Hoechst Celanese officials visit Pampa, plant facilities

Over 100 local and state officials from various elected and appointed positions were on hand Monday evening at the Pampa Area Chamber of Commerce to honor executives of Hoechst Celanese Corp. from the United States and Europe.

On hand for the reception was Prof. Dr. Wolfgang Hilgar, chairman of Hoechst AG, considered one of the largest chemical companies in the world.

Hilgar; Juergen Dormann, manager of North American operations, and Dr. Ernest Drew, president and CEO of Hoechst Celanese Corp., were the state and local economy. During his remarks to the crowd, Hilgar commended the city of Pampa for its resiliency in the face of the Celanese plant explosion in 1987.

"At this time I wish to extend my personal condolences to the families who lost loved ones, to this community and employees and their families for the loss of friends, co-workers and neighbors and for the massive disruption in your lives. Nothing can replace such loss," Hilgar said.

He termed the explosion and subsequent rebuild of the plant "a test of your quality culture."

"We saw immediate positive action by management.

takes at least two years. They commended officials and employees of Fluor Daniel, the general contractor for the rebuild, on their speed and the quality of their work.

"The teamwork and cooperation which allowed this great accomplishment will serve as an example for all of us. (The new plant) is a testimony to the commitment of Pampa management and employees, to the Hoechst Celanese leadership and the outstanding support of the citizens of Pampa," Hilgar said.

'(The new plant) is a testimony to the commitment...'

Today Hilgar and other Hoechst AG officials toured the rebuilt plant this morning and were scheduled to meet with various local company officials.

Among those traveling with the Hoechst AG group are Dr. Klaus Warning, director of central administration, Germany; Harry Bartley, president of Hoechst Celanese, Dallas; and Tom Kennedy, executive vice president of the chemical group.

The value of Hoechst Celanese's assets in the United States is estimated at $6 billion. Hoechst has annual worldwide sales of about $25 billion and employs around 180,000 people, according to company officials.

Hoechst Celanese met by state officials, including Secretary of State Jack Rains and Rep. Warren Chisum.

Also on hand were Pampa city commissioners, school board trustees, Gray County commissioners and chamber of commerce Gold Coats.

Hilgar was presented a key to the city of Pampa as well as several tokens of appreciation from city and state leaders.

Rains presented Hilgar with a certificate from Gov. Bill Clements recognizing the achievements and contributions of Hoechst Celanese to

This includes the plant management here in Pampa, your group management in Dallas and Hoechst Celanese corporate headquarters. You were making decisions and taking actions only hours after the explosion," Hilgar said.

He said a citywide rally in honor of Celanese and its employees, organized by the Pampa Independent School District, was "not only supportive, but very touching and heartwarming."

Trial of Oliver North gets under way today

By PETE YOST
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The trial of fired White House aide Oliver L. North opened today with efforts to select a jury that has not been exposed substantially to the massive publicity surrounding the Iran-Contra affair.

U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell issued a questionnaire to 54 prospective jurors asking them, "Have you read or seen or heard anything about this case before coming to this court."

North, dressed in a dark suit, sat at the defense table as Gesell addressed the prospective jurors. Then they filed out of the courtroom to fill out the questionnaires.

North's trial on charges of lying to Congress, shredding evidence and conspiring to commit tax fraud "arises following a period of fairly intense publicity on television, newspapers, magazines" which will continue, Gesell told the jurors.

The questionnaire each of the jurors was told to fill out carries a written warning not to read or listen to anything about North. The questionnaire also admonishes prospective jurors not to discuss the case with anyone.

The questionnaire also asks whether the prospective juror knows or has any connection with any one of 195 people whose names have come up in the Iran-Contra case, including former President Reagan and President Bush.

Those who spent much time viewing the nationally televised hearings into the Iran-Contra affair likely will be dismissed from the pool.

Gesell wants to find 50 people out of a pool of 300 who have not been exposed to the congressional testimony of North or other witnesses granted limited immunity from prosecution in exchange for telling their stories to Congress.

Jury convicts former lawyer of manslaughter, not murder

By SAMUEL MAULL
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Joel Steinberg was convicted of manslaughter but not murder in his adoptive daughter's death after jurors rejected testimony by his battered live-in companion that he beat the girl and left her comatose on their bathroom floor.

Eight days of heated deliberations ended Monday when the jury reached the compromise verdict in the case that refocused national attention on domestic violence.

By acquitting Steinberg of second-degree murder, the jurors decided that the disbarred lawyer had not shown "depraved indifference to human life" when he struck his illegally adopted 6-year-old daughter, Lisa, in a rage in November 1987.

"It's a sad day for the kids who are being abused in this country," said Dr. Vincent Fontana, chairman of the Mayor's Task Force on Child Abuse, who believed Steinberg was guilty of murder.

"The child protective system failed (Lisa), the school system failed her, and now the judicial system has failed her."

District Attorney Robert

Morgenthau promised to seek the maximum 8 1/3-to-25-year prison sentence for the first-degree manslaughter conviction, which required the jury to find that Steinberg intended to cause Lisa serious harm. Steinberg, 47, faces sentencing March 8.

"Steinberg has shown himself to fully deserve that sentence," Morgenthau said, adding: The case "highlighted the dreadful problems that beset our city — child abuse, drug abuse and family violence. All of us have a responsibility to work to ensure that similar tragedies do not recur."

Steinberg was stoic as the verdict was announced, ending a three-month trial in a case that spun a web of drugs and domestic violence from behind the facade of a quiet Greenwich Village building.

"He did not say anything," said Steinberg's attorney, Ira London. "He did not do anything."

"We do not consider this (verdict) a win for Joel or a triumph for Lisa," said London.

Michele Lauders, Lisa's 27-year-old biological mother, fled the courtroom in tears and would not speak to reporters after the verdict.

Just before the announcement, she said, "The only verdict that would be justice for Lisa is murder."

She had been sitting next to Graceann Smigel, the grandmother of a then-16-month-old boy who was found in Steinberg's apartment, tethered to a crib and drinking spoiled milk, when police and paramedics removed Lisa's comatose body on the morning of Nov. 2, 1987.

Satanism has a long history but with only shadowy details

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third in a six-day series of articles on the growing presence of alleged satanic cults in Pampa and surrounding areas. Parents should be aware that some of the details and comments in the series may be fairly graphic concerning practices and rituals described by participants in the satanic cult activities.

As millions of people are beginning to turn their attention to an apparent rise in the popularity of devil worship in the United States, they are asking questions about the roots of this activity.

Ten years ago, few would have ever imagined that young people in conservative areas like West Texas would be attracted to something so contrary to the Christian roots and conservative politics of the region.

Yet, satanists in Amarillo recently told KFDD television they had an estimated 600 members in loosely knit covens around the city. In Pampa, police estimate that at least three groups, or covens, are active.

The Encyclopaedia of the Occult notes that tracing an accurate history of satanism is almost impossible due to the shadowy nature of such groups. It terms histories of Satan worshipers "conspicuous by their absence."

It was only when Anton LaVey began the Church of Satan in San Francisco during the 1960s that accurate records of practicing satanists could be kept. The church, along with the Temple of SET, an offspring led by Lt. Col. Michael Aquino of the United States Army, meet in open worship and have regular services like most other churches.

Aquino's group, which boasts of being the "only Satanic Church fully recognized by the United States government," has spread to at least two other cities, St. Louis, Mo., and Singapore, Mayalasia.

Members follow the Satanic Bible that was written by LaVey. However, philosophical differences between the groups caused a split.

In spite of overtly violent overtones and suggestions of violence against "weaklings" in the Satanic Bible, both LaVey and Aquino deny that true satanists would ever resort to human sacrifice or torture.

Such notable anti-heroes as Charles Manson and the Son of Sam, each convicted of mass murder associated with devil worship or satanism, prove that many alleged satanists have taken LaVey's message quite literally, though.

For the person concerned about the rise in satanism, many of the vague aspects of the religion lead to confusion. Two local women who associate themselves with witchcraft said they were offended that people often mistake Wicca (witchcraft) with satanism.

The only proven link between satanism and witchcraft is that they both are part of the "occult sciences."

Author Dion Fortune, in his book Sane Occultism, describes the occult as "a branch of knowledge hidden from the many and reserved for the few."

While satanists, locally and nationally, claim to use witchcraft as a tool of their religion, witches say they have no part in demon worship. True witchcraft, according to Scott Cunningham, au-

Downtown Houston gun battle leaves two dead, three injured

HOUSTON (AP) — Investigators were trying to determine what caused a gun battle in a predominantly Vietnamese area that left two people dead and three others injured.
A quarrel among several Asian youths that began in a parking lot Monday afternoon apparently erupted into gunfire and spread to a nearby sandwich shop, officials said.
"One guy got chased inside (the sandwich shop) and another guy got chased across the street," said Paul Pepe, Houston emergency medical service director. "I think all of them were armed."
Police were trying to piece together the events of the shootings, but they said their efforts were handicapped because witnesses fled the scene.
"There was nobody here when the police arrived, just bodies and hulls," said Sgt. Dan Turner, a police spokesman.

Givral's Sandwich Shop is among several stores facing the one-way street that runs through downtown Houston. The killed and wounded were described as young Asian males.
"There was one heck of a shoot-out going on," said Houston homicide Sgt. Brian Foster, adding that there were "bullets going through windows and hitting streets. It was quite a firefight."
"There were multiple exchanges, and I'm sure people were shooting at each other," Foster said. "I'm not sure if the people we have that are injured are recipients or combatants, or what the situation is or if the truth will ever come out in a situation like this."
Turner said a large number of bullet shells littered the sandwich shop, indicating the shootings took place in the store. One of the victims died in the sandwich shop, while the other body was found across the street beside a parked car.

No arrests had been made as of this morning and police had not yet determined a motive for the shootings. Turner said investigators had not yet found any evidence showing that the shootings were gang related.
The shells came from 9mm and .38-caliber weapons, but a .45-caliber automatic pistol was found on the floor of the sandwich shop, Turner said.
One of those killed was identified as Minh Nguyen, 19, of Port Arthur. The other Asian teen killed has not been identified, police said this morning.
The names of the injured were being withheld for their own safety, police said.

Jury

Steinberg and his former companion, Hedda Nussbaum, were charged with Lisa's death but Nussbaum testified under immunity as the star prosecution witness.
Publicity about the case reached a peak during Nussbaum's emotionally wrenching testimony in December, when local television stations gave gavel-to-gavel coverage and Cable News Network broadcast extensive chunks of her testimony nationwide.
During seven days of testimony, she said she was so dominated by Steinberg that she was unable to defend herself from virtually systematic beatings, or to protect Lisa.
She said that Steinberg told her in bed on the night of Nov. 1, 1987, after they had free-based cocaine and while Lisa lay comatose on their bathroom floor, that he had "knocked Lisa down and she didn't want to get up."
She said she was unable to bring herself to summon help promptly. The girl lay there nearly 12 hours before Nussbaum called an ambulance; she died of brain damage in a hospital three days later.

Juror Helena Barthell said the panel "virtually ignored" the testimony, which was sharply challenged by defense lawyers who stressed Nussbaum's responsibility in Lisa's death.
She also said the manslaughter charge was a compromise, with some jurors arguing for the murder charge and some leaning toward lesser charges.
A murder conviction, she conceded, "certainly ... would have sent a stronger message."
Deliberations had been so heated that foreman Jeremiah Cole said jurors asked the court for a few minutes to "kiss and make up" before the verdict was announced.
Nussbaum's lawyer, Barry Schack, said his client is "relieved it's all over."
"The possibility of a hung jury was a very frightening prospect for her. She would have to go through this all again," he said.
Defense lawyers claimed it was Nussbaum who fatally beat Lisa out of jealousy over the attention Steinberg paid the child.

Consumers back hormone ban

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer groups are coming down on Europe's side in its ban of hormone-treated beef from the United States and say U.S. consumers ought also to demand the right to buy meat certified as chemical-free.
The Consumer Federation of America and other consumer advocates are urging President Bush to reverse the administration's refusal to let Texas and other states export hormone-free beef while Europe and the United States spar over the safety of growth hormones.
The consumer advocates want Bush to negotiate a 90-day cooling off period with the European Economic Community to keep the dispute from escalating into a trade war.
"If the European Community and the United States proceed in the direction that they're going we very well could have a real trade war in which consumers on both sides of the Atlantic are really going to be the ones who get hurt," said Rod Leonard, executive director of the Community Nutrition Institute.
The EEC has warned it will slap tough tariffs on American walnuts and dried fruit if no progress is made by Feb. 20 to end the dispute over hormones used by domestic producers to fatten cattle more quickly.
The EEC on Jan. 1 banned imports of beef treated with hormones, contending they are a health threat. The United States disputes those claims and retaliated against the loss of about $100 million in annual beef sales by setting $100 million in higher tariffs on a variety of Common Market goods.
In the meantime, Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower has been working with the EEC to certify hormone-free beef from Texas and find buyers for the Lone Star exports.
But the U.S. Trade Representative's office last week said such a deal would not be allowed because the U.S. Department of Agriculture has no way to certify beef is hormone-free, a prerequisite for export.

Leonard said he believes USDA "can do a certification procedure if it wants to" and questioned the administration's decision to bar such exports as farmers, inching toward recovery after their worst recession in decades, have an opportunity to find new markets.
"The first thing out of the gun is that the Reagan administration and now apparently the Bush administration is clamping down on that export market for no economic reason," Leonard said Monday.
Leonard said a 90-day cooling off period would give Bush time to develop a hormone-free beef certification procedure, and so "cooler heads can get together and try to resolve this issue without retaliation."
The Consumer Federation of America said the EEC's ban is "an issue of consumer protection and not trade protection."
"Serious questions have been raised about the necessity and safety of hormone additives in meat. Through the ban, consumers in Europe have expressed their preference for hormone-free beef. They have opted to be safe, rather than sorry, and we believe that preference must be respected," said Sandra Eskin of the CFA, which represents more than 240 state, local and national organizations.
She said U.S. consumers should take this opportunity to push their preference for hormone-free beef and urge the USDA to develop a protocol that certifies beef has not been treated with hormones and other drugs or chemicals.

Clements unveils proposal to award excellence in schools

By SCOTT ROTHSCHILD
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — A $39 million proposal by Gov. Bill Clements to reward public schools for making academic gains and reducing the dropout rate and drug and alcohol abuse, does not address the major education issue facing lawmakers — equity funding, according to House Speaker Gib Lewis.

"It's not going to be enough to do what you really need to do as far as equalization," said House Speaker Gib Lewis, D-Fort Worth on Monday.

Clements unveiled his proposals in a speech before 3,500 people attending the Texas School Administrators Mid-winter Conference. The proposals come at a time when the state is being challenged in a lawsuit brought by poor school districts.

The suit alleges that the $11 billion school finance system is unconstitutional because it doesn't ensure that each school district has the same ability to obtain money to educate students.

The 3rd Court of Appeals reversed a district judge's ruling that the system was indeed unconstitutional, and the matter is now before the Texas Supreme Court.

In his remarks to public school administrators, Clements said, "By rewarding measurable gain in all these areas, we can ensure that all our schools — regardless of wealth — can participate fully."

Clements cited an example of "success stories" from the Edgewood Independent School District, which is the lead plaintiff in the suit by poor districts against the state.

"In San Antonio, educators and the private sector have joined forces in a full-scale battle to keep 'at-risk' students at Edgewood High School in class," Clements said.

But Clements told reporters his proposals are not a response to the lawsuit. He also said the $39 million annual cost of his proposed package can be raised without increasing taxes.

"I think that we'll have ample funds. There are considerable sums available by re-arranging how we spend those monies," he said. Clements said issuing bonds for prison construction could free up some funds for his proposed package.

The governor's Texas Educational Excellence Award System — also called the TEXAS Plan — would give financial awards to schools showing improvement in drug and dropout prevention and to schools where students improve their academic performance.

Another part of Clements' proposal is a recommended change in the performance-based accreditation system now used by the Texas Education Agency. The new process would allow the TEA to concentrate on school districts that need help the most, Clements said.

Clements also proposed kicking off a public awareness campaign to try to keep children in school. He said he also will appoint a dropout prevention coordinator from his office's budget.

Other proposals in the package include rewarding dropouts who re-enter high school and earn their diplomas by providing them with a tuition credit or privately donated cash award for college. The proposal also calls for a financial incentive program for high school students who complete courses in physics and calculus.

Clements said investing in education will help the state save money in the long run. He said illiteracy costs the state more than $17 billion per year in lost income and tax revenue, unemployment insurance, adult revenue and the increased cost of welfare and crime.

"The correlation between a life of crime and illiteracy is all too real," he said. "Indeed, nearly 90 percent of all inmates in Texas prisons failed to complete high school."

Clements said Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, would carry his proposals in the Senate, and Rep. Kent Grusendorf, R-Arlington, would sponsor the House legislation.

Prior to his speech, Clements received the final report of the Select Committee on Education, which has recommended a longer school year and a state-funded $100 million annual school construction fund program. The 15-member committee has also made proposals that would require state funding increases ranging from $329 million to $832 million to achieve funding equity in the school system.

In related action, state Rep. Alex Moreno Jr., D-Edinburg, filed a bill mandating the abolition of school districts that have less than 500 students and more than three times the state average property wealth per child.

DA changes mind on new Adams trial

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas County District Attorney John Vance has told a state appeals court that Randall Dale Adams deserves a new trial on a charge accusing him of murder in the 1976 slaying of a Dallas police officer.

In a dramatic reversal Monday, Vance said he agrees that Adams did not receive a fair trial. But Vance said he still believes Adams is guilty of killing officer Robert Wood.

The prosecutor said perjured testimony may have caused the jury to unjustly convict Adams and sentence him to death.

The death sentence has since been commuted to life, and Adams has spent the last 12 years in prison, maintaining his innocence the whole time.

Adams, 40, was convicted in the slaying of Wood, who was shot to death Nov. 28, 1976 during a routine traffic stop.

Since that time, another man who testified against Adams has confessed that he was the gunman, and evidence has surfaced that at least four other key witnesses at his trial lied.

The case got national attention last fall when a documentary movie, The Thin Blue Line, examined Adams' probable innocence.

Lawyers for Adams have sought for the past six months to win a new trial, but Vance has said there was no doubt in his mind that Adams was guilty.

In a legal brief filed Monday with the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, Vance's office said it "has no objection to... the finding that (Adams) is entitled to a new trial."

District Court Judge Larry Baraka has recommended that Adams be given a new trial.

After hearing three days of testimony last November, Baraka concluded that Adams was probably innocent, that key witnesses had committed perjury and that former Assistant District Attorney Doug Mulder, who prosecuted Adams, suppressed crucial evidence that might have cleared him.

Vance told the Dallas Times Herald that he has not read the brief his office filed, he had instructed assistant prosecutors to send it to the appeals court if they felt the evidence supported Adams' claims.

"I told them to do whatever was right on the thing. If that's the way it was, that's the way it was," Vance said.

Grenade demolition

U.S. Army demolition experts from Fort Sill in Lawton, Okla., prepare to destroy a grenade Monday afternoon at the Pampa police shooting, located near the city of Pampa sanitary landfill. The grenade was found during a drug raid one week ago at a motorcycle shop located at 800 W. Kingsmill.

FBI, Hispanic agents in negotiations

EL PASO (AP) — Negotiations probably will continue all week between attorneys for the FBI and the 311 Hispanic agents who won a lawsuit against the bureau in a racial discrimination case, lawyers say.

The sides are discussing what reforms the FBI will institute as a result of the discrimination decision and how it will compensate Hispanic agents who were victims of bias.

"All of the issues of liability are at stake — how much each individual class member will get, what institutional changes will be made, whether retaliation will be compensated," plaintiffs' attorney Tony Silva said Monday, the first day of the talks.

"We're in preliminary negotiations. We're simply laying the groundwork to negotiate."

Silva and co-counsel Hugo Rodriguez said they are pessimistic that much will be decided this week. U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton has scheduled a damages trial beginning Feb. 20 in which he will decide whichever issues are not settled before.

Bunton ruled after a two-week non-jury trial last summer that the FBI discriminated against Hispanic agents in promotions, job assignments and discipline. He ruled later that the FBI retaliated against lead plaintiff Bernardo "Mat" Perez for filing the class-action suit.

Perez, the No. 2 agent in the El Paso office, was joined in the suit by 310 of the FBI's approximately 400 Hispanic agents.

FBI attorneys declined comment Monday, but the agency filed court documents two months ago that suggested each of the plaintiffs fill out a long form to help determine whether they should get back pay and how much.

The FBI also proposed training counselors to improve its system of taking and monitoring in-house discrimination complaints. It proposed placing the equal employment opportunity office under the supervision of one of the four executive assistant FBI directors.

Bunton ruled the FBI discriminated against Hispanic agents by assigning them too often to monitor Spanish-language wiretaps that could be monitored just as easily by Spanish-speaking Anglo agents or by clerks. The FBI proposed hiring at least 30 Spanish-speaking linguists to monitor wiretaps and to pay agents bonuses for improving foreign-language fluency.

Hiring linguists to monitor wiretaps is a step in the right direction, Silva said. But he added that agents should receive a bonus each time they use their foreign-language skills. Under the FBI's proposal, agents would receive bonuses each time they upgraded their fluency, so an agent entering the FBI at the highest level of fluency would never receive a bonus.

Rodriguez labeled the bulk of the FBI's proposals "cosmetic and prophylactic" measures to assuage Bunton and said they didn't go far enough.

"We believe the FBI should have certain goals for promotion of Hispanics," said Rodriguez, an FBI agent for more than a decade before he quit to practice law.

Silva said he believes the damages portion of the case will go to trial.

Subcommittee: Justice system needs reform

AUSTIN (AP) — The state shouldn't construct more prison facilities until the criminal justice system is reformed, a House subcommittee on alternatives to prison construction has recommended.

"We conclude that unless a comprehensive Texas criminal justice system management plan is written and implemented immediately, the addition of even one prison bed is a waste of our taxpayers' money," said the report presented Monday to the House Appropriations Committee by Rep. Ric Williamson, D-Weatherford.

The subcommittee, headed by Williamson, said Gov. Bill Clements "should declare the entire criminal justice system to be in a state of emergency disarray."

Clements "should charge the Legislature with immediately developing a comprehensive restructuring that will return the control of our homes and property to law-abiding citizens," said the report.

The five-member subcommittee heard last week from state officials and corrections experts.

Clements has called for nearly 11,000 new prison beds, with construction financed by $343 million in bonds. Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and House Speaker Gib Lewis also have voiced support for bonding to pay for prison construction.

divided on the idea of issuing bonds to pay for prison construction.

"The additional interest cost of $342.4 million could be better invested in delivering needed services to our taxpayers," the panel reported.

Reggie Bashur, Clements' press secretary, said: "We think that 11,000 new beds are essential. They are the bare minimum. At the same time, we do believe that alternatives to incarceration are needed."

Bashur, who noted that Clements last year convened a criminal justice summit meeting that recommended reforms, added that the governor's office wants to take a close look at the report and to "work in a spirit of cooperation" with lawmakers.

Among suggestions offered as "a starting point for public debate" by the subcommittee were:

- The governor and Legislature should debate and enact structural policy changes in the Texas Board of Corrections and Board of Pardons and Paroles.
- The state should define the number of prison beds it can afford and then reserve the space for hardened criminals.
- The judiciary needs greater flexibility in sentencing and a broad range of punishment sanctions.
- The state should make a "massive investment" in locally controlled, state-funded confinement centers.
- The state should fully fund an identification and intervention program aimed at children who may be victims of a domestic criminal environment.

Families, operators settle bus accident suits

KERRVILLE (AP) — A week after it started, a civil trial in which a camp was accused of negligence in the drowning deaths of four teen-agers ended abruptly with an undisclosed out-of-court settlement.

The four teen-agers were among 10 who drowned on July 17, 1987, when a bus and van from Seagoville Road Baptist Church of Balch Springs was swept by flood waters of the Guadalupe River near the Pot O' Gold Ranch Camp, one of the defendants in the suits.

The families of the four teen-agers sought damages that totaled $11.7 million, but State District Judge V. Murray Jordan on Monday sealed the settlement at the request of the parties.

Jury selection in the case began Jan. 23 and testimony began last Wednesday. Attorneys negotiated all day Monday before reaching a settlement late in the day.

The families of John Bankston Jr., 17; Leslie Gossett, 16; and sisters Stacey Smith, 16, and Tonya Smith, 14, had filed the lawsuits against the camp, its operators, Haische Avenue

Baptist Church in San Antonio; and two camp administrators, the Rev. Claud Bonam Sr. and his daughter-in-law, Zelda Bonam.

John Bankston Sr., father of the teen-ager who saved numerous lives before he disappeared under the Guadalupe River and whose body was never found, said he hoped the suit and settlement will prevent any type of accident from occurring again.

"It's hard to explain how hard it's been. It's something that we would rather not have gone through, but through all of this, all these camps will take this measure to ensure the safety of the people at these camps because children can't make up their minds like a grownup can," Bankston said at a news conference Monday.

Bonam told reporters outside the Kerr County Courthouse that changes will be made at the camp to avoid future flood problems, but declined to say the camp was at fault.

"We regret most deeply that such a flood came our way," Bonam said. "Most importantly, we are working with the Sons of Hermann Lodge, the adjacent land owner, to have an alternate route out."

Several other lawsuits from several of the victims' families and some of the 33 survivors are pending.

The lawsuit that was settled Monday contended that the camp administrators had been warned on the morning of July 17, 1987, that the Guadalupe River was rising to dangerous levels after nearly 12 inches of rain had fallen in the area and that numerous church buses leaving the camp were not warned of the dangers.

Defense attorneys, however, argued that the flood that caused the accident was a natural disaster and that their clients were not responsible.

The families' cases were questioned Friday, when a fire department dispatcher at Comfort, three miles northwest of the camp, testified that she could not recall if she told Mrs. Bonam in the early morning hours of July 17, 1987, that there was flooding at the Guadalupe River headwaters, about 10 miles north of the camp.

The Bonams' attorneys said they would have liked to have their clients exonerated in court, but felt that the settlement was the most appropriate thing because it prevented parents and his clients from reliving the experience.

"From a human point of view, it was good for both sides," said San Antonio attorney David Stephenson.

"But we never got a chance to put on our side of the show and, personally, I don't like stopping trials in the middle. ... I would have liked to put on our case," he said.

Bankston, who testified for about six hours over two days last week, said the accident could have been much worse.

OH, MY ACHING BACK

If you're like a lot of people, you may have occasional or persistent back pain and wonder what caused it. You try to think of some incident in which you may have strained your back, and come up with nothing. But there must be some reason ... you have back pains. The truth is that even the simplest of incidents may be the cause, such as reaching high on a shelf to get something. Or stooping suddenly to pick up something that has fallen. Or maybe you need some tips on good posture.

Whatever the cause, the problem may be that your spinal column is out of alignment. No pain-killing drug can cure the CAUSE. It can dull the pain of awhile and give you temporary relief. But if your back is out of alignment, the pain will probably not go away unless you get the treatment you need. No symptom can be more depressing than persistent back pain. Don't delay treatment when help is readily available.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when a man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

He needs strength to keep taxes down

Gov. Michael Dukakis did to Massachusetts taxpayers this month what everyone expected he would do to the nation had he won the presidential election: He announced plans to increase the size of their tax bills. By doing that, however, he may have made life even more difficult for his old opponent, George Bush, who faces great pressure to break his vow to hold the line on taxes.

The Dukakis proposal looks remarkably like the Bush campaign advertisement that showed tax bills flying through the mail slot. Taxes on capital gains would increase. The tax on gasoline would increase. So would taxes on cigarettes and alcohol. As would the tax on utility companies, who surely would pass it along to rate payers.

That's bad news for Bay Staters, but it's also bad news for Bush because it leaves him even more alone against a flood of would-be tax-increasers.

California Gov. George Deukmejian abandoned ship in a round-about way, saying the Gann limit on state spending should be increased. No matter how you cut it, increased state spending means the revenue pie has to be enlarged. Deukmejian says that won't be done by raiding the state's tax reserve fund. That leaves the taxpayers.

And Malcom Forbes (the senior) adds his voice to the tax-increase chorus in the current issue of the magazine that bears his name. You'd think a man whose fortune rests on the ability to publish business news better than his competitors would understand the harm taxes do to productivity. His plan? Slap a tax ("it shouldn't be a wimpy sum") on gasoline, the money earmarked solely to pay off the deficit. His logic? Europeans and Japanese pay more.

Two down. More to go? Already there's plenty of talk in Congress about tax increases, especially those of the Dukakis/Forbes variety. People everywhere, it seems, can find somebody else's vice to tax. Non-smokers see no evil in cigarette taxes, teetotalers find no harm in taxing alcohol, and environmentalists find beauty in taxes on gas-guzzlers.

All this to feed a government bureaucracy that grows ever larger, ever more costly, despite the professed concern about the deficit. Simply cutting the growth of the last eight years would do much to control deficit spending, with far less disruption of the economy than even the most selective of tax increases.

Conventional wisdom says it's lonely at the top. Certainly it seems that way for Bush. But we hope he will maintain his guard against new taxes.

Bush needs tougher approach

Stephen Chapman

Last winter, in the middle of a bitter campaign for the Republican presidential nomination, Bob Dole wooed South Carolinians with promises to push through new protection for American textile companies, which are prominently represented in South Carolina.

George Bush, braving the local interests, rejected the proposal. His punishment at the polls? A resounding triumph that helped propel him to the White House.

Let's hope Bush remembers the lesson of the South Carolina primary: Free trade can be good politics as well as good policy.

Michael Dukakis can attest to the same experience. When Richard Gephardt won Iowa by railing against South Korean imports, Dukakis refused to back down from his stand against protectionism. When was the last time you heard from Richard Gephardt?

On trade, Bush stands to gain by standing against special interests and with ordinary Americans. He ought to make it clear early in his term that he regards commerce with the rest of the world as a blessing, not a danger. He should reject any new trade barriers for what they are: a formula for weakening American industry and impoverishing American consumers.

This is a good way for the new president to forge his own identity. He was part of an administration that honored free trade only through its rhetoric. Ronald Reagan's own former chief economist, William Niskanen, points out that he was the first chief executive since World War II to add more trade restrictions than he removed.

During Reagan's eight years in office, the percentage of our imports affected by trade restrictions doubled. Almost every industry that squawked about foreign competition, from computer chips to clothespins, got something to keep it quiet.

The alarming result is that the consumer cost of trade barriers has climbed to at least $85 billion a year — which adds up to more than $1,000 a year for a family of four. This from a president who claimed to be lightening the burden of government on the ordinary citizen.

The list of Reagan sins on trade matters is long. He forced the Japanese to impose "voluntary" limits on their shipments of cars to the U.S. — boosting the price of both foreign and domestic cars. He forced 18 different countries to cut their U.S. sales of steel. He helped to slash sugar imports, at the expense of American consumers.

Wait, there's more. He extracted a deal from Japan that doubled the price of imported semiconductors — hurting the U.S. computer industry. He signed a trade bill that gives the president more power to keep out foreign products.

To his credit, Reagan did lower some barriers, like those affecting shoes and books. He vetoed the textile imports bill. In many cases, he accepted bad measures only in the hope of heading off even worse ones.

But the fact remains that on trade — unlike taxes — Reagan never drew a line in the sand, never dared Congress to "make my day." He adopted the protectionists' banalities about "fair trade." He took the path of compromise — and compromised himself into the worst trade record since Herbert Hoover's.

Bush ought to take a tougher approach. He won't have to wait long to give it a try. The Customs Service recently boosted the 2.5 percent duty on imports of minivans and "sport/utility" vehicles to 25 percent — which would raise their price by a couple of thousand dollars apiece.

The Treasury Department temporarily suspended the ruling, so Bush can decide for himself. That decision will be a signal whether the president plans to stick to the firm commitment to free trade that helped him get elected, or to cave in to demands to keep pampering American industry. He may have learned from his predecessor that the protectionist lobby is stimulated by such concessions, not appeased.

A good illustration is the "voluntary" limits on Japanese auto imports. They were supposed to be a temporary action to allow U.S. automakers to get back on their feet.

Detroit is up and about, thank you, with 1988 profits expected to set a new record. But the Japanese government, leery of antagonizing Congress and the American auto industry, recently announced that it will extend the quota for the ninth straight year.

Bush should make sure the ninth year is the last year. American consumers and the American economy would gain immeasurably from greater access to foreign goods — and what helps them can hardly damage the president.

If he has the courage to fight for free trade, Bush may find that what made him a victor on the campaign trail may also make him a success in the White House.

His mother despised Freddie

Freddie Blassie was on a television show I was half watching the other day. I hadn't thought of Freddie Blassie in years. I would have guessed he was dead by now, either by natural causes or at the hand of a wrestling fan.

I'm a couple of paragraphs into this thing and I haven't identified Freddie Blassie yet. There must be a lot of people who have never heard of him or don't remember if they have.

The first time I saw Freddie Blassie was on a live wrestling match on TV. It had to be in the mid-'50s. Freddie and other "rasslers" were in black and white, I remember that.

Freddie Blassie was one of wrestling's pioneer bad guys. He had a thick head of blond hair, and he strutted around the ring and he was a cheat, a braggart and a bully. He did awful things to Tarzan White and Ray Gunkell, two of my ring heroes.

My grandmother, the only person who thought the moon shot was a fake and professional wrestling real, absolutely hated Freddie Blassie — which is an indication of just what a cad the man was.

My grandmother always could find something nice to say about everybody, even Cooter

Lewis Grizzard

Brown, the town drunk.

"Cooter Brown's back in jail for drinking and fighting and cussing and non-support of his wife and children and for spitting on the sheriff," I reported to my grandmother one day.

"Wull," she replied, "nobody's perfect." If my grandmother had known any curse words, and I'm convinced she didn't, she would have used them on Freddie Blassie.

"Look at him!" she'd shout — finger pointed at the television screen as Freddie rubbed salt in Argentina Rocca's eyes.

"Why don't the referee do something about that... that..."

"Scoundrel," I suggested to my grandmother.

"Scoundrel," she would add to her tirade. Freddie Blassie called everybody he didn't like a "pencil-neck geek."

I've heard that phrase used since but I think it was Freddie Blassie who used it first.

He didn't like Southerners. He called us pencil-neck geeks and suggested we were ignorant and unwashed.

"God's going to get you for saying that," my grandmother admonished the TV set one afternoon as Freddie was into his act, throwing chairs and insults.

Freddie's in his 70s now, and he still has a full head of hair. He looked fit enough to climb into the ring with some of today's pretenders who couldn't carry Freddie's tights when it comes to putting on a hell of a show.

Freddie's an official with one of the professional wrestling organizations now, and before he departed the talk show he threw a couple of chairs and called Regis Philbin a pencil-neck geek.

My grandmother would have taken up for Regis Philbin if she had seen the show.

That's how much she despised Freddie Blassie.

Is a dollar a day proper birth control?

By SARAH OVERSTREET

"A Dollar A Day Keeps Pregnancy Away."

When I saw the headline, I couldn't believe it.

I thought, "Nah, they can't be paying kids not to have babies." And at first glance, it seems incredible.

Counselors provide over a "stack of dollar bills and a smorgasbord of snacks," waiting for once-pregnant teen-agers to show up and get some of both. It's a program that pays the girls $1 a day for each day they avoid becoming pregnant. All they have to do is show up once a week at Denver's La Mariposa Health Station, eat snacks, sit around, and talk or not talk about anything they want or don't want to.

Mercy, it seems so cold: "Stay un-pregnant, and we'll give you a dollar a day. Get pregnant, no more spending money." But so far, it seems to be working better than most plans designed to help teen-age girls avoid pregnancy. Among most groups of teen-age girls who have been pregnant once, 39 to 50 percent become pregnant again before the age of 18. Of the Mariposa teens, only 17 percent had a repeat pregnancy.

Desiree Ramos, who is 16 years old, has earned $462 in the program. Desiree had an abortion at 13, but has avoided pregnancy while participating in the three-year-old program. She says she does not want to have children, when she is 30 or 21.

"I want to have enough to buy him what he wants," Desiree told the Associated Press. "I don't want him stealing. I don't want us living in the projects."

Critics lambasted the program, calling it "paternal and coercive." Higher-ups pulled its funding for the coming year, but the Mariposa staff hopes to find private donors to support one girl each.

My first thought, when I read about the program, was the same thing I bet most people think at first reading: "What are we telling these kids? That the most important reason to keep from getting pregnant is to get money?"

I wondered some of the same things when, as an undergraduate, I chose an experiment from one of my education textbooks to try on my little three-year-old neighbor. She had trouble pronouncing "ch," "sp" and a few other sounds. The textbook taught me how to work with her, and to pop an M&M into her sweet little mouth every time she pronounced a sound correctly. (I know, I know, no one would recommend popping a tooth-rotter into a toddler's mouth today, but bear with me for the sake of the story; it was 1976, after all.)

Soon, Denise was able to pronounce many of the sounds we worked on. I'm not kidding myself that my little experiment cured her of a serious speech problem, or that M&M's worked any better than "Good girl Wonderful Denise! I'm so-o-o-o proud of you!" would have. All I know is that experiment, and its little bag of M&M's, gave me an opportunity to show Denise that I cared about her and the way she said "spoon," and to positively reinforce her for her work and understanding. That wasn't something she got very often at home.

Intellectually, I can understand the reluctance to teach kids that money is a reason not to become pregnant. Emotionally, I know our babies are sent out with adults' bodies and children's minds long before they are capable of making adult decisions. The result of their ignorance and immaturity often is unwanted pregnancy — the conception of new lives that they are incapable of caring for. These new little people are assigned to join the cycle of poverty and abuse by children unprepared for the responsibility of parenthood.

I'm for anything that gives us a chance to sit down and talk with these young women, to show them we care. I'm for anything that gives them even a shallow incentive for not conceiving unwanted babies, if that's all we can give them, before a deeper incentive has a chance to emerge.

Satanism

thor of The Truth About Witchcraft Today and a practicing Wiccan, is the worship of nature and the use of natural powers not normally recognized by established branches of science.

Generally, Wiccans are divided into two groups, white and black witches. Among the practitioners of black magic, experts on the occult have said there may be a group of 13 witches from around the nation called the Illuminati, who work closely with satanists.

However, Lou Sloat, director of the Texas Ritualistic Crime Information Network, said the very existence of such a group has never been proven.

A local satanist said he has been told by older followers of the devil that the Illuminati is working to make the occult so publicized that it eventually becomes accepted. He said they are also working toward political goals that are tied to their occult beliefs.

For most people who come from Judaeo-Christian backgrounds, any occult practice is disturbing because it contradicts basic beliefs about God and normally accepted practices of religion.

English author Montague Summers, in his study of the occult through the ages, points out that while satanists and Wiccans do not claim one another, their belief systems and theological foundations are similar.

'This has nothing to do with freedom of religion. These are people who kill other people and commit terrible crimes.'

Satanism is defined by LaVey as the ultimate pursuit of self-gratification.

"Man is an animal that must serve himself. The so-called seven deadly sins are virtues because they lead to physical or mental pleasure," LaVey is quoted as saying in the book Witches In Fact and Fantasy.

Because of the rise in satanism's popularity and a parallel rise in ritualistic crimes associated with devil worship, several national groups have been born in the last several years to educate the public about an alleged threat to society.

"We've been receiving a vast increase in calls for help from families of people who have become involved in devil worship," said Ann Lindgren, a member of the board of directors of the National Cult Awareness Hotline.

"Parents often don't understand the really dangerous aspects of this. There have been so many human deaths and sacrifices in this area (of satanic cult activities). This has nothing to do with freedom of religion. These are people who kill other people and commit terrible crimes."

That opinion was also expressed by a local youth who said he has broken from a satanic group.

"When right is wrong and wrong is right and you're told you can do anything that makes you happy — anything — then you are going to break the law," the youth said.

Lindgren termed the rise in satanism "a bad mental health problem."

She said many youths, called "dabblers," get into the occult because they are fascinated with Ouija boards, tarot cards, witchcraft or the game Dungeons and Dragons.

"We're not saying that game (Dungeons and Dragons) is satanic, but at least 75 young people have committed suicide in direct connection with it. There is obviously a real problem here," Lindgren said.

Besides the National Cult Awareness Network, which has an office in Dallas to deal with cult activity in the region, and the Texas Ritual Crime Information Network, other groups like Overcomers Victorious and Believe the Children have been started to help people deal with cult-related problems.

Recently a seminar was held in Dumas to educate peace officers and educators about the alleged threat of satanic cults, which are said to be growing in the area.

Experts like Sloat and Lindgren agree that much of the so-called satanic activity in the nation is only "dabblers" who soon become disinterested or frightened away from the occult.

However, as Lindgren points out, many youths have committed heinous crimes in the name of the devil which, she said, should greatly concern society.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation estimates that in 1970 there were 200 occult groups in California. In the last 19 years that number has grown by 20-fold and the groups have spread across the nation. Dozens of universities, including at least two in Texas, offer credit courses on the occult led by practicing witches or satanists.

In the book Gods and Beasts, author Dusty Sklar even links the Nazi movement to the occult. It is not surprising then that several satanists who have appeared on national television programs are also Skinheads (a radical group of young Nazis committed to white supremacy and violence).

It should also come as no surprise that even as Rolling Stone magazine is doing stories on "A Skinhead Nation," more and more youths are being lured into satanism.

A member of the Church of Satan in San Francisco, who refused to give her name, insisted, however, that all of this attention to violence and devil worship should have no connection to real satanism.

During a recent phone conversation she said, "We are a church. We teach people how to better themselves and how to enjoy life. That's all."

She said the church teaches that Satan is really the Lord and that God has fooled man into following a system of rules that deny the pleasure we were intended to enjoy. The Church of Satan, she contended, merely points people toward the real God and encourages them to get the most out of life.

Commission recommends tax to finance health care system

By DEBORAH MESCE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Employers and all but the poorest Americans would be taxed to finance a national health care system extending medical insurance to the estimated 37 million who lack coverage, under a plan proposed by a commission including three former presidents.

The proposal encourages continued reliance on private health insurance provided through the workplace, but calls for a new program to provide universal access to basic medical services. Costs would be spread among employers and all Americans above 150 percent of poverty level.

The plan offered Monday is designed to extend medical coverage to all Americans, stem the growth of medical expenses which now stand at $550 billion annually, and improve the quality of medical care nationwide, said the National Leadership Commission on Health Care, which worked 2 1/2 years preparing its proposal.

"If we continue the present trend, the $550 billion will double in six years and triple in 12 years," said Paul G. Rogers, a former Democratic congressman from Florida who co-chaired the commission with former Iowa Gov. Robert D. Ray, a Republican.

The commission also is headed by three former presidents — Richard Nixon, Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter — who served as honorary co-chairmen. The commission was financed by 38 corporations, unions and foundations.

The commission called its plan "eminently fair," and estimated it would add about $15 billion to the $550 billion already being spent on health care annually.

"It is not something that will blow us over as a nation," said Uwe Reinhardt, a Princeton University professor of economics and member of the commission. Members of the commission are to meet soon with Bush administration officials and members of Congress to go over the recommendations.

Under the proposed system, all Americans would be covered by a basic package of medical services, which would be the minimum coverage for all private health insurance plans and for a publicly funded benefits pool.

Many workers would continue to get privately financed coverage as an employment benefit, with the employer paying most or all of the premium, and they could add to that coverage if they wanted. The federal Medicare insurance program for older and disabled Americans also would continue.

Everyone else would be covered by the pool called the Universal Access program. Recipients of Medicaid, the federal health insurance program for the poor, would be covered by the new program.

The Universal Access pool would be financed by all employers and by all individuals not covered by Medicare who have incomes above 150 percent of the poverty level. The schedule of fees would be designed to encourage employers to offer coverage to employees and improve coverage under some existing plans.

"There is strong incentive to keep the pool of people falling into the public system as small as it can be," Reinhardt said.

Under the current system, the millions who are uninsured, though they cannot pay for their health care, still do receive medical services, he noted. Their cost, however, is borne largely by hospitals and doctors that provide the care, and it inflates insurance premiums paid by companies for their workers, he said.

"There would be some shifting of costs from large firms who do offer generous health insurance packages to those who in some sense freeload and do not offer their employees any health insurance and thereby benefit. Their employees are implicitly covered anyhow and big business picks up the tab," Reinhardt said.

Under the proposed system, employers who don't provide a minimum level of health insurance coverage to their full-time workers would have to pay a fee for each worker not covered.

In addition, all employers and employees would have to pay a fee based on employees' income. The rates would be determined once a national package of basic services was developed.

'Night Stalker' trial begins in L.A.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The lead witness in the "Night Stalker" trial described finding the nearly decapitated body of his mother, whose slaying was the first of 13 blamed on the man who terrorized California four years ago.

"There was a neck gash as if someone tried to remove her head and almost succeeded," Jack Vincow said of his 79-year-old mother, Jennie.

"The sight of my mother's head almost removed was just too much to deal with."

The trial of Richard Ramirez was scheduled to resume today with more testimony from Vincow, who discovered his mother's body in her apartment on June 28, 1984.

During his opening statement Monday, Deputy District Attorney Philip Halpin gave a detailed account of each of the slayings, using an enlarged Los Angeles County map as a guide.

The prosecutor called for the death penalty against Ramirez, a shaggy-haired drifter from El Paso, Texas, who was chased down by a mob and arrested in the summer of 1985.

Halpin did not emphasize the satanic or ritualistic aspects of the serial murders. He let sensational aspects of the crimes speak for themselves and delivered a low-key outline of the crimes that will be recounted for the Superior Court jury during the trial.

"This is where your work begins," he told the panel.

Defense attorney Daniel Hernandez reserved his opening remarks until after the prosecution concludes its case, which Halpin said would take four months.

Ramirez, 28, is charged with 13 slayings and 30 other felonies stemming from the crime spree.

The unpredictable defendant, who once shouted "Hail, Satan!" in court, was subdued in the packed courtroom Monday and sat slumped in his chair.

Dressed in a dark gray suit and sunglasses, he was shackled at the ankles as a security measure. The shackles were kept from sight of the jury.

Halpin described how the "Night Stalker" killed his victims through a combination of shooting, slashing and bludgeoning. Most of the female victims were raped, sodomized and often asked to "swear to Satan."

Although the prosecutor said satanic symbols were found at some murder scenes, he hinted the real motive was burglary.

He said the killer told his victims virtually the same thing: "Where's the money? Don't look at me. Shut up."

Ortega discusses new austerity plan.

Ortega announces austerity program

By DORALISA PILARTE
Associated Press Writer

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP)— In an attempt to end Nicaragua's economic crisis, President Daniel Ortega has announced plans to cut the budget by nearly half, lay off 35,000 troops and public employees and end subsidies for basic goods.

He said in announcing the austerity plan on Monday that city dwellers would be hardest hit and suggested many move back to the farm.

Speaking to the National Assembly, Ortega called for the cooperation of private business and told landholders the leftist Sandinista government would no longer confiscate private property.

In ending the two-hour, 40-minute address, he told his fellow 3.5 million Nicaraguans that sacrifice is needed to bring the economy out of crisis and curb inflation, which reached 20,000 percent last year.

"I appeal to the sensibility and honesty of all Nicaraguans so this proposal doesn't turn into a political confrontation," Ortega said. "Otherwise, we'll be paying with the blood and the future of our people."

He said the federal budget this year would be cut by 44 percent—461 billion cordobas or about $100 million to $200 million.

The president said the government would impose a "war economy" policy if inflation is not brought under control. He did not elaborate.

Ortega said the government will reduce subsidies for basic goods, but did not provide details.

He did not say during the speech how many workers the government plans to lay off.

But in a telephone interview with the newspaper El Nacional in Caracas, Venezuela, he put the figure at 35,000, including 23,000 from the army and Interior Ministry and 12,000 from other public institutions. The Sandinista army had 74,000 troops last year, including reservists and militia.

Laid-off workers will receive temporary compensation and be offered agricultural employment, he said, noting that about 10,000 workers are needed for the coffee harvest.

He suggested, in addition, that laborers who live in cities consider moving to rural areas to find employment.

Thousands of Nicaraguans migrated to Managua, the capital, and other cities to flee the fighting during the 7-year war with the U.S.-backed Contra rebels, in which a preliminary cease-fire was reached last March.

Thousands more flooded into cities after Hurricane Joan ravaged the country in October. The storm killed more than 100 people, left at least 200,000 people homeless and caused more than $800 million in economic damage, according to the government.

Ortega has described storm damage to crops as immeasurable, and annual Soviet bloc assistance of $500 million has failed to right the battered economy. Nicaragua once exported rice and beans, but now imports those staples; shortages have pushed food prices skyward.

Ortega said the budget cuts will require deep slashes in capital investment and government credits to agriculture and business.

State-run banks, he said, will provide new loans "only to those who can pay," but he said the government would continue "stimulating private producers, regardless of their political positions."

In another gesture to the private sector, Ortega declared that government confiscations of private property were a thing of the past.

About 85 percent of farmland in Nicaragua is in private hands, and just 15 percent is owned by the state, he said.

Ortega also announced that the official and parallel rates of currency exchange will be merged to eliminate black market demand for dollars.

The official rate, 2,300 cordobas per dollar, is used to calculate payment for exports, and the parallel rate, at 4,400 cordobas, is used for those selling dollars.

Diver given 17 years in drunken driving case

By PAT LEISNER
Associated Press Writer

TAMPA, Fla. (AP)—The judge who sentenced former Olympic diver Bruce Kimball to 17 years in prison for the drunken driving deaths of two teen-agers says he hopes the case "screams out to young people."

Kimball, 25, pleaded guilty during the first hour of his trial Jan. 11 to spare the victims' families the pain of hearing testimony and viewing photographs of the Aug. 1 accident, his attorney and family have said.

On Monday, he again changed his plea, this time from guilty to no contest as a technical move aimed at making it easier for victims and their families to gain insurance benefits.

Prosecutors said Kimball was drunk and driving about 75 mph when his sports car slammed into a crowd of 30 teens gathered on a dark dead-end street in suburban Brandon, killing two and injuring four.

"I hope what takes place here today will scream out to young people, 'You have got to pay for the consequences of drunken driving,'" said Hillsborough Circuit Judge Harry Lee Coe III.

"My sentence is not directed at rehabilitation. This man is rehabilitated and probably is in a position to help others. He's got to be punished."

Kimball will serve a 15-year

sentence for one of the two charges of manslaughter while driving drunk.

That is to be followed by a two-year sentence for one of the three charges of causing serious bodily injury while driving drunk. He also was sentenced to 15 years' probation on the remaining charges, and his driver's license was revoked for life.

He could be released in six years, according to his attorney,

Frank Quesada.

Before the sentencing, Robert Bedell, whose 19-year-old son, Robbie, was killed, asked Coe to impose a 22-year sentence for the 1984 Olympic silver medalist. State sentencing guidelines called for seven to 22 years for the charges.

Kimball, wearing a blue jail uniform, was silent in court and was flanked by his family and friends.

Pope criticizes use of laity for priestly duties

VATICAN CITY (AP)—Pope John Paul II Monday warned against excessive use of lay people in priestly functions and said the Vatican is studying the entire question of non-ordained ministries.

In a 196-page document on the role of the laity in church and society, the pope also urged women to play a greater role in the church—though not as priests—and said the Vatican was tightening control over lay movements and organizations.

The 42,000-word document, entitled The Lay Members of Christ's Faithful People, is the pontiff's response to issues raised by Roman Catholic bishops from around the world at the 1987 synod on the laity at the Vatican.

The synod, which convenes every few years to advise the pope on various issues facing the church, was dominated by the women's issue and the question of non-ordained ministries. These include lector, acolyte and altar server—people who assist during Mass.

During the synod, U.S. bishops made proposals to open up non-ordained ministries to women. Others, especially African bishops, opposed the idea.

Under church law, women are barred from those functions. But in the United States and some other countries, women and girls sometimes fill those roles informally, without installation.

In his document, the pope disclosed that a commission had been formed to study the entire question of lay ministries. Until the commission completes its work, he urged local churches not to act on their own, saying they should "faithfully respect" the current regulations.

The pope said the distinction between clergy and laity is sometimes blurred, leading bishops to criticize the "too-indiscriminate use of the word 'ministry' ... the lack of observance of ecclesiastical laws and norms ... and the tendency towards a 'clericalization' of the lay faithful."

He said there have been abuses of the church law allowing laymen to carry out certain functions in "situations of emergency and chronic necessity," such as lack of priests or deacons. These functions include presiding over liturgical prayers, conferring baptism and distributing communion.

The pope said pastors should exercise "maximum care" in assigning these roles to lay people.

Randy, George and Whitney gain AMA honors

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Gentle country crooner Randy Travis and stylish crossover singer George Michael dominated the American Music Awards, where heavy metal rowdiness and rap jive earned only limited acceptance.

The Shrine Auditorium nationally televised ceremonies Monday night ushered in first-time categories for heavy metal and rap, which enjoy widespread youth culture popularity.

Michael and Travis each won three trophies and diversity reigned in the winners list with artists like Whitney Houston, Def Leppard, D.J. Jazzy Jeff & The Fresh Prince, Gladys Knight and Guns N' Roses.

Def Leppard, who didn't attend the ceremony despite three nominations, won two trophies for heavy metal music but lost with Van Halen to Gloria Estefan & Miami Sound Machine in the pop-rock group category. Guns N' Roses lost to Def Leppard twice in heavy metal but won for pop-rock single.

Travis was named favorite male country vocalist and won the album trophy for Always & Forever and the single award for "I Told You So." He won in three categories last year for the same album.

Asked about milking awards twice from the same album, he said backstage, "I'm not sure how that happened but I'm glad it did."

Unlike Grammy Awards decided by artists and industry insiders, 20,000 ordinary music lovers are the arbiters for American Music Awards. Because Always & Forever spanned two calendar years, it was eligible twice.

Michael, formerly of the group Wham!, was favorite male vocalist in the pop-rock and the soul-rhythm-and-blues categories. His album Faith claimed the soul-R&B album award.

"A couple of years back when I split the group with Andrew (Ridgely), I knew I had a tough job ahead of me and I thought that maybe people weren't going to give me much of a chance," Michael told the audience.

Houston won the female pop-rock and rhythm-and-blues vocalist categories, her 10th and 11th American Music Awards, and Estefan & Miami Sound Machine's Latin beat got them the pop-rock group award.

"I never expected to win this," said Estefan. "It's wonderful to be able to cross over to a whole new market and to have everyone from all walks of life like our music."

Gladys Knight & The Pips, who dominated the awards in 1976 with four trophies, beat out hot new acts New Edition and Salt-N-Pepa for R&B group honors. Alabama won its seventh consecutive country group trophy.

Def Leppard swept the heavy metal category as favorite artist and for the album Hysteria. The new rap category went to favorite artist Jazzy Jeff & The Fresh Prince and his album He's The D.J., I'm The Rapper.

Tracy Chapman, who led Grammy nominations earlier this month with six, was the favorite new pop-rock artist but did not appear to claim the trophy.

The Dirty Dancing movie soundtrack won favorite pop-rock album. Reba McEntire won favorite female country singer.

Highlighting the three-hour ABC-TV presentation were tributes to Michael Jackson and Willie Nelson, who were given non-competitive trophies for personal achievement.

Readers say no dad is better than lousy one

DEAR ABBY: I am writing in response to "Alone in Minnesota," who wanted to hear from people who never knew their fathers. I am one.

My mother and father had planned to marry in June of 1959. My mother became pregnant in October of 1958, and when she told her fiancé the news, that's the last time she saw him!

When I hear my friends tell horror stories of what it was like to live with "lousy" fathers who were in and out of their lives (many of them were abused children), I thank everyone involved for not having subjected me to a father who obviously was not ready for the responsibilities of fatherhood.

I am proud that my mother decided to keep me — which was not an easy choice to make in 1959. I was very much loved by her and have missed nothing in my father's absence. Perhaps I would have felt different if I had had some contact with him, but I agree — no father is better than a lousy one.

If I should ever have the opportunity to meet him, I would do so. I am very much interested in his ancestors, and particularly in his medical history. However, I cannot say to what extent I would want him in my ongoing life. It would depend on the type of person he is today.

I hope "Alone" obtains peer support for herself. She is not the first woman who has had to make that kind of a decision. Nor is her child the first to grow up without a father. Somehow, they survive.

ONE OF MANY IN L.A.

DEAR ABBY: "Alone in Minnesota" wrote to say she was pregnant and unmarried. She tried to tell the man responsible, but he lived in another state and refused to see her, so she decided not to tell him, saying, "Maybe no father would be better than a lousy one." You said: "Every man has the right to know that he has fathered a child."

"Alone" asked for opinions of those who never knew who their fathers were.

My opinion is based on the life of James Michener, the author. As a babe, he was left on the doorstep of a Pennsylvania widow who had several children of her own.

At one point she had to place all her children in an orphanage until she was financially able to care for them. Michener not only didn't know who his father was, he didn't know who his mother was either. But apparently he knew love, which was more important.

Enough on Michener. "Alone" is a wise young woman. No father is indeed better than a lousy one.

JOYCE IN FLINT, MICH.

DEAR ABBY: I fathered a child 42 years ago by a young girl I cared for. Soon after "Mary" became pregnant (unknown to me), I went into the armed services. Mary fell in love with another man and did not want me to know about the pregnancy, preferring to let her new husband think it was his child. He learned a year later that it was not his, as it looked exactly like me, so he divorced her. I found out about all this only after Mary had given up my son for adoption. I lost track of the boy and his mother. Abby, I would have married her in a minute and raised my son.

I wholeheartedly agree with you when you say, "It's a man's right to know that he has fathered a child." Sign me ...

Swiss are top chocoholics

NEW YORK (AP)—The United States manufactures more than 2 billion pounds of chocolate each year and is one of the leading producers of chocolate in the world.

However, Americans consume only 10 pounds per capita each year, a low figure compared to other countries, says Chocolatier magazine.

Leading the way is the Swiss consumer, who eats more than 22 pounds per capita each year.

Chocolate lovers in other European countries consume about 12-14 pounds of chocolate per capita each year.

The least amount of chocolate is consumed in the African nations, where the hot climate purportedly diminishes the chocolate appetite. However, hot climate notwithstanding, sales of chocolate in Saudi Arabia have risen since the advent of the country's oil bonanza.

You are likely to become absorbed in many new interests in the year ahead. Each will have a place in your life, but one in particular may outshine all the others.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Do not abandon your old projects, but today try to focus your efforts on your newest interests, because this is where you are likely to be the luckiest. Aquarius, treat yourself to a birthday gift. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions for the year ahead by mailing $1 to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Don't let situations that entail competition intimidate you today. Your opposition might look strong on paper, but the odds are tilting in your direction.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) An old, infeasible idea may be discarded today for a bright and promising new concept which will have the potential of bearing fruit more quickly.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) There is a possibility you may profit in some manner today through a considerate associate, who has your best interest at heart. This person has helped previously.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) This is a good day to move upon an important development you've been studying thoroughly. Decisions that are well thought out should produce advantages.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Something you're working on with someone has good chances for success at this time, provided each makes some necessary adjustments. Don't let changes intimidate you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Conditions in general should be much more harmonious for you today in your dealings with others. If you've been experiencing any disagreements, patch them up now.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Be as productive as possible today and make a concerted effort to wrap up a project that you've left dangling. You'll feel better once it's off of your mind.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) It looks like you might be getting some good news today. It could come from or through a person with whom you're palsy-walsy.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Your financial prospects should start to brighten a bit at this time. However, do not use this as a signal to loosen your purse strings. Try to live within your old budget for a bit longer.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Things in general should go rather smoothly for you today because it won't take much to arouse your enthusiasm and optimism. When you think like a winner, you'll be one.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Flow with events today, instead of swimming against the tide, especially in matters that are of a commercial or financial nature. You should come out OK in either area.

Baseball proposal stirs controversy across state

By MIKE WAGNER
Alice Echo-News

ALICE (AP) — A proposal out of West Texas to delay the start of high school baseball in classes A, 2A and 3A has stirred a controversy across the state.

The UIL has been asked to postpone the beginning of baseball in the classes until after district track meets in mid-April.

Coaches in South Texas and East Texas, where milder winters are the norm, seem to be leading the protest against the suggestion.

Under the proposal, the state tournament would take place in the last week of June in A, 2A and 3A. For years, high school baseball has begun in late February, with the state tournament for all classes in the first full week of June.

The measure passed the vote of superintendents in those classes by an overall 427-151 count on Jan. 12.

According to Bill Farney, UIL athletic director however, the measure could be proposed, voted upon and reversed in the same manner this summer and fall in time to keep the format as it is when 1990 baseball comes around.

Many coaches said they learned of the change at the Texas High School Baseball Coaches Convention in Waco, two days after it was passed by superintendents.

"Our superintendent (Gary Hebert) said that he didn't recall voting on that. I think a lot of superintendents just didn't understand it," said Marcus Broesche, baseball coach at Burton, a Class 1A school.

"There were a lot of shocked faces there (Waco) when they heard about it. It was something that just slipped through," Broesche said.

Farney said from his office in Austin:

"The superintendents voted and some coaches didn't know about it and some superintendents are saying they didn't understand it, but lo and behold it passed. It passed in every conference by majority vote and by schools that play baseball."

Charlie Johnston, head football coach and athletic director at Childress, initiated the proposal.

"It was to basically eliminate the crowding on the spring schedule in smaller schools. Class 4 and 5-A usually have specialists, but in smaller schools we'd like to participate but can't."

His players want to compete both in baseball and track, Johnston said.

"Basically a lot of people took it as something to hurt baseball but it is to help. There are a lot of people in small schools and they don't have the coaching personnel. This opens it for a track coach or another one to do both."

Johnston says that there are established summer programs available to the Class 4A and 5A players that are not available to athletes in smaller towns.

"Hey, we're not tied in concrete," he said. "If it won't work, we'll just have to go back to the way it was. I want to see kids get the opportunity to do more and in small schools there is a small amount of money."

Alice baseball coach Tony Gomez said: "It was mainly to start programs in West Texas, but it will kill programs here in South Texas. Even after graduation the (regular) season will still go on. A lot of parents here want their kids to go work after graduation and it is pretty hard in some rural situations."

Gomez said more money would be needed for coaches' salaries because of the three extra weeks of time required by a delay in the season. He predicted the change would kill many summer baseball programs.

Mario De Leon, head baseball coach at Corpus Christi Ray, said he is happy the change doesn't affect 5A schools. He said a major disadvantage to him is that it would foul up summer plans for some students wanting to go to summer school or college.

NBA roundup

By The Associated Press

The Miami Heat is still looking like an expansion team. So are the Los Angeles Clippers.

The Heat and Clippers, the NBA's two worst clubs, lost again Monday night as their seasons of misery continued.

Golden State beat Miami 105-98 while Atlanta downed Los Angeles 130-101 for the Clippers' 15th consecutive defeat.

Miami reached the NBA's half-way point at 4-37. The worst record ever is 9-72 by Philadelphia in 1972-73.

The Clippers, in their 19th year of existence, went 0-14 in January — a month when Danny Manning was injured and lost for the season and Coach Gene Shue was fired. The Clippers are four short of the longest losing streak in franchise history, set in 1981-82 while in San Diego.

Before the game, Grant Gondezick of the Clippers told the team he had contacted the NBA office and requested admission to a substance abuse clinic.

"I don't know what effect it had on the team," Clippers coach Don Casey said. "It was an emotional scene. His father's been ill, and the frustration of the season ... I had no suspicion."

The visiting Hawks went on a 22-8 burst in the third quarter to break away from a 60-all tie.

Dominique Wilkins scored 29 points and Glenn Rivers had 18 for Atlanta.

Ken Norman had 22 points and rookie Gary Grant got 20 for the Clippers.

In other games, Portland beat Charlotte 130-118 and Phoenix defeated Denver 126-100.

Warriors 105, Heat 98
Rookie Mitch Richmond scored 26 points and Golden State held off Miami's fourth-quarter rally.

The Warriors led 62-45 early in the third quarter before the Heat got within 94-92 with 6½ minutes left. But Chris Mullin, who scored 24 points, and Winston Garland, who had 22, kept Golden State in control.

Billy Thompson had 30 points and Grant Long had 24 for Miami.

Indiana downs Iowa to stay atop Big Ten standings

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — His free-throw shooting has been off and Indiana's Todd Jadlow doesn't believe practice is the answer.

But the senior center came up with an answer Monday night, making 18 in a row en route to a career-high 32 point performance.

The 6-foot-9 Jadlow also had a career-high 13 rebounds as No. 17

Indiana downed No. 9 Iowa 104-89 to maintain sole possession of first place in the Big Ten Conference. It was the only game involving ranked teams.

Jadlow, struggling since conference play began, averaging only three points a game in his past seven games, made his first start in four games.

Jadlow's 18 free throws made tied the Assembly Hall record.

Wheeler teams excelling on the basketball court

By SONNY BOHANAN
Sports Writer

WHEELER — In the not-too-distant past, a mention of Wheeler High School's athletic dominance was most likely a reference to the Mustang football team's three state championships in eleven years.

But the girls of Wheeler are fast making a name for themselves as well — on the basketball court. In the past seven years, the Mustangettes have never failed to emerge with the district crown. A win over Kelton tonight will make it eight straight.

Likewise, the Mustangs are coming to be known as more than just a football power. Following Friday's victory over Briscoe, the Wheeler boys notched themselves a playoff berth, their fourth in five years. They are one game behind first-place Kelton in the conference standings, and tonight's battle will determine the first and second seeds in the district.

The current success of the Wheeler girls' basketball program can be traced to two events — first, the hiring of coach Jan Newland, and second, the Mustangettes' realignment from Class 2A to Class 1A ball.

In 1986, Newland accepted the position in Wheeler after coaching for four years in Eddyville, Iowa. The Claude native attended Parsons College and William Penn College in Iowa on basketball scholarships and took her first coaching job in that state.

Once in Wheeler, Newland's expertise began to pay off quickly. The Mustangettes did not win district during the new mentor's first season, when they competed as a Class 2A team. In 1981, however, Wheeler was reclassified as a 1A program, and thus began a string of seven straight district titles.

This season, the Mustangettes are primed to make it No. 8. Kelton is the last remaining obstacle between Wheeler and the crown (this Friday's opponent, Mobeetie, fields only a junior varsity program), and the Mustangettes have already defeated Kelton once this season by a score of 65-51. But regardless of the outcome of Tuesday's game, Wheeler has already clinched a playoff berth by virtue of its 9-0 conference and 17-7 overall records.

While it is difficult to pinpoint tangible reasons for the long-term success of a program, Newland does offer some thoughts on the subject.

"We've started a tradition,"

Coaches Mike and Jan Newland have a firm grasp on Wheeler's basketball programs.

she said, "and when you have a tradition of winning, it just carries on down through the years. It's easier for kids to follow in those footsteps."

And for Newland, the absence of a volleyball program at Wheeler may also work in favor of basketball. "There are different philosophies on that," she said. "A lot of people like having volleyball, so the girls can work on their jumping and timing. But I kind of like things the way they are. I have enough to worry about without another sport, and I think we spread our kids too thin. They get tired and burned out when we ask too much of them."

Besides the intangibles, there are some very definite reasons for Wheeler's dominance this season, beginning with a well-rounded squad. The Mustang-tes' top performers range in age from sophomore to senior, each with different strengths.

Junior DeeDee Dorman is the leading scorer and high-percentage shooter. She has scored 311 points in 22 games, an average of 14.1, while shooting 42 percent from two-point range and 79 percent from the line.

Senior Marcy Smith has a team-high 153 rebounds and 96 steals and averages 12.9 points per game, while senior Tera Henderson runs the offense and has contributed 25 assists and 54 steals.

Sophomore Bobbie Kuehler is the youngest standout on the team. After 22 games, she has 286 points — an average of 12.1 — and 149 rebounds and 55 steals.

Jan Newland is not the only Newland on the Wheeler coaching squad. Her husband, Mike, has been the head coach of the Mustang cagers for the past five years, with similar results. Including this season's playoff team, Mike Newland has led Wheeler into the postseason four times.

During his first two years — 1984-85 and 1985-86 — the Mustangs captured the district title. The next season they finished in second place, and following 1987's state championship in football, Wheeler was third in the conference. And this year?

That will all be decided tonight in Kelton. If the Mustangs win, the two teams will be tied for first place, while a loss makes Wheeler the runner-up. In either case, the Mustangs are already locked into a playoff berth.

Senior Stephen Batton leads Wheeler offensively, averaging 18.4 points per game with a team-high total of 423 points through Jan. 20. He has 188 rebounds, 79 blocked shots and 54 assists on the season.

Junior Kyle Sword is the next-highest scorer with a total of 284 points, or 11.5 per game. His 45.5 percent field goal shooting and 68.9 free throw percentage is tops for the Mustangs, and he has 173 rebounds, second only to Batton.

Senior Cory Cornett and sophomore Jason Woods average 7.7 and 4.2 points respectively, and Cornett leads the team in steals with 79. He also has 158 rebounds and 50 assists on the year.

Although Kelton has already defeated Wheeler once this season (64-62), coach Mike Newland expects a little closer contest this time around, especially with the district title on the line. The girls are scheduled to tip off at 6:30 p.m., followed by the boys at approximately 8

Pampa hosts Randall in key loop matchup

By L.D. STRATE
Sports Editor

With a mere half-dozen games left in the regular season, the Pampa Harvesters are hoping to squeeze into the driver's seat in the District 1-4A basketball race. Right now that spot is a little crowded with Borger and Lubbock Dunbar also behind the wheel. And Pampa coach Robert Hale certainly isn't counting out Randall, which comes to McNeely Fieldhouse tonight for a district encounter.

Pampa had to rally to beat Randall 57-55 in the first game between the two clubs, and Hale is looking for another close contest.

"Randall has a good ballclub and they're the closest team to the leaders. We're in a situation right now, however, where we can eliminate them."

Randall, 6-4 in district play, saw its playoff hopes dashed with a double-overtime loss to Lubbock Dunbar Friday night. Randall's 6-5 all-district player Zack Parker kept the Raiders in the game with his 32 points. "We're in a pretty good position. We don't have to depend on anybody else to help us out," Hale said. "We just need to take care of our own business." The battle for sole rights to first place is about as tight as it can get.

Borger and Lubbock Dunbar are both tied at 9-2. Pampa is right there at 8-2. The Harvesters have split meetings with the two leaders, beating Dunbar 77-68 and losing to Borger 73-70. Both games were played at McNeely Fieldhouse, which means both opponents will have the home-court edge in the next meeting.

"We've got to get past both Dunbar and Borger and it's going to be tough, but it's just a fun experience to be where we're at now," Hale said.

The Harvesters have had to win some close contests to get where they're at now. Of the eight district wins, Pampa has won four by five points or less.

"The champions win the close ones and we've been winning the close ones here lately," added Hale.

A prime example was Pampa's 49-45 win over Hereford last Friday night in the Whitefaces' gym.

"It was a game we had to have and it was played in what you might say was a hostile place. We had some big plays from a lot of people," Hale said.

Reserves Greg Fergerson, Quincy Williams and Jayson Williams, among others, drew Hale's praise.

"Fergerson got a big, big rebound for us, and he followed that with a couple of other big plays," Hale said. "Both Quincy and Jayson played some quality time for us."

Starters Dustin Miller, Ryan Teague, Mark Wood and Chris Hoganson all played heads-up basketball, Hale said.

"Landon Thornton didn't play that much, but he did a good job while he was in there," Hale said. "Billy Wortham showed some good hustle and made a big steal for us."

The boys' game tips off around 8 p.m.

The winner of tonight's Pampa-Randall girls' game will take over sole possession of fourth place in the district standings. Both are tied for fourth with 6-6 records.

"Our goal right now is to win the rest of our games," said Pampa coach Albert Nichols.

With four games remaining, the Pampa girls could move up to third place and possibly have an outside shot at a second place tie should Dumas falter down the stretch.

Borger is in third place at 8-5, while Dumas holds down second at 10-3. Levelland remains in first place and unbeaten at 12-0. The top two teams advance to the playoffs.

"We're hoping we can beat Dumas and hoping somebody else can, also. We're just going to play these last games hard and really get after them," Nichols said.

The girls' game tips off at 6:30 p.m.

'Horns favored to win baseball crown

DALLAS (AP) — A panel of media who cover Southwest Conference baseball agreed unanimously on Texas as the favorite to win the league championship in 1989.

Texas has won or shared 62 SWC titles in 74 years the championship was up for grabs.

The baseball season begins Friday with Baylor hosting Hardin-Simmons University.

On a scale of 8 points for first, 7 for second, etc., Texas received 72 points from the nine-member panel. Texas A&M finished second in the poll with 60 points, followed by Arkansas with 57 points.

From there, the race for the anticipated fourth position in the SWC post-season tournament gets extremely close. Houston, an NCAA region runner-up to Texas at Austin in 1987, got the nod for fourth place with 35 points.

Texas Tech, with a bevy of power hitters returning, was chosen to finish fifth with 32 points, while Baylor edged TCU for the sixth position in the poll with 26 points.

Coach Lance Brown's Horned Frogs were tabbed seventh with 24 tallies. Rice, which is bolstered by the return of DH-pitcher Steve Ramharter (.411 average, 2-0 record before he was lost for the year with a broken ankle last spring), was the eighth choice with 18 points.

A year ago, the media panel picked the top three finishers — Texas, Texas A&M and Arkansas — all of whom got NCAA post-season bids. Texas and Texas A&M advanced to within one win of earning a spot in the NCAA World Series at Omaha, losing in region finals by California and Cal State-Fullerton.

Strait headed for Baylor

CUERO, Texas (AP) — Robert Strait, touted as Texas' top high school running back and the No. 3 rusher in national schoolboy history, said he was leaning toward playing outside the probation-plagued Southwest Conference until he saw a videotape prepared by league coaches.

Strait announced Monday that he will attend Baylor University. He also had considered Southern California, Miami, Houston, Texas Tech and Texas. He said Oklahoma University was a frontrunner before the Sooners were hit by NCAA probation.

Oral commitments are non-binding. The national letter of intent signing period begins Feb. 8.

Strait said he was influenced by a videotape, "Stay and Play," that Southwest Conference coaches put together as a cooperative venture, urging the state's top high school states to stay in Texas.

"When it first began, I really wanted to go out of state," Strait said. "After I took the visits and saw the film on why athletes should stay in Texas ... I thought, 'Why go out of state and help California beat Texas?' I'm from Texas."

Strait said he decided to attend Baylor because he felt comfortable at the school and wanted to go to a school he could help rebuild.

Six of the nine SWC schools came under NCAA sanctions over the past four years — all except Baylor, Rice and Arkansas.

"It came down to Baylor and USC (Southern California)," Strait said Monday in announcing his plans. "I was just going by what my heart thought."

Strait said the atmosphere at Baylor was more personal, and he believes he won't be "just a number" there.

"I decided to go to Baylor because it has an excellent program," he said in a telephone conference call. "I want to be with a program that I can help build up. I feel I don't have to play as a freshman. ... There are a lot of Baylor backs in the pros. They must have some good running coaches."

A member of The Associated Press Super All-State football team, Strait rushed for 1,421 yards last season, giving him a career total of 8,404 yards, second in Texas schoolboy history behind Sugar Land's Kenneth Hall.

Hall gained 11,232 yards in 1959-53 and is the all-time national leader ahead of Emmitt Smith of Pensacola Escambia, Fla., who gained 8,804 yards in 1983-86.

Strait had eight 100-yard performances last season and finished second nationally with 40 career 100-yard games behind Smith's record 45. He also scored a national record 128 career touchdowns.

Strait visited Baylor, Southern California, Miami, Texas Tech, Nebraska, and Arkansas. He made an unofficial visit to the University of Texas last weekend, but he said he felt uncomfortable there.

"I didn't feel like I would fit in," Strait said. "There was just something about it that I didn't like."

He said he had made up his mind about a week ago but waited to disclose his choice so he could make a final visit to Miami.

Strait said he just wanted to play college football and had no preference about what position — tailback or fullback. The 6-foot-1 1/2-inch Strait said he also plans to lose 10 pounds, dropping to 215.

Mavs can't escape disasters

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS — The Dallas Mavericks are wondering what disaster will strike next.

They suffered the worst NBA home loss in their history on Sunday, humiliated 118-93 by the Los Angeles Lakers on national television.

Last week they lost guard Rolando Blackman for almost three weeks with a finger injury.

Earlier in January, forward Roy Tarpley, the best sixth man in the league, entered a drug rehabilitation center.

Forward Mark Aguirre has hinted he would like to be traded.

On Dec. 29 the Mavs beat Boston at home 131-115 to run their record to 17-9. Since then the Mavs have fallen out of first place in the Midwest Division and are fighting for their lives to gain a playoff berth.

They are 4-10 in January going into tonight's game against the Utah Jazz in Reunion Arena. The slump ends Dallas' string of 17 straight months of records over .500.

"You haven't heard the word 'elite' thrown around here in a long time," said Dallas center James Donaldson. "We are really struggling in the scoring department."

The Mavs took the Lakers to a seventh game of the Western Conference finals but Donaldson said Dallas isn't in the same league right now.

"It's obvious we are no threat to them," he said. "But they still think things out on us."

Dallas has lost all three games against the Lakers this year.

Guard Derek Harper said the Mavs need to awaken quickly.

"We've got to come back and put forth a blue collar effort," Harper said. "We are trying but it's just not coming together. We've got to find a way to regain our lost confidence. If we don't the season will get away from us."

The Mavs' high point scorer against Los Angeles was Aguirre with only 16. It was the lowest output by a Dallas leading scorer this season.

Aguirre's output has been way off his form of last season.

He is under 20 points in 17 games for the season with over three months left. He was under 20 points only 17 times all of the 1987-88 campaign.

The Mavs are 15-8 at home with 23 games remaining.

Last year Dallas was 33-6 in Reunion Arena.

"These aren't the Mavericks that we know," said Los Angeles' James Worthy. "Their crowds don't even seem to be in the game. It's the quietest I've ever seen Reunion Arena. The fans here always caused a lot of trouble for us."

Donaldson agreed, saying "We just seem to be out of sync or something. There are a lot of players just standing around out there. We have to wake up and do it quick."

The Mavs have two home games to get well this week — tonight against Utah and Friday against Phoenix.
