Allies take POWs

Iraqis captured at anti-aircraft positions

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Allied forces captured the first Iraqi prisoners of the Persian Gulf war during an assault on offshore anti-aircraft batteries, the military said Saturday. The pace of the air war was furious, if one-sided.

Overall, the Pentagon declared the Desert Storm war was "going quite well" at the three-day mark, but there was no claim that the air force and missile threat from Iraq had disappeared.

"They are not bearding us very much right now," Lt. Gen. Thomas Kelly said, describing the lack of challenge from Iraqi aircraft. Kelly said the score in dogfights was allies 10, Iraqis 0.

However, the United States had lost five planes from hostile ground fire and one from mechanical failure.

Nine Americans were reported missing.

Pentagon officials said the two Air Force men whose F-4G Wild Weasel went down because of mechanical failure ejected in Saudi Arabia, where they were picked up and taken back to their base.

At a briefing in Washington, Kelly said the Pentagon believed Iraq had sent many of its 700 military planes to the north. U.S. planes began a fresh campaign in that direction, perhaps including jets that were seen taking off from NATO bases at Incirlik, Turkey.

Pentagon spokesman Pete Williams said the U.S. and its allies had flown more than 4,700 missions through the first three days — as many on day three as on days one and two combined. In addition, the Navy had launched more than 100 Tomahawk missiles in 24 hours, for a total of 216 since the fighting began.

He wouldn't try to estimate damage from all those missions, saying that poor weather conditions inhibited reconnaisance.

The U.S. forces said they captured 12 prisoners, and Maj. Gen. Robert Johnston described them as the first Iraqi POWs of the war. Iraq has claimed it has captured American pilots who were shot down in bombing runs, but Kelly said the Pentagon knew of no Americans taken captive.

Many of them fought back tears. But for all, the sense of pride was evident.

In their own way, they were sending a message to the American troops in the Middle East.

"Our troops need to see positive reporting on things like this, which is one reason I came," said Dennis Duke, who has a son, Jeff Duke, on a U.S. Navy ship in the Middle East and another son, Ray Duke, on a nuclear submarine.

Hundreds of supporters of soldiers participating in Desert Storm jammed the Midland Centennial Plaza Saturday afternoon for a Yellow Ribbon Rally designed to show support for the war effort.

"I feel better about the people in this area," Duke said. "I feel like the support here is stronger than in other parts of the country."

Many others at the rally agreed that the get-together — sponsored by the American Red Cross and the Midland

Hospital rollback defeated

■ Midlanders voted down MCHD's tax rollback by a 56-44 percent margin.

By Erin Blair
Staff Writer

Voters defeated the Midland County Hospital District tax rollback by a comfortable 56-44 percent margin in Saturday's election.

A total of 9,144 voters, 5.33 percent of those eligible to vote in the election, turned out to decide the fate of the district's 16.6 cent per $100 valuation property tax rate, which was set in August to keep up with rising indigent care costs at the hospital.

Election Administrator Bettye Calvert said 5,135 people voted against the rollback and 3,992 voted for it in a lighter-than-expected turnout.

Tom Bruner, chairman of the hospital district's board of directors, said he was "delighted" with the results.

"The community has always supported the hospital," he said.

"I'm thankful that the hospital will be able to continue to function and offer its full range of services to the community without worrying about how to pay for those resources."

Edna Walger, a founder of Citizens Against Taxpayer Abuse, said she was "disappointed but not defeated" at the election's outcome.

"We fought a good fight," she said. "The people apparently think that taxes are the way to go, but we gave them a choice they wouldn't have had without the petition."

CATA presented a 5,732-signature petition to the hospital district on Nov. 27 calling for a rollback election on its 19.6 percent tax increase.

Had the rollback succeeded, the district would have been forced to roll taxes back to 14.9 cents per $100 valuation, an 8 percent increase over last year's 13.7 cent rate. It would have lost $750,000.

Bruner said he could not predict whether the district would need another tax increase to fund indigent care next year.

"We have to go on a year-by-year basis," he said. "The board of directors is sensitive to the problem of cost containment for indigent care and we will continue to work for that in any way possible."

'Mother's intuition' pays off

■ Local woman decides against attending ribbon rally in case son calls and he does.

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

Without mother's intuition, a Midland woman might not have been at home Saturday when her son called from the Persian Gulf.

LaVerne Smith said she was about to head out the door to attend a local yellow-ribbon rally to show support for America's armed forces in the Persian Gulf. But she said something stopped her at the last minute.

"I said to myself, 'I wonder if I should go. Bill might call,'" Ms. Smith recalled. "I just didn't feel comfortable about going."

Minutes later, the telephone rang. It was her son, Bill Smith, calling from Bahrain, Saudi Arabia.

Smith, a U.S. Marines aircraft mechanic, had called a number of times since he was one of the first Americans sent to the Middle East. He has been there since last Aug. 19.

But as the battle progresses, this call could not have come at a better time, she said. It was the second time her son called since war broke out last Wednesday.

"If the tension gets high, he calls more often," she said.

Smith reported that all the aircraft in his unit had returned safely from their missions and morale was high. At night, the troops can see and hear the U.S. aerial bombardment taking place across the border in Kuwait.

Although the war is on, Ms. Smith said her son, a 1987 Midland High School graduate, seems to be more at ease than before war erupted.

"I think they were scared and worried before the activity started," she said. "Now that it's

Reservists

WASHINGTON — President Bush has approved a reserve call-up that could double the number of reservists on active duty and extend their period of service, the Pentagon said Saturday. Pentagon spokesman Pete Williams said the approval could increase the number of reservists on active duty from 161,887 to a maximum of 360,000. Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney set ceilings of 360,000 and one year of consecutive service, Williams said.

Mail call

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Central Command has asked families and friends of those serving in Operation Desert Storm to limit personal mail to first-class letters and audio cassettes. The start of the war has meant increased movement of troops and steps are being taken to reduce the personal articles that can be transported.

U.S. Army delivers Patriot missiles to Israel

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — U.S. military planes airlifted Patriot missile batteries and Army crews to Israel on Saturday to help block Iraqi missile attacks and stave off Israel's threatened reprisals.

Deputy Secretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger headed to Israel on Saturday for talks to coordinate U.S. and Israeli policy "in light of the Scud missile attacks," the White House said without elaborating.

An Israeli official in Washington, requesting anonymity, said Israel was prepared to delay retaliation "for the time being" because it was calmed by the delivery of the Patriots and did not want to play into Iraq's hands by entering the Persian Gulf war.

The military command said the batteries of Patriots arrived Saturday morning, and U.S. Pentagon spokesman Pete Williams said later the first Patriot units "are now operational."

Israel Television showed official army footage of U.S. soldiers in helmets and combat dress helping Israelis unload the missiles from U.S. Galaxy transport planes.

Williams said the Patriots "will be operated primarily by the U.S. troops who arrived with them. They will assist Israeli defense forces in operating them. We'll clearly work closely together on this."

He said it was the biggest military airlift to Israel since the 1973 Middle East war.

The Pentagon also said it was the first time U.S. troops have been "deployed to Israel specifically to assist the Israelis in the defense of their country."

The Patriots have a proven ability to shoot down Iraqi missiles, and the announcement came as a morale boost to Israelis as they prepared for another night of possible Iraqi bombardment.

Defense Ministry spokesman Danny Naveh issued a statement insisting that Israel's position on retaliation "has not changed."

"Israel maintains its right to respond to Iraqi attacks at the timing and in the manner it finds suitable," Naveh said.

The Patriots, he said, were "a significant change" for Israel's posture in the Middle East arena.

He praised the speed and logistical skill displayed by the Americans in getting the complex Patriot systems to Israel so quickly.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir also indicated in weekend contacts with the Bush administration that "Israel maintains its freedom of action to respond," to Iraqi attacks, Israel television said.

No figures were given, but a U.S. official who spoke on condition of anonymity said Israel was receiving at least two batteries in addition to the two batteries already supplied but not yet operational as of last week. Each battery has 36 missiles.

Mordechai Hod, the former air force chief who now heads Israel Aircraft Industries, said the Patriots are not totally effective against Iraq's Scud surface-to-surface missiles, but could defend an area like Tel Aviv "very nicely" and knock out "a high percentage" of incoming rockets.

A Patriot already has shot down an Iraqi Scud in Saudi Arabia. But each battery is designed to cover a relatively small airspace — not an entire city — and it is not known how they will fare against the bombardments aimed at Israel.

POWs: Iraqis captured during assault

(From 1A)

In a reference to the Iraqi missiles that have been fired into Israeli cities, Kelly said, "We have Scud watches going on ... and we think eventually we will be successful in reducing the Scud threat." He noted that Iraq fired eight Scuds on Friday and three on Saturday, indicating some success at knocking out missile units.

He said allied air bombers also were going after Iraq's Republican Guard, the elite troops in occupied Kuwait. "We're trying to hammer them just as hard as we can," he said, without giving any casualty count.

The Iraqi POWs were taken Friday evening by U.S. and Kuwaiti forces. The captives were Iraqi gunners who had fired on allied planes with anti-aircraft artillery and shoulder-fired surface-to-air missiles, Marine Gen. Johnston said.

"We've eliminated that surface-to-air threat," Johnston said at a news briefing at Central Command here. He said no Americans were killed or wounded in the mission. He said he didn't know if there were Iraqi casualties.

The military said Friday night's raid on nine offshore oil platforms in the northern Persian Gulf involved a U.S. guided missile frigate, Army helicopters and a Kuwaiti patrol boat.

The prisoners were brought aboard the USS Nicholas and the Kuwaiti patrol boat. A U.S. statement said the POWs "will be transferred to a United States Marine holding facility and eventually transferred to a prisoner-of-war camp."

Johnston said prisoner camps would be overseen by the Saudi Arabian government. Britain said earlier in the week that it was sending its elite Coldstream Guards to Saudi Arabia to administer POW camps.

At the briefing, the Marine general also disclosed that three more U.S. planes had been lost in the 24 hours ending at 7 a.m. EST Saturday, for a total of six since the air raids began early Thursday. He said one of the planes was Navy, another Air Force and third Marine. He said one of the downed planes was not the victim of hostile fire.

Nine crew members were missing. Kelly said in Washington that the Pentagon knew of no Americans taken prisoner by Iraq. British forces had lost two planes, the Italians one and the Kuwaitis one.

Kelly said U.S. pilots shot down five Iraqi planes, for a total of 10 since fighting began. He said six of the downed Iraqi planes were Soviet MiG-29s and three were French Mirage jets, all considered the most advanced planes the Iraqis have. The tenth Iraqi jet was believed to have been a MiG-23.

On Capitol Hill in Washington, Rep. Jim Chapman emerged from a briefing and said the number of dogfight shootdowns had risen from 10 to 14.

Two Patriot missiles, the U.S. anti-missile weapons, were fired mistakenly and destroyed, Johnston said. A Patriot missile shot down an Iraqi missile over Saudi Arabia early Friday. The general said he didn't know why the other two Patriots were fired.

Broadcast reports from Cable News Network and the British Broadcasting Corp. said Baghdad was pounded by heavy overnight attacks that knocked out its telephone communications, electricity and water supplies.

U.S. pilots said they were encountering more vigorous anti-aircraft fire than during earlier raids on the Iraqi capital.

The Pentagon said U.S. forces in the region were up to 460,000, broken down by service this way: 250,000 Army, 75,000 Navy, 85,000 Marines, and 50,000 Air Force.

MCHD: Local voters defeat tax rollback

(From 1A)

Mrs. Walger said CATA would continue to be a "watchdog" group, attending meetings of local taxing entities. "We're not going to run off with our tails between our legs," she said.

CATA member Joe Dawson said the group next would consider putting up candidates for the hospital district board and city council seats. Those elections will be held May 4.

Don Evans, a co-chairman of Citizens Against the Rollback Election, said concern that the nationwide taxpayer revolt would carry over into the local election changed CARE's anti-rollback strategy.

"We did redirect our focus as to what our effort was about," he said. "We looked at the issue not just from its financial standpoint but as the quality of health care the people of Midland deserve."

CARE co-chair Betty Sumner said the results indicated to her that "Midland is a community that takes care of its own."

Here are the precinct-by-precinct results of the election:

But for another Midlander, waiting on word from a loved one in the Middle East has become a painful experience.

Rosa Binder has not heard directly from her grandson, Jerry Wayne Chandler, a U.S. Army paratrooper, for months.

Because of the nature of his mission in the Persian Gulf, telephone calls to relatives back home have been scarce, Ms. Binder said.

"It's not a comfortable experience," she said. "I'm scared, always shaky. I always want to pick up the phone and talk to him."

Ms. Binder said she has been able to briefly take her mind off her worries by staying busy.

"I move the furniture. I prune the flower bed," she said. She also spends time with a local support group for those who have loved ones serving in the Persian Gulf.

RALLY: Gathering makes familes feel better about war

(From 1A)

County Chapter of Operation Desert Shield Support Group — was important to show that the American people stand behind its government.

"It makes me feel better because you turn on the news and see people marching and burning the flag," said Tomas Lynskey, 17, whose brother, Vance Lynskey, is with U.S. Army infantry troops in Saudi Arabia.

Tomas and his mother, Marilyn Lynskey, along with others with family members in the armed forces, tied yellow ribbons with names of their loved ones on trees in the plaza.

"I hope he doesn't get hurt ... I worry about him getting hurt because he is my big brother," Tomas said after assisting his mother adorn a tree with a ribbon.

Concern for military personnel consumed the rally.

"I worry and cry and make myself have positive thoughts that he'll be OK," said Linda O'Donnell, whose son, Tommy Tipton, serves with the U.S. Army in Saudi Arabia.

"He says he believes in what he's doing and has made me feel good about it," Ms. O'Donnell said.

Tipton's wife, Kim, who came to the rally with their 2½-year-old son, said she was pleased with the turnout and has faith in the U.S. military.

"It's good. I'm glad there are no protesters," she said.

Maria Cortes, mother of Jessy Cortes of the U.S. Army in Saudi Arabia, said the gathering of supporters made her feel better about the events in the gulf.

"I see a lot of people and they give me a lot of support for my son. He's 19 and the only one I have," Ms. Cortes said solemnly.

"I pray a lot. He said nothing was going to happen to him if I pray like when he was in Panama (during the invasion there)," Ms. Cortes said.

But the emotion of those attending the rally were more than words can express.

"I can't tell you how much I worry," said Janet Lyle, whose son, Chris, is with the U.S. Marines in the Middle East. Ms. Lyle drove to Midland for the rally with her husband, Robert, from Eunice, N.M.

The Lyles expressed concern about the anticipated land war since their son is part of ground forces.

"There is a lot more danger in ground forces than in the air," Ms. Lyle said. Ms. Lyle, who formed a support group in her hometown, said the drive to Midland for the rally was worthwhile.

In addition to hanging ribbons and being with others who came to show concern for U.S. troops, local dignitaries expressed their support.

"We are all here today to show our support and loyalty for these men and women standing in our place" for freedom, Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas said.

Speeches of hope, concern and patriotism were given by Special Services Staff Sgt. Roy P. Benavidez, who holds the Congressional Medal of Honor; John Philbeck, president of the Vietnam Veterans of the Permian Basin Memorial Committee; Midland County Judge Charles "Bro" Seltzer; and Mike Barker of KMID-TV, who emceed the event.

The rally began with a presentation of colors by Midland armed forces recruiters and the crowd singing the Star Bangled Banner — many with tears in their eyes.

As a reminder of support for Desert Storm, participants at the rally went home with T-shirts, hats, bumper stickers and pins supporting the war effort handed out by a non-profit national group, Citizens for Free Kuwait.

"We appreciate what the United States has done for us. We are dearly appreciative of U.S. support," said Sam Kobeissi, a representative of the organization.

Kobeissi, a U.S. citizen but a former resident of Kuwait, said the organization is a coalition of countries that support the troops.

OPERATION DESERT STORM

Draft feared even though resumption unlikely

By David Morris
Staff Writer

If the war in the Middle East leads to U.S. military conscription, 20-year-old Arnulfo Zamora doesn't plan to be drafted without a fight.

"I'd probably be a protester," said Zamora, president of Midland College's student government.

Whether his protests would entail draft evasion, Zamora wouldn't say. But he fears he might soon face that decision, even though officials have said a draft isn't likely soon.

"I am scared of the draft," Zamora said. "I've never held a gun in my hands before. To raise one against someone I didn't even know — that puts butterflies in my stomach."

Zamora isn't the only one who's nervous. Midland peace activist Mike Gray said draft counseling organizations nationwide have been swamped with calls in the wake of U.S. military intervention in the Persian Gulf.

"They have been very busy lately," Gray said. "Interest in a draft jumps up anytime we have an invasion somewhere. This particular outbreak has really overwhelmed our offices working on this."

Gray said he will attend an Austin draft-counseling workshop next weekend to sharpen his skills. He said the workshop, sponsored by the American Friends Service Committee, will focus on methods of obtaining conscientious-objector status.

Although a draft doesn't seem imminent, Gray said the time is now for potential conscientious objectors to begin documenting their cases.

"Our recommendation is that if a person believes he would like to be a conscientious objector, he should be thinking about these things before the draft," Gray said. "It's one thing that 18-year-olds don't think about until it's too late to do anything about it."

Some 14 million American men are registered for the draft, the U.S. Selective Service System reports, and about 1 million of those are Texans. Although the last draft ended in 1973, registration for all men between ages 18 and 26 has been required since 1980.

A draft would require Congressional and presidential approval. Officials said that once conscription is approved, the Selective Service System would need only three days to begin mailing draft notices.

"We are mobilization-ready," said Betty Brooks, the Dallas-based deputy director for the five-state Southwestern regional office of the Selective Service System.

The agency estimates it would be able to mobilize 100,000 inductees within 30 days of authorization.

Selective Service would conduct a lottery to determine the order in which men would be called, and Western Union Mailgrams would be sent to those selected.

Men would be drafted according to age, with those turning 20 in the year of the call-up drafted first. The next year's draft would draw from the new group of 20-year-olds. If additional men were needed, 21-year-olds and then those age 22 through 25 would be called up.

Since the pool of 20-year-old men from year to year is estimated at 2 million, Ms. Brooks said an expansion of the draft beyond that age group is unlikely.

Those selected in the lottery would have 10 days in which to file a claim for postponement, deferment or exemption from military service. Deferments or exemptions would be available to:

■ Conscientious objectors. People adequately demonstrating a moral, ethical or religious opposition to "participation in war in any form" would be assigned to civilian public service or non-combat military roles.

Gray said potential conscientious objectors should be able to document their beliefs — which must be "deeply held" — through written statements and letters of reference. He recommended that people seeking conscientious objector status register with a national organization, such as Philadelphia's Central Committee for Conscientious Objection. The committee's phone number is 215-545-4626.

■ Clergy. Ms. Brooks said draft boards are instructed to exempt only ministers who have congregations and whose pastoral duties are their primary vocation.

■ Ministerial students, who are deferred from service until the completion of their studies.

■ Men who can show that military service would result in hardship to their dependents.

■ Active members of the military and most veterans.

■ Certain resident aliens.

■ Certain elected officials, including the president, vice president and members of Congress.

After being drafted, a person may also be disqualified by the military on the basis of physical, mental or moral unsuitability.

Deferments for college students are no longer available, Ms. Brooks said.

Ms. Brooks said five-member local draft boards — there are 139 in Texas — would be responsible for determining registrants' status. An appeals process is available to draftees not satisfied with a board decision.

She said the draft boards, appointed by the governor, meet once a year to train.

Midland draft-board members could not be reached for comment last week. However, Ms. Brooks said board activities have not been stepped up in response to the war in the Persian Gulf.

"We continue to have no plans for the draft," she said. "People are very concerned about this and we would like to allay those fears as much as possible."

She pointed out that Selective Service issued a statement earlier this month which said neither Congress, the White House nor the Department of Defense has contacted the agency regarding a draft.

Hearings on the possible need for a draft had been scheduled for last week in the U.S. House of Representatives Armed Services Committee. However, a committee spokesman said Friday the hearings have been indefinitely postponed.

MC men concerned about possible call-up

By David Morris
Staff Writer

Officials insist that a military draft is not imminent. But draft-age men at Midland College expressed concern last week that the war in the Persian Gulf might eventually lead to a call-up.

For 18-year-old Casey Cook, the draft would be an inconvenience more than anything else.

"I'm having too much fun in college," said Cook, who is studying to be a paramedic. "I don't want to go right now."

Cook said the government ought to reinstate draft deferments for students "instead of taking kids out of school who are making something of themselves."

But he said he would go if his number was called and added that he supports U.S. troops already serving in the Persian Gulf.

"They're over there spilling their guts — they need encouragement."

Kirk Kelton, a 20-year-old business major, said he doubted the government would resort to a draft.

"I think that if we have close to a million reservists there isn't a need to reinstate the draft," he said.

"They have more than enough reserves," concurred Greg Barnhill, 21, a physical therapy major.

But Jaime Navarro, another 20-year-old business major, said he's been dreading the draft ever since U.S. troops were deployed in Saudi Arabia.

"I just have a feeling that I am going to go," he said. "I think it (the war) is going to last quite a long time, once it gets on the ground. The (Iraqi) army is so large."

Navarro's billiards companion, 20-year-old James Carrasco, said he was concerned about a possible draft but didn't think one was needed.

"From all indications, it looks like we're doing pretty good," he said. "Seeing that there's so many countries (allied against Iraq), I think it will end quickly."

Basil Leyva, 19, said the draft, if reinstituted, would be for a "good cause."

"If they draft me, I would go. I hope it doesn't get to that, but if it does, I wouldn't mind."

Physical education major Armando Trevino, 20, said being drafted would crimp his college and career plans.

"I've barely gotten into college," he said. "I don't want to go up there (to Saudi Arabia) and mess it up and get shot."

Arnulfo Zamora, 20, MC's student-government president, said he wasn't worried as much about being shot as he was about shooting someone else.

"Basically, the whole thing just scares me," he said.

Terrance Williams, 19, said U.S. technology — not draftees — are the key to victory in the Persian Gulf.

"I'm not concerned, because the United States has the weapons to end the war and I don't think they need to be drafting," he said.

Scott James, a 20-year-old psychology major, said he felt a draft might become necessary within a few months. But he has an artificial hip and said he doubts he could pass the physical if called up.

"I'd definitely regret it," he said.

Egypt imposes strict measures to protect monuments

GIZA PLATEAU, Egypt (AP) — Egyptian officials are imposing the toughest security precautions since World War II to protect the pyramids, the Sphinx and other monuments from possible terrorist attacks.

Cairo's three main museums are closed until further notice. Security has been reinforced at all tourist sites across the country. Access is restricted or forbidden, handbags checked, backpacks banned.

From Alexandria in the north to Luxor and Abu Simbel in the south, the police presence at monuments has been greatly increased.

Police said the measures were put into place Friday because of

U.S. fighter pilots recount facing enemy fire

By Ed Offley
Hearst News Service

WITH THE U.S. AIR FORCE IN SAUDI ARABIA — American fighter pilots safely back from air raids over Iraq tell harrowing stories of dodging enemy fire while dropping thousands of pounds of bombs on Iraqi targets.

"I had an aircraft run a radar intercept on me," said Col. Tom Lennon, commander of the 48th Tactical Fighter Wing based at Mountain Home Air Force Base, Idaho. "I had two or three surface-to-air missiles shot at me and a hell of a lot of anti-aircraft fire."

Lennon gave reporters a first-hand account of the initial air mission into Iraq when more than 50 aircraft — F-111F fighter bombers and EF-111 radar-jamming aircraft — dropped explosives on Iraqi airfields, hitting all but two targets.

One mission was aborted because of the failure of a navigation system. All returned safely to their station at a large Royal Saudi Air Force Base in the southwest part of the kingdom.

"I went against a maintenance hangar. We put our bomb right through the side door," Lennon said.

Organization of the complex mission was done by a "frag team" that studied the target area and threats posed by the enemy as well as means by which the threats could be suppressed.

"We had a plan, an air campaign, that we had been working on for a long time," the colonel said. "We had all our targets preplanned."

Lennon lead a wave of 53 aircraft into Iraq and personally led a flight of six F-111Fs against a large military airfield.

A Vietnam veteran who flew 390 combat missions in Southeast Asia, Lennon said he was over Iraqi airspace for about 40 minutes.

Capt. Jack Briggs, 26, from Novato, Calif., gave his account as he stepped from the cockpit of "Liberty II," an F-111F jet aircraft.

"You could hear other airplanes, other allied airplanes, but I didn't see any others," Briggs said. "I may have gotten some resistance but I didn't see it."

Briggs had taken off after sunset Thursday for an airfield south of Baghdad. He launched two laser-guided, 2,000-pound bombs on a shelter holding aircraft.

One went through the top, the other bomb in the side, Briggs said.

"The anticipation of it was just like before a big game," Briggs said. "Not really a game, because it is bigger than that. We were climbing back over the border. You look at each other and say, 'We did it. We're still here.' And we will probably do it again."

The F-111F avoids enemy radar and gunfire by terrain-masking low-level flights that can put it over the target at a speed of 550 knots at 200 feet above the ground.

Capt. Matt Warren, 30, of Burlington, Vt., said his target was a weapons storage bunker ringed with anti-aircraft batteries southeast of Baghdad. The site was destroyed by Warren's payload.

"I flew my first combat mission last night and it was awesome," Warren said. "We went in low on instruments across the border at 600 knots and we were getting some indications that Iraqi search radars were picking us up."

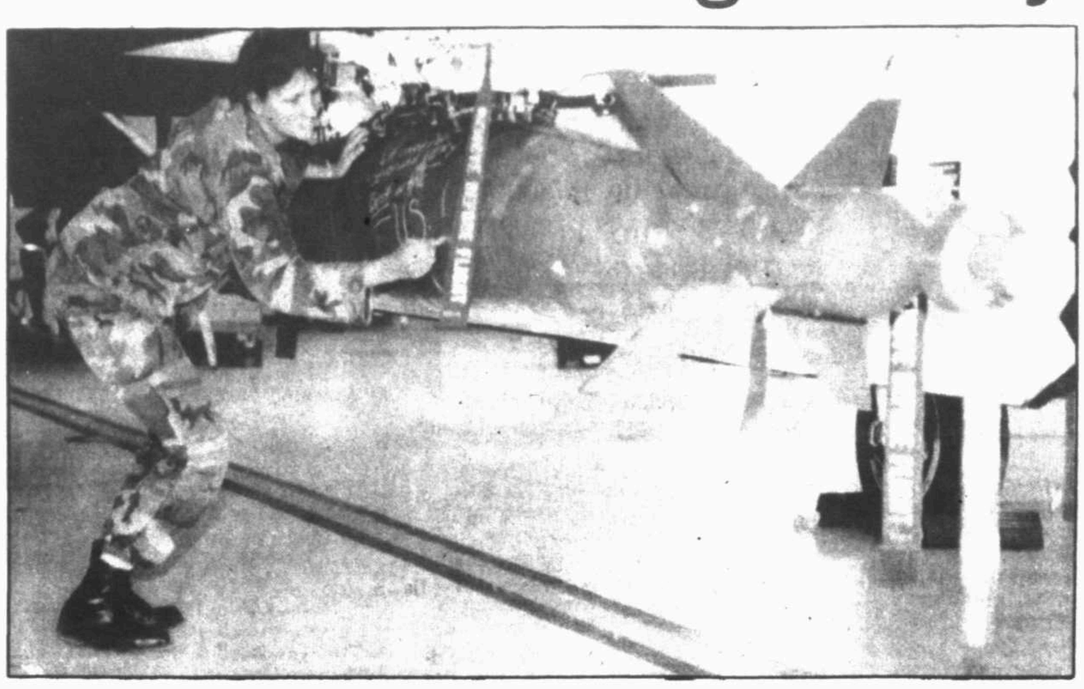
Warren said he climbed to 5,000 feet, dropped the bomb and turned away while keeping a laser on the target.

"Just being over enemy territory, knowing we're 200 miles from friendly territory and the only way out is to fly out or punch out, it's a tightness," Warren said.

The pilot had taped over his captain's bars with black tape to avoid reflecting light if he went down, and he sported a bright red shoulder patch bearing an F-111 and the phrase, "Baghdad Bash. Let's Party."

The officers were exhilarated by the opportunity to finally put into use the countless hours of training.

"Yesterday (Wednesday) I was a little anxious. All the anticipation. How long have we been training for this?" said Maj. Billy Wilhite, 36, a weapons systems officer from Monroe, La.



U.S. Air Force crewman Gina Maskunas of Killeen, Texas, writes a message to Saddam Hussein on the side of a bomb mounted on a jet at an airbase in Saudi Arabia. Maskunas is with the 37th Tactical Fighter Wing from Tonopah, Nev.

U.S. Marine prays toward Mecca

NORTHEASTERN SAUDI ARABIA (AP) — Lance Cpl. Harlow Fisher, like many U.S. Marines, makes sure that he finds time to say his prayers.

But unlike most of his comrades, Fisher says his prayers five times a day while on his knees bowing toward Mecca.

Fisher converted from Christianity to Islam a year ago, and the war has put him in a dilemma because he does not want to fight a fellow Muslim, Iraq's President Saddam Hussein.

"I told my commanding officer I never would have come over here if I didn't have a contract," said Fisher, 22, of Newburg, N.C. "I don't agree with the war, but Islam says you honor your contracts."

'Monty Python' helps pilots deal with tension

WITH BRITISH FORCES IN THE PERSIAN GULF (AP) — Britain's top fighter pilots have a different way of dealing with the threat of Iraq's Scud missiles.

On Friday they were told to expect an attack on their Saudi airbase at any moment. First they donned gas masks and chemical suits.

Then they reached for a videotape and suddenly Monty Python's Flying Circus was on the TV screen in their underground bunker. During the anxious moments when the missile was expected to strike, the Tornado F3 crews roared with laughter.

OPERATION DESERT STORM

War-watching becomes No. 1 social activity

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

War-watching apparently has topped the list of social activities in Midland.

As the media dedicates an unprecedented quantity of time and manpower to covering the blooming Persian Gulf conflict, the public closely monitors the developments.

From the opening moments last Wednesday, when people gathered around televisions and radios to tune in to the high-tech conflagration, the war has been an intriguing soap opera in the sand.

The conflict has taken the wind out of social sails, with many people staying home and assuming the role as armchair spectators, be it dazzled, afraid or horrified.

The pizza delivery business has soared, as have sales of anti-Iraq paraphernalia and Middle East maps, according to local merchants handling those commodities.

The compelling videos and reports broadcast via CNN and the three networks apparently have mesmerized and even captivated audiences. Newspapers, meanwhile, have devoted almost every inch of front-page space to war coverage, local and foreign.

But it was television that brought the pictures of tracers and anti-aircraft gun ordinance dancing in the night sky above Baghdad like hordes of moths around a street light.

There was video of the Patriot missile, launched by American forces in Saudi Arabia, gliding far off into the horizon and striking an Iraqi Scud missile. The ensuing explosion briefly turned the dark sky into bright orange.

'The only complaints we had were for the soap operas. When you start messing with soap operas, you've got problems.'

— Don Scott, KOSA news director

Meanwhile, haggard broadcast journalists wearing gas masks are shown scurrying around offices in Israel, speculating on what has happened, what has not happened and what might happen.

And in possibly the most dramatic video footage, there were pilot's-eye views of missiles and bombs making pinpoint strikes on Iraqi buildings through doors and air shafts.

Don Scott, KOSA Channel 7 news director and occasional anchor, said the broadcast media coverage has made the event "a couch-potato war."

"Breaking news stories are one thing television does very well," Scott said Saturday. "It's a very intensive blow-by-blow thing."

Only a handful of viewers complained to the station when war coverage was broadcast on the three networks 24 hours a day starting late Wednesday and ending Friday, he said.

"The only complaints we had were for the soap operas," he said. "When you start messing with soap operas, you've got problems."

Scott said one reason why people seem so hypnotized with the ever-changing Middle East events is that the prospect of war had been advertised for about 5½ months. It has been a top story ever since Iraq invaded Kuwait last Aug. 2, he said.

"An advertising agency couldn't do any better," Scott said.

Henry Sanchez, manager of The Bar, 606 E. Missouri Ave., said happy-hour customers flooded the establishment Wednesday following America's inaugural air strikes.

"Everybody was glued to the television and hung out a little longer than they normally would," he said.

Although televisions in The Bar normally are tuned to sporting events, Sanchez said the war quickly became the viewing of choice.

"They wanted me to turn down the volume on a basketball game," he said. "Everybody's talking about the war. Everybody thinks Bush is doing the right thing."

Bar patrons also were wowed by the array of deadly technology unleashed on Iraq and its armed forces in Kuwait.

Glen Buddin, manager of Dominoes Pizza outlet at 3302 W. Illinois Ave., said sales skyrocketed the night the war exploded.

"Our drivers are getting a lot more hours now," Buddin said. "From what the drivers are telling me, the people are watching their televisions and trying to keep up with everything.

"And the drivers are going up to the doors and asking the people inside if anything recent has happened."

Sharion Butler, Midland Park Mall Cinema assistant manager, said theater attendance fell sharply following the war's onset.

"Friday night was real slow," Ms. Butler said. "People were probably staying home and keeping pretty close to what's going on."

But business picked up Saturday, she said, with people apparently breaking from their television sets to get their minds off the war.

Nevertheless, reminders of the burgeoning battle could be found throughout Midland Park Mall on Saturday.

The wide-screen television at the nearby Fuddruckers restaurant was tuned to CNN.

Farther down the mall, Middle East and world maps were selling well at Waldenbooks, said Rick Broughton, assistant manager.

"People want to know where everything is located," Broughton said. "They hear a story and they want to look it up and see where it is."

On the lighter side of war, Spencers Gifts had stocked its shelves with the usual current-events gags.

Sanjuana Carrillo, Spencers manager, said the store Saturday sold out of T-shirts depicting a mugshot of Saddam Hussein with a target painted on his face.

The backside of the shirt showed the back of Saddam's head with a bloody bullet wound.

Ms. Carrillo said a number of people were buying the shirts so they could send them to loved ones serving in the Middle East.

Still available were other anti-Iraq T-shirts, bumper stickers and Saddam Hussein voodoo dolls.

Midlanders increasingly wary of traveling overseas

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Although flight cancellations have not become common in Midland, some travelers are increasingly wary of going overseas, according to Midland travel agents.

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff Writer

Midland travel agents said some local customers are putting their plans on hold in light of events in the Middle East.

War, which broke out shortly after the U.N. deadline passed on Jan. 15, has caused some cruise lines to reroute vessels as well as schedule changes among certain airlines.

In Midland, Holiday Travel's Julie Henkhouse reported two clients canceled European packages because of the war.

"It's not really a surprise," said Ms. Henkhouse. "But it would be if cancellations started mounting on domestic flights. I think people are going to be scared (to travel) for the next few weeks because all this (war) is so new."

On Friday, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported that reduced demand, coupled with the outbreak of war and terrorist activity had U.S. carriers studying the possibility of suspending certain flight schedules to Western Europe.

'A lot of people are worried, but we haven't seen any cancellations.'

— Mary Conder of Adventure Travel

However, airline industry officials denied such plans even exist.

Ms. Henkhouse said she had spoken with other travel agencies outside Midland who reported similar activity with cancellations and/or suspensions of travel plans because of the war with Iraq. "A lot of them are seeing the same types of things."

At Adventure Travel, Mary Conder said she has received travel inquiries, but as of yet, there were no cancellations to report.

"People have called us about refunds and things like that," she said. "A lot of people are worried, but we haven't seen any cancellations."

Ms. Conder said many plans involve travel at spring break, "which is one of our busiest times of the year."

However, Ms. Conder said she is seeing more hesitancy on the part of potential customers who look over brochures, but who aren't interested in booking a trip at this time.

"We have one big family headed for Europe and they're still going," she said. "But I'd imagine if it continues it (cancellations) could happen."

Sabrina Rodriquez with Midland Travel Agency said she has seen both cancellations and delays among concerned customers.

"We've seen it (bookings) slowing since the deadline passed. A lot of people feel it's just not safe to go now."

At Envoye Travel, Janelle Shewmake said while there haven't been any cancellations, one of its larger commercial accounts has issued travel restrictions because of the war.

Like other agents, Ms. Shewmake said she believed cancellations could occur if the war is prolonged.

"A lot of people right now are just making sure their flights are still flying to certain destinations."

At Great Destinations, owner Marge Edwards said much of what she's seeing started long before the war even began.

"We had a few inquires as far as people asking if we thought it was safe to go, but I've advised them to check with the airline they're traveling on."

Ms. Edwards said most of her customers are sticking with domestic travel plans. "At this point they're being cautious about Europe. There are just so many rumors about what could happen. I can understand why they (travelers) feel that way."

Vietnam vets have memories of their war

Associated Press

The missiles raining down on Iraq have triggered memories of war for some Texas veterans who fought two decades ago.

James McCoy of Lubbock, who served with the U.S. Army in Vietnam from 1968-69, received word of the Persian Gulf attack shortly before he headed to a discussion group for other Vietnam veterans.

"When I first heard of it, I got knots," McCoy said. "It brought back a lot of old memories."

Phil Price, a former Army platoon leader, served in Vietnam for about six months in 1969. Price, also from Lubbock, was sent home after being shot twice.

He said in a Friday afternoon interview from Killeen that the best thing about the Persian Gulf war is that President Bush is going in with force.

"Limited war is an oxymoron, second only to the phrase 'holy war,'" Price said.

Jesse Benitez, a veteran who served in the U.S. Army from 1970-71, said he believes Persian Gulf veterans will be treated differently than Vietnam veterans when they return. There is more worldwide support for U.S. military action this time than in Vietnam, Benitez noted.

"I don't think this (negative reaction) will happen this time around," Benitez said.

The early success of Operation Desert Storm has been yielding some dividends in the United States, as telephone operators at military recruitment centers in Beaumont have been busy.

"Limited war is an oxymoron, second only to the phrase 'holy war.'"

— Texas Vietnam veteran Phil Price

However, few of the prospective recruits have actually come in to sign up. That could change if the conflict escalates, a Lamar University psychologist predicts.

"If, God forbid, American kids start to die, there will be a perceived threat to national security," said Rolf Holtz, who researches group relations and competition.

"That threat will band citizens together more and increase recruitment."

Jews all over Texas were shaken, following Iraq's missile attack on Israel Friday and renewed attack early Saturday.

Rabbi Arthur Rutberg led a group of worshipers praying at a temple in Brownsville. "I realized it was important for us to share our feelings and ask for guidance from God," Rutberg said after the service.

Rutberg said news of Friday's attack on Israel caused "fear and thinking." The fear diminished when initial reports that some of the missiles contained nerve gas were refuted.

"I was very glad to see they weren't chemical," he said. "Actually, I was quite amazed at how non-lethal it was."

In San Antonio, about 100 Muslims gathered at a mosque to pray on the Islamic day of worship. But some of them had harsh words for the leaders of Kuwait and Saudi Arabia.

A speaker accused fellow Muslims in Kuwait and Saudi Arabia of "treacherous trickery" in allowing Westerners to use the Islamic nations as a staging area to fight other Muslims.

School teachers statewide worked to allay fears of youngsters bombarded with a flurry of war messages in the media.

"I'm just wondering if they're coming to our place," said first-grader Eric Jones from Crockett Elementary in Abilene. "And is it true that an airplane got hit?"

Unfortunately, not all teachers are well-versed on the Middle East conflict or the countries involved.

"A lot of our folks, I'm afraid to say are not fully conversant with Middle Eastern geography," said Bob Baker, president of Classroom Teachers of Dallas, a professional union representing 2,000 members.

Members of a family support group held an emergency meeting in Waco to discuss the sleepless nights and the questions their children have been asking about the war.

Beverly Williams, the group's founder, said people with loved ones fighting in the Middle East need each other more than ever.

"We are family now," Ms. Williams told the group Friday.

Tentmakers anxious to leave war zone

Hearst News Service

AL KHOBAR, Saudi Arabia — Young men from England, Australia and New Zealand are being paid handsomely to erect giant tents for U.S. soldiers near the front lines, but most of them are anxious to leave the war zone and get back home.

At least 25 of the tentmakers are in Saudi Arabia, most of them waiting out the crisis in hotels while still being on the U.S. payroll. The men had been providing the muscle and expertise to erect the giant carnival tents used to house such Army facilities as medical supplies, PX shops or AT&T phone exchanges.

"They're dangerous to put up," explained Matthew Edmonds, 23, of England. "Big and heavy. They need people who know what they're doing."

Manufactured by the Germany-based Roder Co., the free-standing tents measure 16 by 90 meters and are made from aluminum frames covered with plastic canvas.

The men would not say what they were paid, but offered this clue.

"We make almost as much in a day as the average soldier makes in a month," said Tim Clark, 22, from Australia.

Despite their generous wages, all but seven of the men decided early last week to leave this desert kingdom when the shooting war began in earnest.

But they didn't make it out.

"If the bombing started three hours later, we'd be in Jeddah," said Neal Giddings, 25, of Australia, of the western Saudi city that offers direct flights to Great Britain and beyond. "We meant to fly out of Dhahran at 6 a.m. and we had tickets to London. The airport closed at 4 a.m."

Giddings said the seven others who stayed with American units were still at sites near the Saudi border with Iraq, presumably continuing to put up tents. For the moment, the men trying to leave were not getting much help.

The British Embassy was reluctant to help them at first, they said, because officials considered the workers to be the responsibility of the U.S. Army that hired them. But the Army, concerned about liability for their safety, refused to fly the workers out.

In the meantime, the men were waiting out the hostilities in a hotel in Al Khobar in the kingdom's Eastern Province. Still on the U.S. payroll, they're spending their time playing ten-bill bowling for entertainment.

The men had left their work site near the front lines just before the U.S. aerial bombardment began, moving to an Army tent site further south. That night, a Scud missile from Iraq intercepted by a U.S.-made Patriot missile exploded over their quarters as the men waited in an air raid shelter nearby.

That frightening experience, coupled with heavy rains that turned their camp into a "giant bog" and rats that ate the foam off their stereo headphones, drove them to the hotel.

"We moved here because we didn't feel safe at the camp," Clark said.

SPHINX: Officials tighten security

fears Iraqi President Saddam Hussein might send saboteurs to bomb the monuments as punishment for Egyptian opposition to Iraq's takeover of Kuwait.

"These monuments belong not just to the people of Egypt but to the world," said a senior tourist police officer, who refused to be identified under Interior Ministry rules. "What would the world think if we let something happen?"

The rules were put into effect so abruptly that tourists and travel agents sometimes found themselves unsure what they could and couldn't do.

On Saturday at Giza Plateau, a British tourist barred from the Sphinx pointed to Cheops' Pyramid and asked a police officer: "Do you really think I can bomb something as big as that pyramid with a pack of cigarettes?"

The new rules allow tourists to walk around but not to enter the pyramids and other monuments on the plateau.

Latvians honor slain 'martyr'

■ Latvia's president denies a pro-Moscow group's claim of transferring the nationalist government's power into 'its own hands.'

RIGA, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Tens of thousands of Latvians marched through gray, wet streets Saturday behind the body of a man who officials of the independence-minded republic say was killed by Soviet soldiers.

The official Soviet news agency reported that a pro-Moscow group, the Latvian National Salvation Committee, claimed it was dismissing the nationalist government and taking power. But Latvia's president said the report was false.

Before the 2½-mile-long procession for Roberts Murnieks began its slow passage over the damp cobblestones of the Latvian capital, a three-hour funeral service was held in St. Albert's Roman Catholic church.

Weeping women lined the sidewalks to place flowers beside the embalmed body, which was carried atop the coffin.

"He is our martyr, a martyr for Latvian independence," said Ina Borisenora, a student. "Any one of us could have been in his place."

Murnieks, a 39-year-old chauffeur for the Latvian transport minister, was shot Wednesday while driving a government car. The Latvian government said he was killed during a rampage by "black beret" troops controlled by the Soviet Interior Ministry.

The Tass news agency reported late Saturday that the Latvian National Salvation Committee had proclaimed it was transferring all governmental power "into its hands" and dismissing the Latvian parliament and government. The Tass statement was read on the Soviet evening news program "Vremya."

But Latvian President Anatoljs Gorbunovs dismissed the statement as a "typical example" of disinformation by the Soviet media.

"All of the government power of the republic of Latvia and the other administrative institutions continue to work within the framework of the laws of the republic of Latvia," Gorbunovs said.

He said the Latvian public prosecutor will consider criminal charges against the committee. Gorbunovs said similar statements attributed to the committee has been made earlier in the week.

Three days before the Latvia shooting, Soviet soldiers stormed the radio-television center in the neighboring Baltic republic of Lithuania, acting in the name of a similar pro-Moscow group there. Fourteen people were killed and 230 injured.

The deaths were the first since the standoff in the Baltics began early last year. Lithuania declared independence on March 11, and Latvia followed suit May 4. Estonia, the third Baltic republic, has pledged to restore full independence gradually.

Alexander Bessmertnykh, the new Soviet foreign minister, "expressed concern" Friday to U.S. Ambassador Jack Matlock that U.S. media and Congress were portraying the conflict in a way that could aggravate the situation, Foreign Ministry spokesman Vitaly Churkin said in Moscow.

On the day Murnieks was killed, the Soviet soldiers shot up a truck, set fire to cars and stopped vehicles randomly at main entrances to Riga. They frisked and terrorized people, and fired on an ambulance carrying a sick woman and two children.

When Murnieks drove by in a gray Volga, Latvian officials say, the black berets opened fire with automatic rifles. They say a bullet hit Murnieks, the lone occupant of the car, in the head and he died in a hospital soon afterward.

At the funeral service, thousands of people filed past the body, which still had bloodstains under the fingernails and in the nostrils.

A choir sang selection from Handel's "Messiah," a Mass by Chopin, and a requiem by a modern Latvian composer.

As the music faded, a man howled in grief by the bier. It was Janis Kuk, a colleague of Murnieks.

Tamara Maskalnynja, a close friend of the dead man, tried to comfort Kuk. "One simply cannot kill innocent bystanders," she said. "It happens nowhere in the world."

Outside, motorists sounded their horns for one minute to honor Murnieks.

A newlywed couple walked slowly to the Freedom Monument in downtown Riga, which was turned into a shrine for Murnieks soon after his death. The bride placed her wedding bouquet beside a photograph of Murnieks.

Latvian men sat by log fires not far away, guarding government buildings.

In front of the parliament, a huge crane deposited concrete blocks that were cemented together in a protective barrier against military attack. The blocks replaced heavy construction machinery that had served as barricades earlier in the week.

Citizens of Riga and people from the countryside have guarded buildings in the city for nearly a week. In Lithuania also, fortifications have been erected around that republic's parliament building in case of an assault by Soviet troops.

The Lithuanian newspaper Respublika said Saturday the National Salvation Committee there is led by Kuozas Jermalavic, ideology chief of the Lithuanian Communist Party Central Committee; Jonas Gureckas, a former Lithuanian parliament secretary; and KGB and army officers.

What Soviet army has done, could do worries Lithuanians

KAUNAS, Lithuania (NYT) — At the home base of a Soviet Army paratroop division here in Lithuania's second city, the garrison museum features proud displays of the division's role in suppressing democracy movements in Hungary in 1956 and Czechoslovakia in 1968.

The exhibit includes combat maps of "counter-revolutionary" positions in the Eastern European capitals, and a tribute to a division officer decorated for liberating a theater in Budapest.

"There, they were putting down democracy," Lt. Col. Ivan I. Babichev, a regimental commander, said when asked to compare those earlier actions with recent moves against the pro-independence government of Lithuania. "Here there is no democracy. It is a real fascist dictatorship."

Yet Kaunas remains virtually untouched by the violence that has left at least 15 people dead in Vilnius, the Lithuanian capital, and officers at the division here insist that talk of an effort to overthrow the elected government or impose martial law is ridiculous.

A visit to Kaunas, 65 miles northwest of the capital, shows the calculated limits of what Lithuania's army-backed antagonists have done so far, and the potential at their disposal.

On the one hand, the crackdown on independence seems to have stopped at the city limits of Vilnius.

Although the war in Iraq creates the perfect distraction, there have been no moves to impose direct Kremlin rule on the republic.

The local government of Kaunas, elected last year on a strong independence platform, says it has experienced none of the strikes, demonstrations, or ultimatums that made up an orchestrated intimidation campaign against the government of President Vytautas Landsbergis.

The National Salvation Committee, the shadowy Communist Party front group in whose name the Vilnius attacks were carried out, has not been heard from here.

Six days after troops stormed Vilnius television and radio installations, purportedly because they were fanning anti-Soviet hatred, the broadcast sites in this city continue their pro-independence transmissions and have sharply expanded their coverage behind barricades of trucks and buses.

On the other hand, the city is home for a division of about 10,000 Soviet soldiers and many retired veterans seething with resentment towards the independence government, and confident of their power.

"If this had been a real coup, we could have taken the whole place in 15 minutes," Babichev said over dinner with a group of American correspondents in the officers' mess hall. "These barricades are nothing to us. And we know where the TV tower is."

The paratroopers here, by all accounts, played no role in the Vilnius assaults, which were conducted by soldiers from Pskov, supplemented by troops of the Soviet Interior Ministry.

Officers here speculated that the military command preferred to use troops with experience in putting down nationalist protests in Georgia and Azerbaijan, and also hoped to avoid heightening tensions between the garrison and the local citizenry.

But the officers here are representative of the grievances of the military at large in a period of retrenchment and ethnic division.

About two-thirds of the division consists of ethnic Russians, Ukrainians, and Byelorussians, most of whom do not speak Lithuanian.

With the resurgence of Lithuanian national pride over the last few years, they say their wives have trouble finding work and there are not enough spaces for their children in Russian-language schools. They say they are sneered at or insulted when they speak Russian in public and condemned as an occupying army.

Officers express indignation at the new Lithuanian leaders for making heroes of guerrillas who sided with the Nazis against Soviet occupiers here in World War II.

"They make you feel all the time that you are an alien," said Dmitri Aleksandrov, a 22-year-old lieutenant from the Kuibyshev region of Russia.

The angriest complaint is that local officials have limited the army's access to public housing, which is traditionally provided to garrisons.

Disarmament deadline extended

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Slovenia and Croatia defied federal army warnings to disarm their militias by midnight Saturday, and the deadline was extended.

A terse report from the state news agency Tanjug said, without elaboration, that the collective federal presidency extended the deadline until midnight Monday "follwing a Croatian request."

Yugoslavia's federal army had ordered Slovenia and Croatia to disarm "illegal paramilitary forces." The republics contend their militias are legal.

Stipe Mesic, Croatia's representive in the federal presidency, said at a meeting Saturday that his republic is "determined to keep its defense in its own hands" and see that the army "cannot execute a military coup."

Croatia and Slovenia have center-right governments, as the result of Communist Party losses in elections last spring. They advocate turning Yugoslavia into a loose confederation of allied states.

Communist-ruled Serbia and its ally, Montenegro, want to maintain the centralized federation. They are supported by the federal army, which the Communists dominate.

Resigns

Nikolai Petrakov, a former top economic adviser to Mikhail Gorbachev who resigned Friday, said Saturday his resignation became final after he signed a public letter accusing the Kremlin of using "criminal" acts to bolster a "regime in its death throes." Gorbachev at first rejected the resignation, but later called Petrakov and accepted it after the economist protested against the bloody tank assault last Sunday on a Lithuanian broadcast center.

Anger, confusion prevail at Eastern ticket counters

N.Y. Times News Service

Elizabeth Rosa arrived at Newark International Airport early Saturday morning with her luggage and a confirmed reservation for an Eastern Airlines flight to San Juan.

"At the counter, they told me they no longer exist," she said, still looking a little stunned.

A ticket on another airline was not available until eight hours later and then only at double the cost, but the 41-year-old paralegal from West Hartford, Conn. couldn't help expressing some sorrow, along with anger.

"I've always been an Eastern customer," she said, "and after 62 years it's kind of hard to say goodbye."

But hers was not the typical logic at airports in the New York area Saturday where many passengers had their travel plans disrupted by Eastern's abrupt decision the night before to go out of business.

Confusion, frustration and anger were the emotions of the day as busy phone lines at Eastern and long lines at ticket counters tested a passenger's patience.

Many were able to book flights on other airlines, mostly American, which said it would honor all Eastern tickets. But transferring tickets often meant waiting in lines for more than two hours and settling for a standby departure or else doling out hundreds of dollars more for a confirmed seat.

What struck many was the suddenness of the decision. Flights were being confirmed until Friday evening, and some who missed the television news were not braced as they strode toward the empty Eastern counters Saturday.

Denise DeLuke, for instance, not only had her flight to Palm Beach confirmed Friday but her vegetarian meal on board.

"They said, 'No problem,'" said Ms. DeLuke, 30, of Stamford, Conn., a computer saleswoman who waited on line for 2 hours and 20 minutes at the American Airlines counter at La Guardia after striking out with TWA, Continental and USAir. "It's crazy. It ruined my whole vacation. I feel like crying."

Eastern in market for white knight

MIAMI (AP) — Eastern Airlines trustee Martin Shugrue said Saturday "the final chapter may not yet have been written" for the 62-year-old grounded carrier, but he offered little hope.

"I don't term anything permanent," Shugrue told reporters and employees gathered at company headquarters. "There continue to be serious expressions of interest by financially qualified" investors or buyers of Eastern assets.

Eastern, which stopped service at midnight Friday, remains in Chapter 11 bankruptcy reorganization, and Shugrue said efforts to reorganize were continuing with no deadline for liquidation.

Eastern owes more than $3 billion, including $2 billion to unsecured creditors, and even the nation's strongest carriers are reporting losses during an industrywide recession.

A crippling strike that began March 4, 1989, hurt Eastern, Shugrue said, but he said "events beyond our control" such as the Persian Gulf crisis, soaring fuel costs and continued, damaging speculation about Eastern's future ruined chances for a turnaround.

Shugrue had urged unsuccessfully that President Bush intervene to help airlines after fuel costs tripled in the aftermath of Iraq's Kuwait invasion. He noted crude prices dropped sharply last week and that such a drop a few weeks ago could have kept Eastern flying.

"We are a nation at war," Shugrue said, adding that Eastern, with nearly 160 aircraft, would be talking to Defense Department officials about their need for commercial aircraft to help with cargo needs in Operation Desert Storm.

Shugrue said all major carriers were honoring Eastern tickets at least partly, and he singled out American Airlines and Continental Airlines for fully honoring Eastern tickets.

Lujan's son convicted of rape

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (AP) — The son of Interior Secretary Manuel Lujan Jr. was convicted Saturday of rape, sodomy and burglary by an Alexandria Circuit Court jury after 16 hours of deliberations.

Robert Jeffrey Lujan, 28, of Alexandria, was acquitted of using a weapon in connection with those crimes, according to Randolph Senger, deputy commonwealth attorney. The jury recommended a 20-year prison sentence for all three counts.

The case went to the jury Friday after defense attorneys and prosecutors said a shotgun recovered from the Cabinet official's apartment was the key piece of evidence. The jurors deliberated for eight hours on Friday and another eight on Saturday.

Lujan remained in custody until sentencing, which has been scheduled for Feb. 21 in Alexandria.

Education commissioner candidates pared to 7

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas education officials Saturday started interviewing seven finalists for the position of state education commissioner to oversee the $14 billion per year public school system that is under a court challenge.

"Whoever it is, needs to be knowledgeable about the problems. It's going to be hard for us to educate someone," State Board of Education Chairman Monte Hasie said.

In 1989, the Texas Supreme Court declared the public school financing system unconstitutional because it allows disparities in funding between property-poor and wealthy school districts.

After four special sessions, the Legislature passed a school funding bill, but a state district judge said the system was still unconstitutional. That case is now pending before the state Supreme Court.

Hasie of Lubbock, said the new commissioner will have "to pull the people of Texas together and get behind the educational process."

There are about 3.5 million students in the state's 1,052 public school districts.

"We need someone who is somewhat of a visionary perhaps to come up with new ideas and help us," he said.

The remaining candidates were scheduled to be interviewed individually over two days, Hasie said. He said the interviews will last about 1½ hours each and be conducted by board members. Representatives of Gov. Ann Richards and Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock will attend the interviews, he said.

Hasie said the Education Board may make a selection late Sunday. The board's nomination will be submitted to Richards, who will appoint the commissioner. The state Senate then will consider whether to confirm her appointment.

The post is being vacated by Education Commissioner W.N. Kirby who decided to retire after nearly six years as commissioner. Hasie said Kirby makes about $112,000 per year.

One finalist for the job, Robert Spillane, division superintendent for Fairfax County public schools in Virginia, decided not to seek the post, Hasie said. Hasie said he did not know the reason why Spillane dropped out.

"We need someone who is somewhat of a visionary. . . ."

'Human life' amendment rejected

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Voters in this heavily Roman Catholic city resoundingly rejected a city charter amendment Saturday that would have declared "human life begins at conception."

The "Human Family Amendment" was strongly backed by abortion opponents who placed the referendum on the ballot through a petition drive. For more than a year, abortion battles have consumed this Gulf Coast city of nearly 300,000. The city's name is Latin for "body of Christ."

The proposal had the active support of Catholic Bishop Rene Gracida, who has excommunicated two abortion clinic employees and a doctor who performs abortions.

Of 30,007 voters who went to the polls, 18,487, or 62 percent, were opposed to the measure and 10,775, or 38 percent, favored it.

Among its opponents were Citizens United for Charter Integrity, whose treasurer, Helen Wilk, described the proposed amendment as "an effort to impose a personal religious belief on the citizens of Corpus Christi."

Mrs. Wilk said she was worried that an amended city charter would be used to promote city ordinances regulating abortion.

Tracy Cassidy, chairwoman of the Human Family Committee, contended that the amendment was merely a statement of principle with no force of law.

"It's just giving recognition to the victims of the pro-abortion morality in this city," she said Friday.

Drawing on language from the Declaration of Independence, the initiative spells out rights that apply to "all members of the human family, regardless of age, development, physical or mental condition, race, or natural origin."

It concludes that "human life begins at conception and continues until natural death."

Gracida was one of the first to sign the petition last summer, and the bishop has urged parishioners to support it. In less than two weeks, the petition obtained more than the required 6,500 signatures.

Those arrested trying to block access to abortion clinics included former city Councilman Cliff Zarsky, who was sentenced Jan. 9 to 30 days in jail for trespassing at a clinic where abortions are performed, and Sheriff Jim Hickey's wife.

Hickey himself said last year that he would not send deputies to assist city police in removing anti-abortion protesters from clinic doorways.

The Human Family Committee has raised about $60,000 in campaign funds, much of which was spent on TV commercials.

"If it doesn't have any meaning, why are they spending that kind of money?" asked Mrs. Wilk, whose Charter Integrity group has raised about $15,000.

Mrs. Cassidy contended the referendum provided an opportunity for those on both sides of the abortion issue to express their beliefs without having to join in protests or demonstrations.

Opponents said the amendment could open the city to a spate of lawsuits to test its legal weight.

And saying human life "continues until natural death" could bring lawsuits from people who fear their "living wills" asking not to be kept alive by artificial means might be invalidated by the charter, said Amanda Stukenberg, president of South Texans for Choice, an abortion rights group.

But Dr. Hector Garcia, founder of the American GI Forum, a Hispanic civil rights organization, sent out 10,000 letters urging support for the amendment because he believes it will force the city to provide better health care for the poor.

Forest inventory in the works

■ U.S. Forest Service will work with a private organization to inventory four national forests in East Texas.

The forests are home to three endangered species of animals — the red cockaded woodpecker, the bald eagle, and the alligator — and one plant — the Navasota ladies' tresses.

By Jennifer Dixon
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Deep in the heart of the national forests of Texas are bogs dotted with rare insect-eating plants, a flower called Navasota ladies' tresses, endangered red-cockaded woodpeckers, alligators and bald eagles.

While the four forests are key to the preservation of a rich array of threatened or endangered animals and plants, they're also rich with timber that provides much-needed income to surrounding counties in East Texas.

While environmentalists and the Forest Service have wrestled over the conflicting missions of the national forests, the government and The Nature Conservancy have now agreed to work together to inventory and monitor fish, wildlife and plant species in the Sam Houston, Angelina, Davy Crockett and Sabine national forests.

Under a memorandum of understanding signed last week by the Forest Service and The Nature Conservancy, the two organizations will seek to inventory, maintain and improve biological diversity in national forests and other lands, including those owned and managed by the conservancy, nationwide.

The Forest Service manages 191 million acres — an area larger than Texas — of national forests and grasslands from Alaska to Puerto Rico.

Forest Service Chief F. Dale Robertson said the national forest lands have become key to the continued survival and recovery of many species that are threatened, endangered or in need of special attention.

Cooperative projects planned under the agreement include the inventory and survey of fish, wildlife and plant species on the national forests and grasslands; identification of specific areas for research; monitoring ecological change; conserving and restoring critical habitats; education programs; and development and implementation of forest management plans for individual national forests.

Much of the activity will focus on protecting threatened, endangered and sensitive plant and animal species.

In Texas, the National Forest Service is currently revising its forest management plan and "is assessing everything we have out there — endangered plants, critters, and certainly, The Nature Conservancy will be working with us on that inventory," said Carl Gidlund, spokesman for the Forest Service in Texas.

The Forest Service has about 600,000 acres of forest and grasslands in Texas, Gidlund said. The forests are home to three endangered species of animals — the red cockaded woodpecker, the bald eagle, and the alligator — and one plant — the Navasota ladies' tresses. There are another 34 environmentally sensitive plants and 19 sensitive critters, including one insect, fish, birds, reptiles and mammals.

Gidlund said the Forest Service's mission includes both protecting and managing natural resources and producing revenue for local counties and the federal government.

Texas received $2.35 million from the Forest Service in fiscal 1990. By law, 25 percent of the revenues collected by the Forest Service from the use of national forest system lands and resources are returned to the states where the lands are located. The states use the funds for schools and roads.

The Nature Conservancy, Gidlund said, would bring its expertise to the Forest Service, along with "an objective, outside look at the forests, and they bring ... their balanced perspective. ... They recognize that logging simulates natural forces to some degree, like tornadoes or hurricanes, and they also realize we have a charter to produce revenues for counties and the U.S. government."

One concern in Texas is the restoration of the long-leaf pine community.

Ike McWhorter, The Nature Conservancy's East Texas land steward, said the long-leaf pine communities in the East Texas forests are home to bogs teeming with unusual species, such as the insect-eating pitcher plants.

Because of logging, however, the long-leaf pine communities are rapidly disappearing, and the bogs are very sensitive and could be easily destroyed, McWhorter said.

Volunteers fight toxic waste

■ Volunteers organize to protect environment

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING — An uprising, sometimes quiet and sometimes vocal, is brewing in and beyond Big Spring to protect the environment and, more specifically, to prevent the burning, dumping and burying of toxic and hazardous wastes in neighboring Mitchell County.

"We are working for much bigger aims," said Marilyn Read, a spokesman for VOICE, Volunteers Organized to Implement a Clean Environment. "We want legislation that will protect Texas forever from out-of-state polluters for profit. We are taking on the big guys."

VOICE and other groups, including Texans Against Pollution (TAP) in Mitchell County and Scurry County Residents Against Pollution (SCRAP), are trying to block the development of a proposed 5,000-acre landfill in a pastoral setting near Iatan Flats in western Mitchell County.

The site is between Big Spring and Colorado City.

The Pittsburgh, Pa.-based National Waste and Energy Development Inc. (NWED), which is proposing the landfill development, last March secured a host agreement from the Mitchell County Commissioners' Court in Colorado City to develop the site.

Since then, organizations and individuals, including Mrs. Read and VOICE President Clara Justice of Coahoma, are laying groundwork to challenge the project.

But before NWED can begin development, it must secure operating permits from governmental

Role models say stay in school

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

A youth conference emphasizing the importance of education for minorities drew some 120 freshman high school students on Saturday.

The conference, "Step Up To Success," was sponsored by the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce and took place at Midland College.

"It is to encourage them to stay in school and once they graduate to continue in higher education," said Elvia Hernandez with MHCC.

"It shows them there are people in the business community who care about them and want them to prosper," Ms. Hernandez added.

The program used role models to help relate to minority students that they can succeed through education.

"We find the high percentage of dropouts astonishing and hope this will help reduce that rate," Ms. Hernandez said.

As part of the conference, students attended various seminars, listened to speakers, and were treated to lunch and an afternoon of bowling.

Drug abuse was the topic of one seminar hosted by representatives from Glenwood Hospital. Drug abuse education is particularly important, Ms. Hernandez said, because drugs often cause low self-esteem and a lack of interest in education and studying.

Another obstacle for minority success addressed was confronting the myth that being a minority or poor can prevent a prosperous future. "We want them to know that they can do it and be successful and break out of that cycle" of poverty, Ms. Hernandez said.

Finances were further discussed in a seminar that informed students how to get financial aid, grants and scholarships for college. The students were taught, "Where to go, who to ask — that there is no excuse not to go to school," Ms. Hernandez said.

Finally, students had the chance to listen and ask questions of a panel of former students of the Step Up To Success program. The panel, made up of seniors in high school, related to the students as part of their own peer group.

Yvette Hargrove, 15, a Lee freshman, said she came to the seminar with the intention of having fun.

She did have fun, but there was more.

"I didn't expect as much as I have" received, she said.

"It helps you to know what you want for your future, to set your goals and what to expect," she said.

"It let me know that education is the most important thing in life if you want to achieve all your goals," she added. "It helps

Residents take time to visit wall and reflect on the Vietnam War

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

While the war in the Middle East remains very much on people's minds, local and area residents took time this weekend to reflect on the past as they flocked to the "Vietnam Wall Experience," a replica of the memorial in Washington D.C.

The wall began its three-day stay in Midland Friday morning at Resthaven Memorial Park.

And, although many people have attempted to draw a correlation between the current battle in the Persian Gulf and Vietnam, most visitors to the replica this weekend dismissed that connection.

"There will never be another Vietnam," said J.D. Fawler, 40.

"I wish we had Bush back then. There wouldn't be as many names," he said as he looked upon the wall.

As for Desert Storm, "Let the military handle it," he said. "Not the politicians."

Friday's snowy weather didn't deter Fawler from paying his respects to those who died in the jungles of Vietnam.

"These people braved a lot more," he said, pointing to the wall.

Likewise, Jerry Wall, 42, a Vietnam veteran who assisted visitors to find names, said inclement weather on Friday

Midlanders study court ruling on desegregation

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Court-ordered school desegregation has been back in the news — both in Midland and at the national level.

Hundreds of Midlanders attended a school board meeting Jan. 9 to show their support for Midland's current desegregation plan or "cluster" system. They were voicing their concerns about alleged attempts to alter the school district's present system of integration.

Persons in favor of disbanding the cluster system — which divides students into groups or clusters of three to four schools — have spoken out in favor of neighborhood schools.

Then on Tuesday, the U.S. Supreme Court made it easier for school districts to end court-ordered desegregation in favor of neighborhood schools.

By a 5-3 vote in a case from Oklahoma City, the justices ruled that federal court supervision of once segregated school districts can be terminated if the school board has obeyed the desegregation decree and if "the vestiges of past discrimination had been eliminated to the extent practicable."

The problem with the ruling, according to some educators, is that it was made to solve Oklahoma City schools' unique situation and the ruling left many issues unresolved.

The justices did not define how to decide when "vestiges" of segregation have been eliminated, or what they meant by all "practicable" steps, leaving the lower courts to draw inferences from that decision on a case-by-case basis.

In an Associated Press report, the National Education Association — the nation's largest teacher's union — released a statement saying "We are hopeful that school districts around the country will not view (the) decision as a green light to seek dissolution of existing school desegregation orders."

Dianne Anderson, a Midlander who has spoken out publicly against the cluster system, said, "We don't know where we stand on the Supreme Court ruling just yet. We haven't seen the actual ruling or what it says."

In previous Reporter-Telegram reports, Ms. Anderson has blamed the cluster system, where pupils are bused to cluster schools in grades fourth through sixth, for helping to cause a high dropout rate and low standardized test scores.

Ms. Anderson, who was an organizer of the anti-cluster organization Citizens for Better Education, has said her group is willing to go to court to see its goals realized.

FOCUS (Federation of Citizens United to Serve), a group supporting the cluster system has also vowed to go to court to keep the current system.

Despite the recent Supreme Court ruling, FOCUS Chairman Alma Marshall said, "Our position hasn't changed. We are prepared to fight for our cluster system or something better. We will not go backwards and we will take this issue to the streets if we have to."

Ms. Marshall called the recent

As with the assassination of President Kennedy in 1963, most of us no doubt will always remember where we were when we first learned that the United States had launched an air attack against Iraq.

It's not something you easily forget. War never is.

As for me, I was in a meeting. It was being held in the newspaper's upstairs conference room and a group of us were discussing a long-range project that had nothing to do with Saddam Hussein, Scud missiles, B-52s, Syria, Israel or those dreaded gas masks.

I had just finished making a point about some subject that somehow seems totally meaningless now, when a co-worker stuck her head in the room and motioned for me.

I acknowledged her with a slight nod and slipped quietly out of the room.

The expression on her face told me this wasn't your ordinary courtesy call. She was breathing heavily and there was a sense of urgency in her voice. She uttered five words. I will always remember them.

"I think it has started."

Nothing more needed to be said. I knew the rest. America was at war.

We made a mad dash to the newsroom where we stood in front of the television set. A crowd had already gathered. News spreads quickly when tragedy is at hand.

Very few words were spoken. We just watched, overwhelmed by the enormity of it all. For days we had been told what to expect, but somehow that didn't fully prepare us for what we were now seeing — and hearing — on the screen.

The sound of bombs exploding ran chills up our spines. Suddenly, our worst fears were coming true. There would be no surprise back-room deal mediated by a third party. Saddam would not miraculously come to his senses at the last minute and withdraw his troops. And, the U.S., running out of patience, would indeed launch an all-out air attack.

The inevitable, just as the so-called "experts" had been telling us, was now at hand. The man on TV was making it official.

There was work to be done. After all, this is a newspaper. It was shortly before 6 p.m. and the next day's edition was due off the press in seven short hours. We would have to kick it into gear. Interviews had to be conducted. Stories written. Decisions finalized. History was being made and we were there to report on it.

You could feel the adrenaline beginning to flow. As the old saying goes, a true journalist lives for the "big story."

But, first — for a brief moment, at least — we just stood there in stunned silence and let the reality of it all sink in.

War. There would be no turning back.

I am 38 years old.

I missed World War II altogether and was much too young to remember anything about the Korean conflict. There was Vietnam, of course, but by the time I was old enough to form an opinion about that war, it had become more than just a military operation. Much more. It was a political issue that had divided a nation.

Each of those wars was distinctive in its own way. But it is doubtful any will be recalled more vividly than the one occurring in the Persian Gulf right now.

It has been called the "Prime Time War," and for good reason. Because of the time difference between the Middle East and the United States, the nighttime raids there are being recorded here during the nightly news programs.

As a result, America is able to follow the unfolding of a war before its very eyes. Fascinating though that can be, the vastness of it all boggles the mind.

It is like a Tom Clancy novel coming to life.

Sometimes leaders tell the truth.

That simple fact keeps rushing through my mind. And, for some reason, it surprises me.

Consider:

President Bush goes on national TV and warns Iraq that if the deadline passes, an attack will be launched. It passes, and the attack is launched.

Saddam says if Iraq is fired upon, he will counter with an attack on Israel. Iraq is hit, and Saddam orders attacks on Israel.

The U.S. says if Israel is attacked, it will come to that country's defense. Israel is hit, and the U.S. sends troops into Israel.

People telling the truth.

How strange.

I just wish someone would announce that the war has ended and no more lives will be lost.

The truth, after all, doesn't have to hurt.

agencies, including the Texas Water Commission.

"I hope that they are going to be our allies," said Mrs. Read, a 53-year-old retired schoolteacher whose rancher-husband, Bob, is opposed to the project. She is hopeful for legislation to "tighten" the regulatory processes of such agencies as the Texas Water Commission (TWC), the Railroad Commission of Texas, the Texas Air Control Board, the Texas Department of Health, the Texas Department of Agriculture, and the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA).

VOICE, TAP, SCRAP and other West Texas environmental groups are concerned that the burning and burying of hazardous and toxic waste could adversely affect the environment through surface- and ground-water pollution in case of leaks or earthquakes, pollution of the air, scarring of the landscape, and dangers in transporting the waste over highways and railroads.

Opponents to the project, Mrs. Read said, include environmental groups; individuals; and governing bodies, such as the Westbrook, Coahoma and Ira school boards; the Western Texas College board in Snyder; the commissioners' courts of Howard, Nolan and Scurry counties; and the Snyder and Coahoma city councils.

In Colorado City, citizens are polarized over the benefits and drawbacks of the proposed project, Mrs. Read said.

Further, she said, opponents to the project are concerned that if Texans passively accept out-of-state waste, Texas, particularly West Texas, might be perceived as a wastelands.

Ideally, each state would take care of its own waste and not ship it away, she added.

"There is no such place as 'away,'" reasoned Mrs. Justice. Waste carried "away" ends up in somebody's backyard and, in that sense, is never out of sight or mind.

Under the NWED-Mitchell County host agreement, the proposed waste facility would include "one or more" municipal solid-waste landfills, hazardous-waste incinerators and hazardous-waste landfills.

Additionally, the county would agree "not (to) place limitations on daily or annual processing volumes or the source of such waste." The volume allowed would be noted on state and federal permits.

The host agreement excludes radioactive waste.

"It is not intended ... for the facility to process any nuclear, radioactive, or hospital infectious waste and such material and waste may not be received, or processed, at the facility without the consent of the county."

Mitchell County officials will have "the right but not the duty" to review the design, construction, and operation of the facility. The site is projected to be in a region of low-permeability clay rock between 200 and 400 feet thick.

The host agreement allows for the annual "free" disposal of up to 12,000 tons of waste generated by cities or towns within Mitchell County and by Mitchell County.

Further, NWED has projected that if its incinerator-landfill project is successful, then "the host fees will constitute a major source of income to the county," the host agreement says.

"NWED by this agreement, construction and operation of the facility, and payment of host fees ... makes a significant investment in Mitchell County, its future and economy."

Despite the economic attraction of the facility, VOICE, TAP and SCRAP members are "pushing for a moratorium on any more incinerators or hazardous-waste landfills" in Texas.

A 1989 TWC report to the EPA, Mrs. Read said, indicated that "Texas had sufficient capability for burning and burying our own waste — not that of the whole United States — for the next 20 years.

"We really believe we need to get a stop, a halt, to permitting any more new landfills or hazardous-waste incinerators until we can make a definite study and determine if there really is a need," Mrs. Read said.

"I want to see a really deep study done to determine less risky alternative ways all of us can cut down and reduce and not transport it (waste) great long distances."

Mrs. Read and Mrs. Justice increasingly are conscious of their roles in recycling and reducing waste.

The proliferation of waste in a society that's spoiled by disposable items has aggravated waste-disposal problems.

"When we didn't know what it was all about," Mrs. Read said of disposable items in earlier times, "it was done in the name of progress, which we thought was a good thing. And now, they are discovering what damage can be done, maybe forever, to our environment."

was only a small obstacle.

"As far as the weather goes, we've had a lot (of people show up)," he said.

On Saturday, with the sun shining, attendance picked up even more.

"We've had a lot of traffic, a real good turnout today," said John Philbeck on Saturday. Philbeck, president of the Vietnam Veterans of the Permian Basin Memorial Committee, helped coordinate the exhibition in Midland.

As many as 40,000 people were expected to visit the memorial over the weekend, said Dyphine Cates, general manager of Resthaven Memorial Park.

Wayne Wienstroer, 46, a Vietnam veteran who drove from Odessa, also dismissed the idea that the gulf war could become another Vietnam.

"I think we have a lot more capabilities and are a lot more advanced" today, Wienstroer said.

"The only ground you owned in Vietnam was the ground you walked on," he said in light of the strong air attacks on Iraq by U.S. forces.

Visitors can take advantage of the wall in Midland until 4 p.m. today.

Dedication ceremonies on Saturday included a keynote address by Special Staff Sgt. Roy P. Benavidez, who holds the Congressional Medal of Honor, and a missing man flyover by the Confederate Air Force of Midland.

On Friday, Mayor Carroll Thomas proclaimed Jan. 19 as Vietnam Veterans' Day.

Closing ceremonies, beginning at 2 p.m. today, will include a remembrance ceremony of those in the Persian Gulf.

The wall, which spans 240 feet in length and about 7½ feet tall, is inscribed with 58,175 names; 208 of those names are of veterans whose homes were in the Permian Basin.

Texture of the replica, made of "faux granite," is similar to the Black Indian granite of the original. Both memorials' inscriptions were photo-stencil etched.

Visitors can make rubbed impressions of names on the wall as practiced on the original. Rubbing paper and a directory to locate names are available at the exhibition.

The portable wall was constructed by Service International Corp., which is financing a tour of the wall in about 100 cities across the nation, and was approved by Jan Scruggs, the driving force behind the Washington D.C. wall.

Coordinators of the tour describe the exhibition as a healing process for veterans, family and the United States.

Open 24 hours a day while here, Philbeck said a lot of people visited the memorial at night, especially Vietnam veterans.

"A lot of guys are coming out late at night when a lot of healing is being done," Philbeck said.

In addition, the program provided youngsters a chance to ask questions about education and how to obtain success that can't be answered elsewhere.

Hearing set in commissioner's case

DALLAS (AP) — A judge has granted a prosecution request to speed up Dallas County Commissioner John Wiley Price's probation revocation case.

County Criminal Judge Cas Dunlap said he has ordered Price to appear in court Feb. 1.

Dunlap's order comes after a motion filed Jan. 10 by Assistant District Attorney Mike Gillett protesting the judge's earlier order to delay the hearing until April 5.

Prosecutors moved to revoke his probation after Price was charged with criminal mischief in connection with another protest.

Goldthwait pokes fun

LOS ANGELES (NYT) — Bobcat Goldthwait does not like stand-up much anymore. It feels too much like boxing.

"It's the hecklers," Goldthwait said. "I think people really expect homophobic, women-bashing, flag-waving, rhetoric-spewing comics."

As an alternative, the veteran comedian has been making movies. Recently, he wrapped up "Shakes the Clown," an IRS Media production that Goldthwait describes as "the finest alcoholic-clown movie ever made." Goldthwait wrote, directed and is starring in it (he plays Shakes). Ann Luly, "my better half," as Goldthwait calls her, produced it.

The synopsis reflects Goldthwait's wonderfully twisted mentality.

"All these birthday-party clowns hang out in a bar in Palookaville called the Twisted Balloon," he said. "They talk shop and complain about how they hate kids, and they wish they were on TV."

The movie stars comedians Tom Kenny, Jack Gallagher, Jeremy Kramer, Kathy Griffin (a member of the Groundlings), Dan Spencer and Paul Koziowski. All were in "The Making of Bikini School III," Goldthwait's first film, which he describes as "my chance to exorcise 'Police Academy' demons."

Greg Travis and Bruce Baum play rodeo clowns in "Shakes."

Late registration at MC will close Wednesday

Only three days remain for late registration at Midland College's spring semester.

Part-time students still may enroll through Wednesday for as many as three credit courses. Registration is being handled in the Student Services area of the Student Center. Hours are 8 a.m.-5 p.m.

"We are limiting registration to the first eight days of classes in an effort to give students a better chance of success. It also enables the instructors to spend more time on actual instruction and less on trying to help late-enrollees catch up," said Dr. Don Cates, associate dean of students and registrar.

Cates said there were a number of classes which still had openings.

Counselors will advise those registering late about the classes in which they have the greatest chance of passing.

By Friday morning, 3,406 students had enrolled for credit courses.

This does not include those who are registered for Midland College courses through extension centers in other communities. The final count is expected to be somewhere in the range of 3,600-3,800 students by the time late registration concludes. There were 3,672 students registered for the 1990 spring semester. The highest spring semester count came in 1989 with a total of 3,722 students.

Information about classes may be obtained by calling 685-4501 or visiting the Student Services area.

Richards sets difficult course

Ann Richards set a challenging course for Texas by saying that her administration will cut through red tape and bureaucratic stonewalling to serve the people of the state. But it is a goal for state government that Texans deserve.

"Nothing is more fundamentally important to me than the understanding that this administration exists to serve the taxpayers," the governor said during her inauguration address Tuesday at the State Capitol.

Nothing is more important to the people of Texas either, but bringing to pass Gov. Richards' vision of a state in which "every citizen is treated by the government with respect and dignity and honesty, where consumers are protected, where business is nurtured and valued, where good jobs are plentiful, where those in need find compassion and love and help, where every decision is measured against a high standard of ethics and true commitment to the public trust" all at a cost that truly serves the taxpayers is a tall order, to say the least.

The new governor indicated she will build her administration on three components: education, a strong economy and protection of the environment. It's no doubt that in basing her administration on those three issues, the governor has chosen three of the top concerns facing Texans. There are others, of course. Taxes and tax relief will be a growing concern that she will not be able to ignore.

Texas already is facing an anticipated budget deficit of $3.5 billion for 1992-93 and other factors will only compound the problem, such as one of the nation's fasting growing populations, the need to reform the state's school financing system, increasing worries about both the medical and insurance industries and other concerns. Those issues appear on the Texas horizon at a time when taxpayers around the state and nation are recoiling from calls for more taxation at all levels of government.

There's no question that both Richards and Bullock are aware of the challenges facing them; they both addressed the taxing concern during the inauguration ceremony. Bullock even noted, "We cannot condone business-as-usual in the way we spend our money, and we cannot condone business-as-usual in the way we raise the money."

Texans obviously will be watching what transpires early in this legislative term to determine how the state's new leadership is holding to the game plan briefly outlined during the inauguration ceremony. The state needs bold and imaginative leadership, but it needs guidance in tune with today's economic realities, too.

More than at any time in recent memory, government around the globe is facing extreme challenges to perform as never before — or to suffer the consequences of failure.

Gov. Richards and Lt. Gov. Bullock have given Texas their vision of what is needed. The people of the state should work with them toward these goals. Texas' future may depend on that unity of purpose.

Sentencing Project offers new course

It is sad commentary on society in the United States that this country imprisons a larger percentage of its population than any other nation on Earth.

The Sentencing Project, a non-profit research organization, found that the No. 2 nation on this list of no distinction is South Africa and that the Soviet Union ranks No. 3.

More than 1 million people are locked up in the United States awaiting trial or serving time for crimes committed, which translates into 426 of every 100,000 U.S. residents. South Africa has 333 of each of its 100,000 citizens behind bars while the Soviet Union imprisons 268 out of 100,000.

The numbers tell us things few of us would otherwise believe or care to believe.

The United States has more crime than the poorest nation, more homicides than the most lawless, and less tolerance than the harshest societies and governments in the world. The biggest single factor behind the level of crime, the number of people incarcerated and social attitudes in the United States is drug use, The Sentencing Project found.

Can the answer to this society's problems possibly be more laws, more prisons and more inmates?

Or does the answer lie in a new emphasis on education and reforming the criminal justice system?

Bush's 'conservatism' rates failing grade

U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen and other potential 1992 Democratic presidential candidates got some encouraging news the other day — leading conservatives across the nation are becoming increasingly disenchanted with President Bush.

The president was given only a "D" in a midterm "report card" published in the winter issue of Policy Review, a journal of The Heritage Foundation.

This report should serve as a reminder to the president that he was elected as a conservative candidate, that many of his supporters are very unhappy about his broken promise on taxes and that his political survival could very well depend on how well he's able to regain his conservative image in the next year.

Mauritania arrests, tortures blacks

WASHINGTON — Saddam Hussein taught the world a lesson when he killed off the Kurds with poison gas. If you do it quickly, quietly and completely, you can get away with a massacre of your own people and generate a minimum of fuss from the rest of the world.

Anderson

Saddam's allies, the Arab Baathist Moors in the north African nation of Mauritania, are playing their own deadly game of "now you see them, now you don't," raising hardly a peep from the rest of the world.

Over the past month, Mauritania has arrested 1,000 Hal-pulaars, the largest black ethnic group in the Arab dominated country. The arrests have been politically motivated, and there have been no trials. These new arrests come on top of the 50,000 Hal-pulaar expulsions we reported last February. Blacks are being driven out of the country, tortured and killed.

A former Mauritanian diplomat, Mohamed Nacir Athie, who defected to the United States in 1989, told us that Mauritania's hidden agenda is to subdue black influence and pave the way for an all-Baathist Arab state, like its friend Iraq.

Mauritania has had extensive economic, political and military ties to Iraq since 1975. It is one of the few countries that has taken Iraq's side in the Persian Gulf crisis.

Athie told us that young Mauritanians routinely have gone to Iraq for their military training and Baathist indoctrination. Those students come home to high positions in the Mauritanian civil service and military. Now reports say that Mauritanians were offered money to fight for Iraq — $1,500 for the first month and $1,000 a month thereafter.

Athie said that not only did Saddam provide arms to the Mauritanian military, but he also used Mauritanian soil to test Iraqi missiles. During the Iran-Iraq war, Mauritania was the main supplier of fish to the Iraqi army. The country boasts some of the most fertile fishing waters in the entire African continent.

Since August, when Iraq invaded Kuwait, the State Department has been warning Americans not to travel to Mauritania and has authorized "the compulsory departure of non-essential dependents" of U.S. government personnel, because, as one official put it, "there are some elements (in Mauritania) that may harm American citizens." The State Department said the warning has nothing to do with the purges of black Mauritanians, but declined to say whether the threat to Americans would come from Iraqi sympathizers in Mauritania.

Evidently the systematic elimination of blacks in Mauritania is not reason enough alone for the Bush administration to put Mauritania in the dog house.

Amnesty International and Africa Watch have monitored Mauritania closely and are worried, with good reason. Blacks from all walks of life are disappearing.

Monitoring organizations have compiled hundreds of reports about architects, writers, policemen, hospital workers, postal employees, teachers and their students being rounded up. Key civil servants have been hauled away to prison camps. "Every Mauritanian I've met can tell you a story about somebody taken away," an Africa Watch official told us.

No patience with wimps in current events

Here are some columns I'd write if the deadline weren't already here:

WIMP FACTOR — Fear of wimpishness, which turns grown men into blustering schoolboys, is not peculiar to the United States. Why does Saddam Hussein, for instance, constantly reply like Attila the Iraqi when President Bush talks like Attila the Yale Man?

Baker

Because he fears losing face. What is lost face but wimphood? I suspect Attila never intended to behave like Attila the Hun, but decided he couldn't after somebody called him Attila the Wimp.

PATIENCE, HAH! — Politicians get into pickles because of lessons they've learned. They make war in Vietnam because they've learned the lesson of Munich. (Can't appease Hitlers.)

They go for instant victory in Iraq because they've learned the lesson of Vietnam. (Dawdle and you lose the home front.)

It's obvious President Bush has learned the lesson of Jimmy Carter, who ruined his presidency by using patience to free the kidnapped embassy Americans from the Iranians.

SAMPLER SAMPLES — Here are sensible thoughts worth framing over White House fireplace mantles:

"The reluctant obedience of distant provinces generally costs more than it is worth." — Thomas Babington Macaulay, historian.

"To be engaged in opposing wrong affords but a slender guarantee of being right." — William Ewart Gladstone, prime minister of Great Britain.

"A decent provision for the poor is the true test of a civilization." — Dr. Samuel Johnson, lexicographer and commercial writer.

TUNNEL VISION — Lack of American interest in providing decently for the poor is just one of many lacks. There's a lack of government money. It all seems earmarked to pay for the expeditionary force in Araby and to shelter victims of the thieves, speculators and insouciant bankers who gave us the S&L catastrophe and the wild party in real estate.

There's a lack of interest in the rising power of the KGB, Red Army and old Communist apparatchiks in Moscow. This reflects television's tendency to set the public agenda by concentrating news coverage on the White House as melodrama and soap opera. ("One Man's Family, and Their Little Dog Millie.") When the president is totally absorbed with a Saddam Hussein, the rest of the world's problems must do without us.

NORIEGA — President Bush seems as irritated by Saddam Hussein as he was by Manuel Noriega. And look what happened to Noriega: eternal jail without trial in Miami. It's like being condemned to the Chateau d'If, except there are federal wiretappers in the next dungeon.

First, however, he was blasted out of religious sanctuary by heavy rock'n'roll. Why do presidents take such intense dislike to certain tinpots while finding others perfectly agreeable? Remember the Sandinista president of Nicaragua who drove Reagan up the wall?

TRIALS OF FEMINISM — Women have it tough. Having struggled to win the right to go off to wars with men, they reach Saudi Arabia as their first big-time war zone, which insists that woman's place is in hiding. In jail if they're caught driving a car.

VENGEANCE ETERNAL — The American and Middle Eastern worlds have different kinds of memory.

Americans, too lazy perhaps to nurse grudges, are constantly letting bygones be bygones. In the Middle East there are no bygones, only ancient offenses to be avenged. The latest retaliatory vengeance in blood is the routine news of relationships between Arabs and Israelis. A good place for Americans to avoid, you'd think. So in we plunge.

GEORGE WILL

War on Iraq sign of civilization's progress

WASHINGTON — It may seem strange to see, through the smoke of battle, signs of civilization's moral progress. But the way we went to war does show how much wiser the world is than it was when the modern era began, in 1914. Desert Storm will produce no Rupert Brooke, no poet thanking God for providing war as a healthful, cleansing adventure, "as swimmers into cleanness leaping."

Will

Never in our experience have we stepped up to war with such a measured tread. War is inherently a passionate undertaking. But this is a war of policy and reluctance, a clinical exercise in economizing violence, a meticulously prepared war.

In the 10th decade of a century saturated with war, we know the subject too well to romanticize it, or regard it as an anachronism, or an aberration in the relations of nations. The fact that this is the first war of the wired world, with every stage televised everywhere, adds to its eerie aura of a violent minuet. Both sides know from the start which side will be the winning side, militarily.

But precisely because the basic military result is predictable, it is crucial to concentrate on this century's central lesson: To know the military winner of a war is not to know the war's outcome. War is a political event, an eruption of violence in a continuum of politics, which will resume, radically altered by war.

The winning and losing nations of the First World War were clear on Nov. 11, 1918. Nothing else was. Later we learned the war's outcome, meaning consequences: pacifism, fascism, the death of empires. Wars have long echoes. Desert Storm is dealing with problems left from the Ottoman Empire's collapse.

The winners of the Second World War included the United States and the Soviet Union. The consequences included Soviet power in the center of Europe.

Desert Storm's lesson for Arab nations depends on the destruction not only of Saddam's (replaceable) weapons but of his regime, too.

During the debates about this well-deliberated war, Iraq's real potential for future power encouraged exaggerations of its current power. Iraq is, beneath a thin layer of imported technology, a brittle, overreaching tin-pot country. This war is waged not just to neutralize a threat but also to make a point.

Two points, actually — one about America, the other about Arabia.

Desert Storm occurs in the 50th year since Japanese torpedo planes at Pearl Harbor punctuated a long U.S. argument about whether this nation should be an active ingredient in international affairs. Desert Storm demonstrates that the future will be like the past, only more so. The hope is that a half-century of wars, hot and cold, has yielded to an epoch of rule-writing and that the mighty U.S. sword guarantees the preeminence of the U.S. pen.

There are 21 nations in what is called "the Arab world," but no real democracy. In recent years, political pluralism and popular government have been sprouting green shoots in previously stony ground from Latin America to Eastern Europe. But the Middle East has remained a region riven by political primitivism that is fueled by religious fanaticism and tribalism masquerading as nationalism.

A sense of falling further and further behind other modernizing nations exacerbates Arab feelings of cultural inferiority.

Perhaps Saddam Hussein thinks he has learned from the past and is determined to repeat it. In the past, particularly in 1956 and 1967, Arab defeats have purchased prestige in the Arab world.

But the way this war began — and, we may hope, will end — may demonstrate that the locution "Arab world" is merely a geographic, not a political or even cultural, expression. The claims of similarity and unity are spurious. Regimes governing the majority of Arabs support the U.S.-U.N. position.

Indeed, the war's longest reverberation may be from the fact of Arab participation in the studied punishment of an Arab nation whose crime is transgressing values enunciated most clearly by the United States, the symbol of Western political values and of cultural modernity. Iraq's fate in the fighting will demonstrate that militarism is not an alternative to political modernization. In the modern age, military proficiency is increasingly a function of scientific, cultural and commercial modernity. The Soviet Union cracked beneath the weight of that great fact, which is one reason why Iraq is isolated.

Tremendous pride joins apprehension

Yesterday (Jan. 12) as I watched Congress passionately debate the wisdom of committing our young troops to war, I felt through my growing apprehension a sense of tremendous pride.

Some of the senators and representatives put into beautiful rhetoric what I myself would say if I had the words; some put forth well-articulated opinions that I couldn't have disagreed with more strongly. But I remained proud of them all: proud that we live in a country in which the democratic process survives in the worst of times as well as in the best; proud of the strength and integrity of our nation that has the power to defend the weak and oppose small but insistent despots who would upset the balance of power in the world and shape the destinies of weaker countries according to their own desires and designs.

I am proud of our armed forces, comprised of individuals who have grown up in a country in which it was not necessary to instill in them from their infancy the spirit of the warrior, but who nevertheless are willing to leave those they love in order to serve their country and protect the freedom of innocents in the world at large.

I am also proud of our president. My husband's only son, Lt. j.g. Marshall Lee Mason III is on the USS Sacramento in the Persian Gulf. My only son, Petty Officer 2nd Class John L. Brenner, is on the USS Wisconsin, also in the gulf. We are more fearful at this time for the dangers they face than we could ever have anticipated when they were small boys; but they are fine young Navy men, each dedicated to the task at hand, and we are very proud of them.

My husband, an Episcopal clergyman, and I know full well that President Bush has done his best to protect their lives and that he will continue to strive for a quick resolution while maintaining the values for which our nation stands. He has our continued support, our prayers for his wisdom and courage, and our confidence that whatever the designs of men, God's will for His own ultimately prevails.

Series on disabled was timely, needed

We appreciate the Midland Reporter-Telegram series, "America's Disabled — Fitting In Despite the Odds." The issues highlighted in the articles need to be brought to the public's attention and are timely. The impact of the Americans With Disabilities Act has not yet been felt, but soon will be important to all individuals, businesses and communities.

As parents and children with disabilities, the third article which related to education, was of particular interest. The article reflected our local school program and was typified by the quote of one Midland Independent School District (MISD) administrator: "The important thing is that we're meeting the intent of the law to the extent we have enough buildings to accommodate all these kids."

As parents and advocates, we hope and expect Midland's program will not focus on providing buildings but will comply with the true intent of the law which is to provide a high quality of appropriate educational services and resources which will allow eligible children to reach their potentials, make contributions to society, and participate as involved members of the communities in which they live.

Services to people with disabilities may not interest all Midlanders now, but interests can change quickly as circumstances change. Accidents, illnesses, and the uncertainties of giving birth cannot be planned and can easily result in any family's increased need for special education services. It is important to all Midlanders to develop and maintain high quality educational services for all students.

The Midland Reporter-Telegram series took time, research, and a great deal of patience. The reporters and photographers put together an in-depth look at the challenges faced by individuals with disabilities, and we commend them.

Tragedy facing working Texans

Nothing defeats racial goodwill so much as polarization of public affairs by elected officials.

Dallas' Dec. 8, 1990 municipal election — effectively a choice between proposed 14-1 and established 10-4-1 voting district plans — was smashingly disturbed on Dec. 5th by the then Gov.-elect Ann Richards. That she won over Republican candidate Clayton Williams by only 100,000 votes emphasizes the tragedy facing working Texans during her term of office.

Richards' rewarding appointment of a legendary black spokeswoman as "ethics counselor" to the government of the State of Texas was quickly read as a manipulation for redistribution disguised as fairness and equality.

Little wonder that regardless of which voting district plan U.S. District Judge Jerry Buchmeyer favors, his ruling is certain to be appealed through to the U.S. Supreme Court for clarification of the Civil Rights Voting Act. A similar fate has already occurred to U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton's ruling on minority single-member-district judicial elections in Dallas.

Will Williams' son bust rocks?

While it is very sad to read that the son of Clayton Williams has been convicted of drug addiction/possession, it could not have happened to a better family. Williams has publicly proclaimed his cure for the drug problem, so we can safely assume that he has now applied his prescription to his own family — that of "bustin' rocks" on his ranch at Alpine.

Can we believe that he has assigned this duty to his son as he suggested he would do to other's sons and daughters if he had been elected governor?

NC-17 rated films pornography cover

Out of utter frustration and being thankful that we have the newspaper that we have here in Midland, I am writing to you to let it be known that I am bitterly opposed to the new NC-17 rating for movies.

The NC-17 rating is simply a cover to bring what were previously X-rated pornographic films into my neighborhood. When will these peddlers of filth ever stop? It is our children who are at risk and it breaks my heart! A bottle of poison with a different label is still a bottle of poison. Studies show that child molesters thrive on pornography.

For the sake of the children, I urge all theater and video store owners to refuse to book or rent NC-17 movies. My word, R-rated movies have enough sex, violence and filthy language to already fall into an X-rated category. God help us if we allow the NC-17 movies into our city.

I promise you that neither I nor any member of my family will trade with any theater or video store that shows or rents NC-17 rated movies.

Recording library wonderful service

I would like to take this time to write a brief letter of thanks and appreciation to all of the wonderful volunteers who donate their time at The Recording Library. The service provided through this wonderful organization has assisted me tremendously in my college studies at Midland College.

I would like to thank each and every one of the individuals that has taken the time necessary to read and record the text material that I had to study from this past semester. I appreciate the service provided by this organization and its wonderful volunteers more than words could ever truly express. By having my text prerecorded, I have been able to read and study over my text material much easier.

I realize that I have many challenges ahead of myself, and with the gracious help provided by the volunteer readers at The Recording Library, I have been able to and will continue to be able to overcome at least one of these many challenges.

I do not think that Sandy Davis, executive director of The Recording Library, or the many wonderful volunteers in this organization truly realize just how very much help and assistance each and every one of them has been to me, and I wish there were more words available for me to use in order to express my deepest feelings of thanks and appreciation for everything that The Recording Library and all s many volunteers have provided for me.

I look forward to working with this wonderful organization throughout my continued college studies and at this time. I would like to thank everyone associated with The Recording Library for all that they have done in the past and all that they will continue to do in the future for individuals such as myself.

Road honoring King should link cities

While growing up in Midland we all learned to dislike (or even hate) Odessa, a relationship known throughout the state. This was in response to the fact that whenever the two cities entered into any undertaking one or the other always came out having been cheated, a fact known far and wide.

Just like there is no way to move the University of Texas of the Permian Basin (UTPB) to the land that the Scharbauer Ranch offered to donate, a location on the county line providing equal access for students from both communities. There is no way to correct the many transgressions of the past.

Another fact known far and wide is that the interest of both cities may best be served by leaving the past behind and moving forward together.

The purpose of this letter is to suggest a mutual undertaking in which the only advantage would be cooperation. An unending symbol of unity.

Odessa recently considered changing the name of Grant Street to Martin Luther King Jr. Blvd. A noble undertaking but somewhat impractical due to the fact that too many businesses would be forced to change addresses on stationery, business cards, advertising and so on.

My suggestion is to continue the pursuit of such a memorial to this late great leader by renaming the road which unites Midland to Odessa, a major route, well-traveled, and currently occupied by relatively few businesses, thereby increasing the viability of this purpose.

I hope to soon travel from Midland to Odessa or back on the Martin Luther King Jr. Dreamway, remembering the man, his work, and the beautiful dream.

New Soviet policies worse than feared

By Leslie H. Gelb

Marlin Fitzwater reached near-highs of understatement and wishful thinking in responding to threats of a Soviet crackdown against deserters and draft-dodgers in seven rebellious republics.

Although administration officials are hoping for a Gorbachevian miracle, everything is much worse than the White House spokesman let on Tuesday.

Soviet-American relations stand on the edge of yet another new era, after only three years of the old one. The phase that appears to be coming will be marked by drift, mounting mutual unhappiness and no new breakthroughs in negotiation or cooperation. Moscow will be self-absorbed, but not anti-American. This is not what the Bush administration said Tuesday, or should say soon.

Tuesday Fitzwater warned Moscow "to cease attempts at intimidation." True, Moscow has issued similar threats to round up errant recruits before and backed off, but it's not likely this time. The Gorbachev regime has just about run out of internal credibility and cannot afford to fail the armed forces again.

Marlin Fitzwater also said the administration was "still planning" on a Bush-Gorbachev meeting in February. But Bush simply cannot go if the specter of war still hangs over the Persian Gulf.

And with Americans believing that Moscow has used the gulf crisis to blunt the U.S. backlash (much the way the Israeli, British and French invasion of the Suez Canal in 1956 provided the Soviets with cover to put down the Hungarian uprising), the summit meeting would be politically unwise for some time.

Finally, Fitzwater said he did not believe that his criticisms would undermine Soviet support for the U.S. position in the gulf. That's probably correct, for the time being. But for reasons of Soviet domestic politics, Soviet-American relations seem poised to go downhill and enter the next phase.

The question is what the new "new" Soviet foreign policy is likely to be. And what should be the American response?

We may never know whether Moscow would have threatened the republics again in the absence of the gulf crisis. At the least, the gulf situation made that decision easier. But the point is that a crackdown is inevitable sooner or later.

Mikhail Gorbachev is moving to the right. He has to because he is getting no support from the center and left.

Here is what that is likely to mean in practice:

First, there will be a slowdown, if not a standstill, in making decisions on arms control and other cooperative efforts with Washington. It will be harder to get help from Moscow on places like Afghanistan and Cambodia.

The new crowd will want to be seen as tougher in defending traditional Soviet interests than outgoing Foreign Minister Shevardnadze.

Second, Soviet rhetoric will stiffen, but in a new way. The military will press to maintain its budget, but not by generating an "external threat." The Soviet public would not buy this line, and the military does not need to peddle it.

Leslie H. Gelb's column is distributed by the New York Times News Service.

Victorious beginning calls for a decisive ending

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

SAN SIMEON — The superb skill and heroic courage of our night fighter plane pilots, supported by British and Saudi Arabian aircraft, coupled with a masterfully coordinated attack plan, and, above all, with the brilliant diplomatic and military leadership of President Bush, gave us our first victory in the war against the world's most dangerous ruler, Saddam Hussein.

Hearst

However, the euphoria was short-lived when on the second night of the U.S.-allied attack on Baghdad's military targets, Hussein carried out his threat to attack Israel with missiles if the allied forces took military action to force him out of Kuwait.

At 2:30 a.m. Friday Israeli time, he hit Israel with a barrage of Soviet-made, high explosive Scud missiles that landed along the Mediterranean coastline between Tel Aviv and Haifa. Fortunately, they did not contain chemical warheads and no one was killed. A dozen people were injured. The missiles were fired from mobile trucks on the Iraq border with Saudi Arabia about 360 miles from Tel Aviv. One landed near the Hilton Hotel, a favorite of American tourists where I stayed during numerous trips to Israel. One Scud missile was fired at the large air base in Saudi Arabia's Dhahran area from which U.S. and Saudi forces are operating. In another example of our weapon system's excellence, the Iraq missile was blown up in the air by an unmanned Patriot defense missile without causing any damage.

The missile attack on Israel was obviously intended to provoke the Jewish nation's entry into the war in the hope of causing the Arab nations to withdraw from the allied coalition and turn the conflict into an Islamic Holy War against Israel and the U.S.-led Western alliance. I am confident it will prove to be another monumental miscalculation by the maniacal Saddam Hussein.

President Bush appealed to the Israeli government not to engage in all-out war against Iraq that could involve massive casualties. He paid tribute to Israeli Premier Yitzhak Shamir for his "great restraint" and said the Israeli government knows of the U.S. "determination to safeguard" Israel.

As this report was being written, there were encouraging indications that if Israel is not hit with chemical weapons or numerous bombs, its retaliation will be moderate. It will probably be limited to hunting and destroying Iraqi missile sites. While there will be coordination with the U.S.-led allied command concerning targets to avoid the danger of Israeli and allied planes shooting one another down, especially during night forays, the Israelis will operate separately from the allied coalition.

Before Hussein's missile assault on Israel, the initial success of the allied attack against military targets in Baghdad and Kuwait encouraged hope that the war might last only a few weeks. Now that Israel is involved and may be provoked by an Iraqi chemical attack to launch a major offensive against Iraq that could precipitate an Islamic Holy War throughout the Middle East, President Bush and Defense Secretary Dick Cheney cautioned that the war could last longer than people thought when Hussein's forces offered little resistance to the initial phase of the allied air attack against Baghdad.

Once allied air power has gained control of the skies throughout Iraq, the land war will begin if Hussein has not started to pull out of Kuwait and agreed to withdraw completely. Allied troops could start moving into action anytime now to liberate Kuwait.

That could lead to months of fighting to drive Iraqi troops out of bunkers and deeply dug fortifications difficult to destroy by air attack. It could also lead to a Holy War by fanatical Islamic masses throughout the Arab world eager to fight for Hussein. He is already hailed as the modern Saladin, the great Turkish leader who drove the Christian Crusaders out of Jerusalem and later out of the Middle East in the 12th century.

The greatest danger now is that if there are heavy American and foreign casualties in prolonged ground fighting, there will be a strong movement in the West and the Arab world for a cease-fire. That is what I think Hussein is counting on right now. A cease-fire saved two presidents of Egypt from defeat in their wars with Israel, first Gamal Abdel Nasser in 1956 and Anwar Sadat in 1973.

The governments of Algeria and Yemen have already started discussions about getting the United Nations Security Council to consider conditions for a cease-fire proposal. Those two countries want the United Nations to guarantee holding an international conference to settle the Palestine-Israel dispute if Hussein agrees to pull out of Kuwait. President Francois Mitterrand also is expected to support such a move if the war with Iraq is prolonged and has heavy casualties.

Such an appeasement deal would leave Hussein in power and our soldiers would have died simply to restore the despotic Kuwaiti sheikdom to power. They would have died in vain insofar as fulfillment of President Bush's hope of creating a new world order to deter future aggression by one nation against another.

A cease-fire should come not only when Hussein withdraws from Kuwait but when he relinquishes power and Iraq's military strength is stripped of its offensive capability. We must not fight now to lose the war, as we did in Vietnam.

Top bass fishers to conduct seminar at college

By H.A. Tuck

Visitors to the Permian Basin often express amazement at the number of boats which they see, especially when they don't see any nearby bodies of water. But folks in this area really do like their boats, particularly those bass boats.

That's why Midland College is getting such a good response to a Bass Fishing Seminar that's starting Jan. 30. Four of the nation's top professional bass fishers are conducting the seminar on four evenings: Jan. 30, and Feb. 4, 7, and 11. From 7:30-9:30 p.m. each of those nights, seekers of bass can learn the secrets from such top-names as Larry Nixon, the all-time pro bass fishing money winner; Ken Cook, Randy Fite and Dick Healey.

GED, English classes start Monday

Staff Report

Operation of Midland College's Adult Learning Center resumes Monday for persons seeking a high school equivalency and for those wishing to learn English.

There is no charge for any of the classes.

"Students in GED preparation classes are tutored on a individual basis, while those learning to function in English are given group instruction," explained Cindy Turland, Adult Learning Center director.

The GED (General Education Development) instruction is available from 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Monday and Wednesday, and 8 a.m.-9 p.m. on Tuesday and Thursday. Individualized instruction is provided in reading, math, written language, science, and social studies.

Students are given pre-tests and then tutored according to individual needs. They may register and attend at any time during hours for GED instruction.

"We have found that students may need only a small amount of tutoring in some cases, while others are beginning with as little as a fourth or fifth grade education as a background. All of them, however, can benefit from the instruction before attempting the GED exams," Turland said.

Students who attend the Adult Learning Center and pass their GED exams to obtain a high school equivalency diploma are encouraged to take part in the Spring Graduation Ceremony. Those GED students from the Learning Center who are in the top ten per cent of the graduates each year are eligible for special Midland College scholarships.

The free ESL class begins Monday. These classes are provided in three different levels and are in classroom situations rather than individualized instruction.

ESL classes meet from 9:30-11:30 a.m. Monday through Thursday and 7-9 p.m. on Monday and Wednesday nights at the Adult Learning Center on the Midland College campus.

Classes also are available at Casa de Amigos, 1101 E. Garden Lane, on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 7-9 p.m.

These classes are designed to provide help for those with limited or no English language ability to speak, read, and write better English.

More information is available by calling 685-4566 or visiting the Adult Learning Center.

Group to search river for cannon

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The muddy bottom of the San Antonio River will be probed along the River Walk next week in hopes that it may yield a cannon that dates to the Battle of the Alamo.

The search is taking place while the river is drained for its annual maintenance and cleaning, a fortuitous event for the excavators.

A similar project last year turned up no cannon, but did net a cross-section of San Antonio history, including ancient stone tools and 18th-century Mexican-made pottery, Gronquist said.

ARMED FORCES NEWS

The 82d Airborne Division Association has been granted a Federal Charter by the Congress and President Bush. Two decades of sporadic tries and five years of concentrated effort led to the action, said Dan Campbell, executive secretary, in a news release. The action came in late October.

The rarely-granted Federal Charter means the 82d's Veterans Service Officer will now be allowed to represent claimants before the U.S. Veterans Administration, and to have access to the VAs reference library.

The 82d Airborne Division is the Department of Defense's first strike contingency unit. It was the first unit into Saudi Arabia on Operation Desert Shield. In the past it has been in the forefront of forces committed in the Dominican Republic, Vietnam, Grenada and Panama. It has served as part of the peacekeeping forces in the Sinai Desert.

It became the most-decorated Division of World War II and was selected as America's Guard of Honor and assigned to the American Section of Berlin for occupation duty. It represented all American Divisions of the war in the ticker-tape Victory Parade held January 1946 in New York city. Postwar it was selected as a permanent Airborne Division.

The Association was formed in England in 1944 by General Ridgway's suggestion and has held 44 annual conventions since that time. It has 84 chapters of veterans and 11 chapters of active-duty paratroopers. Its membership stands at 21,000 and growing.

The 82d Airborne Division is providing educational assistance to needy descendants of its Airborne family. Hundreds of scholarships have been granted to deserving students. Chapters are also encouraged to become involved in their local community activities and have shown a positive impact.

Membership is open to all airborne veterans (11th, 13th, 17th, 82d, 101st, etc.) who are qualified to wear parachute or glider wings. Information can be obtained by writing to: Always-Airborne, 5459 Northcutt Pl., Dayton, OH 45414; or call S.R. Gossett 1-513-898-5977.

During the 13-week training cycle, Walker was taught the basics of battlefield survival. He was introduced to the typical daily routine that he will experience during his enlistment and studied the personal and professional standards traditionally exhibited by Marines.

He participated in an active physical conditioning program and gained proficiency in a variety of military skills including first, aid, rifle marksmanship and close order drill. Teamwork and self-discipline were emphasized throughout the training cycle.

A 1990 graduate of Midland Senior High School, he joined the Marine Corps Reserves in August 1990.

Parents approve students' haircut

DALLAS (AP) — Fifth-grader Donvannah Brown's haircut was too close for comfort as far as school officials were concerned, so they suspended him from class.

When Donvannah, 11, walked into his fifth-grade class at Vernon Price Elementary School in Mesquite on Jan. 11, his teacher took one look at his head and sent him to the principal's office.

The principal, saying the haircut violated the "startling and unusual " clause of the school district's code of conduct, suspended the boy from class for three days, school district officials said this week.

Donvannah's parents, however, have protested the decision. They maintain the haircut was deemed unusual because their son is the only black male in his class.

The boy's parents said if there were more black students, or if there were any black teachers at the school, Donvannah's haircut would have been recognized as ordinary.

"Because of their ignorance of cultural differences, they overreacted to something and made him feel like an outcast," Donvannah's father, Donald Brown, said of school officials.

Vernon Price Elementary has 26 black students out of an enrollment of 460. In the district as a whole, about 6.4 percent of students are black.

Donvannah's parents pulled him out of school for two days this past week rather than have him serve the remainder of his in-school suspension, in which he is isolated from his classmates.

Donvannah says many young blacks, copying NBA star Michael Jordan, have adopted the close cut.

School district officials defended the punishment, saying it would be discriminatory to apply dress codes differently to different ethnic groups.

"We're trying to encourage this child to use everything at his disposal to fit into society," school district spokeswoman Dixie Parris said.

"School is a training ground for fitting into American society. If we accepted different standards from this child that wouldn't be fair to him."

Teen-age suspect shows jury how he kicked victim

HOUSTON (AP) — A Baytown teen-ager accused in the beating death of a Vietnamese immigrant told jurors in teary-eyed testimony that he kicked the victim, but did not mean to kill him.

Kevin M. Allison, 18, showed jurors how he kicked Hung Truong, 15, during an Aug. 9 attack in Houston on Friday when he sent a cardboard box flying across a courtroom.

"I meant to rough him up, but I didn't mean to hurt him seriously," Allison said.

Allison is one of two defendants described as "skinheads" in Truong's murder trial. Truong was walking with three friends about 2 a.m. that day near an apartment complex parking lot when two skinheads reportedly accosted him, kicking him in the head and chest.

Truong, who pleaded with the assailants, later died of his injuries.

Skinheads, characterized by their closely shaven heads, espouse racial intolerance of Jews, blacks, Hispanics and homosexuals.

Allison said co-defendant Derek Ian Hilla, 18, had told him a Vietnamese youth named Hung had fired shots into his house several months before the beating, but Allison admitted he had no idea if that person were Truong.

Allison admitted he and other skinheads had been "involved in a couple of fights."

Under cross-examination by prosecutor Carol Davies, Allison testified he kicked Truong at least once in the face and another time in the ribs.

Allison said Truong told his assailants, "God forgive me for coming to this country. I'm so sorry."

Asked if the only problem was that Truong was Vietnamese, Allison twice replied, "I guess so" before saying "Yes."

Hilla's attorneys, Doug Davis and Alan Cohen, rested without calling witnesses. Then Allison was called by his attorneys, Ed Mallett and Alexander Bunin.

Allison denied being a racist, a claim corroborated by two friends — a black and a Hispanic — who said they were unaware of Allison's skinhead sympathies.

Police photos show Allison with a swastika tattoo, but he removed his suit jacket and shirt in the witness box and displayed the scar where it had been eradicated.

Denton, Sibley to meet in Senate runoff

WACO (AP) — Democrat Betty Denton and Republican David Sibley will face off in a runoff election to decide who will fill the 9th District Senate seat left vacant by Chet Edwards.

Sibley, 43, a Waco lawyer, led all five candidates in Saturday's election with 16,281 votes, or 45.3 percent, in unofficial returns. Ms. Denton, a state representative and Waco attorney, finished with 14,118 votes, or 39.3 percent.

Besides Ms. Denton, 47, the Democrats running were Frank B. McGregor, 68, a Hillsboro attorney and former state representative, and Clay Jenkins, 26, a Waxahachie attorney.

BUSING: Hundreds show support for desegregation system ruling "a slap in the face" to minority citizens, "especially since the ruling was made on civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday."

She said school districts who interpret the ruling as an opportunity to return to neighborhood schools will see "sparks sent from the black communities like this country hasn't seen in 20 years."

Ted Miller, spokesperson for Midland Independent School District, said that Oklahoma City schools were unique in the respect that they were "busing minority students to minority schools."

Miller, who previously was employed in the Oklahoma City school district, said those schools are "truly multi-ethnic and multicultural."

"Oklahoma City schools have 17 identified languages and their reports cards are printed in five languages," Miller said. He said the school district's ethnic breakdown is 45.9 percent Anglo, 39.9 percent black, 7.3 percent Hispanic, 4.4 percent American Indian and 2.5 percent Asian.

MISD's ethnic breakdown, according to a Fall 1990 report, is 58.45 percent Anglo, 30.49 percent Hispanic, and 10.10 percent black.

"The Oklahoma City schools have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars just to stop busing students in kindergarten through fourth grade," Miller said. "In Midland we already have neighborhood schools in grades Kindergarten through third."

Miller said previous busing of Oklahoma City students in grades Kindergarten through twelfth, caused "white flight."

"A lot of whites moved to the suburbs to get out of the busing situation," Miller said. "Oklahoma City also is the second largest city in the nation in terms of square mileage," he said. "Because of this, some students were spending two to three hours each day on buses."

Midland pupils spend an average of 15-20 minutes per trip on school buses, according to Walter Washam, MISD director of transportation.

Miller said MISD's cluster system gives the school district the advantage of "utilizing facilities to their fullest."

He said the school district buses more students out of the Santa Rita Elementary School area, than are bused into it. Santa Rita has the largest enrollment of all elementary schools in the district.

"Midland's enrollment is increasing, Oklahoma City's is decreasing," Miller said. "They are closing schools in Oklahoma City and have more space than they can use. By busing in Midland we can equalize the overcrowding."

"Also, since Midland's growth is in the northeast," Miller said, "without busing, those schools would be overflowing and schools in the south and east Midland would have the lowest enrollments."

Miller said proponents of neighborhood schools say the cluster system discourages parental involvement.

"When I was in Oklahoma City we had 8,000 parents registered as PTA members in a district with a 37,000 enrollment," he said. "In Midland, with a 20,000 student enrollment, we have 12,000 PTA members."

The MISD spokesperson said a PTA rally in Oklahoma City drew 30 attendees, while in Midland a similar rally attracted 100 parents.

"I think the level of parent involvement is good here regardless of what grade or what school the child is attending," he said.

Miller said that most school districts don't have to deal with equally mixing as diverse an ethnic population as Oklahoma City's. "But the recent ruling is bound to be misinterpreted before we see a definite answer to what the impact really means."

Researchers disagree on how racial mixing in schools influences integration elsewhere in society. Most analysts do agree, however, that it will take 30 more years before the effectiveness of busing is fully understood.

Clemens arrested

HOUSTON (AP) — Boston Red Sox pitcher Roger Clemens and his brother, Gary, were charged Saturday with aggravated assault on a police officer after a skirmish in a West Houston nightclub, police said.

Clemens

Clemens, 28, and his brother, Gary, 39, were released on third-degree felony charges after posting bond of $2,000 each, according to Houston police spokesman Dan Turner.

Sgt C.J. Grysen said Clemens, who lives in Katy, about 25 miles west of Houston, was arrested at 1:30 a.m. Saturday after he and his brother wrestled with officers at the Bayou Mama's nightclub west of Houston's Galleria area.

"From what I can understand, Roger was involved in a disturbance — a large argument was going on — when the officer approached," Turner said.

Officer L. Oliedo was working off-duty as a security guard at the club and tried to break up the group, initially approaching Roger Clemens, Turner said.

■ Midland High's Joe Phillips and Midland Lee's Justin Firkins receive All-State football honors from the Texas Sports Writers Association.

Phillips

Firkins

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

Midland High offensive tackle Joe Phillips was named as first team Class 5A All-State by the Texas Sports Writers Association Saturday while Midland Lee offensive guard Justin Firkins claimed second team honors.

With the first team selection, Phillips, 6-6, 235 pounds, becomes the first player in District 4-5A to win first team berths on two All-State teams in the same season. In December, Phillips was a first team pick on the Associated Press Sports Editors All-State team.

For years the TSWA was the official All-State team, but the AP Sports Editors got in on the selection process for the first time this year.

"This is great," said Phillips, who has committed to Texas for the Feb. 6 national signing date. "I didn't even know there were two teams picked this year.

"This is all really nice after what happened last year. Last year (1989) we (Midland High) had only two honorable mention picks on the All-District team, and I wasn't even one of them. And now to make All-District and two All-State teams is really special."

Firkins, an honorable mention choice in the Sports Editors selections, was a first team offensive tackle last year as a junior in the TSWA, but was moved to guard this season, a position that was really strong across the state this past season.

Firkins, like Phillips, was also an All-District pick this year. Firkins was an All-District pick two years in a row.

"I'm not really disappointed that I didn't make the first team again (on the TSWA team) because it's tough to get on one of these teams. I moved from a different position this year and it took me a while to adjust. I still think that this proves that last year was no fluke," Firkins, who is 6-0, 240 pounds, said.

Firkins said that several "small schools" have shown an interest in him, but he hasn't decided if he will even try to play college football.

"I'm a little burned out on it," Firkins said. "If I miss it, I may try to walk on somewhere."

Lee junior center K.C. Jones and MHS running back James Lee, both All-District selections, won honorable mention status on the Sports Editors team in December, but neither were picked on the TSWA team.

The only other 4-5A player to be honored by the TSWA was linebacker Jason Johns of Odessa High, who was a third team defensive selection.

In Class A, Garden City sophomore kicker Jody Bradford won a second team

Associated Press

President Bush told the NFL on Saturday that it should go about business as usual and play Sunday's games as scheduled. At the same time, the NFL and other sports organizers continued to increase security.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the NFL had asked if it would be appropriate for Sunday's games to be played.

"Our attitude is that the business of the nation has to continue and should continue, and we are conducting this war with a high degree of public support ... and we don't see any need why people should disrupt their lives any more than necessary." Fitzwater said. "The president's attitude is that ... the games should go on."

Rematches key NFL showdowns

■ In the NFC championship, San Francisco dreams of a 'Threepeat,' while New York seeks to avenge a 7-3 regular-season loss to the 49ers.

Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — For most of the 1990 season, this is the way it was supposed to be: the New York Giants as the final obstacle for the San Francisco 49ers en route to their "Threepea'" in the 25th anniversary Super Bowl.

But was it supposed to be Joe Montana vs. Jeff Hostetler, who has as many NFL starts as Montana has MVP trophies?

The two teams that became the first since 1934 to open a season 10-0 in tandem, play for the NFC title Sunday and the right to represent the NFC in Tampa. It also has historic signficance — if the 49ers win and beat either Buffalo or the Los Angeles Raiders in the Super Bowl next week, they will become the first team ever to win three straight Super Bowls and five overall.

"We're very close to a goal that was set in a dream," Montana says, expressing a sentiment that the 49ers have trouble sublimating to the immediate goal of this week's game.

"That's enough to be excited about in itself."

Based on the last six seasons, this game IS the Super Bowl — no AFC team since

San Francisco's Kevin Fagan and the rest of the 49er defense will try to contain the scrambling of backup New York quarterback Jeff Hostetler.

■ Expected cold weather in the AFC championship could make a drastic change in the conditions that saw Buffalo defeat the Los Angeles Raiders 38-24 in October.

Associated Press

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. — On a clear autumn night, under perfect conditions, the Los Angeles Raiders and Buffalo Bills staged a wild shootout won 38-24 by the hosts.

This Sunday, it probably won't be clear, it definitely won't be autumn, the sun will be out — although likely obscured — and the field might be frozen.

Oh, yes, the stakes will be slightly higher, too. The Raiders and Bills will play for the AFC Championship.

"That game we played earlier, we can't think about what happened," said defensive end Greg Townsend, the Raiders' sack leader with 12½ and a dynamic force on a strong line. "I think we played real well that first game, but we've just got to put that away. The main thing is we have to think about the present, not the past, keep our concentration until the game is over."

The Raiders apparently didn't do that in October.

"They had us and we made some big plays on special teams and defense and took it away," Buffalo's Jim Kelly recalled. "For three periods, they were bet-

Sagre takes shorter route

By Bill Grimes

Who said short people aren't supposed to be top-notch in any swim event but the breaststroke?

In an era when top swimmers are increasingly tall, 5-foot-1 Marika Sagre is a change of pace. The Odessa Permian senior, who swims for the City of Midland swim team, set a Mabee Memorial Swim Center record in the senior girls 100-yard butterfly, and Saturday at the Texas Commerce Bank-City of Midland Swim Team Winter Invitational.

Sagre, a foreign exchange student from Sweden, and fellow record-breakers Matthew Houston and Monica Stroman led COM to a lopsided

Williams calls it quits at MHS

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

Midland High head track coach Johnny Williams, who has coached in the Midland Independent School District since 1952, officially announced his retirement this week and he will be replaced by Farris Strambler, according to Jack Tayrien, Midland athletic director.

Williams

Williams' retirement date was officially Friday, Jan. 11, but waited until now to make the announcement public until Tayrien could name his replacement.

"Due to the time frame of my decision to retire, with track season right on us, I wanted things to be worked out before I make a public announcement," said Williams.

Tayrien said, "Johnny officially retired on Jan. 11, but we talked with him about the possibility of working part time and to continue coaching the track team at Midland High through the next semester.

"However, Johnny also is an assistant football coach and we felt like we needed to fill that position with the head track coach, and spring training also takes place. We felt naming the new coach now would be the best possible way to go.

"We really hate losing Johnny because he has been such a big part of our programs over these many years. You never want to lose one like him."

Strambler

Strambler will join Midland High as a part-time teacher through the spring semester. In addition to coaching track, Strambler will also become an assistant football coach under Davis Corley.

Williams, 65, came to Midland right out of the University of Southern California as head football and track coach at Carver High School. In fact, Williams still holds a couple of kickoff and punt return records at USC.

Ironically, Strambler, 45, played football and ran track under Williams at Carver in the early 1960s.

"I understand throughly the legend of Coach Williams, and Ed Nixon before him, and hold them both in high esteem,"

Spartan kicker, 'Bama QB shine

Associated Press

In a game with little drama and few big plays, it wasn't surprising that the most valuable player in Saturday's Hula Bowl was Michigan State's John Langeloh.

Both squads sputtered on offense, and it was Langeloh's foot that finished three East drives with field goals in a 23-10 victory over the West.

"It's not too often that a kicker becomes the MVP in college or the pros," said Langeloh, whose three field goals tied a game record.

Langeloh, who connected from 31, 42 and 22 yards, admitted benefitting from a gentlemen's agreement that teams wouldn't rush punts, field goals or extra points.

"I knew they wouldn't be coming, and that helped," Langeloh said. "You've only got two or three days to work on the hold and snap, and you can't get them down in that amount of time."

The other member of the Michigan connection, Michigan back Jarrod Bunch, ran for a touchdown in the second quarter to put the East in control.

Oregon quarterback Bill Musgrave moved from the West roster to the East team and threw a touchdown pass to Florida State's Lawrence Dawsey. Musgrave replaced Miami's Craig Erickson, who sprained his right knee during practice.

Alabama's Gary Hollingsworth engineered three first-quarter scoring drives that gave the AFC an early lead it never relinquished in a 38-28 victory over the NFC in the Senior Bowl.

The AFC led by 10 or more points throughout the game after building a 17-0 lead.

Hollingsworth threw a 21-yard touchdown pass to LSU's Harvey Williams late in the opening period after his passing set up a 1-yard touchdown run by Penn State's Gary Brown and a 28-yard field goal by Alabama's Philip Doyle.

Two other AFC quarterbacks also threw for touchdowns as the trio outdid two potential first-round draft choices for the NFC — Dan McGwire of San Diego State and Brett Favre of Southern Mississippi.

Rice's Donald Hollis hit Tennessee's Alvin Harper on a 54-yard scoring pass in the second quarter and Louisville's Browning Nagle connected with Harper on a 38-yard scoring pass in the third as the AFC reached the middle of the third quarter before being forced to punt.

Cook's comeback nearly complete

Associated Press

Hawaiian Open

HONOLULU — John Cook moved to within 18 holes of being all the way back.

Cook, who insists his comeback from career-threatening wrist surgery won't be complete until he wins again, took sole control of the lead Saturday in the third round of the Hawaiian Open.

"Winning would mean a lot — another step, a very big step," Cook said Saturday after shooting a 69 in blustery, gusty Trade Winds.

He completed three rounds at 199, 17 under par on the Waialae Country Club course that played much tougher Saturday with the return of the breezes.

With one round to go in the chase for a $198,000 first prize, Cook held a two-stroke advantage over Gil Morgan, who remained close with a last-hole eagle-3.

Morgan, 44, a non-practicing optometrist in his 19th season on the PGA Tour, hit a 3-wood second shot to within three feet of the cup for the eagle that completed a 69 and got him through 54 holes at 201, 15 under par.

At least seven others had a shot at overtaking Cook, who missed most of the 1989 season with hand and wrist problems that threatened to end his career.

Dave Rummells and Chip Beck were three behind at 202. Rummells moved into postion with a 65, the best round of the windy day, and Beck shot 70.

Three-time U.S. Open champ Hale Irwin survived some very erratic play — he hit only eight fairways and eight greens — with spectacular putting and salvaged a 68.

"To get out of that with a 68 makes me very happy. I really got the maximum out of it," said Irwin, who one-putted nine of the first 11 holes and used only 25 strokes on the greens.

He was tied at 203 with Ed Humenik, who had a 71.

Ed Dougherty, Larry Mize and Fred Funk were five strokes off the pace at 204. Dougherty moved up with a 66, Mize shot 70 and Funk 71.

The windy conditions, in sharp contrast to the gentle breezes of the first two days, opens up the race to a host of challengers, Cook said.

"This is the Waialae we all know.

"Anybody can come from anywhere here. You don't look back; you just try to keep playing forward," Cook said.

"I'm much more comfortable now than at any time since I've come back," he said.

"I've been there a few times (two playoff losses last year) and that helps. Before, I wasn't quite sure what to expect.

"Now, I'm a lot more comfortable with the lead, with being in the hunt. I'm looking forward to it," he said.

Defending champion David Ishii, a native of Hawaii who plays most of his golf in Japan, was followed by a huge gallery of family and friends as he struggled to a 73.

With one round to go, Ishii was out of the title chase at 211, 12 behind the leader.

Scott Simpson, a former U.S. Open champion who led or shared the lead through the first two rounds, went to a 75 and a 205 total.

Double eagle scored

Staff Report

Mike Cook produced a rare double eagle at Midland Country Club Saturday with a two on the par 5, No. 15 hole, using a driver and a 3-wood.

The feat is more rare than a hole-in-one, but this is Cook's third double eagle. He was playing with Paul Morris, Bryant Williams, Jim Crowder and Paul Hoover.

Sheehan takes lead in Jamaican title defense

Associated Press

LPGA Jamaica

MONTEGO BAY, Jamaica — Defending champion Patty Sheehan shot a 1-under-par 70 on Saturday to take a two-stroke lead over Judy Dickinson after two rounds of the Jamaica Classic.

Sheehan, a stroke down when play began, was at 4-under 138 after two tours of the 6,202-yard Tryall Golf and Beach Club course. While first-round leader Sarah McGuire was sliding back in the field with a 76, Dickinson, with a 68, and Caroline Keggi, who shot 67, made moves to the top of the leader board. They were only two players able to break 70. Dickinson was at 140, one shot ahead of Keggi.

"The wind didn't blow as hard today" as on Friday, said Sheehan, who with McGuire put up the only sub-70 scores of the first round.

"Nothing too spectacular," Sheehan said of her three-birdie, two-bogey round. "I still had trouble concentrating. I'm having trouble reading the greens. I'm missing putts on the high side of the hole. I made a lot of 3-footers coming in and it saved me.

"I had a lot of chances for birdie. I'll take hitting the ball well. If I two-putt, I can deal with that.

"It looks good at this stage, but I'm sure Judy will be firing away at the pin tomorrow."

Dickinson, who struggled much of last year after taking 1989 off to give birth to twins, rode hot putter to the best round of the day. She was at 4-under after 10 holes, bogied 11, then got her fifth birdie with an 8-foot putt on No. 12. She three-putted for bogey on No. 16.

"I was playing pretty well at home," Dickinson said. "I felt really good about it.

"I feel like I have a lot of my strength back. If I let myself win, I feel like I can."

Keggi, who struggled to a 74 in the first round, called her 68 on Saturday "a lot more fun. Yesterday, I felt like I didn't concentrate too well, first tournament and all."

Keggi credited a new driver with a graphite-like shaft for turning around her game. "Once I'm in play, the rest of the game gets into place."

Keggi, 1-over after eight holes, birdied Nos. 9 and 10 to get under par.

Mavs snap 5-game losing streak

Associated Press

Alex English scored 23 points and the Dallas Mavericks snapped a 5-game losing streak on Saturday night, celebrating the return of coach Richie Adubato with a 110-95 victory over the Charlotte Hornets.

Adubato was back on the bench after being fined $1,500 and suspended for Friday night's game because of his conduct following a 100-94 loss to San Antonio earlier in the week.

Dallas led only 52-51 at halftime although the Hornets lost one of their top players in the first period.

Rex Chapman, who scored 35 points in the Hornets' 117-110 over San Antonio on Friday night, sprained his left ankle with 1:21 left in the first period with seven points and didn't return.

Rodney McCray and Derek Harper each scored 20 points for the Mavs and Rolando Blackman added 15.

Rockets 107, Clippers 96

Otis Thorpe had 31 points and 13 rebounds as the Houston Rockets snapped a four-game losing streak by beating Los Angeles.

Larry Smith, playing in place of injured All-Star center Akeem Olajuwon, added 20 rebounds and 8 points, joining Olajuwon and Charles Barkley as the only players in the past seven seasons to post consecutive 20-rebound games.

Spurs 117, Nuggets 108

David Robinson had 28 points and 19 rebounds and San Antonio outscored Denver 25-14 in the fourth quarter en route to their victory over the Nuggets.

With the victory, the Spurs preserved their record as the only NBA team that hasn't lost consecutive games this season.

With Denver leading 95-94 a minute into the final quarter, the Spurs scored the next six points on baskets by Sean Higgins, Terry Cummings and Rod Strickland for a 100-95 lead with 8:42 left.

COACHES: Strambler learned under Williams said Strambler. "I consider it an honor to be given the opportunity to contribute to the track program at Midland High. If I can be half as successful as those two, I would consider my efforts successful."

While at Carver, Williams won a state football championship at Midland's Memorial Stadium in 1961 against Conroe. The year before his Carver Hornets finished as the state runner-up to Conroe in a game played in Conroe.

Williams was at Carver until it ceased to be a high school in 1967. He then became a football assistant and track assistant at Midland Lee in 1968. He moved over to Midland High in February of 1972 in the same capacity. He became head track coach in 1979 after serving as an assistant under Nixon.

As track coach at MHS, Williams produced one state champion in David Simmons in the discus in the early 1980s, one of two won by District 4-5A in the '80s.

Strambler had a brief stint with MISD in the 1979-80 school year as a coach at Midland Freshman, but he is certainly no stranger to the youth of Midland. Since getting out of the school district, Strambler has coached the Tall City Christian Track Club for the past six years and has prepared several athletes for national meets.

Strambler coached track for 9½ years in Oklahoma, starting in 1970 in Vian, Okla. He was at Frederick, Okla., from 1973 to 1979 where he was head coach in both football and track.

In 1976, Strambler served on the advisory board of the Oklahoma Track Coaches Association and was named coach of the year in Oklahoma. In 1978, Strambler was coach of the year in football in his district.

For the last three track seasons, Strambler has been a volunteer worker with the Lee track program.

Rangers, Sierra still far apart

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Outfielder Ruben Sierra and the Texas Rangers are more than $1 million apart in salary proposals for 1991.

Sierra, who had significant drops in average, home runs and RBIs last season, requested a salary of $3.1 million. The Rangers offered $2 million, a 23 percent raise over last season. Arbitration-eligible players and teams exchanged salary proposals Friday.

Sierra was one of 11 players to ask for at least $3 million. Since the arbitration process began in 1974, only three players had requested that much, and Don Mattingly of the New York Yankees has received the highest award at $1.975 million in 1987.

Campbell crushes Wales 11-5 in NHL All-Star game

CHICAGO (AP) — Vincent Damphousse became only the third NHL player to score four goals in an All-Star game and Wayne Gretzky added a record-setter Saturday as the Campbell Conference routed the Wales Conference 11-5.

Damphousse, the Toronto Maple Leafs' leading scorer with 14 goals, scored in the first period and added three more in the final period.

Damphousse now finds himself in heady company, joining Gretzky and Mario Lemeiux as the only players to score four goals in an All-Star game. Damphousse, a left wing, was named the game's most valuable player.

The Campbell Conference took charge with a four-goal burst in the second period that was highlighted by Gretzky's record 11th career All-Star game goal. The Campbells added four final period goals to make this the second highest scoring All-Star game.

Edberg edges Cash in power match

Associated Press

Australian Open

MELBOURNE, Australia — Stefan Edberg and Pat Cash put on a blazing show of hyper-speed tennis — rat-a-tat volleys too quick to count — to close a week of memorable matches and wrenched emotions at the Australian Open.

Edberg aged a year on court, squirming out of every tough situation by taking the big points in a nearly three-hour match, as he won 7-6 (8-6), 7-5, 6-2 with nine minutes left on his 25th birthday Saturday night.

Cash, fully recovered from the torn Achilles tendon that threatened his career two years ago, played with the quickness and acrobatic skill he displayed when he won Wimbledon in 1987.

This was a charged-up, X-rated match — Cash picked up a code violation for an audible obscenity — that pitted two serve-and-volley specialists in top form in front of a packed, roaring crowd of Aussies and Swedes.

"It was very high standard tennis," Cash said. "There were hardly any mistakes. I honestly can't remember a match that I've played against him that hasn't been of a very high standard. We're both very athletic. It makes exciting tennis. I just couldn't get the ball past him sometimes."

Edberg had won four of their previous six matches, including a brilliant five-setter for the title when this Grand Slam championship was played on grass in 1987, and both players knew what to expect. Their first meeting, a Davis Cup match here five years ago, produced a 13-11, 13-11, 6-4 victory for Cash.

This time on the hard courts of the mint green National Tennis Center the match was a fitting finish to a day that featured victories by a parade of Australian Open champions — Edberg, the 1985 and 1987 winner, Ivan Lendl the 1989 and 1990 winner, and Mats Wilander the 1983, 1984 and 1988 winner.

Lendl, seeded No. 3 this year, reached the round of 16 by beating another Swede, Magnus Gustafsson, 4-6, 6-2, 6-3, 6-2. Wilander, who has sunk to No. 47 in the rankings, beat seventh-seeded Brad Gilbert 7-6 (8-6), 6-1, 6-4. Lendl next plays Aaron Krickstein, who beat Patrick Kuhnen 6-4, 6-4, 6-1.

GAMES: Precautions taken at AFC, NFC playing sites

(From 1C)

Precautions, however, were being taken. Anti-terrorist measures as well as steps to limit disruption by anti-war protesters were being put into operation from San Francisco to Saalbach-Hinterglemm, Austria.

The NFL said Candlestick Park, the site of San Francisco 49ers-New York Giants NFC championship game, was being guarded around the clock. League officials said all fans carrying items into the park will be subject to searches.

Earlier in the week, officials in Buffalo said extra precautions also would be taken in and around Rich Stadium, where the Bills plays the Los Angeles Raiders. The security force will be doubled and people with no direct business at the stadium will be kept away from the area.

NFL spokesman Joe Browne said said there still was a chance the games could be postponed if developments in the Persian Gulf caused television to switch to news coverage.

Meanwhile, the World Alpine Skiing championships cancelled Monday's scheduled opening ceremony in Austria on "moral and ethical grounds because of the political situation" in the Middle East. The organizers also brought in a special anti-terrorist unit for additional security.

Franz Beydi, security coordinator for the championships, said he had few fears of an Arab terrorist attack. He said the absence of any Israeli and Arab athletes made an attack unlikely.

"They would have to ski over the mountains to get here," he said. "If we were not sure of security, we would not have the championships."

U.S. skiers already had withdrawn from the championships, scheduled to begin Tuesday and end Feb. 3. The Salzburger Nachrichten newspaper said Saturday that the International Ski Federation (FIS) would make a final decision on Sunday whether to call off the championships. FIS officials could not be reached for comment.

A special anti-terrorist police unit has reportedly arrived in Saalbach-Hinterglemm to bolster about 430 policemen deployed for the championships.

Visitors will have to leave their cars outside city limits and travel to the slopes on shuttle buses. Beydi said only people with confirmed bookings would be allowed through.

Tony Carlino, coach of the U.S. bobsled teams, said he had asked police to tighten security in Cervinia, Italy, to protect American athletes at the European Bobsled Championships.

Referring to American hurdles specialist Edwin Moses, who is working toward a berth on the U.S. Olympic bobsled team for 1992, Carlino said, "Edwin is worried about the war in the Gulf and is afraid, as well as his teammates, of possible retaliatory attacks. He does not want to talk to anybody."

In Milan, the Italian League ignored pleas by some players to postpone Sunday's soccer games because of the war. However the Italian Olympic Committee called for a minute of silence before Sunday's kickoffs.

Arrigo Gattai, who heads Italy's highest sport authority, said security in Italy's stadiums is guaranteed by anti-hooligan police forces, who search and control fans before they can enter the soccer arenas.

In addition soldiers will be on duty in airports, railway stations and other public places as additional anti-terrorism security, Italian Olympic officials said.

The Buckeyes, who also got 16 points from Mark Baker and 13 from Perry Carter, moved to 15-0 overall and 5-0 in the conference.

Jackson added seven assists and Carter had 11 rebounds for Ohio State, which matched its best start in the Big Ten since winning its first five league games 11 years ago. The Buckeyes face No. 3 Indiana on Monday.

Ohio State, which led 30-27 at the half, maintained its lead at 36-33 with 16:57 left after Illinois' Rennie Clemons drove the length of the court for a layup.

Texas wins Wright way

Associated Press

Team scoring leader Joey Wright, hurt near the end of the game, was perfect from long range as he scored 26 points Saturday to lead Texas past the DePaul Blue Demons, 90-80, in college basketball.

Wright, a 6-foot-3 senior guard, fell to the floor with 2:09 to play and left the game. He suffered a strained left hamstring but the severity of the injury would not be known until Sunday, a team spokesman said.

With its victory in the nationally televised game, Texas of the Southwest Conference raised its record to 10-5. DePaul, a Chicago independent, fell to 8-7.

"This is a big win and big computer win," said Texas coach Tom Penders with an eye toward NCAA tournament selections. "Now we've got a chance to get a roll going.

"We are a very good basketball team right now.

DePaul coach Joey Meyer said, "There was a lot of slapping and grabbing going on out there. It's tough to win on the road when you shoot 14 free throws, to their 32."

Texas converted 24 of 32 free throws, DePaul 11 of 14 for a 13-point Texas margin.

The Longhorns, supported by a noisy crowd of 13,465, grabbed a 33-26 lead in the first half. But DePaul tied it 36-36 at halftime on Brad Niemann's 3-pointer at the buzzer.

DePaul led 66-64 on Terry Davis' jump shot with 7:41 remaining in the game.

Following a TV timeout, Teyon McCoy of Texas tied it 66-66, and he and Wright swished consecutive 3-pointers for a 72-66 Texas lead the Longhorns would not relinquish.

Wright, averaging 20.6 points a game, was 6-for-6 from 3-point range and moved into sixth place on the all-time Texas scoring list with 1,477 career points.

As a team, Texas shot 10-of-13 on 3-pointers.

Locksley Collie of Texas finished with 22 points after scoring only 3 in the first half. DePaul's 6-foot-10 Jeff Stern had a strong defensive game around the basket.

McCoy added 15, including 13 in the second half.

Stern finished with seven blocks and had a game-high 10 rebounds. Stern, from Waxahachie, is one of two Texans in the DePaul starting lineup. Stephen Howard from Dallas is DePaul's second-leading scorer with a 17.6 -point average, but he scored only 10 against Texas.

Terry Davis with 28 points, including 11 straight in the second half when he scored 21, was the scoring leader for the game. Teammate Melvon Foster scored 17.

Texas, led by Benford Williams with five, had 17 steals as DePaul committed 23 turnovers to 17 for Texas.

Tax increase for stadium approved

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Backers of a $165 million stadium for the Texas Rangers won a referendum Saturday as voters overwhelmingly approved a sales tax increase for the proposed facility.

Of the 33,860 votes cast, 65 percent — or 21,924 voters — supported the sales tax increase, while 11,936 voted against it.

The referendum passed in every precinct, said Teresa Thompson, assistant to the city manager.

"This is the highest turnout we've had on any kind of referendum of this kind," Thompson said. "Absentee voting gave us some indication that we would get this kind of turnout."

Of the 6,191 absentee ballots cast, 65.1 percent — or 4,032 voters — were in favor of the increase and 2,159 voted against it.

"It's an overwhelming victory for the city," Arlington Mayor Richard Greene said. "The positive and progressive attitude of the people of our city has expressed itself in an overwhelming way."

Greene said he was surprised by the margin of victory.

"I had underestimated the positive spirit of our people," he said. "The choice was whether or not we wanted the Rangers to stay in our city versus a modest tax increase, and I think people recognized that."

The sales tax increase will back $135 million in city bonds for the ballpark. The Rangers would contribute the other $30 million through the sale of luxury boxes and other seating.

If bond revenue falls short, a $1 per ticket surcharge would help pay for the stadium.

Citizens Against New Taxes opposed the proposal, arguing that the Rangers were a private enterprise that should not use public funds.

"If you were a single mother on a fixed income with a couple of kids and trying to get by in the city of Arlington, (the half-cent sales tax) is very significant," Jerry Sherrill of CANT said. "For people on a fixed income, it's very significant. We tried to get the people here to understand that. But the people of Arlington have spoken."

The facility would include such amenities as a Little League ballpark, a hall of fame, privately financed shops and restaurants, an amphitheatre and a riverwalk.

NFC: Precedents point to another San Francisco win the Los Angeles Raiders after the 1983 season has won an NFL championship.

Based on another precedent, San Francisco should win Sunday. Since 1979, only the 1988 49ers have won an NFC title game on the road and home teams have won seven of the eight playoff games this season. They won the right to play this game at home by beating the Giants 7-3 on Dec. 3, a game that in the end made the difference between San Francisco's 14-2 regular-season record and New York's 13-3.

But there are more elements to this game than precedents or the fact that the two teams don't particularly like each other — last year, the Giants accused Wesley Walls of using an illegal "cut block" that cracked a bone in Lawrence Taylor's leg. After the Dec. 3 game, New York quarterback Phil Simms and San Francisco safety Ronnie Lott got into a shouting match on the field.

Then there's the intriguing matchup at quarterback.

At quarterback for the 49ers will be Montana, a three-time Most Valuable Player in the Super Bowl; winner of the NFL MVP for the second straight season and probably the best quarterback who ever lived. Last Saturday, he threw for two touchdowns as the 49ers beat Washington 28-10 to get this far.

Montana stayed home Friday with the flu, but coach George Siefert did not seem overly concerned.

"We're told it's a mild kind of flu and he should be ready for the game," Seifert said Friday.

At quarterback for the Giants is Hostetler, who will be starting his fifth game in seven years NFL seasons, replacing Simms, another former Super Bowl MVP who severely bruised his left foot against Buffalo on Dec. 15. Hostetler, far more mobile than Simms, passed for two touchdowns and ran for another in the 31-3 victory over Chicago.

"I don't thing anyone who's involved in the game is looking at any contrast in the quarterbacks," Montana says. "Football is a team effort. It's not just me against someone or Jerry Rice against someone or Ronnie Lott against someone."

In fact, it's more complex than that.

In the first game, the New York defense held Montana to 12 of 29 for 152 yards, his worst performance of the season. It was only the only defense to keep San Francisco in single figures this year.

But it didn't win because San Francisco's underrated defense did even better, holding New York to 221 net yards and holding them on four downs from the 9 with four minutes left. "It was the most exciting game I've been involved with since the 1981 championship game," says Seifert.

No one believes this one will be as low-scoring — the combined 10 points were, in fact, the fewest scored in any NFL game this season. But it's also unlikely to be a blowout.

Hostetler is the wild-card.

In last week's game against the Bears, he was 10 of 17 for 112 yards, a modest enough figure. He also ran 6 times for 43 yards.

But two of his completions were for touchdowns and all six of his runs were for first downs, two of those on fourth-down plays.

Hostetler's scrambling is one element with which the 49ers must contend.

"He adds a new dimension that we have to be aware of," Seifert says.

There may be more, although probably not the four-man line the Giants used to hold the Bears to 27 yards rushing. Perhaps not even the same nickel defense that limited Rice to one catch for 13 yards, his worst game since 1985.

"We've got a couple of surprises," says Lawrence Taylor, the Giant's equivalent of Montana — he's the player for whom the 49ers are preparing the most.

"A couple of years ago we got into a shootout with them and lost. This year it was a defensive game and we lost. It's time for the Giants to find a way to win."

Besides Simms' absence, there are several changes in the cast of characters since the teams last met.

The Giants will be without Rodney Hampton, the rookie running back who carried a greater load as the year went on. He broke a leg in last week's game, which means 33-year-old Ottis Anderson, the league's oldest running back, will probably carry the bulk of the load.

But they will have back Jumbo Elliott, the 305-pound left tackle who is their best run blocker. He will be matched on Kevin Fagan, 40 pounds lighter, who was one of the keys to holding the Giants to 79 rushing yards in the first meeting.

San Francisco should have a much more dangerous receiving game.

Despite his 26-yard catch for the only touchdown of the first game, John Taylor was hobbled by a knee injury, allowing the Giants to gang up on Rice. The 49ers will also have Mike Sherrard, who returned last week to catch three passes, one for a touchdown, in the 28-10 win over Washington.

With all that, the 49ers are favored by more than a touchdown to complete Montana's dream.

Which is all right with the Giants.

"I think it's great we're going back to San Francisco," says defensive end John Washington, whose fourth-down stuff of Brad Muster at the goal line was one of the big plays of the Chicago game.

"The only people who will be there who think we can win is the Giants. It's a great situation for us."

ter than us, but we got them in the fourth."

Indeed. The Raiders took a 24-14 lead with 10:35 left on Jay Schroeder's second TD pass of the night. But the Bills came right back when Kelly hit James Lofton for a 42-yard score.

"We were very fortunate to hit the big plays like that one," said Lofton, who was cut by the Raiders in the 1989 training camp.

The next one was the biggest play. Steve Tasker, Buffalo's special teams demon, blocked a punt and rookie James Williams ran 38 yards with it, giving the Bills a 28-24 lead.

"When our special teams make a big play, block a kick, we don't consider it luck," Bills coach Marv Levy said. "We consider it the result of hard work from good players."

The Bills' onslaught wasn't over. Scott Norwood added a 23-yard field goal for a 31-24 edge, then Nate Odomes stole the ball from Willie Gault and ran 49 yards for the clinching touchdown.

Buffalo scored 24 points in 6:03.

"You don't ever expect to score 24 points on any team in one quarter," Levy said.

"We felt like that was a game we let get away from us," LA safety Mike Harden said. "We feel like we've got to take charge from the beginning and not let up."

Taking charge could be difficult for the Raiders without Bo Jackson, who will not play. Jackson injured his hip in last week's playoff win against Cincinnati, and coach Art Shell said Saturday that Bo is out.

Greg Bell, on the injured reserved list since the first month of the season, will be available.

"They didn't have Bo last time, and they didn't have Howie Long," Lofton said. "They still come to play hard every game."

Long, the longtime star of the defensive line, will be there Sunday. If the Bills can control him, Townsend, Scott Davis and Bob Golic, plus pass-rushing linebacker Aaron Wallace, their chances for a first trip to the Super Bowl will be good.

"They have an excellent front line, maybe the best we've faced," All-Pro center Kent Hull said. "They play the run tough, they rush the passer well and they can overpower you. It's the kind of test you should have in a championship game."

Long likes the fact neither team is into much tomfoolery.

"You're not getting here by fooling people," he said. "You're getting here lining up in certain formations and just defying people to stop you."

The October win over the Raiders is the reason Buffalo has home field Sunday. The Bills won the AFC East at 13-3, while the Raiders were 12-4 in taking the West.

Los Angeles hasn't been this far since winning the 1984 Super Bowl, its third NFL championship. The Bills, winners of three straight division crowns, were in the 1988 conference title game, falling at Cincinnati.

"The first year (1988), we surprised people," Bills linebacker Shane Conlan said. "The second year, we thought we were better than we were. This year, we've put it together and we're mature enough to handle things.

"The overall outlook is better. We've been close the past couple of years, but it just shows how focused you have to be."

But, perhaps, not too focused.

"If you put too much importance on it, you can lock up as a player," Raiders DT Bob Golic said. "You have to find that fine line, being intense and being loose at the same time."

Anyone who can handle that challenge under championship pressure and in poor playing conditions deserves a trip to Florida next week.

COM: Stroman sets pool record in individual medley going into today's final day of competition. Houston set a pool record in the senior boys 100 fly, while winning three other events.

Stroman set a pool record in the 11-12 girls 200 individual medley. COM teammate Susie Carnett also broke the old pool record, and edged Stroman for high point honors in the age group. Stroman also won the senior girls 200 breaststroke, despite spotting most of her foes four or five years.

The COM swimmers have more than four times as many points as the second-place Lewisville Aquatic Club going into today's final day of competition. COM had 1,389 points going into today to Lewisville's 308.

In addition to setting her pool record, Sagre blew returning state qualifier Carrie Henry out of the water in both of the events at which Henry won Region I championships last year — the 50 and 100 freestyles. Sagre beat Henry by nearly two seconds in the 100 free, while also winning handily in the 50.

And the freestyle really isn't Sagre's thing. She expects to qualify for the state meet in the butterfly, however.

Sagre compares Texas high school swimming to national-class swimming in her home country.

"Swedish swimming is really like Texas swimming, because Sweden is such a small country," Sagre said.

She's already swam in the Swedish national championships, and hopes to qualify for a future Olympic team from her home country.

"The Olympics have been a dream," Sagre said. "I don't know if I can do it, but it would be a goal."

Houston's pool record time of 51.92 in the fly wasn't anywhere near his personal best. But the Midland High junior has been training twice a day, along with regularly lifting weights with an eye toward peaking at the state meet — and an expected confrontation with defending state champion Murray Easton of San Antonio Churchill.

To beat Easton, Houston figures he'll have to break 50 seconds — something he has not done.

"If I beat Murray, I'll have to break 50 seconds," Houston said. "That was pretty much my goal last year, but I didn't have very much concentration on swimming then."

GRANDMOTHER CLOCK

In the early days of our country this clock would have been reserved for the very wealthy. Now, with our easy-to-follow pattern, you can economically build this 6-footer for your own home. Lay the full-size pattern parts onto the wood, trace and cut out. Our materials list, parts schedule and an exploded drawing simplify construction. The clock movement and dial are available separately.

PART-TIME INCOME AVAILABLE

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several routes which need to be filled with qualified, responsible individuals. Now is one of the best times ever to obtain a route in your area!

Often asked questions:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?

Yes! Our current carrier force is already 65% adult and 35% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:
- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a carrier, you do not need daycare!
- COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- YOUTHS who are involved in afternoon school functions, but want to work!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends.

How much money can I make as a carrier?

Depending on the size of the route(s) from $200 to $600 monthly! Some motor routes make even more. Although no motor routes are expected to be available, depending on your service record, you may qualify to move up to a motor route later!

How long does it take?

The actual delivery takes 1 - 2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2 - 3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the route(s). Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many carriers choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?

6 AM Monday - Friday and 7 AM on Saturday and Sunday

Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, carriers do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!

RESERVE YOUR ROUTE NOW!

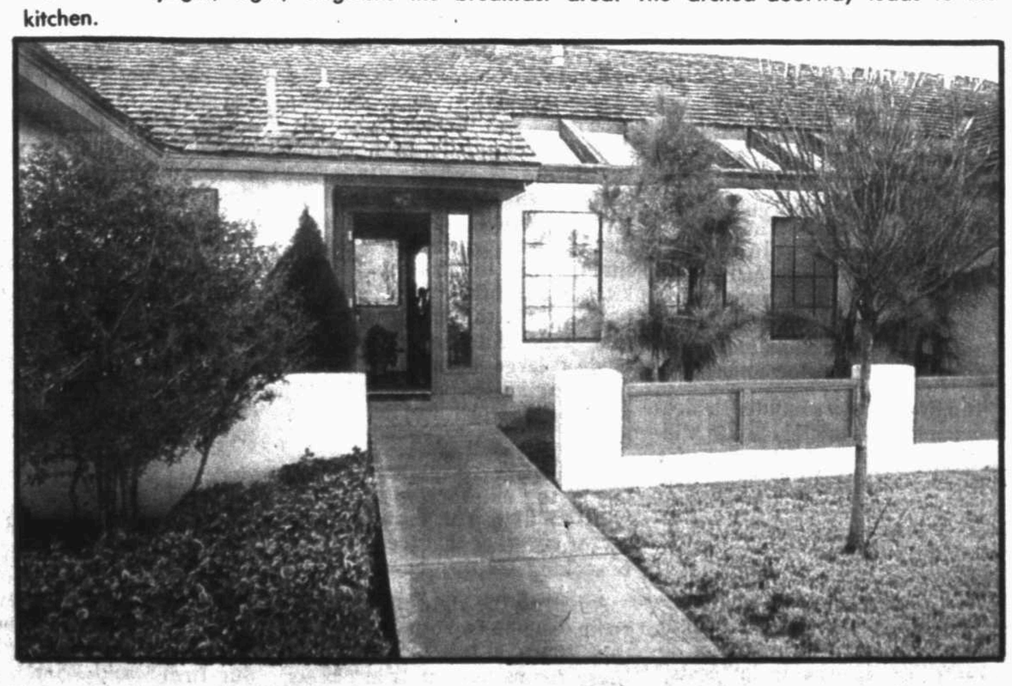
Function sets the agenda for this skillfully arranged home that takes advantage of each square foot. The central part of this week's featured home — which includes the kitchen, living area, dining and breakfast room — was designed with the role of the adjacent rooms in mind.

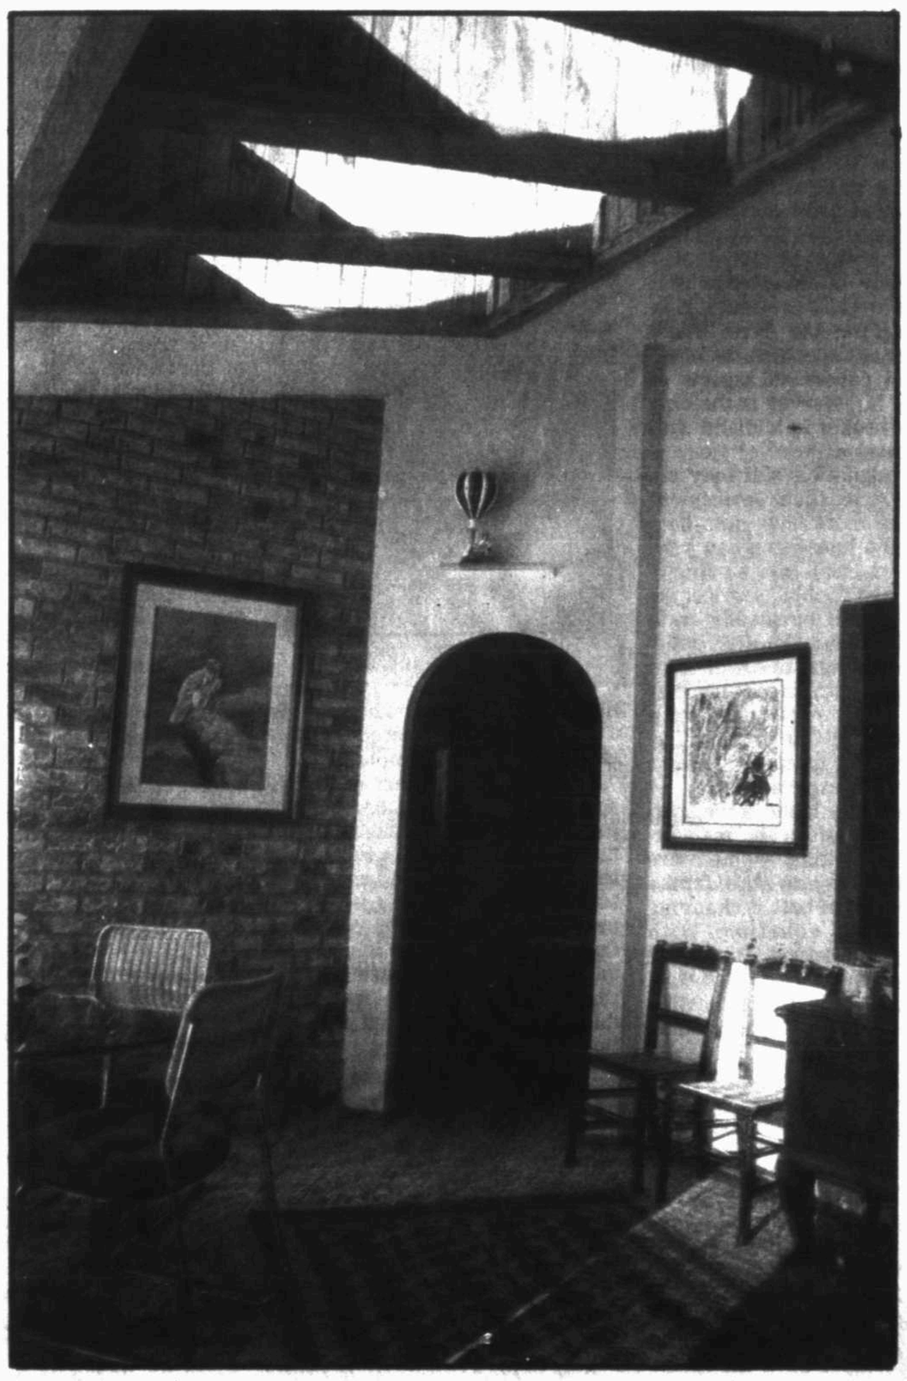
Walls and furniture are used to divide these four rooms, but doorways, a short brick wall and an open area above the kitchen sink allow these areas to feel as one large room. Three different ceiling heights with rough cedar beams and a skylight, in addition to lots of windows also add to the open appeal of this three-bedroom home.

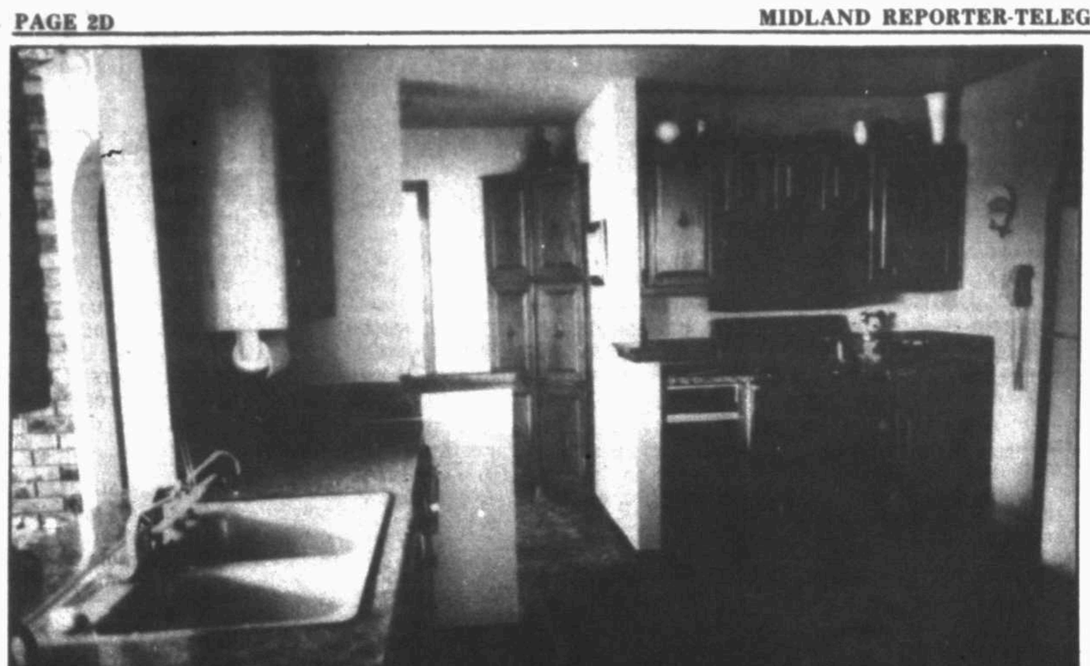
The exterior of the Green Tree Country Club home is highlighted by a light stucco exterior which is accented by Wedgewood blue. The low-maintenance yard focuses on a beautifully landscaped bed that is situated next to the circle drive. A three-foot wall serves as a small courtyard next to the home's entrance.

Please see SPACE/2D

This three-bedroom home, below, is located across from the Green Tree Country Club golf course. A skylight, right, brightens the breakfast area. The arched doorway leads to the kitchen.







Beverly Shilling/Reporter-Telegram

The kitchen in the center of the home. An area above the sink views the breakfast area.

A spacious bedroom, above, is sequestered off of the kitchen and breakfast room. Corner windows frame the back yard. A nook highlights another bedroom, below. This room is located in a hall next to the front entrance.

SPACE: Light stucco exterior, arched doorways are few of home's amenities

(From 1D)

Arched doorways and a tile flooring welcomes guests as soon as they enter the home. A window to the right of the door brightens the entrance. The entrance hall opens into the kitchen through an arched doorway and a short corridor, to the left, leads to the formal dining room. The living area and breakfast room are situated behind the dining room and kitchen. The well-planned kitchen is divided into three areas. A Litton Aire microwave and Whirlpool range are situated along the right wall. The sink is centered on another wall. A space above the sink overlooks the breakfast room. A dishwasher and trash compactor are built-in on each side. An L-shaped cabinet which is situated to the left of the doorway helps to divide the kitchen from the formal dining room. It is well-suited as a server or a bar when entertaining. This part of the kitchen overlooks the formal dining room.

A short brick wall divides the formal dining room and the living area. The different ceiling heights with cedar beams also help to determine the parameters of each room. A window is placed along the top of one wall and views the side yard. Cedar beams line the tall ceiling. Depending on one's needs, this room could also be used as a formal sitting area or for a grand piano.

A brick wall at one end of the living room features a fireplace with rough cedar inlaid at a slant on each side. The cedar mantle is situated above the fireplace. Windows line the back wall and the vaulted ceiling is also lined with cedar beams.

The breakfast room is located to the right of the living room. Another unique ceiling helps to define this area. Due to the size, it could easily accommodate a dining table, making it ideal as a formal dining room. Or, a game table could be situated at this end, thereby making the living room much larger. A cedar-lined skylight adds lots of sunshine into this area, as does the sliding glass door which opens onto the back patio.

To the right of the kitchen and breakfast area, an extra-wide hall leads to a full-bath and a sequestered bedroom. A cabinet is inset in one corner of the hall and a closet can be used for additional food storage.

Once again, depending on a family's lifestyle, this room could be used as a study, for a child or for overnight guests. Two windows in one corner provide a view of the back yard. This room also has a spacious closet and a ceiling fan.

The bath features a suede looking wallcovering, a long vanity and a bathtub. A window provides for natural lighting into this area.

A corridor to the right of the front door is lined with windows which frame the front yard. The home's second bedroom is situated at the beginning of the hall. It has a nook at one end, with a window overlooking the back yard, and a spacious closet.

The master bedroom is located at the end of the hall. The bed can be placed at one end which is oval in shape and a sitting area can be situated in front of a window. A ceiling fan is situated above the sitting area.

A door opens into one part of the master bath. It features a two-sink vanity along one wall. The opposite wall has a doorway which opens into the master bath. The separate bathing area has a built-in shower and two windows.

The other amenities in the home include a utility room, a two-car-garage with automatic door openers, a well-manicured lawn, mini blinds and a sprinkler system. Chaparral, Realtors is offering this home for $103,000.

Harvey first local Realtor to obtain CRP

Don Harvey has been a leader in the real estate industry for over 25 years and 1990 was no exception. Mr. Harvey was the first Realtor in this area to become broadly involved with the relocation industry from its earliest infancy. As a company, Don Harvey, Realtors has continued to be the "company of choice" by the majority of relocation companies and relocating employees active in this area.

In order to continue providing the quality of service in the relocation process, Mr. Harvey recently received his designation of certified relocation professional (CRP). The purpose of the CRP exam is to recognize those who have mastered a body of knowledge that covers the overall relocation process. Therefore, the exam is not limited to one's specific area of expertise but covers all aspects of relocation. Mr. Harvey is the only real estate broker in Midland with this designation.

"This designation will only enhance our Relocation Department which does more than just help people find a house in a new city. This department is also a communications and public service department. I still personally train our associates and the CRP designation will help me to better train these agents with the issues that families today must deal with when relocating. One problem facing relocation managers stems from the widespread entry of women into the labor force, particularly into historically male occupations. Working women are profoundly changing the family and the impact of both is changing the relocation equation. With more wives working there are more, mostly career-orientated, trailing husbands for relocation managers to deal with," explained Harvey.

The CRP designation was awarded by the Employee Relocation Council (ERC) which is a professional membership organization of corporations concerned with employee transfers. Membership companies in the Employee Relocation Council include over 1,000 major U.S. national relocation management companies and major relocation firms, in addition to over 8,500 associate and affiliate members comprised of the relocation service industry who provide a service to the relocated employee and his or her employer.

Don Harvey

Kim Young

According to Mr. Harvey, ERC is a professional organization encompassing the entire relocation industry. Their mission is to provide leadership, services and assistance to members enabling them to most effectively serve relocated families by proactively identifying and evaluating potential issues that may impact the relocation industry, domestically and internationally.

"ERC is for all of these diverse individuals, from the real estate brokerage community to the appraisal community to the moving van line community, to come together for one common purpose which is to serve America's mobile families. This goal is accomplished in a professional and sharing atmosphere," stated Mr. Harvey.

Kim Young is the Relocation Director for Don Harvey, Realtors. "Many times, I am the first contact for many of our clients and new customers. Not only do we provide information about homes and neighborhoods, but we also help with finding a doctor and I answer lots and lots of questions. I am very enthusiastic about Midland and I know the benefits of our area," explained Ms. Young.

Ms. Young is very active in the Midland community. She is involved for the second year with Leadership Midland. "This program shows what our community has to offer, from government agencies to the arts. Currently, I am serving on the curriculum committee which is involved in program planning." A graduate of Texas Tech University, Ms. Young has been in the relocation business for 10 years. She is also a member of the Junior League of Midland, DAR, Colonial Dames XVIII Century, Magna Charta and the First Baptist Church.

Gary Stapp is the general manager of Don Harvey, Realtors. His primary responsibility is working with the third-party relocation companies. Mr. Stapp has a broad background in every aspect of the relocation industry and was employed for over 10 years for Merrill Lynch Relocation Management, Inc. He has worked with employees through the appraisal process and acquisition of their homes, both as coordinator and manager. He has also worked with the resale of acquired homes, both as a real estate specialist and as manager of all resale activity over a six state area.

Don Harvey, Realtors is composed of not only the most experienced staff in all aspects of the relocation process, but also with a substantial number of top agents with many years of experience in the industry. A tremendous portion of their experience and success has been achieved through their service to transferring employees and their companies.

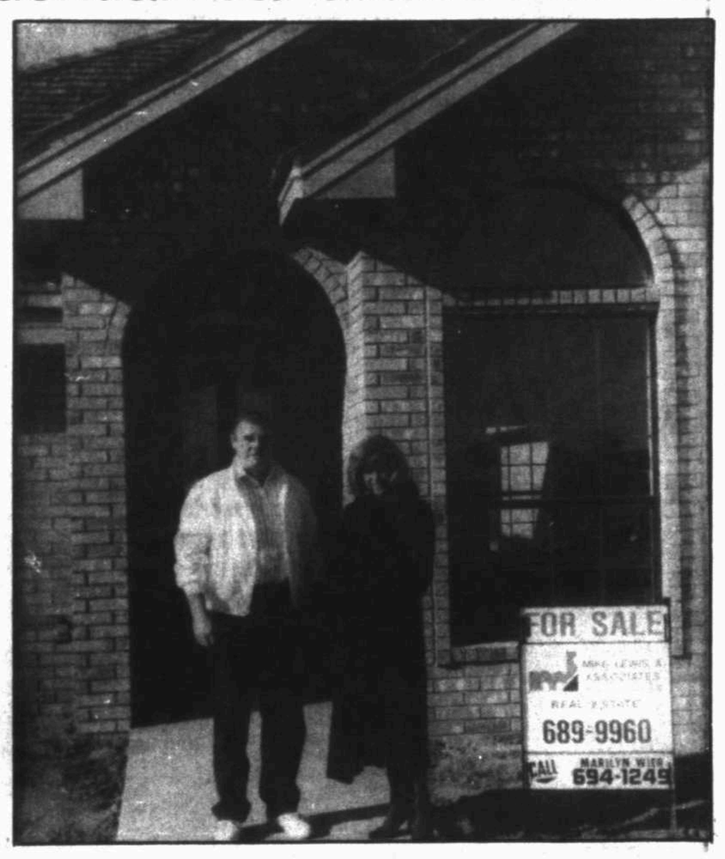
Don Harvey associates have been consistently recognized by their peers through the Midland Board of Realtors awards each year as they have consistently been the greatest body of award winners representing any company in our area.

Mike Lewis & Associates expand into Midland residential real estate market

By Jill Hancock
Advertising Feature Writer

Mike Lewis & Associates are pleased to announce their expansion into the residential real estate market in Midland. According to Mike Lewis, " We have always wanted to have a full-service real estate company in Midland which takes care of a person's needs, whether it is commercial, retail, industrial or residential. "We have been active in the Midland market for the last six years in commercial real estate. We have seen that many of our commercial customers are also looking for a home. In the past, we have referred them to other residential companies. We are extremely proud to have Marilyn Wier join our company because she is the 'best of the best' and we can now serve our clients desiring residential property in a proficient and professional manner. She will help our company get our residential division off to a good start," said Lewis.

Mike Lewis & Associates have two MeadowPark listings that are currently under construction — 4909 Kingsboro and 4805 Pine Meadow — each feature four bedrooms, three baths and one living area.



Marilyn Wier, an associate of Mike Lewis & Associates, and Bill Reynolds, left, a new MeadowPark builder, have a home at 4909 Kingsboro which is currently under construction open today from 2 p.m. until 5 p.m. Another MeadowPark listing at 4805 Pine Meadow is also open this afternoon.

"One of the reasons builders are becoming so active in the MeadowPark subdivision is due to the amenities that the subdivision offers, both to the builder and buyer. The price of the lots and the convenient location are the alluring aspects for the builders," Wier explained. "Prospective buyers want homes featuring quality construction and livable floor plans. The MeadowPark recreational facilities are also a big determining factor for some buyers. These facilities include a clubhouse, swimming pool, tennis courts and a play ground. This subdivision also has a very active homeowners association and architectural committee governing development."

Bill Reynolds is a builder to MeadowPark, but certainly not to Midland. He has been building for over 28 years in all areas of construction, which includes commercial, industrial and residential. "I have built homes in Polo Park, Trinity Meadows and Plantation Hills before beginning this home at 4909 Kingsboro. I like this subdivision because of its amenities, location and affordable lot costs," stated Reynolds.

The exterior of 4909 Kingsboro is highlighted by a tall front porch and arched transoms. It is designed around a spacious living area with a fireplace. Large windows are placed on each side of the fireplace which gives the home a light air feeling. The living room overflows into the formal dining room which has windows that frames the back yard. The kitchen and breakfast area is easily accessible to either the side or rear patio. Kitchen amenities include a large work island, Whirlpool appliances, desk and tiled floors — all which will delight any cook.

A bedroom is sequestered to the left of the entrance with easy access to a bath. This is an ideal setup for guests or that teenager that is seeking his own space.

A hall to the right of the living room leads to two other bedrooms that share a full bath. Both of these rooms have walk-in closets.

The master bedroom is situated at the end of the hall. A built-in cabinet is inset by one door and can be used for books or multi-purpose storage. The fabulous master bath has a large vanity with a make-up area, separate tub and shower and large walk-in closets.

This home contains over 2,300 square feet plus a three car garage. Completion date is 30 days or less. Selections of wallpaper, tile, carpet and formica can be made by the buyer at this time. This home is offered for $122,000 and is open between 2 p.m., and 5 p.m. today.

Another listing of Mike Lewis & Associates is located at 4805 Pine Meadow. It is being built by Christopher Construction and is listed for $125,500. It will also be open today between 2 p.m. and 5 p.m.

"We're delighted to have these two quality built homes listed by our firm," said Wier.

Fore more information about these homes call Mike Lewis & Associates at 689-9960.

Langston Realtors talk about...

Should you be a Langston Realtor?

Langston

Pat Orseth, our Administrative Vice President, begins intensive training schedules January 28th for newly licensed or soon-to-be licensed associates, February 4th for experienced associates who are interested in gaining additional listing and selling skills, and mid-February for orientation of experienced agents who are newly affiliated with Langston Realtors. We really believe that a large part of our company's explosive growth this past year, is due to the many opportunities we offer for training for agents-whether newly licensed, experienced, just need a boost, or newly associated with Langston and no one could be better than Pat, at least that's what our associates say!

If you are considering a career in real estate, or if you are presently licensed and seeking an affiliation where there may be additional opportunities, please give Pat or me a call and let's discuss your future with Langstons.

Should you be a Langston Realtor? Yes, if:

- You desire affiliation with one of the most respected real estate firms in the community,
- You want the opportunities and security to be found in the city's largest, oldest, Realtor company,
- You want to be a member of a highly professional, cooperative and respected team that works extremely well together, assisting one another in many, many areas,
- You want opportunities for recognition among your peers and in the community,
- You want the support of a dedicated, proficient staff to assist you with the details of your business,
- You want initial and ongoing training by a full-time dedicated manager who is available to work one-on-one with you through your first several transactions or through "problem" transactions,
- You want the challenge and financial rewards of generous splits on transactions and the incentives of escalating bonus plateaus,
- You want the benefits of affiliation with one of the leading referral/relocation giants in the industry, of extensive company promotional campaigns, of consistent marketing programs,
- You desire affiliation with an office where 62 percent of the associates are million and multi-million dollars producers!

What is probably a "first" for the local real estate market is scheduled next Wednesday, January 23rd, when Bea McGrath will hold an Open House on an office building — the Forest Oil Building at 405 North Marienfeld. If you or your company is looking for some really quality space to purchase or lease, drop by between 3:30 p.m. and 5:30 p.m., Wednesday afternoon and visit with Bea, or give her call here at the office!

Local Realtors attend annual meeting in Austin

John Sharp, newly elected State Comptroller of Public Accounts, and Rick Floyd, director of the Real Estate Center at Texas A & M University, were among the keynote speakers at the Texas Association of Realtors (TAR) Mid-Winter meeting in Austin last weekend.

Representing the Midland Association were: Sandy Scott, the Midland Association president; Pat Paxton, president-elect; Kathy McCain, executive vice president; Betty Taylor, Anita Noles and Darrell McDonald, TAR directors; Roy Proctor, past president; Brian Cooper, Fran Henderson, Patsy Brice, Kay Sutton, Kay McDonald, Don and Thelma Harvey.

Betty Taylor was appointed to serve as a director representing Texas on the National Association of Realtors Board of Directors. Brian Cooper serves on the state level as vice-chairman of the TAR Education Committee and chairman of the Mandatory Continuing Education sub-committee.

"The Mid-Winter meeting is a good opportunity for our members to find out what is happening in residential and commercial real estate all over the state," said Sandy Scott, president of the Midland Association of Realtors. "Many of our members also feel the meeting is a great resource for obtaining mandatory continuing education credit."

The Midland Association will be hosting 15 hours of mandatory continuing education at the local Board office beginning on Tuesday, January 22 and running through January 29.

Installation of new association officers was the highlight of the meeting, according to Kathy McCain. Over 500 Realtors attended the meeting in the Capitol city. The newly installed officers include: Bob Garrett of Amarillo, 1991 president; Wayne Shipley of Dallas, vice-president/president-elect; and Sharon Coleman of Austin, secretary/treasurer.

PIG TALES

Text by Tina Stewart

Photos by Joe D. Williams

Even though Pete has his quiet moments, he's often found running like a "greased pig" chasing after cats.

There's a new man in Lynn Lambert's life. He's warm, affectionate and loyal, and makes a great room mate, Ms. Lambert said. He loves to watch Green Acres and falls asleep easily in her arms at night. He's clean cut and is comfortable in Lambert's apartment, but he hates loud saxophone music.

He gets along well with her family now, although it was shaky at first. "My mother said she would not allow Pete in her house," Ms. Lambert said.

Having this new man in her life has affected her lifestyle in many ways. He's even affected her way of eating. "I have a hard time eating pork, bacon, or ham without feeling guilty,"she said, smiling lovingly at Pete.

However, love is not blind, and Ms. Lambert is quick to note Pete's shortcomings."I never really understood what 'eat like a pig' meant until I watched Pete eat oatmeal. He gets real rude when he wants to eat," she said adding, "and from the back he looks like a pig, real bad."

But she takes the good with the bad.

"Pete gives lots of kisses. Everyone thinks it's gross because he sweats through his nose," she said. "Sometimes he will give you more affection than you want."

But sometimes, it's too hard to resist Pete's advances. "His nose is so strong. Sometimes he fights to get right under my arm. He gets under my arm and he routs and routs to find a place to snuggle."

With all these redeeming — and even those not so redeeming — qualities, it's impossible not to call Pete a pig, because he is one; a Vietnamese pot-bellied pig. But Ms. Lambert tends to think of Pete more as a pet. In fact, she considers pot-bellied pigs, "the pets of the future."

This is not far from an accurate description of the progress pot-bellied pigs have made in becoming accepted as domestic pets.

According to Raena Barry, owner of Barry's Pot-bellied Pets in Moor Park, Calif., when the pigs were introduced into the country in 1985, there were only 12. Ms. Barry now estimates that the pot-bellied pig population has grown close to 12,000 nationwide.

"THEY'VE GAINED PET status. They are legitimately good pets. At first, they were thought to be a fad — I called them preppy puppies. But the reason they (the pigs) got so popular is their intelligence is amazing, they are clean and they don't shed. I call them family pigs," Ms. Barry said.

Pete has most of the characteristics typically associated with a pig — a snout, hoofs and a squeal. However, his smaller size, a straight tail and a docile nature distinguish him from his fellow farm-type pigs. "The only thing that looks alien is his nose — it looks like Alf," Ms. Lambert said.

Ms. Barry said the average pot-bellied pig weighs from 40 to 60 pounds and shouldn't exceed 90 pounds. Two-month-old Pete weighs from five to seven pounds. Ms. Lambert predicts he will grow to be 30 to 45 pounds and 10 to 12 inches high. "The owner has a lot to do with how big they (the pig) will become. They are pigs and will eat. Sixty percent growth is genetic, the other 40 percent is feeding."

Pete's diet, on a good day, consist of one-half cup of pig chow in the morning and one-half cup at night. However, Ms. Lambert said Pete has his downfalls. "He likes oatmeal and he loves raisins and grapes. He eats vegetables as supplements and goes nuts when I open a candy wrapper," she said.

Lynn Lambert said Pete is full of affection — sometimes too much.

Pete proudly displays his "pot belly" while begging for a treat.

Engagement tea given for couple

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

To announce the engagement of Andrea Neisig of Dallas and Larry Bates of Waxahachie, a lovely tea was held the afternoon of Jan. 12 at the home of the bride-elect's parents, Sarah and Russell Neisig. Three generations hosted the affair: Alpha Smith, her daughter, Sarah, and Sarah's daughter, Jennifer (Mrs. Michael) Alvarado of Prairie Village, Kan.

McKnight-Harrison

The party featured an English tea theme. Scones with strawberry jam, fresh strawberries dipped in cream, finger sandwiches, mints and a variety of dainty pastries were served with apricot tea, Golden Pecan coffee and tea punch from a beautifully appointed table. The centerpiece featured an arrangement of Rubrium lilies, red roses and pink Gerber daisies.

A conversation piece was the Teddy bears dressed in wedding attire and located on the guest registry table and in the dining room.

Serving in the house party were friends of the bride-to-be, former Midlanders Kim Granberry Altizer and Tamie Ward Walker, both of Dallas; Leigh Ann Runyan, Michele DeFrance, Stephanie Brown and Laura Steele.

Also assisting were Kay (Mrs. George) Smith, Anne (Mrs. Jack) Herbig, Elizabeth (Mrs. Byron) Greaves, Mary Margaret (Mrs. Fred) Byrom nd Lorraine (Mrs. Charles) Coffman.

Among the guests were Wilda (Mrs. Maurice) Bullock, Margaret (Mrs. Howard) Davis, Melanie (Mrs. Lea) Crump, Ona Burns, Mary Elizabeth (Mrs. Gregg) Owens, Rebecca (Mrs. Mike) Talley, Mayme Martin and Sue (Mrs. Sam) Conner.

Plans were revealed for an April 6 wedding in Midland's First Presbyterian Church.

THE MIDLAND A&M Mothers' Club hosted its annual "Howdy Party" for students and their parents recently at the home of Linnie and Art Donnelly and son, Arthur.

The guests enjoyed visiting, particularly savoring A&M's victory over Brigham Young University at the Holiday Bowl, while partaking of the delicious holiday refreshments.

Among those sharing in the fun occasion were club president Jan Van Eman, her husband Charky and sons, Bill and Murray; Deanna and Charles Giese, Kris (Mrs. Bob) Solberg and son, Steve; Gayle and Doc Dodson and daughters, Kelly and Jamie; Betty and Bill Sewell, Barbara and Elvin Hester and Sandy and Joe Chapman.

Leonore Chambers, hospitality chairman for the club, was in charge of arrangements.

A COCKTAIL PARTY recently honored an engaged pair, Troy Lynn Russell of Austin and Jack Campbell of Houston.

Held in the home of Ellen and Larry Bell, the party also featured a Christmas ornament shower. Although the event was held after Christmas, the Bells left their tree up for the occasion, and guests displayed their gifts on it as they arrived.

Other host couples were Deanna and Chuck Pearson, Sandy and Jim Alsup, Pat and Parker Humes, Frances and Larry Stapp and Brenda and Alton Yowell.

Guests included Jack's parents, Donna and Joe Campbell; his sister, Carol Campbell; his grandparents, Dixie and Jack Mogle and Nova Lynn (Mrs. J. Waune) Campbell, and great-grandmother, Alice Mogle, as well as Troy Lynn's parents, Judy and Chuck Russell, and sister, Tami of Austin.

The wedding will take place Feb. 9 in Ausitn.

Hooked on television? Could be genetic programming

By Rebecca Perl
N.Y. Times News Service

If you are hooked on soap operas, "The Simpsons" and Monday-night football, it may not be your fault. Blame it on your genes.

A study of adopted children at Pennsylvania State University suggests that the behavior exhibited by couch potatoes may have genetic roots.

Although there is clearly no "TV gene," scientists say hereditary factors may play an unexpected role in a child's predisposition to watch excessive amounts of television.

That possibility is one of the offshoots of a study of the TV viewing habits of natural and adopted brothers and sisters — and their parents. The scientists were surprised by the results.

Among 3- to 5-year-olds, children for whom environmental factors are thought to play a primary role in behavior, researchers found that siblings — even those living in different households — had similar TV viewing habits.

Although the time a person spends in front of a television set is clearly affected by surroundings, Dr. Robert Plomin, a geneticist at Penn State, speculates that nearly half of the propensity may be the result of a genetically linked passivity trait that predisposes some people to lie around taking in their news and entertainment, while others choose to go running.

He calls those with the passivity trait "at risk" from television.

The average American watches 25 hours of TV a week. The average child watches as much as 50 hours, and some watch even more.

Plomin said the research flies in the face of psychologists who believe that the affinity one shows for television viewing, like alcoholism, is exclusively a result of social, psychological and environmental factors.

In recent years, researchers have found that some people may have a genetic propensity toward alcohol or drug addiction.

Researchers say some people can be predisposed to become "TV addicts" in much the same way they become addicted to drugs. For them TV becomes habit-forming because it is the only way they can relax, or escape loneliness.

"There are thousands of studies on the effects of TV but no one's asked why kids watch it," said Plomin, who wrote the Penn State study. "Since this is what kids do more than anything else, we ought to be concerned by what causes it as well as what it causes."

PIG: Pot-bellied pig tagged as 'pet of future'

(From 1E)

Most pot-bellied pigs have solid black hair. However, breeders are starting to cross-breed black pigs and white pigs. "The more expensive they are the more white they have," Ms. Lambert said.

The hair itself is coarse and, depending on heredity and nutrition, can be sparse or thick. "Pigs are good for people who have allergies. People aren't allergic (to the pigs) because they won't shed. They won't have ticks or fleas and you can see through the hair," Ms. Lambert said.

Aside from the physical characteristics, the pot-bellied pigs have all the intelligence of a typical pig. Ms. Barry said that the pig actually ranks third in intelligence in the animal kingdom, behind the porpoise (dolphin) and chimpanzee. "From sources I've read, the pigs are the most intelligent among domestic animals. I've heard they have the intelligence of a three year old child. They are not just expressive, but they listen and solve problems," she said.

Although the pot-bellied pigs are becoming more available, the price is still high compared to that of a typical pet. Ms. Barry said a safe approximation of price for the pot-bellied pigs ranges from $1,000 to $2,500. "It ranges all over the United States depending on quality, size and disposition," Ms. Barry said.

The price of the pigs, however, decreases if the animal is neutered — as Pete is. This process usually takes place shortly after birth.

Contrary to popular belief and according to Ms. Lambert, the pot-bellied pigs are very clean animals. Ms. Lambert said she usually bathes Pete twice a week and applies lotion on his skin to protect him against the winter climate. "He's really clean. There is a theory that if you keep an animal in a small place to live, they will keep it clean because they have to live there," she said.

Although the pigs are perfect pets for some, Ms. Barry doesn't recommend them for everyone. "They (the pigs) are very unique, but not for everybody. Some people just don't like pigs. Some pigs have gotten a bad rap," Ms. Barry said. "But generally, 90 percent of the people that have been around pigs are attracted to the animals," she added.

Ms. Lambert's main motivation in acquiring Pete as a pet was actually a culmination of reasons. She said she wanted a pet that she wouldn't have to take out, Pete uses a litter box, but also a pet that wasn't "boring" like a cat. Pete seemed to be the perfect solution. Ms. Lambert said Pete was "convenient like a cat but also fun like a dog."

While the popularity of the pot-bellied pigs is increasing, as well as the availability, the prospects of the animal becoming as common as a dog or cat is not realistic in Ms. Barry's opinion. "I don't think the pot-bellied pigs will become as common as dogs and cats. When you buy the pets they are usually neutered. Realistically not many people are going to breed pigs," she said adding that the breeding process is a very complicated.

Even though the pig might not reach the dominance of dogs and cats, Ms. Barry said she thinks the animals have a special quality. "My husband's theory is that the pigs conform to the personality of the owner. They have all different types of personalities. And if you look at their eyes closely, sometimes you see someone you know. The physical makeup of a pig is closer to ours than any other animal," she said.

For Ms. Lambert, Pete has been a welcomed addition. She said the pot-bellied pigs have a life expectancy of at least 15 to 20 years. Although she's only had Pete for a few months, she's already noticing a difference in her lifestyle. Lately she said she has been tagged with the nickname of "the pig woman."

She has received an onslaught of "pig" toys and accessories that include a wind up pig toy and a gift from a boyfriend. Ms. Lambert said instead of receiving a nice, romantic Christmas gift, she was presented with the board game edition of "Hog Holler."

For more information regarding pot-bellied pigs, contact Ms. Lambert, marketing director of the Yellow Rose Ostrich Ranch, at 333-5222 in Odessa.

Also, if you're interested in seeing the pot-bellied pigs, the First National Pig Baron's Show, Sale and Ball sanctioned by the National Committee on Pot-bellied Pigs will be Feb. 28 - March 1 at South Fork Ranch in Plano. The show will present 100 of the highest quality pot-bellied pigs according to Ms. Barry. For more information regarding the show contact Ms. Barry at (805) 529-6643.

Toothbrush makes design statement

By Emily Gwathmey
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — The toothbrush has evolved into a design statement.

At the kiosk of the Paramount Hotel in Manhattan, Philippe Starck's sleek toothbrush comes packaged with its own display stand and in six luminous colors.

A paisley toothbrush comes with a matching cover at Face Factory on Manhattan's Upper West Side.

Fonda Ossandon of Manhattan loves them all.

With the abundance of glossy brushes, she will have no problems maintaining her display.

It's like the old Spanish proverb: "My teeth are closer to me than my relatives."

Marriage made in paradise possible

HONOLULU, Hawaii — Almost everyone has dreamed of being married in Paradise. Now, an increasing number of couples are finding that it is more romantic, less stressful and more economical than the traditional big family wedding. More women are in the work force than ever before. This means less time is available to plan a big wedding. Many of today's couples are finding it makes good sense to follow their heart's desire and have a small ceremony in a romantic tropical location handled by competent wedding experts.

Hawaii is already the number one honeymoon destination, and now it is fast becoming the number one location to get married. One of the most popular spots in paradise in the $3 million oceanfront Damien Waring Estate. For over 18 years, couples have been coming from all over the world to be married in the private tropical gardens of the Damien Waring Estate. The Estate has served as the backdrop for some of the most unique weddings in the world. Here, couples find a beauty few places on earth can match.

The Estate is the only oceanfront estate available for weddings in all of Hawaii. The spectacular oceanfront gardens of the Estate were originally designed as a dramatic outdoor photography studio. Over the years couples who came to have their wedding portraits taken asked if it would be possible for them to be married in the gardens. As their reputation grew, couples began to come from all over the world and today over 150 weddings are performed at the Estate each year.

The Waring family has become legendary for wedding portraits in the Pacific. The tradition, founded by the late R.G. Damien Waring and carried on by his wife Lurlene, has a long an proud heritage. Damien was born in England, a member of the British Aristocracy and studied art under Pablo Picasso. In fact, it was Picasso who launched Damien's career.

For years, the Warings had shared the dreams of creating an outdoor photographic studio unmatched in the entire would. They consulted with several landscape architects and were told that they could not create the kind of garden they wanted on the ocean. The Warnings, never a couple to be told no, designed and built the gardens themselves, creating the only oceanfront gardens of their kind in the Pacific. These gardens are complete with a myriad of rare birds, tropical plants, flowers, gazebo and waterfalls.

The Damien Waring Estate is located on the island of Oahu. It is remote, yet only minutes away from Waikiki with its beautiful beaches, unique shops, and dazzling night life. Although the Estate is located near the excitement of Waikiki, it seems as you drive down the long winding driveway that you are entering another world. The lush tropical gardens of his romantic hideaway are completely secluded. In these gardens the timeless beauty of Hawaii comes alive.

PLANNING A WEDDING IN PARADISE

Most couples contact the Estate directly on their toll-free number. Over the years, the Warings have found that marriage at the Estate is an experience so unique and distinctive that it has been difficult to communicate it with standard brochures, therefore they just complete a "video brochure" narrated by John Hillerman who stars as Higgins on the television series "Magnum PI." The first step for the couples to view this video. The second step is to call and hold their chosen date with a reservation deposit on a credit card.

Only one wedding a day is performed a day, so early reservations are a must. Couples usually contact the Estate two to six months prior to their wedding date.

One of the main concerns for planning a wedding away from home is making sure all the details are attended to. To ensure that no detail, no matter how small, is left to chance, the Estate provides a full time wedding coordinator. The Estate offers everything for the wedding: photography, video coverage, flowers, minister, music, witnesses, transportation, beauty services for the bride and tuxedo rental for the groom.

At the time the reservation is made, an appointment is set with Lurlene Waring, who personally meets each couple to assure that all the details are arranged to perfection. This private consultation usually takes place the day the bride and groom arrive on the islands. It is recommended that couples marry within tow to three day of their arrival so they have time to relax and enjoy their honeymoon in paradise.

At the consultation, all the final details of the wedding are covered and all personal needs are attended to. Final arrangements with the florist, the groom's tuxedo fitting, and the bride's beauty services are reviewed and finalized. A Rubella blood test for the bride must be obtained within 30 days of the wedding. The Estate even assists with the marriage license, which is issued by the Hawaii licensing bureau. Therefore, the only items recommended that the couple bring is the bride's apparel and the rings.

THE WEDDING DAY

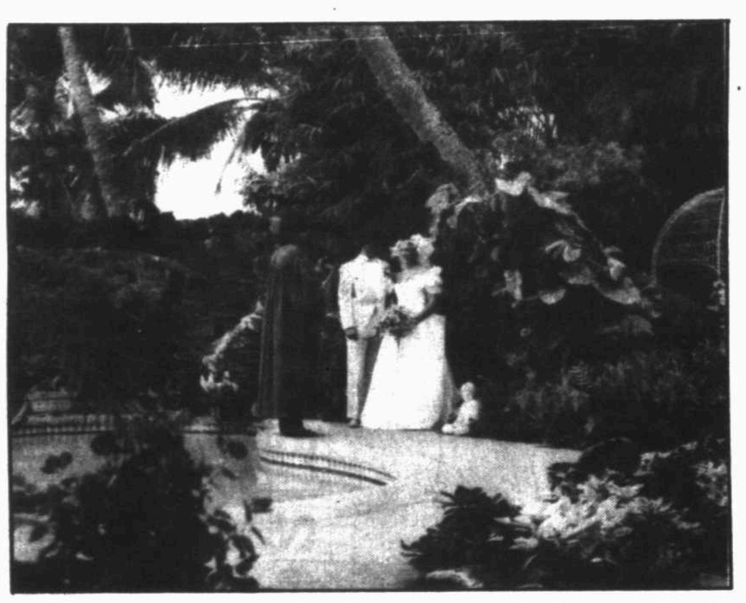
Most weddings at the Estate take place in the morning. It is cooler and the light is better for photography. Photography and video coverage starts around 9:30 a.m. Lurlene calls it the "getting rid of nerves time." The ceremony is performed at 11 a.m.

COST

While the thought of being married at a private estate in paradise may sound expensive, weddings at the Damien Waring Estate can range from as low as $500 to $3,000 or more, depending upon the amount of photography ordered and such services as video and limousine service.

Most couples request to have a video of their wedding. Only broadcast quality television cameras are used. The video is edited and set to music. As a finale to the romantic change in the traditional wedding, couples usually are given a reception party when they return home and show the video to family and friends.

More information may obtained by calling Damien Waring Estate, 1-800-648-5040.



Many couples are finding it very romantic to marry in the tropical paradise of Hawaii.

Contreras combined two popular styles in sunglasses — those that are dark at the top and light at the bottom, and polychromatic sunglasses, which darken only when the sun is bright.

And he won the London Times/Honeywell Corp.'s British Innovation Award for the effort.

Martita Romo, with her parents, kneels at the altar of St. Francis Catholic Church in Waco. Though her ceremony has all the trappings of a wedding, it is only a birthday.

Hispanic coming of age rite like wedding preview

By Tessie Borden

WACO, Texas (AP) — Martita Romo kneels alone at the altar, looking radiant in her ruffled white dress. A short veil frames her face, and a white bouquet nestles in her hands.

Nine attendants in teal blue dresses stand in a neat line in the pews of St. Francis on the Brazos Catholic Church. Across the aisle, young men in tuxedos and matching teal boutonnieres shuffle nervously in a corresponding row.

Martita is turning 15.

Though her ceremony has all the trappings of a wedding — some parents call it a rehearsal for the real thing — it is a quinceanera, a coming of age birthday ceremony, a formal presentation to society.

The Rev. Anthony Ferrer of St. Francis says quinceaneras are possibly the biggest social event in Waco's Mexican American community, sometimes eclipsing weddings.

Quinceanera can mean different things in different Hispanic traditions. It's a time for parents to give thanks for their daughter and to honor the Virgin Mary, a step between confirmation and marriage, though it is not a formal church rite.

"It is just like a wedding. Even more so, in a way," says Mary Ann Tovar, part owner of L&M Flowers and Gifts, which has become a center for anxious parents planning their daughter's big day.

Most Mexican-American celebrations favor a mass dedicated to the Virgin Mary. Salvadorans and Puerto Ricans may focus on a thanksgiving Mass. And not all the celebrations are Catholic ceremonies. Some even take place in Baptist churches, Tovar said.

In a typical Catholic celebration, the girl enters the church wearing a lace head covering and carrying a bouquet of fresh roses to offer to the Virgin Mary.

During the ceremony, a godmother takes off the lace mantilla and puts a crown in its place, representing a girl's induction into womanhood.

Most celebrations feature 14 attendants, one for every year of a girl's life. Each, including the honored girl, has an escort.

Martita herself seems dazed at her celebration. Yes, she says, it has turned out as she hoped it would.

Martita is the last of 10 children, seven girls. Of them, she is the only one who has had a real quinceanera party.

"That's the way we wanted it, since she was the last one,"says Irene Vera, Martita's older sister. It was a family effort Mrs. Vera said she began planning soon after Martita turned 14.

Tovar said about 30 percent of her business comes from quinceaneras. For these, she provides everything from the altar bouquets to the flowers in the attendants' hair, from the missals to the guest book.

The price tags of some quinceaneras alone mark them as more than just another birthday. They can range from a "modest" $1,000 to $10,000.

'It is just like a wedding. Even more so, in a way.'

— Mary Ann Tovar
part owner L&M Flowers and Gifts

"It could go up through the roof," said Carla Pretzman, promotions coordinator at the Waco Convention Center, which has been the site of spectacular receptions with guests lists hovering around 800.

Rent alone for the convention center's Brazos Room, where they are held, is $563 for the first hour and $37 an hour thereafter.

Families often choose the Waco Missions Recreation Club, where Martita's party is taking place. It costs $100 for a day.

Tovar said flowers and other frills can cost $500 to $700, even up to $1,000 for really elaborate ones.

The list of expenses goes on from there, with the band near the top of the list at several hundred dollars.

Then there is the dress, usually $300-$500; the catering, starting at $300; the cake, starting at $80; and various other items.

Origins of London's name dates to antiquity

LONDON (AP) — How did the capital of Great Britain get its name? Historians believe the word London derives from the Celtic Llyn-Din ("hill by the pool"). When the Romans arrived here in A.D. 43, they translated the Celtic name into Londinium. The Romans left in A.D. 423, and in time Londinium became London.

Children's book author Ann M. Martin relaxes in her New York apartment. Martin's characters, seven disctinctly different girls who form a babysitting cooperative, are like friends to the thousands of admirers of the 43-book Baby-Sitters Club series.

Books written for pre-teen girls

By Leslie Dreyfous
Associated Press

NEW YORK — It's not like Nancy Drew or The Hardy Boys. They're detectives. They chase bad guys and drive cars.

The girls in the Baby Sitters Club books mostly just have trouble with neighborhood snobs, bullies or, maybe, parents.

Author Ann M. Martin's characters — seven distinctly different girls who form a baby-sitting cooperative — are like friends to 11-year-old Lynette Kirkman and other admirers of the series, which has put into print 41 million books over the last four years.

"The books are about being a normal kid today," said Lynette, of Bristol, Pa. "They talk about real life and things."

Being a kid today can be tough. Parents get divorced, and sometimes they marry other people. Then you have two families. Or maybe you move, or a grandparent dies, or your father loses his job. It gets complicated.

"So when you're having problems with your parents or there's something you don't understand, it helps to have a friend around," said Megan Brown, 13, of Indianapolis.

INTO EACH story are integrated situations that reflect life as it really is lived across America, and that includes elements such as stepfamilies, working mothers, death, adoption and friends or relatives with disabilities.

The girls also encounter all sorts of smaller prepubescent woes in each monthly addition to the 43-book series.

"And if I can believe what the kids write to me, they are responding to ... the realism. Kids will write and say, 'I really enjoy your books because I can identify with the characters,' " Martin said.

Martin, 35, who lives in New York City with a cat named Mouse, plays it straight with her mostly 8- to 12-year-old readers. She doesn't talk down to them or gloss over difficult topics.

Jean Feiwel, editorial director at Scholastic Inc., came up with the series idea about five years ago, melding young girls' dual passion for books about clubs and books about baby-sitting.

The formula was an instant hit that has topped chain store best-seller lists of children's books 90 percent of the time since the first title appeared in August 1986. Two home videos also are on the market.

MEANWHILE, THE imaginary town of Stoneybrook, Conn., has become a pre-teen's fictional mecca, the place where the Baby Sitters Club meets three times a week to accept clients' phone calls and review sticky situations.

"Like in No. 10 — well, maybe not No. 10 — but in one of the books, one of the kids they baby-sit for gets a hand stuck down the drain in the bathroom tub," offers 8-year-old Marian Walsh of Watertown, Conn.

"My favorite one is 'Boy-Crazy Stacey,' where she goes baby-sitting at the beach and gets crushes on all the boys," says 11-year-old Melonie Marnien of Bristol, Pa. "That was really funny."

A lot of girls like Stacey the best. In fact, in a Baby Sitters Club Super Special Contest, 27,000 fans cast their votes for the sophisticated, clotheshorse who moved to Connecticut from New York City.

But others prefer Claudia (slightly insecure and artistic), Dawn (an ex-Californian who shuns junk food), Kristy (the bossy club president based on one of Martin's close childhood friends), Mary Anne (a shy and responsible girl based on the author herself), Mallory (a would-be children's books author from a big family) or Jessica (an outgoing black ballet dancer).

"I just love them so much ... because you think these girls could be you in a few years," enthused Marian, who hopes to start baby-sitting when she gets a little older. "You'd never think of Pippy Longstocking as a baby sitter."

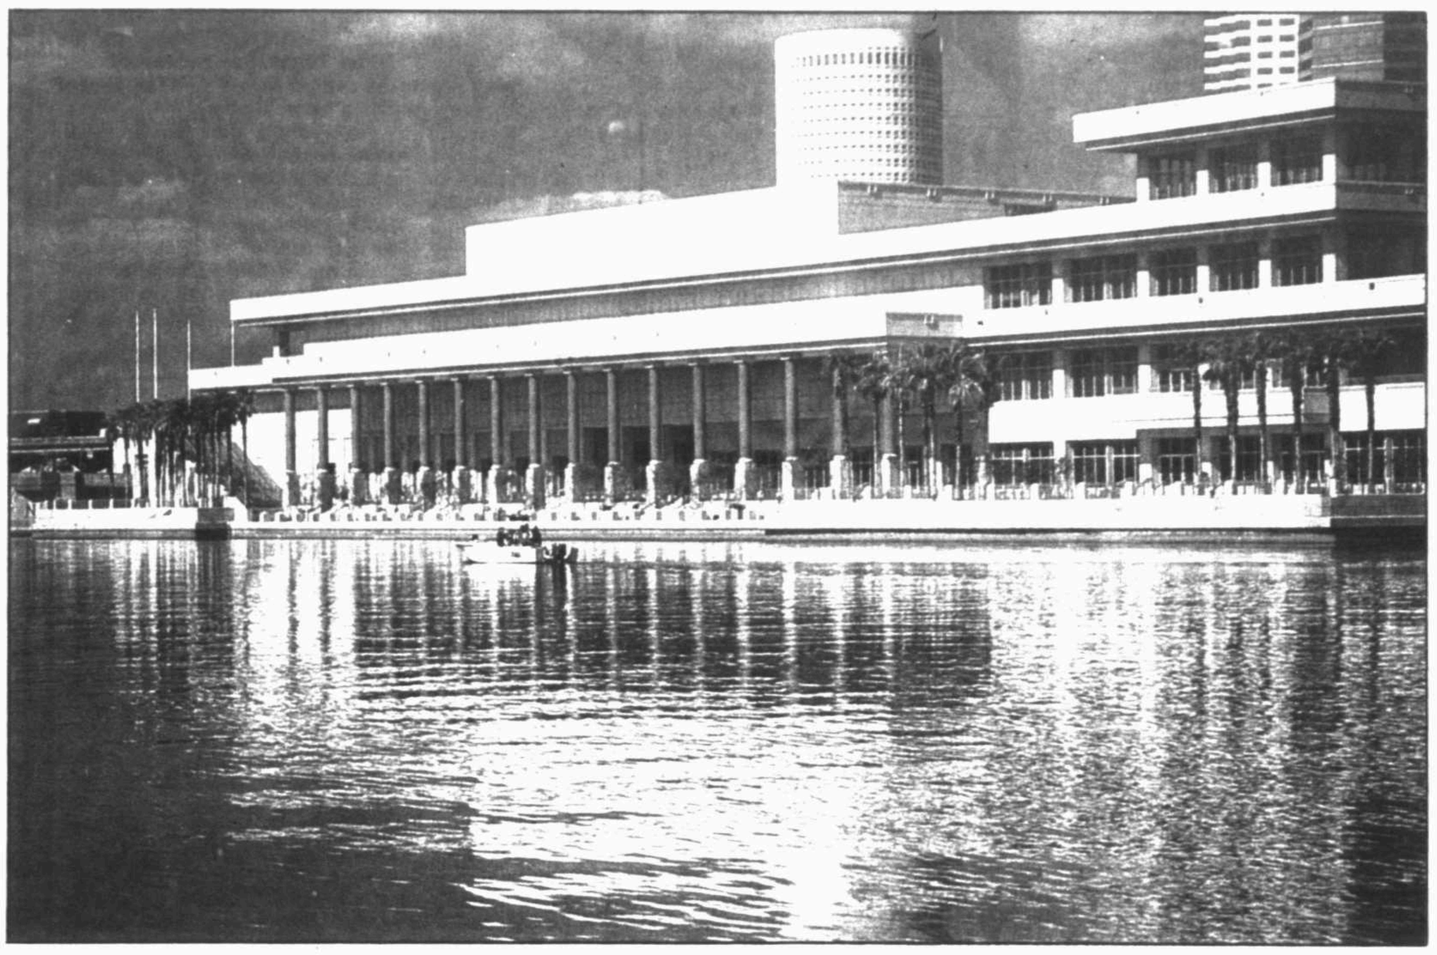
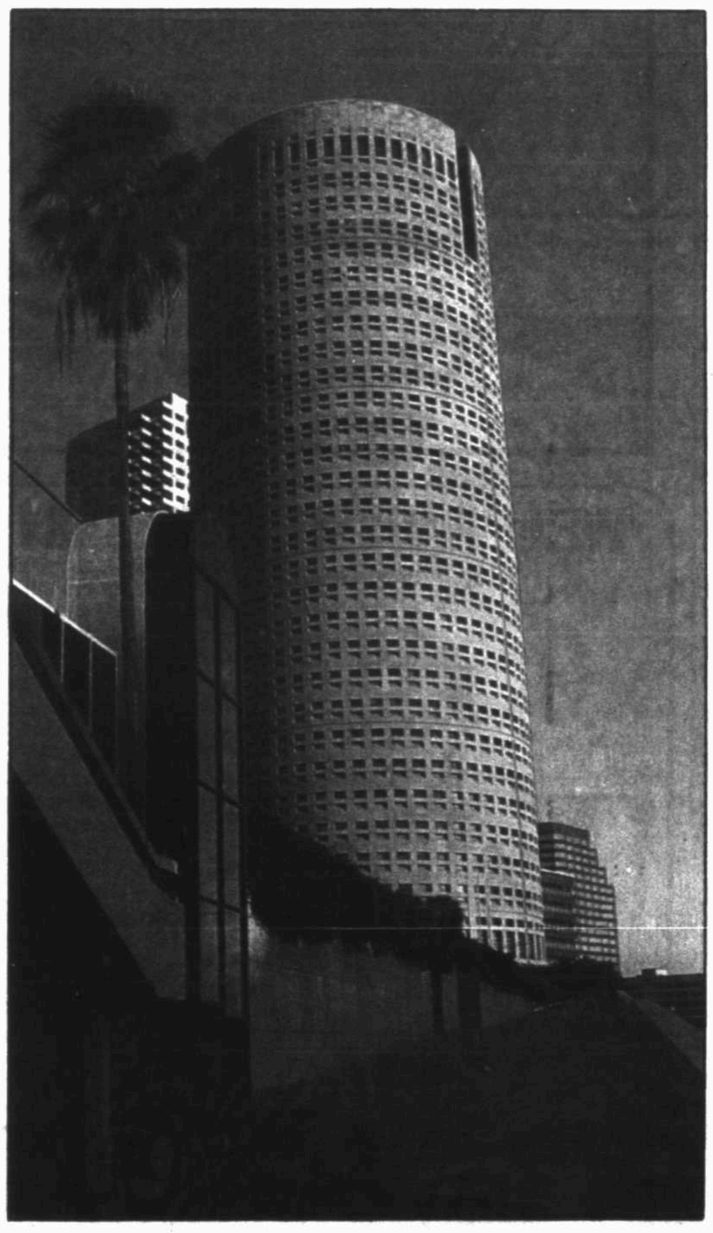
HOST TO SUPER BOWL XXV TAMPA BAY

Super City!



On a 14-acre site at the mouth of the Hillsborough River, the sparkling new $140 million Tampa Convention Center is a showcase for events large and small -- with 200,000 square feet of exhibit space and a 36,000 sq. ft. ballroom.



TPA

That's the three-letter airport code the Buffalo Bills, San Francisco 49ers, Los Angeles Raiders and New York Giants hope to find around their suitcase handles this week.

The winners of today's AFC and NFC Championships will have their tickets punched for one of the Sunbelt's choicest destinations.

Tampa, on the west coast of Florida, is a city of 288,000 in the heart of a metropolitan area with a population of more than 2 million. It is one of the state's most historic and popular tourist locations and one of the nation's fastest growing areas.

First settled in the 1820s, Tampa began to flourish in 1885 when railroad magnate Henry B. Plant completed the first rail line to the city by the bays. The peninsula on which the city was built is bordered by Hillsborough Bay and Tampa Bay, which empty into the Gulf of Mexico.

Tampa's port — now the seventh largest in the nation — was a doorway for Cuban cigar makers to move manufacturing operations into an area known as Ybor (pronounced ee-bore) City, named for Vicente Martinez Ybor, the city's first cigar maker.

A vibrant, close-knit Latin community has grown up in the neighborhood, with a former cigar factory now housing shops and restaurants, Ybor Square, in the heart of a commercial district — including modern cigar factories where the rolling is done by machines, rather than by hand.

In 1891, railroader Plant built the Tampa Bay Hotel, billed as "the world's most elegant," on the bank of the Hillsborough River. The building's Moorish architecture and 13 silver minarets are Tampa landmarks.

During the Spanish-American War, Teddy Roosevelt and his Rough Riders used Plant's hotel as a headquarters before embarking for Cuba at the port of Tampa.

Please see TAMPA/2F

The 13 minarets on the University of Tampa, bottom, create an exotic silhouette on the western horizon from downtown. Recent construction has transformed the city's skyline into one of the Sunbelt's most modern, far left. The 74,296-seat Tampa Stadium, center, will host its second Super Bowl Sunday. Bayshore Boulevard, near left, is hailed as the 'World's Longest Continual Sidewalk' and is lined by some of the area's oldest and stateliest homes.

TAMPA: Super Bowl host city is Florida's Gulf Coast jewel

(From 1F)

Today, the five-story building houses the administrative offices of the University of Tampa and the turn-of-the-century collections of art, furniture and fashions of the H.B. Plant Museum.

Also along the banks of the Hillsborough River is the city's developing arts district, including: the three-theater Tampa Bay Performing Arts Center; the ornate, restored 1926-vintage Tampa Theater; the Tampa Museum of Art, with acclaimed collections of Greek and Roman antiquities and 20th century American art; and the newly opened, $140 million Tampa Convention Center, encompassing more than 365,000 square feet of exhibit, meeting room, ballroom and lobby space.

The major hotels that will house Bay-area visitors for Super Week are liberally scattered from downtown westward along Interstate 275 and Kennedy Boulevard to the Tampa Stadium area and on west to the Westshore and Airport areas.

Perhaps the choicest accommodations in the region are on Harbour Island, an reclaimed island near downtown, studded with some of the city's most exclusive condominiums, townhomes as well as the 300-room Wyndham Hotel, specialty shops, restaurants and nightclubs.

Another exclusive shopping area, Old Hyde Park Village, is located in the heart of one of the city's oldest neighborhoods, "gentrified" in recent years by young professionals.

Nearby Bayshore Boulevard is touted as the "World's Longest Continual Sidewalk" and has just received a multi- million dollar facelift.

The broad promenade winding along the western flank of Tampa Bay is a popular spot for walkers, joggers and bicyclists.

For many visitors, Florida is synonymous with theme parks. Visitors to Tampa will not be disappointed, with Busch Gardens, a family park built on a turn-of-the-century African theme. In addition to the traditional thrill rides, entertainment and shops, the Gardens also feature numerous wild animal exhibits and tours of the working Busch brewery.

From March through October, Adventure Island, next door to Busch Gardens in northeast Tampa, is a water park haven for those looking to beat the Florida heat.

Weather shouldn't be a problem for Super Bowl combatants. Average January temperatures top out around 71, while lows dip only to about 50.

The summer-early fall rainy season is long-past with monthly rainfall averaging only 2 inches for January.

Tampa Stadium, the host site for the "Big Game" and all the big corporate parties that traditionally go along with Super Sunday, has nearly been doubled in size since it opened in 1967. Super Bowl XVIII, in 1984, was Tampa's first, as the Los Angeles Raiders stopped the Washington Redskins 38-9.

Coach Art Shell is hoping for a return trip to the site of their last Super Bowl victory for his Raiders in the silver anniversary edition of the NFL's biggest show.

The giant sombrero-shaped stadium is full-time home to the NFL's Tampa Bay Buccaneers and the annual New Year's Day Hall of Fame Bowl Game.

Next door, construction will soon begin on a hockey arena, which will be home for the Tampa Thunder, one of two National Hockey League expansion teams to take the ice in 1993.

On top of being a popular tourist destination in its own right, Tampa is a major gateway to the entire Sun Coast/Central Florida region. To the west lies Pinellas County — home to many popular Gulf beaches, the colorful St. Petersburg Pier, the Salvador Dali Museum and a broad array of other attractions.

Just more than an hour's drive to the northeast of Tampa is the nation's heaviest concentration of theme parks and resorts, including the Magic Kingdom, Epcot Center and Disney-MGM Studios at the Walt Disney World Resort; Universal Studios-Florida; Sea World; Baseball and Boardwalk; and Cypress Gardens, among others.

Turnberry Isle is special retreat

By Evelyn Kieran
Copley News Service

"It's the berries!" What a delicious old-fashioned term.

I remember Grandma using it when something was especially wonderful. I never knew whether she meant blueberries, blackberries, raspberries or some exotic thing like cloud berries — whatever it was, it was decidedly special.

Recently I found another very special berry — this one called Turnberry. No, it's not a gourmet delicacy, but a super spa, country club, golf club, hotel and condo development on the Florida coast just north of Miami — officially, Turnberry Isle Yacht and Country Club.

(It's actually named for the castle in Scotland where Robert the Bruce was born in 1274 and which nowadays frequently hosts the British Golf Open — but that's serious history and my interest was more lighthearted.)

ASSIGNMENTS THAT didn't quite overlap left me with a couple of days in Miami all to myself — a chance to catch up and restore mind and body — both in great need of an overhaul.

A friend had told me that Turnberry was one of George Rafael's treasures — and I knew Rafael as one of the all-time great hoteliers. His restoration of The Mark in New York has made it the place to stay in the Big Apple. His transformation of a Munich classic and another, the Breidenbacherhof, in Dusseldorf have startled Europeans who have long believed that only a Swiss can build perfection into a hotel.

Rafael, a savvy international traveler himself, recognizes that his guests — for the most part business and professional people accustomed to luxury — are more and more sports-oriented. So he repositioned the once private country club as the focal point of the whole resort and made its facilities accessible not only to members but also to this international market of travelers.

Two 18-hole Robert Trent golf courses, 24 tennis courts, a huge new pool and gardens and 159 new, luxurious guest rooms and suites were added to the complex. Part of the original clubhouse was converted to include the elegant new Veranda restaurant, a spacious — and gracious — Club Lounge and The Grill, a casual eatery. A new conference center and magnificent landscaping add to the attractions.

Elaborate spa and marina facilities and a beach compound called the Ocean Club also were opened up to guests of the country club. The result is a major resort complex with all the elements for a luxurious leisure life. Just take your pick of these first-class facilities and go for it.

I looked it all over and opted for the spa.

MIRACLES I DID not expect. I won't tell you that they turned my too-solid self into a slim sylph — or anything even remotely resembling a svelte "hard bod." But in just a couple of days, they certainly restored my spirits and headed me in the right direction, figuratively speaking.

And they did it all without patronizing, as so many health clubs do — and without treating me as though I came from another planet.

First off, they asked a lot of questions when I first made reservations: What did I expect to achieve? How willing was I to spend the time really working at it? Was I willing to live on 900 calories a day?

I gulped at that last, but agreed to give it a try. I didn't stick to it faithfully, but the meals were so good and so generous in portions I could rarely finish everything that appeared.

The menus, the work of new chef Robbin Haas, were such an inspiration that I asked to speak with him. Haas is determined to establish a new Florida cuisine equal in popularity to the now well-established California cuisine, using many of the same principles — fresh local produce treated with a bit of imagination and daring.

His mango salsa is an incredible blend of silky fruit and spicy condiments. His grilled fish is so fresh you can almost taste the salt water it came from. And I couldn't believe that a dish labeled simply "hot bananas and berries" could be so exotic — and so satisfying with only 60 calories.

WE TALKED for a while as he described the reluctance of most Florida establishments to offer anything but a standard "continental" menu. He believes, and I certainly agree, that Florida is a treasure house of great local ingredients with a cultural heritage that incorporates many cuisines — southern, Caribbean and Creole, Central and South American and a dash of northern from the snow birds who wander south every winter and often stay year-round.

Each group adds to basic cooking concepts and the result is a series of menus that tantalize the imagination. Try sauteed gulf red snapper with papaya walnut sauce or barbecued sea scallops with roasted Florida pine nuts or Florida frittata with avocado, plum tomatoes and sweet onion or waffles with pecan honey butter and fresh strawberries. Wow!

Well, that kind of talk doesn't slim the waistline but the daily schedule of activities at the spa proper surely will. The day begins with aerobics in the pool — nice and easy. Then comes a workout with a personal trainer, already alerted to any problems with the report of your physical exam in hand. After such strenuous action, a nice relaxing massage is in order and suddenly it's time for lunch. Afternoons can continue with a series of wonderful — and exotic — spa treatments, or a visit to the salon for such action as manicure, pedicure, new hairdo and makeup.

The object is not only to make you feel good, but to rev up your whole psyche. It works.

None of this is cheap — a five-day, four-night package runs about $1,300 — but you're worth it, aren't you?

Turnberry Isle has a whole raft of packages based on the spa, or the golf, tennis or marina activities — just call or write for details: Turnberry Isle Yacht and Country Club, 19999 W. Country Club Drive, Aventura, Fla. 33180-2401; (305) 932-6200.

A cutout of famous bandleader Lawrence Welk conducts on the museum stage at the Lawrence Welk Resort near Escondido, Calif.

Bubble hasn't burst at Lawrence Welk resort

By Michael Phillips
Copley News Service

ESCONDIDO, Calif. — It's a little bit of Graceland right here, 35 miles north of San Diego.

Not to say that Lawrence Welk, now retired in Santa Monica, Calif., has much to do with Elvis Presley, now buried in Memphis. But the Lawrence Welk Museum, located in the lobby of the Lawrence Welk Resort Theatre, has its own modest appeal, in keeping with Welk's modest North Dakota origins.

The Strasburg, N.D., sod farmhouse where Welk grew up has grabbed its share of media attention lately, ever since a $500,000 congressional appropriation to restore Welk's birthplace and to develop a German-Russian history museum. Asked one Republican representative: "What will they do for an encore? Earmark funds to renovate Guy Lombardo's speedboat?"

No such haggling can be heard at the LW Resort Museum. It is small but compact. Muzak floods the place at a healthy volume as visitors stroll past the bandleader's life and times.

In the first part of the museum, labeled "The Farm Years," one placard explains that "all the Welks were musical. His father played accordion, his mother sang, and the children sang and danced together, especially during the long winter evenings."

Lawrence didn't take to farm life. "He did his full share of farm chores but spent every spare moment practicing his accordion," another panel reads.

Then, success and "The Peerless Entertainers:" The exhibit moves on to photos of Welk and his ever-changing band, known variously as "His Novelty Orchestra," "His Honolulu Fruit Orchestra," and "His Hotsy Totsy Boys." The phrase "Lawrence Welk and His Champagne Music" came in Pittsburgh in 1938, and it stuck.

Then came "TELEVISION." The museum features a mock-up of the famous ABC-TV set, showcasing Welk and the orchestra for 27 years beginning in 1955. The museum's mock-up includes a lifesize color cutout of the bandleader with signs inviting visitors to "join Mr. Welk and watch him on the overhead monitor."

This, you don't find in just any theater lobby.

The museum is open Monday 10 a.m.-5 p.m.; Tuesday and Thursday 10 a.m.-1 p.m. and 4-7 p.m.; Wednesday and Sunday 10 a.m.-1 p.m. and 4-5 p.m.; Friday and Saturday 10 a.m.-7 p.m.

Save time, money at Walt Disney World

By Jan Tuckwood
N.Y. Times News Service

Some people think Walt Disney World is just too much: It's too crowded, too expensive and too hard to get reservations at the hotels.

And they're right — Disney World can be all of those things.

But it doesn't have to be.

There is a right way to "do" Disney, a way that can save you considerable money and time. After dozens of trips there and stays at almost all of the Disney-run resorts, I offer these pointers. If you have to wait an hour for Star Tours after all this, it's your own fault.

■ If you can't get a discounted hotel room and you're on a budget, try the Caribbean Beach Resort. The Caribbean, Disney's first "family-priced hotel" costs $84 to $99 per night. This sprawling, 2,112-room resort is close to Epcot Center and Typhoon Lagoon. If you have small children, the wait for the Magic Kingdom bus and the ride can seem like an eternity (approximately 45 minutes), but the Caribbean Beach does offer Disney flavor at a decent price. It's the least expensive place for a family to eat at Disney, since the food area is set up like a food court in a mall. Ask for a room next to Port Orleans, the building where the food and the action is. They can't promise anything, but asking can't hurt.

■ Another family-priced resort, also called Port Orleans, is scheduled to open in the summer of 1991. Its sister resort, Dixie Landings, is scheduled to open in 1992. Combined, the hotels will offer more than 3,000 rooms, all at approximately the same prices as the Caribbean Beach.

■ If you have a big family, two-bedroom villas at Disney's Village Resort accommodate eight. Six is the maximum at most of the Disney resorts, including a baby in a crib. Rooms at the Caribbean Beach are smaller, so four people is the maximum, plus a crib.

■ The best deals on food at the Disney resorts are the snack bars, where it's approximately $6 for a hamburger, fries and a drink. Also, ask whether your hotel has a continental breakfast setup in the mornings. The Disney Inn, for example, often sets up a coffee cart with danish in front of the hotel.

■ If you have small children, it's worth splurging once on the Disney character breakfast. While you eat, Disney characters go around the room, cuddling the kids and signing autographs. Several of the Disney resorts have them, including the Grand Floridian ($13.25 for adults, $8.75 for children).

■ If that's too expensive, you'll find the characters at Mickey's Starland in the Magic Kingdom.

■ Get to the theme parks half an hour before the official opening time. The Magic Kingdom officially opens at 9, for example, but they'll let you onto Main Street at 8:30. Be at the base of Main Street when the rest of the park opens at 9 and you'll have the run of the place for almost an hour before the lines start.

■ Friday is the least-crowded day of the week at the theme parks, according to "The Unofficial Guide to Walt Disney World & Epcot" by Bob Sehlinger. New attractions at Disney World

Honey, I Shrunk the Kids Movie Set Adventure — Based on the movie of the same name, this high-tech playground at Disney-MGM Studios Theme Park lets kids (and adults) feel small. Open now.

Splash Mountain — Construction has started on this thrill ride, which will be completed in 1992. The Disney World railroad is now being rerouted to accommodate construction, and when the ride is completed, the train will run through the center of Splash Mountain.

Sci-Fi Dine-In Restaurant — You can sit in a simulated '50s convertible and watch science-fiction movies while you eat at this restaurant, opening this spring at Disney-MGM Studios.

Florida hotel costs cut by comparison

By Jan Tuckwood
N.Y. Times News Service

By taking advantage of bargains at Disney World, you can have all the luxury of a vacation that normally costs twice as much. Here's how: The getaway: three days, two nights at Walt Disney World for two adults.

The hotel: The Disney Inn. The newly remodeled rooms have nearly as much charm as the rooms at the much more expensive Grand Floridian Beach Resort.

To save money on the room: Go when special rates are offered. Check newspaper advertisements and ask about other discount periods.

To save money on food: Get room service, but know what to order. A pizza (plenty for two people) costs $10.50. Try the french toast for breakfast. It costs approximately $7, and it's big enough for two. (French toast at The Disney Inn is stuffed with apples and covered in cinnamon. At the Yacht and Beach Club resorts, the french toast is stuffed with blueberries, and at the Polynesian Resort, it's stuffed with bananas.) Cost of food for three days, including fast-food lunches at the theme parks: approximately $120.

The following is a roundup of the Disney resorts and price ranges.

Grand Floridian Beach Resort — rates: $225-$395; Best qualities: Luxury. This is the grandest of all Disney resorts.

Polynesian Resort — rates: $200-$260; best qualities: relaxed, tropical atmosphere. On the monorail.

Disney's Village Resort — rates:$175-$335; best qualities: Good for families. Villas have kitchens.

Caribbean Beach Resort — rates: $84-$99; best qualities: Good price. Lots of wooded walkways and play areas.

Contemporary Resort — rates: $190-$410; best qualities: In the center of the action. Top of the World dinner shows.

The Disney Inn — rates: $185-$195; best qualities: Quiet and charming. Nestled among two golf courses.

DEAR ABBY

Near date rape leaves girl with nightmare

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I dated Andy (not his real name) four times. We kissed good night a little longer each time, but he never got out of line. Andy was polite and made a good impression on my parents, and seemed like the perfect boyfriend. Then one night we went for a ride, and he drove out to a lonely road, stopped the car and tried to rape me! Abby, I had to fight him off. I swear I didn't lead him on or do anything that would make him think I was easy.

I am 16 and Andy is 19. I never had a serious boyfriend before, but he must have been used to dating more experienced girls. All this happened five weeks ago, and I still have nightmares about it. Even though I wasn't raped, I feel like I have been. I haven't told my mother or anybody else about it because I'm afraid they might think it was my fault.

How do I get over this nightmare? — TORMENTED

DEAR TORMENTED: You must talk this out with someone — your mother, the school counselor, or call the rape crisis hotline. There must be support groups in your area. Please don't try to handle this alone. You are assuming an attitude of guilt, when you have done no wrong. This one experience could warp your attitude about intimacy and men. I urge you to consider counseling. Please write again and let me know how you are. I care.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I need help! Our home has been invaded by Teen-Age Mutant Munchkins from an alien planet.

The upstairs has taken on the appearance of a local landfill. And the munchkins have taken on the form of a 17-year-old boy and a 12-year-old girl.

We battle these aliens daily, but our strength is waning. Clothes are thrown to all four corners, wastebaskets are filled to overflowing, masses of junk are stored under unmade beds, mold cultures flourish on dirty dishes, and hairspray is stuck to the ceilings of their bedrooms and bathrooms!

We are losing the battle, and surrender time is near. Threats, bribery or hollering hasn't worked. We've even tried to cut deals with them — payment on the older alien's car insurance in return for household assistance — but no deal.

My husband and I want to reclaim our territory before the final takeover. We're desperate. Any suggestions? — DOWN AND ALMOST OUT

DEAR D AND ALMOST O: Wave your parental wands and turn your alien munchkins back into obedient children, immediately!

Commandeer the car keys and ground them both until their rooms pass muster. Then dole out their freedom commensurate with their good behavior.

You are the rulers of your planet unless you abdicate your authority by allowing yourselves to be manipulated.

Grandpa wouldn't believe meshka in Moscow

CNS Photo

A vendor sells matryoshka dolls in Moscow.

By Kathleen Yeager
Copley News Service

Grandpa would never have believed it.

I'm a second-generation American. Both my grandparents were from the "old country"; Lithuanian D.P.s (displaced persons) transplanted to Cleveland, Ohio, via Ellis Island in the early 1900s.

My paternal grandfather, who meant the world to me as I grew up, used to tell horror stories about the Soviet "annexation" of his native land in 1940: How the tanks rolled in, and the Soviets took over. How you could trust no one. How footsteps would come in the night, and people would disappear without a trace. How the state made all the rules, did all your thinking for you. How religion could only be practiced in homes, in utmost secrecy, because practicing religion could lead to you being the next one to disappear in the night.

In the 1950s, we practiced air-raid drills in elementary school. We would all go out into the hallway, line up single-file against the wall and crouch down, covering our heads with our hands. Families were urged to build fallout shelters in their basements or back yards and keep them stocked.

And even though the enemy who could unleash this horror on us went unnamed, we all understood that it was the Soviet Union — the great Russian bear, prowling hungrily just outside the bounds of humanity, waiting to pounce on us, devour us and make us the next "annexation."

"We will bury you" said Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev as he pounded his shoe on a desk.

Grandpa believed it would happen.

And since he believed it, I did, too. Because, when you're 5, Grandpas can do no wrong, speak no untruths. Especially mine.

But when you get to be a little older than 5, you come to realize time has a way of changing things, even things no one — including Grandpas — dreamed could ever change.

Grandpa never heard of Mikhail Gorbachev or the words perestroika and glasnost.

But one day this fall, almost 20 years after Grandpa's death, I found myself standing in the middle of Red Square in my Reeboks and Brittanias, a Nikon slung over each shoulder, snapping photos as quickly as I could.

I thought about Grandpa then, and how so much had changed from the time I was 5.

And how I wished he could have lived to see his firstborn grandchild, his meshka, his little bear, in Moscow, standing in Red Square, walking through the Kremlin — as a tourist.

Grandpa would never have believed it could happen.

At Wit's End

Point, shoot, then run for cover

By Erma Bombeck

Bombeck

I was reading when I heard an ominous click telling me the safety on the weapon was released and ready to shoot. I looked up to see my husband take careful aim not 6 inches in front of me. Throwing up my hands in defense, I said, "Please don't do this."

It was too late. The camcorder was in my face, and he was saying, "This is Star Search! Tell me what you're feeling." As I ran from the room, he followed closely, shouting, "I love this business! I really do! You're beautiful!"

Was it only yesterday when every dinner I served turned cold while he set up his tripod to get a family group picture and someone said, "It's a shame we don't have sound"?

There was a reason we never had sound. With my remarks, our films would have gotten an R rating.

Video cameras and the amateurs who operate them have brought a new threat to our lives, and society doesn't care. No one is safe anymore from probing lenses. A person who has never so much as loaded an Instamatic can now go into a store, plop down a chunk of change, and be turned loose on the streets with his own weapon. No waiting period. No checking to see if he has a record of bad pictures. No training. Just point and shoot.

You never know when someone will bring to a party a camcorder hidden under his coat, and just when everyone is having a good time, he will terrorize the group by plugging it into the TV set and showing you what footage he has taken while no one was paying attention.

And no one knows what fear is until a child pulls a camcorder off the shelf where parents think it is safe and begins to record Mommy discussing Daddy's family with her girlfriend.

Some people regard using these cameras as a sport. They ask what's the harm of having one in the house just to shoot a wedding, a bar mitzvah or a family reunion. I say the weapon is too sophisticated for amateurs. If users are not zooming in and out making everyone nauseated, they're filming victims from the feet up or at close range. There is always one dominant voice emerging from the group that could shatter glass. That voice is always mine.

I know I am a cry in the wilderness, but think about it. You can buy video cameras easier than you can cash a check. Now is that scary or what!

Singles share house payments

By Laura Evenson
N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Singles increasingly are joining together to buy homes throughout California.

The California Association of Realtors said that 12 percent of the state's homebuyers last year represented nontraditional households made up of two or more unmarried individuals — double the 1986 level.

In the San Francisco Bay Area, such households accounted for 14.2 percent of home sales last year.

The trade group said these nontraditional households, when combined with single homebuyers, accounted for 36 percent of all California home sales last year, up from 29 percent five years ago.

Mack Powell, president of CAR, attributed the increase primarily to the state's high housing prices, which have soared nearly 61 percent in the past five years.

Home prices in California have been slipping since the summer of 1989 and the real-estate group has forecast a decline of nearly 15 percent in the home resale market this year.

However, without the doubling-up phenomenon plus some of the other social trends, home prices probably would drop even further.

The trade group's survey pointed to several other trends in home-buying activity:

- California homebuyers' annual median income last year was $60,000, unchanged from 1989 but up from $48,000 five years ago.
- The median age of California homebuyers last year was 38, up from 35 in 1989 and 36 in 1986.
- Eleven percent of the homes purchased last year were bought in all-cash transactions, more than double the figure in 1985.

Network war

LOS ANGELES — The war in the Persian Gulf will be covered at great financial sacrifice to the broadcast networks.

All three networks plan to cover at least the initial days of a war on a 24-hour basis. CNN plans to cover the war around the clock for as long as it lasts.

During coverage, CBS is eliminating all commercials at the start of its coverage of the hostilities and could not predict when they might return. NBC may try to include some commercials in its news coverage and ABC is openly trying to sell some commercial time. But the commercial time is certain to be drastically reduced.

While no one would put an exact dollar figure on potential losses, one senior network executive, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said the losses from canceled commercial time could be in the tens of millions of dollars a day at each of the three networks.

CNN has won praise for its recent news coverage, but cable television still only reaches about 60 percent of the viewers in the country.

TV games

SAN FRANCISCO — Nintendo, the video-game juggernaut, is vulnerable. Sales of the Japanese giant's original video-game machine declined in 1990 for the first time, as some game-cartridge prices have plummeted.

Now the empire is about to strike back. Nintendo says it will market a new game machine with twice the processing speed and snazzier graphics and sound. Many observers predict this could pose a big obstacle for U.S. personal-computer makers hoping to become major players in home entertainment.

"This will be the point that the video-game machine becomes more capable than the computer for running entertainment software," said Bruce Davis, chief executive of Mountain View-based Mediagenic, which sells both video and computer games under the Activision name.

The new system crunches 16 bits of data at a time, compared with eight bits for the 4-year-old Nintendo Entertainment System. It is expected to be on sale by September for between $150 to $190, with cartridges priced at $50 to $60.

New mortgage

WASHINGTON — Fannie Mae is teaming up with a private company to offer a new kind of home mortgage that combines an adjustable and a fixed interest rate in a single loan.

Fannie Mae, the federally chartered secondary mortgage market company formally known as the Federal National Mortgage Association, has agreed to buy up to $1 billion of the mortgages originated by General Electric Mortgage Capital Corp., Raleigh, N.C.

The so-called Stable mortgages will be available with two options.

In one, three-quarters of the loan amount would carry a fixed rate, while the rest would have an adjustable rate, repricing every year. The minimum down payment would be 5 percent.

It's better to switch than fight

■ In the interest of national security now is the time to switch to plentiful supplies of U.S. natural gas and become less dependent on oil says a Texas energy official.

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

The war in the Persian Gulf has once again caused some to refocus on energy independence as a viable goal for the U.S., and the increased use of plentiful U.S. supplies of natural gas to help achieve that goal.

"In light of the war in the Gulf, now is the time to concentrate on switching to natural gas to lessen our dependency on foreign oil," said Texas Railroad Commissioner James E. Nugent. "If the President does not have that goal as a part of his National Energy Strategy, he should."

President Bush has delayed comment and action on the National Energy Strategy which was delivered to him in December, after a year of input from energy, environmental and consumer groups, but it is almost certain that when does comment he will call for renewed interest and attention to natural gas.

Nugent said increased natural gas usage, along with increased domestic oil production should be given top priority in reducing U.S. dependence on foreign crude oil. He said that the use of natural gas would give us a material return in the form of a cleaner environment. The senior member of the Railroad Commission also stressed that conservation would be important in reducing dependence.

The use of compressed natural gas (CNG) as a transportation fuel, in vehicles such as this Amoco test car in Denver could replace 140 million barrels a year of imported oil.

At a recent meeting of independent oil producing nations in Mexico Nugent announced that natural gas would become the premier fuel of the 90s in Texas and that it would win an increasing share of the nation's energy mix.

Referring to a study by the Gas Research Institute, Nugent said 570,000 barrels a day of crude oil could be displaced in two years by the increased use of natural gas for residential, industrial, utility and transportation.

The report notes that the use of compressed natural gas (CNG) as a transportaion fuel for fleet vehicles could reduce imports by 140 million barrels per year or 38,000 barrels daily.

"This is just for vehicles that can use central fueling on a daily basis," said Nugent, who acknowledged that natural gas use in personal vehicles and 18-wheel, over-the-highway trucks could reduce imports even further.

Presently transportation accounts for 10.8 million barrels or well over half of the 17 million barrels consumed daily in the U.S.

Nugent said he thought Texas' mandate to convert approximately 750,000 vehicles to CNG over a period of time could serve as a model program for other states to open up the transportation market.

"Other states will have the advantage of our research and development and expertise as they gear up for CNG projects," said Nugent.

He said he was disappointed that the switch to natural gas was going so slowly. "It moves like molasses on a cold day." He noted that the capital cost of new projects could be a factor in switching. He said the cost of converting a vehicle to CNG now cost between $1500 and $2200 per vehicle.

Nugent said another promising but undeveloped market is the use of natural gas in coal-fired electrical generation. "This is a big market," he said. Nugent noted that natural gas burned with coal would not only clean up the environment, but it would make possible the burning of more coal which the U.S. has an abundance of, open a new market for natural gas, and reduce our dependence on foreign crude."We are actively pursueing that market," said Nugent.

He said now, with hostilities in the air, was the time to move toward natural gas, but acknowledged that its an economic matter. "We have plentiful and secure supplies of natural gas in the United States, and its time we started to use them." He said America had a 60 year supply of natural gas at current production levels and a 100-year supply if advanced technology and recovery methods are used.

Said Nugent: "It's going to take $2.25 cents per Mcf for producers to drill for natural gas, and I don't know when that price will come. I though it would come five years ago, but it just hangs there."

High tech workplace has long wounded list

Associated Press

CHICAGO (AP) — Ruth Robin has chronic fatigue syndrome, a mysterious and debilitating illness that can last months, or years. After months of querying doctors, it was a relief finally to have her persistent weariness diagnosed.

But it was only a start. She was left to grope for the hows and whys.

"My problem, like everybody else's, was that I didn't know what to point a finger at," she said. "It's kind of an eerie feeling to know that something is amiss ... and yet nobody can put their finger on a specific cause."

It is a feeling shared by many. They feel ill in countless ways, and in seeking to explain why, turn a gimlet eye on a toxic world of possibilities:

Radiation from microwaves and video display terminals. Toxic waste dumps, pesticides, faulty ventilation systems, formaldehyde.

Chernobyl's nuclear fallout, asbestos, polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs), birth control devices, the pill, flourescent lighting, synthetic carpeting, food additives, smog and water pollution.

All these are environmental realities, many of which have not been widely documented or studied. We live today with an estimated 60,000 chemicals that didn't exist 25 years ago. Is it too much, too fast?

"These are very thorny questions," said Walter J. Gunn, epidemiologist at the U.S. Centers for Disease Control. "The environment is capable of poisoning us ... but I don't think at the moment anyone would say (it) is killing us."

His prescription: "More studies need to be done to determine which parts of the environment are causing health problems for people."

Chellis Glendinning, author of "When Technology Wounds," says it is ironic that "technologies created to enhance life are bringing death ... and the vanguard of awareness is among people who have already gotten sick."

Ms. Glendinning, a psychologist and environmental activist, spent 20 years suffering, among other things, pelvic inflammatory disease, chronic allergies and an immune dysfunction that at one point landed her in bed for six years.

"People are being required to educate themselves because our environment is toxic," Ms. Glendinning said from Tesuque, N.M. "But there's a sense of victimization — total outrage that so much damage has already been done."

Ruth Robin, 40, suspects environmental chemicals or stale air circulated at the insurance office where she worked may have triggered her illness.

But she can't prove it. "It may take years and years of research," said Ms. Robin, head of the Chronic Fatigue Society of Illinois. "Still, just because somebody can't point to something specific doesn't mean it doesn't exist."

Medical researchers face a considerable challenge, however, in trying to trace and define technology's physical effects.

The variables are daunting. Try separating out the stress of a baby crying at home from the strain of waiting for the computer at work to blink "on line," or determining whether today's headache was spurred by the office photocopy fluid, recycled air, sinus congestion or last night's glass of wine.

"Medical science often lags behind in awareness of new disorders," said Alan Hedge, a Cornell University psychologist and professor of ergonometrics. "(But)

DALLAS (AP) — There's a part of the oil business that bothers Bobby Ewing.

"It's a funny thing about gold and diamonds and oil — people have been investing in them for years, and people have been getting burned for years," he said. "In the promoted oil business, (hyped as investment opportunities to unsophisticated investors) it's probably one in 1,000 that get their money back. I cannot comprehend how you can call somebody on the phone and send them a few pieces of paper and get them to send thousands of dollars to put in a hole in the ground 2,000 miles away."

In February, Ewing, of Dallas, teamed with Ron Herzfeld, an independent geologist, to form Corporate Energy Consultants. Ewing wants CEC to become the "Ghostbusters" of the oil patch — the company investors call when the need help evaluating a deal or getting themselves out of a scam.

"People have been tricked into giving money to things that have never been done or that have been overplayed," said Herzfeld, formerly the president of Independex, a Dallas energy consulting firm. "We hope to get to the point where people will know whom to call. There's not a lot of places people can go."

State and federal securities officials say promoted oil deals have increased sharply since the first of the year, encouraged by higher oil prices and increased horizontal drilling activity in South Texas.

The deals typically are touted through the telephone solicitations from phone banks known as boiler rooms. Boiler-room operators "cold call" potential investors and ask them to buy into deals. Often, the investor commits his funds before he's even seen the prospectus, which is supposed to outline the risks involved.

According to securities officials, promoters have been known to use investors' money for personal purposes and typically keep few or no records, making it difficult for investors to get their money back. Estimates of investors' losses are almost impossible to assess. However, at the height of the oil boom, some officials believe the losses nationally may have reached billions of dollars a year.

Herzfeld describes many of the potential investors targeted by boiler rooms as intelligent business people who just don't understand oil deals. Ewing said CEC draws on his experience in the oil business and Herzfeld's technical expertise to help investors spot inaccurate claims and verify a promoter's background. So far, he said, recommendations have been mixed, with a number of "don'ts" and a few "do's."

Ewing recommends that anyone wanting to put money into an oil venture have an annual income of at least $200,000 and a $1 million net worth.

Ewing also is offering to set some clients up in deals that CEC, for a fee, will screen. That practice has drawn skepticism from some securities officials, who say Ewing appears to be playing both sides of the fence — rooting out scams on the one hand but promoting deals on the other.

One former securities official in Dallas said Ewing may be taking advantage of people who already have been victimized by boiler-room schemes.

"All you're really looking for is people who just can't resist doing oil deals," said a former securities official in Dallas.

■ RIG COUNTS MIXED. The Permian Basin rig count jumped last week, while the U.S. count took a deep drop, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

In the Permian Basin, the tally rose 15 to 178 while in the U.S. the count dropped 60 to 1,048.

Ike Kerridge, a vice president of Baker Hughes, said the sharp one-week drop was the beginning of the standard decline from the usual drilling peak in December.

Texas lost the largest number of rigs among major oil-producing states, dropping 17 for the week.

Pennsylvania led the major oil-producing states for the week by adding eight rigs to the count.

Shell increases 1991 capital budget

HOUSTON (AP) — Shell Oil Co. plans capital and exploratory expenditures of $3.3 billion in 1991, an increase of $400 million over 1990's estimated spending.

About $2 billion, or 60 percent of all expected 1991 spending, is planned for exploration and development of domestic oil and gas, with about half planned for the Gulf of Mexico.

Shell also said it expects to reverse its production decline of the last few years, because both oil and natural gas production are forecasted to increase.

For 1990, the company said expenditures should total about $2.8 billion, including about $1.8 billion for exploration and production.

WORK: Employee problems

it's clear there are physical challenges in the environment and that people's systems are being affected."

The modern workplace is the focus of much suspicion. Over the last three decades, America has watched technological progress usher billion-dollar databases, fax machines and satellites into its hermetically sealed, flourescently lighted offices.

Marge Ciancio feels she is a victim of that exponential progress. Mrs. Ciancio loved her job as a directory assistance operator with Illinois Bell Telephone Co. right up until she had to leave it.

After 23 years, she'd finally been outpaced: passed up by ever faster computers; stressed out by on-the-job electronic monitoring; done in most of all by shooting pains in her arms, spine and neck.

"I couldn't sleep nights. I lay in bed crying," Mrs. Ciancio said, tears starting again. "It's awful because of the pain. But what's really painful is people can't see what's wrong with you, so they think you're nuts."

Mrs. Ciancio tried giving up coffee, exercising more rigorously, buying a new mattress, new pillows, even sleeping pills. She tried wrist splints, physical therapy, ultrasound and cortisone injections.

But the throbbing pain — sometimes tingly, sometimes sharp — persisted until she was eventually diagnosed with carpal tunnel syndrome, a degenerated spinal disk and neck strain injuries similar to a severe whiplash.

"All the joy went out of the job because it was always 'Faster, faster, go faster' until finally you say to yourself: 'My God, how much more can I take?' Stress at the office affects so many people. So many people are in pain.

"I'm 49 years old and I feel like I'm about a hundred," said Mrs. Ciancio, whose disability pay runs out in mid-February. "I feel robbed."

The U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics found in 1988 that 115,400 office workers — many of them computer users — suffered painful and potentially crippling symptoms such as massive backaches, wrist, arm and neck strains.

And then there is chronic fatigue, Ruth Robin's malady. The CDC receives 2,000 calls a month from people who complain of the disorder; it is the fourth most commmon reason cited when patients visit internists.

"People are paying much closer attention to the real medical and behavioral symptoms that come out of work-related sources because ... they are not just psychosomatic," said Frank Landy, an industrial psychologist at Pennsylvania State University.

"There's a lot more to it than that," he said.

Some researchers have linked CFS to a family of viruses that disrupts the immune system. Others believe the syndrome may be triggered by environmental toxins or the physiological effects of stress.

But as often as not, doctors find no physical evidence of CFS in patients with related symptoms. Their malady may be attributed to depression or a "yuppie flu" best treated with improved health habits and stress reduction.

"People want to identify it as something outside themselves — not just that thing that Grandma used to call 'the blues,' " said Dr. Mark Hroncich, who teaches internal medicine at Loyola University Medical Center in suburban Chicago.

"There are physicians who are trying to promote a new specialty called clinical ecology that, as far as I'm concerned, is pure quackery," Hroncich said.

New smart house will save work

STONE MOUNTAIN, Ga. (AP) — You're upstairs with your hands full, trying to find the light switch when the doorbell rings and if it's a salesman, well, you just don't have time for it now.

No problem if you live in a Smart House.

Motion sensors would turn lights on when you entered a room, and a video monitor would show if someone important was at the door.

Not to mention programming your security system by phone when you're away, or setting your automatic window shades to raise and lower when you're on vacation so it looks like you're not.

Computer intelligence has arrived at a three-bedroom house in suburban Atlanta through the Electric Smart House Limited Partnership, a consortium of businesses and the Electric Power Research Institute. With $40 million, the consortium developed, built and marketed Smart House.

The home, which will go on the market for $300,000 in July, will be showcased at the National Home Builders Association convention next month as an example of how technology can make life more convenient and energy-efficient for homeowners.

The white-columned two-story house resembles the antebellum style of the old South outside, but inside has a contemporary design. A sweeping staircase dominates the front of the home, which has two wings leading off the foyer, one for the master bedroom and the other for the dining room. A combination two-story living room and eat-in kitchen share the back of the house.

Although prototypical computerized homes have been built before, this is the first one that will be sold.

True, much of the gadgetry is entertainment — a high-definition television or programmable "mood-lighting," for example.

But other features can cut energy consumption by up to 50 percent, its sponsors say. By touching a computer screen in the master bedroom or kitchen, the owner programs appliances to shut off during peak hours of electricity usage — an advantage for consumers whose utilities charge more at peak times.

A dishwasher can be programmed to turn on after midnight, when electricity and hot water cost less, for example. Or window shades can be programmed to close when the afternoon sun shines through bedroom windows in the summer, blocking excess heat.

"It can be a toy — I love to show it," said Jason A. Levine, project manager for Custom Command Systems, which designed and installed the computer. "But it has a practical side by regulating energy use."

The electric meter is connected to a prototype "gateway" that tells the house when peak rates hit and allows the utility to read the meter by computer.

It also has a message center allowing the utility to communicate with the homeowner.

"They can tell you, for instance, that they're coming to cut tree branches tomorrow, or that you're delinquent on your bill and would you like them to charge it to your credit card," said David Myers of Honeywell Inc., who built the gateway.

The gateway is an advance over electric management offered to about 2 million Georgians from Oglethorpe Power Co., which sends radio signals to water heaters and air conditioners, turning them off during peak hours.

"Peak reduction can save us money ... by preventing us from building new generating facilities," said Oglethorpe spokesman Greg Jones. "With the switches we have in place now we can reduce peak load by 300 megawatts — about a third or half of the significantly sized power plant that doesn't have to be built."

In the summer, the house in essence provides free hot water. The heat pump — both heater and air conditioner — is connected to the water heater. In the summer, instead of just pumping hot air from the house outside, it pumps it into the water heater, heating water without the heater turning on.

Now the industry must package all this technology — originally marketed to homebuyers in the $150,000-range and up — for medium-income buyers.

"There's a class of consumer who just wants this because it's sexy," said Ralph E. Abbott, president of Plexus Research Inc. of Boston, a technology and management consulting firm. "But there's a larger class who, if they can be shown it will improve their lifestyle with convenience and put money back into their pocket, will want just the practical side."

The trademark Smart House — expected to go into mass production in 25 cities by summer — will cost an additional $3,000 to $5,000 over conventional wiring to install in a 2,500-square-foot house. Once the wiring is installed, homeowners can choose any equipment to include.

DEAL: Oilpatch sleuths

(From 1G)

Ewing admitted that the deal screening can create a conflict of interest, but he said the company is not taking advantage of investors for personal gain.

Herzfeld said CEC's deal screening provides an alternative service to investors by helping them learn how to approach oil and gas investments.

"We're not going to handle their money," Herzfeld said.

If a deal is successful, CEC gets 10 percent of the client's returns, said Ewing. As a consultant, CEC charges $10 per hour, or a $600 retainer fee, plus expenses.

While Ewing admits name recognition from the fictional Bobby Ewing of "Dallas," may help his business, he said the similarities between the two stop with the name.

"I don't have the money or the looks, either one," he said.

Bank chairman deals with costly bailout

By Leslie Wayne
N.Y. Times News Service

BOSTON — Slumped in a chair, after having just met with federal regulators, Lawrence K. Fish, chairman of the failed Bank of New England, looked tired, but ebullient.

Fish

A "Smile It's a SNAPP" button dangled from his shirt pocket, referring to a new checking account the bank was promoting.

His bank is on its way to becoming the object of one of the costliest bailouts in history, but the 46-year-old Fish was irrepressible.

He has been on the job only 10 months, brought in to try to rescue a bank sinking under the weight of bad loans. The attempt failed, but not Fish's enthusiasm. Despite his inability to accomplish what many felt could not be done.

"Why did I take this job?" he said in response to a question. "My God, I'd take it again. You spend a lifetime, getting ready to run your race — and this is my race."

It is a race that has put him at the center of banking's most visible trouble spot — a bailout that could cost as much as $2.3 billion.

Federal regulators have, in effect, endorsed Fish and his handpicked management team by taking the unusual step of leaving them in place after having taken control of the bank.

As the regulators prepare to sell the bank and prospective buyers comb its wreckage, Fish is left to try to rally morale and protect the value of the $22 billion institution, which has loyal deposits, billions in still-valuable loans and buildings and properties.

He walks around the floors these days, reassuring employees. In the week after the federal takeover, he appeared before 8,000 of the bank's 12,000 employees. (Another 5,700 have been let go in recent months.)

Fish is drafting a "Dear Colleague" letter telling employees how government ownership will affect their benefits.

And he loves to tell heart-warming stories like the one about the elderly woman who brought cookies to a Hartford branch manager to make him feel better. His task is to keep track of the thousands of little things necessary to keep the bank alive until a buyer is found.

"This is not a happy time," Fish allowed, as he sat in a conference room at the State Street headquarters. "Disappointment isn't a word that comes to mind right now. More like sadness. Sadness that this fine institution has come apart after 200 years, sadness for the employees who went through so much. There's a feeling of loss.

"But, I've drawn an incredible amount of strength from the employees. We feel proud of all we got done together, and yes, I've drawn strength and joy from that. There's a lot of positive energy here. There's sadness but also energy."

Brokers report mixed earnings

N.Y. Times News Service

Primerica Corp., the diversified financial services company, reported Wednesday that it had earned $98.8 million, or 89 cents a share, in the fourth quarter of 1990, compared with $95.9 million, or 87 cents a share, in the comparable period in 1989.

At the same time, Charles Schwab Corp., the nation's largest discount brokerage, reported that its fourth-quarter earnings had declined to $1 million, from $6.1 million in the comparable quarter in 1989.

The earnings reports were the first to trickle in after one of Wall Street's toughest years in history. The figures demonstrate that widely different companies have experienced stress in recent months. Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co., the brokerage subsidiary of Primerica, dismissed 300 employees to improve its bottom line, the company said.

Primerica said that its revenues for the fourth quarter of 1990 also improved. The company reported $1.7 billion in revenues, compared with $1.6 billion in the fourth quarter of 1989.

Earnings a share for the year also increased. The company reported its earnings for 1990 were $372.9 million, or $3.27 a share, compared with $289 million in 1989, or $2.87 a share, in 1989.

Investors rush to 'safe' mutual funds in record numbers

By Scott Burns

Something snapped last week.

Burns

Maybe it was anticipation of war in the Middle East. Maybe it was the fall of the Bank of New England. Maybe it was the closing of 45 depository institutions in the state of Rhode Island.

Maybe it was worry about the value of deposit insurance that could be changed at any time by a ruminative Congress. Maybe it was the ongoing budget deficit. Maybe it was the sudden increase in people losing their jobs. Maybe it was one "maybe" too many. .

Whatever. People moved their money: the Investment Company Institute announced that in the week ending last Wednesday money market mutual funds had a $16.38 billion increase in assets to $438.39 billion. It was the largest single increase since the trade association started weekly reporting in 1972. The rise dwarfed the $9.62 billion increase that followed the October, 1987 market crash.

Suddenly everyone was remembering the old Will Rogers line: "I don't care so much about the return ON my money as the return OF my money."

So yields are falling.

At the weekly Treasury auction on January 7 some $57.4 billion in cash chased the opportunity to loan the U.S. Treasury $20 billion for 13 and 26 weeks. Coupon equivalent rates were 6.72 and 6.82 percent, respectively, the lowest since 1988 and a full 100 basis points (there are 100 basis points in 1 percent) below the high for last year.

At the January 14 auction rates fell 40 basis points on 13 week bills and 30 basis points on 26 week bills. The level of non-competitive bids, usually submitted by individuals and small institutions, was a record. Money market mutual funds were major buyers. The haven of choice for most people?

Money market mutual funds that invest in U.S. Treasury securities. According to Donoghue's Moneyletter, the average general purpose money market fund (a fund that invests in commercial paper, bank and eurodollar CDs, and Bankers' Acceptances, provided a yield of 7.34 percent in the week ending January 9 while the average government securities only money market fund was yielding 6.99 percent. Only 7 days earlier, the same report showed government securities funds were yielding 7.40 percent. Significantly, yields on general purpose funds didn't fall as much.

Why?

Most of the new money is going into government-only funds. As I said, something snapped last week. People want to sleep well.

Allen Parker, portfolio manager for U.S. Treasury Securities Cash Fund, a $220 million government-only money market fund offered by United Services Funds in San Antonio, Texas, explained how most government money market funds are managed with a strategy called the "barbell":

"The investment strategy for Treasury only funds is pretty fully developed. If your goal is to have a 60 day weighted average maturity, you put about 50 percent of your money in overnight collateralized repurchase obligations. Repurchase agreements are loans to brokers and dealers for an overnight term. The loan is collateralized by U.S. Treasury securities.

"Then you ladder out the rest of the money to 120 days."

When an investor "ladders" money he spreads it out over different maturities in a regular pattern so that some portion of the portfolio is close to maturity all the time.

"You'd do this to get an attractive return," said Allen Parker. "As we speak you need to go out 6 months to get a 7 percent return. Most funds do that now. The exception is the funds that don't invest in repos.

"Some investors object to repos. To overcome their objections, we take the collateral (U.S. Treasury obligations) in house and insist on 104 percent collateral. That way even if there are incredible gyrations, say in response to shooting in the Middle East, we're covered. Having half your assets in overnight obligations is a powerful tool for maintaining your constant dollar."

Money market mutual funds strive to keep the net asset value

BURNS: Yields falling

of their shares at exactly one dollar so that investors have no exposure to loss of principal or variation in principal.

Mr. Parker observed that so many investors were betting on lower interest rates that yields were higher on January maturities than on February and March maturities. With that exception, he saw a "classic" yield curve, a spread of around 200 basis points between 3 months and 30 years. The rates, however, were sinking faster at short maturities because so many investors were seeking safety and liquidity. According to Salomon Brothers, a major New York investment banking firm, 3 month Treasuries were yielding 8.05 percent at this time last year while 30 year Treasuries were yielding 8.34 percent, a spread of only 0.29 percent. In first week of January, 3 month Treasuries were yielding 6.63 percent and sinking fast. Thirty year Treasuries, however, were yielding 8.11 percent, a minor drop from last year. The spread is now 148 basis points.

The U.S. Treasury Securities Cash Fund, while tiny compared to the largest Treasury funds, has two interesting features:

Unlimited checking. While most funds prescribe a minimum amount, limit the number of checks, or charge per transaction, their shareholders have unlimited checks at no cost. This compares very favorably with bank Money Market Accounts which provided a lower average yield percent and limit customers to three checks a month.

It is organized as a Massachusetts Business Trust. This is important for shareholders who live in states with high STATE income taxes because their income from the fund will be free of state income taxes. Significantly, both Fidelity, a Massachusetts firm, and Dreyfus, a New York firm, offer similar funds that are also organized to avoid state income taxes.

Looking to the future, Mr. Parker said, "I think we're seeing a major deleveraging — not just a cyclical event, but a secular movement. The future is that we will be borrowing less and saving more."

Here are the contact phone numbers for several firms that offer government only money market funds:

Peter Krausz, above, stands beside his drawing of his father, Tibor K.Thomas. The piece is among those in the "Enlightment Through Freedom" exhibit at the Art Institute for the Permian Basin featuring works by three Romanian emigre artists — Krausz, Thomas and Michael Razvan.

Tibor K. Thomas, right, a longtime teacher and artist, says of artistic style, "It is useless to force or to try to accelerate the development of a personal style; rather it will crystalize in time, in rhythm, with the artist's evolution. If he borrows a style, he will produce an unconvincing and false work. Nevertheless, one cannot deny the role of influences in the development of a personal style, as the artist is constantly bombarded with impressions that contribute to a modeling of his personality. It is important though, that what he assimilates should be enriched by his emotions, his feeling and personal experiences."

Michael Razvan, below, stands with a small model of "The Aspirer," which will be about "three times bigger than the Statue of Liberty." Razvan hopes its home will be San Francisco Bay or Los Angeles in the year 2000. The 40-inch model is in the current "Enlightment Through Freedom" exhibit. When asked what inspired him to attempt a project which will cost hundreds of millions by the time it's completed, Razvan said, "I dream about it. I said, 'I got to do something big, I got to do something for people to recognize my name instantly when they hear it. I can't jump from a bridge.' I thought of this eagle that will fly — the beak and the eyes almost nonexistent, but it turns into a realistic features. The feathers are realistic. If you look at the piece, you can feel the wind going by."

Artistic freedom

Tibor Krausz Thomas, Peter Krausz and Michael Razvan have more than art in common. In 1969, all fled their native country — Romania — to find artistic and personal freedom in the Western world.

The 17-year-old Razvan, who began making small creations in his grandfather's welding shop when he was 5, found his studio ransacked after the subtle expressions in one of his pieces were judged contradictory to the Communist objectives and perceptions of Socialist art. The ransacking of his studio served as a warning. It also marked the beginning of his activities being kept under surveillance.

Razvan fled, waiting days at the Romanian-Yugoslavia border watching the behavior of the tower guards before making a run for freedom.

"I was too hungry to wait any longer," Razvan said. "I took off across a piece of ground which had been tilled so they could see the tracks where somebody walked. I jumped the fence, the barbed wire fence, and it must have had some kind of alarm. Anyone touches the fence, it rings everywhere. They came and started shooting. My knee got hurt from a ricochet."

Razvan, who says his life project is constructing as a freedom monument a 600-foot Golden Eagle statue, made it to the Austria-West Germany border before he was stopped.

"They put me in this little room, gave me a shower," Razvan said. "After 22 days, it was the first time I took my shoes off. It was kind of nice to be in a warm place and have food."

Whereas Razvan's escape was a solo venture, Thomas and Krausz' escape was planned around a vacation which included Mrs. Thomas and which required they leave behind anything a person wouldn't usually take on a two-week vacation.

They had a common plan because they share another bond — Thomas — who was born Tibierru Krausz in 1919 — is Peter Krausz' father. He changed his name following his escape because of threats made against those who defected from Romania.

"They went to Czechoslovakia and finally worked their way to a crossing into Austria where they applied for their papers to go into Austria telling officials that because they were artists they wanted to see an exhibition at the museum in Vienna," said Marilyn Bassinger, director of Odessa's Art Institute for the Permian Basin.

Works by all three artists are included in the exhibition "Enlightment through Freedom," on display at the Art Institute, 4909 E. University, through March 1.

"It was very unusual for the officials to allow an entire family to cross into the free world for a vacation, or to leave the country without family members being held to prevent the defection," Mrs. Bassinger said. "It was a very tense moment when it came time for them to stamp their papers; they could have handed them back and refused to allow them to cross.

"Instead, the border guards handed them their papers, shook their hands and wished them luck on their vacation. It was obvious to them that the border guards knew that they were defecting and allowed them to go."

Razvan was sent from the Austria-West Germany border to an American-sponsored refugee camp. He spent the next 2½ years studying and working in West Germany before coming to the United States.

"The first night in U.S. city I got mugged," he said. "I had $5, and they took that away from me. I was naive walking the streets at night. I just wanted to see New York. I was so im-

Singer feels like he bet on winning horse

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

Travis Tritt's lifetime dream has become reality. Listed among the up and coming country stars, Tritt's first single — "Country Club" — on Warner Bros. — released in August of 1989 — rose into the Top 10 securing a place at No. 9.

Tritt

"It was also the largest selling debut single Warner Bros. has had on a country artist," Tritt said in a recent interview. "It was a huge, huge pat on the back for me — just the jolt and support from the beginning that I needed to make me realize maybe I do have a shot at this here."

The debut album also produced two No. 1 hits — "Help Me Hold On" and "I'm Gonna Be Somebody." Since then, Tritt, who was born and raised in Marietta, Ga., has been a nominee for Country Music Association's Horizon Award, received Billboard Magazine's 1990 New Male Country Artist award and released his current single, "Put Some Drive in Your Country," which is also on video.

"I couldn't be happier I don't think," said the 27-year-old singer and guitarist. "I feel like I would have if I had bet every dime I had on a horse at the Kentucky Derby, and it came in first. That's exactly how I feel. Every dream that I've ever had has come true, everything that I've ever wanted to do has come full circle.

"I'VE GONE through all the hard times with it. I stuck with it when people around me were telling me I was crazy. I hung with it and saw it do more than I ever actually thought it would do. And that's a wonderful feeling."

Tritt's singing dates back farther than his memory.

"I have loved music since I was a child. I loved singing before I remember loving singing. My parents tell me stories that I did when I was 2 and 3 years old that involve singing that I don't remember. I was singing Roger Miller's 'Trailers for Sale or Rent' and 'King of the Road' when I was just a child.."

'I've gone through all the hard times with it. I stuck with it when people around me were telling me I was crazy. I hung with it and saw it do more than I ever actually thought it would do. And that's a wonderful feeling.'

— Travis Tritt

Tritt compares a singing career to one in football.

"Football players have to love football. To go out on the football field and let bunch of other guys who are huge, massive people beat on you all day, you have to love that sport. It's more than money and the appeal of being in the public eye. Music is the same way."

Despite his love for music, Tritt was, he said, "basically scared to make the commitment to get into it full time. I knew I loved it and wanted to do it, but I didn't know if I had enough of the talent."

Thus, for years Tritt worked at other jobs including laying carpet, construction, laborer, moving furniture and bagging groceries. He wound up working for a heating and air-conditioning company, where he started on the docks and wound up in management. This was the job he quit and the security he left when he struck out on his own, armed with his voice and his guitar.

"My love for music and my God-given talent for music, eventually one day, I had to try make my living with. I think it's always wonderful if you can do for a living something you enjoy doing. For years I didn't do that."

ALTHOUGH MANY of his friends and relatives were opposed to his decision, others supported him. People who made the greatest impression on him were those "who had had a dream for themselves and for whatever reason didn't pursue it and were older and couldn't."

Tritt realized he could wind up as they did. He could spend his life wondering if he could have make it in the music business or he could put all his energy into making his dream a reality. He spent time as a solo act in clubs in Marietta. Then, the Marlboro Talent Competition gave him a reason to cut a demo tape.

"That's when things really started happening for me," said Tritt, who had an engineering friend who was wiring a "woodshed studio" in the back of the home of a Warner Bros. studio executive and songwriter, Danny Davenport. Tritt made it to the Marlboro finals, and he and Davenport spent 2½ years completing an album which they presented to Warner Bros. Tritt's music has been climbing the charts since.

Currently, Tritt, who began writing songs when he was 14, is working on another album. Fans at Thursday's concert at Ector County Coliseum will discover a number of his new songs have found their way into his performance.

"I think we do a very, very strong show," Tritt said. "It's definitely not boring at any point. There's always something going on on stage. I'm not the kind of artist who walks out on stage, sings all his hits and never talks to the audience. We try to involve audiences in the show."

He has no romantic attachments.

"I'm married to my music right now," said Tritt, whose hobbies include riding a motorcycle in the country, fishing and hunting. "That's about all I really have time for."

He WANTS his fans to know that he is no different than they are.

"When you're in the entertainment industry, people tend to put you up on a pedestal, they think you're different from anyone else, you magically put your britches on two legs at a time in the morning. That's a myth I want to explode. I'm no different from anyone in that audience. Everybody in this world has got a talent in some area. Mine happens to be in music. Because it's in music, I happen to be in the public eye.

"I don't know how to run a computer. I don't know how to build a car. Just because they aren't in front of 10,000 people doing their jobs, doesn't mean they aren't as important and doesn't mean that no one recognizes their job. I do."

ART: Romanians flee country seeking artistic freedom pressed by New York in pictures. The next morning I had nothing."

(From 1H)

A mission for East European refugees provided Razvan with food and a modest hotel room until he found work.

"I found work very quickly because I had a lot of knowledge about art," said Razvan, whose grandfather had created many of the ornate wrought iron gates for cathedrals in Bucharest.

Razvan went to work at Roman Bronze, an art foundry. "It was a very nice job; it just didn't pay a lot."

As fascinated as he had been by pictures of New York, he didn't stay there permanently.

"New York was cold, freezing rain. I called a friend of mine in Los Angeles, and he said, 'Well, tomorrow I'm going to go to the beach and get some sun.' I said, 'Wait for me. I'll be there.' "

Once in the West, the Thomases and Krausz spent four months in Rome before finally settling in Montreal, Canada.

"They sent money to a relative to buy back four or five of Tibor's paintings. Their request for others was refused, and they are still somewhere in the Soviet Union. Peter, at the time was engaged, and they sent money to literally buy her out of the country," said Razvan.

Today, Thomas is a well-known portrait artist in Canada who also does landscapes, harbor scenes and street scenes. Among his favorite subjects is his granddaughter, Annika.

Mrs. Thomas is an art critic and writer who now acts as manager for her husband and son.

Krausz teaches at Concordia University and the University of Montreal and is director curator of the Saidye Bronfman Center Art Gallery, Montreal, Quebec, where he lives.

"Peter's works are very powerful," Mrs. Bassinger said. "His drawings and paintings are often hung singularly. At times, they are used in an installation depending upon the site.

"His strongest piece in the show, I think personally, is his drawing of his father. He said in his lecture (at the Art Institute) that in his mind and in his drawing his father takes on almost biblical proportions. The artist has great reverance for familial relationships. He and his father have survived according to both of them and to his mother, who was there through the often touchy situation of a father and a son pursuing like vocations. Peter has gone in his own direction with his art, and his father has honored that."

Thomas was a professor of drawing and painting at the Bucharest Academy of Fine Arts from 1950 to 1969. Over the years he was sent to numerous Eastern Bloc countries, including the Soviet Union, on cultural exchanges. Currently, both Mr. and Mrs. Thomas travel extensively. His work shows the influences of freedom.

"We have three of his paintings — one of his son — done while he was waiting in Rome," Mrs. Bassinger said. "They are very dark somber colors, often angular, a somewhat Cezanne style of painting. In subsequent visits to Rome and to Mexico and other countries in the Free World, his palette changed very drastically to bright, bright colors. He has been influenced by the vivid colors."

Through the years, Razvan has worked for himself as a sculptor, and he has traveled around the country helping others establish foundries. Today, much of his energy is being channeled toward what he calls his "life project," a Golden Eagle statue, named "The Aspirer."

"The whole statue is 600 feet from wing tip to wing tip. It's kind of flying so it stands on one wing. The whole supports itself on one wing, and one wing is up in the air."

Razvan's installation date for "The Aspirer," which will be constructed of stainless steel, is the year 2000.

"I would like to install it in San Francisco Bay in the year 2000. It will be finished. I do have all the plans, and the wheels are in motion right now for the construction of the monument. It's three times bigger than the Statue of Liberty, approximately."

At the time of the interview, Razvan had not approached officials in San Francisco about his project.

"I keep secret for almost a year this project," Razvan said, giving as his reasons for silence the "legal aspects" and the copyright, which was recently secured.

"I haven't approached San Francisco, yet, but I know for a fact Los Angeles won't be too happy about it. It's a major, major undertaking. We'll donate the piece to the U.S. government.

"The '90s is the decade of freedom. Last year, everything happened. Everything is going toward freedom now in the world. We appreciate the United States for everything that's happened to us. One of the main sources of inspiration is the United States, starting with John Wayne movies."

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

MOSC begins youth program

The Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale begins its annual in-school Youth Education Program for the Midland and Odessa school districts this month.

This program introduces more than 15,000 students to the world of classical music. As part of its mission, the symphony strives to be a partner with the schools in the music education of the youth of Midland and Odessa, said a release from the organization.

The In-School Youth Concert Program was started in 1983 by the symphony to compliment the music programs provided by the school systems. The program serves fourth, fifth and sixth grade students and is sponsored in-part by the two school districts, the Texas Commission on the Arts and the ARCO Foundation.

"We very much appreciate the contribution the symphony makes to our schools and to our community," said Grace Osadchuk, coordinator of Fine Arts for the Midland Independent School District.

This season will continue the tradition of 38 concerts presented during January, February and March. Concerts will include the Chamber Orchestra, the Thouvenel String Quartet, the Lone Star Brass Quintet and the newly formed West Texas Winds, a woodwind quintet.

"I can think of my better way to introduce young people to the wonder of music than by having a program of great music presented by a real orchestra in their own school," said Charles Nail, associate director of Music Education for the Ector County Independent School District.

MCT seeks scripts

Deadline for script submission is Jan. 31 for the second annual McLaren Memorial Comedy Playwriting Competition.

The competition is Midland Community Theatre's nationwide contest for original, unproduced comedy scripts of any length.

The prize will be a reader's theater production of the play at MCT in July or August, a cash stipend of $400 and accommodations in Midland for the rehearsal period and during the readers' theater.

Finalists will be announced April 1. Scripts will not be returned unless accompanied by a self-addressed, stamped envelope. The playwright retains all rights to the work submitted.

Memorials for McLaren will be utilized in the competition, according to Mary Lou Cassidy, contest director.

McLaren, who died in May 1989, was a writer, actor and radio personality who often appeared on the Midland Community Theatre stage. Memorials may be directed to McLaren Memorial Fund, Midland Community Theatre, 2000 W. Wadley, 79705.

For more information about the McLaren Memorial Comedy Playwriting Competition, contact Midland Community Theatre, 2000 W. Wadley, 79705 or call 682-2544.

Concert workshop set

As part of a series of Professional Training Workshops launched during its centennial celebration, Carnegie Hall will offer a national workshop on Presenting Educational Concerts March 17-21.

The workshop is designed specifically for education directors, conductors and music administrators and will deal with urgent issues concerning the programming of educational concerts.

The workshop will highlight the different approaches of four conductors and feature daily keynote speeches by renowned educators as well as panel discussions led by leaders in the fields of arts and education.

Some of the topics discussed will include educational programming for culturally diverse young audiences, effective tools and techniques for program evaluation and the preparation and training of artists and school teachers for educational programs.

The Presenting Educational Concerts workshop coincides with Carnegie Hall's annual daytime concerts for more than 22,000 New York City public school children and includes admittance to and discussion of these concerts. For more information write to Education Department Carnegie Hall, 881 Seventh Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10019.

More viewers watch news

By Deborah Hastings

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The prospect of war in the Persian Gulf brought more viewers to nightly news broadcasts and NBC posted its highest prime-time win of the season in the latest network ratings showdown.

NBC won last week's race with a 14.5 average, its best finish of the 17-week-old season. NBC also won by the largest margin of the season, finishing two ratings points ahead of second-place CBS.

CBS earned a 12.4 average in the overall network standings. ABC was third with 12.3, according to figures released Tuesday by the A.C. Nielsen Co.

As the Jan. 15 deadline loomed for Iraq to withdraw from Kuwait or face military attack, greater numbers of viewers tuned in last week to nightly network newscasts.

ABC and Peter Jennings were No. 1 with a 12.5 average, followed by a tie between NBC and CBS with 11.5 each. Those ratings reflect an increase from the previous week of nearly 1 million viewers for each network.

A ratings point represents 931,000 homes.

NBC's "Cheers" was the most watched show on television, followed by CBS' news magazine "60 Minutes" and its special Gulf reports. CBS' smart-aleck TV reporter "Murphy Brown" was No. 3 and the network's wisecracking interior decorators of "Designing Women" were No. 4.

NBC also scored with the premiere of "Dark Shadows,' a prime-time series based on the old daytime soap opera. Sunday's part one of a "Dark Shadows" miniseries launching the new program tied with ABC's "20-20" for 30th place.

CBS won the Sunday night time period with a repeat of "Witness," starring Harrison Ford. The feature film directed by Peter Weir placed 17th overall.

Rounding out the top 10 was NBC's "A Different World" at No. 5, followed by the network's "Golden Girls."

ABC's "America's Funniest Home Videos" was No. 7. "Roseanne" was eighth. "Bob Hope's Christmas Cheer" special taped in Saudi Arabia landed in a three-way tie for ninth place with ABC's "Family Matters" and "Full House."

Here is a list of the top 10 shows, their network and rating: "Cheers," NBC, 23.4; "60 Minutes," CBS, 20.6; "Murphy Brown," CBS, 20; "Designing Women," CBS, 19.9; "A Different World," NBC, 19.4; "The Golden Girls," NBC, 19.3; "America's Funniest Home Videos," ABC, 19.1; "Roseanne," ABC, 18.8; "Bob Hope's Christmas Cheer," NBC, "Family Matters," ABC, "Full House," ABC (tie) 18.1.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: In February, a move to another state or city will lead to a much more rewarding career. Romance seeks you out in April. Take things nice and easy. September is the best month to purchase a home. A raise or a bonus adds to your financial security in late fall. Look forward to a more active social calendar as the winter holidays approach. Someone you once loved will reappear. Keep your feet on the ground.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: comedian George Burns, astronaut Edwin "Buzz" Aldrin, actor Lorenzo Lamas, actress Patricia Neal.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Choose your attire with extra care today. A romantic attraction plays a major role in your plans. You will learn the truth about a special relationship. Dine with an old friend tonight.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Plan a family outing that will help you bridge the generation gap. You could be too gullible. Avoid taking unnecessary risks in romance or finance. Protect your loved ones' future.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): By paying attention to the details of a friend's problem, you will be able to offer excellent advice. A romantic evening could be in store for you. Avoid pressing for a commitment.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your intuition could be off today; act accordingly. Relationships with the opposite sex will go smoothly. Someone keeps a promise. A great evening to entertain at home. Wear something elegant.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Being overly critical of someone's efforts could cause a serious rift in your relationship. Gentle encouragement is the key to improving this person's performance. Replace bad habits with good ones.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): One distraction after another offers itself today. Seek pleasure in the company of your friends and loved ones. A newcomer could make romantic overtures. An exciting evening awaits you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Influential people will be impressed with your realistic approach to a ticklish situation. A telephone call will bring wonderful news. This is what you have been waiting for!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A wonderful day for family life. You discover an important truth while on a special outing. A self-improvement project will make you look and feel terrific. Go ahead and give it a try!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Avoid using sarcasm with your loved ones and you will be in a better position to help them. The advice you offer will be more appreciated than you know. Be more affectionate.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Do not be taken in by a sob story; they got themselves into this mess and they will have to get themselves out. Offer a young person practical suggestions for finding employment.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Postpone decisions of a financial nature. What looks like a sure bet is really a scam. Donate your talents to a campaign to help the less fortunate. Acts of kindness will be richly rewarded.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A good day to brush up on the art of relaxation! The presence of authority types at a social event will not suit you. Spend the evening at home with a good book.

North had a difficult response to make. Afraid a jump to three no trump, the value bid, would deprive North-South of too much bidding space, North elected to make a positive response on a four-card suit. Impressed by 150 honors, South drove to the heart slam. East's double requested a spade lead.

Since West's two of spades was obviously a singleton, declarer rose with the ace and drew four rounds of trumps. With no clear way to 12 tricks, declarer cashed the last trump, on which West discarded the two of diamonds while all three of the board's spades were sluffed.

South then played off the ace-king of clubs and three rounds of diamonds, ending in dummy, and led the jack of clubs. West won, but was forced to give the table the fulfilling trick with a club. Have you noted all the miscues?

First fault South for not bidding the slam in no trump. With no ten-aces, there was no advantage to having the lead come up to the South hand. South gets another demerit for not correcting to six no trump when given a second chance after the double. Played by North, that slam is unbeatable.

Fault West for parting with the wrong deuce on the last trump. Once declarer was out of trumps, there was no point in holding onto a fourth club.

Lastly, declarer also erred in not finding the line that would have succeeded no matter what West kept.

After unblocking the top clubs, declarer should cash the ace of diamonds, overtake the jack with the queen, then jettison the king of diamonds on the jack of clubs. Then dummy will be able to win whichever minor-suit West returns to take the last two tricks!

Planetarium to do 'Winter Fantasy'

Staff Report

A new sky program, "Winter Fantasy," is being presented at the Marian Blakemore Planetarium of the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., through Feb. 24.

The show, developed by Mark Hartman, planetarium director, focuses on the most prominent winter constellations. The story behind the constellations Orion the Hunter and Taurus the Bull is told. A brief discussion of celestial objects visible in the sky during this time of year is included.

Showings of "Winter Fantasy" are presented each Sunday at 2 and 3:30 p.m. and Tuesdays at 7:30 p.m. The planetarium is located at the corner of K Street and Indiana Avenue at Haley Park and the museum complex. No admission is charged.

Planets to watch during January are Mercury and Jupiter and a penumbral lunar eclipse occurring on the night of January 29/30.

Into mid and late January Mercury will be visible in the southeast each morning as dawn approaches. Just before sunrise the planet will be as high as 10 degrees above the southeastern horizon.

Mars begins to dim through the passage of January. It is located among the stars of Taurus high overhead in the southern sky between 9 and 10 p.m. each night.

As January progresses, the planet Jupiter rises earlier each night until January 28-29 when it will rise just as the sun sets and will be visible high in the sky all night. This is called "opposition." It is a time when Jupiter appears opposite the sun from the Earth. Jupiter at opposition is a good time to view the planet with binoculars or a telescope.

As it reaches opposition, Jupiter will be within a few degrees of the full moon on the night of January 29-30 when the moon passes through a portion of the Earth's shadow producing a penumbral lunar eclipse. The penumbra is the lighter, outer portion of the moon's shadow which surrounds the darker umbra. A penumbral eclipse of the moon is not as visible as a total lunar eclipse when the moon passes directly through the umbra of the Earth's shadow.

When the eclipse begins at 9:58 p.m. CST, it will be barely perceptible though by 11:59 p.m. a slight shading of the northern part of the moon will be visible.

For information call the Marian Blakemore Planetarium, 683-2882.

Songwriters, singers to give concerts

Staff Report

A House Concert Series featuring singer-songwriters is planned for the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

The series will focus on singer-songwriters primarily, but not exclusively, from the southwestern United States, said a release from the museum. The first concert, which will be presented by Joseph and Theresa Brunelle, is set for Feb. 22. Other concerts will be held once or twice a month, usually on Saturday evenings.

The series is being introduced by Brunelle, Master-in-Residence at the Museum since October of 1990. The Master-in-Residence is a short term contract position that brings to the museum a particular expertise to enhance educational and other scheduled activities.

Brunelle has performed instrumental guitar at several gallery receptions and has programed background music for the Dinosaur Exhibit in the Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum and for the 1990 Christmas Exhibit, "The Bear Facts of Christmas." Brunelle and his wife led the caroling and performed original songs at the museum's Christmas celebration Dec. 3. Also, they have performed at Septemberfest.

"Incorporating music with the various exhibits, receptions, educational events, parties and other functions at the Museum is Mr. Brunelle's stated purpose and goal as Master-in-Residence," said a release from the museum. "The use of multi-sensory stimuli for educational and aesthetic purposes is to further enhance the museum visitors exhibit experience."

Tickets prices to the concerts will feature discounts for museum members. For more information call 683-2882.

Writer says his vocation chose him

By Phil Thomas
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — For a man who didn't choose to be a writer, Charles Baxter hasn't done badly.

At 43, the bearded but youthful-looking Baxter — "None of the men in my family ever look their ages" — has published three books of poetry, a novel and three short-story collections, the latest of which is "A Relative Stranger" (Norton).

"I was in high school when I read a novel by Davis Grubb called 'Night of the Hunter' and something told me I wanted to do this kind of work," Baxter smilingly recalls. "From then on, I always knew I would write, even if I was not published. I didn't choose my vocation, my vocation chose me."

At the beginning, in his 20s, Baxter wrote constantly. He did not get published.

"I wrote one terrible novel after another," he says. "Nobody wanted them. The problem was that I didn't know enough about life at that age to write anything worth publishing.

"But the novels weren't completely wasted. Later, I stole pieces from them to use in my short stories. I had decided to drop novels for the time and turn to stories, as they are a better form to learn writing from. They require more discipline than a novel, since you have less space to fool around in."

The stories gathered in "A Relative Stranger" show that Baxter not only learned how to write stories, but is a master of the form. With limited space in which to work, Baxter has a talent for picking just the right words to create an image in just one sentence that vividly delineates his characters.

In one of the stories, "Fenstad's Mother," he superbly shows the difference in age between a man and his elderly mother by having them stop in at a cafe during a snowy night:

"He held his mother's elbow from the car to the door. At the door, looking back to make sure that he had turned off his headlights, he saw his tracks and his mother's in the snow. His were separate footprints, but hers formed two long lines."

Or, in the story from which the collection draws its title, a man, given up for adoption at a very early age, tries to recall his mother and cannot. "I was separated from my biological mother when I was four months old. Everything from that period goes through the wash of my memory and comes out clean, blank."

Baxter published his first story when he was 31 and his work has been appearing with regularity since. He writes when he is not teaching literature and creative writing at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor, where he lives with his wife and son.

"If I can get two mornings a week to write in, I figure I have done pretty well," Baxter says. "I work slowly. I type a page over and over until I feel I can go on.

"I distrust computers because they make writing too easy. I want it to be hard. To be good, it has to be hard.

"It's like a mountain climber climbing a mountain. If what you are doing is not challenging, it is not interesting."

I had decided to drop novels for the time and turn to stories, as they are a better form to learn writing from.'

— Charles Baxter
