Gorbachev hails cuts

Soviet leader calls Bush's move 'great event'

■ After applauding Bush's plan for unilateral cuts in nuclear weapons, Gorbachev calls for test ban treaty.

N.Y. Times News Service

MOSCOW — The president of the Soviet Union Saturday night applauded President Bush's unilateral cuts in nuclear weapons, then called on his former archenemy to join him in a bilateral nuclear test ban treaty.

In a 12-minute interview seen by a national audience, Mikhail S. Gorbachev called the Friday night announcement by Bush a major step toward a nuclear-free world.

He referred to Bush's move as a "major step," as a "large-scale initiative," "a new major breakthrough" and a "great event." He proudly declared it a product of the "new thinking" that he introduced into Soviet foreign policy when he came to power six years ago, which eventually led to the lifting of communist dictatorships in Eastern Europe and finally in the Soviet Union.

The Soviet leader, emphasizing he had many questions, did not make any immediate concessions.

But he promised the Soviet Union would reciprocate to America's most dramatic one-sided military reductions since the Cold War.

"A new major breakthrough has been made," Gorbachev said. "I think I can say without any exaggeration that our assessment of these proposals is positive, very positive."

The 60-year-old Soviet leader suggested during a nationally televised TV interview Saturday that Bush's radical proposals be accompanied by a bilateral nuclear test ban to convince the world that "this was a real

SEA ISLAND, Ga.— President Bush and his wife Barbara returned Saturday for a weekend at this resort island where they spent their honeymoon 46 years ago. The Bushes were the guests of Griffin Bell, attorney general during Jimmy Carter's administration. Bush, who was intent on relaxing, spent the day playing golf with Bell. The Bushes spent their honeymoon here in 1945 after being wed in Rye, N.Y.

PLO backing

WASHINGTON — Bush administration officials said on Saturday that they were extremely pleased by the Palestine Liberation Organization's apparent endorsement of the American-sponsored peace conference, but that the hard part would now begin: juggling the PLO's desire to get increasingly involved and the Israeli government's insistence that the organization remain out of sight./5A

Lara Langford, 5, of Midland, gets above the maddening crowd with the help of her father, Russel. The Langfords were waiting in line to ride the ferris wheel at St. Ann's Family Fair Saturday.

St. Ann's Family Fair unchanged, volunteer says

For Midlanders who wanted to search for a treasure among the state's largest garage sale, munch on nachos and corn dogs, or whirl and twirl on carnival rides, the 43rd Annual St. Ann's Family Fair was the place to be Saturday.

The fair, operated by parishioners and supporters of St. Ann's Catholic Church as a fundraiser for the church's school, has been going strong since 1948. A volunteer said it has changed little since its first decade.

"The only thing is it's grown," said Helen McCurdy, a fair volunteer for 36 years. "I used to know everybody who came, but not anymore.

"But, I'll tell you, the fair hasn't changed. It's still family-oriented, and we still don't try to get rich out of what we sell."

Mrs. McCurdy said the fair's success may be based on the attitude of the more than 4,000 people who volunteer at game, food and sale booths.

"You just have to be nice to people and treat them like your friends," she said.

A second-year fairgoer said the formula works.

"This is great. We're having fun," said Jeoung Kim, who brought his sons Justin and Jason to try their luck at the game booths again this year. "Maybe I outgrew some of this, but they haven't."

U.N. team lists arms records

■ Freed after a five-day stand-off, inspectors catalogue documents pertaining to Iraq's secret nuclear arms program.

Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS — Free after a five-day standoff in a Baghdad parking lot, U.N. weapons inspectors on Saturday finished cataloging crucial documents detailing Iraq's secret nuclear arms program.

The inspectors will keep the documents, but the catalogs will be turned over to the Iraqis, as demanded by Baghdad as a way out of the parking lot siege. It was one of the most dramatic confrontations between Saddam Hussein's government and the West since the Gulf War ended nearly seven months ago.

The 44 U.N. experts spent Saturday in the Palestine Hotel, across the street from the parking lot, making lists of documents and film and videotape copies of documents that Iraqi officials had sworn the team would not be allowed to keep.

"It is finished, they are done with (cataloging) the documents," said Rolf Ekeus, the New York-based chairman of the U.N. Special Commission, which is in

Free legal aid available to indigent individuals

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

If someone has an abusive spouse and can't afford a divorce, does that mean being married forever?

No — fortunately, recourse is available.

In Midland, indigent individuals can seek free relief from their legal problems through West Texas Legal Services and the Midland Young Lawyer Night Legal Clinic.

"We are a law firm like any other law firm in town but our clients happen to be indigent," said Lilly Plummer, managing attorney for West Texas Legal Services.

The private non-profit federally funded firm assists those with limited incomes in areas of civil law.

The Night Legal Clinic, commonly referred to as night court, provides similar services through use of volunteers.

The clinic meets the second Tuesday of each month at Casa de Amigos.

Those in need of legal assistance are screened for eligibility and then meet with an attorney, who gives advice and pursues legal action if necessary.

About 75-80 percent of requests made are accepted, according to Darla Fisher, president of the Legal Assistants Association of the Permian Basin, which provides the initial contact with applicants.

A limit of about 20 people are seen each month with 80-90 percent of cases dealing with family law such as divorce, child custody, adoption, and protective services.

Other civil cases typically handled include wills, landlord-tenant problems, and consumer issues. All civil cases are

Grand jury concludes man killed his wife

BOSTON (AP) — Nearly two years after Charles Stuart's heart-wrenching telephone call for help stunned the nation, a grand jury concluded what once seemed unthinkable — he was involved in his pregnant wife's murder.

But Stuart is dead. He plunged off a bridge in an apparent suicide about two months after his wife was shot in 1989. And the indictments of his brother and a friend in the bizarre case do little to answer lingering

Suspect in two unsolved murders worked for CIA, investigators say

HOUSTON (AP) — The prime suspect in one of Houston's most sensational unsolved murder cases once worked for the CIA, say two private investigators working on a book about the slaying.

Also, the man, Charles Frederick Rogers, was in Dallas on the day of President Kennedy's assassination, and may have played a role in it, the investigators claim in a story printed in Saturday's editions of the Houston Chronicle.

Rogers disappeared June 23, 1965, after the bodies of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fred C. Rogers, were found dismembered in the refrigerator in their home.

Private investigator John Craig and his associate, Phil Rogers (not related to Fred Rogers), said the Central Intelligence Agency recruited Charles Rogers in 1956 and that Rogers was an operative until the mid-1980s. They said Charles Rogers killed his parents when they became suspicious. He now lives in Guatemala, they said.

Yeltsin's heart trouble causes unease worldwide

MOSCOW (AP) — When word circulated earlier this month that Boris Yeltsin had heart trouble, the news sent shockwaves through financial markets and diplomatic circles and alarmed many Russians.

The 60-year-old president of the Russian republic is now recuperating at the Black Sea, his first vacation in months. Soviet leaders rarely disclose details of their health, and Yeltsin is no exception. How bad his reported heart problem is remains unclear.

But the accounts that he may have suffered a heart attack gave Soviets, who revel in conspiracy theories and apocalyptic visions, yet another scenario to worry about. Their nightmare is that the only politician with broad public support could suddenly disappear at a time when the Soviet Union is dissolving and the economy is in deep trouble.

Western observers are uneasy, too.

If a heart attack felled the sturdy Siberian, "it would be a very major calamity, probably more so than in the case of any other individual, even Gorbachev," Zbigniew Brzezinski, who was President Carter's national security adviser, said in a telephone interview.

Soviet and Western analysts say Yeltsin's death or inability to continue working would weaken — not strengthen — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's grip on the nation.

Some fear it would also set off a battle for power among Russian politicians, distracting the country from the crucial economic and political tasks at hand. Brzezinski said it might even encourage die-hard Communists to try another coup.

Aides said Yeltsin suffered a "minor heart attack" on Sept. 18, but they used a Russian term that can refer to chest pains or palpitations as well as cardiac arrest. The dollar shot upward in European markets on the news.

Yeltsin canceled all his appointments Sept. 18-19, including a meeting with U.S. Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady. Two days later he was energetic as ever, traveling to Azerbaijan and Armenia to mediate peace talks between those feuding republics.

Siberians are renowned for their physical endurance, and it is hard for some Russians to believe that their burly leader is really sick. A few lawmakers even suggested he faked illness to avoid criticism for what they consider his imperious demeanor after last month's abortive hard-line coup.

But Yeltsin has a history of heart problems. In his autobiography, he said he was hospitalized in 1987 for "headaches and chest pains."

One line of thinking is that if Yeltsin disappeared from the scene, Gorbachev would again become the undisputed national leader. Not so, said Alexander Kabakov, deputy editor of the weekly Moscow News and author of a novel about a cataclysmic future in the Soviet Union.

"Yeltsin has helped Gorbachev — and was helping him even before the coup," Kabakov said. "Together they have created a political balance. If Yeltsin suddenly was not there, the balance would be shattered."

Under Russian law, Yeltsin would be succeeded by his vice president, Alexander Rutskoi, until new elections were called by the republic's parliament.

Government, opposition struggle to end standoff

TBILISI, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Government and opposition negotiators struggled Saturday to resolve political differences that have triggered the most serious upheaval in a Soviet republic since the failed coup in the Kremlin.

Politial unrest also continued in Tadzhikistan, where crowds of democratic and Islamic forces staged protests over the naming of a Communist Party hard-liner to replace the Central Asian republic's acting president.

A government leader in Georgia conceded that the political violence in the southern republic could hurt its drive for independence.

"Georgia is ready for independence, but the United States is not ready to recognize it," said Prime Minister Bessarion Gugushvili, referring to the republic's independence declaration earlier this year.

Last week, the United States accused President Zviad Gamsakhurdia of violating human rights in the Caucasus Mountains republic.

The independence issue was central to Gamsakhurdia's rise to power. But his opponents, including former nationalist comrades, accuse him of ruling like a dictator since winning direct presidential elections in May.

Two U.S. Embassy officials arrived Saturday on a fact-finding mission, but Washington's accusation seemed to dampen chances for U.S. recognition anytime soon, something Gamsakhurdia had sought to seal his break from the Kremlin.

At least four people have died since clashes between the opposition and Gamsakhurdia's forces escalated last week.

Gamsakhurdia's forces have retaken the Georgian National Guard base outside Tbilisi from dissident militiamen and have edged ever closer to the TV station occupied by the opposition last Sunday.

More than 1,000 anti-Gamsakhurdia protesters massed again on Saturday night at the broadcasting building, about a mile from parliament, calling for the president's resignation.

Gunshots were heard Saturday night near the building, causing brief panic but no injuries, and the crowd continued with its rally.

Attention focused Saturday on efforts to start talks between government and the fractious opposition, which includes parliament leaders, former government ministers and the maverick chief of the National Guard.

Pro-independence unity collapsed Sept. 2 after police shot and wounded five protesters at an anti-government rally.

Gugushvili told reporters the sides agreed in preliminary talks Saturday to hold separate negotiations with "political" and "military" halves of the opposition.

But an opposition leader who took part in the talks, Georgy Shengelaya, said no such deal was struck. "For now, preliminary talks are still going on ... with the united opposition," he said.

Gamsakhurdia has refused to negotiate with the rebel National Guard chief, Tengiz Kitovani, and another opposition leader, former Prime Minister Tengiz Segua. He claims they are trying to seize power by driving him from office.

The opposition is demanding a parliament session to be televised live, as well as the release of all political prisoners and an end to a ban on opposition news media.

In Tadzhikistan, more than 10,000 people joined in a protest called by the united democratic and Islamic opponents to rally against the recent naming of Communist hard-liner Rakhman Nabiyev as president.

"We will be here to the end," said Gulrukhsor Sasiyeva, a Tadzhik poet and lawmaker who was one of 200 people staging a hunger strike.

SOVIET: Gorbachev praises Bush's move for unilateral cuts breakthrough." Gorbachev has sought an end to underground tests for some time.

"What I have to say is all these proposals are too massive for us to be able to give an assessment of them at the moment," Gorbachev explained.

Bush essentially proposed destroying all U.S. ground tactical missiles and removing nuclear cruise missiles from submarines and warships. The American leader also proposed starting negotiations with the Soviet Union to destroy all land-based, long-range ballistic missiles with multiple warheads.

The American moves would allow the Soviets to cut back on massive military spending that has been a significant factor in the near collapse of the Soviet economy.

Conservative Communists, including senior military men, tried to overthrow Gorbachev last month partly because they believed he was giving too much away to the West by unilaterally paring back Soviet military might.

Gorbachev now has an opportunity to cut military spending even more since those opponents have been defeated and Bush has made his move.

Some Western diplomats here say they believe Soviet military spending might still have been as much as half the total budget before the coup.

The Soviet leader has been trying for several years now to turn the gargantuan military industrial complex into the backbone of a consumer goods industry that now is virtually nonexistent.

Bush's offer is well timed for Gorbachev. Russian President Boris Yeltsin and other republican leaders whose influence has increased enormously since the failed coup have made it clear that they want military spending radically slashed. Yeltsin has said he wants to get rid of all nuclear weapons.

Yeltsin "gave high marks to the initiative and spoke in favor of identical huge cuts on the Soviet Union's side," reported the official Russian Information Agency.

The U.S. action will make it easier for Gorbachev to go along with the demands of his republics and help him resuscitate the economy. The American initiative "holds a lot of promise for some serious steps forward toward a nuclear-free world," Gorbachev said.

He said he talked over the American decision in a telephone conversation Friday night with Bush. A meeting between U.S. and Soviet officials to discuss the details was discussed.

"We agreed to act without delay," Gorbachev said in the interview. "...consequently there will presumably be some contact, we shall find a method, to cooperate by acting together."

"I think we will balance the account."

U.N.: Inspectors to keep arms documents charge of finding and dismantling Iraq's weapons of mass destruction.

Armed Iraqi soldiers surrounded the inspectors from midday Tuesday until early Saturday. The U.N. team refused to give up the documents and huddled in their bus and six cars, frequently using a satellite telephone to update their superiors and the news media on developments.

The U.N. Security Council demanded Iraq's complete cooperation with the disarmament process, as agreed to in the April 3 cease-fire resolution, and issued hints of possible military action if the impasse continued.

To pressure Iraq, U.S. military forces are being sent to neighboring Saudi Arabia. The United States began moving Patriot antimissile units to the Persian Gulf on Wednesday in case the Security Council ordered military escorts for U.N. teams searching Iraq.

The Iraqis finally let the inspectors have the papers and leave the lot outside the Iraqi Atomic Energy Commission building, where they had discovered the documents in a surprise search.

"For the time being, they are showering and resting," said Johan Molander, spokesman for the commission.

U.N. officials say the documents contain records of an extensive clandestine project to build nuclear weapons, contradicting Iraq's repeated denials it had such a program.

David Kay, the American head of the U.N. team, said the inspectors retained all the documents.

"We essentially won everything that we had been staying here for," Kay said Saturday just before the team headed for the hotel. "The documents, the photography, the video remain with the inspectors and we are free to leave this camp."

Kay's team had another run-in with Iraqi security forces last Monday after they found blueprints for nuclear weapons designs at another building. Guards ejected them from the site and forcibly took away the documents, but the team retained photographs of many of the key technical papers.

Iraq's Cabinet met Saturday to discuss what the official Iraqi News Agency described as obstacles created by the nuclear inspection team and U.N. demands to use U.N. helicopters to carry out other inspections.

MURDERS: Son suspect in deaths

(From 1A)

A Houston homicide detective has been assigned to review their information, and a police artist has made a bust of what Charles Rogers would look like today in hopes of turning up leads.

"From the police point of view, we have listened to everything they have said. It is a plausible theory. There is quite a bit of substantiation in regards to the information they have come up with," Detective Jim Binford said.

The bodies of Rogers' parents were discovered in the couple's home after a relative grew worried when they did not answer the phone or the door.

Two Houston police officers searched the house and found no trace of the couple until one officer decided to open the refrigerator.

What he found "just looked like a bunch of meat. I didn't immediately know what it was," Bullock said. "Just as I was closing the door, I saw the heads through the clear glass of the vegetable bin."

Detectives learned that the couple had a reclusive son who lived in an upstairs room. In the room, they found several sophisticated shortwave radios. An immediate search was launched for Rogers, but no trace of him was ever found.

Police learned later that Rogers was a Navy veteran of World War II, had earned a bachelor's of science degree from the University of Houston and held a pilot's license. He worked as a seismologist for Shell Oil Co., but left without giving a reason — to work for the CIA, Craig says.

He contends Rogers worked as a cryptographer for naval intelligence during the war, and "had all the right credentials to be recruited by the CIA."

"At that time, it was common for agents to work for oil companies because it was a perfect cover," he said. "He was probably the best communications expert the CIA ever had.

"In the attic above his room, he had an antenna that was overlooked by police. He was using the radio to communicate with other agents," Craig said.

Craig said Rogers, who was fluent in Spanish, now lives in Guatemala. "He was very active in the anti-Castro movement and had worked on the ground there (in Cuba)."

He also said he had talked to people who flew with Rogers when he worked for Air America, the CIA's private airline. "He was known as a great pilot," he said.

Craig said friends and acquaintances identified Rogers as one of three men arrested in Dealy Plaza just minutes after Kennedy was killed on Nov. 22, 1963.

A photograph, known to Kennedy conspiracy theorists as the "tramp" picture, shows three men being led off by Dallas police officers. Craig said there was no record of the arrests and that the men were released without being questioned.

Craig said he is convinced that Rogers had some role in the death of the president.

"After the assassination, he disappeared for five months. When he resurfaced, his mother began to get suspicious about him," he said.

"He was always getting telephone calls at home and she would take messages for him. She began to become concerned about him and confided her fears to several people," he said.

Craig said he believes Rogers killed his parents because his mother confronted him about his work.

"He killed her, then he killed his father. We believe that he was going to get rid of the bodies, but was interrupted before he had a chance to do it," he said.

A homicide detective assigned to the original case said the idea that Rogers was a secret agent sounded far-fetched.

"He was a strange guy, but I don't believe that," said retired HPD Detective C.E. Smith.

Lubbock pilot killed in crash

DURANGO, Colo. (AP) — A Lubbock businessman, who flew fighter planes during World War II, died while trying to land his single-engine plane on a private air strip in southwestern Colorado, police report.

Dave H. Hampton, 77, owner of Panhandle Construction Company, died when his single-engine Cessna P-210 crashed Friday in Pagosa Springs, east of Durango, Colo. The plane struck a tree and caught fire.

Archeleta County Sheriff's Deputy Earl Gibbs said Hampton was flying alone and Archeleta County Coroner Gail Adams ruled the death an accident.

Witnesses told police the plane was flying low to the ground as it approached the runway, Gibbs said Saturday.

Hampton's wife Betty told the Lubbock (Texas) Avalanche-Journal that the plane's engine was relatively new.

The National Transportation Safety Board and Federal Aviation Administration from Denver, Colo., will investigate the crash.

An autopsy will be conducted in Durango.

FAIR: Bingo, garage sale popular events

(From 1A)

Games ranged from the traditional basketball dunking to the eclectic "Ring the Duck," which involved tossing plastic rings toward duck decoys floating around in a pool of water.

"This has been really popular," volunteer Mary Deathe said of the game, which is being given a test-run this year. "People seem to like trying to ring those ducks."

Colleen Michael and Joan Noel were running a new booth called "Fun R Whee," where kids were making masks, kites and Styrofoam tarantulas.

"We're trying a kind of experiment to see what kids can make to take home, so they don't just spend their money here and not have something to show for it," Ms. Michael said.

"They just love to slather on the paint," Noel said. "We help them, but they do most of it themselves. They get a chance to express themselves."

The school's gymnasium was filled wall to wall with bingo players most of the day.

Jan Wright, co-chairman of the game, said people were playing game after game with little regard for how small the prize.

"It's funny. They don't seem to care what they win. Some of these prizes are pretty small," Ms. Wright said, pointing to a row of picture frames and coffee mugs that were offered as booty, along with a color television set and VCR.

"They're playing because they're bingo addicts," she said. "This place is packed every year."

Another old favorite of the fair is the Ends 'n' Odds garage sale, billed as the state's largest.

Delia McGowan, running the booth, said it appeals to connoisseurs of junk and antiques alike. A line had formed at the gate to the sale booth an hour before the fair opened Saturday.

"People come in here and find stuff you can't find anywhere else," Ms. McGowan said. "We run across all kinds of stuff that's valuable and some stuff that's just unusual."

Among food offerings were "roll your own" egg rolls, barbecue and fajitas. There was live music, books for sale and homemade desserts.

Fair General Chairperson Janice Drake said the fair is more than a fundraiser.

"This is our way of establishing a community," she said. "In day-to-day living, we don't always get together. The fair is a place to do that."

What sustains the event is its volunteers, leaders said.

"It's built on volunteers," said Perkins Brasher, co-chairman. "We get a lot of help from people who donate their time and other people donate our prizes. That's how it works."

He said the fair's appeal is its diversity.

"We've got booths for the youngest kids up to teen-agers and over," Brasher said. "I'd call it something for everybody."

"Definitely," Drake said. "It's not kids only, it's not adults only. We find people are pulled in different directions all the time. This is something the whole family can do together."

Elaine Scott, who brought her son, Dustin, and nephews Eric and Brian Day, said there is another appealing element to the fair.

"It's a cheap way to have a really good time," Mrs. Scott said.

STUART: Brother indicted

questions.

Matthew Stuart and John McMahon pleaded innocent Friday to charges they helped dispose of the murder weapon, thinking they were participating in an insurance scam.

Their attorneys said they are "sacrificial lambs" offered to hundreds of people who cried out for justice in an episode that blemished police and prosecutors and victimized Boston's black community.

"When Charles Stuart took his own life, the only thing that changed was the political pressure to do something," said Nancy Gertner, Matthew Stuart's lawyer.

For two months, Charles Stuart led police and the public to believe a black man in a dark sweat suit robbed and shot him and his wife, Carol, on Oct. 23, 1989, as they left a birthing class in Boston's inner city. His gripping description of the attack in an emergency call from his car phone caught the country's attention.

Police scoured the neighborhood known as Mission Hill for a suspect, in many instances randomly stopping and frisking black men on the streets. A man fitting the general description was fingered by Stuart and police made an arrest.

The horrifying notion that a suburban couple preparing for the birth of their first child was gunned down by a black man for some jewelry and cash played on every racial stereotype.

"We were consistently maligned on a daily basis," said black leader and City Council member Bruce Bolling.

A Suffolk County grand jury indicted Matthew Stuart and McMahon after hearing from about 100 people over 22 months.

The grand jury said it believed Charles Stuart killed his wife and their unborn son, who died 17 days after the shooting. Stuart wanted to collect nearly $300,000 in insurance from his wife's death, a prosecutor said.

Matthew Stuart faces seven counts, including conspiracy to obstruct justice and conspiracy to defraud an insurance company. He could be sentenced to 32½ years in prison. McMahon was indicted on five counts, including being an accessory after the fact of murder. He could be sentenced to 24½ years.

LAW: Free legal aid available considered.

In addition to counseling, the clinic hears uncontested cases at a night court in the Casa de Amigos center.

"The judge, the attorney, the bailiff, the court reporter, the clerk and other service providers are all doing it pro bono" on a volunteer basis, said 318th District Court Judge Dean Rucker, who with 238th District Judge John Hyde, donates services to the night court.

About two-thirds of family cases at the clinic end up in night court, the remainder are contested and must be conducted at the courthouse during regular hours, Rucker said.

The case load at night court and the clinic is steadily increasing, Rucker said.

"I don't think we've scratched the tip of the iceberg on delivering these services," Rucker said. "We could use more help."

Those who donate their legal expertise do so out of a sense of ethical obligation, Rucker added.

"Because there is a need that is not being met adequately and it is the duty of our profession as attorneys," Rucker said.

The clinic is a cooperative effort that includes the Midland County Young Lawyers Association, the Midland County Women Lawyers Association, the Legal Assistants Association of the Permian Basin, the Midland Legal Secretary Association and West Texas Legal Services.

Assistance on a larger scale than the clinic is able to offer is available from West Texas Legal Services, which saw 978 people with legal problems last year.

About 40-50 percent of cases handled by Legal Services involve family law, Ms. Plummer said.

Other cases include social security disability needs, housing and real estate issues, employment discrimination, unemployment benefits, and consumer complaints such as unlawful and deceptive trade practices.

Legal Services, under federal guidelines, does not deal with criminal cases, worker's compensation, and personal injury which includes malpractice.

Applicants at Legal Services also must pass a screening process before aid is rendered.

About 20-30 clients are interviewed every Thursday at the Legal Services office.

Applicants who receive help are approximately 60 percent women, the majority white and between 20 and 40 years old with less than a high school education and have an average of three school-age children, Ms. Plummer said.

Without such legal aid available to the indigent, society would regress and a breakdown of the system would occur, she said.

Otherwise "we would have to revert back to a Puritan society in the strictest terms ... to the good Samaritan rule," Ms. Plummer said.

"Which is in effect what we (providers of free legal aid) do," she added.

U.S. maneuvering gingerly after PLO unblocks talks

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Bush administration officials said on Saturday that they were extremely pleased by the Palestine Liberation Organization's apparent endorsement of the American-sponsored peace conference, but that the hard part would now begin: juggling the PLO's desire to get increasingly involved and the Israeli government's insistence that the organization remain out of sight.

The Palestine National Council, which acts as the PLO's parliament-in-exile, ended a week of talks in Algiers on Friday by issuing a statement outlining the terms under which the PLO would be willing to take part in the peace conference, which American officials still hope to convene somewhere in Europe by the end of October.

The most important results of the Algiers meeting, from the administration's point of view, were the commitment by the PLO's executive committee to support the peace conference and what seemed to be a go-ahead for Palestinians from the West Bank and Gaza Strip to join with the PLO in assembling a joint delegation with Jordan for the conference.

Up to now, the PLO had virtually blocked movement toward forming a joint Jordanian-Palestinian delegation by refusing to endorse the conference.

Referring to the council's final declaration, a senior administration official said: "It is the kind of outcome that is designed by the PLO to make it clear that they want to see the conference take place. There had been a red light out there up to now. They blocked people from the territories from negotiating with Jordan.

"Now they have flashed a yellow light," he said. "The question is how fast they will move to put together a joint delegation and how high a profile the PLO will take."

The PLO chairman, Yasser Arafat, clearly forced the council to adopt ambiguous language on its involvement in forming a joint delegation. The council declared that the PLO maintained the "right" to form its delegation from Palestinians in and outside the occupied territories, including Jerusalem. What it did not specify is whether it would exercise that right in full.

The answer to that question, Bush administration officials say, may well determine whether the conference even takes place. Administration officials are hoping that Arafat and the PLO will quietly recede into the background, letting non-PLO West Bank leaders travel to Jordan and form a joint delegation with King Hussein that includes only the Palestinians acceptable to Israel.

That would allow Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir of Israel to maintain that he is not negotiating with the PLO, even though the organization would be pulling strings in the background.

What American officials fear is that the PLO will insist on sending its own delegation to Amman, either to negotiate the makeup of the joint delegation with Jordan or to play a high-profile role in having the West Bankers do so. Such a display could provoke Shamir to abandon the conference, or at least give him an excuse to do so. The higher the profile taken by the PLO in planning the talks, the more pressure Shamir will face from right-wingers to pull out of the conference or let his government fall.

Israel has always conditioned its participation in the talks on the exclusion of the PLO and on limiting the Palestinian representatives to those it finds acceptable. Israel has said that they must be from the occupied West Bank or Gaza Strip; they cannot be from East Jerusalem or have ties to the PLO.

In addition to coming up with a satisfactory Palestinian negotiating team, Secretary of State James A. Baker III must finish giving each of the parties letters of assurance on the terms of the conference and on the United States' position on possible outcomes. American officials are fairly confident that the letters will not be a problem if the issue of Palestinian representation can be worked out.

Baker is expected to return to the Middle East in mid-October for an open-ended trip in which he would try to complete the letters and obtain an accord on the Palestinian delegation, so President Bush and President Mikhail S. Gorbachev could then jointly issue invitations.

"The good news is that the pieces keep falling into place, and there is a certain momentum building up that will be hard for any one party to stand in the way of," the administration official said.

Bucharest is calm after security forces disperse protest

BUCHAREST, Romania (NYT) — The city was calm on Saturday after Romanian security forces moved into University Square at dawn, using tear gas to disperse the protesters and coal miners who had remained there after three days of rioting.

A 24-year-old student who was killed in rioting Wednesday night was buried on Saturday. About 200 mourners hailed him as a national hero.

The crowd in University Square, which numbered in the thousands Friday night, had dwindled to several hundred by dawn. In an attempt to prevent new rioting, police officers fired tear gas at those still there.

The group consisted mostly of Bucharest residents who supported the miners' call for the resignation of the National Salvation Front government. The miners, who arrived from the Jiu Valley Wednesday demanding better pay and working conditions, were no longer in evidence on Saturday morning.

(Riot police officers on Saturday night fired tear gas, rubber bullets and firecrackers at demonstrators and passers-by to prevent further unrest, Reuters reported.

(Witnesses said security forces had aimed at random at strollers after storming a group of fewer than 100 youths who had gathered to try to rekindle the unrest.)

The unrest prompted Prime Minister Petre Roman to announce his resignation Thursday, and talks continued on Saturday between opposition party leaders and President Ion Iliescu on the formation of a new government, the Romanian radio said.

Iliescu remains in power despite the protesters' calls for his ouster. The miners failed to carry out their threat to remain in the streets until he resigns.

But the Mining Trade Union Confederation continued a general strike, the state radio said. The union, which does not include Jiu Valley mine workers, was demanding government subsidies and a halt to the closure of unprofitable mines.

Like the strike, the Bucharest rioting was prompted by rising inflation and unemployment.

Saturday's funeral for Andrei Frumusanu, the engineering student who was buried at Ghencea Cemetery, was a forum for criticism of the government.

Mobuto, opposition agree to form coalition

KINSHASA, Zaire (AP) — President Mobutu Sese Seko agreed Saturday to form a coalition government with the opposition after five days of rioting that led French and Belgian troops to evacuate foreigners.

It was the first time in Mobutu's 26 years of iron rule that he has agreed to share power with the opposition in the Central African country. The collapse of the former Belgian colony's economy, brought on in part by widespread corruption, weakened his grip on power.

France, another former colonial power that maintains a major role on the continent, said it refused to provide aid unless Mobutu agreed to the new government.

More talks were scheduled for Sunday, when ministers were to be named for the so-called government of national crisis.

France began scaling back its military forces, but indicated it may leave troops in the country after the evacuation of Americans and other foreigners who wish to depart. Hundreds were flying out on Saturday.

The meeting, at Mobutu's presidential palace, were his first talks with the opposition since mutinous soldiers led bloody rioting Monday and Tuesday in Kinshasa. The unrest later spread to other parts of the country.

State-run Radio Zaire reported official figures of 117 people dead and 156 injured in Kinshasa and other cities. A French paratrooper was the only foreigner confirmed killed.

At least 60 people were reported killed in Kinshasa alone, but there were fears of three times that many. At least 1,750 people were injured, said the Paris-based relief agency Medecines Sans Frontieres, or Doctors Without Borders.

French and Belgians held key points of Kinshasa on Saturday, and the city was mostly calm. Kinshasa's international airport, controlled by the European soldiers, reopened Friday to civilian traffic. The opposition demanded that a dusk-to-dawn curfew end by Sunday night.

Failure to pay the soldiers last Monday sparked the riots. Mobutu's cabinet Friday approved pay raises, but opposition figures said new unrest could result Monday if the payroll is not met.

The Zaire National Association of Enterprises on Saturday estimated the damage from the rioting at $20 million.

During his five-hour meeting with the opposition, Mobutu, 66, also agreed that a national conference on democratic reforms that broke up in acrimony earlier this month could reconvene on Tuesday.

It was expected that Etienne Tshisekedi, leader of the opposition group Union for Democracy and Social Progress, would be named prime minister on Sunday.

Tshisekedi, 58, was interior minister before Mobutu seized power in a military coup in 1965.

He refused the job of prime minister when Mobutu offered it in July, saying it held no real power. But on Saturday he said he would accept.

Mobutu has been under pressure from France to accept a transition government. French Ambassador Herni Rethore reiterated Saturday that France wanted "a transition toward a better system of government, and a democratic system" and praised Tshisekedi.

The ambassador, who met twice with Mobutu in the past two days, told reporters that economic aid to Zaire would be impossible unless Mobutu accepted a new government. It must restore order, feed the population, and re-establish the trust of both the population and creditor nations, Rethore said.

Nomination will spur senator's scrutiny

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The Senate Judiciary Committee's deadlocked vote on Judge Clarence Thomas' nomination says less about its prospects on the Senate floor next week than about deep reservations among some lawmakers over his fitness to serve as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court.

Despite the committee's 7-7 vote on Friday over whether to recommend his confirmation, Thomas' fate does not appear in doubt because his lifetime appointment hinges only on his hanging on to a bare majority of 51 votes. And unlike other presidential appointees who squeak by in committee or in the full Senate and then lose influence in the administration, Thomas will not see his ultimate authority diminished once he is seated.

Yet a less-than-overwhelming endorsement from lawmakers on the committee underscores their uneasiness about his fitness for the job.

If Thomas wins a seat on the court, it would be the first time in history that the Senate approved a Supreme Court nominee who did not get a positive recommendation from the Judiciary Committee. Before Friday, the panel had never sent a Supreme Court nomination to the floor with no recommendation.

For that reason, a nomination that just a few days ago seemed a foregone conclusion promises now, at the very least, to spur more rhetorical confrontation on the Senate floor and force more scrutiny by all senators.

If Democratic opponents succeed in galvanizing their forces, they can turn what could have been an overwhelming vote for Thomas into a narrow one.

And, as Sen. Terry Sanford, D-N.C., pointed out Saturday, "You're always in trouble until the last vote is counted."

Indeed, senators like Sanford who are uncommitted are thinking twice about how to vote.

In a telephone interview from his home in Durham, Sanford said he was spending the weekend reviewing videotapes of Thomas' testimony and transcripts of comments by witnesses.

More significant than the tie vote, he said, was that the nomination was opposed by Sen. ator Howell Heflin, a conservative Democrat from Alabama.

"After my initial interview with Judge Thomas," Sanford said, "I had concluded that he was considerably unprepared academically and intellectually for the Supreme Court but that he might just mature into an adequate Constitutional scholar. I thought it was a risk that might be worth taking. "Since Senator Heflin's appraisal, there's a new impetus to look at it again."

Sen. James M. Jeffords, R-Vt., who says he fears that Thomas would vote to overturn the 1973 Supreme Court decision establishing a constitutional right to abortion, said the committee's vote has caused him to examine the nomination more carefully.

"Certainly, if it was much closer to unanimous, with more of the moderate liberals voting with him, then I would feel much easier to say, 'OK, I'll support him,'" Jeffords said.

While the committee's deadlock re-energized the opposition, the fact remains that there was no single revelation in the hearings that is likely to fundamentally change the way most senators had intended to vote.

In order to defeat Thomas, some Democrats who have already declared their support for his nomination would have to switch their positions.

More significant are the misgivings expressed by lawmakers, reflected in the committee vote, about the kind of justice that Thomas would make.

Even most Democratic members of the Judiciary Committee seemed hopeful that they could support him, but in the end, only one of the eight, Dennis DeConcini of Arizona, did.

After two weeks of hearings and many more days of scrutiny of Thomas' record, even a Republican on the committee, Sen. Hank Brown of Colorado, conceded in an interview: "I just don't have a good feeling of where he's going to come out on all the issues."

His support of Thomas, the senator added, "is basically a judgment to his personal character and his qualifications."

Even if along partisan lines, a tie vote in committee on a presidential appointment is not an everyday occurrence. In many cases, when the Judiciary Committee is deadlocked over a presidential appointment, it kills the nomination outright.

The tie on Friday sent White House officials scrambling to contain any fallout while opponents, seeking to build on the momentum, stepped up lobbying against the 43-year-old Thomas, who now sits on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

In order to make their cases, both sides were orchestrating efforts to have more senators announce their positions early next week.

The immediate battle is over timing. Senate leaders said they have scheduled the floor vote for late next week.

Virginia Governor L. Douglas Wilder, left, gestures as he and Jesse Jackson answer reporter's questions outside the Governor's Mansion at the Capitol in Richmond, Va.

Summit meeting is more dance, than discussion

RICHMOND, Va. (NYT) — Gov. L. Douglas Wilder, who is running for president, and the Rev. Jesse Jackson, who is thinking about running, held a summit meeting in Richmond that was more a political dance than a discussion.

The two Democrats, both black, both angling for the party's black voters, had a private breakfast of bran muffins, juice and coffee, then emerged for an hour-long news conference in which they alternately hugged, mugged and fired political zingers at each other.

As is often the case with summits, whether in world or state capitals, it was never quite clear why this one was called or what it accomplished, although a strong current of political one-upmanship seemed to course through the proceedings.

"The leadership of the '80s cannot be the leadership of the '90s," said Wilder, a centrist, as he shared the microphones with Jackson, an uncompromising liberal who twice sought the presidency in the 1980s.

For his part, Jackson said, "My support base today is broader than it was three years ago."

With exchanges like those, a case could almost be made that the first debate of the 1992 political season occurred Saturday shortly before noon under the magnolias and live oaks in front of Virginia's stately executive mansion.

Among the subjects covered were school financing, labor laws, health care, voting rights, poverty and statehood for the District of Columbia.

Wilder and Jackson have an intense ideological and stylistic rivalry that goes back the better part of a decade. And both have a long history of seldom ducking a testy confrontaton or an array of microphones.

10 members of violent gang indicted

NEW YORK (NYT) — Ten members of a violent Vietnamese gang, including the man said to be its leader, were indicted last week on federal racketeering charges linking them to robbery, murder and a foiled bombing of a restaurant in lower Manhattan's Chinatown.

Gangs have been a fixture in Chinatown for generations, but the violence of this 70-member gang, called "Born to Kill," created ripples of fear in Asian neighborhoods around the metropolitan area.

Its members, mostly in their late teens and early 20s, are known for terrorizing restaurant owners, storekeepers and other merchants.

Formed within the last three years, the gang — which took its name from a slogan painted on some U.S. infantry helmets during the Vietnam War — gained notoriety last year when a funeral in New Jersey for a member was shattered by gunfire from a rival gang. Seven people were struck by bullets and others were hurt trying to escape.

Less than a month later, Vinh Vu, said to be the gang's second in command, was shot to death on a Chinatown street corner.

The man who the authorities say is the leader of Born to Kill, David Thai, 35, was arrested on robbery charges in an early morning raid on a house in Melville, N.Y., in August. Two men described as Thai's lieutenants were also arrested on similar charges.

Two blazes reported contained

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK, Calif. (AP) — Two forest fires that spewed smoke into Yosemite Valley this week have been contained.

A fire that blackened 3,814 acres near Glacier Point was contained at 6 p.m. Friday, reported Kris Fister, a park spokeswoman. It had forced closure of Glacier Point Road briefly and some hiking trails.

"Basically, mop-up activity will continue today," Fister said Saturday.

A separate fire in the Hetch Hetchy area of the park was contained earlier at 1,920 acres.

Both fires were caused by lightning early this month and were only monitored until they began to pour smoke onto the valley floor this week. No people or buildings were in danger.

Jazz legend Miles Davis dies at 65

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Miles Davis, one of America's finest jazz trumpeters and the most consistent trendsetter in jazz history, died Saturday. He was 65.

Davis

Davis died of pneumonia, respiratory failure and stroke, Dr. Jeff Harris said in a statement read by Pat Kirk of St. John's Hospital and Health Center, where Davis was admitted earlier this month.

Davis was the most famous trumpeter in his generation, in the line of jazz trumpeters that stretched from Louis Armstrong to Dizzy Gillespie to Wynton Marsalis.

He was the innovator of more distinct styles than any other jazz musician. He pioneered in cool jazz, hard bop, modal playing, free-form explorations and use of electronics.

"You can really say he turned the whole jazz world around," said Leonard Feather, a longtime friend and author of "The Encyclopedia of Jazz."

"He just had a guiding principle: Move ahead. ... Don't do what you were doing yesterday," Feather said.

"He played some of the most musical passages ever played on the trumpet, some of the most beautiful, intervals you just don't hear any more," said trumpeter Clark Terry, who took Davis to jam sessions in St. Louis when Davis was a teen-ager.

"He seemed to be able to turn anything into something good," said drummer Max Roach, a longtime friend. "He was musically one of the restless ones, constantly seeking."

He was an astounding spotter and developer of talent, providing the springboard that brought many players to prominence. Tony Williams was just 18 when Davis hired him in 1963; Herbie Hancock was 23 when he joined the same year.

In his 1989 autobiography, "Miles," he wrote: "To be and stay a great musician you've got to always be open to what's new, what's happening at the moment. You have to be able to absorb it if you're going to continue to grow and communicate your music."

Walt Disney World celebrates 20th anniversary

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (AP) — Groves and pine forests that once covered this area were nice, but their transformation over 20 years into a huge tourist playground has given central Florida something to celebrate.

Four days of parades, parties and speeches began Saturday to mark Disney World's 20th anniversary Tuesday. President Bush will visit Monday. Walt Disney's brother, Roy, will join Michael Eisner, chairman of the parent Walt Disney Co., for a rededication ceremony Tuesday.

Walt Disney World began as the Magic Kingdom, a theme park featuring Mickey Mouse and his pals. Now, the complex is twice the size of Manhattan and the region's largest employer.

"Disney has generated employment, new business, an increased standard of living, tax revenues ... and it has impacted on the culture and lifestyle of virtually everyone in the area," said Ady Milman, acting director of the Dick Pope Sr. Institute for Tourism Studies at the University of Central Florida.

Growth problems surrounding Disney's 27,400 acres, including choked roads, massive development and burdened utilities, didn't prevent some of the company's neighbors from praising its presence.

"Disney has had an enormous impact, of course, and by and large it's been positive," said Linda Chapin, chairman of the Orange County Commission.

Jim Swan, chairman of the Osceola County Commission, has opposed some of Disney's expansion policies in the past.

He said Disney created "enormous opportunities" and added: "Anytime you have a major industry of that magnitude, there's an awful lot of spinoff benefits, and also a lot of negatives. We are now trying to fix some of the negatives."

Orlando Mayor Bill Frederick added: "I feel fortunate to have Disney as a neighbor in our back yard."

The complex is a city itself, including three theme parks, 18 hotels, a nightclub entertainment complex, three golf courses, a water park, a campground, convention facilities, lakes, landscaped vistas, undeveloped woods, trams, a monorail, horse-drawn wagons and buses.

A daily admission ticket to either the Magic Kingdom, Epcot Center or the Disney-MGM Studios costs $34.85 for an adult and $27.45 for a child under 10. Four- and five-day passes include admission to all three theme parks and other attractions.

The complex went from providing 5,500 jobs in 1971 to about 33,000. More than 60,000 employees are projected by the turn of the century. By contrast, the region's second-biggest company, Martin-Marietta Corp., has 13,000 employees.

Disney publicists said 80 million people have made 350 million visits to the complex since it opened.

Labor political aides renovate office that was just remodeled

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two political appointees at the Labor Department are spending nearly $37,000 on office improvements, including renovating one that had been remodeled just a year earlier at taxpayer expense.

The agency defended the renovations for Steve Hofman, the new assistant secretary of public affairs, and Fran McNaught, who runs the agency's congressional affairs office, as an appropriate "investment."

But a Washington group that scrutinizes federal spending, the Government Purchasing Project, criticized the expense.

"I would say that's pretty outrageous," said researcher Eric Weltman. "They're saying they don't have funding for assisting people out of work, and they're spending all this money for a renovation."

The Bush administration, including Labor Secretary Lynn Martin, has cited budget restraints in rejecting pending legislation that would extend benefits to America's long-term unemployed.

Both Hofman and McNaught, who had ties to Martin when she served as a Republican congresswoman from Illinois, were brought to the Labor Department by Martin after she came in February.

Hofman decided to move his office, formerly near Martin's, to the public affairs office where day-to-day press operations are conducted.

He said he needed to be near some of the 65 employees he oversees in the $4-million-a-year division to provide a "leadership infusion."

Renovations to the press office cost nearly $10,000, but the total cost actually was more than $25,000, because it involved relocating staffers who lost their space with Hofman's move.

The public affairs office was redone a year ago at a cost of about $17,000.

McNaught, meanwhile, kept her office near Martin's, but moved a wall to make it bigger. In addition, she is turning Hofman's old office into a conference room. The total cost: over $11,000.

Thomas Komarek, assistant secretary for administration and management, approved the renovations. He said both jobs were relatively low cost and sound investments.

Hybl gets nod

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — William J. Hybl, co-chairman of George Bush's 1988 campaign in Colorado, has been elected interim president of the U.S. Olympic committee to replace Robert H. Helmick, who resigned.

Hybl, who has been involved in the Olympic movement for the past 10 years, is chairman and chief executive officer of El Pomar Foundation, a Colorado Springs-based philanthropic organization. He will serve as USOC president until the next election in October 1992, the USOC announced Saturday.

Hybl said he would not seek re-election after his term expires.

He was elected in a mail vote that ended Friday.

No vote totals were announced, but two-thirds of the USOC's Board of Directors 101 members had to approve the voting procedures and a simple majority had to approve his nomination.

Helmick, a Des Moines lawyer, resigned as USOC president Sept. 18 because of conflict of interest allegations.

Frogs leap Tech

Gill to Hill not enough to beat undefeated TCU

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

LUBBOCK – Gill to Hill almost became the catch phrase of the night Saturday at Jones Stadium.

However, Texas Tech quarterback Jamie Gill was unable to connect with former Odessa Permian receiver Lloyd Hill when it counted most, as Texas Christian remained unbeaten and spoiled a Red Raider homecoming bash 30-16.

Hill came back from a twisted knee suffered in the first game of the year against Cal State-Fullerton, catching five passes for 85 yards to lead the pass-oriented Raiders.

Even with Tech behind by 14 points with less than five minutes to play, Gill to Hill teamed up for a 48-yarder that set the Raiders up at the TCU 26. However, the Horned Frog defense tighened, and eventually broke up a fourth-down pass intended for Hill in triple coverage at the goal line.

After a last-gasp 41-yard pass intended for Hill in the end zone was intercepted by Anthony Hickman with 31 seconds left, the Frogs had sealed their first 4-0 start since 1955.

"I saw Lloyd on the back side and it was just one of those deals; I just didn't see him (Hickman) and shouldn't have made the throw. I know that sounds silly, but I was just trying to make something happen," Gill said.

Hill was pleased with his return from the disabled list, but the loss was hard to take.

"I feel pretty good about coming back off the injury, but I'm hurting down inside right now," Hill said. "I knew I was getting open, but he can't look at me all the time. TCU had two people on me."

The loss, which dropped Tech to 1-3, was just as sour for Raider head coach Spike Dykes.

"TCU, I tell ya', you've got to commend them. We had a good first half but

LOS ANGELES — Brett Butler admitted he was glad to see Don Robinson relieve Dave Righetti with one out and the bases loaded in the bottom of the ninth inning Saturday. He wasn't so happy two batters later.

Robinson earned his first save since 1988 by pitching out of trouble and the San Francisco Giants played the role of spoilers by beating the Los Angeles Dodgers 4-1.

Trevor Wilson allowed three hits in seven innings and Will Clark hit a two-run homer in cutting the Dodgers' lead in the NL West to one game over Atlanta, which beat Houston 5-4. Each contender has seven games left.

Robinson, a right-hander, came in after Righetti, a left-hander, walked the bases loaded with one out in the ninth.

That brought up Butler, with Lenny Harris and Darryl Strawberry to follow. All hit left-handed.

"I was really surprised that I was up and going in with all those left-handers coming up," Robinson said. "But when I saw Rags walk the third guy, I figured there might be a chance I'd be in the game. I haven't been in that situation, being a stopper, since 1988, so I was a little pumped."

Robinson, used as a starter and a middle reliever this season, retired Butler on a popup that shortstop Mike Benjamin caught on the run and got Harris on a fly ball to end the game with Strawberry in the on-deck circle.

"I was glad that Robinson came in," Butler said. "I feel comfortable that I can hit off him. I would rather face him than Righetti. (But) it was a situation where (Giants manager) Roger (Craig) knows best, Donnie came in and got us out."

Butler hit a 2-2 pitch, while Harris hit Robinson's second pitch.

"I'm going to throw strikes," Robinson said, "and they're going to have to beat me by hitting the ball."

Righetti, who has a team-high 24 saves, said he had never walked three straight hitters in the majors before.

"I don't know what happened," he said. "I just didn't throw strikes. I think I'd been on the mound about once in the last 10 days, so maybe the

Bryan sets pace in intercity golf

■ The Tall City increases its commanding lead in the Midland-Odessa Intercity Golf Championship.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

ODESSA — A handful of Midland golfers could legitimately be thought of as the city's best in recent memory. Only one, though, is having the kind of season Larry Bryan, Jr., is having.

Bryan owns 1991. The winner of this year's Midland Men's City Championship, the Midland Lee graduate and Abilene Christian University golfer holds a seven-stroke lead after two rounds at the first ever Midland-Odessa Intercity championship Saturday at Ratliff Ranch Golf Course in Odessa.

On a golf course he hasn't set foot on in two years, Bryan proved Saturday he's never met a layout he's ever forgotten, firing a five-under par 67, one stroke shy of the course record, held by Ratliff golf pro Mike Stanfield.

Still with a seemingly comfortable seven strokes up on second place finisher Steve Whiteside, Bryan said he'll have to hook 'em to notch his second victory of the year.

"Anytime you've got people like Steve Whiteside in a tournament, no lead's too big," Bryan said.

Ironic as it may be, Bryan, Whiteside and fellow Midlander Bill Baker are atop the leader board with one round to play. It was that same three that finished atop the Midland championship early last month.

Whiteside was in after 36 holes at 142, Baker a shot behind him at 143.

Teamwise, Midland jumped out to an 77-stroke lead over Odessa's representatives. With 18 holes to play, Midland's overall field in the five flights has taken 3,864 strokes, the Odessans are in at 3,941.

A travelling trophy will be presented to the winning team.

Europeans pull back into Ryder Cup tie

Associated Press

KIAWAH ISLAND, S.C. — Europe, dominating fourball play as it has has in recent years, rallied from three points back and tied the United States 8-8 Saturday going into the final round of the 29th Ryder Cup.

The Europeans, defending the old silver cup they've held since 1985, won 3½ of a possible four points in the afternoon fourball play, an American jinx for eight years.

Payne Stewart and Fred Couples prevented a sweep on the windswept Ocean course by getting one-half point against the greatest pairing in Ryder Cup history, Seve Ballesteros and Jose Maria Olazabal of Spain.

The tie in Saturday's final match, concluded in near darkness along the South Carolina coast, left the teams even going into Sunday's 12 singles matches. Europe retains the Cup if there is a tie, as there was in 1989.

"We have a history of trouble in that format," American captain Dave Stockton said of fourball. "I don't know why. I really don't understand it."

Since 1985, when the Europeans began dominating the competition the United States once ruled, Europe lead 23½-8½ in fourball: matches scored on the better ball each two-man team. That includes a 6-2 advantage this year.

The United States took a 7½-4½ lead after a 3-1 edge in morning foursomes, where each member of a two-man team plays alternate shots on the same ball.

But the first three afternoon matches ended on the 17th green, and Europe won them all. Masters champion Ian Woosnam of Wales and clutch-putting Paul Broadhurst of England beat Paul Azinger and Hale Irwin 2 and 1, Bernhard Langer of Germany and Colin Montgomerie of Scotland beat Corey Pavin and Steve Pate 2 and 1, and Mark James and Steve Richardson of England

Michigan receiver Desmond Howard dives to make one of his two touchdown catches Saturday against Florida State. The Seminoles prevailed, however, 51-31.

■ Top-ranked Florida State wins a wild one in Ann Arbor.

Associated Press

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Master magician Bobby Bowden used a few of his trademark tricks to make Michigan disappear on Saturday.

Two sleight-of-hand plays, including a shovel pass from Brad Johnson to William Floyd on a fake field goal, sparked top-ranked Florida State to a 51-31 victory over the No. 3 Wolverines in a wild and wacky game at Michigan Stadium.

It was the most points ever scored against Michigan (2-1) at home and the second-highest total in a game in over a century, topped only by Northwestern's 55-24 victory in 1958.

Bowden's Seminoles (4-0) took the lead for good at 13-7 on the fake kick with 7:36 left in the first quarter. Johnson, a backup quarterback who holds on kicks, took the snap and shoveled a 4-yard pass to Floyd, who ran in it for the touchdown.

The score was set up by another trick play earlier in the drive. Casey Weldon took a quick drop and threw the ball straight across the field to third-string quarterback Charlie Ward, who then passed it back to Weldon, who then ran 29 yards to the Michigan 11.

Amp Lee ran for two touchdowns and and six other Seminoles scored one apiece as Florida State extended the nation's longest winning streak to 10 and snapped Michigan's victory string at eight.

Desmond Howard made two circus touchdown catches but it wasn't nearly enough for the Wolverines, whose size and strength advantage wasn't enough to overcome Florida State's shiftiness and speed.

The Seminoles led 31-23 after a frantic first half that featured two trick plays,

Miami brings Tulsa back to reality, 34-10

TULSA, Okla. — Stephen McGuire scored twice and Gino Torretta threw two short touchdown passes as No. 2 Miami brought Tulsa back to reality with a 34-10 victory Saturday.

Torretta, who completed 20 of 33 passes for 327 yards, threw touchdown passes of 1 and 3 yards as the Hurricanes (3-0) broke the game open in the second quarter by scoring three touchdowns in a span of 6 minutes, 22 seconds.

Tulsa (3-2), which rallied from an 18-point halftime deficit to beat Texas A&M a week ago, never had a chance against bigger, faster Miami.

Chris Hughley rushed 30 times for 147 yards for Tulsa, but he had only two runs of as much as 10 yards and got most of his yardage in Tulsa territory.

T.J. Rubley threw for 189 yards and a touchdown but the Golden Hurricane crossed midfield just six times in the game.

SEATTLE — Billy Joe Hobert threw three touchdown passes, two to Mario Bailey, and Jay Barry ran for two touchdowns as Washington buried Kansas State.

Hobert, a sophomore who became Washington's starting quarterback when Rose Bowl MVP Mark Brunell was sidelined by an injured right knee in spring practice, passed for more than 200 yards for the third straight game.

In three quarters, Hobert completed 13 of 18 passes for 234 yards. He had a 71-yard touchdown pass to Bailey in the first quarter, a 32-yarder to Bailey in the third quarter and also passed 28 yards to Orlando McKay for a score in the second quarter.

That gave Hobert six touchdown passes for Washington (3-0).

Gundy's 3-yard run late in the third quarter gave the Sooners (3-0) a 27-10 lead, and Oklahoma then held off a late rally by the Hokies (1-3).

Virginia Tech, after recovering a fumble at the Oklahoma 27, scored on a 5-yard pass from Will Furrer to John Rivers midway through the final quarter. Then the Hokies drove to the Oklahoma 22 with less than four minutes left, but an interception in the end zone by Darnell Walker ended the threat.

Derek Brown caught Mirer's two scoring passes and Jerome Bettis scored on runs of 6 and 2 yards to lead the Irish (3-1), who scored twice after recovering Purdue fumbles and once after a pass interception.

SEMINOLES: Speed prevails over Michigan's superior size

two kicks bouncing off the crossbar, five failed extra-point conversions and five scores before either team had to punt.

Florida State blew it open on a pair of TD passes by Weldon, a 20-yarder to Eric Turral for the only score in the third period and a 10-yarder to Lonnie Johnson with 6:28 remaining in the game.

Michigan, which lost its sixth straight game against a No. 1 team, pulled to 44-31 on a 16-yard pass from Elvis Grbac to Yale VanDyne with 4:58 left. But the Seminoles sealed the victory when Toddrick McIntosh returned an interception 49 yards for a touchdown with 3:35 to go.

A key interception by Terrell Buckley helped Florida State prevent a Michigan comeback.

Burke's warning is always valid

After the destruction of the Berlin Wall, the sweeping democratic revolution in Eastern Europe, even the very fall of communism inside the Soviet Union, one might wonder if evil has been conquered in the world. Or are there other vestiges of hatred and tyranny still to be overcome?

Oh, yes, religious leaders and classical literature assure us. Not only is evil still alive in the world, even after the fall of the Soviet Communist Party, but its forces are continually battling the forces of good, striving to gain a toehold from which to wield corrupting influence.

That has long been the contention of philosophers and moralists. Edmund Burke, the 18th century Irish-born philosopher and British statesman, asserted that, "The only thing necessary for the triumph of evil is for good men to do nothing." That harmonizes well with an adage from earlier in American history which stated that "idle hands are the Devil's workshop."

Yes, there will always be tyranny as long as men seek to hold despotic power over other men and to control aspects of their lives that should not be subject to the whims of any ruler. That lust has been witnessed in recent weeks in Iraq, where Saddam Hussein has sought to hold on to power and to continue to threaten neighboring countries as well as nations around the world. When he began to play with an international holocaust in the form of nuclear weapons, Saddam became the concern of George Bush as well as other leaders around the world. Saddam's desire for power became tyrannical and his designs deadly, and while the sovereignty of nations must always be assured, threats that become international in scope must be addressed, just as the United States led the international force against Saddam in the Persian Gulf War.

There will always be good and evil in the world, Biblical and classical teachings assert. In this world, which is seemingly shrinking with every passing year, we must remain ever mindful of Burke's warning that evil can flourish if good men do nothing.

'Wetlands' changes anger some purists

Some environmentalists are outraged at President Bush, accusing him of a campaign-pledge violation that rivals his "no new taxes" fiasco of last year.

In 1988 candidate Bush promised to follow a policy of "no net loss of wetlands" as part of his bid to become the "environmental president." But there was a fine print to the pledge: Whether the country experiences a net loss of wetlands depends, of course, on how you define a wetland.

The earlier wetlands definition Bush revised was unnecessarily restrictive. When it was instituted, 100 million acres of land, much of it privately owned, was deemed "wetlands" and thus became subject to government control overnight. Farmers, homeowners and — yes — businessmen suddenly found their property essentially confiscated.

The new policy defines a wetland as being saturated at its surface for 21 consecutive days during growing season, or holding standing water for 15 consecutive days a year. That sounds pretty wet to us.

It's a reasonable accommodation, balancing, as too many environmental purists neglect to do, the need for wetland preservation with the desire for a growing economy.

Complaint about Baylor isn't 'baring' all facts!

Baylor University has come under fire from a wildlife advocate for continuing to have a live bear as a school mascot.

Baylor, whose teams are called the Bears, have two live bears housed and cared for in what is affectionately called the Bear Pit.

The bears are not abused. Indeed, they are treated well and are very popular with the students and with visitors to the campus.

When the bears get more than 2 years old, they are not used for campus appearances any more because they are too hard to control outside their habitats. The older bears are donated to zoos or wildlife parks.

We're for the humane treatment of animals, but we fail to see how keeping well-fed and well-attended bears on a university campus is inhumane.

Some years back there was a rash of concern about bares on campus, but this is the first time we've heard this particular complaint.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Sept. 29, the 272 day of 1991. There are 93 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Sept. 29, 1789, the U.S. War Department established a regular army with a strength of several hundred men.

On this date:

In 1758, English Admiral Horatio Nelson was born in Burnham Thorpe.

In 1829, London's re-organized police force, which became known as Scotland Yard, went on duty.

In 1902, impresario David Belasco opened his first Broadway theater.

Ceausescus mark height of stupidity

WASHINGTON — In the garden of the Spring Palace in northern Bucharest stands a monument to the stupidity of Nicolae and Elena Ceausescu. It is a replica of the Venus de Milo statue, presented to Romania's former first couple by someone who overestimated Elena's taste.

Anderson

"What did you bring me?" she shrieked at the sight of the statue. "A naked woman without any arms?"

Now, in a small glass house in the palace garden is a one-of-a-kind Venus de Milo complete with added arms and hands that reach across to cover her breasts and pubic area.

The same garish taste pervades the Palutal Primaverii (Spring Palace) — the 40-room mansion where the Ceausescus lived until they were executed on Christmas Day 1989.

We took a rare private tour of the palace, buying our way in with "Kent 100" cigarettes, the brand that has had more buying power than hard cash in Romania for the last decade.

Our overriding thought was not of Ceausescu, but of Ronald Reagan and George Bush, whose misguided foreign policy treated Ceausescu like a friend. His faults were forgiven, even the human rights abuses against his own people, because he was a maverick communist who stood up to the Soviet Union.

Bush continues to receive accolades for his foreign policy, but it is useful to remember that the two wars he has begun, in Panama and Iraq, were both against dictators whom Bush and Reagan nurtured until they became too malignant to tolerate any more. The line on Ceausescu was the same. In 1983, then-Vice President Bush hailed him as "the good communist."

This simple-minded foreign policy — the enemy of my enemy is my friend — ignored the horrendous conditions that the Ceausescus imposed on their people while living like royalty. They were the Ferdinand and Imelda Marcos of Eastern Europe, only malevolent.

Elena Ceausescu, during the kangaroo court that preceded their execution, tried to maintain the fiction that they lived like simple peasants. "We live in a normal apartment," she insisted, "just like every other citizen."

The two royal residents never lacked for food either. While his people stood in bread lines, Ceausescu was selling Romanian food abroad to satisfy his foreign creditors. At home, the Ceausescus had literally tons of meat in their freezers — as much of it stored away for their dogs as for themselves. The two pet Labradors, Corbu and Sharuna, were bathed in warm water — a luxury for the average Romanian — in bathrooms with gold taps, gold towel racks, gold toilet-paper holders and even gold toilet brushes.

When the Ceausescus left the palace, the route of their nine-car motorcade was sealed off and people on the streets were ordered to freeze in place. Pedestrians seethed with anger at the passing Ceausescus, who had rationed gasoline and virtually banned private cars.

The only other resident of the complex, in a separate bungalow, was Ceausescu's aging mother. When revolutionaries overran the palace in December 1989, the Ceausescus fled Bucharest in a helicopter with nary a thought for the 102-year-old woman's safety. In the confusion, she wandered the grounds in her nightgown and was finally taken to a hospital where she died a few days later.

Nearly everyone we met in Romania wanted to know how our president could have befriended and supported this dictator.

Soviet direction tests English language

A couple of years ago, when the CIA was still persuaded that the Soviet gross national product was growing, a former high official of that agency called me with a contrarian tip: "You want to consider the possibility of the first disintegration of a superpower." My nameless (actually, he has a name), my unidentified (he has an identity, too), my publicity-averse source added: "Some disunionists like you should give some thought to methods for the republics to confederate."

Safire

Confederate? I have written extensively about Confederates, capitalized, as the Southerners called themselves during the Civil War, and have a few confederates of my own, though these peer-groupies now go by the name of colleagues, associates or confreres. However, I had never used the word as a verb; as is my wont, I asked my source what the difference was between confederate and federate. He said only to mark his words (actually, to stop marking his words), that the Soviet internal monolith would one day break up.

(Why am I still protecting my source? Sources these days are eager to be identified. This one is Herbert Meyer, now publisher of Storm King Press in Friday Harbor, Wash., formerly Bill Casey's favorite analyst at the CIA. All of us in the pundit dodge have to reexamine our oaths in the Era of Credited Leaks and give names to the sources who were right; the other guys I forget.)

So now all we hear is how the former Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, then the Union of Soviet Sovereign Republics and now who knows what to call it, has become a loose confederation of states. The adjective loose, formerly married to woman, is remarried to confederation in all chin-pulling Kremlinology.

In 1789, the United States went from a confederation to a federation in the minds of the Northern states, but still retained the characteristics of a confederation to Southerners, who thought in 1860 that the union could be dissolved. When the Southern states seceded, they called their own grouping a confederation to make this very point, but did not put a right to secede in their own Constitution; the ambiguity was noted in the North.

In the synonymy of political togetherness, union and united are strongest; federation is sovereign but not so tightly united; confederation is an alliance of separate but interdependent sovereignties; commonwealth, originally an autonomous political unit (Massachusetts), is now a loose association of sovereign nations with a sentimental common allegiance (as to the British crown), or can be a sovereign political unit voluntarily linked to another power (Puerto Rico); league, now recalling "of women voters" rather than "of nations," has been replaced in diplomatic usage by organization (UNO, NATO, OAS) and is like a club, not easy to get into but easy to leave; conference is both loose and temporary, even if it creates a bureaucracy to last for decades, and community, now usually economic, is the most amorphous of all.

The striking linguistic note in all this is the uniqueness of the word loose. No synonym, like free, comes close; the other synonyms say what its opposite is not, like unbound, unfastened, unattached, unconnected. Therefore, if you want to say "a loose confederation" but do not want to use a phrase in vogue, forget your squeamishness and say "a loose confederation."

Ideas toward a thoughtful, probing campaign

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — It's not often that I find myself in sympathy with ideas coming from America's university campuses these days, but I give a ringing endorsement to a proposal from Harvard suggesting how we might bring about more thoughtful and probing presidential election campaigns, beginning with next year's.

Hearst

In the TV age, political campaigning has grown more trivial as the actual issues have grown more complex.

The result has been to increase the average voter's feeling of remoteness from the political process and, as we've seen, to increase the number of people who simply don't bother to vote.

Americans fervently believe in democracy. Yet, more and more of them have become cynically disillusioned about the way democracy has recently functioned.

This is a matter of concern in itself. But, sooner or later, it's also bound to affect how successfully government in our country performs in meeting its citizens' justifiable aspirations.

Some pessimists claim that point already has been reached and that ordinary Americans have totally lost confidence in the political system and those elected to run it.

I certainly don't go that far. But, at a time of intense alarm over such issues as decaying public education, urban crime, drugs and some deep-seated industrial ills, voters have a right to far more in-depth information about how White House candidates intend to grapple with these questions.

For democracy to work as it is supposed to, the candidates need to be aware when they enter the race for the presidency that they'll be required to spell out their ideas in detail.

As the 1992 campaign draws near, it's clear that it should generate a serious, reflective debate on the formidable issues confronting us.

Unhappily, this is just what we haven't had from the superficial "sound-bite" techniques of political campaigning of the television era.

Naturally, we can't turn back the clock to the days of the Lincoln-Douglas debates. TV has changed politics forever and is here to stay.

What we need is a method of making TV campaigning more informative and thought-provoking.

That's where the plan devised by Harvard's Center on the Press, Politics and Public Policy comes in.

The Harvard think tank's proposal is that the TV networks next year should devote nine Sunday evenings from Labor Day right up to the election to the presidential race, providing time and opportunity for substantive exploration of the issues.

The plan, called "Nine Sundays," would include two TV debates between the major parties' nominees, five "conversations" between them and concluding addresses by them on the final night.

The debates would be genuine, give-and-take exchanges between the candidates on their own, giving the voters a real opportunity to size them up. They would not be the misla-beled, so-called debates of recent times in which the contenders have mostly responded to questions from a panel of journalists, often furnishing only the sketchiest notion of how thoroughly they have thought through their positions.

But the details of the "Nine Sundays" proposal are less important than its aim, which is to correct the shortcomings of the modern presidential campaign that, as the Harvard report noted, "moves too fast, in too many directions, in too short a time for there to be any orderly process through which the candidates could and/or would address the major issues facing the country."

I agree heartily.

Something like the "Nine Sundays" plan also would stir interest in a campaign that, as things now stand, is otherwise likely to prove a walkover for President Bush.

Frankly, I doubt that a campaign such as the plan envisages would have altered the outcome of the last presidential election or Ronald Reagan's victories in 1980 and 1984.

On the contrary, I think more substantive campaigns in the last three elections would have strengthened the eventual winners' mandates.

Furthermore, their defeated liberal opponents would not have been able to pretend, as they did, that their candidates' lost because the other side had more money with which to hire greater TV expertise.

In George Bush's case, victory, following a campaign in which he had more carefully laid out the main issues and choices, would have given him a stronger hand to pursue an urgently required domestic program of educational, economic and fiscal reform.

READER'S VIEWS on: Second Amendment

Amendment assures right to armed militia

I would like to comment on your editorial in the Oct. 19 Midland Reporter-Telegram regarding the Second Amendment to the Constitution. You cite remarks by an Alan Boyd to the local Daughters of the American Revolution chapter (and you make conclusions based on those remarks) that are, I believe, in error.

Simply put, the Second Amendment, adopted in 1791 with the experience of the Minute Men and the Revolutionary War fresh in the minds of the framers, is supposed to assure that the states would have an armed militia available to call on in times of emergency. It was not intended to be a guarantee of the right of an individual to own a gun in the sense that your editorial and Boyd's remarks indicate.

The first part of the amendment is the important part in understanding this: "A well-regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free state ..." Three court cases, United States v. Crurkshank, 92 U.S. 542 (1876), Presser v. Illinois, 116 U.S. 252 (1891) and State v. Workman, 35 W. Va. 367 (1891) illustrate clearly this point. Further, the courts have ruled that the intent of the amendment was to keep the federal government from denying the right of the individual states to keep a militia: whatever other baggage people associate with this amendment is clearly beyond the framers' intent.

I am not advocating gun control, nor do I believe that there should be an M-16 in every house. Rather, I would hope that at least the Midland Reporter-Telegram could interpret the Constitution correctly: I don't know what to do about Boyd.

Bill Coombes
Midland

EDITOR'S NOTE: We are in good company by insisting that the Second Amendment guarantees the right of private citizens to keep and bear arms. Notably, the editor of the first American edition of William Blackstone's writings on English Common Law commented that the right to arms for personal defense had been constitutionalized in America by the Second Amendment. Constitutional commentators, including Joseph Story, William Rawle, and Thomas W. Cooley, described the amendment as an individual right. The writings of George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Patrick Henry, Richard Lee, James Madison, Samuel Adams, all refer to the right to keep and bear arms in the context of private ownership of personal arms. Lastly, according to an analysis approved by James Madison and made available to Congress before they voted on the Bill of Rights in 1789, the Second Amendment assured to the people "their private arms."

Disarming populace is essential to enslaving

On the Sept. 24th editorial page was an letter entitled "Right to arms isn't valid in 'real' world" in which the writer makes a feeble attempt to rebut the brilliant editorial of Bill Modisett appearing in the Sept. 19th Midland Reporter-Telegram.

In his overwhelming display of ignorance, Joe Peabody is essentially saying that our God-given rights — our inalienable rights — are somehow eroded or changed with the passage of time. With this attitude towards individual rights and liberty, Peabody would make a scary politician! His benightedness is further displayed in his citing, as "successful" revolts against tyranny, the Irish Republican Army (which is an underground, Communist, group of thugs — not a militia), the Ghandi revolution in India, and lastly, the recent events in the Soviet Union. Surely he is not so naive as to believe the media hype surrounding that cleverly planned strategy of deception and Communist disinformation.

Also, Peabody apparently cannot recollect the events in Afghanistan several years ago when the poor Afghans, armed with World War II weapons, successfully fought off the brutal Soviets.

If our federal government is not concerned about the armed citizen, then why are they making such great attempts to disarm us? Any rational, discerning person should be able to study the history of governments and come to a logical, honest conclusion that disarming the populace is essential in order to enslave them. This was so eloquently pointed out by George Mason, Patrick Henry, Thomas Jefferson and others during the debates on the Bill of Rights.

Furthermore, no substance or humor is added to this frail response by using such statements as "gun-toting Rambovich" or "wake up and smell the napalm." And for the record, I am not now, nor have I ever been a reader of "Soldier of Fortune."

Alan D. Boyd
Midland

Public misconstrues second amendment

No amendment to the U.S. Constitution is more misconstrued by the general public than the Second Amendment.

Alan D. Boyd contends, in an editorial in the Reporter-Telegram (Sept. 19) that the intent of the amendment is to protect "against tyranny in government." The Second Amendment sounds in defense of the country, not as a tool for offensive action against the government. The Constitution was written as a modus vivendi under a constituted government by and for the people. It provides a way to dispose of a tyrannical government through the elective process by peaceful means, not by force of arms.

The Second Amendment is not the only place in the Constitution which refers to the concept of an armed militia. Article I, Section 8 says, in part (Congress shall have the power) "To provide for organizing arming, and disciplining the Militia and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States, reserving to the States respectively, the Appointment of the Officers, and the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress." The drafters had in mind an organized body of men, properly trained and officered. Thus the first four words of the Second Amendment are important: "A well regulated Militia.." Well regulated! This does not mean an undisciplined mob of armed individuals.

Regardless of what many of us think the Second Amendment means, it has heretofore been said by a member of the Supreme Court of the United States, "The Constitution of the United States means what the Supreme Court of the United States says that it means." The Supreme Court has held in two cases, Presser Vs. Illinois (1886) and United States vs. Miller (1939) that there is no constitutional right that empowers a citizen to bear arms privately. So like it or not, until the Congress with ratification by the States amends the Second Amendment or the Supreme Court redefines its meaning, that is the law: A well-regulated militia and the right to bear arms reserved to that militia. A thought though, the Second Amendment does not prohibit an individual from bearing arms. That, of course, is left to the police powers of a state.

READERS VIEWS on: Sheriff Painter, County Commissioners

Public meeting was insult to taxpayers

The so-called "public meeting" of the Midland County Commissioners Court held on Sept. 23rd was insulting to the taxpayers who attempted to attend.

The commissioners had to be aware that their recent actions would draw a large and angry crowd. In fact, the county judge had even laid down his "rules" to handle it. The requirement that anyone desirous of speaking out must make the subject known in writing prior to the meeting was as high-handed as his other recent actions.

No arrangements were made to meet in quarters large enough to allow the public to attend. There was not even standing room, and the hot hall was jammed with people who could not hear the proceedings as microphones were not provided. The people who elected them were sadly disappointed if they attended the meeting in hopes of seeing how the commissioners conducted their business. Even the Midland School Board allowed us a place to sit and hear the proceedings of their public meeting, which required rescheduling on their part. The county gestapo seems to be accomplishing its apparent purpose.

It would seem to me that it is past time that this body remember that the taxpayers cannot vote themselves raises, as the commissioners have just done, to cover increased taxes but must, when the economy is bad, tighten their belts and make do with what they have. We are sick and tired of ever-increasing taxes. They might try to run the county in the same manner that business operates. Their lack of diligence is appalling!

As an angry taxpayer, I can't stop the tactics used by the commissioners, but they can't keep me out of the voting booth — at least not yet!

Patricia M. Beck

What happened to cause controversy?

I have been trying to remember what has happened to cause the controversy between the sheriff's office and the county commissioners.

First The Dallas Morning News sues our sheriff for information on his drug investigations. Then our county commissioners decide that the sheriff should not leave the county.

Next our sheriff catches some Dallas gang members in Midland trying to sell drugs. Then our county commissioners decide to cut our sheriff's budget and reassign his personnel to the jail.

Next our county commissioners reveal that a recent state law provides that they can raise property taxes exempt from voter approval to compensate the county for housing state prisoners.

What is going on? It appears that "budget" and "Midland County" are excuses for some unknown reason. Is it election time already? Why does The Dallas Morning News have an interest in Midland? What is happening to our tax money with budget shuffling and newly-created taxes?

Maybe some one smarter than I am can answer these questions and even think of more questions to ask.

Citizens are unfamiliar with Texas mandates

I know law enforcement officers of Midland County execute their duties within the bounds of their oath of office. However, articles that I have read indicate that most citizens are unfamiliar with the mandates as set forth by the State of Texas.

The following is the oath of office taken by law enforcement officers in the State of Texas:

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the duties of the office of deputy sheriff/police officer of the State of Texas and will to the best of my ability preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution and the laws of the United States and of this state; and furthermore solemnly swear (or affirm) that I have not directly nor indirectly, paid, offered or promised to pay, contributed nor promised to contribute, any money or valuable thing, or promised any public office or employment, as a reward to secure my appointment, or confirmation thereof. So help me God."

This oath of office is on file in the office of the Midland County clerk.

Officials shouldn't tell Sheriff how to operate

Speaking as another sheriff in Texas, I would like to go on record in support of Sheriff Painter. I suggest that getting the drug dealers before they can come into his area seems a much better course of action than waiting for them to infest his county.

Sheriffs are elected by the people of the county with responsibilities mandated by state law. No other government official should be allowed to impose restrictions on how the sheriff runs his office as long as he stays within the bounds of the state constitution.

To the people of Midland County I would like to add when you have a good sheriff as dedicated as Sheriff Painter, you should appreciate him. I think he is a good sheriff.

Midland County should be law's first priority

I recently attended the open forum meeting held by the county commissioners court. I was appalled! What was to be a taxpayers forum turned into a sheriff's office forum. What's worse, the taxpayers didn't have a chance to see or hear because most (40 to 50 percent) in the crowd were sheriff's department personnel, not the would-be regular taxpayer. What was to be a tax issue turned into a "let's run down the commissioners court so we, the sheriff's department, can get what we want."

Capt. Richard Sexton, the spokesman for the sheriff's department, stepped up to speak. In his usual arrogant manner, he deliberately demeaned the county judge. This was by no means the time nor place to display such character or personal animosity. It was, to say the least, very bad taste and wrong.

Yes, Capt. Sexton had the right to state his case for the sheriff's office, but I restate his mannerisms were in extremely bad taste. I would hope that after seeing and hearing this man represent the sheriff's department with this type of behavior, the taxpayer will realize just how our sheriff's office is being run.

Another thing that deeply disturbs me is Capt. Sexton's exact words, "I don't care what the law says, the only thing that has changed this year is the county judge." This most certainly implies that the sheriff's department can use it or break it to suit themselves! I wonder just how many unsolved crimes Midland County has this year alone. How many of the so-called out of county and state personnel could be used to solve them? If Midland County officers are doing so well in out of town and county operations, why does Midland County have such a bad drug problem?

I would think that Midland County would and definitely should be the first priority of the county law enforcement agencies, not how to make money! After all, who really benefits from entrepreneurial law enforcement?

C.G. Hudgins

Enforcing law is not job of commissioners

Recently I read where a dangerous precedent may be set in Midland County. I understand the Midland County Commissioners Court is attempting to "restructure" and cut down the efficiency of the Midland County Sheriff's Department. I say to you, "Do not let this happen."

As one of many sheriffs in Texas, I know how hard it is to do the job we were elected to do due to all the interference from outside persons and organizations. It seems our hands are tied now, as it is. In the first place, I will admit that we sheriffs do not know anything about paving roads and fixing bridges. That is left up to the commissioners. On the other hand, I feel like the people elected us to handle county law enforcement, for which we have been trained to do.

Citizens of Midland County, had you rather have untrained county commissioners running and controlling "your" sheriff's department, or a highly-qualified sheriff such as Gary Painter? I agree with Sheriff Painter that restrictions put on the operations of the Midland County Sheriff's Department by your commissioners will impede his ability to run "your" sheriff's department.

I encourage the citizens of Midland County to support Sheriff Painter in every way and to make known to your commissioners that the business of enforcing the law is NOT a function of the commissioners. I feel we in law enforcement need to work together to make our country a better and safer place to live. This can only be accomplished in your county if Sheriff Painter is given the funds, personnel, and equipment to do the job you elected him to do.

LETTER

Driving is privilege for those with responsibility

This letter is written in response to the editorial in the Aug. 23 edition of the Midland Reporter-Telegram. Your editorial questioned the constitutionality of the Automatic Revocation of (Drivers) License bill before the House of Representatives in Austin. My belief is that driving is a privilege that should be handled responsibly. The automobile with a drunk driver behind the wheel is a lethal weapon. What about the constitutional rights of the innocent victim — the right to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness?"

Did you know more than half of the states have already passed a similar bill? Did you know Texas is losing $2.3 million a year in federal funds because we do not have this law? Did you know that in 1990 over 1,400 Texans were killed as a result of DWI and more than 35,000 were injured? Did you know alcohol-related accidents (no, not accidents, violent collisions) are the Number One killer of teenagers? These are all facts and we are often apathetic until we are personally involved. Our law enforcement officers do a good job apprehending DWI drivers; I wish I could say the same for our local justice system when it comes to prosecution and sentencing.

DWI is increasing in Midland County at an alarming rate with too many repeat offenders. The next time we get the chance let's get behind legislation and pass stricter DWI laws.

SPEAKING OUT

United Way's mission is to increase caring

By Mike Conaway

The United Way of Midland's mission is to increase the organized capacity of people to care for one another. Each year hundreds of volunteers solicit contributions to the United Way's annual campaign. There are 17 United Way member agencies that benefit from the annual campaign. These agencies will serve some 36,000 Midlanders during 1992.

The agencies provide a wide spectrum of services. At one end of the spectrum are the programs that we hope will always be strong and vital in our community, such as Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, Camp Fire and Casa de Amigos. At the other end of the spectrum are the programs we hope will someday no longer be needed in Midland, such as the Center for Battered Women and Their Children, Midland Rape Crisis Center and the Palmer Drug Abuse Program. All along this spectrum of services are Midlanders like you and me whose lives are better because of the United Way.

Our 1991/92 goal is $2,753,000. This amount is 1 percent more than the record amount raised in last year's campaign. However this increase does not keep pace with the expanding needs of our community. Requests from the agencies are up 14 percent over last year.

In addition to the volunteers that solicit United Way contributions each year, there are many other volunteers that serve the United Way in the process of allocating each year's contributions. These volunteers are charged with the responsibility of reviewing the member agency requests, programs, services and budget, and allocating the available financial resources to meet the needs of the community.

Mike Conaway is 1991-92 campaign chairman of the United Way of Midland.

This year's contributions will fund the member agencies' efforts toward eliminating hunger, homelessness, and hopelessness in our community. Midlanders have a strong tradition of supporting the United Way and its agencies. I believe that this year will be no different. Midlanders will once again respond with their talents, their resources and their hearts to support our community through the United Way.

During the next several weeks, you will be asked to make a donation to this year's campaign. Please don't think of the request as only a donation to the United Way, but rather think of it as a request to help a mother and her three children find the Center for Battered Women and Their Children. Or think of it as a request to help a child stay at the Freewill Foster Home because that child is having to hide from something little children should not have to hide from. Baylor puts hurt on SMU, 45-7

Associated Press

DALLAS (AP) — J.J. Joe passed for two touchdowns and ran for another score Saturday as the undefeated and 12th-ranked Baylor Bears opened their Southwest Conference season with a 45-7 victory over winless Southern Methodist.

SWC

Baylor (4-0) handed SMU (0-3 overall, 0-2 SWC) its 13th consecutive loss.

Joe completed eight eight of 10 passes for 171 yards and rushed 13 times for 55 yards in the Baylor runaway.

Baylor cruised to a 24-0 halftime lead behind Joe, who completed his first seven passes against an SMU defense geared to stop the run.

It took Baylor only 34 seconds to score on its first possession. Joe hit Melvin Bonner with a 40-yard completion and two play later David Mims scored on a 25-yard run. Starting fullback Robert Strait strained a knee on the play and missed the rest of the game.

HOUSTON — Ty Stewart kicked a 40-yard field goal with 32 seconds left to lift Iowa State over previously unbeaten Rice.

The Cyclones (2-2) scored 11 points in the final 1:18 to erase a 27-17 Rice advantage.

Senior quarterback Chris Pedersen, who lost his starting job to sophomore Bob Utter, came on in relief, hitting tight end Paul Schulte with an 11-yard touchdown pass, then ran for the two-point conversion to draw the Cyclones to within two points.

Iowa State recovered an onside kick on the ensuing kickoff on the Rice 47, then moved into field goal range for Stewart.

Iowa State had to overcome 295 total yards from Rice tailback Trevor Cobb, who entered Saturday's game as the nation's leading rusher with a 205-yard average. Cobb ran for 240 yards and two touchdowns, plus a kickoff return for 16 yards and four catches for 39 yards.

COLLEGE STATION — Cornerback Kevin Smith of Texas A&M had three great defensive plays and injured quarterback Bucky Richardson returned to guide the Aggie offense with two touchdown passes in a victory over winless Southwestern Louisiana.

A&M (2-1) had a Richardson touchdown pass erased by penalty and led only 3-0 when a Smith tackle forced a fumble that stopped a drive by Southwestern Louisiana (0-5) at the A&M 16.

Richardson, who had been out with a sprained foot since Sept. 14, led A&M on an 84-yard drive that ended with a 2-yard touchdown run by Greg Hill with 10:24 left in the half.

TCU: Horned Frogs score 21 points in fourth quarter played a much different brand of football in the second and just couldn't quite put the fire out," Dykes said.

TCU head coach Jim Wacker was just happy to get out of Lubbock with the "W" as the Frogs claimed only their second win here since 1963.

"This was the best victory we've had at TCU in a long time. The defense really played well tonight, and I'm proud of the way this team played four full quarters," he said.

TCU got off to a 6-0 lead in the first quarter, as Jeff Wilkinson kicked a pair of 36-yard field goals while Tech's Lin Elliott missed a 29-yard attempt.

But the Raiders put together a pair of drives that ended in second quarter touchdowns to give them the lead.

On the first Tech score, the Raiders took possession on their own 20 with 3:21 to go in the first quarter after Tony Becan drove Donald Marshall deep into the end zone to field his kickoff.

Tech started a 12-play march that ate just 4:43 off the clock, as Gill completed three passes for 47 yards and tailback Anthony Lynn dove over to finish off a five-yard scoring run. Elliott's extra point kick was good to give the Raiders the lead and Elliott the school record for consecutive PAT conversions with 58.

The Horned Frogs regained the lead on the next drive, as Matt Vogler replaced Tim Schade at quarterback and drove TCU 53 yards for another Wilkinson field goal, this one a 42-yarder with 9:49 remaining in the half.

Still, Tech was able to find a way to retake the lead, as Gill completed 6-of-9 passing in a 73-yard drive that consumed 18 plays and 6:59. Gill completed his performance by finding Lynn in the left flat for a five-yard effort the Lynn capped by leaping over Frog defensive back Steve Reed.

In the second half, though, the Raiders moved the ball but were unable to punch it in inside the 20.

Also, Tech was devastated when defensive end Roosevelt Collins intercepted Gill and returned it for a 25-yard touchdown that gave the Frogs a 23-13 lead with 13:03 to go in the game.

The the Horned Frogs found their ground game in the last period, as well, , using running back Curtis Modkins for 40 yards on seven carries. Modkins finished the game with 84 yards rushing to help the anemic TCU running attack, and Derrick Cullors cashed in on the final TCU score with 5:13 left.

VALLEY STREAM, N.Y. (AP) — A female Long Island high school football player on Saturday became the first girl to score a point in state football history.

Jackie Gainer of Valley Stream Central kicked an extra point with nine minutes left in the third quarter in a 10-0 victory over East Meadow.

Former pros admit steroid use in survey

ATLANTA (AP) — Professional athletes are reluctant to talk about their steroid use because they fear fans' reactions, said former offensive guard Steve Courson.

"Admitting to steroid use while they played minimizes their athletic achievement," said Courson, 35, who played with the Pittsburgh Steelers and the Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

He was among athletes interviewed by The Atlanta Journal-Constitution in a telephone survey of 506 retired NFL players about steroid use. Of those interviewed, 37 players or 7 percent admitted having used steroids, the newspaper said in Sunday's editions.

The survey showed that 57 percent of those who had played in the league at least four years said use of steroids increased during their careers.

Courson said he could understand the reluctance of other players to discuss steroid use, even though the drugs were not illegal or even against NFL policy at the time.

Steroids, synthetic versions of the male hormone testosterone, stimulate a buildup of the body by synthesizing protein for muscle growth and tissue repair.

In the newspaper survey, 21 percent of those who said they used steroids also said they experienced side effects, including high blood pressure, aggressive behavior, abdominal cramps and severe headaches.

Courson suffers from dilated cardiomyopathy, an enlarged heart that some doctors have linked to his years of steroid abuse. He said he isn't sure.

"When I first got sick, a lot of elements in the media wanted to blame my entire problem on steroids, and my main substance abuse problem was alcohol," said Courson, who first detailed his steroid use in a 1985 Sports Illustrated article.

The Journal-Constitution's survey was conducted Aug. 25-29. Asked whether they felt steroids improved their performance, 36 percent of those who admitted using them said they improved their performance greatly. A total of 26 percent said they improved their performance somewhat, for a total of 62 percent.

A total of 84 percent admitted users said they used steroids for one season or less. The athletes interviewed played in the 1970s and 1980s, the newspaper said.

Botched Wyoming field goal saves UTEP, 28-28

Associated Press

LARAMIE, Wyo. — A mishandled snap by Wyoming's Derek Palmer botched a 33-yard field goal attempt with 10 seconds to play Saturday and the Cowboys had to settle for a 28-28 tie with Texas-El Paso in Western Athletic Conference action.

For Wyoming, which led early 21-0, the goof was one of several that enabled the Miners to stay in the game.

Twice the Cowboys (2-2-1 overall and 0-1-1 in the WAC) fumbled away scoring opportunities inside UTEP's 10-yard line and kicker Sean Fleming was wide right on a 21-yard field goal attempt early in the fourth quarter.

UTEP (3-1-1, 1-0-1) tried to ice Fleming prior to the 33-yard attempt with three consecutive timeouts. Whether the kicker was bothered didn't matter as Baker, a reserve running back, bobbled the snap and tried to run on the second-down play.

Not only did he lose 17 yards, but the Cowboys didn't have a timeout to stop the clock.

Texas Colleges

Austin College 10, Tarleton St. 7

SHERMAN — Jason Johnson rushed for 111 yards and a touchdown and Gabe Gerard kicked a 19-yard field goal in the third quarter as Austin College beat winless Tarleton State.

Johnson scored on a 2-yard plunge in the second quarter after Joey Staples blocked a punt by Kyle Allred, giving the Kangaroos (2-2) the ball at the Tarleton 17.

Tarleton (0-4) had taken a 7-0 lead on Robert Simpson's 29-yard run in the first quarter.

Hardin-Simmons 49, Sul Ross St. 14

ALPINE — Doug Foster blocked two punts and Darren Allman returned an interception 40 yards for a touchdown as Hardin-Simmons routed Sul Ross State University.

The victory was the first Texas Intercollegiate Athletic Association triumph for Hardin-Simmons (2-2, 1-1) this season.

Although Sul Ross (0-4, 0-1) matched the Cowboys in total offense with 305 yards, the Lobos' mistakes proved to be the difference.

Gabriel Camacho led Sul Ross, which was also penalized eight times for 85 yards, with 100 yards on 22 carries.

SW Texas St. 19, Nicholls St. 10

THIBODAUX, La. — Todd Scott rushed for two short touchdowns and Robbie Roberson kicked two field goals as Southwest Texas State beat Nicholls State in the Southland Conference.

Southwest Texas (2-1, 1-0) rolled up 343 yards of offense against the Colonels (2-2, 1-1). The Bobcats used the option to rush for 275 yards, while their defense held the Colonels to 244 yards of offense.

Southwest Texas scored the only points of the first half on Roberson's 43-yard field goal in the first period. The kick capped an eight-play, 52-yard drive.

Texas Southern 52, Lane 0

GALVESTON — Texas Southern's Kerry Henderson rushed for a career high 157 yards and two touchdowns in a romp of Lane College of Tennessee.

It was Texas Southern's first shutout since a 55-0 victory over Prairie View A&M in Houston 1984. Texas Southern (3-2) has not given up rushing touchdown in 20 quarters this year.

The Tigers rolled to a 31-0 halftime lead, and coach Walter Highsmith substituted freely in the second half.

Lane College (0-4) was led by Cedrick Shields, who rushed 15 times for 68 yards.

Texas A&I 41, Prairie View 3

KINGSVILLE — Charles Thompson and Kevin Randall each scored twice as the Texas A&I Javelinas routed the winless Prairie View A&M Panthers.

Thompson's scores came on runs of 47 and 8 yards in a 28-point first quarter. Randall added TD runs of 55 and 46 yards as Texas A&I won for the third time in four games.

Their other touchdowns came on a 1-yard run by tailback Ike Lewis and a 6-yard run by quarterback Wesley Whiten.

Boise St. 38, Stephen F. Austin 7

BOISE, Idaho — Jeff Mladenich passed and ran for 203 yards and one touchdown as Boise State coasted to a Division I-AA victory over Stephen F. Austin.

It was the fourth straight home victory for Boise State this season, and the 4-0 start is the Broncos' best since 1975.

Stephen F. Austin (1-2) didn't score until the games final seconds when quarterback Kenny Henderson hit flanker Tim Fields with a 7-yard pass.

SW Missouri 21, North Texas 21

DENTON — Kevin McDaniel's 32-yard field goal with 1:51 remaining capped a 15-point comeback as North Texas managed to tie Southwest Missouri State.

North Texas of the Southland Conference is 1-2-1. Southwest Missouri State of the Gateway Conference, the 12th ranked team in Division I-AA, is 2-1-1.

NW Louisiana 26, E. Texas St. 23

NATCHITOCHES, La. — Chris Gilliam ran for two short touchdowns and passed for another, but it took a 19-yard field goal by Jeff Powell with 2:02 remaining for Northwestern State to put away East Texas State.

Both teams are 2-2.

The game was tied at 23 with 8:08 remaining when defensive end Eric Goldman tackled East Texas quarterback Bob Bounds in the end zone just moments after Northwestern had failed score at fourth-and-1 inside the 1.

Northwestern drove 42 yards in eight plays for the game-winning field goal by Powell, a junior college walk-on who suffered three blocked field goals.

Bounds threw for a school-record 430 yards and two touchdowns, hitting 24 of 36 passes with two interceptions.

Vikings best paid NFL team

ATLANTA (AP) — The Minnesota Vikings, who won only eight of their last 20 games and failed to qualify for the 1990 playoffs, are pro football's highest-paid team, according to documents obtained by a newspaper.

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution reported Saturday that NFL Players Association salary records show the Vikings will pay an average of $549,100 in "total salary" per player this season. That's a nearly one-third increase over the team's 1990 per-player average.

Minnesota's starting lineup will average $803,100 in total salary. Both the per-player and per-starter averages are believed to be the highest in league history, according to the newspaper.

Though the Vikings bumped perennial salary champion San Francisco from the top spot, the 49ers still led the NFL this year in average base salary for all players at $454,575, and for starters at $623,500.

Total salary per season includes base pay along with all signing, roster, reporting and workout bonuses. It does not include incentives for performance or playing time.

Salaries for the Atlanta Falcons increased nearly 18 percent more than a year ago — from $319,255 to $375,800 — even though the club's standing in the league dropped to 24th. The Falcons ranked 22nd in salaries a year ago.

Minnesota clinches share of NL West title

Associated Press

TORONTO — The Minnesota Twins clinched no worse than a share of the AL West title Saturday when Jack Morris pitched a six-hitter for his 26th career shutout and a 5-0 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays.

Minnesota remained 8 games ahead of second-place Chicago, which won later in the night and barely stayed alive in the race as the Twins magic number fell to just one.

The loss cut Toronto's AL East lead to three games over Boston, which was playing Milwaukee.

Morris (18-12) didn't retire the side in order until the seventh inning and the Blue Jays had several line-drive outs, but he was tough when it mattered most and allowed just two walks over the last 4 2-3 innings.

White Sox 5, M' 2

CHICAGO (AP) — The Chicago White Sox, managing only five hits, staved off elimination in the AL West by defeating Seattle as Greg Hibbard and two relievers combined on a six-hitter.

Earlier in the day, Minnesota defeated Toronto, 5-0, clinching a tie for the division title. The White Sox trail the Twins by eight games with eight games left to play.

American

Tigers 5, Orioles 4

DETROIT — Lou Whitaker's three-run double with two outs in the 10th inning rallied Detroit past Baltimore to keep the Tigers' slim playoff hopes alive in the AL East.

The Tigers bounced back against Gregg Olson (4-6) after Baltimore scored twice in the top of the 10th. Detroit pulled within 6½ games of division-leading Toronto, which lost to Minnesota 5-0.

Brewers 4, Red Sox 1

MILWAUKEE — Slumping Boston skidded again, losing to Milwaukee and missing an opportunity to gain on Toronto in the AL East.

Boston fell for the fifth time in six games and remained 3½ games behind the Blue Jays, who lost 5-0 to Minnesota. The Red Sox have eight games left.

The Red Sox are hurting themselves in the standings, and in other ways, too. Wade Boggs had to leave after 3½ innings when he aggravated an injury to his right shoulder.

Rangers 6, A's 3

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Dean Palmer hit a two-out, three-run homer off Dennis Eckersley in the 10th inning, giving Texas a victory.

Rafael Palmeiro and Ruben Sierra led off the 10th with singles. With runners on second and third and no outs, Eckersley (5-4) struck out Donald Harris and Ivan Rodriguez.

Palmer followed with his 14th home run.

Indians 5, Yankees 4

CLEVELAND — Reliever Eric Bell gave up one unearned run in four innings and Felix Fermin capped a three-run sixth inning with a tie-breaking RBI single as Cleveland beat New York.

Yankees starter Jeff Johnson lasted 5 1-3 innings. The Yankees have not had a complete game in 75 consecutive games, surpassing the major-league mark of 74 set by San Diego in 1977.

Angels 4, Royals 3

KANSAS CITY — Chuck Finley allowed four hits in 7⅓ innings to beat Kansas City for the third straight time this season.

Finley (18-9) struck out five and walked four in becoming the fourth American League pitcher with at least 18 wins. Bryan Harvey pitched the ninth for his league-leading 44th save, allowing a run.

unfamiliarity of the mound caught up with me."

Wilson (12-11) held the Dodgers hitless until Eddie Murray grounded a single to center with two outs in the sixth, driving in Butler with an unearned run.

Wilson walked four and struck out eight — one short of his career-high — and left after walking Butler to begin the eighth.

Braves 5, Astros 4

HOUSTON — Once again, a game was about to slip away from the Braves. And once again, they came from behind for a really big victory.

Atlanta tied the score with two runs in the seventh inning, Ron Gant singled home the go-ahead run in the eighth and Alejandro Pena barely held on in the ninth. Midland's Mike Stanton hurled a perfect seventh to get the win.

That closed Atlanta within one game of NL West-leading Los Angeles, which lost to San Francisco 4-1. With seven games to go, the Braves are still hanging on.

Atlanta had trailed 2-0 in the eighth inning Friday night before rallying for a 4-2 victory. This time, the Braves fell behind 2-0 and 3-1 before rallying for their 34th comeback victory this year.

Rookie Jeff Juden held Atlanta to four hits and led 3-1 before Houston's troubles began. Juden walked David Justice in the seventh and Gant doubled in a run. Reliever Al Osuna struck out Brian Hunter, but he couldn't get Greg Olson, who doubled home Gant for a 3-3 tie.

Cardinals 3, Cubs 2

ST. LOUIS — Lee Smith tied the National League record with his 45th save and Ozzie Smith had three hits as St. Louis beat Chicago.

Smith pitched a scoreless ninth, and matched the mark of 45 saves set by St. Louis' Bruce Sutter in 1984.

The Cardinals, predicted by many to finish poorly in the NL East this season, can clinch second place with one more victory or one more loss by New York. St. Louis has not finished so high since winning the pennant in 1987.

Ken Hill (11-10) set a career high for victories. He struck five and walked three in 6 2-3 innings. Greg Maddux (13-11) struck out four and walked two in his six innings.

The Cubs scored in the first on two walks, two stolen bases and an RBI single by Ryne Sandberg. Ray Lankford led off the Cardinals' first with his eighth home run of the season.

Phillies 6, Mets 2

NEW YORK — Cliff Brantley held the Mets hitless for 5⅔ innings and combined with Wally Ritchie to pitch Philadelphia past New York.

Brantley, a New York native called up from the minors this month, lost his no-hit bid when Mackey Sasser singled. Brantley (2-2) allowed two runs on six hits in 7 1-3 innings, and struck out five.

John Kruk hit his career-high 21st home run and drove in two runs. Dave Hollins also drove in two runs for the Phillies.

Anthony Young (2-4) was forced to leave in the third inning when he re-aggravated an injury to his left shoulder while batting. Young gave up three runs, two earned, on five hits.

Padres 4, Reds 2

CINCINNATI — Craig Shipley put San Diego ahead with his first major-league home, leading San Diego to a win.

Shipley's solo homer off Tom Browning (14-13) made it 2-1 in the fifth inning. It was his first homer in 142 major-league at-bats.

Jose Melendez (7-5), making his second start following 22 relief appearances, allowed four hits and the two earned runs in five innings. Mike Maddux escaped a bases-loaded jam in the eighth and got his fifth save.

The Padres have won their last three games and six of their last seven to move five games over .500 (80-75), matching their season high.

Expos 3, Pirates 2

PITTSBURGH — Chris Nabholz won his sixth straight game and Nelson Santovenia hit a tie-breaking sacrifice fly in the seventh as Montreal beat Pittsburgh.

Nabholz (8-7) matched the winning streak he posted last August and September to begin his major league career. He held the Pirates to four hits and one earned run in 7⅓ innings.

Before the streak started on Sept. 1, Nabholz had not won since June 1. He was 0-4 with five no-decisions in that span and spent 50 days on the disabled list with tendinitis in his left shoulder.

Nabholz left the game after he walked pinch hitter Tom Prince. Mel Rojas relieved and got the last five outs for his fifth save.

Cowboys versus Giants a Jekyll-and-Hyde matchup

N.Y. Times News Service

IRVING — The New York Giants will play the Dallas Cowboys on Sunday, and the first question is not who will win, but who will show up.

Will these be the Giants with their tightly wound offense of this season or will Jeff Hostetler finally be allowed to open up the passing game?

Will these be the Cowboys who gave up 11 sacks to the Philadelphia Eagles two weeks ago or the Cowboys who sprung Emmitt Smith for 182 yards rushing against the Phoenix Cardinals last Sunday?

Both teams have played unevenly. Both have 2-2 records, not bad for the rebuilding Cowboys, but embarrassing and frustrating for the Super Bowl champion Giants.

This game is especially important to the Giants because they are playing six of their next seven games against division rivals. They are already two games behind the unbeaten Washington Redskins.

The game will attract a sellout crowd of 65,000 spectators to Texas Stadium. The Giants have won their last six games with the Cowboys.

This season, with a new head coach in Ray Handley and a new quarterback in Jeff Hostetler, the Giants have lacked spark on offense. Handley's ball-control offense is even more conservative than that of his predecessor, Bill Parcells.

Hostetler wants more freedom to pass downfield. He may get it against a young, gung-ho Cowboys defense that is not as good as some statistics indicate.

The Cowboys have allowed an average of only 3.1 yards rushing. Only the Redskins have run effectively against them, and they did it with finesse blocking rather than power blocking.

But the Cowboys keep giving up big plays. They have made only five sacks, two fumble recoveries and one interception. The linebacking group lacks depth. Issiac Holt, their best defensive back, has been inconsistent.

The Cowboys must contain a Giants offense that ranks fourth in the National Football League in rushing, but only 24th in passing. That offense has scored only five touchdowns in four games.

But the Giants can run. Last Sunday, against the Cleveland Browns, Rodney Hampton rushed 17 times for 104 yards and Lewis Tillman 14 times for 90 yards.

The Browns took away the Giants' deep passing game by playing the cornerbacks to the outside and far off the line of scrimmage. Against the Cowboys, the Giants can combat similar tactics by giving Hostetler more freedom to roll out and keep the ball, the way he did last season in the playoffs.

This season, the Giants have survived because of their tough defense. They lead the league in pass defense (124.8 yards a game) and rank third in total defense (231.8). Lawrence Taylor, Leonard Marshall and Carl Banks have created heavy pressure on quarterbacks.

Even with Erik Howard sidelined by back surgery, the Giants should get pressure on the Cowboys' quarterback, Troy Aikman. They have contained him in the past by pressuring him on first down and keeping him from short-yardage situations.

Aikman will probably throw quick passes to Smith and his tight ends. He has a good deep receiver in Michael Irvin and an underrated tight end in Jay Novacek.

What the Cowboys want most is to unleash Smith. They have put the ball in his hands on 42 percent of their offensive plays this year, and he has accounted for 48 percent of their yardage. But he may have trouble even against the Giants' wounded defense.

"We've had problems running on them in the past," said Coach Jimmy Johnson of the Cowboys, "but so has everybody else."

Smith runs a lot like Barry Sanders of the Detroit Lions. Like Sanders, he is stumpy and has strong legs, and he slashes through a hole quickly. The Giants know they must stop him.

"Emmitt Smith is the best back we'll face all year," Marshall said.

INTERCITY: Midland nears ownership of tourney title

(From 1B)

Mike Morgan led the Odessa team with a 2-over par, 74; Vince Vines, Odessa's leader after 18, ballooned to a 79 Saturday, thanks largely to a triple bogey eight on the par 5, 13th.

"I had a couple of bad holes," said Vines, a 1976 Odessa Permian graduate. "You miss one shot here or there out here ... and then I had the eight one hole."

The 13th ate up not only Vines, but also his playing partners Baker, who double bogeyed, Charles Roberts, who had a bogey, and Bryan, who had to scramble for a par.

On No. 12 Bryan bogeyed for one of his few miscues of the day. But his birdies on 11, 14, 15 and 18 more than made up for the rough two holes at 12 and 13.

"I had a couple of three putts," Bryan reminded, "but I made a lot. The pins and the wind blowing made it play tough today."

Bryan, Whiteside, Baker and Roberts, the low foursome and all Midlanders, are the final four off the tee in the championship flight today at 2 p.m. at Hogan Park.

Saturday's individual and team results after second round action at the Midland-Odessa Inter-City Golf Championship, held Saturday at Ratliff Ranch Golf Course (par 72); (second round scores only count toward team totals; individual scores are cumulative through first two rounds).

Walters' lead narrows at MBS Classic

Associated Press

LPGA

BUENA PARK, Calif. — Lisa Walters, winless in nine years on the LPGA Tour, shot a 2-under par 70 Saturday and saw her lead cut to one stroke in the MBS LPGA Classic.

Walters, who led by three strokes after the second round, was at 9-under-par 207 after three rounds at the Los Coyotes Country Club. Meg Mallon and Judy Dickinson were one shot back after third-round 68s.

Pat Bradley, with a 67, and Brandie Burton, with a 68, were tied for fourth at 209.

Walters, born in Prince Rupert, British Columbia, is looking for her first LPGA Tour victory. She joined the tour 1983 and has yet to finish higher than a tie for third.

"I wasn't as nervous today as I thought I would be," Walters said. "But I think I'll probably be nervous Sunday. This is the first time I've ever been the leader after three days of a tournament."

Walters' best finishes this year were two ties for 23rd. With a first-place prize of $52,500 at stake, Walters is in position to win more money in this tournament than she has in any entire year except 1987.

"I'm no worse than I was four or five years ago," Walters said. "It's just that the other players are getting so much better. There are a lot of people out here that can win."

Mallon was pleased with her round. She birdied four of the first nine holes but managed just one birdie on the backside along with one bogey.

"My putter was working very well," Mallon said. "My long putts were especially good.'

She sank a 20-footer at the par 4, 394-yard 6th hole and followed that with a 35-footer at the par 4, 355-yard 7th.

"The leader board is packed," Mallon said. "I know that I'll have to shoot at least 4-under to be in contention."

Bradley's round included five birdies and no bogeys. She is looking for her second straight victory and fourth this year. Her next victory will be the 30th of her career, giving her entry into the LPGA Hall of Fame.

Rodriguez, Gilbert in Bank One Classic lead

Seniors

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Gibby Gilbert, a non-winner since joining the Senior Tour this year, shot a 4-under-par 68 Saturday and tied Chi Chi Rodriguez for the lead after two rounds of the Bank One Senior Classic.

Rodriguez, the first-round leader, fired a 70 for a 137 total.

George Archer made the biggest run of the day, with a 67 on the par-72, 6,744-yard Kearny Hill Golf Links. He was one behind the leaders at 138.

J.C. Snead shot a 71 for fourth place at 139.

Miller Barber, who started the day one back of Rodriguez, kept in the hunt on the front side with birdies on Nos. 6 and No. 8. But double bogeys at 13, where he went into the woods, and 18, where he wound up in a waste area, forced Barber to finish with a 73.

Barber still won $11,000 for the Vantage Classics part of the tournament for golfers over 60 with a 3-under 141. Don January and Gordon Jones tied for second in the Classics at 142.

Rafe Botts, who made the tournament as an alternate after two others dropped out, was among four players at 140. Also at 140 was Gary Player, who finished the last three holes 1 under despite pulling a muscle in his left leg while scrambling out of a deep bunker.

Larry Laoretti and Rocky Thompson, each with a 70, were the others at 140.

Jim Colbert, also one stroke behind Rodriguez after the opening round, shot a 73 for 141.

Gamez fires 66 to catch Nelson at Southern Open

PGA

PINE MOUNTAIN, Ga. (AP) — Robert Gamez shot a 6-under-par 66 Saturday to share the lead with Larry Nelson after three rounds of the Southern Open golf tournament.

Nelson, 44, had the lead until bogeying the par 4, 18th hole to finish with a 70 and a three-round total of 207, 9-under over the par-72, 7,057-yard Mountain View course at Callaway Gardens resort.

Gamez' 66 was the best round of the tournament and included an eagle on the par 5 seventh hole where he chipped in from 80 feet.

Another stroke back at 208 was Dave Sutherland, who had a 70.

Second-round leader Brandt Jobe had five bogeys and a pair of birdies for a 75 and was at 210.

Morris Hatalsky and David Peoples also were at 210. Hatalsky had a 69 and Peoples a 72. John Huston, Scott Gump, Lee Janzen and Chris Perry were another shot back at 211. Huston and Gump each had 71s, Perry a 73 and Janzen a 74.

Nelson was two shots behind Jobe when play began Saturday. But he took the lead with birdies on his first two holes while Jobe had a bogey on No. 2.

Nelson, who has limited his tour play this year, competing in only 14 events and only three since finishing third in the U.S. Open in June, had four birdies on the front nine. His only two bogeys came on the back side.

Defending champion Kenny Knox was at 218 after a 74. PGA champion John Daly, who drew the biggest gallery of the day, also shot himself out of contention with a 76 and was at 218.

RYDER: Ballesteros evens match with back-nine birds beat Lanny Wadkins and Wayne Levi 3 and 1.

Stewart, the U.S. Open champion, and Couples held a 2-up advantage through 13 holes, a good part of it on the strength of a pitch-in eagle and a 10-foot birdie putt by Couples.

But Ballesteros birdied 13th and 15th holes, each from between 15 and 18 feet, and the match was even.

It stayed that way through the par-5 16th with matching pars, and the 17th, only because Olazabal missed a 6-foot winning putt.

On the 18th, Couples pulled his drive far to the left. But he found a good lie in the sand and lofted a great pitch within 18 feet of the flag. Olazabal was well inside him with his approach. When both missed, the hole was halved and the score was tied.

The half-point loss was the only blemish on the record of Olazabal and Ballesteros, who won their other three matches as a pair. In 12 pairings going back to 1987, they are 9-1-2.

In morning foursomes, in which each member of a two-man team plays alternate shots on the same ball, Ballesteros and Olazabal scored their third victory of the matches, 3 and 2 over Ray Floyd and Couples.

Stewart and Mark Calcavecchia survived a major scare and two balls in the water on the 17th for a 1-up victory over James and Richardson. Wadkins and Irwin beat David Feherty of Northern Ireland and Sam Torrance of Scotland 4 and 2.

Earnhardt leads qualifying for Tyson Holly Farms 400

Associated Press

NORTH WILKESBORO, N.C. — Dale Earnhardt led second-day qualifying Saturday for the Tyson Holly Farms 400 at North Wilkesboro Speedway.

Earnhardt, who has yet to win a pole this season, qualified for the wild card draw for the Busch Clash in February, turning a fast lap of 115.854 mph on the five-eighths-mile oval.

That was a big improvement over the 114.767 he turned on Friday in the opening round of time trials.

Earnhardt, who leads Ricky Rudd by only 59 points in the battle for the 1991 Winston Cup championship, will start 16th in Sunday's 33-car lineup. His Saturday lap would have been good enough for 12th if Earnhardt had turned it on Friday.

Rudd stood on his first-day lap of 115.367 and will start 22nd.

"We're ready for the race," Earnhardt said. "The big problem now will be beating Harry Gant."

Gant won the pole and will be attempting to win his fifth straight Winston cup event.

Earnhardt said, "He's so consistent. Barring any problems, I don't seem him getting beat this week."

Hut Stricklin also improved in the second round, raising his speed from 115.054 to 115.657 and taking the 17th starting position for the 400-lap race.

The next five starters stood on their first day laps, as did five other drivers.

Richard Petty, who is expected to announce at a Tuesday news conference that 1992 will be his last season as a driver, slipped from 113.413 on Friday to 113.202 — 32nd among the 33 drivers on hand.

He will begin the race last, the beneficiary of a rule added this year adding former series champions as a third provisional starter at races where they do not earn a starting berth.

Presidential speech turns off the Minnesota Twins' faithful

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — When the focus went from Randy Bush, the rightfielder, to George Bush, the president, dozens of Minnesota Twins fans got on the phone.

The switchboard at WCCO-TV got busy with calls from fans upset that the Twins' game with the Blue Jays in Toronto Friday nighty was interrupted by a presidential speech. After all, the Twins were closing in on a division title and playing the team they may be facing in the American League playoffs.

One minute it was Randy Bush watching a triple sail past him in right field, and the next it was President Bush talking defense of a different sort, doing away with nuclear weapons.

The fans made sure receptionist Katheryn George knew which Bush they preferred.

"WCCO, please hold. WCCO, please hold. WCCO, please hold," a frantic George repeated, working the switchboard as fast as her fingers would allow.

"The president is speaking for the next 20 minutes and we will resume as soon as he's done."

It was like that for almost 25 minutes.

"It was the program director's decision," George told one caller. "The game will be on as soon as the president is through."

The calls were short, but to the point.

Who made the decision to pull the Twins for the president? And why put Bush on when the other stations were covering him, too?

On and on and on it went. In 25 minutes, George logged 52 calls.

"Actually, I thought it would be worse," she said. "We preempted 'Knots Landing' once, and boy, did we get calls."

Ncita retains featherweight title

SUN CITY, South Africa (AP) — Welcome Ncita of South Africa retained his International Boxing Federation junior featherweight title Saturday by winning a split decision over Colombia's Sugar Baby Rojas.

It was Ncita's fifth defense of the title, and his second fight with Rojas since February.

Two of the three American judges gave the decision to Ncita 115-113. The third scored it 119-109 for Rojas.

Ncita went to the ground in the second round after a right from Rojas, but he quickly stood up and the referee ruled it was a slip. Rojas complained repeatedly about head butts from Ncita, who relied on a left jab and fancy footwork to avoid Rojas' hard punch.

"He was strong. I knew it was going to be a tough fight, but I know I'm smarter," said Ncita, who remains unbeaten after 29 fights. "Our strategy was to box, not to fight him."

The bout was the second world title fight in South Africa in five years.

Salt Lake City in line for Spring Football

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — Salt Lake City will be one of the franchise sites for the new Professional Spring Football League.

The new league expects to have teams in 10 cities, although only nine have been decided.

The West Division will have Salt Lake City, Portland, Las Vegas, Albuquerque and Little Rock, Ark.; and the East will be made up of Boston, Columbia, S.C.; Tampa Bay, Miami and the yet-unidentified city.

A 16-game schedule begins play Feb. 29, 1992, and runs through June followed by playoffs and a championship game, America's Red, White and Blue Bowl, on the July 4 weekend.

Teams will have 45 players, many from PSFL team locales, and salaries should average about $45,000, league officials say.

Franchise fees are $250,000. To break even in the first year, the league said attendance must exceed two million at the 95 games — 20,000 per game at an average ticket cost of $15.

The PSFL expects the Salt Lake City team, as yet unnamed, to play in Utah's Rice Stadium, but the school's associate athletic director Ned Alger said no contract has been signed.

Krisiukenas said the PSFL is not in competition with the National Football League, nor is it a farm system for the NFL.

One of the players mentioned by Krisiukenas as likely being on the Salt Lake roster is last season's All-American tight end at Brigham Young, Chris Smith.

Chap netters combine for seven tourney titles

Staff Report

ABILENE — It wasn't a bad outing for the Midland College tennis team as they won two men's titles and five women's crowns in the Abilene Christian University Walmart tennis tournament Saturday.

Even at that, the results are a little deceiving since the Chaparrals played each other in two divisions of play.

MC's David Draper beat teammate Berhe Serekebrhan in the first flight men's singles finals. In the women's division, MC's Lucie Ludvigova beat Chap Seiko Ichioka in the top flight.

"I put my top players in the top flights for competition purposes at this time of year, so we could have done a lot better if I had spread them down through the lower flights," Joe Williams, MC tennis coach, said.

MC's Tom Erik Brun won the third flight men's singles. Boba Tzvetkova won the women's second flight singles title while teammate Caroline Reynolds won the No. 3 title.

The MC women also took the top two doubles titles with Ludvigova and Tzvetkova taking No. 1 and Ichioka and Reynolds taking No. 2.

The Chaps will play in the Rolex Invitational tournament in Midland next weekend where winners can earn an all-expenses paid trip to Corpus Christi in the Super Bowl of small college tennis.

McEnroe routs Jimmy Connors

BASEL, Switzerland (AP) — When John McEnroe and Jimmy Connors were in their prime, they had some brilliant tennis duels. They met again Saturday in an eagerly awaited match, and the result was disappointingly one-sided, McEnroe winning 6-1, 6-3 in the semifinals of the Swiss Indoor tournament.

McEnroe, the No. 8 seed and defending champion, will meet Switzerland's Jakob Hlasek for the title Sunday. Hlasek beat Alexander Volkov of the Soviet Union 7-6 (7-3), 6-7 (5-7), 7-6 (7-5) in the other semifinal.

Connors started uncertainly, losing his first service game to his old rival and never showing the form that carried him to the semifinals without losing a set.

The result improved McEnroe's lead to 19-13 in head-to-head matches with Connors. In their most recent ATP finals, Connors won at Montreal in 1987

Luck runs out for Aldine

Associated Press

Two weeks after watching its 16-game winning streak come to a halt, the defending regular Class 5A champion Aldine Mustangs saw their luck run out against district foe Humble Kingwood.

It took a 27-yard field goal with 13 seconds remaining Friday night by Eric Clayton for Aldine (2-1-1), the 1990 mythical national champions, to salvage a 23-23 tie with the unranked Kingwood Mustangs in their District 21-5A opener.

Aldine kept Kingwood at bay during last year's 15-0 season with a late drive for a 24-21 victory over the Big School 5A state semifinalists.

This time, however, the Mustangs could get no closer than the Kingwood 11. Eric Gray threw three passes off receivers' fingertips in the final minute before Aldine settled for the field goal.

Prep Football

Also Friday night, Odessa Permian ran its unbeaten streak over crosstown rival Odessa to 27 games with a 44-0 romp in front of 20,000 fans at Ratliff Stadium. Last year's fears and frustrations over allegations of cheating and a scathing best-seller were replaced by hard-nosed football, and Permian, fifth-ranked in 5A, improved to 4-0.

All the top-ranked teams won big over unranked opponents.

Tax collector sees no need for change

■ County commissioners believe they can save tax money by using the appraisal district, but Frances Shuffield says there are dangers.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Just who ought to collect Midland County taxes is in dispute.

Frances Shuffield, the elected tax assessor-collector, is constitutionally mandated to assess and collect taxes and intends to continue do so. She has for 10 years.

The Commissioners' Court had rather she wouldn't.

While the five members of the court recognize her duty and devotion, they insist that county taxpayers could save $200,000 to $350,000 per year if Mrs. Shuffield were to allow the Commissioners' Court to contract the county's advalorem tax collecting with the Midland Central Appraisal District.

Shuffield

Mrs. Shuffield disagrees. By her calculations, the saving, if any, would be $79,000 at the most and not an $350,000.

She says the casualties would be six deputy tax-collectors who would lose their jobs; the taxpayers who no longer directly could elect the collector of their property taxes; the principle of taxation with representation would be tarnished somewhat by distancing the tax collector from the people; and Mrs. Shuffield, whose traditional job would be diminished.

Chief Appraiser Ron Stegall of the Midland Central Appraisal District said that his office, without any additional cost, could collect Midland County taxes. The cost to Midland County would be about $26,000.

During budget study, the Commissioners' Court tried to persuade Mrs. Shuffield to relinquish her role in collecting property taxes for Midland County and the Greenwood Independent School District. Currently, Greenwood school trustees contract with the assessor to collect Greenwood taxes.

Supporting their persuasion, members of the court cut Mrs. Shuffield 1992 budget, which goes into effect on Tuesday, to $541,169. She had asked for $598,000. Her 1991 budget was $617,155.

Her 1992 budget reflects a reduction in manpower by six deputies.

"The budget cuts that we made in the tax assessor's office are directed exactly at that (consolidation)" and encouraging Mrs. Shuffield to turn over tax collections to the Appraisal District, Seltzer said last week.

"The taxpayers of Midland County would save $350,000," Seltzer said. "That is one consolidation that we are trying to accomplish."

"The budget cuts were done to encourage her to reconsider her position," Seltzer said, "and say to her: 'This is going to save the taxpayers $350,000. Why don't we do that instead of trying to maintain the status quo?' "

Mrs. Shuffield said Seltzer's estimates are "utterly ridiculous."

Were there a real savings, Mrs. Shuffield said that she could understand the Commissioners' Court's logic in wanting

Local youths show talents through Duke test program

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Three-fourths of Trinity School's seventh graders were identified as mathematically and verbally talented by Duke University's Talent Identification Program (TIP).

TIP seventh graders will be allowed to take the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) and the American College Testing (ACT) assessment test this year. The SAT and ACT tests are usually taken only by college-bound juniors and seniors.

The program — which was established in 1980 — identified 21 of Trinity's 28 seventh graders as scoring at the 97th percentile or above in an in-school achievement or ability measure. They competed with students in a 16-state region, including the south, southwest and midwest.

"This is a record number for us," said Floyd James, spokesperson for the private school.

Midland Independent School District also saw a significant jump in the number of students who qualified for the TIP program this year, according to Ted Miller, MISD spokesperson.

The Trinity students qualified from Educational Record Bureau scores while public students qualify with CAT (California Achievement Test) scores. The scores are gleaned from tests taken in the sixth grade.

"Duke University doesn't specify which test must be given," James said.

Absence of cure highlights CDC's AIDS awareness

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

The local area is not immune: Carol Hale, executive director of the local coalition, said there has been a steady stream of clients through the doors in its first year of existence.

An official of the Permian Basin AIDS Coalition said she hopes people remember the life-threatening disease — after years of research — is still without a cure.

October has been named AIDS Awareness Month by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control.

As of late July, there were more than 13,200 cases of AIDS reported in Texas, ranking it fourth in the number of cases nationwide.

The local area is not immune: Carol Hale, executive director of the local coalition, said there has been a steady stream of clients through the doors in its first year of existence.

"This is a problem that's here and now in Midland-Odessa," Hale said. "Unfortunately there's still a stigma attached here. There's still work we need to do."

Hale said she hopes the month-long awareness campaign helps the cause.

"Having that designation is good, because there will be publicity about it," Hale said. "The education is definitely needed."

The Permian Basin AIDS Coalition will have an open house Oct. 17 from 3-6 p.m. at its office, 1522 N. Grandview Drive in Odessa.

Education, Hale said, although not an official task of the organization, is a part of its mission.

"That's the big issue," Hale said. "People need to know HIV is spreading among heterosexual men and women. They need to learn the truth about it."

She said coalition staff, striving to educate people about AIDS and the HIV virus that causes it, still find themselves unwelcome in the community at times.

There are 46 current clients using the coalition's services, but Hale thinks the number of HIV-infected people locally is much higher.

"Under-reporting is a problem in this area," Hale said. "I'd say the numbers should be three times that (46 clients) easily." Under-reporting shortchanges the coalition of some of the possible funding, she said.

Statistics show AIDS strikes men, women and children of all races. Women are the fastest-growing group infected with HIV, and people aged 20-29 are showing the highest rate of increase.

"They're now saying it could have an incubation period of 10-15 years," Hale said. "That means some of these people could have been HIV positive in their teens."

That statistic points up the need for education, Hale said.

Some new programs for both assistance and education have developed at the state and local levels.

The Texas Department of Health (TDH) updates its "HIV/AIDS Community Resource Directory" several times a year.

Locally, Ryan White Title II funding, named for the Indiana teenager who died in 1990 of AIDS-related complications, is slated to fund new programs of direct services to HIV-infected persons.

"We're very excited because with this grant we can offer more," Hale said. "We're going to have eye care and dental, transportation, some additional counseling and a food pantry. We can put people in touch with other organizations for emergency care, and we can offer some help with rent and bills."

Local coalition workers are willing to conduct informational talks, give facts over the phone, or otherwise support the educational process, Hale said.

"We also need contributions very much," she said. "Our state and federal funds don't go far enough. We need money, a freezer for our food pantry, paint and carpeting."

Hale said she and the coalition's staff hope that soon facilities like theirs will no longer be needed.

"There are drugs now that interfere with the AIDS virus. But it's all still experimental," she said. "A cure is of course the ultimate goal."

Spin of the 'Wheel' pays off for ex-Midlander

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

"There is no way you can gauge the outcome," former Midlander Ron Riley said of the game show, Wheel of Fortune. "If the wheel is bad to you, you lose. If it's good to you, you win. No amount of preparation can prepare you for what the wheel is going to do."

Riley knows.

He was a recent contestant on the popular game show, one that fortune smiled upon.

"People say I couldn't do that with millions of people watching, I would fall flat on my face. It makes me too nervous. But that's not the case. With $10,000 or $20,000 dangling in front of your face you tend to forget there's anybody watching. It doesn't matter that the audience is there. It doesn't matter that Vanna is wearing something skimpy."

The segments Riley is in will be aired Thursday and Friday. Riley, who now lives in Lubbock, has invited his friends and those who enjoy the television program to join him at Lubbock's Texas Cafe for the Thursday show and in Midland at Riley's for the Friday show. Gatherings each day begin at 6 p.m.

"These people who sit back on the their couch and watch Wheel of Fortune and think how dumb these people must be that they don't get the puzzle, when it's really obvious, now's their chance to be able to talk one-on-one with a contestant and find out how intense it really is," Riley said.

"You can sit very still and stare at the television until you come up with the answer to the puzzle, but in the studio your attention is first focused on the puzzle board, then on the used letter board and how much money you have under that, then to the wheel and the spin and what Pat's saying, then back to the puzzle board. Between letters you don't really have time to study what the puzzle is.

"If you don't pick a letter in time, they'll disqualify you and move to the next player. You'll lose your turn. I think that if I were to die tomorrow, that I would like on my gravestone — 'I'd like to use my free spin, please,' Riley said. He laughed, then added, "One more

Parental approval ranks high on list of life's necessities

Today's question: How old does a person have to be before he no longer seeks the approval of his parents?

Answer: It never happens.

Ott

Strange, isn't it? No matter how old the calender says we have become, we still want mom and dad to nod approvingly and say, "That's my boy. He did good."

You think I'm lying?

Consider this true story: A Midland woman who is in her late 50s was recently wavering over whether or not she and her husband should purchase a new home. It was a good house and her husband had finally made up his mind. Go for it, he concluded. And since it was his wife's idea to move in the first place, it seemed only logical that once his positive reaction was confirmed the change of address would be a mere formality.

Then the wife, as wives are prone to do, began to experience doubts. "Problem areas" began to surface in her mind. Was the house too big? And, how about its structural design and overall layout? There is, after all, an awful lot of walking required to get from the master bedroom to the kitchen. And, while we're at it, how about the backyard? And the garage? And the living room carpet?

On and on the questions went.

Finally the husband, totally exasperated with the ordeal, said, "Forget it. We'll stay where we are. I never wanted to move in the first place." He refrained from strangling his wife, but just barely.

Instead, he told the Realtor of their change of heart. He apologized profusely.

The agent, no doubt used to such vacillating attitudes, made a final observation to the husband. "You know," she said, "I think your wife is worried about how her parents are going to react. She's afraid they're going to think it was a foolish and extravagant move. She won't give herself permission to buy this big home until she feels she has theirs."

The husband, realizing the Realtor just might have a point, called the in-laws and explained the situation.

The in-laws, who, it turned out, thought buying the house was a dandy idea, called the daughter back and gave their official "blessing" to the purchase.

This, as you can imagine, made the daughter as happy as a schoolgirl getting ready for her Junior Prom.

She and her husband bought the house. Everyone, we assume, can now live happily ever after.

But the bottom line is, the wife could not be comfortable with such a major decision until she knew her parents would approve. Think about it: A 58-year-old woman needed "permission" from her 80-year-old parents to buy a house she and her husband had already agreed they could afford and wanted.

It is, indeed, a strange world in which we live.

Perhaps the above scenario was a tad extreme, but is the basic premise really all that unusual? I think not.

Most of us, whether we are willing to admit it or not, still have a peculiar yearning to have our parents' approval. We want them to be proud of us. It is as though we never grew up. We're still that little kid in the school play who is trying desperately to please his mom and dad. We want to cuddle up afterwards and have them say, "You were the best pumpkin in the whole play."

Oh, we don't like to admit such feelings. No, indeed. That would make us appear wimpish. So we hide behind a gruff, independent exterior. We make "mommy and daddy" jokes and laugh at people who actually visit their parents on a regular basis.

But deep down inside that thirst for approval lingers.

If buying a house, we want dad to nod thoughtfully and say, "Looks like a good investment."

If getting married, we want mom to smile knowingly and say, "She's a real nice girl."

If changing careers, we want them both to ponder the options and say, "You're doing the right thing."

It fact, it is those five words — You're doing the right thing — that mean so much to us. When our friends express that opinion, we take it with a grain of salt. We shrug nonchalantly.

But when our parents utter the words, it becomes a magical message. We burst at the seams.

Mom and dad are pleased.

In some ways, kids never grow up. And when you think about it, maybe they shouldn't.

WHEEL: Riley rolls up big score on game show

chance at life."

After working hard to get on the program, Riley was relaxed during the actual filming.

"It felt great. I knew it was time to go and play the game. I had prepared myself for it. I knew everyone there knew how to play the game as well as I did, and I just went to have fun. There's too many things that happen in the game that I cannot control.

"So now that I know how to play the game, and I know that I know how to play the game, it was time to just relax and do it to the best of my ability."

Still, he was shocked when he won.

"At the end of the fourth round is where I won," said this 1969 Lee High School graduate. "I could not believe it. You'll see this expression of disbelief. I didn't even smile. I don't give it up. There's no expression. I believe they are wrong. I just don't believe that I've won. It takes a few minutes to actually soak in that it's really true. I'm thinking they are going to take it all back — call down and say, do it again, this didn't really happen."

Riley is pleased with his success, but he won't divulge publicly how well he did.

"The excitement is in the watching of the show. If I were to tell you now, it would be a little like knowing what you are getting for Christmas."

Riley, a musician who has been working as a well-site geologist, has been a fan of Wheel of Fortune for years.

"People would come by, and we would play this game. They would say, 'Hey, you're real good at this, why don't you go to California and try out.'t"

Riley had a standard answer for his friends, "If you'll pay my way out there — all the expenses — I'll split my winnings with you."

Someone finally did. Gail Magnon, who met Riley through a personal advertisement, asked him the standard question after seeing how well he played the game, Riley said. He told her what he had told his friends.

"She paused about a millisecond, and said OK."

Although Wheel of Fortune does not recommend that potential contestants come to California to try out, Riley did.

"The day I tried out there were 75 people, and they gave us a test which included just puzzles like the game show — about 18 puzzles and only 11 people of the 75 passed the puzzle test. That same day they profiled our personalities and decided to keep only five of us."

When asked what they seemed to be looking for, Riley said, "Your energy and ability to follow instructions. They specifically told us to come dressed casual, and I came as casual as possible. Your cheerleader ability — it seems to be that sort of thing. I'm not a cheerleader and don't want people to think you have to be a cheerleader to go. They want people to be perky and alive and energetic."

During the second day's evaluation, the participants who were left played the game.

"When I came back, there were 40 people. Those 40 people had to be gleaned from several sets of 75. Eight times 75 — probably 600 people that had been cut down to 40.

"They spun the wheel for us and stopped it where they wanted it to stop. They just wanted to make sure we know how to play the game, and they would tell us certain things to do, such as, 'Do not say I would like an R please. Just say R. And say, I'd like to solve the puzzle rather than blurt out the solution."

Those who played the second day were told less than 50 percent are chosen, Riley said. All the contestants were told they would receive notification within two weeks. When Riley received his, he discovered he was schedlued for shows being filmed in Chicago.

"Normally, they will film five shows in one day in California. They'll video four days in a row so they have a month's worth of shows in four days. One week they do the daytime show. The next week they do the evening show, then they'll spend two weeks on the road looking for recruits," said Riley, who remarked that one recruiting stop has been the State Fair of Texas.

"It took about an hour to film the 30-minute show. They stop between every puzzle. The turnaround is around 20 minutes."

Riley's name was drawn the second day. He said he won much more than the cost to his business partner for both trips, which was $1,500. He knows how he's going to spend his winnings.

"My drug is music. I'd like to make another album. I'm sure I'll use this money to play music until it runs out."

Among the songs he's writing for his next album is one which helps put his Wheel of Fortune experience in perspective — "It's the roll of the dice, the luck of the deal. It's a a game of chance, a spin of the wheel."

COUNTY: County debates tax collection changes

(From 1C)

the Appraisal District to collect county taxes.

Seltzer said that Mrs. Shuffield "has fought us and resisted us on that particular issue and has told us that she will not contract" with the Appraisal District.

Mrs. Shuffield, who said she consulted with four lawyers in Austin about the Commissioners' Court's persuasion by way of budget cuts, said the lawyers and she agreed that while "Judge Seltzer may have his legal rights to remove the funding, ... he is morally and ethically incorrect in taking this action against an elected official."

Commissioner Guy McCrary, in a Sept. 13 letter to Mrs. Shuffield, noted that changes in her budgetary requests were made "to minimize the tax increase" and to reduce her 23-member staff by six, by mid-1992.

"It is our hope that this action will persuade your office to enable the Commissioners' Court to contract with the Midland Central Appraisal District for ad valorem collections beginning in October 1992," McCrary wrote, "and thereby to eliminate the present duplication of the costs of collections to taxpayers."

McCrary said that the county's "fiscal condition ... requires continued austerity during these difficult economic times."

Mrs. Shuffield examined what she perceived as a fallacy in the Commissioners' Court's logic.

"My entire budget is $541,000," Mrs. Shuffield said, "and if you took that $350,000 away, there would be about $200,000 left in my budget."

And that would not fund the payroll to run her office were her work force to be cut to 17 from 23 should ad valorem tax-collecting be contracted out.

Mrs. Shuffield's salary is $41,000, while her clerks' salaries, including benefits, average about $24,000 a year.

In addition to collecting property taxes, Mrs. Shuffield's 23-member staff collects vehicle sale taxes, which amounted to about $8 million in 1990; vehicle title fees, vehicle highway registration fees, road and bridge fees, and liquor license fees.

In 1990, the office collected more than $2 million in fees, which included 5 percent of the $8 million in motor-vehicle sales taxes.

Seltzer, who is in his first year as county judge, has "no idea of the massive amount of work we do," Mrs. Shuffield said.

And while the judge and the four commissioners are worried about duplication of computer, mailing and other services, Mrs. Shuffield posed, "Why do we need four county commissioners that are taking care of our roads. Why can't one take care of it? Why don't we get rid of three of them?"

Each commissioner is paid about $28,000 annually. The judge's 1992 salary is $58,000.

Mrs. Shuffield, enraged at prospects of losing her property tax-collecting chores, cites her "duty to collect the taxes" for the "whole county."

"That's my jurisdiction. And they are taking that away. Why don't they take theirs away?"

But the Commissioners' Court cannot remove her constitutional duties without her consent.

For more than 10 years, the Midland Central Appraisal District (CAD) has collected taxes for the Midland Independent School District, the city of Midland, Midland College, and the Midland County Hospital District.

The appraisal district was mandated by law to appraise, at 100 percent of fair-market value, property throughout Midland County as its primary function.

When the Midland Central Appraisal District was established, the MISD, the city, Midland College and the hospital district elected to have the CAD, which is governed by a five-member appointed board, to collect their taxes. Before that, the city of Midland's tax office was collecting those taxes.

Midland County and Greenwood ISD declined to join in.

Of the board's five members, three are appointed by the Midland ISD, and one each is appointed by the city of Midland and Midland County.

Board membership, which is determined by percentages of the tax levy, is controlled by the three Midland ISD appointees, Gil Tompson, Margaret Cowden and David Grimes. Walt Holton represents Midland County and Greenwood ISD. Ciro Sanchez represents the city of Midland.

Of the combined $72-million tax levy, the Midland ISD commands 49.88 percent. The city of Midland takes 22.77 percent; Midland County, 9.13 percent; the college, 5.68 percent; the hospital, 8.49 percent, and Greenwood, 4.04 percent.

In trying to persuade Mrs. Shuffield to relinquish her collection of ad-valorem taxes, Commissioner Win Brown said that the Commissioners' Court is "trying to save the taxpayers money in all areas.

"This is an area that we have looked at for a long time," Brown said. "We think that she needs to work with us, instead of fighting with us, to come to an equitable solution.'

Pecos County may find profit in salt water — shrimp

FORT STOCKTON (AP) — It may sound fishy, but Pecos County Extension Agent Zan Matthies isn't spinning a tale when he says there could be big money in cultivating a shrimp industry in parched far West Texas.

"This is always considered a joke, when you talk about growing shrimp in a desert," Matthies said.

"But I'll tell you, there's already talk about a shrimp festival," quipped Paul Valenzuela, a Pecos County commissioner and project booster.

No one's expecting such a venture to take the place of oil, which kept the state's second biggest county prosperous for years before the bust dried up tax coffers.

But, some do believe shrimp farming could help the county out of hard times.

"The county is getting into financial problems and inflation is going up and we cut just every place we can and now we're getting into cutting services," Matthies said.

Facing the cuts, the county went fishing for a new industry and came up with aquaculture.

In 1983, land in remote Pecos County was assessed at a little more than $7 billion. Last year, it was worth just over $3 billion. Meanwhile the tax rate went from 9 cents per $100 valuation in 1983 to 22 cents per $100 valuation in 1990. Pecos County's budget is $7 million.

Oil once was the county's biggest industry. Two other primary employers and taxpayers, a Firestone test track and a sulphur plant, left town.

The county has ventured into growing pima cotton.

LOCAL/AREA REPORTS

Two arrested

Lamesa police have arrested two men in connection with the Sept. 21 shooting death of Reynaldo Zepeda Lopez.

Police said Bobby Bela Jr., 19, and Jesse Jimenez, 21, were each being held on $500,000 bonds Friday. Bela was arrested Thursday in Lubbock, and Jimenez was arrested later that same day in Plainview, police said.

Lopez, 43, was reportedly shot once in the chest shortly before 11 p.m. Sept. 21. Police earlier said based on witness accounts, they believed two subjects had approached the victim at his home and started a conversation with him before the shooting.

Two wounded

ODESSA — A man and woman were shot in the legs early today while in a vehicle, police said.

Estella Prado, 37, and Elizardo Pando Jr., 36, were apparently shot while driving near the intersection of 47th Street and Golder about 1:48 a.m., but were not found until later that morning, according to police reports.

Police received a report of shots fired in a field near the intersection , but an officer dispatched found no apparent problem, police said.

Ms. Prado's injuries — gunshot wounds in both thighs — were reported to police about 2:30 a.m. Pando's wounds — two shots in one thigh — were reported more than two hours later, shortly after 5 a.m.

Police said a suspect has been identified in the shooting and the weapon has been recovered, but no charges have been filed and the incident is still under investigation.

Officials increase security at Midland airport

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

Officials say some Midland International Airport facilities are getting more secure.

City councilmen have accepted a $1.3-million grant from the Federal Aviation Administration and authorized contracting with Matrix Co. of Dayton, Ohio for the installation of additional security measures. A security system overhaul, which began in November 1989, must be in place by February in order to meet FAA regulations.

"It's FAA-required and FAA-financed," said Deputy City Manager Mike McGregor. The city is expected to pay about 15 cents for every FAA-allocated dollar, adding up to $336,498 out of the total $1.7-million project.

Airport Administration Supervisor Marcy Blauvelt said the public will notice little of the changes that are to take place with additional security measures. Most of the improvements are designed to keep unauthorized people out of restricted areas, including airline ramps and loading areas.

Airport Administration Supervisor Marcy Blauvelt said the public will notice little of the changes . . .

Authorized personnel will have a card, like a credit card, that will be inserted into a reading machine to unlock doors and gateways.

"Passengers really won't be affected because they aren't allowed in those areas anyway," Blauvelt said. The original security system designed was generated by the airport's violation of some FAA security regulations several years ago.

Design and operation of the airport's proposed system has been approved by the FAA.

"This will be computer-controlled, so an employee, for example, could be denied access once it is no longer needed," Blauvelt explained. The cards and readers will control foot traffic as well as vehicles entering certain areas, she said.

Closed-circuit television cameras and monitors will also be installed in places to monitor activity, Blauvelt said.

"That's something people will see, some of the cameras," she said. "They may see card readers on some doors and some cameras, but that's about all."

"It's going to be a fully secure situation," McGregor said. "Unauthorized people can't get past certain points on the airport. It's all laser-driven and very high-tech."

Airport administration, under FAA rules, is responsible for securing airport facilities, but the airlines handle screening of passengers and luggage — which is not part of the security upgrade, Blauvelt explained.

"This is going to help us a lot in keeping to that responsibility," she said.

San Simeon crossroads of family history

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

San Simeon is a little siesta town on the Pacific Ocean midway between the rolling riptides of Los Angeles and San Francisco. No place in the world brings back so many memories to me.

San Simeon has been the crossroads of our family history for more than a century. Many of my own early struggles began on its now famous hilltop where my father built a "castle" and so many dreams.

The Santa Lucia Mountains are often covered by an early morning fog, but the sun usually burns it off by about 10 o'clock. The baked-brown hills climb out of the mist as the sun rises and reaches above the ocean. They seem to stretch forever against the sky. Local folk still walk the beaches to watch the Pacific tide rise and fall as it has for centuries.

Many people have now discovered the Hearst Castle. The Casa Grande and three guest houses, which once were the private quarters of our family and friends, today welcome tourists from all over the world. They come by car and busload to view what Pop called La Cuesta Encantada (The Enchanted Hill). Young and old want to see the extraordinary setting — the hilltop looking across mountains and down to the ocean — and the thousands of beautiful art treasures filling hundreds of rooms in the four buildings.

THE WORKS of art at San Simeon have long represented perhaps the greatest private collection in the history of the United States. It was one man's dream — to put Old World artistic accomplishments in a purely American setting. As Hedda Hopper, the Hollywood columnist, once wrote: "It was like a visit to a Never-Never Land. Never have we seen its like, and never will we again." George Bernard Shaw joked that it was what God would have built if He had had the money.

After Pop died in 1951 our family and the executors of the estate were in a quandary about the future of the huge, costly complex. No member of the family or the corporation was in a position to maintain it. My father had told me several times that he expected this. He hoped that the University of California would accept the house and gardens as a gift. However, the university declined.

After much discussion, the main buildings and grounds were offered to the state of California. The 137-foot-high Hispano-Moresque Casa Grande and its great bell towers, the three guest houses, and the sprawling majestic gardens, terraces, and pools had become a white elephant. However, our family and the Hearst Corporation wanted to retain the huge acreage around the buildings as a cattle ranch.

"It was like a visit to a Never-Never Land. Never have we seen its like, and never will we again."

— Hedda Hopper, describing Hearst Castle

The state accepted the 123-acre complex and placed it under the direction of the California Park System. The park system opened the grounds and buildings to the public in 1958. The site officially became the Hearst San Simeon State Historical Monument. The castle has now become one of the largest tourist attractions in the United States, with some 1.1 million visitors a year. The state has translated informational brochures on it into seven foreign languages: Spanish, German, French, Italian, Japanese, Korean, and Hebrew. The enterprise provides California with more than $1 million in annual revenues. The white elephant is now a golden goose.

It was not my father but my grandparents, George and Phoebe, who began the Hearst dynasty, if that is what it is. Pop probably would never have envisioned either his media empire or San Simeon were it not for those two Missourians who scaled the first mountaintops. They became mine owners, large land owners, and ultimately multimillionaires. Their lives were truly remarkable.

GRANDMA HAD an enormous influence over me because she rarely, if ever, preached. That is, with words. I was so impressed by the way she stood, and spoke — and rode in her huge Pierce Arrow limousine — that I was completely fascinated. It was a huge, polished, very grand contraption, and assumed an even more distinguished aura with a uniformed chauffeur sitting in the front seat. She invited us for a ride only when she wanted company going to San Francisco. Years earlier, when I had first met her, she used a stylish carriage pulled by highstepping trotters.

When Grandfather passed on, he had left her one of the country's largest companies and she was now running it — extensive silver and gold mines, the ranches at San Simeon and in Mexico, the Examiner and the growing newspaper chain of her son, as well as other investments. She was her own accountant and knew the financial status of each enterprise. She scheduled meetings at the hacienda with foremen and others running these businesses. Grandma hired and fired, promoted and demoted, and watched every move my father made. She was his top banker. I began to realize, to my utter astonishment, that Grandma was one of the richest women in America.

The Hearst Castle sits on a hilltop at San Simeon, Calif. The 123-acre complex is now part of the California Park System and is called Hearst San Simeon State Historical Monument.

Although the feminist movement as we understand it today did not exist in her time, Phoebe was extremely active in aiding young women's causes — from help for the YWCA to constructing women's buildings at the University of California at Berkeley. She gave many individual scholarships to young women in various fields: medicine, engineering, architecture, music, and others. Phoebe also joined and marched with O.H.P. Belmont to win American women the right to vote.

Perhaps it seems I'm boasting about Grandma's generosity. She herself went to great pains to conceal it, but that was often impossible. Many projects became public. Still, she was able to keep private scores of scholarships and similar assistance. It's estimated that she gave away somewhere between $21 million and $25 million during her lifetime. That was when a dollar was real money, and there were no tax benefits in giving to charity. Many of Phoebe's charitable works, and those of my father too, have never been made public.

If Phoebe had one big disappointment in life it was not having more children. She casually mentioned that to me several times. She loved my father deeply, and proudly told me he was named after his paternal and maternal grandfathers. He became the light of her life. She wanted other children who would be named after other relatives, but they never came.

GRANDMA CAUGHT influenza during an epidemic in the early spring of 1919. My brother Jack and I were living with her in the hacienda at the time. For the next several weeks she kept getting weaker. Jack was then stricken with appendicitis and hospitalized. I was the only grandson with her.

When Grandma's health suddenly deteriorated sharply, Mom and Pop took the train west to join us. Phoebe lingered on but never regained her strength. She was very calm, though, and I kept telling her that she would pull through. Shortly after my parents arrived, Phoebe died. It was Easter Sunday, April 3, 1919.

This was the first time that I had looked death in the face. I wept for days. The whole world had fallen and crashed into smithereens for this 11-year-old boy. I could not envisage life without her. That was the end of my boyhood innocence. I never looked at life quite the same way again.

Many schools have classes so easy 'dogs could pass'

By Rick Hampson
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK (AP) — They're singing at UConn and surfing at Pepperdine, juggling at NYU and growling at Wisconsin, eating at Minnesota and sleeping at Macalester — all for credit toward a baccalaureate degree.

The Oct. 3 issue of Rolling Stone magazine contains a "Guide to the Guts," featuring 20 of academia's most notoriously easy courses.

The magazine defines "guts," also known as "slides," "blowoffs" and "snaps," as "classes so easy your dog could pass." Compensation for the demands of organic chemistry and German intellectual history, their names are handed down each year from wily senior to callow freshman.

A gut guide is useful, the magazine notes, because not every course with a whimsical title is a gut. A seminar at Cornell last year entitled "Disneyland" was considered one of the most difficult courses on campus. On the other hand, cognoscenti take a supervised reading course that Rolling Stone particularly recommends "for students whose parents took (it) in the 1950s."

In "The Mind in Sleep" at Macalester College, students sleep in class; in "German Folk Songs" at the University of Connecticut, they sing in class; in "Surfing" at Pepperdine University, they surf in class, which is at a Southern California beach.

Having taken "The Flowering Plant" at Colorado College, Justin Herman knows that walnuts are a fruit. Yale's "Local Flora" taught Heidi Ellis that "American elm bark looks like a ham-and-cheese sandwich if you cut it open." Middlebury College's "Earthquakes and Volcanos" left Justin Keyes with this insight: "Never build anything on a fault."

In "Circus," New York University students learn juggling, stilt walking and trapeze acrobatics. Unicycle riding is optional.

If easy-sounding courses can turn out to be killers, the converse is also true. The University of North Carolina's "Introductory Symbolic Logic" deals in such epiphanies as, "If it is raining, the grass is wet."

Even guts require some work, however. Students in the University of Wisconsin's "The African Storyteller" must growl to frighten an African monster when it appears in one of the stories staged in class. Those enrolled in "Introduction to Nonverbal Communication" at the University of Arizona have to spy on passersby and invent stories about them based on their body movements.

In Washington University's "Fairy Tales and Ever After," stories by the Brothers Grimm are broken down into a series of plot elements. For the final, students must make up a tale with elements A (something bad happens to character) through K (ending, preferably happy).

To pass Yale's "Local Flora," students must follow a string through the woods, identifying trees the professor has marked. Students in the German folk song course sing their songs while eating pretzels and drinking cider. "Anthropology of Food" at the University of Minnesota has required the consumption of delicacies such as pork heart and raw squid.

Students clearly do learn something in such courses. Take Jennifer Cowan, veteran of a Boston University course on American film comedy, who tells us: "There's a back door most people don't know about that you can sneak out of as soon as he shuts off the lights."

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Midland college hosts informal jazz concert

By H.A. TUCK

If you'd enjoy hearing some of the finest jazz musicians in the world for an informal concert and conversation, stop by the college Friday.

Some of the musicians in town for the annual Midland Jazz Party come to the campus each year to play and talk about their art and craft.

It starts at 2 p.m. Friday in the Allison Fine Arts Building. Since it's free, there is sure to be a crowd so we'd advise you to come early.

Folks who participated in the "Adopt A Chap" program last year really had a great time. If you'd like to know how to adopt a Midland College athlete, come out to the Chaparral Booster Club's annual Ice Cream Supper Tuesday at 7 p.m.

It takes place in Chaparral Center, which you should enter through Door Three.

Started a year ago, the "Adopt A Chap" program helps the athletes, mostly from other areas and even other countries, to feel less isolated in West Texas, to learn about West Texas, the State of Texas, and the United States from residents.

There's no obligation, but if you'd like to bring some ice cream or cookies, call the athletic department at 685-4575 or Super Booster Cherie Holtzclaw at 682-9756 or 694-1240.

Although the athletes will be on hand, a more formal "Meet The Chaps" night is scheduled for Oct. 31.

Seminar presents trade with Mexico

Staff Report

Discussions about increased trade between Mexico and Texas are scheduled Thursday at Midland College. A one-day seminar on International Trade Opportunities is being held at the college's Chaparral Hall, located in the Student Center.

Noted speakers from Texas and Mexico are on the program, which begins at 9 a.m. and ends at 4:15 p.m. Cost is $15, which includes lunch.

The seminar is being presented by Midland College's Business and Economic Development Center, co-sponsored by Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., the Consulate of Mexico in Midland, and the Permian Basin Private Industry Council.

Following a welcome by Midland College President David Daniel, the program will be outlined by Jerry Lee Jones, director of the college's Business and Economic Development Center.

"Mexico and the United States, in particular the State of Texas, have been waiting for opportunities to increase trade. With the Free Trade Agreement, the future for that trading is here," said the Hon. Ecce Mendoza, Consul of Mexico in Midland. "There is a great opportunity to materialize an increase in trade and open doors for other programs. Not just in trade, but in other aspects such as culturally, we will have a forum to provide mutually beneficial contacts."

Among the speakers and their topics will be: "The Free Trade Agreement — Myths and Realities" presented by Oliver Farres, Consul General of Mexico, Dallas; "Mexico: Modifications in the Foreign Investment Regulations and the Simplification Process Including Foreign Investment and Transfer of Technology" by Jerry Murad, Honorary Consul of Mexico, Fort Worth; "How International Financing Can Help Texas Business" by a representative from the governor's office; "How to Enter the Mexican Market: Impact of the North American Free Trade Agreement" by John A. Adams, Jr., Bryan-College Station, president of Adams International; "Investment Expectations of the Free Trade Agreement" by a representative of the state of Tamaulipas, and a luncheon discussion of Texas Trade Opportunities.

The afternoon sessions include: "Legal Environment of Business and Trade in Mexico" by Matthew L. Benson, with the law firm Evans, Kosuk & Reed, Houston; "Manufacturing, Transportation and Warehousing in Mexico: Opportunities and Considerations" by Troy Genzer, with Coopers & Lybrand, Houston; "Case Studies of Texas Companies Doing Business in Mexico" by Brock Jones, president of Turn Key Computing, Inc., Bryan-College Station; and a joint panel discussion by the presenters on "Doing Business in Mexico".

CHECKING OUT THE LIBRARIES

By Sandra DeFore Wegner

Mark Oct. 10-13 on your calendar. Those are the dates of the 24th Annual Book sale of the Friends of the Library and the "Trash To Treasures" sale of the Midland Genealogical Society. It's all to benefit the Midland County Public Libraries, downtown at 301 W. Missouri, and the Centennial Branch Library in Midland Park Mall.

The first night of the four day event, Thursday, Oct. 10, is from 6 to 9 p.m. and has an early bird admission charge of $2.00. This is an exciting night as book lovers and treasure hunters rush (literally) in the door to get the first look a the new crop of books and garage sale items.

As in recent years, this double sale will be in the Midland County Exhibit Building on the Highway 80 service road east of Midland.

No admission will be charged Friday, Oct. 11, noon - 9 p.m., Saturday, Oct. 12, 10 a.m. - 5 p.m. or Sunday, Oct. 13, 1-3 p.m.

A dollar will buy to hardbacks or four paperbacks. Be sure to search for rare jewels in the Better Books Section. These are books individually priced but worth the additional cost. Don't forget the fine selection of oil and gas publications included in this area.

Sunday is the clearance sale day as books get cheaper and treasures get marked down. There's always good stuff left that go overlooked in the rush. The Midland Genealogical Society plans to add new treasures to their merchandise both Friday and Saturday.

Putting on these sales takes dedication and lots of hard work on the part of the Friends and the Genealogists.

Ever run across an old stock certificate and wonder if it is worth anything now? The 1991 edition of the Directory of Obsolete Securities is in the Reference Department of the downtown library. You may discover, as you feared, that the company has gone down the tube. Let's hope you could find that they've merged with another solvent firm.

It isn't easy keeping up with Uncle Sam. On the legislative level an excellent source is the Congressional Quarterly Weekly Report at the downtown library. Standard features of this publication are charts listing senators and congressmen's votes on House and Senate Bills and the status of major legislations.

A rundown of Congressional activities such as hearings or provisions of major legislation make this an extremely timely and useful tool for students and citizens.

The Congressional Quarterly Weekly Report is written in a much simpler manner than the complicated issues that it tries to explain. You will find it in the Periodicals Department of the downtown library.

Passed House and Senate Bills end up as Public Laws and are finally merged into the United States Code. The current edition of the Code, all 29 volumes including recent supplements, are at the downtown library in the Reference area. The library also subscribes to the Federal Register.

Don't forget to bring your used magazines for the Friends of the Library to sell in the downtown library foyer. This is successful recycling! It's difficult to keep up with the demand. We need more "supply."

Sandra DeFore Wegner is Midland County Librarian.

Bentsen endorses nuclear reductions, lambastes Bush

The State

AUSTIN (AP) — U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen on Saturday lambasted President Bush and his administration for failing to take the lead in health care reform and for refusing to adjust results of the 1990 U.S. Census.

During a speech to the Mexican American Democrats of Texas' annual convention, Bentsen said that more than 30 million Americans now lack health insurance, while premiums rose 24 percent last year.

"Democrats say there's something seriously wrong with the system, with the health care system that fails 30 million Americans," said Bentsen, D-Texas. "We have to make it more affordable. We have to make it more accessible."

"The administration really would rather duck that issue until after the election is over," he said. "What they don't understand is that if you're a middle income American with no health insurance and your child becomes seriously ill, you just can't afford to wait until after the election."

Bentsen also predicted that the census issue could hurt the president here in next year's election.

The Census Bureau has estimated that census takers overlooked 5.3 million Americans, 1.25 million of them Hispanic. The 550,000 Texans likely missed will cost the state $1 billion in lost federal funding over the next decade, Bentsen said.

"They sent a clear message from this administration: A million and a quarter Hispanics don't count, they don't exist. More than a half million Texans don't count, they just don't exist," Bentsen said.

"I think that's the worst kind of political indifference. It's not fair to Texans, it's not fair to those who are uncounted, it's a disservice to this state," he said. "It's a tragedy for Texas."

Texas Attorney General Dan Morales last month filed a lawsuit against the federal government demanding the $1 billion.

Bentsen also criticized Bush for failing to release funds for the emergency extension of unemployment benefits. But after the speech, he praised the president's broad reductions in U.S. nuclear arsenals.

"I think it gives us a better chance at peace — it removes another area of instability — and on the short range tactical nuclear weapons, to take some unilateral action," Bentsen said.

On other issues, Bentsen said he hasn't decided how he'll vote on the confirmation of U.S. Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas or which candidate he will support in the 1992 Democratic primary. He reiterated that he has "absolutely no plans to run" for the presidency.

Bentsen also joked about an accidental injury he caused his wife, B.A., earlier this month while the couple was visiting a Wyoming ranch.

He broke one of Mrs. Bentsen's ribs when he picked her up, flung her over his shoulder and carried her off to a bedroom. Mrs. Bentsen was with the senator in Austin on Saturday.

"I started to carry my wife in here this morning, but ... won't be doing that again for a while," Bentsen said as the audience laughed. "Not going to hug her that tight again."

Animal rights groups protest General Motors

DALLAS (AP) — Two animal rights groups gathered Saturday outside the State Fair of Texas to protest General Motors Corp.'s auto-safety tests, in which thousands of dogs and other creatures have died during the past decade.

About 25 members of People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals and the Dallas-based Society for Texas Animal Rights distributed leaflets and carried placards outside a car show where GM was introducing its 1992 models.

Dan Mathews of the Rockville, Md.-based PETA said many people "have no idea animals are killed in crash tests. They're shocked that it happens in the tests and doubly shocked that GM is the only car manufacturer still doing it."

"People have a lot of options when buying a car, and we're helping them cross GM off their lists," he said.

Don Postma, GM spokesman in Detroit, said Friday that about 19,000 animals have been killed at the company's labs in testing during the past decade, and that GM still performs a "relatively minor amount" of experiments. They include chest injury tests and pollutants' effects on lungs.

He said the animals used were mostly mice and rats. He said they are not in pain at any time and are anesthetized, then killed before they regain consciousness.

"But live animals being crushed in car crashes is just not the case," he added.

Mathews said animal rights groups expected about 50 protesters to participate throughout the day at the 105th annual fair. Hundreds of thousands of people are expected for the fair, which began its 24-day run Friday.

One placard at the Saturday demonstration read, "Deathbeat of America," a reference to the automaker's "Heartbeat of America" slogan. The other side read, "Detroit City, Town without Pity." Another placard depicted the Chevrolet emblem with the word "killer" inside and blood dripping from the logo.

One main banner read, "General Motors Kills Animals in Crash Tests." Attached to the 10- by 4-foot banner were 11 stuffed rabbits, dogs and frogs splashed with fake blood.

Mathews and five other PETA members went into the GM showroom shortly after noon, apparently surprising GM officials. Mathews asked one company representative if he was aware of GM's testing policies and he said he was not.

Then, after placing leaflets on the windshields of several cars in the showroom, Mathews jumped up onto a stage being set up for a live band and grabbed one of the microphones. He began talking about GM's testing policies before the mike was turned off and he was escorted off the stage and out a side door.

"The GM rep said he had no idea that they (the company) did this (type of testing)," Mathews said afterward. "I'm surprised the company didn't tip their people off (about the protest).

"I think not only the public but also GM employees as well are going to be surprised by the company's animal testing policies."

Kevin Jones, the coordinator of shows and exhibits for GM, made no comment about the demonstration.

Mathews added that the animal rights groups "intend to reach thousands of people at other fairs across the country, and the next step will be going to dealerships to explain to them GM's test policies."

Starting Saturday, dealerships in as many as 45 cities were being targeted for protests, Mathews said. He said many dealerships were unaware that GM used animals in testing.

Animal rights activists in other states such as Pennsylvania and New York were monitoring the Texas situation before launching their own demonstrations.

"We do have literature. We do have things ready to go," said Ginger Wolf, president of Lehigh Valley Animal Rights Coalition, which covers the eastern Pennsylvania region around Allentown, Bethlehem and Easton. "We're waiting to see what happens in Texas. We want to see if GM will change their methods."

In Dallas, protesters began about 11 a.m. distributing leaflets just outside the fair gates. The group hoped to distribute 3,000 by day's end.

Program to provide $2.3 million to plant trees

COLLEGE STATION, Texas — A new federal-state program is providing $2.3 million to plant about 10,000 trees in Texas.

The program, authorized by Congress last year, matches federal Small Business Administration grants with local community funds.

Almost $1 million has been given to 70 Texas communities across the state, said Bruce Miles, director of the Texas Forest Service.

The grants require that trees be purchased from small businesses, be planted on public land and be adapted to the area.

Grant money was divided among 13 regions, according to population, to ensure that money reached all parts of the state in equitable amounts.

The areas will match SBA grants with at least 45 percent in cash or in-kind services and equipment.

Nationwide, the SBA gave $14.5 million to the states this year for tree planting. Matched with $21 million in state contributions, the program will plant 4.4 million seedlings and 247,000 saplings, some in every state in the union.

At Big Spring State Hospital in West Texas, administrators say trees will enhance the surroundings of patients at the psychiatric care facility.

"We want patients to be able to go outside more," said Robert Von Rosenberg, superintendent of the 350-bed hospital. "It just looks prettier with trees."

"Also, there is a tremendous wind in this part of the state," he said. "We hope that the trees will help cut that down, particularly in the spring months."

Work starts on 17-foot-deep tunnel

AUSTIN (AP) — Workers are carving a 17-foot-deep tunnel into solid bedrock under the State Capitol's north wing in an unusual and ticklish construction job that's part of a $180 million restoration and expansion project.

The labor will carve out space for two new Capitol elevators and a passageway to a subterranean office building, also under construction. Work is scheduled to be complete by 1995.

The work site, which can be reached only by climbing through a basement window and down two wooden ladders, has been dubbed the "Capitol mine" by construction workers.

Two rock saws — resembling huge gray chain saws on wheels — are being used to dig the tunnel. One is cutting from inside the Capitol basement, and the other will cut from outside when crews finish excavating a hole where the Capitol's north steps used to be.

Eventually, the saws will punch a hole through solid rock under the Capitol's north porch.

Cranes will lift rock out in 2-foot-by-2-foot blocks, said Eddie Yocham, who, along with his brother, runs Austin Cut Stone Co., which is carving the tunnel.

The rock saw's 16-foot cutting arm slices through the cream-colored stone at a rate of 1 inch to 1½ inches a minute. Its blade: a lime-green plastic belt, just a couple of inches wide, with diamond-studded steel plates on one side.

The machinery is a striking contrast to the simple hand tools used to dig the basement of the pink granite Capitol a century ago.

"The old-timers cut holes into the rock with a star drill" — a rodlike steel tool with cutting edges on the bottom, Yocham said. A worker pounded the drill with a hammer, then rotated it slightly and hit it again. Eventually, a hole could be chipped in the rock.

"Once the holes were cut, they poured in black powder and blasted the rock," Yocham told the Austin American-Statesman. "All that work was done by hand."

Because blasting was used to carve the Capitol basement years ago, engineers have found the surrounding rock much more fragmented than they expected.

Twice in recent weeks, the State Preservation Board's construction director David Stauch has ordered work stopped until unstable rock could be secured with large steel fasteners called rock bolts.

Dozens of sophisticated electronic monitoring devices are installed up and down the Capitol basement corridor and on the floors above to detect any movement in the building.

"This is as ticklish a job as there could be — digging underneath probably the most revered building in Texas," Stauch said. "We can detect any movement, down to one one-thousandth of an inch. We're not going to do anything to harm the building."

If all goes as expected, Stauch said, the tunneling will be finished by next spring.

MY BEST FRIEND

Always there when I need them, when I'm sad, they hold me. Amen.
They never condem me for wrong things I do,
They're always by my side, always on cue.
A good person to be around, a good person always sound.
When I need them, they're by my side.
When I've got a problem, in them I confide.
They always take care of me, I'm not blind, I can see.
The best friend in my life is my God given wife.

I love You Dellene,

Forever and a day.
Bill Hartley

HOMES & CLASSIFIED

A Home for all reasons

By Sonja Merrick

The backyard is a wonderland, complete with pool, hot tub, covered patio and built-in grill.

The overwhelming feeling conveyed by this distinctive home and its lovely tree-shaded grounds is that it has absolutely everything.

Strolling under the shade cast by the many mature front-yard trees, the eye wanders over raised flower beds, stone paths and then to the charming, solid brick facade of the home itself.

The front door opens to spacious living and dining areas. Facing the entrance is an expanse of glass in the form of sliding glass doors. Two other walls are mirrored — light sparkles and reflects through the well-appointed rooms. After taking in this exquisite vision of light and color, a visitor looks beyond the living area and out to the spectacular back yard.

This very large area has a sizeable swimming pool, complete with diving board and slide. A hot tub is nearby. The covered patio has a built-in grill. Beyond the pool there are his and hers bath houses complete with showers.

Back indoors, a left turn from the flagstone entry and passageway leads to a cozy yet spacious den. It boasts pine-paneled walls, a stone fireplace and mantel, beamed ceiling, indirect lighting. Tucked in a corner is a mirrored wet bar. Windows open to the glorious front yard.

Turning left and walking down the flagstone hallway, one finds a very recently remodeled kitchen. The large breakfast area beckons as a comfortable room for dining, or just visiting over a cup of coffee. The kitchen is large with built-in Nutone, convection microwave oven, lots and lots of storage space. Cabinets and pantry have pull-out adjustable shelves and slant shelves for canned goods. Behind the kitchen stands a huge laundry area with double sink. Then, a short hallway leading to the carpeted basement stairs. The downstairs room is ideal for a play, recreation and has myriad closets for extra storage.

The large, light-filled kitchen has lots of cabinets and storage space.

Photos by Joe D. Williams Design by Phil Huchton

Back up the stairs, past the living room and continuing to the right are four bedrooms and two baths. The three smaller bedrooms have large cedar closets, thick carpeting. Windows look out either to the beautifully landscaped front or spectacular back yard.

A very large carpeted bath stands between the bedrooms. It has a built-in vanity with built-in floor to ceiling drawers and cabinets surrounding it.

The large, gracious master bedroom has a door that leads to the pool area. Also its own spacious bath, with dressing area, built-in vanity and lots of storage space.

There is so much to this home, it would take volumes of description to do it justice. Other amenities include two separate two-car garages — one with a large work area stocked. A small, separate side yard. A huge utility room with built-in cedar closets and indirect lighting throughout. So much that saves energy and adds to comfort.

The home is offered by Carriage Company Realtors for $224,800.

Shopping for new home seldom better

There has seldom been a better time to consider giving your family a new home for Christmas. With mortgage interest rates at their lowest in 14 years, prices at a stable level, and many sellers more motivated to negotiate in the slower after-school-started market, this fall you may be able to buy more house for less with lower-than hoped for payments.

Interest rates are now in the range of 8⅛ percent conventional with 0 points and at 8½ percent VA and FHA with 1 point! As stated these are the lowest interest rates in 14 years! Plus most mortgage companies other special programs with rates as low as 6½ percent. Consider, if you will, that principal and interest on a $100,000 30-year mortgage at 10 percent is $877.58 but $768.91 at 8½ percent and only $632.07 at 6½ percent. This is a monthly savings of over $245!

Even though prices have crept up slightly due to our decreasing number of properties for sale, they've remained surprisingly stable and competitive throughout most areas. Some very attractive values are available, especially in homes that have been on the market for several months and missed a summer sale. And the new construction market is especially good. Let one of our associates take you through some of the newer areas - Trinity West, around Polo, Greentree North, Briarwood, Grasslands and Saddle Club Lakes to see the beautifully designed, packed-with-features homes that Gilbert Bates, Paul West, Jim Leonard, Larry Gryder, Leo Proctor, W.H. Tolbert are building.

So, our advice is to start shopping now (today's not too soon to drop by our new North office for a map of this afternoon's open houses) - buy while prices are still so competitive - and take advantage of some incredibly low mortgage interest rates. Give your family a great new home for Christmas! and yourself the lowest interest rates in a long, long time!

More on notes from last week:

Several organizations have already called to set up meetings in our North Office's Relocation Training Center. If you are a member of a group that need a meeting place for up to 40, call Richard Langston at 685-0400 to reserve free space and let us put the coffee pot on for you.

Invitations to the October 10 gala USO Dinner Dance inaugurating CAF opening festivities have been mailed but we know we missed many many people because we tried to consolidate several mailing lists. Our apologies and we really don't want you to be left out! Call 685-0427 1 to 5 p.m. weekdays and we'll drop an invitation by for you.

Joanne Langston

We promise a super evening, with the Tommy Dorsey Band, great patriotic decor by Ron Huse, and a surprise guest to be announced next week! Do plan to come.

REAL ESTATE FACTS

ADOBE INC., REALTORS, 3303 N. Midkiff #114
694-9548

Alive & Well!

The free enterprise system is alive and well in real estate. Homes may be bought and sold at will with few, if any, governmental restrictions. Sellers may ask any price they wish, and buyers may offer whatever price they are willing to pay.

Asking too much for a home is the prerogative of sellers, just as offering too little is a legitimate choice of buyers. Nevertheless, a sale takes place only when the buyer and seller reach a price level acceptable to both.

That is the way a free market economy works. The final price, called "fair market value", is defined as "that price which a buyer is willing to pay, and at which a seller is willing to sell, both parties being knowledgeable about the property, and neither party being under any time pressure to act."

Real estate is highly marketable, meaning that there is always a ready supply of both buyers and sellers. Buyers can choose from a wide selection of similar homes, while sellers have free access to all available buyers.

Because price must be agreed upon before a sale can take place, here are three reasons for pricing a home fairly from the beginning:

A home priced at "fair market value" is more likely to sell at full price. Buyers compare the features and amenities offered by similar homes. They are likely to recognize a fairly priced home, without feeling they must bargain to receive fair value.

An overpriced home helps sell the competition. Buyers will compare the overpriced home with other similar homes, then buy one of the other homes.

Even if a buyer agrees to pay an inflated price, mortgage rejections can occur when a home does not appraise for the purchase price.

Selling your home? Set the price at "fair market value", then watch buyers compete to purchase it.

If you're planning to sell your home soon and would like information on its current value, give us a call at 694-9548 or come by our office.

MOONLIGHTING!

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several distributorships which need to be filled with responsible individuals.

OFTEN ASKED QUESTIONS:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?

Yes! Our current distributor force is already 90% adult and 10% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:

- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a distributor, you do not need daycare!
- COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends.

How much money can I make as a distributor?

Depending on the size of the distributorship from $300 to $700 monthly! Some make even more!

How long does it take?

The actually delivery takes 1 - 2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2 - 3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?

6 a.m. Monday - Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

Do I ever get a day off?

Horizontal rigs

AUSTIN — The Railroad Commission granted a total of 61 new permits for horizontal wells in August, marking a decrease in applications to drill the advanced technology wells statewide.

By comparison, the Commission issued 71 permits for horizontal wells in July, 87 in June, 87 in May, 76 in Apr., 83 in Mar., 92 in Feb., 95during Jan., 1991.

So far, operators have applied for 632 permits to drill horizontal wells in Texas during the first eight months of 1991.

In all, the Railroad Commission has issued a grand total of 1,930 permits for horizontal wells, some 1,730 of which have been granted since January 1, 1990.

While the Pearsall Field southwest of San Antonio remains the nation's premier hub for horizontal drilling, new permit activity remained sluggish in August. Seventeen permits were granted for horizontal projects in that portion of the Austin Chalk geologic formation last month, compared to 18 in July, and 19 in June.

Despite the downturn, the vast majority of all horizontal projects planned or underway in Texas are located in Frio County.

Halliburton veteran looks back on patch

■ It was a different time and different ways, but the same attitude prevails, says retiring Buddy Redden.

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

If rig counts are depressing today, one veteran oilfield hand fondly recalls when they went from depressing to boom overnight.

"It was the Spraberry," says Buddy Redden, Special Sales Manager for Halliburton. "When I went to work for Halliburton in July of 1950 there were five rigs running in the Spraberry, a year or two later there were 400."

He said the Spraberry boom peaked in 1951 and 1952, then began to dissipate in 1953. "During that peak we worked day and night, and sometimes didn't get back to the house for weeks at a time."

Not exactly a job-hopper, when Redden retires from Halliburton this year he will mark 41 years on job — the only job he has ever had.

After four decades of service that brought him from the field to the executive offices, Redden says the oilpatch and the Permian Basin has changed significantly.

Redden recalls one time when he didn't get back to the house for 28 days: "Jimmy Halliburton, a nephew to Earle P. Halliburton was a driver for me. We went to the field one morning and it was almost a month before we got back to the house in Midland. It was one job right after another. I think we did 35 jobs in a row."

He said what little sleep he got was in his pickup, baths were taken with cold water on the rig and meals were provided by personal larders and oilpatch cafes that once dotted the Spraberry trend area.

He recalls that one of the culinary heavens was a 17-foot travel trailer, parked at the intersection of two caliche lease roads south of Midland (now Midkiff). "It was called Hadacol Corners then and the trailer was called the Hadacol Corners Cafe. We called the old boy that ran it "Hadacol." I don't even remember his real name."

Redden recalls that the only fare at the trailer cafe were ready-made sandwiches and three, No.3 wash tubs full of iced down Coke, RC Cola and Big Red.

A popular country-western song was written about Hadacol Corners and the the story went that Hadacol Corners got it's name because they "had to call" it something. But the more likely version is that it was named for Hadacol, a popular medicine show tonic of that time.

"All I remember is that the U.S. Post Office wouldn't put in a post office with the name Hadacol," said Redden. "That's when they named the oilpatch intersection Midkiff, for the ranching family in that area."

Redden noted that Hadacol, who came from Louisiana to open his famous oilpatch cafe, died only recently in Midland.

Other oilpatch cafes that sprang up during the Spraberry boom were Bigsby Corner, a small store and service station six miles east of Midkiff,

Rig rates continue downward

■ Non-profit rates could be last straw for some contractors.

Staff Report

DALLAS — Rates charged by land drilling contractors continued to decline in the second quarter of 1991, according to a nationwide survey published in the September issue of the Land Rig Newsletter. The decline reflects a steady errosion in drilling activity nationwide and ensures continued failures and contractions among U.S. onshore drilling contractors.

The quarterly survey of U.S. land drilling contractors shows a drop in average day rates of about 0.5% from the previous period and nearly 4% since the first of the year. Footage rates declined nearly 5% from the first quarter and are off 16% from the fourth quarter 1990.

A roughneck toils on a rig near Midland. Workmen's compensation has put drilling firm backs to the wall.

Daring to go bare

■ Faced with a system in crisis, will more oil service firms elect to do business without the costly workmen's compensation premiums?

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Texas businesses are being squeezed hard by increasing costs for workers' compensation and some are hollering uncle.

At least 8,000 Texas employers have already opted to "go bare" (without the benefit of workmen's comp.) and others are expected to follow. Will the oilpatch also be one of the defectors from this much-criticized system in crisis?

The petroleum industry, particularly oilfield service companies and drilling companies, are suffering doubly from higher rates and a market that won't allow them to raise rates to help cover their costs.

And while a number of Texas businesses are opting not to subscribe to the state system, energy companies are as a rule required to carry workers' compensation.

"I know most well servicing contractors can't go bare, because most oil companies — majors and independents — require contractors to have workers' comp," said Max Emmert, president of Yale E. Key Co. and past president of the Association of Oilwell Service Contractors.

Mike Clark, executive vice president with the Dallas-based AOSC, noted in a phone interview that several contractors had tried to "go bare" but were found out by the oil companies they were supposed to work for. "If you don't have a workers' compensation certificate, you don't have the job," he said.

He called it a Catch 22 situation for contractors, caught between rising rates, the inability to raise rig rates to cover the increases, and oil companies who demand proof of coverage as part of the contract in order to protect themselves and their employees and stockholders.

Buck Gooden, director of human resources for the International Association of Drilling Contractors says workers' compensation coverage is not as strictly required, yet most drillers are retaining coverage. Still, he said, "it will be a continuing problem until we get a handle on prices."

Ray Peterson, president of Peterson Drilling in Midland, says he considered dropping workers compensation, but decided it was not worth the risk, a conclusion he said other drilling contractors have also reached.

JOHN PAUL PITTS

Texas can do it better than Washington

Pitts

Some environmental zealots would have us believe that the oil and gas industry is an environmental disaster — dumping, leaking and spilling thousands of barrels of hazardous materials everyday.

The zealots would have us believe that these hazardous materials such as saltwater, (like the kind found in the Gulf of Mexico, splashing all over our beaches) is contaminating soil and water, causing the death of birds and people.

As a result the zealots seek to regulate all oilfield drilling and production wastes, namely drilling brine and muds, under the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (RCRA). This unnecessary level of added regulation would be a disaster to the oil industry.

Testifying before the Senate Subcommittee on Environmental Protection, which would like to re-authorize RCRA, IPAA President Denis Bode told the senators that the classification and regulation of such materials as brine water could have a disastrous effect on the industry.

"Even moderate proposals for a federal RCRA-based regulatory program would shut down practically all stripper wells in the first year and a sizeable number of additional low-volume wells. That would force many domestic independent producers and almost all smaller independents out of business," warned Bode. "Moreover," said Bode, "the regulation is unnecessary."

Nothing could be more true. Consider the record. In the Permian Basin, there are at least 200,000 producing oil wells. It's anyone's guess, but as many as a million may have been drilled through freshwater zones here.

A small ocean of saltwater is pumped every year into formations of the Permian Basin for disposal. Workover rigs pull oily pipe from hundreds of wells weekly. The area is crisscrossed by thousands of miles of pipelines of every size, collecting and transporting oil. Transports haul millions of barrels saltwater and oil every year up and down lease roads and highways.

It has been this way for about 70 years, yet the amount of groundwater contamination in the Permian Basin is negligible.

This is not to say there hasn't been some contamination; there has. That's because it is impossible for any industry to conduct a high level of activity over a long period of time without some contamination somewhere. The point is: Measured against the scope of the activity the amount of groundwater contamination in the Permian Basin is almost nonexistent — despite all the drilling, injecting, and hauling, even in spite of all the leaks and spills.

Like it or not, the oil industry has a darn good record, a fact that seems to get lost in the environmental frenzy to regulate simply for the sake of regulating without considering need or cost. The record is good simply because the people of Texas and Southeast New Mexico have done a good job of regulating themselves, and care as much for the land they live on as the bureaucrats in Washington.

Please see PITTS/2E

PITTS: Texas doesn't need federal regulation

(From 1E)

Texas Railroad Commissioner Bob Krueger said it best while testifying this month in Washington against the RCRA plan to regulate drilling and production waste. "In 1919, more than a half a century before the EPA as begun, The Texas Railroad Commission adopted rules requiring that fresh water be protected during the drilling and plugging of wells. Since then, the Commission has adopted even more stringent and comprehensive water protection rules."

Krueger told the legislators in no uncertain terms that the State of Texas didn't need bureaucrats in Washington regulating a Texas industry: "No one is likely to be more concerned for the proper disposal of these wastes than the regulators charged by the among whom they live. And no one is likely to be more knowledgeable, because we are the friends and neighbors of the people whom our environmental rules are intended to protect."

The bottom line: There is nothing the federal government can do to regulate the Texas oil industry that the state of Texas cannot do better.

VETERAN: Recalling early Spraberry days and Carlson's Cafe south of Bigsby Corner.

He also noted that the Zentner's from San Angelo finally put in a restaurant at Hadacol Corner, but that it lasted only a couple of years. Then there was the 21-mile cafe, which was exactly 21 miles south of Midland on the Rankin highway.

Of all the oilpatch cafes, Reddens says only the Spraberry store on the Garden City highway remains. "Back then it was Ed's Trading Post. Ed didn't sell meals, just sold cokes and the makings for sandwiches, baloney, bread and such." He said another cafe, Opel's, located near the Spraberry store was open for only a short time."

For the times when the crews were too busy even to break for a cafe meal, Redden said each worker carried his personal stash of beanie weenies, crackers, sardines, vienna sausage and potted meat and onions. He said that crews also carried extra clothes when they went to the field.

"Sometimes we would be able to add a juicy watermelon, from one of the local farms, to our fare. They say a swiped melon tastes sweeter, but not at Midkiff. They would give you a watermelon if you asked, but if you didn't ask they would shoot you."

Crews carried time books and marked "x's" for lunch breaks. Redden explained that he worked 60 hours for his $250 a month and after that went on overtime.

He oilpatch veteran notes that crews may not stay in the field 28 days at a stretch anymore, but the same oilpatch attitude prevails. "Oilfield people believe that when there is a job to be done that it has to be done, no matter how long it takes. Only the times and the people have changed — not the attitude."

Now a special sales representative, Redden began his career it the company as a $250 a month cement pump truck driver and has held most of the jobs in beteen including: driver, cementer, treater, field supervisor, assistant district superintendent, district superintendent, division sales manager and for the past ten years special sales representative. "Rather than hard sales, it's mostly a PR job," he noted. "I mainly call on executives and managers."

Technology-wise Redden says the industry then was like the dark ages compared to today. He said one of the biggest changes seen in his industry was bulk cement. "When I first went to work for Halliburton we would sometimes tear open 300-400 cement sacks for a typical Spraberry well." He said all the additives to make cement lighter and to retard and accelerate setting time have revolutionized the oilfield cementing industry.

"Then there is the pumping power. When I started to work in 1950 our trucks would only pump 3-5 barrels per minute, today we can pump 20 barrels a minute."

The biggest technological event to hit the industry in the fifties, he says, was hydraulic fracturing. Introduced by Amoco, he said the technique which originally used gelled napalm with kerosene or diesel, didn't do too much good in the Spraberry and sort of died down. But in 1955, operators began to use lease crude and Ottawa sand and Brady and the process began to take off. He said the oilfield fracturing industry has probably seen more innovation than cementing, given the wide range of fluids and proppants now used. He noted that pumping pressures had gone from 3,500 psi to 14,000 psi.

"There was some skepticism in the industry when fracing first came along, but it didn't last long. The technology has added billions of barrels of reserves to the Permian Basin."

Since coming to the Permian Basin from Temple, Redden has taken tours in Midland, Big Spring, Andrews and Houston. "When they said come back to Midland, I was ready. If you are in the oil business, you want to live in an oil town. I like being in Midland where oil is everybody's business, and everybody talks oil."

Asked if he would do anything different, if he could do it again. Redden replied: "I might have come to Midland and bought oil leases — but you have to have money to buy leases."

American-Republic's Robinson B-1 well blows near Artesia around 1930. Such wells helped make Artesia, New Mexico the oil center of Eddy County in the early 20's and 30's. The F-W-Y No. 3 drilled by Flynn-Welch-Yates gave the area its first commerical oil production in 1924 to open a boom in the region. The population of the town eventually grew to over 8,000, as a result of immigration from the midwest and a refinery was built to handle the oil that had previously been shipped to El Paso and Clovis.

RATES: Low levels could bankrupt some contractors

(From 1E)

11% during the fourth quarter 1990 as rig activity grew. Drillers estimated those rates were 16-24% below what they should be.

Rates in some regions have suffered much more than others according to the survey. For day rates, the largest decrease was about 3% in the Mid-Continent region and the Texas Gulf Coast.

The Mid-Continent is comprised of Oklahoma and the Texas Panhandle where rates have suffered from the drop in natural gas drilling. The Texas Gulf Coast includes the highly publisized horizontal drilling province of the Austin Chalk where activity has dropped by nearly two-thirds since the first of the year.

Little hope for relief was expressed by contractors. A full 72% of survey respondents expected rates to be flat through the third quarter; 24% expected rates to decline even further.

"This may the last straw for many drilling contractors who have worked for years at breakeven rates, said Michael R. Slaton, publisher of the Land Rig Newsletter. "Few have the resources left to weather another downturn."

The pace of business failures and consolidations among drillers is being accelerated by declining rates and greatly lowered rig activity, he said.

The national rates calculated by the Land Rig Newsletter are averages rages from nine geographic regions, each containing five drilled depth categories.

The Land Rig Newsletter is a monthly business report covering the onshore drilling industry. The newsletter is published by Slaton & Associates, Dallas, Texas, which also published the Well Service Market Report and provides specialized market research for petroleum industry.

Pemex beginning to open up

By Tim Golden
N.Y. Times News Service

MEXICO CITY — The transformation of Mexico's economy has filled a graveyard with old myths: the inviolable power of big labor unions, the need for trade protection, the importance of state ownership. The lone survivor would seem to be the sanctity of oil.

Mexican officials still speak in almost mystical terms about the relationship between oil and sovereignty. And in free-trade talks with the United States, Mexico has done its best to keep the issue of foreign involvement in its oil production off the table.

Little wonder that to most outside analysts, Petroleos Mexicanos S.A., Mexico's biggest company, remains one of its most insular — and least efficient.

While continuing to loom as a nationalist symbol, however, the giant state monopoly known as Pemex has begun to change and open up at a quickening pace.

Driven to expand production by an economy that is projected to grow as much as 4 percent a year through the rest of the decade, Pemex is gathering investment dollars by the billions. Last week, it secured a $1.3 billion loan guarantee from the Export-Import Bank of the United States to call in American companies for four big new exploration projects.

Meantime, as the Mexican government is loosening other rules on foreign participation in the petroleum industry, Pemex is trying to impose order on the chaotic organization of its various lines of business.

"What is happening with this economy has to happen in all parts of it," a senior economic official here said of the changes sweeping Mexico. "Oil cannot remain apart."

The changes coming to Mexico's oil industry are clearly more evolutionary than revolutionary, and some economists and industry analysts criticize the measures so far as woefully insufficient. Nonetheless, the tentative steps toward opening the industry represent a remarkable break with the past.

As recently as a few years ago, Pemex seemed to be as much a social service agency as an oil company. It ran hospitals and schools, and handed over more revenue to the Treasury than all corporate and individual taxpayers combined.

From the few cases that came to light, though, corruption appeared to be rampant. And the oil workers' union, which maintained a stranglehold on Pemex contracts, was a business empire in its own right, with assets valued at more than $1 billion.

Perhaps most significant in a technology-intensive industry, Pemex's capital spending, which reached $6 billion in 1981, dwindled to barely $1 billion as the 80s drew to a close. Mexico, with twice the reserves of the United States, was producing barely one-third the oil.

Upon taking office in December 1988, President Carlos Salinas de Gortari hinted that all of this would change. Weeks later, he sent soldiers to storm the home of the powerful oil union chief, Joaquin Hernandez Galicia, and haul him off to jail.

Since 1988, Pemex has shrunk its labor force from 213,000 employees to 171,000. Yet such has been the momentum of economic reform, that when Salinas stunned many Mexicans earlier this year by closing a major oil refinery to curb pollution in Mexico City, some union officials even mumbled words of support.

Pemex officials say the company has cut its operating costs by 17 percent over the past five years, saving about $1 billion. With the help of MacKinsey & Co. consultants, Pemex has also rationalized its system for trading goods within the huge, vertically integrated operation.

In hopes of streamlining Pemex's ponderous bureaucracy, executives are now at work on a sweeping reorganization in which the company has been divided into independent sectors.

Exploration and production, for example, has been separated from refining and distribution. Hundreds of mid-level management positions have been eliminated, and lower-level managers have gained more responsibility for productivity and cost containment.

One new division, petrochemicals, has emerged as the laboratory for many of the management and investment innovations being discussed companywide.

The petrochemical division has also pioneered a more receptive stance on foreign participation. Among other strategies, the unit has hired foreign companies to build new plants and paid them from the factories' proceeds.

Still, for all of the changes that Pemex has undergone during the first half of Salinas's six-year term, oil stands as the Mexican industry that has most conspicuously remained closed.

Opening it, some economic officials said, would be more politically sensitive than even the planned changes in the communal agriculture system, a land-tenure system that the government has long defended as one of the remaining prizes of the Mexican Revolution.

Last spring Pemex, for the first time contracted out an entire drilling job, paying a Houston-based company, Triton International Inc., an estimated $18 million for an exploratory well in the Gulf of Campeche, west of the Yucatan Peninsula. The contract was the first under a 1989 law that frees Pemex from the traditional requirement to use Mexican labor.

The 113 new wells that Pemex will have American companies drill and service in the Gulf of Campeche, thanks to the Export-Import Bank guarantee announced last Thursday, are part of a five-year, $19 billion plan to expand exploration, production and refining.

The chief Mexico loan officer for the Export-Import Bank, Marian M. Hinchman, said in a telephone interview from Washington that Pemex was ultimately looking to secure as much as $5.8 billion in guarantees for 16 projects contemplated in the expansion plan.

Mexico has also worked out similar arrangements with 25 other national export-import banks around the world, the company's top official, Francisco Rojas, the director general, said in an interview.

Ms. Hinchman described the U.S. bank's program as a boon to American suppliers. "My phone has been ringing off the hook with oil drilling companies that want a piece of the business," she said.

But several analysts suggested that the loan guarantees might work at cross purposes with attempts by U.S. trade negotiators to persuade Mexico to open its oil production to foreign equity partners.

According to a Pemex spokeswoman, the company's capital investment will rise this year to $3.07 billion from $2.14 billion in 1990. By 1995, Rojas said, Pemex hopes annual investment will rise to about $4.5 billion.

But after eight years in which domestic demand stagnated and oil exploration and development were sharply curtailed, industry analysts say Pemex will have to invest heavily merely to meet Mexico's domestic energy needs. Gasoline consumption already is rising at an annual rate of more than 5 percent.

Pemex plans to increase its daily crude oil production from 2.64 million barrels in 1990 to 3.1 million barrels by 1995. While domestic use is expected to rise from 1.36 million barrels a day to 1.7 million over the same period, exports are projected to grow by only about 120,000 barrels to 1.4 billion a day.

What incentive Pemex might have to expand more quickly is open to debate. Mexico already has had difficulty selling its heavy, hard-to-refine crude abroad.

While some experts insist that Mexican oil would be more valuable out of the ground sooner rather than later, global prices in recent years have not provided much of an incentive.

And even as finance ministry officials say the oil industry has little difficulty securing outside financing, critics insist that politics, not economies, holds foreign equity capital at arm's length.

Mexico's Constitution defines the nation's hydrocarbon resources as the property of the people. And, in an interview last month, Salinas said that Mexico, unlike other developing nations, had no intention of inviting foreign exploration companies to share the profits from its oil.

The strongest, and apparently prevailing, arguments against foreign equity partnerships is the relative lack of risk in so-called risk contracts. So confident are Mexican officials in the richness of their oil fields that they see little reason to bring in outsiders to share the risk of exploration.

Head of Venezuela's oil company insists modernization continues

By Kyle Pope
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON – Less than a month after fending off a bitter political challenge, the president of Venezuela's state-owned oil company sought to assure Houston oil executives that he is in control and on schedule with a massive energy expansion program.

Andres Sosa Pietri, president of Petroleos de Venezuela S.A., told a Houston energy conference Monday that his company will spend about $5 billion this year to boost oil output and modernize Venezuela's petrochemical complex.

The goal, Sosa Pietri said, is to increase oil production capacity by 20 percent, to 3.5 million barrels a day by 1996.

In addition, Sosa Pietri said Petroleos, with the help of American energy companies as partners, plans to increase petrochemical capacity sixfold and boost natural gas production to more than 1.1 billion cubic feet per day.

Sosa Pietri spoke to about 150 people Monday at an energy conference sponsored by the accounting firm of Price Waterhouse.

The five-year, $48 billion plan is the most aggressive ever at Petroleos, cornerstone of a Venezuelan economy that has become the fastest-growing in Latin America.

Yet while Sosa Pietri's campaign is popular in the United States – where energy companies have been promised a slice of the action – the Harvard-educated lawyer has met with intense criticism at home.

In August, a group of government officials led by the finance and planning ministers protested Sosa Pietri's spending plans, saying his actions were overheating the Venezuelan economy and exacerbating an inflation rate already above 35 percent.

The group also argued that the billions budgeted by Sosa Pietri could be better spent on other domestic programs. The ministers called for a formal probe of Petroleos' finances.

Sosa Pietri, in an interview following his speech, said support for his detractors fizzled in mid-August after President Carlos Andres Perez vowed to back Petroleos' plans.

"Everyone finally saw this as one of the typical political maneuvers of people who just want to run the show themselves," Sosa Pietri said. "In the end, reason prevailed."

Though Sosa Pietri clearly won the latest skirmish, American officials say it is not yet apparent whether the battle over the future of Petroleos is over.

"The evidence does not show that Perez and Pietri have formed any kind of permanent alliance," said a congressional source familiar with Sosa Pietri's efforts.

Henry Petroleum signs accord for drilling, acquisition projects

Staff Report

Henry Petroleum Corp. of Midland has recently signed a $10,000,000 agreement with a silent investment partner to drill development wells and acquire existing production in the Midland Basin.

According to Jim Henry, president of Henry Petroleum, "We've worked with this investment partner since 1988. They've participated in our past performance and are confident that this investment will also show a healthy return."

"We have consistently worked the Midland Basin for 20 years and have an excellent track record." said Henry. "Now, we are actively pursuing development drilling locations and production acquisition in the Spraberry and other Midland Basin reservoirs."

In addition, Henry Petroleum will also be active in acquiring waterfloods in the Permian Basin and drilling in the Arkoma Basin of Oklahoma and Arkansas.

WHEN YOUR TARGET IS THE PERMIAN BASIN

The Permian Basin is an oil and gas producing empire of 100,000 square miles with an oil well for every square mile. Comprised of 54 counties in Southeast New Mexico and West Texas this far flung industry accounts for roughly 20 percent of the nation's total oil production.

Yet, a long standing problem has been the lack of a single newspaper to serve the thousands of companies and over 40,000 workers involved in exploration, land, production, drilling, oilfield service and supply, pipelines and construction, refining, and transportation.

But beginning May 12, The Permian Basin Oil Report published weekly by the Midland Reporter Telegram, will become the information source for the Permian Basin oil industry.

Packed with information and articles about oil and gas people, products, companies, issues, events, drilling, exploration, and production, the Oil Report will appear each Sunday as a section of the Midland Reporter Telegram. Additionally, it will be mailed to every producer, operator and oilfield service company throughout the Permian Basin.

If the Permian Basin is your target market, the Permian Basin Oil Report is the way to reach it.

FERC order could cost Transco millions

HOUSTON (AP) — Transco Energy Co. could lose $99 million in refunds, interest costs and revenues under an order drafted by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

The case involves Transco's Transcontinental Gas Pipe Line, which runs from the Gulf of Mexico to the Northeast and primarily serves New York, New Jersey and metropolitan Philadelphia.

In 1985-1986 Transco offered some, but not all, of its customers the opportunity to buy gas at spot market prices.

Transco said it will appeal if the federal commission upholds the damages as specified in the draft order. The company has a week to submit information to the commission to persuade it to defer the penalties until the case is heard in court.

Exxon's Puget Sound outlets sold to BP

SEATTLE (AP) — BP Oil Co. gas stations will be on more street corners in the Puget Sound region if the company's proposed purchase of 55 Exxon outlets goes through, BP officials say.

Cleveland-based BP Oil is now the third-largest gasoline dealer in the region, behind Texaco and Arco. About two years ago, it bought Mobil Oil's refinery in Ferndale and 150 Mobil stations in Washington and around the country.

State Attorney General Ken Eikenberry's office will investigate the planned Exxon purchase to see if it would violate federal antitrust laws.

"We are concerned about the potential anti-competitive effect and possibility it could lead to higher gas prices," Assistant Attorney General Jim Beulaurier said. "Where you have large transactions and few competitors there is concern."

The Exxon purchase would transfer to BP 55 stations in King, Snohomish, Pierce, Kitsap and Thurston counties and 18 non-operating properties that may be reopened or sold by BP.

The proposed cost of the acquisition was not disclosed.

If the deal goes through, the stations would be converted to BP properties in April. BP operates minimarkets and auto-repair facilities with its gas stations.

And BP's expansion in the Northwest may not end with this purchase.

Houston firm selling 270 gas wells

CENTERVILLE, Pa. (AP) — A Houston energy company plans to sell 270 natural gas wells in Crawford County to another Texas concern for about $4 million.

Wainoco Oil and Gas Co. agreed to sell the wells in the Athens field to Lomak Petroleum Inc. of Fort Worth.

Columbia Gas Transmission Corp. purchased the gas Wainoco Oil took from the Athens Field since 1978.

But Columbia Gas Transmission recently rejected its contracts with Wainoco during Columbia's proceedings in U.S. Bankruptcy Court.

Production at the field stopped last March, said Julie Edwards, a Wainoco spokeswoman. She said Wainoco retains its legal claims against Columbia Gas Transmission in the sale to Lomak Petroleum.

The Athens field has about 8 billion cubic feet of natural gas, or enough to last through 15 years of production, said John Pinkerton, president of Lomak Petroleum.

Lomak Petroleum has interests in 30 Pennsylvania wells and about 800 in Ohio, Pinkerton said.

Irion discovery flows 218 barrels

Staff Report

An undesignated discovery has been completed in Irion County, northeast of Wolfcamp production in the Tankersley field and 1.5 miles east-northeast of a 5,881 ft. dry hole.

MATADOR OPERATING CO., Amarillo, tested the No. 1 Tankersley "29" to flow 218 barrels of 39.4 gravity crude and 27 barrels of water on a 48/64 inch choke from perforations 5,888 to 5,920 ft. The producing interval was acidized with 5,000 gallons of acid. Gas-oil ratio is 3,495:1.

Permitted as a 7,300 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 7,313 ft. and plugged back to 6,084 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 6,129 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,386 ft., include the San Angelo at 1,204 ft., Clearfork at 3,268, Wichita Albany at 4,328, Wolfcamp at 5,242, Canyon at 6,222, and Strawn at 7,294 ft.

Location is 1,800 ft. from north and 1,600 ft. from east lines of Section 29, HE&WT survey, Abst. 470, 13 miles south of Mertzon.

WBR INC. of Dallas completed the No. 1 Paint Rock to pump 11.76 barrels of 42 gravity crude and 17.5 barrels of water. The well produced from perforations 3,408 to 3,415 ft., which had been acidized with 6,000 gallons of acid.

Drilled to 3,650 ft., where 4 1/2 inch casing was set, the well was plugged back to 3,450 ft.

Location is 467 ft. from north and 1,240 ft. from west lines of Section 297, Block 93, Carl Lehmann survey, Abst. 587, nine miles northwest of Eden.

Menard field gains 72.6 Mcf reopener

R.E. WALTERS has reopened the Tuckmar South (Crosscut) field of Menard County with recompletion of a former Strawn producer.

The No. 2 R.E. Walters "C" was reentered and plugged back, testing for a calculated absolute open flow of 72.6 Mcfd from perforations 3,350 to3,366 ft.

Originally drilled to 4,191 ft., the well was plugged back to 4,060 ft., where 4 1/2 inch casing was set.

Location is 1,000 ft. from south and 660 ft. from east lines of Section 6, Block B, GH&SA survey, Abst. 1796, 13 miles north of Fort McKavett.

BARE: 'Going bare' may not be worth risk

(From 1E)

"Right now the consensus is that going bare is not worth the risk. I don't know what the future will hold; business is so tough there may be those who try it as a way to curb costs, but I'm not sure going bare would curb costs in the long run."

He said he looks at workers' comp costs as a part of the cost of doing business, and includes it in the bids he submits. "We've made the decision that we're going to carry insurance rather than going bare as some companies have. Though the costs are outrageous, it's part of the cost we've got to pay."

Says Clark with the AOSC: "The continuing escalating costs (of workers' compensation) is creating a problem for contractors." He pointed out that contractors who have done good jobs in creating safety programs and preventing accidents can't find coverage outside the state pool and thus are being forced into the state pool. "It has created a tremendous burden on contractors. Many want to go bare — it's not for wanton disregard for the caring and wellbeing of an injured employee. It's the system is so out of whack, costs are such a burden."

The National Council on Compensation Insurance noted that:

■ Average medical costs tripled during the 1980s, rising at an average annual rate of 13 percent;

■ Indemnity costs experienced an average annual increase of 10 percent despite the fact wage levels on which indemnity costs were based only rose at an annual level of about 5 percent.

■ Lost workdays per 100 employees rose 24 percent from 1984 to reach 78.7 in 1989; the number had been 58.7 in 1982.

The NCCI also reports that combined ratios (ratio of losses and expenses to premiums) have exceeded 115 percent and operating ratios have been the 105 percent range. Operating losses were put at $1.7 billion in 1987, $1.8 billion in 1988, $2 billion in 1989, and $2.2 billion in 1990.

According to the State Board of Insurance, over 8,000 Texas employers have opted out of the state pool.

One such employer is a Corpus Christi-based driller who discussed the situation on condition of anonymity.

The company, in business since 1954, became a non-subscriber on July 1 and the driller said results so far have been good.

He said it took about a year to set up the new program, which is an ERISA (Employee Retirement Income Security Act) plan. "We thought about it carefully (before changing)" he said.

The high cost of the program prompted the change, he said. He pointed out that for 1988, 1989 and 1990, the company incurred losses that amounted to $640,000 and that for 1990 alone, the company's worker compensation insurance premiums were $630,000. "Insurance is supposed to be risk management. The group defines the risk and says, 'OK, we'll all contribute so that when a loss occurs, no one shoulders the loss themselves.' What you pay in should be less than what the losses were. If I'm paying $630,000 for the year and my losses are $640,000, how's that being risk management? Workers' compensation insurance Texas style is not means of risk management; it has become a risk that has to be managed."

The driller said he feels the switch to the self-funded plan was timely, coming soon after Judge Barefoot Sanders ruling in the Eurine v. Wyatt Cafeterias case that Wyatt's self-funded, self-administered plan was superseded by ERISA. This ruling — though under much debate, and Sanders has given indications of backing away from it — may provide Texas employers a significant alternative to the state system by establishing and administering a proper ERISA plan.

The driller's new plan, he said, addressed two areas of concern: An active safety program to prevent accidents and that would care for an injured employee, and two, providing insurance to cover the indemnity required to protect the operator the driller works for. "Those two areas go hand in hand," he said.

And it provides an incentive. "We wanted to give our folks a raise; we established a 50 cent per hour safety bonus over a quarterly period. There's approximately 13 weeks to a quarter, 40 hours a week; if the rigs were working on a quarterly basis, the bonus could be about $260. We made the program retroactive to the April-May-June quarter. My people know that if the crew works together and one guy gets hurt and has a lost-time accident, they lose their money. It gives them an incentive to look out for each other.

"The thing is, lawyers and doctors through their fraudulent activities have given the impression it's economically advantageous for a worker to appear injured or to be injured on the job. We're trying to make it economically advantageous to be on the job."

Great effort went into revamping the system during the 1989-90 Legislative system, which resulted in what Well Servicing magazine calls the "greatly compromised" Texas Workers Compensation Act passed in 1990.

While the NCCI said statistics show the reform has resulted in reductions loss ratios, estimated at 20 percent in the first six months of 1991, Mike Clark with the AOSC remains skeptical.

"They tell us the reform may give us some relief. That remains to be seen," he said, adding that "We didn't give into this situation overnight, and we're not going to get out of it overnight. A number of the problems with the system have built up over a number of years, and they're not going to be solved overnight."

The Dallas Brass will perform for this season's Midland Community Concerts series. Former members and those new to the area will be able to purchase season memberships at Monday's opening concert at Midland High School Auditorium. The 8 p.m. concert features harpist Carrol McLaughlin.

By Georgia Todd Temple

Midland Community Concerts (MCC) opens the door to a broad spectrum of musical choices for members who like traveling.

"If members use their reciprocal privileges, they (will) have a terrific season," said Dorothy Perkins, longtime MCC board member. These privileges extend to a community concert series in El Paso as well as four New Mexico towns — Alamogordo, Artesia, Carlsbad and Ruidoso.

Thus membership in MCC entitles the bearer to five concerts in Midland and a number of selections elsewhere, including, the Ballet of British Columbia; Stecher and Horowitz pianists, who have performed in Midland in past seasons; Bill Schustik, the American troubadour; the American Boys Choir; Tziganka, Russian folk dance; an evening of Lerner and Lowe; and The Canadian Trio.

All a member has to do is present the reciprocity card, which comes with a season membership, to enter the out of town performances free, Miss Perkins said, adding that the card can be used again and again.

"The only trouble is the distances around here. If one of those towns happens to sell out auditorium space they might ask out-of-town patrons to wait until everyone's seated. I don't think that happens very often," Miss Perkins said, noting that El Paso's community concert season is sold-out.

"They said if anybody wants to try them they would let them in. Each member is furnished with a compete list including a name and phone number to call ahead and confirm before driving out there."

Community concerts presentations date back to 1947 when Midland joined Community Concerts, which (originally) traces its history back to 1920 Chicago.

"This whole idea of community concerts is something special in America. A Lorrie Morgan has dreamed all her life of being a country singer.

"This was a dream of mine since I was a child," said Miss Morgan, her voice husky over the phone. "To see it unfold in front of my eyes and live what I pictured when I was a little girl is probably the most satisfying thing about it."

Miss Morgan, who performs Saturday at Ector County Coliseum on the same bill with Clint Black, spent a lifetime in the presence of country music's greats. She is the daughter of country music star George Morgan of "Candy Kisses" fame. Her lineage made her part of the Opry family early on and opened a few doors as well as tagging her as "George's little girl." Her first opportunity to perform on the Grand Ole Opry came when she was a teenager.

"I was 13-years-old when I first sang on this stage," Miss Morgan told the audience at the Grand Ole Opry May 16, 1990, when she was presented with her first gold album award for "Leave the Light On," certified gold within 10 months of its release. "My dad and mom watched proudly from those wings and with tear-filled eyes had no idea this was to be the beginning of a long, hard road for me. That was 17 years ago and finally some of those long, hard roads have led me to dreams beyond my wildest imagination."

The hard road began with the death of her father in 1975 when she was a teen-ager.

Lorrie Morgan plays Ector County Coliseum Friday. Tickets, paid with cash only and priced at $20, may be purchased at Endless Horizons, Midland. Available tickets are in the balcony.

MORGAN: Every song in performance has meaning

(From 1F)

"I was 13-years-old when I first sang on this stage," Miss Morgan told the audience at the Grand Ole Opry May 16, 1990, when she was presented with her first gold album award for "Leave the Light On," certified gold within 10 months of its release. "My dad and mom watched proudly from those wings and with tear-filled eyes had no idea this was to be the beginning of a long, hard road for me. That was 17 years ago and finally some of those long, hard roads have led me to dreams beyond my wildest imagination."

The hard road began with the death of her father in 1975 when she was a teen-ager.

"I drove thousands of miles with just me and my mom or me and one musician," Miss Morgan said. "There were times I couldn't get through a show without literally crying because the band was so bad. But I think there's a reason why I did all that. It makes me appreciate what a good band I have now and what good management and label support. It's hard to appreciate the good things you have unless you've been without them."

When she was 18, she spent two seasons as part of the shows at Nashville's Opryland. Then when she was 21, she started two years of touring with George Jones. During that period, she would open the show with a few songs then sing backup and join him in duets.

"He taught me an awful lot about singing and performing," she said.

The two years touring with Jones were hard years, though.

"That was a definite experience. And, at age 21, I couldn't handle it very well. In fact, it was pretty frightening. There would be people throwing things at you whenever George didn't show up for a show. And there were times when we had to lie down on the floor of the bus because the people who were so mad about George not being there would actually rock the bus.

"But on the nights when George was on and right and straight and singing good, there was nothing like it."

Tragedy in the form of death again struck Miss Morgan's life in May of 1990. This time it was her husband, 33-year-old Keith Whitley, an up-and-coming country star with three number one singles in 1988.

"When I met Keith, it was like every girl's dream, actually meeting the perfect man and for a while I kind of gave up on the music. But when I started singing again, his support was crucial. He believed in me when others had given up, and he wasn't afraid to tell other people that he felt I had talent. I wouldn't be doing what I'm doing now if it hadn't been for Keith's support."

Whitley died from an alcohol overdose.

"...His idols were Lefty Frizzell and Hank Williams and George Jones, and all those people drank. Nowadays, even if you're a drinker, there's too many good people out there who don't drink. So now you can have idols who don't drink.

"I just wish Keith had learned that you don't have to kill yourself to sing. I wish he had learned that just because you're great doesn't mean you're indestructible."

Miss Morgan credits producer Barry Beckett with helping her get her music on the right track. When he listened to the songs she had recorded at 19, he said she didn't mean a word she sang. His statement angered her, but she knew it was true.

She credits Whitley with teaching her how to solve the problem Beckett identified — how to sing from the heart. Whitley and Miss Morgan were awarded the Country Music Association's (CMA) Vocal Event of the Year Award in 1990 and CMA's Vocal Collaboration of the Year in 1991.

"I don't think it's so much what you sing," she said. "I think it's how you project it, how you make the audience understand the way you feel it. That's why every song I put in my show has a meaning for me."

This April, Miss Morgan released her second RCA album, "Something in Red."

"I think on this last album we just tried to portray the different sides of me, the styles of music that I love. The album is not repetitious at all — very assorted oldies — rock 'n' roll and country to rock today. I think that says a lot about what I am and what kind of music I love. That's all kinds of music."

Someday Miss Morgan would like to make movies. For now, she's happy with videos.

"I love to do videos. The good thing about my videos is I've been very instrumental in what I do in the videos."

Guilt often follows Miss Morgan when she travels for very long away from home despite the fact that her two children are at home with "two very qualified nannies," she said.

"Someone's got to pay the bills. Someone's got to put food on the table. I don't know how to be a secretary, and I couldn't ring anyone out on a cash register if you paid me."

The decision is a tough one for Miss Morgan, who said she counts family and friends at the top of her priority list.

"My family, my friends, my relationship with people probably is the most important thing to me," she said. "My dad always told me the only thing you leave when you leave this world is your memory. That's all people have left of you. I hope when I leave this earth, people will remember me as a good person and somebody who cared about people."

Also at the top of her list, she said, "My desire to achieve what I've set out to achieve. To be successful. I'm not saying to be a star. To be successful and good at what I do. Failure scares me."

She's uncertain why failure scares her.

"I'm not really sure why. I'm just afraid of being a failure. Some days I want to get out of the music business because I'm afraid I won't be as good as I was. You're only as good as your last record," Miss Morgan said, adding that she could hear them saying, '"Boy, she was good one time, but she' ain't now. That kind of stuff preys on my mind, I guess."

Miss Morgan is no longer feeling as alone as she once did. Currently, she is engaged.

"He's gorgeous and sentimental, very sensitive," she said. "He's about 5 foot 9, 160 pounds, long blond hair, pretty blue eyes, and he's just a blessing, I think. He's traveling with me. He was Clint Black's bus driver when I met him."

Texas holds a special place in Miss Morgan's heart.

"I'm looking forward to playing Texas. Texas was really the first market that I was accepted in when I started touring real heavy — right after Keith passed away. They were so receptive to me out there. Texas became a great market for me and my music. Plus, I'm marrying a Texas man."

MUSIC: Organization strives to fulfill real need number of us went to a conference in Wichita, Kan., last year. In the midwest the towns are 10 and 20 miles apart, and they all have concerts with reciprocity. Little towns don't have symphony and theater like we have, so we have to reach a little harder for ours."

During the periods when Midland was booming, MCC sold out its series and even oversold on several occasions, Miss Perkins said. Currently, the organization has more than 1,000 members.

"Considering the flatness of our economy we've been real pleased. We know that people have more choices these days, and our organization is still filling a real need," Miss Perkins said referring to the current membership number.

The local organization, which is run entirely by volunteers, conducts its membership campaign in April. The goal of the organization is to make enough money to pay for the upcoming season.

This season's lineup features harpist Carrol McLaughlin, classical to jazz, Monday; duo pianists Anthony and Joseph Paratore, Oct. 20; Moscow Balalaikas, authentic Soviet classics on traditional Russian folk instruments presented by a six-member musical ensemble featuring instrumentalists and a vocalist, Nov. 18; The Dallas Brass, March 9; and Neal and Leandra, country, folk and gospel songs, March 31.

At the first concert of the season, former members and newcomers to the area have the opportunity to become members. That concert will be held at 8 p.m. Monday at Midland High School Auditorium.

Season tickets are available for $25 for adults; $60 for a family of two adults and all children through high school; and $10 for a student through high school. Admission to all concerts is by season membership only. For more information call 682-1375 or 684-5673.

"I think that we have maintained the balance that we strive for with not only native talents such as the Dallas Brass, but imported talent with the Moscow Balalaikas on their premiere appearance in America," Miss Perkins said, adding that MCC works to provide family entertainment with something for everyone.

"We have the reputation of having an older audience, which is true, but the young people don't know what they are missing, if they're not coming," Miss Perkins said. "The thrill of the live performance is important for the younger generation."

Gays, lesbians boldy travel to new century

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Gays and lesbians are about to go boldly where they've never gone before.

They'll be portrayed as ordinary citizens of the 24th Century in the fall season of "Star Trek: The Next Generation."

Not as outcasts. Not as deviates. Not as eccentrics. Just as ordinary men and women living in a distant century when one's sexual orientation is a matter of total public indifference — and isn't merely tolerated by the politically correct.

There'll be none of the "are they or aren't they?" hand-wringing that accompanied a kiss between women on "L.A. Law." Just the occasional sight — in between phaser blasts, interstellar chases and teleportations — of two men or two women doing something, such as holding hands, that unmistakably says: "We're homosexual — and who cares?"

"We agree that dealing with this issue is an important thing to do," said "Star Trek" executive producer Rick Berman.

"Viewers will see more of shipboard life in some episodes, which will, among other things, include gay crew members in day-to-day circumstances," said the show's creator, Gene Roddenberry, in a statement published by The Advocate, the gay and lesbian journal.

In other news from MOT, the local opera has received a contribution from Shell Oil Co. Foundation to assist in the production of Verdi's "La Traviata" at 8 p.m. Oct. 30 at Midland High School Auditorium. Tom Green of the Shell Pipe Line Corp. officially made the contribution.

"La Traviata" will be performed by the Western Opera Theater, the professional touring company of the San Francisco Opera Center. This company currently is celebrating its 25th anniversary. During the celebration to date, performances have been given in 38 states. The troupe was the first professional opera company from the United States to perform in the Peoples Republic of China.

"We endeavor to bring quality opera to Midland," said Tom Johnson, MOT president. "We are most grateful to Shell Oil Company Foundation" for its "generous support in this effort."

■ Theatre opens shows

Midland Community Theatre has two productions opening in October.

The musical comedy "Nunsense" returns to the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave., Friday and the comedy-drama "A Texas Romance" opens at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., Oct. 11.

"Nunsense" is the wacky story of five nuns putting on a variety show as a fund-raiser. The production, which is not a membership show, runs through Oct. 19. Members and groups receive a discount.

"A Texas Romance" is being co-produced by Texaco and Midland College. The play is set in a small Texas town in 1928. All showing are at 8 p.m. except the 2:30 p.m. Sunday, Oct. 20 showing. Memberships, single tickets and group rates are available.

For reservations to either call 682-4111.

■ Award presented

Harry Harrison received the "Distinguished Mummer" Award at the Summer Mummers recent annual membership meeting.

The award recognizes long and exceptional service to the Summer Mummers organization and productions.

Harrison has served as both producer and director of the melodrama and has written two Summer Mummers scripts, this year's "Misled Down the Mississippi" or "Just Say Neaux," and "Buffaloed on the Bayou" or "The Revenge of the Yellow Rose," produced in 1989. He also has acted in the melodrama and worked in many backstage capacities.

The award was presented by veteran Mummer Scotty Alcorn.

During the meeting, Barbara Fritz and Mark Kimball were elected to the board of directors, and recognition was given to Judy Powell and Dick Ragan, whose terms on the board expired.

Those receiving the "Mummer of the Year" Award for extradionary efforts during the 1991 season were Kathy and Earl Keller, Ms. Fritz, Ms. Semple, David Whitaker, Terry Potter and Greg Collins.

It was announced that Ed Ellis was the winner of the Mummers' grand prize, a trip to the Grand Cayman Islands, donated by Allega Travel and Atlas Wireline.

Special recognition was given to the women associated with Midland Community Theatre's box office in appreciation of their work at the Kiosk at the Plaza Shopping Center while Theatre Midland was closed for a month this summer. In addition, special recognition went to Gloria Eng, longtime "card girl" at the Mummers.

Producers Terry and Melissa Martin reported that the Mummers, Midland Community Theatre's annual fund raising event, set both attendance and financial records this year.

The attendance figure was 12,517.

"The last attendance record was in 1983, and it took one more show to do it — so not only did they break the attendance record, they did it with one less show," Doug Heck said.

"Summer Mummers" grossed $239,000 in 30 shows, Heck said.

■ Symposium dates set

RUIDOSO, N.M. — The second annual Old Lincoln County Cowboy Symposium, New Mexico's largest event paying tribute to the American Cowboy Symposium and Old Lincoln County, will be held Thursday through Oct. 6 at the Ruidoso Downs Super Select Sales Pavilion.

The Pavilion is located in Glencoe, 12 miles east of Ruidoso Downs on Highway 70.

"Join us for four days of old-fashioned, authentic cowboy fun and return to a time when the cowboy and his horse worked the West, when chuckwagons cooked out on the range, and entertainment centered around campfires, storytelling and singing cowboy songs," said a release from Tracey Moran, program coordinator.

All of this will take place in the center of what was formerly known as Old Lincoln County, once the largest county in the United States. At one time, it encompassed all of Lincoln, Chaves, Lea and Eddy, and parts of Roosevelt, Otero, Torrance, Guadalupe, Curry, Socorro and DeBaca counties.

"Today, Lincoln County is recognized as having some of the most beautiful, unspoiled scenery in the Southwest, and is rich in Western history," Ms. Moran said.

The celebration will include such activities as a kickoff square dance featuring John Gimble and his Former Texas Playboys, a chuckwagon cookoff, historical trail rides, cowboy music, dances, storytelling, cowboy poetry, team-roping, a western collectibles trade show and genuine cowboy, Indian and Mexican cooking. A cowboy church service will be held Oct. 6 prior to the day's activities.

The Old Lincoln County Cowboy Symposium is sponsored by Ruidoso Downs Race Track President R.D. Hubbard, and New Mexico oilman Robert O. Anderson. Allsup's Convenience Stores is the corporate sponsor of the event.

Three historical trail rides have been developed to give guests a different perspective of Old Lincoln County. Riders will be given a choice between three different rides: Glencoe to Lincoln; Fort Stanton to Lincoln; and Glencoe to the Tunstall Monument, murder site of John H. Tunstall and the beginning of the Lincoln County War. The trail rides vary in length and in the level of difficulty. Both riders and their horses need to be in good physical condition. To preregister, call the Cowboy Symposium offices, 800-545-0402. Horses will be provided for the riders.

For lodging information call the Ruidoso Valley Chamber of Commerce, (800)253-2255.

Design symposium to open

WASHINGTON (AP) — A critical analysis of the role of design as the year 2000 approaches is the subject of a symposium entitled "The Edge of the Millennium," sponsored by Cooper-Hewitt in New York and the Smithsonian Institution's National Museum of Design.

From Jan. 15-18, architects, industrial designers and graphic designers will convene with historians, writers, scientists and journalists at the Cooper Union School for the Advancement of Science and Art.

Through panel discussions, presentations and performance, they are to investigate the cultural impact of the end of the millennium on the practice of design.

Among other issues, "The Edge of the Millennium" proposes a philosophical critique of technology, the market place and professional values.

HOROSCOPE

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Look forward to a foundation-laying year where career and finances are concerned. Your efforts to please an employer will be amply rewarded. Travel in November and December. Early 1992 will find you very family-oriented. Romance looks rosy in early spring. Next May could bring a windfall or inheritance. Postpone buying or selling a special piece of real estate until late summer. Study the market.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Greer Garson, TV host Bryant Gumbel, Polish President Lech Walesa, singer Jerry Lee Lewis.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Ease up on the self-criticism. You are much too hard on yourself. A social group is both fun and delightfully informative. Humor helps you bridge a generation gap.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Financial talks and purchases should be successful today. Seize an opportunity to discuss career goals or business growth with VIPs — it could turn out lucky. A friend offers to play Cupid.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be careful not to climb on your "high horse" now. It is vital you run with the herd today. Although children mean more responsibility, the rewards are worth it. Confide in mate.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Romance is on your mind. Be open to new experiences. Travel and spontaneous invitations are favored. An important talk may open your eyes; meet a challenge head-on.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Positive forces intensify now. Other people see you as a true leader. VIPs will be doubly impressed by your efforts. A gift or money offering will brighten the evening hours.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your presence at a meeting makes a powerful statement today. Follow your dreams! A special purchase or piece of news thrills you. Lighten up in a romantic relationship.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): It may be time to explore the unknown — important discoveries can be made that way. Travel details deserve close scrutiny. Dress up when entertaining newcomers.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Vying for the spotlight now could work against you. Kind words and generous deeds will bring the attention you want. Pooling travel dollars with a friend makes a dream come true.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The way in which you communicate is very attractive to that "certain someone." Be imaginative when choosing gifts. Sharing travel expenses has real merit. Ready your clothes for the busy week ahead.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): As always, you have what it takes to win hearts! Take a chance and have a candid chat with someone. Loved ones need to know that you care. Call or visit an elderly parent.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your home is the ideal place for both romance and festivities today. An intimate relationship has some very special moments. Dare to share a secret hope with the object of your affections.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your home makes a wonderful base of operations today. Catch up on your reading or phone calls. Evening is the best time to pursue romance. Keep entertainment expenses within reason.

Opening lead: Three of ♠

It's all very well finding a brilliant play on defense. If partner doesn't realize how smart you're being, though, it can all go for naught. To illustrate what we mean, look at this hand from a team match.

A contract of six hearts was reached at both tables. Where we watched, the auction had the virtue of being short and sweet, although it did run the risk of possibly missing a grand slam. However, South reckoned on wasted values in diamonds, and that turned out to be an accurate assessment.

At one table West led a diamond. Declarer discarded two spades on the good diamonds, drew trumps in two rounds and eventually misguessed the location of the queen of clubs, but just made the slam.

At the other table West was a more imaginative defender. If the enemy held the king of spades, North was likely to hold it, so West found a devilish lead which rated to succeed whether East held the queen or king of spades. A low spade was selected as the opening salvo!

Not surprisingly, declarer did not suspect that West would lead away from an ace against a slam, so South called for a low spade from dummy. The stage was set for a spectacular coup.

Unfortunately, East also did not believe partner could be leading away from an ace. However, it was quite likely that the lead was away from the jack and, if East played the queen, declarer would win the ace and dummy's K 10 of spades would then be a tenace over West's jack. So East made the correct technical play of the nine of spades! Here declarer guessed which defender held the queen of clubs and ended up with an overtrick.

Planetarium reopens after renovation

After several months of equipment installation and renovation work, the Marian Blakemore Planetarium of the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., reopens today with a reception and two showings of "On Wings."

"On Wings," a Blakemore Planetarium-produced show sponsored in part by the Texaco Foundation, will be presented at 2 and 3:30 p.m. with the reception between the two showings.

Museum members will be admitted free. Nonmember charge is $2. Museum memberships will be available at the door. The membership will allow free admittance to planetarium shows plus free admittance or discount to other museum-sponsored programs for which a fee is charged.

During Septemberfest, a short program was shown to illustrate the capabilities of the recently installed Minolta Series IV star projector and to show placement of the equipment which was facilitated by Hy-Bon Engineering Co. and staff.

The Minolta projector replaced the Spintz projector used in the Planetarium since its opening in 1972, and computerized special effects equipment was added.

The "On Wings" presentation was designed, written and produced by Mark Hartman, director of the planetarium. He was assisted by Bill Kitchen, a volunteer who is a specialist in computers and electronics, and by museum staff. Narration is by Lynn Layman, Bill Silbey, Danny Partain and Hartman.

The opening and closing theme music was composed and performed specifically for the show by Joseph and Theresa Brunelle. Brunelle, a singer, songwriter and muscians, was Master-in-Residence at the museum until May.

A fund drive raised $110,305 for the equipment, installation and building renovation work necessary for the equipment.

"On Wings" will be showing at 2 and 3:30 p.m. Sundays through Dec. 1.

"West Texas Skies" will be the film shown at 7:30 p.m. Tuesdays except on scheduled museum holidays. These planetarium shows will illustrate the "current sky" in West Texas. The talk accompanying the show will tell about what can be seen in the night sky.

Both "On Wings" and other featured sky shows and the "West Texas Skies" presentations will be free to museum members and $2 to non-members.

The admission fee to the planetarium is new. Since the planetarium's beginning, sky shows have been free to the public.

"With all of the high tech equipment now added, and the fact that we have begun a new phase of sky show production, we can present much more exciting programs for the public," said Jean Hagman, director of the museum. "Unfortunately, that also has resulted in an increase in planetarium operating cost by 30 percent this first year. The quality of the programs, however, will justify the nominal charge for the viewer."

The museum, in cooperation with Midland Independent School District, is designing curriculum-specific star shows beginning with a general introduction to the night sky for lower elementary grades, advancing to the introduction of stars as physical objects, the moom and its environment, space distances and speed of light — all grade specific with particular educational objectives.

The Texaco Foundation and The Davidson Family Charitable Foundation have made contributions for planetarium educational programming.

The Planetarium is at the corner of Indiana Avenue and K Street. For more information call 683-2882 or 570-7770.

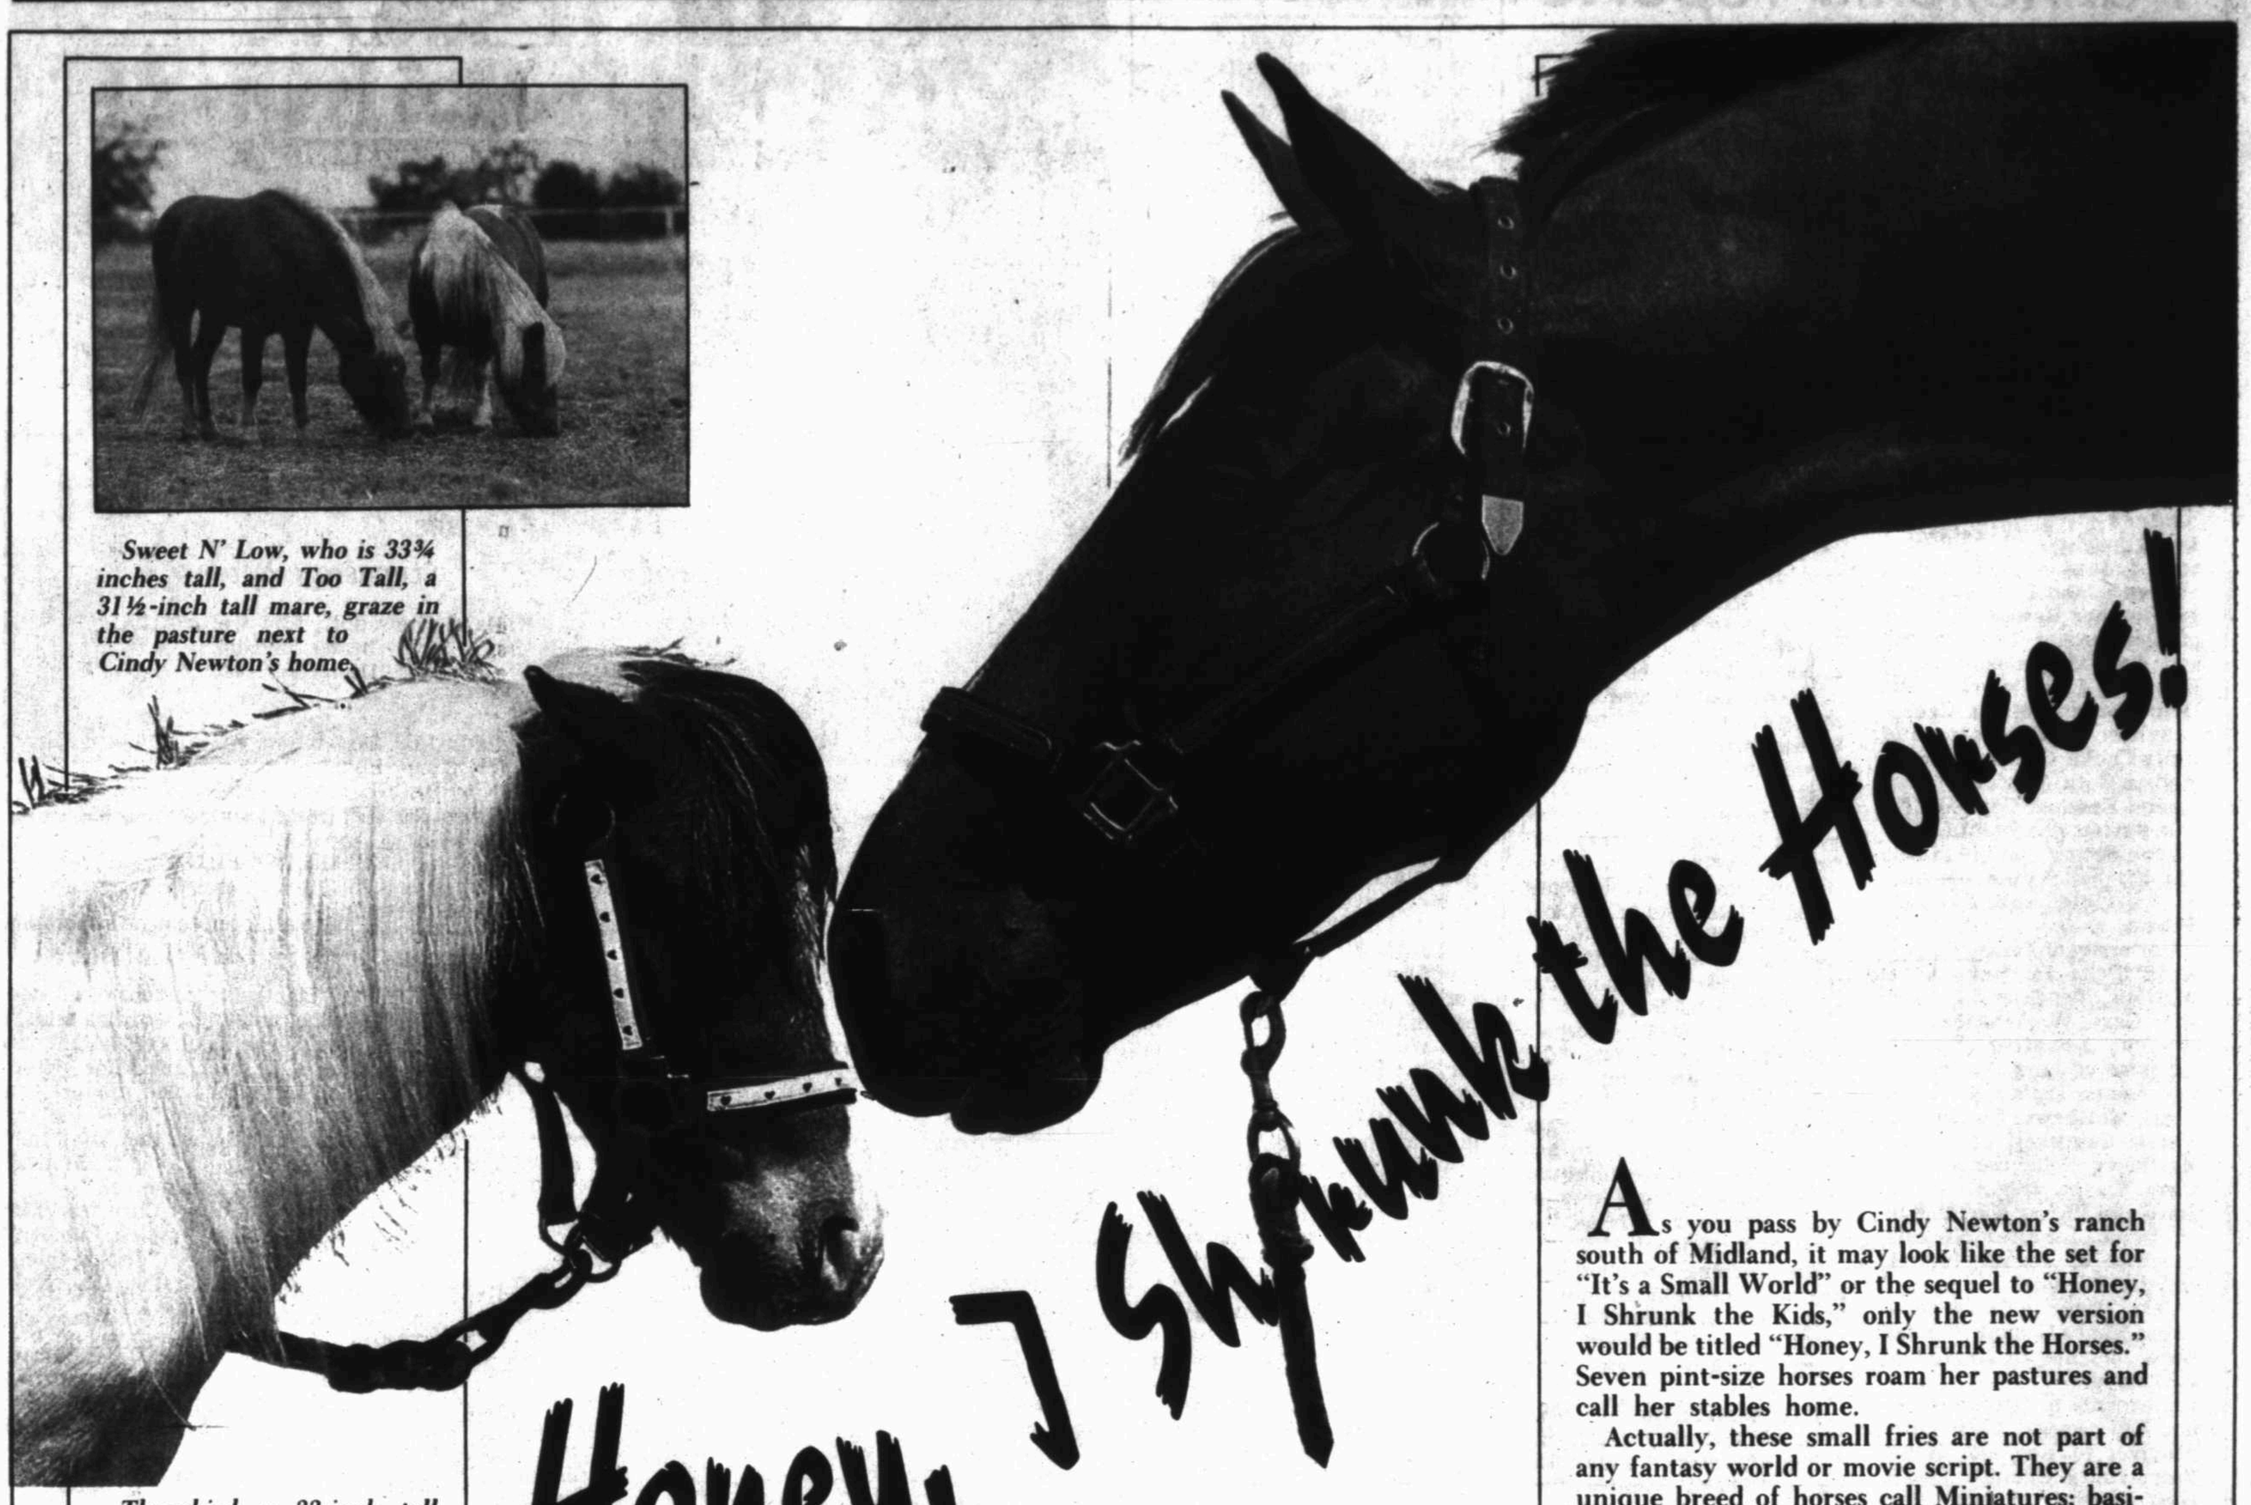
Sweet N' Low, who is 33¾ inches tall, and Too Tall, a 31½-inch tall mare, graze in the pasture next to Cindy Newton's home.



Thornbird, a 33-inch tall paint owned by Matthew Blair, gets a kiss from Freckles, a standard-sized 7-year-old Thoroughbred.

Honey, I Shrunk the Horses!

As you pass by Cindy Newton's ranch south of Midland, it may look like the set for "It's a Small World" or the sequel to "Honey, I Shrunk the Kids," only the new version would be titled "Honey, I Shrunk the Horses." Seven pint-size horses roam her pastures and call her stables home.

Actually, these small fries are not part of any fantasy world or movie script. They are a unique breed of horses call Miniatures; basically a scaled-down version of standard-sized horses.

These Miniatures are not dwarfs, runts or "genetic" errors, but rather are horses selectively bred-down in size while maintaining as near-perfect conformation as possible.

"A Miniature horse is a small, well-formed horse. It must measure 34 inches or less from the withers and be well proportioned," said Matthew Blair, a Midland attorney and Miniature horse owner. "They are well-dispositioned, they tame quickly and they train quickly."

In fact, Blair believes that Miniatures train more quickly than standard horses because they are more manageable.

Cindy Newton, owner and breeder of Miniature horses, talks to Chico, her 10-year-old, 30½-inch tall Arabian stallion (above). Chico is the father of two of Mrs. Newton's Miniature horses, Rocky and Sweet N' Low.

Sugar, an 8-year-old, 33¼-inch tall mare, is all horse power as she takes David Newton, 9, and Stephanie Newton, 14, for a ride (right). In the background, Rocky, a 4-year-old stallion who stands 32½ inches tall, waits in his stable.

CONGRATULATIONS TO my husband, Harry Harrison, who received the "Distinguished Mummer" Award this year. It recognizes long and exceptional service to the Summer Mummers organization and its productions over a multi-year period.

Harry, who has been active with the Mummers for 39 of its 43 seasons, was a teen-ager when he became involved. He started out as a gofer for Art Cole, former longtime director of Midland Community Theatre. He went on to become a backstage worker, an actor (his favorite role being the villain), producer and director of both the melodrama and moviela, and scriptwriter. He authored "Misled Down the Mississippi" or "Just Say Neaux," which was seen this past summer by more than 12,500 persons. He also wrote "Buffaloed on the Bayou" or "The Revenge of the Yellow Rose," which was performed in 1989.

Harry received the award at the Summer Mummers' annual membership meeting last Sunday at the home of Doug and Claire Heck.

PRIOR TO THEIR Sept. 21 wedding in Fort Worth, Kimber Smith of Argyle and former Midlander Sam Lawson of Bedford were feted at a series of parties. Festivities in Midland included a miscellaneous shower and brunch hosted by Pat (Mrs. Bud) Richardson of Midland and LaJuana (Mrs. Bud) Richardson of Graham at the Polo Park Clubhouse, a Mexican Fiesta buffet at the home of Theresa and Bill Woodruff, and a miscellaneous shower at the home of Sue (Mrs. Ike) Fitzgerald and co-hosted by Freda Prince and Verdie Mize. There also were parties in Dallas, Denton and Argyle.

The rehearsal dinner was held at the home of Mary and Dr. Brooks Trotter in Colleyville and hosted by the groom's parents, Helen and Whit Lawson of Midland.

Wedding day festivities included a bridesmaids luncheon at the Via Real Restaurant in Las Colinas hosted by former Midlander Yvonne (Mrs. Bill) Trotter of Clifton and a luncheon honoring the groom at Esparza's Mexican Restaurant in Grapevine and hosted by former Midlander Walt Hamilton of Houston and Don Hamilton, Rusty Petree and Jesse Petree, all of Midland.

The wedding reception was held at the Petroleum Club of Fort Worth and hosted by the bride's parents, Karyl and Larry Smith of Argyle.

THE WEATHER may have been cold and rainy on a recent Friday afternoon, but the mood inside Midland Country Club was warm and festive as Ladies Association members greeted one another at the fall season's opener, a luncheon and fashion show by Swartz.

According to Andrew Swartz, "Clothes continue to become more versatile, allowing every woman to work within her own sense of what feels good, neither a captive of tradition nor a slave to fashion." Therefore, readers, please note that hemlines this season will vary, allowing the wearer to choose the length that makes her feel most comfortable. Mid knee to just below the knee is being suggested by Swartz.

The audience was entertained with a dazzling collection of sportswear, daytime dresses and evening creations. Earth tones, black and white, and deep rich colors were featured. Fabric patterns included geometrics, plaids and checks.

Accessories, including hats and gloves, and casual furs also were featured n the showing. "Furs for fall achieve a look more and more like sportswear," says Andy. "Combined with leather or suede and many times reversible, furs become an essential part of the wardrobe — for example a casual jacket that goes everywhere."

Hostesses for the social hour preceding lunch were Carol Jo (Mrs. Jack) Blake, Barbara (Mrs. Charles) Hartwell and Phyllis (Mrs. John) Grimland.

Among those seen at the event were Jane Ann (Mrs. Tom) Kelly, Sharon (Mrs. Gary) Crouch, Christy (Mrs. Jim, Jr.) Lacy, Dell (Mrs. John) Ruwwe, Verta (Mrs. Ike) Lovelady, Elma Jean (Mrs. Richard) Henderson, Betty (Mrs. Don) Ewan and her houseguest, Nancy (Mrs. John) Broocks of Kerrville.

Steak house owner keeps it simple

By Mary Foster

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — What do you call a woman with no money and no experience who takes over a restaurant in a run-down section of town that she finds through a classified ad?

If the woman is Ruth Fertel, you can call her rich, happy and very successful.

Almost 26 years after the pint-sized woman with the oversized glasses bought the 60-seat Chris Steak House in New Orleans, Ruth's Chris Steak House has expanded to 30 restaurants with another scheduled for this fall in Richmond, Va.

"There's really no secret to it," Ms. Fertel said. "Most people judge you on how hard you work and how honest you are. From the beginning I worked hard and gave people a good steak."

That simple recipe has made Ruth's Chris the most successful upscale steak house in America, according to Restaurant Business, a trade magazine. Revenues have grown steadily, to $48 million in 1989 and $60 million in 1990. Ms. Fertel predicts $70 million in 1991.

Not bad for a woman who quit a $4,800-a-year job as a lab technician at Tulane Medical School in 1965, mortgaged her house and paid $18,000 for the name and furnishings of Chris Steak house.

"I HAD TO do something," said the former chemist. "I was divorced and I had two sons. I couldn't live on what I was making. When I filed my income tax for that first year, from May 24, 1965, through December, I had made $9,000 and thought I had gone to hog heaven."

Ruth's Chris was Ms. Fertel's second shot as an entrepreneur. At first she tried sewing draperies, but she had no table, and cutting the cloth on the floor wasn't good for her knees.

So she tried the restaurant business. She hired away a waitress from a restaurant where she used to take her sons, and soon was working seven days a week, 16 hours a day, doing everything from cutting steaks to tending bar. She still has a bad shoulder from the butchering she did by hand until she bought a power saw.

Ms. Fertel had good luck that first year. A hurricane devastated parts of New Orleans, and scores of workers who were making repairs stopped in for a steak. Word spread, and business boomed.

Her second restaurant, in Louisiana's capital of Baton Rouge, caught on with the state's politicians and remains a popular hangout.

Now, at age 65, Ms. Fertel still works eight-hour days. Her office, above the New Orleans restaurant, has no doors or walls to separate her from the secretaries and file cabinets. And she still stops downstairs on a busy night to help out in the kitchen.

"I plan to die with my boots on," said Ms. Fertel, whose small, one-story house is behind the restaurant.

"I NEVER EVEN consider retiring," she said, although she does like to read and goes dove hunting with friends once or twice a year.

In a city where culinary delights abound, Ruth Fertel's meat-and-potatoes approach has held its own. Amid the Cajun, the Creole, the ethnic and the exotic, Ruth's bills itself as "The Home Of Serious Steaks."

She's added lobster and salmon to the menu, but good steaks — hand-cut, prime, corn-fed beef from the Midwest, almost 7,000 of them a day — are still the basis for her success.

"I'd say 85 percent of our sales are still steak. People tell me Americans are eating less beef, but we haven't seen it," Ms. Fertel said.

The competition isn't just other steak houses, but all good restaurants. So she hired Dan L. Earles away from Commanders Palace, a premiere New Orleans restaurant, to see that customers get the best in service, ambience and decor for the average $35 they spend on dinner.

"Dan calls it 'customer-making' attention to detail. I call it spoiling the customer," Ms. Fertel said.

She spoils them in 13 restaurants she owns and another 17 franchises located in 15 states and the District of Columbia. Ms. Fertel wants to continue expanding the chain, and would like to own two restaurants for every one that's franchised.

"The serious money is in owning them yourself," Ms. Fertel said.

Ralph Giardina, who is in charge of franchises, said he gets about 30 calls a week from prospective franchisees. But "we're very selective," he said. "We want to associate ourselves with the right people. Our restaurants and franchises are all like family, and we want to keep it that way."

GIARDINA SAID the business will only consider about 15 additional markets for franchises.

But the company doesn't look like a typical chain. Each restaurant has decor that reflects its owners or its city. In Philadelphia, the entrance is framed by a bronze marquee and lanterns.

In Phoenix, the look is more "California," Giardina said, with lighter colors and wood.

The one consistency is quality. When a franchise opens, Ms. Fertel, Giardina and Earles spend a month with the owners training the staff, overseeing the operation and making sure everything is done right.

"Eighty-five percent of all new restaurants fail," Giardina said. "I could open Ralph's restaurant, use the same beef, the same system and serve the same product and go broke. When people see the name Ruth's Chris they know they are going to get a top-grade meal. Our restaurants succeed."

Only one Ruth's Chris franchise has gone out of business. Company officials blame a disagreement with the owner rather than problems with the operation.

WHAT'S AHEAD? Ms. Fertel said more growth, more satisfied customers, and more challenges, even though she hasn't made solid plans.

"I've always played it by ear. People always say I should have a five-year plan and set goals, but I never do. Opportunities always present themselves and if they look good, I jump."

Church celebrates 120 years

By Maria Weaver

JACKSBORO (AP) — At the end of a little dirt road near downtown Jacksboro, two old churches anchor the city's black community.

With little more than a handful of members between them, Antioch Baptist and Mount Pisgah Methodist churches meet together, alternating Sundays between the meeting places — first and third are Baptist, second and fourth, Methodist, and on fifth Sundays, the Baptist pastor preaches at Mount Pisgah or the Methodist pastor at Antioch.

This month the community celebrated Mount Pisgah's 120th anniversary. Organized in 1870, the little stucco church is considered a landmark and is known as the pioneer Methodist church of Jacksboro.

Kathy Garner, chairwoman of the anniversary celebration, said the church is celebrating the future as well as the past. Progress has moved in on the six-member, all-woman church.

"Until three or four years ago we had one room with the pastor's study and a bathroom," Mrs. Garner said. "Nothing had changed in years."

Then the Rev. Woodrow Holman, who came to the church in 1985, began to make improvements on the building. He added paneling and carpeting and built an altar area for the worshippers.

LAST YEAR he told his congregation that if they wanted to guarantee his staying at the church, they should build a new building.

"We started looking at purchasing land to enlarge," said Mrs. Garner, "then one day he said he had a vision. God said don't build a new church, build a fellowship hall.

"Almost single-handedly he built this hall," she said, walking into a bright meeting hall complete with a kitchen. With the help of co-workers from Fort Worth and Mrs. Garner's husband, Holman began the project last October, completing the structure in March and leaving the congregation only $1,800 in debt.

"He built cabinets himself," said Mrs. Garner. "He did the floors; he even painted." After the work was done, families donated tables and chairs to fill the hall.

"We celebrate our anniversary every year," said Mrs. Garner, "but this year, the completion of the fellowship hall makes it special."

Mount Pisgah has always been special to Mrs. Garner. As a child she remembers her mother and her husband's grandmother preparing community barbecues to help pay the church's budget.

"They'd start early Friday and work all night and sell it on Saturday," she said. "The barbecues are now famous. We no longer have to have them; now it's more to help out..."

MRS. GARNER was christened at Mount Pisgah, as was her daughter, but her husband and sons are members of the Baptist church.

"Church affiliation in Jacksboro is pretty much what was going on at the time you joined," said Mrs. Garner. "My mother was Baptist to begin with and got into the Methodist and stayed. I was christened; my sister and brother are Baptist.

"When we had the boys, we were going to both churches, and most active in Baptist. It was natural for the boys to be baptized. It was a natural progression."

"But when we had a daughter, I was working in this church. There was no other thing to do but to have her christened here.

"We're like one big family. We meet in two buildings, but we're just one big family," she said. "It's a community church, not necessarily Baptist and Methodist. Any time one has anything we can count on the other to support it."

"There's a small population of black people in town," said Mrs. Garner. "There are few people whose names aren't on the roll of one church or the other."

Mount Pisgah remains a symbol of the past as it reaches for the future. Its worn wooden pews are covered by faded red velvet cushions, fraying at the edges from years of supporting the church's faithful through good times and bad. Well-used hymnals rest at the end of each pew, near the door, a bottle and a disposable diaper are propped against a stack of hymnals — a new generation being readied to carry on.

THEN THERE is Linne Shelton, who has been there just about every Sunday since the turn of the century. She can't drive anymore, but she finds a way to get to church most Sunday mornings.

"I had to let my car go," said the ninetysomething woman. "I was too nervous, afraid maybe I was going to run into somebody.

"All my children have cars now, so I don't worry about getting places."

Miss Shelton, as members of the black community in Jacksboro call the retired teacher, doesn't have any children, but she's raised almost all of the children who grew up on Jacksboro and attended her school.

"She was a mother to all of us," said Mrs. Garner, one of Shelton's students.

"She's one of my baby girls," said Miss Shelton, with a nod toward Kathy Garner.

"I taught 49 years," Miss Shelton said. The "colored school" didn't have a name when Miss Shelton started teaching there, so she started calling it the Blackshear School, named for a principal at Prairie View College, where she obtained her teaching certificate and eventually a master's degree.

It was in the summer of 1960, when Miss Shelton was away working on her master's, when the community changed the name of the school to the Linnie Shelton School.

School wasn't the only place Miss Shelton worked for her community. She has been Sunday School superintendent of Mount Pisgah CME Church since 1918.

HER GRANDMOTHER was a charter member of the church, and Miss Shelton is now its oldest member.

"We did a lot of walking when I was a little girl," Miss Shelton said. "Then my parents got a buggy — two seated."

"When I started teaching, I bought a car, and got to ride," she said. "I always had a way to get here ... until two years ago, when I retired from driving."

In its heyday, the black community in Jacksboro had more than 100 families, Miss Shelton said, "but most of them have passed away."

Autumn is season to plant spring bulbs

By Deborah A. Benge

For a beautiful display of spring color in 1992 you need to plan and plant in the fall of 1991. Spring flowering bulbs are something you need to plan for and we are approaching the time for bulb selection, bed preparation and eventually planting.

Benge

Spring flowering bulbs are commonly thought of as daffodils, tulips, dutch iris, hyacinth, crocus and grape hyacinth. These are outstanding spring flowering bulbs, but there are several smaller and lesser known spring flowering bulbs that do great in the Permian Basin and shouldn't be overlooked.

Planting of spirng flowering bulbs should not be done until about November, but two very important steps need to be taken right now — bulb selection and bed preparation.

When buying bulbs it's important to know that the larger the bulb the larger the plant and flower display; on the other hand, larger bulbs cost more. You need to spend as much on your bulbs as is economical for you. Whatever you do, avoid buying noticeably undersized or sub-standard bulbs. The results are nearly always disappointing. The bulbs should also be free of cuts and other blemishes, mold and they should be firm to the touch. Some bulbs have an outer papery covering and that should be intact.

Bulbs can be selected at your local nursery where you can see exactly what you are getting or they can be mail ordered from a horticulture supply. Which ever method you decide on you should select them as soon as possible so that you can get a good selection.

If you purchase your bulbs now you will want to store them in 60 to 65 degree F. temperatures. Temperatures above 70 degrees will damage the flower buds in the bulbs. Holding your bulbs at the recommended temperatures will help protect them from drying out and added protection can be given by storing them in perlite, peat or vermiculite. Bulbs can be planted in a number of places, but locations that have at least six hours of direct sunlight and good soil drainage are needed for the best growing conditions. If you plan for your bulbs to bloom year after year, you will want to plant them where they receive eight to 10 hours of sunlight a day.

Be sure to select a place where the flowers will be seen and appreciated the most, especially if you only have limited funds for bulbs or limited planting sites. Select beds that are close to entrances, picture windows, walkways or driveways. Bulbs can also be planted in containers to be placed where ever the action happens to be.

In the very beginning of your spring fowering bulb planning you need to pay attention to flower and foliage height. Grape hyacinth and other shorter flowering bulbs will need to be placed in the front of the border whereas tall tulips will need to be in the middle or back of the bed.

You can paint the yard by planting spring flowering bulbs but you will want to limit your palette to just a few colors. Planting one of everything will get you disappointing results, whereas if you will use at least five of a kind you can get some color statement. Try to plant in bold beds or drifts of the same color. These can be combined wiht one or two other colors, but be sure to use a significant number of bulbs of the same color.

Some bulbs can be used for naturalizing, like daffodils and Spanish squills combine well together for naturalizing. Crocus is a spring flowering corm that does well when naturalized. If you decide to use crocus you can use the mixed colors because they are either complimentary colors or in the same family of colors.

If you decide to naturalize a location in your lawn, be sure to buy plenty of bulbs and toss them in the area you intend to naturalize. This will make the project look more natural.

It's not a bad idea to go ahead and prepare your planting site now. If there is existing grass you will need to spray it with glyphosate herbicide a couple of weeks prior to soil preparation. Soil should be dug to about a 10-inch depth with a 4- to 6-inch layer of organic matter and a complete fertilizer being worked in at the same time. One pound of 10-10-10 or similar fertilizer can be worked in to every 100 square feet of bed area. Avoid using bone meal as your phosphorus source since it has a high pH. If planting in individual holes put in the fertilizer and cover with an inch of soil to prevent burning roots.

By perparing soil well in advance to actual planting in fall the soil can settle and any raw organic matter can decompose.

Small bulbs can be planted at about a 5-inch depth, medium and large bulbs can be planted at about an 8-inch depth. A general rule of thumb you can follow is to plant 2½ to 3 times the diameter of the bulb. Large bulbs need at least 5 inches between bulbs in spacing and small bulbs need about 3 inches in between each bulb. After planting a thorough watering and a layer of mulch will have your bulbs ready to grow.

Students help injured animals

Associated Press

A lot of people are talking about conservation and the environment. But in Casey County, Ky., some high-school kids are doing something about it, reports Country America magazine.

When a wild animal, especially a bird of prey, becomes injured, students in the conservation club at rural Casey County High School come to the rescue. They nurse the hurt animals back to health in their Wildlife Rehabilitation Center. To date, more than 60 hawks and owls have been released successfully, although the center is only three years old.

Their initial hands-on project in Kentucky's first treatment center of this kind was helping an injured great horned owl. After her nephew found the owl caught on a fence, science teacher Frances Carter and her biology class decided to get involved.

The kids named him Hooter and went to work. A veterinarian taped the bird's broken wing and administered antibiotics. After that, the students took over the bird's day-to-day care. The veterinarian gave Hooter only a 10 percent chance for a successful recovery. But on May 31, 1988, Hooter proved the vet wrong and was released back into the wild.

Only a few kids in the biology class worked with that first owl, but the whole student body watched with excitement. And after the success with Hooter, they wanted to get involved, too. Thus sprang up the conservation club.

The club raised money to build a wetlands laboratory on school property, consisting of a pond, marsh and related habitat. An upland and a forest habitat are now under development. The students also handle necessary construction, record keeping, feeding and care of animals.

"I've never seen such a bunch of hard-working kids," Frances says. "This has become the club to be in — the one the cool kids are in. But nobody remains just because of that. They're here at night, on weekends and during holidays, doing whatever it takes to restore these wounded birds to good health."

Some of the students have either changed career plans or solidified decisions because of their involvement with the club and the birds.

Todd Hoskins has decided he wants to be a wildlife biologist. Billy Brown thought he wanted to work for an accounting firm but is now headed for a career in the field of wildlife management.

"One sophomore nearly dropped out of school," Frances says, "but because of her involvement with the club, she not only graduated, she starts college this year. In her last letter, she said her goal now is to become a veterinarian and come back to help me run the program."

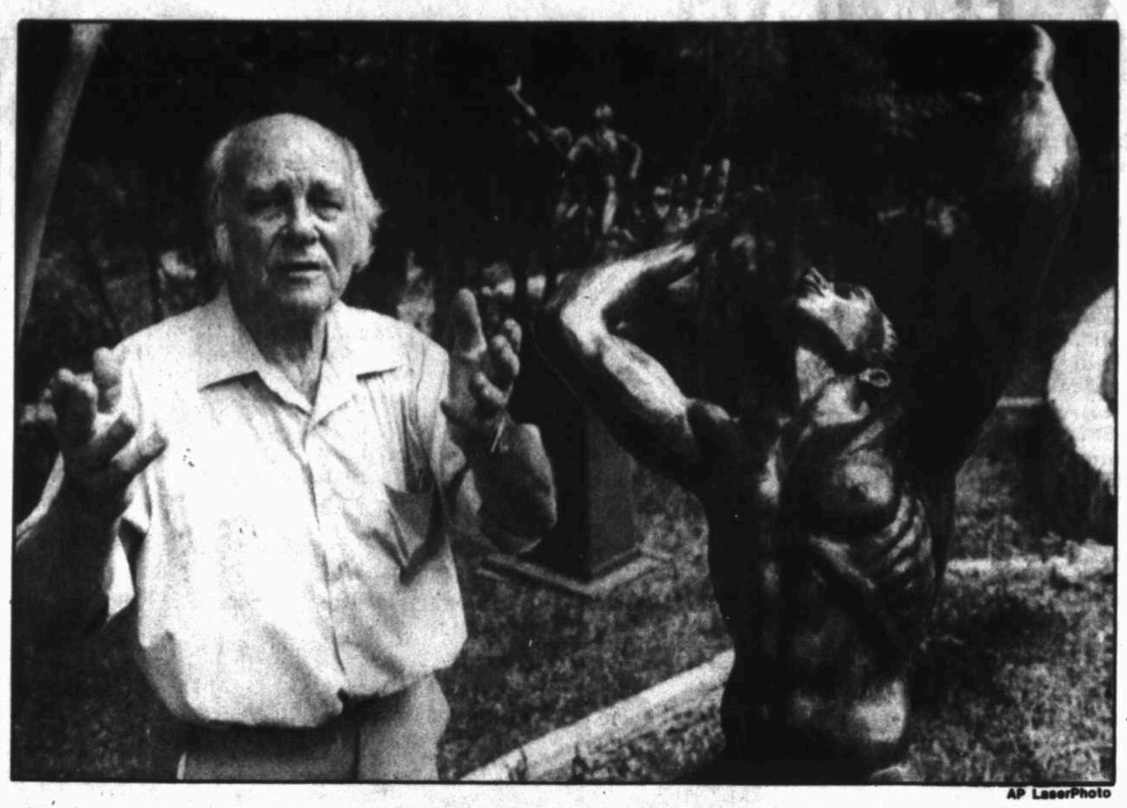
Austin artist's lifetime work finds home

By Susan Hightower



AP LaserPhoto

Artist Charles Umlauf talks about his work at his Austin home early this year, near a sculpture he says symbolizes humanity praying for world peace. Umlauf and his wife, Angeline, have donated their home and 250 sculptures to the city of Austin to create a museum and sculpture garden displaying his work.

AUSTIN (AP) — Sheltered in a cool green sanctuary just west of downtown, a sculpture garden and museum is taking shape, dedicated to the remarkable lifetime work of Austin artist Charles Umlauf.

The garden is populated with some 150 of Umlauf's sculptures, their stunning variety embracing religious pieces, sensual nudes and playful animals. The media range from creamy marble to silken jet onyx to rough-hewn stone.

Museum founders say the exhibit will be one of only two in the world dedicated to a single sculptor, and it should enhance Austin's place on the art world map.

"I really think that Austin can be sort of the sculpture capital of the U.S., with both the Elisabet Ney here and this museum," said Barbara Boyd, executive director of the Umlauf Sculpture Garden and Museum.

Ney's home in Austin also has been made into a museum. She was a German immigrant and the first eminent Texas sculptor, who died in 1907. Her statues of Stephen F. Austin and Sam Houston, sculpted in the 1890s, stand in the state Capitol.

Umlauf, 79, retired as professor emeritus from the University of Texas in 1981, after 40 years of teaching art.

His works are found in numerous public and private collections throughout the United States and Europe, including the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York and the Smithsonian Institution in Washington.

His works also include the "Spirit of Flight" at Love Field in Dallas; "Hope of Humanity" and "Roughneck" at the Museum of Natural Science and the "Pieta" in front of the museum of Fine Arts in Houston; and in San Antonio, a bronze fountain sculpture of "Seagulls" at the Witte Museum.

His work also is featured on the UT campus.

"We get people from all different countries that come through Austin. They're just amazed to find this man's work, and the caliber of work. If they don't know the artist already, they're amazed to see that this is indeed an international artist and that his work is important," Mrs. Boyd said.

Umlauf and his wife, Angeline, have donated their home to the city of Austin as a life estate. More than 250 sculptures crowd the 2½-acre site near Zilker Park and Barton Creek.

The museum and garden, scheduled to open June 11, is owned by the Austin Community Foundation. It was built and administered with privately raised funds and will be staffed by volunteers, said Roberta Crenshaw, sculpture garden chairwoman.

Mrs. Crenshaw has directed the building of the museum and is establishing the garden on an adjoining five acres.

The city obtained the land, valued at more than $2 million, in a swap with the state, she said. The museum building and landscaping have cost at least an additional $2 million, she said.

The Meadows Foundation in Dallas gave the original $300,000 grant, which Mrs. Crenshaw had to match through fundraising.

Mrs. Crenshaw said she undertook the project to protect Umlauf's sculpture from being sold off in bits and pieces.

"I just figured that Austin had a bird nest on the ground, so to speak," she said.

Mrs. Crenshaw said Umlauf's extensive body of work is fascinating in its diversity.

She likened an Umlauf pieta, a sculpture of Christ after he was taken down from the cross, to the best of Michelangelo's work.

"On the other hand, he'll do a great-looking pair of lovers that would be almost so sensuous that you might have to hide your face," Mrs. Crenshaw said.

About 60 of the more perishable pieces, made of wood, terra-cotta, marble and onyx, will be displayed inside the museum, while about 50 others will be outside in the garden. The collection will be rotated, Mrs. Crenshaw said.

Outside the native stone museum is a covered tiled patio with ceiling fans and a connected kitchen, which businesses and individuals have inquired about using for receptions, Mrs. Crenshaw said.

The garden will feature a recirculating waterfall and stream, with two bridges and islands.

Also outside is an arbor, which planners envision as a perfect spot for weddings. Across from it is an island on which will sit "The Lovers," a man and woman in a kneeling embrace.

Other works include Lotus, a slyly smiling hippopotamus; Icarus, an upended bronze with legs, arms and wings in the air as it falls toward the earth; a rendering of Jesus riding a donkey into Jerusalem; and Poetess, a reclining woman in a flowing gown with head tilted skyward.

Mrs. Crenshaw said she hoped the garden not only would be "a restful, calm place" for Austin residents, but that it also could help change the image usual Texas image.

"You know, we usually get the image that we're shooting firearms down here and riding horses and rolling around in cactus. They don't realize that we have interest in art and beauty," she said.

Snoring can be minor irritant or serious symptom

By Dr. Kenneth Schneider
Associated Press

Do you sound like you're sawing wood when you sleep? Do you keep others awake? In other words, are you a snorer?

The mechanics of snoring are simple; it occurs when air passing through the mouth and nose encounters some obstruction, causing soft tissue at the back of the roof of the mouth to vibrate.

Millions of Americans suffer from chronic loud snoring. This is primarily a social problem, causing possible stress in relationships, and disrupting sleep and dream patterns.

There are many things that cause snoring, including: obesity, body position (lying on the back), use of sedatives, antihistamines and other medication, alcohol intake, advanced age, a deviated septum (the partition dividing the nose), nasal congestion, and enlarged tonsils and adenoids.

Most everyone has an occasional and temporary breathing obstruction during sleep. But if this happens more than 15 times during the night, there is reason to suspect a condition known as "sleep apnea" which can have serious consequences.

People suffering from sleep apnea may have obstructed airways for even up to several minutes. Because levels of oxygen in the blood are reduced, this can produce high blood pressure, heart enlargement, irregular heart rhythms, and other cardiac problems. Excessive daytime sleeping is another apparent symptom. There are treatments available for severe snoring. For example, you can elevate the head of the bed 4 to 6 inches, as well as avoiding alcohol, sedatives, and antihistamines in the evening.

To avoid sleeping on your back, sew a pocket into the back of your pajama top and put a tennis ball in the pocket.

Nasal stuffiness can be treated with the use of decongestants. While the decongestant tablets can be taken daily, decongestant nasal sprays should never be used more than 3 or 4 nights per week.

Anti-inflammatory nasal sprays, available by prescription, are helpful for severe swelling and inflammation in the nose that are causing an obstruction.

The definitive treatment for severe snoring or sleep apnea may be surgical removal of part of the soft tissues at the back of the throat.

Timer can save water, reduce energy cost, end long showers

N.Y. Times News Service

A company in San Diego has created a timer for the shower that can help people save water and reduce energy costs.

The sand timer rotates on a plastic disk and has a suction cup on the back that sticks to walls or tiles. The sand runs down after three minutes.

People who are unable or unwilling to shower that fast can rotate the timer again.

A six-minute shower is sufficient for most people and is still likely to save energy and water because most people tend to shower for 10 minutes.

Peter Altman, who designed the timer, said that every morning "more than 150 million people in America stand half asleep in the shower.

"If we cut our shower time in half, we can do something for the environment," he said.

The figures add up. The average 10-minute shower consumes 80 gallons of water, Altman said.

By reducing shower time, people can save about 20,000 gallons of water per person each year.

To order the timer send a check or money order for $4.95 plus $1 for postage and handling to Coast Molding Inc., 7965 Dunbrook Road, Suite A, San Diego, Calif. 92126.

DEAR ABBY

Widower looking for company finds women in hot pursuit

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Your letters from women who are "faking it" to satisfy their husbands are hilarious! But there is definitely another side to the story.

Van Buren

For 48 years I was married to a wonderful woman. Every sexual encounter was an expression of love — not lust. She initiated the activity as often as I did. Then she suffered a paralyzing stroke, so for seven years I bathed her daily and cuddled her as I laid beside her as her beautiful body withered away. Our love did not require the sexual act; holding her in my arms was all I needed. She has been gone for two years, and no one could ever take her place.

I am a shriveled 76-year-old man and certainly nothing to look at. Last year I joined a senior citizens group, and you would think I am Clark Gable! Widows swarmed like flies to garbage! The first woman I danced with outweighed me by 100 pounds and wanted to "dirty dance" with me. The first night I had three invitations to spend the night. I never went to another meeting, but I've gone on overnight trips with the group. Abby, women knocked on my bedroom door! If you could see me you would know how hard up they must be.

I would like to find a woman for companionship, and possibly later on sex might enter the picture. But every woman I've met — even in church — makes advances. If these old gals have been faking it with their husbands, why do they become sex maniacs as soon as their husbands are gone? — NO BARGAIN IN MINNESOTA

DEAR NO BARGAIN: Please don't label all women who long for intimacy "sex maniacs"; maybe all they want is a warm body to cuddle with. You are apparently more attractive than you think you are. Rejoice and count your blessings. Every 76-year-old widower should have your problems.

DEAR ABBY: I recently attended my first major league baseball game. The batter lost control of the bat and it flew into the crowd, striking a young girl. They carried her off and the game continued. We never heard any more about it. Was the child hurt? Is she alive? Who knows? Does anybody care? The game went on.

There wasn't one word about it in the newspaper, but there was an article about a "minor hand injury" suffered by one of the players. Now, that's what I call bizarre! — "C" IN K.C.

DEAR "C": You call it "bizarre" — I call it a matter of priorities. Whose? The reporter who covered the baseball game.

DEAR ABBY: We had to laugh when we read the letter from the "Schnorrs of Arizona," who objected to the use of their name as "schnorrers" — moochers, freeloaders, beggars. Our name is "Schmuck" — how do they think we feel? — THE SCHMUCKS OF ORMAND BEACH, FLA.

Everybody has a problem. What's yours? Get it off your chest by writing to: Dear Abby, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069. For a personal reply, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

AT WIT'S END

Naming cars makes them relatives

By Erma Bombeck

Did you ever notice the need Americans have to name things? People spend more time trying to figure out names for their boats than they do buying them. The first thing a couple do when they get a summer cabin is to rip off a piece of bark, get out the wood-burning set and etch in it, "Margaret and Dan's Weak-End Retreat," and nail it into a tree at the end of the drive.

Bombeck

We can't just have a hurricane. It has to be called Gloria or Bob, as though they're going to get mail and we have to know which one to send it to. I've heard of farmers who assign names to their tractors and other farm machinery. And every kid with a doting grandmother has a personalized license plate nailed to his bedroom door, identifying it as his room.

But mostly, people name their cars. They call them Betsy, Tin Lizzie or George. Others who are not so enamored refer to them as Lemon, The Junker and Gas Guzzler. And when they really are out of love with them, they become beasts, bombs or tanks.

It's a big mistake to name your car. A name gives it a human quality and binds it to you in some kind of unnatural union. It becomes arrogant and turns independent. A car senses this familiarity and realizes quickly it has found a home for life. "Get rid of old Wild Bill? Why I'd just as soon put Mother adrift on an ice floe."

When a car has longevity, people tend to remember only the good times. They recall the long trips they made together on vacations, the days it carried a "Get Married" sign on its trunk and the mornings it transported your babies home from the hospital. Owners never remember the times it died on you in rush hour traffic or refused to start until it was driven into a warm garage at night.

It's stupid to treat a car like a member of the family. From then on, it expects you to buy it a cute license plate. It wants bumper stickers that back a winning candidate. It won't leave a car wash until it has been spritzed. In time, it turns ugly when it doesn't get carpet on the dashboard.

My car and I have been together now for eight years. The guy at the filling station said, "When are you getting rid of this old dog?"

I winced. If Cupcake heard that tasteless remark, she would make me pay for it in premium gas.

Video helps children succeed at school

By Steven Long
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — When 10,000 elementary-school principals nationwide were surveyed about education, fewer than one in four said they believed that most students are prepared at home for success in school.

Parents can do better than that, they agreed.

A new video and accompanying booklet is an outgrowth of that study.

"The Little Things Make a Big Difference" is a joint project of the National Association of Elementary School Principals and World Book Educational Products.

The video is available for free rental in 1,700 Blockbuster Video stores nationwide. It can be found in the stores' community-service section.

The video and booklet focus on:

- Reinforcing self-esteem.
- Developing good work habits.
- Supporting academics.
- Participating in stimulating activities.
- Emphasizing language development.
- Maintaining high, but realistic, academic expectations.

The video is 16 minutes long. It speaks directly to parents, detailing how these areas influence children's learning. It offers specific tips and ideas.

Children featured on the tape also tell how their parents fare.

The tape and booklet may also be bought for $19.95 from the National Association of Elementary School Principals.

The booklets alone are available for 25 cents each with a minimum order of 25 copies. A 25-percent discount applies to tape or booklet purchases for association and PTA members.

For an order form, write: The National Association of Elementary School Principals, Educational Products, 1615 Duke St., Alexandria, Va. 22314.

Tattoos termed 'works of art'

By Jim Strader

PITTSBURGH (AP) — David "Ace" Daniels regards his tattoo-covered body the way a curator considers his gallery.

"My tattoos are an art collection," he said.

Daniels invited tattoo artists and enthusiasts to Pittsburgh for last weekend's Tattoo Expo, billed as "North America's Biggest Tattoo Party." About 3,000 attended the convention, now in its third year.

Daniels said tattoos are no longer just inky reminders of past romances and the preserve of "drunken sailors and fallen women." They have become a form of art, worn by everyone from hippies to yuppies.

"We feel like we're living galleries, living canvasses," said Daniels, 50, who runs a tattoo studio in Richmond, Va.

The canvas that is Ace Daniels was first etched with a needle at age 13 and is quickly filling up. Tattoos run from his wrists to his shoulders, cover his back and chest and drop down both legs. Figures peek from the collar of his shirt. A small skull sits by the corner of his left eye.

Daniels lifted his shirt to display his latest addition, a full-size skull resting over his ribs and ogling the Hollywood starlet adorning his belly. As if his skin were not proof enough, Daniels said tattoos are addictive.

"We have a saying in the trade: 'Nobody can have just three,'" he said.

Many who mingled at the Pittsburgh Hilton and Towers were adorned similarly. Along with the tattoos, some wore leather, some lace, some torn T-shirts. Most wore black.

Although businessmen passing through the lobby offered curious glances, convention publicist Kym Pulfrey said tattooing is gaining wider acceptance.

"People are starting to appreciate it as art," she said.

Bob Montagna, a tattooist from Malaga, N.J., said his craft is one of the world's oldest art forms. It dates to the day one caveman poked another with a charred stick and left a mark, he said, and has been part of most of the world's cultures ever since.

"It's ancient. It's ancient as time," Daniels agreed.

The practice has evolved from simple "hearts and roses and daggers and skulls" to "photo-quality portraits," Daniels said. He said many tattooists are trained in classical and fine arts.

"If you don't have a degree in art, it's pretty hard to get anywhere in this business," he said.

"The old stereotype of the tattoo artist on skid row being one step above the drunk he was tattooing is gone," said Montagna.

Montagna said he sees all kinds of people in his shop, but most come for the same reason: to make a statement.

"It's the ultimate example of self-expression," he said.

Cosmetic surgery helps preserve ethnic identities

By Elisabeth Rosenthal
N.Y. Times News Service

As more members of minority groups are seeking cosmetic surgery, doctors are making new efforts to preserve ethnic identity while enhancing beauty.

Since esthetic surgery has historically been tailored to Caucasian faces, surgeons have a two-pronged challenge: first, defining beautiful features for African-, Hispanic- or Asian-Americans and, second, determining how to modify standard operations to achieve these goals.

"Beauty is in the eye of the beholder, and when the beholder or the beholdee is an individual of color, what is considered attractive may be different than in a Caucasian," said Dr. W. Earle Matory Jr., director of cosmetic surgery at the University of Massachusetts Medical Center in Worcester.

"Would Whitney Houston be as striking with Madonna's nose? Would Connie Chung be as attractive with Farrah Fawcett's cheekbones?"

Matory, who is black, has spent much of the last decade doing research on better definitions of beauty in non-Caucasians. He describes "preserving ethnicity" as a special interest and estimates that about 25 percent to 30 percent of his patients are from minority groups, up from 5 percent when he started in 1984.

ACCORDING TO the American Society of Plastic and Reconstructive Surgeons, just over 20 percent of esthetic surgery patients were black, Asian or Hispanic in 1990, the first year statistics were compiled.

"We're seeing a lot more ethnic patients coming into our office," said Dr. Gustavo Colon, a New Orleans plastic surgeon, who says that about 20 percent of his patients are Hispanic. "They don't want to change their ethnicity, they just want something improved."

Dr. In Chul Song, chief of plastic surgery at the State University of New York Health Science Center in Brooklyn, agrees.

Thirty years ago, a time of war brides, many Asian-Americans wanted to be "westernized," he said. "Recently that has completely changed and now people are looking for a more beautiful Asian look," he said. About 30 percent of his patients are now Asian-American.

Experts ascribe the growing interest in esthetic surgery among minority patients to a newfound prosperity as well as to widespread beliefs that celebrities like Michael Jackson have sought surgical changes; taboos against such surgery fell more slowly among non-Caucasians but are now crumbling.

But the new demand has posed a problem for surgeons whose training was "directed toward Caucasian standards of beauty," Matory said.

"For a number of years, surgeons did the same operations for all groups, and that doesn't work since they have different anatomical structures and they heal differently," said Dr. Ronald E. Iverson, chairman of public information for the American Society of Plastic and Reconstructive Surgeons.

ONLY IN THE last five years has it become common to discuss ethnicity in plastic surgery training programs, he said.

When first dealing with minority patients, "we were somewhat floundering," Matory said. "But now through our research we've defined non-Caucasian esthetic goals."

In an attempt to quantify these goals for African-Americans, Matory has analyzed the facial features of 120 African-American and Caucasian models, both men and women, for elements might cause them to be considered attractive.

He says, for example, that while an oval-shaped face is considered ideal in Europeans, the cheek and jaw bone are ideally more prominent among some other groups, creating a rounder, fuller look.

The ideal nose is subject to similar ethnic variation, he said. A wider and longer nose fits better on blacks, Matory said, while a pointed upturned nose might be considered more attractive in a Caucasian.

Similarly, "the concept of beauty among orientals is somewhat different than among Europeans," Song said, emphasizing a "softer, rounder" look rather than a "sculpted appearence."

"It is crucial that plastic surgeons are aware of the ideals of beauty in your particular ethnic group," said Matory, so that an altered feature is harmonious with the rest of the face.

Matory's wife, Yvonne, is an esthetician, a makeup expert who uses cosmetics to help his patients understand how they might benefit from surgery or avoid it with makeup.

SURGEONS SAY that have now incorporated diverse ethnic templates into their practices and are better able to recognize the peculiar esthetic problems of different ethnic groups.

Hispanic women tend to have flatter noses and come in looking for a more prominent tip as well as better contour and refinement, said Dr. Colon.

Song said that in contrast to Caucasian patients, who tend to complain of long noses, Asians frequently complain about a wide, flat nose or a bulbous tip.

Attempts to preserve ethnicity have been aided by improved surgical techniques and a better understanding of anatomical difference among races.

"Fifteen years ago a rhinoplasty was a rhinoplasty," Iverson said, referring to the operation commonly known as a nose job. "Now the procedure has become more sophisticated and can be better tailored to individuals' goals."

Song said that blacks and Asians generally lack a bony structure found in Caucasians, giving their noses a different contour and requiring different kinds of surgery.

A decade ago, he said, surgeons treating the rare Asian patient would merely build up the back of the nose to mimic a Caucasian feature, oftent ending up with a nose that looked totally out of place.

"I see Asians who have had implants making their noses large so it's completely out of balance with their face," Song said.

IF A SURGEON uses Western textbook measurements to guide his scalpel, the result can also be poor since such books frequently specify dimensions for European faces.

For example, the upper eyelid crease falls about 11 millimeters above the eyelid in Caucasians, but in Asians is is lower, at about 7 millimeters.

"It would be easy for a surgeon to remove too much fat and create an eyelid crease that looked unnatural," Song said.

About 50 percent of Asians lack an upper eyelid crease, giving their eyes a sleepy look, Song said. The creation of this fold is the most commonly requested cosmetic operation among Asian-Americans, but if properly performed it should not result in Caucasian-looking eyes, he said.

Experts say the different skin qualities of different ethnic groups create both advantages and problems.

Blacks and Asians generally have more supple skin than Caucasians, making liposuction more successful in these groups, since the skin readily conforms to the new contours underneath.

Because of this elasticity, blacks and Asians often wrinkle less and show fewer signs of aging, Matory said.

But these groups tend to suffer more from scarring, making the facial surgery that is required somewhat more delicate.

Matory said incisions in the central portion of the face very rarely result in permanent marks, but that cuts toward the periphery are far more likely to produce keloids, or raised, dark scars.

"I advise patients to select a surgeon who has experience in operating on people of color, who will use hidden incisions or place them where keloids don't form."

Large people focus on self-esteem

By Leslie Sowers
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Fed up with dieting? Had it with fat jokes? Ready to get a life even if you will never wear a size 8 bikini?

It may be time for a new attitude.

A growing number of heavy people, instead of trying to lose weight to be happy, are finding support for liking themselves the way they are. They are rejecting the "thin-is-in" mentality, battling discrimination and embracing new research that indicates fat may not be as hazardous to health as commonly believed.

Donna Pittman, a therapist in the Houston area, leads a support group for large people. She refuses to use the words "overweight" or "fat" to describe her clients.

"Fat is very descriptive, but it also has many negative and judgmental connotations," Pittman said. "So I settled on 'large.'" In her groups and seminars, Pittman emphasizes the idea of being both heavy and healthy.

She presents research that questions the traditional assumption that ideal weight should be based on height.

NEWER STUDIES indicate that one's weight may be genetically determined and that dieting can actually lead to weight gain. Rather than encouraging people to focus on losing weight, Pittman emphasizes self-acceptance and learning to live a healthy lifestyle.

She asks people to eat lower-fat, lower-sugar foods and to exercise, even if it is no more than walking three times a week for 40 minutes. She considers exercise so important that she provides a special exercise class.

"Movement is very effective in helping people gain a realistic body image," Pittman said. "This is a safe place for people to get healthy and rediscover that moving is fun. Many people allow ridicule and prejudice to keep them from exercising in public."

Pittman said she also offers a support group in which people have an opportunity to vent their feelings about how they have been treated over the years, especially if they have grown up large in this society.

"It can be a devastating experience," Pittman said.

After meeting in a support group once a month, several of her clients have begun organizing their own events, such as mall walks and swims, Pittman said.

While many heavy people are compulsive overeaters, she said, others are not, and many compulsive eaters are not overweight.

She finds that people often realize they are eating as a defense, and she tries to help them discover what they are defending against.

SHE SAID Overeaters Anonymous can help people re-establish a healthy relationship with food after years of yo-yo dieting. But she also offers an alternative method to restore a sense of balance about food choices.

Its basis is the idea that you should eat what you want when you are hungry.

"When you don't deprive yourself, you don't set yourself up to binge, and you get in touch with internal controls," Pittman said.

This method eventually leads to neutrality around binge foods, according to Pittman.

Toby Solomon, a psychotherapist who specializes in eating disorders, said she works to help people accept themselves the way they are, even if they are dangerously obese. She believes that is the only way to give up compulsive eating. She, too, said not all heavy people are compulsive overeaters. But most of those who come to her are fed up with binging and dieting.

Also fighting against the "thin-is-in" mind-set is a group called the National Association to Advance Fat Acceptance. It has 55 chapters throughout the country.

NAAFA has doubled the number of chapters in the last three years, said Sally Smith, executive director of the group.

Smith said the association's goal is to end size discrimination in all forms. Members are encouraged not to put their lives on hold while waiting to lose weight but to live full lives, whatever size they are.

IN ADDITION to supporting one another in this goal, members lobby to end discrimination and harassment of overweight people in the work place.

Smith said employers claim that fat people raise the cost of their health insurance. She said the organization believes this is a rationalization for discrimination.

Smith has noticed other local groups springing up around the country that address the issue of self-esteem. Other positive backlash trends include the response of the fashion industry, which has quintupled the clothing available in large sizes. She also said there is a modest trend toward aerobics and aquasize classes for large people.

Smith said, however, that there is one disturbing counter-trend.

"The diet industry is still a $33 billion-a-year business," Smith said. "And they are redoubling their efforts to sell us on body dissatisfaction."

For many, nursing license is ticket for travel

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Peggy Pinkman, registered nurse and travel lover, was touring Europe when she decided to combine work with wanderlust.

The idea, she said, came from a friend who had worked in Saudi Arabia and as a "traveler," a contract nurse taking various assignments in the United States through a private agency.

"When I returned from Europe, full of seeing new places, I thought it's time for me to see a little more of the states."

So she signed on with Kimberly Nurse Travelers of Overland Park, Kan., and was assigned to the University of Kentucky Hospital, where she works with post-surgery heart patients.

After Lexington? Maybe Alaska, maybe the West Coast.

Pinkman, 31, of Brielle, N.J., is typical of nurses who have found their professional licenses can be tickets. They also find they have bargaining power. Their contracts, usually for 13 weeks with chances to extend, can be tailored to a degree. And they can pretty well pick their spots.

For example, Gonnie Smith, a registered nurse and veteran traveler, chooses to work exclusively in university hospitals. She had assignments in New Orleans, Los Angeles, San Francisco and her native Houston before coming to Kentucky last November.

Teaching hospitals are more innovative and nurses have a greater voice, Smith said. "I just don't work private hospitals anymore."

Travelers are in demand because nurses in general are in record demand. "The more complicated procedures, the more high-tech things being done require a more intensive level of nursing," said Barbara Dermody, executive director of the Kentucky Nurses Association in Louisville. "Those patients require more nurses to take care of them."

Many travelers want to escape the grind of hospital staff work, said Gemma Ziegler, president of Nurses Professional Organization, a Kentucky nurses' union.

HORSES: Tiny equines love a little horseplay

(From 1G)

As described by the American Miniature Horse Association (AMHA), the American Miniature is a "height" breed; the horses must measure no more than 34 inches in height at maturity. This measurement is the vertical distance from the last hairs at the base of the mane to the ground.

The whole idea behind breeding Miniature horses is to produce smaller animals that are still of good conformation. They are basically tiny Quarter horses, Arabs, Thoroughbreds and Draft horses. Because these tiny equines were bred down from all types of horses, they reproduce in all colors, including bay, sorrel, white, palomino, gray, pinto, black, appaloosa and buckskin.

By their nature, Miniatures are gentle, affectionate, easily trained and ideal companions. Because of their size, they are easily handled.

"There are some definite advantages to working with the Miniatures," Blair said. "When they weigh around 150 pounds, I outweigh most of them. They are stout and durable, but you can usually out muscle them which you can't do with a regular-size horse. If a regular horse doesn't want to go in a trailer, you have to work with it until you can get it to go in the trailer. If a Miniature doesn't want to go in a trailer, you can pick it up and put it in it. You just don't have that advantage with the large horses."

He also said Miniatures can be shipped by commercial air, making travel arrangements for shows much easier on the owner and the horse.

Blair currently has one Miniature horse in Midland that he keeps here for his 2½-year-old daughter, Bailey. The Miniature's name is Thornbird, but he is called Thorney. He is a 3-year-old, 33-inch tall gelding.

MRS. NEWTON'S SMALL herd ranges from 28-inches to 33¾-inches in height.

She used to breed Thoroughbreds, but fell in love with the Miniatures and said she just couldn't keep up with both.

"You can tell we had to do some modifications to the stalls. I got my first two when they were 8 months old. We brought them home one night and the next morning at 8 o'clock someone was ringing the doorbell. They wanted to know if I knew anybody who had two little horses because they had gotten out and were over on the east/west runway," Mrs. Newton said. "We had to run over there and get them before a plane did."

Her first two were Sugar and Too Tall.

Sugar is an 8-year-old mare who stands 33¼-inches tall. Too Tall, who really isn't too tall to be a Miniature, also is 8 years old and is only 31½-inches tall.

"The people name her Too Tall because when she was born, her mother was so small that she was too tall to nurse," Mrs. Newton said.

Too Tall has since had two foals. Her youngest is Little Bit of Honey, a 2-year-old paint (like her mother) who stands 28-inches tall. Her oldest is Rocky, also a paint, who is 4 years old and stands 32½-inches tall.

"Rocky was shown when he was just 3 weeks old in a mother and foal competition," Mrs. Newton said.

She also owns Rocky's father, Chico, who is a 30½-inch tall, 10-year-old Arabian.

SWEET N' LOW and Mr. Teak round out her Miniature family. Sweet N' Low, who is usually called Nut Nut because of her silly, fun-loving personality, is 2½ years old and 33¾-inches tall. "She's my really affectionate one," Mrs. Newton said. "She was only 18-inches tall when she was born and she loved to get up in our laps. I think she still would if she could."

Mr. Teak was bought from a Miniature farm in Florida. He is 34-inches tall and 5 years old.

Blair and Mrs. Newton both are firm believers that miniature horses are good natured.

"These are not like Shetland ponies. They are not ponies at all, they are small horses, and they usually don't have any bad habits," Mrs. Newton said. "They aren't biters or kickers generally. They just have a real sweet nature. They make great pets."

"They just can't be house trained," Blair said, jokingly.

A down side to having a Miniature horse as a pet is that they must be kept outside the city limits. Horses, even Miniatures, are classified as livestock which is not allowed to be kept within the confines of the city limits.

Although these little critters are cute to look at and cuddly to hold, they can be much more than just pets.

Many people find Miniatures serve as the perfect substitute for the 1,000 pounds-plus of standard horses, especially for those who are inexperienced with horses, for the elderly and for children. Some parents feel more confident allowing their children to play with and ride the Miniatures until the children are old enough and experienced enough to handle larger horses. In this capacity, the Miniatures serve as trainers for children.

"They are great with kids," Blair said, "They love to ride them and they aren't as afraid of learning to handle them," adding that generally a child will outgrow the horse before the weight of the child will be too much for the horse to carry.

THESE MINIATURE horses also have proven their worth in therapeutic programs for disabled children and adults, and for the aged, according to the AMHA.

They are intelligent and learn quickly, and can be driven in hitches, used in parades and make great drawing cards for grand openings, shopping centers, businesses and fairs, such as the numerous miniature animals that were shown at the recent Permian Basin Fair in Odessa.

They also are raised as show horses and compete in much the same types of competition as their larger counterparts.

According to the AHMA, there are several classes that Miniature horses can be shown in, such as performance, novice, amateur, youth, grand and reserve, and halter, each with several divisions, "to compare apples to apples," Blair said. There also are driving and jumping divisions. The Miniatures are judged and receive honors, based on established standards, as do the larger horses.

The also have a costume class in which the individual showing the horse and the horse wear themed costumes. "You see some of the most creative ideas in this class," Blair said, citing an example of one show where a horse was costumed as a dragon.

Miniature horses are valued in much the same manner as their larger counterparts, for their coloring, disposition and conformation, but most especially for their rarity and their size. The AMHA says that age (foal or mature), sex (mare, stallion or gelding), show record and the extent of its recorded background (bloodline) also are dictating factors in the cost of Miniatures.

IN SIZE, THE smaller the Miniature is, the more valuable it is.

According to Majestic Farms information, Miniature horses range in price from $500 to $10,000 or more, depending on the size, age, conformation and blood lines. For example, a proven adult brood mare 34 inches tall would range from $2,000 to $3,500. However, one which was 24-30 inches tall would range upwards of $10,000.

Blair said a mare 30-inches tall could cost in the neighborhood of $5,000 to $20,000, while a 26-inch to 28-inch mare could cost as much as $30,000 to $50,000.

"A proven stallion from a good blood line could run $100,000 and up," Blair said. "However, some of the farms will sell package deals, so a person who wanted to get into the business (of breeding Miniature horses) could get started for $5,000 to $15,000 for a package of two mares and a stallion."

While the initial cost of buying Miniatures is pretty steep and can be substantially higher than the cost of standard horses, care and feeding requirements of Miniatures are considerably less.

"You treat them basically just like you treat a regular horse, just on a smaller scale," Blair said. "They eat hay and horse feed, just not as much of it. ...They are very easy to over feed. They can get very fat."

The AMHA recommends one acre of grazing for two Miniatures, although some farms believe that slightly less space is adequate. A bale of hay will usually last one mini for a month and approximately one pound of good grade commercial food per 100 pounds of body weight is normally adequate as a daily ration for a stalled horse. However, the digestive systems of Miniature horses are more delicate. Therefore, the grain should be ground and the hay should be fine for these small digestive systems.

THE HORSES' SIZE does not make them susceptible to any special diseases. Like their standard-sized relations, Miniature horses need their shots and a good deworming program, in addition to a good grooming program.

"The more they are groomed, the more manageable they will become because they get accustomed to being handled," Blair said. "In fact, some of them will get so attached to you that they will follow you around.

"The only difference in the care of Miniatures from regular horses (except for everything being done on a much smaller scale) is that you don't generally shoe Miniatures," he said. "Their hoofs need occasional trimming, but no shoeing is required."

While their hoofs are identical with regular horses, they are required to sustain only a fraction of the weight, therefore, minis are not shod.

Miniature horses have no special needs or problems created by their size. Because they are so small, people tend to overprotect them, but they are just as hardy as any other equine with regard to weather conditions, according to the AMHA.

"They grow a hardy coat — long and shaggy — for the winter that protects them," Blair said.

These little horses prefer to be outside and they adapt well to all environments. A small shelter is needed to protect mini-horses from cold rains, snow and wind, but they are sturdy animals and can weather cold and hot climates.

THE GESTATION PERIOD for a Mini is just as long as its full-sized kin; 11 months or 330 days — plus or minus 15 days. Foaling does not seem to be any more difficult for a Miniature mare than it is a large mare.

Foals usually range from 16 to 18 inches in height at birth, but may be as small as 14 inches or as tall as 21 inches. They usually weigh between 16 to 20 pounds.

Miniatures usually have attained 90 percent of their growth by the time they reach 1 year old, and, normally, reach mature height by the age of 3.

With proper care, the life span of a Miniature horse can be for 20 to 40 years, with the average falling at 25-35 years.

In order to be a registrable horse, a Miniature must be 34 inches or less measured from the withers to the ground. As defined by the AMHA, any horse that exceeds 34 inches in height is not a Miniature horse and is not eligible for registration. The AMHA will issue temporary papers for Miniatures whose parents are both registered with AMHA. If after 5 years of age the horse is 34 inches or under, an application may be made for permanent registration.

Anyone purchasing a Miniature horse for simply a pet may be able to overlook small faults that are not detrimental to the health of the horse. This will enable the purchaser to acquire the Miniature for less expense. However, for those who purchase with the intent to show, much more care must be taken to insure purchasing a quality horse.

Probably the best source for information about Miniatures is "The Miniature Horse World," the official publication of The American Miniature Horse Association. It is published six times a year.

Information also can be obtained from the American Miniature Horse Association Inc., 2908 S.E. Loop 280, Fort Worth, Texas, 76140, (817) 293-0041.

AMHA maintains permanent registry of Miniatures

By Elizabeth Edwin
Lifestyle Editor

Although Miniature horses are still a rarity in most circles, their popularity has increased quite a bit over the past 10 years. This increase — in part at least — is due to the work of The American Miniature Horse Association (AMHA) Inc.

It was incorporated in July 1978 to provide an organization to promote the breed and to maintain a permanent registry devoted wholly to the interests of the Miniature Horse.

"The Shetland Pony Club had a Miniature horse division, but they just didn't offer very much. When a group got together and ask the club to offer more for the Miniature horse owners, they didn't get a very good response," said Matthew Blair, a Miniature horse owner whose father, Leon B. Blair, Ph.D., was one of the founding members of the AMHA.

"My father got into the horse business in 1959," Blair said. In 1970, his father formed a partnership with a friend to keep Miniature horses. "Our first was Domino, a little black and white paint."

At that time, they realized what a big business these little critters could be, and became very involved in breeding and selling Miniatures. After receiving little response from the Shetland Pony Club in 1978, Leon Blair and two others got together and formed the AMHA, which has since become the largest Miniature registry in the world. It is a member owned and governed organization specifically for Miniature horses.

Although many purchases and breedings of Miniatures have been regularly documented in America since the early 1800s, the AMHA says that accurate accounts and pedigrees were not maintained by most breeders until the 1940s. Now, with the AMHA's recently closed registry, breeders will be required to maintain accurate pedigrees on all of their stock, and foals may not be registered unless both of the parents are also registered with the AMHA.

Blair said there are approximately 40,000 registered Miniatures with the AMHA and that it is the only Miniature registry with a size restriction. A foal must grow no taller than 34 inches at the withers by age 5 in order to be registered.

Temporary registration is offered to foals until they turn 5 years old and are measured at 34 inches or less in height, as long as both parents are registered with the AMHA.

"Breeding is a select process of breeding smaller horses to smaller horses," Blair said. "The smallest one we've had was 26¼ inches tall — Black Beauty."

Blair's father is still active in the AMHA and the Miniature horse business, serving as a member of the initial board of directors and an incorporator for the organization, and owner of Sligo Miniature Farm in Fort Worth.

Theories abound about origin of Miniature horses

By Elizabeth Edwin
Lifestyle Editor

While relatively unknown until 20 or 30 years ago, there is evidence that Miniature horses have been around for a very, very long time.

An American Miniature horse is a unique breed of horse selectively bred to be small. In order for the horses to be registered with the American Miniature Horse Association (AMHA), the horse must be no more than 34 inches tall and be of registered parents. It is a well-proportioned horse, possessing the proper conformation characteristics which are common to the standard horse.

There are many theories about the history of the Miniature horse.

According to information from the AMHA, the American Miniature horse was extracted from many sources in the creation of the breed. The organization says it undeniably utilized the blood of the English and Dutch mine horses that were brought to this country in the 19th century and were used in some Appalachian coal mines as late as 1950. It also is said that the minis drew upon the blood of the Shetland pony, several of which appear in the pedigrees of some Miniature horses today.

The ancestors of today's "normal-size" horses were miniatures, as small as today's, according to information from Majestic Farms Miniature Horses in Palm City, Fla. Horses were "bred up" by man over the years to their present size, to suit man's purpose.

Present-day Miniature horses are a product of special effort in recent years to breed some strains down in size over many generations to create nearly perfect miniature replicas of their larger counterparts.

Miniatures were found in the Far East as early as 3000 B.C. and were raised in Europe as novelties highly valued by royal families, Majestic's information continued. Some were brought to the United States from Europe in the early 1900s and utilized in mines to haul coal cars. Because of their uniqueness, they have always been popular circus attractions.

According to information from Hobby Horse Farm in Bedford, Va., miniature horses have been around for centuries and were first bred in Europe for members of the royal family. "In the 1940s, some mini-horses were imported into the U.S. from Holland and England, and so this unique breed of equine started."

The perfectly proportioned miniatures of today are the products of over 400 years of selective breeding, according to AMHA information. Purchases and breeding of miniatures have been regularly documented in America since the early 1800s; however, accurate accounts and pedigrees were not maintained by most breeders until the 1940s.

Therefore, there is no definite history of the origin of these tiny equines, but owners and breeders say they make wonderful pets because of their good nature.

Happy campers 'singing in rain'

By Lyn Blackmon

TEXARKANA (AP) — They were putting up tents and gathering firewood when the rain hit. Most of them kept right on working. A few headed for shelter.

Rain did not seem to bother a special group of campers who put up tents and parked campers who at Clear Springs campgrounds at Lake Wright Patman recently.

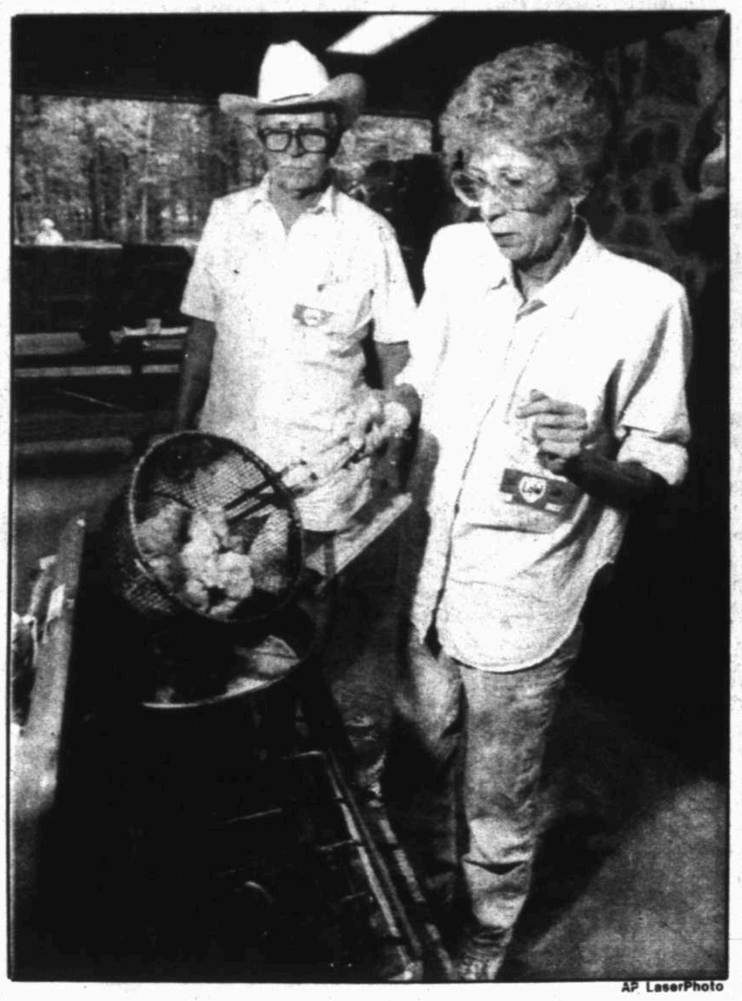
Comfortably dressed and full of laughter, the men and women are members of the Border Chapter of Loners on Wheels, an area chapter of a national organization with groups in every state.

The local chapter has been getting together to camp out one weekend every month since it organized in February, and it has rained every time.

About 12 to 15 members are diehard campers who do not care about the weather.

"The worst was when we camped at De Queen Lake," Kay Banks said. "We were at a table right next to the lake, and I was just getting ready to eat when a big wind came up and blew all the food off the table. I sat there and watched as my dinner went blowing across the lake."

Another woman, Bertha Pool, was on the other side of the table. Her plate of food ended up blowing into her face.



AP LaserPhoto

Kay Banks and Zane Tugman prepare the evening meal of fried catfish at Wright Patman Lake during a recent campout of the Loners on Wheels. The all-adult camp-out group for singles meets at camp sites once a month for a weekend of fun and fellowship.

ONLY SINGLE adults belong to Loners on Wheels. They are either divorced, widowed or single. If members get married, they are out of the club.

The local chapter has voted that this group is for adults only. None of them have young children, and another group, Kampers with Kids, is being organized for single parents and their children for family campouts.

"We have a very strict rule that people do not come in a rig with members of the opposite sex unless they are related. And no hanky-panky is allowed either," Mrs. Banks said. "We are all people who enjoyed camping when we had families. In my case, when my son went off to the University of Arkansas, I thought my camping days were over. If I went with couples, I felt like a fifth wheel, and I was worried about camping by myself. But when we organized, we found this was a great solution. We always have a real good time together."

They fish, hike, always have a campfire even when it is hot, sit around and tell stories.

Or they play cards, dominoes, horseshoes and cook, cook, cook.

Everyone shares in the cooking. The men do just as much as, if not more than, the women, Mrs. Banks said. Ron Lester regularly cooks biscuits and banana pudding over an open fire. Another man makes cobblers.

"One time we caught a 30-pound turtle," Lester said. "It was huge. Tennie Weaver cleaned it, which took her a real long time. Then we cooked it and ate it. The white meat is really good."

MRS. WEAVER, who comes from De Queen, Ark., said cutting off the bottom of the shell was the hardest part of the long cleaning process. She said she probably was the only one who did not enjoy eating that turtle. She did not even taste it.

The Border Chapter has 31 or 32 members — from all over the area as far away as Benton, Ark., and Dallas. And one man from Missouri was driving 600 miles to join in the campout.

This chapter was started by Austin Carter and Norma Volk, who belonged to other chapters but wanted to be part of one closer to home.

Several members belong to other chapters — Jim Ives, a member of the Border Chapter, is president of another club.

"Some people from other chapters come to our campouts," Mrs. Volk said. "They read in the national newsletter where and when the different chapters are camping and go to them. They are mostly retired people who pretty much live in their campers as I do."

In the Border Chapter, about 75 percent are retired, Mrs. Banks said.

The chapter newsletter tells what meals are planned, and the campers bring food to fit the menu. Breakfast foods always are needed, and sometimes a barbecue or fish fry is scheduled. The fishermen in the group so far have caught enough fish to feed the group with some left over each time they have planned a fish fry. But they never camp too far from a store, so they can buy some fish if they ever need it, Mrs. Banks said.

THE NATIONAL dues are $26 a year and the Border Chapter's dues are $10 a year. The cost covers a newsletter for both groups, and the local chapter supplies a 30-cup coffeemaker, coffee, and sugar and cream for the campouts.

The weekend was starting out rainy, but the group was having a good time anyway. They had all the next day to fish for the scheduled fish fry.

The only gripe voiced was over the fishing licenses. Because the group goes to Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana and Oklahoma to camp out, that means a lot of state fishing licenses to get every year.

"But in Arkansas, you get lifetime license when you reach 65," Lester said. "I wish all states did that. I really enjoy this life — I'm too old to work and too young to die. I've made up my own rig on the back of a pickup truck to sleep in. It has a tarp on it, but it is kind of narrow. The other campers call it my coffin."

Fiesta de Amistad marks 36th annual Good Neighbor Celebration

Staff Report

DEL RIO — When Fiesta de Amistad takes place Oct. 12-27, it will mark the 36th annual renewal of the Del Rio Ciudad Acuna Good Neighbor Celebration.

One of the largest annual celebrations on the border, it now serves as an official commemoration of the three presidential summit meetings which have been in the Sister Cities since they began celebrating their friendship.

The first of these meetings was between the late President Dwight D. Eisenhower and Adolfo Lopez Mateos on United Nations Day, Oct. 24, 1960. Since that time, Fiesta de Amistad has traditionally been the weekend nearest Oct. 24th in celebration of this anniversary.

Fiesta Amistad is Spanish for Friendship Festival. Fiesta is the one time each year that finds practically the entire populace of Del Rio and Ciudad Acuna involved in a single undertaking.

This year, Fiesta de Amistad celebrations will begin with the "2nd Ever Chili Pod Cook-off," which will be at Moore Park, on the banks of San Felipe Creek Oct. 12. The cook-off is sanctioned by the Chili Appreciation Society International. Winners will receive points toward the Annual Terlingua International Chili Championship in November. Activities will begin at 8 a.m. with registration until noon. Entertainment and concession booths will be available throughout the day.

Approximately 15 women will vie for the title of Miss Del Rio in the Miss Del Rio Pageant to be Oct. 17 at the Paul Poag Theater. The winner of this pageant will reign over Fiesta.

The celebration will continue with The Battle of the Bands, where the best bands from the local area and from Mexico will compete for cash prizes, scheduled for Oct. 18 in the civic center parking lot.

In conjunction with Fiesta, Laughlin Air Force Base will have its annual open house and air show Oct. 19, the same day that Ciudad Acuna will have its Senorita Amistad Pageant. The Abrazo ceremony will take place Oct. 25 of Amistad Dam and will feature leading dignitaries from Mexico and the United States participating in a gesture of friendship. It is a fine example of the friendship enjoyed throughout the year by both countries.

Highlighting the Fiesta celebration on both sides of the Rio Grande is the grand International Parade, the only annual parade in the world which starts in one country and ends in another, scheduled for Oct. 26. The parade will begin in Del Rio at 10 a.m. and proceed to Mexico.

A traditional arts and crafts fair will be at the Val Verde County Courthouse grounds Oct. 26-27. Regional craftsmen and artists will exhibit their talents. Adding to these festivities will be the numerous booths offering a tempting variety of tasty morsels and refreshments.

This year, adding to the Fiesta events, Bad Company Rodeo will sponsor their "Survivor Tour" Fiesta Finals Rodeo at the Val Verde Fairgrounds Oct. 24-27. Performances will be nightly at 7:30 p.m. The Fiesta Finals will feature top winners from each rodeo on the 1991 Survivor Tour. Each tour city will compete 1 p.m. Oct. 25 in a Committee Team Roping Championship. Oct. 26, teams from each city on the tour will compete in a Cook-off for the Best Rodeo Camp Awards.

These and various other competitions — such as the 10K International Run and Bicycle Race Oct. 20 — will make Fieata fun for everyone. For more information, contact the Del Rio Chamber of Commerce, 1915 Avenue F, Del Rio, Texas, 78840, or call (512) 775-3551; or the Del Rio and Ciudad Acuna Chapters of the International Good Neighbor Council, P.O. Box 1381, Del Rio, 78841.

Travel promises not guaranteed

By Jennifer Merin

NEW YORK (AP) — Before leaving for the airport, you call the airline to check whether your flight is on time.

It is.

By the time you arrive at the departure gate, however, things have changed. Fog has swept over Atlanta, delaying the aircraft that was supposed to arrive in New York to take you to Miami.

For how long?

"We don't know," the gate agent says. "We'll let you know as soon as we do."

Do you bolt across the terminal to another airline? Mosey up to the bar for consolation? Or stand your ground, seeking information or compensation?

Technically, for the price of a ticket, an airline owes you nothing more than getting you from point A to point B — not on time, not via the shortest route, not even on the same airline.

Airlines simply are not responsible for the weather or unforeseen mechanical problems.

For obvious reasons, they are not eager to disclose the number of delayed or cancelled flights. But it happens regularly, leaving passengers in airport limbo. Flights are delayed or cancelled due to weather or mechanical or scheduling problems — or sometimes because the airline wants to combine two flights that are lightly booked.

FIGURES INDICATING frequency of mechanical delays and cancellations must be reported monthly to the Federal Aviation Administration. They average about 5 percent of all scheduled flights, according to the FAA. U.S. airlines have about 18,000 flights scheduled daily, and that means about 900 of those flights daily are either delayed or cancelled for mechanical reasons.

Figures on flights delayed or cancelled for other reasons are harder to come by. Airlines report them to the Department of Transportation on a flight by flight basis and are not readily accessible.

A DOT publication, a leaflet called "Fly Rights," reiterates, quite unequivocally, the airlines' position: "Airlines do not guarantee their schedules."

So what can you do to protect yourself, or make the situation better?

■ Appreciate the fact that the delay may be because the airline is erring on the side of safety.

■ When making travel plans, give yourself time to get where you're going. In other words, don't plan to land 15 minutes before a crucial business meeting or your godchild's wedding.

■ Whenever possible, opt for non-stop or direct flights so you don't have to make connections.

■ Hedge your bets with back-up reservations. You may be able to avoid the downside of the airlines' usually convenient hub system. In this system, airlines route passengers through centrally located airports to connect with planes for outlying destinations. If weather delays flights in one city feeding the hub, the entire schedule of flights can be backed up for hours.

■ IF THE NATION'S weather looks ominous on your day of travel, call your airline and ask where your flight is originating or the previous location of the aircraft to be used for your flight. If it looks as if your flight may be delayed by bad weather in a hub airport, or hub feeder, book space on an airline not affected. That way, you have an alternate plan if your flight is delayed.

■ If you still get stuck, persist with the airline to help you find another flight, to provide you with food if the delay extends through mealtimes, to telephone relatives or business contacts who may be inconvenienced by your delay.

Sometimes, in the interest of good customer relations, airlines will provide extra amenities to passengers — even overnight accommodations — often at the discretion of the agent on duty.

Barring that, try distraction:

■ Find a quiet corner and settle in for a good read, do a slew of catch-up correspondence or other paper work.

■ Try not to indulge in too much food or drink to compensate for your frustration. You'll feel worse when you arrive, especially if you have a long flight at the end of a long wait.

■ Wear comfortable clothes and shoes that will allow you to work off some of your anxiety with a brisk walk around the terminal.

■ Program Wheel of Fortune, Welltris or other engrossing games into your laptop computer, or try portable chess. Ask other passengers to join you for a game. That way, the delay may at least lead to a new friendship.

Get most from frequent-flyer programs

By Jennifer Merin

NEW YORK (AP) — "You are about to depart on an exciting free travel opportunity — one that could take you to Paris, Hong Kong — almost anywhere in the world."

This opener to United Airlines' Mileage Plus Member's Guide is an enticing invitation to join the world of frequent-flyer travel. Despite complaints that airlines limit available seats and restrict dates for use of frequent flyer travel rewards, frequent flyer programs are still the only way to get free travel and other benefits for each paid-for travel mile.

Joanne Masters, owner of TravelMasters agency in Fort Mill, S.C., has no doubt that frequent flyer programs save money for travelers.

"Many clients are quite adept at using the system," she says. "They book the same airline to get more points and ask for hotels and car rentals that add frequent-flyer miles to their account. It's in their interest to keep up with the different programs."

Frequent-flyer programs are free and easy to join. But many passengers wait until the last minute, just before flying, to apply. In many cases, they won't receive credit for flights they're about to take. It's better to request frequent-flyer application forms when you book flights.

BETTER YET, join frequent-flyer programs even if you don't have immediate travel plans. Most airlines keep accounts open for one year with no applicable travel. If the year expires, you can reinstate your membership with a new application. Meanwhile, program newsletters apprise members of special offers. Offers you'd have missed if you hadn't joined the program.

Programs differ significantly. Most airlines won't specify rules until you are a frequent flyer member. Then you receive member's guides, such as that issued by United and quoted above. With these, you can learn to use the frequent flyer system most effectively.

Your goal is to gain as many miles as possible in one program, so you can reap the rewards sooner. Study airline routes to determine which carrier serves destinations you are most likely to visit, or which airline flies frequently through a convenient hub. Then book that airline, even if it requires indirect routing.

Indirect routing can be an advantage. If you change planes, your earned mileage equals the sum of the flight segments, which often exceeds mileage on a non-stop flight. If you don't change planes, you earn miles equivalent to those covered by a non-stop flight.

When two airlines serve routes you intend to travel often, compare programs for best rewards. United and Delta airlines serve many of the same cities. United's Mileage Plus program provides a free round-trip domestic coach ticket for 20,000 frequent-flyer miles. Delta requires 40,000 miles.

On the other hand, on short flights, United credits Mileage Plus members with a minimum of 500 miles, while Delta gives a minimum of 1,000 miles. Both airlines credit actual mileage for flights over 500 and 1,000 miles, respectively.

UNITED'S REDEMPTION policy is liberal. For every 20,000 frequent-flyer miles, United automatically sends you chits to be exchanged for a ticket at any time. Most airlines mail coupons only on written request, so coupon-based travel may be delayed for two or three weeks.

Another consideration is frequent-flyer program partnerships with other airlines, hotels and auto rentals. United's partners include Air France, Alitalia, Aloha, British Airways, Iberia, KLM, Lufthansa, Pan Am, Sabena, SAS, Swissair and UTA, plus Hilton, Hyatt, Inter-Continental, Kempinski, Sheraton and Westin hotels and Dollar and other auto rental companies. Delta's partners include Air Canada, Air New Zealand, JAL, KLM, Lufthansa, Singapore Airlines and Swissair, plus Hilton, Hyatt, Marriott and Trusthouse Forte hotels and several car rental companies.

Airlines warn that frequent-flyer coupons sold to other travelers will be confiscated, and some require IDs. However, regulations governing use by family members or friends differ with each program.

TO GET frequent-flyer application forms, call the airlines' toll-free reservations numbers listed in the 800 directory or available at 1-800-555-1212. Or call your local ticket offices.

Sam and Carolyn Kirkland stand in front of the 43-year-old Sky-Vue movie theater the couple owns and operates in Lamesa. The drive-in is one of the few still in operation on the South Plains.

Drive-in theaters offer movies, nostalgia

By John Rigg

LAMESA (AP) — They once were a common sight on the American entertainment scene, as popular as hoola-hoops, Cinemascope movies and the rear fins of '57 Chevrolets.

But like 30-cent-a-gallon gasoline, nickel candy bars and $50 suits, they have largely faded into oblivion.

Drive-in theaters, which were a natural for moviegoers as recently as 20 years ago, have been replaced by video cassette recorders and multiscreen movie theaters.

A few outdoor theaters manage to hang on, however.

One, the Sky-Vue in Lamesa, closed for two years in the late 1970s and reopened in 1980 under the management of Sam and Carolyn Kirkland.

Kirkland, who worked part-time at the drive-in for eight years until he graduated from high school in 1965, said the theater grounds were weed-choked when he and his wife moved back to Lamesa in 1980.

"YOU COULDN'T see nothing for the weeds. I hated to see it looking that way," the 44-year-old oil field pumper said.

R.A. "Skeet" Noret, who opened the theater in June 1948, talked his former employee into reopening it. Getting the facility in shape took four months, Kirkland said.

"He would come out here every day after work and it started really taking shape," his wife said.

The husband-and-wife team operated the theater for six years before they bought it for $12,500 in 1986.

"A theater like this, if you went and priced it today, would be about $150,000," Kirkland said. "If you bought everything, it would cost you a lot more than that. No one wanted it but me. I'm the one that revived it back. Actually, he (Noret) wanted me to have the theater."

What Kirkland got was a 10-acre tract of land, a projector, accompanying buildings, a screen 40 feet high and 80 feet wide that he claims is the largest drive-in screen in Texas — and a children's playground with its original equipment intact.

"The (snack) counters are still the same," he said. "The playground equipment is original. Everything out there was there in 1957."

The couple also inherited plenty of work. Since 1980, they have revamped the snack bar, repaired roofs, and installed new wiring to improve the sound system. The automated projector today uses xenon lamps, a feature that provides much better illumination than the old carbon arc system, Kirkland said.

ALTHOUGH THE theater is open only four nights a week during the summer and three nights a week during the spring and fall, the couple spends time working on the grounds every day.

"We're always here. It started out as a hobby. I've got a job and she has the house, but it's a full-time job," Kirkland said. "We're out here every single day doing something."

The drive-in, which is the only surviving one in a town that once had three, now offers local movie patrons mostly action or horror films. Kirkland also has shown such movies as "Steel Magnolias" and "Driving Miss Daisy."

Admission is $3 a person, except for a $2 special on Wednesday nights. And children 6 and under can get in free, Kirkland said.

"You'd be surprised how many 6-year-olds we've got in this town. We don't march around checking tickets," he said, chuckling. Young people who occasionally climb the fence for a free viewing are not ejected — just asked to buy a ticket the next time, Kirkland added.

The Sky-Vue opens at the end of March each year and closes toward the end of December. But the snack bar remains open during the winter months.

BUSINESS IS good and continues to improve each year, he said.

Although a "lot of regular customers" come to the drive-in, it also attracts people from out of town, Kirkland said. "They can see a first-run movie in Lubbock, but they don't have a drive-in. What you're getting is people who like the outdoors," he said. "It's real fun to watch the kids come the first time. They ask, 'Well, where do we sit?' "

The Capada, a 39-year-old drive-in theater located just south of Floydada, also is fascinating for children who have never seen a movie under the stars, said owner Chris McGowen. "The kids are just amazed. They can't imagine just parking in your car and putting the speaker on the door."

The longtime Floyd County resident, who today manages and operates the theater since her former husband bought it in 1985, said she usually selects family movies.

SOME MOVIES she brought to Floydada this summer included "Dances With Wolves" and "101 Dalmatians."

The theater opens each year in late March or April and shows movies on the weekends until early fall. Friday night showings stop when football season gets under way, she said. "You can't compete with football."

Mrs. McGowen has maintained a longstanding tradition of charging customers by the car, and each vehicle that enters the gate must pay $7.50.

Like the Kirklands, the drive-in takes up a lot of her time, the former Cone resident said.

"There's a lot of time to be spent out here — all sorts of repairs and painting," she said. "If someone offered me the right amount of money, I'd sell it."

'Football legend' living his dream

By Whit Canning

Kenneth Hall, one of the most enduring legends in Texas high school football, sits in his barbecue restaurant surrounded by some of the paintings that he has done lately. He says owning a restaurant is a lifetime dream fulfilled.

FREDERICKSBURG (AP) — The last time Kenneth Hall went home to visit his mother, he saw Edna Shindler ...

"I was in a hurry and didn't have time to stop ... but it was just good to know she's still there, and doing well."

Edna Shindler was the town switchboard operator — "You'd call her up and say, 'Edna, connect me with so-and-so,' " Hall, 55, remembered. "Our home number was 287."

To someone who grew up there long ago, Sugar Land now looks like something out of the Asteroid Belt. Part of "Greater Houston," it boasts a huge, unfathomable population, where there were once 2,500 souls.

The old high school is gone. Four others — including the notable football stronghold of Willowridge — have sprung up in its place, and a fifth is being built. But there are still noticeable traces of a time 40 years ago when the most enduring legend in Texas high school football arose in the tiny community built by Imperial Sugar.

CURTIS HALL worked at the sugar plant for 36 years, in addition to serving 30 years as the town constable.

And the son that he and his wife, Imogene, raised became a national legend known as "The Sugar Land Express."

Four decades have passed and still, coast to coast, swift, powerful schoolboy runners are hopelessly chasing that mind-warping record — 11,232 yards — set by the kid running out of the Notre Dame Box for a Class B school in South Texas known as the Sugar Land Gators.

For all of them — future Heisman winners, all-pros and TV celebs — Kenneth Hall remains a high school vision of Tyrannosaurus Rex, a creature too incredible to be believed.

The figure refers to Hall's rushing total. He also threw the occasional pass, and his career (1950-53) total offense mark is 14,558 yards for 38 games, or 382 steps per outing. He also scored 899 points.

In all of the years since then, only two runners — Cuero's Robert Strait, now with Baylor, and Emmitt Smith of Escambia, Fla., now with the Dallas Cowboys — have come within 2,500 yards of Hall's record.

Hall had a career in professional football, then became a sugar company executive.

Five years ago, he chucked it all to follow a dream — buying a barbecue restaurant in Fredericksburg.

IT ALL BEGAN, somewhat improbably, with a shy youth who was "a lousy eighth-grade football player," in Hall's recollection. He wanted to play trumpet in the band. He was a good student who read a lot and liked to draw. He did not want to play football.

But by the time Hall came back for his ninth-grade year, he had shot up six inches, gained 50 pounds, and his time in the 100-yard dash had dropped from 12.5 to 10.1 (after keying two state track championships at Sugar Land, he eventually got the time down to 9.4 in college). The world looked a little different.

The new Kenneth Hall did not escape the notice of Gators coach H.L. Jenkins.

"He was a good coach," Hall said. "They called him 'Chuzzy' and I remember he had some brothers that were nicknamed 'Dubbo,' 'Fatty' and 'Bud.' One of the reasons for our success was he ran that Notre Dame Box, a variant of the single wing and it was a pretty deceptive formation. Plus, most of the schools we played didn't see it that much."

Especially with a tailback who was 6-foot-1 and weighed more than 200 pounds. With sprinter's speed.

THE GATORS were then a Class B school and played only to a regional championship. They won three in a row while Hall was in school.

"But we played anybody we could — Class A, 2A — and beat the tar out of all of 'em," he said. "We traveled to the games in one of those old yellow school buses, and the whole town followed us. We used to play Klein — which back then was over in the piney woods and would take you all day, after you got lost and found your way again. Now it's a big suburb, just like Sugar Land."

And everybody knew about Hall — except Hall himself.

"It's funny, I was never really that aware of the records back then," he said. "The coaches never talked about it much. We were all just havin' fun."

But the papers wrote about it. They wrote about the kid who became the first to run for more than 4,000 yards in a season. They wrote about the 395 points he scored in his senior season (in 12 games), and how he shattered the career scoring marks of Crowell's Dick Todd from back in the '30s.

They wrote about the Houston Lutheran game, when he carried 11 times for seven TDs and 520 yards; about the "showdown" with arch-rival Orchard (the Gators won, 67-19) when he scored five TDs on seven carries.

They loved to write about those moments when Hall would run 80 yards for a score, have it called back for a penalty, then run 85 on the next play. Mostly, they loved to write about "The Sugar Land Express."

FINALLY, HALL'S parents had to ask him what all the fuss was about.

"They were dumbfounded," Hall recalled. "Especially when the recruiters started coming around."

It was also around this time that a budding romance developed with Gloria.

"We'd known each other for years — in fact, our parents knew each other," Hall said, "but she was older than me and she wasn't real sure she wanted to date me. Took me six months to talk her into it.

"She finally agreed one day at the movie theater. It was May 6, 1952. Our first child was born on May 6, 1958."

When his career at Sugar Land was over, Hall went to Texas A&M, and became fated to eventually be remembered as the runner-up in a clash of legends, when he and Bear Bryant could not see eye-to-eye. He left, angered and hurt.

He was drafted by the Baltimore Colts, but spent a year with the Edmonton Eskimos waiting for his A&M class to graduate so he would be eligible for the pros.

By '58, Hall had joined a Baltimore team destined to win the title on the famous sudden-death playoff with the New York Giants. But by that time, his season had long since ended.

DURING AN exhibition game in Louisville, Hall was scrambling to his feet after being knocked off balance when Sam Huff landed on his back. "There were five cracks in the vertebrae.

"It is not a type of injury common to football players. It is a type common to pilots who have been in crashes.

"I just prayed to God that I would walk again."

Hall walked — and played — again. After the '59 season he was traded to the Cardinals and finished his five-year career playing in an all-Southwest Conference backfield with former A&M teammates John David Crow and Bobby Joe Conrad and King Hill from Rice.

> 'But we played anybody we could — Class A, 2A — and beat the tar out of all of 'em. We traveled to the games in one of those old yellow school buses, and the whole town followed us. Prevention is best cure for childhood accidents

By Dr. Jeffrey Fine
Associated Press

It is critical — and at times life-saving knowledge — that parents and teachers be able to recognize a true emergency involving an injured child and seek prompt medical attention.

Upwards of 500,000 children sustain injuries each year, most of which are minor and can be cared for at home.

Each year, however, hospital emergency rooms treat about 100,000 childhood injuries just from falls from playground equipment.

A few common sense guidelines:

■ Any injury where a child is having trouble breathing should prompt an immediate call to 911. The same goes for any situation where a child loses consciousness, or where there's a broken bone or an injury which may threaten a limb.

■ If there has been a serious head or neck injury, the child should not be moved until trained personnel arrive.

■ Emergency aid also should be summoned if a child suffers a convulsion or has fluid or blood leaking from the nose or ears as the result of a blow on the head.

Even if a child does not appear to have any problems at the time of injury, parents and teachers should be aware of the signs of a serious injury which may become more obvious later.

If a child walks unsteadily, has nausea, vomiting or convulsions, appears listless or sleepy hours after an injury, or has unusual changes in behavior, these signs should prompt a call to the physician or evaluation at a local emergency department.

Most injuries are not accidents. They are predictable, and fortunately preventable.

Playgrounds should always have rubber mats, mulch, fine sand or gravel surfaces to cushion falls and minimize injuries.

Children should always wear proper helmets when riding bicycles, and should use bicycles that are appropriate for their size. Bike riders should be kept away from vehicular traffic as much as possible.

All children should be taught proper road safety precautions, such as stopping and looking both ways for pedestrian and vehicular traffic, as well as crossing at the corner and with the light. Areas where a driver can take a right on red are particularly dangerous.

Parents should know that it is often difficult for kids to evaluate the size and speed of a car, so they should be accompanied by adults when they are around traffic.

Young children should not use skateboards; some experts feel children under age 13 may lack the muscle coordination necessary to ride skateboards skillfully. But all skateboarders, regardless of skill, should wear helmets and protective padding on the knees and elbows and ride in non-traffic areas.
