Reagan 'gratified' by Bork's decision

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan indicated Saturday he would have acceded to a request by appeals court Judge Robert H. Bork to withdraw as a Supreme Court nominee, but said he was gratified by Bork's decision to carry on.

In his weekly radio address to the nation, broadcast from Camp David, Md., Reagan said "I won't easily forget" how Bork described the agony of deciding whether to remain in the fight. But Reagan also said he shared Bork's feeling that there should be "no illusions" about his prospects for confirmation.

In the Democratic Party's response, Sen. George Mitchell of Maine said that "when the United States Senate votes on the nomination of Judge Bork, nearly 60 senators, including several Republicans, will vote no."

"Judge Bork's views are inconsistent with two centuries of American constitutional law and the common understanding of the American people," Mitchell said, adding that Bork has little appreciation for Americans' right to privacy.

Reagan said Bork's record had been "subjected to distortions and misrepresentations," and said that "while I refused to withdraw his name, I understood why Judge Bork himself might choose to do so."

"I knew that any decision made by Judge Bork would be made on solid grounds of principle in contrast to those who would politicize our courts, jeopardize the independence of the judiciary, and hold our courts and Constitution hostage."

But Reagan, giving his listeners a rare presidential description of the kinds of meetings that go on behind closed doors and out of public view at the White House, talked of how Bork had come to visit Friday to state his feelings on the embattled nomination.

"I had a meeting I won't easily forget," Reagan went on. "The man who came to see me was Robert Bork."

"I wish you could have been there," the president said, "as he looked me in the eye and said we must do not what was right or easy for himself, but what was right for the country."

Jackson begins campaign

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Jesse Jackson launched his second bid for the White House on Saturday from his native region, declaring that the new, liberated South can "lead America to its loftiest and highest ideals."

At a foot-stomping, revival-style meeting of his Rainbow Coalition, Jackson said his Democratic candidacy offered "bold leadership and a new direction" for a nation led astray by the Reagan administration.

"There is something wrong with our government's priorities today — its values are wrong," the 46-year-old Baptist preacher said. "It wears a military fig-leaf to cover its impotency."

"But there is nothing wrong with America. America is our land. America is God's country."

Saturday night, more than 1,000 Jackson supporters sang "we've got the power" as they greeted Jackson in Greenfield, Iowa.

"We're going to put our eye on the high prize," said Jackson at a rally in a giant tent on a farm on the outskirts of the rural town.

As in the 1984 campaign, Jackson is the last major Democratic candidate to formally announce his candidacy — this time filling out a six-man field for 1988.

The outsider in 1984, Jackson begins the campaign for the Democratic presidential nomination this time as the leader in the national polls. As the only Democrat making a second national bid, he benefits from wide name recognition and solid support from black voters.

City officials say it would cost between $1 million and $3 million to update the city's street light synchronization system.

Lack of funds postpones project to synchronize city's traffic lights

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Mayor Carroll Thomas — whose April 1986 campaign partially was based on synchronizing city traffic lights — now has put the idea on hold pending improvement of the local economy or passage of a bond issue, he said.

With two updated traffic light synchronization systems projected to cost between $1 million to $3 million, the mayor said the money is not available.

"There isn't any extra do be doing those kinds of things right now," Thomas said.

And unless the need for a bond issue arises, it could be a long time before drivers snared in Midland's outdated light synchronization system stop grinding their teeth.

Under the present system, installed in 1958, drivers sometimes may find themselves traveling against a one-way synchronized light sequence and caught by a red light at every block, said Traffic Engineer Fred McGary.

Midlander shot to death in altercation outside club

From Staff Reports

Authorities late Saturday were questioning possible witnesses to the early-morning shooting death of a 21-year-old Midland man at a southside nightclub, Midland Police Department spokesman Cpl. Jim White said.

Jose Omar Cruz, 1325 Cuthbert Ave., was pronounced dead by Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe at a local hospital following the shooting, which occurred at 1:16 a.m. Saturday in the parking lot of the El Caribe club, 2201 Garden City Highway.

Cruz, who was found lying in a southside parking lot, reportedly was shot once in the face and once in the chest, the police spokesman said.

A bystander, Victor Madrid, 23, address unavailable, was treated for a gunshot wound to the arm and released, White said.

According to the police report, the shooting transpired after a fight erupted inside the club.

White said a security guard reportedly told police that he ordered those involved in the altercation outside, then went back inside to notify authorities. The shooting occurred as the guard was returning to the scene, he added.

Police have no suspects in the shooting death, White said.

Iraqi jets hit Liberian tanker, three Iranian oil centers, air base

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Iraqi jets hit a tanker, three mainland Iranian oil centers and an air base Saturday as another convoy of U.S. warships and reflagged Kuwaiti vessels was reported preparing to head up the perilous Persian Gulf.

Shipping sources also reported that oil installations on Iran's Sirri Island in the southern gulf were on fire at nightfall, apparently after a long-range Iraqi air raid.

Iraqi war communiques monitored in Cyprus made no mention of a raid on Sirri, about 350 miles southeast of Iran's main oil terminal on Kharg Island.

Sirri was the target of the Iraqi air force's first long-range bombing mission in the gulf in August last year, and has been hit at least twice since then.

The sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said six Iraqi warplanes were sighted heading south towards Sirri.

A U.S. official said four wounded Iranians rescued after the Thursday night shootout between American helicopters and Iranian patrol boats in the northern gulf would be offered political asylum as soon as their condition permits.

The four Iranians, believed to be members of Iran's Revolutionary Guards, were hospitalized aboard the landing ship USS Raleigh. At least two underwent surgery on board for wounds suffered in the attack. Two others died after being rescued, the Pentagon said.

U.S. Navy officials on Saturday said only three Iranian boats were involved, and one was sunk and the others seized.

The officials, speaking with the condition they not be identified, said there was no fourth Iranian craft involved. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said in Washington earlier that a larger ship, a corvette or frigate, had escaped from the clash in the northern Gulf.

According to the Navy sources, the craft that sank was a Swedish-built Boghammar speedboat and the two recovered by the Nary were "Boston Whaler-type" vessels.

They said one of the four wounded Iranians was in guarded condition in intensive care with extensive burns and a "fair prognosis for recovery." The three others have shrapnel wounds and are in fair condition, according to the officials.

They said each of the Iranian boats carried three or four men, and no bodies were recovered from the water.

Of the two who perished, the officials said one died of wounds before he was put into an American patrol boat and the other before the patrol boat reached the Raleigh.

The State Department confirmed earlier that the four would be asked if they wanted to become "political refugees" rather than return to Iran.

It said those who wanted to go home would be repatriated through the International Committee of the Red Cross.

Love is in the air as pair exchange vows

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Love was in the air Saturday at the remarriage of Vicki and David Trolinder.

So were they.

Fifty-feet above the Midland skyline and perched in separate crane truck "buckets," the two exchanged nuptials for the second time in eight years while their two children and a minister stood by.

Mrs. Trolinder, 32, admitted the status of their divorce had always been "up in the air" and it seemed fitting that the remarriage to Trolinder, 31, was just the same.

The marriage of David and Vicki Trolinder had taken a downswing in 1983 culminating in a divorce. But the love bug bit back six months later and the two resumed a courtship which reached the unusual apex Saturday.

Trolinder, a sign serviceman with Permian Sign Co. in Midland, said he wanted to get married up in the air because "that's the way I spend most of my time and that's where I feel most comfortable."

Not so at first, for Mrs. Trolinder, who said she was scared of heights.

To help her over this mild case of acrophobia, Trolinder said he took his ex-but-soon-to-be-new wife and his German shepherd, Jake, up for a ride in one of the red, wrought iron crane buckets.

"She got over it, but Jake is still scared," Trolinder mused.

About 30 friends and relatives were present at the ceremony conducted at the sign company on Cottonflat Road, including his grandmother who watched the ceremony sitting in a lawnchair with her head cocked back.

"Maybe it will make him do right this time. He'll think he's closer to heaven or something," the grandmother said.

Trolinder's mother, Louise, added that this was nothing new for her.

She said the groom and his brother Jim, 34, a stockbroker at the firm of Rauscher-Pierce in Midland, used to sleep on their home's roof when they were little.

Lion on leash after he mauls 8-year-old girl

HOUSTON (AP) — A lion led into a crowded shopping center on a leash attacked and mauled an 8-year-old girl Saturday before a security guard was able to subdue it with gunfire, authorities said.

Roxanne Hernandez of Houston was taken by Life Flight Helicopter to Hermann Hospital, where she underwent surgery for head wounds and was in guarded condition Saturday night, officials said.

Dr. Karen Kemper, a veterinarian for the city Bureau of Animal Regulation and Care, said the 300-pound lion was destroyed and its head submitted to a state laboratory to determine if it had rabies.

JACKSON

And this time Jackson has worked hard to build a disciplined, mainstream campaign — a sharp contrast to his frenzied effort in 1984 that won more than 3 million votes and 465 delegates.

He did, however, promise at least one unusual trip for a presidential candidate — saying he wants to visit U.S. servicemen in the Persian Gulf, even though he opposed Reagan's policies in the region.

"We cannot repeat the mistake of Vietnam, where the Vietnam vet felt unsupported. The Vietname veteran was not wrong, the Vietnam policy was wrong," he told 3,000 cheering supporters in a 51-minute speech.

Jackson, born in South Carolina and educated in North Carolina, said the new South is the key to the nation's change of direction.

"We are here today at the dawn, early in the morning of the new South," he said. "This region of rich soil and poor people can lead America to its loftiest and highest ideals."

Jackson did acknowledge that "Many remember the old South. A few still wish to preserve it."

And outside the hall, a white supremacist group demonstrated against Jackson.

Jackson is expected to do well in the southern regional primary on Super Tuesday, March 8, 1988 — a fact he referred to at a fundraising breakfast before his announcement.

"It's providential that we have Super Tuesday," he said. "It's chance for the South to assume national leadership."

Jackson said the South's newfound power — as evidenced in the probable defeat of Robert H. Bork for the U.S. Supreme Court — comes in part for the massive voter registration efforts he led earlier in this decade.

"The new South has not only liberated itself, but it has changed the priorities of the nation. The new South defeated right-wing Republicans in 1984 and 1986," he said. "A Democratic party that made room for more people is the reason Robert Bork will soon become a trivia question instead of a threat to basic rights that most Americans hold precious."

Jackson's 1984 campaign was marred by strife and controversy and he admitted he would make mistakes again as he echoed his words from the 1984 Democratic National Convention.

"I have spent the last 25 years, not as a perfect servant, but as a public servant," he said. "The risk is great. The challenges are many. And the job is difficult. But we have an obligation to serve and I want to serve America."

And former Gary, Ind., Mayor Gary Hatcher warned the crowd there is controversy to come. "The winds of controversy will swirl around the head of our candidate. We must not let anyone else tell us who Jesse Jackson is. We know who he is."

On the issues, Jackson laid out the themes of his campaign with a call for economic justice, protection of the American family, stopping the flow of drugs and morality in foreign policy.

"Now is the time for bold leadership and a new direction," he said.

He pledged a strong military, but promised to cut the defense budget. He said he would pursue a "Jackson Doctrine" of morality in foreign policy.

He called for the wealthy and corporations to pay more in taxes and an end to businesses exporting jobs overseas.

"South Koreans did not take our jobs from us. General Motors took our jobs to South Korea," he said.

Jackson became the leader in most national polls on the 1988 race after front-runner Gary Hart was forced out of the race in disgrace in May.

In an ABC News-Washington Post poll taken Sept. 17-23, Jackson built on high name recognition and strong support from blacks to draw the support of 23 percent of the Democrats. Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis was second with 13 percent.

He brushed aside those who said his ratings were based only on name recognition.

"I was born...to a teen-age mother ...Nobody knew my name," he said.

Jackson listed accomplishments that have earned him high recognition, adding each time that if one of the other little-known Democratic candidates had done that, "somebody would know their name."

Those polls that show Jackson's strength also outline his negatives in the eyes of the voters.

The same ABC News-Washington Post poll said 42 percent of the public judges him unqualified to be president, while 44 percent said he is qualified. That tied for the highest negative rating in the survey — with only fellow preacher Pat Robertson on the Republican side drawing an identical negative response.

Jackson, in comments published Saturday in the combined editions of the The Atlanta Journal and The Atlanta Constitution, said in response to a reporter's query that his wife was pregnant with their first child when they married.

"We married when we got married. It's been very much public record for me and has been across the years," said Jackson, adding that his situation was different from that of Republican candidate Pat Robertson who was embroiled in controversy over his admitting that for the sake of his family he tried to hide the fact his child was born out of wedlock.

Jackson has his roots in the South, where he was born in Greenville, S.C. in 1941. He attended the University of Illinois on a football scholarship, but transferred to North Carolina A&T University. He graduated in 1964, after taking part in sit-ins to break segregation at lunch counters.

GULF

Twenty-six Iranians detained after U.S. forces captured the Iranian minelayer Iran Ajr on Sept. 21 were offered asylum. None accepted, and all went back to Iran voluntarily.

Gulf-based shipping sources said two of the Kuwaiti tankers registered in July under the U.S. flag were moored outside the Strait of Hormuz, preparing for the next north-bound convoy under U.S. navy escort to Kuwait.

There was no indication of when the ships would leave, said the sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The tankers were identified as the 81,283-ton Sea Isle City and the 46,723-ton Gas King.

The United States agreed to reflag and escort 11 Kuwaiti tankers to protect them from Iranian attack. Tehran considers Kuwait an ally of Iraq in the 7-year-old gulf war.

The next one-way convoy would be the 11th since the operations began in mid-July.

Iraq said it attacked three mainland Iranian oil facilities and a "large naval target," which usually means a tanker, off the Iranian coast. The Iraqis have been mounting almost daily air raids since Aug. 29 in a campaign to disrupt the oil industry that finances Tehran's war effort.

"By such strikes, the Iranian rulers will certainly realize that prolonging the war means nothing but further destruction and ruin for their regime," said a military communique quoted by Iraq's official Iraqi News Agency and monitored in Cyprus.

Shipping sources confirmed the air strike against a tanker and said the vessel was the 32,737-ton Mykonos, a Liberian-flagged chemical products carrier.

But later the same sources said that while they had picked up a distress signal from a vessel near Kharg to confirm the Iraqi raid, the target may not have been the tanker Mykonos.

The Greek Merchant Marine Ministry in Athens said there is a tanker named Mykonos, but it did not know its location. The ministry also said there is a refigerator ship named Mykonos and it was operating in the gulf.

According to the shipping sources, however, the refrigerator ship was recently intercepted by Iranian gunboats and forced to go to the Iranian port of Bandar Abbas for a search to determine if it carried any Iraqi-bound cargo.

Iraq said other targets hit Saturday were the Bed Boland oil production complex, the Ahvaz oilfields and a pumping station at Tanki Feni, all in Iran's southwestern Khuzestan province.

The jets set the installations ablaze, INA said.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency, also monitored in Cyprus, said more than 50 workers were killed or wounded when the Iraqi planes hit industrial targets in Khuzestan.

The Iraqi agency later reported that Iraqi jets bombed the Dehloran air base in western Iran, "scoring destructive hits and leaving their targets rocked by explosions."

Iraq said all of its aircraft returned safely Saturday.

Baghdad also said that a loud explosion that rocked the Iraqi capital before dawn Saturday was the result of an accident at an ammunition depot.

Residents in several parts of the city of 4 million reported being jolted awake by what sounded like a long-range missile exploding. But Iran, which in the past has announced its missile attacks, did not claim to have launched one.

The U.S. Navy meanwhile began efforts to salvage the wreckage of a Marine Corps UH-1 helicopter that crashed accidentally six days ago, killing one crewman.

A U.S. military source, who spoke on condition of not being identified, said Navy RH-53D Sea Stallion minesweepers based aboard the assault carrier Guadalcanal used sonar in an effort to pinpoint the wreckage.

Once found, the wreckage in the central gulf was to be raised from a depth of about 75 feet.

The helicopter, also based aboard the 18,000-ton carrier, crashed during night operations off the Navy command ship La Salle. The cause was not known, but officials said no hostile action was involved.

BORK

Reagan told of how the 60-year-old Bork had been there "to tell me, after several days of soul-searching, about a decision he had made."

Meanwhile, U.S. News & World Report said in its latest edition that Bork was writing a withdrawal statement last Thursday when he got a call from Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., a Bork supporter on the Senate Judiciary Committee. Simpson urged Bork to continue fighting for the confirmation, telling the judge, "We'll back you up...You deserve that," U.S. News reported.

Following that, Bork's family made a separate plea to Bork not to withdraw, the magazine reported.

Reagan, in his radio address, charged that in the contentious debate that has accompanied the Bork nomination in July and the subsequent hearings, "many here in Washington closed their eyes to the wrong being done to the judicial process."

"Some voices were raised to withdraw this nomination," he said. "This, I refused to do."

But Reagan also said he knew that "while I refused to withdraw his name, I understood why Judge Bork might choose to do so."

The president said "I felt that in many ways he had already won an important victory" by giving Americans "a massive lesson" in the importance of judicial restraint and because of the ordeal he had already experienced.

The Senate Judiciary Committee voted 9-5 last week against recommending Bork favorably to the full Senate, and an Associated Press survey of committed senators shows that 53 of them have gone on record as planning to vote against the nomination when it comes to the floor. Debate on the nomination will likely begin during the week of Oct. 19.

"My fellow Americans, Andrew Jackson said once that one man with courage makes a majority," Reagan said.

"Obviously Bob Bork has that courage," he said. "Now, let's you and I give him our support. I agree with Judge Bork. There are no illusions."

But Reagan also said that "our judges should be faithful to the written Constitution, the bedrock of our liberties. Those selected for the Supreme Court must be aware of all points of view and their decisions based on government by the people."

This statement apparently reflected Reagan's belief that his overwhelming re-election victory in 1984 gave him a mandate from the American people that contained, among other things, a right to place a candidate of his choice on the Supreme Court.

But it seemed to collide with a point Bork, a judge on the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, had made in his statement of Friday, when he said that federal judges are not appointed to decide cases according to the latest opinion polls.

Mitchell said "the debate over this nomination has been difficult and divisive. There has been exaggeration and invective on both sides. For Judge Bork and his family, for all of us, it is a sad time.

"Those who support him are understandably disappointed," he said. "Some blame the special interests.

"But with all due respect to those on both sides, Judge Bork will not be confirmed for one simple and profound reason. The American people agree with the Supreme Court. They don't agree with Judge Bork," Mitchell said.

WEDDING

"It's wild. It's ususual. It's David," his mother added.

The Rev. Jim Teeter of Asbury United Methodist Church where the two were married the first time, said he didn't think this wedding was as unusual as some formal ones he'd seen with eight or more bridesmaids.

"I think it's great to take advantage of a beautiful day. I just hope the wind doesn't take off while I'm up there," Teeter said.

The wedding was 180 degrees different from their first marriage — performed terra firma — in 1979, Mrs. Trolinder said.

"The first time he gave me the most beautiful wedding...with a long, white gown and tuxedos. This time, we did it his way," she said.

"We realized getting divorced was a mistake," her husband added.

Had it rained Saturday, Mrs. Trolinder said she informed her ex-but-soon-to-be-new husband they would move the ceremony inside.

"I told him he wasn't gonna get out of this because of the weather," Mrs. Trolinder said.

The happy couple decided for this wedding that they would dress more casually.

Therefore, they and their two children, best man, "Little Dave," 12, and maid of honor, Crystal, 8, were decked out in casual shirts, blue jeans and tennis shoes or boots.

To complement their denim duds, the happy couple wore matching rattlesnake head and arm bands, made by Trolinder in his spare time.

Trolinder donned reflector sunglasses for the occasion while the fabric of Mrs. Trolinder's shirt resembled rattlesnake skin.

She also wore a belt replete with a rattlesnake head buckle and a black and beige lace garter.

"Basically, we're down to earth people. We tried to do it once on earth, but this time we're going to do it closer to Him," she said pointing upward.

After the wedding was over, Mrs. Trolinder said she felt "very married" again, and had indeed, "gotten a lift" from the ceremony.

"You always hear about people getting high on drugs or high on booze. Get high on your marriage and it has to work," she exclaimed.

"Of course every couple about to be married is up in the air," Teeter said. "But there is no sanctuary more beautiful than the one God created to hold a wedding in."

LIGHTS

To catch a string of green lights drivers must be traveling toward downtown between 7 a.m. and 9 a.m. and 12:20 p.m. and 1:30 p.m. on A Street, Big Spring Street, Missouri Avenue, Wall Avenue, Texas Avenue and Andrews Highway.

Drivers can also speed out of downtown on most of these same streets from 4:30 p.m. to 6 p.m. and 11:20 p.m. to 12:20 p.m.

Lights during those times are synchronized to change on a 70-second cycle.

During the rest of the day, the street signals are synchronized to change over longer periods of time, McGary said.

Problems occur during the weekend when, the lights continue on the same patterns set for Monday through Friday commuter traffic, because the system will not fit any additional sequences, McGary said.

Also, when water seeps into signal control boxes during heavy rain the light progression is frequently interrupted, causing one or several lights not to change, he said.

Two modern light synchronization systems analyzed by the city Street Commission's traffic subcommittee would allow the traffic controllers to set up an indefinite number of time sequences.

Sequences now are limited to three — inbound downtown traffic, outbound downtown traffic and the remaining period of time, McGary explained.

With the new systems, traffic engineers could add sequences from 6 p.m. to 10 p.m. and from midnight on to carry lighter traffic faster, McGary said.

In addition, either of the two updated systems could expand synchronization outside the downtown area to other heavily traveled streets such as Midkiff Road and Wadley Avenue, McGary said.

The $3 million system that the Public Works Department examined consists of a computer centered at City Hall that controls all lights. The system would allow employees to monitor all operations from one location.

The $1 million system requires any adjustments be made at the signal locations, and therefore would incur additional on-going expenses in the form of man-hours.

While either new system would give the traffic engineer more options, they wouldn't be able to time downtown lights both ways, McGary said.

He explained that the downtown lights are too close together — usually about eight signals per every half mile — to time lights in both directions.

For a system to work both ways, lights must be spaced at least a half mile apart while drivers travel at 40 mph, he said.

While the money is not available to install a new system now, Thomas is asking the Street Commission's traffic committee to "move us in the direction, so we can be prepared when the economy improves."

However, if officials opt to present a bond issue to voters — which might be proposed to raise money to pave Wadley in concrete — an option for an updated light synchronization program could be tacked on, Thomas said.

The City Council is asking Public Works to estimate the cost of paving Wadley in concrete after a request came from Council Member Bill Williams.

Williams would like to see at least the middle lane of the major east-west street composed of concrete because the harder surface holds up better than asphalt against drainage water.

While the city has enough remaining bond money to reconstruct Wadley in asphalt, a bond issue would be necessary for concrete paving, Thomas said.

Israeli planes bomb Palestinian bases

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli jets divebombed Palestinian guerrilla bases near the Syrian border Saturday, and in the south, other Palestinians occupied three villages 300 yards from Israeli-backed militia positions, police said.

Police also said that a car bomb explosion killed three people and wounded two Saturday in the Syrian-policed, northern port of Tripoli.

A police spokesman, commenting on condition of anonymity, said four Israeli jets bombed positions in Yanta occupied by guerrillas of Col. Saeed Moussa's Fatah-Uprising faction and George Habash's Marxist Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine.

The raid occurred at noon about 2½ miles from the Syrian border, with one guerrilla slightly wounded by shrapnel, police reported.

The raid was the Israel's 23rd this year against targets in Lebanon.

In Jerusalem, the Israeli army said the warplanes struck "terror bases" in the Bekaa. A statement said the targets were "outside the population centers."

The guerrillas fired Soviet-made anti-aircraft guns, but no jet appeared to have been hit.

Syrian soldiers sealed off the area on the western edge of Yanta and prevented reporters from inspecting damage. Thick columns of smoke billowed from a hill near the town after the air strike.

By police count, 105 people have been killed and 250 wounded in Israeli air raids in Lebanon this year.

The deadliest raid was Sept.25, when 49 people were killed and 60 wounded in the Palestinian refugee camp of Ein el-Hilweh near Sidon.

Moussa and Habash broke with Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization in 1983 and set up headquarters for their splinter groups in Damascus, Syria's capital.

Program to cure Polish economy out

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Prime Minister Zbigniew Messner unveiled a radical economic reform program Saturday that stresses lifting barriers to initiative, slashing bureaucratic power and letting market forces influence prices and wages.

The program amounts to a rejection of many of the economic mechanisms built up over the 42-year history of the Polish communist state, and is line with the restructuring taking place in the Soviet Union under Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Messner said the reforms also should persuade Western lenders to quickly restore trade credits to Poland. Credits dried up after the 1981 martial law crackdown on the Solidarity independent trade union movement.

In an unprecedented move, the Parliament called for a nationwide referendum Nov. 29 to let the public itself determine the "degree and rate" of the reform.

Addressing the Sejm, or parliament, as Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski looked on, Messner said the reform package will spur socialist enterprise on the principle that "everything which is not prohibited is permitted."

He complained of a lack of vitality in Poland's economy, saying, "In extreme cases, the people pretend to be working and the enterprise pretends to pay them."

He said one goal of the reform is to activate the "immense latent capacity" of the Polish people.

The Sejm called a session Oct.23-24, when it are expected to ratify the package. Messner said the reforms would be implemented in 1988-90.

The reform would make it much easier for individuals or enterprises to start new businesses or engage in foreign trade. It would reduce the number of government ministries, give plant managers greater decision-making powers and end centralized control of many enterprises.

Tax and subsidy policies would change so the efficient enterprises would no longer wind up supporting inefficient ones, Messner said. And "maximizing profit will pay off," in terms of higher wages for managers and workers of prospering enterprises.

The plan contains echoes of Western capitalism, including a stock market for trading shares among enterprises and a bond market that would be open to individuals.

Messner said, "Not the form is essential, but whether it all serves the socialist economy."

Foreign journalists banned from Tibet

CHENGDU, China (AP) — Chinese officials barred foreign reporters from entering Tibet Saturday, and the official media quoted a police official as saying foreign tourists were among the leading rioters in recent pro-independence demonstrations.

Saturday's order follows the expulsion of 14 Western journalists who covered the protests in Lhasa, the Tibetan capital, in which at least 16 people died.

Xinhua News Agency reported that a local police officer said at least 50 foreign tourists were seen among rioters attacking a police station Oct. 1, throwing stones at police and inciting violence among the protesters.

The unidentified officer said participation in the riots by the tourists is evidence of their ulterior motives, Xinhua said.

The protests began Sept. 27 with a march by about two dozen Buddhist monks. On Oct. 1, at least 2,000 people led by monks clashed with police and at least 14 people were killed.

Monks in Lhasa said two colleagues died after being beaten by police in a third riot last Tuesday in which about 100 monks marched.

The Xinhua report, monitored in Tokyo, said the riots were instigated by Tibet's exiled spiritual leader, the Dalai Lama, and that many of the rioters were former prisoners.

It quoted a deputy secretary of the Tibet Autonomous Regional Committee, Raidi, as saying the government would not hesitate to severely punish those carrying out separatist activities.

China annexed predominantly Buddhist Tibet in 1950 and governs it as an autonomous region. In 1959, the Dalai Lama fled to India following a failed uprising by his supporters.

Foreign travelers arriving Saturday in Chengdu, Sichuan province, from Lhasa said police continued to man rooftops and occupy Buddhist monasteries Friday in the Tibetan capital, which has been rocked by the demonstrations.

A Tibetan Affairs official in Chengdu said foreign reporters were barred and said they were prone to biased and untrue accounts.

He said foreign tour groups, a lucrative source of income for Tibet, will continue. But he said travel by individual tourists will be difficult.

The official refused comment on earlier reports that all individual travelers were given a week to leave Tibet.

Opposition paper part of Nicaraguan life again

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Hampered by technical problems but as bold and brassy as ever, the newspaper La Prensa is once again providing a forum for the opposition to the leftist Sandinista government of Nicaragua.

Nearly two weeks after it resumed publication following a 15-month, government-ordered suspension, La Prensa's headlines and stories are free of the government censorship to which the paper was subjected for nearly four years before the shutdown.

"Sandinista Pressure in All Barrios," "National Dialogue in Danger," "Commission Asks No More State of Emergency," are some La Prensa headlines that appeared since the newspaper hit the streets Oct. 1.

La Prensa's editorials have been critical of the Sandinista government. The paper advocated direct negotiations with the U.S.-supported Contra rebels in an effort to reach a peaceful solution to the civil war, which began in 1982. The Sandinistas have often stated they will never deal with the Contras directly.

The paper also has called for total amnesty as part of the "reconciliation proccess."

In an emotional editorial Thursday, publisher Violeta Chamorro wrote: "If to achieve reconciliation and peace among Nicaraguans I'd have to pay the price of seeing the hired killers of my beloved husband go free, then I am ready to pay it."

Her husband, Pedro Joaquin Chamorro, was a strong critic of the dictatorship of Anastasio Somoza Debayle. Chamorro was killed in 1978, reportedly by people hired by Somoza associates.

Another La Prensa editorial Thursday attacked the government for refusing to negotiate with the top leaders of the Contras, whom the Sandinistas often characterize as "Somocistas" — followers of Somoza.

"Only nine years ago the Sandinista Front through Sergio Ramirez (now vice president) had no objection to meeting and discussing with Somoza. ...What reason is there now not to talk with former members of the revolutionary government that now make up the directorate of the resistance (Contras)?" the editorial asked.

Some Contra leaders were members of the first revolutionary junta established by the Sandinistas following overthrow of the Somoza dictatorship in July 1979.

The newspaper is a sharp contrast to the two pro-government newspapers, Barricada and El Nuevo Diario, whose editorials have attacked the United States and President Reagan, and now La Prensa.

La Prensa was closed under state of emergency regulations, after the government claimed it was supporting the U.S. government's anti-Sandinista policies. The state of emergency remains in effect.

Under the censorship law, the paper had to submit all its articles to a government censor for approval before publication. The censor deleted all criticism of the government, any topics considered sensitive and other material judged inappropriate.

"Our condition for reopening was 'no censorship,'" Mrs. Chamorro said. "We will never submit to censorship again."

The newspaper reopened in a move the government claimed was part of its effort to comply with a regional peace agreement. The treaty was signed Aug. 7 by the five presidents of the Central American nations — Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua.

Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega met with Mrs. Chamorro to arrange the reopening of La Prensa after Costa Rica's foreign minister, Rodrigo Madrigal Nieto, said the Sandinistas needed to show they were willing to comply with the peace plan.

Opposition head to run for president

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Opposition leader Kim Young-sam said Saturday he will run for president and demanded that party rival Kim Dae-jung concede and bow out, all but ending hopes that the opposition would run a single candidate against the government.

"I have a firm conviction that an absolute majority of people support me," Kim Young-sam, president of the main opposition Reunification Democratic Party, said in a hurriedly arranged announcement.

Kim Dae-jung expressed surprise Saturday at the suddenness of his rival's announcement. He said Friday he was "under obligation to the people to run for president."

Political observers say the two Kims are likely to split the opposition vote and enhance the chances of candidate Roh Tae-woo of the governing Democratic Justice Party.

The two Kims are long-time rivals who temporarily patched up past differences to oppose the authoritarian government of President Chun Doo-hwan.

Kim Young-sam said his election platform would call for full democracy, greater benefits for the poor, aid for workers and farmers, sustained economic growth and enhanced national security.

He acknowledged that a failed compromise over a single opposition candidate had created fear that the opposition would be defeated in elections set before Dec. 20.

"I am sorry that I failed to agree on the single candidacy, thereby disappointing people and raising concern about the prospect of democratic development," he said.

He charged that Kim Dae-jung violated their agreement to select a single candidate by refusing to compromise, but said he would keep trying to persuade his rival to drop out of the race.

WORLD in brief

Three winemakers die in huge tank of grape juice

MESSINA, Sicily (AP) — Two men and a woman died after falling into a huge tank of fermenting grape juice, the ANSA news agency reported Saturday.

Apparently made dizzy by fumes given off by the fermenting wine must, Giovanni Anastasi, 59, fell into the 265-gallon tank on Friday, ANSA said. His partner, Antonio Surdi, 73, tried to rescue him and fell in himself. Surdi's daughter, Nunzia, 34, also tumbled in.

The woman was pulled out of the vat alive, but died on the way to a local hospital.

The three were pouring the must from a small container to the larger one as part of the winemaking process when the accident occurred in the village of Torregrotta, just outside Messina on Sicily's northeast corner, ANSA said.

AIDS patients escape

MOSCOW (AP) — Authorities are searching for two African students who ran away from a Moscow hospital where they were being treated for AIDS, a newspaper said Saturday.

The newspaper Moskovsky Komsomolets, a publication of the capital's Young Communist League, said the two Africans left the hospital Oct. 1, and that "measures are being taken for their apprehension."

It did not identify the students nor say from which countries they came.

In recent months, the Soviet Union acknowledged it has a problem with AIDS —acquired immune deficiency syndrome — but said the problem is not as severe as in Africa or many Western countries.

Terrorist protection up

RANGOON, Burma (AP) — Reports that an anti-American terrorist group has entered the Burmese capital spurred increased police protection of the U.S. Embassy and warnings for American diplomats to stay indoors after 6 p.m., diplomatic sources said Saturday.

The American-sponsored International School for children of foreign diplomats was closed Friday and it was not known if it would reopen this week.

No further details were available on the terrorist group or when it reportedly arrived in Burma.

The U.S. Embassy is located on a major street in downtown Rangoon and does not have its own compound. U.S. diplomats are known to be concerned about the security of the building and are planning a move to a suburban location.

Rains flooding Spain

TARRAGONA, Spain (AP) — Torrential rain accompanied by high winds caused flooding in towns along Spain's northeastern coast Saturday, forcing closure of some roads and local rail lines and knocking out electrical power to hundreds of houses, Civil Defense officials said.

The government of the northeastern region of Catalonia said two people were killed and three seriously injured when their vehicle turned over in a rural area of Lerida province due to a landslide caused by heavy rain.

White House officials admit they 'mishandled' Bork nomination

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — White House officials acknowledge they underestimated the opposition, misread the votes and botched the sales campaign to get Robert H. Bork a seat on the Supreme Court.

"I think that we mishandled it," a senior White House official said. "It was an ideological battle and we tried to counter it by talking about resumes."

"The accepted wisdom here was that we had 55 to 57 votes and the only question was whether we could shut off a filibuster," said the official, who insisted on anonymity.

Bork announced Friday that he had decided to see things through to the end, even though he had no illusions about the ultimate outcome.

In his radio address on Saturday, President Reagan said he shared Bork's feeling that there should be "no illusions" about his prospects for confirmation.

"My fellow Americans, Andrew Jackson said once that one man with courage makes a majority," Reagan said. "Obviously Bob Bork has that courage. Now, let's you and I give him our support. I agree with Judge Bork. There are no illusions."

The official said the White House assumed — incorrectly — that Southern Democrats would stand with Bork because of his strongly conservative credentials.

"It was real late in the game before we realized that civil rights groups threatened death to anyone who voted for Bork," he said.

The episode threatens another defeat in a string of losses for Reagan this year, demonstrating anew his diminishing political clout.

It also was a slap in the face for chief of staff Howard Baker, the former Senate GOP leader who came to the White House this year with a reputation as a legislative wizard who could move Reagan's agenda on Capitol Hill.

In the Supreme Court fight, Bork's liberal critics argued he was a right-wing ideologue who would try to reverse a woman's right to an abortion and would pose a threat to free speech, privacy and gains against sex discrimination.

To the dismay of conservatives who wanted Bork to take a hard line position, the White House chose to portray him as a brilliant scholar who would stand in the mainstream of legal thinking and champion judicial restraint.

In a speech Wednesday night, Baker said the White House knew Bork's nomination would be controversial but was caught off guard by the intensity of the advertising campaign waged by opponents.

There was a widespread feeling in the White House and on Capitol Hill that it had been a mistake to announce Bork's nomination so early, on July 1, because it gave the opposition most of the summer to mobilize.

While Reagan was spending 25 days on vacation in California, Bork's critics went to work.

"The powers that be never caught on to how much a political fight we were in and the other side's political fervor was underestimated," complained one top White House official.

Similarly, there were questions about how much of a fight Reagan put up for Bork, even though he spoke out in numerous speeches for his nominee.

For instance, Sen. John Breaux, D-La., said that when he was trying to make up his mind about Bork, he never got a call from Reagan to ask his support. Breaux was not the only senator ignored by the president.

Reagan, during an interview with Cable News Network, was asked whether anyone at the White House, himself included, had mishandled the attempt to build support for Bork.

"I don't think anyone did," he replied.

Reagan also responded somewhat caustically to statements by Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, who said the president should not have followed his decision to nominate Bork with the long vacation at his mountaintop ranch in California.

"I think Sen. Grassley ought to be informed that we have a telephone at the ranch, and Congress wasn't in town either" during that period, Reagan said.

Baker was no more able to help Reagan with Bork than he was in trying to avert defeat in a veto battle with Congress on an $88 billion highway construction measure.

Similarly, Reagan had to pull back a $1.4 billion arms deal for Saudi Arabia because of congressional opposition during Baker's watch, and also was forced to sign a balanced-budget law that could force him to choose between a tax increase or further reductions in spending.

Baker was blamed by some hardliner conservatives for Bork's failure.

Howard Phillips, head of the Conservative Caucus, said Baker had raised "the yellow banner of consensus, compromise and conciliation" over the White House and that the "time has come for him to resign or be fired."

However, Reagan appeared to hold Baker blameless and rejected conservatives' complaints.

"I don't know any conservatives who say that (that Baker was to blame). I think it's very apparent whose fault it is," he said.

NATION in brief

Jet blast knocks down wall, panicks travelers

CHICAGO (AP) — A blast of exhaust from a DC-9 shot into a Midway Airport terminal, knocking down a temporary wooden wall, bowling over two travelers and panicking others.

No one was reported injured in the mishap Friday, but frightened travelers and airport visitors ran screaming through the terminal, witnesses said. The blast also shattered the windows of a storage room that was separated from the passenger area by the temporary wall.

Airport officials said one man was trapped briefly under the collapsed wall and another man who had been using a telephone attached to the wall was pushed across a corridor.

Neal Szczender, superintendent of passenger services for Midway Airlines, said the jet blast came from Midway Flight 341, which was headed to Minneapolis. He said the jetliner was making a 180-degree turn before heading to the runway when the mishap occurred.

Szczender said planes make the same turn five or six times a day at all of the airport's gates, and he could not explain why one aircraft's jet blast would suddenly do so much damage.

The accident will be investigated by the National Transportation Safety Board, said Mort Edelstein, a Federal Aviation Administration spokesman.

A Midway employee ran over after the accident and lifted the collapsed wall off one man, who declined medical examination.

Landon home from hospital

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — Former Gov. Alf Landon was released Saturday from a hospital where he had spent 12 days recuperating from a mild case of bronchitis and was "glad to be home," his daughter said.

Landon, who turned 100 on Sept. 9, was in good condition following his release Saturday afternoon from Stormont-Vail Regional Medical Center in Topeka, said Landon's daughter, U.S. Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan.

"He's really not in pain," Kassebaum said in a telephone interview from the Landon home. "He's restless, but that's not unexpected," after being confined to a hospital since Sept. 28.

Landon, who also had complained of pain from a gall stone and arthritis, was driven home from the hospital in an ambulance, Kassebaum said.

Charter boat catches fire

LITTLE RIVER, S.C. (AP) — A charter fishing boat caught fire Saturday and sank, forcing the 61 people aboard to jump into the chilly Atlantic, where they were rescued by other fishing boats.

Everyone on board was safe following the fire and rescue, said Jim Stevens, captain of the 70-foot Captain Jim. Two women who suffered minor injuries were taken to a local hospital, he said.

The fishing boat was five miles southeast of the Little River Inlet near the North Carolina-South Carolina border when the fire was reported about 9 a.m., said Petty Officer Gary Starks of the Miami, Fla., Coast Guard office.

An electrical short in the engine room sparked the fire, which quickly spread, Stevens said.

New AIDS chairman vows to get panel back on track

HOT SPRINGS, Va. (AP) — The new chairman of the president's commission on AIDS pledged on Saturday to get the dissension-wracked panel back on track and indicated that he would be filling a key staff post early next week.

Retired Navy Adm. James Watkins, in his first public comments since taking over as chairman, sought to allay fears that commission turmoil had permanently injured the 13-member panel President Reagan appointed last June to advise the government on how best to protect the public from the deadly disease.

Watkins, 60, the former chief of naval operations, took over as head of the commission after its two top officials quit abruptly on Wednesday amid allegations of infighting and deep ideological differences among panel members.

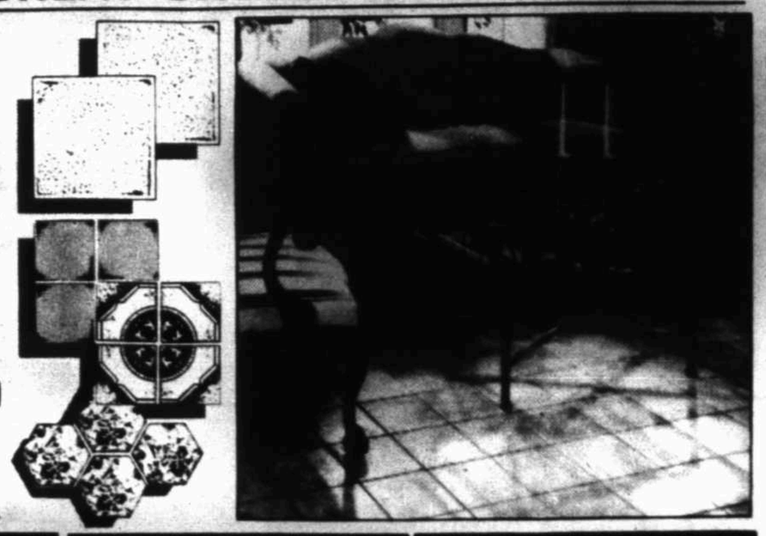

Speaking to reporters after addressing a business conference on AIDS, Watkins reached out to the homosexual community, which in the past has been critical of the approach taken by the commission.

"We have in Washington today one of the largest gay rights activist demonstrations that we have had. We are sensitive to them as human beings and to their issues," he said.

Watkins said that the commission intended to deal with the "concerns and apprehensions" of homosexuals and other groups affected by AIDS.

"We haven't done the job to date I am sorry to say, but I feel comfortable and the other members of the commission feel comfortable that I can take it and mold them together and bring all of our prima donnas, including me, into a nice, neat, unified package," Watkins said.

1787 Constitution Daybook

Associated Press

Thursday, Oct. 11, 1787

PHILADELPHIA TODAY

Joseph Stiles informed Benjamin Franklin and the Supreme Executive Council that the state arsenal was completely full of gunpowder. That was the good news. The bad news was that Pennsylvania had just received a shipment of 500 casks of powder from Holland. Stiles wondered what he should do with the surplus supply.

John Nicholson, comptroller for Pennsylvania, recommended that the state repair the wharves on Mud and State Islands. In his opinion, Pennsylvania had the choice of fixing the docks now at minimal cost or replacing them later at a substantial expense.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

From Havre de Grace in France, Andre Limozin wrote Thomas Jefferson that a number of British sea captains were entering the port under the United States flag and declaring that their ships were American. Thus they would pay reduced duties on exports and imports. Limozin offered to watch for these frauds and report them to French and American officials.

Meanwhile, Congress voted to accept a loan from Holland that was negotiated by John Adams. Although this money was inadequate to establish consulates in foreign ports, it was a much needed infusion to help the government pay its bills.

RATIFICATION TODAY

Finally, after nearly a month, the citizens of Georgia were informed today that William Pierce, one of their Convention delegates, had brought a copy of the new Constitution on board the sloop Friendship. Obviously, Georgia had not yet had a chance to read the document.

In Connecticut, where the Constitution had already been widely circulated and read by many, an article appeared today in the New Haven Gazette. The anonymous author placed the new form of government within the context of the continuing American Revolution. "Our Revolution is yet but half completed," he wrote. "We have escaped the units which threatened us from a foreign quarter, but we have not attained the positive blessings which we promised ourselves from the establishment of a free and independent empire." He then implied that the new Constitution might offer one step in further fulfilling the Revolution.

DELEGATES TODAY

At Mount Vernon this evening, Gen. Charles Cotesworth Pinckney and his wife stopped to eat dinner and to spend the night with George and Martha Washington. The Pinckneys were returning to South Carolina from Philadelphia by an overland route.

Today the Marquis de Lafayette wrote Alexander Hamilton to inform him that while the delegates were meeting in Philadelphia to reform the government of the United States, France was also going through a series of changes. The French Assembly of Notables had been called into session (without significant actions) and provincial assemblies throughout France were organizing. Yet in the midst of these activities he was afraid that France would be drawn into a war.

Lafayette concluded by introducing the Count de Moustier, who would be the new minister to the United States, the count's sister-in-law, the Countess de Brehan, and a young assistant to the count, Victor Marie du Pont.

LOOKING BACK

The du Ponts in America

Victor Marie du Pont was the first member of this illustrious family to come to America. He would stay in the United States with the French legation for several years and then return to France. Twelve years later, his father, mother, and brothers and sisters would return to America and become one of the most prominent families in American history.

Victor's youngest brother, Eleuthere Irenee du Pont, had worked in the royal powderworks in France. On an expedition with a friend in America, Irenee discovered that American gunpowder was expensive and very poor quality. He decided that a small, well-run powderworks in the United States could be profitable and a major contribution to the nation's manufacturing economy. Irenee returned to France to purchase equipment and study the recent innovations in powder manufacturing. With the necessary manufacturing materials and much of the financing provided by his father, he purchased land from Jacob Broom (a former delegate to the Constitutional Convention) on the Brandywine River in Delaware and started his business. The factory began producing powder in 1804, and in its first seven years of operation the du Pont family earned more than $40,000 in profits. The War of 1812 assured the success of the company as the major government supplier of gunpowder. And gradually the family expanded its clientele to include many South American countries and the American Fur Co.

Du Pont has continued to grow and expand in its almost 200-year history. As of 1985 it was one of the 10 largest manufacturing corporations in the United States with well over 150,000 employees around the world. Several of the du Pont family members have been presidents of E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., leaders of other corporations such as General Motors, and prominent political figures.

HOW THEY VOTED

Congressional Quarterly

WASHINGTON — Votes of area members of Congress on key issues during the week ending Oct. 9, 1987.

KEY HOUSE VOTES

HOUSE APPROVES FARM CREDIT BAILOUT. By a 365-49 vote, the House Oct. 6 passed a bill to reorganize and rescue the ailing Farm Credit System (FCS), the nation's largest farm lender. The bill appropriates $2.5 billion for fiscal 1988 and authorizes further funding that could bring the total to $5.4 billion over the next five years. The FCS is a nationwide cooperative system of 37 banks and nearly 400 local lending associations that was first set up in 1916 to provide credit and other services to farmers and ranchers. For the past few years, Congress has agonized over farm credit relief in response to a steep decline in farm values and FCS operating losses of nearly $5 billion since 1985. But relatively rosy financial reports on FCS last summer, coupled with political haggling in the House, quelled the sense of urgency, and prolonged House attempts to reach a compromise on the bill.

The measure provides for a complete restructuring of the FCS within one year, consolidating its 37 district banks into no more than seven banks. A crucial part of the legislation was a proposal to create a secondary market for farm loans through a new Federal Agricultural Mortgage Corporation — dubbed "Farmer Mac" after similar institutions for home mortgage loans — which would serve as a trading house for farm mortgages. The bill also establishes a new government corporation, the Farm Credit System Temporary Assistance Corporation, to make appropriated funds available for ailing FCS institutions, and establishes "borrower rights" protection for farmers.

A Senate Agriculture subcommittee is considering a similar measure, but the bill is not expected to come to the floor for several weeks. The Reagan administration has indicated a possible veto of the House bill, based on objections to secondary market and borrower rights provisions.

The bill's proponents maintained that creation of the new secondary market for farm loans would help to reduce interest rates and would make commercial lenders more competitive with FCS lenders. They praised the bill for bringing overdue credit relief to financially-strapped farmers and for providing increased local control of lender institutions.

"Suddenly we have a 'for sale' sign over Midwestern agriculture. If we do not come up with...ways of bolstering land prices, and at the same time allowing American farmers to buy American land, we are going to be in a real pickle in this country," said Jim Leach, R-Iowa.

Opponents of the measure countered that creation of a secondary market for farm loans would send the system's best borrowers to private lenders, and complained that the bill caters to private bankers at the expense of taxpayers.

"It is interesting that many of our colleagues have paused in our insistence on balanced budget amendments, Gramm-Rudman and other ways to cut spending to pour billions and billions more into the agricultural system," said Barney Frank, D-Mass.

Voting for the farm credit bill: Smith (R), Combest (R), Stenholm (D), Boulter (R).

Voting against: Gonzalez (D).

HOUSE SETTLES TURF FIGHT OVER AIRLINE ADS. The House Oct. 7 ended an in-House dispute over which government agency should have jurisdiction over airline advertising. Members voted 246-171 to strike a provision from the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) reauthorization bill that would have shifted authority for regulating airline advertising from the Department of Transportation (DOT) to the FTC.

The provision, which also would have required the FTC to write new rules to limit deceptive advertising practices by airlines, was deleted from a bill to authorize $69.8 million for FTC activities in fiscal 1988 and slightly higher amounts in the following two fiscal years. The reauthorization measure easily won House approval and now must be reconciled with a three-year reauthorization bill passed by the Senate.

Some members called the advertising provision in the reauthorization bill, added by the Energy and Commerce Committee, a power play by the committee because it would have enabled Energy and Commerce to assume jurisdiction over an area now overseen by the House Public Works Committee.

Members supporting the amendment to delete the oversight change from the reauthorization bill argued that it made little sense to scatter airline regulatory authority among separate agencies. They also noted that in the past, members have often criticized the FTC for lax enforcement of advertising rules. "In view of FTC's failure to carry out its existing responsibilities, there is no reason to think that FTC would do a better job with airline advertising," said Norman Y. Mineta, D-Calif.

Critics of the amendment contended that DOT had failed to protect consumers from misleading airline ads and that the FTC would do a better job because it is FTC's business to regulate advertising. "Now that the airlines have undergone a major deregulation...I believe that the airline industry should come under the scrutiny of the federal agency that was created in order to monitor unfair competitive activities and deceptive advertising practices," said Jim Slattery, D-Kan.

"The FTC is the federal agency with expertise in regulating advertising."

Voting to strike the airline ad provision: Smith (R), Combest (R), Gonzalez (D), Stenholm (D), Boulter (R).

Voting against: None.

Ozark Mountain crime baffles residents, law

MARSHFIELD, Mo. (AP) — A series of bloody crimes in the Ozark Mountains of southwestern Missouri has baffled residents, but some law enforcement officers speculate that the very nature of the rugged area might be a factor.

Since February, the picturesque rolling hills between Rolla and Springfield have been the scene of a state trooper's assassination, the killing of a church caretaker and an assault by two ex-convicts on an elderly couple.

There also were three murders by a Texan and a shooting spree that killed seven members of a family.

Over the past few years, the area has seen several incidents involving militant white supremacist groups, including the case of reputed neo-Nazi David Tate, convicted of killing one state trooper and wounding another.

Criminal experts say the area's rough terrain and residents' trusting and independent nature may be contributing factors to the killings.

"People are laid back. They're not in a hurry. They're just good, fine country folk. Sometimes that attracts undesirable elements," said state Highway Patrol Lt. Ernest McCutchen, who spent 18 years in the Springfield troop.

"It's a hard area to make a living," McCutchen said. "People tend to be hard working and self-sufficient. They are kind of clannish and it's kind of like, 'You do your thing and I'll do mine.' It's the kind of place you can lose yourself in if you want."

In April, fugitive John David Brown, charged with killing a church caretaker, gave lawmen fits by hiding out in the forested countryside near Rolla.

"It's kind of like the Old West — apparently some of these guys are familiar with every ravine and every hiding place," said Mike Carlie, a criminologist at Southwest Missouri State University in Springfield.

"I don't think this is a haven for criminals, but I think they feel comfortable here," said Rolla Police Chief Stan Spadoni.

Carlie and others note that no common thread links the crimes. They don't think there's cause for alarm over what they consider a temporary surge.

FCC to review ad policy for children's TV

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Communications Commission is preparing to review its hands-off policy for children's television, agency sources say, and one commissioner says it's time to consider reimposing advertising limits.

The scope of the inquiry is unclear, but FCC sources said the agency will at least look at a 1984 decision to abandon guidelines limiting commercials in children's programs and consider whether toy makers should be required to identify themselves as sponsors of shows they produce based on their products.

One FCC source, who demanded anonymity, said last week the commission will probably open an inquiry "that will look broadly at these issues" to satisfy two recent court rulings ordering the FCC to review its policies.

Other sources, who also spoke on condition of anonymity, said the inquiry also may look at several petitions filed by the Cambridge, Mass.-based Action for Children's Television asking the FCC to reimpose ad limits and ban toy-based cartoons.

Commissioner James H. Quello said he disagrees with the group's contention that shows based on toys are essentially half-hour commercials, "but we should at least consider some limitations on commercials for children."

Commissioner Patricia Diaz Dennis said she had not yet reviewed the issues and was approaching the subject "with an open mind." Commissioner Mimi Dawson, who was nominated last week to become deputy transportation secretary but will remain on the commission pending Senate confirmation, told The Wall Street Journal last week, "It's appropriate to take a new look" at the issue.

FCC Chairman Dennis R. Patrick's chief of staff, Peter Pitsch, said Patrick believes generally that "market forces would better dictate (television) content, but there can be a market failure" that would require the government to step in.

Peggy Charren, president of Action for Children's Television, said she was encouraged that even a narrow review of children's-TV policies might lead to reimposition of at least some advertising guidelines.

LOST DOGS... COME HOME TO HOMECOMING '87

On October 16, 1987, at 8:00 p.m., Midland High will host the Abilene Eagles at Memorial Stadium for the 1987 Homecoming Game. Although we are in our formative years, the Midland High Ex-Students' Association Committee would like to invite all alumni and their friends and families to sit together in a reserved section at the game. Seating will be arranged, so that ex-students will sit by decades - with the 1920-29 graduates getting front-row seat. This will give everyone a chance to once again sit with their classmates and cheer the Bulldogs to victory.

Ex-Students who are season ticket holders will be able to exchange their tickets for tickets in the alumni section on Monday, October 12, and Tuesday, October 13, at the box office at the stadium. From Wednesday, October 14, through Friday, October 16, reserved seat tickets will go on sale to those who do not have tickets. The tickets will be $5.00 each. Section E on the west side of the stadium has been reserved for the Ex-Students' Association.

On Thursday, October 15, the Homecoming Parade will begin its route to MHS at 7:00 p.m. The parade will travel from Bowie Elementary south to Illinois, then west in front of Midland High to "D" Street. There will be ex-students in the parade for the very first time. Come out and see your old classmates and join in the festivities. After the parade, there will be a bonfire in the parking lot by the gymnasium. The Youth Center will also be open for a "get together" for those ex-students who wish to watch the parade's end and have refreshments after the parade.

State predicted to be taxed soon

STATE

FORT WORTH (AP) — Texans won't be able to escape paying a state income tax for more than a few extra years, the head of a special legislative panel studying tax reform says.

Billy Hamilton, executive director of the 13-member Select Committee on Tax Equity appointed to study state and local tax laws, predicted Friday that residents may face the tax sometime within the next decade.

"We'll consider doing it (personal income tax) hopefully as a replacement of taxes, and not as an add-on," Hamilton told city officials from around the state at the Texas Municipal League's annual conference.

Hamilton said he is not an advocate of a state income tax, but that he nevertheless expects one to come about "in five to 10 years."

"In a way I hope it never does...but other things are worse for the state, like not having good school districts," he said.

He noted that Texas already faces a judicial ruling against its system of raising school taxes. A state district judge recently ruled that the method of distributing state aid to school districts is unconstitutional. The state has appealed the decision.

Hamilton's audience of about 100 governmental officials and bureaucrats winced at the words "personal income tax."

But William Petropolis, manager of Cleveland, a city of 7,000 near Houston, told Hamilton later, "I'd rather have a state income tax than raise the sales tax, because you can't deduct sales tax from your federal income tax."

State tax payments are deductible for federal taxpayers who itemize.

The notion of a state income tax repeatedly has been opposed in public opinion polls. The House this year approved a proposed constitutional amendment that would have banned a state income tax, but the bill died in the Senate.

But legislators also passed the largest tax increase in the state's history this year, placing an additional $5.7 billion tax burden on Texans.

The general state sales tax jumped three-fourths of a cent to 6 cents on the dollar.

Hamilton's tax equity committee will begin holding a series of public hearings Thursday in Austin. The next hearings will be Nov. 5, first in Dallas and then in Fort Worth.

The committee is expected to make its recommendation to the Legislature by next fall in time for the Legislature to reconvene in 1989, Hamilton said.

Hamilton and Frank Sturzl, assistant director of the Texas Municipal League, led a panel on the state's changing tax base. They told the audience that tax laws had to be revamped.

"We have a 1962 tax system that is trying to operate in 1987 and it is not working," Hamilton said.

"Corporate franchise taxes haven't changed since 1907 and the sales tax, though the rate has changed and its base expanded, is not all that different than the one devised in 1961," he said.

In four years, Hamilton said, state lawmakers have passed three major tax bills that have been patched on to a tax system put together 60 to 70 years earlier.

"In 1982, when oil prices slowed and interest rates fell, the rot under the wood was revealed," Hamilton said. "The Texas tax system has quit moving. In 1984, 1985 and 1986, we jump-started it. It doesn't take a Ph.D. to see if we turn the motor off one more time, it just might conk out."

Women lawyers gaining esteem, more recognition

DALLAS (AP) — Women, who once faced a tough life as law students and later as attorneys, have made dramatic gains in what legal scholars have called a decade of opportunity for them.

At least 41 percent of law school students across the country are women, the highest percentage in history, and the figure continues to climb, according to the American Bar Association.

Women now comprise 50 percent of students at some law schools. At Southern Methodist University School of Law in Dallas, 47 percent of the students are female, compared with 31 percent in 1977. Seven of the last eight top-ranked law school students have been women.

"I think that we are in what might be termed a decade of opportunity for women," said State District Judge Catherine Crier, elected two years ago on her 30th birthday. "When you demonstrate ability in our profession, they (legal professionals) are more than willing to welcome you in."

But some women attorneys said the gains by no means signify that they have approached men in status and influence in the legal profession.

Only 15 percent of the 677,000 licensed lawyers in the United States are women. In Texas, they comprise 18 percent. Few female attorneys are partners, or equity owners, or managers at law firms, they said last week.

But opportunity for women in the law has flourished since the mid-1970s. Increasingly, they are working in courtrooms, legislatures and corporations. And more are working for major law firms.

Four female law students at SMU filed lawsuits in 1976 against as many major downtown Dallas law firms, claiming they had discriminated against women in hiring summer law clerks.

Three of the cases were settled out of court, and the other, against the former Wynne & Jaffe, went to trial. The firm won the case. Some top female students testified that despite being interviewed for summer or full-time jobs at numerous Dallas firms, they were not hired.

Agent Orange compensation measure to be introduced

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A congressman said he will introduce legislation next week to force the Veterans Administration to compensate Vietnam veterans who suffered exposure to Agent Orange.

U.S. Rep. John Bryant, D-Dallas, announced the plans on Friday in a press conference at the Nueces County Courthouse. A small group of veterans attended the meeting.

Dr. Hector P. Garcia, founder of the American GI Forum, assured Bryant of help with the legislation. Garcia said he has advocated aid for Agent Orange victims for several years.

"Don't be discouraged," Bryant told the audience. "We need to redouble our efforts to influence the Congress to force the Veterans Administration to provide compensation."

Agent Orange, a herbicide that contains dioxin, was used to strip jungle foliage in Vietnam. Agent Orange has been blamed for a variety of serious health disorders. Researchers said dioxin can cause cancer.

Bryant, a member of the House Veterans Affairs Committee, said he already has visited about 10 cities across the state to talk about Agent Orange legislation. He will visit six more before returning to Washington.

"For the Veterans Administration to continue to deny compensation to veterans who were disabled by Agent Orange while fighting for their country is a national outrage," Bryant said.

He said that, without legislation, he doesn't believe the VA weill compensate the veterans.

Bryant claimed the VA delayed for six months on a government study indicating that Marines who served in areas of high exposure to Agent Orange have a 110-percent higher death rate from non-Hodgkin's lymphomas and a 58-percent higher death rate from lung cancer.

"While the VA was sitting on dramatic new evidence of a link between Agent Orange and cancer among veterans, it watched quietly while the main study of Agent Orange was being called off," said Bryant.

Media reports forced the VA to release the evidence, he said.

More than 29,000 Vietnam veterans have filed claims with the VA for Agent Orange disabilities, but none has received compensation, Bryant said.

About 253,000 veterans have filed claims with the Agent Orange Settlement Fund, established to collect and distribute the $180 million in damages that seven manufacturers were forced to pay victims, he said.

"The veterans haven't received a dime. The point is that in spite of lawsuits, new laws and compelling evidence, the disabled victims of Agent Orange are still without compensation," said Bryant.

Cattleman brings varied skills to job

DALLAS (AP) — The president-elect of the Texas Cattle Feeders Association said he is bringing some skills to the job that he didn't pick up around a farm: an accounting background, a grasp of the U.S. Tax Code and membership in a Washington law firm.

Seasoned Texas cattlemen have recognized Dallas lawyer Clark Willingham, 42, for his savvy in defining the course of the modern beef cattle industry.

Willingham says he expects continued improvement in an industry that is becoming more competitive and more efficient.

"I am not anti-small farm but I am anti-inefficiency," he said, adding that a family farm trying to exist only as a lifestyle and not as a business will be forced to change.

Emergence of larger, more efficient operations and modern business approaches in agriculture do not necessarily signal the demise of the small farm, he said.

"The realities are such that we can't expect the consumer to pay more for a product simply because we want to live on a farm," he said.

Competitors are forcing other changes on the industry, said Willingham.

Datapoint chief makes bid for Telex

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The chief of Datapoint Corp. says his bid to aquire the much larger Tulsa-based Telex Corp. isn't simply an investment but a move to combine operations that fit together.

Asher B. Edelman, Datapoint chairman, said the San Antonio-based company and Intelogic Trace Inc. would split up Telex Corp. and move its headquarters to San Antonio if the buyout of the computer and telecommunications company is successful.

"This is totally a transaction to combine operations that fit together; it's not simply an investment," said Edelman, who has built a reputation for buying large portions of stock in companies and dropping his takeover bid after accumulating a profit on the stock.

Edelman Friday offered $65 a share, or about $870 million, for all of the Telex shares that he and the groups he controls do not already own.

Shares of Telex stock, which have risen during the past two weeks amid rumors of a possible takeover, jumped $9.63 to $70.63 Friday in heavy trading. One analyst said the company was "worth more than $65 a share." The stock traded at $51.88 Sept. 14.

In a telephone interview from New York, Edelman declined comment on whether the groups he controls will make a higher offer for Telex.

Computer industry analysts said the potential purchase would boost Datapoint business greatly.

The purchase would "take them more into (the) telecommunications arena and definitely broaden their product line...and get them into the IBM world in a big way, so there are some pluses," said Greg Carlsted, senior industry analyst for Dataquest Inc.

Telex officials had little comment Friday. "We acknowledge the tender offer and we are evaluating it, and we won't have an official response for several days," spokeswoman Julie Gentz said.

TLX Acquisition Corp., a partnership that is a subsidiary of Datapoint and Intelogic Trace, began purchasing Telex stock Sept.21, Edelman said.

The Edelman group said it owns 1.14 million Telex shares, or 7.8 percent, revising a figure released late Thursday showing it owned 1.19 million shares, or 8.1 percent of the company.

If the bid is successful, Edelman said Telex would be split. Datapoint would take the computer business and Intelogic Trace would take its $200 million computer maintenance operation, with the rest of the business being divided and a minor portion possibly being sold.

"It's obvious that we would like Intelogic Trace to own the service business and Datapoint to own the hardware business," Edelman told the San Antonio Light.

Edelman said Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc. has agreed to provide $600 million in "bridge" financing for the acquisition. Financial officers at Intelogic Trace and Datapoint each said they had about $85 million in cash and securities on hand, although they said the money had not been targeted for use in the deal.

The potential buyout is unlike many Edelman has undertaken in the past, which includes offers for restaurant chains, truck-trailer makers and, most recently, for Rexham Corp., a Charlotte, N.C.-based packaging manufacturer. Those were investments made principally to "enhance shareholder value," an Edelman associate said.

Telex had revenues of $841 million in fiscal year 1987 and net earnings of $77.8 million, making it about twice as large as Datapoint and Intelogic Trace.

Datapoint had sales of $312.1 million and a loss of $57.8 million for the fiscal year ended Aug. 1. It has reported two consecutive quarterly profits after undergoing a restructuring in February that resulted in the layoff of 786 employees.

STATE in brief

Books by Railey won't be published

DALLAS (AP) — A former Methodist minister whose wife was nearly choked to death has not made much progress with plans to publish books, including an autobiography, and a Nashville-based company was not interested in them, an official said.

Walker Railey asked an executive with the United Methodist Publishing Co. in June about doing a book in which he would "reflect upon the current crises in his life."

But Robert Feaster, the president and publisher of the Methodist publishing company, said Friday the firm has no plans to print any books by Railey.

"That's gone nowhere," said Feaster. "It has not been discussed except informally that one time."

Railey last month surrendered his credentials with the First United Methodist Church of Dallas, citing continued stress over events since he said he found his wife unconscious in the garage of their Lake Highlands home in April.

One of two other manuscripts by Railey that were to be published by the company has been canceled and the other is on hold, said Feaster.

War memorabilia popular

DALLAS (AP) — A belated public appreciation of efforts by Vietnam veterans has prompted a surge in interest for weapons and other collectibles of the era, said gun and pawn shop owners.

"Some people buy the guns to shoot; there are a lot of Rambo types out there. Other people collect the weapons as a way of remembering the war," said Robert Stephenson, who spent two years with the Marine Corps in Vietnam and now works at Bob's Pawn & Swap in Dallas.

"Here's an SKS," said Robert Stephenson, holding a semiautomatic rifle used by communist soldiers. "I've been selling the heck out of it. People buy them as quickly as I can find them."

Stephenson said he uses a Chinese-made SKS to kill coyotes at his weekend home in Sulphur Springs.

The public is expressing a belated appreciation and understanding of Vietnam veterans' efforts, Stephenson said, and that has created a demand for collectibles, he said.

But the supply is limited.

"Relatively few items were brought back from Vietnam," said R. Michael Ferguson, of The Militaria, a military arts gallery in Dallas.

'Sweet girl' arrested

EL PASO (AP) — A University of Texas at El Paso student described as a "sweet, sweet girl" has been arrested and charged with the July 6 robbery of El Paso Teachers Federal Credit Union.

FBI agents arrested Kimberly Ann Bock without incident Friday at the El Paso home of her parents, John and Patricia Bock. John Bock is a certified public accountant in El Paso.

Kimberly Bock, 21, works part time for the county attorney's office and is a full-time UTEP freshman.

She was released on $10,000 bail after her appearance afternoon before U.S. Magistrate Philip Cole, who scheduled a preliminary hearing in the case for Thursday.

Her lawyer, Sib Abraham Jr., suggests that Miss Bock is the victim of mistaken identity.

Get-well greeting special

LIBERTY (AP) — Gregory Hamilton's school chums wanted to make sure their get-well card was something special.

So hearty waves and toothless smiles filled Liberty Hill Elementary classrooms as Gregory's friends videotaped their get-well wishes to the kindergartner who had open-heart surgery last week.

More than 430 kindergarten through fourth-grade students made sure their faces were recorded and their names were signed to the colorful banners and cards delivered to Gregory Friday night.

"We just wanted to tell him that we all hope he gets better because we need him back at school," said Chance Leigh, 9.

Janne Dykes, one of Gregory's classmates, also said she wanted him to return to school soon.

"I want him to get well because he asked me if I wanted to be his girlfriend, and I said 'yes,'" said the 5-year-old, who spread out her arms to show how much she missed her friend.

Gregory suffers from mitral valve stenosis, or the narrowing or constriction of the valve between the left atrium and the left ventricle of the heart. He had surgery Monday at Santa Rosa Medical Center in San Antonio, said school nurse Dusty Williams.

Doctor's charges dropped

EL PASO (AP) — Charges of involutary manslaughter stemming from the death of a woman during a 1984 abortion have been dropped against a former physician and convicted murderer, officials said.

Raymond Showery is serving a 15-year prison sentence in the Texas Department of Corrections on a 1983 conviction for murdering an infant born alive during an abortion in 1979.

While free on bond during the appeal of that conviction, Showery reopened his El Paso clinic. In April 1984, he conducted an abortion on Miekey Apodaca, a 28-year-old divorced mother of four, officials said.

She died soon after the operation, and an autopsy indicated that she had bled to death from a torn uterus and severed uterine artery, officials said.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Cooler weather in area forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

A cool front anticipated earlier this weekend should arrive in the Permian Basin today, dropping high temperatures into the upper 60s, according to a meteorologist with the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Forecasters say today will be sunny, with the high expected in the upper 60s. Winds will be from the east at 5 to 15 mph.

Tonight calls for fair skies with the low near 50 degrees. Monday will be fair, with the high near 70 degrees.

Saturday's high of 83 was 11 degrees cooler than the record of 94, set on the same date in 1965. The low of 49 was five degrees warmer than the record of 44, set on the same date in 1977.

STATE

A cold front stretching from extreme Northeast Texas into the Trans-Pecos crept slowly southward Saturday, leaving a path of widely scattered rain showers in the Panhandle and clouds over the High Plains of West Texas.

Fair to clear skies continued to dominate the rest of the state, where the week's gusty winds had slowed to light, variable breezes ranging from 5 to 15 mph.

Today, skies should remain clear over the greater part of the state, although increasing cloudiness and a few isolated showers were expected in the northwest corner.

NATION

Cold Canadian air swept deep into the Midwest on Saturday, sending temperatures plummeting 20 to 30 degrees lower than normal through the Missouri Valley and into the Texas and Oklahoma pandhandles.

Record low temperatures chilled South Dakota and Montana, and up to an inch of snow fell across most of Nebraska and southern Iowa. Kansas City and Kirksville, Mo., got sleet.

A cold front brought scattered thunderstorms from upstate New York through northern Texas. The heaviest rain fell across southern Illinois and southeast Missouri, with lighter showers over southeast Kansas and northern Oklahoma.

More rain was scattered across central and southern Florida. Key West got more than an inch in the six-hour period ending at 2 p.m. EDT.

Temperatures varied greatly across the central Plains, with readings in the mid to upper 30s across southern Nebraska and northern Kansas and in the 60s and 70s across southern Oklahoma and northern Texas.

Skies were cloudy over the Great Lakes, the Ohio Valley and New England.

Scott Rathburn Reporter-Telegram

Through the support of her fellow MOMS, Sophie Canelos, 27, is able to bear the pain associated with the stillborn birth of her son, Mark Christopher Canelos.

MOMS can help women get over losing babies

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Sophie Canelos, 27, said that in a way she's flattered to be the mother of a stillborn baby.

"Our kids are angels and not everybody can say that...I always believed there was a heaven, but now I know," she said. "I'm just thankful for the nine months I got to hold him."

Mrs. Canelos said she didn't know until minutes before she went into the delivery room last June 19 at Midland Memorial Hospital that her son, named Mark Christopher Canelos, would be born dead.

While in one of the labor and delivery rooms with her husband at her side, Mrs. Canelos said she was told the bad news — there was no heart beat and the baby was dead.

"I looked up at my husband, and he still had the camera hanging around his neck," she said.

"The first thing I said to my husband was that I was sorry," she said. "You feel like it's your fault."

CARLA NAULT suffered through two miscarriages and two ectopic or tubal pregnancies (a situation in which the fertilized egg nestles outside the uterus and is thus unable to grow). For medical reasons she then had to have a hysterctomy rendering her unable to get pregnant. She was not yet 27.

"With miscarriages, you're not allowed to grieve. Society says so," she said. "There is no formal goodbye." Mrs. Nault now is the mother of an adopted baby son, Chad, 20-months-old.

The feelings of failure and guilt that a mother who gives birth to a stillborn child experiences also plague the mother-to-be who suffers a miscarriage, Mrs. Nault, 27, said.

To nurse women such as Mrs. Canelos and Mrs. Nault through what may be troubled times, a Midland support group has been formed.

Aptly named MOMS — Mothers of Miscarriages and Stillbirths — the group will gel Oct. 20 with its first meeting. But already about 10 women meet informally to share thoughts and counsel others who've recently suffered through a stillbirth or miscarriage.

The Rev. Alan Williams, MMH chaplain, will assist the MOMS in their endeavors. All the women have credited him with being "their lifesaver."

"We want the public to be aware that we are here," Mrs. Nault said.

SOME OF the negative repercussions Mrs. Nault said she and others have suffered include the loss of friends, binge and starve psychological food disorders and anger at God or their husbands.

"I don't drink, but I wanted to go out and just get drunk sometimes," Mrs. Nault said.

She added that her husband could gauge her depression by looking at their VISA credit card bill, an indicator of her depression-induced shopping sprees. "You're just trying to fill a void," she said.

The mothers agreed their friends sometimes have trouble accepting their trauma, and have been known to "run from you like you have the plague," Mrs. Canelos said.

All agreed that approaching the grieving mother or father and just squeezing their hand is a better approach than saying nothing at all.

Statements they are loathe to hear include: "You'll have more kids...you're young!" or "But you already have one child," or "It was just God's will."

Dr. James Humphreys, a Midland obstetrician who has practiced here for 13 years, said about one to two full-term stillborn births occur in the city each month and that about 20 percent of all pregnancies terminate spontaneously or miscarry.

MOMS WILL not only help deal with emotional trauma that real moms and dads undergo, but also help with the immediate and later details that need to be taken care of with a stillbirth.

After her own stillbirth, Mrs. Canelos found herself faced with more problems than she or her husband knew how to deal with.

MOMS will assist women in arranging with the hospital to see the stillborn baby after it has been born, getting pictures and footprints made and arranging for an autopsy and funeral, she said.

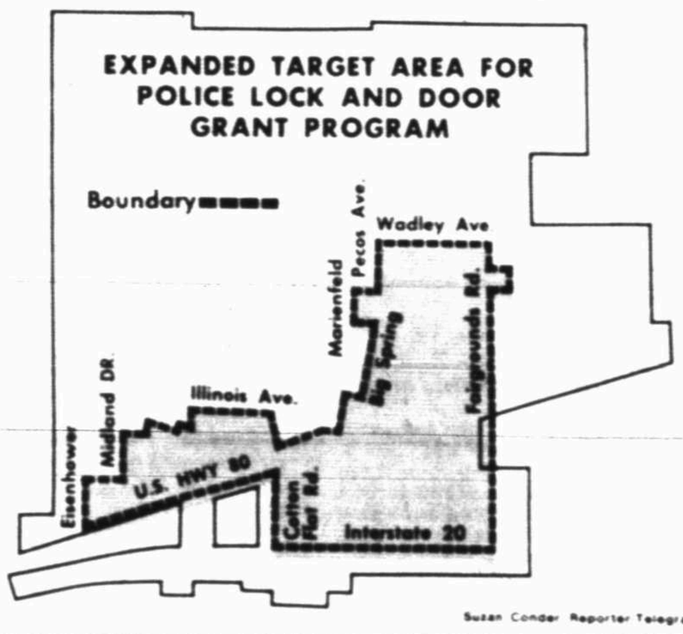

"I know the nurses are busy and can't counsel one-on-one," Mrs. Canelos said. "I'm not blaming the nurses; they were the ones who talked me into seeing my baby."

Viewing a stillborn after birth is an essential ingredient in the psychological separation process, Humphreys said. If the mother doesn't ask, the doctor said the medical professional should offer.

The obstetrician added that delivering a stillborn baby is one of the most heartbreaking things for a member of his profession, though certainly not comparable with the parents' depression.

Anti-burglary program expanded

Susan Condor Reporter Telegram

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Because applications have been sluggish, police are expanding the target area of an anti-burglary federal grant program, the coordinator said this week.

"The program is going very well, but the applicants are coming in slowly, and we might as well try and cover the whole area," said police Sgt. Lalo Camarillo, crime prevention officer and program coordinator.

So far, 37 solid-core doors and 50 deadbolt locks have been installed on 22 homes in a square-shaped area bounded by Main Street, Fairgrounds Road, Cloverdale Street, and Wadley Avenue, Camarillo said.

Now, the target area has been expanded, he said.

"We might as well try and cover the whole area, since we have the funds," Camarillo said.

Initially, a flood of applications was expected and the target area was limited, but only 40 have been received so far, he said.

Because of that, beginning Monday, the program will be expanded to include most of south Midland, an area designated to receive Community Development Block Grant funds.

Some of the residents who have already received added security for their homes commented on the program, which began Aug. 17.

Lester Lee Rhodes, 405 E. Maple Ave., said several recent burglaries on a nearby street have her worried. She has two new doors and locks on her home.

"I haven't had any (burglaries) here, but there have been some on the street behind me," she said. "The locks and doors really make me feel more secure, because my doors were frail."

Two doors and locks were also installed in the home of Joe Vine, 1710 E. Illinois Ave.

"About a year ago, some people pried open the old locks and got into the house," Vine said. "One of the doors was solid and one was hollow, but they replaced both."

St. Andrews Mission volunteers Trimble Award winners

From Staff Reports

Barbara McWilliams and Billie Besselieu have been named the recipients of the Trimble Service Award for the month of September.

They were nominated as a team by St. Andrews Presbyterian Mission.

The Trimble Service Award recognizes citizens in Midland who have contributed outstanding volunteer efforts to the community. The award is co-sponsored by Leadership Midland Alumni Association and the Reporter-Telegram.

Mrs. McWilliams and Mrs. Besselieu represent over 40 years of volunteer service to St. Andrews Mission.

"Their enthusiasm, dedication and love have made St. Andrews Center grow in its outreach to the people of East Midland," according to a press release announcing the winners.

In submitting the nomination, Gloria Hinojosa, director of the St. Andrews Mission, said the two women have been nicknamed "the angels of St. Andrews."

Mrs. McWilliams began as a one day per week volunteer teacher in 1964 in the outreach program of St. Andrews Presbyterian Church.

Mrs. Besselieu began as a part-time volunteer in 1968.

The pair's volunteer work commitment has increased. They both have become such an integral part of St. Andrews Mission that they now have formal job descriptions.

McWilliams

Besselieu

Mrs. McWilliams assists individuals who contact the mission in need of financial or medical assistance. She also acts as a substitute teacher in the St. Andrews Day School and serves as registrar for the school.

She teaches Tuesday night Bible classes and plans and supervises an afternoon recreation for elementary children on Thursday afternoons.

Mrs. Besselieu provides bookkeeping services for the St. Andrews Mission community clinic. She also teaches classes Tuesday evenings and assists in the community children's clinic.

"Their enthusiasm, dedication and love have made St. Andrews Center grow in its outreach to the people of East Midland."

Both women are involved in the planning and supervision of the summer recreation activities and Vacation Bible School.

St. Andrews Mission is a cooperative effort of Presbyterian Corporate Ministries involving the First Presbyterian Church, Grace Presbyterian Church, Trinity Presbyterian Church and Tres Rios Presbytery.

For more information on volunteering in the St. Andrews Presbyterian Mission, contact Ms. Hinojosa at 682-2351.

Mrs. McWilliams and Mrs. Besselieu will have their names sunmitted with the other monthly recipients of the Trimble Service Award to be eligible to receive two round-trip tickets to any destination in the continental United States, courtesy of American Airlines.

Odessa official's attorney doesn't know why he resigned

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The attorney for K.R. Jones Friday said he has not talked to the former deputy police chief since he resigned his position as City of Odessa code enforcement inspector Oct. 1.

Michael McLeaisch said Jones did not confer with him prior to submitting the resignation. In fact, McLeaisch said, he had not talked to Jones in about two months and had no idea why he resigned. Jones has been unavailable for comment.

Jones, who resigned as deputy chief after being suspended for an alleged act of criminal mischief and accused of six violations of the Police Code of Conduct, submitted his brief letter of resignation which stated was to be "effective Oct. 1, 1987." The reason Jones gave for resigning as code enforcement inspector was his "continued illness."

According to city personnel officials, Jones had missed work several times due to illness since joining the City's Planning and Inspection Department in January.

As part of an agreement growing out of what was supposed to be a public appeal hearing requested by Jones concerning his termination by Police Chief Alan Stewart, Jones was allowed to resign and become a code enforcement officer. Jones also agreed to drop a $2.1 million lawsuit against the city.

As a deputy police chief with 22 years service with the department, Jones, 48, had been earning nearly $35,000 a year. Accepting the new position reduced Jones' annual pay to slightly more than $21,000 but, with about three years remaining before he could take early retirement, he would preserve the benefits earned during his long police career.

Under current city retirement policies, had Jones remained with the city until he accrued 25 years service and reached age 50, he would have been eligible for retirement benefits paid on a monthly basis. Now he will be entitled to withdraw his accumulated retirement funds in a lump sum.

Jones was initially suspended with pay in August 1986 by Stewart pending investigation of an alleged act of criminal mischief. Reports that surfaced following his suspension indicated the allegation concerned the shooting out of windows at a West Odessa business.

Jones' troubles became intertwined with an investigation by Ector County Attorney Gary Garrison into alleged corruption in the Odessa Police Department and a federal probe into area gambling activities.

During his suspension, Jones was called to testify before a federal grand jury.

In addition to the criminal mischief allegation, Jones was subsequently accused of eight violations of the police Code of Conduct. The allegations included associating with and accepting a gift from a known gambler, having a key to the rear door of a local night club, associating with a known felon, unauthorized use of a police vehicle and filing erroneous travel vouchers.

Concerning Jones' resignation, McLeaisch said he had no idea what the former deputy police would do now. McLeaisch said, however, it has been his experience that when governmental employees finally decide to get out of "the bureaucratic jungle" they usually wind up finding positions that pay them considerably more money. He expressed the hope that this would happen to Jones.

GARY OTT

Getting older can worry men as much as it worries women

Ott

Growing older has never bothered me.

I hit a milestone and nothing changes.

Twenty-five, 30, 35 — I've seen them all and not once did I feel even the slightest tinge of regret. Twenty-five seemed like 24. Thirty felt like 29 and, yes, 35 was no different than 34.

What can I say? Age has not created emotional problems for me. Another wrinkle, another gray hair. Such is life.

I'm sure my cavalier attitude could all change at some point in the future, but so far a birthday has been no big deal.

Indeed, the biggest trauma I have faced on this matter was when I turned 18 and my grandmother did not send me the customary $5 bill. I was stunned. My parents explained that I was now old enough to earn my own money and gifts like that were meant for children.

I knew right then being an adult wasn't going to be all it had been cracked up to be.

I bring all of this up because the other night I overheard a conversation on the subject of age. It was between two men.

One of them had just turned 40 and he was expressing regrets. His friend tried to keep the mood light by making jokes.

I, on the other hand, was seated at another table and just listened.

Lesson No. 1. It is an absolute fallacy that only women worry about their age. Men can be equally vain.

In this case, the birthday boy was most worried about the fact that his life was slipping away and he had nothing to show for it.

His comments were predictable. He said things like:

"All my friends earn more money than I do."

"I'm halfway to 80 and I haven't done anything exciting."

"I'll probably celebrate my birthday tonight by watching television."

"My daughter is getting married next month."

"I'll probably be bald in five years."

His friend laughed and tried to cheer him up by saying, "I've heard women are looking for older, more mature men these days."

It didn't work.

He kept sliding further into despair.

"Turning 30 didn't bother me," he said, while motioning to the waitress for his check. "Neither did hitting 35. But for some reason 40 is doing me in. All I can think about are the missed opportunities."

It was really a pathetic scene. The simple addition of one number to his age count had him down in the dumps and singing the blues. And, besides, 40 is not exactly over the hill. It may be half of 80 but it is also the beginning of a period of time when most people become their most productive.

They are old enough to have gained knowledge and maturity through experience while still being young enough to have an open mind and fresh ideas.

It is a time of personal growth.

His friend mentioned these things as they were getting ready to leave.

"Loosen up," he said. "Things aren't that bad. Besides, you're only as old as you feel."

"Yeah, well, I feel 75," Mr. Birthday said, sadly.

"That's strange," his friend replied. "You don't look a day over 60."

Businesses miss Fort Hood soldiers when they're in Europe

KILLEEN (AP) — When more than half the 38,000 soldiers stationed at nearby Fort Hood left for Europe last month, it didn't turn Killeen into a ghost town. But for car dealer Travis Gunn, it might seem that way.

With nearly 20,000 soldiers in West Germany for several weeks, business has fallen off 60 percent at Killeen Chrysler-Plymouth, where Gunn is business manager.

This is "the perfect time to take a vacation," Gunn said. "I'd take one if I had one coming."

The exodus was caused by Reforger '87, a military training exercise that began drawing Fort Hood troops to Europe in mid-August and will keep some there until early November.

Lt. Col. Mike Miller, a Fort Hood public information officer, said most of the soldiers would be away for three to four weeks.

This year's Reforger exercise is the largest deployment of soldiers from the United States to Europe since World War II, Army officials said. The Fort Hood troops are among 35,000 traveling from the United States to northern West Germany for the exercise, which will involve a total of 78,000 international troops.

The annual departure points up how much Killeen, population 68,000, and Fort Hood depend on each other.

Fort Hood spokeswoman Jeanie Kitchens said the post, established in 1942, has quarterly expenditures of nearly $260 million in salaries, contracts and local purchases in area cities.

"We need each other to survive," Ms. Kitchens said.

An increase in reported job layoffs in August was caused largely by Reforger, said Mike Bartlett, manager of the local Texas Employment Commission office.

The 978 initial claims reported, up from 728 in July, were the highest ever for Killeen, he said.

Although the decrease in business did not cause layoffs at his company, Gunn said few soldiers are inclined to buy a new car only to abandon it for up to two months.

With the prospect of paying storage fees and buying insurance for an automobile they will not use for weeks, Gunn said, "There's no sense buying a car."

Nearly 20,000 soldiers from Fort Hood were recently sent on maneuvers in Europe. This exodus has had a profound effect on the economy of Killeen, a city of 68,000 people.

Tommy Joe Mills, owner of a Killeen appliance store and a civilian aide to the Army secretary, said Reforger has an obvious impact on businesses that cater to the military.

"There is definitely (an effect)," he said. "You move 20,000 troops out, the wives will live a lot less expensively. Many who don't have children went home to spend time with their families."

But Patrick Morris, manager of Mazzio's Pizza, said wives and girlfriends of the absent soldiers have helped avert a large decline in business for him.

Reforger "hasn't hurt us that much," he said. "We always get a lot of females in here because of the salad bar, but (since the troops left) we've been getting more women than normal.

"It was real slow the first week the troops were gone. The wives and girlfriends were staying home," Morris said. "Then I guess they got bored and decided to go out again."

Joe Rowlett, manager of Action Pawn No. 4, said he has had "five or six times" the usual number of women in his store "pawning and buying both."

"I told my wife the other day, I haven't seen so many cars in my life with three and four women in them, just riding around town," agreed Charles "Mr. Zip" Reinhardt, owner of Zip Enterprises. But he said that wouldn't help his dry cleaning and uniform rental business.

"Right now, we're down about 10 percent," he said.

Other businesses also have felt the impact of the soldiers' departure.

Manager Soun Sonz of the South Seas Restaurant said she has had one-half to two-thirds fewer customers since Reforger began.

Despite the problems some business people face when troops are out of town, they appreciate the presence of Fort Hood, said Mills, the appliance store owner.

"I'd rather have Fort Hood than any General Motors plant," he said. The workforce is "steady...There are no strikes, no cutbacks in production. The military's been extremely good to the Killeen area."

MOMS

"It affects the doctors and nurses. The may react distantly or coolly, but it's because they see the possibility of it happening to them. In dealing with it they have to isolate themselves just so they can function," Humphreys said.

STILLBIRTHS ARE sometimes the result of freak umbilical cord occurrences, he said.

Much like when someone bends a water hose and cuts off the flow of water, an umbilical cord can get twisted as the child tosses and turns in the mother's womb to a point where the flow of oxygen is cut off, Mrs. Canelos explained.

"It's amazing it doesn't happen more," Humphreys said. But he added that knowing of an umbilical cord mishap, for instance, is more comforting to a family than being unable to discern any reason for the death, as was the case with the Canelos family.

"Stillborn births can very rarely be prevented," the obstetrician said. But if the cause can be found, at least the parents' have a tangible release from guilt feelings, he said.

There will two types of MOMS members — support and team. The support member will listen to the suffering mother, call her on the phone, offer comfort and counsel during her grieving process and "just be there when she wants to cry," Mrs. Canelos said.

The team member will be trained in definite aspects of counseling and also go to the hospital at the mother's request, she continued.

OF CONCERN to the team member will be issues of confidentiality; listening skills; crisis intervention techniques; legal responsibilities and knowing when to make professional referrals, and teaching mothers how to explain the situation to the dead child's siblings.

Dads can also be MOMS so to speak.

Mrs. Nault remembered that her husband "didn't get a card or a flower" when she was going through her miscarriages, tubal pregnancies or hysterectomy.

"Men are conditioned not to cry," Mrs. Canelos said.

"With my husband, I had to dig it out of him. He was feeling he had to be strong for me. Then one day he came to me and said there just wasn't anything left in him," Mrs. Nault remembered.

"The husband needs to know how to help the wife," Mrs. Nault said.

Giving birth to a stillborn baby also can create a fear of intimacy within a marriage, Mrs. Canelos observed.

"YOU'RE SCARED. You have this gut fear if you touch him you'll get pregnant and it will happen again," she said.

Mrs. Canelos, the mother of a 18-month-old son, James, credited a profound faith in God for her successful rebound.

Another mother of a stillborn child, Suellen Prewit, 26, is due to deliver another baby in several months, she said. Although she lost her first child just one year ago, she's not afraid this time. "I tell myself the Lord knows how much I can handle," Mrs. Prewit said.

Karla O'Neal, 27, suffered a stillborn birth in September. In undergoing the ordeal, "everything else has fallen into place," she said.

"My husband and I used to fight about money. Now...?" She threw her hands up in the air in exasperation as if to say, "Who cares?"

Because all have lost children, the mothers said they feel a common bond that helps them through suffering. "There is no right or wrong way to grieve," Mrs. Canelos said.

"I think the hardest part is being in the grocery store and seeing the newborn babies in the front of the carts," Mrs. Canelos said.

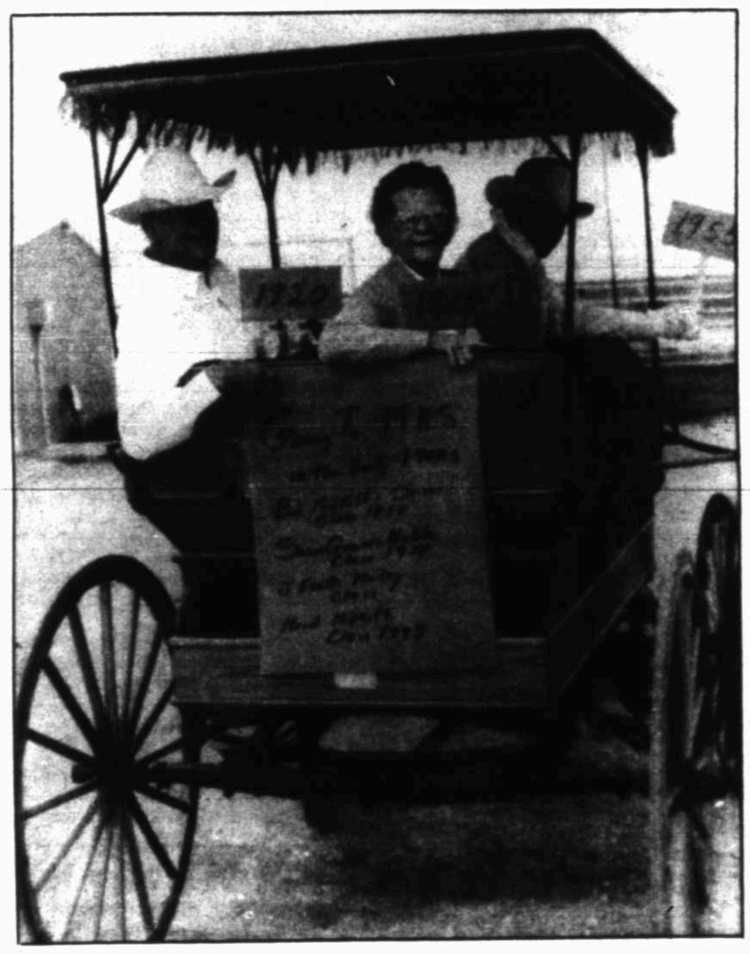

THE MOTHERS asserted that they don't want to make a mother-to-be feel paranoid about having a stillborn baby or miscarriage. "Just don't say it won't happen to you and take everything for granted," Mrs. Prewit said.

But if a pregnancy should turn out not to work out, MOMS — a non profit organization funded by private donations — will be there, Mrs. Canelos said.

"Just to say we're sorry. Just to be there. Just to hold your hand," she said.

'Surrey with a fringe on top'

An old-fashioned surrey will be a major part of the Ex-Students' Association role in the Midland High School homecoming parade Thursday. Among those to participate include Cowboy-Historian J. Evetts Haley, left, Class of 1920, who is the 1987 recipient of MHS' Hall of Fame award, for outstanding achievement and contribution to mankind by an ex-MHS student; Susie Graves Noble, Class of 1914, first woman elected district clerk and county clerk in Midland; and Bob Midkiff, Class of 1955, a partner in Bob Midkiff Insurance who also has ranching interests. The Midkiff family settled in Midland in 1895.

Six men injured during pre-game revelries

DALLAS (AP) — Four men were stabbed and two others shot in separate attacks on the same block as downtown streets jammed with noisy fans for the traditional Texas-Oklahoma football weekend, police said Saturday night.

Three Dallas computer technicians taking part in the festivities were attacked by a group of knife- and club-wielding men when they stopped their car to retrieve a hat that had blown out a window, police Sgt. G.L. Tolliver said.

He identified the victims as Larry Hedgecourt, 26 of Weatherford, who was stabbed twice in the back of the head; Paul Bull, 24, of Dallas, stabbed once in the right side, and Billy Hallmark, 35, who was stabbed twice in the left side and once in the wrist.

The incident occurred Friday around 11 p.m., Tolliver said, about an hour before two men were shot and another stabbed in the same block of Commerce Street.

Around midnight, a group of people got out of a pickup where traffic had stalled on Commerce Street near the Interstate 35 overpass, Tolliver said, and Brad Welch, 23, of Irving was stabbed in the hand.

Another man who was with Welch's assailant went to a pickup, retrieved a gun and fired twice, Tolliver said.

Rick Norris, 28, of Irving, and Lewis Smith, 25, of Irving, each were shot once in the leg, Tolliver said.

Two Dallas men were arrested in connection with the fight, but neither had been formally charged, Tolliver said.

"I think it got to be a little more violent than usual out there," said Tolliver. "We normally have a lot of arrests, but we don't usually see this serious kind of violence as far as I can remember."

Bull was in fair condition in Methodist Gospital Saturday, and Hedgecourt had been treated and released, Tolliver said. Hallmark was held overnight at St. Paul Hospital and released Saturday, hospital spokeswoman Rosa Brown said.

Smith was in fair condition in Parkland Hospital, where he was tested for possible damage to arteries. Norris was treated at Methodist Hospital and released.

Officials said that overall, however, said the pre-game revelry was tamer than usual.

Authorities arrested 98 people Friday night in connection with the downtown frenzy, Dallas County Sheriff's Lt. Frank Lawson said. There were 124 arrests last year.

Lawson said his figures indicated 78 of the arrests were for public intoxication. The remaining arrests were class A misdemeanors, Lawson said.

DEATHS

W.M. Lasyone

Funeral services for W.M. "Bill" Lasyone, 75, of Midland, will be at 11 a.m. Tuesday in the Ellis Funeral Home chapel, with the Rev. Curtis Hollis of Temple Baptist Church officiating. Burial will be in Odessa's Sunset Memorial Gardens.

Lasyone died Friday at his residence.

He was born April 4, 1912 in Bently, La., where he also was reared. He moved to Midland in 1963 and was self employed. He was a member of Temple Baptist Church.

Survivors include a son, E.L. Lasyone of Bryan; seven daughters, Liz Groo of Hurst, Dale Elsey of Orange, Erlene James of Colorado Springs, Colo., Pattie Carr of Metrololis, Ill., Mary Nimz and Verlie Parker, both of Midland, and Elouise Bath of Odessa; two brothers, Occie Lasyone and Other Lasyone, both of Baton Rouge, La.; 28 grandchildren; and 18 great-grandchildren.

Betty Brent

Funeral services for Betty Mae Brent, 55, of Midland will be at 3 p.m. Tuesday at the Lee Street Church of Christ, with L.H. Alexander, pastor, officiating. Burial will be in Fairview Cemetery under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Ms. Brent died Thursday at her residence.

Born March 9, 1932 in Pinole, Miss., Ms. Brent moved to Midland in 1962 where she worked as a maid until her death. She was a member of the Lee Street Church of Christ.

Survivors include two brothers, Jim Brent and J.H. Brent, both of Midland; three sisters, Nammie Brent and Minnie Brent, both of St. Louis, Mo., and Leania Newsome of Mendall, Miss.

Jose Cruz

Funeral services for Jose Omar Cruz, 21, of Midland, are pending with Thomas Funeral Home.

Cruz died Saturday at a local hospital.

James Doyle

STANTON — James Doyle, 66, of Stanton died Saturday at a local hospital.

Services are pending with Gilbreath Funeral Home.

Otilia Neveres

Funeral services for Otilia Garcia Neveres, 76, of Midland will be at 3 p.m. Monday at San Juan Catholic Church with the Rev. Alvin Wilde officiating. Burial will be in Fairview Cemetery under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Neveres was born Dec. 13, 1910 in Durango, Mexico. She had been a Midland resident for the past three years.

Survivors include 13 grandchildren, 56 great-grandchildren and 20 great-great grandchildren.

Her grandsons will serve as pallbearers.

LOCKS

One resident was especially pleased with the program, he said.

"The sergeant (Camarillo) came out and he found out the doors weren't safe," said Doxey Hill, 2105 E. California Ave. "They put three doors on the house, and bolt locks. I put a finish on the doors, and a sealant, and they look just like the doors I had on the house when I built it."

Hollow-core doors and inadequate locks are the bane of crime prevention officers, because they can easily be kicked open by burglars, Camarillo said.

Enough money for work on at least 80 more homes remains, Camarillo said. He indicated only $4,000 of the $220,000 CDBG grant has been used.

"The application process will be on a first-come, first-serve basis," he said. "We are not going to be picky. If you qualify, you get the work."

To be eligible for the program, a resident must be a homeowner living either on a fixed income or low income and live within the newly expanded target area, Camarillo said. According to the grant, senior citizens who live alone automatically qualify, he said.

The program is structured so that Casa De Amigos, a Christian center for senior citizens, screens initial applicants. A list of those qualified is reviewed by Camarillo.

MAKING THE GRADE

Cheerleaders of San Jacinto Junior High School

The San Jacinto Junior High School eighth grade cheerleaders won first place awards this past August for their pursuits while at the International Cheerleading Foundation Camp in Lubbock.

The girls, Jennifer Northington, Leta Hamrick, Christina Griffith, Paige Morris, Lisa Evans, Julie Barnes and Crystal Borland, won first place awards in their division for cheering, dancing, spirit and pyramids, effort, cheer execution, stunts and gymnastics.

They were invited to attend the National Competition in December in Nashville, Tenn., because of this honor.

Samta Khandelwal, Lee High School student, has been named a recipient of the 1987 National Council of Teachers of English Achievement Awards in Writing. She was nominated by LHS teacher Marilyn Clement.

Over 6,000 students were nominated this year for Achievement Awards in Writing. Only 780 were singled out for the award.

Each piece of writing submitted by a nominee was read and evaluated by two judges, one high school and one college English teacher.

A third judge, usually the state coordinator for the program, settled differences between evaluations to help produce the final list of students.

Hodges is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Talley of 1303 Castleford Rd.

He plays football at MHS and placed second in the State Drafting Contest in August. He is also a member of ALL—STARS.

He also played football during his sophomore and junior years.

Following graduation, he plans to attend New Mexico Military Institute or Abilene Christian University and major in liberal arts.

Hodges

Jennifer South of Midland received a Midland Texas Exes Scholarship check this fall from the Ex-Students Association at the University of Texas in Austin.

South

University Executive Vice President and Provost G.J. fonken and Association President Mike Cook of Austin presented checks totaling $117,000 from 69 Texas Exes Club to 162 entering freshmen and transfer students at the scholarship dinner on Sept. 2.

For information about Midland Texas Exes Club scholarships for next year, contact Janis Dickeson at 699-6939.

Eric Hodges and Margaret Mogford have been selected Midland Downtown Rotary Club students of the week. Both are seniors at Midland High School.

Miss Mogford is the daughter of Martin and Sally Mogford, of 2519 Seaboard.

Mogford

She is vice president of the National Honor Society and Sweetheart of the Young Republicans.

Miss Mogford is also a member of the Drama Club, Youth in Government, Student Council, French Club and the National Honor Society.

She has been awarded for her efforts in French and academics.

Following graduation she plans to attend either Amherst University or Boston University and major in political science.

Cody Allee Whitlow, a senior, has been selected the student of the week for the Midland West Rotary Club.

Whitlow

He is the son of Gary and Seree Whitlow of 3312 Cardinal Ln.

He is a member of the National Honor Society, National Forensic League, UIL Ready Writing, Varsity swimming, Senior Guys and the school mascot.

He is also a member of the Episcopal Young Churchmen.

Whitlow has won awards in American Legion Boys State, Bausch and Lomb Science Fair and has been a letterman in academic, drama and swimming.

He hopes to be appointed to the U.S. Air Force Academy.

Rick Juarez, a senior at Midland High School, was awarded a scholarship from the Barbizon School of Modeling in Dallas.

Juarez

He won the award as a result of his participation in Charisma Pageant, a program dedicated to the educational, social and cultural development of youth.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

El Paisano has one of its best first issues

By H.A. TUCK

Tuck

First issue of El Paisano, the college newspaper, came out Oct. 1 and it's one of the best first issues ever.

Many residents might not aware that MC has the only endowed journalism department among the nation's community colleges. As a result the department is able to attract a top-flight instructor, plus providing scholarships for many of the student staff members. The Allison family provided the endowment which makes much of this possible. Allison professor Bob Templeton has aggressively recruited the top journalism students from the area and their product shows the results. El Paisano staff members are seeking to publish weekly this year.

Of particular interest in the first issue was a letter from a former student. Sandra S. Spain, a 1986 graduate of MC, wrote in part: "Since I attribute my successes at Austin College to the quality of the educational and personal experiences afforded me by the faculty and staff at MC, and the scholarship extended to me by the Fasken Foundation, I would like to share them with you..." She goes on to talk about four different experiences and credits her MC instructors with having given her the background to succeed in each. She concludes, "This letter is meant as a reminder to all that you can and do make a difference."

Currently showing at McCormick Gallery is the 10th annual Juried Art Exhibition, which was selected by juror Al Kotchka, director of the Amarillo Art Center.

Although Kotchka selected relatively few entries for the show, he was most complimentary of the quality.

The MAA show may be seen through Nov. 6. Gallery hours are 1-5 p.m. Sunday, 8 a.m.-10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Friday, and 10 a.m.-5 p.m. Saturday. There's no charge for admission.

The national junior college tennis tournaments aren't scheduled until next spring, but many of the top teams are gathering next week in Odessa for what promises to be a preview of the national events.

Midland College will take its men's and women's teams over to Odessa to go against such national powers as Tyler, Cooke County, McClennan County, San Jacinto, and Odessa. All these teams were ranked in the top 15 in the nation.

Don't look for the Chaps to capture the women's division, since coach Joe Williams has only five players on the squad this fall. That means the team will forfeit a singles match and a doubles match against each team. But Joe is bringing in two or three women at mid-term and will be ready for the spring events, since he now has four sophomore letter winners on the team. The men's team has a chance this fall, although there are only two returning lettermen.

Six classes are scheduled to begin this week through the college's Continuing Education Department.

Ellen Gonzalez is teaching "Ballroom Dance" on Monday and Wednesday from 7:30-9:30 p.m. through Nov. 4 at a cost of $29; Jana Scott will teach "Country and Western Dance" on Tuesdays from 7-8:30 p.m. through Nov. 17 at a cost of $17; "Pottery I" is taught by Boyd Harris on Tuesdays from 7-10 p.m. through Dec. 1, with a fee of $50; "Batik" will be taught by Kelley Moran on Wednesdays from 7-9 p.m. through Nov. 18 with a fee of $25; and Bob Peetz is teaching "Self Defense for Women" on Thursdays from 7-10 p.m. through Nov. 19 at a cost of $33. Those studying for the Certified Professional Secretary designation can take "Module III" on Saturdays through Oct. 31 for 8 a.m.-1 p.m. at a cost of $24.

You may enroll in the Continuing Education Office in the Administration Building prior to the start of the first class. More information is available by calling 685-4518.

I should mention that Bob Peetz is the college's fulltime instructor in Criminal Justice.

From Staff Reports

Dr. Dan Womochel, paleontologist-geologist with The University of Texas of the Permian Basin, will speak on "New Dinosaurs and News of Dinosaurs" at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the Sibley Environmental Learning Center at Hogan Park in Midland.

Womochel's talk is being sponsored by the Friends of the Nature Center.

He will review "rapidly changing opinions about dinosaur behavior" and will discuss his bareback pursuit of those giant reptiles called dinosaurs, according to a Friends newsletter.

He has "always found his best fossils near home," said the newsletter. And while he was at Auburn University, Womochel uncovered fossils which "led to a better understanding of the earliest known birds and whales."

Womochel has begun to "unfold a treasure" of dinosaur bones in West Texas.

Boone didn't wear coonskin

Great frontiersman Daniel Boone, despite what you may have heard or read, never wore a coonskin cap.

A fearless man, he volunteered to fight in the War of 1812 but was turned down although he was only 78!

EDUCATION IN BRIEF

Girls win 4-H awards

Darla Graham and De Pipkin, both 15-year-old Midland County 4-H Club members, last week were awarded 4-H Gold Star awards.

The Gold Star, which is the highest county-level laurel paid 4-H'ers, recognizes leadership traits and outstanding achievements in the youth-development program.

Miss Graham, daughter of Roy and Sharon Graham of Greenwood, is from a family of Gold Star winners. Her father earned the award in 1956. And her brother Mark, an 18-year-old Texas A&M University agricultural student, and sister Andrea, a 20-year-old Hardin-Simmons University physical-education major, earned the award earlier in the 1980s.

Graham

Miss Graham's 4-H projects include livestock production, foods and nutrition, sewing, arts and crafts, and method demonstrations. Miss Graham is a Greenwood High School sophomore.

Miss Pipkin, a Midland High School sophomore, is daughter of Clawson and Nancy Pipkin. Her 4-H projects include method demonstration, clothing and textiles, foods and nutrition, arts and crafts, and home improvements.

PTA meetings scheduled

The following PTA meetings will be held this week:

Santa Rita Elementary — Tuesday, Oct. 15 at 7 p.m.

Emerson Elementary — Tuesday, Oct. 13 at 7 p.m.

Rusk Elementary — Tuesday, Oct. 13, at 7 p.m.

Planning sessions slated

All eighth-grade students and parents are encouraged to attend an evening of planning for high school at Alamo, Goddard, or San Jacinto Junior High Schools.

The sessions are designed to help parents and students write a tentative four-year plan of curriculum. The plan is necessary to enroll students in ninth grade and to help them become acquainted with the high school curriculum.

The evening sessions are scheduled as follows: Alamo — October 26, 7-9 p.m. in the library, Goddard — October 12 or 20, 7-9 p.m. in the cafeteria, and San Jacinto — October 19, 6 p.m. in the cafeteria.

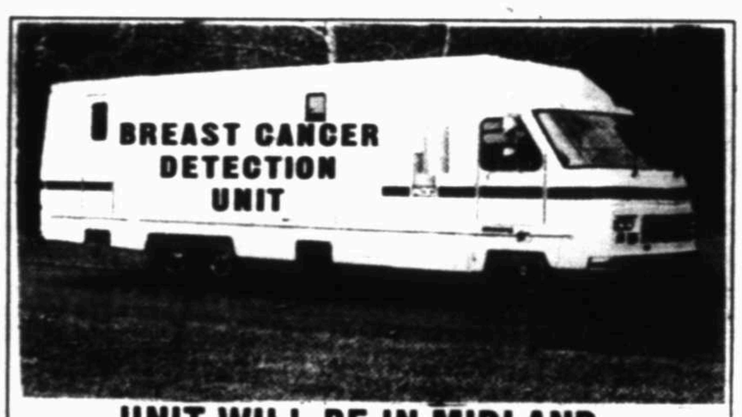

ALL-STARS to serve fajitas

The ALL-STARS of both Lee and Midland High Schools (Freshman and Senior) are sponsoring a fajita dinner, prior to the Midland High School homecoming game, on October 16 from 5:30-7 p.m. at Sam Houston Elementary Cafeteria.

The tickets are $5 each and can be purchased at each high school (all 4) or at the door.

Door prizes will be given away at the dinner.

Women's and Children's Hospital

According to the American Cancer Society, one out of ten women in the United States will develop breast cancer sometime in her lifetime. It is currently estimated that over 37,000 wome die each year as the result of breast cancer.

Ninety percent of breast cancers are diagnosed by women or their physicians finding a lump in the breast. Women who are diagnosed with a lump large enough to feel have a 50 percent five year survival rate. A woman who is diagnosed as having breast cancer by mammography, before a lump can be felt, has a 97% five year survival rate and a 90% 10 year survival rate.

A mammgram can detect a cancer this small, ● even before it can be felt.

Appointments may be made by calling 561-9999

The Mobile Breast Cancer Detection Unit from Odessa Women's & Childrens Hospital will be in Midland on the Old Gibsons parking lot on Cuthbert St.

The American Cancer Society has established guidelines for mammography in asymptomatic women. (Women who have no symptoms of disease). Those guidelines have been adopted by the American Academy of Family Physicians, American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, and The American College of Radiology. THose guidelines are:

I. 35-40 years of age-One baseline mammogram.

II. 40-50 years of age-A mammogram every 1-2 years depending on breast type and risk factor.

III. 50 years of age and over-An annual physical examination and annual mammogram.

IV. Asymptomatic women under years of age with significant high risk factors should be examined at appropriate intevals. These risk factors include previous breast cancer and family history of cancer.

V. A symptomatic woman should have a mammogram at any age when she experiences a mass, nipple discharge, skin changes or unexplained breast pain.

A screening mammogram is an x-ray of the breast using extremely low dosages of radiation (usually comparable to dental x-rays) and is designed to find very early cancers.

A female technologist who i highly trained in mammography will perform the examination.

The charge for the screening mammogram is $50.00. The Unit accepts cash, check, Visa, Mastercard and American Express.

Approved by the American Cancer Society.

Education deserves top campaign spot

The state of education in the nation has emerged as a key campaign issue for the first time in a quarter century. It's long past time.

Although the next presidential election is more than a year away, the quality of classroom teaching has moved to a front-and-center spot on the political debating stage, and that is good news.

There are numerous reasons for this positive development. A basic cause for stepped-up activity in this important area has been the proliferation of surveys and reports concerning weaknesses in our schools and what corrective measures should be taken. It is fair to say that at no time in history have so many examinations taken place as in the past year or two.

The reports have not fallen on deaf ears. The Reagan Administration's able Secretary of Education, William J. Bennett, has taken the leadership in making sure people are listening. He consistently has been prodding parents and teachers, and especially politicians, to take note of delinquencies and do something about them. What's more, that had already begun happening over the past few years. Efforts to upgrade public school education have been carried out in the past two or three years in Texas and many other states.

The upshot of all this is that in recent weeks the presidential aspirants of both the Democratic and Republican parties have been talking about the need for reform in school systems, and making specific proposals. Some of them, to be sure, are taking the easy way out and saying that money will solve all the problems, but the more thoughtful ones are going beyond financial solutions and emphasizing improvements in curricula, such as revitalizing and expanding basic courses.

Others are addressing themselves to the teaching process, and urging that teachers of exceptional ability be recognized with exceptional rewards. the continuing non-partisan discussion of how to improve education has been amazingly constructive.

Secretary Bennett, who has played a key role in making education a key campaign issue, had this to say to the National Press Club in Washington not long ago: "When an issue is arguably the No.1 domestic concern of the American people, candidates have an obligation to become knowledgeable about it and to propose concrete and credible policies based on cogent analysis."

He can be pleased, as can all Americans, that this is precisely what is taking place.It bodes well for a better educated nation.

NRC lawsuit goes after whistleblowers

WASHINGTON — In the fictional "1984," Big Brother tolerated no criticism of his all-powerful government. In real-life 1987, the Reagan administration is trying to stifle criticism by forcing a public-interest group to reveal the names of whistleblowers who had the nerve to speak up about what they believed were derelictions of duty by companies and government inspectors at nuclear power plants.

Jack Anderson

In what is shaping up as a court showdown with far-reaching implications, the Government Accountability Project, a non-profit watchdog organization, has refused to finger informants who gave it embarrassing evidence about alleged incompetence and safety problems at the South Texas nuclear power plant near Houston. This spring, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, which is responsible for ensuring the safe operation of the nation's nuclear power plants, slapped GAP with a subpoena demanding disclosure of its sources.

GAP refused to comply with the subpoena. Then the Justice Department entered the case on NRC's side, asking a federal district judge in Washington to order GAP attorney Billie Garde to turn over the information on the South Texas whistleblowers.

The legal action has aroused concern among other public-interest groups. If GAP can be forced to divulge its sources, conscientious employees in government and industry could be discouraged from taking their complaints to outside organizations. Whistleblowers rely on the promise of confidentiality that these watchdog groups provide; it's the only way they can protect themselves from retaliation by the bosses whose incompetence they have exposed.

Ralph Nader, the father of the modern public-interest movement, is concerned. "This is an outlaw agency (trying) to retaliate against the patriots of industry and government who are blowing the whistle or simply being truthful," Nader told us. "It is all part of the Reagan administration's suppression of information and access to government employees."

GAP's investigation of the South Texas situation was no haphazard affair. It involved 36 informants at the nuclear plant, and Garde spent months assembling evidence of the problems there.

Turning the public-interest group's thoroughness against GAP, the NRC and the Justice Department argued in court that the problems GAP found out about could affect the health and safety of the public. Therefore, the argument goes, GAP is keeping the government from correcting the problems by withholding information from the NRC.

In its response last week, GAP declined to swallow the line being offered by Justice Department attorneys. For one thing, the public-interest group pointed out, the NRC already knows the identity of about a dozen employees who have had contact with GAP — yet commission officials have never questioned them to determine what they may have told the watchdog group. And the information, GAP contends, is protected by an attorney-client privilege between it and the whistleblowers.

As a compromise, GAP has offered to turn over the results of its investigation to an independent investigative entity — but not to the NRC, and especially not to officials at the agency's Region 4 office in Arlington, Texas. That office not only is in charge of the South Texas plant, but has a track record of covering up problems and retaliating against whistleblowers.

As we reported in July, several workers who brought complaints to Region 4 officials in supposed confidence later lost their jobs when their names were leaked to their bosses.

One employee, Charles Atchison, lost his job at the Comanche Peak nuclear plant, near Dallas, after he told NRC officials about defective welds. An internal investigation established that Region 4 officials had indeed broken their promise of confidentiality to Atchison on three separate occasions.

Other employees who helped NRC investigator George Mulley put together massive documentation of lax enforcement in Region 4 were identified when his report was released to Region 4 officials who were targets of the investigation — without his knowledge. They protested vehemently to Mulley.

"Most of these individuals felt that the distribution was done purposely to expose them to possible future retaliation," Mulley testified to a Government Affairs subcommittee chaired by Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio.

Court should make ruling it knows must be made

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

Everyone faces the dilemma in some form or another: there's something in life you really don't want to do, but you know you've got to do.

Levine

Putting it off gives some immediate gratification to the desire not to do it but puts more pressure on you when you actually get around to it.

In a political sense, at least, that's the situation the Supreme Court of Texas faces with the Texaco-Pennzoil case. It's been four months since Texaco asked the court to take another look at the nearly $12 billion judgment a pair of Houston courts say Texaco owes Pennzoil.

Now four months is by no means an inordinate amount of time for the court to take before deciding whether to hear a case. But with interest adding to the judgment at the rate of about $2.5 million a day and the entire U.S. business community watching, the pressure is growing with each passing Wednesday.

The issue is obviously a volatile one. Pennzoil is waiting to collect the largest civil judgment in U.S. history. Texaco has filed for bankruptcy protection. Thousands of Texaco workers and suppliers are wondering, Pennzoil says needlessly, about their future.

No matter how the court rules — even on whether to review the case — someone isn't going to like it. So you can't blame the court for taking their time in making a difficult decision.

While no law says the court has to make a timely move, each no-decision week brings the men closer to a different form of pressure. Four of the nine current justices will be on the ballot next year; two are seeking re-election and two have announced they'll run to fill retiring Chief Justice John Hill's term. That will be five once Gov. Bill Clements names a temporary replacement for Hill.

That brings us to the old bogiebear of Supreme Court politics: campaign contributions. In 1985-1986, according to a copyright story in the Austin American-Statesman earlier this year, lawyers and lawfirms associated with the legal battle contributed nearly $400,000 to the nine justices. That breaks down to $316 grand from Pennzoil's crew and $73,000 from the red star team.

While the court maintains the big bucks won't effect their decision, we've already seen two high court members nailed for indiscretions. And as the costs of campaigning and the plaintiff vs. defense bar struggle for control of the court grow — add in the pitched partisan battle the Republicans promise to provide next year — the candidates will be looking for more and more dough.

The law firms involved in Texaco-Pennzoil — Fulbright & Jaworski, Jamail & Kolius, Baker & Botts, Vinson & Elkins, McMains & Constant — are some of the biggest contributors in the state. As Justice Raul Gonzalez, one of the two men running for reelection, told the Statesman, "There are very few givers out there in judicial races."

Campaign donations have already become an issue in the case. As part of its appeal, Texaco argues that Houston District Judge Anthony Ferris, the original trial judge in the case, should have withdrawn after lead Pennzoil attorney Joe Jamail dropped $10 grand in his campaign coffers shortly before the proceedings began.

At this point, especially if the Supremes decide to hear the appeal, it's best for the justices — and the appearance of Justice — to make a quick decision before next year's campaign pressures and campaign dollars start mounting. If the novenary decides it needs more time to make the right decision, the other seven could avoid suspicion by following the lead set by two of their colleagues.

First, Justice Franklin Spears, who'll quit after his term expires in 1990, is refusing all contributions. Second, Justice Robert Campbell, who's running for chief justice next year, says he returns all donations that come from lawyers involved in any case on the court's docket.

Assuming the Spears option isn't viable in today's campaign world, perhaps all judges out to adopt Campbell's philosophy. It might make running for office tougher, but it sure would help shore up the public's perception of the price of Justice in Texas.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Oct. 11, the 284th day of 1987. There are 81 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Twenty-five years ago, on Oct. 11, 1962, Pope John XXIII convened the first session of the Roman Catholic Church's 21st Ecumenical Council, also known as Vatican II.

On this date:

In 1776, the first naval battle of Lake Champlain was fought during the American Revolution. American forces led by Gen. Benedict Arnold suffered heavy losses, but managed to stall the British.

In 1779, Polish nobleman Casimir Pulaski was killed while fighting for American independence during the Revolutionary War battle of Savannah, Ga.

Computers revolutionizing writing — really!

The wonderful thing about writing with a computer instead of a typewriter or a lead pencil is that it's so easy to rewrite that you can make each sentence almost perfect before moving on to the next sentence.

Russell Baker

An impressive aspect of using a computer to write with

One of the plusses about a computer on which to write

Happily, the computer is a marked improvement over both the typewriter and the lead pencil for purposes of literary composition, due to the ease with which rewriting can be effectuated, thus enabling

What a marked improvement the computer is for the writer over the typewriter and lead pencil

The typewriter and lead pencil were good enough in their day, but if Shakespeare had been able to access a computer with a good writing program

If writing friends scoff when you sit down at the computer and say, "The lead pencil was good enough for Shakespeare

One of the drawbacks of having a computer on which to write is the ease and rapidity with which the writing can be done, thus leading to the inclusion of many superfluous terms like "lead pencil," when the single word "pencil" would be completely, entirely and utterly adequate.

The ease with which one can rewrite on a computer gives it an advantage over such writing instruments as the pencil and typewriter by enabling the writer to turn an awkward and graceless sentence into one that is practically perfect, although it

The writer's eternal quest for the practically perfect sentence may be ending at last, thanks to the computer's gift of editing ease and swiftness to those confronting awkward, formless, nasty, illiterate sentences such as

Man's quest is eternal, but what specifically is it that he quests, and why does he

Mankind's quest is

Man's and woman's quest

Mankind's and womankind's quest

Humanity's quest for the perfect writing device

Eternal has been humanity's quest

From the earliest cave writing, eternal has been the quest for a device that will forever prevent writers from using the word "quest," particularly when modified by such adjective as "eternal," "endless," "tireless" and

Many people are amazed at the ease

Many persons are amazed by the ease

Lots of people are astounded when they see the nearly perfect sentences I write since upgrading my writing instrumentation from pencil and typewriter to

Listen, folks, there's nothing to writing almost perfect sentences with ease and rapidity provided you've given up the old horse-and-buggy writing mentality that says Shakespeare couldn't have written those great plays if he had enjoyed the convenience of electronic compositional instrumentation

Folks, have you ever realized that there's nothing to writing almost

Have you ever stopped to think, folks, that maybe Shakespeare could have written even better if

To be or not to be, that is the central focus of the inquiry

In the intrapersonal relationships played out within the mind as to the relative merits of continuing to exist as opposed to not continuing to exist

Live or die, a choice as ancient as humanities' eternal quest, is a tough choice which has confounded mankind as well as womankind ever since the option of dreaming was first perceived as a potentially negating effect of the quiescence assumed to be obtainable through the latter course of action

I'm sick and tired of Luddites saying pencils and typewriters are just as good as computers for writing nearly perfect sentences when they — the Luddites, that is — have never experienced the swiftness and ease of computer writing which makes it possible to compose almost perfect sentences in practically no time at

Folks, are you sick and tired of

Are you, dear reader

Good reader, are you

A lot of you nice folks out there are probably just as sick and tired as I am of hearing people say they are sick and tired of this and that and

Listen, people, I'm just as sick and tired as you are of having writers and TV commercial performers who oil me in cornpone politician prose addressed to "you nice folks out

A curious feature of computers, as opposed to pencils and typewriters, is that when you ought to be writing something more interesting than a nearly perfect sentence

Since it is easier to revise and edit with a computer than with a typewriter or pencil, this amazing machine makes it very hard to stop editing and revising long enough to write a readable sentence, much less an entire newspaper column

WILLIAM SAFIRE

Casey, Deaver cases show need for caution

WASHINGTON — Never before have we had an administration so eager to subject people to a variety of tests.

By executive order, President Reagan followed the urging of Defense Secretary Weinberger and then-CIA chief William Casey to place 110,000 federal workers under the pressure of the so-called lie detector — which real spies can easily fool, but which instills fear in whistle-blowers.

William Safire

Testing for drugs is another favorite demand. Attorney General Meese is forcing 60,000 Justice Department employees to submit to blood testing or face dismissal.

Testing for AIDS has been the most widely accepted intrusion into the bodies of citizens. What Reagan calls "routine" testing is mandatory; a blood test given everyone entering a hospital is reasonable, but may be the entering wedge for much wider pandering to public fear.

In some cases, an argument can be made for testing: the two military men with the keys to launch an intercontinental missile attack should know that they give up all privacy rights to get those stressful jobs. We tolerate such exceptions, putting public safety before individual rights, just as we willingly submit to searches at airports.

But in most cases, testing is a simplistic solution that poses a greater danger than it addresses. Now our testiest administration has to live with the irony of its pernicious habit of intrusion; consider recent instances in which dangerous mental-physical problems went unobserved in two powerful officials.

William Casey, our director of central intelligence and foremost advocate of polygraphs, took a "lie detector" test every month to set an example. He used to laugh at such tests, because he knew he could beat them; that was why he could challenge James Baker to such a test when the two men clashed over knowledge of the Carter briefing book in "Debategate." (Oversighters and inspectors general might like to see the records of those old Casey tests now, to see how ineffective and misleading the CIA polygraph was.)

Yet here was a statutory adviser to the National Security Council whose brain cells were being attacked by cancer for at least a year, with the disease that was ravaging his judgment undiagnosed, even while doctors were treating him for cancer of the prostate.

Casey was increasingly irritable and short-tempered, and friends noted his loss of physical coordination in holding a highball glass upright, but not until he collapsed with a seizure was his head examined. Only then was a large lymphoma discovered, presumably too advanced for the customary radiation or chemotherapy treatment and requiring immediate surgery.

Next case: Michael Deaver was the president's closest personal adviser. He was the advance man who selected the Bitburg cemetery with its Waffen SS graves as an appropriate spot for Reagan to visit. He was the chooser of ambassadors, architect of Nancy Reagan's publicized anti-drug campaign, and was in touch with the first lady several times a day.

He now swears he was an alcoholic, and I believe him. As a defense against a perjury charge, Deaver reveals he was hospitalized in January 1985 for kidney failure related to alcoholism, and was detoxified at Georgetown Hospital again in June of that year. In between — in late February 1985 — he was the man the Reagans sent to Europe to determine the presidential itinerary.

Was the first lady so involved with her crusade against drug addiction that she failed to notice that her closest confidant was a drunk? Alcoholism is neither a sin nor a crime, when recognized and treated, it is an addiction that can be triumphed over, and Deaver is now fighting his way back to health.

But the man needed help long before he was hospitalized; didn't the Reagans or the presidential doctors know? Didn't they realize, after his first hospitalization, the risks to the nation in sending a man in such deep trouble on a sensitive diplomatic mission?

I do not suggest that presidential aides or National Security Council members or advisers be given "routine" physical or mental tests. I do suggest that people at the top keep an eye on each other, and when one begins acting funny, to make certain that high official is tested or the president warned of any refusal of testing.

Physician, heal thyself; make certain the people in the nation's most sensitive posts are of sound mind and body rather than force all the rest of us to take tests to prove ourselves healthy.

BILL MODISETT

Every location comes with its own set of disasters

Modisett

I had a friend from California once who swore up and down that some day a big chunk of the West Coast would break off and end up in the Pacific.

"Bill, (this guy was also named William and went by the shortened version) I realize that the San Andreas fault line runs through most of California and quakes are quite frequent," I used to tell him, "but don't you think it's exaggerating to say that a piece of the continent is simply going to break off and fall into the drink?"

That would really set him off.

No, no, no, he would swear. It's true. The entire coastline is literally a ledge with the Pacific rushing underneath and some day, well, a tragedy is going to strike.

I honestly hope not because literally millions of American lives would be at stake, innocent people whose last thought might be centered on a disaster of such magnitude. It's too terrible to even consider.

The recent quake was bad enough, according to the official reports and eyewitness accounts. At least six people died as a result of the initial shake and property damage ranged into the millions of dollars.

I've often wondered why a person would choose to remain in an area that was known to experience such natural disasters. For my friend, the answer was easy. He is a happy-go-lucky kind of fellow who doesn't spend his time worrying about what may happen tomorrow; he's content living in today.

But it puzzled me. Is it really wise to be nonchalant about such apparent danger? The answer, of course, is plain to anyone who seeks it. California has earthquakes and hurricanes. Northern states have freezing temperatures. Texas and other southern states have blazing hot temperatures, hail storms and those deadly, twisting tornadoes. Virtually every location has a drawback or two and, in that regard, one might as well take one's chances wherever happiness can be found.

As my friend Bill used to say: "Would you rather take your chances with an earthquake, a tornado, a tidal wave or a rattlesnake?"

He had a point.

Life is a series of tradeoffs. We trade off the pressures of big-city living for what it offers in the form of employment opportunities, cultural attractions, and the like. We trade something for virtually everything we enjoy in life. Nothing comes freely.

The bad goes with the good. The trick is learning to smile in the face of adversity — or, as Bill used to say, California dropping into the Pacific.

MISD's Newman one who needs to wake up

I wish to comment on Mr. Newman's statement made to the Midland paper on Saturday, October 3, 1987 concerning the Circuit Court ruling of single member districts for the Midland School Board.

Mr. Newman's declaration that people of Midland should wake up, or that they don't understand or don't care about the school elections. Well I wish to inform him that some of the silent majority are waking up and want to be heard. Futhermore, I don't understand why he doesn't understand that all we want is fair and equal representation. If single member districts are good for the U.S. and State legislatures than why are they not good enough for the school board. In his hypothesis of at-large system the most popular would win. Could you imagine the U.S. Senate "at-large" where possibly all 50 Senators came from the same state. I don't think Mr. Newman wants this to happen to the United States; then why does he advocate it for the school — or maybe he does.

Perhaps he can manipulate the system to where he gets two votes. Take the hypothetical situation where the four districts are east, west, south, and north. The three at-large chosen could all be from the west. Then any issue the west presented for a vote would pass on a 4 to 3 vote. By the same token any issue presented by one of the other three would go against it on a 4 to 3 vote. The only conclusion I can derive is that people who advocate the at-large method do not believe in the one-man one-vote theory but rather want to assure themselves two votes.

That is the very reason we are having confirmation hearings on Robert Bork, the reason being to keep the Supreme Court equal or making sure it does not go to far right or left. The trouble with Mr. Newman is that he speaks from his head and not his heart. Which in essence is the reason Robert Bork is having so much trouble getting confirmed. He is trying to rationalize a law by what is written instead of using common sense and opening up his heart to what is fair and equitable to all under the law. Brains are not enough, you should also have compassion for your fellow human beings.

MISD teachers don't get 80 percent of funds

I think it is time that the public is made aware of some facts regarding the salaries paid teachers in the Midland public schools. Very often we are told that salaries make up 80 percent of the current budget. This is true, but it leaves the impression that classroom teachers are the recipients of this money. Wrong, wrong, wrong.

Here are the real facts so that you, the public, will have a clear understanding:

1. The 80 percent referred to includes salaries for both teachers and administrators.

2. The raise that teachers received this school year was not an across-the-board affair and there were both teachers and administrators who received no raise at all. This action was far more detrimental to teachers since they make less than administrators.

3. There were 72 teachers who received no raise at all. These were people who were at the top of the scale because of experience. The premise was that most of these people would advance to Level III of the career ladder and their raises would occur through this process. This has proven to be incorrect. Some will advance, others will not be eligible.

4. Most of the salary increases to teachers went to teachers who were on the bottom to middle range of experience (not that they did not need it).

5. Oh yes, teachers don't get paid in the summer for doing nothing. The truth is their salaries are simply divided into 12 payments. Their salaries have already been earned by the end of the school year.

6. Career Ladder (the merit pay system) awards teachers for a supposed superior performance. If this is true, then this is not a part of the normal salary process and should not be considered as a pay raise.

You, the public need to understand that the present system of non-reward is gradually pushing the more experienced teachers from the professional teacher ranks. The professional teachers who have dedicated 20 to 25 years of their lives to the profession and given the Midland system its reputation of excellence feel that they have been used and are now being shown that they are no longer wanted because they are too experienced.

Neely no place for 'safe' bike traffic

I live near Midkiff and Neely and am familiar with the traffic load on Neely. I am very concerned that Neely has been designated as part of the "bike route." One look at the east part of the intersection at Midkiff and Neely should show even the most wishful dreamer that there is no room for bike traffic, at least not safe bike traffic.

The desire to establish a safe route for bike traffic is admirable, but the inclusion of Neely is foolish. I have seen both experienced and casual riders look bewildered at trying to cross Midkiff at this point.

I am afraid someone is being set up to become another tragedy. An article in Sunday's (Oct. 4) paper touted this "safe" bike route. Is it really?

Homer McFly, family express their thanks

My family and I, Homer McFly-Midland Angels mascot, would like to take this opportunity to thank Curt Wilcott and the Midland Reporter-Telegram for the wonderful feature on Homer McFly on the Monday, Sept. 7, edition of the MRT.

We would like especially to thank Wilcott for the excellent pictures and writing of the article. We were treated with courtesy and professionalism the entire evening he spent with us to do the feature.

We also would like to thank the Midland Angels, Bill Davidson, and Matt Perry for giving us the privilege of doing something we love so much. Just the opportunity of seeing the look in the little ones' eyes is the most gratifying thing of all. Homer really appreciates all of his fans, whether young or old, each is special.

We look forward to another great season in 1988.

Community unites to end dropout problem

By DR. JOHN W. MCAFEE SR.

Dr John W McAfee Sr. has been a Midlander for five years, having moved here from Terrell. He is serving as education chairman of the Midland Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. He is employed as principal of Pease Elementary School.

Time and energy, two mainstays in the successful development of any program, culture or society have a nasty habit of creeping up on us. This is particularly true in light of current needs for relevance in today's black society, especially in the field of education.

We, as a group of people, have to be in the forefront in meeting the needs of our race and our society. There is presently an alarmingly significant set of statistics regarding black children dropping out of high schools nationwide. The percentages of black students dropping out of high schools rivals those percentages of the Depression years when economic circumstances demanded high attrition rates of blacks from the educational forum to the workforce as a means of survival.

Blacks have made significant gains into the realms of education and society in America since that particular period of time. No longer are our people disaggregated to insure weaknesses and to eliminate strengths of unity toward a common goal, i.e., "to fight illiteracy, poverty and ignorance, to insure that our children become productive citizens in our democratic society."

It has been suggested by many that for any race or group of people to survive, they will have to, as the old cliche goes, "Pull up their own bootstraps."

Well, concerned black educators and individuals are doing just that to minimize the problem of black student dropouts in Midland. A tutorial assistance program has been developed utilizing present and retired Midland Independent School District teachers and concerned individuals.

The program is aimed at students in grades 5 through 9. Areas of concentration are limited to language arts and mathematics.

Presently, three sites for instruction have been secured: Hollowell United Methodist Church, Bethel Baptist Church and the Washington YMCA. A fourth possible site is Pease Elementary School. Days of instruction will be limited to Tuesdays and Thursdays. Hours of instruction are from 5 p.m. to 6 p.m.

The program is under the sponsorship of the Midland Branch of the NAACP. Dr. John McAfee will direct the program. Volunteer staff members are Mrs. Mamie Williams, Ms. Alma Marshall, Miss Christine Dilworth, Mrs. Maggie Cornelius, Dr. Ruby Morris, Mrs. Barbara Yarborough, James Clay, Mrs. Felicia Hammond, Mrs. Una Merle Evans, Mrs. Helen Jenkins, Mrs. Cassandra Jones, Mrs. Mae Beth Tryon, Mrs. Cecille Brooks, Mrs. Marjorie Lombard, Mrs. Karen Walker, Willie Barber, Ms. Johnnie Walker, Ms. Iris Hall and Mrs. Doris Richardson.

Because no tuition will be charged to any of the students and all of the teachers are volunteers, there is a need for organizations or individuals to donate items to the program. Items needed are paper, pencils, chalk, compasses, protractors, etc. If you are interested in donating any of these items, please contact Dr. John McAfee Sr. at 697-8101 or 684-6132.

The program is tentatively scheduled to begin on Tuesday, Oct. 20, 1987. Please contact Dr. McAfee for any other information.

"Speaking Out" columnists are invited to submit articles on subjects of their choice. They should be limited to 850 words or less.

FLORA LEWIS

French presidential race may be watershed

Lewis

PARIS — The French campaign for next spring's presidential election may well turn out to confirm a watershed in the history of republican France two centuries after the revolution.

The violence, the terror, and the passion of 1789 left France deeply divided for most of the time since then. The pendulum swung drastically from one side to the other, but the chasm between left and right remained.

Now, however, the issues have narrowed. Talk about "changing society," the left's slogan in 1981, or "the fate of France," the right's rallying cry in 1986, is no longer convincing. The pendulum has slowed way down, coming much closer to the traditional American question of which set of rascals should be in and which set out.

This is a profound change for France and suggests a new political stability, though it can also mean restraint on governmental ability to take initiatives. It is largely the result of the Socialist triumph in 1981, and the victory of the rightist coalition in legislative elections of 1986, producing power-sharing between President Mitterrand, a Socialist, and Premier Jacques Chirac. The French call it cohabitation.

At first, it was taken as a risky but short-term aberration. The politicians hate it, of course, but they have had to make it work because the voters would punish whichever side brought it to collapse.

Now it is becoming clear that the voters rather like a system that imposes checks and balances that did not previously exist, that reins in the scope for political free-wheeling. The succession of left and right governments demonstrated that neither side has a sure cure for French problems.

Both sides promised to solve unemployment and it is still going up. Both sides promised dramatic invigoration of the economy and it hasn't arrived. Some gloomy economists are even predicting that Italy will overtake France in national output within a few years, whoever wins the election. The number of people who think the election will make a huge difference no longer seems very big.

Polls show a surprising popularity for Mitterrand despite his party's definite minority standing. There is no chance that the Socialists could go on to regain a parliamentary majority if he is re-elected and dissolves the legislature. He probably wouldn't dissolve, so re-election may depend on whether the voters want to prolong cohabitation for the remaining three years of the legislature's term.

If they do, Mitterrand, who is 71, is likely to be given another seven-year term and the voters would have another chance to endorse or reject cohabitation in 1991 assembly elections. Even if they don't, the new president would be expected to restrain himself and not turn the legislature back into the abject rubber stamp that it was in the Gaullist years.

This amounts to a transformation of the Fifth Republic. It reflects the change in French society that has taken place since the great confrontation of 1968 and the decline of the French Communist Party.

With the Communists on the margin, the stakes of the struggle have diminished for all but the "classe politique," the wonderful French phrase for the small group that lives off practicing, watching, or backing politics.

This shows in the petty, personal patronage issues of the campaign and will no doubt keep it dull. Unlike in the U.S., the candidates are all known although several haven't yet declared, and none are being knocked out. The big surprise would be if Mitterrand retires, and it isn't likely.

Chirac and former Premier Raymond Barre are the main contenders facing him. The role of the nationalist right-winger Jean-Marie Le Pen provides what emotion there is in the campaign, and while it is nasty, it doesn't change the basic shift of contention to control of the growing but ill-defined center.

There has always been an endemic extreme-right fringe in France, waxing and waning in response to single-issue protests. In the 1960s, it was Pierre Poujade, whose movement was against mounting taxes. In the 1970s, it was Philippe Nicaud, representing French shopkeepers up in arms at the rise of supermarkets, an attempt to stem modernization of the retail distribution system.

Le Pen's issue is uglier: racism and the advent of multi-ethnicity challenging the traditional French sense of identity because of widespread Arab and African immigration. But that, too, will fade because the immigrants are here to stay and will eventually assimilate.

As it prepares for its bicentennial, republican France is at last settling down. It's a good sign for France's allies.

President's achievements not diminished by Bush defeat

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — Despite the major political setback President Reagan suffered by the Senate Judiciary Committee's negative vote against Judge Robert Bork's nomination to the Supreme Court, there have been a number of encouraging developments for the president and the country recently.

Most important of all, the economy is now in the 59th consecutive month of its growth — thanks to the president's recovery program, the longest peacetime expansion since the Civil War. In September, the unemployment rate dropped below 6 percent for the first time in a decade.

Foreign investors are continuing to pour money into the U.S. despite dips in the stock market from its skyrocketing high and gloom and doom forecasts about a serious recession in 1989 or '90. In the past 30 months, foreign investments totaled close to 80 billion dollars.

A bright new feather in the president's achievement cap was the agreement in principle reached with Canada a week ago to eliminate all tariff and other trade barriers between the two countries within 10 years. When completely implemented, this historic pact with our northern neighbor will create the world's largest open market.

President Reagan said it will "strengthen both our economies and over time create thousands of jobs in both countries." Prime Minister Brian Mulroney predicted it will lead to 350,000 new jobs in Canada.

In addition to removing all restrictions on U.S. wheat, grain and meat exports to Canada, the agreement will block foreign auto companies, especially Japanese and South Korean, from continuing to use Canada as a base for duty-free sale of cars in this country. It will also ease restrictions on U.S. investments in Canada.

Canada will benefit by the removal of all American trade barriers on its agricultural and manufactured products. It will also gain access to oil from Alaska's North Slope. Disputes, particularly over any new restrictive trade laws enacted by either country's legislatures, will be subject to binding settlement by binational arbitration.

Canada is America's biggest trading partner. Three quarters of its foreign trade is done with the U.S. The province of Ontario, by itself, imports more American goods than any country elsewhere in the world.

The momentous move toward uniting the two countries economically is very gratifying to me. For more than a decade, my Pop urged in his newspapers that Canada become part of the U.S. Several years ago one of Britain's most respected publications, The Economist, advocated merger of the two countries. Noting that for 2,000 miles "there is a wholly artificial straight line frontier," it said geography meant North America to be one country. In 1775, the congress of our 13 newborn states sought unsuccessfully to bring Canada into the union. In 1849, more than 1,000 Montreal citizens signed a Tory-sponsored Annexation Manifesto.

The Economist said if Canada became the 51st state, it would rank with California as one of the union's most populous states, adding: "And who says California carries no weight in Washington? Not its former governor, who now sits in the White House."

In the past, it was Canadian liberals who urged free trade with us. This time, it was a conservative government led by Mulroney who has been called the most pro-American prime minister in Canada's history. At the risk of his political career, he worked for 18 months with an American conservative president to forge the free trade agreement. The two Irishmen hit it off well, but ratification of the agreement will face strong opposition by special interest groups in both countries. Let us all urge our own representatives in Congress to support this mutually beneficial bond of good neighborliness.

Working while you're pregnant

Many women today keep working up until a very short time before they have their babies. All it takes is a little planning and following the suggestions you'll find below.

It used to be that when a woman became pregnant she quit her job. But no more.

That doesn't, however, mean a woman won't go through all the bodily changes that take place during pregnancy.

But it needn't be a problem. All it takes is a few simple steps such as the ones we've listed here.

How to cope with morning sickness

It's more difficult to work up to your full potential when you're nauseous.

But there are some ways of controlling your out-of-sorts stomach.

Most doctors, for example, recommend you keep some sort of non-acid, non-greasy food handy. You might try keeping a box of crackers in your desk.

Some women get morning sickness as soon as they arise. If this is the case, keep a box of crackers on your bedside table, so you can nibble before you even get up. And in cases where you're "morning sick" all day, you might try eating several small, bland meals instead of three larger ones.

In any case, it's important you do eat properly.

Have your baby at The BirthPlace

The BirthPlace is a completely new concept in maternity care now available at AMI Women's and Children's Hospital in Odessa.

Our new facilities allow expectant mothers to choose the birthing options they prefer – from traditional labor and delivery to birthing room. And the liberal visitation and rooming-in policies at The BirthPlace allow your family and friends a better opportunity to share the joy of you new baby.

We call The BirthPlace a family maternity center. If you're interested in learning more about this innovative approach to maternity care, call us at 334-8200.

Don't forget about good nutrition

It's easy to get so caught up in your work that you don't eat the way you should. In any case, that's bad. When you're pregnant, it can be disastrous.

Force yourself to eat a well-balanced diet of proteins and vegetables. Stay as far away as possible from fatty foods.

Eat food high in fiber to calm hungerpangs and keep you regular.

Avoid beverages that are high in sodium or caffeine. And eat plenty of cheese, yogurt, cottage cheese, and milk.

Control your cravings! As hard as it may be, giving in to cravings can be a source of too much of a good thing, and a lot of extra calories.

Your doctor will probably also recommend prenatal vitamins. Take them. You and your baby both need the extra help.

Smoking

Don't do it. Smoking isn't good for anybody, but it can be especially bad for your baby.

We know it won't be easy to quit. You're under the pressure of work and surrounded by smoking co-workers.

But here are the facts. Smoking has been directly related to spontaneous miscarriages, stillbirths, premature births, and labor complications.

Smoking can also prevent you and your baby from using certain vitamins and minerals in the food you eat.

Women who smoke often have smaller babies, and there's an increased chance of brain damage.

You've probably always wanted to quit smoking. Now you have the best reason ever to do it.

Exercise

Years ago, pregnant women went to bed. But that's not you, or you wouldn't be working.

In any case, doctors say you need to get exercise. Don't sit at your desk too long. Schedule several regular breaks during the day. Walk to lunch, or take a walk when you get home. (A good pair of support hose can help with that extra weight you're carrying around.)

If you have a regular exercise program, you should be able to continue it with your doctor's permission. Ask for your doctor's advice. Now is not the time to start jogging or any exercise that is particularly strenuous. And if you feel fatigued or uncomfortable at any time during exercise, take it easy.

Choose the childbirth course that suits you

- Early Pregnancy
- Prepared Childbirth/Lamaze
- Infant/Child CPR
- Sibling Class

For a complete list and current schedule of our classes, call The BirthPlace at 334-8200.

Avoid stress

This may be the hardest part of working while you're pregnant. You have to learn to relax.

We suggest you plan a time each day to sit back, forget about the problems of business, and spend a few minutes with your baby. Whenever possible, elevate your legs at the office – and at home. It'll help you relax and can relieve leg discomfort and swelling.

By taking a little time to relax, you'll feel better, your baby will be better off. And your work will still get done.

Never forget that even though you are working, you're pregnant. The world will need to adjust a little for you.

For more information call 334-8200

For more information about The BirthPlace, call us today. We'll be happy to tell you all about our childbirth classes and provide a tour of our facilities. Just ask.

And if you need help finding a physician, you can call us at 334-8200. We'll give you the names of several doctors from which to choose.

Short-stay options and flat-rate pricing

Not every new mother and baby requires the same amount of time in the hospital. At The BirthPlace, you have a choice about how long your hospital stay will be. If your physician agrees, you may opt for a one-day, two-day, or three-day stay after delivery. (Cesarean births often require a longer hospital stay.) And, of course, the shorter your stay, the lower your hospital bill is likely to be.

The BirthPlace has designed specific flat-rate pricing plans for its short-stay options. These prices are based upon a normal, uncomplicated delivery, and prepayment is required for any portion not covered by your insurance (or if you are not insured). Call us for more information.

Angelo will be roasted at dinner for benefit of blindness society

From Staff Reports

Ernest Angelo Jr., independent oilman, Republican national committeeman for Texas and former Midland mayor, will be honored by the Texas Society to Prevent Blindness at its first annual "People of Vision" dinner.

The celebrity roast is set for Oct. 22 at Green Tree Country Club.

Proceeds from the event will benefit the Texas Society to Prevent Blindness, a non-profit agency working to prevent blindness in Midland by offering free vision screenings for children and an adult glaucoma alert program, which includes glaucoma screenings, eye safety programs for industries, schools and other public and professional education programs.

Serving as dinner chairman for the roast, the first to be held in Midland by the Texas Society to Prevent Blindness, is Robert L. Monaghan, president of Cal Mon Oil Company.

Joining Monaghan on the dinner executive committee is Deane H. Stoltz, chairman of the board of Tipperary Oil and Gas Corp.

Roastmaster for the evening will be Bill Heck, assisted by State Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland; George Strake, Texas Republican Party chairman; Chet Upham, former Texas Republican chairman; David Godfrey, former Midland city councilman; Rick Shelby, a key official in the 1980 and 1984 Reagan presidential campaigns; Ray Barnhart, federal highway administrator; former U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler; and three longtime Midland business and civic leaders William L. Adam, William J. Mewhorter and Judge Vann Culp.

"Oct. 22 is guaranteed to be an evening of fun with Ernie Angelo," said Monaghan. "It is an occasion not only to contribute substantially to the fight against blindness but also to pay tribute to an outstanding citizen and businessman. Ernie Angelo has given tirelessly of himself to the community. Now, it's time to give something back."

Tickets are $100.

For additional information on tickets and reservations, write to P.O. Box 2066, Midland, Texas, 79702.

The prevention of blindness is more relevant now than ever before, according to a press release from the state office of the Texas Society to Prevent Blindness. "With knowledge and technology available today, half of all blindness is preventable. Blindness is one of the great personal tragedies which persons of all ages are subject to," the press release satated.

In Texas, one out of every 20 preschool children is affected by visual problems which can usually be corrected if discovered and treated before school age. And, more than 100,000 Texans have glaucoma and one-half don't know it. Vision screenings provided by TSPB can detect the problem.

From July 1985 through June 1986, 36,000 pre-school children and 47,000 adults were screened by TSPB staff and volunteers.

'Dallas' aired in Algeria to show evils of capitalism

By KEN HERMAN

AUSTIN (AP) — Algeria's effort to use the TV program "Dallas" to show the evils of capitalism apparently has backfired because Algerians are fascinated by the glamour and intrigue at Southfork, a researcher said Saturday.

"The message of 'Dallas' is clear and simple. Get rich. And getting rich is appealing in a country where the official unemployment rate is 17 percent," said Yahia Mahamdi, a University of Texas graduate student who is studying the popular television show's effect on Algeria.

Mahamdi reported some of his findings Saturday at the annual meeting of the Texas Association of Middle East Scholars, which met at the University of Texas.

He said the initial question is why the television show is offered to Algerians. He said the most likely reason is the government of the self-proclaimed socialist country in northern Africa has tried to "discredit the American capitalist system."

Mahamdi added there are also probably economic reasons for showing "Dallas" in Algeria.

"Algerian TV is not (unusual) in using cheap, imported programs instead of the poorly made and less entertaining local productions."

Algerian viewers get a watered-down version of "Dallas." It is dubbed in French and Arabic and government officials remove excessive violence, partial nudity, and suggestions of sexual relations, according to Mahamdi.

"Kissing is usually only allowed between married or engaged characters," he said.

The show is heavily criticized by the Algerian press and religious leaders. Mahamdi quoted a newspaper review that said "Dallas" "plays on the weakest human instinct to pass on its message about sex, violence, money, individualism, amoralism and immoralism."

Despite the criticism, many Algerians love the show, Mahamdi said.

"The free market economy and the idea of wealth and luxury associated with it, the myth of unlimited freedom in business and social behavior and the absence of the state in the affairs of the individual appeal to a good portion of the population, which has grown tired of a paternalistic and authoritarian state...which has largely failed to deliver the happy and prosperous future it has promised to all segments of the population," Mahamdi said.

"Southfork is an ideal habitation for the average Algerian viewer," he said.

And in some ways, the television show has permeated everyday life in Algeria, he added.

"For the male audience, a young Algerian woman passing by might be called 'Pamela' to signify she is pretty," Mahamdi said.

THE ADVERTISING COUNCIL

Where there's a need, there's a way.

The United Way.

Your United Way is different from all other organizations. That's because it not only responds to the unmet needs of the community, but it also gets involved in health and human care situations before problems arise.

So when the people in your community need it, it's there—to help prevent a nightmare before it happens. Or to help turn a nightmare back into a dream.

Your United Way gift does more things for more people who really need help than any other single gift you can give. And thanks to you, it works for all of us.

The problem isn't how little we care. The problem is how little we do about it.

We think of ourselves as a nation of caring people. And, in principle, it's absolutely true.

Most of us contribute money to at least one cause. Nearly half of us contribute time. Confronted with a direct appeal, we respond instinctively with help.

The trouble is that, too often, it's not much more than token help. A dollar here, an hour there, and then it's back to the concerns of our own lives.

But think about it, for a minute. If we all gave just five hours a week to the causes we care about, it would be like mobilizing a force of more than 20 million full-time volunteers. If we all gave just 5% of what we earn, it would come to $175 billion a year.

It has to start with somebody, though. And not somebody else. Us.

So take a look around your own community and find something that needs doing. Or make that next donation a little bigger than usual. But, whatever you do, do something.

After all, one person may not be able to make that much difference.

But 200 million people can make all the difference in the world.

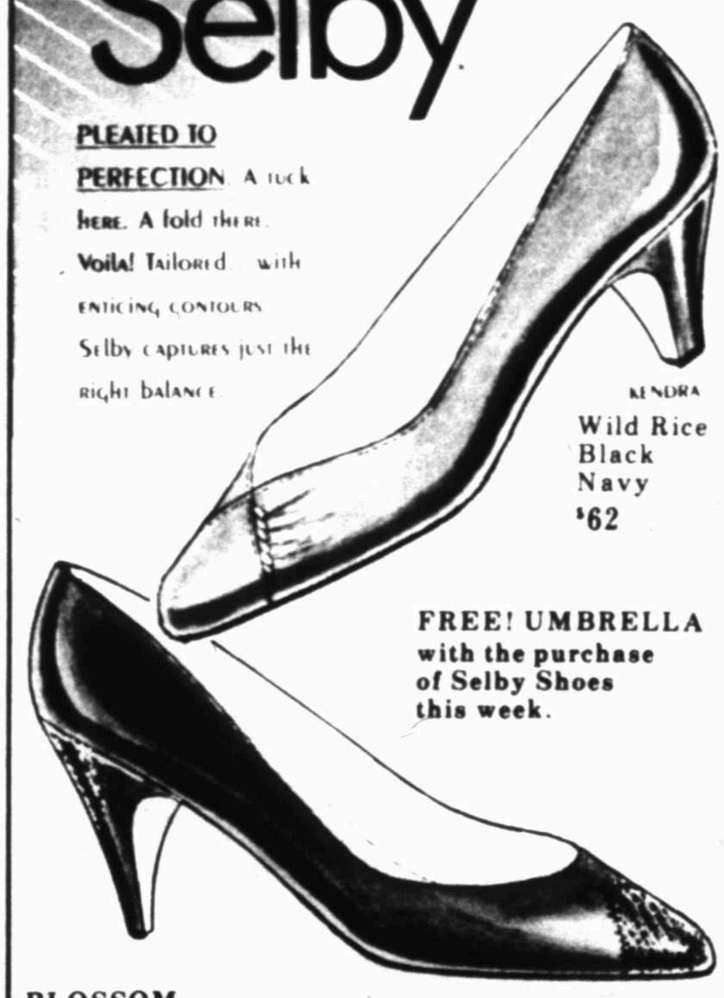

What you give is five.
What you get back is immeasurable.

Ex-DPS officer mad over son's jaywalking conviction

PLAINVIEW (AP) — A former Department of Public Safety officer is hopping mad over his 18-year-old son's jaywalking conviction, and he doesn't plan to take it sitting down.

Alton Carmichael, who now works for Southwestern Bell Telephone, said the jaywalking ticket is moot because his son Cory didn't violate any laws when crossing a street near Plainview High School.

He also says city police are singling out high school students and not properly enforcing the jaywalking laws in effect.

So he and his son appeared in municipal court on Oct. 2 and appealed the conviction to county court, complaining that Cory was fined $100 while the other 40 or so students who received jaywalking tickets paid only $15 fines.

No date has been set to hear the appeal in county court, but Carmichael has hired a lawyer and says he and other parents are contemplating a class-action suit against the city.

The city, partly in response to citizen complaints, removed the school-zone crosswalk that students formerly used to cross Quincy between 14th and 16th streets.

They are now required to cross at intersections and primarily use 16th Street, where the intersection is controlled by traffic signals.

Carmichael says the state jaywalking law doesn't apply to his son because it indicates that people can cross in mid-block as long as they don't interfere with the flow of traffic, and there was no evidence his son's action caused problems.

Carmichael also claims that a city ordinance doesn't apply either because it refers only to downtown. And, he argues, he sees people jaywalking downtown every day and nothing is done about it.

"They're taking this one age group (high school students) and picking on them," Carmichael said.

Utilities offer to work on Star Wars

HOUSTON (AP) — Four Texas utility companies are offering to help develop a massive superconducting battery needed for the proposed Star Wars nuclear defense shield.

The utilities are among at least 12 nationwide seeking the experimental Superconducting Magnetic Energy Storage system, which would initially occupy between 60 and 150 acres.

The battery would provide the instantaneous burst of energy needed for the defense shield. The Pentagon first wants to build a small battery which, if testing is successful, will lead to construction of a larger $1 billion battery to be used with Star Wars.

"If it works out the way we think it will, it will be used by a utility 99 percent of the time, and other percent of the time it will be used to power a laser weapon system," said Defense Nuclear Agency Lt. Col. Sam McKinney.

The utility that hosts the system would be able to save millions of dollars by being able to generate power at off peak hours for storage in the battery for use at peak demand times.

The brief energy burst needed for the missile defense system would require roughly half the electricity Houston Lighting & Power produces daily for its 1.3 million customers, a company spokesman said.

The other Texas utilities seeking the project are Texas Utilities, Central & South West Corp., and the Lower Colorado River Authority.

UTPB faculty set to receive 8.2 percent raise

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Despite a 0.5-percent overall budget cut, average tenured faculty at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin will receive an 8.2 percent pay raise this year, the UT System announced Friday.

Also Friday, the UT board of regents approved the construction of start up facilities to house UTPB's new $4 million Center for Energy and Economic Diversification.

The salary increase at UTPB is the smallest among the 13 UT components and well below the 10.9-percent average for the seven academic institutions. Average faculty salaries at UTPB will increase from $33,067 to $35,795. Lawmakers reduced UTPB's annual appropriation this summer.

The average among the seven academic institutions jumped from $37,558 to $41,640. The smaller increase at the Odessa campus allowed average UTPB salaries to fall from fourth to fifth behind UT-Tyler. Faculty at UT-Austin will average $45,711 during the 1986-1987 school year, tops among the schools.

Jack Blanton of Dallas, chairman of the UT board of regents, said the budget the board adopted Friday puts UT's institutions "once more on the path to academic excellence." Blanton particularly praised the Legislature for increasing funding for faculty pay during this summer's long budget battles.

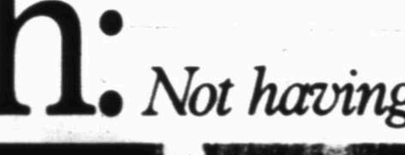

"In the pursuit of excellence in teaching, research and patient care, nothing is more important than support for the faculty, the top priority of this budget," Blanton said. "By providing monies for a healthy and much needed boost in faculty salaries, the 70th Legislature has permitted the UT System to be competitive once again in the recruitment, retention and support of this most precious resouce."

The new Center for Energy and Economic Diversification will be financed partially under agreement with the Texas Permian Basin Foundation Inc. and partially with Permanent University Fund bonds. It will house management and research units that will be dedicated initially to UT-Austin research activities in the Permian Basin, most likely the Center for Electromechanics and the Bureau of Economic Geology.

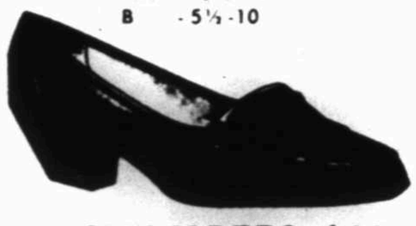

The center will be located on land being donated by the Scharbauer family of Midland. An initial $800,000 planning grant came from the Odessa Industrial Development Corp.

Do you have a typical family?

Yes.

It's that simple.

Because in today's society, the stereotype of the traditional American family -- a working father, housewife mother and two children -- is no longer typical. In fact, less than 7% of U.S. households fit this pattern.

Instead, today's traditional family covers a broad spectrum from single parent households to blended or step families. More and more, our families are feeling the impact of divorce, increased lifespan, delayed childbirth and other changes which affect both the individual and the family unit.

And, at Family Services of Midland, we know that families often have problems. It's typical. Whether dealing with everyday difficulties and frustrations or coping with the effect of a traumatic event, Family Services can help family members gain a better understanding of their roles and responsibilities to one another. Addressing a wide range of needs, Family Services offers programs which include:

- Individual and family counseling
- Employee assistance
- Family life education
- Child abuse counseling and prevention
- Public information

As our society becomes increasingly complex and diverse, our families will be faced with new challenges. For help in meeting these challenges, call Family Services of Midland at 685-0174. Our services are professional and confidential. Fees are charged on a sliding scale, based upon family size and income.

At Family Services of Midland, we believe every family is an ideal family.

Especially yours.

OU rolls UT, 44-9; A&M holds Houston, 22-17

Sooners pick off 'Horns on 'worst' day

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

DALLAS (AP) — The top-ranked Oklahoma Sooners handed Texas its worst passing day in the Longhorns' 94-year football history Saturday.

The unbeaten Sooners intercepted seven passes in rolling to a 44-9 victory in the annual intersectional grudge match between Red River rivals.

"Everybody here saw a great defensive team in the second half," Oklahoma Coach Barry Switzer said. "It was a great performance, both as a team and on an individual basis.

"The turnovers in the second half led to 31 points and to me that won the game."

Switzer said Texas had him worried.

"Our wins over Texas never come easy," Switzer said. "They are down some right now but they'll be back. We have our bats now but it comes in cycles and they'll get theirs.

"Our guys did a great job at the start of the second half. We played a hell of a game in the second half."

Running back Lydell Carr, who scored two touchdowns, said the Sooners "were upset with ourselves in the first half. And we said we were going to have a second half with some points on the board.

"We had a little huddle before the offense went onto the field and said 'Let's do it right.' This is the last time for some of us here and we wanted to walk up the tunnel with heads held high."

Oklahoma led only 13-6 at halftime.

Switzer said he told the team at the half: "The defense is doing a good job, but the offense has to get going."

Oklahoma has now gone 17 quarters without giving up a touchdown.

Texas quarterback Brett Stafford, who served up five of the interceptions, said the Sooners "scored on our mistakes. You can't throw interceptions."

Texas Coach David McWilliams agreed, saying "those interceptions did it. We came in wanting to fight and compete hard and we did a good job of that. You have to play an error-free game to beat Oklahoma and we didn't come close to doing that."

The seven interceptions tied an Oklahoma record.

"We played a full 60 minutes on defense," Switzer said.

Ricky Dixon and Derrick Crudup each had two interceptions for the Sooners.

The Sooners, 5-0 and off to their best start since 1978, put the Longhorns away with three third-period touchdowns after interceptions.

With Oklahoma leading only 13-6, Dixon returned an intercepted pass 50 yards to set up a 44-yard Jamelle Holieway touchdown pass to Carl Cabbiness.

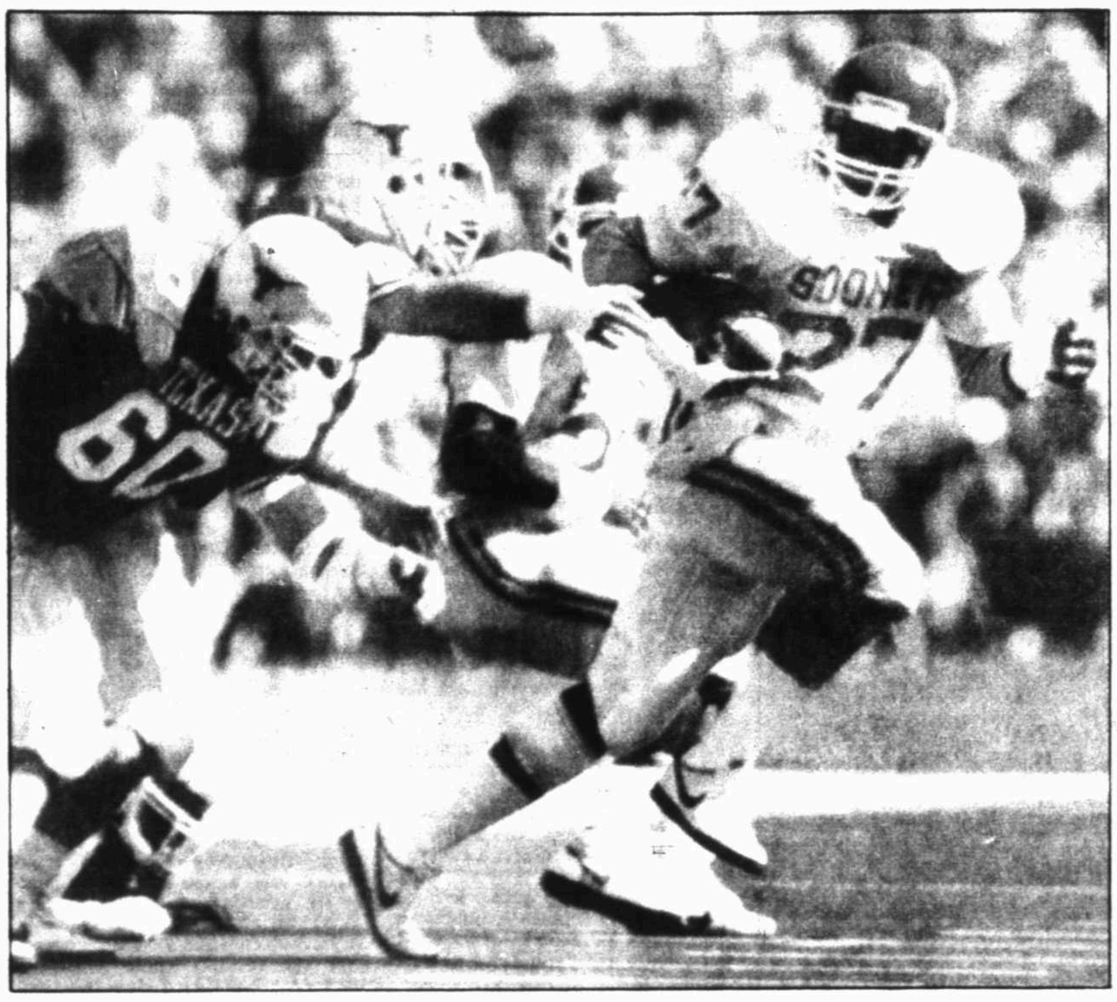

The Sooners struck again only 76 seconds later on Carr's 32-yard scoring run after a Troy Johnson interception.

Crudup's interception, a 21-yard run by Holieway and Patrick Collins' 4-yard scoring run put the Longhorns away with a 21-point quarter.

Texas, 2-3, went into the game as a 30-point underdog, largest in the 82-year history of the college football series.

The surprised Sooners trailed for the first time this year when Wayne Clements kicked a 52-yard field goal late in the first period for a 3-0 Texas lead.

Aggies survive bad passing performance

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Texas A&M coach Jackie Sherrill wasn't pleased with the passing in his team's 22-17 Southwest Conference victory over Houston Saturday, but he praised freshman quarterback Bucky Richardson.

"I thought Bucky did some good things. None of our quarterbacks threw the ball very well. We were very, very poor throwing the ball," Sherrill said.

Richardson guided A&M to four scores with his scrambling running style. A&M's No. 3 signal-caller, he entered the game for senior Craig Stump with 2:14 left in the first quarter and may have won the quarterback battle with Stump and No. 2 Lance Pavlas, although all three played.

"Coming into the game, they told me I would play, but I had no idea I would play as much as I did," he said. "The offense is going to have to put some points on the board and not keep depending on the defense to win games for us. Nobody is happy with the way we played. We were too inconsistent.

Houston coach Jack Pardee said, "We just need to keep trying hard. We're still in the drawing room. I guess we haven't paid our dues yet."

The victory raised A&M's record to 2-3 for the season and 1-1 in the SWC. The loss spoiled a homecoming for Pardee, an All-American A&M fullback in 1956, and an assistant coach there in 1965, and dropped the Cougars to 1-3 and 0-2.

A&M led at halftime 16-7, with its longest scoring drive built on penalties against Houston.

Scott Slater scored first with a 46-yard first-quarter field goal, and fullback Matt Gurley dove over from the 1 for a 10-0 A&M lead. Houston responded with a 2-yard run by Kimble Anders.

With no time outs remaining, A&M drove 73 yards, with 41 yards in penalties against Houston, to score on a 2-yard run by Larry Horton.

Houston scored in the second half on a short-shovel pass that Anders carried 50 yards for a touchdown with 3:56 left in the third quarter and Chip Browndyke's 31-yard field goal with 5:34 left in the fourth quarter.

Frogs' Jeffery, Darthard run over Owls, 30-16

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas Christian used a quick-strike offense to score 17 first-quarter points and then pounded Rice with double 100-yard rushers Tony Jeffery and Tony Darthard for a 30-16 Southwest Conference victory Saturday.

Jeffery gained 197 yards on 34 carries and scored on runs of 6 and 7 yards, leading the Horned Frogs to their first SWC victory this season and ending a 2-game losing streak to the Owls.

The Frogs gained 429 yards rushing but Owls Coach Jerry Berndt said he was pleased with Rice's second-half performance.

"I was proud of our kids for the way they came back in the second half and made a game of it," Berndt said. "But again, offensively we weren't a verry good football team."

Jeffery said the Frogs had confidence in their running attack.

"We knew we could run the ball against Rice," Jeffery said. "Their end was taking the pitch, so the give to the outside was there.

"This game was important because we knew we should have beaten Rice last year."

Rice got a 271-yard passing performance and two second half touchdown passes from Quentis Roper, but the Owls offense got started too late and turned the ball over five times.

Roper hit 22 of 31 passes to lead the Owls.

Stingy Hogs keep ball from Tech

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

LUBBOCK — "They came to see a good game," said Arkansas Coach Ken Hatfield. "And I think they saw it."

What the fans saw, coach, was a bunch of spoiled brats who showed up with their own football and wouldn't let anybody else play with it.

Arkansas gained revenge for last year's humiliation in Fayetteville with a win by an unexpected 31-0 margin to spoil homecoming for 40,458 fans at Jones Stadium Saturday night.

And after last week's win over Texas A&M, it was quite a let down.

It wasn't so much the Red Raiders were flat, just that they seldom saw the ball.

The Razorbacks scored on all four of their first half possessions, driving 74, 71, 74 and 11 yards for two touchdowns and two field goals while controlling the ball for 18 minutes and 47 seconds in the process.

In the second period, Tech ran just 11 plays plus two punts and a missed 52-yard field goal attempt by Scott Segrist. The Raiders had the ball only three minutes and seven seconds.

That's precisely the way Hatfield and his staff planned it.

"Tech came into the game with the No. 1 offense in the SWC and we wanted to keep it on the bench," said Hatfield.

"Even in the third quarter, we drove 56 yards with the kickoff and failed to score, but we controlled the ball for six minutes or so." Actually, Kendall Trainor added a 41-yard field goal, to go with earlier 39 and 21 yarders, to make it 24-0, thus giving the Hogs a 5-for-5 night with 9:10 left in the third. That is, five possessions and five scores.

A HINT of a long night for the Raiders came when Arkansas fumbled a punt and Tech recovered at the Arkansas 14. The Hogs still hadn't run a play from scrimmage.

"We fumbled the punt and then stopped them on fourth down inside the five," said Hatfield. "Then we drove the length of the field (74 yards in 15 plays) and Trainor kicked a field goal (39 yards)."

The drive also established who was in control.

Hatfield's other keys to victory included a good pass rush that made them throw on the run and shutting down the running game. "They couldn't run enough to keep us off balance."

The difference between Tech's 17-7 win last year and this year was Arkansas' ability to control the line of scrimmage. "We remembered how their tackles stuffed us last year," said Hatfield.

This time Arkansas' flexbone opened things up for fullback James Rouse, who gained gained 111 yards on 16 carries and scored on a two-yard run in the second period to give the Hogs a 21-0 lead with 1:21 left in the half.

This came off an interception of Tech quarterback Billy Joe Tolliver and set up an 11-yard scoring drive.

That score, combined with freshman quarterback Quinn Grovey's 31-yard TD pass to Derek Russell with 2:45 left in the half pretty much settled issue.

WHAT OPENED things up for Rouse was the quarterback combination of starter Gregg Thomas, 33 yards rushin) and Grovey (6-of-9 for 111 yards), a pair it took Tech three periods to solve.

Tech never really mustered a scoring threat after that early fumbled punt recovery, although Hatfield said the Raiders' offense is "scary."

"We knew how fast they could score. They showed that on the drive just before half." Tolliver moved Tech from its 28 to the Arkansas 27 before time ran out.

"Sure we were anxious to do better than last year," said Hatfield when asked about the revenge motivation. "But after they beat us, they beat Texas, went to a bowl and beat A&M last week. There is no animosity, however, just respect."

For Tech, it was a dreadful letdown. The passing game produced

Sheridan's homer saves Tigers, 7-6

DETROIT (AP) — A balk, a base-running blunder and Pat Sheridan's two-run homer in the eighth inning — and the Detroit Tigers had dodged almost certain defeat in the American League playoffs.

Sheridan, seldom-used and slumping badly at the end of the season, homered with one out in the eighth, giving the Tigers a 7-6 victory over the Minnesota Twins in Game 3 of the playoffs Saturday.

That cut Minnesota's lead in the best-of-seven series to 2-1 and gave the Tigers a chance to pull even in Game 4 Sunday night, when they will send left-hander Frank Tanana, 15-10, against Minnesota's first-game starter, Frank Viola, 17-10.

"Sometimes, clubs get on a roll when everything they do turns out right," Tigers Manager Sparky Anderson said. "The Twins looked like that, and at least we broke that roll now."

The game also marked a switch in bullpen fortunes for the two clubs. Rookie Mike Henneman, ineffective in Game 1, was the winner with three scoreless innings of relief, stopping a leak that had allowed the Twins to come back from a 5-0 deficit to lead 6-5.

Thus, the Tigers avoided a disadvantage from which no playoff team ever has recovered. The Twins won the first two games, and no team ever has come back to win a seven-game postseason series after falling thre games behind.

"This'll tell you how my career has gone," Sheridan said in the post-game news conference. "I've never been to one of these before. I guess my career just started slow and tapered off somewhere.

"I've never been in the limelight, and I probably wouldn't be very good at it," said Sheridan, who had only five hits in his last 68 regular-season at-bats.

Sheridan's last homer came Aug. 20 against the Twins. That time it was off Keith Atherton. This time, it was against ace Jeff Reardon.

"I never learn to live with it," Reardon said. "Everytime I don't do my job, I feel the same way. I don't feel that good right now."

ALONG WITH Reardon's victory, the Twins bullpen also had a save in Game 2 from Juan Berenguer. Henneman, on the other hand, pitched

Leonard homers again

Giants rally to tie series at two

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Jeffrey Leonard and the San Francisco Giants switched on the power and Mike Krukow shut off the St. Louis Cardinals 4-2, evening the National League playoffs at two games apiece.

Leonard set a record by homering in his fourth consecutive game and tied the mark for homers in a series. He now has seven hits in 13 at-bats in the playoffs. His contract provides for a $50,000 bonus if he is named most valuable player in the playoffs.

"This is a lot better than other Octobers," said Leonard, still bothered by a hamstring injury that put him out of action for a month. "But I'm still not running at 100 percent."

Against the Cardinals, Leonard has not had to run. Instead, he has been taking some of the slowest home-run trots in history. It was his two-run drive into the swirling wind at Candlestick Park that put the Giants ahead 3-2 in the fifth inning.

"I knew I hit it real good," Leonard said. "Help of the wind, see you later."

Robby Thompson and Bob Brenly also connected against starter Danny Cox for the Giants, who out-homered St. Louis 206-94 this season.

"He (Cox) didn't complain at all about the cold weather," St. Louis Manager Whitey Herzog said. "Those three home runs did him in."

Krukow, a 20-game winner last season who lost his spot in the rotation this year because of inconsistency, overcame RBI singles by pitcher Danny Cox and Vince Coleman in the second inning to finish with a nine-hitter. He struck out three and walked one and benefitted as San Francisco tied a playoff record with four double plays. The third ended the Cardinals' eighth and the last ended the game.

The Giants, who led the majors with 183 double plays this season, set a playoff record with their ninth of the series. The Los Angeles Dodgers turned eight in four games in 1974 and Montreal had eight in five games in 1981.

The 1981 Dodgers and the 1975 Oakland Athletics each turned four in one playoff game.

"I'm elated with the win," Krukow said. "It was a game where we played brilliant defensively."

Greg Mathews, the winner in Game 1, will oppose San Francisco's Rick Reuschel in the fifth game Sunday. Reuschel took the loss in the opener.

Leonard, swinging one of the hottest bats in playoff history, came through in the clutch when he stepped to the plate in the fifth after Kevin Mitchell's two-out double.

Leonard lofted Cox's first pitch high to left field and it was uncertain whether it would clear the fence. The ball seemed to hang in the wind and then dropped over the wall, just above the leaping Cole-

MHS volleyball hopes need strong finish

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland High got off to a slow start, but rallied for a District 4-5A volleyball sweep over Midland Lee Saturday afternoon, 10-15, 15-5, 15-6, at the MHS gym.

The victory still leaves the Bulldogs with a 4-3 district record and needing a final five-game charge if they are to repeat last year's playoff berth. The Rebels fell to 1-6 in 4-5A play.

Midland Lee started quick by breaking a 10-10 tie with five consecutive points in the first set. Ronnie Sandoval put away with winning spike and had another in the late charge. Monica Ramirez had two key dinks while the Rebs got good floor play from Susie Dunn and Leah Burnett.

However, Lee's offense went into the doldrums during the next two sets as MHS came back for the win.

"We've been getting off to a slow start this year with early missed serves and first hits. Then we struggle," said MHS coach Sonja Pittman. "It wasn't really one of the better matches by either team."

Tuesday's Games

Midland High at Odessa Permian, Odessa High at Midland Lee, Abilene High at San Angelo. Abilene Cooper open. All JV games at 6 p.m., followed by varsity games.

THE BULLDOGS took the second set by a 15-5 margin with Gordy Rodriquez putting away the winner with a booming spike. Theresa Brown served three straight points at the end, including two that couldn't be returned by the Lee defense. La Shauna Bradley got the Bulldogs going with some early spikes in the set.

MHS then put it away in the third set as Molly Nelson, not a factor in the first two sets, came up with torrid spikes the Rebels couldn't handle. She also put away the match winner with an ace serve. Bradley and Brown were again big factors in the final set.

"We could have started better, but it is always like this with us," said Nelson. "We beat Lee just like this the first time we played, but we played a little better this time."

Lee coach Janice Baulch was a little upset after the loss and after blowing the first set win.

"You have to play defense and offense in this game, and when you don't do either, it's hard to win," said Baulch. "Even if you play good defense, it works only so long without any offense."

Lee plays Odessa High Tuesday while MHS takes on Odessa Permian.

League leader San Angelo at 6-0 drew the open date Saturday. Second place Abilene Cooper (6-1) moved to within ½-game of the lead with a 15-4, 15-8 win over Odessa High. Abilene High stayed in third place with a 15-11, 15-12 win over Odessa Permian.

MC Mustangs claim 64-45 six-man victory

From Staff Reports

Tony Corona outdid even himself Friday night, leading the Midland Christian Mustangs to an unbeaten 6-0 mark with eight touchdowns and 330 total yards in a 64-45 shootout with Klondike.

Corona, who has been the stalwart of the Mustang offense for three years, had his best day ever in leading MC to an explosive first and third quarters and hanging on for the win.

Corona ran for seven of the scores and caught a pass from Joel Hobbs for the other. Ronnie Patteson scored the other MC score, also on a pass from Hobbs.

Midland Purple still unbeaten

From Staff Reports

Midland Purple (4-0-1) remained undefeated in ninth grade football action Saturday with a 21-9 victory over stable mate Midland Gold.

Lee Maroon tied Odessa Bonham in a 13-13 standoff and Lee White lost to Odessa Crockett by a 20-7 margin. In other ninth grade action of the Midland-Odessa conference, Odessa Hood escaped Odessa Bowie, 27-21, to go to 4-1 and Ector defeated Nimitz, 14-0.

In the eighth grade Midland-Odessa conference, Goddard ran to a perfect 4-0 mark with a 32-7 win over Bonham and Alamo moved to 3-1 with a 39-0 win over Crockett. San Jacinto was open, Bowie beat Hood 26-8 and Nimitz edged Ector, 13-12.

In the eighth grade city conference, Trinity moved to a perfect 3-0 record with a 15-0 win over Alamo while Goddard and San Jacinto fought to an 0-0 tie. Goddard is in second place with a 1-1-1 record.

In the seventh grade American conference, Goddard Red and Goddard White seem to be moving for a shootout. Both stand at 4-0 after Red defeated Alamo Grey by a 32-0 count and White won a 22-0 decision over San Jacinto Green. Alamo Scarlet won a 24-14 decision over San Jacinto White for their first win of the season.

man's glove.

That fourth homer tied the record set by Bob Robertson of Pittsburgh in 1971 and equaled by Steve Garvey of the Dodgers in 1978.

The Giants' dugout spilled onto the field to greet their hero and the record crowd of 57,997 roared. Only after home-plate umpire Eric Gregg waved Leonard back onto the field for a curtain call did the fans settle down.

Thompson ended an 0-for-11 streak with a solo home run in the fourth that pulled the Giants within 2-1.

Brenly homered in the eighth with one out.

MHS tips Abilene; Cooper downs Lee

From Staff Reports

Midland teams pulled off a split with the Abilene schools in District 4-5A tennis action Saturday, but it took a dramatic finish for Midland High to pull out a win at the MHS Courts.

Behind in matches by one, 9-8, MHS' Susan Johnson at No. 4 girls singles, pulled out the final set in her match in a 7-4 tie-breaker for a 2-6, 6-4, 7-6 win. The final set pushed the set total to 24 for MHS, 23 for AHS and upped the 'Dogs record to 1-3, 4-4.

4-5A Tennis

"Susan stepped on the court for the last set knowing that the team would win or lose on her match," MHS coach Steve Hoover said. "My hat goes off to her for handling the pressure with outstanding character and poise."

Lee didn't fare as well and was overpowered by Abilene Cooper, 14-4, in falling to 2-2 in district, 6-5 overall. The Rebels only wins came from the boys as Lance Cunningham and Kevin Considine took singles wins and Cunningham and Eric McDonald teaming up for one doubles win and Jody Casey and Burke Bradford for the other.

Midland High's girls took six matches from the Eagles with Elizabeth Ameel, Mandy Thorpe, Johnson and Krissy Hall accounting for all six wins.

Huskers roll; Irish suffer first loss

Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. — Third-string I-back Ken Clark scored two touchdowns as second-ranked Nebraska rolled over Kansas 54-2 Saturday in the Big Eight Conference football opener for both teams.

The Cornhuskers, 5-0, scored the first five times they had the ball against the out-matched Jayhawks. Fullback Micah Heibel ran in from the 3, I-back Tyreese Knox scored from the 1 and Chris Drennan kicked a 40-yard field goal in the first quarter.

Clark scored on a 4-yard run in the second quarter and Drennan bounced a 43-yard field goal on top and over the crossbar in the second quarter.

Miami 46, Maryland 16

MIAMI — Designated punt-blocker Bubba McDowell set up 17 first-half points for Miami and the third-ranked Hurricanes cruised to a victory over Maryland in the rain-soaked Orange Bowl.

The Hurricanes, 4-0, were outplayed in a sloppy first half, but they came out ahead in the score 17-8 because Maryland, 2-3, couldn't block McDowell on punt attempts.

When McDowell blocked the first punt attempt by Maryland's Darryl Wright, teammate Bennie Blades picked it up and rambled 22 yards for the game's first touchdown.

Pittsburgh 30, Notre Dame 22

PITTSBURGH — Sal Genilla, who nearly lost his starting job in practice, threw for a touchdown and ran for another as Pittsburgh turned two first-quarter Notre Dame turnovers into a 27-0 halftime lead and held on for an upset of the fourth-ranked Fighting Irish.

Craig "Ironhead" Heyward ran for two first-half touchdowns, broke the 2,000-yard career rushing mark and carried a school-record 42 times for 132 yards — his sixth consecutive 100-yard game — as Pitt, 4-2, handed Notre Dame its first loss in four games.

Genilla, nearly benched after throwing four interceptions in Pitt's 13-10 upset loss to Boston College, hit Billy Osborn on a crossing pattern for 30 yards and a TD with 6:02 left in the first quarter.

Auburn 48, Vanderbilt 15

AUBURN, Ala. — Auburn quarterback Jeff Burger threw for a career-high 284 yards — including two touchdown passes — and Curtis Stewart scored twice on short runs as the fifth-ranked Tigers rolled to a SEC victory over Vanderbilt.

Burger, the SEC's leading passer, did little to hurt his ranking before he left the game after the third quarter with Auburn leading 34-9. The senior hit 14 of 18 passes in a long-range attack that included seven completions more than 20 yards.

Florida State 61, S. Mississippi 10

HATTIESBURG, Miss. — Tailback Victor Floyd scored two touchdowns and sopohmore Sammie Smith rushed for 142 yards to spark No. 6 Florida State past Southern Mississippi.

Florida State's offense kept the Golden Eagles off-balance throughout the football game with timely delay plays — three for touchdowns — and key passing from Danny McManus.

Floyd's touchdowns came on a 20-yard draw in the third period and a 14-yard pass from backup quarterback Chip Ferguson in the fourth.

Clemson 38, Virginia 21

CLEMSON, S.C. — Terry Allen rushed for a career-high 183 yards and scored two touchdowns as No. 8 Clemson rallied to defeat Virginia.

The victory left Clemson 27-0 against the Cavaliers — the longest active winning streak by one Division I team against another. The Tigers are 5-0 overall and 2-0 in the ACC, while the Cavaliers drop to 3-3 and 1-2 after seeing their three-game winning streak snapped.

Wesley McFadden rushed for 119 yards, the first time in two years the Tigers have had two runners gain more than 100 yards in a game. The Tigers rushed for 403 yards and had a total offense of 485 yards.

LSU 26, Georgia 23

ATHENS, Ga. — Tom Hodson's 5-yard touchdown pass to Brian Kinchen with 3:36 remaining in the game lifted seventh-ranked Louisiana State over No. 16 Georgia in SEC play.

The Tigers had seen a 16-3 lead evaporate when Georgia struck for two touchdowns within a span of 2:47 to take a 23-19 lead on Rodney Hampton's 14-yard scoring run with 6:58 left in the game.

The Bulldogs got within range with 9:45 remaining when James Jackson hit Cassius Osborn at the Georgia 40, with Osborn racing down the right sideline to complete the 74-yard scoring play.

LSU had problems throughout the game scoring touchdowns from close range, reaching the Georgia 5, 1 and 10-yard lines and settling for field goals.

David Browndyke had four field goals for the Tigers covering 26, 20, 35 and 21 yards. LSU's other touchdown came on a 36-yard pass from reserve Mickey Guidry to Tony Moss.

Indiana 31, Ohio St. 10

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Dave Schnell passed for 200 yards and two touchdowns and Anthony Thompson rushed for 126 yards and another score as Indiana defeated No. 9 Ohio State for the first time in 36 years.

Indiana broke a 10-10 tie at the half as fullback Tom Polce scored two second-half touchdowns.

A 40-yard punt return by Tony Buford gave the Hoosiers possession the Ohio State 19 with 3:09 remaining in the third quarter. Four plays later, Polce went six yards on a counter to make it 16-10. Pete Stoyanovich, who kicked a 44-yard field goal in the first half, added the extra-point.

Brian Dewitz then intercepted a Tom Tupa pass at the Indiana 28 with 13:19 left in the game and returned it 18 yards.

Tate beats Olajide to win IBF crown

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Frank Tate was a poor second in the wardrobe department to Michael "The Silk" Olajide. Once the fight began, Tate ripped the Silk to threads.

Scoring knockdowns in the 11th and 12th rounds, Tate won the previously vacant International Boxing Federation middleweight title indoors at Caesars Palace on Saturday with a one-sided 15-round decision.

Olajide, a flashy fighter and flashy dresser who entered the ring in a designer robe with a multi-colored dragon on the back, bears a strong facial resemblance to singer Michael Jackson.

"There was no way I was going to let a Michael Jackson lookalike come in here and take a title," Tate said at the post-fight press conference.

"As you saw, he fought my fight," Tate said, and he did dictate the pace from the first round.

"He fought a beautiful fight," said the previously unbeaten Olajide. "This is an extremely disappointing day for me."

Tate, a 2-1 underdog, became the fourth member of the 1984 U.S. Olympic boxing team to win a pro championship.

With about a minute left in the 11th round, Tate landed a jab and followed with a crashing right to the side of the jaw that dropped Olajide face down. Olajide pounded his glove in frustration, then struggled up at the count of five. It looked as if he might fall again as referee Richard Steele continued the manadatory eight-count. He stayed upright, however, and weathered a furious two-fisted storm in the final minute of the round.

In the opening moments of the 12th round, Olajide missed with a left hook and Tate came over it with a right hand that landed above and to the right of Olajide's left eye. Olajide went down and took a nine-count on his knee.

But Tate was just too arm-weary to follow up and was content to box in the last three rounds.

Judge Jerry Roth scored it 147-136, Judge Chuck Giampa saw it 146-135 and Judge Bill Graham 148-134.

Ramirez KOs Boza-Edwards in fifth round to retain title

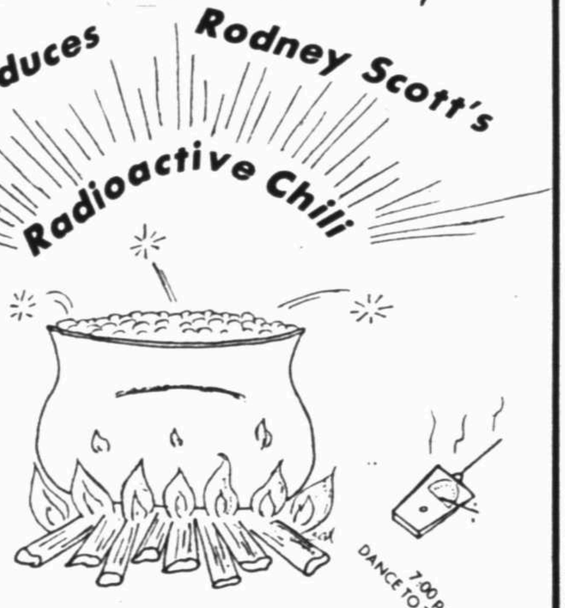

PARIS (AP) — Jose Luis Ramirez of Mexico knocked out Cornelius Boza-Edwards of Uganda in the fifth round Saturday night to retain his World Boxing Council lightweight title.

It was Ramirez' first defense of the title after regaining it in July. He had the title from November, 1984 to August, 1985 before losing it to Hector Camacho. After Camacho gave up the crown, Ramirez regained it by beating Terrence Alli of Guyana.

Goebel leads Bears past SWTS, 36-15

WACO (AP) — Brad Goebel threw for one touchdown and set up three other scores to lead Baylor to a 36-15 victory over stubborn Southwest Texas State Saturday night.

The game was tied 15-15 at the half, but Southwest Texas lost quarterback Ron Rittiman to injury and the Bears, co-leaders in the Southwest Conference with a 2-0 mark, pulled away.

Charles Perry and reserve quarterback Jay Mapps scored on 1-yard runs and Darnell Chase grabbed a 19-yard TD pass from Goebel in the second half as Baylor improved its record to 5-1 for the season.

Southwest Texas of the Southland Conference fell to 0-5, its worst start since the 1938 season.

Baylor's first-half points came on Bobby Jack Goforth's 29-yard run and a 5-yard run by Perry that was set up by Goebel's 54-yard pass to Steve Stutsman.

But Southwest Texas countered with an 11-yard run by Richard Gordy, Kyle Matlock's 35-yard field goal and Darryl Grant's 17-yard pass from Rittiman on the final play of the first half.

Rittiman completed 7 of 21 passes for 147 yards, but suffered a jaw injury on the play and never returned.

Goebel completed 16 of 25 passes for 268 yards.

The Bobcats' Mike Murphy had three receptions for 105 yards, and tailback Reggie Rivers gained 101 yards in 15 carries for the visitors.

Spartans intercept Michigan, 17-11

Associated Press

EAST LANSING, Mich. — Lorenzo White rushed for 185 yards and two touchdowns and Michigan State's defense had seven interceptions, four by safety John Miller, as the Spartans upset No. 12 Michigan, 17-11.

The final pair of interceptions, by safeties Harlon Barnett and Todd Krumm, ended late Michigan drives and sent a sellout crowd of 77,424 into a frenzy.

Barnett's theft of an errant Demetrius Brown pass came on the Michigan State 10-yard line with 3:09 left in the game and aborted a Michigan drive that had covered 40 yards in 10 plays.

Krumm's interception came with only 26 seconds left, as the Wolverines mounted a desperation effort from their own 20, and gave Michigan State its first home victory over their intrastate rivals since 1969.

AP Second 10

Washington 27, Arizona St 14

SEATTLE — Tony Covington scored on a 1-yard run and Brandy Brownlee kicked a 36-yard field goal in the fourth quarter as Washington beat 13th-ranked Arizona State in a Pac-10 game.

Washington dominated the fourth quarter after the defending Rose Bowl champion Sun Devils rallied from a 17-0 halftime deficit with a pair touchdown passes from Daniel Ford to Chris Garrett to make it 17-14.

After the second Arizona State touchdown, the Huskies drove 73 yards in 11 plays for their third touchdown on Covington's run.

Penn State 35, Rutgers 21

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. — Blair Thomas surpassed 100 yards rushing for the fourth straight week and scored three touchdowns as 14th-ranked Penn State beat Rutgers.

Thomas, the nation's eighth-leading rusher, gained 116 yards on 20 carries as Penn State improved its record to 5-1. Rutgers slipped to 3-2 despite Scott Erney's 32 of 55 passing for 346 yards and three touchdowns.

The victory vaulted Penn State Coach Joe Paterno into seventh place on the all-time vistory list with 204.

Thomas ran 9 yards to give Penn State a 7-0 first-period lead. Rutgers tied it 7-7 near the close of the first quarter on a 13-yard pass from Erney to Bruce Campbell. But Thomas scored from 3 yards in the second period to give the Nittany Lions a 14-7 lead.

Memphis St. 13, Alabama 10

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Memphis State defensive tackle Greg Ross returned a pass interception 24 yards to set up a 47-yard, fourth-quarter field goal by John Bulter that gave the Tigers a stunning victory over 15th-ranked Alabama.

Butler, who kicked a 37-yard field goal on the final play of the first half, made what proved to be the game-winning kick six plays after Ross had turned the Tide away from the Tiger goal line.

Alabama quarterback Vince Sutton was tackled by nose guard Tory Epps as he released the third-and-11 pass and Ross gathered in the football and ran 24 yards to the Memphis State 45.

The critical interception came on the play after a 6-yard scoring run by Alabama tailback Kerry Goode was wiped out by a holding penalty.

Florida 65, Fullerton St. 0

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — Freshman Emmitt Smith surpassed 100 yards rushing for a school-record fifth consecutive game and scored two touchdowns as 18th-ranked Florida routed Fullerton State.

Smith, who had 130 yards on 22 carries and started the day as the nation's third leading rusher, hiked his season totals to 836 yards and 10 touchdowns. He had only 16 yards in limited playing time in the opener at Miami before beginning the streak of 100-yard days in his second game.

Oklahoma St. 42, Colorado 17

STILLWATER, Okla. — Thurman Thomas rushed for 110 yards and Mike Gundy threw for two touchdowns as 19th-ranked Oklahoma State beat Colorado in the Big Eight opener for both schools.

Thomas carried 23 times and scored once as he went over the 100-yard mark for the fifth straight game. Gundy completed 21 of 28 passes for 257 yards to eclipse the 1,000-yard mark this season.

The Cowboys improved to 5-0 for the first time since 1945, while Colorado fell to 3-2.

Oklahoma State broke open a tight football game by capitalizing on back-to-back fumbles by Colorado fullback Michael Simmons early in the third quarter.

Hawaii keeps New Mexico winless in 41-31 slugfest

ALBUQUERQUE N.M. — Sophomore quarterback Walter Briggs, putting in a bid for fulltime work, ran for 180 yards and accounted for three touchdowns as Hawaii outslugged winless New Mexico in a WAC game, 41-31.

The victory, the first for the Rainbows in three visits this season to the mainland, gives Hawaii a 3-2 record and 1-1 mark in the WAC. New Mexico is 0-5 overall and 0-3 in the conference.

Briggs, who took over from starting quarterback Warren Jones early in the first quarter, engineered back-to-back third quarter touchdowns by the Rainbows that put the game out of New Mexico's reach.

Briggs' 14-yard scoring run with 11:44 left in the third quarter capped a 65-yard, seven-play drive on Hawaii's first possession of the second half.

And after New Mexico halfback Shane Hall fumbled the ball away at the completion of a 12-yard pass reception to the Hawaii 27, Briggs guided the Rainbows 73 yards on nine plays for an insurance TD.

In that drive, Briggs rolled out on a fourth-and-goal from the New Mexico 1-yard line, eluded three Lobo tacklers, then found halfback Heikoti Fakava open in end zone traffic.

TEXAS

The Sooners charged 78 yards with Carr scoring on a 7-yard run. Holieway's 32-yard pass to tight end Keith Jackson on third down and 12 set up the score.

Holieway rushed for 70 yards on 15 carries to become the top career rusher among Oklahoma quarterbacks. He has 2,093 yards in surpassing Steve Davis' 2,059.

Holieway left the game with a jammed shoulder but he returned with less than a minute to play.

Oklahoma built its first-half lead to 13-3 on field goals of 46 and 22 yards by R.D. Lashar against a stubborn Longhorn defense.

Texas trimmed it to 13-6 with 17 seconds left in the first half on a 46-yard field goal by Clements, a sophomore transfer from Tulane.

Clements kicked a 36-yard field goal in the fourth period and Lashar also made his third, from 29 yards out.

Oklahoma's second-string quarterback, Charles Thompson, ran 55 yards for a touchdown to close out the scoring. He took a hard hit with less than a minute to play but walked off the field under his own power.

The interceptions surpassed by one the previous Texas record for aerial futility. The Longhorns had six passes intercepted in 1944 against Randolph Field and again in 1978 against Baylor.

It was the Oklahoma-Texas coaching debut of David McWilliams, a former Longhorn player and an assistant under Darrell Royal and Fred Akers.

Slater kicked Aggie field goals of 20 and 32 yards in the second half.

Houston moved to the A&M 23 with time running out, but successive sacks of Cougar quarterback Andre Ware by cornerbacks Alex Morris and Chet Brooks for 22 yards in losses clinched the victory.

Browndyke's two missed field goals cost the Cougars a possible victory.

The first attempt of 39 yards was blocked by A&M linebacker Dana Batiste with 11:47 left in the second quarter. The second attempt of 44 yards was wide left with 4:59 to go in the second period.

Richardson, a 195-pounder from Baton Rouge, La., ran 11 times for 60 yards, leaping over tacklers on three carries. He completed three of 10 passes for 31 yards.

Ware, among the nation's total offense leaders, completed 15 of 27 passes for 206 yards with no interceptions.

"The way we moved the ball, rushing for over 400 yards," TCU Coach Jim Wacker said. "Jeffery and Darthard are execellent backs and (David) Rascoe executved the veer as well as it can be executed.

"We didn't let down, we just stayed with our ground game and tried to run the clock."

TCU defensive coordinator Rick Johnson was unhappy with his team's second half performance.

"We came out with execellent emotion, our offense took control of the game early but I'm very distressed tha our defense doesn't play 60 minutes of football but we're going to go about correcting that," Johnson said. "We had a major breakdown in our pass defense in the second half."

"Arkansas just beat us in every phase of the game," said Spike Dykes, whose words sounded like a carom of Hatfield's "We played our most complete game. We didn't make any turnovers, our kicking game was great and our punt coverage was great. That's important because they are so explosive."

"We feel like we still, have a chance to be a good football team. Beating two great teams in a row is a sign of a good football team and we've got to learn, to do that," said Dykes.

Columbia sets losing record at 35

Associated Press

PRINCETON, N.J. — Columbia set the NCAA Division I football record for most consecutive losses at 35 Saturday as the sons of former controversial Lions coach Jim Garrett gained a measure of revenge and led Princeton to a 38-8 victory.

Columbia, 0-4 this season, has not won a game since defeating Yale 21-18 on Oct. 15, 1983, and it is winless in 38 games since then, compiling an 0-36-2 record and breaking the old mark held by Northwestern.

Loss No. 35 in the losing streak was hardly in doubt after the first quarter as Princeton and the Garretts scored the first three times they had the ball with the opening score coming just 21 seconds into the game on a 58-yard run by Judd Garrett, one of three TDs by the tailback.

The all-time NCAA losing streak in football is held by Macalaster of St. Paul, Minn. The Division III school lost 50 straight games in a streak that ended at the beginning of the 1980 season.

Oregon 34, Southern Cal 27

EUGENE, Ore. — Freshman Bill Musgrave threw three touchdown passes as surprising Oregon knocked off Southern Cal to move into a tie for first place in the Pac-10 race.

The Ducks, who haven't been to a bowl game in 24 years, scored their third upset of the season and defeated the Trojans for the first time since 1971.

Oregon, 4-1 overall, is tied with UCLA at 2-0 in the Pac-10. The two teams meet next weekend in Los Angeles. Southern Cal, losing in Eugene for the first time since 1970, dropped to 2-1 in the conference and 3-2 for the season.

Wyoming 29, Brigham Young 27

PROVO, Utah — Craig Burnett passed for 308 yards and three touchdowns to help Wyoming take control in the WAC title chase with a win over Brigham Young.

Wyoming, which scored all its points in the second half, now has beaten three teams picked to vie for the WAC crown.

Burnett, his team down 14-0 at halftime, tied the score with third quarter TD passes of 4 and 10 yards to Tom Kilpatrick and Darrell Perkins.

Purdue 9, Illinois 3

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. — Jonathan Briggs kicked three field goals in the first half as Purdue defeated fumble-plagued Illinois to give coach Fred Akers his first victory as a Big Ten coach.

James Medlock added a career-high 131 yards for the Boilermakers, who recovered eight of 10 Illini fumbles, including one at the Purdue 1-yard line in the third quarter. The eight lost fumbles tied a conference record.

Briggs, already Purdue's career-leader in field goals, made attempts of 44, 23 and 37 yards for the only points of the first half. The kicks gave the senior 32 in 44 attempts — including a 9 of 12 mark for the season and seven straight.

College Roundup

Iowa 31, Wisconsin 10

MADISON, Wis. — Iowa quarterback Chuck Hartlieb threw for two touchdowns and ran for a third score and the Hawkeyes' defense stifled Wisconsin in a Big Ten victory.

Hartlieb helped the Hawkeyes, now 4-2 and 1-1 in the Big Ten, to a 21-0 lead with a 51-yard, first-quarter touchdown pass to Marv Cook and a 1-yard touchdown run early in the second quarter.

In the third quarter, Hartlieb hit Quinn Early with a 9-yard touchdown pass to make it 28-10. The score came five minutes after Wisconsin had stunned the Hawkeyes on Marvin Artley's 66-yard touchdown run on the third play of the second half. Wisconsin is now 2-3 and 0-2 in the Big Ten.

Missouri 34, Kansas St. 10

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Darrell Wallace uncorked two long scoring runs and became Missouri's career rushing leader while sparking the Tigers to a victory over winless Kansas State.

Wallace, a 5-foot-7, 168-pounder who dedicated his senior season to his slain father, scored on runs of 51 and 31 yards as Missouri handed K-State its 10th consecutive loss. He finished with 99 yards for a career total of 2,393, surpassing the previous record of 2,357 yards by James Wilder.

Arizona 23, California 23

BERKELEY, Calif. — Arizona quarterback Jeff Hammerschmidt fumbled on California's 21-yard line with 42 seconds left in the game to stop the Wildcats' drive, and left the Golden Bears with a 23-23 tie in a Pac-10.

Arizona, 2-2-1 and 0-1-1 in conference play, took a 16-7 lead on the first play of the third quarter when cornerback James DeBow intercepted a pass by Troy Taylor at the 16-yard line.

California, 0-4-1, scored the tying touchdown, with just 3:36 remaining in the game, on a 5-yard pass from Taylor to slotback Rob Bimson.

Minnesota 45, Northwestern 33

EVANSTON, Ill. — Rickey Foggie threw three touchdown passes and ran 71 yards for a fourth touchdown to offset Byron Sanders' 295-yard rushing performance and lead undefeated Minnesota to a Big Ten victory over Northwestern.

Foggie completed a 28-yard fleaflicker touchdown pass to Jason Bruce in the first quarter and a 33-yard touchdown pass to Chris Gaiters in a 17-point third quarter. He then capped his aerial display with an 80-yard touchdown bomb to Bruce early in the fourth quarter.

Foggie's 71-yard touchdown run came with less than two minutes remaining in the game to clinch the victory.

Boston College 29, Army 24

NEWTON, Mass. — Reserve quarterback Mark Kamphaus hit Darren Flutie on a 20-yard scoring pass in the fourth quarter, and heavily-favored Boston College hung on for a victory over Army as the Cadets ran out of time with a pass falling incomplete in the end zone at the final gun.

Third-stringer Bryan Babb, making his first start with three other quarterbacks injured, ran for 109 yards and two touchdowns as Army punished the Eagles with a quick-striking wishbone attack.

Tulsa 24, Temple 17

PHILADELPHIA — Freshman quarterback T.J. Rubley and a surprisingly tenacious defense led Tulsa to a upset over Temple.

Rubley connected on 18 of 35 pass attempts for 278 yards and three touchdowns. On defense the Golden Hurricane, 2-4, blocked two field goal attempts and stopped seven Temple drives deep in Tulsa territory.

Tulsa also scored on a 48-yard field goal by David Fuess, the longest of his career.

Wake Forest 22, N. Carolina 14

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — Wilson Hoyle kicked five field goals and Mike Elkins tossed a first-quarter touchdown pass as unbeaten Wake Forest ran its winning streak to five games with a victory over North Carolina in ACC play.

The Demon Deacons spent most of the first half in North Carolina territory and cashed in with Elkins tossing an 8-yard scoring pass to tailback Darryl McGill on their opening drive.

Wake Forest scored on four of its next five possessions in the first half as Hoyle kicked successive field goals from 30, 24, 41 and 25 yards to run his streak to nine in a row. Hoyle added a 37-yard field goal in the third period to push Wake Forest's lead to 22-7 with 3:30 left in the third period.

Stanford 44, Washington St. 7

PULLMAN, Wash. — Jon Volpe ran for two touchdowns and scored a third on a 65-yard pass from quarterback Brian Johnson as the Stanford Cardinal snapped a four-game losing streak by hammering Washington State in Pac-10 play.

Volpe, a redshirt freshman, set the tone when he and Johnson, a redshirt freshman making his first Cougar start, beat a blitz for the long scoring pass to give the Cardinal a 7-0 lead at 9:04 in the first quarter.

Kentucky 35, Mississippi 6

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Senior tailback Mark Higgs rushed 14 times for a career-high 192 yards, including touchdown runs of 22 and 40 yards, to carry Kentucky to a victory over Mississippi in the SEC.

The Kentucky defense also was dominating, intercepting four passes and recovering one of four fumbles, and the Wildcats turned each into scores.

After a scoreless first quarter, Kentucky scored 16 points in the next period to put the game away.

Tewell uses 66 to lead Pensacola

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — Doug Tewell shot a 5-under-par 66 Saturday to take a one-stroke lead over former Oklahoma neighbor Danny Edwards and Texan Phil Blackmar after the third round of the $300,000 Pensacola Open.

Tewell's 66 gave him a three-round score of 12-under-par 201 on the 7,154-yard, par-71 course at the Perdido Bay Resort.

Edwards, the 1985 Pensacola Open champion, held a share of the lead until he bogeyed on the par-4, 454-yard 18th hole after his tee shot went into a fairway bunker.

He chipped onto the green and then two-putted to finish with a 68 to tie Blackmar, who shot a 66, at 202.

Blackmar recorded two eagles, his second and third of the tournmant, to increase his PGA Tour-leading total to 15.

Edwards had gone into the round tied for the lead with Trevor Dodds at 134. But Dodds, a 28-year-old South African native now playing out of St. Louis, matched par with a 71.

AL

to two batters, walking them both, as Detroit's bullpen blew the opener at Minnesota.

"I was a little more jittery in Minneapolis," Henneman said. "Over there, we had 55,000 people yelling at us. This time, we have 50,000 yelling for us."

Greg Gagne hit a leadoff homer in Minnesota's two-run fourth inning, and Tom Brunansky hit a two-run homer in the sixth. But Brunansky may have cost his club at least one run with a baserunning blunder in the third inning.

Henneman came on for Walt Terrell in the seventh and gave up a two-run, two-out single to Gary Gaetti that put Minnesota ahead 6-5, but then he stopped the leak.

"I gave up that hit to Gaetti, and I really wanted him bad," Henneman said. And he later got him. He struck out Gaetti to end the game and send the Tigers into Game 4 with a chance for a tie in this series.

Despite the utter failure of his starting pitcher, Les Straker, Twins Manager Tom Kelly was not displeased with his team's performance.

"We got behind the first two games, but we came back," Twins Manager Tom Kelly said. "It was 5-0 today against Walt Terrell at Tiger Stadium, but we came back and got the lead. ... We were battling all the way, but the Tigers didn't give up either. We saw that."

THE GAME 3 matchups were set up for a Detroit win. The Tigers were returning home, where they were 54-27 during the season. That home record was second only to Minnesota's 56-25 this season. The Twins, on the other hand, were 29-52 on the road, the worst traveling record of any division or pennant winner in history.

GM 6/60 QUALITY COMMITMENT PLAN

They ask for little in return.

For years Hondas have been getting kids to school, breadwinners to work. They've impressed friends, evoked envy and inspired imitation.

It's a thankless job but they never complain.

In fact, whether you buy the sporty Honda CRX, the heart-stopping Prelude, the luxurious Accord, or the stylish, practical Civic 4-Door, Hatchback or Wagon, you own a car that requires far fewer repairs than the average new car.* Which means Honda owners can spend their time maintaining their lifestyle, not their engines.

You also own what Ward's Auto World 9th Auto Engineering Survey calls "the best cars for the money." Which means you couldn't ask for more or less.

Local Color

One of the nicest features about this week's featured home is the location.

Nestled directly across from Emerson Elementary School, this home in Emerson Heights is perfect for the young family, or the family young at heart.

A private courtyard in the front of the house brings the outside into the heart of this home, while at the same time maintaining privacy. Luscious landscaping and large windows keep this scene green all year long.

Please see LOCAL, Page 2D

A floor-to-ceiling brick fireplace, flanked by large windows and a sliding glass door, is the focus of the room. A wet bar in one corner may be closed when not in use.

The vaulted ceiling continues in the adjoining formal dining room, with Mexican tile floor.

The bedroom pictured here and the master bedroom have large windows overlooking the private front courtyard.

LOCATION

Mexican tile greets the visitor in the entry, where a cathedral ceiling opens into a large, brightly lit living area.

A floor-to-ceiling brick fireplace, flanked by large windows and a sliding glass door, is the focus of the room. A wet bar in one corner may be closed when not in use.

Slate blue carpeting and lighter accents and walls make this room very cozy and adjoins a formal dining room. The Mexican tile in the entryway is continued in this room, which also has a large window, allowing diners to view the spacious backyard while eating. The vaulted ceiling from the living area is also continued in this room.

The kitchen is large enough for another dining area or can be used as a small, informal office, whichever suits your lifestyle. Features include a Jenn-Air stove, built-in Maytag dishwasher, built-in General Electric double oven and cooktop.

The adjoining utility room leads into a walk-in pantry, a chef's delight. Once again, this room features large windows, keeping the kitchen bright and airy.

The master bedroom is sequestered and it and one other bedroom have large windows overlooking the private front courtyard. All bedrooms feature large, walk-in closets and the master bath contains double vanities and separate shower and bath.

A variety of fruit and pecan trees are scattered throughout the yard, which are easy to keep with a bubbler system in both front and back. The two-car garage features automatic openers and there is extra parking in the rear for recreational vehicles.

With approximately 2,100 square feet of living space, this home is listed at $84,900, by Stephenson, Realtors.

A private courtyard in the front of the house brings the outside into the heart of this home, while at the same time maintaining privacy.

Professionals at Don Harvey, Realtors keep Midland moving to a bright future

A native Texas, Betty Sorenson was born and raised in Houston. She later lived in Temple, Teas for 10 years and San Diego, California for two years before moving to Big Spring, Texas where she began her Real Estate career and served as secretary for their Board of Realtors.

Betty's husband, Harold, graduated from Texas A&M with a degree in Accounting. Mr. Sorenson's father and sister-in-law were both professors with A&M, so the Aggie tradition is strong within the Sorenson Family.

In 1984, Betty moved to Midland and joined the Don Harvey team. By 1986, her combined listing and sales volume had already exceeded one million dollars.

Betty's daughter, a graduate of Midland Lee High School, is now attending Midland College.

Betty is a committed resident of the Tall City and sets service as her primary goal.

Betty Sorenson

Beverly Dwyer has called West Texas home for over 20 years. Beverly has been an associate with Don Harvey, Realtors for five years. Commitment and dedication in every transaction is the contributing factor to her success in working with sellers and buyers.

Her husband's life-long career in the oil business has heightened Beverly's understanding of the special needs of the transferee and the wide economic swings of the real estate market in Midland, as it relates to our oil based economy. Knowledge of the market and financing are but two of the areas in which she excels.

Beverly is energetic and outgoing. Special interests include sports, interior decorating, music and civic involvement.

Her professional memberships include National Association of Realtors, Texas Association of realtors and Midland Board of Realtors. Her education was received from Texas Tech University, University of Oklahoma and Midland College. Beverly holds a college degree in Real Estate.

PREVENT ANOTHER STUDENT DROPOUT (PASD)

Coordinator: Virginia Conner
Address: The program is housed at Casa de Amigos, 682-9701

What Is The PASD Program:
The emphasis is prevention. The Program Coordinator and volunteer staff are working cooperatively with MISD and involving the students and their family both. The program is designed so that the students can set goals for themselves, improve their school grades, to get motivated, and to obtain a "high school diploma."

How Great Is The Problem?
The Dropout rate in Texas for Hispanic students is as low as 33% and as high as 65%. The estimate for Black students is 34% and for white students 27%. The program is too new to have local statistics.

How Is PASD Set Up?
PASD is set up to include volunteer members from the community that give approximately 2 hours a week to work with a student.

How Many Students Are In The Program?
10. From 7th to 9th grades.

How Are These Students Recruited And Selected?
The Coordinator has an on-going communication with school administrators who refer "high risk" students that would benefit from the program. Parents have to agree to play an active part with their children and our staff. An office outreach worker makes home visits, the volunteer mentors often play a liaison role with these families and the community human service organizations.

Did You Know

..35% of all marriages are remarriages.
..43% of supermarket shoppers are male.
..47,000 teens are parents.
..Over 65% of Mothers with children between ages of 6 and 17, work outsided the home.
..2 of every 5 elementary school children under the age of 13, come home to an empty house. This occurs in every income level, mostly in the middle income level bracket though.

VOLUNTEER PORTRAIT

High Profile

SHEILA LEGGETT

Sheila Leggett

Birthdate: September 29th and I won't say the year!
Occupation: Housewife
How long I have lived in Midland? 11 years.
Hobbies: Reading, quilting, sewing, traveling, music. Community Volunteerism. Camp Fire Girls for 8 years. Sunday School Teacher through my church. PTA.
Why I started my Community Service: When my daughter was in the 1st grade, she brought home the Camp Fire Girls pamphlet and I've been working with the same troop ever since then. I still work with 2 of the original troop members, the rest have moved out of town. I have 1 Freshman, 3 Sophomores, and 1 Junior.
What I have learned from volunteering at Camp Fire Girls? The communication between my daughter and I has gotten to be super. Teens are alot smarter today than when I was growing up, they're very approachable.
My Mother's Best advice: Be honest with myself.
My Mother's Worst advice: My Mother never gave bad advice, she was a quoter of proverbs.
My guest at my fantasy dinner party would be: Johnny Mathis. I love his music and that he's really a nice person.
Favorite Comedian: Bill Cosby and Carol Burnett.
Favorite Holiday: Christmas and Easter, since they're big family times.
The people who have influenced my life greatest: I don't have one special person who has influenced my life alone, a lot of people have been important to me, like my parents and my school & church teachers.
Most valued material possession: My Bible and my photo albums.
If I could change one thing about myself, it'd be: To add 5 or more inches of height.
If I were going to the moon, I'd take: My 3 children, and my husband.
I wish I could speak: I envy people that can speak a foreign language. I'd love to be able to speak Spanish and French. Those two languages would get me where I'd like to go.

COUNTRYSIDE

Don't be surprised if you hear a rooster crowing! Countryside is the closest you can get to being in the country around here. And I've got to have my space. Can't feel smothered by bunches of buildings...but we're on the Loop, so when I want back into city life, I'm minutes from anywhere.

- We've got cozy, large 1 & 2 bedrooms with washers, dryers and ceiling fans in every unit.
- The new management is scheduling some great parties.
- Entertainment? Relaxation? I'm so proud of our gorgeous pool, and I love the hot tub!
- Prettiest clubhouse around...has a fireplace, cable TV and a dynamite stereo.

Lots of breathing room. I need that. Friendly people. I wonder if they'd let me put some chickens in my fenced in patio?

RANCHLAND

Ranchland is right in the middle of where I've got to be. I'm practically neighbors with ClayDesta, and I can be downtown in a Texas minute! Ranchland is more to me than the perfect location:

- Recreation...Refreshing pool/hot tub and a sensational clubhouse/game room with a pool table and fantastic stereo.
- Inside, 1 & 2 bedrooms and executive suites to suit the most discriminating taste.
- Washers, dryers and ceiling fans in every unit.
- Tough security.
- Decorator colors of carpet and wallpaper.

Home, home on the Ranchland...
That's for me.

There's something fascinating about seeing things from the everyday world created on a small scale.

Anyone who has read Johnathan Swift's "Gulliver's Travels" may not remember the entire story, but almost everyone will remember the land of Lilliput, where Gulliver finds himself a giant among a diminutive people and is charmed by their miniature city.

It seems the idioms, "Good things come in small packages" and "Little things mean a lot" are true. In fact, today through Oct. 18 has even been designated as a special week for small things — the first National Dollhouse and Miniature Week.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Dru-Anne Perry and Bill Cakmis Jr., who were married Saturday evening in the First Presbyterian Church, departed their reception at Midland Country Club in style in a white limousine. After honeymooning in Palm Springs, the couple will make their home in Los Angeles.

Pre-nuptial festivities began with an announcement party at the home of Dru-Anne's parents, Jackie and Wes Perry, on July 25, the birthdate which is shared by the bride and her father.

Wedding week events included a bridesmaid luncheon hosted by Sarah (Mrs. Ron) Holcomb and Liz (Mrs. Tom) Moore at Midland Country Club and the rehearsal dinner given at the Plaza Club by the groom's parents, Stella and Dr. Bill Cakmis of Jacksonville, Fla. MoMo and Harry Miller hosted a wedding day brunch in their home for the wedding party and out-of-town guests. The Perrys are hosting a brunch at their home today for the out-of-towners.

Earlier parties included a Mexican supper hosted at LaBodega Restaurant by Jim Cox, Elizabeth Locker and Alice Moxey and a display kitchen shower at the home of Pat (Mrs. Bob) Paxton. Co-hostesses for the latter event were Shelley Paxton (Mrs. Steve) Crampton of Huntsville, Tenn., and Karol Ann Way and Catharine Baimbridge (Mrs. Bruce) Collins, both of Dallas.

In addition, a wine and cheese party was held in the home of Charleen (Mrs. Dick) Rosebery. The other hostesses were Marge (Mrs. George) Tope, Gladys (Mrs. Bob) Nickell, Harriet (Mrs. Gene) Motter, Sylvia (Mrs. Walter) Laufer and Cheri (Mrs. Bud) Hensley. A Christmas ornament shower was held at Liz Moore's home, with Sudy (Mrs. H.G.) Bedford, Lynn Mashburn, Betty (Mrs. Jack) Sappington and Ann (Mrs. Wayne) Westerman serving as co-hostesses. Nell (Mrs. Ron) York, Jo (Mrs. Roger) Canter and Doris Burton hosted a display bath shower and brunch in Nell's home.

WE'VE JUST HEARD that Dede Fasken, granddaughter of longtime Midlanders Celeste and Murray Fasken, has pledged Kappa Alpha Theta social sorority at Texas A&M University. She is the daughter of G.R. and Andy Fasken of Paris, Texas.

EIGHT FORMER MIDLAND residents had a fun time while visiting the Tall City recently.

Jean and Dick Maxwell, Jonnie McDade and Earl Waddell of Fort Worth were house guests of Dorothy and Bill Vaughn, and Mimi and Bud Haugh and Liz and Ed Smith of Lake Kiowa were guests of Sue and Ed Gorence. They were here to participate in the group's Annual High Sky Golf Tournament, with rounds played at Green Tree, Ranchland Hills and Mission Dorado Country Clubs.

The visitors were entertained with a formal dinner at the Gorences' home and were greeted by many old friends at a patio cocktail buffet at the Vaughn home.

The annual awards banquet was hosted by the Vaughns at the Plaza Club, with Bud Haugh and Ed Gorence sharing the master of ceremonies honors. This year's winners were Jonnie McDade, Earl Waddell, Mimi Haugh and Ed Smith.

The group has made plans to meet in 1988 at the Inn of the Mountain Gods in Ruidoso, N.M.

FRIOR TO THEIR Oct. 3 wedding in Dallas, Kevin Osborne and the former Emily Murrah were honored with several festivities.

In Midland, Emily, daughter of Betty and Bill Murrah, was honored with a bridal shower and brunch at the home of Martha (Mrs. Joe) Hastings and her daughter, Marilu, and also with a display shower in Anette (Mrs. Toby) Engleman's home. Cohostesses for the latter party were Bobbie (Mrs. Ed) Lookabaugh, Helen (Mrs. Lyle) Eberly, Elizabeth (Mrs. Jim) McCreight and Sue (Mrs. Joe) Solari.

Emily also was feted in Kevin's hometown of Gainesville with a display shower at the home of Carolyn (Mrs. Davie) Costin, and in Lewisville with a lingerie shower in the home of Sally (Mrs. Dave) Wheeler.

The wedding reception was held at the Royal Oaks Country Club in Dallas. The bridegroom's parents, Mary Lou Osborne of Gainesville and Roddy Osborne of Euless, hosted a barbecue at the Drefus House at White Rock Lake for the rehearsal dinner.

THE MIDLAND LAWYERS WIVES CLUB got its fall season off to a successful start with a couples' party at the home of Joan and Pat Baskin.

Some 100 persons enjoyed an Italian dinner, which was served poolside. A red, white and blue theme provided a colorful backdrop for the festivities.

Party arrangements were made by Nancy (Mrs. George) Patterson and Maria (Mrs. Bill) Patterson.

Among those attending were club president Martha Pope and her husband, Bruce; Shawn and Richard Davis, Gloria and Judge Willie DuBose, Paula and Gary Douglas and Virginia and Bobby Sanders.

MRS. LAURA BAKER recently celebrated her 96th birthday at a party given by her daughters, Ollie Mae (Mrs. John) Parker of Midland and Elsie (Mrs. Herschel) Carter of Austin.

Mrs. Baker has 14 grandchildren, 30 great-grandchildren and seven great-great-grandchildren, many of whom were present for the celebration.

Out-of-town guests were Shermie Smitherman and Monte Stambaugh of Abilene, Edith Miles of Trinity, Debbie Taylor of College Station, Fonda Parker of Alamogordo, N.M., and from Odessa, Judy Upton and son, Shawn, and Sherry and Rick Carter and children, Allison and Cory.

A resident of Midland since 1938, Mrs. Baker was born on Sept. 13, 1891, in East Texas. She is a longtime member of South Memorial Baptist Church.

MINIATURES

"Everything you see in the big world is being done by someone in the small world," said Deanie Roberts, a member of the Midland Miniature Makers.

In "The Book of the Queen's Dolls," A.C. Benson attempts to describe the appeal of miniature objects. He said, "There is great beauty in smallness. The blemishes and small deformities which are so inseparable from seeing things life-size all disappear; the result is a closeness and fineness of texture which pleases both eye and mind."

Although the first-time celebration for dollhouse and doll collectors indicates a growing interest in miniature collecting as a hobby, the hobby has been around for a long time.

The Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York has a collection of Egyptian dolls' furnishings which date back to 2000 B.C. The collection includes a folding traveling bed, about a foot long, with a headboard and "springs" constructed of string. It also includes replicas and models of a brewery, bakery, granary, carpenter's shop, weaver shop and garden, which were all found in Meket-Re's tomb.

TWENTIETH CENTURY miniatures have become much more sophisticated than those of ancient Egypt. The art of miniatures has become an entire industry, including the shells of miniature houses, buildings, furnishings, dolls and kits that can be ordered from factories or artisans, or can be found at various miniature shows presented by National Association of Miniature Enthusiasts (N.A.M.E) around the country.

The greatest element of sophistication in miniatures involves the precise attention to size and detail.

Susan Rogers Braun, in the book "Miniature Vignettes," said, "Miniature vignettes are so appealing because a close look reveals a unique characteristic that separates vignettes from toys. Miniatures are reduced in direct proportion to actual size."

The attention to scale accuracy and detail to craft miniatures requires patience, according to Jane Dillard of the Midland Miniature Makers. Ms. Dillard has a room box, a three-sided box with the open side covered by a glass window, created by Brooke Tucker, the daughter of the late actor Forest Tucker and a well-known miniature artisan.

"I bought the room box at a national miniature show in Atlanta. I had been with Brooke when she picked out the fabric for it in San Antonio, earlier," Ms. Dillard said.

MS. DILLARD has taken courses on miniature crafting from Ms. Tucker and has created an intricate English library room box complete with electrical wiring under Ms. Tucker's direction.

At a recent meeting of the local miniature club, member Lyn Latimer instructed other members on the art of creating fabric pleats for bed ruffles and curtains. "We share all our art ideas," Ms. Latimer said.

"There's a gimmick to everything you do in miniatures," Ms. Dillard said. "The art of miniatures has been elevated from an arts and crafts level to a three-dimensional art form."

"It helps to be creative," said club member Dorothy Dollahite.

Miniature enthusiasts cite the creative element combined with centuries of architecture to draw from as the most appealing aspects of miniature art. Aside from creating room boxes from other periods in time, miniatures can be updated to decorate modern homes, according to Ms. Dollahite.

"Lyn Latimer made a miniature ghost house for her son's birthday which falls on Halloween," Ms. Dollahite said. "She weathered the wood, put in cracked windows, furnished it with chairs with the stuffing coming out of them, put angel hair in the cauldron and has wired it so that the cauldron boils and eyes appear in one of the windows with a flick of a switch."

Ms. Dollahite also said that the cost of creating miniatures shouldn't be prohibitive to enthusiasts. "Although you can spend as much as you want buying limited editions of miniature items to furnish your room boxes, the same items can be made inexpensively," she said.

"FOR EXAMPLE, I could have ordered a miniature tiffany lamp from a catalogue. Instead, I made one from half of a ping pong ball painted it with acrylic paints.'

Ms. Dollahite said, "There is a certain fascination and satisfaction in creating your own dolls and dollhouses. It revived a part of my childhood. I have as much fun now making miniatures as I did making dolls out of corn husks when I was younger."

According to Marian Maeve O'Brien, author of "Make Your Own Dollhouses and Dollhouse Miniatures," many miniature collectors start out as collectors and end up being artisans.

"It is a fine thing to be able to hire other artisans to make the small items that the collectors want so badly," Ms. O'Brien said. "But it is my firm conviction that any of us can become a composite craftsman.

"The people who can hold in their palms a tiny chair, an exquisite piece of needlepoint, or a minuscule set of curtains that sprang from their own fingers, enjoy a sense of achievement that can be found in no other way," Ms. O'Brien said.

"There is a misconception that you need money to participate in miniature arts," Ms. Dollahite said. "But it's not true. Miniature art is for anyone who has the heart to do it."

Midland Miniature Makers meet the first Tuesday of each month. The club will be having a miniature display in conjunction with Museum of the Southwest Dec. 1-Jan. 1. Anyone interested in more information about miniatures, the local club, or the upcoming show may call Lyn Latimer at 689-7264.

Week celebrates miniatures

Associated Press

Miniatures hobbyists will celebrate the importance of little things during National Dollhouse and Miniature Week Oct. 10-18.

According to Barbara O'Brien, national coordinator for the event, sponsored by the Miniatures Industry Association of America, at least 20,000 exhibits of dollhouses and miniatures will be held in 10 large mall shows and 30 to 40 smaller events all across the country.

After a great popularity for the hobby, which engages many more adults than children, enthusiasm dwindled through the early 1980s. Lately, however, interest in building dollhouses from kits and furnishing them has been on the rise again, said O'Brien, an association board member.

The industry attributes its appeal to the fact that the hobby offers an opportunity for building small-scale crafts, decorating and imaginative play, according to Geraldine Willems, editor of Miniatures Showcase magazine.

Victorian and country-style dollhouses and room boxes — single rooms decorated and furnished individually — are among the most popular. These styles correspond with nationwide decorating trends. Miniatures also are more sophisticated.

A wider range of items and prices is available and manufacturers — many of whom began as hobbyists themselves — are more professional than they used to be, she added.

Although inexpensive die-cut dollhouses are available, the growth area is in the considerably more elaborate — and expensive — models.

Robert Holweck, president of Hofco House, Inc., a Woodsboro, Md., dollhouse manufacturer, said his company's dollhouses ranging in price from $130 to $680 are more popular with hobbyists than those less costly.

Enthusiasts often join miniatures clubs, which are found across the country. They get together to show and talk about their dollhouses, trade among themselves and sponsor shows and sales. O'Brien noted that the major events for dollhouse collectors each year are four shows sponsored by various local branches of the National Association of Miniatures Enthusiasts.

Her goal for National Dollhouse Week is to acquaint the wider public with the hobby.

Luncheon planned for Wednesday

The Midland County Bar Association and Midland Legal Secretaries will sponsor a luncheon 11:30 a.m. Wednesday at the Plaza Club. Joe Nagy, president of the State Bar of Texas and senior partner of Crenshaw, Dupree & Milam of Lubbock, will be the guest speaker. Special guest will be Judge Lucius Bunton.

Entertainment will be provided by Mary Lou Cassidy, an attorney with Stubbeman, McRae, Sealy, Laughlin & Browder law firm. Ms. Cassidy is a former local television personality and has been in Midland Community Theatre productions.

Clown convention scheduled

"Oops Alley," local chapter, to host state meeting

From Staff Reports

If all the world loves a clown, then Midland will be overflowing with love Oct. 22-25 when "Oops Alley," Permian Basin Chapter of the Texas Clown Association hosts the fifth annual convention of TCA at the Midland Holiday Inn Country Villa.

About 150 professional and amateur Texas clowns are expected to attend the convention, which will feature seminars on basic makeup, clown skits, mime, clown props, pyrotechnics and clown ministry, as well as competitions in makeup and costume, and skits, an awards banquet and general membership meeting.

Clown instructors from all over the country, including Al "Whistles" Fast, Ed "HoHo" Birchall, Jack Anderson, Ralph Dewey, Elizabeth Cauley, Kay "Klynky" Veale, Steve Halsell and Clarence Bull, will teach the seminars.

Oct. 23 the TCA will open the convention to persons interested in establishing Clown Ministries within their local churches. Participants may choose eight of 16 classes offered. For more information call 697-4248 or 368-0746.

MAKEUP AND Costume competition will be 7:30 p.m. Oct. 23 at Holiday Inn Country Villa. Clowns in their finest costumes and makeup will compete in four categories: whiteface, auguste, tramp and character divisions. The public is invited to attend.

Single and Group Skit competition will be presented 1:30 p.m. Oct. 24 at Midland Park Mall. The top 10 clowns in makeup and costume will be announced. The public, especially children, is invited.

Awards, including the Texas Ambassador of Clowning Award, will be presented at the awards banquet Saturday evening.

Some of the clowns planning to attend the convention are:

■ Kay "Klynky" Veale, a retired school nurse who has been a clown for seven years. She is a member of TCA, COAI, IBM and Fellowship of Christian Magicians. She has helped teach the Art of Clowning at Odessa College, and performed makeup workshops, birthday parties, store promotions, visits to hospitals and nursing homes, and civic events. She has attended Clown Camp in LaCrosse, Wisc.

■ Bob "Spicy" Ellison, a retired purchasing agent with El Paso Natural Gas. He is a member of IBM, COAI and TCA, and has clowned for more than five years at birthday parties, store promotions, and hospital and nursing home visits. He and his wife, "Sugar," have been active in Candlelighters and Cancer Treatment Center in El Paso. Ellison also has taught classes in clown magic.

■ A.J. (Al) "Whistles" Fast started his clowning career in 1949, while he was still in high school. His first commercial job was portraying a tramp character at a supermarket grand opening. "So-Slow, the Tramp" also worked for service stations, company picnics, birthday parties and several small circuses. In 1960 Fast was hired to do 160 Bozo television shows for children as Bozo's sidekick. By 1972 he had developed the auguste character of "Whistles."

IN 1976 Fast became a cobbler, and has since earned the reputation as one of the top manufacturers of clown shoes in the world.

Fast is an instructor for the Performing Arts Division at Lansing Community College in Lansing, Mich. During the last eight years, he has developed two classes: Introduction to Clowning and Advance Clowning. He taught at the University of Wisconsin Clown Camp in LaCrosse, and has worked as a producing clown for the Lansing Youth Caravan produced by Tommy Hanneford of Florida.

Fast is a member of nine clown organizations, including Clowns of America International and World Clown Association. At the convention in Midland, he will teach classes on Pyrotechnics and How to Promote Your Clown Character. He will also be a competition judge.

■ Clarence "Mr. Sunshine" Bull is a licensed custom broker and owner of Magic Bull Enterprises. He is director of Sunday school for First United Pentecostal Church in Shepherd and has been director of bus ministry and director of Children's Church.

Bull has been clowning for 12 years, and is a member of Clowns of America Inc., World Clown Association and Fellowship of Christian Magicians. He is area representative for Area 409 of TCA. He will teach Clown Ministry and Gospel Magic during the convention.

■ Elizabeth Ann "Sunshine" Cauley started clowning at a church costume party in 1967, where she won first place. For the next 12 years she worked at churches, parades, restaurant openings, skating parties and birthday parties.

MS. CAULEY attended clown school at University of Texas at Arlington and joined Texas Mid-Cities Clown Alley No. 85. From such instructors as Earl Chaney, Barry DeChant and Leon McCride of Clown Camp at LaCrosse, she learned clowning techniques and has become an award-winning clown in makeup and costume competition.

In addition to "Sunshine," her characters include "Granny Goodness," "Sweet Tootsie" and "Pitiful Pearl." Ms. Cauley will teach How to Win in Competition and Whiteface Makeup at the convention.

■ Ed "HoHo" Birchall started clowning when he was in the fifth grade and produced a backyard family circus.

In 1959 Birchall quit his job as a cost accountant to be a full-time clown. After several months he went to work on a "trial basis" for television station KOCO-TV in Oklahoma City. He is still performing on the air as "Oklahoma City's Premier Clown," and manages to keep a full schedule of personal appearances at birthday parties and community functions, including regular visits to Children's Memorial Hospital.

Birchall will teach Tramp Makeup, Clown Manners and The Clown and Television at the convention. His clowning is based on his statement, "Love isn't love until you pass it around."

Tag sale can be 'great way' to eliminate family's overflow

Associated Press

A tag sale can be a great way to get rid of a houseful of unwanted items, from old toys in the attic to battered bargains in the basement.

The tag sale can satisfy both yard sale and auction fans, according to an article in Country Living, because it offers the possibility of picking up bargain antiques and rewards the aggressive early-bird shopper.

At a tag sale, also called an estate sale, all sale items are tagged. Just tear off the bottom portion of the tag to reserve your prize and continue browsing.

Potential tag sale candidates include older persons moving to retirement homes, middle-aged families who must dispose of their parents' furnishings and young couples relocating.

Tag sales can be a do-it-yourself project or they can be done by professionals. They also are handled by estate liquidation firms.

There is no license required to offer the services of a tag sale manager so you have to do your research and ask the right questions.

The current fee charged by many estate liquidation firms is 25 to 30 percent of the total gross sales, but some individuals hold sales for as little as 15 percent.

"What you have to look for is what they are providing in terms of experience as well as services," said Joe Wilkinson of Wilkinson and Minor Tag Sales, Raleigh, N.C.

"One individual in our area holds tag sales for a 15 percent fee, but in addition to providing only minimal services, she tagged and sold a grandfather clock worth $3,000 to a friend of mine for only $300."

A 30 percent fee generally covers sale preparations, advertising expenses, extra staff and all materials. The cost of hiring uniformed security guards or moving items from the home to another location often are shared.

"Once you have your tag sale set up," Wilkinson advised, "hire an independent appraiser for an hour just to go through and make sure the prices are in line. For $50 he might well have found that $3,000 grandfather clock that was misidentified and underpriced."

Once the sale is over, there is the problem of unsold leftovers.

"Some of it may remain with the family; other items may be donated to charitable organizations."

Americans staying single longer, still will marry

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Americans in record numbers are staying single through their 20s and even into their early 30s, but nine out of 10 will still marry during their lifetimes, the Census Bureau says.

In a new report Wednesday, the bureau said the percentage of men and women below the age of 35 who have not yet married has risen dramatically since 1970.

Among men between the ages of 30 and 34, those who had never married totaled 23.1 percent, according to estimates made last March. That was almost 2½ times the 1970 figure of 9.4 percent.

Among women in the 30-34 age group, 14.6 percent had never been married, according to the 1987 report, more than double the 6.2 percent in 1970.

In other age groups, 61 percent of women aged 20 to 24 had not married in 1987, compared with 36 percent in 1970. For women aged 25 to 29, the figure was 29 percent in 1987 against 11 percent in 1970.

For men, 78 percent aged 20 to 24 had not married by this year, compared with 55 percent in 1970. Among men in the 25-29 age group, 42 percent were not married, compared with 19 percent in 1970.

"The percentage that remains single throughout their lifetime is likely to be higher than in the past in view of the increases in never-marrieds among today's young adults," the report said.

This year, 4.5 percent of men and 5.5 percent of women who are 65 or older have never been married, figures in line with historical trends.

BUT STEVE Rawlings of the Census Bureau said the percentage is likely to double to around 10 percent for both sexes, based on the growing number who have not yet married.

"There has been quite a significant increase in the number of people who have never married in their 20s and early 30s," Rawlings said in a telephone interview. "Some people are drawing the conclusion that a large percentage will never marry, but our own best guess is that 90 percent will eventually marry."

In 1987, the median age for an American bride was 23.6 years, compared with 20.3 years in 1950. The median age means that half the women have married by this age. The 1987 figure was the highest age since recordkeeping began in 1890.

For men, the median age for the first marriage climbed to 25.8 years this year, the highest it has been since 1900, when it was 25.9 years.

The median age at first marriage had been declining for most of this century until the 1960s, when it started to rise as the post-war Baby Boom generation chose to pursue educations and careers, postponing marriage and family obligations.

The statistics on marriage were contained in the Census Bureau study "Marital Status and Living Arrangements: March 1987."

The report found that there were 88.5 million households in March 1987, an increase of 8.7 million since 1980.

The typical married couple with young children is not so typical anymore, the study said. The percentage of married couples with children under the age of 18 fell to 27.5 percent this year, compared to 40.3 percent of all households in 1970.

The report attributed the decline to higher divorce rates and postponement of marriage and child bearing.

The number of Americans living alone accounted for 23.6 percent of American households in March 1987, up from 17.1 percent in 1970, but the increase in this category has slowed dramatically during this decade, due in part to falling numbers of the below-25 age group and to a growing trend for young people to delay leaving home for economic reasons.

The report said increases in single-person households had accounted for 42.8 percent of total growth in households from 1970 to 1980. But this category accounted for just 32.5 percent of the increase from 1980 to 1987.

"The elderly still comprise a large part of the live-alone population, but the under-25 segment is declining," Rawlings said. "More young persons are choosing to live at home with their parents, given the difficulty of establishing a household with the high cost of living today."

Bureaucracy producing more intramural nuptuials

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — They encounter each other at 7 a.m. staff meetings or 7 p.m. official dinner parties and have had late-night dates at such romantic venues as the Republican convention and international conferences on tariffs and trade.

Within the past year Lynne Melillo and Roger Bolton have dated in Tokyo, Brussels and Punta del Este, Uruguay, because that is where the nation's business has taken their Cabinet-level bosses.

Next April 30 they will make it official. Melillo, who works for Agriculture Secretary Richard E. Lyng, and Bolton, who works for United States Trade Representative Clayton K. Yeutter, will be wed in Louisville, Ky.

What may be most curious about these nuptials is that, in the Reagan administration, they are no curiosity at all. Seasoned Washington watchers say the bureaucracy of this administration may be producing more intramural marriages than any in memory.

On Sept. 19 in the District of Columbia, Desiree Tucker, of the International Trade Administration of the Commerce Department, and Ronald Sorini, of the trade representative's office, were married.

"You can officially call this another avenue for improving inter-agency relations," Tucker said, grinning.

An informal poll turned up these other unions, all within the last 12 months:

■ Anne E. Sheehan, a deputy assistant secretary in the Department of Energy, and Joseph D. Rodota Jr., a deputy in the White House Office of Public Affairs.

■ Cathryne Bennett, a former deputy director at the Agency for International Development, and Christopher J. Warner, a deputy general counsel at the federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

■ Meredith M. Homet, an officer in the policy section of the Treasury Department, and Edwin L. Dale Jr., assistant director of the Office of Management and Budget.

What seems to have produced this outbreak of knot-tying is a stew of trends in the pressure cooker of Washington that at first do not seem consistent.

"There are not only more working women, but more working women working in responsible positions," said Douglas J. Besharov, a sociologist who is a resident scholar at the American Enterprise Institute.

"Women in this administration, more than any other, are the professional colleagues and educational equals of men."

Added Claudine Dussert, a social psychologist at American University: "People are looking for an equal partner much more than in the past, a partner whom they can respect." People are also looking more urgently, she observed, as fears about acquired immune deficiency syndrome mount.

And the shared ideology of the Reagan couples weighs heavily. "Maybe siege mentality is too strong a term," said Nancy Clark Reynolds, a Republican lobbyist who worked for Reagan when he was governor of California. "But sometimes you feel it's them or us. You're thrown together as political junkies riding out the storm together. It can be very romantic."

Melillo and Bolton, for example, worked together in the Reagan-Bush campaign of 1984 producing videotapes to promote Reagan's accomplishments for women and older Americans.

"It was like being in a play together," Melillo said. "The emotions were running high. When you spend a lot of time working together, the whole situation just sort of brings you together."

One of the earliest Reagan-era weddings took place in 1983, between Sarah Tinsley, former special assistant to M. Peter McPherson when he was director of the Agency for International Development, and David F. Demarest Jr., a deputy undersecretary at the Labor Department.

Tinsley and Demarest met in the late 1970s when they both were working at the Republican National Committee.

Said Demarest: "Having someone who understands the kinds of pressures that you're under, and your accomplishments, and being able to share those kinds of things is really quite delightful. We've had a lot of fun and are expecting in November."

Mari Maseng, a former White House aide and now communications director for the Dole for President Exploratory Committee, suggested that the role model for many Reagan couples is Sen. Bob Dole and his wife, Elizabeth Hanford Dole, the secretary of transportation.

They "talk a lot about their similar interests, the people in politics they know," she said. "It's very reinforcing to have someone around who understands."

So evolved is the concept of Washington political couples that a Denis Thatcher Society has been formed exclusively for men who, like the husband of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain, have not achieved the prominence of their wives.

Lifestyle policies

Policies for publication of announcements in the Lifestyle Department of The Midland Reporter-Telegram are:

Information for Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the information is to be published. For example, an item for Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Romance novels are best sellers

By NICKI LOGAN
Hearst News Service

Stroll through any bookstore or look through a supermarket bookrack and you will quickly find that the most popular reading material is romantic fiction. Racks and aisles of romance novels, from the ubiquitous Harlequin romance to the steamy "bodice-rippers" or "heavy breathers," are the No. 1 best sellers across America.

In layman's terms, romance is big bucks. Romance books are ahead of westerns, science fiction, mysteries and biographies — all steady sellers. Estimates by publishers place all romance books at 25 to 35 percent of the market.

Who buys them? Mostly women and teenagers. A profile of the average reader, according to a study published in 1985, is an educated career woman, married, in her early 30s with a household income of over $30,000. That study blew the established theory that readers of romantic fiction were spinsters who lived a dull life and sought excitement through reading.

The romantic novel isn't new. Harlequin Romances were popular for years in England and Canada before they were first published in the United States about 25 years ago. They were "sweet romances" with stories written to a strict formula — boy meets girl, a conflict develops, conflict is resolved and they live happily ever after. No sex. Period.

That all changed with the publication of Kathleen Woodiwiss' blockbuster best seller, "The Flame and the Flower" in 1972. Filled with rape, adventure, passion and heavy breathing, the genre immediately was tagged with the "bodice ripper" and "heavy breather" nickname.

WOODIWISS' NOVELS were considered pretty racy until Rosemary Rogers entered the field with "Sweet Savage Love" in 1974. This was the beginning of a dynasty of passionate publications — historical fiction laced with heavy breathing, ripped petticoats and swashbuckling heroes.

The story line of "Sweet Savage Love" was ridiculed by critics — after all, it was unbelievable fantasy — but the public snatched it off the shelves and clamored for more. The beautiful heroine was kidnapped by a handsome Westerner, an undercover agent for the government. She was violated repeatedly (under a covered wagon, in the upstairs room of a hotel-brothel) and went through pages and pages of trials and tribulations. She found when it was "almost" too late that she had fallen in love with her abductor, who, as luck would have it, was really the son of a wealthy family, and who, by the end of the book, reluctantly admitted that he was in love with the heroine all along.

Whew!!

All that is to outline the next umpteen bodice rippers written by everyone from Rogers (whose sequels were also millions sellers) to men writing under pseudonyms. The plot was basically the same, just set in different locales and periods of history.

The "rippers" have survived women's lib, although rape now is "out." The women are more independent and are no longer helpless victims. If the novel is contemporary, the heroine is usually the owner of her own business and has a strong personality — that is until it comes to love and romance.

The novels are bought at such a rate that Silhouette Books publishes 28 new titles or about 7 million volumes a month. Once a rival of Harlequin, both are now published by Simon and Schuster. Most new titles are purchased within 10 days of release, according to a company representative.

AVON BOOKS publishes two new titles monthly, usually larger volumes written by established authors who command a loyal readership.

Multiply that by the average price of $3.95 per book and you will see that romantic novels have a strong economic impact.

With that many books being read, there is a constant demand for fresh writers. In fact, Simon and Schuster's Silhouette division held public relations seminars in malls across America last year to promote sales and to search for new writers.

Although most readers who enjoy the romances think they could write a book of their own, more than 90 percent of the manuscripts received by Silhouette are rejected. That same company published a book titled "How to Write a Romance Novel" to encourage novice writers and to outline the formula required — even to listing the number of pages acceptable for each genre.

That's not to say that some writers don't hit it big. Look at Janet Daily, an author who began writing Harlequins and is now recognized as the most published author in the world.

A visit with an assistant editor at Avon, publishers of novels by Woodiwiss, Rogers and Johanna Lindsey, revealed that most of their new authors are discovered through unsolicited manuscripts. She also said that Rogers is working on a new book, "Bound By Desire," due to be released in 1988.

Not all readers are interested in the bodice rippers. Simon and Schuster publishes five levels of romance, beginning with Silhouette Contemporary Romance (the mildest) to Silhouette Desire and Silhouette Intimate Moments — the raciest.

Avon Books has a Ribbon line, so called because a ribbon decorates the cover, enabling the reader to quickly identify the books, and regular novels such as the major releases by Rogers, Lindsey and Woodiwiss. All were described as "sensuous" and "sensual reading."

THE LATEST successful entry in romance publications is a new line of contemporary Christian romances written by Janette Oke. More than 3 million copies of her books have been sold, which encourages both new and established writers to cater to the Christian market.

The popularity of romantic novels shows that regardless of the state of the economy, terrorism or tragedies on the news, most of us do believe in romance. By opening the covers of the latest novel, we can escape to a fantasy world where the characters are gorgeous, loved, free of money or family problems, and, at least when the book ends, live "happily ever after."

Women purchase electronic equipment

NEW YORK (AP) — Recent market research indicates women have passed men in the purchase of many consumer electronic items.

Women buy more sophisticated telephones, televisions and typewriters than ever before, according to GTE Consumer Communications Products Corp.

In 1986, women purchased 55 percent of all telephones, a 20 percent increase since 1983.

Strive for mediocrity?

Copley News Service

Should women strive for mediocrity? Well, yes and no.

If women want to avoid stress and burnout, they should lower their expectations and be "good enough," instead of trying to be perfect, says University of Missouri psychologist Wayne Anderson.

Of course, he says, women shouldn't strive for mediocrity. But they shouldn't be disappointed if the house doesn't always look perfect.

Anderson recommends having ol' hubby tear himself away from just mowing the front lawn and washing the car — ask him to pitch in and help with other tasks.

He also suggests practicing deep-breathing, meditation or self-hypnosis and getting into an exercise

Misuse of medications by elderly common problem

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

My grandmother and I had a very special friendship. We spent many afternoons talking about anything and everything. Not only was she fun to visit, but her house was full of fascinating objects and antiques.

Yet in all my fond memories, the strongest memory I have is of a small table next to her bed — her medicine table, which was literally covered with all kinds of medicines. She, in effect, possessed her own drug store.

My grandmother's collection of tablets and pills underlines one of the most complicated issues concerning the elderly — the proper use of prescription and over-the-counter medications. The elderly are prescribed more drugs per capita than any other age group, and therefore need to be continually educated about the use and abuse of prescription and non-prescription drugs.

Older Texans make up 15 percent of the state's population, yet they consume 25 percent of all prescription drugs sold. Because many suffer multiple chronic illnesses, such as high blood pressure, diabetes, arthritis and heart disease, they may take several different medications at the same time. Without proper knowledge of these drugs, severe problems can occur.

Because of a normal decline of body functions, older persons are more susceptible to adverse drug reactions than other people. Changes in the body's water, muscle and fat composition directly affects the way some drugs react in the body. Changes in response to stress also cause changes in sensitivity to many drugs. In fact, older persons are twice as likely as younger individuals to suffer an adverse drug reaction.

For the elderly, the combination of frequent medication use, drug variety and greater drug strength needed to treat the elderly's severe illnesses make the risk of dangerous drug reactions an ever-present possibility.

Medicines also react with foods, often affecting the nutrition and health of older persons. An older person can suffer from a nutritional deficiency caused by a medicine-induced change in metabolism. Drug-induced malnutrition or toxity may be caused by impaired absorption of nutrients, altered use of nutrients or reaction with a pharmacologically active substance in a food. In addition, medicine may decrease appetite, and food intake may alter absorption of a drug from the intestinal tract.

Some elderly persons take as many as 14 medications at the same time. Oddly enough, some of the medications are taken to conteract the side effects of others. Because they take so many medications, elderly persons often forget to take their medicine at the right times and in the right doses. For some elderly individuals, social isolation, overall poor health and limited knowledge of drug dosages leave them ignorant of the importance of following medical instructions.

Poor communication between physicians and patients, due to cultural or language differences, lack of communication skills, or patient anxiety or physical limitations, also leads to misuse of drugs. Older persons can help safeguard their health by:

- Always taking the amount of drugs prescribed and following the dosage schedule as closely as possible.
- Asking the pharmacist for more information about the drug.
- Never taking drugs prescribed for anyone else.
- Always telling their doctor about past problems with medications.
- Asking for non-child proof containers if they have trouble with the child-proof bottles.
- Making sure they understand the directions on the prescription label before leaving the doctor's office or pharmacy.
- Discarding old medicines.
- Always asking their doctor or pharmacist about potential side effects of new medications.
- Calling their doctor immediately if any unusual side effect is experienced.

Proper use of medications can go a long way in making life healthy and active.

Plan ahead for retirement

NEW YORK (AP) — When it comes to advance planning for retirement, financial advisers of many types agree on one point: The best time to start is now.

That principle applies especially these days, they say, because today's young and middle-aged people are likely to face special challenges to their security when they retire in the year 2000 or beyond.

For one thing, the ranks of retirees are growing increasingly crowded, thanks in part to longer life spans.

When the baby boomers born in the late 1940s and 1950s reach retirement age, they promise to put a heavy strain on the nation's system of Social Security and private pension plans.

As a consequence, many future retirees will have to rely on their own resources to meet their retirement needs. In the busy world of the late 1980s, that prospect is often overlooked, according to many experts on personal finance.

"Desire for material goods encourages spending today, at the expense of tomorrow," said IDS Financial Services, a Minneapolis money-management firm, in a current bulletin on the subject. "People often don't stay at one company long enough to earn hefty pensions."

Setting your own course for retirement, especially if it is still many years away, may not be an easy task. But experts on the subject say the effort can pay off in big future rewards.

A logical starting point is to draw up a list of prospective sources of income at the time you expect to retire.

When you calculate amounts from Social Security and pension payments, Albert Ellentuck at the accounting firm of Laventhol & Horwath suggests, "you may want to cut this amount by 10 percent to be conservative and anticipate possible future cutbacks."

Once you have arrived at a monthly or yearly income figure, you can separately reckon what your living costs are likely to be, projecting from your current circumstances.

Some of your expenses will probably be reduced or eliminated once you are no longer working — for example, the costs of commuting and dressing for work.

At the same time, says IDS, "no matter how modest a person's means, chances are that expenditures for leisure activities and hobbies will increase after retirement."

Although inflation is no longer the menace it was a few years ago, it still must be taken into account. Even at a 4 percent annual rate, surely an optimistic estimate, the cost of living will double in 18 years.

Many people who go through this exercise find that their projected retirement incomes fall short of their projected expenses. While this may be scary, advisers say, having an estimate of the extra money you will need helps in deciding what you need to do to close the gap.

"Retirement planning requires discipline," Ellentuck observed. "It forces us to confront our financial situation now.

"If a restructuring of investments or other assets can take care of the entire gap, you won't have to do anything else. But if additional increased savings are also needed, you will have to make some further adjustments in your lifestyle.

"You'll be delighted to discover that a few changes today will pay off manyfold in your retirement years."

Guide rates retirement locations

By LEONARD J. HANSEN
Copley News Service

"When I retire, I'll move to where it is warm, without these cold winters."

"When I retire, I want to play golf every day."

"When I retire, I want to get away from the noise of this city to where I can see the ocean every day."

"When I retire, I want to move from this small town to where I can hear a real symphony, see professional theater and explore museums and galleries."

"When I retire ..." Here you can fill in your own reason to consider a move on retirement — and if you do move away from your longtime residential area you will be among the 5 percent of retirees each year who do so.

The concept of moving — particularly from the states where it gets very hot in summer or very cold in winter — started years ago and has grown actively over the past 20 years. What makes it all the more possible is the development of complete retirement communities, such as Leisure World and Sun City. Originally these were established the sunbelt areas of Florida, Arizona and California. Now they have been developed in other states, including Texas, New Mexico and Georgia.

Interestingly, most senior citizens who move after retirement do not move to dedicated retirement communities or villages, but instead to a general geographic area they find is their choice for retirement living. Here they will move as a new resident of the city and residential district, rather than to a senior community, apartment complex or mobile home park.

How do you choose your retirement Eden if you do not want to move? Well, every time there is a perceived need by enough people, someone will publish a book on the subject as a guide for your consideration and selection. Such a guide is the new Rand McNally "Retirement Places Rated" book, by Richard Boyer and David Sagaveau, which considers many factors in analyzing 131 desired retirement areas of the United States.

The analysis documents information on each market in a score of categories, from locations to rainfall, from cost of housing to the type of housing available. The areas are then rated according to point systems assigned for each of the categories: money matters, climate, personal safety, services, housing and leisure living. One area might be very high in desirability in one category — according to the author — while being very low in another. Miami might be the example, placing as the very best for leisure living, but No. 131, the very worst for personal safety.

Authors Boyer and Savageau have rated as the overall "No. 1" the Murry/Kentucky Lake area of Kentucky, and the least desirable No. 131 — as Portsmouth and Dover in New Hampshire.

The Top 10 of the ratings overall might prove surprising; Clayton/Clarkesville, Ga.; Hot Springs, Ark.; Grand Lake, Okla.; Fayetteville, Ark.; St. George/Zion, Utah; Brownsville/Harlingen, Texas; Bloomington, Ind.; San Antonio, Texas and Port Angeles, Wash. The overall ratings do not reflect the individual choices of retirees where choice of climate might be more important than the cost of housing.

If you are considering a move in retirement, the encyclopedic information of Rand McNally's "Retirement Places Rated" can be most valuable to your considerations. The 219-page paperback has large pages (8½x11) and is easily read. Retail price is $12.95 at bookstores, less at discount stores (ISBN-528-88081-0).

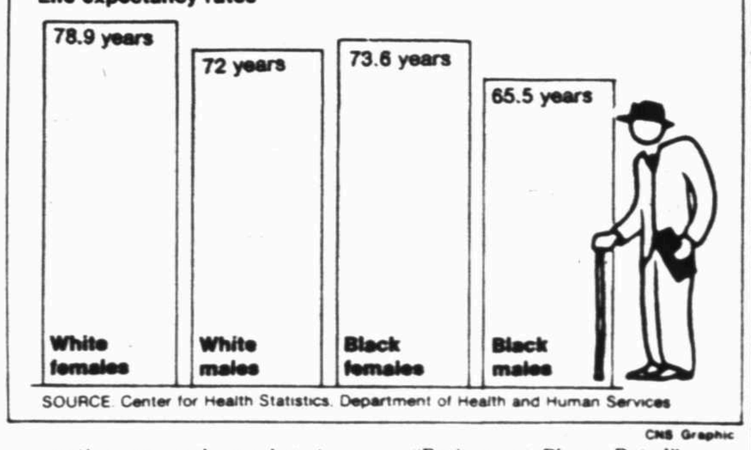

The choice of where you retire is your own — no one else can provide you with a magic rating. Your choices should be made on your own desires for your lifestyle, growth, activity and reasons. You can request information by writing chambers of commerce in areas you are considering. Also, write area convention and visitor bureaus for information on recreational, cultural and events activities and facilities. Your library should have reference books for the names and addresses of these organizations.

Retirement can be the best time of your life if you use it productively and to fulfill your dreams. Perhaps that dream fulfillment is in a move to a new area. Or perhaps it is right at home. The research and consideration can prove to be a satisfying, interesting and rewarding adventure.

DEAR ABBY

Man wants to put 'love' before marriage

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: What is your opinion of a man who wants me to live with him, yet will give me no definite confirmation of a wedding date? I have known him for three years and love him very much. He tells me that he loves me, but he hasn't asked me to marry him. I love him enough to live with him forever, yet I don't want to throw away years of my life waiting for him. He knows how I feel. — K.G.M. IN TEMPE, ARIZ.

DEAR K.G.: This man knows you love him enough to live with him forever. He says he loves you, but he hasn't as yet found a good reason to marry you. Time is precious and irreplaceable. Don't invest any more time in him than you are prepared to waste.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 27-year-old man in love with a sweet, unspoiled 22-year-old girl who lives at home with her parents. We've been going together for nearly a year and she's the first girl I have ever wanted to marry, but here's the problem.

When we started dating, she told her parents that I sold beauty supplies. Abby, I don't sell anything — I'm a hairdresser! I am disgusted with myself for not having the nerve to insist that my girlfriend tell her parents the truth about what I do for a living. It's an honest way to earn a living and I'm not ashamed of it. She said her parents would never understand. What is there to understand? And what should I do? — TIRED OF LYING

DEAR TIRED: Ask this "sweet, unspoiled" girl why she thinks her parents would object to her dating a hairdresser. Then insist that she tell them the truth. Next, take a long, hard look at your girlfriend before you commit to anything as permanent as marriage. She appears to be both immature and deceitful.

DEAR ABBY: Why should a man send flowers to his wife on their anniversary and her birthday in care of the office where she works? She's not a spring chicken, and they've been married for a long time.

Could he be trying to show up the husbands of the other women who work there? (No other husbands send flowers to their wives at work.) — NOSY IN BALTIMORE

DEAR NOSY: Perhaps he sends the flowers to the office for her to enjoy where her day needs the most brightening. She clearly has a generous, thoughtful husband at home.

DEAR ABBY: This is for women who believe that every bachelor is eligible for marriage. After the death of my husband, who had been a loving, caring, generous man, I married the "prize" bachelor in town. What a disappointment! I soon learned why he had never married. He cared for no one but himself. He never learned how to give. He was a selfish, self-centered tightwad.

Abby, some confirmed bachelors should remain single. They know themselves better than others know them, and are probably most eligible for bachelorhood. — BEEN THERE IN IOWA

DEAR BEEN THERE: The same can be said for some "independent" women.

Latest trends in fashion created by accident

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

We visited some friends recently and their kids were marched in dutifully to say hello. Their son was wearing a pair of faded jeans that looked like they had been rescued from a coral reef. His shirt was frayed and there was a hole in the elbow. His small sister was wearing jeans that were so thin her knees were showing through, and they were stuffed in a pair of high-top gym shoes without strings. She topped it with a jacket that was tattered around the cuffs and was three sizes too big for her. If it hadn't been for the two quartz watches on their arms, they could have passed for a couple of Waltons.

I whispered to my husband, "How can they afford to dress their kids like that? Ed doesn't make that kind of money. Both outfits must have set him back a couple of hundred dollars."

My husband looked at me with disbelief. "Our kids dress like that."

"Yes," I countered, "but that is because you have a clever wife. I don't FOLLOW trends. I CREATE them. Who do you think invented acid-bleached and stone-washed jeans? Moi! That's who. Every major fashion breakthrough in the last 20 years started in my utility room.

"Take pastel shirts for men. I had no idea I was charting a new course in fashion history the day I put all of your shirts into the wash with a new set of red towels. No one expected to see a high school principal roam the halls in pink shirts week after week, but within a year, if you remember, manufacturers were bringing out shirts in shades of pink, blue and yellow, and you know the rest.

"Some trends even surprise me. Like the Monday morning our son got up late and we had been out late Sunday and I didn't have a chance to iron his shirt and the bus was honking the horn and he tore out of the house wearing the top to his ski pajamas. Well, the next thing you know, the entire 'Star Trek' crew was wearing pajama tops on the Starship Enterprise and the rest is history.

"I don't purposely set out to change the destiny of style. It just happens. I'll be honest with you. The day I inadvertently knocked over a bottle of bleach and it snaked across my best blouse, I never dreamt that I had invented tie-dye. And who would have believed that story of the pure silk blouse with the DRY CLEAN ONLY label on it that I stupidly put into the washer? When it came out limp and wrinkled, I called it "raw silk" and now everyone is buying it."

"I had no idea all those fashion trends were yours," said my husband as he lifted his pant leg. "Are you telling me that it's only a matter of time before everyone in the country will be wearing one black sock and one burgundy?"

"Trust me," I said, "any day now Neiman and Marcus will both be wearing them."

Getting

When Christi Dodd, a clean-cut teenager, giggles and reveals a mouthful of braces, she looks like any other 18-year-old, not one who was tricked into entering a drug rehabilitation program.

And her parents, Terry and Gail Dodd, don't look like the type of people who would concoct a ploy of a non-existent funeral to get their daughter to a rehabilitation program in Dallas — but just over a year ago, that is exactly what they did.

"Christi had quit wearing make-up and taking care of herself," Mrs. Dodd, Christi's mother, said, recalling the downward spiral of her daughter's drug habit. "Her boyfriend was a drug-user who persuaded her to try drugs.

"She went down so fast. She ran away from home and for awhile we didn't know where she was. The Sheriff's Department helped us out. They've been very supportive. We found Christi in a house with a lot of other drug users."

"She was considering trying heroin when we found her," Dodd said.

Desperate to get their daughter away from the drug-infested environment, the Dodds told her the only thing they knew would persuade her to leave with them.

"They told me my grandma in Dallas died and my grandpa wanted me to come to the funeral," Miss Dodd said. "It was the only way to get her in the car and keep her there during the long drive to Dallas," Mrs. Dodd said.

THIS "LONG drive to Dallas" was just the first many miles the Dodds would drive between Midland and Dallas. It was the beginning of over 30,000 miles the Dodds would log on the car to see their daughter and get counseling themselves. It also was the beginning of a time in which they would ostracize their friends, give up their house to pay for their daughter's treatment and do some serious soul-searching.

The reason for all of this is that the Dodds elected to register their daughter in Straight, Inc., a drug rehabilitation program centered in Dallas, created in 1976 as a non-profit, privately funded treatment center for drug-using young people (12-21) and their families.

"We tricked Christi into going to Dallas, but it was a life or death trick," Dodd said.

Straight, Inc., with programs in eight U.S. cities, uses the 12 Steps of Alcoholics Anonymous and incorporates peer pressure in a positive manner in their rehabilitation program.

"Straight uses the concept of 'kids helping kids,' " said Nancy G. Anderson, family service center coordinator of the Straight Family Center in Midland, which opened Aug. 31 in ClayDesta's Twin Towers. "The idea is that since peer pressure gets them into drugs, peer pressure can be used to get them out of drugs," Ms. Anderson said.

Miss Dodd was accepted into the program as what is known as a third-stage "druggie."

Straight recognizes four stages of drug use classification, according to Ms. Anderson.

"The first stage is experimentation," she said. "At the second stage, the users are seeking mood swings. By the third stage, getting drugs has become the main concern of their lives. The fourth stage is when the user has to have drugs."

MISS DODD vividly remembers the day she arrived at Straight. "It was Sept. 13, 1986, a Saturday," she said. "I remember it because I was angry at my parents for bringing me in."

"Christi had a lot of anger and resentment," Ms. Anderson said. "She was in the first phase of treatment, which involves a 'cooling off' period for 104 days. The minimum required 'cooling off' period is 14 days. But the average amount of time necessary for most adolescents is 30-50 days."

During the "cooling off" period, adolescents live near the rehabilitation center with a host family, another family who has a child farther along in the program.

"There is a minimal charge to keep the adolescent in the home and it is cost-effective because it eliminates room and board expenses for parents of children enrolled in the program," Ms. Anderson said.

The "cooling off" period consists of intensive counseling, physical and psychiatric assessments and ongoing daily therapy. Family members and their children receive counseling and the latter retire to host homes for the evening.

The theory of the host home set-up is that it prevents the child from having to be institutionalized and better prepares the child for re-entry into his or her own home — a home which will have new rules and behavior expectations.

Adolescents must obey the rules of the host home and "earn the right to talk to their parents, again," Ms. Anderson said. "Also, if the child progressing through the program attempts to run away, the consequence is that he must start the program over from day one."

STRAIGHT

Because the host homes must be near the Straight counseling building in Dallas, there are no host home set-ups in Midland. However, 20 Midlanders have graduated from the Straight program in Dallas, according to Ms. Anderson. After graduating, graduates are required to attend a six-month after-care program. After-care requires the Straight graduate to attend two meetings per week for the first three months, then one meeting per week for the final three months.

"Rather than have Midland families driving to Dallas twice a week for after-care, we established this office here to satisfy that need," said Ms. Anderson, who earned a bachelor of science degree from Texas Tech University, specializing in human development and family studies.

The after-care program concentrates on helping the child and family to improve the quality of their lives after sobriety has been achieved, according to Ms. Anderson.

"Returning a drug-free child to an unchanged environment with an unchanged belief system dooms him to failure," said Donald McDonald, M.D., and author of "Drugs, Drinking and Adolescents."

MS. ANDERSON said bolstering the child's and family's feelings of low self-esteem is an essential part of counseling.

"People with low self-esteem think that drugs will make them feel better," Ms. Anderson said. "They get started on a self-medicating cycle which makes them feel worse every time they come down off the drugs."

Unfortunately, easy access to drugs, peer pressure and an emphasis on "feeling good" combine to create an environment where drugs and alcohol are tempting to teenagers, according to Dr. Robert L. Dupont, president of the American Council on Marijuana, Inc.

"In the 20th Century in the United States, every age segment of our population has gotten healthier from one decade to the next with one exception: America's youth, 15-24, are now dying at a roughly 16 percent greater rate than they were in 1960. Many of these deaths are powerfully related to drug abuse," Dupont said at a Straight banquet.

"Quality recovery must go hand in hand with abstinence and the Straight program is based on personal self-change, family involvement and values," Dupont said.

"The Straight program makes kids and their families stronger," Ms. Anderson said. "A lot of positive things come out of setbacks."

"WE HAVE been through a lot," Mrs. Dodd said. "We chose Straight because we felt we needed a long-term program instead of a short-term program. Drug and alcohol abuse is only a symptom of a 'disease of the feelings' " she said. "We feel everything that's happened to us was God's way of telling us we had a dysfunctional family.

"Straight gets to the root of why someone is an addict. Even parents have to go way back to discover causes of problems," Mrs. Dodd said.

Even though a long-term program like Straight can be expensive, the Dodds feel it was worth the cost.

"It wasn't obvious that Christi was taking drugs," Dodd said. "We thought we were doing the right things as parents. We don't drink. The family never missed church."

"Sometimes, teenagers can be on drugs for two years before anyone finds out," Ms. Anderson said. "Some indications — attitude problems, red eyes, rebellion and poor grades — soon add up."

"Straight kept us from feeling like everything was our fault. Now I know that the only thing we are responsible for is loving our family," Mrs. Dodd said. "We learned the power of peer pressure and that there is noting you can do to keep your children from trying drugs.

"However, people blamed us. Friends would ask, 'How could you not know that your kid was taking drugs?' We pushed all our friends away before Christi entered the program," Mrs. Dodd said. "I quit my job before we took Christi to Straight. I thought I was going to fix things by staying home. If I had to do it all over again I would still take her to Straight. Now I appreciate life more and the material things don't matter."

MS. ANDERSON said there are only two requirements for parents who have children in the Straight program. "First, the entire family must participate and second, they must meet their financial obligations," Ms. Anderson said, adding that there are various payment plans available.

"The sacrifice was worth it," Dodd said.

"We want to show Christi off," Mrs. Dodd said. "She has accomplished so much. You should see what some of those kids entering the Straight program look like when they go in and what beautiful young people they become."

Mrs. Dodd noted that during her daughter's counseling, it was revealed that their son, Jeff, 16, had been taking drugs since he was 10. An offshoot of this is that Jeff is now in the fourth phase of rehabilitation.

"If we didn't believe in Straight," Dodd said. "We wouldn't have put a second child into the program."

"Christi and Jeff, who never had a good relationship, are now working on one," said Mrs. Dodd.

Christi, who came back to live with her parents Sept. 4, said returning home was "scary," that it was like getting ready to attend a new school. However, she said she is planning on presenting her story in speaking engagements.

"Everything in our household has changed," Dodd said. "Everything is black and white and we all know where we stand ... together."

For information about Straight, Inc., contact Nancy Anderson at Family Service Center, 10 Desta Drive, Midland, 79705 or call 687-4673.

Drug program employs 'Tools of Personal Change'

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO
Lifestyle Writer

Called "Tools of Personal Change," the 12 Steps used at Straight, Inc., a drug rehabilitation program in seven U.S. cities, are actually principles of living — tools that are learned and used during the program and throughout life to help guide the person through the choices that confront him or her.

The goal, achieved during the program's five phases, is to internalize the program so choices are routinely scrutinized and used to the best interests of each individual. The 12 Steps are used to direct this process.

- We admitted we are powerless over alcohol and drugs — that our lives had become unmanageable.
- We have come to believe that a power greater than ourselves could restore us to sanity.
- We made a decision to turn our will and our lives over to the care of God as we understand him.
- We made a searching and fearless moral inventory of ourselves.
- We admitted to God, to ourselves, and to another human being the exact nature of our wrongs.
- We were entirely ready to have God remove all these defects of character.
- We humbly asked Him to remove our shortcomings.
- We made a list of all persons we had harmed, and became willing to make amends to them all.
- We made direct amends to such people wherever possible, except when to do so would injure them or others.
- We continued to make personal inventory and when we were wrong promptly admitted it.
- We sought through prayer and meditation to improve our conscious contact with God as we understand Him, praying only for knowledge of His will for us and the power to carry that out.
- Having had a spiritual awakening as the results of these steps, we tried to carry this message to others, and to practice these principles in all our affairs.

Students relieve stress in exercise class

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Dr. Dennis Lobstein says exercise can prevent stress and its related diseases. And he has the class to prove it.

Lobstein, an associate professor of physical education and a self-described psychobiologist, founded the Adult Fitness Program at the University of New Mexico.

Lobstein defines a psychobiologist as one who specializes in research into the interaction of the body and mind and its biomedical underpinnings.

"My research shows that as one becomes physically fit, stress levels go down," Lobstein said. "That's the purpose of this class."

The year-old program, offered by UNM's department of health, physical education and recreation, focuses on reducing stress levels through diet, exercise and relaxation techniques.

Before joining the UNM faculty in January 1986, Lobstein created a similar program at Lamar University in Beaumont, Texas. That program was cited by the Andrus Gerontology Center at the University of Southern California as one of the 20 most unique fitness programs for the elderly in the country.

He said one of his Lamar students was a 90-year-old Texas oilman who said the program saved his life.

Under UNM's program, graduate students in health promotion and exercise physiology use exercise equipment and expertise to conduct testing, prepare a biomedical work-up, and design exercise prescriptions.

Students begin the 14-week class with the Minnesota Multiphasic Personality Inventory, which measures five components of depression: subjective depression, psychomotor retardation, physical malfunctioning, mental dullness and brooding.

Students then undergo a series of cardiopulmonary stress tests and biochemical profiles to measure what physical shape they are in. This is followed by a personalized exercise plan.

The class, which is open to the public, costs $85.

Troubled youths learn discipline at halfway house

DALLAS (AP) — On a hot night late in the summer, a small circle of teen-age boys sat in a large, single-story brick building on the outskirts of Dallas.

One shouted epithets about his parents.

The scene was a group therapy session at Dallas House, a halfway house for juvenile delinquents operated by the Texas Youth Commission.

The shouter, sentenced to the TYC because of drug violations, was angry because his parents used drugs themselves.

"They had spent $200,000 on drug treatment programs for him before he came to the TYC, yet they had drugs all over the house," said Robert Louis, a counselor at Dallas House.

The halfway house is a step removed from juvenile probation on the county level, a step below the confines of a state training school. It is an innovation that arose since a federal judge ordered reforms in the juvenile system 13 years ago.

Besides Dallas, there are eight other halfway houses around the state, located in Austin, Corpus Christi, El Paso, Fort Worth, Harlingen, McAllen, Richmond and San Antonio.

Problem teens sent to Dallas House by the TYC's Brownwood classification center are supposed to stay four to six months. An increase in juveniles sentenced to the TYC, however, has cut the normal stay to four months.

The boys, ages 15 to 17, live four to a room in six dormitory-style rooms. They are mostly non-violent offenders with troubled home lives.

Here, they are taught discipline and respect for a social order, in addition to programs such as group therapy sessions. Officials say possibly one in three will wind up in prison as adults.

"For everybody in here, it's made a change. But still, when they get out of here they forget about it," said Mike, 16.

He was already on probation when he was sentenced for unauthorized use of a motor vehicle.

The programs help and so do volunteer work in the community and field trips, he said.

Paul, 19, was paroled from Dallas House 18 months ago. He's now a machine operator at a plastics factory and plans to stay out of trouble.

"When I came in this program, I was more of a follower," said Paul, who returned to Dallas House for a visit. "This program helped me out. This program taught me responsibility."

Nuclear research designing drugs to prolong life

Copley News Service

"We've reached the final frontier of science, the time has come to challenge death itself."

Do these sound like the words of a raving lunatic or responsible scientist?

Well, Eastman-Kodak is willing to bet $45 million that the author of that quote knows what he's talking about.

The author is Milan Panic, president of ICN Pharmaceuticals, who makes the anti-viral agent ribovirin and markets it under the trade name Virazole to AIDS victims.

The Nucleic Acid Research portion of his company also is involved in a six-year program financed by Eastman-Kodak to design a drug that either stops, slows or reverses the aging process.

From his ICN corporate headquarters in Costa Mesa, Calif., Panic oversees the work of 125 research scientists in West Germany, the Netherlands, France, Mexico and Canada.

They're trying to stimulate immune mechanisms damaged by viruses and initiate dormant cell repair.

Viruses, Panic believes, are the true cause of human death.

Wine drinkers differ

NEW YORK (AP) — Red and white wine drinkers have strikingly different personality traits, according to Family Circle magazine, reporting on a recent survey of waiters from 48 New York restaurants.

Waiters perceive red wine drinkers as "wild," "dangerous," and "sensual," the magazine says, while drinkers of white wine are "better dressed" and "more chic."

Genetics of alcoholism studied

By JANE E. BRODY
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Alcoholism runs in families, a fact recognized since ancient times. Although familial alcoholism has long been attributed to an inherited "weak character," until recently most researchers thought it was almost entirely the result of environmental influences: imitation of parental drinking habits, poverty and other social and family pressures.

However, studies conducted in the last 15 years, including a 1972 investigation of 69 hospitalized alcoholics in St. Louis and their siblings and ongoing studies of twins and adopted children in Scandinavia, have shed important new light on the genetics of alcoholism.

The findings indicate that for at least half the nation's 10 million alcoholics, hereditary factors overwhelmingly determined their development of the disease. Researchers have identified as important influences such inherited characteristics as how an individual metabolizes alcohol, hormonal and behavioral effects of alcohol and tolerance of high levels of alcohol in the blood.

On average, as Swedish studies of adopted children clearly showed, the children of alcoholics are four times more likely than other children to become alcoholics. This risk prevails even if the children are adopted early in life by people who do not abuse alcohol.

Rather than implying that some people are doomed to alcoholism, the findings suggest new ways to identify those at risk and to help prevent them from becoming alcoholics.

JUST AS people who have inherited a predisposition for developing coronary heart disease can take precautions, those at risk of developing alcoholism can learn to recognize potential problems and modify their drinking behavior accordingly.

First and foremost, the children — and grandchildren — of alcoholics must be aware of the risk to their health. At a national conference earlier this year on the genetics of alcoholism that was organized by the New York State Division of Alcoholism and Alcohol Abuse, Robert V. Noble, director of the division, cited the results of a telephone survey conducted last December among a random sample of selected state residents 18 years or older.

Although 41 percent of the respondents said that one or both of their parents were alcoholics, only 5 percent of those surveyed knew that the children of alcoholics faced an increased risk of developing the disease. Children of alcoholics were more likely than the other respondents to be aware of this.

The findings suggested lack of awareness can increase the likelihood of developing in later life the children of alcoholics who fail to take advantage of their higher risk. Those three times as much and sometimes as often as those who might be predisposed to alcoholism. Those who were not aware of such a link were much more likely to drink to intoxication and those who recognized their risk.

EVEN IF you are not the child of an alcoholic but are a blood relative of one, it is advisable. At the alcoholism conference, Dr. Theodore Reich of the Alcohol Research Center at Washington University in St. Louis described his study, conducted from 1978 to 1983, of 243 alcoholics and their families.

Among the 202 men, 38 percent had alcoholic fathers and 21 percent had alcoholic mothers, 57 percent had alcoholic brothers and 15 percent had alcoholic sisters, 32 percent had alcoholic sons and 19 percent had alcoholic daughters.

Of the 41 women, the rates of alcoholism among their parents, siblings and children were similar.

Familial alcoholism tends to develop early in life, Reich found. By age 25, 32 percent of the sons of the alcoholic fathers in the study had become alcoholics; of the sons of alcoholic mothers, half had become alcoholics by age 25.

At this rate, Reich projected, by age 40, more than half of the men and women with one alcoholic parent will have developed the disease; among those with two alcoholic parents, 60 to 65 percent will be likely to have it.

By contrast, for individuals in the general population, alcoholism will eventually develop in about 3 percent of the women and 8 to 10 percent of the men, national health statistics show.

In separate studies described by Dr. Donald W. Goodwin of the University of Kansas Medical Center, it was shown that even if their parents were teetotalers, people who had alcoholic grandparents were far more likely than others to become alcoholics.

SCIENTISTS SEARCHING for precise genetic factors that predispose families to alcoholism have found one thing that actually protects against alcoholism: the lack of an enzyme that breaks down acetaldehyde, a stimulating but toxic substance formed in the body from alcohol.

This enzyme deficiency is especially common among Asians, two-thirds of whom suffer ill effects from small amounts of alcohol, Goodwin reported. The resulting buildup of acetaldehyde can cause those with the deficiency to become flushed, dizzy, headachy and nauseated after drinking only a little alcohol.

In general, women and Jews are also more likely than Gentile men to experience such effects from alcohol, Goodwin said. On average only about 5 percent of Caucasians are affected by alcohol in this way, he added.

Dr. Marc A. Schuckit, a psychiatrist at the University of California at San Diego who has studied the young, as yet nonalcoholic sons of alcoholics, found that their response to alcohol differs significantly from that of the sons of nonalcoholics. When given the same amount of alcohol as sons of nonalcoholics, the alcoholics' sons felt less dizzy, their posture was more stable and there was less of a change in secretion of hormones that are usually affected by alcohol.

In other words, they got less drunk, indicating a higher tolerance for alcohol. Other studies have shown that those predisposed to alcoholism get more stimulation and pleasure from alcohol, as reflected by changes in brain chemicals and electrical patterns.

AT THE State University of New York Downstate Medical Center in Brooklyn, Dr. Henri Begleiter found differences in electrical brain responses to alcohol. He and his colleagues showed that the brain waves that follow a characteristic pattern when people have to make a decision, called P3 waves, differ markedly in the sons of alcoholics from the P3 waves in people who drink only socially — after just one drink.

Researchers are working toward the day when simple screening tests will show which people are predisposed to alcoholism. Meanwhile, they recommend the following:

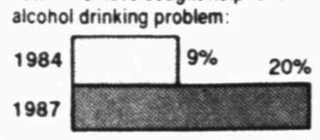

- If you are a male whose father suffered from severe alcoholism, you would be wise to avoid alcohol entirely.
- If your mother, father or any grandparent was an alcoholic, consider yourself at risk of alcohol abuse. If you choose to drink at all, limit your intake to one or two drinks per occasion and avoid drinking every day and when you are depressed or alone.
- If you find yourself drinking to excess (drinking more than five drinks per occasion, drinking to get drunk or being unable to remember what happened after you were drinking), get help right away, before your alcohol abuse gets out of control.

More alcoholic adults seek help

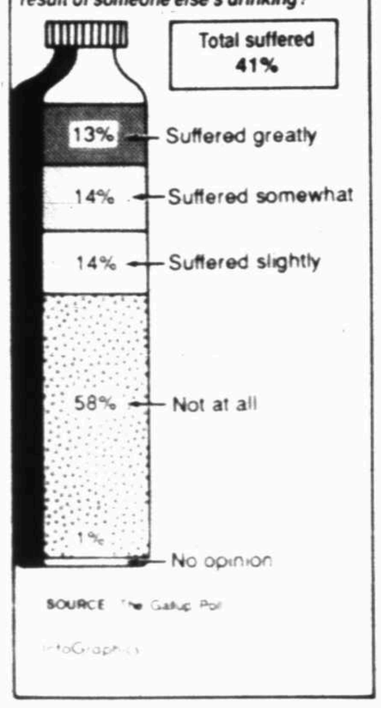

In the last three years, there has been a dramatic increase in the percentage of Americans who say they have sought professional or medical help for a drinking problem -- from nine percent in 1984 to 20 percent in 1987. About 40 percent of those surveyed said that they had suffered "in some way" from someone else's drinking.

Taped messages provide facts on drugs

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — Students in Dayton public schools no longer have to rely on street and locker room gossip for information on drugs and alcohol.

Now they can get the straight dope through anonymous phone calls where tape-recorded messages detail the dangers and provide facts about subjects such as stress, suicide and child sexual abuse.

The Student Awareness System is one of eight the Ohio Lottery Commission purchased for schools around the state.

"It worked so well in the Cleveland Public Schools that we offered it to the major school districts in each of our regional office towns," said lottery spokeswoman Anne Bloomberg.

The concept was developed and put into use about a decade ago in a Pennsylvania mental health center and tapes are now furnished by a California firm.

Along with Cleveland and Dayton, Lorain, Toledo, Youngstown, Canton, Marietta and Columbus have the dial-up systems, she said. Each unit cost about $6,000.

"It's a low-cost way to disseminate a lot of information to a lot of people," said Jill Moberly, spokeswoman for Dayton's school system. "The telephone system without some human contact isn't going to make that much difference, but it is a way to have more kids call and get the facts confidentially."

So far, records indicate the most popular of the 64 taped messages is a quiz which tells the caller if he has a potential drug or alcohol problem. Second most popular is a tape on childhood stress.

Compare that with the system installed at San Diego, Calif., in 1984, where a tape called "Stimulants: Crystal Amphetamine" was the most popular with about 7.5 percent of the 13,965 calls where someone actually asked for a tape. Second most popular was a tape on alcohol called "Party Time."

The taped messages are supplied by the Institute for Drug and Alcohol Prevention at San Marcos, Calif. It arranges for sponsors for the equipment and gets financial support from a cut of the sales for each system, founder Rex McClure said.

McClure, a psychologist in DuBois, Pa., said the first system had been installed in a mental health center there about 10 years ago.

McClure left about two years ago and Charles Granger, a former Navy psychologist, took over running the institute. He said about 90 cities now had the systems, with businesses increasingly installing their own.

The taped messages are extensively researched, Granger said, because "the people here all come from a generation where we were all lied to about drugs."

The messages are not limited to drugs and alcohol. Each system can have customized messages, such as Dayton's about obtaining work permits.

In Cincinnati, tapes about teen-age suicide also are popular, Dee Elmore said.

A tape on depression is popular in Dayton among some younger children, said receptionist Patricia Hildreth, who monitors the black box that answers the Student Awareness System line. "I thought, how do they even know what that word means?" she said.

Having that anonymous early warning of problems, by analyzing which tapes are most popular, may be one of the most valuable parts of the system, Miss Moberly said.

Author founds alcoholism recovery group for women

[illegible] News Service

[illegible] Kirkpatrick, author and lecturer, said her drinking career in [illegible] proceeded down the [illegible] boulevard with unwavering [illegible]. In her 20s she was kicked [illegible] colleges, involved in several [illegible] accidents and developed a drug addiction in addition to [illegible] alcoholism.

She went through a divorce, a suicide attempt and psychiatric treatment. She tried Alcoholics Anonymous but couldn't make it [illegible] in a desperate attempt [illegible] her own drinking habit, she [illegible] cutting down the sentence "I [illegible] competent woman."

"Simplistic as that sounds, it was a way I was able to create an image of how I wanted to be. And it worked," she said.

From that simple sentence, Women for Sobriety was born. A self-help group for women alcoholics, it began in 1975 and now has 5,000 members across the United States. Kirkpatrick, a 55-year-old sociologist who is often confused with former U.N. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick, says WFS is the only recovery program aimed at female alcoholics.

Alcoholics Anonymous, which was founded half a century ago, is the nation's largest and best-known recovery program for alcoholics. Although she estimates that one third of the AA membership — 175,000 members — are women, Kirkpatrick says that the program is male-oriented and male-dominated.

"Not everyone can fit into one anything, but because AA was — and is — so successful, the assumption is that it's going to suit everyone's needs. It was never intended for women and it doesn't speak to women's issues. The treatment of alcoholism is not merely the cessation of drinking. What you really must treat is the socialization of men and the socialization of women."

Kirkpatrick, the author of "Turnabout: Help for a New Life," "A Fresh Start" and "Goodbye Hangovers, Hello Life," is a self-described feminist. She believes that the differences between men and women alcoholics and how they are perceived by society demands separate treatment. For example, Kirkpatrick says that women alcoholics face a stigma that men don't.

"No society has a very high regard for a woman alcoholic — recovered or drinking. We have this pristine image of women. It's an unreal idea of making women appear what they are not."

Women face discrimination when they seek treatment — they may lose custody of their children or be forced to place them in a foster home when they enter a treatment facility, Kirkpatrick says. "In addition, they more often have complications from prescription drug problems than their male counterparts."

It is estimated that there are 5 million women alcoholics in the United States, and only 3 to 5 percent of them have sought treatment, Kirkpatrick says.

Although there are similarities between WFS and AA — both believe that alcoholism is a disease and that abstinence is the only cure — Kirkpatrick criticizes AA for several reasons. First, she complains that AA purports to be the only means to lifelong recovery from alcoholism.

Another complaint Kirkpatrick has is that the AA emphasis on humility and reliving past drinking experiences is damaging for women alcoholics.

"Instead, WFS encourages its members to forget the past and get on with their lives. Women have such a sense of 'It was all my fault, mea culpa, mea culpa.' Women are great at feeling the victim — it's a role they're well-suited for. They need a sense of value, of self-worth and self-confidence."

"Men generally are not in touch with their feelings. I believe that's why they don't mind telling their drinking stories because they don't have to probe their feelings. Women are so in touch with their feelings and so in touch with their drinking behavior and the humiliation, they don't need to be reminded.

Nor does she like the nurturing aspects of AA and says that it only serves a purpose in early sobriety.

"I think there comes a point at which, especially for women, you must break away from that cocoon," she said.

New 'high' deadly

Copley News Service

"Cocooning," is a new "high" for kids — that is getting drunk and then placing a loose-fitting garbage bags over the head.

Authorities in Hawksville, Ga., say two teenagers have died "cocooning." The teens were overcome by a lack of oxygen, drifted into unconsciousness and couldn't remove the bags.

"Cocooning" provides a state of euphoria or "buzz" by restricting oxygen intake and recycling exhaled carbon dioxide, but drinking compounds the effect.

Every year 4 million American homes are burglarized. That means more than one out of every three households will eventually be broken into. One of their prime targets is your guns. There's one sure way to stop a burglar cold - a Browning Pro-Steel gun safe. Don't think that just any safe can do the job because not all safes are created equal!

THE BROWNING PRO-STEEL DIFFERENCE. No other name security safe - even more expensive competitor's models - can stand a quality security comparison with a Browning Pro-Steel Deluxe Safe. A look at Browning Pro-Steel and the difference becomes obvious.

- Browning Pro-Steel has all active locking bolts on both sides of the door
- Independent locking bolts - if one is defeated the others remain locked
- Reinforced door perimeter on all sides with 2 inch square heavy steel tube offering twice the resistance to prying of two sided angle iron.
- ½" cold rolled steel locking bolts supported at the door frame with two rails of steel instead of one
- Bolts enter through opposing recesses in the massive steel reinforcing of the door frame instead of locking behind an unreinforced body shell.

Look-alike pills legal, not 'harmless,' as advertised

By SUE RUSCHE
Hearst News Service

A high school teacher and a school counselor write the following:

Q. We have become increasingly aware of a campaign to push caffeine pills on the public. These pills are sold as "quick fixes" for whatever might ail a person.

They are designed to look like illegal drugs — amphetamines, barbiturates, hallucinogens — and are advertised in top-selling, high-fashion magazines and on top-40 radio stations listened to mostly by teenagers.

It is scary to think what young people, and the public in general, are really buying and consuming. What are touted as "harmless" caffeine pills (or pills to help you sleep, relieve pain or relax), could be mistaken for (or resold as amphetamines, barbiturates or hallucinogens.)

What's more, caffeine itself can be harmful, particularly in large doses, which these ads encourage. The ads offer discounts for large-quantity orders, as well as for a prompt response. Seeing ads for these drugs in magazines and hearing them on the radio was a shock. Of course, one has the option to refuse to buy magazines that sell such products or to turn off stations that broadcast such commercials.

However, what choice does one have when brochures for these products arrive in the mailbox? The enclosed photocopy was made from the actual literature that was sent to our homes. We in no way solicited this information.

Unfortunately, caffeine pills are becoming more and more accessible to those who have the potential to abuse them, particularly young people.

Working with adolescents who are chemically dependent and who have abused caffeine pills as well as the street drugs they're designed to look like has made us more aware of the danger these ads present.

What can be done to prevent this?

A. I wish I had an easy answer. I don't.

The examples you sent me — both the ads you cut out of fashion magazines and the flyers you received in the mail — are all advertising look-alike drugs, which are copies of controlled substances made with non-controlled substances.

These drugs have two dangers. Certain combinations of non-controlled substances used to make look-alikes can be dangerous in themselves, as can large quantities of single non-controlled substances, such as caffeine, as you point out.

The second danger is that of potential overdose. Drug abusers take large quantities of look-alikes to get an effect. When they mistakenly obtain the real thing, they can overdose and die.

Many states have outlawed look-alike drugs. However, no such federal law exists. If look-alike drugs are illegal in your state, then these ads are advertising illegal substances and you can ask your state drug enforcement authorities to take action against those who sell them.

If look-alikes have not been banned in your state, these drugs are legal and the only recourse you have is to lobby for such a law. Other things you can do include: 1) Lobby for a federal look-alike law. 2) Bring pressure on magazines and radio stations to stop carrying such ads. 3) Ask others who advertise legitimate products in such magazines and radio stations to spend their ad dollars elsewhere. 4) Send copies of those letters to editors and station managers.

The flyer you received makes the manufacturer's intentions clear. The organization offers to reduce the price of a $25 jar containing 1,000 pills to $15 if 10 or more jars are purchased. Who but drug pushers needs to buy 10,000 stimulants at a time?

Programs help adult children of alcoholics cope

Hearst News Service

Twenty-eight million Americans have or have had at least one alcoholic parent.

"And that means 28 million Americans were or are being raised in an abusive environment," says Wayne Kritsberg, a therapist who works with adult children of alcoholics at the Family Integration Center in Austin.

"The abuse can be physical or it can be emotional, but it is there in some form if there is alcoholism in the family," he says. "There's no such thing as a healthy alcoholic family — by the very definition an alcoholic family is a dysfunctional family."

There is hope, however, for those brought up in such families, says Kritsberg.

"Just because parents are alcoholic doesn't mean the children, relatives or other concerned people should give up on changing things," Kritsberg says. "These children — regardless of whether they are still living with those parents or are grown with families of their own — can get into recovery and lead rich and full lives, no matter how dismal a prognosis there is or was for the parents."

When the child already is an adult, recovery begins with the awareness and acceptance that there is a problem and that the child's alcoholic parents had an impact on the family, Kritsberg says.

If therapy isn't financially feasible, adult children of alcoholics can get help by joining an Alanon (an Alcoholics Anonymous offshoot for people involved with alcoholics) group that focuses on adult children of alcoholics, Kritsberg says.

Among the first steps adult children of alcoholics must take — either in therapy or in Alanon — is to start breaking the rules of behavior that alcoholic families adopt to cope with the alcoholism, he says.

One is the rule of rigidity, Kritsberg explains.

"Alcoholic families become very inflexible in response to the unpredictable behavior of the alcoholic. Family members have the need to control the behavior and emotions of other family members. That translates into the child not being allowed to be spontaneous and make mistakes like he would in a normal family. The child feels he can't take risks or really even play. These children, when they become adults and get together, have a hard time with instructions like 'go have fun.' They have to have their activities structured and carefully planned."

Another part of the inflexibility of the alcoholic family is that parents who are alcoholic don't let their children grow emotionally, Kritsberg believes.

"These parents let children take over mature tasks and responsibilities, but because of the constraints of the family, the adult children never really feel they had a childhood and they always feel like children again when they're around those parents," he says.

Children of alcoholics should be pressed into breaking the rule of isolation that also is common behavior in alcoholic families, Kritsbebg says. The alcoholic family resists new people coming in because they don't want to publicize that they are dysfunctional. But making new friends is another step towards recovery for the alcoholic child."

Next, get the children of alcoholics to break the rule of silence by talking about their feelings, Kritsberg suggests.

"It's very difficult for adult children of alcoholics to express anger, rage, hurt and fear because they've not been allowed to talk about what goes on in their house or how they feel about it.

Area author to sign books

Fort Stockton resident Olan M. George, author of "Roundup of Memories," will autograph copies of his book 1-4 p.m. Saturday in the Midland County Museum in the basement of Midland County Public Library.

George was born in 1908 in De Leon. He and his family moved to Pecos County at Fort Stockton in 1911 aboard a mule-drawn wagon. George attended public school in Fort Stockton 1915-1924 and worked as a cowboy for area ranches until 1928.

He and his wife Lula Carrier reared three sons and two daughters. George worked in road and highway construction for the Texas Highway Department and Texas contractors. When he retired in 1973 he was an engineer assistant for the Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation.

Arthroscopy used in jaw disorder

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — For a contemporary disease it's fitting that there's a modern-day treatment.

And some forms of TMJ, a painful jaw disorder often brought on by stress, can be treated quickly and effectively by arthroscopy, a technique used to repair athletes' knees through the same small hole with which the diagnosis is made.

"Until about 15 years ago, no one ever focused on temporomandibular joint disease, or TMJ," says Dr. Barry H. Hendler, director of oral maxillofacial surgery at the Medical College of Pennsylvania.

The condition, which affects four times as many women as men, is often aggravated by job-related stress. Symptoms include headaches, pain, clicking or cracking of the jaw joint, toothaches, earaches, blockage and ringing in the ears, neck muscle spasms and limited jaw movement.

"Since TMJ has so many symptoms, it has been difficult to diagnose," Hendler says,

"We employ the same type of arthroscope, though miniature in size, used on knees and elbows," he says, "to peer into the jaw joint through a small pinhole, made surgically. What we see shows on a TV monitor. The procedure can be done on an outpatient basis and involves no dyes or X-rays.

"If we see disease in the joint, for example scar tissue associated with a displaced disk (soft cartilage that cushions the jawbone) or a stretched ligament, we can repair the joint through the same opening, saving the patient more major surgery. This speeds recovery time from weeks or months to a few days."

Hendler says other conditions causing TMJ, such as disk perforation, require surgery. When these are suspected, diagnosis may be made by X-ray, CT scan or magnetic resonance imaging. TMJ caused by stress often is treated with muscle relaxants, soft diet, bite splints or heat.

Because TMJ has so many symptoms, it can mimic many diseases. "We call it 'The Great Imposter,'" Hendler, an oral surgeon, says. "Because the condition is often hard to pinpoint and often associated with accidents, it has become the 'whiplash of the '80s.'"

Children cry, call in despair

By JOHN GILMORE
Copley News Service

CNS Graphic

She was only 13 and she wanted to die.

One morning, from her family's farm somewhere in North Dakota, she telephoned Home Run, a nationwide runaway hot line based in Southern California.

The child sounded so helpless. She said she planned to use her dad's gun to end her life.

"I want to die," she told Charlotte Marshall, the hot line volunteer who took the call. The girl hung up, and Marshall wondered if another young life ended abruptly, in despair.

The call is among thousands handled by the 80 volunteers who work for Youth Development Inc., which runs the hot line. Many of the calls are from teenagers and younger children who only want to talk. Some mention suicide. Feelings of loneliness and despair are common.

"There are so many desperate kids out there," says Betsy Morris, Home Run's program director.

Despite efforts to help, Morris and others who work with troubled youths say they are seeing more teenage runaways, exploited youths and kids crying out for help. Exact numbers are unavailable, but the estimates are frightening:

Nationwide, the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children estimates there are between 700,000 and 1 million runaways.

HOME RUN calls are soaring. The hot line received 38,000 calls last year, up 30 percent from 1985. This May and June, volunteers manning phones round the clock handled 26,000 calls. Based on current volume, the figure could hit 100,000 this year.

Consider some recent calls:

A 15-year-old New Jersey boy denied drug addiction, but admitted keeping a fifth of liquor in his closet to ease his shakes. He said he prefers PCP to crack because "it keeps me screwed up longer."

Carey, 15, was thinking of leaving home. Her mother is on drugs. Her stepfather had raped her. "I don't want to hurt my mom (by telling police), but I don't want to hurt myself."

A 13-year-old girl from California called in tears. She didn't want to go to church. Kids call her fat.

Many of the problems, experts say, can be attributed to broken homes; physical, sexual and emotional abuse; drug and alcohol abuse by parents or teenagers; and the universal struggle by young people for independence.

"The family system in the United States has gone wrong," says 31-year-old Kathy O'Brien, a Home Run volunteer and emergency room nurse. "The family is not there for kids."

"Our families are not spending enough time together, we're too busy," says Marshall, the volunteer who took the call from the North Dakota child.

WHAT IS the answer? Experts who work with families offer these suggestions:

Listen. It may sound simple, but counselors say it's hard work. Keep silent. Be non-judgmental. Get kids to think about making choices and the consequences of their actions. Be supportive.

Forgive. Too often we let a wrong eat at us. You can say, "Look, I don't like your behavior, but I can still care about you." Hearing this will help kids feel it's all right to make mistakes.

Love. Let your children know it. Tell them. Show them. Be a role model.

Talk. Find time for it. For the teen, let parents know what's going on. If they won't listen, find others who will — a teacher, school counselor or other adult.

"We need to idle down a little bit," Marshall says, "put it in neutral and sit around the kitchen table and have a quiet time together."

BARBARA RYAN, director of the YMCA's juvenile crisis resolution program, says parents must try not to pass judgment when they do listen.

"Help kids to understand how they are feeling, whether it's scared or worried, or if they are happy about something," she says. "Let kids know you're going to be there for them."

Acceptance doesn't necessarily mean approving of your child's behavior or choices, she says.

"You don't have to like what your child does," Marshall agrees, "but you need to like them, to be with them and try and walk in their shoes a little bit. Ask them to do the reverse with you."

Listening, communicating and loving will help bridge the generation gap, but there are no guarantees.

Take, for example, the most painful call Marshall ever handled. A grief-stricken father called the hot line and told the volunteers they could remove his 13-year-old daughter's name from Home Run's computer, which lists thousands of reported runaways.

He had just claimed the body of his only child. The runaway had been shot at point-blank range, her body disfigured. The father identified his daughter by a ring he'd given her. The day he called the hot line, he had just returned home from Seattle with her body.

Initial shock of teen suicides fade

Hidden malady, hidden catastrophe still exists

By WILLIAM C. HIDLAY
Associated Press

CHICAGO — The initial shock has faded. Few people in the suburbs of Alsip and Rolling Meadows talk about the four teen-agers who killed themselves six months ago.

Some officials say there's a feeling the problem has gone away.

Sgt. Doug Larsson, who investigated the suicides of two high school students for the Rolling Meadows police, observed, "Until the next one happens, I don't think the general population will worry about it."

But teen suicide is "a hidden malady, a hidden catastrophe," said Chicago psychologist Judith Tellerman, a researcher trying to track the early warning signs of teen-age suicide.

"There's a lot of kids out there at risk," Larsson agreed. "We're not doing anything about the problems."

On the afternoon of Thursday, March 12, two teen-agers from Alsip, Nancy Grannan, 19, and Karen Logan, 17, were found dead in a garage thick with car exhaust fumes.

The day before in Bergenfield, N.J., four youths died after locking themselves in an idling car in an apartment complex garage.

ALSIP POLICE and members of the girls' families said at the time they felt certain the two had been influenced by publicity about the New Jersey suicides.

"It was a shock because most of the neighbors here never thought that would happen," recalled Dorothy Fawley, whose son, Blair, was a close friend of the two girls and tried to revive them.

Two days later, on Saturday, March 14, 14-year-old Kevin Pyter was found dead on the roof of his mother's station wagon in the garage in Rolling Meadows, a suburb of 19,000 northwest of Chicago. Alsip, with 15,000 people, is south of the city.

Authorities ruled Pyter's death a suicide caused by inhaling car exhaust.

Newspaper clippings about the earlier suicides were found under the boy's bed.

On Tuesday, March 17, a fourth victim of carbon monoxide poisoning, 17-year-old Kathleen Carlsen, was found by her mother.

Four teen-agers were dead of their own doing in five days, and many people "were wondering if we had an epidemic starting," said Robert Hoese, principal of Rolling Meadows High School where Pyter was a freshman.

AT ROLLING Meadows High and William Fremd High School, where Miss Carlsen was a senior, students met with counselors and in support groups. Rolling Meadows Police Chief Ralph Evans organized a task force to make teen-agers and their parents more aware of counseling services.

The task force issued a report April 15, listing common warning signs of teen-age suicide and providing a directory of community support services.

"The impact (of the suicides) has been very slight since then," Hoese said in a recent telephone interview. "It's worn off on the community, it seems to me. There's nothing to remind us of the problem."

That's what worries Ms. Tellerman, a psychologist at the Center for Suicide Research and Prevention at Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center in Chicago.

"We have teen-age suicides every month and it's been going on for years now and it's appalling," she said.

"It's kept quiet because people are afraid to talk about it. They're afraid that if you publicize these things, it will set an example for other kids to try to do the same thing.

"But if people aren't aware the problem still exists, the families continue to suffer and the community suffers," she said.

THE NUMBER of teen-age suicides in Illinois reached the lowest point this decade in 1984, when 61 youths aged 15 to 19 killed themselves, she said. In 1985, the number jumped to 84 teen-age suicides and, in 1986, to 87.

In 1986, the Illinois General Assembly approved a bill to create statewide teen-age suicide prevention programs. But Gov. James R. Thompson has cut funding for the programs the past two years, she said.

This past session, she said, four bills were passed, expanding the provisions of the previous act and ordering additional programs. Again, funding was cut, she said.

"We are in a terrible fiscal crunch this year," said Thompson spokeswoman Susan Mogerman. "Unfortunately, the Legislature passed far more programs than we have money for. It's strictly a matter of funding."

At the suicide prevention center in Chicago, Ms. Tellerman and other researchers began a three-year study in January to try to document common early warning signs among teen-age suicide victims.

AFTER EACH suicide, researchers conduct a psychological autopsy, interviewing family and friends, and examining medical and school records to reconstruct events leading to the child's death.

Other officials want to focus political attention on the problem.

One is Elaine Hoff, deputy chief of the disabled persons advocacy division in the state Attorney General's Office.

Mrs. Hoff said she hopes to organize families who have been through the tragedy to lobby the Legislature and the governor to ensure suicide prevention programs are funded in the future.

Only now can Mrs. Hoff talk publicly about her son, Scott, a gifted student who was elected vice president of his 7th grade class. On Oct. 15, 1985, he hanged himself. He was 13¾.

"We still do not know why our son chose to die by suicide," Mrs. Hoff said recently.

"What happened will never be OK. Our life is changed forever. ... So I guess you always repeat that question — Why? Why? — because it shouldn't be."

Teen peers could help prevent teen suicides

Associated Press

Teen-agers can play a crucial role in preventing the suicides of other teens, say specialists at New York University Medical Center.

"A troubled adolescent's feelings are often expressed primarily to peers," said Dr. H. Paul Gabriel, professor of clinical psychiatry.

Dr. Edgardo C. Bianchi, clinical associate professor of psychiatry, said adolescence is a transitional stage during which independence from parents is established.

"Part of this process is testing out perceptions with one's friends, one's peer group," Bianchi said. "A trusted friend who can sympathize with another teen-ager's problems is in the best possible position to discourage the idea of suicide. The most vulnerable youth is the one who is not close to anyone, who has no one to turn to."

Since the idea of taking one's own life is so foreign to most people, the NYU physicians observed, the expression of that intent may not be taken seriously. "When someone says he or she would rather be dead, never assume the person is joking," Gabriel said. It should be viewed as particularly worrisome if a means of self-destruction is specified.

Other distress signals, he said, may include withdrawal from friends, loss of interest in accustomed activities, failing grades in a previously good student and, often a significant sign, an individual's giving away possessions to others.

EXECUTIVE PROFILE

Barclay switches off 37-year utility career

No retirement 'shock' for civic activist

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

There's a lot more to managing the electric company than "just keeping the lights on." Similarly, there's a lot more to recently retired TU Electric regional manager C. Winston Barclay than just running the electric company.

"The company's philosophy has always been geared for growth. They have dedicated a lot of talent, efforts and dollars to help communities in their service area achieve their individual goals," said Barclay.

"They encourage employees to take an active role in community affairs when the opportunity presents itself," he added.

Barclay certainly took that encouragement to heart. In the 37 years since he first moved to Midland to go to work for Texas Electric, Barclay has immersed himself in championing the cause of Midland's future growth. He served as a director and officer for virtually every community development organization including Midland's Chamber of Commerce, Industrial Foundation and Industrial Development Corp.

But the most rewarding work, Barclay recalls, was as a conferee in the Objectives for Midland program in 1970. Patterned after a program in Dallas, the goal-setting program incorporated "town hall" meetings, surveys and other methods to find out what long-term goals Midland residents held for their city, the Petersburg native remembers.

Many of the things today's Midlanders take for granted grew out of the needs identified and goals set during the 1970 undertaking. "Midland College, the civic center, the industrial park and the push to make Midland an 'office center' headquarters for the oil field were all a result of that program," Barclay said.

"Roughly 90 percent of the objectives were met during the decade of the '70s."

A second goal-setting program was attempted in 1980, but was not as effective, in part because of the success of the earlier program. "Most of the community's largest needs had already been addressed."

Barclay thinks it is time for another goal-setting session "geared to present Midland needs and economics. A formal program is a good way to get the community involved and to measure the results," Barclay said.

Current community leaders are inclined toward reviving such a program, he added.

After 37 hard-working years in the corporate and civic arenas, Barclay and his wife Dot are looking forward to enjoying the free time that retirement promises and he is hesitant to commit to too many future civic projects. "Because we have chosen to continue making our home here, we will also continue working toward making it a better place to live, but I'll choose projects only on a selective basis."

As the only man to have served as president of both the Midland and Odessa chambers of commerce, it does Barclay's heart good to see the two cities work together on economic development and other issues but he is realistic. "The two will always be competitive and have goals of their own, but from an area viewpoint they complement each other well.

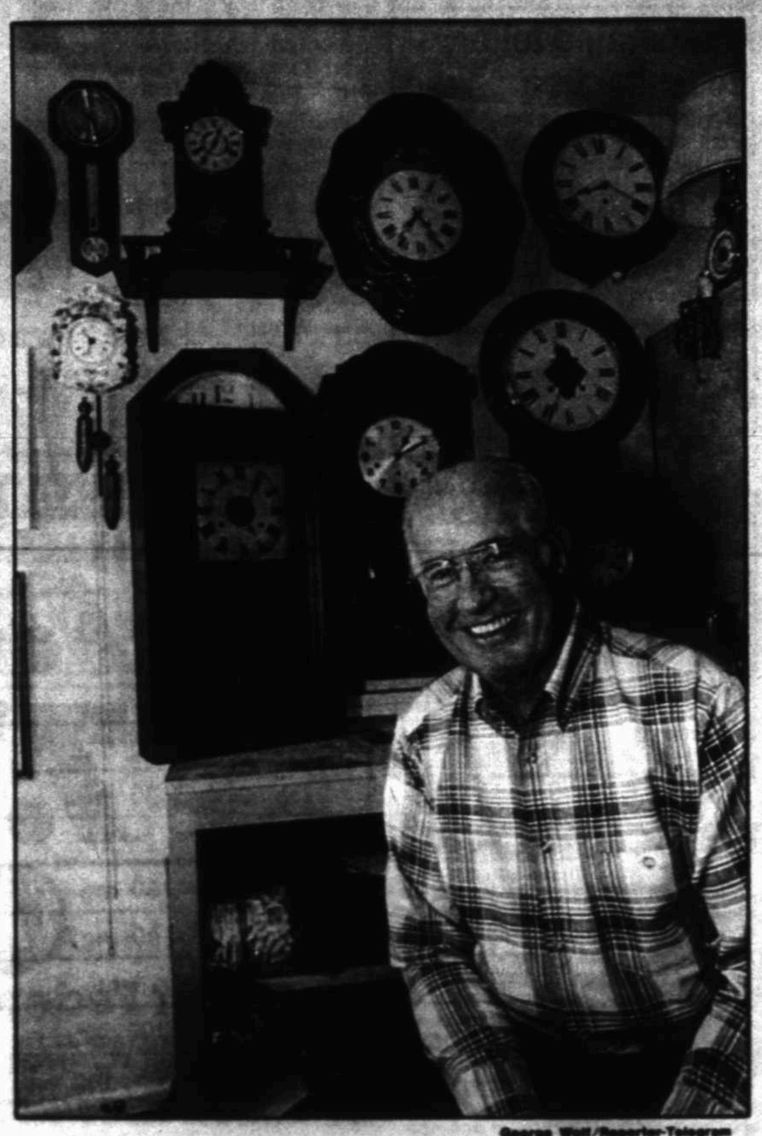

"The closer they work together, the better off they both will be."

Barclay and TU Electric were prime motivators behind the efforts of the Garden City Superconducting Super Collider Commission, assisting in developing proposals and laying other ground work. "The outcome remains to be seen, but even if the Garden City site is not chosen, the efforts, data and cooperation between the four communities is valuable and usable for other development projects," Barclay, an advisory director for the West Texas Chamber of Commerce, states.

"The data has already been used by the communities and we've seen 'spin-off' benefits, such as the international designation for the airport."

He adds, "Economic diversification is nothing new. For more than 30 years, we've looked for other industries for this area, but it is just as true today as it was then: the exploration, production, refining and servicing of oil and gas and their byproducts will continue to be the 'biggie' in Midland's economy. Diversification efforts can take

Now that he has retired as Western Region manager for TU Electric Co., Winston Barclay will have time on his hands in more ways than one. An avid collector and repairman, Barclay will fill idle hours restoring clocks of various ages and sizes.

What they say about Winston Barclay...

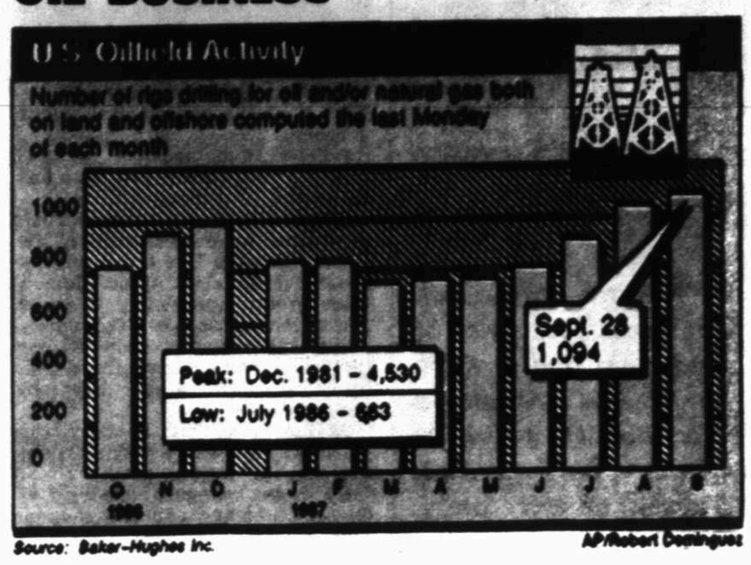

"There have been very few, if any, efforts for the betterment of Midland in the past 20 years that Winston has not been at the heart of. He has been so active in all phases of community development that it is impossible to pick any one as his best."

Bill Collyns, past president, Midland Chamber of Commerce

"Barclay's greatest contribution to the company are the people who have trained under him. All the current division managers, at least two vice president and many others in top management of the company have benefited from learning from him."

OIL BUSINESS

Rig activity has shown steady improvement.

Reed Tool: Worst over, '88 a bit better

By MICHAEL L. GRACZYK
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — The worst appears to be over for the domestic drilling industry, and continued improvement can be expected in the oil patch in 1988, a major oilfield supply company's annual census of rotary rig use indicates.

"We feel the combination of increased drilling activity and record numbers of rigs being removed from the fleet will finally give drilling contractors some ability to raise rig rates," said Roy Caldwell, president of Houston-based Reed Tool Co.

Reed, which released its report Thursday, has provided oil-drill bits to the industry since 1916. The company previously was a division of Baker International but was sold to Camco Inc. in May to eliminate U.S. Justice Department objections to the merger of Baker and Hughes Tool Co., another major drill-bit supplier.

The oil-service industry, rocked by an equipment glut and plummeting oil prices for the past several years, could return to profitability in 1988, Caldwell predicted.

"The major problem the drilling industry has faced in the past six years has been to reduce the number of rigs available to a level more in line with current demand," he said.

An annual Reed survey of rig use shows 3,331 rigs available for domestic use, down from 3,993 a year ago. The 17 percent decline is the largest ever recorded in the 35 years the Reed census has been taken.

A rig is considered available by Reed if it has been used in the past three years and can be put into service within 30 days with expenditures of less than $50,000.

The company's count of active rigs is 1,388, up 32 percent from 1,052 a year ago. It's the first gain since 1984 and only the second in six years.

"We view the increase as a positive indication of a turnaround in the industry," Caldwell said. "While the condition of our industry is very weak, the census indicates the corner has been turned and we are cautiously optimistic of continued improvement."

He noted, however, that activity is nowhere near the boom days of 1981 and that for the past six years, attrition in the rig fleet simply has not been able to keep pace with the active rig count.

For example, in 1981 the Reed survey showed 4,803 rigs available and 97.9 percent of them in use. The most recent count of 3,331 available rigs, made in late July and early August, amounts to only a 41.7 percent use rate. That is better than 1986, when the rate was 26.3 percent, by far the worst ever recorded by Reed.

"The key to improving industry rig utilization, assuming no further increase in the current levels of activity, is rig attrition," he said.

Since 1983, 2,313 rigs have been scrapped — an 8 percent annual attrition rate. The attrition rate this year is 17 percent, Reed figures show.

And Caldwell noted that since 818 rigs have been idle for between two and three years, there's a strong likelihood that equipment won't be returning to work ever, meaning the balance between equipment needed and equipment on hand will be more favorable.

Higher than expected rig use could even mean spot shortages of tubular goods, drilling equipment and personnel, he predicted.

The Reed count, with its 30-day window of activity, differs from a similar weekly count by competitor Hughes, which bases its numbers each week on a daily usage.

"What we do is take a broader view," Reed spokesman David Hutchison said. "Generally we run 35 to 40 percent higher than Hughes."

Pecos backs claim to world's sweetest cantaloupes

By HOLDEN LEWIS
Associated Press Writer

PECOS (AP) — A billboard on the highway into town cites Pecos' two main claims to fame: "Home of world's first rodeo. World's sweetest cantaloupes."

Though occasionally challenged, the claim that Pecos was the site of the first professional rodeo in 1883 is well-documented. Folks say they can prove the assertion about cantaloupes, too.

"Scientific tests have shown ours have more sugar content," A.B. Foster, president of Pecos Cantaloupe Co., said at harvest's end late last month.

"They're the best. No doubt about it," said Pecos Fruit Stand manager Juan Saenz, who prefers his cantaloupe with vanilla ice cream. "I guess it's the soil."

The alkaline soil is half the story. The other is the sun.

"The hotter it is, the sweeter the cantaloupe will be. You sure can't do without the sun," Efraim Cuellar of Pecos-based Griffin & Brand packers said.

When the sun heats the inside of the melon, sugar content increases. A rain right before harvest can be devastating, growers say, because it cools the inside of the cantaloupes and makes them less sweet.

A spring cold snap delayed the harvest about two weeks this season, but the weather stayed hot and dry during the harvest, making for sweet melons. The harvest usually begins around July 10 and lasts until mid-September.

Four companies — two longtime Pecos businesses and two newcomers from the Rio Grande Valley — harvested and packed all this year's cantaloupes. Together, the four companies harvested about 2,500 acres worth $7.5 million wholesale.

Two growers — Chiquita and Pecos Cantaloupe — said it was a typical harvest. Cuellar said his company had its best year ever, shipping 265,000 cartons weighing 42 to 45 pounds each. Grocery stores buy the cartons of cantaloupes for about $5 or $6.

K&D Farms of Edinburg reported a poor year because heavy rain in early July forced the company to abandon some fields when they became too muddy to harvest. It was K&D's first season in West Texas.

When Pecos-area growers say their cantaloupes are the best, they generally are comparing them to melons from California and, to a lesser extent, Arizona and the Rio Grande Valley.

California produces many more cantaloupes and ships them all over the United States. Pecos fruit generally is shipped across Texas and the Southeast. California has a lock on the West Coast and dominates the Midwest and Northeast.

A few Pecos cantaloupes are shipped as far away as New York and Boston, Cuellar said.

California competition is always on the minds of Pecos growers. "They ship 400,000 a day. That's a bunch of melons," said Jody Johnson, production supervisor for Chiquita Melon Packers of Mercedes in the Rio Grande Valley.

But cooler weather in California and less alkaline soil in Arizona produce less-sweet, more-mushy cantaloupes, the packers say.

"I've tasted them from Mexico, the Valley, Presidio and Pecos," Cuellar said. "I think the ones here are the best I've tasted. We're always promoting that. A lot of people think they are."

Foster was more circumspect. "I think they'll bring a premium over California cantaloupes," he said. "I don't get into this rivalry business, because each side thinks he has the best cantaloupe."

About 1,000 migrant workers pick the melons during the two-month harvest season. They drive out into the fields in pickup trucks, throw the cantaloupes in the back and transport them to the packing houses. There, the cantaloupes are boxed according to size and chilled to 40 degrees. At that temperature, they keep for about two weeks.

But there is no shortage of cantaloupes in Pecos, where Saenz said he sells about 90,000 pounds a year from his stand on the town's main street. As he spoke, he watched men unload 3,000 pounds of melons from a trailer to the back of the stand. He said he would sell the load in about three days.

"They're known worldwide," he boasted.

Energy independence is a matter of choice

Pitts

When I read the opening line of a Conoco press release this week, I had to do a double take. "The United States will never achieve energy independence, and while oil imports are inevitable, they must be managed intelligently," said Constantine S. Nicandros, president and chief executive officer Conoco Inc.

"We will have to import large volumes of oil whether we like it or not. The issue is to try to minimize and manage them," he continued, pointing out that an oil import fee would not insure a vigorous petroleum industry.

Being energy dependent and depending more and more on imports, says the Houston-based executive, is merely the consequence of being an industrialized economy with mature oil reserves. He says the only way the petroleum industry can be competitive is to be allowed to compete with foreign suppliers on equal terms.

Nicandros believes the nation's "second" energy security should be the worldwide development of oil reserves.

It is a fatalistic view to say the least, and I could not imagine such, negative, hopeless hand wringing coming from a man chosen to lead one of America's leading oil companies. I called Conoco's PR people to get a complete copy of his speech which he delivered to the Petroleum Industry Research Foundation's Oil Seminar in Houston. Put back in context, Nicandros' remarks did not come off nearly like the message of energy doom the press release had.

I was assured by the Conoco people that their leader had not given up on America, and that his remarks were made to point out the need for a comprehensive national energy policy and incentives to the oil industry. I hope that is what he really believes, because the fatalistic views expressed above do not hold water, and are dangerous logic indeed in the hands of northeast congressman out to prematurely bury America's domestic petroleum industry.

To look at the dilemma only in terms of how much oil they (OPEC) have and how little we have, and how much we consume can be deceiving. Oil, and our lack of it, is only part of the equation. America may have a shortfall of oil (at today's prices), but it has no shortage of energy.

In fact, this nation has an abundance of energy to fuel this nation for another 500 years, providing we don't waste it and we utilize all our energy options.

What we have a shortage of is wisdom and leadership among our elected officials in Washington, who insist on playing politics with America's energy future.

Any fool ought to be able to see that there is no such thing as cheap energy — only cheap politics.

It is obvious: if oil prices are low today, they'll be twice as high tomorrow. When the averages come home, the only gas sold at American pumps is high-priced. It is a super-supreme, high-octane price when you consider the $400 or so a barrel we spend in military aid to keep oil tankers moving out of the Persian Gulf.

With that in mind, we need to ask if we want to pay them (OPEC) or pay us. We can pay them modestly low oil prices now and super high prices later; or we can pay ourselves a slightly higher price now to be rid of foreign crude.

We can be energy independent. We only have to decide that being energy independence is to our advantage and elect those with enough wisdom and backbone to bring it together in a national energy policy.

But if we decide that temporarily cheap gasoline prices are more important than energy independence, then Nicandros is probably right. We will never have it, and our continuing fare will be a bitter life of growing imports and foreign treachery.

But if we choose to, we can become energy independent. We have enough coal for 400 years, an abundance of natural gas, one of the largest oil reserves in the world, not to mention nuclear, solar, oil shale, methanol, and ethanol potential.

It would take a well thought-out, bipartisan national energy policy to pull it all together by providing the incentive and pricing system to encourage conservation and stimulate production.

some of the bumps out of the roller coaster, but nothing is going to replace it any time soon."

As an electrical engineering graduate fresh out of Texas Tech, Barclay asked his prospective employers at Texas Utilities Electric how much longer the oil and gas around Midland was expected to last.

"Fifteen or 20 years," they told him.

"If you ask that same question today, you get about the same answer," Barclay says with a smile. "And in 15 or 20 years, I'll bet they say the same thing!"

One of the most important first steps is a dual- (or multi-) fuel system in transportation — vehicles that can burn gasoline, compressed natural gas and/or methanol.

The American Gas Association reports that there are now 30,000 natural gas powered vehicles in the U.S., but 400,000 in Canada, Italy and New Zealand. The foreign trade deficit continues to build, as we pay OPEC for oil when we could be burning our own natural gas, even though there is a definite price advantage to utilizing natural gas in fleet vehicles.

Big gavel for Texaco

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — If the bankruptcy judge hearing the Texaco case ever has to wield his gavel, watch out.

The gavel looks more like a sledgehammer, being 3 feet long and weighing several pounds.

"My former law clerk figured since I was presiding over the largest case, I should have the largest gavel," Judge Howard Schwartzberg said Thursday.

Texaco filed for protection from creditors under bankruptcy laws after rival Pennzoil was awarded a $10 billion judgment. A Texas jury found that Texaco had interefered with Pennzoil's acquisition of Getty Oil Co.

Bank teller machines: a blessing or curse?

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Automatic teller machines are (check one):

A. A helpful and convenient new aid in managing your money.

B. A new money-management problem.

C. Both of the above.

If C is your choice, you doubtless have a lot of company.

No question that "people are using automated teller machines (ATMs) more and more," as the American Financial Services Association, a trade group representing financial institutions, observes. "Consumers like the convenience of the 24-hour service and the widespread availability of the machines near their jobs and homes."

At the same time, however, the machines also offer a wide array of new annoyances and perils.

By recent estimates, one-third of all bank customers in this country now use ATMs at least once in a while.

Among those millions of people, how many have experienced the moment when, relying on a machine for needed cash, they have found that the ATM is "temporarily out of service," or out of money; their card is damaged, expired or lost; or they simply cannot remember the correct numerical password (the "personal identification number") to gain access to their accounts?

It doesn't exactly rank with the arms race or international trade tensions as a burning global issue. But ATMs have made it necessary for many people to learn new ways of coping with questions of cash-flow management, safety, even etiquette.

Etiquette? Well, let's suppose an ATM you are using is in a bank vestibule whose door can be opened only with a card.

An amiable-looking stranger approaches, and seems to be encountering difficulty getting the door to operate. Do you open it for him?

No, says the financial services association. "This may seem rude," it acknowledges, "but it could protect you from a possible assailant."

Then there is the separate matter of your personal identification number, or PIN. As all ATM users are regularly advised, your PIN should be carried in your memory and nowhere else — not written on your card or elsewhere in your wallet, where someone else could find it if the wallet were lost or stolen.

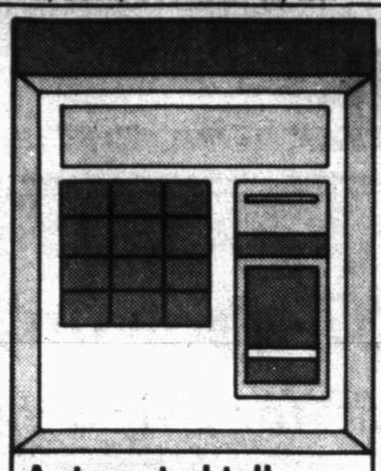

Also, we are repeatedly told, the number itself should not be something obvious, like your birth date or the last four digits of your telephone number.

But what do you do when you are using an ATM and another customer is waiting close by, looking on? Obvious maneuvers to block that person's view while you punch the keys are something less than the height of politesse.

Still, letting someone else see the numbers you punch is an unnecessary invitation to trouble.

Logic dictates that the burden of etiquette in these situations falls on the people waiting to use the machine. If they fail to stand well back or avert their eyes, the customer at the ATM surely can and should use a free hand or an object as a privacy screen.

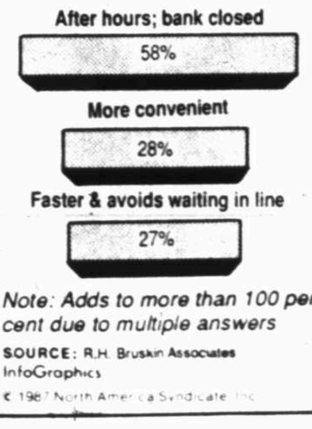

Common sense dictates, as the financial services association notes, that isolated or poorly lighted ATMs be avoided after dark.

Automated teller machine use

A recent study found that 58 percent of those using automatic teller machines did so because the bank was closed. Others said that ATM's were more convenient and avoided the long lines at the bank.

Kent Hance will speak to landmen's meeting

Kent Hance will be the featured speaker at the Permian Basin Landmen's Association meeting scheduled Tuesday at Ranchland Hills Country Club.

Hance, a Texas native and Law graduate of the Univeristy of Texas began his political career in 1974 after defeating the heavily favored state senate incumbent in Lubbock. During his time in the senate, Hance was one of four members who served jointly on the two most powerful Texas Senate Committees: Finance, and State Affairs.

Four years later Hance entered and won the 19th Congressional District race, then went on to author the Presidents tax bill which provided the largest tax cut in history.

On Aug. 24, Governor Bill Clements appointed Hance to the Texas Railroad Commission to fill the unexpired term of Chairman, Mack Wallace. Hance is the first Republician to serve on the commission.

Hance

Hance's evening will begin with a social hour scheduled for 6:30 p.m. followed by dinner at 7:30.

Financial services PR survives cutbacks

By ELIZABETH M. FOWLER
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK (NYT) — During recent corporate cutbacks, public relations personnel were often among the targets. Members of corporate listening posts in Washington, where they functioned as lobbyists, lost their jobs. So did editors of employee publications at manufacturing companies.

But corporate employment cuts generally did not extend to the financial services sector, according to the Conference Board. The New York-based research organization is about to issue a study, "Public Affairs in Financial Services," which shows a growing role for public affairs managers at big financial institutions — brokerage firms, insurance companies, banks and others.

Kathryn Troy, a senior research associate who did the study, said: "We were hearing about a change in the public affairs function at financial services companies, a change toward being more line-oriented to justify existence. The companies, because they are growing so fast and because their products and services are changing so dramatically, have needed to project a new and different image."

The expansion of public affairs operations has been a two-pronged effort. Budgets are being raised, she said, but at the same time employees are being asked "to account for their activities more fully and to work under more stringent controls."

Basically an employee with "public affairs" in his or her job title does traditional public relations work and in addition may have a better background and contacts to grapple with big issues. Officials in the financial services area nowadays are often vice presidents.

There are plenty of big issues around, such as insider trading at brokerage firms, frauds by bank officers, violations of Securities and Exchange Commission rules by underwriters, a growing concern about ethics, the impact of bad loans on balance sheets, the desire of commercial banks for the right to do more underwriting in competition with investment banking firms and the spread of regional banking.

Also more services and products are being offered, including one-stop financial shopping.

Rig count up by 22 in Permian Basin

From Staff Reports

HOUSTON — Thirty-three more oil and gas drilling rigs were working in the United States last week, bringing the total to 1,127, Baker Hughes, announced.

The previous week, the rig count had dropped by seven to 1,094, according to Baker Hughes. A year ago, the total was 818.

In the Permian Basin the rig count rose by 22, compared to a rise of only two the week previous. The brins the total number of rigs working in the Permian Basin to 180.

A year ago there were only 92 rigs working in the Basin.

Rig utilization as reported by Smith Tool climbed by 2.3 percent in the Basin to 38.0 percent of all available rigs at work.

Nationally the utilization figures rose by less than a percentage point climbing only .08 percent to bring the total from 27.7 percent to 28.5 percent.

Among the major oil producing states, Texas had an increase of eight last week, followed by New Mexico with seven and Oklahoma with five. Colorado and Ohio each had increases of three, North Dakota's count increased by two and California and Michigan each had one more rig working.

Kansas and Wyoming each lost five and Louisiana's count dropped by one.

Drilling count up in years third quarter

DENVER — Drilling for oil and gas in the United States and its waters reversed its 18-month decline in the third quarter of this year, according to Petroleum Information. While domestic well completions still lagged the previous year's total, the gap narrowed from mid-year.

Wells with 1987 official completion dates numbered 17,899 at the end of 1987's third quarter. The total is 28.2 percent behind the 1986 third quarter total however, at percent behind the 1986 third quarter total. However, at mid-year in 1987, the difference in well completions was more that 41 percent. The modest recovery is due to improved crude prices and the stability of those prices in recent months in the $18-20 per barrel range.

New field exploration, which was off by a third at mid-year, was down 19.7 percent at the end of the year's third quarter. A total of 319 new fields were discovered by the end of September compared to 384 during the same period in 1986. Total new field wildcats number 2,043 for the first three quarters while last year's three-quarter total was 2,544. The success rate for new field exploration was up a percentage point for the period to 16 percent.

Other exploration, in and near existing fields was down more than 29 percent an mid-1987. Completions in search of new poll and significant field extensions numbered 1,995 compared to 2,528 at the end of the third quarter last year.

The increase in activity was shown primarily in drill for crude as gas prospects remained unattractive due to the continued severe depression in gas prices and the difficulty in finding markets.

Crude completions totaled 8,349 compared to 12,730 a year ago...down 34.5 percent from last year's third quarter total. At mid-1987, oil completions were off by more than 49 percent. Gas completions totaled 3,303 down 20.8 percent from the depressed total of 4,168 a year ago.

The leading states in wells completed at the three-quarter mark were: Texas, 6,780; Oklahoma, 1,899; Kansas 1,490; California, 1,424; and Louisiana, 1,358.

Other industry indicators also showed improvement during the third quarter of 1987. The Baker Hughes rig count averaged 1,100.5 for the month of September. By comparison, the domestic rig count for the last week of September, 1986 was 806.

Permit to drill for oil and gas, monitored on a nationwide basis by PI, numbered 28,788 through the first nine months of 1987. The total was only eight percent behind last year's three-quarter total of 31,284. And well starts lagged the same time a year ago by only 3.6 percent. The total of 19,354, compared to 20,041 last year at the end of September, indicates that completions for 1987 should approximate last year's total of nearly 38,000.

Gas production down for June

AUSTIN — The Railroad Commission announced that Texas oil and gas well produced 433,125,640 Mcfgd of gas in June, compared to the May gas production total of 44,332,043 Mcfgd. June 1987 production was down 4.91 percent compared to June 1986.

Marketed gas production in June totaled 347,710,433 Mcfgd and reflected a 1.42 percent decrease from the May volume. In June 1986 the state produced 369,938,699 Mcfgd of gas.

Export of Texas-produced gas in June totaled 11,692,210 Mcfgd and reflected a 5.91 percent decrease from May. June 1986 exports of Texas-produced gas totaled 150,334,213 Mcfgd.

Investment advisers say think small for value

By ARELO SEDERBERG
Hearst News Service

Like Volkswagen's advertising slogan a few years back, some investment advisers are asking their adherents to "think small." Big-company stocks have been chased so aggressively by domestic and foreign money that they've been pushed up beyond their value. But not so for many smaller-company stocks.

The averages indicate this is true. The Dow industrials, consisting of 30 of the nation's biggest companies, is up about 48 percent in the past 12 months, and 38 percent so far this year. But the over-the-counter index, NASDAQ, is up only 28 percent for both periods.

By the way, stock worth in the country has pushed past $3 trillion, rising over $8 billion in the past 12 months. That's as measured by the Wilshire index, the broadest of them all. Wilshire is up 35 percent this year.

George Zagoudis, from Chicago's Barrington Research, is of the mind that there is much life left for secondary stocks before the big bull market winds down. He has identified several emerging growth areas.

Some are going to seem rather mundane. For example, child care is one. It's the old story about working wives. Another is check printing. Again, it's an old story — bank mergers.

But others are more far-out — specialty chemicals, due to increased demand and a weaker dollar; co-generation, or production of electricity from natural gas or waste products; environmental companies, busy with stricter Environmental Protection Agency standards.

Going farther out on the limb, the Barrington staff has selected several mid-range companies they think might be getting more attention. Here they are:

— Avery International (NYSE): Has had earnings growth for 11 years in a row, although margins have recently been squeezed because of acquisitions. Quote: "Buy around the support level of $26."
— C.R. Bard (NYSE): Health care product developer and marketer concentrating on cardiovascular products. Growing at some 20 percent a year. Quote: "We would look to buy the stock in the mid-40s."
— Deb Shops Inc. (OTC): A specialty apparel store chain, formerly Joy Shops, which has grown from 83 stores to 231 in the past five years. Earnings rate: 22 percent annually. "We feel the stock offers good long-term potential at these levels."
— Envirodyne Industries (OTC): Its subsidiaries are leaders in food packaging and food service supplies. Has a five-year earnings growth rate of 30 percent annually, but a surprisingly low price/earnings ratio of 10.9.

GM, Justice Department tangle on X-body recall

By TIM BOVEE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thousands of complaints of locked wheels that sent General Motors Corp. X-body cars spinning out of control were the focus of arguments by company and Justice Department attorneys before appellate judges.

The Justice Department said this week that the complaints showed the cars were unsafe. GM countered that publicity had prompted the complaints.

At issue in a hearing before the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit was the safety of 1.1 million 1980 X-body automobiles.

The government was appealing a U.S. District Court ruling in April that rejected arguments by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration that the cars' rear wheels tended to lock when the brakes were applied normally, throwing the vehicles out of control.

Up to 800,000 of the X-body cars — the Chevrolet Citation, Pontiac Phoenix, Buick Skylark and Oldsmobile Omega — are still on the road, according to Transportation Department estimates.

The lower-court judge, Thomas Penfield Jackson, said tests had failed to prove a mechnical defect existed.

In a trial lasting nearly two years, NHTSA contended the alleged brake defect was linked to 1,417 accidents, 18 deaths and 400 injuries.

"The problem was confirmed by virtue of thousands of people complaining about it," said Douglas Letter, attorney for the Justice Department.

NHTSA said that by August 1983, when it sued GM, it had received more than 2,000 complaints about the vehicles.

Neither GM nor NHTSA tested the cars under road conditions, Letter said, arguing that the law allowed a recall if it could be shown an unsafe condition existed. No specific engineering proof of how that condition came about was required, he said.

GM attorney Thomas A. Gottschalk told the appellate judges the complaints largely resulted from "intense, massive and unprecedented publicity" prompted by NHTSA's allegations and earlier by private testing of the car, the first U.S.-made, front-wheel-drive vehicle.

"What was really going on here was apprehension in the mind of the public created by publicity," he said. That apprehension led to complaints and eventually to the trial, and the public was reassured, he said.

"Consumer complaints failed to convince the trier of fact" in the lower court that the skidding was caused by a defect in the cars, Gottschalk said.

The lawsuit had asked that GM be fined $4 million.

Business is blooming for corsage maker

By KELLY LYNE
El Paso Times

EL PASO (AP) — If you think of simple, fresh chrysanthemums when you think of homecoming corsages, you obviously haven't kept up with the times.

Enormous paper mums in the school colors, reds, blacks, maroons and oranges, are simply a starting point. Then add miniature footballs, a rabbit's foot, streaming ribbons in school colors, tiny cowbells and football helmets.

These are the basics for building a corsage guaranteed to melt the heart of the most elusive high school girl.

Annette Grein, owner of Tigua Hobbycrafts, not only has the recipe, but she also has the ingredients for such a corsage. People begin flocking to her store in El Paso's Lower Valley just before the homecoming season starts in October and the flow doesn't let up until high school homecomings end later in the fall.

"There's a kind of competition to see who can give the girls the most elaborate corsages," Ms. Grein says. "They probably weigh a pound. That's quite a bit if you think of a pound of butter on your chest."

The trend toward weightier corsages began about six years ago, she says, but they weren't an immediate success.

"At first they didn't go ove. The girls wanted real mums. But then they saw their friends with (the paper mums) hanging in the bedrooms long after homecoming, and they wanted them, too. They last, and they're real nice mementos."

So elaborate are the corsages that the girls attach them to their formal gowns with harnesses made of ribbons or on a sash.

Rather than paying others to make the corsages, many people learn to make their own in classes offered at the store. It takes about two hours to learn the basics and make a simple corsage.

To simplify the process, kits are available with the basic ingredients. They contain a rabbit's foot, horseshoe, football, cowbell and helmet. Also needed are ribbon, letters and mums.

They guys aren't forgotten, either.

"A girl feels real bad if her guy gives her a really nice corsage and her boutonniere doesn't measure up," Ms. Grein says. A kit for a boutonniere, given with a garter, includes four yards of satin ribbon, a yard of party ribbon, a carnation, a miniature football, feathers and chenille.

The garters come in fancy and plain as well, and are attached to the boutonnieres by chains.

Every year, new trinkets and twists are added to the floral creations. This year it's tiny music boxes that play sweet melodies such as "You Light Up My Life," "Love Story" and "If You Love Me." One even has a romantic double whammy, "Love Me Tender" and "Let Me Call You Sweetheart."

Also available are lights or lights and music boxes intertwined. When the wearer pushes the music box, the music comes on and the lights flash.

Maria Elena Samaniego, herself a homecoming queen and cheerleader in the late 1950s, now makes corsages for her sons' girlfriends.

Every year I say this is the last year I'll do it," she said with a laugh. "But here I am."

She proudly displayed a photograph of last year's creation, a corsage so big the girl is barely visible behind it.

"The funny thing is I had to make a small one for the dance, and she's a cheerleader. So I think (the big corsage) got worn only for the picture," she said.

Flipping through the pages of her high school yearbooks, Mrs. Samaniego came upon photographs of the corsages worn in those days. They consisted of a few mums with the number of the football jersey worn by a boyfriend painted on them.

"I still like these," Mrs. Samaniego said. "But not the kids — the more stuff on them, the more they like them.

Macaroni & Cheese: A cultural phenomenon

By CARLA MARINUCCI
Hearst News Service

There's a handful of things that have significantly changed Life As We Know It here on this lonely little planet: the polio vaccine, the mini skirt, Elvis, and a little culinary miracle born 50 years ago.

It was a concoction of macaroni and cheese that came out of a box powder dry. It cost only 19 cents and enabled you to whip up a meal for four in just nine minutes.

All hail to the Kraft Macaroni and Cheese dinner, that heap of golden goop, of which five billion boxes have been sold since it first hit the market in 1937.

That pioneering effort stands as a milestone in the history of convenience foods, those quick-fix dinners-like-Mom-made (so the ads said) that for some have become more American than apple pie.

Nowadays, the marketplace is jammed with convenience products — everything from instant soup to microwaved hot fudge sundaes. It isn't enough for a food to be fast. It's got to be instantaneous.

We have moved beyond the kitchen as the center of the universe, said a representative of a national public relations firm that represents a number of major food manufacturers. "Today, foods tend to be marketed from a lifestyle standpoint," she said.

The lifestyle of most working Americans, increasingly, is one with no spare time; industry experts say more than half of all consumers now own a microwave to put together meals in minutes. Food manufacturers have spent big bucks to develop quick, sophisticated convenience foods to fit their busy schedules: In short, food for the Yuppie Generation.

Convenience foods have been particularly popular with "consumers with professional jobs, or high income families," she said. These are people who will pay premium prices because they "consider their time more valuable than their money."

Among the entries on the long menu of products now undergoing market-testing:

— Hormel's Top Shelf line of packaged nonrefrigerated entrees that can sit on the shelf for more than a year, with such choices as Breast of Chicken Acapulco to Lemon Filet of Cod.

— General Foods' Impromptu shelf-stable dinners, with entrees like Coq Au Vin.

— Campbell Foods' Campbell Express, packages of veggies and dip, or fruit and cheese.

— Kraft's Vegisnax, ready-fixed carrots and celery sticks for munchers who hate to cut their own vegetables.

— Jell-O Foods' refrigerated Culinova entrees, a line of gourmet meals in a box ("Like pheasant under glass, except it's pheasant under plastic," says one industry insider.)

Sometimes the convenience food revolution has meant a new twist for a tired product. Cheez Wiz looked like it was ready to retire until Kraft repackaged and repositioned it as microwave food. Advertising now touts new jalapeno versions that can be zapped in the microwave, then poured over nachos.

But the hottest trend in convenience foods is "shelf stable," vacuum-packed foods that don't need to be frozen and can be stored in an office desk or the pantry for months — even years.

These foods are produced through plastic-retorting — a technique that resembles canning, but without its high heat. They may give rise to "the same sort of evolution that took place over the last decade in the freezer case," says John Vrabel.

America grazes more, eats less

Nobody sits down to eat anymore. Well, almost nobody. Instead, Americans are "grazing," as they say on Madison Avenue. They're nibbling on the run, in their cars, while walking during lunch hour — almost everywhere except at the dinner table.

And that accounts for the latest culinary rage: minifoods, tiny morsels of prepared foods designed to keep Americans snacking throughout the day.

Burger King is test-marketing its 1 oz. Burger Bundles, and Kentucky Fried Chicken's got 39-cent Chicken Littles.

McDonald's long ago learned that Chicken McNuggets were an easy finger food that had former burger eaters coming back for more.

The makers of Dove Bar introduced a two-bite version called Rondos. Oreos came out with "snackwiches," tiny ice-cream filled cookies.

There's also the mini-Ritz Cracker, which goes well with mini cheeses, like Laughing Cow's Mini Baby Bel.

Sara Lee offers mini carrot cakes, even mini croissants. And Yoplait recently served up mini yogurts in packs of four.

"Food has to be more than fast," writes Philip Lempert in the Lempert Report, a New Jersey-based publication specializing in food industry trends. "It also has to be bite-sized, and packaged for quick, easy eating in car or on foot, without interrupting a busy day."

Adds a representative of a national public relations firm that represents several major food manufacturers, "To cook a multimeal course just isn't good for you every day."

Nevertheless, minifoods are especially popular with on-the-go professionals (translation: yuppies) who "are generally living alone, or in a couple," she added. These "achiever" types "are very receptive to fend-for-yourself type foods," she says, because they are "especially concerned about waste."

No baloney: You need not be kosher to pitch salami

NEW YORK (AP) — The rap-singing deli owner went over like mayonnaise on pastrami, and the chainsaw-and-salami juggler didn't make the cut either, as Hebrew National named six finalists in a $99,600 contest for the best salami ad.

The kosher meat company Tuesday said it will announce a winner Oct. 21 from a field of entrants that included a group of 162 retirees from Florida, a Greek tourist, monks from Big Sur, Calif., and an American serviceman in the Persian Gulf.

James T. Dixon, vice president for marketing, said that the company was impressed with the quality of the entries and that there was a 90 percent chance that at least one will be used.

Hebrew National had withheld any promise to use the winners in its regular advertising "because we didn't know what we would get," Dixon said. Hebrew National received more than 12,500 entries since it announced the contest in March.

Among the ideas rejected were a man juggling a salami and buzzing chainsaw; a delicatessen owner rap-singing the virtues of kosher lunchmeat, and a 300-pound man who vowed to eat only Hebrew National cold cuts while going for the world's one-day weight loss record.

The ads were judged on creativity, innovation and selling power, Dixon said. The top prize is $83,000, or $1,000 for each year the company has been in business.

The finalists included Paul Marquardt, a college student in Atlanta who showed a leaner globe shaped like a salami; Bill Kirschenbauer, a comedian from Los Angeles whose ad included a salami-shaped blimp, and Rick Larrimore, an overnight-mail courier from Somerville, Mass., who created a jingle that had a child asking, "Mommy, please make schlami."

Rose Llorens, an ad agency production assistant from Levittown, took a swipe at Oscar Mayer, which runs ads of a little boy singing about Oscar Mayer bologna. In her ad, the boy is overweight and unhappy 10 years later.

David DeNoon, an advertising consultant from South Orange, N.J., produced an ad campaign using the nursery rhyme characters Jack Sprat and his wife. In his ads, the Sprats are in divorce court, fighting over eating habits.

What a difference a "D" makes.
Compare the Leading Edge Model "D"® to the IBM® PC and you'll find some not-so-trivial differences.
For example, while the Leading Edge Model "D" comes complete with a high-resolution monochrome monitor, Hercules® compatible monochrome graphics and color graphics outputs, parallel and serial ports, a dual-speed 8088-2 microprocessor and word processing software with Spelling Correction, the IBM PC doesn't. Not even one.
The Leading Edge Model "D" comes with a 20-month warranty and free technical support. The IBM PC comes with a three-month warranty and you pay for technical support.
And the Leading Edge Model "D" is COMPATIBLE WITH THE ORIGINAL IBM INDUSTRY STANDARD compatible with the original IBM industry standard.
Best of all, a fully configured dual drive Model "D" is priced at only $995, while a very unadorned IBM PC costs hundreds more. Our 20MB fixed disk version priced at $1295 is closer to half the price of their XT. And we offer a 30 MB version at $1395.
Because the Leading Edge Model "D" make such a difference, it also makes a lot of sense.

Austin foreclosures hit record

AUSTIN (AP) — Austin Centre, a downtown office-hotel project, was foreclosed on by its lender Tuesday.

The project was among a record 1,139 Travis County properties posted for sale on the courthouse steps by lenders this month, according to Real-Comp, an Austin company that tracks the real estate postings and sales.

Austin Centre, which includes the 314-room Radisson Plaza hotel and 343,000 square feet of office space, was taken back by Mellon Bank of Pittsburgh for $50 million. Mellon originally made $92.8 million in loans to the developers of Austin Centre.

The majority of the project was owned by Carlson Properties, a subsidiary of Minneapolis-based Carlson Cos., a $3 billion conglomerate.

Dean Riesen, president of Carlson Properties, said Tuesday a dispute between his firm and Mellon over the balance of the ownership partially led to the foreclosure. Encore Development Corp. of Dallas originally had 25 percent interest and the Webb Cos., a national developer based in Lexington, Ky., had 25 percent.

"Carlson was prepared to fund its 50 percent of the amount of money to keep this project moving forward, but it wasn't prepared to fund 100 percent," Riesen said. "Because of the market and the economy, we could not go in and take 100 percent of the project."

Riesen said that despite the change in ownership, Carlson intends to continue operating the Radisson Plaza for an indefinite period for Mellon.

Panhandle farmers seek maxi-profits in mini-produce

AP LaserPhoto

By KATHLEEN DAVIS
Associated Press Writer

FLOYDADA (AP) — Business is small for the farming partnership of brothers Gary and Hulon Carthel, and they couldn't be more excited. They hope the operation will get really big by staying tiny.

The Carthels this year expect to produce — and ship across the United States — about 10,000 boxes of miniature pumpkins, mini-corn and strawberry popcorn raised on their Floyd County farms.

Producing the tiny vegetables, gourds, regular-sized Indian corn and other specialty crops, began last year as a sideline to the duo's 4,000-acre operation of cotton, wheat, grain sorghum and seed maize.

Because the brothers were able to sell all of the tiny produce from a seven-acre trial in 1986, the Carthels said, about 40 acres were grown this year and a marketing campaign was implemented. The brothers opened a new business, called Heptad (Greek for seven, which is a lucky number for Hulon) Vegetables, to market the wee ornamentals.

"We raise them, harvest them, clean them, process them and box them," Hulon said of the new venture. "We do it all."

The two are using their compatible backgrounds to launch the enterprise. Both Texas Tech University graduates, Gary received his agronomy degree in 1980 and Hulon obtained his agriculture economics degree in 1972.

"We didn't have much money invested originally," Hulon said. "It was a shot in the dark whether it would work."

"About three years ago, we saw a miniature pumpkin, so we called to see if we could get some seed," Gary added. "We got in on the ground floor and it grew into the business."

The pumpkins are about the size of an apple. Both the Indian corn and the mini-corn have multi-colored kernels. The strawberry popcorn has an ear in the shape of a strawberry with bright red kernels, and the gourds are various sizes, shapes and colors.

Heptad Vegetables sells one box of 50 mini-pumpkins, 50 strawberry popcorns, or 50 mini-corns for $15 each, one box of 18 regular-sized Indian corn for $13, and one box of 35 gourds for $12.

Expanding the miniature produce operation has increased every detail of the business, the two agreed.

The tender vegetable crops required 15 applications of insecticide for worms, a lot of irrigation and fertilizer and a massive amount of labor from hand harvest to washing and packing the product. About 30 people were working for Hepted Vegetables on a recent Friday.

Gary explained that the poor quality produce is sorted out both in the harvest and in washing (for pumpkins and gourds) or the packing process of corn varieties. A final chance to sort rejects is done at shipping when the contents of every box is examined to replace any items that have spoiled since storage.

"Most of it is not any harder to raise than ordinary crops," Gary said.

The hardest part, they acknowledged, may be furthering promotion and sales.

"Ours is a three-point plan," Gary explained. "We target the supermarket, the mail order business and the peddler."

They also have mailed information to schools and businesses across the state.

"What we'd like is to get a distributor over Texas and New Mexico to sell on an order basis," Hulon added.

The brothers say their attention to quality will determine profitability to a large extent.

"There is no doubt that it will be extremely competitive," Hulon said. "We hope to get a certain volume of business every year to be competitive."

"... And quality," Gary quickly added. "We want our customers to know that what they get from us is the very best quality."

U.S. firms still active in Nicaragua

By SALLY JACOBSEN
Associated Press Writer

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Hernaldo Nunez Molina holds a job that is rare these days in Nicaragua. He manages the local office of an American company.

Only about two dozen U.S. corporations still maintain a presence here, mostly watching over investments made before the Sandinistas came to power in a 1979 revolution that brought broad economic changes.

Before the Sandinista takeover, U.S. businesses numbered 168, according to Ramiro Gurdian, president of the Nicraguan Agricultural Producers Union.

About 30 American companies were confiscated by the government between 1979 and 1985.

With a badly deteriorating economy, along with a U.S. trade embargo and restrictive government policies, some U.S. companies have shut down on their own and others have sharply cut back their operations.

"The current economic conditions do make doing business in Nicaragua more complex," said Nadine Taylor, a spokeswoman for International Business Machines Corp.

The manager of one U.S. giant, who agreed to an interview on condition that neither he nor the company be identified, said the company has "too much money here" to walk away.

Because of government restrictions, its operations have been scaled back from 92 employees in 1979 to six now.

Even so, the manager insisted, "we will stay."

Since the revolution, no major American companies have begun new operations.

The largest U.S. operation is an oil refinery owned by Esso Standard Oil Ltd., an affiliate of Exxon Corp.

The 24-year-old refinery, the only one in the country, refines about 10,000 barrels a day of crude oil supplied by the Nicaraguan government, according to Exxon spokesman William D. Smith in New York.

"We will keep it running as long as it is economically feasible and as long as the U.S. government and the Nicaraguan government want us to stay," Smith said.

Virtually all Nicaragua's crude is supplied by the Soviet Union and its allies.

In addition to the refinery on the outskirts of Managua, Esso has 59 gasoline stations and 166 employees, none American.

IBM keeps about 25 employees on the payroll in its small office in Managua, mainly to provide maintenance service to customers.

"We have reduced our operations in line with the current economic conditions," said Ms. Taylor from IBM headquarters in Armonk, N.Y.

Xerox Corp. operates a small sales and service center, with about 50 employees.

"We've been there for 15 years and we're in business to stay," said Peter Hawes, a spokesman at corporate offices in Stamford, Conn.

"We have been having some difficulties, but we're beginning to overcome them," he added, without elaborating.

In doing business in Nicaragua, foreign companies have to contend with an economy badly drained by the war between the U.S.-supported Contra rebels and the leftist Sandinista government, which came to power after overthrowing the pro-American, rightist Somoza dynasty that had ruled for 42 years.

Inflation has reached triple digits (657 percent for 1986), foreign exchange is scarce, and many managers and technicians have fled.

Unlike the hands-off policy for business that prevailed under the Somozas, the current government keeps a tight rein on the economy. It regulates wages and prices, limits foreign exchange and has centralized the marketing of exports.

Foreign companies generally cannot exchange their earnings in the local cordoba currency for dollars and send them home.

The government also has adopted strict occupational safety and environmental standards.

"Now, the rules of the game have changed dramatically," said Michael E. Conroy, associate director of the University of Texas' Institute of Latin American Studies.

Moreover, the Reagan administration in May 1985 imposed a trade embargo that effectively halted commercial relations between the two countries. For private firms, the embargo has made it more difficult to get U.S. spare parts and machinery, although businessmen say they buy needed equipment and supplies through other countries.

Some foreign concerns, like banks and insurance companies, have had their operations sharply curtailed by government restrictions.

After the revolution, the new government nationalized domestic banks and barred foreign ones from taking deposits and offering checking accounts, limiting their activities mainly to loan collection.

"It was just a polite way to say we don't need you in the market anymore," said an international banker speaking only on condition of anonymity.

Citibank, the United States' leading bank, suspended operations last year, although it did not formally close its doors, which were first opened in 1968, and is operating at a minimal level.

After more than two decades in Nicaragua, Bank of America closed last December. Its operations had been substantially trimmed back by July 1983, said spokesman Jim Mitchell in San Francisco.

Nunez Molina, general manager of the office of Texas-based Citizens Insurance Co. of America, has seen the agency's policyholders dwindle from more than 200 in 1979 to 57 now.

"They are canceling little by little," he said.

The Sandinista government has prohibited foreign insurance companies from selling new policies, allowing them only to collect on policies in force.

With the small amount of business he does out of his home, Nunez Molina said the parent company is "losing money with this office."

Among other U.S. companies that still have investments in Nicaragua, according to a March 1987 list provided by Western diplomatic sources, are American Standard Inc., Chevron Corp., H.B. Fuller Co., General Mills Inc., Hercules Inc., Intercontinental Hotels Corp., Kem Manufacturing Co. Inc., Nabisco Brands Inc., Texaco Inc. and United Brands Co.

A spokesman for Hercules, Robert Hessler, said the Delaware-based chemical company "has had nothing to do" with its Nicaraguan pesticide plant since the 1979 Sandinista revolution, providing neither American employees nor direction, although it remains a principal owner "on paper."

Shoe imports up; production, jobs down

WASHINGTON (AP) — Shipments of shoes to the United States, especially from Taiwan and South Korea, increased last spring before Congress took up a bill to freeze imports, the U.S. International Trade Commission reports.

It says that between April and June, imports rose by 12 percent to 245 million pairs valued at $1.7 billion. A summary of the report, dated Sept. 25, was released Tuesday.

The House last month passed by a vote of 263-156 a bill to freeze imports at the 1986 level. It has not yet come up in the Senate.

The same bill also would limit imports of cloth and clothing, and President Reagan has threatened to veto it. Support for the bill in the House fell short of the two-thirds that would be needed to override a veto, but sentiments still could change.

A bill to limit the imports failed last year after Reagan vetoed it and the vote to override the veto fell short.

Declines in U.S. production and jobs, attributed to the growth of imports from low-wage countries, furnish the arguments used by supporters of the bill.

Opponents, meanwhile, argue that other countries would retaliate against U.S. exports if U.S. imports are limited, and that saving the jobs of a small number of American workers would cost large sums to American consumers.

In the three months covered in the ITC's report, imports accounted for 66 percent of the value of shoes on the U.S. market. Manufacturing within the United States declined by 2 percent from the second quarter of 1986 to 57 million pair worth $895 million, and the number of jobs in the U.S. industry declined 6 percent to an average of 87,800.

Taiwan was the biggest supplier, increasing its sales by 15 percent to 110 million pairs worth $575 million. South Korea increased its exports to 52 million pair valued at $385 million — a rise of 19 percent.

Imports from Brazil, the third largest supplier, have been declining since 1985 but the pace of decline slowed to about 1 percent. Americans bought 27 million pairs valued at $229 million.

There were also significant declines in imports from Italy and Spain, the report added.

ANYBODY CAN BUY A SAAB.
NOT JUST ANYBODY CAN SELL ONE.

Last year, Saab turned down three times as many dealerships as we accepted.

Some because they didn't have a service department capable of taking care of sophisticated machinery.

Others, because they didn't have the kind of knowledgeable sales staff Saab likes.

And there were a few dealerships that just didn't have the right kind of reputation. Snobby? Maybe.

But one dealership had everything Saab was looking for:

Apprentice dancers

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

For 12 selected dancers, the Alvin Ailey Repertory Ensemble makes the dream of dance a reality.

Membership in the ensemble is by scholarship only.

"All they have to pay is their rent," says William Ferry, the ensemble's business manager.

To qualify, a dancer must be young, talented, dedicated, determined and chosen by Sylvia Waters, the company's artistic director. Over the last 12 years, more than 29 ensemble members have been invited to join the parent company, the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater, founded by Alvin Ailey in 1958.

The ensemble brings its talent to Midland for one performance at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., at 8 p.m. Friday.

All tickets are general seating. Cost is $12.50 in advance and $15 at the door. Tickets may be purchased through Theatre Midland's box office, 682-4111, Tom's Pharmacy, 682-3204, or PrintMatic, 683-8304. A reception in the Theatre Midland lobby will follow the performance.

The event, which is sponsored by the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs and Theatre Midland, spotlights the ensemble performing the dances that have made the group internationally known.

Formed in 1974, it is an all-black ensemble. Under Miss Waters' artistic direction, the group has studied and performed works from the standard Ailey repertoire, as well as original works by choreographers such as Milton Myers, Christine Lawson, Gus Solomon and Dianne McIntyre. In addition, the ensemble has maintained the historical perspective of dance with the inclusion of such dances as "Games" by Donald McKayle and "The Road of Phoebe Snow" by Talley Beatty.

"One of the primary reasons for putting this workshop company together was to give Alvin an opportunity to work with exceptionally talented scholarship students at school — to work with them on his ideas in terms of choreography," Ferry says. "And, of course, it was an opportunity for the scholarship student to work with someone like Mr. Ailey.

"The Repertory Ensemble produced five ballets that comprise a program called 'Ailey Celebrates Ellington,' which was done in '75-'76. It was so very successful that it was seen as a company in its own right, almost."

The ensemble dancers range in age from 18 to 24 and some are right out of high school, some of them have been to college or have had college-level education," Ferry says.

"They are at a point in their lives and the development of their careers that they're ready to go to something a little more realistic than the classroom. That's one of the reasons that we exist — to give these young artists the kinds of experiences and opportunities that dancers who are working with the parent company or any professional dance company need to have."

Alvin Ailey Repertory Ensemble performs "Icefire" and "Summer Dance I." The Ensemble will perform "A Celebration in Dance" at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., at 8 p.m. Friday.

Dancers usually spend no more time than two years in the ensemble.

"That is intentional because it is essentially an apprentice company. And after two years, they're really ready to go out and audition for Mr. Ailey's company or any other professional company."

A recent addition to the 30-member Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater is a young man, Ferry says, "Who had been in our company, who is all of 19."

Since its inception, the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater has performed for an estimated 15 million people in 48 states, 45 countries and on six continents. The company's extensive touring schedule began with its first U.S. State Department-sponsored tour to the Far East, Southeast Asia and Australia in 1962.

The Alvin Ailey Dance Theater Foundation Inc., a non-profit, tax-exempt corporation, administers the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater; the Alvin Aiely American Dance Center, a school for dance training; and the Alvin Ailey Repertory Ensemble, the junior, resident company of the school.

At the Alvin Ailey American Dance Center, classes are offered for the general public as well as professional training programs. Within the school exists the Merit Scholarship Program and the Dance Certificate Program. Those in the Dance Certificate Program are either paying their tuition or have a student loan or grant that is paying their way. The school registers more than 2,000 students annually from around the world.

Miss Waters, who guides the ensemble, was a scholarship student at the Martha Graham School of Dance and earned her bachelor of science degree in dance from The Juilliard School. While at Juilliard, she also studied with Martha Graham, Jose Limon and Anthony Tudor, and simultaneously danced with Donald McKayle's company.

Some movies are worth your time and money, others aren't

Temple

Seldom do I go to a movie. I'm not into physical, emotional or mental abuse, violence as in blood and gore, machismo or stupidity that parades as comedy.

When I was a child, I looked forward to movies. Popcorn, Baby Ruths and Cokes conjure up pleasant memories of my times spent in movie houses.

At times, childhood calls me, and the idea of catching a movie sounds like a wonderful adventure. That feeling hit last Sunday.

I told the friend I was with he could choose the show. When he headed for UA Cine, I discovered we feel the same way about movie houses. UA Cine has a little of the feel of old movie houses, and it actually has a big screen.

The film which caught his attention was "Fatal Attraction." We drove to the other movies, then returned to UA Cine and saw "Fatal Attraction."

In less than 25 minutes, he said to me, "Are you ready to leave?" I said, "Yes. This is the movie you wanted to see. Are you sure you want to go?" He said, "I'm not interested in watching a movie about losers. Love triangles are always losing situations. Besides, this has nothing to do with love, it's about sickness. Sick people attract sick people. It's a waste of my time. It's not what I thought it was."

I agreed. For me, it's no longer enough to watch good acting; the movie has to have other merits. In drama, I'm interested in seeing how people rise above their problems, not how they slosh around in quagmire.

For instance, currently showing through Oct. 24 at Theatre Midland is the play "To Gillian on her 37th Birthday." I saw the production opening night, two days before the movie. It had flaws. The actors were unsteady in their roles, particularly in Act I. Act II was tighter and, overall, more convincing.

Despite the difficulties opening night, which may have included dropped lines, the script's message of caring, delivered in tense, angry moments as well as those filled with humor, was successfully conveyed by the cast. The play contained believable solutions.

Two years isn't an unhealthy length of time to mourn the death of someone close, but David does more than mourn. He berates himself and others. His "if onlys" and "shoulds" keep him irresponsible, and he behaves like the little boy who didn't get his way. The audience catches glimpses of this petulant child through Thunem's portrayal.

The script creates pictures of people and situations. For example, Kevin refers to Gillian as "that overgrown golden retriever"; and, when asked about returning to teaching, David says, "Herman Melville and I speared our last whale."

Michael Spicer, director for the production, said in his opening remarks, "Welcome to the MCT beach house on the banks of the River Wadley." Volunteers brought in seven cubic yards of sand to Mabee Theatre Two for the show. (And, we know what happens to Wadley when it rains.) The set works.

I left there feeling grateful for the gift of life and headed for my next stop — the Midland Jazz Classic. Once again, the organizers of this event put together three nights and one afternoon of outstanding jazz music played by some of the best professionals in the business. It's hard not to have a dance in one's step when leaving the classic.

I also felt good when I walked out of "Fatal Attraction" because I had enough sense to not sit through an abusive movie, one which would leave me feeling beaten up. We decided instead to see, "Like Father, Like Son."

Philip Wuntch, film critic of the Dallas Morning News, says of this movie, "The film has a few good moments, but it's an overextended, lumpish comedy." When I read his column, after I'd seen "Like Father, Like Son," I thought "I'm glad I don't write movie reviews."

The thought of seeing all of "Fatal Attraction" makes my stomach turn. I could say of it, from what I saw, "The film has one good moment (the child repeating her mother's off-color words when she goes to open the door for the babysitter); it's an overextended, nauseating drama."

And as for "Like Father, Like Son," it decidedly has its weak points, but the scenes that work, work. The son, whose mind is caught in his dad's body, makes rounds for his dad and attempts to conquer bubble gum and a cigarette during a hospital board meeting. The father, whose mind is caught in his son's body, leaves school his first day and drives over the tip of a bully's foot and waves his arm at him, with his fingers in a certain position. Later, he takes his son's date to a rock concert, minus ear plugs.

I wouldn't waste one more minute of my life seeing "Fatal Attraction" if it were free, but the laughs in "Like Father, Like Son" were worth the cost of admission.

Professor compiling history of London stage from 1930-59

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — A professor who once needed some information he couldn't find will be helping make sure others don't have that problem.

University of Arizona English Professor J.P. Wearing will scour thousands of newspaper articles, drama programs and other published materials in London museums and libraries to compile three volumes telling who did what and when on the London stage from 1930 through 1959.

"It's like a great detective caper, really," Wearing said in a telephone interview from London. "The amount of material is absolutely monumental."

The British-born professor has just begun a year's sabbatical from the university to compile the records under a $124,809 grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities.

Wearing, 42, already has had published a similar series of London drama calendars dating from 1890 through 1930.

His 1910s volume — completed in 1979 — earned him the prestigious Guggenheim Award.

Wearing began his research 15 years ago out of necessity.

He was looking for information on Arthur Pinero, a late Victorian dramatist, but did not find any in a series of letters. And there was no central reference book listing Pinero's performances.

"I thought somebody should do it, and that somebody turned out to be me," Wearing says.

He's been doing similar research ever since.

His books list directors, actors, lighting crews, designers, choreographers, makeup artists — almost anybody ever connected with a dramatic performance on the London stage since 1890.

"For instance, if you wanted to find out what plays Laurence Olivier has been in since 1920, you could turn to the index...and then to the main volume. Or how many times Hamlet has been performed (in London). Almost any combination of plays or theater, and any ways they are related," Wearing said.

Wearing said he occasionally pauses while deciphering words printed on microfilm and exclaims, "Good Lord, I never realized so and so did such and such."

But he said there is little time for his interpretation simply because of the sheer volume of raw material. His three-volume 1920s series — published three years ago — contained about 1,800 pages, with information concerning about 4,000 productions and 166,000 performances.

"It really is the kind of thing other people can turn to and make discoveries," he said.

Wearing said he hopes to eventually bring his volumes right up to the present day — "if I keep my sanity and eyesight."

'Fascinatin' ' group

"Fascinatin' Rhythm" brings the songs of George Gershwin to Midland High School Auditorium for an 8 p.m. performance Oct. 28. "Fascinatin' Rhythm" is a combination of vocal and instrumental solos, choral arrangements and tap dancing. The performance marks the opening of Midland Community Concerts' 1987-88 season. Admission is by season membership. For more information call Helen Codington, 694-0176.

Perry Como doesn't feel like he's in 'the fourth quarter'

By MARY CAMPBELL
Associated Press

Anybody who wants to know what Perry Como sounds like today can find out. He has a new album for RCA titled "Today."

Como recorded the album in February, turned 75 on May 18, performed four weeks of one-nighters in the summer and, talking by phone from his home 17 miles north of Palm Beach, said he isn't thinking retirement.

"Retire to what?" he asks. "I play golf when I want, fish when I want, eat when I want, sleep when I want, travel — I'm not much of a traveler. If something comes up to do next year I think I'll go out. I enjoy it.

"I'm proud of the fact I was well-received this year. They were happy to see me. It shows that you haven't wasted 50 years of your life. That's the important part."

In December, Como will be one of five artists receiving Kennedy Center Honors. "When Frank (Sinatra) received it, I sang one of his tunes. He is going to do it for me. That's wonderful."

On his birthday, Como says, "I went out with a friend whose birthday is a couple of days after mine. He said, 'Do you realize we're in the fourth quarter?' I said, 'What are we playing, football?' I feel about 30."

In his usual relaxed speaking style, Como says, "If they don't want to hear me sing, I can always go back to cutting hair."

Como and his wife, who married in 1933, have 13 grandchildren. He still occasionally keeps his hand in cutting hair — his first profession, in Canonsburg, Pa. — when they visit.

After his chat on the phone, Como says he'll fish. "I've got a little boat. It's hard playing golf every day. I used to play every day. I think I've hit more golf balls than any pro alive. You read a little bit of a book and you get a different idea. Every day it's a new swing.

"Now it's all in my mind. The body will not cooperate. I think golf is the greatest game in the world, really. I started playing maybe 45 or 50 years ago.

"It's a game you can keep playing, though you don't play as well. You don't expect to. In tennis you have to be kind of young. There's a senior golf tour for guys who have played professionally. They're 60 and still playing tournament golf."

Fishing cares even less about the sportsman's age.

"Snook is our big fish down here. It's a lot of fun to catch. I clean it myself, skin it and fillet it the way I want."

Making the "Today" recording, Como's 73rd for RCA, was the idea of Nick Perito, his conductor since Mitch Ayres left about 30 years ago. Como says, "I think he's written three good songs for it. He was helped by Dick Williams, Andy Williams' brother, who's a vocal arranger.

"There's a few contemporary things I like. 'That's What Friends Are For,' 'The Wind Beneath My Wings.'"

Referring to "The Wind Beneath My Wings," Como says, "It's a love song, says a lot of nice things."

He adds "What else can I do? I can't get into the rock 'n' roll thing. I can't understand them. I listen to MTV once in a while to see what's going on. But a song like 'That's What Friends Are For' I understand and I'm able to sing. I think we did a good record on that."

Como starting having hit records in 1945 — "Till the End of Time," "If I Loved You," "Prisoner of Love," "Temptation." His last hit singles were "It's Impossible" in 1970 and "And I Love Her So" in 1973.

"'And I Love Her So' was the biggest song I've had in England," he says. "It stayed on their top 20 for about a year, then it dropped off. We went over there and did a couple of concerts and it went back to No. 1.

"We went to Japan. They don't scream and yell like our kids do — until you try to get off the stage. Then they're worse than any rock 'n' roll audience.

"We went to Australia. Those places are hard to get to. Once you get there, you're glad you made the effort. Those people know you, they sing along.

"We're talking about going back to Japan next year."

DANCERS

Following her graduation from Juilliard, she won a place in the cast of the touring company Black Nativity and performed on an extensive European tour. After the tour, she moved to Paris where she became a regular guest on Paris television, working frequently with Michel Descombey, then director of Paris Opera Ballet. During this time, she also became associated with choreographer Maurice Bejart, and performed with his company at the summer Olympics in Mexico City.

Miss Waters returned to the United States in 1968 and shortly after became one of Ailey's 13 dancers, appearing in his Broadway run at the Billy Rose Theater and on the company's first nationwide tour. She returns to American Dance Theater for anniversaries and other special performances.

Ferry, who is beginning his fourth season as business manager of the ensemble, credits Miss Waters and her artistic vision with making the ensemble what it is.

"She selects the dancers. She chooses the choreographers that are going to set works on the company, and certainly her spirit and vision is stimulated by Alvin, but it's her own artistic vision that you see by what we do."

Ferry sometimes finds himself, when he is standing backstage, going through the routines of some of his favorite pieces. He is quick to say, "It certainly is nothing compared to what they can do."

His undergraduate degree is in dance performance in education. He knows from his own personal experience how difficult it is to make it as a dancer.

"I moved to New York when I graduated to pursue my dancing career. And it was, shall we say, a shocking experience. Somehow, I wasn't quite prepared for the career of pursuing the career. There's a whole other side to a performer's life. Unless you're situated in a company that's always working, you're always having to find work — going to audition, taking your classes plus finding a way to pay the rent every month.

"College was a real neat experience, and I learned a lot of things, but I didn't learn how to do that."

While Ferry was still dancing, he "happened into" an opportunity to work with an after-school program for kids.

"That kind of got me involved into the administration aspect of the arts, and I found that it was something that I was good at, and I enjoyed doing the work. And it was a means for me to earn a living and still be involved with the performing arts."

He returned to school and earned a master in arts administration from New York University in 1982. After working for a dance foundation for several years, he landed the job with the ensemble.

He feels the ensemble serves another important function in addition to providing young dancers with the opportunity to grow.

"We are able to go to places, like Midland, around the country. Sometimes we're performing for audiences who have never seen modern dance. Sometimes we are part of a college series program where the audience may get to see one modern dance production a year.

In most places where the ensemble performs, the response is Ferry says one of "overwhelming excitement about seeing these dancers perform.

"Ultimately, whether or not there's a message in the various things you do or not, you do want to be accessible to your audience wherever they might be. I think the dancers, because they are who they are, are very accessible."

'Like Father' just-for-grins film

By MYRA SALCEDO

Salcedo

As silly as the premise of a father and son switching bodies is, the talented Dudley Moore and Kirk Cameron manage to pull off great moments of hilarity in "Like Father, Like Son." The sweetly engaging film has a widower, Jack (Dudley Moore), a successful surgeon up for a chief of staff position, who changes bodies with his son, Chris (Kirk Cameron), who doesn't have the stomach to dissect a frog. The change comes about thanks to a magical Indian potion which finds its way into a bottle of tobasco sauce, and later Jack's Bloody Mary.

The same idea was executed in the less successful Disneyesque 1977 "Freaky Friday," which starred Barbara Harris and a young Jodie Foster. "Like Father, Like Son," though no less plausible than its predecessor, is a light-hearted romp into the social mores of teen-agers and their parents. How their minds get transferred isn't as important as how they cope with the transformation.

Picture a senior in high school in his father's body the moment he realizes he has a gold card and sufficient identification to buy girlie magazines. Picture a teen-ager in Moore's body playing air guitar on the kitchen table with rock music shaking the rafters. Imagine a gum-smacking teen-ager standing in for his top surgeon father, taking interns on hospital "rounds."

No matter what your mind sees, it won't compete with the visual antics of Moore and Cameron. "Like Father, Like Son" has its flaws (a few shopping spree scenes of the movie video gengre go overboard and could have been better edited), but the great sense of humor prevails, making the film a great family affair.

One scene of Moore (possessed by the mind of Cameron) in an executive meeting as he attempts to smoke his first cigarette while chewing gum, is a real sidesplitter and worth the price of admission.

Moore never overplays his role and Cameron has some real surprising expressions. He must have studied Moore extremely carefully for this role. Cameron manages to resemble Moore's silly swagger even when walking down a hall at school.

Another scene of Chris attempting to survive the seduction of the chief of staff's wife (Margaret Colin) has a real ring of truth to it.

"Like Father, Like Son" never fulfills its potential for being a shrewd satire of cross-generational manners, but it does proves how fun it can be to watch first-rate actors challenge our belief systems and rises above a second-rate script.

A word to the wise; if you miss the first few minutes of this film, you may be in a confused fog for the rest of it. The film is well crafted enough to tie everything into the first few scenes and charms along the way before the final resolution.

All in all, "Like Father, Like Son" has some uncanny acting, laugh-out-loud moments, and slick production. It's a great just-for-grins film, one of the few out right now that is suitable for all ages, and I admit it, I laughed as much as my kids.

"Like Father, Like Son," rated PG-13 for mild sexual innuendo, is playing at the UA Cine 4 on Cuthbert.

'To Gillian' at Theatre Midland

"To Gillian on her 37th Birthday" is playing in Mabee Theatre Two at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Written by Michael Brady, the play deals the bonds of love and conflict that tie family and friends together.

"The play exists in the present, and all of the characters exist in the present, but David allows himself the luxury of existing in the sweetness of the past with what he thought Gillian was," says Michael Spicer, associate director at Midland Community Theatre and director for this production. "It deals with love in extreme cases; the love of someone who's gone, and the love of people who are still here. It's about letting go."

Playing the leading role of David is Eric Thunem, a petroleum engineering technician for Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co. Thunem's first acting role was in the 1986 Midland Community Theatre production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream." Since then, he's played Max in "Sound of Music" and Garry in "Noises Off." Both productions were staged at MCT this season.

Also starring in the production are Megan Burleson as Rachel, David's teenage daughter; Sigrid Neustifter as Cindy, Rachel's friend; Jane Burgess as Esther, David's snippy sister-in-law; George Robertson as Paul, Esther's easy going husband; Barbara Fritz as Kevin, Esther and George's recently divorced daughter; and Kim Young as Gillian's ghost.

Set design is by David Layman and crafted by Jon Clark who is also in charge of special effects and lighting design. Stage manager is Diane King, assisted by Sue Winkler.

The production, which is co-produced by ARCO, runs through Oct. 24. Non-members may purchased individual tickets. For reservations call 682-4111.

Boston's third album 'lonely project'

By LARRY McSHANE

TEANECK, N.J. (AP) — Tom Scholz's method for creating a multi-platinum album is a bit odd. Get rid of your band, play guitar stretched out on your back, sue your record company, spend six years writing and producing the record, add vocals, then release the LP.

The finished product, Boston's chart-topping third album, "Third Stage."

It was a very lonely project for a while," said Scholz, who played all guitar, rhythm guitar, acoustic guitar, grand piano, electric piano, bass and drums on "Third Stage," after writing and arranging them. Scholz also produced the album.

He managed to have Brad (Delp) sing the vocals, so somebody could stand up front," Scholz said.

He didn't want to wear all those hats. His disadvantage is there's no one to get tired, depressed, whatever, you face it alone. You have to figure out and solve the problem.

Nevertheless, Boston has become a product of the studio, brought to life in the Massachusetts home of a graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology who started from scratch. Tom Scholz's Boston Studio. The band boils down to Scholz playing and Delp singing.

The albums really were most of the work," said Scholz, who worked for 18 months more on the band's albums than on "Third Stage."

"It was an illusion. It was Brad's voice. His voice is what brings the music alive. I always wanted to be in a band on a stage. Eventually, I learned I could do it faster and get what I wanted myself.

It was a year after Boston followed its mega-smash debut album of the same name with another hit, "Don't Look Back." But when Scholz finished "No. 3," the problems that had caused by some overeating was compounded by a basketball accident — a fall that left him going up for a rebound. The result was extreme pain and six months flat on his back. He recorded the album's last track, "I Like It," playing guitar while lying flat on a makeshift bed in the studio.

It was torturous," said Scholz, who had been working on the board to mix "Don't Look Back" while living on your couch. A couple of hours? I knew I had to finish, so that made me thank goodness.

Negotiations with CBS Epic records began earlier with Scholz refusing to leave the label for a deal. Scholz said while he struggled with the album, CBS was pressing him for a record as soon as possible.

There are people in this business who don't understand. I wasn't really concerned with making this just a commercial and financial success. If I was, I would have done the wrong thing and rushed just to put something out," he said.

That's the point missed by (CBS Records head Walter) Yetnikoff and the people he listened to. They thought that by being diligent, I was being negligent.

Scholz's obsession with the album eventually became all-encompassing; he admits to never hearing Bruce Springsteen's "Born in the USA," one of the biggest selling albums of the past three years. The tunnel vision became so intense, Scholz said, he would listen to his songs played faster or slower than 33 rpm and pretend it was another band during the mixing.

But when the album was done, it was another story. "It was a feeling of everything. I was so happy. I couldn't do any better," he recalled. "It would never be as good as I wanted, but it was as good as I could do."

The live show also is the result of Scholz's work. The band, which was recruited for the tour, recreates the studio sound using speakers and amplifiers designed by Scholz. The all-purpose performer developed the new hardware as his "day job" during recording of the album.

Scholz admits he was unsure how the album would fare, but he's quite pleased with the feedback he's received from Boston fans both old and new.

"If the guys at the basketball court like it, or a guy pumping gas says, 'Like your record,' that tells me something," said the perfectionist Scholz. "Of course, I already like it — or it wouldn't be on the album."

The rock band Boston's success with their chart-topping third album, "Third Stage," is attributed largely to band leader Tom Scholz, who said, "The band was really and illusion. It was just me and Brad (Delp's) voice." Band members from left are Delp, Doug Huffman, Scholz, Jim Masdea, David Sikes and Gary Pihl.

Aisle of supermarket couple's lover's lane

DAVIE, Fla. (AP) — Deborah Francis and Victor Radeka met in the meat section and the grocery aisle became their lovers' lane.

Radeka and Ms. Francis strolled into each other a year ago during a "singles' night" at a Publix supermarket. Last week they exchanged wedding vows at one of the chain's stores as 1,000 shoppers looked on.

"The Wedding March" played as Ms. Francis' father escorted her down an aisle lined with managers, stock clerks and television reporters.

Radeka, a mechanic, and Ms. Francis, a telephone saleswoman, were married by a notary public.

"A supermarket is a better place to meet someone than a bar," Radeka said after the ceremony.

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Oregonians believe in artistic license, and the Transportation Department took advantage of that when it asked residents to submit designs for new vehicle plates.

So far, the state has received more than 2,000 contenders in a contest open until Oct. 31 to replace the lackluster gold and blue plates on Oregon's 2 million cars.

Many entries feature traditional symbols of the Beaver State, including trees, mountains, lakes, fish and, of course, beavers, said contest coordinator Holly Blanchard.

Some have included slogans such as "naturally inviting" or "a state of mine," intended to capture the essence of the state.

Glenn Kary spent $1,000 to have an actual license plate made with his rainbow design.

Opening lead: King of ◇

To be a good declarer you need the instincts of a super-sleuth. You piece together the clues you derive from the bidding and play, and use the inferences you derive to counter the dastardly plans cooked up by the enemy.

Suppose that you become declarer at four hearts after an intelligent auction. (Don't you always bid that way?) The key move was your partner's raise of your suit despite holding only three-card support; he was not good enough to show his spades and then support hearts later.

West leads the king of diamonds. East overtakes with the ace and shifts to the eight of spades, which you win in hand. Can East have a bare ace of diamonds?

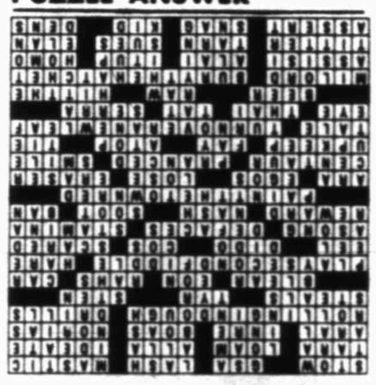

Not possible. Why? Because that would give West an eight-card suit and he would be preempting the heck out of the hand. Why then the spade shift? Elementary, my dear Watson. (Incidentally, did you know that phrase does not appear anywhere in the Sherlock Holmes stories?) East must have a singleton spade.

How do you go about stopping a spade ruff? One way is to try to draw trumps, but that is unlikely to succeed here. Why not? Because if East is short in spades, he probably has trump length, so you probably can't draw all his trumps in time.

Is there another way? Perhaps. You might be able to stop West from gaining the lead to give his partner a ruff. Cash the ace-king of clubs, then cross to the ace of hearts. If the king does not drop, lead the jack of clubs. If East produces the queen, discard your diamond and claim the contract, conceding a trump trick. If East plays low, you have to guess. Is he good enough to conceal the queen? If the answer is no, ruff and hope trumps are 2-2. If yes, you have to decide whether to ruff or discard.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

MONDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1987

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: tenor Luciano Pavarotti, comedian Dick Gregory, correspondent Chris Wallace, actress Susan Anton, American League president Joe Cronin, sportscaster Tony Kubek.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): It is time to end a floundering, unproductive partnership. You learn about member of opposite sex by listening closely. What someone does not say reveals plenty. Your instincts are right on target.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Advice from experts puts you head and shoulders above your competitors. A career maneuver must be very subtle or it could backfire. Take the direct approach in romance! Speak from the heart.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Put loved ones' needs ahead of routine chores. Emphasize honor and truth when dealing with attractive member of opposite sex. Legal or inheritance questions can be cleared up on a friendly basis.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Study and research will boost your earning power. Financial negotiations can be successfully concluded. A controversy could arise concerning a new romantic partner. Sort out the facts before making charges.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A candid talk with teen-agers will reveal their college preferences. A financial or business burden is lightened. Your quick wits will help you solve a problem. A telephone call brings good news.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Joint endeavors bring a new sense of security. Property investments will show higher returns. A perplexing personal problem can be solved if you show tact and patience. Play a waiting game.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A creative project receives long-awaited financial backing. Discuss difficult issues in private, with only the people who are directly involved. Do not share family secrets with an outsider. Be discreet.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A chance to travel or study will lead to career advancement. The solution to a family problem is near. Put time limits on projects so you get everything done. Do not neglect family.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Keep abreast of the latest developments in your field. Your timing is superb. Postpone signing contracts or agreements. A legal matter will be settled in your favor, perhaps out of court.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): If traveling for business, share expenses. A professional relationship can be salvaged if you pour on the charm. An intelligent compromise works wonders! Romance is happier than recently.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Make your feelings known to those who have influence. You are right to trust your instincts in business and romance. Dress conservatively around an older person. Say less and do more.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Morning favors original ideas. Focus on ways to improve joint savings and your business prospects. Do not accept the first offer that comes your way. Stop competing and start cooperating with loved ones.

'Opera in the Park' to be next weekend

Midland Opera Theater opens its season with "Opera in the Park."

This year's production, slated for 5:30 p.m. Oct. 18 at Centennial Plaza, offers barbecue, tap beer, wine coolers and a wide ranging repertoire presented by six singers, including Janice Archer, soprano; Dr. Michael Jordan, baritone; William "Bill" Lucas, baritone; Jerry Minster, tenor; Pam Priebe, soprano; and Robin Wilson, soprano. Lucas is the event's musical director.

Seating is limited. For reservations call 684-4101.

MOT also brings Texas Opera Theatre to town for one night productions from the traditional opera repertoire. Prior to these productions, MOT hosts a lecture/preview, which explains the opera's background.

This season, MOT is bringing TOT's production of Donizetti's "Lucia di Lammermoor" to Midland March 15.

This tragic opera tells the story of a young Scottish woman who, in 1669, was forced by her family into a marriage of convenience. On her wedding night, her despair gave way to madness, and before dawn's light, she, her husband and the man she loved were dead. The opera, which will be sung in English, is based on Sir Walter Scott's novel "The Bride of Lammermoor" and was first performed in Naples, Italy, in 1835.

Ann Thompson of Houston will present a lecture and preview of the opera at 3 p.m. March 13 at Midland College's Allison Fine Arts Auditorium.

In addition, MOT is bringing TOT to Midland High School Auditorium Feb. 16 for an evening with Mozart. The production, "Amadeus Conducts Mozart," spotlights the composer's most famous music, his life, his sense of humor and the lives and music of those he influenced. A shortened version of this production will be presented, courtesy of MOT, to the 6th graders in the Midland Independent School District the morning of Feb. 16.

MOT is an outgrowth and continuation of a joint Midland College and community effort. The initial venture into opera was the 1980 local production of "Die Fledermaus." The second local production was "The Merry Widow" in 1981.

In 1984, MOT was chartered and granted tax-exempt status. Its purpose — to establish a local opera association capable of bringing in touring groups of professional quality while developing local production capabilities — has been made possible through the efforts of volunteers. Today, the organization operates under a board of directors and an executive committee which oversees MOT's auxiliary branch, The Operators.

Subscription memberships may be purchased by calling 684-4101 or at the Oct. 18 "Opera in the Park" presentation. The program for the event includes selections from Leoncavallo's "I Pagliacci," "Puccini's "La Boheme," Donizetti's "Don Pasquale" and "Daughter of the Regiment," Rossini's "The Barber of Seville," Mozart's "Don Giovanni" and "Cosi Fan Tutti."

Gallery 1114's next exhibit 'Open Show'

Next up at Gallery 1114 is an "Open Show." Works to be exhibited need to be brought to the Gallery between 10 a.m. and 5 p.m. Oct. 23 and 24.

"The West Texas community is full of creative people who don't consider themselves artists — this show is for them," says Michael Banschbach, a Gallery 1114 member. "If it will fit through the front door, it's eligible. The idea of the show is to have fun and demonstrate that art can take many forms and is an important part of everyone's life."

All entries will be shown at the opening reception at 7 p.m. Oct. 31. A fee of $5 per entry is charged. A first place prize of $40.00 will be awarded at the opening reception. For more information call 685-9944.

Currently hanging through Oct. 23 at Gallery 1114 are works by Travis Beckham and Boyd Harris. Both artists are members of the Gallery.

Beckham received his Bachelor of Fine Arts from the University of Houston. He early work was abstracted imagery in high color, hard-edged, simplified forms. He then painted simple earth-palette realism of his perceived surroundings. The current drawings and paintings seek a synthesis between the two. Beckham has exhibited locally and regionally, most recently in "Then, Now, Then" at Lawndale Annex, Houston.

Harris' work consists of ceramic sculpture and acrylic paintings on paper. Much of his two-dimensional work is influenced by primitive religious mysticism. His pieces play with the ideas of time, place and space.

Harris has won several recent awards for his ceramics and has exhibited regionally in Texas and New Mexico.

"Gallery 1114, a contemporary artists' gallery founded in 1983, is one of the few outlets for innovative art between Dallas and Santa Fe," Banschbach says.

The Gallery devotes about half of the exhibit calendar to regional artists, and the remainder to local and member artists. An objects room shows fine crafts.

Located at 1114 N. Big Spring St., the Gallery is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday through Saturday and 1 to 5 p.m. Sunday.

Violinist Carmit Zori to play with symphony

Zori

The 25th anniversary Master Season of the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale opens Tuesday in Midland and Thursday in Odessa with guest violinist Carmit Zori and a world premiere overture by John David Earnest.

Miss Zori replaces the originally scheduled violinist Erick Friedman. Friedman had to cancel due to an automobile accident in which he sustained injuries.

Miss Zori debuted with the Philadelphia Orchestra in 1978. Top prize winner in the 1984 Walter Naumberg Violin Competition, Miss Zori has appeared on several occasions as soloist with Zukin Mehta and the New York Philharmonic, as well as with the Jupiter Symphony in Lincoln Center. She will perform the Violin Concert No. 1 in G Minor by Max Bruch.

"Composer John David Earnest returns to share his talents with the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorlae for a second time," says Connie Linsler, executive director of the organization.

In 1981, he was commissioned to write "A Permian Symphony," which the orchestra recorded and released on Centennial Records. Now, Earnest has composed an overture in honor of the organization's 25th season, titled "Chasing the Sun, Scherzo for Orchestra." This work will be a feature on a second recording the Symphony and Chorale will release in 1988.

Born in Texas and educated at The University of Texas in Austin, Earnest has made New York City his home since 1968. He has written extensively for orchestra, chamber ensemble, chorus, concert band, solo voice and film.

Also on the program, which will be directed by the organization's artistic director, Dr. Thomas Hohstadt, is Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4 in F Minor.

Tuesday's performance will be held at 8 p.m. at Lee High School Auditorium. Thursday's performance will be held at 8 p.m. at Bonham Junior High. Both single and season tickets are available. For more information, or to purchase tickets call the Symphony Concert Line, 563-5269.

Faye Dunaway has 'unflattering' role of alcoholic

By PETER RAINER
Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — Faye Dunaway in dark sunglasses, swooped into her press conference for "Barfly" 15 minutes late. But nobody in the press corps seemed to mind. In this second week of the New York Film Festival at Lincoln Center, a little glamour was more than welcome.

Not that "Barfly" is a movie about swank sophisticates. Quite the contrary. It's an entertaining wallow about a pair of lushes, played by Dunaway and Mickey Rourke. Most of the action takes place in dank bars and cruddy underlit apartments and alleyways.

Dunaway is clearly not playing a glamour-puss here, but on the Lincoln Center stage she carried the charge of a woman who knows she's striking even when wearing the dingiest of duds. There was inadvertent comedy to her conference. The press kept praising her for her decision to take on such an unflattering role, and she kept praising herself for taking on such an unflattering role. At the same time, however, everyone was aware of the glamorousness of the actress up there on the stage.

"It's always good to de-glamorize now and again," said Dunaway. "It's so good not to look pretty, the nakedness of the soul comes out."

Dunaway apparently believes that her career got on the wrong track around six years ago; in other words, with "Mommie Dearest." Speaking of her decision to appear in "Barfly," she said, "It was important to go back and redefine my work, to go back to the vulnerability of Bonnie" referring to her breakthrough performance in "Bonnie and Clyde."

It's odd that one of the few Hollywood actresses with the cheekbones for high-style glamour should see her artistic salvation in low-life roles. This is the sort of career gambit that actresses traditionally indulge when they begin to look blowzy. But Dunaway retains her magnificence.

Still, her stretch in "Barfly" isn't quite as all-out as that of her co-star Rourke, who spends most of the movie in blood-stained T-shirts and scuzzy skivvies. Rourke has never looked grubbier. You could melt him down to a puddle of axle grease, vinegar and spittle. Dunaway, by contrast, has the whitest capped teeth ever seen on a lush.

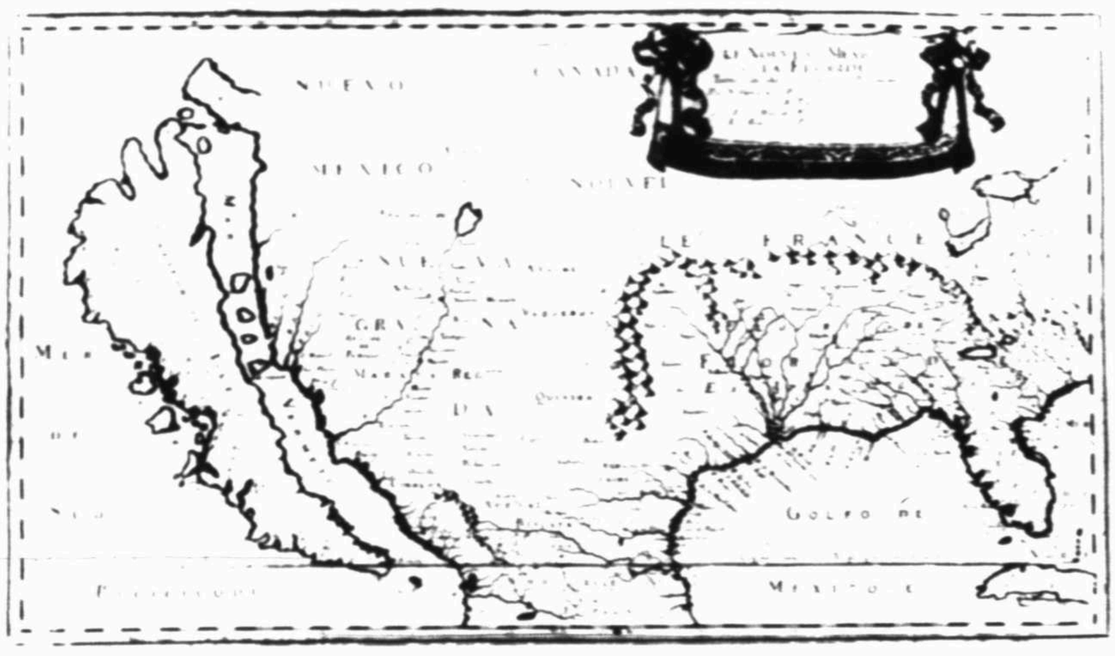

Antique show slated

NEW BRAUNFELS — The 28th semi-annual Antique Show and Sale will be held at New Braunfels Civic Center, 380 S. Seguin St., Friday through Oct. 18.

Admission is $2 for all three days. For more information call Jerry M. Johnson, 1-512-620-4934.

Published in 1656 by Nicholas Sanson d'Abbeville, the first Royal Geographer of france, this map places a protective ring of mountains around French claims in the Southeast and Southwest. It is one of the fascinating and entertaining documents featured in "Crossroads of Empire," a photographic exhibition of maps and other historical images of the Southwest.

Exhibit 'Crossroads' illustrates role of maps in settling North America

The history of the Southwest can be read in its maps — crude Spanish sketches of the Gulf Coast, decorative maps of the 17th century and scientific railroad surveys of the 19th century.

The role of maps in the race for empire in North America, in which the Southwest emerged as the key, is documented in the "Crossroads" exhibit on display at the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library, 1806 W. Indiana Ave., through Nov. 2.

History's first mapmaker was Claudius Ptolemy, who lived in Europe around 150 A.D. Ptolemy's gridded map of the known world was rediscovered and studied by Florentine businessmen in 1400. With the discovery of North America and the invention of the printing press, cartography enjoyed a bull market, and the race was on that would lead from Genoa to the Goodnight Trail.

Spanish maps, based largely on the fruitless wanderings of Coronado, were treated as state secrets. French maps used by LaSalle were political documents. A 1641 Dutch map depicted California as an island, and so it remained until the King of Spain officially declared it part of the mainland.

In 1803, with the Louisiana Purchase, the French bowed out of the contest and left the field to Spain and the United states.

Turmoil marked the rest of the century. Settlers immigrated from the United states into what is now Texas. Revolutions changed the governments in Mexico and in Texas. After nine years as an independent republic, Texas joined the Union, an act that precipitated was between the United States and Mexico.

NOW APPEARING BARBARA HUMPHREY
Goodnights
The best way to describe this beautiful, blonde entertainer is style...And maybe energetic, sensitive, animated, creative, flirtatious, and last but definitely not least, talented.
Miss Humphrey's repertoire extends a vast selection of material from the 40's to the 80's. Perhaps her forte is the gusty blues and jazz tunes of such greats as Billy Holiday, Fats Waller, Nat King Cole, Dinah Washington and Gershwin. But her style translates equally as well on renditions of her favorite Motown artists: Sam Cooke, Marvin Gaye, Otis Redding and Aretha Franklin, not to mention such country greats as Patsy Cline and Hank Williams. Barbara loves to sing the soulful sounds of the 80's from artists like Whitney Houston, Anita Baker, Al Jarreau and Sade. Undoubtedly though, Miss Humphrey shines her brightest when performing her own original material. Lyrically moving and musically "finger-snappin' and foot-tappin'" good.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Artist to give workshop

Larry Weston of Richardson, guest artist of the Midland Palette Club today through Wednesday, will demonstrate watercolor painting at 2 p.m. today. He will conduct a watercolor workshop Monday through Wednesday.

Weston began his career in 1961 as a commercial artist for The American Quarter Horse Association. He remained in the advertising and commercial art field for 21 years, during which time he was an avid oil painter and teacher of oils. Then, in 1972, through the influence of a friend, he picked up a watercolor brush for the first time.

In 1982, he resigned from his job to pursue a fulltime career in watercolor painting, judging and teaching. His work hangs in many private collections across the country and in a number of major galleries in Arizona, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Colorado and Texas.

Weston served as president of the Southwestern Watercolor Society in 1986-87 and is a signature member of the Society. He is also a member of the Arizona Watercolor Association, Texas Fine Arts Association, Artist and Craftsman Associated, artist Equity Association and is an associate member of the American Watercolor Society.

For registration information on the workshop, call Lula Belle Klingler, 684-8898.

HSU doing Wilder play

ABILENE — Hardin-Simmons University's Department of Theatre is staging Thornton Wilder's "The Skin of Our Teeth" Thursday through Saturday in the Van Ellis Theatre.

The second production will be a children's show, "Halloween at Root Beer Gulch," which will play Oct. 29 and 30 at 7 p.m. and Oct. 31 at 10 a.m., 2, 4 and 7 p.m. Tickets are priced at $2.50. Free refreshments will be offered.

Th production of the fall semester will be at Nov. 17 to 21 presentation of Enid Bagnold's 1950 play, "The Chalk Garden." this will be HSU's entry in the American College Theatre Festival competition at Angelo State University in December.

"The Merry Widow" will be presented by the theater department in conjunction with the music faculties of HSU, Abilene christian College and McMurry College Feb. 4 through 6 at 8 p.m. and Feb. 7 at 2:30 p.m. Ticket prices are $5 and $8.

Then, Feb. 25-27 and March 3-5, the theater will present Arthur Miller's "The Crucible."

The final show of the season will be Noel Coward's "Hay Fever." The production will be staged April 14-16 and 21-23.

The Van Ellis Theatre ticket office opens a week prior to each production. Tickets are priced at $4 unless otherwise noted. for more information call the ticket office at 1-677-0192.

Exhibit examines early life

Museum of the Southwest visitors have the opportunity to travel back in time to the days when camels, mammoths and giant bison roamed the Texas plains and see the tools and implements used by early man in the current exhibition, "Early Life on the Llano," now installed in the New Wing.

This major archaeology exhibition examines the lives of the early inhabitants of this region and contains artifacts which document man's presence as long ago as 12,000 years.

Museum hours are Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday 2-5 p.m. There is no charge to view any of the exhibits at the Museum, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

Theater staging 'Fiddler'

SAN ANGELO — The 1987-88 production season of the Angelo Civic Theatre will begin Friday with the theater's fall musical, "Fiddler on the Roof."

Based on the short stories of "the Jewish Mark Twain," Sholom Aleichem, "Fiddler" tells the story of Tevye, a poor dairyman, his daughters and the rest of the inhabitants of the tiny village of Anatevka, somewhere in pre-revolutionary Russia around the turn of the century.

Tickets to "Fiddler" are available from the theater's box office during the hours of noon to 5:30 p.m. Monday through Saturday by calling 1-949-4400. Performance dates are Friday through Oct. 18, Oct. 23-25 and 29-31. Sunday matinees are at 2 p.m. Evening performances are at 8 p.m.

The theater is located at 1936 Sherwood Way.

Artist Stephen Lyman captures the majesty of the bull moose and its wild homeland in Canadian Autumn.

'Canadian Autumn' at Folger

"Canadian Autumn" is being featured at Folger Ranch Gallery, 1110 County Road South.

"Perhaps because the number of acres that are home to wild animals is shrinking, preserving the wilderness through art has become popular," says Therese Folger of Folger Ranch Gallery, 1110 County Road South, Midland.

"The decision to own wildlife art is an emotional one. The scene triggers a memory or transplants the viewer to a more tranquil place. A second reason is the widespread availability of wildlife art," she says.

The Greenwich Workshop, Inc., publishes wildlife art in signed, limited editions. Prints by such artists as Stephen Lyman and Rod Frederick are in the Canadian Autumn collection.

Institute serves 'Cocktails'

ODESSA — The Art Institute for the Permian Basin, 4909 E. University Blvd., is exhibiting the complete sculpture series "The Cocktail Party" created by Dr. Stanley E. Marcus, professor and chairman of the art department at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin, until Oct. 25.

The exhibition, which includes more than 20 pieces, many of which are larger than life-size, was organized by the Amarillo Art Center and is funded in part by the Cabot Foundation, Southwestern Bell Telephone and the Odessa Cultural Council.

The Art Institute is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and from 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. No admission is charged to view exhibits. For more information call 1-368-7222.

MCT board has new head

Coffield

Conrad Coffield has been elected to the position of president of the Board of Governors of Midland Community Theatre Inc.

A long-time supporter of MCT, Coffield has been on the Board of Governors since 1984 and has served as chairman of financial development, chariman of the pension committee and on the play selection committee.

Coffield is a partner in the Midland office of the Texas and New Mexico law firm of Hinkle, Cos, Eaton, Coffield & Hensley. He is a member of the Texas and New Mexico bar associations.

Over the years, he has been active with a number of church and civic organizations in Roswell, N.M., and Midland and serves on the Executive Committee of the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, Library and Hall of Fame.

Church to host concert

Discovery Music Series presents its debut concert at 8 p.m. Oct. 20 in the sanctuary of Grace Presbyterian Church, 2801 N. Garfield St.

Musicians performing for the event are members of the Midland-Odessa Symphony. Conductor is Gergory Hustis, principal French horn with the Dallas Symphony.

Among the pieces to be performed are the Serenade in C Minor by Mozart and the Serenade in D Minor by Dvorak. The Mozart piece calls for two French horns, two oboes, two clarinets and two bassoons, and the Dvorak piece requires the Mozart instrumentation plus an extra French horn, a cello and a bass.

An informal reception will be held following the free performance. For more information call Robert or Barbara Adamcik, 699-0242.

BIG SPRING — Works by George Boutwell are included in the Big Spring Arts Festival being held at Dorothy Garrett Coliseum Saturday and Oct. 18.

Hours for the show are 1-6 p.m.

Boutwell publishes note cards, calendars and Christmas cards from his paintings. His display will include a showing of these as well as several originals and a selection of limited edition prints.

Construction workers 'play' tools in 'Groundbreaking Overture'

ST. LOUIS PARK, Minn. (AP) — Bang the nail slowly and saw the brick lowly, then mix mortar musically and trowel it melodically, the composer of "Groundbreaker Overture" might say.

Cries of "Bravo" greeted Stephen Paulus' seven-minute composition for orchestra and construction tools last week at groundbreaking for an $80 million complex of shops, restaurants and offices in this Minneapolis suburb.

"It's really upbeat, energetic, rhythmic. It's meant to be celebratory in nature," said Paulus, 38, who recently finished a four-year stint as composer-in-residence with the Minnesota Orchestra.

The overture featured the sounds of a nail gun, a brick saw and a mortar mixer that blended with the strains of violins and cellos, punctuated by grinding and sawing, ending with a single shot from the nail gun.

"I was looking for some things that at certain points would contribute some drive, like the brick saw, when it's actually cutting a brick, has a real searing effect, and things like the zip gun provide the real rat-a-tat, sort of a sharp staccato," Paulus said.

The 45-piece Minneapolis Pops Orchestra, conducted by Jere Lantz, was backed up by four construction workers in hard hats and tuxedos who played the tools.

In addition, percussionist David John Olsen performed on a "weldophone," which he and Paulus invented and consists of 17 welding caps of different diameters struck by a bolt.

The sound, Paulus said, is a cross between a xylophone and a glockenspiel.

The audience of about 300 was impressed. "I thought it was delightful to see a marriage of the arts and the trades," said Linda Hoeschler of St. Paul.

"It's definitely an extravaganza," said Dale Valaske, one of the performing workers. "I've been to many groundbreaking ceremonies and this definitely supersedes anything I've ever seen or experienced."

Paulus' musical score includes such directions as "turn on and let run" for the mortar mixer and "start rotation slowly, increase to full speed" for a trowler, which spreads cement.

"The grinder actually has a pitch that's variable. It sort of whines down and back up again," he said.

Although previous avant-garde compositions have featured airplane propellers or linotype machines, Paulus said he believes his is one of the first to incorporate construction tools.

"Admittedly, people can think of this as a tongue-in-cheek (piece) but basically it's a serious, fun piece of music," he said.

Paulus recommends that his piece be performed in the open, as in its debut, rather than in a concert hall. Although the tools are not amplified, he said, "I think it would be just too loud."
