Sudan shaken

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — A major earthquake rumbled through the jungles of southern Sudan on Sunday near the war-torn region's largest city, but officials said there appeared to be no casualties and little damage.

The quake measured 7.5 on the Richter scale. A temblor of that size is capable of causing widespread destruction.

The official Sudan News Agency said the earthquake caused no deaths or injuries. But much of the area affected by the quake is so isolated that any news might take days or weeks.

Juba, southern Sudan's largest city, is 60 miles southwest of the quake's reported epicenter. The region has been hit by famine as well as fighting between the government and the rebel People's Liberation Army.

Stormie's liver

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A Texas girl who is the world's longest surviving recipient of a heart-liver transplant returned to Pittsburgh on Sunday so doctors can check signs she may be rejecting her second transplanted liver.

Stormie Jones, 12, of White Settlement was listed in fair condition Sunday evening at Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh, hospital spokeswoman Lynn McMahon said.

Doctors plan to perform tests over the next few days to determine whether dangerously high liver enzyme levels mean Stormie is rejecting the organ.

Bush indicates summit issues still unresolved

■ President travels from Houston to Portland for public appearances as pre-summit efforts continue.

Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. — President Bush said Sunday that despite new agreements on arms control, differences on "a wide array of subjects" remain to be debated at his upcoming summit with Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev.

Even though Secretary of State James A. Baker III and his Soviet counterparts failed to make substantial progress on reducing troops and tanks in Europe during four days of talks in Moscow, Bush said he still believes a conventional forces treaty can be completed by the end of the year.

"We've got to get that done," he said. "Until it's totally finished we've got to stay in close consultation" with the Soviets.

Although continuing to voice a measured reaction to the agreements reached Saturday, the president said that, overall, "I'm satisfied with the progress made in Moscow that we'll have a good summit.

"In the arms control area, there's been some progress. There still remain some other problems," including the sticky issue of reducing tanks and troops in Europe, he told reporters traveling with him on Air Force One from Houston to Portland.

Other issues of conflict he expects to discuss in the May 30-June 3 summit in Washington, Bush said, include German reunification and regional problems in Afghanistan and Cuba.

"Nobody thought it would be easy, so we're just plugging away on a wide array of agenda items," he said. "The differences will be on the agenda."

Baker's talks in Moscow resulted in agreement on chemical weapons reductions and resolution of thorny sticking points on sea-launched and air-launched Cruise missiles.

U.S. officials said the arms control agreement will result in some kind of summit declaration — short of a formal treaty — that would point the way to an overall reduction of 30 percent to 35 percent in U.S. and Soviet long-range bombers, missiles and submarines.

Bush refused to clarify conflicting reports about what Secretary of state James A. Baker III told Lithuanian Prime Minister Kazimiera Prunskiene while in Moscow. U.S. officials with Baker denied statements by some sources that he had urged the Lithuanians to suspend their declaration of independence from the Soviet Union.

Bush said he would not discuss what Baker might have said in private, saying only, "We want to see talks going," between Moscow and the Lithuanian leaders. "We want to see self determination of the people of Lithuania."

Pressed on the U.S. position regarding whether Lithuania should go along with Moscow's demand that it suspend the independence gambit, Bush added that "There's no point when you're trying to make progress to discuss every aspect of

NASA 'pleased' with first Hubble photo

By Paul Recer
AP Science Writer

GREENBELT, Md. — NASA engineers captured the "first light" photograph Sunday of the Hubble Space Telescope and a scientist said the experts "were pleased as punch" with the spectacular image.

A camera on th telescope clicked its shutter twice beg...ing at 11:13 a.m. EDT and the images were relayed to the ground more than two hours later, giving astronomers their first glimpses of the view from the $1.5 billion telescope.

"It's quite an image. Fantastic," James Westphal, the principal scientist for the camera used in the first photo exercise, said as one the photos was displayed on a TV screen.

"We are just as pleased as punch at this point," Westphal said. "Our image is significantly better than we were concerned that it might be."

Westphal said the Hubble image revealed a double star that was previously unseen in ground-based photographs taken at an observatory in Chile.

"We didn't know it was a double star," said Westphal, noting that he had expected the first image to be "an engineering test."

But because of the clarity of the image, he said "Boy, we could get lots of science out of this right now."

The quality of the photo was a boost for National Aeronautics and Space Administration officials who have gone through an unexpectedly troubled checkout and testing period with the costly telescope, which is in orbit 381 miles above Earth.

Woman's body found by road near Stanton

Staff Report

STANTON — The body of a Midland woman was discovered Sunday morning in a ditch along State Highway 137 about seven miles south of here, a Martin County Sheriff's Office spokesman said.

The name of the victim, described as a female in her 20s, was being withheld pending notification of relatives.

The spokesman said investigators had not ruled out the possibility of foul play in the case, but had not determined a cause of death.

The fully clothed body apparently had been dead several hours when it was discovered by a passing truckdriver about 6:40 a.m. Sunday, the spokesman said.

He said he did not know whether an autopsy would be performed. Officials in Glasscock County, where the body was found, could not be reached for comment Sunday evening.

Sheriff's deputies from Midland, Glasscock and Martin counties as well as DPS officers were assisting with the investigation, the spokesman said.

Did the Pilgrims arrive in a Pinto?

■ On modified citizenship tests, community college students offer some interesting revisions of history.

Associated Press

BELLEVUE, Wash. — How's this for revisionist history? The pilgrims sailed to America in the Pinto. Paul Revere wrote "The Star-Spangled Banner." Sandra Day O'Connor is chief justice of the U.S. Supreme Court.

And Gen. Douglas MacArthur said, "Give me liberty or give me death." Or was it Martin Luther King Jr.?

These are samplings of responses from community-college students to questions that might be asked of immigrants seeking U.S. citizenship.

Just five of 119 students at Bellevue Community College managed a passing grade of 70 percent or better.

"This is pretty bad," said Aslam Khan, head of the college's political science department, who administered the test.

"Why should we give these questions to foreigners when our own citizens don't know what is going on?" asked the Pakistan-born Khan, who took such a test when he became a naturalized citizen.

Fewer than half the students knew that the supreme law of the land is the Constitution.

When asked what kind of government the United States has, many answered "capitalist," rather than a democracy.

Some said the pilgrims left Europe because they were searching for something to colonize, apparently forgetting the religious persecution that prompted them to flee to the New World.

A decade ago, Khan gave a similar test of 10 questions to 118 students. Six passed.

"It's not getting any better," he said.

It may be good for a few snickers when a student identifies Abraham Lincoln as the principal author of the Declaration of Independence, but when only one student answers 29 of the 30

WEATHER SUMMARY

High near 90 anticipated

Staff Report

National Weather Service forecasters at Midland International Airport are calling for sunny skies today and a high near 90. Winds will be from the northwest and north at 5 to 15 mph.

Tonight will be fair with a low in the mid 50s.

Tuesday will be partly cloudy, with a high in the upper 80s.

Sunday's high was 93 degrees, compared with the record of 101 set in 1989. The low on Sunday was 71. The record low for today is 49, set in 1967.

STATE

Anyone walking the streets of Laredo on Sunday probably was trying to stay in whatever shade he could find.

The temperature was 103 degrees at 3 p.m. and families were lining up at local restaurants for a cooling Sunday sundae.

"They're buying six to eight cones at a time," said Ray Macias, an assistant manager at a restaurant with a long line at the drive-through window. "Sundaes and shakes are going real well."

While Laredo was the hottest point in the state, other Texas cities also got a taste of simmering summer-like heat.

It was 96 degrees in Wichita Falls and 94 in Dallas.

Thunderstorms were developing Sunday afternoon in Southeast Texas, and skies were partly cloudy to cloudy across the eastern half of the state.

Clear skies were spreading across the western half of the state behind a dry line stretching from Mineral Wells to Marfa by late Sunday afternoon.

NATION

Showers and thunderstorms fell Sunday over the south-central United States, the Southeast and the Northeast after torrential rains triggered severe flooding in Hot Springs, Ark.

Showers fell over much of the Northwest. Snow fell at higher elevations of northern California and western Nevada; it was heavy over California's northern Sierra Nevada and Nevada's portion of Lake Tahoe.

Details on thrift action linked to Bush's son

N.Y. Times News Service

DENVER — Colorado's top savings and loan regulator wanted to close a thrift connected to President Bush's son during the 1988 presidential campaign, but was headed off by federal regulators, the San Francisco Chronicle has learned.

Although Denver-based Silverado Savings & Loan was costing taxpayers hundreds of thousands of dollars with each additional day that it remained open, it was not seized until a month after Bush was elected president in November 1988. Analysts now say the collapse may cost taxpayers $1 billion.

The House Banking Committee opens two days of hearings on Silverado on Tuesday, and the peculiarities in the timing and method of Silverado's closure could bring politically loaded questioning from the members.

The president's 34-year-old son, Neil Bush, a former director of the thrift, is scheduled to testify Wednesday.

No one has hinted that Neil Bush did anything to try to influence regulators, and the president's son has noted that he cannot be held responsible for regulators' actions or perceptions.

It was disclosed in December that the federal government had been slow in closing Silverado. Information obtained last week showed that federal regulators actually intervened to delay a takeover planned by Colorado officials in the home stretch of the 1988 presidential election.

On Aug. 15, 1988, Colorado S&L Commissioner Dave Paul issued an order saying the state would seize insolvent Silverado unless it obtained $62.1 million in capital by October 13, almost four weeks before the national election.

That declaration occurred about the time Neil Bush resigned as a Silverado director and shortly before his father captured the presidential nomination at the August Republican convention.

In an interview, Paul said that Silverado failed to cut its capital deficit by the mid-October deadline. Instead, he said, it actually doubled its capital deficit between the quarterly periods ending June 30 and September 30.

Paul said he prepared to seize the thrift immediately.

"We had grounds to take possession of Silverado at that time," Paul said.

"I told the federal regulators I was prepared to act, and I didn't have any grounds not to act."

Silverado's own auditors had reported on July 21, 1988, that the thrift had been insolvent by at least $200 million since the end of 1987. In Colorado, insolvency is mandatory legal grounds for the government to seize a thrift to stop the bleeding of more taxpayer-insured deposits.

But Paul said Kermit Mowbray, president of the Topeka Federal Home Loan Bank, wrote two letters "requesting very strongly" that the Silverado closure be extended by 45 days, carrying it to December.

HUBBLE: Theta Carina star group photographed

(From 1A)

The target for Hubble's first image was a star cluster called Theta Carina, a group of objects about 1,260 light years from Earth. The telescope took two exposures, one for a single second and another lasting 30 seconds.

Westphal said the 30-second exposure was chosen for analysis because it gave better detail.

Engineers manipulated the images while people watched on television, and it took them over an hour to change the raw electronic data from Hubble into a photograph on a TV screen.

"Nobody has ever done this before, so we had to learn how," Westphal said. "The technical challenge now is to get the telescope in even sharper focus."

The scientists said that eventually they expect to get photographs at least seven times sharper than the one released Sunday.

The image came down as four separate parts of the same photo. Engineers then used computer instructions to enhance the quality of each point of light. The initial look at the photo showed very faint points of light on a gray field.

After manipulation, the stars were brightened, the background was darkened and the double star could be seen easily.

Theta Carina is part of a constellation called Carina, a word that means "ship's keel," that is visible from the ground only in the Southern Hemisphere. The star cluster is identified in the New General Catalogue of stars as 3532 and is thought to be 3 billion years old. Its distance from Earth is about 7,400,000,000,000,000 miles.

NASA officials said the first light photo is an important engineering milestone for the Hubble checkout.

Engineers have spent a month attempting to align and focus the instruments of Hubble. They have had to overcome computer problems, a fouled antenna, a programing error that resulted from an ordinary math mistake and an unexplained wobble that still is unresolved.

BUSH: 'Good summit' result foreseen

it in public."

Later, in a speech to a law enforcement group, Bush accused Congress of spawning "weak imitations" of his proposals to attack crime after allowing them to languish for a year.

"We must reject those who soft-pedal the need to be hard on crime," Bush said a day in advance of Senate debate on an anti-crime bill.

He accused lawmakers of sitting on key anti-crime measures he first proposed a year ago. But he also acknowledged that Congress agreed to his request for more federal law enforcement officers, prosecutors and prisons as part of anti-drug legislation enacted earlier.

Bush said he still wants congressional action on his call for expanded use of the death penalty, fewer burdens on police in gathering evidence and limits on the length prisoners have for filing federal appeals.

"I urge the Senate and in coming weeks the House to act quickly and build America up by opposing those who would tear America down," he said.

Senate Democrats have recrafted Bush's proposals and, with the support of law enforcement groups, inserted into the package a ban on the sale and manufacture of nine types of semiautomatic assault weapons.

Fred McClure, Bush's legislative liaison, said the administration now opposes much of the package and will push for a substitute version by Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C.

The president visited Portland to attend a fund-raising event Monday for gubernatorial candidate Dave Frohnmayer, and also for Sunday's dedication of a memorial to Portland police officers slain in the line of duty.

The department has lost 21 officers in its 139-year history, the last one 6 years ago, the White House said.

Bush said the administration anti-crime proposal he unveiled in May 1989 would help free the country from violent crime.

"Yet for the past year it has gathered dust in the House and spawned weak imitations in the Senate," he said. "America deserves better. So do the 163 police officers who died last year."

Conservatives and the National Rifle Association are pushing hard to remove the proposed ban on semiautomatic assault weapons in the Democratic bill. Although he has move to restrict imports of assault weapons, Bush has been unwilling to ban domestically produced models.

The Democratic package, however, also includes some provisions more to Bush's liking. It authorizes the death penalty for 30 federal crimes, including presidential assassination, and reshapes the sometimes drawn-out post-appeals process under which convicts seek new trials.

The bill also fine tunes the nation's money-laundering laws and reverses Attorney General Dick Thornburgh's decision giving local U.S. attorneys control over the Justice Department's organized-crime strike forces.

Doctors fear Stormie again rejecting liver

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A Texas girl who is the world's longest surviving recipient of a heart-liver transplant returned to Pittsburgh on Sunday so doctors can check signs she may be rejecting her second transplanted liver.

Stormie Jones, 12, of White Settlement was listed in fair condition Sunday evening at Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh, hospital spokeswoman Lynn McMahon said.

Doctors plan to perform tests over the next few days to determine whether dangerously high liver enzyme levels mean Stormie is rejecting the organ, Ms. McMahon said.

"One of her blood level measurements is elevated and typically that is something that happens when the body is rejecting a transplanted liver," she said.

"When doctors find rejection they usually try first to correct it through medication. ... While it's disappointing she's had to return, it doesn't have to be an indication of a severe problem."

While it's too early for doctors to determine what should be done, they currently plan to administer FK-506, a new, experimental anti-rejection drug, intravenously at higher doses for at least three days, hospital spokeswoman Sue Cardillo said. Stormie usually takes the drug orally.

Stormie, who will turn 13 on May 31, traveled by air to Pittsburgh early Sunday and walked into the hospital about 1:15 p.m., Ms. McMahon said.

She and her mother, Lois "Suzie" Purcell, met briefly with reporters after being coaxed into doing so by hospital staff, who wanted to assure the public the girl was not critically ill. She had previously declined to appear.

"Remember I'm getting paid for this," she joked as she sat down before microphones reporters set up in the hospital's public relations department. "And this is just for five minutes."

Stormie said she felt fine and was not experiencing any symptoms.

The trip back to Pittsburgh wasn't a surprise because results of routine tests performed in Texas revealed signs of trouble last week, she said.

"I've been in the hospital all weekend, so it wasn't a surprise," she said.

Stormie's stepfather, Alan Purcell, said Sunday that she was especially discouraged by the possible rejection since she had not felt sick.

"She's not doing too good this time. She's a little disappointed," Purcell said. "What do you expect of a 12-year-old child? She's tired. ... She's been through more than most humans will ever go through in two lifetimes. She'd like to be normal for awhile."

"Stormie is real nervous," a family friend, Theresa Millikan, said. "She doesn't want to be stuck with any more needles. She told us she's had enough."

Weather radar's future is now

By Randolph E. Schmid

WASHINGTON (AP) — For more than a decade Doppler radar has been the weather technology of the future. At the National Weather Service the future, finally, is now.

The first Next Generation Weather Radar — NEXRAD — is being installed in Oklahoma City.

A second will go to Melbourne, Fla., in late summer and the third near Washington after the first of next year.

NEXRAD will bring substantial improvement to the forecasting of severe storms and floods, predicted Commerce Secretary Robert A. Mosbacher.

That already has begun, says National Weather Service Director Elbert W. Friday Jr.

During a 5½-month test in Oklahoma, NEXRAD was used in preparing warnings for 450 severe weather events, Friday said.

"It was a beautiful season to test a system, but it was a terrible season for the residents of Oklahoma," he said in a recent interview. "This was one of the most active seasons they had had in a long time."

During that period, weather offices accurately warned of storms about 59 percent of the time. The NEXRAD results were 91 percent, Friday said. And the false alarm rate was cut from about 60 percent to 21 percent at the Doppler radar site.

Friday, pointing to the hazy sky outside his 18th floor office in Silver Spring, Md., said current radars would see nothing there. But NEXRAD, he said, would see air movement in that sky, telling forecasters wind speed and direction to help make predictions.

Radars send out a short radio pulse and listen for it to bounce back. The time it takes tells the distance from whatever the signal bounced off. The direction can be seen from where the radar faces.

The current WSR-57 and WSR-74 radars, some 30 years old, can detect things like rain, airplanes and buildings.

NEXRAD can also see the invisible moisture and dust in apparently clear air. And it can sense movement, telling which way the wind is blowing at different levels by measuring the change in frequency of the signal bouncing back.

Just as an ambulance siren has a higher pitch coming toward you than one going away, radar waves change depending on the movement and speed of the object reflecting them back.

Being able to see where the direction of the wind changes abruptly can help a forecaster determine where a storm is likely to develop and can tell a pilot where his plane may encounter dangerous turbulence.

This allowed meteorologists to give an hour and a half warning of a tornado developing in the Denver area last year, Friday said.

"By seeing those fine-scale details in the atmosphere you can identify ... factors that will be triggering the development of the storm," instead of waiting to spot the twister, Friday explained.

In combination with satellites and other new systems, NEXRAD "is going to generate much more of a detailed look at the atmosphere than we've ever had before," he said.

This should help meteorologists understand "what drives all of the very small-scale features that really do cause most of the problems for ... the flash floods and the heavy snows and the tornadoes and the thunderstorms."

The radars and associated computerized work stations are being built by the Unisys Corp.

In addition to the National Weather Service, the price tag of more than $400 million for the 175 radars is being shared by the departments of Defense and Transportation.

An Air Force test analysis of the NEXRAD found some serious shortcomings, Friday acknowledged. But that was the idea, he said.

Maintenance problems, with the machinery not operating for long periods, were the biggest troubles, according to the Air Force. Some operators rated the radars not acceptable.

Many involved construction problems, and those have been taken care of, Friday said.

Another problem cited by the Air Force technicians was "range folding," which also occurs with current radars.

Sometimes the bounce-back signal received by a radar is not from the most recent pulse, but an earlier one coming back from a more distant object.

The computer can't tell the difference, assuming all signals are from the most recent pulse. That results in a distant storm showing up on radar as nearby.

Computers now have been programmed to show purple on the screen when two signals come back from the same spot.

For more than a decade, Doppler radar has been the weather technology of the future. The National Weather Service of the future is now, however. Above, Mike Looney of Denver operates a computerized work station similar to the type which will be installed in weather offices across the nation.

Atop the Sphinx, Japanese engineer Shin Maekawa of the Getty Conservation Institute, Marina del Rey, Calif., unveiled this week a monitoring system to gather data on reasons for the Sphinx's decay. The year-long project is designed to help scientists develop a conservation program for the 4,600-year-old monument.

Getty monitoring station to monitor ancient Sphinx

By Mimi Mann

GIZA PLATEAU, Egypt (AP) — A computerized weather station atop the Sphinx will begin transmitting data that scientists hope will help them stop the monument's alarming decay, officials said this week.

"The Sphinx has deteriorated more in the last 50 years than in all previous centuries of its existence combined," said Sayed Tawfik, Egypt's chairman of antiquities.

The $200,000 solar-powered station was developed by the Getty Conservation Institute of Marina del Rey, Calif., for a project in China and was adapted for the Sphinx.

People have worked for thousands of years to keep the 4,600-year-old crouching lion with a pharaoh's face from falling apart, but nothing has worked for very long.

Rocks still fall from the structure, located at the base of the Giza Pyramids. A large stone fell from the great beast's shoulder in February 1988, provoking an international outcry.

The massive stone face now is covered with scaffolding. Egyptian conservationists are removing and replacing blocks already restored on the right paw and sides, trying to make the Sphinx look like its old self.

Scientists said the monitor will remain in place for at least a year, transmitting data to a computer a mile away.

It will monitor rainfall, wind direction and speed, relative humidity, pollutants, temperature and the effects of water and salt on the limestone layers that make up the statue. All are possible causes of the monument's problems.

Column pays off

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Bachelor sports columnist John Rohde abandoned the sporting world in his column Wednesday, and narrowed his audience to one special person in hopes of gaining a wife.

It worked.

In his offbeat marriage proposal Rohde's wrote, "I promise to return to our usual subject tomorrow, but today I'm going to try to change someone's life. My own.

"It's with trembling fingers and a racing heart that I type the following: 'Debbie Burchart, will you marry me?'"

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, MAY 21, 1990

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your ambition will carry you to new heights in the coming months. Changes in your career this August will put extra money in your pocket. A move to another city or state deserves consideration in October. Host a family gathering over the winter holidays. A long-sought reconciliation is possible. Traveling in early 1991 will put you in touch with former and future employers. Launch a partnership with plenty of fanfare. Your sense of style impresses those in authority.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: poet Alexander Pope, actor Raymond Burr, actress Peggy Cass, financier Armand Hammer.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): If you use your imagination, a creative endeavor will be both exciting and lucrative. Singles looking for romance should take advantage of every opportunity to meet new people. Dress to impress!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The emphasis today is on faraway places, job matters and social affairs. Get out and mingle to see what is going on. Continue to watch over your assets. Seek important introductions.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A speech gives you fresh inspiration and hope. Projects that call on your creative talents promise to be successful. One venture could develop into a second career. Avoid arguments with mate.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Unexpected good luck in your financial dealings will let you enjoy the pleasures of group activities. New acquaintances could turn into longtime friends. Write letters to loved ones far away from home.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Telling tall tales will only lead to trouble. Stick to the facts to make the most headway. Your social life accelerates. Almost without realizing it, you embark on a new romance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Family affairs have top priority now. Discuss ways to upgrade your home. Listen to everyone's ideas. A parent's health could be cause for concern. You may think it best to consult specialists.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your relationship with a loved one improves, making it possible for you to plan joint activities. Start new projects. Family members will be glad to help. An old flame can be rekindled.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A special outing with your family or friends is a source of joy. Share the cooking chores by asking everyone to bring along one dish. A softball game holds appeal for all ages.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Spending time with those who are less fortunate will give you a new perspective. Secret negotiations are helpful for advancing your personal plans. Close friends introduce you to influential people.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A shortcut lets you conclude a meeting in record time. Work hard to patch up a misunderstanding. A long-distance phone call fills in the missing pieces of a puzzle.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Watch what you say to the neighbors or you could stir up a hornet's nest. Reading the newspaper will trigger some terrific ideas. Spend quality time with offspring, doing what they enjoy.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be careful when handling someone else's money. You alone will be held responsible. Although domestic squabbles are possible this afternoon, the evening should bring harmony. Dine out in style.

GOREN BRIDGE

With Omar Sharif and Tannah Hirsch

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K74 ♡K2 ◇AJ10 ♣QJ983

| South | West | North | East |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ♠ | Pass | 1 ♡ | Pass |
| 1 NT | Pass | 2 ♠ | Pass |
| 2 NT | Pass | 3 ♣ | Pass |
| ? | | | |

What do you bid now?
A.—The kings in partner's suits enhance the value of your hand, so we don't think you should sign off with three no trump, despite your solid stoppers in the unbid suit. However, you do not have adequate support for either of partner's suits. Cue-bid three diamonds; partner's next bid should give you a better idea of the potential of the combined holding.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK1075 ♡3 ◇KJ5 ♣A1063

| South | West | North | East |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ♠ | Pass | 1 NT | Pass |
| ? | | | |

A.—You have an unbalanced hand, so there is no reason why you should want to pass. Since partner's hand could be completely unsuited to spades, and you can play in any one of three suits, make your natural rebid of two clubs to see what develops.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠762 ♡Q8 ◇AKQ ♣AKJ63

| South | West | North | East |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ♠ | Pass | 1 ♡ | Pass |
| ? | | | |

What do you bid now?
A.—You have a very good hand and no convenient way to show it! To jump in no trump without a stopper in the unbid suit would be tantamount to suicide, and you are short a club for a jump to three clubs. The solution is to reverse with two diamonds, which is forcing for a round.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K6 ♡AJ5 ◇7 ♣Q865432

| West | North | East | South |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 NT | 2 ♠ | Pass | ? |

What action do you take?
A.—Only a supreme pessimist would consider passing. Since partner should have both a good hand and good suit at this vulnerability, it's simply a matter of whether to bid three or four spades. With only two trumps, your ruffing power is limited, so we prefer the conservative raise to three spades.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠Q87 ♡KJ63 ◇64 ♣AK82

| North | East | South | West |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ◇ | Pass | 1 ♡ | Pass |
| 4 ♡ | Pass | ? | |

What action do you take?
A.—There are those who labor under the misapprehension that North's jump to game is a "drop dead" bid. Far from it—it shows a powerful hand worth some 20 points in support of hearts. You are in the slam zone unless you have two fast losers in spades. Blackwood won't help. Start by cue-bidding five clubs.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KQ7652 ♡AK5 ◇AK8 ♣7

| South | West | North | East |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ♠ | Pass | 2 ♠ | Pass |
| ? | | | |

What do you bid now?
A.—There might be a scientific way to ascertain whether partner has the cards you need to make slam, but we don't know of one other than, perhaps, relay bids. We would simply jump to four no trump and bid six hearts if partner shows at least one ace.

'Newhart's' Darryls to speak — and you heard it here first

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Actor William Sanderson, who portrays Larry on the CBS-TV show "Newhart," says the usually silent brothers Darryl and Darryl will speak during the series' final episode Monday night.

"It's a bizarre episode worth watching," Sanderson said by telephone from Raleigh, N.C., where he was visiting. "It has some great surprises at the end. They shot two endings, and I don't know which one they'll use."

He also said Larry, Darryl and Darryl have a love interest in the final show.

"It's three women," he said. "We sort of get lucky. I wish I could tell you more, but I can't betray somebody."

The final show, he said, has a Japanese investor buying Newhart's Vermont inn and turning the property into a golf course.

"I think it's a good way to end it if you have to end it," he said. "There's talk of a spinoff. We may come back and we may not."

On the show, Larry has always done the talking for the three, who are plain mountain folk. This time, Sanderson said, "My brothers are going to talk."

RADNOR, Pa. (AP) — "60 Minutes" correspondent Steve Kroft is a Vietnam veteran whose journalism career has taken him to Beirut, Northern Ireland and El Salvador.

But there was nothing, he says, "that was quite as daunting or that I ever went into with so many reservations as this first year on '60 Minutes.'"

Kroft, 44, came to the staff of the highly-rated CBS News show from the network's low-rated "West 57th."

"It was difficult, in part, because there are only eight people who have had this job, and there is a fair amount of pressure. You don't want to screw up," he said in the current TV Guide. "I'm one of the few people ever to have come here who wasn't an established star. I'm just a reporter."

That lack of glamour doesn't necessarily hurt, he said. Kroft said he's been told "that I come across as a real person — which probably comes from the fact that I've never been a full-time anchorman."

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Rev. Leon Sullivan, the preacher who shaped U.S. business practices in South Africa, is turning his attention to the homeless.

The first of what he hopes will be many Human Development Centers nationwide opened Sunday in a converted bank building in north Philadelphia.

"It's the biggest problem in America, and it's tied to the problem of drugs and the problem of AIDS in the inner city," Sullivan said last week in a telephone interview. "You've got to get at the causes of the problems."

Sullivan retired in 1988 from the pulpit of Zion Baptist Church to head the International Foundation for Education and Self Help in Phoenix.

He said other homeless programs "put them in a bed or they give them a bowl of soup, but they don't prepare them for a better life. And that's what we're going to do."

The centers are an outgrowth of the Opportunities Industrialization Centers that Sullivan founded in north Philadelphia in 1964. The centers have provided job training to more than a million people in more than 100 U.S. cities, Great Britain and 13 African nations.

Sullivan also wrote the Sullivan Principles, a code of conduct for U.S. companies operating in white-ruled South Africa. The guidelines were designed to help the black majority through training and enlightened labor standards.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Singer-songwriter Steve Earle was leading the pack when about 200 motorcyclists rallied to promote handgun safety.

The bikers rode Saturday to a cemetery where 13-year-old Jeffrey Johnson is buried. He was killed in a game of Russian roulette in February.

The rally was planned "to remind the public of the dangers of children and firearms, and remind parents how quickly and how easily a tragedy like this can happen," said Phil Chamblee, a member of the Nashville Harley Owners Group.

Cancer benefit

Funding 'porn' violates taxpayer

Art, like beauty, is in the eye of the beholder. What constitutes a work of art to some viewers falls far short of that definition for others. In some instances, particular works are offensive to the public in general.

That's been the case in recent weeks as exhibits of photographs by the late Robert Mapplethorpe and others depicting acts of homosexual sex, sado-masochistic acts and other images offensive to many people have met with resistance across the nation and in some instances have resulted in the shows being closed. Interestingly, the works have been federally funded and continue to be by Congress.

Without question, the freedom necessary to permit artists to create significant and challenging works of art always carries the risk that the artist will exceed the bounds of propriety and offend society in general. To a degree, that has always been the case in the field of art and, as a rule, those now considered masters have been on the cutting edge of morality.

Although our society has long grappled with a workable definition for obscenity, it's understandable why many Americans would object to an exhibit of photographs depicting homosexual — or even heterosexual — acts of sex and open to the general public. The largely unspoken determination of what is morally acceptable would not tolerate such an exhibition.

In Midland in recent weeks, art-lovers have had the opportunity to view works of art by well-known artisans from throughout the United States. The Arts Assembly of Midland's renowned "Celebration of the Arts," the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library's spring art show and sale, and other events have provided a good glimpse of the art this community's residents deem worthy and acceptable for public exhibition. While this is not Minneapolis, Cincinnati or New York, Midlanders probably closely mirror the average American's mood in terms of what is acceptable and what is not.

Yet the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA) — the government agency that promotes the arts in this country — has been financing the creation of works of art that span the gamut of offerings in the art world — from classical artwork to what even NEA Chairman John Frohnmayer acknowledged earlier this year are "obscene" photographs when considered individually. So the question that arises is does the NEA have any business funding with taxpayer dollars works to which a large segment of the general public objects?

We think not. Certainly artists should continue to have the right to produce questionable works of art, but even the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that it is illegal for the NEA to fund obscenity, although the court acknowledged that an art show had to be considered in its entirety rather than by individual works. No doubt artists producing questionable works will consider it "censorship" if their works are not chosen for funding by the NEA, but doesn't the individual also have the right to censor what he sees or hears?

Artists producing questionable works should face the free-market test to see if their works are acceptable. That has long been the breaking point of success in any endeavor. They shouldn't look for a free ride from the nation's taxpayers in producing their "artwork."

State income tax defines fault line

The latest exchange in Austin on the dreaded "I-word" went this way:

Mike Toomey, a top adviser to Gov. Clements, said, "I wish you'd ask them (Democratic lawmakers) how they intend to fund their $9 billion to $10 billion (school financing) program. There's no way to do it but with an income tax. That's irresponsible."

In rebuttal, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said: "An income tax is coming in the next few years regardless of the education bill, and I think that will be a great day for the state."

There's a lot of semantic space between "irresponsible" and "a great day for Texas," but this serves to show where the political fault line lies in the current debate in Texas over ways and means and taxes...

But there are two other points that tilt this debate to Hobby's side of the line:

- The sales tax cannot be deducted from federal income taxes, which costs Texas millions of dollars in unnecessary federal taxes.
- The existing tax structure is simply inadequate to provide the revenue Texas needs; it has been inadequate since the oil and gas share of tax revenues began its long decline...

It might be easier to accept if the income tax replaced other unpopular taxes, like the school property tax, and/or sharply reduced the sales tax...

Keep firearms safely

In Houston, two more children (recently) were shot to death by youngsters, bringing to eight the number of children accidentally killed by their playmates this year. In the most recent killing, an 18-month-old boy was shot in the head by his 3-year-old brother. Police say the father had taken out a semi-automatic pistol and placed it on the floor. The father turned around to pick up a bullet laying on the closet floor; the little boy picked up the gun and fired it, killing his brother.

In yet another incident ... a 12-year-old boy was shot in the chest by a friend who thought he was handling an unloaded weapon. The victim died a few hours later.

A child dies from accidental gunshot almost every day in this country. Probably 99 percent of these accidents were preventable, by simply exercising common sense. Keep guns out of the reach of children. Keep them locked away, keep them unloaded and put the ammunition somewhere else, away from the weapon.

JACK ANDERSON

Iran's good-will gestures whitewash

WASHINGTON — Iran used its magnanimous release of an American hostage to draw attention from another heinous act — the assassination of one of the top opponents of the Iranian government living in exile in Switzerland.

Anderson

The incident proves once again that no movement is made on the hostages without bloody strings attached.

This time, Iranian President Hashemi Rafsanjani won praise in Washington and elsewhere for his "moderating" influence in securing the release of Robert Polhill. At the same time, Rafsanjani's agents were gunning down a well-regarded diplomat in Switzerland.

Polhill was released April 22 after 39 months in captivity. In a written statement, President Bush thanked Iran and Syria for contributing to the release.

Two days later, Rafsanjani's top human rights critic in Europe, Iranian exile Kazem Rajavi, was in his car near his home in Coppet on Lake Geneva when another car blocked him on the road. Two assassins fatally shot him at close range, one with a submachine gun.

The brazen assassination barely received notice in Europe and America. It was crowded out of the headlines by the release of Polhill and promises of freedom for a second hostage. And that was exactly the way the Rafsanjani regime wanted it, according to our intelligence sources.

Not coincidentally, Rajavi was the brother of Massoud Rajavi, the leader of the People's Mojahedin, the chief opposition group to the regimes of the Ayatollah Khomeini and Rafsanjani.

Kazem Rajavi was an opposition leader in his own right. The 56-year-old professor had been an opponent of the Shah of Iran and lived in France and Switzerland while the shah was in power. When Khomeini overthrew the shah in 1979, Rajavi was welcomed home and became Iran's first ambassador to the European headquarters of the United Nations in Geneva.

Less than a year later he resigned in disgust over Khomeini's human rights abuses. He stayed in exile in Switzerland where he became the chief advocate of Khomeini's victims. He tirelessly fought for the rights of the imprisoned and tortured in Iran and spoke about their cause internationally, including a speech in Washington in 1985.

Rajavi had plenty to talk about. Khomeini brutally retaliated with torture and murder against anyone who opposed him or who did not adhere strictly to his brand of Moslem fundamentalism. Rafsanjani has carried on the tradition, while still managing to wear the label of "moderate" in the international community.

In 1985, after the United Nations issued one particularly weak-willed report about the state of human rights in Iran, Rajavi said, "We're writing the history of human rights with our blood, and we feel deceived by this report."

He was again "deceived" this year when another U.N. human rights observer went to Iran and came back with milquetoast conclusions. This time the United Nations was suckered by a rare invitation from Iran for an on-site visit before writing the report. The observer missed blatant abuses.

Evidently, Rajavi had criticized Iran one too many times. Nine eyewitnesses, all members of the Iranian opposition, say they heard the Iranian ambassador to the United Nations, Sirous Nasseri, tell Rajavi to his face that Iran would send an assassination squad to "liquidate" Rajavi.

That's not the kind of talk that one normally hears from civilized diplomats at the United Nations. But then Iran is not a civilized nation.

CHARLEY REESE

Government's out of touch with the people

Have you noticed there seems to be a disconnect between the American people and American government?

The overwhelming majority of Americans are traditionalists. We are concerned about our country, our businesses or jobs, our neighborhoods, our families.

Charley Reese

In Washington, however, both Democrats and Republicans, both conservatives and liberals, are fundamentally internationalists who view our traditional nationalism as at best isolationist and at worst a hayseed form of fascism. The nabobs of both parties are telling us we may be taxed more, our defenses cut, because of the great problem of the deficit but foreign aid, billions for the World Bank, and a ridiculous 25 percent funding of the United Nations to name just a few international organizations we support are not even debatable subjects.

The overwhelming majority of Americans are religious. Most of us adhere to the Judeo-Christian ethic. We don't approve of criminals and most of all we don't approve of handing over our neighborhoods and cities and housing projects to criminals while social workers and lawyers debate the fine points of law and pop psychology.

Yet in many large cities — Washington, D.C., included — government fails at its most basic duty — to provide for domestic tranquility. Not only are the streets unsafe, our property insecure, but even the schools in many places are not safe. But the government response is not to punish criminals — it's to nurture them, to deny the victims any means of self-defense, and send us the bill.

The crime victim just lies there in a bloody heap until an expensive ambulance arrives to take him or her to an expensive hospital, both of which he will have to pay for. The criminal, if he's apprehended at all, will be given the services of a lawyer and if he's injured during his capture, free medical care. If he's convicted, he will get endless appeals and if all those fail, an endless amount of pampering. Quite literally it is possible for the criminal to sit in air-conditioned comfort and watch satellite TV while his victim sweats in an un-air-conditioned apartment in front of a black and white with rabbit ears for an antenna. Until the hoodlum gets an early release, that is.

Most Americans believe in free enterprise, not socialism, but our politicians are, in piecemeal fashion, imposing socialism on us in the Fabian style and many of our universities are socialist hothouses.

Most Americans are heterosexual and generally hold with John Wayne that people's sex lives, however they are structured, are nobody else's blankety-blank business, yet our government and television networks seems to have an obsession with homosexuality.

Most Americans believe firmly in the principles of fairness and of equal opportunity, but Congress, the executive branch and the federal judiciary have turned racist and are continuously promoting quotas and favoritism. It's amazing how many different categories they can think of in which to divide us.

Most Americans try to live within reasonable range of their income, but the government totally disregards any kind of fiscal prudence. It will say virtually simultaneously that there is fiscal crisis but not a penny can be cut from such a frivolous category as subsidizing the arts.

It both sets up special prosecutors to punish pornography and then endows it with tax funds for display in public places.

It is overly concerned about the deaths of six foreign priests in a foreign country in the middle of a war but under-concerned about American hostages and American MIAs.

It's as if Washington, and most of the national media and movie crowd, lived on one planet and the rest of us Americans on another. Maybe we ought to meet this fall in the voting booths and do a little disconnecting of our own.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

'Bird Legs' again bemoaning his leg-acy

Now that the weather is warm, I would like to wear a pair of shorts occasionally. Say, when I play golf or work in my garden.

OK, so I don't have a garden. I'd like to have one, but I'm allergic to hoes. I do like tomatoes and cucumbers, however, so I figure that's at least close to having a garden of my own.

Grizzard

The problem with my wearing a pair of shorts occasionally is, when I do, certain insensitive people make fun of my legs.

I have skinny legs. No, they are more than skinny. They are mega-thin. The freckles on my legs have to piggy-back to have enough room.

I asked a former friend once, "Do I really have skinny legs?"

"When you wear a pair of shorts," he replied, "your legs look like two toothpicks trying to hold up a Sears-Roebuck tent that will sleep six."

I've heard them all. I've been called "bird legs" and "pipe cleaner" and "noodle knees."

Another former friend said to me, "You know, if you had a butt (I don't have much of a butt, either) and some decent legs, you'd weigh 300 pounds."

They have said, "I've seen better wheels than those of yours on a truck hauling coal."

Probably the worse thing ever said to me, however, was at a professional golf tournament.

I had been asked to introduce the players in what is known as the Merrill Lynch Shootout, another idea somebody came up with to make pro golfers even more rich than they already are.

I happened to be wearing shorts. When I introduced former Masters champion Fuzzy Zoeller, he cast a disdaining eye at my person and said, quite sarcastically, "Hey, nice legs."

Everybody in the gallery thought that was hilarious. I was hurt. I went back to my hotel room and put on a pair of long pants and crawled under my bed and got into the fetal position and whimpered and swore never to wear shorts again.

I did some tracing back in my family history to find out from whom I got my skinny legs.

My mother had thin legs, but she was supposed to have them. Women will kill to have thin legs so they don't resemble a Greek freighter.

But my father didn't have thin legs. He fought in two wars with his.

I had to go all the way back to my great-great-grandfather, Elijah "The Stick" Grizzard, to learn from whom I got my skinny legs.

Courthouse records indicated that he had such skinny legs and was so thin, they had to put rocks in his pockets on the ship to the new country so he wouldn't be swept overboard in a sudden gust of wind.

Great-great-Grandaddy Grizzard did make it safely to the new world, settled in Gwinnett County, Ga., and raised a family.

Unfortunately, he died a young man in 1792 when a tornado hit his mobile home while he was inside asleep.

I supposed there is nothing I can do about these two hoe handles under me, so I'm sending all my shorts to Goodwill.

As far as my backside is concerned, I am considering a butt implant.

Contra commanders confirm they won't disarm

EL ALMENDRO, Nicaragua (AP) — Contra commanders confirmed they have suspended disarmament and said they won't order their troops to put down their weapons unless their safety can be guaranteed.

A Contra representative had said Saturday the rebels would continue disarming under terms of an agreement with the government.

However, the No. 2 Contra commander said late that day the group had ordered its forces to keep their weapons.

"Demobilized fighters are not getting the treatment they deserve," said Oscar Sovalbarro, the second-ranking Contra commander, in an interview with The Associated Press.

Sovalbarro, known as "Commander Ruben," said demobilized Contras were being harassed by Sandinistas and weren't getting enough food, medical care and assistance to establish themselves in civilian life.

The U.S.-backed Contras fought the leftist Sandinistas for nine years in a civil war. Last month, a U.S.-backed opposition coalition took power in Nicaragua after free elections, but the Contras have been unwilling to completely disarm.

Sovalbarro said the Sandinistas were subverting President Violeta Barrios de Chamorro's efforts at reconciliation.

"The government is sympathetic. But it doesn't have any money, and the Sandinistas are disobeying orders," he said.

He cited last week's civil service strikes, which virtually paralyzed the government, as an example. The public employees' union is controlled by the Sandinistas.

El Almendro is at the center of one of five security zones where Contra fighters agreed to gather after Mrs. Chamorro took over from President Daniel Ortega on April 25.

The Contras had agreed to demobilize by June 10, and Sovalbarro said that deadline could still be met if there was "an atmosphere of confidence."

He said the Sandinistas would have to stop their "war of insults" against the Contras and would also have to stop "trying to destabilize the government."

"The key point for us to live in peace," he said "is for there to be a total demobilization throughout the country. This won't be resolved if just the Contras turn in their arms."

Sovalbarro could cite only a few examples of harassment — two demobilized fighters beaten by Sandinista militants in Masaya, another fighter's body found along a road. He said one former fighter had returned to camp complaining of harassment.

A doctor, identified only as Javier, said the Contras had trained personnel to set up a rehabilitation center, but no medical supplies had arrived.

Denis Galeano, another member of the high command, said talks were held about establishing El Almendro as a center for development where Contras could settle.

Romanians rush to cast votes in first free election since 1937

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — Excited Romanians voted Sunday in their first free elections in 53 years, and a West German exit poll predicted an overwhelming victory for interim President Ion Iliescu and his National Salvation Front.

The projection, based on an exit poll of 16,000 voters, was announced on nationwide television while voters were still casting ballots early Monday.

According to the poll, Iliescu won 83 percent of the votes for president, while his challengers — the National Liberal Party's Radu Campeanu and the National Peasant Party's Ion Ratiu — won 11 percent and six percent respectively.

In the vote for the two-chamber parliament, the Front won a projected 66 percent, with no other party winning more than 10 percent. The exit poll was conducted by the West German INFAS, a polling group, at the invitation of the government.

Ballot counting was to begin Monday and preliminary results were expected Tuesday. Final returns are to be announced Friday.

Slow-moving lines of 200 people or more snaked out of voting centers on the clear, windy day as voters chose an heir to the revolution that ousted iron-fisted dictator Nicolae Ceausescu.

The almost 16 million registered voters were choosing a president and 506 representatives to the parliament.

At several Bucharest polling stations, crowds of up to 500 waited patiently to vote after a midnight deadline for polls to close. The original closing time of 11 p.m. was extended earlier in the evening when it became clear that the voting was proceeding much slower than expected, especially in the capital of Bucharest.

More than 80 parties ran candidates for parliament, but only half a dozen were considered likely to win seats in the election, which was by proportional representation.

Some 500 foreign observers fanned out across the country to monitor the election, which opposition parties repeatedly charged had been unfair due to the Front's domination of politics and media.

Among those voting Sunday in Bucharest were Ceausescu's two sons and daughter.

The children — Nicu, Valentin and Zoia Elena — are under investigation for crimes connected to their father's 24-year reign and the revolution. Nicolae Ceausescu and his wife, Elena, were executed after the revolution.

Israeli kills 7 Palestinians; Rioting leaves 7 more dead

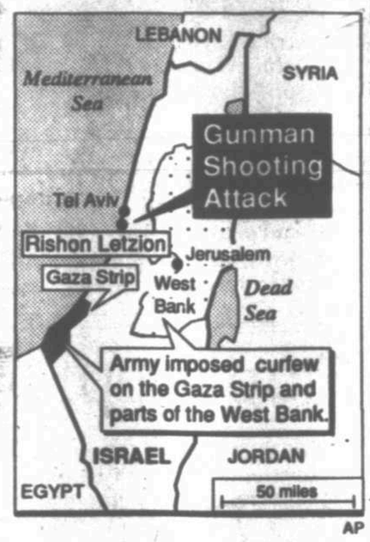
RISHON LETZION, Israel (AP) — An Israeli who was dishonorably discharged from the army shot and killed seven unarmed Palestinian laborers and wounded 11 on Sunday. Outraged Arabs rampaged through the occupied territories in rioting that left seven more Palestinians dead and hundreds injured.

It was one of the bloodiest days since the Palestinian uprising began 29 months ago and could rekindle the violence that had declined in recent months.

The assailant, dressed in army pants and a black jacket, confronted the laborers at a junction south of Tel Aviv, ordered them to sit in a line, then opened fire, police said. The victims apparently followed his orders because they mistook him for a soldier.

Police who arrested the shooter said he was distraught over personal problems, including a recent breakup with his girlfriend. His identity was not released pending a court hearing.

Israeli officials condemned the attack, which one general called a "tragic act by a deranged individual." The army imposed curfews on the Gaza Strip and most of the West Bank, confining 1.1 million Palestinians to their homes.



AP

But, wild with anger, Palestinians defied the curfew and poured into the streets by the thousands, attacking army outposts, stoning passing Israeli cars and blocking roads, Arab reports said.

"They threw anything they could find at soldiers and came at them with all they had," said an army spokesman. "Imposing the curfew on the rioters was a difficult period in which most of the casualties occurred."

While other radio stations talk and talk about giving away money, K-103 hands it out.

Passion Play keeps some of its traditions

OBERAMMERGAU, West Germany (AP) — An updated version of the centuries-old Passion Play premiered Sunday, and for the first time a married woman was allowed to portray the Virgin Mary.

In another modern touch, Christ's betrayer, Judas, is portrayed as a confused and troubled man, rather than simply a greed-driven mercenary.

The daylong play, which depicts the suffering and resurrection of Jesus, was also revised to make changes in its portrayal of Jews. Many Jewish organizations had complained for decades that it was anti-Semitic.

Under new casting rules, Elisabeth Petre, a 37-year-old mother of two, is one of two actresses alternating this year in the role of the Virgin Mary.

Half a million visitors, including 200,000 Americans, are expected to flock to this Bavarian Alpine village 50 miles south of Munich for the production, which runs through Sept. 30.

"The play is just beautiful. The acting was excellent, and I loved the way the stage extends outside," said Terry Blankenship, 35, a physical therapist from Fayetteville, N.C.

The audience sits inside the theater, but the stage extends beyond the roof under the open sky, with a mountain backdrop.

The last performance, a special jubilee presentation in 1984, attracted 470,000 spectators.

The Passion Play here dates back to 1633, when the bubonic plague was raging. Roman Catholic villagers vowed to stage a Passion Play every 10 years if the plague abated.

Researcher says second-hand smoke causes heart disease

NEW YORK (AP) — Non-smokers who live with smokers have a 20 percent to 30 percent higher risk of dying from heart disease than do other non-smokers, a researcher said Sunday.

"Passive smoking causes heart disease, and the number of deaths due to heart disease is 10 times the number due to cancer," said Stanton Glantz of the University of California, San Francisco.

In remarks presented Sunday at the World Conference on Lung Health in Boston, Glantz said research is beginning to show exactly how cigarette smoke alters the heart, blood and arteries to increased the heart disease risk. Glantz presented a study in which he reviewed others' research on the subject.

In his 1986 annual report on smoking and health, the U.S. surgeon general concluded that passive smoking causes lung cancer in non-smokers. At that time, the evidence was insufficient to link passive smoking with heart disease, the report said.

Newer studies have changed that, Glantz said Friday in a telephone interview.

"The evidence that passive smoking causes heart disease is stronger today than the evidence was in 1986 that passive smoking caused lung cancer," Glantz said.

Glantz's study follows one week after the Environmental Protection Agency said it will soon declare environmental tobacco smoke a known carcinogen.

The EPA concluded that passive smoking causes 3,000 cases of lung cancer, a usually fatal disease, per year. Glantz said passive smoking also causes 32,000 heart disease deaths per year.

"The heart disease deaths combined with the cancer deaths make passive smoking the third leading cause of preventable death, behind smoking and alcohol," he said.

Glantz is a researcher and statistician who conducts research in cardiology, has written two textbooks on biostatistics and serves on the California State Scientific Review Panel on toxic air contaminants.

His collaborator in the study, Dr. William Parmley, is a cardiologist, chief of the division of cardiology at University of California, San Francisco, and a past president of the American College of Cardiology.

The Tobacco Institute, which represents cigarette makers, said the surgeon general had failed to find proof that passive smoking causes heart disease.

Brennan Dawson, a spokeswoman for the institute, said in a telephone interview Friday that there have been only three studies since the surgeon general's 1986 report, "and they continue to support the conclusions" that there is no proven link between passive smoking and heart disease.

Glantz disagreed. "There are now 11 studies of the effects of passive smoking on heart disease deaths" in non-smokers, he said. "All but one the tobacco industry funded show an increased risk." The individual studies show increased risks of between 20 percent and 30 percent.

Furthermore, he said, "there's evidence from several areas that passive smoking reduces the ability of the heart to obtain and profit from oxygen."

Carbon monoxide in cigarette smoke binds with hemoglobin in the blood, reducing its capacity to carry oxygen, Glantz said.

The smoke also reduces the ability of cells in the heart to convert oxygen to a chemical called adenosine triphosphate, or ATP, which provides energy to the heart, he said.

Flap erupts over use of state library

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — The governor's wife's after-hours use of the state library to help her 12-year-old son with homework has generated giggles and jabs from the Legislature and an apology from her husband.

One lawmaker jokingly suggested opening the governor's mansion for public tours the same hours as the state library.

Janet Ashcroft won't talk about the 2½ hours she and her son Andy spent in the Missouri State Library on Mother's Day. Her husband, Gov. John Ashcroft says it was merely a case of a parent trying to help a child.

"I assume that every parent knows that there are times when their kid isn't as prepared as he ought to be for school, and what you do is you help 'em," the governor said Friday.

The governor said he was sorry if anybody was offended by their use of the state library to help Andy finish a report on life in Elizabethan England.

"We've tried not to have an imperial governorship here. We don't ride around in limousines because we don't see ourselves as different from the people of this state."

Still, the governor acknowledged that other students probably wouldn't have been allowed after-hours use of the library, a reference library open on weekdays to the public but used primarily by lawmakers and state employees.

Ashcroft said his family didn't mean to disturb anyone, saying his wife only inquired if a library key was available. A library employee who didn't have a key called the state librarian and both showed up to open the library.

"They got more than they asked for," the second-term Republican said. "It may have been that the person responded over and above what the person would have responded to someone else."

State librarian Monteria Hightower said her Mother's Day activities with her family were interrupted. "We don't do homework assignments for children. When the services are closed, they are closed," the librarian said earlier last week.

Flying meat misses coop, loses meet

RIO GRANDE, Ohio (AP) — Golden Neck won by more than a beak, Drumstick took the bantamweight prize and Judy "thoroughly disgraced herself" by flying the wrong way at Saturday's 20th annual Chicken Flying Meet.

"We feel pretty badly about Judy," said Ms. Crabtree. "She thoroughly disgraced herself by flying backwards. She landed on a tent top and had to be rescued."

But none of the 197 entrants beat Judy's 1989 all-time flying record of 542 feet 9 inches. Judy's owner, John Salyers of Galloway, vowed she'd return to fly again.

Drumstick, coached by Leon Okes of Parkersburg, W.Va., became bantamweight champ by coasting 129 feet 4 inches.

T-ball season is the time to concentrate on the "fun"damentals of baseball.

This spring, more than 1,000 Midland youngsters have taken to T-ball diamonds at three parks across the city to learn America's pastime. Since Easter, the 5-, 6- and 7-year-olds have filled the Bluebird, County A and Henderson park fields five days a week.

Flash flood hits Hot Springs

Four states continue struggle against rivers surging over banks

Associated Press

Flash floods turned streets into rivers in Hot Springs, Ark., and pushed lakes out of their banks, sweeping away cars and stranding residents of lakefront homes on rooftops in yet another onslaught of high water.

The flooding followed thunderstorms that began Saturday afternoon and brought up to a foot of rain and high winds to central Arkansas by early Sunday morning. The water receded by late morning, revealing extensive damage along this resort city's central business district, authorities said.

"Cars have been completely immersed and washed away. We've got a lot of shops and stores that are flooded," said police spokesman Michael McCormick.

The new floods brought misery to a different part of the region from the rampage along the Arkansas, Trinity and Red rivers that has caused hundreds of millions of dollars in losses and killed 13 people in the past three weeks in Texas, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Louisiana. Floodwaters continued to surge through southern segments of that region Sunday.

Floods eased in Missouri, Kansas, Illinois and Indiana. At least two people died in Illinois, and authorities searched for a woman missing in flooding in Missouri last week.

In some parts of Hot Springs, the water had reached the tops of parking meters before beginning to recede.

The storms dumped up to 12 inches of rain in Garland and Hot Spring counties Saturday night and early Sunday. The National Weather Service said 2 feet of water was pouring over the top of Remmel Dam at Lake Catherine.

The storms also brought four tornadoes, including a twister that destroyed one home, damaged another and destroyed a barn in nearby Conway County. No injuries were reported. Hail pelted a number of central Arkansas counties.

Floodgates at the Remmel Dam and the Carpenter Dam upstream on Lake Hamilton were fully opened to release water from the lakes into the Ouachita River. "They've all overflowed their banks," said Ralph Lee, assistant director of Garland County Office of Emergency Services.

Residents of low-lying areas in Garland County left their homes and sought shelter at a National Guard armory and churches, Lee said. He said there was no estimate available on the number of people evacuated.

"The hardest hit areas are the ones closest to the lakes," Lee said. "A lot of the lakefront homes have been evacuated and the ones who waited too late are on top of their homes."

Residents were still being rescued from rooftops by boat Sunday morning.

The floods caused power outages throughout Hot Springs, and washed away a landmark 90-year-old iron bridge and at least eight other bridges in the area.

Gov. Bill Clinton declared Garland County a state disaster area after inspecting flood damage in Hot Springs, making assistance available to flood victims.

The county was also added, along with Clay County, to a federal disaster declaration covering 20 other counties hit by flooding, said Ray Briggler of the state Office of Emergency Services.

In southeastern Texas, tempers began flaring in flooded communities along the Trinity River, where sheriffs' deputies were keeping an eye on joyriders in boats and recreational vehicles.

"We've had a couple of incidents that haven't been bad, but some of the teen-agers, they want to go out with their four-wheel drives and things," said Liberty County sheriff's dispatcher Jo Griffith. "We go out and talk to them and tell them they're not really helping."

Waves from boat wakes can cause more damage to flooded homes, and property owners are angry, said Jim Mitchum of the Liberty County emergency management office.

Mitchum said 500 to 700 people per day were being fed from the county's emergency mobile kitchen and about 60 people stayed at emergency shelters overnight Saturday in Liberty County. At least 2,000 homes are in 15 to 20 subdivisions in the floodwaters' path, but Mitchum did not have an estimate on how many actually are flooded.

Forty-nine families have not evacuated from subdivisions. "They're staying in against our recommendation," Mitchum said.

Closer to the Lake Livingston Dam, sheriffs dispatchers in San Jacinto and Polk County said about 100 homes sustained flood damage. Many are under water.

Engineers Sunday were still releasing 100,800 cubic feet per second of water through the dam, which remained a foot over flood stage, the Trinity River Authority said. Usually, about 7,000 cfs of water goes through the dam and 20,000 cfs is enough to cause flooding.

Engineers expected the 100,000-plus level to be sustained for at least the next few days, Mitchum said.

The Trinity at Liberty is expected to crest at 29½ feet, 5½ feet above flood stage, by the end of next week and remain at that level for at least several days, the weather service said.

In east-central Louisiana, a dike built by hundreds of volunteers at Vick was credited with saving 30,000 acres and about 300 homes from the raging Red. A similar dirt dike covered with plastic was expected to protect 300 to 400 homes and 50,000 acres of cropland.

About 370 people in five northwestern Louisiana parishes have had to leave their homes because of flooding by the Red. The river is expected to crest about 7 feet above flood stage Monday at Alexandria, and the weather service warned residents to be alert.

Elsewhere:

— In Sioux City, Iowa, firefighters and public works crews Sunday helped homeowners clean up from a flood by Perry Creek the day before that left oozing mud several feet deep in parts of the city. Three bridges remained closed and two may have to be rebuilt.

Gov. Terry Branstad has declared the city a state disaster area.

— The search continued Sunday near Jefferson City, Mo., for a woman who may have been swept away Thursday by floodwaters on the Moreau River. The Mississippi River at St. Louis crested at 33 feet, 3 feet above flood stage, and was expected to drop 6 feet by Tuesday.

— In southern Illinois, several homes in Lawrenceville were evacuated because of the rising Embarras River, which was expected to crest almost 11 feet above flood stage Sunday.

— Rivers continued dropping in southern Indiana. The weather service predicted an end by Thursday to flooding that last week reached the highest levels in more than 20 years in some places.

Flooding on the White River late Friday washed away at least 3,000 feet of water lines in Petersburg. People in the 3,500-resident town were urged to boil water for drinking and cooking, and water was brought in by tanker truck.

April Frye clutches her dog Archie as flood waters from the Trinity River invade her home Sunday in Kennefick, Texas. Homes that have been safe from flood waters in the past are now taking on water in what residents are calling the worst flood in memory.

Odessa man killed in wreck

Staff Report

UVALDE — An Odessa truck-driver was killed in an apparent head-on collision 12 miles north of here about 10:30 p.m. Saturday, Department of Public Safety reports show.

Joe Olivo Lara, 61, was killed when an Oldsmobile southbound on State Highway 55 crossed the center line and struck Lara's northbound truck head-on, reports show.

The Oldsmobile's driver, 26-year-old Michael Rodriguez of San Antonio, was treated and released along with a passenger, 27-year-old Anna G. Rodriguez, according to reports.

Lara was pronounced dead by Uvalde County Justice of the Peace Charles H. Romans, reports show.

Fumes may have caused fire

Staff Report

Gasoline fumes are the suspected cause of a fire which damaged the garage of a Midland residence Saturday night, fire department reports show.

Reports indicate no one was injured in the blaze, reported shortly before 11 p.m. Saturday.

The fire apparently started when a water heater ignited fumes from a gas can being stored in the garage at 3007 Douglas Ave.

Ball: Rules of the game encourage fun, education

coaches and enjoying the game. They have been schooled in the mechanics of hitting and fielding. They understand how a force play works and how runs are scored.

To underscore the fun and educational aspects of the game, team standings are not compiled. Score sheets are kept and turned in to league officials but "99 percent of the kids can't tell you the score or know who won, but they have a great time," said Harwell, who is league president for the 28 Eastern group teams that play at County A Park on A Street.

Special rules for the game are created with the young players' safety and attention spans in mind.

All offensive players outside the dugout — batters, as well as those "on deck" — must wear a batting helmet. In addition, after the ball is put in play, the batter must lay — not throw — the bat down before running to first.

In keeping with the educational mission of the game, every player bats each time through the lineup, without regard to whether they are playing in the field.

Likewise, the batter must put the ball in play off the batting tee — there are no strikeouts or walks. This keeps the fielders involved in the game and enables them to learn how to play the ball, as well as teaching the offensive players how to run the bases.

Liberal substitutions among the 10 fielders — four outfielders are used — is encouraged so that players learn "what a shortstop does" and how to cover first base, Harwell explained. Coaches work to see that each player gets at least three innings in the field.

Unlike the game their older counterparts play, there is more than one way for T-ballers to end an inning. A team's turn at bat ends whenever the defense gets three outs or when the offense scores five runs. This safeguard keeps games close as well as keeping innings short.

High-scoring games are the norm, Harwell said, with 30-28 for a six-inning game typical.

Even the field looks slightly different for T-ball compared to a regular little league diamond. Several feet out from home plate is an arc beyond which the batter must hit the ball to put it in play. A large chalk circle circumscribes the area where a pitcher's mound would be. When the fielding team gets the ball to the pitcher, under control, inside the cirle, the play is dead.

Hash marks halfway along each basepath beyond first are used to determine if a runner is allowed to continue. If the runner has crossed the hash mark before the pitcher controls the ball inside the circle, he or she is allowed to advance — if not, the runner must return to the previous base.

The rule helps reduce the number of overthrows and advancing baserunners, making the offensive team earn its runs.

Scheduling — while a major headache for league coordinators like Harwell — is tightly restricted to limit players to two six-inning games and one 90-minute practice per week.

What the small players lack in finesse, they make up for with enthusiasm.

Anybody looking for an evening's entertainment would be well advised to head out to one of the city's T-ball parks any Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, Friday or Saturday from now through early June to see an exhibition of baseball played for the pure joy of the game.

Odessa man dies in shooting

Staff Report

ODESSA — An Odessa man was shot and killed Sunday evening during an apparent domestic dispute, an Odessa Police Department spokesman said.

The age and identity of the victim were not available, and police did not say if anyone had been arrested in the case.

The shooting occurred about 6:30 p.m. Sunday in the 1400 block of Lauderdale Ave., the spokesman said.

Fire guts Odessa duplexes

Staff Report

ODESSA — A fire which apparently spread from an outdoor barbecue grill caused heavy damage to two duplexes Sunday evening, Odessa Fire Department officials said.

No one was injured in the blaze, reported shortly before 7 p.m.

Battalion Chief J.C. Decker said the fire, at 3716 Montclair Ave., apparently started in an outdoor grill and spread to a carport where it was fueled by gasoline in a motorboat.

Decker said firefighters controlled the blaze within 15 minutes of their arrival, but took two hours to fully extinguish the fire.

The fire caused heavy smoke and structural damage to both duplexes and destroyed two cars, Decker said.

Burro again wins most beautiful

VICTORIA, Texas (AP) — For the third time in the 7-year history of the contest, Petunia the burro from Bloomington has been named most beautiful burro.

Each year, a contest is held in this South Texas city to select the most beautiful donkey or burro in the state. Petunia had won in 1988, last year, then again on Sunday.

Burros have long been an important commodity in South Texas, having been brought to the area by Spanish settlers in the early 1700s. Even today, many large ranches uses burros to help domesticate horses by tying the two animals together.

But even though dictionaries distinctly point out that burros and donkeys are asses, contest founder Henry Wolff Jr. said he makes it a point to avoid using that word in reference to his annual competition.

"We do say, 'This is the place where people can come and show their blank-blank-blank if they've got one.' That's the fun of it," he said.

Hard work in home schooling brings rewards

BRAZORIA, Texas (AP) — Toby Crow, 8, learns measurements, fractions and patience baking oatmeal cookies in the kitchen of his parent's home near Brazoria.

He stands on a stool at the sink measuring brown sugar and sticks of margarine one cloudy Wednesday morning. His mother, Sandy Crow, reads from the list of ingredients.

Though he has never attended a public school, Toby thinks "bullies" might make the experience unpleasant.

His sister, 10-year-old Chrissy, studies math from a Saxon math textbook in the sunroom around the corner. Andy and Sugar, the family's pet cockatiels, perch on the back of her chair. Her bare feet dangle beneath the table. A breeze filters through the open windows to turn a page on the book.

Now in her third year of home schooling after a year of public schools, Chrissy is a whole-hearted advocate. "You can learn anything you want to and you don't have to put your shoes on," she said. "I don't like to put my shoes on."

Outside the relatively care-free world of children, the issues surrounding home schooling become more complex.

Since gaining popularity in the early 1980s among fundamental Christians, home schooling has grown into a nationwide movement. Though there is no official count of home schools no government agency has jurisdiction. Estimates of the number of children in home schools range from 300,000 to 1 million, Home School Legal Defense Association President Mike Farris said. The low estimate comes from the U.S. Department of Education, he said. He believes the true number lies somewhere between 500,000 to 700,000.

Area home schoolers split into three groups last year after the group became too large to easily plan field trips, members said. There are 22 families in the West of the Brazos Home School Group, 24 families in the Brazosport Group and about that many families in Angleton, coordinators say. They estimate that each family averages three students.

The movement has grown in both numbers and sophistication. The Home School Legal Defense Association publishes the Home School Court Report, a quarterly, nationally distributed newsletter to inform members of legal and legislative developments in home schooling. The association recently created the National Center for Home Education, the first national home schooling organization.

The Houston-based Southeast Texas Home School Association publishes a monthly newsletter informing readers of curriculum sales, events, tutored classes and legal developments. Locally, the West of the Brazos Home School Group and the Brazosport Home School Group publish regular newsletters.

But parents say that by far the most impressive expansion has been in curricula and training seminars. Parents can now choose between hundreds of textbooks and workbooks. Christian organizations and universities offer yearly seminars and workshops to inspire, sharpen teaching skills and instruct parents in everything from time management to avoiding burnout to conflict resolution.

Though the organization and the methods have grown more sophisticated, the motivation remains essentially unchanged, at least among area home schoolers. Most say they chose to begin educating their children at home because public schools have deleted Christ from the curriculum.

"The fact that God is left out speaks volumes to children," said Lynn Humble, a former teacher who is now a member of the West of the Brazos Home School Group. "By the mere fact that you have left him out it shows that he is unimportant."

But none of the local home schoolers interviewed perceive home schooling as an unwelcome alternative or the lesser of two evils undertaken for the sake of their beliefs. Some had praise for area teachers and few cited often-heard complaints of drugs and violence in schools. Most simply believe that they can offer their children a superior education.

"We can certainly refer to negatives in the public schools. We are all aware of them. But I was most attracted by home schooling's advantages," Mrs. Humble said.

Home schoolers point to their opportunities to expand on lessons, teach hands-on experience and forge closer bonds with their children as some of the most important advantages.

Last November, Donna and Ronny Cherry took their two children, Candice, 10, and Corey, 11, on what they say was a combination family vacation and three-week field trip to the children's grandfather's farm in Arkansas. The children watched as rice and cotton were harvested, processed and then prepared for shipment to markets across the country and around the world. Corey has built a greenhouse in the backyard of the family's home in Jones Creek.

"There is more to education than just head-knowledge," Donna Cherry said. "We felt our children needed heart and hand knowledge as well."

Before a recent trip to NASA, 12-year-old Will Humble, son of Lynn Humble, checked out a book on the space station. "By getting to see it I understand a lot more than I would by just reading a book," he said.

Most home school curricula relate each lesson to the Bible and several other subjects.

Sandy Crow plans to bake bread with Chrissy and Toby as described in the Konos Character Curriculum designed by two former instructors from Richardson. She hopes the time required to bake a loaf of bread they could have easily purchased at the store will teach them patience.

Studying the life of Jacob will give them an opportunity to read the Bible and learn history. The rising action of the yeast will give them examples of chemistry. Practice with homophones like "knead and need," "flour and flower," "whole and hole" will give them language arts experience.

After a recent lesson on the anatomy of the human ear they watched the "Miracle Worker," a movie about the life of Helen Keller.

But no one claims home schooling is easy. Mothers who take on the added tasks of curriculum planning and instructing are often with their children 24 hours a day.

"I don't have a day to myself anymore," Mrs. Crow said.

The experience has given many home schoolers a lesson in the difficulties of education. "If you've been a home schooling mother you start to have mercy on those who have 30 in their class," Brazosport Home School Group Coordinator Karin Denton said.

Cherry said, "There are some excellent teachers in the public school systems. I have a new respect for them."

But the respect isn't always mutual. Professional educators often argue that children schooled at home are deprived of socialization skills and the variety of curricula offered in public schools.

Angleton Independent School District Superintendent James H. "Herman" Smith acknowledges that parents have the option of home schooling but says "in my professional opinion it is not the best option."

"When you look at the series of experiences that students are offered in a school career, I don't think it is unfair to say that, try as home school parents might, they can't offer all of those experiences."

He says that parents cannot offer quality instruction in the variety of subjects offered in public schools.

"I'm sure to varying degrees that some parents do quite well educating their students in some specific areas. But when it comes to giving students experience of the broad spectrum of education, it is even difficult for the school districts to do this."

Sandy Crow counters that argument with a big box of curriculum catalogs. She has taken her search for the proper textbooks and workbooks to the authors themselves.

"I wanted Chrissy to learn Saxon Math but it wasn't available for fourth grade students," she said. "I called the author (Steven Hake), so now I've got a hand-written textbook."

Saxon Math, which uses a building-block approach that departs radically from textbooks commonly used in public schools, improved the test scores of students in one Dallas school district. It was recently featured in a segment of the CBS television show "60 Minutes."

Sandy Crow says arguments that say some home school mothers aren't capable of properly educating their children don't stand up to the realities of home schooling.

Toby Crow, 8, is instructed by his mother Sandy Crow in Brazoria, Texas, while his sister, 10-year-old Crissy studies math. Their younger brother, Timothy, ties his shoe. Crissy is in her third year of home schooling after attending public schools for one year. Toby has never attended a public school but thinks "bullies" might make the experience unpleasant.

Bushes' financial report catalogues gifts

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush and his wife accepted at least $26,839 worth of personal gifts last year, including cowboy boots and baseball cards, $3,100 worth of evening bags, and a gingerbread house for their dog Millie, the White House announced recently.

The White House released the president's annual financial disclosure report cataloguing the gifts as well as listing his assets and income. It said the value of the holdings in his blind trust grew in 1989 to $1.28 million from $998,000.

The gift-givers included the Aga Khan, two neckties and a watch worth $300; Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev and his wife Raisa, Christmas ornaments and children's books worth $125; designer Ralph Lauren, a $425 sweater, and golfer Lee Trevino, whose $466 worth of presents included 11 golf shirts, two caps, one club and six instructional videotapes.

The report said the Bushes have $1,000 in a savings account at the White House credit union, $8,000 in another interest-bearing account in Kennebunkport, Maine, and a total of $23,000 in two checking accounts in Washington and Houston that pay no interest.

The president was required to hand over to the State Department all official gifts worth more than $180 from foreigners — with some exceptions. He can keep gifts deemed personal presents from friends, as he did with the Aga Khan's neckties and watch.

He can keep gifts from Americans of any value, but has to report any gifts from a single source totaling $100 or more.

The disclosure form did not list the gifts worth less than $100 that the Bushes kept, unless the gift-giver gave other presents that put the total over $100. Nor did the form list gifts the Bushes handed over to the government.

"The president gives away a lot of these gifts," such as caps and T-shirts that wind up on his grandchildren or in the hands of friends, said presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.

Included in the presidential gifts were:

Mother says ex-husband didn't drown daughter

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The mother of a 10-year-old girl who drowned in a Lake Worth cove nearly three months ago continues to believe her ex-husband is innocent of the murder charges lodged against him.

And although circumstances surrounding the death of Jeanette Lindsey seem suspicious, Willie Jean Bergquist refuses to believe Wendell Lindsey could have done anything to harm their eldest daughter.

Police contend Lindsey intentionally drowned his daughter on Feb. 27 to cash in on a $100,000 life insurance policy in an effort to rescue his failing second marriage.

Records show Lindsey had at one time owed $15,040 in missed child support payments dating back to 1983. And his second wife said their brief marriage was marred by money problems.

Relatives portray him as an even-tempered Christian man who would not even go hunting because he believes animals should not be killed unless they are starving.

His mother, Eunice Lindsey, said her son appeared truly shaken the night of Jeanette's death as he tried to explain how his efforts to save her life at the Fort Worth Nature Center had failed.

"He was muddy and wet and he turned the television off ... He grabbed me up and cried and shook,'" Mrs. Lindsey said. "He said, 'Jeanette drowned today and I couldn't save her.'"

Yet, Fort Worth Nature Center staff members and park police who were the first to arrive say Lindsey, 33, resisted their attempts to revive the girl.

"The father would not let us touch his daughter," said parks police Capt. Mike Humphries. Park employees said Lindsey shielded her body with his.

An autopsy revealed mud was found in the ears, nose, mouth and windpipe of the girl, a condition unlike most drowning victims, experts told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

Fort Worth police Lt. Jack Yarbrough said Lindsey's account of how his daughter died is rife with other inconsistencies. Yarbrough also said Lindsey lied to investigators when they asked him about having insurance on his daughter.

Lindsey purchased three life insurance policies on Feb. 19 — for himself and his two daughters.

Ms. Bergquist, 27, said Lindsey told her he wanted to use the policies to accumulate savings for the children's college education.

After being estranged from his daughters for over a year, Ms. Bergquist said, Lindsey began taking his children on afternoon outings several weeks before Jeanette's death.

And on Feb. 27, Lindsey took a day off from work to take his daughters fishing.

Lindsey told police his daughter fell of a log and drowned. He told investigators she struggled out of his arms when he attempted to rescue her.

A police report said the water was knee-deep.

Linda Lindsey, the murder suspect's second wife, told police she and her former husband went water skiing and swimming often before their marriage was annulled.

But Ms. Bergquist said Lindsey always wore a lifejacket when water skiing and she believes his inability to swim probably hampered his efforts to save their daughter.

Ms. Bergquist and Lindsey have filed a $100,000 negligence claim against the city of Fort Worth.

Lindsey's mother says her son may have had financial problems, but said she would have been a more likely target than Jeannette if her son intended to profit from someone's death.

"Wendell will get what's in my will; my house and insurance, and that isn't worth much," she said. "He's had plenty of chances to smother me in bed."

Graduates, guests ignore protestors

AUSTIN (AP) — Many of the graduating seniors at the University of Texas' commencement ceremony Saturday were born in the 1960s — a time of dissension and protest.

But most seniors who walked through the protesters on their way inside Memorial Stadium to hear President Bush, either said nothing to the demonstrators or yelled at them things such as, "Get a job."

Leticia Falcon attended the protest with her four young children and said she found the mood of the students frightening because they were born "smack dab in the middle of the civil rights era."

Ms. Falcon said the problem is that schools don't teach students about the struggles of minorities and women. "As long as we continue that we are going to have polarization in this country instead of cooperation," she said.

As Bush arrived to deliver the commencement speech Saturday night, about 100 protesters voiced a litany of grievances on issues ranging from Central America to AIDS.

Nine protesters inside the stadium were arrested for "disruptive activities," said Don Cannon, chief of the university police.

Cannon said the nine were arrested in the upper deck of the massive stadium after they blew whistles at the beginning of Bush's speech. He said no decision had been made about filing charges.

Demonstrator John Minor, of Houston, said few of those attending the commencement were receptive to the issues being protested.

"I think the crowd is into their own trip today. They want to come here and watch their children graduate, and I'm all for that. It's something people worked hard to do. But on the other hand if Bush is going to be here he needs to hear from the people," Minor said.

"Many people in this country are probably a little cut off from much of what is real for many other people in this country," he said.

Judith Quinney, also a member of ACT-UP, held a sign with a clock representing the death of a person from AIDS every 12 minutes. She said one graduating senior walked past and said: "I wish we could kill them faster."

"I think that's a pretty sad comment when we're turning out college-educated people who are so narrow- minded," Ms. Quinney said.

Several parents of graduating seniors said they were upset with the protesters.

Campuses react slowly to racism reports

Associated Press

Colleges across the country are being plagued by outbreaks of racism and other forms of bigotry, yet few administrators are launching the all-out assault experts think it will take to solve the problem.

A check of schools around the country by The Associated Press found that some, like Boston College, teach courses about racism. The University of California at Berkeley will require all undergraduates to take such a course starting with the freshman class of 1991.

Some, notably Stanford University, have altered curricula to reflect the contributions of minority figures around the world, and Miami University of Ohio started a $10,000 fund this year to help student groups pay for anti-racism speakers and assemblies.

A few, including Case Western Reserve University in Cleveland, have begun orientation sessions for incoming freshmen to air their feelings about race relations.

Many others have set up race relations committees, stepped up minority recruitment efforts or adopted official policy statements on bigotry.

But only a very few have done all or even most of those things — a finding corroborated by several experts in campus race relations.

"My greatest criticism of these efforts is that, although they are often genuine, they tend to be piecemeal, not comprehensive," said Reginald Wilson, senior scholar at the American Council on Education and a long-time observer of racial issues in higher education.

"In many instances, campuses that have racial incidents rush to do something immediately to fill a gap," he said.

Students demonstrated last month at the University of Texas-Austin when two fraternities painted racial epithets on a car and sold T-shirts with a "Sambo" caricature. Protesters criticized the administration for not doing enough to quell racism.

"I am embarrassed to be associated with an institution that hasn't addressed the issue more strongly that it has," women's basketball coach Jody Conradt told a radio audience.

Still, Wilson and others doubt the piecemeal response to racism at many predominantly white campuses will lead to a mass exodus to historically black schools. If for no other reason, physical limitations make it unlikely such schools could accommodate many more than the 200,000 students they now have.

Experts in campus race relations fault college presidents, who often have failed to take the lead in quelling racism or to even admit it's a problem.

"It has to start from the top with policy statements that racism and the other 'isms' won't be tolerated," said Barry Beckham, a former English professor at Hampton University who started a bimonthly national newsletter this year, The Black Student Advisor.

"Leadership at the top is absolutely essential," Wilson said. "But it's very hard to persuade campuses that have not had incidents to adopt comprehensive programs."

Three out of four college presidents do not acknowledge racism as a serious problem on their campuses, according to a study published last month by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching.

At the University of Tennessee at Martin, Chancellor Margaret Perry said she doesn't believe her school has serious racial problems. But student Karen Streeter, a member of a recently established campus commission on race relations, called the school's atmosphere "atrocious."

"But since the head of the school has not made a great effort to deal with the problems, I don't think they'll be resolved in the near future," said Streeter.

No serious incidents have occurred at Agnes Scott College, a small women's school in Decatur, Ga., but President Ruth Schmidtz decided to head off trouble by forming a President's Committee on Community Diversity in 1987. The committee has invited experts in race relations and recommended curriculum changes to reflect cultural diversity.

On May 12, a University of Arizona committee appointed by President Henry Koffler submitted a "Diversity Action Plan," outlining steps to improve race relations. Recommendations include naming a vice president for diversity action, building a resource center and broadening the curriculum to include more diversity.

Similarly, University of Michigan President James J. Duderstadt lately has earned high marks for improving the climate at one of the nation's more racially torn campuses.

In the last several years, Duderstadt named a vice provost for minority affairs, invested nearly $4 million in the Center for Afro-American and African Studies, and boosted the budget for attracting minority faculty. Duderstadt has also developed a "Michigan Mandate," a yearly blueprint for increasing campus diversity.

Next fall, for the first time, the school will offer an interdisciplinary course on racism.

The payoff: Minority enrollments are up 25.6 percent since 1987, and now make up 16.6 percent, or 5,454 of the 35,000-member student body. The school has hired 76 additional minority faculty members, and applications by black students for next fall's freshman class have increased 26 percent.

But other colleges battling racism have met with resistance.

"As a heterosexual white male, I feel like there's going to be a rally against me out here, even though I personally have not done anything," said Mark Bunger.

Florida Atlantic University announced in March it would guarantee full scholarships to all black students who met admissions standards. Similar programs exist at the University of Florida in Gainesville and the University of Nebraska.

But last week, the Washington Legal Foundation, a conservative group, called on the federal government to investigate whether such scholarships violate federal civil rights statutes.

Tyler zoo program attempts to save endangered species

TYLER, Texas (AP) — The three massive black rhinos at Caldwell Zoo distractedly look up from munching hay as a group of school kids enter the rhino hut.

The children look around, apparently unimpressed.

"Let's go see the giraffes," says another and they scramble out the door.

But to zoo general curator Michael Tucker, the rhinos are prized possessions representing Caldwell's commitment to helping preserve the planet's endangered species.

"They are really in trouble," Tucker said of the animal's status in the wilds of Africa.

Experts estimate only 3,500 of the huge animals remain in their natural habitat, he said. To help ensure black rhinos are around for future generations, zoos across America are carefully studying and breeding the animals as part of the Species Survival Plan.

There are 150 black rhinos in captivity in America. Through cooperation of zoos participating in the SSP, they are being managed as one large herd, Tucker said.

The SSP is administered by the American Association of Zoological Parks and Aquariums, a nonprofit organization which works to maintain professional standards at America's zoos.

Caldwell Zoo is certified by AAZPA and works within its guidelines and recommendations in housing wildlife whose existence is being threatened by man.

When Caldwell Zoo decided to include a rhino hut as part of its multimillion-dollar East Africa exhibit, Tucker said they called AAZPA administrators to find out how to construct the facility and where to locate potential mates for breeding.

Of the three rhinos at Caldwell, one is on loan from the Chicago's Brookfield Zoo. Another was born in the San Antonio Zoo and is on loan from the Cincinnati Zoo. The third was purchased from Miami Metro Zoo.

To provide the best care possible for the black rhinos, Caldwell zookeepers and administrators communicate with the AAZPA and other zoos that house rhinos to obtain the latest information on their needs, Tucker said. In turn, Caldwell contributes to this body of knowledge and assists others who need information.

When Priscilla, one of the first black rhinos at the zoo, suffered a tissue growth which led to complications that took her life, one of Caldwell's zookeepers wrote a paper on the illness, its complications and treatment that was distributed to other zoos.

"We certainly don't feel we can solve all the problems ourselves," Tucker said, "but if we all pool our resources and work together, we can do a lot more. Perhaps we can learn something about the rhino that we can share with others."

The zoo's four long, sleek cheetahs also are a highly endangered species.

Caldwell zookeepers have taken sperm from the male and reproductive tissue samples from the female cheetahs. They hope it will reveal information needed to initiate successful breeding here that can be repeated elsewhere.

When breeding of endangered species has succeeded, the SSP helps determine where offspring should be sent in order to best further existence of the species.

Caldwell's tubby, pig-like tapir couple — an endangered species from South America — produced an offspring last year which on recommendation of AAZPA was sent to the Baton Rouge, La., Zoo. Now the animal is part of a promising tapir program there and Caldwell's female tapir is pregnant again.

"We follow (AAZPA) recommendations of animals to breed and where to send the offspring," he said. "We don't just send the animals anywhere."

Because of limited space, the animal population is carefully controlled at Caldwell. Knowing what to do with offspring to benefit the species and other zoos is important, Tucker said.

Dangerous chemical sends 12 firemen to hospital

DALLAS (AP) — A fire broke out in a laboratory of Nobel Prize-winning scientists at a medical school Sunday night, forcing evacuations and releasing hazardous materials where radioactive substances are used, authorities said.

Initial reports that radioactive substances were released turned out to be false, said Chief Mike Zak of the Dallas Fire Department, although such materials are used in the lab.

Zak said radioactive materials were present in the lab, but that the materials weren't released when the fire began shortly after 8 p.m.

Twelve firefighters were taken to an adjacent hospital for observation in a precautionary measure because they may have been exposed to the hazardous chemical hydrozene.

Firefighters extinguished the fire at the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center an hour after it started, Zak said.

The two-alarm blaze's origin was one of several labs run by Michael S. Brown and Joseph L. Goldsten, fire officials said.

Brown and Goldstein won the 1985 Nobel Prize in medicine for discoveries related to cholesterol metabolism and cholesterol-related diseases.

The two-alarm blaze on the building's fifth floor forced the evacuation of several people, Zak said. Authorities also diverted traffic around the medical center.

Police release two suspects

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Two men arrested on capital murder warrants in connection with the fatal shooting at a cafe last week were released from jail Sunday night.

Police would only say that they lacked evidence against brothers Timothy Miller, 19, and his brother, Paul Miller, 22, both of Fort Worth. They would not say whether the two were still suspects in the May 14 shootings that left five dead and three others wounded.

The brothers had been incarcerated for 72 hours.

Both proclaimed innocence upon their release about 9 p.m.

Masked robbers broke into the Glass Key Cafe during an illegal high-stakes dice game and opened fire. Four people died Monday, and a fifth died Saturday.

'Cowpokes' round up $167,000 at benefit

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

About $167,000 was raised by the 1,250 "cowpokes" and "cowgals" at the "Round-Up '90" Saturday night, according to Valerie Hale, event chairman. The event — sponsored by the Midland Unit of the American Cancer Society — featured a hearty dinner of thick slabs of choice ribeye and dancing to the country and western sounds of recording artist Steve Wariner, and the Dallas-based band Southern Wind.

The $100 per couple event began at 6 p.m. when the posted bid auction got underway at the Rich-Air Executive Hangar Complex near Midland International Airport.

"I was surprised at how easy it was to find the hangars," Liz Young said, referring to giant cactus markers pointing the way from Highway 80. The large white cactus markers were painted with black spots, similar to cowhide, in keeping with the cowpoke theme.

Celebrants were decked out in denim, cowboy boots, cowboy hats, fringe and white shirts or blouses with a spotted cow print.

Attendants directed participants to parking places in a lot fronting the complex. After parking, attendees rode to the complex on a modern day hayride — flatbed trucks covered with bales of hay.

One hangar was set up with tables, open bars and the stage. Another hangar featured the posted bid auction items, horse shoe toss, a photo booth and hors d'oeuvres such as buffalo wings, queso dip and stuffed jalapenos. One of the auction items, a 1990 Mercedes-Benz 190E, with an opening bid of $28,000, sold for $29,200, according to Ms. Young.

"I was surprised at how extremely well organized everything was, considering the crowd," Ms. Young said. "Even though the food line was long, it moved very quickly."

"We added more lines this year to get people through faster," Ms. Hale said.

Tom Perini of Perini Ranch of Buffalo Gap, who catered the event, said, "We managed to serve the first 1,100 people in 50 minutes. That way the cold food was still cold and the hot food was still hot."

Although the food was served quickly, many hours were spent preparing the food prior to the event, according to Perini, who cooked about 1,100 pounds (raw) of choice heavy beef ribeye in smokers on site. "The 10-12 ounce steaks served were rubbed in a pepper seasoning and smoked with seasonings," Perini said. "We also served 130 pounds (dry) of beans." Perini, who has been catering Round-Up for seven years, also provided garlic bread, salad, cherry tomatoes, green onions and pralines.

After dinner, around 9:30 p.m., Wariner took the stage and opened with "I've Got Dreams," one of his hit singles. He delighted the crowd with several other hit singles and some songs from his new album "Laredo."

Wariner encouraged the audience to dance to his songs and was very personable, according to several members of the audience. "Wariner said, 'Let's get one thing straight: This is a party not a concert,'" to Ms. Young said.

Joe D. Williams/Reporter-Telegram

Steve Wariner, a recording artist with ten hit singles, entertains celebrants.

After several encores, Wariner was followed by band Southern Wind, who provided dance music until 1 a.m. "Southern Wind was outstanding," according to one appreciative group in the audience. Dennis "Wemus" Grubb of Wemus Entertainment, Inc., who produced the show, said, "Steve Wariner and Southern Wind came here to play good music — and, that's what they did."

This year's round-up was dedicated to the memory of former honorary chairman Robert R. (Bob) Smith.

Environmental workshop intended to 'get personal'

Staff Report

Midland Coalition of Environmental Action (MCEA) through local government, will sponsor an environmental workshop 7 p.m. tonight. Ted Windecker will speak on the individual's involvement with global issues. According to Windecker, "Participants will discover how they contribute to environmental problems and how they can also help to heal the planet."

The three-hour workshop is open to the public free of charge. It will be conducted at the Permian Church of Religious Science, 2311 Elizabeth (west of Dennis the Menace Park).

MCEA will also meet 7 p.m. May 29 in the church. Topics for discussion will include recycling. The coalition was organized to promote Midland as an environmental leader in Texas and to attract new and forward thinking ideas to preserve the environs of Midland County through responsible government action on local levels.

The coalition is seeking other groups and organizations to unite under the auspices of the MCEA. For information call 682-6124...

Options in housing proposed

Growing elderly population requires housing to fit its needs

By Marsha Kay Seff
Copley News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — They live out their lives in their own homes or in nursing homes. Some are finding refuge in converted convents, rectories, schools and dormitories.

They struggle with failing vision, hearing, agility and health. Still, they cling stubbornly to their independence for as long as they can.

They are the elderly and their numbers are greater than ever before. In the last two decades, the over-65 population increased twice as fast as the rest of the population. By the year 2020, almost one in five Americans will be 65 or older, according to the National Center for Health Statistics.

How to house them was the topic of a recent conference in San Francisco sponsored by the American Association of Retired Persons, the American Society on Aging, the National Association of Home Builders and the National Association of Senior Living Industries.

Seminars included a variety of housing options, from shared living accommodations in remodeled schools to reverse mortgages designed to help aging home owners remain at home.

"The 1980s were not a good period for housing, and housing for the aging particularly suffered," said conference speaker Jon Pynoos, co-director of the Long Term Care National Resource Center at UCLA.

ALTHOUGH THE budget for the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development was cut by 70 percent, Pynoos said nonfederal programs have struggled to fill the gap. Community-based organizations set up shared-housing programs, and private developers switched their emphasis to seniors, particularly those with nest eggs to spend.

According to Terrence Duvernay, executive director of the Michigan State Housing Development Authority, "States have found exceptionally creative ways to meet housing needs, but they can't replace the federal commitment for housing." He said states have underwritten interest rates on mortgages, offered low-cost home-improvement loans and home equity-conversion programs, and even built some group-care facilities.

"I'm optimistic (about meeting housing needs), but we need to keep the pressure on," Duvernay said. "We must have the federal government back as the true partner in housing."

Pynoos said there are 29 housing-related bills before Congress.

The HUD scandal and subsequent leadership change have helped move housing to the front burner, said Brian Lindberg, staff director of the Subcommittee on Housing and Consumer Interests of the House Select Committee on Aging.

BUT DESPITE the apparent renewal of interest, the general tone of the conference was one of reserved optimism: Housing for the elderly is in its infancy and there is still much to be done to prepare for the aging of baby boomers.

While surveys show that most seniors would choose to age in place, many are unable to remain home. Even those in shared-housing or congregate facilities, which cater to the relatively independent, often are forced to move out when they require increased levels of help.

At present, people only get the opportunity to age in place up to a certain point, said Joan Davitt of the Shared Housing Resource Center in Philadelphia. But giving them the chance to stay in one place as long as possible is better than putting them into a more restrictive environment before they need it, she said.

The irony is that being forced to move is more a threat to frail seniors than their health, said conference speaker Donald Terner, president of Bridge Housing Corp. in San Francisco.

Those who prefer to remain at home often are stymied by a lack of support services that might make it possible. Supplying those services and equipping existing homes and senior facilities to adapt to the changing needs of aging residents are some of the major challenges of the senior housing market, conference speakers said.

'A major challenge for developers is to create communities, not buildings.'

WHITTLING PRICES down on housing facilities to make them affordable for seniors on limited, fixed incomes is another major concern. "We have not been able to build projects for moderate-income elders — people who make between $15,000 and $20,000," said speaker Michael DeShane, administrator of Kickland Union Manor in Portland, Ore. Most cater either to the poor or to those who can afford luxury and expensive technology, he said.

Still, the need to house today's and tomorrow's seniors has spawned a new industry, which includes not only developers of new projects but also contractors who specialize in retrofitting existing buildings for the elderly.

"Senior housing is an enormous market," said Bridge Housing's Terner. "Private developers with a pure business sense have got to see the numbers; there's a big business opportunity out there."

But it is a young business with growing pains. Among the problems discussed at the conference:

Contractors complain there's not enough money in doing the small jobs that seniors require to make their homes more livable; that they can't earn a living installing grab bars.

Some contractors say they are eager to install special aids and appliances for frail residents, but don't know where to buy them.

Advertisements for special equipment tend to emphasize disabilities and safety rather than comfort and ease — and most seniors aren't buying.

Even with tax credits and other government incentives, many developers are finding it difficult to keep prices down.

The "NIMBY" syndrome — not in my back yard — creates a constant battle between developers and neighbors.

While some senior housing projects have been very successful, others fail. A study by the American Association of Retired Persons pinpointed several reasons for the failures. Among them are overbuilding one area, borrowing too much money up front and attempting to pass it on to residents, failing to plan for contingencies, providing too little value, doing poor marketing and screening of residents, and mismanaging operations and finances.

To thrive in the new market, businesses are forced to be creative.

Bridge Housing, which has more than 900 senior housing units in the San Francisco area, has converted an unused elementary school into a community center at one of its projects. Since the elementary-school population is decreasing and the senior group increasing, such conversions make a lot of sense, Terner said.

Another benefit of converting existing buildings into elderly housing projects is that the architecture already is part of the community, Davitt said.

In North Carolina, a town and its hospital formed a partnership to convert an old nurses' dormitory into a 12-unit shared residence. In Buffalo, N.Y., an old convent was similarly converted; and in Massachusetts, an old sea captain's house and an unused hospital wing were turned into shared-living quarters for seniors.

BRIDGE HOUSING has built a senior apartment project on top of a retail paint store. "We took a neighborhood that had run out of land and looked at the roofs to create it," Terner said.

As part of the complex, the company landscaped the roof and added a playground for neighborhood children. Monthly rent for the independent-living apartments is $390. Indirect subsidies, including density bonuses and tax credits, enabled the company to keep down costs, Terner said.

But the more intensive the care, the higher the costs. Bridge Housing's first continuing care facility, in San Mateo, Calif., charges a transferable "membership" fee of $175,000 to $425,000 and an additional $1,200 to $1,800 monthly maintenance fee to live in the facility for life. "This is serious luxury living," Terner said, adding that he's not happy about having to charge so much.

Still, he said, the 207 units sold out even before they were completed. Although most of the residents had only modest incomes, many used the substantial equity in their Bay Area homes to cover the fees.

If there's such a big demand at those prices, Terner said, he can only imagine how much demand there would be for more affordable units.

But a new survey by the AARP found that 86 percent of those over 65 would prefer to age in place — that is stay in their current home.

To investigate ways to help frail seniors remain in their current homes, a Living at Home Program was sponsored by 38 foundations, including the Commonwealth Fund. Grants totaling $350,000 were split in 1986 between 20 local test programs nationwide.

NOW COMPLETE, the three-year pilots included a variety of programs designed to provide seniors with support services that would help them maintain their relative independence. A respite-care program gave family members some relief from looking after aging relatives. In an elderly Chinese community, translators helped residents find the health services they needed. Volunteer neighborhood advisers in another community steered elderly residents to appropriate services. Through a hot line and beeper system in one neighborhood, social workers were alerted when immediate help was needed.

According to Dr. Morton Bogdonoff, director of the program, the pilots were so successful that most will be continued with local funds. The point is, he said, with support services, many seniors can remain at home.

Others need help with finances. That's where reverse mortgages have proved beneficial to some older home owners.

The mortgages allow seniors to tap the accumulated equity in their homes without having to move, according to Bronwyn Belling of the AARP. She said that in addition to boosting their regular income, some of these mortgages also can be used for home care and repair and long-term health care.

An $85 million program started in 1985 by the Connecticut Housing Finance Authority program and funded through a bond program has been so successful that the authority plans to continue it, according to Gary King, a vice president of the authority. "We need to figure out a creative way to finance it," he said.

The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development is offering to insure 2,500 reverse mortgages nationwide and a bill is pending to increase that number to 25,000.

BECAUSE OF the overwhelming response to the program — about 30,000 seniors initially made inquiries — lotteries had to be set up to choose the people who could participate in the counseling program explaining the loan. After the program was explained in detail, only about 400 seniors applied for the loans.

"It sounds very good at first blush," said Belling. "But once they get counseling, they may find that there are alternatives better suited to their individual needs."

She said that reverse mortgages end up being very expensive, and, therefore, are not suited for short-term situations. "If you think you will live forever in an area with no appreciation, you will make out like a bandit," she said.

But, Belling also said, "If the counselors are really doing their jobs right, most people will not take out reverse mortgages."

Even so, she said she hopes the number of insured loans will be increased. So far, she said, the loans are available from only 50 lenders in 30 states. The biggest problem for her now is trying to train enough counselors to explain the loans to all seniors who are interested.

"The reverse mortgage holds great promise," Belling said. Ultimately, she believes, lenders would be able to hand out 25,000 reverse mortgages — but not overnight.

Whether seniors are considering increased home services, a reverse mortgage or alternative living arrangements, conference speakers urged that people start making plans before a time of crisis.

Seniors might not be so determined to age in place if there were more attractive alternatives, said speaker James Sykes, an assistant to the vice chancellor for geriatrics at the University of Wisconsin. "A major challenge for developers is to create communities, not buildings." Regardless of the type of senior facility, he said, it has to reinforce the residents' sense of being in control.

Elizabeth Real, left, and Margaretta Bolding, along with pianist Wil Adler, will present a musical program, "Curtain Calls," at the 11:30 a.m. Friday luncheon meeting of Midland Country Club Ladies Association. For reservations call 682-4378.

DEAR ABBY

Shakespeare's words are still being disputed

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Fools rush in! In second-guessing Shakespeare, you should not be so quick to give credence to a high school student's English teacher. Most serious Shakespeare scholars now agree that, in Hamlet, "nunnery" means a convent or cloister.

Van Buren

It was not until 1936 that Dover Wilson, in his "What Happens in Hamlet," first suggested that it meant a brothel, along with other silly notions, most of them Freudian. Such interpretation became fashionable for a while (Laurence Olivier gave it acceptability) but it has largely faded.

Although there was some use of the word "nunnery" in Elizabethan England as a brothel, such use was not extant. Moreover, no one can rationally read this scene without concluding that Hamlet, in urging Ophelia thither, is crudely suggesting that only in such a place can she hope to escape the evil machinations of man and the vile institution of marriage, which has so despoiled his mother. He can hardly have meant brothel to this end.

Isaac Asimov, in adopting the conventional meaning, offers another suggestion: "But is it Ophelia he plans to send to a nunnery, or is it his mother, Queen Gertrude?" (Remember that Edward the Confessor sent his mother, Emma, to a nunnery once he had gained the throne.)

Be assured that, for every opinion of Shakespeare, there is another to the opposite, and hundreds in between. And just because this genius was much given to the bawdy does not mean we should go out of our way to give his every word that twist. — WILL BAKER, YAKIMA, WASH.

DEAR MR. BAKER: Whatever did we do before the facts were faxed in a matter of minutes?

According to Warren Seid of the Frances Howard Goldwyn Hollywood Regional Library in Los Angeles: "There were two meanings of the word 'nunnery' in Shakespeare's time. Noting his use of puns, and the nature of the character who is being addressed, it becomes clear that Hamlet is telling Ophelia to go to a nunnery where personalities of note can get 'favors' from the inhabitants. It is there that he can go to breed sinners."

A page from the Oxford English Dictionary (2nd Edition, Volume X) shows under the word "nunnery": 1) A place of residence for a body or community of nuns, a building in which nuns live under religious rule and discipline; a convent. 2) A house of ill fame.

Aha! So, there is, indeed, a question about what Hamlet meant in his speech to Ophelia. I rest my case.

DEAR ABBY: Your suggestion that telephone operators eliminate the "ma'ams" and "sirs" to avoid mistakes is a good one.

If the woman sounds like a man, she should give up her four-pack-a-day habit. And if the man sounds like a woman, lifting barbells might help. — VIVIAN GROW IN PALM SPRINGS

All M&Ms candies different, just like snowflakes

Copley News Service

Here is something you probably weren't aware of — no two M&M candies are ever alike!

M&Ms may have the same allotment of chocolate interior but the candy-coating process varies enough that each one has a distinctly unique shape, weight and overall volume.

Plain M&Ms are five calories apiece, peanut M&Ms are 10 calories apiece, and the average bag of plain M&Ms contains 30 percent browns, 20 percent yellows, 20 percent reds, 10 percent oranges, 10 percent greens and 10 percent tans.

Before 1949 you could also find violet M&Ms in each package, but now violets have gone to M&M heaven to be replaced by more down-to-earth tans.

NEW YORK (AP) — David Stern makes very few mistakes. On Sunday, however, the highly praised NBA commissioner made a big one on national television.

While conducting the league's draft lottery, Stern got the NBA's Minnesota Timberwolves confused with the NHL's Minnesota North Stars.

Right state. Wrong nickname and wrong sport.

Stern mistakenly said "Minnesota North Stars" when he opened an envelope containing the Minnesota Timberwolves' logo. Everybody laughed, including Stern.

"I was trying to keep straight in my head who was still available to finish in the top three," Stern explained. "I also had just sent a congratulatory note to the new North Stars owner, Howard Baldwin, and I guess I got confused."

Timberwolves president Bob Stein wasn't ruffled by the mistake.

"We have no plans at this time to change our name," he said.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Randy Barnes unleashed the longest shot put throw in history Sunday, 75 feet, 10¼ inches, that earned him a $50,000 bonus.

Barnes' throw shattered the world record of 75-8 held by Ulf Timmermann of East Germany.

Barnes, the 1988 Olympic silver medalist behind Timmerman, said he had been throwing well beyond the German's record in practice, including one toss of 77 feet.

Nets, Sonics finally find fortune

■ A tough season ends for New Jersey and Seattle as they land the top two picks for the upcoming NBA draft.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — The New Jersey Nets and Seattle SuperSonics, two hard-luck teams during the NBA season, found good fortune Sunday.

The Nets, worse even than the four expansion teams, took advantage of a new "weighted" lottery system to win the first pick in the NBA draft, while Seattle beat the odds to get the second selection.

"Our guys worked hard for this pick," Nets vice president Willis Reed said sarcastically of the team's 17-65 record.

"We haven't thought too much about who to pick because we could have wound up fourth in the draft," Reed said. "We'll celebrate having the pick for a while, then decide between now and the draft who we're going to pick."

Derrick Coleman, a 6-foot-10 power forward from Syracuse, is considered the top player available in the June 27 draft, but Reed said before the lottery that he might trade the No. 1 pick if he got it. Reed considers power forward Roy Hinson his best player.

Sunday, however, Reed indicated a trade is unlikely.

"It would take a lot of talking and some unusual things to happen for us to trade this pick," Reed said. "Right now, we're looking to use this pick to help us."

The Nets, because they had the worst record, had the most ping-pong balls in the drawing — 11 of the 66 that determined the top 11 picks in the draft.

But the SuperSonics, who finished 41-41, had only two of the 65 remaining balls after the Nets won the first spot.

"We felt we had a chance for a top three pick," General Manager Bernie Bickerstaff said. "That's why people play the lottery, to beat the odds. With the season we had, our luck had to change."

The Sonics tied Atlanta for the best record among the 11 non-playoff teams. A pre-lottery drawing determined that the Hawks would get one lottery ball ad Seattle two, but that was enough for the SuperSonics.

Bickerstaff also was non-committal about who the Sonics would take with the No. 2 pick.

Besides Coleman, the draft is expected to be dominated by perimeter players such as Dennis Scott of Georgia Tech, Gary Payton of Oregon State, Kendall Gill of Illinois, Bo Kimble of Loyola Marymount and Rumeal Robinson of Michigan.

"Winning the No. 2 spot gives us the ability to listen and it gives us leverage," Bickerstaff said. "We'll do anything that will help us improve the team. There's a lot of research ahead for us. We have to wonder how valuable this pick is for someone else."

Sonics president Bob Whitsitt said it was exciting when Commissioner David Stern opened an envelope with Golden State's logo inside for the 10th draft spot. That was where Seattle would have picked if it hadn't made the top three.

"As soon as No. 10 wasn't us, we were cruising," Whitsitt said. "I knew we were in the top three."

The remaining lottery picks have Miami third and Orlando fourth, followed by Charlotte, Minnesota, Sacramento, the Los Angeles Clippers, Dallas, Golden State and Atlanta.

While the lottery was serious business for the participating teams, it also produced a funny moment. The audience laughed when Stern mistakenly said "Minnesota North Stars" while opening an envelope containing the Minnesota Timberwolves' logo.

Dumars lights up Jordan's Bulls

■ Bruised hip limits Air Jordan to a meager 34 points as Pistons take control of Bulls in Game 1.

Associated Press

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Joe Dumars grabbed the virtuoso role for the Detroit Pistons Sunday after Michael Jordan was slowed by a bruised hip.

Dumars scored 18 third-quarter points and Detroit's tenacious defense held Jordan to eight second-half points as the defending NBA champion Pistons beat the Bulls 86-77 in the first game of the Eastern Conference finals.

He was able to keep playing despite the pain, but the hip muscle tightened during halftime and Jordan wasn't the same.

"I knew he was hurt," Dumars said. "He didn't appear to have the same ability as in the first half. He didn't have the same effectiveness."

Jordan, who had 26 of his 34 points at halftime, said the pain bothered his rhythm.

"It's a little disappointing, knowing that I got into a great rhythm," Jordan said. "Something like this happens, it knocks your rhythm off and I spent the rest of the game trying to get it back."

The best-of-7 series continues Tuesday night at the Palace, then shifts to Chicago Stadium for afternoon games Saturday and Monday.

Dumars, the most valuable player in last year's championship series when the Pistons swept the Los Angeles Lakers for their first league title, finished with 27 points.

"It was just a situation where the first couple of shots fell and they kept calling my number," Dumars said. "On this team, when you get hot you get the ball."

"Any time you put yourself in that position to take those kinds of shots, you're going to hit the floor," Detroit's Bill Laimbeer said. "That's a fact."

The Pistons, meeting Chicago for the second straight year in the conference finals, are 23-6 against the Bulls in the last three years, including the playoffs. Last year, they eliminated Chicago in six games.

"Dumars had a good second half and Michael had a good first half," Chicago coach Phil Jackson said. "You have to guard against Detroit's ability to play a big quarter."

Over the past two seasons, Detroit has held playoff opponents to less than 100 points in 23 of 26 games.

Chicago's 77 points matched the 1990 playoff low, by New York against Detroit in the second round. It was the fewest points for the Bulls in the playoffs since 1988, also against the Pistons.

Last year, Detroit won the title by winning 15 of 17 games, holding playoff opponents to an average of 92.9 points, the best defense since the advent of the 24-second clock 35 years ago. They allowed fewer than 100 points in 15 of the 17 games.

"It was one of those strange opening round games," Detroit coach Chuck Daly said. "There was a lot of tightness on both teams' part. You waste a lot of energy going into a game like this."

Detroit shot 42 percent for the game and the Bulls shot only 37.8. The Pistons also had a 48-36 advantage in rebounds.

Crenshaw wins Colonial crown

■ Not even a pesky drainage ditch can keep Gentle Ben from title row.

FORT WORTH (AP) — Even an adventure with a ball bobbing down a drainage ditch couldn't halt Ben Crenshaw's march to a three-stroke victory Sunday in the Colonial golf tournament.

The anticipated struggle with Curtis Strange failed to materialize and Crenshaw appeared on the way to a more-or-less routine victory until he put some excitement in it on the 17th hole.

The ball, bobbing and bouncing in the water in the concrete-lined ditch, traveled about 100 yards back toward the tee and the clubhouse.

Crenshaw took a drop from the point at which the ball entered the hazard, played his next shot to the green and got away with a bogey that, in view of his three-shot lead, was without meaning.

When his closest pursuer, Nick Price, also made bogey from a bunker on the same hole, Crenshaw lost no ground, only a golf ball.

It was the only real glitch in an otherwise impressive performance that was aided by Strange's self-destruction on a pair of three-putts early in the day.

Some exceptionally low scores were recorded Sunday — a 62 by Gene Sauers that matched the course record, and a 63 by Mike Hulbert — on greens softened and slowed by the morning thunderstorm.

Corey Pavin and Price tied for second with John Mahaffey at 275. Mahaffey had a closing 66, Pavin and Price 68 on the Colonial Country Club course. Strange, who matched par 70 over the final 18 holes, and Hulbert were next at 276.

Chaps advance

Staff Report

TYLER — The Midland College men's tennis team got off to a good start here Sunday with a 6-0 win over Laredo Junior College on the opening day of the Men's National Junior College tennis tournament.

MC, seeded No. 1 in the tournament, easily handled Laredo without missing a beat. They didn't have to play any of the doubles matches.

The is the first year that the team title will be decided in dual match style. The team title will be declared on Wednesday. Play Thrusday through Saturday will decide the individual titles in a flighted tournament format.

MC is scheduled to face McLennan Community College of Waco in today's second round. The Chaparrals had a tough time against McLennan three weeks ago in the Region V championships, barely winning by a 5-4 margin in Roswell, N.M.

An early morning rain delayed play Sunday, but when skies cleared, the Chaps rolled over Laredo.

MC's No. 1 player Jesper Witt disposed of Laredo's No. 1 Jorge Espinosa by a 6-3, 6-3 margin.

Witt was followed by Mohamed Ridaoui's 6-1, 6-4 win over Jesus Hernandez. Amine Kadari ran over George Vazquez, 6-1, 6-1; Bernt Gade defeated Alex Perea, 6-4, 6-4; Pepe Garcia won over Julian Yharra, 6-3, 6-3; and James Homan beat Christian Ovellana, 6-1, 6-3.

Orioles three-hit Rangers

Associated Press

Pete Harnisch and Gregg Olson combined on three-hitter Sunday and the Baltimore Orioles beat Texas 4-0, the Rangers' eighth loss in 10 games.

Harnisch (4-1) allowed only two hits through seven innings before Olson retired the Rangers in the final two innings to earn his ninth save.

The duo outdueled Kevin Brown (5-3), who surrendered only four hits in 7⅔ innings but lost his third straight decision. Mike Jeffcoat relieved in the eighth and was met by Mickey Tettleton's three-run homer.

The Orioles ended the scoreless duel in the seventh when Craig Worthington turned an almost routine single into a double by hustling into second base just ahead of the tag. He then moved to third on a grounder.

After a walk, Brown, pitching to Rene Gonzales, threw a breaking ball into the dirt that got past catcher Geno Petralli for a wild pitch that allowed Worthington to score.

The Rangers got a runner in scoring position in the eighth when Thad Bosley singled and pinch-runner Cecil Espy stole second, but Olson fanned pinch-hitter Pete Incaviglia and Jeff Huson.

Brewers 5, Athletics 2

Chris Bosio pitched a four-hitter for his first victory since April 29 and Dave Parker keyed a five-run fourth inning with a bases-loaded single.

Bosio (4-2) broke his personal two-game losing streak on another damp and overcast day at County Stadium where the game-time temperature was 47 degrees. He pitched his third complete game of the season and both Oakland runs were unearned.

B.J. Surhoff gave the Brewers a 1-0 lead with his third homer of the season with one out in the fourth off Scott Sanderson (4-2). The homer came minutes after Oakland manager Tony LaRussa was ejected by home plate umpire Jim Joyce for arguing balls and strikes.

With two out, recently activated Billy Spiers got his first hit of the season and Sanderson walked Paul Molitor and Gary Sheffield to load the bases. Sanderson then threw a high-inside pitch that got away from catcher Terry Steinbach, allowing Spiers to score on what was ruled a wild pitch.

Robin Yount walked to reload the bases and Parker followed with a two-run single against his former team.

AL Roundup

Royals 4, Yankees 3

Kansas City outhit New York 17-2 but needed Kevin Seitzer's run-scoring single with two out in the 10th inning to beat the Yankees.

The Yankees, held to one single and an unearned run for eight innings, had rallied to tie the score on Don Mattingly's two-run homer with one out in the ninth.

Jeff Montgomery (4-2), who yielded Mattingly's fifth home run, was the winner after Storm Davis held the Yankees to one hit for 7⅓ innings.

The setback dropped the Yankees into last place in the American League East.

Blue Jays 5, Angels 1

Toronto failed to get a baserunner until the sixth inning but snapped a season-high five-game losing streak when George Bell's tie-breaking single keyed a three-run seventh that gave the Blue Jays a victory over Mark Langston.

Langston (3-4) retired the first 16 batters before Manny Lee tripled with one out in the sixth and scored the tying run on Junior Felix's sacrifice fly.

Mookie Wilson started the seventh with a single, Toronto's second hit, and went all the way to third on Langston's wild pitch. Kelly Gruber walked and Bell singled for a 2-1 lead.

Langston (3-4) allowed five runs — four earned — on five hits in seven innings-plus. He struck out seven and walked two.

Toronto rookie Willie Blair, making his first major-league start, went six innings, yielding one run and four hits while walking two and striking out four.

Twins 5, Red Sox 4

Kent Hrbek drove in three runs with a homer and single as Minnesota beat Boston for its 13th victory in 17 games this month.

Roy Smith (2-4) settled down after a rocky start and got the victory with sixth-inning relief from Terry Leach. Smith yielded three runs and seven hits in 5⅓ innings. Leach gave up a run in 2⅓ innings and Rick Aguilera pitched the final 1⅓ for his 11th save, yielding three hits.

After yielding singles to pinch-hitter Tony Pena and Luis Rivera, the latter driving in a run, Aguilera fanned Wade Boggs for the third out.

After Boston took a 2-0 lead in the first inning on Ellis Burks' fluke bases-loaded double, Hrbek pulled Minnesota to 2-1 with an RBI single in the third inning and put the Twins ahead to stay 4-2 with a two-run homer, his seventh, after an RBI double by Kirby Puckett in the fifth.

Boston starter Eric Hetzel (1-3) gave up five hits in five-plus innings but was hurt by four walks.

Mariners 8, Indians 7

Edgar Martinez, who homered, tripled and singled earlier, hit a tie-breaking two-run homer in the top of the 10th inning and Ken Griffey Jr. also hit two home runs as Seattle outlasted Cleveland.

Griffey singled with two out off Jesse Orosco (2-2), the fifth Cleveland pitcher. Martinez then hit his fifth home run. The Mariners had 15 hits, including two doubles, two triples and the four home runs.

Seattle Mike Schooler (1-0) earned the victory with three innings. He yielded Sandy Alomar's third home run in the bottom of the 10th.

Tigers 3, White Sox 2

Lloyd Moseby's tie-breaking single with two out in the 10th inning gave Detroit its sixth straight victory.

Tony Phillips was hit by a pitch from loser Wayne Edwards (0-2) to open the 10th. After Alan Trammell and Dave Bergman grounded into force plays, Cecil Fielder, who earlier hit his major-league-leading 16th homer, singled Bergman to second and Moseby followed with his single.

Dawson's blast sinks Astros

Associated Press

Andre Dawson homered and drove in three runs and Shawn Boskie pitched a five-hitter in his major league debut Sunday as the Chicago Cubs beat Houston 5-1, the Astros' 12th loss in 14 games.

Dawson, who also doubled and singled, leads the majors with 41 RBIs and the National League with 13 home runs. He drove in nine runs in the last three games against Houston.

Boskie, called up from Triple-A Iowa on Saturday, struck out six and walked one. He also got two hits, including an RBI double off Mike Scott (1-5).

Scott, the league's only 20-game winner last season, allowed four runs on nine hits in six innings. He struck out four and walked one in his ninth start of the year.

Chicago took a 1-0 lead in the first when Jerome Walton led off with a double and later scored on a single by Dawson. Walton opened the third with another double and came home on Mark Grace's sacrifice fly.

Rookie Eric Anthony hit a home run, his second of the season, for Houston's run in the third.

Dawson led off the sixth inning with a home run, Dwight Smith followed with a single and came home on a double by Boskie. Dawson hit an RBI double in the seventh.

Cardinals 6, Reds 2

Joe Magrane won his second consecutive decision and Tom Pagnozzi singled home the tie-breaking run in the seventh inning.

Magrane (2-6) overcame two costly wild pitches and two errors by first baseman Pedro Guerrero. He allowed just five hits over seven innings, giving up one earned run.

Guerrero had an RBI double during a three-run eighth against Rob Dibble to help atone for his fielding mistakes. The Cardinals had scored only nine runs in seven games, six of them losses, against Cincinnati.

Dibble — who took a 0.00 ERA into the game despite allowing 10 of 21 inherited runnrs to score — gave up his first runs in 21 innings with a wild eighth. He walked Coleman, hit Ozzie Smith on the arm and gave up a double to Guerrero for the first run. Dibble then walked Dave Collins with the bases loaded and gave up a sacrifice fly to Jose Oquendo for two more.

Dodgers 6, Phillies 3

Alfredo Griffin again came through with the bases loaded, hitting a two-run single, leading Los Angeles over Philadelphia.

A day after Philadelphia beat the Dodgers 15-12 in 11 innings, Ramon Martinez and Mike Hartley combined to slow down the Phillies. Martinez (4-2) gave up three runs on six hits in seven innings and struck out eight and Hartley finished for his first major-league save.

With the score 1-1, Los Angeles loaded the bases with no outs in the fourth inning against Pat Combs (2-4) on a double by Hubie Brooks, a walk and a single by Mike Scioscia. Griffin's hit made him 9-for-18 with the bases loaded since joining the Dodgers and 16-for-33 lifetime.

NL Roundup

Padres 3, Mets 1

Roberto Alomar hit a two-out, two-run single in the seventh inning and reliever Craig Lefferts escaped a bases-loaded jam in the eighth as San Diego sent the New York Mets to their fifth loss in six games.

Ron Darling (1-4) took over for starter Sid Fernandez to start the seventh with the score 1-1. The Padres loaded the bases on three walks, the last an intentional pass to Tony Gwynn with runners on second and third.

Expos 6, Giants 5

Pinch hitter Wallace Johnson's two-run homer in the 11th inning put Montreal ahead and they held off San Francisco.

Spike Owen singled with one out against Atlee Hammaker (3-3) and Johnson connected on the next pitch for his first home run of the year and the third pinch-homer of his career. Johnson had been hitless in seven at-bats as a pinch hitter this season.

Braves 13, Pirates 11

Dale Murphy and Ron Gant hit two home runs apiece as Atlanta reached season highs in four offensive categories in a victory over Pittsburgh.

Murphy hit a three-run homer in the first inning, his fourth of the season and his 200th in Atlanta, and added a two-run shot in the sixth. Gant hit his fourth of the season leading off the bottom of the first and added a solo shot in the third.

Pittsburgh's Bobby Bonilla also hit two home runs, giving him 11 for the season. Bonilla went 4-for-5, scored five runs and drove in four.

The Braves reached season highs with 13 runs, including six in the second inning, hits (16) and extra-base hits (8).

Booker ends late night marathon in LA

LOS ANGELES (AP) — By the time Rod Booker returned to the visiting clubhouse from a post-game radio interview to Philadelphia Saturday night, someone had taken the Phillies' lineup card from the dugout wall and placed it in his locker as a souvenir.

The rookie still was clutching a gift certificate from the interview when teammate Ken Howell said to him: "I don't know what they gave you, but they ought to give you a clock for as long as we were out there playing."

In an endurance test thinly disguised as a baseball game, 42 players from the Phillies and Los Angeles Dodgers combined for 27 runs and 39 hits against 14 pitchers and left 27 baserunners stranded, before Booker's bases-loaded triple off Jay Howell in the 11th inning gave Philadelphia a 15-12 victory. It lasted 4 hours, 50 minutes.

"Our hitting was outstanding and our pitching stunk," Philadelphia manager Nick Leyva said bluntly.

Booker had spent Saturday afternoon watching his son Aaron play a Little League game. Later that evening, Booker gave his father an opportunity to watch him play. It was the first time his dad had seen him play a professional game in person.

How wacky was this game?

For starters, the Phillies fielded a lineup that previously had combined for one home run and eight RBIs against Dodgers starter Fernando Valenzuela. But they finished with 24 hits, after tagging Valenzuela for five runs and nine hits in 4 1-3 innings.

All five Philadelphia runs off Valenzuela came in the fourth inning. The big hit was a three-run homer by Philadelphia starter Dennis Cook, his first in the major leagues. It was the second time in Valenzuela's last two starts that the opposing pitcher had homered off him. Wednesday night, it was Montreal's Kevin Gross, but Valenzuela did not lose either game.

"I'd much rather have pitched better, than hit that home run," Cook said.

Cook, 5-0, was tagged for seven runs and five hits in 3 2-3 innings — his earliest knockout of the season. His earned run average soared from a major league-leading 1.46 to 2.38. At Dodger Stadium, his ERA is 14.53 in 8 2-3 innings.

Graf's 66-match win streak halted

WEST BERLIN (AP) — Steffi's streak is over.

Teen-ager Monica Seles ended Steffi Graf's 66-match winning streak Sunday, winning 6-4, 6-3 at the German Open to capture her fifth straight title.

"I was so far away from playing my best tennis, it was difficult to get into it," Graf said. "If I play like that I can't expect to win."

Seles extended her own winning streak to 24 matches by handing Graf her first loss in nearly a year. Graf hadn't lost since last June 10, when Arantxa Sanchez Vicario beat her in the French Open final.

Graf's winning streak was the second longest in the modern era of women's tennis. Martina Navratilova won 74 straight matches in 1984.

Seles lost the first two games Sunday before breaking Graf's serve twice for a 4-2 lead. From that point on, Seles controlled the match as Graf continued to be plagued by unforced errors.

"This is just one match," Seles said. "I'm just happy that I'm playing well."

Asked what she planned to do with her $100,000 winner's check, Seles said: "Maybe after the French Open I'll buy a car. I'm the only one of the top players who doesn't have a car. My taste is a little exotic — I'd like a Lamborghini, but I'll settle for a red BMW."

It was Seles' first victory over Graf after three losses, the most recent in Brighton, England, seven months ago.

Seles, who routed Navratilova 6-1, 6-1 for the Italian Open title last week, said she has gained a lot of confidence.

"I'm much more experienced now and I wasn't afraid of Graf as much as before," she said.

After falling behind 4-2 in the first set, Graf hit a long forehand on the first point of the seventh game and showed her frustration by slamming a ball into the net.

After both players held serve, Seles took a 40-love lead on Graf's serve to set up her first set point.

Muster routs Chesnokov

ROME (AP) — A year ago, Thomas Muster came to the Italian Open on crutches. On Sunday, he walked off the champion.

Fully recovered from the knee injury that sidelined him for five months last year, the Austrian overwhelmed Andrei Chesnokov of the Soviet Union 6-1, 6-3, 6-1.

The victory fulfilled the hope Muster expressed when he hobbled out onto the Foro Italico center court for a ceremony before the 1989 final.

"When I said then that I would be back to win this tournament, it was more like a wish," Muster said after his one-sided victory Sunday. "But I worked very hard since then and it paid off. This is my biggest tournament victory."

Muster's career was in jeopardy after a car backed into his left knee in a parking lot in April 1989, just one day before he was to play Ivan Lendl in the finals of the Key Biscayne tournament.

"When you stop playing for so long, you wonder if you won't be able to do it anymore," he said. "To win this tournament is very satisfying. But my biggest victory was beating the injury."

Beating Chesnokov proved much easier than expected. What had promised to be a grueling baseline struggle between two of the world's best clay-court players wound up being a cakewalk that lasted just one hour, 53 minutes.

The 24-year-old Soviet clearly showed the effects of his semifinal victory over Emilio Sanchez, a three-hour, three-set battle that ended after 11 p.m. Saturday.

"It was very difficult to play a late match before the final," Chesnokov said. "I couldn't fall asleep before 3 a.m. But Thomas played unbelievably well. I couldn't find any way to win a set."

Trickle outguns Moroso to flag

CONCORD, N.C. (AP) — Dick Trickle outraced Rob Moroso to the checkered flag by inches Sunday to win the Winston Open stock car race at Charlotte Motor Speedway.

Trickle, driving a Pontiac, took home $30,000. He also won the 20th and final starting spot in The Winston, NASCAR's all-star stock car race, later in the day.

Moroso caught up with him and they raced side-by-side for the last two laps, with Trickle getting to the finish line about eight inches ahead of Moroso's Oldsmobile.

Father-son duo win Hi-Low title

Staff Report

Lloyd Innerarity and his son, Ed, posted a two-day score of 122 to win Midland Country Club's annual Hi-Low two-man low ball with full handicap tournament Sunday.

The Inneraritys posted rounds of 58 and 64 to post the win. Jack Byrd and Jim Lacy Sr. placed second, five strokes off the pace at 127. Third went to Dr. David Koch and Bob Marshall with an identical 127.

MCC's Hi-Low Golf Results

LPGA Bradley

HIGH POINT, N.C. (AP) — Cindy Rarick held off final-round charges by Hollis Stacy and Beth Daniel to capture the $400,000 Pat Bradley International on Sunday.

Rarick struggled with her last three holes — bogey, par, bogey — and finished with 25 points under the modified Stableford scoring system, which rewards bold play and penalizes mistakes with points instead of strokes. It was the fourth career victory for Rarick and she took home $62,500.

"I was just happy to have it over with," Rarick said smiling. "I knew after Friday's round, I could still win this tournament."

Daniel finished second with 24 points, 10 in the final round. Stacy, who faltered on the back nine after a hot front side, also had 10 points in the last round and closed with 23 points.

Stacy went on a birdie run on the front nine and tied Rarick, third-round leader, for the top spot at the turn. A three-time U.S. Women's Open champion, Stacy played her first four holes in regulation, but birdied the next five to take her share of first place with 23 points.

Beginning the back nine, Stacy bogeyed the 10th hole, made up two points with a birdie at 13, then used her iron play to put the ball close to the hole for her closing five holes. Her putting touch eluded her, however, and the end came for Stacy at 18. Her tee shot went right and rolled underneath some pine trees.

Daniel, who for a time had overtaken Rarick, was at 21 points after nine holes. Like her partner in the next-to-last threesome, Daniel was around the hole on the back nine, but her last chance at victory slipped away when she missed a 10-footer for birdie at 18.

"I made six birdies and two bogeys. It was just the kind of day where everybody was making birdies. It was wild," Daniel said.

Sherri Steinhauer was fourth with 22 points. Juli Inkster was next with 21 points, and Danielle Ammaccapane and Deb Richard followed with 20 points.

Under the modified Stableford system used for this tournament, par earns a golfer no points. Birdies are worth two points, eagles are worth five points and double-eagles gain eight points. At the other end, bogeys lose a point and double bogeys and worse cost three points.

Trevino wins with record

Seniors Sanders

HOUSTON (AP) — Lee Trevino fired a 3-under-par 69 Sunday for a tournament-record 13-under-par 203 and a six-stroke victory in the Doug Sanders Kingwood Celebrity Classic.

The victory for Trevino was his fourth of the year on the PGA Seniors Tour in eight tournaments since he turned 50.

Trevino birdied the final three holes to shake off runner-up Gary Player, whose tournament-best 7-under-par 65 Sunday had pulled him to within three strokes of the lead.

Trevino was the wire-to-wire leader and also set the 36-hole tournament record with 134.

Player, who started the final round 10 strokes behind Trevino, closed to within three after making a birdie on No. 16.

Player, playing two groups ahead of Trevino, went to 7-under with birdies on 14, 15 and 16 while Trevino bogeyed 15 to go 10 under.

Trevino, in his first full season on the PGA Seniors Tour, has dominated the tour through the year's first five months. The $45,000 first place money increased Trevino's season-leading earnings to $320,133.

EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — Andy Moog regained his touch and the Boston Bruins bounced back into the thick of the Stanley Cup finals.

Moog, benched after allowing three goals on four shots in a 7-2 loss Friday night, stopped 28 shots as the Bruins beat Edmonton 2-1 Sunday night, cutting the Oilers' lead to two games to one.

Moog's bid for his third shutout of the playoffs was spoiled when Esa Tikkanen got his 12th playoff goal on a power play at 5:54 of the third period.

The visiting team has won all three games. Boston, the NHL's best road team during the regular season, will try to pull even on Tuesday night at the Northlands Coliseum.

The only other final series since the best-of-7 format was adopted in 1939 in which the road team won the first three games was in 1966. The visiting team won the first four games of that series as Montreal beat Detroit 4-2.

The Oilers kept the pressure on, outshooting Boston 14-2 in the third period, but Moog made several spectacular saves to preserve Boston's first-ever playoff victory over Edmonton in seven attempts.

Moran keeps Indy slot

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Seventy-five minutes of tension Sunday at the end of the rain-shortened final day of qualifications for the Indianapolis 500 put John Paul Jr. and Rocky Moran into the 33-car lineup and kept out a former winner and the son of another champion.

The hectic period at the end of the day left three-time winner Johnny Rutherford and rookie Jeff Andretti, the son of 1969 Indy winner Mario Andretti, on the sidelines.

The day began with light rain that kept the cars off the track. At that point, after a full day of qualifications Saturday and just 86 minutes last weekend because of rain, the field was full and rookies Buddy Lazier and Andretti were the slowest qualified drivers.

Paul, making his second Indy start and first since 1985, made one attempt at 3:45 p.m., running two laps at 209 before waving off. After some adjustments to the car and a few practice laps, he came back out at 4:45 and bumped Lazier with a solid four-lap average of 214.411 mph.

Andretti, meanwhile, was working at getting a new car ready, just in case. He spun moments later, making two harmless loops off turn four and driving the car into the pit lane.

David "Salt" Walther, trying for a comeback 11 years after his last Indy start, surprised everyone by jumping from laps in the 205 and 206 range to a qualifying effort of 210.558 with just 10 minutes remaining. That was good enough to bump Andretti's qualified car.

Rookie Mike Groff, who was bumped Saturday, warmed up but decided not to make an attempt. Then, Rutherford, who was bumped out of the tentative lineup on Saturday after qualifying at just 204.801, made a try with five minutes left in a car he had driven for only a few laps. He turned a lap over 208 and another at 209, then pulled onto pit road.

Moran, who has run here the last two years, was next.

With Andretti sitting in his car with the engine revving, Moran drove onto the track and bumped Walther with a four-lap average of 211.076 mph. That was the slowest average in the field, but the gun ending qualifying went off as Moran completed his third lap.

"I'm just awful glad to be in," Moran said. "I love driving race cars and love being in Indianapolis. Qualifying is my dream here and trying to come here someday with an effort that's capable of sitting on the front row and winning this thing would be great.

"But I'm glad to be in the race any way I can."

Rutherford, who has failed two years in a row to qualify for a 25th Indy start, crashed twice this month trying to get cars up to speed before qualifying began.

"There were a lot of things to be done and we just didn't have enough time to get 'em all finished," Rutherford said. "I know now what to do to the car to get it in the race. But it's too late.

"Last year was the first time, so that one was a little more devastating. This one, we kind of could see it coming with all the problems we've had all month."

Nothing new, Earnhardt wins again

CONCORD, N.C. (AP) — Dale Earnhardt led from start to finish Sunday to take home $325,000 in The Winston, NASCAR's all-star stock racing event at Charlotte Motor Speedway.

"This is the kind of race I wanted to win," he said. "There was no question who was best out there today.

He was referring to controversial Winston finishes last year and in 1987, the first time Earnhardt won the event.

With the victory, Earnhardt becomes the first two-time winner of The Winston, which dates to 1985. He also is the first to win the race from the pole.

The race featured the 19 most recent winners of Winston Cup stock car races as well as Dick Trickle, who won the preliminary Winston Open earlier Sunday.

Oil loses ground

NEW YORK (AP) — Energy futures prices gave up their gains and closed mostly lower Friday as investors, led by gasoline traders, decided to take profits before the weekend.

The June contract for West Texas Intermediate, slipped 11 cents $18.76 a 42-gallon barrel. Posted price dropped to $17.50 late Friday afternoon.

Analysts said the market had traded higher but when profit-taking began in gasoline futures, oil prices also dropped.

Stocks mixed

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 11.80 to 2,819.91, reducing its gain for the week to 18.33 points.

Advancing issues slightly outnumbered declines in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 742 up, 725 down and 534 unchanged.

Rates rose in the credit markets Friday. Prices of long-term government bonds dropped about $5 for each $1,-000 in face value, increasing their yields to the 8.70 percent-8.75 percent range.

Even if rates resume their decline from Treasury bond yields of slightly above 9 percent at their peak a few weeks ago, some brokers question whether stocks will continue to benefit.

Dollar higher

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar ended mostly higher Friday in light, uneventful trading, while the spotlight in foreign exchange remained on the British pound.

Dollar rates in New York: 1.6483 West German marks; 1.4050 Swiss francs; 5.5695 French francs; 1,212.75 Italian lire; and 1.17975 Canadian dollars.

In Tokyo, where the global trading day begins, the dollar closed at 152.90 yen, up 0.90 yen from Thursday's 152.00-yen finish. It traded at 152.80 yen in London, and at 153.00 yen in New York, up from 152.15 yen.

Gold rose in London to a late bid price of $369.75 a troy ounce from $369.25 bid late Thursday. On New York's Comex, silver bullion for current delivery settled at $5.122 a troy ounce.

Viper unveiled

Chrysler has unveiled its new Dodge Viper sports car, said to have a top speed of 160 mph and price tag of under $50,000 when it hits the market in 1992.

Wildcat tested to flow 1,428 barrels

■ Just when rank wildcats have fallen from favor in the Permian Basin, a Midland firm has drilled a prolific wildcat well, that could stimulate new interest in an area of Dawson County.

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

Those who say the rewards of rank wildcatting are done in the Permian Basin might want to reconsider. A Midland oilman, Jack N. Blair, has completed a prolific exploratory well in Dawson County that is approximately four miles from the nearest production.

The well is the No.1 Weatherby, located 13 miles southwest of Lamesa. The well tested for 1,428 barrels of oil daily with no water from the Fusselman formation.

Regulators sue Dallas developer

■ A Dallas developer and four other former executives of the defunct Independent American Savings Assocation are being sued for $200 million by federal regulators who claim the five conspired to defaud the thrift.

Associated Press

DALLAS — Federal regulators have filed a $200 million civil lawsuit that accuses Dallas developer Thomas Gaubert and four former executives of the defunct Independent American Savings Association of conspiring to defraud the thrift.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. alleges in the lawsuit that Gaubert "dissipated and wasted" the assets of Independent American, causing its failure. The thrift was seized by regulators on May 20, 1987, and later merged into Sunbelt Savings F.S.B.

The lawsuit names Gaubert, who owned a majority stake in the thrift; his brother Jack Gaubert, Independent American co-chairman; Tommy Lane, co-chairman and chief executive; and directors John W. Brophy and Jerry G. Payne, who served on the board's executive loan committee.

"Through their actions, defendants converted IASA from a well-run, financially sound institution to an insolvent institution with a negative net worth exceeding $450 million," the lawsuit states.

The FDIC, alleging fraud, conspiracy, breach of fiduciary duty and gross negligence, is seeking $50 million in actual damages caused by a number of bad loans the officials are accused of arranging and $150 million in exemplary damages.

Abbe David Lowell, an attorney representing Tom Gaubert, told the Dallas Times Herald that the lawsuit is a "makeshift effort" and a "desperation move" to blame Gaubert for the losses at Independent American.

The lawsuit is the latest in the legal battles between the government and the

Study finds banks restricting loans

■ Financial experts were proven right by a Federal Reserve Board study that shows banks are restricting credit to small and medium-sized companies, but the study also found total lending has not declining.

By Nathaniel C. Nash
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — A Federal Reserve Board study confirmed Friday what many financial experts have been saying for weeks: The nation's commercial banks are restricting loans and other types of credit to small and medium-sized companies.

But at the same time, the Fed's study of 60 banking institutions found that while loan growth to some businesses this year had slowed, total lending had not declined, indicating that warnings of a recessionary nationwide credit tightening are unfounded.

"The bottom line is that you don't see the kind of horror stories in the data that you've seen in the anecdotes," said Robert E. Litan, senior fellow and a banking expert at the Brookings Institution.

"There has been some moderate degree of tightening, but there has not been the systemic kind of credit crunch we've heard about."

The survey, which is done three times a year, did find that almost all banks surveyed reported tighter policies on loans involving real estate.

A large share of the bankers said they had imposed "considerably" tighter restrictions on developers of property, indicating that that industry was experiencing a "credit crunch."

"For marginal borrowers, who to a considerable degree are companies involved in and related to real estate, it feels like a credit crunch," said Robert Dugger, chief economist of the American Bankers Association.

"But in the economy as a whole, sound borrowers are still getting credit."

The survey of senior loan officers at small, medium and large banks, comes one week after the nation's three top bank regulators held an unusual meeting with the directors of the bankers association and urged them to continue lending to creditworthy customers.

Bankers indicated in the survey that their tightening up on some loans was largely motivated by what the Fed sur-

COMPUTER NOTES

Computer user groups provide support

By Paul H. Pause

Pause'

In February, 1977, Jonathan Rotenberg, age 13, thought it would be fun to start a club for people interested in personal computers. Four people showed up, one of whom reportedly wandered in by mistake. The first computer user group was born. Today, the Boston Computer Society (BCS) is an international organization with more than 31,000 members.

User groups provide help for members through publications and meetings, and, most importantly, by providing a network of users who, collectively, have a tremendous breadth and depth of experience with various hardware systems and software packages. They exist to help members stay abreast with the latest developments and to build their personal computer skills. Jonathan once described the BCS as doing "...for personal computer owners what the AAA does for people with cars." Someone asked "You mean you tow computers?"

User groups are not just for technonerds, hackers, and kit-building hobbyists. PCResource (February, 1990) estimates that there are some 2000 groups around the country, with a diverse membership of PC users and managers who "...want to know how to make their PCs more productive" — users helping users.

Large user groups also wield a considerable amount of clout with manufacturers and vendors. The BCS estimates that members spend about $55 million a year on computer-related purchases. No wonder that the Macintosh was publicly unveiled by Apple co-founder Steve Jobs at a BCS meeting in 1984.

The Boston Computer Society provides an incredible array of programs for its members. They offer more than 2000 (!) meetings and workshops, each year, aimed at all levels of users. The monthly publication, BCS Update, has articles of interest to members wherever they are. Over 400 "activist" volunteers have agreed to be available to answer member's questions over the phone.

The BCS is really an "umbrella" for more than 50 user- and special interest groups (SIGS) covering virtually every aspect and topic of personal computing. Most provide their own publications, meetings, workshops, and telephone assistance. The various groups publish 40 different newsletters with hints, tips, and techniques for beginning and experienced users alike.

BCS membership automatically includes membership in all the SIGS, and you can pick two newsletters to receive, at no extra charge, in addition to the monthly BCS Update. You can request additional newsletters for just $5.00 apiece. You can choose from computer SIGS, such as IBM PC and Compatibles, Amiga, Apple, Atari, Macintosh, and others. Even the new NeXT computer has a user group going.

Professional interest groups include Computer Graphics, Science and Engineering, Education, Real Estate, Medical/Dental, and Consultants and Entrepreneurs. Other groups include Music, Visually Impaired, Church and Synagogue, Lotus, dBase, and Computer-Aided Publishing.

The BCS has an extensive collection of public domain and shareware software. They operate some 30 online bulletin board systems which provide online conferences, downloadable software, and communication with other members. They have an impressive Resource Center, full of donated computers and the latest software, and an extensive library.

They publish a semi-annual buying guide and companies offer discounts for BCS members. A few mail-order companies promise free shipping for BCS member orders (its true - I've done it. You can easily save $5 - $10.00 per order!)

Southwest Airlines raising most 'Fun Fare' rates

DALLAS (AP) — Southwest Airlines is raising its Fun Fares for the first time since the deep discount air fares were introduced nearly four years ago.

A few of the fares will be reduced but the vast majority will go up effective June 1, said Don Valentine, Southwest's vice president for marketing.

The amount of the increase will vary according to the market, but the fares will be upped an average of 5 percent, Valentine said.

Fun Fares, which have advance purchase requirements ranging from one to 21 days, were introduced by Southwest in September 1986 and have been heavily promoted.

Pan Am to sell Northeast shuttle

By Agis Salpukas
N.Y. Times News Service

Pan American World Airways, with its cash reserves dwindling, said Friday that it was putting its valuable Northeast shuttle up for sale.

By a quirk of timing, just three weeks ago Donald J. Trump announced that he had asked Merrill Lynch & Co. to find a buyer for his shuttle, Pan Am's rival on the Boston-New York-Washington routes.

Only last June, Trump had bought that shuttle from Eastern Airlines.

Pan Am also said it was considering the sale of its routes within Germany.

Pan Am, British Airways and Air France have had the exclusive right to fly to Berlin from various cities in West Germany since World War II.

It would keep its international flights to Berlin.

Although European carriers like Lufthansa have shown an interest in the routes, the prospect of a reunified Germany may make carriers less eager because Berlin may soon be open to other carriers.

Carriers have been seeking to keep fares high even if they lose some travelers.

With the Trump shuttle having recovered most of the market share that the carrier lost last year during the strike against the former owner, Eastern Airlines, it is unlikely that fares would be cut to bring more flyers.

But Candace Browning, an analyst with Wertheim Schroder, saw one possible benefit for travelers. "We could see some new airplanes on the routes," she said.

AP Laserphoto

A Pan Am jet departs National Airport in Washington Friday as the company announced it was putting the shuttle was being put up for sale.

Sale of the shuttle, one of Pan Am's few profitable operations, would merely buy time for the airline to keep flying.

Thomas G. Plaskett, the chairman, president and chief executive of Pan Am, has repeatedly said the airline could not be viable by itself and has sought to be taken over by another carrier.

If the shuttle and the German routes are sold, Pan Am will be down to its valuable international routes and its aging fleet.

Major carriers like American have considered taking over Pan Am but have been deterred by the problems that would come in merging its unionized work force with their own, a process that has been disruptive and costly in other airline mergers.

Pan Am's decision to sell its shuttle, disclosed in a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission, could hurt Trump because he paid $365 million to Eastern and is seeking to recoup his investment, while Pan Am's investment was far less.

Pan Am started its shuttle to compete with Eastern's in 1986 after it bought slots and gates at the Marine Terminal at La Guardia Airport in New York from Texas Air for $76 million.

"It's going to be difficult to command a high price" for the Trump shuttle, Ms. Browning said.

By the end of the first quarter its cash reserve had fallen to $90 million.

Although the carrier is entering the summer travel period, when it takes in a lot of cash from advance bookings, it has had to sell assets repeatedly to keep itself afloat.

Several analysts estimated that each shuttle could bring from $250 million to $300 million, which would mean a loss for Mr. Trump but a profit for Pan Am.

Because it would be impossible to get enough gates and landing slots to set up competing service, every major carrier would be interested in acquiring either shuttle.

The Trump shuttle has been profitable in the past although it is still recovering from a severe downturn in its traffic last year during the machinists' strike at Eastern, which then owned it.

Under Trump's managers it has recovered and now has about 50 percent of the market, still below the roughly 55 percent it had before the strike.

Business travelers flocked to Pan Am's counters to avoid the pickets outside the Eastern terminals and the bitter battle between Eastern management and its unions.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Zero dividends indicate stock's value fallen

By Bill Doyle

Q. My wife and I own about 1,300 shares of stock in a company whose dividend is being reduced to zero. This stock previously paid $1.80 per share annual dividends. As a retired couple, 67 and 68 respectively, we were depending on the dividend checks.

We want to get out of these shares and put our money into stock paying the same dividend. What is the procedure for doing that, without too much cost to us?

A. To get out of those shares, you will have to sell them. Then, you can buy stock in another company or do whatever else you please with the proceeds from the sale.

Doyle

You can do that through any securities brokerage firm. For information on the costs of those transactions, phone a number of brokerages and ask about commission charges, which can vary from firm to firm.

Commissions are lower at "discount" brokerages than at the generally larger full-service firms. However, if you need help picking a stock to buy, it can be wiser to deal with a full-service firm from which you get recommendations, research reports and other assistance. Most discount brokerages simply execute buy and sell orders, while not providing "hand-holding" services.

At this point, I have to be the bearer of truly unhappy tidings. It is most unlikely that the price you get for the shares you now own will be sufficient to purchase another stock paying $1.80 annual dividends per share.

I suspect you haven't been keeping tabs on your present stock. Take a look at your stock's price in newspaper tables. You're almost certain to see that its market value is way down as a result of the dividend omission. When you sell, you will get the market price minus brokerage commission.

As retired senior citizens in need of income, selling that stock makes sense. But, rather than buying another stock, it probably would be better to put the money into something risk free, such as a certificate of deposit.

Q. Acting under a power of attorney for my mother, I am preparing to apply for Medicade for her. To do this her current assets need to be listed. She purchased some stock in April 1966 and holds the certificate.

I wrote to the transfer agent listed on the certificate and was referred to a successor company. That successor company referred me to the state of Delaware, where the original company was incorporated. The Delaware secretary of state office has not replied to my written inquiries.

Can you recommend a place where I can get information about my mother's stock?

A. R. M. Smythe & Co., 26 Broadway, New York, N.Y. 10004, remains the best source I know for tracing old securities. That firm charges $35 for each corporation it researches. Smythe should be able to inform you if the company whose stock your mother holds is still in business, is defunct, merged or whatever and tell you the value — if any — of the stock.

Q. I feel the Securities and Exchange Commission should step in and put an end to the confusion and downright foolishness of brokerage commissions. The commission seems to be different every time I buy or sell stock. Things have gotten so bad that I call three different brokerages and check their commissions before I place a purchase or sale order.

Don't you agree it would it be better if the government made all brokers charge the same commission?

A. No, because I am a firm believer in competition. The situation you long for existed until about 15 years ago. Back then, commission rates were set by the stock exchanges and investors had no choice.

The SEC did step in and decreed that rates would no longer be "fixed" on an after May 1, 1975. The brokerage fraternity screamed and tabbed that date "Mayday" after the international distress call.

WELL: Discovery may bring renewed drilling

(From 5C)

"This is such a rank wildcat that I think it will revitalize interest in an old trend," says Kerry Blair, son of Jack Blair. "It will certainly cause us to take a closer look at the area."

Nearest production to the prolific wilcat is in the Patricia field, four miles south and east of the well.

An offset well has been staked one location east of the Weatherby well and will spud sometime this week, according to Blair.

"It is too early to tell what we have here or how big the structure is, but we are hoping to get at least six to eight wells in the new field," said Blair.

He said the well was drilled on a drilling prospect generated by geologist George Ulmo of Midland, and said it took a lot of guts on the part of everyone to drill the well.

"Rank wildcats are hard to put together and hard to sell in this day and time. It took guts for the geologist to show it, my father to run with it and the investors to back it."

Blair said his father had been in the business for 35 years and it was one of the most successful wells for him.

Working interest partners in the well include: Mary Wiley Black, Richard Barto Moncrief Jr., Lee Wiley Moncrief, Michael Joseph Moncrief all of Fort Worth. TMBR-Sharp drilling of Midland, Wes-Tex Drilling of Abilene, Evergreen Oil & Gas and Jack N. Blair.

The exact location of the well is 467 feet from northwest, and 467 feet from the southwest lines of Labor 1, League 271 in the Loving CSL Survey.

It was tested on a 16/64 in. choke with a tubing pressure of 600 psi and a casing pressure of 500 psi. Completion was in an open hole section at 12,419 to 12,492 ft. on a ground elevation of 2,982 feet. Tops of the formations were upper Mississippian at 11,332 feet, Silurian at 12,272 and Fusselman at 12,351. No acid treatment was used in the completion.

NOTES: Groups provide wide variety of activities

(From 5C)

Membership in the BCS is $34/year for members outside the Boston area. Membership applications are available at the Permian Basin Graduate Center (corner of Main and Illinois, Midland), or you can contact the society directly at: The Boston Computer Society, One Center Plaza, Boston, MA 02108, (617) 367-8080.

Another large group, a little closer to home, is the Houston Area League of PC Users. HAL-PC has over 9100 members and publishes one of the best monthly journals that I've seen. They also have an extensive collection of software and operate active bulletin boards to download programs or get technical help with hardware and software problems. Yearly dues are $25.00. HAL-PC, P.O. Box 722900, Houston, TX, 77272-2900, (713) 623-4425.

The drawback, of course, to "long distance" user groups is that you can't participate in the meetings or short courses, and you can't take advantage of equipment and materials in the learning centers or libraries.

The BCS tries to help in this regard by offering a lower price to out of town members, and they sell cassette tapes of the general meetings for a nominal fee. The other resources, however — the publications, online services, discounts, and phone volunteers — still make membership one of the best (and smartest) things you can do to increase your computer literacy.

To get the fullest measure of what user groups have to offer, join a local organization. The Midland area has several groups dedicated to particular computers: Apple, IBM, Commodore, etc.

The Midland Microcomputer Users Association is a non-profit group emphasizing IBM compatible PC-MS DOS systems. The group meets at 7:30 pm on the 2nd Tuesday of each month at Midland Memorial Christian Church, 1101 Andrews Hwy (intersection of Cuthbert and Andrews Hwy). The next meeting, June 12, will feature a discussion of using mice, including hardware and applications.

According to MMUA president Rosemary Marler, "We're here to help solve problems." The group has about 40 active members and attendance at meetings runs about 20-30 people.

Membership in MMUA is just $12.00/year. A monthly newsletter keeps members informed of meeting dates and topics, and includes short discussions of general-interest PC subjects. For more information, call Rosemary at 697-7352 or 685-4995, or drop them a line at P.O. Box 50246, Midland, TX 79710-0246.

Modified horizontal drilling project begin in Panhandle

By Bear Mills

PAMPA, Texas (AP) — Officials at Service Fracturing Co. — Serfco — of Pampa are predicting that use of a modified form of horizontal drilling will lead to a mini oil boom for Panhandle fields.

While horizontal drilling has been used in other parts of the state, this week Serfco has begun the first such project in the Panhandle in the Carson Field, northwest of Skellytown.

Jay Riley, public relations director for the project, said, "They will have a well with two open holes, one at each end. They are drilling a well down vertically to 3,000 feet, then turning horizontally. They will drill into an existing well hole, or fracture. This, basically will be a real expensive drain hole."

He said that by pressure "fracking" both holes, Serfco will be able to go from 10 barrels of oil a day to several times that amount.

"Anything more than what present technology is able to bring out of the ground will be a blessing," Riley said. "We will have proof through this venture to show you can spend a half-million dollars on six or eight wells and it will pay out. There will be money made and there will be people put back to work."

If the process is unsuccessful on the first well, Serfco has 180 other wells in the same field waiting to be horizontally drilled.

Fred Mills, vice president of Lovett Underwood Neuhouse & Webb, Inc., an investment analyst who has just completed a study of Serfco, said: "My guess is this will not represent any net risk for investors. As near as we can tell, if the results are disappointing, the pay out will just take longer."

Mills said his company, which has offices in Dallas and Houston, will recommend Serfco as "a very attractive investment," based in part on the modified horizontal drilling concept.

Currently, Serfco stock is selling for around $6 a share.

Jerry H. Guinn, president of Serfco, developed the Low Pressure Reservoir Alternative Completion Technology concept, called LPRACT, as a way of making "tapped out" wells prosperous again.

Guinn said only about 20 percent of the oil in any given reservoir could be accessed using traditional drilling and pumping methods. However, with the horizontal drilling, a new prosperity could be on the horizon for the Panhandle, he said.

"We began working on this last July after our purchase of the oil properties (west of Skellytown) in April of that year," Guinn said. "We've been trying to come up with some ideas that would make it work in the Panhandle field."

His modifications included a vertical well bore from the bottom of the drain hole.

"We decided to drill a horizontal drain hole into a producing, existing vertical well and then we'd be able to produce all that oil from the lowest point in the drain hole," Guinn said. "By doing that, we have a natural drainage to the bottom of the well."

He said horizontal displacement amounts to 967 feet.

"That's not very many feet — some people are talking about drilling horizontally 4,000 feet. Here we're trying three new things," Guinn said. "No.1 is a horizontal drain hole in the Panhandle field; No. 2 is it's the first well drilled to deliberately intersect an existing well bore to produce oil from an existing well. The third thing is it will be the first well ... that has ever been fracture treated from both ends."

Fracturing includes forcing pressure fluids and high-viscosity gels laden with sand into the formation to split it open.

Basing his calculations on oil bringing at least $18 a barrel, Guinn said his modified horizontal drilling process will be a success.

Even without the horizontal drilling, by using fracturing, Serfco has managed to increase production of the 181 wells from 2,250 barrels a month to 5,807 barrels.

Guinn said LPRACT will improve stimulation treatments and enhance placement and monitoring during and after the well is "fracked."

"That will mean another 5,760,000 barrels that can be recovered" over what was previously thought possible in the Panhandle Carson Field, Guinn said.

He also said that while a horizontal well can cost three times more than a traditional vertical well, it will produce enough oil that it is well worth the expense.

Mills said the first production results should be available in September and that by February of 1991 a complete development program for the project should give investors a better idea of their potential return.

"We've been able to do very well," Guinn said.

Serfco began as a privately held corporation in Pampa in 1973 with 28 local investors and $250,000. In 1977 there was a rights offering to the 28 investors and $625,000 more was raised.

A second rights placement offering was held in 1979 and sold $1.1 million shares. In 1980, an $8.5 million public offering put Serfco on the NASDAQ. During April of 1982 the company purchased an oil property in Fort Morgan, Colo., for more than $8 million.

Guinn said that in spite of the downturn in the economy, Serfco managed to grow and increase revenue from 1982 through 1985.

He said in 1987 the company cut back from 248 employees in 10 operating districts to 78 employees in five districts.

However, new technology, including the modified horizontal drilling technique, is creating new opportunities for Serfco, he said.

Chrysler unveils new Viper

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Chrysler Corp. said its new 400-horsepower Dodge Viper sports car has a top speed of 190 miles per hour and will cost "under $50,000" when it goes on the market in 1992.

The company on Friday unveiled the car, powered by a V-10 engine originally designed for trucks. Chrysler chairman Lee Iacocca said it could accelerate from 0 to 60 mph in 3.9 seconds.

Chrysler officials said they eventually expect to produce about 5,000 Vipers a year, to be sold at 300 to 500 U.S. dealerships.

The Viper's development cost Chrysler "tens and tens of millions — not hundreds of millions," Iacocca said, adding it could make money for the company at a sales pace of 5,000 cars a year.

Features on the sleek two-seater, which debuted at the Detroit auto show in January 1989, include an integrated roll bar and exhaust pipes built into a cutaway side. It is designed to compete with Chevrolet's high-performance Corvette.

Iacocca told reporters at a downtown news conference that it was Shelby who edged him out of getting the first Cobra produced in the 1960s.

Shelby has been offered millions and millions of dollars for that car, Iacocca noted ruefully.

Take time for personal finances

By Jan M. Rosen
N.Y. Times News Service

Many business and professional people pursue their work so single-mindedly they have no time to deal with personal finances.

Soon they have the financial equivalent of a neglected garden in fertile soil; weeds — or debts — threaten to take over.

"Time just gets away from them, and they fall into habits of overconsumption and undersaving," said John T. Blankinship Jr., a partner in Blankinship & Foster, a financial planning firm in Del Mar, Calif.

Often their problems are compounded because they are sold inappropriate investments or insurance policies.

"I try with clients to keep things as simple as I can," said Blankinship, president of the Institute of Certified Financial Planners, who was in New York last week to talk to institute members.

"People don't need esoteric investment products to win. A lot of the work we do is unraveling it all and making their lives simpler," he said. "Don't buy any investment you don't understand."

One, a medical specialist who is highly regarded in his field and has a six-figure income, sees patients from 7 a.m. to 9 p.m.

—They were unsure how much income they received from the medical practice, and they had no personal budget or salaries.

They wrote checks from the practice's account for whatever they needed, but failed to keep careful records or to make long-term financial plans.

Ms. Hoeppner suggested they separate personal and business accounts and set up a family budget.

—The couple's investments consisted primarily of two limited partnerships and a portfolio of penny stocks bought for $55,000 and now worth $40,000.

They did not realize the partnerships cannot be sold easily, making them inappropriate at a time when the couple need to pay college expenses for two daughters.

—The doctor was sold a universal life insurance policy, but he has no disability insurance, which he needs.

He also needs greater life coverage, but only for a few years since his daughters are already in college.

Term insurance would be the best choice, Ms. Hoeppner said.

—Their car insurance met only the minimum legal requirement; in the event of an accident, they could be liable for large sums.

"But he was not going to take a half-hour out to shop for better auto insurance," Ms. Hoeppner said.

SUE: Regulators claim fraud

(From 5C)

outspoken Gaubert, who was removed from the thrift in 1984 while regulators looked into allegations that he defrauded an Iowa savings institution.

The investigation led to an indictment of Gaubert on federal bank fraud charges. An Iowa jury later found him innocent.

Gaubert, who is chairman of Dallas-based Telecom Corp., has filed a lawsuit against the U.S. government seeking to recover $25 million he lost when regulators took control of the thrift.

This week, he notified the FDIC that he intends to file another lawsuit, this one alleging breach of contract, against the United States.

Regulators have pending a $5.2 million lawsuit against Gaubert and other Independent American officials over their sale of stock to an employee stock-ownership plan.

The latest lawsuit accuses Gaubert and the other officials of participating in a "network" of savings institutions, including Sunbelt Savings and Loan Association.

STUDY: Finds no 'credit crunch'

(From 5C)

A second reason cited was the deterioration of the banks' loan portfolio, which would also be an indication of a weakening economy.

Last week's meeting with the association officials was seen as the clearest signal the regulators could make to bankers that they did not want them to overreact to reports of pressure to tighten lending.

The meeting was attended by Alan Greenspan, the Federal Reserve chairman; L. William Seidman, the chairman of Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., and Robert L. Clarke, the comptroller of the currency.

The regulators stressed that they wanted prudent lending to continue, hoping to prevent a significant slowdown in economic growth that would occur if bankers on a broad scale stopped making loans to mid-sized businesses.

The survey, which was completed before the meeting, now appears to buttress the regulators' actions. It also underscores concerns by some economists that in the face of a softening economy, the Fed's monetary policy has been too restrictive.

They say that if Fed officials cannot persuade the banking industry to continue making credit available, the Fed may face the unwanted chore of sharply lowering interest rates to keep the economy from entering a recession.

"The regulators came to the ABA to make sure that there was not overreaction," Dugger said. "They don't want the economy to tailspin into a recession as a result of an overreaction. They do not want a regulatory-induced recession."

In the minutes of the March 27 meeting of the Federal Open Market Committee, which were released Friday, panel members were reporting concern in the banking industry about a tightening of credit, but they did not seem to be overly worried.

"Outside of lending for corporate-restructuring purposes and certain real estate transactions," the minutes stated, "it was difficult to find firm indications of greater credit rationing.

"Some tightening of credit standards probably was a desirable development in terms of correcting for past excesses and adjusting to a more moderate pace of business activity, but a number of members expressed concern that significant further restraint, should it occur, could have adverse consequences for the overall economy."

"More than one-half of the respondents indicated that they had moved to make loan covenants more stringent since late 1989, and a similar number reported that they had tightened collateral requirements," the report said, adding that "about 30 percent of banks indicated that since late 1989 they had reduced the size of credit lines they were making available to middle-market firms."

In general, the banks said their lending policies toward large companies had not changed and that credit to them was still plentiful.

The survey found, however, that some large borrowers had reduced their demand for loans because of a greater reliance on the commercial paper market, which is a way large companies can borrow from the investing public without using a bank as an intermediary.

Restoring wolves would add to Yellowstone's ecosystem

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — The return of wolves running wild through Yellowstone National Park would add to the enjoyment of tourists and restore a missing link in the park's ecosystem, experts say.

But ranchers, fearful of livestock losses, oppose reintroducing the predators, 81,000 of which were killed between 1883 and 1918 in state and federal extermination programs.

Now a 600-page study to be presented to Congress this week predicts little harm to wildlife or livestock near the park if wolves are returned, according to those familiar with it.

"All of the studies currently going on will not absolve the need to introduce wolves and let them tell us what to do," said James Peek, a University of Idaho researcher.

Durward Allen, a Purdue University researcher who has studied wolves on Minnesota's Isle Royale for 20 years, says the government is obligated to reestablish the gray wolf "because it was part of the aboriginal fauna that we are committed to preserving, as nearly as possible, in its primitive configuration."

Rupert Cutler, president of Defenders of Wildlife, the most visible proponent of wolves in Yellowstone, hopes the latest study ends the political debate over wolves that has kept the federal government studying the predators.

"The government studies show we can meet the needs of ranchers and outfitters while meeting the desire of millions of Americans to see wolves restored to our nation's best-known national park."

Apart from their aesthetic value, the wolves would rein in an out-of-control elk population that is slowly denuding the park's northern range, Cutler said.

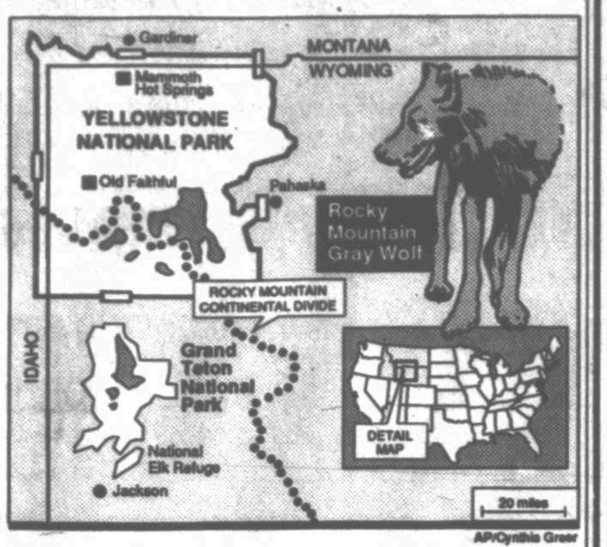
In lobbying for wolf restoration, Defenders magazine surveyed 16 North American wolf experts who overwhelmingly called for implementation of the plan.

Peek told the magazine that "Yellowstone is a place where natural dynamic processes are allowed to be restored and perpetuated, and the predation process is incomplete without the wolf."

In the latest study, Park Service and Fish and Wildlife Service researchers examined how 100 to 150 wolves might interact with grizzly bears and Yellowstone's ungulate populations, such as the elk and bison. They also analyzed control methods and wolves' impact on wildlife in Wyoming, Montana and Idaho outside the park.

Members of the Interagency Grizzly Bear Committee predicted there would be little if any overall effect either on grizzly or wolf populations, although some individual bears could be harmed.

The study also is expected to conclude that over a 20- to 30-year period there could be a 10 percent to 25 percent reduction in Yellowstone's elk herds, which contain an estimated 31,000 animals, and a 20 percent reduction in bison, which now number 2,000.



AP/Cynthia Greer

However, the research also notes that the action of predators increases the general physiology of prey, resulting in increased reproduction.

As for hunters in the forests surrounding Yellowstone, the study says sport hunting would not have to be eliminated for any herd or species in the Yellowstone ecosystem.

How wolves outside the park affect livestock depends on how stringently wolves are controlled, according to the study. There are an estimated 10,000 cows and 5,000 sheep in the immediate area of the park.

Controls currently used in Minnesota and Canada range from traps to poison, and in Montana wolves that preyed on livestock have been killed by Fish and Wildlife Service biologists.

A key to the controls is whether wolves are returned under an experimental status, as suggested by previous studies, or on their own, according to Steve Fritts, a Montana-based Fish and Wildlife Service biologist who helped coordinate the study.

If wolves returned on their own, they would fall under the Endangered Species Act, which bans killing of listed animals by the general public and restricts federal agents to hunt only problem animals.

Under an experimental designation, Fritts said, more lenient rules pertaining to the killing of wolves that leave Yellowstone could be instituted.

NATION IN BRIEF

Arson suspected in school death

CENTERVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The body of a high school administrator was discovered by firefighters Sunday in a burned school building hours before graduating seniors were to attend a baccalaureate service.

Investigators told the county school superintendent, Wayne Qualls, that Assistant Principal Ron Wallace had been shot in the head, said Qualls' wife, Jean. Officials at the scene refused to confirm that.

The body of Wallace, 40, was found after a passer-by reported the school was on fire about 9 a.m., said Tennessee Bureau of Investigation Agent Bill Holt. He said the case was being investigated as a homicide, but refused to provide further details.

Mrs. Qualls said gas burners had been turned on in the biology lab and candles lit to ignite the gas.

Giant frogs a'leaping

ANGELS CAMP, Calif. (AP) — Giant frogs from the jungles of Africa didn't quite live up to their billing as awesome leapers in the early going Sunday at the 62nd annual Jumping Frog Jubilee.

Two of the huge frogs — dubbed "Goliaths" — won the right to compete in the finals of the event in Calaveras County, but the best of their leaps in qualifying rounds fell far short of the world record.

The big frogs' entry has been the focus of the build-up for the colorful contest, inspired by Mark Twain's short story about a frog that failed to jump because its belly was filled with shot.

Before the meet, animal collector Andy Koffman of Seattle, Wash., who keeps the frogs in a 1,500-gallon tank in his basement, had predicted his frogs would easily shatter the world record. That's 21 feet, 5¾ inches, set by one-pound Rosie the Ribiter in 1985.

He blamed their lackluster showing on the difficulty of squeezing them onto the 9-inch-diameter starting pad. "They just kind of slip out of my hands and it slows them down," he said.

Fireworks not welcome

NEW YORK (AP) — Smoke bombs and firecrackers were set off in the lobby of a hotel Sunday, two hours before Vice President Dan Quayle was due to address a Jewish group.

Quayle hadn't arrived at the Sheraton Centre hotel when the devices were set off, said John Mulligan, a Fire Department spokesman.

There was nothing solid to link the explosions to Quayle's visit, said Special Agent Allan Cramer, a Secret Service spokesman.

There was no fire and no injuries were reported.

Smoke in the rear of the hotel's main lobby and a loud explosion were reported to fire officials at 4:41 p.m., Mulligan said. The explosion, possibly from M-80 firecrackers, blew some of the tiles out of the lobby ceiling, he said.

The lobby was evacuated, he said.

Quayle delivered his speech to The Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America at about 6:30 p.m. without incident.

Boat hits bridge pillar

ST. CHARLES, Mo. (AP) — A pleasure boat struck the underpinning of a highway bridge Saturday night on the rain-swollen Missouri River, slightly injuring 22 passengers sent sprawling across decks by the impact.

The double-decked boat, the Spirit of St. Charles, struck a bridge pillar as it tried to turn downstream, said Ray Kemp, public affairs officer for the St. Charles County ambulance service.

"There was a lot of screaming because the impact was pretty strong," he said. "A little girl fell down some stairs, but she wasn't seriously hurt."

The injured were treated at St. Joseph Health Center, said Barbara Wussler, the center's community relations director. They were treated for minor injuries, she said.

The boat, carrying 217 passengers, returned to a shore of the river, which crested Friday night at St. Charles 10 feet over its 25-foot flood stage.

Governor calls Prejean

ANGOLA, La. (AP) — Gov. Buddy Roemer telephoned Dalton Prejean shortly before his execution and told the killer he had to die to serve society, Prejean's lawyer said.

Prejean requested to speak with the governor and Roemer called 90 minutes before Prejean walked to the death house at Louisiana State Penitentiary for his execution early Friday, said the lawyer, John Hall.

"The governor said he thought his execution was the only thing that would serve society and give the proper message back to people who were thinking about killing police officers," Hall said.

Prejean, 30, became the first murderer to die under the U.S. Supreme Court's 1989 ruling that allowed the death penalty for crimes committed by 16- and 17-year olds.

Tuberculosis up in AIDS patients

BOSTON (AP) — Tuberculosis, a once-deadly disease now largely forgotten by Americans, is re-emerging as a health threat primarily among AIDS patients, health officials said Sunday.

Tuberculosis cases increased 35 percent in Newark, N.J., in 1989 over the previous year, alarming health officials who had noted with satisfaction a slow, steady decrease in TB cases over the last few decades.

On the national level, TB cases rose 5 percent in 1989 over 1988, a jump largely attributable to the AIDS crisis, said Dr. Philip C. Hopewell, chief of chest service at San Francisco General Hospital.

Hopewell and other health officials discussed the link between AIDS and TB here during a four-day World Conference on Lung Health, which ends Wednesday.

About 4 percent of Americans identified as having AIDS also have been diagnosed as being infected with tuberculosis, said Dr. Dixie E. Snider Jr., director of the division of tuberculosis control at the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

The American Lung Association estimates 20,000 Americans a year develop TB, which, worldwide, kills an estimated 3 million persons each year.

In parts of Africa, where AIDS already is epidemic, tuberculosis is also reaching those proportions, said Dr. Annik Rouillon, executive director of the International Union Against Tuberculosis and Lung Disease in Paris.

Snider stressed that TB, unlike AIDS, is curable and can be effectively treated, even in AIDS patients. He called for TB screening at drug rehabilitation programs, prisons and wherever else AIDS tests are given.

He also said physicians should test for TB all persons who test positive for the HIV virus that causes AIDS.

"It's important we get control of the situation," he said.

Dr. Lee B. Reichman, director of the pulmonary division of the University of Medicine and Dentistry in New Jersey, pointed to Wyoming, where the CDC recorded no new TB cases in 1989, as proof TB can still be controlled and cured.

But unlike AIDS, TB is highly contagious and can be spread by airborne particles coughed up by a person with untreated, clinically active pulmonary TB.

Untreated, TB kills about 50 percent of its victims within two years, according to the CDC.

The doctors said minority groups in the United States have become increasingly susceptible to TB, especially as the incidence of AIDS among those groups increases.

Snider stressed that sustained contact is necessary for TB transmission, although he noted that there had been an increase in positive TB tests among AIDS health workers.

Tuberculosis is caused by a bacterium that commonly affects the lungs but can attack almost any organ. For the last three decades, it has been preventable and curable through drug therapy, Snider said.

He said an estimated 10 million to 15 million Americans have been infected with the TB germ, but only a small percentage develop the disease since most have immune systems strong enough to ward it off.
