Administration officials expect 3 to 5 cent rise in gas prices

Reagan removes oil price controls

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan today lifted the remaining price and allocation controls on petroleum, a step sure to lead to higher gasoline and heating oil prices.

Reagan said the controls had hampered U.S. oil production, "artificially" led to increased energy consumption, aggravated the nation's balance of payments problem and stifled technological breakthroughs.

"Price controls have also made us more energy-dependent on the OPEC nations — a development that has jeopardized our economic security and undermined price stability at home," Reagan said in a statement.

"Fears that the planned phase-out of controls would not be carried out for political reasons have also hampered production," Reagan said. "Ending these controls now will erase this uncertainty."

Angry consumer groups charge that gasoline and heating oil prices could rise by 8 to 12 cents per gallon over the next few weeks as a result of the decision, but administration officials said the increase would be more like 3 to 5 cents over the next two months.

The order, effective immediately, decontrols crude oil, gasoline and propane — the only petroleum products still under price controls.

Reagan said the elimination of controls "will also stimulate energy conservation"

"Ending price controls is a positive first step towards a balanced energy program — a program free of arbitrary and counterproductive contraints — one designed to promote prudent conservation and vigorous domestic production," he added.

If Reagan had not acted, the price controls would have phased out over the next eight months under a gradual decontrol program started by former President Carter in June 1979. That program already has removed price controls on about 75 percent of domestic crude oil.

Reagan pledged during the campaign to speed the process, saying oil companies had been shackled by price controls for nine years and higher prices would spur faster domestic production.

Consumer groups attacked the decision even before it was announced, charging Reagan's action awarded oil companies an "unacceptable windfall."

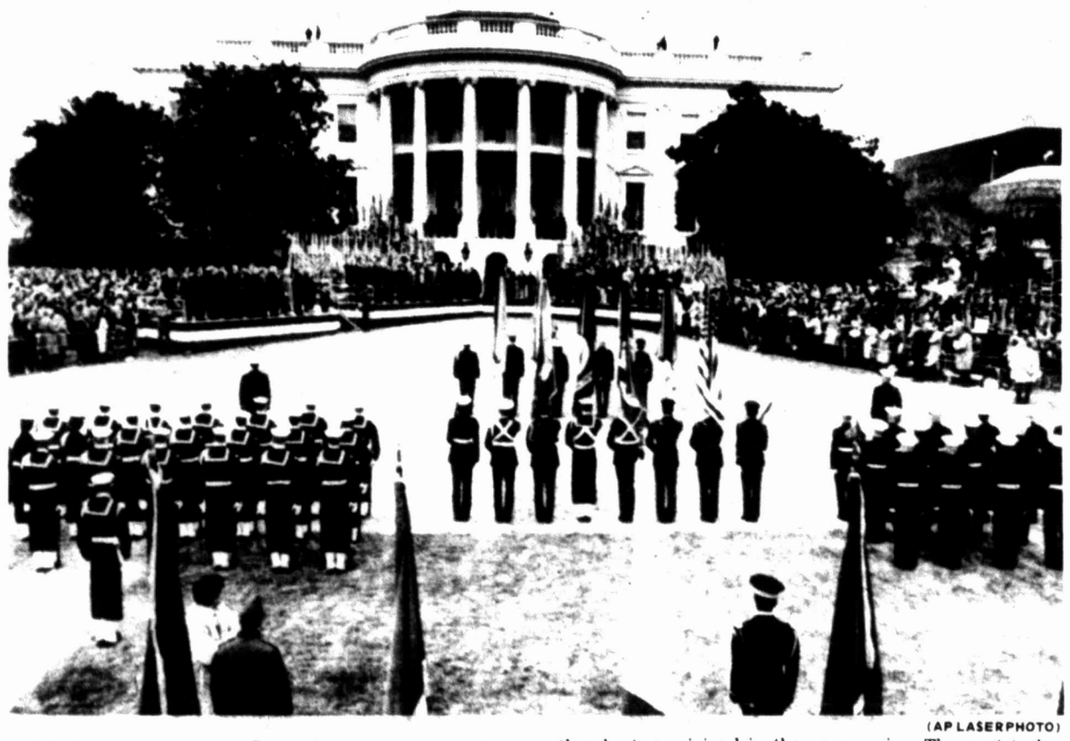

"It's nothing more than picking the pockets of consumers to further bloat oil company profits," said Ellen Berman, executive director of the Consumer Energy Council of America.

Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, and Rep. Toby Moffett, D-Conn., two congressional opponents of decontrol, pledged to try to block Reagan's action.

Metzenbaum charged decontrol could lead to gasoline prices of $2 per gallon by the end of the year and give the oil companies a $170 billion windfall on their current reserves.

Most energy analysts, however, said the economic impact would not be anywhere near that great.

Private and congressional experts said immediate decontrol probably will mean consumers will pay an extra $10 billion for petroleum products over the next eight months.

WELCOME HOME — General view of the official welcome home ceremonies for the free 53 Americans. Richard Queen, who was freed several months before the other hostages joined in the ceremonies. The vent took place on the South Lawn of the White House Tuesday.

Freed hostages get homecoming they've been waiting for today

By the Associated Press

The freed hostages started returning to their home towns today, to the friends and neighbors who had prayed, rung bells and tied yellow ribbons for them during their 444 days of captivity.

"A native son has returned home to us, to the people who love him most," said Pennsylvania Lt. Gov. William Scranton III, as he welcomed Michael J. Metrinko, 34, at the airport in Scranton.

Across the country, similar welcome-home ceremonies were prepared. Military bands and color guards were at the ready at airports; shoulder-to-shoulder crowds ringed tarmacs and lined motorcade routes.

Two of the 52 released hostages returned home Tuesday night after White House ceremonies. John E. Graves, 53, went to his home in Reston, Va., just outside Washington, where neighborhood children provided a candlelight welcome, and Jerry J. Miele, 42, of Mount Pleasant, Pa., flew to Pittsburgh, saying he planned a three or four-month vacation before going back to work.

Metrinko, whose home is in Olyphant outside Scranton, stepped off a private plane onto a 150-foot-long red carpet as a band played "God Bless America" and the crowd cheered.

"I'm a little bit overwhelmed," he said. "Thank you very, very much."

Greetings of all kinds awaited the 52 special Americans, from public accolade to silent thanksgiving. They're getting keys to cities, glasses of champagne, bouquets of yellow roses. They'll hear church bells and the national anthem. They'll see miles of yellow ribbon and their names on billboards.

After a stirring celebration Tuesday in the nation's capital — from a White House reception to fireworks over the Potomac — the freed captives began leaving for smaller, but no less heartfelt welcomes in their hometowns.

When Rodney "Rocky" Sickmann's plane touches down at St. Louis today, the 22-year-old Marine sergeant will see a giant yellow ribbon wound around the airport control tower.

A Marine Corps color guard was to post colors as a U.S. Air Force band played the national anthem in his honor.

Donald A. Sharer was returning to Norfolk, Va., for a celebration beginning at the airport and ending at the courthouse, where a tree was being planted in his honor.

Texas hostages report no apparent ill effects

HOUSTON (AP) — The three Texans among the former Iranian hostages say they suffered no apparent ill effects from ther 444 days in captivity.

Marine Sgt. John D. McKeel Jr., 27, of Balch Springs, says the 52 may have speeded up their release by warning that Ronald Reagan, as president, would "send in the troops."

William B. Royer Jr. of West University Place said he had constant petty harassments but "no horror stories."

Navy Lt. Cmdr. Robert A. Englemann of Hurst let his hair grow to shoulder length but got a trim in Germany and said he had no ill effects from the Iranian episode.

"I myself feel very well physically and mentally," said Englemann, 34.

The three talked with newsmen in Washington after being honored there Tuesday by President Reagan at the White House.

Royer, 49, said he felt pity for some of his captors because they were being used as "pawns in some bigger scheme of things" he still does not understand. But, he said, he believes the United States came out "the winners."

McKeel, 27, said it became clear to the hostages their Iranian captors feared the change of administrations in Washington.

Transfer of ownership approved

Ambulance service gripes aired

By JAMES WERRELL

Gripes from both ambulance service officials and local hospitals surfaced during discussion of the transfer of the Shaffer Ambulance contract at the regular meeting of the Big Spring City Council, Tuesday night.

Approval of the transfer of ownership of the service from Gary Shaffer to his colleague, John Korell, was approved by Howard County Commissioners during their Monday-morning meeting. In order to complete the transaction, approval of the joint city-county contract was needed from the city council.

Both Shaffer and Korell were present to field questions from councilmen.

"I've been hearing a lot of complaints, rumors really, about problems with a certain local hospital since you started this business," said Councilman Larry Miller. "I haven't heard their side or your side, but have you been having problems?"

"The problems we have had stem mainly from the rules made by the city council that we only transfer patients on a cash basis," answered Shaffer. "Now, if the doctors say it is an emergency and the patient is in serious condition, we don't have much choice but to transfer them.

"But the nurses say we have been bothering them for payment on non-emergency cases, and we sometimes never get paid. These are the rules laid down by the city council, and that's what we are trying to go by."

In order to help reduce the service's unpaid bills, the council had, this summer, instructed Shaffer to collect on transfers whenever possible before they took place. In its presentation, Tuesday night, the service still listed over $42,000 in accounts receivable from individual accounts.

Shaffer stated that he has asked hospital officials to give 24-hour notice before a non-emergency transfer, such as those for patients from hospital to rest-home. Shaffer said that he had received "no cooperation" from hospitals in this effort, and it has been abandoned.

Shaffer noted a specific incident in which a patient was transferred from Malone-Hogan Hospital to the Odessa Medical Center without ambulance officials or the accompanying hospital nurse knowing the patient's name.

"They almost didn't take the patient in Odessa. And we were out the in-town expense as well as the cost of using our own equipment, gas and manpower," said Shaffer.

Emily Ward, public relations director for Malone-Hogan, explained that the incident had occurred but that there were extenuating circumstances.

"It was an emergency situation; the patient didn't speak English and he had no identification. But he needed specialized treatment," she added.

Surmising that the problem is probably one of communication, Councilman Hal Boyd came up with a proposal: "Assuming the contract is transferred, would Mr. Korell be willing to sit down with some of these hospital people and try to work out a solution to this?"

"Yes, certainly," said Korell. "For this service to work we will need cooperation. If there are hard feelings between the nurses or other hospital people and us, we need to get together and work them out."

With that assurance, the council voted unanimously to approve the transfer.

Utility Commission votes Bell about one-third of rate request

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Public Utility Commissioners today voted 2-1 to give Southwestern Bell only about one-third of the rate hike the company said it needed.

They approved a hearing examiner's report recommending a $114.3 million increase, compared with the $326.3 million the company wanted.

The rate package includes a nickel-per-month increase for residential service in large cities. Bell wanted a $1.25 increase for home service.

Chairman George Cowden and Commissioner Moak Rollins voted to accept hearing examiner Phil Ricketts' 55-page report, with some minor changes. Commissioner Garrett Morris dissented, saying, "I would deny the rate increase, period."

The order means Bell will have to refund interim rate increases it began collecting in November, which were allowed after Bell posted a bond to cover any potential refunds. Ricketts' report said those refunds should be paid, with interest, over a three-month period.

The five-cent monthly increase would be for residential service in the largest cities, including Houston, Dallas, Fort Worth, San Antonio, Austin, Corpus Christi, Waco and others.

Smaller cities would pay larger increases. Customers in the smallest areas Bell serves would pay 55 cents more per month. Those in Alice, Bay City, Huntsville, Pampa and Kingsville would pay 30 cents more per month.

The small increase includes doing away with the current 50-cent per month charge for an extension phone.

The rate package includes an increase to 25 cents per call for any directory information call over 10 per month. The company wanted to reduce the number of free calls from 10 to five per month, with the 25 cent charge per additional call.

Bell sought no increases in long-distance rates.

After the examiner's report came out on Jan. 6, Bell Vice President Paul Roth called the $114.3 million hike "inadequate," and promised Bell would fight it in today's hearing before the three-member PUC.

Willo Hardin, spokeswoman for the Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now, called Ricketts' report a "tremendous victory for the Texas consumer."

Polling places puzzle

Councilman Smith announces he will run for city position

Following Tuesday's regular meeting of the Big Spring City Council, Councilman Jack Y. Smith made an early, unofficial announcement of his intention to run for the post in the April 4 city election.

Smith was appointed to the position of councilman when John Massey retired from the post shortly after the election two years ago. Smith's official announcement will come on Feb. 4.

Councilman Larry Miller, whose term also comes to an end this year, stated that he would announce his intentions in a statement to be issued Thursday.

Also in relation to the coming election, the council approved a first reading of a resolution to hold the election again at five different polling places. Voters will remember that the council spent many hours recently conceiving a plan to combine the various polling places at a central location, namely the Dorothy Garrett Coliseum.

That plan, however, requires approval from the United States Attorney General before it can be enacted.

"We expect that approval some time in 1982," said City Manager Don Davis, facetiously. "It should be noted that we received approval from the attorney general on Monday to hold our bond election," he added, as an example of the sometimes tortoise-like nature of the federal bureaucracy.

So, until approval of the centralization plan is received, the city election will proceed as it has in the past. Mayor Clyde Angel has made several requests to federal officials to help cut the red tape, he said, and if approval is received, between now and April, plans may be changed.

Immediate decontrol may hurt small refiners

DALLAS (AP) — Texas oilmen were not unanimous today in their praise for President Reagan's plan to lift federal oil price controls immediately.

"We've been pushing hard for decontrol of oil for years," said Frank Pitts of Dallas, president of the Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association, which approves of the idea. "In my judgment, a total free market is best for the consumers of the country, the total economic situation and the national security."

But Howard McClung, vice president of Howell Hydrocarbons Inc. of San Antonio, said he preferred the phased decontrol plan that President Carter had implemented.

Under Carter's phased decontrol program, domestic oil prices would have risen gradually, reaching world price levels by October.

Removing the controls eight months early will result in an additional $10 billion profit for the oil companies, $3 billion available for exploration and $7 billion soaked up by the windfall profits tax.

McClung said immediate decontrol would mean the company's crude oil costs would leap 25 percent in 90 days or less and could put smaller refiners out of business.

"The crude price is the thing that will have the heaviest impact ... on the small refiner," he said. "We've got to go out there and hustle with the big boys (major refineries) that can buy larger volumes. ... there are a lot of the small ones that will go out of business. We just don't have the buying power."

Another word of caution came in a recent report by the Texas Oil Marketers Association. The report said the long-range impact of decontrol probably would be total dominance of the marketplace by the major, integrated oil companies.

Small refiners might be squeezed out of the crude oil market by the higher prices and if the major companies do take over the consumer market, it could endanger low-volume gasoline retailers in larger cities.

Delhi International Oil Corp. President N.C. Miller called decontrol "a fortunate move."

"I think it's an attempt to convince the public that government regulation is going to be reduced," he said.

But American Petrofina, which must go to the marketplace for 80 percent of the crude oil it refines, sees potential problems with the end of government controls.

"Those of us who are in a smaller refiner classification are vitally concerned and in hopes that something will be worked out," said Petrofina vice president Joe Moss.

Adult, Continuing Education Department plans mall booth

The Adult and Continuing Education Department of Howard College will have a booth in the mall of Highland Shopping Center Saturday to register anyone interested in belly dancing, cake decorating, G.E.D., E.S.L. or any of the other many classes available at Howard College this semester.

Martha Fierro, director of the department, explained, "People have a hard time coming to register for Adult and Continuing Education classes during the week, so on Saturday we will take registration to the public. We invite the public to come out and register, ask questions, or just to meet our staff. Our main goal is to stamp out illiteracy and boredom."

For those persons who do not speak English, Spanish-speaking people will be on hand to help, said Ms. Fierro.

Information about any of the Continuing Ed or Adult Education classes can be obtained by calling Howard College at 267-6311 extension 70.

Railroad retirees, workers due honors at Chamber banquet

Railroad retirees and those presently working for the railroad will be recognized at the annual Big Spring Area Chamber of Commerce banquet at 7 p.m. Feb. 7 in the Dorothy Garrett Coliseum, according to Frances Wheat, banquet chairman.

Tickets for the banquet are $10 apiece, and may be purchased from the Chamber of Commerce office, or from any member of the Ambassadors.

Theme of the banquet is the Spring City Centennial, which will mark the 100th anniversary of the railroad in Howard County.

Banquet participants are advised to enter the coliseum by the east ramp, said Mrs. Wheat.

Damage claims produce different decisions

Three claims for damages were met with three different decisions by Big Spring City Councilmen during Tuesday night's regular meeting.

On the night of Dec. 20, James King was driving near the intersection of West 16th and Lark when the front of his car slammed into two large potholes. The accident ruined two tires and damaged two wheels and hubcaps, resulting in $396 worth of repairs.

"Although the factual basis underlying this claim is not disputed, there is no evidence which has been brought to my attention that the city was negligent in failing to repair this pothole," stated City Attorney Elliott Mitchell, in a memorandum to the council.

He recommended that the claim be denied. Councilman Larry Miller, however, balked.

"I know I may be voted down on this, but I'm going to make a motion that, since the city seems to be partially at fault, we split the difference with Mr. King, and pay him $200," he said.

Instead of voting him down, the council unanimously concurred.

"We have to watch our streets a little closer," said Councilman Jack Y. Smith, following the vote.

A claim submitted by O.R. Mayo was denied altogether. Mayo stated that he drove through a barricade which had no lights or other warning systems on 10th behind the Big Spring High School.

Subsequent damage to his motorcycle and helmet totaled over $451.

Mitchell pointed out to the council that there are five mercury-vapor street lights in the vicinity of the accident site, and that the street is straight with no obstruction of visibility. The council unanimously denied the claim.

In a third incident, Julian Fisher submitted a claim on behalf of his son, who drove the family car into a large pothole at the intersection of 18th and Scurry during the early morning hours of Nov. 29. Again, two tires and wheels were damaged, with estimated repair costs of $247.88.

Mitchell again recommended that the claim be denied, but the question arose of whether the hole was caused naturally, or was a result of repair work by the city. No one present had the answer, and the claim was tabled until further investigation could take place.

Burglars use cutting torch

COLORADO CITY (SC) — Colorado City police are investigating a burglary at the local high school.

The biggest act of destruction was the use of a cutting torch to get into a soft drink machine. No arrests have been made.

Roundtree named police chief in Colorado City

COLORADO CITY (SC) — Former Assistant Chief of Police Jimmy Roundtree was named chief of police Tuesday afternoon.

Roundtree's recommendation came from Colorado City Manager Brenda Tarter to city council members during a special meeting.

According to Mrs. Tarter, "of the eight applications, Jimmy Roundtree's was the best of the group. I want to state that the city council and I want strong law enforcement for Colorado City and we believe Roundtree can provide the leadership for such law enforcement."

Roundtree's salary was set at $14,430, with an additional $125 per month car allowance.

When asked to comment on his appointment, Chief Roundtree replied, "I'm proud of the opportunity to serve in this capacity. The safety of citizens of Colorado City is our concern."

Roundtree originally is from Odessa, began his career with the Texas Department of Public Safety, and has been with the Colorado City Law Enforcement department for three years.

Reagan's celebration

WASHINGTON (AP) — It was Ronald Reagan's kind of day — a day of anthems and American flags, an old-fashioned Fourth of July transplanted to January, complete with fireworks.

As on the night of Reagan's inauguration, just one week before, an array of skyrockets burst over the monuments of American government, this time not for one man come to power but for 52 come home.

Hollywood could not have produced a better cast as a rallying point for a new president dedicated to the old virtues of patriotism and the individual.

At his inauguration, President Reagan spoke of all his countrymen as the real heroes of the land. Here in testament to that were 53 of them, including one released by Iran more than six months ago because of ill health.

"Mr. President," said Bruce Laingen, the ranking hostage-diplomat who spoke for them all, "...I give you now 53 Americans who will always have a love affair with this country and who join you in a prayer of thanksgiving for the way in which this crisis has strengthened the spirit and resilience and strength that is the mark of a truly free society."

It wasn't Reagan's crisis; it was Jimmy Carter's. Indeed, Reagan the campaigner had at times raised it as an issue against the president he defeated. But it was Reagan's celebration.

Carter was gone, on the way to a Virgin Islands vacation he would rather not have had time for, far from the ceremony of homecoming he so dearly wanted to convene at his own White House.

Actually, the freed hostages honored by Reagan and the nation's capital Tuesday were 52 Americans who happened to be standing in the wrong places at the wrong time, on Nov. 4, 1979, when Iranian militants seized the U.S. Embassy in Tehran. To say so does not detract from the valor they showed in the 444 days of captivity that followed.

Laingen said he didn't feel like a hero. But they were all honored as heroes, Reagan's kind of heroes, ordinary people bearing — and overcoming — extraordinary stress.

"I can assure you that we're prepared to go out and become rank-and-file common citizens again," Laingen said.

To such rank-and-file citizens, Reagan had dedicated his inaugural address. That inauguration was a national ceremony, too, but it was a celebration of party as well as country, a day for Republicans returned to power.

Tuesday's homecoming celebration knew no political party. It was for Americans. That made it a second, special inauguration for the Reagan administration.

This was the time to celebrate.

And for that purpose, Reagan said, the simplest words were the best:

"Welcome home."

Soviet grain embargo decision expected soon

States News Service

WASHINGTON — Agriculture Secretary John R. Block disclosed that President Ronald Reagan will decide "relatively soon" whether to lift the Russian grain embargo, according to Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Wichita, who met with Block Tuesday.

"Block said Reagan is currently working on the decision but (Block) did not give any indication on what the decision would be," said Glickman, D-Wichita, a member of the House Agriculture Committee.

President Reagan promised during the campaign to lift the grain embargo, imposed by President Carter in retaliation to the Soviet invasion of Afganistan. But Reagan has recently backed away from the pledge, saying the embargo needs "review."

Block's disclosure is the first indication from the administration on when the embargo decision will be announced.

John Ochs, Block's spokesman, said the embargo "has come up a couple of times in cabinet meetings (held by Reagan since the inaugural). It's something they're always talking about."

A Reagan agriculture adviser, who asked not to be named, confirmed the topic has been discussed in recent cabinet meetings. But the adviser added he did not know when Reagan would decide whether to lift the embargo.

White House press spokesman Larry Speakes refused to comment Tuesday.

Glickman said Block reinterated his strong opposition to the embargo in their meeting.

"If it was up to Block, the embargo would be lifted tomorrow," Ochs said Tuesday.

The agriculture comunity has vigorously fought the embargo, saying it has hurt farmers more than the Soviet Union. But GOP foreign policy experts have suggested lifting the embargo would be irresponsible, especially in light of the Soviet Union's ominous move on Poland's border.

Renters damage residence

Owner of the home, Ricky White, 811 W. 16th, inspected the home Tuesday morning, and found that one large and one small space heater and a bathroom mirror had been stolen. In addition, four windows, three screens and three storm doors had been broken, and the carpet had been burned.

Total loss was estimated at $1,090.

Locals discovered that more of their vinyl car tops had suffered at the hands of vandals, Tuesday. The top of a car belonging to Delan Wash, 3221 Duke, was slashed, and its antenna broken while it was parked at the Sacred Heart Church, 509 N. Aylford. Damage was estimated at $607.50.

When Mrs. Tom Rutledge, 2513 Corral, left for work, 9:30 a.m. Tuesday, she found that the top of her 1979 Cadillac had been slashed. Cost of the damage has not been estimated.

Vandals sliced the top of a 1976 Cutlass Supreme belonging to Gracie Porter, Garden City Route, while it was parked in a lot on the 100 block of East Second, Monday morning. Cost of the damage has not been estimated.

Burglars broke in through the back door of the home of B.B. Henson, 1701 Yale, sometime Tuesday, and stole three watches, a pocket calculator, a diamond ring and two lamps. Loss was estimated at $1,025.

Two mishaps were reported Tuesday.

A vehicle driven by Joe Bustamente, 1407 Oriole, struck a street sign at 2600 West Highway 80, 2:08 a.m.

Vehicles driven by Leota White, Modesto, Calif., and Steven Madry, 1206 Wood, collided at 900 S. Gregg, 3:51 p.m.

Big Spring YMCA celebration begins

George Williams founded the YMCA in 1844 in London, England. Surely, he would have disbelieved anyone who would have told him that the YMCA would be exhibiting his statement about the philosophy of the YMCA. He is quoted as saying, "I believe that if earnest, devoted and self-denying men can be found to unite themselves together, God would smile upon their efforts, and much good might be done."

So true are those words for Big Spring as the Big Spring YMCA celebrates its YMCA Week and YMCA Sunday ... Jan. 25 through Feb. 1.

According to Bob Cappel, executive director, "The YMCA is joining forces with local churches in seeking to develop Judo-Christian character in people of all levels and races."

"The YMCA", Cappel said, "continues its contribution to youth and family members and to the worth of the individual and its dedication to Christian principle."

"I'm sure," said Cappel, "George Williams would be astonished at the variety of activities offered by the YMCA and how it's possible to fulfill his philosophy in these activities. It might be the teaching of fair play in competitive age, in emphasis upon the game and not on the score, or it might be in the wholesome involvement of youth, with freedom to make a joyful noise."

It is in the above and more incidents ... in a membership campaign ... in the committee room ... in the swimming pool ... at a lay persons retreat ... in a Tri-Hi-Y Club ... in Day Camp ... wherever work is to be done, wherever human needs are to be met, wherever the spirit of God's love is shared through thought and deed, Cappel said.

Here in part is the importance of the YMCA as it grows to service the needs of our Community by making our Community a great place in which to live, Cappel concluded.

DISCUSS DRIVE — Earl Archer, president of the YMCA board of directors, and Russ McEwen, right, chairman for the 1981 membership drive, discuss the first report on the membership campaign, which will be presented at 5:15 p.m. Thursday at the YMCA, 801 Owens. Bob Cappel, executive director of the Y, said a $47,000 goal has been set for the drive, which will run for two weeks. He added that more than 100 people are working on the drive, which includes solicitation of participating memberships and sustaining memberships. The drive formally began Monday, and four reports will be given throughout two weeks.

Tax case under way in C-City

COLORADO CITY (SC) — An important tax case is being heard in district court locally.

The Colorado City School District is seeking $75,000 in back taxes from Valero Transmission, formerly La Vaca Gathering Company. The taxes are for the years 1977, 1978, and 1979.

La Vaca has contested the tax evaluation, stating that a figure such as $33,000 would be more equitable. Judge Dick Starley of Pecos, is hearing the case, which is a non-jury trial. The Colorado School District is being represented by Shelley Veselka and Robert Hewey, attorneys from Austin. The two laid groundwork for testimony earlier this afternoon when a representative from the American Appraisal Company took the stand.

Also testifying for the school district later in the week will be a representative from the appraisal firm of Pritchard and Abbott, testimony which is expected to be the thrust of the Colorado School District's case.

Representing the defendent is William Ikard.

The trial has been in recess until today.

STRIKES SPREAD TO SCHOOLS — Letters printed on windows of the Warsaw Technical University Tuesday reads "We want access to free radio and television." Workers staged warning strikes in three industrial centers and a university student strike in Lodz spread to two other schools.

Seven Polish factories shut down in answer to general strike call

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — At least seven factories shut down in southeast Poland today in answer to a call for a general strike. Meanwhile, a Politburo member stepped up attacks on militant unionists, saying they "must be barred from participation in the management of Poland's socio-economic life."

An official in Rzeszow, 160 miles south of Warsaw, said five plants in the city and two others in the area, including an aircraft factory, were shut at 7 a.m. as part of the appeal for a general strike in the region.

The strike was called by the Rzeszow chapter of Solidarity, Poland's big independent labor union, because the government failed to send a delegation to the city to discuss the delay in the registration of an independent union of private farmers.

Some 300 farmers and peasants have occupied a union building in Rzeszow since Jan. 3, protesting the lack of a farmers' union and other grievances. Lech Walesa, Solidarity's moderate leader, met with the protesters Tuesday but failed in an attempt to talk them out of a general strike.

Some 10,000 students continued a sit-in at Lodz University, in Poland's second largest city, demanding more academic freedom and an end to compulsory classes in Marxism, and strikes were reported in Bielec, Jaroslaw, Bialystock, Katowice, Bielsko Biala, Zdunska Wola, Jastrzebie, Radom, Sieradz and Swidnica.

Warsaw Television said there were strikes Tuesday at more than 100 "enterprises" in Silesia, the coal-mining region, and that the first shift in the mines extracted only 120,000 tons of coal, 40,000 tons less than normal.

Islamic boycott of Israel planned

TAIF, Saudi Arabia (AP) — An Islamic boycott office with twice as many members as the Arab League will be created to blacklist firms dealing with Israel, Habib Chatti, secretary general of the 42-member Islamic Conference, said today.

In an interview with The Associated Press and The New York Times, Chatti said the boycott office would be modeled after a three-decade old, 20-member Arab League blacklisting agency.

"It will be set up," Chatti said during the fourth day of the Islamic summit here. "We will take the list of the Arab League and use that for information."

He said no specific firms had yet been singled out and added, "We have not yet begun our task." The extension of the boycott to the broader Islamic world made up of 800 million Moslems is part of the anti-Israel strategy being formulated by the summit to pressure Israel into withdrawing from Arab lands conquered in the 1967 Mideast war, especially the eastern sector of Jerusalem.

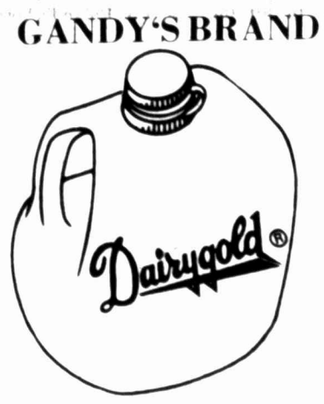

Asked if the Arab oil weapon would be used against Israel, Chatti said, "Every weapon must be used...including oil." He said whether it would be employed depended on the situation. "Maybe it won't be used now and perhaps not at all." However, Chatti suggested the oil weapon would be reserved for use at key periods. "You don't use a missile to hit something small," he said.

On Tuesday, the summit called for the immediate withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan but did not pledge any money or arms to the Moslem rebels fighting the communist Afghan government.

Presidential libraries cost taxpayers

Not long ago, Jimmy Carter said his post-presidency plans did not include the establishment of a Carter library. His present intentions are to deposit his presidential papers in an existing library in his native Georgia, probably in Atlanta.

He could change his mind later, that is his prerogative. If he stands by his original decision, he will be setting a precedent in recent presidential history.

THE IDEA OF a presidential library is fairly new. It started modestly with the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library, established following the death of Mr. Roosevelt. Located at Hyde Park, N.Y., it was an unpretentious single-story structure on the former Roosevelt estate, a combination research facility and museum housing memorablia of the late president and his wife. Their bodies, incidentally, lie buried in a nearby rose garden.

The Roosevelt archives was financed privately and handed over to the government for operation, an arrangement that endures to this day.

Libraries were later established for Harry S. Truman in Independence, Mo., and for Dwight D. Eisenhower in Abilene, Kan. Both are unpretentious. Some years after his death, material of Herbert Hoover was assembled at West Branch, Iowa, his birthplace. Some of the papers were transferred from the Hoover Institute of War, Revolution and Peace on the Stanford University campus in Palo Alto, Cal.

Followers of Lyndon B. Johnson apparently reasoned he deserved greater attention. A library containing his papers was established on the University of Texas campus at Austin that far overshadowed anything done for any other chief executive in the past.

Its critics say that the structure is a monumental exercise in ego-indulgence.

More subdued is the Kennedy Library in Boston, though it is still far more elaborate than those edifices built for Roosevelt, Truman, Eisenhower or Hoover.

GERALD FORD IS going to have his institution in Ann Arbor, Mich., where he was far better known as a football player than as presidential timber. A Nixon library, no doubt, will be established if some of his legal papers tainted by Watergate can be cleared.

The presidential libraries are maintained at public expense, with all bills going to the General Services Administration.

This year the six existing libraries, plus care for the Nixon papers, put a dent in the federal budget to the extent of $9.683 million. When the Ford facilities are ready, the cost of maintenance likely will jump past the $12 million mark.

There is no real pattern for operating the libraries or for adding to them. The structures are often planned and built at the discretion of the former presidents or their friends, with no provision that they meet professional archival standards. The National Archives then inherit the responsibility of running them as best they can.

Carter's idea of donating his papers to the government which he led for four years hopefully may set an example for future presidents to follow. Let us hope so.

New to beat

Around the rim

Tina Miller

Look again—there's a new face in the picture. I'm Tina Miller, the latest addition to The Herald staff and the new Family News Editor.

To begin with, I think I should tell you something about myself. I grew up in Big Spring, and have always called it home no matter where I lived. I graduated from Big Spring High School, attended Howard College, then went on to Angelo State University.

AFTER GRADUATING FROM college and living away from home for several years, I discovered that this is a much better place to live than I had realized, and I came home. During the last six months I was the receptionist and switchboard operator here at The Herald. Then, one day my ship came in. My exceptional writing ability was finally recognized, and I was promoted. (Actually, the boss was desperate.)

If I ever have a spare minute again, which seems most unlikely, I'll get back to my hobbies of reading and photography. Who knows, I may even cook again. If I have more than a minute, I'll pack up and go to Colorado.

My parents, Ralph and Marian Walker, are thrilled about my new job here. For years they have been trying to figure out why they paid a small fortune for my college education and had nothing to show for it, right Daddy? After a few of these columns they may demand their money back. My husband, Danny, asks for as much sympathy as he can get since he has been elected (ordered sounds so tacky) to read everything from the first draft to the final product. He also has to like them . . . or else.

SINCE YOU KNOW something about me, I hope you will give me a chance to get to know you. I look forward to working with the various clubs and organizations as well as those involved with other social and family events. Family News covers many different areas, and I hope to be able to cover each aspect as much as possible. All suggestions for features and articles will be welcomed and appreciated. With your help I will never have to worry about running out of ideas.

Please be patient while I am learning all the many different things that make up the Family News Section, as many of these are completely new to me. I hope that you will enjoy reading the Family News section as much as I will enjoy writing it and putting it together.

Rise of Haig

Evans, Novak

WASHINGTON — Within hours of his confirmation as secretary of state, Alexander Haig put final touches on a document for President Reagan's signature that would enthrone the State Department and its new boss as undisputed foreign policy-makers in the Reagan administration.

The document, drafted by Haig and his staffers on the seventh floor in Foggy Bottom, would end 12 years of National Security Council (NSC) staff dominance over U.S. foreign policy. Specifically, it would establish two working committees to be chaired ordinarily by high State Department officials instead of, as in the past, by the NSC staff director.

The document is doubtly significant because of its authorship. Though a presidential directive, it was written not by the new presidential assistant for national security (the NSC staff director,), Richard V. Allen, but by Secretary of State Haig.

HAIG KNOWS MORE about how the NSC apparatus works than anyone else in the Reagan administration. Having gained that knowledge during the Nixon years as NSC director Henry Kissinger's top aide, Haig knows what he wants from Reagan: a return to the system of 20 years ago when State Department officials, not White House operatives, ran the committees that control national security communications to the Oval Office.

The rise of Al Haig and the decline of the NSC staff system draws mixed reviews within the Reagan administration. Allen himself utters no dissent. Reflecting the president's wishes, he is helping Haig. Eyebrows lifted when Allen hired Maj. Gen. Robert L. Schweitzer, one of Haig's lieutenants at NATO command in Europe, as a key NSC staffer. That gives Haig a potent ally in the White House.

But Haig as potential Cabinet strongman generates distrust in higher elevations of the Reagan administration. Edwin Meese, the president's closest aide, is said by insiders to consider California Supreme Court Justice William P. Clark as a counterweight to Haig. Clark's selection as deputy secretary of state, despite his lack of foreign policy experience, was based on loyalty to Reagan proven in service as the president's first chief of staff as governor of California.

Even with Clark at State, however, Haig's rise will not be stopped quickly. That was affirmed when Haig sent his unprecedented proposal to the White House reconstituting the NSC, not along lines laid down by Allen but fitting his own desires.

Such a concession by Kissinger or Jimmy Carter's NSC director, Zbigniew Brzezinski, would have been unthinkable. The very fact that at this writing the new president has not yet issued his first directive on his desired NSC setup is revealing.

BY DEC. 30, 1968, Kissinger had completed the most elaborate study ever made of the NSC structure, which was quickly approved by Richard Nixon in a series of directives that opened his presidency. On Jan. 19, 1977, Brzezinski got Carter's signature on changes he wanted in the NSC system, with Carter's approval going out Jan. 20 as Presidential Directive No. 2.

Allen's failure to perform with the same dispatch demonstrates the sincerity of Reagan's often-expressed dislike for the NSC's staff system of the last dozen years.

Why colds cause their symptoms

Dr. Paul G. Donohue, M.D.

Dear Dr. Donohue: I have had one cold too many this winter. My doctor refuses to give me penicillin. He says it does no good. If he is right isn't there something I can do to avoid colds or help me feel less miserable (especially because of blocked ears) when I do get one? How about a few cold facts? — Mrs. L.A.

1. Antibiotics work only against bacteria, and colds are caused by viruses.

2. To your second question: Cold viruses attach to nose and throat linings, causing them to become inflamed and swollen. The openings of the eustachian tubes (to the ears) may become blocked, causing the peculiar in-a-rain barrel sensation. All this creates a high misery index.

3. For prevention, be sure you do not get excessively tired and run down. You can catch a cold more easily at those times. Very dry air also dries out the linings of the nose and throat and makes them more attractive to cold viruses.

4. What about remedies?

Taking plenty of fluids helps keep the nose and throat moist. Gargling with salt water (a half a teaspoon in a large glass of water) will soothe the throat.

5. Over-the-counter aids:

There are innumerable over-the-counter preparations, as you are well aware. Decongestants contain ephedrine, napthazoline or pseudoephedrine. These help shrink the linings I spoke of and make breathing easier. They should be used in moderation because as their effect wears off the old swelling may return and be even more pronounced.

Antihistamines are in many cold preparations. Their effectiveness is questionable, but they do decrease nasal discharge and alleviate discomfort that way. On the negative side, they tend to make you drowsy.

Cough preparations, particularly those with small amounts of codeine or dextromethorphan, are good for a dry hacking cough. A cough that is bringing up mucus should be considered a protective cough and should not be routinely suppressed. And finally, there is rest and chicken soup.

6. If a cold lingers more than a week, or if the temperature is quite high, and if you are producing large amounts of yellowish or blood-tinged sputum, then it would be time to return to your doctor. It is not a time for the simple home and over-the-counter remedies and aids I speak of above. This kind of respiratory infection should be treated by him.

Dear Dr. Donohue: Can a person have mononucleosis more than once? — Mrs. C.C.

Mononucleosis is caused by a specific virus — the Epstein-Barr virus. As is the case with many other viruses, this one can live in certain cells for very long periods. Throat washings may show the virus present sometimes as long as nine months after the symptoms of the illness have subsided. In some, the symptoms of mono can be very similar to those for other ailments.

Dear Dr. Donohue: My ten-year-old contracted scabies somehow. My aunt gave us some sulfur ointment, which she swears by, but the rash has been hanging on. I thought this was going to get rid of the problem. The doctor says the scabies has probably been eradicated, so why the rash? — J.W.

This is one effective method for getting rid of the scabies mite. However, if the rash and itch persist, it may mean that the child has some vestige of nerve inflammation related to the old scabies. You know, also, that if one member of a family has scabies, it is best to treat the other family members. You should have the child examined again if the problem persists. There are other effective medicines.

Dear Dr. Donohue: What does "aplastic anemia" mean? — H.R.

It means a red blood cell deficiency caused by the body's inefficiency in making them. An example would be an anemia caused by a bone marrow disturbance.

Mononucleosis is primarily a disease that hits young people. To learn more about it, write to Dr. Donohue, in care of the Big Spring Herald, for a copy of his booklet, "Mononucleosis: What It Is; What To Do." Enclose a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope and 50 cents.

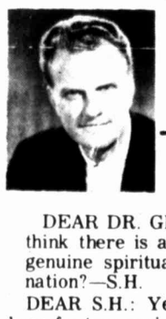

Dr. Donohue welcomes reader mail but regrets that, due to the tremendous volume received daily, he is unable to answer individual letters.

Texas doing well with conventions

In 1979, Texas was second only to California in the number of convention activities, according to the U.S. Travel Data Center's publication "Tourism's Top Twenty."

The study showed Texas with eight percent of the nation's convention market, compared to California's 11 percent.

Florida, which promotes its convention facilities and wintertime balminess, ranks behind California and Texas, sharing third place with New York. Each state grabs six percent of the convention business.

My answer

Billy Graham

DEAR DR. GRAHAM: Do you think there is any true hope for genuine spiritual revival in our nation?—S.H.

DEAR S.H.: Yes, there is always hope for true revival, because revival is something which comes from God. There have been a number of times in the past when spiritual revival swept our land, and it can happen again. God has not changed and neither has his power to change lives.

What are the marks of true revival? If our nation were to experience spiritual revival, what would we expect to happen? There are many things I could mention, but certainly one of the characteristics of true revival is that large numbers of people realize just how serious sin is in the eyes of God, and they repent of sin and turn to Jesus Christ for forgiveness. True revival is also marked by a deep hunger for God's Word and a new desire to study the bible and apply it to life. A true revival also brings a new joy into the lives of believers, and a new desire to witness for Christ and pray for the needs of others. Because people whose spiritual lives have been renewed have a new commitment to obey Christ, their personal habits and practices are changed. Society will be changed as well.

Future historians may record that our present time was a time of spiritual revival, although it is difficult for us to tell. But certainly there have been encouraging signs of the movement of God in many lives today. In the last decade or so many, many people have come to Christ. Bible study and prayer groups by the thousands have been started and many evangelistic ministries have grown dramatically. But no matter what historians may say—the important thing is our own personal relationship with Christ. Have we committed our lives to him, and are we seeking his will for our lives? Are we growing in our relationship to him, and seeking to share Christ with others? Revival must start with each one of us, in our own hearts. And then we should pray the ancient prayer of the prophet Habakkuk: "O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years" (Habakkuk 3:2).

Justice denied

Jack Anderson,

WASHINGTON — It's bad enough when U.S. consular officials fail to help Americans who run into trouble overseas; it's worse when the bureaucrats dissemble about what they did or failed to do.

Last month, I reported the disgraceful case of Dr. April Sasaki, a 29-year-old physician from Hawaii who was raped, beaten and robbed by a Nepalese soldier while she was hiking in the Himalayas in November of last year.

THE VICIOUS ATTACK was only the beginning of Sasaki's troubles.

When she made her way to a nearby village, she managed to persuade Nepalese officials that she needed hospital care, and a government helicopter flew her to the primitive hospital in Katmandu.

There she was visited by the American consul, Nancy Powell, who told Sasaki she would not be allowed to leave until she had paid $4,300 for the one-hour helicopter ride. The demand was made enforceable by the fact that Sasaki's passport had been picked up earlier by a U.S. consulate employee.

Sasaki got a friend in Bangkok to wire her the "bail money." Now back in the United States recuperating from her ordeal, Sasaki recently went to work to raise the money to repay her debt.

Meanwhile, the Bureau of Consular Affairs reacted to my original column by claiming that money was never an issue, that Sasaki's passport was never confiscated—and that the consulate should be commended, not chastised. A State Department offical also insisted that the department is still trying to recover Sasaki's money.

Sasaki, however, sticks by her account of the episode. And a sworn statement by her hospital roommate in Katmandu, Sharon Lee Childs, puts the lie to the State Department's version of events.

"I remember how utterly amazed I was when I heard the woman from the American Embassy tell April that the embassy was holding her passport until she could somehow get or raise 50,000 rupees ($4,300) for the emergency airlift provided by the Royal Nepalese Army helicopter," said Childs, "and that she could not leave the country of Nepal until the bill was paid."

CHILDS' AFFIDAVIT, ALONG with that of another witness, Gregory Petrie, has been obtained by Sen. Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii. But the senator's repeated efforts to pry information from the State Department have been stonewalled, and a Privacy Act waiver authorizing Inouye's access to the Sasaki file has apparently been lost in Foggy Bottom's mailroom.

"We would really like to hear State's side," an Inouye aide told my reporter Charles Bermant. The senator himself has called Sasaki's treatment inexcusable, and has requested "the immediate reimbursement of (Sasaki's) expenses . . . accompanied by a strong letter of apology."

Far from offering an apology, however, Ambassador Phillip Trimble chose to play P.R. games with the case. He sent Sasaki a letter on Dec. 3, calling her account "confused." The contents of the letter appeared in the Honolulu Advertiser on Dec. 9—nine days before Sasaki received it.

The consular bureau reports that the Nepalese soldier charged with the assault of Sasaki was court-martialed and sentenced—to two years in prison. But the Nepalese see no connection between the finding of guilt and a responsibility on their part to pay Sasaki any compensation, or even pay for her trip to the hospital.

Sasaki is understandably bitter about her predicament. She pointed out that of the first $9,000 she earns in her new job, half will go to repay extortion by the Nepalese government and most of the other half will go, in the form of taxes, to the U.S. government—which allowed the extortion to occur.

DOCTORED DEGREES: The groves of academe are being infiltrated by phonies. As high-paying professorial jobs get scarcer, many applicants for teaching and administrative jobs at medical, dental and community colleges around the country are puffing up their slim credentials by listing fake degrees in their resumes.

The pedagogic cheaters often go undetected for years. At highly regarded Rutgers University's New Jersey College of Medicine and Denistry, for example, at least six academicians and administrators were found to have lied about the graduate degrees they boasted of to get their jobs. After official inquiries, they were dismissed.

While university presidents privately admit that the problem of fake credentials is growing, a spokesman for the American Association of University Professors insisted that most of the cheating occurs at community colleges, which don't have stringent procedures for checking on the degrees a job applicant claims.

UNDER THE DOME: One of former Sen. Herman Talmadge's last acts before the Georgia Democrat left town was to donate a quantity of peanuts—in snack packs—to Secretary of the Senate Bill Hildenbrand. Hildenbrand says he's hoping to persuade Talmadge's successor, Matt Mattingly, that it's the freshman senator's job to provide this edible reminder of Georgia for Capital Hill visitors.

—Rep. Robert Michel, the new House minority leader, wants to have his title changed to House Republican leader. He managed to eliminate the "minority" label in the new GOP House rules, but the tag is irremediably stuck in overall House rules—by law.

—Senate staffers are hopeful that the new majority leader, Howard Baker of Tennessee, won't be the workaholic that his predecessor, Robert Byrd, was. The West Virginia Democrat thought nothing of keeping the Senate in session till 10 p.m.—with no advance notice.

Antique conservative?

The Reagan team hasn't even had time to unpack and get down to serious work in Washington, but already it is being credited with an influence extending far beyond the capital and government.

The Gray Letter, a weekly newsletter serving the antiques dealing and collecting community, reports that a "return to conservatism (is) apparent in every aspect of American life as the Reagan administration is launched."

It cites recent record prices at auction of some celebrated works. Such as $1.6 million for a Renoir, $1.7 million for a Winslow Homer. Not to mention the odd piece of furniture, such as the Philadelphia Chippendale sidechair that was something less than a steal at 60 grand.

That's conservatism!?

Dear Abby

Party Brouhaha No Laughing Matter

DEAR ABBY: My husband's former wife, Velma, with whom we have remained on fairly good terms, invited us to her home for a party. She is now married to a very well-to-do man.

Velma told me it was going to be a costume party, so my husband and I dressed up like a couple of rabbits.

Imagine our surprise when the butler opened the door and ushered us into a room filled with men in tuxedos and women in stunning gowns! We felt like a couple of fools. Velma laughed and said she thought it was funny. I was very upset to have been made the butt of her joke, so I got myself a glass of punch and spilled it on her gown. Then I laughed and told her I thought it was funny. However, she didn't see anything funny about it.

My husband isn't speaking to me, and he thinks I owe Velma an apology. What should I do?

A WIFE IN NEED

DEAR WIFE: Send Velma a bunch of carrots, and tell her you're sorry.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: I never thought I'd be writing to you because I am a very private person, but I have nowhere else to turn.

I've been married for 21 years to a man I'll call Bob. (No children.) Fourteen months ago was the last time we had sex. I've never been very interested in sex, but I enjoyed the intimacy of it. As I look back on our marriage, Bob never was overly sexy, but he performed. I thought we had a good marriage.

About the time our sex life stopped, Bob developed a friendship with a man. Their friendship grew from getting together, just the two of them, one evening a week, to spending weekends together. Last summer Bob spent his entire vacation with this man, excluding me. That's when I strongly suspected that he was gay. When I confronted him with my suspicions, he flatly denied it. I begged him to go with me to a counselor. He refused. I offered him divorce or separation. He wanted neither. He says he "cares for me," but he no longer "loves" me.

Abby, I still love him and don't want to give him up even if he is gay. I'm too embarrassed to discuss this with anyone I know. My heart is broken and I am desperate. Please help me.

MASS. HOUSEWIFE

DEAR HOUSEWIFE: It's unfortunate that you don't want to "give him up," because it appears that he has already given you up. You both need counseling, but you can't force it on Bob if he refuses to accept it. Please go for counseling without him. You desperately need to learn how to cope with a painful situation that is more common than you know.

Homemakers top goal

The Four County Young Homemakers met Jan. 20, to collect for the annual Mothers March for the March of Dimes. They covered the Ackerly community and collected close to $300, which was well over their goal of $200. Seven members participated in fund drive.

The young homemakers also had a coke pary for the local Brownie and Girl Scout troups that day. They presented pins to Brownie and Girl Scout members who participated in the color guard at the Area II Young Homemakers convention held in O'Donnell in September.

Plans are being made for the community wide spring style show sponsored by the Young Homemakers to be held March 27 in the Sands School Auditorium. A Volleyball tournament will be held by the Young Homemakers on April 4, also at the Sands School.

Mrs. Guzman is honored

Mrs. Mike Guzman was honored at a surprise baby shower Friday evening in the Pioneer Natural Gas Flame Room.

She was presented with a corsage of baby socks trimmed with yellow lace and ribbons. Hostesses were Carol Pate, Linda Miracle, Jane Kentwell, Donna Kentwell, and grandmother-to-be, Mrs. Donald Reed. The hostesses presented Mrs. Guzman with an infant seat.

Mrs. Guzman is the former Cindy Reed. Baby Guzman is expected to arrive at any time.

Eagle Forum hosts Lubbock educator

Mrs. Donna Muldrew, registrar and instructor at Trinity Bible Institute of Lubbock, will speak at the January meeting of Eagle Forum.

Mrs. Muldrew, who has been active in public and private education in the Lubbock area, will report on the influence of Humanism in education. She has a Masters Degree in Education and has served on the Texas Tech Presidential Search Advisory Committee and is currently active in the American Association of University Women and the Eagle Forum, along with other civic activities. She also attended the White House Conference on Families in 1980.

Civitans plan essay contest

The Big Spring Civitan Club held its second January meeting at 5:30 p.m. Jan. 21, in Furr's Cafeteria with Micki Potter presiding. Special guests were Bill Barrett, Lt. Governor for this area of the Texas District of Civitan International, and Ed Kirk, Texas District Chaplain. The business meeting included discussion of the promotion of Civitan International Citizenship Essay Contest and appointment of a Service Projects Committee.

The Citizenship Essay Contest provides opportunity for students in the Junior or Senior class to compete with others throughout the United States and many other countries for scholarship awards. The theme of the 1981 Essay Contest is "FORECASTING THE 80's: THE ROLE OF THE INVOLVED CITIZEN". Last year's International winner was Marla Pirkle from Waco. No one from the Big Spring area entered.

Further information on this year's contest will be distributed soon.

Following the business meeting, Lt. Governor Barrett initiated the new members. They are Lupe Barraza, John Frame, Eva Watkins, Pete Wilson, and Patricia Wilson.

Chaplain Ed. Kirk spoke on the subjects of freedom and citizenship. He expressed some key points for helping an individual be a better citizen.

Always Chubby?

You needn't stay that way.

Cindy Hogan went from size 15 to size 7 at Pat Walker's. Even if you have a lifelong history of being overweight, you can acquire the slender figure you've always wanted at Pat Walker's—easily, safely and pleasantly. Read how effectively the program worked for Cindy Hogan, the attractive young woman shown here.

"I've always been chubby. My uncle has told me that I've never been little. The last time I weighed what I weigh now was in the sixth grade. From then on I started an upgrade with my weight. I'd go on a diet and lose, but the day I'd stop starving the weight would start piling back on.

"I really found it hard to believe when the counselor at Pat Walker's told me I should be wearing a size 7 or 5, because at that time I was in a 15. As you can see by my latest picture, I'm in size 7 shorts. Now I'm even getting hand-me-downs from my little sister.

"The counselors at Pat Walker's really encouraged and cheered me on. They taught me how to eat the foods I like and still not become the 'old chubby me.'"

Don't Procrastinate

Haven't you endured long enough the embarrassment and unhappiness that are part of being fat?

The time to do something about it is NOW. The place is Pat Walker's. At our elegant salon, you can lose pounds and inches with dignity and in complete privacy—without stringent diets or strenuous exercises, without even having to change from your regular street clothes.

Furthermore, once you have your perfect figure, you can maintain it forever on your own; no further treatments will be necessary.

Electric companies will continue rates battle

Consumer advocates unhappy with public utility agency

By JACKIE CALMES
Harte Hanke Austin Bureau

MUSLIN — Consumer advocates who fought hard for creation of the Texas Public Utility Commission during the 1975 Legislature are back for the 1981 session, unhappy with the agency and armed to make major changes.

Utility lobbyists also have returned, but apparently so satisfied with the commission they opposed six years ago that they want to expand its powers.

Electric companies will try again, as they did during the 1979 session, to give the PUC complete authority over their rates. Currently, city councils have original jurisdiction over companies' requests, while the PUC sets rates after the utilities appeal.

A bill to change the present two-tier arrangement has not been filed yet: company spokespersons promise one will be. Ready to fight it — again — will be an alliance of consumer groups and the Texas Municipal League.

Consumer groups have two major proposals: one to establish an independent office of general counsel to represent utility customers in rate cases, and another to increase the present three commission seats to six or nine.

Both proposals here included in consumers' original draft of the 1975 Public Utility Regulatory Act, but were lost in compromise with pro-utility lobbyists and legislators.

The present three commissioners say an independent consumer office is unnecessary, that it would duplicate the work of the PUC staff.

But consumer advocates say the staff, at the direction of the commissioners, acts as a neutral arbiter between company and customers, which is unfair to customers since companies have batteries of attorneys and experts.

"Utility customers deserve to have their interests equally represented," Sen. Lloyd Doggett of Austin said in introducing his bill to create a counsel's office.

Rep. Tony Polumbo, sponsor of a similar bill, said, "We need someone to get out the data for consumers. As it is now, the PUC merely sits as a judge."

Under Doggett's bill, the governor would appoint the counsel, with the consent of the senate, for a two-year term. Polumbo's bill provides for the attorney general to have the appointment.

Doggett proposes that the counsel represent only residential customers in rate cases at the PUC, whereas Polumbo wants the office to represent municipal and corporate customers also, and not just at the PUC, but at the Railroad Commission and federal regulatory agencies.

The PUC regulates telephone, electric, water and sewer companies: the Railroad Commission, gas utilities.

PUC General Counsel Allen King opposes the bills: "The consumers are well-represented here by private attorneys, and from time-to-time we on the staff do side with the consumer."

One such private attorney, Geoffrey Gay of West Texas Legal Services in Fort Worth, told a Senate subcommittee last November that he and other consumer advocates are too overworked and underfunded to be effective voices for customers.

Calling the PUC "the worst commission in this country with regard to protecting the interests of residential consumers," he urged creation of an independent advocate's office.

Austin attorney Don Butler, who frequently intervenes at the PUC for the Texas Municipal League, agrees that consumers are ill-represented but disagrees with the proposed remedy.

"We don't need to create a new office," he says. "Just free up the staff that exists to exercise professional independence. Right now they're so gun-shy because (PUC Chairman George Cowden) takes it as an act of disloyalty if they oppose his position."

That position, critics contend, is pro-utility. To diversify opinions on the commission, they want to double or triple its membership.

Polumbo also will carry a bill providing for six members. Rep. Reby Cary of Fort Worth wants nine. Under both men's bills, the governor still would appoint the commissioners, subject to senate approval, for six-year terms.

A more ambitious proposal, by a coalition of comsumer groups, would divide the state into six regions, with voters in each electing one commissioner. In contrast, the three Railroad Commissioners are elected statewide.

So far, no legislator has agreed to sponsor the idea, and consumer groups admit it would have little chance of passage.

"I wonder what they would accomplish," the PUC's King says of electing commissioners. "What has it accomplished at the Railroad Commission?"

Among other utility-related bills that have been filed so far, all by Doggett, are proposals to:

Allow the PUC to seek a court-appointed receiver for utilities violating commission orders. The commissioners want the extra enforcement power, which primarily would be used against errant water companies.

Set the interest that customers earn on utility deposits at the existing 6 percent or at the rate of the company's total cost of capital, whichever is greater. The latter rate has been about 10 percent lately, a PUC spokesperson said.

Restrict the amount that companies can pass on to customers to cover the costs of construction work in progress. This is aimed at major electric companies that have expensive and long-delayed nuclear and coal plants under way.

Sheriff expects grand jury will indict wife of slain Price Daniel

LIBERTY, Texas (AP) — Liberty County Sheriff C.L. Eckols says he thinks it is "reasonable to expect" that a grand jury will indict the wife of slain former Texas House Speaker Price Daniel for murder.

"Based on the evidence we have," Eckols said Tuesday, "it is reasonable to expect an indictment to be returned tomorrow (Wednesday) afternoon."

Vickie Daniel, 33, was charged last Friday with murder in the Jan. 19 death of her husband. She has declined to give a statement about the shooting to Eckols or District Attorney Carroll Wilborn.

She is not expected to appear at the grand jury meeting. She was arrested Saturday and is free on $50,000 bond.

She was released Friday from a hospital, where she had been since the shooting. Her doctors said she suffered from shock and hysteria.

"We've offered the opportunity in writing for Mrs. Daniel to appear (before the grand jury) and we've offered her the opportunity to present any evidence," Wilborn said. "We're just trying to be as thorough and as fair as we can possibly be."

Eckols, asked if he expected to see her there, replied, "Naw, if she's smart, she'll stay away from that grand jury."

Eckols and Wilborn said nearly two dozen persons are expected to testify before the jury panel.

Referring to reports that Mrs. Daniel had bruises, possibly enhancing a theory of self-defense, Eckols noted that it took three people to subdue the hysterical woman after the shooting.

"The only bruise she's got is when she fell on the Mexican tile floor. If she got any bruise, it was because of that fight ... three men couldn't hold her down."

Mrs. Daniel called for an ambulance after the shooting and screamed, "Let me go and you go help Price" when ambulance attendants tried to calm her.

Daniel was killed by a gunshot wound to the stomach. The .22-caliber bullet struck the aorta, causing him to bleed to death.

A shot was fired before the fatal one, Eckols said, and he and his men spent several days looking for the first bullet, which was fired as a warning shot.

Former POW delivers eulogy at Teague funeral

ARLINGTON, Va. (AP) — A former prisoner of war delivered the eulogy for Olin E. "Tiger" Teague, the longtime Texas congressman buried Tuesday in Arlington National Cemetery.

Air Force chaplain Jerry Singleton was a prisoner of war for more than seven years during the Vietnam conflict. He said he had been asked to speak at the funeral by Teague, who had become a friend.

Singleton read a Bible passage from the book of Revelations, chapter 21, that he said he read to Teague the night before the former congressman's death.

Teague suffered from a long illness before he died Friday at the age of 70. He had retired in 1977 after representing the 6th Congressional District of Central Texas for 32 years.

Singleton said he met Teague after the former congressman befriended his family while the chaplain was a war prisoner.

"The reason that I met him wes because he'd been such a friend to my family. He didn't know me from Adam," the chaplain said, crediting Teague's efforts for helping to save his life and the lives of other prisoners of war.

"He couldn't do everything, but he certainly tried to do everything he could," Singleton said.

He cited Teague's honorable military record during World War II and said his accomplishments in public life "would fill volumes."

The service and burial took place with full military honors.

A caisson hauled by white hores took Teague's casket from the Fort Myer Chapel on the cemetery's grouns, where the service was held, to the grave site on a hill overlooking the Washington Monument and Lincoln Memorial.

The service attracted a hefty contingent of congressmen and former congressmen who traveled by bus from the Capitol to the cemetery.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill of Massachusetts, Majority Leader Jim Wright of Fort Worth and Minority Leader Robert Michel of Illinois sat in the front row at the funeral chapel. A majority of the Texas congressional delegation attended.

The audience of more than 300 that filled every seat and stood in the aisles sang a hymn, "Beneath the Cross of Jesus."

At the grave, a military band played "Taps" and then "America the Beautiful" before the flag covering the casket was folded and presented to the widow, Mrs. Freddie Teague.

Far from being Little Lord Fauntleroy

Texas Gov. Clements is growing up

By JOHN DAVIS
Harte-Hanks Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Maybe it's a silly thing to say about a man in his mid-60s, but Gov. Bill Clements is growing up.

Two years ago he was characterized as the new kid on the block, one with tough-guy ways and more of a lip than hip in the world of Texas politics and government.

Clements still is far from being a Little Lord Fauntleroy. Tough is still his image, and it undoubtedly will remain so.

But he has sanded off some of his rougher edges since becoming governor in January 1979. At that time, he was the successful millionare drilling company executive who had just beat the odds and the Democrats to become Texas' first Republican govenor in a century.

He came into office thinking he was going to run the state like a corporate executive. Power would flow from the top and when the governor wanted something done, someone would find some way to do it.

The Texas Legislature, dominated by Democrats, was in no mood for such an executive attitude. The lawmakers like to think of themselves as independent, even of Democratic governors.

In 1979, Clements blustered around trying to make the legislators do things his way. He waved his veto stamp in the air and threatened to keep lawmakers in special session until they approved his legislative package of anti-crime bills and initative and refrendum.

We talked boldly about cutting 25,000 employees from the state payroll, as he had promised in the heat of the 1978 campaign.

Clements is taking a softer approach to the 1981 legislative session. He's making clear where he stands on the issues, but is leaving himself more room for maneuvering and compromising.

On his "Governor's Report" television program last week a reporter tried to pin him down on whether he would veto any emergency pay raise for state employees if its higher than he wants.

Two years ago, Clements likely would have stuck out his jaw and declared that possibility to be a certainty. This time, he didn't want to commit himself until all the facts are in. On this and other subjects, he indicated he wants to leave room for compromise.

That's not the direct, do-it-my-way appraoch that comes naturally to him and is cheered by his more-ardent fans.

But he's likely to find that this approach is more successful in dealing with the Texas Legislature, where getting something done often is more like gradually pushing sticky dough into a pile than casting stones.

Some say the governor's new approach is tied more to preparing for 1982 re-election contest than to the 1981 Legislature. They say he's trying to keep on the good side of conservative Democrats whose help he needs for re-election.

There also are rumors circulating that Clements will step down voluntarily from the governor's job, possibly to take a high post with the Reagan administration.

The male-dominated Texas Legislature is being told that the growing numbers of female state employees is causing problems for the state retirement fund.

No accusatory fingers are being pointed, fund officials say, but it's a fact that women tedn to live longer than men and so draw retirement benefits longer.

Sen. John Traeger of Seguin, sponsor of a bill to give the fund a $16 million shot in the arm, told the Senate State Affairs Committee last week that there are three choices:

Discriminate against the hiring of female employees, cut fund director Clayton Garrison's salary or pass legislation to help the fund. The first choice is unconstitutional and the second a joke. So, Traeger indicated the legislature has no choice.

Helping the fund, and the thousands of voters who happen to be present or retired state employees, is a popular legislative pastime. Committee chairman Ray Farabee of Whichita Falls assigned Traeger's bill to a favorable subcommittee and a related bill by Sen. Grant Jones of Abilene non committee approval by 10-1

REFUSAL TO TAKE PLEDGE BARS HIM . . . Carlo Guerreiro, II, wants to join the Boy Scouts in Burnaby, British Columbia but refused to take the Scout pledge to "love and serve God." He says he can't find any religion that "makes any sense." The Scouts officials won't allow him to stay in the troop. His parents have approached the British Columbia Human Rights Branch.

'No religion makes sense'

Scouts ban boy for refusal to take oath

BURNABY, British Columbia (AP) — Carlo Guerreiro doesn't mind pledging to serve Queen and country, but the 11-year-old can't find a religion that "makes any sense." And that means he can't join the Boy Scouts.

Carlo would like to join the 2nd Burnaby South Boy Scout troop, but refuses to take the Scout pledge with its traditional vow to "love and serve God." His stand has thrown local boy Scout executives and human rights organizations into a quandary.

"The Scouts are dedicated to the mental, physical, social, and spiritual development of the boys," said Ted Hathaway, provincial executive director of the Boy Scouts. "If the boy couldn't take the promise, we don't have any alternative."

He blamed Carlo's parents for the controversy, contending that "children of that age aren't capable of making up their minds."

But Bob Clarke, Carlo's stepfather, said the decision was the boy's.

Carlo has nothing against God or religion, says his mother, Vittoria Clark.

"He's a good kid, but he says he sees a lot of the other kids — not all, but some — who've taken the pledge to God who do terrible things to other kids and he can't see why he can't just leave that part out and respect all of the other rules and pledges," she said.

Said Carlo on Monday: "It just doesn't make any sense to me to say 'God.' My parents will let me have any religion I want but anything I've ever heard of doesn't make any sense."

Carlo, who has a newspaper route, does well in school and loves to swim and camp out, has a background in Cub Scouts and has earned Scout proficiency badges. He had been a member of the troop since October, but was asked to leave by an assistant Scoutmaster after he continually declined to take the full oath.

The Clarks approached the British Columbia Human Rights Branch, which turned the question over to its federal counterpart because the Scouts operate on a federal charter. Reggie Newkirk of the federal branch said lawyers are investigating the complaint.

"Federal law states that one cannot be discriminated against, on religious grounds, for provision of a service which is available to the general public," he said, but because Boy Scouts is a private society, there is some confusion over the definition of service.

Mike McNamara, executive director for the Burnaby region of Boy Scouts of Canada, says the organization, although non-denominational in matters of religious observance, has a "real problem" when faced with a youngster who says he has no religion at all.

"We have a Moslem troop...and, of course, we have many, many Oriental Scouts who may or may not be Christian," he said. "All that is required is a pledge of duty to a supreme being.

"My personal thinking...is perhaps we could come to some agreement involving a pledge to do, at least, with the supernatural," he said.

Only boy entered wins national sewing contest

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Robert Hyatt sewed up a national contest for seamsters with a zippered fleece-lined jacket and gray slacks. His competitors were given more to skirts, dresses and pantsuits.

Hyatt, 16, of Ridgefield, Wash., was the only boy entered in the contest. He says he said he enjoyed surprising boys and girls alike with his ability to sew. He defeated 52 female competitors from 27 states to win.

Hyatt modeled the jacket and trousers he created to win the junior division for youths aged 14 to 16, of the 36th Annual Make It Yourself With Wool national finals Monday night.

Hyatt said he does not expect any ribbing from his male friends because of his sewing prowess.

"As a matter of fact, it's kinda neat being the only guy here," said Hyatt, whose Copenhagen blue wool jacket with raglan sleeves was lined with acrylic fur. He used elastic casing for the sleeves and waist of his jacket and three gray wool stripes accented the sleeves and matched his Western-style wool slacks.

Hyatt said his sewing has not detracted from his other activities, pointing out he was co-captain of his school's football team and also is on the basketball, baseball, wrestling and track and field teams at View Ridge Middle School in Vancouver, Wash.

"Mom is a sewing teacher and I began to notice how much fun the three of them (mother and two sisters) seemed to have sewing together...and well, I guess I wanted to get in on it," Hyatt said in explaining his interest in sewing.

Capturing first place in the senior division of the contest was Monica Phillipe, 20, of Columbia, Mo., a junior at Stephens College.

Cross-filing bill may prevent party line balloting

By JACKIE CALMES
Harte-Hanks Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A bumper sticker commonly seen on cars parked around the Capitol reads "Texas Democrat—Always Have Been. Always Will Be!" But not all Democrats inside the pink granite building share that sentiment.

Sens. Grant Jones of Abilene and Roy Blake of Nacogdoches—two who "always have been" Democrats—apparently aren't sure they "always will be."

Last week, the two conservatives filed a bill that would allow a candidate to be named on more than one party's ballot, and also as an independent, in primary, runoff and general elections.

The bill is given little chance of passage. Even so, its filing by two influential senators rekindles talk of Democratic officeholders bolting to the Republican Party.

Jones, for one, denied he is considering such a move. He said the cross-filing bill is an attempt to head off what he sees as the imminent result of Texas becoming a two-party state: legislators voting along party lines.

"Frankly, I think one reason Texas has had exemplary government in the past is the fact we've been oriented to issues rather than party politics," he said.

Jones, whose district stretches from the Republican-leaning Abilene area to strongly Democratic Waco, said he introduced a cross-filing bill twice before in the House, where he served from 1965 to 1972. The bill died each time.

Bob Slagle, Democratic State Party chairman, hopes it meets the same fate this session. "It would destroy the party system in this state," he said.

Republican state chairman Chester Upham is not so sure. Though he refused to endorse the cross-filing bill, saying he is unfamiliar with it, he speculated that it might solve his party's problem of filing ballot spots in staunchly Democratic areas.

"There are a lot of Republicans, especially in our rural areas, that effectively have no voice since candidates file as Democrats even though they vote Republican," he said.

Upham, of Mineral Wells, also predicted a longer-term benefit for the GOP: "In five years, those people that were successful on the Republican side would stay there."

Upham has vigorously courted conservative Democratic legislators. But so far, he said, he has been politely rebuffed by all.

As a typical example, Upham recalled a conversation last year with Jones: "I said, 'Look, Grant, my best Republican friends are the ones that are supporting you . . . there's no sense in your running as a Democrat when more Republicans are voting for you than Democrats.'

Upham said Jones replied that he has been a Democrat too long to change. Jones said if he were to change parties, he would have done so before the 1980 elections.

What if cross-filing became law and Jones won re-election in 1982 under both major-party labels?

Democrat Slagle joked, "then it would be up to him to declare what he was going to be—besides schizophrenic. It would be a rather odd-looking creature—like a donkey with a trunk, or an elephant with jackass ears."

More seriously, Slagle said he might oppose the bill with one of the party's own that would allow party leaders to strike the names of cross-filed candidates from the party's ballot.

He said he has not talked to Jones or Blake, but plans to. "I don't know why they're doing it," Slagle said. ". . . maybe they just don't place much importance on the party system."

Jones doesn't. "In all honesty," he said, "I don't think the parties have had that much effect on state government . . . The Democratic Party in general doesn't represent the people of Texas, and neither does the Republican Party."

Sen. Oscar Mauzy of Dallas disagrees. "This thing would be a definite detriment to both the Democratic and Republican parties," he said. "I agree people vote on issues in the primaries, but in November the party system means something."

Bid for grant update planned

COLORADO COTY (SC) — An update on the application for a grant from the Levi-Strauss Company to the Wallace Center will be given by City Manager Brenda Tarter today at 8:15 p.m. when the center's advisory council meets in the center.

Ray Anne Carlock will report on the recent poster contest, and there will be a discussion of the youth basketball program, as well as new classes for the spring. Also on the agenda will be a discussion of the volunteer income tax assitance program.

Tonight's meeting will be convened by J.O. Dockrey.

Complications of birth control pill studied

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Duke University scientists think they've found a chemical defect that can determine which women are most likely to develop dangerous blood clots while taking birth control pills.

And the scientists said Tuesday even moderate exercise seems to make a dramatic improvement in the deficiency, theoretically reducing the risk of "one of the most well-known and feared complications...of the pill."

"We have discovered what we feel is an underlying defect in the system (by which the body dissolves clots in the blood stream) that predisposes women to clot while they take the pill," said Dr. Salvatore V. Pizzo of Duke's medical school.

He said an inexpensive test developed at Duke to identify such apparently high-risk patients could become a screening tool for all women considering the pill. But he said the test won't be generally available for several years.

Until then, he said, "the prudent answer is that exercise would be a reasonable prescription for any woman who's using birth control pills."

The hormone manipulation that enables the birth-control pill to prevent pregnancies is known to raise the risk of blood clots, but the vast majority of women use the pill without encountering this problem.

Pizzo told an American Heart Association seminar today that clots affect scarcely 20 of every 10,000 women who use the pill. But he added, "for the unlucky few who do develop blood clots, the consequences can be devastating."

By blocking blood vessels, clots can cause heart attacks, strokes and other problems. In the most extreme cases, women die from the complication — "it happens 200 or 300 times a year," he said.

Pizzo said the reason for the increased risk among some women is uncertain, but among the suspects is a protein called plasminogen activator, the trigger of a chemical system that dissolves clots on blood vessel walls. If the trigger is missing, the whole system breaks down.

The Duke team measured activator levels in 20 women who had developed clots while taking the pill. The measurements were taken after the women had been off the drug for at least a year.

"We found levels of this protein were significantly decreased in 90 percent of the women who had suffered clots," Pizzo said, adding that the risk of clotting while on the pill is six times greater in women with low levels of the activator.

However, he said, about 30 percent of all pill users have lower-than-normal levels and most have no problems.

Two of seven are charged

COLORADO CITY (SC) — Official charges have been filed against two of the seven persons arrested Monday evening after the pickup truck in which they were traveling left Big Spring without paying for gasoline.

Seventeen-year-old James Allen Baker of Phoenix, Ariz., and 20-year-old Terrace Elliott of Lith, Ill., have been charged with possession of stolen property, the pickup truck.

In addition, Big Spring authorities want the two for theft of service. Three hitchhikers were released along with their dog, without any charges being filed.

Still in custody are a 15-year-old runaway girl from Arizona, and a man with whom she was reportedly traveling. The father of the girl was to leave Arizona Tuesday for Colorado City to pick up his daughter. Her reported traveling companion is being held pending further investigation.

Law enforcement officers in Arizona have refrained from extraditing the two against whom official charges have been filed due to the expense of the procedure to the state.

Brochures featuring hiking areas printed

Three new brochures featuring hiking areas in two National Forests have been published by the U.S. Forest Service. The colorful brochures include descriptions and maps of the areas as well as trail information and rules and regulations for hikers.

Featured in one brochure is the Four C National Recreation Trail, a 20-mile long hiking trail located on the Davy Crockett National Forest. Beginning at Ratcliff Lake, the trail winds northward through a variety of forest settings. Portions of the trail are foot bridges which cross water or low-lying areas. The Four C Trail ends at Neches Bluff, a scenic overlook scanning the Neches River bottomlands, south of Highway 21.

A second publication, "Guide to Hiking the Lone Star Trail", features three areas which make up the 140-mile long trail located on the Sam Houston National Forest. The Lone Star Trail was developed and is maintained jointly by Houston's Lone Star Chapter of the Sierra Club and the U.S. Forest Service.

Twenty-seven miles of the southeastern part of the trail has been designated as a National Recreation Trail. This guide familiarizes the hiker with trail conditions and provides suggestions for both the experienced and inexperienced hiker.

The Big Creek Scenic Area, also located on the Sam Houston National Forest, is the subject of the third U.S. Forest Service brochure. Located six miles west of Shepherd, the area has four hiking trail loops totaling 3.55 miles. These four loops vary in length and give the hiker a choice of the trail distance he wishes to hike.

Also mentioned in this publication is Double Lake Recreation Area. Located north of Big Creek Scenic Area, this recreation area offers swimming, fishing, limited boating and canoeing, pinicking and campaing facilities.

These brochures are free and are available from the U.S. Forest Service Supervisor's Office and District Ranger's Offices. For more information write National Forests in Texas, P.O. Box 969, Lufkin, Texas 75901 or call 713-632-4446.

Further information concerning the Four C National Recreation Trail can be obtained by contacting Davy Crockett National Forest, Neches Ranger District, East Loop 304, Crockett, Texas 75835, phone 713-544-2046 or Davy Crockett National Forest, Trinity Ranger District, P.O. Box 130, Highway 94, Apple Springs, Texas 75926, phone 713-831-2284.

To obtain more information about the Lone Star Hiking Trail or Big Creek Scenic Area, contact Sam Houston National Forest, San Jacinto Ranger District, P.O. Box 1818, 407 N. Belcher, Cleveland, Texas 77327, phone 713-592-6462 or Sam Houston National Forest, Raven Ranger District, P.O. Box 393, FM 1375 West, New Waverly, Texas 77358, phone 713-344-6205.

Coahoma vacancy

Principal Easterling will be reassigned

COAHOMA — High school principal Bill Easterling will be reassigned within the Coahoma school district, at his own request.

Applications will be accepted by the Coahoma school board for the position through March 2.

The trustees, who met in formal session Monday evening, approved Clovis Phinney and Kirby Brown to serve on the property Insurance Committee.

Gary Borremans was employed as a secondary art teacher, replacing Sheila Flippin.

In other action, the board adopted delinquent tax notice forms, which will be sent out by the tax office; heard a report that delinquent taxes now owed the district total $139,904, purchase of additional stage band equipment and appointed principals to serve as confidential officers on the campuses.

A special board meeting has been called for 7 p.m., Monday, Feb. 9, at which time bonds approved for new construction within the system will be sold.

Don't let lost documents stop you from seeking vets benefits

Don't let lost documents prevent you from seeking veterans benefits, the Veterans Administration today reminded veterans and their dependents.

A VA spokesman said, "We have found that some veterans who cannot locate birth or marriage certificates don't apply for benefits because they believe these documents are essential."

VA will accept a certified statement instead of an original birth or marriage certificate when needed to establish eligibility. In the case of a marriage this policy applies only to the first marriage for each partner, and there must be no contradictory information on file at VA.

In years past, VA required formal documentation to support claims for compensation and education benefits for veterans, widows and orphaned children.

Now, however, VA will accept a certified statement regarding the birth of a veteran's child or as proof of age and relationship in disability cases, the spokesman said.

VA urged veterans and their dependents with eligibility questions to contact the nearest VA regional office or a representative of one of the national veterans organizations.

Iranian leaders busy exchanging charges

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr and the conservative Islamic clergymen opposed to him exchanged more charges as their power struggle heated up.

Bani-Sadr claimed two plots to asssassinate him had been uncovered in the past two months. The militant Islamic mullahs charged that supporters of the Westernized, moderate president ransacked an office of their Islamic Republican Party.

Writing in his Tehran newspaper Enghelab Islami Tuesday, Bani-Sadr said one band of plotters planned to shoot him Nov. 19, the Shiite Moslem holy day of Ashura, during a speech he was to make at a rally in Ahvaz, the beleaguered capital of Khuzistan province, where the war with Iraq is being fought. He said para-military units discovered the plot.

The president, who is commander in chief of the armed forces, said the army secret service reported a second plot on Jan. 14. His motorcade was to be attacked by rocket grenades during a trip to Ahvaz from the air base at Dezful, 75 miles north of the provincial capital, he said.

Although Bani-Sadr did not identify the plotters by name, he left no doubt that he meant Prime Minister Mohammad Ali Rajai and his associates in the cleric-led Islamic Republican Party. He said that in both instances, the plotters planned to declare national mourning after he was killed. In case of the president's death, only the prime minister or Parliament, which is controlled by the IRP, has the power to proclaim national mourning.

From its side, the IRP charged that supporters of the president ransacked their party's office in Mashhad, in northeast Iran, chanting, "Close the nest of spies." The "nest of spies" is the epithet bestowed on the U.S. Embassy in Tehran by the young Islamic militants who seized it and its staff on Nov. 4, 1979, and held 52 of the Americans hostage for 444 days.

Although Bani-Sadr won the presidency by a landslide in a national election, the mullahs and their party won control of the Majlis, Iran's parliament, in a later vote and forced Bani-Sadr to accept their man Rajai as prime minister.

The two factions have been at odds ever since. Bani-Sadr objected to the seizure of the embassy and the hostages and tried to come to terms with the United States, but the hard-liners blocked him.

A truce in the power struggle prevailed during the first months of the war with Iraq, but his activities as commander in chief enhanced the president's standing and apparently gave him new confidence.

Four hostage Marines planned escape attempt

WASHINGTON (AP) — Four Marines held captive in Iran engineered an elaborate escape plan that would have been attempted on Feb. 12 had they not been released, said Marine Sgt. John D. McKeel, a former hostage.

"We already had plans made up and had everything we needed, and we were fixing to break out," McKeel said today in an interview on the Larry King Show on the Mutual Broadcasting Systems.

McKeel said the Marines planned to jump the Iranian guards, try to get their weapons and fight their way out. The plan, he said, was to head for Greece.

The Marines used razor blades and pens to fashion homemade knives and planned on mixing kerosene from the water heater and soap detergent to produce a makeshift bomb, he said.

"We had very many different types of weapons," he said. "If your let your imagination go wild you come up with something."

McKeel said they also had discovered where the Iranian weapons were being kept.

Although plans for the escape were made in June, while he was being held in an Iranian prison, the Marines decided not to implement them until after the presidential elections, McKeel said.

"We were going to give it until February because of the presidential election," he said. "We were going to wait until that and see what happened."

McKeel said he believed they would be able to reach Greece.

"Most of the Marines are trained in jungle survival, desert survival, things of that sort," he said. "We felt that if we could get out we'd be able to make it across the desert."

To communicate with one another while formulating the escape plan, "we were tapping back and forth on the walls," McKeel said. Messages were hidden in the toilets, where other hostages would be able to find them, he added.

McKeel said there never were more than six Iranians guarding them at one time.

Iran gave U.S. advance copy of release conditions

NEW YORK (AP) — Iran apparently was so eager to resolve the hostage crisis in September that it alerted U.S. officials ahead of time to a speech by Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini in which he outlined Iran's four conditions for freeing the hostages, The New York Times said today.

In a report from Washington, D.C., the newspaper quoted chief American negotiator Warren Christopher as saying Iran sent an advance copy of the four points to ensure that the U.S. would send a representative to a secret meeting in Bonn, West Germany, with a relative of Khomeini, Sadegh Tabatabai.

Christopher, former deputy Secretary of State, said he met with Tabatabai for three hours on Sept. 16 and told him, "I thought time was short and that we both had probably a number of speeches that we might want to make to each other, but it would be more efficient if we focused on the conditions for the return of the hostages."

Tabatabai agreed, Christopher said, "and so it was a meeting free of polemics, and we immediately addressed the possible basis for the release."

Tabatabai reportedly said Iran wanted to resolve the problem quickly and that if an agreement could be achieved, the Americans would be free in a relatively short time.

Piland to head C-City Industrial Foundation

COLORADO CITY (SC) — Eddie Piland, was elected unanimously as president of the Colorado City Industrial Foundation Tuesday afternoon.

Re-elected as chairman of the foundation was Charlie Thompson, while Bobby Lemons was named vice-president, Bob Reily, secretary, and J.C. Britton, treasurer.

The Industrial Foundation also increased its board membership from the current eight to 15 members. Added were Elmer Martin, George Walter, and Dale Mathis, who will serve three year terms; Pete McKinny, and Frank Brownfield, two year terms; and Dr. George Lindsey and Bobby Lemons, one year terms.

Following the meeting, Piland commented on his recent trip to Austin to confer with officials of the Texas Industrial commission. "During the visit, we discussed possible available sites for industrial growth in Colorado City. There is not a great deal of industrial growth anywhere currently, except in the metropolitan areas of Houston and Dallas, becuase of high interest rates."

Piland added the foundation will continue to work at attracting new industry to Mitchell County in 1981.

Rep. Hall hopes to help ease squeeze on small businessmen

STATES NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — The two congressmen Rep. Ralph Hall succeeds built political legacies that, at least in clearness of vision, the Rockwall businessman has plans to match.

"I'd like to be remembered as a man who helped deregulate the country," he said. "A congressman who helped ease the squeeze on the small businessman."

Hall, a newspaper publisher, takes over from Ray Roberts, who retired as influential chairman of the Veteran's Affairs Committee after 18 years. Roberts was the "father of water projects" to many because of his intense interest in building dams.

Before Roberts, the man from the 4th District of Texas was Sam Rayburn, who first came to Congress in 1913 and holds the record for longevity as Speaker of the House.

"If President Reagan sticks to his campaign promises I've come at a good time," Democrat Hall said. "I would like to be a part of deregulation across-the-board."

He said tax credits are always preferable to federal regulations to bring about industrial changes.

Hall, who was president of Texas Aluminum Inc. in the late 60s, said metal manufacturers developed ways to recycle contaminant fumes after tax incentives were offered.

"The same theory can prevail on a national level."

Hall has been chosen for a spot on the Energy and Commerce committee—his first choice—and says he will begin to work immediately for repealing the windfall profits tax passed by Congress last year.

"Reagan is approaching the moment of truth (as an opponent of the oil tax)," Hall said. "He no longer can talk political theories. He must translate that into legislative actualities. We'll see if he is the kind of chief executive who keeps in there swinging to get his way. It's not going to be easy."

Roberts said he is drafting a package of bills to try to translate his campaign statements on more defense, lower taxes and less federal interference into reality.

"I'd like to build up the military. If we don't have muscle for the eyes of the world to see it won't do any good to solve the energy crisis," he said.

Hall, a Navy pilot in World War II, said he favored more research on the MX missile before the country began to build the massive track system.

"It is more likely that the weapon we need to fight the next war is not developed yet," he said. "I'd hate to see us saddled with outdated equipment." We may not have the time to gear up for the next one like we did the last one.

Another issue his House' energy committee will deal with is nuclear energy, for which he said he has "mixed emotions." But he believes the industry has the potential of supplying "25 percent" of the nation's energy needs.

"Atomic energy probably saved my life. I was a fighter pilot in the navy in the South Pacific headed toward mainland Japan when they dropped the bomb on Hiroshima bringing about the end of the war)."

Hall also said he wanted to help develop the coal industry in America because the resource is plentiful enough to make the country an exporter of energy, rather than depend on OPEC oil.

Further loans to the ailing Chrysler Corp.—above the $1.6 billion already given, is a proposal Hall says he does not think he could vote for.

West Side Community Day Care Center president named

Grady L. Cunningham, 28, a native of Big Spring, has been named president of the board of directors for the West Side Community Day Care Center.

Cunningham, a graduate in 1971 of Big Spring High School, is married to the former Iris Ann Tollett. They reside at 10 Glenwick Cove.

Cunningham is also a graduate of Howard College.

He is affiliated with the DECA Alumni Association and the Chamber of Commerce, and has also completed Graduate work from U.T.P.B. in Odessa. He serves on the American Cancer Board and is Campaign Chairman for 1981. He is Financial Advisor for Immaculate Heart of Mary School Board of Directors. Cunningham is currently president and director of Cunningham Development Corp., and president of Cunningham Oil Co.

He has served as Executive Regional Director for the American Diabetes Association of West Texas. He has also served on other civic Boards in Midland, Texas prior to returning to Big Spring in June of 1976. He is a member of the 11th and Birdwell Lane Church of Christ.

Cunningham, being a humanitarian, has become involved because West Side Community Day Care Center is a non-profit, Title XX day care center established in 1973.

The centers population consists mainly of one-parent head of households, who are working or in full-time training. It also serves children referred to us directly by the Texas Department of Human Resources, Protective Service.

In order to qualify for services under the program, the parent needs to meet certain income and family size qualifications. For additional information regarding qualifications, interested parents can call our office at 263-7841.

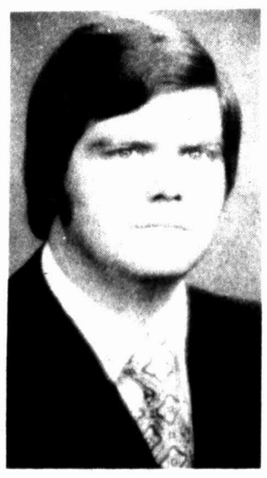

The funding for the center is derived from 30 percent local money, which includes parent fees, and 70 percent Federal and State money. The parents are charged on a sliding weekly scale of 2 percent of their gross income for one child, and 2½ percent for two or more children. This scale is set by the Texas Department of Human Resources.

The local match money and money for improvements not covered under Federal and State funding comes from Howard County United Way, private foundations, donations, and fund raising ventures.

At the present time, the center has 61 children enrolled, ages six weeks to six years. West Side Community Day Care Center is open from 7 a.m. to 5:30 p.m., five days a week. Breakfast, lunch, and afternoon snacks are served the children, with menus planned according to USDA guidelines. Diapers are provided by the center during the day for babies and toddlers who need them. However, because of rising costs, new parents of babies are asked to bring one dozen cloth diapers. Hygiene is done twice daily and the children are encouraged to learn good health habits.

Lesson plans are made and carried through for all departments. These include crafts, music, field trips, outside play, and other things that are appropriate to the child's development. In addition to traditional day care services, the center offers many social services to its families, including counseling referrals, limited health services, and home visits. The center tries to meet the needs of each individual family and encourage them to seek better ways that will enrich their lives.

Community involvement plays an active role at the center. At present, the center has a number of volunteers, including Retired Senior Volunteer Program, students for the local schools' Child Development Classes, Big Spring Camp Residents, County Extension Clubs, and various church groups. The center also has coordinated a training program for LVN and RN students within the center.

U.S. autoworkers are urged to drive what they build

DETROIT (AP) — When people ask Lillian Edwards why she drives a Triumph TR7 to her job at the Ford Motor Co.'s Rouge plant in Detroit, she tells them to mind their own business.

"You work for the money, you can get what you want. I always wanted a sports car," she said. "I believe in it (buying Ford) for people whose lives are the Ford Motor Co. But I'm not interested in working for Henry Ford all my life."

Diane Koch, on the other hand, bought her Datsun B210 before she started working at a General Motors Corp. Fisher Body plant — "It was the cheapest car around," she explained.

But the next time she's in the market, Ms. Koch said, "I'd like to get a GM car, just so I could stay in my job." She won't be fired for being disloyal, but she wants to do everything she can to boost flagging auto sales.

That kind of logic is common these days around Detroit, where tens of thousands of autoworkers are out of work, at least partly because of competition from foreign cars.

Some United Auto Workers locals here have banned foreign cars from their parking lots. Others leave only one or two spaces in the far corners of their lots for foreign autos.

And billboards asking Michigan residents to "Buy The Cars Your Neighbors Help to Build," signed by GM's Pontiac division and UAW Local 653, are posted around the state, the first time an automaker and the union have joined in a public advertisement.

Stan Chilbecki, a GM employee for 20 years, said he always drives GM cars. "I buy them because I think they're good cars and I work for the company. I think that's only fair," he said.

Said Irving Howard, who works for Ford and drives a 1977 Mercury Cougar: "I put my money where I get it from."

It's an attitude the auto companies and the United Auto Workers union like to see. What they don't like, and are trying to overcome, are the attitudes of people like Ms. Edwards — and Sue Murdzia.

Ms. Murdzia works for GM but says she hates her 1978 Pontiac Firebird.

"That's rotten to say about my company, but I've had nothing but trouble with that car. It's falling apart," she said. "I really want a foreign car, but they would probably stone me when I drove it into the parking lot."

The auto industry in general encourages workers to buy what they build. All the companies instituted policies about five years ago to give employees refunds of up to several hundred dollars if they buy new cars made by their companies. At GM alone, some 70,000 workers take advantage of the refunds every year, officials say.

Jim Flower, general superintendent of manufacturing engineering at the Bay City Chevrolet plant, is quoted in the July-August 1980 issue of GM Today, a monthly magazine for GM employees:

"Chevrolet spends millions of dollars on advertising to sell our products. When someone who works at this plant drives a non-GM vehicle, domestic or foreign-made, they are also advertising — but in a very negative and detrimental way.

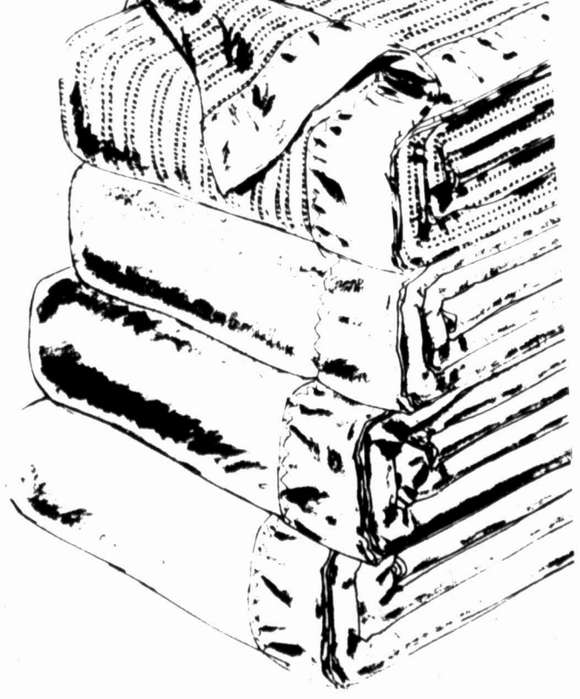

"I don't know how many sales we lose because of this negative advertising, but I'd guess it is plenty."

One "Buy GM" program seems to have worked at GM plants in Saginaw and Pontiac; Danville, Ill.; Bedford, Ind.; Defiance, Ohio, and Massena, N.Y. The number of GM vehicles in employee parking lots has increased from 66.3 percent to 79.9 percent, according to another GM Today article.

Still, even with the publicity and the cash incentives, many autoworkers drive cars made by competitors' companies.

Won't return to Astros as expected

It's official: Tal Smith gone

HOUSTON (AP) — Former Houston Astros President and General Manager Tal Smith went job-hunting today, Al Rosen woke up from a good night's sleep and millionaire shipbuilder John J. McMullen was still sailing smoothly as captain and primary authority of the Astros.

That series of events became clear Tuesday night when Smith, fired Oct. 27 in an unpopular move by McMullen, said he had been told he would not be rehired as had been widely rumored.

"I was advised last Friday that certain developments that transpired at last Thursday's meeting precluded my returning to the club," Smith said. "There was an agreement made by one of the directors to the effect that he would support McMullen on my dismissal."

McMullen denied however that any decision had been made concerning Smith.

"The issue at hand, I guess, is will the new board of directors hire Tal Smith back or not," McMullen said. "The board hasn't been legally formed yet. Am I being too technical for you?"

Astros stockholders met at the Astrodome last Thursday to try to work out final details of the new corporate arrangement.

When McMullen fired Smith and replaced him with Rosen, 25 Houston based limited partners in the Astros ownership voted to dissolve the partnership and reorganize under a corporate structure.

McMullen agreed in an out of court settlement Nov. 24 to go along with the reogranization with the authority to be divided among three men, McMullen, Jack T. Trotter and Herb Neyland.

It was thought that Trotter, one of the limited partners angered by Smith's firing, and Neyland, who hired Smith and an outspoken fan of the former general manager, would overrule McMullen and bring Smith back when final corporation papers were signed.

McMullen never waivered from his decision to fire Smith however and apparently convinced Trotter to go along.

"I had been told that this was something that John McMullen had sought since there agreement in the courthouse steps Nov. 24," Smith said. "To reach an agreement you have to satisfy both parties and that's what they did."

Under Smith's guidance, the Astros rose from a last place team to the National League Western Division championship last season. In a dramatic NL championship series against Philadelphia, the Astros twice were six outs away from advancing to the World Series before being eliminated by the Phillies.

Rosen, who worked through a maelstrom of criticism, refused to take pleasure in a man losing his job, but he obviously was relieved.

"I'm going right to bed and get a good night's sleep," said Rosen, who is recovering at home from recent open heart surgery. "It has never been an easy feeling to hear every day that Tal Smith was coming back.

"At the winter meetings in Dallas there was one writer who was predicting the exact day when Smith would return."

The writer lost.

Cooper rally stops Steers

ABILENE — The Abilene Cooper Cougars rallied from a nine-point deficit in the fourth quarter to overcome the Big Spring Steers here by a score of 54-50.

The Steers held a 42-33 lead going into the final eight minutes, but went cold and could not find the bucket while the Cougars started their comeback.

Holding a 44-35 lead, Cooper scored 14 of the next 18 points, with Barry McLeod's shot from underneath giving the Cougars a 49-48 lead with just 1:37 to play.

After Cooper extended that lead to 51-48, a Dickie Wrightsil jumper brought the Steers back to within one at 51-50.

After Cooper scored one more point, the Steers had two final shots at tying the game in the final seconds. But Wrightsil missed a shot with 25 seconds left, and Bobby Earl Williams couldn't connect on a 12-footer with 14 seconds left.

Cooper's Lanny Dycus grabbed the rebound after the final Steer miss to all but ice the contest for the Cougars, who are now 4-1 in District 5-AAAAA first half action. They are 13-10 on the year.

Big Spring is still winless in five first half starts, and slumps to 9-14 on the year.

They return to action on Friday against Odessa High.

Cooper was at a disadvantage since early in the second quarter when their mentor, Marc Case, was thrown out of the game after receiving three consecutive technicals. But Big Spring failed to capitalize on the opportunities following his rejection, connecting on only two of six free throws created by his outrage.

Dycus led Cooper with 18 points, while James Doss and Wrightsil paced the Steers with 14 each.

5-AAAAA Roundup

Midland stays on top

The Midland High Bulldogs maintained their one-game lead over both Abilene Cooper and Odessa Permian in District 5-AAAAA boys basketball action by taking a 70-50 win over Odessa High.

Midland has remaining dates with Cooper and Midland Lee.

While Cooper was staying alive with a fourth quarter rally to stop Big Spring (see related story), Odessa Permian managed to take a 69-60 win over Midland Lee.

Gale Smith had 17 points for the Panthers, while the Rebles, now 2-3 in first half action, were paced by Alvin Dunson's 20 points.

The exciting San Angelo Bobcats were at it again, going two overtimes to defeat the Abilene Eagles by a 67-63 score. It was the second straight overtime game for the Bobcats, as they had battled Midland for three overtimes last Friday before losing.

Hercules Miller paced the Bobcats, 3-2 in district, with 22 points, while Mike Judie had 20 for Abilene. The Eagles are 2-3 in first half action.

Coahoma teams take big victories over Seminole

SEMINOLE — The Coahoma Bulldogs basketball teams both scored important District 6-AAA wins here Friday night over Seminole, but it was not without a rugged battle from the host school.

The Coahoma girls of Coach Billy Gordon finished a perfect first half of 6-AAA action, finishing their half-title with a 63-57 triumph. The contest was tied going into the final frame.

Coahoma, which ended the first half at 6-0 and is now 17-5 on the year, was paced by Kari Robinson's 17 points. Andrea Fowler added 15 for the Bulldog girls.

Both Robinson and Fowler drew the praise of Gordon for their efforts in the win.

The Coahoma boys took a big step toward claiming the first half title when they used a big third quarter, and then held on for a 56-54 win over Seminole.

The Coahoma win avenged their only league loss in the 6-AAA first half opener to the same Seminole team. Coahoma is now tied with Denver City in the first half with a 3-1 mark, while Seminole fell to 2-2. The Coahoma boys are now 14-6 on the year.

Philip Ritchey led the Coahoma team with 17 points, with Michael Meyer adding 15.

"The kids played real well," said a pleased Coahoma Coach Doug Harriman, "It was a big game for us, and we got a good performance from quite a few people."

Coahoma didn't score a field goal in the final period, but managed to connect on seven of 10 opportunities from the free throw line, which proved to be the difference.

Both of the Coahoma teams will venture to Denver City on Friday. It will begin the second half play for the Coahoma girl, while the Coahoma boys could all but wrap up the first half title with a win.

In a JV girls game last night, Coahoma took a narrow 35-34 win over the Seminole JVs. Vicki Buchanon led the Coahoma team with 13 points.

Forsan girls win, but not boys

FORSAN — Forsan and Seagraves split a pair of games here as the District 5-AA second half slate started Tuesday night.

The Forsan girls, first half champions in the district, started where they left off in taking an easy 53-35 win over Seagraves. The Forsan girls led handily throughout the contest.

Christi Adams once again paced the Buffalo Queens in the win with 23 points, with Karla Cregar and Julie Poyner adding nine each.

The Forsan girls are now 18-3 on the year.

The Forsan boys were not as fortunate, however, dropping a 53-38 decision to Seagraves.

Forsan was within striking distance entering the fourth quarter, but the Seagraves team, now 16-3 on the year, wouldn't allow a Buff comeback.

Forsan is now 9-10 on the year.

Scottie Middleton led the Seagraves team with 19 points, while Forsan was paced by the duo of Andres Alcanter and Ricky Bedwell, who had 12 each.

In a boys JV game, Seagraves won by a 57-32 count. Steve Wright and Daniel Bristo led the Forsan team with 10 points each.

Forsan teams return to action on Friday, at which time they visit O'Donnell. A JV girls game begins at 4:30 p.m., with a varisty girls and boys game slated afterward.

Stanton splits with O'Donnell

STANTON — The Stanton boys opened the District 5-AA second half slate with a win over O'Donnell here Tuesday night, but the Stanton girls were not as fortunate.

The Stanton boys rolled to a 72-44 lead after three quarters and then cruised on to an 87-71 triumph to start the second half on a winning note. Stanton is now 17-6 on the year, and rated ninth in the state in their class.

David McReynolds, Craig Eiland and Lewis Henry all had 20 points to pace the Stanton team, while Eddie Hancock was the high point man for O'Donnell with 29 points.

O'Donnell won the girls contest by using a big fourth quarter to take a 75-63 triumph. The contest was a two-point game going into the final frame.

Anna Rios paced the O'Donnell effort in the second half opener with a whopping 31 points, with Tracy Clark adding 18.

Rhonda Garcia led Stanton with 24 points, with Della Brown adding 18.

The Stanton girls are now 7-9 on the year.

In a JV girls contest, O'Donnell managed a 38-35 win. Tulina Smith paced the Stanton JVs with 12 points.

The Stanton teams return to action on Friday, at which time they play host to Ropes.

Like men, not boys

Raiders play like they're treated

By the Associated Press

Sweeping up the final tidbits of Super Bowl XV:

Quarterback Jim Plunkett was the MVP — deservedly so — but it was big, fun-loving John Matuszak who proved the lasting symbol of Oakland's 27-10 victory over the Philadelphia Eagles.

CELEBRATION — Oakland Raiders head coach Tom Flores and Raiders quarterback Jim Plunkett embrace and celebrate after they guided the Raiders to a 27-10 win over the Philadelphia Eagles for the NFL title in Super Bowl XV in New Orleans Sunday.

"The difference between us and other teams," said the hulking 6-foot-8, 280-pound Raiders' defensive end, "is that we are treated like men instead of boys."

Matuszak not only enunciated the Oakland philosophy, but he lived it by breaking ranks in mid-week and taking a postmidnight fling around the watering holes and strip joints of New Orleans' Bourbon Street.

For this breach of conduct, he received a mild slap on the wrist and a $1,000 fine ("Is that all?" he asked). Nobody attempted to strip him of his chevrons.

It was that kind of a week for Matuszak and his unfettered, free-wheeling teammates, who practiced hard and played and partied with the same intensity. No curfews. No bedchecks.

Dick Vermeil, the stern disciplinarian coach of the rival Eagles, stiffened when asked what would have happened if one of his players had been guilty of the same misbehavior.

"He'd be back home in bed," Vermeil said tartly.

It was a contrast of the two systems: Vermeil, college-oriented, with rigid rules and regimentation; Oakland, with its absence of restraints.

"We handle these things in our own way — privately," explained Tom Flores, the low-key Oakland coach. Quipped Raiders' owner Al Davis: "We punish crimes, not misdemeanors."

The Raiders were a loose, uninhibited band of marauders. The overly protected Eagles were tight as a drum.

It's OK to apply stern discipline to school kids and sometimes to collegians. In dealing with 10-year pros who make $100,000 to $350,000 a year, forget it. The wild, mustachioed Oakland A's of the 1970s proved that when they swept to three World Series baseball crowns, part of it at the expense of Sparky Anderson's spit-and-polish Cincinnati Reds.

Steer netters lose to Abilene

The Abilene High tennis team dominated action here Tuesday afternoon in Rose Park, as both the Eagle boys and girls managed 8-1 wins over the Big Spring Netters.

The only Big Springers able to achieve wins were Aubrey Weaver and Debbie Fulcher in singles play.

The Steer netters return to action on Saturday when they host Odessa Permian.

Mayberry becomes Canada's richest

TORONTO (AP) — They're calling it a contract to beat all contracts when matched against what other Canadian professional teams have paid their athletes, but big John Mayberry wants its contents kept secret.

The Toronto Blue Jays announced Tuesday they had signed the slugging first baseman to a four-year, multi-million dollar deal, "which, on an annual basis, will make him the highest paid athlete ever to play for a team in Canada."

On a request from Mayberry, the American League baseball team refused to divulge the amount involved, although it's been the policy this year for the Blue Jays to reveal salary terms of all major league players' contracts.

Speculation is that the deal amounts to $3.2 million with bonuses included, or about $800,000 a year.

Blue Jays president Peter Bavasi, asked how Mayberry's contract ranked with other players on Canadian-based professional teams, said: "We checked it out. On an annual basis, no one is close."

Mayberry, 30, hit a club-record 30 home runs in 1980 and drove in 82 runs.

Blue Jays' vice-president Pat Gillick, who negotiated the contract, said major league player salaries were escalating dramatically.

"And while this may not be a favorable condition for the clubs, it is the currrent economic reality in baseball. If the Blue Jays are to continue building and progressing toward our goal of a championship team, we must stay competitive and not lose our best talent."

At Pebble Beach

Watson begins tour

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Tom Watson, golf's leading light over the last four seasons, opens his 1981 campaign this week confidently anticipating an improved performance.

"I'm ready to go. I'm very antsy to start playing golf. I'm very ready for it to begin. I'm champing at the bit," Watson said.

It is entirely possible, however, that the start of his season could be delayed. The 40th Bing Crosby National Pro-Am is scheduled to begin Thursday on three Monterey Peninsula courses.

But, as always in this event, that start depends on the weather. And the current conditions are what the touring pros call "Crosby weather"—rain, wind and cold.

A major storm swept in from the Pacific Tuesday and lashed Pebble Beach, Spyglass Hill and Cypress Point with wind and rain. The forecast called for more of the same for today and Thursday.

"We could be delayed getting started," Watson said Tuesday after the blustery weather had forced the courses to be closed to practice. "It's going to be Mud City out there," he said with a glance at the wind-whipped rain.

"Another day like this, we very well could have to hold off (the start)," said Jack Tuthill, tournament director for the PGA Tour.

In addition to again winning the player of the year honor, Watson he became the first man in history to go over $500,000 in single-season earnings, won the British Open and six American tournaments.

Adding spice to the tournament field is the presence of Jack Nicklaus, winner of the U.S. Open and PGA last year and holder of a record 17 major professional titles.

Oilers hire line coach

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Oiler head coach Ed Biles, left with a massive job or rebuilding his coaching staff, has made his first appointment by naming former Washington Redskins assistant coach Ray Callahan as his offensive line coach.

Callahan, 48, replaces Joe Bugel, who was named Monday as offensive coordinator of the Redskins under new head coach Joe Gibbs. Callahan spent three years as a Redskins assistant to Coach Jack Pardee, fired two weeks ago.

The Oiler coaching turnover started New Year's Eve when owner Bud Adams fired head coach and general manager Bum Phillips and named Biles as his successor.

Phillips was named head coach of the New Orleans Saints on Thursday and three of his former Oiler assistants, King Hill, John Paul Young and Wade Phillips, followed Phillips to New Orleans.

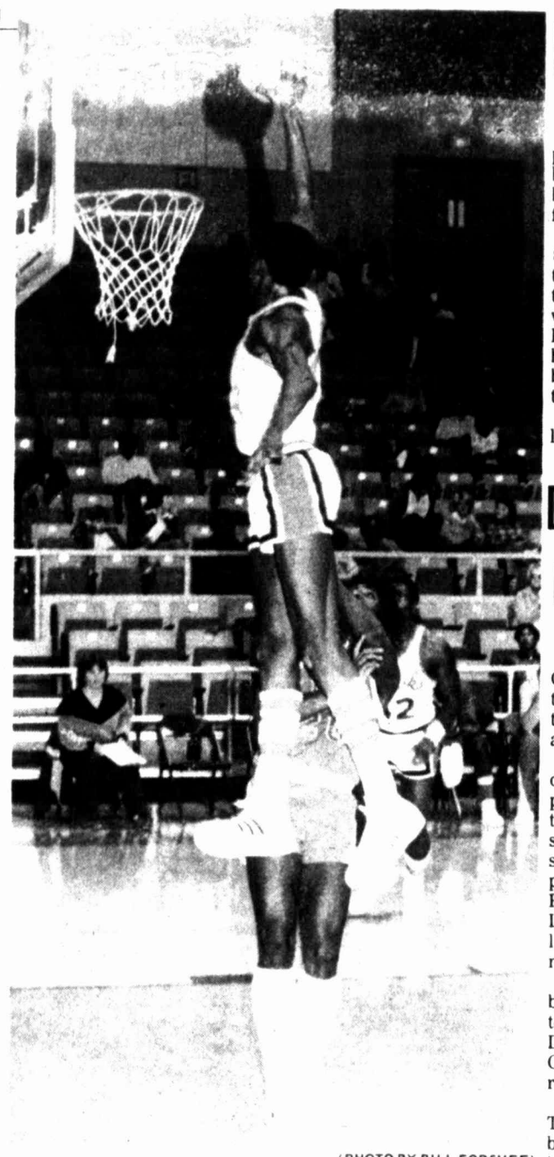

The status of two other Oiler assistants, Andy Bourgeois and Bob Gambold remained unclear.

Biles also must name offensive and defensive coordinators. Former Baltimore head coach Ted Marchibroda has been mentioned in connection with the offensive job.

LOCAL ELKS HOOP SHOOT FINALISTS — Katrina Thompson, left and Alice Lopez will represent Big Spring Elks Lodge 1386 at the state finals in Temple Saturday. The girls won the right to advance to state at a district "hoop-Shoot" in Pecos Dec. 6. They will compete against 60 other finalists from Texas. Winners from state will again shoot in regionals inLawton, Okla. Feb. 13. Elks "hoop-Shoot" free throw contest is conducted by Elks Lodge throughout the nation. The best free throw shooters (highest score of 25) will advance to Indianapolis, Ind. March 14 for the national championship. Ricky Barry, former pro basketball star, is a consultant. This year, over 4 billion youngsters participated in the Elks program. Rick Scott and Lee Young of the local lodge will accompany the contestants and their families to Temple.

KEY DUNK . . . Howard College's Kenneth Jones flies high toward the basket for an important dunk shot with five minutes remaining in the Hawks onday night game against NMJC. Jones was fouled on the play, making the free throw to complete a three-point play and give the Hawks a six-point lead.

Mountain lions brave in Big Bend

ALPINE, Texas (AP) — The mountain lions in Texas' Big Bend National Park are getting bolder as the number of park visitors declines, and the behavioral change has park rangers worried.

Six mountain lions have been sighted within the past month, although no sightings have been reported in the last two weeks, even in areas normally frequented by tourists. None of the big cats have attacked, park officials said.

A mother lion with two cubs was seen prowling through the popular Chisos Basin and another cat was photographed by a tourist in the eastern portion of the park, while two other lions were spotted by backpackers along a hiking trial.

One ranger said a drastic decline in the number of visitors to the park — 1980's total was almost 40 percent down from 1979 — probably is to blame for the change in behavior by the normally shy cats.

Ordinarily lions are shy, but tend to get bolder when there are fewer humans around to intimidate them, the ranger said.

Runnels Red boys win in Midland

MIDLAND — The Runnels Red boys basketball team used a 14-point effort from Sammy Watson to pace them to a 30-18 win over Midland Trinity in action here Tuesday evening.

The win gives the Runnels team a record of 4-3. They will play again tomorrow afternoon in the Sweetwater Tournament.

Jose Arenivaz and J.D. Williams added four points each for the Runnels team, with Doug Walker, Paul Castillo, Drew Wilson and Tony Rodriquez rounding out the scoring with two each.

Holmes feels shunned by TV

By the Associated Press

The heavyweight champion should be an asset to boxing. Larry Holmes is beginning to feel like a frozen asset.

Holmes, 31, is a willing and skilled fighter, and he wants to defend his share of the title five times during 1981, which, he says, will be his last year as a fighter. But he's having trouble getting bouts that the three major television networks will buy.

The only fight which looks like it could sell on closed-circuit is one between Holmes, the World Boxing Council champion, and top-ranked Gerry Cooney, and that's not likely to happen within Holmes' one-year timetable. Holmes says Cooney's managers, Mike Jones and Dennis Rappaport, don't want it to happen.

He thinks Jones and Rappaport will have Cooney go after Mike Weaver, the World Boxing Association champion, and then, if Cooney wins, wait until Holmes retires before seeking universal title recognition.

"They (Jones and Rappaport) say, 'We don't need you. You need us to make money,'" said Holmes. But, he added, "If they get the WBA title, they'll never fight Larry Holmes."

The three major networks don't need Holmes either, or at least not at this time at his asking price against opponents like Trevor Berbick and Marty Monroe, two men who have good records but who are not big draws at the box-office or in the TV ratings.

"You get what you can earn," said Mort Sarnik, CBS boxing consultant, explaining purses must be in line with what a fight's sale value is in connection with sponsors and pre-empted programming.

Holmes agrees that networks have the right to have a voice in who fights who because they spend the money. But, he said, "I'm bitter that the networks are controlling things to the extent that they're only picking opponents that they think will make a war."

"I think I'm the heavyweight champion of the world," said Holmes, who wants to fight Berbick in March. "I paid my dues and I should be able to have a tuneup after five months (he last fought when he stopped Muhammad Ali after 10 rounds of his fourth defense of 1980 Oct. 2). "They say these fights are not good enough for television," said Holmes. "They said the same thing about Weaver, said he wasn't worthy to fight me."

Television turned down a fight between Holmes and Weaver, who then was a challenger with eight losses. The fight on June 22, 1979, at Madison Square Garden turned out to be a war, with Holmes keeping the title by stopping Weaver in the 12th round.

Holmes notes that Ali often fought less than top-quality challengers — all heavyweight champions have because the division never is a wealth of depth — and is bothered that Ali also got big money...no matter who he fought, while ABC offered him "only" $500,000 to fight Berbick, whose claim to fame is a knockout of John Tate in Tate's first fight after he lost the WBA title to Weaver on a last-minute knockout.

Defending champs Louisville look back on winning road

By the Associated Press

Now that the Louisville Cardinals have regained their shooting eye perhaps they can start to see daylight at the end of the tunnel.

College basketball's defending national champions finally put it all together Tuesday night, shooting 57 percent — their season average was only 46 percent — in trouncing Providence 71-55 at Louisville. The victory still left them under the .500 mark at 7-8.

"If we can just shoot and be relaxed we will be a good team," said 6-foot-6 forward Derek Smith, who led the Cardinals with 24 points, 12 rebounds and four assists.

Louisville isn't thinking Top Twenty thoughts just yet but four ranked teams were in action and all won, although No. 14 Maryland had to come from seven points behind in the final three minutes before egding Pittsburgh 69-66 in overtime.

Meanwhile, eighth-ranked Notre Dame crushed Cornell 80-57, No. 16 South Alabama downed Jacksonville 55-48 and No. 20 Connecticut whipped Massachusetts 98-64.

In winning for the fifth time in its last six starts, Louisville connected on 28 of 49 shots from the floor.

"That is what you have to have," said Coach Denny Crum. "The problem is we haven't been consistent. We would play well but shoot badly and couldn't get the parts together."

The Cardinals took command of the game with a 13-4 burst early in the second half — they shot 61.5 percent after the intermission — to open a 49-33 bulge. Smith had help from Jerry Eaves, who accounted for 19 points on 9-of-13 accuracy.

"My touch is coming back just as the team as a whole is shooting better," Eaves said.

Notre Dame had no trouble with Cornell as John Paxson scored 15 points, Tracy Jackson added 14 by making seven consecutive shots and Kelly Tripucka had 13. The Irish trailed 10-6 before the Jackson-Paxson show sparked a 12-2 burst with four points apiece.

"We played without intensity early in the game," said Notre Dame Coach Digger Phelps, who cleared his bench in the second half. "They hit some shots and we didn't do the right things defensively inside."

Cornell's Tom Miller thought the Irish could have named the score.

"I think Digger backed off on us a little bit and I appreciate that," he said. "We're not a very talented team. I think our kids will learn something in playing a team like this."

Albert King and Greg Manning rescued Maryland in regulation time and Buck Williams, held to seven points in the first 40 minutes, hit six in overtime to propel the Terrapins past Pitt.

Maryland trailed 62-55 with 2:56 left but King hit a bank shot and a three-point play and Manning's baseline drive tied the score with 1:27 to go. Williams put the Terrapins ahead to stay with a basket one minute into overtime and added a pair of free throws a minute later.

Denise Curry on level with past UCLA greats

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The top scorer in UCLA basketball history thinks five freshman players, including three starters, have gained the seasoning needed to challenge the nation's No. 1 ranked team Thursday night — and possibly bring home another national collegiate championship banner to UCLA two months from now.

The Russian national team's 7-foot-2 center was in awe at an international tournament in 1979 after viewing the complete game of the UCLA player — which combines deadly shooting, rugged rebounding and brings the ball upcourt against pressing defenses.

" ...guarded by three players and still made 33 points in one game — She is a universal player," Soviet star Uliana Semenova said of Denise Curry.

Since then Curry has led the U.S. team to a world women's championship, and was the only American named to the All-World team when the U.S. team won the 1980 Olympics qualifying tournament.

Curry knows how much freshmen can contribute. In her first season at UCLA she led the team in scoring, and that squad with Ann Meyers and Annie Ortega won the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women basketball title in the 1977-78 season.

She also has the best free-throw shooting percentage in school history, 89.3 percent last year to surpass an 87.2 percent season by Keith (Jamaal) Wilkes.

Now eighth on the women's college basketball all-time scoring list, Curry has 2,808 points. The UCLA men's record is 2,325 set by Lew Alcindor (Kareem Abdul-Jabbar). Curry has 1,157 rebounds and she'll fall about 100 short of Bill Walton's rebound record of 1,370.

Goliad fems split pair vs. Midland

The Goliad Junior High girls basketball teams split a pair of games Tuesday afternoon with Midland Trinity.

The Goliad Black team won their game over the Trinity seventh graders by a score of 16-10, with Clara Hamilton leading the way with eight points. Lana Fletcher added four.

The Goliad White team then relinquished a lead in the final 40 seconds, dropping a 30-26 decision to the Trinity eighth graders. Lisa Phillips and Amanda Solis paced the White effort with 10 and nine points, respectively, with Monique Jones adding four.

Both Goliad teams return to action on Feb. 5, at which time they play Coahoma here.

Alborn too busy to sign Rice pact

HOUSTON (AP) — Rice University football coach Ray Alborn, one of only four coaches in the history of the school to be offered a contract, has not signed a three-year pact extended to him by Athletic Director Augie Erfurth early this month.

Alborn, whose Owls finished with a surprising 5-6 record after being picked to finish last in the Southwest Conference last season, received a verbal three-year contract on Jan. 6 and was presented with a copy of the deal on Jan. 16.

Erfurth said Tuesday that the two men haven't been able to discuss the contract, however, because of Alborn's recruiting trips.

"We have given Ray a copy of the contract and he's looked at it," Erfurth said. "We don't see any problems in him signing it, it's just a matter of us getting together when he's in town."

Erfurth said he hoped to talk with Alborn Friday.

"I usually see Ray only on Saturday's when he brings recruits in to visit the campus," Erfurth said.

Alborn said last week he was having an attorney examine the contract but was not ready to comment.

Only three other coaches in the school's history have been offered contracts.

Bill Peterson signed a three-year contract in 1971 but left after one year to become head coach of the Houston Oilers. Al Conover, Peterson's successor, signed a five-year contract but he resigned under fire and the final two years were paid off.

Basketball Coach Bob Polk retired at the end of a three year contract.

The 1980 Owl football team, playing one of the toughest schedules in the nation, capped their season with a stunning 35-7 victory over defending Southwest Conference champion Houston.

Rice University President Dr. Norman Hackerman said following the season that Alborn had never asked for a contract and that his salary was probably at the lowest SWC range.

MOST COURAGEOUS — Rolf Benirsc kicker for the San Diego Chargers, answers a newsman's question day before the Philadelphia Sports Writers Association dinner Cherry Hill, N.J. FORECAST FOR THURSDAY, JAN. 29, 1981

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Early morning confusion can soon be dissipated by adopting a new attitude. New conditions later in the day make it possible for you to achieve much of value.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Make those improvements at home that will bring more harmony and happiness. Study new worthwhile outlets.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Make long-range plans to have more profitable days in the future. Adopt a more logical outlook on life.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) A good time to engage in some new enterprise and gain more prestige. Maintain a cheerful manner at all times.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) If you pursue personal aims in a positive fashion, you can gain them easily. Take steps to improve your health.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Confer with influential persons who can give you the advice you need. Strive for more harmony with family members.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) After business matters are properly handled, get together with good friends and enjoy social pleasures. Be poised.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) You can communicate very well now with higher-ups and can easily advance in career activities. Use care in motion.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) New situations come up in which you can gain benefits if you handle them well. Express happiness with family members.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Go through with whatever you have in mind in connection with a close tie and get excellent results.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Ideal day to make new deals in connection with associates with good results. Don't be too demanding of others.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Schedule your work well in the morning and then all works out smoothly the rest of the day. Use common sense.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Use practical sense in all your business dealings at this time. You can realize a most cherished aim if you apply yourself more..

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY . . . he or she will understand what is needed to get ahead in any matter, be it of a personal or business nature and can bring harmony between arguing factions. This is a devoted and loving person here and will be happy in marriage.

"The Stars impel, they do not compel." What you make of your life is largely up to you!

U.S. corn supply slightly larger than previously hoped

WASHINGTON (AP) — New government figures show the U.S. corn supply is slightly larger than it had been estimated previously, but not enough to make much difference in the exceedingly tight market situation.

The Agriculture Department said Tuesday in a revised "supply and demand" report that the corn marketing year started last Oct. 1 with around 1.62 billion bushels on hand. That was 20 million bushels more than had been reported earlier.

It takes a little more than 20 million bushels of corn to meet one day's demand for domestic and export needs.

By fall, according to department figures, the corn reserve will have been depleted by about 65 percent in one of the sharpest one-year declines in U.S. grain supplies on record.

Coupled with last year's drought-reduced harvest of less than 6.65 billion bushels, that meant an available U.S. supply for 1980-81 of about 8.27 billion bushels.

But corn "disappearance" estimates remained unchanged for 1980-81, the marketing year that will end Sept. 30, at a record of around 7.7 billion bushels.

That will leave the corn reserve at about 566 million bushels — down more than 1.05 billion bushels, or about 65 percent, from the amount on hand last Oct. 1.

Higher corn prices have reflected the situation for months, since the impact of last summer's heat wave and drought became fully assessed.

Another big factor has been the unprecedented foreign demand for U.S grain, with corn exports in 1980-81 estimated at 2.6 billion bushels, up from 2.43 billion last season.

Department experts project corn prices at the farm to average $3.25 to $3.60 a bushel over the entire marketing year, compared to $2.52 in 1979-80.

The report said the forecast would put next Oct. 1's corn carryover at the lowest level since 1976 when it was 399 million bushels.

According to department records, the prospective 65 percent one-year reduction in corn stocks would be the sharpest at least since World War II. And in those years the corn supply and carryover involved much smaller raw numbers because production, exports and domestic use have grown dramatically since then.

The report said no changes were made from previous estimates for soybeans, rice and cotton.

Projected wheat use for the wheat marketing year which began last June 1 also was unchanged, and the report noted that the carryover this June 1 is expected to be about 909 million bushels, slightly above the 902 million bushels shown for a year ago.

Looking at total U.S. grains — including corn, wheat, rice and other feed grains — the report said the respective marketing year's will end up in 1981 with about 47 million metric tons left over, down from 78 million in 1980.

A metric ton is about 2,205 pounds and is equal to 39.4 bushels of corn or 36.7 bushels of wheat.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's inventory of sheep gained in 1980, the second consecutive annual increase in the past 20 years, says the Agriculture Department.

Officials said Tuesday there were an estimated 12.9 million head of sheep and lambs on farms and ranches as of Jan. 1, a 2 percent gain from 12.7 million a year ago.

The Jan. 1, 1980 inventory was up from 12.4 million at the beginning of 1979.

The department's Crop Reporting Board said the average value of sheep and lambs was $69.90 per head, a decline of $8.30 from a year ago's record value.

Last year's lamb crop of 8.25 million head was up 3 percent from 1979, the report said.

Texas' goat inventory totaled 1.38 million on Jan. 1, down 1 percent from last year, the report said. Average value declined $7.50 to $38.50 per head.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The winter wheat crop in theg great Plains continues to be parched and vulnerable to wind erosion, says the government.

But overall, the Joint Agricultural Weather Facility said Tuesday, winter wheat during the week of Jan. 19-25 continued to be in "fair to good" condition in the major production areas.

"A major part of the Great Plains still had no snow cover and warmer temperatures melted much of the snow throughout the Corn Belt," the report said.

In Kansas, the leading producer, the crop was holding up as "fair to good" and had suffered "only isolated wind damage." However, as in many other parts of region, moisture supplies were short.

Some Garland residents think about forming posse

Rash of thefts prompts horse owners to arm themselves

GARLAND, Texas (AP) — Back in the days when Texas was a wild, young part of the American West, a convicted horse thief was a rare man — usually because ranchers made sure he didn't live long enough to stand trial.

Times may have changed since then, but 13 horse thefts in the past two weeks have angry horseowners in this Dallas suburb arming themselves and thinking about forming a modern day "posse" to deal with the "varmits."

But the vigilante mood of the equine enthusiasts has had dangerous drawbacks, says one stable owner.

"It's a powder keg," said Bill Taylor of the Lazy J stables here. "Two women were out checking their horses and they almost shot each other the other night."

"Horse owners and horse traders are real proud people," adds Garland police Det. Jackie Waggoner. "They buy a horse when it's a small colt and raise it for years and years and years. When it gets stolen, they don't like it one bit."

Waggoner said police have increased their patrols around corrals and horse pastures and are "following every lead we can get our hands on" in an effort to catch the culprits responsible for the thefts.

Seven thefts were made from two stables inside the Dallas city limits, four of them at the Diamond Eight Stable on Monday. One of the missing animals was a $10,000 cutting horse, said Garland police officer John Hamilton.

The stable padlock was cut and the four horses, valued at a total of $18,000, were stolen sometime before dawn. They included a mare and a Shetland pony that belonged to a 5-year-old boy, Chase Deadman.

"There's no way to put a monetary value on a Shetland pony that belongs to a 5-year-old," Langley said. "Stealing a horse is not like kidnapping a person, but it's the very next thing to it."

But Langley said reports that stable operators and horse owners plan to organize vigilante-style protection groups are bad news.

"I know one stable owner in Mesquite that's trying to organize patrols and that's dangerous, dangerous, dangerous."

Added Taylor, "It's getting to the point we've got to get calm, cool and collected and let the police do their job."

But even people like Taylor and Langley, who disapprove of horse owners carrying guns, get worked up over horse thieves.

"When we finally catch one of those low-down, thieving, conniving rascals that would steal a 5-year-old's horse," explained Langley, "he posts bond and beats us back to the house. They slap their hands and turn them loose."

"I'm not saying I want retaliation. I want justice."

"One of the things these folks are not thinking about is the legal ramifications if they carry a gun and shoot someone, an innocent person," said Garland policeman Larry Rollins. "Not only could the person who was shot file a damage suit, but there could be criminal charges, too.

"And if some people form patrols, they should realize that if anyone sues one of them that he can sue everybody. The legal problems could be staggering.

"It would certainly be better if they just gave us a call and let us handle it."

One difficulty for the police, however, is the ease with which a horse thief can dispose of the evidence — at a packing plant.

"The big deal is that they can get 60 cents a pound, on the hoof, at a packing house for shipment to Europe where they can eat horse meat," said Hamilton.

"Any horse that's walking is worth from $550 to $1,000 because they are getting 60 cents a pound at the meat market," Taylor agreed.

"What we recommend is that anybody with a CB (citizens band) radio can call on channel 9 and talk directly to an operator here at the police station. And we'll come out and handle it," Hamilton said, adding his voice to those warning against vigilante action.

"Somebody could get hurt," he said. "And even if they don't get hurt, there's going to be some hard feelings."

BOB BROCK FORD

Blackthorn memorial being held today

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — One year ago today the Coast Guard cutter Blackthorn, with a homesick crew of 50, cast anchor for Galveston, Texas, after four months in drydock repair. But before the ship could clear Tampa's harbor, disaster claimed the lives of 23 of its seamen.

The tiny buoy tender collided head-on with a huge oil tanker at the mouth of Tampa Bay. Within minutes, the cutter rolled over and sank, taking nearly half the crew to the bottom of the cold, murky shipping channel.

A six-ton granite monument has been placed within sight of the channel where the tragic crash occurred last Jan. 28. The eight-foot tall marker is inscribed with the names of the Coast Guardsmen who went down with their ship.

Coast Guard Commandant John B. Hayes flew from Washington to dedicate the monument during a commemorative service today at Blackthorn Memorial Park.

That night, the 180-foot Blackthorn was headed out to sea. The 585-foot Capricorn, 30 times heavier, was coming into port with a load of oil for a power company.

Suddenly the ships, closing at 2,500 feet per minute, rammed head on. Sparks lit the sky and metal tore like tissue paper.

The tanker's six-ton anchor lodged in the hull of the cutter. The chain pulled taught and the vessels churned wildly through the water, locked together. The Blackthorn heeled and went under.

Now, a year later, as officers gather to remember comrades lost in the Coast Guard's worst peacetime disaster:

—Lt. Cmdr. George J. Sepel, 35, Blackthorn skipper on his first at-sea command, is facing a court-martial;

—His deck officer, Lt. J.G. James R. Ryan, an inexperienced sailor who was guiding the ship before impact, faces lesser disciplinary proceedings;

—The Blackthorn, raised from the bay, has been scrapped;

—The Capricorn, still seaworthy after the accident, has been patched up and is back in service;

—And lawsuits are pending totaling more than $42 million.

A Coast Guard Marine Board of Inquiry and a panel from the National Transportation Safety Board, two investigative bodies who sat in joint hearings for 41 days, have come to differing conclusions as to what caused the collision.

Testimony indicates the collision happened around mid-channel about three-quarters of a mile from the Sunshine Skyway Bridge.

Officers of each vessel blamed the other during the three-months of hearings. Each said the other was off course, had strayed across an imaginary center line in the channel and into the path of the oncoming vessel.

Crewmen said the ships didn't see each other until just a few mintues before the collision, partly because a brightly lit Russian cruise liner that had moved down the channel ahead of the Blackthorn had momentarily blocked the line of sight between the ships.

There was confusion, too, from each side over whether proper whistle signals were sounded to indicate a passing pattern.

Sepel told investigators that moments before impact, he took command from Ryan and ordered a sharp right turn. But he said the tanker then turned into the Blackthorn.

The tanker pilot, Eugene Knight, said he had ordered a left turn, thinking he would miss the cutter with an unusual starboard-to-starboard pass instead of trying to keep it to his left, as normally required by marine traffic "rules of the road."

In its finding, the NTSB cited a geometric center of the channel and blamed the Blackthron for failing to keep to its own side.

The Marine Board said both vessels had to share the blame for failing to stay to the right.

The board also cited mutual failure to sound navigational whistles at the proper times and mutual failure to establish radio contact.

Sepel's court-martial was recently announced by Adm. Paul A. Yost, who said there was no presumption of guilt.

"This is an opportunity for a fine officer to defend his actions," said Yost, commander of the 8th Coast Guard district which included Sepel's command.

Poll shows financial world doubts balanced budget

NEW YORK (AP) — Politicians' vows to balance the federal budget are usually taken these days the same way a creditor responds to assurances that "the check is in the mail"—with a large dose of skepticism.

The promise has been made repeatedly in the past decade, by various presidents, but to date it hasn't been kept.

As President Reagan begins his tenure in office, many people in the financial world aren't yet fully persuaded trhat this time things might be different.

At least that's what Richard B. Hoey, a Wall Street economist, found when he conducted his latest periodic "decision-makers poll" of a broad sample of financial executives.

Surveyed in December, these portfolio managers, corporate financial officers, economists and industry analysts foresaw, on average, a 38 percent chance that the government would achieve a balanced budget sometime in the next five years.

That's hardly a sign of runaway optimism — although it is a considerable increase from the 23.3 percent reading Hoey got last October, before the election.

Hoey, who works at the brokerage firm of Bache Halsey Stuart Shields Inc., also found some hopes that the Reagan administration will be able to reduce the role of federal spending in the economy.

In the latter half of the 19702, he notes, federal spending averaged about 22 percent of the gross national product, a measure of the nation's total output of goods and services.

The consensus of the executives responding to the survey was that the federal spending share of GNP would drop by the mid-1980s to 20.9 percent.

On the subject of the investment outlook, Hoey's group had some positive thoughts about the stock market.

Asked to rate the prospects of several different kinds of investments for providing a return greater than the rise of consumer prices, the respondents gave U.S. stocks a 67.1 percent chance of beating inflation.

Spot crude oil came next at 65.4 percent, followed by single-family homes, 59.1 percent; commercial real estate, 58.2 percent; gold, 54 percent, and a diversified portfolio of foreign stocks, 54.8 percent. Bonds brought up the rear, at 41.8 percent.

Hoey pointed out that the survey respondents' conclusions about the future bore a close resemblance to the pattern of the recent past.

"It is striking that the ranking of these alternative investments almost exactly parallels the performance of the various assets over the last several years," he said.

The high ranking of stocks, he noted, comes after most market averages reached record highs in recent months. The low ranking of bonds comes shortly after prices of many bonds hit all-time lows.

Senate committee warning

Uncle Sam should not block prosperity flowing to Texas

By PETER VANDEVANTER
States News Service

WASHINGTON — The federal government should not try to offset the prosperity flowing to Texas with special aid to the economically ailing Northeast, a congressional study warned Monday.

The Joint Economic Committee, a congressional advisory group formerly chaired by Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, issued a 38-page study rejecting "the notion that the purpose of federal aid should be to help equalize regional growth rates."

In the past decade industry and manpower has moved to the South and West out of the Northeast. The latest census figures showed a population drop in New York of 4 percent in the past 10 years, while Texas' population grew 26 percent.

Bentsen said in the introduction: "That goal (of equalizing regional growth rates) would require such large differences in the distribution of Federal aid as to be economically and politically impossible, and it wouldn't equalize the growth."

However, many bills have been introduced in Congress to stem the loss of revenue from the Northeast: to subsidize the renovation of abandoned housing (such as more commonly found in northeast areas), to reroute defense contracts to areas of need (rather than the lowest bidder usually in the South with lower average wages) and to put a cap on revenues a state can obtain through oil leases.

The JEC study took a broad look at financial trends in the nation's economy, including sections on the rise in welfare programs, the federal influence on the national output and the increase in federal aid to localities.

The study concluded: "It is generally acknowledged that over time, given this country's open economy, regional differences in living standards will tend to be equalized anyway."

Bentsen wrote in the introduction: "Other factors — such as the economic climate in a given state, local tax rates, advances in such things as telecommunications and air travel, differences in the cost of real estate — have far more impact on these regional differences than federal aid."

The so-called "Frostbelt-Sunbelt" battle intensified last year when the decontrol of oil meant increased state revenues for oil states like Texas. In 1978 the revenue from Texas-owned oil leases was $400 million, compared to the 1981 estimate of $1.6 billion.

The JEC study says government has become America's biggest business, with 80,000 units of government in 50 states spending $760 billion a year, an average $3,500 annually for every man, woman and child in the United States.

Federal aid to local governments climbed from $310 million in 1957 (1.80 per person) to $15.5 billion in 1980 ($70.25 per person).

"The removal of regulations which unnecessarily burden the economy is a major requirement, because government regulation today takes more than $100 billion annually out of America's economy," Bentsen wrote.

In the past 15 years, $1.5 trillion has been lent so that if every person had shared equally in the loans it would have amounted to $7,000 a person.

"Americans for too long have suffered from the ballooning of federal grants," Bentsen also said. In 1955, grants cost $19.50 per person, last year, grants averaged $375.80 per American.

"Possibly the most serious flaw in government's effect on private enterprise is its failure to curb inflation," Bentsen said.

A person earning $12,000 in 1963 had to earn $28,000 in 1979 to keep pace with inflation. That same person, who paid 26 cents out of every dollar in taxes in 1963, now must pay 37 cents when he earns $28,000.

The JEC study follows a Carter administration report on the "Frostbelt-Sunbelt" debate issued in December by the President's Commission for a National Agenda for the Eighties.

That report recommended that Washington assist the unemployed in finding jobs in the Sunbelt rather than trying to revive industry in the North.

However, Northern congressmen have argued that it is in the national interest that federal grants, loans and legislative programs be fashioned to help out the North — similar to laws passed to help the South during Reconstruction after the Civil War.

Owner of Southfork title seeking to sell its name

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — An Amarillo businessman who has tied his fortunes to the success of the television program "Dallas" is proving he's no J.R. Ewing.

Van Harlow wants to sell Southfork Ranches Inc. Not the actual ranch where Jock, Miss Ellie, J.R., Sue Ellen and the rest of the TV Ewings hate each other weekly — just the name.

Harlow applied to the Texas Secretary of State to form a company known as Southfork Ranches Inc. about three months ago. He won approval and has placed an advertisement in the Wall Street Journal for two Fridays in a row.

The ad says:

"Southfork Ranches Inc., a Texas corporation. Accepting offers for the corporate shell named Southfork Ranches Inc."

Offers to date — zero, says Harlow.

"I just thought someone might want the use of the name," he said, admitting that he may have waited too long to make his move. "I should have advertised it when the 'Who Shot J.R.' craze was in progress," he said.

Harlow's income is derived from oil and gas, ranching and real estate, and the Southfork ploy was merely a lark, he said.

"I'm surprised that Southfork has never been incorporated," he said. "We put our ranch under a corporate name. A lot of people do, and I'm surprised more ranches don't incorporate for tax reasons."

An official in the Secretary of State's office in Austin confirmed that Harlow's claim to the name is valid.

Harlow said it cost him $10 to file for the name, but he expects to sell it for about $2,000. He also warns there will be an attorney's fee of about $200 to transfer the name to the new owner.

"We'll run the ad one more time and, if we have no offers, we'll keep the name and use it some way," said Harlow, adding that he also checked into the possibility of acquiring the name Ewing Oil Co., but found it was already taken by a Texas oilman named Bob Ewing.

Carter getting some credit for resolution of crisis

NEW YORK (AP) — Americans give former President Carter good marks for his handling of the hostage crisis, but they believe Iranian fear of dealing with Ronald Reagan as president was a key to winning freedom for the 52 men and women, a new Associated Press-NBC News poll says.

Public judgment of the agreement that ended the crisis is that it was the best deal possible. And, given a choice between honoring the agreement and breaking it in order to punish Iran, Americans say the Reagan administration should abide by the terms of the deal.

The latest AP-NBC News poll is based on telephone interviews with 2,407 adults nationwide conducted Jan. 21-23, after the hostages were released, but before they returned to the United States.
