Black leaders invited

By ARTHUR L. GAVSHON

LONDON (AP) — British Foreign Minister David Owen has invited two Rhodesian black nationalist leaders to London for talks on political developments in that white-ruled country, Foreign Office officials said Saturday.

Diplomatic sources said the invitation came after the United States and Britain privately agreed on the advisability of a meeting with Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe, co-leaders of the militant Patriotic Front. They noted that London is trying to keep alive an Anglo-American plan to bring peace and black rule to Rhodesia and said Washington would be represented if the proposed talks are held.

The sources said the discussions would include a plan by Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith to work out an internal settlement with moderate blacks to transfer power to Rhodesia's black majority.

Nkomo and Mugabe, who control the guerrilla armies fighting the Smith regime, have rejected any part in the negotiations between Smith and the moderates. According to the sources, Nkomo and Mugabe are to meet in Maputo, Mozambique, to decide whether they will come to London.

The greater part of Mugabe's forces are based in Mozambique and Nkomo's guerrillas operate out of Zambia.

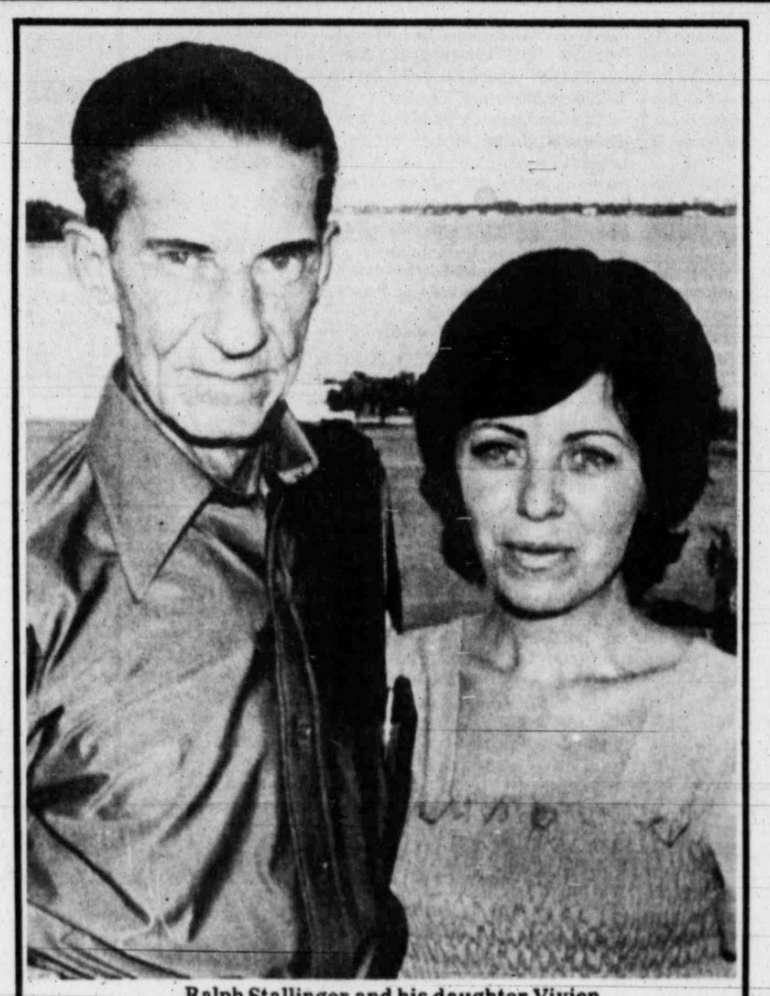

Owen, in a speech to a Labor Party meeting Saturday, warned that "time is running out for a peaceful settlement" in Rhodesia.

He referred to recent raids into Mozambique by Rhodesian security forces and said, "The slaughter and carnage ... will not help bring about an atmosphere conducive to successful negotiation and a just and orderly settlement that will win international acceptance."

Rhodesia claimed it killed 1,200 guerrillas in two raids that began Nov. 23. Mozambique's Defense Ministry said 160 persons were killed, and most were women and children.

Diplomatic officials in London reported that U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance and Owen have set up a session on the sidelines of this week's meeting of the North Atlantic

Ralph Stallinger and his daughter Vivien

Dream comes true for dad, daughter

MIAMI (AP) — For 32 years, Ralph Stallinger carried a faded photograph of his English daughter — the only image he had ever seen because he couldn't find his GI bride and their baby. Now he and his child are finally together.

"If I'm dreaming, I don't want to wake up. The lost is found again," said Stallinger, 64. "I'd given up hope that I'd ever find her."

His daughter, Vivien Davis, flew here from the London area this week, nearly five months after the telephone call last July 5 that brought her into contact with her father.

"When the phone rang, I dashed down the stairs," she recalled. "The voice on the other end said, 'Hello Vivien. This is your father.' I couldn't believe it. I stood there and cried."

Stallinger was an American soldier stationed at Berkshire, England, in 1943 when he met Vivien's mother, Eleanor Roberts, "at a dance at the old Binfield Castle.

"And she was pretty as anything you ever saw ...," Stallinger said. "I guess you could say it was love at first sight."

California Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. is putting direct pressure on British and American oil executives to accept the proposed solution to the Sohio pipeline dilemma, Brown's top environmental aide said Saturday.

Tom Quinn, who also serves as chairman of the State Air Resources Board, said Standard Oil Co. of Ohio (Sohio) can win speedy California approval for its Alaskan crude oil pipeline project.

The solution is for Sohio to accept an air pollution control program now under study by officials of the firm, Quinn said.

"If they agree to it, they'll get the permits," Quinn said.

Quinn commented on the project before going into a meeting between the governor and top officials of Sohio and British Petroleum (BP).

The meeting was called by the governor in an effort "to move things off dead center," Quinn said.

Brown visited officials of BP, Sohio's parent firm, in London last week.

Quinn said the governor told them that Sohio was delaying approval of the $500 million terminal and pipeline project by refusing to negotiate the pollution tradeoff package.

Brown urged the BP officials to come to California to discuss the situation in detail, Quinn said.

Saturday night's session was held at the governor's office in San Francisco.

The Sohio project would provide for the shipment of 500,000 barrels of crude oil daily from Valdez, Alaska, to a new terminal at the Port of Long Beach, Calif. The oil then would be sent through more than 1,000 miles of pipeline to Midland, for distribution to refineries in the oil-needy Midwest.

To win approval, state and local air quality agencies are requiring Sohio to reduce existing air pollution in the Los Angeles area by more than the amount of pollution that would be caused by the new project.

Many of the emissions would come from the large tankers traveling in and out of the Port of Long Beach.

The tradeoff proposal that Quinn referred to would provide for installation of air pollution control equipment at a power plant of Southern California Edison Co.

Quinn estimated that the cost to Sohio would be somewhere between $60 million and $100 million. But he said the price is relatively small in comparison to the multibillion dollar investment the oil companies have in the rich Prudhoe Bay field in Alaska and in the trans-Alaska pipeline system.

"It is a reasonable approach," Quinn said. "They could have consummated the agreement two months ago."

Meantime, efforts have been made in Congress to adopt legislation that would bypass the state and local regulatory agencies such as Quinn's air board in an effort to speed up approval of the project.

Bermuda seeks British soldiers to quell rioting

By GEORGE ESPER

HAMILTON, Bermuda (AP) — Bermuda appealed Saturday for British troops to help quell rioting that broke out Thursday night over the execution of two convicted killers. Britain said it would send soldiers "as soon as possible" to its Atlantic island colony.

A spokesman for Prime Minister James Callaghan said in London that the troops, probably a company of about 100 men, would leave "very likely Sunday morning" by plane from Britain.

Damage from the rioting and arson across Bermuda, a favorite vacation spot for American and British tourists, is estimated at more than $4 million. Disturbances continued Saturday.

A spokesman for the Bermuda government said Saturday night that Gov. Sir Peter Ramsbotham, on the advice of Prime Minister David Gibbons, had asked for troops as a "precautionary measure ... to insure that the security forces of Bermuda are not overextended."

Nine hundred policemen and members of the Bermuda Regiment were deployed or placed on alert under the governor's emergency declaration.

Some 40 policemen and troops of the Regiment, which is similar to a national guard unit, fired scores of riot gas grenades on Saturday to disperse a crowd of 300 black youths. The youths were massed in Court Street in downtown Hamilton near the Parliament building and two blocks from the waterfront.

The area is about a mile from two of Hamilton's luxury hotels, the Princess and the Bermudiana.

Riots erupted Thursday night after a stay of execution was refused for murderers Erskine Burrows, 33, and Larry Tacklyn, 25. The two black prisoners were hanged at dawn Friday. Burrows was convicted of murdering Gov. Sir Richard Sharples and four other persons in 1972-1973 and Tacklyn of two of the 1973 killings.

British troops last were called here after Sharples' death in 1973.

No arrests or injuries were reported in Saturday's fighting, but some police and rioters reportedly suffered minor injuries Thursday.

On Saturday, the crowd stayed about 75 yards away from police and fired slingshots filled with glass. Some of the youths inside and atop buildings hurled bottles and rocks. The police and soldiers wore riot helmets and carried shields, unloaded rifles and sticks.

A dusk-to-dawn curfew continued in effect Saturday evening and the streets cleared under a driving rain following the afternoon clash.

Earlier in the day, Chief Police Inspector Allan Lister called the situation "dangerous and apprehensive." He said a motorcycle had been set afire on Court Street by beer-drinking youths and the windshield of a car carrying two white

Anti-Sadat summit still at odds

By JONATHAN C. RANDAL
The Washington Post

TRIPOLI — Arab leaders opposed to Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's go-it-alone diplomacy talked until 2:30 a.m. today without apparently reaching final agreement on a minimum joint plan of action to forestall an Egyptian-Israeli separate peace.

After nearly eight hours of closed-door meetings, leaders of Algeria, Iraq, Libya, South Yemen, Syria and the mainstream Palestine Liberation Organization adjourned until noon today.

They instructed their respective foreign ministers to remain in the ornate People's Palace — once the residence of the deposed King Idris — to draft a final communique.

Such was the state of confusion that observers were unable to ascertain whether a broad agreement had been achieved or whether the talks were still deadlocked after three days of negotiation.

The spectacle of the long negotiating sessions — without positive results — was scarcely calculated to intimidate Egypt and its conservative allies such as Saudi Arabia.

What exactly was holding up agreements was not immediately known. The low level Iraqi delegation was reported to have refused to sign a draft agreement that the other participants had worked out in private session Saturday.

Although their reasons were not spelled out, observers suggested Iraq was angry at its inability to bend the others to its hard line policy demands.

At the center of the argument was Syrian President Hafez Assad's reluctance to give into traditional rival Iraq on the questions of leadership of the anti-Sadat camp.

Informed sources said the participants had suggested setting up a so-called joint Arab National Front. The wording was carefully chosen to avoid the use of "progressive" and "socialist" for fear of frightening off more moderate potential members.

They added that in its present form, it did not call for economic or diplomatic sanctions against Egypt.

So far only Libya has gone to that extreme.

The other participants argued that such a measure would be counter-productive and punish the already hard-pressed Egyptian people, not Sadat.

Nor did the draft apparently contain language condemning further efforts to negotiate a Middle East peace settlement.

Both Syria and the PLO resisted pressure, essentially from Iraq, to jettison the negotiation tract.

Their strongest argument was that the participants were in no position to wage war against Israel, which would be the logical position of such a stand.

Iraq also has called for a follow-up anti-Sadat meeting in Baghdad.

Diplomats reportedly recalled

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Egypt has recalled its ambassadors to the Soviet Union, Iraq, Syria, Algeria and South Yemen to protest their rejection of President Anwar Sadat's Mideast peace initiatives, the semi-official newspaper Al Ahram reported today.

It said the envoys were recalled for "urgent" consultations on the latest Mideast developments, including a "rejectionist summit" meeting that began Friday in Tripoli, Libya. It is attended by Iraq, Syria, Algeria, South Yemen, Libya and Palestinian groups.

Libya broke diplomatic relations with Egypt and called for the summit conference last week following Sadat's Nov. 19-21 visit to Israel and his proposal for pre-Geneva peace talks in Cairo in mid-December.

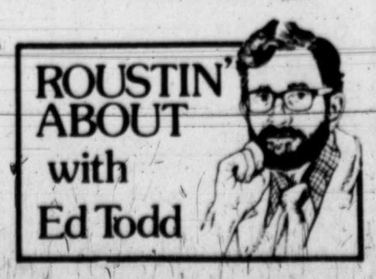

Al Ahram said Egypt recalled its ambassador to the Soviet Union because "it was very clear that the leaders now gathering in Tripoli are implementing a policy laid down for them by Moscow."

Al Ahram did not say what action, if any, would be taken against the Palestinian guerrilla movements participating in the Tripoli conference.

The summit was called in an effort to isolate Sadat in the Arab world and block his peacemaking with Israel, but so far the participants have failed to agree on what measures to take. The Palestinians and Libya proposed an economic embargo, but Syria

Shuttle at airport to begin

A shuttle between the parking lot and the terminal building at the Midland Regional Airport will begin at 5:45 a.m. Monday, spokesmen for The First National Bank of Midland said Saturday.

A maxi-van, built to accomodate 10 to 12 passengers, will be kept in motion between the parking lot and the terminal from 5:45 a.m. until after midnight daily, according to Wilbur A. Yeager, Jr., bank president.

When there are incoming airplanes at the terminal, the van will park adjacent to the baggage area at the southside of the terminal building. At other times it will be stationed in a specially constructed shelter at the north parking lot entrance of the terminal, said Jim Stevens, a vice-president and building manager for The First National Bank.

Space has been provided in the back of the van for luggage, Stevens said.

"The First National Bank of Midland is pleased to provide this service during the construction period of the permanent parking facility. We are proud of the excellent air service provided for Permian Basin residents, and this service will help both our people and visitors to our area," Yeager added.

Bank names president

Boley D. Embrey has been named president of Western State Bank. Chairman of the Board John B. Billingsley Jr. announced today.

Embrey came to Midland in 1958. He served for eleven years as an account executive for a local radio station, and has been in banking business since 1969.

He has served in United Way campaigns, the Midland Chamber of Commerce and is a director of the Permian Basin Graduate Center. He is a member of the American Banker's Association, Texas Banker's Association and the Independent Banker's Association of Texas.

Western State Bank was founded in 1972 and currently has assets in excess of $16 million.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Services for W. J. Lloyd, 83, a native of Big Spring, were at 2 p.m. Saturday at Lemons Funeral Home of Plainview with the Rev. Carlos McLeod, pastor of the First Baptist Church, officiating.

Burial was in Plainview Memorial Park.

Lloyd died Thursday morning in Kansas City, Mo., where he had lived for the past two years.

Lloyd moved to Plainview in 1950. He was a 50-year member of the Khiva Shrine Temple and also was a Mason.

Survivors include his wife, a daughter, three grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

Effie Vaughn

O'DONNELL — Services for Effie Vaughn, 83, sister of H. D. Vaughn and Ola Vaughn, both of Lamesa, were at 2 p.m. Saturday in the First Baptist Church of O'Donnell with the Rev. John Johns, pastor of Cooper Baptist Church in Woodrow, officiating.

Burial was in O'Donnell Cemetery directed by Branon Funeral Home.

Miss Vaughn died Thursday in a Lamesa hospital following a lengthy illness.

A native of Leon County, she moved to Lamesa from O'Donnell in 1967.

CIA firings create new problems

By BILL RICHARDS
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The decision by CIA Director Stansfield M. Turner to cut 816 employees from the CIA's Operations Directorate by 1979 has left the intelligence agency deeply shaken and Turner with a major operational problem of his own.

Normally secretive operations division employees, most of whom are accustomed to working out of the public eye, openly have begun venting their grievances toward Turner and the cutbacks to reporters. Turner, in turn, angrily attacked the intelligence agency leakers recently as "crybabies."

In an even more unusual move, several of those included on the initial list of 210 CIA employees scheduled to be fired have sought out legal advice on fighting the cuts. Knowledgeable sources within the agency said this week there is a strong likelihood the cuts could end up being challenged in court through a class action lawsuit.

Angry intelligence agency members on the dismissal list — a number of whom don't have enough time to qualify for a pension — have talked darkly of turning to book writing for a living once they are let go. That threat was underscored by the recent publication of former CIA intelligence specialist Frank Snepp's unapproved version of alleged foulups at the conclusion of the Vietnam war.

Critics also have accused Turner of using his tough attitude as a means of winning approval for a slot on the Joint Chiefs of Staff, a belief that spawned "Beat Navy" signs on the agency's headquarters wall before the Army-Navy game. Turner retained his admiral's title when he took over the intelligence agency last March.

Following the first dismissal notices a pointed six-verse parody of a Gilbert and Sullivan tune from HMS Pinafore also appeared on Langley bulletin boards.

"He'll be the CNO (Chief of Naval Operations)
"So thinks he;
Thus why give a fig
"For the agency?" the ditty ends.

Sources both inside and outside the intelligence agency painted an ironic picture of the CIA's 4,500-member Operations Directorate since the first dismissal notifications were hand delivered Oct. 31 — a move some on the list now are calling the "Halloween Massacre." After nearly three decades of maneuvering and occasionally toppling foreign governments the cloak and dagger divsion is now under attack itself and having difficulty protecting its own ranks.

"I was rather proud of the work I had done," said an operations division veteran, who described his work to a reporter the other night as "catching spies." "Now I'm being called no more than surplus and when you think about that it hurts."

At the same time, CIA officials said this week they were surprised and puzzled at the intensity of the reaction to the dismissals. Turner called two separate meetings of 500 senior CIA officials each in August to warn that the firings were imminent. In addition, the director sent out a detailed memo in October explaining how the cuts were being made.

"We never heard a peep of protest until the notices went out," said an agency spokesman. "Now all of a sudden, it's all over the place."

The two-sentence dismissal notice was signed by the CIA's Deputy Director for Operations William W. Wells, although agency officials acknowledged that the abrupt language of the mimeographed notice was at Turner's urging. The notices were held for three days before being delivered after CIA psychologists warned they could cause serious depression if they were delivered on a Friday.

The notices were worded carefully, according to agency officials, in order to avoid the prospect of lawsuits. Turner is empowered with unlimited authority to fire CIA employees under provisions of the 1947 National Security Act. Only five suits have ever been filed challenging CIA dismissals and all were rejected in the courts, according to former CIA general counsel Lawrence Houston.

Spokesmen for the CIA also have sought in recent weeks to play down the effects of the dismissals on foreign intelligence gathering capability. According to the CIA only 13 foreign jobs are to be abolished in the cuts and all of those positions are administrative.

Sources said that among the first wave of those notified they will be fired are CIA station chiefs — top field officers — in Germany, Norway, Canada, Austria, Switzerland and Luxemburg and the chiefs of smaller satellite field stations in Germany and Switzerland.

"You'd have to be blind looking at that list not to understand the effect this is going to have on intelligence gathering," a senior CIA official whose name is on the list said this week.

One CIA station chief, who was ordered in to the agency's Langley headquarters to sit on a three-man board picking "supergrades" — GS 16s and above — to be fired returned to his station to find that his two fellow board members had quietly included his name on the list.

Last week CIA officials, in an apparent effort to calm some of the criticism over the firings, passed the word among senior officials on the list that they could stay on until September if their retirement comes up by then. All the others will be officially fired March 31.

A second wave of dismissal notices is scheduled to go out in June with the dismissals to take effect late next fall, according to a CIA spokesman.

Turner also appeared to back off slightly after telling Newsweek Magazine in an interview on those who were to be fired "I bet there isn't five of them that had personal risk." The director's comment stirred up unusual anger, especially since a number of those on the list had long careers in dangerous undercover work for the operations division.

In a followup letter to Newsweek — which was also posted on CIA headquarters bulletin boards — Turner wrote "I very much regret having said this" and added he was limiting his criticism to those who took their complaints to reporters.

Despite the back-and-forth sniping even Turner's most ardent critics concede there is some room to trim bureaucratic fat from the CIA. Turner inherited a recommendation to cut 1,400 persons in the next six to eight years but decided to shorten the firings to avoid the agony of prolonged dismissals in a tight-knit agency like the CIA, one official spokesman said.

The major opposition has centered on the brusque methods Turner has used. Critics point out, for instance, that a number of those slated for the embarrassment of a pink slip are senior officials whose retirements could have been quietly arranged.

Begin, Callaghan stage 90-minute private talk

LONDON (AP) — Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin, once Britain's most wanted guerrilla in Palestine, met for 90 minutes Saturday night with Prime Minister James Callaghan.

BISHOP J. E. ALEXANDER of Lubbock, presiding bishop of the Texas Northwest jurisdiction of the Churches of God in Christ, will be featured speaker at a special mortgage-burning service at 3 p.m. today at Faith Temple Church of God in Christ, 1605 N. Terrell St. Bishop Alexander is a former Midland resident.

The Israeli leader spent the Jewish Sabbath at his hotel until sundown when he began the official part of his six-day visit to Britain. Then he rode to Callaghan's residence in a convoy of vehicles flanked by police. Other police cordoned off the street and kept a small group of Palestinian demonstrators 200 yards away and out of sight.

Begin left all aides and advisors behind and met alone with Callaghan, who was the first Western leader to be briefed personally on Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's peace mission to Jerusalem two weeks ago.

British officials have declared that Sadat's inititives could result in a separate Israeli-Egyptian peace that would set back chances for an over-all Mideast settlement and disrupt Arab oil supplies to the West.

Israel has been trying to get Britain to halt arms sales to Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Kuwait and to try to soften the European Common Market's support for a Palestinian homeland. Foreign Secretary David Owen has said Britain feels there is a need for such a homeland but not necessarily a sovereign state.

After the talks, the two leaders joined their wives for a dinner at the official residence. Sixty guests attended, including Owen; former Prime Minister Sir Harold Wilson; Joe Gormley, a leader of the coal miners' union, and John Davies, the foreign affairs spokesman for Britain's opposition Conservative Party.

Police questioning 'strangler' suspect

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A man being questioned in connection with the strangulation deaths of 10 young women in the Los Angeles area was held in lieu of $20,000 bail Saturday after being booked for investigation of robbery and rape in a separate case, police said.

Officer Carlos Figueroa, spokesman for the 42-member special task force investigating the so-called Hillside Strangler case, said Bennett Merrett, a 26-year-old clothing salesman from the desert community of Hesperia, will appear in a lineup next week.

MC early registration scheduled

Early registration and counseling for the spring semester at Midland College will open Monday, according to registrar Dee Windsor.

Students may pre-register from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays in the Office of Student Affairs in the Administration Building or from 5:30 to 9 p.m. Monday through Thursday in room 130 of the Science-Faculty Office Building.

Early registration will continue through Dec. 16. It will resume Jan. 3 after the holiday season and will run through Jan. 10. Regular registration will be held Jan. 11 and 12. Classes for the spring semester will begin Jan. 16.

Windsor said it is important to pre-register as early as possible because the time when students pre-register determines when they can go through regular registration.

A listing of all daytime and night-time classes and labs with corresponding times and instructors is included in the 1978 Spring Bulletin. Copies of the bulletin can be picked up in the Office of Student Services.

Alcoholism seminar set

BIG SPRING — The 30th alcoholism seminar, conducted by the Big Spring State Hospital Alcoholism Program, will be held Friday in the auditorium at the Big Spring State Hospital.

The monthly seminars are held in conjunction with the Big Spring Veterans' Administration Hospital and Howard College. The theme for this seminar will be "Back to the Basics." Jacquelyn Small, director of training for the Texas Commission on Alcoholism in Austin, will be the consultant for the seminar.

Registration will begin at 8 a.m. with the general session beginning at 9 a.m. Adjournment will be at 4 p.m. A registration fee of $1 will be charged with an additional $1 charge for those wishing to receive Continuing Education units from Howard College.

Additional information may be obtained from Clyde Alsup, training officer for the Alcoholism Unit at Big Spring State Hospital.

Lawyer's plan would expedite legal process

By MARGARET GENTRY

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dan Meador calls himself a "traveling salesman," peddling an idea that might help citizens get quicker decisions when they take their disputes to court.

As an assistant attorney general, Meador carries the authority of the Justice Department when he tries to persuade federal judges to test his proposal for arbitrating disputes instead of scheduling them for the usual lengthy round of hearings and a trial.

A former University of Virginia law professor, Meador was appointed to run the department's new Office for Improvements in the Administration of Justice. After nine months on the job, he has a grab bag of ideas for improving a court system which he calls "expensive, slow, inefficient and not altogether fair."

The arbitration proposal may be the first to take effect because most of the other ideas require legislation.

Federal judges in Connecticut and the eastern district of Pennsylvania, which includes Philadelphia, tentatively have agreed to test the arbitration plan. Meador said he hopes to line up a third test district and put the plan to work within a few weeks.

The plan would affect companies or individuals who file federal civil suits seeking money damages of up to $50,000. These cases would be referred to a panel of three arbitrators who would hear the arguments and arrive at a settlement.

If either party rejected it, the case could be carried to the federal district court for trial, as if no arbitration had occurred.

Meador said the proposal offers the promise of much more rapid settlement of the thousands of civil disputes which bog down the 94 federal courts.

Cities conference meeting in S.F.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The annual Congress of Cities convened Saturday to review the urban policies and politics of 1977, a year when long-term economic and job problems largely overshadowed a strengthening in municipal finances.

It is the year Chicago's Richard Daley died and New York's Abraham Beame was bounced out of city hall. A flood of federal dollars flowed to the cities, and the Carter administration began work on a national urban policy.

The 4,500 delegates to the five-day National League of Cities conference also will look ahead to 1978 when Congress will debate taxes, welfare reform and President Carter's first federal budget.

Compared with the social turmoil of the 1960s and the financial turmoil of the mid-70s, 1977 has been quiet for the cities. There was good news as the nation continued a slow recovery from the 1975 recession, increasing municipal revenues and diminishing debt levels. There was also bad news as city officials reflected on fundamental economic problems and racial tension.

As a whole, municipal budgets showed a big improvement in 1977, but many cities became increasingly dependent on federal help. Thousands of workers in cities large and small are now paid by the federal government.

With Democrats in charge at the White House and on Capitol Hill, cities benefited from the $20.4-billion economic stimulus program which included money for public service jobs, public works projects, and revenue sharing targeted to hardship cities.

Despite the influx of federal funds, the urban employment picture remains bleak, especially for black and Spanish-surnamed teenagers who live in the nation's biggest cities. With four of every 10 minority youths out of work, Congress provided $1 billion for a new youth jobs program.

Troubled cities such as Detroit, Boston and Yonkers, N.Y., are only one job going into the central cities.

This means cities must face the future with declining jobs and tax bases. As an urban policy report prepared for President Carter puts it, "Jobs and people with good jobs continue to move out of the cities, to the edge of the metropolitan areas and beyond."

As central city populations become poorer and as inflation increases the cost of providing services, it has become more difficult for cities to pay their own way. The federal government, in 1977, increased its presence in city hall dramatically.

Through the stimulus program, the federal government is now funding almost 500,000 local public service jobs. Major public works programs for city and county governments are being paid with federal dollars, and special revenue sharing money is pouring into hardship communities — many of which must use the money to meet payrolls.

Christmas party set

The annual Christmas party of the Midland Downtown Lions Club will be held Thursday night in the ballroom of the Midland Hilton, President Garland Chapman said Saturday.

A social period will begin at 6:30 p.m., with dinner to be served at 7:30.

The guest speaker will be Orville Kelly of Burlington, Iowa. His subject will be: "Wanda and Orville Kelly Asked for a Miracle. God's Answer Could Change Your Life, Too."

Chapman said a near capacity attendance is expected for the ladies-night function.

Lamesa man killed

POST — A 23-year-old Lamesa man was killed and two persons were injured late Friday when the 1968 pickup they were riding in failed to negotiate a curve near here and rolled over several times.

Department of Public Safety investigators said Sammy Magallan died when the westbound pickup turned over four miles southwest of here on FM 1313 about 7:45 p.m. Friday.

Two other occupants of the vehicle, 18-year-old Elidio Lopez and 20-year-old Ray Magallan, both of Lamesa, were treated and released at a Post hospital.

Meeting set

The Midland City Council PTA will hold its monthly meeting Monday beginning at 1:30 p.m. in Sam Houston School. The Lee High School Choir will present the program.

It was Saturday morning, and the shopping center wasn't yet bustling with lookers and buyers. By early afternoon, though, it would.

Presently, a couple of kids came your way. Now, you would see how the Santa Claus experiment would work.

Brandi and Shawn Fast sat down next to Santa.

"No, you're not Santa Claus," observed 8-year-old Brandi. "You got Santa Claus's clothes on," she said.

Brandi was so observant, forthright and painfully honest.

Like most kids atuned to the Santa Claus myth, Brandi probably knew that genuine Santa Claus impersonators wear long white beards.

At it turned out, this particular Santa was wearing his very own brown, sometimes reddish brown, beard. Maybe it was vanity, or maybe ol' Roustin' About wanted to give Santa a new, "younger" look.

On the other hand, this "new breed" of Santa was wearing a couple of pillows for that well-rounded look.

Brandi wasn't fooled.

Anyway, her brother Shawn, 6, beat her in answering the most common of all Santa Claus questions: "What do you want for Christmas?"

"I want to tell you what I want for Christmas," Shawn said.

Shawn said he wanted a "Mousetrap," which is some type of game and not a utilitarian device, and "a bike with training wheels on it."

Brandi said she wanted a bicycle without those extra wheels.

Shawn threw in an extra gift request: a CB radio, and then left with his sister.

First on Santa's lap was a cute blonde, Shannon Shervin, 4. All she wanted was a Mousetrap, a bicycle with training wheels and a purse.

Cute.

Surprise, surprise, surprise.

Another "pretty little thing" happened by, and, with a little coaxing, sat on the edge of Santa Claus's lap.

"Santa," she said, "I want a million dollars for Christmas." She, being friendly Lana Cunningham and somewhat more sophisticated and 21 years older than darling Shannon, wanted more. Much more.

"I want Robert Redford, Dustin Hoffman, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera." Miss Cunningham, a darling herself and a writer, got up and left without any promises.

Next to see the bearded man was Chad Ford, 6.

"Hello, Santa Claus," Chad said, as he and Santa exchanged handshakes. Darren Jobe, another 6-year-old, was there, too.

"I believe in Santa Claus," said Chad, who didn't mention what he wanted for Christmas.

Darren did.

"I want a BB gun," he said.

"You've already got a BB gun," Chad told him.

"It's my brother's," Darren replied.

"Oh."

Then along came 8-year-old Linda Schmidt.

"I don't know what I want," she told Santa.

Santa spoke again.

"Don't you think I'm the real Santa Claus?" Santa asked doubting Linda.

"No, not really," she said.

Over on Santa's left-hand side were Ronda McVey, 9, and Tracy Bryant, 7. Santa turned toward them. And before he could even utter a "ho, ho, ho," Ronda yelled to Tracy: "Let's get out of here!"

And they did. They got up and ran. But they were just playing a game. They returned, chatted a bit and got shed of their curiosity and giggles.

Santa, pushed-out belly and all, got up and started to wander around, just like he did a bit earlier, when a fully-grown gal accused him of eating "too much fruitcake."

But when Santa got up this time, he was faced with a tearful Jonathan Ward, 18 months old, and a less-than-cheerful Lisa Hernandez, who was two months older. For them, Christmas could wait.

But Staci Pinkerton, 4, of Odessa, was eager to share her dreams of Christmas-to-come with ol' St. Nick.

"I want a doll," she said. Her grandmother, Wanda Robertson, was listening in.

Next before Santa was one gentleman of a lad, Eric Caraway, 8.

"I want a Big Foot (whatever that is), and I want a puppy dog — not a real one," he said. Eric said he wanted a look-alike of Charlie Brown's Snoopy.

"See ya on Christmas eve," earnest Eric told Santa. He said he'd leave some snacks on the table for Santa come Christmas eve.

That was nice, really nice.

"It's not the best impersonation in the world," he told the Santa without the flowing white beard. "It gives us a black eye."

Ouch!

Never mind. Santa could have patched up that "black eye" by fetching and putting on that fake white beard and white wig.

But this Santa Claus chose to buck tradition in the fabled world of St. Nicholas. Why not use your own beard?

Besides, the youngsters didn't seem to notice, anyway. Or if they did, it mattered not.

Christmas time is nearing. The kids want to tell Santa what they want for Christmas, and Santa sure wants to listen.

No fooling, either.

Farmers in five states rally to support strike

By The Associated Press

Farmers in five states took to their tractors by the hundreds to rally in support of higher farm prices Saturday, 11 days before the deadline for a planned nationwide strike.

Rallies in Georgia, Nebraska, Michigan, Texas and Missouri were organized by American Agriculture, a grassroots organization that is trying to bring pressure on the federal government for 100 percent parity, ensuring crop prices will exceed production costs and provide a profit.

At full parity, farmers theoretically have the same purchasing power for the items they sell as their forebears had early in this century when prices and costs were said to be in step. By comparison, farm prices as of Nov. 15 averaged 66 percent of parity, one of the lowest marks for the indicator in 44 years.

In Georgia, rallies involving a total of about 1,300 tractors were held in three communities to generate enthusiasm for a major "tractorcade" to the state Capitol in Atlanta next Saturday.

About 400 tractors rolled through Tifton in south Georgia and gathered for a rally in front of a downtown bank attended by state and local officials. Other rallies were held in Blakely, in southwest Georgia, and Waynesboro, in the eastern part of the state.

Nearly 400 farmers drove tractors into Poplar Bluff, Mo., while crop dusters buzzed overhead. The Butler County Sheriff's Department said it had called in about 15 extra deputies to handle crowds along Highway 67 on the edge of the city, where tractors were strung out in a long slow-moving line.

Many of the tractors were decked in American flags and hand-lettered signs. One read: "This tractor costs $25,000, and it sure ain't paid for." Another read: "These wheels stop rolling on Dec. 14."

About 200 farmers from Indiana and Michigan took part in a mile-long caravan of tractors and combines along U.S. 12 in Coldwater, Mich. Police said the vehicles backed up traffic for about two miles for a brief period.

A two-day rally in Dallas' Texas Stadium that featured a number of country music acts drew only about 50 to 100 vehicles and organizers said they losses may run up to $100,000.

Meanwhile, Tony Dechant, president of the National Farmers Union, told about 500 delegates to the Rocky Mountain Farmers Union convention in Grand Junction, Colo., that without 100 percent parity American agriculture soon will be bankrupt.

Dechant stopped short of endorsing the nationwide strike but said in prepared remarks the group approves of members participating as individuals in "any grassroots movement" that might result in 100 percent parity.

Egypt reportedly recalls diplomats reportedly was reluctant to go along with such action.

"Although deep and thick differences prevent them from agreeing on a unified stand, these leaders met in Tripoli only to continue their dirty campaign against Egypt," Al Ahram said.

It accused the Soviets of trying to split the Arab world so that Moscow can consolidate its "shaky presence" in the area.

"But the Soviet Union knows that it is stepping towards failure and that is is deceiving its agents who will also find themselves in complete failure," the newspaper said.

his commanding officer and lived happily until June 1944, when Stallinger was shipped to France and got wounded. He was there when he learned his wife was pregnant and still there when his mother-in-law wrote of Vivien's birth and sent him a picture of his infant daughter.

"I was like an ant sitting on a hot rock," he said. "I couldn't wait to see her." But he said he was ordered back to the United States, without time to collect his family, and lost contact.

"The war ended and I kept trying. I wrote endless letters. They came back unclaimed and unanswered," Stallinger said. "For years, I kept trying, not knowing if they were alive or dead."

Several years later he met Hildegard, his present wife. They were married in 1949 after he had the first marriage dissolved in court. His new wife encouraged him to keep looking for his missing daughter.

Meanwhile, Vivien was learning about her American father even though her mother and grandmother had given up their search. All she knew was that he had lived somewhere in Montana. Her mother died nine years ago. Last February, her grandmother died.

"There I was — alone. My family was gone. I had to find him," Vivien said. She and her husband went to the American Embassy, the Red Cross, the Veterans Administration. In frustration, she addressed a letter: "The Veterans Administration, Montana, U.S.A."

The letter was forwarded to Stallinger, who had since moved to Miami. He called England the day he got it.

"I used to think of her ... wonder what she looked like at 9 or 10," Stallinger said. "I thought about her when she reached the age she should be dating and wondered if she would find someone good enough for her ...

"All these years I've been praying to the Good Lord that he would put me in touch with her before I passed away from the face of the earth."

Accord still missing at anti-Sadat meeting

sets a date for such a meeting.

Iraq originally sought to sabotage the Tripoli meeting by proposing the rival summit in Baghdad. Only at the last minute did Iraq agree to come here.

If Assad agrees to go to Baghdad the Iraqis can be expected to claim that his presence there symbolizes a public admission of his errors in the long and violent dispute between the nations ruled by rival branches of the Baath Socialist Party.

If no Baghdad meeting is set, Iraq will have been rebuffed.

The whole scope of the anti-Sadat front could be brought into question without a public show of reconciliation — no matter how fragile it may prove to be in the light of similar short-lived agreements in the past.

Informed sources reported that all parties except Iraq had agreed to concessions after the first two days of formal and informal talks failed to break the deadlock.

Weather to be warm

Winter's official starting date may be only 17 days away, but you couldn't tell it by Midland's current weather trend.

With winter due to arrive on Dec. 21, today's high may belie that by stirring up a little local perspiration. The temperature is expected to reach into the upper 70s, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal.

The nearly hot weather may come as good news to some leisure-minded West Texans but this is hunting season—and the deer and quail hunters are hardly getting a break in that regard.

The low temperature reading today should be in the mid-40s, the weatherman said, with more of the same on the way—high in the 70s, low in the 40s—for Monday.

For today, winds are to be northwesterly at 10 to 15 mph, turning light and variable tonight.

Midland youth 'very critical'

Thomas Roger Starr, 15, of Route 3, Midland, was undergoing surgery late Saturday night following injuries he suffered in a motorcycle-pickup truck mishap 3½ miles south of Midland.

Starr was listed in "very critical" condition in Midland Memorial Hospital.

He suffered head and chest injuries and broken arms and legs when the motorcycle he was riding struck the rear of a truck driven by Francisco DeLeon of Fort Stockton.

The accident occurred about 5:45 p.m. Saturday on U.S. Hwy. 349, as DeLeon was pulling his truck over to the side of the highway, said a spokesman for the Texas Department of Public Safety. Both vehicles were northbound, the spokesman added.

The mishap was investigated by DPS Trooper Ronnie Watson of Midland.

Hearings resume Monday on oil field rule changes

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Efforts to change operating regulations of the big East Texas oil field begin again Monday afternoon before the Railroad Commission.

The first week of the expected long hearing ended Friday with representatives of the field's major producers cross-examining witnesses for Cities Service Oil Co.

In addition to reviewing the reservoir performance and considering requests for an increased rate of production, General American Oil Co. has an application before the commission to divide the field into two fields.

General American maintains that an underground water wedge beginning in the Kilgore area and cutting eastward toward the center of the reservoir has effectively split the field into north and south sections. General American says there should be separate production and conservation treatment for the north and south sections.

Other proposals being considered by the commission in the hearing include:

—Increase the fieldwide production allowable and market demand factor from 86 percent to 100 percent, as the remainder of the state is classed now. Supporting the 100 percent allowable are Cities Service, Amoco Production Co., Gulf Corp., Exxon Corp. and the Mauldin-Whipple-Roberts-Moon-Scruggs oil properties. All are opposed to dividing the field.

—Reduce the per well water-oil ratio from 15 barrels of water to one barrel of oil production to 10-to-1. General American and Sun Oil Corp. want the 15-to-1 ration, whild Cities Service and Exxon want 10-to-1.

—Rescind the bonus oil allowable rule which permits operators a bonus of an additional barrel of oil for reinjection of every 15 barrels of salt water into the underground strata. Cities Service and Amoco want to eliminate the bonus while General American and Mauldin-Whipple-Roberts-Moon-Scruggs want to keep it.

Witnesses for Cities Service testified the past week that elimination of the bonus allowable and a reduction in the water-oil allowable, coupled with an increase in the market demand factor to 100 percent, would produce an estimated net increase of 19,000 barrels of oil daily throughout the field.

Lo-Vaca order consideration set

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Railroad Commission begins considerations Dec. 12 of its final order in the 5-year-old Lo-Vaca Gathering Co. rate case.

Commissioners indicated they hoped to have their final decision before Christmas.

Lo-Vaca has been operating under an interim order since Sept. 27, 1973. This order allows LoVaca to charge its customers, which include Austin, San Antonio and the Lower Colorado River Authority, the average price it has to pay producers for natural gas, plus a surcharge of 5 cents per thousand cubic feet (mcf).

The Houston-based company and its parent firm, Coastal States Producing Co., are seeking commission approval to charge its average cost of gas plus a surcharge of 16.70 cents per mcf.

Austin and other customers challenged the proposed rate, saying it would raise consumers' rates. A rate consultant for Austin has recommended to the commission that it allow Lo-Vaca to charge 5.67 cents over average gas costs.

The final order also is expected to outline Coastal States' legal and financial responsibility for keeping financially troubled Lo-Vaca solvent and the gas flowing to customers.

Poll indicates most favor ERA, abortion on demand

By EVANS WITT

WASHINGTON (AP) — A majority of Americans agrees with positions taken by the recent national women's conference in favor of the Equal Rights Amendment and abortion on demand, an Associated Press-NBC News poll shows.

The poll also found an overwhelming 92 percent of the 1,604 adults interviewed agreed with another position taken by the Houston, Texas, convention — that women doing the same work as men should be paid equal wages.

Both the ERA and abortion got majority support from both men and women. Opposition tended to come from older people, Catholics and more conservative Americans, the telephone interviews Tuesday and Wednesday found.

Fifty-three percent of the respondents said they favored passage of the ERA, which would write into the U.S. Constitution a prohibition against sexual discrimination. Thirty-seven percent said they opposed the amendment, with 10 percent unsure.

On abortion, an issue that has tied up congressional action on a major appropriations bill for months, 53 percent agreed with the statement that "Every woman who wants an abortion should be able to have one."

Opposition to abortion on demand was expressed by 43 percent, with the rest saying they were unsure.

On the issue of nondiscrimination in wages, only six percent of those interviewed said they oppose equal pay for equal work — versus 92 percent in favor of equal treatment. Two percent said they were not certain.

The ERA drew wide support in the poll, with men slightly more positive than women. Fifty-six percent of the men favored passage, while 50 percent of the women backed the amendment.

With this poll, as with every sample survey, the results can vary from the actual views of all Americans simply because of chance variations in the sample. For a poll of 1,604 adults, it can be said with 95 percent confidence that interviews with all Americans would vary no more than three percentage points up or down from the results of the AP-NBC News poll.

Tree sales slack, but expected to increase

ALAMOGORDO, N.M. — Although Christmas tree sales have been lean thus far, National Forest officials say they expect business to spruce up shortly with the rapid approach of Christmas.

Only 1,100 trees were sold during the first week, Lincoln National Forest Supervisor Jim Abbott said. But nobody in the forest service is exactly pining, as the supply of trees is limited.

Numbers of permits for trees remaining for sale are 1,800 in the Smokey Bear Ranger District in Ruidoso; 3,300 in the Cloudcroft Ranger District in Cloudcroft; 950 in Guadalupe Ranger District in Carlsbad; and 400 in the Mayhill Ranger District in Mayhill.

"With sales expected to peak over the next two weeks, those wanting to cut their own trees should come early, as once these trees are sold, there will be no more available this year," said Jim Abbott, Lincoln National Forest supervisor.

Pecan show slated to begin Thursday

Deadline for entering pecans is 9 a.m., and 1:30 p.m. for baked goods.

"If you have a tree and don't know what variety it is, this is your chance to have it identified. Judges will be able to tell what variety tree it comes from," said Martin County Agent Preston Faris.

There will be a youth and adult division in the food shows with categories in bread, cookies, pies, cakes, candy and miscellaneous.

The grand champion food item will receive a cash prize of $25, Faris said.

Pecans and baked goods will be auctioned at 5:30 p.m.

Testimony due Monday in Texas' golden eagle trial

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Testimony is scheduled to begin Monday in the federal court trial here of three Central Texas men charged with conspiracy and airborne hunting and killing of endangered golden eagles.

The case is believed to be the first of its kind to be prosecuted in Texas, a spokesmen in the U.S. attorney's office said.

Jury selection was completed last week after U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr. rejected a bid by defense lawyers to delay the trial.

Facing trial on a nine-count indictment are Real County Commissioner Lanny Leinweber, ranch foreman Norman M. Pape and former government trapper Andrew Allen.

Federal law protects eagles, but no state law prohibits them from being hunted.

Sheep and goat ranchers in Real County have contended the eagle is one of the predators that prey on sheep and other ranch animals.

Sources in the case have indicted that eagle kills in Real County were "massive" and as many as 100 of the birds may have been killed.

The indictment against Allen, Pape and Leinweber charges that five kills occured on three occasions in 1975 and a fourth on Jan. 11, 1977.

Allen was being paid as a predator trapper in Uvalde County under a cooperative program between the state and federal governments, a spokesman for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service said.

The predator hunting is limited, however, to killing coyotes, bobcats, red fox and dog-coyote cross-breeds.

Leinweber, 40, a rancher in addition to a county commissioner, has denied killing eagles.

"We had a helicopter out there, but we were hunting coyotes," he stated after his arrest in September.

Real County, located in the Texas Hill Country, is a sheep, goat and cattle-raising territory northwest of San Antonio.

The killing of eagles has become a political issue in the past since livestock raisers have sometimes sought exemptions from the federal hunting ban for economic reasons.

Gov. Dolph Briscoe fowarded such a request from the Texas Sheep and Goat Raisers Association a year ago to the Department of Interior, but the department refused to grant a permit to kill the eagles.

Chair factory flourishes despite relative isolation

By JULES LOH

BEN'S BRANCH, Ark. (AP) — Everyone knows that a factory will surely fail if it is not located near the Interstate, or at least on the banks of a great waterway.

Ben's Branch is hardly a great waterway. Nor is Big Creek, which you have to ford twice to get to Ben's Branch, since Big Creek flows right across the road leading here. The road is hardly the Interstate, either, as it is made of unmistakable dirt.

Even so, the factory operated here by Charles Christian and his brother-in-law, Jack McCutcheon, flourishes.

"We have all the work we can handle," Charles Christian said. "We're way behind on orders now."

Charles Christian and Jack McCutcheon make chairs.

The way they make chairs is as old as the hills, the Ozark hills that surround them, isolate them, comfort and inspire them, and, back in pioneer times, gave birth to their vanishing craft.

They use no nails or screws or even glue to hold their chairs together, yet they seem as durable as the hills, too.

Hundreds of chairs made by Jim Nichols, Charles Christian's father-in-law, are still in daily use in homes throughout the Ozarks, and so are some of the chairs made by Jim Nichols' father.

Jim Nichols, at 73, still wanders out to his shop occasionally to make a chair, just to feel worthwhile, but is satisfied that Charles and Jack were good learners and the venerable Ozark art entrusted to him lives on.

The chairs vary little in design. They are made of native hardwood, oak generally, or black walnut, with ladder backs gently curved and seats woven of inch-wide strips cut from the inner bark of the bitternut hickory. The design and the materials have satisfied the eye and the sense of frugality of generations, and continue to satisfy.

"Uncle Jim told me he never in all his life had one of his chairs brought back for repair," Charles Christian said. "Well, neither have we."

Sure enough, a Christian or McCutcheon chair, and even an ancient Nichols chair, can support the weight of a doubting critic balancing the thing on one leg, without the slightest wobble. They seem to be made for tilting back in, feet on a porch rail, the best way to witness an Ozark sunset.

The Christians and McCutcheons represent the entire population of Ben's Branch. At one time the community was more populous, with its own post office. The deserted post office became Charles's shop when he went into the chair business full-time 15 years ago; now he has to drive 10 miles on that rutted dirt road to the hamlet of Mount Judea (pronounced Mount Judy, locally) to mail his chairs to customers too far away, or too lacking in nerve, to drive to Ben's Branch to get them.

"We get orders from all over," Charles said, "from people we don't even know. I guess word gets around."

"Why, Charles, with some modern machinery and a crew of helpers you could expand this into a really big operation, winced.

"Then they wouldn't be couldn't you?"

The chairmaker my chairs," he said.

12 die, 150 hurt in train accident

VEREENIGING, South Africa (AP) — A freight train plowed into the back of a standing passenger train at a station near here Saturday, killing 12 persons and injuring more than 150, a railway spokesman said.

The collision derailed five passenger coaches and the two electric locomotives pulling the freight train. Two passenger cars were crushed.

South African Railways launched an immediate inquiry into the collision, which took place at 11 a.m. at Kleigrond station, just outside this city 50 miles south of Johannesburg.

All the dead and most of the injured were were blacks. Under South Africa's segregation laws blacks ride in the rear cars of a train, and these took the brunt of the collision.

Two new speech courses offered

Two new speech courses, Developmental Speech and Interpersonal Communication are being offered to Midland College students as they sign up for classes for the spring semester.

Developmental Speech is designed to help persons who have a weakness in expressing themselves in oral language, have an excessive fear of speaking or have difficulty in the expressive aspects of oral English, Jerry Watson, speech instructor at the college, said.

The course is not intended as a therapy program and is not designed to correct specific speech disorders.

The other course, Interpersonal Communication, will cover some of the more serious problems that hinder people from effectively communicating and relating with each other while seeking possible solutions.

"This course will deal with such subjects as self-awareness, communication defenses, listening, non-verbal behavior, general semantics and cultural communication," Watson said.

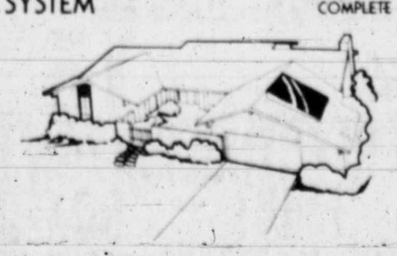

Early registration for the spring semester at the college will start Monday and will continue through Jan. 10. Regular registration will be held Jan. 11 and 12.

SOLAR WATER HEATING
...THE SENSIBLE FUEL SAVER

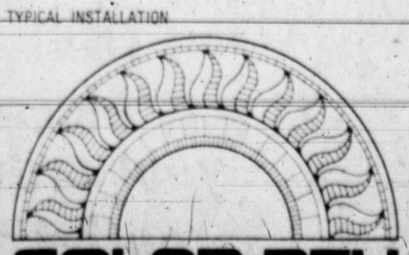

Solar energy is the sensible alternative to using coal, oil, natural gas or electricity... because it is plentiful, non-polluting, available, and free. Solar Rey can provide a family of four with approximately 75% of their hot water for $995.00, plus installation. Based on the present cost of electricity, a Solar Rey water heating system can pay for itself within a very few years when compared to water heating systems using electricity. One can, therefore, expect even a speedier pay-off with the continued increase in cost of electricity and gas. Solar water heating is the sensible fuel saver of the future and it's here now! The Solar Rey high efficiency collection system captures and stores the energy from the sun and then transfers that energy in the form of heat to provide hot water. The use of solar energy to heat water provides virtually cost-free operation. The only power required to operate the circulation pump costs only pennies a day. The Solar Rey collectors mount on the roof and are freeze proof and boil proof.

The colorful Christmas ballet will have its annual performance at 8 p.m. Thursday in the auditorium of Lee High School. Featured in the performance will be members of the senior and junior companies of Permian Civic Ballet, joined by a number of guest dancers. They include Anne Burton of Atlanta as the Sugarplum Fairy, Bill Martin-Viscount of Fort Worth as the Prince Cavalier, and Glenn Edgerton of Beaumont, Douglas Woodall of McAllen, Mark Rhodes of Wichita, Kan., and Tadd Robicheaux of Houston.

Joining the dancers will be a large number of Midlanders who will be appearing in the Act 1 party scene. Among them will be Janet Overton as the mother, Jay H. Floyd as the father, Gloria McHargue as the grandmother, Dale Land as Herr Drosselmeyer. Land also will be seen as the comical Mother Ginger.

The roles of Clara and Fritz, the children who are taken on a magic journey to the Kingdom of Sweets, are assigned to Elise deCompiegne and James Caruthers.

"The Nutcracker," originally choreographed by Lev Ivanov to music by Peter Illitch Tchaikovsky, had its initial production in Russia in the late 19th Century. The ballet was first presented in the U.S. in the 1940s. In more recent years, annual productions of the beloved ballet have become Christmas traditions in numerous cities across the nation.

Permian Civic Ballet's production is staged by Bill Martin-Viscount. Howard Parsons is technical director, Audrey Walker is rehearsal director and Mrs. Patrick Lipscomb is company manager. Stage manager of the production is Georgia Harston, assisted by Lita Lauterbach. Thomas K. Burton is in charge of lighting, Chic Murphy is costume chairman and Mrs. Wilson Comola is in charge of properties.

Season tickets for Permian Civic Ballet's "Nutcracker" presentation and its "Spring Gala" next April are now on sale and may be purchased in the Lee auditorium lobby before performance time Thursday night. Single tickets for the "Nutcracker" performance also will be for sale there.

ENTERTAINMENT

Stitchery on display in lobby of theater

The comedy by Britain's Alan Ayckbourn is Midland Community Theatre's final production of its 1977 membership year. The show will have a matinee performance at 2:30 p.m. today, for which tickets will be on sale one hour in advance of curtain time. Additional performances are scheduled for 8 p.m. Thursday and 8:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday. Seat reservations for these presentations may be made through the box office, 682-2544.

Mrs. Aldredge, the featured artist at Theatre Centre, majored in costume design and textiles at Texas Woman's University, Texas Christian University and the Universidad Interamericana. She has had special study in weaving and design with a number of noted artist-teachers and has exhibited her stitchery at such well-known art and craft shows as Kermezaar in El Paso, Septemberfest in Midland, the 500 Inc., at Dallas, the Jazz and Heritage Festival at New Orleans and the Texas State Arts and Crafts Festival at Kerrville. She also has exhibited at Laguna Gloria at Austin and at Chautauqua, N. Y. Her work has been featured on covers of Texas Architect Magazine and Decorating With Crafts magazine.

Holiday concerts slated

Gala Christmas concerts are scheduled next week to continue the Midland-Odessa Symphony's current season.

The third pair of season subscription concerts will be at 8 p.m. Dec. 12 in Odessa's Bonham Junior High School and 8 p.m. Dec. 13 in Lee High School auditorium here. Single tickets will be available for purchase at the doors each night.

Highlighting the dual concerts will be performances of Robert Schumann's Concerto in A for piano and orchestra. Young Belgian pianist Anne-Marie Levine will be guest artist with the orchestra.

Another highlight will be the "surprise" visit by Santa Claus, who will conduct one number at each concert.

Joining the orchestra and guest artist in the concert pair will be the symphony's Chorale and youth choirs from Odessa and Midland schools.

Dr. Tom Hohstadt, symphony conductor and musical director, will be on the podium for the concert pair.

Sally Field comic, romantic

By JOSEPH GELMIS
Newsday

Sally Field is one of the ablest young comediennes at work today on the American screen. She proves it by her comic, romantic sparring with Burt Reynolds in "Smokey and the Bandit" and Henry Winkler in "Heroes."

Up until this year, Ms. Field might have had a fair chance at any time in the 1970s to parlay performances such as hers into a nomination for critical or industry awards. There were so few female roles with any dimension that five Oscar nominations for actresses couldn't conscientiously be filled without sifting through such B movies as the two in which Ms. Field was featured this year.

But this year, actresses are back in vogue again in Hollywood's prestige pictures. And there are already more good actresses in substantive roles than can easily share the press and industry spotlight.

The light shines brightest on high-visibility showcases such as "Julia" (Jane Fonda, Vanessa Redgrave), "The Turning Point" (Anne Bancroft, Shirley MacLaine, Leslie Browne), "New York, New York" (Liza Minelli), "Three Women" (Sissy Spacek, Shelly Duvall), "Semi-Tough" (Jill Clayburgh) and "Looking for Mr. Goodbar" and "Annie Hall" (Diane Keaton).

Ms. Field was good in the wrong movies. They were snubbed by the critics and aren't likely to win her the awards or recognition that she, if not her vehicles, already merits. Within the limits of these two on-the-road adventure movies, Ms. Field shows the spirited elan of a racehorse that's being used to plow the south 40. She ends up 1977's most notable B Movie overachiever.

In both of her pictures this year, Ms. Field plays a fugitive. She becomes the companion of a man who is also on the run. She excels at the comradely give and take of the heterosexual buddy movie. She's bright, feisty, vulnerable, a romantic who hasn't stopped looking for love or following her instincts whatever the consequences.

"Smokey and the Bandit" was an expert CB chase movie that did poorly in the New York area, but became rural America's delight and earned about $30 million as one of the year's big box office hits. Ms. Field played a stranded chorus girl who nearly marries a sheriff's (Jackie Gleason's) dumb son, reconsiders, jilts him and hitches a ride with a passing bootlegger (Reynolds). The sheriff demolishes his car in a high-speed, multi-state pursuit of them.

The interplay between Ms. Field and Reynolds—her Broadway and his Nashville country boy repartee — has more panache than one has a right to expect from a film whose real stars are stunt men and souped up automobiles.

"Heroes" was a shambles. Ms. Field, however, looked good. Henry Winkler fared less well in his first starring movie role.

FORMER MISS AMERICA Laurie Lea Schaefer will be featured in The Mansion dinner theater's holiday production, "I Do! I Do!", opening Tuesday night. The mini-musical by Tom Jones and Harvey Schmidt will also feature opera and concert singer Tom McKinney of New York. "I Do! I Do!" will run through Jan. 8 and reservations for all performances may be made through the theater box office, 563-1133.

Chamber music, art share museum's time

Chamber music and fine art will share the spotlight at Midland's Museum of the Southwest tonight.

The Thouvenel String Quartet of Midland will perform works of Mozart, Hugo Wolf and Beethoven in a free public concert scheduled for 8 p.m. in the museum's Turner Memorial Gallery at 1705 W. Missouri Ave. Seating will be on a first-come, first served basis.

Persons attending the chamber music recital will have opportunity for leisurely viewing of outstanding paintings from the Phillip Anschutz collection of Western art of Denver. The more than 40 paintings on current exhibition here include important examples of the work of Frederic Remington, Emil Bisttram, E. I. Couse, Nicolai Fechin, Carl Oscar Borg, George Catlin, Hermann Herzog, Gaspard Latoix, Bert Phillips, Theodore Van Soelen, Sheldon Parsons, Albert Bierstadt and Frank Mechau.

The Thouvenel Quartet will be presenting its second public program since it established residence here this season under auspices of the Midland Symphony and Chorus Association. Members of the ensemble play in the Midland-Odessa Symphony, work with the strings programs of private and public schools here, and teach privately. The quartet has performed widely since it was organized several years ago at Indiana University. A concert tour of Alaska is under consideration for next summer.

Students to display artwork

Midland College will present its annual fall student art show this week.

The exhibition of art works done by students in art classes at MC will open Tuesday in the college's Student Center and continue daily through Friday. Hours will be 8 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily except Friday, when the show closes at 5 p.m.

More than 300 art works to be on view in the show include paintings, drawings, jewelry, pottery, sculpture and weavings. Although intended primarily to showcase the creative output of Midland College art students, many of the items in the collection will be for sale.

Concert scheduled

ODESSA — The A Cappella Choir of Odessa College will present a special Christmas concert at 8 p.m. Thursday in the college's Jack Rodgers Fine Arts Center.

Traditional Christmas songs and contemporary carols will be featured in the holiday program, directed by Maurice Alfred.

In addition to the A Cappella Choir, the event also will feature the OC Singers, a 13-voice group from within the main choir.

The concert will be open to the public. Admission will be $1 per person, with tickets to be available at the doors before the start of the program.

Santa Fe art dealer Pat Griffin displays some of the choice handmade items by Santa Fe artisans which she is exhibiting through Tuesday at Museum of the Southwest. Included is a handstamped, sterling silver feather; a smaller, 14-karat cast gold feather, beadwork, and, in background, a handmade banner. She will present a special lecture in the museum at 3:30 p.m. today, open to the public. (Staff Photo by Bruce Partain)

The show, sponsored by the Shop of the Southwest inside the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., has been brought here by Pat Griffin, 'artists' representative from Santa Fe.

Griffin is presenting handblown glass by Charlie Miner, hand-painted eggs by Winston Culpepper, fiber baskets by Marge Bardacke, contemporary quilts by Bill and Patty Statham, weavings by Anna Burgess and Nancy and Januz Kozikowski, whimsical ceramic pieces by Glen LaFontain, banners and kites by Ramsey Rose.

Also featured is the show and sale is the unique "Cloud Fire" pottery of Carl and Mary Witkop of Pilar, N. M.

Griffin will be featured in a "Shop Talk" program in the museum at 3:30 p.m. today, open to the public. She will show color slides of various artisans at work and will also show a film on the Witkops and their method of pottery making, which involves no firing.

The collection of fine crafts also includes original jewelry, unique Christmas ornaments, unique wooden toys, silk scarves in unusual designs, and enamel pieces.

The crafts show is on display in the museum's Turner Galleries. It will be on view to the public between 2 and 5 p.m. today, and before and after the chamber music program to be presented in the museum tonight by the Thouvenel Quartet of Midland. That program, scheduled for 8 p.m., will be open to the public at no charge.

Ex rock stars find new home

By JOE EDWARDS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The age of slicked-back hair has gone the way of the fallout shelter. Former bobby-soxers now are raising teen-agers themselves.

But the legacy of rock 'n' roll remains. There's a definite "shake, rattle and roll" influence on the Nashville music industry.

It's because several rock 'n' roll stars from the '50s and '60s work in Nashville in behind-the-scenes jobs like publishing and arranging.

There simply are so many music-industry jobs in Nashville — not only in country music — that the ex-rockers naturally gravitated here.

One of them is Bill Justis, whose "Raunchy" sold 10 million copies 20 years ago. He's now an arranger.

"I made a record and got lucky with it," he said. "I went on the road for six months and found out I wasn't a star. Like tobacco, I performed a service."

Echoing the opinion of several others, Justis said much of the rock music 20 years ago would be considered country today. "Pop is more sophisticated than it used to be," he said.

Jimmy Gilmer, whose group, The Fireballs, recorded "Sugar Shack" in 1963 and "Bottle of Wine" in 1968, is general manager of United Artists' music publishing group here.

"Music of the late 1950s and '60s is very similar to country music today," he said. "That's why a lot of us filtered here.

"I left the band to go to California because I figured my best shot was there," he said. "Nothing panned out. I called a friend who said to go to Nashville. I said I didn't know anything about country music. But I came and ran into people I knew and grew up with.

"Publishing is very interesting. You're still working with artists and songs."

Gary S. Paxton, now a producer and songwriter, recorded the million-seller "Alley Oop" with the Hollywood Argyles in 1960.

And Jimmy Bowen, who had the big rock hit "I'm Stickin' With You," spends a lot of his time here producing and writing.

Some ex-rockers are still going strong as Nashville-based performers. Conway Twitty switched from rock to become a country music star and the singing partner of Loretta Lynn. Carl Perkins, who cut the classic "Blue Suede Shoes" in 1956, is a member of Johnny Cash's road show. Buzz Cason, who recorded the rock hit "Look for a Star" under the name Gary Miles, is a country singer-writer. And Roy Orbison, with hits like "Pretty Woman," "Only The Lonely," "I'm Crying" and "Running Scared," is especially popular abroad.

PPH slates matinee 'Lark' performance

ODESSA — Permian Playhouse, Odessa's community theater, will offer a matinee performance of its current attraction, "The Lark," at 2:30 p.m. today.

"The Lark" is French playwright Jean Anouilh's dramatization of the story of Joan of Arc, the French national heroine. The play was adapted for the American stage by Lillian Hellman.

Tickets for today's performance of "The Lark" will be on sale in advance of curtain time. Additional presentations are scheduled for 8 p.m. Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Seat reservations may be made through the box office, 362-2329.

America holds surprise for French student

By MARLEEN RAY

When 18-year-old Francoise Meny first rode in an airplane over West Texas on her way to Midland, she expected to see a large number of horses and ranches. Instead, her first impression of this area was that everything seemed so "flat and dry."

Although, she was used to the greenery and temperate climate of her home in Nice, France, Miss Meny said she likes Midland's weather and topography.

Miss Meny is one of several high-school age students from all over the world who have come to the United States with the help of Youth For Understanding, a non-profit international student exchange program. Youth For Understanding arranges for the student to live with a family while in the United States. The family receives no reimbursement from the program for taking care of the student. Miss Meny said her parents pay for her traveling expenses, and she earns her own pocket money.

Arriving in Midland four months ago, Miss Meny is staying with Mr. and Mrs. Don Hellinghausen and their eight children, Sara, Mary, Liz, John, Nancy, Mike, Ann and Jane.

Even though Miss Meny comes from a small family—just her parents and her brother, Pierre—she didn't mind acquiring eight brothers and sisters all of a sudden. She's used to having a lot of people around her because her cousins and friends in France often visited her family's home.

With all the things she wants to see and do and with the friendliness of her host family, Miss Meny said she doesn't have time to be homesick.

On weekdays, she attends Robert E. Lee High School, studying Spanish, physiology, American history, physical education, English and art. She said she enjoys Spanish and physiology best, and although she likes history, too, she finds it hard to study in English.

High school here varies in several ways from school in France, Miss Meny said.

"The spirit in school here is very different," she said. In France, the students attend school strictly to study. They don't have football teams, cheerleaders, marching bands, and extracurricular activities, she said.

Also, course work in French schools is harder, and a student has little choice about what courses to take. Miss Meny said a French student must take English in the sixth grade, no matter what.

Another difference between the two high school systems is the class schedules. In France, Miss Meny said, students attend classes in much the same way as United States college students. The students do not go to school all day like they do here, she said.

After school, Miss Meny babysits an 8-year-old girl to earn pocket money.

"The first time I met the little girl she spoke very slowly so I could understand what she was saying. Sometimes she asks me about France. Whenever I make a mistake, she corrects me," Miss Meny said.

Coming to the states has helped Miss Meny improve her English. She said she couldn't speak English at all when she first got here, and, at one time, she had to write a term paper for a class in French and then translate it in English. However, some slang expressions which are typical of West Texas have confused her at times, and for a while, she couldn't pronounce "McDonald's."

Miss Meny said she has had to cope with other cultural differences between this country and France. For instance, in France, the noontime meal is the biggest meal of the day, and people there get a two-hour lunch hour. In the evening dinner is usually eaten at 8 or 9.

During these meals, the French eat with both hands, Miss Meny said, cutting the meat with the knife in one hand and picking it up with a fork in the other. She found it difficult to learn to eat with one hand particularly when it came to the peas.

Other things caught her by surprise, too. She expected American society to be very modern, and the people here to be very liberal thinkers because of the movies she saw of this society while in France. Instead, she discovered Americans had a puritanical outlook. She said the way people live is very different from what outsiders say.

Portuguese premier must seek support from rivals

LISBON, Portugal (AP) — With his Socialist government seriously threatened from the right, Portuguese Premier Mario Soares is being forced to court support from his bitter Communist rivals to stay in power.

If Portugal's Moscow-line Communists agree to support him, Soares can win Tuesday's parliamentary vote of confidence in his minority government. Without the Communists, rightwing legislators could force the moderate Socialists out of office after 16 months.

Observers say the vote and the weeks after could be crucial for the survival of the first democratic government here in a half century and for the new European role the Socialists have planned for Portugal.

Soares asked for the confidence vote after he was unable to get agreement on ways to revive Portugal's shaky economy. The rightist Social Democrats and Social Democratic Center said they would vote to topple the government.

The Socialists have 101 seats in the 262-seat parliament, and the two rightist parties have a total of 114. The Communists have 40 votes, and thus the power to swing the vote either way.

A few months ago, Soares said he would resign if he had to depend on the Communists. But after negotiations last week, he said that while the Socialists still intended to govern alone, Communist votes in parliament were as respectable as any others.

Police arrest Midland man

Narcotics agents and Midland police officers, acting on a search warrant, arrested a 23-year-old Midland man Friday afternoon for possession of a substance officers believed to be heroin.

Police said the search was conducted at the intersection of Lamesa Road and Scharbauer Drive at approximately 4 p.m. Friday. During the search they found three tin packets of a substance believed to be heroin, according to the arresting officers.

1940 letter to Roosevelt thought penned by Castro

By DONALD SANDERS

WASHINGTON (AP) — A letter written by Fidel Castro to Franklin D. Roosevelt in November 1940, asking for a $10 bill and saying he knew of rich iron deposits in Cuba, has just been uncovered.

Specialists at the National Archives and Records Service are convinced that the writer, then a schoolboy, is the man who is now president of Cuba.

The handwriting and the signature are similar to relatively recent examples of Castro's handwriting; he was a student at the Roman Catholic school from which the letter was sent; and the age corresponds fairly closely.

Further, Castro grew up in the area where he said rich iron mines were to be found. He did not make payment of the $10 a condition for supplying such information. The offer was more or less a postscript.

Written on a lined schoolboy's tablet and containing some misspellings, the letter to "my good friend Roosvelt" expresses happiness that Roosevelt has just been re-elected to a third term. It continues:

"I am 12 years old. I am a boy but I think very much but I do not think that I am writting to the President of the United States.

"If you like, give me a ten dollars bill green american, in the letter, because never, I have not seen a ten dollars bill green american and I would like to have one of them...

"If you want iron to make your ships I will show to you the biggest (mines) of iron of the land. They are in Mayari, Oriente, Cuba."

The letter has just been found bound in a volume of old State Department documents being examined by the Archives' records declassification division by Byran T. vanSweringen.

The writer did not get the $10 he asked for. The letter was sent to the U.S. ambassador in Havana for acknowledgement. Castro got this somewhat unresponsive reply:

"Dear Fidel:

"The President has directed the embassy to acknowledge, with an expression of appreciation, your letter of Nov. 6, 1940, written on the occasion of his re-election."

The letter was signed by Willard L. Beaulac, embassy counselor, who has told officials he has no recollection of the incident.

Flood waters recede

SEATTLE (AP) — Rampaging major rivers in western Washington that killed at least four persons receded Saturday as highway crews worked around the clock to patch roads and thousands of homeowners began sifting mud from their belongings.

The flooding struck hardest in Snohomish County, north of Seattle, and in Cowlitz County and the Grays Harbor areas on the coast.

Among the dead were a Fort Lewis soldier missing after falling into a swollen creek near the fort, an Ariel man swept into the Lewis River, a Portland man whose vehicle was buried by a slide and an elderly woman whose home fell into a river at Aberdeen.

Authorities said the woman, 71-year-old Blanche Jones, died in bed when her house was lifted from its foundations and carried about 50 feet. A neighbor of the victim, Robert Buck, said he was awakened about 6:30 a.m. by "a horrible noise, cracking like thunder."

He said the roof of his house ripped open as another house plowed over it during a mudslide. He was rescued by another neighbor in a rowboat.

Almost 5½ inches of rain fell in Aberdeen in the 24 hours ending at 8 a.m. Friday.

Although officials kept watch on dikes holding back brown, debris-filled streams running over banks, skies were clear over much of the state and showers only were predicted through the weekend.

Gov. Dixy Lee Ray and Rep. Lloyd Meeds toured the affected areas, as sandbaggers continued bolstering dikes.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Heart pacemakers usually reliable

Dear Dr. Solomon: My mother had a pacemaker implanted last year because of a heart condition. So far, she seems to be doing fine, but I've read about defects turning up sometimes in pacemakers. How much of a risk do you think this is?—Emmie D.

Dear Emmie: Pacemakers, as you may very well know, get the heart to beat at the right speed by means of tiny electrical impluses. They really are one of the big advances in treating heart block—either a partial or a total failure in the heart's natural electrical system. Their record so far is very good, and they are being improved all the time.

The Journal of the American Medical Association recently carried a report on an extremely encouraging study done at the University of Virginia. It covered over 300 patients who received pacemakers between 1961 and 1973. The average age of the patient when the device was put in was the late sixties.

Dr. Lockart M. McGuire and the other doctors involved in the survey reported that the pacemakers worked well in prolonging useful life. Most of the patients survived for a number of years, and when death did occur, it was almost always due to an ailment not related to the device.

Of the 109 patients who died, only one death was caused by failure of the pacemaker.

Recent innovations have imporved the effectiveness of the pacemaker, particularly in extending the life of the power source for four or more years. In earlier devices, the batteries had to be changed at more frequent intervals. Some models now use nuclear power.

One model developed at Penn State University has an expected life span of 20 years and can be recharged periodically by the patient—by means of a coil placed on the skin over the pacemaker.

Dr. Frank O. Tyers, one of the main developers of the new device, says this may eliminate replacement operations. Another feature is a monitoring system that enables the patient to check if the device is functioning properly.

The Penn State pacemaker has been implanted in nine Pennsylvanians, including an 83-year-old woman and three teen-agers. Heart block is most common in elderly people, but it can also strike the young because of birth defects, illness or injury.

One thing to remember is that the various models of pacemakers in use are being monitored. Under sponsorship of the Food and Drug Administration, three medical centers gather information on all registered pacemakers. If a flaw turns up, the FDA notifies all doctors and hospitals that have used the defective models so they can get in touch with their patients and correct the malfunction or replace the device.

Public notification of newly identified risks is delayed so that physicians can be first to advise their patients.

I don't think you or your mother should worry about her pacemaker. Of course, if any unusual symptoms develop, she should get in touch with her doctor right away, just as she should about any other condition for which she is under treatment.

Ferrying coal, oil, commodities makes jobs for Ohio River pilots

By STRAT DOUTHAT
Associated Press Writer

Fred Way and Tom Miller live nearly 1,000 miles apart, yet their lives are closely connected by the same great stream of twisting, turning energy that flows through the heartland of this country.

Both men live near the banks of the Ohio River. They are riverboat pilots, past and present.

Way, who received his pilot's license a half-century ago, is retired. But he still keeps close tabs on the river, editing a quarterly magazine devoted to life on the Ohio.

"It's a four-lane boulevard out here now, compared with what it used to be," he said one evening, while cruising downstream in the Delta Queen, one of two steamboats still plying the Ohio. "The river was just a narrow path back when I began. There were lots of places where you had to stop and calculate before passing a boat coming the other way."

A resident of Sewickley, Pa., Way has been a riverman for all but a handful of his 76 years. He dates back to the Ohio's grand and glorious age, when hundreds of proud steamboats churned up and down the river, carrying goods and passengers. It was an era that spawned its own, unique culture and it lasted more than a century, from the 1820s — when Indians and river pirates often preyed upon the steamboats — until the advent of the diesel engine in the 1930s.

The river today is a series of long, stable pools created by a system of locks and dams. Fifty years ago, however, the river's shifting treachery resulted in dozens of fatal accidents.

"Back when I started, the river would get so low in the summer that the boats would stop running," Way said as he sat in the Delta Queen's glassed-in pilothouse. "River people also had to be farmers in those days. All they ever talked about in the pilothouse back then was crops and hogs."

"That's right," agreed Capt. Harry Louden, 70, of Cincinnati. "The river has changed a lot since those days. We used to set our own buoys with milk cans or coffee cans, anything that would float. That was before 1929, when the Corps of Engineers finished marking and dredging the channel and building the dams."

His action released a tremendous "Ommmmm" which bounced off the surrounding hills and floated back through the darkness.

The Delta Queen was some 50 miles downstream from Pittsburgh, where the Ohio is born of the wedding of the Allegheny and the Monongahela. Between there and Wheeling, W.Va., some 80 miles downstream, the river is lined with heavy industry, especially glowing steel mills which periodically emit huge sprays of sparks that lend a rosy glow to the night sky.

The mill towns along this section of the river swelled dramatically during the early years of this century as countless thousands of Middle European emigrants answered the call of the blast furnaces. As a result, the communities not only became steel-producing centers but human melting pots as well.

But the Upper Ohio Valley's economic picture is not so rosy these days. The vast quantities of imported steel are beginning to take a toll in communities like Youngstown, Ohio, where the jobs of 5,000 steel workers recently were wiped out by a mill closing.

These closings are becoming commonplace. While some milltowns are still prosperous, others — such as McKees Rocks, just a rifle shot downstream from Pittsburgh — are suffering from rising unemployment and dwindling tax bases, due to mill closings. The result is massive urban decay, accompanied by growing crime and welfare costs.

But the Upper Ohio's mill towns still produce one-third of this nation's steel. And the coal industry is booming along the upper regions of the valley, in Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia.

This has called for a flourishing barge traffic in the Ohio. Industry sources estimate these barges carried some 140 million tons of coal, coke, oil, steel and gasoline up and down the river last year. On almost any given day, dozens of towboats and hundreds of barges can be seen chugging back and forth along the 981-mile stretch of river between Pittsburgh and Cairo, Ill., where the Ohio empties into the Mississippi.

The crewmen aboard these towboats are no longer the heroic figures of the past when Mark Twain glamorized life on the river. Today's rivermen are an almost anonymous breed, spending long, lonely hours performing demanding and dangerous tasks.

Many of the crews operating on the Ohio begin their journeys weeks earlier in New Orleans or Texas. Often, their only contact with their families is through the help of marine telephone operators such as Elizabeth Stiers of Marietta, Ohio.

Known as "the angel of the river," this jolly, grey-haired woman is one of several operators strung along the river. Like the others, she has many friends she has never seen.

"I hardly ever leave my home," she said, seated beside her two-way radio in her living room, high on a hill above Marietta. "But I've got dozens of friends on the river, from Pittsburgh to New Orleans. Lots of them call just to say hello when they're passing by. Why, I even played cupid for a neighbor of mine who married a boat captain."

Elizabeth Steirs is on duty around the clock, seven days a week.

"I'm never very far from this radio, but I don't mind," she says. "This is an interesting, rewarding job and I like helping my friends when they have a problem such as injury, a breakdown or a family emergency. Life on the river is no picnic. When something happens out there, there's not many people they can turn to."

A man who someday might have to turn to Elizabeth Steirs is Capt. Tom Miller of Rockport, Ind. Miller has been a towboat pilot for 40 of his 63 years, and he's still pushing barges up and down the river.

"I'm not out for 30 days at a time anymore, though," he said, seated on his porch overlooking the river. "I do trip work now, mostly for the Ohio River Barge Co. out of Cincinnati."

"That's a relief," said Kasey Miller, as she sat beside her husband. "I used to have to have a radio to monitor conversations so I'd know where he was on the river. Of course, he'd toot at me whenever he passed the house and I'd wave back. He still does that."

The Millers live on a bluff overlooking the Ohio, along one of the loveliest spots on the river. They have a panoramic view of the river and of the patchwork of farmland along the Kentucky shore.

Bar goes low-cal

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — A drinking spot here has scrapped its afternoon peanuts in favor of fresh vegetables — carrot sticks, celery and zucchini.

One of the bartenders, Patricia Brawley, explains it is by customer demand. The regulars were bothered by the calories in the peanuts.

One customer, shocked at first by the sight of the "garbage" on the bar, reluctantly admitted: "Zucchini and beer ain't all that bad," she said.

HOMEOWNER BONUS

When you increase the insurance limits on your home, the dollar amount of financial protection is automatically increased on the family's personal property, as well as on the dwelling structure.

Normally, under the homeowners package policy, the limits on personal property are set at 40 percent of the limits on the dwelling. For example, if your home is insured for $20,000, you have $8,000 worth of insurance on the furnishings, clothing and other personal property. If you increase the limits on the dwelling to $40,000, limits on the personal property automatically jump to $16,000.

In the event a loss occurs, you would be asked to provide the insurance company representative with an inventory of the damaged or destroyed items and their value, so that your claim can be processed without delay. If the property is lost through burglary or theft, the inventory will be helpful to police a swell as the insurer.

Psychiatrist believes Los Angeles strangler assaultive, not psychotic

By MIKE GOODKIND

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A psychiatrist has speculated that the strangler of 10 young women in the Los Angeles area does not show the psychotic tendencies exhibited by the "Son of Sam" killer in New York.

Dr. Edward Stainbrook, professor emeritus of psychiatry at the University of Southern California, said in an interview Friday that news accounts of the recent Los Angeles strangulations allow experts studying human behavior to make some predictions about the killer.

But he cautioned that such predictions based on reports of the assailant's behavior — rather than studies of the man himself — are speculation rather than a psychological profile.

"My speculation is that he's not psychotic," said Stainbrook. "I think he'll have a lot of past history of assaultive behavior, undercontrolled hating aggressive behavior. He never learned to impose behavioral controls on himself."

Stainbrook added: "The psychotic (like Son of Sam) has altered the ordinary conception of reality ... He feels that some outside force is making him do these things. He may feel guilt and anxiety but feels 'It is not I' who is responsible for this behavior.

"A psychotic may not be too aware of reality, therefore he manages to get apprehended," he said.

On the other hand, Stainbrook said an aggressive, undercontrolled person, which the Los Angeles strangler may be, "just doesn't give a damn ... He simply hasn't learned concern about other people."

The strangulation victims, some of which were raped, were found nude or semi-nude and were dumped into bushes after their deaths, police have said. Stainbrook says this indicates a "low-guilt, low-anxiety person — you've used it, killed it, now throw it away."

Stainbrook said the killer — if in fact one person is responsible for the strangulations — probably is "somebody in his early adulthood, between about 20 and 25, somebody who is getting despairing enough to kill. He probably had a lot of insults from women, and now as a young adult has despaired of his ability ever to grow up and become a success."

He noted that all of the victims were young, indicating that the assailant might have specifically selected women about his own age to vent his own rage. Most rapists, Stainbrook added, traditionally are younger men unable to cope with the end of adolescence and the growth into adulthood.

Officers quiz suspect

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A 24-year-old clothing store worker has been questioned about a series of killings and rapes of young women, authorities said.

Police said Bennett Merrett, of Hesperia, a desert community, was booked for investigation of robbery Friday in a case separate from those attributed to the so-called Hillside Strangler.

The robbery case turned up when a special team was investigating the strangulation of 20-year-old Yolanda Washington, believed to be the Hillside Strangler's first victim.

The bodies of 10 strangulation victims have been found dumped beside freeways and under bushes during the past six weeks. There were similarities in all the killings — the victims were young women, they were left nude or seminude, their clothes have not been found and most were raped.

Miss Washington's body was discovered by the side of the Ventura Freeway near Griffith Park on Oct. 18.

Police said the Hillside Strangler Task Force was called in to question Merrett because when arrested, he was driving a black and gray Cadillac and women's clothing was found in the car. The Hillside Strangler's latest victim, 18-year-old Lauren Rae Wagner, was reported to have been seen being taken away in a black and white or black and gray car.

Asked whether the arrest of Merrett was considered a breakthrough in the strangulation cases, Lt. Ed Henderson, head of the task force, replied: "No comment."

Air crash kills 59

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — Libyan officials said Saturday 59 persons died when a chartered Bulgarian plane carrying Moslem pilgrims home from Mecca crashed in eastern Libya while attempting an emergency landing.

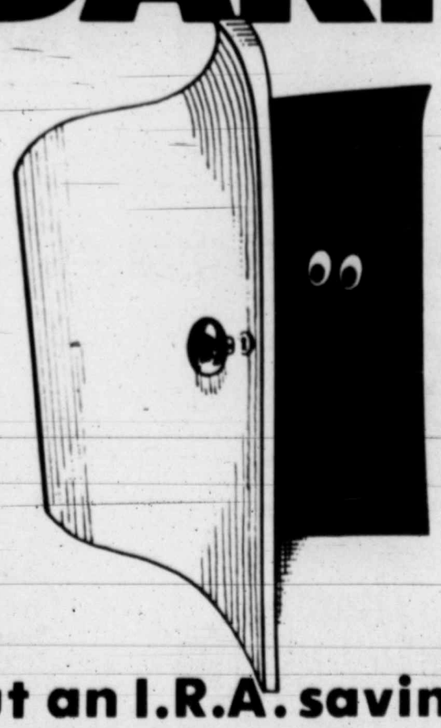

Authorities said 43 persons were injured in the crash early Friday. The Soviet-built Tupolev airliner, carrying 165 pilgrims and a crew of six, went down near Benghazi's Benina airport. Most of the dead were believed to be Libyans.

Island sinks, but temple rises

EDITOR'S NOTE — Centuries from now, will anyone remember the island sacred to the goddess Isis? Probably not. It soon will be submerged by waters of the Nile. But the temples are being rescued, and as Philae vanishes, ancient monuments are rising on Agilkia.

By EARLEEN F. TATRO

ASWAN, Egypt (AP) — With the help of frogmen and giant cranes, the ancient temples of Philae Island have been rescued from a watery grave beneath the Nile and are rising slowly on another island.

Block by block, the temple of the goddess Isis is being reassembled, "like crossword puzzles," says Sami Farag, resident Egyptian archeologist at the reconstruction site.

The island of Philae has vanished in a pool of stagnant green water behind an encircling cofferdam between the high Aswan Dam and the 75-year-old low dam. Soon the cofferdam will be torn down, leaving nothing to mark the spot which was the sacred island of Isis from history's most remote times until the 6th century A.D. when her cult, the last flicker of Pharaonic civilization, was snuffed out by Christianity.

The little island, 600 miles up river from the Mediterranean Sea, was the final sanctuary of Isis. Greeks, Romans and Coptic Christians conquered the Nile Delta, bringing their religions to Egypt and erecting their own temples on Philae, but Isis endured.

But when the British built the low Aswan Dam in 1902, the Nile crept over Philae, submerging the temples for nine months every year. The high Aswan Dam, completed in 1571, trapped Philae in a rising pool of water between the two dams.

In the early 1970s, the monuments were dismantled by a team of Egyptian workmen, Italian engineers and Egyptologists funded by UNESCO and the Egyptian government. Nearly 50,000 stone blocks were labeled, cleaned and stored behind a barbed wire fence deep inside a military reserve.

With dynamite and shovels, a new home was prepared on nearby Agilkia Island, a much higher island with few archeological treasures. The island's rocky contours were blasted into a plateau. The debris was used to shape Agilkia's outline to resemble that of Philae.

Last March, the first pieces of the monuments were brought to the island, and reassembling began. Eight months later, the two pylons — thick, trapezoid-shaped walls covered with inscriptions — stand partially completed in front of the foundation for the main temple of Isis. The project is expected to be completed in about two years.

While much of Philae's history has been obscure, it is known that the island played a prominent role in the religion of the Pharaohs.

"Ancient Egyptians at very remote times of history believed that there was a family of gods who ruled the Nile Valley," Farag says. "Osiris was the head of this family. Ancient Egyptians loved this god very much, because they believed that he taught them all the means of improving life. This put envy in the heart of his brother Set, who got rid of him by cutting his body into several pieces and tossing them along the Nile Valley. When Isis, the wife of Osiris, started searching for his body, she started on Philae, so Philae became sacred for Isis."

British and Egyptian navy divers have been enlisted to salvage one last temple of Philae, the Roman temple of Augustus which lies outside the cofferdam.

Christmas festival universal

NEW YORK (AP) — The Christmas dancing of the Maori, former Polynesians who journeyed across the South Pacific from Polynesia to New Zealand nearly 1,000 years ago, will be one highlight of "Christmas Around the World," a one hour TV special of live Christmas Eve celebrations from five continents which will be transmitted via satellite worldwide on Dec. 24.

The ancient voyaging Maori might find it hard to recognize the religious rites of their descendants today. After a gradual journey out of the myths and legends of the past, the Maori religion that once included such gods as Tangoroa, god of the ocean, and Tanemahuta, god of the forest, has been replaced by Christianity. Although today's Maori holiday rituals are much the same as in the rest of the world, much of the spirituality is still observed.

Careful soil preparation vital

By CHARLES GREEN
Midland County Extension Agent

Cotton producers are rapidly bringing to close the harvesting of the 1977 crop. Hoot Leonard, manager of the Midland Farmer's Cooperative Gin, said that if the weather reamains open the Midland County harvest will be complete by next week.

We are not able at this time to determine the total bales produced in Midland County this year. The Midland gin was delayed in beginning operations this year due to renovations on the gin plant slowed by late delivery of parts and considerable Midland cotton was ginned in adjoining Martin County in the early season. However, it appears that totl bales may fall between 22,000 adn 23,000, below last year's record 25,800 bales.

The first annual Midland County Pecan Show held last week was adjudged a complete success. Eighty-two entries were recieved and judges made favorable comment on the quality of the pecans. We are expecting some of our winners to show up well in the Regional Show to be held in mid-December in Abilene and the state show next year in July. Many people worked to make the show a success and I'd like to personally thank everyone who assisted in the planning and staging of the show.

Pecan plantings have steadiy increased in Midland County and the crop has the potential of becoming an important agricultural enterprise within the next 10 years as orchards mature. There are presently and estimated 20,000 to 25,000 trees in plantings of 100 trees or more in Midland County.

One of the most important steps in growing ornamental and garden plants is a thorough preparation of the soil. It is possible to grow plants of sorts in soil that has only been scratched, but many times they will be spindly and foliage, flowers and fruit will be sparse. On the other hand if beds or planting holes are prepared properly the result will be worth the time, money and effort.

The ideal perennial flower or shrub bed should have soil prepared to a depth of 12 to 18 inches; annual beds and vegetable garden soil should be prepared 8 to 12 inches. The gardener should keep in mind the preference of plants for acid, neutral and alkaline soils. Roses, begonias, pansies, stock snapdragons, tomatoes, sweet corn, strawberries and many other plants prefer soil that is slightly on the acid side. Adding organic matter of the right type—sphagnum peat moss or on- or two-year-old oak leaves—increases soil acidity and improves the water holding capacity of sandy soils.

However, local soils contain so much calcium carbonate (caliche) that organic matter alone may not add enough acidity to appreciably lower the reaction or pH. It is then necessary to add certain chemicals to help make the soil acid, such as sulphuric acid.

In preparing new beds or re-working old beds, November or December is the ideal time to start, before the really bad days of winter set in. Spade or roto-till the soil thoroughly. Remove any boards, rock or building debris; but turn under all leaves, grass, stems, roots and anything else that will decay easily. Rework the soil three or four times at weekly intervals. If the soild tends to dry out between tilling, water it.

In the spring, at least two weeks before planting, spade again. At this time work the organic material, sulfur and fertilizer into the soil. Use 4 to 6 inches of sphagnum peat moss per foot of soil depth (or other quality organic materials such as manure or compost); 5 to 10 pints of soil sulphur per 100 square feet of surface area, and 3 pounds of 5-10-5 fertilizer (or similar analysis) per 100 square feet of surface as an average for sandy loam soils in the area. If desired, one can subsitute 3 pounds of cottonseed meal and 1 pound superphosphate (0-46-0) for the 5-10-5.

We are frequently asked about using gin trash (bits of leaves, stems and burs removed in cotton ginning) as mulch and organic matter additive in a home vegetable garden. This is a tough question to answer. Some growers use arsenic acid to desiccate cotton. Adding this material to your garden may result in poor growth of some garden plants. Unfortunately, these arsenicals do not break down readily and remain toxic to some plants for years. Cotton can also be infected with the Verticillium wilt fungus which is often transmitted to vegetables growing in soil treated with gin trash.

Designer's job much harder on small cars, says veteran

By HARRY ANDERSON
The Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — William L. Mitchell minces no words aobut his favorite subject — automobile design. Sure, cars of the future will become smaller and more efficient to cope with energy shortages, pollution control and safety laws.

But will they be more "functional," will the designer's job be less important? Pause. Sneer.

"That makes me boil. I see some of these 'future cars' done by engineers with their T-squares and triangles, and I tell them I could do better in a kitchen with an ax," says Mitchell, 65.

No one is about to persuade the outspoken retired vice president in charge of styling at General Motors Corp. that the designer's task is losing its significance.

If anything, he says, the designer's job will be more important. "The government is saying that all cars will have to be about equal in mileage, emissions and size, he says. "The difference will be the looks, and that is the designer's job."

But making the new generation of smaller cars look different will be very difficult, Mitchell said in a recent Los Angeles interview.

"It sure won't be easy," he commented. "Designing smaller cars is like tailoring a dwarf. Right now, I don't see any small cars that look like a damn. Michelangelo couldn't do it, because it's impossible to make a small sedan look really good. A designer will naturally want to stretch them out a little."

Those are blunt words coming from a man who spent 42 years at General Motors and influenced the design of more than 65 million automobiles. But nobody ever accused Mitchell of being timid or lacking opinions.

He headed GM's design staff from 1958 until he retired last August — only the second person ever to hold the job. The first was Harley Earl, who set up what was then known as GM's Art and Color section in the 1920s.

Mitchell is credited with eliminating the running board and creating the look of the modern hardtop car in his first GM creation, the 1938 Cadillac 60 Special. That car helped establish him as a preeminent American automotive designer.

Later, he helped usher in the "aircraft look" of the 1940s and 1950s with the first tailfin car — the 1948 Cadillac. He now admits that the chrome and tailfin period of the 1950s probably went too far.

"The two worst years for GM were 1958 when we put chrome on with a trowel and 1959 when we tried to outfin each other," Mitchell says. But he puts the blame for that excess partly on car salesmen who were insisting that customers wanted more chrome and tailfins.

"I've had just as many fights with salesmen as with engineers," Mitchell says. "The designer needs to have the final say on style. You can't do it by committee. Frank Lloyd Wright didn't ring doorbells asking people what they thought houses should look like."

He says the last two years have been the most intensive period of automobile redesign in his career, as GM and the auto makers hurry to bring out new, more efficient cars.

"For years, little by little, we made cars longer and lower and wider, and all that was to the benefit of good design," he says. "Now we have to make them shorter and narrower and higher. So that's why I went to the 'sheer' look, because a short person can wear stripes, no checks."

Actually, says Mitchell, the sleek, trim vogue in automotive design merely reflects a similar trend in all products and society generally. "Even if a man is a millionaire, if he is bloated or fat you have no respect for him; furniture is lighter, new buildings have thinner walls, men wear 'summer suits' all year long."

And the trend to a sheer look in cars is already making the older designs look "ridiculous," says Mitchell. "Those great big cars of a few years ago just don't seem acceptable any more."

Mitchell claims that he likes the new, trim look which began at GM with the introduction of the "down-size" big cars in 1977. But he concedes that the boxier, European-style sedans aren't what a designer would set out to accomplish if he had no constraints.

"During this very tough design period in the automobile industry, I fought like sin for the return of elegance and refinement," he says. "You can't be too simple; you need accents."

And what does he consider elegant cars? "Rivieras, Ferraris, Rolls-Royces, Corvettes. Cars that have stood up over time; they have a combination of lines similar to notes on a page of music."

Despite his misgivings about the potential for making "elegant" small cars, Mitchell concedes that the Japanese have the best looking small models on the road today.

"And it's no mystery why; they went to the same design schools the Americans did and then they designed a small car for Americans. Now we have to do the same thing."

Examining trial set

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — An examining trial has been scheduled Dec. 20 for David S. Schofield, a 38-year-old salesman charged with murder in the death of his wife, whose body was found inside a refrigerator here last week.

Schofield was charged Thursday morning before Justice of the Peace Rudy Esquivel, who refused bond and scheduled the examining trial.

At the examining trial, Esquivel will determine whether there is sufficient cause to send the case to a grand jury.

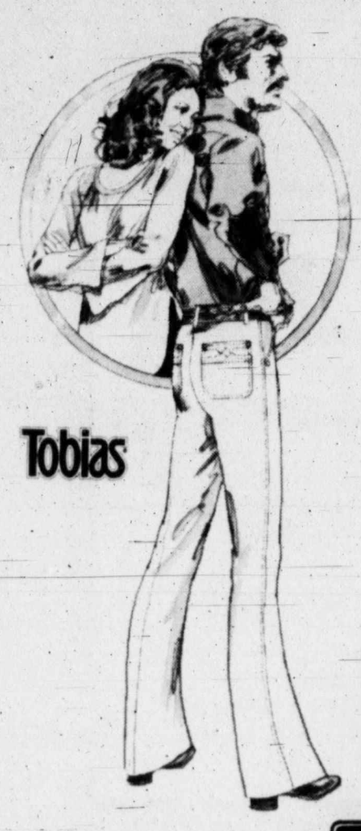

The body of Schofield's wife, Nancy Ferry Schofield, 53, was discovered by police in the refrigerator of her apartment Tuesday.

Self-styled emperor to wear crown today in $30-million African rites

By The Associated Press

Brilliantly colored blue and yellow flags and gold imperial eagle banners flew over Bangui Saturday as the impoverished Central African Empire completed more than six months of preparations for the coronation of self-proclaimed Emperor Bokassa I.

The 56-year-old Bokassa, the son of a minor tribal chief and a former sergeant in the French army, will crown himself emperor today in a ceremony befitting Bokassa's "guide and inspiration," Napoleon Bonaparte.

Several foreign delegations have already arrived in the capital of the landlocked nation of 2 million for what will be one of post-colonial Africa's most colorful and elaborate ceremonies. Diplomatic sources say the coronation is costing some $30 million.

Along the avenues and lawns of Bangui, a dusty capital and transportation crossroads of some 200,000 people, hundreds of multi-colored banners and flags flapped in a gentle tropical breeze, according to sources in the capital.

At the refurbished sports stadium on the road to the airport, a two-ton gilded bronze throne in the shape of an eagle with outspread wings waited on a dais beside a more modest throne for Empress Catherine, Bokassa's 28-year-old No. 1 wife.

After the example of Napoleon, the stocky, bearded Bokassa has announced his intention to place the crown on his head himself. The two crowns, along with a gold scepter and sword, are inlaid with locally cut diamonds and estimated to be worth more than $5 million.

Bokassa had asked Pope Paul VI to come to Bangui to hand him the crown, the way Pope Pius VII did for Napoleon in Notre Dame Cathedral in Paris on Dec. 2, 1803.

But Pope Paul said the church no longer plays a role in crowning emperors.

Tall ship soon to be auctioned

By CLARA HEMPHILL

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — David Kent's square-rigged tall ship is called the Enchantress, but it seems to be bewitched.

Kent has disappeared, leaving his crew unpaid, his bank clamoring for $422,000 and authorities planning to auction the vessel.

"The last time I saw him he was putting license plates on a new Cadillac," said Chief Deputy U.S. Marshal George Douglas. "He said he was going to Florida." That was in September, Douglas said.

There were 11 crew members, "and they never got paid a cent," Douglas said.

The 94-ton brigantine was built for the Tall Ships race from Portsmouth, England, to Newport in 1976, and was used for a time afterwards as a charter craft.

Douglas' office seized the two-masted ship in September. It will be sold at public auction Dec. 16. It's tied up here at a solitary Rhode Island pier, sails furled, and will be open for public inspection on Dec. 13.

Chemical Bank of New York says Kent owes $422,000 on the brigantine. The bank asked that the ship be seized, and federal Judge Raymond Pettine gave Kent 20 days to come up with a partial payment. But Kent disappeared.

Douglas said Kent was a Marine Corps pilot in the Korean War who gave up flying to manage a construction company on Long Island, N.Y. In 1973, he gave up a $50,000 a year job with the firm to build the 19th century replica and sail in the Tall Ships race, the marshal says.

"It took two years to build the hull and another two years to outfit it," Douglas said. Kent originally thought the project would cost about $200,000, but his costs ballooned and he ended up spending about $700,000.

When complete, the Enchantress carried 5,260 square feet of sail on her two masts. Her hull was made from ferro-cement.

Douglas said Kent tried to set up charters to defray some of the costs, and at first his efforts were successful.

"He'd have trips from Port Jefferson, N.Y., to Block Island, with drinking and dancing. They were pretty popular," Douglas said.

But Kent's longer trips were less successful. He chartered the ship to 25 Swedish tourists for a round-trip voyage from Baltimore, Md., to Newport for the America's Cup races.

However, the tourists got off in Newport because "they thought the accomodations weren't worth the $8,000 a week he was charging," Douglas said.

The marshal said there was only one cabin for each eight passengers and only one toilet for 20 persons. "The jail cells at the state prison have more room," he said.

Dallas farm rally fizzles

DALLAS (AP) — A tractor drive through downtown Dallas and a two-day rally by supporters of a scheduled mid-December farmer's strike "fizzled out," according to one of its disappointed leaders.

Vernon Deines of Ramona, Kan., said he couldn't explain why only about 50-100 tractors and farm vehicles participated in the parade Thursday, as part of a two-day country music rally at Texas Stadium to draw attention to their threatened walkout.

The farmers say they will stop selling their products or buying any farm implements Dec. 14 if the federal government doesn't ease their financial plight.

An estimated 100-200 persons attended Thursday's rally in the cavernous stadium, which seats 65,000, and fewer persons were in attendance Friday night even though ticket prices were slashed from $12 to $6.

RUTHCO marks 20th anniversary

ANDREWS — RUTHCO, Inc., recently held a barbecue dinner in Andrews commemorating 20 years of operation. More than 250 employes and former employes were present.

The first RUTHCO base was installed on Gulf Oil Corp.'s Waddell Lease in Crane County, Sept. 30, 1957. In 1959, RUTHCO moved its headquarters to Andrews.

All but one of the original casing crew, which began in Andrews, were present at the barbecue. They are Manager C. G. Robinson, Salesman W. "Ed" Terrell, Helper Harvey McCartney, all still employed by RUTHCO, and former office manager Bob Smith, Ray Athey who was field foreman; Bill McEwin, former assistant field foreman, and Henry Abalos who was a truck helper. R. D. Anderson, truck driver, was the other member of the original crew.

Robinson is now president of RUTHCO, Terrell is manager of the Hobbs, N. M., branch, and McCartney is Levelland's branch manager.

The company's headquarters now is on Highway 80 between Midland and Odessa. Branch operations are in Hobbs, Levelland and Gainesville.

Service awards were presented to current employes.

Fifteen-year awards went to Gerrell, McCartney, E. J. Cox, S. R. Subia, both of Odessa; Joe Longoria, Hobbs, V. E. Woodruff, Levelland, and Jess Phillips, Gainesville.

Receiving awards for 10 years of service were J. H. Whitley, H. G. Brewer, Earnest Hollins, Jesse L. Taylor, Bill Joyner, Jess L. Hobbs, Buddy Phillips and Paul Sandoval, all of Odessa, and Leonard Smith, Hobbs; John Holly, Levelland; Bill Riley, Gainesville; Leroy Herron, Gainesville, and J. D. Drgac and Golda Taylor, Odessa.

Recipients of five-year service awards were Arnold Lunsford and Gordon Harris, both of Odessa; M. L. Perry, Betty Russell, J. C. Correa, Darrell Smith, Paul Olguin, N. L. Bruton and Nick Perez, all of Hobbs; James Humphreys, James Gilliam, Ervin Engledow and Brad Dunnam, all of Levelland; Boyd Sikes, H. G. Rhodes and Babe Skinner, Levelland, and Bette Edmiston and Charles Boadle, Odessa.

API to hear Parker at Midland meeting

Robert L. Parker, chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Parker Drilling Co. of Tulsa, Okla., will be the speaker for the Tuesday meeting of the Permian Basin Chapter of the American Petroleum Institute.

The meeting will start with a social hour at 6 p. m., and dinner will be served at 7 p. m. at Ranchland Hill Country Club.

Parker, a graduate of The University of Texas with a B.S. degree in Petroleum Engineering, is a member of the board of directors of several business and civic and educational organizations, including Bank of Oklahoma, Facet Enterprises, Gilcrease Museum, The University of Tulsa, First Methodist Church of Tulsa, John Brown University and the American Petroleum Institute.

He also is chairman of the advisory council, Engineering Foundation, University of Texas at Austin.

He also serves as a director of the International Association of Drilling Contractors, director of Oklahoma Independent Petroleum Association and director of Junior achievement of Greater Tulsa, Inc.

Wellhead natural gas price could kill bill

By CLYDE LA MOTTE
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — One of the issues to be settled by Senate and House energy conferees in the days ahead is whether federal regulation of the wellhead price of natural gas should be extended to intrastate sales.

The intrastate question could prove to be the stumbling block in efforts to reach a compromise, and unless a compromise is reached, there may be no natural gas legislation at all. In fact, the entire energy legislation package could fall apart.

This is the setting:

— The administration and many of its congressional supporters are dead set on bringing intrastate gas under federal control. It aggravates them greatly that gas can be produced and consumed in Texas and other producing states and remain out of the reach of federal regulators. Consumers in non-producing states cry aloud when their supply is pinched while intrastate purchasers in producing states continue to have adequate supplies.

— Most domestic producers, especially the independents, are resisting the proposed inclusion vigorously. For one thing, they don't relish the thought of the revenue they would stand to lose if their intrastate sales, usually at prices well above the interstate price ceiling, were brought under federal jurisdiction.

The producers are even more upset, however, over the federal regulatory red tape and the massive reporting requirements they would face if intrastate transactions are subjected to federal controls.

Jack M. Allen, president of the Independent Petroleum Association of America, stressed this point in a letter he sent last week to the conferees. In essence, Allen said that while price is naturally important to producers, their central concern is the prospect of increased government regulation. He said federal regulation of intrastate sales as well as interstate sales would ultimately result in "bureaucratic direction of our daily operations."

Allen said "that no higher controls, prices, nor so-called special relief" provisions for certain high-cost gas could resolve the problems inherent in federal regulation.

There appears to be virtually no prospect that Congress is going to deregulate new interstate natural gas prices at this time, although there is a distinct possibility that some phaseout of those controls may eventually emerge as a compromise.

In order to avoid outright deregulation of new gas, the administration is offering prices higher than the present controlled level. It originally proposed a ceiling of $1.75 a thousand cubic feet for new supplies, almost 30 cents higher than the current ceiling. And administration officials have clearly hinted they would be willing to raise that $1.75 price a bit, maybe to around $2. That would be the "reward" offered to producers if they are willing to remain under federal regulation.

There is reason to believe that producer leaders would go along with this, but only if intrastate gas is left out of the regulatory picture and if some phaseout of regulations is included.

If Congress approves a phaseout plan, it will be difficult for President Carter to reject it because he has said that he still favors decontrol — as he promised in last year's campaign — but that he doesn't think it should come all at once. A phaseout would offset that objection.

Some congressional leaders are pointing out to producers that if there is no gas bill at all, the proposed ceiling of $1.75 (or higher) would be out the window and producers would have to take the present top price of $1.47, with an escalation of 1 cent each quarter.

As it stands now, many producers and those members of Congress who contend that more incentive, not less, is needed if the nation is to cope with the energy problem, would prefer to take that lower price applying to interstate sales than to see intrastate sales subjected to federal regulation.

Contractors fearing oversupply of rigs

By MAX B. SKELTON

HOUSTON (AP)—Some oil and gas drilling contractors fear an oversupply of drilling rigs is in the making.

Ed McGhee, executive vice president of the International Association of Drilling Contractors, said the fear is being prompted by accelerated delivery schedules for new equipment "and to the fat order books of the manufacturers."

McGhee said other factors also are involved.

"For one, recent weeks have seen repatriation to the United States of a number of rigs from other nations," he said. "Second, existing components are still being assembled into complete drilling units."

"To the concerned group, at least, it adds up to an overheated situation," McGhee said.

The August domestic inventory of drilling rigs was 2,482, including 278 that had been added in the preceding 12 months. McGhee said prospects indicate an even greater addition to the inventory in the next 12 months.

McGhee said one contractor summarizes the current situation this way:

"In 1973, we had about 1,800 rigs competing for a market that would sustain 1,200 active rotaries. Suppose the rig count goes to 2,400 in 1978. If we have 3,000 units competing for that work, we'll be right back where we were in 1973."

McGhee said the easy availability of money also is major factor in the frenzied buying of new rigs.

"For the first time in history, bankers stand willing to extend loans on purchase of rigs," he said.

"Traditionally, rigs were financed directly by the firms which supplied them. Today, the steel companies which own the supply firms shy away from credit business. They can reverse that position quickly if increasing competition warrants."

McGhee said one small contractor reports that in the space of one week he was visited by representatives of three different financial houses and that each wanted to finance new rig purchases.

An interesting side light, McGhee said, is showing through the flurry brought on by the high demand for rigs.

"Some old line contractors are selling out, taking advantage of the high prices commanded by used equipment," he said.

An example, he said, saw A. W. Thompson Inc. sell 12 big West Texas style rigs to Santa Fe International for some $22 million.

McGhee said industry insiders have always maintained it is impossible to make significant profit by contracting alone.

"The contractor, they say, can make money two ways," he said.

"He can build up his investment in rigs and then sell out. Or he can use the rigs as a tool to get into the oil and gas producing business."

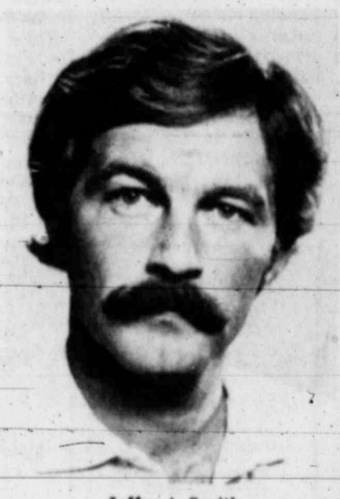

McGhee said another factor boosting the current rig count is the apparent use of completion rigs as drilling units.

"Such a conversion is quick and fairly cheap," he said. "And drilling work pays better than completion."

McGhee said this has created a shortage of completion rigs, meaning that an abnormal number of holes which have been drilled to total depth still stand uncompleted. Reporting agencies usually do not add a new well to their counts until its completion process is terminated.

"No one has a count of how many wells are thus affected," he said.

"On the one hand, the presence of converted completion rigs swells the weekly count of active rotary units. On the other, their absence from completion operations reduces the count of new well completions. When the two figures are compared, it will appear the average rotary rig is making less hole than in former times."

Jeffry A. Smith

J. A. Smith promoted

Texas Oil as Corp. has promoted Jeffry A. Smith to senior geologist for its West Texas District with headquarters in Midland.

Smith joined TXO as a staff geologist in October 1976.

He has served on numerous committies and as an officer in the West Texas Geological Society.

H. H. Bond

Retirement announced

W. H. Bond of Midland retired Dec. 1 after working for Lock Construction Co. 48 years.

He joined the firm in 1929 as a timekeeper. In 1931, he was promoted to field office manager and was made field superintendent in 1948.

Bond became general manager of the company in 1965, a position he held until September 1976 when he semi-retired. He was a senior consultant until he announced his retirement.

Basin rotary count stands at 299 mark

Reed Drilling Equipment reported last week's rotary rig count at 299, compared to the tally of 302 reported two weeks ago.

The Friday survey showed 19 more units making hole than were working in the Permian Basin a year ago, when 280 rigs were busy during the last week of November.

The leading areas in drilling activity were Eddy County, N.M., with 30 rigs; Ward with 25; Pecos with 22, and Lea with 20.

The survey showed 16 rigs working in Crockett, while Gaines had 12, Ector, 11, and Reeves and Yoakum had 10 each.

Don't miss the popular Scotty Hopkins, appearing nightly, Monday through Saturday from 8:30 p. m. to 1:30 a. m., at The Pub, 401 W. Missouri.

Scotty Hopkins returns to The Pub

Scotty Hopkins is back in town. Make plans now to hear this popular entertainer several times during his current engagement at The Pub in the Sheraton Inn-Midland, 401 W. Missouri. Scotty performs nightly, Monday through Saturday, from 8:30 p. m. to 1:30 a. m. and will continue through New Year's eve.

Scotty has had several engagements at The Pub in the past and has become a favorite headliner of Midlanders. If you haven't heard him already, make plans now to treat yourself to his show. You'll find your evening out exceptionally entertaining and the atmosphere of The Pub delightfully relaxing.

For a double treat, perhaps you could plan to dine at The Golden Derrick, also in the Sheraton Inn-Midland, before taking in Scotty Hopkins' show at the The Pub. The Golden Derrick features fine food prepared with care and served with pride. Enjoy a superb dinner in the charming, atmosphere reminiscent of the early oil field days. For reservations call 683-3333.

Make Scotty Hopkins at The Pub and dinner at The Golden Derrick a must on your entertainment calendar this month.

Husband denies he beat ill wife

NEW YORK (AP) — Investigators reportedly are checking allegations that Rosemarie Maniscalco, the comatose woman being kept alive in hopes her unborn baby can be saved, was beaten frequently by her husband.

The New York Times and the New York Daily News Saturday quoted sources in the Brooklyn district attorney's office as saying that an investigation has begun. A spokesman for District Attorney Eugene Gold refused comment on the reports.

John Maniscalco denied that he beat his wife, telling a Times reporter: "It's not true. It's not true."

The News quoted Maniscalco as saying that he and his wife had a fight about six months ago, and both suffered black eyes, but when asked if he had hit his wife on the day she collapsed, he replied, "No way."

Mrs. Maniscalco, 27, has been kept alive with a respirator in the intensive care unit of Victory Memorial Hospital since she suffered an apparent stroke the evening before Thanksgiving. Maniscalco, who separated from his wife six months ago, said he was with her that night because he had dropped by to give her a turkey.

Lynn Schettina, a neighbor of Mrs. Maniscalco, told the Times that John Maniscalco beat his wife frequently.

Alaska oil refinery planned near Phoenix

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — An oil refinery fed with Alaskan oil from a cross-state pipeline has been proposed for a site 25 miles south of Phoenix near the community of Mobile, says the president of a Phoenix company.

Robert A. Pichnarcik of Provident Holding Corp. said his firm has arranged $150 million in financing and has proposed the refinery to Standard Oil Co. (Ohio), which is trying to get approval for the pipeline.

The pipeline, part of which already is in existence as an unused natural gas line, is proposed to carry Alaskan crude oil from Long Beach, Calif., to Midland, Texas. There now are no oil refineries along the proposed pipeline route.

Provident's refinery proposal depends completely on Sohio gaining federal approval for the pipeline. On Thursday, the Department of Interior gave tentative approval and congressional conferees agreed to speed up the review process.

A Sohio spokesman said the Provident proposal will be considered, as will proposals from others, including the Papago Indian Tribe, across whose reservation the pipeline would run. But Pichnarcik said his firm has done more planning than anyone else on the idea.

"It's something that we've worked on for two and a half years, so we're probably further along than anybody," Pichnarcik said. "We've already arranged our financing ... so we're quite a ways ahead of everybody else."

He said Provident is acquiring more than 500 acres near Mobile for the refinery and industrial park, a survey is being conducted to determine the market for oil products in Arizona and a builder for the refinery has been hired.

Thomas C. Roth, manager of Sohio's western crude oil division, said no real negotiating on proposals for an Arizona refinery can begin until Sohio gets federal approval of the pipeline. He said the company hopes to have approval by next February.

"Provident and a number of other companies mave contacted us from time to time about the possibility of securing crude oil," Roth said. "The question is, who's the most capable of doing it? At this point, I'm not prepared to make a judgment."

He said the refinery proposal "appears to be an idea that has some merit from the market standpoint."

If built, an Arizona refinery would take 38,000 to 50,000 barrels of crude oil a day from the pipeline, which is expected to carry up to 500,000 barrels a day, officials said.

Pichnarcik said a working refinery as proposed by Provident would employ about 75 persons. He said about 1,000 workers would be needed for most of the 21-month construction of the refinery.

Snodgrass to retire

E. H. Snodgrass, division office supervisor for Mobil Pipe Line Co. in Midland, will retire Jan. 1 upon completion of 40 years with the company.

His career began with the old Magnolia Petroleum Co. in Cotton Valley, La., in 1937.

He moved to Midland in 1960.

A retirement party was held recently in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Snodgrass. They will continue to live in Midland.

King area gains well

The Probable (Canyon) pool of King County gained a confirmation well with completion of Gunn Oil Co., Wichita Falls, No. 1 J. J. Gibson, 12 miles north of Guthrie.

The extender is one location east of the discovery. It finaled for a daily flowing potential of 118 barrels of 39-gravity oil, through a ¼-inch choke and perforations at 4,460-4,463 feet.

Drilled to 4,625 feet, it has 4½-inch casing set at an unreported depth, and it is plugged back to 4,532 feet.

Increase reported

Record corporate revenues and a 4 percent increase in pretax operating income which was offset by a one-time writedown of its ammonia operation was reported by Deane H. Stoltz, president of Tipperary Corp.

The refusal of its contractual purchaser to buy all of the company's ammonia was the primary cause of this writedown.

The company filed suit in June 1976 against the contractual purchaser seeking actual damages due to the contract termination.

Ultimate recovery in the event the company is successful may be more or less than the company's present estimate of approximately $16 million. The ammonia operation has been under review by Tipperary's board of directors since the suit was filed in 1976.

As a result of Tipperary's discontinuance of the ammonia segment of its business, the company had written down its investment in the production facilities, as of Sept. 30, from $15,919,000 to $1,500,000, which represents management's estimate of the salvage value of the equipment.

In addition, the company has accrued $4,166,000 of costs which are expected to be incurred in connection with the cessation of operations. The company is seeking a purchaser for the facility, and such efforts, or an improvement in the market, may result in the continuance of operations beyond the planned closing date of Feb. 28, 1978.

Record corporate revenues for 1977 were $29,778,000 compared to $21,656,000 in 1976. Income from continuing operations for the year ended Sept. 30 was $4,135,000, or 88 cents per share, compared to $5,149,000 or $1.14 per share for 1976.

The company's pretax operating income from continuing operations was $5,316,000, up from $5,113,000 in 1976.

As a result of the writedown of the ammonia facilities and the adjustment for the writedown of the Australian ranching operations, the company incurred a net loss for the year of $13,280,000 or $2.82 per share. The 1976 net income was $5,669,000 or $1.25 per share.

One vote could put plan over

WASHINGTON (AP) — A switch of one vote might give President Carter's proposal to keep price controls on natural gas a conference committee victory.

Administration allies are looking for that vote but have yet to find it.

If one of the nine Senate energy negotiators favoring a rival gas deregulation plan changed his mind, Carter could chalk up a major win for his embattled energy program.

That's because a majority of House conferees and nine other Senate negotiators are ready to vote for his plan to continue controls.

Blocking such a move are seven Republican and two Democratic senators just as ready to stand behind the bill the Senate passed last October deregulating gas prices. And thereby hangs the deadlock.

Chances of a switched vote seem slight since the 18 Senate conferees are as evenly divided now over the gas-pricing as when they were first named nearly two months ago.

And Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., leader of the Senate conferees, said Friday he sees no indication that any of the nine deregulation backers have had a change of heart.

Actually, the gas-pricing situation is more complex than the one-vote margin might indicate. Even if the conferees do approve Carter's plan, it would probably have difficultly surviving final scrutiny by the Senate.

The conferees formally opened their natural gas debate Friday by engaging in some preliminary skirmishes — with lots of talk stressing the need for a compromise but few indications that one is forthcoming.

Strike finals

Marbob Energy Corp. of Artesia, N. M., No. 1 Mack Draw, Eddy County, N. M., project has been completed as a Grayburg oil discovery.

The well finaled for a daily pumping potential of four barrels of oil and six barrels of water, through perforations from 996 to 1,210 feet after 500 gallons of acid and 1,000 barrels of fracture solution.

The well is ½ mile south of Marbob No. 1 E. G. Nix, undesignated Grayburg gas discovery and two miles southeast of Dayton. Location is 1,980 feet from south and east lines of section 2-19s-26e.

Total depth is 1,065 feet and 4½-inch casing is set at 1,264 feet, the plugged back depth.

Explorers scheduled in West Texas areas

Wildcat sites have been staked in Sutton and Runnels County areas, while pool tests have been planned for Fisher and Sutton sectors.

Location, about 1,000 feet south of a depleted Bend discovery, is 1,980 feet from north and west lines of section 8, block D, H&TC survey.

RUNNELS PROBE

It is No. 1 Ellie B. Underwood Jr., two miles south of the TJC (Capps) field in the extreme South central part of the county.

FISHER OFFSET

R. L. Foree, Dallas, No. 1 Thurman Terry is planned as a ¼-mile north offset to the 5,000 Canyon pay opener in the Terry field of Fisher.

Drillsite is 467 feet from south and 1,150 feet from west lines of section 29, block 2, H&TC survey, six miles northwest of Roby. Planned depth is 5,300 feet.

SUTTON PROJECT

Robbins Petroleum Corp., Longview, has staked site for No. 2 Rode, a ¾-mile northwest outpost to the one-well Seco (Strawn) pool of Sutton County.

The test is slated to 4,000 feet, and spots 621 feet from north and 520 feet from west lines of section 8, block 7, TW&NG survey, 35 miles southeast of Sonora.

The field was opened in September, 1977.

Office to open

Andover Oil Co. of Tulsa, Okla., will open an exploration office in Midland to direct development and leasing programs in this area.

Andover, a privately held independent oil company, recently acquired Texas Land & Mortgage Co., a firm founded in 1882 by Scottish investors.

Principal assets of TL&M were mineral and royalty interests in 21,000 net producing acres.

In addition, assets included 82,000 net undeveloped mineral acres and 43,000 net undeveloped acres under lease, mostly in West Texas.

Pipeline is coming?

Prospects for gaining the projected pipeline which would carry Alaska crude oil from the California Coast, near Long Beach, to the Tall City of Midland appear much brighter this weekend.

And with the more encouraging announcements came a lot of "the pipeline is coming" conversation here and elsewhere.

This is the long-delayed project which has been discussed pro and con at various levels of government from Washington, D.C., to California and back to Texas. It should have had the go-ahead signal long before now. It is a sound, practical project which should be approved and rushed to completion as promptly as possible.

The favorable aspects of the proposed project came Thursday in a series of actions taken in the nation's capital.

Interior Secretary Cecil D. Andrus gave the last of three boosts to the Long Beach-Midland line when he announced his intention to approve the 1,026-mile pipeline, subject, of course, to congressional review, proposed by Standard Oil Co. of Ohio (Sohio).

Previously, on Thursday, a House-Senate energy conference committee agreed on legislation intended as a clear signal to California officials to stop delaying and grant prompt approval to the proposed Sohio pipeline from Long Beach to Midland.

The Carter administration also acted on the same day to press California for approval of the pipeline. It was then that Andrus made his announcement.

Things began falling into place at a much faster clip. Hopefully, the pace will continue.

It is understood that the environmental aspects of this important national energy project have been examined thoroughly. The action by the Interior Department would indicate that they have passed the test.

Some of the Alaska oil reaching the U.S. West Coast now is being shipped in tankers to refineries along the Gulf of Mexico by way of the Panama Canal.

This is a long, round-about, expensive method of getting the oil to the refineries, particularly when a better way is available.

Sohio, in a move to set up a more direct route, had proposed converting a natural gas pipeline abandoned by El Paso Natural Gas Co., and adding new pipeline links to transport up to 500,000 barrels of oil daily to southern, eastern and midwestern refineries.

Just last month, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission decided to permit the proposed abandonment of the 669-mile El Paso Natural Gas line, for conversion into the oil line.

On the Permian Basin end of the Sohio line, as proposed, it will be necessary to construct a 62-mile, 42-inch pipeline from Jal, N.M., to Midland. A 2 million-barrel-capacity storage terminal also will be built here. It is estimated that the overall construction and equipment on this end would be $40 million.

A Sohio spokesman at Cleveland told The Reporter-Telegram that approximately 500,000 barrels of oil from Alaska will arrive daily in Midland. Lines already in place out of Midland to the Gulf Coast and Midwestern regions will be kept running full all the time.

This won't be any big deal for Midland personnel-wise, on a permanent basis, but it most certainly has and will continue to focus nationwide attention on this Headquarters City of the Permian Basin Empire. A lot of jobs will be created during the construction period; further stimulating the economy of the city and section.

The Sohio spokesman said that approximately 15 permanent fulltime persons would be employed in the Midland terminal.

The property tax base in the area also would be increased, along with the state franchise tax base.

This is the right place for the proposed line's Texas terminal. Further developments will be watched with interest.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTON — The attrition of events has perceptibly weakened Jimmy Carter who is caught between the leftward pull of the Democratic party and the conservative drift of the nation, between the bureaucratic pressure for more regimentation and the stiffening public resistance to government interference, between the demand of society for more services and the refusal of the taxpayers to pay for them.

Politicians in both parties, their antennae bristling, sense that the president is slipping. This has led to titillating whispers that Carter may not survive the 1980 election, that he is beginning to develop the pall of a one-term president.

This prospect may be highly premature, but potential rivals are emerging warily from the shadows. They are backing into the sunlight, to be sure, protesting every step of the way that they have no designs on higher office. There is a certain strategy behind these peculiar folkways. For the first candidate who pokes his head above the crowd risks having it knocked off.

Nevertheless, several hopefuls are maneuvering cautiously into position to challenge Carter in 1980. It is possibly too early to assess them, but the advance signs seem to favor two men. Among the Democrats, California's charismatic but enigmatic Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. is warming up in the bullpen. Among the Republicans, the fastest jaw in the West, John Connally of Texas, appears to have gained the inside track.

Jerry Brown cannot get it out of his mind, according to close associates, that he beat Jimmy Carter in four out of four presidential primaries last year. The youthful governor believes he can do it again.

He has an electricity that supercharges his followers, an integrity that approaches austerity, a simplicity that baffles the political sophisticates. He embraces his party's predilections just enough to keep the professionals in his corner, yet he maintains an aloofness from the old Democratic powers and panaceas. He has a venturesome mind that stirs the visionary. Yet because of his cost-cutting and good management, he doesn't offend the pratical.

Ironically enough, Carter and Brown have many qualities in common. Both take a moralistic approach to government, Carter the born-again Baptist and Brown the erstwhile Jesuit seminarian. There is something ambiguous and remote about them, yet both seem to have touched the wellsprings of America. They have a strange ability, both of them, to articulate in behalf of the unorganized and reticent.

Both men have tended to bypass, even oppose, the Democratic party's traditional bastions and bring their own constituencies into the fold — Carter, appealing to the reconciled Southerners and evangelical Christians; Brown, to the idealistic youth and academic community. Carter and Brown alike have also taken a stand outside the Washington establishment, both elusive suitors to the Democratic professionals who require the familiar pledges of the flesh.

Brown is now preparing himself for bigger things, venturing quietly into the foreign field with trips to Japan and England. He has also established contact with Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin. Characteristically, Brown has paid for his own travel on the cheapest available transportation.

In contrast, John Connally combines the blustering amiability of a Lyndon Johnson with the used-car sales tactics of a Richard Nixon. Big John looms massively on the Republican horizon, a Texan among Rhode Islanders, a leader who always seems sure of himself, who tends to overpower those who stand in his way. He has great abilities and great faults.

Only Connally would try to turn a bribery trial into a political asset.

With characteristic bluff, he has contended that his integrity has now been proven in court. Certainly, no other presidential contender can boast an acquittal for such serious charges.

The jury, true enough, found Connally innocent of taking a $10,000 bribe from the milk producers. But it did not exactly pronounce him pure as the driven snow. There were no witnesses to the alleged bribe, and the jurors, quite properly, gave him the benefit of any doubts they may have had.

But the court record sitll contains a damning, taped conversation between John Connally and Richard Nixon. Connally told Nixon that the dairy men were "amassing an enormous amount of money that they're going to put into political activity, very frankly."

The blunt Texan, then Nixon's treasury secretary, advised Nixon to grant the dairymen a price increase. "If you don't, " Connally said, "you've cost yourself some money." Later, he stressed again: "You're in this for everything you can get out of it."

It took the jurors more than five hours to agree upon Connally's innocence. The jury foreman, Dennis O'Tolle, told us he heard "a lot of Texas wheeling and dealing." Other jurors, who asked not to be identified, expressed concern about the cozy relationship between Connally and the milk producers. A couple of jurors feared this might hamper Connally if he should ever seek the presidency.

O'Toole announced after the trial: "Our verdict meant not that we had found necessarily that John Connally was innocent but, rather, not guilty based on the case presented to us."

This might seem a poor foundation for a presidential campaign. Yet Connally has amassed more campaign funds and political IOUs, according to party sources, than any other Republican contender.

There is a presidential aura about John Connally, this rustic sophisticate who radiates chairsma and cordiality.

CHARLEY REESE:

Israel isn't militant hawk in the Mideast

By CHARLEY REESE
Sun Belt Syndicate

The reaction of the fanatic Arabs to Anwar Sadat's visit to Israel should squash the notion that Israel is the militant hawk in the Middle East who can't get along with anyone.

Israel has been saying for years that she was ready to negotiate. She has also been saying there are some people — like the Palestine Liberation Organization — with whom she can't negotiate.

They, Syria, and Iraq proved her point. If they are ready to murder Sadat for simply going to Jerusalem and laying out the Arab position without compromise, if that act of statesmanship is treason in their minds, then what do you think they have in mind for Israel?

The PLO's initially venomous reaction to Sadat's visit is a demonstration of their unreasoning, fanatical hatred of Israel. Can such haters compromise? Of course not. They intend Israel's destruction. Since they have failed on the battlefield, they will try to weaken her at the negotiating table.

The Israeli people's outpouring of appreciation and warmth toward Sadat was a pathetic sight. These people are desperate for peace — not at any price, to be sure, but nobody could watch their reaction to Sadat's visit and honestly say that this is a nation which wants war.

I don't think anyone can understand Israel's position without understanding the Holocaust. Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin made this point in his reply to Sadat's speech.

World War II to many younger people has become "ancient" history, but it should be taught in every high school. The Nazi government attempted to annihilate the Jews in Europe and came close to succeeding. They murdered over six million, including a million Jewish children.

And, as Begin said, nobody came to their aid. The horror of those years when endless lines of men, women, and children were herded like cattle into gas chambers is so vividly etched in the minds of Begin's generation that they are determined that never, under any circumstances and no matter what the price, will they deliver their families again into the hands of butchers.

And if you listen to the hate-filled speeches and broadcasts pouring out of Syria and Iraq and from the PLO, you will know what the Israelis know — that if they lost a war and were driven to the beaches by the Arabs, there would be another and they do not trust us or anyone else to come to their rescue.

After all, we didn't in World War II. Saving the remaining Jews was entirely incidental to our entry into the war. As a matter of fact, the majority of Americans didn't know the extermination camps existed until Patton's Third Army rolled into the first one to be captured.

Would Israel start World War III to prevent such a repeat of history? Yes, I think she would. I would if I were in their shoes. Would they use nuclear weapons? Yes. They would do anything to defend their families from another slaughter.

Are they unreasonable in not believeing that the West would save them? No. Since World War II, the Soviets, the Red Chinese, and the Cambodians have practiced systematic slaughter and we have done nothing. We didn't move a finger to save the Hungarians or any of Eastern Europe. We didn't save the Chinese, the Tibetans, the Cubans, the Vietnamese, the Cambodians, or the Laotians. Why should they think we would save them?

In Israel as in any other distant land, the politics and diplomatic maneuvers are not just interesting theoretical games. Those people are in the kill zone if diplomacy fails. They will pay for mistakes and miscalculations with blood.

It is foolish, as some Americans have done, to pretend that Israel is a hawkish and expansionist nation. She is a nation of just over three million people surrounded by 100 million Arabs. She wants peace and has always wanted peace because Israel knows that time is against her, that no small nation can exist indefinitely under siege and in a state of war.

That's why the outpouring of affection for Sadat was spontaneous. Israel can and desperately wants to live with the moderate Arab nations. Humanitarians should pray that Sadat's bodyguards remain alert and loyal and that the leaders of the PLO all suffer quick strokes.

Cereals are under attack again. There is a new one on the market which is a box containing nothing but sugar. You pour it into a bowl and add cornflakes.

Just once on Saturday morning television, I'd love to hear an announcer say, "Hey kids — ask mom to fix you a big breakfast of Super Creamed Chipped Beef On Toast."

Soon cereals will carry the label: "Warning, failure to eat this cereal can be harmful to Kellogg, Quaker and General Mills."

It appears that cereal manufacturers can pre-sweeten anything but the Federal Trade Commission.

Cereal manufacturers are understandably peeved by recent adverse publicity. They are coming out with a new breakfast treat, "New Yukkies." They come with concentrated sour grapes.

NICK THIMMESCH

Nick Thimmesch

WASHINGTON — The world today has few political leaders of stature. Statesmen are even more scarce.

That's why Anwar Sadat, sudden and swift, stands tall in the world and bears the unmistakable dimensions of leadership. The Egyptian President didn't do it with an ultimatum or by massing troops on a border. He did it by shrewd use of a newly powerful tool — the media.

After all, what power does Egypt have? Virtually all its 40 million people, by world standards, live in poverty. Its weak economy only disables its diseased fiscal system.

True, Egypt has the respect of the Arab world because of its proud history, scholars and thinkers. It has also provided the cannon fodder for the wars with Israel and, in that sense, is a fulcrum in the Middle East. Yet, on paper, Egypt seemed unlikely to suddenly put a world leader on stage. But it has.

Sadat looms big against the pallid leaders of far richer and more powerful nations. The West in particular has abused its executive offices to the point that present occupants look pale.

Given the diminished station of the American Presidency, it is difficult for Jimmy Carter to stand tall in the world. A man named James Callaghan is prime minister of Great Britain, and a fellow named Helmut Schmidt is No.1 in West Germany.

Giscard d'Estaing is half DeGaulle's size. Who is running Italy these days? I doubt whether five Americans in a 100 can name the premier of Japan.

None of these "leaders" can move the world because all must answer to proliferating constituencies. Crises are handled therapeutically, by bureaucrats and technocrats rather than by decisive action.

Sadat took command. If nations stall on Geneva, he goes to Israel and then calls a conference in Cairo. If other Arab states or the Soviets won't come, he'll hold the Cairo meeting anyway. Sadat says, don't worry. Syria will have to come around — even after Cairo — and the PLO is more broad-minded than people think.

What Sadat does counts. The psychological barrier between Arabs and Israelis is broken. Ironically, this Arab might bring peace to Israel.

A leader makes things happen. Sadat forced Israel into urgent decision-making on its borders and resolution of the chronic Palestinian problem. American Jewish leaders prod President Carter to end the "unseemly delay," as Rabbi Joseph Sternstein put it, in responding to Sadat. Now Mr. Carter prods other Arab states to do the same.

Sadat caused workaday Americans to get a quick cram-course on the Arab world. Meg Greenfield's remarkable essay in the current Newsweek calls for demolition of the Arab stereotype and declares the reality of Sadat in our land. Time magazine boldly lays out a formula for a "just peace" in the Middle East that would have been dismissed (wrongly) one month ago as Arab propaganda.

An authentic leader must be courageous. Sadat strode into the den of Judea. He rode in an open car in Cairo's streets when the timorous were sure he would be assassinated by Arab radicals. Instead of being conciliatory to those who opposed his initiative, he bawled them out publicly.

Finally, a leader must have the support of his people. Sadat is cheered by the Egyptians he commands. He has grudging respect from leaders of Arab nations richer than his and those still hostile to Israel. The big, bad Soviet bear is cornered by Sadat.

Now Sadat tells the nations who would meet in Cairo that they must sit around one table to avoid the protocol foolery of diplomatic teams scurrying from one bargaining room to another. He invokes God to bring peace to the Middle East.

Sadat leads a poor nation, but he is big in the world. If he does nothing more, what he has done in these recent weeks will go down in the history books.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

Immediate future has rosy glow for Texas' taxpaying citizens

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN—"Taxes." What a singularly ugly word. But so necessary to the operation of government.

Texans have been more fortunate than denizens of other regions in that regard, since Texas ranks 39th in per capita state and local taxes.

But how long can that situation last?

Indefinitely, Gov. Dolph Briscoe says—and he's seized on the theme of "no new taxes" (and who can be against that?) as the base of his political efforts.

On that issue, he's not likely to get any disagreement. Indeed, his major primary opponent, Attorney General John Hill, also has come out publicly that he, too, sees no need for any new taxes.

And Comptroller Bob Bullock, another no-new-taxes man, should have been able to dance with delight after signing the 1977 annual financial report for the state—since he could write that the fiscal year ending Aug. 31 "was, again, a record year" for revenues.

However, as Bullock also noted, it was also a record year for expenditures.

Texas ended up the year with money in the bank and cattle out west, as folks used to say (when cattle prices were higher).

Revenues and an opening cash balance amounting to $9 billion allowed expenditures of $7.02 billion—leaving $1.98 billion on hand, $336 million more than the cash balance at the beginning of the fiscal year.

That would appear to indicate that when lawmakers return in 1979, they'll find another surplus on hand.

But, where are the surpluses of yesteryear? Eaten up by those economic predators known as inflation and increased demand.

While the percentage of increase in the State's budget has slowed in recent years, the total dollar amount has gone up.

State spending rose 10.1 percent for fiscal 1974 compared to the year before—amounting to $4,019,400,000 in spending.

The next year, the increase was 21.5 percent—for a total $5,377,300,000.

For fiscal 1976, the increase was 15.4 percent—and the total was $6,203,500,000.

And for the last fiscal year, the increase was 6.5 percent—with a total $6,606,000,000.

With continuing inflation, continuing population growth, and continuing demand for more services, that budget isn't likely to decrease in the years ahead.

Thus far, Texas' healthy economy and increased prices for oil and gas have allowed the general sales tax (the biggest money raiser for the state) and mineral severance taxes to grow—and to cover the increasing expenditures.

But the House Study Group, made up of House members who have helped decide on new taxes—or increasing some old ones.

HSG Chairman Rep. John Bryant, Dallas, warns that if oil and gas reserves "decline drastically" or the economy "takes a nose dive," new sources of revenue will have to be used.

When that "unhappy day" comes, however, Bryant says, lawmakers will have a number of options available—including personal and corporate income taxes, and oil refinery tax, and higher severance taxes.

Indeed, Bryant concludes, if some of those alternatives were adopted, property or sales taxes could be lowered—or even abolished.

None of that is likely to happen soon, however—since few folks are anxious to be remembered as sponsors of tax legislation—unless it lowers or removes or reforms some tax.

As things now stand, Texas will enter the decade of the 1980s without any new or increased oil taxes—but the question is whether that will be true in the 1990s.

The answer, most likely, is no.

WASHINGTON LETTER

Astronaut may lose a bundle

By ROBERT H. WILLIAMS
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Edgar Mitchell, the Apollo 14 astronaut who recently sold a 40-cent stamp he took to the moon for $4,200, may wind up $226,800 less well off than he might have planned. See, Sen. Adlai Stevenson, chairman of the Subcommittee on Science, Technology and Space, has written a letter to NASA nabob Robert A. Frosch suggesting that Mitchell was "unauthorized" to take the 55 stamps to the moon. If it turns out that this little deal was indeed "unauthorized," Stevenson wrote, "it would seem that the stamps are the property of the U.S. government and appropriate measures should be taken at once to recover them."

Sen. Henry Bellmon, the pride of Red Rock, Okla., had to go and write this sort of patronizing letter to Sen. Gary Hart, pride of the Mile-High City, spelling out the ABCs of oil shale, which is mostly what's under Colorado, and asking Hart's support for a bill to Solve the Energy Crisis via oil shale. Well, Hart, no stranger to shale or environmental concerns, fired back a friendly letter to Bellmon wondering if the two could get together on a bill setting aside Oklahoma as a wilderness area, naturally moving all the people out.

Along those lines, some eyebrows are being raised over at the Interior Department about a plan to take away historic areas from the Park Service — places like national battlefields, Independence Park in Philadelphia and some urban parks — and place them in a new agency called the National Heritage Trust. The worry is that the urban parks are more attractive to members of Congress, and thus might get a better spot in the budget, at the expense of national parks and wilderness areas.

Get this: The National Journal, the ultra-expensive magazine, recently decided to publish a White House phone directory for its readers. Okay? Well, the White House wouldn't cough up its internally prepared directory, so Journal editors and reporters, utilizing leakers, got hold of a couple of copies anyway, only to find out they were out of date. So the Journal staff prepared its own, like making pizza from scratch. It was published, and there have been hundreds of requests for copies — including several from WHERE? The White House.

Wasn't that bureaucratic? Ernest L. Boyer, the U.S. commissioner of education, who presides over one of the government's densest paperwork jungles, told a National Education Week gathering recently that OE's "reputation for paperwork was well-established from the very first." He noted that the first report the agency issued, back in the 1860s, was "a mind-boggling 900 pages long, and the print was small and hard to read. When in doubt obfuscate seems to have been the rule from the start." The gist of that 900-pager? Schools were going to hell.

Back to today. Or last year, anyway, when then presidential hopeful Jimmy Carter was hawking the honest-to-God-down-to-earth Georgia language that would replace Washington doubletalk. But here was Himself talking to reporters after installing the shah of Iran in his limousine on the South Drive of the White House: " ... We had very thorough discussions about many items of a bilateral and local nature, and I think the shah would agree that it was a very fruitful exchange between me and him ..." All right.

Here comes another reorganization fight . . . maybe. The Carter administration, in the person of Bill Harsch of the OMB, is wondering whether the Environmental Protection Agency should be incorporated into the Interior Department as part of a new Department of the Environment. Follow this! It would tickle Secretary Cecil D. Andrus, stung by having to give up some pieces of Interior to Labor and Energy. But Conservationists are saying, no way.

POSITIVE THINKING

Kill your worry and live longer

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

A physician asked me to see a patient who had been admitted to the hospital with seemingly genuine symptoms of a heart attack, including shortness of breath and pains in the chest. "But," explained the doctor, "I am inclined to suspect that it is not a real heart attack but rather an anxiety heart. Will you talk to him and explore the psychological and spiritual basis of his anxiety?"

After counseling, it was ascertained that the patient did, indeed, suffer from acute anxiety. I discovered that this man, now in his sixties, had committed several moral offenses in earlier life. As far as I was able to determine such incidents were limited to that early period and his conduct, subsequently, had been impeccable. But he had lived in constant fear, however, that his wrongdoing would be discovered.

A deep sense of guilt had hatched a flock of fears and tensions that had haunted him for years until now they actually had him back in a hospital, with symptoms of a heart attack. His illness was entirely due to these long held anxieties.

We were able to help him achieve healthy-mindedness about the entire matter. His physical symptoms gradually disappeared, and he returned to normal health. The doctor expressed the opinion that, had the guilt-worry complex continued, the man could actually have died of the physical condition which it stimulated.

Frequently you hear people say, "I'm sick with worry," or "I'm worried nearly to death." There is more truth in these statements than you might suppose, for worry can indeed make you sick and has even been known to cause death. It is a fact that by overcoming worry we can, in all probability, liye longer and certainly live much better.

The basic secret of overcoming worry is the substitution of faith for fear as your dominant mental attitude. Two great forces in this world are more powerful than all others. One is fear and the other is faith; and faith is stronger than fear. Basically, then, the method for overcoming worry is deliberately and consistently to fill the mind with faith until fear is displaced.

Normal fear is a healthy mechanism built into us for our protection. Abnormal fear, on the contrary, is a pattern of unhealthy thinking that is both destructive and disintegrating. It is one of the most potent enemies of personality. Abnormal fear possesses the inherent power to cause ill health and even disaster.

A doctor felt this keenly so that when called to a home where he found members of the family clustered anxiously and apprehensively about his patient, projecting to him their fear thoughts, he took direct action. He told them, vigorously, that they were filling the patient's room so full of "fear germs" that his healing efforts were valueless. To dramatize his concern, the doctor threw the windows wide open. A strong gale whipped the curtains straight out.

"I've got to fumigate this room of fear germs," he explained brusquely. "Unless you people start thinking faith instead of fear you are going to make it very hard for me to help. As that strong wind blows through this room purifying it, let the power of faith purify your minds. Stop surrounding my patient with fear virus."

Worry may be described as a spasm of the emotions in which the mind takes hold of a thought or obsession, clutches it spasmodically, and will not let it go. To break its hold one must gently, but forcibly, insinuate a healthier and stronger idea into the mind's convulsive grasp. This stronger idea is that of faith. When faith, rather than fear, becomes your obsession you will kill worry and live longer.

Relief in order

To The Editor:

The chaos out at the air terminal — particularly the parking situation — is the kind of mess that one might expect to encounter at a mud village in the interior of Mexico but certainly not at a regional air terminal serving a quarter of a million people.

If as much effort and dedication of purpose went into alleviating that mess as is devoted to milking every last dollar out of the parking meters out there — day or night, Sundays and holidays — the problem could be overcome in short order.

For starters, how about a shuttle bus, especially during the busy afternoon-evening period? Most people would be glad to pay a quarter to ride from the parking area to the terminal — or vice versa — most of all, people with heavy bags and women wearing high heel shoes.

ART BUCHWALD

Howard's Howard in Jerusalem, too

WASHINGTON — The role that Walter Cronkite, Barbara Walters and John Chancellor played in the Sadat-Begin talks in Jerusalem cannot be underestimated. By bypassing the State Department and going directly to the three anchorpersons of American television, Sadat and Begin agreed to meet, which was the breakthrough that everyone had been hoping for.

It might have been different, though, if Roone Arledge, the president of ABC News, had chosen to have Howard Cosell conduct the interview between the two men instead of Barbara Walters.

This is what I mean.

"Good evening, ladies and gentlemen. This is Howard Cosell bringing you an exclusive ABC Sports spectacular live and in color from the ringside here in Jerusalem. Tonight we are presenting another star-studded fight with the incomparable Egyptian heavyweight, Anwar Sadat, who is risking his title as champion of the Arab world, to meet with one of the toughest little sluggers in the Middle East, Prime Minister Menahem Begin, a comparatively unknown backbencher until he knocked out the formidable Yitzhak Rabin in the last Israeli elections.

"I spoke to Anwar in the locker room in Cairo a few days ago, and he told me that he would go anywhere, any time, to meet with Menahem. I then passed this message on to Menahem, who revealed he was ready to take on Anwar even if it meant fighting his whole Israeli cabinet.

"And so the two gladiators are here tonight, which I will have to admit, in all candor, I must take full credit for.

"Anwar, forgive me for asking this question, but I feel it incumbent on my part to do so for the benefit of the TV audience. Why did you decide to fight Begin at this time?"

"I decided to come to Jerusalem to show I was interested in Peace."

"But surely, Anwar, Egypt, with its Russian-made tanks, missiles and MIG airplanes, is a match for Israel. Are you trying to say, and correct me if I'm wrong, that you couldn't march into Tel Aviv at any time you wanted?"

"That is not the point. The point is that war is no longer a solution to the problem of the Middle East."

"It sounds to me, Anwar, that you're afraid of tiny Israel."

"I am not afraid of Israel."

"All right, Anwar, forgive me, but I have to tell it like it is.

"Now, let's have a word with Begin. Menahem, I must say, in all frankness, that it has been said you have lost some of the spunk and verve that made you such a formidable threat during the memorable Mideast wars in 1948, 1956 and 1967. You don't seem to be the same Begin that we all remember from the Irgun days."

"I wish to say, Howard, I welcome Anwar Sadat to Jerusalem and I hope that we can find a peaceful solution to our differences."

"And yet, if you don't mind my own observation, you told me only a few months ago that you could still go the whole distance and get to Cairo if you wanted to. Perhaps I'm speaking out of turn, but I would be remiss if I didn't ask this question: Are you chickening out because you are not in condition?"

"I am not chickening out of anything. Sadat knows I'm not chicken."

"Anwar, are you ready to say in front of millions of people watching this telecast by satellite that Menahem is not chicken?"

"I don't think we should talk about chickens at this time. I am here to give my position and listen to the Israeli position."

"If you don't mind my saying so, and I must intercede at this time, it appears to me that we have here a total absence of aggression in both parties, which I perceive will disappoint everyone who was tuned in because we promised them a fight.

"This is not the show we expected to bring you from the Middle East.

"I hope that the World Boxing Commission will take note of it and hold up the purses of both Sadat and Begin until a full investigation is forthcoming.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Exception taken

To The Editor:

Regarding Darryl Kersey's naive reaction to the Beals' letter accompanying their donation to George Bush, I am amazed that anyone would deride not only the right but in this case the obligation of a donor to stipulate the condition under which his donation is made. I happen to share the Beals' philosophy, but that is in no way germane.

Although I am dismayed by labor's enormous resources utilized for political purposes, I see no way to condemn those responsible for such utilization; surely no voter, including Mr. Kersey, can gainsay the politically compelling effect of such funds, nor its justification in the democratic process.

Moreover, it seems axiomatic that any representative can work effectively only to the extent that he has a crystal knowledge of the tenets of those he represents. The burden of the message accompanying my contribution to George Bush's campaign was, "Figuratively speaking, please consider me a signatory to the Beals' letter."

Is Mr. Kersey fully aware that currently George is totally dedicated to getting elected, in the course of which he is assured of formidable opposition, and in the pursuit of which he needs all the help he can get, particularly financial help? Any such candidate likewise needs help as to the consensus of opinion among his constituents; opinion accompanied by money demonstrates conviction on the part of the donor. With which candidate has Mr. Kersey shared his purse?

Having known George Bush most of his life, I support him for the same reasons the Beals suggest: I'm not about to say, "Here is some money, luck to you." Knowing him, I firmly believe in Washington George will be guided first by his own conscience as to what is best for the nation, second by the consensus of his constituents; if the Beal outlook does not parallel that of the majority of George's supporters, all concerned know what to expect.

Far from reprehensible, I consider the Beals' letter to George, and their sharing it with the rest of us, altogether laudable on several counts. It shows the Beals are as realistic as they are conservative. It also gives Mr. Kersey the opportunity to offer the questionable benefit of his reaction to their patriotic gesture.

What's the point?

To The Editor:

Would like to suggest that those "West Texans" who are disgruntled by the article in W magazine, as inspired by Bill Blass and titled, "Inside Midland, Texas," are possibly premature in their anger. After all, we haven't as yet been assayed by either Givenchy or Pucci (Poochie?).

It isn't surprising that author Hillary Johnson "missed the point." What is the point? The real surprise is that any West Texan would give a damn about any opinion emanating from New York. It's surprising that we should solicit either their praise or their blame or their understanding. Do we really prize their ready-to-wear "culture" or their over-rouged ethic? It should be clear to anyone by now that New York's highly-vaunted "melting pot," was and is, nothing more than a slops-jar!

Now get this, (and I requote), "No one would be caught riding Western style in this town." She must be referring to that comparatively small group who wear the polo, or British riding habit? It's probably terrible to admit, but no less true . . . the best polo players in the world are recycled cowboys.

In summing up, would like to quote an advertisement appearing in a Carmel, California newspaper in 1963: "Wanted—curator for local art gallery . . . must have British accent." Yippie-ay-yo-ki-yaaaaa!

Support needed

To The Editor:

In 1965 I wrote a thank you letter to the City of Midland. I called it "the Tall City with a big heart." The "Anderle Fund" helped us get back on our feet financially. The prayers, letters, get-well cards and friendships made our long year go faster.

Many of you may have heard on the radio or seen on TV the appeal by friends and neighbors for help with the "Jo Martin Fund." I do hope you will come to the aid of these deserving people and good neighbors of ours for about twelve years.

When Jo called me to ask for special prayers because the shoulder pain she thought was arthritis was really cancer of the bone, I was almost mad at God. She has had enough pain to last a lifetime. This is her third bout with cancer and she has arthritis, low blood sugar and a bleeding ulcer.

Your prayers and support will make us all feel better.

The "Jo Martin Fund" has been opened at Commercial Bank & Trust Co.

Christmas Recipe

To The Editor:

Take the early days of December, and all generous portions of snow over which a sparkling of ice which has been sifted.

Next take some brisk winter air and the blush of early morning sunlight, cream these two ingredients until the days tingle with expectation. Add to this the joy of a generous heart, blended with the wonder of a radiant-eyed child.

Set this aside for a moment while you catch a little laughter from under the mistletoe. Marinate this in love before you add it to the above mixture.

Form all ingredients into a warmth of good will and set aside to bubble. Keep this bubbling in a surrounding of happiness for days, until you address your cards, wrap gifts, clean house, and prepare for the platter of lasting memories.

Then surrounded by the aroma from the Christmas tree:

Garnish the above mixture with silver, gold, red and green trimmings, which have been dipped in the love of mankind.

Serve December 25th after you have offered a prayer of gratitude.

"Merry Christmas."

Overextended?

To The Editor:

Recently your paper reported the communication of the City of Midland to our legislators in Washington opposing ratification of the Panama Canal Treaty. I noticed it was unanimously endorsed by council members. Are we soon to have the city of Midland's statements on the Middle East, Africa, SALT, NATO and or trade?

In our rapidly expanding city, it is surprising to have a council that feels it can extend itself beyond the problems of safety, zoning, taxation, physical improvement, social services and the like to address itself — collectively — to foreign policy.

Should some Midlanders not agree with the official city of Midland, I suggest they, as well as those who do agree, let our legislators know.

Disabled veteran

To The Editor:

I lived in Midland for 11 months. I am a 53-year-old disabled veteran of World War II. I was wounded three times in action in the Battle of the Bulge. I had seven operations, had my left leg amputated and four more operations afterward. I had very poor circulation in my right leg and I had to have my right leg amputated too. I now have a liver infection.

It would make me very happy if you, the editor, would please have my letter published in The Reporter-Telegram. It would make me very happy to receive get well cards, letters or Christmas cards to cheer me up these long, dreary days. Receiving mail makes me happy and it gives me something to look forward to.

Study group says 'ag value' tax plan would boost rates

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — If Texas starts assessing rural land on its productivity instead of its value as real estate, tax rates would jump an average of 19 percent statewide, a House Study Group report says.

Legislators passed an "ag value" taxation bill this year, but Attorney General John Hill has ruled it unconstitutional.

The study group's 20-page report said that since school districts would have to make up the revenue lost by lowering assessed values of farms and ranches, the money would have to come from higher tax rates.

"Tax relief for farmers and ranchers would cause an increase in property tax rates averaging 19 per cent statewide. The amount of increase would vary tremendously in different parts of the state, from zero in some urban areas to 100 percent or more in certain rural areas," the report said.

It found that a third of the state's taxing districts would have to raise their tax rates by 65 percent or more over what is required by assessment according to market value.

The study group report also said that the more relief given to farmers and ranchers, "the greater will be the burden on other residents of the district."

A constitutional amendment backing up the "ag value" bill failed largely because the bill would have allowed corporations to benefit from the tax break.

Those fighting the benefits for corporate farms and timber lands included prominent members of the study group.

But the new analysis showed that less than 10 percent of the farm and ranch land in the state is owned by corporations.

A third of the timber land, however, is held by corporations, it said.

It said there was a possibility that under "ag use value," some land owners actually might have higher assessments than under the present market value system.

Under the present system that allows owners to take advantage of agricultural use value if a majority of their income derives from the land, some ended up with higher assessments, the report said.

"They sued the local assessor, but the court ruled that the new agricultural-use values would have to stand since they had been properly determinded and were well below true market value," the study group said.

Reception slated to honor Godfrey

A reception honoring J. Fike Godfrey of Abilene will be held at 3 p.m. Thursday in the Yates Room of the Midland Hilton, given by several of his Midland friends.

Godfrey, who resigned in October as executive vice president of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce, last Tuesday launched his campaign for Congress, representing the Abilene district. The congressional seat will be vacated at the end of next year by Rep. Omar Burleson of Abilene. Godfrey had served seven years as executive vice president of the West Texas Chamber. He also is a past president of the organization and is well known throughout West Texas.

Hosts for the Midland reception are C. W. Barclay, Spencer Blocker, L. H. Byrd, Harry Clark, W. H. Collyns, Doug Henson, Jo Kloesel, R. L. Pendleton L. Roy Prescott, Emil Rassman and H. D. Sutterlin.

The public is invited to attend the reception, at which coffee will be served.

Mrs. Godfrey will accompany her husband to Midland.

Texan attempts Kansas bank job

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — A gray-haired man wearing a cap and carrying a cane handed First National Bank cashier Barbara Choc a note Friday which read, "This is an armed hold-up. I need all the money I can get."

The man was arrested and police say he is also wanted in Corpus Christi, Texas, in connection with an attempt to extort $75,000 from a bank.

The teller at first thought the note was "just a good joke," according to police Lt. Larry Wills.

Three bank employees looked at the note, then handed it to bank Operations Manager Anthony Krkosska.

After studying the note, Krkosska, instead of giving the man money, activated a silent alarm, bringing swarms of police into the downtown area.

Nevada Capital now empty building shell

CARSON CITY, Nev. (AP) — Nevada's silver-domed Capitol building has been stripped — furniture and all — as workers prepare for a $5.3 million two-year renovation job to make the building earthquake-safe.

Gov. Mike O'Callaghan was the last state official to leave the 107-year-old, sandstone-sheathed structure Friday.

Treasurer Mike Mirabelli, Secretary of State Bill Swackhamer, Controller Wilson Mcgowan, their staffs and other government workers moved before O'Callaghan cleared out.

A tour of the once-elegant and busy offices shows rugs stripped off floors, old papers and publications strewn around, all furniture gone and even wallpaper peeling in some areas.

Walls of the cavernous main hallways are bare now that the big paintings of former Nevada governors have been stored until the reconstruction job is done.

Bob Stewart, O'Callaghan's press secretary, says there's "nothing we can do about it but accept it." And he says that while the graceful structure will be totally rebuilt, every effort will be made to leave undisturbed the building's cornerstone, stuffed with everything from a copy of the state Constitution to an old Chinese coin.

"That will not be disturbed if we can help it," he said. "If it was, it would sort of signal the end of this being the Capitol."

The actual moving seems to have gone smoothly enough, but some staffers are complaining that their new quarters are too crowded.

Both Mirabelli and Mcgowan and their staffs are in temporary quarters, awaiting completion of a new private office building. Then they'll have to move again.

The governor and his staff are moving across the main street to the Supreme Court building, and into quarters recently vacated by Attorney General Bob List.

Carter sees goal fading

WASHINGTON (AP) — With the latest unemployment figures in, President Carter apparently has given up his goal of bringing the jobless rate down to 6.5 percent by the year's end.

The Labor Department announced Friday that although the number of Americans holding jobs rose by the biggest margin in 17 years, the unemployment rate dropped in November only one tenth of one percentage point — to 6.9 percent — from the previous month.

White House Press Secretary Jody Powell acknowledged that the administration probably would not reach its first-year goal for reducing unemployment.

"It's not likely to be there," Powell told reporters, referring to the jobless rate goal of 6.5 percent. Carter had said a stagnant unemployment rate may be a key in whether he presses for a tax cut early next year.

Bell's new trial hearing slated

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A hearing is scheduled Monday in state district court here on a request by Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. for a new trial on civil charges that it slandered two former executives.

A jury in September found Bell had slandered the late T.O. Gravitt and James Ashley during an internal company investigation in 1974. The panel also found that the probe was a factor in the mental condition that drove Gravitt to suicide Oct. 17, 1974, in Dallas.

Ashley was fired from his $55,000-a-year executive post with Bell in San Antonio on Oct. 31, 1974. At the time of his suicide, Gravitt was the top Bell executive in Texas.

The jury recommended and State District Court Judge Peter Michael Curry ordered that Southwestern Bell pay $1.5 million in damages to Ashley and $1.5 million in damages to Gravitt's widow, Oleta Gravitt Dixon, who has remarried and now lives in Bartlesville, Okla.

Ashley and Gravitt's widow won the initial battle in a six-week courtroom fight that was muddled by claims of improprieties by Bell officials and sexual misconduct by Ashley and Gravitt.

In its request to Judge Curry for a new trial, Southwestern Bell alleges 767 items of error or exception to the earlier trial proceedings.

The company claims the court erred because of alleged juror misconduct and because of alleged "prejudicial conduct" by the plaintiffs' attorneys.

Bell also contends the judge should have granted a change of venue to move the trial out of San Antonio.

Curry already has denied a Bell motion to overrule the jury's verdict and findings, and the request for a new trial is the latest in a series of formal steps to appeal the case.

Meanwhile last week, a Bell spokesman said the company will pay about $80,000 in death benefits and a $586 monthly pension to Mrs. Gravitt. The company had contested the payments.

Club sets showing on stamps

A movie explaining how stamps are selected and printed by the Bureau of Engraving in Washington, D.C., will be shown during the meeting of the Odessa Chapter of the Permian Basin Stamp Club at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the Main Post Office, located at 200 N. Texas in Odessa.

The program will be presented by Ken Smith, philatelic sales clerk for the Lubbock Post Office. He also will bring with him many of the latest postage stamps and other items of interest to the stamp collector. Door prizes will be given, and refreshments will be served at the meeting.

All members, their guests and any person interested in stamp collecting are welcome. Members are encouraged to bring to the meeting philatelic items for trading and selling.

U.S. retailers expect to have big Christmas

By MARTIN MERZER

NEW YORK (AP) — Improved economic conditions, the arrival of cool weather and the traditional holiday spirit are combining to promise the nation's retailers a jolly Christmas selling season.

With one week of the holiday shopping season ended, an Associated Press survey of large chains and individual stores in several cities showed that most retailers expect sharp sales gains for the rest of the month.

"Sales during the week following Thanksgiving have been outstanding, which is supportive of our predictions for a strong Christmas selling season," said Edward Gibbons, president of F.W. Woolworth Co. in New York.

For most of 1977, monthly retail sales have topped comparable 1976 figures, and store executives and analysts agree that the trend should carry through the all-important final month of the year.

"We've had a very good performance August through November, and I've never seen a case where you have a good trend going and it doesn't hold up in December as well," said a spokesman for Donaldson's Department Stores in Minnesota. "We're looking for a minimum 10 percent increase in sales in December (over December 1976)."

Retail executives around the country said that December accounts for up to 22 percent of the entire year's business and over 30 percent of the year's profits.

Retailing officials said clothing sales seemed particularly strong.

The chairman of K mart Corp., Robert Dewar, said his firm's November sales — up 15.9 percent — would have been even stronger if cool weather had arrived earlier.

"Sales were relatively soft during the first two weeks of the month," Dewar said. "The cooler weather experienced throughout the country in the middle of November sharply stimulated sales, particularly in the apparel lines."

A spokesman for Davison's in Atlanta said cool weather over the Thanksgiving weekend brought out record-breaking crowds.

Among other business developments this past week:

—The U.S. Commerce Department reported a $3.1 billion trade deficit for October, the first month in which the excess of the nation's imports over exports exceeded $3 billion.

Analysts said the dock strike on the East and Gulf coasts and the nation's steadily increasing reliance on imported oil contributed to the record deficit.

In a related development, Japanese Prime Minister Takeo Fukuda carried out a sweeping reorganization of his Cabinet. Fukuda's action stemmed from his concern that Japan's mounting trade surplus was endangering relations with the United States.

—The pay of American workers rose an average 1.8 percent in the three months ending in September, keeping wage earners slightly ahead of inflation, the U.S. Labor Department reported.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics said the increase in wages and salaries over the previous quarter compares with a 1 percent rise in consumer prices for the period, after seasonal adjustments.

Meanwhile, the Commerce Department said the government's index of leading economic indicators rose in October for the fourth straight month, indicating a gradually improving economy.

—Federal Reserve Chairman Arthur Burns said he "would seriously consider" remaining a board member of the nation's central bank if President Carter doesn't reappoint him chairman.

Burns, whose tight-money policy has drawn fire from the Carter administration, said he "would be very pleased to be asked" to remain as Fed chairman and "almost certainly would accept."

Burns' four-year term as chairman expires Jan. 31, but his term as a member of the Federal Reserve Board runs until 1984. "Neither the President nor any of his associates has talked to me about this at any time," Burns said.

At a news conference, President Carter said he had not made a decision about whether Burns would be reappointed chairman.

—The median income of American families rose more than $4,200 between 1970 and 1975 to $14,094, the government reported. A new Census Bureau report listed income and poverty statistics for all 50 states and the District of Columbia for the first time since the 1970 census.

It showed that Alaska had the highest median family income in the nation at $22,432, followed by Hawaii at $17,770; Maryland, $17,556; New Jersey, $16,432; Connecticut, $16,244; and Illinois, $16,062. Mississippi had the lowest median family income, $9,999.

Quiet invasion could signal trouble for wine producers

By CARL CANNON
The Los Angeles Times

While American wine producers are rubbing their hands over what appears to be the best year of recent times, a quiet but strong invasion is under way that could signal trouble ahead.

Wine imports into the United States jumped 20 percent last year, while total domestic wine shipments dropped 0.5 percent. In the last six years, one industry analyst estimates, imports have increased 96 percent compared to 34 percent for sales of American products.

But the import flood comes at a time when most American vintners are too busy counting their own blessings to be concerned.

And most thankful of all are the Californians, who control 73 percent of the total U.S. wine market. A larger-than-expected crop after two years of drought, a rapidly expanding market this year and, with the exception of a few white varities, enough wine to serve that market put them in what they see as an enviable position.

The California vintners are so confident they are playing follow the leader in boosting prices when lower priced foreign wines are entering the market in record numbers.

As justification, the wine producers could be echoing the steel makers or any other U.S. business: higher costs for raw materials (grapes, glass, cork, packaing) labor, transportation and the general costs of doing business.

The only thorn in the side of the Californians is white wine. While there are a few actual shortages in some varities — Chardonnay, for instance — in general it is more a case of not having as much to take care of the booming U.S. white wine market as they would like.

What there is of quality grapes is being sold at high prices, which the wineries are paying and passing on to the consumer.

While there is a legitimate supply-demand crunch in white grapes, there are adequate supplies of reds on hand. But the prices of Cabernet Sauvignon and Pinot Noir, too, are rising for the consumer. The $7 to $10 bottle of Cabernet has become standard.

In some cases, this is merely a leveling off of rises so as to keep white wine within the popular consumer price limits. But in others it appears a matter of what the traffic will bear.

In some cases this has left observers perplexed. In New York City, for example, which is the largest import market in the country and therefore the most competitive for the California wine makers, many boutique wineries are pricing their 1974 Cabernet Sauvignon above the price for the 1974 Lafite Rothschild.

While it is undoubtedly true that California is producing some of the finest wines of the world, and quality preference is a subjective thing, the marketing strategy of pricing a product above that of one of the world's oldest and most prestigious wineries appears a bit mystifying to industry analysts.

Meanwhile, on a different level, Italy, according to Italian Trade commissioner Lucio Caputo, "is leading a revolution in the imported wine market."

The whole Italian boot is filled with wine, with almost every village in the country producing it in some form. The largest wine-producing nation in the world, it is the No. 1 exporter to the United States, with France only a distant second. As recently as 1972 Italy was only third.

Italian exports to the United States rose 48 percent last year. Only an infinitesmial amount of German wine exported to the United States is not white.

Peter Sichel, head of U.S. operations for the vast Sichel family wine interests, says there is a large crop in Germany this year. "I don't see prices going up."

Only France, which gave way to Italy as the top U.S. exporter in 1974, may have some price rises because of widely publicized crop difficulties this year. But even these may not have been as bad as first thought.

A Sichel family member headquartered in France sees some price increases because of weather damage tin Bourdeaux but he expects Burgundy to remain more or less stable. He also says there should bea decent crop of Rhone wine. But in the Loire Valley, where most of France's white wine is made, damage appears extensive.

But if there is to be little French white wine on the market, there will be plenty of German and Italian.

"While the dollar depreciated considerably recently against the Deutschmark, the condition will be offset by cheaper wine at the vineyard level because of the big crop," says Sichel. The net result: prices of German whites will hold steady in this country.

And says Sichel, "There is a very solid taste in America for German wines. He should know: Sichel's "Blue Nun" is the largest single imported table wine by far. Backed by a strong advertising campaign, "Blue Nun" accounts for 20 percent of all German wine imported into this country by Sichel's figures. His competitors say they believe it's market share is much higher.

For the first six months of this year imported table wines accounted for 21 percent of the total U.S. market. This is approximately the same penetration as E and J Gallo, the largest winery in the world, exerts on the U.S. market. Overall, Gallo's share of the market would be higher, but a good deal of it is in special flavor wines and specialites, not table wine.

Despite this figure, the Californians are not very impressed with the challenge, especially that of the Italians.

Residential building swells permit total

New housing starts accounted for $915,500 of the $1,249,000 in building permits issued by the Midland Inspections Department between Nov. 21 and Dec. 2.

The two-week total brought the total value of building permits issued by the Midland Inspections Department to $57,428,826. There have been 1,636 permits issued by inspections department.

Current market gets label: Buy-out era

The Los Angeles Times

NEW YORK — Wall Street may be pretty sluggish these days, but like the "go-go" period of the 1960s, the current stock market is getting itself a label. It's the "buy-out era."

Takeover offers — and outright battles — are popping up all over this year. And Wall Street is a rumor mill about more to come.

The problem is that the number of rumors far exceeds the number of actual takeovers, and the result is some disappointed speculators. On the theory the public is still a bit shy about stock market instability after the big collapse in 1970, the "buy-out era" may be doing more to harm the market's image than help it.

"When the stock market goes up strongly, that's good for the stockbrokers," says Donald C. Carter, president of a proxy solicitation firm that bears his name. "When the stock market goes down, the brokers also are trading and making money. The worst thing that can happen is that the brokers have nothing to do. It is happening now and the only market around is a market in rumors. There are a lot more rumors being spread these days than actual deals being made. Probably only about 10 percent of rumored deals come off."

"This is not a sober atmosphere," complains Ivan Boesky, head of Ivan Boesky and Co., a Wall Street arbitrage firm. "It is a story market. Everybody has a story; stories about stocks being gullibly purchased and in some cases carelessly recommended."

Such rumors begin in a myriad of ways.

Winthrop C. Neilson, a partner in Georgeson and Co., another proxy solicitation firm, puts a large part of the blame on brokerage houses and stock advisory services that publish lists of so-called "takeover candidates."

Under the guise of research, these services list companies that fit the criteria as potential victims of corporate raids: the stock is undervalued; they are in a business currently in vogue; the company's management doesn't own much stock in the company.

Stockbrokers using such information are abdicating their responsibilities, Neilson charges.

"They mention such candidates to their customers and all of a sudden the rumors start," Neilson says. "Instead of making recommendations based on sound research and investment theories, they are making recommendations on pure speculation that a company will be bought out."

And, say many on Wall Street, some rumors are deliberately planted by would-be manipulators. Certainly the origin of such rumors is next to impossible to pinpoint.

But once started, a rumor feeds upon itself. All of a sudden, the stock of a rumored takeover candidate appears on the most active list. Unsuspecting investors want to know why. They, too, jump on the rumor wagon, making the stock trade ven more actively, sending its price up still further.

Sooner or later, something has to happen. Either the takeover occurs and — this time — the investor makes a profit. Or, more often than not, the rumor is shot down and the stock price drops more quickly than it rose.

Such was the case of Sambo's Restaurants Inc. Last month its stock climbed to about $27 from about $18 after rumors of a raid surfaced. The identity of the raiders ranged from Mobil Oil to W.R. Grace and Co. to K mart.

The price on the New York Stock Exchange soon dropped back to about $19, falling more than $4 in a week. Wall Street observers talked about several possible factors: word of a Securities and Exchange Commission inquiry, a disappointing third quarter and withdrawal of W.R. Grace from exploratory talks about acquiring Sambo's.

Pabst Brewing Co. stock rose $5 in a single day in October. It was rumored that Reynolds Industries, which had unsuccessfully attempted to acquire another brewery, would make a tender offer. There was no other reason for the stock to rise since it came in the face of a strike-caused decline in third-quarter earnings. In this case, the day after the rise, APL Corp. did make a tender offer which Pabst is currently fighting.

BUSINESS NOTEBOOK

Texas industry to feel effects of toxic rules

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — While some labor leaders charge too little is being done to protect workers from exposure to dangerous — perhaps deadly — chemicals where they work, some manufacturers worry new regulations may go too far and produce only unnecessary expense.

Texas, with its large chemical and petrochemical complex, will be one of the areas feeling the effects of the new Federal Toxic Substances Control Act and regulations by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration.

OSHA has proposed regulations for identifying and controlling substances which may be carcinogenic (cancer-producing) — regulations which some industry groups feel may be too restrictive and costly.

OSHA will be holding hearings on the proposed regulations in April, and persons or groups interested in taking part have been asked to sign up by Thursday (Dec. 8).

Members of the newly-formed American Industrial Health Council, composed of chemical company officials and representatives, charge the OSHA regulations may result in unneeded and costly restrictions — and could allow the banning of the manufacture of some chemicals on the basis of what the industry feels may be inadequate testing.

Bobby Barnes, a vice president in the Texas AFL-CIO (Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers) and a worker in the Shell Chemical Co. Pasadena plant, contends industry officials have ignored the need for inform and protect workers.

OSHA, he argues, is one of the few agencies which can provide the needed assistance.

Barnes contends Shell attempted to force some workers back to their jobs although they were suffering from peripheral neuopathy, a dying off of the outer nerve endings. Shell says there is no proof the condition is job-related.

Discrimination charges were filed against Shell as a result, Barnes says, adding that a decision in the matter is expected soon.

The company, Barnes contends, has not had any education or information program to make workers aware of possible dangers — although "material data sheets" are put on units for workers to hunt through, if they choose, he reports.

The international union has been asking for such education programs for some time, Barnes says, with growing emphasis in recent months, following news reports of possible dangers at various plants throughout the country.

"I think it's a problem industry-wide," Barnes says. "Instead of educating the people, they (the companies) try to cover the problems up."

Nationally, the AFL-CIO has called for strengthening OSHA's powers over possible health hazards from substances found in working places — and the Texas labor organization indicates it would back up that position.

AFL-CIO headquarters officials say that particular matter seems to be of increasing concern to workers, noting that the oil workers negotiated five days of training for union stewards in safety and health as part of a recent contract.

That training will be carried out by the Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations at the University of Houston.

But whatever happens, regarding working conditions in Texas manufacturing plants, where toxic substances (and other matters) are concerned, apparently won't involve state government to any great extent.

Representatives of the Occupational Safety Division of the State Department of Health say they are "out of the picture completely" on this issue, and suspect Federal officials wouldn't be particularly interested in their views, anyway.

Texas, through its lawmakers, has decided to leave enforcement of occupational safety matters principally in the hands of OSHA — a decision which some labor representatives indicated was the best course of action, since they felt legislators were unsympathetic to their wishes.

Now, it seems, OSHA is moving strongly in yet another area — producing new tensions in that longstanding feud between labor and management.

by Bill Beattie

We can start putting appreciation to work for ourselves by being grateful for what we have — little things, sometimes; appreciating our homes, our cars, our community, our family, etc. Some might say, "But you don't have to live in my community or home, or have to drive that old car!" We can be grateful for the planning and work that went into their construction. We can appreciate the opportunity afforded ourselves and others to work and keep these things in good repair and maintenance so they will continue to provide shelter, beauty, and transportation. It can hardly be disputed that we are not ready to receive anything more or better unless we first appreciate and are grateful for all we have — no matter how humble it may be.

There are times when we all believe that we have little to be grateful for. Perhaps we should examine our concepts and ponder the advice of Fred Tiffany: "People generally do not appreciate what they do not suffer for. A thing is held to be cheap if it did not cost dearly. Honor is lightly worn if it is easily attained. Inherited liberty is too often carelessly used until it is repossessed through sacrifices."

What better time could there be than now — right now — for us to list what we have to be grateful for? Let's actually take pen and paper and make a list; let's try listing twenty-five or more things which we have to appreciate. Let's do it now!!! When we find how much we have for which to be grateful — then we will find ourselves ready to receive more.

These two powerful words "Thank You!" sincerely spoken or silently realized, can open up a whole new world of good for us. It never does harm to pause frequently to give thanks for kindnesses done or gifts given. Appreciation, then, is acknowledgment. It is the recognition and affirmation that something positive, not negative, has happened.

APPRECIATION is the memory of the heart.

Humphrey greets testimonial with strength, humor, feeling

By HENRY MITCHELL
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Two thousand people (and dinner was $1,000 a plate) rose when Hubert Horatio Humphrey entered the dining room not as a senator and not as a leader of the Democratic Party merely, but as an American symbol of the good heart and the good fight.

He walked in more slowly than most people ever saw him walk — the bright and battering bounce all gone from his footstep — but nobody ever saw him stand straighter, either, and his voice strengthened as he spoke.

A minute later President Carter entered, alone, as the band played "Happy Days Are Here Again."

Humphrey has just been through 10 days of "intense chemotherapy, which has about knocked me for a loop," he said, "but I wanted to get enough strength to be with you tonight."

The evening was a tribute to Humphrey, whose doctors have said he has a terminal illness, and the formal beginning of a $20-million public subscription for the Hubert Humphrey Institute of Public Affairs, at the University of Minnesota.

By Friday night a fourth of the sum had been raised, it was reported, and one anonymous person gave a million dollars for the school that will be dedicated this July.

The president, who is rarely available for jocular after-dinner speeches at testimonial rituals, proved an enormous hit:

"My friend Charles Kirbo was in town and said every time he saw me I looked older and older, but Hubert Humphrey looked younger and younger."

That, said Carter, is because Humphrey knows how to handle politics. The president said he himself did not (general guffaws).

There was a time, Carter went on, when Humphrey (a liberal and a founder of Americans for Democratic Action, after all) was the symbol of everything conservative Southerners detested:

"He was quite well known in Georgia," the president said (laughter) and when Humphrey walked in one door, the Georgians walked out the other.

Once, he said his mother, Lillian Carter took Muriel Humphrey at a Georgia airport to take her to a reception during a political campaign. Mrs. Humphrey asked if black women would be present at the party, because she would not attend if no blacks went.

President Carter said the women of his family went to tell the hostess, and came out to assure Muriel Humphrey there were blacks, so everything went off well.

What Mrs. Humphrey didn't know, Carter said, was that the black women were maids who had taken their aprons off and been converted to guests. "It was the first integrated reception in south Georgia," he said.

Another time Carter saw Humphrey, when Miss Lillian was working in India with the Peace Corps, and Humphrey asked about her.

"I think she's lonely," Carter told Humphrey. "She hasn't even seen the Peace Corps officials" in several months. Very soon, however, a high official of the corps called on Miss Lillian, took her shopping and to dinner in Bombay and delivered her home with a bottle of bourbon. "By the way, Miss Lillian," he said, "who the hell are you?"

The president paused a second, relishing his story and the grins of the audience, and said:

"It was only later that she knew who she was — a friend of Hubert Humphrey."

Last year, he said, "everyone said, 'My first choice is Hubert Humphrey; if he doesn't run, then I'll support you.'"

Humphrey sat quietly through this, near tears (he said later), and Carter said he'd never forget Humphrey in the governor's house in Atlanta, when Amy came in and bounded over to him with some soft and very crumbly brownies. Humphrey talked of politics and strategy with Amy on his knee and brownie crumbs all over his face, the president said.

And, since then, "I've called him, when I was in trouble," and the audience began to think that in this great barn-like room with its gaudy lights and inhuman scale, nevertheless one of the good minutes of the Republic was taking place on a very human scale indeed.

"I am proud," said the president, "to be the president of a nation that loves a man like Hubert Humphrey so much, and would be loved by him."

The band played "Happy Days," and perhaps nobody wanted to think about death. And yet it will come not merely to the sick but to the well, and this obvious truth, so unavoidable to the mind Friday night, gave a striking depth to the tribute.

Humphrey rose to speak:

"My heart is strong," he said. "My spirits are good. The medical reports are encouraging."

And, he added, "my knees are shaking." (Laughter).

"I know," he said, "I'm a very fallible man. In recent days, I've found a different kind of strength."

The room was extremely still. Humphrey did not press the beauty of the moment, and he did not try to ignore it, either:

"The good Lord," he said, "is watching over me."

There were entertainers to make the program bright — comedian Alan King, actor Lorne Greene who sang an adulatory and sentimental song off pitch — it wold never have done to sing it really well, since the evening was already overcharged with emotion — and Frank Sinatra and Helen Reddy, singers.

The room was dotted with important people — the vice president, senators, people from embassies, the secretaries of State, Agriculture, Defense, Labor, the leaders of House and Senate, and many of Humphrey's own staff. Before the supper of chicken and string beans, there were drinks, and people milled about, among them former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger.

"I love Hubert Humphrey. His concern for humanity is an inward thing."

A number of people left after Humphrey spoke.

They were glad to hear from him that the Lord was looking out for his welfare. They had always sort of thought He was.

Little hope seen from coal talks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Negotiators met Saturday for continued bargaining on a new coal contract, but there appeared to be no hope that a nationwide strike set to begin Monday at midnight could be averted.

Several mines in West Virginia and Ohio were reported closed as United Mine Workers union members walked off their jobs early in apparent anticipation of a national walkout.

Bargainers met together for over two hours Saturday morning but then recessed face-to-face talks for the day. Federal mediators planned to meet separately with each side later in the day.

Federal mediators took charge of the talks earlier this week, and chief mediator Wayne L. Horvitz said the two sides were "beginning to talk about the troublesome issues." But he said there had been no discussion of a possible contract extension. "I'm working day to day," he said.

A union spokesman said an extension of the current three-year contract "is not even being considered." The two sides are "too far apart even to talk about a contract extension," he said.

Although the UMW contract with the Bituminous Coal Operators Association expires at midnight Monday, few miners are likely to work beyond the end of the Saturday night shift.

Klan's actions close tavern

LAKESIDE, Calif. (AP) — The Bus Stop Bar is going out of business, two months after 40 Ku Klux Klansmen stomped through to protest its hiring of a black singer and its dress code banning white-power T-shirts.

Owners Bob Neal and Don Couture, who opened the beer-and-wine tavern three months ago in this mainly white working-class town of 20,000 about 20 miles east of San Diego, said Monday night would be their last.

"People were just terrified, that's all," Neal said.

"We didn't read the people right in Lakeside, what they wanted in the way of a nice bar," Couture said. "It wasn't the harassment or the threats. It was the financial bind that got us out of here." He said the bar was staying open through the weekend to give its few well-wishers a chance to say goodbye.

Tom Metzger, a television repairman who is a local Klan leader, said his white-supremacist group disliked "several things" about the bar, including the owners' refusal to seat people wearing the KKK whitepower T-shirt.

Metzger said the Klan plans soon to publish a business directory of places it considers "friendly," and of those it does not.

Neal said the trouble started Sept. 19, when "Metzger came in the back door with some of his boys and some of the troops came in the front, wearing white-power shirts."

Mondale characterizes Carter in interview

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President Walter F. Mondale, in an interview released Saturday, portrays President Carter as a man who "does not want to be screened off from dissent."

Asked about criticism that the Carter White House lacks strong direction, Mondale said Carter purposely set up the White House operation without a chief of staff last January.

He said the president decided that if he did not name a chief of staff "through whom everything flows...he would hear more dissent on a timely basis, that it would be less likely reality would be screened away from him."

Mondale also said his relationship with Carter has broken "new institutional grounds." But the vice president conceded the nature of the adviser's role he plays often requires a low profile where the public is concerned.

CLASSIFIED Want Ads

BY TELEPHONE

On October 3, 1977, a direct telephone line to our Classified Want Ad Department was installed, with its own number.....

682-6222

This step was taken to eliminate the delay of switching from switchboard to want ad department, to speed up service to you and handle your want ads with greater efficiency.

Many Midlanders have called to express approval and let us know they are pleased by the improved facility.

During the past nine weeks, in which we have acquainted our classified advertisers with the new direct line and its number, we also have continued to accept want ad calls through our switchboard number, 682-5311.....the number to dial for all other departments of The Reporter-Telegram.

ON MONDAY, DECEMBER 12

the transfer telephone line through our switchboard to the Classified Want Ad department will be disconnected. Beginning on that date, all telephone calls to the Classified Want Ad department must be made by dialing

682-6222

Callers will be answered promptly and assisted courteously by one of our helpful Advisors.

Please call me on our direct line!.....

682-6222

And let me or any of our friendly Advisors help you with any want ad need you may have. we'll enjoy helping you write a message that will produce results for you economically and quickly. It will be six more months before there will be a new telephone directory with our direct line number, so please make a note of 682-6222 and keep it at hand near your telephone to use when you wish to place a want ad.

LEGAL NOTICES

INSTRUCTIONS TO BIDDERS

1. Sealed Proposals addressed to Mr. Wilburn Bednar, President, Board of Trustees, Glasscock Independent School District, Garden City, Texas, shall be received in the Administration Board Room in the High School Building, Glasscock Independent School District, Garden City, Texas, until 4:00 P.M. on Tuesday, December 20, 1977, at which time they will be publicly read aloud, for the furnishing of all labor, materials, equipment and performing all work required for the construction of School Plant Additions for the Glasscock Independent School District, Garden City, Texas, in accordance with Plans and Specifications and Contract Documents as prepared by Huckabee and Donham Architects and Planners, Andrews, Texas.

2. Lump sum Proposals will be received for the General Construction which will include Plumbing, Heating, Air Conditioning and Electrical Work.

3. A Cashier's Check, Certified Check or acceptable Bidder's Bond payable to the Glasscock Independent School District in the amount of not less than 5 percent of the largest possible total for the bid submitted must accompany each bid.

4. Attention is called to the fact that the contractor must comply with all Federal, State and Local Labor Laws.

5. The successful bidder will be required to enter into a contract with Glasscock Independent School District, Garden City, Texas, and furnish a Performance and Payment Bond in the amount of not less than 100 percent of the contract price, conditioned upon the performance of the contract.

6. Attention is called to the fact that the Owner is exempt from the payment of the State Sales Tax normally levied against material costs. In order to take advantage of this exemption, materials and labor costs must be identified by the successful bidder by developing this division of labor and material costs, the bidders are cautioned to include all costs and allowances not representing direct material costs with labor. The contract sum, as identified by the Base Bid shall not include any allowance for the payment of State Sales Tax on materials required to complete the work. The successful bidder, upon award of the contract, will be furnished with a permit number which will enable him to purchase the required materials without payment of such taxes.

7. Specifications and Plans may be obtained from the Architect in accordance with stipulations set forth under Deposits and Refunds.

8. The bidder acknowledges the right of the Owner to reject any or all bids and to waive any informality or irregularity in any bid received. In addition, the bidder recognizes the right of the Owner to reject a bid if the bidder failed to furnish any required bid security, or to submit the data required by the bidding documents, or if the bid is any way incomplete or irregular.

Why Not Accept Responsibility, Adventure, Excitement and Travel as a

FLIGHT ATTENDANT
with Texas International Airlines

If you're enjoying that 9 to 5 job because you love to shuffle paper from one side of the desk to the other, your only friend is parrot with its voice box removed, and the height of ecstacy is watching old reruns of "Star Trek", then don't call us - we'll call you.

If however, you are an enthusiastic, outgoing, attractive person (male or female, of any race or creed) who loves people and is looking for an opportunity with an aggressive, rapidly expanding airline, managed and operated by people who think the sky's the limit, then we want you to consider one of the brightest opportunities of your life.

Qualified candidates must possess a High School diploma or equivalent, minimum age of 19, be public contact oriented, have weight in proportion to height and be willing to relocate to Houston. A college degree or public contact experience preferred but not required.

Meet us at the Inn of the Golden West (Odessa) on Friday, Dec. 9 from 9:00am to 3:30pm, 4th and Lincoln

Please don't miss this opportunity to start your career with a people oriented airline, serving 9 states and the Republic of Mexico. Our goal is to be the best airline in the country, and if you meet the qualifications, we'd like to have you aboard!

You have NO COMPETITION. Makes a fine family business since you can START PART TIME, no need to stop your present work. Work three to ten hours of your choice each week. EXPAND TO FULL TIME when ready through our COMPANY PARTICIPATING EXPANSION PROGRAM.

NO OVERHEAD - NO SELLING - NO EXPERIENCE

If you are a $400 to $1,000 per week caliber person, or know you can become one, you may be the person we seek. This is not employment but a highly profitable business you can call your own. All you need is a burning desire to be successfully independent plus $1,195, $2,250, or $5,660 in immediately available funds to INVEST IN YOUR FUTURE NOW! You must be of good character, have references and a serviceable car.

INVESTMENT SECURED BY EQUIPMENT & INVENTORY

For personal interview, WRITE ME TODAY; be sure to include your phone number and when you can be reached. I'll see that you get the facts. THE PRESIDENT

A&M mauls Houston behind Mosley

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Texas A&M freshman quarterback Mark Mosley jumped off the bench and all over the Houston Cougars Saturday, dashing 13 and 35-yards for touchdowns to ignite the 17th-ranked Aggies to a 27-7 victory over Houston and third place in the Southwest Conference.

"I wasn't expecting to play, but (senior) David Walker was popped pretty good on one play and they told me to warm up," said Mosley. "I took a few snaps on the sidelines and then suddenly I was in the game."

MOSLEY TOOK A&M on a 83-yard touchdown drive for a touchdown late in the second quarter that he capped with a 13-yard touchdown run to give the Aggies a 10-7 lead they never gave up.

Houston Coach Bill Yeoman said, "Mosley just did a super job. He is incredibly quick... he is a superior athlete.

"We blew two assignments on his two long runs and he was gone. Of course, he might have made them anyway but at least we could've made it tougher for him."

Texas A&M Coach Emory Bellard said he yanked Walker out of the game because "he was bruised a little and looked a little bit slow so we put Mosley in there."

ALMOST OVERLOOKED in the shadow of Mosley's heroics was a superb performance by the much-maligned Aggie defense, which gave up 57 points to Texas last week. There were five new starters in the Aggie defense, which controlled Houston, especially in the second half.

"This was the best defense we've played this year," said Bellard.

The explosive Cougars grabbed a 7-3 lead midway through the second quarter when quarterback Delrick Brown flicked a 3-yard scoring pass to tight end Willis Adams.

The Aggie offense floundered under senior quarterback David Walker. The Cadets only had 45 yards offense until Mosley stepped on the field with five minutes to play in the second quarter.

Mosley completed passes of 12 and 11 yards to wide receiver Doug Teague on the 83-yard drive that put the Aggies ahead to stay.

Mosley had only carried the ball 27 times all year and had only played in three games.

The Aggies padded their 17-7 halftime lead when Mike Williams returned a Cougar punt 23 yards to the Houston 35. On the next play, Mosley followed a crushing block by Curtis Dickey and bolted 35 yards untouched and the Aggies had struck with only 69 seconds elapsed in the third quarter.

THIS GAVE heart to the Aggie defense which had yielded 57 points last week against No. 1-ranked Texas. There were five new starters for the Aggies on defense including Green who was the outstanding defender on the field.

The elusive Mosley rushed 12 times for 109 yards against the shocked Cougar defense to delight the partisan crowd of 51,790 in Kyle Field. Mosley completed six of six passes for 43 yards.

Houston's big offense weapon was Blackwell, who gained 160 yards on 29 carries.

The Aggies will play Southern California Dec. 31 in the Bluebonnet Bowl.

The game had a bizarre en-

Odessa Permian nabs narrow win over Monterey

By BOB DILLON
R-T Sports Writer

ODESSA — Odessa Permian has plenty of character and Lubbock Monterey has one great quarterback in Ron Reeves.

Both came to light Saturday afternoon before more than 17,000 fans in W.T. Barrett Stadium as the Panthers took a tough 7-3 Class AAAA quarterfinal victory over the Plainsmen.

Permian kept its poise despite losing three players during the hard-hitting contest and they were key members of the District 5-4A champions.

Quarterback Vic Vines went down with a hand injury and did return later after Mojo's touchdown, but the Panthers lost the services of tailback Greg Lambert and fullback-cornerback Alan Swann in the first half.

Those three join Jim LeMay and David Clyburn who were both starters, but out of the Monterey game with leg injuries.

Monterey's Reeves was the whole show offensively for the Plainsmen as the 6-3, 205-pound bluechipper, passed for 150 yards and rushed for 49 more. He marched Monterey all the way down to the Permian 15 where time ran out, giving Mojo its 13th victory of the season and a semifinal playoff berth against either Plano or Highland Park who were playing late Saturday night in Texas Stadium.

MONTEREY DREW first blood by scoring its only points of the clean, but hard-hitting game, in the first period.

Reeves hit end Dudley McMinn with a perfect 46-yard pass to the Panther 16 and Permian was gulty of hitting late, so Monterey had the ball on Mojo's seven.

The Plainsmen could only manage four yards in three plays so Reeves booted an 18-yard field goal with 5:06 left in the opening period.

Permian drove from its 48 to the Monterey 13 where Swann picked up 10 yards, but fumbled with Greg Iseral recovering.

The Panthers got the ball back and Vines hit Lambert with a 14-yard pass, but was injured and left the game with substitute Tim Hayes coming in to continue to direct the TD drive. Lambert capped it off with a one-yard dive for the score and the winning TD with 2:50 left in the first half.

SWANN BROKE on a 13-yard run while Mark Graves picked up seven more as the Panthers began to block crisply on the the bigger Plainsmen.

Robert Orosco booted the PAT and Mojo had a 7-3 lead that would stand up the rest of the game.

Permian took the second half kickoff and promptly marched from its own six all the way to the Monterey nine where Vines was thrown for a four-yard loss on a third and five situation. Orosco's attempt 30-yard field goal sailed wide right.

Reeves hit Eric Voyles with a 19-yard pass, but Mojo held and took over at the Panther three after a 50-yard punt off the toe of Phil Bruedigam went out at the three.

Lambert broke on runs of 15 and 17 yards and caught a pass for 11 more, but was hurt and had to leave the game.

MONTEREY HELD Permian off early in the fourth period and Reeves hit McMinn with a 20-yarder, but three plays later, Permian's Brian Harris pounced on a fumble by Reeves at the Monterey 35.

The Plainsmen held and Reeves went to work with 2:51 left in the game. He hit Voyles for 19 yards and McMinn for nine more.

He then hit Voyles on the Mojo 15, but time ran out before Reeves could get off another pass.

The victory gives Permian a 13-0-0 record while Monterey winds up its campagin with an 11-1-1 reading which is only its second loss in two years.

Once again, Mojo's defense was tough when it had to be and the Permian offense ground out 205 yards on the ground and 66 through the airways.

David Aldridge, Tommy Sager, Harris, Byron Taylor, and Huey Chancellor stood out for Permian on defense while Reeves came in at a middle linebacker slot in the fourth

Cowboys nearing division crown

DALLAS (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys, who have already bagged a wild card spot in the National Conference football playoffs, can capture the Eastern Division title and a Dec. 26 host spot in the first round today with a victory over the Philadelphia Eagles.

Dallas is 9-2 and owns a two-game lead over St. Louis and a three-game edge over Washington in the NFC East. It's the 11th time in the last 12 years the Cowboys have climbed into the playoffs.

But the Cowboys are expecting nothing but hard times from the Eagles who have lost six games in a row to the Cowboys. The Eagles have lost seven of their games by a combined total of 36 points.

"Philadelphia is the roughest team physically we play all year," said Dallas linebacker Thomas Henderson.

Thomas Henderson

It took a blocked punt and recovery for a touchdown by Charlie Waters for the Cowboys to win a 16-10 decision the last time the clubs met.

"We'll have to play a perfect game

Longhorns capture basketball victory

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas' Jim Krivacs flipped in seven free throws after four technical fouls on Mississippi State coaches Saturday night as the Longhorns captured an 81-69 nonconference college basketball victory.

Mississippi State Coach Ron Greene had to leave the court after picking up his third technical with just a few seconds left in the game. Assistant Coach Steve Newton had the other technical.

The fouls were assessed after the Bulldog coaches screamed at officials from courtside.

Krivacs hit 19 points to pace Texas, now 2-1, to its second straight victory in its new Super Drum. Ray White had 14 for Mississippi State, which fell to 1-2.

Texas hit 23 of 28 free throws to offset a 57-40 rebounding edge by Mississippi State. Texas held a 33-32 halftime lead.

In the end... respect

PAUL DOMOWITCH SPORTS CHATTER

ODESSA — The scoreboard told one story here Saturday afternoon, but the scene on the W.T. Barrett turf after it was all said and done told perhaps the most important story of all. A story that goes well beyond merely victory and defeat.

Just minutes before, these teams were the deadliest of enemies, and this browned and worn Odessa football field their battleground. They were two armies after a prize that could only go to one.

SO, FOR 48 minutes they fought a fight to the death, calling on everything they had to give. They pulled out all of the stops. They had to. To borrow a much-used cliche, there was no tomorrow.

But the fighting was over now, and suddenly, the enemies became brothers. The last shot had been fired. The last body had fallen. And as you looked down on these two teams kneeling together in prayer at midfield, their heads bowed and their arms around each other, you felt kind of bad that someone did indeed have to lose this war of the gridiron.

IT'S KIND of strange. The last time that I had been to this stadium was more than a year before. Then, I witnessed a similar scene. It was the game in the snow when Odessa High saw their hopes for a district championship shot down by Permian.

Interestingly enough, it was Permian once again the victor Saturday, as they defeated Lubbock Monterey in the quarterfinals of the state schoolboy playoffs, 7-3.

I can't even remember the score of that game last fall. But what I do remember is what happened afterwards. I remember watching the Permian players going out of their way to console a dejected and heart-broken Darrell Shephard, the OHS quarterback, as he walked tearfully off the field after it was all over. Then too, enemies became brothers after the final shot had been fired.

I'M SURE a lot of people can't understand how athletes can try to beat each other to a pulp one minute and then embrace the next. It's sort of a conflict of emotions I guess, but it does happen. And in my book, it's what sports are all about.

Permian and Monterey proved here that you can try with every ounce of energy within you to beat that man in the other color jersey, and then turn around after the final gun has sounded and kneel together in prayer.

Naturally, there are people who think that's absurd. They're the ones who adhear to the belief that you have to hate your opponent to the core if you expect to beat him. For them, the words "like" and "respect" are nothing more than detriments to victory.

But they're wrong.

THERE IS something very special about athletic competition. You've almost got to experience it to really enjoy it.

And there is a mutual respect that develops between opponents during the course of that competition. A respect that a spectator might view, but never really grasp or apprehend unless he went through a similar experience. Like the one between these two football teams here Saturday.

They spent two hours battling each other tooth and nail, knowing full well from the start that only one of them was going to walk away a winner. Knowing full well that there was room in next weekend's semifinals for just one of them.

But immediately after the contest is over, the full awareness of victory or defeat has not yet set in. What has is the struggle you've just been through — and respect for the opponent you've just struggled with.

That's why enemies can become like brothers. And that's why Permian and Monterey can kneel together in prayer on what was once their battleground.

Texas A&M mauls Houston by 27-7

ding as Houston flanker Rickey Maddox caught what appeared to be a touchdown pass in the end zone on the last play of the game. However, both sides were penalized for offsides and it negated the touchdown.

There were bitter feelings throughout the contest as Houston had two players ejected. Offense guard Jim Wells and linebacker Hosea Taylor were tossed out.

For the Aggies, offensive tackle Cody Risien was thrown out of the game for fighting.

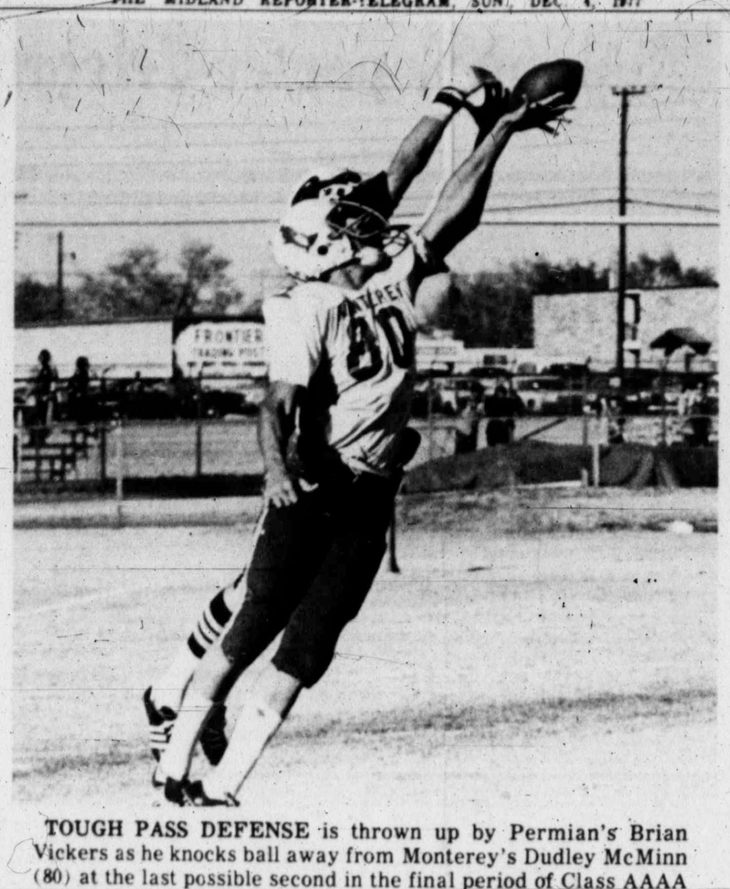

The Aggies, in fact, played the second half without its both of its starting offensive tackles as All-SWC tackle Frank Myers suffered a knee injury.

Notre Dame rips Miami by 48-10

MIAMI (AP) — Joe Montana hit All-America tight end Ken McAfee with touchdown passes of 4 and 5 yards and added a 23-yard TD strike to Kris Haines to lead fifth-ranked Notre Dame to a 48-10 mashing of Miami, Fla., Saturday night.

The Fighting Irish, 10-1, now turn to preparation for meeting No. 1 Texas in the Cotton Bowl Jan. 2.

Miami's only scoring came on a 35-yard pass from Ken McMillian to Steve Alvers and a 38-yard Chris Dennis field goal.

The Hurricanes, now 3-8, were intimidated into early errors by Notre Dame's Willie Fry and delivered a pair of turnovers that allowed two touchdowns by the Irish in a 1:22 period.

McMillian fumbled when sacked by Fry and Bob Goalic recovered at Miami's 11. Two plays later, Ferguson ran 11 yards to score. Fry again pressured McMillian on Miami's next series, forcing a bad pass that was grabbed by Notre Dame linebacker Leroy Leopold, who scored easily from the 17.

Ferguson fumbled after catching a pass from Montana and the Hurricanes recovered at Notre Dame's 20 to set up the field goal by Dennis.

After forcing a Notre Dame punt on the next series, Miami closed to 14-10 as Alvers took McMillian's pass and sprinted between two defenders to score.

Montana set up Notre Dame's next score with a 15-yard pass to Kris Haines, then found Ferguson in the end zone for a 23-yard touchdown pass. Dave Reeve's point after was blocked. And the Irish led 20-10.

Notre Dame struck again in the third quarter on a 77-yard drive that concluded with Montana's first touchdown pass to MacAfee.

On the first play of Miami's next series, cornerback Luther Bradley intercepted Ottis Anderson's halfback pass and returned to the Miami 38. Eight plays later Mitchell plunged in from the 4-yard line to extend Notre Dame's lead to 34-10.

Montana and MacAfee teamed again with 1:50 as the agile tight end grabbed Montana's pass even though it was deflected in the end zone.

period when Sam Laine was injured and did a great job.

PERMIAN COACH John Wilkins was elated over the victory, but showed concern over five of his starters being injured. "We had some youngsters that came in and filled real well for us and center Martin Graves was one of them," said Wilkins.

Wilkins praised Reeves and the tough Monterey defense which also stood out when it had to.

How the five injuries will affect Permian next week in the semifinals will probably be determined at the first part of the week, but right now Mojo is savoring a great victory indeed.

Longhorns top All-SWC team with 13 choices

DALLAS (AP) — All-Americans Earl Campbell and Brad Shearer led a stampede of 13 University of Texas players on the Associated Press All-Southwest Conference team and new Longhorn Coach Fred Akers landed the coveted Coach of the Year laurels.

In balloting by the SWC coaches,champion Texas placed seven players on the first team and five on the second place team while runnerup Arkansas had nine players on the first two teams.

Texas, the No. 1 ranked team in the country going into the Cotton Bowl against Notre Dame Jan. 2, swept player of the year honors and also had the punting specialist.

Campbell, the most prolific rusher in SWC history, and Shearer, a devastating tackle and catalyst of the Longhorns' rugged defense, were unanimous choices as the offensive and defensive players, respectively. Russell Erxleben was the punter.

Akers, who replaced Darrell Royal, was on every ballot as coach of the year, except his own.

The Newcomer of the Year was Southern Methodist's sensational freshman passer, Mike Ford.

The offense is certainly a coaches dream with the speedy and durable Ben Cowins of Arkansas and Razorback quarterback Ron Calcagni joining the awesome Campbell in the backfield.

At wide receiver is Texas Christian's Mike Renfro, he of the magic hands, and Olympic sprinter Johnny (Lam) Jones. The tight end is Houston's swift and rugged Don Bass.

Arkansas' All-American Leotis Harris leads the interior line which includes guards Ricu Ingraham of Texas, tackles Frank Myers of Texas A&M and Dan Irons of Texas Tech and center Mark Dennard of Texas A&M.

On defense, Jimmy Walker of Arkansas joins Shearer at tackle. Richard Arledge of Texas Tech and Tim Campbell of Texas man the terminals and the linebackers are Lance Taylor, Texas, Mike Mock of Texas Tech and Larry Jackson of Arkansas.

The backs are three seniors and sophomore Johnnie Johnson of Texas. Ron Burns of Baylor, Eric Felton of Texas Tech and Howard Sampson of Arkansas are the seniors.

Steve Little of Arkansas nipped Russell Erxleben of Texas for placekicking specialist while Erxleben made the first team as a punter.

In the most ironic twist of all, a player who started out as a third string quarterback finished the year as the quarterback on The AP'S SECOND TEAM. The name — Randy McEachern.

Baseball meetings set

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

HONOLULU (AP) — Baseball's annual winter meetings convene Monday with Waikiki Beach and Diamondhead providing the picturesque setting for the game's executives to examine the state of their business.

Between 1,400 and 1,500 persons are expected for the weeklong convention with top officials from the major and minor leagues reviewing the past season and planning for 1978.

It has been five years since the owners last gathered in Hawaii and no winter meeting since has matched the volume of trades completed at the 1972 convention. There were 19 deals involving 68 players in that single hectic week.

But trading and the game itself have changed drastically since the last winter meetings on these islands. The new free agent rules and contracts have altered the availablilty of some players. With players not under long term contract free to walk away from their clubs, market values have changed.

Last year, in the wake of the first free agent re-entry draft, only 14 trades were completed involving 39 players. The key players in the final trade of those meetings, were outnd Terry Forster. All three played out their options last season and have signed as free agents with new teams over the last few weeks. That's why deals may be less frequent this time around.

Some trades still will be made, but more action may occur on the legislative front as owners try to maintain the upswing baseball enjoyed last season. Professional baseball attendance for the year, including the minor leagues, exhibition games and the playoffs and World Series, soared over 54 million during 1977. The total of 54,244,382 represented an increase of 9,806,874 or 22 percent more than the 1976 total.

Much of the work the owners face falls under the heading of old business and involves franchise problems. Many baseball officials still feel the San Francisco-Oakland area is overcrowded with two clubs and there is the continuing dilemma of how to provide the nation's capital, Washington D.C. with a team.

There are also reports on post-season scheduling and a proposal, backed by the Philadelphia Phillies, to expand the league playoff series from the current best-of-five to a best-ofseven series' matching the World Series format.

The meetings open with the annual draft of minor leaguers left off the 40-man rosters of major league clubs. This is a bargain basement talent market with each claim carrying a maximum $25,000 price tag, a pittance by today's standards. Toronto has the first choice in the draft followed by Atlanta and Oakland.

Last year, several clubs hit pay dirt in the draft, picking up some useful players.

Pittsburgh inks agent

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Pittsburgh Steelers signed free agent Brad Cousino Friday to replace injured defensive end John Banaszak.

Banaszak, a fourth-year veteran, was placed on the injured reserve list and will not be eligible to play in the Steelers' remaining National Football League games this season.

The 6-foot-3, 255-pound lineman suffered a sprained knee in a game with the Denver Broncos Nov. 6 and had missed the last three games.

Cousino, 24, is a 6-foot, 216 pounder. He played 14 games with the Cincinnati Bengals in 1975 after earning a place on the roster as a free agent.

Cousino, who played college football at Miami of Ohio, played six games with the New York Giants last season, but was cut in the Giants' final roster cut this year.

Meanwhile, a Steeler spokesman said defensive tackle Joe Greene practiced Friday for the first time all week. Greene missed last week's game with the New York Jets due to back spasms, but is expected to play Sunday against the Seattle Seahawks.

Tight end Bennie Cunningham has been declared out of the Seahawks game with a sprained ankle. He will be replaced by Randy Grossman. Runningback Jack Deloplaine is also out for Sunday's game with a knee injury.

to beat them at home," says Eagle Coach Dick Vermeil. "We had 'em beat the first time and then we got a punt blocked.

"And now they can win the title if they beat us. It's always something."

Vermeil said "I'm really disappointed we haven't had a better season, but we have played consistently hard."

Both Dallas quarterback Roger Staubach and Eagle quarterback Ron Jaworski have fallen on rough times of late.

Vermeil said "Jaworski broke a thumb the first time we played Dallas but he has been getting better the last two weeks."

Staubach, the second leading passer in the NFC, has been erratic although Landry says the Cowboy quarterback no longer has problems with a jammed thumb he suffered when it banged off a helmet three weeks ago.

"Dallas still looks good to me," said Vermeil. "They aren't scoring a lot of points but things catch up with you in the second half of the season."

Dallas feels it can beat Philadelphia if middle linebacker Bill Bergey can be controlled.

"Bergey is one of the very top middle linebackers in the league," said Cowboy assistant Ermal Allen. "That's the key for us—we have to block Bergey."

Philadelphia is 3-8 and holds down the cellar in the NFC East.

$30 million TV deal for golf

WASHINGTON (AP) — A $30 million package for the television of golf tournaments for three years beginning in 1979 was announced Saturday by Deane H. Beman, the Professional Golfers Association tour commissioner.

The transaction with CBS and NBC, lagest in the history of golf, is more than double the value of the previous three-year package, Beman said.

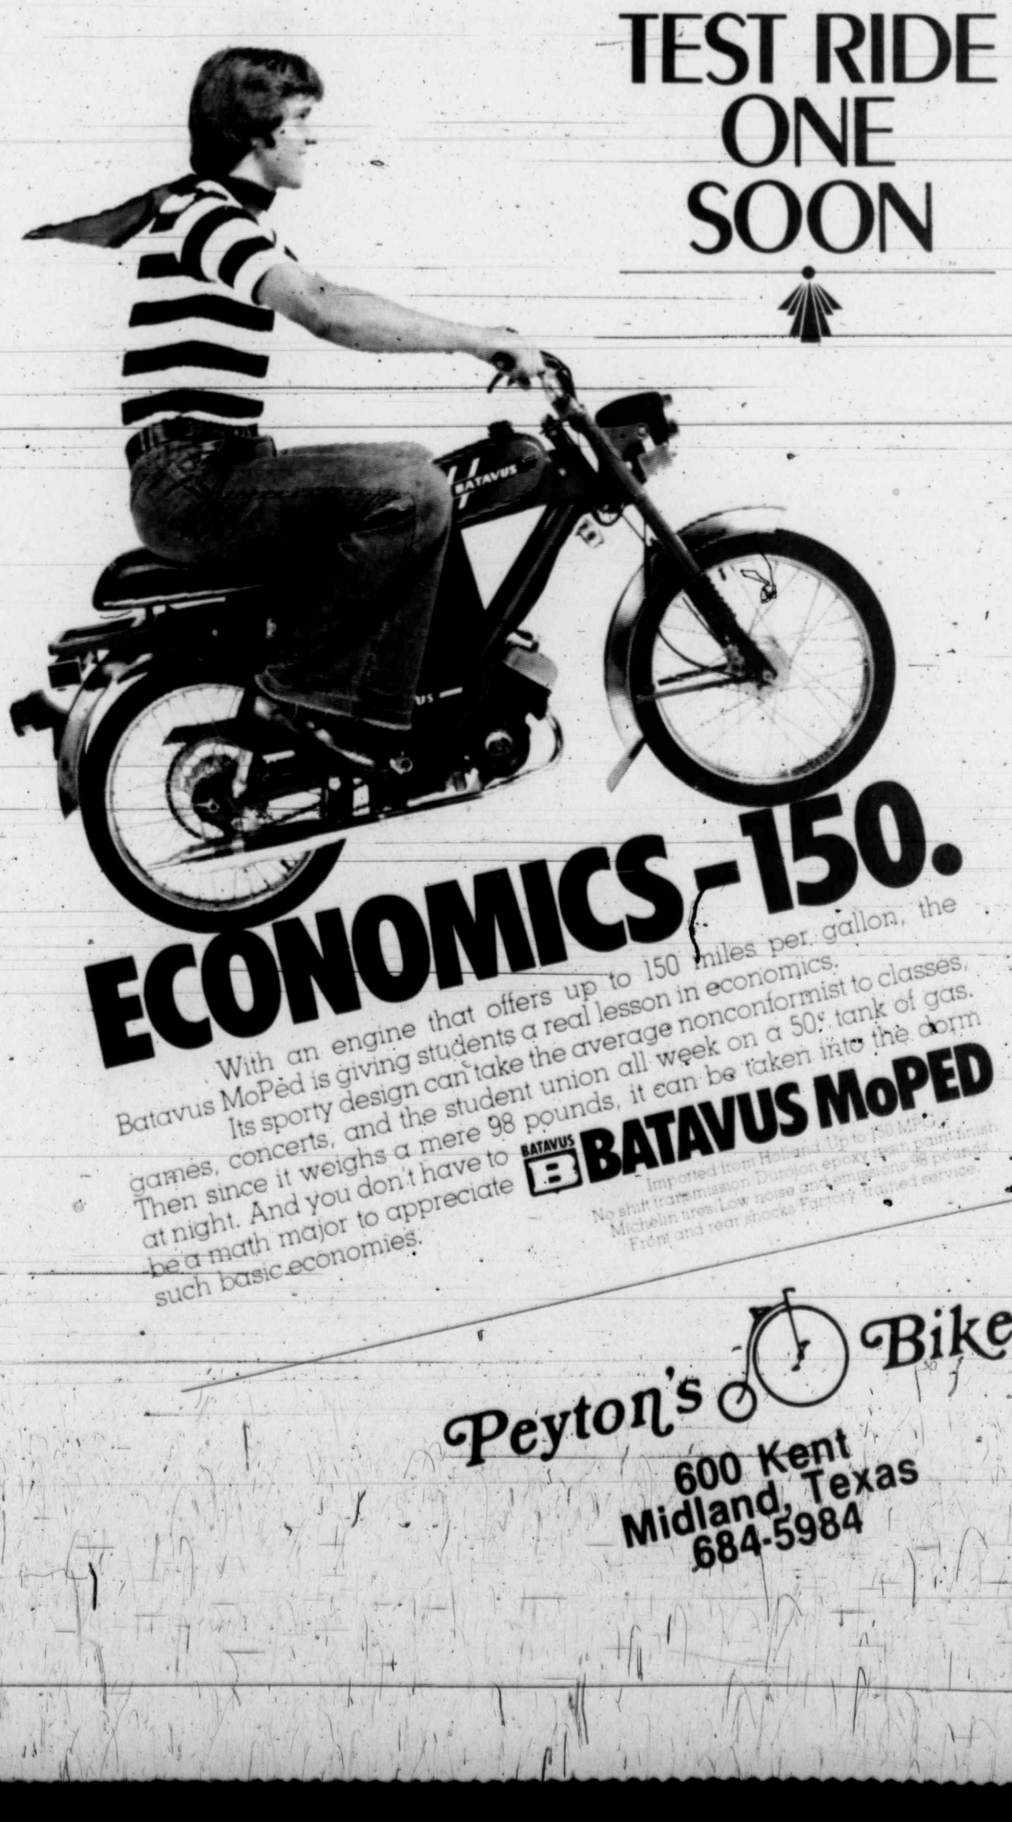

He said the exact number and schedule of annual tournaments have not yet been determined but that at least 25 tournaments a year are expected to be televised, with CBS expected to carry 18 annually.

CBS' schedule will include the Bing Crosby National ProAm and the Tournament Players Championship and NBC's lineup will include the Hawaiian Open and the Tournament of Champions.

During the 1978 PGA tour season, Beman said that 27 tournaments will be telecast—15 by CBS, 7 by ABC and 5 by NBC.

"We are extremely delighted with all aspects of these contracts," Beman said. "The continued interest in the PGA tour by CBS-TV is very gratifying. We know that the outstanding production work of this contributed greatly to making the PGA tour the showcase of golf for the entire world.

"We are pleased, too, by the resurging interest in the PGA tour shown by NBC-TV. The game of golf will benefit from our exposure on both of these networks."

Bears top NTSU five

WACO, Texas (AP) — Junior Vinnie Johnson, in his first game as a Baylor Bear after missing two games with a throat infection, fired in 34 points to lead the Bears to a 104-74 non-conference basketball rout of North Texas State here Saturday night.

Johnson, a junior college transfer, added eight assists and two steals in his 34 minutes in the contest. He had 19 of his points in the first half as the Bears built a 59-38 intermission lead.

Baylor, 2-1 for the season, connected on 51.1 percent of its field goal attempts.

Paving the way for the Pups were Chuck Wilson and J.J. Sperling with 19 and 11 points. Stan Van Hoozer was high for Lee with 16 along with teammate Forrest Allen.

Midland beat Lubbock Monterey's JV, 58-56, in the semifinals Saturday morning with Wilson scoring 31 points.

Wilson and Joel Gotcher were named to the all-tourney team for Midland while Van Hoozer and Allen were named from Lee.

SMU coach will stay

DALLAS (AP) — Southern Methodist football Coach Ron Meyer said today he has asked that his name be withdrawn from consideration for the head coach's job at the University of Wisconsin.

Meyer told a news conference he informed Wisconsin Athletic Director Elroy Hirsch of his decision Saturday.

SMU President James Zumberge announced a two-year extension of Meyer's contract.

Meyer has been at SMU two seasons, and his teams have posted 3-8 and 4-7 marks.

"I felt a few things had to be cleared up within the football program," Meyer said. "There has been a lot more smoke than fire to this whole thing."

Sunland park

SUNLAND PARK, N.M. (AP) — Strike The Colors battled Little Foggy down to the wire and won Saturday's feature race at Sunland Park by a nose.

The 3-year-old gelding had to pour it on in the final yards in order to overcome Little Foggy, which had led most of the race.

Strike The Colors took the 5½-furlong race in a time of 1:04 3-5 to refund $5.60 to win, $3.40 to place and $3.20 to show.

Little Foggy paid $3.80 and $3.20, while Secret Scout placed third and returned $4.40.

Bullets win

Red Raiders top Air Force five

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Mike Russell and Tommy Parks each scored 20 points Saturday night to lead Texas Tech to its fourth victory in six days, a 70-63 college basketball trimming of Air Force.

The Red Raiders, now 4-0, built up a 37-23 halftime margin despite showing the effects of four games in less than a week.

Three Falcons were in double figures, led by Bob Djokovich with 16 points. Tom Schneeberger had 15 and Randy Gricius added 13.

Air Force fell to 2-2 for the season.

San Diego State in 37-34 victory

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Quarterback Joe Davis hit wide receiver Rick Garretson with a 33-yard touchdown pass with 1:43 remaining to give 16th-ranked San Diego State a 37-34 victory over San Jose State in a regionally televised college football game Saturday.

Davis led the Aztecs in a second-half rally that erased a 10-point lead by the upset-minded Spartans, who entered the game with a 4-6 record compared to San Diego's 9-1.

Davis, the nation's seventh-ranked passer, threw four touchdown passes, and completed 22 of 40 passes for 325 yards. San Jose had crippled the Aztecs' offense in the first half, allowing Davis only seven completions in 17 tries.

San Jose quarterback Ed Luther sparked the Spartans to three second-quarter touchdowns, which gave them a 24-17 halftime lead. Luther hit Steve Joyce on a 31-yard score and Mike Kirtman on a 57-yard scoring pass play.

San Diego tied the game midway through the third period, with Davis capping an 80-yard drive with a 1-yard run. The touchdown was set up by a pair of Davis passes to Dennis Pearson and Donnie Glen that covered a total of 51 yards.

Aggie freshman sparks 27-7 win over U-H

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Texas A&M freshman quarterback Mike Mosley was minding his own business on the Aggie bench Saturday when A&M Coach Emory Bellard summoned him to his side.

"Mike, go over and warm up and take a few snaps because David looks like he's hurting and we might put you in there," Bellard told the poised freshman.

Mosley, doing as he was instructed, took a few practice snaps and the next thing he knew he was in the game.

And the next thing Houston knew the game was over as the brilliant Mosley put two touchdowns on the board in 79 seconds late in the second quarter.

"I was glad to play but I was sad for David Walker," said Mosley after the Aggies had ripped the Cougars 27-7 in a battle for third place in the Southwest Conference.

Mosley said, "David has played well all year and he had helped me more than anyone. He just got all bungled up."

In the losers' dressing room, Houston Coach Bill Yeoman raved about the former all-state quarterback.

Yeoman said of Mosley "He is incredibly quick. We blew just two assignments on his two long runs and he was gone for touchdowns. We made it kind of easy for him but he might have made them anyway."

Mosley scampered 13 and 35 yards for touchdowns and ran 48 yards before he stumbled as he ran out of gas. He completed the only six passes he attempted in the nationally televised game.

Mosley wasn't the only surprise the Aggies had for the Cougars. There were five new starters on defense including end Jacob Green who recovered a vital fumble and was named the outstanding defensive player of the game.

The 17th-ranked Aggies played the best defense of the year, according to Bellard. He said he replaced Walker because his starting quarterback was bruised and had lost his quickness.

"Mike did a good job because Houston has a real good football team," said Bellard.

Houston running back Alois Blackwell, who gained 160 yards, said "Our mistakes killed us. A&M is a good team and they took advantage of those mistakes. Mosley should be one fine player before he is through."

Reed Giordana, quarterback for Wisconsin-Stevens Point, searches for freedom from an Abilene Christian linebacker, Mike Lively as Lively holds on to his leg. Bill Tydings (82) also aids on play for Wildcats who won, 35-7 in the NAIA simifinal game in Abilene's P.E. Shotwell Stadium Saturday. ACU now moves into the finals in the Kingdome in Seattle, Wash. Florida State bombs Gators

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — It was without a doubt the biggest victory Coach Bobby Bowden has experienced since he came to Florida State two years ago, but you wouldn't know it from his comments.

"The kids played well, didn't they," he said Saturday as a chorus of screams sounded in thebackground. Then Bowden couldn't contain himself anymore as he broke out into a wide grin and bellowed, "WHOO-OO-OO."

The Seminoles had just defeated the Florida Gators 37-9, snapping a nine-game losing streak against their biggest rival.

"We ain't second rate no more," Bowden said.

Florida State rolled up 570 yards, easily outplaying the Gators. Seminole quarterbacks Jimmy Jordan and Wally Woodham riddled the Florida secondary, completing 20 of 31 passes for 344 yards. Jordan rifled three touchdown passes to wide receiver Roger Overby.

"I'd go back there and I'd look and those guys would be open," said Jordan, who entered the game in the second quarter. "It was perfect. I was just throwing the ball."

The loss completed what Florida Coach Doug Dickey termed "a very common season" for the Gators. Florida State will play Texas Tech in the Tangerine Bowl Dec. 23.

"We couldn't stop their passing game with the people we had," Dickey said. "I was not pleased with the play of both offense and defense today. We just did not get enough done."

Florida State never let up, faking a field goal deep in Florida territory with less than two minutes to play in an unsuccessful drive for another touchdown. Bowden denied that he was trying to run up the score, and Dickey found no fault with the Seminoles' strategy.

"They've had 10 years of frustration and were trying to get everything they could," he said.

Tom Wilson

Aggie coach interested in Tech job

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Texas A&M Assistant Coach Tom Wilson, rumored as the next head football coach at Texas Tech, said Saturday night, "I'd be foolish to say I didn't want the job."

Wilson, a former All-Southwest Conference quarterback for the Red Raiders said, "I'm just not at liberty to say anything because honestly, I don't know what they are going to do. I would say they plan to make a decision soon, but I don't know when."

The Tech job became open when Steve Sloan suddenly resigned Tuesday to accept the head coaching job at the University of Mississippi.

There was immediate speculation that Baylor Coach Grant Teaff was tops on the Red Raider shopping list. But Wilson supporters came on strong and an announcement from Lubbock was expected by Monday on the situation.

Wilson, A&M's offensive coordinator, almost was named to the job when Sloan was hired three years ago.

The Texas Tech board of directors have already interviewed Wilson.

"It just wouldn't be fair to the situation for me to comment any further," said Wilson after the Aggies had beaten Houston 27-7 in an SWC finale.

He added, "We have a recruiting meeting for tomorrow afternoon and I'm due to leave to go on the road recruiting Monday. I plan on making that trip unless something happens between now and then."

Wilson joined the Aggie staff in 1974. He was the quarterback coach at Texas Tech for eight years and figured in the success of former Red Raider Coach Jim Carlen, now at South Carolina.

ACU captures 35-7 victory in NAIA play

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — Fullback Kelly Kent scampered for three touchdowns, including two in the third quarter, and had 200 yards rushing Saturday as Abilene Christian crushed Wisconsin-Stevens Point 35-7 to grab a berth in next week's NAIA championship game.

The second-ranked Wildcats, now 10-1-1, will meet Southwest Oklahoma State in Seattle next Saturday for the Division I title.

Unbeaten and top-ranked Southwest Oklahoma defeated Kearney State 21-7 on Saturday.

Kent, a sophomore from Cisco, Texas, opened ACU's scoring in the first quarter with a 34-yard gallop and had touchdown runs of 27 and 1 yard in the third period.

Alex Davis plunged over from 3 yards out in the second quarter for ACU as the Wildcats took a 13-0 halftime lead. Charles Tindol capped the Wildcats' scoring with a 16-yard run the final period.

The sixth-ranked Pointers', star quarterback, Reed Giordana, connected with former high school teammate Bill Newhouse on an 11-yard scoring pass in the fourth quarter for the Pointers' only touchdown.

Giordana, who had passed for more than 10,000 yards in his career, was held to only 49 yards passing in the first three periods and finished with 169 passing yards.

Chaparrals battle Badgers on Monday

The Midland College Chaparrals bring their pluses and minuses back to the MC gymnasium at 8 p.m. Monday against the Amarillo College Badgers in a Western Junior College Athletic Conference shootout.

It will be the third conference game in seven days for the Chaps. So far, the Chaps are 1-1 in the conference race, and that brings about the pluses and minuses.

The plus is that the Chaps are coming off a 76-75 win over powerful NMMI after dropping an 82-81 decision to Frank Phillips in the opener last Monday. It was that loss that brought about the minus.

THE CHAPS are now minus facial hair by order of first-year head coach Jerry Stone. It is not known if this minus makes the team play any better or not, but they certianly responded against NMMI after the order was given. So, after suffering a four game losing streak, the Chaps appear to be back in form again.

If the first two games are any indication of what Chap fans will see Monday, then you can bet this one will be another wire burner. There has been only two points in the difference of the first two games the Chaps have played, and that translates to a 1-1 record. It doesn't take much of a slip in this conference to mark up a loss.

THE CHAPS close out their fall schedule with a conference game at Howard College in Big Spring Thursday at 8 p.m. and a non-conference tilt with the Wayland Baptist College junior varsity in Plainview at 4 p.m. Friday.

MC will not be at home again until Jan. 23, so if you want to catch a glimpse of the "New Look" Chaps, you better see this one.

A special halftime entertainment show is slated Monday night when the Midland Lee girls' gymnastic team performs a 10-minute routine.

All area high school students are invited to attend the game as guests of the Chaps.

Cal Lutheran nabs victory

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Halfback Frank Rondinelli threw a 59-yard scoring pass off an option play, then scampered 36 yards for another touchdown Saturday as Westminster downed California Lutheran 17-9 in their NAIA Division II football championship game.

The triumph for the Westminster, Pa., Titans gave them their second Division II title in as many years, and marked their 20th consecutive victory.

The Titans had fallen behind 9-0, as Cal Lutheran's Brad Hoffman booted a 20-yard field goal in the first half, then Kingsmen quarterback John Kindred hit Harry Hedrick with an 8-yard scoring pass with 47 seconds left in the third quarter.

But Westminster scored two plays after the ensuing kickoff. Rondinelli's pass caught Cal Lutheran defenders off guard and moved the Titans to within two points of the lead before the third quarter ended.

Sloan to attract top talent

OXFORD, Miss. (AP) — Coach Steve Sloan turns now to recruiting after a rousing, red carpet welcome to Mississippi and Athletic Director John H. Vaught predicts his name will help attract football players to Ole Miss.

"The name Steve Sloan has an appea to all athletes," Vaught said at Sloan's introduction to Mississippi on Friday. "I certainly feel that some athletes will commit themselves to Ole Miss now that Steve Sloan is going to be with us."

The coach, with the aid of four assistants he wants to bring wih him from Texas Tech, is giving recruiting top priority. He plans to do as much as possible before starting preparations for the Red Raiders' Tangerine Bowl game with Florida State, then return to Mississippi to finish the recruiting job.

He said commitments to players recruited before Ken Cooper resigned as head coach last Wednesday would be honored.

"They can put it (a commitment) in the bank," Sloan said.

He anticipates that the major part of Ole Miss' recruiting will be in Mississippi and bordering areas and said he would not approach any high school athlete he had tried to recruit for Texas Tech unless the student called him.

Sloan said some of Cooper's coaches at Ole Miss would help in the recruiting effort.

He also will be assembling a staff and said he would vsit with Cooper's assistants before their contracts expire early next year. But he said it would "be awhile before we get an entire staff together."

Ole Miss officials appear ecstatic over the hiring of the successful young coach.

Vaught called him "the most brilliant young coach in America." Warner Alford, who succeeds Vaught next February and is a friend of Sloan, was moved to say that Mississippi would put together "what we think will be one of the quality athletic departments in the entire country."

Dr. Porte Fortune Jr., Ole Miss chancellor, introduced Sloan at Friday's pep rally-news conference.

SW Oklahoma whips Kearney

WEATHERFORD, Okla. (AP) — Quarterback Mike Sekul guided Southwestern Oklahoma State College to a 21-0 lead and the rugged Bulldog defense came through in the clutch to defeat Kearney College of Nebraska 21-7 and grab a spot in the NAIA Division I finals next week in Seattle.

Southwestern, undefeated and ranked No. 1 in the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics, used a bevy of runners to ground out 298 yards rushing.

Sekul scored the first touchdown in the first quarter on an 8-yard run capping an 80-yard drive. Fullback Jerome Newry added touchdowns in the second period on a 2-yard plunge and in the third on a 6-yard run as the Bulldogs built up a comfortable 21-0 lead.

Kearney fought back late in the third period on an 80-yard scoring drive capped by quarterback Kevin Roach's 4-yard keeper.

The Nebraska team had a chance to score again in the scoreless fourth quarter, marching to the Southwestern 8. But the Bulldog defense, spearheaded by tackle David Denning and linebackers Louis Mendoza and Al Riggins, stiffened.

Four backs gained more than 50 yards for Southwestern — Mike Brown with 77, Sekul 66, Don Willis 57 and Freddie Hurd 52.

Southwestern, 12-0, advanced to the NAIA finals next Saturday in Seattle against Abilene Christian, which defeated Wisconsin-Stevens Point Saturday.

Jacksonville in 31-7 romp

ANNISTON, Ala. (AP) — Quarterback Bobby Ray Green passed for 145 yards and two touchdowns to lead Jacksonville State to a 31-7 football victory over North Dakota State in the NCAA Division II semifinals Saturday.

The Gamecocks advanced to the Pioneer Bowl, national finals at Wichita Falls, Texas, where they play Lehigh Dec. 10. Lehigh defeated California-Davis 39-30.

Jacksonville jumped ahead early in the Grantland Rice Bowl game, stopping the Bisons cold. Freshman Pat Clements ran for 101 yards on 22 carries, marking the fifth straight game he gained over 100 yards.

James Coleman scored on a 1-yard run and Rocky Riddle kicked a 27-yard field goal, ending the first quarter 10-0.

Jacksonville ran for 223 yards, while the Bisons averaged 148. Defensively, the Gamecocks held North Dakota to 244 yards.

Midland flag football team in state meet

The Goodrich flag football team of Midland will represent Region X in the Texas Amateur Athletic Federation state flag football tournament in Austin, December 10 and 11. Goodrich takes a record of 12-1 into the state tournament. The lone loss was inflicted by Godzilla in the Midland tournament. That loss was avenged the next night when Goodrich had to win two games from Godzilla in order to represent Midland in the Regional Tournament. After the dust had settled, Goodrich came away the winner taking the first game by a score of 27-15, while the second game was not decided until the final minute of play on a missed extra point try. That second game score was 14-13 in favor of Goodrich.

In San Angelo, Goodrich competed against Sweetwater and Supersports of San Angelo for the regional crown. A strong defensive effort propelled the triemen to the title. They defeated Supersports 9-0 and then relied on a 55-yard field goal to tie Sweetwater 6-6. Goodrich outgained Sweetwater in a four-down playoff to advance to the finals of the tournament. Sweetwater eliminated Supersports and earned the right to play the Midland representative again. This time, however, Goodrich quarterback Don McClung found Jimmy Jarman and Fred Koontz on the receiving end of touchdown passes and Goodrich defeated Sweetwater 14-7, thereby sending them to Austin to do battle against the 20 best flag football teams in the state.

Because of having competed for area high schools and colleges, many of the Goodrich players should be well-known to area sports enthusiasts. Like most good football teams, Goodrich is built on a solid defense. Up front, there is Harold Paulette and Lowell Lay who spearhead a strong rush on the opposition quarterback. The tiremen utilize a quick linebacker philosophy and have five good ones. Fred Koontz holds down the middle linebacker slot as well as being the team's place kicker. Outside linebackers are Lindle Dempsey and Brent Fields while Jimmy Jarman and Carl Bizzell play inside. The two safeties are ballhawking Charles Lacy, who is also the punter, and Joe Bob Bizzell.

The offense is anchored by a big, strong line. David Ward is the center whild Tom Rice and Wayne Wheat man the guard positions. Throwing the ball for Goodrich is Don McClung. He has excellent receivers in John Kendrick, Randy Brannon, Joe Tighe, and Earl Townsend. Lacy and Joe Bizzell share time at the other receiver spot.

As a result of winning the regional title, Goodrich was afforded the opportunity to draft three additional players. They looked to the only team to beat them, Godzilla, for those players. Mark Withrow, Mike Harker, and Shack Reeder will be welcome additions and should give Goodrich an excellent shot at the state championship. Winning state championships is not new to Bill Williams' Goodrich-sponsored teams. It was just this past summer that his softball team captured the Texas State Men's Slow-Pitch Softball Tournament. Two players on that state championship softball team will lend valuable tournament experience to the Goodrich flag football team. Withrow was all all-stater, while McClung was named most valuable player of the tournament. Any donations to help the team defray costs of the trip to Austin can be mailed to Goodrich Service Center, 125 W. Missouri, Midland, 79701.

Hartwick takes win

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — The Hartwick College Warriors scored three goals and picked up a bonus on a deflected pass to defeat the Brown University Bruins 4-1 Saturday in the semifinals of the NCAA Soccer Championships.

The Warriors won the right to meet the winner of a later game between the University of San Francisco Dons, shooting for a third consecutive national title, and Southern Illinois-Edwardsville. The final game will be today.

The Bruins opened the scoring 3:37 into the first game when Tom O'Brien rebounded a shot by Tom Turnbull.

Gold Bowl crown goes to Bulldogs

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Malcolm Montgomery made only one of four field goal attempts Saturday, but that was enough to give South Carolina State's Bulldogs a 10-7 victory over Winston-Salem's Rams in the Gold Bowl football game.

Montgomery's successful field goal came with 3:15 left in the third period. It enabled the Mid-Eastern Conference champions to win their second straight bowl duel with the champion of the Central Intercollegiate Athletic Association before a crowd of 14,000.

Winston-Salem, which suffered its first defeat in 12 outings, took a 7-0 lead when the Rams drove 49 yards in eight plays on their first possession. Arrington Jones scored on a 1yard run.

The Bulldogs, who finished 91-1, quickly got even on their next possession. Nate Rivers, named the game's most valuable player, broke around right end and raced 64 yards for the tying touchdown.

Montgomery, who had missed from 48 and 44 yards, then booted it through from the 24 in the third period and the Bulldogs' defense made it stand up. He later missed from 42 yards in the fourth period.

The Rams posed a late threat when a bad snap and a blocked punt gave them the ball at the Bulldogs' 27 with 45 seconds left. But four plays later, Derek Brewington was well short on a 47-yard field goal try with five seconds left.

Rivers rolled up 137 yards on nine carries in the first half but lost three yards after intermission for a net 134 yards.

Four linemen look at Lombardi award

HOUSTON (AP) — Linemen from Notre Dame, Texas, and Kentucky were nominated Saturday for the Vince Lombardi award symbolic of being the nation's outstanding collegiate lineman of the year.

They are Ross Browner and Ken MacAfee of Notre Dame, Brad Shearer of Texas and Art Still of Kentucky.

The four finalists were selected by a panel of 83 coaches, sports writers and sportscasters representing all regions of the nation.

A crowd of more than 1,200 is expected for the $100-a-plate Jan. 19 dinner to announce the eighth recipient of the award honoring the late Green Bay Packers coach who died of cancer.

Former President Gerald Ford and comedian Bob Hope participated in the dinner program last January when the granite trophy was presented to Wilson Whitley of the University of Houston.

Proceeds from the dinner go to the research program of the American Cancer Society.

Browner, a 6-foot-3, 247-pound senior defensive end and a Notre Dame tri-captain, also was a finalist last season.

MacAfee, 6-4 and 250 pounds, had 49 receptions as a senior tight end in Notre Dame's first 10 games of the season.

Shearer, 6-4 and 255 pounds, is a senior defensive tackle and defensive captain of the undefeated Texas team that meets Notre Dame in the Cotton Bowl on Jan. 2.

Still, 6-7 and 250 pounds, is the senior defensive end who anchored the Kentucky defense during its 10-1 season.

Besides Whitley, previous recipients of the Lombardi award have been Jim Stillwagon, Ohio State; Walt Patulki, Notre Dame; Rich Glover, Nebraska; John Hicks, Ohio State; Randy White, Maryland; and Leroy Selmon, Oklahoma.

Cunning Trick takes handicap

NEW YORK (AP) — Cunning Trick, sold last month by Ogden Phipps to W.T. Pascoe; paid a quick dividend to his new owner by winning the $54,750 Gallant Fox Handicap at Aqueduct Race Track Saturday as a 10-1 outsider.

Giving new trainer Billy Turner Jr., who handled Seattle Slew, his first important win since Slew's Triple Crown triumphs, Cunning Trick burst past the 6-5 favorite On the Sly in the stretch run and hung on for a neck victory.

Before the race became official, Cunning Trick had to survive a claim of foul by Greg McCarron, the rider of On the Sly, for alleged interference in the stretch run.

Ridden by Jean Cruguet, also of Seattle Slew fame, Cunning Trick made the most of his 13pound weight advantage at 114 pounds, paying $22.40, $7.20 and $5 to those in the crowd of 24,217 who liked his chances.

The time for the 15-8 mile over a muddy track was 2:4415.

On the Sly, the top weight at 127 pounds, returned $3.20 and $2.60. Nearly five lengths further back, Social Seeker, a 40-1 longshot under lightweight of 105 pounds, including Patrick Day, returned $8.80 to show.

Proud Arion finished fourth in the field of nine.

Cunning Trick, a 4-year-old colt, was making his first start since returning from France where he was a disappointment in the Arc de Triomphe at Longchamps. He was next to last after one mile, but found a hole along the inside and rushed into contention. Then Cruguet swung him to the outside at the head of the stretch, and the colt quickly passed On the Sly, opening a 2-length lead before On the Sly rallied to almost pull it out.

Hartsfield nabs Good Guy Award

TORONTO (AP) — Roy Hartsfield was hired last year as field manager of the fledgling Toronto Blue Jays' baseball team because of his reputation for having infinite patience.

And while the American League team proceeded to lose 107 games during the season, Hartsfield always came out cool and composed, ready to shoulder the losses that were obviously mental falldowns elsewhere on the field.

His genial observations were reflected in his being voted the first recipient of The Good Guy Award in balloting conducted by the Toronto chapter of the Baseball Writers' Association of America, which was announced Saturday.

Three Midlanders earn berths in state meet

LUBBOCK—Three Midlanders walked off with state cross country berths here Saturday morning at McKenzie Park after finishing in the top 10 during the Region I Cross Country Championships.

Midland High's Bulldogs will have Jeff Adkins and Pat Darden in the state run next Saturday in Georgetown after posting top 10 finishes while Midland Lee will send surprise state berth winner Ricky Parsons to the meet.

Adkins paced the three Midland runners with nine minutes and 58 seconds over the two-mile course for a fourth place finish while Parsons, who could be the most improved runner this year, recorded a 10:05 for seventh.

PAT DARDEN, another improved runner, placed tenth with a 10:12 to earn the final berth for the locals.

Midland High's Chuck Stump falls in the near miss category with a 12th place finish to miss a berth, but the effort was a fine 10:17 and 12th out of 129 runners helped the Pack earn fourth place in the team race.

The top three teams also earned a trip to the state meet as a unit, but Midland High was shut out on the team advancement by three El Paso teams, who dominated the meet.

El Paso Austin captured the team crown with 66 points, and Austin was paced by the regional winner Kenny Schmidt, who led the pack with a 9:39.

EL PASO Riverside placed second with 81 points while El Paso Burges earned the other state berth with 94 points.

Midland High placed fourth with 131 points, but they defeated District 5-4A team champion San Angelo by 42 points to gain some revenge. San Angelo was sixth with 173 points.

The Regional meet was a highly contested meet. There was only 24 seconds difference between Stump's 12th place finish and Midland High's Paul Darden, who placed 41st with a 10:41 and only 16 seconds separated Paul and Gene Tuttle, who finished at 68th, and one second cost Tom Hunter three places with 71st. Midland High's Bob Glenn was 92nd with a 11:14, less than two minutes off the winning time.

MIDLAND LEE'S Steve Hooper placed 13th with a 10:18, but was so disappointed with his running that he did not stay in line to be recorded. He is not listed among the official finishers.

"Steve was just disappointed," Lee coach Sam Volpe said. "He wanted to go to state, and he didn't make it. He just didn't stand in line to be recorded."

However, it was the first time ever that three Midland runners placed in the top 10 in a regional meet. Midland High coach Ed Nixon was pleased with the results.

"To get two kids in the top 10 is pretty good for one team," Nixon related. "I thought Adkins, Pat (Darden) and Stump did real good. Pat was eighth in the team points and Stump was 10th. I thought Pat did a real good job because the last time we ran on this course, Pat finished 10th, but he beat eight of those runners that beat him in that meet. I thought the kids did a fine job."

Volpe was almost at a loss for words when he found out that Parsons earned a state berth.

"Ricky was a very great surprise for us," Volpe noted. "I really thought he had no hopes of getting to the state meet, but his goal all week in practice has been to make it, and he did it. He just made up his mind, but I have to honestly say that I thought there was no hope for him in this field. He has been improving every week and he beat everyone that beat him in district with the exception of Adkins. He even beat Lon Albert of San Angelo, who won district."

THE LEE girls, running in their first regional meet, did not fare too well. They finished 13th, Amarillo High, Amarillo Tascosa and El Paso Bel Air were the top three teams.

"The girls just didn't run well. We thought they might be able to do a little better," Volpe said.

The Lee girls won the 5-4A championship two weeks ago. Lee's regional finishers were Holly Franz, 69th; Terry Reyes, 71st; Shelley Hall, 77th; Gerri Moore, 91st; Sabrina Hicks, 98th; Vanessa Wood, 99th; and Tanya Phiffer, 101st. There were 107 runners in the girls division.

Fighting Irish down Valparaiso, 89-75

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — Senior Don Williams scored six of his game-high 20 points as third-ranked Notre Dame jumped to a 11-0 advantage and went on to defeat Valparaiso 89-75 Saturday in non-conference college basketball action.

It took five minutes before Tim Kizer scored for the Crusaders, 0-3, and the early surge helped give Notre Dame a 19-4 edge.

The Irish, 3-0, led 36-20 with 5:39 left in the first half when Coach Digger Phelps inserted five freshmen into the game. He kept them in until the intermission and Valparaiso pulled to within 44-41.

Kelly Tripucka, one of the five freshmen sent into the game, scored 13 points in the first half and added six more in the second half. He made his first seven shots from the field and sank five of six free throws.

Kizer and senior forward Darryl Ashby shared scoring honors for the Crusaders with 17 points apiece. Ashby, who fouled out with four minutes to play, needs only two points to become the 11th player in his school's history to score 1,000 career points.

Adams takes MCC golf win

Bill Adams fired a net 57 Saturday to win the Midland Country Club's Low Net Individual golf tournament by a five stroke margin over second place finisher Russ Ramsland, who had a net 62.

Al Dillard won third with a 64 while Charles Hartwell posted a 65 for fourth. Bill Chancellor, Jr. placed fifth with a net 66 after a playoff with Joe Artman and Frank Thompson both finished with 66. Artman was sixth and Thompson seventh.

Eighth place ended in a three-way tie between Bob Jones, George Tope and Robert Caudle, all with a net 67.

Hockey players to file suit

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Three former members of the Minnesota North Stars of the National Hockey League club say they lost some $236,000 in a cattle-breeding program and are suing to recover.

Filing the suit in Hennepin County District Court Thursday were Bill Goldsworthy, Barry Gibbs and Dennis Hextall. They claim they were cheated by Richard Lurie and his associates when they were advised to invest in a breeding program involving Simmental bulls.

The suit stated the breeding program went broke late last year. It also claims Lurie failed to tell the hockey players he had been involved in several similar breeding ventures that turned out to be financial failures.

Lurie is a Minneapolis accountant who has advised a number of professional athletes in financial matters.

The suit charges Lurie told the three athletes the cattle breeding program would serve as a tax shelter and that they could use income tax refunds to pay off the bank loan they would need to buy into the program

Engineers nab win over Davis

DAVIS, Calif. (AP) — Quarterback Mike Reiker threw touchdown passes of 81 and 25 yards and scored on a 1-yard touchdown sneak to lead the Lehigh Engineers to a 39-30 victory over Cal Davis in the NCAA Division II football playoff semifinals Saturday.

The victory in the Knute Rockne Bowl sends Lehigh into next Saturday's championship at Wichita Falls, Texas against Jacksonville State of Alabama, which beat North Dakota State 31-7 in the other semifinal Saturday.

Reiker's 81-yard scoring toss that put Lehigh ahead 13-0 in the first quarter went to Steve Kreider, who had five catches for 161 yards.

The 25-yard scoring pass was to Mike Ford and broke a 23-23 tie in the third quarter. Ford scored again on a 24-yard end run late in the final quarter.

Dave Aprill scored the game's first touchdown on a 4-yard run only 5:27 into the game, and Lehigh also had field goals of 38 and 41 yards by Kenny Wood.

The loss was the first for the Aggies, who entered the game with a 10-0 record. Lehigh now is 11-2.

Davis never led but tied the game at 16-16 and 23-23. All the Aggies' touchdowns came on passes by Mike Moroski, who completed 21 of 46 for 353 yards but had five interceptions. But the Aggies were held to a net of only 25 yards in 23 rushing plays.

Moroski's scoring throws went to Wallie Loving for 9 and 10 yards and in the second half for 36 yards to Steve Griffin and 69 yards to Tib Belza.

Reiker, the national Division II offensive leader, completed 11 of 25 passes for 265 yards, with three interceptions.

Stacy, Pate holding lead in Mixed Team

LARGO, Fla. (AP) — U.S. Women's Open champ Hollis Stacy converted long birdie putts on two of the last three holes Saturday as she and partner Jerry Pate blended their talents for a 3-under-par 69 that enabled them to retain a three-stroke lead in the third round of the $200,000 Mixed Team Golf Championship.

Pate and Stacy, leaders since a spectacular 61 in the opening round, compiled a 54-hole total of 200. That put them 16 strokes under par on the Bardmoor Country Club's 7,015-yard North course, still wet and slow from a drenching rain that delayed play for two hours Friday.

THAT DELAY caused Pate, a two-time winner this year despite missing much of the season with an injury, and Stacy to be stranded by darkness in the second round. They had to come back Saturday morning to finish off a round of 70 and then went into regular third round play with a three-stroke advantage.

The margin dwindled to one in the face of a challenge by rookies Curtis Strange, 22, and Nancy Lopez, 20. Bouncy little Hollis built it back to three, however, with her birdie putts of 25 feet on the 16th and about 20 feet, from the back fringe, on the 18th.

Strange and Lopez were second with a 69-203.

THEY APPEARED to be the only team with a chance of catching the front-runners. It was another three strokes back to the teams of Tom Purtzer and Sandra Post and the defending titleholders, Chi Chi Rodriguez and Jo Ann Washam, tied at 206, six strokes back of the leaders.

The Post-Purtzer team had a 67 in the bright, warm, sunny weather and Rodriguez-Washam shot a 68.

The unique format calls for both members of the team to hit tee shots. The man then plays his second shot on the woman's drive and vice versa. They then decide which one they want for their third and play alternate shots on that ball for the remainder of the hole.

"I think it's important for me to get it close to the hole and let her putt it," said. "It's not that I'm a bad putter, I just can't seem to get the ball to the hole on these greens. She putts them much better than I do. Any time there's a choice, I want her to do the putting."

It worked perfectly in the run down the stretch.

LOPEZ HAD birdied the eighth and ninth holes and a bogey by the Pate-Stacy team on the 15th had cut their margin to one.

On the par-5 16th, Pate and Stacy appeared in trouble until Pate hit a third shot 25 feet from the hole and Hollis rolled it home. It was the same situation on the 18th, another par 5.

Pate had to hit a 200-yard third shot 20 feet behind the pin and again Hollis rapped it in, hopping happily in the air when the ball ducked in the cup, then running over to give her partner a hug.

"A three-stroke lead is a lot better than two," Pate said. "That last putt was a big one, very important."

Garden is willing to try tournament

NEW YORK (AP) — Madison Square Garden is ready to try its hand at a nationally televised boxing tournament which would produce U.S. champions.

The tournament, which will be known as Champions, U.S.A., was endorsed Saturday by the U.S. Boxing Association, an alliance of state and city boxing commissions which was formed this weekend at a meeting in Chicago.

Still needed to get the tournament off the ground is a television contract, and Michael Burke, president of the Garden, currently is negotiating with the three major television networks. "All of them have shown great interest," said John F.X. Condon, vice president of Madison Square Garden Boxing, Inc.

ABC began 1976 with the United Boxing Championships tournament, promoted by Don King, but that venture was knocked out last April by charges of kickbacks, phoney rankings and phoney records. No criminal charges were brought against anyone involved in the tournament.

The World Television Champions tournament also died during the year.

Condon said the Garden would be sole promoter of Champions, U.S.A. but that the fights would be held throughout the country and not only in the Garden.

Garden Boxing boss Teddy Brenner said that the tournament would be held in 10 weight classes from heavyweight down to flyweight and a champion would be established after three fights—two 12 rounds and 1 be 60 between the winner and loser.

After the U.S. Boxing Association establishes rankings, all ranked fighters will be invited and the four highest ranked fighters in each division who accept invitations will be in the tournament, Brenner said. He added that the pairings for the tournament will be made by pulling names from a hat.

The rankings committee will be headed by Bill Brennan, who once held the same position for the World Boxing Association. Fighters from the 50 states, Puerto Rico, the United States Virgin Islands and Guam are eligible to be ranked.

Once champions are crowned, they will have to defend three times a year against contenders designated by the U.S. Boxing Association, Brenner said.

Brenner said he expected the top U.S. fighters in every division except the heavyweight class to participate. "I wouldn't expect guys like Ken Norton and Jimmy Young (the two topranked heavies in the world) in there," said Brenner.

About 20 state and city commissions are members of the U.S. Boxing Association whose purpose is "to achieve greater efficiency, cooperation, uniformity and effective control in supervision and regulation of professional boxing in the United States," according to Chuck Davey, its president. Davey is a one-time welterweight contender and a former chairman of the Michigan Board of Boxing Control.

The New York State Athletic Commission is not a member of the new association but Condon said it has given its blessing to the tournament.

Morerod takes slalom victory

MONTGENEVRE, France (AP) — Lise Marie Morerod of Switzerland won the World Series women's parallel slalom final Saturday and took quick revenge for a defeat suffered against Fabienne Serrat of France at Crans Montana earlier in the week.

After two close runs on an icy, difficult track in this French Alpine resort, only half a second divided the two women, and Moreod said she was lucky "as everything could have happened on this course which was very fast, icy and all bumps."

Serrat, warmly cheered by French fans, said she lost the race with a poor showing in the first run of the final. "I was on the faster course but I was unable to recover from an earlier mistake," she explained.

Austria's Ingrid Eberle finished third and her veteran teammate, AnneMarie MoserProel, placed fourth to give Austria victory in the World Series team standings with 52 points.

Widener nabs win by 39-36

PHENIX CITY, Ala. (AP) — Wide receiver Walker Carter caught touchdown passes of 25 and 70 yards in the fourth quarter as Widener overcame a 10-0 first-quarter deficit and defeated Wabash College 39-36 in the sixth annual Amos Alonzo Stagg Bowl for the NCAA Division III national championship.

Wabash scored first on a blocked punt by Christopher Braun at the Widener 21-yard line and Dave Galloway recovered in the end zone for the Little Giants.

Widener came back to take the lead 14-10 at halftime on two second-quarter touchdowns. With 12:16 left in the half, Mark Draft exploded for a 45yard touchdown run.

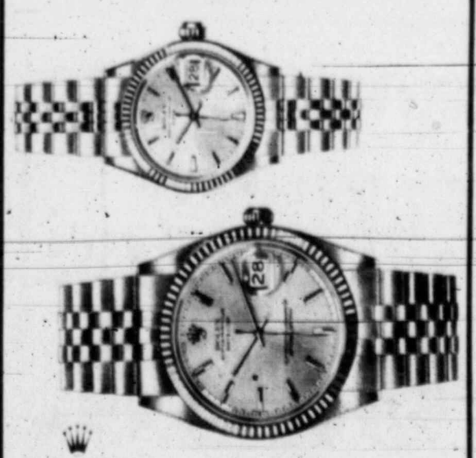

After Wabash was forced to punt, the Pioneers drove 78 yards in seven plays and scored on a 4-yard run by quarterback Mark Walter with 13 seconds left.

Bengals, Chiefs to set pro football history

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

In the orderly, efficient Park Avenue world of the National Football League, every game played each week carries a number.

And it has come to pass that in the 12th week of the league's 58th season, Game No. 5,000 will be played today. Hallelujah!

The lucky participants will be the Cincinnati Bengals and Kansas City Chiefs and to commemorate the contest, the winning coach ought to get a leather helmet and a set of H shaped goal posts.

Actually, the Chiefs and Bengals lucked into this piece of NFL history. The game numbers are assigned alphabetically with visiting teams listed first. That means if Kansas City was the visiting team, No. 5,000 would have been Cleveland at San Diego.

As it is, the Browns and Chargers will have to settle for No. 5,001.

In the Monday night game, Baltimore plays at Miami with the AFC East lead on the line.

The Cincinnati-Kansas City game has more than numerical significance for the Bengals, who are still in a playoff berth race in the AFC Central Division. Cincinnati is tied with Houston and Cleveland all one game behind Pittsburgh. The Bengals must keep pace with the Steelers until their date in Cincinnati next Saturday.

THE OTHER AFC division races also remain tight.

In the West, Denver still has a one-game lead over Oakland and even if the Raiders catch them and they finish deadlocked, the Broncos would have the edge through the complicated NFL tie-breaking formula. In the East, Baltimore can clinch by beating Miami Mondaynight and if that happens and Oakland also wins, the Dolphins can forget about the playoffs. On the other hand, a Miami victory would tie the race with two weeks to go.

The AFC wild card team will likely come from the West Division loser since both Oakland and Denver have better records than Miami.

In the NFC, Dallas, Minnesota and Los Angeles lead their divisions and St. Louis seems in the best position for a wild card slot.

Dallas has already clinched no worse than a wild card playoff berth and can wrap up the East Division race by beating the Eagles today.

MINNESOTA IS one game in front of Chicago in the Central Division and could have an edge in the tie-break formula should the teams finish with identical won-lost records.

Los Angeles has a two-game margin in the West and can clinch a fifth consecutive division crown by beating Oakland, provided Atlanta loses. On the other hand, a Raider victory against LA, combined with an Atlanta victory over New England and a Baltimore victoiry over Miami Monday night would clinch the AFC wild card slot for Oakland.

Wolfpack upsets Wake Forest five

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

The Big Four Tournament usually brings out the best in everybody.

But Friday night it brought out the worst in Duke.

"We got tired early," said Blue Devil Coach Bill Foster. "At the end we just didn't have enough."

Not only that, the Blue Devils committed too many fouls and the result was a conclusive 79-66 victory for second-ranked North Carolina and a place in tonight's finals against North Carolina State. The Wolfpack upset No. 18 Wake Forest 79-77 in the other opening-round game.

In other games involving ranked teams, No. 5 San Francisco stopped Tennessee 84-75 in the Fiesta Classic at Tempe, Ariz., No. 6 UCLA crushed Colorado 104-70; No. 7 Arkansas whipped Hawaii 78-53 and No. 12 Syracuse defeated LeMoyne 90-62 in its own Carrier Classic.

PHIL FORD and Mike O'Koren eached scored 23 points to lead North Carolina's victory. The Tar Heels were a cold-shooting team before getting untracked in the second half behind their two scoring stars. North Carolina took the lead for good on a tip-in by O'Koren that made the score 58-57.

Freshman Kenny Matthews scored with one second remaining to give North Carolina State its victory over Wake Forest. Matthews, who scored eight points, won the game on an 18- foot jump shot. Wake Forest had trailed nearly the entire second half but tied the game at 77 when Rod Griffin scored with six seconds remaining.

"It was one of the most physical games I've seen," said North Carolina State Coach Norm Sloan. "This is a big event for these guys. They were uptight and some got a case of the nerves. I guess the coaches did, too."

JAMES HARDY and Chubby Cox scored 22 points apiece, leading San Francisco over Tennessee. In the nightcap of the Fiesta Classic, Arizona State defeated Iowa State 87-69 as Rick and Blake Taylor combined for 49 points.

DALE SHACKLEFORD scored 17 points and Billy Drew came off the bench to score 17 as Syracuse beat LeMoyne. Robert Chapman's 30 points powered Michigan State over Rhode Island 92-64 in the second game of the Carrier Classic.

Raymond Townsend scored a career-high 21 points and UCLA made 42 of a Pauley Pavilion record 52 free throws to beat Colorado.

"I was particularly pleased with our defensive effort," said UCLA Coach Gary Cunningham. "I especially liked our press."

Sidney Moncreif's 25 points led Arkansas over Hawaii.

Elsewhere, Missouri and Texas-El Paso advanced into the finals of the Show-Me Classic in Columbia, Mo. Brad Droy scored 14 points to lead Missouri over Butler 87-66 and Texas-El Paso whipped Northwestern 58-54 with the help of Calvin Hale's layup in the closing minutes.

West Texas elevens win

A pair of West Texas schoolboy powerhouses, posted state playoff victories Friday night.

The Brownwood Lions ripped Boswell, 42-20, in Fort Worth in a Class AAA playoff semifinal battle while Seagraves took an easy 33-7 win over Sunray in Lubbock to gain the Class A semifinals next weekend.

Clarence Davis and Steve McCormick led the Seagraves attack. Davis rushed for 135 yards in 20 carries and McCormick added 122 yards in 17 carries for the Eagles.

Nathan Allen threw two touchdown passes to Doug Hurt to spark Brownwood to its win over Boswell.

Committee may move?

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — A decision to move the United States Olympic Committee headquarters from New York to Colorado Springs is certain and will be finalized sometime this month, Bob Mathias says.

Mathias, executive director of the Olympic Regional Training Center here, said confirmation of the move would be made during a meeting of USOC later in the month.

Speculation about the move of the headquarters began last summer when USOC President Robert Kane announced that Colorado Springs would be one site considered.

Rogers named coach of year

CHICAGO (AP) — Darryl Rogers, who completed his second season at Michigan State by lifting the Spartans to third place, has been named Big Ten Conference Football Coach of the Year.

Rogers, who collected 37 of the 70 first-place votes cast by Big Ten sports writers, led the Spartans to a 7-3-1 season after they had been 4-6-1 in 1976.

Woody Hayes of Ohio State finished second and Lee Corso of Indiana was third.

World Cup golf set next week

By GIL SANTOS

MANILA (AP) —"The east course is tougher now than when major tournaments are staged" on the suburban, rolling 7,135-yard par-72 WackWack Golf and Country Club, veteran pro golfer Ben Arda of The Philippines said Saturday.

He would not predict the winning score in next week's 25th World Cup and International Trophy golf championships among 100 golfers—11 amateurs and 89 professionals—representing 50 countries.

Odd-makers are predicting eight-under-par 280 will clinch individual honors and team winners will need 14-under-par 562.

"They have tightened the fairways, there are more traps and water hazards, the greens are faster than they have been," the 47-year-old Arda added.

He knows Wack-Wack very well, probably better than any other participant in the 72-hole tournament beginning next Thursday. Arda has participated in every Philippine Open Championship, traditionally on the same east course—where the Asian circuit opens—for the past 15 years. He has also been in 15 World wcup championships since 1956 when it was known as the Canada Cup.

Arda, probably one of the smallest of the world's professional golfers, would not even say whether he thinks the American pair of Lanny Wadkin, U.S. PGA champion and World Series of Golf winner, and U.S. Open champion Hubert Green will win this time.

The U.S. has won the team title 13 times and an American has won individual honors and the international trophy 10 times since 1954.

"But I don't know these boys now so I cannot really say anything about their chances. There are also other international players in the contest, like Gary Player of South Africa or George Knudson of Canada," said Arda.

Philadelphia being considered

HONOLULU (AP) — The Philadelphia Phillies are the leading candidate to tour Japan after the 1978 major league baseball season, The Associated Press learned today.

"We're one of two or three teams being considered," Phillies' Vice President Bill Giles said here before the start of baseball's winter meetings.

Despite Giles attempt to play down the possibility of the Phillies making the trip, it was learned that the Phillies had applied to the baseball commissioner's office for approval.

Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn, when asked about the proposed trip by the Philadelphia franchise, smiled and said: "There are a few teams who would like to go."

The Baltimore Orioles, Los Angeles Dodgers and New York Mets previously made the month-long exhibition series against teams in the Japanese baseball league.

Last year, however, the world champion Cincinnati Reds declined to make the trip to the Orient. It is significant that Eddie Forenz, the Phillies' traveling secretary, presently is in Japan. It is believed Forenz is investigating accomodations for the Phillies.

The Phillies would play such teams as Yiomiura Giants with Sadaharu Oh, the greatest home run hitter in the history of Japanese baseball. The exhibition series probably would include Japanese teams in both the Pacific and Central divisions.

At least one of the Phillies, utility infielder Dave Johnson, would be no stranger to Japanese baseball and probably would persuade his teammates to accept the post-season barnstorming tour. The 34-year-old Johnson played for the Tokyo Giants in 1975 and 1976 before returning to the United States and signing with last year's National League Eastern Division champion Phillies.

Johnson hit only .197 his first year in Japan but boosted it to .275 with 26 home runs and 74 RBI the following season.

World Cup bowling set

TOLWORTH, England (AP) — There is sure to be a two new champions at the 13th annual Bowling World Cup starting next Wednesday, and there figures to be a battle royal to find out who they will be.

Luci Giovinco of Tampa, Fla., and Paeng Nepomucano of the Philippines won the world's most prestigious amateur tenpin titles last year in Tehran. But both 20-year-old collegians turned in sub-par performances in their respective national eliminations earlier this year and failed to qualify for the trip to Britain.

There is plenty of talent, however, among the bowlers from more than 35 nations who are assembling here.

Italians whip Aussies

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — The Italian Davis Cup doubles team, playing as though their lives depended on it, crushed Australia 6-4, 6-4, 7-5 today to keep alive their hopes of retaining the Davis Cup in the 1977 challenge round final.

The Italian pair, Adriano Panatta and Paolo Bertolucci, did not drop a serve in beating the Australians, John Alexander and Phil Dent, before a crowd of about 5,000 at Sydney's White City courts.

After losing both opening day singles, the Italians needed a win today to have any chance of retaining the Cup in the best-of-five series.

With the prospect of the Cup slipping away, the Italians played dazzling tennis and were helped by ragged performances from Dent and Alexander.

"I told you yesterday (Friday) after we lost the singles that it wasn't finished," a beaming Nicola Pietrangeli, the Italian non-playing captain, said after the match.

"The deciding match will be between Tony Roche and Corrado Barazzutti tomorrow (Sunday)," Pietrangeli predicted, at the same time predicting a win for Panatta over Alexander.

Plan open house for holiday guests

By PATSY GORDON

The center of attention in many homes as Christmas grows near is the kitchen. With recipes galore and cupboards overflowing, there are creations that are fun to eat and those that are fun to make.

But Christmas doesn't come gift wrapped and tied neatly with a bright red bow, and Christmas wouldn't be Christmas without its frantic moments.

But too much holiday hassle can detract from the warmth and beauty of the celebration of Christmas, said Janice Rabenaldt, a Midland consumer information specialist.

Mrs. Rabenaldt conducted a Christmas party to begin all Christmas parties in the Flame Room of Pioneer Natural Gas Co. at which she demonstrated specially prepared recipes and crafts that are perfect for the holiday entertaining, Christmas gift giving and home decorating.

The "secret" to a merry Christmas, said Mrs. Rabenaldt, is to begin attending to the details early—knowing the many things that come up and must be planned around.

"Write down the major things you want to get done before the big day. Then assign each one to a specific day or week. Don't expect unreasonable things of yourself in the three weeks left until Christmas, but try not to get behind either. Each task you check off means that Christmas Day this year will be one with absolutely no regrets that something didn't get done."

One of the most popular ways to entertain during the holidays is the open house. "This is a marvelous way to entertain as large a crowd as you wish, such as business associates, fellow club members and volunteer workers, new neighbors, out-of-city guests and, most of all, your closest friends and family," explained the specialist.

"If you expect a really big crowd—more than 25—stagger the hours of the party. To avoid congestion, invite, for instance, one-third of the guests from 1-3 p.m., one-third from 2-5 p.m. and the remaining from 3-5 p.m."

Almost anything can be served at an open house, said Mrs. Rabenaldt, but menus should be planned well in advance. "You will want to forget foods with elaborate last-minute preparation. Stick with the finger foods and, to make it even easier, choose foods that can be frozen ahead and then thawed and warmed in your keep-warm oven. To be on the safe side, augment your gourmet delicacies with old standbys such as cheese and crackers."

The serving arrangement, said Mrs. Rabenaldt, also should be thought about beforehand. "You want a place that is out of the main flow of traffic, yet close enough that the guests will free free to nibble. It's a good idea to have a separate table for beverages.

"You might consider removing some of the furniture since most guests will be standing and moving around. And it's not a bad idea to turn down the thermostat a bit to compensate for the large crowd. And be sure coasters and ashtrays are available if you value your carpets and tabletops."

The specialist offered some guidelines for selecting a menu for the open house entertaining.

—Do the experimenting beforehand and save the test runs for the family.

—Take advantage of do-ahead dishes.

—Avoid as much last-minute preparation as possible.

—Choose bite-size foods or those that don't require cutting.

—Steer clear of runny foods.

—Be sure your menu provides contrast in flavor and texture. Serve spicy foods with bland, crisp with soft and remember to include a variety of colors.

—Include an out-of-the-way, or if you're an accomplished hostess, a spectacular food such as a beautiful mold, a flaming dessert or exotic or foreign food.

"There's no hard and fast rule for setting a buffet. Most importantly, it should be arranged attractively. Plates and napkins should be placed first and service dishes should be arranged so the guests can easily help themselves. Serving utensils and food should be placed in logical order," said Mrs. Rabenaldt.

"The KEY word is to PLAN. Decide what to serve, make out a grocery list, sketch a view of your table, inventory linens, polish silver and schedule when foods are to be cooked or heated.

CHIVE DIP WITH MEATBALLS

Combine together in saucepan: 1 cup sour cream, 2 tbsps. chopped chives, 1 tbsp. brown gravy mix and 2 tsps. milk.

Heat thoroughly, stirring constantly. Do not boil. Serve with meatballs.

MEATBALLS

Combine in mixing bowl: 2 eggs, slightly beaten; ⅓ cup milk and ⅔ cup potato flakes. Let stand one minute.

Add:
2 tbsps. instant minced onion
1 tsp. salt
⅛ tsp. pepper
⅛ tsp. garlic powder
1 tsp. Worchestershire sauce
1 pound ground beef

Mix well. Shape into one-inch meatballs. Cook in a greased skillet until brown and well done. Keep warm in oven until ready to serve. Serve with toothpicks that have been arranged in half of orange, lemon or lime.

CHEESE CHILI CUBES

In large mixer bowl, beat until light 8 eggs.

Stir together ½ cup all-purpose flour, 1 tsp. baking powder and ¾ tsp. salt. Add to eggs and mix well.

Fold in:
3 cups (12 ounces) shredded monterey jack cheese
1½ cups (12 ounces) cottage cheese
2 4-ounce cans mild green chillies, drained, seeded and chopped.

Turn into greased 9x9x2-inch baking dish. Bake in 350 degree oven for 40 minutes. Remove from oven; let stand 10 minutes. Cut in small squares; serve hot. Makes 3 to 4 dozen appetizers.

HOT APPLE PUNCH

In saucepan combine:
3 cups apple cider
¼ cup sugar
3 inches stick cinnamon
6 whole cloves
Peel of ¼ lemon, cut in strips

Bring to boiling, stirring until sugar dissolves. Simmer uncovered, for 15 minutes; strain to remove spices and peel.

Add:
1 4/5-quart bottle dry white wine (optional) or 1½ 32 oz. bottles of lemon-lime soft drink or 48 oz. ginger ale

Heat thoroughly but do not boil. Serve in preheated mugs. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

PEPPERMINT CREAMS

Combine: 1 pound confectioner's sugar, 1 tbsp. lemon juice, 1 egg white and ½ tsp. peppermint extract.

Beat well until smooth. Dough may be divided and tinted with a few drops of green food coloring in one batch, red in the other, and white for a third. Knead several times on a board lightly dusted with powdered sugar. Add tiny amounts of lemon juice or water if the dough begins to dry out. Knead only slightly if a marble-ized effect is desired. Roll out until ¼-inch thick. Cut into desired shapes with knife or tiny cutters or roll in palm until the size of walnuts. Refrigerate for 24 hours, then pack into a covered container with waxed paper in between. Store in a cool place for up to one month. Makes about one pound.

SAUSAGE AND EGG BRUNCH PIE

Brown ½ pound bulk sausage. Drain and reserve drippings.

Cook in drippings until tender ¼ cup green pepper finely chopped and ¼ cup finely chopped onion.

Add and cook until soft 1 12-ounce package frozen hash brown potatoes. Shape into pie shell in 10-inch pie pan.

Combine in mixing bowl: 8 eggs and ¼ cup half-and-half. Beat well.

Add to egg mixture cooked sausage and salt and pepper to taste. Pour over potatoes and bake at 350 degrees for 25 minutes. Yield: 6-8 servings.

SOUR CREAM ASPARAGUS

Cook according to package directions and drain 2 10-ounce packages frozen asparagus.

Combine in saucepan and heat slow, but do not boil: 1 pint dairy sour cream, ½ cup Parmesan cheese, 2 tsps. lemon juice and 1 tsp. salt.

Arrange asparagus on platter and top with cream sauce. Sprinkle with ½ cup toasted, sliced almonds. Yield: 8 servings.

CATHEDRAL WINDOW HOLIDAY BARS

In mixing bowl, cream 1 cup margarine, 1 cup brown sugar and two eggs.

When mixture is light and fluffy, add 2 cups flour and ½ tsp. salt.

Beat until smooth and spread in ungreased 13x9-inch pan. Bake in 350 degree oven for 25 minutes. Cool.

In 3-quart saucepan, melt 2 4-ounce packages sweet chocolate and ½ cup margarine. Remove from heat. Stir in 2 cups powdered sugar and 2 eggs, lightly beaten. Beat until smooth. Fold in 1-10½ ounce bag flavored miniature marshmallows and 1 cup chopped pecans.

Spread mixture over cookie base. Chill at least 2 hours. Cut into bars. Store, covered, in refrigerator. Makes 32 bars.

PEANUT BUTTER DIVINITY

In saucepan combine 2½ cups sugar, ½ cup corn syrup and ½ cup water. Bring to a boil and cook to a hard ball stage (260 degrees), stirring only until sugar dissolves.

In large bowl beat until stiff peaks form 2 egg whites. Gradually pour syrup over egg whites, beating at high speed.

Add and beat until candy holds its shape (3-4 minutes) ½ cup chunky peanut butter.

DATE-NUT CAKE ROLL

In saucepan, combine:
1 cup pitted whole dates, snipped
1 cup water
¼ cup water
¼ cup sugar
⅛ tsp. salt

Bring to a boil then cook and stir over low heat until thick, about 4 minutes. Remove from heat and allow to cool at room temperature.

In mixing bowl beat for 5 minutes 3 eggs. Gradually add ½ cup sugar.

In separate bowl, combine 1 cup flour, 1 tsp. baking powder, ½ tsp. allspice and ½ tsp. salt.

Combine flour mixture with eggs. Fold in date mixture. Spread in a greased and floured 15x10x1-inch jelly roll pan. Top with ¾ cup chopped walnuts.

Bake at 375 degrees for 12-15 minutes. Turn out onto towel that has been sprinkled with powdered sugar. Starting at narrow end, roll up cake and towel together. Allow to cool. Unroll and spread with Cream Cheese Filling. Reroll and chill. Makes about 10 servings.

CREAM CHEESE FILLING

Beat together: 2 3-ounce packages cream cheese, 4 tbsps. butter and ½ tsp. vanilla. Slowly add 1 cup sifted powdered sugar.

PARMESAN STICKS

Separate into four rectangles 1-8 oz. can refrigerated crescent rolls. Sprinkle both sides of each rectangle with ¾ cup grated Parmesan cheese.

On an unfloured surface, roll each rectangle into a 10x5-inch rectangle. Cut into six lengthwise strips; cut each strip in half crosswise. Twist strips; place on greased cookie sheet. Bake at 375 degrees for 8 to 10 minutes. Makes about 4 dozen.

PISTACHIO-PINEAPPLE SALAD

In large bowl combine:
1 large can crushed pineapple
1 package pistachip pudding mix
1 9-ounce package whipped topping
½ cup chopped pecans
1 cup miniature marshmallows

Stir and refrigerate at least 1 hour before serving. Keeps well. Serves 10-12.

Create these for holidays

The Christmas holiday season seems to bring out the creativity in all of us as well as an even deeper appreciation of our friends and family ties.

Below is two suggestions from Janice Rabenaldt, a Midland consumer information specialist for making a reindeer and horse and an apple centerpiece. Both are easy and fast to make as well as lots of fun.

SUPPLIES:
1 or 2 brown socks (head)
⅛ yd. tassel trim (brow band)
8½ yds. flat trim (bridle and reins)
Small piece red felt (mouth)
Medium piece brown felt (ears)
2 buttons or felt (eyes)
Thread
Mop handle (body)
Stuffing
For deer—pipe cleaners (antlers)
1 ball fringe (nose)
bells
For horse—yarn (mane)

Stuff one sock, then pull other sock over top. Arrange stick in stuffing. Sew on features, bridle and mane for antlers. Sew on one side of reins, loop trim over stick to secure sock onto stick. Then sew to other side of bridle, leaving free slack for a rein.

APPLE CENTERPIECE

SUPPLIES:
20-24 apples
2 rolls of red (or green) cellophane string
Cardboard, pliable for cone stiff for base
2" candle
Miscellaneous greenery

Make cone out of cardboard. Staple together. Cover apples with cellophane (10" squares), tie with long piece of string. Using ice pick, push strings through cone, tying tightly on inside. Tie bottom row, then put next row on top. Arrange strings to inside so they don't show. Put candle in top of cone. Arrange greenery in between apples. Cover round base with foil paper.

Variation: Use doves, bows or pine cones.

Jerry Perales, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Martinez, San Antonio, married Delores G. Rodriguez, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Rodriguez, 1301 S. Webster St., at 11 a.m. Saturday in Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church.

The Rev. Charles Hassenauer performed the double ring ceremony. Enriqueta Fierro was the organist.

The bride was presented in marriage by her father. She wore a formal gown of white polyester styled with a high waistline trimmed with seed pearls. The pearls also trimmed the V neckline. She had a full-length veil attached to a headpiece accented with seed pearls. She carried a bouquet of white seed pearls and crystals.

Patricia Martinez of San Antonio, sister of the bridegroom, and Diane Veloz were the flower girls. Sandra Rodriguez, sister of the bride, was ring bearer. The train bearers were Ricky Rodriguez, brother of the bride, and Debra Perez, niece of the bridegroom.

Mrs. Grace Rayos, cousin of the bridegroom, was the matron of honor. Orfa Torres was maid of honor. The best man was Rene Rayos.

Other attendants to the couple were Mr. and Mrs. Ramon Cano, Mr. and Mrs. Ramon Chavez, Mr. and Mrs. Rito Maldonado, Mr. and Mrs. Al Rodriguez, Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Sosa, Mr. and Mrs. George A. Veloz, Mr. and Mrs. Jesus Moreno, Mr. and Mrs. Danny Borrego, Mr. and Mrs. Manuel Veloz, Mr. and Mrs. Manuel Veloz Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Sanchez, Mr. and Mrs. Lucky Terrazas.

Also Mr. and Mrs. Enrique Garza, Mr. and Mrs. Lupe Padilla, Mr. and Mrs. Wayburn Glenn, Mr. and Mrs. Milo Magallanes, Mr. and Mrs. Arnulfo Herrera, Mr. and Mrs. Nacho Villa, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Buenilos, Leta Stovall and Kenneth Cunningham, Susie Olgin and Oscar Rubio, Rosie Olgin and Jessie Valdez, Rachel Duran and Rudy Rodriguez, Lena Jakel and Alfred Flores, Nestoria Mendez and John Villereal.

And P. J. Rodriguez and Edgar Alvarez, Mary Garva and Jimmy Bermea, Patsy Armendadez and Guz Arrquao, Linda Padilla and Silver Bernal, Rita Gonzales and Reben Gonzales, Sylvia Lopez and Louis Rodriguez, Belinda Alvarez and Ricky Rayos, Mary Lou Hernandez and Chuoy Del Leon, Belinda Arrquao and Raymond Romero, Anita Padilla and Robert Padilla, Jolene Hinojos and Robert Hinojos.

Mrs. Jerry Perales

A reception was held in the Parish Hall of the church before the couple left on a trip to Hawaii. They will reside in Midland.

A&M Club schedules Yule party

The Midland A&M Club has set its Christmas party for Dec. 16 in the Midland Hilton Ballroom.

Hors d'oeuvres will be served beginning at 8 p.m. and music for dancing will be provided by SPYCE, a band from Dallas, from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m.

Tickets for the event can be purchased from Ron Brice by dialing 697-3191 or 694-2649.

Baptist church setting

Crestview Baptist Church was the setting for the marriage at 2 p.m. Saturday of Virginia Sue Reynolds and Gregory William Larsen. The Rev. Kenneth James performed the double ring ceremony.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Harlan Reynolds of 2333 Siesta Lane and Mr. and Mrs. William Larsen of 2103 Ward St.

When presented in marriage by her father, the bride wore an A-line silhouette of sheer bridal crepe and Venise laces. The fitted Empire bodice was enhanced with a contoured high-rise lace neckline. The bishop sleeves were gathered to deep lace trimmed cuffs. The A-line skirt was accented with wide Venise lace overlay marking a center panel and framing the train in back. A Dior bow enhanced the waistline above the chapel train. Her fingertip veil, bouffant of French illusion, was gathered to a matching lace and pearl Camelot headpiece. She carried a cascade of white roses, stephanotis and baby's breath.

The maid of honor was Debra Reynolds, sister of the bride. Denise Davis, cousin of the bride, and Sharon Wright were bridesmaids. The flower girl was Stephanie Worley.

David Larsen, brother of the bridegroom, was best man. The groomsmen were Kevin and Roger Larsen, brothers of the bridegroom. Clay Burns of Roscoe was the ring bearer.

Guests were ushered by Mark Reynolds, brother of the bride, and Jeff Clampitt.

Mrs. Gregory William Larsen

Mrs. Jack Schuler was the organist, and the vocalists were Tye and Linda Morris.

The reception was held in the church's Fellowship Hall.

The couple will reside at 501 W. Louisiana St..

Lancaster Center slates open house, bake sale

Lancaster Garden Center-Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Indiana St., will have an open house in the center's upstairs' area from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Wednesday.

The annual major ways and means project, a bake sale and bazaar will be held downstairs during the same hours.

Virginia Gilbert and her committee will be in charge of refreshments. Virginia Lyle and her committee will make new decorations for a Christmas tree. Susie Hitchcock will be in charge of the erection of the tree.

Members of all participating clubs and friends will have baked goods, casseroles, craft items and other items for the sale. There also will be African violets and other plants from the center's greenhouse.

Mrs. W. L. Drake is coordinator of the center. Members of participating clubs volunteer at the center to assist Midlanders with horticulture and flower arranging problems.

Seminars held in the center are co-sponsored by the county extension agent and are open to the public, free of charge.

Drop-in guests are no problem to a hostess with a well-stocked pantry like this, plus a few judicious perishables in the refrigerator, a pint or two of sour cream, light cream, and ham, beef and poultry in the freezer. (Copley News Photo)

Plan ahead to beat those drop-in guest blues

By MARJORIE RICE
Copley News Service

The unexpected dinner guest.

We've all been faced with them.

The way to avoid last-minute races to the take-out chicken place is to have quick-to-prepare food on hand — a cache of cans, jars and standard condiments you can whip up in a few minutes.

If it's just what you're after, a well-stocked cupboard, like the pictured, and a few judicious perishables in the refrigerator can provide a feast in minutes.

Include in the cache some canned sardines in various sauces; some smoked oysters and clams; jars of anchovies, pimientos, olives, hearts of palm, marinated artichokes and other delicacies for arrangement on a tray. (You don't need many — especially if they act as tiny toppers on more inexpensive slices of cheese on crackers.)

Other items to have on hand (you may need a padlock to keep them away from family nibblers) are cans of shrimp, crab and clams (for instant dips, soups and fillings for crepes), frozen cocktail breads and some sweet butter in the freezer.

And there's nothing to beat the egg for an on-hand dinner that can range from plain omelet to stunning souffle.

So take stock of your stocks of food — do a little judicious shopping (pick up a can or two of party nibbles or "bash cache" staples with each week's groceries for less-painful purchasing) — and don't be afraid to answer the doorbell. You're ready for any drop-in company.

SARDINES AND EGGS

One and one-half cups white vinegar
1 cup water
Two-thirds cup sugar
2 (3.75-oz. each) cans sardines (packed in oil)
One-fourth cup sliced carrots
1 large red onion, sliced
2 bay leaves
2 tsps. mustard seeds
2 tsps. whole allspice
One-fourth-inch slice ginger root
1 (8-oz.) jar whole pickled beets
6 hard-cooked eggs

Bring vinegar, water and sugar to a boil. Cool. Alternate sardines, carrots, onions, spices, beets and cooled, shelled eggs, in a one-and-one-half-quart jar. Pour vinegar mixture over all, adding more vinegar if necessary to cover. Cover tightly; refrigerate at least three days before serving.

PICKLED SPICED EGGS

16 hard-cooked eggs, cooled and shelled
1 qt. white distilled vinegar
4 dried red chili peppers, seeded
1 tbsp. mixed pickling spices
1 tsp. each, black peppercorns, salt and mustard seeds

Pack eggs in two-quart jars. Combine vinegar, peppers, pickling spices, peppercorns, salt and mustard seeds in saucepan; bring to boil; simmer, uncovered, 15 minutes. Pour over eggs, seal, let cool and chill. Refrigerate two days before serving. Makes 16 spiced eggs.

Garment industry moving to Texas

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The garment industry — as well as others — is leaving the northeast for the Sun Belt, a University of Texas reseacher reports.

Employment in the apparel industry in Texas has increased 39.2 percent in the past 10 years, writes Carol Bennett of the Bureau of Business Research in the new issue of "Texas Business Review."

Out of a national total of 1,299,000 apparel workers, more than 72,400 are employed in Texas.

The growth of the industry in Texas, however, "represents more of a catching-up to the U.S. average than a state specialization at this time. Currently apparel manufacturing employs about 2.3 percent of the labor force both in Texas and in the nation," she said.

The peak employment year for apparel manufacturing both nationally and in Texas was 1973, Mrs. Bennett said, but the dip since then "can be explained by the downturn of the economy in general, the closing of a few very large plants, and in one case the lingering effects of labor disruptions, rather than by any long-term indications of reduced profitability of the Texas apparel industry."

"The apparel industry has always been attracted to large population centers," she said, "and part of the growth of this industry in Texas can be attributed to the large increases in population in the South in recent years.

DEAR ABBY

He wants free marriage

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am 41 and Mel is 44. We've been married for 20 years and have three nice children—one is still at home. We have no money problems and no sex problems, but all of a sudden Mel says he wants to be "free." No divorce, mind you, he just wants to be free to come and go as he pleases, so he rented an apartment and bought new furniture. I even helped him move.

He was gone for a week, then he came home. He said he missed our dog.

I prayed night and day that he'd stay home, but three days later he went back to the apartment for the weekend.

I told him I loved him and begged him to give up the apartment. He said he liked me as a person, but he didn't think it was "love." Also, he didn't want to hurt me, but he had to be "free."

I don't think there's another woman. (There's hardly enough for me.) I'm so confused, it's tearing me apart. What should I do?—PART-TIME WIFE

DEAR PART-TIME: Marriage is a full-time commitment with no time off for good (or bad) behavior. If your husband wants to be "free," give him his freedom (legally) and you take yours. If the dog dies, he'll have nothing to come home for.

DEAR ABBY: I met this great looking man when I was hunting for a house to buy. (He's a real estate agent.) I liked everything about him. He's not married and neither am I. I finally bought a house through him.

My question: How do I let him know I would like to go out with him?

The escrow just closed and there is no reason for him to come around anymore.—IN THE MARKET

DEAR IN: You may be "in the market," but I think you're out of luck—unless the real estate agent has a real interest in you.

DEAR ABBY: My girlfriend's husband got on the wrong side of the law and might have to spend some time in prison.

My friend will be living all alone in a trailer, and she is very much pregnant. I want to go and stay with her at least until her baby is born. I know she needs me.

She's my dearest friend. She and her husband took me in when I really needed it. They proved to be true friends, and I will never forget it.

My problem is my boyfriend. He says, "Forget them— —they aren't worth bothering about."

He's never met the husband, and he met my girlfriend only once.

What should I do? I love my boyfriend, but I feel I owe my girlfriend something.—NEEDS ADVICE

DEAR NEEDS: Tell your boyfriend that you are quite capable of determining what your friends are "worth"—and they are worth a lot to you. Then go help your girlfriend in her time of need.

CONFIDENTIAL TO "LEARNED THE HARD WAY" IN WATONGA, OKLA.: There's hardly a man alive who couldn't retire comfortably in his old age if he could sell his experience for what it cost him.

If you feel left out and lonely, or wish you knew how to get people to like you, my new booklet, "How to Be Popular" You're Never Too Young or Too Old," is for you. Send $1 along with a long, self-addressed stamped (24 cents) envelope to Dear Abby in care of this newspaper.

The Wine Cellar
by Sam Day

You might have seen the word "chateau" on a wine label and envisioned a large mansion standing amidst fertile vineyards. You might have the right image, but the chateau referred to might just be a farmhouse attached to the vineyard by ownership. What is important though is that, by French law, the chateau label guarantees that the wine was grown and bottled in a certain vineyard, and has not been cut with inferior grapes.

And you might find the solution to your gift-giving problems at IMPERIAL LIQUORS, 3209 W. Wadley, 694-4256. We feature a full selection of wines and distilled spirits, many attractively packaged for Xmas, and for those special wine buffs on your list, see Kerry; our wineologist for assistance in choosing a special wine. May we be among the first to wish you Merry Christmas and a joyous holiday season. Open 10-9 Mon-Sat.

WINE WISDOM:

Program attacks sex bias

ITHACA, N.Y. (AP) — A program aimed at reducing sex stereotyping in junior and senior high schools in New York State has begun at the N.Y. State College of Human Ecology, Cornell University.

The teams, working under the direction of Charlotte J. Farris, professor of community service education, will teach the teachers to be alert to their own biases and to examine stereotyping in books, films and other classroom materials.

Needlepointer upset about lack of male designs

By ERICA WILSON

DEAR MS. WILSON: I'm a retired man, and as a hobby I became interested in needlepoint, along with the rest of my family—my wife, daughter and sister. What I'm looking for is an American ship, like a Yankee Clipper or "Old Ironsides." How about the Tall Ships? A lot of men are doing needlehoint these days and there should be more masiuline designs for us to choose from. The choices are pathetic—John Hartman, Glendale, N.Y.

Dear Mr. HARTMAN: You're absolutely right about the lack of masculine designs in stitchery. I read an article recently entitled "Executive Needlepoint," in which the male author complained about the lack of designs, so you're not alone. As I've said before, hearts and flowers don't often sit well with a meat and potatoes man.

During the Bicentennial celebration, my husband took masses of color photos of the Tall Ships, and when I saw them I had all sorts of fabulous inspiration for designs. At the rate I'm going, however, they might finally find their way to paper and then to canvas in time for the Tricentennial.

But don't abandon the idea of stitching the Tall Ships—it's a good one. Why don't you write to a newspaper that might have covered the event—one in Newport, Boston or New York? I'm sure they'd have some photos for sale at reasonable prices. Then it would be a simple matter to find an artist friend to interpret the photo on canvas. Better still, You can do it yourself.

NEEDLEPLAY

Get some graph paper and do a simplistic design of the ships on it—then transfer it onto canvas, using the squares of the graph paper to count out onto the squares of the canvas. If the idea of working on graph paper makes you pale (though I doubt it will), most male needleworkers I've met have such orderly, meticulous, mathematical minds!), you can have the transferring done professionally. With the art of "stitching" photos, more and more companies are blossoming forth. There's one in Florida that sent me samples of their work: Needle Pix, P.O. Box 11679, Ft. Lauderdale, Fla. 33339. If you'd rather have the work done closer to home, inquire at your local needlework store. I've heard that there's even a "computer method" of transferring photos, where each nuance of shading is a different symbol on the computer.

If you prefer stitching as the sailors did in times gone by, using linen, wool and cotton threads, You could really have a grand time doing your Tall Ships—working the hull in chain stitches and split stitches in wools, cutting out pieces of white linen for sails and padding them with white cotton. Then stretch long threads of silk across on top for the rigging. You will have to mount the whole thing in stretcher frames before you begin so that you can "paint" your needlework picture—sparkling green and blue satin stitches for a sunny sea with white French knots for the cresting waves. Can you wait to begin?

Women marines not clamoring for combat duty

By KIP COOPER
Copley News Service

Women Marines are not exactly clamoring at the commandant's door for the privilege of carrying arms in combat.

In a worldwide poll conducted for the Marine Corps by a civilian research company, less than a third of women Marines said yes to the question, "Do you think women should be assigned to combat?"

Only 27 per cent of male Marines felt that women should be assigned to combat.

Women Marines feel they have other problems in the rough male world of the nation's premiere fighting force.

How does a woman fare in such a fighting force?

But being women dedicated to being good Marines, they are impressing the men with their professionalism and grinding them down to equal size.

They say the bumps are being leveled out and the hills are not as steep.

They expanded on questions asked by the research institute, which has not yet published its findings. Responses to the questions have been compiled in percentages with no amplifying data yet available publicly.

The questions asked of women and male Marines were:

1. Do you think women should be assigned to combat?

2. Do you think women should be given assignments overseas during peacetime just like men?

3. Of women only. Have you had any special problems in the Marine Corps just because you are a woman?

4. Of men only. Do you think wonen Marines have any special problems in the Marine Corps because they are women?

At Camp Pendleton, the women interviewed were unanimous in their belief that combat is a man's job.

Lt. Laurel Hall, 26, Holland, Mich., says that the American public "is not ready to see its women go out and get blown all over the face of the earth."

But Hall maintains that if her unit or company "mounts out" she should be able to go with it whether it is going into combat or just going across the street.

"I don't want to give the impression that I want to go out and become a tanker or be a mortar man; but I don't want to be left here if my unit moves," she said.

"I don't want to have to go out and shoot anybody and I agree with the others that women are not physically capable at this time. They have not been trained to go out and hump a hill."

Lt. Roxanne Waters, 26, Norfolk, Va., also said she would go with her unit if it were ordered out but feels she should be doing the same job she now does, that of being legal officer in the Headquarters and Service Battalion.

"I don't think your job (women) should be carrying an M-16 rifle," she said.

Cpl. Terry Julick, 20, Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, said she believes some women are capable of going into combat but that she is not one of them.

"I don't think I could go over there and carry a rifle," she said.

"I have been out in the field a couple of times and I don't hack it out there for more than a couple of hours."

She added that, as a journalist, she would go to combat as a Marine Corps correspondent.

Maj. Sally Pritchett, 37, Baltimore, Md., said, "I am not mentally or physically qualified for going into battle carrying a gun. I couldn't hack that. Because of the way I was raised if nothing else."

She receives taste of success

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Kjorina Peterson, 18, who is Utah's Junior Miss, wasn't loafing when she entered the Kodak Junior Miss Photo Awards with three photographs and an essay on bread. Named top winner in the event, she also got the dough: a $1,000 scholarship grant.

Home tour set by area council

STANTON — The Martin County Home Demonstration Council is planning a Christmas Home Tour from 2 to 5 p.m. Dec. 11.

The Stanton homes will be decorated for the Christmas season.

Mrs. N. E. Holloway, chairman, reports tickets now are being sold by council members or they will be available the day of the tour at the Reddy Room of Texas Electric Service Co. or at the homes to be viewed.

Proceeds from the sale of tickets will be used for scholarships for 4-H Club boys and girls.

GEM WISE

KEEP THE CRYSTAL IN CHRISTMAS

The crystal to which I'm referring, of course, is the crystal structure of most gemstones. The sparkle and bright colors of gems make them a natural for Christmas, a holiday whose magic is set off by bright lights and shiny tinsel. May I make a few suggestions for this year's shopping?

Small diamonds in both simple and imaginative designs are still very popular with all ages. Stick pins will shine from ties and lapels this holiday season and even join mufflers in the fight against the winter chill. Watches and rings, chains and pendants, earrings and cuff links, bracelets and anklets, in a broad selection to suit every taste and budget.

This year we're offering a new gift choice. The American Gem Society has just released a breathtakingly beautiful publication called The Birthday Book. It is a permanent calendar in which to list birthdays, anniversaries and other special events. It is also a compendium of some of the finest photograpy in existence of gemstones, mineral specimens and jewelry. This artistic book would be a meaningful accompaniment to a gemstone gift since it covers legend, folklore and points of interest about all the most popular gems. Of course The Birthday Book is a beautiful gift in itself.

Your American Gem Society jeweler is always a fine source for tasteful and beautiful gifts. We at Sam L. Majors try to be especially helpful at Christmas time. Holiday shopping can be incredibly hectic, and if we can simplify matters for you we'll do it.

McClintock to say vows

BRIGHTON, Colo. — Mr. and Mrs. Jack I. Christiansen of Brighton announce the engagement of their daughter, Monica Ann, to Harry Porter McClintock III, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry P. McClintock of Dallas, formerly of Midland.

The couple will be married at 4 p.m. March 11 in Preston Hollow Presbyterian Church, Dallas.

Miss Christiansen is a graduate of Texas Christian University, and is a student at Texas Woman's University. The bridegroom-to-be is a graduate of TCU and is employed in Dallas by Atlantic Richfield Co. He is a member of the Dallas Jaycees.

Paris designer says change never radical

By NINA S. HYDE
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Designing clothes, says Paris couturier Emanuel Ungaro, is like reading Marcel Proust. "Nothing changes very radically. It all comes from "a deep feeling in the soul."

The serious, shy designer, whose client list includes Jacqueline Onassis, Doris Duke, Barone Guy de Rothschild, Deeda Blair, Vicomtesse de Ribes, Madame Hauphouet, Boigny and Bianca Jagger is in Washington to show his spring ready-to-wear collection.

Even the switch from last year's costumery to this year's far simpler styles is mostly a matter of changing accessories, says Ungaro. "The structure is always the same. It may be at one time more voluminous or (as in the coming season) more close to the body. But it is always well planned."

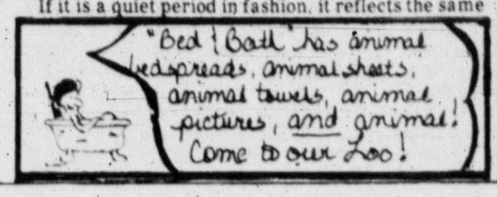

Ungaro's sense of moving gently from one season to the next may take him out of the league of the headline makers, but never out of step with the current mood of clothes. His signature is well established with bright and easy clothes, always in carefully planned print mixtures worked out with his associate, Sonja Knapp.

"I hate boring clothes," he says. "I hate seeing women dressed in a sad way," he says hunching over as if he were bound in too-snug-fitting clothes.

His prints are tamer at the moment than the flamboyant florals and geometrics for which he is well known. "Everyone can make beautiful prints, so I must find a new way," he says; and his "new way" is with subtler colors, quieter patterns, sometimes mixed with solids. "Never sad, never dusty, never boring," he insists.)

If it is a quiet period in fashion, it reflects the same in politics, in music and in art.

"We are in a bizarre situation now," says Ungaro, who describes it as like standing at the top of a mountain and having vertigo. "It is the moment of vacuity. We don't have the courage to face up to the future."

Mystery malady attacks mostly young women

By BOB CORBETT
Copley News Service

New therapies are beginning to take the bite out of a strange and secretive disease that is so vicious it is named after the wolf.

The disease is called systemic lupus erythematosus LE, for short.

The "lupus" is Latin for wolf and it aptly describes the nature of the disease. Its main target is young women of childbearing age. It can attack almost any part of the body. Its end result is usually death.

However, modern medicine is finally beginning to put a leash on this disease, according to Dr. John N. Vaughan, chairman of the Department of Clinical Research at the Scripps Clinic and Research Foundation in La Jolla, Calif.

It used to be that a patient with SLE or lupus didn't live out the year, Vaughan said in an interview.

Now, he said, most patients live at least 10 to 15 years. "At Scripps," he said, "we have patients that we've been following for at least 20 years."

That's not to say that the disease has been conquered by any means. Researchers at Scripps and other medical centers around the world are striving to find new methods of attack. Scripps is currently testing several new drugs they hope will be more specific for the disease and less toxic to the patient.

Part of the problem, according to Vaughan, is the wily nature of the disease. Its cause is unknown. A virus or viruses are suspected, but not proved guilty.

It's also difficult to diagnose, Vaughan said. It's easy to spot when it attacks, he said, but it vanishes much like the wolf into the darkness of the trees during its quiet or remission stages.

Lupus is not one of the glamour diseases. It's, rather, one of a group of "orphan" diseases that don't receive much attention.

And yet, Vaughan said, it is a serious medical problem. Its incidence is estimated at one in every 2,000 to 10,000 women, he said. The disease attacks women preferentially at a 10-to-1 ratio over men, he said.

Typically, he said, the onset of the disease comes between the ages of 15 and 25 years of age, but all women of childbearing age are susceptible. The known incidence of the disease in the United States annually, he said, is 25.7 per million for white females.

The situation for female blacks is three times worse, he said. The incidence here jumps to 75 per million.

As might be expected, the disease causes a great deal of social problems for such women. Questions of marriage, childbearing, dealing with the side effects of drugs, and the ultimate question of a potential early death must be faced.

For medical researchers, the problem is to define the nature of the disease, find ways to deal with it and find a root cause.

Scientists have done a good job in recent years of defining the disease, according to Vaughan. Although it was first identified in the mid-1880s, it has not been until recent years that the complicated nature of lupus has been perceived, he said.

Lupus, he said, is one of a relatively new class of medical problems classed under the heading of "autoimmune diseases," in which the body's defenses against disease actually attack the body itself.

THE WINE DRINKER

By TOM GABLE
Copley News Service

Who are the men behind the labels of California wines, what are their prides and prejudices and how do they compare their wines to those of the great European wine-producing countries?

These questions and many more — including technical questions about such things as malolactic fermentation, types of crushers and fermentation temperature — are answered in "Great Wine Makers of California" (303 pages; $15; Capra Press, Santa Barbara, Calif.), a book featuring 28 separate question-and-answer dialogues conducted by Robert Benson.

The book covers most of the famous California wine makers, from the legendary Andre Tchelistcheff, now in his 70s, to young Richard Forman, who stepped out of enology school and into wine-making fame at Sterling Vineyards. Other names include Martin Ray; Paul Draper of Ridge; Richard Graff of Chalone; Jim Concannon; Karl Wente; Warren Winiarski of Stag's Leap; Joe Heitz; Robert Mondavi; August Sebastiani; Barney Fetzer; and John Parducci.

Tchelistcheff, who also writes the foreword, is a man who almost single-handedly turned around California premium wine making following repeal of Prohibition. His proteges, both direct and indirect, include Lee Stewart, Heitz, Winiarski, Mike Grgich and others. His Beaulieu Vineyards Private Reserve Cabernet Sauvignon has been the wine by which all California wines came to be judged.

In his conversation with Robert Benson, a law professor and wine writer, Tchelistcheff admits that the best wines come from small wineries, and remembers when he produced 16 to 18 types a year, but concentrated on the Private Reserve, then his Chardonnay and Pinot Noir. The others may have suffered, he feels, and he admits to making just three excellent Pinot Noirs in 35 years of work.

Mike Robbins of Spring Mountain says that 10 years ago California Chardonnays were lucky to place one in 10 in a tasting against similar wines from France. Today, "the French are lucky to get more than one in 10."

Joe Heitz, the crusty old Napa Valley wine maker, unloads on labeling, fermentation in wood and small wineries "whose product is crap." John Parducci kicks in a few good words about Mendocino.

There are many words, both critical and praiseworthy, about the various wine-making regions of California, from Temecula to Ukiah.

For those with more than a casual knowledge about wine, "Great Wine Makers of California" offers insights into the technology involved in this otherwise romantic industry, touching on such things as sulfuring, inducing fermentation, stainless-steel tanks, mechanical harvesting, and centrifuging a wine to clean it up, rather than filtering it. Some of the questions and answers do drag on and each chapter is preceded with a presumptuous recommendation of which wine (usually unavailable) to drink while reading. But all in all, it provides an interesting look at the key men behind the revolution now taking place, a revolution often refered to as "The Golden Age of California Wines."

Sorority announces donations, party

The Jane Phillips Sorority met in the Phillips Petroleum building.

Mrs. Paul Hanna, president, presented a number of benevolent and charitable projects to the membership for December participation.

A donation will be made to the Door of Hope Mission and gifts will be purchased for the Girls Club of Odessa. Monthly, members of the sorority visit a local nursing home and provide entertainment and refreshments for all residents and present gifts to each resident who has a birthday during the month.

Mr. and Mrs. F. F. Lovering of 1508 Tanglewood Drive will be host couple to the sorority's annual Christmas party Dec. 15.

Jigsaw lady says come live in her real world

By JO TUBB
Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — At first she looks like a tiny child bent in silent concentration over a gigantic jigsaw puzzle.

Then she looks up and the smile lines deepen, hinting of her 54 years.

"Come in, little one," she says, backing away from her puzzle and extending a smudged hand. "Welcome. Please, welcome to my studio."

The studio and the Italian accent belong to Gemma Taccogna, an artist who works quite happily, thank you, above a store.

The airy room atop a market is the womb of artistic creations that have made the "Gemma" signature famous — and beloved — worldwide.

From it come oil paintings and remarkable tile pieces, door markers, portraits and murals that end up in banks, hotel lobbies and homes.

Other homes splashed with Gemma gems are owned by the likes of Jackie Onassis, Mary Tyler Moore and Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson.

Gemma, who seldom uses her last name, first won fame for her papier-mache several years ago but has concentrated for the last eight years on tiles.

Her jigsaw puzzle, in fact, eventually will be a 20-foot sculpted tile mural that will surround a fireplace in a home.

On a table just beyond a bottle of mineral water draped with a string of garlic, the puzzle pieces lay waiting to be glazed.

They began as a huge slab of clay, which Gemma sculpted and then cut into pieces small enough to fit in one of her five electric kilns.

Each piece was numbered on the back so it could be positioned on the wall in the intended design and color scheme.

The small kilns surprise many studio visitors, some of whom have asked Gemma why she doesn't save a lot of time and just use a big one.

"I like a small kiln for the same reasons a good cook likes a small oven," she answers readily. "I can watch and control each one, and it comes out better.

"I don't even talk about mass production," she adds with a wave of her hand. "I can't even think of it."

Does that mean each of the hundreds of decorated tiles piled in boxes on the floor, lining the stairway, leaning against windows and perched on shelves are the product of Gemma's own hands?

Absolutely, she insists. She has young assistants who help with the chores, but she does the tiles herself. And because they are handmade, each is different in some way.

That individuality is something Gemma appreciates not only in artwork but also in people.

Her interest in people — combined with a knack for teaching and a firm belief in sharing her talent — has resulted in weekly classes for adults.

"Everyone who comes through that door is an important human being," she says of her students. "My classes aren't therapy sessions, but they do include the whole person. And they teach responsibility."

Gemma's art classes incorporate some rules not found in most. The cardinal rule is that students are not allowed to talk about their problems once they enter the studio.

"They must live in the real, in the here and now," the teacher says.

Some lamb cuts can be cheap buy

By The Associated Press

Loin lamb chops are a luxury item out of the reach of many these days, but there are other cuts of this meat that do not cost so much. What's more, they can form the base for a gourmet meal.

Instead of the choice loin, try shoulder chops or lamb steaks. They are not only cheaper, but a good deal meatier than the more expensive cut. And if you like your meat grilled, rare or well done, you are missing something unless you try lamb steaks.

The heaviest supply of lamb comes to the market in the fall, but thanks to the geographically widespread nature of the meat industry today, lamb is now available every month of the year.

The supply of fresh U.S. lamb has been augmented in recent years by supplies of frozen New Zealand and Australian lamb in many parts of this country. I'm told that there are more than 60 million sheep grazing on New Zealand farms, or roughly 20 sheep for every human being in that country. No wonder New Zealand has become the world's prime exporter of lamb.

Imported lamb must pass close inspection to qualify for sale in this country. For instance, lamb in American butcher stores must have been slaughtered at less than 12 months of age.

Because of improved breeding and feeding methods, many animals come to the market today weighing as much as 60 pounds dressed. This larger lamb supplies a better ratio of meat to the bone and can be both lean and tender.

Lance got 'fair' treatment

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. (AP) — Bert Lance, former director of the Office of Management and Budget, says he was treated fairly by the media.

"I don't think that I've really been treated unfairly," Lance told a group of 1,200 students and faculty at West Virginia University on Monday. "I think that in many instances there have been allegations, inaccuracies and things of that type you don't ever see appear in correct substance. But I won't criticize the media."

HOROSCOPE

By CARROLL RIGHTER

(Sun., Dec. 4)

GENERAL TENDENCIES: A good time to consider how you can apply the principles and tenets that mean the most to you. Although you may feel you are not getting ahead fast enough, you can make considerable advance towards a well-organized and detailed course of action that helps you in the future.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Study details of any points you want to get across to others today and you won't be disappointed. Take needed treatment and get more pep.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Use your good judgement and taste and don't rely on hunches that could be erroneous. Loved one is in poor humor, but this changes.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Show more thought for those who live with you and avoid tense situations that might otherwise arise. Take time for meditation that could bring more harmony.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) Show more concentrated effort in you work. Avoid one who could be detrimental to you best interests.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Don't be discouraged if your savings account is small. Study new source of revenue that can quickly build it up. Put economic measures into effect.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) An annoying situation should be handled conscientiously if you are to clear it up nicely. Good time to entertain close friends.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) A friend comes to you for advice. Be sympathetic, but avoid becoming involved.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) If you criticize friends too much you could easily lose them, so be tactful instead. Try to help with their problems.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Pay particular attention to practical affairs and be very precise in handling public matters. Take no risk with your credit.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Study all facts of a new enterprise you want to engage in. A new ally could be troublesome at first. Later it is just the opposite.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Be conscientious in handling obligations and get good results. Be gentle with loved one and relieve tensions, increase happiness.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Be more active where association matters are concerned and get good results. Be more understanding and less critical.

(Mon., Dec. 5)

GENERAL TENDENCIES: It could be difficulat to gain your cherished desires early in the day, but later you will be able to handle matters of great importance. You can easily gain the goodwill of others now.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Study unsettled problems with associates and make long-range plans to have greater abundance in the days ahead.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Use precision in the handling of an important work assignment. Take greater interest in a civic matter and get good results.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Plan some time for recreation so that you relieve tenseness and be happier with loved one. Keep out of trouble.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July21) Handle business matters early in the day and get excellent results. Show others you are an excellent citizen.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Not a good time to bring up controversial subject with allies. Show more appreciation for you relatives and friends.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Put your financial affairs in better order so you can make proper gains in the future. Avoid one who is detrimental to your progress.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Make plans to go after your aims in a most positive fashion and get excellent results. The evening can be fine in the company of congenials.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Allow extra time for garnering the data you need to get ahead in career matters. An adviser can give suggestions you need.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Be sure to help a friend who is having difficult problems at this time. Use modern methods to gain an important aim.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) A distressing situation should be handled in a most clever and unusual way to gain your objectives. Be logical.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) A new project needs more study before putting it in operation. Be sure to use extreme care in motion today. Express happiness.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Study your obligations well and you will know how to handle them more efficiently. Take no risks in handling money matters.

Couples reveal wedding plans

DENNINGTON-MASSEY

CLOVIS N.M.—Mr. and Mrs. Carrel Dennington of Clovis announce the engagement of their daughter, Alice Diane, to Richard Wayne Massey, son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard S. Massey of 2804 W. Michigan St., Midland, Tex.

The wedding is slated for 5:30 p.m. Jan. 7 in the Echols Church of Christ in Clovis.

Miss Dennington attends Eastern New Mexico State University in Portales. Her fiance attended New Mexico Junior College and Eastern New Mexico State University and is employed by Tom Mandry Electric in Lubbock, Tex.

CROOK-KLATT

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Randle Crook of 2818 Stutz St. announce the engagement of their daughter, Jenny Lee, to Raymond Michael Klatt, son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond A. Klatt of Lubbock.

The wedding is planned for 4 p.m. Jan. 28 in Redeemer Lutheran Church in Lubbock.

The bride-elect is a December graduate of Texas Tech University, where she received a bachelor of science degree in education (deaf education). She is president of the American Organization for the Education of the Hearing Impaired. Her fiance attended Lubbock Christian College and Tech. He is employed in Lubbock by Tex-Pack.

WOODS-GRACE

Mrs. George W. Riggs of 2101 Butternut Lane announces the engagement of her daughter, Lescia D. Woods, to Daniel Lee Grace, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Grace of Houston.

The couple plans to be married at 6 p.m. Jan. 7 in Mt. Calvary Missionary Baptist Church.

Miss Woods received a bachelor of science degree in elementary education from Texas Tech University. She is a member of the Texas State Teachers Association, Delta Sigma Theta sorority and is representative to the Panhellenic Association. Her fiance served with the U.S. Air Force and is employed by Cameron Steel Co.

SMITH-WAMBAUGH

DALLAS — Mr. and Mrs. Albert Merle Smith of Dallas announce the engagement of their daughter, Elizabeth Diane, to William Charles Wambaugh, son of Mr. and Mrs. Donald C. Wambaugh of 2606 Lockheed St., Midland.

The wedding will be at 8 p.m. June 17 in Dallas.

Miss Smith was graduated from Texas Tech University, where she was a member of Gamma Phi Beta sorority. She is a teacher in the Lancaster public schools. Her fiance attended Vanderbilt University and was graduated from Tech. He is attending Baylor Dental School and is a member of Beta Theta Pi social fraternity and Delta Sigma Delta, dental fraternity.

Give clothes new life by recycling them

NEW YORK (AP) — Stop! Don't discard that minicoat hanging in your closet. Or the dress that's out of style. Or the skirt you haven't worn since it got too tight.

Clothes that don't fit your current figure or the current fashion can be reworked and restyled for more wear and enjoyment, says Fenya Crown, who tells "How To Recycle Old Clothes into New Fashions" in her new book by that title.

"It's not a question of making do — you could wear an unstylish outfit till it's falling apart and not get arrested," the former designer said in an interview. "The idea is to have fun with your clothes.

"It's a creative outlet in addition to saving money, which most of us need to do," she adds, "and it's a way to continue to wear clothes that you have a sentimental attachment for or you feel good in."

All it takes, she explains, is basic sewing skills and the ability to use a pattern, plus a supply of trimmings saved from discarded garments — buttons, lace, ruffles from petticoats, felt from hats, ribbons, braid, beading. Even the good parts of such household items as tablecloths come in handy.

"Look at linings, especially all-silk linings in really old clothes that are the kind of silk you couldn't even buy today," she advises. "If the lining is in good condition it can be very useful."

Ms. Crown suggests an easy way to make a skirt from a Aline minidress with long sleeves. All it involves, since the sleeves will be about as long as the dress, is ripping the seams, converting the sleeve material into side panels to make the skirt wide enough, making the waistline where the armholes were and using a drawstring at the waist.

In lengthening skirts Mrs. Crown favors lengthening from the top — that is putting a yoke of some contrasting material on the skirt, rather than dropping the hem, which "always makes a mark and I don't like putting braid on to cover the mark."

"You could also put in bands of contrasting fabric throughout the skirt, or use ribbons between sections to lengthen a summer skirt, or even combine two or three miniskirts into one longer one by putting them in tiers," she suggests.

"Today, when stripes, plain and checks are all mixed up, almost any combinations are suitable," she notes. "Imitation suede goes well with wool, velveteen with wool or synthetics; pique goes with just about anything for summer."

If you don't trust your color sense, remember black and white combine well with winter colors and beige and white go with summer garments, she points out.

For widening skirts, she suggests inserting grosgrain ribbon as an expansion method along the seams for a tuxedo look or, perhaps for a dressy skirt, "you can slice it up as much as you need to, and use lace insertions."

AT WIT'S END

Only telephone poses threat to Americans

By ERMA BOMBECK

Americans aren't intimidated anymore by authority, big business, or strong unions.

But let a telephone ring and everything stops.

On television the other night, I watched a love scene that was so torrid my kids suggested I leave the room. As the couple hungrily clung to one another, shutting out all reason and giving way to animal lust, the phone rang. The man dropped the woman like a bad habit and said, "I'll get it."

I've seen war movies where men will be engaged in a full-scale battle for their lives. As mortar shells explode, tanks squeak along, artillery thunders, guns crack and aircraft roars, a phone will ring. Everyone hears it and freezes with anticipation.

Instinctively, one poor infantryman will crawl on his stomach for 500 yards, dodging mines and bullets to answer it. In one flick I actually heard the guy yell down to a foxhole, "Hey Capt'n ... it's for you." (Wouldn't they feel like a fool if it was a wrong number?)

One evening when I was taking out the garbage cans I was at the end of the drive when I heard the phone ring in the house. Instinctively, I dropped the cans and as they rolled into the street, I collided with a garden hose in the garage, spiked a small child, knocked over a kitchen chair and called the light switch an obscene name. When I realized whomever had hung up, I said aloud, "I don't know who you are, or where you are, but someday, Mr. Three-ring-a-dings, we'll meet, and when we do, I'm going to fix it so your fingers will never walk through the yellow pages again."

A few years ago, I discovered another strange phenomenon about the phone. Not only did its ring make our heart beat faster and bring us to our feet, but the phone always knew when we sat down to dinner and alerted everyone within our radius. I tried rattling dishes around 4:00 in the afternoon in an effort to fool it, but the phone was too smart. It rang only when we sat down to eat.

We made a gutsy stand. We decided not to answer the phone during the dinner hour. That night we sat at the table.

Finally, I grabbed the phone and called the operator to find out what was wrong.

You see? The phone even has ways of making you talk!

St. Luke's UMW inducts 1978 officers at holiday dinner

St. Luke's United Methodist Women installed officers for 1978 at a "Holiday Festival" dinner held in the church's Fellowship Hall.

The program also included a pledge service and the awarding of three special UMW memberships. Special guests at the dinner were St. Luke's high school senior girls.

Mrs. Edwin C. Lookabaugh, 1977 president, conducted the installation of: Mrs. Jack Monzingo, president; Mrs. Henry Krusekopf, vice president; Mrs. Willard Daniels, secretary; Mrs. G. R. Woods, treasurer.

Mission coordinators for the new year are Mrs. Henry C. Libby, Christian personhood; Mrs. John Terry, Christian global concerns; Mrs. Claud W. Slover, Christian social involvement; Mrs. B. H. Kounse, supportive community.

Secretary of program resources is Mrs. O. D. Bretches. Chairperson of the nominations committee is Mrs. Don Husman, and for the committee on membership, Mrs. J.W. Gardner.

Publicity chairperson is Mrs. Charles Peek, and yearbook chairpersons are Mrs. Riley Relaford and Mrs. Lookabaugh. The wedding hostess is Mrs. Royce McClure.

Chairpersons for local church responsibilities are Mrs. Lookabaugh and Mrs. Bill Murrah.

Representative to the Church Women United is Mrs. Charles Davis. Terrace Gardens Home chairperson is Mrs. Eldon Warner.

Circle chairpersons are Mrs. John Foster, Mrs. Lookabaugh, Mrs. Gerald Oakes, Mrs. Scott Hickman, Mrs. Ennis Hutchinson. Co-chairpersons of the circles are Mrs. John L. Moseley, Mrs. Melba Knipling, Mrs. Howard Mills and Mrs. Henry Anderle.

Presented with the special UMW memberships were Mrs. Foster, Mrs. Slover and Mrs. Hickman. Making the presentations were Mrs. Hugh McCullough and Mrs. Krusekopf.

Senior girls receiving recognition certificates were Linne, Kim Biggs, Karen Bonner. Mrs. Libby made the presentations.

Mrs. Harry Tipton, accompanied by Beth Murrah and Ellen Leggott, played Christmas music for the program. Mrs. Burgin Watkins presented a devotional, "The Gift of Prayer."

Co-ordinator and mistress of ceremonies for the program was Mrs. Daniels. The pledge service was conducted by Mrs. Slover.

New careers for woman

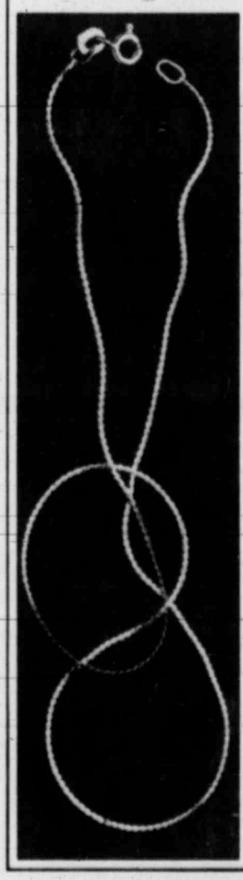

NEW YORK (AP) — The City University of New York Graduate Center is one of 10 schools nationwide selected by the National Science Foundation to offer a program designed to get more women working as scientists.

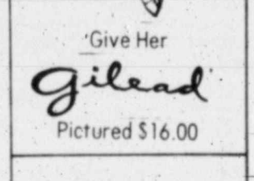

The tuition-free program is aimed at women who graduated between 1962 and 1975 with either a bachelor's or master's degree in the physical or social sciences.

VISIBLE WOMAN

Bitter child custody battles leave scars

By JANET LOWE
Copley News Service

Early one morning there came a knock on the door. It was a former neighbor. She and her husband had moved away, and subsequently been divorced.

It was a surprise to see her, at this time of the morning especially. With her was a private detective. They were calling on everyone the couple had known, hoping to locate the ex-husband and their daughter whom he had kidnapped.

Nobody knows how many child snatchings go on each year by parents. Arnold Miller, founder of Children's Rights, Inc., estimates there are about 100,000 cases annually but some officials say it is closer to 25,000.

Since in many states, despite court custody decrees, taking your own child is not a crime, the official numbers may never be known.

Though it is not uncommon for mothers to disappear with their children, in every instance I've personally known, the abductor has been the father.

The reasons for their actions vary. In one case, the wife had moved to another state, and the father felt he didn't see enough of the children. In a second, the husband genuinely felt the mother was unfit, though he had been unable to prove it in court. In a third case, the child snatching arose as retaliation against the divorce itself.

Much of the time it will be the lot of the mother to live with the aftermath of child abduction, since she is more likely to have legal custody in the first place.

For Ethel J., a mother from Colorado, the removal from school of her two boys by their father was the beginning of a long and costly drama. Though the father lived in the same town and had regular visitations, he wanted full custody. He was also deeply bitter over the divorce.

In the beginning, Ethel thought her divorce decree and custody papers were her best defense. She soon learned she was mistaken.

Though she was able to stop issuance of passports and keep the children within the country, she could not get them back. The father had taken them to a state where, if children are accompanied by a blood relative, they are not considered kidnapped.

Eventually the father did return with the children, but by then had reinstated the battle in the courts.

Because of loopholes and vagaries of the law, the case dragged on for years. A mechanic's lien was placed on Ethel J.'s home and her wages garnisheed for attorney's fees. Finally both Ethel and her funds were exhausted.

She's seldom been able to see her children, and when she does, it's a nightmare of emotions. Her only hope now is that when the children reach maturity, she will be able to establish a normal, loving relationship.

Children's Rights, Inc., is one of several new organizations for parents like Ethel J. They lobby for state and federal reforms that give clout to custody agreements. Ethel J. feels the laws should be tightened, but isn't convinced it will solve all problems.

"A custody agreement," she says, "is only as good as the two parents involved in it."

Competition shows trends in interior furnishings

By The Associated Press

Judging the seventh annual awards presented by the Resources Council-National Association of Interior Furnishings, manufacturers and suppliers serving the industry, offers a good review of what the industry is up to.

More than 200 nominees were represented in entries that included those from well-known studios — Jack Lenor Larsen, Abraham-Zumsteg, Kirk-Brummel, Karl Mann, George Nelson, Juan Montoya, Harvey Probber — and many other aspirants.

After comparison, conjecture and compromise, crystal "Roscoes," the industry's new Oscar-like awards, were earmarked for 24 of the entries.

In the lamp category, Barbara Roth, member of the National Guild of Decoupage, used Egyptian colors in the decoupage technique to decorate her antiqued and crackled hexagonal bisque lamp. The handwork gives each lamp a unique touch.

In traditional residential furniture Jay Goldsamt's winning design is an adaptation of an 18th-century, red lacquered Chinese alter table of console height with decoration a traditional Chinese scene that includes muted greens and blues.

Technology got a boost with a natural oiled oak-shelf arrangement using five basic parts that can be put together quickly with wood and steel rods capped with wood knobs. The unit, Shelf Life Unlimited, folds flat for moving and storage and is available in various heights and two depths.

Another intriguing product is designer Andre Matenciot's vinyl wall covering that is touted as non-flammable, extinguishes flames upon contact and is embossed so that the design provides a subtle three-dimensional appearance even though it is scrubbable. Available in 3-foot widths, the wallcoverings can cover a door.

Other winners include Shirley Mellinger's rug, a flat weave of wool woven in Spain; a handpainted sisal carpet designed by Joseph Freitag that is available to a 13.2-foot width to suit all possible installations; a handsome rattan chair by Henry Olko of Willow and Reed; Maya Romanoff's suede, dyed to achieve luster, for upholstery and walls.

CALENDAR OF EVENTS

TALL CITY CHAPTER, PWP

The board of directors of the Tall City Chapter No. 32 of Parents Without Partners met in the home of Ann Ridens to finalize plans for an annual Christmas dance and officer installation to be held Saturday at 9 p.m. in the Holiday Inn.

Music for the dance will be played by Western Electric. The event will be a special fund-raising benefit open to all single persons in the Permian Basin area.

Admission is $3 for members and $3.50 for non-members.

Patsy Edens was elected to fill the vacant office of president.

Ex-housewife who heads NOW complex person

By MARGARET MASON
The Washington Post

Eleanor Cutri Smeal is the first housewife elected president of NOW (the National Organization for Women), but she's hardly the cookie-baking, ruffled-curtain stereotype — if there is such a thing anymore.

The words intense, drive, brilliant, committed are used over and over again to describe the Phi Beta Kappa graduate and head of the largest organization (65,000 members) devoted to feminism in America.

"Somewhere deep inside of her there's something burning, something that emanates from her gut," says one NOW member. "She works seven days a week; it's really incredible," says another.

"She's always been an enigma to me," says a friend who has known her for most of her life. "I don't know what drives her, but she's always been a deep thinker. I've been with her when she's driving a car and sat through two red lights; she's so preoccupied."

There are those in the feminist movement who have watched Smeal's drive to the top and can't imagine her ever taking time to stand behind a kitchen stove. Others have traded recipes with her. Some say she has no sense of humor. Others say it's just too subtle for most people to understand. Some look to her as a kind of savior, a quiet mending force in the increasingly raucous and divisive women's movement. Others say she uses people for the cause and then casts them aside.

Whoever Ellie Smeal is, after five minutes with her — brown velvet eyes, rapid-fire facts, opinions are-whipping karate-like gestures and all — you know you are in the presence of a powerful and complex personality, driven almost singularly by the cause of women's rights. She gives off simultaneously an aura of kinship and a vague isolation and loneliness — the lot, perhaps, of the deeply committed.

"When she says she has "eaten, slept, lived and breathed feminism for seven years, you believe her.

Ellie Smeal, 38, as head of NOW — the 11-year-old organization that most embodies the growth and the dissension in the feminist movement — will led the largest voting delegation (1,442) at the historic National Women's Conference opening recently in Houston.

There are those in the feminist movement who have watched Smeal's drive to the top and can't imagine her ever taking time to stand behind a kitchen stove. Others have traded recipes with her. Some say she has no sense of humor. Others say it's just too subtle for most people to understand. Some look to her as a kind of saviour, a quiet mending force in the increasingly raucous and divisive women's movement. Others say she uses people for the cause and then casts them aside.

It is a Sunday afternoon in the suburban Pittsburgh rambler Ellie Smeal shares (on sporadic weekends these days) with her husband, Charles, 45, and two children, Lori, 10, and Tod, 13.

She has taken a late plane Friday night from Washington where she works at NOW headquarters with a staff of 13 in spartan offices in the Pennsylvania Building. Her husband, who with his wife joined NOW in 1970, has scheduled a chapter meeting Saturday night in the Smeal home. ("I like to keep in touch with the grass roots.")

Ellie Smeal tries to get home at least once a week; but on any given day she could be almost anywhere, from a walkathon in Los Angeles to a United Auto Workers' meeting in Detroit. She holds NOW meetings almost nightly in her Washington apartment, which she shares with another NOW officer.

Rest? "Never."

"Charlie and I talked for hours about whether or not I should take this job," says Smeal. "We knew it was going to be a difficult two years, but that it was a unique opportunity to do something for women of this country."

In Pittsburgh, the Smeals' street, Sunset Ridge, is a wide and rolling avenue of carefully tended middle-income homes — a leisurely and comfortable place with dogs and children and people puttering in their yards.

When Ellie Smeal comes to the door, rather marching down the hall, there is a feeling for a minute of entering a professional office more than a home. And in a way, that's not so far off. The Smeals' "home" office of NOW is the most lived-in looking room in the house. It is so loaded with filing cabinets, all carefully categorized — "domestic workers," "wife beating," "abortion," "salaries — that it makes an insurance office look sparse.

Wearing a checked overblouse, brown pants and gold-chained medium-high tan shoes, Smeal looks as basic, no-nonsense as her house. Wash-and-wear brown hair, no jewelry, no lipstick. Cosmetics, literally and figuratively, seem to be no part of her.

She is not the type to smile gratuitously or to chat about the weather. She doesn't sink into a chair; she perches on its edge as if she's stopped by on her way somewhere.

"I like to say that the women's movement is now coming of age," she says. "We've gone through the stage of being ridiculed."

Now a "major priority" is passage of the Equal Rights Amendment. "It is a bottom-line issue, but it cannot be a panacea."

When she talks about "playing a hard political game now" and "getting at the key bosses who control the state legislatures," you can imagine her stalking capitols all over the country. Which she and other NOWfact doing. She rattles off by first and last name ERA allies and enemies in a mind-boggling number of states.

Politics, obviously a first love, is a subject Ellie Smeal has been arguing since about age 8, particularly with her Italian-born father. Every night he led a lively dinner-table debate on current issues with his wife, daughter and her three older brothers.

"I grew up (in Erie, Pa.) thinking that was what everyone did," he says.

Charlie Smeal, a Ph.D. metallurgist with Westinghouse in Pittsburgh, sits in on most of the conversation, nodding his head often. At one point, he gets up and without a word slips into the kitchen and slides a Sunday roast into the oven.

Charlie Smeal (once you've met him, calling him anything else sounds stuffy) is a '70s-style man behind the woman, a modest and secure turn about of those old stories about the woman behind the man. Other NOW members refer to him affectionately as "dear" and "sweet" and "understanding." You get the feeling that NOW, and his wife, are the most stimulating parts of his life. More than one friend points to their marriage of 14 years as the best evidence of Ellie Smeal's capability to make long-range decisions.

There was a time, Ellie Smeal admits, early in the marriage, when she was depressed at being at home all of the time. "No question about it. It's the whole thing of sudden isolation when you're used to being out with people. I think it's a shock to your system and is the reason so many housewives sleep a great deal. We talked about it for hours and hours. We're very good friends."

When their daughter was 10 months old and their son was age 4, Ellie Smeal was bedridden for a year with a slipped disc.

"Charlie would go out and get me books," she says. "One day he started bringing home feminist literature."

It was during that period that "I got a sense of urgency, that I knew I was mortal and that it was time I started trying to accomplish something."

A political-science graduate of Duke University, Ellie Smeal has a master's degree in political science and public administration from the University of Florida. She has completed her dissertation on "Attitudes of Women Toward Women Candidates" except for its formal presentation and such things as footnoting.

"I just decided I could do something more important for NOW with those three months of my life," she says.

"Mickey-Mouse stuff," adds Charlie.

An image Smeal carries with her from those 1971 doctorate-interviewing days is of one woman "who kept working all the time I was talking to her, ironing, dusting, cooking. She just assumed that women were responsible for everything, all the meals, the house, the underwear in every drawer. 'Women just can't be political,' she said, 'because they don't have enough time.' And then I looked past her ironing board and could see into another room. There was the man of the house and the kids with their feet up watching TV."

"I don't understand that," says Charlie Smeal. "We've always both done the housework.

Idea to mass-produce hormones turns into reality

By GEORGE ALEXANDER The Los Angeles Times

When the technology of gene-splicing first emerged several years ago, scientists predicted that among its many potential benefits would be the mass-production, in bacterial "factories," of such biologically useful substances as hormones.

Now, a team of scientists from the City of Hope Medical Center in Duarte, Calif., and from the University of California San Francisco Medical School has made that prediction a reality.

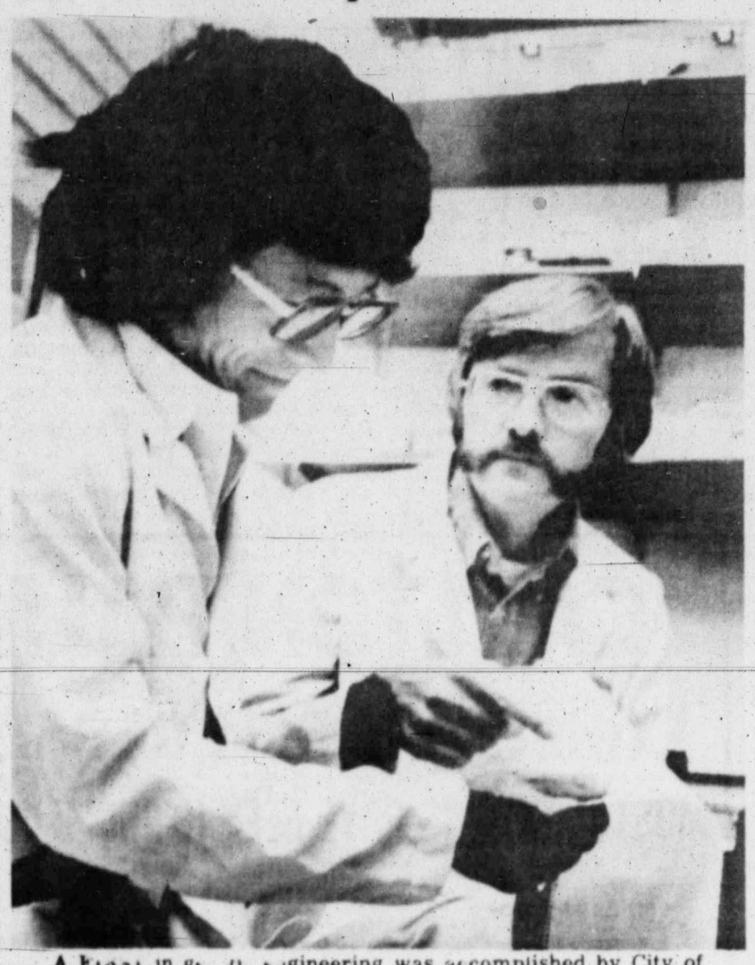

Although their accomplishment was first disclosed early in November in testimony before a congressional committee, the scientists who did the work withheld comment until their scientific report was accepted by Science magazine for publication, Dec. 7.

With their report accepted, the scientists disclosed how they made an artificial gene for a hormone known as somatostatin and spliced it into the genetic machinery of a bacterium. They also told how they grew large numbers of bacteria and how the bacteria mass-produced a significant quantity of a substance from which useful amounts of somatostatin were later extracted.

The somatostatin so made appears to be identical with the somatostatin normally made in the brains of humans and animals.

It is the first time that product has been derived from a gene which is not normally a part of a bacterium's genetic makeup.

Other scientists have constructed artificial genes before. And still others have tansplanted natural genes into bacteria — a UC San Francisco team last May successfully took the rat gene for insulin and put it into bacteria. But no one has been able to get the engineered microbes to manufacture an end product. The City of Hope-UC San Francisco cooperative effort thus is the first time that all of these different techniques have been combined in a single experiment.

A first in genetic engineering was accomplished by City of Hope, Calif., research scientists Keiichi Itakura, Ph.D., left, and Arthur D. Riggs, Ph.D. They have created the human brain hormone, somatostatin, in laboratory bacteria. (AP Laserphoto)

The success of this experiment — particularly those who have been championing "recombinant DNA" technology, as gene-splicing is properly known — that Dr. Philip Handler, president of the National Academy of Sciences, took the unusual step of disclosing the news, rather than the men who actually did the experiment.

Handler told a U.S. Senate subcommittee about the somatostatin experiment on Nov. 2, terming it "a scientific triumph of the first order."

The scientists who carried out the work are Drs. Arthur D. Riggs and Keichi Itakura of City of Hope and Herbert W. Boyer of UC San Francisco.

"We wanted to demonstrate the feasibility of bacterial production of hormones and other useful substances," Riggs said of their motivation for the experiment, "and we settled on somatostatin. It had several things going for it — its small size, its detectability and its potential usefulness."

The hormone, which some believe may be useful in treating diabetes and other disorders like pancreatitis, is made of just 14 amino acids. Moreover, the correct sequence of those amino acids has been known for several years.

Riggs, a molecular biologist and the director of molecular biology at City of Hope, said that he and his colleagues decided at the start against using a natural somatostatin gene, because of the possibility, however remote, that either an extraneous gene or protein might still be attached to the desired DNA (deoxyribonucleic acid, the molecule of heredity) sequence for somatostatin.

It has been the fear of transplanting an unwanted gene or two, like a genetic Trojan Horse, that has in part animated the critics of recombinant DNA research.

And so the City of Hope-UC San Francisco team elected to synthesize the gene and preclude the chance, as Riggs put it, "of a cancer gene or something like that getting into the works."

The task of making the gene fell to Itakura, a DNA chemist. Because genes are composite structures, assemblages of smaller biochemical units known as purines and pyrimidines, it was possible for the Japanese-born scientist to work backward.

He knew precisely what amino acid sequence he wanted. And since he knew which coded arrangements of purines and pyrimidines make which amino acid, he and two laboratory technicians, Tadaaki Hirose and Roberto Crea, were able to string together all the appropriate units to make a close analog of the real gene.

It took 300 steps, Itakura said, and some six months of hard work to synthesize the gene.

The purified, synthetic gene then was shipped to Boyer in San Francisco. There, Boyer and his assistants used enzymes to attach the gene to a plasmid — a small, circular ring of extra genes separate and distinct from the main string of genes in a bacterium.

There is little if anything left to chance in recombinant DNA research. The plasmid, like a friend in the business, is a means of introducing a foreign gene into the host bacterium's inner circle of genes.

More than that, the careful choice of certain plasmids and certain enzymes allows a scientist to place a foreign gene with some precision within that inner circle. In this case, Boyer, Riggs, Itakura and the other members of the team chose to tie the somatostatin gene to one of a cluster of regulatory genes, known collectively as the "lac operon," in the host bacterium.

This cluster of genes is deeply involved in the breakdown of the milk sugar known as lactose (hence the "lac" in "lac operon") by the common gut bacterium, Escherichia coli, or simply E. coli. If a colony of E. coli is grown on lactose, then these genes are turned on and off to enable the bacteria to break down the sugar into simpler forms.

And so in a way similar to the manner in which a cowbird lays its egg in another bird's nest and cons the other bird into incubating the egg, the team slipped the somatostatin gene in amongst the lac operon genes. Provided with lactose, the E. coli responded by making the enzymes called for by the lac operon genes — and also by making a large protein. That large protein, when extracted from the cell culture and treated chemically, yielded somatostatin.

The bacteria produced about 4 milligrams for every 100 grams of E. coli cells. That may not seem like much, but in fact it is; when somatostatin was first isolated from the brains of sheep in the early 1970s, researchers had to use nearly half a million brains to derive just 5 milligrams of the hormone.

Boyer shipped the extracted protein back to City of Hope, where riggs did the actual purification of somatostatin and the assays that indeed confirmed the presence of the hormone.

Subsequent tests conducted by Dr. Wylie Vale of the Salk Institute in La Jolla have shown that the bacteria-made somatostatin has the same biological activity on pituitary cell extracts from rats as the natural hormone. In nature, the hormone inhibits the secretion of other hormones, such as insulin and glucagon. For this reason, some researchers believe it may someday be useful to counter diabetes.

At the moment, however, the ability to make large quantities of somatostatin in bacterial factories will probably be limited to further laboratory research.

Ringing the bell

With BOB TIEUEL

The Black Experience: Past-Present-Future—Something of a personal perspective, if you please. Back in the early 1950's while a student in the Harvard University Divinity School in Cambridge, Mass., we had the opportunity to meet two of the most interesting black characters we had ever met. They were Rev. Adam Clayton Powell, miniter-New York congressman and civil rights activist, and Paul Robeson, titanic singer-actor and political activist.

Critics even today state that Robeson portrayed Othello as no other actor before or since his time. Othello is the hero of Shakespeare's tragedy, "Othello, the Moor of Venice," who was duped by Iago into believing his wife Desdemona was unfaithful to him. Othello smothers her, and later, learning of her innocence, kills himself. It was a night in live theater in Boston that we shall never forget if we live to be 100 years old.

Of course paul Robeson was a storm center of controversy during his lifetime, as was Adam Clayton Powell, whom we shall discuss in a later column. Now, today with the revival of the one-man play "Paul Robeson" in live theater in Chicago and starring James Earl Jones, the controversy goes on. The author of the play is Phillip Hayes Dean.

Ewart Guinier, a Harvard professor, has called the play's portral "disfigured." It should have portrayed Robeson, he said, as a linguist, a humanitarian, a profound realist and a scholar; it should have cited the U.S. government's attempt to make a "nonperson" of Robeson; there was no mention that Robeson had received the 1944 Spingarn Medal from the NAACP, and there were factual errors as well.

The author of the play "Paul Robeson" (Dean) has been attacked by some because he hasn't written an anti-Communist, anti-Soviet tract, denouncing Robeson and communism. Said Dean: "I don't know that I'm writing about Robeson as anybody knew him. I chose those events that can be theatriclized. We are doing a play, not a biography, and that distinction is important. Whenever you dramatize someone's life, by virtue of the act of dramatization it is a distortion, if you are going to compare it with real life. The theater is not really real." Concludes Dean, "It is drama of Robeson's whole life. He was a politician, an All-American athlete (Rutgers Univerisyt), a lawyer, an actor, a singer, a linguist, a world traveler and much more," Dean said.

"I Led Three Lives" is the title of a book some years back and one that created quite an audience in television circles. How many bellringers remember? It was a best seller for months upon months as a book and was written by Herbert A. Philbrick. As this old man remembers, radio carried a great number of series too. Nonetheless we remember "Herb" as we were often together in mass meetings, public assembly-sessions and what have you in Cambridge, Mass., in the early 40's. It was during those years and none since and after, made a greater impact upon minds and spirits of young blacks sponsored by the Communist forces of the world. Herbert talked with me only onnce since those turbulent years (in Southwestern New Mexico) and we remembered. At that time, he was living in New Hampshire and was on the lecture circuit. Wonder if he is still going? More later.

Dear Woody: You mentioned the fact in one of your letters to me that perhaps I was in theposition to retire now after having made that "bundle." Quite the opposite. However, I shall not worry, for my greatest satisfaction has come to me in knowing that I have tried to help somebody along the way.

For the past 30 some years, I have spent them on the mission fields of Kansas, New Mexico and West Texas, of course the black population in these areas is far behind that in many places in the North, the deep South and many sections of the East. It just seems that black people naturally migtrate to areas where black people are already there. Still people need leadership in these sparsely populated areas, even though your work is cut out for you. Oftentimes we have driven four and five hundred miles to hold a Methodist Mission Service and return home with an empty gas tank but God always provided for that last mile.

I believe it was Abraham Lincoln who once said "God must have loved the poor people, for he made so many of them." There are a lot of black Baptists in these parts, Woody, and a great deal of my minitry is with them, of course. Then there is my radio and newspaper ministry for a number of years that has reached thousands we shall never know.

All in all, it has been a great challenge and as long as God gives me strength, we shall continue to bring joy and hope to a people long depreived but His promise is to all those who believe, whether they be Baptists, Catholics, Presbyterians, Lutherans or just poor Methodists. May visit you in Pittsburgh one of these days. Write again when you can. And don't forget to send me that "big story." I am, fraternally yours,

Bob.

Good buddy, your CB is foreign

By ROBERT A. ROSENBLATT
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Listen up, all you good buddies out there with citizens' band radios. Here's a sad story.

Maybe you're a trucker rolling down a long highway late at night, deep in Kansas or Colorado, with nothing out there in the lonely dark but a few friendly voices coming over the CB.

Or maybe it's Saturday, and you're cruising in the new Chevy pickup down by the hamburger stand off Main Street, hoping some good buddy will call your handle with the word about a big party.

Doing that stuff is about as American as the flag. Except you're talking American talk on a foreign rig. The truth is, the folks in Japan, Korea, Hong Kong and Taiwan now make 97 of every 100 CB radios sold in the United States.

One factory in Japan is so big it can turn out 13 million CBs a year, which is more than the whole U.S. market.

The handful of American companies left in the business held a press conference here to talk about their plea for help from the federal government. They want the tariff on imported CBs increased from the current 6 per cent of the wholesale price to 50 per cent, the highest charge allowed under the law.

"We need something dramatic if the industry is to survive," said Richard Horner, president of the E.F. Johnson Co., which has closed CB plants in Iowa and Florida, and eliminated more than 1,500 jobs because of imports.

Motorola entered the CB business in the middle of last year and had 300 people putting the rigs together in Chicago by that fall. The flood of imports drove out the American firm. On New Year's Day, Motorola will have no people making CB's in Chicago, John Battin, the company's director of product operations, told the news conference.

The American industry made a big mistake, Battin said: "We underestimated the amount the Japanese would produce by five million."

The result is an inventory glut of 10 million radios in the hands of U.S. retailers — about a two-year supply at normal rates of demand, according to Horner.

Last year, Americans bought 12 million CB sets, while 17 million were imported. Japan supplies about 80 per cent of the imports, with other sets coming from Hong Kong, Korea and Taiwan, probably produced by Japanese-controlled companies.

A driver in Tokyo can't get a warning from a buddy about a "Smokey" (highway patrolman) waiting down the road for speeders. Japan, Korea, Hong Kong and Taiwan don't permit their citizens to use CB radios.

In the early 1970s, before the CB became a hot item, American companies enjoyed about 20 per cent or 25 per cent of the market. Their share dwindled to 6 per cent last year. American producers have 2 per cent to 3 per cent of the American market today, and their portion "is falling fast," Battin said.

A 23-channel set that sold for $159 to $169 last year now costs $29.95. The 40-channel models, introduced in January for $100 to $200, are available for $39 or $49, said Battin of Motorola.

An American buyer enjoys the lower prices "unless it's his father or brother or sister that doesn't have a job," he said.

The CB case is the most recent, and one of the most dramatic, examples cited by American business executives and government officials worried about surging imports from Japan.

Japan will sell the United States goods worth $18 billion this year, while importing $10 billion in American merchandise. It will be the worst deficit ever in the trade between the two nations.

Japan has captured 40 per cent of the automobile market in California, 30 per cent of the steel market in the Western United States and nearly 40 per cent of the national demand for color television sets. The domestic black-and-white television industry is virtually extinct, a casualty of big imports.

Singles bars cater to 'hang loose' way of life

By HENRY FAIRLIE
Special to The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The singles bar is a genuine phenomenon of our times. It is not just a variation of something that has existed in the past. Of course there have always been bars where young single people have gone, more than to others, and of course they might meet a young man or woman there and for some sort of liaison. But they were not called "singles bars," and the fact that we need a name for them is evidence that something new has happened in our societies.

What we have in the singles today is a numerous generation: the post-war baby boom grown into its 20s. Now that the draft no longer threatens them, they have no cause to join. How long ago did Jimmy Porter cry in "Look Back in Anger," "There are no great good causes left"? But at least he was angry that there were none. The novelty of the drug culture has passed, and with it all the adolescent delusions of the counterculture. They are cynically on the make, in an aimless and drifting way.

They were recklessly indulged by their parents, nourished to give no plan or purpose to their lives. Their schools did not like to disburb them with the tasks of learning, so they have few interests that are really satisfying, and their attention span may be measured by the second hand of a watch. They are generally inarticulate beyond a slipshod, monosyllabic vocabulary. They are bored and boring.

Perhaps above all, they do not wish to get involved, at least not in any relationship that might make demands on them. That is why we need a word for them. They are not single men and women, as there have alawys been and are now, who are preparing not to be single. They are singles as a way of life, and it is as a way of life that they are celebrated, provided for and catered to in the singles bars. No involvement, please, no commitment! Hang loose! Lay back!

I have been to singles bars several times with younger friends whom I have asked to accompany me, so that we might observe the rituals and so they might correct me if I drew the wrong conclusions.

I have wandered about the singles bars with them, and then sat down to look — and look — for one sign of animation; to listen — and listen — for one ripple or gust of laughter. We have always looked and listened in vain. Yet for this, outside one of the singles bars in Washington that is "in" at the moment, they wait in line, even joining the line as late as 1:45 a.m. For this they wait, and for music that is mediocre, for dancing that is mechanical, for drinks that are weak and expensive, for service that is poor and for an atmosphere that is unlively. They must live in some kind of hell of tedium to stand dumbly in line for so pathetically little.

Good-looking young faces, of a kind; sharply if not well dressed, in a way. Exactly the kind of young people from whom in the past one would have at least expected some action. But how vacant are the faces, how listless is every movement. Young faces, young bodies, already dead, they seem. Dead to themselves. Dead to others. Dead to life. Dead to the world. Dead to any purpose. Dead to the future. To be so young — and already so world-weary: What have we done to these children?

And what of the sex for which, it is supposed, the singles bars exist? The atmosphere and even the odor is of dried-up, stale, uninterested, lethargic, mechanical, unfeeling, pointless, joyless, fruitless, uninvolved, unrewarding, tedious, boring, let's-get-it-over-with, tomorrowless, dreary, even pathetic, empty, self-emptying sex. With their young and lithe bodies, with the promise of their lives before them, the atmosphere of their sex is necrophilic.

This is not only my opinion. Ask the others of their generation who have, as a matter of course, been to singles bars, to see if "the action" was there; ask them how the advances are made, by either sex, with what torpor, with what lack of interest, with what meaninglessness.

The approach of a girl and a boy, of a young man and a young woman, used to be a thing of tentativeness and of wonder, of courtship and discovery, of invitation and promise, of exploration hand in hand, and of heads thrown back so that all the world was made magic by them alone. Even the moments of anguish, the fears of rejection, were moments of savoring, as one first felt oneself fully alive to someone of one's own choosing, not a parent or a brother or sister, not even a schoolmate with whom one had been thrown together, but someone on whom out of one's own choice one was utterly ready to set an unconditional value.

For this magic was not false; it did not mislead. It stirred in the young soul and mind and body the first intimations of what love may be, and the impression is never then erased. It becomes a resource on which to draw in adulthood, as it presents its accounts, the double-colum ledgers of a sustained relationship. First loves are very important — they are the first time that we take responsibility, not for another person, but for our own feelings for another person—and first loves are not part of the memories of a singles bar.

There used also to be the clumsiness — or rather not the clumsiness, for it is full of attractiveness — the fumbling of young people in their first sexual approaches to each other. It was not for a merely physical knowledge or technique that they groped together, but for the way in which they could use this rather eccentric act — which God must have invented in one of His more mischievous moments, in the same mood in which He invited ducks and laughed at the sound that came out of their bills — to express deeply, with freshness, innocently, what they found themselves feeling for each other. Nothing of this is in the singles bars, and they represent, in the lack of it, something common to their generation.

For the young who, although single, or not singles agree with me on this: that there is lack now of what was meant by first love, and they miss it.
