Syria releases captured U.S. flier

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — Syria today freed U.S. Navy Lt. Robert O. Goodman Jr., a day after Jesse Jackson met President Hafez Assad and made a direct appeal for the airman's release.

Goodman, who had been held since his attack jet was shot down over central Lebanon a month ago, was brought to the Syrian Foreign Ministry shortly before noon in a civilian car and, as he went up the steps, told reporters, "I'm very happy."

He and Jackson, a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination and a leader of the black civil rights movement, emerged together moments later. They raised their hands in the V-for-victory sign and were driven in a limousine to the Sheraton Hotel where Jackson had been staying.

The Pentagon in Washington said a U.S. military plane was sent to bring Goodman home. Jackson said he also would be on the flight, and that it would probably stop en route to the United States so Goodman could "go through the necessary medical examination and the necessary debriefing."

Goodman changed into a well-tailored suit following his release and appeared at a news conference with Jackson.

"It's unfortunate that people are killed," Goodman said, when asked how he felt to be free. "I'm a naval officer and the fact that I'm sitting here is just fate. It could have been 1,000 other" servicemen who were shot down and captured.

Goodman, 27, of Virginia Beach, Va., was navigator-bombardier on a A-6E Intruder jet that was shot down Dec. 4 during the only American air strike against Syrian anti-aircraft positions in Lebanon. The plane's pilot was killed in the raid, which was in retaliation for attacks on U.S. reconnaissance flights.

Asked why he thought the Syrians granted Jackson's appeal for his release, Goodman said: "I think he was able to come from a different point of view" than the Reagan administration.

Earlier, Goodman refused to speculate if efforts other than Jackson's could have succeeded. "I don't know. I'm just happy to be going home."

Jackson has denied that he made the mission because of race reasons. Goodman is black.

President Reagan said that all Americans "are delighted that this brave young man will soon be united with his family and that his ordeal is over," according to astatement read by a White House spokesman, Bob Sims.

The Reagan administration had refused to endorse Jackson's mission, saying such personal efforts might disrupt official negotiations. Reagan declined to return a series of telephone calls from Jackson concerning the trip.

Jackson, sitting at Goodman's side during a news conference, said his successful mission "says we must expand our options," referring to U.S. Middle East policy.

He did not specifically explain what he meant, but earlier, during an interview with CBS, Jackson pointed out that he had been to Syria before and knew the country's leaders.

"We cannot have a policy that's effective wherein our leaders do not know Arab and African leaders," Jackson told CBS.

Of Goodman's release, Jackson, an ordained minister, said: "We are delighted to announce our prayers have been answered."

The Syrian Foreign Ministry issued a statement saying it was releasing Goodman as a step to "facilitate the withdrawal of American troops from Lebanon."

The statement said Syria "hopes that the U.S. government will take measures to end its military involvement in Lebanon, such involvement which has contributed pain and suffering to Lebanon, to the area, and to American people...."

At one of his news conferences in Damascus, Goodman said the first thing he planned to do upon arriving in the United States was "hug my wife."

Goodman said he learned he was being released only minutes before he was freed. "I was told I would be released on several other occasions," but had waited in vain until this time, he said.

The Syrian statement today cautioned that Syrian forces will continue to "confront very firmly all provocative and aggressive acts that it may be subject to."

Jackson called the agreement to release the airman "a giant step toward peace." He said it was "built upon President Assad's willingness to put Lt. Goodman's predicament in the humanitarian category."

Jackson met with Assad for 90 minutes Monday 10 miles south of Damascus at a villa where Assad is recovering from a heart ailment attributed to fatigue.

"I think it's fantastic," said Marilyn Goodman, the airman's mother, after she was awakened this morning at her home in the New York City borough of Queens. "Oh God, it's unbelievable."

"I feel great. Absolutely great," said the airman's father, Robert O. Goodman Sr., 50, of York, Pa., a retired Air Force officer. He said Jackson is "due all the credit in the world for Rob's release."

U.S. Ambassador Robert Paganelli, who had worked to arrange Goodman's release, appeared at today's press conference and was asked what effect he thought Jackson had had. He responded: "I don't know. I'm sure it helped. Reverend Jackson has a great deal of respect in this part of the world."

'Pleased' Reagan seeks continued Syrian efforts

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said today that he is "delighted" the Syrians released captured airman Robert O. Goodman Jr. and the president called on the Syrian government to work for peace in Lebanon.

"All Americans must be pleased that the government of Syria has told our ambassador that they have agreed to release Lt. Goodman as a result of the efforts of the Rev. Jesse Jackson," Reagan said in a statement.

"We are delighted that this brave young man will soon be united with his family and that his ordeal is over."

The president continued: "We hope that the Syrian government will continue to work for peace in Lebanon so that all foreign forces — Syrian, Israeli and the MNF — can come home and allow that country to be united, independent, and sovereign once more."

Reagan planned to meet today with his Middle East envoy, Donald Rumsfeld, about a Pentagon plan on redeploying U.S. Marines in Lebanon. Goodman's plane was shot down during a Dec. 4 air strike against Syrian outposts in Lebanon.

Reagan's statement was read by Bob Sims, a deputy White House press secretary who said Reagan was "notified promply this morning" about the Syrian announcement in a conference call with National Security Council staff members, White House Chief of Staff James A. Baker III and State Department officials.

Last week, White House officials sought to put as much distance as possible between the administration and Jackson's efforts because, Sims said, the president believed that "any chance of Jackson's succeeding would be because he was not officially representing the president and not an emissary of the U.S. government."

Jackson had been in Syria since Friday trying to win Goodman's release.

Sims said Reagan had been "praying for Goodman's release."

Sims also said Reagan appreciated the efforts of all who made the release possible, and saw Jackson's effort from the start as a "humanitarian effort." He said the government was beginning to make arrangements for Goodman's return.

In today's meeting, Reagan was to receive a report on Rumsfeld's recent trips to the Middle East.

In the wake of explosions, sniper fire and artillery attacks that killed more than 260 Marines in Beirut last year, Reagan is facing a Congress increasingly hostile about the use of the troops in the Middle East and looking for ways to scale back the 18-month limit it put on their mission.

'Nineteen Eighty-Four' again a best seller

By CYNTHIA GREEN
Associated Press Writer

Thirty-six years after penning "Nineteen Eighty-Four," George Orwell is again a best seller. Bookstores across the nation are reporting that the arrival of the ominous year has brought a huge demand for the darkly prophetic novel.

Many stores surveyed Monday said they were sold out of the book, which details a future society in which citizens' individual freedoms are subordinated completely to the state.

"Sales are right up there with the latest romance novel," said Peggy Ogden, a salesclerk at B. Dalton in Livingston, N.J. "Every time we get it in, it sells out."

In Chicago, Barbara's Bookstore is running a special Orwell promotion, said Laurie Haight. Any customer who buys $19.84 or more in merchandise receives a free paperback copy of "Nineteen Eighty-Four."

"The amount that we're selling is phenomenal," she added. The shop has recently special-ordered three hardback copies, a request "almost unheard of," she said.

But while the buyers are eager, it appears not all are well-acquainted with the history of the book that coined the slogan "Big Brother is watching."

One customer last week asked a clerk at a B. Dalton store in West Hartford, Conn., if the book was out yet in paperback, said senior sales clerk Audrey Davenport.

"She said, 'Yes, it has been for 35 years,' " Ms. Davenport said.

At the B. Dalton branch in New York City's Greenwich Village, operations store manager Valerie Lentz said sales had begun to pick up in September, and peaked in December with many people purchasing copies as Christmas gifts.

In Anchorage, Alaska, B. Dalton reported selling its last copy of "Nineteen Eighty-Four" on the last day of 1983. Waldenbooks sold out last week, and the Book Cache sold out even earlier.

"We're completely sold out of every edition, including the Monarch (study guide) notes — even the anniversary edition," said Irene Dutcher, a saleswoman at Tower Books in Seattle. "We had to send to the East Coast for another shipment. Hopefully it will be here in another week."

Tim Jones, a clerk at Walden's in Oklahoma City, said he believes sales have been spurred by the recent publication of a special commemorative edition with an introduction by Walter Cronkite. Most of the buyers "are people who have read it before," he said.

'Many Dallas stores sold out of Orwell's novel

DALLAS (AP) — Texas book sellers say it will be hard to find a copy of George Orwell's novel "Nineteen Eighty-Four" on their shelves since the arrival of the new year, even though it's not on the latest best-seller list.

The novel, written 36 years ago, details Orwell's perception on the future in the year 1984.

It was sold out at four of five Dallas-area book stores Monday.

"We are sold out right now," a spokeswoman for Century Book Stores in Dallas, who asked not to be identified, said. "They have been selling very well.

"All the high schools have assigned it as required reading — even more than the average number — and other folks are reading it as well," the spokeswoman said.

The store had had only a few copies of the book on hand since Christmas, she said.

And workers at B. Dalton Booksellers at Six Flags Mall in Arlington were forced to restock their supply after selling out early Monday.

"We have sold quite a bit, but we still have some here, " store clerk Al Fratina said. "Some have read it previously, but it has been so long since they have, that because of the hype, they are reading it again."

Another book dealer reported all copies of the book had been sold.

Israel bombs Palestinian bases

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Dive-bombing Israeli warplanes struck at Palestinian guerrilla bases in the Syrian-controlled Lebanese central mountains today. The Israeli command said the jets scored "accurate hits."

In Damascus, meanwhile, Syrian officials freed U.S. Navy airman Robert O. Goodman Jr. after a month's captivity in response to an appeal by the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

A Syrian official statement said Goodman's release was intended to encourage a withdrawal of U.S. forces in Lebanon. Goodman was captured when his attack jet was shot down while on a raid on Syrian-held positions in central Lebanon Dec. 4.

An Israeli military communique said its jets struck at positions occupied by forces of guerrilla chief Col. Saed Mousa, a leader of the revolt against the leadership of Palestine Liberation Organization chairman Yasser Arafat.

The Tel Aviv communique said the planes returned safely after attacking targets in Bhamdoun, located in Syrian-controlled territory on the Beirut-Damascus Highway.

Today's air strikes follow a recent escalation of guerrilla attacks against Israeli troops in south Lebanon. Last month, Israel launched four air attacks aganst guerrilla targets in Syrian-controlled sectors of Lebanon.

The Voice of Lebanon, a Beirut radio station controlled by the rightist Christian Phalange Party, said four Israeli Kfirs backed by eight fighters staged bombing and strafing runs that set several targets ablaze, including a Bhamdoun hotel used as headquarters of the Palestinian guerrillas and an ammunition dump.

But a spokesman for the Druse Progressive Socialist Party, whose forces control most towns in the central mountains, denied the five-story Shepherd Hotel was hit. He also denied radio reports that the hotel had become a headquarters for Mousa since the Israeli army withdrew from central Lebanon Sept. 4.

The spokesman, who declined to be identified, said the hotel was serving as a Druse hospital. He said the Israeli jets hit at Palestinian bases around, but not in, Bhamdoun.

In Beirut, a gunman shot a French Embassy driver as he sat in a car outside the French consul's home today.

An embassy secretary said the gunman used a pistol equipped with a silencer in the attack in the seafront Ein Mreisseh neighborhood. The secretary, who declined to be named, identified the driver as Raymond Henry Vautier and said he was undergoing an emergency operation in a Beirut hospital.

Lebanon's state radio said the driver was waiting to drive consul Edouard de Blanpre to Lebanon's northern port of Tripoli.

State-run Beirut radio said three bombs went off in a rapid succession at dawn today, devastating a supermarket, a grocery and a clinic in separate neighborhoods in Sidon, provincial capital of southern Lebanon. One Lebanese woman was injured, the radio said.

In Tunisia, Arafat's Fatah guerrilla faction ended a crucial Central Committee meeting Monday, and an Omani newspaper reported that Afarat was in danger of being ousted as PLO chairman.

Hard-line opponents of Arafat have led to a revolt in the PLO and Fatah, the largest of the PLO's factions. Arafat and 4,000 loyalists were evacuated from Tripoli, Lebanon, on Dec. 20 after they had been besieged by Syrian-backed PLO rebels.

He said last week he hoped to hear the divisions during the emergency meeting here.

The agenda included a discussion of Arafat's controversial meeting with Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak after the exodus from Lebanon. Egypt has been condemned by most Arab nations for signing a peace treaty with Israel in 1979.

The Oman-based newspaper Al Khaleej reported today that Fatah leaders agreed on a statement criticizing Arafat's trip to Egypt, rejecting President Reagan's Mideast peace plan and reaffirming a commitment to collective leadership.

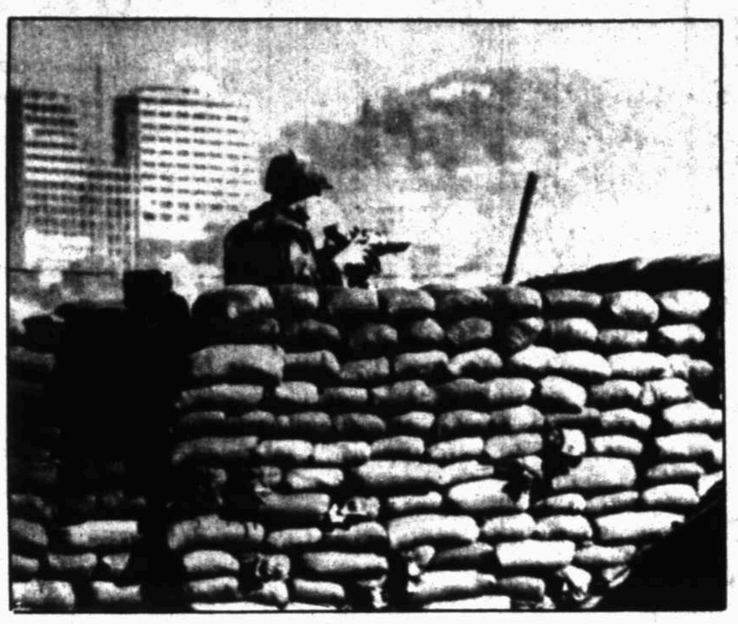

It said Arafat will be given the choice of signing the document or resigning as head of Fatah.

The proposals put forward by Reagan in September 1982 include a call for Palestinian self-government on the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and Gaza in association with Jordan.

France said Monday it will pull 482 of its 2,000 soldiers out of Beirut later this month and send them back to the U.N. force in Israeli-occupied southern Lebanon.

A communique issued in Paris said the action "does not modify the mission of the multinational force in Beirut, in particular, the French contingent of this force."

Together, France, the United States, Italy and Britain have 5,600 troops in the multinational peacekeeping force in Beirut.

Goodman's family excited about release

By The Associated Press

The jubilant parents of Robert O. Goodman Jr. exclaimed "fantastic" and "absolutely great" today after hearing that Syria had agreed to free their Navy flier son held captive since Dec. 4.

Goodman's wife, Terry Ann, "was so excited she could hardly talk" in a telephone call telling her mother the news, said Goodman's mother-in-law, Loraine Bryant of Portsmouth, N.H.

"I just need more details," said Marilyn Goodman, the airman's mother, awakened at her home in New York City. "Oh God, it's unbelievable."

"Absolutely great," said Robert O. Goodman Sr., 50, of York, Pa. "No words to describe the feeling of elation."

Mrs. Goodman called the news "fantastic" and said she had not yet spoken with the Rev. Jesse Jackson, the candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination who went to Syria to seek Goodman's freedom.

Jackson last called her Saturday after meeting with Syrian Foreign Minister Abdul Halim-Khaddam, Mrs. Goodman said. "He was very hopeful and very pleased," she said. "He said he was going to stay and work on it."

Mrs. Goodman credited Jackson for "a humanitarian plea" on her son's behalf.

"I think the point he was trying to make is sometimes the admistration's hands are tied in certain areas and sometimes a humanitarian plea can work better than the political aspect," she said. "In that I think he was right."

Mrs. Goodman, a bank teller, said she would stay home from work today and await further word on her son, whom she last saw during the July 4 weekend.

"I'll just wait for the phone to ring," she said. "What can I tell you? It's absolutely great."

Goodman's father, a retired Air Force lieutenant colonel who is now an executive for a food processing equipment firm, spoke with his son in a television hookup between Damascus and the ABC "Good Morning America" program.

"Bob, we're proud of you," the elder Goodman said. "Come on home."

"He's (Jackson) due all the credit in the world for Rob's release," said the flier's father, who earlier had expressed ambivalence about Jackson's trip to Syria.

"My opinion was he should evaluate the facts given him," the elder Goodman said. "I just hoped he would listen to the official advice, which was opposed at the time.

"Being successful, I think he deserves all the credit in the world. ... This is a tremendous service for cause of peace."

Goodman also said he had no reason to believe the trip was a political one.

"He's (Jackson) a man of integrity and conscience," the elder Goodman said. "I have every reason to believe his motives were apolitical."

Asked if he will meet with his son overseas or wait until he returns, Goodman said, "I would leave that to the Navy's office. If they want to have him for a couple of days to debrief him, fine."

Goodman, 27, of Virginia Beach, Va., was navigator-bombardier on a A-6E Intruder jet that was shot down Dec. 4 during an air strike against Syrian anti-aircraft positions in central Lebanon. The pilot was killed.

Mrs. Bryant said she hopes to see Jackson if he schedules another campaign trip to New Hampshire. "I would tell him how thankful we all are for what he's done," she said.

Lt. Cmdr. David Allen, a member of Goodman's squadron in Virginia Beach, said the news of the release left the flier's colleagues "a little surprised but very pleased."

Cmdr. Neal W. Weisberg, who also worked with Goodman, said, "We're all glad that he's back."

Jackson credits many with mission's success

WASHINGTON (AP) — Jesse Jackson, whose trip to Syria led to the release of a captured Navy flier, said today that "a lot of people deserve credit" for the mission's success.

"Success speaks for itself. A combination of forces has come together," Jackson said in an interview on NBC's "Today" show from Damascus, Syria. Jackson, a Democratic presidential hopeful, appeared on the show with Lt. Robert O. Goodman Jr., shortly after the flier was set free.

"I think this is time for us to rise above our basic conflicts of race and region, religion, sex and politics," Jackson said.!"A lot of people deserve the credit."

Jackson, who claimed Goodman's release may help bring peace to the Mideast, noted he had met with State Department officials before he left Washington last Friday. "The State Department did not try to block us," he said.

"The temperature has been lowered somewhat between Syria and the U.S.," Jackson said.

Goodman, 27, a navigator-bombardier, was captured by the Syrians Dec. 4 after his plane was shot down during the only American air strike against Syrian anti-aircraft positions in Lebanon. The plane's pilot was killed.

Pilot in Warwick crash 'violated flight procedures'

From Staff Reports

The pilot of a Louisiana Department of Corrections plane which crashed into the Warwick Apartments Sept. 24, 1982, violated five standard flight procedures, according to the National Transportation and Safety Board's formal determination of probable cause.

The crash was attributed to violations made by the pilot, 56-year-old Alex Sheets of Baton Rouge, La. Sheets, two prisoners he was transporting back to Louisiana, and an unauthorized passenger, Ken Hornsby, 42, also of Baton Rouge, were injured in the crash. Hornsby later died from the burns he suffered.

In addition, then 21-year-old Randy Sellars, a resident of the apartment complex, was seriously injured.

"The crash was attributed to inadequate flight planning and preparation, improper emergency procedure, not having retracted the landing gear, not maintaining air speed and as the result of stalling or flushing, which means settling downward because of inadequate air speed," said Brad Dunbar, NTSB public informations officer in Washington, D.C.

The report, released Friday, also stated the twin-engine Beechcraft Baron was 195 pounds ~~over the~~ 6,100 pound limit. "It was pointed out but they did not cite the overload as a probable cause," Dunbar said.

Although the final report confirmed preliminary findings released in September 1982, the fact that Sheets took off with the wind instead of against it and did not use all the runway available to him were not cited as probable causes for the crash, Dunbar said.

"He did take off at an intersection and downwind, but, once again, the board did not cite that as a probable cause," Dunbar said.

The NTSB board broke the accident into two parts. Attributing the cause of the crash to the pilot is final, but the loss of power on the takeoff "is still undetermined."

According to Dunbar, mechanical defects and adverse weather conditions were ruled out in playing a part in the loss of power at takeoff that was reported by the pilot.

Sheets took sick leave and other accrued time-off three days after the accident through his termination July 19, 1983, according to a spokeswoman in the public information office of the Lousiana Department of Corrections.

Goodman following in tradition of service

NEW YORK (AP) — Lt. Robert O. Goodman Jr., the U.S. Navy flier freed today after being held captive by Syria since Dec. 4, comes from a family steeped in the tradition of service to country.

His father, Robert O. Goodman Sr., is a retired Air Force lieutenant colonel. A 24-year-old brother, Tyron, is in the Coast Guard, and his 19-year-old brother, Martin, is entering a preparatory school for the U.S. Naval Academy, from which Goodman graduated in 1978.

Goodman, 27, a bombardier-navigator, became the first U.S. serviceman taken prisoner in combat since the Vietnam War on Dec. 4, when his plane were shot down during a raid on Syrian positions.

Th Rev. Jesse Jackson, candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, traveled to Damascus to plead for the flier's release, announcing today that Syria had agreed to Goodman's freedom.

At a press conference with Jackson on Saturday, Goodman appeared calm and said he had been treated "surprisingly" well during his captivity, and that his only injuries were what he described as a "slight shoulder dislocation" and bruises received when he ejected from his A6-E Intruder jet.

"I've got a good-size room. I've got my own bed. I've got three meals a day, more than I can eat, he said, adding that he needed only a "plane ticket home."

He skirted comment on the political situation surrounding him, saying "I'm not a politician. I'm a naval officer."

Goodman grew up in Portsmouth, N.H., where friends called him "Goodie," recalled Howard Koiles, best man at Goodman's wedding. He moved away to enter the Naval Academy after graduating from high school in 1974, but came back to visit every year, Koiles said.

He married his Portsmouth sweetheart, Terry Ann Bryant. The couple and their children live in Virgina Beach, Va.

His mother, Marilyn Goodman, who lives in the New York City borough of Queens, said Goodman was considering making the Navy his career. She said the last time she had heard from him before his capture.

Walter Novack, assistant principal at Portsmouth High School, said Goodman was an excellent student who was on the honor roll.

Goodman played halfback on the football team, but wasn't a starter, partly because of his small size, 5-feet-8 and 150 pounds, said the coach Tom Daubney.

Jewish underground blamed for grenade attacks

By ALLYN FISHER
Associated Press Writer

JERUSALEM — Israeli authorities suspect an organized Jewish underground is to blame for a series of grenade attacks against Christian and Moslem holy sites in Jerusalem and the West Bank.

Anonymous callers claimed responsibility in the name of "Terror Against Terror," and some Israeli newspapers have linked the anti-Arab actions to extremists in the Jewish settlement movement in the occupied West Bank.

A Greek Orthodox nun and two Moslems have been wounded in the eight grenade attacks reported since Dec. 9, police said. No arrests have been made.

In the latest attack, booby-trapped grenades went off in two mosques in the West Bank town of Hebron on Friday, the Moslem sabbath, wounding a worshiper.

As in previous attacks near Bethlehem and Jerusalem, an anonymous telephone caller told Israeli radio stations the grenades were planted by TNT, the Hebrew initials for "Terror Against Terror."

The callers reportedly ended each conversation with a slogan such as "Jewish blood is not cheap" or a quotation from Psalm 94, which begins "O Lord God, to whom vengeance belongeth, show thyself."

"Terror Against Terror" was the slogan of a group blamed for setting fire to a leftist party office and telephoned death threats to several moderate Israeli politicians in the 1970s.

But the original group is believed to have disbanded with the jailing two years ago of a key leader, said Yossi Sarid, a Parliament member who sits on the Foreign Affairs and Security Committee, which is investigating the recent bombings.

Sarid said the booby-trapped grenades were of Israeli army issue and the attacks appeared to be the work of a more sophisticated and organized group than the original TNT.

"It is clear that there is one group because the method is always the same," Sarid said.

Jerusalem police spokesman Ziv Rotem said investigators were "checking the possibility" that a single group was responsible.

Israel Television reported Monday night that military authorities set up roadblocks at entrances to major West Bank towns to search for possible TNT members. The report showed soldiers searching an Israeli car, and said the measure was causing unrest among Jewish settlers.

Investigators suggested that the extremist group also may be responsible for arson against Arab-owned cars in a mixed Israeli-Arab neighborhood in East Jerusalem.

The grenade attacks and vandalism are viewed as retaliation for the Dec. 6 bombing of an Israeli bus in a Jerusalem suburb. The Palestine Liberation Organization claimed responsibility for the attack, which killed six Jews and injured 44.

Officials have declined direct comment when asked if they believed TNT also carried out the June 1980 bombings of the cars of three West Bank mayors, two of whom were crippled.

Paul not getting funds from PACs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Ron Paul, named by Conservative Digest as one of a dozen up-and-coming conservative leaders, says he pays a price for applying his tight-fisted principles to federal aid for powerful economic interests.

He is running for the Senate, but is pulling in virtually no money from business-oriented PACs. That is almost unheard of for a conservative candidate, especially in Texas.

Paul said he has raised between $350,000 and $400,000 for the Texas Republican primary "but I haven't had one political action committee donation, unless there are one or two that I'm not aware of."

In 1981 and 1982, Paul received only about $50,000, or 11 percent of his total campaign contributions, from PACs affiliated with various special interests, according to campaign finance reports. That's far less than usual for the Texas congressional delegation, whose members averaged $139,000, or a third of their total contributions, from PACs, the reports show.

"Political action committees, especially so often the business PACs, want special privilege," said Paul, who is seeking the nomination to run for the seat being vacated with the retirement of Sen. John Tower, R-Texas.

"...I vote for no special privilege and therefore they don't give me very much money," Paul said.

Paul's GOP opponents are Houston businessman Robert Mosbacher and Rep. Phil Gramm, a principal congressional architect of President Reagan's first budget in 1981.

Gramm received considerable credit in conservative circles for his role in crafting that budget, which curbed the growth in federal spending. But Paul voted against it — because he felt it didn't slash that growth enough.

Gramm is "much more of a non-free market person than I am," Paul says. "I'm for the free market across the board."

Paul acknowledges he is an underdog to Gramm, but says, "I have been an underdog in every race I've ever run."

Paul is against welfare payments for the poor, Social Security, Medicare, Medicaid, and a host of federal programs aimed at helping the needy. Such needs, he says, can better be met through private efforts.

But he is also opposed to what he calls "welfare for the rich" — federal support for banks, large corporations and foreign governments provided through such agencies as the Export-Import Bank, Commodity Credit Corp., Overseas Private Investment Corp. and the International Monetary Fund.

"These are all immoral use of government power to help special interests," says Paul.

And indeed, in whittling down the role of government, Paul says his first target would be the big economic interests.

"When we develop our priorities we attack those who have received the greatest benefit, and who use the power the most," Paul said. "We should stop them first."

If he had his way, Paul would return the federal government to the bare bones role he says was originally envisioned in the Constitution: protecting individual freedoms, providing national security, encouraging free trade between the states, and providing a sound currency.

To revamp the defense program, he would gradually bring U.S. troops home from foreign soil and stop increasing the nuclear arsenal in favor of developing a space-based missile defense system.

To promote monetary reform, he would reinstitute the gold standard, again tying the value of the dollar to gold, and eliminate or curtail the power of the Federal Reserve, the nation's central bank.

"The capitalist system has been just about destroyed," Paul said. "The money is on its last legs, and the interventionism... that we've been involved (in) around the world is about to bring the world to the brink of a military confrontation."

Slender and soft-spoken, Paul was raised in Pittsburgh, where his father ran a dairy.

"...I can remember at a very young age heping in the dairy, and delivering newspapers, and doing all those things which I think are very instructive, rather than accepting that what you get is what you demand and you have a right to it," Paul said.

Bandit allegedly shoots three people in heads

LOMETA (AP) — Hospitals were alerted today to watch for a bandit believed wounded during a robbery-murder at the home of a gun collector who — along his wife and 5-year-old daughter — was shot many times in the head, authorities said.

The bodies of Noah Haydon, 60, his 49-year-old wife Edna and their daughter Amanda were found Monday.

Eight long guns, either rifles or shotguns, one pistol and two hunting bows were taken from Haydon's collection, said Texas Rangr Fred Cummings.

Authorities said they had no suspects, but Cummings said police have an indication that at least one gunman was wounded. He said hospitals were put on alert.

Justice of the Peace Martin Adams, who ordered the bodies sent to Dallas for autopsies, said his preliminary investigation put the time of death at approximately 10 p.m. New Year's Day. Haydon's son, James, found the bodies at about 11 a.m. Monday.

Adams said Haydon's weapons collection had been burglarized "a few months ago," and added that "at one time, he had a right nice collection."

"It initially appears that the motive behind the murders is robbery," Lampasas County Sheriff Gordon Morris said.

He said all three victims were found shot many times in the head "in an execution-type manner" inside their one-story frame house, northwest of Killeen.

At least one neighbor lived near the Haydon home and no one saw or heard anything unusual at the residence over the weekend, said Mayor Mary E. McAnelly.

"Their little girl had played with one of her friends yesterday afternoon, and because of that, we presume that they were shot last night," she said Monday.

Tim Angermann, a sheriff's investigator, said all of the victims were found lying face-up.

New law makes carrying weapons on school felony

HOUSTON (AP) — School officials say they hope a new state law will scare students out of packing guns and knives in the classroom.

Under the new law, anyone found on school premises, in a courtroom, court office or polling place with a gun, long-blade knife, club or explosive device will be charged with a third-degree felony instead of a misdemeanor.

A 17-year-old Houston high school student, whose .25-caliber automatic pistol discharged and grazed a friend last year in a school hallway, was suspended for three days, charged with a misdemeanor and given a small fine, officials said.

But under the new law that school officials can begin enforcing today, he would have been charged with a felony and subject to a two-to 10-year prison term and a $5,000 fine.

Les Burton, school district director of security, said students sometimes bring weapons to continue a fight they became involved in over the weekend. Most often the weapons are carried for protection.

"The kids are afraid, not of other kids at school but of what might happen to them going to and from school," Burton said.

"They see all the robberies and assaults in their neighborhoods; maybe they've been hassled by some older person at the bus stop. It's sad, but they feel they have to protect themselves."

The little-publicized law was sponsored in the Legislature last year by State Sen. John Whitmire and State Rep. Paul J. Hilbert, both of Harris County.

"This new law is an excellent idea," Police Capt. Leroy Michna said. "School grounds are no places for weapons. Schools should be safe havens where you can go to learn."

Firemen use up water; Woman dies in blaze

ANSON (AP) — A lack of water hampered firefighters' efforts to extinguish a blaze in which a 68-year-old woman died, say investigators.

Firefighters used up the water carried in their engines to battle the blaze Sunday afternoon, then waited for a tank truck to arrive to extinguish the fire, said Anson Volunteer Fire Chief Bill Cromeens.

He said Josepha Flores was found dead in her home after the fire was tapped out.

Cromeens said the fire was reported about 3:15 p.m. But the house was nearly destroyed by the time firefighters arrived, he said.

He said a transport truck bringing more water enabled firefighters to extinguish the blaze about 4 p.m.

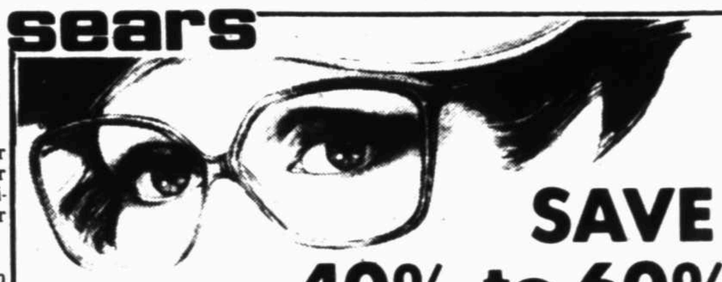

Cromeens said Ms. Flores had trouble "getting around" and probably had little chance of escaping the fire.

He said no damage estimate on the home was set, and no cause for the fire has been determined.

Women guards patrol prisons

JACKSON, Mich. (AP) — Some inmates drape sheets over their cell bars or ask male guards to jingle keys if they're patrolling with a woman officer.

At the State Prison of Southern Michigan, the world's largest walled prison, inmates and guards are adjusting to the first women officers in the cell blocks since the institution opened in 1839.

"At first I was somewhat uncomfortable with it, but then I decided police are police — male or female," says 34-year-old Jerry Talison, serving a life sentence for first-degree murder.

It's a situation the state Corrections Department fought in the courts and lost. U.S. District Judge Julian Abele Cook Jr. ruled in 1982 that the department discriminated against women guards by barring them from work in housing areas at three state prisons for men — the Michigan Reformatory in Ionia, the Marquette Branch Prison and the prison in Jackson.

The department claimed it needed a ban to protect the women as well as the privacy of inmates who dress and use toilets in cells with open front bars.

Jackson's medium-security northside complex is the first section of the prison to have women on guard in the cell blocks. Fourteen women are completing training and draw occasional assignments to the housing units.

The northside complex houses about 5,300 men and was the scene of riots in 1981 that left buildings burned and dozens of inmates and guards injured.

Its 8-by-10 cells are stacked five tiers high and are connected by catwalks. Each contains a bed, dresser, sink and toilet. Inmates have access to showers in an open area once a day, but the warden's office is promising to install "privacy screens."

Cathy Brower, 35, spent her first day as a regular guard in a northside cell block last fall and said it was "no big deal."

"Some of them (inmates) see it as a new experience," she said. "Some of them told me they like the idea." Ms. Brower said the inmates have a right to privacy, but "if they don't want to be seen naked...they know you're coming" and can plan ahead.

Cook's ruling said inmate privacy was less important than ending sexual discrimination against women guards whose careers could be stymied without promotions to the cell blocks.

He rejected the privacy argument, saying it was "based on stereotypical sexual characterization that a viewing of an inmate while nude or performing bodily functions, by a member of the opposite sex, is intrinsically more odious than the viewing by a member of one's own sex."

Cook dismissed department claims that women would draw special hostility from sex offenders, saying the probability of sexual assaults did not warrant discrimination.

Nancy Jones, 40, said her first day of regular cell block duty in the northside complex "went great." She conceded, however, that most of her female colleagues don't want a similar opportunity.

Dan Verlin, an officer helping train the women guards, said they are doing well, but that some male guards are "overly protective" of them, and others have questioned their ability to handle violent situations.

Randy Carl, who trained Ms. Brower, said he's worried about women being assigned to housing areas against their will.

"If the woman doesn't want to work in the block and they put her in there, they're asking for trouble," he warned.

Others disagreed.

"It's (a female guard's) duty to go where she's assigned," said Joseph Weinberg, northside deputy warden. "Whether she should work in there shouldn't be a matter of her sex. It should be a matter of whether she's qualified."

Thirty-four-year-old Jon Campbell has spent 22 months in the northside complex for possession of cocaine. He says negative reaction to the women guards is diminishing as they start working in the housing areas.

But Campbell warned the women might have trouble if they are assigned to blocks in Jackson's maximum-security central complex.

"I've seen some police beat up pretty bad over inside," he said. "Some people (inmates) just might want to hurt them (the women)."

Southern lawmakers getting more liberal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional delegations from Southern states seem to be getting more liberal, at least as viewed by Americans for Democratic Action.

For years, the ADA has graded members of Congress on how they voted on issues the organization regards as an indication of liberalism.

In 1982, the liberal group started grading state delegations, as well as individuals.

The 1983 ratings, issued over the weekend, provided the first year-to-year comparison of how House members from particular states are voting.

One year may be too short a time to show a trend, but, for what it is worth, all of the delegations that became notably more liberal between 1982 and 1983, as judged by the ADA, were from Southern or border states.

West Virginia led the list, followed by North Carolina, Missouri, Alabama, South Carolina, Oklahoma, Virginia and Texas.

"We are taking a look at this in more detail to see what factors are involved, whether it was the freshmen or what it was," Frank Gallo of the ADA said.

West Virginia made the most astonishing turnaround. In 1982, the ADA gave West Virginia representatives an average rating of 36 on a scale of 100. In 1983, this increased to 81 percent, just two percentage points behind Massachusetts, which the ADA called the most liberal delegation in Congress. West Virginia elected three new Democrats to its four-member delegation in 1982, including two who replaced Republicans.

Virginia, which elected four new House members including three Democrats who replaced Republicans, ended up with a delegation that drew an average rating of 24 percent from the ADA, compared with 6 percent in 1982. Despite the increase, the Old Dominion's delegation was still rated by the liberal group as the most conservative in Congress.

In North Carolina, where two seats changed hands from the Republicans to the Democrats, the delegation's ADA grade increased from 19 percent to 51 percent.

The Missouri delegation's average increased from 28 to 53 percent after the state lost a Republican seat because of the redrawing of congressional district lines on the basis of the 1980 census.

In Alabama, where one Democrat turned out a Republican, the average ADA rating of the seven-member delegation jumped from 10 percent to 31 percent.

In South Carolina, one Democrat replaced a Republican and the ADA's liberalism rating for the six-member delegation went from 17 to 36.

Racers a little crusty

IRVING (AP) — The track was only a few feet long and the stakes were not very high. The competition was a little crusty, but the winner's circle sure was tough to crack.

The National Crab Racing Association was at it again.

Jim Morgan, 42 and the self-proclaimed commissioner of the association, was at an Irving hotel bar with his "stable" of 65 tree crabs, imported from Mexico.

Morgan entertained nightclub patrons in Florida and Georgia before moving to this Dallas suburb about two months ago. His crabs, sponsored by a automobile dealership in Irving, race two nights a week in Irving and one in Hurst.

The crabs are placed in the center of a 7-foot circle and covered with a bowl, which becomes the starting gate when lifted. To win, all a crab has to do is crawl any direction to the finish line outside the circle and place both claws across it.

Before race time, patrons can look over the crabs to see which ones they want to select. If their crabs win, they get a free drink, Morgan said.

"I've had various humane societies pay me visits and get hostile about cruelty to animals and exploiting crabs," Morgan said. "They don't have anything to crab about. I tell the humane society to go back to the kitchen and talk to the lobsters if they want to see bad."

Morgan said he began racing crabs four years ago in Ohio as a form of entertainment.

Some crabs at a recent race got a fast start out of the gate. Others refused to budge. One brown-and-white crab stopped on the yellow finish line, pulled into its shell and refused to move.

"You can see why this would never work in Vegas," Morgan said. "Can you imagine having bet on that little fellow, then have him take a nap on the finish line?"

Morgan said the recent cold weather in Texas has had an adverse affect on his charges.

"Lately, with the weather being what it is, some of them aren't running like they should," Morgan said. "I figure they're hoping I'll send them back to training camp in Florida."

Crabs require little care, Morgan said, other than monitoring the temperature of their surroundings. If they get too cold, they become dormant, and if they become too hot, they die, he said.

Brides, grooms double

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The Breens and Huffines had double reason to celebrate when a double wedding allowed brother bride-grooms to double as best men — and the sister brides to also serve as maids of honor.

At St. Luke's Catholic Church last week, Michael Breen married Sally Huffine, and in the same ceremony Breen's younger brother Joseph married Ms. Huffine's younger sister Laurie.

Joseph, a 28-year-old stockbroker, said the idea for the double wedding "just kind of occurred." The double vow ceremony was "sort of exciting," he added.

"It's hard on the emotions, but it's great," said Jane Ann Breen, one of the 10 sisters and brothers of the two couples among the 500 wedding guests.

"It's one real big wedding. I think it's pretty funny," said Nick Huffine, a brother of the brides.

The Rev. Paul J. Courtney, who performed the ceremony, said the double wedding gave the couples extra moral support.

THE BETTER HALF

"Sure, Stanley still remembers how to cuddle! When we watch TV, he cuddles a bag of chips!"

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Wednesday, January 4, 1984

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Louis Braille, inventor of the touch system used by the blind, German mythologist Jacob Grimm and America's first saint, Mother Elizabeth Seton, were born on this date. Also sharing your birthday: actress Jane Wyman and her daughter, Maureen Reagan, boxing great Floyd Patterson and actress-photographer Dyan Cannon. Subtlety is everything now. In the months ahead, you have a strong urge to convert your friends and associates to your philosophy and outlook on life. Press your views gently or not at all! A project that you have worked on for a long time nears completion. Turn your attention to romance.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A romantic relationship becomes more meaningful when you come down from the clouds. Make plans for the future. The business outlook is much improved. Do not go overboard when shopping.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You feel both excited and energetic today. Those who are close to you want to help you in any way they can. A low-key approach wins you that special job.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Listen to your intuition. It is right on target. The arrival of a check eases tension. Do not take an angry friend too seriously. A blind date could be a wonderful experience.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): This quiet day allows you to catch up on business chores. Answer the mail and return phone calls. If you want someone new in your life, look around.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You have an urge to change residences or jobs. Use your imagination to inspire others to be creative. Mate has some surprises in store for you. Face your restlessness head-on.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Show more initiative and you will win a competition. The romantic vibrations are so strong you could almost cut them with a knife. Your affection knows no bounds. Marriage is possible.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Work seems more demanding now. You are in high spirits, though, and enjoy the challenge. Tell the truth and patch up your differences with a loved one. Speak from the heart.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Investigate an opportunity to improve your financial situation. Sensitive matters require great discretion. You will soon understand the wisdom of keeping your lips sealed. A romantic interlude makes you feel more secure.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): If you learn not to expect so much, you will be disappointed less often. Cooperative ventures pay off royally. Call a friend. A family member offers encouragement when you are unsure.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You feel uncomfortable about a family situation. A personal relationship is in the spotlight. Business pressures mount. You win new respect when you learn to wield your power without abusing it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): An unexpected visit by a member of the opposite sex could upset romantic partner. You have an opportunity to upgrade an investment. To avoid being deceived, keep your eyes and ears open.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You enjoy good fortune when you finally make a decision you have been postponing. Adverse influences disappear. Cooperation proves easier to obtain. You and loved one draw closer together.

New Lear show stirs controversy

By DAVID GRITTEN
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — As the creator of pioneering TV shows like "All in the Family" "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman" and "Maude," Norman Lear pushed back the boundaries of what was permissible on television. This time, though, Lear may have broken his own record. One of his shows has attracted controversy even before it has aired on television.

After a five-year absence from weekly TV, Lear and his company, Embassy TV, have developed a show called "a.k.a. Pablo," which will probably debut on ABC in March. It stars a feisty Mexican-American comic named Paul Rodriguez, who plays a character much like himself — a neighborhood joker who decides to parlay his talent for making people laugh into a pro career.

The trouble is, Rodriguez's stand-up act uses liberal doses of ethnic humor. On one side are those who feel that his tendency to poke fun at Chicanos only perpetuates negative images of them. Defenders of Rodriguez argue that since he is one of just a handful of successful Hispanic entertainers, he should be encouraged. This latter group also contends that Chicanos must learn to laugh at themselves.

Rodriguez, 27, has built a strong reputation locally in the last two years, regularly playing venues such as the Improvisation and the Comedy Store. His street-wise, fast-talking humor relies heavily on flirting with taboo subjects, including ethnic caricatures. For his act, he adopts the persona of a "cholo," or street kid, complete with bandana and menacing attitude.

Comparing Mexicans with Iranians, he comments: "I'm short; they're short. I'm brown; they're brown. They got money; we're brown." He speculates that the offspring from a Mexican-Iranian union would be "too lazy to take hostages." He describes tortillas as "Baja frisbees." East Los Angeles, he notes, is the place white people call "Latin Country Safari."

Drawing a huge knife from his pocket, he says gleefully: "Mexican Express Card. Recognized and respected the whole world over." Wryly, he says you don't see many Mexicans on TV — "not even on Taco Bell commercials."

While his humor is political in the broadest sense, it has disappointed at least two Los Angeles Chicano community leaders. Molly Dip, regional vice chairman of the Mexican-American Political Association, and Dora Uranga, of the National Women's Political Caucus, took Rodriguez to task last month on a community affairs television show.

It had been business as usual for Trump Coup Tommy. Although the new year had hardly begun, he was already down several hundred dollars at the bridge club. However, he didn't seem to mind, for he had had several opportunities to show his remarkable talent. You surely remember that Tommy is the man who is totally inept at the bridge table unless trumps break badly. Then Tommy becomes a virtuoso of the green baize. This was his New Year's Day present to the bridge club.

West's two heart bid was a Michaels cue-bid, showing the other major and clubs, although we suspect that Mike might still be spinning in his grave to find West using his weapon, vulnerable, with so little in the way of high cards. North's raise to three hearts was, perhaps, a trifle aggressive, and East decided that he should accept the gift that his opponents were offering.

West led the jack of clubs, and Tommy quickly showed that it took more than a string of trumps and assorted high cards to beat him. He won the ace of clubs and ruffed a club in dummy. Next came the ace-king of spades and a spade ruff. Declarer ruffed his last club in dummy as East had to follow, and the groundwork was complete.

All that remained was for Tommy to lead a trump from the table. It would not have helped East to win the ace, so he covered the nine with the ten. Declarer won the jack and exited with a diamond, and East found that he could not get out of his own way. West won the ace of diamonds and returned the suit. The best East could do was ruff and exit with a club. Tommy ruffed and led his last diamond. East was forced to ruff and had to concede the fulfilling trick to Tommy's king of hearts.

Just another routine hand for Tommy!

Defense of pride

Americans are typically patriotic but rarely militaristic, and that is as it should be.

True militarism — the warrior society — is outside the American tradition and probably incompatible with democracy to boot. But it should be just as obvious that any society which scorns those pledged to defend it is probably living on borrowed time.

So, there is good reason to be heartened by a resurgence of public support and appreciation for America's men and women in uniform. During much of the 1970s, public attitudes toward the military were marked by antipathy and sometimes outright hostility. How different things are today.

The signs of a pendulum-swing away from the anti-military attitudes of just a few years ago are everywhere. The Marines in Beirut were deluged this Christmas with an affectionate outpouring of thousands upon thousands of cards, letters, and gifts from Americans they had never met. There were so many gifts that truckloads were sent on to Lebanese orphans after the Marines ran out of room to store their windfall.

The Marines, Army paratroopers, and rangers returning from Grenada were welcomed home enthusiastically as the heroes they were. But how different these homecomings were from the later years of the Vietnam era when veterans were ignored if not often shunned.

The Reserve Officer Training Corps (ROTC), once detested on many college campuses, is enjoying a robust renaissance. Enlistments, currently 102,000 nationwide, are almost double what they were 10 years ago. ROTC scholarships, which help students financially but also entail greater obligations to the military, have increased by 50 percent just since 1980.

Most National Guard and Reserve units across the country are at or close to full strength, and all of the services have been so successful at recruiting in recent years that enlistment standards have been steadily increased. Although it is true the recession accounted for part of these successes, there is no denying the importance of a resurgent pride in the military.

This newly re-established public support for the armed forces transcends politics, at least for the moment. Giving Castro a kick in the shins via Grenada made most Americans feel good, but the public increasingly doubts the wisdom of keeping the Marines in Lebanon. That has not, however, meant any lessening of public support for the beleaguered Marines trying against such odds to restore peace in that country.

At the exalted level of superpower politics, public support for the American military is an obvious plus for deterrence. A strong military amply supported by public opinion will be that much more credible in trying to discourage aggressive moves against our interests or our allies.

At the individual hearts and minds level, where loyalties are shaped and traditions sustained, the resurgent pride and appreciation Americans feel for their young men and women in uniform is no less than a sign of a healthy society. After all, could there be any surer sign of a nation's decline than that few were willing to defend it, or to honor those who did?

Another View:

Rev. Moon in court

When the Rev. Sun Myung Moon was tried for tax evasion in a federal court in New York last year, he asked that the case be heard by a judge and not a jury. In an unusual move, the government objected, perhaps believing that outside the members of his own church, the Korean evangelist did not have 12 friends in the United States. Sure enough, it was not easy to find potential jurors who did not already have strong feelings about the Unification Church and its founder. Even the judge complained that the choice was being narrowed to those "who don't read much, don't talk much and don't know much." Nevertheless, he ruled that while a defendant has a right to a jury trial, he does not have a right to a trial by a judge alone. A jury was impaneled, the case was tried, and after four days' deliberation a verdict of guilty was rendered.

Does this mean that Rev. Moon was railroaded or even, as he has charged, that he never would have been indicted "if my skin were white and my religion were Presbyterian"? The Second Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals, which affirmed the conviction last September, didn't think so. And, in fact, Rev. Moon has already had some significant victories in American courts. New York courts have affirmed the right of the Unification Church to tax exemption for its considerable real estate holdings. The U.S. Supreme Court has invalidated a Minnesota law imposing burdensome reporting requirements on churches that solicit more than 50 percent of their funds from the general public — a statute thought to be aimed at Rev. Moon's church.

While it is true that Rev. Moon has quite a few enemies in this country, in particular among the families of his young converts, he has some important allies in this case. Recently the Southern Christian Leadership Conference urged the Supreme Court to review his conviction. The American Civil Liberties Union and a number of church organizations filed a brief in his behalf and continue their support. He has been able to hire an impressive team of lawyers for his defense.

Obviously Rev. Moon, like any other defendant, deserves a fair hearing. We believe he will get one. Important questions are at stake involving both procedure — the right to turn down a jury trial — and substance — including important First Amendment issues. To what extent must the government accept a church's own definition of what constitutes a religious activity? If a church decides that funds shall be solicited and expended in a certain way, to what extent may the government challenge those decisions without violating constitutional rights?

The same standards should apply to controversial and unorthodox religions as apply to mainstream, familiar ones. It is precisely because Rev. Moon and his church are not widely popular that the case deserves attention and full Supreme Court review.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Chief undermining agency

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration has been trying to rally bipartisan support on Capitol Hill for its embattled Latin American policies. But an unlikely stumbling block has arisen in the form of an obscure development agency called the Inter-American Foundation.

Jack Anderson

This small, independent agency was set up by Congress to give money directly to groups that aid the poor, bypassing the Latin American governments. Over the years, it stoutly maintained its autonomy under both Democratic and Republican administrations.

But Reagan's hard-line anti-communist advisers suspected the foundation was giving U.S. funds to Marxist and leftist groups. The agency also came under fire from the conservative Heritage Foundation, which has close ties to the White House.

A year ago, President Reagan took "corrective" action by appointing a conservative Cuban-American, Victor Blanco, as chairman of the Inter-American Foundation's board of directors. Blanco zealously set about reforming the agency.

He criticized the foundation's grants at board meetings. He succeeded in blocking appointment to the board of at least one person he disapproved of. Finally, he engineered the ouster of foundation president Peter Bell with the help of two new Reagan appointees to the board, Assistant Secretary of State for Latin America Langhorn Motley and William Middendorf.

But Blanco's drastic overhaul of the little-known agency caught the attention of the Senate Foreign Relations Committe, headed by moderate Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill. Democrats on the committee were understandably upset at Blanco's politicization of the foundation, and some Republicans were concerned as well. They warned the White House that Blanco's enthusiastic attempt to stack the agency with conservatives could backfire.

An internal committee memorandum, reviewed by my associate Lucette Lagnado, describes Blanco as "an unguided missile" whose actions are sure to cause "unnecessary embarrassment" to the administration. It urged that the White House be asked to rein Blanco in.

Blanco was a Southern California businessman who helped deliver the Hispanic vote for Reagan in 1980. Oddly enough, the staff memo reports that the Senate committee has received a number of complaints about Blanco from the business sector — the very group that supposedly is most supportive of the administration's tough anti-communist line in Latin America.

According to foundation insiders, Blanco prepared dossiers on specific foundation grants and sent them to the president with covering letters accusing the grant recipients of ties to leftist groups.

The memo also suggested that Blanco had tried to "stack the board" during the congressional recess, and warned that upcoming House hearings "could be very unfortunate and cause unnecessary embarrassment to the administration."

"If Blanco is an unguided missile, perhaps he should be spoken to," the memo states. "If he's not, and there are real concerns about the foundation's performance, the committee would like to be briefed in detail before any actions are taken."

The memo suggested Edwin Meese, the presidential counsel, as the one to handle Blanco. Meanwhile, other senators have approached White House chief of staff James Baker to complain about Blanco and the harm he could do to the president's hopes for congressional support of his Latin American policies.

WATCH ON THE PENTAGON: Its obituary will pass unnoticed by everyone except Strategic Air Command old-timers and "Dr. Strangelove" fans, but the B-52D has passed on. The B-52D entered the Air Force's nuclear deterrent force in 1955 and was ordered phased out by the end of 1983. It probably set a record in military history — 28 years as a major weapon without ever being used for its primary purpose — the delivery of nuclear weapons. With any luck, the tradition will be kept by the B-52G, which will be given cruise missiles. The last production model, the B-52H will be around at least until 1990.

— What causes a Pentagon document to be stamped "Secret"? Sometimes it's hard to tell. Take two sentences in a recent secret document regarding Australia and New Zealand. No. 1: "Both nations ... provide training and economic assistance to the newly independent island nations of the Southwest Pacific." The secret words here are "training and economic," even though any Aussie or Kiwi knows that's the kind of assistance being given. Sentence No. 2: "In support of U.S. policies ... Australia contributes naval deployments and aviation patrols in the Indian Ocean." It's the phrase about supporting U.S. policies that makes it a secret.

INSIDE REPORT:

Shultz wiser; Tower troubled

WASHINGTON — Close friends report that Secretary of State George Shultz, who entered the Cabinet with universal esteem 18 months ago, is frustrated and unhappy in his job as President Reagan's No. 1 Cabinet officer and might resign after the November election.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

What bugs the World War II Marine officer is the failure of almost everything he has tried in the Middle East, particularly trying to get the Marines out of Beirut before the president's re-election campaign begins in earnest.

Shultz was a cheery figure in his previous incarnations as secretary of Labor and secretary of the Treasury. But friends say privately he has lost his bounce and much of his optimism in the political quicksands of Lebanon. If he does quit, Donald Rumsfeld, Reagan's special Mideast envoy, would rank high as a possible successor.

TEXAS TOWER TROUBLE

An S.O.S. has been sent to the White House by key Texas Republicans, who foresee a tight battle for the state's electoral votes in November, that retiring Sen. John Tower just is not working out as President Reagan's state re-election chairman.

Tower is a formidable campaigner and strategist, but is renowned in Texas as not much of a political organizer. Nothing has really been done so far in the state for the Reagan campaign, and Tower's official duties in his last year as chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee will conflict with political chores throughout 1984. Almost the entire month of February is blocked out for a European trip by him.

Besides competing demands on his time, Tower is troubled by enduring animosity toward him by right-wing Texas Republicans who never have forgiven him for backing Gerald Ford against Ronald Reagan in 1976. They were outraged when old-line Reaganite Ernie Angelo did not share the state chairmanship with Tower and since then they have refused offers of lesser campaign posts.

ANDROPOV WORSENS

Top Soviet analysts in Washington are studying unpublished reports indicating that Soviet President Yuri Andropov has suddenly taken a turn for the worse in his apparently deteriorating health.

The evidence is strong that a well-publicized comeback of the Soviet leader had been planned to coincide with recent meetings of the Communist Central Committee and the Soviet Parliament. He also had made a hard date for about the same time to see U.S. industrialist Armand Hammer, a longtime Soviet admirer.

But Andropov's health apparently failed to perform as the doctors had predicted. He did not show up for either political session, and Hammer was informed by the Soviet Embassy here that his appointment was being canceled. Whether Andropov has been undergoing dialysis for a kidney ailment or suffers from something more serious, U.S. experts simply do not know.

GLENN'S GEORGIA MARCH

The highly respected Sen. Sam Nunn has set aside the full day of Jan. 21 to campaign across his state of Georgia with Sen. John Glenn to bestow on Glenn his long-awaited endorsement for the Democratic presidential nomination, but the timing creates a new problem for Glenn.

Jan. 21 is the day of the Iowa Agricultural Forum in Ames, a potentially important event in the campaign to win the Feb. 20 Iowa caucuses, where Glenn must do well in his race to catch the front-running Walter F. Mondale. All other Democratic candidates are expected to be on hand, and Glenn's absence would be noted.

Marching across Georgia with the popular Nunn is an invitation Glenn cannot reject, even though it may make it impossible for him to be in Ames. The conflict in dates is symbolic of Glenn's campaign problems.

NAVY BEATS WEINBERGER

Navy Secretary John Lehman won an internal tactical tug-of-war with his boss, Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger, when President Reagan issued his statement taking full blame for the Beirut Marine tragedy before the special Pentagon commission released its highly-critical report.

Lehman wanted to get the chain of command exonerated before the commission captured the headlines. He was supported by Robert McFarlane, President Reagan's national security adviser (and a retired Marine Corps lieutenant colonel). Weinberger did not disagree with their motives in seeking to get the Navy off the hook, but wanted both the report and the Reagan statement issued the same day so the commission's criticism would be eclipsed by the president.

When Weinberger made his pitch to the White House Dec. 28, McFarlane told him, sorry, sir, it's too late. That gave the Navy its single day of exoneration. But Weinberger was correct in foreseeing that release of the report the next day would overshadow Reagan's blame-taking.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak write for Field Enterprises.

CHARLEY REESE

Politicians covering blunders

A majority on the House Armed Services subcommittee is playing the old game of civilian politicians covering up their blunders by blaming the military. The committee is blaming the Marines in general and Col. Tim Geraghty in paticular for the loss of 241 lives in the October bombing in Beirut.

Charley Reese

It even appears that some of the high brass may also do a little goat hunting. Well, there are some politicians who wear uniforms.

Obviously if a truck bomb could hit the Marine Corps headquarters building, the defense was not adequate. I said so at the time. I also said that if you stop there, you over-simplify and miss the truth.

The truth is, given the mission civilians had assigned the Marines and the restrictions placed on them, the Marines did the best they could. Their mission in Lebanon was and is presence. Yes, you read that correctly: presence. Presence is not even a military mission.

But the Marines were told: (1) your mission is presence and requires visibility; (2) you are a guest of the Lebanese government, not an occupation force; (3) you will keep the Beirut Airport open to civilian traffic and to civilian workers; (4) primary responsibility for security of the airport is the Lebanese Army's.

Marines are trained to be an assault force. Their doctrine, thinking and orientation are toward offense, not static defense. They are not CIA agents. They are not Middle East experts. They are not even trained to evaluate the kind of intelligence data, such as it was, that was being dumped on them.

In short, they were being mis-used in a political-police role for which they are not trained and they were not given any special asistance in the intelligence field. Nobody knows the Middle East, Arabs, and the intricacies of the Lebanese civil war better than the Israelis. Nobody in the world has better intelligence in the Middle East than the Israelis. Yet, a truck bomber got to them, too, at their military police headquarters in Tyre.

So it is plainly a disgrace for politicians in Washington to blame a concientious infantry officer like Colonel Geraghty for failing to foresee what the CIA, the White House, the Congress, the Defense Department, the State Department, and the Israeli Defense Force failed to foresee.

It's not just a disgrace. It is a sorry, contemptible act. It is exactly the same rotten game the politicians played during the Vietnam War when they committed unforgiveable blunders and shifted the heat entirely onto the military men who were dying because of the restrictions the civilians put on them.

Who is responsible for the deaths in Beirut? The Presient. The Congress. The State Department. The CIA. They put the Marines at the Beirut Airport. They gave them the mission. They put the restrictions on how the mission was to be carried out. They failed to give them proper support with intelligence. And they, not some infantry officer umpteen levels removed from where the decisions were being made, are responsible.

I heard the President say recently how hard it was for him to write letters and make phone calls to the families of those killed. I'm sure he was sincere. But Ronald Reagan will never know the pain and grief that Tim Geraghty feels for the loss of his men. Geraghty's wounds will never heal.

Georgia stuns Texas in Cotton Bowl, 10-9

Fumbled punt sets up Latsinger's winning touchdown run

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

DALLAS — Georgia turned a fumbled punt into the game's lone touchdown and a 10-9 victory over previously unbeaten Texas in the Cotton Bowl, ceremonial burial grounds of Longhorn national championship aspirations, Monday.

The Longhorns saw their bid for a second staight national title laid to rest here in 1971 by Notre Dame, 24-11, and by the Irish again, 38-10, in 1978.

What happened Monday night in the Orange Bowl only served to compound the agony of Texas' defeat. After the loss to Georgia, 10-1-1, Monday afternoon, it seemed the defeat cost the Steers, 11-1, their No. 2 ranking, nothing more. After all, the chances of the Cornhuskers losing to Miami seemed remote.

The big bobble on the punt was committed by Craig Curry, the "up" safety on this punt return. Curry, however, would never have been in the game, if Georgia hadn't been facing fourth and short yardage.

"The No. 1 defense was in there because we thought they were going to go for it," said defensive back Mossy Cade. "It was late in the game and we figured they'd be going for it."

In any other situation the sure-handed Michael Feldt, the junior from Midland, would have been in place of Curry, who hadn't handled a punt all season. In fact, Feldt had been in the lineup on the previous play as a nickel back and then was taken out.

As it turned out Michael's presence and absence were the difference in two touchdowns. In the first half, after John Teltschick rocked the Bulldogs back with a 60-yard punt, Georgia's Gary Moss burst up the middle on the return and would have gone all the way except for a touchdown-saving tackle by Feldt at the Texas 48 after a 29-yard return.

Cotton Bowl

EVEN WITH Curry's fumble, which gave Georgia the ball on the UT 23 with 4:32 left in the game, Texas really didn't seem to be in dire straits. It had a 9-3 lead on three Jeff Ward field goals and had been able to handle anything the Georgia offense had to offer. A field goal certainly wouldn't have advanced the Bulldog cause materially and that's all it looked like Georgia would get facing third and four on the 17. Georgia had converted only one third down in 15 tries all afternoon.

That's when quarterback Wayne Latsinger kept to the outside for 17 yards and the touchdown.

"They had run that play twice before and we had stopped it," explained defensive coordinator David McWilliams, "This time the fullback slid to the outside, instead of hitting up in there on the first man, and got in Eric Holle's way. It was kind of like the SMU touchdown by Reggie Dupard. We just got cut-off."

THE TOUCHDOWN and conversion which put Georgia ahead 10-9 came with 3:22 left but the way Georgia played defense on Texas' next, and last, possession, it looked like Coach Vince Dooley had convinced his players that Sherman was a Texan.

Still, it was a game in which the Steers seemed to be sleep-walking. The one big mistake cost them the game, but they had been playing like an accident looking for a place to happen all afternoon.

Here was a running team which ran 47 times for an embarrassing 110 yards. Earl Campbell, where have you gone? On I-back Ronnie Robinson's two best runs, he left the ball on the ground, not to mention dropping a screen pass that was so beautifully conceived that it could have gone all the way.

RICK MCIVOR, the surprise starter at quarterback, was eight-for-26 passing for 168 yards, but had two dropped passes and two inteceptions. One of his completions to Kelvin Epps for 44 yards in the second quarter was a tad underthrown or it would have gone for a touchdown. Epps had to stop and wait for the ball after beating two defenders. Result: possession on the Georgia 11, and an opportunity that didn't even produce a field goal. On third down McIvor was intercepted inside the five to kill the drive.

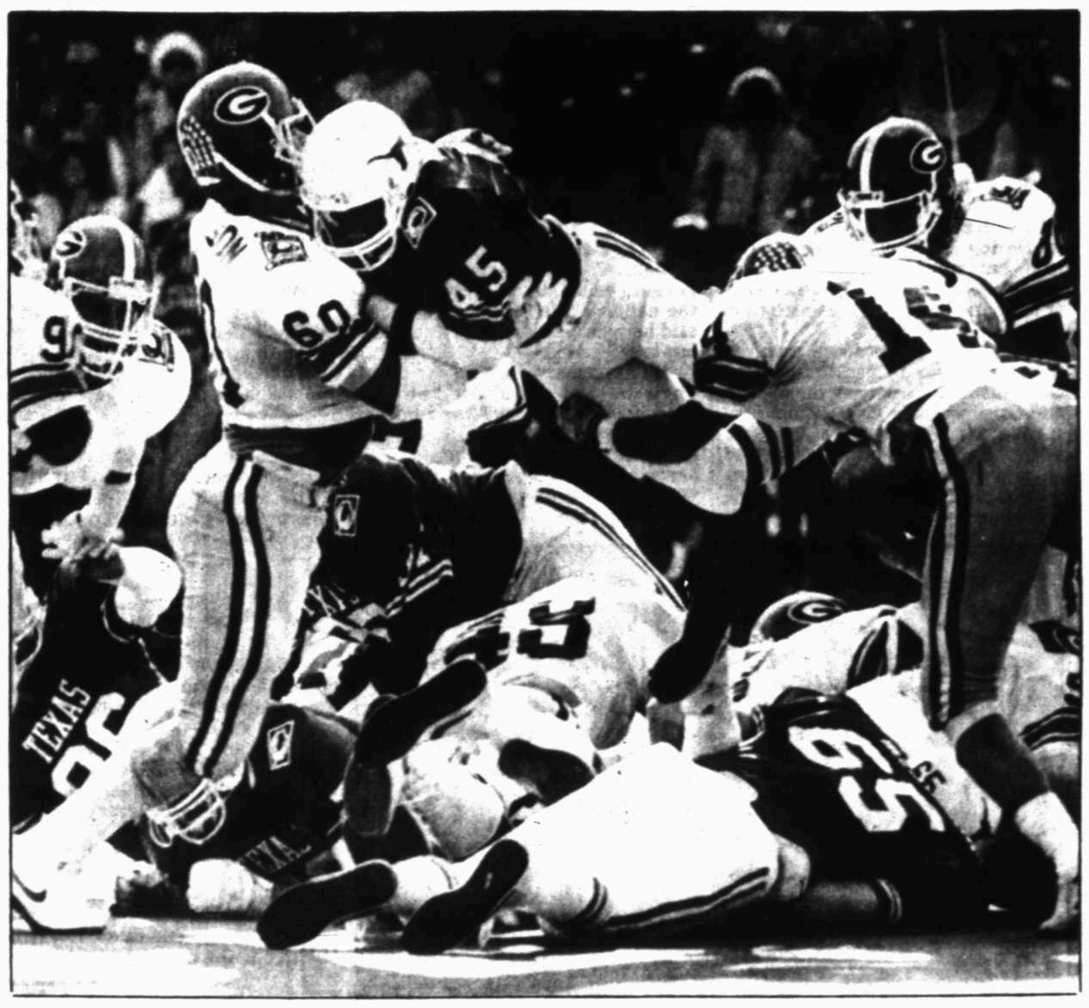

"Everything they got, we gave 'em," said McIvor. "I still think we had the better team."

Georgia's field goal by Kevin Butler in the first period, a 43-yarder that matched Jeff Ward's 22-yarder off Texas' first possession, came after Moss' 29-yard punt return. End James McKinney was flagged for an out-of-bounds shot on a play that was stopped for a two-yard loss and Butler was within three-point range.

But until the final flurry, if it hadn't been for Ward and Butler, this game would have lived up to the 0-0 forecasts of the cynics. Ward hit 41 and 21 yarders in the third period after Texas drives bogged down on the Georgia 21, fourth and a yard, and 10.

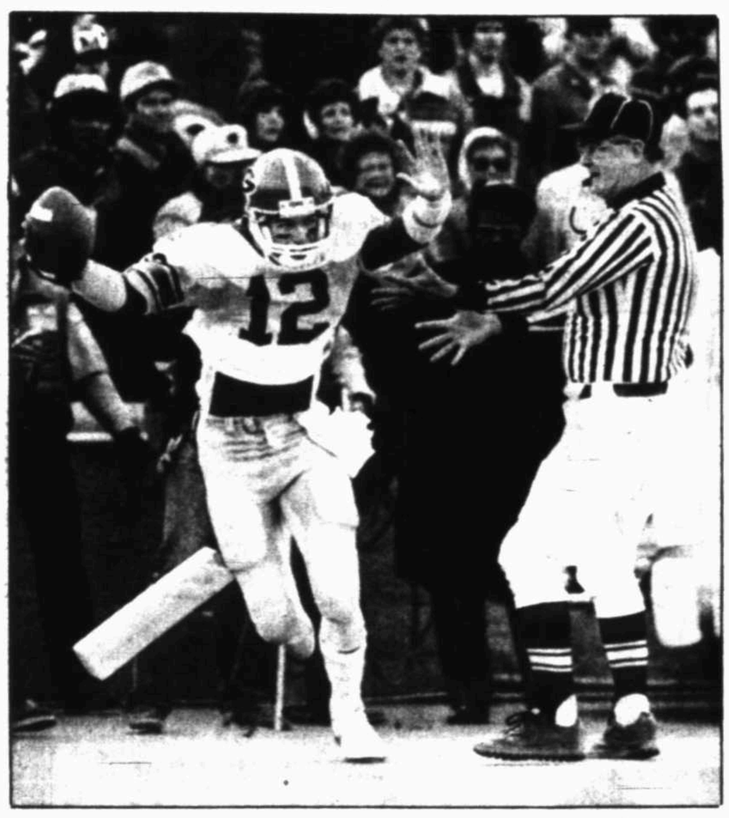

WITH THE latter kick, Ward was 16 of his last 17 attempts, but in the final period he had his second miss of the day on a 40-yarder that could have taken the game out of reach, 12-3, the way these teams were playing defense.

"We had opportunities," said All-America defensive back Cade, "but we didn't capitalize on Georgia's mistakes. Everything they got was caused by our mistakes, but against a team of Georgia's caliber when you get to the 11 and all you come out of it with is a field goal, you know you are in trouble."

Texas tailback John Walker (45) tries to dive for a first down on a third and one situation, but the Georgia defense led by linebacker Tommy Thurson (60) held the Longhorns at the 22-yard line. Texas went on to kick a field goal and ended up losing the Cotton Bowl, 10-9.

Auburn stakes claim for No. 1

Sugar Bowl

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — It was the narrowest of victories, but still wide enough that Auburn Coach Pat Dye felt justified in staking his claim for college football's national championship.

Third-ranked Auburn, 11-1 downed eighth-ranked Michigan 9-7 in the Sugar Bowl Monday night. The victory came as top-ranked Nebraska was falling to Miami in the Orange Bowl and after No. 2 Texas lost to Georgia in the Cotton Bowl.

Dye said that Auburn deserved the national title for two reasons: it's the highest ranked surviving team, and it played the nation's toughest schedule during the regular season.

"It's cut and dried," he said.

"If they are going to have a No.1 football team in America, and it's going to have any credibility — if there's any credibility in scheduling — if Nebraska loses tonight, there's no way that Auburn shouldn't be No.1."

The Associated Press releases its poll at 5:30 p.m.

KICKER AL Del Greco accounted for all of Auburn's points with three second-half field goals, chipping away at the 7-0 lead Michigan established in the first quarter on a 4-yard run by Steve Smith.

Del Greco's field goals were from 31 yards out with 6:17 left in the third quarter, from 32 yards with 8:51 left in the fourth quarter, and from 19 yards with 23 seconds remaining.

"That's the first time I ever kicked one in the final minute," the senior kicker said after the game. "I have no words to describe how happy I am."

He said he went through the game-winning scenario over and over in his mind at practice during Sugar Bowl preparations and dreamed of booting the winning kick as he sat alone in his room.

"A kicker always sits back at night and dreams about something like that," he said.

When it came, it was almost an anticlimax, he said.

"All I did was go in and kick. Everybody expected me to make it, and I should, because it was a close field goal," he said.

"The only thing that worried me was out of the corner of my eye, I saw this guy rushing from the left," he said.

"I said, 'Please, don't block it.' It missed his hand about 6 inches.

"I saw it hit the net, and then all hell broke loose."

AUBURN HALFBACK Bo Jackson, who rushed for 131 yards on 22 carries, was named the game's most valuable player, but he said the trophy went to the wrong man.

"I would like to present it to Lionel James," he said. James, Auburn's other starting halfback, got 94 yards on 18 carries. "He's my hero," Jackson said of the 170-pounder.

Jackson said that when he went on to the field and saw that Michigan was noticeably smaller than teams Auburn played through the year, he thought he was in for an easy night.

But the longer the game went, the bigger the swarming defenders got, he said.

"At times, I wanted to throw my helmet down and say, 'To heck with it. Let's go back to Birmingham,' " he said.

Michigan, averaging over 400 yards of offense a game, managed just 243 against Auburn — 118 rushing and 125 passing. And 60 of those passing yards came on the final two plays of the game.

Smith was 9-25-1 passing and rushed nine times for 14 yards.

Rick Rogers had 58 yards rushing in the first quarter for Michigan and finished with 86. Four of Smith's completions came in the first quarter, as well, as the Wolverines got 116 yards of offense to 61 for Auburn.

MICHIGAN COACH Bo Schembechler said his team played hard, but not always well.

"The defense was outstanding. We lost the game on offensive mistakes," he said. "In the second half, penalties or something seemed to stop us on every drive."

Michigan did draw penalties on two of its six possessions in the second half, but Smith's inability to complete his passes was the big factor. He hit his passing hand on a helmet in the second quarter and played with a swollen finger the rest of the way.

"I lost the feeling in it," he said. "But it didn't affect me that much — we just didn't play well."

Ohio State rallies to defeat Pitt, 28-23

Tomczak hits Jemison for winner with 39 seconds left in game

Fiesta Bowl

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — Ohio State football Coach Earle Bruce said he predicted his Buckeyes "would need 28 points" to beat Pittsburgh in Monday's 13th annual Fiesta Bowl and he proved a prophet.

Mike Tomczak's 39-yard touchdown pass to split end Thad Jemison with 39 seconds remaining gave 14th-ranked Ohio State a dramatic 28-23 victory over the 15th-ranked Panthers.

"It's good to win a close one for a change," said Bruce. "But I would have liked to have gotten the 28 points earlier."

Tomczak, who completed just five of 21 passes in the second half, found Jemison on a fly pattern to cap a 13-play, 86-yard drive in two minutes.

"It's a play that has been very effective for us," Bruce said. "We roll one way and plug the outside. It was good execution and Mike picked out his receiver and Thad made a great catch."

The touchdown spoiled Pitt's late comeback attempt as Jemison got behind Panther cornerback Melvin Dean and caught the ball as he crossed the goal line.

"Our guy should have been a little deeper, but he got frozen and that allowed their receiver to get away," said Pitt Coach Foge Fazio. "It's a hard loss for us. It breaks your heart, but it was a helluva show by two great football teams."

THE PANTHERS, down 21-14 early in the fourth quarter, rallied to take a 23-21 lead on Snuffy Everett's 37-yard field goal with 2:39 left.

Ohio State then survived a last-minute Pitt drive with reserve quarterback Chris Jelic unable to get off a pass from the Buckeye 24-yard line as time expired.

Jelic replaced fellow sophomore John Congemi, who was injured with seven seconds left. Congemi, playing in his first bowl game, finished with a Fiesta Bowl record 31 completions and 361 yards in total offense and was voted the game's most valuable offensive player.

After Keith Byars' electrifying 99-yard touchdown on a fourth-quarter kickoff for Ohio State, Pitt closed the gap to 21-20 on Congemi's 11-yard scoring strike to flanker Dwight Collins with 9:47 to go in the game.

A two-point conversion pass was batted down in the end zone by Buckeye roverback Doug Hill, however, leaving Ohio State with its slim lead.

Byars' run with 14:21 remaining came just 14 seconds after Pitt had tied the score at 14-14 on tight end Clint Wilson's recovery in the end zone of a fumble by Panther halfback Joe McCall following a 13-yard run.

Byars, a 226-pound sophomore tailback who led the Big Ten in rushing with 1,126 yards plus a league-record 19 touchdowns, took the kickoff up the middle, broke into the clear at midfield and skirted the right sidelines for the score.

The 99-yard run was one yard shy of the Fiesta Bowl record set in 1973 by Missouri's Mike Fink.

Congemi, who was 31 of 44 for 341 yards, broke Gary Huff's Fiesta Bowl completion record of 25, set in 1971 in Florida State's 45-38 loss to Arizona State.

Byars' 1-yard dive 51 seconds before halftime gave Ohio State a 14-7 lead. The touchdown capped a time-consuming 11-play, 73-yard drive in 4:52.

Huskers' losing gamble leaves No. 1 up for grabs

Throw for two, victory falls incomplete as last-minute rally comes up short

Orange Bowl

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

MIAMI (AP) — Top-ranked Nebraska went for all the marbles in the Orange Bowl and came up short in one of the great games and great gambles in college football history — one that ended with a decision that is certain to have Coach Tom Osborne second-guessed for trying to win.

Osborne's momentus call to go for a two-point conversion pass and a victory rather than one point kick and a tie came with 48 seconds to play and fifth-ranked Miami in front 31-30 — the way the game was to end.

The Hurricanes, an 11-point underdog, had lost an early 17-0 lead, but moved in front again on third-period touchdown runs by freshman Alonzo Highsmith and senior Albert Bentley.

A 24-yard touchdown run by reserve Jeff Smith had brought the Cornhuskers to within one point, and Osborne made his decision.

"We were trying to win the game," said Osborne, who disdained an almost automatic chip-shot conversion and ordered the fatal two-point pass from Turner Gill that caromed off Smith's hands.

"I don't think our players would have been satisfied to back into it (the national championship) by kicking a point-after-touchdown. You can't go for a tie. We wanted an undefeated season."

NEBRASKA PROBABLY could have assured itself a final No. 1 ranking with a simple extra point since a tie would have given the Cornhuskers an 11-0-1 record and left them as the only unbeaten team in the nation.

Instead, Miami was put in position for its first national championship.

Miami Coach Howard Schnellenberger, who immediately claimed the national title for his gutty team, said he wasn't surprised at Osborne's last-gasp gamble.

"He knew he was going for two, I knew he was going for two and everybody in Nebraska knew he was going for two," Schnellenberger said. "He's a champion, he's a players' man, he's a winner and he did what those kind of people would do."

On the subject of the national championship, Schnellenberger added, "Surely we should be ranked No. 1. Is there any question about it?"

Said Osborne, "We'll just have to leave it up to the pollsters."

CHEERED ON by a hometown crowd of 72,549, about 60,000 of them Miami supporters, the Hurricanes scored on each of their three first-period possessions and then overcame one Nebraska rally that tied the score early in the third quarter and another in the final 8½ minutes.

Miami's third-period touchdowns — a one-yard run by Highsmith and seven yards by Bentley — came less than five minutes apart and capped drives of 75 and 73 yards directed by redshirt freshman Bernie Kosar, who fired scoring passes of 2 and 22 yards to tight end Glenn Dennison in the first period.

Kosar completed 19 of 35 passes for 300 yards, an Orange Bowl record, but the difference in the game was four conversions by Jeff Davis, who also kicked a 45-yard field goal in the first period.

The triumph gave Miami an 11-1 record and 11 victories in a row — both school records — following an opening 28-3 loss to Florida.

THE 50TH Orange Bowl was one of the most exciting and capped a day of bowl upsets that left the nation without an undefeated team. Nebraska wound up 12-1, while second-ranked Texas, a 10-9 loser to Georgia in the Cotton Bowl, and No. 3 Auburn, which nipped Michigan 9-7 in the Sugar Bowl, finished 11-1 along with Miami.

Nebraska was bidding to become the first team ever to hold the No. 1 position in the AP rankings every week from the preseason poll to the final postbowl ratings.

But, said tackle Scott Raridon, "A tie would have just been a loss. I feel good about the effort we gave."

Gill, who teamed with Smith to spark Nebraska's late rally after Heisman Trophy winner Mike Rozier suffered an ankle injury after rushing for 147 yards, summed up the Cornhuskers' feelings in a subdued locker room. "It feels like we haven't done anything all year long," he said.

"No one really has anything to be ashamed of," said fullback Mark Schellen, "If he (Smith) had caught that pass, it would have been the greatest game ever."

The setback snapped Nebraska's 22-game winning streak, longest in the nation, and marked the ninth time in the 17 years the AP has been conducting a postseason poll that the No. 1 team has lost its bowl game.

NEBRASKA BEGAN its second comeback with 11:47 left in the game. The Cornhuskers stormed 76 yards in 13 plays with Gill passing 16 yards to tight end Todd Frain and 12 to split end Scott Kimball and Smith, who carried nine times for 99 yards after Rozier sprained an ankle late in the third period, breaking loose for 13.

Smith went over the top from a yard out with 8:05 left to bring Nebraska within 31-24.

The explosive Cornhuskers, who scored an all-time record 624 points during the regular season and averaged 52 points a game, got the ball back at their 26 with 1:47 to go.

Gill passed 29 yards to wingback Irving Fryar and 19 to split end Ricky Simmons. On second-and-10 from the Miami 26, Fryar, an All-American wide receiver, dropped a sure touchdown pass at the goal line. Smith made up for that miscue two plays later, taking a pitchout around right end for a 24-yard touchdown.

But the two-point pass went awry and Miami's Danny Brown covered the ensuing onside kickoff at the 33, enabling the Hurricanes to run out the clock.

UCLA's Fred Van Remortel (22) catches a pass thrown by quarterback Rick Neuheisel during the Rose Bowl Monday while Illinois defender Vince Osby rushes to catch up.

UCLA shocks No. 4 Illinois, 45-9

Rose Bowl

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — The opposing coaches in the 70th Rose Bowl had one thing in common — each was stunned.

"What can I say?" was the opening comment of UCLA Coach Terry Donahue after the underdog Bruins romped to a 45-9 victory Monday over No. 4 Illinois.

"I'm still trying to get a feel for what happened out there. We played a magnificent game.

"I don't think we saw the Illinois team that beat Ohio State, Iowa and Michigan. On a different day, I'm sure it would have been a different game."

Illinois Coach Mike White, whose club brought a 10-1 record into the contest against the unranked 6-4-1 Bruins, said, "It was a very painful defeat. I told Terry he did a real super job.

"We worked hard to get here and it was real painful," White added.

UCLA HAD a mediocre record this season and was a 4½-point underdog going into its second Rose Bowl in as many years. But making the Bruins seem even a longer shot to upset the Illini was the fact that nine players were stricken with food poisoning on the eve of the game.

Among them was quarterback Rick Neuheisel, the Bruins' star quarterback. But he recovered sufficiently to turn in one of the finest passing performances in Rose Bowl history.

Neuheisel, a non-scholarship player when he walked on the UCLA campus five years ago, completed his storybook college career by throwing four touchdown passes, three as the Bruins took control, 28-3, by halftime.

Neuheisel, beaming but still looking a little pale, said, "Food poisoning struck; I woke up at 4 a.m. sweating . . . and I got sicker and sicker. I threw up four times before the game.

"It really didn't bother me when I was in the game, but when I sat on the bench my head was a little light."

Neuheisel completed 22 of 31 passes for 298 yards and connected on touchdown throws of three yards to Paul Bergmann, 59 yards to Michael Young and 16 and 15 yards to Karl Dorrell.

Neuheisel's four-touchdown passing performance tied a Rose Bowl record set 21 years ago by Pete Beathard of Southern Cal.

"Rick Neuheisel's performance was one of the great performances in UCLA history," said Donahue.

White agreed, saying, "I thought Neuheisel did a super job of handling the pressure of our defense. He did some things against our defense that people haven't done all year."

THE UCLA defense, meanwhile, had the Illinois offense completely under control. Led by safeties Don Rogers, who had two interceptions of Illini quarterback Jack Trudeau, and Joe Gasser, who had one interception and a fumble recovery, the Bruin defense didn't allow a touchdown until the final quarter.

UCLA also held Illinois to no yards on 17 rushes during the game.

"We wanted to stop their running game, pressure Trudeau and not let them control the ball," said Rogers, who had been co-MVP of the Bruins' 24-14 upset of Michigan a year ago. "You have to be surprised by the score of this game."

Trudeau, who completed 23 of 39 throws for 178 yards and was sacked four times, said, "I made mistakes; the whole team made mistakes. It's very frustrating. This time UCLA was the better team."

"We'll be back," the sophmore quarterback added. "Right now, though, it's hard to handle."

The nine UCLA players became ill Sunday night, and team physicians determined that they had suffered food poisoning. Although the players all had eaten together, a team spokesman said the specific cause of the sickness had not been determined.

Three of the affected Bruins players — starting defensive tackle David Randle, punter Kevin Buenafe and reserve defensive lineman Tory Pankopf — were so ill they did not suit up for the game.

"The new year got off to a rough start," said Donahue, "but it turned out well."

Lady Reb's smash Odessa High, 74-32

By BRUCE CASTLEBERRY
Sports Writer

If there are any doubters left in District 4-5A about who should be the favorite among girl's basketball teams, the Lee Rebels are converting people.

The latest believers are the Odessa Bronchos, who were obliterated by the Rebs 74-32 Monday night.

Leading the way for Lee was an unlikely heroine, forward Tunya Mayberry. Mayberry, averaging 11.3 points per game, equalled her season-high output of 21 points.

It came at an opportune time. Lee's leading scorer, Felicia Farias (17.3), was hampered for most of the first half by a very physical team. Farias recorded only five points in the first half, and finished with 13. Also, post Shelley Armstrong missed the game, and for a while it looked as if the lowly Bronchos (5-13, 0-3) could pull an upset.

THE MAIN reason Odessa High posed any threat was because of inside players Bunny Smith and Diana Wilson. Both have height and scoring ability, and Armstrong's absence could have been pivotal.

But it was not to be, as the Rebs toughened up and clamped down on the rebounds, and pressed Odessa into panic.

A one-point game after one quarter became a 13-point game at the half, a 25-point game after three, and a total blowout by game's end.

"When we go to our other kids, they know they can pick up the slack," said Lee coach Shirley Stephenson. "They're not very big, but they'll hit the floor and try to rebound with anybody. Most of them are fearless."

FEARLESS is a key word. Farias, when she finally gave up on her jump shot, simply started to take the ball at Odessa's big people in the second half. They either backed down or Farias simply blew past them on the way to 13 points, mostly from layups.

Fearless was the way Jeanne McFadden, starting in place of Armstrong and giving away size and strength, scrambled for offensive boards early in the game when Lee was struggling.

And fearless was Mayberry, who scarfed loose balls like they were Cabbage Patch Dolls. Her 21 points came from inside, often against the twin towers of Wilson and Smith.

NOT APPEARING in the scoring totals as well, but equally vital to the Lee cause were the efforts of Brenda Haven, Diane White and Denise Hatch.

Haven and Mayberry got cooking in the second quarter, and again in the third after Stephenson was assessed a technical foul for questioning the official's sight.

Not that Stephenson was out of line. By the time she got her T, Odessa coach Jan Meares had been slapped with one. The game was extremely rough, and both coaches nearly bit through their tongues trying to keep cool.

But the body counts turning up on the floor got to be too much for either coach to stand. When Stephenson got hers, however, the Rebs seemed to take off, and Haven found Mayberry with passes inside. The Rebs stretched a 12-point advantage at 34-22 to 21 at 47-26, and the Bronchos were history.

WHITE AND Hatch were factors with their constant defensive pressure. Ultimately, the game was decided on the relentless Stephenson trademark, a blistering press. Whatever momentum OHS had built with their brief first quarter success, Lee's press wiped away over the course of the game.

The fourth quarter scoring read Lee 21, OHS 4, and that alone is the greatest reason basketball doesn't have five quarters in a game.

It was a team effort for Lee, 14-4 and a perfect 3-0 in district. "Once we get into district, most of the teams have scouted us and they try to stop Felicia. But I don't think they can just stop Felicia or just stop Stacy. We've seen that Tunya can score 21 points. She could anytime if they're not doubling her."

In the long run, the kind of flexibilty and balance shown by Lee could go a long way. Stephenson has never tasted a losing season as the Reb mentor.

The Rebs tip off again Thursday in San Angelo in a key district matchup. Lee has already beaten the Bobcats once this year, but district play is different. "We just hope we can take care of business," said Stephenson.

Aikens due to arrive at jail

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Federal prison officials say they expect former Kansas City Royals' first baseman Willie Aikens to surrender to them today and begin serving a 90-day sentence for cocaine-related charges.

Three former teammates of Aikens are already serving time at the Federal Correctional Institute here, Vida Blue, Willie Wilson and Jerry Martin.

MHS luck runs out in overtime

ODESSA — Trailing 52-51 with nine seconds remaining in regulation and Odessa Permian's Carolyn Gibbs at the line shooting two shots, the Midland High Bulldogs pulled off a miracle to tie the game at 53 only to lose in overtime, 58-53 in District 4-5A action here Monday night.

Gibbs, who was intentionally fouled by Bulldog Charlotte Hines, went to the line in the final seconds to shoot her two free throws. She missed the first shot but hit the second for a 53-51 lead.

With no time outs left to work with, Midland High called one anyway, surrendering the ball and sending Gibbs back to the line for one shot. She missed it.

On the ensuing in bounds pass at mid court, Bulldog Denise Lanz stole the ball and drove to the bucket but was fouled by Permian's Tami Pattillo before she could get off the shot.

Lanz went to the free throw line and missed her one-and-one opener. Lady Luck was still smiling on the Bulldogs as a Permian girl was called for a lane violation, sending Lanz back to the line. She hit both freebies to tie the game a 53 and send it into overtime.

On their first possession of the overtime period, MHS turned the ball over to Permian on a five-second count at the top of the key. Panther Laura Bartlett then canned a 12-footer for a 55-53 lead.

Two missed Midland High shots later, Permian took control of the ball and started milking the clock, running it down to 20 seconds before Bartlett was fouled and sent to the line where she hit one of two free throws. In the final seconds of OT, Katie Ford picked up two more free throws for the 58-53 final.

Gibbs and Bartlett set the scoring pace for Permian with 18 and 14 points respectively while Lanz led MHS with 19 followed by OJ Johnson with 18 before fouling out midway through the fourth quarter.

Permian is now 2-1 in 4-5A play and 7-10 overall while MHS fell to 1-2, 10-7.

ELSEWHERE IN District 4-5A play, San Angelo kept pace with Midland Lee, a 74-32 winner over Odessa High, as the only unbeaten teams remaining in league play. The Bobcats posted a 56-48 victory over Abilene Cooper to up their record to 3-0, 9-6.

Big Spring remained in a tie for thrid place with Permian at 2-1, 9-7, beating Abilene High, 69-66.

Abilene High and Odessa High have yet to win a district ball game.

Houston Baptist out shoots Northeast Louisiana, 69-61

MONROE, La. (AP) — Larry Hollins with 20 and Matt England with 19 scored more than half of Houston Baptist's points Monday night and the Huskies outshot Northeast Louisiana 23-9 from the free throw line to win 69-61 in college basketball.

Hollins and England also combined for 17 rebounds, Aniest Lavodrama added 15 points and Terry Hairston got 11 more as Houston Baptist won its second in a row and improved to 8-3 for the season.

It was 35-27 at halftime and Northeast Louisiana never threatened until Arthur Hayes' two free throws at 6:42 moved the Indians to within two points, 53-51.

Wilderness officially off limits

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal wilderness system, a battleground on which the Reagan administration and its environmental foes have fought for the last three years, passed a milestone with the beginning of the year as millions of protected acres became permanently off limits to energy development.

Under terms of the Wilderness Act of 1964, which created the preservation system, Saturday was the last day the government could approve new mining claims or drilling leases in designated wilderness areas. The provision affects at least 25 million acres of wilderness preserves.

The 1964 law gave mineral companies almost 20 years to explore for minerals and file mining claims in wilderness areas.

But effective with 1984, the act specified, wilderness areas "are withdrawn from all forms of appropriation under the mining laws and from disposition under all laws pertaining to mineral leasing" except for mining rights already in effect.

There are few existing claims, since the Interior Department historically has been reluctant to grant approval. The Wilderness Society says "a handful" of oil and gas leases have been approved over the last 20 years; at the height of the dispute over wilderness drilling, the figure was put at less than 50. No national figure exists on hard-rock mineral claims, since records of those claims are not kept in Washington.

However, about 1,000 applications for oil and natural gas leases were on file with the Interior Department last year seeking drilling rights.

The Dec. 31 deadline passed without notice in most quarters. Although the Interior Department legally had the authority to grant mineral leases until Sunday, Congress for the last two years has put riders on annual appropriations bills prohibiting the department from acting.

Those prohibitions were prompted by fears that former Interior Secretary James G. Watt would open the wilderness preserves to oil and gas companies.

Watt, who resigned in October, never made wilderness drilling part of his official program. But he complained in speeches, congressional testimony and memos about resources locked away from development, and the department under his direction moved toward wilderness development until Congress ordered it to stop.

With the Dec. 31, 1983, deadline now history, the department has no authority to approve mineral leases or claims in designated wilderness areas.

The department declined to comment late last week on the passing of the deadline, saying the issue already was moot because of the congressional ban.

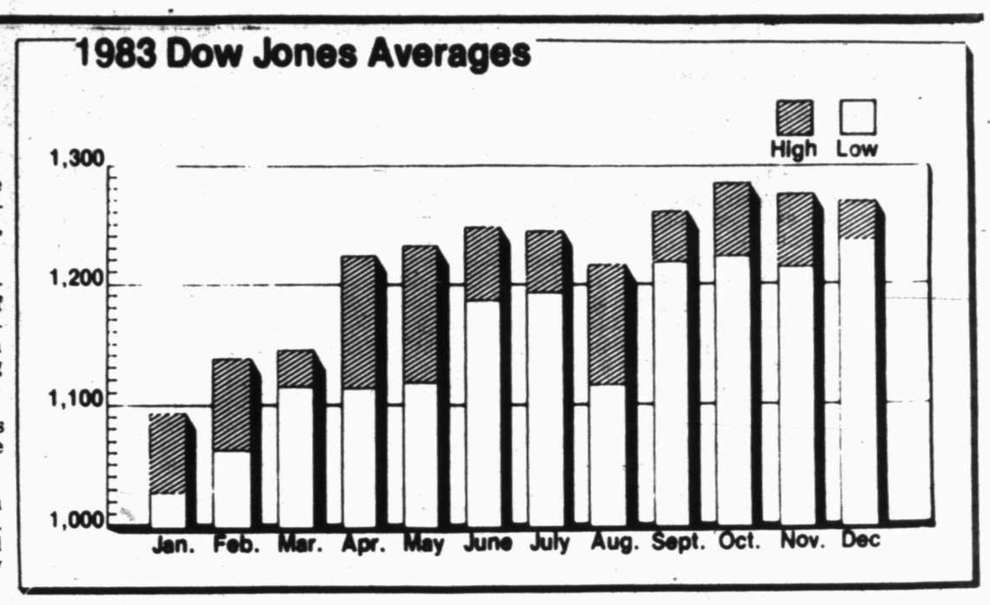

Former Sen. Gaylord Nelson, D-Wis., now chairman of the Wilderness Society, said passage of the mineral leasing deadline marked a milestone for the 20-year-old wilderness system, but noted that "there's a whole lot of stuff still pending."

Although Congress has designated 80 million acres of wilderness preserves since the act was passed, tens of millions of acres still are under study for possible protection. That land — including contested tracts in California, Oregon, Washington and Wyoming — will not be exempt from mineral leasing unless it is included in the system.

The wilderness system now includes more than 260 parcels of land covering about 3.5 percent of the land area of the United States.

Most affected by the passage of the deadline are 25 million acres of wilderness preserves located in the national forests. Another 35 million acres of wilderness are within national parks, mostly in Alaska, where mineral exploration already was forbidden.

Passage of the deadline does not totally end the dispute over wilderness development, however. About 19.3 million acres of wilderness have been designated in national wildlife refuges, almost all of it in Alaska, and there is some dispute over whether those lands are covered by the 1964 law.

Gulf's coasts clear

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

MANAMA, Bahrain (DPA) — The coasts of Persian Gulf countries are clean again following a number of oil catastrophes last year that polluted large sea areas, the Center for the Protection of Marine Life in the Gulf announced here Monday.

The center said that the Greek tanker that sank off Qatar's coast in December only caused a little pollution as most of the 46,000 tons of crude oil on board burnt in a fire on the ship before it sank.

And Iran recently told the center that it had capped one of the leaking offshore wells in the Nowruz oil filed, which had been bombed by Iraqi planes earlier in the year.

A MESSAGE TO GULF SHAREHOLDERS

THANK YOU FOR YOUR SUPPORT. YOU WON.

A preliminary count of the recent special meeting shows—

- You voted decisively in favor of your Board's proposal to reincorporate in Delaware. Excluding the shares owned by the Mesa group, the margin of victory is nearly 3 to 1. We thank you for that vote of confidence.

- You were not tricked. You were not misled by empty promises or the gimmicks put forth by the Mesa group.

- You kept the focus of this vote on the real issue: What's best for the long-term interests of our shareholders.

You delivered a strong message to us to do what is necessary to continue to enhance your investment in Gulf. Thank you.

Ector County parks hit by '84 budget cuts

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Lack of funds may mean a lack of fun for Ector County residents who count on the county's extensive park system for entertainment.

The Parks and Recreation Department was one of the hardest hit by budget cuts approved by county commissioners that sliced $1.86 million from the county's $24 million budget.

These cuts to a tentative 1984 budget were made to keep the county from deficit spending and replenish reserves depleted by past spending. They do not include cuts that would need to be made should voters approve rollback of the tax rate in this month's election.

Cut by about $500,000 was the parks and recreation budget, which bankrolled maintenance, operation and improvements on the county's extensive park system and financed recreational programs offered in the past.

The cut represents nearly one quarter of the department's budget in the past two years. Commissioners approved $2 million budgets in 1982 and 1983, but saw fit to cut back to about $1.5 million for the coming year.

About one quarter of the department's staff was cut, taking the total workforce from 56 to 43 positions. In terms of salary and benefits, the county will save approximately $280,000 in the coming year.

Improvements to the county's 40-park, five-pool system scheduled during the first year of a five-year plan will be delayed, as the department will be hard pressed to maintain the past levels of services.

Remaining employees will be asked to produce more in the coming year. Several management positions were cut out, with the managers taking a step down while remaining with the county.

"Before they were supervisors, now they're gong to be working supervisors," said Park Superintendent Doug Kupper.

The recreation department, which coordinated all programs on playgrounds and in parks during summer months, was disbanded, with the director moved into the parks department.

Fred Gwinn Pool will not be re-opened next summer for use by residents on the northwest side of Odessa. This pool's renovation fell victim to the budget cutbacks made by county commissioners, with voters to decide this month whether there will be further cuts.

"This coming year, I expect to see very little as far as recreational activities," said Director Roland Hancock. He added, "We're going to devote a lot of energy to having some of those programs."

With no funds for hired help, volunteers will be called on to shoulder most of the supervisory load. Organizing and coordinating a volunteer force takes time, noted Hancock.

Residents on the northwest side will be without their pool in 1984. Floyd Gwinn Pool, the first pool in Odessa, was scheduled to undergo major improvements, but will not be opened for the coming season.

Federal revenue sharing funds headed for this department totaling $244,000 may be moved to another county department, as was $180,000 earmarked to help refurbish the Gwinn pool, built in the 1940's.

Softball fields will not get the attention they did in past seasons, as about $200,000 in machinery and equipment was also cut. Hancock plans to propose doubling field maintenance and tournament fees to finance more groundskeeping on fields he insists were not well maintained in the past.

"We were just getting to an acceptable standard after years of neglect," said Hancock.

Summer jobs for teens on playgrounds and at swimming pools are in jeopardy, as large portions of the department's budget to pay this help were cut. But $120,000 was left in the park budget which Kupper said will be used to pay part-time help for summer jobs.

"I should be able to hire about as many people as last year to help fill the gaps," said Kupper.

Park systems including facilities within city limits are rarely maintained by counties. But Kupper suggested that Ector County has been successful in developing and maintaining parks and recreation inside and outside Odessa.

"It's been a good system," he said, suggesting that "extenuating circumstances" can be blamed for the cutbacks. The superintendent speculated that the city might take over some of the county facilities, like Gwinn Pool, that are inside its city limits.

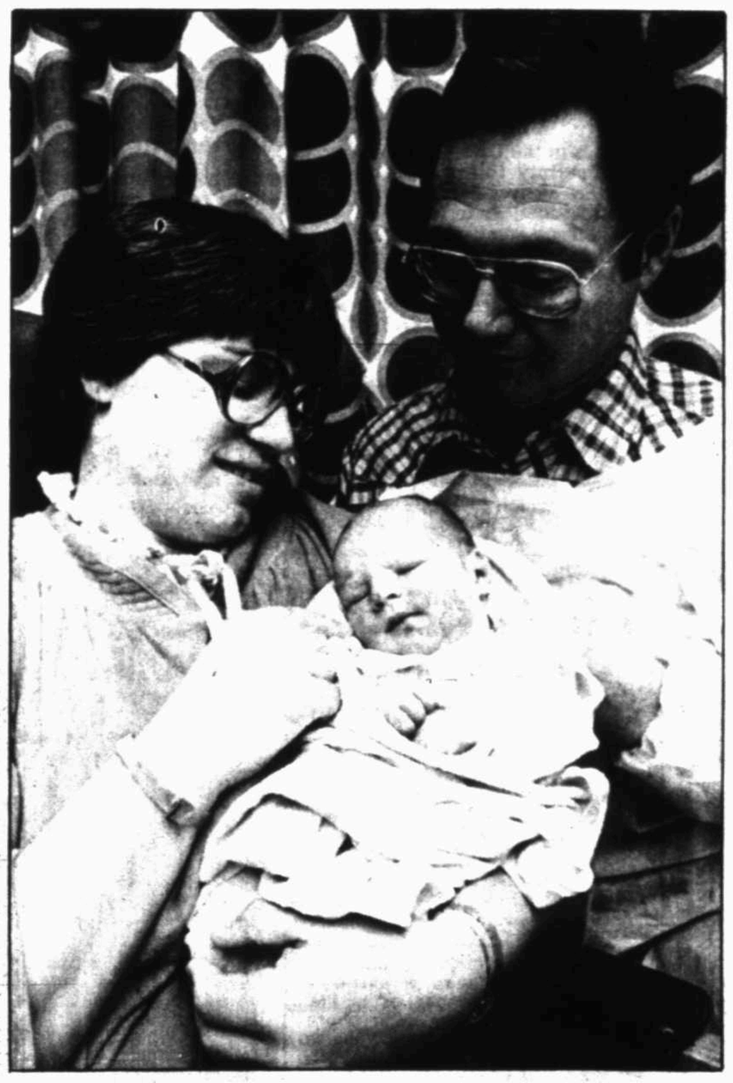

"It's a known fact that when budget cuts come, the natural resources or parks department is the first to get zapped," said Kupper. "Although we feel parks are important, most officials don't feel that way."

Hancock questioned the wisdom of making parks a low priority. A nationwide survey indicated recreation stood third on businesses' lists of factors considered in moving facilities to a city, with police and fire protection seventh and eighth on the list.

"I would rate it (parks and recreation) as an essential," said Hancock in rating it with other services provided by the city. Many, like police and fire, are mandatory according to state law.

"The softball teams will think we're essential in the spring," added Kupper.

"I'm going to prove we're a necessary department despite the cuts," Kupper said. "It might backfire, but I'll do my damnd st no matter what they do to me."

Fire department starts fitness regimen

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Midland police officers "can get ready" to participate in a mandatory physical fitness program similar to the one that got under way for city firefighters today.

"I haven't approached the police department yet," City Manager James Brown said Friday, "because we've been waiting to get the fire department program off the ground.

"Then I'll talk to Chief Gideon (Chief of Police Wayne Gideon). But the police department can get ready for it."

Starting today, all of the city's 135 firefighting personnel — including the administrative and clerical staffs — begin a daily 1½-hour fitness regimen designed by the YMCA and set up at the central fire station and at each of the six sub-stations across town.

Dispatchers are not required to participate because of the odd shifts they work, but they've agreed to work out voluntarily, Brown noted.

The program tailors individual standards for each person — with those over 35 having to take physical exams before participation — and periodic testing will take place every six months to determine the progress achieved.

"There's no way they hide from it," said Brown. "They must show improvement — up to a point. We don't plan on making Olympians out of them.

"One reason for the program is that I'm a fitness person myself. It's good for physical and mental hygiene. But I've been reading about firemen with heart conditions and other problems.

"They go from doing nothing on duty to running up stairs and climbing ladders. One of the biggest killers of firemen is heart attacks.

"One of the ironies is that they go through very strenuous physical testing when they're hired. Then they do nothing and get out of shape very fast. It's for their own protection — and the citizens get a better job when the men are in shape."

Included in the equipment — which cost about $12,000 — are exercycles and step-boxes.

While there's been some grumbling about the program, Fire Chief James Roberts said "the large majority are for it.

"We found some men as young as 23 with high blood pressure that had not been diagnosed before. We feel the program will benefit both the men and their families.

"Many cities have addressed this problem, and that's what we're doing. It's basically a cardiovascular program to prevent heart attacks. Los Angeles greatly reduced sick leave and on-the-job injuries with their program.

"There'll also be flexibility excercises to address fractures, sprains and strains — the major injuries suffered in firefighting.

"We should start seeing less sick leave and fewer workers' comp claims under the program."

Staff Photo by Paul Gilbert

Firemen Wayne Teeple, left, and Monty Mansell demonstrate one facet of the mandatory physical fitness program launched today for most of the city's firefighting personnel — including the clerical staff. City officials say the police department may also soon find themselves pumping iron and shedding excess pounds.

Holiday season means marathon eating, extra pounds

Boy, am I glad Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Year's are over. I know this is the season to be jolly but when the season rolls around I roll around.

I have been marathon eating since the holiday season began. I was in Georgia and Tennessee during the Thanksgiving holiday eating turkey, dressing, cranberry sauce, rolls and every dessert possible. I ate enough there to make me not want to ever taste my parents' cooking again.

On my return trip to Midland, I was still on an eating spree — snacking on peanuts in Memphis, eating chicken in Little Rock and oozing pudding down my throat in Dallas.

I wanted to stop feeding my face but I couldn't. I was feeling guilty about my obsession with food, but did I stop? No, I wanted more.

I couldn't wait until the Christmas season arrived. They say Christmas is the time to be with friends and loved ones. Well, there I was with my friends and my loved one — food.

I was accepting invitations to every party, devouring all foods my friends brought to work and gladly partaking from all fruit baskets given to me.

Why was I doing this to my body when only a few months ago I was attending exercise classes, drinking liquid diet meals and jogging around the track?

Christmas only comes once a year and I was making the most of it. I was savoring all entrees as if that meal would be my last. Yes, I was counting calories but the numbers kept going up, not down.

There were the German chocolate cakes and the Italian cream cake, Boston cream pie, French vanilla ice cream and Long Island ice tea so mesmerizing that I felt I was in each city or country "eating, drinking and being merry."

As the season progressed, I noticed that I was failing the "Special K pinch." Much to my dismay, I was gaining weight. My once OK body reminded me of an old movie — "The Blob." If I owned a wide black belt and a red dress, I could have easily passed for Mrs. Claus (no padding needed).

I couldn't understand it. I was exercising — exercising my right to my opinion.

I was jogging my memory.

I was throwing my weight around.
I was picking up the check
I was jumping to conclusions.
I was swimming in paperwork.
I was wrestling with decisions.
I was running up charge cards.
I was skipping exercise classes.

I was letting my fingers do the walking.
I was bouncing ideas off my coworkers.

This happens every year. It should be no surprise to me. I kill myself eating and the moment the season ends I feel guilty — wanting to give back everything I've eaten within the last month — wanting to repent and get my life back in order.

It's not that easy, I'm afraid. I want to undo the damage I've done. Better yet, I wish I had a dollar, instead of pounds, for every black-eyed pea I ate on New Year's Day.

I've made up my mind 1984 is going to be different. I made my New Year's resolution and when the next holiday season rolls around I'm not going to eat like I did before. I promise — just like I promised in '83.

Amputee adjusts to using feet

ANGLETON (AP) — Thirty-seven years ago, a doctor in a small Arkansas town showed up drunk at a hospital to deliver a baby.

It was a difficult breech birth with the child's arms spread wide apart. The baby girl was born with her arms broken in several places.

The doctor, in his foggy state, decided to amputate both arms at the shoulders.

It was an action that would haunt him for 18 years, long after he was removed from practice and banned from the hospital.

But far more profound was its effect on that baby girl.

That child was Janie Welch, who lives today in Angleton with her husband and 14-year-old daughter, Robin. Her oldest daughter, 18-year-old Stephanie, lives and works in Houston.

Mrs. Welch speaks calmly in a well-modulated voice about the circumstances that took her arms.

"What's most important, the things that count, are what's on the inside," she says. "The three most important things in life — your heart, your mind and your soul — are all on the inside."

She is petite, with bright dark eyes and short dark hair, but her leg muscles are thick from use. Her feet act as her hands and they move with expressive grace, punctuating her words with unselfconscious gestures.

"My mother wouldn't hold me until I was 6 months old — I guess I repulsed her. I'm a very affectionate person. I've decided that's why I like a lot of affection," she says.

Using her feet as hands came naturally. She says her father remembers her automatically picking up a rattle with her feet as an infant.

And though her family always treated her like everyone else, growing up was not rosy. There were family embarrassments that she doesn't like to talk about even today.

"All of us had a hard childhood," she says. "It's hard for me to separate what problems I had from the lifestyle and from not having hands.

"My family really treated me just like normal. I think I'm normal. That really bothers me when people say I'm different. It never really bothered me that I had no arms because I just thought I was normal."

Mrs. Welch wore prostheses — artificial arms — that she calls "hooks." Since she lived in a small community while growing up, everyone knew and accepted her.

Self-consciousness began with onset of the dating years. And then Mrs. Welch, who had then become extremely adept with her feet, forced herself to always use the hooks in public. It was a time of self-denial, she says today.

"I had grown up with all these boys who knew I used my feet but when I started dating, I only went with ones who had seen me with the hooks."

Her first anger about the situation came when she was 18 and the doctor who had cut off her arms telephoned her mother to apologize.

"My mother told me to get on the extension. He said he's always felt bad about it and if there was anything he could do, to let him know. I felt angry then, for the first time. I felt like he was admitting guilt."

She went to college with plans to be a social worker, then abandoned the ambition to get married.

"My husband didn't know I used my feet until after we were married," she said. Finally, he caught her. "But he was real nonchalant — he didn't really say anything," she says.

They had two children and Mrs. Welch settled into a lifestyle she realizes was a form of escape.

"When we were first married, I lived in my own little world. We knew eveyone on the block. It took me a long time to realize I have an impact on people when they see me using my feet."

There were marital problems. And she felt smothered. "I was a traditional wife. I took care of the babies and Steve did everything else."

The turning point came when Mrs. Welch was 27. She and Steve went to a barbecue put on by some of his work acquaintances.

Mrs. Welch felt different. First, everyone left her alone to play volleyball. Then when they sat down to eat, she used her foot to hold her fork.

A woman seated next to her looked on with disgust, Mrs. Welch recalls, and then moved to sit as far away as possible.

"I had never had that happen to me before and it was really hard to take," she says.

She and her husband separated and Mrs. Welch rebelled.

"I had never really accepted me for me without arms until I was 27. I did a lot of crazy things in rebellion ... and I found acceptance," she says.

AP Laserphoto

Janie Welch lost her arms when a drunken doctor amputated the limbs at birth. Although she has artificial arms, she says she has always used her feet instead.

A month after the divorce was final, they remarried. She expanded her household role and evolved into the person she is today — a likeable, personable woman.

These days, she works on writing a book and occasional poems, takes classes at Brazosport College, enjoys swimming and riding her three-wheel bike and has given talks at a Christian center and a nursing home.

"I think you have to love yourself in order to like or love anyone else," she says. "And I think in order to do that, you have to be the kind of person you can like.

"I like me. I'm satisfied with me. I'm not perfect and I have a lot of faults. But I like me. I have a lot more self-confidence than I had before and that was hard to acquire."

Officer's murder nine years ago remains unsolved

ALICE (AP) — Mathew Murphy was working the night shift nine years ago in what was to be his last patrol for the Alice Police Department.

During the wee hours of a chilly December day, the policeman was killed in the line of duty. His murder remains unsolved.

Murphy was felled with a .22-caliber automatic Dec. 1, 1974. It is believed he was attempting to question the occupants of a vehicle with Iowa license plates at a city intersection.

He was shot four times, twice in the chest and two times in the left arm. Murphy was pronounced dead at 12:45 a.m. shortly after arriving at the Alice P&S Hospital emergency room. He never regained consciousness.

Murphy had radioed the department at 12:30 a.m. saying he stopped the vehicle with an Iowa license plate.

Shortly afterward, Murphy asked for a check on the ownership of the car he had stopped, giving the license plate number and also asking for a check on the stolen car report.

This was the last transmission from Murphy.

The next voice heard over the APD radio came at 12:33 a.m. and was from patrolman Eleodoro Garza, who had been on patrol and was moving to his routine backup position to assist Murphy.

"He's shot," radioed Garza.

According to police records, Garza had been temporarily confused by the reflection from Murphy's unit in a service station window and made a wrong turn, driving for two blocks until he realized he had been misled.

As he was making a U-turn to drive back where he could see Murphy's parked unit, he saw the officer stagger and fall. It was then Garza made his report of the shooting.

Jim Wells County Sheriff Oscar Lopez was chief of police at the time of the slaying and he remembers Matt Murphy as an "outstanding officer."

Lopez said that as soon as he arrived at the scene, he ordered an all-points bulletin on the Iowa license plate, roadblocks in the area and recalled all off-duty personnel.

"I rode with Murphy in the ambulance to the hospital, but he never regained consciousness.

"As far as we are concerned the case is still open. It may be five, 10, 15 or 20 years before we get a good lead.

"The file is in the DA's office and we will certainly follow up any leads. We flew all over the state with leads in other counties to follow up reports. We even went out of state on a lead, but it turned sour," he added.

In an unsolved murder case like this one, Lopez said, there are no witnesses or nobody wants to come forward.

"There may be two or three people involved and in the years ahead they may get mad at each other and come up with information," he said.

Lopez added that even now the Murphy case is still a topic of conversation among area lawmen and "we still have the case pending."

Murphy previously had worked in the narcotics division in undercover work and in April 1974 had been commended by the Alice City Council when 35 narcotic violators were taken into custody as a result of his undercover work.

Lopez said he did not feel that Murphy's slaying had any connection with his undercover narcotics work.

Shortly after the Murphy slaying, a task force was formed to lead the investigation, Lopez said. Alice Mayor Joe Ramirez also started a fund for any information leading to a conviction. But the case never was solved.

"Within three minutes after Murphy's death the whole county was surrounded and roadblocks were set up on the routes to Laredo, San Antonio, George West and Robstown.

"We never did locate the car. We went to every motel and checked out everything.

"We received information that the car was seen going west from the scene and conflicting information saying it was going east."

In following up their leads, Lopez said, an FBI agent went to Iowa and found the license plate had been stolen from a junked car.

"We brought in a lot of people for questioning, but nothing panned out. There was nothing concrete.

"We had a lot of people call in and give information, but we hit a wall. There were no witnesses to the actual shooting."

Lopez was at the police station when the shooting occurred. Driving to the scene, Lopez said all he remembers seeing were the red lights of a patrol unit.

The murder of Murphy was the first slaying of an Alice policeman in the history of the city.

Murphy left behind his wife Diane, son Pat and daughter Allison.

A native of Gilmer City, Iowa, Murphy had made his home in Live Oak County for 10 years before his death. He had served as a deputy sheriff and had been a patrolman with the police in Garland, a Dallas suburb, before joining the Alice Police Department in 1971.

"We are hoping and praying the case will be solved and with a new program, HALT (Help Alert Law Enforcement Today), we will be paying for information hoping to clear up unsolved crimes in Jim Wells County," Lopez said.

"We're hoping something may help."

Store owner gets satisfaction advising customers

ARLINGTON (AP) — Visitors to Betty Fowler's feed store are reminded of America's heritage when the earthy smell of grain wafts into their nostrils, and they glimpse the sacks of feed for livestock and pets stacked in dark corners.

Mrs. Fowler, owner of the Watsonville Feed & Supply Store, stocks feed for horses, cattle, pigs, goats, rabbits, birds, dog, catfish and other creatures. And she sells about 35 to 40 tones of feed every week.

"Just a lot of hard work and poor pay," says Mrs. Fowler of her job. But she hints that she gets satisfaction out of advising customers on the right type of feed to buy.

Mrs. Fowler, formerly an Arlington hairdresser, opened the store with her husband 18 years ago. Her husband died five years ago.

She said she possessed about the same understanding of the feed store business as that of any average city dweller. "But the first thing I knew, we were in the feed business," she told the Dallas Times Herald.

"For quite a while there, I spent a lot of time studying it. If you're going to recommend anything to a customer, you've got to know what you're doing."

Most of her grain is sold in 50-pound bags, constructed of layers of heavy paper and sewn shut at the top.

The feed store is open seven days a week. Mrs. Fowler said Saturdays and Sundays are busy because many people who live in the area lay in supplies for their animals and work with their herds.

Watsonville is a small community in Southwest Arlington, dotted with little lakes and ponds. Mrs. Fowler said she sells quite a bit of fish food.

"This was my husband's brainstorm," she said. "He had been a builder in Arlington for many years, but his health broke and he couldn't fight the construction business anymore, so he decided we'd open a feed store.

"I didn't think he was serious at first," she said.

Mrs. Fowler said many of her customers, who have city jobs, have moved into the area in the past few years to bring a little country flavor into their home life.

Many own a house on several acres, with a garden and some animals, she said.

"Just everybody has horses, it seems," she said, adding that the store sells more bags of horse feed than anything else.

Sales increased during the recent freeze and unseasonably cold weather in the area, she said, because animals burned more calories to survive.

A problem arose when a truck loaded with 25 tons of feed, destined for the store, became stuck on an ice-glazed road in Muskogee, Okla., she said.

Odessan in critical condition

GARDENDALE — An Odessa man was in critical condition this morning after his Jeep failed to negotiate a curve and rolled over near here late Monday night.

Johnny Rines, 39, suffered internal injuries in the crash and was taken to Medical Center Hospital.

According to the Department of Public Safety, Rines was eastbound on Cottonwood Drive near Hollyhock Street about 10:45 p.m. when his 1978 Jeep left the road on a curve and traveled 200 feet in a bar ditch before hitting a fence and large rock.

The vehicle then rolled over at least one time, ejecting Rines.

Home burglarized

In a burglary complaint to city police, Network Security reported that the Harry Miller residence at 2000 North L St. was broken into. Taken were a mink coat and an AM/FM portable radio worth a total of $18,050. Entry was gained by prying a door.

Single life shines brightly for quartet of blondes

Hearst Feature Service

Being single isn't sad for four famous blondes, according to recent interviews with Harpers Bazaar.

Just now coming into her own professionally and starring on the Broadway stage, 36-year-old Farrah Fawcett, once married but now divorced, has revamped her personal life.

For the past three years, Bazaar said she has embraced both a sense of domesticity in the form of a loving, sometimes live-in relationship with actor Ryan O'Neal, and also a tough independence that comes from maintaining her own house.

"At this age," she said, "I feel I can go into a relationship feeling very up-front about it. 'I don't need your money, your house, your security. I do need your love, your understanding.'

"Ryan came into my life at a time when I needed a great deal of freedom to concentrate on my work, so it has made sense for us to maintain separate residences.

"My career is number one, so our private moments are very few.

Merete Van Kamp

Christie Brinkley

Farrah Fawcett

Arielle Dombasle

"My two priorities are doing good work — and eating great food! Usually it's take-out in the apartment. Even if we want to do something simple like walk to dinner in the neighborhood, somebody recognizes me. It's 'Sign my shirt!' or worse, 'Sign my chest!'

Christie Brinkley, model, actress and author, said she loves being single, largely because of the spontaneity it allows.

"You can do things on a whim, not make plans and just see what comes up," she said. "And you don't have to be concerned that you're causing anyone worry."

On the other hand, Miss Brinkley said she firmly believes men and women are destined to live with someone else.

"It's just a question of finding the right one," she said.

Of singer Billy Joel, with whom she's often photographed, she only said, "We're good friends."

Merete Van Kamp, 21, is the daughter of a German ballerina and a Danish aluminum magnate. An exquisite blonde, she has not yet reached superstar stature, but she is an accomplished actress and recently appeared as Princess Daisy in the television mini-series of the same name.

As an up-and-coming actress, she admitted that money wasn't really a problem — only finding the time to spend it.

As for men in her life, there is just one at the moment, horse breeder Edward Nahem, who pursued her relentlessly after a fervent first encounter in Los Angeles, according to Bazaar.

Although they've settled into a live-in relationship, Miss Van Kamp said that acting is her consuming passion.

"I'm just very comfortable as is," she added.

Blonde Arielle Dombasle is starring in her third Eric Rohmer film, "Pauline At The Beach," which has graduated her to leading lady stardom. She now has 14 movies to her credit, even though she is only in her mid-20s.

Born in the United States, Miss Dombasle has lived in Mexico and now resides in Paris, where she enjoys a rather active single life, according to Bazaar, but work would seem to be her first love.

In Mexico at age 14 she wrote, produced and acted in her own plays, and last year she produced her own film, a semi-surrealist movie called "Chasse-Croise."

"For the next one, I'll write it, but I'd like to have a real producer," she said. "It's too hard to do everything by oneself."

Ladies' Home Journal celebrates 100th birthday

By The Los Angeles Times—
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Myrna Blyth, editor-in-chief of Ladies' Home Journal, was invited here for a private chat with President Reagan to receive his congratulations on the magazine's 100th birthday.

In New York, her 13-year-old son Graham was in the midst of an interview for a new school.

Should she stay home to see Graham through, or should she come to the White House?

The decision boiled down to one of today's most familiar questions: Job or family?

"I came to Washington, and left my husband, Jeffrey, home to go with Graham," said Blyth, a bit shamefaced, in a recent interview.

HALF OF HER readers (in a poll answered by 86,000) said they think they'd handle a similar situation differently. If several events were scheduled for the same night — a child performing in a play, a spouse making a speech, or the woman's mother's birthday — 50 percent said they would choose the child's school play.

Blyth's own experience is not what you'd call the average woman's. She is editor of a major women's magazine that has a circulation of more than 5 million, the author of two novels and many short stories, wife of a British journalist and mother of two sons. She keeps an apartment in Manhattan and a weekend house in Connecticut. The demands on her time are certainly far greater than that of most people's jobs. Even so, the basic problems are much the same as for most women.

AND SHE COPES, as most women do, by compromising.

The day Blyth returned from Washington, she and her family went out to their weekend home. "It's a way for all of us to be more together. In the city there are too many distractions that lead us in different ways."

Next time she gets invited to Washington, Blyth said she hopes to make amends by bringing one or all of her family to the White House with her. Her 16-year-old son, Jonathan, described by his mother as really idealistic and a superpatriot, got the presidential stick pin Reagan gave her.

GRAHAM, THE COMPUTER expert in the family, has talked his father and mother into buying a word-processing program, so they can benefit from the computer as well. Not long ago, Ladies' Home Journal ran an article about the need for women to learn about computers to keep their career gains.

Blyth finds that her personal life helps her with ideas for the magazine. In the anniversary issue, husband-and-wife team Clive Enos and Sondra Forsyth Enos interpret the readers poll to show what women are like today.

According to the poll, the average reader is 38 and has been married for 15 years. And 64 percent of the readers have never been divorced. Seventy-one percent have children, most in school, many teen-agers. Eighty percent have no desire to stay at home and keep house full time.

BLYTH HAS BEEN married 20 years. "I always say I married at 12, but actually I was 23. Back then, people did marry in their early 20s," she said. "I even use my husband's name as a byline."

As do 71 percent of women in the Journal's poll, Blyth thinks her biggest problems with her children and her husband are "what I call the chores wars: day-to-day irritation over household chores. We hear from women that the major fights in the family are not over drugs and staying out late by the children or infidelity on the part of the husband, but simply over setting the table, scraping dishes before they go in the sink, or putting their socks in the wash."

Pudgy police pose problem

Hearst Feature Service

Shift work, stress and sinkers — those are the key reasons why some police officers become, well, pudgy.

Balloons in blue, overweight cops are creating headaches for police agencies throughout the country. Their superiors — and members of the public — wonder whether these lumbering lawmen can keep up with the demands of the job, which often requires brief spurts of intense physical activity.

In addition, fat cops, like other overweight people, are more likely to fall victim to heart attacks and other ailments associated with obesity, such as diabetes.

The subject has come up all across the country:

— In Miami, an officer was disciplined for shooting at a fleeing suspect, rather than chasing him. "If you weren't so damned fat, you could've caught him," was the unofficial department reaction.

— In New York, obese officers may find themselves subtly disciplined as they are locked into undesirable assignments or passed over for promotions.

— In San Francisco, overweight officers hired since weight standards were imposed in 1971 are permitted a specified period of time to take it off. If they fail, the officers then face departmental discipline and a formal hearing before the Police Commission, which could rule for suspension or dismissal.

Since biannual weigh-ins began in San Francisco, "only a handful" of officers have come before the commission, according to Capt. Richard Klapp, who oversees the department's personnel division. "This is the infinite minority of officers," he said.

In San Francisco, acceptable weight ranges from 108 pounds for a 5-foot tall male cop to 265 pounds for his 6-foot-6 fellow officer. Acceptable weight ranges for female cops have been changed recently to make more women eligible for the department. For example, a 4-foot-6 female officer must weigh more than 86 pounds.

One of the authorities who oversees the department's weigh-ins rejects the formal discipline hearing set up for the few fat cops.

"It's obvious this is not a criminal offense, so it is sad that charges are the result," said Dr. Norman Steiner, the department's doctor for 15 years. "We all recognize that it is not easy to lose weight, especially if you have a big appetite and a good cook at home. The city code prevents me from doing any treatment. What I can do is encourage them to see a doctor."

Most of the overweight cops are on night watches, according to Al Casciato, president of San Francisco Police Officers' Association.

"The department hires officers within the weight range, makes them exercise two hours a day at the academy and sends them out onto the night watch with no provision for them to exercise," Casciato said. "The nutrition's bad because whatever's open is a greasy spoon. After working all night and maybe spending time in court during the day, only the most super-dedicated jock will continue to work out."

Some cops eat to combat job boredom. And then there are sinkers, gut bombs or doughnuts, which according to cop lore play an integral role in swelling the silhouette.

"Look at a police officer's job. It generally involves just sitting in that patrol car," said Jim Fyse, a senior fellow with the Police Foundation, a private, nonprofit research group funded by the Ford Foundation. Fyse's group studies police departments throughout the country.

Fyse pointed out that there is little legal action a department can take to force cops to conform with slimmer standards. And as more kinds of people become police officers, it is increasingly difficult to develop standards that apply across race and sex lines, Fyse said.

The inability of a law enforcement agency to act is mirrored in a current case involving three California Highway Patrol officers. Each faces dismissal after failing a physical performance test on a stationary bicycle.

The California Assocation of Highway Patrolmen — the officers' union — has filed suit on their behalf.

"One of the concerns we have is that the department hasn't gone the extra yard to help these people," said Chris Voight, attorney for the officers, referring to his clients and about 100 other officers who face termination because they also failed the fat tests.

Richard Simmons 'man with message'

Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — He has the energy of an entire aerobics class, the muscles of a dancer, the barrel chest of a miniature Richard Burton and the metabolism of a gnat. He was not born that way. Richard Simmons, former fatty, worked to get where he is through diet, exercise, denial, conviction, committment.

Simmons is a man with a message. If you want a trim, slim body, you're going to have to work, and work hard. Losing weight, he says, is easy. He lost 150 pounds. Keeping it off, though, is the problem. "A lot of people lose weight and look good in their clothes, but take them off and whoooooooo. I only got a good body by busting my chops."

(And, incidentally, by spending money on hair transplants when his curly locks fell out from excessive crash dieting, plus about $13,000 worth of surgery on the skin that was left over. Said he a few years ago: "From the neck up, I'm a Mercedes.")

After devoting some of the best years of his life to his anti-fat, pro-fitness campaign, the 35-year-old Simmons is a walking feel-good conglomerate who virtually lives in hotel rooms and airplanes. His legal address is somewhere in the Hollywood hills, where his two Dalmatians, Scarlet and Ashley, and his black Labrador, Sam, wait for their master to touch down.

During a visit here, Simmons was perched cross-legged on a couch, talking with his office about his travel plans. They read like some campaigning politician — Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Atlanta, Chicago, Detroit, back to Los Angeles, San Jose, San Francisco, Washington, Boston again, Minneapolis, Cincinnati, Houston, L.A. and Alaska. And that was only the last two weeks of the month. This was, he said, his 200th weekend on the road.

Book signings and TV appearances were taking precedence on this tour, but there was still the fitness empire to run. His Anatomy Asylum clubs are located in shopping malls all through Middle America. He writes a monthly members' newsletter, and his TV show is syndicated in 140 markets. And this 5-feet-6, 134-pound dynamo also has found time to write "Richard Simmons' Better Body Book."

The prose is typical Simmons-haute cute. In discussing the human heart, for instance, Simmons lets fly with this: "When I found out what hearts really looked like, I walked right out of class and into the men's room. Yuck."

The 200 illustrations are mostly of Simmons in knee socks, white shorts, sweatshirt and polo shirt doing exercises. On each picture, an area of dark spots is superimposed over the muscle groups that Simmons is working in each particular exercise. If it doesn't hurt there, you're just not doing it right.

Simmons' chatty style is aimed at the same people who come to his clubs — "the underdogs, the overweights, the seniors I call Silver Citizens. Sometimes, exercise clubs make you believe that everyone is pretty, with tight tushies and beautiful breasts. But even if you get into shape, you'll never look like a model or a movie star. I ended up looking more like Annie than Tom Selleck."

Simmons is son of two ex-vaudvillians. Growing up in New Orleans, he was a child actor (137 commercials, one of which was as the Head Grape in the Fruit-of-the-Loom spot) who studied briefly for the priesthood. This may come as a surprise to those who, because of the way Simmons talks, think he's a nice Jewish boy.

He exists on very little food and a lot of self-discipline. His 600-calorie-per-day regime includes protein shakes, nuts and seeds, fresh vegetables, some fruit and no eggs, no chicken.

Skin care important to actress Lydia Cornell

By COLETTE BOUCHEZ
Copley News Service

"Now don't laugh when I tell you this," says Super Beauty Lydia Cornell, co-star of "Too Close For Comfort," "but one of the best facials I've ever found revolves around using a product called Swiss Kriss, which is an herbal laxative! People look at you funny when you say you use it for your face, but it really works!

"It's a blend of all natural herbs," says Lydia, "and I just toss it in a pot of boiling water, put a towel over my head and steam my face.

"It takes all the impurities out of your skin because it makes you sweat. Afterward, I rub my face with ice cubes to close the pores and it leaves my skin smooth and soft and makeup goes on beautifully."

It may sound a little strange, but just one look at Lydia's peaches-and-cream complexion and you know she's doing something right.

"I do the Swiss Kriss steam about once a week," Lydia says, "and then use Alpha Keri soap and water to cleanse my face every night, followed by a light moisturizer.

"If you have a regular cleansing routine and stick to it, you can avoid many skin problems."

Lydia chooses cosmetics from the Clinique line because "they are pure and very light and don't clog your pores." She also uses their Skin Texture Lotion and Sub Skin Cream because of their ability to moisturize without being greasy.

"I've also found your facial expression makes a tremendous difference in how many wrinkles you get," reports Lydia. "Things like squinting at the sun or frowning when you're in deep thought can make a difference in how much your skin eventually wrinkles. If you do it often enough and long enough, those lines begin to take hold on your face."

When it comes to hair care, Lydia feels one of the best steps she took toward healthier tresses was switching from a double-process bleaching to a one-step tint, a move which she claims saved her hair from total disaster.

Diabetes drugs studied

BOSTON (AP) — Drugs that guard against blood vessel damage in diabetes victims someday may be used routinely to prevent blindness and kidney failure, complications of the disease which afflicts 10 million Americans, researchers said.

Doctors used one of these medicines, called glipizide, to reverse blood vessel damage in people who had mild, early forms of diabetes.

"Our findings, if confirmed in a larger number of patients, may justify treatment in the early stages of diabetes ...," they wrote in New England Journal of Medicine.

After taking the drug, diabetes victims' blood sugar returned to healthy levels.

"It seems that we can cure this, because we are able to normalize the basement membrane," said Dr. Rafael A. Camerini-Davalos, who directed the study.

DEAR ABBY

Sex-change inquiry infuriates

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am furious, angry and boiling mad! The letter signed "No More Girls" from British Columbia stopped me cold. It was from a man whose wife was expecting their third child. The first two (ages 3 and 2) were girls, and he wanted to know where they could get a sex-change operation for the next baby if it was another girl.

My God! I thought I didn't read it right! The man surely was off his rocker. He doesn't deserve kids, nor does his wife, who must also be a nut to consider such an idiotic thing.

I hope no surgeon would ever perform such an operation. I can't wait to see what other readers had to say about this crazy request. – HORRIFIED IN PHILLIPSBURG, N.J.

DEAR HORRIFIED: Other readers were equally horrified. Many offered to adopt the expected child if it was a girl. Some offered to take the 2- and 3-year-old girls off the couple's hands if they weren't happy with female children.

Be assured, no surgeon would consider performing a sex-change operation on a healthy, normal child.

DEAR ABBY: I just started reading your column in the Moline (Ill.) Daily Dispatch, and I need some questions answered.

1. Does a letter have to be signed in order to be answered in your column?
2. If I want a personal reply, will I get one? Or do you send form letters?
3. Are all the letters in your column real? Or do you make some of them up?
4. Where should I address a letter to you? I am sending this to the Dispatch, but I would rather write directly to you. Thank you. – MRS. G. H., MOLINE

DEAR MRS. H.: 1. Letters do not have to be signed in order to be answered in my column.

2. Personal replies are sent to those who sign their names and enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope. I do not use form letters.
3. All the letters are real. I couldn't make up anything as good as the letters I receive.
4. Address all mail to: Dear Abby, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.

DEAR ABBY: I'm 44 and have been a widow for four years. I have a nice home and three wonderful children – all college graduates with good jobs. The two older ones are married and the youngest has her own apartment. I have always been there for them when they called or came by for a visit.

Now, I have met a man that I care about very much. He is a widower with three grown children. We are very compatible. But he lives 200 miles away, with his farm and business there, which means I have to go there if I want to be with him.

I love my children so much, I feel guilty when I leave them. After a week they call, wanting me to come home. And I always do. My friend says I should cut the apron strings. When I am with him, I think about my children, and when I'm home, I think about him.

Abby, please don't tell me my children come first. I don't want to live the rest of my life alone, but I don't want my children to be unhappy. How can I have peace of mind? What do you say? – PULLED APART

DEAR PULLED: Children come first when they're young. But your children are grown with lives of their own. At 44 you have many good years ahead of you, so please don't feel that you have to "be there" for your grown children. This is your chance to catch the brass ring (or the gold one), so go for it. And don't feel guilty.

(If you're single and want to know how to meet someone decent, see page 20 of Abby's booklet, "How to Be Popular." Send $2, plus a long, stamped (37 cents), self-addressed envelope to Abby, Popularity, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

AT WIT'S END

Child rearing hazardous

BY ERMA BOMBECK

I always knew that raising kids . . . if you did it right . . . could eventually impair you from living a normal life.

Now, little bits of research are trickling in to bear me out. When a young mother complained recently of temporary deafness after an outburst by her 11-month-old infant, they did some noise readings. You know what they found out? They discovered a howling infant has a decibel reading just short of the sound of a jackhammer three feet away.

Just because you're dealing with little people who can stand up under a coffee table and weigh 28 pounds, people tend to minimize the devastation a child can bring about.

My tongue was nearly severed by an eight-month-old baby who positioned himself under my chin and then tried to stand up. Another time, following a bath, I slung my 13-month-old over my shoulder only to have him sink his only two teeth all the way to the bone in my shoulder, robbing me of any fantasy I ever had of wearing a bathing suit without sleeves.

Other mothers have similar stories. One was numb as she checked into a hospital and when asked the cause of her dizziness said, "I was hit by a truck." She didn't have the heart to tell the admissions nurse that it was a toy dump truck dropped on her from a bunk bed by her two-year-old.

The battered mothers of America are still in the closets.

There's Jane Z, who had not been in her son's bedroom for a year and a half and one day when she pushed open the door, she looked in and lost the sight in her good eye.

There's Babs F, whose small daughter became enchanted with her mother's flabby upper arms (she called them Pillsbury Doughboys) and used them as punching bags until they became permanently blue.

Children are just not the "innocents" they are made out to be. They walk on your stomach when you're doing aerobics. They pry open your eyes with spoons when you're asleep and they're ready for cereal. You could drown alone and afraid when they discover how to spit.

Baby-sitters will bear me out. They're the "mercenaries" of the profession who are sent in to keep the peace, only to be assaulted by flying shoes and water balloons and tricycles on suicide missions.

Motherhood is definitely not a job for sissies. You must have the courage to enter a car with a teenage driver who releases the hood on the expressway and thinks he's turning on the lights. You must have the stamina to drag a pre-schooler on your leg for two blocks who is dragging a bubble gum machine behind him. You must have the firmness to say, "Do not force those car keys up Mommy's nose or Mommy is going to pass out."

The right stuff? Mothers make those guys look like cowards. Be careful out there.

Miyake's spring fashions triumph with designs inspired by Japanese

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

PARIS — Austerity. Vulgarity. Polarity.

Those are the major spring-fashion trends emerging here as some of the world's most famous designers display the shape of things to come.

The fact that the austerity look comes from that land of prosperity called Japan is one of the many contradictions of the season.

The idea is to look like the poor but spend like the rich — as in $80 T-shirts with prefabricated holes or $500 jackets that look like they've been dragged through atomic ash.

The most sophisticated interpretation of that look comes from Japan's No. 1 designer, Issey Miyake.

Long a force in international fashion (his San Francisco show was featured in last week's Newsweek) Miyake triumphs this season with a collection that out-Japaneses the so-called Japanese looks from his less-known and less-talented countrymen.

AS THE DESIGNER who started the wrap-and-tie school of dressing in the first place, Miyake proves that the shapes inspired by such authentic Japanese garments as the kimono, the samurai jacket, the sumo wrestler's pant and the costumes of kabuki and karate can indeed work in a modern world.

By giving those garments more shape than his colleagues and effecting them in some of the world's most beautiful fabrics he turns what has heretofore looked like an ode to ugly into pure poetry.

Some standouts in his spring lineup include gauzy jackets over cowled overblouses and pants with side flanges that curve gracefully over the body, forming a new draped effect.

Unlike the other Japanese designers, who use mainly black and gray to project their gloom-and-doom message, Miyake gives us outfits that meld shades of oatmeal, ivory, camel and gray.

There is a black group in the collection, but there are many more groups in color.

The vulgarity award of the week goes to Jean-Paul Gaultier who took the taste level here to new lows by covering a model's breasts in fezzes, complete with tassels she manipulated like a belly dancer.

THERE ARE TARTY LOOKS throughout the collections and most of them center on the hips. Skirts are so tight even the skinny models look like bulging sausages.

And what is not encased by skirt fabric is tortured with a belt, a corselet or a fanny wrap of some form.

The most tasteful fanny wrap of the season comes from Karl Lagerfeld, whose contract with Chloe is up in December. (Lagerfeld also designs Fendi furs and ready-to-wear as well as Chanel couture.)

The Lagerfeld idea is one that will be useful for any woman with a miniskirt she doesn't know what to do with.

Just follow this designer's lead and wear it over a longer, calf-length skirt or dress. Lagerfeld does the short skirt in knits as well as leather over dresses and-or skirts that are narrow from waist to below the knees, where they flare into unpressed pleats.

One of the most beautiful interpretations of this look features a pink leather jacket and short skirt over a calf-length white silk dress with low pleats.

Lagerfeld dedicated this collection to the dressmaker who sews the clothes of the couture.

His accessories included jeweled pin cushions for bracelets, scissors for necklaces and thimbles for drop earrings.

There are very few shoulder pads in this Chloe collection, perhaps a hint of things to come. And there are many, many flat-heeled shoes, even with the longest dresses.

This is a look that Lagerfeld has endorsed before, and one that has caught on all over Paris.

The Lagerfeld pant for spring is cuffed just above the ankles and worn with flats.

THE IDEA OF FASHION polarity — short with long, pants with skirts, fronts without backs, falling-off-the-shoulder tops with tight, tight skirts — is at its best with Claude Montana, who has come up with one of the most brilliant collections of his already brilliant career.

Montana even manages to make his military clothes look appealingly feminine and civilian.

One of his favorite new jackets in khaki or dark olive poplin is fitted to the waist, then open from waist to hips. The waist is cinched with a wide leather obi-like belt, then overbelted with a conventional leather belt buckled in gold.

Ever the seaman of chic, Montana brings us a new nautical look for spring in navy with acid yellow. A standout here is a long, fanny-covering navy pullover sweater striped in yellow.

The yoke, front and back, is navy poplin. On the same order, Montana offers a white knit sweater with white linen sleeves. Another winner: his white linen, drape-front jacket with epaulettes pinned in leaves of gold.

The Montana group that brought down the house is a black leather-jacketed motorcycle look complete with "diamond" zippers.

The latter aren't really diamonds and aren't really zippers, but rhinestones strategically placed to look like zippers — as a hood, as the neckline of a top, as a pocket and even at the end of pants.

Actress gives new meaning to 'sour grapes'

By Colette Bouchez
Copley News Service

If you are like millions of viewers, you spend your Friday nights deep in the wine country of the "Tuscany Valley," watching CBS's nighttime soap supreme, "Falcon Crest."

And unless you've been spending the last two years on another planet, you know that an incredible cast of female villainesses do their best to give a whole new meaning to the term "sour grapes" — and we're not talking about a case of Chardonnay gone bad!

If you think Angela, Melissa, Julia and Diana have done it all, look out because Terry has just rolled into town!

A brand-new addition to the cast of "Falcon Crest," Laura Johnson breathes enough deliciously evil life into her character of Terry Hartford to keep us all on the edge of our seats just waiting for the next nasty ploy to take place. But in real life, you won't find a sweeter Super Beauty than Laura Johnson — and she's chockful of great advice for looking terrific on screen and off!

She says, "As much fun as it is playing a nasty lady, and it is fun, it can take a lot out of you and drain your energies. I believe that when you are under stress it can affect the way you look. Not only your hair and skin are affected, but the overall look of your face, your eyes, mouth — everything can be affected by tension.

"Since I've joined the cast of "Falcon Crest," continued Laura, "I've had to restructure my life.

"First off, instead of coming home and taking a drink to unwind, I now have some warm milk with a little vanilla and some cinnamon in it.

"I take calcium pills before I go to bed if I know I have a lot of scenes to shoot the next day because it helps me relax, and I look better. I watch what I eat and try to keep my diet as natural as possible, and I don't eat a lot of heavy foods right before I shoot because it makes me very hyper, and that comes through on the screen.

"In general, I've found that by listening to your body and really trying to take care of yourself internally and mentally, you will look better physically. You'll be more relaxed and it will show."

When it comes to down-to-earth beauty treatments, this down-to-earth beauty also centers her attention on "natural" ways of achieving her glowing good looks, with fruits and vegetables her main beauty source.

D'Anne Burchett — Electrologist

D'Anne Burchett has been a Registered Nurse for 10 years. She then trained in Dallas to become a certified electrologist. Now she is available in Midland for electrolysis.

Electrolysis is the permanent removal of unwanted hair. Any part of the body can benefit from electolysis. For women, facial hair seems to be the most common problem according to Ms. Burchett.

Each individual is different with different skin and hair conditions so it takes longer on some than others to remove all of the unwanted hair. It usually takes more than one treatment to acheive the desired results.

Ms. Burchett stated,"It does a lot for your self-image to have itunwanted hair) taken care of in a permanent way. It is the best solution to the problem."

Now is the time to have any unwanted hair removed including that unsightly bikini line.

Call D'Anne at Christine Valmy,683-9891, to set up an appiontment for a free consultation. If an evening appiontment is needed D'Anne will be happy to set it up for you.

Pat Walker's offers chance for new figure

Any woman or man can lose weight. The secret is not in losing weight, but learning how to maintain once the weight is gone. At Pat Walker's Figure Salon, we not only help you take the weight off, we teach you how to keep it off permanently.

At Pat Walker's Figure Salon, we have a three part program:

1. Symetricon Unit

It is very important that you get consistent unit time each week. The unit stimulates circulation, thereby not only reducing fatty tissue, but also giving firming and toning throughout the body. In this manner, you lose inches as well as weight. We all know that inch loss is just as important as weight loss, if not more so.

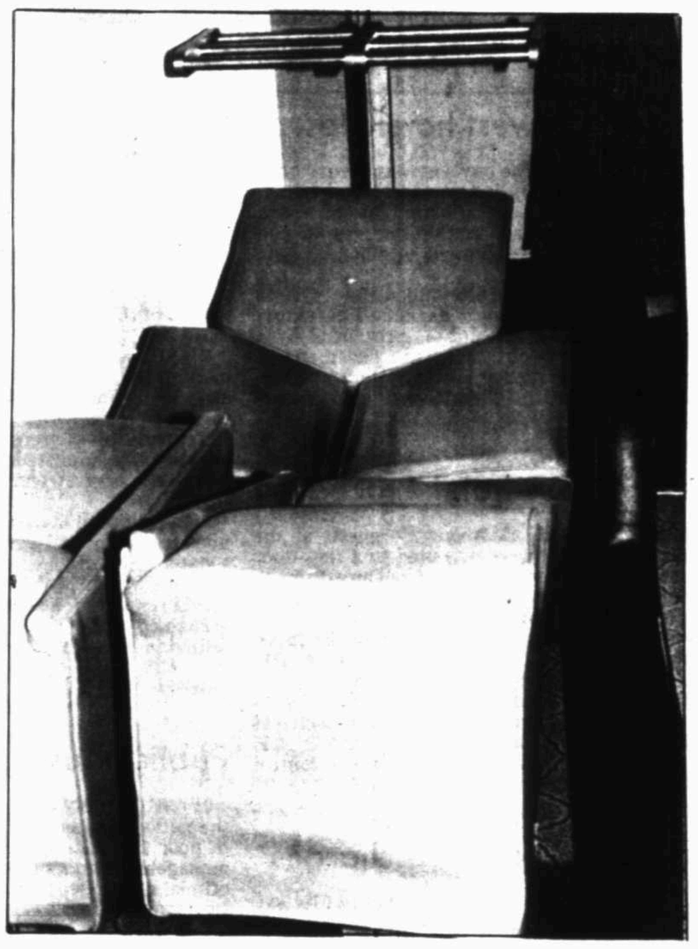

2. Nutritional Counseling

We have three different nutritional programs that we use, depending on the lady. First, quick weight loss is a meal by meal, day by day program designed to assist you in reducing quickly. This program is used to help you when a quick weight loss is necessary for medical or personal reasons. It also helps when you have a great number of pounds to lose, because the first ten pounds can be very motivating. Second is the intermediate food program. This program is used to continue your good losses. It allows most all of your favorite foods in moderation. This is where we begin to teach you how take it off and keep it off. Last, the maintenance program. This program is used when you are within a few pounds of your goal or if you only have a few pounds to lose. This program also allows all of your favorites in moderation. We simply teach you how and when to have your favorite foods. This is also used during your most important treatments; those designed especially for firming and toning purposes.

3. Your commitment and our service

Our service consists of not only your treatment each week on the symetricon unit, but also your nutritional counseling. You are counseled a mninmum of once a week on your food and beverage program. You will be measured every two weeks to make sure the inches are coming off correspondingly. For every pound you lose, you will lose one to three inches. Isn't that exciting! Your commitment is most important. Ask yourself these questions: Do I truly want to be thinner? Will I make the necessary sacrifices to do so? Will I be open-minded to learning new habits? If you can answer yes to all of these, we have the program for you!

Our program is based on a set price per half hour treatment. We have a program designed to fit anyone's pocketbook. Make a commitment today and call Pat Walker's for your chance at a new 1984 figure. We are here to help.

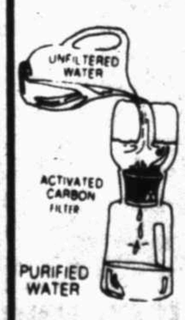

The symetricon units at Pat Walker's Figure Salon stimulate circulation and gives firming and toning throughout the body, as well as reducing fatty tissues. Pat Walker's can help you into your new 1984 figure by helping you lose punds and inches, and keeping them off. Call today at 683-6278. Pat Walker's is located at 14 Oak Ridge Square in Midland.

Woman's death wish her only resolution

By SCOTT KRAFT
Associated Press Writer

RIVERSIDE, Calif. — The blinds are open to the winter sunshine. A few potted plants, anonymous gifts, rest on a ledge. Behind the closet door are hundreds of unopened letters for Elizabeth Bouvia.

The brown-haired, 26-year-old quadriplegic is stretched out on her bed, the tube running into her nose a constant reminder of unsuccessful attempts to starve herself to death.

There are no positive New Year's resolutions here.

"I don't want to spend the rest of my life like this, and I think it is clear that the rest of my 20 years would be in a convalescent home, depending on someone else for the most humiliating of needs," Ms. Bouvia said in an interview with The Associated Press on New Year's Day.

Born with cerebral palsy and confined to a wheelchair, Ms. Bouvia has been trying for several months to convince the courts to let her starve to death while receiving painkillers and hygienic care at Riverside General Hospital.

Her lawyers have filed an appeal with the California Supreme Court.

Meanwhile, she is being force-fed and attended by an around-the-clock nurse. A 24-hour guard is posted outside her door because of two death threats the hospital says she has received.

Officials at Riverside General have said Ms. Bouvia is a "devilish" woman who is basking in the attention her case has generated and doesn't really want to die. Strangers have written to her from around the world, urging her to reconsider her decision.

She remains steadfast.

"I don't see how anyone can tell me I should lead the life I'm leading now because it could be a productive one," she said. "Because to me as a person it (life) is humiliating and agonizing. I don't think anyone — disabled or able-bodied alike — should tell me how I should lead my life."

The furor over her case has obscured her simple wish — to escape from a body that keeps her from ever being physically independent, she said.

"This was a very private matter, but it has become a very big issue. It's been blown out of proportion and, unfortunately, I've gotten lost in there," Ms. Bouvia said.

"I wish the hospital would just let me be, keep me comfortable, and let me die with dignity," she said. "That's the issue we're fighting here."

For the past several years, she has suffered from severe arthritis and has grown more dependent on others, she said.

"I enjoy my life and I will to the very last minute," she said. "I enjoy talking to people, seeing things. But it doesn't outweigh the physical problems I go through day to day."

In her private room, Ms. Bouvia spends her time watching television, looking out the window and talkig with her friends and attorneys. She has rarely granted interviews.

She has not eaten since Dec. 19, when she began a fast that had her facing "imminent death" before force-feeding removed her from the danger list, the hospital said.

"It was a very peaceful feeling," she said of the close call. "As far as I was concerned, they just interrupted that peaceful feeling by sticking needles in me."

Ms. Bouvia said she has no New Year's resolutions, because "a couple of weeks ago, I didn't know if I would be here for the new year."

Will she be around for the next New Year?

"I hope not, but there is that chance," she said.

Major cities inaugurate mayors

By The Associated Press

Raymond L. Flynn became the mayor of Boston pledging a "trickle up" goverment that would allow neighborhood groups to participate in decision-making, while W. Wilson Goode promised an "efficient, open, and fair" city hall for Philadelphia.

Goode, the first black mayor in Philadelphia's 301-year history, said on his first day on the job that he "feels challenged to fulfill all the hopes, dreams and optimism" that he promised to deliver.

"I feel committed to go out there and do the very best job I can do," said the 45-year-old son of a North Carolina sharecropper, as he sat for the first time behind the big walnut desk in his new City Hall office shortly after Monday's inauguration.

"I feel humble, very humble that I am where I am, and very thankful to my family, my church and the thousands of volunteers who helped me," he said. "I am ready to go to work. Everyone in my cabinet is ready to go to work."

Goode, the city's 126th mayor, pledged to give the people "efficient, open and fair" government. He scheduled the first staff meeting of his new administration at 8 a.m. today "and we're going to be starting early every day."

He was still going strong Monday night, making the rounds to three inaugural balls — a $10-a-ticket celebration at the Civic Center, a $250-dollar-per-couple party at the Franklin Plaza and a $1,000-a-couple bash at the Bellevue Stratford.

Goode is a former chairman of the Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission and was for three years the No. 1 man in former Mayor William Green's cabinet.

Goode is a Democrat, and his party began its 33rd year of control of America's fourth largest city. Of Philadelphia's 1.6 million residents, approximately 40 percent are black.

In Boston, Flynn told 4,200 people crowded into the Wang Center for the Performing Arts that, "Although politicans don't like to admit it, people can often solve their problems more effienctly than bureaus or bureacracies.

"Before too many months have passed, neighborhood representatives will be on licensing and zoning boards," he pledged. "A new generation of neighborhood leaders will begin the process of decentralizing the delivery of city services.

"Our theory of government will be one of trickle up, not trickle down," he said.

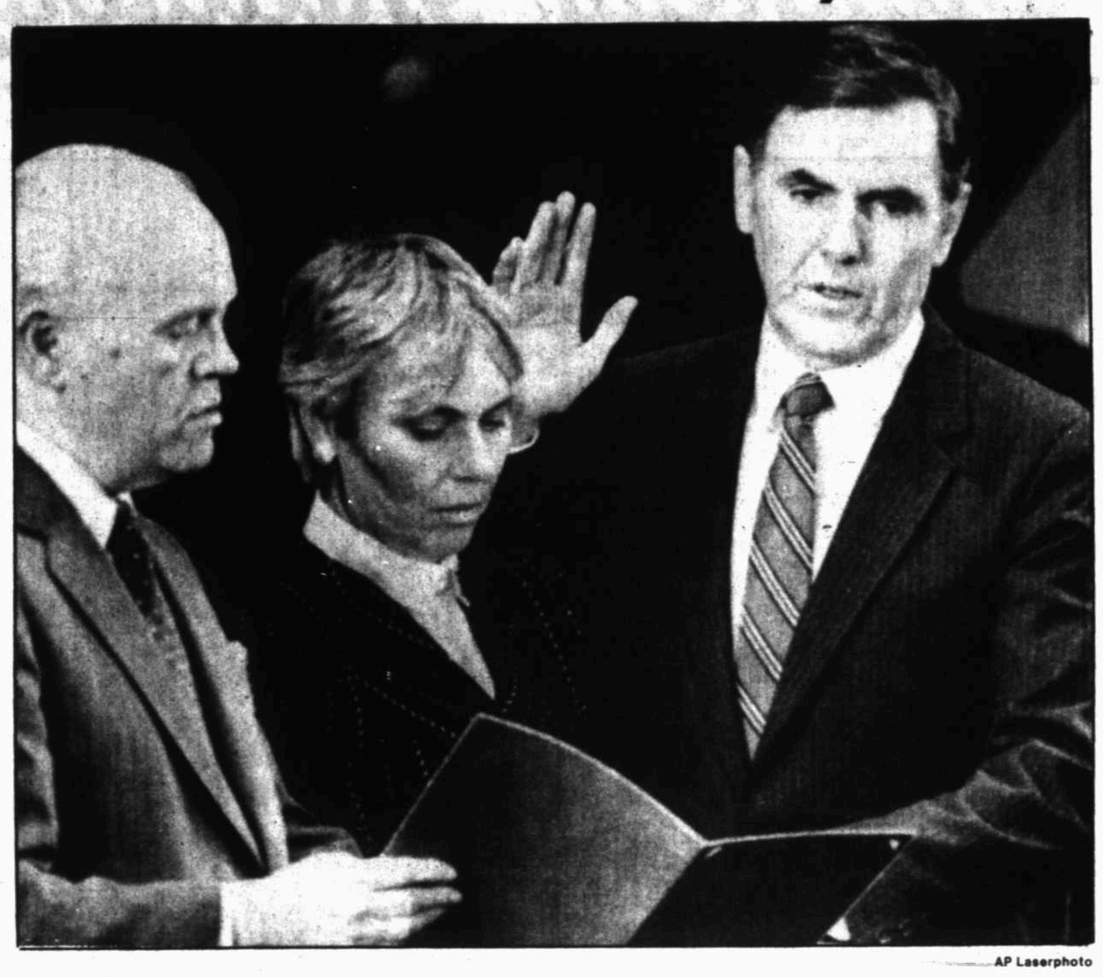

Less than two hours after he was sworn in, Flynn rushed from his City Hall office to the 36-story Westin Hotel, where an electrical fire forced the evacuation of most of the 114 guests. Sixty-six people were treated at hospitals for smoke inhalation.

Flynn, 44, follows Kevin H. White's 16-year reign as mayor.

He is essentially modest and soft-spoken, and his approach is expected to contrast markedly to the often-effusive White, who grew up in and married into a family producing city council presidents.

With his experience as a legislator from South Boston from 1970 to 1978, and as a city council member from 1978 to the present, Flynn knows what is ahead of him as chief executive of New England's largest city, which has had a drastic facelift in the past 20 years.

A political workaholic whose theme stressed that Boston's neighborhoods were being neglected, Flynn was a surprise victor in October's bitter preliminary election. However, the former basketball All-American from Providence College was an easy winner in November over former Rep. Mel King, the first black in a Boston mayoral final.

Veterans who started fire urged to seek counseling

HAWLEY, Mass. (AP) — If angry Vietnam veterans are responsible for the fire that destroyed a tiny Buddhist shrine in this western Massachusetts town, they should call fellow veterans for help, counselors urge.

The blaze at the Mahasiddhi Nyingmapa Center was being investigated by state police, W. Michael Ryan, district attorney for Hampshire and Franklin counties, said Monday.

Shortly after the shrine burst into flame Saturday, a caller told television stations and a newspaper that a "Vietnamese pagoda" would be destroyed and warned other Vietnamese sites would be the target of Vietnam veterans.

"We've got nothing to lose," the caller, identifying himself as a member of "Tet 84," told The Morning Union newspaper in Springfield. "We died 15 years ago."

Some of the most savage fighting of the Vietnam War occured during Tet, the Vietnamese lunar New Year, in 1968.

The newspaper said the caller described himself as a 35-year-old former lieutenant who served in Vietnam. He claimed he and four other Vietnam vets had established a "base camp" in the hills of western Massachusetts and were heavily armed and living "off the land."

Gary Randall, a reporter, sa)—'xTLends, they are brought back here and given businesses and a new start but they treat us like a piece of garbage. We can't get jobs. We can't even afford to feed our families."

"If it's true that Vietnam veterans are involved," said Richard Bonneau, a veteran and counselor at the veterans center in Springfield, "some people have to get involved to take them off the track before they take it too seriously and not want to stop."

Bonneau met in Greenfield on Monday with William F. Martin, 38, president of the Pioneer Valley chapter of the Vietnam Veterans of America. Martin appealed to those responsible for setting the fire, if they were veterans, to call him or the organization's office.

Bonneau and Martin remained by their telephones Monday night hoping for a call, but none came.

"There are some people we know who live in the hills of western Massachusetts," Martin said. "We've been working to get in touch with them. So far, we unfortunately haven't been able to reach them. We just want to make sure that if they are involved, we want to help them."

He declined to identify the men he sought and noted that 42,000 Vietnam veterans live in the area.

As result of his son's letter, Indian gets job-finding post

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Oglala Sioux Indian was put to work helping to find jobs for unemployed American Indian war veterans not long after his son wrote President Reagan, bemoaning the man's plight.

"He served his country well, and now this country won't give him a job," 12-year-old Little Beaver Canoe said of his unemployed father, Buffaloboy Canoe, 59, who has fallen deeply into debt.

"Mr. President, do you like Indians? Because I never hear or read about you trying to help our people," the boy said in the two-page handwritten letter dated Nov. 1. "My father did vote for you and has always liked you. We do, too."

White House aides passed Little Beaver Canoe's letter on to the Labor Department, and officials there lined up a $24,000-a-year job for Buffaloboy Canoe. He went to work last month for a California organization, the Center for Community Economics in Santa Rosa, which has a Labor Department contract to assist in implementing job-training programs.

Buffaloboy Canoe, who has no home telephone, could not be reached immediately for comment, but officials of the California job-assistance organization said that the new employee was doing well.

Donald E. Shasteen, deputy assistant secretary for veterans employment and training, said Buffaloboy Canoe's job search meshed with the agency's need to find an American Indian to assist unemployed Indian veterans.

"It warmed the cockles of my heart to be able to do that," Shasteen said.

Boston's newest hotel closed

BOSTON (AP) — The city's newest luxury hotel was closed today as investigators sought the cause of a smoky electrical blaze that cut power, caused $500,000 damage and sent at least 66 people to hospitals for treatment of smoke inhalation.

Guests at the 36-story, $80 million Hotel Westin groped for exits through darkened corridors Monday after an explosion — prompted by a transformer short-circuit in the basement — damaged the emergency power system at noon, said Ken Bruynell, a Fire Department spokesman.

Essex House hotel evacuated

NEW YORK (AP) — About 250 guests at the Essex House hotel were evacuted to a first-floor restaurant early today after a fire spread smoke through the 40-story building, injuring seven people, fire officials said.

Four firefighters and three guests suffered minor injuries, most from inhaling smoke, said Jim Harding, a deputy fire commissioner.

The fire, in an employee locker room and storage area on the second floor, was first reported at 4:41 a.m. and grew to a two-alarm blaze by 4:46 a.m., officials said. It was declared under control about an hour later.

Suicide try leads to charges

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Authorities say they are dropping a murder charge against a 24-year-old man and instead have charged his "convincing" accuser, who attempted suicide by stabbing himself in the stomach while being questioned by police.

Gregory Burdette, 23, of Spring Hill, was charged with first-degree murder Monday in the Nov. 17 shooting death of Sissonville Junior High School physical education teacher Vincent Tyree, Kanawha County Deputy J. P. Seymour said.

The man Burdette had accused of committing the crime, William C. Edens Jr., 24, of Sissonville, is innocent, and the murder charge filed against him will be dropped as soon as the paperwork can be completed today, Seymour said.

Edens' attorney, John Carrico, called the county's investigation an example of "horrible police work," but county Prosecutor James Stucky defended his actions.

Sen. Kennedy hospitalized

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., is listed in stable condition today after being admitted to George Washington University Hospital with symptoms of the flu.

Kennedy press secretary Bob Shrum said the senator was admitted late Monday night with symptoms of gastro-intestinal flu and dehydration.

"His condition is stable; he is receiving intravenous treatment and undergoing a series of tests," a statement said.

There was no word on how long Kennedy, 51, would remain in the hospital.

Kennedy's 93-year-old mother, Rose, was hospitalized in West Palm Beach, Fla., for a viral infection. Mrs. Kennedy was listed in fair condition Monday.

Public housing 'troubled'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Almost one-fourth of the nation's major public housing authorities are in poor financial shape, mainly because of mismanagement and shoddy maintenance, a senior official of the Department of Housing and Urban Development says.

HUD Inspector General Charles L. Dempsey said Monday a report sent to Congress last month concluded that 30 of the 134 largest public housing authorities are "financially troubled" — with financial reserves amounting to less than 20 percent of annual operating costs.

The report said mismanagement and shoddy maintenance resulted in a large number of housing units that are so run-down they can no longer be rented.

Gunman robs elderly priest

FULLERTON, Calif. (AP) — A gunman robbed an elderly priest of $500 in collection money outside a church a block from the police station, as parishioners inside the sanctuary discussed a program to provide spiritual comfort for criminals.

Monsignor John Seibert, 77, was robbed of the cash and some checks as he left church Sunday evening after Mass.

Seibert, who retired in July as administrator of St. Mary's Catholic Church, said Monday it was the first robbery in his 29 years at the church in Fullerton, about 25 miles southeast of Los Angeles. City Hall and the police station are just a block away.

'Chico' Shephard found dead

NEW YORK (AP) — A former Harlem entertainer who performed odd jobs for former heavyweight champion Sugar Ray Robinson has been found dead in his heatless city-owned apartment, and authorities said pending an autopsy today that the cause was hypothermia.

At nightfall, entrepreneur canoes proceed toward riverboat making the 1,200 mile-journey on the Zaire River, which was formerly the Congo.

Congo River

Life bustles on big lifeline...

KISANGANI, Zaire — The searchlight on the riverboat sweeps the shoreline, and the trees stand out brilliant green, dripping with the rain that roils the surface of the water.

The canoes approach like shadows, sliding out of the night, black forms on black water. Behind them, points of firelight flicker from huts scattered along the bank. Now and then someone on the bank whistles — children who have stayed up past midnight to see the boat go by.

Suddenly, the canoes surge forward, men standing in prow and stern and digging their paddles deep into the water, watching intently for a handhold on the big boat. A man in the prow of one canoe leaps for the rail, and misses. Another leaps, and misses. A third manages to grasp the rail and hold on, the muscles of his glistening arms standing out like rope.

Others follow — 5, 10, 20, 40 canoes, seemingly out of nowhere, loaded with fish and dead monkeys trussed by their tails. In the morning, the riverboat's decks will be covered with monkeys and fish, and the buying and selling will go on while still more cargo is hauled on board. More canoes will slide away from the banks through the gray light that rises with the dawn mist over the Congo River.

The sea is still a thousand miles away.

The mouth of the Congo River, now officially called the Zaire in this Central African nation, was discovered by Diego Cao, the Portuguese explorer, in 1482, a decade before Columbus sailed to the New World. Four centuries would pass before the river's first explorer — Henry M. Stanley, in 1877 — traveled its length and mapped it.

Now it takes two weeks to go up the river and one week to come down. Government river boats, pushing barges packed with people and freight, ply the route between Kinshasa, Zaire's capital, and Kisangani, formerly Stanleyville, the town 1,200 miles inland on the great bend in the river.

The river is a stunning thing, as powerful today as it was to the first explorers, as it has been throughout the years to travelers whose awe from afar has not been diminished by the actual sight of it.

Perhaps no description can improve on that of Joseph Conrad, who saw it, on the map, as resembling "an immense snake uncoiled, with its head in the sea, its body at rest curving afar over a vast country, its tail lost in the depths of the land."

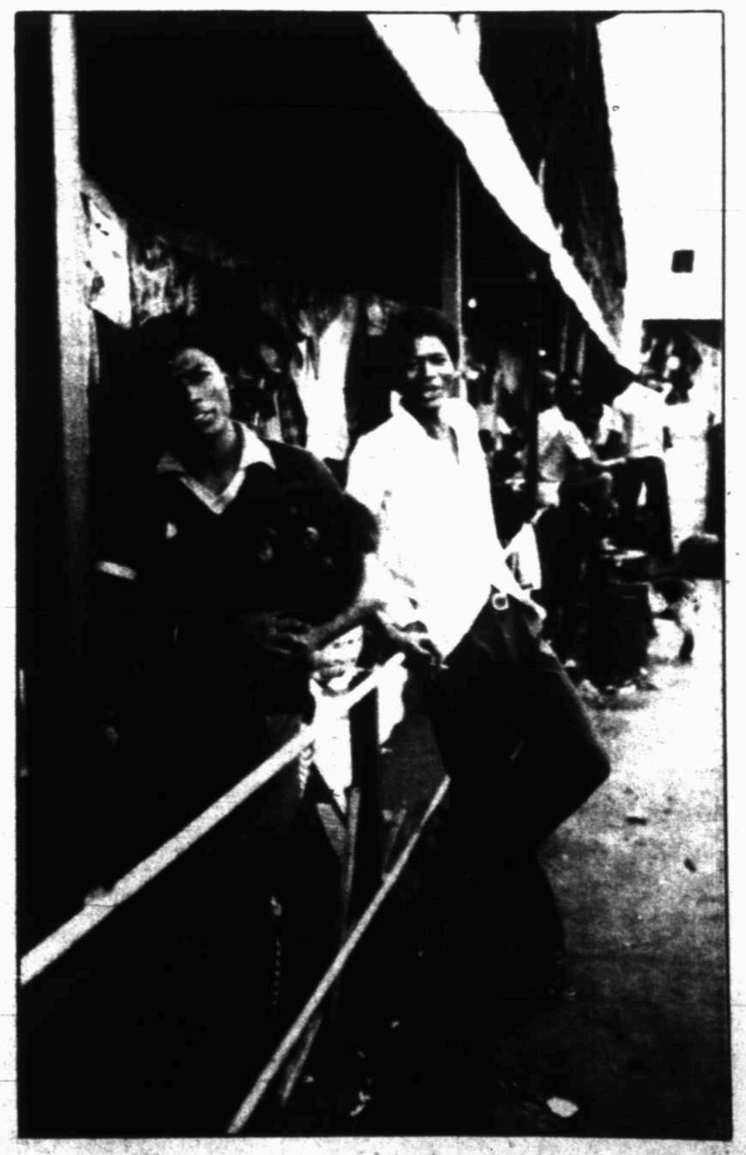

The river is 3,000 miles long, the fifth longest in the world (after the Nile, the Mississippi, Missouri, the Amazon and the Yangtze). It drains a huge basin of 1.5 million square miles, equal to a tenth of the African land mass. In its vast drainage area, crossed by the Equator and ranging into seven other countries, it is almost always raining somewhere, so that the river maintains a consistently high level and pours 1.5 million cubic feet of water per second into the Atlantic Ocean, a volume exceeded only by the Amazon.

It is a major lifeline for Zaire. Together with its tributaries, it provides 8,000 miles of navigable waterway, over which the produce of the interior and the manufactured goods of the outside world are exchanged, though not in equal measure.

Not much changes for the people who live along the river, and whose lives are dominated by it. Physically, it all looks pretty much as Stanley and Conrad must have seen it. In the interior of the country, life along the river — certainly in the perception of a white man passing through — is difficult beyond knowing. The villages are low shacks of mud and dried palm leaf, crowded to the river bank as if pressed there by the unending explosion of vegetation at their backs. If there is food for the people here — fish from the river, antelope, wild pig and monkey from the forest — there is precious little else.

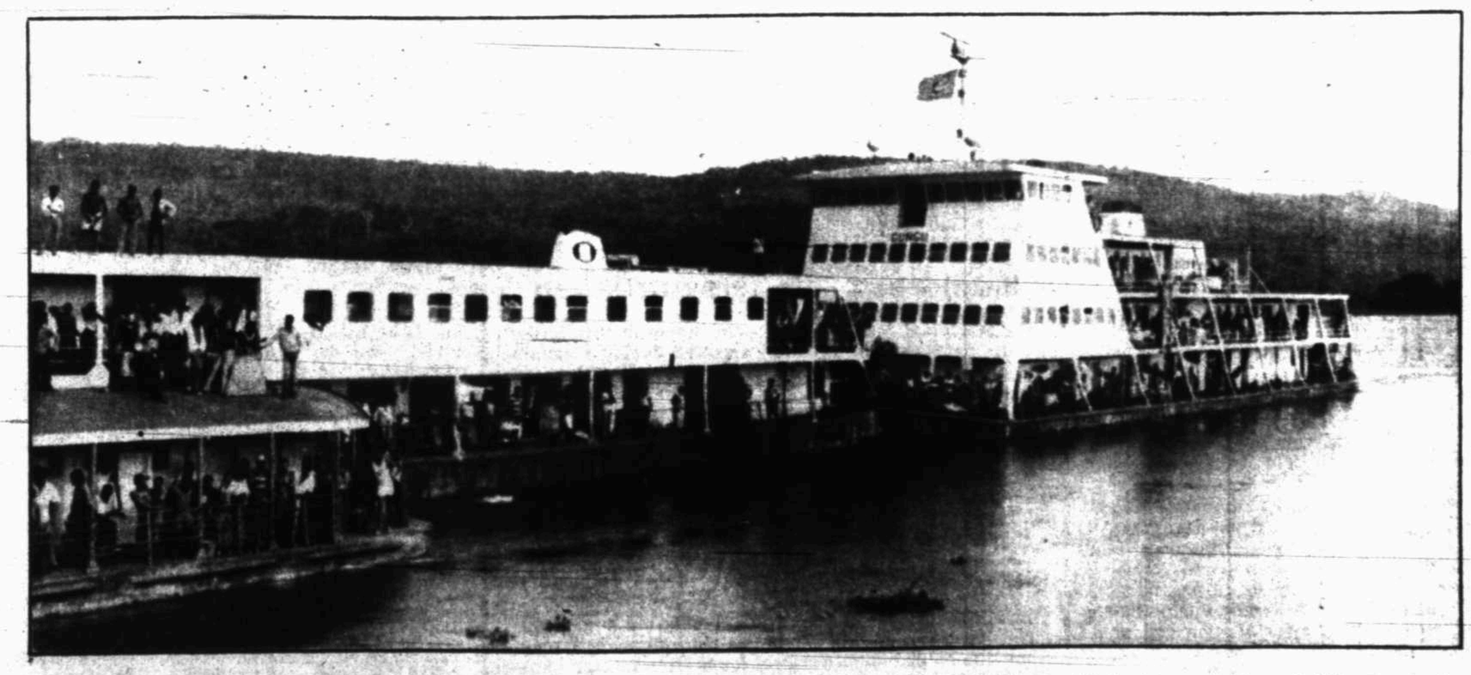

Furious selling and bartering goes on by the occupants of a dugout and passsengers of the steamship Colonel Ebeya as it makes it journey on the Zaire River.

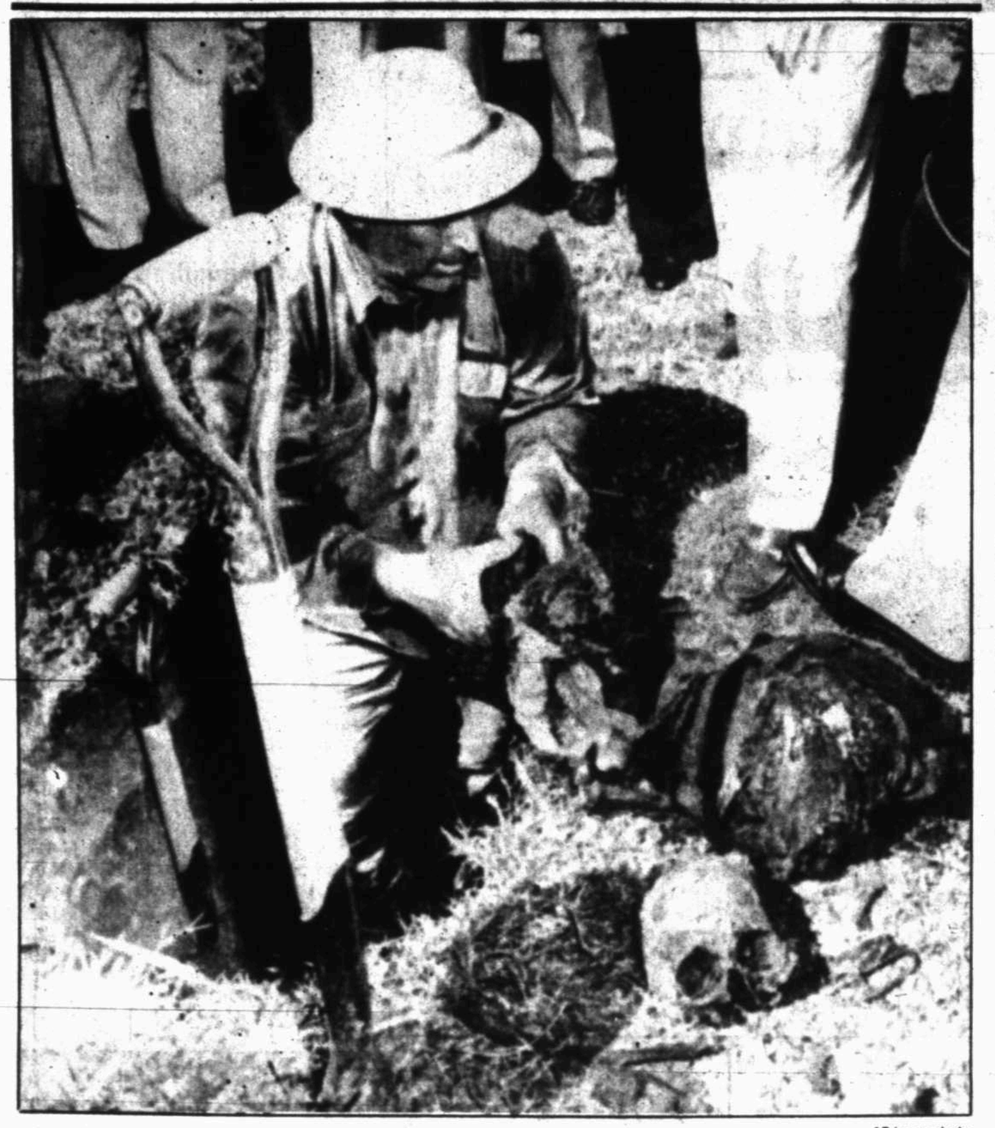

A passenger cradles the chimpanzee he has acquired from a river trader.

Argentine mothers still seek 'desaparecidos'

By DOUGLAS GRANT MINE
Associated Press Writer

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina — These new democratic days in Argentina are both gratifying and trying for the Mothers of the Plaza de Mayo.

The women's seven-year struggle to learn what happened to their "disappeared" sons and daughters — the "desaparecidos," as they are called in Spanish — has not ended with the inauguration of President Raul Alfonsin, a civilian, and the end of the military dictatorship.

But the new government shares the mothers' determination to see justice done regarding the abduction, torture and murder of thousands of suspected "subversives" in the military years.

And the mothers, who under the dictatorship were beaten and arrested by police and villified or ridiculed by some of the public, are being consulted by Alfonsin and hailed by the media for their tireless efforts.

On Thursday of last week, as on more than 350 Thursdays before, mothers put on white kerchiefs embroidered with the name of their missing child and marched with supporters in a circle in the center of the Plaza de Mayo. The women's group takes its name from their weekly meeting place. The plaza faces Government House, also known as Casa Rosada, the pink presidential palace where Alfonsin works.

Despite the scorching sun of the Southern Hemisphere summer and the year-end vacations, a thousand people marched — three times the average weekly turnout a year ago.

Argentine newspapers in recent days have run macabre photographs of court-ordered exhumations of bodies buried illegally by security forces in "No Name" sections of cemeteries during the years after the 1976 military coup. Weekly newsmagazines carry first-person accounts of torture at the hands of the police or armed forces.

Such media coverage did not exist under the military dictatorship.

"Every day these terrifying things appear in the newspapers," said Maria Adela Antokoletz, whose son Daniel was arrested by security forces Oct. 10, 1976, and has not been heard from since. "It is nothing new for us. But the pictures and testimonies all at once make it nearly impossible to bear."

The 66-year-old woman was one of a half-dozen mothers who spoke with The Associated Press at their downtown headquarters about their expectations and tribulations.

"A mother cannot look at these pictures of skulls and bones without thinking it could be her son," said Mrs. Antokoletz, whose son was 40 when he disappeared.

But, she said, the media coverage "forces the people to open their eyes to the horror of these years. After all the lies they told about us (mothers) being crazy or agents of an international anti-Argentine campaign, they have to admit the truth."

Soon after he was inaugurated on Dec. 10, Alfonsin, a lawyer and human rights activist who heads the Radical Party, ordered the prosecution on torture and murder charges of nine retired generals and admirals who served on three successive military juntas that governed the country from the coup until 1982.

Other charges stemming from disappearances have been pressed against at least five other generals or admirals, including former President Reynaldo Bignone, an army general, who transferred power to Alfonsin last month.

The military regime consistently refused to provide information about the missing, saying only that they were the toll from what the generals termed "the dirty war" against subversion.

Various guerrilla organizations were active here during the mid-1970s. But local and international human rights organizations maintain that many of the estimated 6,000 to 15,000 people who disappeared had nothing to do with the revolutionaries.

Alfonsin has named a 16-member "National Commission on the Disappearance of Persons" to investigate rights abuses and to forward relevant information to the judiciary. The mothers wanted a bicameral congressional commission to investigate. They wanted a "political condemnation" of the dictatorship by Congress, with sentences imposed by the courts.

Adolfo Perez Esquivel, the 1980 Nobel Peace Prize laureate and a human rights activist, met with Alfonsin before Christmas and said the president told him investigations had produced no evidence that some of the clandestine detention centers might still be operating.

Nazi hunters 'losing race'

By KENNETH JAUTZ
Associated Press Writer

LUDWIGSBURG, West Germany — For more than 20 years a team of West German specialists has helped track down thousands of aging Nazi war criminals, but their leader says they now are losing a race against time and death.

About 6,400 former Nazis have been sentenced by German courts since the war. But experts at one time estimated that 70,000 to 100,000 people were suspected of wartime crimes; the likelihood is slim that many more will be brought to justice.

"So many witnesses have died, so many people are getting too old to remember," said Adalbert Rueckerl, the 59-year-old director of the Center for State Justice Administration.

Working out of a former women's prison in this south German town near Stuttgart, the center's nine attorneys and 26 assistants have amassed one of the world's most comphrehensive collections of Nazi-related archives.

The gray, two-story building houses a card file with 1.3 million entries and hundreds of thousands of documents. The center serves as a coordinating agency, assisting prosecutors in bringing charges against suspected Nazi criminals.

In a quiet, library-like atmosphere, researchers catologue, check and cross-file archives. Records from Hitler's Third Reich lie stacked on desks and maps pinpointing the Nazis' 700 or so concentration camps hang on walls.

Officials at the center say France's trial against the one-time Gestapo chief Klaus Barbie, the so-called "butcher of Lyon," could be the last of the major Nazi court proceedings.

"We still have a few surprises in store, but I do not think we will see many more major breakthroughs," Rueckerl said in an interview.

Since 1945, German authorities opened about 88,000 investigations against suspected Nazi criminals, although most were conducted before the center's founding in December 1958.

But both the center and West German prosecutors have come under some criticism for the relatively low number of convictions won and the length of trials.

During the 1970s, West German courts sentenced 193 former Nazis for war crimes. But the center opened 13,624 investigations, and the majority ended without charges being filed.

"I would view our work as having been successful," Rueckerl said. "There have been many obstacles over the years."

Among the problems facing the center are the changing attitudes of Germans toward the Nazi past.

When the center was first set up, residents of Ludwigsburg complained that the Nazi hunters were bringing an undesirable reputation to their town.

Over the years many Germans seemed to lose interest in punishing Nazi criminals.

"Many people, particularly the elderly, say it is all so long ago, we should let it be," said Rueckerl.

But after West German television broadcast the U.S.-made "Holocaust" series in 1979, there was a revived interest in tracking down wartime criminals.

"I think the series helped personalize the whole thing," Rueckerl said. "The statistics were so large — 6 million Jews killed, 10 million combatants eliminated by the Nazis — it was too abstract for people to come to terms with."

Officials at the center now say they are in demand on the college lecture circuit.

"It is the young people who are now interested in the Nazis," Rueckerl said. "We often hear the complaint from them that we have not done enough."

Rueckerl defends the center's work and the low number of convictions, saying many of the original estimates of Nazi criminals were much too high.

"We have found that many of the same names come up again and again in different places."

The center is essentially a document collection agency. When enough material has been compiled, the center turns its documents over to state prosecutors who then decide whether to bring charges.

The center has about 460 investigations under way, down from the 1,300-1,400 of a decade ago, when there were 175 staffers; now there are 35.

Officials say that much of the center's work now goes to serve historians, authors and other researchers. "We are documenting an age, helping to set a context for those events," said Rueckerl.

He is pessimistic that the two most infamous Nazis who are still free will ever be brought to justice.

Premier says China unhappy with U.S.

PEKING (AP) — A week before his scheduled visit to the United States, Premier Zhao Ziyang today said China is "most unhappy" about U.S. arms sales to Taiwan and other "unpleasant" American actions.

But the premier said he does not plan to ask President Reagan for an immediate and complete halt to arms shipments to the island republic, which broke away from the mainland in 1949.

"We only ask the United States to carry out its commitment" to reduce gradually the quantity and quality of arms sales to Taiwan, Zhao told U.S. and Canadian reporters. Washington signed the agreement with Peking in 1982.

China lodged a strong protest in July when Taiwan secured $530 million worth of air defense missiles and other U.S. weapons.

After a year in which textile, grain and maritime agreements caused Chinese-U.S. rifts and official cultural exchanges were canceled, Zhao said relations were "far from what should be desired."

He spoke of "twists and turns, ups and downs" and "difficulties and obstacles."

The purpose of his visit to the United States was to rebuild relations, he added. Zhao is expected to leave Peking on Saturday, stop in Hawaii, then go to Washington, New York and San Francisco. He will visit Canada Jan. 17-23.

Reagan is scheduled to pay a return visit to China in April, the first such exchange between leaders of the two countries since diplomatic relations were established in 1979.

Zhao, 64, defended China's claim that both the Soviet Union and the United States seek world domination and said China disagrees with U.S. policies on Grenada, the Middle East, South Africa, Taiwan, Korea and the Third World.

But Zhao added: "China's security is subjected to threat around our country and I believe that we know better than the Americans do as to where our threat comes from, and in this regard, we don't equate the Soviet Union and the United States."

China's relations with Moscow are strained by the presence of more than 1 million Soviet troops at the Chinese border, the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and Soviet backing for the Vietnamese invasion of Cambodia.

Exchange of strategic intelligence on the Soviet Union is one area of Chinese-U.S. cooperation, and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger announced here last September that Washington was ready to sell high technology with military potential to China.

Salvadoran guerrillas claim 6,964

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Guerrillas elated by successful attacks on two major targets in recent days claimed they killed 6,964 government soldiers and took 1,557 prisoners during 1983.

Most of the prisoners were subsequently released by the leftist rebels, who have been fighting the U.S.-backed government since October 1979.

No totals on losses were available from the government. Its military commanders, believed to be alarmed by the two recent rebel strikes; met for six hours Monday, according to a source who requested anonymity.

The source said the meeting took place at the high command headquarters in the capital.

Turkey to withdraw some troops

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — A Foreign Ministry spokesman today said 1,500 Turkish troops will be withdrawn from Cyprus in support of a bid by Turkish Cypriot leaders to renew negotiations with Greek Cypriots.

Nazmi Akiman said the withdrawal will be completed in February.

An estimated 25,000 Turkish troops have been on Cyprus since Turkey's invasion in 1974, which divided the Mediterranean island into northern Turkish and southern Greek zones.

Troops assault Thai border bases

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Government forces have seized a radio transmitter, documents and food supplies from communist guerrillas during a joint Thai-Malaysian assault on border bases, a senior military officer said today.

Col. Kitti Rattanachaya, deputy commander of the combined Thai-Malaysian task force, said in a telephone interview that the transmitter and documents were seized Monday when the guerrillas retreated into the jungle after a brief clash with the government soldiers.

Col. Kitti said two Thai soldiers were wounded when they stepped on booby traps in the Betong district of Yala province, 525 miles south of Bangkok. They are the only Thai casualties so far in the joint operation, he said.

Press retreats as queen complains

LONDON (AP) — Queen Elizabeth II's complaints of harassment have prompted editors of three national newspapers to order their reporters and photographers back from the royal mansion of Sandringham.

But free-lance cameramen remained, prowling the boundaries of the 17,000-acre estate and the public roads which criss-cross it.

The Daily Mail and the Sun withdrew their staff Monday night. While the Daily Express would not comment, its crew was reported to have left by the domestic news agency Press Association.

The other seven London-based national newspapers said they had no staff dogging the royal family during its customary New Year's holiday at the Norfolk mansion, about 100 miles northeast of London.

West German broadcaster slain

MUNICH, West Germany (AP) — A veteran West German radio correspondent in South America was shot to death in a street robbery in Rio de Janeiro, the Bavarian network headquarters announced today.

Karl Brugger, 41, was gunned down late Monday in the Brazilian city during a holdup, the network said. Further details were not immediately available.

Brugger, the ARD network correspondent in South America for nine years, was accompanied by another West German reporter, Ulrich Encke, when the shooting occurred, the statement said.

Encke had taken over the ARD correspondent's post Jan. 1. He was not injured, the statement said.

Matamoros protesters pardoned

MATAMOROS, Mexico (AP) — The mayor of this border city has pardoned 49 protesters arrested during a demonstration following his inauguration, but warns that any further protests would result in jailings and prosecutions.

Authorities dispersed the protesters Sunday night by firing machine guns into the air and aiming high-pressure water hoses on the crowd.

Mayor Jesus Roberto Guerra ordered all but one of the 49 demonstrators freed. Police sub-inspector Cecilio Montalvo said the protesters were arrested Sunday night and held in city hall bathrooms.

Nigerian council considers loans

LONDON (AP) — Nigeria's new ruling military council meets for the first time today as the initial repayments come due on $2 billion worth of loans from foreign banks, Nigerian news organizations report.

Prompt repayment of the first $50 million of the debt would strengthen the credibility of Maj. Gen. Mohammed Buhari, who seized power in the West African nation on New Year's Eve.
