Keating sentence

LOS ANGELES — A judge sentenced Charles Keating Jr. to 12½ years in prison Thursday for looting Lincoln Savings and swindling small investors. She called the crime "staggering in its proportion."

The sentence will run concurrently with a 10-year state prison sentence Keating already is serving, said U.S. District Judge Mariana R. Pfaelzer./8A

Student opens fire

OGDEN, Utah — A university student accused of harassing a fellow student and his wife opened fire with a handgun during his grievance hearing Thursday, wounding three people before a policeman shot him dead.

The hearing in the Weber State University student union building was ending when Mark Duong stood up and opened fire with the semiautomatic weapon, Weber County Sheriff Craig Dearden said.

Q. Why is a fire engine or ambulance sometimes at the grocery store?

A. The firefighters purchase food for the meals they will eat during their 24-hour shift. The firefighters decide what they will buy according to the money they contribute to the food fund from their own pockets. While at the store, the firefighters remain in service and respond to any emergency immediately.

Questions about emergency medical services or firefighting should be sent to: Lights & Siren, P.O. Box 1152, Midland 79702-1152.

CEDs, homestead exemptions to be dissolved

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff writer

The Andrews-Midland County Education District will officially dissolve Aug. 31. And, taxpayers may not be aware of it, but the generous homestead tax exemptions voters approved will also be dissolved.

When voting for CED exemptions in the Aug. 10, 1991, special election, voters approved a 20 percent homestead exemption for property taxpayers. The 20 percent was deducted from the market value of a home before tax rates were figured. For example, a home valued at $55,000 would have received a CED exemption of $11,000.

Nonetheless, property taxpayers will still receive a Midland Independent School District homestead tax exemption of 10 percent and the state-mandated $5,000 exemption.

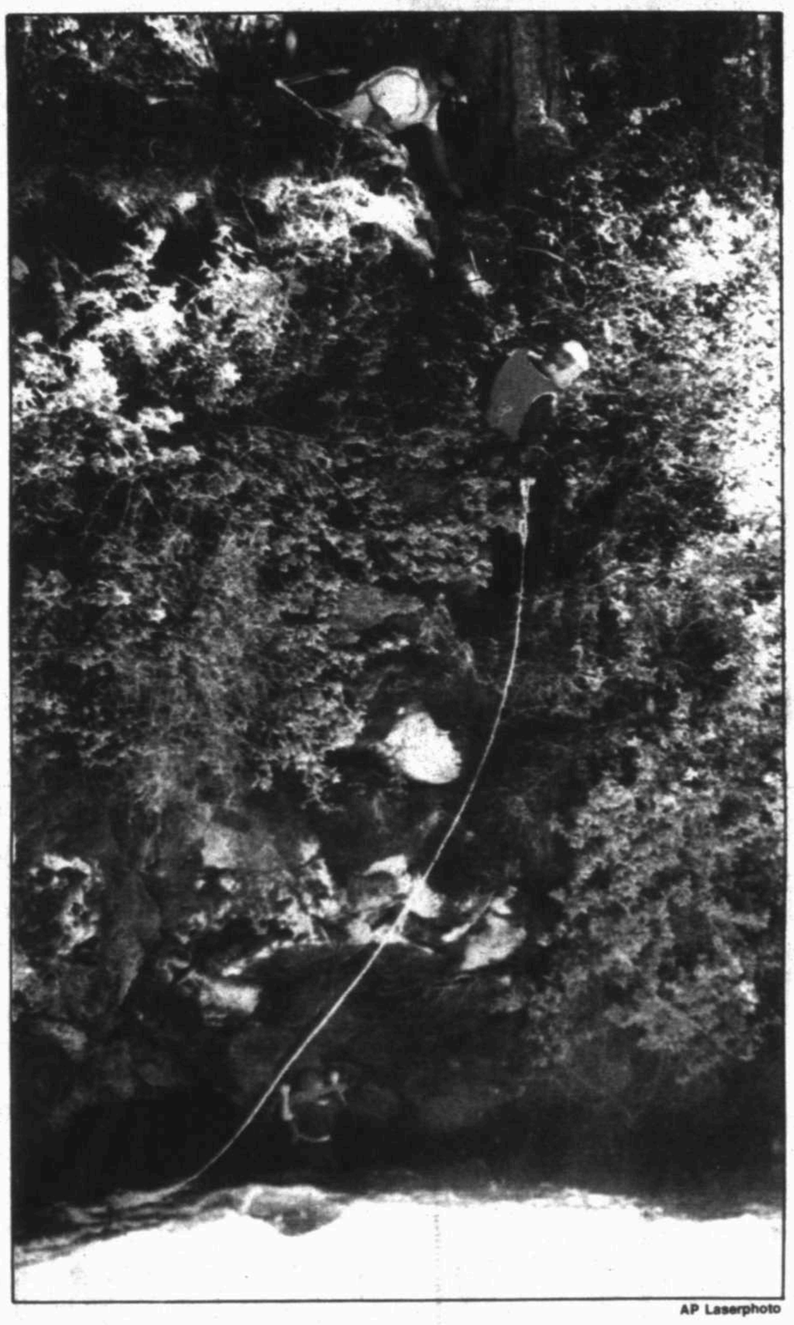

"Persons 65 and over get a better break," said Ron Stegall, chief appraiser for Midland County Tax Appraisal Office. He said there are further exemptions for retirees and the disabled, including a tax ceiling.

"The MISD tax ceiling is for persons who have turned 65," Stegall said, For example, he said, "if you paid $600 in property taxes to MISD the year you turned 65, your taxes will never go over that. It's an upper limit."

MISD business manager Don Furgeson said the school district was notified it could change its exemption; however it needed to be changed by April 30, and legislators didn't decide on school funding until May.

"It's a catch-22 situation," said MISD school board

Yeltsin joins leaders, gets $3 billion aid

■ Group of Seven closes 19th annual summit with vague promises to spur economic growth, trade.

Associated Press

TOKYO — Western leaders welcomed Russian President Boris Yeltsin as a quasi-partner today, offering $3 billion in aid to help his fledging democracy. They closed their 19th annual summit with vague promises to spur economic growth and global trade.

"I'm very pleased," President Clinton said after the reading of the final communique.

Clinton joined the leaders of Britain, Canada, France, Germany, Italy and Japan at Akasaka Palace to approve a communique urging the world's three economic superpowers — the United States, Japan and Germany — to press ahead with inititives to combat sluggish growth.

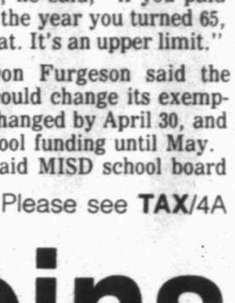

The leaders listened through earphones to translations as Japanese Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa read their economic statement. Yeltsin, meanwhile, toured a Sony showroom as he awaited a post-summit audience with the Group of Seven.

Yeltsin planned to press for recognition of Russia as an equal partner and the removal of Cold War restrictions on trade, said his spokesman, Vyacheslav Kostikov. He said Russia also wants to change the focus of assistance from humanitarian aid to investment.

Princess dines with presidents

Princess Masako

The former diplomat, who lived in Moscow as a young girl, conversed easily in English and Russian with her two dinner partners. But there were few immediate clues to what was said.

"I had dinner with her. We talked a lot," Clinton told a small group of American reporters after the lavish banquet for leaders of the world's seven richest industrial countries.

He had only one more thing to say about Japan's future empress: "I liked her a lot."

Masako married Crown Prince Naruhito, the heir to Japan's ancient Chrysanthemum Throne, in an elaborate palace wedding June 9.

Gridlock in skies links flood, heat wave

By William K. Stevens
N.Y. Times News Service

At first glance, the catastrophic floods of the Midwest and the miserable but not-so-unusual heat wave in the East may seem unconnected, remote from each other. But they are part of one gigantic continental weather pattern that shows no sign of breaking up any time soon, though there are hints that it might moderate next week.

The floods may owe their extraordinary character, meteorologists say, partly to the delayed impact of two global climatic events of last year: El Nino, the pool of warm water that develops every two to seven years in the eastern Pacific Ocean off South America, setting off a chain reaction that reverberates around the world, and Mount Pinatubo, the volcano in the Philippines that erupted in June 1991, thrusting a cooling haze into the atmosphere.

Both El Nino and the Pinatubo haze appear to be dissipating rapidly, but over the last year they produced conditions that combined with others to saturate the soil of the upper Mississippi valley with so much moisture that when this month's rains came, the water had no place to go. What followed was the kind of flood that comes only two or three times a century, sending the Mississippi

Mother loses last of 3 sons, her faith during hail of gunfire

By Tom Hays
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — After her first two sons were slain, Frances Davis tried to wrap a security blanket around her last one. She gave him cab fare so he wouldn't ride the subway. When he was out, she made him call home constantly.

"I kind of treated him like a baby," she said. "When you have three and then you have one, then you put all your hopes and dreams into that one."

The hopes and dreams ended this week, in cruelly familiar fashion.

Frankie Davis, 18, was shot down Tuesday outside his grandmother's housing project, on the same street in the Brooklyn neighborhood of Bedford-Stuyvesant where both his brothers were killed. The hail of gunfire also seriously injured a 10-year-old girl who was skipping rope.

In 1987, Frankie's 20-year-old brother, Raleak, was shot to death 50 feet from the spot

High-dollar Lotto draws $23.1 million; winners to go fishing

AUSTIN (AP) — Owners of two of the three winning lotto tickets in the record $48.9 million jackpot claimed their prize Thursday and put out the "Gone Fishin" sign.

Lynette Nichols of Dallas, and Rick Wilson of Lonoke, Ark. each won $16.3 million before federal taxes.

A third winning ticketholder from Corpus Christi had not been confirmed yet, lottery officials said.

Mrs. Nichols, a 44-year-old bookkeeper and secretary at her brother's roofing company, said she plans to buy fishing boats for her husband, Jimmy, and parents, William and Ruth.

And Wilson, 37, said he plans on taking a long fishing trip. "I'm going fishing around the world. The Bahamas, Alaska. Anywhere where there is a fish in the water. That's what retired people do."

Wilson, a bachelor, said when he found out he matched all six

Some observers believe economic summit is being oversold

By Bernard D. Kaplan
Hearst News Service

PARIS — While some economic summiteers are proclaiming the Tokyo agreement to cut certain tariffs as a breakthrough, many experts in Europe see it as only a modest step that's been extravagantly oversold by President Clinton and other beleaguered world leaders.

A considerable divide separates those like Clinton and U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor, who described the unexpected accord as "the biggest tariff cutting agreement in history," from trade experts here who characterized it as welcome but not a watershed.

The tariff pact covers a wide range of manufactured goods including beer, medical equipment and furniture.

British economist Vincent Cable, a leading authority on international trade, called it a good agreement as far as it goes. But he pointed out that its main tangible accomplishment was to reduce tariffs on products on which import levies were already uniformly low. Other more extensive tariff cuts involved only a small number of items, he said.

On non-tariff obstacles to world trade — the decisive issue in dealing with Japan and some other countries — the much-vaunted accord reached by negotiators from the United States, the European Community, Canada and Japan had virtually nothing to say, Cable emphasized.

Some critics assert that many world leaders were under political pressure to bring something positive home, or else.

■ News Analysis

Significantly, a spokesman for the French foreign office here rated the deal as only a "small step forward." He echoed his boss, Foreign Minister Alain Juppe, who in Tokyo was alone in playing down its magnitude.

Juppe dismissed it as more of a report on the objectives to be sought in finalizing the long-stalled 114-nation negotiations on a new world trade treaty than as a concrete agreement of far-reaching importance.

The French government's conscious effort to pour a little iced Dubonnet over the Tokyo proceedings can't be taken lightly.

For the past seven years, France has been the biggest obstacle to agreement on clearing away tariffs and export subsidies for foodstuffs. The agricultural issue, in turn, has been the biggest obstacle to the all-embracing world treaty. But in Tokyo, this thorny controversy, which also includes Japan's near-ban on U.S. rice, wasn't even brought up.

Britain's London Daily Telegraph termed the absence of any mention of the agricultural problem as "ominous." It said no agreement that skirts the issue could be a breakthrough.

Suspicions are rampant here that the deal was orchestrated chiefly to bail out the leaders of the seven governments present in Tokyo. All of them are under withering political fire on their domestic fronts and urgently needed to take home something that looked good.

Hurricane heads to sea after mauling Mexico

PUERTO VALLARTA, Mexico (AP) — Tropical Storm Calvin headed out to sea on Thursday after mauling most of Mexico's west coast. At least 32 people were reported killed during a three-day hurricane rampage that flooded rivers, ruined crops and snarled communications.

Mexico's Defense Department said 42,063 people were evacuated or forced out of their homes in 11 states.

Calvin, once a hurricane packing winds of up to 110 mph, skirted the beach resort of Puerto Vallarta late Wednesday, then headed northwest toward the tip of Baja California, losing strength as it went.

At around 11 a.m. (2 p.m. EDT), it was down to 40 mph and downgraded to a weak tropical storm by the U.S. National Weather Service in Miami, Fla.

The area around Puerto Vallarta was spared, and the sky began clearing Thursday after heavy rain the night before. A few mudslides were visible along the coastal road 60 miles south to the town of Chamela, but no other major damage was seen.

The federal government declared much of the coastline an emergency area. Rescue agencies and the military ferried food and emergency supplies by helicopter.

But pelting rain in many areas hampered rescue efforts along the coast, from the Gulf of Tehuantepec north to Sinaloa state.

In the latest deaths, a 7-year-old girl was killed by a mudslide in Colima state Wednesday; a slide killed a man and his son in Acapulco; and a peasant trying to ford the swollen Panuco River drowned in Puebla.

Civil defense officials said the death toll could rise as telephone communications were restored. Many said they were out of touch with rescue teams in the field.

Power and telephone service were knocked out in scores of communities along the coast, and mud and rock slides blocked roads to many of them. Thousands of acres of banana, coconut and bean crops were ruined.

Dozens of pleasure boats were battered at their moorings in luxury resorts like Huatulco, Acapulco, Manzanillo, Playa Azul and Ixtapa-Zihuatanejo.

The storm tilted the 23,000-ton Norwegian tanker Betula, grounded on a sandbank near Playa Azul, but the navy insisted that none of the 4,000 tons of highly corrosive sulfuric acid in its hold had leaked.

The Betula unloaded 5,000 tons of acid at the nearby industrial port of Lazaro Cardenas last week, but its pumping mechanism broke down and the crew were taken off the ship.

A tug was taking it out to sea when the tow line snapped, and Betula was adrift for more than a day before it grounded.

Two of four tanks holding the sulfuric acid deck broke off the deck Wednesday and floated away, but they were apparently tanks that had been unloaded.

Fishermen in Playa Azul, meanwhile, held protests Tuesday and Wednesday charging that their livelihood was being endangered by fishing bans around the tanker.

LOSS: Woman loses last of 3 sons

(From 1A)

where Frankie was killed. The middle son, Andrew, was 22 when he was cut down by a bullet on the same block in 1991.

Mrs. Davis, 43, insists all her sons died in random shootings and never were involved in drugs or carried guns. "They had better sense than that," she said.

But police said Thursday that Frankie Davis got off a few shots of his own in a battle with three to four youths seeking revenge for a past dispute. And they could not immediately confirm the mother's accounts of the first two murders.

What is certain is that all three victims met a violent end in a community where unemployment is high and morale is low. Soaring homicide rates among young black men have pushed the life expectancy of all black males down to less than 65 years, 10 years below the average for all Americans.

Relatives of the three brothers gathered at their grandmother's home Wednesday afternoon to console Frances Davis.

'We have more shoot'em-up here than anywhere in the world. They don't care about children; they don't care about nothing. This is a shoot'em-up gallery.'

—Clara Saunders
grandmother

Outside, barefoot kids eating grape Popsicles inspected the score of quarter-size pockmarks pounded into steel security doors by the previous day's gunplay.

Inside, no tears were shed.

Mrs. Davis' sisters watched "All My Children" and braided their daughters' hair. The grandmother, 63-year-old Clara Saunders, wandered around the apartment in slippers and railed about the drug dealers holding the neighborhood hostage.

"We have more shoot'em-up here than anywhere in the world," Saunders said, her index finger stabbing the air. "They don't care about children; they don't care about nothing. This is a shoot'em-up gallery."

Mrs. Davis, mellowed by sedatives, reclined on a twin bed in a back room and gazed out from under heavy eyelids. She talked about her family's history in a soft voice.

A native of Brownsville, Brooklyn, Mrs. Davis grew up during a time when if "you had a fight, you had it with fists," she said.

She had her first two sons with a boyfriend she said she no longer keeps in touch with. Frankie's father, Frank Sr., mostly was absent too, and died in 1989 after a long illness.

The eldest brother, Raleak, became the man of the house, watching out for Frankie and taking him to movies and baseball games. When he died, Frankie turned to Andrew. When he was gone, Frankie turned inward.

He dropped out of high school and "became very depressed," his mother said. Mrs. Davis, who quit her job as a secretary and began collecting disability, said she held herself together by joining a support group for mothers of homicide victims. She also watched over her only son.

Recently, she saw improvement. Frankie began to talk about going to college. He stayed out of trouble and read lots of books.

The night before he died he went to his grandmother's house, where the family discussed last-minute details for a trip to Disney World. What exactly happened the next morning — and why — remains unclear.

ROYAL: Princess sits in seat of honor

(From 1A)

The crown princess is a Harvard graduate who studied at Oxford, as Clinton did, and is fluent in French as well as English and Russian. For the two-hour dinner, her former employers at the Foreign Ministry placed her strategically between their two most prominent guests.

It was the 29-year-old princess's first chance to use her diplomatic skills since joining the royal family.

But it was far from the first time she's been in the spotlight. Masako has dominated the covers of Japanese women's magazines and afternoon gossip shows on TV ever since the royal engagement was announced in January.

Her intelligence and ability have prompted frequent comparisons to Hillary Rodham Clinton, another banquet guest. Many Japanese have said they hope Masako will bring new life and energy to an imperial family bound by tradition and often cut off from its people.

Unlike Mrs. Clinton, however, Masako has given up her career and adopted the role expected of an imperial princess. That includes walking several steps behind her husband in public and strictly avoiding any comments on politics or controversial social issues.

She appeared at ease with that role Thursday, following her husband's lead in greeting each of the world leaders as limousines whisked them up to the palace entrance surrounded by moats and stone walls.

Instead of the businesslike, dress-for-success fashions she once wore, her attire was strictly imperial — ankle-length dress of apple green and bodice of appliqued pink, diamonds glittering from her neck.

In keeping with palace custom, the 110 guests at the banquet dined on a seven-course meal of French rather than Japanese cuisine. The menu featured medallions of sole, lamb chops with cherry sauce, seasonal salad, and a dessert of bavarois aux fruits, a coffee-flavored cake with whipped cream and fruit.

For those who wanted it, Japanese rice wine was available.

Before the dinner, the guests were treated to an exotic program of "gagaku," or ancient court music.

The dog days of summer have descended upon Texas and Thursday was no exception as all regions posted sweltering temperatures.

Warm, humid air from the south continued to flow into North Texas, producing a stagnant air mass that kept precipitation out of the area.

Skies across South Texas were partly cloudy while gusty winds from the south blew over the middle coast to the Hill Country at about 20 mph.

Temperatures were in the 90s region-wide and are expected to remain so through today.

The rest of today's Soutth Texas forecast includes partly cloudy skies and the chance of isolated showers around the middle coast.

In West Texas skies were sunny to mostly sunny as temperatures soared to 102 in El Paso and remained mostly in the 90s elsewhere.

Mostly sunny days are predicted through today, but thunderstorms could come back to pound most areas Friday night.

Lows are expected in the 60s and 70s and with highs today mainly in the 90s, except for the Big Bend River Valleys, where the mercury could hit the 105-degree mark.

PICK: Lotto winners claim their part of record jackpot numbers, he immediately decided to quit his job installing aircraft interiors at Chrysler Technologies in Waco.

(From 1A)

After picking up his lottery check, he said he was going to Dallas to buy a Corvette and then drive home to Arkansas.

The winners received checks of $816,396, an amount they will receive annually for the next 19 years.

Mrs. Nichols used the "quick-pick" option which allows the lottery computer to randomly produce six numbers, while Wilson rolled dice to get his picks.

The winning numbers drawn Wednesday night were 7-8-15-42-46-47.

Mrs. Nichols, who has six children, said despite her newfound riches, she has no plans to quit her job.

She said she was playing bingo when she found out she had won Lotto.

"I looked at my tickets, and looked across at my mom and said, 'I got all six numbers on the Lotto.' Then I jumped up and screamed, 'I got it.' It was better than yelling 'Bingo,' " she said.

Her husband was fishing in a bass tournament when he heard the news. He came in third in the tournament.

Three hundred people who matched five of the six winning numbers were to receive $2,731 each, while 19,373 players who picked four correct numbers won $152 each, lottery officials said.

The pot returns to $3 million for Saturday's drawing.

Thanks to the high-dollar drawing, $23.1 million worth of tickets were sold Wednesday, making it the second-best day in lottery history.

The single-day sales record of $24 million was set May 1 when the jackpot reached $48.6 million. That pool was split by 14 winners.

END: Yeltsin joins leaders; summit closes

(From 1A)

In large measure the summit document sought to accentuate the positive.

The leaders endorsed Clinton's proposal for a "jobs summit" in the United States this fall, bringing together top economic officials from around the world to seek remedies for global unemployment problems.

"More than 23 million people are unemployed in our countries. That is unacceptable," they said.

Yeltsin joined the leaders as a quasi partner over dinner Thursday night and returned today for three hours of talks after the summit's close.

The summit's communique praised "courageous reform efforts under the leadership of President Yeltsin and supported by the Russian people" in an April referendum. It called for tougher efforts by Russia to reduce high inflation and big budget deficits.

They also expressed concern over ocean dumping of radioactive wastes by Russia.

Yeltsin wanted assurances that they would live up to promises for $28.4 billion in grants and loans to help his struggling democracy. That package was being formally approved by the leaders.

Clinton claimed success in winning a summit commitment for $500 million in grants as part of a $3 billion aid package for Russia.

Summit nations also endorsed a $3 billion fund to encourage privatization of large state-run enterprises in Russia. And they accepted a suggestion from Yeltsin to set up an office in Moscow as a clearing house for Western aid to make sure that money is not wasted.

The leaders agreed to hold their 20th summit in Naples, Italy, next July.

Security remained tight in case left- or right-wing radicals tried to disrupt the summit.

Police said arsonists scorched the wall of a memorial hall for Commodore Matthew Perry, the American whose gunboats forced Japan to open its markets to the Western world in 1854.

Police said the sabotage could have been the work of anti-American radicals. On Wednesday four projectiles were fired at a U.S. military base near Tokyo, causing no injuries.

The lone lingering mystery of the summit was whether Japan would reverse itself and accept an American plan to slash Tokyo's huge trade surplus in half over the next three years. "I don't want to raise any false hopes," President Clinton said before going to bed Thursday.

Yet, Japanese Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa invited Clinton to dinner tonight, and there was a feeling in the American delegation that he wouldn't have made the gesture if he didn't have something to offer.

Clinton claimed success in winning a summit commitment for $500 million in grants as part of a $3 billion aid package for Russia. The president didn't mention it, but he originally had asked for $4 billion. And more than $1 billion of the package was recycled from earlier pledges.

Keeping his eye on economic problems back home, Clinton cast the Russian aid as a job generator for America. "There's a lot of business to be done in Russia by Americans to create American jobs . . . This is a huge new market for American goods and services."

Midway through the three-day meeting, Yeltsin joined the leaders at an elegant dinner with Japan's royal family at the Imperial Palace. The guests were treated to a performance of ancient Japanese court music.

Though not a full partner in the summit proceedings, Yeltsin moved confidently among the leaders of the United States, Britain, Canada, France, Germany, Italy and Japan.

Crown Princess Masako, a commoner who wed into the world's oldest imperial lineage last month, sat between the American and Russian presidents.

"He's in good humor tonight," Clinton said of Yeltsin later. "He is in very good shape now, since the election" in April when Yeltsin triumphed in a referendum on the president's powers and policies.

It appeared unlikely that the Group of Seven nations would expand to give Yeltsin full membership.

LINK: Same system connects heat, flood outside its banks on a broad front.

The immediate cause of this week's sustained rains in the Midwest and the heat in the Northeast is essentially gridlock in the skies. A massive system of high pressure is stalled over the Atlantic Coast. Its winds pump moisture from the Gulf of Mexico into the Midwest, feeding the rainstorms, and warmth from the gulf and deep South into the Northeast, sustaining the heat wave. The high-pressure system also prevents cold fronts from following their customary path into the East.

On Thursday, residents and emergency workers along the upper Mississippi labored to avoid the fate of Keithsburg, Ill., where, The Associated Press reported, flood waters overwhelmed workers struggling to reinforce a levee to put part of the town of 750 under 20 feet of water. With more rain forecast for the rest of the week, the flooding has claimed at least 16 lives. Federal officials estimate that it has caused more than $1 billion in damage to crops and property so far.

"Some locations have already had their highest floods of record," said Frederick J. Gadomski, a meteorologist at the Pennsylvania State University Weather Group. A 1973 flood there, believed to be the most destructive, caused property damage amounting to nearly $4 billion in today's dollars.

This week's weather pattern, which snapped into place in late June, is characterized by a stronger-than-normal jet stream, the west-to-east flow of air at an altitude of 20,000 feet, which has brought recurrent clusters of thunderstorms to the upper Mississippi valley. The jet stream carry from the West, Gadomski said. They are merely "dry little whirls" high in the atmosphere, but when they move east and collide with the moisture-laden high pressure system, the little whirls become big rainstorms.

The high pressure system diverts the jet stream, with its cooling air, into northern Canada. What remains in the Northeast is a dome of hot air made all the hotter by circulating winds bringing up warmth from the gulf region. Result: Heat wave in the East.

While the heat has created general misery and set records in some places, "we're not stacking up even close to the most recent summer of real heat in the United States, which is 1988," Gadomski said. If this heat wave extends much into next week, "it will start to achieve some unusual status."

So far, he said, it is an average heat wave of a duration and intensity that has occurred in the Northeast dozens of times. It is getting a lot of attention because last summer was so cool, with record low temperatures set in the Midwest and near-record lows in the Northeast. Some climatologists, though they say they cannot prove it, believe the Pinatubo haze was responsible for the coolness of 1992.

The heat this year has specific causes that are not likely to be related to any general warming of the globe, said Jim Wagner, a meteorologist at the Natio al Weather Service's Climate Analysis Center at Camp Springs, Md. Cool areas and warm areas are "just about balancing out" this summer, he said.

Nonetheless some climatologists say there is an overall warming trend that will resume once the Pinatubo haze has fully dissipated, possibly next year. They see the trend as a result of emissions like carbon dioxide that trap heat in the atmosphere. In the two years just before the Mt. Pinatubo eruption, the earth's average surface temperature set records.

TAX: CEDs, exemptions to be eliminated

(From 1A)

trustee Gary Willis. "The school district's exemption is currently granted at 10 percent. There is not an opportunity to change the exemption this first year. The end result is taxpayers will continue to enjoy some exemptions and we have our hands tied on changing the (district's) exemption."

School districts like MISD, which benefited from the CEDs, may also have to look at raising taxes to generate the same dollars they received from the CEDs.

For example, Stegall said MISD reaped about $11 million from Andrews County last year in the CED set-up.

Andrews collected a 99-cents-on-the-dollar levy, compared to MISD's collection rate of 96 cents on the dollar.

"All things being equal — figuring a tax rate on the same house with the same (market) value, with the same effective tax rate, without the CED, (homestead) property owners will have 10 percent more of the value of a home subject to tax," Willis said.

MISD trustees have discussed raising the tax rate about 6 cents above the effective rate to garner enough funds to staff the two new schools that are to open in August.

Taxpayers were told prior to the bond election — held to fund building three new schools (Coleman, Greathouse and Abell) — that taxes would increase to pay more teachers to fill the schools and to pay the district's debt service.

While the latest school funding plan — the local option plan — has generated some opposition as to questions of its constitutionality, Willis said he is pleased that state District Judge Scott McCown "will hold hearings on its constitutionality, but will let it ride for the current school year so we can open the schools."

Researchers: 'Smart bomb' finds, kills cancer cells

By Paul Recer
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Researchers experimenting with lab animals say they have developed a medical "smart bomb" that seeks out cancer and then unloads a chemical to kill the tumor cells.

Pamela A. Trail, a scientist at the Bristol-Myers Squibb Pharmaceutical Research Center in Princeton, N.J., said Thursday that the core of the so-called "smart bomb" is an antibody that has a natural tendency to find and attach to human cancer cells.

The antibody has been chemically linked, she said, to an anti-cancer drug called doxorubicin. The antibody and the drug combine to make what is called an immunoconjugate that the researchers have named BR96-DOX.

Trail said that when BR96-DOX is injected, it circulates in the blood until it finds and links up with an antigen found most frequently on the surface of human cancer cells. She said the BR96-DOX is naturally taken into cell and it is then that the smart bomb goes off.

"It is the doxorubicin which is released inside the cell that actually kills the cell," said Trail.

The researcher said that the drug was able to achieve cancer cures in a high percentage of mice and rats that had been implanted with human lung, colon and breast cancer.

A report on the research is to be published Friday in the journal Science.

Dr. Louis M. Weiner, a researcher at the Fox Chase Cancer Center in Philadelphia, said there has been other research using antibody cancer therapy, but that "very few have been associated with as convincing preclinical evidence of anti-tumor activity."

He said it was "particularly impressive" that the animals used in Trail's study bore tumors that had spread and, thus, more closely mimicked cancer in humans.

"Nonetheless, the treatment was quite effective in curing the majority of the animals treated," said Weiner.

Dr. Mark Ratain, an oncologist at the University of Chicago, said the fact that the researchers reported such a high rate of cure among the test animals "was very exciting."

Trail said that the study showed that although BR96-DOX did attack some normal tissue, the test animals could easily tolerate high doses of the drug.

"The damage that may have been done to normal tissues was entirely reversible," she said.

Enemy forces surround battered Georgian city

Shevardnadze, on defense, says defeat is possible.

SUKHUMI, Georgia (AP) — Abkhazian separatists bore down on this provincial capital Thursday, completing their encirclement of the city and capturing the hydroelectric plant that supplies its power.

Artillery shells exploded across this Black Sea resort, and Georgian officials said ethnic Abkhazian fighters were within three miles of the city.

Georgian leader Eduard Shevardnadze, who came to Sukhumi this week to take control of its defense, said the situation was critical. "One cannot exclude the possibility of defeat," he said.

The battle for Sukhumi has raged for days as the focus of the Abkhazians' campaign to break away from this former Soviet republic.

Shevardnadze said at least 40 Georgian soldiers died when the separatists overran the power plant on a hill outside the city before dawn. The city was without power and water.

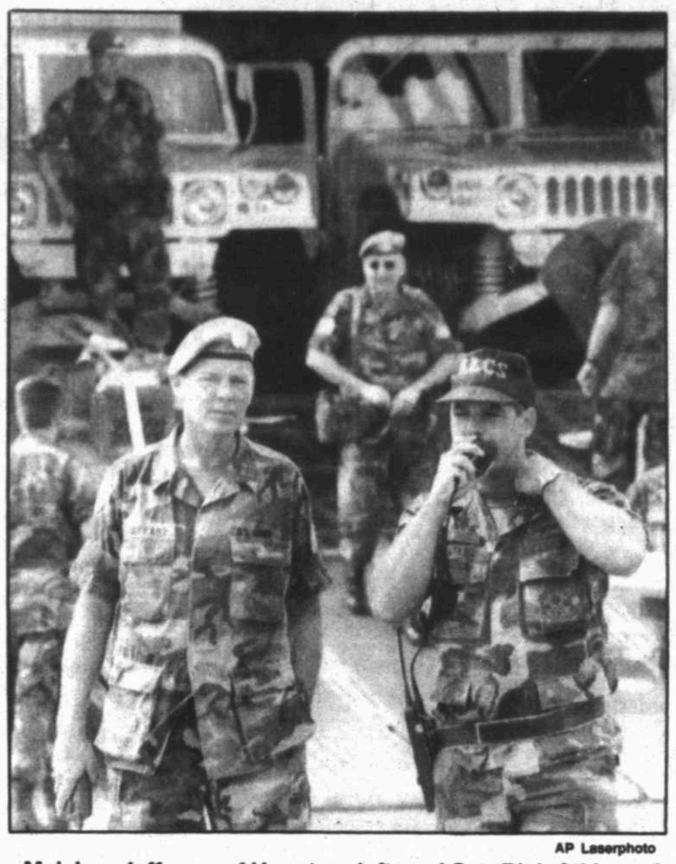

"Abkhazian forces have now completely encircled the city," said the head of the local government, Tamaz Nadareishvili. "We expect a full-scale attack within 48 hours."

While fighting to cut off all land routes into the city, Abkhazian forces have tried to attack from the sea several times. Georgian artillery repelled another sea assault Thursday morning, the Georgian armed forces press center said.

The week-old offensive has brought some of the worst fighting in Abkhazia's 11-month war. Both sides claim to have inflicted heavy casualties on the other. A U.N. envoy, Lt. Col. Per-Erik Korstrom of Sweden, has said Georgian officials told him that up to 1,000 Georgian soldiers and civilians had been killed.

Officials say about a third of Sukhumi'a pre-war population of 130,000 still live in the town. Women and children crowded the airport Thursday trying to get rides on planes that are the city's last link to the outside.

Diplomats from the United States, France, Russia, Germany, Israel, Iran and the United Nations flew in from Tbilisi, the Georgian capital, to meet with Shevardnadze.

Serbs shrug off Bosnia's refusal to accept accord

'I think we are on threshold of final solution.'

— Slobodan Milosevic, Serb leader

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Serbia's president shrugged off a refusal by Bosnia's Muslims to discuss a Serb-Croat plan dividing Bosnia along ethnic lines, saying Thursday that it was about to be accepted by all who mattered.

But a U.N. mediator who met with Slobodan Milosevic urged the Serbs and Croats to come up with proposals that would be fair to the Muslims. And the leader of Bosnia's Serbs said that Muslim interests were being taken into consideration.

The Bosnian government — which has fought for 16 months for a multi-ethnic, secular state — has refused to accept the plan, which it believes will leave what is left of Bosnia landlocked between hostile neighbors.

"The realistic approach of confederation has won full recognition," Milosevic told reporters, referring to the plan he and Croatian President Franjo Tudjman devised. No details have been made public.

"I think we are on the threshold of the final solution. The main remaining question is the question of maps," he said.

But Stoltenberg, the U.N. mediator, insisted that the discussions, which ended near midnight, were no more than "clarifications" for future negotiations.

Owen, of the European Community, urged Serbia and Croatia to "produce proposals which the world will think are fair to the Muslim population."

Before the meeting, Stoltenberg predicted worsening bloodshed unless the warring factions agreed this month on a settlement. Bosnian Serbs have reportedly set a July 20 deadline for Muslims to accept partition.

"We are at a critical moment," Stoltenberg said as he and Owen began the talks.

According to the Belgrade daily Borba, Karadzic said recently his forces, which already hold 70 percent of Bosnia, will seek to crush all Muslim-led forces unless their leaders accept partition.

Japanese students now fear U.S.

TOKYO (AP) — Fewer Japanese high school students are trying to go abroad to study, apparently frightened by the fatal shooting of a Japanese teen-ager in the United States in October.

The AFS Japan Association said Thursday that only 160 high school students had applied for a one-year study program at foreign high schools, compared with 300 at this stage last year.

The number was not expected to reach last year's total of 700 before applications close Wednesday, said an official at the group, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Each year, AFS Japan sends 360 students to 25 nations, including about 130 to the United States. A total of 220 foreign students, including 30 Americans, come to Japan, the official said.

The official said students and their parents might be cautious after the shooting death of Yoshihiro Hattori, 16, an AFS exchange student who was mistaken for an intruder in Lousiana last Oct. 17.

Hattori apparently did not understand the American slang command to "freeze" after knocking on the wrong door while looking for a Halloween party in Baton Rouge, La. The homeowner who shot him was acquitted.

Clinton scheduled to leave trade summit for South Korea in order to show support

TOKYO (CNS) — President Clinton leaves Japan Saturday for South Korea, where he is expected to reaffirm America's commitment to a military presence there as communist North Korea reportedly continues its nuclear weapons program.

The highlight of Clinton's two-day trip will be a Sunday visit to the Demilitarized Zone (DMZ), which divides the Korean peninsula into Stalinist North and capitalist South.

Other U.S. presidents have visited the DMZ, but White House officials say Clinton will be the first to stand on the border only yards away from stony-faced North Korean sentries toting sidearms.

The president also will address front-line troops who defend South Korea from North Korea's million-plus army.

Back in the capital of Seoul, Clinton will hold talks with South Korean President Kim Young Sam in Seoul and will address the National Assembly.

On the second leg of his first overseas trip as president, Clinton hopes to send the message that he won't diminish the U.S. military role in what is potentially one of the most hostile corners of the world.

"He's going to reaffirm the strong security alliance that we have with South Korea," said a State Department spokesman, "...and the ongoing importance of keeping our troops in South Korea."

The trip may also be Clinton's first chance to hear "Yankee Go Home," shouted to him as commander in chief. Anti-American students in Seoul have promised to hold protests demanding that Washington pull out the 37,000 U.S. troops deployed in the Land of the Morning Calm.

The students are at odds, however, with the Korean government. Seoul seeks Clinton's assurance that the military budget cuts reducing the U.S. military presence across much of Europe won't translate into troop reductions in Korea.

When he arrived in Tokyo earlier this week, Clinton vowed not to reduce U.S. troop levels anytime soon, if at all, in Japan or Korea.

His more immediate concern in Seoul will be the issue of North Korea's alleged efforts to build a nuclear bomb.

North Korea sparked international worries last March when it announced it would become the first nation ever to pull out of the 23-year-old Treaty on Nuclear Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, which has been signed by 155 countries.

Aimed at preventing the spread of nuclear arms, the treaty requires members to abide by rigid limitations on activities that could lead to the development of nuclear bombs.

The United States is leading a global effort to persuade North Korea to reconsider, and to agree to allow international monitors to inspect sites analysts suspect the North Koreans of using to try to build a nuclear bomb.

A third round of talks on the issue is set to begin July 14 in Geneva between U.S. and North Korean officials.

The U.S. intelligence community is divided in its assessment of Pyongyang's nuclear capability. Some analysts believe the North may already have built a nuclear bomb; others doubt it.

Either way, "there seems to be little question that within two years at most they would have that capability," the State Department spokesman said. "This will probably be the single most dangerous national security threat that we face."

Trade pact offers improving outlook

While details of the trade deal worked out between the United States and Japan were not clear as the Group of Seven economic summit was beginning this week in Japan, the fact that it calls for sharp reductions in tariffs on hundreds of manufactured goods and services is indicative of positive movement on trade.

In an environment in which U.S. workers are beginning to feel victimized by "protectionist" practices by the Japanese, there is an understandable overreaction toward retaliatory protectionism that would serve no one's best interests. Yet to prevent that occurrence, there had to be concerted effort by the Japanese to reduce their enormous trade deficit.

President Clinton told the Japanese as much shortly before the trade breakthrough was announced, warning them that the surplus had fueled resentment among American workers and businesses. In reality, the resentment may go even deeper than Clinton suspects. It takes on nationalistic characteristics in some parts of the United States, which is not inherently bad. But if it sparks protectionist sentiments, we're back exactly where we've been the past seven years on trade with Japan.

To bring improvement to the trade arena at the international level, there had to be movement by the Japanese away from their protectionist practices. If that is what truly has been achieved through the U.S.-Japanese agreement, then the cause of free trade has been served and a wedge has been found to use in the battle against the forces pushing protectionism.

As Clinton made clear the trade talks, which have dragged on for seven years, have "gone on entirely too long with recession in Europe and slow growth in the United States."

It's time for change — change in the direction of free trade, not increased protectionism.

Appointing trendy 'czar' is sheer public relations

AIDS czar. Drug czar. Czar czar?

One of Washington's latest trends is to appoint a czar to coordinate government efforts in a given policy area. The idea is to make government services more effective. Some seem to think appointing a czar will really make a difference. In reality, it's just another bureaucratic position draining the tax coffers. In reality, it's just another PR move. . . .

There is another way to do everything the czar is supposed to do. We know it's a novel idea, and many in the capital will say it won't work, but here goes: Why not centralize like functions, such as drug enforcement, within one agency, thereby reducing bureaucracy rather than adding to it? Yes, it's a radical idea, but it just might work.

To do it this way would eliminate redundant positions, end the problems of turf wars, ease implementation of government policy and save the taxpayers money.

Will Washington do this? Not likely. It sounds impressive — imperial? — to appoint a czar. It gives the impression of real power. And who wouldn't rather appoint a czar than a mere agency head? Must make those press releases sound impressive, because in Washington the appearance of power is more important than real power, and the appearance of action is more important than real action.

Judge's NAFTA ruling shows bench that oversteps bounds

A ruling by U.S. District Judge Charles R. Richey is another indication that judges are overstepping their bounds, making laws from the bench on matters that are not in their jurisdiction.

The judge ruled that the North American Free Trade Agreement with the United States, Mexico and Canada violates the National Environmental Policy Act. Our country does not and should not have any say-so regarding the environment of other countries.

Certainly, the environment in Mexico leaves much to be desired, as is the fact in so many countries of this world. We're directly affected by it all and most affected by the environment in Mexico due to its proximity. However, other than encouragement, it is not within say-so of any official in this country to do anything about it.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, July 9, the 190th day of 1993. There are 175 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On July 9, 1850, the 12th U.S. president, Zachary Taylor, died at the White House, having served only one year and four months of his term. Tests performed on Taylor's exhumed remains in 1991 showed he had died of natural causes, not poison, as a writer had speculated.

On this date:

In 1540, England's King Henry VIII had his six-month-old marriage to his fourth wife, Anne of Cleves, annulled.

Clinton cuisine cooks 'first kitchen'

WASHINGTON — Bill Clinton may be the commander in chief, but he's apparently having trouble getting the White House kitchen staff to take orders.

Although it wasn't among his campaign promises, Clinton has been pushing hard to get the domestic staff to revamp the White House menu from the time-honored French gourmet to more traditional American fare. The new president's pedestrian palate has proved too much to digest for White House chefs.

Anderson

Sean Haddon is one White House chef who says shame on his colleagues.

According to his behind-the-kitchen-doors account, which he provided during a recent interview with our associate Ed Henry, Haddon may enjoy the distinction of being the first White House whistle-blower to don the fluffy white chef's hat. He alleges that his fellow chefs are not just getting mad, but they are also getting even.

The nuggets Haddon served up suggest that a chef's ego can take precedence over the president himself.

For example, President Clinton is allergic to cream and, according to Haddon, has had allergic reactions to Chef Pierre Chambrin's vaunted French recipes. Chambrin refused to comment.

Haddon has his own personal bone of contention with the White House that goes beyond menus and meals. He recently filed a lawsuit against his boss — the chief usher of the executive residence, Gary J. Walters. Haddon alleges that he was passed over for a promotion because his wife is African-American and because he didn't train in France like most White House chefs. According to his lawsuit, Haddon says that when he tried asking Walters why he missed the promotion, Walters responded: "I do not want American food, California Nouveau, or eclectic cooking in the White House."

Haddon's troubles came to a boil one night this May while he was in the midst of preparing dinner. Four armed Secret Service agents suddenly appeared to escort Haddon out of the White House kitchen and deposited him onto Pennsylvania Avenue in full chef's regalia. He was placed on administrative leave. Haddon's attorney said that the Secret Service had acted on a tip that Haddon had leveled threats against the Bush family last year.

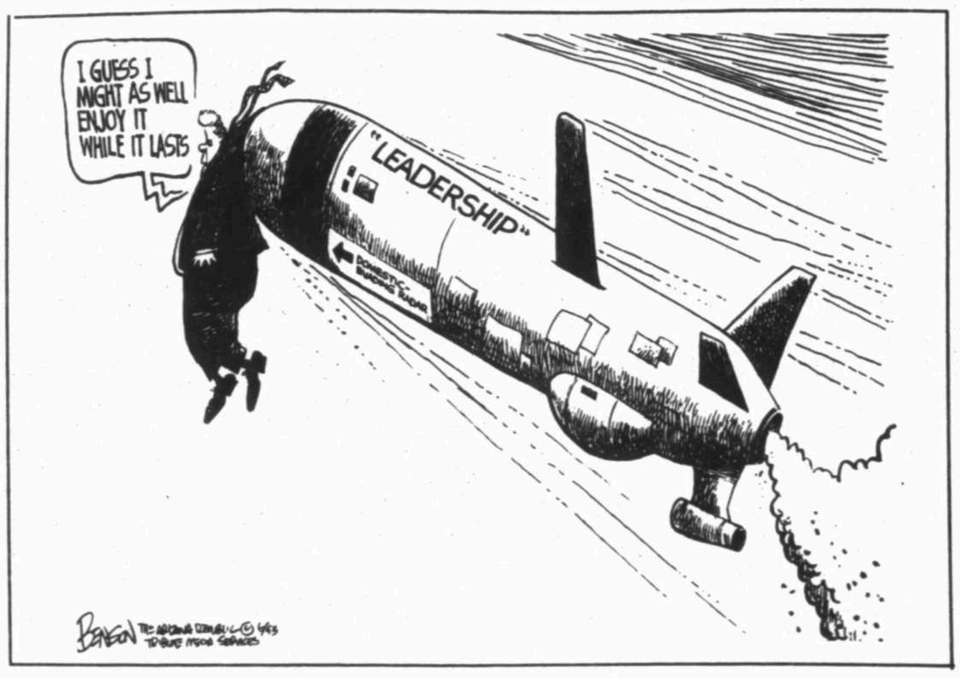

It's unclear why the Secret Service, which did not return our calls for comment, had not acted sooner. Haddon's attorney said that his client passed a polygraph test administered by the Secret Service, and has returned to work. Ironically, Haddon was one of Bush's favorite chefs. He and Bush formed a bond when Bush was hospitalized in 1991. Haddon trekked out to Bethesda Naval Hospital to prepare the recuperating president's meals at Bush's request.

Though Haddon is the only White House staffer willing to speak about the subject on the record, other officials corroborated parts of his story. A spokesperson for Hillary Rodham Clinton confirmed that the Clintons have made a "clear change to American cuisine" from French food, but added that the chefs "have been very agreeable" to the change.

Haddon also explained how Clinton's chronic tardiness has stirred the kitchen into rebellion. "If the president is late, they just make him wait longer when he finally does arrive.

"The service has not been as good for the Clintons as it has been for the previous administrations I've worked for," says Haddon, who has worked in the White House since 1988.

Court keeps gerrymander snake in bag

The Supreme Court's heralded North Carolina reapportionment decision (Shaw vs. Reno) throws us back — or should —upon basic principles. Such as?

The original meaning of the federal Voting Rights Act, to begin with: which meaning has been so far distorted, twisted and misshapen that one doubts the ongoing struggle over racial representation has any discernible finish point.

Murchison

The Voting Rights Act looks back to the 15th Amendment to the federal Constitution. The amendment has a purpose as clear as crystal: namely, to guarantee "the right of citizens of the United States to vote." This treasured right was not to be "denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude."

We have in our own time, and mostly without talking about it, converted the "right to vote" into the "right to win."

The theory here — totally unsupported in the text of the 15th Amendment — is the helping hand. The right to vote doesn't suffice. What if blacks — the minority concerned in the North Carolina case — vote freely as they please but can't put together the numbers to elect a member of their own race?

Prevailing legal theory holds that this may amount to unconstitutional discrimination, requiring remedy. Under which theory, the North Carolina legislature acted to award two congressional seats to black voters. As Justice Sandra Day O'Connor described the 12th district, it "winds in snake-like fashion through tobacco country, financial centers and manufacturing areas 'until it gobbles in enough enclaves of black neighborhoods.'" What is the common denominator of this district? Race.

Accordingly, those blacks who make up a majority of voters in the new district chose as their representative Mel Watt, who is black. What is wrong with Mel Watt? Nothing, so far as I know. That's not the point. The point is the danger that, as Justice O'Connor pointed out, "racial gerrymandering, even for remedial purposes, may balkanize us into competing racial factions; it threatens to carry us further from the goal of a political system in which race no longer matters."

That would be the 15th Amendment goal she's talking about. All the while it sounds more and more implausible.

It certainly isn't that the federal courts, applying the Voting Rights Act, invented gerrymandering. The very word — a mocking salute to Gov. Elbridge Gerry of Massachusetts (1744-1814) — reminds us how old a pastime is the manipulation of district lines for political advantage.

Racial gerrymandering, nonetheless, creates special grievances and dangers. Conventional political groupings, based on geography, philosophy, history or economics, can shift. Race is the one immutable factor. (A nation that reads about Bosnia every day understands that Justice O'Connor's admonition concerning "balkanized" politics is more than rhetorical.)

Obsession with race as the be-all and end-all trivializes more consequential concerns, like economic interest. This obsession encourages members of different races to imagine they have nothing in common, when, in fact, they may be brothers under the skin. How did Rep. Gary Franks of Connecticut, a black Republican, win election in a mostly white district? Simple. He ran as a conservative. His ideas mattered more than his skin color.

Isn't that what we're supposed to be working toward — the achievement, in Justice O'Connor's words, of "a political system in which race no longer matters"? The Supreme Court's decision in Shaw vs. Reno, ordering a district court to consider whether the North Carolina gerrymander violates white voters' rights, is sensible — and good political science to boot. But it's no more than a step in a hard journey back from the racial swamp in which our courts have stranded us.

CHARLEY REESE

Experience proves policy on Iraq is wrong

This business of American presidents bombing Iraq everytime their domestic standing sinks in the polls has got to stop. Morally, it's indefensible; strategically, it's stupid.

Reese

Yeah, I know the Clinton administration claims the Iraqi government plotted to assassinate former President George Bush. Well, let's see the evidence. We got stung once when the Kuwaitis claimed Iraqi soldiers tossed babies out of incubators, which turned out to be a lie. We've been stung plenty of times by our own government, which has in recent decades not earned high honors for telling the truth.

Pictures of bombs with little signs that say, "Iraqi bomb," do not constitute evidence nor do confessions from people in an area where torture is endemic. Anybody can make a bomb. There are not that many different ways to make them. The claim that "this is like other bombs Iraqis made" holds little water.

But let's assume that the Iraqi government was behind the assassination attempt. Does that justify bombing Baghdad? No. If reprisal raids could stop terrorism, Israeli embassies the world over would not be manned like fortresses. The only way to deal with terrorism is the way the FBI has dealt with it in New York —catch the terrorists — while at the same time resolving the political conflicts that produce terrorism in the first place.

And here we get into the strategic stupidity part. What after all is the objective? The objective ought to be to reach the point where Americans can stop looking over their shoulders. We need to get on with our normal lives and the Iraqi people need to get on with theirs.

Presumably, our dispute with Iraq was its invasion of Kuwait. Well, they've been out of Kuwait for nearly three years now.

Suppose someone set off a series of bombs in New York and Chicago, killing hundreds of Americans, and sent the message: "Unless you get rid of Bill Clinton, the bombings will continue." What would our reaction be? All Americans, including those who don't like Clinton, would rally around the president out of bitter resentment at some foreign power trying to interfere in our internal affairs. That's just human nature.

Well, surprise, surprise, but Iraqis are human beings, too, and everytime we bomb Iraq, every day we continue the cruel economic sanctions, we just recruit more and more support for Saddam Hussein. The sanctions and the bombings make Iraqis hate us, not Saddam Hussein. Everytime some American official tells the Iraqi people they better get rid of Saddam Hussein, they just make it that much less likely anyone will.

A friend of mine, not an Iraqi, who spent several weeks in Iraq said Saddam Hussein at this point could probably win a free election, so successful has he been in deflecting anger to the U.S. He's even distributed arms to the Iraqi Shi'ites in the south for use against infiltrators from Iran. Despite the sanctions, the Iraqis have rebuilt 80 percent of everything we destroyed — which is a remarkable achievement since our pols were boasting that we had bombed Iraq "back into the post-industrial age."

If any aides are telling Clinton that Hussein can be intimidated by military actions, the president ought to fire them. Saddam Hussein is no coward. Nor would his death change anything in Baghdad.

Reprisals just don't work. In World War II, the Nazis would shoot 100 people when one of their soldiers was killed by a partisan. What happened? One hundred more families hated the Nazis and supported the partisans.

So the question is, Why continue actions that are (1) immoral and (2) don't work? Somewhere down the road, innocent Americans will die because of this dumb policy and stupid political posturing.

Egypt hangs seven followers of radical sheik Abdel-Rahman

Radicals were hanged for attacking foreign tourists in their violent campaign to overthrow Egyptian government.

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Seven supporters of a Muslim cleric linked to terrorist plots in New York were hanged Thursday for attacking foreign tourists in their violent campaign to overthrow the Egyptian government.

Their executions brought to nine the number of radicals executed by military court order since President Hosni Mubarak began referring extremists to summary military trials in October. Thirteen other militants remain on death row.

The seven were among 32 defendants convicted of shooting at buses carrying foreign tourists. No one was killed in the attacks, but five Germans were wounded. The other defendants were given prison terms up to 25 years.

All are disciples of Sheik Omar Abdel-Rahman, the blind radical cleric who surrendered last Friday to U.S. authorities in New York and was jailed on immigration charges.

The al-Gamaa al-Islamiya, a radical group made up of Abdel-Rahman's followers, distributed leaflets in mosques Thursday pledging to avenge the seven men executed by military court order in Cairo's Appeals Prison.

"Mubarak keeps digging his dark grave with his own hands. He gives reasons to kill and destroy him every day of his black rule," the leaflets said.

During their sentencing in April, the defendants chanted: "Hosni Mubarak, you are a coward and an American agent. Omar Abdel-Rahman, you are the one who rocks the throne of tyranny."

Abdel-Rahman's followers in the United States have been charged in the Feb. 26 World Trade Center bombing that killed six, and an alleged plot to bomb other New York buildings. In Egypt, they are blamed for a violent campaign to install Islamic rule that has led to more than 180 deaths — including three foreign tourists — in the past 18 months.

The attacks on foreigners have crippled tourism, Egypt's major earner of foreign currency

But after Thursday's execution, Foreign Ministry spokesman Nagi el-Ghatrifi said the American media had exaggerated the sheik's importance, adding: "Omar Abdel-Rahman has no popularity in Egypt."

He told reporters the executions followed "a just trial in front of an honest court."

While the Abdel-Rahman, 55, became known in the United States only after his followers were accused of the World Trade Center bombing, he has a long history of clashes with the law in Egypt.

He was tried and acquitted for the 1981 assassination of President Anwar Sadat, Mubarak's predecessor. On Sunday, Egypt asked to extradite him from the United States to be retired for inciting riots in 1989.

Mubarak began referring militants' cases to military courts late last year to speed up trials.

U.N. seeks temporary missile site compromise with Saddam

Some Arabs see seal deal as way for parties to buy time, perhaps allow Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein to save face.

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The United Nations sought a temporary compromise with Iraq on Thursday in their latest standoff, saying weapons inspectors will place seals over missile-testing equipment at two disputed sites.

A team of U.N. inspectors pulled out of Iraq on Monday to protest Baghdad's refusal to permit installation of surveillance cameras at the areas. The departure increased fears in Baghdad that the Persian Gulf War allies might launch a punitive attack to force Iraq to comply.

Some Arab diplomats see the placement of seals on machines as a way to buy time in the confrontation. But there was no immediate comment from Iraq, and it was not clear whether Baghdad would permit the sealing or whether the move would aggravate the confrontation.

The sealing is "a face-saving method for Iraq," said Rolf Ekeus, head of the U.N. Special Commission charged with monitoring and eliminating Iraq's weapons of mass destruction. He said a new team of inspectors will arrive in Iraq on Saturday to place the seals.

The dismantling of Saddam Hussein's ballistic missiles, chemical and biological arsenals and nuclear weapons program was a term of the accords ending the 1991 Gulf War that routed Iraqi occupation forces from Kuwait.

The Security Council also ordered long-term monitoring to prevent Iran from reviving its weapons programs. But Iraq has not agreed to the monitoring plan, insisting that a U.N. trade embargo, imposed after the August 1990 invasion of Kuwait, be lifted first.

Iraq's chief delegate to oil sale talks, Deputy Foreign Minister Riyadh al-Qaissi, characterized the 2½-hour meeting Thursday as businesslike and said technical issues were discussed.

Riding particular German elevator can be terrible hazard to health

FRANKFURT, Germany (AP) — If you use the oldest kind of elevator in Germany, the best advice would be say a prayer and be nimble.

The "Paternoster" is sort of a chair-less Ferris wheel that never stops. The German government is trying to bring the dangerous contraption to a gradual halt, ordering almost all of them stopped next year.

At least five people have been killed by Paternosters since 1970, the most recent an elderly woman who was crushed to death in March in eastern Germany.

Some say the Paternoster (Latin for "our father") got its name from people praying for a safe trip. Others claim it's because the system is like a rosary with the cars being the large beads where each "Our Father" prayer is said.

The elevator is a string of open, three-sided, usually wooden boxes. Attached to huge bicycle-like chains, the boxes are pulled through shafts by large cogwheels at about 0.6 mph.

The trick is to jump into an open car as it comes past, then skip off quickly at the right floor. It's not hard, but the consequences of missing can be daunting.

There are defenders of the grandfather of German elevators, which also is in limited use elsewhere in Europe. Even Gregory Peck rode on one in the 1954 film "Night People," playing a U.S. military officer in a Cold War thriller.

A Paternoster ride is an icebreaker.

"It's at least 10 times more dangerous than a normal elevator," says Bernd Kaufmann of the federal Labor Ministry, which oversees industrial safety.

Former Lincoln Savings boss gets 12½-year prison sentence

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Charles Keating Jr. was sentenced to 12½ years in prison Thursday for looting Lincoln Savings and swindling small investors in what the judge called a crime "staggering in its proportion."

The sentence will run concurrently with a 10-year state prison sentence Keating already is serving, said U.S. District Judge Mariana R. Pfaelzer. He has served about 15 months of that sentence already.

Under federal sentencing guidelines, Keating will be imprisoned for about 10 more years, which "could be the remainder of his life, certainly the rest of his productive life," said U.S. Attorney Terree A. Bowers.

The judge also ordered Keating to pay $122.4 million restitution to the government for losses caused by sham property sales that prosecutors said propped up his shaky empire. However, the prospects for collecting the fine look dim. Keating maintains that he is $10 million in debt, and the government has been unable to locate any significant assets.

"The scope and reach of the offense was staggering in its proportion," the judge said.

Keating, convicted of 73 counts of fraud, racketeering and conspiracy, came to epitomize the nation's savings and loan debacle through his risky investments, ceaseless battles with regulators and lavish lifestyle.

Jury acquits separatist in marshal's slaying

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — White separatist Randy Weaver said he learned something by being acquitted Thursday of killing a federal marshal last year in a shootout at a remote mountain cabin: The system that he hated really can work.

A jury that heard the defense try to put the government on trial also exonerated co-defendant Kevin Harris of murdering the marshal. Jurors also acquitted Harris of four lesser charges and convicted Weaver of just two of the additional six lesser charges he faced.

The charges stemmed from last summer's shootout and 11-day siege at Weaver's northern Idaho cabin that left the marshal and Weaver's wife and son dead.

The verdicts followed 20 days of deliberations, an Idaho record, and eight weeks of testimony.

Five days into the trial, a siege with some similarities to the Weaver case came to a dramatic end in Waco, Texas. There, cult leader David Koresh and more than 70 followers died in a fire that ended a 51-day standoff with federal agents. Jurors in the Idaho case were instructed to avoid any news coverage of the Waco siege.

Supporters of Weaver and Harris packed the courtroom and applauded as U.S. District Judge Edward Lodge read the verdicts.

Defense attorney Gerry Spence said Weaver leaned over then and said, "I've learned something about the system. This is a good system. This system will work."

Jury foreman John Harris Weaver — no relation to the defendant — said that after analyzing testimony from 56 government witnesses and hundreds of pieces of evidence, jurors decided the government's case came up short.

"To a large extent it wasn't so much the evidence but a lack of evidence and confusion," the foreman said. "We kind of put ourselves on trial — if we were on trial, would we want to be convicted on this kind of evidence?"

Weaver remained in federal custody pending his Sept. 28 sentencing on convictions for failing to appear for a February 1991 trial on a weapons charge unrelated to the shootout and for doing so while on release from a federal magistrate pending that trial.

The maximum sentence is 15 years in prison and $500,000 in fines.

It was because Weaver had failed to appear for trial that agents had staked out his cabin, hoping to find a peaceful way to arrest him. An unplanned shootout ensued.

The government claimed Harris and the Weaver family conspired during the past decade to violently confront agents of the federal government that Randy and Vicki Weaver had labeled "lawless" in letters to federal officials.

Spence and co-counsel David Nevin claimed the government was persecuting Harris and the Weavers, who only wanted to be left alone to practice their unorthodox religion combining Old Testament values and white separatism.

They tried to put the government on trial, claiming Weaver was being sought because he refused to inform on other white separatists.

Spence said the jury sent a simple message to federal officers: "You are our servants. We are not your slaves."

U.S. Attorney Maurice Ellsworth, reading from a statement, said only that the case was a difficult one to prove.

"Beyond a reasonable doubt is a very high burden for the government to meet in a case, and in this case it appears we came out one run short," he said. "I don't think we got shut out."

Weaver, 45, and Harris, 25, were charged with murdering Deputy Marshal William Degan, 43, of Quincy, Mass., during the Aug. 21 shootout that triggered the siege of the mountaintop cabin. Weaver's son, Samuel, 14, also died in that gunfight and his 42-year-old wife was killed by a federal sniper the next night.

No one was charged in either of their deaths.

Law enforcement sweep nets over 5,700 criminals

ARLINGTON, Va. (AP) — More than 5,700 fugitives were arrested over nine weeks in a joint federal, state and local sweep billed Thursday as the largest and most successful manhunt in law enforcement history.

"These were the worst folks that we could find nationally that needed to be arrested," U.S. Marshals Service Director Henry E. Hudson said at a news conference.

"In law enforcement, we call them 'the cream of the crud,'" said Stephen E. Higgins, director of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

The sweep, dubbed Operation Trident, involved the Marshals Service, the BATF and the Drug Enforcement Administration, along with state and local authorities.

"These joint efforts defy the conventional wisdom that state, local and federal authorities cannot cooperate," said Associate Attorney General Webster Hubbell, who also was at the news conference.

Hudson called Operation Trident "the most successful fugitive operation in this nation's history," noting that the Marshals Service has directed 17 such sweeps in the last 12 years.

A total of 5,788 fugitives were apprehended during Operation Trident, Hudson said. More than 2,200 of them had at least six prior arrests.

"Eighty-seven percent of the arrestees were held without bail," he said. "The average person we arrested had been at large for at least seven months."

Among the most notorious fugitives netted in the sweep:

■ Lemuel Amond Bond, arrested at a hotel in Honduras last month. Bond, 37, wanted on drug-trafficking charges in the United States, was allegedly unloading an 800-pound cocaine shipment from a small plane from Colombia when he escaped an undercover DEA operation outside of Houston on Oct. 21, 1990.

■ Anthony L. Hayes, 31, captured at a New Orleans hotel in June after escaping from jail in Mississippi with self-described serial killer Donald Leroy Evans and another prisoner. Hayes was being held in the Harrison County Jail on weapons charges.

■ Ernesto and Jose Carlos Valladares, two Cuban-American brothers arrested in Medellin, Colombia, on drug-trafficking charges. They allegedly fled after posting bond in federal court in Miami, where they had been charged with possessing cocaine with intent to distribute, said DEA Administrator Robert C. Bonner.

Of those arrested, 963 were federal fugitives and 4,825 were wanted on state charges, Hudson said. Some 229 of those arrested had been charged with or previously convicted of homicide, Hudson said.

There was no breakdown of how many of the fugitives had been convicted of prior crimes. But Marshals Service spokesman Bill Licatovich said 630 were wanted on parole violations, 919 on probation violations and 129 had escaped from custody.

Also, 838 were wanted for firearms violations.

■ Police: Woman, grandchild found dead

DETROIT — An 18-month-old girl starved to death after the grandmother who cared for her died in her apartment of a suspected heart attack.

Geneva Thomas, 65, died about a week ago, police said. The infant, Priscilla Thomas, who had been living with her grandmother for about a year, was found starved to death Wednesday.

Maintenance workers investigating an odor entered the woman's apartment and found her decomposed body on the kitchen floor. Building officials then called police, who found the toddler's body in a bedroom.

The officials said the child and her granddaughter hadn't been seen for a week. Geneva Thomas did not have a telephone.

Police said Geneva Thomas had eight children, three of whom lived in the area. Officers said several family members each thought others had been talking to the woman and didn't know she hadn't been seen.

■ Suspected forgers chose wrong teller

REDWOOD CITY, Calif. — Two teen-agers chose the wrong teller when they tried to cash a stolen check.

When they handed teller Jenny Ortez a check for $250 at a Wells Fargo bank Tuesday, she realized it was in her father's name, police said.

The teens, ages 16 and 17, were taken into custody and charged with forgery and possession of stolen property, police spokesman Howard Baker said. The signature on the back of the check was a forgery, Baker said.

Baker said Jose Ortez' car had been broken into twice in the past several months while it was parked near a high school. His checkbook was stolen during the second burglary.

■ Official: Hepatitis drug kills 2 patients

WASHINGTON — An experimental drug intended to treat a common liver disease, hepatitis B, has killed two patients because of an unexplained medical failure in federal tests.

The chief researcher in the case called the failure a "catastrophe."

The National Institutes of Health, which conducted the tests, and Eli Lilly & Co. maker of the experimental drug, Fialuridine, halted the tests on June 26.

On that day, the first of 15 patients being treated with the drug fell "desperately ill, critically ill" from toxic reactions, said the chief federal researcher, Jay H. Hoofnagle, director of the division of digestive disease and nutrition at the National Institutes of Health.

Two patients died after emergency liver transplants on July 4, Hoofnagle said. The third is in critical condition awaiting a liver transplant. Four others experienced serious side effects.

Hoofnagle said the agency believed that "this catastrophe" was caused when the patients' mitochondria, the part of the cell that converts oxygen into energy, broke down. That caused a toxic reaction, leading to liver and kidney failure, he said.

Chronic hepatitis B is a contagious virus for which there is no cure. It is especially widespread in poor countries and is a cause of liver cancer and cirrhosis.

Researchers had hoped that Fialuridine could be a cure for the hepatitis virus.

White water claims 2 brothers; 3 boys survive

BEND, Ore. (AP) — Evelyn VonPoederoyen's two sons made a tragic mistake: They thought they had launched their raft below Dillon Falls, a perilous stretch of white water on the Deschutes River.

"We won't be long," she remembers her 35-year-old son, Steven Sheldon Jr., saying as he took off Tuesday with his half-brother, Ben T. Lockhart. "It's a short trip, so maybe we'll do it twice."

Unable to alter their course, the brothers and three boys, ages 3, 4, and 7, plunged over the rushing falls and were sucked beneath the boiling current. Sheldon died. Lockhart was missing and presumed drowned.

The children, all Lockhart's sons, survived unscathed. Three-year-old Jesse, waist-deep in water, clung to a rock embankment for three hours before a rescuer was able to rappel down the cliff and save him.

When Jesse was pulled from the water, medics asked him his name. "I'm 3 years old," was all he could say.

VonPoederoyen, a nurse who tried unsuccessfully to revive her son, said the idea for the raft trip came up at a family reunion.

■ More national news/10C

Lockhart, who lives in Homer, Alaska, was visiting his mother and Sheldon at their home in Bend, 12 miles from the falls. Lockhart's sons had come up from Concord, Calif., where they live with their mother.

Sheldon wanted to take his nephews on a raft trip. His mother agreed to drive a car to the drop-off point, then wait for the group a few miles downriver.

Before getting into the river, they drove up to view the spectacular falls. Then they drove to a point in the river where Sheldon decided to embark. "I thought he had been there before," his mother said.

The men "evidently put in between Benham Falls and Dillon Falls, about one whole set of landings upstream from where they thought they were," said Terry Silbaugh, director of the Deschutes County search and rescue unit.

"This is something stupid that these people did. Nobody intentionally goes over Dillon Falls," Silbaugh said.

The falls is rated Class 6, which means it is not considered navigable.

"Steve knew enough about rafting that I can't imagine he would consider going over Dillon Falls," said a friend, Paul Perlman.

The river drops about 10 feet, then about five feet before emerging in a still-treacherous stretch of white water. Signs upstream, on an extremely calm section of the river used by canoers from a nearby resort, warn of the danger ahead.

Lockhart's stepson, 7-year-old Kelly "Jake" Gonzalez, was discovered downstream, clutching Sheldon's body. Lockhart's son, Jeremy, 4, was found on a rock island below the falls.

"I went into the water, and I don't want to go there anymore," Jeremy said later at a hospital in Bend.

All five were wearing life jackets. The boys had bumps and bruises, and Jesse had a mild case of hypothermia. All were released Tuesday night.

On Wednesday, they were at their grandmother's house, eating hamburgers.

Sheldon's sister, Susie Sheldon-Smith, was thankful the tragedy wasn't any worse. "We've got three miracles," she said.

Bustamante testimony centers around payments to congressman

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Payments totaling $65,000 took center stage Thursday in the influence-peddling trial of former congressman Albert Bustamante as prosecutors tried to prove the money was part of a bribery scheme.

Defense attorneys, though, attempted to show the payments were for a legitimate real estate deal and for consulting services provided by Bustamante's wife, Rebecca.

"That's a bribe?" Bustamante said sarcastically during a court break.

Bustamante is being tried on racketeering and bribery charges. He was named in a 10-count federal indictment in February that culminated a 3½-year probe of him and his associates. Mrs. Bustamante, an attorney, is charged in seven counts with aiding and abetting her husband.

Prosecution witness Michael S. Henderson testified Thursday about $30,000 paid to Mrs. Bustamante and delivered to her husband in November 1987 by State Realty Inc., a subsidiary of the Jaffe Group Inc., owned by the politically connected Jaffe family of San Antonio.

Henderson, a comptroller with the Jaffe Group at the time, said in examining the company's accounting books he tried to get an explanation of the payment, listed as "consulting services rendered," but never could.

The payment was questioned in a 1988 Internal Revenue Service audit and eventually determined to be not deductible, while other legal fees were explained and deducted, Henderson said.

Prosecutors contend Mrs. Bustamante never did any work for the money and that the couple spent it as partial payment for a house.

Gary Hoyack, vice president and chief financial officer for the Jaffe Group, testified about a 1989 letter written by businessman Jim Dement to M. Doug Jaffe Jr. concerning the $30,000.

The letter describes the money as a "retainer" for work Mrs. Bustamante was to perform for his company, Dement Southwest, that was paid by the Jaffe company because the Jaffes had loaned Dement money. Hoyack's testimony indicated the $30,000 was included in a larger sum of money recently repaid to the Jaffes.

"There wouldn't be any better way to hide this $30,000, would there?" said prosecutor Jackie Bennett, who also stressed in his questioning that the letter appeared after IRS inquiries and some 22 months after the payment.

Defense cross-examination revolved around whether there was any proof Mrs. Bustamante didn't work for the money.

Defense attorney A.L. Hernden characterized the scenario as merely a dispute between Dement and the Jaffes over who owed the payment.

"If you were going to bribe somebody, the best way would be to pay cash, wouldn't it?" Hernden asked.

Earlier, prosecutors called witnesses to establish a series of money exchanges involving Bustamante in early 1986.

Bustamante is accused of accepting $35,000 for helping Falcon Food and Management Services Inc. in a bid to renew its $23.7 million contract at Lackland Air Force Base in San Antonio.

Evidence shows Bustamante was paid $35,000 in February 1986 by Eddie Garcia, who ran Falcon Foods. The money ultimately came from a company account of businessman M. Doug Jaffe Jr.

The next month, Bustamante obtained a $35,000 loan from San Antonio Savings Association and paid that same amount back to the Jaffe company account, according to testimony.

Prosecutors contend Bustamante used the $35,000 from Falcon Foods to pay off the mortgage of his Arlington, Va., home and that he got the SASA loan money to cover up the payment.

Defense attorney Tony Canales questioned former SASA loan officer Grady Silverthorn about Garcia's role in a real estate transaction involving property the Bustamantes owned in west San Antonio. Silverthorn testified Garcia was listed as real estate broker on a contract for the sale of the property in late 1985.

That deal between the Bustamantes and a San Antonio family involved a $35,000 second lien note, Silverthorn testified. Defense attorneys sought to make a connection between Garcia's payment to Bustamante and that second lien.

Under questioning from prosecutor Mike Attanasio, Silverthorn said he had seen no documents showing Garcia or any other third party had purchased the $35,000 lien note.

Bustamante, a Democrat, lost the 23rd congressional seat last year to Republican Henry Bonilla.

If convicted, Bustamante faces up to 56 years in prison, plus fines of up to $250,000 on each of the 10 counts. Mrs. Bustamante could get two years in prison and up to $250,000 in fines on each of the seven counts.

Six federal agencies unite to battle health-care fraud

HOUSTON (AP) — Six federal agencies joined forces to battle health care cheats across coastal South Texas Thursday with a focus on Houston and its massive medical complex.

The Health Care Fraud Task Force for the Southern District of Texas is the first effort of its kind in Texas and one of a handful nationwide, said U.S. Attorney Lawrence D. Finder.

Officials estimate 10 percent of health care costs are lost to fraud and abuse, including false or inflated claims, unnecessary treatments and illegal distribution of medicine.

Health and Human Services assistant inspector general Robert Simon added that of $9 billion in annual Medicare expenditures in Texas, nearly $1 billion is fraudulently claimed.

"In these tough economic times when the dollar is constantly shrinking, every dollar lost to fraud is one less dollar available to the national effort and to our local effort to provide decent health care," Finder said.

The task force teams Finder's Houston office with the departments of Veterans Affairs and Health and Human Services, the Defense Criminal Investigative Service, the U.S. Railroad Retirement Board and the U.S. Postal Inspection Service.

To start, the agencies will each devote one person to the effort, but that could be expanded depending on their success.

Asked whether the task force would concentrate on health care providers, Assistant U.S. Attorney Karla Spaulding said patients who submit fraudulent claims also are subject to prosecution.

"It's anything that would create fraud and abuse," Ms. Spaulding said. "It's those kinds of fraud, however they're being perpetrated."

Representatives from the agencies said they already have identified and investigated health care cons in the Houston area, and Finder said indictments would be filed "in the near future."

The task force for the time being planned to focus on Houston and its Texas Medical Center, one of the largest such complexes in the world with over 30 hospitals and research centers.

Plugging in the program

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

The Midland College-Need to Read connection is bonded with cooperation of both entities. On the Midland College campus are, from left, Need to Read Director Patti Groce, Cindy Turland — who serves as president of the Need to Read board of directors and director of MC's Adult Basic Education department — and MC President Dr. David Daniel.

Midland College-Need to Read link turns pages

Midland's Need to Read program doesn't just improve the reading and writing skills of its students — it also provides the self-esteem and confidence it takes to make illiterate people into more productive and proud members of the community.

Plus, the program is expanding in both services and space.

The Need to Read program would not be as successful as it is without the assistance of Midland College, which provides office space, training facilities and rooms for the tutors and students to meet.

Patti Groce, executive director of Need to Read for the past five years, said that since the program started eight years ago it has continued to grow and offer more services.

Ms. Groce said the mission goal for Need to Read originally was to serve the literacy needs of functionally illiterate adults by creating public awareness of the program, fostering program sponsors, training volunteer tutors, financially supporting the operation and actively seeking cooperational partnerships with the private and public sector to develop centralized services that best serve the literacy needs of adults.

But, Need to Read has since broadened its goals and expanded to include teaching English as a second language and assisting adults in getting their GEDs.

Other programs included in Need to Read are basic job skill literacy, workplace literacy, family literacy and life skills.

Midland College was the instigating factor in getting the program started, according to Cindy Turland, president of the Need to Read board of directors, as well as the director of the Midland College Adult Basic Education department.

The Midland College Adult and Basic Education department wrote for the special projects grant funding, from the state, that originally started Need to Read.

"Midland College saw a need for people who were coming into ABE and GED classes who read at such a low level that they couldn't handle those classes. They knew the best way to teach an adult to read was the one-to-one, and the most economical, efficient way was to have a volunteer agency with trained volunteers," Ms. Groce said. "They had 14 people they targeted that they wanted to help and it has grown from that 14 to 140 today."

The college also has provided an additional office for the program for its expanding needs, which Ms. Turland called "generous" because of the tightness of office space at the college.

Midland College officials see a correlation between the college and the program that make the two a likely pair.

"We work very closely together and we're very supportive of each other. We have similar missions at different levels," Ms. Turland said.

"It is in the interest of everyone, especially Midland College, that the most fundamental of abilities of reading be enhanced," said Midland College President Dr. David Daniel. "We are strongly committed to anything we can do to

Barriers drop away for students

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff writer

Students who enroll in the Need to Read program come from a variety of backgrounds and have assorted reasons for seeking the help.

Patti Groce, executive director, said most students, who most often begin the program from word-of-mouth referrals, usually will stay in the program until they have reached their own individually set goals.

Ms. Groce said some students who already have been through the program will come back if they have new goals. She said there are several students who have been in the program for more than five years, but keep progressing and setting new objectives.

One such student is Stewart Sparks. The 35-year-old high school graduate has been in the Need to Read program for six years. Sparks suffers from dyslexia, which not only caused learning difficulties, but also had damaged his self-esteem.

Just one year ago he was placed with volunteer tutor Ann Lane, who has a dyslexic son.

Ms. Lane is a certified teacher and will complete training later this summer to teach Alphabet Phonics and multisensory learning to dyslexic students.

With those special skills, Sparks has achieved more than he thought possible.

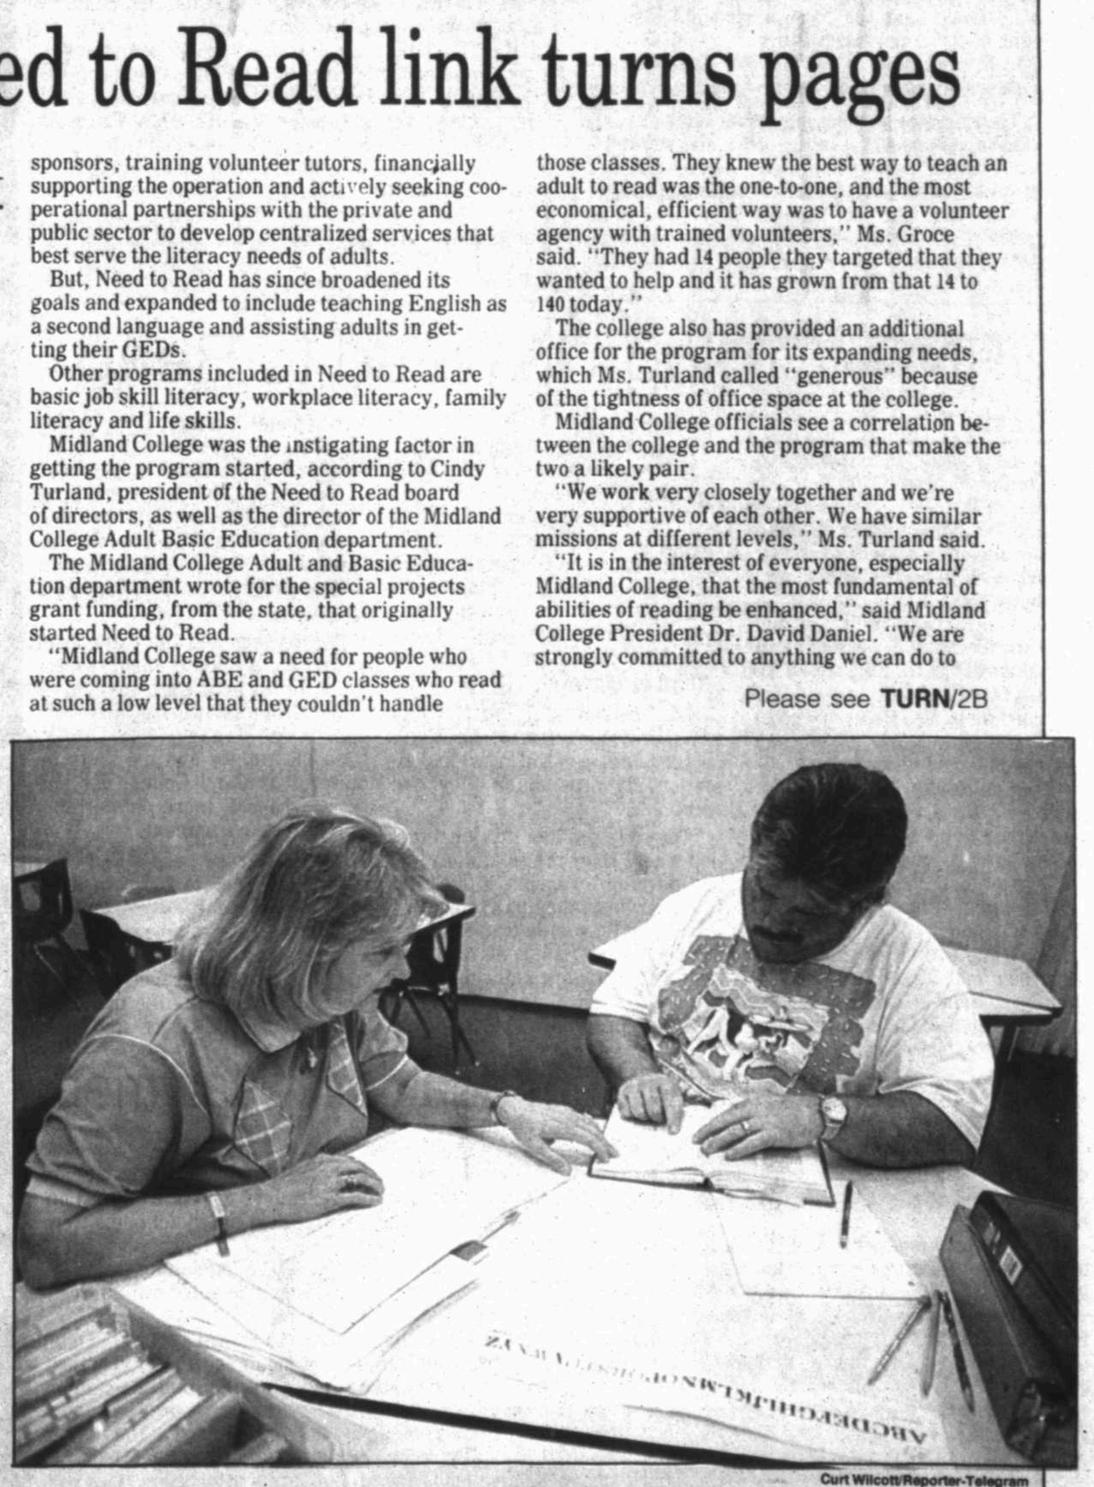

Not only does he have more self confidence now, but knowing why a word is pronounced or spelled the way it is makes him understand it better. Ms. Lane said the phonics program has "strategies" that can be explained to the student to make it easier to comprehend.

Now Sparks wants to go back to school and further his education. And, he added, his life has been made easier since his reading and writing have improved.

"It has changed my attitude on life. . . . A lot of people who have this problem feel that they're lower than dirt. It's frustrating," he said.

Along with the added confidence is a desire to instill knowledge in his offspring-to-be via reading to his pregnant wife's stomach.

Success stories abound at 'read' program

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff writer

Midland's Need to Read program has forever changed the lives of the men and women who have been through it by instilling not only the knowledge of how to read and write, but also providing the drive for the students to succeed in all areas of their lives.

Need to Read's Executive Director Patti Groce loves to give examples of these success stories.

"There are so many (success stories). We had one young fellow, who was 19, who was a dropout and was placed with a tutor. His initial goal was to get his driver's license because since he dropped out of school he wasn't in driver's ed," she said. "So, the tutor and the student worked together on getting his driver's license. He got it and then they talked about filling out job applications."

"All the time he is working on his reading skills, but, at the same time, they're doing these things that are his goals. He had made enough money to put a down payment on a car. (The tutor) called me later and said he took his new car and drove to Dallas and got a job there," she said.

"We had another fellow who had graduated from high school, but he had a small learning disability and always thought of himself as a non-reader. On his bulletin board at work there were postings for job opportunities and training opportunities and he never even glanced at them," she said. "He came to Midland Need to Read to improve his reading skills because he felt that was holding him back. Then when he was placed with a tutor they talked about that and he learned to read a dictionary and she talked about how many reading opportunities there are out there on signs, bulletin boards and newspapers.

"So he began to read more and he found a job opportunity in Austin and he moved. He also read a novel for the first time before that. He had gone all the way through school ... but he always faked it ... he was able to pass and graduate. But he enjoyed (reading) and was really surprised," she said.

He said soon he had read two books and was so excited he was talking about writing a book of his own.

"I've got a million of them. Simple things like a mother came to us because she wanted to read to her children. She was tired of her little girl asking her mommy to read to her and having to make excuses about being too busy," Ms. Groce said. "She said, 'I'm not really too busy — it's just that I can't read.' So then we helped her read children's books to her child."

Ms. Groce said many of the children's books will be passed on to the parents because they don't usually have books in the home. She hopes by providing the books and the training that the parents will encourage their children to read.

"We hope that if we can get the parents reading, then they will pass it on down to their children," she said.

"It is such a good example to your children to go to school and to come back and better yourself. Children are often very proud of their parents when they see what they're doing," added Cindy Turland, president of the Need to Read board of directors.

Directors seek proper volunteer-student match

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff writer

Because of the different reasons people come to Need to Read, the program needs a variety of volunteers with differing backgrounds and experiences, according to Patti Groce, executive director of Midland's Need to Read.

Volunteers are matched with the students to provide a more comfortable atmosphere as well as one more conducive to learning.

Ms. Groce gave an example of the matches that can be made.

"One company called. They found a fellow that had been this great employee but he couldn't pass the training part of an employee course and he was going to lose his job," she said. "But he was a valued employee and they didn't want to lose him. We found a tutor who worked with that company, but within another division, who was willing to help him. The tutor knew the material, which was pretty technical, and that just worked out perfectly."

She said volunteers are always needed and the training involves only five hours of time, with additional training provided for those who desire to learn more about teaching the learning disabled or English as a second language.

Cindy Turland, president of the Need to Read board of directors and director of Midland College's Adult Basic Education department, said she landed her position as director of the ABE program after she worked as a volunteer in the learning center working with students who were trying to get their GEDs.

She explained some of the advantages of becoming a tutor.

"I really enjoy this. The people are here because they choose to be. Nobody is making them come ... it is a voluntary situation where they want to come because they feel like they need to do something differently and want to help themselves," she said. "These people often have been through several jobs and have had several negative experiences, so when they come back up here and things go positively for them — and it usually does — it is tremendous for them. It makes them realize 'Yes I can' and it makes them realize how smart they are."

Even more than the quality instruction the students can receive and the rewards of being a tutor is the fact that all of the services are free.

Ms. Turland said the only way the program can remain free is through the funding it receives from the United Way of Midland, private and corporate contributions and from its annual fundraiser, the Bee for Literacy.

The Bee for Literacy, which is sponsored with all costs underwritten by the Midland Reporter-Telegram, is an adult spelling bee that pits about a dozen teams from various corporations and organizations against each other.

ENROLL: Barriers drop for students

(From 1B)

Sparks emphasized the need for everyone to learn how to read and if they are experiencing problems to seek help as soon as the problem is identified.

For many Need to Read participants, the problem is not with a learning disorder but with a language barrier. English as a second language is one of the expanded services now offered by Need to Read.

ESL is all done in English, Ms. Groce said. Most of the training is verbal because the student must first understand the language before he or she can learn to read and write it.

She also indicated that while most of the students are Hispanic, there are also some from India, France, the Orient and Russia.

Ms. Groce said the foreign students also are taught about American culture.

One Korean student related her experience to Ms. Groce on learning about the American culture.

"(The student) was saying to the tutor that she would be very insulted in the office she worked in when younger people would call her by her first name," Ms. Groce recollected. "In Korea, you just never do that and she thought they were being disrespectful to her. Then as she talked about the different cultures she realized they were being friendly to call her by first name. Little things like that can really cause hard feelings."

Just like learning disabled students or high school dropouts, reasons for joining the Need to Read program vary among the ESL participants.

Margarita Alvarado started attending Need to Read tutoring sessions about two months ago because she wanted to learn how to speak and read English.

Ms. Alvarado already has learned a great deal and called the program a "good opportunity" for anyone needing to learn about the English language.

She meets with her tutor, Judy Thornton, for about two hours a week and also works on computers on her own in the learning skills lab at Midland College.

Ms. Thornton said she enjoys the time she spends each week tutoring her prize pupil.

"I started because I wanted to do something good for someone ... and to contribute to my community. It is so satisfying to help someone like Margarita — she is an eager learner," Ms. Thornton added. "Her desire to learn and go on with her education is admirable and is very encouraging to me."

The tutor is positive that Ms. Alvarado will be yet another success story in the Need to Read program.

improve the program and increase the number of people who take advantage of it."

Daniel indicated that the Need to Read program is a successful way to work with illiterate adults.

"There are a number of ways a person can learn to read, but one of the most effective, personal and caring ways is through Need to Read," Daniel added.

According to Ms. Groce, Need to Read students learn more than just reading and writing.

"They're really learning a lot more ... it's a reading attitude, sometimes even more than skills or how-to's. A lot of our students don't know how to access materials like using a library or a dictionary," she said.

Ms. Groce estimated that about 20 percent of Midland County is illiterate, which is lower than the statewide level. One in three Texans is illiterate.

She said the high dropout rate locally is one indication of the illiteracy rate in the county.

"You always assume that if a person dropped out in the eighth grade, he or she is reading at an eighth-grade level, but that's not true. That is one reason they dropped out in the eighth grade. They may have been (reading) at a third-grade level," Groce said.

Ms. Turland said the Need to Read program is ideal for these people because of the individual attention and instruction they can receive.

"They are put in a private situation where they can talk to a tutor and develop a rapport with them. It is not where they have to worry about how they do in front of other people. Rather, it is a private situation of one-on-one tutoring," she said.

"These programs are definitely self-esteem boosters. It is hard to say I have a problem — 'I can't read or I didn't finish high school' — but once you deal with your problem, walk through the door and get up here, it is a non-threatening atmosphere. It is an individualized program ... it is very positive," she said.

The student and the tutor meet at their convenience about twice a week for an hour each session.

Ms. Groce said classes are available at the Baptist Crisis Center, Casa de Amigos and the south facility of Midland College for students who feel more comfortable in a class environment.

The way these people find their individual ways to Need to Read vary. Some hear advertisements on the television and radio, some are referred by social agencies, but most are encouraged by word-of-mouth from family members and friends, Ms. Groce said.

Judge signs settlement against 12 lawmen

LUBBOCK (AP) — A federal judge in Amarillo has dismissed cases against two Lubbock police officers and a Georgia attorney who say they were victimized by retaliatory prosecutors.

U.S. District Judge Mary Lou Robinson also signed a settlement agreement late Wednesday that gives $300,000 to the three men, a deputy U.S. clerk said.

The three men, who filed a racketeering lawsuit Feb. 2 against 12 West Texas lawmen, were indicted on various felony offenses in Lubbock and Randall counties. The lawsuit alleged the indictments came only because the plaintiffs were among the first to publicly criticize pathologist Ralph Erdmann.

Atlanta defense attorney Millard Farmer and Lubbock police officers Pat Kelly and Bill Hubbard say the 12 defendants committed extortion, bribery and mail fraud to hide the shoddy work done by Erdmann, who subsequently pleaded no contest to seven charges he faked autopsies.

The defendants included district attorneys Randy Sherrod of Randall County and Travis Ware of Lubbock County. They had argued the indictments were valid and appropriate.

Ms. Robinson's emergency ruling halting the prosecutions Feb. 4 was noted as a rare federal intervention in state criminal courts.

Farmer, Kelly and Hubbard will receive a total $300,000 from Lubbock, Randall and Potter counties; the cities of Lubbock and Amarillo; and the state of Texas.

"I think justice was done and I'm glad the matter has finally resolved itself," said Gerald Goldstein of San Antonio, one of Hubbard's attorneys. "This perhaps sends a loud message that the federal judiciary is a refuge — that these kinds of excesses will not be tolerated. They will be stopped."

Jury deliberates fate of defendant in 'rap' trial

AUSTIN (AP) — Jurors began considering the punishment Thursday for a convicted cop killer who says violent rap music influenced his crime.

Jurors met for a about a half hour late Thursday to decide whether 19-year-old Ronald Ray Howard should live or die for shooting Texas Department of Safety Trooper Bill Davidson in April 1992.

The jury, which convicted Howard of the crime last month, will reconvene this morning.

Howard has admitted to killing the trooper and the eight-man, four-woman jury has the option to sentence him to life in prison or to death by lethal injection.

Howard's attorney Allen Tanner told jurors Thursday that a childhood of violence in Houston's inner-city, including brushes with gangs and hours of listening to angry rap music, taught him to hate police.

"If Ronald Howard grew up in the suburbs with two loving parents, would he be here today?" Tanner said.

Howard testified earlier in the five-week trial that music known as "gangsta rap" was a contributing factor to shooting Davidson in the neck at close range after the trooper pulled him over for a missing headlight near Victoria.

"This music builds up in a young kid's head," Tanner said in his final argument to the jury. "We're not saying it's the only cause, but it's a contributing cause along with everything else."

Jackson County District Attorney Bobby Bell said listening to anti-cop rap music is not a defense for killing an officer.

"No gangsta rap music in the world is going to get Ronald Ray Howard to violate his moral conscience," Bell said. "There is no way listening to that music reduces his (responsibility)."

"I promise you that you can always find an excuse for what you do," he added.

Freed child killer would face more prison under new law

By Clay Robison
Hearst News Service

AUSTIN — A child killer whose release from prison has prompted outrage throughout Texas would still be behind bars under criminal justice reforms approved by the Texas Legislature this year.

The provision increasing minimum prison time will not take effect until Sept. 1 and cannot be applied retroactively.

Raul Meza, 32, was released from prison last month after serving 11½ years of a 30-year sentence for the rape and strangulation of 8-year-old Kendra Page of Austin.

Protests in the Texas cities of Uvalde, El Paso, Wichita Falls and San Antonio forced parole officials to move Meza from those cities. Earlier this week, he was moved from San Antonio to a halfway house near Mineral Wells. Parole officials said, however, that Mineral Falls will not be his permanent residence.

Meza had been denied parole seven times but, under present state law, had to be released. His actual time served plus good-time credit equaled his full sentence, which included four years tacked on for possessing a homemade knife in prison.

Under the new penal code, those convicted of murder or several other violent offenses will have to serve at least half their sentences before becoming eligible for parole. The parole board will not be required to use good-time credits to shorten inmates' time in prison.

"(A prisoner) could build up 89 years of good time and still be in there," said state Rep. Allen Hightower, D-Huntsville, a co-sponsor of the criminal justice changes.

In Meza's case, the new law would have meant a minimum 15 years in prison.

Meza is to remain under mandatory supervision until 2016. Parole officials say he will be required to wear an electronic monitoring device, report regularly to a parole officer and receive psychological counseling and job training.

Parole officials said Meza will remain in the Mineral Wells halfway house for at least three weeks to receive training in living skills and job hunting.

They said the halfway house is a secure facility "outside the metropolitan area and is not near a neighborhood or school, which was a major concern of citizens and public officials in Meza's previous placements."

Death could be 1st rodent-borne virus outside 4 corners

ATLANTA (AP) — That rodent-borne virus attacking residents of four Southwestern states apparently killed an east Texas woman who had never traveled to the afflicted area, government doctors reported Thursday.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention also upped to 16 the confirmed cases of the never-before-seen strain of hantavirus.

The agency is investigating 41 possible cases, including 22 deaths, of severe respiratory illness caused by hantavirus.

Until now, the mysterious illness had been found only in New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado and Utah. Most cases were clustered where those states meet, called the Four Corners.

But this week the CDC found hantavirus antibodies in the blood of a 58-year-old nurse from Zavalla, Texas, who died last month. The CDC still wants to test tissue samples before declaring hers a definite hantavirus death, but said Thursday it probably was.

"It's strong enough (evidence) that we felt it was important to make clinicians aware that this illness may be occurring in other geographic areas," said Dr. Ruth Berkelman, deputy director of CDC's Center for Infectious Diseases.

Hantavirus is spread through close contact with rodents and their droppings. The CDC says deer mice probably are spreading it — dozens trapped in the Four Corners area carry antibodies to hantavirus.

The virus is not spread person-to-person.

The east Texas woman had not traveled to the four afflicted states. Texas officials on Thursday trapped mice at a barn she owned so the CDC could test them. The woman's house appeared immaculate, the officials said.

Other victims have lived in mice-infested houses, stirred up dust in infested barns or had other very close contact with rodents.

Of the 16 confirmed cases, 11 were in New Mexico, four in Arizona and one in Colorado. Twelve of them died. The CDC is investigating 25 other possible cases, including 10 deaths.

Opening lead: Ace of ♣

You are beginning to master the art of defense when you see the need to switch the attack to a particular suit. You have mastered it when you can select the correct card in the suit to lead!

North-South conducted a routine auction to what turned out to be a shaky game because of the wasted values in clubs. Make the king of clubs the king of hearts and the contract would be laydown.

With nothing in the auction to act as a guide, West chose to fire away with the ace of clubs. The sight of dummy made two things obvious: There was no future in a club continuation; and unless the defenders could score some tricks in a hurry, the contract would be easy, since the diamond suit offered a rich source of discards.

It did not take a genius to work out that the only suit that offered prospects of tricks was hearts. So West shifted to the ace of hearts and continued with the jack in the hope of finding partner with the K 10. Declarer covered with the table's queen and the defenders were limited to two heart tricks and a club.

West's analysis was on the right track, but did not go far enough. The contract could be defeated if East held either the 10 or 9 of hearts in addition to the king, as long as West shifts to the jack of hearts at trick two!

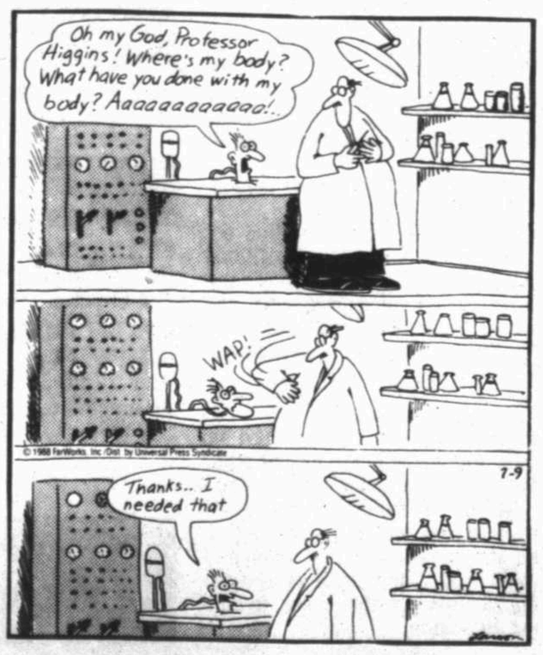

Declarer must cover and East captures the queen with the king. When a heart is returned, declarer's 10 is trapped by West's A 8. Down one!

Diana's royal stepmother goes to altar for 3rd time

LONDON — Raine Spencer, Princess Diana's stepmother, married a French count Thursday, just over a year after the death of her second husband. Diana and three siblings didn't attend.

Spencer

Countess Spencer, 63, married Count Jean-Francois de Chambrun, 57, in a London civil ceremony. Her second husband, the 8th Earl Spencer, died in March 1992.

Diana, her brother, Charles, now the 9th Earl Spencer, and her two sisters reportedly had an acrimonious relationship with their stepmother, called her "Acid Raine," and blamed her for selling family treasures.

The countess' mother, romance novelist Barbara Cartland, also skipped the ceremony.

But Countess Spencer has said her new love is "like something out of one of Mummy's novels."

COVINGTON, Ga. — Howard Rollins was in front of the camera this week, portraying a police detective, for the first time since being released from jail. He had spent five weeks behind bars for violating probation.

Rollins, who plays Chief of Detectives Virgil Tibbs on the CBS series "In the Heat of the Night," was arrested several times during the past year for reckless driving and driving under the influence.

He was put on probation, and a subsequent arrest for drunken driving meant jail time. He served a 90-day jail sentence last November on a similar conviction.

The cast and crew of the CBS series threw a welcome-back party for Rollins a few days after his June 16 release from jail. But Rollins didn't take part in filming until this week because his character had been written out of scripts while the actor served his sentence.

This town, southeast of Atlanta, stands in for the fictional Sparta, Miss., setting of the show, which is entering its seventh season.

Rollins, who has appeared in several films, including "Ragtime" and "A Soldier's Story," wouldn't give interviews and the set has been closed.

FRANKFURT, Germany — Princess Gloria von Thurn und Taxis will sell off more royal treasures in an effort to put a dent in an inheritance tax bill reported to be in the tens of millions of dollars.

Gloria, 33, known as the "punk princess" for her jet-set, rock-'n'-roll lifestyle, has been reorganizing the family's affairs. The tax bill stems from the 1990 death of Gloria's husband, Prince Johannes.

The family will sell furniture, silver, jewelry, paintings, ceramics and other items at an October auction, Sotheby's of London said Thursday. Also up for auction are about 75,000 bottles of wine from the cellars of Schloss St. Emmeram, the family's historic 500-room castle north of Munich.

Gloria is trustee for her 10-year-old son, Prince Albert, heir to the family title and fortune, estimated to be worth about $2 billion.

The Thurn und Taxis family founded the German postal system nearly 500 years ago.

BOSTON — John Chancellor ends his 43 years at NBC News reflecting on the 10 years he spent as resident pundit.

"It was an honor to be a guest in your home," Chancellor said during his final remarks for the network, which were taped Wednesday for broadcast Friday evening.

"It's not the end of an era, just the end of my era. I've sort of outlived the culture at NBC," said Chancellor, 65.

Chancellor

He chose to deliver the piece from atop a museum parking garage that affords a stunning view of the Boston skyline and the Charles River. Asked why the commentary was taped in Boston, he told The Boston Globe, "Why not? . . . Boston's such a civilized town."

Chancellor was a foreign correspondent for NBC, covered wars and 20 political conventions and anchored 2,860 network broadcasts before becoming a commentator.

Chancellor and his wife, Barbara, plan to live in Princeton, N.J., because of "good train service" and "a great library." He plans to write books, including one about television, politics and life in America.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Charlie Daniels believes Bob Dylan and William Shakespeare have a lot in common.

The country music star says he admires Shakespeare "for the way he used the English language and put the words together."

"I kind of compare Dylan in his time and his vernacular to that very unique way with words," Daniels said in the July issue of the Country Music Association's Close Up magazine.

Daniels, a fiddler, guitar-player and singer, played on Dylan's "Nashville Skyline" album before going on to his own career and hit records like "The Devil Went Down to Georgia."

Exercise may help seniors keep strength

WASHINGTON (AP) — Working out regularly with weights may help older people retain youthful strength, researchers say. A study indicates that the strength of long-term older weight trainers can be about the same as that of healthy but nonexercising people in their 20s.

The report fits a research pattern demonstrating that much of what's been considered the aging process is really just the result of lack of exercise. The strength study looked at arm and leg muscles in men with an average age of 68 who had been lifting weights about three times a week, and who had been exercising since their 50s. They were compared with sedentary young men with an average age of 28 who also were tested to see how much force they could generate.

The older strength trainers were about as strong as the younger men, the Danish researchers reported in a Scandinavian physiological journal.

"One of the major findings of this study was that elderly subjects can maintain their muscle function," the article said.

However, it notes that few people were tested — seven strength-trained older subjects and an equal number of younger ones. This leaves open the possibility that luck had given the researchers a skewed sample of older people who happened to respond extremely well to exercise, and that testing larger numbers would yield different results.

The study also tested leg strength in similar numbers of older endurance runners and older sedentary people. In contrast to the weight trainers, leg strength of the endurance athletes was about the same as those of their sedentary age-mates. This indicates endurance training can't match the strength benefits of long-term strength training, said Dr. Maria A. Fiatarone, an assistant professor at Harvard Medical School.

Endurance training does help to control weight, and is linked to a lower risk of such conditions as heart disease. But older runners sometimes say they have to add weight training in order to keep up their endurance, Fiatarone said. It's possible that muscle fiber shrinks as endurance-only athletes age, she said.

The Danish study is the only one to show such striking ability to retain strength, said Fiatarone. But her research has found that sedentary people in their 90s can increase their strength — and thus their ability to handle the chores of daily life — by starting exercise.

The Danish researchers also did muscle biopsies, and found that tissue from the older weight-trainers looked much like that of younger men.

A separate study found what may be another way in which the older body holds onto strength. The researchers looked at nerves, and the muscles those nerves controlled, in the arms of 20 men ages 61-80 and 24 others ages 22-38.

The older men had about half the number of nerve cells as their younger counterparts, but had lost only a third of the force, said Dr. William F. Brown, a professor of neurology at Tufts University School of Medicine, Boston.

FAMILY MATTERS

Children hurt by parents' divorce

By Jim May, Ph.D.

DEAR FAMILY: My best friend is involved in a messy divorce from her husband. He was a very cold husband to her and never had a real relationship with their two girls. The oldest girl is 9 and seems to be doing OK with the divorce, but then she never has been very talkative. The 6-year-old is the one who worries me. She has gone from a happy-go-lucky child to a brooding, angry child almost overnight.

May

I have tried to help my friend and have encouraged her to seek counseling for her and the girls. Right now she doesn't want to do anything to give her "ex" any reason to be angry at her or the girls. She says that he won't listen to her when she tries to tell him that something is wrong with (younger daughter). He only gets more aloof and won't talk any more. She's just trying to get this thing over as soon as she can, with as little hassle as possible.

I can appreciate what's going on with her, but I have always felt particularly close to (younger daughter) and it hurts me to see her so upset. Is there anything that you can suggest that I can do to help? WORRIED FRIEND

DEAR WORRIED: Your friend and her children are fortunate to have a friend like you. Continue encouraging your friend to seek counseling for herself and the girls. Young children often benefit from "play therapy," which can help them express themselves without words. Divorce recovery workshops that we are so fortunate to have in our town have simultaneous children's and adults' compohents (for example, Golf Course Road Church of Christ, First United Methodist Church and Hospice's Rainbow Program). All of us, regardless of age, can be helped by being around others who are experiencing similar losses, pains and challenges.

Vicki Lansky offers the following visual metaphor to help children with some of the pain and confusion of divorce: "Show your children a lighted candle and indicate that the flame represents your love. Then light another candle off of that flame to represent the other parent's love. Neither is diminished. A third candle can be lit from either of these two flames. Again, neither flame is diminished. The moral: There is plenty of love to go around!" ("Divorce Book for Parents")

You did not ask this, but I have been waiting for an opportunity to share the Wisconsin "Child's Bill of Rights." A child has:

- The right to be treated as an interested and affected person and not as a pawn.
- The right to grow up in the home environment that will best guarantee an opportunity to achieve mature and responsible citizenship.
- The right to the day-by-day love, care, discipline and protection of the custodial parent.
- The right to know the non-custodial or each parent having joint custody and to have the benefit of such parent's love and guidance through adequate visitation.
- The right to a positive and constructive relationship with both parents, with neither parent permitted to degrade the other in the child's mind.
- The right to have moral and ethical values inculcated by precept and example, and to have limits set for behavior so that the child may develop self-discipline early in life.
- The right to the most adequate level of economic support that can be provided by the efforts of both parents.
- The right to the same opportunities for education that the child would have had if the family unit had not been transformed.
- The right to such periodic review of custodial arrangements and child-support orders as the parents' circumstances and the child's benefit require.
- The right to the recognition of the fact that children involved in a divorce are always disadvantaged parties, and the law must take affirmative steps to assure their welfare.

I believe that if all of us will keep these "rights" in mind, we can help our children through this difficult process.

THE CENTERS FOR CHILDREN AND PARENTING OFFER THE FOLLOWING WAYS THAT WE CAN PRAISE OUR CHILDREN:

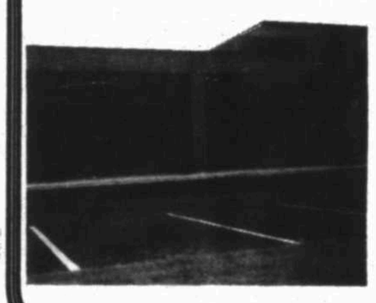

"Wow," "Way to go," "You're special," "Outstanding," "Excellent," "Great," "Well done," "Fantastic," "Awesome," "Bingo," "Now you've got it," "Super job," "You're a real trooper," "You care," "You're growing up," "What a good listener," "You're a joy," "You're a real treasure," and then there's always big hugs and kisses too!

Jim May is the director of the Family Wellness Center.

DEAR ABBY

Little bit of laundry brings woman big load of trouble

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I could kick myself! It's a long story, but I'll try to condense it as a warning to unmarried women everywhere. If a man asks you to do his laundry, show him the door and ask him not to call you anymore.

Van Buren

I'm 40, and this guy I had been seeing a short time noticed that I had a washer and dryer in my house, so he asked if he could bring his laundry over. Forty red flags should have sprung up when he hit me with that question, but I was caught off guard and said yes. Well, he brought his dirty laundry over every week for two years, and like an idiot I did it for him like a hired hand.

My point is, the laundry thing summed up the whole man. He was a manipulator and a salesman, and if I'd had the brains to see what a user he was, I would have politely declined to be a free laundry service, and never seen him again. I could have saved myself five years of pain: two years of seeing him exclusively, and three years of being harassed.

Please print this, Abby. Women are better off alone than with a dominating, manipulating creep who does a convincing impersonation of a gentleman. Sign me ... STUPID

DEAR LADY: Don't call yourself "stupid," — stupid people never learn. "Wiser Now" is more appropriate. Thanks for giving other women the benefit of your experience.

DEAR ABBY: Once again I have endured a daylong business meeting trapped in a room with a woman whose strong perfume made me ill. I know when this is going to happen because I can smell the odor before I can identify where it is coming from. These women are everywhere. They are at the symphony, in business conferences, in classrooms, on airplanes, in church, in restaurants, etc.

Please don't tell me to leave the room or change my seat — I can't. And please don't suggest that I take medication. I do.

Kindly tell the manufacturers of these scents that "stronger" does not mean better. A body cleansed with ordinary toilet soap and water, followed by underarm deodorant is much nicer. You would be doing millions of us an enormous favor by making the (female) public aware of the above facts. — HAS A HEADACHE IN DALLAS

DEAR HAS: Women in the workplace (and men, too) would be more popular with their co-workers if they would wear lighter scents. Less is more, particularly to those who suffer from allergies.

DEAR ABBY: What memories those letters about slapping a kid in the face brought back!

We were blessed with two children who could be disciplined verbally, although there were a few swats on their behinds during their younger years. We weren't accustomed to hearing our children use nasty language, so when our 16-year-old son smarted off, I slapped his face!

I immediately realized I never should have done that to a 16-year-old boy, so I looked up at him and said, "I'm sorry you made me do that."

We both started to laugh and said we were sorry, and he has never "made me" slap him again. He's 27 now. — VAL IN MINNEAPOLIS

DEAR ABBY: Put this in your "Now I've Seen Everything" file: My husband and I sent a check for an out-of-state wedding present. We could not attend due to the distance.

The following month, while doing my checkbook, that particular check turned up with my canceled checks. In the "reference" space was written, "Thank you!"

It was the only thanks we received. I guess it saved postage, right? — PUZZLED IN ROME, N.Y.

DEAR PUZZLED: Right. For their first wedding anniversary, send them a book by Miss Manners.

Hazel "Hurricane" Parker takes a swing at the ball during practice at the Golden Girls intramural softball league in Vienna, Va., last month. Parker, 69, is cleanup hitter for her team, one of the best over-40 women's softball teams in the nation.

Seniors still swing - on ball field

By Anne Gearan

VIENNA, Va. (AP) — Hazel "Hurricane" Parker digs in at home plate and shoulders a bat, preparing to take her swings as the 69-year-old cleanup hitter for one of the nation's best over-40 women's softball teams.

She plays with a brace on her arthritic left knee, and a substitute runs the bases in her place.

But her swing is strong, and she regularly sends the ball into the far reaches of the scruffy suburban softball field where the five-team Golden Girls intramural league plays twice a week. She also plays catcher and first base.

"We have a good time out there, but we play to win," said Ms. Parker, removing the black, wrap-around sunglasses that make her appear formidable.

The Golden Girls league is an example of a growing interest in athletics among older people and a powerful boost to the self-esteem of older women, players and fitness experts said.

"I thought, 'Gee, I don't know if I can do this,'" said the league's president, Bettie Pell, 53. "But joining up was really one of the best things I've done for myself lately. I met a tremendous group of women and had fun."

Her only lament is not being old enough to compete in the Senior Olympics, held every other year for athletes 55 and older.

A team made up of the Golden Girls' best players was the defending champion going into last month's competition in Baton Rouge, La., but lost to a Michigan team in the championship game. The average age of this year's Golden Girls Olympic squad was 58.

"I thought, 'Gee, I don't know if I can do this.' But joining up was really one of the best things I've done for myself lately. I met a tremendous group of women and had fun."

— Bettie Pell
league president

At each Olympics, sponsored by the National Senior Sports Organization, more women's teams show up, and the competition is stiffer as more communities form leagues for older women, participants said.

"The truth is that an awful lot of older adults have not taken good care of themselves and are in pretty rotten shape," said York E. Onnen, director of program development for the President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sports.

"It is such a refreshing thing to see women getting involved in exercise and sports programs, many for the first time in their lives."

Many of the Golden Girls players are novices, but others are lifelong athletes or women who played when they were young, before families and jobs interfered.

Often women who might have continued playing softball or other sports into middle age were held back by a social stigma that competitive physical activity was somehow unbecoming, Onnen said.

"That is definitely changing. We are very proud to be out there playing," Ms. Pell said.

Ms. Parker played softball avidly as a child, hitting and fielding with her brothers and their friends on a farm in North Carolina. She didn't play for many years before joining the Golden Girls.

"It sure feels good out to be out there," she said.

She is not the oldest player in the league. Janet Hull, 75, drives 50 miles from Baltimore to play first base.

The 4-year-old league has grown from 16 players its first year to 104 this season, said spokeswoman Toni Letaw.

The league sends its best players to a variety of tournaments each year. In more than a dozen tournaments since 1990 the Golden Girls have placed second on three occasions and won the rest, Ms. Letaw said.

No one compiles statistics for senior women's leagues, but Ms. Letaw believes the Golden Girls may have the nation's winningest record.

The league uses special rules aimed at preventing injuries, said Aubrey Jones, coach of a league team called Mint Condition. Another team calls itself the Pop Tarts.

The modified softball rules include a ban on sliding and allow players to overrun the bases.

Players greet mistakes with good-natured heckling.

When one woman whiffed a fat pitch on a recent afternoon, several players shouted at once: "Hazel would have hit that!"

Former WAC celebrates 100th birthday

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Etta P. Johnson celebrated her 100th birthday by swapping war stories with family members, friends and World War II veterans.

Mrs. Johnson, whose nickname is "Sarge," is considered the oldest living member of the Women's Army Corps Veterans' Association.

Now living at the Orlando Memorial Convalescent Center, Mrs. Johnson said recently two things made her join the Women's Army Air Corps in 1943. One was that the Army "needed help and because everyone else was there. So I went."

And the other reason? "Men," she said.

Most Corps members served in medical and clerical fields.

Jordan gambling

NEW YORK (AP) — The NBA will meet Monday with Richard Esquinas to discuss his allegations that Michael Jordan was a compulsive gambler who lost $1.25 million to him in golf wagers in 1991.

The meeting will not be at the league's office, nor will any NBA officials be present, NBA spokesman Brian McIntyre said Thursday.

The league had retained Frederick Lacey, a former federal judge and U.S. attorney, as a consultant. McIntyre said Lacey and "whoever he deems" will represent the NBA at the meeting, at a site to be determined.

Kemp bumps head

NEW YORK (AP) — Who said doing commercials is easy work?

Shawn Kemp of the Seattle SuperSonics fell during a dunk and banged his head on the floor Thursday while filming a commercial at Pratt University.

The 6-foot-10, 230-pound forward was doing a series of dunks as part of a commercial for Reebok, and the rim gave way on one of his slams.

Company spokesman Dave Fogelson said Kemp was taken to Bellevue Hospital for precautionary treatment and released after about an hour. A SuperSonics spokeswoman said X-rays were negative.

"He's fine," Fogelson said. "He has a good-sized headache but he has no bruises. He's resting in his hotel room."

Kemp was scheduled to film the commercial for two days, but it was unclear if shooting would resume Friday.

"It depends on how he feels when he wakes up tomorrow," Fogelson said.

Dodgers don patch

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Los Angeles Dodgers will wear a patch on their right sleeve in memory of Hall of Famers Roy Campanella and Don Drysdale.

Dodger players began wearing the patch Thursday during a doubleheader against the New York Mets at Shea Stadium.

Campanella died of a heart attack at his home in suburban Woodland Hills on June 26 while Drysdale died of an apparent heart attack in Montreal last weekend.

A button will also be produced that will be a replica of the patch worn by the players. The button will be worn by all Dodger employees at Dodger Stadium.

A tribute to Campanella and Drysdale will be held before the Dodgers game against the Montreal Expos at Dodger Stadium on Friday, July 16.

Fielder heads All-Star reserves

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Cecil Fielder, snubbed for last year's All-Star game, led the list of reserves added Thursday to an American League team that includes seven members of the World Series champion Toronto Blue Jays.

The Atlanta Braves, Toronto's opponent last October, placed five players on the National League team, including pitchers Tom Glavine, Steve Avery and John Smoltz.

Colorado's Andres Galarraga, leading the NL with a .397 batting average, San Francisco's John Burkett, topping the majors with 13 wins and Chicago White Sox pitcher Jack McDowell, with 12 victories, also were included on the 28-man rosters. The AL will try to extend its five-game winning streak, its longest streak in the series, on Tuesday night in Baltimore.

As usual, some players having big seasons were left off. Detroit catcher Mickey Tettleton, tied for the AL lead with 23 home runs and tied for second with 69 RBIs, was omitted. So was Cincinnati outfielder Kevin Mitchell, batting .356 with 15 home runs and 50 RBIs despite limited playing time. Injured San Francisco third baseman Matt Williams, who has hit 21 homers and leads the NL with 64 RBIs, was left off.

Also missing will be a few big-name players near the end of their careers. There was some thought that Nolan Ryan, George Brett, Robin Yount and recently released Carlton Fisk might be special additions, a practice the leagues occasionally use when picking their clubs to honor longtime stars.

Let's play 20 !!

PHILADELPHIA — Trouble sleeping? Come to Veterans Stadium. No matter what time it is, there's probably a game going on.

Twice within the past week the Phillies have been hosts to daylight-to-daybreak endurance marathons. They win them, too.

Wednesday night they went 20 innings to beat the Los Angeles Dodgers 7-6. The game took 6 hours, 10 minutes, ending at 1:47 a.m. Thursday.

Five days earlier they needed 12 hours, 5 minutes before splitting a doubleheader with San Diego.

That one involved 5 hours, 54 minutes in rain delays. The first game started early Friday evening and the second game ended at 4:42 a.m. on Saturday.

"Twenty innings last night and walking out at 4:40 last Saturday — I've spent a lot of time in this ballpark," Phillies outfielder Pete Incaviglia said Thursday.

"I thought that 28-game road trip that I took with Houston last year never would be topped. But last week, the thought reoccurred that you never say never," he said.

Len Dykstra ended the latest all-nighter with a two-run double after the Dodgers went ahead with a run in the top of the 20th. And not only was it an endless night, it was a very hot one — 94 degrees — compounded by oppressive humidity.

"All the players seemed to be OK during the game," Phillies manager Jim Fregosi said. He said checked catcher Darren Daulton a couple of times because of all the equipment he wears.

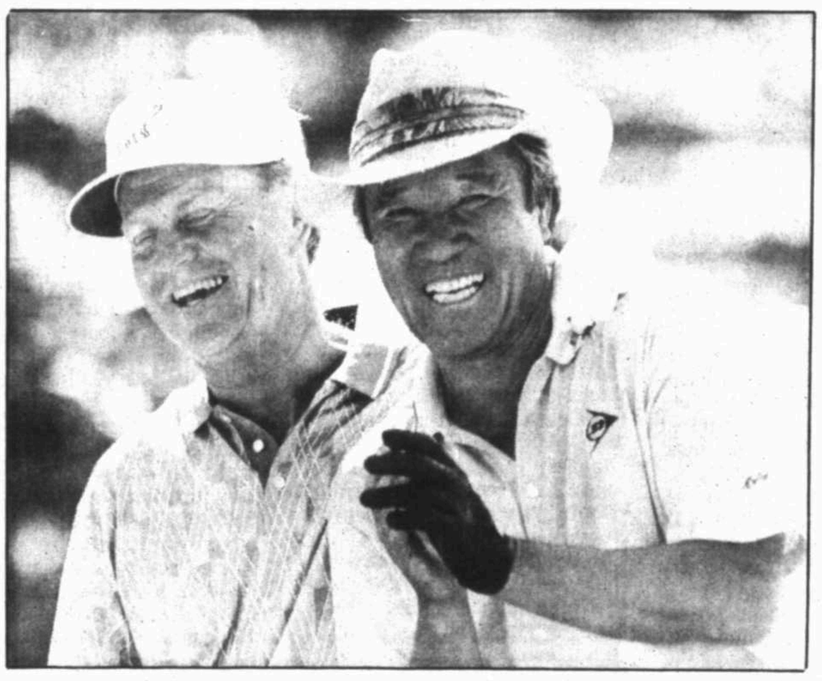

Asked how much weight he might have sweated off, Daulton said, "I didn't even weigh myself. I wasn't thinking about anything except going home and going to bed."

Mickey Morandini, who got a big hit in the 20th-inning rally, slumped in front of his dressing space and said, "I was tired. Everybody was tired. Everybody wanted to get it over with at that point, whatever happened."

Dodger relievers held the Phillies hitless for 12 2-3 innings — from the sev-

Golfers Jack Nicklaus, left, and Isao Aoki, of Japan, share a light-hearted moment during the opening round of the U.S. Seniors Open Championship. Lightning at Denver's historic Cherry Hills Country Club prompted a 1 hour, 56 minute delay in play as 20 golfers failed to finish their round.

DENVER — Chi Chi Rodriguez, returning to the vicinity of his first professional triumph 30 years ago, had a 4-under-par 67 Thursday and claimed the first-round lead in the weather-delayed U.S. Senior Open.

■ U.S. Senior Open

A big-name leaderboard saw Jack Nicklaus one shot behind at 68, with Lee Trevino, Bob Murphy, Jim Colbert and Larry Ziegler at 69.

In a group at 70 were Ray Floyd, Gary Player, Miller Barber, Isao Aoki, Dale Douglass, Tommy Aaron and Kermit Zarley.

Lightning at historic Cherry Hills Country Club caused a 1-hour, 56-minute delay and darkness prevented 21 players with late tee times from finishing. They were to conclude their rounds early Friday before the start of the second round.

Defending champion Larry Laoretti was among those still on the course when darkness cut short the round. The cigar-chomping Laoretti was 1-over through 17 holes.

NCAA recommends Alamodome for Final Four

■ If measure is approved, San Antonio would host 1998 college basketball championships.

By Jay Jorden
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS — An NCAA committee's recommendation Thursday that San Antonio host the Final Four in 1998 will enable Texas colleges to showcase their talent, the Southwest Conference commissioner said.

This year's opening of the Alamodome came just in time for San Antonio's Final Four bid committee to make a successful presentation to the National Collegiate Athletic Association men's basketball committee.

"We're all really excited about it. This is great news," said SWC Commissioner Steve Hatchell in Dallas. "And it's great that we got it for '98. The people of San Antonio are wonderful. We're proud and honored to be a part of that team."

As one of nine San Antonio committee members, Hatchell spoke to the NCAA panel on July 4 in Newport, R.I.

"It is good for the conference to showcase the state," he said. "We will have the NCAA regionals next year in Dallas and will push for a lot more such events in Dallas, so that the state of Texas becomes synonymous with basketball."

The NCAA committee, meeting in Overland Park, Kan., also Thursday recommended four other sites for future tournaments. They are St. Petersburg, Fla., in 1999; Indianapolis, 2000; Minneapolis, 2001; and Atlanta, 2002.

The recommendations were made to the NCAA Executive Committee, which was scheduled to act on them at a meeting Aug. 12-13 in Avon, Colo.

"San Antonio has never hosted a Final Four, and 1998 was the first available date," said Hatchell. "The selection is a clear indication on the part of the committee that they have great faith in the ability of our team. We are not just going to stage it, but put on a memorable one."

He said the Alamodome will have had a good shakedown before the Final Four, with an estimated 250 other basketball games scheduled there before 1998.

"We are excited. It's another business day, but we're taking time out to reflect on what this means for San Antonio," said Steve Moore, executive director of the San Antonio Convention and Visitor's Bureau.

Rogers' 5-hitter gives Texas win over Jays

Associated Press

■ AL Roundup

TORONTO — Kenny Rogers pitched a five-hitter and the Texas Rangers took advantage of Jack Morris' wildness to beat the slumping Toronto Blue Jays 6-1 Thursday night.

Rogers (6-6) had a career-high 10 strikeouts and walked two in his second complete game of the season.

The Blue Jays have lost seven of their last eight games.

The Rangers scored six runs in the sixth inning as Morris walked four batters, including bases-loaded passes to Ivan Rodriguez and Doug Strange that put Texas ahead 2-0.

Mario Diaz then chased Morris (5-9) with a two-run double, and Jon Shave followed with another two-run double off reliever Woody Williams to make it 6-0.

Morris, whose ERA jumped from 7.27 to 7.41, gave up six runs on six hits in 5 2-3 innings. He struck out three and walked five.

The Blue Jays had base runners in each of the first four innings, but couldn't score. Toronto got its only run in the sixth when Paul Molitor hit his 10th homer of the season.

Red Sox 11, Athletics 9

OAKLAND, Calif. — Mo Vaughn took advantage of a shaky Todd Van Poppel, hitting his first career grand slam and driving in five runs as the Boston Red Sox beat the Oakland Athletics.

Vaughn's five RBIs were a career-high, and Billy Hatcher drove in four runs for Boston, which has won 13 of its last 16. For Oakland, Troy Neel drove in a career-high seven runs.

Van Poppel (0-1), a high-school phenom drafted by the A's in 1990, was called up earlier this week to fill a hole in the rotation. The 21-year-old right-hander showed he still has far to go to fulfill his promise, getting rocked for eight runs on five hits.

Jeff Russell pitched the ninth inning for his 19th save.

Making his second big-league start and first since September 1991, Van Poppel couldn't find the plate in the first inning. He walked the first three batters before striking out Andre Dawson. Vaughn then drove a 3-1 pitch over the left-field fence for his first career grand slam and 13th homer.

Van Poppel got out of the inning by striking out Carlos Quintana and getting Scott Cooper to fly out.

Oakland scored in the bottom of the first on Troy Neel's single after Ruben Sierra tripled off starter John Dopson (7-5). Neel had four hits.

White Sox 12, Orioles 5

BALTIMORE — Bo Jackson homered in Chicago's six-run first inning, and Ellis Burks had a homer and five RBIs to lead the White Sox past the Baltimore Orioles.

Ron Karkovice also homered and Tim Raines had four hits for the White Sox, who led 10-0 after three innings and coasted to their fourth win in five games. Chicago is 7-2 against Baltimore this season.

Jason Bere (4-3) allowed five runs in five-plus innings. Donn Pall pitched the next three innings, and Bobby Thigpen worked the ninth.

Angels 4, Yankees 3

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Damion Easley's single capped a three-run rally in the ninth inning, lifting the California Angels past the New York Yankees.

The Yankees fell to 1-6 on their West Coast trip. California won its third straight game.

Yankees starter Melido Perez (5-8) took a two-hitter and a 3-1 lead into the ninth. But Chad Curtis led off with an infield single, Tim Salmon doubled and Chili Davis walked, loading the bases with no outs.

Steve Howe relieved and Torey Lovullo hit a sacrifice fly, and the other runners moved to second and third on right fielder Danny Tartabull's throwing error. After an intentional walk to pinch-hitter Stan Javier, Steve Farr relieved.

Brewers 15, Twins 3

MILWAUKEE — Billy Spiers drove in five runs and the Milwaukee Brewers, behind a six-run first inning and a season-high 23 hits, routed the Minnesota Twins.

B.J. Surhoff, who had four RBIs, and Greg Vaughn, celebrating his selection to the All-Star team for the first time, had four hits each for the Brewers in their highest scoring game of the season.

The start of the game was delayed 92 minutes by rain and the Twins wished it had kept pouring.

The Brewers, with the lowest team batting average in the league, drove Kevin Tapani (3-11) out and to his fifth straight loss with six hits in the six-run first inning.

Royals 6, Tigers 5

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Mike Macfarlane doubled home the winning run with one out in the 11th inning, and the Kansas City Royals beat the Detroit Tigers.

Hubie Brooks doubled with one out off Buddy Groom (0-1), the sixth Tigers pitcher. After an intentional walk to Kevin McReynolds, Macfarlane doubled.

Jeff Montgomery (3-2), Kansas City's only selection for the All-Star game, pitched two perfect innings for the victory.

Dodgers 11, Mets 8, 1st game
Mets 6, Dodgers 3, 2nd game

NEW YORK — All-Star Bobby Bonilla hit a three-run homer in the 10th inning to give the New York Mets a victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers and a doubleheader split.

In the first game, rookie Mike Piazza hit his 17th homer of the season to help the Dodgers beat the Mets. Piazza is also going the the All-Star game as a reserve.

Joe Orsulak opened the 10th with a double off Rod Nichols (0-1) and Jeromy Burnitz was walked intentionally before Bonilla hit his 20th home run of the season. He also hit a homer in the opener.

Jeff Innis pitched 1 1-3 innings of one-hit relief for the victory.

Los Angeles tied it 3-3 in the seventh inning on Mike Sharperson's RBI double.

The Dodgers played a 20-inning game in Philadelphia on Wednesday night and didn't arrive at their New York hotel until 4 a.m. The first game against the Mets started with the temperature reading of 97 degrees.

"It wasn't as hot as last night in Philadelphia," Piazza said. "It was good to get a runaway game. Kevin (Gross) wasn't as sharp as he would like to have been, but he bore down and got the outs when we needed it."

Eric Karros drove in three runs for Los Angeles, including his ninth homer of the season. Each team had 17 hits in the first game.

Expos 5, Padres 4

Flannery leads after 5-under 66

Associated Press

■ Anheuser-Busch Golf

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — Rookie John Flannery shook off an early double bogey and shot a 5-under-par 66 for a share of the lead after Thursday's steamy first round of the Anheuser-Busch Golf Classic.

Flannery, the 1992 Hogan Tour player of the year who led the 1992 Permian Basin Open after two rounds at Odessa's The Club at Mission Dorado, birdied three of his last four holes at Kingsmill Golf Club to tie Jim Gallagher Jr. and Trevor Dodds.

Unlike most of the contenders, Flannery, Gallagher and Dodds began their rounds in the afternoon, when the temperature rose into the upper 90s and a thick haze settled over the 6,797-yard layout along the James River.

"I started to get a little lightheaded over some of my shots late in the round," Flannery said.

"I had no problems staying calm today," Dodds added. "I had no energy to waste."

Gallagher's shirt and the waist area of his trousers were soaked with perspiration when he walked off the course.

"You've got to really concentrate when it's like this," he said. "Maybe that's why I play better in the heat."

Frank Conner, one of the afternoon players, finished his round with a member of the gallery carrying his bag after his caddy collapsed and had to be taken to the first-aid trailer for treatment.

Kingsmill resident Curtis Strange was joined at 4-under 67 by Lanny Wadkins, Keith Clearwater, Morris Hatalsky, Brandel Chamblee, Dave Rummels, Kirk Triplett and Richard Zokol.

Of the top 20 money winners on the 1993 tour, only three are in Williamsburg, and two of them failed to break par. No. 13 Davis Love III had an even-par 71 and No. 20 Scott Simpson had a 72. Chip Beck, in 19th place, was in a large group at 68.

That group also included defending champion David Peoples and Mike Hulbert, the event's 1991 winner.

Several top players wilted in the oppressive heat and humidity.

Phil Mickelson was 4-under through 15 holes but finished bogey-par-double bogey for a 70.

Ian Baker-Finch had six bogeys and a double bogey in a 5-over 76 that put him in danger of missing Friday's cut in the $1.1 million event.

Flannery birdied two of his first three holes but gave both strokes back at the 437-yard fourth, where his drive settled on the side of a steep hill running along the left side of the fairway. He hit his second shot 25 feet over the green and into deep rough, failed to reach the green with his third, chipped past the pin with his fourth and two-putted for a double bogey.

Flannery steadied himself by saving par from a greenside bunker on the next hole, and birdied the 365-yard sixth to get below par again.

Baseball in need of commish

By Jim Litke
AP Sports Writer

The last time baseball went without a commissioner for any length of time, Bill Veeck sent a midget to bat in a game. There's plenty of monkey business going on this time, too. Somehow, it just doesn't seem as funny.

■ Opinion

Next week's All-Star game marks 10 months since Fay Vincent checked out of his office and into the estate of England's Lord Asquith, a place much better-suited to his imperial bearing. But just like Kevin in "Home Alone," the owners who crowded into Vincent's old space are having too much fun to miss him. But they should.

Having no one to yell at you, doing and eating whatever you want whenever you want must seem grand for the moment. But someone will have to clean up the mess sometime. And what a mess they've made in such a short time:

■ In San Diego, Fred McGriff is said to be on the trading block and the recent departure of Gary Sheffield proved beyond a doubt that owner and entertainment mogul Tom Werner will sell off anybody who can play this game. Apparently, his plan is to re-stock the lineup with extras for a new movie that will be called, "Honey, I Shrunk The Padres!"

■ In Boca Raton, Fla., Pete Rose is rehabilitated to the point where he can write travel pieces for airline magazines — his where-to-go-in-Boca recommendations are featured this month on American Airlines. But he still has no one to write to about trying to get into the Hall of Fame. And now Reggie Jackson is threatening to invite him to Cooperstown when he gets inducted Aug. 1.

■ In Philadelphia, officials ensured a yawner by starting the second game of a doubleheader when even zany people are safely tucked in bed, nodding off to reruns of "Late Night with David Letterman."

■ In Boston, a study released Thursday concluded that baseball was the first pro sports league whose affirmative-action efforts amounted to running in place.

Since 1991, minority employment in baseball management, administrative and front office positions has increased only from 16 to 17 percent, according to Richard Lapchick, whose Center for the Study of Sport in Society at Northeastern University issued its fourth annual "racial report card."

Lapchick blames baseball's slowed progress on the lack of a commissioner.

"When David Stern took over at the NBA, he set a tone. It is directly attributable to Paul Tagliabue that the NFL has surpassed Major League Baseball in minority hiring," he said. "Fay Vincent was just getting a start, but since he's left, there has been no leadership."

Add to this a number of problems that have gathered dust for some time — an unsettled labor situation, a Congress uncomfortable with baseball's special antitrust exemption, an unnecessarily risky television package and the uncertain shape of realignment and the playoffs. Then, it becomes clear why nobody, especially this current group of owners, should be without a commissioner for long.

In 1951, after Happy Chandler was forced out as baseball's overseer, Veeck tried to boost the home box office by sending 3-foot-7, 65-pound Eddie Gaedel to the plate to pinch-hit against the Tigers.

His fellow owners were hardly amused. And imagining the integrity of the game at the mercy of Veeck's ingenuity, they quickly made sure Gaedel's career at-bats totaled only one.

Twenty-five years later, Bowie Kuhn was firmly in place as commissioner when another huckster-owner, Charlie Finley, cast a more serious pall on the integrity of the game. Looking to boost the bottom line of his bank account, Finley offered pitcher Vida Blue to the Yankees, and reliever Rollie Fingers and outfielder Joe Rudi to the Red Sox, for $3.5 million.

Kuhn voided the deals even as Fingers and Rudi sat on the bench in Boston, invoking a "competitive balance" rule that he'd made up just for the occasion.

Baseball's image is being challenged from every side, by forces large and small, light-hearted and serious, purposeful and unintentional. It needs someone in place to assure the perception — if not the reality — that the mess is going to be cleaned up some time.

SENIORS: Arnold Palmer fires 4-over par, 75

(From 1C)

eighth on the money list with $392,102 despite being hampered early in the season by a broken rib, took dead aim on the pins with his iron shots. He made six birdie putts, four from inside eight feet.

"I think I'm a better player now than any time in my life," said Rodriguez, who won the 1963 Denver Open, which was played at nearby Denver Country Club.

Rodriguez gave credit to a 7-wood, which has replaced his 2-iron, and a new putter.

"That putter is older than dirt," Rodriguez said. "I got it at Sleepy Hollow about a month ago. I was looking for a new set of irons, and this putter was sticking out like a sore thumb in this barrel. It was begging me, 'Chi Chi, take me out of here.' The grip is terrible, but it's legal. I hit a couple of putts on the putting green and loved it.

"I won the Tallahassee Open in 1979 with a putter just like it. I can aim it real good."

Nicklaus displayed a steady short game, pitching or chipping to get birdies or save par on four occasions.

"This was a good opening round for me," Nicklaus said. "But I've been shooting good rounds on the first day in almost every tournament and haven't been seen much from since."

Although scores were generally low for a USGA event, Nicklaus didn't expect it to continue for four rounds.

"Cherry Hills has always stood up pretty well in the end," he said. "If she ever lost out, we wouldn't be back here. What's the lowest score ever shot here — 278 in the (1985) PGA? Mike Souchak was 135, I think, after two rounds in 1960 (in the U.S. Open won by Arnold Palmer). What won? 280.

"I think this course has always gotten tougher as the week goes on. You get some good first rounds, and everybody says, 'They're going to shoot up Cherry Hills,' and nobody ever has. Somebody might break 280, I suppose."

GAME: Dykstra double drives in winning run

(From 1C)

enth to the 20th.

Then, poof, everything went wrong for Los Angeles.

"It was a frustrating game to lose," catcher Mike Piazza said. "We got good pitching from guys who haven't had much work."

The teams used 39 players — including 13 pitchers — and produced 29 hits, 13 runs, 26 strikeouts and 19 walks. The Phillies had nobody left in the bullpen and only Ruben Amaro and Todd Pratt on the bench.

Philadelphia has no corner on the endurance market. The Dodgers, who on Wednesday used all their position players and bullpen and wound up with Rod Nichols on the mound, went from the game to a doubleheader on Thursday in New York. Nichols was scheduled to start a game Thursday.

The Dodgers twice went 22 innings in 1989, losing to Houston on June 3 and beating Montreal on Aug. 23. They also played the longest game in major league history, 26 innings in a 1-1 tie with Boston in 1920.

■ Box score/3C

The Phillies' previous longest game was 21 innings on July 17, 1918, in a 2-1 loss to Chicago. The Phillies played 20 innings three previous times, losing to the Cubs in 1905, beating Brooklyn in 1919 and Atlanta in 1973.

Dodgers manager Tommy Lasorda was in no mood for questions about the disappointment of losing so close after so much time.

"Sure it was ... tough," Lasorda shouted after the game. "This kind of game is tougher to take. We had a lot of chances."

Los Angeles took a 6-5 lead in the 20th when Jose Offerman scored on a fielder's choice. Philadelphia loaded the bases in the bottom of the inning. And with one out, Dykstra hit a liner that bounced over the fence and into the left-field bullpen to score two runs.

Dodgers reliever Rick Trilicek had pitched five hitless innings before the 20th. Mike Williams (1-0) pitched six innings for the victory. He gave up one run, walked four and had a strikeout.

STARS: Rangers' Gonzalez team's only other reserve

(From 1C)

Last year, Fielder, one of the most popular players in the game these days, was overlooked despite leading the majors with 75 RBIs for the Detroit Tigers.

This year, Fielder has hit 23 home runs, tied for the major league lead with Tettleton, and leads baseball with 76 RBIs. AL manager Cito Gaston of Toronto, Fielder's former batting coach with the Blue Jays, made sure he made it.

Gaston will have seven of his current players with him at Camden Yards. Pitchers Pat Hentgen and Duane Ward, outfielder Devon White and designated hitter Paul Molitor — the DH will be used in this year's game — were added to the team. They will join Blue Jays first baseman John Olerud, second baseman Roberto Alomar and outfielder Joe Carter, all elected as starters by the fans.

NL manager Bobby Cox of Atlanta will have several of his players. Along with Glavine, Smoltz and Avery, shortstop Jeff Blauser was added.

Philadelphia pitcher Terry Mulholland, San Diego pitcher Andy Benes, San Francisco pitchers Rod Beck and Burkett, Houston pitcher Darryl Kile, Los Angeles catcher Mike Piazza, Pittsburgh shortstop Jay Bell, Cubs first baseman Mark Grace, Philadelphia third baseman Dave Hollins and Montreal outfielder Marquis Grissom will be making their first All-Star appearances.

The NL's other reserves and pitchers are: Cincinnati outfielder Bobby Kelly, Florida reliever Bryan Harvey, Mets outfielder Bobby Bonilla, St. Louis reliever Lee Smith, San Diego outfielder Tony Gwynn and San Francisco second baseman Robby Thompson.

Filling out the AL's pitching staff are Mike Mussina of Baltimore, Rick Aguilera of Minnesota, Randy Johnson of Seattle, Jimmy Key of New York and Jeff Montgomery of Kansas City. The other reserves are Boston third baseman Scott Cooper, Chicago first baseman Frank Thomas, Cleveland second baseman Carlos Baerga and outfielder Albert Belle, Detroit shortstop Travis Fryman, Oakland catcher Terry Steinbach, Milwaukee outfielder Greg Vaughn and Texas outfielder Juan Gonzalez.

The starting lineup for the AL will be Olerud, Alomar, Baltimore shortstop Cal Ripken, New York third baseman Wade Boggs, catcher Ivan Rodriguez of Texas and outfielders Ken Griffey Jr. of Seattle, Kirby Puckett of Minnesota and Carter.

Prices fall

NEW YORK — Oil prices fell Thursday in futures trading as dealers anticipated progress in talks between Iraq and the U.N. over a limited sale of Iraqi oil.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in August settled at $17.79 per barrel, down 23 cents, at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Iraq and United Nations officials are haggling over the details of a $1.6 billion sale of Iraqi oil. The money would be used for food and medical supplies in Iraq and to cover part of the U.N. weapons inspectors' expenses.

A brief power failure at the World Trade Center disrupted telephone service and halted trading on the Nymex for more than an hour. The exchange reopened 15 minutes before the scheduled close.

Shortly before the shutdown, crude hit its low of the day at $17.55.

There was little news from the Iraqi-U.N. oil talks. The Iraqi representative said technical issues were discussed at the businesselike meeting. Iraq has rejected U.N. terms for the sale, saying they violate its sovereignty.

Natural gas prices were lower, with contracts for delivery in August settling at $2.126 per 1,000 cubic feet, down 3.2 cents.

Members of the Chevron Retirees Association will hold an old-fashioned ice cream social July 11 at Zody's Ice Cream Parlor, Midkiff and Loop 250. The social will be held from 2 to 4 p.m.

All Gulf and Chevron retiees are nvited to participate.

Dollar mixed

NEW YORK — The dollar was mixed Thursday as traders listened in on the Group of Seven talks in Tokyo for clues about the direction of foreign currencies.

In New York, the dollar traded late at 108.54 Japanese yen, up from 107.65 yen late Wednesday.

In New York, the British pound rose to $1.4960 from $1.4935 late Wednesday.

Stocks rally

NEW YORK — Stocks slipped into gear Thursday, moving broadly higher after a surprising increase in retail sales and a dip in the number of Americans filing for jobless benefits renewed optimism about the economy.

It was the second significant upward move by the market in as many days and followed two sessions of a combined more than 60-point loss.

The Dow Jones industrial average rose 38.75 points to 3,514.42.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 9 to 5 on the New York Stock Exchange.

The NYSE's composite index rose 2.65 to 248.33. The Nasdaq composite index rose 3.45 to 702.23, and at the American Stock Exchange, the market value index rose 0.76 to 432.55.

First-time jobless claims drop

■ Since applications are at the lowest level in five months, analysts think business cutbacks may be ending.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Applications by newly laid-off Americans for jobless benefits have fallen to their lowest level in five months, leading some analysts to suggest business cutbacks to reduce excessive inventories may be ending.

"It's consistent with the notion that the inventory correction, which has been an important factor in holding back (economic) growth, has probably passed its worst," contended Robert G. Dederick, an economist with the Northern Trust Co. in Chicago.

"It doesn't mean it's over and it doesn't mean we're going to get a burst of production," Dederick added. "But the biggest negative drag probably is behind us."

The Labor Department said Thursday that first-time claims for unemployment insurance dropped by 12,000 last week for the second week in a row. The 327,000 in new claims was the lowest since 325,000 applications were filed during the week ending Feb. 13.

Many analysts had predicted an increase of several thousand.

The four-week moving average, which smooths out the volatility of the weekly claims and is considered a better gauge of the labor situation, fell by 4,000, to 340,500. That was the lowest since the average stood at 339,500 during the four weeks ended May 22.

Dederick said the current economic sluggishness followed strong sales during the last half of 1992, which prompted aggressive ordering by many businesses.

Then, he said, "sales ran into a stone wall in the first quarter and suddenly we had an involuntary buildup in inventories" and a subsequent slowdown in orders and production.

"But we probably have passed the worst in the inventory correction and its impact on employment," Dederick said.

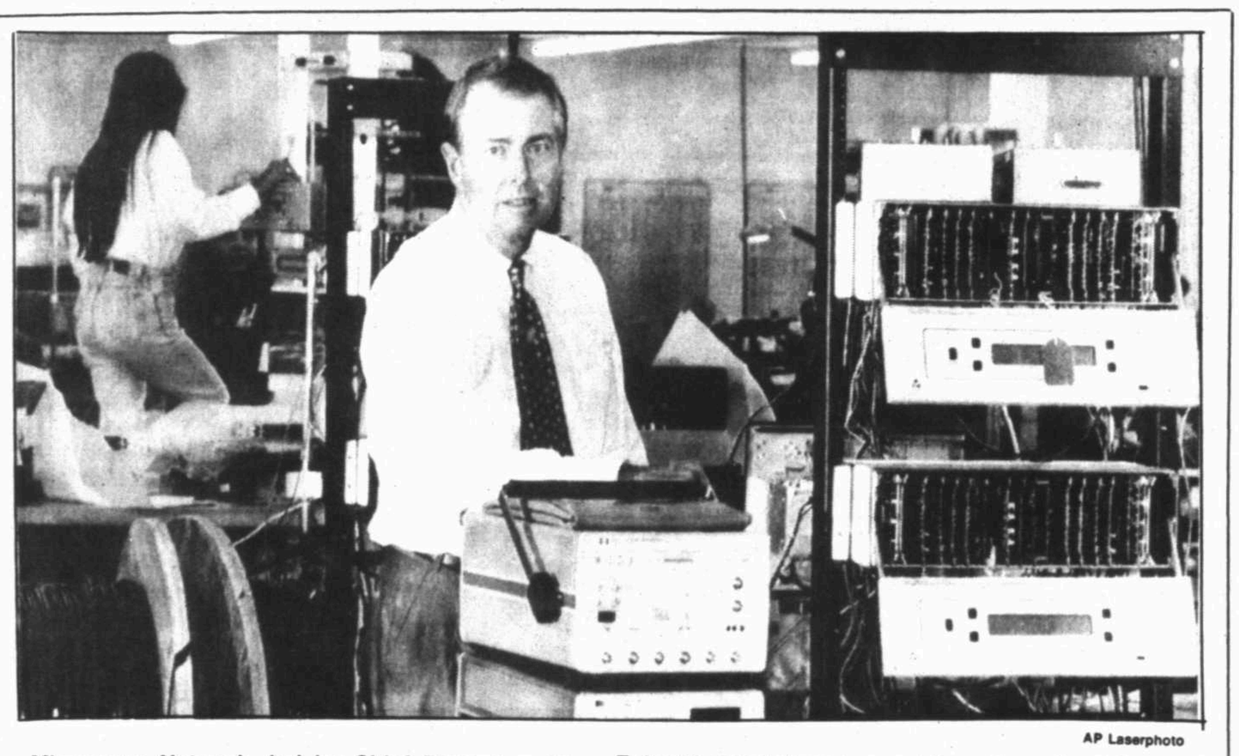

In addition to the regular claims during the week ended July 3, the Labor Department said 30,384 applications were filed under a federal emergency unemployment program during the week ended June 26, up from 29,022 a week earlier.

Twenty-eight states and territories reported decreases in regular claims during the week ended June 26, and 25 recorded increases.

States reporting the biggest declines were Illinois, 3,966; Indiana, 1,368; Delaware, 1,117; Alabama, 1,020, and Ohio, 1,000.

States with the largest increases were New Jersey, 1,694; Connecticut, 1,632; California, 1,453; Massachusetts, 1,437, and Rhode Island, 871.

The emergency claims and individual state figures lag the overall total and the four-week moving average by one week. The national figures are adjusted for seasonal variations, but the individual state figures and the emergency program numbers are not.

Microwave Network, led by Chief Executive Athur Epley III, specializes in providing alternative telecommunications to developing nations.

Busy signals are music to firm's ears

By Charles Boisseau
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Telephone networks in developing countries are so overwhelmed that international callers may wonder if busy signals are some sort of phone-borne plague.

But the irritating sounds are music to Microwave Networks.

The Houston firm makes microwave radios for cellular and other telephone networks. Sales have rocketed the past two years since it began concentrating on places suffering from acute tele-congestion — Latin America, Eastern Europe and the Far East.

Ninety percent of the company's sales now come from foreign countries. All told, revenues have surged nearly 70 percent since last year, and the company expects sales of about $50 million this year.

"Where there's telephone problems, that's a good place for us to do business," said Arthur Epley III, president of Microwave Networks. "Busy signals mean business for us."

For example, in Russia, the antiquated phone system has been a constant sore spot for Western companies pursuing business in that country's newly awakened economy.

Recently, a GTE-Russian joint venture set up a system using a satellite dish to bounce calls to the United States from about a half dozen Moscow hotels. Microwave Networks provided the equipment to transmit the calls from the hotels to the satellite dish.

"They completely bypass the telephone system," Epley said. "A guy in a hotel can pick up the phone and get a U.S. dial tone, so he's got good telephone service."

Microwave Networks is literally growing by leaping and bounding. Its microwave radios carry telephone traffic around overburdened telephone systems in nearly two dozen countries, including Mexico, Hungary, Venezuela and China.

While U.S. cellular providers often use both microwave signals and telephone wires to connect cellular offices and to tie into the standard telephone network, in many foreign countries there are no wires.

That's where Microwave Networks comes in.

Microwave Networks doesn't make cellular phones, antennas or switching equipment. It makes the transmission boxes attached to cellular towers that send calls to points within a cellular network or to patch calls into the traditional phone network.

"All we're doing is taking the place of wires," Epley says.

"What's really been driving the success of our company is the desire of all countries to improve their telecommunications infrastructure."

Developing countries have discovered it is quicker to install wireless telephone systems since, unlike phone lines, they are easily routed

Southwest may expand to East Coast

NEW YORK (AP) — Southwest Airlines is considering offering its no-frills, low-fare flights in the Northeast, where routine delays in the crowded skies might gum up its efficient operation.

Although no decision has been made to expand into the Northeast, Southwest has been looking at the Baltimore area and a small airport near the suburbs north of New York City, company spokesman Ed Stewart said.

While Southwest has been successful with its brand of low-cost low-fare flying in other parts of the country, the Northeast presents unique problems. Higher landing fees and congested airports could foul up Southwest's system, analysts say.

But Southwest might be able to find either remote or underused airports in the Northeast where it could apply its methods, said Raymond E. Neidl, airline analyst at Furman Selz Inc.

"The risk is they'll get stuck in the (air traffic control) system," Neidl said.

But Stewart said the airline has been able to keep up its operation flying into Los Angeles and Burbank, Calif., another crowded area. "We're still able to do what it takes," he said.

For Southwest, that means filling an airplane quickly with cheap tickets and getting the jet back in the air. Bigger airlines have higher costs for jets and crews because their hub-and-spoke systems dictate that some jets sit on the ground for sometimes as much as an hour waiting for flights to arrive with more passengers to fill the plane.

Southwest prides itself on putting a jet back in the air 15 or 20 minutes after it lands. But that leaves little room for delays.

Neidl and other analysts wonder why Southwest, with so many opportunities to expand in other parts of the country, would take its chances on the Northeast.

Stewart said Southwest has been considering many cities around the country to add to its schedule this year, including Stewart International Airport in Newburgh, N.Y., about 60 miles north of New York City. Also, Baltimore-Washington International Airport, the least used of the three big airports in the area, is attractive, he said.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Most growth funds make annual distributions

By Bill Doyle

Q: I am interested in investing in a mutual fund for my young son and registering the shares in my name as custodian for him, under "gift to minors act" rules. Newspaper articles I have read said it's best to invest in a growth mutual fund for a youngster.

If I do that, how can I claim the tax benefits, since most growth funds do not pay distributions each year?

Doyle

A: You are incorrect about the frequency of distributions from mutual funds. The majority of growth funds declare and pay out dividends and capital gains distributions annually.

Some growth funds pay dividends semiannually or quarterly. The same thing can be said about income mutual funds, although a large number of those funds pay dividends monthly.

The dividends come from the dividends and interest a fund collects from securities the fund holds in its investment portfolio. Capital gains distributions result from the net profit the fund realizes by selling some of those securities.

After deducting its operating expenses, a mutual fund passes along to its shareholders the balance of the dividends, interest and capital gains it has realized. The fund acts as a conduit.

Anyway, you can't claim any tax benefits for yourself as a result of the mutual fund shares or other securities bought for your son in a gift to minors account. Everything in the account would belong to your boy — not you.

Using a gift to minors account can reduce, by a small amount, the total income tax a family must pay. But the tax benefits accrue to the dependent child, not to the parents.

This is not meant to discourage you from buying growth mutual fund shares for your son. Although there are risks involved, that type of fund has been and should remain a sensible long-term investment for youngsters.

Q: I invested $10,000 in a mutual fund that holds U.S. Treasury and federal agency securities as investments. I know the value of my fund shares goes down when interest rates go up, but I have no idea why. Please explain.

Is there any other factor that changes share value?

A: The share value of a mutual fund goes up or down in line with the market values of the securities the fund has in its investment portfolio.

The market prices of previously issued fixed-income securities, such as the U.S. Treasury and federal agency bonds your mutual fund holds, move in the opposite direction of interest rates.

It stands to reason that a bond issued some time ago paying, say, 5 percent interest would not command as high a price as new bonds paying, say, 6 percent. As a result, the market price of the 5 percent bond would fall. So would the share values of a mutual fund holding the 5 percent bonds.

That should not be the story with your mutual fund. In recent years, interest rates have drifted downward and share values of well-managed mutual funds holding bonds have headed upward.

If the share value of your mutual fund has gone steadily lower, that would indicate that the managers of your fund are making poor investment decisions by buying and selling the wrong bonds at the wrong times.

Q: My wife and I have accounts in two different mutual funds. Each is registered in my name and her name, as "joint tenants." They say this is the same as "joint tenants with right of survivorship." Is that true?

A: Yes. "Joint tenants" is a short form for "joint tenants with right of survivorship." Sometimes, that form of registration is stated simply as "Jt Ten." It's the same thing.

With joint tenancy, when one of you dies, the surviving tenant becomes the sole owner, without the bother or expense of putting the securities or other property so registered through the probate process.

Export business

Limited financing is handicap, Texan says

By Jane Baird
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Four years ago, Gibson Oluyitan decided that the time had come to pursue his ambition to become an exporter.

"Exporting had always been my dream," he said.

Oluyitan had no contacts with foreign buyers, no contacts with suppliers and no experience in exporting. He spent more than six months researching and mailing off letters to potential customers abroad before his first orders came in from buyers in New Zealand and Japan for $400, $500 and $3,000 worth of goods.

Oluyitan found buyers who were willing to do business, sight unseen, because of letters of credit. A letter of credit, if executed properly, is essentially a guarantee from a bank that an exporter will get paid when he delivers the goods. For the buyer, the letter of credit assures that he will receive his goods before any money changes hands.

Oluyitan's greatest handicap was that he had only a few hundred dollars of capital to fund the deals. His existing company in the food delivery business could do no more than cover his living expenses while he started the export company.

A letter of credit alone is not enough for a new exporter with limited capital.

"A letter of credit is, in essence, a performance bond," said Ian Bishop, a consultant for the University of Houston International Trade Center. The exporter is paid for the goods by the buyer's bank only if the exporter performs his part of the deal as spelled out in the letter.

Because he couldn't borrow against his letters of credit, Oluyitan had to scramble to find money to finance his deals. He raised the $3,000 for the third deal by using his BMW as collateral to take out a six-month loan from his bank. In fact, he borrowed on his car several times, each time plowing back a large chunk of his earnings into the company so that he could buy more goods and gradually do larger and larger deals.

"I was lucky that my customers started off small," he said.

His company, Greenway International, grew from scratch in 1990 to about $150,000 in export sales in 1992, Oluyitan said. He expects to do $300,000 to $400,000 in sales this year.

Financing is still a limitation, as his orders grow larger and larger. He now is able to finance $30,000 shipments out of his own money, he said, but he still cannot get a loan from a bank to finance larger deals.

Very few banks are going to advance money on a letter of credit unless the exporter is already in the position to take out a line of credit for that amount based on his own financial standing, said Raymond De Sola, a specialist in trade finance with MetroBank's Galleria office.

Furthermore, the letter of credit should be at least $100,000 or more before a bank will be interested, he said. Banks do as much work for a small deal as a large deal, while their fees on letters of credit are based on a percentage of the dollar value, he said.

Bishop, at the International Trade Center, said that exporters typically fund orders of up to $25,000 with their own resources — savings, credit cards, loans from family and friends.

Gibson Oluyitan used his BMW as collateral to obtain loans while getting his exporting business, Greenway International, off the ground. Oluyitan, who now exports more than $300,000 worth of goods a year, poses with his Mercedes.

Exporters like Oluyitan typically grow gradually, along with their ability to self-finance their deals, until they become large enough to turn to government guarantee programs for small business and to banks, he said.

But there are several options for the exporter who has a good deal and a good letter of credit from a customer but not enough money to finance the transaction, he said.

One possibility is the transferable letter of credit, Bishop said.

This is used when the exporter does not make the export goods himself, but buys them from a supplier, explained Geraldine Gurley, vice president and manager of the letter of credit department for Bank One Texas.

The exporter tells the buyer he wants a transferable letter of credit, and the buyer's foreign bank issues it in that form, she said. The exporter then takes the letter of credit to his bank in the United States and pays a fee for that bank to issue a transfer document. The document gives the supplier the right to receive all or part of the payment under the original letter of credit, she said.

The transfer document spells out the same conditions as the original letter of credit, but it does not include the name of the buyer, Gurley said. Therefore, the supplier cannot steal the exporter's customer and start dealing with him directly.

"The (supplier) doesn't get his money until the exporter is paid," Gurley said, but when that happens, he has the same right to the money in the letter of credit as the exporter does.

"The supplier has very little risk to concern himself about," she said. He knows whether he can perform on the requirements of the letter of credit and he becomes the legal owner of the amount in the transfer document.

Even so, many suppliers refuse to take transfers on letters of credit and insist on receiving payment in cash, De Sola said.

BUSY: System takes place of wires, executive says

(From 6C)

past mountains, bridges and rivers.

In many places such as Mexico, cellular networks are being placed in lieu of phone lines. Worldwide sales of cellular phones are expected to keep growing at a 45 percent annual rate.

"Cellular is just continuing to take off," said Jeffrey Hines, wireless communications analyst with PaineWebber in New York. "You need to connect cells together and the main switching center — and that can all be done with microwave."

While Microwave Network's direction appears clear today, it was muddled back in 1982 when Epley co-founded the company. Back then, the 52-year-old electrical engineer focused on satellite communications. It took three years before he settled on manufacturing microwave radios.

The company really started to soar a little more than two years ago when it began focusing its efforts abroad. It cut its U.S. sales force and plowed sales people into foreign markets. It opened offices in Mexico City and Singapore.

Overall employment has grown by one-third to 235 employees, most of whom work at the company's recently expanded headquarters in southwest Houston.

In addition to cellular carriers, customers include private and government-owned phone companies worldwide, long-distance firms and even private businesses that use microwave radios to transmit voice and data traffic.

Microwave Networks makes about 20 products, including radios that simultaneously transmit up to 480 calls relatively short distances, about 10 miles or less.

This market is valued at $1 billion a year, and Epley hopes to increase his share to about 15 percent within two or three years, up from about 5 percent now.

Despite the sizable ambitions, however, it is Microwave Networks' nimbleness that remains one of its biggest assets.

It wasn't long ago that Epley was pretty much an anomaly — an unknown Texas entrepreneur surrounded at international trade shows by executives of well-known companies.

"I know he has good technology. But I think the thing about Arthur and his company is he has been able to use his small size, which in such a capital-intensive business would normally be a disadvantage, as an advantage because he's been able to go quick and get into new markets, like Mexico and the Far East," said Larry Lannon, publisher of the Chicago-based trade publications Telephony and Global Telephony.

Microwave Networks frequently dances around its larger competitors. One reason: Big competitors are more interested in selling $10 million phone switching equipment than a few microwave radios costing $15,000 to $100,000 apiece.

This explains its success in the face of global competitors such as Germany's Siemens, Japan's NEC, Sweden's Ericsson and France's Alcatel Cables. U.S. competitors include big operators such as AT&T and Harris Corp. Even a smallish rival, San Jose, Calif.-based Digital Microwave, is more than twice the size of the Houston firm.

But the company is becoming stronger in its own right. For example, it is less reliant on an agreement with Northern Telecom that two years ago accounted for about 50 percent of sales. It's down to about 10 percent of sales.

Later this year, Epley plans to expand product offerings and establish operations in other parts of the world. New radios are being developed to send traffic longer distances so remote villages all over the globe can be tied to the phone network for the first time.

To fund the growth, Microwave Networks hopes later this year to raise up to $25 million in an initial public offering.

Breeders confident emus will take wing

DALLAS (AP) — Prices for emus have taken wing along with rising interest in breeding the big, flightless birds, members of the American Emu Association said Thursday at their annual convention in Dallas.

But how long will the prices last and can the business make the transition from a breeder's market to a commercial industry?

The emu ranchers — some 2,000 of whom came to the convention from across the United States and Canada — say they have high hopes that will happen within the next three to 10 years.

"Right now, it's the breeder market that's driving the industry, and the desire of the breeders is a long-term commitment," said Pierce Allman, the association's executive director. "Obviously, the returns in the breeder market and the escalating prices of the birds ... sooner or later have to hit some sort of acknowledged plateau."

"The commercial side is going to come. We know it's going to come," said Mike Walker, owner of Bear Creek Emus in La Grange, Texas. "It needs to evolve into a commercial market. Otherwise it's not going to be there."

The ostrich-like brownish birds, native to Australia, stand 5 to 6 feet tall and weigh up to 150 pounds as adults. They are particularly valued for their meat, oil, hide and feathers.

Today, emu chicks 3 to 4 months old sell for around $3,000-$4,500 each, while a proven breeding pair goes for some $25,000-$40,000, Allman said. That's up about a third in just the past year, he said.

Five years ago chicks would have gone for under $1,000 each, Walker said.

With each pair producing an average of 20 chicks each year, emu ranchers say the dollars can add up rapidly.

Barbara Powell said her 3-year-old Chuck-Bar Emu Ranch in West Point, Ga., made enough money during the first laying season to recoup an initial $20,000 investment. Within two years, the ranch was supporting Mrs. Powell and her husband.

"It's very easy," she said. "It's really growing faster than we can produce birds."

Small farmers and ranchers say the birds are appealing because they require only about 2,000 square feet per breeding pair. Five pairs of birds could bring $100,000 profit a year, Walker said. "Certainly on five acres of land, you can run a very profitable operation," he said.

While there are an estimated 50,000 emus in the United States now, Allman, Walker and others estimate that about 3 million of the birds would be required to support a commercial industry if each American eats only a quarter-pound of emu meat a year.

Taking even 1 percent of the American meat market, not considering exports, would require 30 million emus, Allman said.

Still, the ranchers are optimistic. They believe a good market will grow for emu meat, a red meat that tastes similar to roast beef but is lower in cholesterol and fat. Another key product, they think, will be the emu's rich, penetrating oil, for use in cosmetics and pharmaceutical products.

Joan Taylor, who was elected president of the American Emu Association on Thursday, plans to have about 50 laying pairs of emus this year on her exotic Taylor Saddle Mountain Ranch in Campwell, Texas.

"The breeder market is here now. The slaughter market will come, and that's when the prices will come down because the supply has met the demand," she said.

Mississippi River adds stress to weak levees

By J.L. Hazelton
Associated Press writer

Rain kept on coming Thursday in the Midwest, placing further stress on levees weakened by the raging Mississippi River and chasing away diehard residents who vowed not to evacuate.

The heaviest rain was in portions of Nebraska and Iowa, where up to 3 inches fell. In Iowa, the river hit a record high of 22½ feet at Davenport. Flood stage is 15 feet and the previous record was 22.48 feet set in 1965.

"No lifeguard on duty. No diving," read a sign in the flooded parking lot of Big Muddy's restaurant in Burlington, Iowa.

Across the river in west-central Illinois, National Guard units and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers helped operate bulldozers around the clock to shore up a 52-mile levee at risk of bursting its entire length.

About 2,000 people in several threatened communities were evacuated.

Thousands of people have evacuated their homes in Missouri, Iowa, Illinois, Nebraska, South Dakota, Wisconsin and Minnesota since heavy rains began bulging the Mississippi and its tributaries in June.

The flooding left 16 people dead and federal officials estimate it has caused more than $1 billion in damage so far to property and crops.

Flooding in Missouri worsened Thursday. Levees broke or were overtopped from Alexandria in extreme northeast Missouri to St. Louis. Hundreds have left their homes from southeast Iowa to east-central Missouri.

Though downtown St. Louis is protected by floodgates to levels up to 52 feet, high water spilled into low-lying areas south of downtown. The river swelled to 40.1 feet on Thursday and was expected to crest next week at 45 feet, which is 15 feet above flood stage.

Alexandria was covered by 8 to 10 feet of water and the town's 500 residents were evacuated Wednesday. So much land was under water there was nothing to be done but let it go where it wants to go, said Hans Huenink, a Missouri Water Patrol spokesman.

"There's no preventative measures anyone can take up there," he said.

In Iowa, Gov. Terry Branstad said 2,500 families in the state have been forced from their homes by flooding.

President Clinton deemed portions of Wisconsin and Minnesota federal disaster areas. Inspectors assessed damage in Iowa, Illinois, Missouri and South Dakota. Clinton said he will ask Congress next week to approve emergency aid for victims of the flooding.

Most of the new rain that fell in northeast Nebraska on Thursday was in sparsely populated areas, covering already swamped farm fields with more water.

Flooding on other rivers, including the Meramec and Missouri, also caused problems. Tributaries backed up into residential neighborhood in St. Louis County.

Backwater from the Missouri topped a levee, forcing the evacuation of about 20 families in Carroll County.

The Mississippi broke through a levee at West Alton, Mo., just north of St. Louis, on Wednesday, forcing remaining diehard residents to move to dry land.

"West Alton is virtually a ghost town," said Tim Weber, spokesman for the St. Charles County emergency management agency.

Authorities patrolled evacuated areas to deter would-be looters "so people don't lose any more than they already have," Huenink said.

Bob Rogers of the Missouri Emergency Management Agency said he expects more evacuations throughout the state as flood water continues to rise.

"You are going to have a lot more of them. Many of these levees were weak already because they had been soaked by the water and they are all starting to go," Rogers said.

In Ste. Genevieve, about 50 miles south of St. Louis, 200 National Guard members used wedge-shaped concrete highway bumpers, sandbags and gravel to add height to a small levee while river water inched toward the top on the other side.

"We have to fight it until we win it or lose it," said disaster coordinator Mick Schwent.

At risk is a town full of 18th- and early 19th-century buildings, including examples of the distinctive vertical log construction of French creole architecture, city spokeswoman Jean Rissover said.

Ste. Genevieve, founded in 1735 by French settlers, was listed by the National Trust for Historic Preservation as one of the most endangered historic places in the United States. The organization cited inadequate flood protection.

The city has been trying for years to get a big federal levee along the river bank to replace smaller, temporary levees built in recent years.

'Citizen' releases list of 50 worst nuclear power plants

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The Washington Nuclear-2 power plant in Richland, Wash., was the worst of 50 commercial reactors dubbed "nuclear lemons" that should be shut down because of serious safety problems, a citizen's advocacy group charged Thursday.

The Washington facility topped a list of 50 nuclear plants identified with safety or other regulatory deficiencies by the Ralph Nader-founded Public Citizen, a Washington-based group that opposes nuclear power.

In its report, "Nuclear Lemons," the group ranked all 111 active nuclear plants nationwide on 11 criteria, including the number of safety system failures and federal regulatory violations, as well as the cost efficiency and productivity of the plants. The study was based on 1990-92 data obtained from the federal Nuclear Regulatory Commission and the Energy Department.

Matthew Freedman, one of the study's authors, said the Washington Nuclear-2 plant "shows up poorly across the board." He said it "appears in the top 20 in all but two of the categories" used to judge deficient reactors.

Freedman criticized the NRC for failing to include the Washington state reactor on a list of plants with weaknesses that warrant tougher agency scrutiny.

"Why should a plant with 21 safety system failures in 1992, almost seven times the national average, not get additional scrutiny from regulators?" Freedman asked. Washington Nuclear-2 had the most safety system failures of any reactor nationwide between 1990 and 1992.

John Kopeck, an NRC spokesman, would not comment on individual plants, but said differences between the NRC and Public Citizen safety-problem lists arose because the environmental group "has its own way of doing it."

He said the commission's regulators are uniquely qualified to inspect the plants. "These are the people that have the technical expertise for it," Kopeck said.

Mary Ace, a spokeswoman for the Washington Public Power Supply System, which operates the Richland plant, said the reactor is safe, but she acknowledged that plant officials "are focusing on areas that need improvement."

Ace said the power company has recruited top nuclear power plant managers from around the country in an effort to improve what she said were management problems at the Richland plant. "We're confident that we will improve over the next year," she said.

Public Citizen also blasted General Electric, which designed 14 of the 20 plants the group said were most unsafe — including the Washington state reactor.

Public Citizen's findings "indicate that while General Electric may 'bring good things to life,' many GE reactors have reached the end of theirs," said Bill Magavern, director of the group's Critical Mass Energy Project, which prepared the study.

But Lynn Wallis, a GE spokesman in San Jose, Calif.,, said, "General Electric reactors are safe as proven by their successful 30-year operating record in many nations around the world. The group making these allegations opposes nuclear power and their statement needs to be taken in that context."

In releasing its report, Public Citizen appealed to NRC officials for the closure of nuclear plants it said were dangerous.

Joan Claybrook, the group's president, said Americans focus on nuclear power primarily on the anniversary of the April 1986 Chernobyl nuclear disaster — when the former Soviet reactor in what is now Ukraine exploded, killing dozens — "and only then to say that it can't happen here."

"But it can happen here, and Public Citizen's report on nuclear lemons shows why," Claybrook said. "Just as a car that's a lemon should be taken off the highway, these nuclear lemons should be closed down and shut down before they melt down."

Nuclear power advocates, however, derided the Public Citizen study, calling it biased because of the group's strong opposition to nuclear power.

DELIVERY

MOONLIGHTING!

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several distributorships which need to be filled with responsible individuals.

Often Asked ????? Is it worthwhile for adults also?

Yes! Our current distributor force is already 90% adult and 10% youth.

Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:

- ADULTS who have F/T jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a distributor, you do not need daycare!
- STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors and friends.

How much money can I make as a distributor?

Depending on the size of distributorship from $300 to $700 monthly!

Some make even more!

How long does it take?

The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday-Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subsribers'papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?

6 a.m. Monday-Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, distributors do take days off by finding a friend or a family member to substitute a for them!

RESERVE YOUR DISTRIBUTORSHIP NOW!
