North tried to keep diversion secret

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lt. Col. Oliver North testified today he tried but failed to keep secret the diversion of Iranian arms sales profits to the Contra rebels after former National Security Adviser John Poindexter once told him, "had better never come out."

"I took steps to make sure...(it) didn't and I failed," North said as he testified for the fourth straight day at nationally televised Iran-Contra hearings.

North said that Reagan pressed his aides to seek the release of American hostages in Beirut "as early as possible," but never suggested a target date linked to elections or any other key dmestic event such as his State of the Union address.

The atmosphere in the ornate hearing room seemed cordial in contrast to the frequent legal sparring earlier in the week. At one point North jocularly asked Senate lawyer Arthur Liman if he was criticizing his shredding.

Iran-Contra Affair

"My eyesight has suffered from reading what you left behind," Liman said, provoking laughter.

"I deserved that," North smiled in return.

Even as he answered questions, North was engaging — and quite possibly winning — a battle for public support.

He placed two stack of telegrams on the witness table. And officials at the White House and Capitol said calls were running heavily in his favor — his confessions about attempting a cover-up notwithstanding.

"I have no political ambitions," North said at one point. "I'm not running for anything and I'm certainly not running from anything."

In other developments:

— North said that on a secret negotiating session in Tehran in 1986, he personally recommended accepting an Iranian proposal to release two hostages in exchange for a previously agreed upon shipment of arms. He said former National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane, who led the delegation, rejected the offer and said he would turn over the weapons only if all remaining hostages were released.

— Officials at the Capitol and the White House reported a large volume of telephone calls in North's favor, while Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., said in a broadcast interview late Thursday that lawyers had spent too long interrogating the witness, and it was time for lawmakers to take over.

Midlanders seem to join nation in support of North

By JULIE HILLRICHS

Lt. Col. Oliver North, described by one Iran-Contra committee spokesman as the man with basset hound face and choir boy's voice, entered into his fourth day of testimony this morning with the support of thousands of viewers behind him.

Americans, telephoning Capitol Hill and the White House in droves, were calling North the persecuted hero of the Iran-Contra hearings and his interrogators the overbearing bad guys, according to an Associated Press report.

The Reporter-Telegram also received calls Thursday from Midlanders who wanted to know where they could telephone or send letters of support to the fired National Security Council aide.

Earlier in the week, the Reporter-Telegram solicited local opinion on North's testimony and how he helped the Reagan administration secretly sell arms to Iran and use some of the proceeds to help the Nicaraguan Contra rebels.

Midlanders who agreed to be interviewed said they watched only brief accounts of the televised hearings, but most concurred that North was telling Congress the truth...the good, the bad and the ugly.

"I think he's being truthful," said Midland attorney Wayne Basden, who criticized the media and congressional leaders for their persecution of North.

"I was in the military. I was in the Army. He (North) is just a colonel. He had to have had authorization from his superiors or he couldn't have done the things he did," Basden said.

Clifton McMillan said he believes most of North's testimony, but added that he's still "puzzled" over the question of President Reagan's involvement in the operation.

"If he was acting on the orders of his superiors, I'd like to know who his superiors were," McMillan said.

'Details' may delay reflagging of gulf tankers

By STEWART M. POWELL and JOHN P. WALLACH
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — President Reagan's plan to protect U.S. shipping in the Persian Gulf by "mid-July," may be cut back or delayed because the administration has not nailed down crucial details in the high-stakes mission, U.S. officials conceded Thursday.

Decisions still are pending on such matters as the number of U.S.-flagged tankers and the frequency of convoys to be escorted by U.S. warships and whether Congress will be notified that the operation has begun, the officials said.

Perhaps the most sensitive decision being settled in the weeks ahead is how the United States will protect its vessels from attack and still avert possible showdowns with Iran at the mouth of the Gulf. The Iranian Navy, exercising the right of a nation at war, routinely challenges incoming shipping to check for contraband bound for its enemy, Iraq.

The evidence of difficulties in final U.S. preparations emerged as Iran inched closer Thursday to a widely feared military challenge to the eight U.S. warships already patrolling the 600-mile strategic waterway by attacking an American-chartered supertanker.

In the attack, an Iranian gunboat, in a rare daylight raid, fired 18 grenades at the Liberian-registered supertanker, which was chartered through a Panamanian subsidiary of the U.S. oil company, Texaco. The 273,205-ton Peconic, flying the Liberian flag, was damaged slightly.

"We deplore and regret the attack," presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said.

But White House and Pentagon officials made it clear that while the administration hopes the presence of U.S. warships will deter Iranian attacks on all vessels, the U.S. Navy is charged only with defending U.S. vessels flying the American flag.

"We have no intention of retaliating," Fitzwater said.

Between them, Iran and Iraq have staged more than 300 attacks on ships in the Gulf in a "tanker war" that began in 1984 as each side tried to strangle the economic lifeline of its enemy. Since June 20, Iraq has attacked nine vessels, and Iran has attacked five.

Attack on oil tanker helps push oil prices over $21

From Staff and Wire Reports

An Iranian gunboat attack on a U.S.-operated supertanker in the northern Persian Gulf pushed oil prices over $21 a barrel, a jump analysts said signals nervousness about the volatile area.

Contracts for August delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the U.S. benchmark crude oil, climbed to $21.23 a barrel in active trading Thursday on the New York Mercantile Exchange, up 35 cents from Wednesday's close.

The prices are at their highest level since January 1986. August's West Texas Intermediate futures had risen 14 cents a barrel on the exchange Wednesday.

Permian Basin crude oil purchasers responded to continued strength in spot and futures markets Thursday by raising their posted prices by 50 cents, to $19.50 a barrel.

"When the 'spread' between futures and posted prices is about $1.50 for several days, we will see the first movement in postings," observed Mark Thomas, area manager of crude oil acquisitions for Enron Oil Trading & Transportation Co. in Midland.

As a reseller of crude, Enron traditionally follows the postings of major refiners in setting its price, Thomas said.

Prices on the cash market for spot oil purchases have been above $20 for more than two weeks.

Three Michigan police officers shot to death

INKSTER, Mich. (AP) — Three police officers were found shot to death in a motel room today after they were taken hostage at gunpoint by a woman and three of her sons, authorities said.

The bodies of the officers, who went to the 32-unit Bungalow Motel to serve arrest warrants on bad check charges, were found after the four suspects surrendered at 3:15 a.m., after a nine-hour standoff, said FBI Agent Kenneth Walton.

"I don't like to see police officers killed," Walton said. "I've seen enough of it."

"Understandably, everybody is pretty shook up," said police Inspector Wilbert Reid. "This is a small department and we all knew each other. Everybody is taking it very hard, obviously."

When the suspects emerged from the motel, "I think everybody was optimistic that the officers were OK and it was quite a shock when we found them," Reid said. However, authorities said it appeared they were killed shortly after being taken hostage.

The woman and her sons were taken to Inkster police headquarters, where they were held while charges were determined, Walton said. They were not immediately identified by police.

Revenue plan would increase license, registration fees

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Texans could pay significantly more to register their cars, renew their drivers licenses and purchase hunting and fishing licenses under a new revenue plan state senators worked on Thursday.

The governor, meanwhile, called it "absolutely wrong" for lawmakers to be considering a major tax increase for the state.

The fee proposals, offered to the Senate Tax Policy Subcommittee by Comptroller Bob Bullock, include increases of up to 50 percent in major state fees and/or a plan to collect several years' worth of fees in advance. Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said the fees would raise as much as $900 million to help plug a projected $6.2 billion revenue shortfall for 1988-1989.

"It's a hell of a poker game in there," said Bullock as he left a closed-door meeting of the subcommittee. "The Senate's got a good hand."

Hobby said the House-passed 6-percent sales tax on insurance premiums and a proposed surtax based on federal corporate income tax filings "are going to have great difficulty in passing" the Senate. Increasing the sales tax from 5.25 to 6 percent seems almost inevitable, Hobby said, along with a possible 1- or 2-cent-a-gallon gasoline tax hike.

"Nobody is going to like any of these proposals," he said. "It's just what's do-able, what's passable."

Gov. Bill Clements, who spent the day speaking with about 75 business leaders in Houston, refused to comment on the fees. "I'm really not going to talk about the revenue side of the situation until I see the appropriations side, the spending side," he said.

Appellate court reverses two convictions of former FNB executive

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

William Hoyle McCright, the 62-year-old retired executive vice president of the now-defunct First National Bank of Midland, has been cleared of two convictions — for embezzlement and receiving kickbacks — by a federal appellate court in New Orleans.

The reversal of the two convictions could reduce substantially McCright's original 12-year sentence. The court upheld two other convictions for his allegedly falsifying bank records. He had been fined $20,000 and sentenced to four 3-year prison terms.

U.S. District Court Judge Lucius D. Bunton is to re-sentence McCright after he considers additional motions by the prosecution and by his defense attorneys, Midland lawyer-brothers William Monroe "Bill" Kerr and Ted Kerr. However, Bill Kerr said he hopes the appellate court will strike down the two remaining convictions and set McCright free. "I'm planning on there not being any counts," he said Thursday.

"They (the appellate judges) have thrown out all the theft and kickback (convictions), which I think is the incendiary thing," Bill Kerr said. "They (the jury) did not have the evidence to convict."

A panel of three circuit-court judges reversed the convictions on grounds of insufficient evidence.

"The evidence presented at the (September 1986) trial revealed a long and complicated history of self-interested dealing by defendant William Hoyle McCright Jr. while he was executive vice president of First National Bank of Midland, Texas, between 1977 and 1982," Circuit Judge Tom Reavley wrote.

Reavley was joined by Judges Homer Thornberry and Henry Politz in reversing the two, more serious convictions.

In probing into McCright's banking background, Reavley, for example, noted McCright's 1978 partnership with Sam Conner and James Eastup called "CEK," which stood for Conner, Eastup and McCright. "They decided to use 'K' instead of 'M' because they did not think 'it would be wise' to let it be known that McCright was a partner, even though they owned equal shares in CEK," Reavley wrote. The CEK account at First National Bank only listed Conner and Eastup as partners, and CEK "borrowed substantial amounts from FNB to finance approximately 40 oil ventures and real estate deals, and McCright, in his capacity as an officer of FNB, approved most of the loans."

HEARING

— North said Reagan administration officials pushed aside misgivings about arms-for-hostages trading in late 1985 because they feared a break-off would endanger the lives of the captives. "Our concern was that having started the route, wisely or unwisely...that we had indeed increased the jeopardy to the hostages rather than reduced it," he said.

North, dressed for the fourth straight day in his Marine officer's uniform with six rows of ribbons, testified as his wife Betsy sat behind him.

Replying to questions about a widely-publicized event, North said he once gave a White House tour to an Iranian official who had been flown to this country secretly. He said he did so because he wanted to show his contact the Nobel Peace Prize awarded to President Theodore Roosevelt in 1906 for his role in ending a Russian-Japanese conflict.

Under Liman's questions, North recalled that he heard Reagan press his aides in meetings on winning freedom for the hostages who were being held in Lebanon.

Reagan "very clearly articulated" that he "wanted as many of them home, all of them, as early as possible," North said.

But North, supplying answers to the committee under a grant of limited immunity, also testified that Reagan never told him he wanted the captives released by Christmas 1985, his 1986 State of the Union address or the 1986 congressional elections.

He conceded that he may have told middleman Albert Hakim that Reagan had said he wanted the hostages home by the elections. But North did so "to entice him to greater effort," the Marine officer said. "I never heard that from the president."

North was reminded that the committee has heard testimony that Secretary of State George Shultz, Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger and former National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane were opposed to the arms-for-hostages deal.

"Had you become the principal advocate of having this program go forward,?" Liman asked.

"I don't believe I was the principal advocate," said North, "Certainly Director Casey was always a supporter."

To that, North added that "like some of my other activities, the opposition that I heard was far more muted while we were doing it than it ever was after it failed, after it was exposed."

The former White House aide said he found the prospect of selling arms in exchange for the lives of Americans was distasteful, but was concerned that ending the negotiations would lead the captors to kill the remaining hostages.

North also said that when he first became involved in the secret arms trading, there was no mention of the dealing being part of a broader initiative to establish ties with moderates in the Iranian regime.

North said that he worked to insert that broader initiative into official documents drafted for Reagan's signature that formally authorized the arms sales.

Reagan has defended the trading as an outgrowth of a diplomatic initiative, rather than the other way around.

Liman, noting that the Khomeini regime has been characterized by its hatred of Americans, asked North whether the National Security Council aide viewed his meeting with the Iranian as similiar to an encounter between then-Secretary of State Henry Kissinger and China's leader at the time, Chou En-Lai.

"I knew well what he was," North responded.

It was not clear how long North, testifying with a limited grant of immunity fromn prosecution, would be required to answer questions. Initially, the panel had hoped to wrap up his interrogation by the end of the day. But none of the 26 lawmakers on the joint House-Senate investigating panel has yet had a turn at asking questions, and it seemed certain that North would be back in the witness chair when the committees meet again next week.

The testimony about arms sales marked a turn from where the committee left off on Thursday.

Then, North spent much of the afternoon describing attempts to fashion a cover-up to protect the president from political damage as the Iran-Contra affair was becoming known.

In a stunning disclosure, he said he shredded documents under the noses of Justice Department investigators who had come to his National Security Council office to read files.

"They were working on their projects, I was working on mine," North said Thursday at a congressional hearing, referring to the afternoon of last Nov. 22 when Justice Department officials William Bradford Reynolds and John Richardson were in his office as part of their inquiry into secret arms shipments to Iran.

The Justice Department denied the account.

But some committee members were incredulous. Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., called the event "Three Stoogeerous." Others called it further evidence that Attorney General Edwin Meese III mishandled the initial investigation.

"It raises a lot of suspicions, or demands for an explanation," said Sen. Howell Heflin, D-Ala.

Most of Liman's questioning on Thursday was aimed at eliciting North's role as the designated "scapegoat" who was to absorb any political heat resulting from public disclosure of the affair.

North said the idea that someone was needed to take the rap for the administration's Iran and Nicaraguan initiatives originally came from then-CIA Director William Casey, and was planned as early as 1984.

When the operation began to unravel last fall, after an Iranian intermediary threatened to blow the whistle and a supply plane was shot down over Nicaragua, "Casey agreed the time had come for someone to stand up and take the hit," North said.

Police officers surround the Bungalow Motel in Inkster, Mich., Thurday night. A woman and her three sons held three officers hostage for several hours before surrendering. The officers were killed.

HOSTAGES

The slain policemen were identified as Sgt. Ira Parker, 41, a 15-year veteran, and officers Clay Hoover, 25, and Dan Dubiel, 36. Hoover was a rookie and Dubiel had been with the department for 13 years, officials said.

Police Chief James Buckley said the incident began when Dubiel and Hoover tried to serve the felony warrants about 6 p.m. Thursday. From there, they called for a supervisor, he said.

"The two officers had responded on what would appear to be a routine run.... As soon as he (Parker) entered the room, a barrage of shots erupted," the chief said.

"Right now it does not appear extremely likely they (Hoover and Dubiel) encountered any weapons initially," he said. He also said it did not appear that the officers had a chance to return fire.

Police requested help from the FBI and a state police special weapons team as the woman and her sons, armed with an automatic rifle, negotiated with officers who surrounded the motel.

The suspects also sprayed the hotel area with gunshots, but no one else was reported injured.

"I looked out the window when it started, then lay back down again," said Paul Sivits, 51, who was staying in a room across the parking lot in the same hotel.

"When it started up again, I looked back out the window and saw the dude with an automatic weapon, a long gun, it looked like an M-16," Sivits said.

"He was firing away, bullets were going like crazy, ricocheting all over the place. When one went through (my) window, I figured it was time to leave."

The woman told police she wanted to talk with a television reporter and spoke to Bill Proctor of WXYZ-TV.

"She said the officers were safe and locked in the bathroom," Proctor said, adding she was upset about a real estate deal that had soured, leading to the bad check charge.

Buckley said the woman also asked to talk to the Rev. James Holley, pastor of Detroit's Little Rock Baptist Church and a local civil rights leader. Holley "was instrumental with his assistance.... They were able to negotiate a surrender," the chief said.

Authorities worried throughout the night about the officers inside the motel room, Walton said.

"We were operating through the night, hoping against hope," he said. "I can't say enough about the restraint that the Michigan State Police, Wayne County sheriff's office and Inkster police displayed."

Buckley said police officers fired tear gas into the room shortly after backup units arrived at the scene. He said "considerably more than 20 shots" were fired from the hotel room while officers fired 20 to 25 rounds into the room during the standoff.

NORTH

Julie Weis said she began watching the hearings under the impression that North was a lone wolf, acting on his own initiative.

But after watching the first day of testimony, Mrs. Weis said she changed her tune.

Jean Henderson said she wasn't ready to formulate and opinion one way or the other because "I haven't had time to think about it."

Jocyesetta Nelson complained that Reagan, who has maintained that he knew nothing of the diversion of money to the Contra rebels, should have kept closer tabs on his subordinates.

"He may not have known, but if he didn't, he should have," Ms. Nelson said.

Linda Williams said she'll be glad when the hearings are over and the president and Congress can get back to the business of running the government.

"I don't understand what the fuss is all about," she said. "I haven't watched any of it. I have better things to do."

Scott Abney said he believes North acted on the authority of former National Security Advisor Adm. John Poindexter and that the president "had to have known everything that happened."

Abney disagreed with North's assessment that the diversion of money from the arms sale to Iran was a "neat idea."

"I think it was a stupid idea," he said.

While Abney and others shared similar opinions, other Americans advocated the Reagan administration policy and were eager to pass it on to Congressional leaders.

The AP reported operators handling incoming calls for the House and Senate had found Thursday's volume much heavier than usual.

The wire service also said about 30 people managed to contact the Senate Press Gallery on Thursday, an office in the Capitol where newspaper reporters work.

At the White House, spokesman Marlin Fitzwater told AP reporters that operators handled more than 2,000 calls Wednesday and Thursday, with all but 80 supporting North.

GULF

Publicly, the administration insisted it was adhering to its latest schedule for reflagging 11 Kuwaiti oil tankers to launch the controversial convoy plan by "mid-July." Said Fitzwater: "Much of the procedures and so forth will be completed by the middle of this month."

Yet complicated decisions remain for top officials in the administration. Kuwait's plans for shipping oil down the war-torn waterway under U.S. protection are changing, raising the possibility of more U.S. convoys — and greater military risk —than initially expected.

The original plan called for the 11 reflagged Kuwaiti tankers to load up with oil at the terminal at the north end of the Gulf and steam off to deliver the cargo to distant buyers in Japan and Rotterdam, for example.

Now, Kuwait plans to use at least one reflagged vessel, the 401,000-ton supertanker renamed Bridgeton, and two newly leased U.S.-tankers to shuttle crude oil frequently from the Persian gulf terminal to a transfer dock at Khor Fakkan, located outside the Strait of Hormuz on the Gulf of Oman in the United Arab Emirates. Other tankers would then ferry the oil to distant destinations.

Pentagon officials concede that four additional Kuwaiti tankers due to qualify for U.S. protection also could serve as shuttle tankers — raising to seven the number of vessels frequently crossing the wartorn Persian Gulf.

U.S. warships, intially planning one convoy up the Gulf every week or 10 days, may be called upon to conduct more frequent escort trips.

Five killed as basket falls onto deck of Navy ship

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A crane-operated basket carrying 12 civilian shipyard workers plunged 20 to 30 feet onto the deck of a U.S. Navy ship today, killing five men and injuring seven, authorities said.

The men were killed at 12:05 a.m. in the repair area of the National Steel & Shipbuilding Co. as workmen were securing the USS Sacramento to a dock, said company vice president Fred Hallett. At the time, the 12 men were being moved via the basket from a berthing barge next to the ship to the dock, Hallett said.

The basket plummeted to the third deck of the ship, he said, but officials aren't sure why it came loose from the crane.

"We anticipate either a break failure or an operator error," Hallett said. He said both the crane's cable and the basket were found intact after the accident.

The crane is about 75 feet tall and has a capacity of 50 tons. The steel-and-wood basket, approximately 7 by 12 feet, easily holds 12 people, he said.

Four men were pronouced dead at the scene by the San Diego County coroner's office, Hallett said. A fifth man died after being transported to UC San Diego Medical Center.

One of those injured was reported in critical condition.

The USS Sacramento is a fast combat support ship with a crew of about 200.

Hallett said he believed the ship's crew was aboard both the ship and the berthing barge.

The company's security force is investigating the incident. The Navy and the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration were notified, Hallett said.

The company employs about 2,300 people at the shipyard. The company, established in the mid-1950s, builds both commercial and military ships, including ocean-going oil tankers.

REVERSED

Reavley cited other McCright conflict-of-interest dealings, including his receiving an interest in Wood & Locker's drilling programs in which Myra Robinson had invested more than $7 million. McCright, as an FNB officer, had suggested that Myra Robinson invest with Wood & Locker's John Wood, whom McCright had known for years. McCright never informed the bank of his "reversionary interest" in Robinson's investments.

"We emphasize at the outset that McCright's failure to disclose his conflict of interest to FNB does not necessarily constitute violations of federal law," the judge wrote.

During the jury trial of the case, "the government has repeatedly confused McCright's ethical shortcoming with the substantive proscriptions of the United States Code," Reavley wrote. "McCright's many violations of the bank's internal operating procedures do not alone create offenses prosecutable in federal court."

The panel of judges reversed the conviction that McCright had embezzled and misapplied $1.925 million by his alleged participation in an FNB loan to Midland West Corp. for development of Green Tree Country Club. McCright had not disclosed to the bank's board of directors his financial interest in Midland West Corp.

"That McCright's conduct violated the bank's 'standards of conduct' we have no doubt," Reavley wrote. "But we find no evidence to support a conviction....."

FNB's standards of conduct stated in part that "all parties associated with the Bank will be expected to conform to high standards of ethical behavior in both the conduct of the Bank's affairs and their own personal affairs .... All directors and staff members will be required to manage their personal and business affairs so as to avoid any conflict between their self-interest and their obligations to the Bank, its customers, and its shareholders."

McCright held that he was not the loan officer who approved the 1981 loan of $1.925 million and therefore was not guilty of misapplying funds. But the government contended that he "had an obligation to inform the bank of his interest" in the loan. The judge said the government had failed to prove that McCright influenced the making of the loan, which was approved by Joel T. Mays, 51, an FNB former executive vice president, who is under indictment for bank fraud.

McCright, who had ended his 34-year career with the bank when he retired in 1982 before the bank failed in October 1983, said he was "very happy" with the appellate court's reversal of the two convictions. McCright, a Midland civic leader, also was president of the Midland College board of trustees and voluntarily resigned that post following his conviction last year.

"Right now," Bill Kerr said of McCright's appeal, "we've got half of it won and half of it lost."

At McCright's 1986 trial, Kerr had noted that the government in prosecuting McCright had "some very severe misunderstandings and misperceptions in many aspects" of the McCright case.

FEES

A 10-man House-Senate conference committee on spending moved into its third day of deliberations Thursday. The Senate's appropriation bill calls for about $28.2 billion in state spending for the 1988-1989 spending cycle; the House plan is $830 million less.

Skipping over most major agencies, the negotiators had added about $8 million to the House bill after its first review of general government agencies. They moved on to discuss — and make little progress on — health and human resource spending, which accounts for about one-seventh of the total budget.

Clements has said he would sign a $26.95-billion budget, but the conference committee could not reach that level without permission from both the House and Senate. Representatives debated the spending bill for three days last week and ended up adding about $185 million.

The governor wouldn't comment on the difficulty of reducing the budget, but repeated his opposition to new taxes. "It's absolutely wrong ...for this Legislature to sit here in isolation and put taxes on the people of this state that are having such a difficult time in this economically distressed period," he said.

Rep. Stan Schlueter, the House's chief tax writer, toned down his criticism of the Senate Thursday, saying he's optimistic lawmakers can send a balanced budget to Clements before the special session ends July 23. Schlueter said Texans might find the fee increases more acceptable than his insurance tax bill, which generated thousands of protesting letters and telephone calls to senators earlier this week.

"They (fees) sound softer," he said.

Sen. Hugh Parmer of Fort Worth said the consideration of the fees has once again slowed the Tax Policy Subcommittee's work. "There's some point where you've got to stop diddling around and do something that creates some real additional revenue," he said.

"Strength in spot and futures markets, partially due to continued unrest in the Persian Gulf, is puyshing more people toward the bull trend market, which is definitely where we are moving," said Jerry McVicker, of Diamond Shamrock Marketing & Refining in San Antonio.

Virtually all purchasers had boosted their price by this morning according to a random survey of buyers.

The attack renewed concern over tensions in the gulf and the potential for a disruption of supplies from the critical oil area.

"This demonstrates the type of underlying nervousness that's in this market," Andrew Lebow, a vice president and energy futures specialist at the investment firm Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc., said of Thursday's jump in prices.

Funeral home representatives wait with an empty casket Thursday in a TWA warehouse at Romulus, Mich. They were to retrieve the remains of World War II deserter, Army Pvt. Eddie Slovik, reported missing as they were being shipped to his native Detroit for reburial.

Pvt. Slovik's remains found after being lost in transit

ROMULUS, Mich. (AP) — The remains of Pvt. Eddie Slovik, being returned to the United States more than four decades after he was executed in France for desertion during World War II, were accidentally sent to San Francisco instead of his hometown of Detroit, an airline official said.

Dwayne Swindle, TWA station manager in Detroit, said the remains would be returned to Detroit today.

Slovik

He said the cause of the mixup had not been determined.

"We're just now getting ready to approach that end of it," he said.

The remains failed to arrive as scheduled Thursday night at Detroit Metropolitan Airport on a Trans World Airlines flight from New York's Kennedy International Airport.

"These things happen every day," said Bernard Calka, a Polish-American Army veteran who organized the effort on behalf of the only U.S. soldier executed for desertion since the Civil War. "That's the way I'm accepting it. It's one of those things."

Before the body was bound, Calka said the airline thought the remains might have been shipped to Denver or Dallas because of freight codings. The three-letter codes used by airline freight handlers are DTW for Detroit, DFW for Dallas and DEN for Denver.

Slovik was shot by a U.S. firing squad on Jan. 31, 1945, about a year after he was drafted. The 24-year-old Army private was buried in a numbered grave in France among the graves of 94 other American soldiers who were hanged for rape and murder during the war.

His remains were exhumed Wednesday, and burial was planned for 10:30 a.m. Saturday in Detroit next to the grave of his wife, Antoinette, who died in 1979 after spending years trying to have her husband's name cleared with a presidential pardon.

Slovik's trouble with authorities began when he was 12, growing up in the Polish enclave of Hamtramck. He was arrested for breaking and entering in a foundry.

Later, he was convicted of embezzlement from a drug store and sent to prison. He was paroled after serving six months, but was linked to a stolen car and went back to prison. He was paroled again, married in 1942 and drafted on Jan. 3, 1944.

Slovik was declared a deserter later that year, a day after he reported as a replacement in an infantry company. He was absent without leave for 43 days, returned to his unit and then deserted again, the Army has said.

Meese denies conflict of interest charge

By DAN FREEDMAN

NATION

WASHINGTON — Attorney General Edwin Meese III Thursday denied any conflict of interest in his investment partnership with a financial adviser linked to the scandal-plagued Wedtech Corp.

In his first extensive explanation of his involvement with the mounting controversey surrounding the New York-based defense firm, Meese told a Senate Government Affairs subcommittee that he was only faintly aware that his partner, W. Franklyn Chinn, had given financial advice to Wedtech.

"I've never had any interest or connection with Wedtech," said Meese.

Independent counsel James McKay is investigating whether Meese in 1982 received compensation for helping minority-owned Wedtech win a $32 million non-competitive Army contract. At the Thursday hearing, Meese said that as White House counselor he directed subordinates to insure Wedtech received a "fair hearing" from government officials.

So far, the probe has yielded six indictments. Four Wedtech officials have pled guilty to bribery and theft in a federal investigation of many aspects of Wedtech's operations.

Subcommittee chairman Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., challenged Meese on what he termed the "appearance issue," charging the Attorney General with not taking care to disclose financial relationships in order to avoid the appearance of a conflict of interest.

"You had six to a dozen phone calls with Chinn, you knew he was connected to Wedtech, and you knew the Wedtech office was under investigation, (but) never during those calls did you ask: 'Hey, (do) you still have a connection to Wedtech?' "

Meese responded that he withdrew from any involvement with the Wedtech investigation once he learned that "persons with whom I am or was acquainted were the possible subjects of investigation."

The Attorney General announced last April that he would not involve himself in the Justice Department's Wedtech probe. Levin suggested, however, that April was too late for Meese to avoid the appearance of a conflict of interest.

Levin and Meese clashed repeatedly on Thursday.

Regarding the issue of whether Meese fully complied with the Ethics and Government Act of 1978, a law passed in the wake of the Watergate scandal requiring federal officials to disclose personal finances to demonstrate that they are avoiding conflicts of interest, the attorney general acknowledged that he "inadvertently" ommitted mention of his partnership with Chinn on a form listing persons and businesses with whom Meese had dealings.

He said the partnership, a blind trust in which Chinn made all investment decisions for Meese, was consummated only the day before he submitted the conflict-of-interest form.

Meese added there was no legal requirement to attach a list of possible conflicts to the form. This drew a sharp rebuke from Levin, who charged Meese with failing to include the partnership even when a Justice Department official wrote in a memo to the Attorney General that Meese "must" revise the list to show a possible conflict.

Tighter rein on Marcos urged as plot against Aquino unfolds

WASHINGTON (AP) — Armed with dramatic evidence that Ferdinand E. Marcos plotted to return to the Philippines with an invading army, members of Congress are urging the Reagan administration to tighten its grip on the former Philippine president.

According to one angry congressmen, Rep. Chester Atkins, D-Mass., Marcos should be locked up.

Rep. Robert Torricelli, D-N.J., wants to take away Marcos' telephone.

"The burden is now on the Justice Department to explain why it is not prosecuting, rather than why our hospitality has been extended to Marcos," said Rep. Jim Leach, R-Iowa.

The anger was voiced Thursday after the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on Asian and Pacific affairs released tapes of a series of conversations Marcos had earlier this year with two Virginia Beach, Va., businessmen who visited the former Philippine leader at his exile home in Honolulu.

Besides hearing the tapes, the committee was told that Marcos planned to purchase a 10,000-man army at $500 a head.

The businessmen, Robert Chastain and Richard Hirschfeld, told the committee they posed as middlemen in the deal to get Marcos the weaponry, and taped the conversations on their own initiative after they failed to get Justice Department backing for the caper.

Their motives, they said: patriotism and a desire to expose Marcos and prevent bloodshed in the Philippines.

In Hawaii, Marcos spokesman Arturo Aruiza said Marcos will not comment until he can talk to his attorneys.

In a frail, but clear voice, the 69-year-old Marcos, who fled to the United States after he was deposed in February 1986, was recorded as saying he wanted to buy anti-tank weapons, anti-aircraft missiles, mortars, recoilless rifles, infantry arms and enough ammunition for a three-month campaign.

The invasion was to take place in late June, according to Marcos' comments on the tapes, and current President Corazon Aquino was to be taken hostage.

Since Marcos came to the United States, there have been periodic reports of plots for him to return. On one occasion, the State Department stopped him as he had a chartered plane waiting at the Honolulu airport.

Artist illustrates humorous side of being rodeo cowboy

ODESSA (AP) — Odessa's Tim Waller has been drawing for as long as he can remember.

His ideas just come to him, he says, and usually they are based on experiences he's had or things that have happened to his friends.

While his first love is riding bulls, he also excels at his second love, drawing. His subjects are people he knows a lot about — cowboys.

"I draw cowboys mostly," he says. "They're humorous in their own way — down to earth. Honest humor is what I call it.

"Most of my work is based around rodeos because that's where I am all the time.

"People come up to me and say, 'Let me tell you what happened to me and you can draw it.'"

Other times, he says, "I can be driving to rodeos and an idea will hit me like a ton of bricks, and I'll have to pull over right there and get a piece of candy wrapper or something."

"Just write it down," he advises. "It doesn't matter if it's in the dirt on your dash."

Waller says that he "was just especially gifted" with his talent for drawing, as no one else in his family draws.

"I think it's a God-given talent and I just use it the best way I can."

When he was younger, Waller did not enjoy art in school. There, his teachers didn't consider his style of drawing and his cartoons real art.

However at Odessa College, Waller received the instruction and encouragement he needed.

"Although there's good money in it (drawing), I'm not doing it for the money. There's a whole lot of easier things you can do for money."
— Tim Waller

"The teachers here at OC are real good," he says. "I learned a bunch from them. They're the kind of guys who aren't in it just for a paycheck. They want to help you out. If you've got a talent, they're going to bring it out and make you use it."

After two years at Odessa, Waller now attends Sul Ross State University in Alpine and majors in art education.

At Sul Ross, Waller has been further motivated to try his hand at sculpture. But humor shows up there, too. His bronze sculptures show his cowboys in "sort of awkward positions," he says.

After graduation next year, Waller hopes to simply "put groceries on the table" with his art.

"Although there's good money in it, I'm not doing it for the money. There's a whole lot of easier things you can do for money."

With his art degree, he will probably teach. "Maybe I can teach some other fool to do this," he said.

At Sul Ross, Waller's work has taken on another look, different from his usual cowboy and rodeo scenes.

Approached by members of the student publications staffs to do cartoons for the Skyline newspaper and Brand yearbook, he was forced to try other ideas.

"People didn't want just cowboy stuff, because not everyone at Sul Ross is one."

His "Don't You Hate It When..." cartoons and "Sul Ross Blues" comic strip resulted.

Backing Waller in his future success are his father, whom he calls a real "go-getter," and his girlfriend, who is "always there behind me getting on my case."

Despite their support, Waller has a good distance to go. "I'm still in the process of trying to market myself. I don't think cowboy cartoons are doing real well. I'll be there one day. It isn't worrying me," he said.

"I've talked to a lot of cartoonists," he said, but has yet to talk to his idol, Western cartoonist Ace Reid of Kerrville.

One day, Waller plans to meet his idol. "I'd really like to just sit down and chew the fat with him. But I know he's a busy man."

But until he does meet his hero, Waller will move ahead, taking his advice.

Actually, he says, drawing "comes as easy as walking down the street. It's natural. It's easy. I'm always drawing something."

Registered massage therapist Steven Fearing gives a massage to Susan Longley, legislative liason for the state comptroller's office. Fearing has set up shop in a committee room of the State Capitol, offering a 15 minute massage for $12.

Masseur puts hands to work at Capitol

AUSTIN (AP) — Steven Fearing is at the Capitol to offer kneading hands for people rubbed the wrong way by the stressful process of balancing the state budget.

"It's a place of a lot of responsibility, and this is where people keep their responsibility stress, up in their shoulders," the registered massage therapist said.

Fearing, who calls his service "Touch-N-Go," has Senate permission to set up shop in a committee room just outside the Senate chamber. He plans to stay in business until lawmakers solve the budget crisis and go home.

For $12, Fearing offers a 15-minute massage in a chair. He had had 11 customers by mid-afternoon Tuesday, his second day at the Capitol.

"I'll get relaxed and then I'll talk taxes again," Susan Longley, legislative liaison for Comptroller Bob Bullock, said as Fearing finished working on her neck and shoulders.

Ms. Longley mixed business with therapy during the massage, touting the benefits of the massage while asking a co-worker about progress on some legislation.

"This is the best thing since sliced bread. We need this every day-...Where are we on the House?" she said.

Fearing's business flier carries two slogans: "A new start in the middle of your day" and "It's nice to be kneaded in your office."

And a massage is "better than a coffee break and caffeine free," according to the flier.

The customer list includes lobbyists, such as former House Speaker Billy Clayton, and state employees. No lawmakers had been in the chair by mid-afternoon Tuesday. As Fearing massaged, senators in the chamber listened to tax testimony.

Betty King, Senate secretary, said Sen. Roy Blake, chairman of the Senate Administration Committee, had OK'd Fearing's Capitol enterprise.

"We decided it was a good service for our own employees who are operating under pretty severe stress," Ms. King said, noting that employees are using their own money to pay for the massage.

She said she could not remember lawmakers allowing any other business to set up in the Capitol.

"I guess it does seem a little strange," Ms. King said.

Postal service finds Uncle Joe

POMPANO BEACH, Fla. (AP) — When Chris Belman addressed a letter from Spain to relatives in Pompano Beach, he was less than specific. He put down their names, hometown and a plea to "Please find our Uncle Joe."

The U.S. Postal Service found Uncle Joe. And Joe and Elsie Belman were impressed.

"I'm always getting letters back with 'wrong address' on it," said Mrs. Belman. "Usually if you don't have a ZIP code it comes back."

Chris Belman was vacationing with his wife and two children in Spain when he decided to send a note to his 84-year-old uncle. But he didn't have the address.

On the envelope, he wrote "Joe and Elsie Belman, Pompano Beach, Fort Lauderdale, Florida, U.S.A." Next to that, he wrote: "Please find our Uncle Joe."

Man spends time before going to college building clocks

By RICK SMITH

PRESTON BEND (AP) — To find the future, Lewis Lafas reached back to the past.

Lafas, 34, plans to study electrical engineering at Grayson County College this fall. In order to help pay his way through school, he is building and selling clocks that are made entirely of wood.

"I like woodworking and wanted to make some money on the side. So I jumped into one of the most difficult woodworking projects there is."

The art of building all-wood clocks wound down about a century ago with the development of brass gears, he said.

Re-inventing the all-wood clock meant two years of hair-pulling problems interspersed with jump-up-and-down joy.

Problems ranged from developing a design for an all-wood clock to finding a way to turn ¾-inch thick chunks of maple into precise, long-lasting gears.

And there were complications.

Lafas works as a freelance plumber-electrician-repairman, and investing $2,000 in tools and material for the project took a large chunk out of his family's finances.

Plus, he commandeered one of their mobile home's two bedrooms for a workshop, squeezing wife Ann, daughter Amy, 3, and son Phillip, 8 months, into less space.

"It was frustrating," he said, "the close quarters. The crowding."

Other frustrations resulted from trying to find ways to cut precision teeth into rock-hard maple wood.

"Clock building teaches you patience. Everything is to such close tolerance. Each tooth has to be filed in as you rotate the gear train. A lot of craftsmanship goes into something like this."

Lafas' timepiece is about the size of a traditional grandfather clock, but without a case. The inner works are open to view.

"In most clocks, you can see the hands move and that's it.

"I like woodworking and wanted to make some money on the side. So I jumped into one of the most difficult woodworking projects there is. ...It was frustrating, ...the close quarters. The crowding."

— Lewis Lafas

"But here, this clock actually shows you how time is measured; the interaction of the timekeeping machinery."

A 20-pound weight provides the pull that swings a wooden pendelum connected to a wooden escape mechanism that regulates wooden gears that turn wooden hands that point to wooden numbers.

With his prototype perfected, Lafas is taking orders for clocks, which he said he can build in about two weeks to a month.

His clocks sell for $490.

"These clocks aren't necessities for people," he said. "They are collector's items," he said.

"It's a functional artwork. I'd like to see one of my clocks in a museum, someday."

For now, Lafas hopes the sale of clocks will help pay his way to an associate's degree from GCC and, later, a BA in electrical engineering from the University of Texas at Dallas.

But he said he will always have time for clock building.

"I'll be doing this until I'm an old man. Clock building is such a sense of accomplishment. It's not a job you just do for money. When you're finished, you have something you can actually see. Something that can be passed down from generation to generation."

Tourism increases in U.S.S.R.

MOSCOW (AP) — Tourists are coming to Moscow in rising numbers this year and the city is having difficulty finding them places to stay.

"Sometimes the hotel situation is such that a person could travel all around the country but can't stay in Moscow, so we lose a client," said Vladimir B. Lebedev, head of the information department of Intourist, the government travel agency.

With a record number of foreigners choosing to vacation in the Soviet Union and two major Moscow hotels closed for repairs, the city's tourism facilities are booked to capacity.

Visitors who want to extend their stays often are turned down.

Nearly 2 million foreign tourists visited last year, a record number even though the Chernobyl nuclear accident April 26, 1986, discouraged many who feared radiation hazards.

Lebedev said an increase of at least 10 percent is expected this year because of what he called a pent-up interest and comparatively fewer concerns about terrorism in the Soviet Union.

The tourism growth could be higher if Intourist had more space in Moscow, Leningrad and Kiev, which are high on most visitors' lists, Lebedev said.

Irina Vershchova, also of the travel agency's information department, said an ambitious expansion program will increase by nearly 50 percent the number of hotel beds in Moscow over the next four years.

Construction began in early June on the first of four new hotels to be completed by 1990, she said.

However, the room situation may get worse before it gets better as another popular hotel in central Moscow, the National, closes in July for renovation.

The Metropol and Berlin hotels have been closed for more than a year.

Recent media articles have complained about inadequate capacity in the capital even for Soviet citizens.

The newsweekly Ogonyok said in May that Soviets who want to visit Moscow find it almost impossible to book hotel rooms. The labor newspaper Trud reported on June 12 that nearly half the rooms in Moscow are under Intourist or government management and therefore unavailable for ordinary Soviets.

About 60 percent of the foreigners who visit the Soviet Union each year are from Communist-governed countries, but that represents a drop from 80 percent over the past few years as Western interest has increased, said Nikolai N. Donskov, deputy director of Intourist's American department.

U.S. tourism to the Soviet Union took its biggest leap ever in 1985, when the number of visitors jumped 30 percent to about 100,000, he added. The number of American visitors was down slightly last year because of Chernobyl, but is now rising, according to Lebedev.

Visits by Finns, West Germans, Britons and Japanese are also climbing from year to year, and more consistently than among the Americans whose travel patterns seem to ebb and flow with the political climate, Donskov said.

The number of U.S. tourists neared 100,000 in 1978 and 1979, but the U.S. boycott of the Moscow Olympics in 1980 led to a sharp drop over the following five years, Donskov said.

Some American vistors say that in comparison with the costs of traveling in Western Europe, many Soviet trips are a bargain.

"One reason we came on this trip was that it was quite reasonable," said Carli Richard of Duluth, Minn., who took part in a two-week tour of Yugoslavia and the Soviet Union for less than $1,700 for airfare, hotels and meals.

The cost of Soviet tourism can vary broadly depending on group size and quality of accommodation.

Intourist's style is to have most foreign tourists arrive in large groups that are shuttled around in buses, fed together at restaurants closed to Soviets and housed in spartan hotels.

Independent excursions are not forbidden, but visitors who don't speak Russian tend to stay together and Intourist usually lays out a program intended to satisfy the visitor's curiosity and ensure a little time for wandering.

The 3,500 full-time guides employed by Intourist speak at least one foreign language fluently and most are reasonably proficient in another, Ms. Vershchova said. The agency offers guided tours in 25 languages.

Loeffler's task changing opinion

In choosing former Congressman Tom Loeffler to argue the case for more aid to Nicaragua's Contra rebels, the Reagan Administration is putting its faith in a man of strong convictions who is well-versed in the intricacies of weaving congressional support.

Loeffler has sat in a congressman's chair; now he has the job of selling an administration program to congressmen he knows and respects.

But to say that Loeffler, who represented the 21st Congressional District — which includes Midland — for eight years, is up to this task isn't saying nearly enough about what lies before him. One has to wonder if there isn't a parallel to be drawn between the task Loeffler is facing and the Biblical account of Daniel in the lions' den. Congress is hungry for anyone who wants to talk about aid for the Contras, what with the ongoing Iran-Contra investigation and all.

To make the "mountain" Loeffler must climb a little taller, public support for aid to the Contras has been far from overwhelming and that hesitancy isn't likely to change as long as Americans perceive that support as leading this nation toward greater involvement in the Central American war. In a nutshell, one can argue — as President Reagan has — the need to keep the flame of democracy burning in Nicaragua, but the "threat" posed by the Sandinista government isn't commonly embraced by the American people. That the support isn't there has been verified in poll after poll. Without a commitment to the cause at the grassroots level, Loeffler and the administration will find the effort for more support an uphill one.

Earlier this year, Congress-watchers were predicting that future requests for funds in support of the Contras will face stiff opposition in light of the revelations of the diversion of funds in the Iran-Contra case. That seems a foregone conclusion considering that public support for the rebel effort never has been strong in this country.

At issue in the funds debate is the fundamental question of whether the United States should be supporting an effort to overthrow a sitting government. That debate has raged in the public and in the Congress. But no clear consensus has been forthcoming. Largely that's a result of no danger to this nation being perceived from failure to support the Contra struggle.

Now, the task of selling future support for a rebel effort few apparently believe can be successful at current levels — and few want to see expanded — falls to a Texan with a track record of support for administration programs, and an ability to work behind the scenes to marshal support in the Congress.

Whether additional support is granted will depend to great extent on Loeffler's ability to make the men and women in Congress, and across the nation, recognize the dangers posed to all of Central America and the United States if this country were to do nothing.

Parents ignoring ratings

Once again I am moved to outrage and now feel compelled to voice my concern. My husband and I (mid-30s) are frequent movie-goers. We've just returned from seeing the R-rated movie, "Full Metal Jacket." This particular film was one of the most graphically violent and verbally obscene that we have viewed.

However, this is not a commentary of the film. As adults we had a choice of movie and attendance. This letter is about the children (ages 5-12) who did not have a choice but were brought to the theatre with their parents. Why would any parent expose, and subsequently desensitize, their children to gutter profanity, blood-and-gore murder, suicide, lewdness and prostitution? Given that pre-teen years are the most impressionable, what sort of lessons are these children learning from movies such as this?

It is sickening to consider the impact this type of film could make on these children; it is appalling that these parents' decisions reflect such ignorance and apathy. And it is disheartening that this is not an isolated incident. We have noticed children 12 and under at "Beverly Hills Cop II," "Platoon," "Blue Velvet" — all R-rated.

The movie industry attempts to provide guidance through ratings. It is unfortunate that some parents do not exercise their parental responsibility.

Raise taxes, not danger

It is evident that none of our Midland City Council members have ever had an emergency that required them to dial 911. Some of us have, and this makes us quick to appreciate our Midland fire fighters and paramedics.

On June 26th I was unfortunate to have a severe reaction to an antibiotic. Within minutes after dialing 911 I heard the ambulance close to my home, and I didn't ask which station they came from but they came quickly. Two young men — kind, considerate, and professional. Thank God for them. They easily could have saved my life.

Cut the budget? Fine. But not at the expense of endangering our lives or property, and laying off 27 employees.

The north Midland fire stations should not be closed. If, out of the 80 to 100 calls they answer in a year, they saved one life or one piece of property, they are worth every nickel they are paid and more.

Even if our taxes are increased, that's better than not having help nearby when you need it.

Flags had meaning

God bless America! To the person who took our American and Texas flags, it must give great courage to know he lives in such a wonderful country that we can choose not to send policemen to punish him for a comparatively small crime. However when he uses these flags to fly at home or wave elsewhere, he should know whose memory he is honoring.

These flags were lovingly displayed by the daughter, granddaughter, great-granddaughter, and great-grandson of a man who served his country and his state proudly and honorably in World War I and with Gen. John J. Pershing along the Texas border. Although he was 50 years old and totally deaf, he volunteered his services in World War II. By his own choice he lived his last weeks and died among fellow veterans in a military hospital. No one was a prouder Texan and American.

The large American flag covered his casket and was ceremoniously presented to his widow 14 years ago, and has been flown in his honor since.

No, the person who took the flags will not be pursued, but every time he flies our flags or drives by and sees the cut ropes hanging on the flagpole, he should give a little salute and say, "Thanks, Mac." God bless America!

JACK ANDERSON

White House put lid on Iran story

WASHINGTON — A stern question mark overhangs the Iran/contra scandal: Why did it take the media more than a year to pry the lid off this government-shaking story? Earlier disclosure might have saved the United States from a nasty embarrassment.

Jack Anderson

Until now, we have been restricted as to how much we could say about our role in the drama. We were sworn to protect sources who have now released us to tell the story. If in this recounting we give too much weight to our own part, it is because we know that part best.

Not long after the White House opened back channels to Iran, we heard whispers about the covert negotiations. We asked President Reagan's national security adviser, Robert "Bud" McFarlane, about the rumors in mid-November 1985. He was evasive.

We continued checking, nevertheless, until we became convinced that significant negotiations were going on with Iran, that the Reagan administration was making deals in direct conflict with its own policy toward nations that promoted terrorism.

Our inquiries precipitated an urgent call to Dale Van Atta from Noel Koch, then deputy assistant secretary of defense for international affairs. Koch pleaded with Van Atta not to write about the arms-for-hostages deal because it would "endanger the lives of the hostages."

Testifying under oath 18 months later, Koch told Congress that Van Atta had the whole story in December 1985. "He had it cold," said Koch. "He came to me and asked me about it. ... I simply said, 'Would you please drop it? I think if you go with this story ... you may get somebody killed.'"

Rather than risk the lives of the hostages, we sat on the story. But we were troubled by the administration's attempt to conceal its arms-for-hostages negotiations behind an elaborate smokescreen. The White House orchestrated a campaign to portray President Reagan as the scourge of terrorists and Libya's Moammar Gadhafi as the terrorist most in need of scourging.

Of course, we knew the administration was offering arms to the most deadly terrorist of them all, Iran's Ayatollah Khomeini. Still, we decided not to risk the hostages' lives by divulging this secret. Instead, we published a series of columns protesting that Khomeini, not Gadhafi, was behind most terrorist acts against the United States.

As one bit of evidence, we reported on Dec. 13, 1985, the death by torture of hostage William Buckley, a high CIA official. His capture and torture, we reported, was ordered by Tehran.

The day that the column appeared, McFarlane's administrative assistant, Karna Small Stringer, screamed at Van Atta on the telephone that we were putting all hostages at risk. She warned angrily that the president might make a public statement accusing us of irresponsibility. Other calls had the distinct overtone of personal threats.

On Feb. 24, 1986, Van Atta reviewed our findings with Ronald Reagan himself in the Oval Office. He confirmed that Buckley had been tortured to death but that, to save the hostages, he was dealing with Ayatollah Khomeini's radical regime. But the president joined the others in urging us to withhold the story until the hostages were released.

So we continued to sit on the story until President Reagan, calling Gadhafi "the mad dog of the Middle East," sent planes to bomb Libya. We felt this was an attempt to divert attention from Iran, where we were selling arms to the real "mad dog."

On April 28, 1986, we reported cautiously that "the Reagan administration has begun a hush-hush, barely perceptible tilt toward Iran." We followed up with more details in May and June.

EVANS & NOVAK

Casey's testament was bid for Kirkpatrick

WASHINGTON — The last political testament of the late CIA director, William J. Casey, was a blunt, private letter around Nov. 26 to President Reagan urging him to replace Secretary of State George Shultz with former U.N. ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick to assure loyalty to the president and his policies.

The letter was an unprecedented attack by one Cabinet member against another. Casey, the daring strategist fighting to carry out what he knew his boss wanted, attacked Shultz, the cautious nay-sayer. Casey was livid that Shultz remained silent instead of backing the president or resigning when Reagan overruled the secretary's opposition to a secret arms channel to Iran — the most disastrous decision of the Reagan era.

Casey was compulsively and secretly driven by the president "to get the hostages home and keep the contras going," according to a Reagan insider. No member of the Cabinet felt as bound as Casey to follow Reagan's policies and none was so enraged by what he regarded as Shultz's self-serving survival course.

Ronald Reagan was an admirer of both Casey and Shultz. Instead of choosing between them, he pigeonholed the letter in a characteristic manifestation of indecision. Now Casey lies dead, a career of patriotism capped by stormy final days and even the indignity of a censorious funeral eulogy. Shultz is idolized by the Washington establishment for adroitly distancing himself from

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

Reagan's policies and the Iran arms crisis — the "who, me?" posture Casey deplored.

Casey's letter to the president was mistakenly included in the huge bundle of White House documents sent to the Senate-House Iran-contra investigating committees after the crisis broke. It may never become a part of the public record, although one committee member told us it is "bound to come out" officially sooner or later.

It displayed the qualities that made Casey Reagan's special and often lonely champion, and at the same time the hairshirt of the Shultz State Department. As Reagan's champion, Casey is called by Henry Kissinger "the one patriot with a strategic sense of what Reagan wanted done." But the zeal he splurged on Reagan's behalf, including lies and half-truths to protect the president and his policies, helped bring the policy down in shame.

Casey's last letter to Ronald Reagan was triggered by outrage that Shultz, after declining to resign when he lost the Oval Office debate, refused to share the blame with other top administration officials when the Iran arms scandal broke. No course other than taking the blame or resigning was considered "loyal" by Casey (and others close to the president). But Shultz found one. He claimed to have been kept in the dark.

Two events in that worsening mid-November nightmare drove Casey toward his attack on Shultz. The first was Shultz's White House battle to prevent Casey from testifying untruthfully to the House Intelligence Committee on Nov. 21. Casey, viewing that battle as essential to protect the president, was livid.

The second event that broke Casey's boiling point was a veiled verbal duel between himself and Under Secretary of State Michael Armacost at that same Nov. 21 closed-door House Intelligence Committee hearing. Attempting to exonerate his boss of any blame for the Iran-arms fiasco, Armacost angered Casey by testifying that Shultz had "participated in the discussions" that led to the president's approval of the policy but then had "no role" when the actual policy was drafted.

Armacost praised Shultz as "the principal architect of the counterterrorism policy," who was trying to "frustrate" all arms sales to terrorist Iran. Casey interrupted at that point, according to the declassified transcript released June 22. "I would say that the CIA has probably the most effective counterterrorism capability in this government ... so it (Armacost's logic) doesn't quite follow that clearly."

Casey went on with some heat. He told the committee that when Reagan decided on the arms sales, "I thought we were all supporting the president's position — and I know that we (the CIA) were supporting it."

Casey's anti-Shultz mood, so manifest that day on the Hill, hardened when he returned to his office and brooded about the president's inability to command his secretary of state's cooperation. He is known to have had similar concerns about the degree of Shultz's support for some other highly-controversial Reagan policies, including Nicaragua and southern Africa.

If Reagan could not command complete loyalty from Shultz, Casey wrote the president, he surely could from Jeane Kirkpatrick, whose ideas were embodied in Reagan's foreign policy. But his letter to a president who abhors the task of judging between feuding aides was forgotten inside the White House, along with Bill Casey's sometimes overzealous strategic dreams.

American influence based on self-interest

Several people have suggested that I write a column about the Japanese being xenophobic — contemptuous of foreigners. That's like asking me to write a column about the desert being hot and the ocean being wet. Of course the Japanese are xenophobic. Have been for about 3,000 years. So what? Who cares?

Charley Reese

After 210 years as a nation, it's time Americans abandon the childish notion that other people have an obligation to conform to our changing definitions of Mr. Nice Guy. The Japanese are under no obligation whatsoever to please us or our sensibilities.

Too many Americans have the ridiculous idea that foreigners should be grateful for something we did in our own selfish interests. We fought a war with Japan and defeated them. We did not ask them if they would like a democratic government; we imposed one on them and we deliberately de-militarized their society.

That being the case it's ignorance or arrogance to the max to complain that the Japanese don't spend enough on their own defense. That was our idea, not theirs. The Japanese owe us nothing. Whatever we did after the war, we did for our own reasons just as we supplied aid to Europe for our own reasons — mainly to thwart the Soviet Union and to increase the sales of American corporations.

The trouble comes because while most American leaders practice hard ball politics there has arisen a tradition to sugar-coat everything that is said to the American people. To hear our pols tell it, we never pursue our own interests overseas. We are always defending democracy, fighting hunger, pursuing peace, and standing by our friends.

Horse feathers.

There is no such thing as friendship between nations, only temporary alliances based on a convergence, usually also temporary, of their respective selfish interests. Why is it that our 18th century presidents could talk and deal with the plain, real world while our 20th century presidents can't?

George Washington, among other things, said, "It is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another." And, just so you won't think the Japanese are the only xenophobes who ever lived, let me quote Washington some more: "Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence, the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake; since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government."

Everytime I hear President Reagan or Secretary of State George Shultz talk about our friends in Europe, our friends in Asia, our friends in the Persian Gulf, I feel like throwing up. We don't have any friends in Europe, Asia, the Persian Gulf, the Middle East, Africa, Latin America, or the Antarctic or the North Pole.

It is time to put aside our childish ways for they are corroding people's sanity not to mention the credibility, what little is left, of our government. Among governments, we have some allies, some trading partners, and some enemies but no friends. We have no uncollected chits sitting out there. There is no one out there awash in gratitude for anything we've done. There is no one out there worrying about our welfare or our future. There is no one out there sweating pure adrenalin in the anxious hope that they meet our expectations of them.

More important to remember, we have no jurisdiction nor authority — moral or otherwise — outside our own borders. If we choose to put money or troops into a country, this is in no way imposes on them any obligation to cede their sovereign rights to us. Presumably we do whatever we do for our own reasons and benefits, not theirs — otherwise, it's unconstitutional. For Americans to lecture others on their beliefs, culture, practices, or internal affairs is both arrogant and foolish. For Americans to expect others to swoon in gratitude or jump to attention is insane.

To recognize this is not isolationism, neo or otherwise. It's just honest and real. We don't kid the world. We ought to stop kidding ourselves.

NATION IN BRIEF

Directors join picket session

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — About 1,000 members of the movie and television directors' guild joined an informational picketing session as talks continued in an effort to avert a first-ever strike today by the union.

Representatives of the Directors Guild of America and the Motion Picture and Television Producers Alliance held a nearly 16-hour negotiating session that recessed shortly before 2 a.m. today, said producers' spokeswoman Carol Akiyama said. She said talks were to resume at 10:30 a.m.

The directors' union set a strike deadline of 6 p.m. today for what would be the first walkout in the guild's 51-year history. The union reinforced the call with picketing Thursday at The Burbank Studios.

Both sides announced the producers had withdrawn one disputed contract proposal.

Controller error noted

Associated Press

An air traffic controller's error was blamed for a near-miss involving a Pan Am passenger jet and a Venezuelan DC-10, the second such incident over the Atlantic Ocean in two days, officials said.

Pan Am Flight 221 was en route from Kennedy International Airport to St. Thomas in the U.S. Virgin Islands on Thursday when it passed about 300 feet below and 500 feet to 1,000 feet to the side of the Viasa flight from Venezuela, said Pan Am spokesman Alan Loflin.

On Wednesday, an off-course Delta Air Lines jet passed just under a Continental Airlines 747 hours after both had taken off from London. No injuries were reported in either incident.

The Pan Am and Viasa planes were about 70 miles southwest of Bermuda off the coast of the Carolinas when the incident occurred at 11:20 a.m. Thursday, said Kathleen Bergen, a spokeswoman for the Federal Aviation Administration.

There were 83 passengers and eight crew members on the Pan Am flight, Loflin said, but it was not known how many were on the Venezuelan plane, which was headed for Kennedy.

Deaver's motive strong

WASHINGTON (AP) — Michael K. Deaver's desire to make money was a "powerful motive to lie" to Congress and a grand jury about his lucrative lobbying business, the prosecutor in Deaver's perjury case says.

Deaver knew that truthful answers to questions about whether his lobbying posed ethics law violations could hurt his career, independent counsel Whitney North Seymour alleged in court papers filed Thursday.

The former top aide to President Reagan lied to frustrate investigations that threatened the "bonanza" he sought from the proposed sale of his lobbying firm for $18 million, Seymour said.

Deaver is scheduled to go to trial Monday on charges he lied to a House subcommittee and the grand jury that conducted the investigations.

Deaver's attorney, Randall Turk, declined to comment Thursday on Seymour's allegations.

Trade accord favored

WASHINGTON (AP) — Japan would come under stepped-up U.S. pressure to lower trade barriers under a newly minted accord among senators over retaliatory provisions of their sweeping trade bill.

"It may go fairly easily and be something that could go through fairly quickly," Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., said Thursday as leaders reached a tentative agreement that would resolve the last of the toughest disputes that have faced lawmakers in the three-week trade debate.

The agreement surfaced after the Senate first defeated 60-40 a move to drop major, union-backed plant-closing provisions from the bill. The Senate then reversed earlier action and voted to broaden presidential leeway to turn down import curbs recommended as a way to help American companis.

The Senate also rejected 53-39 a $400 million annual ceiling on retraining funds for workers left jobless by import competition. The plan was urged by Sen. William Armstrong, R-Colo.

Balancing act back?

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Democrats and Republicans, after months of bickering over virtually every money issue they discuss, are uniting behind plans to give new strength to the Gramm-Rudman budget balancing law.

Sen. Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, and Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., announced Thursday they would shepherd a package of budget reforms to the Senate floor next week.

The proposals would take the form of an amendment to an emergency bill increasing the national debt limit, which could put the revisions in place by the end of the month.

The committee was scheduled today to send the debt bill to the full Senate.

Confinement ordered

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A Beverly Hills neurosurgeon has been sentenced to wear an electronic device to make sure he obeys his court-ordered 30-day confinement in a vermin-infested apartment building he failed to repair.

Dr. Milton Avol can have visitors and food brought to him in his building, which he rents to low-income tenants, but he will have to wear the so-called electronic leash on his ankle so authorities will know if he leaves.

The doctor's 10-year record of building, health and safety code violations on his properties earned him the nickname "Rat Lord."

"I will only permit you to go outside the building so you can assist in repairs to the building," Municipal Court Judge Veronica Simmons-McBeth said Thursday as she ordered the confinement to start Monday.

She imposed the sentence, the first of its kind in Los Angeles, two years ago, after Avol repeatedly failed to improve conditions at four buildings he owned. It had been suspended during appeals.

Conable criticizes U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — World Bank President Barber B. Conable criticized the United States, Japan and the 12 governments of the European Economic Community today for spending $60 billion a year to support prices, control production and subsidize exports.

"Their policies not only cost producers in developing nations sales at home and abroad," he said. "These practices often entail the very market restrictions that the developing countries are urged to reform. Advice will not be credible until it is followed at home by those who offer it most ardently abroad."

The European countries are: Britain, France, West Germany, Italy, Belgium, the Netherlands, Luxembourg, Ireland, Denmark, Spain, Portugal and Greece.

Conable's remarks were in a speech prepared for delivery at a meeting in Geneva, Switzerland, of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development. Copies were distributed by his Washington headquarters.

Goetz attorney mugged

NEW YORK (AP) — Bernhard Goetz's attorney, his left wrist broken by a baseball bat-wielding mugger, says he hopes the attack was not linked to his successful defense of the subway gunman.

Police today were trying to determine why the man repeatedly hammered Slotnick with the bat Thursday afternoon outside Slotnick's Manhattan office.

"It didn't have the classic indications of a robbery," said Chief of Detectives Robert Colangelo after the attack in which Slotnick's watch was stolen. "At this point, we are at a loss for motive."

Slotnick, who defended Goetz after he shot four teen-agers in a subway in 1984, said a concerned Goetz called his office after the incident and Roy Innis, president of the Congress of Racial Equality and a Goetz supporter, came to see Slotnick at Beekman Downtown Hospital.

Goetz, who is white, said he shot the four black youths because they were about to rob him. He was charged with attempted murder but was convicted only of a single weapons charge. Some critics said the verdict was racially motivated.

Second escapee found

SANTA FE (AP) — Tired, hungry, and his mismatched clothes torn, Robert Earl Davis was the picture of a man who had been on the run through unforgiving territory.

The former Albuquerque police detective now serving sentences totaling 44½ years, Thursday became the second escapee to be caught since the July 4 breakout of seven men from the maximum security unit at the Penitentiary of New Mexico.

Unarmed, Davis was captured without incident Thursday morning near Belen, ending his attempt to ride a southbound semi truck to freedom.

New Mexico State Police and Valencia County Sheriff's officers arrested Davis along Interstate 25 about five miles south of Belen.

Among the five escapees still at large is former Death Row inmate William Wayne Gilbert.

Gilbert, whose death sentence was commuted late last year by then Gov. Toney Anaya, was serving life sentences for the shooting deaths of four people in 1980, including his wife.

The first escapee caught was Hector Torres, who was apprehended Monday at The Downs at Santa Fe racetrack by a security officer at the track.

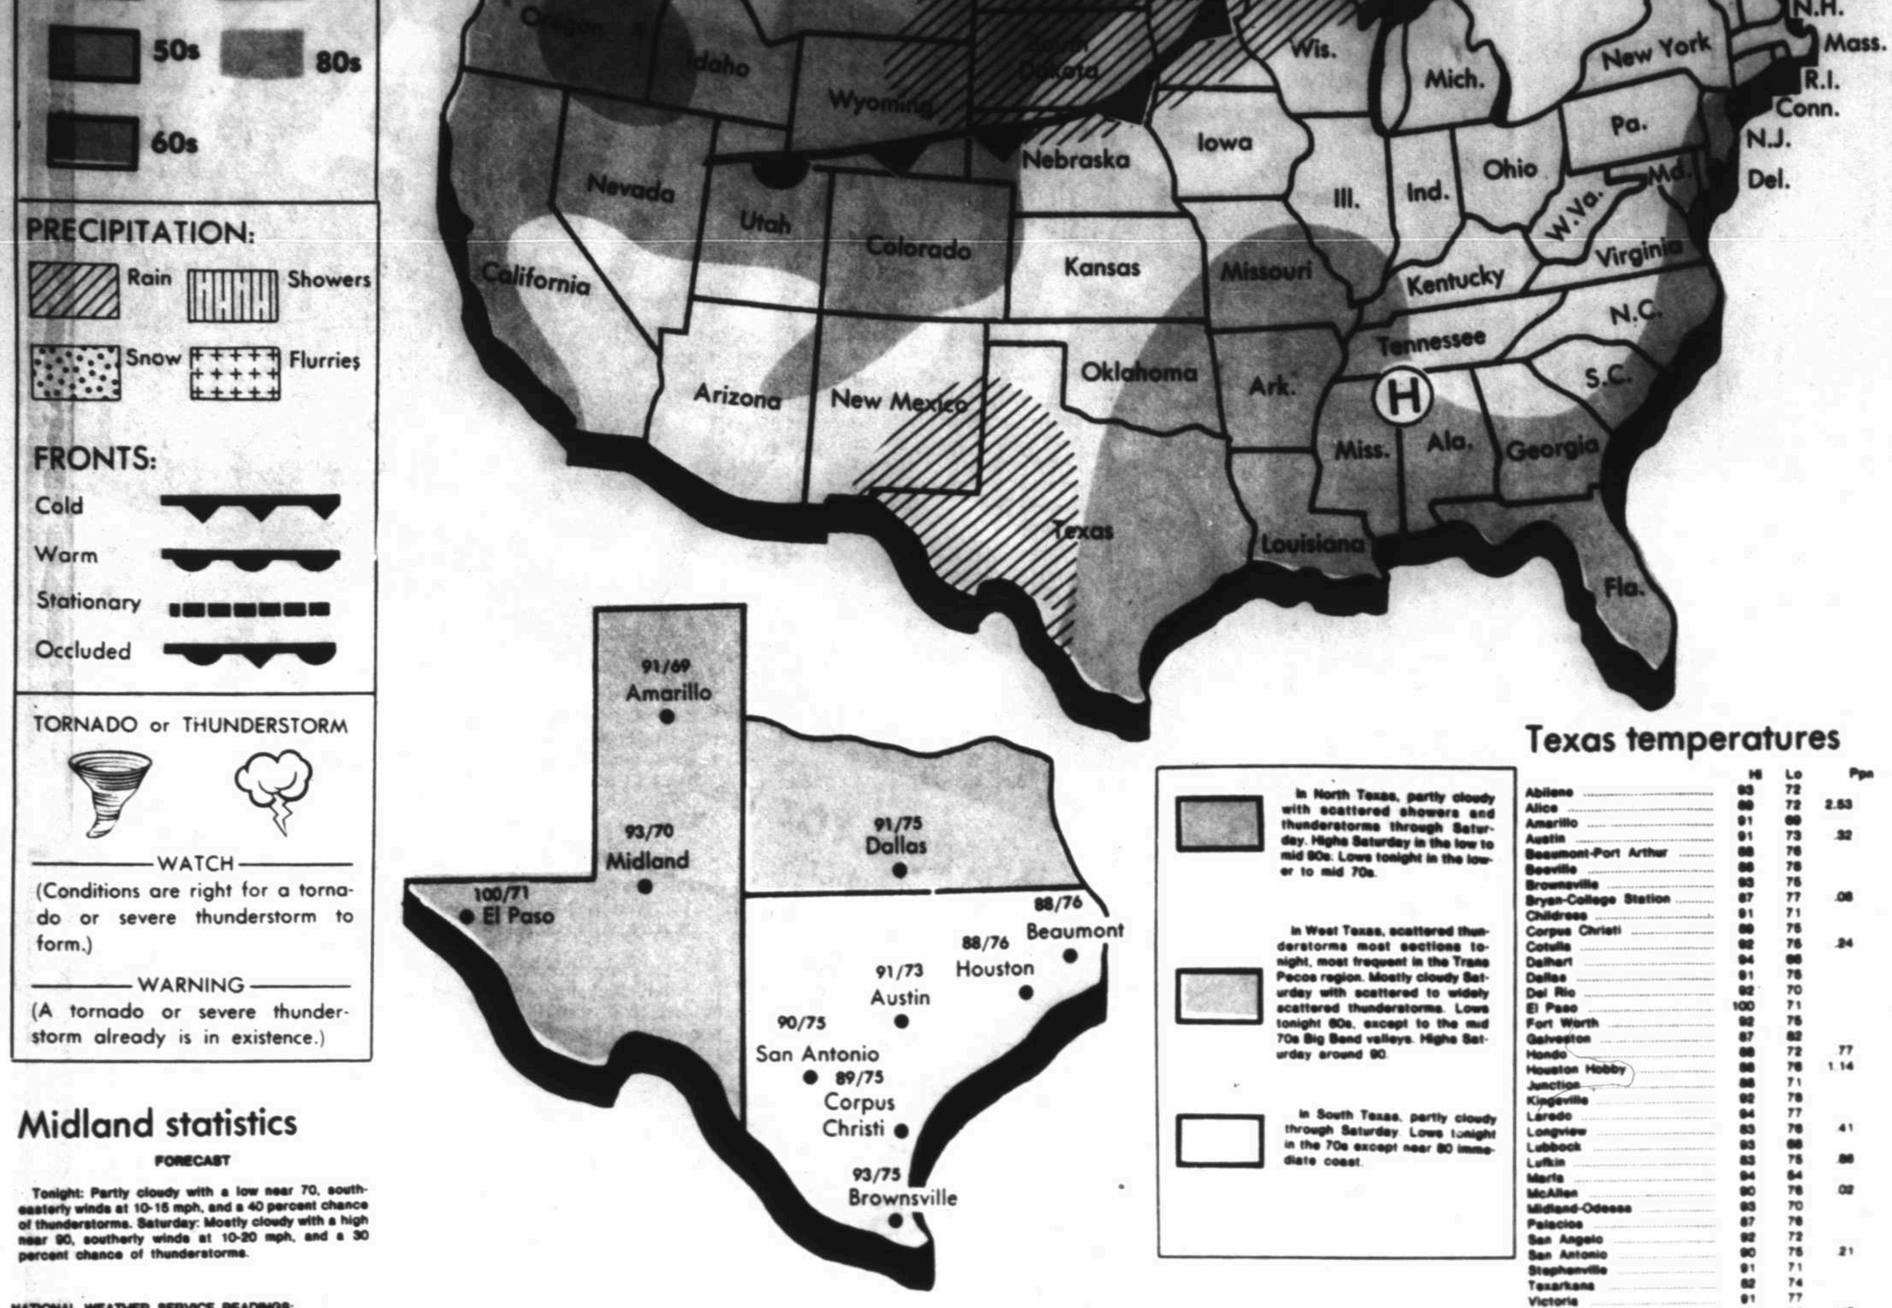
WEATHER SUMMARY



Thunderstorms could hit area

From Staff and Wire Reports

An increased chance of thunderstorms is in the National Weather Service forecast for the Midland-Odessa area. There is a 40 percent chance of storms tonight and a 30 percent chance on Saturday. Skies will be partly to mostly cloudy.

The NWS is calling for an overnight low near 70, with temperatures to warm up to near 90 on Saturday. Winds will be out of the southeast at 10-15 mph tonight, shifting to the south at 10-20 mph on Saturday.

Today's low was six degrees above the record low set for this date in 1961. Thursday's high of 93 was 10 degrees below the record high set for that date in 1964.

STATE

Scattered showers dotted parts of Northeast and North Central Texas this morning.

Most of the showers were located from Waco to Tyler, according to the National Weather Service. Early in the morning, a strong isolated thunderstorm moved through North Texas but quickly dissipated. Still under the influence of an area of high pressure off the Atlantic coast, skies were mostly cloudy over much of the southern half of the state. Only Southeast Texas, the Edwards Plateau and the low rolling plains had fair skies.

Winds were from the south with speeds of 5 to 15 miles an hour. But in Southeast and South Central Texas, speeds were around 5 miles an hour.

Temperatures were mostly in the 70s statewide. Early morning extremes ranged from 62 degrees at Marfa to 80 degrees at several locations along the middle coast.

NATION

Thunderstorms rumbled from the Plains into the Great Lakes region today, while sweltering residents from Michigan to the Atlantic Coast used record amounts of electricity to run their air conditioners.

A search continued today for a 3-year-old boy who was sucked into a storm sewer in Jacinto City, Texas, on Thursday as he screamed for his mother. The boy was dropping sticks into a whirlpool in a culvert when he fell in.

An 11-year-old boy was in critical condition after being injured by lightning as a wave of severe thunderstorms, and at least two funnel clouds, moved over Michigan, authorities said today.

In Arizona, where highs have hit 100 daily, officials at Phoenix General hospital decided to transfer 98 patients to other institutions when a fire knocked out power for air conditioning.

Showers and scattered thunderstorms were common from Nebraska across eastern South Dakota, western Iowa and along the Texas and Nebraska panhandles

Lawmen unite, request funds to halt drug war

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

West Texas lawmen agreed Thursday to present a "united front" in their battle for funding to stifle the affliction of cocaine, heroin, and methamphetamine labs in the vast 17-county area.

Thirty officers representing 14 different local law enforcement agencies, and an official with the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission met for 90 minutes and agreed to set up a committee to plan the draft of a proposal.

The target is a piece of $9.5 million in federal funds earmarked for the war on drugs. The money will be funneled through the office of Gov. Bill Clements.

The money is necessary because of an increasing amount of drug traffic authorities are seeing along the Texas-Mexico border. Most of that traffic affects West Texas, said Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter, who organized Thursday's meeting.

"Right now, heroin users are the ones creating the biggest problems," Painter said, "because they tend to commit other crimes, such as burglaries and theftts, that are a real problem. But then, you've got the methamphetamine people, who are dealing to kids. And then cocaine, which is also being dealt to young people."

Narcotics traffic in the area is increasing because years of efforts at choking off the lucrative drug trade in Florida have worked, Painter said.

The joint West Texas effort will be only one of several hundred requests expected for the one-year grant, said Painter.

Despite that, with planning and quick action, "we can get our share. I don't know how much, but we've got to try," Painter told the group.

How the money is spent will depend on the recommendations of a subcommittee of Clements' criminal justice task force.

Subcommittee member Al Schorre, Midland County's District Attorney, attended hearings in El Paso, Corpus Christi, and Arlington. Last month, he revealed multi-county task forces would be favored by the governor's office.

Thursday, the assembled lawmen studied a proposal drafted by Painter that would request nearly $900,000. Most of the money would be used to pay the salaries of eight investigators and supervisory personnel.

The remainder would be spent on vehicle, facilities, and utilities, according to the proposal.

The task force would operate on an as-needed basis, Painter said, "and could go from county to county, or city to city, targeting (narcotics traffickers)."

Rick Thompson, Presidio County sheriff, and others at the meeting agreed that Painter's proposal should be used only as a guideline.

"Eight (investigators) may not be the magic number," Thompson said. "It may be 12, it may be 17 — one for every county."

Painter agreed, and said that "the figures are negotiable — we just want some help."

Funds also could be spent to hire retired judges, pay jury fees, or "anything that needed to be paid for with an operation like this," Thompson said.

Ector County Sheriff Bob Brookshire expressed concern about the "wide open" spaces of the area, and how desolate areas could be policed adequately.

"Whatever we need to do to stop the flow of narcotics into the Permian Basin, we are all for it," Brookshire said.

Scott Rathburn/Reporter-Telegram

Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter, left, and Ector County Sheriff Bob Brookshire were two of 30 West Texas lawmen who met Thursday to discuss creation of a multi-county narcotics task force. More than $9 million in federal funds are available to fund the project, but 70 bids for the money have already been received, Painter said.

Rate hike to prompt MISD policy change

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Midland Independent School District likely will drop its current health insurance policy with Allstate Insurance Co. because of a 78 percent premium increase slated to begin Aug. 1, said Don Furgeson, the district's business manager.

The action is scheduled for consideration Tuesday at the district's regular board meeting, Furgeson said.

The premium increase would rob an additional $880,000 from the school district's pockets next year, Furgeson explained today.

Insurance executives told MISD the increase was due to three factors — poor claims experience, a higher reserve requirement and inflated medical costs, the business manager said.

"We've had good reports about self-insurance and I think we should take a look at it," said MISD board member Bill Jackson.

Under self-insurance plans, an employer pays employee medical bills from monies previously deposited into a special insurance fund, said a local insurance expert, John Holt.

The plan saves the employer money in the form of insurance-carrier brokerage fees, premium taxes and basic insurance company overhead expenses, Holt said.

An independent third-party administrator manages the actual claims and has authority to draw on the employer's account, he added.

Outside insurance companies bid for the right to cover an employer's catastrophic claims, which could wipe out the employer's kitty, Holt added.

However, the school district is not ruling out third-party carriers either, Jackson said.

At the second MISD board meeting in June, board members announced that the district had employed a consultant to look into an economical way of insuring its estimated 1,900 employees.

"Something definite should come out Tuesday," Jackson said.

One self-insurance proposition made to MISD several months ago was from organizers of the "Premier Health Plan (PHP)," a preferred provider organization based at Midland Memorial Hospital.

Jackson said that plan also had not been ruled out.

'Missing money' result of 'misunderstanding,' city says

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

No one in City Hall seems to know exactly what happened, but $89,000 in federal grants that a city department thought was gone has resurfaced, according to one city official.

Community Services Director George Logan said Wednesday he will not be applying this year for any U.S. Housing and Urban Development money for community improvements after an $89,000 allocation turned up in May.

"I don't think it was a mess up. Three departments overlooked the same thing," Logan said.

According to Logan the $89,000 allocated by the City Council for the 1985-86 fiscal year was "overlooked" by his department in addition to city finance and planning departments, after he was told the money was unavailable.

But Finance Director Troy Gifford said accounting never told Logan the money was unavailable.

Gifford said the incident was caused by "misinformation."

"It's unfortunate somebody responsible for a program like George would have bad information at his disposal," Gifford said.

The city never actually receives money up front from the federal government, but is only reimbursed for expenses, Gifford explained.

"We don't draw the funds until we spend the funds," he said.

Sylvester Cantu, who took over the administration of the Community Development Block Grant money in October 1986, said the planning department has always considered the money available.

"It's been there as far as I can tell and based on financial records it's there," Cantu said Thursday.

"For some reason they got the impression that the money was not there for their use," he added.

The funds were "rediscovered" after Cantu said he questioned the parks department about the account when he saw no money had been drawn out of it.

"They didn't use it. That's very clear. Why they didn't, I don't know," Cantu said.

Logan said he thought the money was rediscovered in an account tied to a $80,000 Martin Luther King Jr. Park grant that council also approved of for the 1985-86 year.

"We thought we had the dollars appropriated but they were hidden in this one resolution," Logan said.

But Cantu said the parks improvement money was found in its own separate account.

City Manager Fred Poe said he's not sure who, but somebody thought the funds had been spent.

"Somebody showed an obligation against that thing. Who made the mistake I don't know," Poe said.

The information that the money was no available came from personnel in finance and administration that no longer work for the city, Logan said.

Tim Barbee, the city accountant who now handles CDBG grant accounts, said neither Logan nor Mike Casey, the parks superintendent, ever asked him about the funds.

But Logan said, "We were looking for that money for a long time."

After not finding the money, Logan said he assumed a "higher authority" had appropriated the funds to a different department for a separate community development project like street paving.

"I thought there was another appropriation assigned to the dollars that I wasn't aware of," Logan said.

But Barbee explained that under HUD rules the city is prevented from moving the community development money from one department to another without a public hearing.

The city can move the money without holding public hearings only if the funds to be moved total less than 10 percent of the total yearly CDBG allocation, Barbee added.

After public hearings held last summer, the $89,000 allocation for park improvements grew to $92,217 when unspent federal money from other departments was redistributed to different programs, Barbee said.

During that time, the parks department might have been told to hold off their request for the $89,000, Barbee acknowledged.

"While we were trying to clear up unspent funds, they might have been told to wait," Barbee said.

Now that the money has resurfaced from what Logan calls a bureaucratic "snafu", the director said his parks department is ready to spend the funds to improve several eastside parks that are at least 20 years old.

"Three departments overlooked the same appropriation. It's regrettable we did it, but we still got our window to spend the money," Logan said.

According to Parks Superintendent Casey, the eight parks scheduled for facelifts — ranging from new playground equipment to revised landscaping — include Dennis the Menace Park at South Garfield Street and Indiana Avenue; Centennial Plaza at Loraine Street and Wall Ave.; Dunagan Park at south Terrell Street and Gist Avenue; Garrett-Brown Park at Holley Drive and Delano Avenue; Ratliff Park at north Edwards Street and Maple Avenue; Sparks Park at Golf Course Road and Tilden Street; Ulmer Park at west Kentucky Avenue and Clark Street and Washington Park at Adams Street and Indiana Avenue.

DPS reports no injuries in plane crash

From Staff Reports

No injuries were reported after a private plane attempting to take off from Midland Air Park crashed Thursday afternoon, according to the Department of Public Safety.

The accident occurred just before 5:30 p.m. as a 1977 Piper Cherokee piloted by Hardy Lee Gage of Wichita Falls attempted to take off from east to west. The plane was 10 feet in the air when Gage realized he could not gain adequate altitude, DPS reports said.

Gage then landed the plane, but was unable to brake at the end of the runway. He then struck a barbed wire fence at the runway's west end, a quarter-mile south of Loop 250.

The accident was reported by a Midland police officer, reports said.

The plane, which was heavily damaged, was owned by Cook-Swain of Iowa City, reports said. A passenger in the plane was listed as Jim Butemeyer, also of Wichita Falls.

The Federal Aviation Administration will investigate the accident.

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

Department of Public Safety trooper Jim Swain talks to Jim Butemeyer following a single-engine plane mishap Thursday afternoon. Butemeyer, of Wichita Falls, was a passenger in a plane piloted by Hardy Gage, also of Wichita Falls. According to DPS reports, Gage aborted a takeoff about 5:25 p.m., was unable to stop the plane and struck a barbed wire fence. There were no injuries reported in the mishap.

'Tenure' focus of UTPB breach of contract suit

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Two University of Texas of the Permian Basin professors this week tacitly acknowledged their understanding that the fired former director of the Center for Energy, Technology and Economic Diversification was a tenured faculty member.

The question of tenure is the central issue in the $9.5 million breach of contract lawsuit filed Monday in Ector County's 358th District Court by Troyt B. York, a former U.S. Department of Energy official who retired after 21 years of government service to accept a position with UTPB.

York, 52, contends he was fraudulently induced to leave his secure government job and accept, what he was led to believe would be, a tenured professorship that included being director of the Energy Center. He contends UTPB President Duane Leach, named as a defendant in the lawsuit, fired him Jan. 19, 1987, and that the action willfully, maliciously and intentionally disregarded his contractual rights without good cause.

Concerning the issue of York's faculty status, Prof. Edwin B. Kurtz, president of the UTPB Faculty Senate, was asked Tuesday if he understood York was tenured.

"I saw a letter that had been written to him, to York that is, stating what sounds to be that (tenure), but I wasn't privy to all that. I don't know if that had gone through the (UT) Regents," he stated.

Prof. James L. Colwell, president of the local chapter of the Texas Association of College Teachers (TACT) said, "I understand he was given a letter which appointed him a research professor and I believe it indicated he was to be tenured, as well as director of the Center for Energy, Technology and Economic Diversification," stated Colwell.

However, Kurtz stated that he asked Leach during a Faculty Senate meeting after York was fired if York had been a tenured faculty member. "I have that (answer) written down somewhere," he said. "I don't recall just what it (Leach's answer) was, but the jist of it was that he (York) was not tenured."

UT System Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs James Duncan, contacted in Austin Wednesday and asked about York's status, said, "That individual was never tenured. It was only an administrative appointment with no tenure involved," he stated.

York is relying on two letters, one from Leach, dated Sept. 4, 1985, and another dated Aug. 20, 1985 from H. Warren Gardner, UTPB vice president for academic affairs in his case. York contends the documents guaranteed him tenure as a research professor of business management and a $66,500 per year salary as Energy Center Director.

York's contract also called for an evaluation after six months and, if his performance was satisfactiory, a salary increase to $70,000 a year, according to the suit. Tenure would have guaranteed him employment for seven years unless terminated for cause under the current UTPB system.

The former energy center director is seeking $8.5 million in compensatory damages and $1 million in punitive damages.

York contends the actions of the defendants have caused him damages that include "lost income, benefits and Social Security coverage

York's lawsuit names Leach and Gardner, individually and in their respective capacities with UTPB and the UT System, as well as UTPB and the UT System as defendants.

York specifically alleges he is the victim of fraud, negligence, third-party interference with contract and violation of his due process rights under the Texas and U.S. Constitutions, as well as the rules and regulations of the UT System and UTPB.

Efforts to contact Leach and Gardner today were unsuccessful.

Oil company president named to State Depository Board post

From Staff Reports

Monaghan

Midlander Robert Lee Monaghan was recently named a member of the State Depository Board.

Currently president of Cal-Mon Oil company, Monaghan, a Re..blican, will serve with three other board members for a two-year term to monitor the state's banks and savings and loans on a daily basis. His job, which is a treasury position, will include deciding where state funds should be deposited, establishing bank collateral, determining interest rates and various other duties.

As a 1951 graduate of the University of Texas with degrees in both petroleum engineering and law.

About his appointment, Monaghan said that "It surprised me...and I was flattered...it is a very interesting and fascinating job."

Although Monaghan acknowledges that studying and listening are neccessary before he can input his ideas, he is fully aware of his responsibilites as an appointee.

He said he feels a little "insecure" because it is such a tremendous job but "I am learning and keeping up."

The Midlander's appointment comes in part because of efforts by the Midland Chamber of Commerce's Gubernatorial Appointments Committee, which works to support the appointment of Midlanders to Texas boards and commissions.

According to Tracy Elms, the Chamber's Government Affairs chairman, "The Permian Basin area has been sorely under-represented in past years, but the governor's appointments director has been working closely with the Midland Chamber to consider the names of qualified residents."

Monaghan is the fourth Midlander to be appointed to a state board during 1987.

Jewish inmate wants kosher, gets transfer

PECOS (AP) — A Jewish inmate who went on a 4½-day hunger strike after prison officials were unable to supply him with a diet consistent with Jewish law won a transfer to a federal detention center in California.

Bernd Drisang, the only Jewish inmate at the Pecos Law Enforcement Center, was awaiting transportation to the new facility Thursday, the San Angelo Standard-Times reported.

Drisang, 37, said he was served pork four consecutive days. Most Jews do not include pork in their diets. Drisang said prison officials took him to a local grocery store to purchase kosher food, but he only found bagels and cream cheese, Drisang said.

Odessa air field to be site of fly-in, breakfast

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A Cowboy Fly-in Breakfast and Media Day will be held Saturday at Odessa Schlemeyer Air Field.

The Ector County Airport Board and Safety Committee will host the breakfast from 7:30 a.m. to 10:30 a.m.

And the Odessa Schlemeyer Air Field Aviation Day & Air Show Committee will sponsor the Media Day in gearing up for the second annual Aviation Appreciation Day & Air Show here on July 25, according to air-show promoter Priscilla Barbee.

Ms. Barbee is a pilot-representative of the Purple Sage Chapter of the Ninety-Nines, one of the sponsors of the air show. The Ninety-Nines is an international organization of women pilots.

Fly-in pilots and their crew members will be treated to a free breakfast of Rhode Island Red eggs, Buzz's biscuits and red-eye gravy, Ms. Barbee said.

Between 10 a.m. and 1 p.m., pilots will invite representatives of the press and broadcast media to view their airplanes and to take rides in them in helping promote the air show.

The air show, which will feature warbirds from the 1939-1945 World War II era and aerobatic and other aircraft, will be held from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. on Saturday, July 25. Admission to the air show will be $3 for most adults. Senior citizens and children will be admitted for $1 each.

George Steding of Odessa is air show coordinator.

Sponsors of the event include the Desert Squadron of the Confederate Air Force, Eagle's Nest Parachute Club, Ector County Pilots Association, Odessa Prop Busters, the Ninety-Nines' Purple Sage Chapter, Road Runner Aviation Inc., Tommy's Jewelry Inc., of Odessa, West Texas Aerobatic Club of the International Aerobatic Club, West Texas Magnum Squadron of Miniature Aircraft Association, and West Texas Flyers.

Mural turns plain brick building into classic Denton diner

By LISA L. ROLLINS

DENTON (AP) — Jim's Diner used to be an ordinary brick building. But the inspiration of artist Shawn Eichman and a few strokes of paint have given it a whole new face.

Ms. Eichman, 22, painted a 40-foot mural of a mid-1930s streamline dining car whose windows' reveal Marilyn Monroe, John Wayne and the Beatles to be among its eternal clientele.

She says she hopes her work will "pay homage to some of the great murals of the past."

"The 'Mona Lisa' originally was in the fourth window," says Ms. Eichman. The window now is occupied by youthful images of Tony Dow and Jerry Mathers, better known as Wally and the Beaver from the "Leave It To Beaver" TV show. "While 'Mona' was still wet, somebody smeared her face and put a mustache on her, But you can see her ghost if you look close enough.

"When I put 'Mona Lisa' up there it was kind of a tribute to Leonardo," Ms. Eichman says, "because he did many of the first and the best murals ever done on the planet Earth; only to see them fall off the walls because the new paint he had invented peeled off and didn't work."

Her mural also features some local Fry Street celebrities such as former Minnesota Vikings center Dennis Swilley, now living in Denton, and Sheldon Newman, a supervisor for North Texas State University's custodial services.

Ms. Eichman, who calls herself a former "dinette (waitress) and baker who snuck in and baked the biscuits in the kitchen under the cover of the stars," said she and Jim Smith, the diner's owner, talked about the mural for over a year before he gave the go-ahead for the project.

The diner she chose to paint is similar to a painting of a dining car by artist John Baeder, "but his doesn't have any people in windows," said Ms. Eichman, a junior at NTSU majoring in painting.

"They used this strange-looking aluminum siding that was scalloped in the old streamline days," she said, pointing out the mural's detailed work, which also includes Special K cereal boxes, milk cartons and a glass display cake dish in its background.

Both Smith and Ms. Eichman decided who would be permanent painted patrons of "Jim's Diner." One of Smith' non-negotiable requirements for the mural was that Ms. Eichman — despite her continued objections — would have a brush with immortality by painting herself in the dining car's third window. In turn, Ms. Eichman's revenge was a painted smiling Smith strategically standing in the mural's doorway.

"I made Jim let me put him in the doorway. And I made a list of people who I thought would be appropriate in the windows, and each group ... represented a different part of society.

"After much debate with Jim, the list was whittled down quite a bit to the Beatles, so I made an alternate list that had Marilyn Monroe sitting with Andy Warhol, but Jim felt that was too modern for the decor because the diner is pretty timeless itself. I mean, you can walk in here 10 years from now and the diner will probably look the same. But we finally came to an agreement on who should be in the windows."

Ms. Eichman, a Brownsville native, said she painted the people in the windows of the dining car in no particular order "but more for composition than anything else."

Aside from the vandal who marred Ms. Eichman's "Mona Lisa," Ms. Eichman was forced to re-paint the Fab Four's Paul McCartney after vandals smeared his painted face before the oil paint dried. She was forced to stay at the mural site three consecutive nights to guard against further vandalism. She also posted a cardboard sign that read: "If you have a problem with me, then take it up with me. If you have a problem with Paul, then see a psychiatrist."

Nonetheless, Ms. Eichman, who also painted the striped exterior of the Fry Street's Zebra Imports, said she has only gotten positive response from the community since the mural's completion in late May.

"The vandals were the only trouble I had and the moral support I had while painting the mural has been worth more than the money," she says. "You measure your work by your friends and it's like music in that if it's never shared with others, it's of no value.

"It's very intimidating to do a mural for historic reasons, because all of the murals throughout history have been with us so long and had such impact," she says. "The most difficult thing about 'Jim's Diner' was making it interesting to the point where you don't see everything up front. This mural is going to be here a long time ... and I want it to work with the people in the community.

"I don't want people to get tired of walking by it each day; I want them to notice something they hadn't been able to notice before and trigger new responses."

Ms. Eichman, who plans to transfer to the San Francisco Art Institute in California this month to complete her studies, said the 8-year-old diner has "a rich history to it."

While she has received numerous offers to paint other murals since completeing "Jim's Diner," which took about 120 hours to finish, she has declined to accept any of them.

"One of the offers was from a barbecue place," said Ms. Eichman, a devout vegetarian, "but I couldn't live with myself if I did a mural of a barbecue scene. I wouldn't want to promote eating animals."

Reagan County Jail escapee has 'disappeared'

From Staff Reports

BIG LAKE — A 31-year-old inmate who slipped through an air conditioning duct at the Reagan County Jail late Wednesday disappeared after he hitched a ride north of Big Lake, officials said today.

"We have no further information at this time," said a secretary for Sheriff Paul Weatherby who declined to give her name. Weatherby was out of town Friday, she said.

Michael Hunter, 31, of Big Lake was last seen by a motorist who gave the fugitive a ride Wednesday night on State Highway 137, the road between Big Lake and Stanton, 20 miles east of Midland, the secretary said.

"He was heading north from Big Lake," she said. "When he escaped, he was wearing white jail coveralls, but when the driver saw him, he was wearing a red and white shirt and cutoff jeans."

Lawmen doubt Hunter has armed himself, she said.

Hunter was scheduled to appear at a parole violation hearing Thursday, and was also scheduled to be tried for burglary.

A Department of Public Safety dispatcher in Midland said today no sightings of Hunter had been reported.

Thursday, a DPS helicopter was used briefly in the search.

Cause of fire at paper plant still investigated

From Staff Reports

The cause of a fire that heavily damaged a paper recycling plant in the city's southwest industrial area late Wednesday is still under investigation, fire officials said today.

Meanwhile, firefighters were called back twice to the the scene at Agri-Empresa Inc., 3100 W. Front St., to extinguish rekindlings of the initial fire, which was reported tapped out after 3 a.m. Thursday.

"The cause of the fire is still under investigation and may be for some time," Fire Marshal Jerry Petree said. Petree said investigators spent all day Thursday at the scene, moving debris and looking for clues to the blaze that about 20 firefighters spent more than six hours battling.

The fire was reported just after 9 p.m. Wednesday, reports said. One firefighter suffered a minor leg injury at the scene.

Agri-Empresa is a wholesale oilfield chemical company that purchases paper to use in drilling mud.

The fire was the second reported at the plant in two years, fire officials said.

In 1985, a fire broke out in a trash compartment outside the building, damaging several bales of scrap paper.

Police identify possible suspect in auto burglary

From Staff Reports

Midland police are investigating several burglaries, including two burglaries of unlocked vehicles, according to reports.

Police have identified a possible suspect in the burglary of a 1979 Chevrolet Camaro which was parked in the 2100 block of N. H Street. Two stereo speakers valued at $300 and a stereo amplifier valued at $500 were stolen, reports said. Damage to the vehicle was estimated at $900.

The car, which was unlocked, was parked in front of a residence at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday, and the items were found missing Thursday at 8:30 a.m., police said.

Police Roundup

An AM-FM cassette player valued at $150 and garden hose valued at $105 was stolen from an unlocked 1982 Ford pickup truck Thursday, police reports said. The burglary occurred between midnight and 6 a.m., while the truck was parked in the 900 block of South Dallas Street, reports said.

In other reports, a 12-gauge shotgun valued at $1,000 was reported stolen from a residence in the 4200 block of Ferncliff Avenue. Reports said the burglary occurred between May 1 and Thursday.

Execution date set for Houston man

HOUSTON (AP) — A man who admitted terrorizing more than 100 families during late-night burglaries has been scheduled to die for killing a man during one of the burglaries.

An Aug. 20 execution date was set Tuesday for convicted killer Herman Robert Clark.

Clark, 40, was sentenced by a jury to die by injection for the April 4, 1981, fatal shooting of bartender Joseph Edward McClain.

Congressman getting rush of pro-North phone calls

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Jack Fields' office spent much of the day fending off irate callers who thought they were talking to Iran-Contra committee House counsel John W. Nields Jr., who has been grilling Lt. Col. Oliver North.

"These people would call the Capitol Hill operator and ask for Congressman Nields — they think he is a congressman but he's not — and the operator transfers them to us, thinking they said Fields," said Bryan Wirwicz, Fields' press secretary.

Wirwicz said Fields' office received between 15 and 20 angry phone calls Thursday from people who in no uncertain terms denounced the way North is being questioned about the Iran-Contra scandal.

Out-of-state teachers must take regular tests

AUSTIN (AP) — Hundreds of teachers from other states who got Texas teaching jobs last year with one-year certificates must take the regular teacher tests to keep their jobs, the Texas Education Agency said Thursday.

A special Examination for the Certification of Educators in Texas, or ExCET, will be held July 18, the TEA said.

The agency said the registration deadline was extended and the July 18 date set for teachers with one-year certificates who were unable to take the test earlier.

Youth kills self in front of playmate

IRVING (AP) — An 8-year-old boy who had asked a 6-year-old friend to play war with real guns, fatally shot himself after the other child refused, police said.

"We can't say right now it was a suicide or an accidental shooting. We're working it right now as an accidental shooting," Lt. Kim Roe said today.

He said the boy apparently had found a rifle and a shotgun and was playing with them Thursday morning.

"The 8-year-old asked him (his 6-year-old friend) to play war with real guns," Roe said.

MISD

A preferred provider organization offers participating employees incentives for using its member doctors, hospitals and pharmacies, but doesn't penalize them if they choose not to.

In the case of the PHP proposal made to MISD, an employee would pay no deductible for medical or hospital care if he chose to stay at Midland Memorial Hospital, Glenwood Psychiatric Hospital or Clearview Hospital, said a PHP director, Frank Kell Cahoon this morning.

In addition, the employee would pay no deductible if he chose to use one of the PHP's 38 physicians.

MISD would pay the PHP doctor no more than 80 percent of a national average for any services he rendered.

PHP-participating pharmacies would charge no more than $4 a prescription, Cahoon added.

However, if an MISD employee chose to receive services from a non-participating doctor or hospital, such as Midland's Physicians & Surgeons Hospital, he would pay a 20 percent deductible for services.

Holt, who also is the executive director of the PHP, said self-insurance is a national trend stemming from the high costs of medical care.

"If you checked the Fortune 500 list of top companies, you would find most of them are self-insured," Holt said.

MISD sent notices out to its employees alerting them to the forthcoming increase, Furgeson said.

"We told them if they needed medical treatment, they'd better do it now."

RICHARD MINZENMAYER

Larval form of June beetles can severely damage grass

Minzenmayer

The white grub is the larval form of an insect commonly known as the May or June beetle. Almost 100 species live in Texas and one of them, Phyllophaga crinita, feeds ravenously on grass roots. Severely damaged grass can be lifted easily by hand or rolled off of the ground.

Phyllophaga crinita requires 1 year to complete its life cycle in most sections of Texas (a 2-year cycle is suspected in a portion of the grub populatons in North Texas). Once a year adult beetles emerge from the soil to mate. Mated females tunnel into the earth and lay eggs, which give rise to small larvae (first instar or stage). These, in turn, result in larger second and third instar larvae that feed ravenously on grass roots.

Lawns suspected of harboring grubs should be examined during the critical treatment period (July 10-15). Check the lawns by taking several small plug samples or cores. The plugs should be at least 3 to 4 inches in diameter and 4 inches in depth. Examine a total area of at least 1 to 2 square feet. Take the plugs from all parts of the lawn, being careful to include areas of suspected grub damage. Tear the plugs apart and thoroughly examine them for grubs. Treatment usually is justified when more than four grubs per square foot are found.

Unnecessary insecticide applications often create more problems than they solve. These applications destroy organisms which help decompose thatch. The resulting accumulation of thatch may lead to other problems. It provides a haven for disease organisms and pest insects and leads to shallow root growth. Shallow root growth in turn makes the grass more susceptible to drought stress. A heavy thatch layer also reduces water movement into the soil as well as soil aeriation. A thatch layer in excess of one-half inch creates a barrier for the movement of fertilizers and insecticides into the soil. Recent research shows several insecticides are both physically and chemically bonded to the organic matter in thatch.

Insecticides recommended for grub control are much less effective against eggs and large grubs than against small grubs. The residual effectiveness of these insecticides is greatly reduced 1 to 3 weeks following application. Thus, insecticides applied too early may not be effective in the soil after the eggs hatch. Insecticides applied after the critical treatment period often prove ineffective because grubs have become large and very difficult to kill.

Use inseticdes containing Diazinon, Dursban R, or Oftanol R. If the grubs are definitely restricted to one area of the lawn, treat the infested area only.

Proper application procedure is important. The key to control is getting the chemical to the grubs in the root zone at the proper time. Granular formulations are easier to apply and can be accurately and quickly applied with a lawn fertilizer spreader. Immediately follow granular applications with a thorough lawn sprinkling or watering (one-half to one inch of water.)

Do not use fertilizer-insecticide combinations any time other than the critical treatment period. Applications at other times may contribute to additional insecticide resistance in the populations.

Field work on schedule in some areas, 'on hold' in others

AGRICULTURE

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Hot, open summer weather over much of Texas this week permitted producers in central and southern areas to get back on schedule with their field work.

But storms in the plains and rains in some eastern areas put agricultural activities "on hold" again.

Another severe hail storm swept through Lamb, Bailey and portions of Lubbock County on Tuesday, adding to the damages created last week when hail sharply damaged the South Plains cotton crop in more than six counties, said Dr. Zerle L. Carpenter, director of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System.

In areas that escaped the continuing hail and wind damage in top portions of the state, cotton and other crops are continuing to make rapid progress. The wheat harvest is winding down in those areas as weather permits, with many yields lower than average due to late spring freezes and other weather-related problems.

Baling of coastal and sorghum hay is active across the state as weather conditions permit, although some cut hay needs sunshine for drying before it can be baled, Carpenter noted.

In the Rio Grande Valley and a few other southern areas, the harvest of early sorghum is moving rapidly under hot, cloudless skies. Corn also is maturing on schedule and cotton is setting bolls — with some bolls opening — to signal the start soon of the cotton harvest in a number of areas.

The extremely hot, daytime temperatures are a major concern for poultry producers of the state, Carpenter said. In anticipation of even hotter temperatures ahead, cooling systems are being readied for use.

As the weather heats up, home gardens are starting to produce less in dryland areas although irrigated gardens continue to produce good yields. Farmers markets are active across the state, with a good variety of vegetable and melon crops being offered, said Carpenter.

Boosted by early June rains, ranges and pastures in many areas are providing abundant grazing for livestock, which continue in good condition. Most marketing continues normal for this time of the year. Hornflies continue to be a problem for cattle, Carpenter noted.

West Texas producers are gearing up to begin shearing goats in early August.

District Extension directors reported the following conditions:

PANHANDLE: Wheat harvest winding down after many delays caused by wet fields. Corn, sorghum, cotton and peanut crops making excellent progress and sugar beets are making good growth. The onion and potato harvests are getting under way.

SOUTH PLAINS: Another severe hail storm swept through Lamb, Bailey and Lubbock Counties July 7, adding to woes from last week's storm that sharply damaged the area's cotton crop. In areas escaping the hail damage, cotton and other crops are progressing.

ROLLING PLAINS: The wheat harvest is virtually over with lower yields than expected earlier due to late spring freezes. Boll weevil and grasshopper populations are increasing. Recent rains have boosted ranges and pastures, and cattle are in good condition.

NORTH CENTRAL: Spraying for cotton insects continues, and baling of both coastal and sorghum hay is active as weather permits. Peaches are being harvested in Clay County. Corn is in excellent condition. Kaufman County reports about 30 bushels of wheat per acre being harvested as season winds down.

NORTHEAST: Some wheat is lodging (falling over) due to weather conditions, as the harvest draws to a close. Corn, sorghum and cotton are in good condition, although boll weevils are becoming a problem in some areas. Most farmers markets have an abundant supply of produce. Stock ponds and lakes of the area are quite full.

FAR WEST: Some hail, strong winds and up to 2 inches of rain reported in part of the district. Livestock and ranges continue in better than average condition. Home gardens, other vegetable crops and pecans are progressing.

WEST CENTRAL: A few isolated areas reported up to 4 inches of rain this past week, with 1 to 2 inches more common over the district. Producers are gearing up to start shearing goats early in August. The cotton crop, which got off to a late start, is improving and home gardens and pecans are doing well.

CENTRAL: Corn is maturing rapidly and sorghum is ripening, but midge populations are increasing in grain. Cotton insects, particularly boll weevils and bollworms, are showing up in more fields. Earlier peanuts are making good growth and most late peanuts have been planted.

SOUTHWEST: Strong, hot winds are depleting top soil moisture and causing some young crops to wilt under hot, daytime temperatures. Harvesting of cantaloupes, watermelons and hay continues, and most producers are completing planting of fall peanuts. Ranges and most livestock are in good condition.

Use of ethanol defended

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Louisiana's agriculture commissioner accused "several major gas companies" Tuesday of endangering a $37 million subsidy now paid by the state to people who produce ethanol, the gasoline additive whose supporters say enhances engine performance.

Ethanol proponents managed to defeat a recent legislative move to repeal the subsidy and also got lawmakers to approve a bill reducing the size of labels affixed to pumps which dispense gasoline containing ethanol.

Farm groups support ethanol because corn and other crops are used to make it, but some oil companies and others maintain ethanol-enriched gasoline can damage car and truck engines.

On Tuesday, Agriculture Secretary Robert Odom encouraged the use of ethanol in a speech before about 1,000 people attending the Louisiana Farm Bureau Federation's 65th annual convention.

"All the negative information put out by several major gas companies afraid of losing part of their market is just a smoke screen," said Odom. "I burn it in all my personal cars and have never had a moment's trouble.

"As the fuel of the future, the ethanol program means a lot for the Louisiana farmer as we continue our search for new crops with which to diversify our agricultural base," he said.

In a report to convention delegates, Odom also said his department scored major coups during the recently adjourned regular legislative session.

He said the determination of what the state owns and where it is located will produce a timber cutting management plan and more timber-harvest money for the state treasury.

A&M conference to address beef questions

Kiker

Where is the beef cattle industry headed in the next few years? How do consumers perceive beef products? And, what part will cattle producers and feedlot operators play in enhancing beef's image and turning beef per capita consumption around? These are only a few of the questions that will be addressed at the 1987 Texas A&M University Beef Industry Conference titled "Beef: Gearing up for the 1990s," to be held Aug. 10-11 at the Rudder Center Theater on the A&M campus.

Cattlemen are concerned and possibly confused as to the direction beef cattle production is headed. We've all heard about the latest issues, such as lean beef and packer specifications, should leaner beef be produced, how it affects the herd and should a branded beef program be started. These are questions cattle producers often ask and a few of the questions that will be addressed at the conference.

The first day's events will deal with analyzing the current problems facing the beef cattle industry. Amy Barr, associate director of the Good Housekeeping Institute; Dr. Robert Olson, M.D., Stony Brook Health Sciences Center in New York; and Dr. Janice Neville, president-elect of the American Diabetic Association, will discuss where beef fits into the American diet and what the industry might do to make beef more nutritionally appropriate.

Later that day, Dr. Russell Cross from Texas A&M, will talk about branded beef and Dr. Darrell Wilkes of the National Cattlemen's Association will discuss the beef/food safety issue.

Jo Ann Smith, Cattlemen's Beef Promotion and Research Board, and past-president of NCA, will be the Aug. 10 keynote speaker. She will discuss "Beef Promotion: Is It Working?"

The second day of the conference will deal with "Producing and Marketing Cattle to Fit Industry Needs." Speakers include Dr. Rod Bowling from Monfort, discussing hot fat trimming and its effect on cattle pricing; Dennis Farley of Friona Industries, an integrated approach to cattle production; Dr. Dell Allen, Kansas State University and Dr. Bill Mies, TAMU, packer live cattle specifications; and Wilkes and Dr. Steve Hammack, beef cattle specialist with the Texas Agriculural Extension Service, breed utilization and herd improvement.

For more information, call the Midland Extension Office at 687-1351. Early registration must be postmarked by Aug. 1. The conference hotel will be the College Station Hilton.

Fewer but larger dairy farms in the U.S.

New technologies in the dairy industry have boosted productivity. In 1955, the annual milk yield per cow was 5,842 pounds. By 1986, average yields had risen to more than 13,000 pounds. In 1955, the average herd size was 8 cows per farm and 2.8 million farms had cows — by 1986, herd size had risen to 42, but only 260,000 farms had cows. Although the number of dairy cattle has declined significantly, the total milk produced has continued to rise.

Hay crop wiped out by drought

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Northern Wisconsin's worst drought in 50 years has stunted the growth of pasture hay, threatening the livelihood of hundreds of dairy farmers.

"We're looking at about $8.5 million worth of destroyed hay," Burnett County agriculture agent Russell Kiecker said Monday. "This is the worst drought we've had since the 1930s, farmers tell me."

The Department of Agriculture, Trade and Consumer Protection has made 14 emergency recommendations to Gov. Tommy G. Thompson, including providing hay, department economist Richard Rodefeld said.

Jim Soyer, the governor's press secretary, said Thompson was out of town, but was expected back Tuesday.

Rodefeld said the recommendations include how to determine which farms need assistance, how to round up hay donations and how to distribute it.

He said a study committee that visited the area and developed the recommendations last week determined Burnett County may have only half the hay its farms need until spring.

Kiecker said the county's estimated 300 dairy farmers depend on hay to feed about 6,000 dairy cattle for a large part of the year.

They have received only two to four inches of rain since January, and the winter's snowfall also was light, he said.

Kiecker and Milo Olson, an agriculture agent in neighboring Polk County, said a number of farmers have talked about reducing their herds.

"We're in tough shape up here," Olson said. "Our first hay crop was 60 (percent) to 75 percent below normal, and our second crop is zero. It's only ankle high and brown. We have nothing in the pastures."

Olson said Polk County, which has 740 dairy farmers and an estimated 30,000 dairy cattle, has had less than an inch of rain each of the past four months.

"The last drought, in 1976, was nothing compared to this," Olson said.

In Washburn County, Robert Rand, superintendent of a University of Wisconsin Agriculture Research Station, said "the pastures are absolutely brown."

Wheat crop may be smallest in 17 years

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — With nearly all of Oklahoma's 1987 wheat crop harvested, experts say it is apparent that repeated onslaughts by heavy rains, hard freezes and drought have combined to produce the smallest state crop in 17 years.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture won't release July 1 crop estimates until the end of the week, but most officials think the Oklahoma wheat crop will be lower than the June 1 estimate of 129.6 million bushels, it was reported Monday.

The harvest will compare unfavorably with the 191 million bushels produced three years ago and the 165 million bushels and 151 million bushels produced during the past two years. The 1970 crop was 101 million bushels.

"It probably is going to be in the range of 120 million bushels," Candace Shaw, executive director of the Oklahoma Wheat Growers Association, told The Tulsa Tribune.

With 95 percent of the state's wheat crop harvested, the toll of heavy rains and flooding last fall, a hard freeze, drought and more rains and flooding this spring have produced the smallest yields since 1970 in most areas.

Meanwhile, record production is expected in Kansas, Texas and Nebraska, further depressing wheat prices.

Closing cash price at central Oklahoma elevators Thursday was $2.27 per bushel. On May 11, the price was $2.81 per bushel at 10 Oklahoma terminals.

HISD faces losing its accreditation

By LAURA TOLLEY

HOUSTON (AP) — The Texas Education Agency has warned the state's largest school district that it could lose accreditation unless it fixes problems ranging from low morale to instructional shortcomings.

The TEA put the Houston Independent School District on "accredited, advised" status Thursday and given until spring 1988 to meet TEA standards.

The agency's four accreditation standards are accredited, accredited-advised, accredited-warned and unaccredited. An unaccredited school does not get state money.

A 230-page agency report prepared during a routine, periodic accreditation study cited problems in several areas including facilities, administration and student achievement.

"Analysis of student achievement reveals a serious gap in the achievement status of minority student populations when compared to majority students," a TEA memo about the report said.

"While there are a number of outstanding campuses, 41 percent of the campuses in Houston are either in the lower 5 percent or 25 percent category" in the state, the memo said.

STATE

The district has 195,000 students with 16.9 percent being white, 37.5 percent Hispanic, 42.5 percent black, 3 percent Asian and 0.1 percent American Indian.

The memo also said most of the problems did not occur overnight, but took some time to develop.

HISD Superintendent Joan Raymond said she was distressed the district's accreditation rating was lowered, but added she intended to work on the problems and avoid any further reduction.

"It's an advisory notice and I am going to take heed of such advice," said Ms. Raymond, who succeeded longtime superintendent Bill Reagan last year.

She said she believed the most serious claims in the report involved the inequity of educational opportunities in the district.

"I certainly have been trying to address that," she added. "The allocation of (educational) resources has been a matter of concern to me for some time."

The report also said continuous controversy between the district's board of trustees and Ms. Raymond "is causing low morale among district staff, teachers and students."

Ms. Raymond said the report's comments on controversy between the board and superintendent also concerned her, but she said the disharmony was more a part of the past than the future.

Copies of the report were distributed to school board members, and Ms. Raymond said she expects it to be discussed at the board's next meeting July 17.

HISD Board President Cathy Mincberg said the report, in many cases, is accurate.

"Clearly there are some problems which must be addressed," she said. "There is some misunderstanding on the part of the board as to its role. That's not a problem that's new. The board is going to have to get some information on what its appropriate role is and try to reorganize itself."

The report cited many recommendations including developing an educational plan with short- and long-range goals and objectives, and allowing campus principals and their staffs to develop local campus plans. It also said board members should cease contacting campus principals for information and should not serve in administrative roles.

"The school district is going to do everything and anything required of it" to get back its accreditation status, Ms. Raymond said.

Deadlines for making improvements vary from fall 1987 to fall 1988, with periodic progress reports. The TEA plans a follow-up visit in the spring of 1988 at which time the accreditation status will be reviewed.

The TEA has never had to withdraw its accreditation from a Texas school district, agency spokeswoman Terri Moore said. Some small districts voluntarily operated without accreditation.

Four-year-old Sean Stuber of Corpus Christi finds refreshment on a hot summer day in the wading pool and fountain at a local city park. Temperatures in South Texas remained consistently in the mid to upper nineties recently.

Corpus Christ school desegregation case may be dismissed

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — The Corpus Christi Independent School District will be in court next month for review, and possibly dismissal, of its 19-year-old desegregation case, a hearing that has some school board members on edge.

U.S. District Judge Hayden Head Jr. ordered the review for August 7 "to determine if that (desegregation) goal has been successful and whether this case may now be closed."

Head said no one requested the hearing, and that he ordered it simply because "that case has been on the docket for a long time."

The school board's four minority members said Thursday they oppose closing the case because they fear the board would again begin neglecting schools on the city's west side.

"I think if the case is closed, the district would no longer feel any obligation to desegregate its schools or to have any special programs for the west side schools, including maintenance and renovation," said board president Arturo Medina. "We've not done anything to indicate that we would do it on our own."

Medina said there is no pressure from downtown administrators "to correct the inequities against hispanics or blacks."

The case of Cisneros et al vs. Corpus Christi ISD began July 22, 1968, when several Hispanics and blacks filed a suit charging that the district operated a segregated system.

In 1971, the district was ordered to establish a desegregation plan. Since then, the order has gone through several changes, the last one a consent decree of 1982.

That agreement set up special programs at minority target schools, established special-emphasis programs at schools with high numbers of low achievers and maintained a transfer policy that allowed minority students to attend schools not in their neighborhood, but without forced busing.

Trustees Roland Rodriguez and T. Theresa Rasco agreed with Medina, saying that if the court order were removed, the district's west side schools would start to regress.

Rodriguez predicted that "efforts to dismantle what has been done" would be made gradually without the ruling.

Ms. Rasco said that despite improvements, not all Corpus Christi schools provide quality programs.

"In some schools we still do not offer an equal education," she said. "I think the improvements that have been made are simply because we are under a court order. I don't feel that we have that commitment from all the board."

The Rev. Elliott Grant, the only black board member, also said the district has "a few more steps to make toward making all of our schools equal in every way."

Pat Kirkwood, 59, a self-employed land appraiser in Granbury, says he has received up to 3,000 calls since spring 1986 wrongly linking him to satanic cults simply because the last three digits of his phone number are 666, a biblical symbol of the Antichrist.

Man's '666' phone number problematic

GRANBURY (AP) — A man bedeviled with thousands of nasty calls because his telephone number ends in "666" says it has gotten so bad that he won't even let his wife play his answering machine tape.

Pat Kirkwood said he has received up to 3,000 calls since spring 1986 wrongly linking him to satanic cults simply because the last three digits of his phone number are a biblical symbol of the Antichrist.

"I can't let my wife run the (answering machine) tape. It's 30 minutes of obscenities," said Kirkwood, 59.

Last month, he filed a $2 million lawsuit against seven Granbury residents following an investigation by the phone company, which traced several dozen calls to the community southwest of Fort Worth.

"I've gotten calls saying I'm a satanic psychotic," said Kirkwood, a self-employed land appraiser who moved from Fort Worth to rural Granbury to escape the troubles of urban life.

"Hey, I'm an instrument-rated pilot and a deep-sea fisherman. I haven't got time for satanic worship," he said.

Other callers have threatened his family with sexual assault and death, he said. But he doesn't want to change the number because his home-based business might suffer and it would cost him $2,500 to tell customers of a new number.

"They're effectively running (the Kirkwoods) out of town," Quentin McGown, the family's Fort Worth attorney, said of the callers. "The phone rings one call after another. I've never heard such language.

"They make all these statements about devil worship. I can't imagine someone in the 20th century making those statements."

A New Testament reference links the number 666 to "the beast," or Antichrist. The 13th chapter in the Book of Revelation notes that "the beast" will be marked with the number.

Some Granbury residents believe the callers are children, but Kirkwood said at least 20 percent of the calls are from fanatically religious adults. The rest, he said, are youngsters.

"In the name of religion, people will do anything," said Kirkwood.

A defendant in the suit blamed Kirkwood's problems on youngsters and said he isn't involved.

Trade talks troubled; Common Market prospects jeopardized

TORONTO (AP) — Negotiations on a free-trade agreement between Canada and the United States have run into trouble over Canada's insistence on immunity from retaliatory measures.

As a result, prospects for creation of a Common Market-like arrangement in North America could be in jeopardy.

The United States and Canada form the world's biggest two-nation trading partnership.

After 14 months of talks and up against an Oct. 4 congressional deadline, Canadian and U.S. negotiators say they are still far apart on major issues.

Those include Canada's protective barriers on investment, especially in the "cultural sovereignty" areas of entertainment and publishing.

But the biggest sticking point is Prime Minister Brian Mulroney's demand for a dispute settlement mechanism that would be binding on both parties and that would prevent imposition of punitive duties and other unilateral actions.

U.S.-Canada trade was worth $130 billion last year, with more than 20 percent of U.S. exports going to Canada and 78 percent of Canadian exports going the other way. Four-fifths of the trade is duty free, but there are many quotas and non-tariff barriers affecting products from beer to TV ads.

The idea of free trade with the United States has split Canadians for a century. While business, big and small, generally favors the concept, labor unions and cultural organizations do not.

WORLD

The Roman Catholic bishops of Canada warned that free trade could flood the nation with U.S. pop culture.

Mulroney argues that without the protection of a binding procedure to solve disputes, a free-trade pact would have little meaning.

The two nations haggled for much of 1986 over U.S. charges that Canadian softwood lumber was unfairly subsidized, resulting in a 15-percent surcharge being imposed on the product.

In Washington on Wednesday, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Tex., who chairs the Finance Committee, told a Canadian delegation that Mulroney's demand was completely unacceptable. A similar message came in a letter from President Reagan last month.

Mulroney told Parliament on June 30 that it was "inconsistent" for Reagan to seek comprehensive free-trade with Canada while retaining "the capacity for triggering unilateral reprisals."

But after a Cabinet meeting Thursday in Edmonton, the prime minister said: "I'm not disheartened or concerned by the statements by U.S. senators."

Reagan gave the free-trade talks low priority after Mulroney proposed them in 1985, but stepped up his support this year in hopes an agreement would serve as a model to U.S. trading partners around the world.

Mulroney briefed the premiers of Canada's 10 provinces this week on progress at the negotiating table, and most reacted favorably. But two said they could not accept any pact lacking a binding mechanism for resolving disputes.

David Peterson of Ontario, the wealthiest and most populous province in Canada, said: "If I had to make a decision on the basis of what I heard, no way would I support an agreement."

Washington has been concerned from the start that Mulroney might have trouble persuading the provinces to accept an accord, especially since his Progressive Conservative Party is struggling in the polls.

Opposition Liberal Party leader John Turner called on the government Thursday to abandon the talks, set to resume Monday, before "an unprecedented loss of Canadian sovereignty over economic and political decision-making."

Relief groups ordered to leave southern Sudan

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Sudanese rebels warned relief organizations Thursday to get out of southern Sudan, where armed men abducted three Americans and a Briton two days earlier.

"We are not sure whether we captured these four, but if we have it's a warning for agencies working in southern Sudan to leave," Sudanese People's Liberation Army spokesman Maj. Deng Alor said in a telephone interview from his office in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia.

"It's a war zone," he said. "We cannot guarantee their lives."

Deng said the Sudanese rebels told relief agencies several months ago to leave the southern Sudan, where the rebels have been fighting since 1983.

"It's true we have some troops in the area, but up to now we don't have any comment," he said. "We are trying to get some comment from the field."

Armed men calling themselves rebels abducted the four from their homes in the southern Sudanese town of Mundri early Tuesday, said Dan Bitrus, head of the Association of Christian Resource Organizations Serving Sudan.

Three of those abducted, two American teachers and a British nurse, worked for ACROSS, a relief, rehabilitation and development consortium of Christian missions that has been working in Sudan since 1972, Bitrus said. The fourth was an American Episcopal priest.

"We do not know where they were taken to," Bitrus said. "There is a report that some expatriates were seen in a town called Bari, about six miles from Mundri. We are trying to check it out, but otherwise there is nothing new."

Bitrus said eight other Westerners working for ACROSS in Mundri were moved to Maridi, about 100 miles away, because of fears for their safety after Tuesday's abductions.

Mundri is about 740 miles southwest of Khartoum, the capital of Sudan.

Bitrus identified the abducted as Steve Anderson, who was born in Minneapolis, Minn.; but whose passport was issued in Seattle, Wash.; Katherine Taylor, 32, who was born in Johnson City, Tenn., but whose passport was issued in New Orleans, La; Mark Nikkel, an Episcopal priest from Reedley, California; and 29-year-old British nurse, Heather Sinclair.

Nikkel, Anderson and Miss Taylor were teachers at the Bishop Gwynne College in Mundri, which is run by the Episcopal Church of the Sudan.

The rebels, led by renegade Col. John Garang, took up arms against the Moslem-dominated Sudanese government in 1983. They are demanding greater autonomy for the predominantly Christian south.

South Korean party leader resigns

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — President Chun Doo-hwan today resigned as head of the governing party and said sweeping democratic reforms are "liquidating a shameful legacy."

Chun, a former army general who agreed to the reforms July 1 after weeks of unabating protest, retains the presidency of the South Korea until February. He announced his resignation as president of the Democratic Justice Party during a party meeting here.

The announcement came a day after more than a million people turned out in Seoul and the southwestern city of Kwangju to mourn a university student who died of wounds inflicted by police during an anti-government demonstration.

Since its founding in 1948, South Korea has been led by authoritarian rulers and has not had a peaceful transfer of power.

Kim Young-sam, head of the opposition Reunification Democratic Party, welcomed Chun's resignation, but called on the president to form a neutral caretaker Cabinet to ensure fair elections in the coming months.

Meanwhile, the Education Ministry announced today that about 600 students expelled in connection with anti-government protests would be allowed to return to school in September if university officials approve.

The ministry also said about 100 teachers dismissed from their jobs for political reasons could be reinstated if local school boards accept them.

In a 15 minute speech to the party leadership, Chun said he was giving up his party post to devote himself completely to his duties as president.

"A new epoch of democracy is being ushered in," Chun said. "We are now liquidating a shameful legacy of the past and are opening a new chapter of democratic development and national harmony."

A new party president was not named immediately, but it was considered certain the post would go to Roh Tae-woo, the current party chairman. Roh is also the party's presidential nominee.

Chun had handpicked Roh, another retired general, to succeed him. Roh's election had been virtually assured under the electoral college Chun agreed to scrap as part of his concessions to the opposition.

Direct presidential elections are to be held later this year.

Thursday's crowd in Seoul was estimated at one million people, one of the biggest protest gatherings in South Korea's history. Violence erupted and police dispersed demonstrators with tear gas in the center of the capital as cries of "down with the military dictatorship" again were raised.

About 200,000 people jammed the streets of Kwangju when the motorcade bearing the body of the student, Lee Han-yul, arrived there from Seoul for burial in his hometown. Only minor clashes with police were reported.

Police said rallies and demonstrations protesting Lee's death had taken place in 23 other cities as well Thursday. They said 11 police stations were attacked, 26 policemen injured and two police vehicles burned in the protests.

Lee, who died Sunday, had been struck in the head by a tear gas canister during last month's demonstrations.

Often violent anti-government demonstrations raged for 18 straight days in June. They subsided after Roh presented the party with an eight-point package for political change that conceded to the opposition virtually everything it had demanded during months of bitter confrontation.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Train cars washed into river, more than 50 die

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — A six-foot wall of water swept two cars of a passenger train into a river in south India on Thursday and killed at least 53 people, railway officials said.

Fourteen cars of the 18-car Dakshin Express, or South Express, were derailed and two were swept into the Gangaeragadi River, swollen from torrential monsoon rains, the government's All India Radio reported.

The radio said there were injuries among the passengers, but the number was not known.

The flash flood occurred near the town of Kazipet in Andhra Pradesh state at about 4:30 a.m., when most passengers aboard the train to New Delhi were believed to be sleeping.

The area is about 90 miles northwest of Hyderabad, the state capital. The train had left Secunderabad, the twin city of Hyderabad, at 9:35 p.m. Wednesday.

United News of India said 53 bodies had been recovered and rescue workers were looking for more victims. The six identified victims included four women and a 12-year-old boy.

The government radio said 63 people were believed aboard one of the sunken, second-class passenger cars, but the total number missing from the two cars was not known.

Hijacker's brother charged

KARLSRUHE, West Germany (AP) — An older brother of accused TWA hijack suspect Mohammed Ali Hamadi was charged with kidnapping two West Germans held hostage in Beirut, the chief federal prosecutor said Thursday.

Ali Abbas Hamadi, 28, was charged Wednesday with planning and taking part in the kidnapping of businessmen Rudolf Cordes and Alfred Schmidt in an attempt to blackmail the Bonn government into releasing his younger brother, said federal prosecutor Kurt Rebmann.

Mohammed Ali Hamadi, 23, is suspected of taking part in the June 1985 hijacking of a TWA airliner to Beirut during which a U.S. Navy diver was killed.

Bonn recently turned down a U.S. request for his extradition, out of concern for the lives of Cordes and Schmidt. Bonn said he would be tried in West Germany instead on murder and kidnapping charges, which still have not been filed.

The brothers are in West German jails. Mohammed Ali Hamadi was arrested on Jan. 13 at Frankfurt airport when he was caught carrying liquid explosives.

His older brother, a naturalized West German citizen, was arrested Jan. 26 at the same airport. He was returning from Lebanon, where Cordes and Schmidt had been kidnapped a few days earlier.

Roadblock part of protest

JERUSALEM (AP) — A town mayor on Thursday dispatched heavy vehicles and blocked Israel's busy coastal road to protest a government vow to return to Druse villagers land they had fought for with knives and chains.

The roadblock by two trucks and a tractor sent by Eli Landau, mayor of Herzliya, 10 miles north of Tel Aviv, lasted 45 minutes, Israel television reported.

Landau, a member of the right-wing Likud Bloc, said he was protesting the government's agreement Wednesday to hand back 3,000 acres of land to Druse Moslem villagers from Beit Jann in the Galilee district of northern Israel.

"You damage jeeps, attack policemen and then shake hands," Landau complained.

On Tuesday, Beit Jann villagers clashed with police and nature reserve rangers who tried to remove an illegal tent settlement the villagers had set up on the disputed land, which is part of the Mount Meron nature reserve.

Pianist gets exit visa

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet pianist Vladimir Feltsman said Thursday he was granted an exit visa after an eight-year wait, and expressed both joy and pain over his pending departure.

"It took us so many years," the 35-year-old Jewish composer and concert pianist said in a telephone interview. "But finally, the game is over."

Feltsman, whose public performances were abruptly halted when he applied to leave in 1979, said he received exit visas for himself, his wife Anna, 35, and their 4-year-old son Daniel to leave the Soviet Union before Aug. 9.

"I want to live in New York, and I am looking forward to being able to play in other places," he said.

"At the same time," Feltsman added, "I am leaving my country, which I love. I hope I will have the opportunity to return to see my parents and play before a Moscow audience."

On April 21, Feltsman was permitted to give his first public concert in Moscow since applying to emigrate.

Since 1979, he had been permitted to play only in smaller Soviet cities and at Spaso House, the U.S. Ambassador's official residence in Moscow.

Navy retires its first supersonic jet fighter

WASHINGTON (AP) — One of the U.S. Navy's most famous airplanes of the postwar era — one that John Glenn used to set a transcontinental speed record and that he calls "an old friend" — has joined the illustrious roll of great aircraft of the past.

The F-8 Crusader, the Navy's first supersonic jet fighter, served for 31 years as both a fighter and a photo reconnaissance plane. Recently, in formal ceremonies at Andrews Air Force Base outside Washington, the last five Crusaders on active duty as Light Photographic Squadron 206 were formally put out to pasture.

No one was more sentimental about the occasion than Glenn, the former U.S. Marine pilot and astronaut and now U.S. senator from Ohio.

"I loved that plane and it was pretty good to me, too," said Glenn. "Although it always is painful to see an old friend retire, at least we know the F-8 paved the way for new generations of supersonic fighters to keep our strength in the skies. But to me it will always seem that when you're out of F-8s, you're out of fighters."

The first F-8, which achieved supersonic speed on its maiden test flight at Edwards Air Force Base in California on March 25, 1955, now is the property of the Smithsonian Air and Space Museum here. All told, the LTV Aircraft Products Group of Dallas produced 1,261 of the fighters between 1953 and the final rollout in 1965.

Glenn, then a major in the U.S. Marines and still years from his career as an astronaut, was the pilot of the first supersonic transcontinental flight on July 16, 1957, when he flew his F-8 Crusader from Los Angeles to New York in a stunning three hours, 23 minutes, 8.4 seconds.

Other historic accomplishments by the F-8:

— It played a major role in the Cuban missile crisis in 1962, obtaining many of the photographs which gave President John F. Kennedy proof of the construction of missile sites in Cuba.

— It set a world speed record of 1,015 miles per hour over a 15-kilometer course at China Lake, Calif., in 1956, winning the Thompson Trophy for the most outstanding aviation accomplishment of that year.

— It won for the Navy and LTV the Collier Trophy in recognition of its unique concept, design and development as the first carrier-based fighter plane capable of speeds exceeding 1,000 mph.

— It made the first ocean-to-ocean transcontinental flight between aircraft carriers, winning the first Certificate of Merit ever awarded by the Navy's Bureau of Aeronautics.

The F-8 was produced in various models, including several foreign versions. Even after its retirement by the U.S. Navy, it is still being used as a military aircraft by the French Navy and by the Philippines.

The program that resulted in the F-8 began in the days after the Korean War when the Navy in 1952 sought production of a new fighter plane with speed exceeding Mach 1 (the speed of sound), rugged structure, folding wings, resistance to open-sea weather, with simplicity of maintenance and handling characteristics.

Crusaders were armed with four 20-mm guns and early models had a rocket-pod with 32 rockets. The Sidewinder missile became the plane's primary aerial weapon, but it also carried Bullpup and Zuni missiles and could carry conventional bombs and other ordnance for close air support or air interdiction missions.

The F-8 served as a first-line fighter for 20 years for the Navy. During that time, 446 were returned to the Dallas plant for upgrading, including 25 F-8Hs converted for the Philippines and 42 F-8Es modified for the French Navy.

Third son graduates from Air Force Academy

BIG SPRING, Texas (AP) — Bret Crenwelge enters active duty in the Air Force July 14 — 32 years to the day that his father, retired Lt. Col. Joe Crenwelge, did in 1955.

Crenwelge recently became the third son in the Big Spring family to graduate from the U.S. Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs.

"It's very unusual to have all three of them," Bill Madsen, public affairs officer at the academy, said of the brother-graduates. "It's the first time in my experience. I've been here 20 years."

Bret Crenwelge was sworn in as a second lieutenant this month by his father, after being graduated from the academy May 27 with a bachelor of science degree. His first assignment is close to home — a year of jet pilot training at Reese Air Force Base in Lubbock.

Capt. Wayne E. Crenwelge, nine years his senior, stationed at Howard Air Base in Panama with the 24th Composite Wing. Capt. Kevin D. Crenwelge, five years older that Bret, is a C-130H navigator in the 773 Tactical Airlift Squadron at Dyess Air Force Base in Abilene.

Their father, Joe Crenwelge, says, "I guess the boys just naturally took a liking to what was going on," when he was in the Air Force. He says he encouraged them to participate in the Boy Scouts — all three were Eagle Scouts — extracurricular school activities and leadership positions.

"All my sons intend to make the military their total career," said Crenwelge, who entered the Air Force through the Texas A&M ROTC program.

Wayne Crenwelge said his father was in the Air Force 22 years, part of the time stationed at Webb Air Force Base in Big Spring.

"We grew up in that atmosphere," Wayne said. "We all decided we liked it." Patriotism and serving the country were stressed in his family, he said.

Wayne said he decided the attend the Air Force Academy in his junior year of high school when a friend decided to go, and his brothers followed in his footsteps, he says. Wayne graduated from the academy in 1978 and Kevin in 1982.

Between 10,000 and 15,000 students apply for admission annually to the Air Force Academy, Wayne said, and about 1,000 are accepted to keep the enrollment at the government-established maximum of 4,400.

Bret planned to attend the academy all through high school, participating in activities with that goal in mind, Wayne said, adding that the planning helped his younger brother to be better prepared for the challenges of the academy.

Joe Crenwelge, a pilot instructor in his years in the Air Force, says his newest officer-son passed the academy flying programs with no problems, but adds "it's going to be extremely tough" to complete pilot training.

Hebbronville aliens investigation complete

LAREDO (AP) — Federal authorities dropped their investigation after learning that an irate migrant — not a smuggler — was responsible for locking 19 illegal aliens inside a steamy rail-borne tractor-trailer.

U.S. Border Patrol officials had pledged an extensive probe into the incident that nearly mirrored one in West Texas last week when a railroad boxcar became a tomb for 18 illegal aliens trying to sneak across the state.

But Thursday, officials learned from the aliens inside the trailer that another alien grew angry at not being allowed inside and locked the door on his compatriots' hiding place, Border Patrol spokesman J.J. Fulgham.

"They were messing with the door, and there was talk that the immigration was coming," said one of the men, Pedro Palma Bustamante, 23, of the central Mexican state of Guanajuato. "Then someone on the outside locked the door."

"And that's when I got scared," said Juan Mexican, another of the group.

But some of the men were more afraid of getting caught, and they clashed over whether to call for help.

"On the one hand, I wanted to be rescued, but I was disillusioned that I was not going to make it to Houston," said Palma, who added that some thought they could survive in the trailer until it reached Alice, about an hour east of Hebbronville.

U.S. Border Patrol officers discovered the men Wednesday while checking cars on the Texas-Mexican Railway train in Hebbronville, about 60 miles east of Laredo.

The men were semiconscious and had stripped off some of their clothes, said authorities, who estimated it was 120 degrees inside the trailer that attaches to tractor-trailer trucks and was perched on a flatbed railroad car.

Fulgham said Thursday that U.S. authorities have nothing more to investigate and that the 19 men were deported to Nuevo Leon.

It was the fifth recent incident in which aliens were found trapped in trains or trucks as they tried to sneak across the border from Mexico. On July 2, 18 were found dead in a locked boxcar in the West Texas town of Sierra Blanca. One man survived.

Eighty-eight aliens were found Wednesday inside a sealed tractor-trailer rig in San Clemente, Calif., and 53 aliens were found in a tractor-trailer Tuesday in San Diego.

In addition, the Laredo Times reported today that border patrol agents in Cotulla, Texas, discovered three illegal aliens unconscious in a railroad box car Monday. The three men were hosed down, fed and deported.

The Cotulla incident was not reported earlier because of communication problems between headquaters and field offices of the Border Patrol, the Times said.

At first, immigration officials believed all of the incidents involved smuggling operations.

But Mexicano and Bustamante, said it was only by coincidence that the 19 were together in the Laredo incident. They said they paid no one to smuggle them across the border.

Palma said the men boarded the train in Laredo and rode in the shade under the trailer for about 20 miles.

As they approached Hebbronville, home of a Border Patrol unit, they got worried about being caught. The ranching community of 4,000 is a traditional cross-through point for illegal aliens heading north.

"That is where immigration is going to get us," Palma said in Spanish, speaking through an interpreter. "This is where we've got to hide."

The 19 climbed into the aluminum-clad trailer. Because it was crowded, someone held the door and blocked other aliens from getting inside, he said. That's when the door was locked.

He said the group knew about the 18 Mexicans who died in the boxcar and began to fear for their lives. Fulgham said the men, who ranged in age from 16 to 33, had been in the trailer about four hours.

Remark of talk show host stirs Hispanics to anger

DALLAS (AP) — A radio talk show host has been reprimanded after saying on the air that 18 illegal aliens who suffocated in a boxcar "got what they deserved."

David Gold's comment on KLIF-AM last week prompted hundreds of angry calls, some asking for his dismissal. And a Hispanic group has questions about the Dallas radio station's minority employment and programming.

Dan Halyburton, station vice president and general manager, said Gold's comment was wrong and insensitive, "and I am very sorry that he said it. David is sorry he said it; there have been multiple apologies."

Gold, contacted Thursday night by The Associated Press, would say only that "the apology has been made and the whole thing is behind us."

The Dallas-Fort Worth Network of Hispanic Communicators said it planned to send a letter to the station protesting Gold's comments Friday and urging that he be taken off the air.

"We further will be asking for the station to make some changes and making suggestions that will avoid a recurrence of something like this," said Ernie Sotomayor, a member of the group and associate editor of the Dallas Times Herald.

"We will be asking about the numbers of minorities they have in professional and managerial positions at KLIF and the amount of programming dealing with minority issues in the community," Sotomayor said.

Halyburton said Gold would not be fired and that some of the calls received by the station acknowledged the apologies and urged it to move forward.

On his afternoon show Friday, Gold said: "I know I'm going to really stir it up again...but you know the 18 illegal aliens tragically killed in a railroad car? That's a tragic thing. But I don't know if your mind works like mine, but those people got what they deserved. ...I have no sympathy for people trying to get in this country illegally."

The next day on his program, Gold said, "If I offended anyone yesterday by the things that I said about this tragedy on the railroad car outside of El Paso, I do apologize."

U.S. Border Patrol officials in Sierra Blanca found the 18 aliens Thursday in a locked boxcar, where temperatures had reached nearly 130 degrees. One man survived by punching a hole in the bottom of the boxcar, bound for the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

"The radio station is committed always and will continue to present many different points of view about problems of people in Mexico: why they risk their lives to come across the border, the enforcement of laws in the U.S. and what happens to them (aliens) when they come across the border," Halyburton said.

STATE IN BRIEF

Marijuana-loaded plane intercepted by customs

HOUSTON (AP) — Charges are pending against a man who allegedly piloted a plane carrying an estimated 700 pounds of marijuana, a U.S. Customs spokesman says.

The private Cessna 310 was intercepted and landed about 3:30 p.m. Thursday at an airport north of Austin, said Charles Conroy, customs spokesman in Houston.

About 700 pounds of marijuana from Mexico worth an estimated $240,000 was confiscated from the plane and the 44-year-old pilot was arrested, Conroy said.

A customs plane with radar equipment helped track the private plane, which left San Antonio about 6 a.m. Thursday and headed for Mexico.

Several planes were involved in following the plane in Texas, but only one craft landed immediately after the private plane touched down Thursday afternoon, Conroy said.

Ex-Safeway workers paid

DALLAS (AP) — More than 6,000 union members who lost their jobs when Safeway closed its North Texas division will begin receiving severance checks next week in a payout worth more than $10 million, officials said.

The United Food and Commercial Workers will distribute the checks in person instead of by mail so that former employees can complete questionnaires to be used for obtaining federal money for job retraining programs, said Al Zack, union spokesman.

In all, 8,598 Safeway workers lost their jobs when the division closed in April.

Safeway last month reached an agreement with the union to pay up to eight weeks' salary, based on length of service, to full-time employees who had worked with the company at least a year.

Former Dallas store employees will be paid on July 14-16 at the Plumbers and Steamfitters Local 100 hall in Garland. Fort Worth employees can pick up checks July 14 and 15 at the United Auto Workers Local 218 hall in Hurst, officials said.

The union will then begin payments to employees in Tyler, Mount Pleasant, Corsicana, Abilene, San Angelo, Big Spring, Sherman, Wichita Falls and Mineral Wells. Payouts are scheduled to be completed by July 17.

Clerk cited in explosion

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A convenience store clerk was cited after he sold gasoline in a plastic container that exploded when its owner tried to light a cigarette.

The 41-year-old clerk, whose name was not released, faces a maximum $1,000 fine for the misdemeanor violation of the city fire code — the first such citation in at least three years, said fire Capt. Jesse Sanchez.

Edward Gonzales, 13, remained in fair condition at Medical Center Hospital with second-degree burns over 25 percent of his body after the Wednesday afternoon accident, officials said.

The boy was sitting in a car with the opened 1-gallon antifreeze jug between his legs when he tried to light a cigarette and ignited gasoline fumes lingering near the container, Sanchez said.

He was waiting in the car with a friend while his brother, 18-year-old Gabriel Gonzales, went to a home asking residents if they wanted them to mow their lawn.

The elder Gonzales may have saved his brother's life by pulling him from the burning car and rolling him on the ground to extinguish the flames on the youth's abdomen, arms and part of this face.

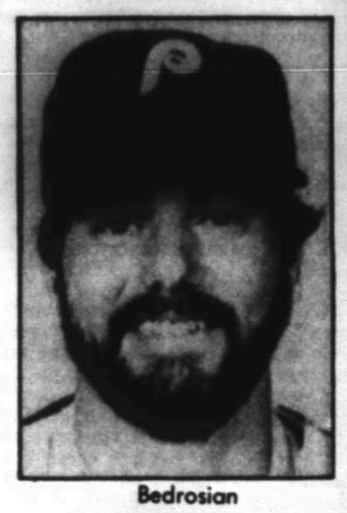
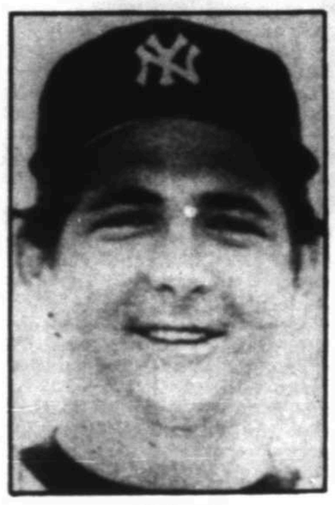
Managers select All-Star pitchers



Bedrosian



Righetti

NEW YORK (AP) — Steve Bedrosian began the season hoping to duplicate his strong showing of 1986. The Philadelphia Phillies reliever has done even more — he ranks No. 1 in saves, has set a major-league record and earned his first trip to the All-Star Game.

Bedrosian was named to the eight-man National League pitching staff Thursday as the remainder of the team was selected.

"I thought I could make it, but I was taking a low profile because something might happen and I wouldn't make it," Bedrosian said. "I didn't want to be disappointed."

Bedrosian leads the majors with 23 saves. He got 13 of them in 13 straight appearances, which established a record, and he has a 3-2 record and a 2.89 earned run average.

New York Mets Manager Davey Johnson and NL President A. Bartlett Giamatti picked two other relievers, Lee Smith of Chicago and John Franco of Cincinnati.

CHICAGO'S RICK Sutcliffe, who leads the NL with an 11-4 record, and Houston's Mike Scott, who is 10-4, head the starting staff. Also chosen were Sid Fernandez of New York, Orel Hershiser of Los Angeles and Pittsburgh's Rick Reuschel, who leads the league with a 2.32 ERA.

Johnson is expected to name his starter for the 58th All-Star Game on Monday. The game will be played Tuesday in Oakland. Scott and Sutcliffe appear to be the most likely candidates for the assignment.

"It hasn't crossed my mind," Sutcliffe said. "It's an honor to be selected but it was not a goal. It's always nice to be respected by your teammates."

Meanwhile, New York Yankee Dave Righetti headed the list of American League pitchers.

"The excitement is more than anything I've ever felt during the regular season," Righetti said. "The atmosphere is absolutely electric. I'm really looking forward to having some fun. There are a lot of guys I know who made the club."

Righetti was one of nine pitchers named Thursday to the American League All-Star team by Boston Red Sox Manager John McNamara.

The staff is keynoted by Bret Saberhagen of Kansas City, who has a 14-3 record, best in the AL. Along with Righetti there are three other left-handers on the team: Bruce Hurst of Boston, Mark Langston of Seattle and reliever Dan Plesac of Milwaukee. The rest of the staff includes right-handers Jack Morris of Detroit and Mike Witt of California and relievers Tom Henke of Toronto and Jay Howell of Oakland.

Righetti played in his first All-Star Game last season, when he set the save record with 46. Righetti pitched his no-hitter on July 4, 1983 when the Yankees were using him as a starter.

Remembering last year's All-Star Game, Righetti said:

"You don't really hear your name when it's announced, because it's so loud and you're so nervous. You look around and you see all these great players, guys you admire, and you want to say 'Hello' but as a pitcher you don't want to get too friendly. You've got to get these guys out sometime down the road."

SABERHAGEN WON the American Cy Young award in 1985 with a 20-6 record, then slumped to 7-12 last year with a sore arm. He was on the disabled list from Aug. 10 to Sept. 1, 1986. This year, Saberhagen has won 14 of his first 17 decisions with a 2.56 ERA.

However, Saberhagen was scheduled to pitch Saturday at Toronto, which would leave Morris to be the AL's starting pitcher in Tuesday night's game at Oakland against the National League All-Stars. Morris so far has a 12-4 record.

"There's no way I should start," Morris has said. "Saberhagen deserves to start. Tell them to change Saberhagen's schedule. Saberhagen is the best pitcher in the league this year. No one is supposed to have a first half like he's had."

McNamara will announce his starting pitcher and batting order at a news conference Monday morning in Oakland.

The NL's outfield reserves include San Diego's Tony Gwynn, who leads the NL with a .374 average. Atlanta's Dale Murphy and Montreal's Tim Raines were selected to appear in their seventh All-Star Games.

Murphy is batting .305 with 25 homers and 59 RBI. Raines is hitting .346.

Los Angeles' Pedro Guerrero, who has 18 homers, St. Louis' Willie McGee and San Francisco's Jeffrey Leonard were also selected for the outfield.

The reserve infielders are Montreal's Tim Wallach and Hubie Brooks, New York's Keith Hernandez and Philadelphia's Juan Samuel.

Atlanta's Ozzie Virgil, with 20 homers, and Cincinnati's Bo Diaz were chosen as backup catchers.

Midland Angel shortstop John Hotchkiss is all business as he guns down a Tulsa runner in the fifth inning Thursday night in the opening game of a 10-day homestand at Angel Stadium. The Angels got off on the right foot with an 8-6 win.

Angels open homestand with win

Harvey guns down former Ranger in ninth for save

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

The sight of former Texas Ranger Bobby Jones at the plate with the tying run in the ninth inning didn't faze Midland Angels reliever Bryan Harvey one bit.

Though Jones, who spent parts of nine seasons in the major leagues and is hitting .323 with five homers as a player-coach for Tulsa, once thrived on such situations, Harvey didn't have a clue.

"I never heard of the guy before," said Harvey after getting Jones to top the ball to second base before recording the third out in Midland's 8-6 win over the Drillers in the Texas League Thursday.

The win kept Midland a slim one-half game ahead of second place El Paso in the second half Western Division race. It was the first game of a 10-game homestand for the Angels against the East Division after the three-day All-Star break.

Harvey, who spent a two-week stint with California earlier this season, isn't likely to be awed by anyone these days, nine-year veterans included.

The hard-throwing Midland reliever has become a main cog in a rock-solid bullpen corps for the Angels after coming around slowly because of arm trouble early in the year. His save Thursday was his seventh, lowering his ERA to a miniscule 2.43. Harvey is unscored upon in his last five appearances.

"I'm beginning to feel a lot more comfortable and throwing a lot more strikes," said Harvey. "In that situation (two runners on and no out), you can't afford to walk anyone. You just have to throw strikes and hope to keep it on the ground for a double play."

Kent Porter/Reporter-Telegram

Midland's Brian Brady
...caught stealing reaction

THOUGH HARVEY didn't coax the double play, he did get three straight outs, saving the game for starter Phil Venturino, 9-2, and got fellow reliever Miguel Garcia off the hook. Garcia came on in the seventh and pitched two solid innings. But in the ninth, two singles sandwiched around a walk put Midland Manager Max Oliveras in a jam.

But Oliveras has come to depend on Harvey, and why not?

"The whole bullpen has done an outstanding job," Oliveras says. "Jones is a tough hitter, I played with him in Puerto Rico. But I'm too old to worry in a situation like that. If he's going to hit it, he's going to hit it."

Jones, now 37, has played regularly this season for the Drillers, but now Tulsa Manager Bill Stearns is opting for a youth movement, relegating Jones to a utility/pinch hitting role.

Against Harvey, he was unable to deliver.

The Angels clung to a lead all night, ever since pounding out a 5-0 lead in the first two innings, but the Drillers kept making it close.

It didn't take long for Midland to reach Tulsa starter Bob Malloy as Stan Holmes stroked a two-run double in the first inning to get the Angels clicking after a three-day layoff.

In the second, John Hotchkiss slammed a solo homer for a 3-0 lead. One out later, Edwin Marquez tripled off the wall in right-center and came home on a single by Bill Geivett. Norm Carrasco moved Geivett to third on a perfectly executed hit-and-run single, and Geivett scored on a passed ball by Tulsa catcher Kurt Beamesderfer.

BUT THE Drillers, who took five of seven games from Arkansas just before the All-Star break, wouldn't give in, scratching to within 5-4 with a big third inning, aided by three unearned runs.

Venturino held the Drillers down long enough for another three-run Midland uprising. Holmes doubled a second time and Joe Redfield followed with a single. Brian Brady brought both home with a double, then scored himself on a fourth straight hit, this one by Hotchkiss.

Tulsa scratched for one more run in the sixth, then all was quiet until the uprising in the ninth.

But the Drillers could pull no closer than two runs. Harvey saw to that.

Foreman stops Odessa's Hostetter

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Former heavyweight champion George Foreman showed more power and less fat in the second fight of his comeback bid Thursday night, decking Odessa's Charlie Hostetter in the first round and knocking him out at 2:01 of the third.

Foreman, 38, immediately said he was ready for a title fight if he can get one.

"I would sign today to fight anyone who's recognized as the champion, and in six months I'll be ready," he said. "But nobody wants to fight George Foreman."

Foreman said he'd prefer to fight Mike Tyson because "I don't like those guys who run. I want to get into a knock-down, drag-out fight so I can really feel like I'm back."

Former light heavyweight champion Archie Moore, who has been helping to train Foreman, said Foreman is a legitimate contender again.

"He's the most powerful man in boxing, strength-wise, and he's moving much better now that he's gotten into good shape."

Foreman, who quit boxing and turned to preaching 10 years ago, drove a right uppercut to Hostetter's heart in the first round. The 30-year-old former Texas heavyweight titleholder sagged to one knee with a sick, pained look on his face.

Hostetter waited until the count of nine to get up, then spent the rest of the round trying to avoid Foreman, 47-2 with 44 knockouts.

Foreman, at 249 pounds nearly 20 pounds lighter than he was in his first comeback fight in March, controlled the second round with stiff left jabs to the head.

He landed a right uppercut and a left that chased Hostetter, 202, across the ring, then connected with a jab and straight right after missing a wild, looping left hook.

Hostetter, with an expression resembling fear, tried to dance away from Foreman but the taller ex-champ and Olympic gold medal winner cut off the ring without wasting much motion and kept his left in Hostetter's face.

Hostetter landed a left and a surprising right in the third, but Foreman responded with a right to the side, a right uppercut to the jaw and a several straight lefts to the face.

Foreman then ended the fight with a left to the head, followed by a hard right uppercut to the cheek that sent Hostetter spinning toward the canvas. As Hostetter was going down, Foreman finished the job with a left to the head.

Hostetter, now 16-5, managed to get up but referee Dave Nelson stopped the fight.

A crowd estimated at 3,700 attended the bout at the Oakland Coliseum Arena.

Unranked and looking for more work after his easy $38,000 pay day, Foreman said he'll take on anyone he can get and wants to be back in the ring in a month.

In March, Foreman stopped Steve Zouski, a slow, overmatched fireman, in the fourth round.

Foreman plodded to victory in that bout, bludgeoning Zouski with punches that lacked crispness. Against Hostetter, Foreman showed a much flatter belly, although he still looked 20 pounds overweight, and he moved more surely.

Dawson to make sure Show regrets face pitch

CHICAGO (AP) — Andre Dawson says he'll make sure Eric Show regrets hitting him in the face with a pitch if given the chance.

On Thursday, Dawson warned the San Diego Padres not to give him that opportunity.

Dawson was hit in the face by a Show pitch in the third inning of Tuesday's game against the Padres. He needed 24 stitches around the mouth and hasn't played since but expects to return to action this weekend.

"It's over and done with," Dawson said. "He (Show) made a statement that he would regret it the rest of his life and if I have anything to do with it I'll make sure he does."

After Dawson was taken to a hospital for X-rays, Show issued a statement of regret and immediately left the ball park. Show said he has never thrown at anybody and apologized to the Cubs, the fans and to Dawson.

"I have my ways," Dawson said when asked about revenge. "I'm the one who had to suffer. When a guy throws up at your head, you have to protect yourself."

The Cubs will be in San Diego for their second road series after the All-Star break, and there's a possibility Show will pitch.

"If they're wise, they won't start him," Dawson said.

"I wanted to get him. I'll be honest with you," said Dawson, who got off the ground about three minutes after he was hit and charged Show.

"If I had gotten him, I don't know what I might have done. I just wanted to get my hands on him. It didn't turn out as bad as it could have been, but I'll see him again. I was just getting back in the groove," Dawson said.

Redbirds threaten to bury NL East

Associated Press

The St. Louis Cardinals are starting to walk away with the National League East.

"That was crazy. Sometimes it seems like we have to be challenged and put in a bad spot before we come back," Willie McGee said after the Cardinals rallied for four runs in the bottom of the 10th inning Thursday night to beat the San Francisco Giants 7-6.

The Cardinals extended their winning streak to eight — their longest since winning 12 in a row in 1982 — and now lead the National League East by 9½ games over Chicago.

St. Louis' rally was fueled by three walks that loaded the bases. McGee hit a two-run double and the Cardinals won it on run-scoring singles by Tony Pena and Jose Oquendo.

"We gave it to them, that's what happened," Giants Manager Roger Craig said. "If you have a three-run lead, the only thing you've got to do is throw strikes. If they hit it out of the park, OK. But don't walk guys."

The host Cardinals tied the score 3-3 on John Morris' two-run homer in the seventh. Then, San Francisco scored three times in the top of the 10th on an RBI grounder by Chris Speier and a two-run single by Jeffrey Leonard.

But Giants reliever Joe Price walked Ozzie Smith and Scott Garrelts walked Terry Pendleton and Jack Clark, loading the bases. McGee doubled with one out before Mike LaCoss struck out pinch-hitter Vince Coleman.

Morris was intentionally walked to reload the bases for Pena, whose infield hit drove home the tying run. Oquendo's opposite-field single to right won it.

"That's what I try to do, hit the ball on a line," Oquendo said. "If they're going to pitch me (outside), I'll take it the other way."

Rick Horton, 4-0, got the final two outs in the top of the 10th for the victory. Garrelts, 6-6, took the loss.

Chili Davis gave the Giants a 2-1 lead in the sixth with his 14th homer of the season and second in two days since being hospitalized because of abdominal pain. Davis added an RBI single in the seventh.

NL Roundup

Astros 4, Mets 3

Bill Doran hit a solo home run with two outs in the bottom of the ninth inning, leading Houston over New York.

Doran's 11th homer of the season spoiled the Mets' two-run rally in the top of the ninth that made it 3-3. Doran connected against Randy Myers, 1-4, and gave the Astros their second earned run in 27⅔ innings.

Houston starter Jim Deshaies took a four-hitter and 3-1 lead into the ninth, but left after Tim Teufel's leadoff single. The Mets then loaded the bases against Dave Smith and tied it on Kevin McReynolds' RBI forceout and Howard Johnson's run-scoring single with two outs.

Smith won his first decision of the season.

Johnson says the Mets are having trouble with one-run games as they are only 16-16 in winning one-run games.

"That's where we used to shine," Johnson said.

Braves 11, Phillies 6

Dale Murphy's grand slam highlighted a six-run sixth inning and led Atlanta over visiting Philadelphia.

Murphy, who drove in five runs, hit his 25th homer of the season. He hit his fourth career slam and first since 1980. Ken Griffey followed with a home run as the Braves overcame a 6-5 deficit.

Mike Schmidt hit a three-run homer in the Phillies' first. It was his 18th of the season and 513th of his career, moving him past Eddie Mathews and Ernie Banks into 11th place on the all-time list.

Jeff Dedmon, 3-3, got the victory. Tom Hume, 1-1, took the loss.

Reds 7, Expos 2

Nick Esasky hit a three-run homer and Tracy Jones and Dave Parker also homered as Cincinnati defeated Montreal.

The host Reds beat Montreal for the eighth straight time since July 24, 1986, including five games this season.

Bill Gullickson, 9-5, gave up two runs on five hits in seven innings. Gullickson, traded by the Expos to Cincinnati after the 1985 season, is 3-0 against his former team.

Esasky hit his 10th homer in the second inning against Neal Heaton, 10-4, breaking a streak of 20 straight scoreless innings by the Expos' staff. Jones hit his 10th homer and Parker hit his 19th in the third.

Cubs-Dodgers

Paul Noce homered and drove in five runs and Keith Moreland and Manny Trillo also hit homers, giving Chicago a 12-5 lead over Los Angeles in a game suspended in the sixth inning because of darkness at Wrigley Field.

The Cubs scored six times in the third against Rick Honeycutt on two-run singles by Noce, Gary Matthews and Mike Brumley. Noce hit a three-run homer in the fourth.

Pedro Guerrero, John Shelby and Franklin Stubbs homered for the Dodgers.

Rick Sutcliffe pitched five innings for Chicago and left with a bruised finger after stopping a grounder by Steve Sax.

The game was to be resumed this afternoon prior to the regularly scheduled game between the two teams.

Nunez comes back to haunt Royals

Associated Press

The Kansas City Royals gave up on rookie pitcher Jose Nunez just this past winter, and are already living to regret it.

Selected out of the Kansas City organzation in the major league draft by Toronto, the 24-year-old right-hander came back to haunt them last Saturday in relief and again in a starting role Thursday night in the Blue Jays' 7-1 victory.

"It's like finding a diamond ring," Blue Jays pitching coach Al Widmar said after watching Nunez strike out 11 batters and give up but six hits in eight innings Thursday night. "People like that are the future of the ballclub."

Nunez could be the right man in the right place for the Blue Jays, who have been desperately trying to find a reliable fifth starter all season.

"He threw strikes with a lot of different pitches," Toronto Manager Jimy Williams said. "We've liked him ever since we drafted him. Along with his arm, the thing we liked is his composure and the fact he likes to take the ball. And his work habits are excellent."

Nunez, 1-0, overcame a shaky start. Willie Wilson opened the game with a triple and Kevin Seitzer followed with a RBI single.

"He was too pumped up for the first two hitters," catcher Charlie Moore said. "He kept checking me off and tried to throw only fastballs. I told him to use all his pitches. When he went to using his curve ball and slider, he threw them great."

Nunez's strikeout total fell one short of the club record set by Pete Vuckovich on June 26, 1977.

Willie Upshaw hit a three-run homer and drove in four runs to back Nunez.

White Sox 6, Yankees 3

Carlton Fisk hit a go-ahead home run in the fourth inning to lead Chicago over New York.

Fisk's two-run homer, his 11th of the season, came after a one-out single by Greg Walker off Yankees starter Bob Tewksbury, 1-4, and gave the White Sox a 2-1 lead. Tewksbury allowed 10 of Chicago's 15 hits and was knocked out in the fifth.

Richard Dotson, 7-5, gave up six hits, struck out three and walked six in 8⅔ innings before needing last-out relief help from Bob James, who gained his 10th save.

Twins 3, Orioles 1

Rookie Les Straker and Jeff Reardon combined on a seven-hitter and Tim Laudner hit a three-run homer as Minnesota defeated Baltimore, handing the Orioles their 32nd loss in 39 games.

The 32-year-old Straker, who spent 10 years in the minors, allowed just six hits in 7⅓ innings before needing relief help in the eighth from Reardon. Straker had allowed only one hit — a leadoff single by Terry Kennedy in the third inning — before Baltimore rallied for a run in the seventh on an RBI single by Eddie Murray.

Indians 10, Rangers 4

Chris Bando cracked two hits, knocked in two runs and scored twice as Cleveland beat Texas and extended its winning streak to a season-high four games. Cory Snyder and Brook Jacoby also hit solo homers for the Indians, who are last in the AL East.

Doug Jones, 3-1, got the victory after taking over for starter Scott Bailes in the fifth inning. Texas starter Jose Guzman, 6-8, held the Indians hitless for the first two innings but was shelled as Cleveland scored three runs in the third and three more in the fourth.

Angels 5, Tigers 2

Jack Howell's sixth-inning homer snapped a 2-2 tie and Don Sutton pitched three-hit ball for seven innings as California beat Detroit for its fifth straight win.

Howell's leadoff home run, his 15th of the season, tagged Jack Morris, 12-4, with the loss, only his second defeat in his last 13 decisions.

Sutton, 6-9, didn't issue a walk and struck out three in gaining his 316th career victory.

Brewers 8, Athletics 3

Chris Bosio struck out a career-high 10 and combined with Mark Clear on a nine-hitter as Milwaukee took an early seven-run lead and coasted over Oakland.

Bosio, 5-2, pitched seven innings, allowing the Athletics seven hits and two runs to earn his second straight victory in only his third start of the year.

Mariners 11, Red Sox 5

Phil Bradley and Alvin Davis hit two homers each, including a pair of two-run jobs in a seven-run seventh inning, and Roy Thomas pitched 4⅔ innings of scoreless relief as Seattle defeated Boston.

Bosworth now courting Seahawks

SEATTLE (AP) — Brian Bosworth's agent says the former Oklahoma All-America linebacker now indicates he would be happy to play for the Seattle Seahawks if the National Football League team's terms are right.

Gary Wichard said Bosworth hit it off with Seahawks Coach Chuck Knox in two recent meetings in Dallas.

Wichard said he expected to receive Seattle's offer next Wednesday from President Mike McCormack, but reiterated he would not negotiate.

He said he was assured by the Seahawks that the team would attempt to trade Bosworth if a satisfactory financial agreement cannot be reached.

Neither Wichard nor McCormack would disclose terms of any proposed contract.

McCormack denied the club discussed a possible trade.

"We've never talked about that, and we're not going to trade him," McCormack said.

Wichard said the Seahawks should move more quickly in submitting a formal offer.

He called Knox "one of the greatest coaches of all time" and said he respected Knox and McCormack, but added: "We're not going to do anything until Brian Bosworth is happy with the situation."

Wichard spoke by telephone from Los Angeles. Bosworth also was in Los Angeles after filming four episodes of an HBO television series.

Wichard said Bosworth could sit out the NFL season and still make big money.

"He could make a living on TV series alone," Wichard said. "Before he was picked in the supplemental draft, he was going to play at Oklahoma for nothing, anyway."

Alford told of bench jockey role

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Steve Alford, who made his reputation as a shooter, has been told he'll likely spend most of his first two years in the NBA on the bench and then become the Dallas Mavericks' backup point guard.

Alford, a two-time All-American who led Indiana to the NCAA championship last spring, was a second-round draft pick by Dallas.

"Steve would do well to look at films of (Boston's Jerry) Sichting and (San Antonio's Jon) Sundvold if he's looking for role models," said Rick Sund, the Mavericks' vice president for basketball operations.

"Those are the kinds of players at least that he should be trying to emulate. Neither one of them are your classic point guards, but they've accepted a kind of hybrid role where they run the offense and still get some shots."

Sund told Len Pasquarelli of the Fort Wayne News-Sentinel that Alford will likely see little playing time his rookie year. He'll play more his second year, but won't see regular action until the 1989-90 season, when he should be prepared to be the backup point guard. Veteran Brad Davis now is the backup to starter Derek Harper.

"Since I'm pretty much convinced that he's accepted this change mentally, I've told Steve he's now got to accept it physically, too," said Sund. "More than anything else, I want him handling the ball. I know he can shoot it.

"Basically, I told him, 'Steve, I don't care where you're playing the YMCA, on a playground, in a pickup game I want you bringing the ball up the floor.' I don't care if he has to steal it from his own teammate, that's what I want him to do."

Under Indiana's motion offense, Alford mostly ran his defender into a bigger body, then popped out for a jump shot. He rarely created his own shots and averaged fewer than five trips a game to the foul line.

As a point guard in the NBA, he'll be expected to create offensive opportunities for the other players on the floor and pass the ball, something he didn't always do well at IU, where he averaged only 3.1 assists a game in four years.

"I honestly think he's been underrated in some ways," said Sund.

"In person, you get so caught up, kind of mesmerized actually, in watching him do the things he does well, like shooting the ball, that you tend not to concentrate on the other aspects of his game. Then, you go home and your perception is that he can't do the other things because you don't remember him doing them.

"I think he's got the potential to make the transition, mostly because he's got a mental toughness about him that's just tremendous."

McVea faces prison

HOUSTON (AP) — A former University of Houston and Kansas City Chiefs football player faces a four-year prison term for violating his probation on a drug offense.

State District Judge George L. Walker on Thursday revoked the eight-year probation of Warren McVea, who tested positive for cocaine a few days after completing a drug rehabilitation program in May.

At the same time, McNamara also named the reserves that will fill out the American League team.

George Brett of Kansas City was selected to be the backup third baseman, behind Boston's Wade Boggs. This will be Brett's 12th consecutive All-Star game, making him the senior member on either squad. Brett's previous 11 All-Star selections were by fan vote.

Dave Winfield of New York, who was elected to start in the outfield, has been selected to 11 All-Star teams.

Rookie Mark McGwire, who led the major leagues with 31 homers at the time of his selection, and Pat Tabler of the Cleveland Indians were selected at first base to play behind Don Mattingly of New York, who was elected in fan balloting to start.

Detroit's Lou Whitaker will back up starter Willie Randolph of New York at second base, and McNamara chose Alan Trammell of Detroit and Tony Fernandez of Toronto to spell Cal Ripken Jr. of Baltimore at shortstop.

Kirby Puckett of Minnesota, Larry Parrish of Texas, Harold Baines of the White Sox and Dwight Evans of Boston were the backup outfielders. The elected starters were George Bell of Toronto, Rickey Henderson of the Yankees and Winfield.

Matt Nokes of Detroit, another rookie, was selected as a reserve catcher. Terry Kennedy of Baltimore was elected to start.

Arnold Palmer stayed in the hunt for the Senior Open title with a shot from the trap on the 18th green. Palmer had a round of 68.

Seniors fight aches, pains

Senior Open

FAIRFIELD, Conn. (AP) — Aches, pains and health concerns of varying degrees are playing an important role in the U.S. Senior Open.

Coming off arthroscopic knee surgery just two weeks ago, little-known Gordon Jones was tied for the lead with Australian Peter Thomson, a five-time British Open winner, after the opening round.

They both shot 5-under 66s Thursday to take a one-stroke lead over former NFL quarterback John Brodie.

Both leaders were one stroke shy of the tournament-record 65 shot by Miller Barber in the final round to win in 1982. Their scored matched defending champion Dale Douglass for the Senior Open's lowest opening-round score.

"I'll crawl up and down the course if I have to," declared the 57-year-old Jones, who hurt his left knee bending over a putt at the Vantage Chrysler Invitational in mid-March. "If I make the cut, I'll finish the tournament."

Chi Chi Rodriguez, Doug Sanders, Larry Mowry and Gene Borek were two strokes off the pace at 68 going into today's second round of the $300,000 tournament.

A group of seven players, including Arnold Palmer and Gary Player, were at 69.

One player who found the going too tough was Charles Owens, 57.

Owens was severely disabled in a parachuting accident in 1952 while serving in the Army at Fort Bragg, N.C., but the United States Golf Association steadfastly declined to bend or change its rules to allow him to play with a golf cart.

Playing in protest of the rule that prohibits the use of carts in championship events, he limped through nine holes and was forced to withdraw when he could no longer climb the steep inclines on the par-71, 6,599-yard Brooklawn Country Club course.

McCumber has fast start

Busch Golf

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — Mark McCumber's biggest fan is himself.

"I have a lot of heart-to-heart talks with myself and tell myself to just play as well as I can and accept what happens," said McCumber who hasn't won in 29 months.

In Thursday's opening round of the $612,000 Anheuser-Busch Golf Classic, the Middleburg, Fla., resident carded two birdies and an eagle on his first three holes en route to a 6-under-par 65 and a share of the lead with Tom Sieckmann.

McCumber, who has four career PGA tour victories but none since the 1985 Doral-Eastern Open, said his pep talks made a difference in his fifth-place finish in last week's Canadian Open and again Thursday.

"I have a short memory," he said. "I need to talk to myself every day, every hole, every shot."

Like McCumber, Sieckmann also got off to a fast start on the 6,776-yard Kingsmill Golf Club course, registering three straight birdies on the front nine.

Joining Streck at that figure were Dave Eichelberger, whose round included a hole-in-one on the 183-yard, par-3 fifth hole; John Cook, Jack Renner and Fred Wadsworth.

John Mahaffey, who won the Anheuser-Busch in 1981, was one shot back at 67, as were Jay Don Blake, Brad Faxon, Gibby Gilbert, Scott Hoch, Kenny Perry and Tim Simpson.

City tourney off, running

From Staff Reports

Eleven men's teams and four women's teams remained in the winner's bracket after Thursday's first round of play in the Midland Softball Association's city playoff tournament.

The tournament runs through Saturday with the championship finals to begin at 4 p.m. Season trophies for league winners will be presented at the conclusion of the tournament, being held at the Bill Williams Softball Complex in Hogan Park.

The men's bracket had 27 entries and 11 of those teams survived first day action without a loss. They are Jumburrito Classics, C.P. Masters, Brothers Production, Sunshine, Stanley's Exxon, Stylerite Awards, New Method Cleaners, Crestview Blue, Young's Auto Glass, Cactus Drilling and W.R. Rental. W.R. Rental was the only one of those teams that didn't have a game on Thursday, drawing a first round bye.

In the women's bracket, Fashion Floors, Texaco, Enron and Equalizers all advanced after the first round of the eight-team women's field. The women's championship finals is scheduled for a 3 p.m. start Saturday.

Action continues today at 7 p.m.

MSA teams head for Dallas

From Staff Reports

Five soccer teams from the Midland Soccer Association are traveling to Dallas this weekend to represent MSA in the Gatorade Classic II tournament.

To qualify for the Gatorade event, each team had to win a major state tournament.

The Midland Raiders, under 14 boys coached by Buster Dickey, won three qualifying tournaments, the Sonic Invitational in Lubbock, Tall City Classic and the Coca-Cola Invitational in Abilene. The team also has two All-District players in Joseph Martinez and Joe Dominquez.

The Silver Bullets, under 16 boys ocached by Gene Blex, won the Sonic Invitational to qualify and has Greg Pepper, an All-District choice, on its team.

The Terrors, under 12 boys coached by Craig Irish, won the Dr. Pepper Open championship in early June and qualified by winning the Sonic Invitational. The Terros won their division at the Gatorade last year.

The Red Strikers, under 10 boys coached by James Little, qualified by placing first in the Tall City Classic last May.

The Pumas, under 19 boys coached by Lyndon and Robin Nutt, won the Luby's Thanksgiving tournament last November to qualify.

The best teams from all over the North Texas State Soccer Association will be in attendance for this tournament. Teams from Dallas, Fort Worth, Abilene, Lubbock, Arlington and Richardson are among the contenders in addition to the five Midland teams.

SATURDAY, JULY 11, 1987

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Your warm feelings for someone may make it difficult for you to do what must be done. Steel yourself! The sooner you make a hard decision about a lingering relationship, the better for all concerned. Fortune smiles on you just when you begin to feel that all is lost. Have confidence in your ability to come out on top. You have more going for you than you realize!

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Yul Brynner, actor Tab Hunter, President John Quincy Adams, writer E.B. White, soap actress Susan Seaforth, baseball's Mike Fuentes.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Get outdoors this weekend and you will have great fun. You may be drawn into the spotlight during the social hours. Refuse to even consider a speculative venture until next week.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Learn how to appeal to the imagination of someone special. You could find the ideal living arrangement at a price you can afford. Be realistic. Avoid promising more than you can deliver.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): It is time to bring order out of chaos. Some home repairs will make your life much more comfortable. Plan leisure activities you can enjoy with relatives of all ages. Mend a quarrel.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your feelings about another family member are right on the button. Do not become a disruptive force at a social gathering. You take great pleasure in reading an old classic. Share your thoughts.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Become the entertainer you have always wanted to be. Let the child in you come out at a family get-together. Sports keep you in shape. Take advantage of a clothing sale.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Making your move now would be premature. Use the weekend to get a better grasp of everything that is going on. Consider the emotional effects as well as the financial outcome.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): An educational opportunity will give you the chance to boost your earning power. Devote more attention to the other areas of your life. Your optimism is contagious! Your conscientious efforts will be rewarded.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You can accomplish a lot today if you decide to stay home and work. Keep out of other people's way as much as possible. Later today, go shopping for a prestige-enhancing item.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A more profitable period lies just ahead. Do everything possible to reduce personal spending. Entertaining at home is a pleasant but inexpensive way to enjoy the evening. Keep the guest list small and select.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): The weekend seems made for travel. If you are on vacation, take an interesting side trip. Romance is in the air, adding a bit of excitement to this special day. Be receptive.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your plans could set off some fireworks at home. Adopt a calm approach and talk out any differences of opinion. Jealousy could be at the root of someone's opposition. Avoid extravagance.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Postpone shopping and financial transactions. Unless you say exactly what you mean, you could confuse someone close to you. Your patience begins to pay off in meaningful ways. Others support your views.

Opening lead: Three of ♠

In tournament bridge, the expert is the hunter and his prey is the inexperienced player who permits him to make a trick or two more than he should. So we are delighted to report that once in a while the victim refuses to go quietly, and even fights back.

When this hand occurred in a recent pair championship, the contract was invariably three no trump, making with two overtricks. At one table, however, the bidding got away from a pair of relative novices, who landed in four spades on their 4-3 fit on the auction shown. North did not know what to do with his good hand that lacked a diamond stopper, so he settled for a jump raise with only three-card support. The result was a somewhat inelegant contract that received very elegant play.

Declarer won the opening club lead in hand and successfully finessed the queen of spades. After cashing the ace, declarer left two trumps outstanding and went after hearts. He was delighted when he could set up that suit with but a single ruff.

The play proceeded as if declarer could see all the cards. He cashed the ace-king of diamonds and ruffed a diamond in dummy. Then he continued with the king-queen of clubs, and East had to follow suit helplessly.

Dummy was now down to nothing but two good hearts, East held the J-7 of trumps while declarer had the nine of trumps and a losing diamond. The defenders had not yet taken a trick, and when declarer led a heart from dummy, they were destined to win only one. Whether East ruffed high or low, declarer's nine of trumps was certain to become a trick "en passant," and making 12 tricks was an absolute top score for North-South.

Holm fights to keep Collins' house

Holm

LOS ANGELES (AP) — In a dramatic scene worthy of the best "Dynasty" episode, the estranged husband of actress Joan Collins pledged to open fire if anyone tried to evict him today from the home the couple once shared.

Peter Holm, a onetime Swedish rock star embroiled in a bitter divorce with Miss Collins, said in a telephone interview Thursday night: "Anybody who tries to force entry here will be shot. There's going to be a battle here."

Miss Collins and Holm have been in court several times in the past six months over use of the house, and reporters and photographers gathered outside the home in anticipation of more real-life drama.

Holm, who is seeking $80,000 a month in alimony from Miss Collins, has a December 1986 court order allowing him to use the house, but must vacate the house as soon as the sale is closed.

GATLINBURG, Tenn. (AP) — Jim and Tammy Bakker's imminent move here has inflamed local "letters to the editor" columns, and editorial page chiefs said Thursday that opinions are running 3-to-1 against the former PTL evangelists.

Some writers have defended Bakker as a successful minister who succumbed to temptation and has repented, while critics have compared the couple to deposed Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos and his wife, Imelda.

Meanwhile, PTL Chairman Jerry Falwell said Thursday that past PTL contributors will be treated fairly and equitably when the television ministry submits its reorganization plan to a federal bankruptcy judge.

The Bakkers are spending $300,000 to renovate a $148,000 home in Gatlinburg and plan to live there permanently. It was not clear when they would move their belongings from the Tega Cay, S.C., parsonage that PTL has asked them to relinquish.

LONDON (AP) — Johnny Carson reports he and his fourth wife, Alexis Maas, are enjoying their honeymoon, and he joked that his earlier marriages were merely tune-ups for the real thing.

"I've just been practicing," Carson said Thursday at Heathrow Airport as he and his 35-year-old-bride, a stockbroker, were leaving for Nice, France. "I've found the right girl, I guess. I hope so anyway."

The 61-year-old host of NBC's "Tonight Show" married Miss Maas last month.

"We're enjoying our honeymoon very much and having a good time," Carson said. "We've been here for Wimbledon — I wouldn't miss that for the world."

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nancy Reagan will travel to Maine for the marriage of her only niece and will present her with a family heirloom bracelet as a wedding present, the White House announces.

Anne Mumford Davis, the daughter of Mrs. Reagan's stepbrother, neurosurgeon Richard Davis, will to marry Jon Milton Peterson of Fairfax, Va., on Saturday, spokeswoman Elaine Crispen said.

Quakers called as state justices, jailed

Associated Press

1787 Constitution Daybook

Tuesday, July 10, 1787

PHILADELPHIA TODAY

On this warm, sunny day, the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania summoned two Quakers to serve as jurors. Since the Quaker faith prohibited taking oaths, the two men disqualified themselves from service. The chief justice refused to accept their position and fined them 61 pounds each and sent them to jail until they paid the penalty. The two Quakers challenged the decision with a writ of habeus corpus, questioning whether the judge had the authority to impose the fine and commit them to jail for nonpayment.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

Again Congress did not have enough states to make a quorum.

Massachusetts lobbyist Manasseh Cutler met with the committee of Congress continuing his negotiations to purchase land for the Ohio Company. At the same time the committee was drafting the Northwest Ordinance, which would establish a system of government for the area northwest of the Ohio River. During his stay in New York, Cutler had developed a strong rapport with the committee members, and he reported that he had looked at a draft of the ordinance and submitted his remarks and proposed amendments to the committee.

Cutler would leave for Philadelphia the next day, but before his departure, he described his final dinner with several members of Congress. In addition to a tasty meal, he sampled not less than 10 varieties of wine, as well as "bottles of cyder, porter, and several other kinds of strong beer."

CONVENTION TODAY

The delegates continued their discussion of representation in the House, focusing on the number of congressmen that would be elected from each state. The Committee of Eleven, appointed the previous day, recommended increasing the number of representatives from 56 to 65. Several counter-proposals suggested different numbers, but each motion was defeated.

During the course of the debate, James Madison of Virginia moved that the number of representatives should be doubled. He argued that the majority of a simple quorum of 65 members was too small to represent and vote for all the inhabitants of the United States. Although several members agreed with Madison, the body voted 9 to 2 to leave the number of congressmen at 65 members.

DELEGATES TODAY

In a letter to Alexander Hamilton, who had returned to New York, George Washington expressed his frustration with the Convention's lack of progress and with those who hesitated to create a strong national government. "I almost despair of seeing a favourable issue to the proceedings of our Convention, and do therefore repent having had any agency in the business."

Later that day he dined with his host, Robert Morris. That evening went to the Southwark Opera House just south of the city limits to attend a James Townley play, "High Life Below the Stairs."

LOOKING BACK
State Sumptuary Laws

Pennsylvania's sumptuary laws reflected the prevailing belief of the era that the conduct of the individual in his community had a direct impact on the public welfare.

After the War for Independence, the theater was banned in Pennsylvania as "unbecoming republican virtue and frugality." Nevertheless, until the state repealed its sumptuary law in 1789, plays often were disguised as lectures or moral dialogues. "Hamlet," for instance, was advertised as "a Moral and Instructive Tale called Filial Piety: Exemplified in the History of the Prince of Denmark."

The play George Washington attended on this day was advertised as a "concert" with the title "The Servants Hall in an Uproar." (Incidentally, the Southwark Opera House actually was a theater.)

Dollar rebounds

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar rose against all major foreign currencies except the Canadian dollar in early European trading today, bolstered by news that Japan's trade surplus shrank in June. Gold bullion prices were slightly lower in quiet trading.

In Tokyo, the dollar rose to a closing 150.95 yen from Thursday's 149.90 yen, its highest level in three months. Later, in London, it was quoted fractionally higher at 151.00 yen.

Other dollar rates at mid-morning, compared with late Thursday's rates:

—1.8440 West German marks, up from 1.8375

—1.5395 Swiss francs, up from 1.5315

—6.1445 French francs, up from 6.1265

—2.0763 Dutch guilders, up from 2.0690

—1,334.25 Italian lire, up from 1,331.50

—1.3215 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3235

In London, the dollar rose against the British pound. It cost $1.6118 to buy one pound, cheaper than $1.6172 on Thursday.

GOLD

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $444.50 a troy ounce and at mid-morning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $444.25. Both were lower than Thursday's late bid of $445.00.

In Zurich, the bid price was $444.25 at noon, down from $444.50 late Thursday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell 59 cents to close at a bid $445.24.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $7.65 a troy ounce, unchanged from Thursday's late bid.

Feared inflation spiral not sustained in June

By TOM RAUM
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wholesale prices rose a modest 0.2 percent in June, with a moderation in food price increases partially offsetting fresh gains in energy costs, the government reported today.

For the first six months of 1987, inflation at the wholesale level was running at an annual rate of 4.5 percent, the steepest rise for a half-year period since late 1982. For all of last year, prices fell 2.5 percent.

Today's report, however, appeared to underscore contentions by analysts that inflation shows little likelihood of spiraling this year.

Indeed, subtracting the effects of volatile energy and food prices, the inflation index rose a minuscule 0.1 percent after falling 0.2 percent in May.

As for June, gasoline prices one step short of the retail level were up 3.0 percent, reversing the May decline of 1.1 percent. Some analysts expect those prices to continue to rise in the coming months.

Food prices were up 0.5 percent, but that followed a 1.4 percent rise in May. While vegetable prices gained 17.9 percent, the cost of beef and veal rose just 1.3 percent. Poultry prices fell 6.2 percent.

Overall, the Labor Department's Producer Price Index for June, down from a May increase of 0.3 percent, was equivalent to an annual rate of inflation of 2.9 percent. Last month's gain was the smallest for one month since a 0.1 percent jump in February.

Wholesale prices, as a rule, show more volatility from month to month than do consumer prices — which appear to be leveling off for the year at just under 5 percent after gaining 1.1 percent in 1986.

As for other areas, the department offered these other specifics on June wholesale price activity:

- Home heating oil priece rose 4.6 percent while natural gas prices were off 1.8 percent.
- New automobile prices were down 0.1 percent, their second monthly decrease.
- Prices for women's clothing gained 0.7 percent, for men's clothing, 0.1 percent, and for children's, 1.4 percent.
- Capital Equipment prices held steady.

The index for all products listed in the Producer Price Index for finished goods increased to 296.8 for June versus 288.9 one year before and 100 for the base year of 1967. That means that a selection of products costing $10 in 1967 cost $28.89 in June 1986 and $29.68 last month.

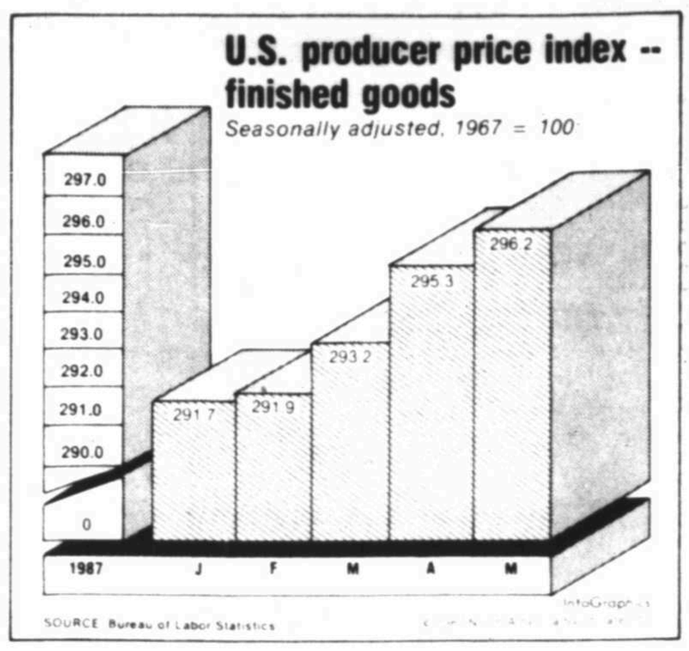
The overall index number is not seasonally adjusted, as are other calculations in the monthly report.

The Producer Price index had risen 0.6 percent in January, 0.1 percent in February, 0.4 percent in March, 0.7 percent in April, and 0.3 percent in May.

Sharply rising oil prices, still rebounding for last year's collapse in world petroleum prices, and a falling dollar earlier this year — which in recent months has showed some stability — had given rise to fears among economists that inflation was resurging.

But, in recent months, energy price rises have tapered off and the dollar has appeared to stabilize on foreign exchange markets, lessening widespead fears of resurging inflation. A declining dollar makes imports more expensive, contributing directly to inflation.

Please see INFLATION, Page 8C



The pace of increases in the Producer Price Index slowed during June, allaying some fear of the advent of spiraling inflation.

Suburban Dallas bank nation's 99th failure

RED OAK, Texas (AP) — After breaking two months ago the record for number of bank closings in one year, the state continues to see a growing number of failed banks.

Banking regulators declared Red Oak State Bank insolvent Thursday and announced its acquisition by a holding company. It was the 34th bank closing in Texas and 99th nationwide this year.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. approved assumption of the failed bank by The Red Oak State Bank, a newly-chartered subsidiary of ROSB Bancorp Inc. in Red Oak, said FDIC spokeswoman Julie Amberson.

The failed bank had total assets of about $40.5 million, and was closed by State Banking Commissioner Kenneth Littlefield. The FDIC was named receiver.

Depositors of the failed bank automatically will become customers of the assuming bank, subject to approval by the appropriate court.

"Liberal lending practices of a former bank executive, coupled with inadequate loan administrations and board supervision, resulted in loan losses substantially impairing the bank's capital funds," said Littlefield.

He said the majority of the losses stemmed from loans on commercial and real estate to borrowers in the bank's trade area.

The Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas announced approval of the application of ROSB Bancorp to become a bank holding company through the acquisition of Red Oak State Bank of Red Oak, a suburban city south of Dallas.

The Red Oak State Bank will assume about $37.7 million in 8,300 deposit accounts and will purchase $33.1 million of the failed bank's assets at a discount of $6.3 million. The FDIC will retain approximately $7.4 million of the failed bank's loans, Ms. Amberson said.

Senate adds layoff notice requirement to trade bill

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Despite the threat of a veto and the loss of business backing, the Senate on Thursday approved an amendment to the trade bill that would require 60 days' advance notice to employees and local communities of plant closings and mass layoffs.

But hours later the Senate, in two voice votes, approved amendments that would restore much of the presidential discretion in import relief decisions it had taken away Tuesday.

The acceptance of the plant-closing provison, which is backed by organized labor but opposed by business, could seriously jeopardize the chances for passage of a trade bill this year unless it is dropped in conference with the House.

The reversal on import relief, however, could negate another serious veto threat from the White House if it survives in the conference with the House.

Approval of the plant-closing provision came on a 60-40 vote that defeated an amendment to strike the provision from the bill. The Senate had approved the provision tentatively Wednesday after its Democratic sponsors significantly eased it to attract support.

With the vote, six leading business organizations said they would withdraw their support for the entire thousand-page bill. These organizations — including the United States Chamber of Commerce, the Business Roundtable and the National Association of Manufacturers — have been part of the crucial core support for trade legislation and were willing to back Congress on other provisions the administration opposes.

The president's trade representative, Clayton K. Yeutter, said, "There's no chance whatsoever of the president signing a bill that includes the language of the Senate bill as it now exists."

It is not clear whether the House will accept the plant-closing provision. A sponsor of the proposal, Sen. Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, said, "I don't have much doubt the House will accept this provision." But aides to the House Ways and Means Committee chairman, Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., said the conferees from the House were expected to resist the plant-closing amendment.

Democratic leaders in the Senate hope to have a final vote on the trade bill by the end of the week. But they got bogged down Thursday afternoon on an unrelated amendment aimed at blocking the administration's plan to provide protection for Kuwaiti tankers in the Persian Gulf.

Weather, holiday buoy June retailing

By JOYCE M. ROSENBERG
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Warm weather and the Father's Day holiday contributed to strong sales of apparel and generally favorable overall results, the nation's largest general retailers reported today.

Monroe Greenstein, a retail industry analyst with Bear Stearns & Co., said retailers had their strongest results in clothing lines, as consumers bought warm weather apparel. Sales of hard lines, including appliances and televisions, were soft.

The nation's largest retailer, Sears Roebuck & Co., reported its June sales rose 4.5 percent when compared with June 1986 figures, and sales for the 22 weeks ended July 4 were up 3.9 percent from the same period a year earlier.

K mart Corp. said its sales rose 6.5 percent in June and 8.4 percent in the 22-week period. Same-store sales, representing sales for stores open at least a year, rose 2.8 percent in June and 4 percent in the 22 weeks.

J.C. Penney Co. Inc. said its June sales rose 2.4 percent and its year-to-date sales were up 4.6 percent.

F.W. Woolworth Co. said its June sales rose 6 percent, while its sales for the cumulative 22 weeks were up 6.2 percent.

Wal-Mart Stores Inc. said its sales for June were up 34 percent and for the first five months of the year, 36 percent. The rapidly growing chain said same-store sales rose 12 percent in June and during the five-month period.

Montgomery Ward & Co. said its sales rose 7.5 percent in June and in the first 22 weeks of the year.

Dayton Hudson Corp. reported June sales were up 13.5 percent and year-to-date sales rose 13.6 percent. Same-store sales rose 3.7 percent in June and in the 22-weeks period.

Some stores reported that they lost some business in June to especially strong results in May, said Jeffrey Feiner, an analyst with Merrill Lynch & Co.

However, he said retailers' profits were expected to be strong in the second quarter, "aided by tight controls on expenses and inventories."

The results reported today were for general retailers and apparel stores, and do not include retailers such as supermarkets and new car dealers.

Sears said its June sales for the five weeks ended July 4 totaled $2.83 billion, up from $2.71 billion. Sales for the first 22 weeks of the year were $11.75 billion, up from $11.3 billion.

K mart reported sales for the five weeks ended July 1 of $2.43 billion, up from $2.28 billion, and year-to-date sales of $10.04 billion, up from $9.27 billion.

Penney said its sales for the five weeks ended July 4 were $1.17 billion, up from $1.14 billion, and its year-to-date sales totaled $5.08 billion, from $4.86 billion.

Woolworth said its sales for the five weeks ended July 4 totaled $362 million, up from $341 million. Year-to-date sales were $1.59 billion, up from $1.49 billion.

Wal-Mart said its sales for the month of June totaled $1.23 billion, up from $918 million. During the first five months, sales rose to $5.72 billion from $4.21 billion.

Montgomery Ward said its sales for the five weeks ended July 4 totaled $420.4 million, up from $390.9 million. Its year to date sales were $1.69 billion, against $1.58 billion.

Dayton Hudson reported sales of $879.6 million in the five weeks ended July 4, compared with $775.2 million. Year to-date sales totaled $3.67 billion, up from $3.23 billion.

Combatants keep firing in diaper wars

DALLAS (AP) — The makers of Huggies and Luvs, the leaders in disposable diapers, are fighting it out in federal court over the rights to a product both want to use in the lucrative diaper market.

Diaper giant Procter & Gamble sued Kimberly-Clark, claiming the competitor infringed on a patent to a material used to elasticize waistbands.

"Kimberly-Clark manufactured the diapers with a willful disregard for the patent," said Procter & Gamble attorney Allen Gerstein in opening arguments Wednesday. But lawyers for Kimberly-Clark argued the patent covers materials already patented.

In 1985, Procter & Gamble introduced its elasticized Luvs. Within months, Dallas-based Kimberly-Clark added elasticized waistbands to Huggies.

Procter & Gamble bought the patent in 1983 from Raychem Co., giving it the exclusive right to use heat-shrinkable material, which it used to make elasticized waistbands, Gerstein said. He said the patent, which was granted in 1972, expires in 1989.

Gerstein said Kimberly-Clark had a chance to use the method when it was developed in 1969 by Dr. Victor Althouse, then employed by Raychem Co. Althouse tried to sell Kimberly-Clark the idea, but the company rejected it until Procter & Gamble was about to capitalize on it, the lawyer said.

"Without it K-C feared it would lose 10 to 15 percent of its sales," said Gerstein.

Kimberly-Clark attorney V. Bryan Medlock Jr. argued that the Althouse patent was invalid because it covers materials already patented.

"It's not good enough to be the third person or the fifth person or the 100th person to discover something," he said.

The two companies sell more than 80 percent of disposable diapers purchased in the United States, said industry analysts.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Mutual funds unscathed by scandals, so far

By BILL DOYLE

Doyle

Q. Mutual funds set their share prices every business day. That must involve some guesswork on days when there is no buying or selling activity in a fund's shares. Surely, there are such days and the fund's value fluctuates anyway.

A. In this imperfect world, some possibility of market manipulation has always existed, exists today and will exist in the future. Lately, newspapers have carried many stories of Wall Street rip-offs. When huge amounts of dollars are involved, temptation exists.

However, mutual funds have been notably free from scandal. And there's little or no chance of manipulating a mutual fund's share price.

The "pricing" of a mutual fund's shares is done in three steps: 1. The fund's assets, which consist mostly of the stocks, bonds and/or other securities held as investments, are totaled up. 2. The fund's liabilities are subtracted from the asset amount. 3. That sum is divided by the number of fund shares outstanding — owned by investors.

The resulting number is the fund's net asset value per share. The calculation is done by the fund's custodian bank — not the fund itself.

There can be days on which no one buys shares of a particular mutual fund and on which no shareholder redeems his or her shares. You don't "sell" mutual fund shares. You redeem shares by turning them back to the fund for the redemption price.

For most funds, the redemption pice is the net asset value per share. For funds with rear-end loads called "redemption fees" or "contingent deferred sales charge," the redemption price is less than net asset value per share.

On a business day on which there is no buying or redemption activity in a mutual fund's shares, the net asset value per share will change if there is a change in the fund's assets and/or liabilities.

If the market values of the securities the fund holds in its investment portfolio rise, it stands to reason that the fund's net asset value per share will rise. If the values of those securities drop, so will the fund's net asset value per share.

Q. You stated that, in newspaper price quotations on mutual funds, the "bid" price is the net asset value per share and the "asked" or "offering" price is net asset value per share plus maximum commission.

Then why aren't the bid and asked prices the same for the so-called "no-load" mutual funds, since no commission is supposed to be charged on them? There are many of these no-load funds listed but, on every one, the asked price is greater than the bid price.

A. You must be either kidding or badly misreading newspaper mutual fund price tables. In those tables, no-load mutual fund bid and asked prices are exactly the same.

Some newspapers tables list that bid price in a column headed "NAV," for "net asset value." Others list it under the heading "Sell," because that's the price a shareholder would receive when redeeming shares. Still others use the heading "Bid."

In the next column — headed either "Buy," because that's the price at which shares could be purchased, "Offer" or "Ask" — the letters NL appear. That, of course, stands for "no-load" and means the prices in the two columns are equal.

Because there is no commission charged when shares of no-load funds are purchased, the "Buy," "Offer" or "Ask" price can't possibly be higher than net asset value per share.

Load mutual funds, which do levy commissions when investors buy shares, naturally are shown with two prices in newspaper tables. But no-load mutual funds have only one price on any day.

Prices of both load and no-load funds, of course, can change from one day to the next.

OIL & GAS REPORT

EXPLORATION HIGHLIGHTS

Deep Rock gains strong Penn producer

From Staff Reports

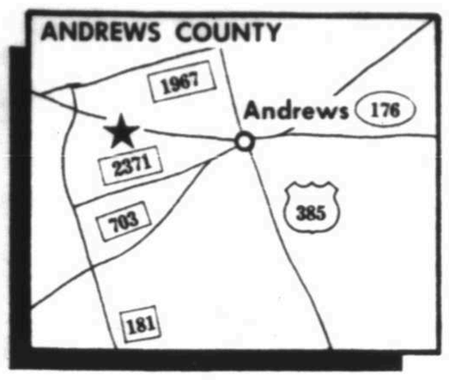
UNION OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, Midland, filed completion papers with the Texas Railroad Commission in Midland for a strong Pennsylvanian oil producer in the Deep Rock Field of Andrews County.

The No. 1 Walker pumped 448 barrels of crude and 488 Mcf of gas on potential test. The well also produced 151 barrels of water. Production was measured at 40.1 API and gas-to-oil ratio was recorded at 1090:1. Five and one-half inch casing was set at 9,399 feet.

Production was through perforations from 8,792 feet to 9,218 feet. The well was treated with 1,600 gallons of 15 percent HCL.

The following formation tops were picked on ground elevation of 3,204 feet: Wolfcamp 8,236 feet; Wolfcamp Reef 8,536 feet; Penn Detrital 8,640 feet; Penn Lime 8,784 feet; Canyon 8,894 feet; Strawn 9,122 feet; Atoka 9,350 feet. Pay was topped at 8,792 feet.

The No. 1 Walker is staked 660 feet from south and east lines of Section 6, Block A-43, PSL survey, and six miles southwest of Andrews. It was drilled to a total depth of 9,399 feet and plugged back to a depth of 9,354 feet.



Bone Spring oil producer finaled

A 6,700 foot completion in the Bone Spring formation in the North Young Field in Lea County, New Mexico was recorded by UNION TEXAS PETROLEUM CORP., Midland.

The No. 1 Short Fuse Federal, staked 1,980 feet from north and 660 feet from east lines of Section 11, Township 18 South, Range 32 East, produced 171 barrels of crude, along with 180 Mcf of gas and 16 barrels of water on potential test.

Five and one-half inch casing was set at 10,020 feet. Perforations were shot from 8,478 feet to 9,982 feet. The well was drilled to 10,020 feet and plugged back to 10,019 feet. Pay was topped at 6,700 feet and ground elevation is 3,862 feet.

Hale County well pumps 122 bopd

A Clear Fork producer pumped 122 barrels of crude for its operator, AMOCO PRODUCTION CO., Levelland.

The No. 530 Anton Irish Clear Fork Unit, completed in the Anton Irish Field in Hale County, also pumped 132 barrels of water. Gravity was measured at 29 API.

Seven inch casing was set to 5,509 feet and perforations were recorded from 5,509 feet to 6,026 feet.

The location, seven miles northeast of Anton, is 636 feet from west and 147 feet from north lines of Section 18, Block DT of the HE&WT survey.

Total depth is 6,026 feet.

OIL & GAS DIGEST

DI Industries announces yearly fiscal results

HOUSTON (SWN) — DI Industries, Inc., formerly Drillers, Inc. announced final audited financial results for its fiscal year ended March 31.

The company announced on May 12, 1987 the finalization of all documents with its lenders for a reduction of $21,200,000 of debt and the cancellation of outstanding preferred shares and common stock purchase warrants in exchange for the issuance of 1,387,568 shares of common stock of the company. As a result of this restructure, the company recognized an extraordinary gain of $15,164,000 ($2.74 per share) for the fiscal year ended March 31.

Rowan gives second quarter financial results

HOUSTON (SWN) — Rowan Companies, Inc. reported unaudited financial results for the second quarter and six months periods ended June 30.

The net loss reported for the second quarter was $18,641,000, $.31 per common share, comparing to $9,897,000, $.18 per share in the same period a year ago. The six months loss amounted to $36,276,000, $.67 per share relating to $15,752,000, $.29 per share in the 1986 period.

Average common stock shares outstanding increased from the year earlier as reflected in the following table resulting from the consummation of a public offering on May 19 of 8,500,000 shares. Net proceeds to Rowan of approximately $59 million from the offering were added to working capital for general corporate purposes.

UT Transmission elects Johnson president

LOMBARD, Ill. (SWN) — MidCon Corp. announced that Wayne D. Johnson has been elected president of United Texas Transmission Co., MidCon's Houston-based intrastate Texas transmission subsidiary, effective July 15.

Johnson, 54, is a veteran gas industry executive. From 1978 to 1986, he was president of Entex, Inc., a Houston-based gas distribution company. Most recently he has been a gas industry consultant. Johnson succeeds J. B. Bell, who returned to United Gas Pipe Line Company, a former MidCon subsidiary, when United Gas was sold to LaSalle Energy Corp. on June 30.

Mustang Resources enters purchase agreement

HOUSTON (SWN) — In line with its stated policy of asset acquisition, as a result of the recent capital increase, Mustang Resources Corp. formerly ZIM Energy Corp. has entered into a purchase agreement to acquire a 20 percent working interest in the Eugene Constantine Jr, et al number two oil well in Leeville Field, Lafourche Parish, Louisiana.

Mustang Resources Corp.'s interest in the remaining net reserves is estimated to be approximately 140,000 barrels. Current gross production is 260 BOPD.

Enron obtains long-term supply agreement

ELIZABETH, N.J. (SWN) — Enron Gas Marketing Inc. and Elizabethtown Gas Co. announced the signing of a long-term supply agreement. The arrangement calls for Enron to supply Elizabethtown Gas with up to 22 million cubic feet of natural gas per day over the term of the contract.

Elizabethtown Gas is the first New Jersey utility to enter into a long-term agreement with Enron Gas Marketing Inc., a subsidiary of Enron Corp. of Houston, Texas. The 10-year arrangement features a market-responsive price structure designed to keep gas costs at competitive levels, according to Frank T. Bahniuk, senior vice president at Elizabethtown Gas. It is a major step in Elizabethtown's long-range strategy of seeking diversification of supply at reasonable costs, he said.

The wildcat is staked 660 ft. from the north and east lines of Section 30, T15S, R34E, 28 miles southeast of Caprock.

Wolverine conducts annual meeting

FORT WORTH (SWN) — An audience of approximately 150 people was introduced to Wolverine Exploration Co.'s new leadership headed by William T. Smith, chairman of the board and chief executive officer.

The shareholders elected the following people to serve as directors of the company during the 1987-88 term; Ervin D. Cruce, Gerald W. Haddock, Dick Lowe, W.A. Schmid Jr., W.T. Smith, and Carl F. Thorne.

The shareholders approved five other proposals which included:

- one-for-200 reverse stock split and reduction of authorized common stock to 50 million shares;
- the formal change of the company's name to Wolverine Exploration Co.;
- the authorization of 10 million shares of preferred stock;
- the change of the state of incorporation from Texas to Delaware; and,
- the new Stock Option Plan.

Smith also announced that July 21, Wolverine Exploration Co. will be listed on the NASDAQ national market system

In addition Blocker Energy Corp. announced that it has entered two agreements with Wolverine.

Blocker has agreed to contribute $2.5 million to a participation by it with Wolverine Exploration Co. in an exploratory drilling arrangement which Wolverine has with Union Pacific Resources Corp.

Wolverine's arrangement with UPR, which covers virtually all of Union's North American prospects, provides that Wolverine will contribute a minimum of $50 million in the first program and provides Wolverine with options to participate in three successive programs for a minimum of $50 million each.

Triton Engineering Services Co., a privately owned energy related engineering service company, will join with Blocker in making an additional investment of $2.5 million on the same basis as Blocker.

Also, Blocker and Triton have entered into arrangements pursuant to which Blocker may contract to drill certain wells on behalf of Wolverine and/or Triton and Triton may contract on a turn-key basis to drill certain wells and provide additional drilling services to Wolverine.

California OKs drilling plan

By John Chandler
Hearst News Service

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — In a major blow to environmentalists, the California Coastal Commission has narrowly approved Occidental Petroleum Corp.'s controversial bid to begin exploratory oil drilling on the Pacific Palisades coastline.

The 7-5 decision moves the corporate giant a major step closer to beginning limited drilling opposite Will Rogers State Beach, but a 1985 court ruling — now on appeal — still blocks any work there.

Pacific Palisades activists and drilling opponents immediately vowed to expand the court fight by also quickly challenging the Coastal Commission decision. The commission rejected its own staff's recommendation to deny the project.

If Occidental can clear its legal hurdles, the commission's decision is a permit to drill two exploratory wells to be used for about a two-year period at a two-acre site on the inland site of Pacific Coast Highway near Temescal Canyon.

The corporation, now in its third drilling proposal of a 17-year quest for approval, at best is still several years away from winning permission for its ultimate goal: to sink up to 58 more wells there and actually begin oil production.

Despite opponents' arguments that exploratory drilling would pave the way for the future approval of the much larger and more controversial project, commission members appeared swayed by the limited scale and duration of the exploratory work.

The major obstacle now hindering drilling is a December 1985 ruling by Los Angeles Superior Court Judge Norman Epstein that voided the city of Los Angeles' approvals and prevented any work at the site. A state Court of Appeal hearing could come later this year.

"We feel we're right. We feel the law and the facts are on our side," said Arthur Groman, a 30-year Occidental board member who testified before the commission. "This is not going to be drilled in the bay. It's on land," he added.

The decision was a bitter defeat for environmentalists, who immediately vowed to appeal.

"The decision was arbitrary and capricious," complained Colin Lennard, an attorney representing No Oil Inc., a group of local activists who have doggedly fought Occidental's drilling plans.

Officials of Occidental, a Westwood, Calif.-based conglomerate led by Dr. Armand Hammer, claimed the country needs the estimated 25 million to 60 million barrels of oil, worth an estimated $1.2 billion, in the 504-acre drilling area that future production wells could tap.

But environmentalists argued that even the initial two exploratory, non-production wells and a 155-foot-high drilling derrick will be a blight on one of the region's busiest beaches across the highway, and could lead to offshore oil drilling in the bay.

The decision may prove one of the commission's most controversial. Coming on such a bellwether issue, it is likely to fuel further criticism that the 12-member panel has grown increasingly pro-development under Gov. George Deukmejian.

INFLATION

Allen Sinai, chief economist for Shearson Lehman Brothers, Inc., of New York, said that, while inflationary pressures are clearly greater this year than last, recent price reports should "help hold down fears of the worst on inflation."

Another private analyst, Donald Ratajczak, a Georgia State University economist who specializes in price activity, agreed that "the economy definitely has moved to a higher plateau of inflationary pressures. But no evidence of a sprialing inflationary environment has developed."

TRADE

But Thursday evening the Senate accepted an amendment offered by Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., that would allow the president to consider the impact of any import relief on the poor. For example, he could deny it if it would raise the prices of goods such as shoes, sugar or automobiles.

Bradley said the amendment "rolled back a lot of the action the Senate took on Tuesday." In explaining the change, he said senators found it difficult to oppose an amendment helping the poor.

After this vote, on which there was no opposition, the Senate adopted an amendment of Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, which allows the president also to consider the impact on agriculture of granting import relief.

The House, in passing its version of trade legislation in April, approved an amendment that requires trading partners, such as Japan, to reduce their trade surpluses with the United States by a fixed formula if they persist in unfair trade practices. It was proposed by Rep. Richard A. Gephardt of Missouri, a Democratic presidential candidate.

This provision, if included in the final legislation, also seems sure to invite a presidential veto.

The plant-closing provision requires that companies with 100 or more employees give six months' notice before a plant closing or a mass layoff. The employee figure, according to sponsors, exempts about 85 percent of the businesses in the United States.

A plant closing is defined as a layoff of 50 or more workers for 30 days or more. A mass layoff would idle one-third of a company's workers for 30 days or more. The notice requirement is waived if the company is seeking capital or business that would prevent the shutdown or layoff. And if it is caused by "business circumstance," the company is exempt.

Supporters of the amendment argued that it was necessary to give employees time to get the training necessary for new jobs.

"If you think employees are just chattel," Metzenbaum told his colleagues, and "if you think you can fire people at will," then vote against the amendment.

Metzenbaum also swept aside the threats of a veto. "I don't think we should quiver and quake as to whether the president will veto the bill," he said.

Sen. Dan Quayle, R-Ind., who led the opposition, said the proposal was intended not to facilitate worker adjustment but to just keep the old plants open. Approval of the amendment, he said, would mean "I say bye-bye to the trade bill."

"We view this as an anti-competitive measure, imposing European-style government intervention in the marketplace when such policies have so clearly failed and led to economic stagnation," said Jeffrey H. Joseph, vice president of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

Recessive cancer gene identified

By BETSY BATES
Hearst News Service

LOS ANGELES — In a "remarkable" discovery that will allow doctors to identify babies at risk for certain cancerous eye tumors, scientists have conclusively identified a human recessive cancer gene for the first time.

The breakthrough by researchers affliated with Childrens Hospital of Los Angeles and USC may explain the genetic basis for many types of cancer, and adds to the understanding of how genes function within a chromosome.

Published Friday in the Journal Science, the study concludes that the gene responsible for hereditary retinoblastoma is on the 13th chromosome of every cell in children who will get the disease.

"This gene may be implicated in many different types of tumors," said Yuen-Kai T. Fung, the study's lead author.

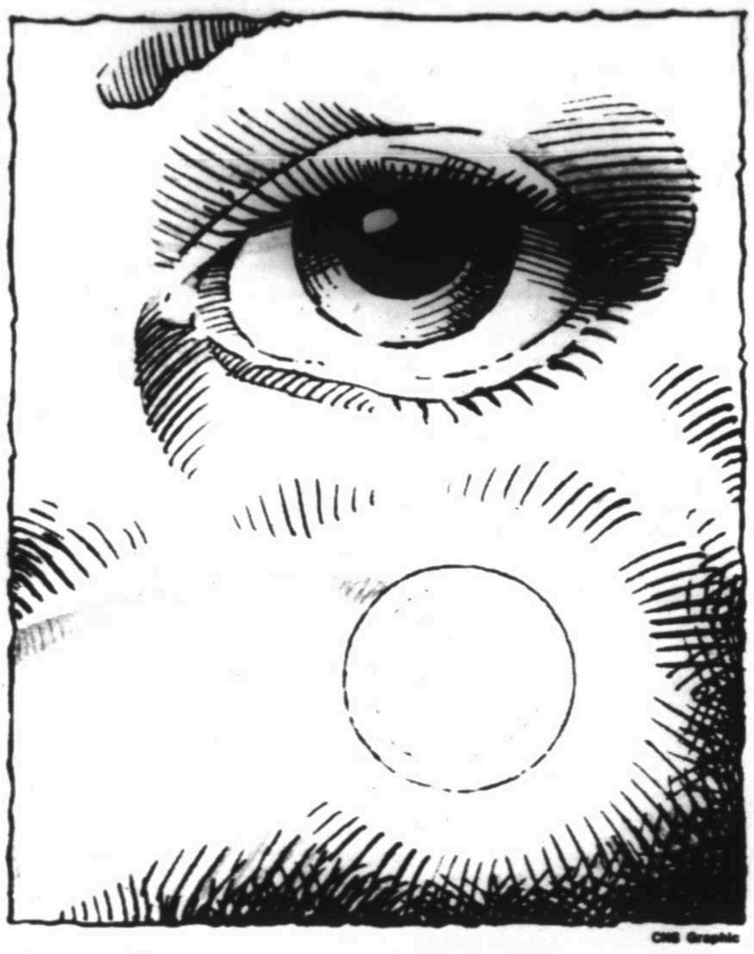
Retinoblastoma is the most common form of eye cancer in children, although it only occurs in one of every 20,000 children in the U.S. Parents often notice it as a white glow in their child's eye. Sometimes it causes cross-eyes.

Once they confirm a child has retinoblastoma, doctors usually have to remove the affected eye, said Dr. A. Linn Murphree of Childrens Hospital.

"Once it gets outside the eye, it is very malignant, and there is virtually no cure," said Dr. William F. Benedict, a pioneer in retinoblastoma research who directs the Clayton Molecular Biology Program at Childrens Hospital. Retinoblastoma comes in two forms, one of which seems to run in families.

That fact led Benedict, among others, to suspect that there is a recessive cancer gene in humans.

Two other major contributions led Fung's and two other groups of scientists on a race to isolate the exact gene responsible. The first came 17 years ago, when Dr. Alfred Knudson of the Fox Chase Cancer Center in Philadelphia theorized that two events were at work in the development of retinoblastoma: one hereditary, and the other involving a problem that occurs at a cellular level after conception.



CNS Graphic

The theory prompted many scientists to study retinoblastoma as a possible example of how other forms of cancer occur.

They now know that children who develop the hereditary form of retinoblastoma acquire one defective copy of the paired gene from one parent, and that the faulty copy is present in every cell of his body.

The remaining copy of the gene, inherited from the other parent, could be normal in every cell except one, but if there is an abnormality in one retinal cell, the child will develop retinoblastoma.

This "two hit hypothesis" first proposed by Knudson was confirmed at a molecular level in today's Science study.

The other contribution that led to proof of the gene came from the laboratory of Dr. Samuel Latt at Boston Childrens Hospital, where a radioactive probe was discovered that would seek out a spot within a chromosome presumed to be on or near the retinoblastoma gene.

Latt said the history of retinoblastoma research is a "beautiful example" of how basic research, backed up by scientific theories, can actually lead to molecular discoveries that have applications to people with diseases.

FAMILY MATTERS

Child's different interests allow for family diversity

By JIM MAY

May

DEAR FAMILY: We seem to have one child that is "different" no matter what. Everyone in the family can decide to do one thing and this child will always want to do something else. Sometimes this is fine, but sometimes it is a real problem. My husband often says half-jokingly, "Where did he come from?" Our problem child is 12 and I don't know how long the rest of us can continue to put up with his constantly being different. Do you have any suggestions as to what we might do to get him to be like the rest of us? MRS. WH

DEAR MRS. WH: It sounds as if your son helps keep life interesting around your house. I am very impressed that your family is respectful of your son's individuality, even though it is obviously a problem on some occasions.

In a study, Jerry Lewis, M.D., reported that "healthy" families consistently had members with high levels of individuality.

These families seem to allow room for a variety of interests, ideas and opinions. This room allows family members to be themselves, including room to be shy, outgoing or quiet.

There is a lot of value in difference. Our diversity as individuals, families and a nation helps make us what we are. Many well-known people have been considered different. For instance, Albert Einstein showed up to receive his Nobel prize in a tuxedo, but did not wear socks.

I hope you and your family continue to enjoy and promote "difference." It is hard at times, but rewarding in the long run.

DEAR FAMILY: My mother has just left after a two-week visit. In general, her visit was fine, but having her around and watching her deal with my children reminded me of things she did to me that I don't ever want to do to my children. She was forever correcting me and rarely said anything positive to me. Thank goodness my late father was always positive which helped me have some pride in myself. I found myself really resenting my mother as I watched her being so loving and supportive of my children. Am I wrong to feel like that? NO NAME

DEAR NO NAME: It is strange how parenting and grandparenting differ. I have come to believe that grandparenting styles are so very different from parenting styles because grandparents have quite a bit more experience (and maybe more removed from the front line).

I really do not know if you should feel badly toward your mother or not. You might try an experiment to see if you can answer that question for yourself.

During a quiet time during the week, pause and reflect on those specific "negative" instances you can recall. Write them down — what your mother said or did, and how you felt.

After you have completed that list reread it slowly. Stop to think about the items on the list. Experience the situation in your mind, feel the feelings.

After you have completed your reflections to your satisfaction (do not hurry yourself), take out another sheet of paper and write what you think your mother was trying to teach you in each instance. Was she trying to teach you to pick up after yourself, to be independent, to not interrupt?

Perhaps mom was a perfectionist. Try to understand what was behind each instance, then ask yourself how successful each of her techniques were. You may discover that some of the things she tried to teach you were very valuable, but her methods may not have felt right to you.

She may have been wrong in what she was trying to teach you. Parents feel that they always have to be right, yet there is no other instance in life where a person is (or can be) always right. There have also been many changes in our perceptions as to what is important to teach our children in the last 20 years.

This experiment is to help you figure out what your mother might have been trying to teach you and why she used the techniques she did.

Chances are that you are going to have to teach your children similar things. Reflecting on how you felt and reacted to your mother's parenting can help you as a parent. Being a parent is one of the hardest jobs there is. Use your experiences to help you learn more about parenting. Parenting is like on the job training without a manual, and it can be murder.

Jim May is the director of the Family Wellness Center.

DEAR ABBY

Bad law lets good behavior pay off

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am so angry I can hardly see to write this. I believe in justice, mercy and forgiveness, but now I'm reading that it's "unfair" to further punish a person for a crime after he has paid his debt to society — referring to the monster who raped a teen-age girl, chopped off her arms with an ax and left her for dead in a ditch.

The person who committed this crime was sentenced to 14 years in prison, served only eight years, and then, because of a "flawed law," was released for "good behavior"!

What kind of legal system would allow a person who had committed such a terrible crime to be returned to society? The man is now living in a trailer at San Quentin Prison, protected by two parole agents at the cost of $1,350 a day to ensure his safety! Officials had tried to place this convicted rapist-mutilator in several northern California communities, but none would have him. (Can you blame them?)

I resent my tax money going to protect this man; he is either insane and belongs in a mental institution, or he should be returned to prison to rot.

How do you feel about this? And what can be done about it? — OUTRAGED IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR OUTRAGED: I, too, am outraged. Although it is too late to do anything about this particular case, the quickest way to get this law changed is to write a letter to your state senators and assemblypersons, as well as to the governor, stating your feelings about this "flawed law" and demanding that it be changed to one that more appropriately fits the crime.

DEAR ABBY: Shame on you, Abby, who prides herself on using words correctly. Re the lady who complained that her husband wanted sex only twice a year, your comment: "Your husband thinks sex is a biannual celebration."

A paper published twice a week is a semiweekly. One published every other week is a biweekly. Abby, please give that poor guy credit for a performance four times in two years — not just once. My golly, you don't give him as much credit on this sex business as does his wife. — VERN SCOFIELD, LINCOLN, NEB.

DEAR MR. SCOFIELD: No shame on me. According to The Associated Press Stylebook, "biannual" means twice a year and is a synonym for "semiannual." However, "bimonthly" means every other month, and "biweekly" means every other week. "Biennial" means every two years. ("Semimonthly" means twice a month; "semiweekly" means twice a week.) And right now I have an Excedrin headache.

DEAR ABBY: "Mother of One" writes that she is very happy with just one child, but she wishes people would quit nagging her to have another child. They say she is being very "unfair" to raise her son without a brother or sister. Oh, really? Mary of Nazareth had only one child, and from what I hear, he turned out pretty good. — H.R. SENGEBUSCH, LOMBARD, ILL.

(To get Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.)

Foster Parents sponsor annual Teddy Bear Affair

From Staff Reports

The Second Annual Teddy Bear Affair, sponsored by the West Texas Foster Parent Program, will be from 10 a.m.-6 p.m. Saturday at Permian Mall in Odessa.

Children may enter their teddy bears in eight categories including: Best-All-Around Bear, Friendliest Bear, Happiest Bear, Chubbiest Bear, Funniest Bear, Colorful Bear, Survivor Bear and Huggable Bear.

Judges will include members of KTPX-T.V., Channel 9 and KQIP Radio. Winners will be announced at 4 p.m. Outstanding foster parents, an outstanding social worker and an outstanding volunteer will be honored with the winners.

Outstanding foster parents are Curtis and Beth Edwards of Midland, who work with children, and train and support new foster parents. Outstanding social worker is Mike Mason of Pecos, who has been a volunteer for nine years. Outstanding volunteer is Linda Nunez of Pecos, who began an enrichment program for foster children.

Non-profit groups will have 15 booths with items for sale, face painting, and demonstrations. KOSA-T.V., Channel 7 and KQIP Radio will have a drawing for a trip to Disneyland. Proceeds from the drawing will go to foster children.

Shortage of nurses blamed on poor image

By BETSY BATES
Hearst News Services

CNS Graphic

Nurses are among a group of highly sought after professionals who can have their pick among hundreds of employers offering competitive salaries, cash bonuses, education reimbursement, child-care benefits and even free trips to Hawaii — if only they'll sign up with them.

Experts predict that people coming out of nursing school today will never lack employment, variety or opportunities for advancement.

What they cannot expect, however, is society's gratitude, or its respect. Nurses are perceived as meek bedpan carriers, sex objects or dolts who couldn't make it into medical school. And those perceptions, more than anything else, are being blamed for a rapidly escalating nursing shortage so critical that administrators fear for the future quality of medicine itself.

The public notion of what a nurse does bears little resemblance to reality, nurses say. So the shortage grows, to the point where Sunday want ads for nurses now outnumber the ones for engineers.

WITH HER training in pathophysiology and bacteriology, anatomy and human behavior, a nurse now entering her profession is at the height of her power, responsibility and indispensability.

During her career, she can expect to monitor exceedingly complex medical machinery, participate in diagnoses and plans for patients' care and perhaps command multimillion-dollar budgets as well as people's lives.

She also will scrape blood from her shoes at the end of many days, and her hands will ache from being grasped in pain.

In return, it would not be unreasonable for her to expect to make $40,000 within five years, should she pursue a specialty and a master's degree. If she decides to go into administration, she could earn $100,000 a year.

Certainly, a poor public image did not single-handedly put nursing on the critical list. Changes in health care reimbursement several years ago spurred a temporary spate of hospital closures that found nurses pounding the pavement in their white shoes.

THE WOMEN'S movement opened new doors for bright, motivated young women, and pushed nursing into that category of jobs "you don't have to do anymore."

Finally, with the baby boom over, nursing schools and nurse recruiters are fishing for newcomers in a smaller overall student pool. And fewer of the best and the brightest are attracted to nursing.

Between 1983 and 1986, enrollments in bachelor's degree nursing programs dropped 19 percent, and two-year associate degree enrollments fell 29 percent, according to the American Hospital Association.

A University of California-Los Angeles research study by Kenneth C. Green found the number of freshman university women interested in pursuing nursing careers dropped by half between 1974 and 1986.

The young women drawn to nursing were more likely than their peers to feel "in control of their world," more altruistic, more stable, slightly more religious and better able to cope with stress.

BUT GREEN'S study also revealed that the people who seek nursing degrees are overwhelmingly female, with SAT college admission test scores far below the national average for college-bound students.

Hospitals depend on an influx of new nurses, not just for their enthusiasm and compassion, but also because in the past they were academically and intellectually primed to deal with complexities of a hospital ward.

As Margaret McClure, New York University Medical Center's director of nursing puts it, every hospital ward now is essentially an intensive care unit, often understaffed, with each patient's condition capable of a sudden turn for the worse.

"You can't have a dope in that job saying, 'Well, I did what the doctor told me,' " McClure said. "People come to me and say, 'I have a cousin who's not much of a student, but she's such a nice person, I think she'd be a good nurse.' All I can say to that is, not for me when I'm sick!"

What McClure and others fear even more than the prospect of substandard nurses is the prospect of no nurses at all.

AT THE same time that college students are shying away from nursing, established professionals are defecting from the field.

Some 40 percent of licensed nurses have left nursing, either to raise families or to pursue other careers, some of them in related health fields, the American Hospital Association reports.

Though there are nearly twice as many licensed registered nurses today as there were 14 years ago, the demand for their services has more than doubled.

The overall nurse vacancy rate in American hospitals surged to 13.6 percent last year — more than twice what it was in 1985 — and hospital administrators say things are getting worse.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics anticipates a shortfall of 400,000 bachelor's degree R.N.s within the next three years.

AND BY the year 2000, there will be 600,000 too few bachelor's and master's degree R.N.s, according to the American Hospital Association.

"When DRGs (diagnostic-related groups, a new government reimbursement plan) first started, we shouted from the hilltops as much as we could that nurses were going to be needed even more, once the system was in place," said Toni Sullivan, professor and chairwoman of the Department of Nursing at the University of Southern California.

"But people didn't listen, and now we have a demand that's escalating like crazy and a supply that's dwindling. We're heading toward a crisis if we can't turn this around," Sullivan said.

When doctors were men and nurses were women, men were dominant and women did what they were told. Over time, some of that changed, and so did nurses. They still take temperatures and puff up blood pressure cuffs, but today they also administer chemotherapy, assist in organ-transplantation surgery and lean over the incubators of 1-pound babies to monitor the oxygen in their lungs.

INTERESTINGLY, NURSES for the most part have no desire to switch roles, to be doctors themselves. Nurses care for patients 24 hours a day, long after their doctors have stopped in for a progress check. It is true nurses deal with body fluids. They also deal with fear and death.

"A good nurse has to pick up on what a patient needs, besides medicine," said Tamara Littman, a high-risk obstetrical nurse.

On her ward, there is more often joy than grief, and she frankly admits that's one of the reasons she isn't a cancer nurse. But when modern miracles fail, it is she who carries the swaddled stillborn baby to its parents.

"You cry with them, you hold that dead baby with them, and you grieve with them," Littman said.

Sure, she says, she sometimes thinks about what it would be like to go to a job where your emotions can hide behind a business suit and a briefcase. But she wouldn't trade her nursing memories for those of a stockbroker, or even a doctor.

Blood boosting may be done on combat soldiers

By DEBERA CARLTON
Hearst News Service

Taking a cue from similar research on athletes, the U.S. Army is doing its own studies on blood packing, a method of increasing the amount of oxygen-carrying red blood cells in the body. This can be done by extracting blood from a healthy soldier, storing it, then later reintroducing it into his body through a basic transfusion.

If the research continues to show promise, "blood doping" — or blood boosting, as it is also called — may be used someday to bolster a soldier's endurance in the field or in combat.

Making more oxygen available to the muscles via the bloodstream allows the muscles to work faster, harder and longer. Since red blood cells are the "rafts" in the blood that transport oxygen to the muscles and other parts of the body, giving a soldier an extra supply of red blood cells could pump him up in more ways than one.

"Winning the Olympic marathon isn't the only application of blood packing," says Chuck Dasey, public affairs officer with the U.S. Research and Development Command at Fort Detrick, Md. "Soldiers need an edge, too."

ESPECIALLY WHEN they are slashing through jungles or climbing mountains, carrying 60-pound packs. Or hiking eight to 12 hours a day for two weeks in sweltering heat. Or digging trenches and mobilizing on the double.

"If you're using blood doping for an athletic event, it is usually relatively short-lived. You can rest," Dasey says. "But if you're a soldier in an urgent situation, and a platoon sergeant is yelling at you to keep moving, you need to keep moving."

The Army Research Institute of Environmental Medicine has finished two studies on blood packing of soldiers.

The institute, the largest research facility in the world studying human performance and man's adaptation to his environment, undertook the studies to explore whether the "mechanisms of the blood" could be improved for soldiers, says researcher Michael Sawka.

OF PARTICULAR interest was the potential benefit of blood packing for soldiers working in tropical or desert heat. The heat is particularly energy-draining for soldiers in full battle dress with heavy packs.

"If there's anyone who has to send people to work under environmental extremes, it's the Army, so it doesn't take a lot of imagination to come up with a military scenario where blood doping would be useful," Sawka says.

In the first study, reported in the Journal of the American Medical Association, the institute performed blood-packing experiments on 30 Army volunteers of varying fitness levels.

The study also combined data from previous non-Army studies. Researchers concluded that for 29 of the 30 subjects, reinfusion of red blood cells or "erythrocytes" increased maximal oxygen uptake. Maximum aerobic power increased between 4 percent and 18 percent, with less fit subjects showing the greatest benefits.

In the second study, published in the Journal of Applied Physiology, Army researchers examined the influence of blood packing on body temperature during aerobic workouts in hot weather. The subjects were not acclimated to heat, and were "euhydrated" as opposed to dehydrated.

SWAKA BECAME a test subject himself when an extra volunteer was needed for the study. Hooked up to a needle, intravenous tube and bag containing his own red blood cells, Sawka was blood-packed. He says he felt "terrible" the day after the transfusion, but he noticed he was able to run "faster and harder" several days later.

"I was running with guys I could never run with before," Sawka says. "The harder the exercise, the better you feel. So I didn't notice it – but they did."

But Sawka says much research still needs to be done. There are many unanswered questions: Would blood packing help those who are already acclimated to heat? What happens when someone is dehydrated? Could blood packing hinder them, instead of making them stronger?

There are no present plans to turn the research into field application, Army officials say. Eventually, blood packing might be used for small groups of soldiers on special missions for two to four weeks. But "not 5,000 soldiers on the battlefield," Dasey says.

"You can't really create a super soldier; there are performance limits.

BUT SOMEDAY there may be a situation needing troops at their very best, where they have to walk and climb and move out pretty quick. It's the idea of applying a physical edge to a military situation."

Researchers outside the Army have recently demonstrated the aerobic benefits of blood doping.

Reporting in the Journal of the American Medical Association, two researchers who studied six highly trained male distance runners found that red blood cell infusion "effectively increased performance capacity in a 10-kilometer track race, probably due to an increase in oxygen delivery to the working muscles."

The research was conducted by Dr. Toby Simon of the University of New Mexico and Anthony Brien of the Bahrain Sports Institute in Bahrain.

As in the Army studies, Brien and Simon used subjects who did not know they were being blood-doped to avoid possible psychological influences on performance.

Representatives act as liasons between patients, doctors

Hearst News Service

Although almost everyone at some point will require hospitalization, hospitals are not usually the friendliest places, nor the most reassuring.

"Lots of us have been in hospital situations where we've seen others mistreated or been mistreated ourselves," says Joan Marks, founder and director of the first master's program in patient advocacy, at Sarah Lawrence College in Bronxville, N.Y.

Aside from the fear of hospitals, many people are afraid of being helplessly dependent on the strangers to whom they entrust their lives.

"If you are in a hospital, no matter who you are, you feel disadvantaged. It is a time when you are most vulnerable and least able to fend for yourself," says Marks. She says hospital patients need, but often do not experience, understanding and reassurance as much as treatement for their physical illnesses.

"The bottom line is that technology has become so pervasive in the care of patients that some of the more humanitarian aspects of medical care have gone by the wayside," she says. Also, she says, hospital staff, especially in large cities, are usually overworked and often have neither the time nor the capacity to establish a rapport with each of their patients.

"It's incredibly hard to work in a hospital, caring for very sick patients, and one way the professional staff members protect themselves is to distance themselves from patients. I think a certain amount of that is absolutely essential for survival, but there is a happy balance," she says.

Health advocates, also known as patient representatives or ombudsmen, fill the gaps when regular hospital staff — those on whom patients traditionally rely for understanding and reassurance — have become apathetic.

They ensure that patients understand their illness and treatment, even if that means finding a translator for those who have trouble with English. They respond to complaints, ensure that meals are satisfactory and that rooms are clean and comfortable.

"We expect when we go to the hospital to be treated with dignity. We have the right to complete understanding, no matter how long that takes and within our intellectual capacity, of our illness and what the options are. Patients have the right to know the qualifications of the the staff who are treating them," says Marks.

Patient representatives also work with the hospital to pinpoint areas in which patient care may be lacking, and participate in ethics committees on such issues as living wills and removal of life-support equipment.

Marks feels that patient advocates need a basic knowledge of the health care industry, including human physiology, health economics and health law, as well as a history of health advocacy, phychology and counseling to be effective.

"It's wonderful to go out there and be a do-gooder and to want to make the life of every patient perfect, but your chances are much better if you have a knowledge of health care delivery in its broadest perspective."

Over half of the hospitals in the U.S. now employ patient representatives, says Marks. One reason is to cut down on liability costs.

"All you have to do is think of the malpractice settlements that have been handed down in recent years to know that if a patient rep deflects one malpractice suit, she's probably justified the entire budget for her department. The consensus is that even patients who've had a mishap in a hospital are not apt to sue if they feel they've been in an institution where there's been some caring and communication," she says.

Marks predicts that as hospitals become increasingly aware of their need to attract customers in order to remain solvent, this relatively new breed of hospital worker will be increasingly in demand.

"During the next decade, with the increase of financial restrictions and the need for competitive, innovative and patient-oriented marketing concepts, patient advocates will be called on for even greater involvement in planning for responsive, comprehensive health care service."

We Stand Behind Every Car We Sell.

Maybe you think the only used car warranty you can get is the one soaped on the windshield.

At Rogers Ford Used Car Department, we inspect every used car we sell. We test, we tune and then we attach a Special warranty on the engine, drive train and transmission-for Parts and Labor-on every used car in our lot.

So when we say we stand behind the cars we sell, that's a promise written in stone. Not just on a windshield.
