by next year.

Bush told NATO leaders he hoped a multinational summit could be convened in Europe next summer to sign such an accord.

He said he wants that treaty "in the bank" before seeking deeper reductions. Negotiators working on the accord in the Austrian capital are making brisk progress but several issues are unresolved, most significantly a dispute over the kind of Soviet airplanes to be scrapped.

Gorbachev's grip on power has been questioned in light of the dramatic upheaval in his once-solid communist empire and the failure of his reform programs to ease shortages of food and other goods.

Asked if Gorbachev acted like a man in jeopardy, Bush said: "He seemed very much in control. You could tell the way he interacted with his own top people there. And he felt very confident in discussing without notes a wide array of subjects with me."

Searching for a way to describe the Kremlin leader's attitude, Bush said that "subdued is the wrong word, but I would say determined and unemotional about it."

Salvadoran priest says telling the truth is risky

By PETER STEINFELS
New York Times News Service

On Nov. 17 in Bangkok, Thailand, the Rev. Jon Sobrino, an internationally known theologian from El Salvador, was giving a lecture about Jesus to Asians interested in Latin American liberation theology.

Eleven thousand miles away, in San Salvador, where the date was still Nov. 16, armed men were entering the university dormitory that Sobrino usually shared with fellow Jesuits.

Six priests as well as the cook and her daughter were tortured and killed.

Sobrino knows that except for his trip to Thailand, he too would have been among the victims. He is no stranger to the violent deaths of fellow church workers, beginning with the death of another friend and Jesuit priest, the Rev. Rutilio Grande, in 1977.

"We got used to it," Sobrino said in a phone conversation the other day from Santa Clara University in California, where he is now staying. "It might sound strange, but we did."

In 1981, after the assassination of Archbishop Oscar Arnulfo Romero of San Salvador and the killings of four American churchwomen, Sobrino wrote of "an endless procession of priests, seminarians, students, campesinos, teachers, workers, professionals and intellectuals murdered for the faith."

The whole Jesuit community received death threats. A previous residence where Sobrino lived was strafed with machine-gun fire in 1980; two bombs were found there that year, and another exploded in 1983.

Bombs have exploded on the university campus more than a dozen times since the civil war began.

"Our thinking was simple," he said. "El Salvador is a country full of injustice and poverty, and anyone, whether through the churches or human rights organizations, who has taken sides with these poor people, who has tried to tell the truth about the country and the causes of so much poverty, that person has to take into account a certain amount of risk, of losing your life.

"But personally this time for me has been a lot different. I have lived and worked with these men for many years. I loved them. I felt terrible and I had a feeling of great loss."

Was he angry?

"I felt everything — anger, indignation, sorrow, everything together," he said. "I felt indignation because if these things happen to Jesuits, well-known people, if these people can be killed so easily, then of course you understand what happens to the peasants and those without defense.

"And what is the reaction? People say, 'Let's make an investigation.' I hope there is an investigation, but it sounds cynical. What does an investigation mean? After years, not even the case of Archbishop Romero has been explained."

After this flood of feelings, "I quieted down," Sobrino said, "and I felt the responsibility we have, and I have, to continue their work, to work in El Salvador or wherever for the poor and for peace."

Sobrino called the slaying "the response of the ultra-ultra right" to the uprising of the rebel front in the city, although he hastened to add that on Oct. 31, 10 days before the current fighting broke out, 10 leaders of the Salvadoran labor movement were killed by a bomb and 30 were wounded.

"The ultimate explanation is that telling the truth about El Salvador is dangerous," he said. "There are people who don't want to hear the truth."

"And the truth is not just politics," he said, adding, "often El Salvador is analyzed only in political terms," whether the government is freely elected or violates human rights, whether the rebels are Marxists."

"That doesn't lead us to the most important truth of the country," he said. "With or without free elections, poverty and injustice are still the main issues." What was especially "paradoxical about the killing of my brother Jesuits," Sobrino said, "was that everyone knows — and President Cristiani knows — that they were working for dialogue."

El Salvador's president, Alfredo Cristiani, recently conferred several times with the Rev. Ignacio Ellacuria, the head of the university, who was among those killed on Nov. 16.

The president had also been invited to the university in September, when an honorary degree was given to President Oscar Arias Sanchez of Costa Rica, Sobrino said.

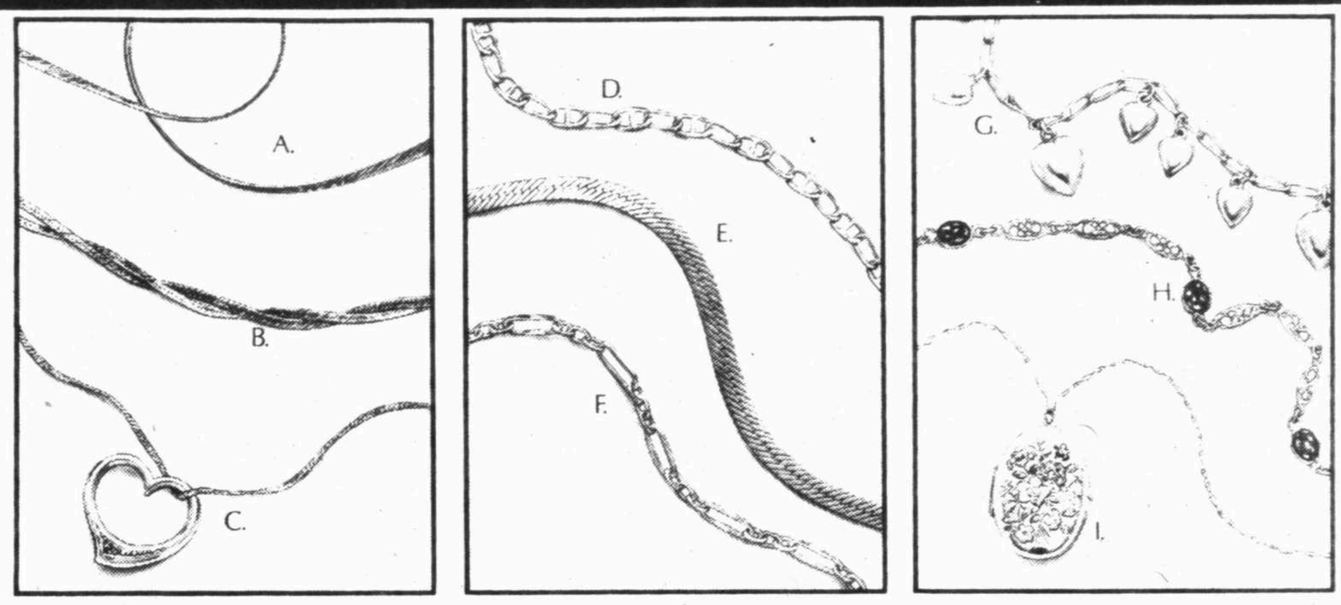

Noting that Cristiani had asked Ellacuria to be a member of the team investigating the labor leaders' deaths, Sobrino said: "We wanted to support dialogue and peace. We were against the war. But we have been considered Communists, Marxists, supporters of the rebels, all that type of thing."

Could 'Star Trek Town' ever be a down-to-earth idea?

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Coming soon to a world near you — Star Trek Town, the only planned community in the world for followers of a science fiction television series.

Recent ads in The News and Observer of Raleigh and Star Log magazine call on mature Star Trek fans to help form a community where they could live out the moral code set by Kirk, Spock and the Starfleet gang every week from 1966 to 1968.

But to boldly go where no man has gone before takes time and planning, and the people who posted the ads wouldn't discuss specifics. Whether the town will be comprised of cosmic condos, Trekkie townhouses or star-cluster single homes remains a mystery.

"I received a letter from the woman who is organizing this thing, but I just don't know enough about it to lay Starfleet's reputation behind it," said Jeanette Maddox, a Burnsville veterinarian. "I don't know what kind of community they have in mind."

Maddox is "admiral" of Starfleet, an international organization of 4,000 Star Trek fans.

She said her biggest concern is the philosophical, rather than physical, structure of the proposed community.

Star Trek isn't just the starship Enterprise and "beam me up, Scotty," she said. Devoted followers believe the space show demonstrates the need for tolerance among all kinds of people and perspectives.

Maddox noted the first interracial kiss shown on TV occurred on Star Trek, and the crew was constantly discovering that each being has inherent good qualities. Many "monsters" turned out to be friends.

"Even though I'm a tremendous fan of Star Trek and believe in the principles, I own my own home and couldn't uproot my family like that. Maybe it would work with people who don't have a lot of ties. Singles, apartment livers," said Fran Costello, head of a Trekkie group in Raleigh.

Special prosecutor could investigate HUD scandal

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department is conducting a preliminary inquiry on whether a special prosecutor should investigate allegations that former Housing Secretary Samuel R. Pierce violated the law.

Attorney General Dick Thornburgh disclosed late Monday that he had ordered the preliminary inquiry into allegations submitted last month by 19 Democrats on the House Judiciary Committee.

The department has 60 days to complete the preliminary inquiry. Thornburgh's chief spokesman David Runkel said it began Saturday.

Under the law, the inquiry by the Justice Department's public integrity section must determine if there are "reasonable grounds to believe that further investigation is warranted" by special prosecutor, known as an independent counsel.

Thornburgh's decision was forwarded to the House Judiciary Committee in a brief letter, which was not released. It was also filed under seal with a special division of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia that appoints independent counsels and oversees their operation.

One of the lawmakers, Rep. Bruce Morrison, D-Conn., praised the decision, but suggested Thornburgh launched the preliminary inquiry only after being prodded by Congress.

"There was no necessity of a Judiciary Committee request in order for the Justice Department to act," Morrison said. "They could well have done so on their own.

"There is no indication that it wouldn't have happened without our initiative," Morrison said.

The procedure under the special prosecutor law was triggered Nov. 2 when Morrison and 18 colleagues sent a letter to Thornburgh requesting appointment of an independent counsel.

The lawmakers said congressional hearings on the scandal at the Department of Housing and Urban Development had uncovered evidence of a conspiracy by Pierce and top aides to award grants based on political favoritism.

Administration at odds over drug spending

WASHINGTON (AP) — National drug director William J. Bennett and budget director Richard Darman are "apart by more than a couple of hundred million dollars" on spending to fight drugs in 1991 and President Bush may settle the dispute, an administration official says.

Bennett

"It's a big enough gap that it's likely to have to go to the president," said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The recently approved anti-drug budget for the 1990 fiscal year totaled $8.8 billion, which Congress had boosted by $900 million over Bush's request of $7.9 billion.

"I'd expect to see a real increase" in 1991, not just an adjustment for inflation, the official said in an interview Monday.

But how much has not been determined, said the source, who refused to provide details on how much is being sought by Bennett, director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy, and how much is sought by Darman, director of the Office of Management and Budget.

"Bennett and Darman are apart by more than couple of hundred million dollars," the official said. "It may end up going to the president to get things sorted out. Hard to know when."

Bennett spokesman Don Hamilton said, "This is the time of year when lots of agency heads and Cabinet secretaries are talking to Darman, occasionally in strong terms."

Meanwhile, Bennett's office is continuing work on what is being referred to among officials as "Strategy Two," the update on the national drug control strategy Bush presented Sept. 5. The update, like the original strategy, was required by Congress.

Hamilton said the updated strategy will add detail to some areas, focus on several anti-drug plans being employed around the country that are working and will get into specifics on proposed budgets.

Expected to be included are the designations of cities or areas considered "high-intensity drug trafficking areas" that would be eligible for additional federal resources, both in money and personnel.

Published reports have said the areas to be designated in the upcoming strategy are Los Angeles, New York, Miami, Houston and the southwest border, but officials in Bennett's office say no final decisions have been made.

"The conversations in reference to high-intensity drug trafficking areas are still ongoing," said Reggie Walton, the drug office's associate director for state and local affairs.

"I have thoughts in my mind what areas stand at the top of the list," said Walton, who took the lead on determining the criteria for designating the targeted areas.

In the current fiscal year, only $25 million total has been allocated from the federal budget for such areas, but that could increase by $20 million to $21 million with money coming out of the federal asset forfeiture fund, Walton said. That fund contains revenue from assets seized from drug traffickers.

The second administration official said even the higher amount "is not that much money to begin with. Los Angeles spent $2 billion in the drug war in L.A. County. We're looking at dividing this money up among four, five, six, seven areas. What can you do with this money? Obviously, we'll be looking at more money later."

Walton would not say how much money he would seek in the 1991 budget for the high-intensity drug trafficking areas.

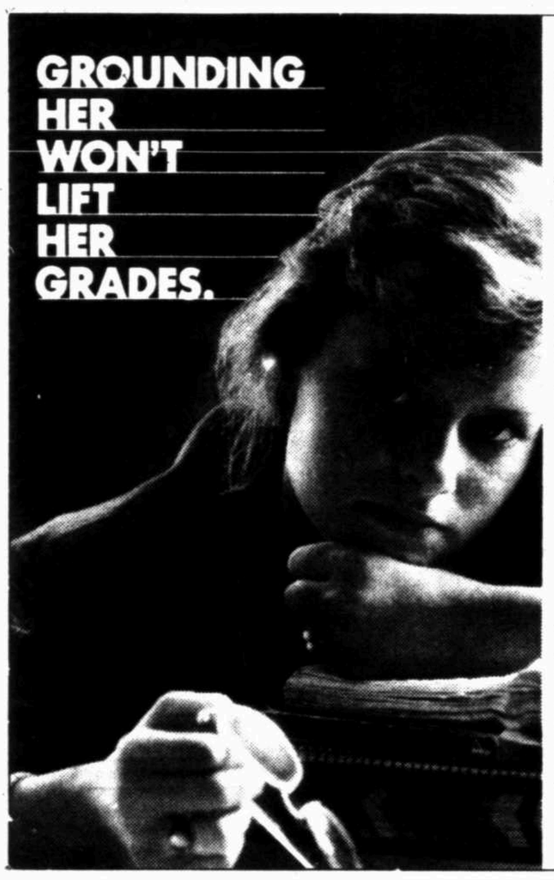

The federal effort to crack down on drugs in the nation's capital alone will cost about $97 million, Bennett has said. However, that includes money for three drug treatment centers and a new jail for the District of Columbia still in the planning stages.

Walton said some places designated as high-intensity drug trafficking areas could get computers to enhance targeting of money-laundering operations, while others may need more prosecutors or law enforcement agents.

Malta talks gave food for thought

One couldn't ask for a better non-summit than that just held by President George Bush and Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev. If the weather isn't included, that is.

For weeks, Bush had attempted to downplay the optimism for the summit held on rolling Marsaxlokk Bay at Malta that had come to haunt virtually all summit meetings. The expectations began to outstrip the realities and Bush didn't want to come out the fall guy at Malta. Fortunately, he didn't. Ironically, neither did Gorbachev although the Soviet leader did paint a rosier picture of the talks than did Bush.

From all appearances, at least, the two leaders put aside their personal agendas (Bush even contended this was a "no-agenda" summit), and attempted to assess where the two nations stand now, more than 40 years after World War II. The talks covered a wide range of topics from the arms race, to mistrust and the "Cold War," the psychological and ideological struggle, trade, and so forth.

The American president came away from the talks with the impression that Gorbachev's plan "absolutely mandates new thinking" on the part of Western leaders. Bush didn't go so far as Gorbachev, however, in saying that the Cold War is over. Rather, he reasserted that the United States will keep significant forces in Europe as long as the allies want them.

President Bush and President Gorbachev occupy envious positions of leadership at a point when the nations of the world are confronted with a golden opportunity to put the specter of the Cold War and the arms race aside in order to work toward peace. Yet Bush is responding to the Soviet leader's tempting olive branches with understandable caution. That is as it should be since Gorbachev has much to gain and little to lose. Moving too rapidly could be disastrous for Bush and the Free World.

But Bush should continue to encourage the allies to study this transformation in the Soviet Union in the interest of learning whether some specific U.S. cutbacks are in line, in light of the changes. Facing so monumental a prospective change in its defensive posture will require tremendous courage on the parts of all concerned because the European countries have been the front line of defense for decades.

There is no rush, of course. If Gorbachev's intents are sincere, the opportunity should be encouraged, but the United States is under no obligation to run blindly toward the peace the Soviet Union is offering. Wisely, Bush is reacting cautiously. He should continue to do so.

Another View:

The German question

Concrete proposals now being advanced for the eventual reunification of Germany stir understandable anxieties from Moscow to Paris to London to Washington. The specter of an economically and militarily powerful German state once again dominating Europe evokes nightmarish memories of 1939 and 1914.

But West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl's plan for a confederation of both Germanys serves the long-term security interests of the West, provided that ultimate reunification does not come at the expense of Bonn's participation in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Chancellor Kohl has rightly stressed that the essential prerequisite of a new German confederation is the holding of democratic elections in East Germany. East Berlin's Communist Party chief, Egon Krenz, has pledged to carry out such elections and has not rejected the Kohl plan.

With fair elections, open borders and close economic, political and cultural ties to West Germany, East Germany under a confederation would inevitably turn toward the West. It would, in all likelihood, evolve as a free-market democracy similar to German-speaking Austria, which also has close links to Bonn.

Is Moscow ready to accept a neutralized East Germany, just as it accepted a neutralized Austria in 1955 when Russian occupation troops were withdrawn? Today, the answer is probably no. Yet, by allowing the peaceful democratic revolution in East Germany to proceed freely, Mikhail Gorbachev has, in effect, cut loose the Kremlin's most important satellite. Self-determination in East Germany, as in Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia, is no longer unimaginable.

Another source of Western concern is that, under a confederation, Bonn would abandon its close economic and military relationship with the Atlantic allies. Yet, West Germany's firm commitment to full integration with the European Community by 1992 promises to keep Bonn firmly anchored in the West even if NATO's military mission declines in importance.

The future architecture of Germany must be decided not by the superpowers but by the Germans themselves. Germans have a long history of confederations, starting with the German Confederation of 1815, after Napoleon's defeat, and including the North German Confederation of 1866, which was a precursor of Bismarck's united German Empire.

Despite the fears expressed on both sides of the Atlantic, a federated Germany is a notion whose hour is fast approaching.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, December 5, the 339th day of 1989. There are 26 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On December 5, 1933, Prohibition came to an end as Utah became the 36th state to ratify the 21st Amendment to the Constitution, thereby repealing the 18th Amendment.

On this date:

In 1776, the first scholastic fraternity in America, Phi Beta Kappa, was organized at the College of William and Mary in Williamsburg, Va.

In 1782, the first president who was a native citizen of the United States, Martin Van Buren, was born in Kinderhook, N.Y.

In 1791, composer Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart died in Vienna, Austria, at the age of 35.

In 1831, former President John Quincy Adams took his seat as a member of the U.S. House of Representatives.

In 1848, President James Polk triggered the Gold Rush of '49 by confirming that gold had been discovered in California.

In 1901, movie producer Walt Disney was born in Chicago.

In 1932, German physicist Albert Einstein was granted a visa making it possible for him to travel to the United States.

In 1955, the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations merged to form the AFL-CIO under its first president, George Meany.

In 1977, Egypt broke diplomatic relations with Syria, Libya, Algeria, Iraq and South Yemen in the wake of criticism that followed President Anwar Sadat's peace overtures to Israel.

Auto industry has a friend in Congress

WASHINGTON — The technology has been around for years to substantially reduce the number of people who die every year in traffic accidents, but the auto industry has resisted safety modifications. Stubborn resistance alone would not have stymied safety regulations if the auto makers did not have a friend on Capitol Hill — Rep. John Dingell, the Democrat from Detroit.

Jack Anderson

Dingell has championed the cause of consumers on many issues, but when it comes to auto safety, he has a blind spot. As one auto safety expert put it, "Dingell is the congressman from Detroit, not the congressman from the United States."

Since 1981, Dingell has used his powerful position as chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee to stall almost every important piece of proposed auto safety legislation. The Center for Auto Safety, a private group that lobbies for stronger legislation, estimates that 100,000 lives could have been saved had all the safety measures Dingell has opposed gone into effect when they were first put on the table.

Consumer advocate Ralph Nader calls Dingell, "the No. 1 enemy of consumers in the House of Representatives."

Sitting in one of Dingell's subcommittees currently is the reauthorization bill for the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA), the agency that writes and enforces auto safety standards. The bill passed the Senate unanimously in August, but if history is any indicator, it will sit in the House for a long time. The last reauthorization bill died in Dingell's committee in 1987.

The current version includes some long-overdue changes. Among them are provisions to reduce the damage from side-impact accidents that are responsible for more than 9,000 deaths a year. The bill also toughens the construction standards for minivans, light trucks and four-wheel drive vehicles.

It isn't the tough standards that Dingell seems to mind. It's the deadlines written in the law by which NHTSA must meet those standards. Opponents of the bill, including the auto industry, resent the fact that Congress not only wants to mandate general safety rules but that it sets deadlines for the lethargic NHTSA to make sure the job gets done.

Joan Claybrook was the NHTSA administrator during the Carter administration and now is president of Public Citizen, Nader's consumer advocacy group. Dingell hates to see her coming. She says NHTSA needs the deadlines to motivate it. "This agency has done practically nothing for eight years," she told our reporter Greg Moore.

During Senate hearings on the bill, Sen. Richard Bryan, D-Nev., said, "NHTSA has a longer gestation period than anything found under the laws of nature."

Dingell says he has not yet taken a position on the bill, but auto safety advocates are betting that it won't make it out of committee.

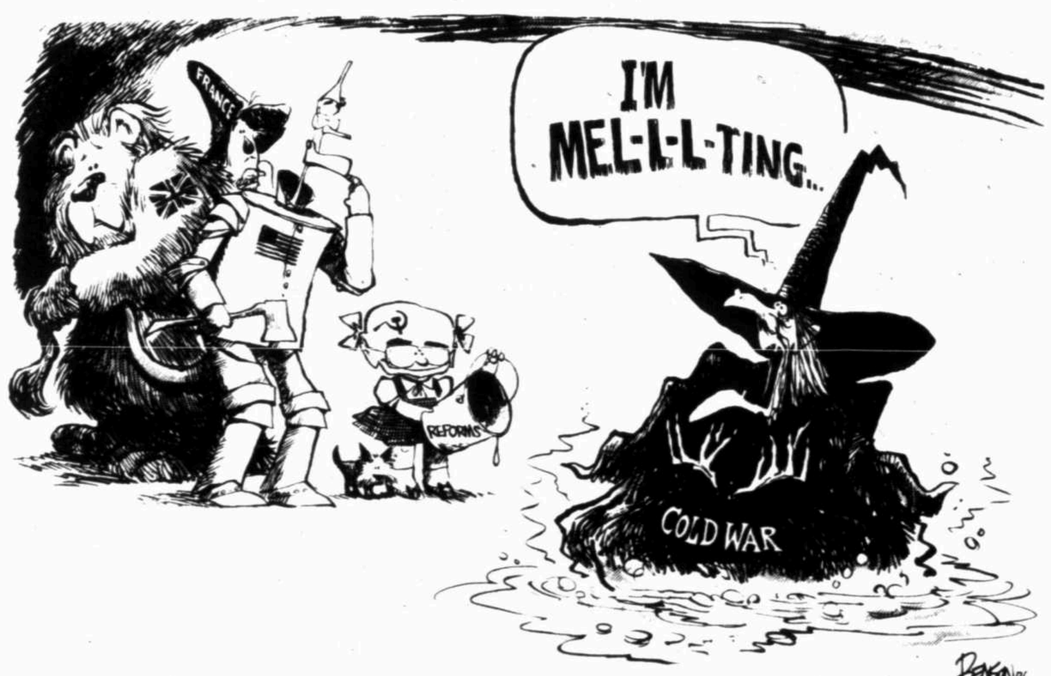

His intimidating tactics make it unlikely that anyone else on the committee will champion the bill.

When Rep. James Florio, D-N.J., challenged Dingell on toxic cleanup legislation in 1986, Florio found that half the jurisdiction of his subcommittee was stripped away. Rep. James Scheuer, D-N.Y., came to the defense of automobile air bags, which Dingell does not like, and he lost his subcommittee chairmanship in a reorganization.

Dingell has fought air bags since 1978 when he led a battle to keep NHTSA from implementing mandatory air bag rules. For two months last summer, Dingell found himself the reluctant guinea pig in an air bag test. His wife, Debbie Dingell, is manager of strategic planning for General Motors, and she was testing a company Oldsmobile equipped with air bags.

The system appeared to have no problems, she told us, but Dingell was uneasy. "He was waiting for it to explode in his face," she said.

CHARLEY REESE

Value of observation depends on who make it

The liberal mind is a marvel of contradictions. NBC Television recently did a piece on the Pine Ridge, S.D., Indian reservation. The gist of the piece was that the federally financed welfare system has destroyed the pride of the Indians and they are all self-destructing with alcohol.

That, of course, according to NBC, is our fault.

Charley Reese

First, I distinctly recall that when former Secretary of the Interior Jim Watt made the same observation — that socialism imposed on Indians was having a detrimental effect — liberals were outraged and called Watt all sorts of unflattering names. Apparently in the world of liberal doublespeak the value of an observation depends on who makes it.

Certainly if NBC can be believed, and that's risky, then all but two or three Indians on Pine Ridge are killing themselves with alcohol. There was a time in the past when it was against the law in some areas to sell alcohol to Indians. Naturally if anyone suggested such a thing today, they would be branded as a racist and the ACLU would be in court saying that Indians have a constitutional right to self-destruction.

Well, I won't argue with that. If Indians or anyone else wishes to self-destruct, it's OK with me. Just don't take their pictures and try to lay a guilt trip on the rest of us.

Congress and the federal courts have messed up Indian affairs but no more so than they have messed up the savings and loan industry, the federal budget, and the national defense.

Indians, or most of them, have a dual status. The 19th- century practice of recognizing Indian tribes as sovereign nations is continued and so as members of a tribe, they have tribal rights which non-Indian Americans don't have. On the other hand, in the 1920s, Congress granted Indians full citizenship.

In some areas, this creates odd situations not to mention bingo parlors. Indians on the reservation can vote for county officials but the county government has no jurisdiction over the reservation. In some areas, Indian tribal rights over game and fish violate the state regulations. Moreover, some complaints have been filed that corrupt or oppressive tribal governments violate the individual rights of the Indians.

Finally, even as we approach the 21st century, Congress continues to appropriate millions of dollars annually to subsidize Indians.

We should not put up with this. First, we should not tolerate a situation which creates two classes of citizens with two classes of rights nor should we tolerate sovereign entities within our country not subject to local, state and federal laws.

The answer is quite simple. End the reservation system. Annul the old treaties made by long-past governments with long-past tribes in a long-past undeveloped land. Deed the present reservation land to the Indian tribes but make it subject to all local laws. Shut down the Bureau of Indian Affairs. End the federal subsidies.

In short, get the federal government out of the Indian business and let American Indians, as most have anyway, assume their rightful, independent place in American society as fellow citizens to sink or swim on their merits like the rest of us. No Indian alive today is owed a dime for anything done to his ancestors in the last century. The same is true of everyone else. Each generation must settle its own accounts and then close the books forever. We have enough to litigate in the present without dragging the past into court. We have enough to do handling present relationships without reviving the vendettas of the past, which we had nothing to do with and cannot change. You can learn from the past, you can forget the past or you can be destroyed by the past.

Texas team brings Tex-Mex taste to capital

WASHINGTON — Sam "Bo" Marcus and John Breen have planted an oasis five blocks from the U.S. Capitol where expatriate Texans can satisfy their longing for home cooking, that is, Tex-Mex food.

Marcus, formerly of Dallas, and Breen, formerly of Houston, call their 18-month-old restaurant Tortilla Coast.

Peggy Roberson

Hungry Texans and non-Texans alike flock to the restaurant, decorated in a pseudo Caribbean theme with palm trees painted on green-black walls and a thatched roof over the bar.

Many come in from the Capitol and the White House to unwind with margaritas and big plates of quesadillas and flautas created by the owners and chef Jose Cerritos, who was lured to Washington from the famed Ninfa's in Houston.

Besides the power figures, the restaurant attracts an eclectic crowd that appears to range in age from 25 to 45. At a recent lunch hour, a congressman and a delivery man sat at adjoining tables.

Marcus and Breen — both 26 — say the place has become a kind of Republican hangout. "We haven't tried to foster that, and I would like it on the record that we are a bipartisan restaurant," joked Breen.

"When we first opened, we had a bunch of Republican types in here," explained Breen. "Nancy Baker (daughter-in-law of Secretary of State James Baker) painted the walls. Some of the Bushes — George Junior and Marvin and his wife — were in. And we had an inauguration party here and got a lot of press."

Two weeks ago, the Tortilla Coast was the scene of a fundraiser for Rob Mosbacher, who is running for Texas secretary of state. He is the son of Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher.

Secretary of Housing and Urban Development Jack Kemp was there last week with Sen. Trent Lott, R-Miss. GOP House Whip Newt Gingrich of Georgia stops in from time to time. And Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor — an Arizonan who loves Mexican food — is a frequent customer.

Among the Democratic clientele are Louisiana Sen. John Breaux and B.A. Bentsen, wife of Lloyd Bentsen, the senior senator from Texas.

Yet with all the pols around them, the young owners keep their own partisan preferences to themselves.

"Politics is not one of my hobbies," confessed Marcus. "I like to be up on current events, but that's pretty much the extent of it. If people come in and say they work for Congressman So-and-so, you like to at least know the name."

Marcus and Breen became friends seven years ago when they discovered they were the only Texans in their dorm at Georgetown University. Marcus — who has a friendly grin and short, curly hair — later transferred to the University of Texas for a degree in business administration. Breen — who has thick, dark hair and movie-star looks — remained at Georgetown where he received a degree in finance.

Each did what was expected of him: Marcus worked for his father, Sam B. Marcus Sr., in his Dallas insurance company; Breen took a job at Riggs Bank in the District of Columbia.

Both were bored to death.

One day, in the summer of '86, talking on the phone, one said: "Heck, let's open a restaurant."

When Breen shared his plans with his parents, Houston investment counselor Dan Breen and his wife, Pat, he said they thought he was "off my rocker, absolutely."

Undaunted, Breen gave notice at the bank and signed on as a bartender in a Maryland suburb.

Breen waited tables at On the Border, a Mexican restaurant in Dallas, and then attended a school for restaurateurs.

The friends each worked in several places over the next year, doing everything from washing dishes to ordering supplies and bookkeeping.

"Our experience was minimal," said Marcus. "No one at the places we worked knew we were going to open our own place. So all we could do was ask relatively innocuous questions and absorb as much as possible. Then we looked for a location."

The fledging entrepreneurs pooled their own money, borrowed some from family and found willing investors.

"We've been doing well. We've been making a profit from day one. And we have a lot of happy customers," reported Marcus.

"When we decided to do this, there were no good Tex-Mex restaurants in Washington. Now there are four or five, but we still don't think they all are good," he said.

Neither partner has regrets about trading his suit for jeans and his 9-to-5 job for a 60-hour work week.

"When I was working 40 hours a week in the insurance business, at the end of the day I'd be exhausted, basically doing nothing except sitting on my rear," Marcus said. "Working 60 hours at something you enjoy is a lot better."

When they leave the restaurant, each man goes to his own bachelor apartment. "Being around each other 60 hours is fine,... but if we lived together, we'd probably kill each other," he said, adding, however, that on occasion, they go on double dates.

Breen said he's noticed that most people develop partnerships then perhaps become friends later, but with him and Marcus it was the other way around. "It was funny. I'd say, 'This is my friend, Bo.' Then it was: 'This is my partner.' "

Breen thinks he won't be in the restaurant business all his life. "If one of the Bass brothers walked in and offered a million, we'd probably take it."

But for now, the partners are thinking about opening Tortilla Coasts in other parts of the country.

Economic initiatives symbolic victory for Soviets, analysts say

WASHINGTON (AP) — The economic incentives President Bush proposed in Malta will allow Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev to claim an important symbolic victory, but they will do little to help Gorbachev rescue his ailing economy, say U.S. experts on the Soviet Union.

Those analysts said they viewed Bush's weekend summit proposals as an important first step in integrating the Soviets into the global economic system.

But they cautioned against looking for any big, immediate payoff in terms of expanding Soviet trade or boosting Soviet living standards.

"The Soviet economy is in very bad shape. The question is, 'Will this rouse that economy?' I am skeptical," said Marshall Goldman, a Harvard professor and leading expert on the Soviet Union.

"The situation is deteriorating in the Soviet Union," he said. "You have got to turn around and show concrete results that will end up on the table and that is just not happening."

In many ways, the Soviet economy is facing more dire problems now than before Gorbachev launched his "perestroika" restructuring reforms. With winter approaching, the country is plagued by strikes and severe shortages of many consumer items.

Bush's economic proposals include:

■ Immediate start to negotiating a U.S.-Soviet trade agreement with a goal of completion by June's planned summit in Washington between the two leaders. That would also be the target for lifting the 15-year-old high tariffs on Soviet goods imposed under the Jackson-Vanik amendment that penalized the Soviets for their restrictive emigration policies.

■ U.S. support for granting the Soviets observer status in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the 97-country organization that regulates world trade. The United States had previously opposed Soviet requests for observer status in GATT, arguing that the Soviet system was incompatible with GATT's free-trade principles.

■ Recommendations that Congress lift a ban on providing trade credits to the Soviet Union through the U.S. Export-Import Bank.

■ Negotiations leading to a U.S.-Soviet treaty that would facilitate U.S. investments in the Soviet Union.

While the proposals announced in Malta appear modest, economists said they allowed Gorbachev to return to his own country with symbolic victories showing concrete evidence of the Bush administration's support for perestroika.

"This is a foot in the door for the Soviet Union," said Howard Wachtel, an economics professor at American University. "It sets in motion a train of activity which had largely been cut off by Stalin when he opted not to participate in Western economic organizations after World War II."

In addition to observer status in GATT, the Soviets are considering seeking admission to the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank. Admission in those organizations, still considered to be far in the future, would open up a substantial borrowing pool the Soviets could tap to support their economy.

Bush seemed to be seeking to play down expectations for immediate payoffs.

In a news conference Monday in Brussels, Bush said the chances Gorbachev would be allowed to participate in next year's economic summit with the West's seven leading industrial countries were "slim and none."

But Bush said his initiatives would help provide the Soviets with important expertise on how market-based economies work.

Dwayne O. Andreas, chief executive of the agricultural giant, Archer-Daniels-Midland Co. of Decatur, Ill., said the lifting of the high tariffs on Soviet products would allow the Soviets to sell more goods here and should foster reciprocal actions by the Soviets to purchase more American goods, particularly agricultural products.

Sandinistas could launch Contra attack

WASHINGTON (AP) — A significant increase in Nicaraguan troop concentrations near the Honduran border camps of the Contra rebels is raising the possibility of a Sandinista attempt at a knockout blow against the insurgents, officials say.

At the same time, the officials said intelligence reports indicate the Sandinistas in two weeks will receive from the Soviet Union four helicopters with potential for military use.

The shipment reportedly left the Soviet Union by ship on the eve of the Mediterranean summit last weekend.

The sources said the Sandinista mobilization began to occur in late October when President Daniel Ortega called off a cease-fire in effect for the preceding 19 months.

There are no reliable estimates of the number of Sandinistas involved in the redeployment.

The Sandinista army is believed to be in a position to launch an offensive against the Honduran-based camps within 72 hours. Alternatively, those forces could be earmarked for use against the estimated 5,000 Contras still inside Nicaragua, said the officials, insisting on anonymity.

The new deployments reflect what has been a deteriorating peace process in Nicaragua, marked not only by the suspension of the cease-fire five weeks ago but also by the continued existence of the Contras despite calls by Central American presidents for them to demobilize.

Today was to have been the deadline for the Contras to disband under a resolution approved in August by Ortega and four other Central American presidents. But thousands of Contras continue to be deployed at the Honduran camps, subsisting on U.S. food and other non-lethal aid.

Despite Sandinista protests, the aid will continue until after national elections set for Feb. 25. U.S. officials are worried the election will be called off, but the Sandinistas deny any such intention.

The rebels note the five presidents specified the demobilization was to have been carried out "voluntarily" and they insist their return to their homeland cannot precede the establishment of democratic conditions in Nicaragua.

Those conditions have not been met, the rebels contend, defending their decision to ignore today's deadline.

Mistrust between the Sandinistas and the Contras has accelerated in recent weeks, partly because of an abortive attempt by the two sides last month to restore the cease-fire.

Wary of Sandinista intentions, Contra forces have been placed on alert and have positioned themselves further east where their detection by enemy forces amid dense foliage is more difficult, the sources said.

The Soviet MI-17 helicopters left port last week on the eve of the summit and are due at the Nicaraguan port of Corinto on Dec. 18, the officials said.

Such helicopters normally are sent to Nicaragua without weapons, enabling the Soviets to say they are not prolonging the conflict in that country. On Sunday, after the Mediterranean summit, President Mikhail Gorbachev reaffirmed that his country has long since ceased the delivery of arms to the Sandinistas.

President Bush has said he does not challenge Gorbachev's assertion, but the reported shipment of MI-17s appears to some officials to undercut the Soviet leader's claims of peaceful involvement.

The officials said MI-17s delivered to the Sandinistas routinely are converted to military use once they arrive in Nicaragua. They are used both as troop transports and as gunships.

The sources said the Sandinistas have about 38 MI-17s in their inventory. The MI-17 is an advanced version of the MI-8 Hip helicopter and is more easily adaptable than the MI-8 for use as a gunship.

NATION in brief

Testimony ends in slaying trial

MIAMI (AP) — A prosecutor began closing arguments today in the manslaughter trial of a Miami policeman, saying it "was not a life-or-death situation" when he shot a black motorcyclist, sparking three days of violence.

"It was not a split-second decision," prosecutor Don Horn told jurors in the trial of Colombian-born officer William Lozano.

Pending the verdict, the city has girded itself against a repeat of the racial violence that broke out Jan. 16, when Lozano, 31, shot and killed Clement Lloyd as the motorcyclist sped away from a patrol car. Lloyd's passenger, Allan Blanchard, died of injuries suffered in the crash of the motorcycle.

Lozano is charged with two counts of manslaughter and faces a maximum of 30 years in jail on each count.

Jurors would have to decide if Lozano acted as a "reasonably cautious and prudent police officer," Horn said.

Horn then reviewed arguments on both sides with the intent of showing that Lozano was not threatened by the motorcyclist and did not have to shoot him in self-defense.

Soviet incident investigated

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. military authorities in Berlin are investigating an incident in which Soviet military personnel in East Germany detained a team of American military officers for 7½ hours last week.

The detention happened Friday on the eve of President Bush's summit with Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, but it was not publicly disclosed until Monday.

A Pentagon spokesman said no one was injured and the U.S. officers involved returned to Berlin after their release.

"The incident was not routine, but it's not unheard off either," said spokesman Navy Lt. Cmdr. Ken Satterfield.

The officers are part of the U.S. military mission that was established under the 1947 Potsdam accord that allows the Western allies and the Soviets to set up offices in each other's occupied zones of Germany. Under this pact, the United States, Britain and France have military liaison offices in East Germany and the Soviets have three in West Germany.

Satterfield said the U.S. team was "on their assigned mission," which involved observing installations in East Germany.

Quayle sees no change

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President Dan Quayle says the Soviet Union's foreign policy is largely unchanged and he believes the Soviets' pursuit of their interests creates instability in other countries, according to a report Tuesday.

In remarks reflecting more apparent skepticism than President Bush has shown about Soviet intentions, Quayle said the Soviets have "very significant interests beyond their borders and those interests create instability."

"I don't think they've changed much in foreign policy," Quayle said in an interview with The Washington Post in Tuesday editions.

"We cannot count on the Soviets, out of the goodness of their hearts, in alleviating those tensions for us."

But Quayle said he viewed events in one area beyond the borders of the Soviet Union, Eastern Europe, as reflecting Soviet domestic policy.

"I get into debates on this with people (in the administration) who ask about Eastern Europe," Quayle was quoted as saying.

Comaneci arrives in Florida

MIAMI (AP) — Romanian gymnast Nadia Comaneci said she will stay with friends in southern Florida and has no plans to work with her Romanian coach or with the U.S. Gymnastics Federation.

Officials of the federation had flown to New York in hopes of contacting Comaneci and setting up a meeting between the former Olympic champion and her former coach, Bela Karolyi, who defected earlier and now lives in Houston.

Navy SEAL commandos tow members of Greenpeace in their inflatable raft on Monday after they tried to protest the Navy's firing of the Trident 2 missile.

Greenpeace, Navy clash over missile

By ED OFFLEY
Hearst News Service

Navy ships, helicopters and SEAL commandos clashed with a Greenpeace flotilla on the high seas east of Florida Monday as the anti-nuclear group tried unsuccessfully to block the fourth underwater test-firing of a Trident II nuclear missile.

During the prolonged fracas, 50 miles east of Cape Canaveral, two Greenpeace inflatable boats briefly sailed over the submerged Trident submarine Tennessee.

The boats were disabled by Navy frogmen who slashed their fuel lines and pontoons, then towed the protesters back to their vessel, Greenpeace activists said.

One Navy ship rammed the protest ship Greenpeace, then two Navy ships poured water down the Greenpeace's smokestack in an attempt to disable its two engines, they added.

There were no injuries in the incident, according to a Greenpeace official.

Kris Deeble, a Greenpeace coordinator in Florida who was in radio contact with the group's vessel at sea said "it was incredible," when the Navy submarine rescue ship Grasp struck the protesting vessel.

"This was not even civil disobedience. Our ship was legally operating in international waters, an unarmed civilian vessel ... " Deeble said.

The aggressive Navy response cleared the way for the firing of a Trident II missile at 10:40 a.m., four hours after the Tennessee arrived in the firing zone and submerged, the Navy said.

"We did a perfect launch, just beautiful," Vice Admiral Roger Bacon, commander of the Atlantic Fleet submarine force, told reporters aboard the Nashville, an amphibious landing ship. "We used the minimum force necessary to clear the area."

The 44-foot-long Trident II missile carried a dummy warhead package several thousand miles down the Atlantic Missile Range. Each Trident II reportedly costs $23.7 million.

Both Greenpeace activists and Navy spokesmen claimed that international law justified their moves in the confrontation.

"Nations have historically enjoyed the right to test their weapons at sea and with that right comes an obligation to perform those tests safely," said Navy spokesman Lt. Cmdr. Craig Quigley in Washington, D.C.

In June, Greenpeace protesters entered a 5,000-yard exclusion zone set by the U.S. Navy and draped protest banners on the partially submerged Tennessee, forcing a postponement of a Trident II test shot.

Quigley said this time the Navy was "more prepared."

Greenpeace representatives said Monday that there was no legal justification for the Navy's action. "The Navy violated international law with this action," said Shannon Fagan of Greenpeace.

Churches call for non-judgmental, compassionate care of AIDS patients

ATLANTA (AP) — Church leaders Monday called on religious individuals and organizations to provide non-judgmental and compassionate care and support to people suffering from AIDS.

The leaders also called on churches to develop accurate and comprehensive AIDS education materials "in a context that promotes individual self-esteem, teaches the fundamental goodness of human sexuality and supports the integrity of responsible and caring intimate relationships."

The comments were included in a consensus statement on appropriate religious responses to the AIDS epidemic adopted Monday by about 130 clergy and lay leaders from Christian, Jewish, Unitarian and interfaith groups during a conference at the Carter Presidential Center.

The religious community has a responsibility "to assure that all whose lives are affected by the epidemic will have access to compassion, nonjudgmental care, respect, support and assistance," the statement said.

The Right Rev. Douglas E. Theuner, chairman of the Joint Commission on AIDS and bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of New Hampshire, said church leaders must overcome a perception among AIDS sufferers that religious people view the disease as the "wraith of God" for an immoral lifestyle.

"Some think that the religious community believes AIDS is a judgment of God. But by and large the religious community does not and those of us in a position of leadership need to convey that more forcefully," he said.

The consensus statement said churches have a responsibility to "transform public attitudes and policies so that adequate care and appropriate preventative measures will be available for all people in need."

The group called on President Bush "to demonstrate moral and political leadership" by protecting people with AIDS from discrimination, by expanding drug-treatment programs to all who choose them, by expediting the experimental treatment approval process, by expanding home-care programs for AIDS sufferers and by encouraging strict confidentiality of AIDS tests.

The statement said foreigners should be allowed to visit or become citizens of the United States if they are eligible to do so, regardless of whether they have AIDS.

The group also advocated comprehensive programs for drug users "including the distribution of AIDS prevention information and materials including bleach for the sterilization of hypodermic needles."

AIDS — acquired immune deficiency syndrome — is a deadly disease which attacks the body's immune system, crippling its ability to ward off infections that are not a problem for most people, such as a rare pneumonia and a rare skin cancer.

The latest federal public health figures indicate 112,241 people have been reported with AIDS since 1981 and 59 percent of them have die from it. No one is known to have recovered.

Notice to Veterans

Resthaven Memorial Park is offering to all qualified veterans reserve burial space for nominal fee $70 required for endowment care.

ALL VETERANS who were discharged honorably are TECHNICALLY eligible for a final resting place in a NATIONAL CEMETERY.

As of January, 1987, the Veterans Administration reported that the present VETERAN population is almost 27.8 million people. At the present time there are only 65 National Cemeteries serving these VETERANS and their families. Between the year 1987 and 2000, 21 of these cemeteries will close. An additional 15 will be closed by the year 2020, leaving the UNITED STATES OF AMERICA in just 30 years with only 29 National Cemeteries to serve their VETERANS.

Because of this projected lack of burial space, A NEW VETERAN AREA is now being developed for VETERANS and their families in Resthaven Memorial Park. A book entitled "THE WALL" valued at $29.95 will be given to you free of charge for listening to our presentation.

As an honorably discharged VETERAN, or still on active duty, you can purchase burial property in any one of our NEW VETERAN AREAS, but a limited number of spaces have been set aside for this special VETERAN'S offer. THE ONLY COST TO YOU IS $70. Which is the amount deposited in trust for maintenance and care.

VERIFICATION OF YOUR SERIAL NUMBER AND DISCHARGE IS REQUIRED. AS PART OF OUR PRESENTATION, WE WILL EXPLAIN FULLY THE REQUIREMENTS FOR VAULTS AND OPTIONS FOR MEMORIALIZATION, AS WELL AS SPECIAL PROTECTIVE FEATURES THAT ARE AVAILABLE FOR SPOUSES AND MINOR CHILDREN.

Please fill in all information on the reply card and MAIL AT ONCE. A Certificate of Eligibility for your burial property will be delivered to you as soon as possible. This program is not financed or connected in any manner with any governmental agency or veterans organization, thus federal benefits due you as a VETERAN are in no way affected.

We have set aside only a limited number of VETERAN SPACES in these areas, and since there are thousands of veterans and their families in the Permian Basin area, space must be assigned on first-come/first-serve basis. To assure your reservation, mail the attached reply card today or call 684-5462. This special savings limited to prearrangement.

FAMILY SERVICE DEPARTMENT VETERAN PROGRAM

Please deliver my VETERANS ELIGIBILITY CERTIFICATE and full information about your special offer to VETERANS including free book "THE WALL" and a copy of the PERSONAL PROTECTION GUIDE with information on Social Security Benefits, Wills, Etc., or call 684-5462 for information.

Mobil hopes to expand role at Crockett

By DAVID MORRIS
Staff Writer

Mobil Oil's donation last week of a videotape documentary series to Crockett Elementary School is just a deposit on a long-term commitment, Mobil executives said.

Last summer, Mobil "adopted" Crockett and marked the occasion by donating $2,000 worth of landscaping to the school.

"That was just to let them know that we are committed to do much more than that," Mobil employee relations manager Dominick Sylvester said. In the future, he said, Mobil hopes to expand its adoptive role at Crockett and begin tutoring, mentorship, and computer instruction programs.

"Part of our plan is to bring other oil companies into the adopt-a-school program," Sylvester said. "We want to increase our participation base."

He said Mobil chose Crockett because of the special needs of its pupils and teachers.

"The focus of our adopt-a-school program has been on minority students," he said. "And there is a large minority population there. They certainly had a need, as identified by the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce."

The Hispanic Chamber of Commerce "adopted" Crockett about a year ago, chamber executive director Elvia Hernandez said Monday.

"Our efforts are concentrated mostly on the eastern side of Midland," she said. "Everything Mobil has done has been in coordination with us."

Corporate volunteers working in the school will make good role models for the pupils, Mobil executive Linda Ford said. "It shows students a different way out," she added.

"What we're trying to show is that there are other ways to make a living than selling drugs."

Crockett Principal Romeo Canales said he is pleased with the adoption program.

"The sponsors have been very supportive," he said. "This is what we need as far as providing role models for the students. Right now they are just providing little extra things like helping with 'Just Say No' and appearing at dedication ceremonies — they haven't started any tutoring yet. So far what they've done is very beneficial."

Crockett is the only school in the Midland Independent School District which has been adopted in this manner, MISD spokesman Ted Miller said.

"This was a case in which the Hispanic Chamber of Commerce came in and targeted a particular campus," he said.

Crockett and the rest of the schools benefit from corporate sponsorship of the existing Volunteers In Public Schools program, he said.

"To say that Crockett is the only school adopted is really not completely true," Miller said. "All of our campuses have some kind of VIPS involvement."

Elsewhere, adopt-a-school programs like the one in place at Crockett chave enjoyed greater popularity. Rick Pacheco, community relations manager for the Dallas Independent School District, said the adopt-a-school program there is 20 years old and involves 80 percent of DISD campuses.

Pasadena Independent School District spokesman Kirk Lewis said each of PISD's 43 schools has at least one company as a "sponsoring partner."

"What I hear from principals is that students are achieving at a greater rate as a result of participation by businesses and individuals," Lewis said.

Ector County Independent School District Partners in Education coordinator June Spears said the adopt-a-school program there is part of a larger effort to involve the community with the schools.

She said the program started eight years ago, but has suffered because of the economy.

"Until the recession hit, it was fine," she said. "Since businesses have had to hone their staffs and hone their budgets, there are fewer human and financial resources to help the schools," she said. She said four organizations have adopted ECISD schools.

MISD Superintendent Joseph Baressi said the district welcomes Mobil's adoption of Crockett. He added that community support of the schools comes in many forms, not just corporate school adoptions.

"Our volunteer program is one of the most successful in the state," he said. "But we do have needs that exceed the number of volunteers at this point."

Area task force arrests suspected drug dealers

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Permian Basin Regional Narcotics Task Force officers continued a roundup of suspected drug dealers in Odessa this morning after a day-long search resulted in the arrest of more than a dozen people on charges of delivery of a controlled substance.

An Ector County grand jury Monday handed down 24 sealed indictments against the Odessans, culminating a three-month-long investigation. The drug charges ranged from delivery of heroin to delivery cocaine, according to a task force spokeswoman.

Six others were taken into custody on misdemeanor prostitution charges.

All of the suspects were being held in the Ector County Jail pending arraignments late this morning. Their bonds had not been set.

Five Odessans named in the sealed indictments already were in custody for other suspected offenses. They include:

- Joe Mereles Sr., 42, 1415 S. Sam Houston, delivery of heroin;
- Catherine Montgomery, 31, 1423 E. Second St., delivery of cocaine;
- Trent Sessions, 29, 318 Wabash, delivery of cocaine;
- Roscoe Bohannon, 32, 1423 E. Second St., deivery of cocaine; and
- Reli Bohannon, 22, 1423 E. Second St., two counts of delivery of cocaine.

Authorities arrested eight other indicted Odessans at their residences. They include:

- Sherri Griffith, 29, 1701 W. Second St., delivery of a simulated controlled substance;
- Leonard Griffith, 28, 1701 W. Second St., delivery of a simulated controlled substance;
- Cathy Sizemore, 27, 600 Dotsy, two counts of delivery of a simulated controlled substance;
- Carrie Sanchez., 29, 1821 Alleghaney, delivery of cocaine;
- Linda Smith, 35, who listed her address as the Cactus Motel, delivery of cocaine;
- Cathy Farris, 1423 E. Second St., delivery of cocaine;
- Pam Bledsoe, 26, who gave her address as the Cactus Motel, delivery of cocaine; and
- Jose Gardea, 28, 823 Lauderdale, delivery of cocaine.

Lewis hopes LULAC accepts election plan

From Staff and Wire Reports

AUSTIN — House Speaker Gib Lewis said Monday he hopes the League of United Latin American Citizens will be open-minded about a proposal for appointing judges, who would then face voters in retention elections.

The plan is favored by Lewis, Gov. Bill Clements and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby. It was proposed after a federal ruling that the current system of electing judges from at-large districts in nine urban counties, including Midland County, illegally dilutes minority votes.

Rolando Rios, a lead attorney in LULAC's challenge of the state's judicial system and who has handled many of LULAC's voting cases in Midland County, has called the plan "an insult."

Lewis said he understands the group's concerns about minority representation, but he added, "I would hope that they would look at each and every one of the plans very objectively.

If a judicial appointment-retention election system was devised in Texas, he said, "I think you would have to write into that plan some type of provision that would guarantee a certain percentage of minority representation into any selection process."

U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton of Midland has indicated he may stop 1990 judicial elections in the nine counties in the suit, if lawmakers don't address the problem by January.

But Lewis said he expects lawmakers to go home this week if a workers' compensation bill is approved. The Legislature is in a special session called by Clements to overhaul the workers' compensation system.

If a judicial reform bill that lawmakers can agree upon is not produced by then, Lewis said he expects action on a resolution to assure Bunton the problem will be addressed.

Hance speaks out against state income tax

AUSTIN (AP) — Republican gubernatorial contenders spoke out on the sensitive issues of abortion and a state income tax as the month-long filing period for political candidates got underway.

Kent Hance announced the creation Monday of an organization that would allow Texans to register a protest against an income tax by dialing a telephone number and paying $5.95, which would benefit Hance's campaign.

Hance opponent Jack Rains of Houston referred to Hance, a former Democratic congressman, as a "recent convert" whose views on abortion are so "far-right" that they could lead the GOP to defeat in Texas.

Another GOP gubernatorial candidate, Tom Luce of Dallas, is coming out with a 30-second television commercial on abortion in which he says, in part, "I'm personally opposed to abortion. I support parental consent for minor children.

"But I believe the right public policy is not to impose a ban on abortion. Government officials should not make this decision."

Hance said he would serve as chairman of Texans Against a Coming Income Tax, or TACIT, with more than 100,000 pieces of mail explaining the program going out to people across the state.

Under the program, which starts Wednesday, a person calling a certain number would hear a message from Hance. If they leave their name and number, their telephone number would be billed $5.95, with the proceeds going to TACIT.

"All proceeds from TACIT will benefit my campaign for governor," Hance told a news conference.

Each call would provide about $2 for Hance, with the remainder covering operating costs, including the phone service, Hance's staff estimated.

Callers would receive an "action kit" on fighting a state income tax.

"This type of operation has never been tried before in Texas so far as I know," Hance said. "But if we're going to win this battle to ban an income tax, it's time we pull out each and every weapon in our arsenal."

Under the program (Texans Against a Coming Income Tax)... a person calling a certain number would hear a message from Hance. If they leave their name and number, their telephone number would be billed $5.95, with the proceeds going to TACIT.

Rains said Hance's statements against abortion show "how intolerant he is and out of touch he is with Texas today. Hance's leadership would polarize the Republican Party and ensure defeat by tying the ticket to his far-right positions."

Rains said he believes a majority of Texans "agree with me that government should not place further restrictions on the rights of an adult woman to have an abortion."

In other political developments, State Comptroller Bob Bullock, a Democratic candidate for lieutenant governor, said campaign reports for opponent Chet Edwards show thousands of dollars in reimbursements to Edwards from state and campaign funds for use of an airplane owned by a company in which Edwards is a partner.

Bullock said of Edwards, "From his campaign reports we know that Edwards has violated the law by not listing any payments to the company which owns the plane — Trison Aviation — and we don't know who was paid the money in the first place."

Sen. Edwards, D-Duncanville, responded, "Right now I am much more interested in solving the workers' compensation problem than in responding to negative campaign attacks.

"The allegations are old news and off-base. We have always made every effort to follow both the letter and the spirit of the law."

Bullock's statement on alleged campaign law violations was clipped to a copy of a Sept. 7 article on Edwards that appeared in the Austin American-Statesman.

Also Monday, Houston lawyer John Odam became the first Democratic candidate to pay the $3,000 filing fee for state attorney general.

Tom Fatjo, founder of Browning-Ferris Industries, filed to run as a Republican for state comptroller. He said he thought a strong campaign would cost $3 million, and he has agreed to invest $1.5 million of his own money if necessary.

Bullock on Sunday was the first major statewide candidate to pay his filing fee. The filing period extends to Jan. 2 at 6 p.m.

Probe sought of memo in Colorado City shooting

City official claims law enforcers 'on our side'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Hispanic rights activist is asking FBI Director William S. Sessions to look into a Colorado City official's claim that prosecutors and the FBI were "on our side" in an investigation of the fatal police shooting of a rape suspect.

Colorado City Manager Brenda Hammond said City Attorney Tom Rees "assumed" the FBI, state and local prosecutors were on their side after a grand jury declined last month to indict the officer who shot 27-year-old Sammy Gomez in the back of the head during a scuffle.

In an undated memo to the city council, Ms. Hammond said Rees had "advised us to keep going like we have been since we now have everyone on our side — the district attorney, the attorney general's office and the F.B.I. and to hold to the hope that the statute of limitation (sic) will expire since we only lack a little over 5 months."

"We all went in to do an independent, objective investigation. There was a grand jury that could have indicted, but the grand jury chose not to indict..."
— Ron Dusek of attorney general's office

Jose Garcia De Lara, national president of the League of United Latin American Citizens, said the memo confirms his belief the investigation was "one hell of a railroad job ... (that) would put a Barnum & Bailey Circus performance to shame."

Rees did not return repeated phone calls from The Associated Press on Monday.

Ron Dusek, a spokesman for state Attorney General Jim Mattox, said it is "just preposterous" for Rees "to even suggest that the state attorney general's office or the FBI would be on his side.

"We all went in to do an independent, objective investigation. There was a grand jury that could have indicted, but the grand jury chose not to indict. This memo is nonsense," Dusek said.

All five Hispanics on the panel, however, resigned in protest last month after the officer was cleared, saying the proceedings were a "railroad job performed by the state and the district attorney's office." The grand jurors later rejoined the panel.

Ms. Hammond said Monday she wrote the memo after the grand jury declined to indict.

"Since we had not had any indictments as a result of the grand jury — since all (the agencies cited) had testified, the city attorney said he assumed that meant everyone was on our side," Ms. Hammond said.

Dusek said no one on Mattox's staff has ever spoken with the city attorney or the city manager.

"The city attorney is apparently trying to sound important to his employer, and is just bragging that he knows something about the case," Dusek said. "Obviously, he didn't know anything."

Dusek said there is no statute of limitations on murder or manslaughter under Texas law.

In his letter to Sessions, De Lara accused local authorities of being in "collusion" with state officials, and that they conducted "a ludicrous investigation and an orchestrated circus-like grand jury presentation."

FBI spokesman Carlos Fernandez said the agency does not comment on correspondence received by Sessions. The case is being reviewed by the Justice Department.

Gomez, 27, who had a history of arrests, was fatally shot in May 1988 after lunging at a police officer with a knife, officials say. The officer, who said he acted in self-defense, shot Gomez while trying to serve a rape warrant.

Autopsies indicate Gomez was shot in the side of the chest, in the back below the shoulder blade, and in the back of the head.

A grand jury empaneled shortly after the shooting also declined to take action in the case.

Minister fulfills dream of playing classical piano

By BETH PRATT

LUBBOCK (AP) — Steve Davis became a minister instead of the concert pianist his mother had hoped for, so no one listened with more pleasure than his mother last week when he performed in recital at Texas Tech University's Hemmle Recital Hall.

"I remember when he first came in, he hadn't played classical music for a long time," said Dr. Jane Ann Wilson, his piano instructor. "My first thought was he had a lot of power."

The first piece she gave him was Bela Bartok's "Allegro Barbaro" to take advantage of his natural bombast. "He played it well because of his great strength," she said.

Encouraging students is something Ms. Wilson does well, Davis said. He said he a bad experience with a music professor at Louisiana State University that resulted in his abandoning the study of classical music.

She also challenges her students. "I gave him a Rachmaninoff prelude that requires sensitivity and control ... enormously complex," she said. "It may sound like the easiest piece on his program, but it's really the hardest."

Then there is "Invocation" by Franz Lizt, a piece she heard played at a recital from a set she had heard of but didn't know. "Doesn't that piece just sound like Steve Davis?" was her immediate reaction.

"Lizt wrote this collection as kind of a spiritual outlet — it's a majestic, deeply moving piece," Davis said.

"The Rachmaninoff took me longer to memorize than anything I've ever done, but it stopped me from beating the daylights out of the piano," Davis said, observing that he was also surprised to learn that the ability to memorize really could be improved.

He started piano lessons when he was 8 years old. His father's occupation kept the family moving often, so he had a variety of teachers through high school — some really outstanding, he said, recalling a retired French concert pianist in Austin.

Davis had three or four years in Bible college when he and his wife, Bridget, were married. Mrs. Davis, a musician who plays the piano by ear and sings, is the daughter of an Assemblies of God minister in Louisiana. They met through Donnie Swaggart, cousin of Jerry Lee Lewis and Jimmy Swaggart.

At Bible college, Davis was parodying Lewis and Swaggart on the piano when he turned to find Donnie Swaggart standing behind him. The two became friends. His future wife was Swaggart's church secretary. The couple was married 15 years ago by Swaggart.

"We don't say much about that," Mrs. Davis said, smiling.

Immediately after their marriage, they began traveling as evangelists. In 1987, Davis resigned his Assemblies of God ordination credentials to start an independent, charismatic congregation called Philadelphia Church, starting in homes, then in a hotel ballroom and now has an average attendance of 80 meeting in a Lubbock office complex.

The Rev. Steve Davis practices before a recent recital at Texas Tech, as his teacher, Jane Ann Wilson, listens.

AP Laserphoto

"People at church have been really good about it (his studies), not putting any pressure," Mrs. Davis said. "They're excited, too."

Davis, wanting to complete his education, was taking a couple of Bible college extension courses while he was pastor of a Lubbock Assemblies of God church. "I was using government money to do this," he said, "and it dawned on me I had a major university in my back yard. I stopped and talked to a counselor who advised me to do general studies."

He was allowed to transfer about half the credits he had earned at Bible college to Tech. Taking the general studies degree is like having three minors, he said.

"Someone said, 'Why don't you take piano?' and a friend recommended Jane Ann."

He was pleased to learn "she wasn't mean and grouchy."

And when she started talking about a graduation recital, he liked the idea.

"This is what his mother always wanted him to be," Ms. Wilson said, adding that people with musical ability have a real need to share that talent with others through performance.

With a new student, "I try to get a picture of where they are so we can progress from there," she said. A recital is not required of a non-music major, but students get the opportunity.

Students play in front of each other in weekly piano labs. "If you don't have to get up and do that, a one-ditch stand can be terrifying," she said of recitals.

She has had several students who are non-music majors, she said, noting that adults with families are at a real disadvantage because of the time demands on a music major. But their desire and seriousness about learning can make up the difference, she emphasized.

"I have had three or four other students, business majors, anyone of whom could have been music majors," the professor said. "I felt (the recital) is a good way to give closure and fulfill the need of performance a person with talent has ... a fitting climax to a year of study."

Family cooperation has been a crucial part of Davis' success.

"I've always admired his ability as a pianist," said Mrs. Davis. "When we first married it intimidated me."

Although she would also like to be able to read music, "I feel inferior — I'd have to go back to basics," she added.

"In all these years of teaching, so many came who never had a chance to study," Ms. Wilson said. "They all go back to basics," she reassured.

While giving a brief, impromptu recital on the professor's studio piano, Davis declared his performance still in need of perfecting and then consented to give a lively rendition of Jerry Lee Lewis' "Great Balls of Fire."

In Bible college he made a pact with a girl to learn to play it if she would write a paper for him. To hold up his end of the deal, he bought a 45 rpm record and played it over and over until he could play and sing it. "They've never heard me do this," he said, wondering if the professor in the next studio would come charging in to see what was happening.

"I really appreciate Dr. Wilson," he said. "She is an incredible musician, plays cello in the Lubbock Symphony Orchestra and is one of the nicest people I've ever met. She played at the International Double Reed Society in Manchester, England, this summer. She needs the credit. I wouldn't have done this without here."

Rucker to seek re-election

From Staff Reports

Dean Rucker, presiding judge of the 318th district court, announced Monday that he will seek re-election in 1990 on the Republican primary ballot.

Rucker

Rucker has served as district judge since his appointment in February 1988, and was elected to the office the following November.

"The last two years have been extremely challenging and satisfying," Rucker said in announcing his candidacy. "I am hopeful I will continue to be of service to our community in this position."

Family law matters, such as divorce, child custody and child support cases are heard in the 318th district court.

Rucker has served as chairman of the Midland County Republican Party and as a member of the State Republican Executive Committee. He is a member of the State Bar of Texas and the Midland Bar Association.

Prior to his appointment to the bench, Rucker practiced law with his father, Hal Rucker, in the firm of Rucker & Rucker.

He has been a member of the board of Community and Senior Services Inc., Alamo YMCA, Midland Apartment Association and Midland Jaycees. He is a graduate of Leadership Midland and was honored in 1988 as Trinity School's outstanding alumnus.

Rucker received his law degree from St. Mary's University and a bachelor's degree in business administration from Trinity School. He is a native Midlander.

Baytown officials say oak poisoned

BAYTOWN (AP) — City officials have discovered their landmark oak tree — the symbol for their city — has been poisoned with the same herbicide that harmed the Treaty Oak in Austin.

"We don't know if this is the work of a copycat or not," David Ondrias, head of the city Parks and Recreation Department, said Monday. "But my best guess, if I have to speculate, is that somebody did this on purpose."

The problem was discovered in October after officials noticed bald spots in the leafy boughs of the 300-year-old oak. Initial tests eliminated disease and drought conditions as the reason for the tree's decline.

Further tests confirmed Monday that the tree has the powerful herbicide Velpar in its tissues and leaves.

In April, lab tests also found Velpar had invaded the roots of the centuries-old Treaty Oak, where legend says Stephen F. Austin signed a treaty with the Indians. A drifter later was arrested and charged with criminal mischief in that case.

To save the Austin tree, officials used chain saws to sever five roots that had absorbed the highest concentration of the compound. They also injected the tree with sugar water in hopes that it will survive the winter.

Ondrias said Velpar, a soil sterilant manufactured by Du Pont, can take up to three years to kill a tree. No chemical exists that can neutralize it, but a tree may survive.

"Our case is the most perplexing and puzzling, because we cannot find where the chemical has been introduced to the tree," Ondrias said.

On Friday, Eugean Hinze, a pesticide specialist with the Texas Department of Agriculture in Houston, took several more soil samples in a wider area.

The city hopes to locate the source of the chemical and cut it off.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR VOLUNTEERS

With the holiday season underway, there are numerous agencies needing volunteers. Show your volunteer spirit by checking this list twice and help make someone else's Christmas a little brighter.

■ Calling all youth! Be an elf at Santa's house. Costumes will be provided. Four elves for two-hour shifts at the mall are needed now through December 16. This is a wonderful opportunity for junior and senior high school students looking to put a smile on a child's face during the holidays.

■ Enjoy greeting people? Then consider volunteering as a receptionist for a high profile, nonprofit agency. Duties will include answering the phones and registering the public for classes. Volunteers are needed on Monday and Wednesday mornings.

■ Your clerical skills can make a difference for an agency that provides materials and support for cancer patients and their families. It seeks volunteers to help with taking messages and filing. Half-day schedules are flexible.

■ Looking for a once-a-month volunteer opportunity? This one's for you. Assist with mailing a monthly newsletter for a museum. A half day commitment is all that is needed.

For more information on how you can volunteer, please call the Volunteer Center at 697-8781.

'Drive Thru' nativity planned for Big Spring

From Staff Reports

BIG SPRING — Church of the Nazarene, 1400 Lancaster in Big Spring, will once again sponsor Texas' largest "Drive Thru" navitivity scene December 19-20 from 6:45 to 10 p.m.

The project involves a cast of 145 people and hundreds of hours spent in preparation, live animals such as sheep, goats and cattle, and almost a mile of luminarias to light the drive path.

Eight scenes will portray the true meaning of the holiday and will be accompanied by seasonal music.

Visitors who have cassette players in their cars will receive a cassette tape to narrate the tour as they drive through the display.

The event is free to the public although donations will be accepted and return visits are encouraged.

PUC recommends rate reduction for Bell customers

STATE

AUSTIN (AP) — Southwestern Bell customers could ring up fewer dollars for the phone company in the future if a $392 million annual revenue cut is enacted by the Public Utility Commission.

"This is the largest utility rate reduction ever proposed in the state of Texas," said PUC General Counsel Bob Rima, whose office initiated the rate case in January. "Texans should see a significant benefit through lower rates for their telephone service."

PUC staff members, in testimony Monday, recommended formulating rates to reduce Southwestern Bell's revenues.

The monthly rate for "Touch-Tone" service, currently $1.25 for residential and $2 for business customers, also would be eliminated under the staff recommendation. However, local residential and business rates would be frozen for four years.

Southwestern Bell has said the staff recommendations represent 39 percent of the company's net income in Texas and would force massive layoffs, cause reduction in plans to modernize the network and harm service.

"I am very confident now that we have their testimony we can sit down and talk with them and other people about these issues," said Bill Free, vice president of revenue requirements and public affairs for Southwestern Bell.

While maintaining that the enormity of the proposed reduction would be financially devastating, Free saw some bright spots in the staff's proposed rate structure: "They apparently have recognized our local rates are among the lowest in the nation, and there shouldn't be any reduction in local rates. That's pleasing to me."

Free said he's also pleased the PUC staff proposal includes some elements of Southwestern Bell's "Texas First" plan, which includes such items as a five-year local rate freeze and a modernization program.

Southwestern Bell also would reduce its charges to long-distance companies in Texas for access to local phone networks, with the thinking that savings would be passed on to consumers.

In return, Southwestern Bell wants regulatory flexibility on earnings.

The staff proposal does include some regulatory flexibility for the company, and it also proposes reducing access charges to long-distance companies.

In addition, the staff recommends cutting Southwestern Bell's long-distance charges. For example, the charge for a five-minute call between two towns 25 miles apart would be reduced from $1.07 to 82 cents.

The service connection charge, currently about $60 for residential customers, would be reduced by 32 percent under the staff recommendation.

Rima said he doesn't believe Southwestern Bell will be harmed by the $392 million revenue cut.

"Southwestern Bell is alleging that cuts will be the result of staff proposals, when they have clearly been cutting back for years," he said. Rima said the company reduced its work force by 5,700 employees during the past three years, and has cut capital expenditures by more than 50 percent since 1985.

Free said the company in recent years has not laid off people, but has saved money by not replacing employees who retired.

Layoffs are not now planned "unless some unknown disaster occurs in this case," Free said.

Autopsy shows cheerleader stabbed 97 times

ROUND ROCK (AP) — A 13-year-old cheerleader whose body was found beneath some firewood in the back yard of her next-door neighbor had been stabbed 97 times, an autopsy has revealed.

The body of the victim, Kelly Brumbelow, a straight-A student at C.D. Fulkes Middle School where the boy also attended classes, was found early Sunday.

Round Rock Police Sgt. Dan LeMay said the suspected assailant, a 12-year-old boy in custody of juvenile authorities, tried to clean up the blood before his parents returned home.

When his attempts to erase evidence of the crime failed, the boy told his parents he had gotten a bloody nose while wrestling with his dog in a hallway, LeMay said.

LeMay said investigators have not determined a motive in the slaying. He said the boy has admitted he killed the girl, but told investigators he did not know why he did it.

"He said something just came over him ... He was really in a rage when he killed her," LeMay said. "You can tell by the nature of the wounds."

The boy has asked for a lawyer, meaning that investigators cannot question the boy further, LeMay said.

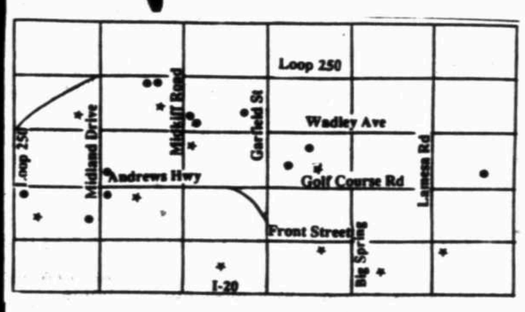

Police said the boy, who knew the victim, was arrested after his father called police Sunday morning and said he had found the girl's body hidden under some firewood in the backyard.

HMR® Fasting PROGRAM at Permian Health Resources

The Treatment of Choice for Serious Weight Problems

A specialized program for those with serious weight problems, the HMR FASTING PROGRAM, is now available at Permian Health Resources.

The HMR FASTING PROGRAM combines medical and behavioral weight management methods in a comprehensive, medically-supervised program for individuals who are 20% or more over their ideal body weight and for whom weight loss would reduce their medical risk of hypertension, diabetes and cardiovascular disease. The program includes a 520 calorie supplemented diet, weekly physician visits, periodic lab tests and weekly educational-behavioral group sessions.

HMR Patients Lose More Weight and Keep It Off

- Average weight loss 46.6 lbs.
- Over 50% lose 40 or more pounds.
- 1 year after reaching goal weight, less than 10% regain all of weight lost.
- Over 60% of weight loss is kept on long term.

An Educational Approach

HMR's approach is both educational and behavioral. It emphasizes skills and procedures necessary for long-term weight management. In addition to helping patients achieve substantial weight loss, HMR's goal is to teach a calorie balancing system in which individuals learn to make food choices consistent with their own eating styles. HMR also places significant emphasis on increasing physical activity.

Medical Results

Medical results from the HMR FASTING PROGRAM are equally significant. Most patients with hypertension or adult onset diabetes are able to reduce or totally eliminate all medications. Patients who have stayed with the program through the maintenance component have dramatically reduced their risk of heart disease and other medical risk factors.

Different from Other Programs

The HMR FASTING PROGRAM differs from traditional weight loss programs not only in content and approach, but in length of treatment and follow-up. We believe that long-term monitoring - a minimum of 18 months - is necessary to ensure successful maintenance of weight loss.

The First Step

For information about the next educational orientation, contact Permian Health Resources at: 687-4747.

Whether or not you decide to participate in the HMR FASTING PROGRAM, the information you receive will be useful in your efforts to lose or maintain weight.

This holiday season, give yourself peace on earth.

Give your teenager a private phone line.

Peace on earth.

If your teenager loves to talk on the phone, it's the hardest thing on earth to find. Because you're always waiting to make calls. Or worrying about missing them.

That's why, this holiday season, you should give your teenager a gift that will make your whole family happy. A private phone line, with a separate phone number, from Southwestern Bell Telephone.

With a private phone line, your teenager could talk to his heart's content. And you'd be content because your phone line would never be tied up.

What's more, a private phone line's a small price to pay for something as precious as peace on earth. So call Southwestern Bell Telephone today.

And make your teenager the happiest kid on earth.

Students in hot water because they skipped school to fight fire

ORE CITY (AP) — Three high school students, who saved the day in November when they left their classes to fight a hay barn fire, caught grief instead of praise from school officials who said they should have stayed in class.

The students' decision to fight the fire has sparked a review of what to do with high school students who volunteer for the local fire department.

Ore City, a town of about 1,100 west of Texarkana, depends on its volunteer fire department for fire protection. And like many small towns, Ore City has some high school students on the rolls: about a half dozen in the 20-member department.

In late November, students Tom Allen, Kendall Belt and Craig Barton left school without permission when they heard the fire department's siren sound.

"We knew they (school officials) wouldn't let us go," said Allen. "Me and Kendall were in class together and after we heard the siren go off four times, we knew no one was there to fight (the fire), so we talked it over and got up and left," he said.

There usually are enough firefighters to cover a weekend or evening blaze. The problem arises when adult fire department members are at work out of siren range when a fire breaks out.

The problem only presents itself once or twice a year, said Ore City Fire Chief Gaston Deberry III, but having the students available is vital when no one else is in town to respond to a fire.

"It doesn't matter who puts the fire out as long as it gets done," he said.

School board president Henry Brookshire said the problem is a legal one.

"The only way firefighters can leave school is to have their parents' written approval," Brookshire said. "The parents need to take responsibility for the kids if they leave campus. If they were hurt at a fire we (the school) would be legally liable."

Brookshire disputed some residents' contentions that the district has allowed the students to leave in the past.

"Ever since I have been here, Ore City has had a closed campus policy."

The students saved a hay barn and prevented the Ore City paper mill from catching fire.

"The barn would have definitely burned down if they hadn't come when they did," said Joy Peebels, the owner of one of the buildings.

Despite their efforts, the students were told they could no longer bring their cars to school because they violated the district's closed campus rule.

A&M will establish adult literacy center

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Texas A&M regents, working to fight the state's high rate of illiteracy, approved funds for a new learning center in the university's College of Education.

"Texas has a present and growing problem with adult literacy, especially young adults who are attempting to enter the work force or post-secondary educational programs," said Texas A&M President William H. Mobley. "Leadership is needed to develop new ways to alleviate the problem."

The A&M University System Board of Regents Monday authorized the establishment of the Texas Center for Adult Literacy and Learning, where research will be conducted, programs developed and information network organized to combat the problem.

Texas ranks 47th among states in literacy among those over the age of 20 and has one of the highest percentages of adults who lack basic skills, said Dr. Chris Borman, interim dean of education.

In other action Monday, the Board of Regents approved a College of Medicine request to create a new unit to study health care costs.

The new Institute for Health Care Evaluation will begin with studies at the college's clinical campus in Temple. It will involve collaboration with two key partners, Scott & White Hospital and Clinic and the Olin E. Teague Veterans Center, and Darnall Army Community Hospital at Fort Hood.

With cost-containment the national buzzword and costs spiraling, Mobley said, "The American health care system is currently experiencing incredible change."

College of Medicine Dean Richard A. DeVaul said the college is well-positioned to evaluate the various strategies that have been developed to hold the line on health care costs.

The regents also authorized new master's degree programs, subject to approval by the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board, for Texas A&I University, Corpus Christi State University and Texas A&M.

The proposed new programs for Texas A&I are in environmental engineering and industrial engineering, while Corpus Christi would gain a mariculture program. A visualization program involving computer graphics has been proposed for Texas A&M through the College of Architecture.

Greer Garson will fund theater addition at SMU

DALLAS (AP) — Academy Award-winning actress Greer Garson said her decision to fund a new multi-million dollar theatre at Southern Methodist University's Meadows School of the Arts was a lifelong dream.

"An occasion like this is heady stuff," Ms. Garson said at a news conference Monday to announce the donation. She said the theatre is "something I've dreamed about quite often."

The 50,000-square-foot addition, to be housed in the Owen Arts Center, will include a theatre with a classical thrust stage, according to Dean Eugene Bonelli. The theatre will be named after Ms. Garson, university officials said.

"This magnificent and generous gift from Miss Garson enhances SMU's position as one of the pre-eminent education and training centers for aspiring theatre artists," SMU President A. Kenneth Pye said.

"It is a continuation of her belief in theatre at SMU, which began in 1979 with the Greer Garson Awards for outstanding students in theatre," Pye said.

The exact cost of the addition has not been determined because construction bids are still out, said SMU spokeswoman Vivian Cheadoe. Ms. Garson is the only donor, she said.

The new theatre will complement the university's current performance spaces: the 400-seat Bob Hope Theatre and 100-seat Margo Jones Theatre.

Her gift also will pay for climate-controlled storage, screening rooms and office space for the university's Southwest Film Video Archives, which will be housed in the addition.

The project is expected to be completed by fall 1991.

Miss Garson's late husband, E.E. "Buddy" Fogelson, was an independent oil producer, lawyer and rancher. He established the Greer Garson Awards in 1979 as a 30th wedding anniversary gift to his wife.

STATE IN BRIEF

Texan arrested in officer's death

LOGANSPORT, La. (AP) — Funeral services will be Wednesday for Logansport police officer Charles Downs who was dragged to his death on a pickup truck by a man he was trying to arrest, police said.

Michael Dean Jordon, 33, of Carthage, Texas, is being held without bond on charges of first-degree murder, said Capt. Marvin Melton of the DeSoto Parish sheriff's office.

Downs, 44, had been considered a likely candidate to succeed Ray Barber as police chief of Logansport, a Texas-Louisiana border town of about 2,500, said City Attorney Joseph William Bailey. Barber is resigning Jan. 1; Downs was expected to be appointed to fill the unexpired term.

Logansport police dispatcher Charles McClure said Downs was sent to a house on Louisiana Highway 764 when a woman complained about a drunk man causing a disturbance Sunday.

"The man tried to flee in his truck. The officer grabbed on the truck. The truck went down highway. The man was making violent maneuvers with it, trying to shake him off. He did shake him off," Melton said.

Jordon was arrested in nearby Panola County, Texas, on Sunday and returned to DeSoto Parish, Melton said.

Fuel barge explodes

HOUSTON (AP) — One man remained missing today and another was hospitalized after an explosion aboard a fuel barge in the Houston Ship Channel.

The explosion occurred Monday afternoon on a barge being cleaned by a crew. U.S. Coast Guard officials said the barge had been carrying a form of natural gas.

Cpl. Rodney Tooley of the Harris County Sheriff's Department said one man suffered burns in the explosion, which happened at about 1 p.m. The man was in guarded but stable condition Monday night at Hermann Hospital in Houston.

The search was called off Monday evening for the missing man, and Coast Guard officials didn't know if the search would resume after daylight today.

The barge was located just north of the Lynchburg Ferry in east Harris County, and the traffic on the ferry was closed temporarily after the explosion.

Houston Fire Department boats and a sheriff's marine division boat helped douse the fire on the barge. The initial explosion sent up thick black smoke that was visible from downtown Houston, about 20 miles away.

Panel to reward schools

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements appointed five members to a new panel to reward schools that establish exemplary programs to prevent dropouts, drug and alcohol abuse and encourage parental and community involvement.

The $10 million program, proposed by Clements, was passed by state lawmakers earlier this year. Ten appointments to the 15-member committee are still pending.

Named to the committee Monday were:

■ Winston C. Power Jr., 51, who is superintendent of the Highland Park school district in Dallas.

■ Patti Clapp, 46, director of leadership development at the Dallas Chamber of Commerce.

■ Jack Fields Sr., 65, a trustee of the Humble school district for 21 years.

■ Donald Reynolds, 51, superintendent of the Goodrich school district.

■ Dan Frank Long, 60, a clinical professor of educational administration at the University of Texas-Austin.

Illegal tobacco items found

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas tax agents have raided two illegal tobacco distributors in Harris County, which could bring the state up to $100,000 in uncollected tobacco taxes, officials announced.

State Treasurer Ann Richards said Monday that the weekend raids, the first since a tax crackdown began last week, found a large quantity of contraband cigarettes and other tobacco products.

According to Ms. Richards, agents served a search warrant on a Houston wholesaler and found several cases of illegal tobacco products. Agents then arrested a 39-year-old Indian national who was identified as the tobacco supplier.

The man's van was confiscated and a later search of his Houston home uncovered more contraband items.

No criminal charges had been filed as of Monday, officials said. The state could file either felony or misdemeanor charges, and the Treasury could collect up to twice the tobacco tax owed.

War memorial panel set

AUSTIN (AP) — House Speaker Gib Lewis has named four members to a panel that will assist in efforts to build a memorial at the state Capitol honoring Texans who fought and died in the Korean and Vietnam wars.

"Those Texans who fought and died in the Korean and Vietnam wars deserve permanent recognition for their valiant efforts," Lewis, D-Fort Worth, said Monday.

Named to the panel were:

■ State Rep. Frank Collazo, D-Port Arthur, who will serve as chairman.

■ State Rep. Sam Johnson, R-Plano, a former prisoner of war in Vietnam.

■ Ramon Valadez of San Antonio, a retired major from the Marines who has served as national director of the Military Order of the Purple Heart.

■ Jimmy Lemley of McDade, state adjutant and executive director of the American Legion of Texas.

Voting cards to be mailed

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas' 8.2 million registered voters should have their new, two-year voting certificates by Christmas, the secretary of state's office says.

A statewide mailing is delivering new certificates that will be in effect from Jan. 1, 1990 through Dec. 31, 1991, Secretary of State George Bayoud said Monday.

The cards should be automatically mailed to currently registered voters, Bayoud said.

Anyone who wishes to vote in the March 13 primary election must be registered by Feb. 11, 1990.

NOTICE OF CONSERVATORSHIP OF WESTERN LLOYDS INSURANCE COMPANY

Pursuant to Article 21.28-A of the Texas Insurance Code, the Commissioner of Insurance issued an official order, No. 89-1769 effective November 30, 1989, placing Western Lloyds Insurance Company, Beaumont, Texas, in a state of conservatorship. This company is a domestic insurance company authorized to sell property and casualty insurance in Texas, including homeowner's and auto insurance.

The Commissioner of Insurance finds that pursuant to Article 21.28-A, Section 5, Texas Insurance Code, the company has requested and consented to the appointment of a Conservator. Supervision is inadequate to accomplish rehabilitation of the company.

Under the Commissioner's order of conservatorship, the Conservator will assume control and operation of the company and will take all steps and legal measures necessary to preserve, protect, and recover the assets and property of the company. Efforts will be made to rehabilitate the company for the protection of its policyholders and the public.

If you are a policyholder of this company, your insurance coverage continues in effect for as long as you pay your premiums. If the company is rehabilitated, your coverage will continue as though nothing had happened. If the company is not rehabilitated, it may be placed into receivership or its business reinsured, and you will be so notified. In either event, contractual claim obligations will be paid by the company, by the reinsurer, or by the guaranty fund subject to the limitations provided in law. The guaranty fund provides protection for covered claims up to the amounts specified in Article 21.28-C, Texas Insurance Code.

Courses of action available to policyholders include continuation or cancellation of their policies. Policyholders who wish to continue their coverage need do nothing more so long as their premiums are paid. If premiums are due, policyholders should continue to pay them in the same amount and manner as in the past in order to keep their coverage in force.

To avoid possible loss of coverage, policyholders must continue to pay premiums unless and until similar insurance can be obtained from another company. Policy provisions with respect to filing claims remain in force and must be observed.

Claims will continue to be handled in the standard process as specified in the insurance contracts issued by the company. Policyholders will be notified if there is any change in claims processing or handling.

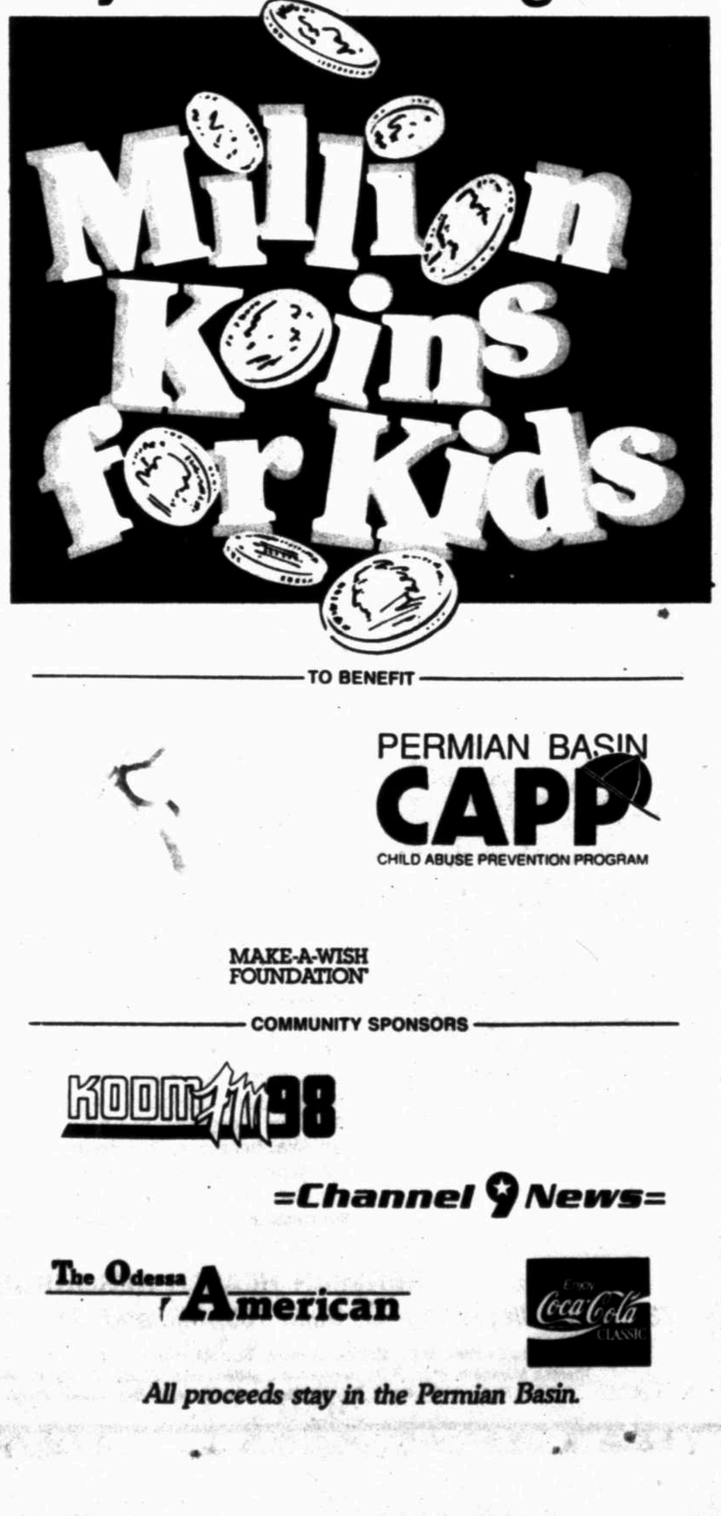

Policyholders' rights are governed by the Texas Insurance Code, State Board of Insurance rules, and by policyholders' individual contracts of insurance. Policyholders with specific questions regarding policy provisions should seek independent legal advice. No action is required by policyholders under Commissioner's Order No. 89-1769. If any action should be required in the future, policyholders will be notified.

This notice is published pursuant to Article 21.28-A, Section 5A, Texas Insurance Code (Acts 1989, 71st Legislature, Ch. 1082, Sec. 4.02, eff. September 1, 1989).

Play up a full figure with style

By NANCY MILLER LEWIS
Copley News Service

Fashion bullied the full-figured woman almost forever.

It made her believe that her body came in only one type (large) and that come special occasions such as the holidays, she had only one dress-up choice — a black sack of a chemise.

Such closed-minded thinking doesn't intimidate Linda Arroz, large-size fashion specialist for the Spiegel catalog. Not only does Arroz know her fashion stuff, she has firsthand familiarity with dressing large-size women. Arroz is 5-foot-9 and weighs 210 pounds. She has weighed as much as 300 pounds and as little as 150.

"For years there were a lot of rules about what full-figured women could and could not wear. Who makes the rules? I don't know. But I do know those rules were made to be broken," says Arroz.

Before considering what styles would be best for the holidays, she notes that the full-figured woman has to learn something about herself.

"Know your body type," Arroz says. "You've got to be in tune with your body so you're not working against yourself. There's not really anything color-wise (a full-figured woman) can't work out if she's aware of her body."

Spiegel's silhouette system categorizes full-figured women just as it does petite, junior and missy figures:

The inverted-pyramid figure features wide shoulders and bustline and narrows through the waist and hips.

The pyramid shape is most commonly referred to as "a pear shape." Shoulders and bustline are small, while a broader waist and hips figure in.

The hour-glass figure features a small waist, while shoulders, bust and hips are all in proportion.

Finally, there's the straight-up-and-down figure. Here, there is little difference among bust, waist and hip measurements.

Once you've identified which category your figure falls into (if a mirror doesn't tell you, get out the measuring tape), Arroz offers some tricks — optical illusions, if you will — so that the eye sees a well-proportioned figure.

These tricks especially should be given consideration when buying holiday clothes because "Dressy clothes aren't cheap. You don't buy many of them, so the ones you do choose have to be well thought-out," Arroz explains.

"You want to play up, not cover up," she adds. "Shiny fabrics, for instance, draw attention to the area they are covering. If you're going to wear them, you've got to know what you want people to look at."

Using lustery satin as an example, Arroz says a woman who has a pyramid shape might try a satin blouse with slacks in a matte material, such as gabardine. Conversely, the woman with the inverted-pyramid shape might combine a simple wool sweater with satin cigarette pants (drawing attention to the leg and hip area, where she is smallest). Women with hour-glass figures should try accenting their tiny waists with a glittery belt; those with straight up-and-down shapes would do well to find items accented with satin or glittery collars to bring the eye up to the face.

Accessories can do a lot to call attention to the face, too, she suggests. Try big glittering earrings or a shiny necklace.

Finally, Arroz notes, women don't have to restrict themselves to red, green or black when it comes to holiday dressing.

"A holiday dress or suit could be purple, turquoise or yellow, whatever color you find exciting."

Full-figured women can dress up in style this holiday season due to the emphasis the fashion industry has given plus-size clothing.

Dress codes change for work parties

NEW YORK (AP) — The most common engagement today's working women are obligated to attend, whether during the rush of the holiday season or at other more socially sane times, is the cocktail party or business dinner.

And rare is the woman who can leave the office to go home and freshen up first.

"I consider myself to be typical of today's executive who plays a variety of roles, both professionally and personally," says fashion designer Ann Lawrence. "The after-work obligations co-mingle these roles. It's not unusual for me to have to attend either an opening or industry cocktail party."

Lawrence says a black suit may be the safest bet for a cocktail party, but "it surely isn't the most innovative or exciting way to dress. I tend to wear a dress which I had on during the day, or one that I brought to the office.

"Accessories and shoes are a great way to transform your office attire to evening attire. If it is a dressier affair, perhaps a jewel tone paisley cocktail dress that's covered up on top but with a peplum or tiered flounce for a little pizazz."

Suits seem to work best for dinner meetings, but not your boardroom blue or basic black. Rather, try a pattern such as a check that is softly tailored with velvet epaulets. Change from a workday silk shirt into a chiffon tee or camisole.

"One of my favorite styles to do business in after work," says Lawrence, "is the suited dress. It allows you diversity and flexibility."

The optimum situation is one in which you have time to go home before going out. Black-tie and formal functions tend to fit into this category because they usually don't begin until after eight.

"If it is an affair during the week, I tend to wear a short, flirty party dress because it lifts the spirits and gives me a lot of energy," says Lawrence.

"For a black-tie dance, I might opt for a velvet skirt and beaded evening jacket, or a formal dinner suit, or a long strapless gown with short dinner jacket."

Her formula for eveningwear, whether it's for a strictly fun event or for business, is to feel confident in what you are wearing. If you even question the appropriateness of the outfit, leave it at home.

Dress to kill shopping battle fatigue

By VALLI HERMAN
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Shirley Tanji was prepared for combat. The evil forces of sore feet, long lines and crowded aisles weren't about to send her into a post-shopping trauma.

Tanji's survival secrets start at the sole: "Low shoes," she said, pointing to the tie flats.

From her wrist hung another bag of shopping tricks: the dress she planned to wear this holiday season.

"I bring my dress in my bag when I want to buy shoes or a purse to match," she said.

Tanji, like many holiday consumers, is well-versed in the secrets of less-stressful shopping. Knowing what to wear and what to bring separates the healthy veterans from the frazzled rank and file.

Linda Arroz, an image consultant, has made a career of hassle-free shopping, for herself and for clients.

"If I know I'm going to try on clothing, I'll wear sweats. It's fine, especially in Southern California, where we're very comfortable with casual contemporary sportswear," Arroz said.

Dressing down for shopping has its hazards. Somehow, those frilly holiday dresses and sophisticated suits don't look right with anklets and running shoes poking out from beneath the hem.

"Take the shoe of the approximate heel height that you will be wearing," she said.

Her bag of shopping essentials would also include pantyhose for dresses, hair spray for reshaping a mussed 'do, and a list of exact sizes for others on your holiday shopping list.

"If you are looking for an accessory or a separate for something you own, take (your garment) with you," Arroz said.

"So many of us don't, and we make mistakes. This is not the time of year for mistakes. Everything gets picked over, and there is no guarantee that the store will have what you need later."

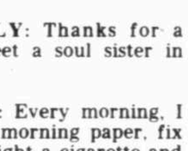

With huge and heavy shopping bags banging your shins, the idea of carrying a dress or suit around a mall may seem redundant, if not hazardous.

The trick is to model a shopping expedition after a hiking trip, not a fashion show. Arroz suggested wearing a waist bag or a small shoulder bag to keep hands free. Wearing a jacket with a lot of pockets also helps redistribute the load.

DEAR ABBY

Woman who smoked at last has seen light

By ABIGAIL-VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My family has been trying to get me to stop smoking for the last 10 years. I would always try to pacify them all by saying that one of these days I would quit — regardless if I really meant it or not. And then something happened to me that completely changed my way of thinking.

I was at my sister's home one afternoon, and as I was leaving, my 4-year-old niece came running out the door after me. She had a newspaper clipping in her hand, she grabbed a hold of me and hugged me, told me she loved me, and then asked me to read the clipping to her. The article was from your newspaper column, and it was a letter that a woman from Denver had written to you. Her name was Susan Ortez, and she had recently lost her mother to emphysema and pneumonia — this woman's mother smoked for 50 years.

I began to cry as I read this letter and finally realized that I was putting my family through a lot of unnecessary pain because of my unwillingness to break a habit. My family is more important to me than anything, and I would never do anything to intentionally hurt them. I understand their reasons now, and am happy to say that I have quit smoking!

I want very much for this woman in Denver to know what an impact her letter had on my life. My thanks to her for having the courage to write, to you for allowing your readers to see it, and to my niece, Heather, for loving me! — HOLLY SMITH, WICHITA, KAN.

DEAR HOLLY: Thanks for a great letter. Meet a soul sister in Phoenix:

DEAR ABBY: Every morning, I get up, get the morning paper, fix my cup of tea, light a cigarette and take a series of pills. I have chronic obstructive pulmonary disease and was placed on a respirator for seven days at the age of 38. I was in terrible shape, and lived only through the grace of God and the prayers of my two daughters, ages 16 and 19.

I am very much aware that smoking is a hard habit to break because I have honestly tried to quit — but I could never stay quit.

Abby, I want you to know that the letter you had in the column from Susan Ortez inspired me so much that I cut it out and hung it on my refrigerator door. Tomorrow morning, I am going to get up, get the morning paper, fix my cup of tea, take my pills and NOT light a cigarette.

Thank you, Abby. Thank you, Susan. Wish me luck. — B.J. OF PHOENIX

DEAR ABBY: Some friends of mine have an infant whom I love as if he were family. I am touched that they trust me enough to let me take care of him occasionally. While he was napping one day, I went in to check on him, as all of us baby-tenders do almost automatically, and a terrifying thought suddenly struck me! What would I do if he weren't OK? What if I didn't see his little chest rising and falling with each breath? What would I do, besides panic?

I had thought about taking a CPR class for years but never got around to it. That's no longer true. It took only a few hours. I hope I never have to use it, but at least now I know I'll never have to live with, "If only I had ..."

My message is directed to everyone else who has considered taking a CPR class but hasn't gotten around to it yet. Call your local hospital or Red Cross chapter and enroll in the next class before it's too late. — JOANN AMORE, NORMAL, ILL.

DEAR JOANN: I have suggested CPR courses before, but it's an important message that bears repeating. Thanks for the nudge.

DEAR ABBY: This is for the girl who spoke for "the single ones" — she thought single people should be entitled to bring a date (or escort) to a wedding. Doesn't she realize that most catered weddings cost anywhere from $25 to $75 per person?

If she doesn't feel comfortable at a wedding without a date, she should decline the invitation and use the money she would have spent on a wedding gift to invite a man of her choice out for an evening of dinner and dancing. Believe me, she wouldn't be missed at the wedding. — NEWLYWED IN NEWPORT BEACH

The facts about drugs, AIDS, and how to prevent unwanted pregnancy are all in Abby's new, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." Classrooms full of live wires in post-TV age

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

We have two generations of schoolteachers in our family. This makes for some lively comparisons.

My husband argued the other night that the dress code should be enforced in the classroom, where shirts and trousers would be required. My son said, "The teachers would never dress that way." My husband said, "I'm talking about the kids!"

One's answer to truancy is to call the parents. The other counters with, "You have to find them first." One's solution to failing is "find a tutor," to which the other one laments, "The parents have tied up all the good ones." They are 20 years and a planet apart.

Probably the most dazzling difference is the way kids are taught. In my husband's day, he lectured and the kids listened. Then one day, a projector was brought to class, the blinds were drawn and, for a glorious 30 minutes or so, kids saw a travelogue on Peru, or a health epic – "Hi, my name is Hal. I'm your liver!" (If you were 12 years old and female, you got a Disney film showing butterflies emerging into prom material.)

Between my husband's education years and my son's, the little inquiring minds got restless. Enter the computer age, where students had something to do to keep the blood supply moving. Computers held them for a while, but this was a generation of kids who were bored by computer-chip voices and canned messages. They had electronics up to their armpits. Their classrooms had TV in the morning, computer games in the afternoon and VCRs for rewards.

Education is now on the threshold of a new era: live entertainment. "From Ms. Babcock's eighth-grade multipurpose room, we proudly present 'Friday Afternoon Live'! Appearing today will be Tom Cruise 'Rapping With Subjective Complements' ... Mary Lou Retton lecturing on 'High on Hygiene' ... Eddie Murphy on 'What does "I'm history" really mean' ... and a special appearance by the cast of 'The Wonder Years' on 'How to Speak Sitcom Fluently in Your Home.' And now filling in for Ms. Babcock is your guest teacher-/host ... Jay Leno!"

Every week will bring a new repertory company to the classroom, interspersed with "discovery field trips" to Vail and Epcot Center.

There is only one point on education where the generations still agree: first you have to get their attention.

Women's Wear Daily focuses on 'ins, outs'

New York Times Service

NEW YORK — The arch "ins and outs" of Women's Wear Daily got a personal touch — or, one should say, retouch — on Monday.

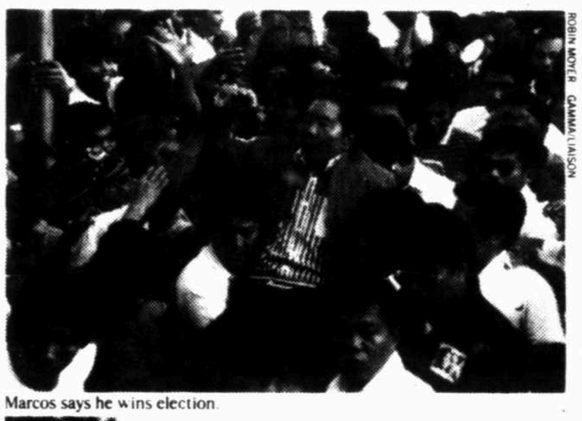

For an article about the new "Soft Society," characterized by less ostentatious silhouettes and jewelry, the paper showed a photo of a woman at the Literary Lions dinner last week with big earrings, a glittering brooch and no face.

The caption read: "The strangle of pearls is OUT; heavy earrings and flashy fakes are OUT." In addition, her face was out.

Who was she, and why was her face erased?

An executive at Women's Wear Daily identified the woman in the picture as the socialite Mercedes Bass. "Here she was with this splashy jewelry," said John Fairchild, chairman of Fairchild Publications, publisher of Women's Wear Daily.

"The face was unimportant."

Marcos says he wins election.

Aquino says she wins election.

Lewellen Construction announces new 10 year labor warranty

Between now and December 31 is Bill and Joan Lewellen's inventory reduction sale and if you have been thinking about adding siding to your home, there's no better time than now.

Not only can you save some money, but this is your chance to eliminate the expense and hassle of exterior painting every other year or so.

The other benefit to maintenance-free siding from Lewellen Construction Company is a new 10 year labor warranty. Call 563-4520 or 686-8007 for details. The warranty is on siding installation.

There is no doubt that storm windows benefit your home in many ways.

For example, your home and family are better protected from storms and hail penetration. Also, storm windows filter out outside noises.

Another benefit of storm windows is that they help reduce air infiltration — thus cutting down on dust that can penetrate the window opening.

In addition to storm windows, another home improvement offered by Lewellen Construction Company is replacement windows. By definition, replacement windows completely replace old, worn out windows.

Lewellen Construction Company has available aluminum and vinyl replacement windows.

All storm and replacement windows can be ordered with tinted glass to further cut down on energy costs.

Also, all windows are custom built to fit the opening and they are available in bronze, white and mill finishes.

This is also the time to order custom made windows — don't delay any longer.

Keep in mind, too, that now is the time to do needed improvements on your rental property for 1989 income tax deductions.

On a more serious note, Joan and Bill remind you to be careful during the holiday season and to reduce your chances of getting burglarized.

According to a recent study on burglary by two professors from the University of Texas at the Permian Basin, there are no fool-proof ways to protect your home from burglars, but a few simple precautions can substantially reduce your chances of getting hit:

■ Increase the risk to the burglar. Nosy neighbors are very important. Also a dog will help deter a burglar, as well as a burglar alarm.

■ Increase the difficulty. Install metal doors and door jambs and deadbolt locks. Locks on windows are helpful as well as inexpensive. The burglars in the study had a general rule of thumb: "If it takes more than two minutes to get in, forget it." An added value of storm windows is the increased difficulty they present to a burglar.

Other findings included decreasing the potential gain and creating the illusion of occupancy.

Contact the Crime Prevention Unit of the local police or sheriff's department for more information.

The Lewellens and their staff want to thank the hundreds of customers who have put their trust in them, and wish you all a wonderful and safe holiday season.

Frank Loewen, Lewellen Construction Company specialist, professionally installs home improvements on this home and can on yours. Call 563-4520 or 686-8007 for details.

Resolve now to let Advanced Electrolysis eliminate unwanted hair

Jodi McGee, left, and Barbara Gordon of Advanced Electrolysis have the skill and professionalism to help you beome a more self-confident person through the elimination of unwanted hair. Call them today at 689-7200 for an appointment.

The new year is fast approaching and health, exercise and being our best will still be a top priority. We resolve from year to year to overcome the obstacles that keep us from feeling self-confident.

For eight out of ten people, however, the biggest problem is superfluous hair. Advanced Electrolysis, in its new location at 3404 West Illinois, Suite 106, can help.

Men are often plagued with ingrown hairs on the face, neck and back. Women are faced with using temporary methods.

Tweezing is the most common temporary method of hair removal. Tweezing stimulates the area and hair growth spreads. Pitting of the skin also develops. Furthermore, waxing stimulates and makes soft normal hair become stronger. It also creates wrinkles. Depilatories contain strong chemicals that irritate the skin.

Unwanted hair can usually be traced to heredity, glandular hormone disorders or medications. Stress is also one of the largest contributors depleting the body of B-6 and zinc.

Electrolysis is the only method of permanent hair removal approved by the American Medical Association and the Food and Drug Administration.

Electrolysis is a relatively simple process. A fine wire probe is properly inserted into the hair follicle and a split second current is directed through the probe to the hair root. The hair is then lifted out with a tweezer. A slight redness will result from the current. It should diminish quickly and makeup can be applied.

Treatments vary with each person, depending on hereditary factors, glandular or hormone balances, stress and medications, and temporary methods one has used.

Electrolysis is no more expensive than other professional treatments. Fifteen minutes is $15.00, 30 minutes is $24.00, 45 minutes is $35.00 and 60 minutes is $43.00.

Why should anyone continue to fight and cope with unwanted hair? There is a professional, private service available in Midland. Barbara Gordon and Jodi McGee are skilled, experienced and dedicated to serve you with treatments.

They will make you comfortable and will work with you for late, noon or Saturday appointments.

Advanced Electrolysis is available six days a week, opening at 9 a.m. Complimentary consultations are available. Disposable needles and very strict sterilization are of utmost importance at Advanced Electrolysis.

The main thing to be gained is self-confidence and a friend to care as you regain your confidence. The office is located at 3404 West Illinois, Suite 106. The phone number is 689-7200 for becoming the person you deserve to be, and to be free from excessive hair growth. Make your 1990 new year's resolution now or make it your best Christmas gift, and begin now.

Midland College guard Gym Bice looks to pass Monday night. Bice scored 16 points.

Hawks fly high over Chaps

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Assistant Sports Editor

BIG SPRING — First there was the Titanic, then came the Hindenburg and, later, the 1989 Dallas Cowboys. And then there was Monday night in Big Spring.

The Midland College Chaparrals — down for the count almost immediately after the buzzer — fell to the Howard College Hawks, 102-80, the Chaps' worst loss since Jacksonville downed MC, 96-74, during the 1988 Chap Classic.

With Monday's loss, MC fell to 7-5 overall and 1-1 in the still-young Western Junior College Athletic Conference race. The Hawks improved their record to 15-0 overall, 1-0 in conference play, and look like the team to beat during the 1989-90 season.

In other action Monday, New Mexico Junior College squeaked out another one, defeating Frank Phillips 72-70; Western Texas downed Clarendon College, 99-83, and South Plains pummeled New Mexico Military, 105-52; Odessa College was idle.

Midland College head coach Reggie Franklin noted that Monday's loss was the worst in his three-year tenure at MC, which it obviously was.

The worst loss in Midland College history came over 10 years ago — and by just three points more than Monday night's debacle — a 105-80 loss to Western Texas on March 9, 1979.

How bad was it Monday? Let Franklin himself tell you ...

"We got our butts kicked," he said. "I called the first play of the game from the locker room, and they didn't run it. I knew from the very first play we weren't going to be in it."

And they weren't. Howard College opened with a commanding 25-4 run after the tip-off. By halftime, the Hawks led, 53-31. The Chaps closed the gap to 17 points (65-48) in the first six minutes of the second half, but the Hawks soon proceeded to go on a 17-4 run and led 88-57 — 31 points — with just under seven minutes remaining.

"The thing I'm most disappointed in," Franklin said, "was our total effort both offensively and defensively. That's the worst game I've ever coached in my life. Nobody has ever beat us like that."

For what it's worth, Andrews' native Gym Bice led all Chap scorers with 16. Tim Owens and Kethus Hanks, both of whom were keyed upon by the Hawk defense each had 14. Freshmen post Charlie Craine's 10 points accounted for the only other double-figure mark established by MC.

"Our game plan was to stop Owens from shooting down under and Kethus Hanks from shooting those three-pointers," Hawk guard Terrence Lewis said. "We ran a full-court, man-to-man defense and it worked."

Although Hanks and Owens combined for 28, the Hawks did control the Chaps' two main men. Hanks had three-straight turnovers early in the game and ended with six. Owens was obviously not his usual self, grabbing just seven rebounds.

"Kethus and Tim were two of the guys I was concerned about," Howard head coach Steve Green said. "Kethus is capable of getting three or four three-pointers in a row.

"They came out of the block slow. It got to be kind of a sloppy game after a while. We scored enough early to get a good break. I think that took the wind out of their sails."

Lewis, a dominating point guard — likely the best in the conference — led all scorers with 26 points. Howard's Harvey Petty and Johnny McDowell had 18 apiece and Greg Christian pumped in 17. Carlos Thumn's 12 points rounded out the double-figure scorers for the Hawks.

CHAP NOTES: Midland College travels to South Plains College in Levelland Thursday for an 8 p.m. game. The Texans are 11-3 and 1-1 and round out the Chaps' rough 1989 conference schedule.

MIDLAND COLLEGE (80) — Tim Owens 6-10 2-4 14, Gym Bice 6-14 3-4 16, Kethus Hanks 5-9 4-4 14, Charlie Craine 5-7 0-0 10, Randy Williams 4-7 1-2 9, Eric Golightly 3-5 1-2 7, Troy Taylor 2-3 0-0 4, Fred Campbell 1-6 2-2 4, Gerald Woods 0-0 1-2 1, Ron Johnson 0-0 1-2 1, Eric Walker 0-0 0-0 0, Kerwin Harris 0-2 0-0, Kiki Stanley 0-3 0-0 0. TOTAL: 32-66 FG (48.5 percent), 15-22 FT (68.2 percent).

HOWARD COLLEGE (102) — Harvey Petty 7-12 2-2 18, Terrence Lewis 9-12 4-4 26, Johnny McDowell 8-10 6-8 18, Greg Christian 7-14 2-2 17, Carlos Thumn 5-10 2-2 12, Kim Smith 3-4 0-1 6, Greg Jeffery 1-4 0-0, Dexter Abrams 1-1 0-0 2, Abner Shellman 0-1 1-2 1, Frank Henderson 0-1 0-0 0. TOTAL: 39-70 FG (55.7 percent), 17-22 (77.3 percent).

Halftime score— Howard 53, College Midland College 31. 3-point goals— Midland 1-7 (Bice 1-4, Hanks 0-1, Williams 0-1, Harris 0-1), Howard 7-12 (Lewis 4-5, Petty 2-4, Christian 1-2, Jeffery 0-1). Fouled-out— None. Rebounds— Midland College 30 (Owens 7), Howard College 33 (McDowell 12). Assists— Midland College 11 (Bice 5), Howard College 8 (Christian 3). Total Fouls— Midland College 18, Howard College 20. Technicals— None.

Padres reach conditional deal for Carter

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The Cleveland Indians have reached agreement to trade former Midland Cub slugger Joe Carter to San Diego, providing the Padres can sign the slugging outfielder, The Associated Press learned late Monday night.

Sources said the Indians would receive a package of players, notably highly rated young catcher Sandy Alomar Jr., if the conditional trade can be completed.

San Diego has approximately 48 hours to work out a contract with Carter, one of baseball's biggest hitters. Carter is not yet signed for next year and would be eligible for free agency after the 1990 season.

Carter is seeking a multi-year contract, likely in the $3 million-per-season range. If no contract settlement is reached by the time limit, the trade is automatically off, although the teams can agree to extend the deadline.

Carter, 29, hit 35 home runs and drove in 105 runs last season and batted .243 for the Indians.

Carter has averaged 108 RBIs for the past four seasons. Several teams came to the winter meetings trying to get him, with Boston, California and Kansas City expressing the most interest.

Alomar, named this week as the minor league player of the year, batted .306 with 13 homers and 101 RBIs at Class AAA Las Vegas. For the second straight year, he played a few games for the Padres late in the season.

Free agents hold the cards at meetings

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The winter meetings have turned into a game of Monopoly with the free agents holding all the good cards — and the money.

Baseball's annual trade show got off to a slow start Monday with only one deal. The New York Yankees sent catcher Don Slaught to the Pittsburgh Pirates for right-handers Jeff Robinson and Willie Smith.

Several potential trades, however, were being delayed as the big-ticket free agents decided their futures.

OU football in hot water once again

DALLAS (AP) — National Collegiate Athletic Association investigators were told that improprieties continued within the University of Oklahoma football program after it was placed on probation last year, according to a newspaper report.

In a copyright front page story in Tuesday's editions, The Dallas Morning News reported new charges have been brought against the university by Otha Armstrong III, a friend of former Sooner quarterback Charles Thompson.

If the violations are substantiated, the Sooners could face the NCAA's "death penalty," a suspension of up to two years.

Oklahoma was found guilty of several recruiting violations last December and prohibited from postseason play for two seasons and banned from live television appearances this season. A team becomes eligible for the death penalty if the NCAA finds a major rules violation within five years of such penalties.

Armstrong, 24, is serving two years in a federal penitentiary in Big Spring, Texas, for stealing 25 championship rings and other items from the home of former Sooner coach Barry Switzer.

Angelo State's Vernon Ragsdale tries to move on Oklahoma's Terrence Mullins on Monday night.

'Slipping' Oklahoma romps past Angelo St.

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Oklahoma won by 68 points Monday night. It was the 12th-ranked Sooners' smallest margin of victory this season.

"We had a lot of breakdowns," Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs said seriously after his team routed Angelo State 130-62. "We did some things tonight that aren't going to work. I really was more impressed with Angelo State than I was with Oklahoma."

The Sooners made only two of their first 15 shots and faced their first deficit greater than two points all season. But William Davis scored 10 of his game-high 22 points during a 31-0 run that got the Sooners rolling.

"We were very fortunate our press worked in the first half," Tubbs said.

Oklahoma (3-0) is averaging 149 points per game and has won by an average margin of 78.3 points. The Sooners set a NCAA record by scoring 97 first-half points in a 173-101 victory over U.S. International, then set another mark for widest margin of victory in a 146-51 victory over of Northeastern Illinois.

The 31-point run was keyed by Oklahoma's press. Angelo State made one turnover in the first five minutes and 29 in the next 15.

"We just wanted to execute the things we've been trying to teach and we did at first," Rams coach Ed Messbarger said. "Then bingo, it broke down. The press is psychological. The press makes you quit thinking."

Davis, a senior forward who has been Oklahoma's leading scorer in each of its games, also had a game-high 13 rebounds. He is averaging 25.7 points and 13.7 rebounds.

Oklahoma, however, was outrebounded 52-50, another fact that didn't please Tubbs.

"I thought we were rebounding pretty good (coming into the game), but they kicked our butts on the boards," he said. "We won't go into tomorrow's practice that sassy."

Smokey McCovery scored 21 points for the Sooners. Terry Evans added 17, Jackie Jones 15, Tony Martin 14 and Skeeter Henry 12.

Angelo State (3-5) led by as many as six points early in the first half and Oklahoma didn't take the lead for good until Davis' dunk on a fast break made it 17-16 with 12:45 left.

Henry's 3-pointer started the 31-point run, during which six players scored. Davis had 10 points, Jones 8 and Henry 7 during the spurt.

Vernon Ragsdale's bank shot with 5:14 left in the half ended the run.

Rodriquez belies size; Steer tackles live up to theirs

Freddie Rodriquez doesn't look big enough to run cross-country, much less play football.

Oh, Big Spring's free safety doesn't look too scrawny in pads. But in person, Rodriquez looks like the kid who gets cut in front of in the school lunch line.

My, how looks can be deceiving.

Grimes

The Steers list Rodriquez at a whopping 133 pounds, but the junior has played like an all-stater during Big Spring's march to the state Class 4A quarterfinals.

Rodriquez' three interceptions helped preserve a 39-6 Steer win over Fort Worth Brewer in the Region I semifinals last Saturday. Even more impressive is the way Rodriquez got to the passes thrown by Brewer quarterback Ben Fay.

On two of the throws, Rodriquez simply outfought the Bear receiver for the ball. In other words, he wanted it more than the other guy. And that's what you need to win state championships.

But Rodriquez' success doesn't simply revolve around a nose for the ball, though he has nine interceptions and 27 broken-up passes in 11 games. He knows how to read the offenses and act accordingly.

Rodriquez said Brewer made his job easier by tipping off their intentions.

"We knew they were going to give us some kind of clue," he said. In Brewer's case, Bear linemen adjusted their feet according to the type of the play they were going to run."

Still, Rodriquez said the ability to play hard was the major factor in the Steers' success. "We practiced hard all week.

"We knew we would have to play hard here to advance.

Other Steer defenders contributed to the rout. Senior tackle Pat Wilbert overpowered his foe for much of the afternoon, while "other tackle" Charles LaGrand recorded his second two-sack performance of the season at the expense of Fay.

LaGrand's first two-sack game was against winless Fort Stockton. Care to guess which game meant more?

For LaGrand, Brewer was just another brick in the road toward Oz, er, a state championship.

"We've been thinking that no one can beat us," the senior said. "We just came in here and played."

Wilbert didn't expect Saturday's game to such a rout.

"We didn't think it would be this easy," he said. "But we got great pursuit angles and we were able to stop their speed."

Brewer was touted as a fast team, but the Steers used a tremendous size advantage to overpower the Bears.

Next is Monahans, a team the Steers have nailed by two touchdowns in District 4-4A action.

But this isn't district play, and the Loboes are coming off a stirring win over Wichita Falls Hirschi in their regional semi.

Monahans has gutsy running backs like Joey Munoz and Wayne Carter, but I don't know if the Loboes have Brewer's speed, and they sure don't have Big Spring's size.

Both teams have 10-2 records, and neither team should have a particular home advantage because Saturday's state quarterfinal is being played in good old Midland Memorial Stadium. Big Spring is a little closer to Midland than is Monahans, but not enough to make any difference.

Win Saturday, and the Steers play the Region II champ — either Tyler Chapel Hill or Mount Pleasant.

Lose, and they can start savoring the memories of a successful season.

WINTER

American League MVP Robin Yount, who was thought to be close to deciding from among Milwaukee, California and San Diego, may not choose until after the meetings end on Thursday.

Reliever Mark Davis has an offer of at least $15 million for five years from the Philadelphia Phillies. But the Padres, the team for which Davis had 44 saves this season, and the New York Yankees are also in the running.

The Yankees on Monday would not comment on their negotiations with Davis.

If Davis decides on the Phillies, he may be used as a starter with Roger McDowell and Jeff Parrett in relief.

But could Davis win a Cy Young Award as a starter with the Phillies?

If Davis decides not to sign with New York, the Yankees may go after free agent reliever Jeff Reardon.

Other attractive free agents include outfielder Hubie Brooks, infielder Tony Phillips, first baseman Pete O'Brien and pitchers Storm Davis, Fernando Valenzuela and Craig Lefferts.

Storm Davis, who was 19-7 for the Oakland A's, has offers from Texas, Philadelphia, Montreal, St. Louis and the Yankees.

Free agent pitcher Floyd Bannister on Monday signed a two-year contract with the Yakult Swallows in Japan. Bannister, 133-142 lifetime, was 4-1 with Kansas City last season. He missed most of the year following rotator cuff surgery.

There are several players who are not free agents on the market, but who come with expensive strings attached.

Two big hitters who are also eligible for free agency after the 1990 season are Eric Davis of the Cincinnati Reds and Darryl Strawberry of the New York Mets.

Strawberry, who is in his option year with New York, wants more than $12 million over three years. He has given the Mets a deadline of Feb. 1 to make the deal.

Other big names that circulated in trade possibilities on Monday were Montreal's Tim Raines, Texas' Rafael Palmeiro, Chicago's Bobby Thigpen and Boston's Mike Greenwell.

The Red Sox want some pitching, including Tom Glavine, but the Braves backed off.

The Yankees, looking for relief now that Dave Righetti is a starter again, hope Robinson can return to his 1988 form when he was 11-5.

"Jeff Robinson is a proven pitcher who can work out of the bullpen as well as start," Yankees general manager George Bradley said.

Slaught hit .251 in 117 games with five homers and 38 RBIs. He got less playing time as Bob Geren emerged as the Yankees' top catcher late in the season.

Before the general managers started a long day of talks, Commissioner Fay Vincent said a few words about the state of the game.

While evoking the memory of Bart Giamatti several times, Vincent outlined his plans for baseball heading into the next decade.

Baseball's most pressing issue is the labor negotiations.

The Sooners followed with a 10-2 spurt, taking a 62-22 lead at the 3:25 mark.

Oklahoma led 72-28 at halftime, the second straight game it scored 72 points in the first half.

Ragsdale led the Rams with 14 points.

San Diego St. 51, Texas Tech 50

Shawn Jamison hit a pair of free throws with 16 seconds remaining and scored a game-high 18 points to lead San Diego State.

Texas Tech (3-2) came up short when Jerry Mason missed a 20-foot shot under heavy pressure at the buzzer. The Red Raiders, who trailed 44-31 with 13:09 to play, took a 50-48 lead on a lay-up by Derex Butts with 2:15 remaining.

Kansas 103, Tenn.-Martin 48

Terry Brown scored 21 points and Kansas started the second half with a 32-4 run as the No. 2 Jawhawks routed Division II Tennessee-Martin.

Mark Randall scored 19 points and had 14 rebounds for Kansas (7-0). Rick Calloway had 12 points and Kevin Pritchard 10.

Missouri 86, Creighton 79

Freshman Travis Ford made three 3-pointers as Missouri closed the first half with a 32-9 run and the fourth-ranked Tigers beat Creighton.

Missouri (5-0) trailed 28-20 with 8:16 remaining in the half after Matt Roggenburk made three straight 3-pointers. Nathan Buntin then made a 7-foot hook shot, starting the run.

Louisville 104, Cleveland St. 77

Felton Spencer was 8-for-8 from the field and scored 21 points as No. 11 Louisville used its superior size and quickness.

The Cardinals (4-1) made 9 of their first 10 shots. LaBradford Smith and Tony Kimbro set the pace with consecutive 3-pointers in the first 1:10 and Keith Williams' turnaround jumper at the 13:52 mark made it 23-8.

Georgia Tech 93, Pittsburgh 92

Dennis Scott scored 42 points, including a fallaway bank shot with one second left that gave No. 18 Georgia Tech the victory over No. 22 Pittsburgh in the opening game of the Big East-ACC Challenge.

PROBE

Armstrong says he served as a middleman through which a Tulsa booster sent cash to Thompson and Jamelle Holieway, another former Sooner quarterback. He also told the NCAA that freshman running back Dewell Brewer received improper benefits during at least one unofficial visit to Norman before signing his letter of intent in February, the Morning News reported.

David Berst, the NCAA's chief enforcement official, refused to comment on his staff's activities.

Oklahoma sports information director Mike Treps told the Morning News the university had not heard of any preliminary investigation by the NCAA.

"We have no comment whatsoever," Treps said. "To my knowledge, I don't know if we've even paid any attention to (Armstrong's accusations)."

A former Sooner player who was promised anonymity by the Morning News said Armstrong and Thompson were close friends. "Otha was hanging around Charles and knew everything," the source told the newspaper.

Armstrong said Thompson asked him several times to go to a Western Union outlet and sign for wire transfers from a booster in Tulsa. Once he obtained the money, he gave it to Thompson, who gave a portion to Holieway, Armstrong said.

"All that stuff was steathily done because the NCAA was investigating them at the time when I first started picking up the money," Armstrong told the Morning News.

He said NCAA investigators have obtained access to Western Union records that confirmed cash transfers had been made from Tulsa to him.

Armstrong also said two visits Brewer made to the school were paid for by the football program. NCAA rules allow a university to pay for only one visit. Thompson received money from a coach and paid for a motel for Brewer's second stay, which occurred about a week before Feb. 8, the national signing day, according to Armstrong.

Pertile receives LSC honors

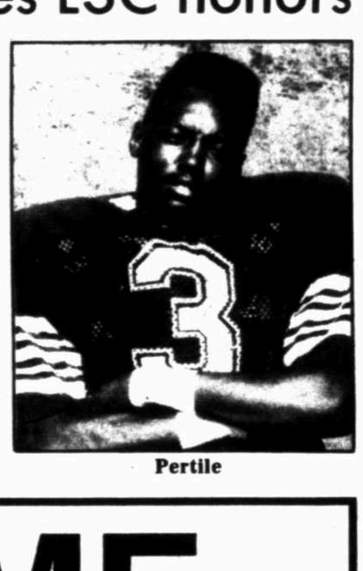

From Staff Reports

PORTALES, N.M. — Midland Lee graduate Anthony Pertile was named to the Lone Star Conference all-star team for the second straight year recently.

The 6-1, 185-pound Pertile was a unaminous choice for the first team. He is a junior free safety for the Greyhounds.

Pertile led the Greyhounds with 49 unassisted tackles and 32 assists. He also intercepted three passes, one for a touchdown, and had one quarterback sacl, two tackles for loss, three forced fumbles, one fumble recovery, and 13 pass deflections.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. L.A. Pertile.

Krieg lifts Seahawks to victory

SEATTLE (AP) — Dave Krieg and John Williams combined on Seattle's longest play of the season, a 51-yard touchdown pass with 5:38 remaining Monday night, lifting the Seahawks past the sputtering Buffalo Bills 17-16.

Krieg, making his first start after being benched for two games, avoided a heavy rush and lobbed the ball over linebacker Ray Bentley. Williams grabbed it at the 35, rumbled down the right sideline, got a block from Brian Blades and ran over Nate Odomes into the end zone.

Earlier, Krieg hit rookie tight end Travis McNeal on a similar play for 48 yards, the team's biggest play of 1989 until the game-winner.

The victory snapped Seattle's four-game losing streak and damaged Buffalo's chances of catching Denver for the best record in the AFC. The Bills (8-5) still lead the AFC East by one game over Miami.

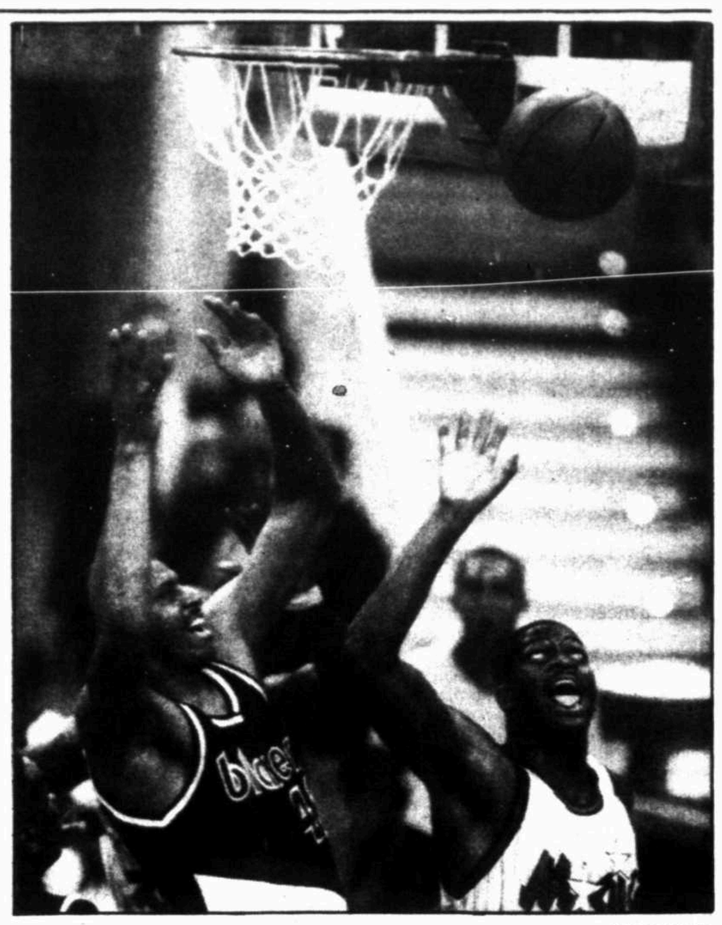

Seattle (5-8) clinched the victory — and Buffalo's fourth successive road loss — when M.L. Johnson recovered a fumble by Larry Kinnebrew.

Buffalo had taken a 16-10 lead on field goals of 32, 40 and 43 yards by Scott Norwood. But he missed from 48 yards just before Krieg hit Williams.

Earlier, defensive end Art Still made the first interception of his career to set up a field goal and Jim Kelly hit Andre Reed, the AFC's leading receiver, for a 61-yard score.

Seattle moved smartly to its opening score, a 29-yard field goal by Norm Johnson. Krieg hit Curt Warner for 13 yards and Steve Largent for 24, extending the NFL's all-time leading receiver's record consecutive game streak with a catch to 174.

Then Krieg and McNeal combined on the 48-yarder. Krieg avoided a strong rush and lobbed the ball to McNeal, who caught it over Leonard Smith. McNeal cut across the field as three Bills missed him and was caught by Smith at the Buffalo 15.

Blazers push past Magic

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Sparked by its defense, the Portland Trail Blazers pulled away in the second half Monday night to defeat the Orlando Magic 121-95.

The Trail Blazers outscored Orlando 66-44 in the second half to push its record to 13-4 — second best in the NBA. Jerome Kersey scored 22 points and Kevin Duckworth had 19 for Portland.

Orlando was led by Reggie Theus' 17 points. Terry Catledge added 16 and Jerry Reynolds 13.

Portland led 55-51 at halftime. But Kersey had 11 points as Portland outscored the Magic 29-14 in the first eight minutes of the third quarter to take an 84-65 lead.

WEST TEXAS FISHING

Bud tries to say it all with eight tips

By BUD BAKER

Most people are active in bass clubs more for the time spent with fishing friends than the competition of the tournaments.

Baker

With the low tournament entry fees that most clubs have, many members just enjoy their time on the water without taking the competition too seriously. But make no mistake about it. The competition is keen.

Few bass clubbers would claim to be ready for the pro tour, but top club fishermen can hold their own against just about anybody on their home waters. They leave more casual club members wondering how in the world someone could catch such good stringers out of our tough area lakes.

With 1989 drawing to a close, we are about to crown our club champions for the year. As of Jan. 1, everyone will be tied for first place in the club standings for the new year. For those wishing to improve their tournament skills in the new year, here are Bud's Eight Rules of Tournament Fishing.

Rule #1: Go fishing.

This is actually the same as Roland Martin's Rule #1 of bass fishing, which is, "you must have a hook in the water to catch fish." Many people I talk with tell me how much they like to fish but how rarely they get around to going. I used to have a neighbor who only took his boat to the lake every Memorial Day and Independence Day. I still can't understand why anyone would go to the expense and trouble of owning a boat just to use it twice a year. the more often you fish, the better you will become at it. A scheduled tournament is a great excuse to drop everything and go fishing. Do it!.

Rule #2: Always demonstrate good sportsmanship and safe boating.

Keep in mind that, competition or not, you're in this sport for the fun of it. Remember this rule even if you forget the rest.

Rule #3: Be prepared.

The Boy Scout motto definitely has a place in tournament fishing. Being prepared for a tournament means everything from having good fishing line on your reels to having your boat in top running condition. Breakdowns, lost fish, and lost fishing time all take their toll in tournament finished. You'll meet a few club anglers who always seem to be trying to get everything ready after they've arrived at the lake, but most good fishermen start their getting-ready ritual days before the tournament.

Rule #4: Have a plan.

One of the biggest advantages the pros have over weekend anglers is the amount of time they are able to spend on the water, fishing and looking at possible tournament holes. By tournament time, the pro angler knows exactly where and how he wants to fish. We weekend anglers must somehow arrive at that same point without the luxury of days on the water beforehand.

Do your homework. Find out lake levels. Study your map and/or fishing log and write down areas which have productive in the past and ones which fit a seasonal pattern. Lay out your fishing holes in a logical order so you will spend your tournament day fishing and not running up and down the lake. Try to get all the information you can about recently productive lures and areas. Use all of this to formulate a fishing plan before you leave for the lake.

Rule #5: Practice smart.

When you are able to spend time on the water before a tournament, use it wisely. In recent years, almost all serious fishermen have come to accept the fact that bass are greatly affected by fishing pressure. If you spend hours fishing a favorite hole the day before a tournament, you are probably hurting your own tournament fishing. If you must fish a proven tournament hole, do it weeks before the tournament. Conditions and patterns may change, but the fish will still usually be in the area. The day before a tournament is better used for checking water conditions such as clarity, temperature, vegetation growth, etc., scouting new fishing areas located near proven holes, and establishing productive lure types and colors.

Rule #6: Fish smart.

Among the toughest of tournament day decisions are when to change lures or fishing spots. Fishing is still more of an art than a science. Be guided by your own instincts and skills, but keep present conditions in mind. Experienced club members can predict with surprising accuracy how many pounds it will take to win or place in a tournament. Get a consensus before a tournament, and use this information. If predictions are that it will take a good stringer to place, then don't stay with any unproductive lure or water very long. Keep moving and experimenting with baits. On the other hand, if fishing is expected to be tough, then stay with your proven holes and baits. Under these conditions, you are fishing for a just a few bites, and you need to spend your time fishing and not running.

Rule #7: Work hard.

There is a old saying among tournament fishermen: "The harder you work, the luckier you get." Reeling in a big stringer of fish is a possibility for the most casual of anglers, but good fishermen know it only happens often to those who are willing to work hard enough at it.

Rule #8: Keep your confidence with you at all times.

On many occasions, I have caught a last-minute large bass or stringer to salvage a respectable finish in what was otherwise a dismal tournament. This is only possible if you can keep your confidence through all those fishless hours. Among the items which I carry with me to all tournament is a report from a Basmaster Classic, the most prestigious of all bass tournaments. In the three days of fishing this tournament, top pro Mickey Bruce weighed in just two fish weighing two pounds, two ounces. This old clipping serves to remind me that even the best of pros have bad tournaments. It is a challenging sport. Fishing companions from past years will tell you that my parting comment is usually "Next time! We'll tear them up next time!" Hold that thought.

Domenici calls for oil tax incentives

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Sen. Pete Domenici admits that if the United States is to lessen its dependence on imported oil, it must look to energy conservation and production offshore and in the Arctic National Wildlife Preserve.

But he also says a bill he wrote isn't a bad beginning.

"It seems when you have something this economical, it ought to be a good starting point," Domenici, R-N.M., said Monday of his Enhanced Oil Recovery Tax Act of 1989.

His bill would restore incentives for the U.S. oil industry to increase domestic production through greater efficiency.

Petroleum reserves would increase by 25 percent if taxes for enhanced oil recovery projects are reduced or eliminated, Domenici said in his keynote address to the annual meeting of the Interstate Oil Compact Commission.

He said he expects Congress to debate new tax legislation next year, with capital gains taxation likely to top the agenda.

"This is the year to use tax policy to increase domestic production," Domenici said.

He said he introduced a bill earlier this year that would grant tax incentives to producers involved in approved enhanced recovery projects.

Among the incentives are:

— Restoration of the oil depletion allowance to 27.5 percent for production resulting from enhanced oil recovery.

— Granting a 10 percent research and development tax credit for enhanced recovery.

— Changing the alternative minimum tax laws regarding drilling and depletion allowances.

The senator said Energy Department officials estimate the tax reductions, based on a price of $20 per barrel, would cost the federal government about 35 cents a barrel, or $2.4 billion, in lost revenues.

But he said the changes would increase the nation's reserves by 25 percent.

Soviet trade reception planned

From Staff Reports

As the call for new incentives for the oil industry go forth, the Midland and Odessa Chambers of Commerce are working on incentives of their own. The two chambers are hosting a delegation of visiting Russians interested in buying oilfield supplies and services from the Permian Basin.

All service and supply companies interested in the possibility of selling oilfield goods or services to the Soviet Union are invited to attend the buffet and reception at Midland Center at 7 p.m. on December 13 for the purpose of trading business cards.

Those interested in attending the trade reception may make reservations by calling the Midland Chamber of Commerce at 683-3381 or the Odessa Chamber at 332-9111.

Wall blames politics for downfall

The victim of too many arrows and slings

By JOHN KING
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — When his handling of the Lincoln Savings and Loan Association's financial troubles first came under fire 18 months ago, M. Danny Wall responded with typical bravado and optimism.

"I will suffer the slings and arrows, but I will be damned if I will violate my public trust," the nation's top savings and loan regulator said, predicting that time would prove the wisdom of his actions.

But Monday, even the ever-optimistic Wall conceded he had run out of time. He resigned as director of the Office of Thrift Supervision, the agency created as part of the S&L bailout package passed by Congress this year.

Wall, 50, a former top aide to Republican Sen. Jake Garn of Utah, won the job as top cop of the troubled thrift industry 2½ years ago because of his political skills and backing.

It's difficult to come out smelling well when you command a garbage scow...

Kenneth Guenther, executive vice president, Independent Bankers

He blamed his downfall on politics as well, particularly those of the House Banking Committee Chairman Henry Gonzalez, D-Texas.

"The simplistic efforts to find a scapegoat to shoulder the blame for the entire thrift crisis led various critics to join in the hue and cry raised by the House Banking Committee chairman for my departure from office," Wall said in his resignation letter to President Bush.

Many had wondered why M. Danny Wall — the M. stands for Melvin — wanted the job in the first place. It was no easy assignment, regulating 3,100 savings and loans at a time when bad investments had left many institutions broke and more at the brink of insolvency.

"I like a challenge," was the stock response from Wall, a balding man with a neatly trimmed beard and a penchant for three-piece suits.

Those who knew him said Wall sought the job because he wanted to leave the shadows of Capitol Hill for a command of his own.

"The trouble is it's difficult to come out smelling well when you command a garbage scow," said Kenneth Guenther, executive vice president of the Independent Bankers Association of America.

Wall's career in public service dates back 27 years, to Fargo, S.D., where in 1962 he managed two De-

Exxon clean-up bill $1.9 billion

WASHINGTON (AP) — Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner says Exxon spent $1.9 billion cleaning up its Alaskan oil spill.

Skinner, repeating his high praise for Exxon's cleanup of the March 24 spill, characterized the amount as "an unbelievable number."

But Exxon spokesman Perry Smith in Alaska said the company has only claimed "over $1 billion" in spending on the spill.

Smith said Exxon's expenses include "over a billion dollars," including $160 million in claims.

Blacks skeptical about programs

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

City Councilman John Castro got a friendly but skeptical reception at Monday's meeting of the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs.

Attending the meeting to discuss the "Neighborhood Housing Services Program," Castro heard MBCE members express some skepticism about the effectiveness of the program, and their frustration at the lack of attention Midland's east side has been getting.

Castro has received commitment from three local banks for $1.7 million in loans for housing renovations and purchases. He told the group his next step is to approach private and industrial foundations to raise funding for a revolving loan program that will augment the loans supplied by the banks. The city has committed to paving, curbing and guttering streets in the area as well.

The program would provide loans to individuals for housing renovation or purchase, and Castro said the second phase would be using some Community Development Block Grant funds to help a developer get started building inexpensive new homes in the area.

His plans were met with some skepticism by members who said they have seen similar programs before, only to see them fail because loan requirements were too strict for those who needed assistance.

Castro assured members he would be working with the banks to ease standards to help make the program work. He and his fellow City Councilman J.D. Faircloth pointed out that similar programs are being successfully operated in about 100 cities across the country.

Castro also called for residents of the east side to get involved in the program and help form a board that would administrate the loan program, help decide on a target area and approve the loans. He also promised a black or Hispanic director and assistant director would be hired to run the program.

Lexus recalled

Toyota Motor Corp. has recalled every Lexus LS400 luxury automobile sold in the United States so far because of a sticky cruise control mechanism and defective stoplight cover.

The recall announced Monday is the first for Lexus, which went on sale in early September. November sales figures were due out later today, but company officials estimated that about 8,000 cars would be affected by the recall.

No accidents or injuries have resulted from the mechanical problems, and Toyota says the two problems had brought one customer complaint each.

IBM cuts 10,000 jobs, takes $2.3 billion charge

NEW YORK (AP) — International Business Machines Corp. announced today it would cut 10,000 U.S. jobs without layoffs as it copes with slow growth in the U.S. market.

The world's largest computer company said it would set aside $2.3 billion from its pre-tax earnings for the fourth-quarter to cover costs of employee buyouts and restructuring. IBM said it would reduce its staff by limiting hiring and offering incentives to employees to quit or retire early.

The company did not announce any plant closings but indicated they might occur as part of plans still being formulated.

IBM also announced a program to buy back up to $4 billion of its own stock, which has lost more than a third of its value since its 1987 peak.

With the company cost-cutting to improve profitability, IBM's stock rose $2.50 a share to $101.75 at mid-day today on the New York Stock Exchange after a $2.12½ a share rise on Monday, when speculation intensified that the company planned to cut jobs.

The stock's peak price was $175.87½ in August 1987.

IBM expanded dramatically in the early 1980s but has been cutting back since 1985, when it became apparent that the industry's rapid 15 percent annual growth was slowing.

IBM said its growth overseas was strong, but the U.S. business still was growing more slowly than desired.

"The actions we are describing today underscore our ongoing resolve to make IBM the most competitive information processing business in an industry that continues to grow," John F. Akers, the chairman and chief executive, said in a statement.

IBM has a 40-year tradition of no layoffs. In a meeting today with securities analysts, Akers said the company intended to keep that tradition because it helped the company maintain a high-quality, flexible and dedicated workforce.

He added, "It's impossible to guarantee for all time full employment under any and all circumstances."

The company said its $4 billion stock buyback, in combination with a $1 billion buyback authorized in October, if completed would bring total repurchases since mid-1986 to more than $10.5 billion. That amounts to about 15 percent of the shares outstanding at that time — possibly the biggest repurchase program ever undertaken.

The job cuts are intended to reduce the company's U.S. workforce to 206,000 by the end of 1990, a reduction of more than 37,000 from 1985 levels.

The $2.3 billion pre-tax charge against fourth-quarter earnings breaks down as follows:

—$500 million for separation payments to people leaving the company.

—$500 million for accounting changes to speed up the way IBM logs its payment for software and technology investments.

—$1.3 billion for restructuring, including consolidations, capacity reductions and cuts in the valuation of special investments such as share ownership in other companies.

Oil prices turn higher

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil futures prices are recovering some losses suffered Monday.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, January contracts for West Texas Intermediate were trading at $20.28, up 3 cents from Monday's close. The contract Monday lost 5 cents to close at $20.25 a barrel after trading as high as $20.62 during the day.

Cold weather in parts of the nation helped boost heating oil futures prices Monday on the NYMEX.

No. 2 home heating oil for January delivery advanced 0.88 cent to 63.79 cents a gallon. Contracts for delivery through June posted gains of between 0.09 cent and 0.65 cent.

Energy analysts said strength in London's gasoil market spilled over into U.S. markets as low water levels on the Rhine River continued to disrupt shipments. Gasoil is the British equivalent of heating oil.

"It creates logistical problems and gives our market a higher call," said Jack Unger, energy broker with Merrill Lynch Energy Futures.

Icy temperatures in some parts of the country also gave the heating oil market a lift, he said.

Wholesale unleaded gasoline for January delivery closed 0.41 cent higher at 52.52 cents a gallon, while later contracts posted slightly smaller gains.

Dollar posts gains overseas

LONDON (AP) — The dollar rose against all major foreign currencies except the Canadian dollar today in thin European trading, currency dealers said.

Gold prices fell in Europe as much as $6.25 a troy ounce, continuing a sharp decline on profit-taking, bullion dealers said.

Markets were slowing as the year end approaches, with many dealers saying they were unwilling to take positions which could affect their profits or increase losses.

"It's getting very thin," a Frankfurt trader said. "A lot of banks are just stopping. It's getting very boring."

The markets hope the unemployment data will give an indication of what the Federal Reserve's monetary policy will be, traders said.

In Tokyo, the dollar rose 0.20 yen to a closing 143.68 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at a higher rate of 143.70 yen.

In London, the dollar rose slightly against the British pound. It cost $1.5636 to buy one pound, compared with $1.5638 late Monday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $402.35 a troy ounce, down from $406.25 bid late Monday. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $402.60.

Silver fell in London to a bid price of $5.54 a troy ounce from Monday's $5.60.

Stock market climbs 6 points

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market rose Monday, but its advance failed to pack the punch of Friday's impressive rally.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials advanced 5.98 points to 2,753.63, its ninth-highest close ever.

Advancing issues edged out declining ones by about 8 to 7 in nationwide trading of stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange, with 810 issues up, 708 down and 469 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board totaled 150.36 million shares, down from 199.20 million in Friday's session.

Analysts said the market was buoyed mainly by takeover speculation involving several stocks and strength in technology issues. Investors' hopes for lower interest rates, which had catapulted Wall Street higher last Friday and lifted the Dow Jones average 41.38 points, appeared less solid on Monday.

"A lot of focus is on the Federal Reserve," said Hugh Johnson, senior vice president of First Albany Corp. in Albany, N.Y.

The market will have to see Friday's scheduled government report on unemployment in November before regaining confidence that the Fed will ease credit by nudging interest rates lower, he said.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

LIN accepts revises McCaw bid

NEW YORK (AP) — LIN Broadcasting Corp. said its board has recommended to its shareholders a revised $3.38 billion offer from McCaw Cellular Communications Inc. for controlling interest in LIN.

The New York-based cellular telephone, broadcasting and publishing concern took the action Monday after resisting McCaw's overtures since September, when it reached an agreement with BellSouth Corp. on combining cellular interests.

LIN said it was asking BellSouth to terminate their agreement on combining cellular operations, but spokeswoman Carlton Horton in Atlanta said BellSouth was studying the request and did not expect to have any immediate comment.

Supreme Court to rule on clean air guidelines

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court said it will decide whether the federal government's delays in setting clean-air guidelines limit its power to fine polluters.

The justices said Monday they will hear an appeal by General Motors Corp., which faces fines of up to $25,000 a day for violating air-quality standards at a Massachusetts car-assembly plant.

In another business-related case, the court agreed to decide whether U.S. banks with branch offices overseas must pay depositors after foreign governments seize or freeze those accounts.

EPA seeks curbs on EBDC pesticide

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency is calling for curbs on the pesticide EBDC, saying widespread use of the chemical on scores of crops from apples to tomatoes poses an unreasonable cancer risk.

The EPA on Monday proposed eliminating the use of the EBDC family of fungicides on 45 crops, but said its continued use on another 10 food products, including grapes, onions and cranberries, "do not present an unreasonable risk" to consumers.

ACTIVITY HIGHLIGHTS

Strawn strike pumps 16 barrels

From Staff Reports

The reentry of an abandoned well in Tom Green County has yielded a Strawn discovery, southwest of production in the H-J field.

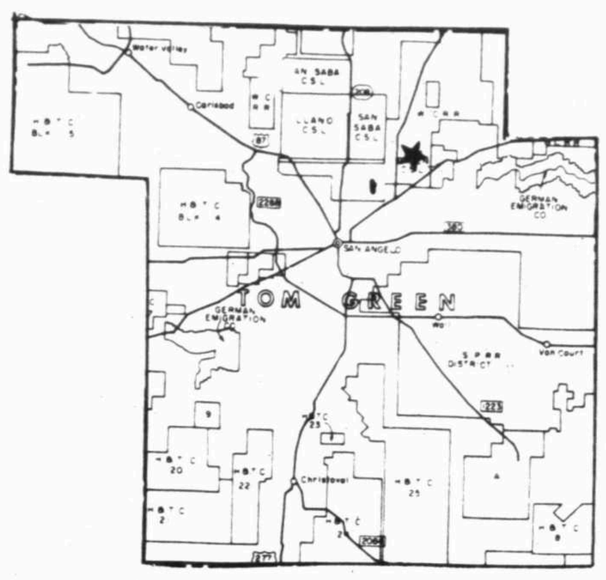

REEMUDA OPERATING CO., Midland, completed the No. 1 Eloise Crosby to pump 16 barrels of 40.4 gravity crude and 15 barrels of water. The well produced from perforations 6,313 to 6,404 ft., which had been acidized with 2,000 gallons of acid and fractured with 62,000 gallons of gel and 137,000 lbs. sand. Gas-oil ratio is 9,375:1.

Originally drilled to total depth of 6,563 ft., the well was plugged back to 6.,478 ft.

The well topped the Palo Pinto at 5,418 ft., Strawn Sand at 6,303, and Strawn Lime at 6,486 ft. on ground elevation of 2,345 ft.

Location is 330 ft. from east and 568.8 ft. from north lines of League 30,Tom Green CSL survey, Abst. 4886.

The well was drilled by Frank Tye Jr. and abandoned in 1958.

Oilpatch officials meet to discuss radioactivity

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — There is a nationwide need to regulate radioactive material that often accumulates in oil field pipe, equipment and pipe yards, but federal agencies aren't acting, say Louisiana officials.

Mike McDaniel, the Department of Environmental Quality's assistant secretary in charge of nuclear waste, met last week with radiation officials from Texas, Oklahoma, Mississippi and Alabama.

"There was unanimous agreement that there is a need to regulate" these materials, according to a DEQ summary of the meeting. "There was also strong sentiment that help at the federal level from EPA was needed, since this is a national problem that will require some consistency in regulation among the states to be effective."

However, it said, neither the federal Environmental Protection Agency nor the Nuclear Regulatory Commission seems to care.

"Since both EPA and NRC have shown little interest in the problem, the state representatives felt it was necessary to proceed on their own to develop at least a preliminary concept for a consistent program," according to the summary.

The representatives of the five states found particularly disturbing the fact that not much is known about sites where the radioactive materials have been deposited and what happens when that land is sold, it said.

Brine leaches radium 226 and radium 228 from deep deposits of thorium and uranium and the radium tends to accumulate in the scale that forms inside oil field pipe and some other equipment.

Home sales down, seeing improvement

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sales of new homes edged down 0.5 percent in October, the sixth monthly decline of the year but a major improvement over the previous month, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said new single-family homes were sold at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 649,000 units in October, after a 10.2 percent plunge in September.

The September decrease was revised downward from a 14 percent fall originally reported last month.

Fixed-rate mortgage interest rates fell to 9.82 percent by the end of October after rising into the double digits in September. Analysts had said the lower rates would lead to an improvement in the housing industry.

The National Association of Realtors reported last week that sales of existing homes remained steady in October at their highest level since last January and NAR chief economist John A. Tuccillo said then that "home financing conditions probably will stay quite favorable in the months ahead."

The housing industry was among the hardest hit when the Federal Reserve pumped up interest rates last year to slow the economy and thus contain inflation. But as inflationary pressures cooled, the Fed has permitted gradual decreases in rates since the beginning of the summer.

The Realtors association reported today that its index measuring the ability of the typical American family to buy an existing home rose in October to its highest level in eight months because of stable rates and a drop in the median home price.

The real estate group said the index rose to 106.1, from 103.5 in September and the highest since it measured 106.7 last February. That means a family with a median income of $33,365 had 106.1 percent of the income needed to buy a median-priced existing home costing $92,100.

The median means that half of the families earn more and half less, or that half the homes sell for more and half for less.

The Commerce Department report today said the median price of a new home was $127,900 in October, up 5.3 percent from $121,500 in September. The average price of a new home was unchanged at $151,900.

New-home sales for the first nine months were down 4.4 percent from the same period in 1988.

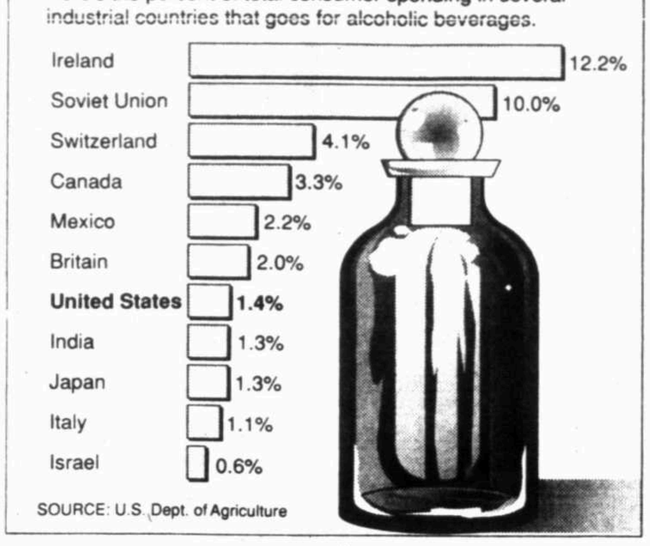

Sales rose 47.8 percent in the Northeast but fell 24.7 percent in the West. The South posted a 5.7 percent increase, while the Midwest recorded a 3.7 percent gain.

The Realtors, meanwhile, said a family in the Northeast earning the median income of $37,329 had only 76.1 percent of the income needed to buy median-priced existing home costing $143,300.

Winter gasoline price down

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A gallon of gasoline cost about a half-cent less at the nation's pumps during the past two weeks due to the traditional fall-winter decrease in driving, according to an industry analyst.

The average service-station price of gasoline, including taxes, was $1.0697 per gallon as of Dec. 1, according to a Trilby Lundberg's bi-weekly survey of 13,000 stations.

The previous retail average was $1.0751 per gallon.

"This continues a downward price trend that has prevailed ever since late May except for two very small upward price moves," Ms. Lundberg said Sunday. She said the decline can be attributed to decreased driving that normally occurs at this time of year. Prices were cut to spur sales.

Factory orders at lowest reported level since July

WASHINGTON (AP) — Orders to U.S. factories for manufactured goods fell 0.2 percent in October to their lowest level since July, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said orders for both durable and nondurable manufactured goods totaled a seasonally adjusted $233.9 billion following a 1 percent decline in September.

The September report was revised downward from the flat level of orders originally reported last month.

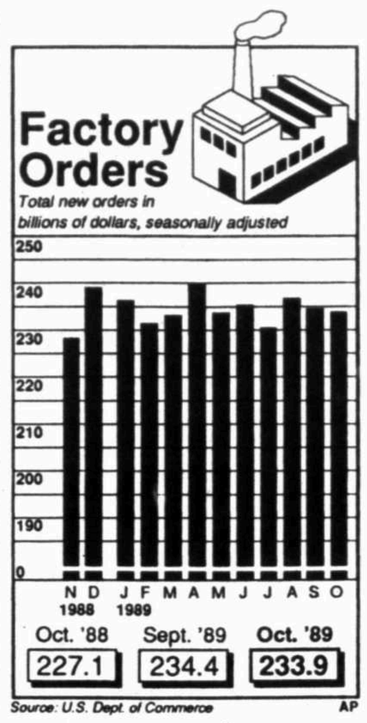

Orders in October were at their lowest level since $230.4 billion were posted in July.

The report was the latest indicator showing the economy slowing as the year draws to an end. The manufacturing sector has been particularly weak, prompting concern of possible layoffs and a rise in the unemployment rate.

As a result, some analysts and government officials have urged the Federal Reserve Board to lower interest rates further. The Fed began raising rates a year ago to slow the economy and thus contain inflation. It has permitted rates to fall gradually since the beginning of the summer.

October orders were 2.5 percent below the record of $239.9 billion set last April.

But large swings in defense orders the last two months had a strong influence on the change in orders, the Commerce Department said. Excluding defense, new orders were up 0.3 percent in October and down 2.2 percent.

Shipments of manufactured goods fell 0.6 percent to $232.2 billion, while inventories rose 0.3 percent to $371.9 billion.

Orders for nondurable goods rose 1.1 percent to $110.3 billion

Oil rigs sought in drug war

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A consortium of five companies is seeking government contracts to enlist two Gulf of Mexico oil rig platforms in the nationwide war on illicit drugs.

The companies are negotiating with the U.S. Navy to convert one rig into a radar station. They hope that will lead to a contract on the second rig.

The converted rigs would become waterborne bases for drug interception activities and serve as a huge buoy and support station for a blimp-like balloon called an Aerostat. The high-flying device will be equipped with radar to detect drug traffickers on the sea and in the air.

The consortium of companies includes the New Orleans-based Tidewater Marine Service, Blue Sea Corp. of Houston, Brown & Root of Houston, HAM Industries of Pascagoula, Miss., and TCOM Ltd. Partnership of Baltimore.

"The project has been blessed in concept," said Richard M. Currence, president of Tidewater Marine.

"They had a land-based system in mind. We've replaced that with an offshore system, at least partially," said R.D. Gaul, president of Blue Sea.

The sea-based radar systems were incorporated into the Department of Defense's program in the spring, Gaul said. In 1988, DOD was designated by former President Ronald Reagan as the lead federal agency in the anti-drug smuggling campaign.

If the business consortium's Gulf contract is approved, Brown & Root, Blue Sea and HAM Industries would design, engineer and convert at least the one rig into an observatory for illicit aircraft and small boats, officials said.

The work would begin at Sabine Pass, the location of the rig, and would be completed at HAM Industries.

The first offshore rig could be in operation as early as summer. The second system could be working six months later.

The federal government is in the process of ringing the southern edge of the United States with a string of overlapping radar stations. They are being spaced 200 to 300 miles apart from San Diego to Puerto Rico to detect drug smuggling from Mexico and Central and South America to the Caribbean.

Before the five companies stepped in with the idea for two sea-based stations, the government had been planning exclusively on land-based radar stations across the southern United States.

Based on his knowledge of previous work by TCOM and Tidewater, Gaul developed the idea of bridging the Gulf with two radar-equipped semi-submersible oil platforms.

Soviets launching 'plastic money'

By STEVE WILSTEIN

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Estonians soon will be saying the equivalent of "Charge it," as the tiny republic begins a venture into plastic money that could lead to widespread use of credit cards in the Soviet Union.

Estonia's deputy prime minister, Viktor Rajevski, outlined a three-step plan Monday that would bring Visa cards to Estonia starting next year, then to the other Baltic republics, Latvia and Lithuania, and finally to other Soviet republics.

"Launching plastic money is like a new philosophy in the Soviet Union," Rajevksi said through an interpreter in an interview during a visit with officials at Visa International headquarters. "Mr. Gorbachev has supported the economic events in Estonia in his speeches several times."

Estonia, the smallest of the Baltic states with a population of 1.6 million, is in the northwestern corner of the Soviet Union near Finland. Its language is similar to Finnish. Rajevski described the republic as a "window to the West."

He said he envisions Estonia as a financial and commercial center in Eastern Europe, with its banks issuing Visa cards for other republics. Estonia already has three free economic zones and was the first Soviet republic to establish the principle of a self-funding economy.

Toby Mitchell, of Visa International in London, said it was the first time Visa had worked with a Soviet government to develop a bank card program.

The first Visa card in the Soviet Union was issued in July 1988 through Intourist, the commercial organization of the Soviet state committee for foreign travel. Only a few thousand cards have since been issued throughout the country.

"It's important for Visa to work with an entire economic unit in the Soviet Union in providing a total regional payment solution," Mitchell said. "It gets us far deeper into the banking system."

Estonia is attractive to Visa, Mitchell said, because it is the most economically developed of the Soviet republics. Only 50 miles from Helsinki, Finland, "Estonia, culturally, is more western than other Soviet states," he said. "It is more likely to develop Western products and practices quickly.

"And it is sufficiently small so that it provides an ideal test-bed for the implementation of national card systems elsewhere," he said. "You can work with a million card program whereas if you'd try any of the larger republics the numbers start getting beyond any easy control."

Estonia has a tradition of testing economic reforms in the Soviet Union, and Mitchell said it will be a long time before the whole Soviet Union adopts sophisticated banking systems.

"The difference in cultures, the difference in economic and social structures between the Central Asian republics and Baltic republics is enormous but we hope that Estonia will provide the model," Mitchell said.

Under the plan, any Estonian with an income, regardless of age or whether he or she is a student or retired, will be issued a Visa card.

The cards will be used primarily as debit or payment cards, as they are throughout most of Europe, rather than as credit cards, as they are in the United States. Money will be debited from cardholder accounts as soon as purchases are made, but if the accounts are overdrawn credit will be granted, with interest, for three months.

General Mills ponders Europe

N.Y. Times News Service

CHICAGO — If General Mills gets its way, the continental breakfast will soon include a bowl of Cheerios.

General Mills Inc. and Nestle S.A. said Thursday that they were creating a company to sell breakfast cereal in Europe.

The European cereal market is expected to quadruple to $6.5 billion in annual sales by the year 2000, from its current level of $1.6 billion, according to a General Mills spokesman.

The American market is now estimated at $6.5 billion.

Analysts said the venture would give the Minneapolis-based General Mills the added muscle it needed to compete effectively in Europe with the Kellogg Co., which has a large presence there.

The maker of Wheaties and Total, besides Cheerios, General Mills is the nation's No. 2 cereal maker after Kellogg, whose products include Kellogg's Corn Flakes, Rice Krispies and Common Sense Oat Bran.

"It would have been very difficult for General Mills to make any inroads on its own," said Stephen M. Carnes, an analyst with Piper, Jaffray & Hopwood Inc., also in Minneapolis.

"The real key in the food business these days is distribution."

Nestle's marketing expertise and worldwide distribution system, combined with General Mills' cereals, are "a perfect marriage," he said.

Outside of Britain and Ireland, the European appetite for cereal pales compared with demand in the United States.

Consuming 15.4 pounds of cereal per person a year, Britain leads the world in individual cereal consumption.

The United States is fourth, with consumption of nearly 10 pounds per person a year. In France, however, the consumption per person is slightly more than a pound a year.

In Germany, it is two pounds per individual a year.

"Breakfast in Europe is still the most un-American meal," said George Rosenbaum, the president of Leo J. Shapiro & Associates, a market research firm in Chicago.

"The Americanization of breakfast represents tremendous potential."

Few details of the General Mills-Nestle venture, called Cereal Partners Worldwide, were yet available.

Even the location of the new company's European headquarters has not been determined.

The announcement Thursday marked the signing of a letter of intent between the companies.

A definitive agreement is expected to be reached by January.

Charles W. Gaillard, a General Mills senior vice president, was named the new company's chief executive.

He served as the general manager of the company's breakfast cereal division from 1979 to 1988.

Financial details were also unavailable.

Carnes of Piper, Jaffray estimated that General Mills' "investment will be more in the tens of millions, not in the hundreds of millions."

R.C. Shulstad, a spokesman for General Mills, described the venture as "a major strategic development for the company," but declined to discuss its financial effect on General Mills.

He did say that the significant investment the company was making would result in some dilution of earnings for General Mills over several years.

"It is not going to have a major impact, but it will have some impact," Shulstad said.

He added that he expected the venture would begin adding to General Mills' earnings by the mid-1990s.

Carnes said he did not expect the stock dilution to amount to more than a few cents a share.

The venture is limited to breakfast cereal, and the companies said they had a standstill agreement not to seek control of each other.

Nestle has acquired some United States food companies in the past," Shulstad said. "That is not the intent here."

SKEPTICS—

Some members expressed their unhappiness over the lack of construction on the east side and the fact that city officials have planned for the city's growth to be west. As MBCE vice president James Fuller put it, "If growth can be planned to go west, it can be planned to go east."

Robbyne Fuller, MBCE president, pointed out that if the east side is to develop economically, new homes, businesses and schools are needed in the area.

For his part, Castro promised to set up a meeting with city officials to discuss long-range planning and to work to steer growth toward the east as well as the west.

"You have four councilmen who are committed to this program, and who will listen to your concerns and try to address them," he said.

He urged MBCE members to get involved in the program and involve other members of the community, because that is the only way to insure revitalization of the east side.

WALL—

partment of Housing and Urban Development projects. He went on to a HUD-related post in Salt Lake City, where he met Garn, soon to be the city's mayor.

Garn came to the Senate in 1975. Wall came with him and rose to be his top aide. When Republicans took control of the Senate in 1981, Garn became Banking Committee chairman; Wall its staff director. In 1982, they pushed through Congress legislation deregulating savings institutions.

When the Democrats regained control of the Senate after the 1986 elections, Wall began lobbying to replace Edwin Gray as head of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the forerunner of the Office of Thrift Supervision.

The White House was looking for someone with the political skills to deal with Congress as evidence of massive financial problems in the savings and loan industry grew.

Wall, with Garn's backing, got the nomination and won easy bipartisan support.

Initial reaction was favorable; Wall won plaudits for being accessible, a style symbolized by his decision to leave open the heavy glass door to his office.

"If somebody wants to talk to me, I'm going to listen to them," he said recently. "You can't close your door to your constituents."

But the honeymoon was short.

As the industry's problems mounted, time and time again Wall was forced to increase his estimate of the scope of the debacle, damaging his credibility in Congress.

Critics said Wall's strengths on Capitol Hill, where compromise is the norm, were weaknesses at the bank board.

"You have to be a really tough person and you have to be willing to sit down with a guy eyeball to eyeball and say, 'I'm going to take your business away from you,'" said Bert Ely, a banking analyst who repeatedly has criticized Wall. "I don't think Danny had that in him."

Still others said his ties to the Senate left him vulnerable to political pressure, particularly in the case of Lincoln, whose owner, Charles Keating, enlisted a handful of senators to help him lobby regulators.

Wall denied those allegations to the end, telling Bush that "neither political influence nor Lincoln's Charles Keating affected my decision on Lincoln. Nor for that matter have I ever made decisions for political reasons."

But he said the congressional scrutiny of his actions was distracting his staff from their mission — "revitalizing the thrift industry."

As a child, M. Danny Wall said he was raised not to run from a fight. But he decided it was time to walk away, telling Bush:

"I am not willing to stand and fight at the expense of the goals of your administration. ... I am not going to be a party to such a handicap."

GENERAL NEWS

Some flee, other trapped by fighting in Philippines

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Hundreds of foreigners fled intense fighting between rebel and loyalist troops in a financial district today, but thousands more were trapped for a fourth night when the battle halted evacuation efforts.

A rebel source said the insurgents, who are seeking to oust President Corazon Aquino, might refuse to allow all the trapped Americans to leave.

The source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the insurgents would release all Asian and European tourists but "the intention is not to release Americans" because of U.S. support for Mrs. Aquino.

Fighting spilled over into exclusive neighborhoods near where the embassadors of the United States, China and the Soviet Union live. U.S. officials said Ambassador Nicholas Platt would not be spending the night in his residence.

On Friday, the first day of the coup attempt, U.S. F-4 Phantom fighter jets flew air cover in support of pro-government forces staging their sixth attempt to oust Mrs. Aquino since she was swept to power in 1986.

More than 74 people have been killed and more than 500 wounded since rebels launched the bloodiest attempt yet to topple Mrs. Aquino's administration. Rebels say the elected government has failed to deal effectively with the country's Communist insurgency, corruption, incompetence and economic problems.

At least two people were killed and 15 wounded in Tuesday fighting, one of the dead a 6-year-old girl killed when a 60mm mortar fired by the rebels slammed into a squatter settlement near the Makati Medical Center.

In addition to the 400 or so rebels entrenched in the Makati financial district, a similar number still occupied Mactan Air Base in Cebu, 350 miles south of Manila, despite an ultimatum to leave the garrison by Tuesday.

In addition to the 400 or so rebels entrenched in the Makati financial district, a similar number still occupied Mactan Air Base in Cebu, 350 miles south of Manila, despite an ultimatum to leave the garrison by today.

Tourism officials today prepared about 20 buses to go into Makati to evacuate tourists to the airport, but heavyfighting forced them to halt the convoy.

After hours of negotiations with the rebels — members of the elite 1st Scout Ranger Regiment, government negotiators said the evacuation would be delayed for at least a day.

"They've decided to postpone it for tomorrow because it's nightfall and we don't want the tourists to be mistaken for soldiers," said Rafael Alunan, undersecretary of tourism.

The insurgents on Saturday moved into the district that is home to many foreign diplomats and journalists, taking control of about 22 buildings.

The U.S. Embassy and others urged their nationals to flee Makati, even if they lived in areas not yet touched by the fighting.

Honecker placed under house arrest

EAST BERLIN (AP) — Former Communist Party chief Erich Honecker and other members of his ousted leadership have been put under house arrest at their luxury residential compound, the official news agency ADN said today.

Also, East Germany's chief prosecutor resigned after mounting criticism he could not handle investigations into abuses of power by ousted Communist leaders. Citizens began to keep vigil at police stations.

Honecker lost his job in a major power reshuffle on Oct. 18 and on Sunday he was ousted from the party he had led for 18 years. He was replaced as party leader by Egon Krenz, who resigned under pressure on Sunday.

"The former general-secretary and president Erich Honecker is among those who are not allowed to leave their houses in the elegant compound," ADN reported. Wandlitz, near Berlin, has 23 houses once lived in by Politburo members and their families.

Honecker and his inner circle are under investigation for suspected corruption; three former Politburo members are already in prison pending investigation. It was not immediately clear when he was arrested.

Prosecutors sealed off secret police offices in East Berlin where large sums of money and files had apparently been packaged for transport, ADN said. They acted on a tip from citizens keeping watch outside.

Growing public outrage has led to citizens to try to storm at least one public building, while others have stood guard to make sure that no potential criminal evidence is smuggled away from government offices.

ADN gave no reason for prosecutor Guenter Wendland's resignation.

Wendland was a holdover from Honecker's hard-line government and had been leading a probe of police accused of beating and mistreating pro-democracy protesters following massive rallies in early October.

A group of lawyers and legal experts had demanded his resignation, saying he was too close to the now-disgraced former power structure to handle the probes.

The 25-member interim committee guiding East Germany's Communist Party has appealed to angry citizens for calm to avoid "anarchy and chaos."

In Bonn, the federal government announced that Rudolf Seiters, the top aide to Chancellor Helmut Kohl, would travel to East Berlin late today for talks with Premier Hans Modrow.

The 61-year-old premier has emerged as the nation's top political figure since the Communist Party's leadership quit on Sunday.

Seiters was scheduled to see whether Kohl should go forward with his planned visit to East Germany that had been expected by the end of the year.

West Germany has called for reunification of the countries, a proposal rejected by the Communists and some opposition activists. But late Monday, about 200,000 people rallied in Leipzig, calling for reunification and shouting "Germany, United Fatherland."

The move against the secret police was the latest in a series of searches and seizures.

ADN said investigators discovered bundles of secret police files in a "sensitive area," packed for transport.

Pastora claims Nicaraguan groups didn't want him back

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Eden Pastora, a former Sandinista hero who switched sides and fought with the Contras, said Monday that opposition groups in Nicaragua did not want him to return from exile.

Pastora, also know as Commander Zero, is a former Sandinista vice minister of defense who fought with the Contras from 1983-86 and then retired to private life. He returned Sunday to support the Social Christian Party.

Repeating what he said at a rally immediately after his arrival, Pastora called the Social Christians an alternative to the ruling Sandinista National Liberation Front and the U.S.-backed National Opposition Union, known as UNO, in the Feb. 25 national elections.

The Social Christian Party and its presidential candidate Erick Ramirez persuaded Pastora to return to Nicaragua and support them. Few believe Pastora can add many more followers to the Social Christians.

The controversy surrounding Commander Zero already has attracted the kind of news media attention the Social Christians, a minority party, had sought unsuccessfully. About 25 journalists crowded a small conference room Monday morning at party headquarters, but ignored Ramirez, who sat next to Pastora.

Many questions revolved around Pastora's past.

Pastora said that he had spoken with some UNO members. "They left me with the impression that they did not want me to return to Nicaragua."

"Sectors of the CIA in alliance with the Contras" were responsible for the bombing at his southern Nicaragua jungle hideout in 1984, where four journalists were killed, he said. Pastora alleged that the attempt was made "because I never wanted to accept anti-popular postures" adopted by the Contras. He did not elaborate.

Pastora said he intends to settle in Nicaragua if he can continue the fishing business he runs in neighboring Costa Rica.

Commander Zero, as he is still known, gained world attention Aug. 20, 1978, when he led 20 Sandinista rebels in a takeover of the National Palace.

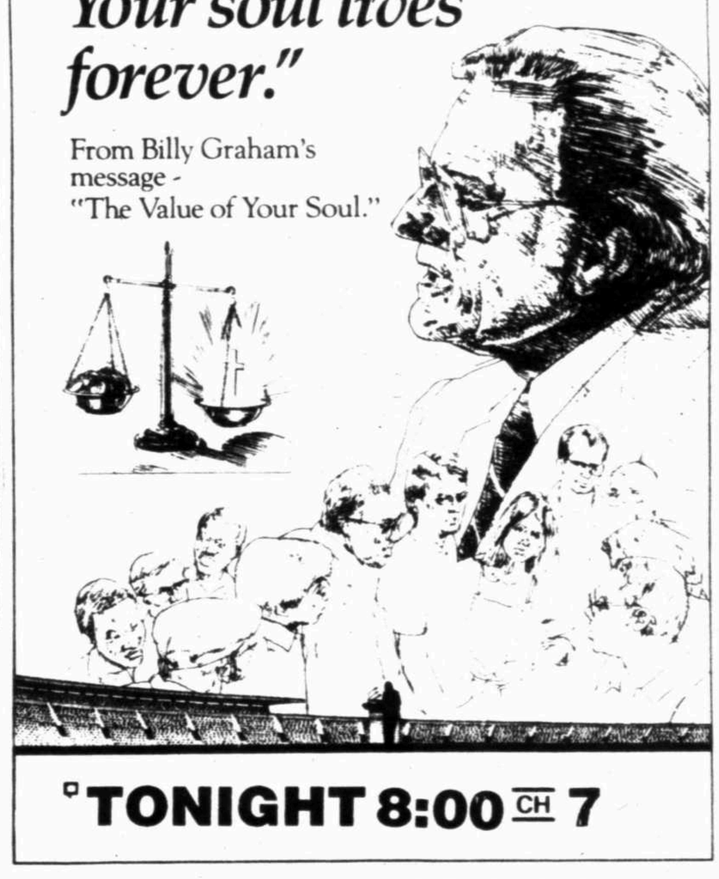

The rebels held dozens of legislators hostage and succeeded in freeing from prison 50 Sandinista leaders, among them Daniel Ortega and Tomas Borge, who are now president and interior minister.

Eleven months later, the Sandinista came to power in a popular revolt that forced President Anastasio Somoza to flee.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: A new field promises you great success if you are willing to work longer hours. Financial backing can be found for a family business. Let romance develop at its own pace. You could be headed down the aisle by June! Family relations are more harmonious than in the past. Do not let social activities interfere with work. Put temptation aside and a promotion is likely in September or October. Be diligent.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Tom Hulce, jazz great Dave Brubeck, photographer Alfred Eisenstaedt, lyricist Ira Gershwin.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You are a doer and good at getting other people to work hard for your causes. Go ahead and accept a loan from a well-off family member. Athletic activities are favored today.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Work at a swift pace today. New leadership opportunities come into view. You get a chance to take over for someone who is unable to handle a special assignment. Romance is pleasing.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Certain financial goals may be unrealistic. Talk things over with loved ones. Something that looks like a bargain could be a gyp. You shine at a company meeting. Be prepared to move up!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Versatility is the key to greater success at work. If you want to be a winner, keep your nose to the grindstone. A contest of wills could put your job in jeopardy; back off.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A challenge brings out your creativity. Talk openly about a personnel problem that is affecting your work. A career move proves lucky. Follow your intuition where travel and romance are concerned.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Although get-rich-quick schemes will not work, a hobby may have commercial potential. Check it out. Do not push for a commitment if your mate is hesitant. Present a child with attractive alternatives.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Show your independence today and good things will happen. A coveted invitation is in the mail. You enjoy new peace of mind after reaching an understanding with a neighbor. Romance blossoms, too.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Show a little more vigor but avoid acting pushy. Difficulties at home could get you down. Take immediate steps to correct a troubling situation. Admit past mistakes and vow to do better.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A happy start can lead to great things if you show delicacy. There may be upsetting forces to reckon with. Before closing any kind of financial deal, consult the family. Dine out tonight.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): If family relationships have been seriously shaken, do everything you can to shore them up. A practical budget is a necessity. Remain wary of get-rich-quick schemes. A new pet brings great joy.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Household problems could delay your arrival at work or school. A new admirer boosts your ego. You cannot afford to make any assumptions regarding financial responsibility. A friend has great influence.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): An amazing event gives you new appreciation for your loved ones. Go slow in introducing changes at work or home. Patience will pay big dividends. Do not rush your romantic partner.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A5 ♡Q10762 ◇Void ♣AKQ972
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	1 ◇	1 ♡	2 ◇

What do you bid now?
A.—All you are interested in is partner's trump holding. If he has both the ace and king, you should be laydown for a grand slam; if you are missing one, a small slam is enough. Bid five no trump, the Grand Slam Force. This commands partner to bid seven hearts with two of the top three trump honors. If he has none, you are too high, but perhaps partner has six hearts and the ace and king will crash together.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠Q76 ♡9 ◇AQ10962 ♣AQ5
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	3 ♡

What do you bid now?
A.—East's preemptive jump has jammed the bidding. If you elect to rebid your diamonds, you are running two risks: First, you are bypassing three no trump; secondly, you might lose a spade contract. While we realize that partner might have only a poor four-card suit for his response, our choice would, nevertheless, be three spades.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠Q9843 ♡85 ◇QJ63 ♣73
Partner opens the bidding with a demand bid of two spades. What do you respond?
A.—There's a textbook bid to describe this hand exactly—a jump to four spades. That shows good trump support while denying a first or second-round control in any side suit.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠QJ63 ♡875 ◇J652 ♣73
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
2 ♣	2 ♠	?

What action do you take?
A.—Again, this is a textbook situation. Double. After partner's demand bid, the double announces you have some strength in the overcaller's suit but little or nothing elsewhere. Partner should be perfectly placed to decide what to do.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South with 60 on score you hold:
♠KJ6 ♡Q109 ◇AJ104 ♣QJ9
What is your opening bid?
A.—If you open one diamond, you could run into all sorts of problems later in the auction. We would opt for one no trump, because of the balanced nature of our hand, the soft values and good intermediates. With a 60 partial, your no trump range stretches to something like 14-20, and partner must allow for that.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South with 60 on score you hold:
♠A1063 ♡K76 ◇K85 ♣K85
Partner opens the bidding with one no trump. What action do you take?
A.—This is a corollary to the previous question. Since partner's no trump might be stronger than usual, it behooves you to raise to two no trump just in case he's on the heavy side for his bid.

$20 million Walesa biography film planned, studio announces

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — The life of Polish union activist Lech Walesa will be documented in a $20 million Warner Bros. movie, the studio announced Monday.

The authorized biography of the Nobel Peace Prize-winning Solidarity leader will be produced by James W. Brubaker and Thom Mount beginning in 1990, Warners and the Mount Co. said in a joint release.

Walesa

Mount acquired the rights to Walesa's story nine months ago from a group that included director Stanley Kramer.

Because of Eastern European reforms, the film will be shot in Poland instead of West Germany as originally planned, according to the Hollywood Reporter.

The Reporter also said Hollywood's hottest producers, Columbia Pictures co-chairmen Jon Peters and Peter Guber, had hoped to make the picture.

AMARILLO (AP) — Thomas H. Thompson, a Pulitzer Prize-winning newspaper editor and writer, died Monday. He was 80.

Thompson, a native of Amarillo who spent most of his life here, joined the Amarillo newspapers before World War II. After a stint as a lieutenant commander in the Navy, he returned to Amarillo in 1946 and took over the newly created job of business editor.

In 1954, Thompson became editor of the Globe-Times and began writing his popular "Turnstile" column.

His efforts to follow up on reports of official misconduct by officials in Randall and Potter counties led to an official investigation by a committee of the Texas Legislature and news coverage that won a Pulitzer Prize for public service for the Globe-Times in 1961.

Less than a year after winning the Pulitzer and while he was still picking up other honors, including the Texas Headliners' Sweepstakes Award and the Sigma Delta Chi award to the Texas Newsman of the Year, Thompson directed coverage of massive frauds in the operation of the Billie Sol Estes agribusiness empire.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor James Woods and his wife, Sarah Marie Owen, have separated after four months of marriage, citing irreconcilable differences.

Documents filed in Superior Court by Woods' lawyer Dennis Wasser said the couple separated Nov. 6 and all property had been divided. Woods initiated the filing for legal separation.

Woods, 42, and Miss Owen, 26, have no children.

Woods won television Emmy Awards in 1987 for his portrayal of the mentally ill brother of James Garner in "Promise" and in 1989 for the title character in "My Name Is Bill W." Miss Owen is a horse trainer.

Woods

It was Woods' second marriage and the first for Owen.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Randy Quaid, says he was leary about reprising his role as Chevy Chase's chiseling country cousin in the movie "Christmas Vacation."

The cousin, Eddie, first turned up in the original "National Lampoon's Vacation" in 1983.

Quaid has balanced comic roles with a serious acting career that included an Oscar nomination for his kleptomaniac sailor in the 1973 film "The Last Detail."

"I love playing Eddie. But, I didn't want to reprise the role because I want to get away from playing those kinds of characters," Quaid said in a recent interview.

"But, I read the script, and it was just so funny; I couldn't wait to say some of the lines," he said.

NEW YORK (AP) — Rather than inspiring creativity, drugs more often hamper musicians, blues guitarist Stevie Ray Vaughan and other artists say in the December issue of Musician magazine.

"The obsession with the quick fix becomes not just a crutch, but everything to us," said Vaughan, who recently kicked a long-term drug habit. "And then what really matters gets pushed out the window."

The Red Hot Chili Peppers' latest album, "Mother's Milk," includes an anti-drug anthem inspired by the recent death of the band's guitarist, Hillel Slovak, from a heroin overdose. "Losing your best friend at the age of 26 is a mind- and soul-blower," said Anthony Kiedis, the funk band's lead singer.

Jerry Garcia of the Grateful Dead recently gave up an eight-year heroin habit, but says, "It's tough for me to adopt a totally anti-drug stance. ... (Heroin is) the perfect comfort drug. I understand perfectly why people use it. It would be a nice old-age drug. But it's definitely wrapped up in itself; it doesn't let you go anywhere."

• • •

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Three Rolling Stones concerts this month will boost business during a usually slow time, Atlantic City officials predict.

"It will help fill a slight void between the wind-up of the conventions and the holiday season," said John Fox of the Atlantic City Convention & Visitors Bureau.

The Stones have performances scheduled for Dec. 17, 19 and 20.

The first of 19 forklifts to set up the massive stage needed for the venerable rock 'n' rollers' "Steel Wheels" concert began arriving Monday, said Dave Coskey, a spokesman for Trump Plaza Hotel and Casino. Billionaire developer Donald Trump is cosponsoring the shows, which are the last of the Stones tour.

• • •

AUSTIN (AP) — Officials of an anti-drug program are defending it against complaints by Alice Sessions, wife of FBI Director William Sessions, who resigned as head of the organization.

Ms. Sessions said the "Join the Move" project used the FBI chief's name to court donations and "I just couldn't be associated with that."

One of those who got a sales call was the Sessions' son, who lives in Texas, she told the Austin American-Statesman.

Ms. Sessions also expressed concern over the group's fund-raising tactics, which involved selling spices, jellies and sauces.

Officials of the program, sponsored by the Austin-based Texas Department of Public Safety Officers' Association (DPSOA), said there was no wrongdoing.

DPSOA Executive Director Lane Denton also said spending was closely monitored and that callers were instructed not to mention the FBI.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Prague students join sit-ins today

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — Students pressed on with sit-ins today after at least 200,000 people rallied across the country, shouting their disgust at the announcement of a coalition government still dominated by Communists.

"They must go!" protesters in Prague chanted Monday in a roaring condemnation of the Communist leadership. "They lied to us again!"

The euphoria of a week ago, when the popular movement to end orthodox Communist rule brought down the old hard-line leadership, appeared to have been replaced by anger that the Communists were reneging on promises of reform.

Opposition leaders threatened to call a general strike on Monday if Communist Premier Ladislav Adamec does not form a new government by Sunday.

The Civic Forum, under public pressure moving away from its previously stated role as strictly an opposition coalition, said Monday that it would propose its own candidates for the government.

Escapees, deaths linked

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Three suspected right-wing terrorists who escaped custody in Namibia had been linked to South African-based death squads believed responsible for assassinating two white activists, police said today.

The three men — one the leader of the Johannesburg branch of a neo-Nazi paramilitary group — overpowered two police guards and escaped in a waiting car with two accomplices Monday near Windhoek, Namibia's territorial capital.

One of the policemen was seriously wounded by a shot from his own revolver, which was seized.

The escapees, two South Africans and a West German, had been charged with murdering a black security guard in a hand grenade attack on a United Nations office in northern Namibia in August.

PARM wins elections

REYNOSA, Mexico (AP) — Candidates with the opposition Authentic Party of the Mexican Revolution, or PARM, have won the mayoral elections in the border cities of Reynosa and Matamoros.

Results of the races were announced over the weekend by the Tamaulipas State Electoral Committee in Ciudad Victoria, capital of the northeastern state.

Voters in 43 municipalities in Tamaulipas went to the polls on Nov. 26.

PARM candidate Ramon Perez Garcia was declared winner in Reynosa, a city of about 500,000 people across the Rio Grande from Hidalgo, Texas. The official tally was 18,113 votes for Perez and 15,468 for Cesar Humberto Isassi Cantu with the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI.

Extradition bid likely

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Scottish investigators are expected to ask Sweden to extradite a Palestinian suspected of complicity in the bombing of Pan Am Flight 103, a newspaper reported today.

A court in Uppsala on Monday said it had approved the seizure of evidence from Mohammed Abu Talb's home last week because he was a suspect in a murder case in Scotland.

A police spokesman in Lockerbie, Scotland, refused to comment on the court's decision, and said only that "our inquiries are continuing in Sweden and elsewhere."

The bombing over the Scottish town on Dec. 21, 1988, killed all 259 people abourt the jumbo jet and 11 on the ground.

Relatives of British victims of the bombing said the development could be the most significant action yet in the inquiry.

Soviets to move troops

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union has indicated it is ready to pull out some of the estimated 80,000 troops it has kept in Czechoslovakia since Soviet tanks spearheaded a 1968 invasion that crushed "Prague Spring" reforms.

The announcement by Tass came on the same day the Soviet Union and four other Warsaw Pact allies that took part in the invasion jointly denounced it.

The official Soviet news agency said Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze met Monday with Foreign Minister Jaromir Johanes of Czechoslovakia to discuss deployment of Soviet troops in the East bloc country.

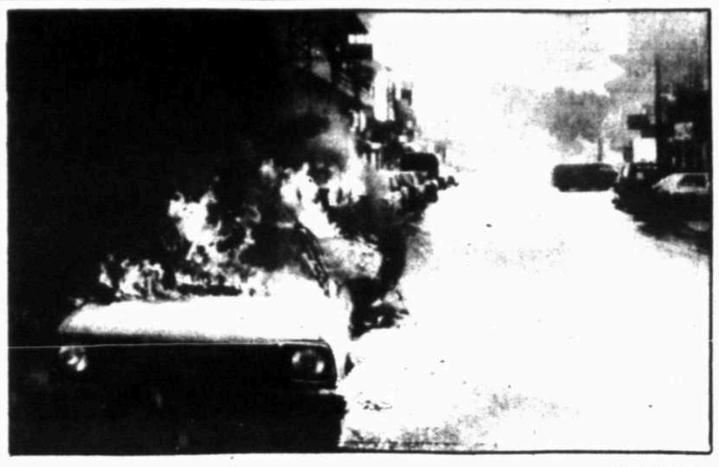

"It was decided to begin appropriate Soviet-Czechoslovak consultations with the understanding that this issue should be tackled in accordance with the ongoing European disarmament process," Tass said.

Oil leakage blocked

HERZLIYA, Israel (AP) — Divers managed Monday to block most leaks in an oil tanker that sank after developing engine troubles and officials hoped to refloat the vessel before its cargo causes an ecological disaster.

Up to 60 tons of the ship's 660 tons of heavy oil have polluted the waters off this Mediterranean resort since the Israeli-owned Eyal went down Thursday after it stalled because of engine problems and was swamped by high seas.

The 150-foot-long tanker, used for refueling other vessels, has been resting on its stern with just the tip of the bow above the surface. It is 600 yards offshore.

Israeli warplanes hit Sidon base manned by Abu Nidal guerrillas

SIDON, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli warplanes today blasted a base manned by Palestinian guerrillas of terrorist mastermind Abu Nidal near this southern port city.

Police said a casualty report was not immediately available.

A police spokesman said four fighters struck the base in the Majdalioun valley, east of Sidon, shortly before noon.

The spokesman, who cannot be named in line with regulations, said the jets fired eight rockets at the base belonging to Abu Nidal's Fatah-Revolutionary Council guerrilla group and flew west over the Mediterranean.

"It was a swift attack. It only lasted a few minutes," the spokesman said. Guerrilla defenders "hardly managed to open fire from anti-aircraft guns. No hits were observed," he added.
