Cityline Community Pulse

The Oscars will be presented March 26. Rarely do movie fans agree with all the Academy's choices.

The Cityline Community Pulse poll is giving you a chance to voice your opinion on three of the top awards — Best Actress, Best Actor and Best Picture. Today through Tuesday, you can cast your vote for the best performance by an actress — either for one of the five nominees or your own choice.

Call 560-2400, then when asked for your category, press 7660 to express your opinion.

Votes for Best Actor will be tabulated Wednesday through Friday; Best Picture balloting takes place Saturday through Monday. Results of all three contests will be published March 27, along with Hollywood's winners.

Blowing smoke

AUSTIN — Three people were arrested last week in a loosely knit protest for blowing smoke at the law — marijuana smoke that is.

Two people walked into the San Marcos police department and another into the Hays County Sheriff's department and fired up marijuana cigarettes to call attention to their efforts to legalize the drug.

Thankful troops

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Country music star Hank Williams Jr. says he'll never forget the mail he received from soldiers in the Persian Gulf thanking him for his hit song "Don't Give Us a Reason." Williams released the tune just days after Iraq's Saddam Hussein ordered an invasion of Kuwait last Aug. 2.

In the song, Williams warned Saddam against pushing the United States too far. As the American buildup in the Persian Gulf increased, so did the mail Williams received from the armed forces. "It's been overwhelming," he said. "It's not just standard fan mail. ... It's good to read these things from guys who put their life on the line..."

Legislators seriously consider income tax

By Michael Holmes

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas lawmakers, who so dislike the idea of a state income tax that many refer to it as the "I word," find themselves seriously considering one for the first time.

With the state facing a $4.6 billion budget deficit, shrunken oil and gas revenues and other financial problems, Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock says lawmakers have no choice but to join the other 40 states that already tax incomes.

"I personally dislike — and I imagine most Texans do — any type of new taxes. But I also know deep down in my heart, deep down in my heart, that it's the right thing to do for Texas," said Bullock, a Democrat who took office Jan. 15 after 16 years as the state's tax collector.

The proposal has not generated a wellspring of support from Texas voters, however.

"I think those idiots in Austin need to start being more concerned about reducing the rise in expenditures," said Houston geologist Clint Moore, one of 1,727 people who responded to a recent poll by the Houston Post. The unscientific phone-in poll showed 91 percent opposed to a state income tax.

Bullock says Texas must tax or drastically cut programs.

Already facing a budget deficit of $4.6 billion, the Legislature has been ordered by the state Supreme Court to restructure its public schools to provide an equal education for all Texas students. Current proposals for meeting that order are expected to cost $1.2 billion.

Saddam promises democratic nation

■ In a televised address, Iraqi leader says government troops crushed rebellion by Shiite Muslims and will soon defeat Kurds.

Associated Press

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Iraqi President Saddam Hussein promised Saturday to allow multiparty democracy for the first time in his 12-year-old regime, apparently bowing to popular uprisings unleashed by the Persian Gulf War.

In his first nationally televised address since losing the war, Saddam also said his government had crushed a rebellion by Shiite Muslims in the south and would soon defeat Kurdish rebels in the north.

"With God's help, we have wiped out the sedition in the southern cities, and we are capable with the help of the people ... to uproot the remnants of treason and sabotage," Saddam said.

However, rebel sources outside Iraq maintained that fierce fighting was continuing, and Saddam's promises of political reform were greeted with skepticism in the West.

President Bush said at a news conference in Bermuda after his meeting with British Prime Minister John Major that he could not envision normal relations with Iraq under Saddam because "his credibility is zilch, zero, zed."

"If he's proclaiming Iraq will be a democratic nation, fine," Bush said. But then he added: "The proof of that pudding is in the eating."

In Damascus, the capital of Syria, Kurdish rebel leader Jalal Talabani said Saddam's speech was an attempt to mislead Iraqis.

"He's trying to give them and the world the impression that he is in full control in the south and the north when he is not," Talabani said.

"If he really believes in democracy let him step down and let the people choose their leaders," he added.

Ex-POW recounts nightmare

By John King

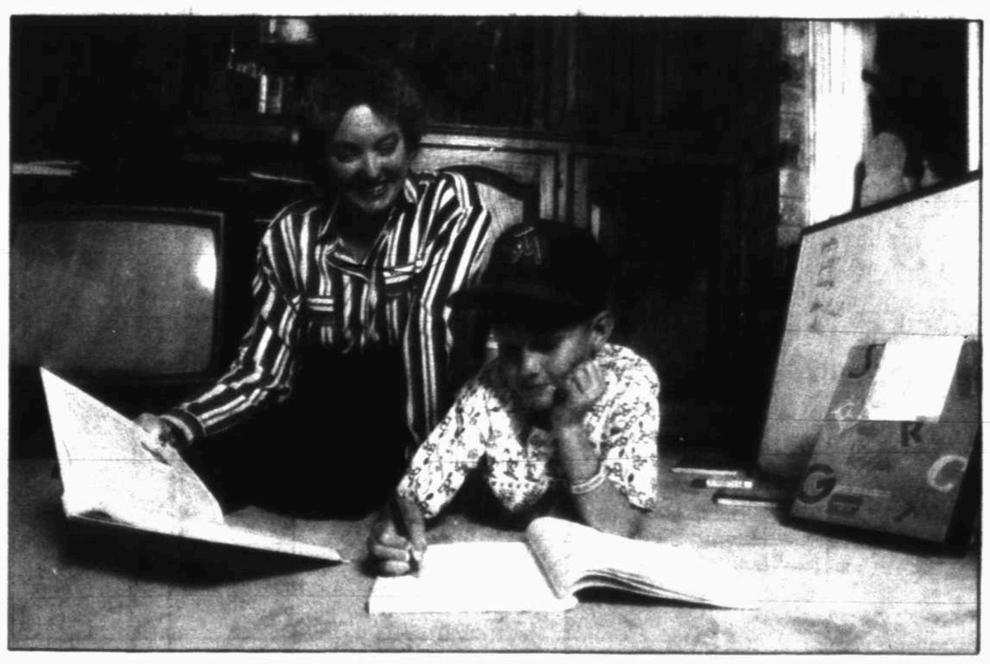

ANDREWS AIR FORCE BASE, Md. (AP) — As first light hit the cell floor, Dale Storr used a tiny rock to scratch the passing of another terrifying day.

That done, it was time to rub feeling into toes and legs numbed by cold and wait — perhaps minutes, perhaps an hour — for his next beating.

Frequent thoughts of food made him ache with hunger; thoughts of dying brought violent shudders of fear.

The thud of footsteps and sound of keys in the cranky cell lock made his worries more immediate.

MISD has new program in which 'poor readers' taught phonetically

EDITOR'S NOTE: More than 30 years after Rudolf Flesch first studied "Why Johnny Can't Read," educators still debate the best methods for improving reading performance. Midland schools stand at the heart of the dispute between "whole language" and phonetic teaching approaches.

Today, in the first of a three-part series, the Reporter-Telegram takes a look at reading problems and the two major schools of thought in coping with them.

HOW JOHNNY CAN READ

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

"I worked as a casheer for one year at a resterant and one year in a grosery store. I feel like I have good experiance to bring to this compiny. ..."

That paragraph was written on a job application for a local retail business. The employer who received the application said that even more appalling than the spelling errors was the last sentence: "I'm a high school graduate."

It's been 36 years since the study "Why Johnny Can't Read" shook the foundations of the nation's education community. Rudolf Flesch's 1955 study took educators and methods of teaching reading to task for graduating students who were poor readers.

Despite many innovative programs and years of research, the nation's high schools are still graduating students who can't read, write or spell. In response to this at the state level, several Texas education agencies joined forces in 1989 to implement the TASP (Texas Academic Skills Program) test which weeds out poor writers, readers and mathematicians before they enter college.

At the local level, Midland Independent School District administrators are scrambling to beef up curriculum to emphasize reading skills.

Midland public school students — who consistently have topped state and national averages on standardized tests — scored below state average on the recent TAAS (Texas Assessment of Academic Skills) test.

The TAAS test stressed reading skills across the board. Even math problems were word — rather than number — problems.

But even before the TAAS results

Gorbachev hopes referendum appeals to Soviets' pride

By Bryan Brumley

MOSCOW (AP) — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev is trying something old, something new, and something borrowed to save his shaky union by means of a national referendum on Sunday.

He is appealing to Russian pride to preserve what he calls a 1,000-year-old state. He is pushing for a new Union Treaty binding the 15 restive republics. And he has borrowed the Western idea of a referendum, the first in Soviet or even Russian history.

Even Gorbachev's critics believed most voters would say "yes" to preserving the Soviet Union. But the vague wording of the referendum left them guessing exactly how Gorbachev might translate a victory into policy.

'God bless troops' signs coming down

By Lisa Levitt Ryckman
AP national writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Now that the war we watched on television is over, people are changing the channel. They've got other things on their minds: uncertain economy, uncertain peace. Golf, not Gulf.

Spring break, spring training. Play ball!

People are traveling again; tourism triumphs over terrorism.

People like Charlotte Cosulich in San Francisco are putting their homes on the market. People like Winston Delara are spending money: He's got his eye on a new television. "I know that's a funny way to celebrate an end to the war," he said.

Celebrations come in everyday ways, in small gestures of relief and normalcy. A sign of the times outside the Ponderosa Restaurant in Wausau, Wis., advertises baked meatballs and French onion soup. Just days ago, it read "God Bless our Troops."

The night the bombing of Iraq began, the Milwaukee Bucks players and coaches joined hands in a pre-game tribute to the troops. The war bothered Bucks coach Del Harris. He found it difficult to concentrate.

"I found myself at times depressed," Harris said. "I never asked the players, but I know they had to have concerns about it because they knew people who were involved."

The end of the war was a relief, he said. He no longer checks CNN before heading to a game.

At the Bull & Finch Pub in Boston, the bar that inspired the show "Cheers," the most important problem during the next five minutes is who's buying the beer. Talk turns to the war that was, and how it feels now that it's gone.

U.S. Marines pass the time in Jubail, Saudi Arabia, Friday as they wait for final orders to return home.

"It's less of a relief than I thought," Sam Jordan said. "I didn't even follow it," Jim Riveria said. "I'm sorry it ever started," Ruth Gifford said. "I'm embarrassed by the whole thing."

The end has been too vague for some people, unfinished business that puts them on edge. Saddam Hussein is still in power, the region is still in turmoil. Candace Davis and her kids don't trust uneasy endings.

"I have two older children who won't have kids because of the way the world is," said the 42-year-old, a new grandmother anyway. A younger daughter's daughter is the sixth generation of women in their Qunicy, Mass., family. She has a great-great-great grandmother who's 101, a survivor of five — make that six — wars.

"They don't believe it's over," Davis said of her kids. "I still don't think it's over."

Separate house fires in Pittsburgh claim 3 youths

PITTSBURGH (AP) — An 11-year-old boy who escaped a fire Saturday in his family's home was killed when he went back inside the burning building, authorities said.

The boy, Damion Binnon, his parents, and two younger brothers escaped the blaze that broke out in the duplex that the family had moved into Tuesday. A short time later, his father noticed he was missing.

"He looked behind and Damion wasn't there any more," said police Officer Paul Wolak.

It was not known why the boy went back inside, said Wolak.

In a separate house fire, two girls died Friday night in the Pittsburgh suburb of Wilkinsburg, authorities and neighbors said.

The children, Shantel Tarver, 6, and Lenisha Long, 4, died when flames and intense heat kept rescuers from entering the home. A third girl, 3-year-old Ukayla Tarver, walked out of the house to safety.

The relationship between the three girls was not immediately known.

Ukayla and her mother, Viola Lockley, were treated at a hospital for burns.

The cause of both fires was under investigation.

Jet carrying Reba McEntire's band crashes; none survives

■ More nation/5A

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (AP) — Seven members of country-western singer Reba McEntire's band and her road manager were among 10 people killed when a private jet bound for Amarillo, Texas, crashed Saturday just north of the Mexican border.

There were no survivors, said Elly Brekke, a spokeswoman for the Federal Aviation Administration.

Miss McEntire, who had given a private concert Friday night in San Diego, was not on the jet, said spokeswoman Jenny Bohler.

"Needless to say Reba is very upset. They all had been with her a long time. They were like family. She's lost eight family members," Ms. Bohler said.

The Hawker Siddeley twin-engine jet crashed at 1:45 a.m. in rugged canyon country about 25 miles southeast of downtown San Diego. The National Transportation Safety Board was investigating, Ms. Brekke said.

The plane had just taken off from Brown Field, a private airfield about 15 miles southeast of San Diego and four miles north of the Mexican border.

Personnel at the U.S. Navy's North Island Naval Air Station, about 15 miles away from where the plane crashed, reported seeing a fireball as it went down about five miles northeast of 3,556-foot Otay Mountain, Ms. Brekke said.

Ms. Bohler said the 10 people aboard included Miss McEntire's tour manager, Jim Hammon, band leader and keyboardist Kirk Cappello, vocalist Paula Kaye Evans, guitarists Michael Thomas and Terry Jackson, keyboardist Joey Cigainero, drummer Tony Saputo and Chris Austin, a vocalist who played fiddle and acoustic guitar.

All the band members lived in Nashville, Tenn., and were under 30 years old, Ms. Bohler said. Hammon was in his early 40s.

"This will be felt by so many country artists who routinely travel the concert tour by private jet," said Jo Walker-Meador, executive director of the Country Music Association.

Miss McEntire, had checked out of a San Diego hotel early Saturday and was on her way to Nashville, Ms. Bohler said.

"Her main concern is the families of the band," Ms. Bohler said. "That's all she can think about right now."

Two other band members and several members of Miss McEntire's road crew had left San Diego for Fort Wayne on another flight before the crash, Ms. Bohler said.

Also killed in the crash were pilot Don Holms and co-pilot Chris Hollinger, said a statement by the San Diego County Sheriff's Department.

The pilot was filing an amended flight plan over the radio with air traffic controllers when they lost contact with the plane, Ms. Brekke said.

NEW YORK (AP) — Mayor David Dinkins was booed Saturday when he marched with members of an Irish gay group rather than at the head of the nation's oldest and largest St. Patrick's Day Parade.

A smattering of cheers was drowned out by boos from thousands along the Manhattan parade route.

"One term mayor!" some spectators chanted as Dinkins, wearing a green jacket, walked by with the Irish Gay and Lesbian Organization. Some sprayed beer and shouted obscenities at the mayor and the gay marchers, who were accompanied by heavy security.

New Heritage USA discounts to end

FORT MILL, S.C. (AP) — Evangelist Morris Cerullo said Saturday he will end a membership card program promising lifetime, half-price discounts at the Christian theme park former PTL leader Jim Bakker once ran.

Cerullo's business partners sued in federal court last week over the New Heritage USA program, accusing Cerullo of misusing $4 million he got from membership cards for the 2,200-acre retreat about 10 miles south of Charlotte, N.C.

It was not immediately clear what effect Cerullo's announcement would have on the suit by New Heritage USA Corp.

SADDAM: Bush skeptical of Iraqi leader's promise

(From 1A)

ment said. Iraqi pilots flew many of the country's warplanes to Iran during the early days of the Gulf War.

U.S. Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, the U.S. commander in the gulf, has reportedly warned Iraq the United States will shoot down any warplanes under present cease-fire conditions.

■ Kuwait's government said it could be three more weeks before water and electricity are restored to Kuwaitis. At the same time, workers at the Bayan Palace, which is being prepared for Kuwait's emir, complained that a 2-million gallon reservoir has been filled with water from the city's supply.

Without mentioning it by name, Saddam accused Iran of encouraging the southern rebellion. Tehran has long sheltered dissident Iraqi Shiite groups, but has denied any part in the insurrection.

"I feel bitter that some of our neighbors with whom we have been trying to establish peace have made their territory a springboard for treachery against Iraq," Saddam said in a reference to his 1980-1988 war with Iran.

Dressed in a military uniform and reading from a text, Saddam called the rebels "stooges and agents of foreign enemies" and said the Kurds were fighting to serve their own interests and those of Israel.

He spoke for a little more than an hour.

He said his country was faced with rebellion while it was still "bleeding from the consequences of the vicious aggression committed by 30 countries," a reference to the U.S.-led allied forces that drove Iraq out of Kuwait.

The twin rebellions began soon after President Bush declared on Feb. 27 that Kuwait was liberated, Iraq's army was defeated and that all United States and coalition forces would suspend offensive combat operations.

Saddam said the Iraqi government would move into a "new political era" and added that a new constitution will be offered for discussion and debate before it is endorsed in a general referendum.

A new parliament would be elected, he added.

"Iraqis will find in this a new era more liberty to express their wills and their interests through political parties, societies, and press," he said.

The concept of political pluralism is foreign to modern Iraqi political life. The only legal party is the ruling Baath Arab Socialist Party.

He said a new cabinet will be formed to carry out national reconstruction and to provide basic services to the populace. Arab diplomats, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the cabinet would be opened to technocrats and others not belonging to the ruling Baath Party.

Saddam did not give any timetable for forming the new cabinet, holding elections or drafting the new constitution. Similar pledges made last year before Iraq invaded Kuwait Aug. 2 were not carried out.

He also renewed his call for resolving all Middle East conflicts, and said the Palestinian issue ranked first. He reiterated Iraqi support for Yasser Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Rebel sources, meanwhile, insisted they were succeeding on the battlefield. The opposition claims could not be independently verified. But the reports coming from several sources indicated the violence was escalating.

Kurdish rebels Saturday claimed to be in control of the northern oil industry city of Mosul, and said thousands of army defectors were fighting on their side in a growing revolt to unseat the war-weakened Saddam.

The rebel radio station "Voice of Iraq's Revolution" said Mosul, Iraq's third-largest city with 1.2 million people, was taken over after several days of clashes with troops, according to Iran's Islamic Republic News Agency.

Talabani, leader of the umbrella Patriotic Union of Kurdistan, said in a communique that rebels had taken the outskirts of Kirkuk, a key oil producing center, and were trying to drive government forces from the center of the city.

Government troops were using helicopters and warplanes to drop napalm and incendiary bombs Saturday on the northern cities of Karahanzeer and Shamshamal, both near Kirkuk, Talabani said.

Elsewhere in northern Iraq, Kurdish rebels seized control of the lone border crossing into Turkey, Turkish newspapers reported Saturday. The rebels flew a yellow, green and red striped Kurdish flag at the Iraqi checkpoint.

In southern Iraq, Saddam's Republican Guards have forced resistance fighters in Basra to move across a river near the Iranian border where Iraqi helicopters are attacking their positions, fleeing Iraqis said Saturday.

But the escaping resistance fighters said Iranian-trained opponents of Saddam were returning to Iraq from Iran in small gunladen boats and helping to direct the rebel attacks.

Iran's Islamic Republic News Agency quoted another opposition group, the Supreme Assembly of the Islamic Revolution of Iraq, as saying rebel forces Saturday took the city of Kut, southeast of Baghdad.

Shiite Muslim sources reported a bloodbath in the southern cities of Karbala and Najaf on Friday. The sources said the two cities were under "savage bombardment" that has killed more than 1,400 people.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Sunny weather forecast

Staff Report

Today's forecast is sunny and warm with a low in the 70s and winds northwest 10-20 mph, gusty in the morning, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Tonight is predicted to be clear with a low in the upper 30s.

Monday's forecast is for clear skies with a high in the mid 70s, the NWS said.

Saturday's high was 71, compared to the record high of 86, set in 1966. The record low for today's date is 26, set in 1970.

STATE

Thunderstorms and hail pounded parts of North Texas while clouds descended on parts of the Panhandle Saturday and South Texas weathered rain.

A severe thunderstorm in North Texas weakened by mid-afternoon after producing marble-size hail and wind gusts up to 60 mph near Weatherford in Parker County.

Heavier rain activity occurred over the eastern two-thirds of South Texas and some light fog marred visibility across some portions. Small craft advisories remained posted from Port Arthur to Port O'Connor.

State temperatures were mild staying mostly in the 50s for North and South Texas, increasing to the 60s in West Texas.

A snow advisory remained in effect for West Texas while afternoon showers moved into the Panhandle and central South Plains to Lubbock. Mostly sunny skies remained elsewhere.

Mostly clear skies through Monday were expected in West Texas with highs Sunday from the mid 50s in the northwest Panhandle to the lower 80s in the Big Bend lowlands. Lows are expected to range from the 20s to the 80s.

NATION

Winter storms dumped snow Saturday on parts of the Southwest and Plains states. Hail pummeled portions of Texas and rain drenched areas of Oklahoma, Louisiana, Florida and Mississippi.

An overnight storm left 9 inches of snow in the Santa Fe and Los Alamos, N.M., ski areas by Saturday morning. At least 12 inches of snow fell on Arizona's Sunrise ski resort.

Snow also whitened parts of Montana, Arizona, Colorado, Kansas and northern Minnesota. Snow was mixed with rain over southeast Minnesota.

The Associated Press also contributed to this report.

STORR: Pilot hated to hear steps

(From 1A)

"I hated that sound," the Air Force captain and A-10 pilot said Friday as he recounted 33 harrowing days in Iraqi hands. "You always hoped those feet would keep on walking."

Storr

If the visitors brought a blindfold, "you knew you were going to interrogation."

For Storr, that meant slaps to the head, blows to the knees and shoulders with a blunt club, perhaps prods with an electrical device, the voltage increased with the intensity of the questioning.

"When I would get back to my cell, the biggest thing I would think about was what I didn't tell them, try to keep my spirits up, especially if they got something new out of me," Storr said.

"You'd feel like you sold out the United States, sold out your fellow pilots."

In the shadowy cell, often blindfolded, every noise had a meaning. For weeks, only one brought any pleasure.

"You'd hear them pushing the lunch tray, the buckets clanging, and you just got starving."

The only meal of the day, served punctually at 2 p.m., was a piece or two of pita bread, perhaps some soup and a little water. Only after wolfing it down would Storr drop the barriers he had built in his mind.

"I would let myself think of all my favorite foods, all the stuff I was dying to get my hands on."

Alone in his cell, sore from the beatings, more exhausted with each passing day, Storr spent his afternoons in disciplined thought, planning his first week of freedom back home in Spokane, in his mind driving up and down a stretch of dealerships searching for a new truck.

"I would be driving to a certain dealership and suddenly I was turning into a favorite restaurant, thinking about what I ate there the last time," Storr said. "I couldn't stop it. It was driving me nuts."

But sometimes, there was a fear about the future.

"It seemed to help more to think about things in the past than things in the future," he said. "Thinking about the future was always so uncertain."

There was always time for prayer.

"When there's only you in that cell, God is your only friend."

With any luck, the thoughts would whittle away the afternoon and what little light that crept into the cell would disappear. Storr would try to sleep.

Some nights were interrupted by more footsteps.

"The midnight stompers is what I called them," Storr said.

Those interrogations, usually in the hallway, lasted just minutes. Then back to the freezing cell floor in a prison the captives had nicknamed the Biltmore. The POWs were usually handcuffed, boots tied together.

"When it would get really dark, that's when you knew the bombs were going to start coming."

One night, Feb. 23, five weeks into Storr's nightmare, they came too close. Storr suddenly heard the crackling and sizzling, the signature of a bomb just seconds from impact.

The walls in the cell crumbled, the building shook, the guards fled.

"I was certain death was just a few seconds away," Storr said.

But the terror gave way to Storr's happiest moment in captivity.

"I started hearing American voices, the first ones since I was shot down. It was a tremendous boost to my morale."

As they screamed to exchange names, Navy Lt. Larry Slade startled Storr with news he was presumed dead because his wingman never saw him eject.

The guards returned and the men were loaded on a bus for a new prison, which Storr would nickname Joliet.

After a week there, Storr and six others were transferred again, thrown together in a tiny room they dubbed the Batcave because it was so dark they couldn't see the floor or food.

On March 5, came another transfer — and a shave. There had been no bombing for several nights. "We knew something was going on."

Flying to Saudi Arabia two days later on a Red Cross charter, Storr found himself wary. "I don't know why, but I still didn't believe it."

Off the wing appeared two U.S. F-15s, loaded with missiles.

"That was the prettiest thing I'd ever seen," said Storr, who celebrates his 30th birthday Monday. "We were going home."

Associated Press

An American pilot recently released by the Iraqis said he believes the family photographs he carried in his wallet saved his life.

Air Force Maj. Jeffrey Tice, 35, of Sellersville, Pa., was captured in January after his plane was shot down 15,000 feet over Iraq. Tice said he was tied up by Bedouins about two minutes after he landed on the ground.

A shared pride in family that crosses international boundaries saved his life, Tice said Friday from Andrews Air Force Base on the television show "Larry King Live."

"I believe it had to do with my family photographs that they found in my wallet," he said. The Bedouins saw pictures of his wife, Cindy, and their children.

"Because I was a family man they may not have killed me that night," he said. "The chief looked at the photographs and he gently kissed the pictures of my wife and children and laid them back on my leg — I was tied up at this time — laid them back up on my leg and then had the guys untie me.

"And I gently picked them up and put them in my pocket, and just because I'm right-handed I automatically put them in the pocket next to my heart, and I think that touched them in a way that they didn't kill me," he said.

He said he was tortured later, and that torture was increased when he refused to participate in a videotaped interview denouncing the war. He eventually appeared in such a videotape.

"As I was sat back down, I didn't realize that I was close to another prisoner, but I just said out loud under my breath that I had broken too easily, and a British accent came up next to me and said, 'Don't worry, mate, we all made the tape.'"

Tice said he used a phony accent to "mock" his captors and let his family and friends know he was OK.

FIRED: Committee accuses police chief of being too strict to skate on the thin ice of a frozen city pond.

"It's been pretty vague to me," Sparks said of the ruckus behind his job loss. "They haven't told me anything that has made a lot of sense." The three-member Police Committee of the City Council, Sparks said, accused him of "being too strict on my employees."

But Sparks did say that some of his disgruntled ex-employees, including officers and a dispatcher, had accused him of being "too strict" with his people who did not always follow police policy.

The ex-dispatcher "got her feelings hurt when she was reprimanded for violating a written policy of the department," Sparks said. She resigned.

"You've got to have a set of rules and see that people go by them," the ex-chief said.

"We've had a very effective police department," Sparks said. "I think it's very well respected" in West Texas.

Nevertheless, Sparks said, the Police Committee, made up of Baum, and Councilmen Brian Bassham and Bob Reily, "listened to them (the disgruntled ex-employees of the police department) and took action accordingly.

"I think it's just a good example of small-town politics," Sparks, 41, said Saturday over the flap that ended his six-year career with the police department in this farming town of 4,700 people. "They just fired me, cut-and-dried. That's it."

The Police Committee started investigating Sparks about a month ago, Baum said, following complaints from the ex-dispatcher and others.

"It's not a vendetta," Baum said, but rather "reckless use of his office" and a "loss of confidence" in Sparks by the Police Committee. "His actions results in a loss of confidence," Baum said.

"There was a morale problem in the police department," the mayor, 54, added.

Sparks' actions as police chief did not have any adverse effects on the public safety, Baum said.

"The citizenry, I think, had no perception whatsoever of what's happening," he said. "We have a very low crime rate. We're thankful for that. It's a compliment to the officers ... and, in part, to Bobby Sparks as police chief."

Even so, Baum said that "the police department needed to take a different direction" under a new chief.

Baum, a radio-station operator who worked in Midland and Big Spring before he moved to Colorado City 10 years ago, said that "the lure of Colorado City is just that small-town friendliness."

Police Lt. Patrick "Pat" Taylor, acting police chief, said Sparks was constant in his role as chief.

"He was the same on Monday as he was on Friday," said Taylor, 32. "And that means a lot in this business.

"If you were right," Taylor said of Sparks, "he'd stand with you. And if you were wrong, and you were truthful with him, you'd have to take your medicine. And if you lied to him, you had better be ready to pay the price. He wasn't going to put up with that. That's pretty much how he ran the show here."

Sparks, Taylor said, organized and enforced effective drug-enforcement and burglary-prevention and apprehension policies.

Sparks, who was raised in Colorado City, variously had served as a hardware store owner, police chief for the nearby Loraine community and Mitchell County deputy sheriff before Brenda Hammond, now the ex-city manager, hired him in 1985.

"Bobby was a good police chief," said Mrs. Hammond, who resigned last December over what she called a "vendetta" that caught up with Sparks. Sparks, who is considering filing a lawsuit against the city over the loss of his job, had been paid $28,785 a year as police chief.

The supposed vendetta was a form of harrassment which, Mrs. Hammond said, was launched by City Councilman Gary Redwine and was carried out by Redwine and councilmen Rex Thackerson and Brian Bassham.

Before Redwine was elected to the City Council in 1989, he had been "caught" winter ice-skating on Ruddick Park "when the ice was thin" — so thin that the city manager thought Redwine might fall through the ice, drown, and the city would be liable for his misfortune.

Mrs. Hammond, informed of the ice-skating, told the police chief. He in turn dispatched officers to the pond to get Redwine and anybody else off the ice, she said.

"It's not safe," Mrs. Hammond had reasoned. "It's too much liability for the city to incur. That was my only concern."

Redwine was "very disturbed" and vowed to run for City Council "and get me (the city manager) fired, and then he would take care of Bobby Sparks," Mrs. Hammond said.

Redwine disagreed.

The vendetta accusation is "ridiculous," Redwine, 39, said. "That's awfully trivial. It's really a joke."

Besides, Redwine, who calls himself a "blue-collar working guy," isn't "powerful enough" to carry out a vendetta to get rid of the city manager and the police chief, he said.

After the ice-skating incident, Redwine said he went over to a nearby frozen lake.

"I like to ice-skate," he said. "I'm no Olympic threat to anyone. I enjoy ice-skating. I was seizing the moment."

Before Sparks was hired in 1985, Mrs. Hammond said, there "basically" was "no law enforcement" in Colorado City.

"Nobody had ever worked drug enforcement," she said. "He loved his hometown."

In mid-December, Mrs. Hammond resigned her post due to the "lack of cooperation on part of the City Council" and the absence of a "direct line off trust.

"Everything was being questioned," she said. "Scrutiny is fine. I don't have any problem with that, but it was to the point of mistrust."

Early in 1991, the investigation into Sparks was launched.

After several closed-door "executive sessions," including sessions with Sparks, the Police Committee recommended that Sparks be fired by Interim City Manager Glenna Garrett, the city secretary. Last week, Mrs. Garrett fired the police chief.

On Monday, Buddy Foster of Pecos is to take over as city manager and, with the advice of the Police Committee, is to seek out a new police chief.

"There were some internal problems with the police department," Mrs. Garrett noted. And the Police Committee's investigation was "to determine if there were "real or imagined problems" involving Sparks, she said. Those problems had "nothing to do with the safety of the public."

The decision to recommend Sparks' firing was a "hard decision" for the Police Committee, Mrs. Garrett said. "I felt like their decision was the correct one for the good of the police department as well as for the good of the community."

The Colorado City notoriety arising out of the resignation of the city manager and firing of the police chief promoted Mrs. Garrett to lament: "We're good for bad news."

However, she said, "On the whole, you are going to have turbulent times ever so often. It will even out, and everything will go all right," Mrs. Garrett said.

"We've got some good things to look forward to. This is not going to be a permanent scar on the city. It's just one of those things that happens."

Gates faces toughest crisis of stormy career

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The savage beating of a black motorist has sparked the worst crisis yet for Police Chief Daryl F. Gates, a hard-nosed lawman whose stormy tenure has been marked by allegations of racism and brutality.

In the two weeks since officers pummeled 25-year-old Rodney King, community and civil rights groups have pressed their demands for Gates' resignation.

"The chief has to bear the responsibility for what took place in the Rodney King incident," said civil rights attorney Melanie Lomax, a member of the city's part-time Police Commission.

"His history of intemperate remarks gives the bad apples in the department some form of license to cross the line," she said.

Protected from immediate dismissal by civil service laws, Gates has responded to the demands for his ouster with characteristic defiance.

"Anyone who thinks I'm going to slink away is wrong," he declared after hearing 400 angry blacks and Hispanics demand his ouster during a Police Commission hearing last week.

"The more they scream for his removal ... the more the quiet Daryl Gates is going to stay around," said Gates' predecessor, state Sen. Ed Davis. "Daryl Gates is a very fine chief of police."

In Bermuda, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Saturday that President Bush fully supports the Justice Department's decision to probe the "shocking" beating of King. Bush had singled out Gates for praise in a recent speech at a crime summit, a few hours before a videotape of the police beating was shown on national television.

Officers who stopped King for speeding after what they claimed was a high-speed chase clubbed him dozens of times with their batons, kicked him and shot him with an electric stun gun. A resident of the neighborhood videotaped the beating.

A six-minute audiotape of radio communications made during the car chase leading to the March 3 arrest and beating did not back up police accounts that King's car had traveled at speeds up to 115 mph.

The only mention of speed was made by an unidentified California Highway Patrol officer who was chasing King's car on a suburban street. The officer tells a police dispatcher, "They're about 55 miles an hour, I think."

The audiotape concludes with a mention of police officers leaving their cars.

The calls for Gates' resignation continued Saturday, with the Rev. Jesse Jackson urging protesters gathered outside police headquarters to demonstrate until the chief steps down.

"We the people must march until justice is won," Jackson told about 200 protesters, including actors Alec Baldwin and Kim Basinger.

Three officers and their supervising sergeant have been indicted on felony charges in the beating. Justice Department attorneys are investigating whether 11 other officers who stood by during the beating should face civil rights charges, the Los Angeles Times reported Saturday, quoting unidentified federal officials.

Gates, 64, chief for 13 of his 42 years with the Police Department, long has been the target of activists angered by his officers' strong-arm tactics and his alleged insensitivity to minorities.

Gates' gaffes include his assertion in 1982 that several blacks died as a result of police chokeholds because arteries in the necks of black people "do not open up as fast as they do in normal people."

When Hispanic officers complained in the 1980s that they frequently were passed over for promotion, Gates called them lazy.

Last September, he told a U.S. Senate committee that casual drug users "ought to be taken out and shot."

Far more alarming to human rights groups is what they contend is a history of brutality in the Police Department under Gates' tenure.

"The record is so crystal clear that it is unarguable," said Henry W. McGee Jr., a professor of law at the University of California, Los Angeles.

Many rank-and-file police officers have a different view. All of the major officers' organizations have endorsed the chief's refusal to step down, including the Association of Black Law Enforcement Officers.

"By supporting him, I think everyone agrees that what happened was an atrocity," said Sgt. Emilio Perez, president of the 1,000-member Latin American Law Enforcement Association. "I'm frustrated by what happened and at the same time I'm glad it came to light so we can take the ship we're on and adjust the course and provide a better service to the community."

Despite the support, Gates' relations with minority leaders took another turn for the worse in a Friday meeting at his office. Gates opened the meeting by insisting the beating was an aberration and repeated his refusal to resign, said Mark Ridley-Thomas of the civil rights group the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

"He just doesn't get it," Ridley-Thomas said.

Minorities commonly are victims of brutality, magazine poll finds

NEW YORK (AP) — Two news magazines released polls Saturday showing most Americans believe there is significant police brutality against minorities nationwide, but few think it happens very often in their community.

A Newsweek poll of 763 people taken Thursday and Friday found 62 percent said there is "very great" or "considerable" police brutality around the country.

A Time-CNN poll of 500 people Wednesday found 9 percent think police use violence against private citizens in their community "very often," 13 percent "fairly often" and 48 percent "on occasion."

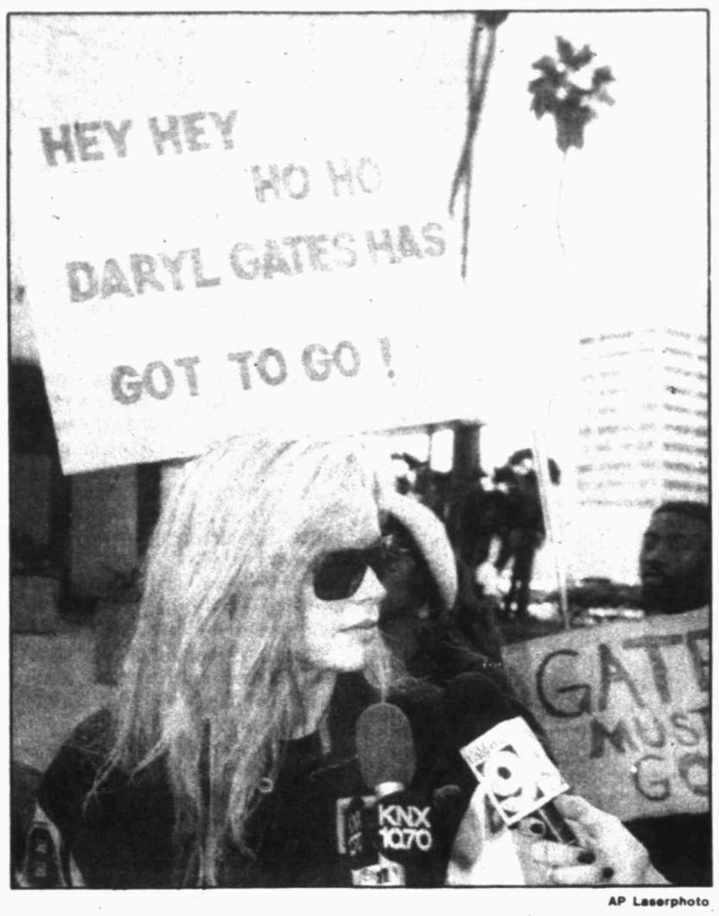

The polls came as Los Angeles Police Chief Daryl F. Gates came under increasing pressure to resign. Community and civil rights groups charge he sanctioned a racist atmosphere in which white officers seriously injured a black speeding suspect March 3 in a beating captured on videotape.

Three out of seven people in the Time poll said they think the clubbing was racially motivated. Half said Gates should be held responsible for the conduct of his officers, but only 15 percent said Gates should resign over the incident.

The Newsweek poll phrased the question differently, asking whether Gates should remain in office; 32 percent said yes, 45 percent said no.

Forty-four percent said there is more crime in their neighborhood than a year ago, Newsweek reported.

The margin of sampling error is plus or minus 4 percentage points for Newsweek's poll and 4.5 points for Time-CNN's.

Police-radio contact appears to contradict high-speed chase claim

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An audiotape of radio contact between police dispatchers and officers pursing a motorist who later was beaten appears to contradict police claims that they were led on a high-speed chase.

Officers contended that Rodney King, 25, was driving more than 100 mph and raced through red lights during the pursuit that led to his arrest and beating March 3.

But the only mention of speed on the audiotape, released Friday by the Police Department, is by an unidentified California Highway Patrol officer, who tells a dispatcher that King's car is traveling at 55 mph.

The tape also suggests that King stopped at a red light at least once before police pulled him over. Still, King failed to yield to pursuing patrol cars, according to the tape.

The audiotape concludes with one officer saying police officers are leaving their cars. The beating by officers that followed was captured on videotape by a resident of the neighborhood.

The audiotape begins with a highway patrol officer saying he is in pursuit of a vehicle. A dispatcher asks where the chase is taking place and what the officers are pursuing.

The highway patrol officer responds, "Well, just a second (pause). It was a failure to yield at this time, and it's a white Hyundai."

The dispatcher alerts other units.

Dispatcher: "OK."

"We are attempting to find out which units they are ... the units are broadcasting, the CHP is broadcasting."

The police car then notifies dispatchers it has located the pursuit.

Later, a police officer tells the dispatchers: "We're southbound at Foothill straight Van Nuys. The vehicle stopped at the light, but failed to yield to the police unit."

A dispatcher responds: "Vehicle stopped at the light, southbound Foothill from Van Nuys ... still refusing to yield."

The Police Department patrol car: "There are two male blacks driving the vehicle. We need an air unit if you can get one up here."

An unidentified pilot responds: "Unit 1 en route."

A 35-second silence follows word from a police officer that officers are in a "code 6," meaning they are leaving their cars. An officer then notifies dispatch that "there appears to be sufficient units here."

Three officers and their supervising sergeant were indicted on felony charges in the beating. Justice Department attorneys are looking into whether 11 other officers who stood idly by during the beating should face civil rights charges, the Los Angeles Times reported Saturday, quoting unidentified federal officials.

READING: Phonetics program time-consuming were in, MISD administrators realized there was a need to rejuvenate reading. An intervention program, Reading Recovery, was implemented in September to identify poor readers in the first grade.

"If problem readers aren't caught at an early age, or later with expensive remedial programs, then they often become social liabilities since they will lack the basic skills needed for self-support and for making an economic contribution to society," said Peggy Holland, MISD reading coordinator.

Although Reading Recovery has a high success rate and it returns pupils to the mainstream quickly, Ms. Holland admitted that the program won't succeed for all children.

Reading Recovery, which encompasses a whole language approach to learning, won't help children with learning differences who need to study language with a phonics approach.

Teachers and parents of children diagnosed with dyslexia have begun pleading with the school board to implement Alphabetic Phonics, a slow and intense method of teaching children to read by coding words.

While the word "dyslexia" has often been associated with children who invert letters or "write backwards," the definition has become broader and more general.

The State Board of Education defines dyslexia as "a disorder manifested by difficulty in learning to read despite conventional instruction, adequate intelligence, and socio-cultural opportunity."

The American Medical Association defines dyslexia as "a specific reading disability characterized by a difficulty in coping with written symbols."

Several studies indicate about 15-20 percent of all children exhibit dyslexic tendencies which will prevent them from learning to read by conventional methods.

Alphabetic Phonics is an expensive, time-consuming program. The fee to train teachers is $2,000 per teacher and students must remain in the program for two years.

Despite the investment of time and money, however, proponents of Alphabetic Phonics say dyslexic children can learn no other way. In fact, one teacher recently started teaching junior high school students the phonics program.

The Goddard Junior High school students, all of whom have above average IQs, have been in special education or remedial classes all through school.

"No other program worked for them," said Margie Lee, a longtime educator who was trained in the program at her own expense.

Ms. Lee recently retired from the school district but returned to teach Alphabetic Phonics in pilot programs, including the one for the Goddard students.

"Schools have failed these children," she said. "Nobody is to blame. The children have had to go outside public schools to get help in the past, and two of the students even have parents who are teachers."

Some parents with dyslexic children have sought help outside the school district in the form of private tutors for their children. Others, like Alma Thompson, have elected to teach their children themselves.

While MISD is getting its feet wet with the phonics program, other schools in the area have embraced it.

The Ector County Independent School District board is so taken with Alphabetic Phonics that it approved training 11 teachers in the program.

Trinity School, a private Midland school, uses a similar phonics program as its sole method of teaching reading.

MISD has trained one teacher in the program, and a handful of other teachers have taken the training outside on their own time and at their own expense.

While the phonics program has been in ECISD schools for several years, the concept is relatively new to Midland.

"When the Midland school district sent me to be trained, we really didn't know what we were getting into," said Jane Rambo. "I really admire the fact that the school district is working so hard to expand the program to meet the needs of different children."

Ms. Holland said the school district is committed to exploring the program. "We are doing a needs assessment study to find out how many students we have who may be dyslexic," she said.

"We know that Reading Recovery is not for every child, but not every child needs to have the reading process slowed down as intensively as the phonics program does," Ms. Holland said.

"Alphabetic Phonics is expensive and time consuming," Ms. Lee allowed.

"It requires a two-year training commitment for teachers alone," she said. "But we must not deny children who need the program. These children are some of our brightest children. They lack talent for the language, and if we don't help them we will never know about their other talents."

Ms. Holland said the Midland school district has pilot phonics programs in one junior high school and one elementary school.

"If the program gets results, then that is what we want — we cannot deny results when children are achieving," Ms. Holland said. "It's frustrating to parents, teachers — and even more so — to a child to not be able to read."

Tutor prefers phonics method

Reading Recovery or Alphabetic Phonics — which program is best for beginning readers?

Reading Recovery, an intervention program, provides one-on-one assistance for problem readers.

The Alphabetic Phonics program, which helps dyslexic children to decode words through the systematic teaching of phonics, is highly successful.

Proponents of both programs admit that neither program will help all children learn to read.

But proponents of Alphabetic Phonics say dyslexic children cannot learn to read and write through conventional programs such as Reading Recovery, Midland school district's intervention program.

Margie Lee, a retired school teacher who has more than 28 years of experience with problem readers, said, "Many of us believe that Alphabetic Phonics is the program of choice — not only for dyslexic learners — but for any problem reader. In fact, some of us believe that many reading problems would be eliminated if all children were taught from the beginning with such a program."

Ms. Lee, who teaches the program privately to nine children in her home, said in a five-day period recently, she logged 36 phone calls from parents requesting information about the program.

The former educator, who intended to "take it easy" during her retirement years, is working full-time between teaching the program in her home and in the public schools part-time. In fact, she has converted a bedroom into a classroom with several desks and a chalkboard. It is no longer adequate.

"I am now fixing up my garage to make it into a classroom," Ms. Lee said, admitting that she was weary with trying to keep up with a growing number of students.

"There clearly is a need for this program," she said. "I would love to see it implemented in the public schools, but in the meantime ... I can't turn these children down. It breaks my heart to see these children who are so bright, but so frustrated."

Sharon Dougherty, whose 10-year-old daughter, Beverly, is Ms. Lee's pupil, said, "This program has got to be in the schools. There are so many children who need this program, quite a few in my daughter's classroom alone."

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Margie Lee, a retired teacher, assists Beverly Dougherty, 10, with Alphabetic Phonics in the bedroom classroom in Ms. Lee's home. Ms. Lee is leading a campaign to institute the reading program, primarily for dyslexic children, into Midland public schools.

Alma Thompson, a former Midland teacher and the mother of a child diagnosed with dyslexia, said that parents whose children are too intelligent to qualify for learning-disabled programs but who are behind in reading for their grade level are in a quandary. "They are forced to look outside the school district for help and many parents can't afford private tutoring," she said.

Children must be at least two years behind in reading to qualify for Alphabetic Phonics in the school district.

Ms. Thompson said her son is less than two years behind in reading, "but still is unable to catch up." Since her son doesn't qualify for any school district programs, she elected to teach him the phonics program through a 400-hour video tape series. "The tape series is expensive, but not as expensive as private tutoring over the long run," she said.

"Alphabetic Phonics is a proven program," Ms. Lee said. "It has been around for 20 years with results to back it up."

The program is such a hit in Ector County Independent School District that the district now has trained 11 teachers in the program.

More than a dozen parents and teachers of dyslexic children called to express their satisfaction with the program and several parents complained that area tutors were closing their enrollments since they already were teaching as many students as they were comfortable teaching.

So, why doesn't the Midland school district embrace the program?

"For one thing, Alphabetic Phonics is a remedial program and it takes two years or more to begin to get good results," said Peggy Holland, reading coordinator for Midland Independent School District.

Jane Rambo, the only MISD teacher trained in the phonics program, also noted that it "is a scheduling nightmare."

"Students can't come into the program once it has started," she said. "So, you end up with waiting lists, and students waiting to get help."

Ms. Holland also said, "The program is a highly intensive phonics program which has little emphasis on comprehension." Because of this, Ms. Holland said Alphabetic Phonics would have to be supplemented with a program teaching comprehension.

Alphabetic Phonics teachers said comprehension is taught in the later part of the course.

In an effort to catch problem readers in the first grade, the school district implemented Reading Recovery this school year. The intervention program "involves reading words in context, rather than in isolation like Alphabetic Phonics," Ms. Holland said.

"We know that Reading Recovery is not for every child, but not every child needs to have the reading process slowed down as intensively as the phonics program does," she said.

Ms. Holland said Reading Recovery is a short-term program which exits children from the program within 12-14 weeks.

"And longitudal studies show that fewer than 1 percent of children who complete Reading Recovery will ever need remediation in any form," she said. "The children do not regress, but rather, they stay at or above average. They don't just make gains, but are moved out of the lower quartile, or bottom 25 percent of their grade."

Ms. Holland allowed that pupils who don't succeed in Reading Recovery may be candidates for Alphabetic Phonics.

"But one of the problems with dealing with dyslexia is that "little more is known about it than was known 20 years ago."

Ms. Lee agreed, but said, "There has been much discussion and debate on the definition of dyslexia ... too much. The labels may change, but the problem does not change. To deny the existence of dyslexia is to deny the very existance of the sufferers themselves."

STATE: Poll indicates 91 percent of Texans oppose income tax

State welfare officials also say they need $3 billion more to meet a rising caseload, and the state is nearly doubling its prison capacity.

The nine other states that do not tax incomes are Alaska, Florida, Nevada, New Hampshire, South Dakota, Washington, Wyoming, Connecticut and Tennessee. The governors of Connecticut and Tennessee, two states also facing financial difficulties, have proposed taxing incomes.

From 1971 to 1984, Texas managed to avoid raising any taxes while its population increased by 25 percent. But oil and gas taxes were providing 25 percent of the state's revenues in those days. As oil prices fell, production declined, and those taxes now bring in only 8 percent of all revenues, with sales taxes accounting for 56 percent.

Since 1984, the state sales tax has risen from 4 percent to 6¼ percent, and city and county taxes add as much as 2 percent more.

Bullock has proposed a 5 percent tax on personal income over $25,000 and an 8 percent corporate income tax to replace the current franchise tax on business capital. The taxes would raise $8 billion in 1992-93.

"If Texas doesn't do it today, in 1993 this state will be just exactly like Rhode Island ... where they've actually furloughed state services," he said.

State GOP Chairman Fred Meyer says Republicans will fight the proposal and Gov. Ann Richards, a Democrat, said she won't approve any new taxes until she decides voters are convinced government is running as efficiently as possible. House Speaker Gib Lewis estimated Bullock's proposal had the support of about 40 members of the 150-member House, in which Democrats hold the majority.

"What it will take (to pass) is a perception on the floor of the House that voting for an income tax will not spell political death," said Rep. James Hury, who chairs the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee.

However, several lawmakers said it was remarkable the proposal was getting serious consideration in a state where House members once routinely proposed a constitutional ban on income taxes.

Rep. Ron Wilson, who sponsored a failed proposal to create a state lottery, says unhappiness over the tax proposal could make a lottery more attractive now. He estimates it could bring in $1 billion a year.

"I'm like the ugly guy at the dance," said Wilson, a Democrat. "I get better looking about 2 o'clock in the morning."

(From 1A)

Activists in the Russian Federation, which has declared sovereignty from the central government, and the three Baltic republics, which have declared independence, feared that Gorbachev would use a referendum victory to forcibly suppress their aspirations.

Six republics, representing 10 percent of the estimated 200 million Soviet voters, are boycotting the vote. They are the Baltic republics of Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia, plus Moldavia, and the Caucasus republics of Georgia and Armenia.

Gorbachev sought to calm fears and rally support in a speech that was broadcast nationally on Friday night and repeated Saturday afternoon.

"Our 'yes' will preserve the integrity of the state, which is 1,000 years old and which has been created by labor and wisdom (and) incalculable victims of many generations," Gorbachev said.

"Our 'yes' is a guarantee that never again will the flames of war scorch our country, which already has survived many trials," he said. "Our 'yes' is not the preservation of the old order with the domination of the center and leaving the republics without rights."

Public opinion polls indicated that up to 70 percent of those casting ballots would answer "yes" to the main referendum question.

Gorbachev first proposed the referendum in December in order to pressure the leaders of the 15 Soviet republics to sign his Union Treaty, which preserves the power of the central government in most economic and political decisions.

But the question does not directly address the issue of the Union Treaty. It asks: "Do you consider it necessary to preserve the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics as a renewed federation of equal, sovereign republics in which human rights and freedoms of any nationality (people of all ethnic groups) will be fully guaranteed?"

Russian Federation President Boris N. Yeltsin said Friday the question was ambiguous and that Gorbachev was using the campaign to scare people with the specter of civil war.

"However the referendum ends, the union will not fall apart. Don't frighten the people! Don't sow panic!" Yeltsin said.

"Many (voters) are confused. Above all, the question is not clear and ambiguously phrased," he said.

Gorbachev, in his speech, responded that "the question is about the destiny of the country, the destiny of our motherland, our common home, how we are going to live, how our children and grandchildren are going to live."

"The results of the referendum will not be conclusive," the chairman of the Central Electoral Commission, Vladimir P. Orlov, told the Supreme Soviet legislature on Feb. 25.

Baker heads home hopeful about Mideast peace

AP Laserphoto

Secretary of State James Baker shares a light moment with former Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze in Moscow Saturday.

By Barry Schweid
AP diplomatic writer

MOSCOW (AP) — Secretary of State James A. Baker III headed home Saturday without Soviet agreement on reducing nuclear and conventional weapons but with a hope for "true reconciliation and peace" in the Mideast.

"There has been a significant change in the region, and that has presented us with an opportunity, I think, to act as a catalyst," Baker said as he ended a 10-day postwar trip to the Middle East and Soviet Union.

But while he was optimistic about the Mideast, Baker said he'd made no headway on implementation of a treaty making historic cuts in troops, tanks and other non-nuclear weapons in Europe and on concluding a second accord to reduce long-range nuclear missile arsenals by about 30 percent.

A senior U.S. official suggested President Mikhail S. Gorbachev was hamstrung by the Soviet military.

"They are now more outspoken," the official said about the military, speaking on condition of anonymity. "They are now more vigorous in their opposition, and Gorbachev has to give greater weight to that now because of the political situation in the Soviet Union."

In fact, the official said, the Soviets didn't even want to discuss the Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty, which was to have been signed last month by President Bush and Gorbachev at a Moscow summit.

"We really didn't get into START because, well, frankly, there was no desire on the other side to engage now on START," the official said.

Baker said Friday night in Moscow the postponed summit would not be rescheduled until the treaty was completed, and U.S. officials said Baker may return in April to try again to work out the conflicts.

But Baker said en route to Ankara, Turkey, for talks with Turkish President Turgut Ozal that he had no such plans now.

The deadlock on arms control is based mostly on disputes over how to carry out the Conventional Forces in Europe treaty that Bush, Gorbachev and the leaders of 20 other NATO and Warsaw Pact nations signed in November. The treaty won't be sent to the Senate for ratification until the disputes are solved.

The biggest issue, from Baker's standpoint, is an attempt by Soviet military commanders to exempt three infantry divisions from reductions by reclassifying them as naval defense units.

A far more hopeful picture was painted of the Middle East, where Baker spent six days before going to Moscow.

"From the discussions we have had on this trip, I have gotten the distinct impression and sense that the parties to the conflict really want true reconciliation and really want to make an effort for peace," Baker said.

Keep the dream alive.

To help others is Carson's goal

Brandi Carson, a tenth grade student at Odessa High School, believes that a person in need deserves all the help they can get. She wants to go into a profession where she can try and help people out.

She doesn't think that she would get bored because every patient would have a different problem. "It would make my job educational, fun and unique," states Carson.

By attending the Summer Youth Health Career Exploration Event hosted by the West Texas Rural Health Education Center, Carson learned a lot about what different doctors do. It was a great opportunity to get to see what all goes on in the hospitals.

Carson feels that if other students had the same opportunity to attend the summer program, more would have a greater respect for the health careers.

The West Texas Rural Health Education Center is a regional program dedicated to the long-term goal of improving the supply and distribution of health and technology professionals. To achieve this goal the center provides community-based educational and career exploration programs for students in the urban underserved and rural remote areas of West Texas.

Town upset with U.S. Navy's coming, going

EDITOR'S NOTE — When the U.S. Navy sailed into western Scotland 30 years ago, there were protest demonstrations that had to be put down with firehoses. Now that the submarines and their tenders have been ordered to sail away for good, many are protesting that it will be a severe blow to the local ecomony. Old-timers say that, too, will pass.

By Jessica Baldwin

AP Laserphoto

Holy Loch, the submarine base in Dunoon, Scotland, will close sometime next year.

DUNOON, Scotland (AP) — The Cold War thaw has reached Holy Loch in the remote Scottish Highlands, where America's Poseidon submarines are pulling up anchor and taking half a town's population with them.

The 4,300 local residents and the 4,000 U.S. sailors and their dependents knew the thaw, coupled with the advent of the Trident submarines, would mean the submarine repair and refit base would go.

But the announcement in early February that Holy Loch would close sometime next year was still a blow. "Base Bombshell," cried the banner headline in the Dunoon Observer.

"It's going to be a ghost town," says taxi driver William Ferguson, who moved up to Dunoon four years ago when he couldn't find work in southern Scotland.

In the 30 years since the submarines began stealing past the blue water bays and inlets of the chilly Firth of Clyde, Dunoon has grown accustomed to bulky Chevrolets with steering wheels on the wrong side, wide accents and the ubiquitous baseball caps and tennis shoes.

Dunoon and the Navy have been bound by ties of global strategy, economic dependence and affection. Ray Michie, the local member of Parliament, says there are 200 marriages each year between U.S. sailors and western Scotland lassies.

Most of the brides eventually go to America, but some Americans stay. Keith La Manque, who married a Scottish girl, heads the local Chamber of Commerce and runs a bed and breakfast near the base.

"There's at least a dozen of us Americans who've stayed here," La Manque says. "For the ones who've left there are a lot of phone calls, and when there's another marriage people come from all over the world, from New Zealand to the United States."

When the floating dry dock Los Alamos and the first of the submarine tender ships arrived in March 1961 there were large protests — mostly by outsiders, locals say — and one confrontation in which sailors turned high-pressure hoses on protesters.

Driving the nuclear subs out of Holy Loch has been the dream of some left-wing Labor and Scottish National party members for decades. Now that it's happening, some are complaining about the financial suffering and demanding U.S. reparations.

"I did a little jig for joy when I heard the nuclear submarines were going," says James Sillars, a member of Parliament for the Scottish National Party. "We never wanted the bases and they have gone away and left us in a pretty bad position."

Brian Wilson, a Dunoon native and the Labor Party's spokesman for Scottish affairs, wants nothing from the Americans but their absence. "Dunoon has been used and abused by the American authorities for 30 years," he says.

Before March 1961, Dunoon survived on a bit of logging, some fishing, but mostly tourism. The rolling Argyllshire hills, the moderate climate, and the long sunsets reflected in the channel to the Irish Sea, provide excellent hiking, glorious views and picturesque seclusion.

The many Victorian guest houses dotting the mile-long Alexandra Parade once drew vacationers from Glasgow, 25 miles to the east by ferry and road, or 75 miles exclusively by road.

Dunoon now depends on the Americans, who directly or indirectly employ 20 percent of the local residents, according to a report by the Highlands and Islands Development Board.

The base is worth $22 million a year to Dunoon, which is isolated by the Clyde from Scotland's commercial mainstream.

"It's a devastating blow to the economy," says Ken MacTaggert, an economist with the development board.

"We feel, irrespective of the legal agreement, the U.S. Department of Defense has a moral obligation to provide some compensation. We understand in other places, like the Philippines, they have done so."

About two miles from Dunoon's center, Navy boats ferry sailors to Los Alamos and the tender ship, USS Simon Lake, anchored in the bay.

Almost all of the sailors work on the floating base and 1,100 single sailors live there, too.

Taxis wait at the end of the long, guarded pier for sailors coming ashore to shop, drink or just kill time.

At $5 a trip into Dunoon, the sailors support 130 cabs — more per capita than anywhere in Britain, says the Taxi Owner's Association.

"Most businesses will have to cut back, not necessarily pare down staff but cut back on some of the merchandise," says a shopkeeper in Bells of Dunoon, where many sailors buy their tweed Sherlock Holmes caps or trace their ancestral tartans.

Across the street at the Argyll Hotel, owner Murray Fletcher says, "We will recover, but it's a sad fact of life."

A 31-year-old Navy postal clerk from Garden Grove, Calif., who wanted to be called Tim, has been in Dunoon for five years. He fell for one of the many Scottish girls who come hunting in Dunoon's bars and now has a 2-year-old child. But he says he'll be going back alone.

"My girlfriend and me are like this right now," he says, holding his hands wide apart.

"People don't realize we feel real bad," Tim adds, between pulls on a bottle of beer at Copurtney's bar where the sailors' softball trophies are on display. "The decision came real quick. At least they could have given them a few years, but we'll just be out of here — boom."

Trudy Gillette was thrilled when her American husband, Keith, got a second tour as one of three Navy dentists at Holy Loch and she isn't keen to leave their spacious house, near a memorial to the Lamont clan slaughtered by the Campbells in 1646.

Mrs. Gillette is president of the 65-member Officers' Wives Club, which organizes an annual art show and last year donated more than $10,000 to local charities.

John Thomson, 80, Dunoon's last mayor before the post was eliminated in 1975, refuses to be drawn into the doom and gloom.

Standing near a statue of Highland Mary atop a rocky promontory overlooking the sea, he says, "There's an old Scots saying: 'We never died a winter yet.'

"It will be a challenge for us, that's the Scots' way of looking at it."

$154 million Capitol extension project takes shape

AP Laserphoto

Capitol architect Allen McCree explains the features of a subterranean rotunda, which, when finished, will serve as the central court of the Capitol's expansion.

By Susan Hightower
Associated Press writer

AUSTIN (AP) — What looks like a hole in the ground is really the key to an ambitious $154 million, 20-year project to restore the Texas State Capitol, struggling to retain its dignity under the strain of twice the intended number of staffers and up to 1½ million visitors a year.

Going underground was the only way to expand without detracting from the Victorian architecture of the 103-year-old Capitol, said architect Allen McCree.

Planners hope to renew the Victorian-era splendor of the legislative hall and crown it with an avenue modeled as "the Champs Elysees of Texas."

The project, funded in 1989, resulted from the realization that the Capitol needed repairs, was overcrowded, was a fire hazard and not readily accessible to the handicapped, said Capitol Architect Allen McCree.

"It's a safety issue more than anything else," he said.

McCree, an Austin architect hired to oversee the project in September 1988, said he became convinced he would have to go underground to modernize the Renaissance Revival statehouse after traveling around the country with the American Institute of Architects Committee on Historic Resources.

"I saw some bad mistakes that had been made by people trying to add on to what we call Beaux Arts, Renaissance Revival architecture," he said. "Victorians loved symmetry, and so with that classical revival, it's symmetrical perfectly about one axis and almost symmetrical about the other axis.

"And so any way you add on to a building like that in a visible manner, you're going to mess it up. There have been a number of states that have demonstrated that," he said.

The decision to build on the Capitol's north side came easy, McCree said.

"I knew that I didn't want to stick a shovel in the east, west or south, where the beautiful trees are, and the monuments, and kids slide down the hills on cardboard. Other states have gone into their historic grounds with parking lots and even buildings, and that was a bad mistake," he said.

Seven months of digging have resulted in a 60-foot-deep, four-

Peace cripples market for yellow ribbon

HOUSTON (AP) — Some local retailers are paying the price for peace.

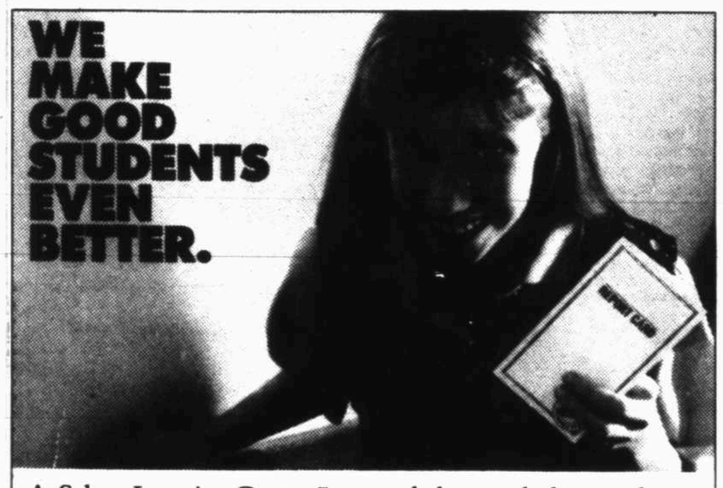

The abrupt end to the Persian Gulf War knocked the bottom out of the market for yellow ribbon, maps of the Middle East and books about Saddam Hussein.

"All of the sudden, the war is over and we've got yellow ribbon piled up all over the place," said store manager Dyantha Hammons of So-Fro Fabrics in Memorial City.

When the war started, the store couldn't get enough yellow ribbon to satisfy customers' demands. By the time new shipments of ribbon arrived from the manufacturing houses, the war was over.

But the end of the war hasn't stopped all star-spangled shopping.

New shipments of American flags are giving the Capitol Flag Co. a chance to restock its depleted shelves. But the company still can't meet all of its demand, such as the order for 500, 3-by-5 polyester flags by the Lions Club of Wichita Falls.

EXPAND: Capitol is overcrowded, in disrepair, fire hazard acre hole.

Some 680,000 tons of rock was removed in 40,000 truckloads, while workers in the nearby Supreme Court, Reagan and Texas Employment Commission buildings suffered through noise, vibration and dust. Traffic and parking have been rerouted, meaning long walks for some workers.

Construction has begun, with three 150-foot tall cranes towering near the top of the Capitol as workers pour the basement slab, columns and drilled piers.

McCree said the complex, intended to house about half the state's lawmakers and 1,330 legislative employees, is on schedule for its November 1992 completion date.

When finished, the four-story underground extension is intended to provide office space for 100 representatives and 10 senators. The bottom two levels are to provide about 700 parking spaces, while tunnels will connect the annex to the Capitol and four surrounding buildings.

The most striking feature of the expansion will be a two-story "reverse rotunda," which will be open at the top to provide "a burst of light and air."

Also in the extension will be 16 committee rooms, an auditorium, cafeteria, press area, book store and loading dock.

The "roof" of the building will be covered with two to six feet of soil, and will be landscaped and covered with trees temporarily moved from the site.

'It's (expansion) going to very greatly facilitate the legislative process, particularly on committee work.'

— Allen McCree, Capitol architect

Six skylights will cover the main corridors, where as many offices as possible will front.

The extension will be highly energy-efficient because it will have no outside skin, said McCree, and should be close enough to the chambers that it will ease the movement of people and equipment.

"It's going to very greatly facilitate the legislative process, particularly on committee work," he said.

The next phase of construction will be to begin digging the tunnel under the existing Capitol to connect it to the extension, he said.

The restoration, targeted at patching up the Capitol and returning it to the way it was from its 1888 dedication to 1915, is scheduled to work around legislative sessions and be completed in 1995.

Though not yet funded, several other steps could in the long term fulfill the board's mandate to restore the Capitol's historic grounds, McCree said.

"In the Capitol grounds, we have evidence there was a large pond in the southwest corner with a rustic band shell on the shores of the pond. On the east grounds, there was what they called the grotto, which wAs an igloo made out of honeycomb rock with a spring bubbling out of the side of it. There was a lagoon with willow trees trailing in the water, huge elephant ears, a little Japanese bridge that went across one end, lilly pads" and 2-foot-long carp, he said.

The six blocks of Congress Avenue north of the Capitol would become a version of the Washington Mall, with gardens, benches and street lighting, open to cars but intended for walkers.

Also in the works could be a museum, the Texas History Gallery, in a restored General Land Office building, and perhaps the return of the historic trolley that used to run along Congress Avenue.

"The board has a very strong sense of legacy in this whole operation, recognizing that the building belongs to all Texans," McCree said.

Playoff-bound Rebs lose

By Joe Wyatt
Staff Writer

The San Angelo Bobcats used three second-half goals to overcome a 1-0 halftime deficit and defeat Midland Lee 3-1 in the regular season soccer finale for both teams Saturday at the Lee field.

Still, the Rebels were smiling. Thanks to their 7-3-2 record in league play, the Rebels now advance to bi-district play as the District 3 runners-up.

Lee is tentatively scheduled to make its first-ever soccer playoff appearance in a meeting with District 4 champion Wichita Falls Rider next Saturday in Abilene.

"I'm proud of these kids," Lee soccer coach Eddie Bull said. "These seniors have been with me for three years, and I told them when we started out that we'd get into the playoffs — and we did."

San Angelo's comeback left the District 3 champion Bobcats without a defeat in league play. San Angelo, 15-1-2 overall, finished with a 10-0-2 loop record and will face District 4 runner-up Fort Worth Richland in its bi-district round, March 26 in Abilene.

That playoff scenario leaves Midland High (6-2-4) as the odd team out. The Bulldogs equaled Lee in win-loss percentage at .667 in district play, but the Rebels advance to the playoffs thanks to their

Bulldogs in right place at right time

■ After letting an early lead evaporate, Midland High comes back to beat Abilene High 11-5 to even its district baseball record at 1-1.

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

Everything seemed to be going "right" for Midland High Saturday as the Bulldogs used a 14-hit attack and a six-run sixth inning to beat Abilene High 11-5 in District 4-5A baseball at Angels Stadium.

What was so right about the win, aside from evening MHS' district record, was that 11 of the 'Dogs' hits went in the general direction of right field.

That turn of events was by no mistake. First-year MHS head coach Rick Wood has been preaching the benefits of going the other way from the first day of practice, and the message appears to have gotten through just in time for league play.

In its district opener Tuesday at Midland Lee, MHS also smacked 14 hits, half of which went to right, but came up on the short end of the scoreboard 10-9 after leading most of the game.

In other 4-5A games Saturday, Midland Lee claimed sole possession of the league lead with a 4-1 win over Abilene Cooper while San Angelo defeated Odessa High 8-3. While Lee is 2-0 and San Angelo 1-0, MHS, OHS and Cooper are lumped at 1-1.

Saturday against AHS, the Bulldogs again let a lead slip away (MHS led 4-1 at one point) and were tied 5-5 going into the bottom of the sixth.

But this time the 'Dogs were the ones who came up with the late-inning heroics. With runners on second and third and one out, MHS first baseman Tyler Beard ripped a grounder down the first-base line that was barely fair for a two-run triple that broke the tie.

That hit seemed to open the flood gates, as James Madrid followed Beard with his third hit of the day to chase Eagle starting pitcher Eric Montelongo and make the score 8-5. AHS reliever Eddie Gonzales fared little better, as Jeremy Burton doubled to earn his third hit in three at-bats for a trio of RBI, and Jimmy Stanton capped a 3-for-4 day with a single before the Eagles could get out of the inning.

"In the last game against Lee, we really came out of our batting slump. We've

Lee defeats Cooper, 4-1

Staff Report

ABILENE — Midland Lee wrested a 4-1 win from No. 4 ranked Abilene Cooper here in District 4-5A baseball Saturday, and in the process found itself alone on top the league standings.

The Rebel win, coupled with Odessa High's 8-3 loss to San Angelo, makes Lee the only team in the district at 2-0 (9-5 overall). Cooper and OHS are both 1-1 and tied with Midland High, while San Angelo is 1-0.

A three-run fifth inning allowed the Rebs to be perfect through two thirds of the opening trio of district games that scared Lee head coach Jesse Benavidez.

"The kids played really well and got up for the game. When they saw they had a chance to beat Cooper, they really rallied. Cooper was a little flat I think, and not ready for us," Benavidez said.

"I just hope our guys come back down to earth and get ready to play Odessa Permian Tuesday. We're going to celebrate a little more right now, but then it's time to get ready for Mojo."

Senior left-hander Jeff Johnston struck seven Coogar batters as he went the distance for Lee. Through nine innings of work in 4-5A play, Johnston (5-1) has not allowed an earned run.

It's 'deja vu' for Midland's Houston at UIL swim meet

Staff Report

AUSTIN — There was an instant replay in the state swim meet's 100-yard butterfly here Saturday and that meant another third place finish for Midland High junior Matthew Houston.

Murray Easton of San Antonio Churchill swam 49.29 seconds in the event to win for the second consecutive year while Conroe McCullough's Jay Martin was second again with a 49.50. Houston again finished third with a 50.62. None of the three swimmers beat the times they posted last year in this same event.

Odessa Permian's Jamie Bobo placed fifth in the 100 backstroke and was the only other District 4-5A swimmer to earn a top six finish. No other results were available from Austin lower than sixth place.

Conroe McCullough easily captured its third consecutive girls title while Plano won the boys competition.

McCullough had 186 points to outdistance Houston Clear Lake and Humble Kingwood, who each had 95.

In boys competition, Plano had a slightly tougher race finishing with 179 points to Conroe McCullough's 120. San Antonio Churchill had 102 and Houston Clear Lake 100.

Seven state records fell during the finals Saturday afternoon.

Indira Allick of San Antonio Madison broke the record in the 200-yard individual medley with a time of 2:01.69 seconds.

The Sweet 16 of the NCAA tournament includes a lot of familiar faces.

There's Duke, in the final 16 for the sixth straight year and going for its fourth consecutive appearance in the Final Four.

There's Seton Hall, which lost the 1989 final to Michigan.

In the East, Temple beat Richmond 77-64 and No. 14 Oklahoma State topped North Carolina State 73-64. In the Southeast, No. 12 Kansas beat Pittsburgh 77-66 and No. 3 Indiana defeated Florida State 82-60.

In the Midwest, No. 6 Duke beat Iowa 85-70 and Connecticut eliminated Xavier of Ohio 66-50. And in the West, No. 8 Arizona beat Brigham Young 76-61 and No. 13 Seton Hall downed Creighton 81-69.

Duke (28-7) closed the first half with a 13-1 run against Iowa. Christian Laettner scored 19 points for the Blue Devils, Thomas Hill added 17 and Grant Hill 14.

"We attacked the basket really hard when we broke pressure and that's why we had a 15-point lead," Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said.

James Moses scored 17 of his 23 points for seventh-seeded Iowa (21-11) in the second half, but the Hawkeyes couldn't overcome a 15-point halftime deficit. Acie Earl added 15 points for the Hawkeyes, who made 16 first-half turnovers.

"That was the story of us getting so far behind," Iowa coach Tom Davis said. "We turned it over so frequently we couldn't get our offense going. They did a lot of things to disrupt us."

Terry Brown, rebounding from a sub-par performance, scored 22 points for the Jayhawks (24-7). Brown, who scored just two points in the Jayhawks' first-round victory over New Orleans, made consecutive 3-pointers early in the second half to help Kansas take control.

(From 1B)

Conroe McCullough's relay combination of Tara Leach, Lisa Rhodes, Syzanne Steres and Lori Walker set two new records.

Their time of 3:30.10 broke the 400-yard freestyle relay record by more than two seconds. They broke their own record of 1:37.37 in the 200-yard freestyle relay with a 1:37.08.

This is the first year the UIL has had the 200-yard freestyle relay. McCullough set the first record in Friday's preliminaries.

Russo Wyatt of Plano dominated the boys' competition, setting two individual records and participating in relay teams that set two more records.

Wyatt had a 1:48.47 in the 200-yard individual medley to break the old record by more than one second. His 50.06 in the 100-yard backstroke broke the previous mark of 50.74.

Plano's relay teams set a new mark in the 200-freestyle relay with a 1:23.58, breaking their own mark set in preliminaries.

Plano also had a 1:33.77 in the 200-yard medley relay to break the old mark about almost one-half of one second.

Matt Hooper set the other record in the boys' competition, eclipsing the old mark by almost four seconds. He swam a 4:21.17 race Saturday.

The Associated Press contributed to this story.

Ironically, MHS was 1-0-1 in two meetings with Lee in head-to-head competition this season, which is the first tie-breaker when teams are tied in the standings.

"It's my responsibility to coach the team," said a philosophical MHS coach Tom Esikhati. "Others have the responsibility of deciding which teams go to the playoffs and on what basis."

That decision was a matter of routine and was known before Lee took the field against San Angelo.

"The District 4-5A policy book states that the team with the highest percentage of wins will be the team that goes to the playoffs," Midland Independent School District Athletic Director Jack Tayrien said. "That's the way I interpret it, and that's the way everyone I've talked to interprets it."

But if the Rebels did not need a victory over the Bobcats, they would have liked one. And after a pair of near misses, Lee got on the scoreboard when Danny Grossman converted on a breakaway for his seventh goal of the season in the 30th minute of play. Grossman also scored both goals in the 'Dogs' 2-2 tie at San Angelo in February.

But San Angelo tied the game six minutes into the second half when Ben Henry set up the first of Aaron Loika's two goals at the doorstep of the Lee net.

"We had no doubt that we'd come back in the second half," said Henry, who finalized the scoring with his 18th tally of the campaign with five minutes left in the game. "We didn't really play our type of game in the first half, but we got it going in the second."

San Angelo coach Pete King agreed with Henry's assessment. "They (Rebels) play run-and-gun offense, and that started us running and gunning," he said.

"But that's not really our style. Once we settled down and started bringing the ball down with our passing game we were all right."

Loika's second goal also came from in close, and it gave the Bobcats a 2-1 lead in the 64th minute.

Lee wrapped up its regular season 10-4-2 overall.

Elsewhere in the District 3, Abilene High (12-8, 6-6) closed out its season with a 5-0 victory over winless Odessa High (0-16-1, 0-11-1), while Odessa Permian (5-11-2, 4-7-1) scored a 2-1 season-ending win over Abilene Cooper (7-13-0, 4-8).

Scoring

San Angelo	0	3—3

Shots on Goal: San Angelo, 3-4-7. Midland Lee, 4-6-10. Fouls: San Angelo 9, Midland Lee 13. Corner Kicks: San Angelo 0, Midland Lee 8. Goalies: San Angelo, Michael Godfrey and Kyle Elkins. Midland Lee, Freddy Silva.

MHS: Madrid, Burton lead offense

been hitting the ball where it's pitched and, as a team, we have really been hitting the ball the way we're supposed to," said Burton, a junior who started the game on the mound and delivered four solid innings before giving way to Dewayne Culpepper in the fifth.

"I feel like I worked better than I did the last time I pitched (against Lubbock Monterey). Against Monterey I really couldn't get the ball over the plate. I got a little leery in the fifth (when the Eagles scored all four earned runs credited to Burton), but I felt pretty good in the first four innings," he said.

Madrid, MHS' senior No. 1 pitcher who has been suffering from bursitis in his right shoulder, showed he was plenty effective as a designated hitter and base runner. In addition to hitting 3-for-4 with a double, he scored four runs.

Also, junior third baseman Stanton has seen his hits start falling in the gaps instead of outfielders' gloves the past few games, and attributes it to confidence.

"I have a lot of confidence in my hitting right now. I was real relaxed at the plate and had one of the best days I've had in a long time. As a team, we've been working really hard on our hitting. It's worked so far, and hopefully, it will continue," Stanton said.

Culpepper earned the win for MHS (5-7 overall), while Montelongo's loss makes him 4-1 and his team 7-6 and 0-2.

ECISD picks Barron for OHS job

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

ODESSA — District 4-5A has another Wishbone team to contend with after the Ector County Independent School District officially named Bill Barron as head football coach of Odessa High Saturday.

Barron replaces Jerry Taylor, who resigned the OHS position last month to take the head football position at Breckenridge after leading OHS to its first district title and playoff berth since 1964.

Taylor left the OHS job after he was instrumental in beginning a District 4-5A investigation last August that led to Odessa Permian's football program being disqualified from district and playoff honors for pre-season workout practices.

Barron comes to OHS from Houston Waltrip where his Rams won six district titles in the last 10 years. His teams have been in the state playoffs in nine of the last 11 years.

Barron brings with him the Wishbone offense, which has been used with great success at Midland Lee.

"You might say that our Wishbone is a lot like the one used at Georgia Southern," said Barron. "It's in combination with the Wing-T where you can utilize both the passing game and running game.

"When I was playing for Coach (Darrell) Royal at Texas, we had great success with the Wishbone, but we started seeing a lot of 11-man fronts as teams began to learn about the offense.

"So, we keep a little of the option in because it gives you an advantage when your opponent is physically stronger than you are. I guess it will be interesting when we play against Lee."

Barron was not one of the three original finalists for the OHS post until that list was expanded last week.

"It's not that I took my name out of the race, but Odessa was wanting to fill this position quickly and I couldn't give them an answer. My wife (Debbie) had a job and we had a house and there were things I needed to deal with. We were better able to make a decision after another week and I'm delighted that we had the opportunity to come for an interview."

Asked if he knew about the Permian disqualification and the rift created in Odessa between the two schools, Barron said, "Well, I watch "60 Minutes", but I really don't know what all transpired. Still, that should be all behind us now.

"Someone told me that the people believe in football and athletics in West Texas and that was a key factor in this decision because I believe in football and athletics.

"I haven't met with the kids, but I have observed. I was amazed with the work ethic of the kids and coaches here. Obviously, things are on the upswing here after the season they had last year. We hope we can continue that."

Barron said he would have to replace the coaches who have departed with Taylor, but he would like to keep the remaining members of the OHS staff, "if they are willing to stay."

Barron was quick to notice the difference between playing games in West Texas rather than Houston.

"In Houston I could walk to most of our games, or at least, all it would take is a good bicycle," Barron said. "I don't think I want to walk to Abilene."

Bullets make it easy for Fitch to win 800th

Associated Press

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Bill Fitch became the fourth NBA coach to win 800 games as the New Jersey Nets took control early against the struggling Washington Bullets and rolled to a 110-86 victory Saturday night.

Fitch, 56, joins Red Auerbach, Jack Ramsay and Sacramento coach Dick Motta in the 800-club. He still has a way to go to catch Auerbach, the all-time leader with 938 wins.

Fitch has an 800-822 mark in 20 seasons that have seen him coach in Cleveland, Boston, Houston and New Jersey, where he is in his second season doing what he has done most of his career — rebuilding a club.

Beating the Bullets may have been one of his easiest wins. Washington came into the game having won just once in 11 games, twice in 13 since the All-Star break and three times in 19. Against New Jersey, they played without Bernard King, the league's second-leading scorer, and center Charles Jones, due to injuries.

Bulls 102, Cavaliers 98

RICHFIELD, Ohio — Michael Jordan scored 28 of his 37 points in the second half, including eight straight to give Chicago the lead for good in the fourth quarter as the Bulls beat the Cleveland Cavaliers for their seventh straight win.

The Bulls improved their NBA-best record to 48-15, one game better than Portland's 47-16. Cleveland has lost its last 10 meetings with Chicago.

Pistons 106, Magic 99

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Vinnie Johnson and Joe Dumars scored 21 points apiece and Bill Laimbeer had 20 as the Detroit Pistons stayed unbeaten in seven games against the Orlando Magic.

Johnson, Dumars and Limbeer combined for 18 of Detroit's 27 fourth-quarter points as the Pistons avoided blowing an 18-point halftime lead and clinched an Eastern Conference playoff berth.

Warriors 117, Mavericks 105

DALLAS — Mitch Richmond scored 18 of his 36 points in the fourth quarter Saturday night, lifting the Golden State Warriors over the Dallas Mavericks.

Tim Hardaway had 33 points and 10 assists and Chris Mullin 26 points and 10 rebounds as the Warriors won for the fourth time in five games.

Suns 128, Hawks 116

PHOENIX — Kevin Johnson scored seven of his 27 points in the final 4:27 as the Phoenix Suns beat the Atlanta Hawks and clinched a Western Conference playoff spot.

Tom Chambers added 24 points and Dan Majerle 22 for the Suns, who defeated Atlanta for the fifth straight time and are 5-0 at home this season against Central Division competition.

Jazz 104, SuperSonics 98, OT

SEATTLE — John Stockton scored 10 of his 23 points in overtime, including a go-ahead three-point play, as the Utah Jazz defeated the Seattle SuperSonics.

It was the fifth consecutive defeat overall and third straight overtime loss at home for the SuperSonics, who scored two points in the final two minutes of the extra period.

Kings 92, Spurs 85

David Robinson, who had 25 points and 19 rebounds for the Spurs, scored on a short jumper to narrow the Kings' lead to 85-82 with 1:24 left in the game.

Lee thin clads look good at Socorro meet

Staff Report

EL PASO — The Midland Lee girls placed third and the Lee boys placed fourth in the Socorro Relays here Friday and Saturday as the two teams brought home seven victories.

The Lee girls scored 118 points, following El Paso Austin, 135; and Odessa High, 125. They also won five events.

Junior Traci Logan won the 300 hurdles in 49.2 while sophomore TeNasha Mills won the 400 for the third time this year with a 58.5, her best. Sophomore Tekeira Strambler won the 200 in 27.5 while Rosie Eaden took the high jump in 5-0. Lee also won the 1600 relay in 4:18.9

The Lee boys placed fourth with 72 points, following Odessa Permian, El Paso Bel Air and El Paso Austin.

Scott McLeod won his first shot put title of the season with a 52-10½ and Lee also won the 1600 relay in 3:34.5 in a meet plagued by high winds. Lee beat Permian in the 1600 relay for the first time this year.

The two local teams also placed second eight times, scoring a lot of high quality points.

The Lee boys and girls travel to Carlsbad, N.M., next week.

MHS wins triple jump

Staff Report

LEVELLAND — Midland High's Marcus Anderson produced a season best 40-5½ here Saturday to give the Bulldogs a first place in the Levelland Invitational track meet triple jump.

It was the only victory of the day for MHS, which finished sixth overall in the meet with 48 points. Plainview won the championship.

Anderson was also second in the long jump with a 20-0½ while Thomas Acrey was second in the 110 hurdles with a 14.9, but it wasn't his best time. Jack Kelso was also second in the pole vault with 12-0, but that, too, wasn't his best effort of the year.

For the second week in a row, the Bulldogs failed to get the baton around in the sprint relay. They had a lock on third place at the West Texas Relays last week before baton trouble came and were favored to win here.

Midland High Track Results

110 Hurdles: 2. Thomas Acrey, 14.9. 300 Hurdles: 3. Tim Blakemore, 42.0. 200: 3. Brent Noisette, 23.1. High Jump: 3. Scott Allen, 6-2. Triple Jump: 1. Marcus Anderson, 40-5½. Long Jump: 2. Anderson, 20-0½. Pole Vault: 2. Jack Kelso, 12-0.

Midland teams struggle in Odessa

Staff Report

ODESSA — El Paso Coronado won the Bob Clarke Invitational tennis tournament here Saturday and was followed in order by Wichita Falls, Odessa Permian, San Antonio Lee, Odessa High, Midland High, Midland Lee and El Paso Ysleta.

The highest finish for Midland High players was a fourth in the boys doubles by George St. Claire and Lanny Temple. Shawn Whelan had a fifth in the girls singles.

Other MHS finishers were Tracey Hopkins, 10th, girls singles; Phillip Allison, 10th, boys singles; Brett Shannon, 11th, boys singles; Gavin Hudgeons and Steven Jeffcoat, 10th, boys doubles; Abby Geltemeyer and Jennifer Burkett, 15th in girls doubles; and Cindy Kelly and Kari Brewer, 16th, girls doubles.

The only results available for Midland Lee was an eighth place finish for Wendy Hobbs and Mabre Kniffen in girls doubles.

JONES: Interim coach miffed

(From 1C)

strikeout of game on Julian Urquidez, but Reb catcher Sean Salois got things started with a bloop hit to right. Keith Bell came in to run for Salois and Smily Hinojos ripped an 0-2 pitch to the left-center gap for an RBI triple.

Intermin head Cooper coach Randy Jones, who filled in for suspended Andy Malone, agreed with Benavidez' assessment that the Coogs were not in usual form.

"That's what happens when you go out there with that kind of intensity. I'm the coach and take responsibility for it, but next time we take the field we will look better prepared, mentally and physically," Jones said.

"It's tough to compare this team with last year's team because it's a totally different set of players," senior Mark Randall said. "It's just a matter of everybody coming together and understanding we can be a good basketball team."

Pitt (21-12) shot 38 percent and made another early exit from the tournament. The Panthers have made seven NCAA appearances since 1974 and never gotten past the second round.

"They beat us by 10 or 12 rebounds in the second half," Pitt coach Paul Evans said. "When you don't control the boards, then your transition game is gone."

Seton Hall (24-3) opened a 27-point lead before Creighton closed the gap. The Pirates trailed 32-31 at halftime, but scored the first seven points of the second half and never were behind again.

Seton Hall was led by Terry Dehere's 28 points. The sophomore guard has 54 points in two NCAA games.

"Dehere was way too tough for our guards to handle," Creighton coach Tony Barone said. "I think that was the game right there. I thought Dehere was phenomenal today."

East

Temple 77, Richmond 64

Mark Macon scored 20 points, and 10th-seeded Temple (23-9) held off a 3-point charge by giant-killer Richmond.

Temple frustrated Richmond inside as it made the round of 16 for the second time in four seasons. The 15th-seeded Spiders (22-10) were coming off a 73-69 upset of second-seeded Syracuse.

Richmond, which made 12 of a school-record 28 3-point attempts, used a 23-14 to close to 59-57 on Terry Connolly's layup with 7:33 left. But the Spiders went 4:59 until their next field goal and missed four 3-pointers in the process, allowing Temple to stretch its advantage to 66-57 with 2:49 remaining.

Oklahoma State (24-7) advanced to the tournament's third round for the first time in 33 years, using a 19-0 run and Byron Houston's 24 points.

Sean Sutton scored 14 points and John Potter had 13 for the Cowboys, who clinched the victory by making 15 of 16 free throws in the final three minutes. Coach Eddie Sutton, Sean's father, was a senior guard for Oklahoma State the last time the Cowboys got to the third round in 1958.

The Cowboys had a 14-point lead cut to two in the closing minutes, but held N.C. State (20-11) off with their free-throw shooting.

No. 3 Indiana 82, Florida St. 60

The 3-point shooting of Calbert Cheaney and Pat Graham sparked a 21-2 run in the first nine minutes of the second half for Indiana (29-4), which trailed 38-32 at halftime.

During the run, Indiana made 7 of 10 shots, including four 3-pointers, while Florida State (21-11) made only 1 of 7. The Seminoles closed to 55-47 but Indiana regained control with an 8-0 run that made it 63-47 with 7:56 to go.

Cheaney led Indiana with 24 points, while Douglas Edwards had 18 points and 14 rebounds for Florida State.

Chris Smith scored 20 points and Connecticut (29-10) held Xavier to 34.5 percent shooting. The Huskies will play Duke on Friday and attempt to avenge the Blue Devils' 79-78 last-second victory in the 1990 East Regional final.

Xavier (22-10) missed 20 of its first 24 shots to fall behind 20-12 and never caught up. It was their lowest-scoring game since a 61-50 loss to South Florida in 1984.

Connecticut led 22-18 with seven minutes left in the first half before Smith's seven points keyed a 14-6 run for a 36-24 halftime lead.

Bradley, who dominated Virginia in a first-round game with a tournament record 10 blocked shots, was outmuscled by the Tucson Skyline of Brian Williams, Sean Rooks and Ed Stokes before fouling out with 5:39 remaining and Arizona ahead by 13.

Williams scored 13 of his 24 points during a 21-6 second half surge as Arizona (28-6) powered the ball inside to erase a 36-35 BYU lead and pull away.

Bradley, a freshman for BYU (21-13), blocked only two shots against Arizona before fouling out with 10 points and nine rebounds.

KERRVILLE — The Midland High girls scored 55 points to place fourth in the Kerrville Invitational girls meet Saturday.

The MHS girls didn't win an event, but they did place second in the sprint and 800 relays without sprinter Stephanie Spencer.

In the junior varsity division, Shenitha Swearingin won both the 100 and 200 sprints while Stephanie Saxon won the 100 hurdles.

The Lady Bulldogs finished behind Del Rio, Gregory-Portland and New Braunfels. The JV girls also finished fourth with 55 points.

Bill of Rights key to freedom

The 19th century British statesman William Gladstone once referred to the Constitution of the United States as "the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man." Yet this magnificent document might never have been ratified in 1787 without assurances that specific safeguards would be added soon thereafter.

The Bill of Rights, ratified by the states 200 years ago, limits the government's power over its citizens.

Under these first 10 amendments to the Constitution, Americans are guaranteed fundamental rights, including the freedom to speak openly, to worship as they please, to be safe in their homes from unwarranted searches and seizures. These constitutional safeguards sustain the flame of liberty and have inspired emerging democracies around the world for centuries.

The Bill of Rights has been a constant source of strength for Americans whenever their rights have been threatened. No document in American history, except perhaps the Declaration of Independence, has been cherished so deeply.

Yet a recent public opinion poll found that 59 percent of Americans could not identify the Bill of Rights.

Many pundits doubt whether the American people would even ratify these liberties if they were put to a vote today. In fact, polls show that some Americans would gladly dispense with many of the liberties contained in the Bill of Rights.

Take, for example, the highly emotional flag-burning controversy. Bowing to public sentiment, President Bush proposed a constitutional ban on torching the national emblem. Congress rejected this misguided measure, thus preserving a Supreme Court ruling that such protests, however distasteful, are protected by the First Amendment.

Another contentious First Amendment issue centers on military censorship of the press in the Persian Gulf. A large majority of Americans sides with the military on this point. Some go so far as to question the patriotism of journalists who report unfavorable news about the war. CNN reporter Peter Arnett, whose Baghdad reports are cleared by Iraqi censors, was branded by Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., as an enemy sympathizer. Others have urged that Arnett be tried for treason when he returns to the United States.

These First Amendment issues illustrate the degree to which the Bill of Rights animates and sometimes agitates our lives. In upholding the right of students to refrain from reciting the Pledge of Allegiance in 1943, the high court held that "freedom to differ is not limited to things that do not matter much. That would be a mere shadow of freedom."

The Bill of Rights has been described appropriately as the soul of the nation.

On the 200th anniversary of these constitutional freedoms, Americans should reflect on the danger of taking them for granted.

Liability awards reflected in prices

A products liability bill, vigorously opposed by the Texas Trial Lawyers Association, has been left pending in the House State Affairs Committee. Getting this legislation passed will require a tough fight, considering that the Texas Senate rarely passes any legislation opposed by the trial lawyers.

The legislation would set limits to product liability, especially limiting the time for injury claims, and it would require proof of a dangerous product's design flaw.

The explosion of liability suits and million-dollar damage awards has cost every Texan. Companies forced to pay those million-dollar awards — sometimes on the basis of flimsy evidence or emotional appeals to the jury — pass the costs on to the consumers. Huge awards mean excessive insurance premiums which, in turn, are reflected in the cost of goods and services. You pay those added costs on every product you buy. . . .

Texas — among many other states — needs to reduce the inequitable burden that our legal system imposes on the American economy. . . . Every accident or injury should not be an open invitation to win a million-dollar sweepstakes.

Social Security fight brews on income limit

A major fight is shaping up in Congress over a Republican proposal to lift the income earnings limit for Social Security recipients.

The battle lines don't just divide Republicans and Democrats, but major advocacy organizations that represent elderly and retired citizens as well.

Now, people between the ages of 65 and 70 who are taking their Social Security retirement benefits and working can earn up to $9,720 — about $187 a week — without being penalized. But for every $3 they earn over $9,720, the Social Security Administration reduces their benefits checks by $1.

For those who start their Social Security payments at 62, it's even worse. They lose $1 for every $2 they earn above $7,080. The earnings limit does not apply to people who are 70 or older, and income from investments and pensions is exempted.

Senate Bill 10, as proposed, would repeal what appears to be a terribly unjust penalty on the aged by doing away with earnings limit.

(That proposal) has given rise to a compromise proposal to gradually increase the earnings limit to $11,400 by 1994 and then eliminate it in 1996.

Abolishing the limits could take billions of dollars out of the Social Security system, critics argue. Proponents say the working elderly would be paying income tax and contributing to Social Security.

This is an issue that needs to be explained and debated in communities and Congress.

Alternative medicine comes under fire

WASHINGTON — Anna Hoiland was losing her battle with cancer. Her doctor gave her about three months to live and told her there was nothing more he could do. But another doctor opened a window: "I know of someone who has had some success with treating cancer through nutrition. I can't guarantee anything, but it's worth a try."

Anderson

Hoiland joined the ranks of those who have nothing left to lose and turned to holistic medicine. Today, at 87, her three months have become 10 years and there is no sign of cancer in her body.

The news is not as good for the man who treated her, Dr. Ahmad Shamim of Laurel, Md. The Maryland Board of Physician Quality Assurance is poised to take away his license to practice medicine because his methods "are not generally recognized by the medical community."

None of Shamim's patients complained about his methods. In fact, 260 of them submitted affidavits praising his work. The 10-year-long medical board investigation of Shamim was initiated when he prescribed the controversial drug Laetril for a cancer patient. After that, the medical board put Shamim on probation.

Across the country, at least 1,500 physicians practicing alternative medicine are under attack by state disciplinary boards. And those boards have been criticized by the federal government for inconsistency in judging whether a doctor is right or wrong in prescribing a course of treatment.

These are not quacks, but M.D.s with all the right diplomas and credentials hanging on their walls. The difference is what sits in their medicine cabinets. They treat patients with vitamins and enzymes. They shy away from too many X-rays and too many drugs. They believe diet can effectively treat some degenerative diseases.

Their more traditional peers worry that the patients of holistic doctors aren't getting the best care, and some holistic doctors think traditional doctors are conspiring to silence them because holistic medicine threatens the multi-billion-dollar surgery and drug business in this country.

The conflict has doctors on both sides afraid to talk for the record. One mainstream doctor from New York told our reporter Jonathan Ullman, "The reason behind the attacks is called group mindset. You learn in medical school to treat each malady separately, like fixing a machine. And you practice that way for years. Then a doctor comes along and says all that money you waste on chemotherapy and surgery is crap, and I'm going to cure you just with diet. The doctor will be labeled a quack whether he is one or not. It's not a premeditated conspiracy against alternative medicine. It's a subconscious one."

Another mainstream doctor from Texas didn't want his name revealed for fear of reprisal from a medical board. "Most doctors have gotten so far away from 'healthy' medicine. They have forgotten the Hippocratic Oath, 'Your food is your medicine, your medicine is your food.' If you try anything non-chemical in your practice, they come down on you as a quack."

The American Civil Liberties Union has agreed to represent some of the patients of Dr. George Guess of North Carolina who practices "homeopathy" — a type of medicine popular in Europe that fights disease using natural means. His license was lifted for not practicing "prevailing" medicine.

In Maryland, Shamim's patients have convinced a state legislator to sponsor a bill — one is already on the books in Alaska — to protect competent but different doctors from discipline by state boards.

Said one former patient who has beat the odds with Shamim's treatment, "I don't know why it works, and I really don't care. But I know how I feel. And if that's not good enough for the board, I don't know what is."

Romance rose above the realm of reality

Celebrating another wedding anniversary the other day so soon after the death of Arthur Murray, I decided to irritate our children. They are now adult enough to endure a little irritation, and afterward when I've gone off to bed it probably enhances their sense of maturity to sit around the kitchen table complaining that they have a lot to put up with.

Baker

Romance was on my mind for obvious reasons: wedding anniversary, Arthur Murray, dancing cheek-to-cheek, etc. Also The Washington Post had run a good feature that morning about Murray, ballroom dancing and popular songs of long ago which tirelessly flogged the idea of "romance."

It seemed amazing that my wife and I had once moved in this culture, and quite happily too, without ever asking ourselves what "romance" was and, for that matter, without ever learning to dance.

Well, America still had a genius then for rising above reality, and we two were as American as the next couple. For example, though my wife couldn't dance, she worked briefly as an Arthur Murray dance teacher.

Whoever hired her had said, don't worry, she'd quickly get the hang of it. There's the difference between America of the golden age and now when people without certificates needn't apply for anything but welfare. To teach ballroom dancing nowadays you probably need a Ph.D. in the two-step.

At that time we were not yet married, so I was apt to overreach in order to show off my gallantry. Accordingly, when she didn't quickly get the hang of ballroom dancing I decided to give her instructions. Never mind that I couldn't dance either. We are talking about a time when "romance" was in the air.

Using an Arthur Murray ad in a magazine, accompanied only by Strauss on the phonograph, I studied the concept of the waltz, then went to her place to demonstrate how easy it was. Some furniture was broken.

Fortunately, she found a job as a private detective almost immediately, and we were married shortly afterward and have since danced only twice. On both occasions champagne, or possibly gin, having revived my good old American ability to rise above reality, persuaded me that if Fred Astaire could do it, anybody could do it.

Dwelling on all this the other day, I realized we had accepted the idea of "romance" uncritically.

You might think children would be fascinated by the questions involved here: for instance, was "romance" a false god created by brain manipulators to sell consumer goods and imbue the masses with a meek-mannered view of life that would be conducive to social stability?

Strange as it now seems, "romance" didn't even promise carnal gratification, which has been the main subject of the Top Forty ever since America became rich, fat and sporty. A fine romance his was, Fred Astaire sang ironically: it didn't even involve kisses.

Fred's view of what constitutes a satisfactory exchange between customers must seem preposterous to people who have come along since Bill Haley and the Comets first hit the screen announcing they were going to rock around the clock.

As I pointed out irritatingly to the children, "romance" has surely been dead and buried at least since the day John Lennon could tune his lyre to ask, "Why don't we do it in the road?" Great Lennon's name on the lips of a parent — that's what irritates children.

Hearing it so spoken, their mature demeanor falls away and they lose all power to philosophize about the rise and fall of cultures. Suspecting a blasphemer, they become incapable of asking why in the age of "romance" no one sang, "Why don't we do it in the back seat of the Ford V-8?"

Having irritated them, I had some anniversary champagne, but not enough, alas, to make me forget I still can't dance. A fine romance.

'Nativism' kills Puerto Rican referendum

WASHINGTON — Sen. Pat Moynihan (D-N.Y.) thinks he has spotted an old serpent in today's political garden. "Nativism!" he exclaimed when a Senate committee killed a bill that would have authorized a Puerto Rican referendum on that island's political future.

Will

Every president since Truman has affirmed Puerto Rico's right to choose to retain commonwealth status or opt for independence or statehood. The 1988 Republican platform endorsed statehood.

In the resistance to a referendum, Moynihan sees "nativism, the close associate of racism." But not all resistance should be so stigmatized.

Nativism is, with reason, an epithet. Nativist movements proliferated in reaction against the waves of immigration in the 1840s and 1850s. Most immigrants then were Germans and Irish and Catholics (Moynihan's ancestors). Xenophobia and religious bigotry (many Protestant immigrants quickly became violent nativists) fueled the growth of the Know-Nothing Party. (Members were supposedly sworn to answer all political questions by saying, "I know nothing about it." Clearly nativists always have had uneasy consciences in this nation of immigrants.) In 1854, several governors and 75 congressmen were elected with Know-Nothing affiliation.

There were anti-immigrant urban riots and attempts to legislate a 21-year residency requirement for naturalization. Liquor, thundered Horace Greeley's New York Tribune, "fills our prisons with Irish culprits, and makes the gallows hideous with so many Catholic murderers." A recrudescence of nativism in the 1920s coincided with the revival of the Ku Klux Klan and resulted in the National Origins Act, severely limiting immigration, especially from southern Europe and Asia.

But the ugly passions of the past are not dominating today's thinking about Puerto Rico. Today's question is not whether Puerto Ricans belong in American society. Of course they do. Several million live on the mainland. The quite different question is, Does Puerto Rico, a distinct cultural entity, belong in the federal union?

It was thrilling to read recent Census reports that by 1990 one in four Americans had an African, Asian, Hispanic or American Indian ancestry. That is up from one in five in 1980. It marks the most pronounced change in America's racial composition in this century.

Puerto Rico is a Spanish-speaking community. Sixty percent of Puerto Ricans do not speak English. An America with Puerto Rico as a state would be bilingual in a way which, in spite of various accommodations for today's immigrants, America today is not.

Americans should say diverse things, but should say them in a common language that allows universal participation in the conversation. Most immigrants want to learn English. Nativists have generally been wrong: Immigrants want to become as American as possible as quickly as possible. But would an entire island people hasten to make secondary the Spanish language that is central to their 400 years of experience as a Spanish and Caribbean community?

Puerto Rico's per-capita income is $5,825, half that of the poorest state (Mississippi, $11,724) and a quarter that of the richest (Connecticut, $25,001). Perhaps half — the poorest half — of Puerto Rico's population would gain from statehood because of enhanced access to federal welfare services. But statehood would nullify the tax break that subsidizes many U.S. corporations that operate there. Such considerations matter, but if this issue comes to a vote, there or here, the hands raised for or against statehood should not hold calculators on which the material benefits have been finely computed. The important calculations are of cultural costs and benefits.

LETTERS

Crowded schools deserve our help

I m writing this letter in desperation! How can I reach the people of this town? How can I make them care for the future of our children? Where are these people who sit back and complain about our school system?

We had a school board meeting last night and the majority of the people there were teachers! The issue was the overcrowding problem in our schools and it seems the teachers care more about the problem than the ones who should care the most, the parents.

Our children are going to suffer from this because the adults of this community don't care enough to come to the meetings and find out what's going on. Do you want your children going to year-round schools because we didn't take charge and build the facilities to make it possible for them to have regular sessions?

I urge the community to quit criticizing and become involved! visit your local school whether you have children in school or not.

See first-hand what is going on, don't wait until it's too late.

Clayton Williams failed to learn

On the front page of last Sunday's paper a petulant Clayton Williams whined over his loss in the governor's race. He blamed media treachery, being "too up front," etc. for the turn of public opinion against him. Mr. Williams has obviously failed to learn (and the ever-biased MR-T to point out) the reasons why he lost the election.

Surveys indicate that environmental concerns are high priority to most Americans; Claytie is a vowed anti-environmentalist. Over half of Texas voters are women; Mr. Williams is a vocal misogynist. Throughout the campaign, Clayton Williams displayed his incompetence to govern with his insensitivity and ignorance of basic issues. These are some of the reasons that Texans were spared Mr. Williams' brand of "leadership."

Flag is symbolic of deeper issues

The Lee High School flag issue is symbolic of much deeper problems within our community.

The committee so carefully chosen by members of the school board has a very important job, indeed. The results they achieve will be a clear signal of the direction our community will take for years to come.

The situation is a wonderful opportunity to begin working together as a community to understand and solve our collective problems, an opportunity which we must not lose because we may not have another one like it for a very long time.

Working together will take sacrifice — for one thing, we will have to forget a lot of what's been said so far. We will have to sit down around the table and learn to understand each other. We will have to tolerate each other's frailties, emotions and methods of expression. Results can't be viewed as win-lose — rather, we must work together so everybody wins.

Some of the traditional ways we make decisions, majority vote for example, may not be appropriate for this situation. We need to ask ourselves should the will of the majority prevail when it creates substantial unhappiness for a small group? Recall that, not so long ago the majority was comfortable with "separate but equal" in educational facilities.

Keeping or giving up the flag is an important and highly symbolic decision, but insignificant compared to building good will and harmony among all citizens of our community. I fervently hope that our committee members, school board members, and all who have worked so hard on this problem for so long, will use this opportunity for reconciliation and growth for everyone.

We must go forward despite mistakes

Some of our American people really amaze me. We failed to recognize the homecoming people from Korea and Viet Nam. Finally it has dawned on the average person who has been walking the "free" streets of America in "safety," the neglect, hurt and turmoil of our actions. We recognize our past mistakes and try to make amends and apologize. We welcome home the participants of Desert Storm with open arms, banners, parades, public displays showing that "we really appreciate what they have done for us, our freedom, our country and our beliefs."

I've always believed that if I'd get up off my knees when I failed, put one foot in front of the other, apologize for my mistakes, admit I was wrong, make amends where and when I can, go forward (because I can't change the things I've said or done wrong) "life would go forward." If all the servicepeople who have been wronged in anyway would get as upset over abortion, drunk drivers, broken homes and accept responsibility for their own mistakes, I'm sure it would please our God almighty and the average American who has been struggling to keep America free, working at jobs while they were off fighting for generations. Our family has been in America since the 1600s and several members have fought in every conflict since that time.

I personally am sorry about Korea, Viet Nam and any other conflict/war or whatever you want to call them, has happened. I love America, my freedom, my way of life. I'm what most would call a part of the average working family: two children, two cars and one TV. I thank God for each and every person who has ever preceded me, who has helped me to be where I am today. God help all of us to keep America free, to take care of people today. God help all of us to keep America free, to take care of people here at home and outside our shores, especially our own immediate families.

Drunk or 'high,' our soldiers still prevail

When I returned from Viet Nam in 1969, I was told the reason why we were not winning the war was that we were "a bunch of lazy dopeheads."

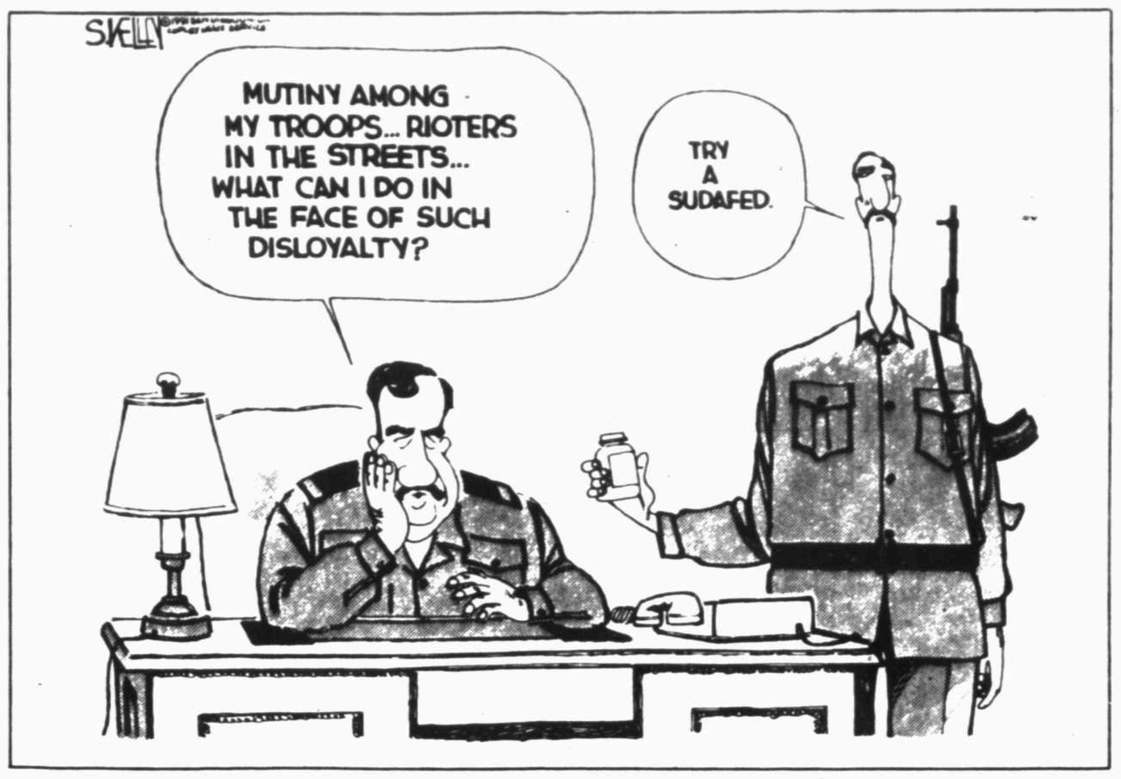

The ghost of that has now come back to haunt me thanks to Marilynn Weaver's letter (March 10).

I think Marilyn Weaver should study some history. Alcohol and substances like morphine were abused by soldiers in World War I and II. Yet somehow our soldiers managed to prevail. During the Civil War drunkeness was rampant in the Union Army, but somehow that army managed to win.

Viet Nam was lost because of ignorance of the area, bad strategy, bungled decisions, and either a hostile or apathetic lack of support by the American people.

It had nothing to do with the substances that we and other soldiers have used throughout history to numb ourselves from the pain and horror of fighting other peoples' wars.

PTA appreciates police assistance

Lamar PTA would like the community to know that we have a great police department that is willing to work with schools and volunteer safety patrol to bring a quality program on proper procedure on loading and unloading students and crossing the streets.

We would like to express our sincere thanks to the Midland Police Department and especially officers Ron Sartor and Lalo Camarillo for visiting our school and teaching the students about pedestrians safety rules. Also visiting was the police department robot car Sgt. McCrime, which was a big hit with the students.

Why is gasoline higher in Midland?

Three weeks ago regular unleaded gasoline was selling in Midland for 128.9. That week I filled up with the same brand and grade in Seminole for 112.9, Roswell, NM for 116.9 and Big Spring for 118.9. Last week the same gasoline was selling for 121.9 in Midland and 113.9 in Big Spring.

This morning the American Automobile Association stated the nationwide average for regular unleaded is 108.9. In Midland it is 117.9 Why? Can't be greed, right?

Two years ago I drove to Jacksonville Beach, Fla. Gasoline was selling for 107.9 when I left. The further east I drove, the cheaper it became. On Jacksonville Beach the same brand and grade of gasoline was selling for 83.9. Why? As far as I know, Florida has no oil to speak of. Florida may have a refinery but I will bet they refine West Texas oil or some imported oil from the Persian Gulf.

Can some of you oil industry moguls explain why we in the Midland-Odessa area are being gouged? Or are you ashamed to admit your greed?

Come on, let's hear from you.

WILLIAM MURCHISON

Alexander Pope, in his "Essay on Man," delivered an epigram often used in derogation of modern-day conservatives: "Whatever is, is right."

My friends, this ain't the conservative position, if conservatism is identified (as it should be) with commitment to human freedom. Pope's could today be called the big-government position, the leave-my-budget-alone, hands-off-my-program position.

Murchison

Big government is today's Establishment, unwilling to change, alter, modify, revamp, revise, retool. At the periphery, this helps us understand why the Western press calls the U.S.S.R.'s, pro-Lenin, anti-democracy apparatchiks "conservatives." It is because they live by the credo of whatever is, is right.

My friends, it's not just in the Soviet sinkhole, it's here at home. We know all about Washington, D.C. Consider, at a lower level, the state government of Texas, whose oil revenues have run dry; whose sales tax, now at 6.25 percent (plus an extra penny levied by most cities) scrapes the feasibility ceiling. State government "needs" almost $5 billion more to get through the next two years.

Eureka! cries the lieutenant governor of Texas (acting as stalking horse for the governor); let us institute an income tax.

We talk about instituting a whole new, and thoroughly destructive, level of taxation without subjecting to scrutiny the programs we're asked to finance. Whatever is, is right, as far as lieutenant governors and their apologists are concerned. We can't cut a nickel or over would topple the walls of civilization.

Better to shake down the taxpayers — who can always get a second or a third job if they have to — than to abolish or just reduce government programs of doubtful value or outworn utility.

The big-government establishment gobbles and gobbles and gobbles. There is no satiation point. The establishment always wants more. Heaven forfend it should consider consuming less.

A couple of years ago, Professor Morgan O. Reynolds, a Texas A&M economist of national reputation, studied Texas state government in detail. He proposed ways of cutting state spending by $6.127 billion, more than half of it from higher education.

Dr. Reynolds would have closed superfluous college campuses, raised tuition, reformed welfare, privatized services best left to the private sector, and abolished an immense number of costly, inefficient regulations.

He went over the matter minutely: We could save $7 million by terminating the useless Texas Cancer Council, $4 million by abolishing installment-plan tuition, $15 million by selling 10 percent of state-owned cars. This sort of thing adds up.

Nonetheless, the vested interests set up a wounded howl. Columnists, bureaucrats and other esteemed authorities pooh-poohed the study. Apparatchiks at Dr. Reynolds' own university slammed him for criticizing the school's ownership of a golf course ($405,000 a year, with 19 employees).

"Christianity," G. K. Chesterton observed, "has not been tried and found wanting. It has been found difficult and not tried." So with state, like federal, budget-cutting. It has not been tried; it has been rejected scornfully, as outside the realm of reason.

The Texas legislature, like Congress, knows how spending could be cut if anyone wanted to cut spending. The problem is, no one with real power wants to cut spending. Too hard, too painful!

This is notwithstanding that the Texas state government spends more than five times as much money as in the late '70s. You might think this argued for restraint in spending, but you would be wrong. It argues for the maintenance of custom, the custom being, soak the taxpayers, however wet they are now.

Whatever is, is right, as the Soviet hardliners and the political luminaries of the People's Republic of Texas all agree. The only thing, I suppose, that could be righter is a state budget five times larger than now.

Mitterrand kills plan to ground Saddam's gunships

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — French President Francois Mitterrand has apparently blocked President Bush's implied threat to use U.S.-led air power to stop Saddam Hussein from using helicopter gunships against rebel forces striving to overthrow the Iraqi tyrant.

Hearst

At a press conference in Martinique, following the meeting a few days ago between the two leaders, Mitterrand, referring to the United Nations Security Council approval of military action to force withdrawal of Iraqi forces from Kuwait, said: "It was not our intention to conquer Iraq but to liberate Kuwait. We've done our job."

This made it clear that other European members of the U.N. coalition, with the likely exception of Britain, would not agree to renewal of the war.

During his recent visit to Ottawa for a meeting with Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, Bush publicly warned Hussein that his use of helicopter gunships to slaughter antigovernment forces violated the cease-fire agreement reached March 3 between U.S. and Iraq commanders. The implication was that allied fighter planes might be used to shoot down the Iraqi aircraft. After the meeting with Mitterrand, Bush publicly backed away from his threat, saying: "We're not trying to impose a solution inside Iraq."

Mitterrand obviously sought to reassert publicly his determination to play an important role in the Mideast problem. However, I think it would have served our joint interests better if both presidents had refrained from publicizing the issue. Bush could have delivered the warning to Hussein through diplomatic channels. The French leader could have spared Bush the embarrassment of having to weaken his warning.

Meanwhile, the initial reaction among European diplomats in Washington to Secretary of State James Baker's Middle East trip was that intransigent obstacles make an Arab-Israel peace settlement highly unlikely in the near future.

President Bush, with the support of Congress, will have to apply strong pressure to both Israel and the Arab nations, and especially the Palestinians, to make concessions for an agreement that would end the deadly dispute that has lasted more than four decades.

Baker did his best to get a dialogue going between Israel and the Palestinians. He tried to be optimistic. After talking with Israeli President Chaim Herzog, he said, "We have a window for peace." But after talking with hardliner Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, it was evident the window had not opened enough to let through a breath of fresh thinking by either side.

The Israeli leader politely said he would consider Baker's suggestions for starting a peace process. Publicly, Shamir said nothing about his reaction. However, Israeli government officials said the prime minister remained unswayably opposed to the Bush administration's plea that Israel give up the occupied West Bank territory to achieve Arab recognition of the permanent existence of the Jewish nation.

However, there is a shimmer of hope that a dialogue may get started, first between the United States and the Palestinians and then between Israel and the latter. Yossi Ben Aharon, director general of Shamir's office, said on Israeli radio that discussion with the Arabs should start without conditions. Baker assured 10 Palestinian leaders with whom he talked that the United States would consider conditions for resuming the dialogue with the Palestine Liberation Organization leadership that was terminated last June.

Bush plans to visit the Middle East soon to reinforce with his personal persuasiveness Baker's efforts to achieve a breakthrough in the Arab-Israel deadlock.

While these are encouraging signs, I doubt there will be any quick peace settlement. If Bush wants to get one while Shamir is still prime minister, he may have to threaten the Israeli government with a sharp cutback in American military and economic aid.

Midland schools to offer CAT for private students

Staff Report

Midland Independent School District will once again offer the California Achievement Test (CAT) to private school students who will be entering public junior or senior high schools.

A current CAT score and results from three locally developed assessment instruments in math, science, and writing are required for placement of students in junior and senior high school gifted education studies.

The CAT will be administered on Saturday, March 23, beginning at 9 a.m. in the Alamo Junior High School library, 3800 W. Storey.

Local assessment instruments will be administered on Saturday, April 13, beginning at 8:30 a.m. Alamo will also be the testing site for this battery of tests.

Thursday, March 21, is the registration deadline for CAT.

Thursday, April 11, is the registration deadline for the locally developed tests.

To register, contact Joe Cummins, executive director of planning, testing, and evaluation, 689-1062.

Midland Independent School District recently hosted the Area IV Health Occupations Student of America (HOSA) leadership conference.

Midland students who advanced to state are Brett Buchannon, first place, dental assisting; Ana Alferez, second place, medical laboratory assisting; Katie Fletcher, first place, dental laboratory technology; Jennifer Stapp, second place, dental laboratory technology; Shane McCollough, second place, extemporaneous speaking; and Jennifer Kuhn, second place, extemporaneous writing.

Local HOSA chapter advisor was Linda Leps.

Five short courses begin this week

Staff Report

The Midland College Department of Continuing Education will offer five short courses beginning the week of March 18. Courses are as follows:

Bob Kindade will be teaching "Plumbing for the Homeowner" on Tuesdays from 7-9 p.m., March 19 through April 23. Students will find out how to avoid costly plumbing repair bills in the "hands-on" class taught by a master plumber. Contact the Continuing Education Office concerning necessary tools and supplies. Course fee is $25.

"Selecting a College: Practical Tips for Choosing the Right School" will be taught by Robin Stillwell on Tuesdays from 7-9 p.m., March 19 through March 26. This course addresses questions and concerns about college selection and admissions processes including high school preparation, college entrance exams, admissions application, campus visits and interviews, financing your education, and personal and academic adjustments to college. Course fee is $17.

Three dogs maul youth

AUSTIN (AP) — Animal control authorities have impounded three large dogs that attacked a 7-year-old boy on his way home from the South Austin Recreation Center.

Christopher Knapp suffered bites to his head, arms, chest and back during the attack by three Rhodesian Ridgebacks, who were roaming free, officials said.

The dogs weigh about 70 pounds each.

Teaching contracts on Thursday's trustee agenda

By H.A. Tuck

Trustees have their regular monthly meeting scheduled for 4 p.m. Thursday in the Board Room. Principal item on the agenda, at least for faculty members, should be renewal of teaching contracts for the 1991-92 academic year.

Also on the agenda will be a discussion of the proposed new Aviation Technology program, which seems to be very near reality.

Since the deadline for applications for the presidency of Midland College was last Friday, that also should be a major topic of interest.

March isn't necessarily the best time to watch tennis matches — it's frequently too windy, quite cold, or rather hot, sometimes all three on the same day. But indoor tennis is another story.

MC's men's and women's teams — each ranked first in the nation — will play a team tennis match at Chaparral Center on Tuesday, beginning at 6:30 p.m. The Chaps will play the strong Odessa College teams.

You'll be able to watch some of the finest young players in the world in this match ... and the weather will be perfect. MC coach Joe Williams and his players invite you to come out to see the matches and get acquainted with these outstanding competitors.

The men's team goes to Roswell next Friday for a 1 p.m. match with New Mexico Military Institute.

There's been so much activity at Chap Center, it's been hard to keep track of each event. Here's the schedule for the next few events, along with ticket prices and ticket outlets:

Monday: Closed circuit of the Mike Tyson-Razor Ruddick heavyweight boxing match. Tickets are $22.50 in advance and $26.50 at the door. They may be purchased at Chap Center or Endless Horizons in Midland or Odessa.

Thursday: Petra, the religous rock group, plays at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are $12 and are on sale only at The Lighthouse.

April 2-3: Sesame Street Live presents "Let's Play School." Tickets for the 7:30 p.m. show on Tuesday are $6.50 each; they are $7 each for the 4 p.m. show on Wednesday; and $9.50 for adults and $8 for children for the 7:30 p.m. show on Wednesday. Tickets may be purchased at Chap Center or Endless Horizons.

This is the final day of the exhibit at McCormick Gallery of works by members of Midland's Gallery 1114 art cooperative. McCormick Gallery is in the Allison Fine Arts Building and is open today from 1-5 p.m.

The show features works in many media. If you haven't seen it, please drop by this afternoon before it closes.

Coming next is a display of works by members of the Southwest Texas State University art faculty. It opens March 23 and closes April 19.

Among activities scheduled through the Student Activities office is a lecture Wednesday, "The Healing Art Heritage of the Mexican People" with Carlos Aceves of El Paso talking about the curanderismo (healer). Thursday is a film "She Even Chewed Tobacco." Both these events are in the Student Center's multipurpose room at noon for the talk and 12:30 p.m. for the film.

Slated Thursday evening is an Easter Blowout Street Dance, which won't be held in the street but on Beal Plaza with The Shades playing.

Finding five more diverse subjects than those being offered through the Continuing Education Department this week would be most difficult.

Classes starting this week are: Commercial Driver's Preparation, Plumbing for the Homeowner, Practical Tips on Selecting a College, Career Building for Secretarial Personnel and Pasta Preparation.

Register in the Continuing Education Office, Administration Building, or call 685-4518 for more information.

By the way, the Continuing Education area is being remodeled, but they are open for business. So, don't let the sawdust and raw walls turn you away.

Finally, don't forget to use the Midland College Cityline information system to stay up-to-date. Call Cityline at 561-2400, then extension 1835 to access any or all of the nine MC information lines.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director at Midland College.

EDUCATION IN BRIEF

Cindy Turland, director of the Midland College Adult Learning Center, is serving as one of the hosts for a breakfast in Austin March 25, marking the 25th anniversary of educational cooperatives for adult education.

"We are honoring members of the 72nd Texas Legislature with a breakfast at the Capitol Building to acknowledge the state's role in establishing an educational service which provides adult basic education and Englilsh instruction for more than a quarter million adults in Texas each year," Ms. Turland said.

She said that legislation which was passed 25 years ago had been introduced by State Senator Carlos Truan of Corpus Christi, who still serves in the Senate.

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — While thousands of college students party on the beaches during spring break, some choose to spend their break performing community service.

"Three or four years ago, I tried spring break on the beach," said Trent Amendt, one of six Iowa State University students who chose to do construction jobs at a Lutheran church in the Corpus Christi area.

"I find this matters more," he told the Corpus Christi Caller-Times. "On the beach, it's just a waste of time,"

He is among the hundreds of college students who paid $80 each to put themselves at the disposal of Missouri Synod Lutheran congregations across the country, said the Rev. Marty Doering of Austin.

Doering is supervising the two-week "Servant Event" program at Lord of Life Lutheran Church in Flour Bluff, where Amendt spent the week working.

The students working in Corpus Christi said some of their friends spending the week at places like Port Aransas and South Padre Island admire them for their decision to work instead of play.

"A lot of people told me they think it's neat to do something like that," said Tom Davison, a 22-year-old senior majoring in construction engineering. He's working to spruce up the church for Easter.

Phil Gramm raises questions among some GOP colleagues

By James R. Owen
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Texas Republican Sen. Phil Gramm, once called "meaner than a junkyard dog" by a former Democratic House member, is raising questions among some of his own party colleagues by challenging the patriotism of Democrats who voted against going to war.

Gramm

Gramm, who heads the GOP Senate campaign committee, ignited the controversy in January with a fundraising letter tarring antiwar Democrats as "appeasement-before-country liberals."

In the past week, the Texas senator has stoked the fire by:

— Saying on NBC's "Meet the Press" last Sunday that the Iraqi "Baath Party and the Democratic Party have something in common — and that's that they are trying to come up with domestic programs to make them forget about the war."

— Accusing Democrats of "being lost in the 1960s," and warning that he intends to keep hammering at them for "blowing the most important and defining vote in 45 years."

— Charging that Democrats "could not be trusted" to run the nation's foreign and military policies.

Predictably, outraged Democrats have returned the fire. But unpredictably, some GOP operatives are voicing reservations.

John Deardourff, a moderate Repubican strategist, said, "I believe that the president ought to call these guys off, Gramm and (House Minority Whip Newt) Gingrich and the others. And not because they don't have a point, but because they're testing the bounds of good taste and decency.

"If taken to excess, these attacks on the Democrats may backfire on the party," Deardourff said, who said the "odds are very long" against a GOP recapture of the upper chamber in 1992. Gramm's job as campaign committee chairman is to narrow the 56-to-44 margin the Democrats now hold in the Senate.

Deardourff also noted that prominent conservatives — ranging from columnist Patrick Buchanan to former Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger — as well as the Joint Chiefs of Staff, all urged caution in launching the war against Iraq.

Another Repubican political consultant here, John Buckley, praised Gramm for having "brilliantly made the point that ... the Democrats should not be entrusted with the White House."

However, Buckley, added: "I think Gramm is a smart enough politician to know that he has to pick his fights. It doesn't make sense to stay on this one subject too long. He could wear out his welcome."

A prominent Dallas Republican, who asked not to be named, commented: "I think we should call off the dogs on both sides. And I think you're going to see some backing off pretty soon here."

While these Repubicans viewed the Gramm frontal attacks with caution, Democrats launched a counter-offensive last week.

Sen. John Kerry of Massachusetts, a decorated Vietnam war veteran, urged President Bush to rein in the "GOP hatchetmen" from assuming "a partisanship which was markedly and happily absent during this war."

Rep. Jack Brooks of Texas, who voted for the gulf war authorization, said when asked about Gramm's strategy: "Republicans who spent their youth dodging the Vietnam draft are in no position to question the loyalty and patriotism of Democrats who voted against the Persian Gulf war resolution."

Brooks, dean of the Texas congressional delegation, was referring to the 48-year-old Gramm's student deferment during the Vietnam war.

But Gramm defended his attacks in an interview last week and insisted that he and other Republicans are not taking political advantage of the U.S. victory in the war.

"The war itself is not a political issue," Gramm said. "But I've been accused of making it into a political issue by the people who don't want to deal with the legitimate political issue here, which is their vote.

"I'm not going to cross the line of legitimacy on this issue," he added. "But why should we want to forget about the war?"

The senator, who has hinted that his current political assault is a preview of what the 1992 congressional campaigns may look like, said the Jan. 12 vote authorizing President Bush to use force against Iraq's Saddam Hussein was a crucial test.

In that vote, the House approved the use of force by a 250 to 183 margin and the Senate, by a 52 to 47 tally. In the House 86 Democrats voted yes and 179 voted no, and in the Senate 10 Democrats supported the president and 45 voted against him.

"What this vote did is that it gave convincing evidence that not only can Democrats not be trusted in running for president on these issues, but Democratic leaders of Congress cannot be trusted on these issues."

Many Republicans agree with Gramm's assault.

"This is fair game, and the American people know it's fair game," said Karl Rove, an Austin, Texas-based Republican operative. "And this is an issue that will engender people's time, cash and candidates for future races."

Gramm was upbeat about his party's prospects for regaining control of the Senate next year.

"At this point in the election cycle, we are in as strong or stronger position than we have been in the last decade," he said. "Americans feel good about themselves about their country, they feel confident, and when Americans feel confident about themselves and the future, that's not good news for the Democrats."

White, the former Democratic chairman, conceded that Gramm would lead a formidable charge in 1992:

"Our party needs a mad dog like that, taking out after the administration every day and in every way."

Neil Bush to sell $500,000 home

DENVER (AP) — Neil Bush, who has been mired in a savings and loan scandal, is selling his half-million dollar home, his attorney says.

James Nesland, who is representing the president's son in the fiasco involving his directorship of the failed Silverado Banking Savings and Loan, confirmed on Friday the home is for sale.

"I know they put their house on the market," Nesland said. "I don't know if (they are moving) to a different area or another place in Denver."

The Bush home was purchased for $550,000 in November 1989 in the name of Bush's wife, Sharon.

Bush served as a Silverado director from 1985 until about the time of the S&L's collapse in December 1988. He has become a high-profile target for federal regulators trying to unravel the operation's failure.

Bush also is named in a $200 million lawsuit filed by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., and the Office of Thrift Supervision is considering sanctions against him for breaking conflict-of-interest rules.

MARION, Ohio (AP) — A classmate of Desert Storm commander H. Norman Schwarzkopf didn't expect to get a return call when he wrote "to tell the big guy he's doing a great job."

Schwarzkopf

But George Kannapel got a chance to talk to the fellow 1956 West Point graduate on Friday when an aide placed a call to his home.

Kannapel, a marketing manager, said the call came in response to a letter and some posters he sent to Schwarzkopf's wife.

He said he asked the aide, a major, to "tell the big guy he's doing a great job." But the major said he had a problem relaying that message.

"He said, 'Uh, sir, to me he's the general,'" Kannapel said, laughing.

A second later, the aide handed the phone to Schwarzkopf, and Kannapel repeated his message. He said the two have stayed in touch over the years through class reunions.

"He said, 'Well, thanks. It's not over yet, but I'll see you in September at the reunion.' And off he went," Kannapel said.

Kannapel remembers Schwarzkopf as a good cadet.

"He wasn't an obnoxious kind of guy," he said. "He wasn't ostentatious. He was smarter than the average bear, though."

EVANSVILLE, Ind. (AP) — Country music signer Lee Greenwood is getting plenty of requests to perform his hit "God Bless the USA" these days and the repetition doesn't bother him one bit.

"I'm just proud to have done something useful to American history, particularly at a time when people are dying," Greenwood said before going on stage Friday night at a patriotic rally here.

The rally, at least the fifth one Greenwood has performed at since the Gulf War ended, drew hundreds to Vanderburgh Auditorium for a flag-waving, teary-eyed time.

Greenwood wrote "God Bless the USA" in September 1983 and it went to the top of the charts the following summer.

NORFOLK, Neb. (AP) — Johnny Carson is getting an "Oscar." Not an Academy Award but a statue from his hometown marking his lifetime achievement.

Carson

The Norfolk Chamber of Commerce awarded Carson the "Norfolk Oscar" during its annual meeting Friday night. Because the host of NBC's "The Tonight Show Starring Johnny Carson" could not attend, the award was accepted by Carson's grade-school penmanship teacher, Fay Gordon.

The award is presented annually to people who have made contributions to the Norfolk area.

Carson was honored for various donations over the years, chamber chairman Joe Ferguson said. Carson has donated $650,000 for a radiation center at a Norfolk hospital, $55,000 to the Northeast Nebraska Zoo in the nearby community of Royal, and $600,000 for a theater at Norfolk High School.

RICHWOOD, W.Va. (AP) — Country music singer Johnny Paycheck will perform next month at Richwood Junior High School to raise money for his son's classmate, who was injured in a go-cart accident.

Chad Russell suffered head injuries last October when the go-cart he was riding flipped over an embankment. The 14-year-old recently returned to his eighth-grade classes after three months of home tutoring.

Principal C.C. Lester originally planned to ask Paycheck, whose son, Jonathan, attends Richwood, if he would perform to benefit the school.

"I later learned of Chad's medical bills and felt this was more pressing," Lester said. "I talked with Paycheck on the phone and he said, 'Sure, I'd be glad to do it.' "

The goal is to raise $5,000 at the April 6 concert.

Paycheck, best known for the hit "Take This Job and Shove It," moved to West Virginia after his release from an Ohio prison last year. He served two years for aggravated assault and tampering with evidence in the 1985 shooting of a man in a Hillsboro, Ohio, bar.

Midland chief revises training

■ Arco representatives trained some officers in the program in January.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Departing from a strict militaristic approach to management, law enforcement agencies are turning more and more to the managerial styles found in private industry.

Czech

"Traditionally, police departments are very autocratic. We tell people what to do," Midland Police Chief Richard Czech said.

But things are changing.

When Czech joined the Midland Police Department about four years ago, he brought with him a philosophy of participative management that has influenced the department ever since.

A recent example of this managerial outlook was a seminar sponsored by Arco Oil and Gasoline Co., given to police supervisors.

"Arco has a program they present to all supervisors and managers that deals with the idea that employees are the number one resource of an agency," Czech said.

Representatives of the company taught and trained police officers in the program in January. Some of those officers, in turn, have participated in teaching two other groups since then.

All told, 60 officers — deputy chiefs, lieutenants and sergeants — attended the two-and-a-half day course.

Dale Dunn, manager of human resources for Arco in Midland, participated in the training.

"The program focused on supervisory skills development in four area: coaching, leadership, transition and communication," Dunn said.

"The main thing is to get feedback from subordinates anonymously on how well you are supervising in those four areas," Dunn said.

"The approach is very unique in that the supervisors teach the modules as well as get feedback," he added.

The end result is better supervisors and employee participation in the management of the police department, Czech said.

"It lets each supervisor see how others see him and how he can improve his performance and managerial style," Czech said.

The process is beneficial for subordinate officers as well.

"The employees we hire today are different from 20 years ago. They want to have an input and be part of the organization," Czech said.

"We hire a smarter, more educated cop and they need to be more part of the department because of that," Czech said.

Overall, the process pursues the idea of community oriented policing, Czech said, where the patrol officer is the main person to make change, decisions and solve problems.

Sentence option provides opportunity to clear record

■ Deferred adjudication is, in effect, a probated sentence.

By David Morris
Staff Writer

What do they call it when someone pleads guilty to a felony and is sentenced to probation, but doesn't become a convicted felon?

In most cases, it's called deferred adjudication.

"It is, in effect, a probated sentence," said Midland District Attorney Al Schorre. "While they're in the system, they're treated just the same as anyone else on probation."

Serve your deferred adjudication probation without any violations, and your conviction is wiped from your record. Violate the terms of your probation, and your guilt may be adjudicated by a judge. That judge can then send you to prison for the maximum term allowed for the crime of which you were originally convicted — up to 99 years or life for a first-degree felony.

That's the main difference between deferred adjudication and regular probation, Schorre said. People whose probation is revoked can be sentenced to a maximum of 10 years in prison — and can't be sentenced to a term longer than their original probation.

"If an offender violates a term and condition of his probation on deferred adjudication, the judge can sentence him anywhere in that offender's range of punishment," Schorre said. "The punishment is left open-ended."

Todd Jermstad, general counsel for the Community Justice Assistance Division in Austin, said deferred adjudication is a "powerful tool." Not only does it not lock judges into the low punishment range associated with regular probation, it also limits offenders' appeal rights.

"You can't appeal the decision that adjudicates you guilty," Jermstad said.

He said opinions about the effectiveness of deferred adjudication are mixed. While some prosecutors may like the greater punishment potential, others think offering deferred adjudication makes them seem "soft" on crime.

Such is the case in Odessa, Ector County Assistant District Attorney Steve Hershberger said.

"I as a prosecutor look at deferred adjudication as a sign of leniency," he said. "Therefore, to kind of promote a tougher law enforcement image, we lean more toward straight probation or just time (in prison)."

Ector County prosecutors understand that deferred adjudication can lead to a stiffer punishment for an offender in the long run, Hershberger said, but they are afraid the public doesn't grasp the idea.

"Really, it is probably a better tool than straight probation, but I think our prosecutors look at it from the standpoint that it makes them look weak," Hershberger said.

The relative reluctance of Ector County prosecutors and judges to use deferred adjudication is reflected in statistics that show it used in only 4.3 percent, or 24, of 556 district court convictions in Schools wait for action by state

By John Powers
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Midland school district would end up with more money per pupil if the Legislature approved a House finance equalization bill, but Greenwood and Ector County would be much better off under the Senate plan.

Midland would gain $366 per pupil more than it gets now under the House plan, compared with $204 more from the Senate bill. But Greenwood would gain $1,098 if the Senate version prevailed and only $597 under the House plan. Ector County would gain $159 from the Senate proposal and $66 per pupil from the House plan.

A conference committee is debating a bill sponsored by Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, and a House version by Rep. Ernestine Glossbrenner, D-Alice. The 10-member committee must reconcile differences and come up with a final bill for the Legislature to vote on before an April 1 deadline set by the Supreme Court.

Last week the conference committee worked on a solution but no compromise was forthcoming in the situation.

Allen Howland Reporter-Telegram

The court ruled in 1989 that the school financing system is unconstitutional because it discriminates against property-tax poor districts. In 1990 it ruled that a plan the Legislature approved fell short.

Any bill will have to take some money from rich districts and give it to poor districts, but the House bill would make it easier for districts to enact additional property taxes and keep the money, known as "local enrichment."

Parker's plan calls for a minimum tax of 70 cents per $100 valuation, rising to $1 by 1994, with three additional optional tax tiers up to the $1.50 allowed by the state constitution. These optional taxes could be used for debt service and equalized enrichment, plus some unequalized local enrichment that the state would match for poor districts.

The House bill requires a minimum tax of 60 cents, rising to 80 cents after four years. It has additional optional tiers for debt, equalized enrichment and unequalized enrichment to the $1.50 maximum.

Parker's bill calls for creating 20 regional taxing districts, but legislators believe the House version is more likely to prevail. It would consolidate property along county lines, combining some of the state's 254 counties to total 195 taxing districts.

Dreaming your fantasies doesn't always help

The man doing the bulk of the talking was a normal enough looking fella. He was about 45, though as a general rule I am not good at trying to guess a person's age.

Ott

He was seated at a table, surrounded by two other men and a woman. They were in a local restaurant, and had just finished their meals. The plates had been pushed away and smoke from their cigarettes filled the air.

Two of the men and the woman were enjoying an after-dinner cup of coffee. The other man had requested a refill on his iced tea. It was a comfortable gathering; all seemed to be good friends and there was considerable interaction between them. Laughter, like the smoke, hovered above their table, and sort of drifted toward me.

Mainly, though, I was listening to them talk.

The main guy, the one who tended to dominate the conversation, was expressing a certain disappointment with his station in life. While it seemed apparent he was reasonably successful, at least he looked the part, you couldn't help but feel he wanted — and expected — more.

He kept saying things like, "I've gone as far as I can with that company" and "Surely, there's more to life than this."

The others offered varying degrees of support, though the woman at one point did become somewhat exasperated and said, "No one's stopping you from living out your dreams. If you want to climb a mountain, then go for it. But don't sit here complaining. Do something about it."

I couldn't tell if she was being serious or just egging him on, but I liked her spunk.

Still, I could sympathize with the man, too. Who among us hasn't longed for a more exciting existence? It happens to me every time I read a Hemingway novel. I finish a chapter, place the book on the night stand next to my bed and immediately begin fantasizing about being a bullfighter in Spain.

Our dreams, no matter how old we become, never completely fade away. They just get more farfetched.

He was getting wound up.

"I'm bored," he said, pushing away from the table and crossing his legs. "I have this recurring nightmare that I'm going to wake up one morning, realize I'm 65-years-old and didn't do anything but work and pay bills. It makes me mad. Yet, at the same time, it frightens me."

Again, I had to smile. He was reading my mind. I folded my newspaper and placed it to the side. I lit a cigarette of my own and settled back to be entertained. His commentary was certainly more fun than last week's box scores.

At one point he mentioned his kids, though I couldn't tell if he was still married or not. For some reason, I had gotten the impression he wasn't, but you never know. His youngest child, a seventh-grader, apparently was causing problems. "He's spoiled," the man said, rolling his eyes. "Of course, that's my fault. I gave him everything he wanted."

"He'll grow out of it," the woman said. "They all do."

The others nodded. "My oldest son just got an earring," the man who was drinking iced tea said with bewildered resignation. "Can you believe it? An earring."

The woman laughed.

So did I. They had become aware of my eavesdropping, but didn't seem to mind.

"Kids," the first man sighed, shaking his head. "They'll break your heart faster than a missed three-foot putt."

There were more nods of agreement.

No one spoke for awhile; everyone seemed to be lost in their own thoughts. A final round of coffee was ordered.

The woman glanced at the man seated directly across from her and said, "What are you thinking about now?"

He sort of grunted and said, "Big game hunting in Africa."

"Sounds nice."

"I suppose," he said. "Of course, I'll never get to do it."

"You still have your dreams, though."

"Perhaps, but I sure wish one of 'em would hurry up and come true. I'm not getting any younger."

Everyone chuckled, though you got the feeling it wasn't particularly happy laughter.

DEATHS

Mary Koistinen

Services for Mary Koistinen of Midland will be at 10 a.m. Tuesday in the First Baptist Church Chapel with the Rev. James Denison officiating. Interment will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park with Ellis Funeral Home in charge of arrangements.

Koistinen

Mrs. Koistinen died Saturday in a local hospital.

She was born Jan. 12, 1923, in Robinson, Ill. She was reared and educated there. She later moved to Detroit and met Clifford Koistinen in 1940. They were married in Detroit on Jan. 18, 1942, and lived there for awhile before returning to Robinson. They moved to Tacoma, Wash., where they resided for about 10 years. They recently moved to Midland to be near her family. She was a member of Life Center in Tacoma, Wash.

Survivors include her husband; two sons, Vincent Koistinen of Guernville, Calif., and Robert Koistinen of Midland; three daughters, Linda Pfister and Janie Hendricks, both of Midland, and Sue Perez of Anchorage, Alaska; one brother, Kenneth Skidmore of Robinson; and one sister, Frances Murphy of Bradenton, Fla.; six grandchildren; one great-grandchild and several nieces and nephews.

The family requests memorials be directed to the American Heart Association.

John T. Burns

Graveside services for John T. Burns have been set for 11 a.m. Monday in Resthaven Memorial Park with Father Fred Nawarskas of St. Ann's Catholic Church officiating. Ellis Funeral Home is in charge of arrangements.

Burns died Saturday at a local hospital following a brief illness.

He was born May 3, 1934, in Liberal, Kan., and grew up near Godley. He graduated from Granbury High School in 1952, then went to work for Southwestern Bell Telephone in Dallas. He married Gerry Rumfield on July 22, 1961, in Midland. They lived in Hereford and San Antonio before moving to Midland in June of 1982. He retired in August of 1986. He was later employed by the Haley Ranches.

Survivors include his wife; one daughter, Kelly Lynn Burns of Midland; three brothers, Joe Burns of Dallas, Bill Burns of Corpus Christi and Jim Burns of Midland; three sisters, Rose Mary Fox of Stillwater, Okla., Margaret Mollick of Arlington and Virginia Smith of Weatherford; and several nieces and nephews.

James D. Moore

SNYDER — James Dewey Moore, 83, of Snyder, father of a Midland woman, died Saturday in a Snyder hospital.

Services will be at 2 p.m. Monday at the First Baptist Church Chapel in Snyder with Rev. Don Taylor, pastor, officiating. Burial will follow at Hillside Memorial Gardens.

He was born Dec. 6, 1907, in Alvarado. He was a retired farmer and conservation contractor. He was a member of First Baptist Church.

He married Eva Bell Fenton on Oct. 20, 1929, in Union.

Survivors include his wife; two daughters, Dorothy Price of Midland and Janelle Pollard of Snyder; one sister, Ruby Eades of Denton; three brothers, Lester Moore of Snyder, Raymond Moore of Palmdale, Calif., and Cecil Moore of Lake Whitney; five grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren.

Agency may have skirted bidding laws

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Department of Commerce in 1989 and 1990 may have skirted state law requiring bids on contracts by funnelling about $440,000 through a private advertising agency to pay vendors, officials have charged.

"Commerce was showing a blatant disrespect for the laws of this state," said state Rep. Steve Wolens, D-Dallas, chairman of the House Business and Commerce Committee, which oversees Commerce.

The Commerce department, which is 4 years old, was established to promote economic development and tourism.

A Travis County grand jury is investigating Commerce and its former executive director Bill Taylor. A number of top officials at the department have resigned and auditors are combing through Commerce books at the request of Gov. Ann Richards and state lawmakers.

The private advertising agency — Austin-based GSD&M — turned over records that showed the agency made 52 payments for Commerce to various vendors, the Austin American-Statesman reported Saturday.

Alan Kahn, newly appointed chairman of the Commerce board, said there is no evidence to show that the Commerce expenditures made through GSD&M were publicly bid.

"There is a pattern here of purchases and spending that could not be paid through normal channels, either because of their timing, their intent or their validity," Kahn said.

Wolens said he did not fault GSD&M for the payments because the ad agency did what it was ordered to do under its contract with Commerce.

That contract required GSD&M to pass through certain marketing expenses incurred by Commerce. The ad agency would later be reimbursed by Commerce for the expenditures.

GSD&M officials said they did not question the arrangement because the expenditures appeared to be above board. Roy Spence, the president of GSD&M, said he did not believe his agency was required to police Commerce activities.

Vendors whose services were billed through GSD&M included a publishing firm that was paid $21,701 to produce newsletters for tour bus operators; a London-based public relations company that received nearly $112,000 during two years to promote tourism to Texas; and a West Coast marketing firm that billed the state $21,500 to draft a never-executed public relations plan.

In addition, a variety of perks were provided to America's Heartland, a private tourism organization that was housed at the state agency.

GSD&M records indicate that Commerce spent $2,692 in April 1989 on the design of a logo for Heartland. Also in April, the state agency authorized GSD&M to pay $1,475 for T-shirts to be used by the Heartland organization.

The next month, Commerce asked GSD&M to design the magazine published by Heartland at a cost of $1,400. In June 1989, the ad agency was asked to pay $1,973 to cover the cost of producing cards and stationery for Heartland.

These expenses are in addition to the $1,500 paid to Derrith Bondurant, Heartland executive director, for her consulting services provided to Commerce.

Legislators also were told earlier this month that Commerce spent $14,000 to buy advertising space in the Heartland magazine, $4,572 to prepare the ad, and nearly $3,000 for other Heartland-related production costs.

Services held Friday for Gulf War veteran

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A 19-year-old soldier killed two days after a cease-fire was declared in the Persian Gulf War was buried at Fort Sam Houston National Cemetery under a leaden sky and a chill wind.

Army Pfc. Roger Valentine, 19, of Portland, Texas, was the 11th soldier with the 1st Cavalry to die in Operation Desert Storm. He also was the fourth Gulf War casualty buried at the national cemetery. Burial was Friday.

Valentine, who would have turned 20 on March 28, was remembered at a Friday morning service at the Red Team Chapel on Fort Hood.

Army Chaplain Major George Baugham officiated the funeral, reading a poem written by Valentine's wife, Rebecca Valentine of Corpus Christi.

Valentine attended Gregory Portland High School and completed basic and artillery training at Fort Sill, Okla.

In addition to his wife, he is survived by his parents, Thomas and Nancy Valentine of Portland; a sister, Teresa Williford of Memphis, Tenn.; grandfather, Thurman Toler of Corpus Christi; and grandmother, Kattie Valentine of Mansfield, La.

Lee High students sweep top 3 spots in spelling bee

Staff Report

Lee High students swept the top three spots in the third annual South Plains and Permian Basin Citizen Bee at Lubbock.

Lee senior Robert Wiley, son of John and Stephanie Wiley, walked away with the top prize which included a $500 U.S. Savings Bond and round-trip airfare to the state Citizen Bee in Houston in April, compliments of Southwest Airlines.

Runner-up was Philip Barron, son of Phil and Paula Barron. The Lee junior received a $300 savings bond.

Third place and a $200 savings bond went to senior Todd Giese, son of Charles and Deanna Giese.

The bee is a national competition of the Close-Up Foundation, based on American political and cultural history, government, geography, economic and current events. It is designed to stimulate greater understanding of America's heritage and recognize academic achievement.

Five schools competed in the bee.

Car hits house, driver flees

Staff Report

A man drove his car into the wall of a house early Saturday morning then fled the scene, according to police reports.

At about 2:55 a.m., the driver of a 1978 blue Chevrolet Ford pickup was headed north on Midkiff when he crossed the lane into a southbound lane of traffic, reports stated.

The pickup struck a curb and a fence before striking the living room wall of a house at 3201 W. Michigan, according to witnesses.

The driver of the pickup then drove to a nearby convenience store, contacted police and fled the scene.

No injuries were reported.

Five rape cases reported by co-eds on spring break

SOUTH PADRE ISLAND, Texas (AP) — Five college co-eds on spring break at South Padre Island reported they were raped, and arrests were made in the two instances where the women agreed to press charges, police said.

Among those who refused to press charges was a 22-year-old Minnesota woman who said she was gang-raped in a motel.

"It's just one of those phenomenal things that's occurring this year. We've had as many in one week as we had all last year," said South Padre Island police Capt. Tommy Atkinson.

Police said the rapes apparently are unrelated.

Ironically, the rapes were reported during a week that Padre Island officials said was otherwise relatively quiet.

Police and Texas Department of Public Safety reported fewer drunken driving arrests than usual. By Saturday morning, only one serious auto accident had been reported.

Marlin West, 23, of Fort Worth was charged with sexually assaulting a 20-year-old student from Oklahoma at a condominium about 2 a.m. Wednesday. He was held at the Cameron County Jail on $20,000 bond.

However, he was still shown as being registered at the condominium with two other men. "The room was in his name. They haven't checked out," manager Mike Aldous said Friday.

John McKinney, 22, of Norman, Okla., a student at Oklahoma State University, was charged with sexually assaulting a 19-year-old student from Tennessee at a beachside condominium on Monday. He was released on $15,000 bond.

A 19-year-old Kansas student told police she was raped between 1 a.m. and 1:30 a.m. Tuesday morning at a condominium after leaving a nightclub. No suspect has been identified.

Another student who apparently was staying in South Padre Island told U.S. Customs officers that a man grabbed her and raped her Thursday morning as she walked toward one of the bridges between Brownsville and Matamoros, Mexico.

Judge orders state to ease crowded jail

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal judge stood by an order that Texas fund inmate transfers from the Harris County Jail to ease overcrowding that threatens the prisoners' health.

Chief U.S. District Judge James DeAnda Feb. 7 ordered the state to begin moving prisoners out of the Harris County Jail and into other county jails because the increasing population at the Houston facility is posing a growing risk to security and the health of the inmates.

On Friday, DeAnda upheld his previous order, saying it did not violate the state's sovereignty as claimed in appeals by the state.

"These population figures are beginning to approach those numbers that led to the outbreak of a respiratory, pneumococcal epidemic that struck down dozens of inmates and claimed two lives in mid-1989," DeAnda's order said.

"We are talking here about life and death, and the most fundamental rights" of the inmates, he said.

In the summer of 1989, the jail population soared to an all-time high of more than 8,000. Friday's jail count was 7,294 inmates — far in excess of the "5,500 to 6,000" level a court-appointed jail monitor said was the maximum number that could be housed safely.

It also surpassed the population limit of 6,300 that DeAnda set last month. Under that order, any number of inmates beyond that limit must be moved to jails in other counties at the state's expense. The 45-day period DeAnda gave to get the jail in compliance ends March 24.

State attorneys Friday reiterated their appeal to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which has assigned the decision to a three-judge panel that includes two Texas judges — Edith H. Jones of Houston and Patrick Higginbotham of Dallas.

Both state and county attorneys expect the appeals court to rule before March 20.

Besides its sovereignty claims, the state maintains that DeAnda improperly ordered it to act on issues within the long-standing state prison overcrowding case, which is before U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice of Tyler.

State attorneys say they cannot accept more inmates from the Harris County Jail because Justice imposed a state prison system cap in that case.

Justice issued a dissent to DeAnda's opinion Friday, questioning DeAnda's requirement that the state place $750,000 in a court account by March 20.

OPTION: Convictions can be wiped out

fiscal year 1990.

In county courts, it was used in only 1.5 percent, or 35, of 2,407, convictions.

Midland district courts, by comparison, used deferred adjudication in 30.5 percent, or 187, of 613 convictions in FY 1990. In county courts, deferred adjudication was used in 8.9 percent, or 245, of 2,740 convictions.

Jermstad said defense attorneys also are split on deferred adjudication. While some lawyers see it as a way to keep their clients' record clean, others fear it because of the potentially greater punishment it could entail.

Midland defense attorney H.W. "Woody" Leverett said he doesn't fear the longer prison sentences associated with deferred adjudication. He just doesn't recommend the option — when it is offered as part of a plea bargain — to clients he thinks can't handle it.

"It requires a person to really toe the mark and walk the line," Leverett said. "Some folks don't have the the self-discipline to do that."

Deferred adjudication is best for those with an interest in keeping their record clean, he said.

"Particularly for a youthful offender who has no prior criminal record, it is a very good deal. If you have a felony conviction on your record, it can close certain career options to you."

The 1975 law allowing deferred adjudication was designed with the youthful first-time offender in mind, 142nd District Court Judge Pat Baskin said. It is a genuine opportunity for a fresh start.

"I think it is worthwhile because there is a taint that accompanies having a conviction on one's record," Baskin said.

People on deferred adjudication, unlike regular probationers, can vote and hold office. They are not subject to having state professional licenses revoked or denied.

Deferred adjudication is not available for those convicted of an involuntary manslaughter in which alcohol is involved, drunken driving, and certain drug offenses such as sale of a controlled substance to a minor.

Schorre said juries and judges can be told about a defendant's past deferred adjudications. The records of a person's deferred adjudication are not purged from court files.

"The public has the idea that a deferred sentence doesn't bear any accountability, but it really does," he said.

POLICE: Team concept fostered

agement first-hand is Midland Police Lt. Jerry Morris, lieutenant of special investigations.

"I think it is one of the best schools I've ever attended," said Morris, who worked the majority of his 18-year career under the autocratic management that has dominated law enforcement agencies.

"It really fosters the team concept, the family we are. Now everyone has a voice in the family. We (supervisors) still make the decisions but now we make a better decision," Morris said.

"And the changes we make are much more readily accepted" because employees have a say, Morris said.

Although those in command may have more experience than subordinate officers, younger officers many times provide fresh creative approaches, Morris said.

"By listening to my people, I learn something daily," Morris said.

This learning by listening approach to management is not confined to Midland though.

"I think it's changing everywhere. I think we will see a major change in five to 10 years everywhere," Czech said.

PETITION FOR DISANNEXATION

TO THE CITY COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF MIDLAND, TEXAS:

Comes Now a majority of the Qualified Voters of Green Hill Terrace and Melody Acres, annexed areas within the City of Midland, Texas, seeking disannexation from the City of Midland, and would respectfully show the City Council the following with regard to a Petition for Disannexation of such annexed areas:

I

In June, 1980, Green Hill Terrace and Melody Acres, areas or subdivisions situated in northwest Midland, were annexed to the City of Midland.

II

As required by Section 43.056, Texas Local Government Code, the City of Midland must provide "full municipal services" to annexed areas to such municipality. Indeed, such "full municipal services" in each annexed area must be provided no later than four and one-half (4 1/2) years after the effective date of the annexation, and some municipal services must be provided within sixty (60) days after the effective date of annexation.

III

Despite the residents of both Green Hill Terrace and Melody Acres having paid very substantial sums of money in local property taxes to the City of Midland, the City of Midland has not provided "full municipal services" to the residents of Green Hill Terrace and Melody Acres, including by and large, a lack of sewer, water, street lights, and proper road construction and maintenance. In addition, some residents still do not have garbage pickup.

IV

Because more than four and one-half years (4 1/2) have elapsed since Green Hill Terrace and Melody Acres were annexed to the City of Midland, and because "full municipal services" have not been provided by the City of Midland to the residents of Green Hill Terrace and Melody Acres within such four and one-half (4 1/2) year period, as required by Section 43.056, Texas Local Government Code, a majority of the Qualified Voters of Green Hill Terrace and Melody Acres hereby file this their Petition for Disannexation, pursuant to Section 43.141, Texas Local Government Code. Attached hereto are the signature of a majority of the Qualified Voters of Green Hill Terrace and Melody Acres.

V

The City Council of the City of Midland, Texas, has sixty (60) days after the date of the receipt of this Petition for Disaannexation by the City Secretary to either grant or refuse to grant disannexation to Green Hill Terrace and Melody Acres from the City of Midland. If the City Council of the City of Midland fails or refuses to disannex both Green Hill Terrace and Melody Acres from the City of Midland, a Petition for Disannexation will be filed in the District Court of Midland County, Texas.

WHEREFORE, a majority of the Qualified Voters of Green Hill Terrace and Melody Acres respectfully request that the City of Midland, by and through the City Council of Midland, Texas, grant this Petition for Disannexation, and officially disannex both Green Hill Terrace and Melody Acres with no more than sixty (60) days after the date of the receipt of this Petition for Disannexation.

HOW THE CITYLINE RESUME HOTLINE WORKS:

CITYLINE

It's quick, easy and convenient. You may respond anytime - 24 hours a day. To respond, dial 560-2400, then enter the category number listed in the ad to which you are responding. At this point you will hear a brief message: "If you are responding to (blank) ad, leave your name, address, phone number and any other pertinent information," and you simply leave the requested information at the tone. The employer placing the ad will be able to access this information from his or her location anytime 24 hours a day.

FREE...For a short time only. If you as an employer would like to try our new CITYLINE SERVICE, you may do so ABSOLUTELY FREE!!! Call one of our friendly consultants at 682-6222, for additional details.

PART-TIME INCOME AVAILABLE

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several routes which need to be filled with dependable individuals. Now is one of the best times ever to obtain a route in your area!

OFTEN ASKED QUESTIONS:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?

Yes! Our current distributor force is already 75% adult and 25% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:

- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a distributor, you do not need daycare!
- COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- YOUTHS who are involved in afternoon school functions, but want to work!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends.

How much money can I make as a distributor?

Depending on the size of the route(s) from $300 to $700 monthly! Some motor routes make even more!

How long does it take?

The actually delivery takes 1 - 2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2 - 3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the route(s). Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many distributor's choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?

6 a.m. Monday - Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday and Sunday.

Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, distributors do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!

RESERVE YOUR ROUTE NOW!

Vintage APPEAL

By JILL HANCOCK

A perfect example of the factors which sell a house — the amenities and placement of rooms — are displayed throughout this week's featured home. The home's gathering spot, which consists of the kitchen, breakfast area and family room, is just one place where everyone feels at home. Located on the golf course at Green Tree Country Club, this four-bedroom is also highlighted by a gorgeous formal living room which focuses on a fireplace and the adjoining dining room.

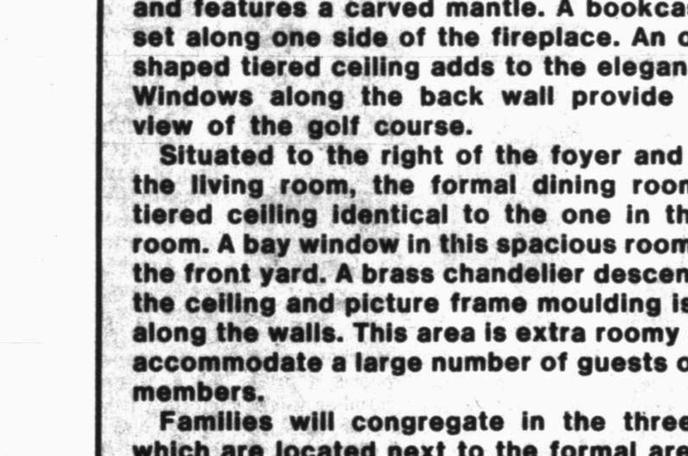

The entrance to the home is brightened by leaded glass inlays and a transom window. The tile flooring leads into the formal living room. A marble fireplace is centered along the left wall and features a carved mantle. A bookcase is inset along one side of the fireplace. An octagan-shaped tiered ceiling adds to the elegant decor. Windows along the back wall provide a great view of the golf course.

Situated to the right of the foyer and next to the living room, the formal dining room has a tiered ceiling identical to the one in the living room. A bay window in this spacious room frames the front yard. A brass chandelier descends from the ceiling and picture frame moulding is placed along the walls. This area is extra roomy and can accommodate a large number of guests or family members.

Families will congregate in the three rooms which are located next to the formal areas. Oak cabinets, Whirlpool appliances and a large breakfast bar are a few of the kitchen features. The appliances include a double self-cleaning oven, microwave, cooktop, dishwasher and trash compactor. A walk-in pantry is hidden in one corner.

The breakfast bar is used to divide these three rooms and it can accommodate five bar stools. An angled wall of windows in the breakfast room overlooks the covered patio and the golf course.

VINTAGE: Family will relish open design

(From 1D)

A door provides access onto the patio. Both the kitchen and breakfast area have a tile floor, which is ideal for this high-traffic area and a blue and white wallcovering in two patterns adorns the walls.

Another large window lines a wall in the family room, once again providing a view of one of the extra special features about this home. A built-in entertainment cabinet is centered on an adjacent wall. It has lots of room for storage, bookshelves for favorite books and collectibles and an area for a television and VCR.

A short corridor next to this room leads to the laundry room, a lovely half-bath and the three-car-garage. The laundry room has room for a freezer, an area to hang dry clothing and a window which frames the side yard.

The children's bedrooms are situated to the left of the formal living room. One bedroom has access to a hall bath. The other two bedrooms are connected by a full bath. Each of the bedrooms have spacious closets and tall windows.

Sequestered for privacy, the master bedroom is also located next to the living room, towards the back of the home. It is brightened by two windows and has a door which opens onto the patio in the back yard.

The master bath has a marble vanity which has two sinks, an oval bathtub and a over-sized, double shower. Sunlight streams in through the skylight and two walk-in closets provide ample storage for clothing.

This immaculate two-year-old home also has a sprinkler system, ceiling fans and gorgeous wallpaper in the bathrooms. Chaparral, Realtors is offering the home for $166,500.

Langston Realtors...

Langston

We certainly would like to think of Langston Realtors as a very special real estate firm, in a class all by itself. However, that's not something we ever seriously considered until the Sundays of March 10 and 17, when the MRT moved us out of the real estate section and into a very exclusive spot among oilfield equipment, good things to eat, for free (for heavens sake!) and firewood!

We appreciate that MRT thinks we are special and in a class by ourselves — but we really don't mind being thrown in with the competition. We feel we can hold our own! Also, there were a few persons who didn't read the sports section and missed us; home buyers are not necessarily interested in John McEnroe, SWC basketball and the Garland Centennial Bowling Tournament. But then, hey, maybe we picked up a few calls from people shopping for a car, looking for a dog or interested in 10 drilling rigs! They probably didn't even know they wanted to buy a home.

In the future — please remember that the Langston Realtors ad is in the Sunday edition somewhere (also the Friday and some others as well). If you don't find us along with the other real estate ads, then start looking for that special "class in itself" spot that MRT has given us. Maybe they think it will increase readership in those other sections!

It's here! It's here! The long awaited video on Midland was finally delivered last week and previewed at the Thursday morning sales meeting. The critics (Langston associates) acclaimed the photography, script, production as "outstanding", and copies for our agents, the Relocation Department and selected individuals have been mass ordered. If you would like a copy sent to a friend, employee or relative who might be moving our way, just give Richard Langston, our vice president of Relocation, a call and we'll soon have one on the way. Phone 682-9495 for Richard or call him toll free on 800-231-2483.

I viewed the turmoil of being transferred on a more personal level last week when our son, Mark, his wife, Sara, and their three children left for Brisbaine, Australia for a three year assignment with Chevron. All moving problems were intensified and many more of course arose because this was an international transfer. However, their experiences certainly provided us insight and empathy for families on the move. Mark and Sara had to consider every item they owned. "Do we keep it, toss it or sell it? If we keep it, does it go with us, go into three year storage or go to our parents for safekeeping? If it goes with us, should it be included in our limited allowance or should it be sent by a two month sea voyage?"

Decisions become critical when you are considering hair dryers, vacuums, TV's, computers, mixers, electric trains etc. that will not operate on Australia's 220 voltage; or wondering what to do about cars that are designed to drive on the "wrong" side of the road, but are extremely expensive to replace in a country where they must be shipped in; or gauging how fast the children will grow and what clothes they'll need when you've been told that a pair of tennis shoes costs $150 Australian dollars; or worrying about the family's food preferences because Grape Nuts are not available, a taco has never been heard of, three lemons cost five dollars and mayonnaise costs $8.50 a jar! And then there's schools, churches, neighborhoods, a ton of decisions yet to me made!

As I said, we've learned so much more about the transfer process, about the concerns a family faces and about the information needed. It is all being shared with our Relocation Department and our associates. Langston Realtors relocation packets already include information on neighborhoods, housing costs, schools, taxes, medical facilities, shopping, restaurants, recreation, etc. However, we are adding data on the costs of utilities, appliances, groceries, household help, haircuts, clothing, vet services, pet boarding and a host of other items. We are expanding our information on private schools, day care, community organizations, volunteer groups, services for senior citizens and so much more. As the first Ambassadors encountered by most new citizens to the community, we feet it's vital to be knowledgeable about everything, not just houses; because we can then be the most helpful, enthusiastic, empathetic and supportive.

As reported in Business Week, warrantied homes in a nationwide survey were sold almost 50 percent faster and a 3 percent higher sales price than similar non-warrantied homes. These programs provide protection from major repair or replacement bills at a time when unexpected costs can be a real problem. The seller is protected during the listing period, and when the home is sold, the warranty extends to the purchaser for one year following the closing date.

Warranty policies are written through Homeowners Marketing Services, Inc., the nations leading supplier of real estate support services. The basic coverage costs $325 and is payable at closing, and there is an additional cost of $100 if a spa or pool is included. A deductible charge of $100 is made for each repair or replacement service call. A Select Coverage plan with $50 deductible is available for $455 plus $95 for a spa or pool. Programs are also available from other home warranty companies to provide the coverage and costs that the seller will have in mind.

Louise Culver

How does the program work? The homeowner reports a problem by a toll-free number to the warranty company's service department. The warranty company will then call an approved local service contractor who will call the homeowner for an appointment. When the contractor arrives, he will verify the claim, prepare a replacement or repair estimate, secure authorization and proceed with the necessary work. It is just that simple.

There are many things to do around a home to improve its marketability. Cleaning of light fixtures and windows, repainting of walls in high traffic areas, replacement or repainting of the front door, discarding or packing away all clutter, shaping up the yard and many other items. These are just common sense things to do.

Beyond the physical appearance, which is the first impression that a prospective buyer will have of your home, is the nagging concern about the mechanical condition of appliances and other systems in the home. A purchaser will normally employ the services of a certified home inspector who will furnish a detailed and unbiased report of the condition of the home. It is important to remember that all systems may work well when inspected, but there might be a failure sometime after the closing. It is impossible for the inspector to predict future conditions and they are prohibited by law from implying that their inspections include any warranties of service.

Culver concludes that a Home Warranty Program offers the home seller improved sales prospects and is well worth considering just for the piece of mind it affords. Prospective home sellers are invited to call Carriage Company, Realtors for more information on available warranty programs.

Chaparral celebrates record month

Chaparral, Realtors celebrated a record month for February, in fact, according to Norma Pine, president, "it was an all time record breaker in the company's history."

"I believe this is a byproduct of the company's philosophy of excellence in service to the customers and clients we deal with. Implementing this philosophy has resulted in our sales associates being directly responsible for a large percentage of listings in-house this month," explained Pine. "This company consists of a strong nucleus of professionals who are proven and experienced in the strategies and needs of the sellers and buyers. I, myself, have produced approximately $50 million in real estate transactions during my real estate career."

Alice Howard, an associate of Chaparral, Realtors, was sales leader for the month of February, having a vigorous start of sales for the new year. On the listing side, Deborah Pierce was awarded the top volume and was presented with a mobile phone. "Deborah has done a remarkable job and is so effective in her representing sellers that she was highly complimented by a client who wrote the company a letter praising our efforts in the sale of his home," added Pine.

Chaparral, Realtors celebrated a record month in February. Deborah Pierce, left, was presented a mobile phone for being the top volume producer from Norma Pine, center. Alice Howard, right, was named the sales leader for the month.

Pine feels that their new centralized location has been very well received and "it has brought us overwhelming attention. Once again, of course, I am very grateful to Midlanders for their continued support."

Now is the time to buy a new home

If you are among the many Texans whose goal is to own a new home, whether it be your first, move-up or retirement dream, now is the time to buy. According to the Real Estate Center at Texas A&M University, the financial challenges of buying a home may not be as discouraging as you think.

The Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation measurers housing affordability by comparing a family's annual household expenses to its annual income. The general rule is that a maximum of 25 percent of a family's income should go toward housing expenses. Housing expenses may include loan interest, repayment of principal, hazard insurance premiums and property taxes. Payments for mortgage insurance are also included if the situation involves them.

Another measure takes into account even more housing expenses like utility payments, alimony or child support and installment debt. These extra payments added to total housing expenses should take no more than 33 percent if larger down payments can be made or substantial net worth can be established.

Sandy Scott
President, Midland Association of Realtors

The Real Estate Center reported the affordability index for the third quarter of 1990 showed that the average family had 36 percent more than the income needed to qualify for conventional financing. The index was based on a homebuyer purchasing a home priced at the state's third quarter average of $85,631 with monthly payments of $613.84 financed at 10.33 percent.

The national index for that same quarter indicates the average family had only 98 percent of the income needed to finance the average home, proving Texas homes are among the most affordable in the nation. The median home price for Texas in December 1990 was $66,520, well below the national median of $91,300. Housing affordability is a reality in Texas and, with the recent passage of the National Housing Act of 1990, obtaining financing should be easier than before.

If you are thinking about buying your first home or even your retirement home, your local Realtor can guide you through the intricacies of a very affordable real estate transaction.

Sloane Square

By Carolyn Fitz-Gerald

Ask a Londoner about Sloane Square and he will mention not only the Royal Court Theatre, which is on Sloane Square, but shops as far away as Beauchamp Place and streets that reach from the Knightsbridge area into Belgravia and Chelsea.

While Sloane Square proper is the square where King's Road meets Sloane Street, in the minds of the English it seems to include a very exclusive area within an area that offers the best of everything, including Harrods department store, the royal hairdresser and luxury hotels.

Joining the trend to smaller, more elegant boutique hotels with personal service that meets guests' every need, Hyatt International Hotels has opened a series of smaller, elegant boutique hotels, always on a park, called Park Hyatts (1-800-233-1234).

The flagship of these hotels is London's Park Hyatt Carlton Tower at Number Two Cadogan Place overlooking Cadogan Gardens just off Sloane Square. There is no cold lobby here. While there is marble flooring, it is warmed by colorful carpets and Chinese vases filled with only the most elegant flowers. The women are beautifully dressed and look as if they have chosen their clothing to match the cloisonne tones of their surroundings. Tea and light refreshments are served all day long, so it is a favorite place for Londoners to meet.

AS I ARRIVE, there are whispers that "a royal" is in the house. It turns out that Prince Charles is nowhere to be found, nor is Di or Fergie, not even a brother. There is, however, a royal equerry making arrangements for an ecological event in the hotel concerning the rain forests that Prince Charles is feverish about preserving. For this meeting, brother Andrew will stand in for Charles.

I look around the lobby and see that while most of the guests are not young, they are very svelte and healthy. There is a reason. Many of them belong to the Peak Club upstairs at the Hyatt which offers local memberships as well as privileges to guests.

If guests are afraid that they might neglect their exercise regimen, they have only to enter the Peak Club set high among the trees under the curved conservatory windows to be reassured. Here is a mix of those who have come for the Decleor hypoallergic beauty treatments or the Hellerwork massage therapy. Then, there are the serious exercisers such as double Olympic winner Sebastian Coe. Add to these some who just like the atmosphere of the outside brought inside with controlled air and no rain.

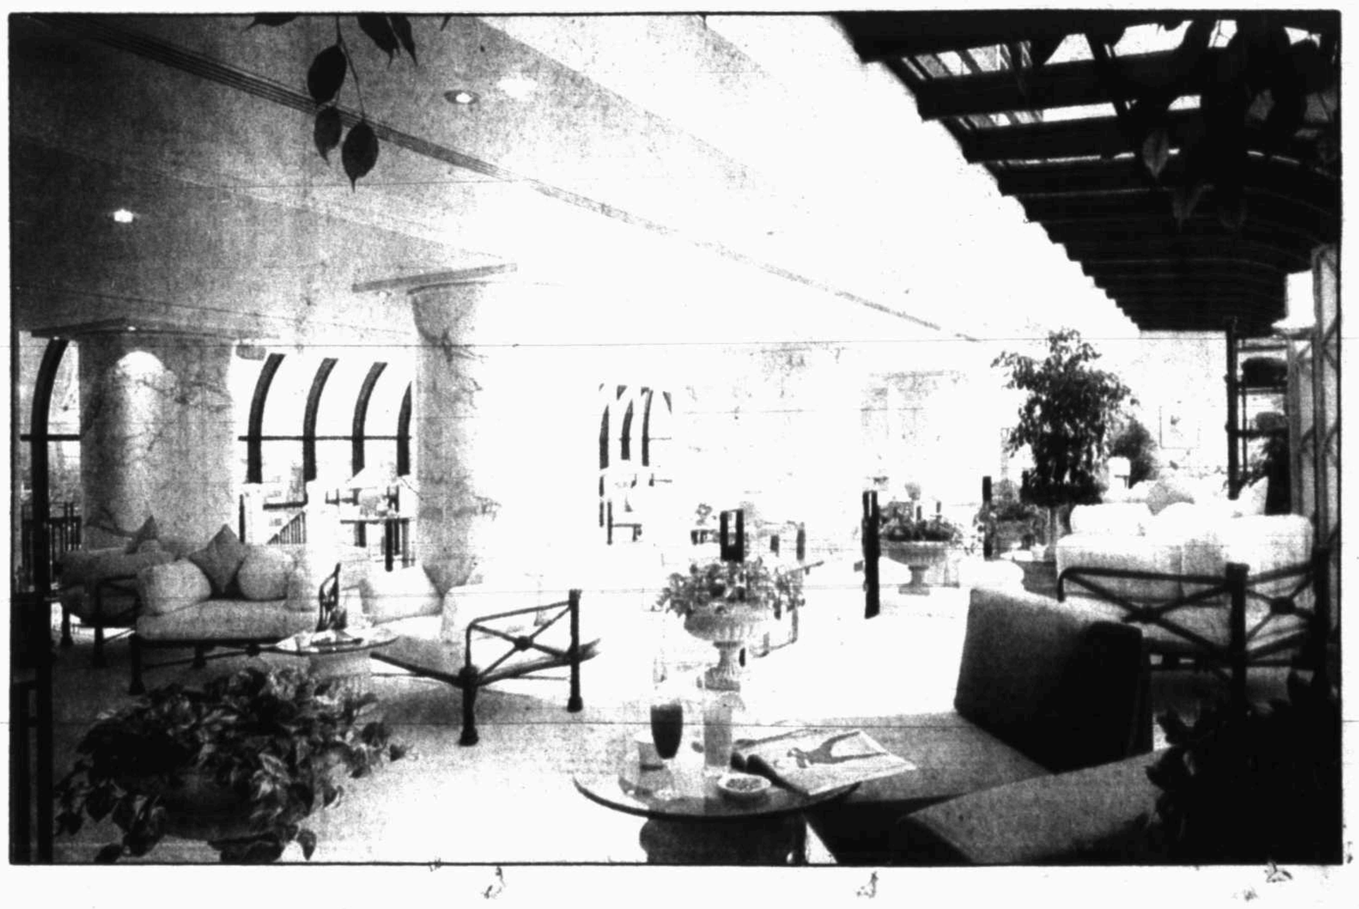

The same giant conservatory windows overlooking the gardens of Cadogan Place are offered to guests in the Chelsea Room restaurant and in the presidential suite on the 18th floor.

The Peak Club also offers a bar and food service with light meals and some creative health drinks. All of the food is pretty and healthy, even if the scones contain oatmeal.

What is Sloane Square in London? Sloane Square is beautiful, where the beautiful people are.

Harrods department store (above) offers unique services as well as unique gift. The only elite shop along Sloane Street is Harvey Nichols (center). The Peak Club (below) health food restaurant in the Hyatt Carlton Tower.

IF SHOPPING IS your passion, there is no better place than the Hyatt Carlton to launch your attack. The helpful concierge will point out that Kanga, Prince Charles' friend from Australia whom he dubbed "Kanga" in honor of Australia's famous animal, has opened a shop nearby. Her real name is Lady Tryon, which seems apt for the owner of a ladies' clothing boutique.

For men, Harvey Nicols offers an astonishing array of garters, suspenders and cashmere top coats that were definitely made fit for a king. A block away, Nicholas of London is a little less expensive. At Issey Miyake there is a style show with tiny Chinese models and a very tall English girl with red hair, all dressed in golden hues. At 175 Sloane Street, it is no trouble to make an appointment at the royal hairdressers', Neville Daniel.

Most of the well-known designers such as Ungaro have shops on or near Sloane Square, and Beauchamp Place offers some trendy little boutiques. My favorite is Whistles at 14 Beauchamp Place. Not wanting to miss out on those who shop only on one street, Whistles also has a shop at 27 Sloane Street. Their sweaters and other knits are affordable and quite unlike those found in other stores.

You could, of course, spend all your time at Harrods. This

HAVE YOU HEARD?

Couple are married in Dallas ceremony

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

A number of Midlanders traveled to Dallas for the March 2 wedding of Fuller French and Kara Murray in Embree Hall of the First Baptist Church. After honeymooning in the Virgin Islands, they will make their home in Los Angeles.

McKnight-Harrison

Parents of the couple are Marcia and Bobby French of Midland and Betty and Fulton Murray Jr. of Dallas.

The wedding was followed by a reception at Brookhollow Country Club.

Pre-nuptial festivities included a dinner party in the Dallas home of Elizabeth and Jay Smith, with Anne and Hugh Corrigan co-hosting.

Kara's grandmother, Mrs. Alice Reagor of Dallas, hosted a bridesmaids luncheon at The Mansion, and the groom's parents gave the rehearsal dinner at The Crescent Club.

Hosting a wedding day luncheon for out-of-town guests at Sam's Cafe were former Midlanders Sandy and Gary Laughlin and Alinda Wikert, along with her husband, Jim, all of Dallas, and Midlander Sonny Brown.

Other Midland residents attending included Barbara and Bob Duke, Mary and Bill Kennedy, Joanie (Mrs. Bobby) Holt, Marty and Jim Conine, Nancy and Joe Liberty, Andree and Bill Hickey, Johnna and Sid Curle, Bill Harris, Kay and Charlie Bird, Betty and Charlie Dean, Dottie and Earle Craig, Nancy and Barry Beal and family, Kathy and Duncan Kennedy, Blake Davenport, Trinka and Nick Taylor, Charlene and John Waddill, Mary Alice Knox, Barbara and Kirk French and Ted Collins.

Among the former Midlanders present were Barbara and Jack Nini of League City and Fred Kennedy of Chicago, Ill.

A ROUND OF BRIDAL festivities began for Jennifer Murray and Paul Sharrick Saturday evening with an engagement party hosted by Anita and Ted North at Green Tree Country Club. Plans were revealed for a June 29 wedding to take place in the First Baptist Church.

The bride-to-be was surprised to see the hors d'oeuvres tables adorned with cupids, white lace, ribbons, bows and towering columns of spring bouquets in her favorite colors. The cupids were given to the honorees as a remembrance by the host couple.

Guests were treated to stuffed cherry tomatoes, Swedish meatballs, cheese, fruit, chocolate covered strawberries and Danish wedding cookies.

Toasting and roasting of the bridal couple began with the bridegroom's parents, Phyllis and John Gunter and Pam and Jack Sharrick, and the bride's parents, Betty and Clarence Murray, along with the grandparents, Lou and Bob Hull and Dorothy Sharrick.

Out-of-town guests included Jennifer's grandmother, Martha (Mrs. E. Price) Bauman; her aunt and uncle, Phyllis and Cecil Dunham, and her cousins, Susan and Jeff Anz, all of Waco.

SANTA RITA CLUB volunteers were honored by their board at a recent tea. Mary Sue (Mrs. Bud) Harrison chaired the delightful event, which was held in the Petroleum Museum's Hall of Fame.

Santa Rita president Miriam (Mrs. Gene) Hanks, taking time from poring tea, mingled with many other Santa Ritans. Among the past presidents socializing were Paul Wecker, Margaret (Mrs. John) Rhea, Linda (Mrs. John) Borders, Joyce (Mrs. Jack) Hauke and former Midlander Moira (Mrs. Leonard) Attwell of Kerrville.

Others seen sharing experiences of their many areas of service to the museum were Natalie Lake, Paul Hopson, Fran Schneider, Edith Fowler, Shorty Nance, Colleen (Mrs. Vince) Scury, and Elsie (Mrs. Harry) Hugly.

THE WEDDING of Paige Pendleton of Midland and Stephen Doucette of Van Buren, Maine, took place during a five-day, four-night cruise aboard the cruise ship Fantasy while it was docked in Nassau, the Bahamas.

Accompanying the bride and groom on the cruise were a party of 73 people from 10 states and Canada.

Former Midlanders present were Lynn Erwin of Fort Worth, Kari Watson Bramer of Dallas and Grant Scherzer of Tulsa, Okla.

On the day of sailing, a "Welcome Aboard Party" was hosted by the bride's parents.

The wedding ceremony was conducted by the Rev. Mathias Munroe of Nassau on March 6. Also present at the ceremony were two representatives from the Bahamas Ministry of Tourism, Sylvia Cole and Carolyn Demarritte.

A festive reception aboard ship followed the ceremony.

SQUARE: London has something for everyone

time I just wander the floral market and look at the clothes. I stop to admire the stationery, but I am in search of a different sort of service offered by Harrods and I find it: the Debrett's Peerage department. Here you can trace your heritage for a fee through Debrett's Ancestry Research, and if you think there may be nobility in your line, you will want to buy a copy of one of their books on the aristocracy. Otherwise, just ask for Debrett's Information Service. This unique offering is on the fourth floor and the clerks are helpful, but above all, proper.

I decide to stray a bit from things English in the Sloane Square area. I choose Little Venice on the map. There is a canal connection from Regents Park but it is not as close as Hyde Park. Also, it is cold and foggy, so I choose the Sloane Square tube station to get me to my destination.

By now it is nighttime and the launches along the canal and a floating restaurant with lace curtains are colorfully and artfully lighted. There is faint music that moves over the water with the fog. I choose to go to the Canal Cafe at The Bridge House, Delamere Terrace, because there is a little theatre upstairs.

There is an early show and a late show, and I dine on regular Italian cuisine and stay for the late show which is titled "Vincent." It is, of course, about the Dutch artist Van Gogh and his descent into madness. A lone actor in a black leotard plays all parts, including the female ones. In turn, he is the crazed artist, tender friend, concerned brother and coquettish mistress when he dons a bonnet that ties under his chin. He even plays the demon inside Van Gogh's head. "The Scotsman" calls it "a bewilderingly skilled performance," while the understated "Independence" says it is "an innovative and challenging" play. There are performances Tuesdays through Saturdays and you may call 289-6054 for information.

I am impressed by this actor's talent and overwhelmed with the beauty of this little part of Italy that I find off London's beaten track.

Back at Sloane Square, all is proper again. I am ready for the trip home on British Airways. As we disembark at DFW airport, I am reluctant to leave that last flavor of London, a farewell "Cheerio" from the stewardess.

Since I have never quite figured out Sloane Square and this is my last chance, I turn and ask her, "What is Sloane Square?" "Oh, beautiful," she says, "where the beautiful people are."

I stop over in Dallas to visit a friend who is indeed beautiful. "Didn't you love London," she says. "We had such a wonderful time when we were there, so close to all the theatres. We were lucky enough to get a flat on Sloane Square."

AT WIT'S END

Kids can flap, but are they ready to fly?

By Erma Bombeck

In Colorado they tell the story of a mother who simply walked out of the house and disappeared one morning, leaving her three children behind. Police searched for her for 12 years and finally tracked her down in Canada.

Bombeck

When asked why she had abandoned her family, she said she had run away from home to force her three grown children to be more independent and quit leaning on her.

I have been tempted to do that, but deep down inside, I have a nagging concern they wouldn't look for me.

The story brings up an age-old question, "How long do you mother?" I have a feeling that when my kids march down the aisle to join in holy wedlock the persons with whom they are going to share the rest of their lives, I will pass them a clean nose tissue, spit on their shoes, and shout, "They need more work. Give me a minute. I'm not finished yet."

Parents have never figured out at what stage their children must be before they are ready to assume control of their own lives. To some adults, it's like admitting defeat. We are committed to hang in there until they at least know the basics. They should know that towels belong on a rack and not on the floor. They should know that when they receive a Nobel Prize, they are expected to say "Thank you" and maybe follow it up with a nice note. At some stage it should hit them that when they stand for hours in front of an open refrigerator door, nothing is going to sing or dance.

Eventually, they should get a handle on how to feed themselves and how a thermostat works. It's always a big day when they discover money doesn't grow in their mother's purse.

Maybe the Colorado mother had children who retired before they ever had a job to retire from. Maybe they bought an $80 sweater for a girl they met in a line at the movies two weeks earlier and gave their mother a vegetable slicer for Mother's Day. Chances are they considered summers as vacation.

The mother eventually returned home. The story didn't elaborate about whether or not things got better during those 12 years. But I'm willing to bet that when she walked in the door, one of her kids said, "We're out of milk," another said, "I'm out of underwear," and the third whined, "What did you bring me?"

DEAR ABBY

Few simple keys unlock doors to popularity

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I was housecleaning and came across a clipping of a column I had kept since 1958 — the year my daughter graduated from high school. I reread it, and Abby, I want you to run it again because the kids of today sure can use the advice you gave 33 years ago. I hope you agree with me. I am 74 years old and have 11 grandchildren. — ETHEL TAYLOR, WAYNESBERG, KY.

Van Buren

DEAR ETHEL: I agree. Here's the letter, and thanks for asking:

DEAR ABBY: A year ago, I was a poor student, shy, lonely, friendless, unhappy, and I never smiled. I wrote to you, and you gave me the best advice I ever received. Here it is:

"The key to being popular with both sexes is: Be kind. Be honest. Be tactful. If you can't be beautiful (or handsome), be well-groomed, tastefully attired, conscious of your posture, and KEEP A SMILE ON YOUR FACE.

"Be clean in body and mind. If you're not a 'brain,' try harder. If you're not a great athlete, be a good sport. Try to be a standout in something. If you can't dance or sing, learn to play an instrument. Think for yourself, but respect the rules. Be generous with kind words and affectionate gestures, but save the heavy artillery for later. You'll be glad you did. If you need help, ask God. If you don't need anything, thank God. — LOVE, ABBY"

I followed your advice, step by step, and kept it handy when I felt low. I am now president of the sophomore class and I play the guitar. Smiling comes naturally to me, and I have a boyfriend who is kind and respectable. My grades are better, and I have more friends than I ever dreamed I'd have.

Abby, you're not the only one who helped me. God helped me. He answered my prayers. — CAROL

DEAR ABBY: Since you're so smug about using the word "waitperson," I decided I ought to point out what children's verse would be like if Mother Goose — I mean Parent Goose — had lived in this day of linguistic lunacy. Here is a sanitized version of a sexist/ageist poem by the Goose:

There was a person of undisclosable age
Who lived with his or her kids in a shoe.
"Unless quickly you remind me,
"Giving me privacy, kindly,"
Said she or he, "I'll slap a lawsuit on you!"

— GALL (GROUP AGAINST LINGUISTIC LUNACY)

P.S. For the sake of consistency, please don't forget to use "actperson," "bounceperson," "carpentperson," "engineperson," "farmperson," etc. — FROM COLUMBUS, OHIO

DEAR ABBY: The enclosed article was published in our local paper, and I thought it deserved a wider audience. If every parent and grandparent made this little jingle a part of a child's daily life, who knows how much energy might be saved! — YOUR FAN IN VERMONT

DEAR FAN: I agree. And here it is:

SINGING FOR EDISON

Annette Anderson, who died several years ago in Rutland, Vt., at the age of 99, was a singer. From 1914 to 1917, she worked with Thomas Alva Edison, singing song after song as he developed his phonograph recording system. He had stacks of sheet music everywhere, and would pick one out, saying "Here, Annette — sing this one."

I remember Annette telling me about Edison's eccentricities, and his small soundproof recording room (completely lined with horsehair), but the strongest memory is of a jingle I heard daily in my childhood. It was written by Edison, and it hung from the electric light chain in his recording room.

It went like this: "Save the juice, save the juice, turn out the light when not in use!"

Perhaps if we all posted this prudent reminder near the light switches in our homes, we would be less dependent on foreign oil and could avoid situations like the one we are in right now. — DORIS ERB, CUTTINGSVILLE, VT.

DEAR DORIS: With all due respect to Mr. Edison, "juice" is saved only if the lights are switched off for 10 minutes or longer. According to a spokesperson for the Department of Water and Power in Los Angeles, there is a power surge when lights are turned on, so lights should be left on if one plans to be in and out of the room. Perhaps the jingle should be amended to read, "Save the juice, save the juice, turn out the light if it won't be needed for 10 minutes or more." Of course, the meter is all wrong, but the message is accurate.

DEAR ABBY: "Helene," my future sister-in-law, asked me to be a bridesmaid in her wedding this June. I agreed.

I just found out I am pregnant, and by my doctor's calculations, I will be eight months along in June. When I told Helene why I couldn't be in her wedding, I started a family feud. She feels it is perfectly OK for me to be a bridesmaid with an enormous belly. I say I would look ridiculous, and my physical state would detract from the wedding.

I don't want to hurt their feelings, but I also want to preserve the sanctity of the wedding. (Also, that far along in the pregnancy, anything can happen!)

What's your opinion? — THE BELLY IN EAGAN, MINN.

DEAR BELLY: If you would be uncomfortable standing up for the bride during your eighth month, your future sister-in-law should be sensitive enough to release you from your promise and allow you to sit this one out. You are correct — at eight months, anything can happen.

DEAR ABBY: Please help me before I pull the last strands of hair out of my balding pate! I have been trying to find a word that is not in any dictionary or thesaurus. I have called the public library as well as my newspaper, and no one was able to help me. The word I am looking for is what the person who makes up crossword puzzles is called. Thanks for any help you can give me. — A.L. DELK

DEAR MR. DELK: The word is "cruciverbalist," and you are correct, it is not in any dictionary, thesaurus or "word finder."

Nor was it in my vocabulary — in fact, I had never heard of the word before I went on this treasure hunt. I also learned that crossword puzzles have been in existence for more than 2,000 years.

Tulum provides glimpse of final Mayan years

By Jack Biesterfeld
Copley News Service

Tulum, founded by by the Mayans, discovered by the conquering Spaniards, has been rediscovered by tourists.

They come by bus and car from the chic resorts of Cancun and Cozumel, Mexico, and on shore excursions from cruise ships that stop at Playa del Carmen, a short drive to the north.

Little is known about the history of Tulum. It probably was built somewhere around A.D. 700 to 1000 during the declining years of the Mayan empire. It was a seaside resort for the priests and Mayan royalty.

It is believed some activity still was going on when the Spaniards conquered the Yucatan Peninsula in the 1500s. But when other explorers reached the area in the 1800s, the site was abandoned.

Visitors today can get a flavor of the festivities that once occurred around the temple. Native entrepreneurs sit in the shade in front of the temple compound hawking blankets, small Mayan statues and brightly colored embroidered shirts, much as the merchants did 10 centuries ago.

At that time, the biggest celebrations occurred every 52 years, when, according to the Mayan calendar, the world came to an end, and another new life began. All debts were canceled, all fires put out and the temples were rebuilt.

THE BUILDINGS were covered with stucco and painted in bright colors and designs. Intricately carved stone serpents and decorations were carved into the stone structures and expertly painted frescoes adorned interior walls.

Today the buildings are in ruins. Visitors enter a narrow gap through the wall built around the city to protect it from attacks by savage tribes to the south.

The most imposing structure is El Castillo, which dominates a complex of temples perched high on a bluff overlooking the sea. Visitors can climb up more than two dozen steep stone steps to reach the temple high atop the pyramid.

Inside the dimly lit temple, ancient secret rituals and sacrificial ceremonies once were conducted by robed high priests, who were hidden from the common masses far below.

The view from the top of the temple is worth the climb. The eastern coast of the Yucatan Peninsula spreads out in both directions in a sweeping vista. The azure blue of the Caribbean is joined to the deep green of the jungle by a fringe of foaming white surf. Far below the temple, the waves break into a frenzy as they crash upon the rocks.

In front of El Castillo are other temples, sites of other unknown rituals. There is the well-preserved Temple of the Descending God. The temple is a miniature of El Castillo and is dedicated to the Mayan bee god, one of thousands of gods in the Mayan religion.

ON THE OPPOSITE side of El Castillo is the Temple of the Initial Series, once used by the Mayans in determining their calendar.

Other buildings and temples are scattered around the Tulum site. The Temple of the Frescoes is the best preserved and decorated. Inside the two-story, columned structure is a fresco in blues, greens and blacks, which depicts serpents, crops, gods and other symbolic Mayan figures. The ceiling is covered by little red handprints made by the god Zamma.

The Great Palace contained many rooms and its front was flanked by rows of pillars. The House of the Cenote sits astride a cave with a spring inside, used to supply water when Tulum was under siege by enemies.

ON THE WAY back, tours often stop at Xel-Ha for a swim in the crystal-clear lagoons. The park contains a restaurant, changing rooms, snorkel rental and other water sports, as well as several shops. Ruins of a small temple can be seen beside the road a short distance away.

Supermarkets offer job opportunities

NORTHBROOK, Ill. (AP) — The trend toward one-stop grocery shopping has increased employment opportunities for workers with special skills such as those required by in-store bakeries, delicatessens and computerized service pharmacies, report Nielsen marketing researchers.

About eight of 10 grocery stores now have in-store bakeries, an increase of some 20 percent during the past five years, while delicatessens are offered by nearly 90 percent of all supermarkets, an increase of 15 percent since 1986. Automated bank teller machines and counsel by cosmeticians also are rapidly growing services in many stores.

Breaking up is becoming harder to do

By Trish Hall
N.Y. Times News Service

These days there is so much emphasis on the family that divorce seems to be going out of style. Therapists say many couples struggle harder and longer to stay together than they might have a few years ago.

Poll takers find a greater value being placed on the idea of commitment and a happy marriage. And researchers churn out studies suggesting that both children and adults suffer physical and emotional harm from divorce.

Indeed, with the advent of books like "Adult Children of Divorce Speak Out" (Simon & Schuster, 1991), the day may be coming when divorce will be considered a pathology.

"I think there is definitely a turning away from the acceptability of divorce and from minimizing the impact of divorce," said Bickley Townsend, a vice president for the Roper Organization in New York, which polls people on social attitudes.

When Roper asked 2,000 people last year to define the most important aspect of success, the top choice was "being a good wife and mother, or husband and father." Four years earlier, the top choice was "being true to yourself."

Today, there are 4.7 divorces annually per 1,000 people in the population, down from a peak of 5.3 in 1979. Although the aging of the population may be a major cause of this decline, divorce is also less attractive these days for reasons like the fear of AIDS and the cost of setting up two households in an uncertain economy.

Furthermore, the glorification of the traditional family is evident on television, in movies and especially in books. There has been a proliferation of titles like "Rebuilding the Nest," "The Case Against Divorce," "Family Matters" and "Back to the Family."

In the '70s and early '80s, the climate was different. Movies like "Alice Doesn't Live Here Anymore" were popular then and popular fiction celebrated divorce as a means of gaining liberation and a new life.

A woman who divorced in the '70s said so many of her friends were also breaking up that it seemed like an easy thing to go through. Like others who were interviewed, she did not want her name used. Another woman, who is divorcing for the second time, agreed that social realities are different this time around.

THERE IS A FEELING, she said, that people should try harder. Before breaking up she and her husband spent several years seeing therapists individually, going to joint counseling and even attending marriage workshops and seminars. With her first husband, she said, she sought counseling only briefly before deciding to divorce.

Increasingly, marriage is supposed to be worked on, like a car or a roof, often with expert help. In the last 10 years membership in the American Association for Marriage and Family Therapy has doubled, to 17,500.

Although the therapist has been supposed to be neutral as to outcomes, a growing number believe their colleagues ought to try harder to keep marriages together.

Prominently arguing that point of view is Michele Weiner-Davis, a therapist in Woodstock, Ill., whose speech, "Divorce Busters," attracted intense interest at the association's meeting last fall. In her practice, she said in a telephone interview, she has seen many people discover that divorce does not solve their problems.

"In the '60s and '70s," she said, "people really thought that the cause of their unhappiness was their spouse, and if they could get rid of that person, they'd be happy." Instead, said Ms. Weiner-Davis, whose parents were divorced, "divorce creates wounds that never go away."

That message is painful for those who have decided to end their marriages. Painful messages or not, divorce has been made easier by its prevalence and many couples are still willing to divorce. The rate has not fallen as far as some demographers expected it to as the population moved past the teens and twenties, when divorce is most common.

"Just based on the population structure, fewer people are in high-risk groups," said Sally Cuningham, a statistician with the National Center for Health Statistics. The divorce rate has fallen by 11 percent from its peak in 1979, but little of that change has come in the last four years.

"In lots of ways, we have a gap between yearning and behavior," said Barbara Caplan, a vice president at Yankelovich Clancy Shulman in Westport, Conn., which does research in social trends.

'I think there is definitely a turning away from the acceptability of divorce and from minimizing the impact of divorce.'

— Bickley Townsend
vice president, Roper Organization in New York

"There is a recognition that the family is a very workable unit of emotional and economic support. But to bring that about is not the easiest thing in the world."

The long-term consequences of divorce are a topic of great debate among researchers and therapists. Just as some therapists worry about the effects of divorce, others are concerned that bad marriages also create wounds that never go away.

"High-conflict or icy-cold marriages often stay together for life, and these are very detrimental to children," said Constance Ahrons, a professor of sociology at the University of Southern California and the author of "Divorced Families" (Norton, 1989).

ADOLESCENT GIRLS ARE just as distressed by conflicts between their parents at home as they are by the eventual divorce, said William J. Doherty, director of the marriage and family therapy program at the University of Minnesota in St. Paul and a psychotherapist in private practice.

He is the author of a study on the effects of divorce to be published next month in the Journal of Child Development.

Researchers' conclusions on the consequences of divorce affect the way people feel. Particularly influential was a study several years ago by Judith Wallerstein suggesting that 50 percent of children in divorced households suffered long-term negative effects, like depression and anger.

Doherty said his clients took to heart the message of her book, "Second Chances," written with Sandra Blakeslee (Ticknor & Fields, 1989). "I see people who are in distressed marriages and have kids and read Wallerstein's book, and they are scared for their kids," he said. "They may try harder to try to make it work."

Although most researchers agree that divorce causes problems for children, they disagree as to how long those problems last. Many of them discount the Wallerstein findings because there was no control group.

Research by E. Mavis Hetherington at the University of Virginia, which did have a control group, suggests that children can be "survivors, losers or winners" in divorce, depending on such variables as their character, age and resources.

Dr. Ahrons questions society's willingness to blame divorce for an array of problems, and believes the concept of failure should be removed. Given the increase in longevity and the greater economic independence of women, divorce will always be a reasonable choice, she maintains, and couples should be helped to achieve successful marital dissolutions.

To some extent the feeling that divorce is an unpleasant alternative is a result of 20 years of experience as divorce became more common. In addition, a population that is growing older tends to have a different perspective on relationships.

Judith Langer, a market researcher in New York who interviews about 2,000 people a year in focus groups, said the single life has lost so much of its allure that some people seem to be sticking with marriages despite significant dissatisfaction.

"What I'm seeing now, with AIDS, is a lot of fear," she said.

A woman who lives in the Washington area and has been married for 13 years, said she now understands that problems would exist in any relationship. Her marriage may not be what she dreamed of when she was young, she said, but she finds the cost of dismantling it to be too high.

Susan Dangerfield, 39, who lives in Crystal Lake, Ill., was in counseling briefly with her husband and considered divorce at one point, but backed off. "I started looking around at other men I knew, both married and single, and I saw a lot of jerks out there," she said. "It made me realize what a wonderful guy I had."

Plan honeymoon now for June weddings

By Jennifer Merin
Associated Press

With wedding bells ready to ring, it's time to plan for romantic summer honeymoons. June, the height of honeymoon season, is three months away. Finding ideal hideaways or perfect adventures requires at least that much lead time.

The 10 favorite honeymoon destinations for U.S. couples are Florida, Hawaii, Mexico, California, the U.S. Virgin Islands, Jamaica, the Bahamas, Bermuda, Pennsylvania and New York State, according to Modern Bride magazine. All offer splendid scenery, warm weather, interesting sights, outdoor sports and (except for Pennsylvania) ocean beaches.

Affordable honeymoon packages can be booked through travel agents or airline tour desks. While convenient, they aren't very personal. With a little more planning and a little larger investment, you can create a honeymoon that is a special shared adventure, perhaps fulfilling the dreams of a lifetime.

For example, consider renting a houseboat on Lake Powell, the huge man-made lake and reservoir bordering Arizona and Utah. Handsome wood-paneled houseboats are fully equipped with kitchens, beds and baths. Pack bread and wine, sun block, a cassette player and tapes — and cast off.

Commune with nature and each other along Lake Powell's 1,960 miles of irregular coastline, replete with secluded inlets, unspoiled beaches and splendid red rock mesas. Best of all, you can make your bed on the houseboat's flat roof and sleep beneath the stars.

For reservations call 1-800-528-6154.

OR CRUISE TO several Caribbean islands instead of settling for one. Norwegian Cruise Line's S.S. Norway, the largest ocean liner plying Caribbean waters, is among several pleasure vessels offering honeymooners discount prices, special parties, cakes, cocktails, souvenir photos and certificates and cabins with double beds.

The Norway's week-long cruise from Miami to Saint Martin, Saint Thomas, a private Bahamian island and back to Miami offers quiet shipboard romance and a full entertainment program at sea, plus sightseeing, shopping and beach hopping in ports of call.

Call Norwegian Cruise Lines 1-800-327-7030 for brochures and reservations.

For domestic adventure, settle into a small hotel tucked among giant redwoods, exquisite beaches and fabulous wineries in northern California's Sonoma County. For example, Timberhill Ranch has 10 elegant cottages with woodburning fireplaces, handmade quilts and lakeside views.

Timberhill is a working farm. Gourmet meals, included in room rates, are prepared from homegrown produce. Domesticated animals wander the grounds, joining you — unless you shoo them away — at jacuzzi, tennis courts and hikes around 80 wooded acres.

For Timberhill, call 1-707-847-3258. For other hotels and attractions, call Sonoma County Visitor & Convention Bureau at 1-800-326-7666.

Aside from destination choice, other factors contribute to honeymoon enjoyment. Request a double bed, especially when booking cruises, safaris or other adventure trips. Even if you don't plan to hide away in your room, honeymoon accommodations should be special.

Don't book an early flight the morning after your wedding. You may oversleep or resent having to get up. Plan your honeymoon together to fulfill mutual dreams but allow time apart for personal interests, then enjoy exchanging individual experiences and impressions.

Let people know from the moment you make reservations that you are honeymooners. You'll often receive discount prices, complimentary fruit baskets and champagne, gift items, photo albums or souvenir videos or certificates.

'Eco-warrior' takes radical approach

By Arthur Salm
Copley News Service

Dave Foreman is either an extremely dangerous man on the violent fringe of a bizarre, radical, thoroughly un-American political movement, or he is a visionary, a wise, thoughtful leader of a dedicated group of deeply concerned — one might even say truly heroic — individuals.

Middle ground is just about impossible to establish on this one, because Dave Foreman is the cofounder of Earth First!, one of the most aggressive, hands-on of all the environmental movements. Assessment of Foreman and his fellows depends entirely on one's point of view.

If you believe, or lean even slightly toward the belief, that the natural resources of the earth exist for the good of humankind ... No, you don't even have to go that far: If you consider non-human life, minerals and open space to be natural resources, then Foreman is not your man.

Or rather, he's a man you'd like to see behind bars, where he just might be before too long — he has been indicted for conspiring to blow up power lines leading to nuclear power plants.

If, on the other hand, you hold with Foreman that the Earth exists not wholly for the aggrandisement of human beings, and that other species have not merely some value in and of themselves but are, in fact, every bit as important as human beings — well, Foreman would be your next candidate for Mount Rushmore, were it not for the ecological havoc another bust would play on the Black Hills.

FOREMAN CALLS this interspecies egalitarian ethic "biocentrism," and he states its premise early and often in "Confessions of an Eco-Warrior" (Harmony):

"Clearly ... the conservation battle is not one of merely protecting outdoor recreation opportunities, or a matter of esthetics, or 'wise management and use' of natural resources. We — this generation of humans — are at our most important juncture since we came out of the trees six million years ago. It is our decision, ours today, whether Earth continues to be a marvelously living, diverse oasis in the blackness of space, or whether the 'charismatic megafauna' of the future will consist of Norway Rats and cockroaches."

Why wilderness? Foreman asks, and provides an answer that is either taken to heart almost instinctively or rejected out of hand: "... because wilderness is. Because it is the real world, the flow of life, the process of evolution, the repository of three and a half billion years of shared travel ...

"All things have intrinsic value, inherent worth. Their value is determined not by what they will ring up on the cash register of the gross national product, or by whether or not they are good. They are good because they exist."

Given such an attitude, it is not surprising that in formulating a plan for greatly increased areas of land to be set aside as wilderness areas, Foreman proposes some rather far-out ideas — the elimination of maps for these areas, for example, and the prohibition of the use of high tech camping gear in them. He even suggests that injured visitors should not be provided with emergency rescue services. You got yourself in, and you should have to drag yourself out.

CNS Photo

Dave Foreman believes the earth should come first.

MOST OF "Confessions," however, is given over to the debate on sabotaging the work of logging companies and developers — "ecotage," as it is sometimes called, or, popularly, "monkeywrenching," a coin termed by the late Edward Abbey in his Hayduke novels. Although Foreman claims not to encourage monkeywrenching — he has a trial coming up, remember — neither does he condemn it.

To Foreman's credit, he spends considerable time wrestling with the moral problems attendant to monkeywrenching. He focuses in particular on what seems to be the self-righteousness that almost invariably accompanies the act, the dangers inherent in fanaticism and the very real (and, he maintains, very avoidable) possibilities of causing injuries to members of the not-so-special human species.

Although heartfelt, "Confessions" is neither smoothly written nor a great deal of fun to read. Although Foreman pleads repeatedly for environmentalists to take joy in their work, to make fun of themselves and always, always to laugh (Emma Goldman, remember, claimed that she wanted no part of a revolution in which she could not dance), there's not a light moment to be found. A few Edward Abbey belly laughs would not have been at all out of place.

Family cruises popular

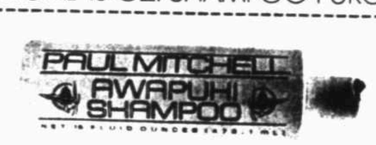

MIAMI (AP) — Cruises are becoming one of the most popular family vacations, according to Bob Dickinson, a Carnival Cruise Line vice president. He says families who used to take cruises only during the summer and on holidays now take them all year-round because they are economical and offer a variety of activities.

For example, he says his firm's kids' programs feature video game rooms, special pools and special times for teens in the discos.

SEEDS FOR THOUGHT

Henbit annoying, not dangerous

By Deborah A. Benge

Benge

Did a little weed, with purple tubular flowers and scalloped-edged leaves, pop up in your lawn overnight?

Don't worry, it's not an obnoxious weed — just annoying.

Some weeds are categorized as noxious, such as Johnson grass, field bindweed and nutsedge, but this little weed can't begin to cause the trouble a noxious weed can.

Every year at least one of nature's efforts gets a little out of balance. Last year it was the Mesquite Cutworm Moth, those large night-flying moths that swarmed inside your home and all over your porch.

This little weed, called henbit, may be a little bit out of balance this year. Henbit is about five or six inches tall, has a long section of stem from leaf group to leaf group, scalloped-edged roundish leaves and ½-inch long tubular-shaped flowers.

Henbit is a cool season annual, which means it only lives for one season, will die in the heat of summer and is much easier to control than a perennial weed. It germinates in the fall, grows through the winter, blooms and sets seed in the spring and dies in summer's heat.

Late last summer and fall, good rains fell on this area and the soil moisture was adequate, so henbit flourished. Although it may not have been noticable during the winter, it is now.

On many lawns, most of the weed is located on the edges. Lawns may become "stressed" because the water easily runs off. Inadequate watering weakens the lawn, causing it to lose its edge and provide an opportunity of weeds to grow.

Usually henbit is not a big problem, but there are some steps that can be taken to eliminate it. Spot-treating with directed sprays of recommended herbicides can take henbit out. Just mowing it will cause it to die. To prevent the problem next year, use a recommended preemergent herbicide in mid-September.

Just for the record: Dandelions are active right now but crabgrass is not. Crabgrass is a warm season, annual, grassy weed and does not germinate until soil terperatures get warm.

"Growing and Selling Vegetables in the Permian Basin" seminar will be 2 p.m. March 21 at Midland County Extension Office, 2445 E. Highway 80 in Midland.

Two horticulturists specializing in vegetables will conduct the seminar. Dr. Roland Roberts, TAEX vegetable specialist for the High Plains, will speak on "Early Harvest Techniques," and Dr. Frank Dainello, TAEX state vegetable specialist, will provide up-to-date information on vegetable production.

All interested persons are invited to attend. No pre-registration or fees are required. For more information call 687-1351.

Deborah Benge is the extension horticulture agent for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in Midland and Ector counties.

Spring is time to contemplate travel

By Jennifer Merin
Associated Press

Now that the winter is passing and spring is almost here, it's time to contemplate travel pleasures for 1991, a year with exciting special events, festivals and anniversaries.

Note these highlights:

■ DUBLIN, the great literary city, is designated 1991's "European City of Culture" by the European Community. The Irish capital offers year-long cultural programming, including the Early Music Festival, medieval, renaissance, baroque and classical styles, April 6-14; Dublin International Piano Competition, April 20-May 1.

Also scheduled are the Dublin Literary Festival, June 16-28, with special Bloomsday celebrations on June 16; Dublin Puppet Festival, mid-July, and Dublin Theater Festival, Oct. 6-19. In May, two new museums, the Irish Museum of Art and Dublin Writers' Museum, open their doors.

Additional events include set dancing and science and historical exhibits, as well as public debates — always entertaining in Ireland — and colloquia on social and political issues. For schedules, contact the Irish Tourist Board, 757 Third Ave., New York, N.Y., 10017.

■ AUSTRIA, with a splendid performance and exhibition roster, leads the world in commemorating the 200th anniversary of Mozart's death — Dec. 5, 1791.

In Salzburg, the composer's birth city, "Mozart in Picture and Sound" from March 23-Nov. 11 chronicles his life and times, offering creative interaction as spectators try to compose musical pieces or visit listening rooms. The Summer Festival, July 26-Aug. 31, stages six major Mozart operas, including "Cosi fan tutte," "Don Giovanni" and "The Magic Flute." The Salzburg Marionette Theater performs five Mozart operas throughout the year.

In Vienna, concerts are planned for churches and in the open air (Schonbrunn Palace Theater from July 4-14), with soloists Luciano Pavarotti and Placido Domingo. The Vienna State Opera's Mozart Festival, May 10-June 8, will perform Mozart operas in German and Italian; Vienna Volksoper stages the principal operas in German.

For schedules, contact the Austrian National Tourist Office, 500 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y., 10110. Austrian Airlines, 1-800-843-0002, will help ticketed passengers buy hard-to-find tickets to the Mozart events.

■ SWITZERLAND celebrates the 700th anniversary of confederation with pomp and ceremony throughout cities and towns, from valleys to mountaintops, and with a year-long series of events and exhibitions organized into three major festivals.

Recognizing Switzerland's French, German, Italian and Romansch heritage, the Festival of the Four Cultures will present music in Geneva, folklore and photography exhibits in Fribourg, sculpture in Bern and painting and architecture in Neuchatel. These regional festivities will culminate in a concentrated agenda of exhibitions, concerts and ballet in Lausanne June 15-30.

The Festival of Confederation begins July 31 with a gathering of young Swiss in Ruetli Meadow above Lake Lucerne, where Switzerland's founders signed their pact of Everlasting Alliance in 1291.

A big folk festival occurs in Brunnen Aug. 2-4. The Festival of Solidarity focuses on Switzerland's interactions with the world community. On June 14, International Relations Day, Switzerland's federal cabinet receives representatives from foreign governments in Bern. An international symposium for artists from all continents takes place Aug. 12-25 at Chur (in Graubuenden).

For full schedules, contact the Swiss National Tourist Office, 608 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y., 10020. Swissair's Swiss Travel Invention Program offers reduced hotel and car rental rates in conjunction with flights ticketed from March 31-Oct. 31. Call 1-800-424-3424.

■ BOSTON, here at home, is hosting International Cultural Festival through March 24. It is celebrating 11 countries, each with a week-long program highlighting cuisine, business customs, fashion, political issues, fine and applied arts. Japan, Greece, Israel, Italy, France and Brazil are among the countries being honored.

A sampling of events include lunch with Japanese designer Rei Kawakubo, a dinner dance to benefit Brazil's rain forest, a global affairs reception with professors from MIT and Harvard.

For schedules, contact The Ritz-Carlton, 15 Arlington St., Boston, Mass., 02117. Telephone 617-536-5700.

CANCUN

It's springtime -- and time to plan a trip to Mexico! And we've got some exciting ones to Cancun for you to consider. Cancun is one of the newest resorts in Mexico, and Midland Travel and TourExpress are the Cancun experts.

Cancun was an isolated, undeveloped beach at the northeastern tip of the Yucatan Peninsula until the 1970's. The clear blue waters and sandy white beaches were discovered first by scuba divers, and its proximity to the famed Mayan ruins made it inevitable that the area would become one L-shaped island, over 13 miles long and 1/4 mile wide (the resort is divided into Cancun and Cancun island). The beaches are virtually 100% limestone, keeping the sand cool and comfortable to walk on, even in the heat of the summer. And now we're able to offer terrific vacations at three Cancun resorts: the five-star Casa Maya, located on one of the wide beaches on the Caribbean Sea. Just three miles from downtown, and offering championship golf, restaurants, disco and shopping. The Yalmakan (pronounced "ya'all come on") is another excellent choice for a beachfront hotel. And the America Cancun is a great choice for those who want the liveliness of Cancun's downtown area-- popular restaurants, nightclubs and bargain shopping. Free shuttle service is offered to the America Beach Club. And the prices on these are TREMENDOUS-- but you'll have to call us to get them! Call us this week and let us take you out of the sandstorms of West Texas and off to the beaches of Cancun!

The nautical influence of spring fashion is displayed in this sailor-inspired city shorts outfit by Ann Tobias. The shoes are accented with clip on bows.

Sail into Spring

Although Desert Storm has turned to Desert Calm, the influence of the war on the world of fashion will be seen for a long time to come. The patriotism Americans showed for their country during the war will continue to emerge in a banner of red, white and blue, and military inspired styles.

There also will be a sense of nostalgia in the air. Styles from the '60s are finding their way back into our closets with everything from psychedelic prints and miniskirts to the classic looks of Audrey Hepburn and Jackie Onasis.

No matter what your fashion taste, spring style for '91 will have a focus that fits your needs.

Shapes and colors of the sea are worked into the design of this nautical print and fashioned into a seafaring outfit by Abbi Taylor. The split skirt is the perfect design for windy spring days.

Lifestyle Editor

A wave of nautical, military and retro '60s styles are sailing into fashion focus for spring.

Although the nautical look is not really new (it reappears almost every spring) the '91 focus is on collars similar to sailors' collars only with a designer twist and suggestions of marine life in both shapes and colors. The military look of brass buttons, shoulder ropes and braids also are adorning spring styles.

Part of the fascination associated with these styles may be due to the military influence of the war in the Persian Gulf, according to Stephanie Large, manager of Connie's Fashions. But there also is a growing concern about the environment which is drawing attention to the colors of the earth and sea. Navy and marine blues, and naturals like wheat and flax are pivotal colors this season.

While these nautical and military styles may bring nostalgic thoughts, they are not even close to the blasts-from-the-past that the retro '60s styles will bring. Retro fashions include shifts, tent dresses, halter-top sun dresses, hot pants, miniskirts and hip-hugging belts. The baby doll dress also is back, which fits snugly under the bust and flares over the hips.

But not all of the '60s resurgence is quite so breath-taking. Audrey Hepburn-inspired dresses and suits and anything that Jackie Kennedy Onasis might have worn can be considered stylish '60s chic for the '90s.

The dress or dress/jacket ensemble, tailored two-piece suits and city shorts are the talk of the season. A-line or trapeze style dresses and the long-over-short silhouette look are considered "in."

Emphasis is on legs and trendy looks are short skirts and leggings with long jackets. Shoes are an important accessory, especially pumps when accented with clip on bows or buckles. "That way, you have a plain pump when you need it, but you can also dress it up with a bow," according to Ms. Large.

The mixing and matching of colors and prints will play an important role in the overall spring look. Prints and patterns popular for spring include stripes, polka dots, ginghams, graphics — including Pucci and psychedelic brights — and all kinds of florals, some even sporting big daisies of the '60s fashion heydays.

Indian and western looks will continue to be strong, particularly here in the Southwest. Suede fringed jackets — or suede look-alikes — are making a comeback. And although there had been rumors that denim was on its way out, never fear, according to Ms. Large. Jeans are still a favorite, faded denim shorts and skirts mixed with lace are particularly popular items.

So, whatever your style may be, spring fashions will have something to offer you.

FASHION FOCUS Children's SPRING STYLE

Babies, children, teens prefer comfortable fashions

By Monica Perez
Copley News Service

It takes six months to around 3½ years (the age of unreasonability) for a new parent to learn about kids' clothing. What these parents learn are things like:

■ Hats are so cute — but 90 percent of all kids won't wear them.

■ Whites and other light solids are so classic, so romantic on children. And so impractical, unless the child lives in a bubble.

■ Cotton is crisp, cool and stylish. Cotton also wrinkles and holds a stain like you wouldn't believe.

■ Jumpsuits and overalls are adorable but very impractical around the age of potty training — those kids (and their preschool teachers) need a quicker escape.

■ Most important, as kids grow older you have to know not only what's in, but what they'll wear. Because a $50 blouse is worth nothing hanging in the back of a closet.

So, if you're about to head out shopping for and/or with a baby, child, or teen, here are a handful of ideas.

CNS Photo

Parents will keep their children in satorial splendor with clothes in comfortable fabrics. These overalls for toddlers to teens are from McCall's patterns.

TINY TOTS

The news in baby wear is designer labels and grown-up styles. There is an element of twin dressing going on — as in mother-/daughter matching outfits — but that's a bit much.

Unless it's a denim shirt from The Gap. Last year The Gap introduced its baby Gap line of little clothes for sizes 0 to 24 months. Made of natural fibers and in many of the same prints, florals and oversize stripes as grown-up Gap items, they are the hippest infant wear to date.

But watch out for that cotton. Opt for busy patterns to hide inevitable baby-food stains and stretchy fabrics for the child's comfort.

Since parents get to control what their baby will wear, you can buy funky styles that the child won't balk at, like billowy jumpsuits. Socks, the more colorful the better, are great "fashion accessories" for babies since they don't often wear shoes.

2 TO 10

Watch for that independent streak. At these ages, it's a very good idea to consider whether the little girl will only wear dresses — or if a young boy lives only in shorts.

For little girls, big floral prints are in the stores for this season, feminine dresses with crisp or lacy white collars. High waistlines and A-lines are popular in girls' dresses. There is a traditional emphasis on the dressy end of the rack and the beginnings of a '60s revolution on the other end in playwear, though this is mostly in teen clothing.

Much of kids' sporty school wear mimics teen and older styles. Again GapKids offers the jeans, cotton blouses and T-shirts that appeal to a parent's sense of style, but still feel good enough to romp in. Straight jeans skirts by Guess? are big for little girls.

Leggings are big in just about any age group, topped with big shirts, but mostly little mini flounce dresses.

Neon has faded for the ladies, but boys aren't finished with it yet. And though industry analysts predict the demise of the surf look, a poll among young boys would probably reveal otherwise.

"Streetwear" is gaining fast. Trickling down from their big brothers' sizes are the baggy, colorful, Turkishlike pants known as Bobby Browns; Hammers are the lower-crotch version.

Preteen girls want to look cool, too, with miniskirts, tights, leather boots and jackets. If you go this hip route, you will want to draw the line when things get too tough or sexy-looking.

TEEN-AGERS

And boy, are the teens into clothes right now. And spending money. A study conducted by Backer Spielvogel Bates advertising agency estimated that teens spend $40 billion of their own money annually. A study by Teenage Research Unlimited of Chicago found that consumers between the ages of 12 and 19 spent nearly $8 billion on products and services for themselves and their families.

But mostly clothes. Teen-age girls are scooping up rolled-up jeans shorts in all colors of denim and matching short jackets, cropped sweaters, big sweaters with deep V-necks, boxer shorts, stirrup pants, lace-edged leggings and miniskirt flounce dresses.

For the prom, it's off-the-shoulder short dresses with as many sequins as these small gowns will hold. Glitz, glamour and grown-up are the key words. For the guys, classic uncomplicated tux styles individualized with a wild tie and/or cummerbund and a pair of black shoes he owns rather than black patent rentals.

This season's style in accessories is "in excess." Headbands and layered necklaces reminiscent of the '60s are just a few of the fashion accents for spring.

Accessories become crucial adornments

By Tershia d'Elgin
Copley News Service

We're still able to dip liberally into a wide spectrum of fashion genres this season. From naturally "down under" to ornamentally ethnic, from sleek sophisticate to unabashedly op art — each look is made valid by those crucial adornments — accessories.

DOWN UNDER

Sporty types are almost rugged. Accessories can define their femininity. These women trot to the tune of Ralph Lauren, Banana Republic and catalog lines such as J. Crew and Tweeds. Accessories lend such capable staples as jeans and T's a newfound capriciousness.

Wider, elunkier belts give oversize denims and big shorts the "I may look frail, but I can handle it" look. Other belts are suede or woven leather or knotted rope.

For the hair, wide stretch headbands or delicately hued scarves can echo the color of a cotton sock. Sports caps are worn askew. Keep a little canvas fishing hat and a casually shaped Panama-style hat for sunny days. Canvas, rattan and straw bags are part of this country chic.

ETHNIC

Golden and brown-skinned girls were born for this wild layering of color, pattern and texture. The fresh insurgence of Third World baubles includes multicolored animal appliques on everything.

Five-, 6- and 7-inch woven sashes wrapped and wrapped around skirts and blouses pull together seemingly disparate pieces such as organdy blouses and circle skirts. Beaded hoop belts are worn with other belts loose along the hipline.

African-inspired mushroom hats and little Guatamalan straw hats are hip for ethnic heads. Tapestries and lightweight rugs serve as scarves and ponchos. Bags are either leather or basketry with clever beaded motifs.

SOPHISTICATE

The cosmopolitan woman favors skyscrapers, nightlife and running water. Since her clothes are stark, clean classics, she relies on ornamentation for distinction. Her accessories are largely timeless collector's items.

She is not shy of scarves. Tied around Italian movie-star style or woven through the hair, gossamer chiffon or elegantly printed silk scarves add extra zing to any outfit. A long vibrant foulard can be used as a belt or cummerbund. Tie a square scarf to handbags for outings in case of weather. Use larger scarves as sarongs or halter tops.

Unusual buckles pull together supple leather belts. Or better — multicolored scarves are cinched at the waist with a sculptural clasp.

Real ladies are not without an arsenal of purses, handbags, clutches, totes and overnight bags. Exceptionally designed and crafted handbags are expensive. But unlike shoes, they need not go out of fashion. Get the most for your money. Look for unique detailing and versatility.

Important this season are "envelope" clutches and the business-size bag functioning as a briefcase. There's an expanding emphasis on the idea of a purse within a purse; these handbag medleys can take you from morning to evening, from city to country.

Minaudieres are those small treasures for evening, only large enough for a mirror, lipstick and some keys. They're almost like jewelry.

Without retiring into sweats, hothouse flower types can protect their petals. Aprons are staging a comeback so stylish that they can well be considered accessories.

The look is anything but homespun. It might be a canvas-haltered version flung over a sexy little sheath. Or a crisp dirndl pinafore worn over a short cotton dress. Or try an assymetrical overskirt tied about a supple jersey shift.

Hats may never again be de rigueur for reasons of propriety. But any woman who doesn't protect her face against skin cancer is a nut. Sophisticates will need a wide-brimmed straw hat for errands and gardening, a broad-billed cap for sports and a cartwheel hat in black or ivory for afternoons. Fill in with a silk flowered bonnet to go with light frocks.

OP ARTISTS

You'll remember Courreges with his mod shapes, sherbet colors and huge plastic jewelry. The look is back, and it's spawned some trippy little gloves. Cut just shy of the wrist bone, they're jeweled, fringed, piped or cut out, but all in spirited colors.

Since gloves, like hats, are no longer a necessity, indulge yourself in a pair that matches just a few ensembles. The best bet is to complement your hosiery or footwear. Other Courreges-inspired accessories are shiny vinyl bags and belts.

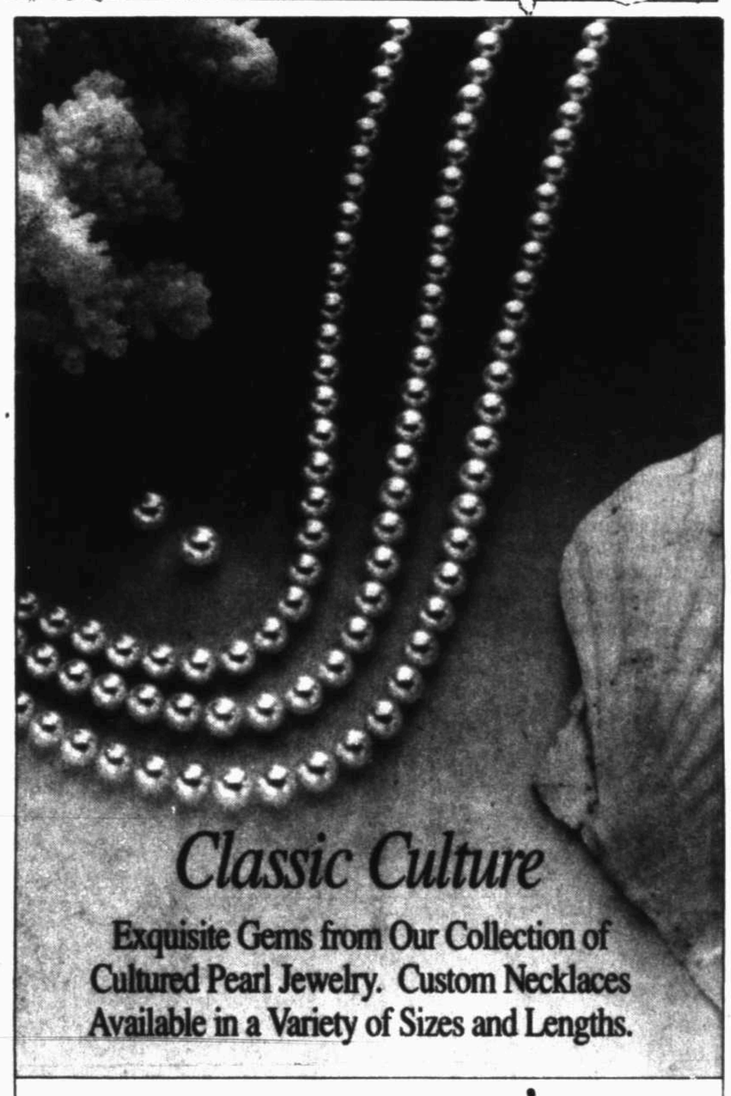

Paging through the book "Sew Your Own Accessories" (Sterling), one has the impression that the variety and versatility of accessories is boundless.

Dress is key to success for spring

By Francine Parnes
Associated Press

East coast, west coast — and all points in between — fashion-savvy career women bent on dressing for success will be reaching into their closets this spring for a dress. When combined with a jacket it's the power suit of the season, according to fashion directors nationwide.

"This is the year of the dress," says Joan Kaner, senior vice president and fashion director of Neiman-Marcus, based in Dallas. "It's the No.1 trend of the season and will sell across the board in all our stores around the country."

In California, where the climate is warm and the atmosphere more casual, "sleeveless dresses will have easy acceptance," says Kaner. In New York, on the other hand, "most women will want the cover-up of a jacket."

Either way, you get a lot of added mileage out of a dress, explains Kaner. "It can stand on its own, or you can team it with a matching jacket or coat, which gives it all the versatility of a suit with the bonus of a dress."

One of the best-selling shapes is the body-skimming chemise, which is '60s-inspired in a Jackie Kennedy kind of way, particularly when teamed with short white gloves and structured handbags. There's also the billowy trapeze dress, a popular shape for coats as well. Marc Jacobs, the designer for Perry Ellis, has a group of cap-sleeved dresses and swing coats in pastels.

Jackets frequently take the long route, with just a hint of dress peeking out. "The jacket seems to look better over shorter pieces underneath," notes Wilmer Weiss of I. Magnin in San Francisco.

Calvin Klein, whose collection concentrates on the dress-plus-jacket formula, likes jackets that land below the hip to just above the dress hemline.

On the other hand, notes Weiss, "those who can afford to be more daring in their office environments can go even shorter." How high dare you go and still be taken seriously in the boardroom? Around four to five inches above the knee, Weiss says.

Hemlines also fall prey to geographic location. "On either coast you have a lot more leeway than in the South or Midwest, where there's a tendency to be more traditional in style," says Kaner of Neiman-Marcus.

City shorts can help you skirt the hemline dilemma. "They'll be appropriate in some office situations because of their fullness," says Olexa. Keep them conservative, to the top of the knee, she advises. Treat them like a skirt and wear them with heels.

Whatever you choose, go for color, sizzling or floral. "The two most important issues for career dressing this season are the dress and color," advises Olexa. Hot pink, orange and green blaze an incendiary trail through the spring '91 collections. "A bright accessory or jacket updates your look and allows you to be a little more creative in the office," she says.

If economy is your goal, you can stretch your budget by taking your cue from residents of cities like Denver and San Francisco, where volatile weather conditions encourage more versatile wardrobes.

"Colorado doesn't really have spring except in magazines," explains Morren of Joslins. "We have winter and summer, and it can all happen in the same day or by driving a few miles." Morren's strategy: black and winter white can be worn throughout the year, as well as wool knit, jersey, gabardine, silk and angora blends.

Lightweight wools are a best bet for Neiman-Marcus' Joan Kaner. "As I travel around the country," says Kaner, "I can wear that fabric twelve months out of the year."

'Made in USA' important to Americans

Associated Press

Clothing consumers are becoming increasingly aware that their purchases affect the American garment industry and say they are conscious of American-made product quality, according to a tracking study of a "Made in USA" television campaign.

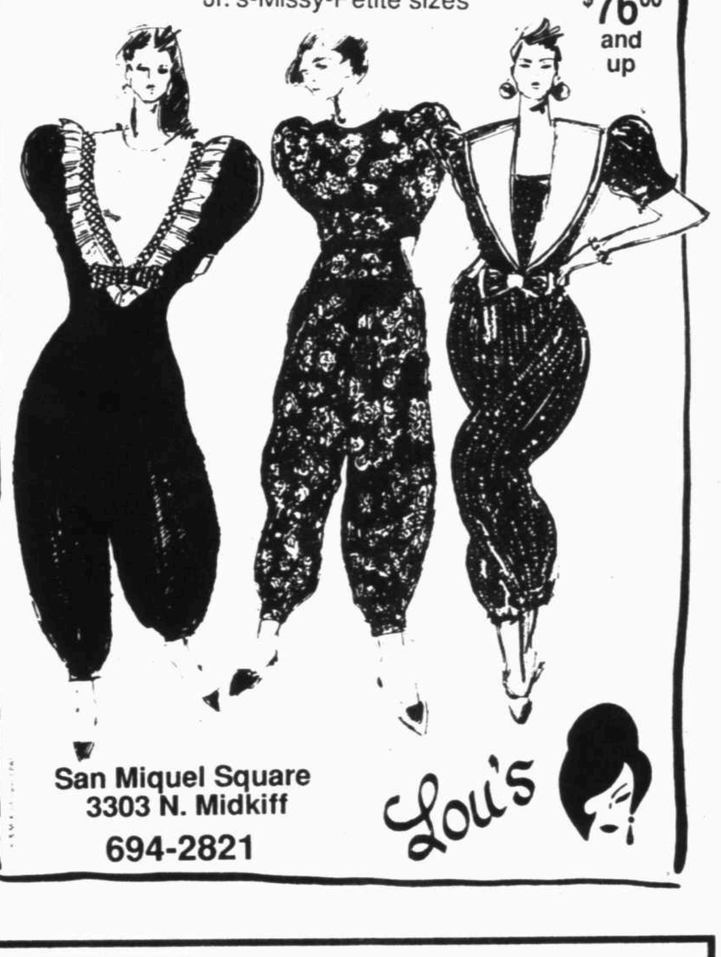

The study showed that 85 percent of women ages 25-49 think that buying foreign-made products puts Americans out of work. The job issue is a major focus of the campaign, stating that nearly half a million jobs have been lost in the U.S. textile and apparel industry since 1980.

The new study also indicates that both men and women consumers think that the quality, consistency and availability of American-made garments are superior. Two-thirds of the 1,000 respondents were women; women in the 25-49 age range are considered the primary target audience for the commercials.

Working women return to sewing for quality, fit

Associated Press

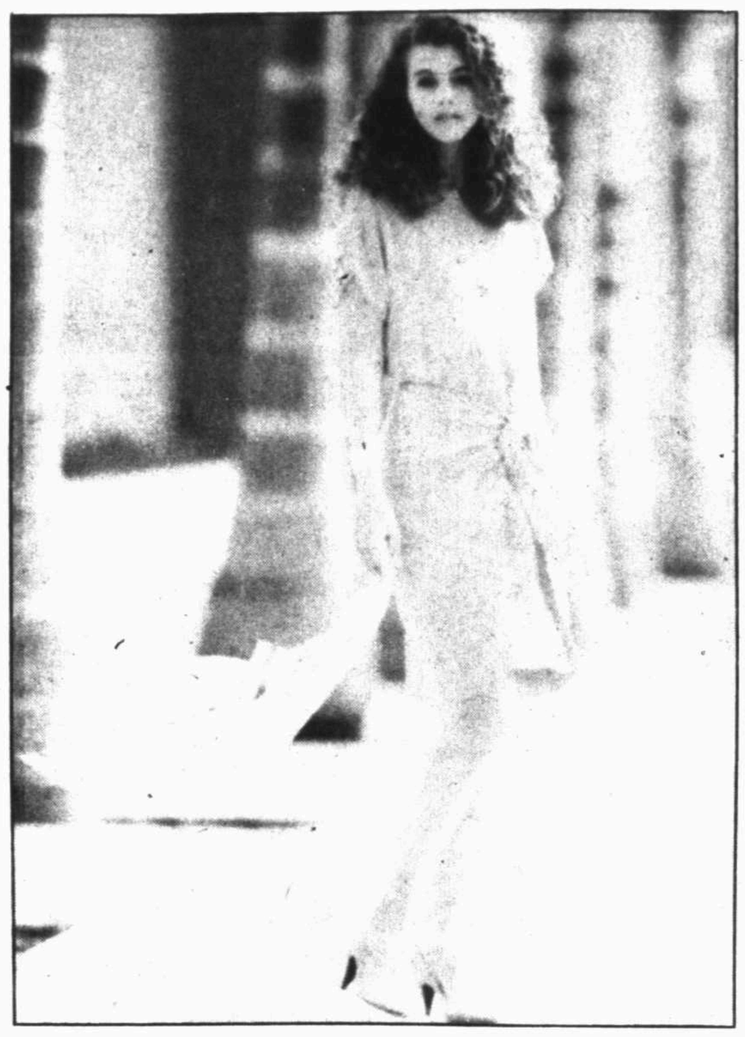

The working woman and her sewing machine, separated during the Dress for Success era, are reunited with the return of the dress.

"As most home sewers are also professional career women, acceptance of the dress as appropriate business attire benefits them in both roles," says Pamela Hastings, consumer education director for Singer Sewing Co. in Edison, N.J. "Dressing for business becomes less demanding, and sewing the business wardrobe suddenly becomes much easier."

Women adopted the business suit to assert their equality with men in the workplace, says Herman Phynes, fashion merchandising director for Vogue-Butterick Patterns in New York. "Now there's nothing left to prove, and it's acceptable to look softer and more feminine in the workplace."

Hastings adds that the heavily structured, two-piece suit, almost a required uniform for professional women in recent years, simply became too troublesome for the home sewer. "Creating a business suit at home could be a bit daunting, if only for the amount of time required to match and sew all the different parts. Making a dress is at the other extreme — it's basically an easy project and it doesn't take much time. And making a dress is fun."

A sensational sarong wrapped dress is a part of the 2 Hour Express Collection from Simplicity, pattern number 7212.

THE BASIC SUIT jacket, for example, might require as many as two dozen separate pieces — front, back, upper and lower sleeves, upper and under collars, lapel facings, interfacings, pockets, cuffs, vents, and of course, shoulder pads and other findings. Then there would be an additional half-dozen parts for matching or coordinated skirts or trousers. The dress, in contrast, typically calls for less than half that many parts and doesn't require the structural building.

"The dress is basically a front and back," Hastings explains. "With the return of the dress, we see the chemise leading the fashion parade again. This style of dress, which was popular about 20 years ago, is great news for home sewing. It might have a neck or sleeves, but it probably will not have cuffs or a collar, or buttonholes."

The new dresses and sportswear share an unfitted, "easy" look using lighter materials, says Phynes. "We'll see more fabrics that are light and easy to handle, such as wool crepes and light, feather-soft linens, rather than gabardines. And they're trans-seasonal. With air conditioning and central heating, a wool crepe dress is perfectly suitable year-round."

The dress is a good first project for the novice sewer, says Caryl Svendsen of the Sewing Fashion Council, an industry group in New York. "Easy to make, a dress is an excellent way to put your personal stamp on clothing, and it can be completed quickly, giving an economical lift to many items already in one's wardrobe."

FOR A LONG TIME, sewing was the province of those who couldn't afford ready-made clothing, but Hastings says that now sewing appeals to women who are likely to be college educated and following a professional career. "Sewing at home provides advantages in quality, selection and individual fit, as well as the satisfaction of creating a garment that would be quite expensive in a store."

If you've been away from sewing for a while, you may be surprised at the sophistication of new sewing machines. Many machines now handle many of the drudge chores — threading, buttonholing, hemming, etc. — automatically. Hastings cites her company's top-of-the-line electronic model, the Quantum XL-1, which even snips the thread at the end of the seam. Versatile machines also come from Pfaff, Viking, Brother, and other manufacturers. Even the less expensive models may have a reasonably good range of features, but Hastings advises consumers to buy the best machine they can afford.

And besides building a uniquely individual wardrobe of high quality, she cites another advantage:

"Working a sewing machine helps pull you, emotionally and psychologically, through the last weeks of winter. When you finish the neck on a sleeveless dress, you know it can't be long until spring."

If you haven't sewn before, where do you start?

Your local fabric store, YWCA, Cooperative Extension Office, or high school home economics instructors are good resources. Or call the Sewing Fashion Council, an industry group in New York, at 1 (800)-U-SEW-NOW, to get information.

Men's office, evening wear goes soft, casual

By Mike Dale
Copley News Service

If you look like the Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde of the fashion set these days, don't feel alone.

Men's office and evening wear for spring and summer can best be described as, "Dress me up, dress me down."

The 1980s' armor of stiff suits universally adopted after John T. Molloy's 1976 "Dress for Success" has met with its demise. Finally. But it wasn't easy.

The problem was, over the past two years, no one knew what changes fashion pundits had up their sleeves. Or whether the public would snap them up, for that matter.

For working women, the emphasis isn't on power shoulders but legs. Short skirts, long skirts with tights, and leggings or cat suits with long, full jackets are the looks for the moment.

For men, structured suits and coordinated sportswear are giving way this season to "softly constructed" business clothing and mix-and-match separates.

Casual chambray shirts, for example, are just as likely to accompany classic double-breasted suits as they are jeans.

Likewise, leather outerwear will top dress shirts and neckties around the office. Nehru collar suits, napkin-wide ties and collarless jackets are in. Even hooded T-shirts are worn under suits.

And lounge-wear shapes such as pajama-collar shirts and drawstring pants, mixed with suits and blazers, will be welcome in the boardroom.

NOUVEAUX HUES such as plum, chartreuse and carrot also are de rigueur. Other color combinations convey softness. The palette ranges from neutral tones like stone and taupe to pastels such as dusty yellow, rose and sky.

The suits, jackets and sweaters themselves fall gently from the torso this spring and summer. Jackets and blazers are longer. Trousers are wider-cut, with deeper pleats.

And look for oversized microfiber (a new polyester that feels like silk but is more durable) trenchcoats and rain wear.

The chambray shirt, though, may be the most versatile addition to the spring lineup.

Besides suits and jeans, designers are showing chambray shirts with bomber jackets, under regatta-striped blazers and linen jackets.

For spring, designers Joseph Abboud, Bill Robinson, Zylos George Machado, Jhane Barnes, Alexander Julian and Perry Ellis have synthesized lifestyle changes and the economic downturn into classy collections at affordable prices.

Each designer, for instance, now has a secondary line priced as much as 50 percent less than signature collections.

ALSO LOOK for exciting entries in the fashion race, most notably Rick Dunnington, Luciano Franzoni (under the Confezioni Riserva label) and Walter Muroya, winner of the 1991 California Mart Rising Star menswear designer award.

While the watchword for this spring and summer is "soft," several new silhouettes may suit men's sartorial splendor.

The new athletic-fit suit by Gladiator features broader shoulders and a narrower waist.

Country Britches and C.W. Phoenix have whipped up a new two-button blazer with broad shoulders and peaked lapels.

Bill Robinson has designed a blazer, revealed at fashion shows in a butter-soft cotton chenille, with a slouchy, mock-silhouette that haute couturists claim is as much casual sportswear as it is tailored clothing.

Former women's designer Isaac Mizrahi offers white terry cloth blazers that evoke the elegance of Cary Grant at poolside. And his shirt jackets in black-and-white diamond pattern offer an alternative to houndstooth.

Ronaldus Shamask proffers forest green blazers over houndstooth shirt jackets rather than shirts, as well as tailored houndstooth jackets over white jeans.

And Jhane Barnes, known to fashion pundits for her computer-generated knits, offers chenille blazers, woven sweaters in quilt-like patterns and shirts that are striped in back and plaid in front.

So how will the working world view what the fashion world has in store for this spring and summer?

After all, it's hard to imagine women climbing the corporate ladder in short skirts and thigh-high boots. Or male power brokers sporting drawstring pants and psychedelic ties.

"As usual, the fashion industry is totally out of touch with the needs of the work population," says Susan Hayward of Yankelovich, Clancey and Schulman, a New York-based agency that tracks trends.

She says men and women may have developed a more personal work style, but a professional image still seems better safe than sorry.

Fashion historian Valerie Steel, author of "Men and Women: Dressing the Part" (Smithsonian), agrees.

She says work clothing still depends totally on the context of the job and on who you are in the office.

That is, folks will find high fashion statements in restaurant, fashion and entertainment businesses rather than banks or law firms.

Swimwear, matching cover-ups fit into wardrobe

By Carrie Sacher
Copley News Service

This is the '90s: A time when swimwear is more than a once-a-year purchase for those occasional laps at the YMCA or a day at the beach or lake.

More and more women are considering a variety of swimwear as an essential part of their wardrobe.

Sure, suits designed for swim competitions and the eensie-weensie, show-all G-strings are still around. But swimsuits are forcing their way into all occasions. And designers stress that the current trend is more material and essentially more coverage.

So events such as a casual brunch on an outdoor patio, a warm evening dancing at an avant-garde nightclub, a day or night party by a pool, a time to keep cool and feel sexy around the house, or (cringe if you must) work, are all appropriate places to wear swim attire.

You ask, "How can this be? If I show up at a meeting in an iridescent yellow Body Glove, I'll be terminated for sure."

That's likely to be true. But done right — worn as you would a Norma Kamali or Donna Karan bodysuit — a one-piece suit under a sport coat or jacket can look businesslike, yet classy and feminine.

Some current designs have elegant gold trim or a shirred neckline that looks stunning with the right skirt or cover-up.

Rhinestones and sequins can be found adorning some of the costlier suits that a full-length sarong or a pair of nice slacks could complement for a fancier occasion. Even though these styles may be more expensive as far as swimsuits are concerned, they can be great savings in the evening wear department.

And as if they were intended with evening in mind, these designs rarely hit the water, due to their look of fragility and delicate construction.

CNS Photo

THE REASON MANY women are adding swimsuits to their wardrobe collections may be due to the way designers are promoting their swim wear.

Who can resist that matching cap or hat, sarong or full-length skirt? Some suits even look lost without their accompanying partners.

"We carry a whole line of dresses and cover-up tops that match our swim wear," say Sandy Arterburn, president of Beach Front Property swim wear.

Her company is not alone in developing sportswear to match the swim wear. Many designers are creating swimsuits that flatter the figure and cling tightly enough to be sexy and chic, yet with enough material that you can move comfortably when playing volleyball, jogging or chasing after that stray Frisbee disc. And of course many suits have enough support so the wearer can feel comfortable at an evening event as well.

"We have found that feminine details, underwires and boning are important to women," Arterburn says.

Beach Front Property's suits have much more support in the top than past designs.

In a recent issue of Ski Magazine, the tops on a trio of ski bunnies modeling wildly colored Neoprene bikinis by Body Glove had an equivalent amount of support as most push-up brassieres, awarding that look of evening gown cleavage popular among many female entertainers.

RUFFLES AND FRINGES, big this year, also maximize the look of a smaller bust.

"The swimsuit is now an accessory to sportswear," says Eric Weitz, vice president of marketing for Robby Len.

Crop-tops, leggings and skimps work together with the swimsuit to complete the sportswear look, Weitz says.

A white, one-piece Lycra spandex keyhole swimsuit by Carolyne Roehm has a simple, attractive look, its high crisscross front making it almost look like a Speedo suit worn backward.

New designs like these show the growing trend to hide the skin from the harmful rays of the sun. Women searching for a suit for tanning would likely go straight to strapless bikinis with higher cut bottoms. There was a time when the too-small bikini was practically all that could be found unless you went for larger sizes with the stiff built-in cups. Today's suits are sensitive to today's current needs. And minimal sun exposure is the overwhelming tendency.

BOSOMY?
Minimize bosom by choosing a suit with an underwire bra and high-cut armholes.

BIG BEHIND?
Look for suits with a loose skirt.

WIDE WAISTED?

TUMMY ROLL/BIG THIGHS?
Use a suit with control panel or crisscross top. High-cut slanted leg openings minimize thighs.

TINY TOP?

FASHION FOCUS Hairstyles SPRING STYLE

Softer, sleeker hairstyles follow '60s retrospective fashions

AP LaserPhotos

Cut short in back but longer in front, this hairstyle from Alberto-Culver can be worn as a smooth, soft cap or swept up for a glamorous evening look.

Associated Press

Softer, sleeker and neater hairstyles go with the 1960s retrospective fashion styles being offered this season.

"The silhouette and balance harken back to the movement, volume and wave of the '60s, but there is a much softer, more diffused feeling about the styles," says Philip Voss Jr., who heads Zotos International, which makes hair care products.

While hair may be short, neatly trimmed at the sides and nape of the neck, it can be cut longer at the crown, for more a fuller effect, he says. The styles can either hug the head or expand with texture.

These styles will have movement, or "swing," according to Alberto-Culver, another hair products maker. Texture and movement will yield styling options, with hair either falling free with the cut or swept up for special effects.

Hair will be more controlled and finished, but "inviting," according to the company. Other forecasts: There will be mixing of long and short, straight and curly hair in a single style; hair will be lifted for more volume; it will be shinier, with the use of hennas, cellophanes, glistening gels or highlights; there will be 1960s-style flicks, fringes, flips and pixies. The styles will be long-lasting and easy to care for.

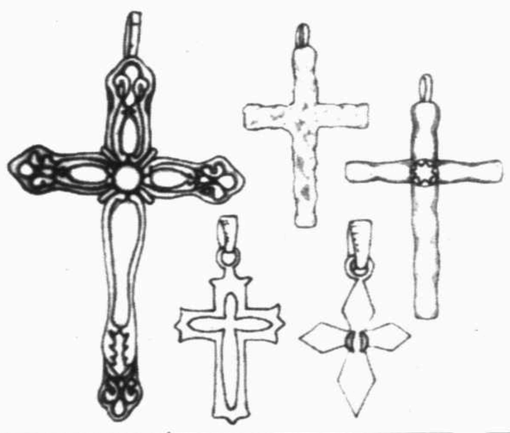

The trends are forecast by hair stylists who serve as consultants to both companies. "Expansion" is Zotos' consulting arm, and hairstylist Christopher Downs advises Alberto-Culver.

Fear of fat

A new American Airlines weight policy makes allowances for both male and female flight attendants. As they age, they will be allowed increases in their weight limits to continue flying.

Also, overweight flight attendants will be given more time to lose extra weight if they are over the company's required standard.

American officials denied a union contention that the agreement means 200 flight attendants will be able to return to their jobs.

About 18 flight attendants have either been fired or suspended temporarily since 1985, because they are over their weight standards.

If you have ever used a paint chip to select paint for the exterior of your house, you may have had an unpleasant surprise. Colors that match beautifully in the book can be ugly as a Christmas tie when painted on your house.

Now there's a way to see how your house would look painted in your choice of colors — before you hire the painters. Just send Glidden Paint Co. a photograph of your house and your choices for three separate color schemes. Glidden will create electronic images of your house in the three color choices and send you snapshot-size color prints of the images.

What a great idea. And what a shame more people won't be able to take advantage of it. The offer is available from Glidden only on the Prodigy network for personal computer users.

Clone war

There's a computer game called Clone Invaders. But a real invasion of clones is about to begin. And it is no game for the folks at Apple.

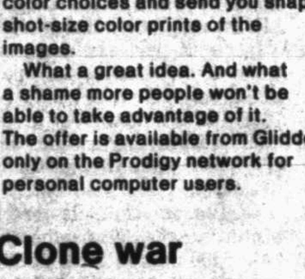

The first clones ever of an Apple Macintosh come from a 2-year-old Cupertino, Calif.-based company called NuTek Computers. And they should be on the market by the end of the year. Up until now, no one has been able to duplicate a Macintosh without infringing on the dozens of Apple patents.

NuTek believes it has succeeded and also thinks it can withstand the lawsuits that seem likely from Apple. Clones have been a fact of life in the IBM-compatible world almost from the beginning.

Ironically, just when Apple has lowered prices in a successful attempt to build sales volume, it now must face a competitor that promises a Macintosh clone, complete with color monitor, for just over $600. The least expensive Macintosh has a retail price of $999.

Venezuela ups crude oil output

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — A reactivation plan of more than 40 oil fields ordered this week could boost the nation's crude output by as much as 200,000 barrels daily within four years, an industry official said Friday.

"It could happen even before that, depending on the technologies and investments those interested in the plan would bring in the country," an official told The Associated Press, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The plan was put in force Wednesday as the Energy and Mines Ministry instructed the state oil company, Petroleos de Venezuela, to open the process and start looking for interested parties.

The reactivation plan is designed specially for the private sector since PDVSA and its subsidiaries are financially and technologically committed to other large-scale programs.

The official said there are "more than 50" national and foreign companies ready to bid.

Investments in reactivating the fields, all left aside because of low production or technical problems, will be high.

"We are talking of several hundred millions of dollars", the official said.

A special committe made up of the Energy and Mines Minstry, PDVSA and other government institutions in charge of selecting projects will be set soon, the official said.

The reactivation plan fits into PDVSA's program to become an "energy superpower" by the turn of the century, when its production potential would be as high as 4 million barrels a day, up from current 2.4 million barrels per day. The effort might represent PDVSA investments for as much as $10 billion.

It was not clear how Venezuela's increased production would square with a recent agreement by OPEC to cut the amount of crude its members are pumping.

Under the new quota system, Venezuela's daily output will be 165,000 barrels less than the 2.4 million barrels the South American country has been pumping recently.

Latest fad $100 steaks

NEW YORK (AP) — Sickened by sushi and turned off by tofu? Not to worry. The latest Japanese food fad is one the meat-and-potatoes crowd will love — if they can afford it.

Darryl Strawberry, Axl Rose and Judd Nelson are some of the names that recently graced the waiting list at one Manhattan steakhouse for a juicy, butter-soft bite of Kobe beef.

But at $100 a steak, average Americans aren't exactly stampeding to the few spots where it's available.

"It would be a splurge," concedes Richard Tarlov, director of product development at Balducci's, a gourmet food store in Greenwich Village. "The cost is very expensive, no matter how you cut it."

Kobe beef gets its name from a region in Japan where the best Wagyu cattle used to be concentrated. There it's used most often in traditional dishes like

Fire-fighting tool pinches out flames

LAKE WORTH, Texas — It's called the "Lizzy" and it may be able to suppress an oil well fire the way a pinch can put out the flame of a candle.

The "Lizzy" well spool and fire extinguisher, which its makers believe is one of the world's largest, cuts the fuel off from oxygen needed by fire.

Leaders of S&B Safety Systems Inc., the Fort Worth company that developed and patented the Lizzy from the drawings of a Louisiana oil well firefighter, don't think they will put Red Adair and other oil well firefighters out of work.

And their first customers, horizontal drillers in Texas and Louisiana, say it's hard to judge the Lizzy because they haven't had a blowout.

But the Kuwaitis are looking at it to fight some of the fires started by Iraqi troops during the last days of the war.

"This can help them regain control of refineries and the petrochemical plants, electrical plants, homes and buildings," said Brad Corbett Jr., the S&B executive overseeing the Lizzy's development.

Geologist from around the world will study formations which outcrop in the Guadalupe Mountains.

Geological field trip to study Guadalupes

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

Geologists from around the world are expected to converge upon Midland in April for a geological field trip that is considered a classic in the trade.

The field trip will be a three-day tour of the Guadalupe Mountains and will present geologists from around the world the opportunity to study the sequence stratigraphy, facies and reservoir geometry of the San Andres and Grayburg formations.

Set for April 11-13, the field trip, sponsored by the Permian Basin Section of Society of Economic Paleontolgists and Mineralogists (Society of Sedimentary Geology,) follows the annual meeting of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists in Dallas and is expected to draw an international crowd.

"It will afford geologists from all over the world and in the U.S. an opportunity to see a field model of a common reservoir system. They will be able to look at the outcrops of the formations and see details that will allow them to better understand their own subsurface problems. We are expecting to see geologists from Europe, Australia and other parts of the world," said Louis Mazzulo, one of the planners of the field trip.

Mazzulo said the tour would be going on to private land to view outcrops seldom seen by geologists.

He said geologists would be able to apply knowledge gained on the tour to reservoirs in their own part of the world. He said the knowledge of the San Andres and Grayburg formations could be applied to a variety of horizontal drilling, secondary and tertiary recovery problems.

"In horizontal drilling it helps to understand how these formations are compartmentalized," said Mazzulo.

Cost of the field is $270 per person and reservations may be made by calling 683-1573.

FWA top driller in Basin

Staff Report

FWA has been ranked third among all U.S. contract drilling firms and is the leading contract driller in the Permian Basin in terms of total footage drilled during 1990 according to the Petroleum Information Corp.

FWA drilled 230 wells during 1990, up 24 percent over the prior year. Total footage drilled rose 30 percent to 1.9 million feet, compared to 1.4 million in 1989.

FWA operates a 14 rig fleet in West Texas, with depth ratings ranging from 7,500 to 14,000 feet. The company overall operates a total of 39 land rigs out of five district offices in Texas, Oklahoma and West Virginia.

"We are extremely pleased with the outstanding 1990 results of our West Texas District," said Tommy Knowles, president of FWA.

West Texas District Manager Don Laxton places a lot of the credit for FWA's strong 1990 performance on the shoulders of his approximately 250 district employees. "We have awfully good people working for us, many of whom have been with us a long time and have been trained by FWA," said Laxton.

AAPG annual meeting set

Staff Report

The annual meeting of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists is set for April 7-10 at the Dallas Convention Center.

An extensive program has been planned for the annual meeting, which is the diamond jubilee 75th anniversary of AAPG. The theme of the 1991 convention is "A Look Back-A Look Forward."

The program includes presentations by U.S. Interior Secretary Manuel Lujan, Audubon Society President Peter A.A. Berle and past OPEC President Subroto.

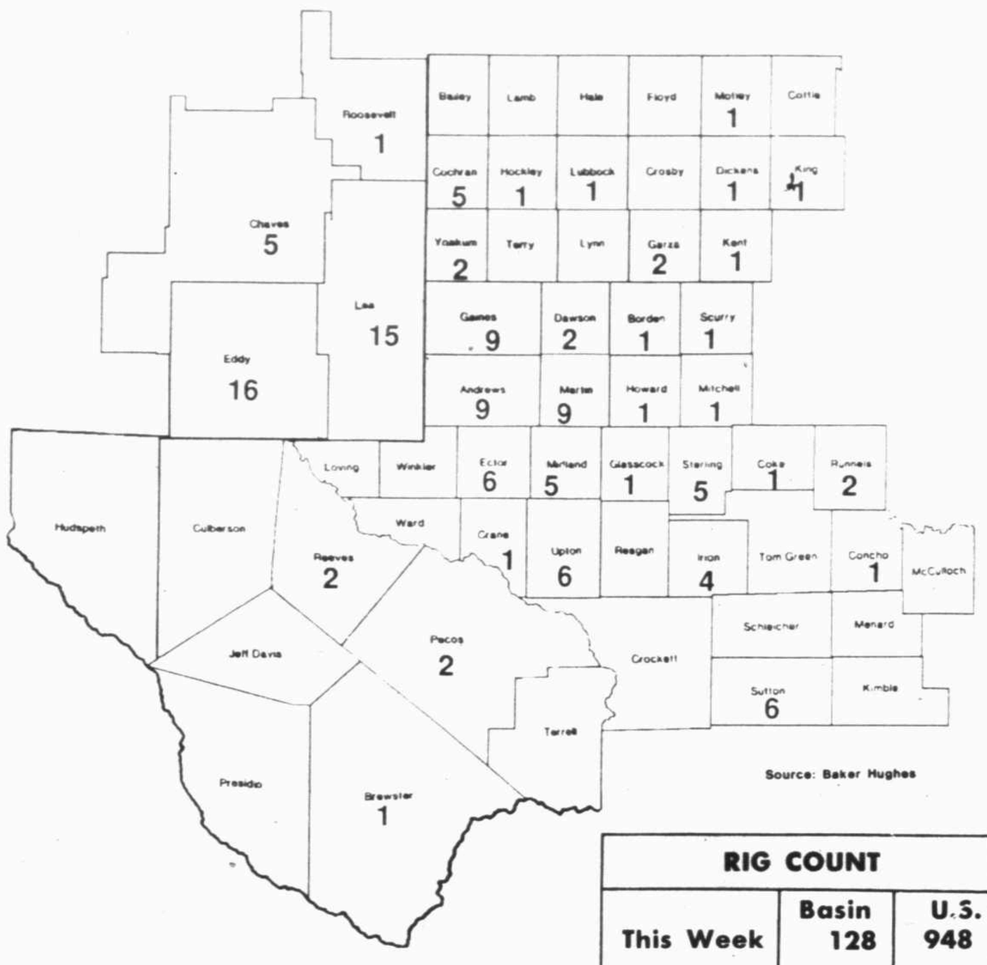

Dr. Subroto will be speaking on the influence of OPEC in the 1990's.

AAPG has over 34,000 members in 103 countries. International exploration and environmental issues will receive special emphasis at the meeting.

State of Louisiana claims two oil firms owe $475 million

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — The state claimed Wednesday that two major oil companies owe $475 million for underpayment of royalties on natural gas produced on public land.

The State Mineral Board's claim is against Texaco Inc. and Louisiana Land & Exploration Co. and stems from LL&E's subleasing of six public leases to Texaco since 1928. Those subleases in Cameron, Terrebonne, Lafourche and Vermilion parishes provided that LL&E got about one-eighth of the money from gas sales and the state got one-eighth.

Texaco allegedly underpaid both LL&E and the state, according to the board, which met Wednesday. But both companies are liable to the state, the board said.

The board will pursue the claim in court if the two companies don't pay within 30 days, said Campbell Hutchinson, a state attorney.

The state said that while LL&E acted mainly as a paying agent on royalties of production developed by Texaco, it has a contractual agreement with the state for payment of the royalties.

"LL&E's exposure is based on a lease contract, not on misconduct," Mineral Board Chairman T. Jay Seale said.

The state has negotiated with LL&E for more than a year, seeking to get the smaller company to join with the state in going after Texaco, but those negotiations were unsuccessful.

A representative of LL&E said that the amount sought by the state is "grossly exaggerated under all applicable legal construction."

LL&E also said the 1928 agreement between LL&E and Texaco had an indemnity clause requiring Texaco to pay whatever was required to meet state royalty requirements.

A Texaco attorney declined comment, saying it would be inappropriate while the matter was in litigation.

Earlier, the state charged in another case that Texaco had underpaid $550 million after undervaluing natural gas on which royalty payments were made.

NYMEX says Gulf crisis handled well

NEW YORK (AP) — The Gulf War was the first oil crisis in which the price of crude was set by futures trading, and it raised questions about whether the world's most important commodity should be traded like coffee, cattle and pork bellies.

The New York Mercantile Exchange said the turmoil gave it a chance to prove it could competently handle high-dollar dealings in the volatile price of oil, in an open market where buyer and seller meet and quickly come to a fair per-barrel price.

But critics say the entire economy was held hostage to the whims of rumor-chasing traders who went out of control last fall.

The price of crude oil shot above $40 a barrel in trading that was driven by psychological fears of oil shortages, even though Iraq's invasion of Kuwait never brought any real disruptions to the vital Mideast supply.

"Overall, I think the futures market served as a medium for a lot of consumers and consuming nations to pay an enormous amount more than they should have," said Sen. Joseph I. Lieberman, D-Conn.

Lieberman, a vocal critic of the petroleum industry, held a hearing last week in which three state attorneys general also blamed rampant speculation on oil futures for bringing undue harm to the economy.

Pennsylvania Attorney General Ernest D. Preate Jr. said federal regulators had not done enough to curb oil speculation. "Surveillance of this market is presently no different from that exerted over pork bellies and oranges; oil deserves special attention," he said in a statement.

Many other commodities, such as agricultural products and precious metals, also are traded on futures exchanges. Oil critics aren't as concerned about those dealings since the products are not as important to the economy.

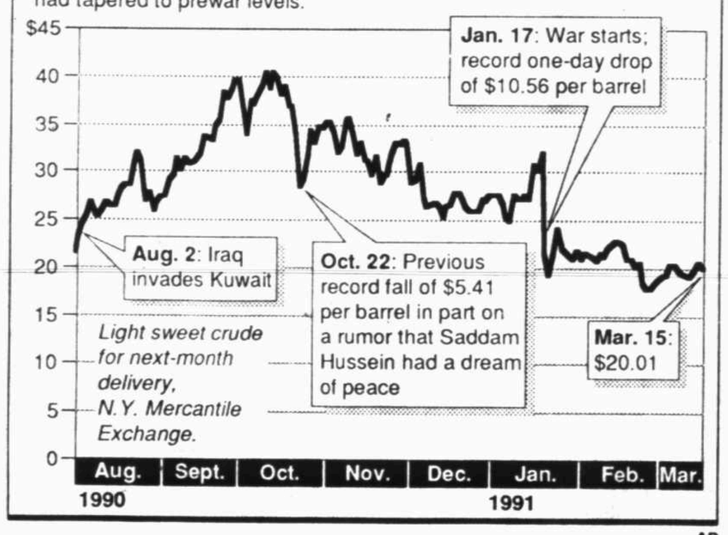

Mercantile Exchange President R. Patrick Thompson said critics of oil futures trading fail to understand the benefits.

"Markets react this way with or without futures," Thompson said. "There just is never going to be enough to convince certain people that their assumptions are not correct."

In the days before oil prices were set at the Merc, they shot sharply higher during the Arab embargo of the early 1970s, and also during the late 1970s and early 1980s, when the Iranian revolution and the outset of the Iran-Iraq war shocked the world oil market.

Oil Prices from August 1

In the early months of the Gulf crisis, oil moved up, first on concerns about making up a shortfall of four million barrels a day from the embargo on crude from Iraq and Kuwait, then on fears that a war could threaten supplies in Saudi Arabia. By the time of the cease-fire, prices had tapered to prewar levels.

AP

In those days, prices were set in cash dealings between major players in the industry. On March 30, 1983, the Merc began offering futures contracts for light sweet crude oil.

It was an important turning point for the exchange, which had gotten into energy trading with home heating oil contracts beginning in 1978. At that time, the exchange had been rocked by a futures scandal caused by the delivery of bad Maine potatoes, then a vital commodity on the market.

"When they offered heating oil, I was a technical analyst at E.F. Hutton," said Peter Beutel, now an oil analyst at Pegasus Econometric Group Inc., in Hoboken, N.J. "I said, 'If it trades on the Merc, I don't want anything to do with it, just because it was still known as the potato exchange and potatoes had such a bad reputation.'

"Now, it's night and day. The exchange has gone miles and miles from where it once was."

Beutel does not believe any other futures market could have handled the volatile price swings the way the Merc handled them.

After Iraq invaded Kuwait on Aug. 2, oil prices began a steady rise that lasted more than two months. Crude oil hit an all-time high of $41.15 per barrel at the Mercantile Exchange on Oct. 10.

After that, oil jumped on news or rumors indicating there would be a shooting war in the Middle East, which could threaten Saudi oil facilities. Hints of diplomacy sent prices tumbling.

Amid criticism of the way the futures players were pushing the price of crude up and down, the Mercantile Exchange put in a "circuit breaker" mechanism that would halt trading for one hour after crude oil moved $7.50 per barrel in either direction in one day, and then let it move no more than another $7.50 in the same direction for a total daily movement of $15 a barrel.

Exchange officials said their main concern was that traders be able to pay their bills.

The financial community believed the limits could be tested as prices shot up once the war began. But the experts were wrong.

When the allied air attack began on Jan. 17, oil prices spiked quickly in after-hour cash trading, but the success of the raids on targets in Iraq and Kuwait had world prices collapsing by the time the Mercantile Exchange opened for business a few hours later.

Oil instantly fell $7.50 per barrel, but nobody was willing to buy at that price. Trading was halted, and when it resumed, crude took another dive, falling by $10.56 per barrel for the day.

The record plunge dealt some serious financial blows to people and companies who had bought oil the day before. Some traders lost their jobs.

But from the Merc's perspective, everything went well. Trading was orderly and everybody paid their bills, Thompson said.

OPEC quotas test Saudi credibility

N.Y. Times News Service

GENEVA — The day after the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries struggled to agree to cut production by 5 percent, its 13 members are trying to project a united front. But given OPEC's poor record in enforcing its previous production agreements, many analysts predict that prices could slide because the new output levels could greatly exceed demand and because individual OPEC members, as in the past, might try to increase revenues by producing more than their allocated levels.

OPEC officials said cheating by members would be less than in the past because a more cooperative and realistic spirit pervaded the group since the gulf war.

They also said that their monitoring of output had improved, and that with so many members producing near capacity, the possibilities of cheating were reduced.

On Tuesday, OPEC agreed to reduce output by 1 million barrels a day, to 22.3 million, in the second quarter.

Before the meeting began, Iran's oil minister, Gholam Rezah Aghazadeh, said production needed to be cut to 21 million barrels a day to raise prices to about $21.

Many analysts forecast that demand for OPEC oil would be 21 million to 21.5 million barrels a day in the second quarter. If production reached even several hundred thousand barrels a day above the 22.3 million level agreed upon, a glut could result.

At the meeting, Iran's and Algeria's oil ministers led the fight for larger cuts in production. But Wednesday the two ministers said the agreed-upon cuts would push prices upward.

"I am sure we will reach $21 in the second quarter of 1991," Aghazadeh said.

He said the new output levels could achieve that price because the markets would be impressed that OPEC members were showing a united will.

"The political decision of member countries is more important" than exact production levels, he said.

Since OPEC's secretary general, Subroto, announced the agreement Tuesday evening, oil prices have edged higher. Wednesday, they were up again. On the New York Mercantile Exchange, for example, the price of West Texas Intermediate crude oil rose 77 cents a barrel, to $20.45.

Traders said they were reassured that the Iranians and Saudis had agreed not to flood the markets with their huge stocks of oil, at sea in tankers.

"The price rose as a sign of relief that at least OPEC was not going to open up the taps even more or embark on a price war," said Mehdi Varzi, an analyst with Kleinwort Benson Securities in London.

Showing a new assertiveness following his nation's victory in the gulf war, Saudi Arabia's oil minister, Hisham M. Nazer, spent much of the meeting seeking to persuade other ministers that output at 22.3 million barrels could push prices to $21, although not immediately.

Most ministers wanted deeper cuts, but they bowed to Nazer's wishes. Now the Saudis risk losing some credibility if prices remain steady or fall, as some analysts predict.

While the Saudis are expected to continue to dominate future OPEC meetings, they may have a harder time calling the shots than at this week's session.

At the OPEC meeting in June, the ministers might debate quotas for Iraq and Kuwait. Those two countries are not expected to export any oil in the second quarter. If they get their old quotas, the Saudis could face huge pressures to slash production.

Algeria's oil minister, Sadek Boussena, who is also OPEC's president, said many members agreed that when Iraq's and Kuwait's oil was exported again, OPEC should return to last July's quotas. Those allowed Saudi Arabia to produce 5.38 million barrels a day, Iraq 3.14 million and Kuwait 1.5 million. After the United Nations placed an oil embargo on Iraq and Kuwait, OPEC suspended its July quotas, allowing members to produce all out.

The Saudis say Iraqi and Kuwaiti production will resume only slowly, and they expect they will not have to cut production much because they see demand for OPEC oil to continuing to grow.

Iraqi officials did not attend this week's meeting, and analysts say that when Baghdad returns it may not be so easy for the Saudis to get their way.

President, CEO of Tenneco division resigns

HOUSTON (AP) — James K. Ashford is resigning as president and chief executive officer of Tenneco Inc.'s J I Case division for personal reasons, the parent company announced Friday.

Ashford's resignation is effective April 15. The 54-year-old executive also is resigning as executive vice president and as a member of Tenneco's board of directors.

Case, located in Racine, Wis., is one of the world's leading manufacturers of agricultural and construction equipment.

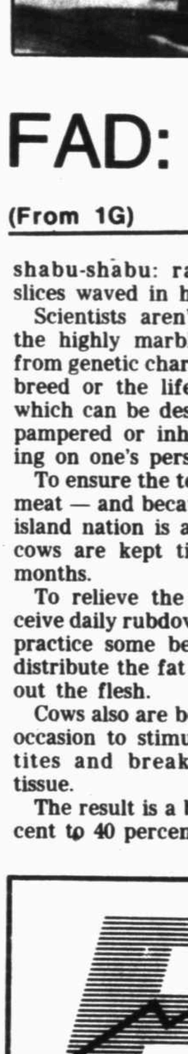

James L. Ketelsen, Tenneco's chairman and chief executive officer, will take a more active role in the management of Case until a successor is named for Ashford, who joined Tenneco in 1958.

FIRE: Extinguisher can pinch out fires

The Lizzy's mobile 15,000-gallon tanks of extinguishing ABC chemical can be taken to fires in water-scarce areas of the war-ravaged country, Corbett said. The company is negotiating a contract to send seven of the tanks to Kuwait this month.

But the Lizzy won't be able to put out the hundreds of oil well fires set by departing Iraqi troops. To do that, it must be attached to a rig before a blowout occurs.

The Lizzy's chief component is a metal ring about two feet in diameter that is placed below the drill floor of a wellhead and connected by hoses to the fire extinguishing chemical tank and a water source.

If a blowout occurs, a well operator can push a button and send thousands of gallons of the chemical and water through the ring into the fuel stream. The chemical and water would disrupt the fuel before it reaches the surface, where, mixed with oxygen and lit by an ignition source, fire occurs.

Enough chemical can be injected to suppress some oil or gas streams within seconds. The chemical flow lasts about 10 minutes, Corbett said, and water can be pumped for as long as it is available.

After the fire is out though, there is a reignition danger the Lizzy can't solve. The problem also occurs with the conventional well firefighting method of using explosives to temporarily deprive the wellhead area of oxygen.

"We can help smother the fire with this. But there's always going to be fuel coming to the surface," Corbett said.

"If you put the fire out and then you've got live, highly flammable oil, is that any better situation?" asked John Dacus, a drilling superintendent for Houston-based Chevron U.S.A., which has used the Lizzy on a horizontal well near Bryan.

"I don't think you can just assume that it is. You've got to kill the well ... or pressure contain it," he said.

A handful of independent producers have also leased a Lizzy unit for $300 a day while drilling horizontal wells.

Horizontal drilling typically occurs in what petroleum engineers call an "underbalanced" state, in which the pressure in the drilling column is less than the pressure in the underground formation, allowing oil or gas to the surface. Underbalanced drilling does less damage to the formation, typically permitting more fuel to the surface during production.

Founded in Wichita Falls by Frank Woods in 1938, the company was named Frank Woods & Associated in 1948 and assumed its abbreviated FWA name in 1955 when Wood retired. FWA went public in 1959 and was acquired by TXO in 1973. TXO was acquired by USX Corp. in 1986 and its oil and gas operators were integrated into Marathon Oil Co., another USX subsidiary, in 1960. FWA then became a stand alone organization within the USX Energy segment, continuing to be headquartered in Wichita Falls.

FAD: Japanese Kobe steaks latest food fad

shabu-shabu: raw, paper-thin slices waved in hot broth.

Scientists aren't sure whether the highly marbled beef results from genetic characteristics of the breed or the life the cows live, which can be described as either pampered or inhumane, depending on one's perspective.

To ensure the tenderest, juiciest meat — and because space on the island nation is at a premium — cows are kept tied in stalls for months.

To relieve the stress, they receive daily rubdowns with straw, a practice some believe also helps distribute the fat evenly throughout the flesh.

Cows also are bottle-fed beer on occasion to stimulate their appetites and break down muscle tissue.

The result is a beef with 30 percent to 40 percent more fat marbling than the best American prime steaks. And as any steak lover knows, the more marbling, the more tender and flavorful the meal.

Of course, more marbling also means higher saturated fat and cholesterol.

Lynne Scott, a registered dietician with the American Heart Association's nutrition committee, says Kobe beef "probably would not meet the guidelines" for good health.

But that doesn't deter some people. When two Japanese districts sponsored a taste test in Los Angeles last December, 4,000 people turned out for a sample.

Marc Sherry, co-owner of the Old Homestead steakhouse in New York's Chelsea section, says he applied to import the beef after a 1988 visit to Japan, where a Kobe steak can cost $200 or more.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture refused to allow it into the country until Japan upgraded sanitary standards and instituted a satisfactory inspection system.

Japan, which buys more than $1 billion worth of American beef annually, had not shipped any to the United States since 1974.

The first Wagyu shipments finally arrived last fall after changes were made at three Japanese slaughterhouses.

Zen-noh Unico America Corp., the sole U.S. importer, distributes it in the New York area for about $45 a pound, according to Vice President Tokuhei Tamaishi. Rib eye, filet mignon and strip steaks are the only cuts available.

Old Homestead serves the 10-to-12-ounce, $100 steaks on specially designed platters. They get between 10 and 30 orders a night, Sherry said.

"It almost falls apart in your mouth," says Irving Sutton, a clothing broker from Short Hills, N.J. and repeat Kobe customer. "It's just so soft and so delectable and so juicy."

Balducci's sells up to 200 pounds a month to in-store and mail-order customers for $99 to $109 a pound, Tarlov says.

"There will always be people who will go out of their way to enjoy something exotic," Tarlov says. But he concedes, "It's an extremely small market."

Tamaishi says he gets requests for the beef from all over the country, but is unable to meet the demand because of the limited quantity available for import.

Other companies are working on plans to sell Kobe beef in California and Hawaii, said Jeff Savell, a meat science professor at Texas A&M, where research is being done on Wagyus.

The Japanese have declined to export Wagyus, but a few have been bred in the United States using semen from animals smuggled into the country 15 years ago.

SCOTT BURNS

'Battle of budget' about to begin

By Scott Burns

You would think that two years of wretched embarrassment would be enough.

Burns

But No-o-o-o-o-h, as John Belushi used to say. Our stalwart friends in Washington, are heading for more. The annual Battle of the Budget, obscured for a few months by the Middle East crisis, is about to begin. This time there is a significant change. The think tanks are focusing on the misrepresentation of public spending by Congress and the administration. In the past, they have concentrated on ideas and policies.

In recent weeks studies from three different think tanks have warned:

That George Bush will go down in history as the biggest spending president since FDR.

That the budget agreement of 1990 provides virtually no protection from unlimited spending over the next five years.

That the new taxes will deepen any recession and increase the federal deficit, not decrease it.

Barring a near miraculous change in Washington, the prospect of a "New World Order" will recede before expanding domestic chaos. Here are some of the research findings:

A study for the National Center for Policy Analysis in Dallas shows that domestic spending has grown more under George Bush than under any president since FDR. Economists Aldona and Gary Robbins found that REAL, inflation adjusted annual growth under George Bush had been a staggering 10 percent for 1990 and 1991.

A study from the Cato Institute by Stephen Moore, director of fiscal policy studies, comes to the same conclusion and labels George Bush "The Profligate President." Even after adjustment for the cost of the S&L bailout, the study observes, REAL increases in domestic spending under George Bush have been expanding at 6 percent a year. Between 1989 and 1991 spending for the Treasury and Postal departments increased by 29 percent; Transportation increased 20 percent; Legislative branch spending rose 21 percent; Labor Department spending rose 31 percent; Housing and Urban Development spending rose 31 percent; and Commerce Department spending rose 30 percent.

A study by Scott A. Hodge at the Heritage Foundation warns that the S&L bailout costs are being used to veil the real cost increases in other programs. Just as the Social Security surplus has reduced the overall federal deficit in recent years, presenting a budget that includes S&L spending works to make room for the expansion of other spending.

How?

Look at the estimated costs. $111.5 billion for 1991; $88 billion for 1992; $44 billion for 1993; in 1994 the program is expected to bring in a positive $44 billion followed by another $38 billion in 1995. In other words, the S& L bailout is expected to go from a drain of $111.5 billion to a revenue source of $38 billion, a shift of $149.5 billion.

For you and me that could mean great relief. To Washington it means something else: by including the S&L bailout in the current budget, spending on other programs can RISE by that amount over the next four years. Congress and the president will be able to say spending has been absolutely flat.

Still another study suggests that the 1990 tax package will deepen the current recession and cost thousands in lost jobs and billions in lost tax revenues. In a study for the Cato Institute, William C. Dunkelberg, dean of the School of Business and Management at Temple University, and John Skorburg, chief economist for the Chicago Association of Commerce and Industry, observe that last year's $150 tax increase package, the second largest in history, will cause the federal tax burden on workers to reach a new high since World War II.

Their historical research indicates that we are in danger of being forced into a recession when taxes rise over 20 percent but that federal taxes will rise to 20.4 percent in 1991, 20.7 percent in 1992, and 20.8 percent in the years after that. They further estimate that the tax increase will reduce economic growth by 0.7 percent and reduce new job creation by 400,000 a year.

To be sure, Cato, Heritage, and the National Center for Policy Analysis are all institutions with a libertarian viewpoint. That they would find reasons to be against higher taxes and more government is neither surprising nor disturbing.

What IS disturbing is how the discussion has changed. Ten years ago think tanks argued about supply side ideas and our potential for growth.

Today these academic researchers are spending most of their time demonstrating the mega-billion dollar misrepresentations that are emanating from both Congress and the administration.

Scott Burns' column is syndicated by King Features, and appears on the Reporter-Telegram business pages each Thursday and Sunday.

FCC delays vote on syndication rules

N.Y. Times News Service

The Federal Communications Commission has delayed a vote on regulations that limit television networks from participating in the $5.5 billion market for television show reruns.

The five-member FCC had been expected to vote in favor of a proposal that would keep many of the Financial Interest and Syndication or "Fin-Syn" rules in place, but would allow the networks to own 40 percent of their prime-time programs.

The networks want the Fin-Syn rules abolished altogether.

In a statement issued Wednesday, FCC Chairman Alfred Sikes said that the vote was yanked from the agenda because the Justice Department requested it "be afforded full opportunity to review and comment on the proposed changes."

Sikes, the Justice Department and the Federal Trade Commission have advocated the network position. The Fin-Syn rules were adopted in 1970 after the networks settled an antitrust lawsuit filed by the Justice Department.

Joe Rutledge, vice president of corporate communications for NBC, said that the networks also have reason to believe the Bush Administration would support the network's position.

The delay could force Hollywood and the networks to go back to the bargaining table in an attempt to reach an agreement for FCC approval.

Microsoft subject of federal antitrust probe

By Jim Erickson
Hearst News Service

SEATTLE – Antitrust investigators with the Federal Trade Commission are scrutinizing the competitive practices of the software industry's largest company, the Microsoft Corp. of Redmond, Wash.

Microsoft officials confirmed Tuesday that the FTC has been investigating the company since June, and that the company was cooperating.

Microsoft and several industry officials said investigators appeared to be focusing their inquiries on Microsoft's best-selling Windows 3.0 software.

Several sources in the software industry, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said recently they had been questioned by the FTC regarding Microsoft's dealings with competitors.

Microsoft and its chairman, Bill Gates, have been the subject of increasing complaints as the company grows in influence and size. Microsoft's revenues pushed past the $1 billion mark, to $1.18 billion, in its fiscal year ended June 30.

According to industry sources, the government is investigating whether Microsoft unfairly exploited its position as the dominant supplier of operating systems for IBM-style personal computers. The programs control the internal functions of about 90 percent of the computers.

FTC investigators want to know if Microsoft misused its power to grab a larger share of the market for software applications, such as the spreadsheets, word-processing and other programs that make PCs useful, sources said.

Companies that compete with Microsoft also are dependent upon it because their products must be compatible with Microsoft's operating system software.

An FTC spokeswoman declined to confirm or deny an ihvestigation was under way. She said it was standard agency practice not to comment on inquiries that have not been publicly disclosed.

Microsoft, in a prepared statement, said the FTC "indicated interest in whether Microsoft has been restricting the functionality and features of future versions of Microsoft Windows." A company spokeswoman declined to elaborate.

Several of Microsoft's competitors have complained for more than a year that the company misled them about its plans for Windows in order to beat them to the burgeoning market.

For example, the competitors claimed Microsoft convinced them to develop applications for a different Microsoft operating system called OS/2.

OS/2, created four years ago in partnership with hardware powerhouse IBM, was originally hailed as a new-generation replacement for MS-DOS. Despite the support of IBM, however, OS/2 sales have been disappointing.

Meanwhile, sales of Windows have skyrocketed, leaving Microsoft competitors who worked on OS/2 applications instead of Windows applications months, if not years, behind. Microsoft developed its own applications software to work with Windows, taking market share from its competitors.

For example, Lotus Development Corp. isn't expected to have a Windows version of its own spreadsheet, Lotus 1-2-3, on the market until midyear. Microsoft introduced a Windows version of its spreadsheet, Excel, in 1987.

Duff Thompson, an attorney for WordPerfect Corp., said Microsoft hasn't acted unfairly. But "we want an absolutely level playing field, and if there are any forces under way to make that field not level, we'd like to see that stopped," he said.

Simple Pleasures goes Light

NutraSweet combines sugar, fat substitutes in one product

By David E. Kalish

NEW YORK (AP) — The NutraSweet Co. this week announced a new version of its flagship frozen dessert that for the first time combines the company's sugar and fat substitutes in one product.

Simple Pleasures Light, an ice-cream style concoction sold in pint-size containers, hits stores by summer. It's aimed at more hard-core dieters and health-conscious consumers than the original fat-free Simple Pleasures, which contains sugar, company executives said.

Some food-industry analysts said the debut of the fat-free, sugar-free version marked an attempt to boost flagging sales of Simple Pleasures, which they said have been hurt by disappointment over the product's taste.

"Simple Pleasures has not taken the world by storm, despite very persistent efforts," said David Braff, president of Braff & Co., a New York-based food-industry consulting company. "We haven't seen a huge run on this, which indicates to me the product isn't meeting consumer demand."

Simplesse executives declined to give specific figures but said sales have met expectations and that the product has achieved sales dominance among low-fat frozen desserts in markets where it's distributed.

"We think we're outperforming them due to significant taste preferences," Wendy Cook, director of marketing at The Simplesse Co., a NutraSweet subsidiary. The company introduced the product at news briefing in midtown Manhattan's Peninsula Hotel.

At least two other companies, the Kraft General Foods division of Philip Morris Companies Inc. and Dreyers Grand Ice Cream Inc., market fat-free frozen desserts created from conventional ingredients.

Simplesse, the fat substitute in Simple Pleasures, is made from egg whites and milk protein. It mimics the texture of fat.

Braff said some consumers apparently have been dissatisfied with the dessert's "mouth-feel, texture and taste."

He said the strategy of luring hard-core dieters who might be attracted to the dual benefit of a low-calorie, low-fat product makes sense at a time when the original introduction has not performed well among taste-conscious eaters.

The new product comes in four flavors and has between 80 and 90 calories per serving, compared with 300-350 calories typical of real ice cream.

The product's vanilla fudge swirl flavor, according to one independent taster at the briefing, was very sweet with a light texture that seemed to melt away in the mouth much more swiftly than ice cream.

The chocolate flavor was also very sweet but with a grainy consistency.

NutraSweet said last month that it would not develop any products beyond its Simple Pleasures frozen desserts and instead focus on selling its Simplesse fake fat to other brand manufacturers.

This approach has worked well for its NutraSweet sugar substitute, an ingredient in a growing list of products made by other companies.

William R. Young, a vice president and analyst at Donaldson, Lufkin and Jenrette in New York, said slow distribution and insufficient marketing support have hurt sales of the original Simple Pleasures product.

"I personally happen to like Simple Pleasures. I think a lot more people would like it if they tried it."

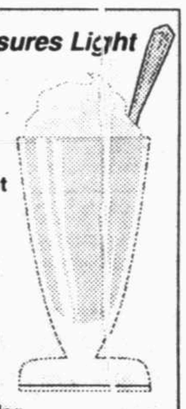

John Garcia, a food-industry analyst at the Wertheim Schroder & Co. securities company in New York, said he believed the Simple Pleasures product was not yet profitable but was expected to break even later.

Until then, he said, the product was helping to boost the visibility of the Simplesse ingredient during a time when the company was trying to sell the ingredient to other companies.

'Dial-A-Meal' picks up steam

■ Beaumont entrepreneur Rocky Schlett has discovered there is a demand for more than pizza delivery to homes, and is seeing his brand-new company earn a profit.

By Steve Stein

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — He may not have the physique of Sylvester Stallone, but Rocky Schlett definitely is slugging his way to the top of the Beaumont business scene.

This Rocky, owner of "Dial-A-Meal," rebukes any comparison to the famed celluloid boxer, but is not entirely uncomfortable with being referred to as a young tycoon. After discovering there was a market for more than pizza delivery in Beaumont, Schlett began operating the carry-out business at the end of 1990.

For $3.50 or 15 percent of the total cost of the meal, whichever is greatest, Dial-A-Meal delivers lunch and dinners from four of Beaumont's best-known restaurants Carlo's, Cody's, The Mandarin and The Tamale Co.

The minimum purchase order is $10. The innovative delivery service already is in "the black," said Schlett, who considers himself an entrepreneur who has found a way to build a better mousetrap in Beaumont.

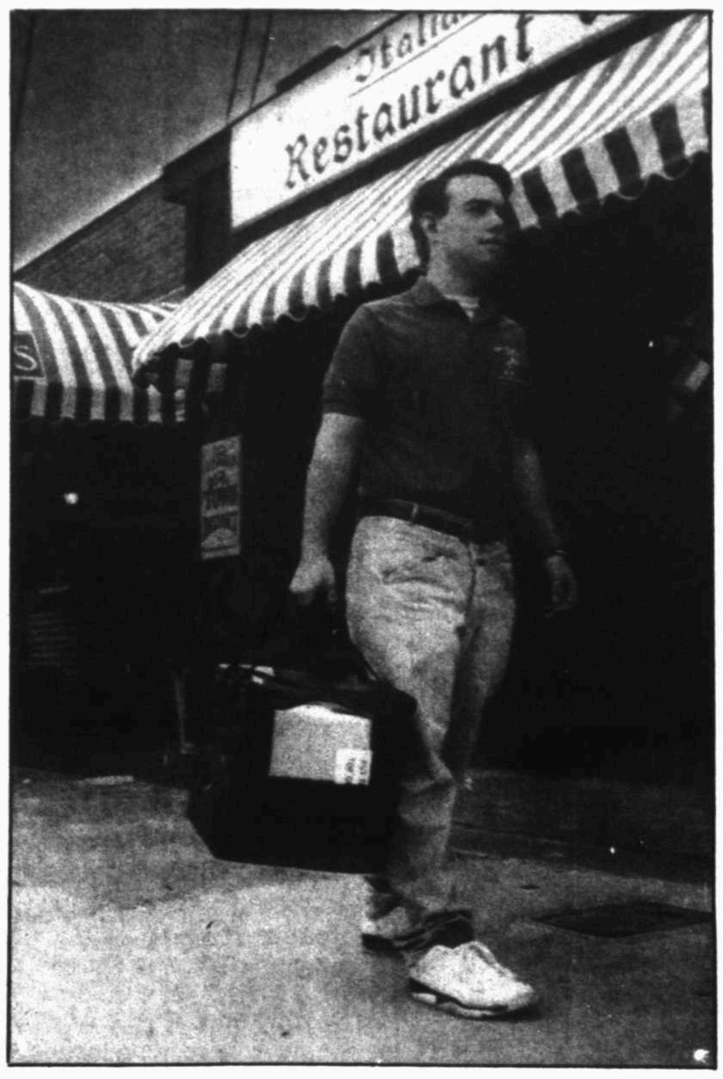

Schlett was graduated from Beaumont-Charlton-Pollard High School and earned a business degree in 1988 from Lamar University. After living in Austin, San Antonio and Houston, Schlett said he found Beaumont offered the best business climate to a young entrepreneur.

He returned to Beaumont in 1989 after earning management experience with Luby's Cafeterias Inc. to open Beaumont Moving & Storage Co., which he still operates.

But one night, after several hours of work at Beaumont Moving & Storage, the concept for Dial-A-Meal was born when Schlett and his wife decided they were too tired to dine out but didn't care for pizza, the predominant food delivered at night in Beaumont.

"I also was overwhelmed by the amount of take-out business we did when I worked at a Luby's in Houston," Schlett said. "It just never seemed to stop."

With state-of-the-art thermal containers guaranteeing freshness and red-uniformed drivers eager to deal with top-notch restaurants, Schlett said Dial-A-Meal began to pick up steam. His eight drivers operate their own vehicles, which are emblazoned with a Dial-A-Meal sign, and now carry voice pagers to enhance delivery times, he said.

AP Laserphoto

Rocky Schlett began his "Dial-A-Meal" home delivery service in late 1990 and it is already making a profit.

Lunch deliveries began slowly but are becoming popular in downtown offices, at the medical centers and in Old Town, he said.

His dinner business got off to a better start, justifying his belief that there was a genuine market for diners who preferred to eat fine cuisine at home. The four cooperating restaurants periodically bill Schlett, saving a lot of messy paperwork.

It was Schlett's professional appearance and manner that captured the trust of the management of some of Beaumont's most successful restaurants. Said Gus Keriotis, president of Carlo's: "He's a fantastic young man. We need that service. So far we've had no complaints about service or food."

Dial-A-Meal has received high praise from the elderly, busy two-income families, handicapped individuals and others who just can't get out for a restaurant meal, Keriotis said.

Beaumont's record-setting rainy weather recently also has given Schlett an advantage he might not have anticipated when he thought of the business, Keriotis said.

Neil Breen, owner of Cody's, is optimistic about Schlett and his business endeavors. "He's a very enterprising young guy who handles himself in a very professional way," Breen said. Though dividends from the delivery service have been steady but not dramatic, Breen said, everything about Schlett's operation has been a pleasant experience.

Schlett no longer limits deliveries to food, but also includes videos from Today's Video. James Nelson, owner of Today's Video, said the service includes the video rate and a flat delivery rate of $5, no matter the number of videos ordered. It is often the same type of clientele that is interested in having meals delivered, Nelson said.

And though meal delivery is limited to the downtown area and west Beaumont, a busy Schlett said he hopes to add restaurants in Beaumont and eventually expand to Nederland and Orange.

Xerox seeks to illustrate prejudice

N.Y. Times News Service

SUNNYVALE, Calif. — Xerox Corp. brought a theater troupe to Silicon Valley to show managers how they often don't know how to act around women and minority employees.

Realizing that newer employees are unlikely to be carbon copies of the boss these days, Xerox hired Cornell University's Theatre Outreach Group to put together a traveling road show to help managers "confront their prejudices."

The four-hour program debuted Wednesday before an audience of about 120 managers from Xerox's Development and Manufacturing Group.

In one segment of the program, a female employee, "Patricia Gibbs," was interviewed for a promotion by a supervisor who kept calling her "Patty."

Not only that, he wondered how she'd cope with joke-telling with "the guys" and pestered her about how the demands of home life might affect her work. "What does your husband think about the possible move?" the boss wondered.

In another skit, a 20-year company veteran with an excellent work record asked to attend an executive training program. He not only was turned down, but was humiliated when it became clear the boss considered him too old even to be talking about a move up the career ladder.

Actors stayed in character for a dialogue with the audience following each scripted performance.

The Xerox managers then talked it over among themselves. That sometimes led to further revelations of subtle biases.

When a man at one table started talking about how "the lady" had been mistreated, a female colleague leaned over and said, "Woman, please, not lady."

It was all part of a campaign by the Rochester, N.Y.-based office-products company to prove it's serious about equal opportunity.

Xerox officials noted that the company began a minority-hiring push in the 1960s, broadened it in the 1970s, and has set annual targets for achieving a balanced workforce by the mid-'90s.

As of January 1, the company's workforce was 32 percent female and 26 percent ethnic minorities. The management was 23 percent women and 20 percent minority, while top-level management was 8.5 percent female and 17 percent minority at last count.

That's considerably better than most major corporations.

British press baron takes on challenges

By Cotten Timberlake

LONDON (AP) — The night Robert Maxwell achieved a long-held ambition of owning a national newspaper, the Daily Mirror, disgruntled workers at the publication threatened to shut it down.

Maxwell didn't flinch. If they stopped, he told them, he'd never publish the paper again. The printing presses rolled.

Self-made and ruthless when he needs to be, Maxwell thrives on challenges like that night in 1984, and is undaunted by failure. "I'm as hard as nails when it needs to get something done," the 67-year-old Maxwell once said.

Now the flamboyant billionaire is taking on another big challenge — the New York Daily News.

Maxwell reached tentative contract agreements with the tabloid's striking unions this past week, clearing the way for the purchase of the 71-year-old News from the Chicago-based Tribune Co.

Once the United States' biggest daily, the Daily News lost $114.5 million last year and was a week away from death when Maxwell jetted in to rescue the paper from the grip of a bitter 4½-month strike. The Tribune Co. had announced it would cease publication Friday unless it sold the News.

Buying a U.S. newspaper — even one as troubled as the News — fits in with Maxwell's strategy of expanding his communications empire.

The holdings of publicly held Maxwell Communication Corp. PLC include book publishers Macmillan Inc., Pergamon Press and P.F. Collier; Official Airline Guides; Marquis Who's Who; Prentice Hall Information Services; Nimbus Records; and Berlitz language schools.

Maxwell's privately held Mirror Group publishes the Daily Mirror, Britain's second-largest newspaper with a circulation of 2.9 million; the Sunday Mirror; The People, a Sunday tabloid; and two big Scottish newspapers, the Daily Record and the Sunday Mail. Attempts to launch an afternoon tabloid in London three years ago flopped.

Last May, however, he started the European, a weekly English-language newspaper distributed across the Continent. He also is starting the Racing Times in the United States, which would compete with the Daily Racing Form owned by archrival Rupert Murdoch, who also publishes Britain's largest newspaper, The Sun.

British publisher Robert Maxwell thrives on challenges, and has taken on a major challenge with the purchase of the troubled New York Daily News.

Maxwell's biggest acquisition in the United States so far has been his $2.6 billion purchase of Macmillan, the publishing and information services company. The 1988 deal broke a string of American defeats, including failed bids for Scientific American, Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Inc., and Bell and Howell Co., to name a few.

Through his acquisitions, Maxwell has let little get in the way of his quest to make a profit.

Already, Maxwell is predicting the Daily News will move into the black the first year of operation under his control. But News employees had to agree to the elimination of 800 jobs, or nearly a third of the unionized work force.

When he bought the failing British Printing Corp. in 1981, Maxwell axed nearly half the 13,000 union employees and modernized production. He had it turning a profit within two years, and under the name British Printing & Communications Corp., it became Britain's biggest printer.

Maxwell cut about a third of the staff at the Daily Mirror and the other five papers of the Mirror Group. And to succeed against the Sun, he threw himself personally into daily operations of the Mirror, editing copy, writing headlines and contributing editorials under the name Charles Wilberforce.

A union leader once said Maxwell "could charm the birds out of the trees, then shoot them."

Maxwell, who declined to be interviewed for this article, is a bulky, loud bear of a man with swept-back, jet black hair and bushy eyebrows.

He was born Labji Hoch, the son of Czech Orthodox Jewish peasants who were killed by the Nazis during World War II.

In an interview with London Weekend Television in 1988, Maxwell likened his early life to life as depicted by Charles Dickens. He emigrated to Britain as a teen-ager in 1940 and he says he arrived penniless, clutching a rifle and speaking no English.

He joined the British army, became a captain and won the prestigious Military Cross for bravery.

After the war, Maxwell bought Pergamon Press. He later became a Labor member of Parliament and spent six years in the House of Commons. He remains a longtime member of that Socialist Party.

Maxwell's political beliefs haven't prevented him from succeeding in business or enjoying his wealth, estimated by the Times of London at $2.05 billion. He lives in a mansion near Oxford, entertains lavishly, has interests in soccer clubs, and commutes to his offices near Fleet Street in a noisy helicopter.

But Maxwell stumbled in the late 1960s when Pergamon, which had gone public, was accused of irregularities in its accounts, and he and other directors left the board.

Maxwell lost his next election to a Conservative challenger for his seat in the House of Commons, and the Department of Trade and Industry declared Maxwell unsuited to run a publicly held company.

Maxwell bounced back, subsequently reacquiring Pergamon. His big business break came in the early 1980s, when he bought and began turning around British Printing and Communication.

Maxwell Communication has 20,000 employees and net earnings of $188 million on revenue of $2.3 billion in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1990.

Dubbed "Captain Bob" by the British press, he is often pictured wearing a large cap and bow tie, his signature accouterments. This past week, as his star rose in New York, he alternated between caps emblazoned with Maxwell and Daily News logos.

In the final stages of his negotiations with the News unions, Maxwell moved about New York in high style, jumping from jet to yacht to limousine. He became an instant celebrity as video clips and photographs of Maxwell led news broadcasts and front pages in the city.

He joked, with obvious relish, that he had lost the luxury of anonymity in New York, which had been the one place in the world he could "go out for coffee and not be recognized."

The contrast of his jet-set panache and the rough-and-tumble reputation of the News was just odd enough to catch the attention of otherwise jaded New Yorkers.

"Somehow this has captured the imagination of the city," he said of his News exploits.

Credit card delinquencies on increase

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of Americans behind on paying credit card bills rose sharply in the fourth quarter but the combined delinquency rate for seven other kinds of consumer loans was stable, a trade group said.

The percentage of credit card holders 30 or more days late on their payments was a seasonally adjusted 2.86 at the end of the year compared with 2.56 at the end of September and 2.24 a year earlier, the American Bankers Association said.

Despite the deepening recession, however, the seasonally adjusted average for seven types of closed-end installment loans was 2.57 percent at the end of the year compared with 2.56 percent at the end of September and 2.64 percent at the end of 1989.

"Consumers are reorienting their finances. They're reducing savings, paying up their mortgage obligations, holding their own with ordinary consumer debt and falling behind in credit card debt," said economist Robert H. Dugger of the banker's group.

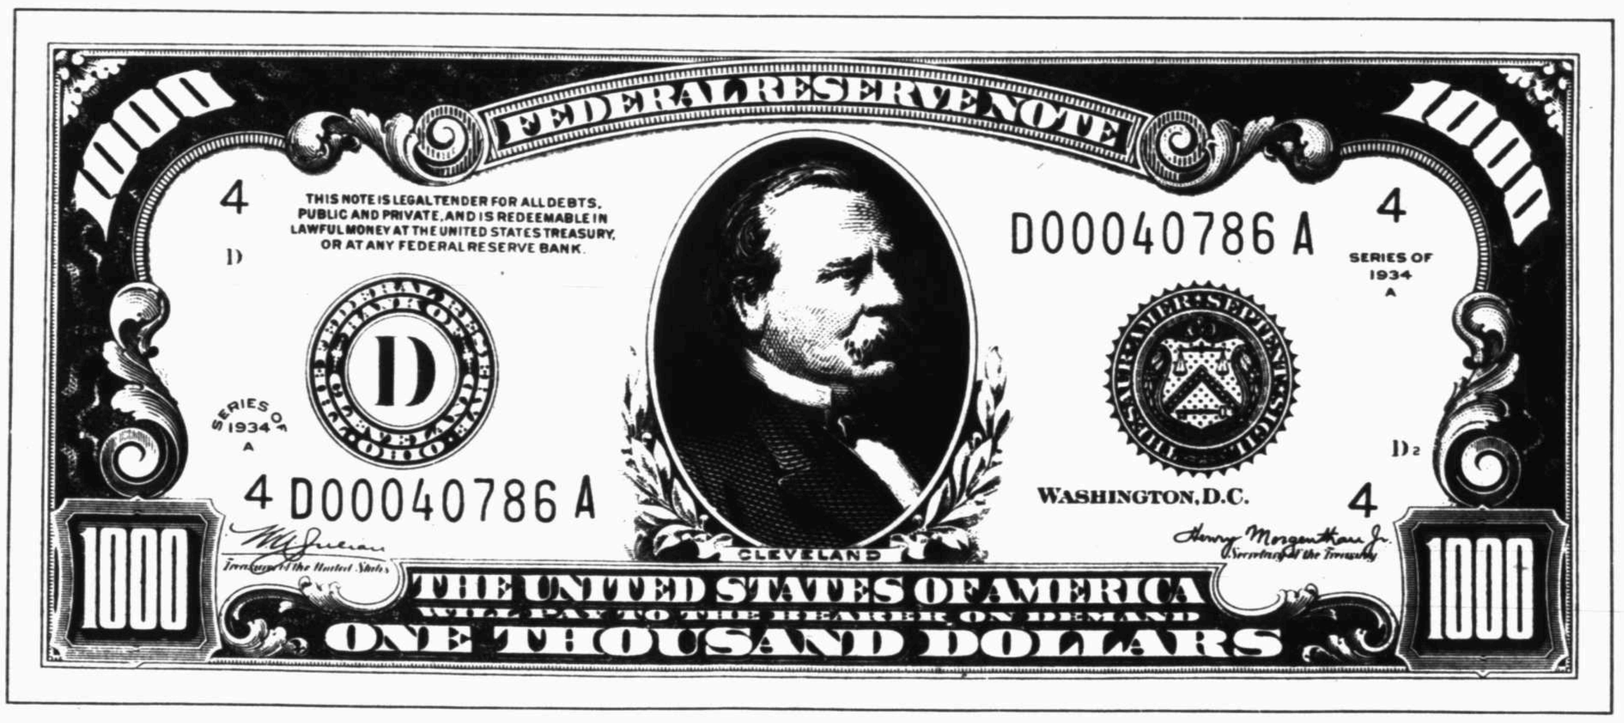

Another trade group, the Mortgage Bankers Association of America, reported separately last week that delinquent home mortgages declined to 4.71 percent at the end of the year, down from 5 percent three months earlier.

The delinquency rate for home equity lines of credit, as measured by the American Bankers Association, edged up to 0.85 percent at the end of 1990 from 0.80 percent.

Delinquency rates often do not rise significantly until well into a recession. And, in the first two months of this year, evidence of economic stress continued with the nation's unemployment rate rising from 6.1 percent in December to 6.5 percent in February.

"Bankers are preparing for the worst: the possibility that delinquency rates will continue to rise," Dugger said. "Of particular concern is unsecured credit such as credit cards."

The banking group surveyed 800 commercial banks, tracking loans in all 50 states, Puerto Rico and the District of Columbia.

IF YOU NEED A GOOD REASON TO GO TO THE BANK, WE'LL GIVE YOU A THOUSAND.

Sears scrambles to improve earnings, cope with competition

N.Y. Times News Service

CHICAGO — For a host of reasons, Sears, Roebuck's much ballyhooed strategy to lure shoppers with more brand names and lower prices is not working the way the company had hoped.

Edward A. Brennan, Sears's chairman and chief executive, is convinced it will, but to buy the time he believes he needs, he is focusing on increasing profits by trying to cut costs.

What is at stake for Sears is whether Brennan can jump-start the company and preserve its stature as the nation's No. 1 retailer.

What is at stake for the 57-year-old Brennan is his game plan of recasting Sears as a name brand discounter and his legacy as the boss who managed the transformation.

After dismissing Michael Bozic, his chief merchandising lieutenant, last August, Brennan has waded into Sears's bureaucracy and wielded both the ax and the scalpel.

Brennan contends that the recession is keeping shoppers away and Sears's sales flat. So he has decided to cut 10 percent of his merchandising work force, offer early retirements to several hundred headquarters employees and lay off others. For an additional 20,000 workers who remain, he is imposing a pay freeze.

He has also closed a number of catalogue distribution centers and completely shut down McKids, Sears's chain of free-standing children's clothing stores that failed to generate the profits Sears had envisioned.

The belt-tightening at Sears is in response to one of its poorest years ever. Savvy discounters like Wal-Mart Stores registered impressive sales gains, while Sears's retail sales last year were flat at $31 billion.

Worse, profits from some 860 stores slid by more than half last year, to $257.4 million.

"We are working every bit as hard on revenue growth and positioning ourselves business by business to grow in the future, as we are in cost take-out," Brennan said, using his term for paring expenses.

While Brennan has said that the cuts will produce $600 million in savings in 1991 alone, he adds that still more cuts are likely.

So far, Brennan appears to enjoy both the patience and support of his board, which has watched Sears's profits sink while those of rivals have surged.

But two years have already elapsed since he started bringing more brand name merchandise to Sears stores, and he has little to show for it. Although Brennan predicts earnings will improve in 1991, the board's indulgence will not last forever.

"Basically, Ed has been told that the merchandise group cannot be permitted to continue its downward spiral without someone being held responsible," said one Sears consultant who is in touch with Sears directors and who insisted on anonymity.

Why is Sears doing so poorly? One reason is that it represents something in retailing that is passe. It is attempting to be a low-cost department store chain that can compete with the specialty retailers like Circuit City on home electronics or Highland Superstores on brand name appliances.

But Sears's problem is that despite Brennan's cost-cutting, the company's overhead structure remains too high.

Which means that in many situations, Sears still cannot be generate ample earnings growth on the slender profit margins that sustain its competitors.

It also has a dated image in the minds of shoppers.

West Texas roofer marks 100th year

Staff Report

Lydick-Hooks, one of the largest roofing companies in West Texas, is celebrating its 100th year in business.

The company began in 1891 when John Lydick quit his job with the Santa Fe Railroad and began Lydick-Hooks Roofing Co. in Fort Worth. Today the company has offices in Midland, Abilene, Amarillo, Lubbock, Brownwood and Wichita Falls. Lydick was soon joined by his son Ned and J.M. Hooks, who opened a Waco office in 1915, followed by Cisco in 1918 and Abilene in 1920.

In 1959, Dean Austin came to Midland to build Lydick-Hooks Roofing Co. of Midland Inc. He served as vice president and manager until his death in Augist 1976. His son Mike succeeded his father as general manager and vice president, having started work with the company in his teens and become a salesman after graduation from college. In 1985, after 23 years roofing experience, he became president of the company.

Austin credits the company's success to its employees.

Never-Never Land

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

A sprinkling of pixie dust and by following the flight directions "second star to the right and straight on 'til morning" will lead, as everyone knows, to Never-Never Land.

And yet, today only, those flying to Never-Never Land need to alter their flight path to Odessa's Ector County Coliseum, where Walt Disney's World on Ice is playing its final two West Texas performances at 1 and 4:30 p.m.

In this production, James Barrie's magical world is spiced with Disney characters Mickey Mouse, Donald Duck, Minnie Mouse, Daisy and Chip 'n' Dale, but the show still centers around Peter Pan, Tinker Bell, the Darling children, Tiger Lily, Captain Hook and his rascally crew.

Playing one of the world's best-loved eternal youths is "like a dream come true," said 26-year-old Jaimee Eggleton, a champion skater and former olympic competitor from Montreal, Canada.

"In a way, I really deeply consider myself a Peter Pan. I was rebellious, always getting into mischief, the boy who never wanted to grow up.

"And, who knows. As long as this show goes on, maybe I'll never grow up."

Eggleton, who describes himself as a perfectionist at heart, can't remember a time when he didn't want to skate.

"My first love has always been skating," he said.

In Montreal, it was not uncommon for people to make small ice rinks in their backyards. Eggleton recalls when he was 2½ years old and his father took his brother, who was two years older, to skate in a small rink.

"I sort of hobbled along. My father wouldn't let me skate. 'You're just too young,' he said. 'You have to wait a year.' I was infuriated.

"After weeks of bickering, my father finally reluctantly said, 'OK. Try.' I guess it was subconscious, imbedded in my brain. I skated the first time. It was like second nature. That was the beginning."

Eggleton began playing hockey when he was 6, which was the youngest age he could play in a league. He played until he was 19.

That's not all he did on the ice.

His father, Richard Eggleton, a teacher and high school principal, said he needed more time on the ice if he was going to improve. Thus, when he was 12, Eggleton began taking figure skating along with his brother, Ricky.

The youngest Eggleton added more to his schedule.

"At the same time, I was a speed skater and also barrel jumping," Eggleton said, adding that barrel jumping on ice meant "you have to be a little bit crazy."

At one time, Eggleton was on his school hockey team, a city hockey team and another hockey team that went to Europe, in addition to figure skating, speed skating and barrel skating.

His spare time was spent "sleeping and eating." He didn't agree with the adults who would tell his father he was doing too much. He would spend his nights speed skating and barrel jumping, his mornings at hockey practice and his afternoons attending figure skating sessions.

At the time he knew a tough decision was waiting for him, one he postponed as long as he could.

"Being 5'9", I wasn't the tallest hockey player in the world, and there's not very many short hockey players that make it. Not that I'm short, but short for hockey.

"There was more of a future in figure skating," Eggleton said, citing as a examples teaching and skating in ice shows.

"That's what I always wanted to do — to join an ice show. To star in an ice show is something even more special, and to be in Walt Disney's World on Ice is even better, and to be Peter Pan is beyond description."

Eggleton calls his mastery of all three skating blades his "claim to fame." He is one of the few male skaters in the world who has competed on speed, hockey and figure skating blades. It is this ability which Eggleton feels landed him the role of Peter Pan.

"I have an aggressive style. I'm energetic, a high jumper, and I guess that's what they wanted for Peter Pan. I'm not a very typical male figure skater at all, more of a hockey player."

Eggleton earned triple gold skating status from the Canadian Figure Skating Association for his freestyle, figures and dance tests. He became the Junior Canadian Barrel Jumping Champion, the Junior Canadian Skating Champion in 1984, the Quebec Skater of the Year for three consecutive years, a member of the 1984 Olympic figure skating team which competed in Sarajevo, Yugoslavia, and a member of the World Championship Team in Geneva, Switzerland in 1986.

Competing in the Olympics was the realization of a goal Eggleton had three years earlier when he was still in high school.

"In my high school annual, I said I'd like to compete in the '84 Olympics, and I did it. I was very happy," he said. He found the experience "amazing."

Eggleton said competitions and traveling have provided him "an education you can't get anywhere else. You certainly can't get it at school. It makes you aware of things — how people are. In otherwords, it's basically the real world. Traveling definitely makes your personality come out stronger."

Walt Disney's World on Ice, operated by Irvin Feld and Kenneth Feld Productions, contacted Eggleton about the role of Peter Pan in 1988.

"They had seen me skate and heard about me. To join an ice show, you have to become a professional. You can't compete at the world championships. It's a very big decision in any athlete's life."

Surgery on his legs helped Eggleton make that difficult decision.

"I was unable to train and to maintain world-level skating. I couldn't do the things I knew I could do to be up there in the top three in the world.

"It was a very hard decision and undoubtedly the biggest decision of my life, but looking back it was definitely the right decision. I certainly do miss competing, but, as a professional, there still are a few professional competitions.

"For instance, last year I competed in the U.S. Open Professional Championship, where I placed second. And professional skating is getting bigger and bigger, so I don't miss the amateur skating so much.

"And with the show, it's totally different. You compete maybe 10 times in the year as an amateur, but with the show you do 10 shows a week sometimes. It's like accomplishing every night. Not that it's a competition,

Petra's lead singer hopes world improvements last

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

John Schlitt finds life beyond belief for the Christian rock group Petra.

"Petra is doing fantastic," said the group's lead singer. "We are seeing more things get done in more different parts of the world, and you can't help getting excited about it."

The recent war in the Middle East, brought people closer to God, Schlitt said.

"I believe as we go through these conflicts people get closer to God. It's funny how a country that was built under God can so quickly forget that fact until times become hard, and, all of a sudden, more people start going back and asking God's help. I hope that as this thing tones down — and it is Praise God — that people won't forget what they asked God to do, and they'll give him another chance, and we don't end up with just a lot of foxhole Christians."

In addition to covering the United States, Petra's 1990-91 "Beyond Belief" tour took the group to Russia this fall and, most recently, in February and this month to Germany, Finland, Switzerland and Norway. The most recent tour was almost oversold.

"The places almost sold out too fast for us," Schlitt said in an interview Wednesday, the day after Petra returned from Europe. "We are seeing a lot of things happening in Christian youth of today, not only in America but in Europe. There is still a lot to be done, but we are encouraged in the fact they are listening to our music, which brings up interest in their hearts for our Lord."

Nominated for five Dove Awards this year, Petra won its first Grammy Award in February for Best Rock/Contemporary Gospel Album, "Beyond Belief."

"I keep forgetting about that," Schlitt said when asked about the Grammy Award. "It was a neat experience. We were nominated six years in a row. We in Petra pretty much just assumed that we were never supposed to win a Grammy or a Dove, so I think probably the most shocked people of all was us."

As he looks back on receiving the award, Schlitt said, "My first thought is, 'Okay, what can we do with it?' It will be real nice having a Grammy in my home on the shelf, but there's got to be more to it than this.

" 'What can we as a Christian band do with this?' I hope it will open doors for us to make that next move, whatever it is. I have no idea. Right now we're almost so busy that we hardly have enough time to remember who we are."

Schlitt, who was previously with the rock group Head East, doesn't mind being busy.

"A long time ago, we basically said, 'Lord, we're available for whatever you want us to do.' And He sure has kept us up on it. I just think it's very exciting when we're getting out there so much even the non-Christian kids know who we are, and there's enough interest because of that familiarity of name to come and check us out."

Petra found music marketed differently in Europe than in the United States.

"In the European music system, Christian groups actually have more of an opportunity to be heard in the secular market because there it's not quite as jaded as it is in the U.S., yet. They judge more on musical style rather than the message. So to me that gives almost more opportunity to be heard by people in Europe than in the US.

"In the U.S., we are very well known for what we stand for, and that closes many, many doors to opportunities of airplay. That's just the fact that we face. We feel that if we are ever going to be played on secular radio, it will be an act of God, or at least I feel that. I shouldn't speak for the band on that."

Schlitt said Petra's latest album, its 13th, is "probably the finest album we have every put out musically. The next album, whatever it is and whatever name it's called, will be beyond that. But that album will not be out for a while because the 'Beyond Belief' tour is so full."

Also, Petra has released the "Beyond Belief Video Album," an hour movie dealing with the struggles of a high school senior.

"It deals with the subject of broken Christian homes and kids that get to a point that their lives are so mixed up that they are blaming God for everything, and they find out that God was not the source of the problem. Interspersed in that movie are six videos from the 'Beyond Belief' album. It's pretty exciting. That project went gold very quickly, and I think it's heading for platinum, which we give God all the credit for."

Often times, Petra members field questions about God and Christianity following their performances.

"Each kid has got a different need to be heard, a different word to be said to him, that's why you trust the Holy Spirit to guide you," Schlitt said. "We have a Lord that's for real. It's a shame that more people don't realize it cause this world would be a so much nicer place if they did."

The Christian rock band Petra, from left, Louie Weaver, Ronny Cates, John Schlitt, Bob Hartman and John Lawry, bring the "Beyond Belief" tour to Midland College's Chaparral Center Thursday. Showtime is 7:30 p.m. Tickets for reserved seating, priced at $12 in advance and $14 the day of the concert, may be purchased at Chaparral Center Box Office, Lighthouse Bookstore, Scripture Shop, Odessa, and Sonshine Bookstore, Big Spring. For more information call Street Level Ministries, 563-2424 or 1-362-8093.

Thursday's concert is not the first time Petra has played Midland College's Chaparral Center.

"We're excited about being there, and we expect it to be a fantastic time," aaid Schlitt, who most wants today's youth to realize, "There really are sincere Christians out there.

"Don't be discouraged by the stereotype that the world's trying to convey. There are so many very committed, on fire and hard working Christians that never get talked about. So, if you're searching, keep searching because they are out there."

In his personal life, Schlitt is a "very happy man.

"I feel very complete. I've got a very healthy family that loves me, and I love them. I am able not only to be the lead singer for one of the finest Christian rock bands in the world, when we're not on the road, I get to go out and do solo dates in areas where Petra can't play anymore, where we may either be too loud or too expensive or both."

Yuppies discover doughnuts, so did doughboys in WWI

NEW YORK (AP) — Doughnuts lined up in soldierly precision bedazzle Agent Dale Cooper on "Twin Peaks." A heaping basket of them grace the cover of Gourmet and the inside pages of Town & Country this month.

We sense a trend: Are doughnuts becoming the croissant of the '90s?

"Doughnuts are becoming trendy? How depressing," said Michael Warren, who with his wife, Ann, runs the Cupcake Cafe in New York City. The little hole-in-the-wall pastry shop near the Port Authority bus terminal is one of the few — if not the only — places in the city to make doughnuts entirely from scratch.

"We approached the doughnut as a neglected species," Warren said. "The chocolate chip cookie had its day, the croissant had its day, but nobody was doing the doughnut" when the couple set up shop 2½ years ago. Warren clearly wants it to stay that way.

"Oh, I hope they don't become a yuppie thing because that will just ruin them," said American food arbiter Michael Stern, who with his wife, Jane, wrote such books as "The Encyclopedia of Bad Taste" and "Roadfood, Goodfood."

"Doughnuts won't become popular as something that is chic, but something that is retro-chic," he predicted. "Doughnuts are lumpish, lunky, greasy, heavy and nutritionally wanton in all the ways that people know they shouldn't go. People are eating them as a backlash to the health mania."

Doughnut sales are up, said an executive at Dunkin' Donuts, by far the largest doughnut chain in America with more than 2,000 stores worldwide.

"I think there is somewhat of a revival, but I don't think it's because of 'Twin Peaks,' " said Sydney Feltenstein, senior vice president of marketing at the company's headquarters at Randolph, Mass.

"People are returning to the basics, to comfort food, away from the sophisticated excesses of the '80s," Feltenstein said. "People are rejecting the trendy things like paying $1.50 for a croissant."

(When pressed, he admitted that Dunkin' Donuts sells croissants, but only for 65 to 70 cents apiece, and sales are down.)

Editors at Gourmet decided to put doughnuts on the February cover not because they are trendy but "because it's a really appealing image for this time of year," said Zanne Zakroff, the magazine's food department director. "On a cold day, what could be more comforting than a toasty warm piece of pastry?"

"The croissants were part of that period of urbanity and sophistication that we were trying on for ourselves. Doughnuts I think more represent the meatloaf and pot roast that we're returning to," she said.

One of the recipes featured in the magazine is for "banana walnut nutmeg doughnuts." Stern groaned when the name was read to him. "That's not a doughnut," he said. "A doughnut shouldn't have a name longer than, say, 'cinnamon.'"

But Zakroff defended it: "It's not a yuppie doughnut. It's just a variation of humble banana bread. Its just part of the trend that started in the '80s of listing a lot of ingredients in the dish's name."

Sally Levitt Steinberg, who introduced herself as "the doughnut lady" when she returned a reporter's phone call, said she thinks that if doughnuts are having a revival, it could be due to the recession and the war.

Steinberg, who lives in New York, is the author of "The Donut Book" and the grandaughter of Adolph Levitt, inventor of the first doughnut-making machine.

Doughnuts often are associated with hard times, and during the Depression were called "the poor man's rich food," Steinberg said.

Variations of sweet cakes fried in oil — with and without the hole — have existed for centuries in dozens of cultures. The origin of the word "doughnut" is glazed in mystery, but the doughnut cutter was patented in Maine in 1872.

During World War I, U.S. soldiers in wartime France were fed doughnuts by Salvation Army volunteers to remind them of home. Steinberg writes that many people think this is where the name "doughboys" originated, but in fact soldiers had been called that since at least the Civil War.

None of the experts consulted could explain why police officers and doughnut shops are so often linked, although Feltenstein passed along this ditty: "If you need to find a cop, go to a doughnut shop."

PETER: Eggleton finds Peter Pan role an honor

but you have to peak. People have come to see the show and you do your best every night."

For Eggleton, Peter Pan is the "personification of innocence; of youth." Playing Peter Pan provides him with the opportunity to make contact with that youth in all people, regardless of their age.

"We're always young. When you're an adult you're still young at heart, but you have to pretend that you're older," Eggleton said.

Playing Peter Pan is an honor for Eggleton, who has seen most filmed productions of the story and read numerous books in his search for the character most representative of Peter Pan.

"We're moving into the American '90s, and I think youth is more aware at a young age, and I think they demand more of the character playing Peter Pan. Look at the Peter Pan cartoon — dark hair, pony tail, very masculine, very overpowering, yet he still maintains a bit of innocence.

"Every person who's ever played Peter Pan always has a little of their personality in Peter Pan. I choose what I think Peter Pan represents, and I try to portray it as much as possible on the ice."

The role is possibly the most demanding on ice.

"It's probably one of the most difficult skating roles in any ice show in the world, if not the most difficult," Eggleton said. "I'm on the ice the majority of the time during the show, not just acting, but skating.

"I try to make it look easy, but in reality it's very hard, and it took me a good four months before I could actually enjoy myself, where I wasn't tired."

He recalls those early months of playing Peter Pan as a time when the other skaters would have the energy to go to a movie after a show and he would stay in and rest.

Since that time, he's made the most of what he enjoys about working for an ice show — the traveling. He bought a car in Florida which he drives to most dates, including the one in Odessa. He also has acquired a girlfriend, Vicky Rivard, a skater who plays one of the lost boys.

He brings the same enthusiasm to the role that he did when he began.

"I put out 100 percent, and it's very important that I do. I don't think people realize how important it is to me. You have people there that pay good money to see the show, and I want them to see the best Jaimee/Peter Pan that I can possibly do.

He said the one thing that epitomizes how seriously he takes the role is that in every one of the more than 500 shows he has done in the past 1½ years he has performed a back flip, no matter how tired he was.

"As long as I'm doing this show, I will do a back flip. There's really not many people in the world that do it on a consistent basis..."

The backflip is difficult not "just physically, but mentally. When you're doing three shows a day and are physically tired, it's a mental battle. You have to beat yourself, and it's a challenge every time."

Also, the backflip is among the "most dangerous" movements on ice, Eggleton said.

"It's a very close call, but the show calls for it, and it's an impressive move. It really gets the crowd going. I enjoy doing it. I enjoy getting a reaction."

Eggleton counts himself among the world's fortunate people.

"I think I'm very privileged. Not many people can do a job and say they love it. And to do what one loves best, how can you not be happy?"

As a result of playing Peter Pan, Eggleton has become a fan.

"I knew who Peter Pan was, but it wasn't a big deal for me. I knew what it represented, but I didn't go overboard. But now I can see how kids can be playing Peter Pan. I definitely am now a collector of Peter Pan porcelain plates and Peter Pan pins and Peter Pan everything — cups and mugs and posters. I'm really into the Peter Pan thing now."

Hands-on producer turns his talent to directing

NEW YORK (AP) — Irwin Winkler was neither fresh out of film school nor a struggling screenwriter when he directed his first movie, "Guilty by Suspicion."

Winkler is a producer whose 35 films include "Rocky," "Raging Bull" and "The Right Stuff," and his career hardly needed reviving.

But he thought he had a good story and he wanted to tell it himself. And in addition to the unique advantages he had in getting "Guilty by Suspicion" to the screen, he shares some of the frustrations that push people into becoming directors.

"Five years ago, I would have said I have so many ideas as a producer, so many things I wanted to do, I didn't want to spend a year and a half on one film," recalled a weary Winkler, his legs stretched out on a coffee table in his Manhattan hotel suite.

"Then a couple of the films I wanted to do and had developed didn't turn out quite as well as I thought they would, which was my fault along with everyone else's. But on this film, I decided if anyone was going to screw up it would be me."

The creation of "Guilty by Suspicion" took place on the set of two films Winkler produced: "Round Midnight" and "GoodFellas."

WHILE IN Paris for "Round Midnight," Winkler met actor John Berry, who had been a victim of the Hollywood blacklist in the 1950s.

Horrified by Berry's stories, Winkler began working on a screenplay about director David Merrill, whose successful career is threatened when he refuses to testify against his friends before the House Committe on Un-American Activities.

When he needed an actor to play Merrill, Winkler was in a better position than most beginning directors to find himself a star. Rather than having to place an ad in the trade papers and take a chance on an unknown performer, Winkler simply walked up to Robert De Niro on the set of "GoodFellas."

"I had shown the script to (director) Marty Scorsese and he liked so I talked to De Niro, told him I had a screenplay and asked him to read it," Winkler said.

"He liked it a lot and I told him I was going to direct it and he was very, very taken in with the idea. He said, 'Yeah, I'd like to do it with you.'"

Casting the other parts took several months. With De Niro in every scene but one, Winkler wanted to make sure the supporting actors were compatible, and flew the star out to New York and Los Angeles for readings with cast members, among them Annette Bening, George Wendt and Scorsese.

Winkler always has been a "hands-on" producer, helping develop stories and spending extensive time on the sets, and took an equally active approach to directing.

HE CAREFULLY researched the story, even viewing the original House committee hearings, and also made sure he came to the set prepared, sketching meticulous storyboards and videotaping assistants walking on sets to get ideas for how scenes should look.

"I learned it's the best blue-collar job there is," he laughed. "I think you can relate it to a surgeon when he performs an operation. You actually got to do the work instead just supervising.

"The first day was like a fog, I can't remember it. I was very, very excited. I was so energetic and anxious to get done, I did two days work that first day."

Winkler worked as a mailboy, a projectionist and a clapper — one who goes to live TV shows and applauds and laughs — before deciding to get into the movie business.

His first production was the 1966 Elvis Presley vehicle "Double Trouble." Winkler moved onto classier projects three years later with "They Shoot Horses, Don't They?" which received nine Academy Award nominations and won the best actor prize for Gig Young.

If there's such a thing as an "Irwin Winkler" film, it's the story of men under pressure: Sylvester Stallone in "Rocky," the astronauts in "The Right Stuff" and De Niro in "Raging Bull" and "Guilty by Suspicion."

IF THERE'S anything else in common about his movies, it's the fact they never turn out the way Winkler expects them. "Rocky" was supposed to be a nice, small film about a struggling boxer. The greatness of "Raging Bull" was only apparent to the producer after the final screening.

And he's had just as many disappointments. "Revolution," a 1986 flop starring Al Pacino, was one of the movies that made Winkler change his mind about becoming a director. "Betrayed" and "Music Box" were socially conscious movies that failed at the box office.

Winkler said he enjoyed making "Guilty by Suspicion" and may direct again; he's currently working on a story about "ethics in broadcasting."

He didn't produce his first film, turning over the honors to Arnon Milchan, but Winkler still finished it four days ahead of schedule and did his best to be the kind of director with whom Irwin Winkler would have liked to work.

"I don't believe in filmmaking by stress. It's stressful enough between the hours, the physical and the mental exertion you have," Winkler insisted. "Whether you're a director, an actor or the prop man, you have to be right up there all the time. So I tried to run a set where basically we have some fun and people like each other and get along, have a good meal."

Nashville: Boxcar Willie waves the flag

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The heart of a patriot beats underneath the hobo garb of Boxcar Willie, the cheerful country music singer who has sold millions of records dressed like he just hopped off a freight train.

He may look like a nomad with no allegiance to country. But his current album, "The Spirit of America," dispels his image as a homeless discard.

The LP is a collection of mostly patriotic songs that in his view size up the emotion of the country.

Included in the album on th independent Madacy label are "Battle Hymn of the Republic," "America," "America the Beautiful," "Yankee Doodle," "Dixie" and others.

Boxcar Willie actually is Lecil (not Cecil) Martin, who spent 22 years as a C-5 pilot in the Air Force before becoming a country music star and marketing his records through ever-present TV ads.

"I've always wanted to do an album saluting our country," he said in a telephone interview from a theater he owns in Branson, Mo., in the Ozark Mountains.

"When I hear 'The Star-Spangled Banner' I get a lump in my throat. When I see the flag flying, I get tears in my eyes."

So when Iraq invaded Kuwait in August, he started writing patriotic songs and came up with the tunes "Spirit of America" and "Play 'The Star-Spangled Banner' Over Me."

He was in the process of gathering material for an album, so he decided to turn it into a flag-waving assortment of new songs and classics. When his daughter was sent to Saudi Arabia to serve in a Patriot Missile unit with the Army, his feeling of patriotism intensified.

"I've never seen the spirit in the country as high as it is now," the 58-year-old performer said. "It's a grand feeling."

Boxcar Willie is best known for his album "King of the Road," which he sold through a memorable TV marketing campaign 10 years ago.

The last time he checked, the sales figure was 3.2 million. The success is even more remarkable considering he was relatively unknown at the time.

So did the songs that few people had recorded for years: "You Are My Sunshine," "Red River Valley," "Mule Train" and others.

"I was new and I dressed down and I was completely different," he chuckled as he recalled the impact of the ad.

"And no one had done those songs for years. I was an ol' boy dressed like a hobo singing songs that people remembered their daddies and granddaddies singing."

Boxcar Willie, a character-gimmick inspired when Martin saw a hobo in a boxcar in 1976, became a star. Since then, he's performed in 38 countries and all 50 states.

He joined the Grand Ole Opry cast as a regular performer, and is now celebrating his 10th year with the fabled country music show.

"I stood on stage last week and thought about how lucky I was," he said. "I thought about all the people who have tried to get on the Opry and all those who did but were not invited back.

"Nothing will ever replace the Opry. It comes from the heart."

Martin, who grew up in Sterrett, Texas, says his success proves that the public is endlessly captivated by hobos.

"The hobo is a free spirit," he said. "Deep down, everybody has thought about leaving the world behind. The thought has crossed everybody's mind to run away and never be heard from again.

"There's a fascination with a train too. There's probably been more songs about trains, and more pictures about trains, than any other piece of machinery except maybe ships.

"Trains are part of America, kind of like the flag."

Apart from the patriotic songs, Boxcar Willie primarily sings tunes with railroad and hobo themes like "Daddy Was a Railroad Man," "Wabash Cannonball" and "The Lord Made a Hobo Out of Me."

He also can imitate a train whistle. Such whistles are sold at his theater in Missouri and are big sellers along with engineer's hats and bandannas.

"People buy them and then send me pictures they've had taken wearing them," Boxcar Willie said. "The train holds an enormous fascination with the public."

Country classics reissued on compact disc

HOUSTON (AP) — While major record labels have concentrated on reissuing classic jazz and rock recordings on compact disc, many vintage country performances remain unavailable on CD. Two labels recently have launched ambitious reissues series devoted to the history of country music.

"Columbia Country Classics" is a five-album set including over 125 songs, most not previously available on CD. Each volume is sold separately.

Volume 1, "The Golden Age," documents the 1930s through the early '50s, and contains definitive works by the Carter Family, Roy Acuff, Gene Autry, Bob Wills and the Texas Playboys, Bill Monroe and others.

Volume 3, "Americana," collects three-minutes sagas such as Mary Robbins' "El Paso," and Johnny Horton's "Battle of New Orleans," as well as novelties like the Statler Brothers' "Flowers on the Wall." More recent tracks by Charlie Daniels and the Highwaymen carry on the country story-song tradition.

Volume 4, "The Nashville Sound," focuses on the "Countrypolitan" trend of the '60s and '70s, when country music was striving for more sophistication and mainstream respectability. Not surprisingly, this is the weakest volume of the series, despite such standards as Johnny Cash's "Ring of Fire," Tammy Wynette's "Stand By Your Man," and Charlie Rich's "Behind Closed Doors."

Volume 5, "The New Tradition," somewhat erratically brings the music up to the present, with Willie Nelson, Merle Haggard, George Jones, Ricky Van Shelton, Rodney Crowell and Rosanne Cash foremost among those bridging the progressive/traditionalist wings of modern country. The relative paucity of current artists is a reminder that Columbia was regrettably slow in adapting to the new traditionalist movement.

The "Columbia Country Classics" compilation was produced by Greg Geller. The series is also available on cassette, though without the extensive and informative liner notes by country music critic and historian Rich Kienzle.

— MCA's "Country Music Hall of Fame" series was produced by the Country Music Foundation, the dedicated nonprofit organization that operates the Country Music Hall of Fame in Nashville.

The first set of releases contains retrospectives on Ernest Tubb, Red Foley, Bill Monroe, Kitty Wells and Loretta Lynn. The second set, due out in May, will add volumes on the Sons of the Pioneers, the Carter Family, Jimmie Davis, Floyd Tillman, Tex Ritter and a multi-artist compilation.

Each album consists of 16 tracks, carefully selected and annotated by Chris Skinker, John Rumble and Ronnie Pugh of the Country Music Foundation. The CMF's Alan Stoker did a masterful job of digitally remixing the master tapes and metal "mother" plates of recordings from the pre-tape era. Stoker somehow filtered out a lot of distracting pops and hisses without sterilizing the original sound.

Many of these recordings were done for the Decca and Coral labels, which were absorbed by MCA in the '70s. The Bill Monroe album spans most of the history of bluegrass, from Monroe's 1949 recording of "Uncle Pen" to his 1968 version of "My Sweet Blue-Eyed Darling," winner of the first bluegrass Grammy award.

Taken together, the Columbia and MCA reissue series offer a valuable textbook primer on the history and development of country music. But younger listeners may be surprised at how favorably much of this music compares with what's coming out Nashville today.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, MARCH 17, 1991

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A generous, giving attitude will be richly rewarded. Look for unique ways to please your family and friends. Your eye for beauty could land you in hot water if you are not more discreet!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): An imaginative approach to recreation makes you the life of the party. Although someone urges you to make a romantic commitment, you may not be ready. Stand your ground. Be kind but firm.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Family and community affairs dominate today. You find yourself lending a helping hand. Loved one again expresses a desire to try something new. Look beyond surface appearances.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Resourcefulness and patience are essential when dealing with difficult relatives. A weekend project benefits from teamwork. Enlist the aid of a restless teen-ager.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Seize a golden opportunity to combine business and social pursuits. Afternoon hours favor the promotion of a pet project. A new acquaintance will make a much better impression later on.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): The emphasis today is on romance, reunions and restitution. Something you thought lost turns up in a highly unlikely place. The domestic scene will be more harmonious following a frank apology.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Expect several quiet new developments where romance is concerned. The "obvious" answer to a problem is probably not the correct one. Play a waiting game until more information is available.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Attend religious services early in the day. There is new emphasis on doing your best by older relatives. A natural artistic talent calls for further development. Romance deepens.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You detect growing support for your views within the family circle. A brisk walk outdoors could give you a new sense of well-being. A special hobby provides pure delight. Relax at home tonight.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Investigate some out-of-the-way places where you can entertain your loved ones. Nothing happens by chance where romance is concerned. Be a little bolder.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Happiness and harmony mark a family reunion. Even if a loved one tends to see you as larger than life, be careful not to lose your perspective. Hold tight to your purse strings.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A long shot pays off big! You bask in the attention of loving friends and relatives. A chum asks for a reference or recommendation. Beware of storm clouds on the romantic horizon.

Most declarers become disconcerted, to say the least, when they learn of a bad trump break. That's equivalent to playing on with one foot in the grave. Keep your cool and see what can be done to circumvent what fate might have in store.

With no fit yet established, South elected to make a simple two-club rebid at his second turn. But when North took a jump preference in response, South launched into Blackwood and settled in a small slam on learning an ace was missing.

West led a diamond, taken in the closed hand. It seemed like clear sailing until declarer saw East discard a diamond on the lead of the ace of hearts. Declarer abandoned trumps in favor of driving out the ace of clubs. West won the first club and continued diamonds.

Since South was forced to ruff, West now held one trump more than declarer. When declarer started to run clubs, West wisely refused to ruff, instead discarding three spades. There was now no way declarer could stop West from scoring a trump via a spade ruff.

Declarer was just one card away from landing his slam. Since dummy could discard only three times on clubs, that meant that dummy held one spade too many, and the way to get rid of it was simple enough. Before starting to run the club suit, declarer should have cashed one high spade before overtaking the queen of clubs. That would have rendered the defense helpless. If West ruffs while the clubs are run, declarer overruffs in dummy, draws the outstanding trumps and takes the rest of the tricks with high cards in hand and the spade winner on the board. If West refuses to ruff, all of dummy's remaining spades go away on the clubs, and declarer scores his slam on a high crossruff at the end.

Child's Play gets grant of $13,735

ODESSA — This year's Child's Play, set for April 1-28, will include an educational guide prepared with a $13,735 grant from Ronald McDonald Children's Charities.

Child's Play is a project designed by the Junior League of Odessa with the objective of bringing the arts to the children and families of the Permian Basin. The grant enabled Junior League of Odessa to develop and provide the educational guide which includes information on each art form as well as material on the current year's program.

Child's Play 1991 collection includes an art exhibit at the Art Institute for the Permian Basin, four matinee performances by the Kaleidoscope Company of the Permian Playhouse, a Saturday morning jazz concert presented by the West Texas Jazz Society and a Sunday afternoon concert by the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale.

Tickets to Child's Play '91, which will admit a child or adult to all four events, are available for $5 at the Permian Playhouse, 1-362-2329.

Authors find Reagan years less rosy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Now that former President Ronald Reagan is on record with his version of the history he helped make in "An American Life" (Simon & Schuster), other writers are beginning to come in with their assessments.

And, if Haynes Johnson's book, "Sleepwalking Through History: America in the Reagan Years" (Norton) is any guide, they will present a less rosy picture.

Reagan, whose first autobiographical book, "Where's the Rest of Me?" was unpresidential and entertaining, has churned out more than 700 pages of well-worn anecdotes and lackluster prose that add little to knowledge and less to his reputation as a raconteur.

His book is at odds with Johnson's in tone and on some of the facts. Still to come are volumes by Johnson's Washington Post colleague Lou Cannon, who has written two occasionally critical books on Reagan's earlier career, and Edmund Morris, who reportedly has been given complete freedom as the authorized biographer.

As his title suggests, Johnson does not share Reagan's vision of an America that regained its bearings and came to new life during his administration. In fact, the author is sharply critical of the 40th president in both domestic and foreign policy, and paints harrowing pictures of the savings-and-loan and other scandals that Reagan ignores.

'Figaro' opera will broadcast live from stage

Mozart's "Le Nozze di Figaro" will be broadcast live from the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House at 12:30 p.m. Central Time Saturday over the Texaco-Metropolitan Opera International Radio Network. It will be heard locally over radio station KCRS.

Felicity Lott is heard in her Met broadcast debut as the Countess, with Marie McLaughlin as Susanna, Frederica von Stade as Cherubino, Samuel Ramey as Figaro and Andreas Schmidt as Count Almaviva. James Conlon conducts, and the announcer for the broadcast is Peter Allen.

During the first intermission, "Opera News on the Air" returns with London-based critic, author and lecturer, Charles Osborne, who will give an appreciation of Mozart.

Panelists on "Texaco's Opera Quiz," heard during the second intermission, will be Bruce Burroughs, editor of "Opera Quarterly"; Speight Jenkins, general director of the Seattle Opera; and Osborne.

Quizmaster will be Edward Downes.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Luchsingers will appear at rodeo

ODESSA — When Paul and Susie Luchsinger appear during the three nights of the National Intercollegiate Rodeo Association Southwest Regional Roder, Thursday through Saturday, at Ector County Coliseum, it won't be the first time they've been in West Texas.

Mrs. Luchsinger, sister of singer Reba McEntire, has family and friends in Midland. Lucksinger, a member of the Professional Rodeo Cowboy Association since 1978, regularly has attended the Sandhills Hereford and Quarter Horse Show and Rodeo. A five-time national finalist in steer wrestling, Luchsinger has chosen to devote most of his time to Psalms Ministries, which he and his wife founded.

When the couple were married in 1981, he was on the rodeo circuit and she was traveling with her sister.

"The couple grew tired of the separations their careers demanded and decided to found the ministry which is their primary focus today," said Jim Watkins, Odessa College's rodeo coach. Luchsinger and Watkins first met through the Sandhills rodeo some 14 years ago.

"Susie sings and Paul shares his personal testimony during their program which Paul describes as 'showing that being a Christian is fun and exciting. It's not something to be ashamed of, and it's not just for church.'"

The rodeo is hosted by the OC Rodeo Club, Tickets, priced at $5 for adults and $3 for senior citizens and children under 12, are on sale at Luskey's, Midland and Odessa, T-Bar-H Western Wear and Wood's Boots, both in Odessa. Tickets also are available at the coliseum box office.

On Thursday, for every two cans of food donated to the Permian Basin Food Bank, $2 will be taken off the $5 ticket price and $1 will be taken off for one can of food.

For more information call the OC Rodeo Club. 1-335-6433.

Fourth concert set

The fourth concert in the Thouvenel String Quartet's series is set for 8 p.m. Saturday at Midland College's Allison Fine Arts Auditorium and at 3 p.m. March 24 at Odessa's Art Institute for the Permian Basin.

Vanderkooi

The program will feature two string quartets: String Quartet in G Major, Opus 18, No. 2 by Beethoven, and String Quartet in C Major, Opus 163 by Schubert. Both performances are sponsored by a grant from Texaco.

Performing with the quartet will be cellist David Vanderkooi, artist-in-residence at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas, and a member of the Nevada Fine Arts Trio.

A native of Galveston, Vanderkooi studied at the Eastman School of Music as a cello student of Gabor Rejto and served as principal cellist of the Oklahoma City Symphony. His academic career includes faculty positions at the University of Oklahoma, Oklahoma City University and Vanderbilt University. Vanderkooi has appeared as guest of the Thouvenel String Quartet on two occasions.

Now in its 15th year, the Thouvenel String Quartet, Artists-in-Residence with the Midland-Odessa Symphony, has performed on numerous occasions in Europe and made two tours of China, one which included a performance in Lhasa, Tibet for former President Jimmy Carter.

Honors the quartet has received include top prize in the Weiner International String Quartet Competition, being rated "Musicians of the Month" in Musical America, being named "Critic's Choice" in the Village Voice in New York City and performing on NBC's "Today Show." In addition, the quartet received a National Endowment for the Arts consortium grant to co-commission and perform new works by Elliott Carter, Milton Babbitt and Mel Powell, an NEA grant to commission and premiere the Eighth Quartet of Ernest Krenek and touring grants from the Mid-America Arts Alliance and the Texas Commission on the Arts.

This month the quartet performed a concert at the San Francisco Conservatory of Music. While the quartet was there, the members also gave a master class.

Quartet members are principal players with the MOS and teach privately in the Permian Basin area.

Concert tickets, priced at $7.50 general admission and $5 for senior citizens and students, may be purchased through the symphony office or at the door. For more information call 563-5269.

State book earns honors

DALLAS — An entry from the fledgling Dallas publisher, Chama Press, is the only Texas book on the honors list of the first annual Carl Hertzog Award for Excellence in Book Design, a national competition sponsored by the Associates fo the University Library of the University of Texas at El Paso, said a spokesperson from Chama Press.

"Artistry in Single Action," is a historical work by Halton Henderson of Dallas and has a foreword by the distinguished Texas author and historian J. Evetts Haley of Midland.

"Artistry in Single Action," is the first book published by Chama Press, earned an honorable mention for printer David Holman of Wind River Press, Austin, and designer Pricilla Spitler of Booklab, Austin, the bookbinder.

The awards program was established to commemorate the accomplishments of the late book designer and printer, Carl Hertzog of El Paso, whose work gained nation-wide acclaim.

The competition drew 111 entries from large and small book publishers throughout the country. A $1,000 prize and four honorable mentions were awarded. Winner of the prize and the bronze medallion was Gerald Lange of the USC Fine Arts Press at the University of Southern California for "The Letter of Columbus."

Children's artist to sing

Joe Scruggs, well known children's recording artist, will appear at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., in two concerts March 24.

Children under 8 must be accompanied by an adult. Showtimes are 2 and 4 p.m.

Katy Linehan, owner of Upstairs, Downstairs/Next Door, is sponsoring the performances. Proceeds will go to benefit the Permian Basin Child Abuse Program of Family Services.

"Scruggs writes music and lyrics that delight children, parents and teachers alike because his songs capture family life's day to day trials, sprinkling them with delightful humour," Mrs. Linehan said.

Two of his tapes have been named Parents Choice Honor Recordings by the Parents' Choice Foundation.

Tickets, priced at $6.50, may be purchased at Upstairs, Downstairs/Next Door. For more informaion or for mail orders call 683-4101.

Danny Feller to sing

Danny Feller performs at The Big Eagle Club Saturday.

Showtime is 9 p.m.

Feller, now 32, began his singing career when he was 5 with The Feller Family Singers, a family gospel singing group which performed for 10 years. At one time, the Feller Family Singers opened for Bob Hope.

Feller, a fourth generation Texan from Harper who lives at Hunt, placed first with judges in the "You Can Be a Star" television show. Those judges were Lynn Anderson and the president and vice president of Polygram Records. He also appeared and performed some of his original music on "The Carolyn Jackson Show," located in Austin.

Feller has opened for Darrell McCall, Johnny Bush and Bill Green. He has released two albums, "First Time Out" and "Remember the Alimony," both recorded at the Reflections Studio, Nashville, Tenn.

'Fiddler' gets extension
