Bakke Ruling Seen Supporting Minority Hiring

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's chief civil rights lawyer said Thursday he sees nothing in the Supreme Court's Bakke decision to bar vigorous federal enforcement of minority hiring or federal funding programs for minority-run businesses.

Assistant Attorney General Drew S. Days III, chief of the Justice Department's civil rights division, said Wednesday's ruling means the court "has said the consideration of race is not forbidden, is not inherently un-American" in decisions affecting employment and industry as well as education.

Days said he believed the ruling could even strengthen the hand of federal agencies like the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission because, as a result of the court ruling, using race as one legitimate justification for hiring could now be considered "out in the open."

In part, Days echoed Attorney General Griffin B. Bell, who said Wednesday the Bakke ruling means "a great gain for affirmative action. It is not a setback at all."

Affirmative action programs are those that are intended to increase hiring or enrollment of women or racial minorities or other groups such as the handicapped that are under-represented in schools or jobs.

In an hour-long news conference, Days went beyond Bell to focus on the potential effect of the ruling on private businesses and industry.

The Supreme Court on Wednesday, in a 5-4 vote, overturned the program at the University of California Medical School at Davis that reserved 16 of 100 places in each year's class for blacks, Hispanics and Asian-Americans. The court ordered the medical school to admit Allan P. Bakke, who it said had been denied admission solely because he is white.

But five of the nine justices also ruled that affirmative action programs that consider race as one factor in granting preferential treatment do not violate the Constitution.

The decision did not address itself in detail to areas other than educational institutions that receive federal funds.

But Days said he believed one of the major themes of Justice Lewis F. Powell's decision upholding affirmative action was that there are government institutions which, in Powell's words, "have the authority and capability" to identify past discrimination and devise appropriate remedies.

Powell's decision "emphasizes that attempts to deal with past discrimination may warrant preferential arrangements," Days said.

For example, he continued, Congress in 1977 passed a public works bill that requires 10 percent of the $4 billion in federal funds be used for minority-run businesses. Days said the plan, which is under challenge in the federal courts, is constitutional and he noted that the Justice Department is seeking Supreme Court review of a lower court ruling that held the plan unconstitutional.

Asked what advice he would give to private employers, Days said: "My advice is that employers and institutions should continue to develop affirmative action programs in a coherent fashion."

He said he believes the Bakke ruling does not increase the risk to employers who adopt affirmative action programs that they will be sued by whites who contend they were denied a job or promotion based on race.

He promised private employers that

Begin Asks Egypt To Open Talks

Area Towns Plan Fourth Of July Celebrations

By ESTHER LONGORIA
Avalanche-Journal Staff

FOURTH of July festivities across the area will run the gamut from the annual world champion muleshoe pitching contest in Muleshoe to Lamesa's 75th birthday party.

While those celebrations are slated for Tuesday, other cities will be holding activities throughout the weekend prior to the Fourth.

Snyder's five-day celebration will begin today with a tennis tournament and carnival rides in Towle Memorial Park. An arts and crafts show at the National Guard Armory and the Towle Park barn will be held in conjunction with the festivities.

Country fiddling and a concert of patriotic music is slated Sunday at the Snyder park while a tractor pull is scheduled Sunday and Monday in the rodeo arena.

Tuesday's events include a flag-raising ceremony at 9:30 a.m. at the armory, which will be followed by a parade through the park.

Snyder's celebration will be climaxed with a fireworks display Tuesday night at the park.

Stamford will host its Texas Oldtime Cowboys Reunion today through Tuesday. Registration gets underway at 10 a.m. today and will be followed by a chuck wagon lunch and a dance. An open house is slated from 10 a.m. to noon Saturday, and memorial services will be at 2 p.m. Monday in the bunk house.

Tuesday's festivities will feature an oldtime cowboys roping contest at 8 a.m. and an old fiddler's contest at 9:30 a.m. in the Roundup Hall.

Saturday is the time for merrymaking in Idalou and Anton.

Festivities in Idalou will get underway with a barbecue and bake sale at 6 p.m. in the school cafeteria and will continue with a street dance at 9 p.m. featuring the Western sounds of the Last Chance Dance Band.

A carnival, featuring games and food, will be at 1 p.m. Saturday, at Anton's city park.

But, for most communities, Tuesday, the Fourth of July, is the big day for celebrating their nation's 202nd birthday.

Muleshoe's celebration will kick off at 7:30 a.m. with its annual pony express ride from Needmore to Muleshoe. The Valley Riding Club of Amarillo will be challenging the Muleshoe Riding Club for the winner's circle. A breakfast and children's activities, ranging from sack races to an apple-bobbing contest, will follow at the Bailey County Courthouse.

The annual world champion muleshoe pitching contest is set for 10:30 a.m. at the courthouse.

Other festivities will include an old settlers reunion at 2 p.m. at the Methodist church, a 5 p.m. parade through downtown Muleshoe, a 6 p.m. community barbecue in the city park and an 8 p.m. powderpuff baseball game at the diamond.

Fireworks, under the supervision of the Muleshoe Volunteer Fire Department, will conclude the activities.

A frisbee marathon, balloon break and super kids competition are just a few of the activities which will get underway at 9 a.m. July 4 in Littlefield's Laguna Park. Games and contests will continue throughout the afternoon, and the day's festivities will be capped off with a street dance.

Lamesa has opted to celebrate its 75th birthday on the Fourth and

Begin Resumption Conditions Rejected

JERUSALEM (UPI) — Prime Minister Menachem Begin Thursday appealed to Egypt to "please come back" for a new round of Middle East peace talks.

Speaking after an Arab guerrilla bomb attack that killed two people and wounded 47 in a crowded open air fruit and vegetable market, Begin told American Jewish leaders, "It was a revolting crime perpetrated by a cruel enemy."

He repeated Israel's rejection of Egyptian calls for the return of territory seized in the 1967 war, including Jerusalem, but said, "Please come back to the table ... let us renew the negotiations."

Mondale To Visit

Begin was addressing the leadership of the Jewish Agency, a fund-raising group, assembled inside the Knesset (parliament) building. His speech came on the eve of a visit by Vice President Walter Mondale, who will stop off in Alexandria, Egypt, to talk with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat on his way back to the United States.

"We suggest tonight on behalf of Israel to resume the negotiations between us and Egypt, or to start negotiations between us and any other willing Arab country with the clear purpose to conclude peace treaties," Begin said.

Referring to the peace process that began with Sadat's visit to Jerusalem in November but broke down when Egyptian envoys were called home in January, Begin said Israel would not accept prior conditions for renewing the talks.

"Terms will not be imposed upon Israel. An agreement will be negotiuted with Israel," he said.

Peace Plan Asked

Addressing himself to Sadat and Egyptian Foreign Minister Ibrahim Kamel, Begin asked, "Do you have a peace plan? If you have it, produce it, then we'll negotiate both proposals."

This was a reference to his offer to keep control of, but grant limited self-rule to, the occupied territories and the contradictory Egyptian suggestion that Israel hand over the Gaza Strip to Egypt and the West Bank to Jordan while negotiations go on.

As Begin spoke, a bomb went off outside an Israeli army department store in Tiberias, a town 65 miles north of Jerusalem. No one was hurt and there was no damage. It was not clear if it was a terrorist or a criminal attack.

In Beirut, the Palestine Liberation Organization claimed responsibiity for the Jerusalem blast that came during the busiest time of the week and killed two people, both Jews.

Although U.S. officials insisted Mondale's visit is strictly ceremonial, it also afforded the president's right-hand man a perfect opportunity to get updated Israeli and Egyptian views on prospects for resuming disrupted peace talks.

Hit, Miss Rain Falls In Area

WIDELY scattered thunderstorms Thursday dampened some South Plains communities with just a sprinkling of rain while dousing neighboring cities with as much as two inches of moisture.

Triggered by hot, summery temperatures like those expected to continue through the weekend, storms building to 36,000 feet Thursday dumped 2.25 inches of rain on Denver City but left towns in the same county with only a trace, if any moisture at all.

Moisture over the region should be sufficient through the weekend, forecasters said late Thursday, to continue the threat of afternoon showers like those Thursday. Weathermen were calling for a 30 percent chance for more rain today and a 20 percent chance tonight.

Temperatures across the region near Lubbock's 93-degree high in combination with a weak upper level disturbance moving northeastward across the area set off Thursday's showers, weathermen said.

Temperatures Due In 90s

That weather condition should move out of the region by early today, but temperatures in the 90s still could provide enough of a trigger for more rain. Highs today and Saturday should reach the middle 90s, with low temperatures tonight in the upper 60s. Winds should be southerly at 15 to 20 mph.

Across the region, Denver City's 2.25 inches took the top report, followed by Hale Center with .85 of an inch, Seminole with .59 of an inch, Plainview with .37 of an inch, Crosbyton with .21 of an inch and New Deal with .10 of an inch of rain.

Brownfield, Cotton Center, Lamesa, Abernathy, Slaton, Sudan and Tahoka reported traces of rain as did Lubbock, though residents in some part of the Hub City reported amounts closer to .25 of an inch of moisture.

Like Amounts Due

Forecasters said the showers expected today and Saturday, if any, would leave about the same amounts of moisture. Isolated amounts could top one inch in weatern counties.

Late Thursday, scattered storms stretched from Amarillo to Paducah, to Roby, to Goldsmith, to Clovis and back to Amarillo.

Residents of some communities reported wind gusts near 30 mph with blowing dust. Gusts at 29 mph were reported at Amarillo, Lubbock and San Angelo, while Midland winds clocked in at 36 mph at 1 p.m., just ahead of showers in that city.

Wind gusts in excess of 60 mph prompted small craft warnings along the Gulf Coast Thursday as a line of heavier storms moved across Southeast Texas.

Weathermen also issued an air stagnation advisory for Southeast Texas, including the Golden Triangle and the Houston metropolitan area.

Elsewhere across the state, temperatures were in the middle 90s and high 80s under clear skies.

Bids On New Jail Construction Go Beyond $4 Million Mark

By BOB CAMPBELL
Avalanche-Journal Staff

LUBBOCK County Jail construction bids opened Thursday brought the total cost to a little more than $4 million — $660,000 more than county commissioners estimated last fall.

They still have the option of not building one of the three possible 90-man cell blocks and reducing the cost to about $3.4 million.

Fifty construction, mechanical and electrical contractors gathered in the central jury room at the courthouse as county architect Arnold Maeker opened the bids Thursday afternoon.

Detention equipment bids for cells and other metal work were opened last Thursday.

The complex 4 p.m. Thursday bid tabulation was in several phases — combined bids by general contractors for construction, mechanical, electrical and laundry work; bids by contractors for construction only; and proposals by mechanical, electrical and laundry equipment companies.

A bid for kitchen equipment arrived late, and the commissioners decided in a meeting after the openings to re-bid that part of the project.

The apparent low price to build a complete jail east of the existing jail in downtown Lubbock is derived from taking the separate low bids on the various phases.

That comes to $4,049,069 without the kitchen equipment, which is expected to be about $50,000, with the low bids of Furr's Construction Co. of $1,475,000 for construction; O.W. Chisum Co., mechanical work, $736,825; Row-Wall Electric Co., $371,163; and Pellerin Laundry Machinery Co. of Kenner, La., $26,081.

The total includes a $1,390,000 detention equipment bid from Roanoke Iron and Bridge Co. of Roanoke, Va.

Furr's, Chisum and Row-Wall are all of Lubbock.

A detention equipment bid providing less expensive equipment or "substitutions" where possible apparently will be used.

Roanoke offered a bid only with substitutions, and Willo Products Co. of Decatur, Ala., had the low substitions bid of $1,364,000. However, Maeker said at the meeting after the bid openings that he probably will recommend the Roanoke proposal when commissioners meet again July 10 because the Willo equipment apparently would necessitate the hiring of 15 more deputies to supervise the jail and would not be a savings in the long run.

Page & Wirtz Construction Co. of Lubbock had the low combined construction bid, $2,744,000, while C.B. Thompson of Lubbock bid $2,864,000.

The Page & Wirtz bid together with the Roanoke bid comes to $4,134,000.

County Judge Rodrick Shaw and Commissioners Alton Brazell, Edgar Chance, Coy Biggs of Slaton and Jim Lancaster of Idalou discussed the various alternatives at length and indicated they possibly would announce a decision July 10, when jail equipment models are expected to be shown.

Construction Start Eyed

Maeker said prior to the bid openings that construction could start in mid-or late July.

Avenue G will be permanently closed from Broadway to Main Street as that property is taken up by the new jail, which was mandated by U.S. District Judge Halbert O. Woodward last year when he found the present jail unacceptable.

The architect said the construction site also probably will occupy a third of the widths of Avenue F from Main to Broadway, Main from the front of the present jail to F and Broadway from F to the

Dawson County JP Charged In $5,000 Theft

LAMESA (Special)—Dawson County justice of the Peace Richard Don Nelson has been charged with burglary in connection with the loss of $5,000 worth of merchandise taken from a Lamesa furniture store earlier in the week.

Nelson, 33, who has been justice of the peace here three and a half years, was arraigned Wednesday before County Judge Leslie Pratt and released on $2,000 bond.

Jackie Bristow, an employee of Amos Furniture and Supply, reported the burglary to authorities early Wednesday. The burglary apparently occurred sometime Tuesday night or early Wednesday, Dawson County Sheriff Guy Kinnison said.

Officers obtained a warrant late Wednesday to search Nelson's home and found a variety of merchandise, including a table, chairs, lamps, barstools, mirrors, pictures, a vacuum cleaner, patio set, nightstands, headboards and a cedar chest, authorities said.

Judge Pratt said that Nelson's attorney has requested an examining trial. He added that such a hearing probably will be held early next week.

Notice Readied In School Case

By JEFF SOUTH
Avalanche-Journal Staff

THE U.S. Justice Department says it will file a "notice of appeal" next week regarding the outcome of its desegregation lawsuit against the Lubbock Independent School District.

But that notice simply is a device to buy time and keep the department's options open, a government spokesman said. He stressed that no formal decision has been made whether to go through with such an appeal.

The development is not expected to affect the August implementation of the integration plan U.S. District Judge Halbert O. Woodward has ordered for Lubbock public schools.

However, notice of an appeal probably would force postponement of a bond sale to build schools south of Loop 289 and improve facilities throughout the city. The school system cannot sell its voter-authorized bonds until all possibilities of an appeal have been ruled out.

Federal government attorneys who tried the Lubbock case are unhappy with Woodward's order on two grounds.

Not only do they feel the court-approved integration plan is unfair to minorities, but they also disagree with Woodward's ruling that only certain schools — not the entire school system — must be integrated.

The judge handed down his order in the Lubbock case May 8. If the Justice Department is to appeal, it must file a notice to that effect by July 8, 60 days from the judgment.

Such questions as whether to pursue an appeal are decided by the U.S. solicitor general. So far, the solicitor general still has the Lubbock case under review, according to Mark Gross, an attorney in the appellate section of the department's civil rights division.

"I have not yet received word from the office of the solicitor general as to whether there will be an appeal," Gross said Thursday in a telephone interview with The Avalanche-Journal.

Noting that time is growing short, Gross speculated that the solicitor general may not make his decision until after the July 8 deadline.

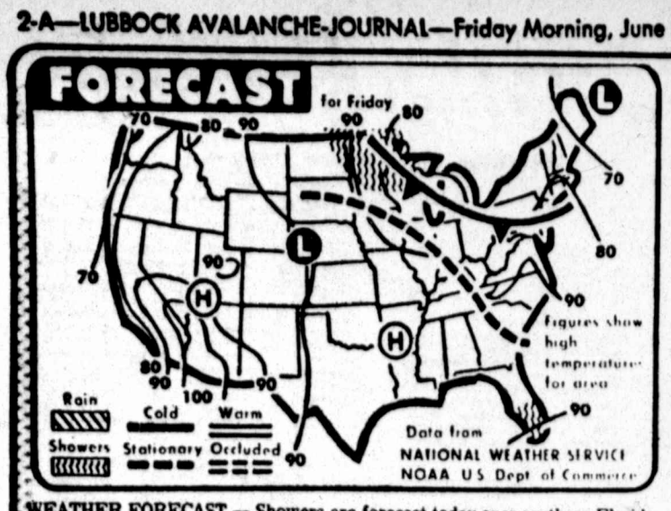

For that reason, Gross said, "I am going to arrange for us to file a notice of appeal, probably sometime late next week. This does not necessarily mean there will be an appeal. Instead, it's a sort of insurance" for the department.

He described the notice of appeal as a "tentative" gesture which would "keep our options open" and give the department additional time to consider the case.

Attorneys familiar with such matters said "protective" notices like that are rather routine.

Lozano Death Investigation Slated July 17

ODESSA (AP) — U.S. Attorney Jamie C. Boyd and his assistant, Fred Rodriguez, spent Thursday preparing for a July 17 federal grand jury investigation into the death of Ector County Jail inmate Larry Ortega Lozano.

Ector County District Attorney John Green said Boyd and Rodriguez went to his office Thursday and examined physical evidence gathered by local officials. He denied a report that he himself was being subpoenaed.

"What they want is the the evidence I've accumulated during my investigation," Green said.

Boyd and Rodriguez plan to return July 10 to go over the evidence in more detail, Green said. The district attorney predicted the grand jury's investigation won't change the earlier finding of a coroner's inquest in April that the death was accidental.

"They can't change. The facts are the same. Every witness we talked to, we had a court reporter present. People testified in open court, and it would be perjury if they change it," Green said.

"There had better not be any story-changing going on. If there is, I personally will prosecute them for perjury, and the federal government can't give them immunity from that."

Officials said the federal government considers the investigation only as a fact-finding session at this point. They said no decision has been made whether to seek indictments in the case.

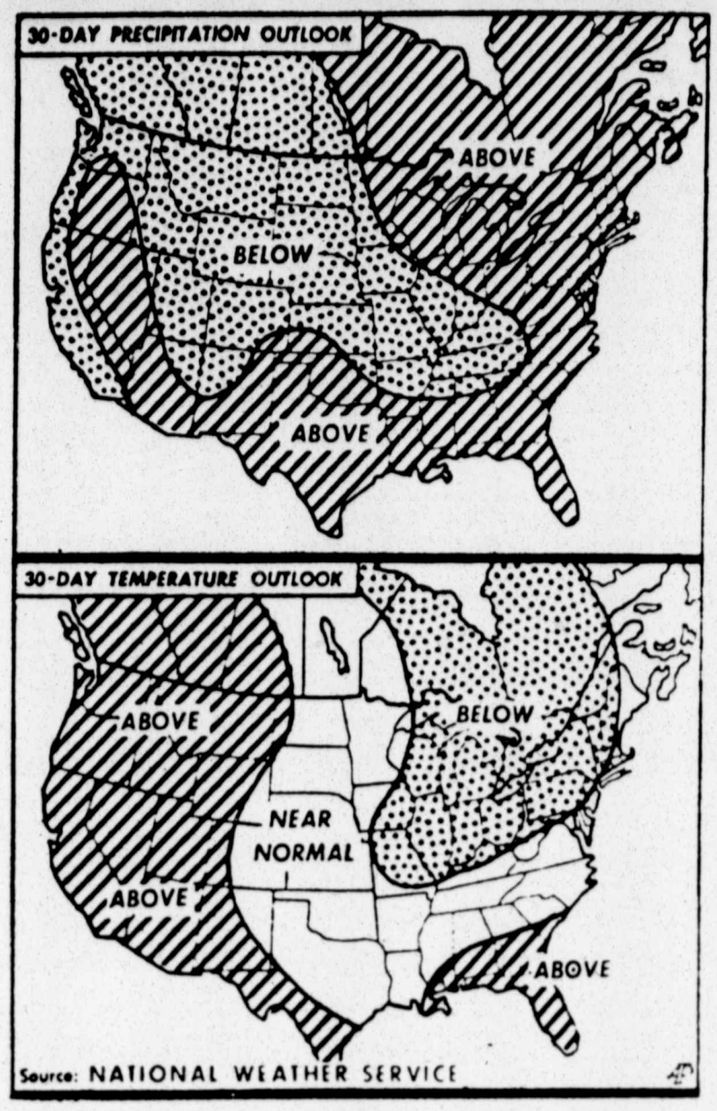

Lozano, 27, died in his padded cell last January. Mexican-American leaders claim he was beaten to death by law enforcement officers and have requested federal prosecution on civil rights charges.

Ector County officials, however, claimed Lozano was mentally ill and beat himself to death on the thick glass of his cell door. A coroner's inquest jury ruled in April that the death was accidental.

The Civil Rights Division of the U.S. Justice Department authorized the investigation earlier this month. Boyd spent two days in Midland and Odessa last week.

Records in the U.S. District Clerk's office in Midland indicate that prosecutors have called 12 prisoners now serving sentences in the Texas Department of Corrections and three Ector County jail inmates.

"We went over all the evidence we had in the case — pictures, anything they might need," said Green.

Chicken Stock Split Egged On

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Stockholders in at least one fast-food chain may soon be crowing that the chicken is indeed a noble beast.

Directors of Church's Fried Chicken, Inc. announced Thursday that for the second straight quarter operating results were at record levels.

The board proposed a two-for-one common stock split and declared the regular quarterly dividends.

A special stockholders meeting will be held Aug. 21 to vote on the proposed stock split. If allowed, the additional shares will be distributed on Sept. 22 to shareholders of record Aug. 30.

For the second consecutive 12-week period revenues were $68.9 million, net earnings $6.4 million and earnings per share $1.02. The earnings reflect increases of 32 percent, 34 percent and 32 percent respectively over the same period a year ago.

George W. Church Jr., chairman of the board, said the higher average sales per store contributed substantially to increases in operating results. "Average store sales are up 19 percent for the quarter, of which 15 percent represents real volume growth and four percent menu price increases," he said.

The quarterly cash dividend of 21 cents per share will be paid Aug. 15 to shareholders of record on July 28.

In 1977, Americans were the most numerous of any tourists to visit Greece. A total of 598,470 Americans visited the country last year.

Television Star Beaten To Death In Apartment

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — Actor Bob Crane was found beaten to death in his apartment Thursday, Maricopa County medical examiner Heinz Karnitschnig said.

Crane, 49, the star of the television series, "Hogan's Heroes," was appearing at the Windmill Dinner theater in this Phoenix suburb.

Karnitschnig said Crane died from several blows to head.

He said Crane was hit at least twice with a heavy object and an electrical cord was found tied around his neck, but the blows were the apparent cause of death.

The medical examiner said Crane died sometime Thursday morning.

Karnitschnig said there was no damage to the room.

Crane was appearing in "Beginner's Luck."

Karnitschnig said the identification came from a fellow actor. Spokeswoman Faye Wilson of the dinner theater said Ed Beck, vice president of the theater, also confirmed Crane was dead.

The apartment was one of several rented to the dinner theater.

Persons in neighboring apartment told reporters they had heard no disturbance.

Crane, a glib, former disc jockey, was best known as Col. Hogan on the television show "Hogan's Heroes," which was broadcast on CBS from September 1965 to July 1971 and is still being seen in reruns. Hogan led a wily group of World War II war prisoners who each week outwitted their German guards, Col. Klink and Sgt. Schultz.

A second series, "The Bob Crane Show," aired on NBC in the 1974-75 season. In that he played a former insurance salesman who returned to college to become a doctor.

Earlier, he had played the next door neighbor on "The Donna Reed Show."

In recent years he had appeared in guest-starring roles on television and toured regional theaters.

Crane, a former drummer with the Connecticut Symphony Orchestra, turned to radio announcing in 1959. He was a disc jockey at several Eastern stations before going to Los Angeles, where he became morning disc jockey on KNX, the CBS radio station. Within a month his clowning made the show a hit and landed him his first television part, on "The Dick Van Dyke Show."

Crane was born July 13, 1928, in Waterbury, Conn., where he studied music with ambitions to become a drummer. He was with the Connecticut Symphony from 1944 to 1946, then with several dance bands traveling the East Coast.

BOB CRANE

His movies included "Return to Peyton Place," "Mantrap" and "Superdad." On television, he starred in "Arsenic and Old Lace" with Helen Hayes and Lillian Gish.

He married his childhood sweetheart, Anne Terzian, in 1949. They had three children before they were divorced in 1970. His children are Robert David, 27, Deborah Ann, 19, and Karen Leslie, 17.

He married Patricia Olson four months after his divorce became final. She had a role in the "Hogan's Heroes" show under her stage name of Sigrid Valdis.

Whaling Group Rejects Pleas By Eskimos For Higher Quotas

LONDON (AP) — A delegation of Alaskan Eskimos walked out of a International Whaling Commission session Thursday and headed home because its plea to kill more Bowhead Whales this season was harpooned.

The Eskimos were miffed by an IWC technical committee vote of 7-6 late Wednesday to recommend a quota of 24 of the Bowheads for the Eskimos, who asked for a quota of between 37 and 45.

At last year's IWC meeting the Bowhead was declared the world's most endangered whale species and the commission decreed none would be killed during the 1977-78 season, but it relaxed that and allowed 12 to be taken by Eskimos this spring.

The Eskimo delegation said the recommendation, because of the close vote, had no chance of passage by the full commission. It added that Alaskans do not feel bound to follow the IWC's decision and will take as many whales next season as is necessary to meet cultural and nutritional needs.

The quota of 24 was supported by the United States, the Soviet Union and Mexico.

The 17-nation body began a five-day meeting Monday to determine how many whales may be slaughtered in the world's oceans next season. The body has few enforcement powers and the meetings are always embroiled in nationalism and controversy.

Before leaving, the Eskimo representatives circulated the text of a letter sent by Charles Edwardsen, Jr., chairman of the interim committee of the Inuit Circumpolar Conference in Barrow, Alaska, to President Carter, asking him to intervene in the matter.

The letter said:"...The Eskimo people cannot again suffer the unjust hardship imposed by unthinking members of an international organization like the IWC. The IWC had before it the United States data showing our minimum nutritional and cultural needs, and it chose to ignore it again this year. Such action falls within the definitions of genocide and of racial discrimination of the United Nations and the United States.

The Eskimos are fighting to keep alive their 4,000-year-old tradition of whaling for subsistence. The dozen delegates who appeared here represented some 4,000 Eskimos in nine Yupik and Inupiat villages on Alaska's Artic Rim.

They came armed with a U.S. government count that showed numbers of the Bowhead in on the increase.

Chile, Peru, Spain, and South Korea — all whaling nations inside their 200-mile fisheries limits — told the IWC later they will join the regulatory organization as soon as possible.

The IWC estimates the four nations together land nearly 7,000 whales a year, most of them by South Korea. Peru lands about 400, Chile about 100 and Spain's catch also is minimal, meaning South Korea will be most affected.

South Korea and Japan consider whalemeat an essential protein source.

Heavy Rainfall Brings Floods In Yugoslavia

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Three straight days of heavy rainfall caused floods in many parts of Yugoslavia, Thursday, engulfing hundreds of houses and thousands of acres of farmland.

A state of emergency was imposed at Vrsac, near the Romanian border, after the Nera River flooded 7,500 acres of cropland and forced many families from their homes, officials said.

Water also covered thousands of acres of farmland in Serbia, in eastern Yugoslavia, as local rivers overran their banks.

The grain crop was damaged, and the harvest seriously delayed, officials said.

Brown Berets To Consider Rosales Death Action

By IRA PERRY
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Leaders of the South Plains Mexican-American community said Thursday they will decide this weekend whether to protest the death of a 25-year-old Hale Center man shot Sunday while scuffling with a sheriff's deputy near Mayfield.

West Texas Brown Beret leader Gilbert Herrera said majors of that organization from Amarillo, San Antonio, Dallas, Houston, Hereford and Big Spring will meet "behind closed doors" in Lubbock Sunday to decide what action, if any, will be taken in response to the death of Timothy Rosales Jr.

Rosales, a farm laborer, died about 6:30 p.m. Sunday of a single gunshot to the right forehead just above the hairline that was fired at close range from Hale County reserve deputy Charles Cypert's .45-caliber revolver, according to Hale County Sherif Charles Tue.

The incident occurred, the only known witnesses said, while the two men were wrestling over Cypert's gun in front of a home at FM 179 and FM 1071 about 25 miles southwest of Plainview.

Herrera said factions of the group had talked of plans to march on Plainview next week, but differing plans among other groups prompted the meeting.

Tony Reyes, district director for the League of United Latin American Citizens, said his group is "satisfied" investigating authorities have talked with all witnesses to the case and have all information necessary to reach a "justifiable" decision. He said LULAC members will not plan protests or marches until their decision is reached.

Thursday, though, acting chairman of the American G.I. Forum statewide, Raul Sanchez, issued a press release saying the group, which he called the nation's largest Mexican-American civil rights organization, would stage a large protest if "justice in this case is denied or blocked."

Sanchez called Rosales' death a "merciless killing" based on one witness's statement that did not agree "at all with previous statements released by the Hale County Law Enforcement officials."

The forum's founder, Dr. Hector Garcia of Corpus Christi, met Thursday with the chief U.S. attorney for the Northern District of Texas, Kenneth Mighell of Dallas, to ask for a separate and impartial investigation of the incident.

Already, Texas Rangers from Plainview and Lubbock are investigating possible criminal violations in Rosales' death.

Lubbock FBI agent Bernie Brown is expected to conduct a separate investigation into possible abuses of Rosales' civil rights that will be turned over to attorneys at the U.S. Department of Justice for consideration when completed. Brown is not scheduled to begin his investigation until July 5, however, according to Tue.

A Hale County grand jury scheduled to convene July 6 also may hear testimony concerning Rosales' death, if investigators complete their work by then, the county's Dist. Atty. Marvin Marshall said.

Spokesmen for Texas Atty. Gen. John Hill said Thursday he had not decided whether to prompt his own investigation into the death. Hill was briefed on the case Tuesday at the request of Hispanic leaders and is expected to reach his decision "before the end of the week."

Investigators, according to some sources, are concerned primarily with differing statements by the only two known witnesses to the incident.

A 36-year-old mother of 10 who lives at the home where the incident occurred told police she watched a brief struggle between Cypert and Rosales during which Cypert pulled his pistol after being assaulted by Rosales. She said she watched until Rosales quit the struggle but started walking toward her home while Cypert radioed the sheriff's department for assistance.

She said she watched "Rosales walking away" but when she opened her door, he lay dead outside.

Tue said a second witness who earlier had told deputies he didn't see any of the incident Tuesday claimed he saw Rosales fall but did not see Cypert, indicating Rosales was shot from a distance.

Albert Garibay told deputies later he watched a portion of the brawl through the rearview mirror of his pickup truck. Tue said he gave no reason why he earlier had claimed not to see the shooting but then changed his story after talking to Rosales' family.

Autopsy reports indicate Rosales died from a gunshot fired at close range, Tue said.

Connally Sees Need For Slash In Spending To Curb Inflation

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Former Treasury Secretary John B. Connally criticized President Carter's anti-inflation policies Thursday and said a 5 percent slash in federal spending could help solve the problem.

He told a news conference that inflation is the most serious threat facing the nation — "it's like an ugly cancer." He said the Carter Administration's requests for voluntary restraints by business and industry without government action "almost make we want to laugh."

Conceding he is a possible "and maybe probable" candidate for the GOP presidential nomination in 1980, the Nixon-era cabinet member also scored Carter on several other fronts. They included "an inept and inconsistent foreign policy" and lack of an extensive energy policy.

Connally came to Ohio to speak at a fund-raiser for Republican candidates for the state Senate on Thursday night.

He said his decision on whether to run for the presidency will depend in part on whether Republicans make enough gains in this year's state legislative and congressional elections to make their party an effective force in Washington.

"It doesn't do any good just to occupy the White House," he said. Republicans have occupied it for 16 of the past 25 years "with no great impact," he observed.

The former Texas governor hit especially hard at what he called the lack of action to do something about inflation and the decreasing value of the dollar.

If it were up to him, he said, he would cut federal spending 5 percent across the board to save $25 billion a year. At the same time, he would propose a $25 billion tax cut and lower the capital gains tax to the 25 percent level of pre-1969. "That way, you wouldn't increase the deficit," Connally added.

Connally said he thinks it was proper for Carter to asked for voluntary restraints by employers to fight inflation, but that he "should ask the same of labor, in fact he should insist upon it."

The former secretary also asserted that the United States, to fight the slipping value of the dollar, must be more assertive in world markets, to "let our trade partners know that we are no longer going to stand for a $30 billion trade deficit."

In remarks prepared for his speech at a dinner Thursday night, Connally said while imported oil is the main reason for the deficit, U.S. manufacturers "are forced to compete in the world marketplace for the sale of their products against foreign manufacturers, who in some instances are subsidized by their own governments."

Connally defended efforts of Republican Gov. James A. Rhodes to delay implementation of federal clean air standards in Ohio.

Responding to a question, he blamed Democrats in Washington for the lack of technology that would enable use of coal within acceptable air standards. He said he thinks "Jim Rhodes is right" in seeking to protect industries which provide jobs.

Connally, obviously aware of heavy reliance on coal by Ohio's utilities and industries, said "you can mine it, but if you mine it, you can't use it."

Teen-Age Killer Of Two Given 18 Months In New York Trial

NEW YORK (AP) — The 15-year-old boy held the gun three inches from the subway rider's left temple, squeezed the trigger, and killed.

Why?

"He got a kick out of blowing them away," said a cousin who was with him when the boy killed Moises Perez, 38, on March 28. But that killing and a history of violence resulted in a jail sentence of only 18 months, handed down Wednesday. He was convicted of juvenile deliquency in Perez's death.

Nine days earlier, the boy, armed with a pistol he had bought on the street for $65, shot and killed Noel Perez, 45, during another subway ride. That time he left a sneaker print in a pool of blood.

Two days after that slaying, the boy, whose name was not released, appeared in Family Court on an unrelated pickpocketing charge, during which transit police called him as "extremely dangerous," and recommended he be remanded to a juvenile detention center.

The judge, despite a city lawyer's prediction that the boy would commit a more serious crime, released him in custody of his mother.

Two days later, the boy — and his cousin — were surprised in a trainyard by motorman Anthony Lamorata. The boy shot Lamorata in the back, wounding him seriously.

"He's the most violent kid I've ever seen in Family Court," said one prosecutor. "He's a cold-blooded killer."

Locked up in the Spofford Juvenile Detention Center after a transit police investigation, the boy warned another inmate, "I'll kill you if you sit down next to me." He stabbed the inmate in the neck with a fork.

The boy once bragged of having a record of eight robbery arrests, which began when he was 9 years old.

He had spent seven months in the upstate Brookwood Center for Youth where he intimidated the staff, bludgeoning two members with a hammer. In one day, he reportedly raped another boy, stole a truck, attempted to run over a social worker and menaced the director and 10 staff members with a crow bar.

When a psychiatrist was called, the boy beat him up.

During his Family Court appearances, he spat on an assistant district attorney, hurled a glass ash tray at a guard, cursed at the judge and said he was keeping a list of people he intended to kill when he escaped, including the cook at Spofford and a prison van driver who drove him to court.

Despite his background and the recent two killings and wounding of Lamorata, the boy was sentenced to 18 months to five years — the maximum Family Court Judge Edith Miller could impose under the state's juvenile offenders law.

"They put this kid away for 18 months," one detective said, "... In 18 months and a day, somebody's going to get killed."

Gov. Hugh Carey commented Thursday, "This type of offender should never be allowed back on the streets. He should be totally isolated from society."

Carey said he would push for life in prison without parole for juveniles as well as adults who commit violent crimes.

45 Men Rounded Up, Jailed As Precaution, Released

MATAMOROS, Mexico (AP) — About 45 men, who spent the night sprawled on the floor of a make-shift jail here, were gradually released Thursday as this border city returned to its normal bustle.

The prisoners had been rounded up earlier this week in what police termed a precautionary move aimed at preventing further disturbances.

Three persons were killed and $2 million in property damage was caused by a riot Monday night.

Relatives of the prisoners kept a quiet vigil on park benches in the town square across from the burned-out municipal building where the men were held.

During the pre-dawn hours Thursday they gathered around officials who came out with news of releases. As the officials called names, those outside responded, "It's my brother," or "It's my son."

Jorge Garza Salinas, the new police chief whose appointment seemed to satisfy local students' demands, said the release of the prisoners marked a return to peace for the 300,000 residents here.

Students protesting alleged police brutality rioted Monday to seek the ouster of police Chief Emiliano del Toro. The youths blamed the chief for the death of a local teen-ager who had reportedly been beaten by officers. Del Toro was fired after the riot.

Three policemen have been jailed and as dozen fired in connection with the innccident.

Enrique Cardenas Gonzalez, governor of the Mexican state of Tamaulipas met with student leaders Wednesday, and an accord was reached.

"What you asked for is just," the governor told students. "I don't believe that you (the students) perpetrated the acts of vandalism which brought shame and destruction to your city."

The agreement included payment of reparations to the family of the slain youth.

Nuclear Waste Disposal Hearings Set In Texas

AUSTIN (AP) — The U.S. Department of Energy will hold hearings in West Texas July 11-13 on a proposed federal nuclear waste disposal site near Carlsbad, N.M., Attorney General John Hill said Thursday.

Federal officials notified Hill by letter of the hearings, to be held in Midland, Amarillo and El Paso.

"In view of the fact that Texas partially surrounds the proposed site, and since Texas railroads and highways will be used to transport the nuclear waste, we want to get as much information as possible on this proposal," Hill said in statement.

The attorney general had requested the hearings during meetings with Energy Secretary James Schlesinger.

Bakke Ruling Is Muddied

THE SUPREME Court's ruling in the Allan Bakke case, while a personal victory for Mr. Bakke, and a landmark decision of sorts on "reverse discrimination," in a way posed more questions than it answered.

While saying that Mr. Bakke had been illegally discriminated against because he is white, the High Court also said that race still can be taken into account in future college admissions programs.

In a 5 to 4 decision, the Justices held that the University of California's medical school at Davis had gone too far in considering race when it refused to admit Bakke. But, it said some affirmative-action programs intended to benefit minority applicants can properly be a factor in admitting students.

OFFERING SEVEN separate opinions and splitting on two major elements, the Justices did not directly address what their decision means for the thousands of other affirmative action programs now in effect in government and private industry.

In a way, the decision approached what one might term a "cop out." It was as though the Court had wished the matter had not come before it, at least at this point in time.

Yet, despite the variety of opinions and the seeming "straddling of the fence," as it were, a clear signal could be read into the court's main opinion, as read by Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr.

Justice Powell held that strict racial quotas or goals are illegal, but other types of affirmative action programs are permissible. In his pivotal role, Powell said the program that kept Bakke out of school, by setting aside 16 of 100 places in the first-year class for minorities, "would hinder, rather than further, attainment of genuine diversity."

THE PROBLEM with which the Justices seem to be wrestling had to do with the Federal law rather than a Constitutional one, although the California Supreme Court itself ruled in favor of Bakke on constitutional grounds only.

The theory behind the so-called affirmative action program, both in colleges, government and private business, is that because minority groups have been allegedly discriminated against in the past, then special consideration should be afforded them "to make up for" past transgressions.

Because of various interpretations of the affirmative-action programs, whites in numerous instances, and other minority groups, have charged that they have been denied equal job opportunities even though more qualified than minority applicants who were chosen.

As a result, the Bakke case, and others, have been lumped under the general category of "reverse discrimination."

MUCH OF THE argument revolves around the Constitution's 14th Amendment.

It was 110 years ago that the 14th Amendment held out to blacks the promise of full membership in American society by granting citizenship to recently freed slaves and ordering all states not to "deny to any person...the equal protection of the laws."

And while minority groups cite the 14th, it also must be noted that the Amendment says states were ordered not to "deny to any person..." It does not say black person, or white person, or brown. It says to ANY person. Nor does it say anything about "special qualifications" or "making up for..." past discrimination.

IN BRIEF, as many interpret the Constitution and the 14th Amendment, every person is guaranteed an "equal opportunity," not a "special" one because of race.

To us, that is the clear cut question which should have been settled, but was left muddied.

If one were to subscribe to the argument that minority groups, primarily blacks, should receive some sort of special treatment because they have been held back, it also can be argued that by now most minority students have had an opportunity to an equal secondary education and thus preparation for college. Reasonably, one should expect that now most students, regardless of race, are equal.

BUT WE WOULD take the argument one step further.

We would like to think that the blacks and browns in America would want to stand on their own two feet. Frankly, we think they are able to do so and in most instances do.

It is demeaning to the minority groups, we feel, to in effect say that they must be given some sort of special treatment in order to compete.

It's too bad the Court did not settle the question once and for all. All truly would be equal then.

Seriously, Boss

WHEN WAS the last time you had a good laugh with the boss? According to a study in the current issue of International Management magazine, it could have been a long time.

Humor is going out of fashion in the office, it seems, and being replaced by a dead serious approach to the business at hand.

"The joke, the quip and the humorous anecdote are now often viewed as time consuming, costly diversions from the very serious regimen of operating a business at maximum potential," IM solemly intoned. The reasons are several:

No-nonsense training programs, intense executive suite competition and unprecedented pressure on managers for efficiency and profits. As any boss can tell you, it's hard to get a chuckle out of any of that. Seriously.

States' Right-To-Work Attracts Union Converts

WASHINGTON—The practice of compulsory unionism is declining steadily in public favor, even with many members of the unions.

Such is the conclusion emerging from a series of public surveys conducted by George Gallup, the Roper organization and opinion analysts in several states.

It appears the message is getting over—to working people and the public generally—that voluntary unionism is a needed protection for individual rights and also a spur to economic progress.

THUS A GALLUP Poll appearing in 1977 found 63 percent of those contacted believed "a person should not be required to join a union if he or she works in a unionized factory or business."

Only 31 percent of Gallup's respondents thought a worker should be required to join a union.

This two-to-one majority was a substantial increase from a decade earlier, when the right-to-work majority was only 49 to 42 percent.

Also significant, Gallup observed, is the fact that numerous labor families are against the practice of compulsory unionism.

The pollster noted that, "while members of labor union families predictably favor the union shop, a sizable minority, 40 percent, stand in opposition.

"Furthermore, this figure represents a significant increase (11 percentage points) since 1966 in the proportion of labor union families who vote against the union shop."

EVEN MORE EMPHATIC are the findings of the Opinion Research Corp. (ORC) and the Roper Poll.

ORC discovered in one survey conducted in 1976 that 55 percent of union members questioned were in favor of right-to-work laws, while Roper in 1977 found 58 percent of union members in favor of such legislation.

In selected states, the proportion of union members and union families who oppose compulsory membership is as large or larger.

In New Mexico, no less than 66 percent of union members questioned were in favor of the right to work. Similar results down through the years have been obtained in Delaware, Iowa, Oklahoma, Kansas—even Massachusetts.

Most recently, the right to work has been vigorously debated in Missouri, where a campaign is under way to adopt a right-to-work amendment to the state constitution.

Union support for the right to work in the Show-Me State appears to be growing.

A SURVEY CONDUCTED in September, 1977, found 43.1 percent of Missouri union members contacted in favor of the right to work, compared to 45.2 percent against.

A more recent survey by ORC, published last month, found 52 percent of union households in favor of a law permitting workers to get and hold a job without being forced to join a union.

A possible reason for union member support of the right to work was stated a few years back by New Mexico Teamster official Velton F. Clark.

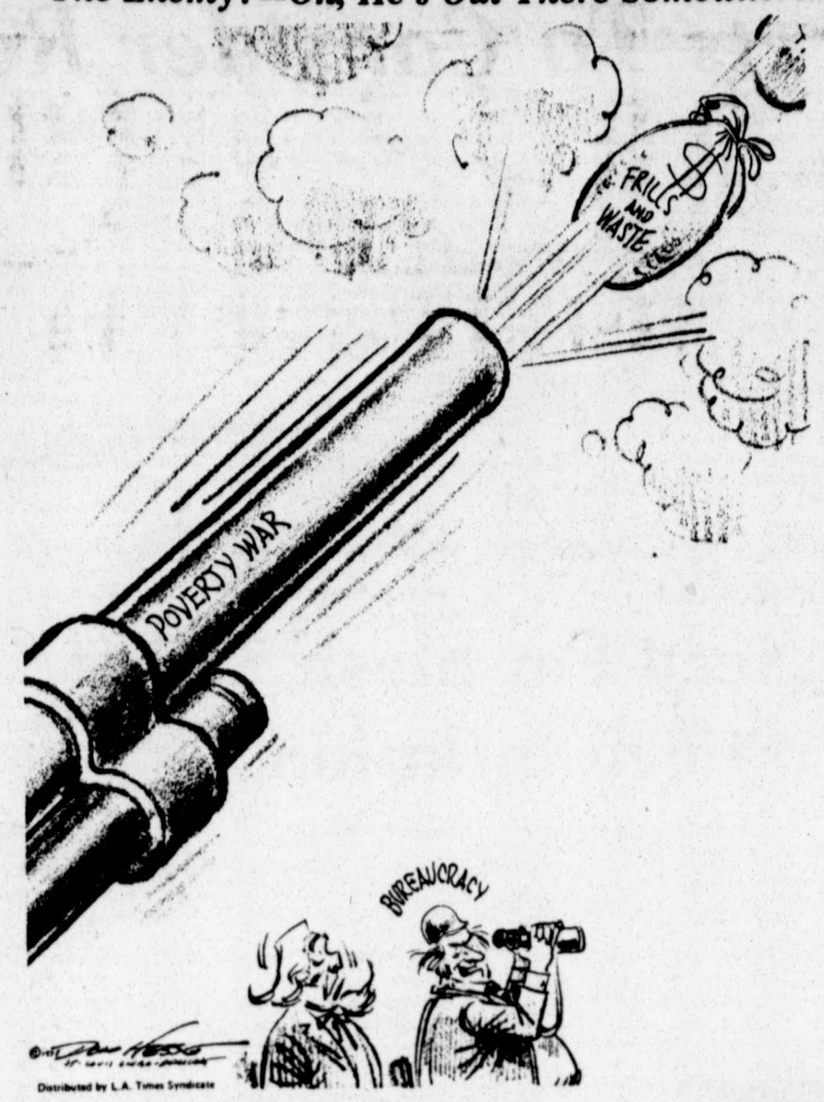

"Where a state has a right-to-work law," Clark put it, "it is to the benefit of the workingman in general, to the union and more particularly to the union membership.

"THE BASIC REASON for this being a fact is that where right-to-work laws exist and individual employes have a choice, the unions through their elective and appointed officials, business agents and other representatives have to get off their duffs and do a better job representing their members..."

That in turn could be the reason, as noted by John Cozad of the Missouri Freedom to Work Committee, that unions have actually experienced a better growth rate in right-to-work states than in compulsory membership states.

In any event, the phenomenon of union member support for the right to work bears watching.

Zbig's Hole Card

EVANS

WASHINGTON—President Carter decided to link strategic interests of the U.S. and Communist China at a hush-hush luncheon May 16, when his national security advisers reversed a ban on sales of airborne scanning equipment to Peking.

This secret decision was agreed to by Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, Secretary of Defense Harold Brown and national security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski. The move was withheld from the bureaucracy because Brzezinski wanted secrecy, enabling him to break the news himself when he arrived in Peking four days later.

The decision permitting the sale of the formerly circumscribed technology opened the door for a Carter administration policy move of global proportions, referred to in Washington as "playing the China card."

Besides its effect on U.S.-Soviet relations, there are domestic implications: a common U.S.-Chinese stance against Moscow is intended to convince conservatives in Congress that formal diplomatic ties with Taiwan should be abandoned in favor of Peking.

THE SCOPE OF THE Peking talks, much broader than was publicized, included the following:

Item: Brzezinski specifically raised with Chinese leaders, including Chairman Hua Kuo-feng, his hope that China would use its influence with black Rhodesian guerrilla leader Robert Mugabe to support the Anglo-American settlement.

Mugabe, who has intimate political connections with Communist China, is by no means committed to free elections as desired by London and Washington.

Item: For the first time since the warming trend started in Sino-American relations, the President authorized Brzezinski to conduct counterpart talks with Chinese experts in two fields: science-technology and military.

The U.S. military expert accompanying Brzezinski was Morton Abramowitz, deputy assistant secretary of defense for international security and subsequently named the new U.S. ambassador to Thailand.

THAT CHOICE FOR the U.S. embassy in Bangkok was itself symbolic. Abramowitz, a Far Eastern expert, is regarded in Peking as uniquely suited for a post in a nearby Southeast Asian country not susceptible to Soviet pressure.

China's nightmare is "encirclement" by vastly superior Soviet power—a principal topic in Brzezinski's world strategy talks with China's new leadership. The U.S. team was particularly impressed with Chinese recitation of Soviet machinations in unified Communist Vietnam.

Emigration from Vietnam of hundreds of thousands of ethnic Chinese has resulted from political and cultural persecution which Peking believes has Moscow's strong backing.

Brzezinski found Chinese perceptions of Soviet world objectives close to his own and those now developing elsewhere within the administration. While obsessed over alleged Soviet encirclement of China, Chairman Hua and his men showed great distress also over Soviet penetration of Africa and Afghanistan.

THEY PERCEIVE CUBA'S Soviet-backed role in Angola as another ploy for Soviet control of a belt of southern African states from the Atlantic to the Indian Ocean. Zaire is the gap in that belt; if closed, the Soviet belt would cut off Rhodesia and South Africa from the rest of Africa.

Accordingly, Chinese leaders listened sympathetically when Brzezinski suggested that Peking do in Angola what the U.S. Congress forbids the U.S. from doing: strengthen Lucas Savimbi's Angolan guerillas now fighting a civil war against Agostinho Neto's Soviet-backed regime.

The sweep of these U.S.-Chinese talks was breathtaking, once the decision to clear that airborne scanning technology for China symbolically opened them.

They were also helped when Brzezinski let it be known in Peking the U.S. would not encourage its European allies to sell defensive—but not offensive—weapons to China.

LEFT UNRESOLVED by the Peking talks was the Taiwan question. Some U.S. officials are certain that early next year Carter will begin disengaging from Taiwan—thereby triggering a battle not to be confined to Capitol Hill.

To prepare for that, administration strategists are quietly briefing key congressmen—including staunchly conservative Republicans—about the administration's new linkage with Communist China on global strategy.

The hope: affinity with Peking in containing Soviet power will override passionate conservative support for Taiwan.

Skepticism about playing the China card is intense among the conservative wooed by Brzezinski and his men. But their tacit cooperation may be essential to carry forth into practice the bold talk between Brzezinski and Hua in Peking.

HENRY J. TAYLOR:

Nail Hit On Head

FORMER AMBASSADOR to Spain and Argentina John Davis Lodge spoke to a packed audience at the testimonial dinner honoring Brig. Gen. James W. Gerard, soldier, patriot and backer of good causes.

Ambassador Lodge is as forthright as he is honest. His words have an authority that generates their own power. And only once in a blue moon does a man arise and, without palaver, drive right to the point, make his statement in a few crisp words and sit down before we are ready to have him stop.

Ambassador Lodge, of course, speaks the language of diplomacy. And he pointed out: "A detente is a long way from an entente. A lessening of tensions—the purpose of a detente—is not an alliance."

AMBASSADOR LODGE observed that by mid-1941, Tokyo-based Soviet spy Richard Sorge gave Josef Stalin definite evidence that the Japanese then had no intentions against the Soviet Union.

Instead, they would strike against Southeast Asia and the Pacific—Pearl Harbor and the Phillippines.

Stalin was able to leave Russia's eastern flank only lightly fortified, knowing Russia would not have to fight on two fronts. And Stalin never notified the United States about Pearl Harbor. He acknowledged his debt to Sorge, but did nothing to save Sorge once he was caught.

The ambassador then noted the difference between the Soviet's superficially conciliatory attitude and the grim realities of the increasingly massive military power of the USSR. It surges forward at an alarming rate and has our Pentagon burning the midnight oil.

THE AMBASSADOR remarked that such warnings carry as little weight as did those of Winston Churchill about Nazi Germany in 1938. He even quoted Churchill's words at the outset of World War II when Adolf Hitler overran and annexed Austria March 13, 1938. And on the identical day in 1939 he issued an ultimatum to Czechoslovakia.

But the ambassador said that 33 years of postwar alarms apparently have created boredom and pointed out that surely Russia is preparing a new round of Soviet power politics.

Further, he pointed out that standing in moral judgment of the Soviets is easy. Working out a way to live with the Soviets is very difficult indeed. Detente should not be a one-way street. And most certainly the Soviets are laughing at President Carter and American policy.

A SOVIET BEAR hug easily can become a mortal vise-like embrace. "The objective of power is power," writes George Orwell. "Power is never just power."

The ambassador stated that the Russian people suffer needlessly. Their leaders' purposes are not to improve life for the people, but to claim that life for them must be better now, because the leaders are in power.

To the Kremlin the human race outside the Soviet frontier falls into two categories: the agents of Communist Imperialism and enemies. Inside, there are three categories: Communists, who are the herrenvolk and rule the roost, ordinary citizens and subversives.

Ambassador Lodge rang the bell in honoring General Gerard.

JAY HARRIS:

Kim Says It All...

IT'S TOO BAD that in all the millions of words spoken and written about the Allan Bakke case that someone didn't ask Kim Dzung Vo to repeat what she had said a few days earlier.

Kim came to the U.S. three years ago, a 16-year-old refugee from Vietnam, as the story about her said, "frightened of the past, uncertain of the future and unable to speak a word of English."

Kim spoke to her graduating class at Quincy, Mass., the other day. She stood at tne lectern and told 434 classmates her innermost thoughts...

"I came to this country from Vietnam two and one-half years ago, without knowing an English word," she said. "But, today I am talking to you with the language that I have learned in two years at Quincy High School.

"MY FAMILY came from a fearful situation. We feared bursting shells and a Communist invasion," she continued.

"Once it was clear we would get to America, we worried that America would not accept us. We worried that we could not understand this new language, environment and culture.

"Today, in Quincy, I go to sleep at night with no fear of bombs, no fear from Communist invasion, no need to escape. Besides these blessings, my family has been accepted as permanent residents in America.

"My brothers and sisters attend public schools. Free educational opportunities help us to improve and to gain new knowledge, to continue to function in our new environment and to understand our new culture...The people I have met have been kind, friendly, caring and helpful.

"Teachers at all levels and subjects are friendlier and more willing to help the yearning students than in Vietnam. Friendships also develop more quickly, especially in my case...at school, at church and at my job..."

KIM'S FAMILY fled Saigon, her father leaving a good job, the family a big house and a car...

No one guaranteed them anything except an opportunity and a friendly welcome. And for some Vietnamese, there wasn't even that. Kim's family didn't demand the schools teach them in Vietnamese, that they be guaranteed a diploma unless it was earned, a job unless they could perform.

In brief, they did the best they could with what they had and with the help of friendly people.

It may come as a rude shock to some of the more vociferous minority spokesmen and certain members of the U.S. Supreme Court, but millions of Americans have done the same thing Kim Dzung Vo has done. Made it on their own.

This land, indeed this city and area, is full of men and women who have done everything from dig ditches and take in laundry to toss hash in cafes and dormitories to get an education and "make it on their own."

AND BECAUSE they believed in "the system" that made even that challenge possible, they turned around and used their time, their talents and their hard-earned money to give others the chance.

They helped found schools and fund them, hire teachers and pay them and encourage willing, young people by giving them jobs, scholarships, equipment to learn and prepare for life as adults.

It is true that because some were "different," they were not treated as others, and were in fact discriminated against in getting an education, in getting a job, in an equal opportunity.

But, in the last quarter of a century, much of that has changed, by attitude if not by law. While pockets of discrimination remain, for the most part, Americans accept a man on his merits—his merits—not his color, his religion or creed.

IT IS TRAGIC that in a nation which has afforded more people of more diverse races and nationalities more freedom than in all other countries combined that we still can't agree on "equality."

Certainly, equality should not mean that one man is more equal than the next because of the color of his skin. Nor should it mean that because of some wrong committed in the past that today's or tomorrow's generation should have to pay tribute for a wrong it did not commit to someone who personally was not wronged.

Equality should not mean that a black man or a brown man should have to be told that he must be given a special "edge" over a white man, or even another black or brown. This implies he can't make it otherwise.

It should be insulting to the minorities to have the Federal government say, in effect, that they have to ride a bus or associate with a person of a different color in order to achieve, in order to be equal.

WHERE THERE is job or educational discrimination, it should be eliminated, by law if necessary. Minority groups should become a part of the mainstream of American society.

But, the Supreme Court, in its ruling on the Bakke case didn't really address itself specifically and clearly to the overall issue.

It is amazing that men of such stature and education could not find the logic and words in the U.S. Constitution to clearly define the problem and the solution.

The 14th Amendment states it quite clearly in ordering that no state shall "deny to any person...the equal protection of the laws..." It didn't say a white person, a black person, a brown person. It did not mention color.

But, if the Justices in their wisdom could not come to grips with the Constitution as opposed to Federal decree, then they had another guideline. It is in the Declaration of Independence... "All men are created equal and are endowed with certain unalienable rights...among these are Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness..." The Pursuit of...not Assurance. Somehow, Kim Dzung Vo understands those words better than the nine Wise Men and many Americans...

Coping With Daily Problems: It's Up To You

By Science Research Associates

The SRA Coping Skills Test is over.

Only you know the score you made. But your score doesn't really matter, because the test wasn't designed to tell you whether you are a winner or a loser or somewhere in between. It was designed to help you become more aware of ways you can cope more successfully with your own life.

In developing the SRA Coping Skills Tests, the SRA development staff spent time discussing what is meant by the term, "coping." We came up with several related definitions:

1. A recognition that one has choices in dealing with most life situations.
2. Taking responsibility for what happens to one's self.
3. An ability to handle whatever situation arises in one's life.
4. Overcoming problems and difficulties.
5. A feeling of personal competency and well being.

No matter how you define the term, coping with life requires specific kinds of skills and knowledge to deal with problems, for virtually all of life involves problem solving.

People seem to have been born to be problem-creating and problem-solving creatures. Difficulties in living, no matter how mundane, can be seen as problems to be identified and solved.

From the time they are born — some say even earlier — people begin learning to cope with life. They continue to learn through everyday living and growing. In learning to ride a bicycle, a child falls, gets bumped, and is bruised, yet he or she keeps on trying.

Sometimes people may be taught in subtle ways that happiness stems from a world in which all our needs are met, a world in which one is never challenged. But there is a more likely possibility that part of the zest of living — the joy of living — comes from meeting challenges, from solving problems, and in the quest for more information about how to solve even greater problems and meet even greater challenges.

Good reading and math skills are basic to coping because they enable one to obtain adequate information about specific problems and the various options that one has in dealing with the problems. But these skills are only a foundation. Your attitude toward problem solving also makes a difference between taking control of your life or simply warding off disaster.

When you know what the options are when a problem exists — or if you know where to find or create the options — you then know how to cope. And this knowledge increases your independence, your self-reliance, and your confidence.

In taking greater responsiblility for your life, you need to be able to distinguish between things that cannot be changed. You can change a lot about yourself — you can lose weight, quit smoking, move to a new place, or change jobs. You also can change some of the conditions in the world about you. But you can't change the fact that the world about you will change — that friends and relatives will die, move away, grow up. Institutions also will change as people change.

Coping also requires the ability to be realistic — to see thing as they are, not as you think they should be. For example, many marital conflicts stem from one partner's idealistic view of what he or she thinks marriage should be — or what the other spouse should be. Many of these conflicts could be resolved if each partner would listen to the other, try to find out who the other person is, and decide jointly how each person's needs can best be met. This is equally true of other interpersonal relationships.

When you say "I can't cope," what you may really mean is "I won't cope." For you do have the capacity to learn how to cope with problems whether they deal with finances, family, work, the households, or any of a number of problems that deal with people relationships.

We hope the SRA Coping Skills Test has provided an instrument through which you can improve your ability to deal with these kinds of problems. But the test can be nothing more than a beginning.

Now, coping is up to you.

HOW TO SCORE YOUR COPING ABILITY

It's possible for you to make a low score on the SRA Coping Skills Test an still cope well with life; similarly, you might make a high score and not be coping well. The reason? Marking answers to written test tells only whether you know what to do in the situations given; it does not test whether you actually do it when you confront these situations in real life. Besides that you would need to answer many more questions than have appeared here to tell how well you really are coping.

But most people like to know how well they do when they take a test. So, here's one way to look at your scores:

SCORE CARD

	Number Right On Each Test	Total Number Right
In Control	16 to 20	121 to 160
Hanging in	11 to 15	81 to 120
Getting by (barely)	6 to 10	41 to 80
"Help!"	0 to 5	0 to 40

In Control: You probably know how to make rational decisions. You're not always right, but you probably know where and how to get help when you need it.

Hanging in: You probably make appropriate decisions much of the time but may need more practice.

Getting by: Chances are you are having problems coping but are managing to get by.

Help!": You probably do better in real life than you do on paper. If not, you do need help.

Parents Of Seven Children Defy Court Order

RESIST COURT ORDER — John and Vicki Singer stand with their seven children in front of the log cabin Singer built 20 years ago in Marion, Utah. Mr. and Mrs. Singer they will resist by force further attempts to have their children attend public school. An arrest order for the Singers could go back into affect Monday. Picture was made last January.(AP Laserphoto)

MARION, Utah (AP) — John Singer, who says public schools are rife with immorality, has not left his 2½ acres in seven months in a dispute with officials who maintain that the Singer children must attend school or be taken from their parents.

The 47-year-old father of seven says he would rather die than send his children to public school. His 35-year-old wife, Vickie, supports him.

"This is a simple matter of who has control of children — the parents or the state," Singer said during an interview in the log house he built 20 years ago in this mountain community 60 miles east of Salt Lake City.

Singer ran a television repair business before he took to his property Dec. 10 to avoid arrest for contempt of court. The family lives off a garden and stored food.

Singer says sex, drugs, homosexuality and venereal disease are rampant in schools.

Second District Juvenile Court Judge John Farr Larson has warned that if no compromise is reached before Monday, he will lift a stay of an arrest order against Singer, who was cited in contempt for failure to appear at a hearing.

"We're on a collision course," Singer conceded, saying he will not budge. Attempts to arrest him "will be met with force," he said.

The Singers have fought since 1974 for the right to educate their children at home. At first granted that right — Singer built a one-room schoolhouse on his property — it was taken away by South Summit School Board officials when Singer refused to take roll and banished school board monitors.

"The judge told us he had the power to take all our children away from us and we would never see them again," Singer said. "So they kind of forced my hand to be in contempt. It's not that I'm above the law. It's just that a higher law has gone into effect."

Deputy Summit County Attorney Terry Christiansen said he is hopeful the impasse will not end tragically. "We're amenable to anything at all at this point," but barring compromise on Singer's part, "we've got to uphold the law. If people are allowed to defy the law ... it sets a bad example."

Robert F. Orton, court-appointed attorney for the Singer children, said, "The thing that strikes me as strange is that the Singers say the law is unconstitutional but they won't make any move to have it declared unconstitutional."

The Singer children are not allowed off the property by their parents, who fear authorities would snatch them, except to walk the 100 yards to the mailbox.

It is now summer vacation for the children, who are taught by Singer and his wife, who studied elementary education for two years in college.

Trucker To Adopt Baby Left In Rig

UVALDE (AP) — Truck driver Curtis King, 26, says he and his wife will try to adopt a 13-month-old girl that a young woman hitchhiker and her companion left in his rig.

King, of Memphis, Tenn., said he thought the woman was kidding when she asked him Wednesday if he would like the baby. He said when the couple got out at Mountain Home, they left the child. Police Chief Vance Chisum said the mother left a birth certificate with the baby and that authorities were attempting to contact the family of the parents listed on it.

Hearings Slated On A-Wastes Disposal Plan

A-J Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Public hearings are scheduled in July for Midland, El Paso and Amarillo on a federal Department of Energy proposal to locate a nuclear waste disposal site near Carlsbad.

The site, known as the Waste Isolation Pilot Project, would be within 25 miles of the Texas border and closer to several west Texas cities than to any major urban area in New Mexico.

Information obtained at the hearings will be included in any application submitted by the Department of Energy to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, according to Attorney Gen. John Hill.

Hearings are scheduled on July 11 in Midland, July 12 in Amarillo and July 13 in El Paso. No times or places for those hearings have been announced.

According to Ralph N. Hooks of 3110 30th St., the guns, including many makes and models, and the stereo were stolen after the burglars got through a bedroom window.

Reports indicated a storm window was removed and after an attempt to cut the inner window failed, the burglars succeeded in breaking enough of the glass to reach through an unlock the window.

Reportedly, no value had been set on the haul.

Charles F. Renfro Jr. of 1304 E. Municipal Drive said someone kicked in a door at his home Wednesday and stole five guns with a total value of $1,200.

William Dewitt Craig II of 2308-A 8th St. set his loss at $3,200 after a burglar pried his back door and stole two guitars and some clothing.

Michael J. Anderson of 5741 1st Place told officers that tools, a tape player and clothing, altogether worth $900, were taken from his open garage late Monday or early Tuesday.

Gilbert Garza's complaint was that someone stole his television, stereo, dog and about $150 worth of loose change from his 2203 18th St., rear, residence earlier this week. Reports indicated entry was gained by breaking through a door.

A $666 haul reportedly was made from Johnny Eugene Holcomb's 208 39th St. home Wednesday after someone broke through a window and got to a stereo, CB radio and other goods including assorted tapes.

Johnny Pearl Ray of 3024 56th St. said he left his car for only about five minutes in the 1300-block of 53rd Street Wednesday night and when he returned, discovered that $80 cash had been stolen from money bags left behind the visor.

According to Lilian V. Speed of 1313 E. 14th St., a television, stereo and some jewelry, altogether having an unknown value, were stolen from her home sometime during the past week.

Property reportedly stolen from Delmer Lavender's 802 E. Fordham St., rear, home Wednesday included a shotgun, camera and CB radio. The $429 burglary reportedly took place after someone cut a window screen.

Charges Filed Here In Fatal Auto Crash

A Lubbock man has been charged with criminally negligent homicide as the result of a June 16 traffic crash which claimed the life of Gail Drake, 25.

Named in the charge was James Donald Deville, 39, of 4619 31st St.

Criminally negligent homicide is a misdemeanor, with a maximum punishment upon conviction of one year in jail and/or a $2,000 fine.

The fatal auto crash occurred shortly after 1 a.m. in the 1700-block of Southeast Loop 289.

The auto, reportedly driven by Deville, believed to have been west-bound on Loop 289 near the intersection of U.S. 84, smashed into a guard rail, with the impact occurring on the passenger's side.

Mrs. Drake was thrown from the vehicle. Investigators reported that the impact from the collision with the guard rail apparently knocked the victim through the left rear windshield.

Mrs. Drake was found lying on the pavement. The first officers on the scene said they could detect no signs of life.

A Department of Public Safety trooper, traveling west on U.S. 84, said he noticed a car driving erratically on an overpass before momentarily losing sight of the vehicle.

He indicated he noticed a cloud of smoke just before entering an underpass. The trooper said he next saw a vehicle hanging and rocking over the Loop 289 guard rail.

A witness — who, reports indicate, came to the police station later with a handbag which apparently belonged to the victim — reported that he had had an unusual encounter earlier near Spur 331 and Loop 289.

The man told police that shortly after 1 a.m. he had seen a car stopped and noticed a woman on the passenger's side waving a white object.

The witness said he thought there might be car trouble, and drove up to see. He said the woman seemed hysterical and was screaming at the driver.

According to the witness, the woman asked him to get the car license number and call the police. The witness said the car took off at a fast speed.

He said he looked down and saw the handbag, which he said he assumed had fallen out when the woman waved the white object.

Grand Jury Returns Indictments

A federal grand jury here Thursday indicted two Amarillo men and an Albuquerque, N.M., man in connection with an alleged drug manufacturing scheme.

The indictment alleges the trio conspired to manufacture and distribute methamphetamine, sometimes referred to as "speed."

Named in the indictment were Charles M. Preston, 38, of Amarillo; Richard Lee Sullivan, 32, of Amarillo and William T. Ristau, 37, of Albuquerque.

The indictments reportedly stem from March 10 execution of search warrants in Amarillo and Albuquerque and alleges the trio conspired to manufacture methamphetamine from about Dec. 14, 1977, until March 10.

The only indictment returned in the Lubbock Division of the U.S. Northern District was against Gary Robb Means, 27, who is believed to have formerly resided in Raytown, Mo.

Means is accused of mail fraud in connection with an alleged scheme to defraud two Snyder residents engaged in an antique business.

The indictment alleges that Means agreed to manage an antique and glass business in Rocheport, Mo., then never opened the store and converted antiques and glass to his own use.

As part of the alleged scheme, Means delivered through the mail photographs of beveled glass pieces, the indictment alleges.

Three other counts accuse Means of transmitting interstate telegrams to further the purported scheme.

A fifth count charges that Means caused the Snyder pair to travel in interstate commerce in execution of the alleged scheme to defraud them of property having a value in excess of $5,000.

Windsurfing Newest Concept In West Texas Water Sports

By TED J. SIMON
A-J Outdoor Editor

Place a sail on a surfboard, wait for some South Plains winds, and hang on! It's the newest concept in water sports for West Texans.

It's called windsurfing or board sailing, and the sport enables the participant to become an intregal part of wind and water. You feel you are a blend of the elements as you skim across a lake or pond. You, the mast, sail and twin booms become one unit.

Nelson Cain, owner of Boats and Bikes and the Lubbock distributor for the Windsurfer, said, "The craft and the sport that followed was the brainchild of Hoyle Schweitzer. Originally a California computer engineer, he dreamed up the craft literally and built one in his garage. After some sailing and redesigning, some of his friends wanted the same type of boat. Schweitzer and his wife decided to close their computer business and go full time into the Windsurfer." The Lubbock man continued, "They told me it was just too good a thing not to pursue."

Discovery

FROM THAT CALIFORNIA GARAGE, the unique craft and the sport caught on with people all over the world. Last year there were 83,000 of the mini-yachts, today the figure has jumped to 125,000.

The sport gained its initial popularity in Europe; approximately two-thirds of the total number of boats are found in Europe. Now the crafts are seen in large numbers on both coasts of the U.S., and the fleet becomes larger as inland sailors discover the exciting pastime.

Why the phenomenal popularity of board sailing? Glenn Nossov of Lubbock said, "I like it because I can get away from everybody and enjoy the sport on my own. It's real peaceful."

Nossov is one of several persons who learned the technique of board sailing on his own. "I met a guy named Gil Murray," recalled Nossov, "who had been windsurfing for awhile and he showed me some of the basics. After that, I went off on my own and learned how to do it. I've improved a lot in the past month and a half."

FOR PERSONS WHO PREFER some formal training, classes in the basics of windsurfing are being conducted this summer by Boats and Bikes.

Hilary Mantooth noted after one hour of basic instruction, "At this point I can handle the boat by myself, but I fall down quite a bit. I think that is pretty consistent for anybody just getting started." She continued, "Getting the mast and sail upright after you fall over does require some strength. But, all in all, it's a challenge, a thrill, and a lot of fun."

Board sailing, like most active sports, can be as simple or as complex as the participant prefers. At competition events there are several categories including buoyball, long distance races (there's an annual race across the bay of San Francisco), slalom and freestyle.

Freestyle consists of "tricks" to enhance every ride. To name a few techniques: The rail ride — the windsurfer flips the hull onto its side, keeps the sail out of the water, and continues to sail while balancing on the edge of the board; no hands — the surfer sails with body between boom and sail, without holding on to any part of the craft; body dip — the sailor dips his or her body in the water while continuing to sail. At last count, there were 38 different official freestyle "tricks."

ALTHOUGH THE SPORT OF windsurfing can be a daring activity, it remains remarkably safe, thanks in large part to the mini-yacht itself. The hull, mast, booms, and daggerboard all float. Also, the sail acts as a sea anchor when it is in the water; that feature keeps the hull from floating away from an "overboard" sailor.

Cain noted, "The U.S. Coast Guard doesn't require users of Windsurfers to wear a life jacket because they don't consider the craft to be a vessel. But, I recommend a personal flotation device be worn. It makes good sense to take all precautions."

Another self-taught wind and board sailor is Steve Davis. "I bought the Windsurfer about six weeks ago," said Davis, "and I just jumped out there and tried it. It took two hours of practice each day for about three days before I could stand up and balance like I should. After that, there really wasn't anything to it."

Davis added, "It's the first thing with a sail that I've ever been on in my life. It's more fun than anything I've ever had."

KIMBERLY DAHLIN, WHO HAS a standard type sailboat, first tried board sailing last summer when she visited her sister and brother-in-law in Georgia, the owners of two Windsurfers. "Although I kept falling off," the Lubbockite recalled, "I really became interested in the sport. Now I've got a sail boat and a Windsurfer."

She has had two lessons at this writing. "I've reached the point where I can balance it pretty well," explained the beginner. "All I need now is some decent days to get in some practice."

Most beginners practice with a mini-sail that has 25 square feet of cloth to catch the wind. The mini also doubles as a high wind sail (35 to 40 mph) for experts. There are several stock sails including a super sail (91 square feet) to catch light breezes ranging from five to seven miles per hour.

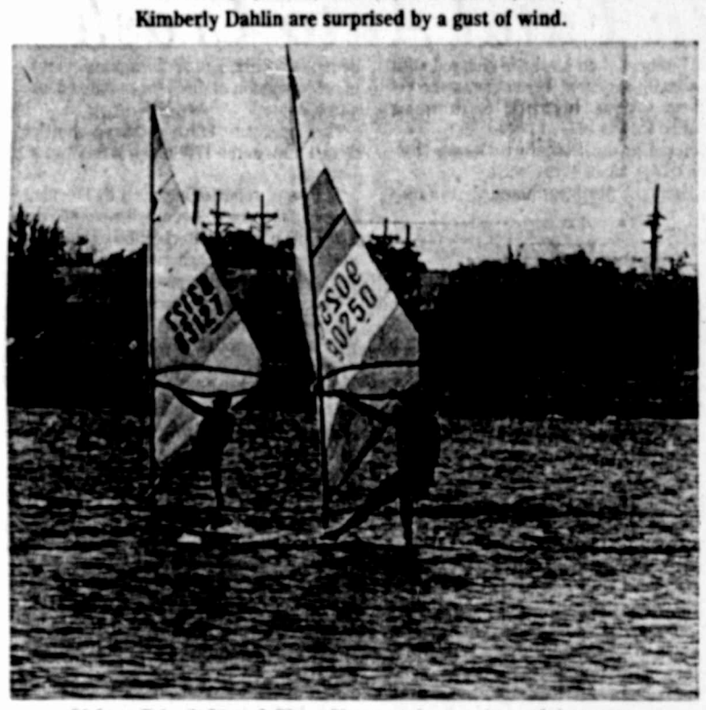

BECAUSE MORE AND MORE persons are taking up the relatively new concept in water sports, Cain plans to expand instruction. "Our plan at this time is to have a certified school for next year," he said. "Because the school will feature a dry land simulator, there will be a charge for instruction. Presently we don't charge for lessons with the purchase of a Windsurfer."

Most days will find several windsurfers darting back and forth across the waters at Maxey Park. Usuually one or more of the sailors will get a refreshing dunking. But, every ride prompts remarks such as: "It's a very active sport." "There's a tremendous feeling of speed and power." "It's a continuing challenge."

Nelson Cain may have summed up the reason for the growing popularity of a sail on a surfboard when he noted, "Every time I go out, I learn something about windsurfing I didn't know the time before. I think it will probably remain that way for many years."

Mrs. Nelson (Jackie) Cain (back to camera) and Kimberly Dahlin are surprised by a gust of wind.

Kimberly Dahlin checks the rigging on her craft's sail and booms.

Corpus Christi will host the 1978 North American Windsurfer Championship July 31 -August 5. Entries are open to all members of the International Windsurfer Class Association who normally sail in North or South America. Competition will be held in Olympic triangle racing, buoyball, slalom and freestyle.

The 1978 World Championship will be October 16 -24 at Cancun, Mexico. Cancun is an L-shaped island off the Yucatan Peninsula.

Other world-wide board sailing events include: Marseille, France, August 12 -19; Svet, Czechoslovakia, August 19 -20; Lake Coniston, England, August 25 -27; Alta Lake, B.C., Canada, September 1 -3; Tangalooma Island, Australia, September 10 -17; Konstanz, Switzerland, September 23 -24.

Frontage Lighting Approved

By PAULA TILKER
Avalanche-Journal Staff

The Electric Utility Board Wednesday approved a policy for upgrading street lighting along Loop 289 frontage roads.

After endorsing drop collection boxes for Lubbock Power and Light bills, the board also authorized city staffers to apply for revenue-sharing funds to build the boxes and to seek other financing for the project.

In adopting the Loop lighting policy, board members followed suggestions drafted by Tom Hill, city department head in charge of street lighting.

As recommended by Hill, LP&L will use its discretion in installing 100-watt high pressure sodium lights at the existing 49 unlighted frontage road intersections.

Funds for the replacements, which would be done as funds become available, would be financed from a revenue-sharing pro rata supplement, Hill said.

The city power company also will use its discretion in replacing mercury vapor street lights with sodium lights at 35 already lighted intersections. Hill suggested the replacements be made as the mercury lights burn out and that the costs be paid from the operating maintenance budget.

Formal board policy also will state that "all new street intersections involving the Loop 289 frontage roads and dedicated city streets be provided with a 100-watt residential sodium vapor light, beginning with the first dedication and the initial pro rata payment."

The board also agreed with Hill's recommendation against "providing free street lighting for commercial areas unless there are dedicated street intersections."

Hill noted in his report that "some commercial shopping centers have installed their own area lighting for customer traffic and security, others have not."

The city should not pick up the tab for providing area lighting, he said. Board members agreed.

The policy on frontage road lighting was drafted at City Manager Larry Cunningham's request. Walter Armstrong of the LP&L staff told the board that at least two businesses had asked the city for additional frontage lighting.

Initially, about 15 LP&L "drop boxes" will be installed at various locations for customer convenience in paying bills, the board decided.

Leona Maxwell of the LP&L staff told the board the four major supermarkets she has contacted have been receptive to the idea of setting aside a collection spot in their buildings.

Board members authorized Mrs. Maxwell to work out legal aspects of the project and seek funds for it.

The staff also reported that the new Holly II turbine engines are being tested and that they will be "on line" fulltime soon. A grand opening for the new LP &L plant will be held next month.

Puerto Rican Unit Hurt In Bus Mishap

FORT GORDON, Ga. (AP) — Thirty members of a Puerto Rican hospital unit in training here were slightly injured when a bus overturned, authorities said.

Two were hospitalized, but were expected to be released to return to San Juan with the unit Saturday, according to Maj. George Foster, Fort Gordon public information officer.

The members of the 369th Station Hospital of San Juan, participating in a two-week training program, were returning from a party at the post's Mirrow Lake recreation area Wednesday night when the bus overturned, Foster said.

Area Towns Plan Fourth Of July Festivities

will be featuring a day of family fun and entertainment in Forrest Park.

The festivities start with motorcycle races at 4 p.m., which will be followed by a parade of children, clowns and bands through the park. Contests, ranging from tobacco spitting to water polo, will begin at 5 p.m.

One of the features of "75 years of the good old days" will be a cake contest at the Fair Park Community Center. Cakes will be judged on the basis of carrying out the city's birthday theme, and the winner will receive $75.

Fireworks, under the direction of the Lamesa Optimist Club, will conclude the celebration.

In Slaton, July 4th festivities, featuring a barbecue, auction, games and musical entertainment, will kick off about 9 a.m. at the city park.

Money collected from the barbecue and auction will be donated to Slaton's Mercy Hospital.

A special activity will be the third annual domino tournament, sponsored by the Slaton Ladies Chamber of Commerce, which gets underway at 9 a.m., July 4, in the Slaton Clubhouse.

Deadline for domino entrants is noon Monday. The tournament is open to partners only, and the entrance fee is $3 a person. Rules and entry blanks may be picked up at the chamber office or at the Slatonite.

Plenty of patriotism is on tap at Crosbyton's celebration, which will feature a patriotic address by Grady Tunnell of Plainview, to be followed by the singing of patriotic songs.

Other activities in Crosbyton will include: 9 a.m., golf tournament at the Silver Falls Golf Course; 6 p.m., children's greased pig chase; 6:45 p.m., country and western music supplied by the Over the Hill Gang; 7:45 p.m., tumbling exhibition; and 8:15 p.m., horseshoe pitching for senior citizens. The majority of the events will be at the football field.

Fireworks provided by the Crosbyton Volunteer Fire Department will end the activities.

Brownfield will be doing something a little different this year — they'll be burying a time capsule. The ceremony, which kicks off the city's upcoming Diamond Jubilee, is slated for 10 a.m. on the northwest corner of the square. The capsule, which contains a calendar, newspapers and other mementos of 1978, is scheduled to be opened in 2004.

Athletics will be emphasized in Paducah on the Fourth. A "Super Stars Competition," featuring events ranging from the high jump to tennis, will be held for persons of all ages at various athletic fields throughout the city. Action gets underway at 8 a.m. and continues to 8 p.m.

The Seminole area reunion is slated July 4 at noon in the Civic Center. A patriotic production and fireworks display at Gaines County Park, which is expected to draw more than 2,000 persons, will climax the day's festivities.

The "Texas — Cradle of Giants," country and western musical production from South Plains College, will be back home in Levelland for a 9 p.m. Fourth of July show on the quadrangle at the college.

The production is a musical salute to the contributions that Texans have made to the country-western music field.

In another Hockley County community, Sundowners will be enjoying their Freedom Festival scheduled to get underway at 11 a.m., July 4 , in the new Sunset Park. Activities will include a cracker-eating contest and skateboard race.

Other celebrations are scheduled in Andrews, O'Donnell, Plainview, Ralls, Abernathy, Post and Hereford.

Two Killed, 47 Hurt In Jerusalem Blast

JERUSALEM (AP) — A powerful explosion ripped through a crowded open air market in the Jewish section of Jerusalem on Thursday, just one day before the scheduled arrival in Israel of Vice President Walter Mondale. Two persons were killed and 47 wounded, officials said.

The Palestine Liberation Organization claimed responsibility for the mid-morning blast that blew apart a vegetable stand at the Mahane Yehuda market as Israelis were doing their pre-Sabbath shopping.

A small concrete building was destroyed and several adjacent stores and sidewalk carts were damaged.

"An underground squad acting inside occupied Palestine planted the heavy explosive charge in the Mahane Yehuda vegetables market in Jerusalem Wednesday morning," a PLO spokesman said in Beirut. He said the squad "returned safely to its base inside occupied territory despite the enemy's security dragnets."

The PLO spokesman said the attack "emphasizes the PLO's determination to escalate the armed struggle against our Zionist enemy from within."

Fruit, vegetables, clothing and wooden crates were strewn about the blast area. The market was closed and police said a number of suspects were detained.

Within minutes of the explosion, the casualties were evacuated to nearby hospitals by a squad of ambulances hastily assembled by the Magen David Adom, Israel's Red Cross, under a special emergency procedure. About 30 persons remained hospitalized Thursday, seven hurt seriously.

"I heard a boom and then I was thrown back," one witness told Israel radio. "Everything I was carrying was blown out of my hands. I heard screams and shouts and I got up and ran away."

Israeli police refused to say what type of explosive was used or how it was planted in the market.

Mondale Link Eyed

Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek, who visited the market after the explosion, said he thought the terrorist attack was linked to Mondale's visit. Mondale is scheduled to arrive in Tel Aviv at 2 p.m. local time (7 a.m. CDT) today for a four-day visit. He is to meet with Prime Minister Menachem Begin and Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan to review political problems involved in resuming Israeli-Egyptian peace talks.

The market is located in West Jerusalem near the busy Jaffa Road throughfare and less than a mile from the walls of Jerusalem's old city. The market is usually busiest on Thursdays as Jewish residents stock up for the Sabbath beginning at sundown Friday.

Mahane Yehuda was the scene of another bloody terrorist attack nearly 10 years ago. On Nov. 22, 1968, a parked car packed with powerful explosives exploded on a street in the market, killing 12 Israelis and wounding more than 50.

Toll Reaches 11

Thursday's blast was the 14th of the year in the Jerusalem, raising the toll for 1978 to 11 dead and more than 120 wounded. The worst incidents of the year occurred Feb. 15, when an explosion aboard a bus killed two and wounded 48, and June 2, when another bus bombing killed six and wounded 20.

In Amman, Jordan, the former mayor of East Jerusalem messaged the American Embassy denouncing Mondale's projected visit to the Israeli-occupied sector of the city.

Roho Khatib told Ambassador Thomas Pickering that the visit amounted to a recognition of Israel's sovereignty over the entire city. East Jerusalem was captured in the 1967 Mideast war.

Appeal Notice Filed In School Fuss

peal will buy the Justice Department about a month and a half to make up its mind.

From the filing of the notice, the department would have 40 days to present its first appeals documents to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, according to the civil docket clerk for that court.

Lubbock school officials have their fingers crossed that the Justice Department won't appeal. One reason, they say, is that the 5th Circuit traditionally has been tough on school districts in integration matters.

Nevertheless, school officials here seem confident that Woodward's judgment can stand up to the scrutiny of higher courts.

School board president Charles Waters has said the district would consider taking the case to the U.S. Supreme Court if Woodward's plan is overturned by the 5th Circuit.

Should the Justice Department appeal, school officials say there probably isn't time for a new desegregation order to be handed down by the start of the 1978-79 school year.

Thus, they are committed to implementing in August the plan Woodward already has approved.

That plan, which was proposed by the school board, is a combination of voluntary and mandatory measures. It will involve busing about 2,000 elementary students and several hundred secondary students a day.

What the Justice Department trial lawyers don't like is that the plan leaves several schools here predominantly one-race. Also, the lawyers feel the plan puts a disproportionate burden on minorities.

As part of the integration plan, Woodward is permitting school officials to proceed with a modified version of the $11.9 million building program that Lubbock voters overwhelmingly approved Feb. 22, 1977.

The capital improvements program includes immediate construction of three elementary schools and a junior high south of Loop 289 and additions and renovations of campuses throughout the city.

The projects already have been delayed a year because of the desegregation trial.

Unless construction begins soon, the new elementaries may not be ready for the 1979-80 school year, and the new junior high may not be completed in time for the 1980-81 school year.

Begin Appeals For Renewal Of Negotiation

Begin or Sadat since the latest round of Egyptian-Israeli disputes over the future of the occupied West Bank.

Mondale will meet both Begin and other Israeli officials during three days in Israel, and Sadat during a brief stopover in Alexandria that was added to the vice president's homeward-bound itinerary only last week.

U.S. officials said, however, Mondale will not be taking any new U.S. "peace formula" for consideration by his hosts.

The vice president was accompanied to Israel by State Department Middle Eastern experts and a delegation of prominent American Jews.

They were to participate in ceremonies honoring the 30th anniversary of Israel's statehood.

Officials said Mondale would also try to smooth over U.S.-Israeli frictions aggravated by peace policy disputes and Carter's decision to sell warplanes to Saudi arabia and Egypt as well as Israel.

Mondale was to confer with Begin, former Prime Minister Golda Meir and other Israeli leaders before returning home, after the Alexandria stopover, July 4.

The Israeli visit also includes one potentially controversial event Mondale took pains to explain in advance — a personal visit to the sacred Wailing Wall in East Jerusalem, an area Israel took from Jordan in the 1917 war.

The locale is sacred to Arabs as well as to Christians and Jews, and U.S. officials have always avoided any action — such as a visit of official character — that might suggest the United States is recognizing Israal's claim to sovereignty.

New York Finance Bill Clears Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate voted overwhelmingly Thursday to supply New York with long-term bond guarantees that the city says it needs to stave off bankruptcy. The vote was 53 to 27.

The Senate bill would provide the city with $1.5 billion in guarantees. Earlier this month, the House approved a bill granting the city $2 billion in guarantees and short-term loans.

The legislation now heads to a House-Senate conference committee where differences between the two measures must be worked out. The conference is expected to convene in mid-July.

Changes Urged

New York City supporters are expected to try to rid the Senate proposal of some of its tougher restrictions in the conference committee.

President Carter said in a statement issued by the White House that the vote "represents an historic point in New York's path to economic recovery and financing self-sufficiency."

"The Senate's action today reflects its awareness of the progress the city has made, as well as its recognition that the city's financing problems require a permanent solution that can restore New York to financing self-sufficiency," the president said.

Called Too Restrictive

Carter said the administration still wanted to modify in the conference committee "certain provisions in the Senate versions which we regard as excessively restrictive."

Referring to those restrictions, New York municipal pension funds threatened Thursday to pull out of the city's financial recovery plan if the Senate version won final approval.

Mayor Edward I. Koch, who has said approval of the bond guarantees is the difference between "fiscal life and death" for New York City, said he was "jubilant" over the Senate vote.

Amendments Blocked

On the Senate floor, backers of the city's bond guarantees easily warded off a series of amendments that would have toughened the bill even further.

Ironically, they were joined in that task by Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., who served as the bill's floor manager despite his oft-stated opposition to it.

Proxmire explained that he was defending the legislation in his role as chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, which reported the bill to the floor over his dissenting vote.

But Proxmire cast what he called "a quiet vote on a personal basis" against the bill and warned:

"There is no way to get around the fact the federal government is getting into the business of guaranteeing municipal bonds. Once we get in, there is no way to get out. ... We can only get in deeper."

Sens. John Tower, R-Texas, and Jake Garn, R-Utah, charged that passage of the bill would create a "double standard" in the way the federal government deals with its cities. They said the answer to New York's problems could be found in budget cuts, not guarantees.

"The federal guarantees will postpone, not solve, the city's problems," Tower said.

Garn added: "New York City has not faced the fundamental problem of balancing its budget."

However, Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., said, "In supporting this bill, the Senate will have opted for a permanent solution to New York City's financial problems and will have dismissed the need for periodic patch-up missions."

"Federal government support provides the necessary psychological assurance to the city's other financial institutions," Javits added.

It is to those institutions — including the city's banks and municipal pension funds — that New York must turn to fashion a four-year financing plan intended to meet its long-term spending needs and to refinance its debt.

At present, the city is unable to sell its bonds on the private market. Its last bond offering, in November, failed and the city cannot raise the cash it needs for long-term spending projects.

The legislation was sought by the city because the municipal pension funds, whose investments it needs, had refused to contribute to the financing plan without their investments being protected by a federal guarantee.

Jail's Construction Bids Top $4 Million

southeast corner of the county office building at Broadway and G.

A contractor is allowed by law to take up a third of a street, which Maeker said will have its main effect in the elimination of parking in those locations.

There were four general contractors, two mechanical companies, six electrical contractors and two laundry equipment firms offering bids Thursday.

Four detention equipment firms bid last week.

May Alter Plans

During the discussion of alternatives, Biggs observed that the county has "only so much money to spend" and indicated he might favor deleting a 90-man cell block if necessary.

That course would reduce the jail capacity from 330 to 240 including a 60-inmate holding or temporary incarceration capacity in both situations.

Jail administrator Gary McGrew, who attended the meeting with Sheriff C.H. Blanchard, noted that the jail Thursday had 127 inmates with about 30 in holding.

Maeker said it cannot be accurately predicted when a reduced-capacity new jail might become overpopulated.

The existing jail is near its capacity now.

Federal revenue sharing money will be used to build the new jail, and all revenue sharing funds the county will receive through 1980 is earmarked for the project.

The jail is expected to be done by early 1980.

County Auditor Dale Gallimore said the county should have about $3.8 million counting money already in hand to build the jail.

"If the commissioners decided to go the full route, they could draw enough money to complete the jail from other funds," Gallimore said after the meeting.

The one-story jail will have 58,600 square feet of floor space.

A $3.4 million jail, including about $50,000 in kitchen equipment and deleting the 90-man cell block on the southeast corner of the building, would be built on bids of $1,379,011 by Furr's for general construction, $588,025 by Chisum for mechanical work, $315,460 by Row-Wall for electrical work and an unchanged bid for laundry equipment.

Minority Jobs Backing Seen

the Carter administration is firmly committed to promote minority programs and would "come to the aid" of businessmen who adopt them.

And, he contended, the decision did not rule out congressionally mandated quotas in some areas if it could be shown that "hard and fast numbers are the only way to remedy specific cases of past discrimination. They can't be numbers pulled out of a hat," he said.

Days conceded it was "perfectly possible" that the ruling could at least temporarily slow down affirmative action plans as the nation awaits further Supreme Court clarification in upcoming cases. "But I don't think that need be the case," he said.

State Workers Boo California Governor

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Thousands of state employees, angered by Gov. Edmund Brown Jr.'s proposed state pay freeze, booed him Thursday when he spoke to their rally on the Capitol lawn.

The Democratic governor was almost drowned out by boos from the crowd of several thousand when he said, "We have to think of those who are facing unemployment and layoffs."

Following his speech, many in the crowd chanted in a loud roar, "Down with Brown." Picket signs abounded, including one that read, "Era of Limits Means One Term."

Economists Foresee Recession

WASHINGTON (AP) The inflation outlook is bleak and the chance of a recession is at least 50 percent, leading economists said Thursday.

In a report for the Brookings Institution, economists Arthur Okun and George Perry said "there are no villains or heroes in the recent inflationary experience."

Labor unions increase their demands because of higher prices and businesses raise their prices partly because of higher labor costs, they said.

At a news conference to discuss the report, the economists said that the Federal Reserve will probably continue to tighten the money supply as it tries to stop inflation.

Recession Warned

Questioning this policy, they said it may lead to a recession at the end of this year or next year.

"The Federal Reserve is not making inflation go away but is making the expansion go away," Perry said.

Okun said, "The outlook is very bleak. We have a serious risk of recession" as long as economic growth is restrained.

Asked the chances for a recession, he said, "It is 55 percent on the recession side at this point. That's assuming no changes in policies by the Federal Reserve or administration."

Okun said President Carter is asking inflation chief Robert Strauss "to work a miracle" by trying to persuade business and labor to hold down prices and wages voluntarily.

Tax Breaks Urged

Okun and Perry favor a program to reward businesses through tax breaks for holding down wage and price increases.

Okun acknowledged that such a policy has little support in Congress and that it would be difficult to administer.

But he said such a policy would mean the Federal Reserve would not restrain economic growth so much.

Reporting on a series of meetings about inflation during April, the economists said it is impossible to pinpoint a culprit for inflation.

"All private groups have sought, understandably, to protect their own interests by passing on the higher costs of the items they buy in the form of higher prices of the goods or services they sell," their report said.

"With labor costs rising faster than 8 percent, business is merely a transmission belt for inflation when its prices rise by 6 percent

"And with consumer prices rising by 6 percent, workers who obtain pay increases above 8 percent are merely maintaining the long-run pattern of real gains that they have come to expect," it added.

"But these normal patterns of behavior create a price-wage spiral and maintain the momentum of inflation."

Schools Say Bakke To Have Little Effect

By The Associated Press

Educators across the country said Thursday that the Supreme Court's Bakke decision will have little or no effect on their admissions policies. They said they encourage minority enrollment with affirmative action programs, but denied the use of racial quotas.

The court, on Wednesday, ruled that the strict quotas imposed by a California medical school were illegal. It also said, however, that race could be used as a criterion for admission.

An Associated Press spot check of about two dozen states showed that most college and university officials believe the ruling will allow them to continue special minority programs.

"This decision probably will not alter the ... admissions policies one bit," said Dr. Allen W. Mathies Jr., dean of the medical school at the University of Southern California. "We have dealt with all applicants in the same manner with a single admissions committee. In making admissions decisions, we have taken into account all factors ..."

The Supreme Court decision came in the case of Allan Bakke, 38. Bakke, who is white, charged that he was denied admission to the University of California's medical school at Davis because of the school's policy of setting aside 16 of 100 available positions in each entering class for minority applicants.

Gary Morrison, assistant counsel for the Davis medical school, said he did not know how the ruling would affect next fall's class, which includes 16 students accepted under the quota program.

Joe Flowers, public relations spokesman for the University of Oklahoma medical school, said the ruling "will not affect us because we have never used quotas. Our affirmative action program is aimed at finding the best-qualified applicants and ensuring that there is a broad representation in the classrooms."

Clifton Wharton Jr., the first black chancellor of the State University of New York, the largest state university system in the country, said the school "does not maintain specific numerical goals that could be construed as affirmative action quotas ... While we shall, of course, examine the ruling in greater depth, we are confident that we shall be able to continue our vigorous affirmative action efforts."

A similar statement came from Elaine Freeman, speaking for the Johns Hopkins University Medical School in Baltimore. She said the school does not have a quota system. "The policy ... is to consider minority groups equally with all other applicants," she said.

Jerome B. Wiesner, president of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, also said he believed MIT was in compliance with the court's ruling.

"We hope that the decision will not be misread as a signal to lessen efforts to increase opportunities for minorities in our society," he said.

Some authorities said they were still studying the decision.

Richard Bernick, regent at the University of Colorado, said, "The ground rules (for minority admissions) might have to be modified somewhat." He said the main modification would entail the inclusion of poor Anglo applicants in the same pool as blacks, Chicanos, native Americans and Orientals.

Dr. Paul G. Pearson, acting president of Rutgers University in New Jersey, asked Dean Peter Simmons of the Newark Law School to convene a faculty committee to review the court's decision. The law school has a special program in which the school sets a target of 25 percent of its admissions for qualified minority students and Pearson said the Bakke ruling " may make it necessary to change procedures ..."

Albert J. Kuhn, Ohio State University provost, said, "It is still too soon to know what the full impact" of the ruling will be. "I emphasize, however, that the Bakke decision in no way lessens Ohio State's continuing commitment to the goal of equal opportunity ..."

Dr. John A.D. Cooper, president of the Association of Medical Colleges, said he believed most medical schools "are using admissions procedures which we feel fall within the views of the court. As a matter of fact, the decision ... removes some past uncertainties and should stimulate efforts to increase the admission of under-represented minorities."

Virginia Secretary of Education J. Wade Gilley said he expected the ruling to have little impact. Virginia officials reached agreement earlier this year with the federal government on a desegregation plan for state colleges and universities. The plan sets goals for increasing minority enrollment. Asked if he thought it might be struck down because of the Bakke case, Gilley said:

"I wouldn't think so."

W. Albert Sullivan, associate dean at the University of Minnesota medical school, said the ruling would have "absolutely no effect" on the institution's policy. "We have no quota ...." Bakke graduated from the university in 1962. He later applied to the medical school, but was rejected because he was not a state resident, Sullivan said.

Milton Jones, chairman of the board of regents of the university system of Georgia, said, "I don't believe that it will have any effect in Georgia one way or the other. We never believed in quotas and never had quotas."

Richard Rhoda, a spokesman for the Tennessee board of regents in Tennessee, said schools in the state had "no quotas as such, but each school has affirmative-action-type programs that are seeking out qualified candidates such as minority students, handicapped students, any kind of disadvantaged group."

Dr. Isaac Beckes, president of Vincennes University, said his school had no quota system. He said, however, the ruling "interferes with the integrity of the institution itself to decide what kind of students it wants."

Officials in Wisconsin, Missouri, Utah, Kansas, Texas, Alabama, Oregon, Nebraska, Michigan and Kentucky also said that while they encourage minority applications, they do not have strict quota systems.

Ruling Seen Aid To Minorities

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Association of American Medical Colleges Thursday greeted the Supreme Court decision in the Allan Bakke case as one that should boost, rather than deter, the admission of minority students.

"Most of the medical schools are using admissions procedures which we feel fall within the views of the court," said Dr. John A. D. Cooper, association president. "As a matter of fact, the decision ... removes some past uncertainties and should stimulate efforts to increase the admission of under-represented minorities."

The association, representing all of the nation's 124 medical schools, said about nine percent of the 60,000 medical students across the land are minority members, a figure it hopes to build to about 12 percent.

Dr. Louis W. Sullivan, dean of the predominantly black School of Medicine at Morehouse College in Atlanta, shared Cooper's sentiments — and thus disagreed with some other black leaders, who viewed the decision as a setback to minority advancement.

Sullivan told reporters at the association's news conference that "the decision of the court in affirming the use of race as a positive criteria (in evaluating applicants) will actually enhance" the chances for blacks and other minorities to enter medicine.

Cooper said that unlike the University of California at Davis at the time of Bakke's application, "few, if any, schools today have strict racial quotas or goals. But they do take race into consideration."

Dr. John A. Gronvall, dean of the University of Michigan Medical School, said the decision provides institutions with "the opportunity to continue and expand their diversity. The responsibility is now on the medical schools to increase their opportunities for minority students."

The court ordered Bakke, a white, admitted to the Davis school on grounds he had been rejected due to a quota system that made race the sole reason for his exclusion. But it also said race may be used as a "plus" among the criteria for evaluating all applicants.

Cooper said the court has thus put "its imprimatur on affirmative action programs. The only problem for the medical schools will be to find an appropriate weight for race among the many factors used in evaluating applicants."

"We have a great diversity in our medical schools and thus each will give different weight to the various criteria employed," he said. "The association will continue its efforts to broaden the racial and socio-economic base of its student bodies."

Students Ask Guidelines From Professionals

WASHINGTON (AP) — Doctors and lawyers should spell out guidelines for medical schools' affirmative-action programs, a minority students group said Thursday.

The Student National Medical Association claimed that the Supreme Court's Bakke decision "has exposed the flanks of affirmative action and left it open for a more directed attack in the future."

Adewal Troutman, the group's president, told reporters the ruling "has given the signal to racist opportunists ... that the time has come to bring out the big guns and heat up the war on the human rights of the oppressed minorities in this country."

The high court on Wednesday ordered that the University of California at Davis Medical School admit Allan Bakke, a white, because its rigid, special-admissions program for minorities discriminated against him. However, the court also said that schools may weigh race as a factor in admissions.

The ruling fails to give schools guidance on to what extent race can be counted, complained Larry Brown, a New York University medical student and board chairman of the group.

Troutman, a student at the New Jersey Medical School in Newark, said minority enrollments in medical schools already have fallen in the past few years. Schools are putting less effort into recruiting and retaining minorities at the same time that skyrocketing tuition costs are discouraging them from applying, said Troutman.

The group said the nation's medical and legal establishment should form a national task force with community groups to "devise a mechanism" for ensuring that minority enrollments increase in medical schools.

About 3,000 of the estimated 3,500 minority students in U.S. medical schools belong to the association, Troutman said.

$1 Million Paid For Ford Book

NEW YORK (AP) — The paperback rights to Betty Ford's autobiography have been bought for $1 million by Ballantine Books, it was announced Thursday by the publishers of the hardcover edition.

Under standard contracts with authors, a writer and publisher share the proceeds of the paperback sale equally. A spokesman for Harper & Row Publishers said Mrs. Ford's contract deviates from the normal, but said he was not at liberty to discuss what her share of the sale would be.

The former first lady, in collaboration with Chris Chase, completed the first draft of her book, "The Times of My Life," prior to her hospitalization for alcohol and drug dependency.

Under terms of the paperback sale, Ballantine may not release the reprint before November 1979.

Stockholders Okay Sale Of Lehigh Rail System

BETHLEHAM, Pa. — The stockholders of Lehigh Coal and Navigation Co. Thursday approved the sale of the company's leasehold interest in the Lehigh and Susquehanna railroad system to the Consolidated Rail Corp. for $5.25 million, Lehigh Coal president T.R. Anderson said.

The company used the funds to pay off its debts and those of its subsidiary, Cella's Confections Inc. Anderson also said the company would pay preferred stock dividends that had been skipped.

Iraq To Launch Drive To Combat Illiteracy

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Iraq, which in 1965 had an illiteracy rate of 70 percent, has launched a three-year program to eradicate illiteracy, the government announced Thursday.

Education Minister Mohammed Mahjoub said the plan will cover all Iraqis between the ages of 15 and 45 — about 2.3 million out of a total population of 12 million. The illiteracy rate was not indicated in Iraq's 1970 census.

Sooner City Workers Turn To, Fill Potholes

POTHOLERS — Harold Dunham, mayor of Yukon, Okla., leads a crew of city employees as everyone from the city council on down turned out to help the city's five-man street crew put temporary patches in potholes. (AP Laserphoto)

YUKON, Okla. (AP) — Hands that normally don't work with anything rougher than typewriter keys or paper forms were blistered on the handles of shovels, Thursday, as city workers were ordered to patch potholes or lose their jobs.

"We told the voters that if they would approve a sales tax increase, we would fix the streets. They voted four to one in favor of the increase, and we're going to fix the streets," Mayor Harold Dunham, 35, said as he leaned against his shovel in the 95-degree heat.

The increase, from one percent to two percent, was approved last month.

"Something had to be done to buy a little bit of time," he said. "With 110 miles of potholes and only a five-man street maintenance crew, we weren't even getting the temporary patching done quick enough. With these temporary patches in, we can begin letting contracts to do the job properly."

City Manager James Branum, 27, gave the order Wednesday that all municipal employees of this Oklahoma City suburb scheduled to work Thursday, except those with physical problems, were to help. A police dispatcher was left on duty to handle telephone calls, one woman was in City Hall to answer calls and collect utility bills, and a skeleton fire crew was left on duty.

"Both the firemen and police officers out working have radios in their trucks. If they get a call, they can leave directly from where they are," Branum said.

Branum had said that any able-bodies employee who failed to work, without a valid reason, would be fired.

"If anybody thinks they are too good to work for this city, then they can just go work for another one. We don't want them," he said as he swung a shovel.

Dunham said 15 pickup trucks were being used to haul the asphalt and "about 65 persons are out working," including some volunteers. The city of about 15,000 residents has about 100 employees, but some had their normal day off Thursday.

"All the council members are out. The city attorney is up the street sweeping rocks out of the potholes. The city clerk, a woman, is around the corner directing traffic," Dunham said.

Most of the women working outside were flagging traffic.

Two off-duty Yukon firemen and several from nearby Edmond and Oklahoma City picketed City Hall and the fire station early Thursday morning.

"They didn't stay very long, though," said Branum. "About 30 minutes, I think. As soon as it got a little warm, they left."

What did the employees think of the order?

Firemen on one work crew, who asked not be to identified, said they would have been in trouble if a serious call came in.

"We'd have to go back to the station and that would take time," said one, assigned to a department-run ambulance. "Besides, I'm filthy. If you have a heart attack, how would you like for me to show up like this to work on you?"

When asked why he didn't refuse to work on the streets, he replied: "I like being a fireman real well."

As for most of the others, they replied with a terse: "No comment."

Firing Range Complaint Ires Chief

By PAT CARLSON
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Can Lubbock police take aim and hit a target with the guns they carry at their sides? Who knows? And, probably more to the point, who cares?

A seemingly innocuous issue this week has raised the voices — and the ire — of the Lubbock Police Department top brass, who do not want their officers talking publicly about any internal matter.

Chief J.T. Alley maintains that everything is running smoothly, and made it clear that he does not appreciate the outside interest. Some policemen in the lower ranks, however, have complained that line officers are not allowed access to LPD's new firing range which opened in October at the police academy.

Still no big deal? Probably not. But the issue of that firing range has pointed to some glaring discrepancies and inconsistent policies in what many other police departments in Texas consider a vitally important matter.

In Lubbock, it is not exactly true that cops cannot use their own range, as some have claimed. In the past, there have been a few "in-service" sessions during which a sergeant and his squad would fire at a scheduled time while on duty.

But what the administration implied was mandatory activity turns out to have been practice for whoever happened to have been on duty the day their squad was scheduled. Some officers said they missed because of vacations or days off and were not required to shoot at another date.

Newly commissioned rookies have had extensive firearms training and practice at the range, but what about police who have been out of the school for some time? Are they required to maintain a certain level of proficiency?

According to Lt. David White, who supervises the firing range, police were issued new guns earlier this year and everyone was required to fire the pistol at the range before taking possession. Although the test was designed to test the firearm rather than the man, it appears there are some who managed to circumvent even that token activity.

One uniform division captain admitted that he has never even been to the firing range. When asked what he did when the new guns were issued, he said he had been on vacation.

"That's what we have lieutenants and sergeants for" was his explanation of how his new weapon was picked up and test fired.

Any law enforcement agency is allowed access to the LPD range. Federal Bureau of Investigation, Department of Public Safety, Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission and even Reese Air Force Base police use the facilities free of charge but must provide their own ammunition.

Some police say they have been denied use of the range when they have gone, while off duty, to practice.

"They want to play around," countered White. "We're in the position, liability-wise, that nobody fires without supervision."

White said that someone from the academy is in attendance each time the range is used, and each person's name, score, time and amount of ammunition is recorded.

He also maintained that if officers were to show up at the range while off duty, they could practice "if we've got time to be there with them." Two rookie classes have gone through the academy since October and, consequently, some of the available time for officers has been cut down.

White said that "to my knowledge" no civilians have ever used the firing range and insisted that practice there for lower-ranking officers is not prohibitive.

"I go when I want to," stated Maj. C.G. Bartley, head of LPD's Uniform Services Division. "It's been made available, if they (officers) go through their supervisors. They've all been through in-service firing, but we're going to take care of needs on the street first."

"We're not going to give them (officers) everything on a whim," he countered.

The "whim" has to do with more — and some sort of compulsory — firing. Lubbock police are not required to shoot and maintain a minimum score at any prescribed time intervals.

Each policeman questioned, including Bartley and White, said no one in the department is required to shoot a certain number of times each year — or any time at all.

Alley, however, maintained that each officer is required to — and does — fire once every 60 days at the firing range.

The longtime chief was openly hostile to inquiries about the matter, and even

U.S. Business Group Reports Vietnamese Request For Trade

HONG KONG (AP) — The first American business delegation to visit Vietnam since the 1975 Communist takeover says Hanoi wants to put politics aside and start trading immediately if the United States lifts its trade embargo.

The five-member delegation from the American Chamber of Commerce said top Vietnamese officials repeatedly stressed their desire to deal with the United States when the five made a week-long trip to Hanoi and Ho Chi Minh City, formerly Saigon.

Chamber President Michael Emmons said the organization, which represents 390 American corporations, does not believe "that past and present political differences between Washington and Hanoi should prevent American companies from doing what we are supposed to do — free trade unencumbered by political restrictions."

South African Blacks 'Know How To Suffer'

By BRANDT AYERS

JOHANNESBURG (NEA) — She is from Soweto, the poor, black twin of rich, white Johannesburg. Before dinner her conversation was charming, learned and amusing, but when table-talk turned to politics she became a different person.

Third In A Series

She was a woman of metal and fire; her words were like cold steel and her eyes singed the soul. She argued for an end to American investment in her country with logic that burned like dry ice.

"Yes, blacks will lose their jobs. We will suffer, but the black man knows how to suffer. The white man doesn't. We want to see the white man suffer."

Her toughness was mirrored in the words of one of who saw 176 of his neighbors, friends and classmates shot to death by police in the June 16, 1976 Soweto riots.

"We are going to suffer most, but that means nothing," he said evenly. "On June 16 we suffered so the mechanism of exploitation would be abolished. We will continue to suffer for the right cause so, in the long run, we shall achieve what we want."

These are some voices from Soweto. There are others, probably most, who are silent, uninvolved because they fear losing their jobs or going to jail or both. But these are the voices of the leaders followed by even the moderates with whom I talked.

It is from those people in that place that many Americans, with more wishful thinking than realistic evidence, hope that a rebellion will spring to take the Nationalist government by the shoulders and shake it until it comes to its senses.

The rebellion will be a long time coming. Even peaceful protests requires money and organization. It is virtually impossible to organize an American-style civil rights protest there today.

A large-scale passive disobedience campaign nationwide occurred for the last time in 1960 and provoked a massacre in another black township in the same state of Transvaal near the white town of Sharpeville.

The organized campaign was called to protest the Pass Laws, an internal passport system for blacks used to control their movement within the country. Nervous, poorly trained police fired 700 shots into the crowd at the township of Vereeninging, killing 69.

What followed was a massive series of detentions, jailing without trail, and bannings, the outlawing of organizations and sentencing of individuals to house-arrest without even being charged with any crime.

And then, the Nationalist-dominated Parliament went to work forging a chain of legislation through the 1960s restricting black movement, association, place of residence and ability to organize politically. In 1966, for instance, one year after the passage of the Voting Rights Act in the United States, The Political Interference Act made it illegal for blacks to join an open (integrated) political organization.

The government waited for over a year after Soweto had inspired similar disturbances in other townships and black universities. But on Oct. 19, 1977, there was another massive wave of detentions and bannings.

Soweto's natural and, by American standards, moderate leadership, the Committee of Ten, was detained without charge or trial and they are still in jail. Among many others jailed was the black editor, Percy Quoboza, whose newspaper, The World, was banned.

The actions were directed by the Bureau of State Security, which must be one of the world's most efficient enforcement agencies. It was built by Prime Minister John Vorster when he was minister of justice in the 1960s.

Vorster knows the methodology of underground organization by instinct from his experience as a leader of a subversive organization during World War II, which, to be fair, was more anti-British than pro-Nazi.

BOSS agents and informers are everywhere. Leaders of the Soweto Student League told me they can't have a meeting with more than three-to-five at a time. "When you have a larger meeting, you will see someone there taking notes," one of the students said.

With this chain of choking legislation and security police, how did the Soweto riots happen? Was it a spontaneous combustion of repressed fury or was it Communist-inspired?

Student leaders glibly talk a Marxist-Socialist line, but question them closely and utter innocence is discovered. They haven't studied any form of government that closely and know nothing about either capitalism or communism.

For them, Marxist language is nothing more than symbolic speech — at least for now — a black-power salut shaken in the face of a (capitalist) government which represses and humiliates them.

Still, Soweto doesn't look that bad to Americans who carry pictures in their mind of the American ghetto — miles of dirty concrete under the menacing ugliness of huge tenements.

I was driven the 12 miles from Johannesburg to Soweto my first day in South Africa. On a cool, cloudless summer day in late January, I was surprised to see little houses floating on the swells of gentle green hills covered by a mist that gave the scene a fairyland appearance.

The mist turned out to be choking clouds of coal smoke. It was supper-time and only 10 per cent of the homes have electricity. There may be as many as 20 people in the three-room houses which they can't own, anyway. They have no means of protest because they can't even elect their own city council. It is appointed.

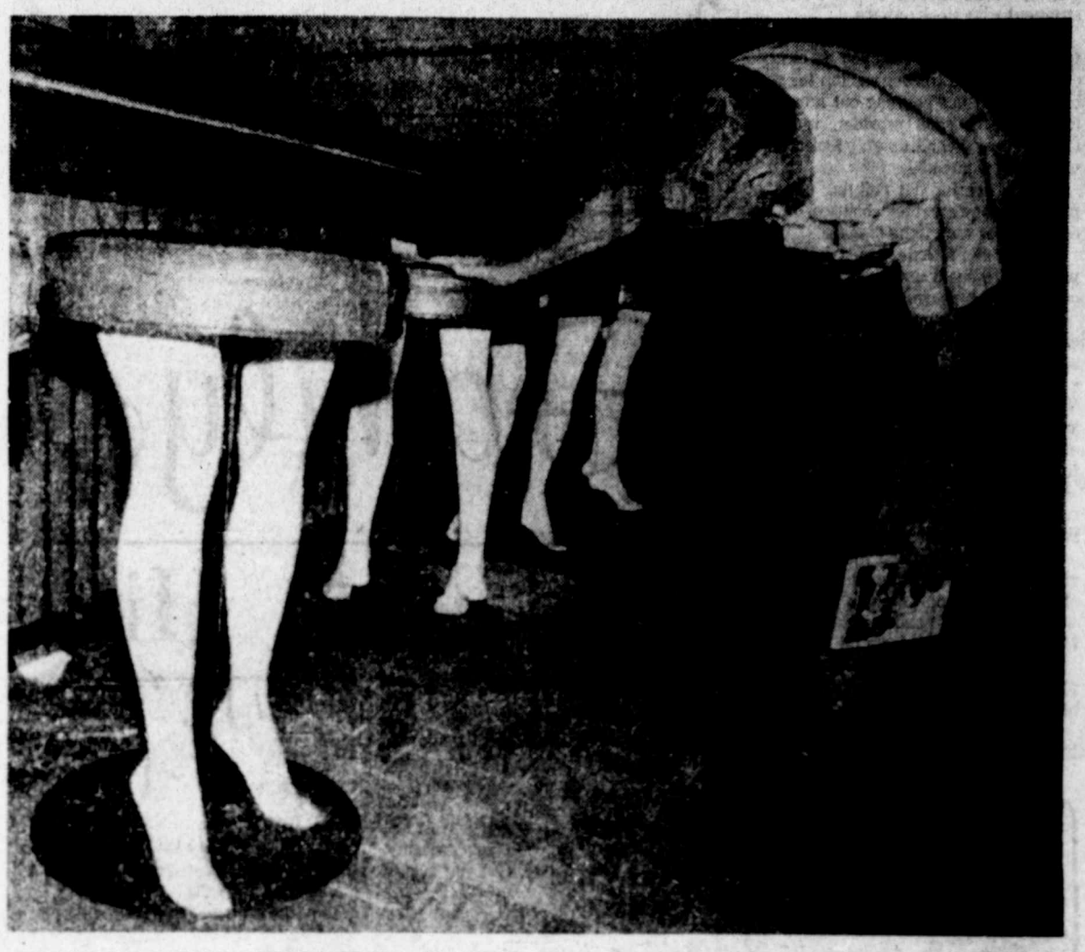

They have never seen an American ghetto and they can only compare their lives with that of Johannesburg with its clean streets, expensive shops and tall, air-conditioned buildings. They are twins in total population (approximately 1.5 million apiece) but that is all.

What is its futre? Probably more spontaneous eruptions, more deaths and more bannings and detentions. Yet, everyone with whom I talked is still willing to talk, to negotiate — even though they say so with deep pessimism.

One composed and eloquent student leader told me with a weary smile, "It is said that one cannot foretell his future. In Soweto, we know what our future will be."

I hope he is wrong.

Hanoi Denies Invasion Of Cambodian Border

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Vietnam, denying its forces had launched a large-scale invasion of Cambodia, said Thursday that Cambodian troops had made new forays across the border in the past few days and several hundred were killed in fighting with Vietnamese defenders.

Western and other sources continue to maintain, however, that Hanoi's troops were engaged in stepped-up military activity inside Cambodia as well.

A Voice of Vietnam broadcast monitored here said the Cambodians, "committing crimes against the Vietnamese people," had penetrated as far as six miles into southern Vietnam in the latest attacks and still held areas of Tay Ninh, An Giang and Kien Giang provinces.

Besides inflicting heavy losses, the broadcast said, the Vietnamese troops took many prisoners and captured a large number of weapons.

The official radio broadcast said Western and Asian news reports of an invasion by 70,000 to 80,000 Vietnamese troops were "fabricated."

But sources in Washington and Bangkok said Vietnam had recently increased its military activity inside Cambodia, although there were differing assessments about the scale of reported fighting between the one-time Communist allies. Diplomatic sources here doubted the 70,000-to-80,000 figure.

U.S. intelligence sources in Washington had said Wednesday that artillery-and warplane-backed Vietnamese troops pushed up to 37 miles into Cambodia. The analysts said they believed the Vietnamese operations were aimed at wiping out base camps used by Cambodian soldiers to infiltrate Vietnam.

But on Thursday some Western sources here doubted the depth of the penetration and said the current operations — in the Parrot's Beak area of Cambodia and to the north — may be limited to expanding and securing larger areas of Vietnamese control in the frontier areas.

Informed diplomatic sources here said small Vietnamese patrols may have reached as far as 37 miles into Cambodia.

At Wit's End...

By ERMA BOMBECK

One of the most often-asked questions in the world is, "What are friends for?"

People ask it and they don't even think about it. Usually, the question is asked when they've been stuck with some inconvenience. No one has addressed themselves to the answer of "What are friends for?" — until now.

Friends are for not going on a diet when you are fat, getting a tax refund when you had to pay or having a good time at a party to which you haven't been invited.

It's being pregnant at the exact same time as you are...not a month before.

A friend is for telling you about your old boyfriend who is now a tormented priest, but not mentioning the boyfriend who married a beautiful girl and is an executive with Texas Instrument with stock options.

Friends are for siding in with you when your husband buys you an electric clipper to shave the dog's rump for your birthday and not pointing out how your husband is a good provider, is not a chronic boozer, and doesn't fool around with other women.

Friends are for not pointing out that people who wear their blouses on the outside have something to hide.

Friends don't write you a letter and won't write again until you respond because it's "your turn."

Friends can't stand all the people you can't stand at the same time and for the same reasons.

Friends are for having children who do not speak metric like a native Met, sneak gum out of her purse and deny it and put ketchup on everything she cooks to kill the taste.

Friends will not tell you what they really think even when you make them swear to tell you what they really think.

Friends are for talking you into a dress you would kill for...even when you can't afford it, you can't wear a slip or bra with, it doesn't fit and it makes you look like a bean bag chair from the rear.

A friend will hear you say on the phone, "I've got to go now; someone is at the door," and believe you.

What are friends really for? If you have to ask, you can't afford one.

TO YOUR GOOD HEALTH

BY

DR. GEORGE C. THOSTESON

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Can you please tell me what causes boils to appear on the body? My husband had several last year. Now I have them on the lower part of my stomach and on the buttocks. I have been putting hot compresses on them and cleaning the areas with alcohol, then applying bandages with Neosporin ointment on them. I do this three times a day, but they seem to take forever to break open. Is this caused by something in the blood? What can be done to prevent them? Lastly, should I go to a doctor for them? — L.K.T.

Boils (furuncles) are abscesses in sweat glands or hair follicles. They are usually caused by the staph germ. We all have these organisms on our skin, and they cause no trouble unless they enter the body. Usually this is by way of a break in the skin. The infection then centers about a sweat gland or follicle.

I trust your husband is over his bout. He may very well have been the source of your own boils (by contact). Your home treatment is correct, but you must be careful during the drainage period. The germs can spread with the draining pus and be transferred to other parts of your body on your fingers. Contact with the bandages is sufficient for this.

Some boils are self-limiting, meaning they come and go with no problems in between. However, boils that are unwisely tampered with may cause serious effects, in some cases phlebitis — vein inflammation.

I do advise you to see a physician, if only because of the awkward area (buttocks) involved. There is another good reason. If boils are widespread it is sometimes necessary to treat them with oral antibiotics. The antibiotic has to be carefully selected after tests to see exactly which medicine would be most effective. Local ointments are not useful for boils. I noted that in another part of your letter you asked for my booklet on reducing. You should lose any excess weight, especially since the buttocks are involved.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: My son has been married five years and he and his wife have no children. The doctor took a sperm count and it was 10,000. The doctor told them it would be impossible to have children. Can't something be done? What about artificial insemination? — Mrs. S.F.

A minimum count of 20 million or more is required. A few men have conceived with as little as 10 million. Your son's 10,000 is prohibitively low.

Common causes? Testicle defects (undescended), mumps infection, inadequate sperm delivery from the testicles or glandular deficiencies.

Several remedies can be tried but none guarantees adequate sperm number. The female "fertility pill" (clomiphene citrate) has helped sperm counts. Thyroid hormone supplement can be tried if that gland is underfunctioning. Also, long-term use of the male hormone (testosterone) may cause a "rebound" of sperm production.

Success of artificial insemination ultimately depends on the quality of sperm. No harm in trying that, however.

• • •

Dear Dr. Thosteson: What is an esophageal varix and how is it treated?

A varix is a dilated vein (varicosed). Those in the stomach or gullet are common causes of upper gastrointestinal bleeding and they are serious affairs. The treatment depends on the cause — often high blood pressure which causes dilation of the "portal" vein system (portal hypertension). The liver is usually involved (cirrhosis). In serious cases, surgery and/or blood pressure drugs to relieve the problem are considered. Regurgitation of stomach acids into the gullet may become a complicating factor through irritation.

• • •

Dear Dr. Thosteson: I have been taking estrogen shots for several years. I'm getting heavy hair on my face. Is this due to the estrogen? What is the best thing to do for it? — Miss J.

It may be the estrogen shots. Stopping them should end the symptoms.

• • •

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Can taking water pills for high blood pressure account for my dry skin? — H.D.

No.

Dr. Thosteson welcomes reader mail but regrets that, due to the tremendous volume received daily, he is unable to answer individual letters. Readers' questions are incorporated in his column whenever possible.

Hints From Heloise

DEAR HELOISE:

Does anyone in your reader land know how to remove the crease line from man-made fibers (nylon, polyester, or blends)?

I find these creases impossible to remove, making let down hems, especially on pants, very unsightly. Can you help? — Boots

• • •

DEAR HELOISE:

I immediatly thought of your column when I found I had ironed double creases in a nice pair of pants.

I tried wetting a cloth and soaking it in vinegar and ironing over the crease, but to no avail.

I would appreciate it if you or one of your readers could help me with this problem. — V.E.L.

DEAR HELOISE:

Anyone who has had a radical mastectomy can tell you that, even in the pocket of the bra, the prosthesis and its cover can be extremely hot in warm weather.

I have used paper products to help absorb the perspiration but I finally noticed some old linen handkerchiefs I haven't used for years.

They are the coolest things I have ever found, are very comfortable, and easy to change when one becomes too damp. — V.S. Beard

DEAR GALS:

I can only tell you what I do and the answer to both your problems is the same...white vinegar!

But the trick is to dampen the fabric itself with the vinegar–not a presscloth as someone has suggested.

However, as I've told you before and do so again...use that presscloth when pressing double-knit or man-made fabrics on the right side of the material. To fail to do so is to invite disaster.

Sometimes you get away with not using a presscloth but oh! those times when you don't! You've got a shine on the fabric you're not ever gonna get rid of.

And to be on the safe side, test a spot in an inconspicuous area before using the vinegar. I've never had it harm any fabric but there is always that first time. Kisses to both of you for writing and may all your problems be as easily solved. — love, Heloise

LETTER OF LAUGHTER

DEAR HELOISE:

Does anyone know of a cure for a case of chronic I-don't-like-to-wash-dishes-it-is? This is my worst failing!

My house is clean except I still have the dishes to do — from last night's supper yet!

Love those readers who seem to have problems too. I don't feel bad when I read some of their hangups about housekeeping.

Come have coffee with me and I'll at least wash two cups, and I promise to rewash them too...eventually. — Anita

Honey, you come have coffee with me and you won't have to wash even one cup! — Heloise

DEAR HELOISE:

Have you ever felt like ripping up a perfectly good dress with a back zipper, when you were perspiring trying to remove it?

To save the dress (and my cool) I made a zipper pull. Use a piece of half-inch twill or hem tape — about 30 inches long — and fasten a medium-sized safety pin on one end.

When I use it, I stick the pin through the little hole in the zipper tab, grab the end of the tape and can then open or close the zipper — depending on whether I am coming or going. — Chatterbox

• • •

DEAR HELOISE:

Those who knit or crochet always seem to have various balls of yarn left after completing a project.

There are many uses for this yarn, but the one I like is to use the yarn in place of ribbon when wrapping a gift.

It works especially well on a package that is mailed — no crushed bows! The yarn fluffs right up.

Different colors can be twisted together, or a chain can be made with a crochet hook to add more fullness to lighter weight yarns. — Sandra Saurmann

By Oswald Jacoby and Alan Sontag

Old man A, who used to defend auction bridge hands with his famous partner B, doesn't play anymore since B died. He still watches duplicate and rubber bridge and is delighted to reminisce.

Here is one of his special stories. We'll let him tell it in his own words.

"There I was end-played at trick three. I had started by cashing my ace and king of spades, but couldn't afford a third spade lead. Obviously a diamond lead away from my king would be right up to declarer's ace. How about a club lead? It wouldn't hurt at all if my partner held the king. It also wouldn't matter if he held neither king nor the queen, but if he held the queen, my club lead would cause his queen to be wasted on dummy's nine.

"Then I saw a way out of my troubles. I led my eight of trumps. Declarer played dummy's queen. Poor old B played low. He held only low cards, but South thought he had located the king. He led the seven and finessed. I cashed my king and could now afford a spade lead. I was out of the end play and South was out of all chance to make his game."

BOTULISM CLUE

Never use a can of fruit or vegetables if one or both of its ends are swollen. This doesn't ordinarily happen, but it may — especially if the can has been forgotten and stored for an overlong time.

ANN LANDERS

Dear Ann Landers: I work in the office of a small hospital in Illinois. The RNs and I have had a running argument for two years. It isn't mandatory any more for the nurses to wear their caps and uniforms, and very few do on our shift. I think this is a terrible mistake. The nurses work awfully hard for those caps; moreover, it is very confusing to patients when they are not in uniform.

When patients ask questions of office personnel and cleaning women, we tell them they should ask a nurse. They invariably say, "Who ARE the nurses?" We must then describe them: "She's the one with the red hair," or "the tall one with glasses."

Our nurses work side by side with the aides taking care of the patients, yet I've heard many people say, "I never saw a nurse the whole time I was in the hospital." We are all waiting to hear what Ann Landers has to say on this subject. How about it? — Staunch But Outnumbered

Dear Staunch: There's something professional, competent-looking and reassuring about a gleaming white, well-fitted nurse's uniform, complete with the cap perched on the head. It stands for something, in the same way that the collar of a religious order stands for something.

Anyone can wear a blouse and skirt or a house dress. They look ordinary.

Hospitals that do not insist their nurses wear uniforms lose a great deal. For sure there is much confusion among the patients. They FEEL better when attended by a nurse in uniform. That uniform gives them confidence that someone trained is looking after them.

And let's face it, not everyone has taste. The uniform can be a great help to a woman who doesn't know how to get it all together. Such women should welcome the solution provided by the old regulations. I hate to see them go.

• • •

Dear Ann Landers: Last night we went to a church supper. The food was set up buffet style. Guests were supposed to help themselves and then sit down at tables for eight which were set up all over the hall.

When supper was announced I looked all over for my husband and couldn't find him anyplace. Finally I got into the buffet line with my sister and her husband. When I reached the vat of spaghetti I saw him — and my face turned ten shades of red. My husband had pulled up a chair to the buffet table and was packing the food in like there was no tomorrow.

I told him to get up and carry his plate in line with us, but he paid no attention, so I moved on. But, Ann I have never been so embarrassed in my life.

On the way home I told him he behaved like a pig and no wonder we weren't invited out much. He said I had no sense of humor and THAT's why we had so few invitations.

I'd appreciate a word from you on this subject. — Still Blushing In Longview

Dear Longview: Humorless people get invited out more than pigs. I'm in your corner, dearie.

Color Photo Art Book Praised

By IRVING DESFOR
Associated Press Writer

One of the finest examples of superb reproduction of color photograpy is to be found in the frst issue of an annual survey of this country's leading visual artists: "American Showcase — Photography and Illustration."

Co-publishers Tennyson Schad and Ira Shapiro have produced an arresting volume of 730 photographs and illustrations, of which 672 are in color, displayed on large-format pages.

The idea, conceived more than a year ago, was to offer a current source book of contemporary photography for reference by art directors, graphic designers, publishers, schools, libraries and students. The realization was accomplished with the cooperation of 140 photographers and 24 artists whose work is reproduced on one or two pages. They are listed by geographic regions and by their specialties.

The book's eye-catching format was disigned by Herb Lubalin, creative designer of international repute and recently elected to the Art Directors Club Hall of Fame. The book, printed in Verona, Italy, comes in hard and soft cover editions.

American Showcase's concept had the cooperation of ASMP, the society for photographers in communications, as an effective promotional medium for photographers. The book will be in the hands of decision makers in advertising agencies, corporations and publishing companies.

In addition, more than a dozen top executives in communications offer illuminating — and sometimes controversial — points of view on the subject of visual representation. Here are some of the viewpoints:

"Today's classic images are tomorrow's cliches," says co-publisher Schad. "Artistic excellence in the graphic arts business demands a constant search for new answers to old visual problems. Originality and invention are sacrificed too often for what has worked in the past.

Work that is merely good — is not good enough, according to George Lois, an agency president. "Advertising should aim to be seemingly outrageous," he says. "I've had to shove, push, cajole, persuade, exaggerate, manipulate, be obnoxious — but always sell. My concern is with creating images that catch people's eyes, penetrate their minds, warm their hearts, and cause them to act."

Robert Miles Runyan, a graphic designer noted for his billiant and flamboyant approach, chose photography as his medium of communication in producing a dramatic and imaginative series of annual reports.

"Photographs can combine visual impact with acceptance and credibility," he reports. "They can be realistic, inpressionistic or abstract and can become part of the graphic design. The annual reports created a very special breed of photographers, programed to function on many special levels.

"Playing back the data in his memory bank," Runyon added, "he can produce photographs that turn ordinary subjects into exciting images. He crawls into pipes and shoots out at a hard-hat looking in the open end. He makes people in the 'clean room' look like visitors from outer space.

"We provide our new breed photograph with an exciting creative working environment that makes him an effective partner in the design process. If you discover such a photograph, pay him well and love him," Runyan concluded. "Or send him to me."

Sheldon Seidler, citing his own preferences, is not interested in general portfolios. He recommends that photographers show specialized work that is handled superbly and innovatively. He believes most assignments don't work out because of miscommunication, not talent. The remedy for that is for a photographer to listen and throughly understand instructions and to ask the right questions in advance.

"I choose to work with those photographers," Seidler adds, "whom I think have the flexibility and enthusiasm to rise above the difficulties that all too often crop up on a project."

Stavros Cosmopulos notes that complex problems arise in this era of mass communication. "By and large," he says. "those problems can be overcome by sticking to one basic guideline: Keep it simple. Your message will never penetrate if it has too many points. Make one point and it surely will penetrate."

The statement from Reva Korda stresses three rules:

—Open your ears and listen. Use words that real people use with the directness of real speech — not advertising jargon.

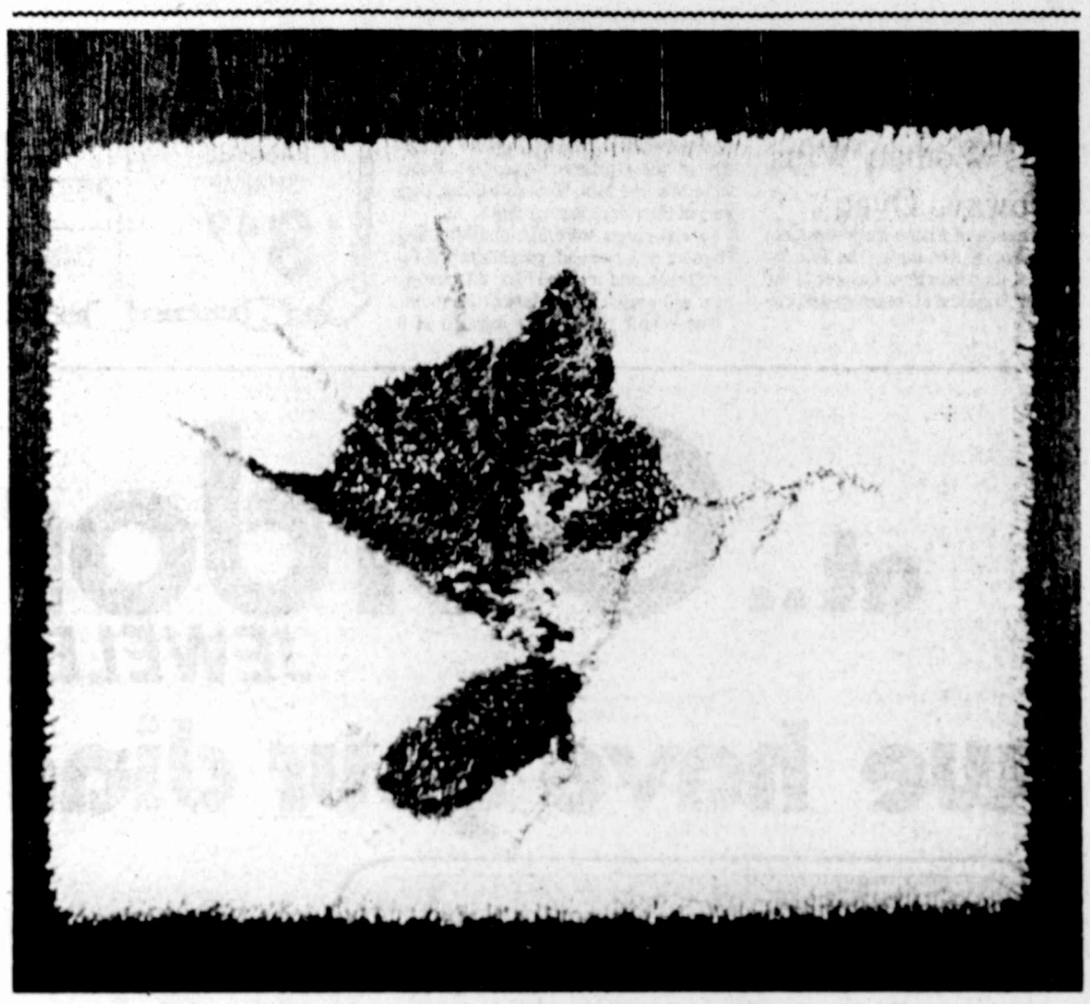

—Open your eyes and look. Make a photograph that demands attention and that people will remember.

—Open your heart. Deal with honest emotion and you will get maximum impact.

"American Showcase" is a source book in which the photographs can be studied again and again and there will be countless new discoveries with each scrutiny. It can be a home study course in how top flight photographers have solved innumerable creative problems and can guide you in solving yours. For information on its availability in your area, write: American Showcase, Box 729, Ansonia Station, New York, N.Y., 10023.

Chessie Latch Hook Rug Design Serves As Wallhanging, Mat

Latch hook is simply the cat's meow in the Chessie rug pictured above. Tabby markings in grey, brown, and pink are all tucked in against a white-sheet background in an easy feline design that can be worked by even the younger members of your family. What's more, Chessie's riding on the railroad — he's the symbol of the Chesapeake and Ohio — and you can bring him home, either as a cozy wallhanging or a child's mat.

Cats abound and continue as a delightful commonplace in a long tradition of American folk-art. The Caswell Carpet, embroidered in the 1830's, joins in tambour stitch two squares featuring cats posing against striped rugs. Crazy cats, easily recognized by their wild whiskers and wide eyes, are often found worked into the Paisley designs of appliqued and embroidered rugs from the Pennsylvania Dutch Country. And an especially big cat, a Bengal tiger, looks game in a well-known clover-motif rug hooked sometime in the early 1800's.

Chessie carries on the cat tradition with a warmth that will make him one of your very favorites. A complete kit containing 4-mesh design-printed canvas, precut acrylic rug yarn, binding, and complete, easy-to-follow instructions is available. The completed rug measures 24" x 34". A latch hook is also available.

Order Chessie Latch No. 00516 for $29.99 plus $2.45 postage and handling. Order a Latch Hook No. 03029 for $1.29.

Send your name, address, order and remittance to Creative Home Crafts, Dept. 8BB, P.O. Box 1281, Locust at 17th, Des Moines, Iowa 50336. If you wish to use your Visa, Master Charge, or American Express, please give the Master Charge interbank number, credit card number, and expiration date.

Hardboard Ceilings Acceptable

By ANDY LANG
Associated Press Writer

Q. — Can I use hardboard as the ceiling material in a basement where there is occasional dampness? There is no water leakage of any kind coming into the room. I want to use hardboard because I have found a textured design that fits in with the decor of the finished room.

A. — Yes, but use tempered hardboard rather than the standard type. What do you intend to do about the seams? In any case, be sure that the panels are not butted tightly together just in case there is any expansion. Allow at least one-sixteenth of an inch between paneling edges.

• • •

Q. — I recently put jon a coat of lacquer over a painted child's desk because I thought it would be easier to keep it clean by wiping with a damp cloth. Whatever I did wrong I don't know, but the paint curled in several places. I gues I applied it poorly. Can you advise me what the trouble was and how to correct itt.

A. — The trouble had nothing to do with the application of the lacquer, but with the use of the lacquer in the first place. Lacquer has a strong effect on paint and acts as a kind of paint remover. You will now have to remove both the paint and the lacquer and begin all over. Rub with lacquer thinner, doing it in a place where there is plenty of ventilation and no open flame, the best place being outside the house. This should remove most or all of the lacquer and have a softening effect on the paint, but then you will need a paint remover to complete the job. Follow the directions on the container very carefully, especially on how to rinse the wood after the paint is off.

Q. — I bought an old bureau at a flea market held in our local park. It has a varnished finish, which didn't look too bad after I had cleaned it thorougly. However, in the cleaning process, I seem to have dulled it considerably. I like glossy surfaces and now I want to refinish the bureau. Can I apply a new coat of varnish over the old or do I have to take off the old varnish?

A. — You need not remove the old varnish provided that it is in sound condition. Any time a new finish is applied over an old one, the life of the new surface will be as long as the life of the old. When the old finish begins to lift (and this may never happen), it will affect the top coat. Assuming that you have decided the old finish is reasonably permanent, look over the bureau carefully and sand down any remaining glossy areas. Remove the grit residue by wiping with a cloth lightly moistened with turpentine, then proceed with the application of new varnish.

• • •

(The techniques of using varnish, lacquer, shellac, stain, bleach, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained by sending 35 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, N.Y., 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column, but individual correspondence cannot be undertaken).

Chinese Calligraphy Featured On Stamps Issued By Taiwan

By SYD KRONISH
Associated Press Writer

Five masterpieces of Chinese calligraphy — beautifully written characters of the language — are featured on a new set of five stamps issued by the Republic of China on Taiwan. Equalled only by the art of printing, calligraphy is revered in the Republic of China as a primary art form.

According to the World Wide Philatelic Agency, the first stamp depicts script writing of the Tsin Dynasty in the 4th century A.D. The second stamp shows a eulogy in script of the Tang Dynasty of the 7th century. The third illustrates an inscription from the Ming Dynasty of the 16th century. The fourth stamp pictures the writings of Huai-su of the Tang Dynasty, and the fifth (highest value) is devoted to a seal script reproduction of a poem of the Sung Dynasty.

The U.S. Postal Service will issue a new international surface rate postal card Aug. 4 commemorating the anniversary of the establishment (in 1790) of the Revenue Marine, the forerunner of the U.S. Coast Guard. The denomination will be 14 cents, which is the new rate for such cards. The previous rate was 12 cents.

The card depicts a painting of the U.S. 'eagle," a three-masted bark against a background of blue sky and sea. Beneath the vignette appears "U.S. Coast Guard Eagle." To the right is USA 14 cents."

Requests for first-day cancellations should be sent after June 4 to: "Eagle Postal Card, Postmaster, Seattle, Wash. 98109." Orders will be accepted through Aug. 4 and must be postmarked by that date.

To eliminate the requirement for postal personnel to apply return addresses, you are requested to send self-addressed envelopes with your order.

Minkus Publications has produced enlarged and updated editions of their albums for Israel singles and tab singles stamps. These albums provide for regular issues, commemoratives and souvenir sheets from the first issues of 1948 to 1977. Annual supplements are published to keep the album up to date. The pages are artistically arranged and profusely illustrated with photos of the stamps. The three-ring binders are vinyl covered and stamped in gold. Prices are $20 for the Israel singles album and $23.80 for the Israel tab singles.

The U.S.P.S. says it will issue commemorative postal cards during 1979 to honor two heroes of the American Revolution — George Rogers Clark and Gen. Casimir Pulaski. The cards will be similar to the one that will be issued in September to hail Molly Pitcher for her role at the Battle of Monmouth in 1778.

Here is an interesting note about Jimmie Rodgers who is honored on a new U.S. stamp. Jimmie, recognized as the "Father of Country Music," had a brief career. He made his first musical recording in 1927 and died in 1933. Rodgers was the first person inducted into the Country Music Hall of Fame, which opened in 1967. The new commemorative stamp is the first in the new Performing Arts and Artists Series to be issued by the U.S. Postal Service.

Navy, Litton End Dispute

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Navy and Litton Industries have ended their nine-year, billion-dollar dispute over shipbuilding cost-overruns. The dispute had threatened to halt construction of three new helicopter assault ships.

Litton will take a $200 million loss as part of the settlement. It had filed suit against the Navy more than two years ago, seeking to be relieved of an obligation to construct five of the six ships, two of which already have been delivered. Litton had claimed that extra costs resulting from modifications required by the Navy had more than doubled the $1 billion price of the ships without corresponding increases in the contract.

Court Rejects Federal Officials' Suit Immunity

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, rejecting the Carter administration's "absolute immunity" arguments, ruled Thursday that federal officials may be sued if they deliberately violate a person's constitutional rights.

The decision could have an immediate effect on a series of pending civil lawsuits against top-ranking officials of the FBI and CIA accused of violating constitutional rights by approving illegal wiretaps and break-ins.

"It makes little sense," Justice Byron R. White wrote for the court, "to hold that a government agent is liable for warrantless and forcible entry rank who actually orders such a burglary is immune simply because of his greater authority."

Voting 5 to 4, the justices held that all federal officials except those who function essentially as judges rather than administrators can be held accountable for unconstitutional actions.

The four dissenters, in an opinion by Justice William H. Rehnquist, said the decision virtually stripped those officials of any immunity in carrying out their duties.

A Justice Department official said there was nothing in the decision to exempt a president from civil damage suits although the court did not specifically address that question.

The official, who asked not to be named, said given the narrow majority, the court could go the other way on the question of whether a president is immune from civil suit.

The dissenters, borrowing the words of a federal appeals judge in a 30-year-old case, said the decision could "dampen the ardor of all but the most resolute or the most irresponsible in the unflinching discharge of their duties."

Attorney General Griffin Bell had forwarded the same argument. He said the threat of civil suits seeking damages places an unfair burden on federal officials with sensitive policy-making assignments.

Discounting those fears, White said, "Federal officials will not be liable for mere mistakes in judgment, whether the mistake is one of fact or one of law."

White said that only a specific act of Congress could free federal officials from such liability, stating, "In the absence of congressional direction to the contrary, there is no basis for according to federal officials a higher degree of immunity from liability ... than is accorded state officials..."

He added, "We see no substantial basis for holding ... that executive officers generally may with impunity discharge their duties in a way that is known to them to violate the United States Constitution."

In a landmark 1974 case, the high court took from state officials the absolute immunity they had enjoyed until then.

In Thursday's decision, White repeatedly referred to the 1974 ruling. "The pressures and uncertainties facing decision-makers in state government are little if at all different from those affecting federal officials," he said.

"We see no sense in holding a state governor liable but immunizing the head of a federal department; in holding the administrator of a federal hospital immune where the superintendent of a state hospital would be liable...," he said.

The immunity ruling came in a test case involving the Arthur N. Economou commodity futures trading company, which sued former Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz and officials in the Department of Agriculture and Commodity Exchange Authority for $32 million.

The suit, filed after Economou's trading privileges were suspended for 90 days in 1973 for alleged irregularities, charges the government officials with wrongful and malicious enforcement of commodity exchange laws.

The Supreme Court's ruling clears the way for a federal civil trial on those charges. The case was sent back to a federal appeals court in New York City for a determination of that trial's ground rules.

Justices William J. Brennan Jr., Thurgood Marshall, Harry A. Blackmun and Lewis F. Powell Jr. joined White's opinion.

Joining Rehnquist's dissent were Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and Justices Potter Stewart and John Paul Stevens.

They said the court's decision "amounts to saying that an official has immunity until someone alleges he has acted unconstitutionally. But that is no immunity at all: the 'immunity' disappears at the very moment when it is needed."

In other decisions Thursday, the court:

— By a 7-2 vote in a Rhode Island case stemming from the nation's medical malpractice crisis of 1975 gave consumers the right to sue insurance companies on charges of refusing to sell them certain types of insurance.

The justices ruled that a 1945 law, the McCarran-Ferguson Act, protects insurance companies from many — but not all — federal antitrust lawsuits.

Employers Get Court Support In Race Discrimination Case

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court Thursday gave all employers a better legal chance to defend themselves against charges of illegal discrimination on the job.

Ruling unanimously in a test case from Chicago, the justices said that an employer charged with unlawful racial discrimination may introduce an assortment of evidence to prove no such bias was intended.

Such evidence may even include statistical data showing that minorities are comparatively well represented in the employer's work force, the court said.

The decision could carry significant impact for lawsuits filed under the portion of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 that bans on-the-job bias, and will apply also to women. The act outlaws sex discrimination as well as racial bias.

Thursday's decision reversed a federal appeals court ruling that the Furnco Construction Co. of Chicago had discriminated against three black bricklayers in 1971.

That year, Furnco contracted with the Interlake Steel Corp. to reline a steel mill blast furnace. The contract called for a seven-day, 20-hour-a-day work week by bricklayers, and responsibility for all hiring for the project was placed in the hands of a job superintendent.

Rather than hire at Furnco's gate, the superintendent hired those bricklayers whose ability he knew. Furnco was later sued by blacks who were not hired or who were hired late in the project.

A federal trial court dismissed the lawsuit, but the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that three of the black bricklayers had proved they were victims of discrimination.

The Supreme Court, in a decision written by Justice William H. Rehnquist, told the appeals court Thursday it had exceeded its authority.

"The court of appeals, as we read its opinion, thought Furnco's hiring procedures not only must be reasonably related to the achievement of some legitimate purpose but also must be the method which allows the employer to consider the qualifications of the largest number of minority applicants," Rehnquist said.

"We think the imposition of that second requirement simply finds no support in...the purpose of Title VII (of the civil rights law)," he said.

In reversing the appeals court's ruling and sending the Furnco case back to the lower court, Rehnquist said that when an employee proves he or she was treated differently, "it is apparent that the burden which shifts to the employer is merely that of proving that he based his employment decision on a legitimate consideration and not an illegitimate one such as race."

"To prove that," Rehnquist said, "he need not prove that he pursued the course which would both enable him to achieve his own business goal and allow him to consider the most employment applications."

In a gentle chastisement of the 7th Circuit Court, Rehnquist added: "Courts are generally less competent than employers to restructure business practices, and unless mandated to do so by Congress they should not attempt it."

Furnco had attempted to argue before the lower court that 13.3 percent of its project's work force had been black while only 5.7 percent of the area's bricklayers were black. The appeals court declared that argument irrelevant.

Disagreeing, the Supreme Court said an employer should be allowed to introduce statistics in trying to prove that its employment decisions were not motivated by race or some other illegal criterion.

While a racially balanced work force cannot immunize an employer from a discrimination lawsuit, Rehnquist said, "proof that his work force was racially balanced or that it contained a disproportionately high percentage of minority employees is not wholly irrelevant on the issue of intent when that issue is yet to be decided."

Bodies May Come Home

WASHINGTON (AP) — In 1804 an American naval ship trying to burn pirate ships in the harbor at Tripoli exploded with the loss of all on board.

Thirteen officers and men, under the command of Capt. Richard Somers of Atlantic County, N.J., were buried in five graves in a small cemetery nearby in what now is Libya.

Now, 174 years later, a New Jersey congressman has sponsored legislation that would direct the Navy to return the bodies to the United States and inter them in Arlington National Cemetery.

Rep. Harold Hollenbeck, R-N.J., said the crew of the USS Intrepid is buried in graves that receive little of the attention given to those buried in military cemeteries.

He said the Intrepid sailors are "a special case."

The ship sailed under the cover of darkness. The intention was to set the Intrepid on fire and to set it adrift among the enemy shipping in the crowded harbor.

Gunboats opened fire and at 9:47 p.m. the Intrepid blew up.

"Many historians believe that Capt. Somers and his men deliberately destroyed the ship and its load of gunpowder to keep it from falling into the hands of the pirates," Hollenbeck said

He said the United States should "pay tribute to the heroism and patriotism these men displayed."

Dismissal Of Case Upheld

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court on Thursday upheld the dismissal of price-fixing convictions against four major gypsum companies.

The court ruled that a trial judge erred in his instructions to the jury on criminal intent in the case against the four firms.

Although the decision was a loss for the government's antitrust enforcers, the court stopped short of making a more sweeping ruling that government lawyers said would make prosecution of antitrust cases generally more difficult.

The case involved the convictions of the United States Gypsum Co., National Gypsum Co., Georgia-Pacific Corp. and Celotex Corp. The four firms sell three-fourths of the nation's gypsum board, the primary material in walls and ceilings in most construction work.

Following a 19-week trial in Pittsburgh, a federal jury returned a guilty verdict on charges that the firms fixed prices by exchanging information over the telephone.

The convictions were overturned by an appeals court, partly on grounds that the judge instructed the jury to find the firms guilty if it determined that the phone conversations produced fixed prices, regardless of the intent of the companies.

In a 6-2 ruling, the Supreme Court said the judge should have told the jury it could find the companies guilty if it determined that the firms were aware that anti-competitive results "would most likely follow."

Justices William H. Rehnquist and John Paul Stevens dissented for various reasons. However, only Rehnquist said he would have reinstated the convictions.

The four companies contended they exchanged the price information only to avoid being charged with illegal price discrimination under another federal antitrust law, the Robinson-Patman Act.

That law prevents a company from showing favoritism to a particular purchaser by offering him lower prices than those charged other customers.

The Supreme Court, in a decision written by Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, said the Robinson-Patman Act could be a defense to antitrust charges in some cases. Burger said the defendants would have to show good faith in swapping information.

Hill Promises Economy In State Government

FORT WORTH (AP) — Attorney General John Hill pounced on one budget proposal Thursday and promised if elected governor to ride steely eyed herd on all state spending.

"One of the reasons I'm working so hard on budget matters is to show the people of Texas that under my administration we're going to look closely at every tax dollar spent," he said.

"And we will try to see that it is spent effectively."

Hill, the Democratic nominee, faces Republican Bill Clements in the November general election, but he talked and acted Thursday as if the governor's mansion were a Democratic certainty.

He called a news conference during the State Bar of Texas convention, in which he discussed his financial policies in general and one budget matter in particular.

Hill distributed a letter sent to Hilmar Moore, chairman of the Texas Board of Human Resources, regarding the board's budget request for an increase of $630 million in state funds for the 1980-1981 biennium.

"I must urge you to consider all possible options for controlling the growth of your department's progress," Hill wrote.

"I cannot foresee any circumstances under which the state treasury will have sufficient funds to support your proposed 68 percent increase above current spending.

Before addressing the lawyers, Hill declared that, "we must hold the line and we must look for ways we can cut our costs and still do a better job of delivering these services."

He said there would be no new or additional state taxes under a Hill regime and added that "we must begin to plan accordingly."

The attorney general noted that he is committed to increased spending for education and law enforcement but said "the jury's still out" on whether or not that would mean an increase in overall expenditures.

On other matters, some of which he discussed with the conventioning lawyers, Hill said:

—"I favor a special legislative session dealing with tax relief.

—"I am not optimistic about our ability to have a special session to deal with the tax expenditure plan prior to July 10.

—"I was not surprised at the ruling in the Bakke case. It reaffirmed our affirmative action plan (for minorities) which I support, and denied the use of quotas."

In response to a question, Hill said he did not believe the presidency of Jimmy Carter would help or hurt him in his race with Clements.

"It's no more relevant that Jimmy Carter's a Democrat in the White House," he deadpanned, "than it is that Richard Nixon appointed my opponent."

Clements served for a time as a deputy secretary of defense in the Nixon and Ford administrations.

Agency Challenges Tropicana Merger

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Trade Commission voted Thursday to challenge the acquisition of Beatrice Foods Co. by Tropicana Products, Inc., another orange juice company.

The complaint alleges that the proposed merger may substantially lessen competition in the processing, distribution and sale of ready-to-serve orange juice.

According to the complaint, approved unanimously by the FTC, Tropicana sells ready-to-serve orange juice to other firms, such as Beatrice, for resale to grocery stores.

The two companies entered into a merger agreement in April to make Beatrice a subsidiary of Tropicana, the largest-selling brand of orange juice in the United States.

Beatrice is located in Chicago and Tropicana's headquarters are in Bradenton, Fla.

The FTC voted to file a federal suit seeking cancellation of the agreement.

Merger Discussed By Major Eastern Area Grocery Chains

NEW YORK (AP) — Grand Union Co., a major Eastern supermarket chain with nearly 500 stores, has proposed a $113.7 million merger with Atlanta-based Colonial Stores Inc. that would create the nation's eight-largest retail food group.

In a letter to Colonial Chairman Ernest F. Boyce, Grand Union president James Wood wrote,"Following up on our discussions, we believe that a combination would be in the best interests of both companies." Grand Union is offering $30 a share in cash for the approximately 3.8 million shares of Colonial Stock.

Colonial said Thursday its board of directors would make a decision by the July 10 reply date requested by Grand Union.

The Grand Union bid represents a premium of about 25 percent over the pre-announcement market price of Colonial common stock. On the New York Stock Exchange Thursday, Colonial jumped 4¼ points to 28⅛. As little as 10 days ago a share cost $20.

Grand Union termed the offer "fair and generous" but indicated it was willing to enter into further negotiations to satisfy Colonial.

Grand Union, since last July a subsidiary of Cavenham Ltd., a British food manufacturing and retailing group, operates 479 supermarkets in 11 Eastern states, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. In the year ended April 1, it reported sales of $1.6 billion, placing it 11th among U.S. supermarket chains, according to spokesman Donald Vaillancourt.

The retailer earned $14.7 million last year, he said. It employs over 10,000 full-time and 11,000 part-time workers.

Colonial has 370 stores in seven southeastern states under the names Colonial, Big Star and Richway Foods. The chain places strong emphasis on nationally advertised brands and had sales of just over $1 billion in the year ended Dec. 31, making it the 15th-largest chain. It earned $10.9 million last year.

Most of Colonial's units are in areas not served by Grand Union, although the companies do overlap in such states as Florida, Maryland and Virginia. Colonial has about 12,000 employees.

The proposed merger would create the No. 8 chain in terms of sales, Vaillancourt said. Safeway Stores Inc., headquartered in Oakland, Calif., is the leading grocery chain with over $11 billion in sales from more than 2,000 stores primarily in Western states.

Grand Union, which does not own any Colonial shares at this time, two years ago began a $150 million capital development program that will result in the opening of 100 new stores by 1982, Vaillancourt said.

According to its annual report, Grand Union planned to open 20 new stores, renovate 29 other units, and enlarge five stores this year. The proposed merger does not alter those plans, Vaillancourt said.

The state court jury, which convicted John Russell Thompson of murder on Monday, recommended the death sentence Wednesday night after five hours of deliberation.

Mrs. Kneupper was shot to death May 21, 1977 during an attempted robbery at her warehouse.

Eating Strawberries Results In Conviction

WASHINGTON (AP) — The price of strawberries has escalated to at least $150 each for one Washington woman in a case that may give shoppers second thoughts about sampling the merchandise in supermarkets.

A jury earlier this week convicted Jacqueline Datcher, 33, of petty shoplifting. She had been charged with eating two strawberries.

"I was shocked. I thought it was crazy," she said of the night in February when she was arrested in a suburban Maryland market.

Sentencing has been set for Aug. 7. The maximum penalty for petty shoplifting is a $500 fine and 18 months in prison.

Miss Datcher said, she has already invested $300 in her legal defense.

The strawberries were 59 cents a pint at the time, making the two in question worth only a few cents.

Miss Datcher denies that she ate any strawberries at all.

However, a jury of six men and six women apparently listened to store detective R.M. Smith, who testified that he saw Miss Datcher lift her hand to her mouth.

"He saw two strawberries go in," said Assistant State's Attorney Gary Courtois.

Smith said he approached her and asked her to pay for what she had eaten, and an argument ensued, eventually leading to circuit court.

One juror later explained to The Washington Star:

"We believed the detective, because we didn't see any reason why he would have pursued the whole thing so far unless he was sure she had eaten the fruit.

"We felt that she had been given the opportunity to redeem herself, but she chose not to. I know the whole thing sounds so facetious, and that everybody does it, but the strawberries did belong to the store, after all, and she should just have paid for them since she was caught."

Under Maryland law, shoplifting is defined as removing or concealing goods with the intent of depriving the owner of their use or value.

"Obviously strawberries in a chewed condition is depriving someone of the value of his strawberries. Strawberries in a swallowed state even more so," Courtois said.

"It's just incredible to me that the jury found her guilty," said her lawyer, Samuel Ochipinti.

He said he asked for a jury trial thinking that would be better for his client.

"I guess I made a mistake," he concluded.

Civil Rights Boycott Expansion Threatened

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Civil rights organizers leading a boycott of white merchants in Tupelo said Thursday they will expand their activities to attack racial problems in other parts of Mississippi.

"I did not realize that Jackson had so many racial problems, that the Ku Klux Klan was so strong here," Alfred "Skip" Robinson said while announcing that the United League of North Mississippi would expand its organization statewide.

"We're going to expose things, we're going to bring them out," he said.

Robinson said the group, which he heads, also would assume the new name of United League of Mississippi as it moves to add to the 33 counties with league chapters.

Robinson and Lewis Myers, attorney for North Mississippi Rural Legal Services, told a news conference the league would mount a petition drive to oust Tupelo Mayor Clyde Whitaker and Police Chief Ed Crider.

"We call publicly for the resignation of the mayor and the police chief," Myers said. "We feel over a period of time that the mayor and police chief have forfeited their right to lead the people of Tupelo."

The league has led a boycott and a series of protest marches in a demand for more minority hiring and an end to alleged discrimination by the city. The protest grew out of a brutality complaint against two city policemen.

The FBI is investigating whether the civil rights of two reporters covering the Tupelo developments were violated and Myers called for agents to broaden their inquiry to include other possible civil rights violations.

He said he wanted an investigation of the police department because "we felt that, based on information we have, the Ku Klux Klan had a presence in the Tupelo Police Department for some time." He said the department contained Klan sympathizers and members and that the league would be willing to furnish names to authorities.

House Okays Range Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House on Thursday passed a bill authorizing $360 million to improve federal range lands in the West and tighten controls on the national herd of wild horses and burros.

Under the bill — the first major effort to upgrade western grazing lands in 40 years — up to $360 million could be spent over the next 20 years for such improvements as revegetation, stock watering, erosion control and fencing.

Also, the bill would establish a formula long sought by cattle and sheep raisers for setting the fees they pay for their animals to graze the range.

Western rangelands comprise some 170 million acres of land, administered by the Bureau of Land Management and the Forest Service in 11 western states. There is general agreement that the rangeland is in bad shape, and a bureau study shows that 80 percent of the acreage is in fair, poor or outright bad condition.

Conservationists frequently argue that the government has managed the rangeland poorly, allowing overgrazing at low fees, and failing to crack down on ranchers who abuse the land. Stockmen have improperly had federal preference over recreation, wildlife, water and soil conservation, they add.

In a report acompanying the legislation, however, the House Interior Committee said federal range policy should not discourage ranching operations, especially when many ranchers face economic hard times.

A strong program, the panel said, can improve soil and forage levels so all uses of the range can be accommodated.

Racial Strife Builds Anew; Blacks March In Mississippi

TUPELO, Miss. (AP) — Hundreds of sign-carrying blacks march downtown on weekends and listen to protest speeches. Young whites join robed Ku Klux Klansmen at cross burnings. Edgy police in riot gear find tempers wearing thin.

The scenes seem to flash back to the racial strife in the 1960s — strife that the North Mississippi town of Tupelo generally avoided — but they are happening now.

Since March, blacks have picketed white downtown merchants in a boycott that backs their demand for more minority hiring by the businessmen and by the city. On almost every Saturday, they march from a church in a black neighborhood to downtown, carrying signs and singing protest songs, as policemen watch the route.

"We didn't win the battle against racism in the '60s," says Lewis Myers Jr., chief attorney for the protesters. "It's a continuum that goes on and on, and I don't know when we will win it."

The Klan began counter-marches and cross burnings in April, heightening the tension that has led to three arrests.

The blacks plan more demonstrations in July, unless there is a break in the stalemate that has kept city leaders and the protestors from serious negotiations.

A 35-member biracial group is seeking to speed reconciliation, and hopes for a settlement were raised last week when an affirmative action committee appointed by the city said it would submit a hiring plan to the city council within 30 days. But black leaders emphasize that they will continue the boycott during the negotiation process.

Tupelo was spared the turmoil that wracked other Mississippi communities in the 1960s. It integrated its schools, developed a healthy local economy, earned citation in 1967 as an All-America city and prided itself as the birthplace of Elvis Presley.

Now, life is uneasy for many in the city of 25,000 as anxious community leaders have sought to negotiate a reconciliation.

Both the merchants and the United League of North Mississippi, a civil rights group that has led the protests, fault the other side for the deadlock, complaining that they have received no positive overtures.

"It's awfully hard to negotiate without communication," said department store owner Felix Black, a spokesman for the merchants. "We've heard nothing but rejections."

Until a breakthrough occurs, the United League plans to widen black participation in the boycott and seek financial support from national organizations. The Klan has not disclosed its next step beyond vowing to continue weekend patrols in which plainclothes Klansmen drive the streets in pickup trucks, communicating via citizens band radios.

"The Klan and those other clowns know we will not back down," said league president Alfred "Skip" Robinson. "We will not run at the sight of a white robe. We won't leave until we turn this town around."

Despite occasional open display of guns and clubs both by the Klan and United League members, there has ben no serious violence. During a Klan rally June 10, however, police arrested two whites, one a missionary worker and the other a reporter.

The lay missionary preacher, David Ohmes, was pinned to the ground, gagged and handcuffed by police after he yelled, "The Klan symbolizes hatred."

The reporter, Joseph Shapiro of the Memphis Commercial Appeal, faces five charges, including conspiracy to incite to riot and assaulting an officer, after he was arrested while trying to take photographs.

Shapiro, after he was released on $3,000 bond, said he recognized his arresting officer as a man who had attended Klan rallies. He also said that during his nearly two hours in custody, officers refused to let him make a telephone call, did not reveal the charges filed against him, and told him to "get out of town."

On June 23, another Commercial Apeal reporter, Michael Arnold, said he was threatened by a man wearing a Klan hood and robes who put a pistol into his face and said: Watch your step."

Michael Grehl, editor of The Commercial Appeal, said the harassment of Shapiro and Arnold was the work of "a small band of thugs who have no regard for the law or the people of Tupelo .. . It is typical of what happens when harassment is permitted to go unchecked."

The police have been at the center of the dispute since February, when blacks demanded the ouster of two white officers who were held responsible in a federal civil suit for beating a black inmate.

The officers, Dale Cruber and Roy Sandefer, were transferred to the fire department but they later resigned. By then, the United League had broadened its demand to include improved economic opportunity for blacks.

The boycott was begun. Although merchants conceded their business was hurt, the situation seemed to be stabilizing until the Klan entered the picture in early April, trying to rally white opposition to the boycott.

The Klan's first rally las sparsely attended. But Klansmn reassembled in early May for a motorcade through downtown an an evening cross burning that drew a crowd of more than 100, some yelling, "We want a nigger to hang from the cross."

One June 10, 50 robed Klansmen and some 100 supporters paraded through the city on foot before rallying at the courthouse just after the United League had left. And this time, more than 200 whites showed up for that night's cross burning.

Mayor Clyde Whitaker and other officials repeatedly have blamed outsiders, including newsmen and United League leaders like Robinson and Myers, for inflaming a situation that he contends could have been resolved calmly without their presence.

A defense of the city also has come from Jim High, president of a chamber of commerce group called the Community Development Foundation.

Describing the Klan as "hate-mongers" and the United League as "intolerant," High contends "there is much to be said positively about the status of the black community in Tupelo and Lee County. Black median income is No. 1 in all of North Mississippi and fifth highest in the state."

Police Chief Angered By Gun Range Issue

went so far as to vow, "If I ever get my hands on who's been talking to you, you'll be minus a source."

Reacting to an expression of amazement that there is no regular mandatory firearms practice or testing here, Bartley sharply dismissed the subject with, "You've been watching too much television."

It seems to be a curious attitude, when compared with that of other police departments across the state.

According to Corpus Christi Chief of Police Bill Banner, there is a once-a-month mandatory firing in that city. He said his department "encourages" certain scores by "positive and negative:' discipline.

If an officer scores 70-80 per cent, he gets an hour compensatory time; 80-90, two hours; and 90-100, four hours. If he scores under 70, he must fire twice a month.

In El Paso, police are required to fire either three or four times each year, depending on the budget.

Each officer must maintain a 70 per cent score, and, if he does not, must return for "remedial training."

"We encourage them to practice as often as possible and right now we are working on the firearms policy to make it more strict," explained officer W.H. White of the police academy in El Paso. "We have the facility and they are encouraged to use it..."

White said officers are given 480 rounds per month and are allowed to use the firing range five days a week.

The San Antonio Police Department provides what it considers a little extra incentive for its officers to concentrate on firing skills.

According to patrol Sgt. William Turner, police are awarded shooting badges by the National Rifle Association, and are allowed to wear the badges above the name plates on their uniforms.

He said the badges are considered a "touch of pride," and that each officer must go through two qualifications each year, maintaining a minimum score of 75 percent. Police who do not score that high must go back until they do.

A similar twice-a-year policy is in effect in Dallas, with officers returning to the range until they get it right.

Amarillo also has some concern for its officers' shooting skills. According to W.E. Robinson, personnel and training coordinator for the police department there, although officers are not required to shoot at regular intervals, they have free access to the municipal range if they use their service revolvers. A twice-a-year scored firing is recommended, but not required.

In Lubbock, Bartley did admit that "some changes are needed out there (the LPD range)," but did not elaborate on possible plans for the future.

Solons Vote On Housing Plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House voted 244-140 Thursday to subject housing regulations to congressional review and possible veto, defying President Carter's recent denunciation of such legislative moves.

The House adopted the review provision as an amendment to a $29-billion bill extending and amending existing programs of the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

The amendment would provide that regulations issued by the department in regard to housing and community development programs would not take effect for 90 days and would be canceled if either house of Congress disapproved them in the interval.

Carter last-week sent Congress a special message denouncing the legislative veto as violating the constitutional separation of powers between the executive and legislative branches. He said he would not be bound by such a veto in all cases.

The message was especially critical of provisions to veto regulations issued by executive agencies under programs enacted by Congress.

Carter Drops Plan For July 4 Speech

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Carter administration representative discussed a possible July 4 national television address by President Carter, a television network executive confirmed Thursday. But Sanford Socolow, the Washington bureau chief for CBS News, said the idea was dropped.

Socolow said presidential aide Barry Jagoda contacted the three major networks to sound them out on a speech assessing the administration to date. Socolow emphasized that no formal request for air time was made, and that "in no way, shape or form did the networks 'turn down' the White House." But the CBS executive acknowledged there was no network interest in broadcasting a holiday speech.

Rehearings Approved On Home Health Care

The Texas Health Facilities Commission has granted rehearings on the applications of two non-profit home health care agencies to operate in the South Plains area.

The action was taken at the commission's meeting Thursday.

Earlier this year, the commission denied "certificates of need" to Home Help Care Inc. and Visiting Nurse Service Inc. Both agencies need such certificates in order to establish home health care operations in the Lubbock area.

The two applicants petitioned for rehearings partly on grounds that tape-recorded testimony had been lost by the state commission.

The commission voted Thursday to grant another hearing on the applications. The hearing probably will be held this fall after the applications have been reviewed by South Plains Health Systems, a regional planning agency.

West Texas Home Health Agency, the only non-profit home health care organization now serving the Lubbock area, has opposed the two applications. The existing agency contends that the proposed services are not needed here.

Home Help Care Inc., headquartered in Austin, wants to offer "skilled nursing care, physical therapy, medical-social services, home health aides, occupational therapy, speech therapy, respiratory therapy, diabetic education and nutritional counseling" in the 15-county Lubbock area.

Visiting Nurse Service Inc., based in Lubbock, has applied to provide the same region with "nursing procedures, in-service programs and medical education and perform insurance physicals in the patient's home."

West Texas Home Health Agency says it already is providing such services. The agency said its Lubbock-based operation serves about 600 patients in 28 counties in the South Plains region.

Home health agencies provide intermittent nursing care to elderly and disabled persons.

Pesticides Needed To Battle Locusts

ROME (AP) — The U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization said Thursday that $3 million worth of pesticides and equipment are needed immediatelty to prevent the locust invasion in the Horn of Africa from becoming a major plague.

"Only by vigorous control efforts will it be possible to kill the new swarms under production over the next three months in northern Ethiopia, Somalia and possibly the Sudan, and avert the threat of a major plague," the FAO said in a statement. However, FAO said some locust swarms were likely to move into northern Kenya by October and that infestation of the Arabian peninsula also was expected.

Administration Opposes Own 'Citizen' Mail Rate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration is opposed to an effort to revive its own proposal for a "citizens' rate," exempting private individuals from increases in first-class mail rates.

The position was taken by W. Bowman Cutter, an official of the White House Office of Management and Budget, in a statement released Thursday for a hearing on a bill to revive the "citizens' rate" proposal made by President Carter.

After Carter suggested freeing individual mailers from the next rate increase, the Postal Service last year formally proposed making the rate 16 cents for businesses while keeping it at 13 cents for individuals. However, the Postal Rate Commission rejected the idea, and the rate went to 15 cents for all mailers May 29.

Sen. John H. Glenn, D-Ohio, chairman of the Senate panel that oversees the Postal Service, is sponsoring a bill to exempt individuals from any first-class increases over the next four years.

Cutter said, "We understand the concern over the ever-increasing postal rate burdens on the individual first class mailers. However, we think this proposal, if enacted, would work against the concept embodied in the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970 that the Postal Service be an independent, self-sustaining operation."

He said the Glenn provision would use tax money to subsidize individual mailers.

"In addition, we are concerned that subsidy provisions of this type are difficult to remove, once established, and that there would be significant pressure to continue this subsidy beyond the date envisioned in the bill," Cutter said.

The comments came in a statement prepared for a hearing that was postponed. However, the prepared statement was released by OMB.

The statement contained no explanation for the change in administration position on the "citizens' rate."

President Carter wrote then-Postmaster General Benjamin F. Bailar last year that, "I believe that as a matter of national policy it would be in the public interest to pursue the concept of a citizen rate first-class postage for use by consumers."

Under the Glenn bill, Congress would authorize funds to cover the difference between the current 15-cent rate for individuals and any higher rate imposed during the four years.

Postmaster General William Bolger has stated that the next rate increase will be in about 2½ years, meaning that the Glenn bill would exempt individual letter-writers from the next round of postal rate increases.

Cutter supported the other major part of the Glenn bill, holding the public service subsidy at $920 million annually for four years. The subsidy is scheduled to be reduced under current law, but a House-passed bill would increase it substantially over the present level.

Cuba Break Demand Rejected

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department has rejected a Senate call for the United States to break its limited diplomatic relationship with Cuba until Havana pulls its military forces out of Africa.

A statement issued by the Department Thursday said the U.S. interests section in Havana is there "to protect U.S. interests, not Cuban."

The statement added that "important U.S. interests would be damaged" if the administration went along with the proposal approved by the Senate Wednesday by a surprisingly lopsided 53-29 vote.

Since the interests section was opened last Sept. 1, it has had "considerable success" in such areas as protection of U.S. citizens in Cuba and in organizing the repatriation of American citizens and their families, according to the statement.

As a result of the interests section's efforts, there also has been forward movement in obtaining the release of American prisoners and in providing a link with the United States for other Americans residing there, it said.

U.S. officials, asking to remain anonymous, said the administration has considered several forms of retaliatory action against Cuba in protest against its Africa policies, but added that shutting down the interests section was never among them.

The administration considered, and for the time being has rejected, the transmission of radio propaganda broadcasts into Cuba to generate popular dissatisfaction over the country's military activities in Africa, officials said.

The United States also has ruled out proposals to discourage U.S. tourism in Cuba and to suspend athletic exchanges with Cuba, but officials said these measures may be reconsidered if Cuba escalates its military involvement in Africa.

Department spokesman Hodding Carter's statement was a strong defense of maintaining the diplomatic links the administration opened with Cuba 10 months ago.

It said the interests section "represents a valuable channel of communication for emergency matters" such as ship and aircraft seizures. The office also enables the United States to "express directly to the Cubans our views on international questions as well," the statement said.

Pressure by the interests section has led to the freeing of three American prisoners from Cuban jails and hope for the release of the remaining four would be diminished if the office were closed, according to the statement.

Such action also would lessen the chances for the repatriation of almost 500 dual-national American citizens and their families, it added.

WILD RIDE ON COLORADO RIVER CAPS JOURNEY

High Desert Trek Enchants, Frightens Hikers

DUCKWATER, Nev. (AP) — In the hazy distance of the high desert a feather of campfire smoke rose from the sage and pinyon and stood like a plumed pillar in the still, morning air.

The motorcycle bumped and skidded giddily on the eastern Nevada dirt. Sadly, the end was near to a mad combination of spring adventures that mingled 4,000 miles of motorcycle riding with a gold-field burro trek and a wild run on the booming Colorado River.

Shortly, Highway 50, and a turn west for a final 600-mile run. Back to the Golden Gate, through the high-rolling traffic of boomtown Reno, then past Truckee to the stifling heat of the Sacramento Valley. Finally, the chilly fog of San Francisco, and suddenly memories were replacing realities.

The desert in March was an artist's palette of color from epic winter rains when the vacationers from across the country gathered at a dot on the map at the foot of the Panamint Mountains. This lonely range, dominated by 11,000-foot Telescope Peak, forms the western edge of the desolate salt cradle of Death Valley.

The staging point — Ballarat — is a ruined ghost town that once was jammed with prospectors who, for a brief few years, clawed gold from the rocks and streams. Ancient miners still go there to talk over old, hard times with "Miss Lil," a Ballarat resident.

The burros snorted and argued among themselves as our leader, Jack McClure, a nuclear scientist who prefers climbing mountains, directed the loading of supplies to support 20 of us for a week. As the sun kissed the Sierra Nevada to the west, we ate our campfire supper, toasted each other with red wine, and slept under the stars.

At daybreak, we stowed away a huge breakfast, packed our amiable animals, and trudged onto the steep, rough trail that winds up South Park Canyon. Over the next two days we would make only five miles — some of it on bunion-busting 25-degree grades of polished rock.

Up, up we went to 6,200 feet, past the Suitcase and Thorndyke mines, among pinyon pine, green and purple sage, juniper and yellow poppies. McClure, who had scouted these mountains many times, shook his head in wonder at the profusion of plant life.

He pointed to a delicate flower. "See, the seed that came from probably waited 30 years to do that." We looked at the brave sprig, and its cousins, and felt a deep appreciation for the tenacity of the living things of the desert.

Near Cotter Spring we came on the remains of a small rock structure. Eighty, maybe 90 years ago, a prospector seeking gold with a jackass and a poke of flour, a few beans and a blanket, headquartered here as he searched for El Dorado.

Two days later, we came to Stone Corral, at the head of Pleasant Canyon. And that night, crisis. It rained nine hours straight.

Most of us fled our tents for a rickety tin shack put up by a prospector 70 years ago. It was wall-to-wall soaking sleeping bags as the rain pelted the leaky roof all night.

The next day we hiked out, waving our burros goodbye.

Near the end of May, fickle nature hurled towering sandstorms, high winds, rain and temperatures down to 20 degrees at this lone motorcyclist. Surviving the storms, I met a score more of souls at Moab who took off in rubber rafts through the canyonlands of Utah.

The Colorado River was deceptively calm as we pushed off for our 100-mile run, in the hands of the water gods and the experts of the American River Touring Association.

For two days we drifted sedately through red sandstone and slickrock canyons carved by rain, wind and sluicing water over 200 million years of ceaseless erosion.

The mighty Colorado lulled us as the rafts coursed among redrock cliffs, buttes, spires, pinnacles, daintily balanced rocks and towers. At one point we hiked into an area called The Maze, a kind of adult playground of some 200 convoluted, interwoven canyons that defy man's imaginings.

At lunchtime, our five rafts tied up on shore. Often we used the hour or two for a quick hike into the canyons. It had rained here, too, and the trails dazzled with cliff roses, flowering cacti, delicate yellow princess plumes and yucca rapiers.

On the fourth day, the Colorado showed a different side — it suddenly became our enemy. Swelled by runoff from historic winter snows in the Rockies, the Colorado was a wild and booming thing.

For two days we hit some three dozen rapids. The tiny rafts were flung off wild, white cliffs of raging water that hurled us about like grains of wheat.

Hidden under rainsuits and ponchos, we clung to ropes and each other to keep from being tossed into the raging river. One boat did capsize but everyone was rescued with no injuries.

Then, Lake Powell, the miniscule airstrip at Hite, and a flight back over the canyons to Moab. At night, at a beer party, we pledged to keep in touch forever.

Agent Explains Use Of Crooked 'Goose Lists'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Elderly people who are easy pluckings for fraudulent sales pitches are sometimes put on "goose lists" used by unscrupulous insurance agents, a postal inspector told a Senate committee Thursday.

Curtis L. Woodard, a U.S. postal inspector in Houston said investigations have undercovered goose lists in the possession of insurance salesmen arrested for selling worthless accident and health policies.

Most victims in such schemes are women between age 65 and 95 and living alone, Woodard told the Senate Special Committee on Aging.

Woodard said elderly couples are preyed upon too. But, he said, usually one of them is senile or incapacitated. He said the fraudulent pitch is directed at the one who handles the checkbook.

In the slang of the crooked agents, Woodard said, a "goose" refers to an elderly person, most often a woman, who can be sold hospitalization insurance, or almost anything else, whether or not needed.

Wiley L. Cheatham, who prosecuted such cases in south Texas, cited entries from a confiscated goose list. It contained rows of names with some of the following comments:

"This lady is a cinch; make like you are a lawyer who's going to lower the premiums."

Another said: "This lady is as goosey as two ground skunks."

Still a third read: "This little old lady has always bought good — wants a policy for a rest home. Go to back door."

'Flute Of Pan' Not Readily Comprehended

NEW YORK (AP) — Martha Graham's "Flute of Pan" had its premiere this week during her dance company's engagement at the Metropolitan Opera House. Several members of the audience remarked that they liked it very much but didn't understand it.

There is a good deal of dance movement expressing tension and anguish, yet the 20-minute work leaves an overall feeling of serenity.

Part of that may be the music, traditional shepherd tunes recorded in Rumania on an ancient shepherd's flute.

The program lists the names of the dancers but does not give them character names in the dance. Two women come on, one possibly a goddess, one possibly a mother. Two young men come on, possibly her sons. They fight, in stylized dance movements; one assumes that is over a young woman, sexy in red. A six-woman chorus in purple agonizes in movement. A woman in black, presumably death, is present.

Pan, the ancient Greek god of fields and shepherds, isn't present.

Oil-Based Fertilizers Scored

WASHINGTON (AP) — A shortage of petroleum products is helping to surmount official skepticism about commercially prepared soil additives designed to replace traditional fertilizers, actor Eddie Albert said Thursday.

"We're very lucky in a way, that we're running out of oil. It's not a very nice thing to say but that's our own failure," said Albert, who has long been active in environmental causes.

He said official thinking in Washington, in state land grant colleges and in giant agribusiness firms, as well as skepticism in the press are hindering efforts to expand the use of the soil additives.

For many years, farmers have relied on synthetic fertilizers composed primarily of nitrogen, phosphorous and potash to increase yields of corn and other crops. In some cases fossil fuels are used in the manufacture of these fertilizers.

Promoters of the relatively new commercial additives say equal or greater results can be achieved more cheaply if farmers use the compounds properly to trigger natural reactions which then form the nutrients used by plants.

There have been conflicting claims about the results of tests made with these additives. Dr. Ned Bailey, special assistant to Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland, said earlier this month:

"We are being very careful about endorsing any of them. We are not going to recommend anything to farmers that we cannot back up. If and when we find anything is worthwhile, we'll be glad to endorse it."

Tests are being made in several states to determine the effectiveness of the commercial additives.

The products go by various names, but mainly rely on natural organic reactions in the soil to produce increased fertility and crop yields. Others are said to add minerals or in some way improve soil so that it can produce better.

Albert told a news conference existing fertilizing methods are depleting nutrients in the soil as well as having a diminishing effect on crop yield.

"Surely, we must change our farming practices in some basic respects," he said. "We must replenish the soil's fertility, returning to it the organic matter which our past farming practices have robbed from it....fertilization programs that encourage microbial life and the balancing of major and minor soil nutrients should themselves be encouraged."

Albert attacked what he said is an attitude of resistance to the use of the newly developed additives "most of our agricultural intitutions ignore this alternative, writing it off as unworkable and uneconomical."

Senate Okays Canadian Fishing Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate gave final approval Thursday to a bill aimed at ending the three-week-old commercial "fishing war" between the United States and Canada.

On a voice vote, the Senate approved the interim agreement, which would allow Canadian fishermen into U.S. coastal waters through the end of 1978, provided Canada agrees to let U.S. fishermen resume operations in its offshore waters.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., told the Senate he hoped the "beau geste (gallant gesture)" would induce Canada to reciprocate with "some comparable step," to reduce tensions and spur negotiations on a permanent fishing pact.

U.S. and Canadian negotiators have been working on a permanent agreement for two years to set boundaries and regulations for salmon and other commercial fishing.

The talks have been stalled over a number of issues, but fishing continued under provisional agreements.

In early June, as a result of a dispute over allegedly excessive catches along the East Coast, Canada abruptly terminated the existing agreement and ordered all U.S. fishermen out of waters inside Canada's 200-mile territorial limit. The United States responded by evicting Canadian boats from U.S. waters.

The interim agreement, agreed to by the House prior to the Senate's action, gives President Carter legal authority to lift the ban on Canadian fishing in U.S. waters if Canada agrees to let U.S. anglers return.

Novelties, Oddities Of Life Attract Poet-Musician's Fancy

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Some folks are put on this earth just to make sure the rest of us notice things like ruts in the road and the fact that hobos don't burn fires around the railroad tracks anymore.

Nothing really vital in a practical sense, perhaps, but the sort of observances that help fill out the whole picture of this life.

John Prine is a musician who spends his artistic energies knitting ragged edges into the stolid mosaic of pop music; while others sing of sweet love or disco fun, Prine is busy penning tunes about alienated war veterans, female crane operators and the agonies suffered by the town simpleton.

Prine is a poet whose heroes hang out in back-alley pool rooms, not in the lobby of the Hotel California. When Prine's successful contemporaries in pop were spit-shining their Beatles boots and dreaming of rock stardom, Prine was delivering mail in Maywood, Ill., living a real life and taking mental notes.

John Prine broke into entertainment in a manner as curious as some of the odd scenarios he puts to song. The break came one night in 1971 when mailman Prine, his rounds for the day complete, stopped by a Chicago club on an evening when the proprietor was auditioning new acts.

"I was watchin' the people on stage and they were terrible," Prine recalls. "I thought, 'Hey, if they can get up there and nobody's throwin' anything at 'em, I can too. I can beat on a guitar and sing a song.' So I got up there and never felt more comfotable in my life than when that spotlight hit me."

Prine was a hit that night and on other nights in other clubs in the Chicago area, and soon enough his nouveau-country style earned him a record contract. "Bruised Orange," his current album, is his fifth record.

Prine, like Tom Waits and Randy Newman, is a storyteller trapped in the pop music form. Like Waits and Newman, Prine has a voice that is not sweet and pretty. But once the lyric draws you in, you're a fan, and the flat, nasal voice eventually becomes a charming accomplice to the compelling yarns of John Prine.

A mailman-turned-singer who's prone to oddballs and odd thought is something of a novelty, and like other novelties in pop music, Prine has had to content himself with a cult following, the faithful hard-core who will buy a John Prine record whether the local radio station plays it or not. Most often, the local radio station has followed the latter course.

Record companies are usually willing to play patron to artists like Prine in the hope that one of the artist's songs may someday slip through the cracks and become a hit, as did Newman's "Short People."

But Prine isn't happy in the role of house artist, he didn't like "goin' straight from bein' a mailman to folks saying, 'God, you're a genius!' I used to say, 'If I'm a genius, how come it took me five years to get out of high school? If I'm a genius, how come I don't have three Cadillacs?'"

In 1975, Prine tired of the gratuitous compliments and lack of big hits and decided to step back and assess his situation. He didn't make a record for three years.

"The last couple of years I just kinda slowed down to take a good look at what I'm doin'. If I'm gonna put a record out I want it to end up on every dashboard there is, and if it doesn't, then I'm gonna make another one that will. I mean, if I'm gonna do this, I'm gonna do it right, or I'm gonna do something else. Go to work in a body shop or something, where I'd have more fun."

Prine came out of hiding this year to make an album for his new record company, Elektra-Asylum, and his wish to be commercial is evident in the product, "Bruised Orange." It's essential Prine in a slick package, a little country, a little crazy and a little rock 'n' roll a la Chuck Berry.

This time Prine doesn't want just the hard-core fans, he wants success. "I hope all 10 songs on it are hits," he says, and not because he wants a big house in a canyon.

"If I can get a hit record, I'm gonna start my own record company called Oh Boy Records, and I'm gonna make nothing but records that pop outta your dashboard and make you tap your your foot.

"I also want to distribute this orange soda pop, a bright orange soda pop. It's called Whoopee Orange Soda. I wanna get it distributed in the South so I can watch little kids drinkin' Whoopee Orange Soda. If I can get that and Oh Boy Records, then that'll be success."

Oldest Japanese Turns Lively 113

TOKYO (AP) — Shigechiyo Izumi, believed to be the oldest person in Japan, celebrated his 113th birthday Thursday at his home on a small island in southern Japan, his relatives said.

Izumi, who was born in 1865, lives with his daughter Kama Nao, 76, on Tokunoshima Island, 275 miles south of Kyushu, Japan's southernmost main island.

He still enjoys going for a walk in the morning, watching television and sipping sake every night, family members said.

Loretta Lynn Seen As Staying Country

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Loretta Lynn's manager doubts that she will change her hard-core country sound despite the trend to more contemporary music by singers like Dolly Parton and Crystal Gayle.

"She makes no pretense. She knows her basic audience," David Skepner said in an interview. "You can give her the most pop-oriented song, and it will still come out country. Loretta Lynn is Loretta Lynn. It's part of her charm."

Skepner, a 6-foot-4, 40-year-old tennis buff, appears an unlikely choice as the man who has guided Miss Lynn's career for the past five years. He doesn't particularly like country music and says there's only one of Miss Lynn's tapes in his home. His background is Beverly Hills, Calif., not the Kentucky coal mines where Miss Lynn grew up.

"I get paid a lot of money for having a good time every day," Skepner said, in discussing his role in her career. "I'd love to work for a living someday, but I would't know what to do.

"I'm basically a mechanic. I'm no great magician. Mostly it takes a lot of things going in the same direction. If you work it right, two and two make five."

Her success can be traced to her "unique personality," he said.

"People are attracted to her because of the way she expresses herself and does it in an honest way," he said. "Most people think it's a put-on. To this day, Perry Como thinks so. But she's a direct extension of the ordinary person and is in a position to express things for them.

"She's sustained because she's more than a recording artist. She's a personality."

His relations with her have not always been pleasant, Skepner said.

"We fight like cats and dogs over things," he said, in his second floor office suite in the Country Music Association building. "It gets bloody up here. She says if we didn't fight, we wouldn't be good for each other.

"She has more common sense than any six people I know. She has a remarkable ability to look right at a problem.

"And she can do things on stage that would be a disaster to anybody else. She can forget lyrics to a song and apologize to the audience and get an ovation. But it would kill most people."

She has changed, Skepner said.

"It would be impossible for her not to. Ten years ago, it was impossible for her to believe anyone would harm her. But now, she's aware of pitfalls and traps. She still has an innocence about her, but not total innocence."

DISTRICT ATTORNEY NAMED

AUSTIN (AP) — Ned C. Butler of Gilmer has been appointed to be criminal district attorney for Upshur County, replacing Harry Heard, who resigned.

Habitues of the local watering hole all have thirstrate credit.

'Jazz Alive' Show To Air On National Public Radio Today

WASHINGTON (AP) — National Public Radio's "Jazz Alive!" program will broadcast live tonight a Newport Jazz Festival concert with performances by Chick Corea and Woody Herman and the Thundering Herd.

The program, which will be aired beginning at 6:30 p.m. DST from Avery Fisher Hall at Lincoln Center, will also feature guest performances by pianist Herbie Hancock and vibraphonist Gary Burton.

The broadcast marks NPR's fourth live broadcast of a major jazz event this year. Most recently, NPR presented an exclusive live broadcast of the historic White House Jazz Festival, June 18, celebrating the 25th anniversary of the Newport Jazz Festival.

"Jazz Alive!" is NPR's weekly showcase of jazz in performance.

Actress In Reporter Role Gets Newsroom View

TURNS TABLES ON REPORTERS — Actress Linda Kelsey, reporter on the newspaper TV series, "Lou Grant," turned the tables on reporters when she toured the country recently to promote the series. Kelsey says, "because of the intense research and preparation for the show my character is so real city rooms all over the country asked questions of me."(AP Laserphoto)

By JERRY BUCK

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Linda Kelsey turned the table on reporters when she went on a tour of the Midwest to promote CBS's "Lou Grant" series.

Miss Kelsey, who plays reporter Billie Newman, was on the tour to be interviewed for stories about the series. But she also visited several newspaper city rooms and talked with women reporters about their work.

"Everyone on the show likes to do research," she said. The research has paid off, because the series, starring Edward Asner, is the most accurate television show ever done on the newspaper business.

"I'd never been in a city room before, but people thought I had because they'd use newspaper jargon with me. And every newsroom I visited someone would point out the Billie Newman of the staff.

"I talked to a lot of reporters and they were very candid about their work. I think they enjoyed answering questions for a change instead of asking them."

Miss Kelsey said she wanted to learn everything the reporters could tell her. "I was interested in the personal aspects of doing the work," she said.

"What kind of sacrifices you have to make, how it affects your personal life. I found a parallel to acting, in terms of commitment to work. It seems once you decide to become a journalist you're bitten by a bug, just as in acting. You devote your life to it."

She is convincing in her role, but her only prior initiation was in high school in her home town of Minneapolis.

"I was sent to interview Pamela Tiffin because I was an actress," she said. "I didn't know what to do. I don't think I asked a single question. I was totally in awe of being in the presence of a professional actress."

A striking, red-haired woman, Miss Kelsey said she could not remember a time when she didn't want to be an actress. She took part in dramatics in high school, the University of Minnesota and in community theater. She spent two years with the Tyrone Guthrie Theatre in Minneapolis and then joined the Long Wharf Theatre in Connecticut. She also acted at several theaters across the country.

"I did very little television until I came out here," she said. "Then I did a lot of episodic TV. I played a lot of victims on police shows."

She played Lucy Mercer, Franklin D. Roosevelt's mistress, on the acclaimed "E-leanor and Franklin" special. She said, "I did that before this whole thing of president's mistresses came out of the closet. It was shocking and titillating when I did it. Now it seems commonplace."

It was about that time she began her association wth MTM Enterprises that resulted in her role in "Lou Grant," which was spun off last September from "The Mary Tyler Moore Show."

For MTM Enterprises, she acted in "Something For Joey," "Doc," and Mary's show, where she played a sweet, innocent thing who was out to get Sue Ann Nivens's job.

"I also did a lot of commercials," she said. "I was trying not to do a television series. Isn't that funny? I was afraid of the contractual obligations.

"If I did one, I wanted it to be special. I couldn't be the 'Bionic Anything.' I didn't even want to know about the offers for series — that carrot of money."

Miss Kelsey said: "I was hoping to do features, but that wasn't working out. I must admit I was a bit of a snob about TV. But now I am totally converted. I don't think we use it too intelligently, but there is fine work done on television. There is a kind of social issue film you can't do in features.

"I'd like to do a lot of work in television. I no longer consider it a stepping stone. I think 'Lou Grant' is as good as anything on television."

She joined the series after it had been on the air about a month.

Miss Kelsey lives alone in a house only a few minutes from the studio where "Lou Grant" is filmed. "My former husband is an actor and a teacher," she said. "We keep in touch and always celebrate our 'unanniversary,' even if only by phone."

In one of the first shows for the new season she goes underground as a hooker. "I think it shows the danger of going underground," she said. "You can't show your press card. When you can't show your press card you can get into a lot of trouble."

What else is ahead for Billie Newman? "I suppose I'll fall in love," the actress said. "I'm the logical one. I'm the only one. Rossi and I will continue our love-hate relationship."

Northwest Airlines Makes 'Final Offer'

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Northwest Airlines announced Thursday it has submitted what it termed a "final offer" to the striking Air Lines Pilots Association.

"This final offer is more than $2 million higher than the $48.2 million improvement which Northwest Airlines had previously put on the table," said NWA President M.J. Lapensky in a statement.

"It brings the total added cost of the new, three-year pilots contract to $50.3 million and provides an average increase of $33,000 in wages and benefits for each pilot over the term of the new agreement," said the NWA official.

Lapensky said the pilots' union had not responded to the offer.

An ALPA spokesman, Jim Halverson, said the union was considering the offer, which he said the company made Tuesday.

Some 1,500 pilots struck the Minneapolis-based carrier on April 29, shutting down most NWA flights.

Federal Study Stresses Antitrust Case Speedup

WASHINGTON (AP) — A government study, finding that delay hurts the eventual result of major antitrust cases, has made a series of recommendations to speed up the actions.

The report by a group of Federal Trade Commission attorneys comes as major FTC antitrust cases are bogged down in lengthy pretrial procedures. In one instance, an antitrust case against eight major oil companies is five years old with no resolution in sight.

Such delay is not only a procedural problem but "eats away at the very substance of the commission's function to maintain and enhance the competitive performance of our economy," the internal FTC report said.

The FTC study group makes 33 recommendations, many of which are aimed at stengthening the ability of presiding officers to move major FTC antitrust cases toward a resolution.

The report said its central theme is "the need for strict and pervasive control of the proceedings by the presiding official from the very outset.

"The presiding official typically bears the responsibility for determining the future structure or conduct of a substantial segment of our national economy. This responsibility cannot be evaded."

Some of the recommendations would require legislation, such as the suggestion that the FTC be given authority to enforce its own subpoenas with penalties of up to $5,000 for non-compliance.

The report said the failure of corporations to comply with FTC subpoenas was "a major and consistent source of delay in all forms of FTC litigation."

The FTC shares antitrust jurisdiction with the Justice Department. The department has sole authority to bring criminal charges in antitrust cases, such as criminal price-fixing, but on the more common civil cases the two agencies agree between themselves which will bring the case.

Another recommendation for expediting the cases is to have the FTC staff tell the commissioners before they ever decide to bring the case what corporate documents might be needed. The commission could then seek to get the documents in an investigation before initiating the case, a less time-consuming process than "discovery" procedures during a case.

The report said the administrative law judge presiding over a case should have "strict and pervasive control of the proceedings."

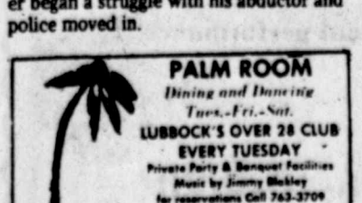

The judge should be able to stick to a commission-approved timetable and restrict pretrial discovery to essential types of evidence, the report said. In addition, the judge should be able to limit the number of expert witnesses and to substitute written evidence and cross examination for oral testimony.

FTC Chairman Michael Pertschuk appointed the study group in April. President Carter said in a May 4 Los Angeles speech that the public is increasingly dissatisfied with drawn-out litigation over matters of great public importance.

Young Star Of 'Omen II' Thinks Role Interesting

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — "It certainly was not a wishy-washy role," says Jonathan Scott-Taylor with admirably British understatement.

Jonathan plays the title role in "Damien — Omen II," the latest visitation of the jackal-parented anti-Christ who is predicted in the Book of Revelation.

Damien Thorn, not content with destroying his parents, Gregory Peck and Lee Remick in the 1976 original, returns as a 13-year-old for further mischief in Chicago. He dispatches his snoopy aunt, Sylvia Sidney, by frightening her to death with a malignant raven, disposes of kindly old Lew Ayres under a frozen lake, and — well, there's no end to his malice.

Predictably with a sequel, the critics were harsh with "Damien — Omen II," but then there were few huzzahs for the blockbusting original. Sales experts at 20th Century-Fox were hoping the new film would perform at 60 percent of "The Omen," which would still be a whopping gross. Initial figures indicated a 91 percent performance, causing glee at the Westwood studio.

Jonathan Scott-Taylor, who came from England with his mother on a two-week tour to help launch the film, looked different from his appearance in the film. Understandably so — he has grown three inches and has lost some of the cherubic aspect that makes his satanism effective in the movie.

"Damien was a definite character, which made him enjoyable to play," said the young actor. "It was interesting to go from being angelic to being evil. He definitely was not nice.

"It was also a difficult role to play, because I never knew what the boy was thinking. I had no previous experience to draw from. The director, Don Taylor, was very helpful in making me understand the role."

Jonathan was cast as Damien after a long search for a boy actor who had enough depth of experience for such a difficult role. Producer Harvey Bernard, who also wrote the sequel story, reasoned that Damien II would probably be found in England, since most young American actors don't have enough training.

STARS IN RETURN ROLE — At 16, Jonathan Scott-Taylor has starred in two feature films, the latest "Damien Omen II." The British youngster, seen here dressed for his part in the film, has returned to the United States to help publicize the movie. "It's not a wishy-washy role," he said, relating how he frightens his aunt to death, disposes of Lew Ayres under a frozen lake and deals other malice. (AP Laserphoto)

A casting director saw Jonathan on the stage at the Old Vic in "The White Devil," starring Glenda Jackson. An audition and a screen test proved him to be an ideal choice.

"I needed some work to speak in more of an American accent," Jonathan said. "A diction coach helped me with the vowels. But I didn't have to speak entirely American because Damien had lived the first seven years of his life in England and six in America."

Young Scott-Taylor spent the first five years of his life in Brazil, where his father consulted on the fishing industry. After the family returned to England, the boy joined a drama class and five years ago made his London stage debut in "Treasure Island" at the Mermaid Theater. He has played small roles in three films, "Bugsy Malone," "Four Feathers" and "The Copter Kids" and appeared in the BBC version of "The Winslow Boy."

"Two years ago I decided on acting as a career," he announced. "Of course it's not quite that easy, is it? Everything depends on other people. But I hope it works out."

He attends school with non-actors at the Haberdasher's Askes School for Boys — founded 1425 — near Elstree. Says his mother:

"Jonathan is like any other boy his age: Untidy, active, interested in sports, pop music and everything, with the added facet of being a talented young actor. As long as he wants to keep acting, we'll help him to do it."

Jonathan hadn't seen "The Omen" before filming: such scary movies are forbidden for English under 18. He viewed the film on the Chicago location and was thoroughly scared. He has seen "Omen II" twice and it failed to jolt him — "because I knew what was going to happen."

Will he return for the proposed "Omen III"?

"I don't think so. Damien is supposed to be 28 in the next film, and I don't think they'll wait for me."

Actor Gets Suspense Drama Role

Ken Sylk has been signed by producers Robert Christiansen and Rick Rosenberg for a key role in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's suspense drama "Hide in Plain Sight," with James Caan starring and making his debut as a director.

In this dramatization of a true story involving a man's long search for his children, Sylk joins a cast headed by Robert Viharo, Jill Eikenberry, Joe Grifasi, Barbra Rae, Danny Aiello and Ken McMillan.

Spencer Eastman scripted from the noval by Leslie Waller.

The film will be released in the United States and Canada by United Artists and throughout the rest of the world by Cinema International Corporation.

FCC Fines Washington Station For Improper Logging Of Ads

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Communications Commission imposed a $5,000 fine on radio station WMAL Thursday, citing shortcomings in the station's records.

The fine was levied after members of the commission praised WMAL's morning talk program, the "Harden and Weaver Show," characterizing it as the most popular in Washington, and the one they get up by.

However, the FCC also agreed that it should review the rules requiring stations to maintain program logs noting when advertisements are run and the amount of air time used for each ad.

The FCC voted 5-1 to impose the fine on WMAL, which was accused of consistently running commercials that were longer than indicated by the station's logs.

The FCC's record-keeping rule requires stations to maintain such logs so that broadcasters cannot over-commercialize their operations.

WMAL has 30 days in which to contest the fine.

The decision came after a heated debate in which Commissioner Abbott M. Washburn declared that the "Harden and Weaver Show" should be given an award "for making ads palatable, not fined."

Commissioner Margita White said she couldn't see how it was possible to separate the advertising and jokes on the show.

But both Washburn and Mrs. White went along with the fine after the FCC staff said WMAL admitted the ads were not logged properly. The staff also pointed out that the case was no different from hundreds of other fines imposed on other stations in the past.

Commissioner Tyrone Brown said it would be arbitrary and subjective not to impose a fine "because the station happens to be in Washington and members of the commission listen and like what they hear on the program, me being one of them."

Arthur L. Ginsburg, chief of the FCC's complaints and compliance division, got strong support from the Broadcast Bureau and FCC General Counsel Robert R. Bruce, when he said failure to fine WMAL, the same as other rulebreakers, would make his job impossible in the future.

Ginsburg said the FCC has been criticized too often as being tough on small stations and lenient on the big ones, and he tries to enforce the rules even-handedly.

Washburn argued that WMAL had not exceeded the 18 minutes per hour of advertising permitted.

But Ginsburg defended the fine, saying the station had chosen to log each ad separately, even though the total advertising time in an hour did not exceed 18 minutes.

And he noted that the station offered no defense for its practice of often allowing commercials on the "Harden and Weaver" program to run longer than the time limit specified by the log.

The lone dissenter, Commissioner Robert E. Lee, said, "I reserve the judgment of how much punishment we should impose." Calling the show "a good one, 'The Last of the Mohicans.'," Lee wanted to send only a letter of admonition.

The song was scandalous... The movie is hilarious.

House Affirms Right To Veto Agency Rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House, heading toward a possible constitutional confrontation with President Carter, reaffirmed its right Thursday to veto federal agencies' regulations.

The House took that stand, 244-140, in attaching an amendment to a $29 billion funding authorization bill for the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

The amendment says that the department cannot arbitrarily issue regulations, but that Congress must be given the chance to reject the department's proposals through a "legislative veto." The proposals would be vetoed if either the House or the Senate passed a resolution rejecting the regulations within 90 days of when they are issued.

If neither the House nor the Senate rejected the regulations, they would automatically win approval.

But President Carter told Congress last week that he will no longer feel legally bound to a "legislative veto."

As many as 50 other bills pending in Congress also contain legislative veto provisions.

Opponents cited Carter's message and used some of the same arguments as he did. But Rep. Elliott H. Levitas, D-Ga., said he understood HUD Secretary Patricia Roberts Harris had asked for the presidential statement.

"It's time Congress sent a message back," said Levitas, a long-time proponent of congressional review of executive agency decisions.

Democrats voted against the amendment, 137 to 118. But the Republican vote was 126 for the amendment and only three against.

Rep. Garry Brown, R-Mich., offered the amendment, saying, "Overzealous members of the executive branch are in effect writing the law. . . They would be more circumspect if this amendment were adopted."

Rep. Thomas L. Ashley, D-Ohio, handling the bill, cited the constitutional issues raised by Carter and said important housing programs should not be involved in a legal struggle that could wind up in the Supreme Court.

He and others also argued that Congress, already hard pressed to keep up with its legislative work, would have an impossible burden in the requirement to review hundreds of aministrative decisions.

Emphasizing this argument, Chairman Jack Brooks, D-Texas, of the Government Operations Committee said he hoped the House would not "look on this as a test of strength between the president and Congress, or a way of getting back at the faceless bureaucrats downtown."

Carter said in his message legislative vetoes threaten to upset the constitutional balance between the legislative and executive branches, could lead to delays up to years in the effectiveness of laws and increase political pressures on decision making.

He said that in the case of "legislative vetoes over the execution of programs already described in legislation," the administration would treat them as "report and wait" provisions. But he continued:

"In such a case, if Congress subsequently adopts a resolution to veto an executive action, we will give it serious consideration, but we will not, under our reading of the Constitution, consider it legally binding."

Delayed by long debate over the provision, the House let completion of consideration of the housing bill go over until after it returns from its 10-day Fourth of July recess.

Houston Builders Draw Praise

HOUSTON (AP) — Private industry must respond to government proposals if the nation is to achieve a revitalization of urban America, Housing Secretary Patricia Roberts Harris said Thursday.

Mrs. Harris spoke before the Downtown Rotary Club after conferring with homebuilders and realtors during a visit suggested by Mayor Jim McConn.

Mrs. Harris lauded Houston's business leaders, saying revitalization of urban America can be achieved if the private sector elsewhere around the country is partially as responsive as that of Houston.

"It is this sort of partnership — the private sector working with point where it again symbolizes hope, opportunity and choice for all its people, not just the privileged few," she said.

The administration is taking steps to make the partnership work, she said.

One such step is the Neighborhood Strategy Areas Program, she said. The program is designed to encourage developers to turn their attention to the rehabilitation of existing buildings for rental units for low-income families.

"Private industry has played a major role in the outwardly expanding market," she said. "But now private industry must turn its attention to rebuilding the older parts of the city."

The crux of the problem, Mrs. Harris said, is unemployment. She said job losses cut the local tax base, raise the cost and lower the quality of public services and cause further losses of jobs.

"This cycle must be broken," she said.

Mrs. Harris said creation of a National Development Bank would provide long-term financing incentives to attract and retain viable businesses in distressed areas and spur private investment in declining areas. A proposal to establish such a bank is now before Congress.

"In the years ahead, the bank will become a vital means of combating localized economic distress, not only in our cities but in rural America as well," she said.

Hawaiian God Evades Grasp

LONDON (AP) — An scowling Hawaiian god of polished wood evaded the grasp of the 50th state's Bishop Museum, which was easily Thursday by an unidentified buyer who offered a record $462,500.

The museum had raised $100,000 from the public in an attempt to recover the 10-inch-high carving from foreign hands.

The Sotheby Parke Bernet auction house said the buyer, bidding by telephone from Brussels, Belgium, picked up the Aumakua figure from the George Ortiz Collection of African and Oceanic works of art. It was sold by Sotheby's in 1969 to Ortiz for $28,680.

President Tightens Rules On Secrecy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Saying Uncle Sam keeps too many secrets, President Carter announced Thursday an executive order he said "will increase openness in government" by tightening ground rules for classifying documents.

In a statement issued by the White House, heralding his action, Carter said:

"While some material must be classified, the government classifies too much information, classifies it too highly, and for too long. These practices violate the public's right to know, impose unnecessary costs, and weaken protection for truly sensitive information by undermining respect for all classification."

Carter's order strips 11 agencies, including the Departments of Agriculture, Labor, and Health, Education and Welfare, of all authority to classify information. Five others will have reduced authority.

The order also is intended to grant classification authority to fewer officials and sets quicker timetables for the automatic declassification of most documents.

Under the new rules, information may be classified only if its release can reasonably be expected to result in identifiable damage to national security. The addition of "identifiable" to the criteria is intended to prevent classification where damage would be insignificant.

In addition, the new order requires that most documents be classified section-by-section, rather than as a whole.

Another part of the order specifies that most documents will be declassified after six years, instead of six to 10 years.

In addition, Carter noted, "with a few exceptions, the documents given extended classification will be declassified after no more than 20 years," rather than 30 years, as under previous orders.

The National Archives estimated that quicker declassification will lift secrecy stamps from an extra 250 million pages of documents during the next decade.

Sen. Joseph R. Biden, D-Del., chairman of the Senate intelligence subcommittee on secrecy, called the plan "a substantial improvement" and said that, for the first time, it brings the entire intelligence community under a single government classification policy.

He said it was particularly valuable because for the first time it attacks "the process by which the government, primarily the intelligence community, keeps secrets from itself."

"Therefore there will no longer be the possibility that there will be secret intelligence operations that no one in positions of authority know about," Biden said.

He added, however, that the effectiveness of the executive order will depend on the vigilance with which it is enforced.

Phalange Party Warns Of Lebanese Rebellion

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The nation's largest right-wing Christian faction threatened a "full-blown armed rebellion" Thursday, a day after 36 of its members were killed in eastern Lebanon. It was the second massacre of Christians this month.

The Phalange Party did not say against whom it would revolt, but observers said the target would be the Syrian army, which controls 80 percent of Lebanon. A leader of another Christian party implied the massacre was carried out by Syrians.

Reporters returning from the area said they saw no signs of preparations by the 12,000-man Phalange Party militia for a revolt. There also were no signs of such preparations in the Christian sector of Beirut.

"Wednesday's massacre was a prelude for a plan to liquidate us," the Phalange Party said, through its official Beirut newspaper Al Amal.

A party statement said the victims were "intellectual Phalangists who were abducted from home in four Christian villages in the eastern Bekaa Valley, 50 miles east of Beirut, and then summarily machine-gunned in an adjacent forest."

The statement said all victims showed signs of torture. Six more young men abducted in the raid were reported missing.

Premier Salim el Hoss called the killings "an unbelievable crime" and said President Elias Sarkis was consulting with top political leaders in an effort to to prevent further bloodshed.

"What has happened can set off a full-blown armed rebellion, of which we cannot but be the vanguard," said Al Amal. "The fire is there and all it needs is someone to fan it."

Former Lebanese President Camille Chamoun, whose National Liberal Party is the second largest Christian group in Lebanon, said the pre-dawn raiders were "non-Lebanese and non-civilian plain-clothesmen, who drove into the four villages in armored cars and military trucks" — apparently implying the attackers were Syrians.

The Syrians dominate a 30,000-man Arab League force, policing the truce that followed the 19-month Lebanese civil in 1975-1976.

The war, which took more than 37,000 lives, pitted rightist Christians against an alliance of leftist Moslems and Palestinian guerrillas.

It could not be determined if former President Suleiman Franjieh's supporters were involved in the attack on the four villages. He vowed revenge against the Phalangists, who on June 13 allegedly killed his son, Tony, along with his wife, daughter and 38 other supporters in a bloody raid at a Franjieh Christian stronghold.

Franjieh has been Syria's staunchest Lebanese ally.

In south Lebanon, the government of Sarkis ran up against renewed defiance by five Christian militia groups, which said they would keep U.N. peacekeeping forces out of Christian-held areas along the border with Israel.

A statement by the five pledged allegiance to two Lebanese army majors whom Syria considers "traitors collaborating with Israel."

Israel invaded 500 square miles of the south in mid-March to sweep Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas off its northern flank.

Israel handed 65 percent of the salient to the U.N. interim force in Lebanon and the rest to Maj. Saad Haddad and Maj. Sami Shidiac.

Missing Tug Still Sought Off Scotland

PETERHEAD, Scotland (AP) — Air searches of the seas off Scotland turned up no trace Thursday of the Louisiana-based tug Taroze Vizier, missing since last weekend with a crew of two Americans and five Spaniards aboard.

The 186-ton vessel sailed from this northeast Scottish port last Saturday, bound for New Orleans, but radioed 24 hours later that it had a broken engine coupling and was heading back to Peterhead for repairs. It was not heard from again.

Royal Air Force Nimrod reconnaissance planes crisscrossed the Atlantic as far as 250 miles west of Cape Wrath, on Scotland's extreme northwestern tip, but reported no sign of the 110-foot-long tug as of late Thursday.

"There is absolutely no trace of anything to indicate what has happened to her," said a coast guard officer.

Sonny Robichaux, 47, of Bourg, La., the ship's agent here, remained optimistic. He said the vessel was completely seaworthy, with all proper lifesaving equipment, and theorized that its master Capt. Tommy Vizier, 38, of Larose, La., had decided to limp on to New Orleans on one engine instead of returning to Peterhead.

"Maybe, just maybe, they have sailed on west," he added. "We will know when the shipping lanes have been checked."

His theory would not explain the radio silence, however.

The 5-year-old Taroze Vizier, owned by Vizier Offshore Towing Inc. of New Orleans, had served as an oil rig tender, helping in the British North Sea oil venture. When its contract expired last month, the tug underwent some minor repairs at Peterhead. Then when no new contract developed, the owners recalled the tug to New Orleans.

ITALIAN PARLIAMENT SEEKS NEW PRESIDENT — This was the scene Thursday as the Italian parliament convened in Rome to elect a new president of Italy. Former President Giovanni Leone resigned two weeks ago after coming under fire for alleged financial improprieties.(AP Laserphoto)

Vote Fails To Name Leone Successor

ROME (AP) — Parliament in its first ballot failed Thursday to elect a new president of Italy to succeed Giovanni Leone, who resigned two weeks ago under fire for alleged financial improprieties.

With no agreement on a candidate acceptable to the major parties, the Communists, Christian Democrats and Socialists put forth favorite-sons. None was able to attract support from two-thirds of the 1,011 electors needed on the first three ballots.

In a symbolic gesture, Former Premier Aldo Moro, who was considered the probable next president before his kidnapping and murder by the Red Brigades terrorists, received one vote, his brother Carlo six and his widow Eleonora two.

The tiny Radical party cast its four ballots for Camilla Cederna, whose book "Giovanni Leone: The Career of a President" contained a series of allegations of financial wrongdoing by the ex-president.

Two more ballots were scheduled for Friday.

Guido Gonella, 73, one of the founder's of the Christian Democrat party, received 392 votes, and Giorgio Amendola, 71-year-old former World War II resistance leader, got 339 as the Communist party standard bearer, both well short of the 674 votes needed to win on the first ballot. Pietro Nenni, 87-year-old Socialist party president, received 88 votes with the rest scattered among various politicians.

Balloting could go on for weeks.

Alberta Firm Plans To Stand Pat With 35 Percent Of Husky

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — Alberta Gas Trunk Line Co., a free-spender in recent stock market purchases of Husky Oil Ltd., does not plan to buy a controlling interest in Canada's largest producer of heavy crude oil, Alberta Gas president Robert Blair said Thursday.

Blair told a news conference his company will not boost its 35 percent interest to more than 50 percent unless another firm tries to acquire a "competitive" position in Husky.

He added that Alberta Gas has "every intention" of continuing as the major shareholder in Husky.

Blair said, "We will be highly receptive to developing such ventures" as heavy oil developments with Petro-Canada, the Canadian government-owned oil company, and Los Angeles-based Occidental Petroleum Corp., "if their managements work with us."

Petro-Canada said Wednesday it would not escalate a bidding war with Occidental and dropped its $46.80 a share cash offer for 10.9 million outstanding shares of Husky stock.

The Petro-Canada decision came a day after Alberta Gas disclosed it had acquired 35 percent of Husky's shares in the open market. Occidental and Husky earlier had reached an agreement allowing Occidental to acquire Husky in a complex exchange offer involving two new issues of preferred stock valued at $48.20 a share.

If Occidental proceeds with its offer, Alberta Gas will not sell its holdings in Husky, Blair said.

Occidental's $525 million offer requires approval by Canada's Foreign Investment Review Agency. In the past, the agency has favored Canadian firms over foreign companies, regardless of the price differences.

Blair said the company's stock market purchases, totaling about 3.8 million Husky shares since Monday, cost an average of $44.65 a share.

The more than $170 million cost of the 35 percent interest in Husky was financed by an additional line of credit from the Bank of Montreal and Bank of Nova Scotia, Blair said.

Blair said the majority of the Husky shares were purchased from U.S. shareholders, who together owned about 70 percent of Husky's outstanding shares prior to the bidding war between Occidental and Petro-Canada.

Blair said he believed control of Husky now has moved to Canada from the U.S.

Alberta Gas heads the Foothills Pipeline Ltd. consortium, sponsoring the Canadian portion of the $10.5 billion Alaska Highway natural gas pipeline. On Monday it said it held 2.5 million shares, or about 23 per cent of Husky shares.

Two weeks ago, AGTL said it held about four per cent of the company's shares.

Trading of Husky shares was halted on the Toronto, Montreal and American Stock Exchanges, Wednesday, shortly after Petro-Canada announced its withdrawal. Trading did not resume Thursday.

At Tuesday's close, Husky was trading at $48.50 in Toronto, $48⅝ in Montreal and $43.25 in New York.

Group Issues Cambodian Purge Report

PARIS (AP) — The International Federation of Human Rights accused Cambodia Thursday of conducting massive purges in an attempt to control the country's population of seven million.

The 56-year-old federation dramatized its 16-page report with nearly two hours of testimony from four former Cambodian officials.

The Cambodians told of mass executions, forced labor, famine, disease and an 18-month purge of people believed sympathetic to neighboring Vietnam.

The federation's report was prepared by Thierry Mignon, a Paris lawyer who interviewed hundreds of Cambodians in refugee camps in Thailand last August. Mignon said the refugees he interviewed all described a totalitarian system without any legal structure, characterized by indiscriminate police brutality.

The Paris-based federation is a non-governmental organization consisting of Leagues of Human Rights in more than 20 countries. The federation coordinates league activities and frequently investigates allegations of repression in an effort to exercise some international monitoring of human rights.

The federation's presentation came amid reports from Hong Kong and Bangkok of a new Vietnamese assault on Cambodia, intensifying the seven-month war between the Communist neighbors.

After overthrowing Lt. Gen. Lon Nol in April 1975, the new Phnom Penh government began a series of purges and a campaign of psychological intimidation, the report said.

"We need to build a democratic Cambodia of only two million men," was one favorite slogan of the regime, the report said.

Mignon characterized the new regime's policy as "acceptance of genocide" and contrary to all human rights.

Neither the report nor the men who testified could offer well-substantiated estimates of how many people were killed or allowed to starve to death.

Ear Soth, who said he was a former political commissar with the government forces, claimed an official declaration issued in February 1977 said 2.5 million "enemies of the people" had been liquidated since the new regime overthrew the Lon Nol government.

Ear Soth said that at the beginning of last year a "third revolution" was begun to purge "deviationist" peasants and workers and anyone suspected of being sympathetic to Vietnam's vision of a united Indochina.

Mao Sras, who said he had been a top district-level official, claimed a son of the nominal head of state, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, was executed in Kompong Cham province in that purge.

The two men said they had no communication with their friends and families still in Cambodia and could only rely on accounts of refugees managing to cross the border into Thailand.

But they said their information was that Prince Sihanouk himself was still living, though many of his followers and supporters had been executed.

Vietnam Joins Soviet Trade Alliance

BUCHAREST (AP) — Vietnam formally joined the Soviet-led COMECON trading alliance Thursday, a further Vietnamese shift toward Moscow that is expected to widen the split between Hanoi and Peking.

Vietnam was admitted as the 10th full member of COMECON — the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance — at the end of a three-day meeting of the government chiefs of council nations.

Soviet Premier Alexei N. Kosygin called Vietnam's admission a "great event" that would aid in the development of the entire "socialist community."

Relations between Vietnam and China, its giant Communist neighbor to the north, have deteriorated sharply in recent months because of alleged mistreatment of Chinese residents in Vietnam and China's support for Cambodia in the Vietnamese-Cambodian border conflict.

Peking, which also has denounced Vietnam's close alliance with Moscow, recently withdrew substantial economic aid from Hanoi.

During the Indochina War, won by the Communists in 1975, Hanoi tried to maintain a neutral position between China and the Soviets and received aid from both feuding Communist powers.

Vietnamese Deputy Premier Le Than Nghi had applied Wedneday for full COMECON membership for his nation, which previously had only observer status. East European sources at the meeting said the application was unexpected.

Besides the Soviet Union, the other COMECON members are Romania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland, East Germany, Mongolia and Cuba.

The organization, similar to Western Europe's Common Market, is devoted to improving trade relations and other economic ties among its members, and has carried out such joint projects as the building of an oil pipeline and an electricity network, and formation of a steel trust.

East European sources here said COMECON could help Vietnam's war-battered and underdeveloped economy. But Western observers say Vietnam, like Mongolia and Cuba, may prove to be a burden on the more industrially developed East European countries.

In a related development today in the Philippine capital of Manila, the Asian Development Bank, over U.S. objections, restored financing to a power project in Vietnam that was suspended shortly before the American-backed Saigon government fell in 1975.

In Hong Kong, meanwhile, a delegation of U.S. businessmen who ended a trip to Vietnam earlier this week said the Hanoi government is eager to begin trade with the United States if Washington lifts the economic embargo against Vietnam.

The Vietnamese believe that American technology and experience in Southeast Asia could help their national reconstruction better and faster than trade with Europeans, the businessmen said.

Victory Claimed In Proxy Fight

NEW YORK (AP) — Kennecott Copper Corp. has formally declared itself the winner in a bitter three-month proxy fight with Curtiss-Wright Corp., but Curtiss-Wright has challenged the the final report of the results of the contested May 2 election of the Kennecott board of directors.

Kennecott announced recently that it had been successful in the election of its slate of 17 incumbent board members, after receiving the final report on the proxy count from the Corporation Trust Co., which tallied the vote, at a reconvened annual meeting.

But Curtiss-Wright officials challenged the acceptance of the report at the meeting on grounds that it was inaccurate. Initially they complained that they had been unfairly overruled on that motion. But hours later, Curtiss-Wright issued a statement saying officials "believed" they had been successful in rejecting the election report after all, based on disputed procedural votes taken during the meeting.

"As a result of the rejection of the report, there can be no final determination of which slate was elected until these challenges are resolved," the Curtiss-Wright statement said.

BYRD TO EUROPE

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd leaves today for a 10-day trip to Europe, where he'll represent President Carter in talks with heads of government and NATO leaders. Byrd has sessions scheduled with Prime Minister Adolfo Suarez of Spain; Prime Minister Leo Tindemans of Belgium; Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of West Germany and England's Prime Minister James Callaghan. In addition, Byrd said, he will meet with NATO Council President Syg Luns.

Anti-Terror Decree Adopted By Spanish

BILBAO, Spain (AP) — The Spanish Cabinet bypassed parliament Thursday and imposed tough anti-terror regulations that permit police to open mail, initiate wiretaps and hold suspected terrorists for questioning beyond the 72-hour constitutional limit.

The decree law came one day after Basque separatists shot and killed a leading journalist who was reported acting for the government to open peace negotiations with rebels in northern Spain.

Legislation by decree was a technique used by the late dictator Francisco Franco to avoid debate and bypass his self-appointed parliament.

Police said the separatists struck again, Thursday, setting off a bomb under a police jeep. A police colonel was injured in the blast.

Informed sources in this northern Spanish city said newspaper editor Jose Maria Portell had been authorized by Interior Minister Rodolfo Martin Villa to try to get peace talks started.

The sources said Portell was believed to have met at least once with a spokesman for ETA, the Basque separatist group that later claimed responsibility for killing the newsman.

Police sources said Portell probably was slain by a breakaway extremist faction that opposes any settlement with the government.

ETA, the Basque-language acronym for Basque Land and Liberty, split last year after Spain's first free elections in 41 years. ETA moderates urged participation in post-Franco politics, while Marxist extremists demanded independence for the four Basque provinces in northern Spain.

Portell, a part-time correspondent for The Associated Press, had close contact with ETA sources when the rebels were fighting the Franco dictatorship. The sources said this apparently was the reason he was tapped by the interior minister to open peace talks.

Pressing the Cabinet to adopt the new regulations, the minister said the government had to act quickly to curb the rising tide of violence, which has claimed 21 lives in the Basque region this year.

Basque political leaders opposed the regulations, claiming they resembled the tough measures of the Franco regime.

Under Franco, who died 2½ years ago after ruling since the end of the Spanish civil war in 1939, terrorism was a military crime. Police could hold suspects indefinitely and were free to open mail, initiate wire taps and conduct searches without court approval.

In a communique claiming responsibility for the killing of Portell on Wednesday and a policeman in San Sebastian on Tuesday, ETA denounced the provisional autonomy given the Basques by the Madrid government as a fraud.

MEANY LAUDS CARTER

WASHINGTON (AP) — AFL-CIO President George Meany praised President Carter Thursday for resisting congressional efforts to reduce sharply the taxes imposed on capital gains. In a letter to the president, Meany agreed with Carter's characterization of the proposal as "a windfall for the rich" and said the labor federation "would strongly oppose any widening of the capital gains loophole."

A DAILY MESSAGE FROM The Newspaper Bible®
Mark 6:10-28, The Living Bible

10 "Stay at one home in each village—don't shift around from house to house while you are there," He said.
11 "And whenever a village won't accept you or listen to you, shake off the dust from your feet as you leave; it is a sign that you have abandoned it to its fate."
12 So the disciples went out, telling everyone they met to turn from sin.
13 And they cast out many demons, and healed many sick people, anointing them with olive oil.
14 King Herod soon heard about Jesus, for His miracles were talked about everywhere. The king thought Jesus was John the Baptist come back to life again. So the people were saying, "No wonder he can do such miracles."
15 Others thought Jesus was Elijah the ancient prophet, now returned to life again; still others claimed He was a new prophet like the great ones of the past.
16 "No," Herod said, "it is John, the man I beheaded. He has come back from the dead."
17,18 For Herod had sent soldiers to arrest and imprison John because he kept saying it was wrong for the king to marry Herodias, his brother Philip's wife.
19 Herodias wanted John killed in revenge, but without Herod's approval she was powerless.
20 And Herod respected John, knowing that he was a good and holy man, and so he kept him under his protection. Herod was disturbed whenever he talked with John, but even so he liked to listen to him.
21 Herodias' chance finally came. It was Herod's birthday and he gave a stag party for his palace aides, army officers, and the leading citizens of Galilee.
22,23 Then Herodias' daughter came in and danced before them and greatly pleased them all. "Ask me for anything you like," the king vowed, "even half of my kingdom, and I will give it to you!"
24 She went out and consulted her mother, who told her, "Ask for John the Baptist's head!"
25 So she hurried back to the king and told him, "I want the head of John the Baptist—right now—on a tray!"
26 Then the king was sorry, but he was embarrassed to break his oath in front of his guests.
27 So he sent one of his bodyguards to the prison to cut off John's head and bring it to him. The soldier killed John in the prison,
28 And brought back his head on a tray, and gave it to the girl and she took it to her mother.

Brezhnev Attacks Western Presence In Africa

MOSCOW (AP) — President Leonid I. Brezhnev said Thursday the Kremlin opposes Western "interference in the internal affairs" of African states but is not against diplomatic efforts to solve the continent's problems.

In a speech welcoming President Didier Ratsiraka of Madagascar to Moscow, Brezhnev restated earlier denials of Western claims that the Soviet Union and Cuba played a role in last month's rebel invasion of Zaire's southern Shaba Province.

His criticism of Western intervention was aimed at the U.S.-supported mission by French and Belgian troops to rescue whites trapped in the Shaba mining center of Kolwezi by the rebel invasion. The copper, zinc and cobalt mines around Kolwezi — run predominantly by whites — have provided the bulk of Zaire's foreign earnings.

Brezhnev said Westerners from NATO have no business in Africa.

"We are resolute opponents of any attempts to interfere in the internal affairs of the African states," he said.

He added, however, "this of course in no way means the Soviet Union is opposed to the efforts, including diplomatic steps, aimed at achieving a peaceful solution of the arising problems, if such a solution meets the lawful interests of the peoples."

Brezhnev said the Soviets are "firmly against the imperialist monopolies" pillaging the national resources of African countries.

"At the present time, Africa is an object of very close and I should say unhealthy interest of the forces of imperialism ... just as in the ill-fated colonial times.

"One thing is unclear. Who authorized them to speak and pass decisions on behalf of Africans, to include Africa, contrary to geography, in the sphere of action of the North Atlantic bloc," he said, adding:

"Who asked them to interfere grossly by armed force in the Zaire events and to knock together the so-called inter-African forces, intended to kill Africans with the hands of Africans?

"The Soviet Union is opposed to the creation of military blocs and division of the African nations into counterpoised groupings, and against the fanning up of territorial and other disputes in Africa remaining from colonial times," Brezhnev said.

African troops, drawn predominantly from Morocco, replaced the French-Belgian rescue force in Shaba province at the request of President Mobutu Sese Seko of Zaire.

The invaders were former natives of Shaba, driven into exile in neighboring Angola after attempting to take over the province in the 1960s, shortly after the former Belgian colony gained independence.

President Mobutu said Cuban forces based in Angola, after helping to bring a Marxist government to power in that nation, trained the rebels, who were equipped with Soviet arms. Mobutu's assessment was endorsed in Washington and Paris.

Dissident Gets Siberian Exile

MOSCOW (AP) — A Jew who has been waiting seven years for permission to leave the Soviet Union has been sentenced to three years of Siberian exile, his wife said Thursday. It was the third such case in a week.

The exile Wednesday of Joseph Begun, 46, for violations of the Soviet internal passport laws follows those last week of Vladimir Slepak and Ida Udel, charged with hooliganism for hanging signs out of their windows to protest long waits for exit visas.

Begun's wife Alla told Western reporters he appeared weak at his trial Wednesday from a 40-day hunger strike.

He was arrested May 17 and charged with living illegally in Moscow. He had just completed a one-year term of Siberian exile on conviction of parasitism.

Begun lost his job as an electronics engineer after he applied in 1971 for an exit visa, and supported himself by giving private lessons in Hebrew, friends said. The parasitism charge was based on the contention he had no "socially useful" work.

He was arrested after he appeared among dissidents who gathered in support outside the trial last month of physicist Yuri Orlov, convicted for "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda."

He admitted to reporters at the time that he was living in Moscow with his wife, in contravention of the laws restricting his movements after his term of exile.

One week ago, in separate one-day trials, two of Moscow's most prominent Jewish activists were exiled to Siberia for five and four years respectively.

Slepak, 50, has been waiting to emigrate for eight years and Ida Nudel, 47, has been waiting seven years.

They could have been sentenced to five years in a labor camp for conviction of "malicious hooliganism."

They had become mainstays of the Jewish community here, he as the leader of an unofficial organization to aid Jews trying to emigrate and she in a private campaign to aid other Jews in prisons or camps.

Begun's trial, like the Slepak and Nudel trials, was closed to reporters. Two Western correspondents who waited outside on Wednesday found the air had been let out of the tires of their cars.

AUDIT BILL SENT TO CARTER

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House completed congressional action on legislation for audits of three federal agencies that regulate banks and has sent the bill to President Carter. The bill would authorize audits by the General Accounting Office of the Federal Reserve System, the office of the Comptroller of the Currency and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Carter Nets Fish In Atlantic Outing

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. (AP) — President Carter spent the day deep-sea fishing Thursday aboard a 50-foot power boat piloted by an admittedly nervous young skipper.

The president, wife Rosalynn, daughter Amy and Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus boarded the blue-and-white craft "Gannet" shortly before 9 a.m.

About six hours later the presidential party was reported to be heading back to shore with fish in the hold after cruising to a point 60 miles off the Virginia coast.

"They've caught some fish," said White House press officer Randolph B. Lewis, reporting on information radioed ashore from the Gannet.

The president and Amy waved to crowds along the shore as the Gannet moved out of narrow Rudee Inlet for the open ocean, escorted by an 81-foot Coast Guard utility boat and a pair of 41-foot Coast Guard boats.

Carter, dressed in a denim shirt, jeans and white shoes, told reporters, "There is no way we'll be back before 3 o'clock."

"So you can soak up a little sun," added Andrus.

Coast Guard Lt. (j.g.) Fred Simpson said at midday that winds were 12 to 18 knots and waves two to three feet in Carter's general vicinity. "It's a nice day for fishing," Simpson said.

As the Gannet pulled out, Carter stood behind Mike Romeo, the vessel's 21-year-old skipper, who had earlier admitted to some nervousness about piloting the president to fishing grounds some 30 miles off shore.

"My heart is pounding so hard I feel like I'm fighting a 10,000-pound blue marlin," Romeo told local reporters.

Romeo began his fishing career as a bait boy and was promoted to skipper of the Gannet only a few months ago. The fishing boat is owned by local lawyer Peter Decker, who also was aboard the vessel.

Andrus had been out on the fishing boat two weeks ago and reportedly caught 25 bluefish. "He had such a good time he brought the president back to share in the fun," said Eddie Edgar, a local outdoors writer who introduced Andrus to Decker.

Decker's boat is in charter. Normal rates for such a boat run about $250 a day. Deputy White House press secretary Rex Granum said Andrus had arranged the trip and was paying the standard charter rate himself.

Miller Favors Postponement Of Minimum Wage Increase

WASHINGTON (AP) — G. William Miller, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, said Thursday he favors postponing a scheduled increase in the minimum wage for a two-year period to help combat inflation.

Congress already has voted an increase in the minimum wage from $2.65 an hour to $2.90 an hour, effective next Jan. 1. But Miller said it would add to the nation's inflationary problems, and said he would "personally welcome" a two-year delay.

In testimony to the Joint Economic Committee of Congress, Miller said he recommended such a delay to the Carter administration. However, he told reporters later that administration officials had turned thumbs down on the idea.

The increase in the minimum wage was strongly backed by organized labor, which would unquestionably interpret administration backing for a delay as a major betrayal.

Congress would have to specifically authorize any delay, but Sen. William Roth, R-Del., indicated such a move may be in the works.

Miller said he was deeply worried about inflation, which he said probably will be over 7 percent this year, and at least 6.5 percent next year. The most recent administration forecast is for an increase in prices of between 6.5 percent and 7 percent this year.

Miller repeated earlier warnings that if the government fails to control inflation, a recession is inevitable.

"Unless inflation is brought under control, business and consumer confidence will be undermined, distortions and imbalances in the economy will develop, and ultimately recession will be the result," he said.

Miller called for a reduction in the federal budget deficit to below $50 billion in fiscal 1979 and said the largest tax cut he would favor next year would be $18 billion. Carter's most recent prposal is for a tax cut of $20 billion, although his advisers have said they would accept $15 billion as a minimum.

Miller also made these points during his testimony:

— He would oppose a cut in the capital gains tax, which has become a popular crusade in Congress in recent weeks, because it would add to the budget deficit at a time when a reduction in the deficit is needed to fight inflation.

— He said interest rates will not go down until inflation goes down, but he hopes that the rise in interest rates will reach its peak within the next six months or so.

— He agreed with Rep. Henry Reuss, D-Wis., that the Federal Reserve Board should re-examine its money growth targets to see if they should be raised, since the money supply has been growing faster than the targets anyway.

— He continued to favor the administration's voluntary approach to restraining wages and prices and opposes any move to require advance notice of wage and price increases for the time being.

— He said the Federal Reserve Board would first seek congressional approval before paying interest to banks on the reserve deposits that the banks must maintain as a condition of membership in the Federal Reserve System.

Brain-Death Ruling Presented

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Hennepin District Judge Jonathan Lebedoff ruled Thursday that turning off a respirator was a "natural consequence" of the fire that hurt John Malchow so badly that he had "brain death," and was not a separate cause of death.

The judge denied a motion for dismissal of a third-degree murder charge against Roger Gerszewski, 24, Minneapolis, accused of setting the March 21 fire at Malchow's north Minneapolis home.

The legal question was similar to that in the case of Denise Ellison, 24, St. Paul, charged in neighboring Ramsey District Court with third-degree murder in the brain death of her 4-year-old daughter, Stacey. A doctor has signed the girl's death certificate, although a repirator is keeping her breathing and her beart beating.

Gerszewski's attorney based his dismissal motion on the traditional law-dictionary definition of death as the stopping of respiration and heartbeat.

But Judge Lebedoff said the dictionary did not "free the medical definition for all time." In addition, he said, the reference to respiration and heartbeat means "spontaneous, rather than artificially supported functions."

The judge's ruling will be appealed, the defense attorney said.

Gerszewski has pleaded innocent.

Lebedoff said Malchow's condition met the criteria for death drawn up by the "Harvard Committee" and generally accepted by doctors: lack of response to pain, absence of spontaneous movement or breathing, absence of reflexes and a "flat" electroencephalogram (brain wave) reading.

The judge said that even if he did not accept the definition, he would still not dismiss the charges against Gerszewski because every person is responsible for the "natural and probable consequences" of his actions.

Lebedoff urged the Minnesota Legislature to adopt a brain-death law to cover similar cases.

Severance Tax Hike Backed

DEL RIO (AP) — Texas should consider raising its severance tax on oil and gas to keep up with other producing states, Texas Railroad Commissioner John Poerner said Thursday.

"We have failed to review our system of taxation in the broad sense and usually try to play catch-up after the natural resources have been produced or mined and production is on the decline," he told the South Texas County Judges and Commissioners conference.

"It has been estimated, by using data filed with the comptroller, that this state gives away millions of dollars every year to states in the East because our level of taxation is far below that of our sister states with hydrocarbon production," Poerner said.

If Texas raises its severance tax to that of Louisiana, tax revenue would increase by $900 million, he said.

"This additional revenue could be distributed to the counties of this state and the folks paying a substantial portion of the bill would be citizens from other states using inexpensive Texas energy," he said.

Epilepsy Progress Seen In Research

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Scientists reported Thursday that they've made a breakthrough in epilepsy research by finding a way to induce the disease in rats by using a natural component of human blood.

This first development of a reliable animal model opens new possibilities for investigating ways to prevent the disorder, said members of a team of scientists affiliated with the Veterans Administration Hospital and the University of Florida College of Medicine, both in Gainesville.

Nearly half of all epilepsy beginning in adulthood is the result of a head injury or stroke in which cerebral blood vessels burst and bleed.

Applying that known fact to their work with rats, the researchers confirmed that the same kind of iron which is a natural component of whole blood may trigger epilepsy when it contacts brain tissue.

Dr. James Willmore, an expert in brain chemistry at the VA hospital and medical college, began the research five years ago at the University of Virginia.

Dr. George Sypert, chief of neurosurgery at the VA hospital, joined him as coinvestigator here two years ago.

They reported it took only one injection of a minute amount of iron to cause chronic, localized epilepsy in the animals. Seizures occurred in almost all of the 65 rats injected.

"The onset of erratic electrical activity and convulsions occurred about three days after the iron injections," Willmore said. "It is important to note that a delay also occurs between the time a person suffers a head injury or bleeding stroke and the onset of epileptic seizures."

He said electrical changes detected by a recording of brain activity look the same in the rats as in human epilepsy patients.

Likewise, he said, biochemical alterations within individual cells and the erratic discharge of electrical activity from affected nerve cells were much the same.

Willmore and Sypert have reported their findings to the American Academy of Neurology and will have an updated report published in technical magazines.

They say the new technique provids a means for evaluating many drugs in an attempt to manipulate brain chemistry and prevent post-traumatic epilepsy.

This research is under way here on a VA grant.

The investigators also will try to determine the mechanism by which iron exerts its toxic effect on brain tissue.

Although previous scientific resarch induced temporary seizures in animals, Willmore's group says it is the first to use a metallic substance which is a natural component of human blood.

Paducah Marks 'Susan Jones Day'

A-J Correspondent

PADUCAH — Today is "Susan Jones Day" in Paducah.

Mayor V.L. Hutchison proclaimed the day to show Paducah's first entrant in the Miss Texas Scholarship Pageant that she has the support and best wishes of the community.

Miss Jones, the former Miss Paducah, will represent Vernon Regional Junior College in the pageant.

She will be the focal point of a downtown parade around the Cottle County courthouse square. From the west steps of the courthouse, she will then entertain the crowd with a number of songs.

At 5 p.m. she will be honored with an informal reception in the community center, where former beauty queens will serve as hostesses.

Miss Jones is the daughter of Mrs. Travis Jones.

"Susan Jones Day" is being sponsored by the Paducah Chamber of Commerce.

Plainview CB Jamboree Set

A-J Correspondent

PLAINVIEW — The third annual CB jamboree, sponsored by the CBers of the High Plains, will kick off at 10 a.m. Saturday, at the Hale County Agriculture Center here.

Proceeds from the jamboree are donated to Girlstown, USA in Whiteface and other local charities.

Last year, $2,200 was raised.

Various distributors and dealers will display their citizen band merchandise at the jamboree.

Hale Courthouse Renovation Begins

PLAINVIEW — Construction work has begun towards renovating the main floor of the Hale County Courthouse annex, which is estimated to cost about $38,000.

Federal revenue sharing funds are being used to finance the project, which will take about six weeks to complete.

County officials plan to locate the county surveyor, Red Cross, veterans administration, liquor control and game warden offices there after the renovation is finished. The annex already houses the tax office.

The renovation of the annex is expected to be the first step toward eventual upgrading of the courthouse, a project some have estimated will cost $800,000.

Heck, a proponent of renovating the facility, said the county could probably secure $400,000 of that amount over a two-year period without a bond issue.

However, he acknowledged that a bond issue probably would be needed to get the remaining $400,000.

Water Use Reduction Sought

A-J Correspondent

CHILDRESS — City officials have called for voluntary water rationing by residents because of a problem with water pressure here.

"We're just using too much water," said City Manager David Galligan.

He said current usage in Childress is about two million gallons of water daily. The city obtains its water from Greenbelt Municipal Water Authority at Clarendon, and Galligan said the pumps are working but that residents are using water at such a rate that pressure has dropped all over town. Some areas of the city almost no water pressure in times of peak usage.

Galligan said the city's reserve tank is only about half full at best and was dry Wednesday morning. The tank has a capacity of about 500,000 gallons.

The city council met in emergency session Wednesday afternoon and called for the voluntary water rationing by residents.

"We're asking the people not to water lawns, wash cars or otherwise use large amounts of water," Galligan said.

The city manager said the problem can be resolved with rain or cooler weather, but that in the meantime the voluntary rationing should continue at least through this week.

Meanwhile, the local Fire Department cautioned residents that the hot, dry weather is creating a fire hazard in the area. Firemen warned against the use of fireworks, which they said could increase the risk of grass fires.

Childress had a long history of water shortages before the organization of the Greenbelt Water Authority and has consistently been the facility's largest purchaser of water for several years.

Hale Center Man Authors Horse Tales

HALE CENTER (Special) — Carter White, a native of the Post area, has written a book of 92 true stories about horses titled "Big Remuda."

According to White, who has lived in Hale Center the past four years, "I have known so many unusual horses and their riders all my life that I wanted to put their stories down on paper."

White has been riding horses and collecting material about them since he was nine. At that time he did not realize he would be putting these mementos in a book.

The 46-year old author has spent all his spare time the past eight years writing the stories. He was graudated from Post High School in 1949.

Childress Festivities Set July 4

CHILDRESS (Special) — The Childress Chamber of Commerce and the city will sponsor several festivities to celebrate July 4.

Town Ready To Do Battle For Lower Speed Limit

BRINNON, Wash. (AP) — The residents of this rural Washington town are ready to go to "war" with the state in order to get the speed limit within their city limits lowered.

They want the 55 mph speed limit on the mile-and-a-half of Highway 101 going through town cut to 35 mph.

Some 26 residents, including 13 businesses, have signed a formal declaration of war and prepared a formal surrender document in a secession move to take effect Saturday.

The documents were sent to Gov. Dixy Lee Ray and legislators representing the Brinnon area.

according to the rules of the Geneva Convention as either aggressors or agents of espionage," says the war declaration.

There have been no deaths on this stretch of the scenic highway so far, the residents say. But they say accidents are plentiful. Things get particularly perilous during extreme low tides when oyster pickers and clam diggers crowd the beach at nearby Dosewallips State Park.

So far there are no battle plans in the secessionist war.

"We haven't gotten together to decide what we'll do, but we've got to do something," said Mel Herod, one of the organizers. "You can't declare war and then ignore it."

"I think it's funny," said Anna Peterson, assistant press secretary to Ms. Ray. But she promised to look into the matter.

"I kind of look at it in a non-serious vein," agreed Dale Myers, owner of the Brinnon General Store. But the rebels plan to fly their flag — a white volcano erupting against a black field — from Myers' store.

Retirement Seminar To Open Here Today

A First Baptist Church Seminar on "Living Creatively In Retirement" will be held today and Saturday at Broadway and Avenue V.

The seminar is designed for all adults, with sessions for adults who are already in the retirement years and sessions for adults who want to prepare for their retirement.

Mike Horton, church minister of family life, said the aim of the seminar is to attempt to help people develop healthy attitudes toward their retirement years.

He added that the seminar would try to help people see retirement as a new beginning with its own goals and to understand the necessity for good preparation for this cycle in life. Horton said the seminar also would attempt to dispel some common myths about retirement.

Horton said the seminar was part of the church's family life education program. He added that some of the goals of the seminar was to help people develop a new attitude about their lives; to see each new phase of their lives as a beginning, not a series of losses; and to prepare for retirement physically, mentally and spiritually.

Keynote speaker for the seminar is Horace Kerr, a consultant for the Family Ministry Department of the Baptist Sunday School Board who works in the senior adults area.

Other participants in the seminar will include Horton; Mrs. Wildring Edwards, a member of the Texas Tech University Department of Family Relations who teaches a course on aging; Lee Pennington, a certified financial planner; Gary Ward, an attorney; Dr. Stanley Fowler, a member of the Texas Tech Department of Family Relations; Bill Beisiegal, physical director of the Lubbock YMCA; and Mrs. Evelyn Cooper, a staff member of First Baptist Church.

Registration for the seminar begins at 6:30 p.m. in the church's lower auditorium, followed by a 7 p.m. orientation in the lower auditorium.

Seminars will be held tonight and Saturday morning on the various topics of retirement. A panel discussion on retirement will be held at 11 a.m. Saturday in the lower auditorium. It will conclude the seminar.

A registration fee will be charged for the seminar, which is open to the public, and further information may be obtained by calling the Family Life Department at First Baptist Church.

Music Revue Dated In Lubbock Tonight

"Texas — Cradle of Giants," a production that traces the history of Texas through its music, will be performed at 8 p.m. today in the Exhibit Hall of the Lubbock Memorial Civic Center.

The show, which has been staged across the state by students and staff from Levelland's South Plains College, is a musical salute to the contributions Texans have made to the country-western music field.

The program features songs, dances and color slides depicting more than 100 years of country-western music in the Lone Star State.

The program is free to the public.

UNIVERSE SLOWING DOWN

SANTA CRUZ, Calif. (AP) — Preliminary studies of star-like objects called quasars indicate that the expansion of the universe is slowing down, scientists at the University of California at Santa Cruz reported Thursday. A research team at the university's Lick Observatory said a powerful and mysterious source of gravity, discovered by studying the brightness of the quasars, hint that the universe's expansion may not be an endless thing.

AMERICAN LEGION DONATION — Charlie A. Putman, center, welfare officer of the George S. Agriculture Agency Sticking To Food Price Rise Forecasts

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department, in a mid-year review of its forecasts, said Thursday it is sticking by its prediction that consumer food prices this year will rise by 8 to 10 percent.

In its report, the department said a typical three-person, wage-earning urban family that spent $53.21 a week on food last year will spend $58.46 a week this year.

The revised forecast, to be published in detail next month, also predicting that grocery store prices would rise faster than the tab for meals eaten away from home — a shift in the pattern that developed in the early 1970s.

However, the department's World Food and Agricultural Outlook and Situation Board cautioned that its projections may vary, depending on the weather in major farming countries for the next two or three months.

"Retail food prices, which have climbed rapidly in recent months, likely will rise further this summer but at a much slower rate than during the spring," the board said.

It said food prices this summer may come out 2 percent higher than the average prices of food in the spring, which were 4 percent higher than winter averages.

"This fall, prices are not expected to show much change from the summer as seasonally lower farm prices offset increases in processing and marketing" costs and profits, the board added.

On a year-to-year basis, the report showed that prices in the first three months of 1978 averaged 12.5 percent above prices in the winter of 1977. And prices in April, May and June were about 11.4 percent above those of the same period a year before.

"For the year, retail food prices still appear likely to average 8 to 10 percent above last year, barring adverse new crop developments," the board said. It said the projection took into account the slow start but recent good progress made in planting by farmers faced this year with wet fields.

Calculations accompanying the board's forecast summary put the year-to-year rise in average retail food prices at 9.26 percent as a whole, based on a 9.4 percent increase in groceries and an 8.3 percent hike in the cost of food purchased in restaurants. A month ago, the overall projected rise was put in the same chart at 8.22 percent; however.

For its market basket of foods, which does not include fish or imported foods and beverages, the board foresees the hypothetical three-person family spending $2,178 for groceries in 1978 — or $191 more than last year.

Of the $191 increase, $111 was attributed to higher farm prices — a reversal of the pattern under which 85 percent of the jumps in food prices since 1973 have been attributed to other factors.

As a result, the board said, net farm income this year should be about $25 billion, an increase of 22.5 percent and the third highest in history. This increase, however, would be approximately $1 billion below the figure projected by department economists.

Princess, Husband Off To Secret Honeymoon

MONTE CARLO (AP) — Princess Caroline strolled through the narrow lanes of Monaco under a hail of confetti Thursday after becoming the wife of a handsome Paris socialite, but she kept their honeymoon plans a royal secret.

One old friend of Caroline's said the 21-year-old princess herself was not sure where they would honeymoon.

Her church wedding to Philippe Junot, held in the open air of the royal palace's inner quadrangle, followed a civil marriage Wednesday in accordance with the law of tiny Monaco's big-brother nation France.

Her parents, Prince Rainier III and Princess Grace, were in tears, wrote a French reporter selected by Rainier as the only journalist to witness the marriage.

"Their sunglasses steamed up," he reported.

The only known incident came when a hang-glider drifted off an Alpine peak overlooking Monaco and floated over the palace, the dangling aviator shouting: "Long live the newlyweds!"

Rainier had banned over-flights during the two-day wedding, and Monaco's tough police force, finding little humor in the stunt, said the French daredevil was held for questioning. His name was not disclosed.

The carefully rehearsed marriage festivities, which began Tuesday night with a ball, seemed to loosen up and some of the controversy around the wedding melted away during the final marriage rites.

Rainier and Princess Grace, the former Hollywood actress Grace Kelly, had originally opposed the wedding of their young daughter to a man of 38 — 17 years her senior — with a playboy reputation. But the French reporter, in a description circulated among journalists, said Grace embraced the two after the ceremony.

The religious ceremony had been planned for the palace chapel with only 100 guests. But the guest list tripled and local television film showed the ceremony was held under a bright Riviera sun in an open-air courtyard adjacent to the chapel.

The service was conducted by Monsignor Gilles Barthes, bishop of Toulon and Frejus, the same priest who wedded Grace and Rainier 22 years ago in a blaze of publicity, fireworks and media hoopla.

Did the couple wish "to devote yourselves to one another freely and without constraint?" asked the bishop.

"Je veux" — "Yes, I so desire" — responded Caroline and Philippe firmly.

The guests, many of them ex-kings, princes and noblemen, along with celebrities Frank Sinatra, Ava Gardner and Cary Grant, sat on folding chairs. A small organ accompanied a children's choir singing Mass.

Then Caroline, in a delicate white dress by Dior, and Junot, in a charcoal suit with a gardenia in his lapel, appeared before the public and faced hordes of photographers.

Grace, in an apricot dress and a wide-brimmed hat, watched the public appearance from an upper-story palace window alongside Rainier and their other children: Albert, 20, and Princess Stephanie, 13. Junot's parents and a bevy of bridesmaids, aged about 10, also watched.

Smiling shyly, the newlyweds walked arm-in-arm through a path cleared by the white uniformed palace guards to the town hall 500 yards away and signed the register. Caroline stopped at a 322-year-old church, the Chapel of Mercy, and laid her corsage of orange blossom on an altar.

Thousands of tourists and townspeople living on the rock that towers over the yacht-filled Mediterranean marina cheered, clapped and threw rice and confetti at the couple.

Later the royal family hosted a garden party for the couple. The orchestra played "Sweet Caroline," "Get Me To The Church On Time," "I Love Paris In The Springtime." Caroline and Philippe plan to live in Paris and keep a villa in Monaco.

A palace spokeswoman said the couple would honeymoon but refused to give any details. The bridegroom's father, Paris Deputy Mayor Michel Junot, has said they will have "a happy and discreet honeymoon."

One last secret in this most private of royal weddings is the gift the parents gave their children.

"That is a secret and it will not be known," a palace official said brusquely.

Edward Jenner, the English physician who originated the concept and practice of vaccination, was born in 1749.

Proxmire Ridicule Runnersup Bared

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. William Proxmire released the runnersup to his monthly Golden Fleece award on Thursday. The Wisconsin Democrat had been announcing each month the program he considers the best example of waste in government spending.

The June winner was the Federal Highway Administration, cited for a $220,000 study of motorists' attitudes toward large trucks. This month, Proxmire also announced the three runnersup:

— The National Endowment for the Arts, which has proposed developing a "profile" of creative personnel in radio, television and film.

— The National Institute of Mental Health, for a study that concluded obese people are more likely than people of normal weight to seek out smorgasbord restaurants.

— The National Transportation Safety Board, which spent $5,340 to develop a new emblem after deciding its old one had "too much of a Bicentennial look" to it.

Material Handlers, Waiters In Demand

WASHINGTON (AP) — As usual, jobs for material handlers and waiting on tables dominated the openings available through job banks around the country in May.

The Labor Department reports that it had 681,000 full-time openings available during the month, a 12 percent increase and the most jobs available since the program began in 1972.

Positions for waiters and waitresses were most abundant, with 20,040 jobs listed. Second were 18,266 positions as material handlers.

Other areas with many openings included fork-lift operators, 14,779; construction laborer, 14,542; secretary, 13,547 and stores laborer, 13,144.

AFTER WASHINGTON DEMONSTRATION

Nuclear Protesters Hauled Off

WASHINGTON (AP) — Police arrested 56 anti-nuclear power demonstrators Thursday after they staged a mock death demonstration on the sidewalk in front of the Nuclear Regulation Commission.

The demonstration, peaceful and well orchestrated, was performed in the tradition of street theatre.

The forewarned police blocked off the street and a narrator explained to the gathering luncheon crowd that the demonstrators would lie down on the sidewalk and mimic death by radiation from a nuclear power plant accident.

Once the demonstrators were prostrate on the sidewalk, police picked them up and hauled them off in paddy wagons. All later were charged with disorderly conduct.

"It was very professional on both sides. Very peaceful and no incidents," said police spokesman G.W. Hawkins.

The arrested demonstrators were among about 200 calling themselves the Seabrook Natural Guard. The group Wednesday set up a vigil outside NRC headquarters to protest the Seabrook nuclear power plant in New Hampshire and nuclear power in general.

The police said they would allow the demonstrators to stay as long as they were orderly and did not block sidewalks or access to the building.

The protesters said they would maintain the vigil until today, when the NRC rules on whether construction can continue on the $2.3 billion project.

Opponents of the electrical generating plant want work halted until it is determined how discharged water from the reactor cooling system will affect the nearby ocean.

On Wednesday, the demonstrators, mostly college-age people from New England, held a day of protest that included marches and rallies at the Capitol and near the White House.

They later went to the NRC and representatives met with NRC Chairman Joseph Hendrie and Commissioner Richard Kennedy for a cordial exchange of views.

Consumer Price Index To Be Released Today

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government will release the Consumer Price Index for May today, and administration officials are expecting it to show a continuing large rise in prices.

Barry Bosworth, director of the Council on Wage and Price Stability, predicted last week that the report will show prices rising about 0.7 percent to 0.8 percent for the month.

That is an improvement over the 0.9 percent increase in April. However, it would still mean inflation was running at a rate of 8 percent to 10 percent per year.

Administration officials say there should be some improvement in the inflation figures for June.

The administration is still expecting an inflation rate of about 7 percent for the year.

However, Federal Reserve Chairman G. William Miller said Thursday that inflation this year will probably be more than 7 percent. At a Senate committee hearing, he said the best that could be hoped for next year is about 6.5 percent.

In the first five months of the year, the inflation rate was running at about 10 percent per year, near the levels of the 1974-1975 recession.

The biggest causes have been the basic necessities: food, housing, energy and medical costs.

Miller said he thinks the government has made inflation worse by increasing spending on unemployment insurance, Social Security and other programs.

Miller said food prices should ease up later but that inflation cannot get better unless prices for other items improve. Following for release at 5:30 p.m. CDT.

Meanwhile, economist Arthur Okun said presidential aide Robert S. Strauss is being asked to achieve a miracle by reducing inflation through voluntary controls.

Okun said rising prices may cause the Federal Reserve to tighten credit so much it could cause a recession. He said the chances of a recession late this year or next year are about 55 percent.

Money Decline May Ease Interest Hike

NEW YORK (AP) — The nation's basic money supply declined by $1.9 billion in the week ended June 21, the Federal Reserve reported Thursday. The drop may indicate a slight lessening of pressure on the Fed to raise interest rates as a method of fighting inflation.

According to the Fed, the basic measurement of cash in circulation plus checking deposits known as M1 fell in the week ended June 21 to $349.4 billion from a revised total of $351.3 billion the week before. M1 previously had been reported at $349.9 billion in the week ended June 14.

M2, the broader measurement of M1 plus most savings deposits at commercial banks, declined to $839.7 billion from a revised $840.9 billion. M2 for the week ended June 14 originally was said to total $839.5 billion.

Analyst William E. Gibson at Smith Barney Harris Upham & Co. said the $1.9 billion drop in M1 still leaves the economy about "$1.5 billion above the upper end" of the Fed's money-supply target, though the week's tally was an improvement from that of the week before.

"The Fed still will be under some pressure" to tighten credit, he said, although the pressure will be "somewhat less oppressive."

The Federal Reserve fears that too-rapid growth in the nation's money supply will fuel inflation by creating excessive demands for goods and services. It has attempted to curb monetary growth by making credit more expensive.

The Fed has set a target of 4-6½ percent for M1 growth between the first quarter of 1978 and the first quarter of 1979; the M2 growth target is 6½-9 percent.

Some analysts said although the Fed now may be under slightly less pressure to raise the cost of money, leading commercial banks may raise their prime lending rate Friday from the prevailing 8¾ percent to 9 percent.

The Fed also reported:

—Commercial and industrial loans at major New York City banks rose $235 million in the week ended Wednesday, compared with a rise of $418 million the previous week and a decline of $21 million in the same week a year before.

—The interest rate on Federal funds, the short-term loans banks make to each other, averaged 7.78 percent in the week ended Wednesday, up from 7.53 percent the previous week.

—The average rate on 90-to-110-day commercial paper, unsecured corporate IOUs, rose to 7.75 percent from 7.66 percent a week earlier.

The Fed often makes revisions in its money-supply tally. Among factors in the revisions are seasonal adjustments, new figures from banks that do not report statistics on a weekly basis, and occasional delays in check clearing operations. Because of the revisions, analysts caution against viewing the week-to-week statistical fluctuations as immediate guides to Federal Reserve policies.

Airing Of Gripes By Civil Service Workers Endorsed

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Senate committee endorsed a dual-track system for resolving federal employee-discrimination complaints Thursday, prompting an NAACP lobbyist to shout at the hearing that blacks are being "lynched."

The Governmental Affairs Committee voted 7-4 to refer employees claiming discrimination to two separate groups: the Merit System Protection Board, which handles all civil service dismissal appeals, and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, which specializes in discrimination complaints.

Civil rights groups had wanted the EEOC to have sole and final authority on discrimination complaints from federal employees. They said the merit board will carry on the conservative tradition of the current Civil Service Commission and that the commission has traditionally ignored discriminatory situations involving minorities and women.

"This isn't the first time a black has been lynched and that's what's happening here," an NAACP Washington lobbyist, Clarence Mitchell, shouted at the hearing.

He was gaveled out of order by Chairman Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., but not before Mitchell said that "the administration's position is being distorted."

After the vote, Mitchell said civil rights groups had been betrayed by President Carter on the issue and that he would recommend to the NAACP convention next week in Oregon that it go on record against the overall civil service revision bill.

Two weeks ago, the civil rights forces thought they had the votes for giving EEOC final authority in federal bias cases but a vote was held up after Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., suggested for the first time that the merit board should oversee EEOC rulings.

On Thursday, Javits and Ribicoff unveiled the compromise they said had been worked out with the Carter administration.

"An employee will say his is a discrimiation case because he doesn't want to be accused of being lazy or cheating on the job," Javits said, "so if he's black or another minority he will say he's being fired for discriminatory reasons."

Mitchell said in an interview after the hearing that he was offended by Javits' rationale that minorities who are being fired for being inept might be overeager to claim discrimination.

"It's a racist thing," Mitchell said. "Examples are given of lazy, inefficient people. They're saying, by inference, 'yes, we got a lot of lazy, inefficient blacks who are running to EEOC for redress and we'll stop them there (by the dual referral system.)"

Ribicoff, asked afterward about Mitchell's statement that the compromise went counter to what Carter had promised civil rights groups, denied that it would hurt civil rights of federal workers.

"There's no defeat for civil rights," he said. "There is a complete protection for any one discrimintion case. Anyone who thinks discrimination is involved has a right to have the EEOC involved in any case."

He said he would not comment on whether persons accused of ineptness often file discrimination cases.

IN QUEST FOR GREATER INFLUENCE

Eastern Europe Assisting Africans

COMMUNIST INFLUENCE — Map shows African countries falling under the sphere of Soviet influence via help from Communist satellites in Eastern Europe. (AP Laserphoto)

By STEPHEN H. MILLER

BERLIN (AP) — Communist East European countries are joining the Soviet drive for more influence in Africa and are pouring money, technology, weapons and military training into the area, an Associated Press survey shows.

Some experts say East European nations are used as surrogates in areas where the Soviets don't want to become directly involved.

In other areas of Africa, East European aid projects seem to stem from self-interest rather than an attempt to boost Soviet fortuns.

The survey, on two continents, found East European involvement in aid to both Marxist-leaning and non-Communist countries and to guerrilla movements of the Third World.

—East Germany is reported setting up security police organizations in Angola, Mozambique, Benin and South Yemen and is training glider pilots, maintaining military vehicles and providing youth organizations with "premilitary" training.

—Poland is building a Libyan power station and has promised Nigeria some 300 geologists and technicians.

—Czechoslovakia is lending Ethiopia $46.5 million to modernize and expand a variety of industries.

—Hungary is loaning Tunisia $35 million mostly for agricultural development and is exporting whole factories to "lessen dependence on former colonial powers."

—Bulgaria is expanding Mozambique's Limpopo Valley irrigation area from 75,000 to 785,000 acres and is building a hydroelectric dam at Massingir.

—Romania is providing experts to help find and export gold and precious stones in the Central African Empire and to help find lead ore in Kenya and oil in Nigeria.

Western experts say East Germany apparently is taking care of Africa's badly wounded, just as it once provided hospital space for wounded North Vietnamese.

"If they want to keep it a secret, they should quit taking them on tours of the Soviet War Memorial," says one diplomat, who reports that groups of African amputees and cripples are being shepherded around East Berlin.

Some Western analysts see strong signs that staunchly pro-Soviet East Germany is becoming Russia's main helper in a long-range move to build influence in Africa through satellite surrogates.

There is adequate evidence, one West German Africa-watcher says, that Moscow and East Germany are teaming up "so that (East Germany) becomes active in areas where the Soviets don't want to burn their fingers."

East Germans provide military aid to Ethiopia, he said, partly because the Russians can't do it themselves without helping defeat at least one Eritrean rebel movement they once supported. Ethiopia, with heavy support from Cuba and the Soviet Union, recently put down a campaign by ethnic Somali rebels to seize eastern Ethiopia's Ogaden region.

Ethiopia now is fighting Eritrean rebels, who have stepped up their 16-year-old war for independence. Not all the projects promote the Soviet Union. Romania has the most independent foreign policy in the Soviet bloc and many of its aid projects serve its own interests.

Yugoslavia, whose Communist government has been independent since it broke with the Soviet Union in 1948, also aids African countries. It is reopening Angola's richest iron mine, closed since the Portuguese left in 1975, and has loaned Egypt $10 million for rural electrification.

Western analysts agree that even East German motives in Africa include a dash of self-interest, including efforts to counter West German cultural and political influence.

East Berlin's first African contacts included rebel movements in Angola and Mozambique. In both cases, the rebels took over and now are fighting anti-government forces themselves.

Bonn sources say East Germany prints propoganda magazines and other items for rebels in Rhodesia, South Africa and South-West Africa.

Some West German watchers of East Germany discount a report that East Berlin planned the recent rebel invasion of Zaire's Shaba province. East Germany's defense minister, Gen. Heinz Hoffman, was making a high-level African tour when the invasion started.

Egypt and Sudan have both sent home Russian advisers in recent years, but the early '70s, when Soviet aid was available, was also a time of substantial aid from East Europe. The Stockholm International Peace Research Institute says Czechoslovakia exported $87 million worth of arms in 1970-1976, and 18 percent went to Egypt and Sudan.

Yugoslavia, the institute says, sent 70 percent of its $24 million in arms exports to Egypt. Another 13 percent went to Tanzania.

African leaders have become regulars on the East European circuit of state banquets and factory visits.

In Romania last Monday, Moroccan Foreign Affairs Minister M'hamed Boucetta and Algerian Energy Minister Sid Ahmed Ghozoli were arriving while President Nicolae Ceaucescu was receiving Ivory Coast Foreign Minister Simeon Ake and a deputy premier was receiving Gabon education leader Dr. Julian Mezu.

That same day, Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy arrived in East Berlin after an East European swing on a tour that included Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Poland.

Soviet bloc leaders are secretive about their foreign aid programs. But they are free with promises like the recent vow of Czech Premier Lubomir Strougal: "We will fulfill our international duty wherever the national liberation struggle with neocolonialism and racism is currently being waged to its conclusion."

Big Sid Slithers To Freedom

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (UPI) — Big Sid usually can be found hanging around the neck of a pretty girl.

Wednesday, police couldn't find him anywhere.

Big Sid, a 20-foot python who lives on a diet of dead mice, is the star sideshow attraction of The Wonderful World Circus, which opened without him in a shopping center parking lot.

The 140-pound snake slithered out of his plywood cage last Friday after circus owner Harrx Dubsky arrived in town to get things ready for Wednesday's opening. Big Sid has not been seen since — much to the dismay of worried mothers.

"We're just waiting for someone to sight him," said officer Gene Kars of the suburban Walker Police Department. "He may be big, but he's not that big. A hippo you can see from the air; a snake like this you can't see."

Residents were asked to call police if they see Sid hanging around a tree or crawling along the sidewalk. At the circus, Sid's job is to wrap himself around the necks of showgirls.

"We've asked people to call us if they see him but not to try and capture him themselves," Kars said. "We'll send somebody out, but I don't want to be the one to go and get him."

Dubsky warned that though Sid ate a big dish of dead mice Friday night and need not eat for a month, he still is dangerous, if provoked.

The 7-year-old, non-poisonous snake is a constrictor that crushes its victims. Dubsky said his prodigal star got loose for six hours when the circus was in New Jersey last week.

Elsie Brandmiller, at whose home Dubsky was staying, said she received numerous calls from mothers afraid Big Sid would eat their children and people who thought they'd spotted the snake.

"I just had a young kid here thinking he'd seen him, but he hadn't," Mrs. Brandmiller said. "He just had a wild imagination."

Dubsky offered a $50 reward for information leading to the capture and safe return of the reptile, valued at $2,000.

Mongol Detective Wins Praise For Overcoming Unjust Verdict

HONG KONG (UPI) — With the persistence of Perry Mason, Chinese detective Tsou Shih-kuei saved three condemned men from the firing squad in the Mongolian Hao Lung murder case.

The murder remains unsolved, but Tsou has been commended by judicial officials and the Chinese Communist party newspaper, People's Daily, because he "persevered in his principles" and prevented a serious miscarriage of justice.

Shortly after 9 on a February night in 1970, Hao Lung, a worker in the Apachia Banner (County) Food Company, left a company political meeting while it still was in progress. He never made it home.

His body, with a head wound apparently inflicted with an axe, later was found in a well.

Almost six months later, the manager and a clerk of the food company and two construction workers were arrested and charged with Hao's murder.

Prosecutors asked for the death sentence for three of the men and a 10-year sentence for the fourth. They moved swiftly, and executions were set for January 1971.

Tsou was troubled.

An investigator in the Apachia Public Security department, Tsou was convinced the four were not guilty. He also was critical of the methods used to obtain confessions and other evidence, which was all circumstantial. He said so in a report to his superiors.

Although this only brought criticism from his colleagues in the department, Tsou persisted and went to higher authorities. He asked to go to Huhehot, capital of the Inner Mongolia Autonomous Region, to present his views on the case.

His persistence succeeded in getting a last-minute reprieve for the condemned men, and authorities agreed to re-open the case. During the next four years the case was reinvestigated five separate times before authorities decided "there were certainly some shortcomings" that cast doubt upon the original findings.

The review authorities cited the unreliability of one witness, who suffered from "psychological" problems and often only told interrogators what they wanted to hear.

"During the interrogation, the man sometimes talked smoothly but fabricated stories," a report published by the Peoples Daily in late May said.

"Sometimes he denied all that he had said and began making another confession. Seeking great success and praise in solving the case, some interrogators quickly accepted his confession."

Worse, some interrogators forced people to make comfessions. When there were differences in details, "the interrogators brought them to the site where the murder occurred, interrogated them and finally obtained identical confessions."

"Comrades of the autonomous region's judicial department who reinvestigated the Hao Lung case maintained that the facts were not clear, the verdict was inaccurate and evidence was insufficient," the People's Daily said. "Therefore, they maintained the verdict of sentencing three persons to death and one to 10 years in prison was obviously wrong."

Commenting on the case, the People's Daily said Tsou "fulfilled the glorious duties of a public security worker" by "seeking truth from facts" and righting a grievous wrong.

London Gaming Sites Booming

LONDON (UPI) — Gamblers from the oil-rich middle East have returned in force to London's casinos which are reaping the biggest profits ever.

"Every night we are seeing Middle Eastern gentleman winning or losing thousands of pounds. And more and more seem to be coming," said a spokesman for Ladbrokes, which has 11 casinos dotted around Britain including four in London. "We are doing exceptionally well."

Cyril stein, chairman of Ladbrokes, said his flagship, the Hill Street casino, has taken a record "drop" — the cash exchanged for gaming chips — in the past three weeks.

"Business is so good that we have added a new gaming floor to our Hill Street casino," he said. He takes in more than one million pounds (71.8 million) a week.

Ladbroes shareholders should be pleased. Not only is the company taking in chips at the tablas — it'f also expecting to profit some 10 million pounds ($19 million) in bets from last week's Royal Ascot after already collecting a similar amount at the Epson Derby meet.

Corals, which also has a number of big casinos, said Arab gamblers are flocking back to the tables. Last year something like 55 percent of Corals profits came from casinos.

London's playboy Club comfirmed that many of the old Arab bettors had returned together with new gamblers. The group owns the casino at the Park Lane Bunny Club, the largest of its kind in Britain, the plush Clermont Club and two casinos in Portsmouth and Manchester.

The Playboy Club did not expect profits to grow at the same rate they did last year during the boom which saw the take at ull of Britain's casinos soar by more than 40 percent to a record 680 million pounds ($ 1.292 billion).

Mecca, part of the grand Metropolitan hotels and brewery empire, has reported its best gaming year ever. Mecca opens the new Ritz Casino next week.

Rails hardly ever use flight as a means of escape, hence making them especially vulnerable to predators.

Home-made ice cream by Milnot. It's ice creamier.
If ice cream doesn't taste as rich and creamy as it used to, make it yourself—with Milnot. Milnot is the special ingredient that gives old fashioned freezer ice cream a rich texture and flavor.
In fact, anything you make from scratch—including ice cream—is better with Milnot. Try it. You'll agree that ice cream made with Milnot is the ice creamiest.
Old Fashioned Homemade Ice Cream

Mart Posts Small Gain

NEW YORK (AP) — A pair of takeover candidates were the standout performers Thursday as the stock market squeezed out a small gain in the quietest trading in almost a month.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials edged up 1.73 to 821.64 after posting a 2.60-point gain Wednesday.

New York Stock Exchange volume came to 21.67 million shares, down from 23.26 million Wednesday and the lightest total since a 21.04 million-share day on May 30.

The session's top percentage showing was turned in by Colonial Stores, which sported a 4¼-point gain at 28¼ as of the 4 p.m. close of the NYSE.

Grand Union Co. made a $30-a-share merger proposal to the company, which operates supermarkets in several southern states.

National Starch Chemical, meanwhile, chalked up a 6¾ advance to 70¾. On Wednesday the company said it received a favorable ruling from the Internal Revenue Service on its planned acquisition by a Unilever Group subsidiary.

The modest upswing in the overall market seemed to stem more from technical forces than from any particular news development, anaysts said.

Confirmation Testimony Perjury Probe Sought

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department has been asked to determine if a Bell Helicopter official lied about questionable overseas payments at Senate hearings to confirm G. William Miller as head of the Federal Reserve Board.

The perjury investigation was requested by the Senate Banking Committee after Textron Inc., Bell's parent company, in compliance with a subpoena, gave the panel documents directly contradicting the sworn testimony of Frank M. Sylvester, Bell's vice president for international marketing.

Sylvester said he would have been surprised to learn in the early 1970s that Gen. Mohammed Khatemi, commander of the Imperial Iranian air force, had an ownership interest in Air Taxi, the sales agency that represented Bell in connection with a $500 million helicopter sale to Iran.

Miller, the former president and board chairman of Textron, had his confirmation delayed for six weeks, last winter, as the Banking Committee investigated the possibility that a $2.9 million payment made by Bell to Air Taxi might have been a bribe funneled to Gen. Khatemi to clinch what became one of the largest sales in Bell's history.

Gen. Khatemi died a few years ago in an accident.

Among the most recent documents provided by Textron is a "Confidential, Eyes Only" report to Sylvester dated March 16, 1971 on sales prospects in Iran.

The memo, written by Bell represenative C.P.B. Horsley, contains an organizational chart placing Gen. Khatemi just under the shah. A dotted line connects his name to that of Air Taxi.

"The real influence behind the company is Gen. Khatemi, the Air Force commander in chief," the Horsley memo said. "As a serving officer he officially is not allowed to hold offices outside his military capacity, but in reality, anything that flies he has an 'interest' in."

During questioning by committee staff members, Sylvester was asked:

"Would it have surprised you to learn that Gen. Khatemi had an ownership interest in Air Taxi?"

"Yeah, I think it would have," he replied. "I don't know, but I think it would have .... certain knowlege would have put a very different complexion upon our relationship, that's for sure. If we'd had pre-knowlege of that kind I think I can pretty clearly say to you that Jim Atkins (Bell's president) wouldn't have permitted the relationship to exist, to continue."

When Sylvester was asked what Gen. Khatemi's influence was over aircraft purchases or whether he had figured prominently in deciding which helicopter would be bought, he replied, "I don't know."

At his confirmation hearings, Miller testified that he did not know of any ownership interest by Gen. Khatemi in Air Taxi.

Committee investigators say no evidence ever has been found which in any way links Miller to such knowlege.

As the hearing closed, Miller said, "If Gen. Khatemi did have an undisclosed ownership interest in Air Taxi, then Mr. Atkins and I have been deceived."

"Deception by others shouldn't be the basis for impugning the integrity of innocent parties," Miller said.

A junior high school was built underground at Lake Worth, Texas, to get away from the roar of jets from a nearby air base.

Agency's Ruling Leads To Immigrant's Exit

COLOMA, Mich. (AP) — Frans VanDer Aart and his family don't want to return to the Netherlands, but they are taking the free flight home to avoid deportation because of what they call a misunderstanding.

Henry Witte, a fellow former countryman who now runs charter tours, offered the free flight.

"It's foolish for me to let those seats fly empty. Why not use them to help out these people," Witte, of Ada, said Thursday. He said last-minute cancellations left five seats available on a direct flight Friday from Detroit to Amsterdam.

Witte, 34, who immigrated to the United States from the Netherlands with his family at age 12, said the VanDer Aarts will be flying with three tour groups — a youth chorale and two jazz bands.

The VanDer Aarts were told to leave the United States by July 6 or be deported. Deportation would have meant they could never return.

Their deportation was ordered after the U.S. Immigration Service and Naturalization Service rejected their appeal to remain in this country.

When VanDer Aart, a flower propogating specialist, came to Coloma in 1976, he believed he had papers listing the family as legal immigrants. A year later, he learned the documents were for tourists and allowed only a one-year stay.

The VanDer Aarts said they want to return to the United States. Supporters launched a fund drive to help and collected nearly $1,900 by Wednesday, according to Sandra Henderson, a family friend.

VanDer Aart says the family furnishings are being put in storage until they can return.

Seven Perish In Motorhome Crash

BOULEVARD, Calif. (AP) — Investigators said Thursday that seven relatives who died in the fiery crash of their motorhome were all the members of three generations of a Colorado and Illinois family.

They said the driver may have fallen asleep as he drove from the Denver suburb of Littleton to visit friends in San Diego and attend a wedding in Yorba Linda, east of Los Angeles.

The motorhome hit a bridge guard railing Wednesday on Interstate 8 near Boulevard, almost 50 miles east of San Diego, burst into flames as the gas tank ruptured, and plunged down an 18-foot embankment. Nobody saw the crash, but a truck driver arriving at the scene said he could hear children trapped inside and crying.

The dead were identified as Glen Egols, 55, a farmer from Claytonville, Ill.; his wife Mary Ann, 52; their 10-year-old son, Ryan; Egols's daughter Carol, 31; her husband, Aaron Bayer, 33, of Littleton, vice president of Western Bible College at Morrison, Colo., and their children, Eric, 5, and Janice, 3.

At the time, they were starting a two-week vacation.

The trucker, Thomas A. Kenway, said he tried to rescue them but was forced back by the flames. A two-acre brush fire was ignited but put out by a state forestry crew.

The investigation was incomplete, authorities said, and they had not determined which of the adults was driving.

. . .Of Kickers And Canadians

WHEN TIME AND space run short. . . Roswell, N.M., has a love affair—and rightly so—with its hometown girl, Nancy Lopez. But, the darling of the women's pro golf circuit is pondering a move of residence, possibly to the state of Florida, or even to the Lone Star State. . . It didn't take long. Last week, the Torontos were playing a Canadian Football League exhibition game and early in the action thrust in rookie Rodney Allison as triggerman. So, in his very first series, he took them in for a touchdown. And with the Argonauts' No. 1 quarterback having contract discussions with the club, the Raider ex could be at the throttle quite a bit this season. . .

There will be two Creels around Texas this year. Leland Creel, who pitched Duncanville to the state baseball tournament, has signed to play baseball with the Longhorns. His older brother, Keith, was a freshman there last spring. . . The Texas Rangers are taking care of their own. The team's radio announcer, Dick Risenhoover, died of cancer on the day the Rangers opened the 1978 season. Last week, the club held a charity golf tournament and raised $8,000 for scholarship funds for his children. . .

MARK IT DOWN: Dunbar ex James Baldwin is shooting for the '80 Olympics in Moscow. Now competing at Texas Southern, Baldwin had the NAIA's fastest time of 51.6 in the 400-meter hurdles going into the national meet but was disqualified. "I'm starting my (Olympic) training now," Baldwin said last week, "and I think I'll make it." . . Washington Redskins coach Jack Pardee on his predecessor, George Allen: "He's a great man and an excellent coach, but I wouldn't want to buy a used car from him." . . .

Last spring, Texas experimented with running its prestigious Texas Relays on Sunday. It brought howls of protest, both from church-related schools as well as some of the more worldly types. So, it'll be back to Saturday finals for next year. . . Nancy Lopez recently broke the pro golfers' record for most money as a rookie, topping $150,000. But, just think: Byron Nelson, one of the nation's greatest in the sport, won 49 PGA events, and the total earnings—total—for his career was only $182,000. Have you checked the size of your dollar bill lately? . . .

TECH'S NEW athletic director, Dick Tamburo, is arriving on hand too late to participate in the annual summer Red Raider Club golf stops in such cities as Hobbs, Lamesa, Plainview and Tahoka, but even at that, he will be experienced in such goodwill trips. The University of Illinois goes in for such a plan, its coaches hitting 30 cities over the state for similar golf-gab-steak sessions. And the series of trips was just winding up when Tamburo was hired here. . . Remember a few weeks ago when the NBA was looking at Dallas as a site for the shifting Buffalo Braves, and they were going to name the club the Express? Maybe that was prophetic, since usually the trains are usually late on arriving at the next destination. . . With a nickname like Rocky, how can he go wrong? But Lubbock's Oscar Rios turned pro and in his fight, he knocked out Roy Florez of Odessa in the second round of their bout in Odessa this week. Rios fights in the 150-pound class. .

Next winter, Tech cage boss Gerald Myers will have two classes of competition in his two invitational tournaments. At the Birmingham Classic, there will be such folks as Samford, Oklahoma State and Western Illinois. But, at the Sun Bowl meet at El Paso, his Raiders will be in there with Michigan, Clemson and UTEP. Quite a contrast. . . Not all footballers can go by the tag of Big Foot. Arkansas has this incoming kicker named Ismael Ordonez who wears a size 6 shoe. But, says equipment man Bud Turk: "I checked with the company that makes the shoe our kickers have used. They can give us that size, but only in the youth model." . .

ALTHOUGH GREG KITE, a Houston schoolboy, is suing the Interscholastic League over the no-basketball-camp rule, the UIL appears to have no personal animosity toward him. Says UIL athletic director Bill Farney: "The whole philosophy of the League is the total educational program in interscholastic competition. From that standpoint, the rules are necessary. From an individual liberty standpoint, it doesn't make sense." . . A year ago, TCU opened against Clemson and Ohio en route to a 4-22 season. This year the Frogs will play such cage teams as St. Edward's, Santa Fe, UTA, Trinity, Wayland and Robert Morris (that's in Wheelling, W. Va.) "We need to have a good start in November and December for our players to gain some confidence and gain a winning attitude." . .

Note to Brian Hall, the former Raider kicker who lettered four years booting field goals with an artificial foot: Come back; you're now eligible to compete. David Nelson, Delaware AD and speaking for the NCAA rules committee: "We did away with the prohibition on artificial limbs. It's now possible to use artificial hands, arms, legs or anything." It was against the rules when Hall was kicking, but as Raider boss Jim Carlin said at the time, "What official has the guts to tell a guy like Brian, who has worked hard and practiced and ignored a handicap, that he's ineligible to kick? We're going to use him." For 163 points. . . And did you hear that Earl Campbell was to do a commercial for a tobacco? Says Heisman Earl: "I'm the only Skoal brother" .

New Man Gets Star Treatment

HOUSTON (AP) — Rarely does a .211 hitter get such star billing but the Houston Astros were so desperate for a catcher Thursday night they used a helicopter to get minor leaguer Louie Pujols to the game on time.

Pujols was called up earlier Thursday from the Astros' Charleston farm club in the International League.

When rain and traffic problems interferred, the Astros rented a helicopter to set Pujols down on the Astrodome parking lot in time for Thursday night's game against the Cincinnati Reds.

Starting catcher Joe Ferguson suffered muscle spasms in his lower back following Wednesday night's game and backup Reggie Baldwin is out with a strained tendon in his right shoulder.

Owners Agree To Swap Celtics, Braves Teams

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Buffalo Braves' managing partner John Y. Brown and Boston Celtics' owner Irving Levin agreed Thursday to swap ownership of their basketball teams, with the Braves moving to San Diego.

"We've pretty much finalized an agreement," said Brown. "We have a tenative letter-of-intent. As far as I'm concerned, we have a final deal, subject to a board of governors' approval."

A meeting of the National Basketball Association's board of governors is scheduled in Chicago on July 7. The Braves' move to San Diego marks the return of an NBA franchise in that city. The Houston Rockets were moved from San Diego in 1971 after four seasons.

According to Levin, the swap was a straight trade with no cash involved. Levin said he and his partner, Harold Lipton, worked out the details of the trade from their side.

"We've made a very fair agreement with the Sports Arena in San Diego," said Levin, anticipating the move which would take immediate effect. "That city is growing by leaps and bounds and the enthusiasm is just tremendous. I've talked with individual members of the board of governors who think this is an excellent move, both for us and for Brown and his partner."

Brown, 44, who amassed a fortune running the Kentucky Fried Chicken chain but now owns the Louisville-based Lum's International restaurant chain, bought the Braves from Buffalo businessman Paul Snyder in early 1977. Snyder had owned the club since the NBA expanded to Buffalo in 1970 and had attempted to move the club to Hollywood, Fla., two years ago.

The move was blocked in court by the city of Buffalo. Brown retained control of the club when he sold half interest to Harry Mangurian of Ft. Lauderdale last winter.

The Braves exercised an escape clause in their Buffalo lease at the end of the 1977-78 season. The clause allowed the club to break the lease if season ticket sales fell below 4,500. Only 2,300 were sold last winter.

Levin, a Los Angeles film magnate who took control of the Celtics in 1975, has been under pressure from Boston fans and media who were upset with his unsuccessful efforts to keep the once-dominant Celtics as NBA champions.

Brown has said his major goal is to become the first owner to win championships in two leagues. He and his former wife, Ellie, ran the American Basketball Association champion Kentucky Colonels.

"I think it's an exciting prospect, certainly a challenging one," said Brown of his association with the Celtics. "You'd like to think you can turn the Celtics back into instant winners in the tradition of the franchise. I think there's a rebuilding job to do, but it's certainly a new and exciting challenge."

Brown would make no firm statement as to the status of longtime Celtics General Manager Red Auerbach.

"I'm anxious to see what he feels needs to be done to build the Celtics back into a winner," said Brown. "I have the greatest respect for Red, but I haven't had a chance to talk to him about staying. I need to talk to him soon."

AAU Suspends Trio

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Dwight Stones, former world record holder in the high jump, and three other members of the U.S. Olympic track team have been suspended from competition for accepting prize money, the Amateur Athletic Union announced Thursday.

Stones, javelin thrower Kate Schmidt, middle distance runner Francie Larrieu and pentathon competitor Jane Frederick were suspended indefinitely by the Southern Pacific Association of the AAU. Seven members of the association's nineman registration committee voted unanimously June 23 to suspend the four athletes.

The vote stemmed from the athletes' participation in ABC television's "Superstars" program, for which tney received a total of $58,000, the AAU said.

David Matlin, former AAU president who is an official now with both the Southern Pacific AAU and the national AAU, said their investigation showed that Frederick received $17,600, Schmidt $3,900 and Larrieu $3,100 from the televised competition.

Matlin said there are three criteria for amateur athletes to participate in an event like the Superstars: 1, an athlete can not compete in any track and field activities; 2, all negotiations for appearances should be handled through AAU and, 3, all money would go to the AAU.

He said all the athletes must be apprised of those facts "and these athletes were." Matlin said the four negotatioated with Trans World International Inc., producers of Superstars, and not through the AAU.

The registration committee held three sessions, including two hearings, Matlin said, but Frederick was in Europe at the time and Larrieu sent a letter saying she was on vacatkon.

Matlin said Olan Cassell had telephoned him Thursday and said "he (Cassell) had talked to an official of the IAAF who said he (the official) was 'astonished that Stones and Schmidt are competing in Europe,' which they are."

Frederick already is prohibited from competing in Europe. She reportedly is vacationing in Rome.

Cassell told Matlin that all IAAF members will be told that the four are ineligible to compete in any meets. Stones finished second in a meet in Oslo, Norway, on Tuesday and was to participate in the World Games in Helsinki, Finland, on Thursday. Schmidt also is reportedly in Helsinki.

John Holt, general secretary of the IAAF, had said earlier that, in a telephone conversation, he had read to Stones the three essential conditions before the high jumper participated in the Superstars competition last winter. Stones reportedly told the Southern Pacific AAU Association that he had received permission from IAAF to compete in the televised competition.

Rain Delays Wimbledon Action

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Rain washed out the fourth-day matches in the Wimbledon tennis championships Thursday, and 27,554 people thronged the All-England Club to wait in vain to see Bjorn Borg and Vitas Gerulaitis play.

The backlog of matches will hit the players hard. Instead of rest days between singles matches they are likely to have to play every day — and some will find themselves playing singles and doubles, two or more matches a day.

The fans rolled in hoping to see Borg, bidding for his third straight title, play Peter McNamara of Australia, and an intriguing all-American duel between Gerulaitis and Sherwood Stewart.

"We have never known such enthusiasm for tennis," said Richard Holt, a member of the tournament organizing committee.

"More people than ever before attended on the first three days. The lines of people in the streets around the club, waiting for the gates to open at noon, are longer than any of us can remember."

A record crwod of 38,290 people packed the All-England Club for Wednesday's action.

Guillermo Vilas of Argentina, the fourth seed, was scheduled to meet Tom Okker of the Netherlands on the center court. Virginia Wade, the defending women's champion, should have followed with a match against Lesley Bowrey of Australia.

But all the center-court fans saw was a huge green canvas tent placed over the playing area to keep the rain off. A similar cover was suspended over the adjoining No.1 court, where Borg's match was the first on the program.

The two main courts stay so dry under covers that if the rain had stopped, it would have been possible to play almost immediately. So the crowds waited until early evening.

"Many of these people have come long distances, perhaps 130 miles, to see tennis," Holt said. "We feel we have an obligation to them, so we never abandon play until as late as possible. Even if they saw one hour in the evening it would be something."

But it was not to be. Seats on the center court, costing a minimum $9, were all sold months ago, and nobody gets their money back.

Despite the blank day, the overall attendance is well up on last year. Spectators the first four days totalled 129,523, compared with 124,728 in 1977, the Wimbledon centenary year.

The day's program was transferred en bloc to Friday, when second seed Martina Navratilova is to play Australian Pam Whytcross and former champion Billie Jean King faces Marie Pinterova of Czechoslovakia.

Among those advancing Wednesday were seeded players Gerulaitis, Jimmy Connors, Brian Gottfried and Roscoe Tanner, and Chris Evert, Evonne Goolagong and Tracy Austin.

Nix Captures Junior Golf Title

By SCOTT SUDDUTH
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

Stacy Nix and Brian Sheffield turned Meadowbrook Golf Course into a battleground Thursday, as they struggled neck to neck for the Lubbock City Junior Golf Championship title.

The two players had to go an extra five holes before Nix emerged as the winner.

In sudden death, Nix and Sheffield played even ball on the first four holes before Sheffield's tee shot on the par 3 5th hole went sailing in the wind and landed wide left of the green.

Lying one on the green, Nix two-putted the green for par and the tourney championship. Sheffield settled for a bogey 4 on the hole.

At the end of regulation play, the golfers were tied at 224 for the tournament. Nix shot a 3-over par 75, and Sheffield recorded a 76.

After blistering the field with a 69 on Wednesday, Sheffield found his game plagued by bogeys on the back nine Thursday, which fatally wounded his title hopes.

"I couldn't get any putts to drop. I choked badly today," admitted Sheffield.

Nix had the trophy in the bag before the sudden death, but Sheffield came through with a 15-foot birdie putt on the last hole to send the contest into overtime.

"I was shaky going into overtime," confided an elated Nix, "But I was also happy to be there."

After winning his first tournament, the newcomer to Lubbock smiled and said, "You know, I think I'm going to like it here."

Jeff Watts and Mike White also had to go into overtime to decide third and fourth places in the 16-18 division of the tournament.

Both players finished the final round with a 73 for three-day total of 230. White came out on top in the extra round to win the third-place trophy.

In the 14-15 age group, Brad Simnacher finished the tourney with a 246 total to edge Mike Reed by two strokes for first place.

Rick Alexander built upon his second-day lead and won the 12-13 age division with a final round of 86 and three-day total 256. With a disqualification pending against Timmy Sansom in the 10-11 age group, first place was awarded to Ricky Moreno. Playing six-hole rounds, Moreno shot a 152 total to win over Alexander Fordyce by 2-strokes.

In other action, Scott Smyer won in the 9-and-under division with a 114 total.

In the girls' divisions, Cookie Creel won the 16-18 group with a 312 total. In the 12-13 age group, Luarie Cross shot a three-round total of 390 to capture first place.

Karin Mainz recorded a a 248 to win over Elizabeth Moodey in the 10-11 age division.

Search Fails To Uncover Racer's Body

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — John "Crazy John" Zagos, a nationally known speedboat racer, was presumed dead today after the boat he was operating flipped and sank while traveling at more than 100 mph in a test run up the James River.

Henrico County rescue workers searched the river for the body of the 34-year-old Zagos, who lived in suburban Mechanicsville, and his 20-foot boat.

They had found only the red leather seat in which Zagos had been riding when the $14,000 boat flipped about 8 p.m. Wednesday off the shore in Henrico County.

"Witnesses say he was traveling more than a hundred miles an hour when the bow came out of the water and the boat flipped over on its back," said Police Sgt. L.E. Shaw.

About 20 people who had come to watch Zagos make test runs or to go swimming witnessed the spectacular accident.

Owner Reveals Aeros' Attempt To Receive Admission To NHL

HOUSTON (AP) — Kenneth Schnitzer, majority owner of tle World Hockey Association Houston Aeros, said Thursday the Aeros have applied to enter the National Hockey League as an expansion team as one way of providing professional hockey here next season.

The NHL Board of Governors, which broke off merger talks with the WHA Wednesday, has not acted on the proposal, Schnitzer said.

"We offered $2.5 million, plus a binding commitment to indemnity the NHL for any and all litigation that might arise from their move," Schnitzer said.

The Aeros owner, who has tenaciously pursued entry into the NHL since he took over the team last winter, also hinted the Aeros might play again in the WHA next season if all efforts fail at entering the NHL.

"As you know, the WHA announced it intends to be in operation next season," Schnitzer said. "We will make a determination soon as to whether or not we will be a part of it."

Schnitzer had previously said he had no interest in competing in the WHA next season.

Schnitzer postponed a news conference earlier this week when a move to transfer the NHL Colorado Rockies franchise to Houston fell through.

"Obviously we thought we had a deal, but it never got to the point of signatures on the dotted line," Schnitzer said.

The Aeros owner said the Rockies' transfer here remained a possibility to added "the jury is still out."

"We have also made them an outstandingly attractive offer for a lease in the Summit as well as an option to obtain an interest in the Arena Operating Company," Schnizter said.

Aeros home games are played in the city-owned Summit, which is operated by Arena.

Schnitzer said the Aeros were not a part of merger talks and decided not to try to purchase an NHL franchise for economic reasons.

The Aeros owner said under the merger terms presented, it would have cost the four merger teams $21 to $24 million, including the purchase of the Colorado Rockies.

"There is no way that even remotely makes economic sense to us," Schnitzer said. "With the $2 million we have in the Aeros now, plus the $5 to $6 million purchase or merger price, plus our probable operating losses for the first few NHL seasons, our investment would have been well above the $8 million."

Permanent Training Site Considered

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Lake Placid may become a training center for future U. S. Olympic teams.

The U.S. Olympic Committee has conditionally approved the site as a winter training center and is to make its final decision later this summer.

The designation "assures us that the sports facilities now being constructed with continue to have active and competitive use after the 1980 Winter Olympics," said Gov. Hugh Carey Wednesday.

Peterson, Andretti Favored

LE CASTELGET, France (AP) — With an emergency ban on the Brabham "vacuum cleaner" cars, the JPS-Lotus racers of Mario Andretti of Nazareth, Pa., and Swede Ronnie Peterson are favorites for Sunday's French Grand Prix.

They face stiff competition, however, from the Ferrari camp and the new Renault turbo-charged car on the super-fast Paul Richard circuit on a plateau behind the Riviera coast near Marseille.

Andretti was an early arrival at the circuit, where qualifying starts Friday. He flew in Wednesday after test sessions at the Hockenheim track in West Germany.

There are three official qualifying sessions Friday morning and afternoon and Saturday afternoon, with an untimed session Saturday morning.

Andretti said he was agreeably surprised the ruling body of motor sport had the courage to impose the ban on the Brabhams. "The system is dangerous," Andretti said of the car, also known nicknamed the "sucker. "If the fan drive broke in a corner, the car would fly off the track like a bullet, and it also throws track debris out the back at drivers following."

The car uses a fan whose sole purpose, proponents say, is to cool the engine — but detractors say the fan has 12 times the power necessary to do the job and that it illegally strengthens the car's grip on the track with its suction.

Andretti currently leads the world championship and his Lotus was unbeatable until reigning champion Niki Lauda of Austria swept the Brabham to victory in Sweden two weeks ago.

Lauda must revert here to the earlier 1978 Brabhams which have not been competitive for outright wins, but in which his skill has won him two second places this year.

The Richard circuit, with a straightaway of 1.1 miles and high-speed turns, should also favor the Ferraris of Argentina's Carlos Reutemann and Gilles Villeneuve of Canada. Lauda won here in a Ferrari in 1973 but Andretti's teammate, Peterson, on top form, has a win behind him here already in a Lotus in 19773.

Andretti has not been able to do any constructive testing here yet with the new Lotus 19.

Sanudo Takes Top Spot In Western Open Meet

OAK BROOK, Ill. (AP) — Sharp-putting Cesar Sanudo, who has finished in the money in only two of 13 golf tournaments this year, fired a 5-under-par 67 Thursday to take a 1-stroke lead after the first round of the $225,000 Western Open.

Starting at the sixth hole, where he sank a 20-foot putt, Sanudo birdied six of 10 holes to go 5-under. He bogeyed the 17th after landing in a bunker, but scrambled for his final birdie on the 18th, where he played an eight iron out of the rough to within a foot of the pin.

One stroke behind the 34-year-old native of Mexico, were playing partner Allen Miller and Bob Gilder. John Schroeder, Rod Curl and Craig Stadler trailed by two with 3-under-par 69's over the tough, 7,083-yard Butler National course.

Andy Bean, winner of the Kemper Open and Memphis Classic, was 6-under-par after 10 holes, but bogied the next four and came in with a 2-under 70 on a humid day when the temperature soared into the 90's.

Defending champion Tom Watson shot a 71 and Andy North, winner of the U.S. Open two weeks ago, was well back at 76. Bruce Lietzke, who captured the Canadian Open last Sunday, had an 81.

Sinudo, whose only victory on the tour was the 1970 Azaela Open, said he played in only eight tour events in 1976 and four in 1977 as he searched in vain for sponsors.

He paid his own way to his first eight tournaments this yaer and earned just $189.38 for his 33rd place tie in the Magnolia Classic and $320 for a tie for 39th the following week in the Tallahassee Open, both in April.

"It feels good knowing you can still score," said Sanudo, after his afternoon round. "I was beginning to worry whether I'd ever shoot in the 60's again.

"If I keep putting well, who knows what I can do here. I'm not going to make any predictions."

On four of his seven birdies, Sanudo ran home two putts of 30 feet, one of 20 feet, and another of about 12 feet.

Gilder, whose only victory on the tour was in the 1976 Phoenix Open, played a steady morning round of four birdies and 14 pars.

"If I can keep hitting like this I'll be tough. This gives me a lot of confidence," said Gilder.

Miller, who has finsihed in the top 10 in just one of his 21 tournaments this year, grabbed the lead late in the afternoon at 5-under with a birdie on the par-5, 483-yard 12th hole and then birdied the 14th. But he finished with a pair of bogies to fall behind Sanudo.

"I putted very well. I was lucky to make some long ones, including a 40-footer for a birdie on the first hole," said Sanudo.

Bean, gunning for his third triumph in five weeks, eagled the 556-yard, second hole and appeared to be on target for the course record of 65. Then he ran into troubles on the back nine.

"I guess you ought to be mad when you do that. But I guess that's the best I've ever played here," Bean said. "If you shoot for sub-par rounds, more than likely you're going to be the winner."

In a logjam with Bean at 2-under-par were Bill Rogers, Tom Purtzer, Don January, Jim Jamieson, Phil Hancock, Marty Fleckman, Lon Nielsen and John Adams.

Lopez Says She Likes Course For Upcoming LPGA Tourney

NOBLESVILLE, Ind. (AP) — Rookie sensation Nancy Lopez had bad news for her competitors on the Ladies Professional Golf Association tour after playing this week's tournament course for the first time.

"I like the course," said the 21-year-old Mexican-American after leading her team to a 15-under par score of 57 in pro-am preliminary event to this week's tournament. Her team and one led by Jennie Smith shared first place in the event.

"The greens are small, just like those where I grew up," she said after playing the 6,044-yard, par 72 Harbour Trees Golf Course Thursday. "However, it's been a while since I played small greens and I'll have to become more familiar with the course during today's practice round."

Lopez has already won seven tournaments, including a record five in a row this year. She's earned more than twice as much as any other woman on the tour. And her $131,128 in official earnings needs approximately $19,600 to top Judy Rankin's record for single-year earnings on the tour.

Action in the 54-hole $75,000 tournament begins Saturday and concludes Monday.

Lopez has dominated the tour so strongly this year that only five other women have earned more than $50,000 thus far. JoAnne Carner, Penny Pulz, Sandra Post, Pat Bradley and Jane Blalock belong to the select group.

Two members of that group, Post and Bradley, have elected to skip this week's tournament. Two other members of the top 10 in 1978 earnings, Hollis Stacy and Sally Little, are also taking the week off.

But, the field of 75 pros and five amateurs to tee off Saturday is a strong one. And Rankin, the defending champion, showed she's giving special importance to the tournament by taking last week off to rest and prepare for her defense.

Rankin, winless this year, has had back problems earlier this year but her recent play has shown she's ready to compete for the winner's prize of $11,250.

Blalock, a runner-up here last year, has also been playing well recently. She finished second in the tour's last two events.

Atlanta Rushes Horner Into Major Leagues

ATLANTA (AP) — Bob Horner, the nation's top draft choice in the baseball draft earlier this month by Atlanta, watched a couple of the Braves' games on television and decided he was ready for the major leagues.

Since making the decision, the NCAA home-run record holder has not burned up the league. But he did break in with a flourish, pounding a homer in his first start.

After 11 games the 6-foot-1, 190-pounder whose blond curls peek from beneath his cap, has drilled two home runs, two doubles and driven in five runs. His batting average, however, is under .200.

"I've really been hitting the ball well," the 20-year-old Horner said before Thursday's contest with the Los Angeles Dodgers. "I could easily be hitting over .300 rather than the .170 or whatever I'm hitting."

Horner, who slammed 25 home runs this past season at Arizona State and 56 during his three-year career, originally planned to begin his professional career in the minors.

"At first I had decided I'd rather play in Double A and get some experience," said Horner, who batted .425 with 98 RBI in 60 games this past season in college.

"But I watched two or three games on television before I signed and changed my mind. I knew I was ready for the major leagues," said Horner.

"I have no regrets about my decision. I really feel comfortable up here," he said. "There have been no problems and the coaches are confident in me.

"But if I happen to turn around and not do what I expect I can do, something will have to be done. I'll be the first to know, nobody will have to tell me," said Horner about being sent to the minors for seasoning if the need arises.

"But I felt good starting off here and I expect it to get a lot easier. The only thing that can happen with the experience is for me to get smarter and that can only help," he said. "I'm not trying to say it's going to be easy, it's not. It's really tough up here but I think I can handle it."

Atlanta Manager Bobby Cox agreed.

"He's hit the ball hard in just about every game, but hasn't had all the luck in the world. He looks like he's going to be a good major league hitter," said Cox.

Unser Avoids Bad Injuries In Accident

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — Bobby Unser Jr. escaped serious injury Thursday when his open-cockpit car flipped end-over-end a half dozen times as it tumbled 100 feet down the mountain slope during a practice run for the Pikes Peak Auto Hill Climb race.

"I was just coming too fast," the 22-year-old Unser said as he sat on a boulder waiting for the wreckage of his car to be lifted out by helicopter. "I'm concerned about why it happened, what I did wrong and how I can keep it from happening again."

Unser is the son of Bobby Unser, Indianapolis 500 winner and 12-time winner of the hill climb, and nephew of current Indianapolis title holder, Al Unser.

He and his father built the hill-climb car at the family's home base at Albuquerque and brought it here for the 56th running of the 12.4-mile race to the summit of 14,110-foot Pikes Peak on July 4.

Unser's car skidded off the road about 100 yards from the 11-mile pole that marked the end of a 4-mile course where practice began Thursday. It bounced off pointed boulders before coming to rest against a line of trees.

"The car is destoryed, for all practical purposes," said Unser, who will be out of this year's race after racing in the last two hill climbs.

Unser said he managed to shut off the fuel line and ignition and pulled in his head as the sprinter bounced down the slope. "I always wondered what it would be like," he said.

"It's all a part of learning," his father said after the crash. "I know he feels bad. He was just going too fast."

ON THE ROCKS—Bobby Unser Jr., remains in his car Thursday, after it had crashed while making a turn during the Pikes Peak Hill Climb. Unser lost control of the car, and it went over the side of a steep, rock-filled hill. Unser was unhurt, though, except for a slight limp. The car, however, was put out of the July 4 race. ROSTER CHANGES

CLEVELAND (AP) — The Cleveland Indians have made room for newly acquired pitcher Paul Reushel by cutting veteran hurler Al Fitzmorris from the active roster. Fitzmorris, 32, has a guaranteed contract for about $90,000 a year through 1979.

Racers' Owner Says WHA Can Survive

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — An eventual cease-fire between the warring National Hockey League and World Hockey Association is inevitable, but until that occurs the WHA can exist on its own with as few as six teams, Indianapolis Racers general manager Don LeRose said Thursday.

"Our posture throughout the entire period (of recent merger talks) was that we would be in WHA," said LeRose, whose team was not among the four WHA franchises reportedly to be included in the NHL this year.

"Of course, Nelson (Skalbania, the Racers' owner) stated that emphatically when he was here for the signing of Wayne Gretzky. He had no interest in talking with the NHL because their price of admission was too expensive."

Gretzky, 17, regarded as the top junior player in Canada, was signed earlier this month by Skalbania to a reported seven-year, $1.75 million contract. The Racers still must name a new coach to replace Bill Goldsworthy.

The failure of the two leagues to reach agreement on a merger for the second straight year means Indianapolis "will have hockey," LeRose said. "They'll have the WHA as long as the WHA stays viable. And I feel the WHA can stay viable even as a six-team league. The NHL did it for 30 years as a six-team league."

LeRose said speculation whether Indianapolis would seek an NHL franchise next year is "a litle premature. Nelson would base his decision on Indianapolis on the revenues we could generate this season. To be in the NHL, or in our league, you should be generating revenues in excess of $4 million at the gate."

"To do that, you're talking 8,000 to 10,000 season tickets. Absolutely. You're also talking about an average audience of 12,000 or better. And to get the people in here, we also have to have a competitive team. Nelson doesnt duck that issue. Gretzky was one step in the right direction."

With skyrocketing salaries and ticket prices, the two leagues "just can't keep going like this," LeRose said. "It just doesnt make sense. Both hockey and basketball are in same boat. They have franchises that just can't compete in the market they're in."

LeRose said Racer ticket sales for the upcoming season are just over 3,000 now, but "we've had absolutely no action in the last 10 days. When these merger talks started, everything just stopped. Our goal is at least 6,000."

"We're using all types of media to promote ticket sales," LeRose said. "We'll have Gretzky back here, making numerous appearances. And we hope also to announce a coach within a reasonable amount of days."

Speculation at the NHL board of governors' meeting in Detroit earlier this week was that Edmonton, Winnipeg, Quebec and New England of the WHA would go into the NHL for $2 million each, plus $2 million indemnification to each of the other for WHA teams—Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Birmingham and Houston.

Skalbania told the Indianapolis News in a telephone interview Thursday that he was responsible for holding up the merger.

"They asked about indemnification for Indianapolis and I said I didn't want dollars. I wanted an NHL franchise," Skalbania said.

"I said, 'Give me an NHL franchise for $1.' That's all I would pay, because that's only what it's worth. So there's no merger. You're going to have hockey in the WHA in Indianapolis—period."

Gilliam Returns To Pro Football In Minor Loop

NEW KENSINGTON, Pa. (AP) — The last time Joe Gilliam suited up as a pro for a regular-season football game he wore black and gold for the Pittsburgh Steelers in 1975.

That was in Superbowl X.

Saturday night Gilliam will don a blue and red uniform and a silver helmet to quarterback the Pittsburgh Wolf Pak against the visiting Northeast Stars in the Atlantic Coast Conference season opener.

Gilliam's return will be in a minor-league game at Valley High Stadium in this southwestern Pennsylvania mill town.

"We fell it's going to be a test," said Joe Dominick, coach of the Scranton-based Stars.

Indeed. Gilliam was recently placed on probation after pleading guilty to carrying a weapon and possession of marijuana, charges that stemmed from his three-year bout with drugs and police.

But that's only half the test. His teammates expect the opposition will want to measure themselves against the former NFL starter.

"They're going to want to get him, knock him on his rear, make a name for themselves," said Wolf Pak middle linebacker Tim Bentley.

Dominick, however, says his players are motivated by professional instincts, not animal instincts.

"I haven't heard anybody say anything derogatory about Joe.

"Our players are pretty excited about the fact that they're going to have the pleasure to play against Joe. They want to see how well they can do against him.

"We don't know much about Pittsburgh," said Dominick. "But we know a player of his caliber and experience will be throwing.

"The only preparation we've made is a lot of conditioning and a lot of practice with our backs."

The Stars will need the practice if Gilliam's coach is right.

"He's throwing the ball real well, just like he used to," said Wolf Pak Coach Terry Henne.

Gilliam's best year with the Steelers was 1974, when he won the starting job and set two passing records, while leding the team to a 4-1-1 start.

"We've had him ona weight-building program and he's up to 187 pounds. He telis me he feels even quicker and stronger than he did when he played for the Steelers."

The Stars have won division titles the last three years, taking a playoff berth last season.

The Wolf Pak, on the other hand, will be playing its first game since it was formed by a merger of the Pittsburgh Ironmen and the Allegheny-Kiski Stars.

The team figures Gilliam will be an edge in the newly formed Atlantic Coast Conference, but how long a good thing lasts may depend on the NFL scouts reportedly coming to Saturday night's game.

"I'm predicting Joe won't finish the year with us," said Henne. That's okay though. Maybe he can get us some free NFL game tickets."

Kingman Tries New Style

CHICAGO (AP) — Looking at Dave Kingman trying to hit to right field is as weird as suddenly realizing you're driving the wrong way on a one-way street.

But the lanky Chicago Cub slugger says, somewhat petulantly, that's the way it's going to be.

The Cubs certainly didn't hire Kingman as a $200,000-a-year free agent to hit singles to right field but Kingman says he's been criticized by someone in the organization for not going to right field.

"Don't try to find out who told me," Kingman said. "That's all I'm going to say about it. But it's permanent. I'm going to do it all year ... forever."

That's somewhat of a turnaround for Kingman who, before the Cubs embarked on a recent road trip, said "I just keep going up there to do what I can. I'll always be the same. I might strike out two or three times and then hit a home run. That's the way it's been for seven years and I don't see it changing."

So why the change with Kingman hitting to right quite successfully against shifting defenses?

Nobody seems to know.

"I haven't said anything to him," said Manager Herman Franks. "He does what he wants to do. I've always said that he's never reached his potential."

Could it be Bob Kennedy, the general manager who last summer said he'd never take Kingman in the free agent draft and then did an about face and signed him?

"I don't care what field he hits to as long as he hits and we win," Kennedy said. "I think Herman and the coaches talked to him about it. But the intent wasn't for him to go to right field on every pitch. There's a time to go for a single and a time to swing natural."

Or maybe it was Lew Fonseca, the Cubs' highly regarded batting instructor.

"I'd never change his swing," said Fonseca. "I've told him on occasion to take a shot to right but I also told him I wasn't going to take his home run swing away from him."

So far as home runs and runs batted in go, Kingman has had his share.

Sweetan-DiBiase Bout Tops Card

Bruiser Bob Sweetan will take on Ted DiBiase in the main bout on the weekly wrestling card at Fair Park Coliseum tonight. The program will begin at 8:30 p.m.

In a no-disqualification match, Mr. Pogo will face Super Destroyer.

Adrian Adonis will wrestle Larry Lane in a $5,000 golden challenge match.

A tag-team battle will send Noah Jones and Scott Casey against Dennis Stamp and Roger Kirby. The opening match of the card will pit Rip Hawk and Ted Heath.

Extra Inning Too Much For Texas

By The Associated Press

Mitchell Page's sacrifice fly scored pinch-runner Dell Alston with the winning run in the 10th inning as the Oakland A's edged the Texas Rangers 8-7.

Jeff Newman opened the 10th with a triple to right-center field and was replaced by pinch-runner Miguel Dilone. Texas pitcher Paul Lindblad, 1-1, then walked Tony Armas and Glenn Burke intentionally to load the bases.

Tito Fuentes forced Dilone at the plate for the first out and Alston ran for Armas. Page then hit a line drive to right, which was caught by Bobby Bonds, who couldn't throw out Page at the plate.

Dave Heaverlo, who held the Rangers to one hit in the final three innings, picked up his third victory in six decisions.

The A's trailed 6-3 in the third inning but scored four unearned runs off Ferguson Jenkins in the fourth.

Joe Wallis homered in the first inning and doubled home a run in the fourth. An error by Bobby Bonds and another by Mike Hargrove made all four Oakland runs in the inning unearned.

Texas tied the score in the eighth on a leadoff double by Bobby Thompson, a single by pinch hitter John Ellis and a bunt single by Bert Campeneris.

The Rangers took advantage of the wildness of Oakland's 18-year-old rookie pitcher, Tim Conroy, to score five runs in the first two innings. Conroy walked leadoff man Hargrove and Campaneris sacrificed.

Conroy threw the ball into right field on the sacrifice to put runners on second and third. Bump Wills scored Hargrove with a sacrifice fly and then an error on catcher Newman allowed Campaneris to score.

Conroy walked three more batters in the second inning, when Texas scored three more runs. Thompson drove in one run with a single, another scored on a wild pitch by Conroy and the other on a throwing error by relief pitcher Steve McCatty.

The A's scored when Wallis homered in the first and singles by Mario Guerrero, Newman, Armas and Fuentes accounted for two more runs in the second inning.

RED SOX 4, ORIOLES 3

Consecutive home runs by George Scott and Dwight Evans with one out in the ninth inning gave the Boston Red Sox a 4-3 come-from-behind victory over the Baltimore Orioles.

It was the eighth straight loss for the Orioles.

Baltimore hurler Dennis Martinez stifled Boston's big bats on three hits until the ninth. After shortstop Mark Belanger made a spectacular play to rob Carlton Fisk of a hit, Fred Lynn got his second single of the night and Scott lashed his sixth homer, a drive into the seats down the right field line, to tie the score.

Evans followed with his 16th homer of the season for the winning run.

INDIANS 6, TIGERS 3

Hot-hitting Gary Alexander smashed a three-run homer and Andy Thornton delivered an eighth-inning RBI single to power the Cleveland Indians to victory over the Detroit Tigers.

Thornton's hit, which drove in Paul Dade to break a 3-3 tie, gave relief picher Jim Kern, 6-3, the victory. Jack Morris, 1-3, had retired 13 straight Indians before walking Dade with one out in the eighth. Johnny Grubb also walked and Thornton followed with his single.

Rick Manning then delivered an RBI single off Steve Foucault, who walked Ted Cox and Jim Norris to force in Cleveland's final run.

Alexander, aquired from Oakland on June 15th, has now hit 15 home runs, five in the past nine games. He has 17 RBI over that span.

His third-inning shot over the 395 foot sign, followed walks to Dade and Thornton and wiped out Detroit's 2-0 lead.

ASTROS 5, REDS 0

Floyd Bannister fired a four-hitter and Jose Cruz and Jesus Alou each drove in two runs as the Houston Astros notched their second straight shutout over the Cincinnati Reds with a 5-0 decision.

Bannister, 3-3, surrendered first-inning doubles to Pete Rose and Ken Griffey, but allowed two hits over the final eight innings in gaining his second shutout of the year.

Rose led off the first with a double and took third on Griffey's double, which skimmed off the top of Astro shortstop Mike Fischlin's glove into shallow left field. Bannister, however, retired Joe Morgan on a foul pop before striking out George Foster and Dave Concepcion to end the Reds' biggest threat of the game.

PIRATES 4, METS 3

Pinch-hitter Rennie Stennett drove in the winning run with a bloop triple in the eighth inning to give the Pittsburgh Pirates a victory over the New York Mets Thursday.

With the score tied 3-3 going into the Pirate eighth, Phil Garner singled off loser Skip Lockwood, 7-6, and was sacrificed to second by Mario Mendoza.

Stennett, still hobbled by an ankle fracture he suffered last season, then blooped his winning triple down the right field line.

DODGERS 7, BRAVES 3

Right-hander Don Sutton capped a five-run first inning with a two-run single and set a Los Angeles career strikeout record, leading the Dodgers to a triumph over the Atlanta Braves.

Sutton, 8-6, gave up hits to the first two Braves he faced, but then fanned Gary Matthews for his 2,284th career strikeout, surpassing Don Drysdale's previous record for the Dodgers since they moved to Los Angeles in 1958. Sutton finished with four more strikeouts for the night to put his career mark at 2,288.

PHILLIES 9, CUBS 3

Jose Cardenal's three-run double in the first inning, Bob Boone's two-run double in the eighth and Greg Luzinski's three-run homer led the Philadelphia Phillies to victory over the Chicago Cubs.

The triumph gave the Phillies a three-game lead over the second place Cubs in the National League East.

Jim Kaat, who has defeated the Cubs three times this season, pitched six innings to boost his record to 5-1. Ron Reid pitched the seventh, then Tug McGraw finished up for the Phillies. Dave Roberts, 3-3, took the loss.

Enthusiasm Grows At Wimbledon

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Richard Holt, a member of the Wimbledon tennis championships committee, looked out on the milling crowds and said: "By next year we hope things will be better for them."

Enthusiasm for the world's most famous tennis event has boiled over this year. A total of 101,789 people squeezed into the grounds of the All-England club in the first three days of this year's tournament.

By mid-afternoon Thursday, when rain held up play and people just stood around and waited, 27,000 had come through the gates.

Thousands push and crane to get a glimpse of the top stars on the outer courts. Thousands more just stand and look at the big scoreboard or line up outside dressing room entrances to see the players go in and out.

Every day some 20,000 people get seats on the center and No. 1 courts. They bought tickets five months ago.

"It gives us a lot of problems, but it shows a wonderful interest in tennis in this country, particularly among the young, and that is very healthy," Holt said.

By next year the club plans to have raised the top of the center court to make room for 2,000 more seats. That means an extra 12,000 fans will get seats during the two-week tournament.

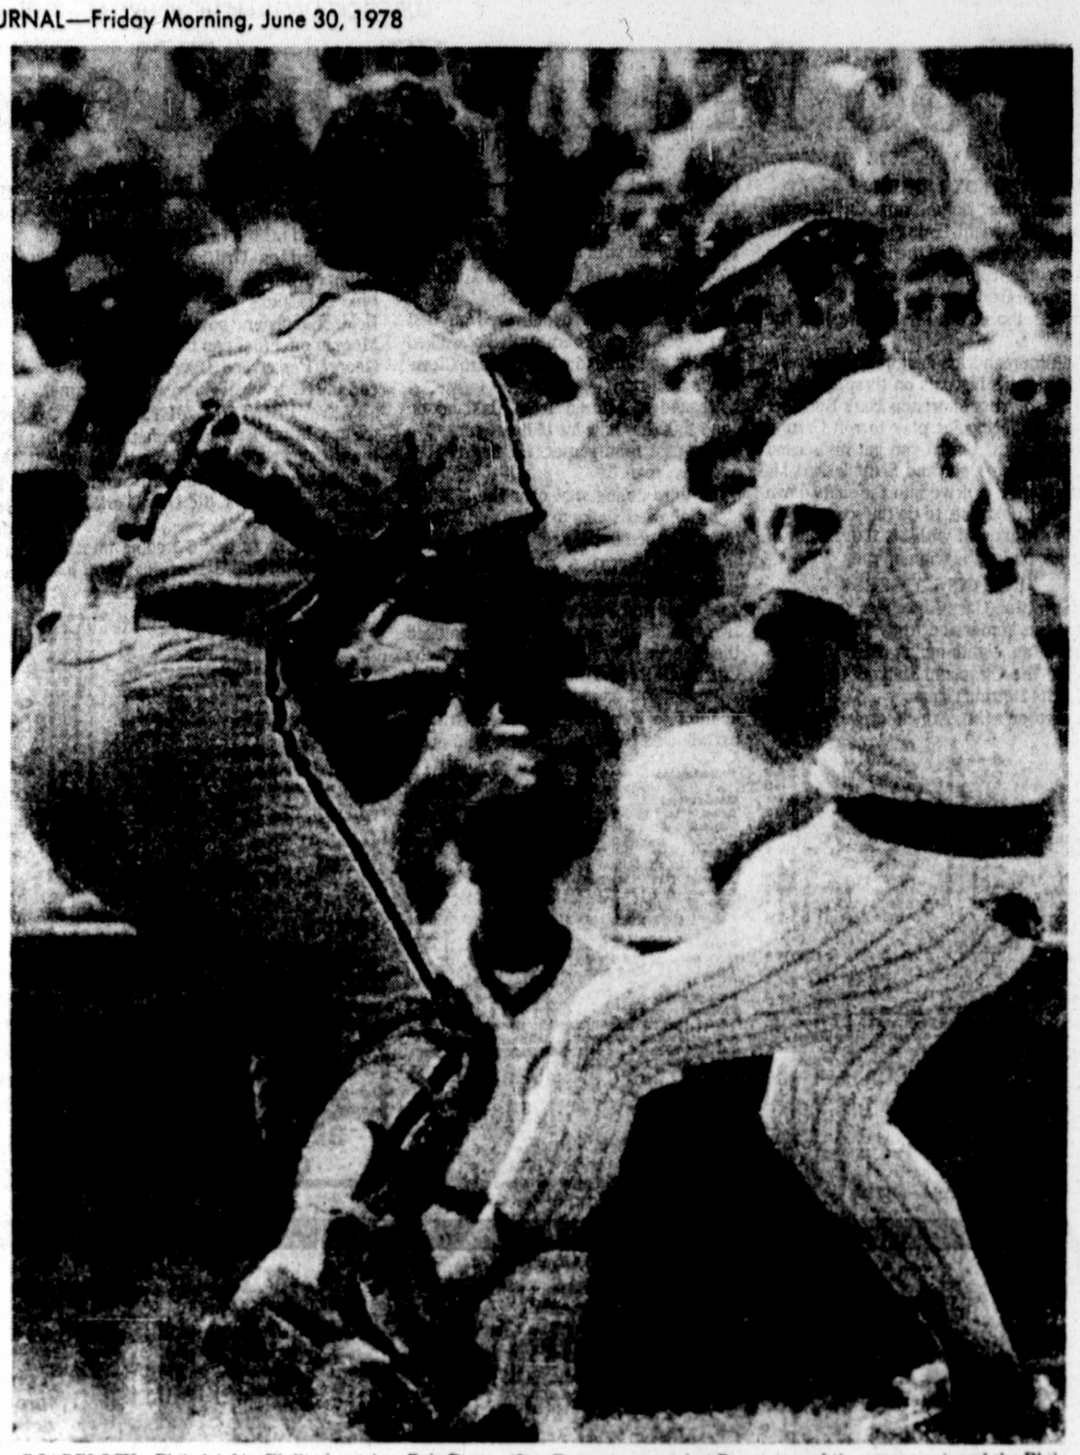

Four new courts are being laid at the back of the center court on land used previously as a parking area.

"We hope this will have the effect of splitting the crowds a bit," Holt said. There are 14 outer courts in use now.

The club has failed to find ways to ease the crush between the outer courts. Fans squeeze through the packed alleys to get from one court to another — and often can't see anything when they get there.

"We have thought of a one-way traffic system," Holt said. "People would be allowed to walk one way in one aisle and another way in the next aisle. But we have never put it into practice, for good reasons.

"Part of the pleasure of coming to Wimbledon is that you can stand for 20 minutes at one court and watch tennis, and then move on somewhere else. Thousands do that every day."

ROADBLOCK—Philadelphia Phillies' catcher Bob Boone (8) provides a formidable obstacle for the Chicago Cubs' Larry Biittner Thursday afternoon. Biittner was trying to get around Boone to score, but Boone tagged the runner out, and the Phillies went on to take a 9-3 triumph. (AP Laserphoto)

McPhail Raps Steinbrenner

NEW YORK (AP) — Lee MacPhail, president of the American League, took exception Thursday to George Steinbrenner's remarks that placed some of the blame on the AL schedule-maker for the New York Yankees' doubleheader loss at Milwaukee Wednesday night.

Incensed at the Yankees' losses, the controversial clubowner went into the press box after the game and blamed the setbacks on the veteran players "who did not hit," and on the AL leadership for the kind of schedule that "has us playing a crucial game with the Red Sox one night and a doubleheader in Milwaukee in the next."

MacPhail issued a statement which said, "I read Mr. Steinbrenner's statement attributing the loss of two games in Milwaukee to the American League schedule maker. The 1978 schedule made up by the league and originally submitted to the Yankees had open dates for New York for June 28 and 29."

"The twi-night doubleheader scheduled in Milwaukee on June 28 was arranged by the two teams with league concurrence by changing games previously scheduled for other dates."

During his press box tirade, Steinbrenner said, "The reason we are 10 down to Boston in the loss column today is because of the American League leadership and the ridiculous schedule that forces us to play a crucial game with the Red Sox in New York one night and a doubleheader here the next night."

"They have men making up the schedule who are not competent. I mean Bob Holbrook and that kind. The crux of the baseball problem today is the schedule. People making it up are not capable."

The Yankee owner also called on Commissioner Bowie Kuhn to "remedy the situation." Kuhn was Steinbrenner's companion Wednesday night in Milwaukee Brewers owner Bud Selig's box.

"The commissioner has to get involved," Steinbrenner said. "The American League is not capable of handling the schedule. The commissioner is. Something has to be done. You think the schedule in bad? Next year's is worse."

The third-place Yanks lost 5-0 and 7-2 to Milwaukee, dropping 9½ games behind Boston, the AL East leader, and a game behind the second-place Brewers.

Steinbrenner became angry after the second game started when he learned that third baseman Graig Nettles was being rested and rookies Brian Doyle, Mike Heath and Damasco Garcia were in the lineup.

He put in a call to the dugout and Manager Billy Martin reported that Nettles was "exhausted." Steinbrenner said, "I'm going to have to look into that. That's not like Nettles. He never wants out. He plays hurt." Nettles was hitless in four at-bats in the first game. Doyle was 1-for-3 with a run scored in the second game.

"The reason we lost tonight was not because of the kids in our lineup. It was because of (Reggie) Jackson and (Paul) Blair and (Lou) Piniella and (Cliff) Johnson and Nettles. Jackson bats cleanup and he goes 0-for-7. I'm proud of the way our kids played. It was the regulars who let us down."

Aquatic Meet Begins Today

SANTA CLARA, Calif. (AP) — Two-thirds of the finalists at the AAU National Swimming Championships in April were from California, and nearly all of them will be competing here in the 12th annual Santa Clara International Swimming and Diving meet opening today.

While fewer foreign countries are represented than in some past meets, the 21 Japanese national team members are on hand; New Zealand's team for the British Commonwealth Games has come from its training base in Iowa, and Netherlands stars Enitha Brigith and Anna-Lise Maas are back.

The 400-meter freestyle race is the first event of the three-day meet, and Maas won the women's event last year, along with the 200 freestyle.

The swimmers will be tuning up for the National AAU meet in Texas and the World Championships in West Berlin in August.

"They know this is one place to get the competition," said meet director Earl Jezek.

Californian men swim stars entered include Mike Bruner, Joe Bottom, John Hencken, Brian Goodell, Tim Shaw, and Peter Rocca. Jack Babashoff of Alabama and Jim Montgomery of Indiana also will compete.

Top California talent listed for the women's events includes are Jill Sterkel, Tauna Vanderweghe, Alice Brown, Jennifer Hooker, Jesse Vasallo and Sue Hinderacker.

Tracy Caulkins, 15, of Nashville, Tenn., who won six events and broke the American record in the 200-meter breaststroke last week at Mission Viejo, Calif., is one the major absentee.

Olympic veteran Linda Jezek, the meet director's daughter, is the meet director, will seek to improve on the 2:15.32 she posted last week in the 200-meter backstroke at Mission Viejo — the fastest time in the world this year.

Missing will be Tracy Caulkins, 15, of Nashville, Tenn., who won six events at the Mission Viejo meet.

The Japanese are expected to make their strongest showing in Friday's 200-meter breaststroke where high school student Shigehiro Takahashi goes against Santa Clara's Hencken. In the women's

Tempers Boil At Royal Regatta

HENLEY-ON-THAMES, England (AP) — The U.S. Coast Guard Academy, the first American military academy to send a crew to the Henley Royal Regatta, was at the center of a disqualification controversy Thursday on rain-soaked opening day.

Racing in the pouring rain, the cadets crossed the finish line more than one-half length behind their opponents, a London University eight racing as the Tyrian Boat Club.

But, unknown to their American supporters waiting in the enclosures, race umpire Peter Coni, also regatta chairman, had already disqualified the English boat with the red flag after repeatedly warning them against crossing into the Coast Guard lane, at one point clashing oars.

The English crew protested the decision without success.

The Coast Guardsmen, one of only four seeded crews among the 32 boats in the Ladies' Challenge Plate for heavyweight eights, said they had not rowed their best. "We didn't row well at all," said their cox, Ed Merkle. "Maybe we tensed up because we felt we had to win our first race at Henley."

Otto Graham, the former Cleveland Browns pro football star now Coast Guard athletic director, said of the incident: "When a field goal hits the upright and bounces over, it counts just the same. We'll take it, we'll take it."

With action in Henley's most-prized event, the Grand Challenge Cup, starting Friday and the three American entries rowing on Saturday, the first day's rowing centered on the Ladies' Plate and the Thames Challenge Cup for eights.

The ducks may have liked the relentless downpour on the River Thames course, with umbrellas and raincoats taking over from Henley's traditional sleeveless dresses and straw boaters, but it also proved a good day for American crews.

There were eight wins for the eight-man boats and only two losses.

In an all-American clash in the Ladies' Plate, Florida Institute of Technology scored a 2¾-length win over the Harvard University junior varsity lightweights. FIT now meets a Syracuse University junior varsity crew which easily beat Newcastle University of England.

Yale University's freshmen rowed to an easy win over Selwyn College of Cambridge University, and the varsity heavyweights from Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., finished 21-3 lengths ahead of England's Exeter University.

Trinity won the Ladies' Plate here in 1976.

In the Thames Cup, a junior varsity heavyweight crew from the University of Washington, lost to the Neptune Rowing Club, the same Irishmen who beat them last weekend at the Nottingham, England, regatta.

The Irish pulled through the stronger at the end of Henley's gruelling, 1-mile, 550-yard course, winners by one length in the best official time of the day, 6 minutes 59 seconds.

U.S. winners in the Thames Cup were Potomac Boat Club of Washington, boasting three former Olympic oarsmen including 44-year-old Tom Charlton. They beat Aberdeen University easily.

Northeastern University's freshmen had a 31-3-length margin over Norwich Rowing Club of England, and Hartford's Trinity College varsity lightweights finished 2¾ lengths ahead of Crowland Rowing Club of England.

Rockies' Owner To Sell Club To New Jerseyite

DENVER (AP) — The majority owner of the Colorado Rockies has reached agreement to sell the National Hockey League franchise to a New Jersey trucking company operator for $5 million, the Denver Post reported Thursday in a copyright story.

Arthur Imperatore hopes to move the team east and split its home schedule between New York's Madison Square Garden and the Philadelphia Spectrum for two seasons until the 21,000-seat Meadowlands Arena in East Rutherford, N.J., is completed, the Post said.

The Post report was attributed to sources in New Jersey and an attorney close to the situation.

Any move of the franchise would have to be approved by the NHL board of governors. The team, formerly in Kansas City, has been in Denver for two years.

Jack Vickers, the Denver oil man who owns 58 percent of the Rockies, could not be reached for comment on the Post report.

The continued existence of the franchise in Denver has been the subject of debate for several months, as Vickers argued openly with city officials over terms of the team's lease to play in the city-owned McNichols Arena.

Vickers contended he needs more favorable terms to survive, and on May 1 cancelled the lease, claiming the city's final offer was unfair.

The Post reported that Imperatore already has reached agreement with the New York Rangers — current NHL tenants of Madison Square Garden — on the amount of money to be paid the Rangers as territorial indemnification.

Also, the Post said, Imperatore has a tentative lease agreement with Jack Krumpke, executive director of the Meadowlands sports complex.

Imperatore is a graduate of Harvard Law School who teamed with his brother in a very successful private trucking business.

The sale to Imperatore is apparently one of three options being considered by Vickers — staying in Denver, selling to Imperatore or moving the team to Houston.

Ex-Quarterback Kemp Takes Aim At Federal Income Tax

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Jack Kemp is returning to his office from a House vote when a colleague asks him, "Hey Jack, is it true Howard Jarvis is going to be your campaign manager this year?"

"No," chuckles Kemp. He has a lot in common with Jarvis, who fought to slash California property taxes by $7 billion with Proposition 13. But Kemp is after bigger game — the federal income tax.

Kemp, a Republican from Buffalo, N.Y., is co-sponsor of a bill which would slice the personal income tax rate by 30 percent over three years and lower corporate taxes. It wasn't given much chance of succeeding when it was introduced last summer. But it's gaining in popularity now as more and more Congressmen find that their consituents are angry — very angry — about the amount of taxes they're paying.

"People in Buffalo tell me, 'Congressman, I feel like I'm only working to pay my taxes,'" says Kemp, adding that he finds people aren't happy with what's done with that money after they pay it. "People don't get the sense government is working. They don't feel they get a dollar of service for a dollar of tax.

Kemp's involvement in the tax-reduction debate can't hurt his political future. He's said he'd like to be a senator, and he reportedly has ambitions for even higher office.

Right now, though, he's quarterbacking the Kemp-Roth bill, and quarterbacking is something he's had a lot of success with in the past.

Kemp was an all-pro at that position for several years in the National and American Football Leagues, mostly for the Buffalo Bills. He was the AFL's most valuable player in 1965.

He says the experience prepared him for his new role as tax reformer.

"As a quarterback, you've only got three seconds to make a decision. In that time, you don't learn much about economics, but you learn an awful lot about incentive."

Incentive. That's the key word Kemp uses in describing his tax proposal.

"It's oppressive to take away people's incentive," he says. So he's proposing to give it back by cutting taxes so workers can take home more money — and will want to increase their productivity to take advantage of the windfall.

"Instead of high taxes and lower production, what I want is lower taxes and higher production," says Kemp. "You have to reward effort — if you don't have the reward, you don't get the effort."

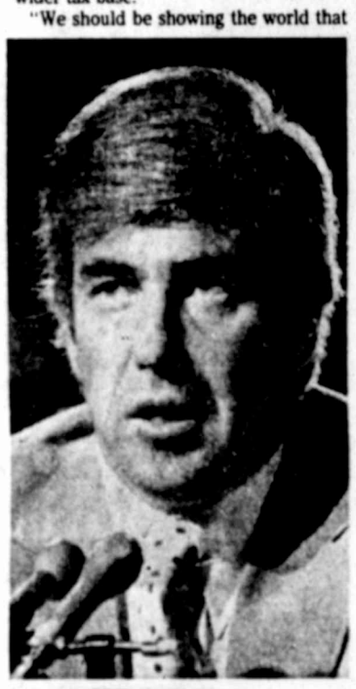

"You want to find that point of equilibrium where people want to expand their output and still pay taxes."

Proposition 13 has caused cutbacks in many government services in California because the new law costs cities and towns about half their property-tax revenues. Kemp says that won't happen with his plan because he doesn't propose to cut spending.

Instead, he believs the push given the economy by his plan will more than make up for the cut in the tax rate by expanding the tax base through a corresponding increase in production.

"I don't want to reduce fire and police services, or public road and sewer programs," Kemp says. "I want to provide a wider tax base."

"We should be showing the world that the answer to inflation is to lower taxes and increase production," he adds. "If you keep the supply of money constant and you double the production of the economy, you're not going to have inflation."

REP. JACK KEMP

Kemp addresses the problem with near-missionary zeal, dropping names of economists the way most Washington officials drop the names of politicians.

"I love economics, and I get it at the street level," he says. "I wasn't an economics major, I was a P.E. major."

So he read a lot. And talked to a lot of people. And eventually came up with a plan based on the thinking of a number of young economists.

"Young economists know where it's at," he says. "The older ones are too set in their ways."

Kemp feels the economics philosophy of John Maynard Keynes, the British economist whose theories are the basis for the U.S. tax structure, "does not take into consideration the disincentive of higher and higher taxes.

"Actually, if Keynes were here today, he'd support the Kemp-Roth bill and he'd realize things have changed."

If Kemp can get his tax rate reduction through Congress, he wants to try for another cut. "I want to get taxes down to 25 percent at the top and five percent at the bottom."

And although some economists say a large-scale tax cut will only benefit a small number of people, Kemp says, "I cannot understand this idea that lowering the tax rates across the board will help one group of people — it will help all people."

His plan bears a striking resemblance to one set in motion over a decade ago by another young politicion from the Northeast — John F. Kennedy. Kemp admits to being inspired by Kennedy's tax cut, and quotes one of the metaphors the late president used in justifying the earlier plan:

"A rising tide lifts all boats."

Kemp, however, rejects a suggestion that the scheme is not in keeping with his reputation as a conservative Republican. The plan, according to Kemp, is in keeping with traditional ideals, of which he says the GOP recently has lost sight.

"The Republican party got off the track — this plan is traditional with Lincoln and Mellon and Taft and other great Republicans," he says. "Robert Taft introduced a 30 percent reduction in tax rates, but it got bottled up."

Kemp actually isn't so sure the idea deserves any kind of normal categorizing.

"It isn't rigidly partisan — it's not dogmatic conservativism or Keynesian liberalism," he says. "It's the way the world works."

Order By Carter Hikes 'Government Openness'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Saying Uncle Sam keeps too many secrets, President Carter announced Thursday an executive order he said "will increase openness in government" by tightening ground rules for classifying documents.

In a statement issued by the White House heralding his action, Carter said:

"While some material must be classified, the government classifies too much information, classifies it too highly, and for too long. These practices violate the public's right to know, impose unnecessary costs and weaken protection for truly sensitive information by undermining respect for all classification."

Carter's order strips 11 agencies, including the Departments of Agriculture, Labor, and Health, Education and Welfare, of all authority to classify information. Five others will have reduced authority.

The order also is intended to grant classification authority to fewer officials and sets quicker timetables for the automatic declassification of most documents.

Under the new rules, information can be classified only if its release can reasonably be expected to result in identifiable damage to national security. The addition of "identifiable" to the criteria is intended to prevent classification where damage would be insignificant.

In addition, the new order requires that most documents be classified section-by-section rather than as a whole.

Another part of the order specifies that most documents will be declassified after six years, instead of six to 10 years.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

It's Time To Say Goodbye

It has been a little more than 22 years since I began writing about personal investing in this space. It's now time to say goodbye and to move on to efforts in other, related areas: more books and magazine articles (it's been years since they first appeared), some teaching...as well as devoting more effort to becoming a better fiddler and a better sailor. (I don't expect either of the latter pursuits to cause any drastic changes in the schedules at Carnegie Hall or in the America's Cup contests.)

Fortunately, an old colleague and friendly competitor stands ready to take over this space. He is Bill Doyle, who has been "financial newspapering" for years and is now business editor of the Star-Ledger of Newark, N.J.

He takes up this task with my fondest best wishes. My final column will appear tomorrow and Bill will take over the reins Monday.

• • •

It would be an understatement of classic proportion merely to mention that there have been a lot of investment changes since the spring of 1956 — changes in stock market philosophy, in securities prices, in yields, in ratings, plus — above all — the increasingly forceful realization that inflation has become not only more virulent but has, in fact, settled in as a way of life.

But it's also fair to say that while the investment climate has undergone many changes, the basic and personal procedures for approaching the problem remain the same. And so, in this valedictory column, it seems fitting to again present some of the "truths" which have been suggested here (with very little variation, I admit) for the last 22 years.

—There is no investment without risk. If you have an extra dollar to put aside you can't ignore the risk it faces. The U.S. government itself stands behind certain bonds, and U.S. agencies (as well as certain strong state insurance systems) stand behind dollars you keep in certain savings institutions. But no one stands behind the purchasing power of those dollars.

—If you put dollars into equities — stocks, real estate, rare paintings, gold...anything you hope will rise in dollar price — you must be prepared to assume the risk of market price fluctuation in addition to the loss in the dollar's purchasing power. It's very much like fighting a fire with a leaky hose simply because you don't have a better hose.

—The stock market is not your (or anyone else's) personal money making machine. It has its place in the economy, but it does not exist as a fortune-building device.

—"Bargains" are practically nonexistent in Wall Street and certainly are invisible to the naked (nonprofessional) eye. If you spot a bond or a stock yielding 14 percent you can be sure there's a reason — which generally translates to "high risk."

—Tips most often turn out to be traps.

—By definition, there can be no guaranteed predictions of securities profits. Anyone who week after week could pick stocks which promptly doubled in price would own Wall Street in 90 days.

—Common sense is just as valuable on Wall Street as it is on Main and Elm.

—Act your age.

And good luck!

Slain Rhodesian Missionaries, Children Buried

UMTALI, Rhodesia (AP) — Twelve British missionaries and children hacked to death by black raiders were buried here Thursday in a small cemetery at the foot of the Vumba Mountains as prayers of mercy were offered for their killers.

The burials followed an 80-minute service in a municipal hall in this garrison town on the Mozambique border.

Eight oak coffins of the adults and three small white ones of the children, each bearing a single wreath, were lined up at the front of the hall. The youngest victim, three-week-old Pamela Lynn, shared a coffin with her mother.

Only Rachel Evans, 8, standing behind the coffins of her parents and four-year-old sister, sobbed as the local head of the church, the Rev. Ronald Chapman, declared: "They are in a place which is far, far better than this world."

Rachel and her brother Timothy, 10, who were at boarding school in Salisbury when the raiders struck the mission school 10 miles south of here Friday night, burst into tears as Rachel placed a yellow toy owl on the coffin of her sister, Rebecca.

The owl, Rebecca's favorite toy, was found in the ransacked staff quarters at the mission.

Some 500 mourners, mainly whites, heard officials of the Elim Pentacostal Church pray for the nationalist guerillas blamed for the massacre and give thanks to God that the missionaries died in God's service.

There was no evidence of a security force near the cemetery, which is in an area heavily infiltrated by guerillas of Robert Mugabe's Zimbabwe African National Union. Mugabe has denied his guerrillas were responsible for the killings, and blamed black Rhodesian forces for the deaths.

"We do pray God will be merciful to those who perpetrated such an act of shame, that they might know grief and repentence and God's mercy," said Chapman.

The British secretary of the church, the Rev. John Smyth, echoed the theme of the rites, which church officials described as a thanksgiving service.

"For them, their cares are over. They will feel no more the terrors of the night in the mountains of Rhodesia," he said.

Each murdered family was buried together — Phillip and Susan Evans and their daughter Rebecca; Peter and Sandra McCann and their children, Phillip, 6, and Joy, 5; Robert and Joyce Lynn and their baby, and two single missionaries, Catherine Picken, 50 and Elizabeth Hamilton, 37.

A single plea for vengeance came from Umtali's white mayor, Douglas Reed, who expressed misgivings at the prayers for the "inhuman savages" who killed the missionaries in the worst atrocity since guerrilla warfare aimed at toppling the Salisbury government started six years ago.

Only one missionary survived the raid. The 250 students and black teachers were unharmed.

"It is my earnest hope that the perpetrators of this ghastly deed will be speedily brought to justice," he said.

Chapman, referring to statements by the survivors, said the killers "made a very clear declaration that they were Mugabe's boys."

White missionaries have become a prime target in the escalating war. Thirty-four missionaries or their families have been killed since the fighting started, 15 of them in the past month.

Four days after the Elim massacre two West German Roman Catholics were killed at a clinic 90 miles west of Salisbury. Those killings were blamed on the Zimbabwe African people's Union, headed by Joshua Nkomo. Nkomo and Mugabe, whose groups were not included in an internal settlement designed to bring black rule to Rhodesia by the end of this year, have vowed to step up their fight. They form a loose alliance called the Patriotic Front, based primarily in Mozambique and Zambia.

U.S., South Africa In A-Talks

JOHANNESBURG (AP) — U.S. and South African officials concluded private discussions on atomic energy Thursday in Pretoria. A South African official called them "very constructive," but said little more.

There have been unconfirmed reports that South Africa is prepared to sign the nuclear nonproliferation treaty if the United States lifts a ban on contracted shipments of enriched uranium to South Africa.

"All I can say is I think the discussions were very constructive — constructive in the sense that both sides had the opportunity of making clear things that were previously unclear," said A.J.A. Roux, president of the South African atomic energy board.

Roux and Foreign Ministry officials met with the U.S. nuclear ambassador at large, Gerard Smith, an expert on international atomic affairs.

Smith's visit has been shrouded in secrecy. U.S. Embassy officials in Pretoria have refused to discuss his mission.

Roux, speaking in a telephone interview from his Pretoria home, said he could give no details of the talks.

"As you would readily appreciate we have to report to our ministers the results of our discussions and therefore before we have done that I am not in a position to give any indication as to what we have discussed," Roux said.

Asked if there would be further discussions, Roux said it was possible but added: "I doubt it very much."

He said the talks gave each side an opportunity for the first time "to be clear on the standpoints of each of the two parties."

Smith, 68, was expected to return to the United States on Friday to report on the talks.

He is a former head of the U.S. delegation to the strategic arms limitation talks in Helsinki.

The Carter administration blocked shipments of enriched uranium that South Africa has already paid for. The uranium was to be used for experimental purposes.

The official reason is South Africa's failure to sign the nuclear nonproliferation treaty and President Carter's opposition to the spread of nuclear knowhow.

Some South African commentators have speculated the American boycott is intended to pressure South Africa into revealing its secret uranium enrichment process, developed at a pilot plant at Valindaba.

After America's freeze of enriched uranium exports, South Africa said it would expand the Valindaba plant to produce enriched uranium for the country's own needs.

Enriched uranium is used as fuel in nuclear power plants. A French consortium under contract to South Africa is building two lage nuclear power plants outside Cape Town, at Koeberg.

According to South African officials, the uranium enrichment process is the only aspect of the country's advanced nuclear program not under international scrutiny.

But there has been repeated speculation South Africa is developing nuclear weapons.

In August 1977, the Soviet Union raised an international alarm with claims that South Africa was on the verge of exploding a nuclear device in the Kalahari desert.

South Africa denied the claim, which nonetheless prompted concerned messages from the United States and other Western governments.

Two Asked To Quit In India Cabinet Rift

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Prime Minister Morarji Desai has requested the resignations of two cabinet ministers who have criticized delays in prosecuting Indira Gandhi for alleged excesses during India's 1975-77 emergency rule, government officials said Thursday night.

The two are Home Minister Charan Singh and Health and Family Welfare Minister Raj Narain. Their departures would mark the first open rift in the 15-month-old Desai government.

Desai became prime minister in March 1977, after the landslide election defeat of his predecessor, Mrs. Gandhi.

Government officials said the 82-year-old Desai sent letters to Singh and Narain late Thursday, after receiving unanimous support at an emergency cabinet session not attended by the home and health ministers.

Contents of the letters were not officially disclosed. Unofficial sources said Desai told Singh and Narain they had engaged in conduct making it improper for them to continue in the government, and asked them to quit.

In a four-page letter to Singh, Desai objected to the home minister's issuance Wednesday of a strong press statement urging the immediate arrest of Mrs. Gandhi and calling the government "impotent" on the issue, the United News of India reported.

Desai reminded Singh that it was his own ministry's responsibility to initiate action, but it had not done so, UNI said.

The prime minister has favored extreme caution in prosecuting Mrs. Gandhi, preferring to wait until an ironclad legal case is prepared.

A government commission reported in mid-May that as prime minister Mrs. Gandhi had "misused her position ... and subverted ... lawful processes." It said she proclaimed emergency rule in 1975 solely to stay in power.

Desai has promised a decision by August on whether to prosecute.

Singh and Narain, close political allies, did not act immediately on the prime minister's letters, delivered to them late Thursday night.

A close associate quoted Singh, 75, as saying he was fully aware of the possible consequences when he issued his statement calling for action against Mrs. Gandhi.

Narain earlier told reporters he would quit the government "if and when my resignation is demanded."

The 61-year-old health minister also confirmed he had been pressing unsuccessfully in the cabinet for Mrs. Gandhi's arrest.

He told reporters he would even favor jailing her under the hated Maintenance of Internal Security Act, used by Mrs. Gandhi to intern political prisoners during the emergency.

Desai, Singh, Narain and most of the current cabinet were among the thousands jailed. The government is pledged to the act's repeal.

Mrs. Gandhi, 60, should be arrested under the act, Narain said, because "she loved it and is unrepentant about the emergency ... MISA should not be used against those who hated it, but it should be used against those who loved it and used it liberally to detain thousands ...."

Mrs. Gandhi, who is trying for a political comeback, declined comment on the cabinet rift. She has said Desai's government is determined to arrest her eventually, "by hook or by crook."

U.S., Angola Mull 'Normal' Relations

PARIS (AP) — President Agostino Neto of Angola, responding to overtures from the Carter administration, expressed hope Thursday that his Marxist African nation will soon have "friendly or at least normal" relations with the United States.

"We are ready to accept any type of relations provided they are based on the principle of mutual understanding," he said in an interview with the Paris newspaper Le Monde.

A delegation of American diplomats traveled to the Angolan capital of Luanda last week to explore the possibility of improved relations. That trip came one day after Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance said Washington planned to deal with Angola in "more normal ways" in the future.

The United States has no diplomatic ties with the Luanda government, which has been a close Cuban and Soviet ally since Neto's Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola took control of the former Portuguese colony in 1976 after a civil war.

Asked about improved ties with the United States, Neto said, "We hope for it ardently. I don't yet know the results of the American delegation's stay in Luanda. It is a first contact. There will be others at all levels. I hope that pretty soon our relations with the United States will be friendly or at least normal."

Neto admitted that "certain elements" involved in the invasion of Zaire's Shaba province last month left from staging areas inside Angola, but insisted that his government was unaware of the plans.

President Mobutu Sese Seko of Zaire has charged that Angolan and Cuban officers trained the Zaire rebels and backed their invasion as part of a Soviet-inspired effort to destabilize pro-Western regimes in Africa.

This interpretation of the invasion has been endorsed, in varying degrees, by Presidents Carter and Valery Giscard d'Estaing of France.

Neto said his good relations with Moscow and Havana do not mean he is controlled by them.

"The United States probably thinks the presence of Cuban troops in Angola, our friendship with the Soviet Union and our option for scientific socialism reduce the power of our officials and limit the independence of our people," he said. "Nothing could be more false. We depend on neither Havana nor Moscow."

Cuban troops helped Neto's guerrillas defeat two Western-backed insurgent factions in the civil war. About 20,000 Cuban soldiers remain in Angola, according to U.S. estimates.

Break In SALT Impasse Sought

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Cyrus Vance will try to break the deadlock in weapons limitation talks with the Soviet Union at a mid-July meeting in Geneva with Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko.

The July 12-13 session, disclosed Thursday by U.S. sources here, could be pivotal to completing a treaty that would be signed by President Carter and Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev by the end of the year.

The strategic arms limitation treaty (SALT negotiations have bogged down along with a general decline in U.S.-Soviet relations in recent weeks. Key unsettled treaty issues include U.S. efforts to keep the Russians from building new intercontinental ballistic missile systems and limiting development of their Backfire bomber.

Earlier this week, Carter seemed to signal an upward turn in dealings with Moscow. At a nationally broadcast news conference on Monday, he dismissed disagreements on various world fronts as "temporary disharmonies" and said he felt "quite at ease" about the overall relationship between the United States and Russia.

Still, prospects for wrapping up the treaty promptly are not considered bright.

In an interview on Wednesday with Voice of America, Paul C. Warnke, the chief U.S. arms negotiator, said he now expects completion of the pact by the end of the year. Warnke once predicted an agreement by fall.

Carter has been even more optimistic. Last October, in a speech in Des Moines, Iowa, he said the outline of a treaty that would be "the pride of the country" would be at hand within weeks.

If a treaty is not ready by the time Congress adjourns in the fall, the Senate would not have to act on ratification by election time. This would spare those running for office from having to consider the political impact of their votes on the agreement.

Vance will go on from the Geneva meeting with Gromyko to join Carter at an economic summit meeting in Bonn, West Germany, with leaders from West Europe and Japan.

After the summit, Vance may meet in London with foreign ministers Mohamed Kamel of Egypt and Moshe Dayan of Israel. Final arrangements are still incomplete.

That session is designed to revive stalled Middle East peace negotiations.

The last round of U.S.-Soviet arms talks failed to clear the major obstacles to agreement on a new treaty despite Carter's direct intervention in the talks with Gromyko. A dispute over Soviet activity in Africa clouded the discussions.

The last major Soviet offer was a surprise proposal to ban the testing and deployment of all new missile systems for the life of the treaty — until 1985.

The United States rejected it, mainly because the proposal would sidetrack development of the American MX mobile land-based missile.

Ford Says Soviets Seek Africa Control

THE WOODLANDS, Texas (AP)—Former President Gerald Ford said Thursday the Soviet Union is engaged in an undeclared war and that Africa is to be the battleground.

Ford, speaking to a group of South African businessmen meeting at this resort area on the outskirts of Houston, said the Russians want to control all of Africa, from the nations on the Atlantic Ocean to the Indian Ocean.

He warned that the African problem will "grow larger and larger in the years ahead and it is time we face that fact."

The former president appeared at a conference that was closed to the public and the press.

Newsmen were ordered to clear the area and take no notes nor use tape recorders.

Ford was heard to say, however, that the Soviet Union "wants all of Africa. It is their principal target. They will take over every nation if given the opportunity.

"I don't think the thousands of Cubans and the Soviet aides in Africa indicate that there is no interest in that continent. It appears our president and our secretary of state are trying to play both sides and that is not the way."

Ford told the South African and American businessmen that the Carter administration had junked the B-1 bomber program and extended the use of B-52s.

"And that means by the year 1985, we will be asking young U.S. pilots to fly airplanes that are older than they are."

The former president added:

"The administration also has cut our naval building contracts. All of this will have an effect on our ability to be a power in the future. I believe the United States must be strong militarily; we must strengthen our economic system, and we must ease the heavy burden of taxation.

"I have traveled this nation and our people are strong, hard-working, with a deep concern for our nation."

Ford was asked if he would consider making another run for the presidency.

He answered:

"I am healthy, I am active, and I do not like what I see in this nation. I must admit Betty and I enjoy retirement and I would recommend that President Carter try it as soon as possible."

U.S.-Soviet Relations Cordial, Solon Reports

WASHINGTON (AP) — Relations between the United States and the Soviet Union "are much better than the public imagines," Rep. Paul Simon, D-Ill., said Thursday.

Simon, back from five weeks as part of the seven-member U.S. delegation to the United Nations disarmament conference, said he found relations between the Americans and Soviets at the talks were cordial despite current tensions over Africa.

"In fact, most of the time the United States and the Soviet Union were on the same side," Simon said. He said that was true in part because the two powers share some of the same views on arms reduction.

"Some of the non-aligned countries are just not realistic about the complications involved" in arms reduction, he said.

Simon said no dramatic breakthroughs in arms reduction would result from the talks.

"You can't view it in terms of dramatic alternatives," he said. "You can't say that it's either going to be a success or a failure. But this is the first time the nations of the world have gotten together to talk about disarmament in 18 years."

Simon said that there was a tendency among the countries to send members of legislative bodies as delegates, "probably because they need that legislative support — that's why the State Department does it." He said that, as a member of the House Budget Committee, he would try to exert influence on Congress toward arms reduction.

He said he had dinner sessions with delegates from the communist nations of Vietnam, Laos and the Soviet Union, as well as those from such western countries as Canada, Britain, Sweden and Denmark.

Misplaced Toes Irk Massachusetts Man

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — A Springfield man whose three severed toes were packed in ice and sent to one hospital while he was taken to another after a power lawnmower accident has complained to authorities.

"You shouldn't send a man's toes to one hospital and him to another," Paul Rannenberg, whose age was not given, wrote Fire Chief Raymond Boudet. A fire department ambulance sent him to Wesson Hospital, while his toes were taken by police to Mercy Hospital after the accident last month.

Fire officials said they were investigating Rannenberg's complaint. They did not know whether the toes could have been reimplanted if they had been immediately available when Ranneberg was hospitalized.

AIRLIFT ANNIVERSARY

A U.S. Air Force C-54 "Skymaster," coming in to land at Tempelhof Air Base, Berlin, is watched by a group of blockaded Berliners.

Trucks of all sizes are mobilized to distribute supplies flown in.

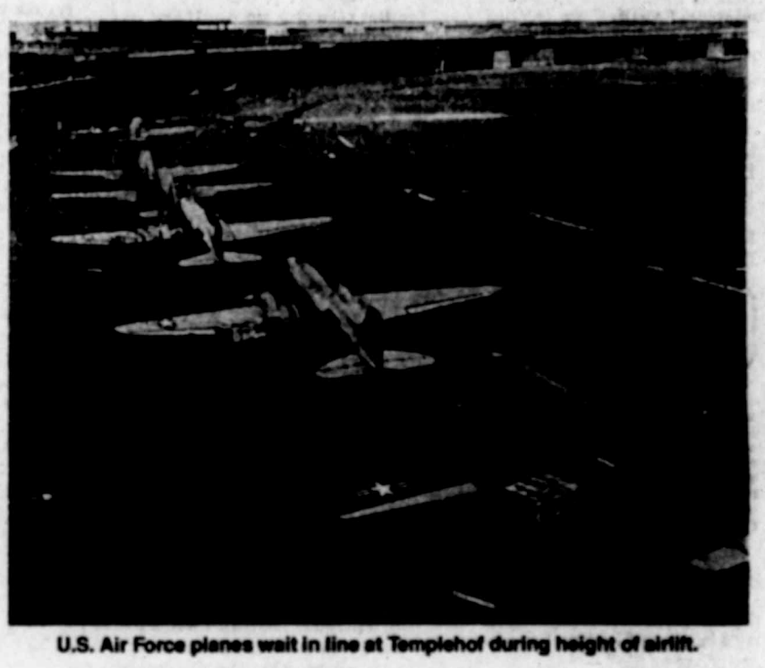

It was 30 years ago that the Western Allies began the Berlin airlift—one of the greatest humanitarian sagas in the history of air transportation.

The Soviet authorities had claimed technical difficulties and halted all traffic by land and water into and out of the Western-controlled section of Berlin. The only remaining access routes into the city were three 20-mile-wide air corridors across the Russian zone of Germany.

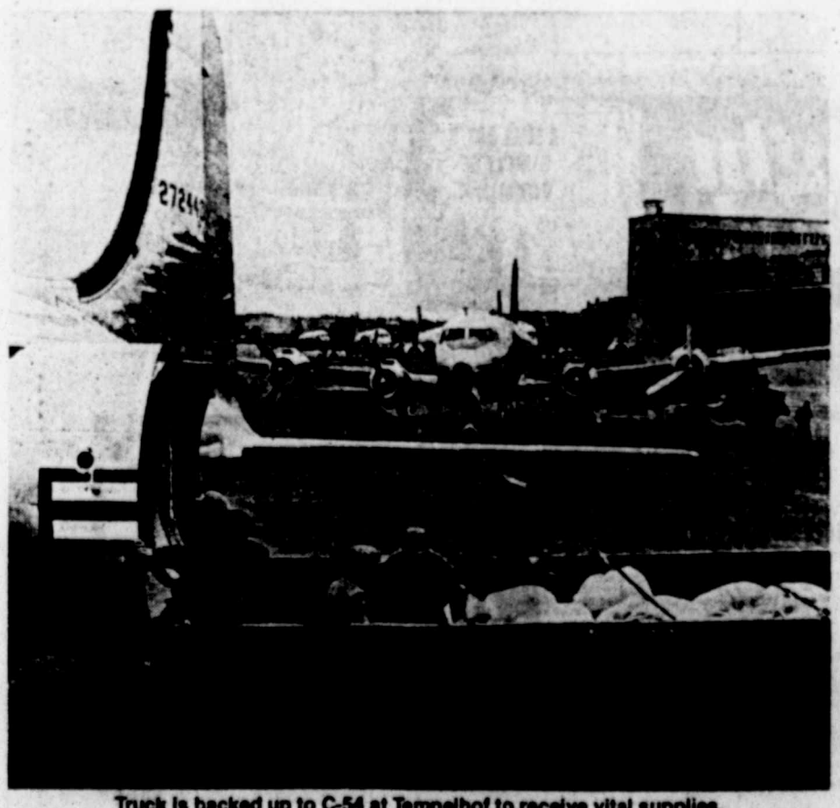

The Americans, British and French faced a choice—to abandon the city and its two-and-a-half million citizens, or to stay and rely on air supply. They chose to stay.

On June 26, 1948, the U.S. Air Forces in Europe began airlifting supplies into the blockaded city in C-47 "Sky Trains," the only transports available that day. Soon C-54 "Skymaster" transports and a few C-119 "Flying Boxcars," supported by Royal Air Force Yorks and Dakotas, joined in the operation. Radar controllers, mechanics and other specialists were called in to back the flying forces.

The airlift was in operation for 15 months in all. During that time some 2,343,300 tons of food and supplies were delivered, in 277,264 flights.

U.S. Air Force planes wait in line at Templehof during height of airlift.

Truck is backed up to C-54 at Tempelhof to receive vital supplies.

Berliners unload foodstuffs from C-119 "Flying Boxcar."

After 15 months the airlifts ends: Berlin lives on.

RENO GAMBLES ON EXPANSION

'Biggest Little City' Getting Just Plain Big

By MURRAY OLDERMAN

RENO, Nev. (NEA) — If Clark Gable and Spencer Tracy were around, they could upgrade the film "Boom Town" using Reno as the model.

The "Biggest Little City in the World" — as a banner hung over Virgina Street proclaims — has exploded with growth.

OLDERMAN

It's like walking through a reconstruction Berlin, going from one side of town to the other, says local newspaper publisher Warren LeRude of the Nevada State Journal and Gazette. Part of a Pulitzer Prize-winning team, he was born here. He notes there has been nothing comparable to the last year in the city's history.

"This is like Phoenix or San Jose of 10-to-15 years ago," he adds. "A helluva boom."

Reno expects an influx of 33,000 permanent new residents by 1980.

Six new hotels have been built or are in the process of construction the last three years. Four more are on the boards.

A fantastic surge has taken place in the little city, which straddles the Truckee River. It originally gained prominence as a divorce mill.

In the 1970 census, it was groping along with a population of 72,863. The metropolitan area in this rather-restricted Washoe Valley on the eastern side of the Sierra Nevada now threatens to burgeon over 200,000 in population.

This growth has been triggered by a single phenomenon — the decision by a Hollywood company, which used to concentrate on making movies, to build a destination resort in an old gravel pit on the waste flatlands at the eastern edge of Reno.

The MGM Grand hotel, with the Truckee River flowing outside the back door, recently opened to the general public. It features a gambling casino that's twice the size of a football field, covering 100,000 square feet. It's also twice the size of the casino in the grandiloquent MGM Grand in Las Vegas.

For the latest generation, Reno has slumbered in the shadow of its glittering big sister city, remaining fairly static and content with its quality of life while Vegas pushed and thumped its way to becoming the gaudy gambling capital of the world and a thriving metropolis as well.

Sensing its proximity to the people centers of northern California and the Pacific Northwest, such as Hilton and Del Webb tentatively probed the idea of expanding into Reno, but never got past the blueprints.

And all the local entrepreneurs sat on their hands, too, until the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer people waded through the bureaucratic maze. It embarked in 1975 on the construction of a 1,000-room hotel that sits on 145 acres, only 9 acres smaller than Disneyland. The MGM Grand-Reno has its own zip code.

"It'll make Harrah's and every other hotel-casino in the area much better," says Jack Pieper, a lean veteran of the gambling world who is the president of the MGM Grand.

"We'll bring people into Reno who've never been here before. Our market is the entire United States and western Canada. We think Reno is a new area for a large, complete resort hotel. We have a 50-lane bowling alley, a jai alai fronton, seven restaurants, a shopper arcade, a camper land, two movie theaters, a production showroom which seats eighteen hundred for dinner." And even a wedding chapel.

Of course, there's the gambling, too — intrinsic to any establishment in Nevada, where the state reels in close to $1.5 billion in revenue each year as its share from games of chance.

The rule-of-gambling-thumb for a successful casino is one person per 10 square feet. The MGM accommodates 10,000 at a time. To amuse them there are 102 blackjack tables; 2,000 slot machines; a 600-foot seat bingo parlor; a large race book; a large keno area; a poker room; 10 craps tables; four roulette wheels; and two baccarat parlors so lavishly done up they look fit for the site of a coronation.

The whole thing cost $131 million.

"I don't see Reno as another Las Vegas," says Pieper, who spent 28 years in the latter city and was the manager of the Frontier Hotel when he was tapped for the Reno venture. "The valley's too small, for one thing. They're two different communities and they think their own way. And it's healthy."

But bringing 3,800 new employees into the community, as Pieper's group has done, plus 2,800 more at a new J.C. Penney store, has its problems.

Reno must cope with a cloud inversion condition, created by surrounding mountains. It's similar to atmospheric conditions in smog-ridden Los Angeles and Denver. So the city must contend with serious air pollution because of increased traffic. Water pollution poses a grave problem, too, and a revenue bond to expand sewage capacity was finally passed after earlier rejection. The new construction has already made the new facilities for handling sewage inadequate. There is a dramatic lack of housing to meet the population influx and a shortage of school facilities.

But there are no signs of anyone pulling back.

"The problem here," says Mark Curtis, a spokesman for Harrah's, which had previously dominated the hotel-casino scene, "is how you accommodate people, not how you run them off."

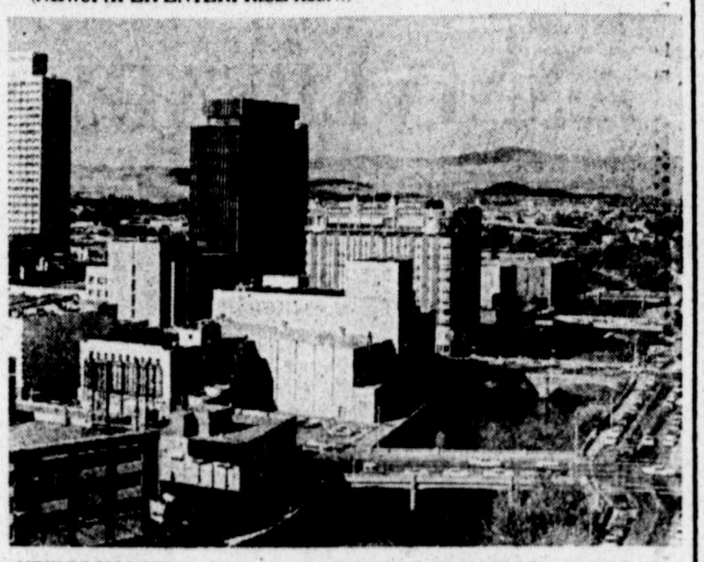

The major air carrier into Reno International, United Airlines, has dramatically reduced rates to and from California (example: from $36 to $20 at certain times between Reno and San Francisco) and tripled the number of flights.

"The place cannot stand still," shrugs Curtis. "We've been the big fish here, and we ain't gonna be anymore."

So Harrah's started construction of an annex to its major hotel in downtown Reno, across the street and connected by a bridge. The Sahara-Reno is another downtown addition.

"People got into a competitive spirit," says journalist LeRude, "paced by MGM. The city is reinforcing the downtown area to keep up with the new kid in town."

Japan's Yen, Surplus Climb Confounds Experts

TOKYO (AP) — Some economists watching the Japanese yen climb sharply in value against the dollar last year were confident that as Japanese cars, cameras and other goods got more expensive, Japan's troublesome trade surpluses would evaporate.

But it hasn't happened. The yen is still climbing. So are the surpluses. And there is little indication either will stop in the next few months.

"Economic theory said that when you have a (Japanese) surplus, you appreciate the yen," said Dr. Hiroya Ichikawa, a leading economist with Japan's Federation of Economic Organizations. The idea is that appreciation forces price hikes for Japanese products overseas while making imported goods here cheaper — exports drop, imports increase, and the surplus disappears.

"But economic theory hasn't worked and it's not going to work," Ichikawa told The Associated Press in an interview.

The economists and political leaders now say they overlooked the effect of continued U.S. inflation, Japanese business efficiency and windfall benefits from the yen appreciation in the form of cheaper raw materials.

These things, according to Ichikawa, have kept Japanese exports competitive despite the 30 percent rise in the value of the yen in the past 18 months. In January 1977, the dollar was worth 290 yen. It closed at 205.475 on the Tokyo foreign exchange Thursday.

As the yen's value climbed against the dollar, Japanese exporters were forced to raise prices overseas. Japanese car prices, for example, were raised four times last year in the United States. However, amid worsening American inflation, U.S. car makers raised their prices too. Top Japanese companies also have shown an unexpected ability to absorb the yen's increase by boosting efficiency, keeping price hikes at a minimum.

Nearly 80 percent of Japan's imports are raw materials. Most trade in such things is in dollars, and since the yen brings more dollars, Japan saves money.

While leading export industries have remained competitive, with export volume about even and its dollar value shooting up rapidly with the yen value increase, import performance has remained poor despite government promises and efforts.

The problem is that despite the cheaper wholesale prices for imports, retail prices have remained stiff. A recent government survey checked 22 items, finding 14 that had fallen in price somewhat, but none by the full 30 percent of the dollar's drop, and eight that had increased.

One importer of U.S.-made cosmetics, which have gone up in price here, said his Japanese distributors would not allow him to cut prices because they want to give large kickbacks to their retailers. Such kickbacks are traditional, and legal, in Japan.

The squeeze also is hitting hard at Americans living in Japan. One American figures his monthly rent jumped nearly $120 in the past month because of the dollar drop. An average meal now costs about $24.

For the 1977 fiscal year, which ended March 30, Japan's exports were $14 billion more than its imports, compared to the predicted surplus of $10 billion, and some experts say the surplus will reach $15 billion this year.

Despite the figures, both U.S. and Japanese officials here remain optimistic. They acknowledge that they miscalculated, overlooking the beneficial aspects of the yen increases. However, they refuse to accept Ichikawa's conclusion that their economic theory is a failure.

"We are still hoping to see a reversal later this year," said Shijuro Ogata, adviser to the governor of the state-run Bank of Japan.

"Last autumn everybody thought this could be done quickly," he said. "Now we see it will take time ... it's just the pace will be slower than we envisaged."

French Prelate Defies Pope

ECONE, Switzerland (AP) — In continued defiance of papal orders, Archbishop Marcel Lefebvre ordained 16 new priests, including two Americans, and 22 sub-deacons in traditionalist rites at his alpine seminary Thursday.

About 3,500 followers from France, Germany, Austria, Italy and Switzerland attended the ceremony in a meadow north of the seminary here.

The new priests come from the United States, France, Spain, Australia, Canada, Britain and Switzerland, the seminary said.

It identified the Americans as Terrence Finnegan, of Rapid City, S.D., and William Jenkins of Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

The 72-year-old French archbishop has consistently defied orders from Pope Paul VI that forbid him to ordain priests or carry out other priestly functions. He has ordained priests with traditionalist rites each year since 1974 and continues to celebrate the Tridentine Mass, a Latin rite banned by the Second Vatican Council in the 1960s.

Archbishop Lefebvre, whose followers appear to have increased in recent years, has criticized the use of modern languages in the liturgy and other reforms and denounced what he calls the destruction of the Catholic Church and betrayal of Christ's truths.

HEARTLINE: My father will be 64 years old next month. He is on Social Security. Lately his hearing has been deteriorating. We have thinking about purchasing a hearing aid for him. Can you give us any adivce on this? — S.C.

Effective selection of a hearing aid is something of a problem. In some cases, hearing loss can be corrected by medical treatment. In other instances, use of a properly selected hearing aid will improve a person's ability to hear. There are also cases in which neither medical treatment nor a hearing aid will help the individual hear better. Since Aug. 15, 1977, hearing aids may be sold only to people who have been examined by a licensed physician within six months before the aid is purchased. It is possible, however, for people 18 years of age and older to waive the requirement by signing a statement indicating they know why medical examination is advisable. The Food and Drug Administration advises a person to try to find a dealer who will let them use or rent a hearing aid on a trial basis to make sure that the hearing aid will actually help to improve their hearing. The FDA reports that the average price for a hearing aid is between $300 and $450.

HEARTLINE: I am 62 years old. I have just found out that I am two quarters shy of being eligible for Social Security retirement benefits. I would like to go back to work and earn these quarters. Can tell me what the requirements for his are? — S.G.

The work requirements for earning a quarter of coverage under Social security have been changed for 1978 by the 1977 Social Security amendments. Under the old law, a worker earned a quarter of coverage by earning at least $50 in wages during any calendar quarter ending March 31, June 30, Sept. 30 or Dec. 31. In order to receive credit for the quarter, the money must have been paid to them during the actual quarter. Under the new law, which took effect Jan. 1, 1978, a worker will receive one quarter of coverage (up to a total of four per year) for each $250 of earnings paid in a year. This $250 measure would be automatically increased every year to take account of increases in average wages.

So, in order for you to earn two quarters of coverage this year, you would have to be paid wages of at least $500.

HEARTLINE: I have been working under Civil Service for the last couple of years. Prior to that, I had served in the Army for three years. Can this time I had in the service be credited toward my Civil Service Retirement? — A.Y.

As a general rule, military service is creditable provided it was active, was terminated under honorable conditions, and was peformed before separation from a civilian position under the retirement system.

Air Travel Data Publication Mulled

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government is seeking comments on whether it should collect and publish information on the performance quality of air travel and related ground srvice.

The Civil Aeronutics Board said it is considering the action because the public may not have enough information available to make judgments without extensive personal experience.

The CAB collects information on scheduling, on-time performance and consumer complaints, although not all of it is easily accessible to the public. So the agency wants comments on whether it should collect more information on airline performance and make it public, including specific types of information which would be helpful.

The deadline for commenting is July 7. Interested persons should write to the CAB Dockets Section, Docket 32585, Washington, D.C., 20428.

Orthodox Rabbis Warn U.S. Jews On Israel Dissent

TORONTO (AP) — Orthodox rabbis have advised American Jews to be "extremely cautious in voicing dissent" from policies of Israel, adding that such dissent usually is manipulated by the media against the Jewish state.

In a resolution adopted on Thursday, the closing day of its four-day convention, the Rabbinical Council in America said that "in the sensitive negotiations under way, dissent becomes a potent weapon against Israel and serves only to place greater pressure on her and limit her options for negotiations."

On another matter, Rabbi Sol Roth, newly elected first vice president of the organization representing more than 1,000 Orthodox rabbis in the U.S. and Canada, assailed the "shameful waste and extravagance" displayed at Jewish bar mitzvahs and weddings.

He said these rites should celebrate "commitment to spiritual values rather than to the crass materialism which is displayed in ostentatiousness and conspicuous consumption bordering on vulgarity."

LOBBYING METHODS BOTHER SOME LEGISLATORS

State Teachers Adept At Austin Power Politics

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Which Austin lobby is most powerful? This, the second in a two-part series, explores some of the elements of lobby power and focuses on the Texas State Teachers Association.)

By LEE JONES

AUSTIN (AP) — Ask a legislator or lobbyist who has the most powerful lobby in the Capitol and he'll probably name the one that whipped him the worst.

Interviews turned up no consensus, but pointed to what works and what doesn't, as well as to about a dozen names to be reckoned with.

"I don't think there is any 'Super Lobbyist' down there," said Rep. Bob Bush, D-Sherman.

These names of lobbyists and organizations lobbying groups cropped up frequently in conversations about lobby influence:

— Texas Trial Lawyers Association (Phil Gauss)

— Texas Real Estate Association (Gerhardt Schulle and Mark Hanna)

— Texas Motor Transportation Association (Terry Townsend)

— Texas State Teachers Association (Callie Smith and Jim Hooser)

— Marion "Sandy" Sanford, hired lobbyist for over a dozen organizations and businesses, including Houston Natural Gas, Alcoa and the Texas Association of Bank Holding Companies.

"I've never seen Sandy fail," Rep. John Wilson, D-LaGrange, said of the young Houston lawyer.

— Texas Automobile Dealers Association (Gene Fondren)

— Texas Good Roads-Public Transportation Association (Eugene Robbins)

— Texas AFL-CIO (Harry Hubbard and Sherman Fricks)

— Texas Mid-Continent Oil and Gas Association (Bill Abington)

— Texas Chemical Council (Harry Whitworth)

— Texas Railroad Association (Walter Caven)

Who's the most influential?

"There's no question about it, school teachers and labor," said Sen. Bill Moore, D-Bryan, chairman of the powerful Senate State Affairs Committee and no fan of either lobby.

Rep. Wilhelmina Delco, D-Austin, who is friendly with both lobbies also named them first.

In terms of success last session, however, the TSTA came out second best to the good roads association, the choice of Rep. John Bryant, D-Dallas, as the No. 1. lobby.

"All you've got to look at is the dollars they got out of the Legislature — over $500 million for their industry," he said.

Bryant said the highway lobby's power flows from its close ties with the Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation.

"If you don't get on the program, you are going to have the highway department mad at you. . . . They've got all the leverage they want over you if your community wants any roads," Bryant said.

Wilson said state colleges and universities "get all they want," using state-paid officials and old grads to lobby for them.

"When their ox is in a ditch, they can call on all these people who have graduated or support that college or university. They just say, 'If Texas wants it, vote for it. Or if it's for A&M, vote for it and be a good ol' Aggie,' " Wilson said.

UT and A&M were successful in the 1974 Constitutional Convention in maintaining the Permanent University Fund as their private preserve, he recalled.

Caven, the railroad lobbyist, and Ace Pickens, the medical lobbyist, have old wounds from bouts with the Texas Trial Lawyers Association and rank it at or near the top in legislative clout.

"They are almost ready to wring the neck of the state whenever they want to. . . . They do the best job. There are so many lawyers in the Legislature. . . . They figure, 'If I can pass this bill, I can make a million dollars from my next fee,' " Caven said.

Rep. Wayne Peveto, D-Orange, said truckers have a high success rate and are "probably the most professional."

"I remember one time when their members came to town. They thought the thing to do was get the representatives drunk and were keeping them up all night. . . . Their lobbyists went and got them and told them that's not the way you do things," Peveto said.

Callie Smith of the Texas State Teachers Association was asked if he disagreed with those who call TSTA the No. 1 lobby.

"I don't think I would tend to disagree with them totally, but I would say also that we have a large membership," he said, making him the only lobbyist interviewed who ranked his group at or near the top.

TSTA has over 140,000 members, and as Pickens said, "It's just like in actuarial science, the law of big numbers helps." Last year, TSTA had 56 persons registered as lobbyists.

Sometimes TSTA scores big, as when they lobbied through fat raises in 1975, including a jump in the minimum for beginners from $6,600 to $8,000. But it has its failures, too, winning only a 5.75 percent pay boost in 1977.

Business lobbyists don't mention TSTA when asked to name lobbies with the most stroke.

Legislators sometimes say they are intimidated by TSTA's election year surveys of their views on teacher issues, which then are published in the organization's "Texas Outlook."

"If we only knew whether TSTA could bloc vote'em," a lawmaker said last session.

Bryant questions TSTA's effectiveness, despite the potential voting power backing up its lobbyists' work.

"The TSTA's not very good at it. . . The TSTA guys run around behind the education committee chairman and the governor, piddling around and never have a definable position. They got cut out of the education bill, and we took up teacher salaries separately. They thought that was the worst thing that could happen to them, and it did," Bryant said.

"What they get is in spite of the TSTA, not because of the TSTA," said Rep. Hamp Atkinson, D-New Boston, a former TSTA members who serves on the House Education Committee.

Before House Speaker Bill Clayton's administration took over in 1975, TSTA usually had a friend at the helm of the House Education Committee — Dan Kubiak of Rockdale or the late George Hinson of Mineola. Sen. A.M. Aikin, D-Paris, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, and Sen. Oscar Mauzy, D-Dallas, chairman of the Senate Education Committee, usually go along with TSTA.

Another influential House member, Rep. DeWitt Hale, D-Corpus Christi, is married to a teacher and often carries TSTA bills.

Hale and Aikin, however, are in the last six months as legislators, having decided to retire.

TSTA's members sometimes can be their own worst enemies, hampering the effectiveness of their lobby.

"Some of the most obnoxious lobbying I've seen has been TSTA lobbying," says a legislator who is generally friendly to the group.

The lawmaker recalled the time in 1975 when some San Antonio teachers left a note, "Why weren't you in your office when you are dealing with the most crucial issue in the state?"

"I wasn't in my office because I was out at Memorial Stadium" for a rally attended by 35,000 teachers seeking higher pay, the lawmaker said.

The same legislator said, however, that TSTA can be counted on to furnish accurate information on education faster than the Texas Education Agency.

The numerous local teacher associations that are active politically are a TSTA asset but occasionally become a liability, as when Kerrville teachers sought out an opponent for Rep. Jim Nugent, D-Kerrville, in 1976.

Nugent, a rather unforgiving man, won and ever since has lost few chances to embarrass or thwart the TSTA.

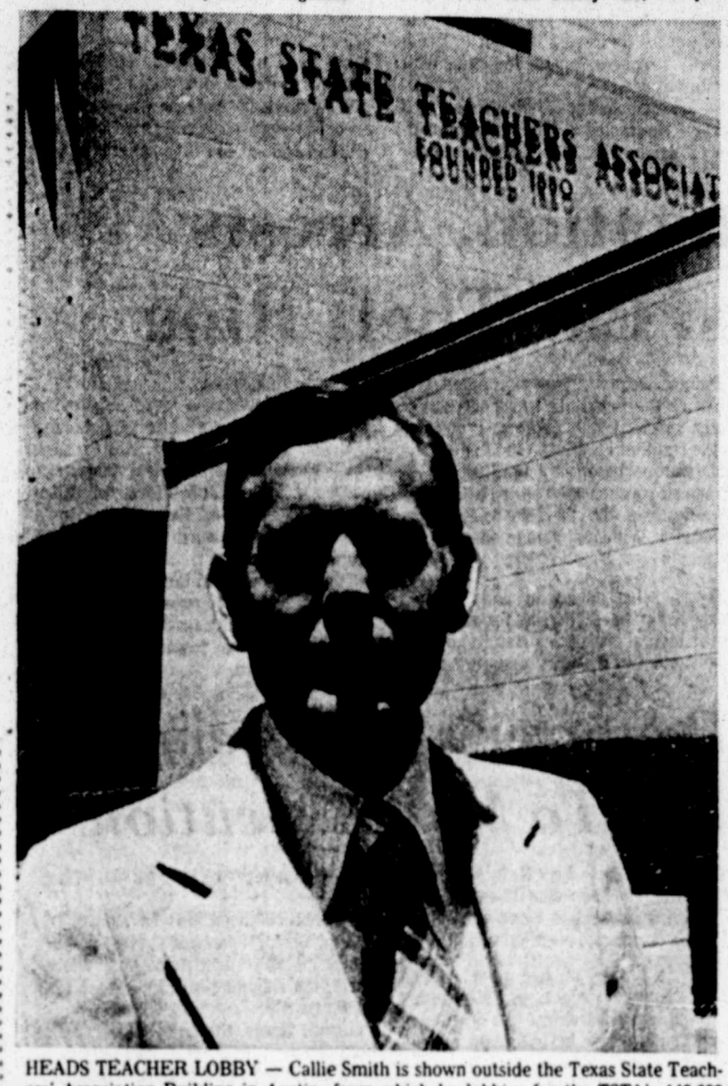

Smith said the overzealousness of some teachers "really doesn't annoy me. Sure they are a problem with some legislators. But members are also citizens of the state, and we can't control their actions and wouldn't try to."

He said TSTA succeeds not only because of its numbers but also because its cause is right.

"I have to believe that what we are working with the Legislature on is of importance to everybody in the state ... I don't know many people who are against education as such," he said.

"What it boils down to is they want money for their own pocket," snorts Nugent.

TSTA probably is no better and no worse than other lobbies. Its members might be less open to compromise, as some legislators say, but like all lobbies it plays the high stakes game of power and persuasion.

Entertainer Confined To Bed

CHICAGO (AP) — Entertainer Sammy Davis, Jr., confined to bed because of a pinched nerve, canceled two performances of "Stop the World, I Want to Get Off." Davis was unable to tell Wednesday if he would make the closing performance Thursday night.

In his room at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, the entertainer was in traction from an acute attack of sciatica — pain from inflammation or compression of the large sciatic nerve that runs through the hip and down the thigh.

Davis had "a slight case two or three years ago," Bennett said.

No Sympathy For Terrorists

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Mayor Frank Rizzo, nicknamed "The Cisco Kid" when he was a policeman, said he could put Italy's terrorist Red Brigades "in prison where they belong."

The son of an Italian immigrant, Rizzo also said that the urban terrorism in Italy never could happen in Philadelphia "because I happen to be mayor."

In a deposition filed Tuesday as part of proceedings in a police brutality suit against the city, Rizzo said of criminals who resisted arrest, that he would "spacco il capo," which translates into "bust their heads."

Rizzo, a beat officer who advanced to police commissioner before being elected mayor, had to answer questions from lawyers for Mitchell Culp, who filed a suit contending he was assaulted by police officers after he was arrested for a traffic violation. He said Rizzo was negligent in his supervision of the police department.

Columnist Seeks Advice

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — For 30 years, Charlie Johnson has been advising readers of the Grand Rapids Press on the best ways to grow almost everything.

But this week, the garden columnist had to seek advice himself — from police — on a new and illegal crop.

Johnson made an unwelcome discovery in a flower garden he maintains for Fountain Street Church.

"I was checking out two flats of sweet alyssum when I spotted some strange plants," Johnson said. "I looked closely and thought, 'Oh, my God, it's marijuana.' I knew I hadn't planted it."

Detectives James Powell and Joseph Wiltrakis confirmed Johnson's fears. "This time of year, we find it growing all over town," Powell said.

The officers said the plants were about 2 months old and speculated they may be the result of a discarded marijuana cigarette.

Solon Enters As Clown

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Some say legislators too often clown around, but a Nebraska state senator may have taken the metaphor to its ultimate.

State Sen. J.R. Murphy brought legislative activity to a halt Monday when he entered the Senate chamber dressed as a circus clown, carrying a handful of balloons.

Murphy, a severe critic of the session's pace, decided to symbolize his distress. "I felt it appropriate to dress for the occasion," said Murphy of South Sioux City. He described the session as a "charade."

Lt. Gov. Gerald Whelan ruled Murphy out of order when the senator began to criticize the Legislature. Murphy responded that he would "take my lollipop and go home."

For clown connoisseurs, Murphy's costume included a red and white polka dot suit and a huge pointed hat.

Legislators Praise Hope

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Bob Hope left them laughing when he was praised by the California Legislature as "one of the greatest entertainers in the history of show business."

"Politicians and show people are a lot alike," Hope told a joint legislative session Wednesday. "One day you are drinking the wine, the next day you are picking the grapes."

Hope was ribbed by Assembly Speaker Leo McCarthy: "I am frankly quite surprised to see Bob Hope here," McCarthy told an Assembly audience that included Gov. Edmund Brown Jr. "I thought he only visited war zones at Christmas time."

Hope, who is performing this week at Sacramento's Music Circus, cracked jokes about Proposition 13 and about Brown's much publicized frugality: "The governor was very nice. He sent his chauffeur for me, and I want to tell you it was the first time I have ridden on a bicycle built for two."

Dick Cheney Released

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — Former White House Chief of Staff Dick Cheney was released from a Cheyenne hospital Thursday after a mild heart attack. But he has not decided if he will stay in the race for the U.S. House Republican nomination.

Cheney, who worked in the Ford administration, plans to "announce shortly" whether or not he will continue his campaign, said Mike Patchen, his press aide.

"After a period of rest and recuperation at home, he can resume a full and active schedule," Cheyenne cardiologist Rick Davis said.

Inspection Stickers Changing

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas motorists are turning red over orange safety inspection stickers that are turning yellow.

Texas drivers received orange stickers in January, February and March to verify they have passed inspection for 1978.

"It just so happens the silly things are turning last year's color — yellow," says Winston Johnson, manager of the state Department of Public Safety's vehicle inspection records.

Highway patrolmen and local police, looking at the color, are stopping motorists who bear yellow rather than orange stickers.

The department sent out more than 8,000 letters to law enforcement agencies informing them of the fading colors and requesting that they examine the stickers carefully before issuing any tickets for expired stickers.

Confusion Way Of Life

MIAMI (AP) — Here's a tale of two Achilles "Augie" DeVitas. Both are 64 years old, non-drinking, non-smoking, non-related. In addition, they're both natives of Paterson, N.J., who moved to South Florida 20 years ago.

"Our lives are so parallel that sometimes I wonder what the guy upstairs is doing. I think God is having some fun," says the first DeVita, who is a rubber company president and a Hallandale resident.

The second DeVita, who lives in Hialeah, lives, eats and preaches from a tricycle. He carries all his belongings on his trike and in a two-wheel trailer he pulls behind it. "'DeVita' means way of life. This confusion has been our way of life so I'm used to it," he says.

For more than half a century, the similarities between the two men have caused embarrassing mixups and troublesome complications.

They were 10 years old when the first mixup occurred.

The first DeVita won $10 in a school contest. The money was deposited in the second DeVita's school account.

Three weeks ago, the second DeVita gained national attention when stories were written about his eccentric way of life. Since he lives on his tricycle and beds down wherever he can find a warm spot, he doesn't have a phone. So who got the calls? Naturally, the first DeVita.

Country Singer Fargo Ill

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country music singer Donna Fargo, hospitalized in Santa Barbara, Calif., with peripheral neuritis, may be disabled for three months, officials said Thursday.

Her illness "has resulted in weakness and instability which makes it unsafe for her to perform on stage," her physician, Dr. Larry F. Smith, said in a statement released by Warner Brothers Records.

Miss Fargo, 33, entered Cottage Hospital last Saturday after complaining of numbness throughout her body.

She is not seeing visitors or taking phone calls, but her spirits have improved, said Bonnie Rasmussen, a spokesman for Warner Brothers Records.

Cow Chip Champ Crowned

DEL MAR, Calif. (AP) — Nobody rushed to shake Allen Stacey's hand after he set a new world record for tossing cow chips during the Southern California Exposition.

The 21-year-old tree topper from Exeter was one of 110 contestants who hurled 6-to 10-inch chips supplied by cows from Lakeside and Beaver, Okla.

Stacey's mighty heave of 226 feet, 9 inches, surpassed the record set moments before by Jim Cox, his neighbor back home. In fact, it was Cox who talked Stacey into competing Wednesday.

His win allows him to compete in the World Championship Cow Chip Chucking Contest next April, in Beaver, Okla.

Bandit Tells Truth

OAKLAND (AP) — A man walked into Crocker National Bank and handed a teller a note that said: "Put money in bag."

"Is there any particular reason why I should?" asked the unidentified teller.

"If you don't, I'll walk out the door," replied the blond man, who wore gold-rimmed glasses and a tan leisure suit in addition to an embarrased smile.

"Go ahead. Be my guest," replied the teller.

And, police reported, the would-be bandit did just that.

Presidential Race Mulled

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — Rep. Philip Crane, here to address a state Republican "pre-campaign convention," says he has plans for the 1980 presidental race.

"I'm seriously considering entering the 1980 race," Crane, 47 said, "and New Hampshire is a critical battlefield — perhaps the most critical in that contest."

Crane, a five-term congressman from the northern suburbs of Chicago, has found "growing financial and moral commitment" to his candidacy, he said, adding that he will return here several times in the next few months to see if that support is growing.

"I will definitely announce my decision in November on whether I will run," he said.

Pope Says Moment Of Truth Has Come For Church Rebels

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope Paul VI appealed Thursday to those who walk the path of "heresy and schism" to spare further risks to church unity, and said the "moment of truth has come" for rebels.

His appeal to rebellious Roman Catholics came hours after rebel French Archbishop Marcel Lefebvre again defied papal orders and in Switzerland ordained 16 new priests and 22 sub-deacons from among the followers of his staunchly conservative ideals.

The Vatican said earlier this month Lefebvre was moving toward schism because he uses traditional rites rather than modernized ordination approved by the Vatican.

The comments were made in a sermon as the 80-year-old pontiff reviewed the problems and achievements of his papacy during a mass in St. Peter's Basilica.

The mass, attended by 20,000, celebrated the feast day of Sts. Peter and Paul and the 15th anniversary of the pope's election and crowning as spiritual leader of the world's 600 million Roman Catholics.

"We wish to make a heartfelt but firm appeal to all those who are committing themselves and leading others, by words, writings or behavior, along the paths of personal opinions and subsequently those of heresy and schism, thus confusing the consciences of individuals and of the whole community."

The pope referred twice to his approaching death, something he has done several times in the past year.

He spoke of "the particular significance for us of the 15th anniversary of our election to the Supreme Pontificate, when, after the celebration of our 80th birthday, the natural course of our life goes toward its close... our spirit ... continually prepares for the meeting with the Just Judge."

He said papacy caused him "much suffering." He singled out the years immediately following the 1962-1965 Second Vatican Council as most crucial and described them as "a moment when facile doctrinal experimentation semed to be shaking the certainty of many priests and lay people."

"Thanks be to God, many dangers have diminished," he said. He included among the highlights of his papacy the encyclicals in which he restated mandatory celibacy for Catholic priests and banned all forms of contraceptive devices.

Archbisop Lefebvre consistently has defied the Vatican on church reforms, saying the change from Latin liturgy and other reforms amount to destruction of the church and betrayal of Christ's truths.

The French archbishop ordained priests from America, France, Spain, Australia, Canada. Britain and Switzerland, his seminary said.

The Americans were identified as Terrence Finnegan of Rapid City, S.D., and William Jenkins of Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

Long Investigation, Arrests End Midwest Car Theft Ring

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — The FBI said Thursday Edward Patrick O'Brien was arrested in Chicago following a long investigation of an alleged motor vehicle theft ring in Iowa.

Edward J. Krupinsky, agent in charge of the Omaha FBI, said O'Brien's arrest followed his indictment on June 27 by a federal grand jury in the Southern District of Iowa at Des Moines.

He was charged at Des Moines with violations of interstate transportation of stolen motor vehicles and conspiracy statutes as a result of his involvement with Edward Kenneth Williams Sr., doing business as Williams Garage and Auto Parts of Atlantic, Iowa, in an alleged vehicle theft ring operating between Chicago, Kansas City and Atlantic, Krupinsky said.

The federal grand jury, he said, returned indictments charging seven other individuals as a result of their participation in the vehicle theft ring.

Krupinsky explained that Williams Sr. was charged with 31 counts in an indictment with violations of interstate transportation of stolen motor vehicles, interstate transportation of stolen property and conspiracy statutes.

The federal grand jury charged Edward Kenneth Williams Jr., Bryan James Williams and James Allen Lo Hoff with violations of interstate transportation of stolen motor vehicle and conspiracy statutes, he said.

Douglas Dean Stillian was charged with violating the interstate transportation of stolen property and conspiracy statutes as the result of his alleged theft and interstate transportation of a 1974 truck trailer, which was reported stolen at McKinney, Tex., on Jan. 22, 1977 and was recovered at Williams' garage on April 14, 1977.

David Allen Anderson and Kenneth Craig Knop were charged for violations of the federal conspiracy statute for their involvement in Williams' operation at Atlantic, Krupinsky said.

All individuals who were indicted by the grand jury, with the exception of O'Brien, will be receiving criminal summons to appear before a U.S. magistrate at Des Moines on July 7 for arraignment on the charges levied, Kupinsky said.

O'Brien was to be arraigned in Chicago, Kupinsky said.

The FBI agent said the action taken by the federal grand jury was the culmination of an 18-month investigation involving the FBI and the Iowa Highway Patrol vehicle theft unit.

The American Beekeeping Federation estimates there are 200,000 beekeepers, and that they can be found in virtually every county in the nation.

Reporter's Preference Led To Mob Execution

BOSTON (AP) — Jack Kelly was an investigative reporter who liked to hang out with the mobsters he covered. That cost him his job and eventually his life.

Kelly was one of five men gunned down Tuesday night or Wednesday morning, in the basement of a downtown discotheque where he was night manager.

On Thursday, 50 city, state and federal investigators hunted the killers, who burst into the club with a shotgun and .25 caliber automatic pistol.

Kelly, 34, had been a reporter for WNAC-TV until he was fired in 1976. The station reportedly was nervous about Kelly's frequent companionship with Boston mobsters, the men he was paid to report on.

After his dismissal, he went to work for several Boston bars, and several months ago he became night manager at Blackfriars, the shopping district disco where he lost his life.

Garrett Byrne, the Suffolk County district attorney, said the killings resulted from an underworld disagreement over drugs.

"This club was a major drug club for the past several months," one investigator said. "Kelly had to know what was going on."

Kelly began working for WBZ radio and television before switching to WNAC. He frequently bragged about his gangland sources.

Craniofacial Surgery Aiding Deformed Infants

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — It was 25 minutes past midnight, Halloween 1977, and Carol Brennan had just given natural birth to a son. Suddenly she was gripped by fear.

"As soon as they laid my baby on my stomach I knew something was wrong," she recalled. "Of course I kept trying to convince myself it would be all right, that it would correct itself, but deep down I knew."

Daniel John Brennan was born with plagiocephaly, a defect caused by a mishapen skull. There was a dent on the right side of his head where bone growth was stunted and a slight bump on the left where his brain was trying to poke out. And his left eye was higher than his right.

He was one 250,000 children born each year in the United States with congenital defects. Of those, one in every 10,000 babies comes into the world with major facial deformity.

Not long ago, these youngsters, some with truly grotesque anomolies, spent life's tender years the object of stares and cruel jokes. Corrective plastic surgery was put off at least until the grade school years and by then the psychological damage could be severe.

But today, kids in diapers are having their faces fixed, some attaining normal or near normal features by the time they leave the crib. Others, the ones with the grotesque deformities, still may not be pretty, but the improvements are dramatic.

A pioneer in the work is Dr. Linton A. Whitaker, a plastic surgeon at Children's Hospital of Philadelphia, the first institution in the country to embark on a full-scale program to repair facial defects in infants.

It's accomplished in one procedure, combining neurosurgery and craniofacial surgery — the restructuring and repositioning of such facial parts as foreheads, eye sockets and noses.

"As a resident I was seeing all these children with dramatically deformed faces," Whitaker said in an interview.

"Then I met Dr. Paul Tessier in Paris. He was just getting started in this whole field of craniofacial surgery. About that time (1971), it was felt the youngest you should operate was three or four years, and it was considered radical to do it before seven years."

But as time passed, the 42-year-old plastic surgeon and his colleagues at Children's Hospital began toying with the idea of operating earlier. They reasoned that in most cases the neurosurgeon had to go in anyway, usually to relieve pressure on the brain.

Two scientific advances convinced them to try.

"It used to be thought that there were growth centers around the face. If you operated too early you might destroy them and the face would stop growing," Whitaker said. "But after research with rhesus monkeys, it turns out you don't inhibit the growth process, and in some cases you may stimulate it.

"Secondly, it's now possible through technical advancements, like reducing blood pressure during surgery, to lose less blood on the operating table. Support teams are now capable of caring for a child weighing 10 pounds. Before there was a hesitancy to operate — especially when you consider there's a pint of blood in a 10-pound baby and you lose that much during the operation."

Tessier spent several days at Children's Hospital teaching the refinements of craniofacial surgery.

The first operation, in tandem with neurosurgery, was performed in 1972 by Dr. Peter Randall, the chief plastic surgeon. In 1975, Whitaker operated on his first baby. Since then he has successfully operated on 42 infants, one only two weeks old.

Whitaker, the father of three (his eldest son, Derek, 11, died June 12 during surgery to correct a heart defect), says the ideal age for craniofacial surgery is between three and six months. The babies normally are released from the hospital five to six days after the operation.

"The self-image concept is developed about age 4," he said, "so the potential for avoiding psychological damage is quite real. Also, it's easier on the family. The older a child gets the harder it is to make the decision."

Another advantage of operating so young, he noted, is that babies' bones are quite malleable. Consequently, it's usually possible to reshape the skull without grafting replacement bone from the ribs or hip, a painful procedure that's slow to heal. Also, babies bounce back from surgery quicker than older kids.

A drawback is that work often cannot be performed below the cheekbones for fear of damaging developing teeth.

When Danny was a month old, the family's pediatrician referred the Brennans to Children's Hospital and the operation was suggested.

An ear-to-ear incision was made across Danny's scalp and the skin pulled forward so Whitaker could repair the mishapen skull and align the eye sockets. Danny went home in a week.

Recently he returned to the hospital for treatment of an eye infection. His hair was beginning to grow back, but the red scar was still visible. He slept in a stroller while his mother talked.

"They say the hair will completly cover it," she said. "I can't believe the results. He's doing so good." She bent over her baby and smiled.

Living Cost Hike Due Recipients Of Food Stamps

WASHINGTON (AP) — Families receiving food stamps will get a boost starting Saturday with cost-of-living increases in their allotments.

The allotments are adjusted twice a year in line with food price changes reported by the Bureau of Labor Statistics and the Consumer Price Index.

Larger stamp allotments mean that eligibility standards also must be adjusted. Limits on monthly income go up when food stamp allotments are increased.

Effective Saturday, the monthly food stamp allotment for a family of four will increase from $174 to $182. In addition, the new monthly net income limit to be eligible for stamps will rise from $580 to $607.

The figures are slightly higher for Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands and Guam.

Under new legislation, changes will be made in the method for determining allotments and setting income limits. In addition, the requirement that households purchase their food stamps will be eliminated. Those changes are expected to be put into effect by late this year.

Here is a breakdown of the new monthly net income eligibility limits for food stamps: one person, $227; two persons, $363; three persons, $480; five persons, $720; six persons, $867; seven persons, $953; eight persons, $1,093. For each extra person over eight, add $140.

Bertrand Reflects On Performance

By KETH HENLEY
Avalanche-Journal Farm Writer

At 55, Dr. Anson Bertrand is riding the swell of a career that has carried him from a teaching position at Purdue University to the top of a multi-million-dollar agency in the U. S. Department of Agriculture (USDA).

On July 3, the dean of Texas Tech's College of Agricultural Sciences will leave the position he has held for the past seven years, and three days later the native Texan will assume responsibilities as director of the Science and Education Administration (SEA) in Washington, D. C.

In an interview, Bertrand reviewed his performance as head of the College of Agriculture, discussing his accomplishments and disappointments, and outlined his new duties at the national level.

"What have we done?" he asked, simply.

"When I came in here the college had a modest research program and a good teaching program with lots of good senior faculty members. It now has a balanced program of teaching, research and public service.

College Matures

"I've seen this college grow up," said Bertrand. "It has matured tremendously."

During the past seven years legislative appropriation for research has risen from $750,000 to $1,135,000, he pointed out. Over the same period, faculty grants and contracts for research have almost tripled to about $1.3 million.

"With this amount of money — around $2.5 million — we're able now to keep these good people who want to do research and teach," Bertrand emphasized.

"I guess the thing that I'm most proud of is that we have the most competent and capable faculty today this college has had in the seven years I've been here. That's because we've been able to attract, in competition with the land grant universities, some outstanding young people."

At the same time, however, real dollars for teaching support have been reduced in the face of inflation, said the dean. Salaries have not been included in the decline, he added, but operating funds for supplies and teaching equipment have not been able to keep pace with rising prices.

Teaching Quality High

"The quality of teaching is the best it's ever been because we've got this competent faculty. But it is not as high as it ought to be because we don't have the equipment," said Bertrand.

For example, he noted, an inadequate number of microscopes in the entomology department forces student rotation, which lowers the level of instruction.

Bertrand pointed proudly to the college's enrollment, which has increased at a rate of about 4 percent annually, and to the quality of students now studying agriculture.

"Traditionally, the kids with the highest academic records coming out of high school went into engineering, pre-med and biological sciences," he said. "They shunned agriculture and we got the second level student.

"But now we're getting our quota of the really top students. They enter with higher ACT (American College Test) scores, and this year we had the fewest number to be dropped for academic failure."

Female enrollment is up more than 700 percent since 1971, said Bertrand.

Female Enrollment Climbs

"Seven years ago there were only about 30 or 40 females out of approximately 1,200 students," he said. "We will be up to something over 250 women this fall out of a total enrollment of about 1,600."

On-campus buildings have been greatly improved with the addition of new paint, air conditioning and other conveniences, Bertrand noted, and the Goddard Range and Wildlife Building has been added.

"That came as a direct gift from the Goddard Foundation, and I have to take a little credit for that."

Opened in August 1975, the facility was the first academic building ever given to Texas Tech by an individual or foundation.

"We did the negotiation with the Goddard Foundation to get that done, and I'm proud of that accomplishment," he said.

But despite the achievements, there also have been the setbacks, such as inadequate operational funds, Bertrand noted, along with an extreme irritation he's not likely to soon forget.

"My greatest regret is that so much of my effort and so much of the effort of the College of Agriculture faculty has had to go toward reestablishing our field laboratories after relocating them off campus," said the dean.

"...Tremendously Frustrating Time..."

"It has been a tremendously frustrating time for the faculty, the students and myself. It has just taken an undue part of my time, and I am very, very sorry that it happened."

The land occupied by the Tech Medical School and the Lubbock County Teaching Hospital had been designated as research area for the College of Agricultural Sciences. Once the decision was made to build the huge health complex, all agricultural projects had to be moved.

The college recently opened new facilities east of New Deal, which include a feed mill, veterinary clinic and feedlots. Movement of projects from the Lubbock campus is expected to be completed before the end of the year.

"The result on the college is that it has been a time consuming, energy consuming, intellectual consuming thing over a period that began before I came and it is not finished yet," Bertrand asserted.

New Deal Facility Excellent

"I do think, however, that with the support of the board of regents and the administration, we have been able to establish a very excellent research and teaching facility out at New Deal," he added, quickly. "It is as good as any land grant college facility that I know of and better than any non-land grant college facility. I think we all can be proud of those facilities out there."

As director of the Science and Education Administration, Bertrand will be in charge of personnel, plans, budgets and policy matters — "the works as far as the agency is concerned."

His immediate superior will be Rupert Cutler, assistant secretary of agriculture for conservation, research and education.

The SEA officially began operations on Feb. 7 with a 1978-79 fiscal year budget near $800 million.

The agency combined the operations of the Agricultural Research Service, the Cooperative Research Service and Extension Service, and the National Agricultural Library under one administration as envisioned in President Carter's plan to reduce the size of the federal government.

However, a Human Nutrition Center was created along with a Higher Education Program.

Agricultural Education Coordinated

Bertrand said the Higher Education Program will coordinate college-level education in agriculture throughout the nation in the form of grants, scholarships and contracts to both land grant and non-land grant institutions with agricultural programs.

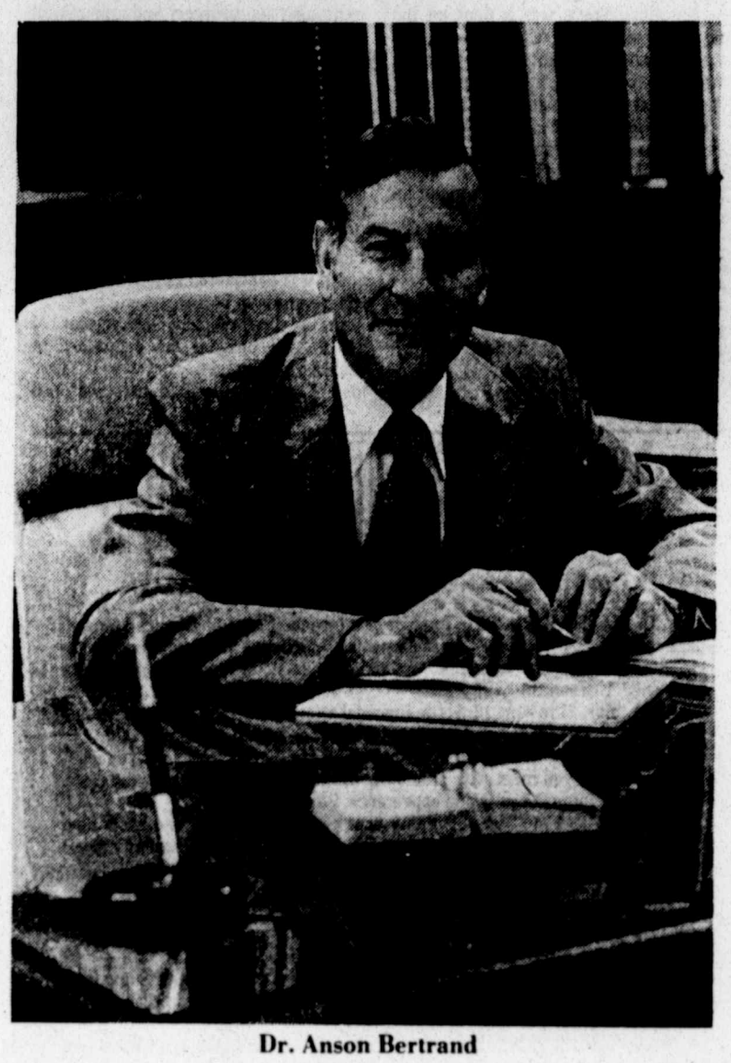

"The Human Nutrition Center will provide technical and administrative leadership for the in-house research related to human nutrition," he explained.

"Funds have been authorized for the development of a new program of cooperative research with institutions that have a human nutrition research capability, and they do not have to be agricultural institutions."

In establishing the USDA as the lead agency in food and nutrition in the government and country, the secretary of agriculture has brought together previously autonomous units into one coordinated program, said Bertrand.

"I'll still be working with researchers, educators and extension people, as I have my entire career," Bertrand pointed out. "I think I can provide the leadership to bring these units together.

"This is a new challenge. It is a different challenge.

Deaf Smith Vegetable Crops Good; Wheat Quality Lowers

BY JIM STEIERT
A-J Correspondent

HEREFORD — Deaf Smith County farmers have taken to their corn fields to get cultivating and sidedress fertilizer applications completed before the crop becomes too tall to work.

Area sugar beet growers are giving their crop attention as well, while planting of grain sorghum has been completed.

Wheat harvest is also at hand, although it promises to be a lackluster affair at best this year in Deaf Smith County.

And, with all that going, the area vegetables harvest is scant weeks away, with some potato harvesting already getting underway.

John Fuston, Deaf Smith County ASCS executive director,reported that corn planted on approximately 80,000 acres, "is really growing; and in most cases really looks good."

Fuston reported that a total of 80,000 acres grain sorghum has been planted here as well.

While corn is growing vigorously and grain sorghum is apparently getting off to a good start, Fuston emphasized that the story changes in a hurry when attention is focused on the wheat crop.

"We have a lot of weeds growing out through the wheat crop, and the quality and yields are gonna be way down," said Fuston.

About 30,000 or 40,000 acres of dryland wheat survived the drought.

Fuston explained that there are problems with weeds in the irrigated wheat as well, as wheat on the top of the beds in many fields froze out and weeds are growing up in the place of wheat plants.

A prolonged period of dry conditions which prevailed through the fall and winter, took its toll on yield prospects for both the dryland and irrigated wheat crops, and this year's wheat harvest will be a short-lived affair.

While rain boosted the corn crop here, the recent wet weather took a drastic toll on the limited cotton acreage, according to Marvin Payne of Hereford Farmers Gin, Inc.

Payne reported that only 2,000 acres of cotton remain of the 4,000-5,000 acres planted by farmers in Deaf Smith County and in the extreme northern portion of Castro County which is served by the Hereford gin.

He explained that much of the destroyed cotton acreage was planted to soybeans or sunflowers.

The heavy rainfall may have reduced vegetable yield prospects slightly as well, according to Wes Fisher of Dick Barret Produce of Hereford, but early markets for the potato harvest appear promising.

"The potatoes are still growing reasonably well. The rain just fouls up our irrigation schedule, and when things start to dry, everything dries up at once. Our production won't be as high as it has ever been," Fisher said.

Fisher reported that there will be no large volume of produce moving out of Hereford until after the traditional opening date for the potato harvest.

"The potatoes grew off real fast this spring. The weather was favorable for fast vine growth, and aside from a couple of weeks of heavy rains and light hail, we're okay. It's a matter of getting the harvesting machinery ready to go now," Fisher said.

Albert Maxwell of the Hereford office of La Mantia-Cullum-Collier & Co. reported only minor hail damage to that firm's vegetables acreage in neighboring Castro County.

"We have had some damage from hard rains and high winds, but we've had only one field with heavy hail damage and most of our onions seem to be recovering," Maxwell related.

"This is the first time we have totally missed the summer carrot crop, though," he continued. "We don't have any early carrots this year. Our entire 400 acres of early carrots were washed out and rained out. We're offered an optimistic prediction on the potato market, saying "it looks good and we expect it to stay there."

Weather Information Center Of Benefit To Agriculture

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Agriculture Department's chief economist says more has been done to obtain weather information for farmers and forecasters in the last year than at any time since the Weather Bureau was transferred out of the Agriculture Department in 1940.

But more must be done.

Howard Hjort tried to impress on the House Committee on Science and Technology last week a need to improve "availability and use of weather information in agriculture and forestry."

Agriculture losses from weather have been estimated at $8 billion a year. Costs of protecting forests and fighting forest fires, which are produced by weather, are estimated at more than $1 billion a year.

Shortly after Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland took office, the department developed a list of weather information and data needed by the department.

This year Bergland and Commerce Secretary Juanita Krebs worked out a joint program to meet Agriculture's requirements, including foreign weather data and more weather satellite technology.

"One of the first concrete actions growing out of this agreement has been the creation of a jointly operated world agricultural weather information center located in the Department of Agriculture," Hjort said.

He said the department hoped the center, staffed by National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and Agriculture Department personnel, will "improve pre-harvest production estimates and trade strategies."

The center provides a continuous watch of world weather conditions of agriculture producing and consuming nations to spot early signs of problems and to receive follow-up information on damage severity.

Hjort said Bergland also has created a formal means for coordination of weather programs within the department so use of weather information will be more widespread, particularly for early season crop estimates.

And the information is being passed out to farmers and foresters. The Forest Service and the National Weather Service are working on a joint pilot experiment to improve fire control planning in 13 Southern states. Another pilot program is being explored for farming.

Hjort said, "From such tests, we hope will emerge one USDA-National Weather Service Agricultural Forest Weather System that will serve all the needs of the renewable natural resource producers and managers."

But the same old problems remain, particularly credibility of weather forecasts. Hjort vowed to join with NOAA to help develop longer-range forecasts.

There also is a need to know localized weather forecasts for small areas, maybe even 40 to 50 acres, for such forestry use as controlled burning of vegetation that retards growth of young trees. If weather conditions are favorable, such burning can be effective, but it can be a hazard if winds carry the smoke away.

A third problem is the difficulty in gaining access to a great deal of weather information the National Weather Service has available but is unable to disseminate where and when it is needed. Hjort said that problem will be addressed by the Forest Service pilot program.

Cows, Bulls Matched By Computer

BRATTLEBORO, Vt. (UPI) — There's nothing new about computer dating services for people.

But the Holstein-Friesian Association of America has added a new wrinkle: it's're using a computer to match up cows and bulls.

"We are now using new technology to build a better cow," said one spokesman.

It hasn't produced any storybook romances, but HFA officials say it has resulted in a dramatic improvement in tme milk production of Holsteins — the country's most popular dairy breed.

"The average type is constantly improving throughout the country," said public information officer Lois Setter. "I think some of that has to be credited to this (computer)."

According to HFA Program Development and Research Director Ray Kliewer, the identities of more than 10 million registered Holstein cattle, dating back almost 100 years, are stored either on microfilm or in the memory banks of the organization's computer.

That system allows the parentage, pedigree and characteristics of any registered cow or bull to be determined almost instantly.

Top registered bulls are also listed in a booklet that includes general data about them, their production records, physical characteristics and traits that can be expected in their offspring.

Registered cows also are rated by the HFA's teams of evaluators.

Farmer-members can thus determine their herd's weak points, consult the listing of available sires, and achieve genetic improvements by individually matching each cow with the bulls most likely to produce better offspring.

As a result of the program, Kliewer said, the average Holstein has improved milk production by 1,000 pounds over a four year period.

The key to the system is artificial insemination.

Any HFA member has available frozen semen from thousands of bulls across the country. According to the HFA, some 75 percent of the cows are bred artificially.

According to Kliewer, dairymen view the computer age with varying degrees of enthusiaum or disinterest.

"We have people that know practically nothing about their cows," he said, "and others who are highly scientific."

If computer use has improved Holstein herds, it has also uncovered new problems, Kliewer said.

"Our ability to feed properly is our biggest limitation now," he said. "We have a higher level of genetics than we have the ability to enable the cows to express their inherited potential... The computer is going to become more and more a part of day-to-day management — particularly in the larger herds."

Kliewer is optimistic the computer can also solve the problems it has raised.

For example, he said it is moving into other areas such as nutrition, milking procedures and bovine health.

"It is moving at such a fast clip, it has opened avenues we never dreamed about," he said.

The Holstein breed was first developed in Europe by two migrant tribes, the Baverians and the Friesians, who moved into the Rhine delta region about 2,000 years ago.

In the area that later became the Netherlands, the Holstein was developed through a culling process aimed at utilizing the region's most abundant resource: grass.

Early American breeders turned to Holland for seed stock, and the importation of Holsteims flourished in the mid-19th Century until it was halted because of a cattle disease outbreak in Europe.

The American breeders then formed their own associations, which merged in 1885 into the HFA.

According to its own literature, the Brattleboro-based association, a non-profit membership organization made up of some 27,000 dairy farmers, now is the nation's largest dairy breed registry organization. 7

With a staff of 240, its primary goal is to improve and promote the breed, which spokesmen say accounts f9r 90 percent of the nation's dairy cattle.

In addition, HFA owns a commercial subsidiary which offers technical services to dairymen in such areas as marketing, breed development and herd management.

PLAINS AGRICULTURE

By DUANE HOWELL

THE GROWING POPULARITY OF OPEN-END spinning offers expanding market possibilities for U. S. cotton that is short in staple length but long on strength.

John McNutt, Cotton Inc. vice president for international marketing, says open-end spinning presents a particularly significant marketing opportunity for producers on the Texas High Plains.

For many years, McNutt points out, American cotton producers have been encouraged to produce cottons for use in ring spinning systems, which demand longer staple fiber to run most efficiently.

While ring systems still predominate, a substantial number of mills around the world have been turning to open-end spinning to produce yarn for such bottom-weight fabrics as denims, ducks, drills and twills.

"WITH THE OPEN-END SYSTEMS," McNutt explains, "the important thing is not staple length but fiber strength."

McNutt says the ideal fiber profile for cotton for open-end spinning would include these properties:

— Strength: 26.5 grams per tex. While there is not a good correlation between grams per tex and Pressley, McNutt says, "we would expect cotton registering above 90,000 pounds per square inch Pressley to give a grams per tex of 26.5."

— Micronaire: below 3.8 but "the cotton should be mature."

— Staple length: should be relatively uniform between 1 inch to 1/32nd inches.

Open-end systems now in use, McNutt says, represent a market for about 3 million bales of this kind of cotton.

"WE'RE IN A POSITION TO REACT to this market opportunity," the Cotton Inc. official says. "There are several new varieties of high strength, short staple cottons that are adaptable to the High Plains and other areas of West Texas. Interestingly, these varieties appear likely to produce greater yields than varieties traditionally planted."

McNutt directs Cotton Inc.'s efforts to increase export sales of U. S. cotton. He keeps tabs on the cotton needs of the textile industry overseas to help the U. S. cotton industry react to new export opportunities.

Of the open-end sytems now in use, he says, about 45 percent are in Western Europe, 20 percent in the United States, 20 percent in Japan, and the remainder elsewhere in the Far East.

Many of these mills, Mcnutt says, are looking for ready, continuing sources of cotton offering the right combination of properties for open-end spinning.

Eventually, he says, producers should be able to command a small premium for high strength, short staple cotton.

Commodities Trading Market In Deep South Draws Support

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — The Nixon administration's decision to sell wheat to the Soviet Union in the early 1970s started a trend in grain prices that could lead to creation of a commodities trading market in the Deep South early next year.

Bob Wright, a lawyer-farmer from Lafayette, La., is gambling $500,000 of his own money that speculators and major users of rice, cotton and soybeans will support the new commodities market in New Orleans.

Most of the nation's commodities exchanges are located in New York, Chicago or Kansas City. The Deep South hasn't had a commodities trading market since the New Orleans Cotton Exchange folded in 1961.

But Wright and his backers feel the time has come for a new market, which could be the first to successfully trade future rice contracts in the United States.

The New York Mercantile Exchange briefly offered rice contracts for sale in 1964, but the idea failed because prices were too stable to support a futures market.

Simply put, a futures market allows a farmer to sell his crop long before it is even harvested. That assures both the farmer and the buyer of a set price months before the crops are delivered.

"A lot of ideas have been tried over the years and, yes, a rice market did not go, but I don't think you can extrapolate from the events of the 1960s to what is now in the commodities market," said Philip M. Ricketts, chief economist for the proposed New Orleans Commodity Exchange.

"The whole nature of the commodities market has increased since the Russian wheat deal. All of a sudden Earl Butz opened the U.S. to the world market and prices started to do a dipsy doodle."

That "dipsy doodle" is essential to a futures market. Fluctuating prices attract speculators who are willing to buy rice and other commodities months before harvests in hopes of making a profit when the crops are delivered.

"Many people feel that a commodity exchange is nothing but a wild, speculative gambling idea," said Wright, who originated the idea of theNew Orleans market,"but from a businessman's standpoint, it is a very practical tool.

"Say Budweiser needs so many tons of rice next year, they will go in and buy that rice at the price it is now and they can plan for their cost. It's very practical."

In St. Louis, a spokesman for Anheuser-Busch, Inc. — the maker of Budweiser and the world's largest brewer — agreed his firm could benefit from a rice market. But he was cautious about the chances of survival for the new market.

"The addition of a futures trading market for rice would provide us with an additional avenue for buying rice and would tend to increase our purchasing flexibility," said Patrick T. Stokes, Anheuser-Busch's vice president for material acquisition.

"But the concept has been tried before and I believe it wasn't successful mainly because of a lack of interest on the part of investors. We're watching the situation to see how it develops."

Watching the situation even more closely will be the 250 investors Wright hopes to line up in the next few months to finance the project. The investors will pay $6,000 each for a seat on the exchange.

"These people will be using the exchange for trading and they can trade in any of those (four) crops," Wright said. "Anyone who applies and qualifies puts up $2,000 which is placed in escrow.

"Then upon completion of the 250 sales, they come up with an additional $4,000 making a total of $6,000 — all of which is refundable with interest should anything happen."

Wright said nearly half of the 250 memberships were sold six weeks after he mailed out a prospectus on the new exchange.

"People to whom we sell these and with whom we deal must be knowledgeable in the business," Wright said. "I could sell 250 memberships right here in Lafayette or in New Orleans, but we're trying to get people who are really knowledgeable in the industry."

Most of those people are in Chicago or New York, where Wright said "the average person just can't afford to buy a membership."

A seat on the Chicago Board of Trade sold for $180,000 last month, while two months ago a seat on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange sold for a record $200,000.

After the 250 memberships are sold, Wright and his backers must present its plans for staff organization and structure to the Commodity Futures Trading Commission which will review the entire proposal.

"Then we apply for final market designation," Wright said. "We're shooting for Jan. 1, 1979, as an opening date.

"That, of course, is our objective. Whether or not we can accomplish that depends on how fast we move first and how fast these various government agencies act."

Pork Producers Give Boost To Swine Research

Swine research at Texas Tech received a $2,500 boost Friday from the Texas Pork Producers Association (TPPA).

The aid, in the form of a grant, was presented at the 26th annual Swine Short Course at the Plains Cooperative Compress. A similar grant also was made to Texas A&M University.

About 140 farmers, ranchers, students, educators and allied industry representatives attended the session sponsored by Texas Tech and the TPPA.

Dr. Leland Tribble, Tech animal scientist, told the group that lean pork produced by today's farmers is an excellent source of protein and has much fewer calories than consumers might expect.

"The day when pork is associated with fat is fast fading," he said. "There are many doctors who no longer remove pork from low-fat diets because the supply of lean pork is readily available in the supermarket."

Tribble noted, however, that marketing is one of the producers' primary problems, and that swine production in Texas this year will be only 80 percent of the 1977 total.

Dr. Max Lennon, assistant dean of the College of Agricultural Sciences, accepted the pork producers' grant from Dr. Gene Waddill of Acco Feeds in Abilene, chairman of the TPPA's research committee.

It was awarded in support of research concerning swine marketing problems in Texas and particularly on the South Plains.

"This grant is designed to help stimulate new research in the area of swine marketing, which is one of the major problems in Texas and especially our area," said Tribble, who also is director of swine research at Tech.

Tribble, along with representatives of the agricultural economics, animal science and agricultural administration, will meet with the TPPA's research committee and Texas A&M representatives in August to discuss priorities and goals for the new area of swin research.

Grain Futures

CHICAGO (AP) — Soybean futures inched upward, while grains were essentially steady on the Chicago Board of Trade Thursday.

Market observers said some buyers seemd to be attracted by the lower prices that resulted from a recent selloff.

Analysts attributed those losses to liquidation, partly because of expectations that farmers had seeded more acres this spring than the industry previously thought.

Competition Presses Japanese Industry

TOKYO (AP) — Competition from Asia's four fastest-growing economies is putting pressure on some of Japan's most vulnerable industries, both here and abroad.

Japanese officials and businessmen say South Korea, Hong Kong, Taiwan and Singapore are all gradually cutting into the market for manufactured goods in the United States, in Asia, the Middle East and even in Japan itself.

A bitter pill for the Japanese is the fact that much of the success in the four Asian economies has been accomplished with Japanese technology.

"It's called the boomerang effect," said one businessman.

'HUMILITY TREE' MISSED

WASHINGTON (AP) — The "Humility Tree" is being sorely missed on Capitol Hill. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy was so touched by the passing of the giant English elm that he composed a eulogy.

In the eulogy, circulated to his colleagues in Congress, the Massachusetts Democrat noted that his late brother, John F. Kennedy, felt the tree taught senators humility because they had to bow their heads to pass under its spreading branches. "Few if any trees anywhere were better known or more loved by members of the Senate," Kennedy said in his eulogy, which was inserted in the Congressional Record.

Cotton Futures

NEW YORK (AP) — Cotton futures No. 2 closed 75 cents a bale lower to $4.75 higher Thursday.

Futures prices bounced back from Wednesday's sell-off because traders thought that the market had been over sold, brokers said.

The average price for strict low middling 11-16 inch spot cotton declined 133 points to 55.47 cents a pound Wednesday for the ten leading markets, according to the New York Cotton Exchange.

Futures Close Higher In Extension Of Rally

By Reuters

CHICAGO — Cattle futures ended 50 to 130 points higher — led by nearby August which gained 140 points for a time — Thursday on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange.

Sales were 23,179 cars. Prices were higher all day in an extension of Wednesday's sharp rally.

The light cattle supply and strength in beef activated fresh local and commission house buying, which lifted prices to the highest level in more than two weeks at 315 points above recent lows.

Deliveries total 307 thus far. Wholesale beef was up 1 3/4 to two cents at 82 1/2 to 84 1/4 cents a pound. The six markets expect 2,950 head today.

Cash cattle were steady to up $1.50, with the best top at $55 per hundredweight. The Omaha top was $52.50. Slaughter was 139,000 head.

Feeder cattle futures rose 65 points to the daily limit of 150 points, with several contracts sharing the lead. Sales totaled 2,685 cars.

The limit gain was the second in a row and lifted prices to two-week highs, more than three cents above recent lows.

There seemed to be a feeling that prices have "bottomed out" for the present at least and light runs and slaughter along with firmer beef prices were added incentives to buy.

The six markets expect 1,025 head today. Cash feeder cattle were steady to up $2, with the best top at $81 per hundredweight at San Antonio.

Hog futures finished 67 points higher to 25 points lower, led by July at the gain and August at the loss. Sales totaled 7,308 cars. Prices were up 105 points to down 55 points in erratic swings.

Strength in cattle touched off much of the buying, as did light hog runs. However, upward revision in slaughter and some lower cash hogs despite reduced arrivals brought on selling.

Deliveries total 21 thus far. Wholesale hams were off two cents to up one cent at 75 to 77 cents a pound, f.o.b. river. The six markets expect 17,200 head today.

Cash hogs were up 75 cents to off 50 cents, with the best top at $48.25 per hundredweight, a two-month low. Slaughter was 269,000 head.

Pork belly (bacon) futures climbed the daily limit of 200 points in distant August before ending 32 to 135 points higher, led by nearby July. Sales were 7,437 cars.

The limit gain was the second in a row and the fifth limit move.

In erratic trade, March gave up 37 points at one time. The increased pace of slaughter and light storage reductions brought pressure, as did easiness in cash. Much of the buying was a spillover from other meat pits.

Wholesale bacon was unchanged to off one-half cent at 50 to 52 cents a pound, f.o.b. river.

Louisiana Insurance Business Booming

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The rush is on for auto insurance in Louisiana, where all drivers will be required to have liability coverage by Saturday.

"They are driving us nuts," said Arthur M. Caron, an insurance agent in New Orleans.

It's the same story throughout the state. For weeks, agents have been swamped with business resulting from the new law requiring all drivers to carry liability insurance by June 31.

When the legislature passed the law last year, it was estimated that one out of every three Louisiana drivers had no liability insurance.

The new law probably will drop that statistic to one out of five, says H.P. Walker, administrator of the state Insurance Rating Commission, where all policies are registered.

"We got in an all-time record 61,366 policies last week," said Walker. "That averages out to about 12,273 a day. In other years we would average about 5,200 a day."

"New business is about four times as great this year as it was in 1977," said Joseph Helwick, a Travelers agent.

Most of the last-minute business seems to be from accident-prone drivers in the "high-risk" category, said John Hilbig, regional manger from the Insurance Information Institute.

High-risk drivers are insured through a state-supervised pool that assigns accident-prone drivers to all companies on a proportional basis.

State Farm is Louisiana's largest auto insurance underwriter, with 25 percent of the market. Under the pool arrangement, it also has to handle 25 percent of the high-risk business.

The increase in business has been so great that State Farm has been forced to create a new high-risk department for Louisiana, said Billy E. Wilson, a company executive.

"Where we had only about 3,000 high-risk policies in 1975, we expect to go as high as 50,000 before the end of 1978," he said. "The staff was three people and now it 20, but we are still sinking."

When the new law was being debated in the legislature last year, opponents warned that rates for good drivers would be forced up if companies were forced to insure high-risk drivers. But supporters of the law said it was unfair for some motorists to be allowed to drive without any insurance.

The new law requires motorists to state that they have liability coverage when when obtain their auto license tags and inspection stickers. If a person is caught lying or has an accident without insurance, he can lose his license.

Mayor, Manager Drive Garbage Trucks, Fined

ASHEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Asheville's mayor and city manager drove garbage trucks Thursday as sanitation workers continued their strike, but the chief of police ticketed both men for driving without proper permits.

Mayor Roy M. Trantham and City Manager Kenneth A. Michalove were given tickets by Chief Melvin L. Tucker as the two returned to the city garage after making rounds.

Earlier, Trantham had had problems maneuvering his truck out of the city garage, scraping the side of the truck on a wall beside the garage door. Tucker said the damage to the city's truck was minor and that Trantham was not given a ticket for the accident.

Trantham and Michalove were joined by five other trucks driven by volunteers on a tour of the city, as a 3-day-old strike by sanitation and water department employees showed no sign of ending.

The drivers took the trucks to six pick-up locations in the city, where citizens were urged to bring their garbage for collection.
