Lest we forget

DALLAS — Twenty-nine years ago, President John F. Kennedy arrived at Dallas Love Field in searing sunshine and departed in somber shadow that has never quite left a corner of downtown Dallas. On Sunday, about 1,200 people visited The Sixth Floor exhibit at the former Texas School Book Depository, marking the 29th anniversary of the assassination of Kennedy./4B

No lotto winner

AUSTIN — No tickets correctly matched all six numbers drawn Saturday night for the twice-weekly Lotto Texas, state lottery officials said. The $10 million jackpot will be rolled over into Wednesday's drawing. Lottery officials estimate Wednesday night's jackpot will be $12 million. The numbers drawn Saturday night from a field of 50 were: 11, 21, 24, 28, 31 and 46.

Solo-sailor search

The widespread search for Mike Plant, the American solo sailor who has been missing at sea for three weeks, Sunday turned up his sailboat, the 60-foot racing sloop Coyote, upside down and awash in 8-foot seas in the Atlantic Ocean. Plant was nowhere in sight. A Liberian-registered tanker, the Protank Orinoco, spotted the capsized yacht Sunday and radioed the U.S. Coast Guard. Coyote's hull was floating in an area about 500 miles north of the Azores, an island chain in the mid-Atlantic.

Clinton eyes energy role

DOE to be dominant in economic blueprint

■ Longer-term goal is to revitalize industry, make the United States more competitive.

By Keith Schneider
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — President-elect Bill Clinton is prepared to give the Department of Energy a central dominant role in his efforts to marry the goals of creating jobs, making industry more efficient and reducing environmental damage, transition advisers say.

Those working on the plans say they reflect Clinton's desire to transform a bureaucracy largely ignored for most of the Reagan-Bush years into an aggressive player in integrating environmental goals into economic policy.

The blueprint being put together by industry executives as well as by staff members close to Clinton and Vice President-elect Al Gore conforms with the promises Clinton made during the campaign. He said he wanted to wean the nation from its reliance on coal and oil by converting to cleaner, less costly alternatives like natural gas, using tax incentives and research money to encourage development of renewable resources and expanding the American role in the global market for pollution control equipment and services.

The longer-term goal is to revitalize industry and make the United States more competitive with Japanese and German manufacturers, whose energy efficiency gives them far lower production costs.

Staff members close to Clinton and Gore said that to signal the new direction, they have identified several actions the president-elect could take immediately by executive order or policy change. Among the proposed actions are these:

Single-member district issue divides city

SHADES OF DIFFERENCE

In Part 2 of a three-day series examining race relations in Midland, the Reporter-Telegram probes lingering racial tensions, especially in the political arena and how many of the conciliatory movements have begun in the ministerial community.

If there is one issue that continues to provoke suspicion, bitterness and threats, coupled with subtle racial undertones, it is the ongoing battle over single-member voting districts.

Long a hotbed of contention, drawing political boundaries has never been popular, especially in cities where the at-large system has been firmly entrenched.

Midland is no different in that regard.

Still, following several lawsuits and numerous public debates, most local governmental entities have adopted some form of single-member-districts.

But not all of them.

Five months ago, the argument erupted again and a lawsuit was filed against Midland College.

For some, that lawsuit was a rude awakening.

And a new battle began.

But is it a question of racism or a struggle for power that continues eight years after U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton ruled in favor of the first single-member-district in Midland?

While the college lawsuit was a joint filing by the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC) and the Federation of Citizens United to Serve (FOCUS), it was LULAC's involvement that served as the focal point.

And that doesn't surprise Isabel

Twisters cut across South, north to Ohio

■ Unusual confluence of disturbances spawns tornadoes; at least 24 die.

Associated Press

Weekend tornadoes raked across the South and northward into Ohio and Indiana, killing at least 24 people, smashing houses and tearing a church steeple loose during Sunday services.

Among the hardest hit areas was in and around Brandon, Miss., where 10 people died, six in a trailer park.

"It's unbelievable. We're lucky we didn't lose more lives than we did," said W.L. Whittington, mayor of Brandon.

The storms were caused by a low pressure system that moved east and north from Texas toward the eastern Great Lakes, said Henry Steigerwaldt, a National Weather Service meteorologist in Indianapolis.

The conditions, unusual for November, were caused by a low-moving southern flow of moist air off the Gulf of Mexico that combined with much colder westerly winds higher in the atmosphere, he said.

"So if you've got cold above and warm below, you have an unstable situation.

Impact of pathologist's misdeeds ripples through courts

By Roberto Suro
N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — The prairie graveyards of West Texas are giving mute testimony to the misdeeds of a circuit-riding pathologist who left a trail of faked autopsies, botched blood samples and missing organs from the Panhandle to the Rio Grande.

According to defense lawyers' estimates, as many as 20 capital murder cases and dozens of other prosecutions will be appealed because of accusations that crucial evidence was ghoulishly or criminally mishandled in autopsies performed by the pathologist, Dr. Ralph R. Erdmann, who worked as a freelance contract medical examiner in more than 40 rural Texas counties since the early 1980s.

As evidence of Erdmann's malfeasance piles up, a fracas has broken out over accusations by defense lawyers that prosecutors sanctioned his practices to win cases and are now trying to cover it up.

On Sept. 21, Erdmann, 65, pleaded no contest to seven felony counts involving falsified autopsies in Lubbock, Hockley, and Dickens counties. He still faces criminal investigations, lawsuits and demands for testimony in many other cases.

"The botched autopsies he's been indicted on so far are just a small sample," said Tommy Turner, a special prosecutor in a Lubbock court of inquiry to investigate Erdmann last summer.

Turner said a fairly quick and narrow examination of Erdmann's work turned up evidence of about 100 faked autopsies.

"We started digging up bodies," Turner said, "and when we were seven-for-seven we decided that in the interests of judicial economy we didn't have to go further to prove that this guy was a liar."

Under plea agreements Erdmann was sentenced to 10 years of probation and 200 hours of community service and was ordered to pay nearly $17,000 in restitution for autopsy fees and costs of exhumations, medical re-examinations and reburials. He rendered his medical license in August, after his indictment.

Don Hurley, a Lubbock lawyer who is appealing a murder case in which he said Erdmann falsified a toxicology report, said: "I believe as I believe that the sun will come up tomorrow that there

City's in store for mid-60s

Staff report

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a high in the mid-60s and southwest winds at 10-20 mph. Tonight should be partly cloudy with a low in the mid-30s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tuesday should be partly cloudy with a high in the lower 60s.

After an overnight low of 29, Sunday's high reached 54, compared to the record high for that date of 81 set in 1966. The record low was 17 set in 1938.

STATE

Clouds rolled over most of Texas on Sunday, a day after widespread thunderstorms spawned tornadoes across Southeast Texas.

At least six people were injured when the twisters struck Saturday afternoon, but none was considered life-threatening, authorities said. An estimated 300 homes in Houston and another 900 homes in Harris County sustained some type of damage.

They were still trying to assess the situation, officials said.

Mid- and high-level clouds were moving across South Texas as a weak ridge of high pressure remained in place over the deep south.

NATION

Thunderstorms and tornadoes battered the South on Sunday, causing deaths and widespread damage, and snow spread from the Pacific Northwest to the northern Rockies and onto the Plains.

In the 24 hours up to 6 a.m. CST Sunday, 23 tornadoes had touched down in Texas, 15 in Louisiana, nine in Mississippi, and one in Alabama, the National Weather Service said.

Tornadoes killed 15 people just before midnight Saturday in Mississippi and one Sunday in Tennessee.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

ENERGY: Clinton plans to give DOE central role

cles to compressed natural gas, which burns more cleanly than gasoline and is less expensive. President Bush issued such an order, but it covers only a fraction of the vehicles in the fleets operated by the Postal Service, the military and other federal agencies.

■ Accelerating a long-delayed program requiring more efficient energy use in buildings and appliances. Besides encouraging the development of new technology, this would save money as well as fuel, especially for the federal government, the advisers say. They added that it would showcase new techniques and provide a market for them.

■ Shifting the government's research priorities to conservation technologies and renewable resources like wind, sun and water. The department's research program now favors development of nuclear energy and coal.

■ Making available to private industry the new technologies the department is developing in its $5.5-billion-a-year program to clean up the environmental damage from nuclear weapons plants across the country.

The planning underscores the potential influence of Gore, one of whose main interests is the environment, as a guiding force behind the new approach. One important figure on the environment-economy transition team is Kathleen McGinty, 29, a lawyer from Philadelphia who has been Gore's chief environmental specialist since she joined his Senate staff in 1989.

"There is no question that Gov. Clinton is prepared to make the Department of Energy an integral component of our long-term economic strategy," said George Stephanopoulos, the director of communications for the transition. "He has not made any final decision on personnel or specific policies. These are options prepared by his staff, and he is reviewing them."

The advisers on the transition team said Sen. Timothy E. Wirth of Colorado, chairman of the Senate Energy subcommittee on conservation who did not seek re-election, and Thomas F. McLarty III, chairman and chief executive of Arkla Inc., a natural-gas utility in Little Rock, Ark., and one of four board members of Clinton's transition, head the short list of candidates under consideration by Clinton for energy secretary. Wirth is also under consideration to be secretary of the interior, the advisers said.

Both agencies have been lumped together with several others in the transition planning in an effort to integrate the economic, environmental and natural resource issues they encompass. Others in the group are the Environmental Protection Agency, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, the Department of Agriculture, and the Department of Commerce, which includes the Economic Development Administration, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and the Bureau of Export Administration.

McLarty is a boyhood friend of Clinton who went to kindergarten with the president-elect in Hope, Ark., and has been a close friend ever since. McLarty is well regarded in the industry and Clinton touted him as a possible energy secretary during campaign swings through Texas when he discussed energy policy with oil and gas industry executives. McLarty did not respond to messages left with the transition staff and his company.

Wirth also is well versed on the considerable environmental problems that plague the Energy Department's nuclear weapons industry, which includes the Rocky Flats plutonium plant near Denver. Wirth was in Europe last week on vacation and could not be reached. Friends in Congress and in Colorado said he was reluctant to talk about his plans but might be interested in becoming energy secretary given Clinton's desire to make the Energy Department central to his economic and environmental policy.

"From Day 1, you'll see an Energy Department moving very aggressively, and the reason is that a new direction makes sense for jobs, for the economy, for our balance of trade and for a cleaner environment," said Bill Burton, a lawyer in Austin, who coordinated the Clinton-Gore campaign's strategy on energy issues. "An energy policy based on cheap foreign oil is shameful, and it will change."

Clinton himself signaled the change in a news conference 10 days ago. "I have read, at least in my history books, that some Cabinet appointments are considered major and others are considered minor," Clinton said. "I don't know how you would consider the Departments of Commerce and Energy in that regard, but from the kind of economic policy I have laid out, and the things that I think we have to do to change this country economically, those are very major appointments."

Among other candidates on the list for energy secretary, the advisers said, are Gov. David Walters of Oklahoma, a national co-chairman of the Clinton-Gore campaign; Garry Mauro, the Texas land commissioner and chairman of the Clinton-Gore campaign in Texas; Michael L. Beatty, executive vice president and general counsel of the Coastal Corp. in Houston who was an important fund-raiser for Clinton, and Daniel H. Yergin, president of Cambridge Energy Research Associates in Massachusetts and a research associate at Harvard University who won a Pulitzer Prize this year for his history of the oil industry, titled "The Prize: The Epic Quest for Oil, Money and Power."

The Department of Energy was established in 1977 to help solve the problem of America's dependence on imported oil, but it has been a largely forgotten bureaucracy. President Reagan campaigned in 1980 on a promise to abolish the agency and then appointed Dr. James B. Edwards, a former governor of South Carolina who is also a dentist.

In the late 1980s, for reasons that neither President Reagan nor President Bush anticipated, the department became the focus of attention for its mismanagement of the government's network of nuclear production plants, laboratories and testing grounds. The end of the Cold War has produced new opportunities for reordering the department's mission while at the same time advancing Clinton's agenda for jobs, new technologies, and environmental protection.

Ms. McGinty is helping to select teams to interview officials in the Department of Energy, the Department of the Interior and the other domestic environmental agencies beginning early next month. That research is intended to help the incoming Cabinet members and their deputies understand which policy decisions made by the Bush and Reagan administrations should be kept or rejected.

Requiring federal vehicles to convert to natural gas is one of an array of measures that Clinton is preparing as an attempt to strengthen energy production and exploration in this country. The American industry lost 500,000 jobs during the 1980s, more than the auto and steel industries combined, the Department of Commerce has reported.

SCANDAL: Three senators hope dust will settle ranges from indiscreet to improper to outright illegal.

(From 1A)

The latest furor arose this weekend when Republican Packwood was accused of making unwelcome, uninvited, unreciprocated sexual advances against 10 women.

Few lawmakers have been hardy enough to weather such storms. Those who have include two who are openly gay and a married black minister accused of firing a church employee because their affair ended.

The minister, Rep. Floyd Flake, D-N.Y., denied the allegations and went on to twice win re-election by huge margins — perhaps partly because the church employee was killed in a car crash and the issue died with her.

When careers end, it is usually because "the allegations have been truly gross or part of a whole complex of improprieties," said Suzanne Garment, author of a book on political scandals.

A sex harassment allegation brought by a Peace Corps worker in Zaire was simply one more mark against Rep. Gus Savage, D-Ill., an extremely controversial black lawmaker with anti-semitic, anti-white views and one of the worst attendance records in the House. He won re-election in 1990, shortly after the allegation surfaced, but lost a primary fight this year.

Sen. Brock Adams, D-Wash., generally considered competent and likable, was buried under the weight of multiple allegations of sexual harassment and molestation. One came from the daughter of a family friend. A newspaper later published similar allegations from several other women. He did not run for a second term this year.

Republican Durenberger, up for re-election in 1994, could be the next to go. He separated from his wife in 1985 amid rumors he had had an affair with an aide. A few years later the Senate denounced him for improper financial dealings. And this month a Minnesota woman filed a paternity lawsuit against him, contending he raped her in 1963. He has said any contact was "consensual" and agreed to take a paternity test.

"He has a pattern of perceived and actual unethical behavior," said James Thurber, a congressional expert at American University. "That adds up to problems. He seems to be vulnerable. A lot of money will go to his opponents."

The Senate ethics committee will decide when Congress convenes next year whether to investigate a claim by Inouye's barber that he molested her 17 years ago. A Hawaiian state legislator said she had received calls from nine other women with similar complaints against the veteran Democratic senator.

A damaging finding against Inouye or against Packwood, if the panel investigates him as well, could force either man to step down. But both also have plenty of time for the allegations to fade; they were just re-elected this month and if they ran again wouldn't face voters until 1998.

A former Hill aide with 1970s experience said old norms are catching up to senators from the old school. "There was a lot of fanny-patting and extramarital stuff going on in the old days," said the former aide, speaking on condition of anonymity. "There's been a rightful sea change in the way women are treated on Capitol Hill."

More commonly sex scandals have ruined the careers of conservative Republican champions of family values — at least four such casualties in the last decade. "The distance between their cultivated image and what was discovered was too great" to go unremarked by the press or the public.

STORMS: Death toll rises

(From 1A)

That's what happened. Everything got together in the right ingredients," Steigerwaldt said.

Deaths from the storms and tornadoes included 15 in Mississippi; seven in Georgia; and one each in Tennessee and Kentucky. Tornadoes hit the Houston area on Saturday and moved into Alabama. By Sunday night, tornadoes had damaged homes and busineeses in Ohio, Alabama, Indiana and the Carolinas.

About 75 people worshipping at the Mount Carmel Baptist Church in Woodstock, Ga., escaped injury when a twister blew their steeple off, throwing it 200 yards into the church cemetery.

Church member Ann Cleveland said worshippers had just finished singing "Amazing Grace" when the tornado hit, and they ducked under pews for cover.

In Mississippi, a tornado smashed through a Brandon mobile home park and then skipped across town to an upscale neighborhood, where it killed a father and son, and two of his son's Cub Scout buddies who were spending the night.

At the mobile home park, rescue workers used doors from smashed houses as makeshift stretchers, said Charlie Wilkinson, civil defense director for Rankin County.

Gov. Kirk Fordice toured the Rankin County area about 15 miles east of Jackson. The storm hit about midnight, leveling houses, uprooting trees and downing hundreds of power and telephone poles.

At least 86 people were injured in Brandon, Wilkinson said. Sixty homes and dozens of mobile homes were damaged.

"It just whished through here like slicing hot butter," Constable Martin Mann said. "We've got two-story homes not bigger than a bag of firewood. They're wiped out."

Mississippi Power & Light Co. spokesman Edd Jussely said power may not be restored to some homes in the area for two days.

U.S. Rep. G.V. "Sonny" Montgomery, D-Miss., whose district includes Rankin County, said he will ask President Bush to declare the area eligible for federal disaster relief.

Mike Wood, who lives on a hillside about a half-mile away from the Brandon mobile home park, described the scene: "I can see for about a 500-yard radius and all I see is devastation all around us. I don't think anything will be salvageable on that (trailer) lot. There was a church on Highway 468 that is gone. It's just a slab."

IMPACT: Prairie graveyards give mute testimony

(From 1A)

was a conspiracy between the prosecution and Erdmann to say whatever was necessary to get a conviction, and I don't have any doubt that there is a cover-up now."

Prosecutors have angrily denied such accusations. The Randall County district attorney, Randy Sherrod, said: "I wouldn't use Erdmann again, ever, based on what I know now."

But Sherrod insisted: "I never saw an autopsy by Erdmann that was not correct on the basis of other evidence."

Repeated attempts over four days to reach Erdmann at his home in Lubbock were unsuccessful.

When a person dies during a crime or under questionable circumstances, law-enforcement authorities routinely order an autopsy by a medical specialist. In criminal cases an autopsy is often presented as evidence by the prosecution and the examiner is called to testify as an expert witness.

In many cities the autopsies are performed by medical examiners or coroners who are full-time government employees, but jurisdictions in rural areas contract with pathologists for such services. Lubbock County paid Erdmann more than $140,000 a year under such a contract, and he collected as much as $600 per autopsy elsewhere.

Erdmann, who claimed to have a medical degree from a university in his home country of Mexico, performed as many as 400 autopsies a year in West Texas since he began his practice there. His practice consisted basically of his contract work doing autopsies, and, all the while, he worked in close collaboration with many prosecutors and police officials, some of whom are now prominent in politics.

Defense lawyers say their suspicions of falsified autopsies and a coverup have been heightened by the way law-enforcement authorities reacted to the initial accusations about Erdmann.

Prosecutors in Lubbock learned on Feb. 14 that the doctor was to be indicted in a neighboring county, but they did not open their own investigation into his activities until April 3, said Steve Holmes, chief administrator of the Lubbock district attorney's office.

In a review of criminal cases involving Erdmann's autopsies, independent pathologists concurred with Erdmann's findings every time, Holmes said. But he could not say how many cases had been reviewed.

"There are clear indications that a number of people in law enforcement considered him weird and questioned his competence because he regularly messed up evidence and he did strange things like handing people organs to hold," Turner said. "But no one blew the whistle."

Erdmann's dealings with the authorities were not within the scope of the special inquiry headed by Turner, but the prosecutor said: "From what I learned about the man, it seemed Erdmann had fantasies aggrandizing his role in law enforcement to the point that he may have shaded things to follow along with the police theory of a case."

As an example, Turner noted the case of Craig Newman, which led to the February indictment.

According to Turner's account, when Erdmann was called to do the autopsy of Newman, a 41-year-old Levelland man found dead in his home, a police officer made a casual remark speculating that drugs were involved. When the autopsy stated that Newman died of a cocaine overdose, his family was incensed and insisted that Newman never used drugs.

Then, one family member noted that the autopsy listed the spleen as one of the internal organs that had been examined and weighed, although Newman's spleen had been removed years earlier.

When Newman's body was exhumed, no incision marks from an autopsy were found on it. Another autopsy was then performed and showed that Newman had died of a heart attack.

Sherrod, who used Erdmann in dozens of criminal cases in his Panhandle county over many years, described the doctor as "a weird kook" and acknowledged that Erdmann exaggerated his qualifications, for example by falsely claiming to be an expert on ballistics. As a trial witness "he'd confuse left with right," Sherrod said, "and say 'up' when he meant 'down' because he wouldn't prepare for trials."

A seemingly straightforward murder now being prosecuted by Sherrod in Canyon, a ranching and college town, has been transformed by defense lawyers into a test case for the accusations that Erdmann's incompetence was tolerated or even abetted by prosecutors and the police.

The defendant, Douglas Palmer, 19, is charged with capital murder in the beating death of an elderly man during a botched burglary. Palmer's lawyers argue that their client should not be on trial for capital murder because he never intended to kill the man. But the facts of the case have almost been forgotten as the pretrial hearing has become a battleground over Erdmann, whose autospy supported the prosecution's case.

Sherrod has opened grand jury proceedings against Erdmann for falsifying tissue samples in the Palmer case, but he insists the findings of the autopsy of Palmer's victim are correct.

Two lawyers nationally known for their work in fighting death penalty cases, Millard Farmer of Atlanta and Steven Losch of New York, joined the defense team and have used pre-trial hearings to explore Erdmann's career, issuing subpoenas to more than 50 law-enforcement officials to testify about their relations with him.

That sparked a storm of motions, charges and counter-charges that is still going on.

So far, two police officers have testified in the pretrial hearings in support of the charges of prosecutorial misconduct. Both have since been indicted for perjury, one for his testimony on Erdmann and the other in another case. In October, Farmer was indicted on a charge of tampering with a witness — in this case threatening Erdmann to get favorable testimony out of him.

Defense lawyers say the indictments are a vindictive effort to derail the investigation of Erdmann's relations with law enforcement.

Typhoon Gay reaches Guam, Marianas

More world news/7A

AGANA, Guam (AP) — The outer fringes of Typhoon Gay began lashing Guam and the Northern Marianas islands with high wind and heavy rain early Monday, the sixth typhoon to hit or threaten the Marianas in three months.

"We feel scared. Just when they say it's a super typhoon, you get scared," said Visi Quitugua, the administrative officer in the mayor's office on Rota, the Northern Mariana island expected to get the brunt of the storm.

Gay was dubbed a "super typhoon" Thursday in the Marshall Islands when its maximum sustained wind speed reached 150 mph.

By 3 a.m. (11 a.m. CST Sunday), wind was blowing at 45 to 65 mph across the island of 2,300 people, but there were no immediate reports of damage.

"We're just standing by, waiting," said Quitugua. She said about 70 people had gone to shelters while most of the population was at home, "all boarded up."

Wind on Guam was gusting to 60 mph with "on and off" heavy rain, said Ken Bettini, at Guam Cable TV.

The U.S. military's Typhoon Warning Center on Guam reported the eye of Gay was 90 miles east southeast of Guam at 6 a.m., moving westnorthwest at 17 mph with sustained wind of 145 mph and gusts to 175 mph.

Guam, with a population of 139,000, was expected to get 125 mph sustained wind, with gusts to 155 mph, when the storm passed.

On Rota, the wind was expected to hit 140 mph, gusting to 165 mph. On Saipan and Tinian to the north, wind was forecast at 85 mph, gusting to 105 mph.

"All islands are at risk," the typhoon center warned in an advisory.

On Guam, volunteer Joaquin Blaz at the Civil Defense Agency said all preparations had been completed and some 4,000 residents had gone to shelters.

Agana, Guam's capital, was a ghost town with deserted streets, Bettini said.

"The people are all sheltered down somewhere," he said.

For Guam, the storm was expected to be comparable to Typhoon Omar, which hit the U.S. territory Aug. 28 and caused $500 million damage.

Typhoon is the name used west of the international date line for storms called hurricanes east of it.

U.N. unlikely to ease sanctions despite request

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — U.N. representatives said Sunday the Security Council was unlikely to agree to ease economic sanctions imposed on Iraq after the Persian Gulf War despite fresh requests by top Iraqi officials.

Iraq's Deputy Prime Minister Tariq Aziz and Foreign Minister Mohammed Said al-Sahaf were scheduled to appear before the council on Monday to request an easing of the embargo, which Baghdad blames for many civilian deaths.

But the U.N. officials said Baghdad remains evasive in providing information about its nuclear weapons program. Cease-fire terms require Iraq to cooperate in dismantling the program before sanctions can be lifted.

"There's been no movement to date which would give the council any inclination to consider lifting or modifying the sanctions any time in the near future," said Andre Erdos of Hungary, which holds the rotating council presidency this month.

The council imposed sanctions to punish Iraq for invading Kuwait in August 1990. Baghdad was routed from the emirate by U.S.-led forces in the 1991 war.

A central demand was that Baghdad cooperate with U.N. experts in dismantling its nuclear, chemical and biological weapons programs, and missiles with a range greater than 90 miles.

But Iraq has said the sanctions have hurt the the civilian population, causing food shortages, disease and hundreds of deaths.

In a letter to the council released Friday, Al-Sahaf said Iraq has "fully discharged the substantive obligations" imposed by the council after the war.

The council periodically reviews Iraq's compliance with the U.N. demands and has repeatedly refused to lift the sanctions. Another review is under way.

Rolf Ekeus, chairman of the U.N. Special Commission overseeing the disarmament program, said there has been "continuing harassment" of U.N. inspectors, including death threats and vandalism of U.N. cars and other property. Ekeus did not give details of the threats.

Ekeus and Hans Blix, director of the International Atomic Energy Agency, also were to address the council on Monday.

Ekeus said Baghdad's refusal to provide a list of Western companies that aided Iraq's nuclear weapons program has been a "major sticking point." A U.N. inspection team was denied the list on a visit this month to Iraq.

Iraq has also been reluctant to cooperate with U.N. programs providing relief to dissident Kurds in the north and Shiite Muslims in the south.

Church leaders see new bridges

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff writer

While they are not naive enough to believe that racism doesn't exist, the city's church leaders think Midland has come a long way when it comes to race relations.

"I see the situation here in Midland as one that could be very united," said the Rev. O.J. Archie. "One of the worst things we have to deal with is people who keep this old hate and prejudice going."

Archie, pastor of Macedonia Baptist Church on the city's southeast side, said people need to get away from the idea of a black race, white race or Hispanic race.

"When you say race, I only know of one race and that's the human race," Archie said. "We need to get people to look at it from that standpoint. We all have to live in this world and get along with each other. Midland is improving. There are some people who want that, but there are some who want to go backward."

While church leaders don't have all the answers, they do offer a number of what they consider workable solutions to promote a more united front.

The Rev. Domingo Estrada, pastor of Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church, said cultural appreciation goes a long way.

"I know at our church, we had a Martin Luther King Appreciation Day and we invited the black community to join us. Several ministers (from neighboring churches) came. It was a wonderful occasion for not only strengthening race relationships, but also getting together to talk."

Estrada said that while those events are few, they create a better atmosphere of understanding.

"I don't know what more needs to happen. They (races) play together. They work together. I believe in a crunch, they'll stand together. Yes, there's prejudice and injustice, but I think there's also a cover of good will on behalf of the majority of people who live here. They talk about how friendly West Texans are, well there's truth to that."

The Rev. James Denison, pastor of First Baptist Church, said he rejoices in the fact that there is a growing number of Hispanics and blacks who have joined his church's congregation.

"In my personal community involvement, I've been very pleased with the non-prejudicial nature of the ministries that I've been personally part of," said Denison, who also chairs the Midland Baptist Association Crisis Center.

The center, which opened on the city's south side earlier this year, serves the immediate needs of those living there, most of whom are minorities.

"I cannot think of an example that's not been positive, both in what I've observed and what I've been personally involved in. Having said that, I would be incredibly naive if I were to maintain that my picture of Midland is the only picture there is."

Denison said his assessment of Midland is not intended to downplay or disagree with the sentiments of those who feel otherwise.

What he and others interviewed for this series would like to see is greater "cross-cultural exchange" among various leaders in the city. "I would make a suggestion that the (various communities') leadership sponsor community forums that would allow people to come out and ask questions."

Rev. John Campbell, pastor of the New Jerusalem Church on the city's east side, said he believes relations among the races have gotten much better. "But that's not to say there are not areas that need improvement."

Campbell recalled earlier years in Midland when, as a black walking downtown, he had to get off the sidewalk when an Anglo women would pass. "Thank God, Midland had some people here then who thought better of minorities and, of course, were able to get above that when I left."

That was in the 1950s. "When I came back in 1971, I took a good look at Midland and the impression I got was, Midland had finally arrived at a point where she was ready to address the remaining race problems."

Still, Campbell said, there are concerns that haven't been addressed. "We've become complacent. We have become satisfied with where we are, rather than continue to pursue the goal of better relations."

As far as his ministering role, Campbell said the church should be a power, but not one involved in politics. "I'm at my best when I'm teaching people to become good citizens in our city, state and nation. We should be producers of good people. If we can get this in the hearts of man, we'll have the types of citizens we need, and all the problems we've talked about, we wouldn't be talking about."

The Rev. Clare Petersberger, pastor of the Unitarian Universalist Church on the city's west side, is beginning to see new bridges being built among the races.

As evidence of that, Petersberger recalled a speech made before the Midland Association of Churches by Midland College President David Daniel, who discussed the changing demographic picture and what it will mean to the future.

"He's aware of the changes in our community and the nation and how these changes in demographics and technology bring other needs for changes in education. He's going to put things in place to do that."

Some evidence of that became apparent two months ago when the college announced plans to create a satellite campus on the city's south side at a office site donated to the city by local businessman Bill Cogdell.

But changes also are occurring in Ms. Petersberger's own church. "I know, within my own denomination we're publishing a hymnal in May that seeks to be inclusive of music from other cultures — readings from other cultures — to learn about them, to honor them and hopefully to draw from them."

Ms. Petersberger said that when she first met members of her congregation, they insisted on taking her around the city and explaining to her some of the history.

"My church has always been interested in the issue of race. They were some of the first to speak out for school integration even when that wasn't a popular view."

She said much of the tension she sees among races these days is related to economics — specifically, jobs.

Rev. Bill Ashley, president of the local chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) and pastor of Missionary Baptist Church, agrees.

"In the late 1970s and early '80s, the economy was good and people were happy. They were getting along and socializing a lot more than they are now. As a result of the downside, there's been a lot of stress and a lot of tension. Everyone is looking to maintain their standard of living."

Ashley said minority church leaders see the hurt and pain that others, especially those in the Anglo community, might not see. "Churches and church leaders need to get together and minister to this community."

He said what disturbs him is knowing that certain area churches preach a different message to their members. "We have ministers in this community who preach segregation, who preach that Anglos are better off where they are and to leave the other people (minorities) alone. That doesn't wash with the gospel."

The Rev. Jon Stasney, rector of St. Nicholas Episcopal Church, said the need to improve race relations is a definite concern of the Midland Ministerial Alliance.

Stasney, who heads the multi-denominational group, said the alliance has helped break down old stereotypes. "A lot of people have acknowledged that, saying how much it has been a growth experience for them to get to know people as fellow human beings, who they might not have known in-depth before."

He said perfect relations are obviously a dream for many Christians. "It's right there in the Book of Revelations. It looks forward to the day when people of every race and nation form that multitude that's gathered around the throne of God. It's a dream that will come true and we're called to make it come true in our lives."

Stasney, vice president of Habitat for Humanity, a group working to eradicate sub-standard housing in the city, points to the program as a way of bringing people together from all walks of life.

"It (the program) builds communities. It gets people to work together, across racial and socio-economic lines. Some Christians who can't agree on various doctrinal matters can at least agree on the theology of the hammer. So it's a partnership of many. That's what really makes it work."

First Baptist's Denison praises Christmas In April, another program aimed at improving lives of all Midlanders during its annual home fix-up program.

"It may be the best thing this city does every year as a community. Perhaps that can be a foundation for a larger effort that would work throughout the year," he said.

Castro incident stirs citywide controversy

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff writer

Talk to minorities about equality.

Then talk to them about former City Council member John Castro.

Long after his departure to El Paso, the former Midland resident remains a vivid example of what happens in a communication breakdown.

As the first minority elected to an at-large city seat, Castro had taken the state of race relations to a new high.

But that changed overnight when the council voted to appoint Bill Morrow to fill Castro's unexpired term.

While the move didn't surprise many minority leaders, it reenforced old sentiments regarding broken promises, racism and mistrust.

However, not all minorities saw it that way.

"I had a lot of thoughts about it, but my feeling was I didn't perceive it that way. A lot of my friends did, but I didn't think it was a racist move," said Midland attorney Edward Garza, an advocate for minority rights.

Nor did Midland County Commissioner Lousia Valencia, although Ms. Valencia questions the behind-closed-door proceedings that preceded the Council's decision.

"I was just disappointed that the council was so narrow-minded that it couldn't see a Hispanic replacing a Hispanic," Ms. Valencia said.

Months later, the city did an about-face, holding public hearings on two other unexpired terms, appointing Jose Cuevas, a Hispanic, to an at-large seat replacing Mayor-elect J.D. Faircloth, and Juluis Brooks, a black, to the District 2 seat, succeeding the Rev. Michael DeVaughn, also black.

Unfortunately, the damage had been done.

In addition to how the appointment was handled, minority leaders interviewed for this series claim promises were made and broken regarding Castro's seat.

"No, there were no promises made with respect to appointing a minority to John Castro's seat. There were no deals made," said Mayor J.D. Faircloth, who was a council member at the time.

However, Faircloth was the first to admit that the Castro incident was handled poorly. "And I think we certainly learned our lesson. The citizens wanted an open process (regarding appointments) and they got it.

"In hindsight, we probably would have made the same appointment, but it would have been a lot better to air it out and discuss the advantages and disadvantages (of a candidate) like we did with the other two seats," he said.

Former Midland mayor Ernest Angelo who followed the proceedings, said he thinks the process was flawed in several respects.

"One, that the impression was given that it would be filled with a minority, when being an at-large seat there should have been no commitment made. But the impression was given and that created ill feelings. That's a communication problem."

However, Angelo credits the city with correcting its mistakes the second time around. "I think the proof in that, is the good feelings that were generated by the way the council filled the vacancies that existed in subsequent jobs. Around town you don't hear a lot of negative feelings about city government."

Still, some, like Felipa Lara, president of the Permain Basin League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC), considers the whole incident a slap in the face.

"It was like saying 'The door is open, but you really can't come in. Just look, but you're really not welcome.' They (council members) weren't concerned that we wanted some representation. So, we have to keep fighting to be heard. I don't agree that the council should have the right to appoint. It should go to a vote, especially when it's an at-large seat."

Adela Marmalejo, who serves on the board of Midland Independent School District, said the city's actions don't surprise her. "They (council members) said they were going to work with us, but when it happened, I felt it let a lot of people down. A lot of people in my part of the community were hurt by it."

Alma Marshall, head of the Federation of Citizens United to Serve (FOCUS), said she, too, isn't surprised by the council's actions in appointing Morrow.

"This is the track record. I felt it was tacky and uncalled for and that it shouldn't have been done. It was just another indication of the establishment that wants to remain in control."

What upsets Ms. Marshall even more, however, is what she terms the arrogance of the incident. "It was like, 'We'll get who we want and how dare you to ask why.' I've been through this too many times. If you don't put into place something by law, you have no guarantees."

Former council member Oralia "Lilly" Corrales, the first minority elected to city government, said she is "sickened" by the whole affair. "J.D. (Faircloth) assured me Lydia Torres would be appointed and Carroll (former mayor Thomas) said it was alright and, lo and behold, they changed their minds. That set the level of trust back."

But Thomas and others dispute that claim.

"It was an at-large seat to represent the entire community. That seat wasn't supposed to be a black seat, a Hispanic seat or a white seat. The way it was handled was exactly the way we did all the appointments in the city of Midland up through that one . . .

Sunday 22 — From the Rodney King verdict to an increase in racially motivated hate crimes across the nation, relations between the races are an issue of continuing importance. In Midland, two events in 1991 – the Rebel flag controversy and a visit by the Ku Klux Klan – offer some insight to how far we have come and how far we still have to go.

Today 23 — Single-member district lawsuits have been a lightning rod for racial tensions in Midland since the 1970s. With the '90s has come new litigation that may define the local ethnic dialogue for years to come. At the other end of the harmony spectrum, Tall City clergy often are able to find common ground on which to build.

Tuesday 24 — Ethnic and economic issues have sparked conflicts as Midland has grown and its neighborhoods moved apart. While efforts at bridging the gaps have had mixed success, the United Way is emerging as a leader in interracial involvement and its Project Blueprint is supplying a multi-hued crop of board members and volunteers for non-profits.

Despite the election of two minorities — William Howard, second from right, and Charlene Romero Wurtz, right — to the Midland College Board of Trustees earlier this year, a lawsuit has been filed to change the college's at-large voting system to one of single-member districts. Also, being sworn in during the May 20 ceremony are Steve Kiser, left, and Joann Foster.

DISTRICTS: Issue provokes controversy

(From 1A)

Jiminez, former head of the Midland LULAC chapter, who remains a staunch advocate of minority rights.

In announcing the lawsuit at a news conference in June, Ms. Jiminez said that four of the college's nine trustees lived in the same voting district.

And while there are two minority representatives, Ms. Jiminez said those two — Charlene Romero Wurtz and William Howard — don't live on the south or east sides of town.

"We're supposed to have taxation by representation. This area is not even being represented," she said. "We have people from that part of town who are just as talented and probably have a better understanding of minorities than those who live across town."

Minority leaders had hoped the college would take voluntary steps in creating minority districts, but instead the two sides are headed for a January court showdown.

The City Council now elects four members from single-member districts and two by the at-large system. There has been speculation that if the Midland College lawsuit is decided in favor of the minority groups, another lawsuit will be filed against the city to force all six council members to be elected from single-member districts.

Indeed, this is not the first time Midland's taxing entities have locked horns with minority advocates.

FOCUS founder Alma Marshall recalls the long battle with Midland Independent School District over single-member districts. MISD eventually conceded in that battle, but not until the only remaining option was a costly march to the U.S. Supreme Court.

"I call it the good ol' boy West Texas mentality that basically says 'I don't do anything I don't want to do'. It took us five years of going to court before people in the community realized how dumb it was."

Ms. Marshall said that, at least with single-member districts, minorities have some guarantees they'll be assured representation. "And that means at least they have someone there who is listening and hopefully understands the minority position."

But former Midland mayor Ernest Angelo disagrees, particularly with the latest lawsuit against the college.

"I thought it was the most absurd thing I had ever heard. This community has shown over and over again that it will support someone for an elected office, regardless of race."

Agreeing is Mrs. Wurtz, who was appointed to an unexpired term as a college board trustee and then elected to a full term in May.

"I think of myself as a representative of Midland. I don't feel a city should be divided just to have representation. To me, an individual who takes the time and wants to represent the city as a whole is better than a person who just wants to represent one area."

But Midland attorney Eddy Garza calls that view, especially coming from a minority, "a cop out."

"I've had some politicians come up to me and say 'You know Eddy, I had to change parties. I've had to do this or that, and it's not what I'd normally do.' So they sell out completely. I don't know if that's best for the Hispanic community . . . to sell out their culture, themselves and, in effect, their roots. It's the easiest way to be accepted. And it's the easiest way to say there's no racism."

Garza and others interviewed for this series said many minorities are afraid to speak out on issues or about comments they've heard that they know are wrong.

Jess Parrish, chairman of this year's United Way campaign and former president of Midland College, said he can understand minority frustrations with the system, especially since he spent the turbulent 1960s on the campus of Memphis State University.

"I'm sure if you're a minority sitting and waiting, it's easy to say, 'Gosh, this is slow,' " Parrish said. "But we have come a long way as cities and states."

While Parrish acknowledges Midland's progress in addressing minority issues has been slow, it is, nonetheless, moving forward, he said.

But Parrish said the latest lawsuit against the college may actually cause the minority community to lose seats. "It would be very difficult to pick two legitimately drawn districts that would guarantee two minorities being represented."

He also notes that minority trustees have been elected over Anglo opposition. "And that's one of the tests (in court) when you start considering single-member districts."

Rick Davis, chairman of the Midland County Republican Party, said he doesn't buy LULAC's argument that because a minority doesn't live in a particular part of town, he or she can't represent those who do.

"That seems to be more of an economic distinction than a racial one. Now, it's not just having a Hispanic or black, but they have to live in the right place to be truly representative of their version of the Hispanic community or their version of the black community."

Thane Akins, another former Midland mayor, said he has studied the issue of single-member districts for years and still reaches the same conclusion.

"I think it's a bad system. I think there are other ways of doing it rather than single-member districts. I just think there are a lot of negatives to it."

He said that in the case of the city, single-member districts create situations, such as with budgets, where allocations are based on things other than addressing the greatest needs.

But council member Jose Cuevas, who was appointed to an at-large seat earlier this year, dismisses a lot of those arguments as worn out rhetoric that's been going on far too long.

"I think some politicians have their ear to the old establishment that is unwilling or fearful of giving up control or power to other capable individuals. When you look at the single-member districts . . . when the city put it to a referendum whether to keep it or change it, 55 percent said change it."

However, Cuevas said, had the question been posed in terms of what it will cost the city to defend the at-large system in court, he believes the majority of the population would have voted no.

Cuevas, who earlier was elected to a single-member district seat on the council and resigned for business reasons, is somewhere in the middle on the issue.

"I can see the single-member district issue, that each individual sector of town should have a representative who's accountable. At the same time, when I look at the at-large system, I have to go back and look at what's been going on in District 2 (a predominantly minority district)."

Cuevas said that when it comes to getting out the vote, it has been a dismal failure. "Is it a breakdown of the system or a breakdown in minority participation in government? I personally believe it's a breakdown in participation."

Anglo leaders point to that breakdown when discussing the at-large system, noting they can't control who chooses to vote and who doesn't.

In the case of the city, which still has two at-large seats, Mayor J.D. Faircloth said LULAC may be in for its own awakening should it choose to pursue a second lawsuit.

"I think there already has been some precedent that indicates that what we have is fair and works. I think they (LULAC) are going to have to prove this system doesn't work. I don't think that's going to happen. Certainly minorities have been elected and certainly they have been appointed."

Meanwhile, LULAC, FOCUS and other groups keep pushing on behalf of voices they say are lost among the politics.

"I think it must make the minority community very angry when the people in charge are willing to spend thousands of taxpayers' dollars to defend a system that everyone knows can't be legally supported," said Chris McCormack, chairman of the Midland County Democratic Party.

"It's not the minorities who are creating the divisions and splits in the community, it's the Anglos who want to hold on to the power and not share with those who are rightfully entitled to it," he said.

However, former mayor Carroll Thomas suggested that further lawsuits and battles over single voting districts may do more harm than good in regard to community relations between races.

"To continue to push and make an issue of that just on the principle of creating all single-member districts is the kind of thing that can create backlash and ill will between the races. I think that needs to be avoided at all costs."

exactly the way it's prescribed in the city charter."

Oddly enough, minority leaders have the highest respect for Bill Morrow, the man caught in the middle. In fact, Morrow receives high marks from all leaders — civic, political, Hispanic and black.

"Mr. Morrow is a fine man. I have nothing against him. It was the way it was done," said the Rev. Bill Ashley, president of the Midland chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP).

Ashley said he doesn't see the mistrust issue, at least not in the African American community. "I say that because the Hispanic community was given some indication that another Hispanic would take John Castro's place. When that didn't happen, it kind of slapped them in the face and woke them up."

Ashley said he and other blacks met with the Hispanic community to discuss plans to sue the city. Among those summoned to that meeting were representatives from LULAC.

But according to Ashley and others interviewed, when Cuevas was appointed to fill the second at-large seat, talk of a lawsuit ceased.

Ashley still believes some legal action will take place at some point. "But I would rather see the City Council take the initiative and say, 'We're going with single-member districts, rather than waste the taxpayers' money.' "

Like Morrow, Cuevas, too, has been pelted by the continual fallout. Blacks wonder why a black couldn't have been selected. And some Hispanics question why another Hispanic from the southeast side wasn't picked, given the fact that Cuevas moved out of District 2.

Others, like James Bradford, a social studies teacher at Midland High, complain about the interview process — between the council and candidates — in general.

Bradford said that in the case of the Rev. Hadley Edwards, who had applied for the seat, the minister was asked whether or not he would have the time to dedicate to the job.

"To me, that wasn't a question that should have been asked of him. Let the people decide whether the man puts the time in or not."

When Bradford was interviewed for the job he said the chief question was, "Do you know how to make payroll?"

"I wanted to say, 'How many of you make payroll for the city?' I just thought, 'What a hell of a question.' "

In the end, the city, in the opinion of some minorities, tried to right a wrong with the appointments of a black and Hispanic.

"I think the system was bad the way it was set up," said council member Juluis Brooks, one of the appointees. "But since then we've seen some changes and I think what we have is a fair system. Personally, I don't think it created any mistrust, but it (the process) was unfair."

'Now, it's not just have a Hispanic or a black but they have to live in the right place to be truly representative of their version of the Hispanic community or their version of the black community.'

– Midland County Republican Party Chairman Rick Davis

'We're supposed to have taxation by representation. This area (southeast Midland) is not even being represented. We have people from that part of town who are just as talented and probably have a better understanding of minorities than those who live across town.'

– Midland LULAC board member Isabel Jiminez

'I think of myself as a representative of Midland. I don't feel a city should be divided just to have representation. To me, an individual who takes the time and wants to represent the city as a whole is better than a person who just wants to represent one area.'

– Midland College board member Charlene Romero Wurtz

'I think it must make the minority community very angry when the people in charge are willing to spend thousands of taxpayers' dollars to defend a system that everyone knows can't be legally supported. It's not the minorities who are creating divisions in the community, it's the Anglos who want to hold on to the power and not share with those who are rightfully entitled to it.'

– Midland County Democratic Party Chairman Chris McCormack

'When you say race, I only know of one race and that's the human race. We need to get people to look at it from that standpoint.'

– the Rev. O.J. Archie, pastor, Macedonia Baptist Church

'Yes, there's prejudice and injustice, but I think there's a cover of goodwill on the behalf of the 'majority' people who live here.'

– the Rev. Domingo Estrada, pastor, Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church

'Children Coping' may ease separation pain

While parents going through a divorce may assume they are the ones suffering — and there is no doubt that many do feel the pain of severing the marital bond — for the children involved, the divorce can become a long, dark tunnel of misery. Children too often become divorce's most innocent victims.

"It is an age-old story," said Judge Dean Rucker of Midland County's 318th Family District Court. "The parents are battling each other in the courtroom. In the background, with more to lose than either of the parents, are the children — confused, frightened and forgotten."

Realizing the potential impact of divorces on children, Rucker began to delve into what was available to help youngsters deal with the emotional maelstrom that occurs during a divorce. About a year ago he viewed a television news program about programs to help children cope with divorce. That eventually led him to Jim Huggins, president of Family Services of Midland, to develop a program called "Children Coping with Divorce." Beginning Dec. 1, parents involved in a divorce proceeding in Midland County will be required to attend a four-hour seminar conducted by Family Services in cooperation with the courts. Intent of the seminar, according to Huggins, will be to "cease the battle long enough so that parents can consider the effects of the divorce on the children."

The program will be only the second of its type now in existence in Texas. Curriculum of the program covers the emotional, psychological, social and economic implications for children in a divorce. The parents will be instructed on how and what they should tell children about a divorce, and how to deal with separation and visitation. It will address age and developmental factors that should influence planning by the parents, pitfalls to avoid, skills to help children cope, and a realization of the many adjustments required of children, parents and families.

Judge Rucker says the program is long overdue and we're in agreement with his assessment. He further says, "We owe a duty to our children to try to help them through this painful transition in their lives and prevent them from being caught in the crossfire." The judge is absolutely correct.

"Children Coping with Divorce" appears to be a much-needed program to put the attention of adults going through a divorce back where it needs to be — on the children.

Controversy surrounds disposable contact lenses

The Midland Reporter-Telegram recently carried a short article under your Newswatch column which seems to be greatly misleading in view of a preponderance of even newer and old information to the contrary. "Archives of Ophthalmology" carried two articles in which the study authors interpreted data on a small group of contact lens wearers seen at a specialty cornea clinic. This suggested an increase in ulcerative keratitis among users of disposable contact lenses.

This is a relatively rare type of corneal infection (ulcer) which is treatable, but depending on the location can scar the cornnea reducing vision. In one study 42 patients were examined and in the second 41. It should be noted that 1) these studies were not done on a normal population (patients with customary type problems are rarely seen in a cornea service), 2) the study groups were extremely small, 3) both authors concluded that larger studies were required to draw firm conclusions, and 4) they did not differentiate between those who wore their lenses daily and those wearing them overnight (higher risk would be expected with those sleeping in their lenses).

Due to the controversy surrounding these limited studies the Contact Lens Association of Ophthamology Journal (CLAQ) agreed to release information in landmark studies authored by Dr. Mark Abelson of Harvard Medical School and Dr. Eugene Poggio of Abt. Association, Boston. These studies on 4,000 patients are scheduled to be published in upcoming issues and yield a much more accurate assessment as to the safety of disposables. Their findings were that in overnight and daily wear, disposable wearers had 1) fewer complications overall 2) fewer reported symptoms, and 3) fewer unscheduled visits to eyecare professionals. Ulcerative keratitis rates were low in both studies and there was no statistical differences when compared with conventional lenses of like wearing schedules. These landmark studies attest to the safety and outstanding clinical performance of disposables.

Disposable contact lenses have been available for over five years and have been exhaustively studied. Of the more than 24 million successful contact wearers in this country over 2 million of these patients now wear disposables. Clinical impressions of thousands of doctors and now landmark studies attest to their safety and reduction in complications when properly used.

School earns praise for police vest fundraising

When the principal at Alamo Junior High School called me and said their students had raised over $527 to purchase a bullet-proof vest for me, I was amazed.

These students accomplished this project in only four days, which shows the level of dedication they have.

As police officers normally see the bad side of situations, it is refreshing to see these Alamo students doing such a service for the Midland Police Department.

I want the students, their parents, and the school personnel to know that I am very pleased with their actions.

Private industry helps hurricane victims

FLORIDA CITY, FLA. — Mike Kimmerling and Clyde Wells both came to find a fortune in the rubble of Hurricane Andrew. They are strangers working practically shoulder-to-shoulder in a private army of relief workers — some seeking to do well for themselves, others to do good for others.

Anderson

Both, however, have learned the first rule of this war: Throw the rule book out the window.

Kimmerling, 27, was a jewelry maker and part-time carpenter in Central Florida who came to Florida City two days after Andrew with an eye toward making some money. He soon became a mercenary-turned-missionary.

Wells, 55, half-owner of G.J. Hutton, a general contractor based in central Florida, left a business venture in Idaho to cash in on the Andrew cleanup. He is a self-made millionaire whom his friends refer to as "Crocodile," after the lead character in the movie "Crocodile Dundee."

Wells has been working an average of 18-hour days since his arrival, signing contracts with anyone who has the means to pay for his services. With his trademark hat and a Southern drawl, he complains about being slowed down by busted insurance companies and his most despised nemesis — building permits.

"Eighty percent of the damage here is due to the neglect and incompetence of the insurance companies" and local authorities, Wells told our associate Jan Moller. His solution: Get enough qualified contractors and let them do the work, then worry about the building permits and government gridlock that inevitably throws up roadblocks.

Kimmerling's profit motive evaporated after watching the National Guard preparing to discard nearly $10,000 worth of food supplies simply because they had gotten wet. After entreaties to a state senator, he soon became the founder and president of People Helping People, a group that some describe as a hippie colony but nonetheless has become a lifeline to many who lost everything they had in Hurricane Andrew. Today, PHP still provides food, water, shoes and just about anything else the residents of Florida City need for daily survival.

Using a grass-roots approach that employs the barter system instead of cumbersome paperwork, PHP has been running circles around the Red Cross and other, more established charities. In the devastation that is Florida City, PHP volunteers complain that the Red Cross' only visible presence is on a local billboard, while the Salvation Army has a building-supply warehouse set up on the main highway.

"The Red Cross only went where the cameras were," said Jeff Armstrong, one of the few PHP volunteers who grew up in the area and who drifted to the organization after Andrew left his farm looking like a "toothpick factory." "I still haven't seen them (the Red Cross)" he said.

PHP volunteers pride themselves on being the enemy of bureaucracy and red tape. The group lives and dies by the seat of its pants, but mostly they've lived without substantial support from major agencies.

It's the kind of help the Red Cross isn't serving up.

CHARLEY REESE

Sometimes there's no justice in the system

If you want to be scared, if you want your faith in the justice system rattled like dishes in a California quake, read "Fatal Flaw" by Phillip Finch, published by Villard Books.

Reese

Finch examines the arrest, trial and conviction of Thomas Zeigler, a small town furniture store owner, sitting on Florida's death row, convicted of murdering his wife, his mother-in-law, his father-in-law, and an employee in a bizarre Christmas eve massacre in 1975.

These murders occurred in my area and I know many of the people involved, but I had never paid that much attention to the case. Crime isn't my beat anymore. I had always assumed Zeigler was guilty as heck and deserved the death penalty he got.

Finch likewise started with the assumption that Zeigler was probably guilty, but he was intrigued by the long appeals and the complexity of the case. Zeigler has been on death row for 16 years.

Finch is a heck of a writer and a heck of a thorough journalist. In reconstructing the case, he shows a number of inconsistencies — enough to convince him that Zeigler is indeed innocent and enough to convince me that Zeigler got much less than a fair trial and that the investigation was flawed.

What's so scary about this book is that as you read it you can easily see how the wheels of justice, once set in motion and tilted off course, can crush an innocent man. One's destiny can lie in the details. One's fate can be determined by an attitude or a bit of carelessness. It's as good an argument against the death penalty as you will find, though that was not Finch's purpose in writing it.

The state contended Zeigler lured his relatives to their furniture store as well as two other men, intending to kill them all and claim they died in a shootout with robbers. For some strange reason the state, in their version of events, never explained why Zeigler, after killing four of the people, willingly allowed the fifth man to escape, thus dooming the plot.

What's so scary is that it is really a preposterous story full of holes, yet the police, the pros cutors, and the jury all believed it. Testimony of disinterested witnesses and some of the physical evidence contradict the account given by the state's principal witness. One of the jurors tried repeatedly to see the judge to complain of intimidation and pressure by other jurors who had early on decided Zeigler was guilty. The judge refused to see her.

We all know the system can misfire and allow the guilty to escape just punishment. Finch has presented a convincing example of how the system can misfire and put an innocent man on death row.

Under our system, conviction in a criminal case comes only when there is proof beyond a reasonable doubt. In a criminal case, one is not allowed the luxury of ignoring contradictory evidence or holes in the state's case. That's the ideal. The reality is that Thomas Zeigler ended up on death row on the basis of a case that left many questions unanswered and has several holes in it.

At a minimum, Florida's governor should commute Zeigler's death sentence to life in prison. That way there will be time to resolve those questions. As it is now, Zeigler's life hangs by a thread as appellate judges consider, not the facts in the case, but whether all the t's were crossed and i's dotted.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Gays in military world could be disruptive

Soon after the Gulf War ended, I asked an Air Force general if fighter pilots ever become frightened during battle.

"Rarely," he answered. "We drill self-confidence into them over and over. If somebody shoots at them, it makes them mad more than anything else and they want revenge. Of course they can be real s.o.b.'s when they get drunk."

Grizzard

The general made that statement for the record before Tailhook.

Now we have the question of whether or not homosexuals should be allowed in the military service. No.

Soldiering is a macho occupation. It has to be. That's how machine gun nests get rushed, how hills are taken, how pilots fly through a hail of anti-aircraft fire to bomb their targets.

I'm not saying homosexuals lack courage. But what I am saying is that cast into perhaps the most macho of all scenarios, the military, an admitted homosexual would face harassment a hundredfold worse than in other work places.

There is no doubt closet homosexuals likely have served brilliantly in the military. But a declared homosexual, despite perhaps being capable of bravado under fire, could be an outcast in most outfits, and the situation could become extremely disruptive.

Combat is about life and death. It is not about who gets a position in the accounting office or on the sales force.

I know the macho mindset. I'm not saying there's anything particularly admirable about it, but it does exist, and even more so among fighting men who, right or wrong, would think of a homosexual soldier: Could I count on him under fire? Will he try anything with me? If he did, would I be allowed to brain him?

And then we come to the matter of the commander in chief-elect, Bill Clinton. During the campaign, he said that once in office he would lift the ban on homosexuals serving in the military.

Bill Clinton, with his draft record, will have enough trouble gaining the respect of a large portion of the military.

On top of that, he doesn't need to become the commander in chief who opens the services to homosexuals.

If, during his administration, a military crisis erupts what sort of response might he receive from American forces with that baggage he will be forced to carry?

Perhaps a generation from now homosexuals will be able to serve in the military without reprisals and mistrust. Attitudes can soften and change.

But now is not the time. Call it whatever you want — homophobia, ignorance, intolerance — but the truth is that the last thing Bill Clinton needs to do now for his own sake and for the sake of national security, and for the sake of homosexuals themselves, is to cast aside 200 years of U.S. military thinking.

We're trying to become a more tolerant society and that is a good thing. But there's also the matter of reality.

Most heterosexual American personnel — including women — would not accept homosexuals as a part of their team at this time. And that is dangerous.

Concentrate on the economy, Mr. President-elect, and for the time being at least, leave the soldiering to soldiers.

Fujimori allies win parliament control in Peruvian elections

LIMA, Peru (AP) — President Alberto Fujimori's allies won control of a new parliament Sunday in elections boycotted by main opposition parties, according to unofficial projections.

The returns appeared to indicate support for Fujimori's authoritarian measures to defeat Shining Path rebels and liberalize Peru's troubled economy.

With military backing, Fujimori dissolved parliament in April to impose one-man rule, accusing lawmakers of hampering his fight against guerrillas and drug traffickers.

The president's supporters took 42.6 percent of the vote and 44 seats in the 80-member assembly, said APOYO, the nation's most respected polling firm. Official results will not be available for several weeks.

APOYO said the Popular Christian Party was in second place with 8.2 percent and eight seats. The remaining vote were divided among smaller parties, and 15.6 percent of the ballots were blank, the group reported.

APOYO's chief pollster Alfredo Torres said the survey had a margin of error or plus or minus 3 percent, but that should not effect projections on the number of seats won. The survey was based on 20,000 interviews.

The Shining Path, a fanatical Maoist group weakened by the capture of its leader two months ago, threatened to disrupt the vote. At least half a dozen small bombs exploded around the capital Sunday, injuring two people with cuts from glass shards.

The government deployed 100,000 soldiers and police to protect voters and polling stations against possible attacks by rebels. There were more than 11 million registered voters, and turnout appeared to be high.

The 80-member assembly will rewrite the constitution and sit until 1995. Eighteen parties and movements fielded candidates.

About 250 international observers monitored the vote for fairness.

Fujimori said the vote would restore a "balance of power" in Peru and allow him to "begin the modernization of the country."

But Peru's two largest parties — the left-leaning Aprista party and the centrist Popular Action — boycotted the elections, charging they would only serve to consolidate Fujimori's rule.

"We believe that we should not be accomplices in this comedy," former President Fernando Belaunde Terry, the leader of Popular Action, said Saturday.

Voters in the capital defied the guerrillas by lining up by the hundreds to cast their ballots at schools used as polling stations. Troops armed with assault rifles kept a close watch and ordered vehicles to park at least 100 yards away to protect against possible car bombs. Police and military helicopters flew overhead.

The war has killed more than 25,000 people, caused $22 billion in damage and paralyzed Peru's economy.

In the week before the elections, a series of rebel bombings in Lima killed three people and wounded nearly 50. It was the rebels' biggest string of attacks in Lima since Shining Path founder and chieftain Abimael Guzman was captured in September and sentenced to life in prison.

Election officials in two Andean cities where guerrilla attacks are frequent suspended a requirement that voters dip their index fingers in indelible ink after voting.

In previous elections, the rebels have cut off fingers and hands of voters in the region. The requirement was suspended in the southern Andean city of Ayacucho, birthplace of the Shining Path's insurgency, and in Huancayo in the central Andes.

Buses stayed off the streets, and businesses were closed in the two cities after the rebels ordered all commerce to stop in an attempt to disrupt the vote. Shotgun-toting peasant militias, including Indian women, joined army patrols in Huancayo to protect voters.

Red Cross denied access to food for Somals, cuts rations

By Thomas Wagner
Associated Press writer

MOGADISHU, Somalia — Ladan Mohammed Nur, blind and pregnant, nearly burst into tears Sunday when the relief agency that saved her life six months ago began serving her only one meal a day.

The 19-year-old woman is one of a half-million hungry Somalis in Mogadishu who depends on the International Committee of the Red Cross for her survival.

On Saturday, relief workers and U.N. officials failed to persuade Mohammed Ali Mahdi, the warlord who controls northern Mogadishu, and Gen. Mohammed Farah Aidid, the clan leader in the capital's south, to open the port to relief ships.

The Red Cross said it was forced not only to cut the number of meals it serves each day from two to one, but to slice the calories of each meal from 1,200 to 600.

For more than a week, a Red Cross ship carrying 12,000 tons of food, a World Food Program vessel with 10,000 tons and a ship carrying supplies for the U.N. troops have been waiting to enter the port.

"The port is closed. We have no idea when it will reopen," Red Cross spokesman Horst Hamborg said Sunday. "There was enough food in the pipeline, but we just can't bring it in."

That means many victims of the fighting and famine that have killed at least at least 300,000 Somalis will consume one-fourth the calories that people in developed countries such as the United States consume daily.

Another 2 million Somalis are in danger of starvation.

In the southern city of Kifmayu, clan leaders have also prevented relief ships from using the port, forcing the Red Cross to feed people only once a day.

Somalia descended into chaos after clan warfare broke out in January 1991.

Relief agencies have helped many Somalis survive the violence and the drought, and 500 U.N. soldiers deployed in Mogadishu have taken control of the airport.

Shelling shatters Sarajevo cease-fire

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — A once-promising cease-fire virtually collapsed Sunday in the heaviest artillery bombardment of Sarajevo since the truce went into effect 10 days ago.

Bosnian authorities also accused Serb forces of deploying Scud missiles in positions that threaten two northern towns. A Serb military spokesman denied the allegation.

U.N. peacekeeping troops from Britain moved on Sunday to protect U.N. relief warehouses in Travnik, a town 45 miles northwest of Sarajevo that is clogged with refugees fleeing approaching Serb forces.

NATO warships began stopping and searching vessels entering Yugoslav territorial waters in line with a U.N. decision Friday to toughen economic sanctions against Yugoslavia, which now consists of Serbia and Montenegro.

Airborne radar and maritime patrol aircraft will assist seven NATO ships in coordination with the Western European Union defense alliance, NATO officials said in Naples, Italy.

The NATO ships include five destroyers from Italy, Germany, Greece, Turkey and Britain, plus a Dutch and an American frigate, the USS Halyburton.

The NATO and European forces have been monitoring the embargo in the Adriatic since July, but they have not had the authority to stop and board ships.

The embargo was imposed in May to punish Serbia for fomenting the Bosnian war, which erupted after the republic's majority Muslims and Croats voted in February for independence from Yugoslavia. More than 14,000 people have been killed in the fighting.

The size of your holiday bird serves as economic barometer

By Marybeth Nibley
Associated Press writer

Americans sitting down to a traditional Thanksgiving feast this year may not feel like giving thanks for a stagnant economy, lost jobs or empty wallets. But at least there's one reason to be grateful. Cheap turkeys.

A record abundance of the birds at a time when a surge in turkey consumption is slackening is benefiting consumers.

There will be an estimated 1.27 billion pounds of turkey ready for the oven during the final quarter of this year, said Lee Christensen, leader of the poultry group in the U.S. Agriculture Department's Economic Research Service. That's a record, up from 1.25 billion pounds in the fourth quarter last year.

This year's consumption probably won't exceed the 18 pounds of turkey eaten per person last year, Christensen said. Still, it will be significantly higher than about a decade ago; each American man, woman and child ate 10½ pounds of turkey in 1980, said the National Turkey Federation in Reston, Va.

Michael Paccicao, of Seven Acres Farm in Reading, Mass., handles fresh turkeys in preparation for the Thanksgiving holiday. The farm expects to offer more than 1,600 freshly killed birds for the holiday feast. The average price of a traditional Thanksgiving dinner will be about $2.64 a person this year, a nickle more than last year, according to the American Farm Bureau Federation.

Once served almost exclusively on holidays, mainly Thanksgiving, turkey turns up a lot now, in ersatz hotdogs and frozen enchiladas, as well as at the sandwich counter.

Historically derided as a dry, stringy fowl best served drenched in cranberry sauce, turkey has improved dramatically in image over the years. Health-minded Americans who prefer low-fat meats rely on turkey as a protein source.

Food retailers, from supermarket chains to neighborhood grocers, usually offer discounts on turkeys around Thanksgiving to attract customers. A typical deal rewards shoppers who spend a certain minimum amount with a turkey coupon for a cut rate.

Another common marketing tactic is to hand out free turkeys to ham buyers.

Many retailers actually lose money on turkeys because they sell them at less than what they pay suppliers. The strategy is to use cheap turkeys as a hook to lure shoppers who then buy cranberries, yams and pumpkin pies.

"Turkeys are the loss leader for Thanksgiving," said Jo Natale, a spokeswoman for the Wegmans supermarket chain based in Rochester, N.Y.

Retail prices around the country generally are ranging between 30 cents and 70 cents a pound for frozen birds.

Fresh turkeys — the choice of many fanciers — sell at a premium to their frozen counterparts. A random, unscientific survey of food retailers found fresh birds priced at roughly 75 cents a pound to $1.75 a pound.

What's good news for turkey buyers isn't so good for the turkey business.

Recent years of steadily rising demand led to widespread overproduction, which depressed prices and forced some major turkey-producing states such as California to curb output.

Ship finds capsized boat

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — The capsized boat of a yachtsman long overdue after sailing for France was found at sea Sunday, but there appeared was no sign of the sailor, the Coast Guard said.

Michael Plant's 60-foot sloop, Coyote, was spotted by a passing freighter about 480 miles southwest of Ireland, his brother said.

The Coast Guard had stopped searching for Plant last Wednesday, after five days, but said Saturday the hunt would resume because of his past successes in overcoming hardships at sea.

Plant, 42, of Jamestown left New York City on Oct. 16, planning to arrive in Les Sables d'Olonne, France, on Oct. 30 to participate in an around-the-world race that started Sunday.

Three days after leaving New York, Plant asked a passing freighter to relay that he had lost electrical power, preventing him from using his long-distance radio gear and automatic pilot.

'Buck Naked' shot in San Francisco

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The leader of a ribald rockabilly band was shot to death in Golden Gate Park after a confrontation with a pigeon lover, authorities said.

Phillip Bury, 38, leader of "Buck Naked and the Bare Bottom Boys," was shot Saturday as he walked his dog. Michael Kagan was arrested, police said.

Kagan, 37, was known for confronting people whose dogs might frighten the park's pigeons, had a confrontation, police said.

Sanders said Bury's dog, a Rottweiler named Reno, is big but nonthreatening.

Kathleen Landreth, 11, examines a turtle in her science class at Bynum School. Her parents said Kathleen, diagnosed with dyslexia several years ago, has blossomed since being enrolled at Bynum.

Kathleen pays close attention during a brief lecture in science class. All classes at the school number no more than six students.

Bynum School Director Betty Starnes gets a big hug. After her first day at the school, Kathleen said she never wanted to go to school anywhere else.

FREEDOM to LEARN

Kathleen Landreth learns differently than most children. But she's just as smart.

Glancing through her round, wire-framed glasses, she seems wise beyond her years. She smiles shyly at her science teacher while studying her crystal-growing experiment. At 11, Kathleen is fully aware that she has finally found a school where she can learn.

Diagnosed with dyslexia several years ago, her parents — tired of battling the Midland Independent School District and their lack of resources to teach their daughter — enrolled her at Bynum School last April.

Kathleen, like thousands of other people in the United States — including her mother to a lesser degree — has trouble understanding written material, often reversing letter and number sequences.

And after being deluged with homework for most of her short life, Kathleen is finally learning how to be a kid.

"She is happy now ... finally. Before she was in a rat race, overwhelmed all the time," said her mother, Kim Landreth. "They would hand her so much homework. It would be lost in the translation from school to home. We spent hours helping her, it was all we ever did. It wasn't normal."

Last year, as a fourth-grader, Kathleen became discouraged as she fell far behind her classmates.

"When others were reading to learn, she was still learning to read," Mrs. Landreth said.

Her self-esteem had plummeted two years before when a second grade teacher called her stupid.

"They kept telling us that she just hadn't 'clicked'," said her father, Bob Landreth. "They wanted to hold her back. They always wanted to hold her back. It would have taken her 24 years to get through school."

Kathleen's MISD record still does not acknowledge that she has dyslexia, her parents said.

"I don't understand that. It's degrading. Wouldn't you rather be called dyslexic than stupid?" Landreth said.

At Bynum, Kathleen is taught compensation techniques to help her overcome the problem in a low-key setting with others facing similar problems.

"We go at our own pace," Kathleen said. "It's better because you don't

Man restores buggies for flavor of the Old West

MISSION VALLEY (AP) — Eugene Sixtus Kotzur likes the idea of the Old West.

Not that he lives it every day as a local welder, but when he has the time you might find him out off the Lower Mission Valley Road working with his buggies.

On a special Saturday in October, with the sun slipping toward the west, you just might have seen Kotzur and his bride, Karen Sue McCurry, on the way from their wedding traveling toward Schroeder Hall in a two-seat surrey.

The surrey, which Kotzur has named "Karen's Pride," has been completely restored and looks like it just came off the showroom floor.

"I tried to stay with everything original that I could," he says, "but a lot of things you just can't."

Mostly what had to be reconstructed was the woodwork on the body, and the upholstery, which Kotzur had a shop in Victoria do for him.

AP Laserphoto

Eugene Kotzur, a welder from Victoria, stands next to a couple of buggies that he has restored.

He completely re-did the surrey for the wedding, but says now that he would like to do one buggy or wagon each year — "just as a hobby," with a desire to someday have a stagecoach.

Kotzur does all his own hand forging of the metal work.

About four years ago, the 32-year-old Victoria welder saw a Wells Fargo Concord coach while participating as a drover on a centennial cattle drive in Montana.

"I seen it, and that's what I wanted," he recalls. "I've seen a couple since and they've just made me want one that much more."

That got him started looking and he found a doctor's buggy in New Braunfels which he bought and then sold to a trail ride club after he had painted it.

"I got it back," he says, pointing out a partially restored buggy sitting in a tin shed beside "Karen's Pride."

Tilton's ministry cuts back; 'PrimeTime' blamed

FARMERS BRANCH (AP) — Televangelist Robert Tilton's "Power Channel" has been off the air for three months.

What happened?

"PrimeTime Live," says Don Moroso, Tilton's spokesman.

In November 1991, the ABC news show reported that Tilton didn't keep his TV promise to pray over all requests sent in by viewers.

Instead, some spiritual pleas were dumped in trash bins outside a Tulsa bank where Tilton's ministry contributions are counted.

The impact of the report was dramatic, Moroso said recently. Hundreds of followers left the church. Tilton's staff faces large scale layoffs.

"We're feeling the effects of a slanderous and vengeful campaign against us," Moroso told The Dallas Morning News in a story published Sunday.

KLDT-TV, which had aired Tilton's Word of Faith ministry shows around the clock, has not broadcast any programming for three months. Station officials wouldn't comment on the situation, the newspaper said.

The FCC is investigating the station's compliance with public disclosure regulations and its association with Tilton, who apparently had an option to purchase the station, officials said.

Tilton's executive offices were locked last week and appeared stripped of some furniture, the newspaper said.

BYNUM: Children get added attention in small setting feel stress that you're far behind. At the public schools you go so fast."

(From 1B)

And director Betty Starnes, basking in the school's non-traditional approach, believes Bynum students feel less threatened by each other.

"They are used to being scapegoated, so they don't act that way to each other. They don't ridicule and they are more patient with each other," she said.

Teachers at Bynum's east campus, which also houses children with Attention Deficit Disorders (ADD), use a 'hands-on' approach - switching topics every five minutes to keep the students' interested.

The student-teacher ratio at Bynum averages 6 to 1, a figure that is critical to dyslexic and ADD children, Ms. Starnes said.

"It's good for them to be in small settings. We lose them otherwise," she said. "And we don't chastise a student for being wrong. Instead we build upon their answers until they understand."

The September 1991 opening of Bynum School East, located at Andrews Highway and Loop 250, came seven years after the school opened, as the Developmental Disabilities Center.

The west campus, at County Road 60 an Highway 158, deals strictly with mentally-retarded children. Executive director Kay Bynum hopes to secure $650,000 to purchase a larger building and bring all the children under one roof by next school year.

Children from Odessa, Andrews and Greenwood also attend the school. Ms. Starnes hopes Bynum is eventually viewed as a school for all Permian Basin children.

But with tuition at $500 a month, the school remains a luxury to many families. Bynum directors say educating one child at the school costs over $900 a month.

Nevertheless, Mrs. Landreth believes Midland is lucky to have the Bynum School.

"I can't stress how wonderful it's been," she said. "Without the school, we would not have had time to open our business."

The business, Travel Agents International, will donate money to the Bynum School at the request of anyone booking a trip.

And despite their differences with MISD, the Landreths remain grateful to several of their daughter's former teachers.

"She had three very good teachers in four years," Landreth said. "And Laura Brown saved our life," said Mrs. Landreth.

Ms. Brown tutored Kathleen in Alphabetic Phonics for one hour a day when she attended public school.

School officials initially balked at that move, saying Kathleen would be truant. The Landreths ignored the denial and school officials left the matter alone.

"The way they are taught at Bynum is the way they are able to learn," Mrs. Landreth said.

Teachers emphasize Alphabetic Phonics, a multi-sensory teaching method relying more on memory than note-taking.

"Our teachers receive over 800 hours of training. It takes three years to complete," Ms. Starnes said.

Ms. Starnes patterned the school after the June Shelton school in Dallas where she formerly worked.

Kathleen, for one, thinks the teachers are great.

"It's better. It's a lot easier to know what you're learning and remember it," she said.

Child-labor abuse rampant, advocates say

NEW YORK (AP) — Child-labor law violations — like those allegedly committed by Burger King, America's second-biggest fast-food chain — are more common today than they have been for decades, children's advocates say.

Jeffrey Newman, executive director of the National Child Labor Committee, a nonprofit group founded in 1904 and based in New York City, estimated the number of violations at well over 1 million per year.

"Child labor is probably in 1992 at a point where violations are greater in number than at any point in the 1920s," he said. "We've gone backward six or seven decades."

The U.S. Labor Department announced Thursday a tentative settlement of its lawsuit against Burger King Corp. Under the settlement, which still must be approved by a federal judge, Burger King agreed to pay a $500,000 fine and take steps to guard against future violations. It didn't admit guilt.

The company was accused in March 1990 of violating restrictions on hours for teen-agers under age 16. Under federal law, 14- and 15-year-olds are allowed to work only three hours a day and a maximum of 18 hours a week when school is in session and only from 6 a.m. to 7 p.m. They can work longer hours on weekends and during the summer.

Burger King was accused of requiring teen-agers to work longer and later than allowed at nearly all its 800 company-owned restaurants. The company said all alleged violations had occurred before it was acquired by Grand Metropolitan PLC, a British conglomerate.

A Burger King spokesman said the company stopped hiring 14- and 15-year-olds at company-owned restaurants more than a year ago. The chain includes 5,700 restaurants, including franchises.

Child-labor experts said Friday that fast-food chain labor violations are only part of the problem — and the easiest to detect.

Even more serious violations occur in agriculture, where 9- and 10-year-old migrant children often toil in the fields, and in garment and other manufacturing sectors in inner cities.

John Zalusky, an AFL-CIO economist who follows child labor laws, said the Bush administration has neglected child-labor laws. The AFL-CIO is working with children's advocates to persuade states to enact strict controls on child labor.

"The basic thing this nation needs is an educated work force," Zalusky said. "And the primary occupation of children ought to be their education."

Department of Labor spokesman Bob Cussia said Friday enforcement of labor laws — including those for children — has changed little over the past 20 years. The number of agents enforcing the laws has remained fairly constant at 825 to 925 from administration to administration, he said.

The department said the number of violations jumped in 1990 to 39,790 from 9,968 a decade earlier. Cussia wouldn't comment on whether more agents are needed.

In March 1990, the Department of Labor announced Operation Child Watch aimed at rooting out child-labor violators. The Burger King lawsuit was filed that same month.

The government also has child-labor lawsuits pending against two other fast-food chains, Hardee's Food Systems Inc., owner of the popular Roy Rogers restaurant chain, and Rax Restaurants Inc., a Columbus, Ohio, fast-food chain.

Critics say existing laws are inadequate and enforcement is lax.

The federal government is more concerned with "image-driven enforcement," highly-publicized sweeps done "for camara purposes," Newman charged. "But the rest of the year they are doing nothing."

Advocates say thousands of American children work under illegal conditions in industrial laundries, costume jewelry plants, and in small- and medium-size factories.

Police arrests man following local burglary

Staff report

A man was in jail Sunday in connection with a burglary at the M System Store at 400 N. Midland Friday.

According to a police report, Bryan Lee Carlton, 20, was charged with burglary to a business and bond was set at $7,500.

The suspect is accused of burglarizing the store and causing extensive damage to equipment and merchandise, police said.

Dentists seek 'stamp' of approval

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — When Elvis got his own postage stamp, dentists wondered why the king of cavity prevention didn't have one, too.

Now they're fighting tooth and nail with the U.S. Postal Service to get a fitting tribute to fluoride.

"I find it hard to understand why the biggest advancement in dentistry in the 20th century isn't considered of real historical significance," said Dr. Chase Klinesteker, chairman of the West Michigan Dental Society's Fluoride Commemorative Stamp Committee.

And what better place to lead the fight than in the city that pioneered the fluoridation of drinking water nearly 50 years ago?

Grand Rapids introduced fluoride into its water supply in 1945 and a follow-up 15-year study found children had a 50 percent reduction in tooth decay. Today, about 250 million people in 31 countries are exposed to fluoridated water.

Seven other countries have fluoride commemorative stamps, Klinesteker said.

Twice in the last six months, the U.S. Postal Service's Citizens Stamp Advisory Committee brushed off proposals for a fluoride stamp.

"The postal department wants the stamp to sell," Klinesteker said, conceding a fluoride stamp might not be "sexy enough."

But the group isn't giving up.

It recently began distributing postcard ballots at dentists' offices, asking patients to vote for one of two comical faces: a toothless old man, depicting the pre-fluoridation era, or a smiling set of pearly whites, representing life after fluoridation. Fluoride boosters are asked to check their preference and send the card to the Postal Service's advisory committee.

The stunt, meant to catch the committee's attention, is modeled after the highly publicized contest to choose between two versions of an Elvis Presley stamp. The younger version of the king of rock 'n' roll was chosen over an older, heavier version.

Klinesteker said Monday about 6,000 cards have been distributed. The group is seeking support nationwide with an item in the American Dental Association newsletter.

He acknowledged that if the postal service agrees to the stamp, it would have authority over the artwork. Klinesteker said the group doesn't have any specific designs in mind.

Its only goal is to have a stamp issued by 1995, the 50th anniversary of fluoridation.

The Postal Service never comments on the likelihood of a stamp being issued, spokeswoman Robin Minard said. But the committee, which meets privately every other month, probably won't be swayed by the postcards, she said.

"Look at the Elvis stamp. We began receiving letters right after he died 15 years ago. It was set aside many, many times before it was approved," she said.

Ignorance is bliss for hostess with unwanted 'guests'

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: You asked a reader: "If you had mice or cockroaches in your home, wouldn't you want to be told?"

Van Buren

You seemed to think the hostess should be told. I disagree with you, and here's a true story to explain why:

When I was about 16, I was sitting in my dad's car waiting for him to come out of the hardware store, when I saw a girlfriend of mine go into the store. (She didn't see me.) She was wearing jeans and a flannel shirt. I couldn't help but notice big rips in the seat of her pants! The hole was so big, her white underpants showed!

A few minutes later, she came out of the store, holding her shirt down in the back very self-consciously. (Someone must have told her about the hole in her pants.) When she saw me, she came over and said, "Did you know I have a big hole in my pants?"

I said, "Really? I didn't even notice it." She looked so relieved, and went home to change.

The point of this story is: People don't want cockroaches or mice any more than they want a hole in their pants. Let them "save face" by believing nobody saw it. — JANSI SAUER, EAST WENATCHEE, WASH.

DEAR JANSI: Thank you for providing a better answer than mine. Would that we all had 20-20 hindsight. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: Obviously you have never had any mice or cockroaches in your house. Abby, that hostess surely must have seen at least one of these unwelcome pests in her home at some time or another — and she probably prayed that they would stay out of sight while her guests were there. — HAVE HAD A FEW IN MISSION VIEJO, CALIF.

DEAR HAD A FEW: A reader from Pleasantville, N.J., wrote to share her experience:

DEAR ABBY: A neighbor of mine came over for midmorning coffee and she brought her 3-year-old daughter along. While drinking coffee in my kitchen, this neighbor very calmly said, "Oh, look . . . we have a little visitor. See Mr. Mouse sitting on the handle of that frying pan on the stove? Isn't he cute? He is looking the place over, wondering if he should stay, or go back into the little hole he came from."

I marveled at the way she used her storytelling voice so as not to upset her child.

It certainly beats screaming and standing on a chair, which is the way some young housewives might have handled it.

DEAR ABBY: I am a faithful reader, and never thought I would be writing to you. (Like most of your readers.)

My question is: When the year 2000 finally arrives, what is the proper way to say that year? I say "twenty hundred." My wife strongly disagrees and says "two thousand." Which is the proper way? — LOST IN TIME

DEAR LOST IN TIME: The year will be "two thousand." Ten years after that will be "two thousand and ten" or "twenty-ten" — the choice is yours.

For everything you need to know about wedding planning, order "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send a long, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Endowed estate is home to 446 cats

By Andrew H. Malcolm
N.Y. Times News Service

Residents come and go through floor-level windows and have the run of five fenced acres of woods containing any adventure a cat could want.

FALLS VILLAGE, Conn. — If you're allergic, you'd better hold this column a little farther away than usual. There's a lot of fur in this one.

Jeanne Toomey has 446 cats! (Yes, four hundred and forty-six).

That means her household contains 1,784 paws, 446 elegant and eloquent tails, 892 pointed but fuzzy ears and enough feline nonchalance to float an ark. The word is also out in Litchfield County's mouse community: Visiting 95 Belden St. can endanger your health.

But Ms. Toomey's estate is more than a catnip salesman's idea of nirvana. It is, in fact, an endowed retirement home — for cats. No kidding. More than half the cats come from owners who bequeathed funds to Ms. Toomey's home to underwrite their companion cat's care in perpetuity. (The other 200 are m-o-o-c-h-e-r-s, but we don't like to say that in front of them.)

The cat home, a non-profit organization called Last Post, is north of this town on 35 acres of northwest Connecticut's prime rural real estate that humans like Mia Farrow, the actress, and Henry Kissinger, the expert, pay a fortune to use as a part-time getaway. The cats live in these wooded hills full time free. (So, who got the smarter deal?)

The Last Post was opened 10 years ago by Pegeen Fitzgerald, a soft-hearted New York City radio personality who talked about animals so much before her death in 1989 that some WOR listeners sent in their pets. One cat led to another, as cats seem to do. (Let's be frank, OK? Who's going to turn away a sodden soul who shows up with a feeble meow but no endowment?) Now, in a kind of feline socialism, endowment income and donations support both affluent cats and moochers.

There's Chester, who became the grumpiest resident as soon as he won the monthly Friendliest Cat Award; he gets an entire chair to himself whenever he wants. There's Brenda, with her little pixie face, and Moe, with the bent left ear. There's Poopsie, who's 22 and half blind; and Patches, who's used up seven of his lives; Sidney, who thinks he's a king, and Scooter, who talks to himself.

You walk into the home's day room (carefully maintained at 68 degrees) and the residents are everywhere, usually in the same social groupings on familiar perches at the same time every day, in various depths of snoozing. There's the morning TV group and the afternoon TV group. There are those who take the morning air out on the huge wooden deck and those who prefer the weaker afternoon sun. There are the young ones who daily pick a catnip toy from the mini-mountain of toy mice and balls, and there are the older residents who watch such youthful tomfoolery with the jealous disdain of middle age.

Residents come and go through floor-level windows and have the run of five fenced acres of woods containing any adventure a cat could want, save, perhaps, songbirds.

Newcomers stay briefly in a special room where Michael Cohen, Judy Warner and the Last Post's five other staff members and numerous volunteers hug and help new residents shed the emotional baggage of being lost or ease the adjustment from family to institutional living. The other day, Nike was hesitantly starting to step from his cage, three weeks after his owner, Blanche Bond, died in Waynesville, Mo.

Cats over 14, who prefer a more sedate environment, inhabit the North Building, where the music and food are softer.

Speaking of which, every morning at 7:30 workers dole out 125 cans of five kinds of Friskies food. (We can report that Beef 'n Gravy easily beats Mixed Grill as the favorite.) An additional 20 pounds of dry food disappear during afternoon snacks. But you better not cut in line. "There is a definite eating order," says Cohen, who loves cats despite his asthma. "The same ones eat in the same order at the same bowl every day."

At the other end of life's necessities, a local lumberyard donates a monthly truckload of sawdust. And Dr. David Sandefer over at the Sand Road Animal Hospital provides volume discount veterinary care. Visitors are welcome every day from 11 a.m. until 4 p.m. Many cats are available for adoption, with proper references.

Man makes home out of childhood school

By Rhonda Smith
Associated Press Writer

CORPUS CHRISTI — Ted Isensee's ties to Clarkwood Elementary School span almost 50 years.

When he was a child, Isensee attended classes in the yellow-brick building at 211 S. Clarkwood Road. The retired engineer lived in a pink house behind the school for more than three decades. Now, he lives in the school.

Isensee, 66, bought the property from the Tuloso-Midway Independent School District earlier this year and moved inside.

"This is permanent," he said. "I'm going to live in this school from now on."

Isensee's bedroom is the former school library, according to the sign still above the swinging metal door. He cooks his meals in what used to be the school kitchen.

When his two sons from his second marriage visit every other weekend, they each get a private room — and have about 15 others to spare.

Luke, 10, and Hugo, 15, also have a full-size basketball court inside their father's new home, complete with two new nets. "And they ride their skateboards in there, too," Isensee said, adding that he doesn't play basketball.

It wasn't a coincidence that Isensee ended up owning the 6.5 acres on which the school was built in the early 1900s. When he made his purchase, he said, he had a plan.

Isensee's family came to Corpus Christi from Karnes County in 1912. They own most of the land surrounding the school. Buying the main building, two wings and garage that sit on that property was sort of like completing a family real estate puzzle, he said.

"The family farm is like a rectangle. If you took it and cut a notch out in a corner, that's where the school would be," Isensee explained. "But now that I've bought the school, it completes the rectangle." Isensee also bought the school for sentimental reasons. "Back in the 1920s, my grandfather (T.H. Isensee) deeded land to the district for the school building," he said. "I thought it would be nice if I could get that land back."

One reason Isensee moved into the 10,000-square-foot building was that he couldn't find anyone to lease it, he said.

Behind that building, there also are two 5,000-square-foot wings that contain empty classrooms. Isensee rents the pink house he owns behind the school property, he said.

Despite the expansiveness of his new quarters, Isensee said, he hasn't noticed a difference in utility bills. "There's an air conditioner in every room, but of course I don't run them all," he said. "In fact, during the summer I just used a fan. And in the winter I would only heat the space I live in."

Isensee recently asked the city if he could get the school property rezoned and turn it into multifamily dwellings.

Isensee doesn't worry much about finding families who either live in Clarkwood already or wouldn't mind moving there.

Clarkwood is a small subdivision where most people know each other, he said. The main attractions are the Snappy Foods convenience store, a trailer park, a Baptist church and the school.

Heading toward Robstown from Corpus Christi, Clarkwood is on the left side of Texas Highway 44, two miles past Corpus Christi International Airport. The subdivision became a part of Corpus Christi — like Annaville, Calallen and Flour Bluff did — when the city annexed 49 square miles during the 1960s.

FBI raids child porno operation at Cornell

ITHACA, N.Y. (NYT) — FBI agents raided the dormitory room of a Cornell University sophomore Wednesday afternoon in an investigation into the distribution of child pornography through an international computer network.

Authorities said Thursday that they were investigating whether the student used graphics imaging technology to copy pornographic pictures of children onto computer files and send the images through the Netnews network, described as a major computer bulletin board that is used internationally. Theoretically, they said, people with the right equipment could then send copies of the pornographic files from the bulletin board to their personal computers.

Investigators say they think the student may have gained access to the bulletin board through Cornell's computer network.

The student has not been charged, and authorities did not identify him, nor would they say whether they believed he was profiting from his activities. His name is being withheld because he has not been charged with a crime.

Bill Imfeld, the assistant special agent in charge of the FBI's Albany, N.Y., office, would not specify the nature of the material seized from the student's room, but he said agents would spend the next few days analyzing "an awful lot of information from the search."

He added that agents were trying to determine whether anyone else was involved. Imfeld said the files had appeared in several regions of the United States as well as "on another continent."

Cornell officials said the FBI investigation began Nov. 11 after the administrator of another bulletin board system told the university that a student might be transmitting materials involved in the sexual exploitation of minors.

Pending its own investigation of the student, Cornell has shut down access to certain files on the bulletin board, said Linda Grace-Kobas, a Cornell spokeswoman.

This is the second time this year that Cornell's computer network has been at the heart of a criminal investigation.

Women begin anti-pornography campaign

By Carolyn Skorneck
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Dianne choked back tears as she stepped to the microphone Thursday to tell of her daughter's rape last year at age 3. The assailant was only 12. The real culprit, contended Dianne, was pornography the boy had seen at summer camp.

"What he saw on those pages not only gave him the ideas of what to do and how to do it, but it gave him the permission to treat females in a degrading and debasing manner," the Arizona resident said.

The woman, identified only by her first name, spoke at a news conference publicizing the launching of "Enough Is Enough," an anti-pornography campaign that planners hope will be taken up by women nationwide.

Equipped with a manual that includes such advice as how to give "sound bite" quotes to TV reporters, and with data on studies linking pornography to crime, women will fight for enforcement of laws banning child pornography and other obscene material, sponsors hope.

"We're going to provide women with the tools to make a difference," said Dee Jepsen, campaign chairman and former Reagan administration official.

Unlike other anti-pornography efforts, "This is the only national campaign that is focused on the mobilization of America's women," said Eileen Lindner, a former Carter administration official now at the National Council of Churches.

The campaign seeks no new federal legislation, but organizers want to outlaw possession of child pornography in the 20 states where the organizers said it is now legal: Alaska, Arkansas, Colorado, Connecticut, Hawaii, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Mississippi, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Mexico, New York, Oklahoma, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Vermont, Virginia and Wyoming.

Illegal pornography "debases and humiliates the men and women and children depicted in it," said Lindner. "We're in a battle for the hearts and minds of the American people."

"This is not a victimless crime," added Jane Burnley, the former director of the Justice Department's Office for Victims of Crime during the Bush administration.

Julie Schondel of Maine attested to that. From age 4 to 15, she said, she was the victim of incest and child abuse at the hands of her stepfather.

"Pornography played a part, not just child pornography, pseudo-child pornography, illegal pornography and bestiality, these were . . . used to educate me as to how I was supposed to act as a young woman," she said. Even now, at 26, she said, the pornography "affects every relationship in my life."

Jepsen said organizers were limiting their focus to illegal pornography in order to achieve a broader base of support.

Cleanup begins in neighborhoods damaged by destructive tornadoes

HOUSTON (AP) — Residents picked through their soggy belongings Sunday a day after several destructive tornadoes stormed through Harris County, injuring several people and damaging hundreds of homes.

Authorities said at least six people were injured when the twisters struck Saturday afternoon, but none was considered life-threatening. An estimated 300 homes in Houston and another 900 homes in Harris County sustained some type of damage. Officials said they were still trying to assess the situation.

"I think you're looking at a human tragedy," Houston Mayor Bob Lanier said Sunday after touring the Denver Harbor neighborhood, where about 200 homes and as many businesses were damaged.

Lanier said he will seek state and federal assistance for tornado victims.

The National Weather Service said tornadoes also were spotted Saturday in Fort Bend, Wharton, Brazoria, Liberty and Polk counties. A severe thunderstorm system moving across Southeast Texas spawned the afternoon twister system.

The hardest hit areas in Harris County were in sections of southeast Houston and in Channelview, a suburb east of the city. About 4,000 people, most of them in Channelview, were still without power Sunday, according to Houston Lighting & Power said.

Joe Morrow looks through the remains of a friends home Sunday, hoping to find valuables that were left after the home was destroyed by a tornado that hit Channelview, Saturday.

The funnel clouds smashed homes, uprooted trees, overturned cars and toppled power lines. About 20 planes stored in three hangars at the West Houston Airport also were demolished, airport manager Woody Lesikar said.

Channelview sustained massive damage in several subdivisions where neighborhoods looked more like battlefields Sunday.

"In Channelview, we've got about 400 homes with major damage, and we have about 200 with minor," said Laverne Thompson, deputy coordinator for the county's emergency management center.

Sheriff's deputies blocked access to Channelview's Sterling Green South subdivision.

Houston police also were posted in damaged areas to guard against thefts.

Visitors reflect on death of JFK

DALLAS (AP) — Twenty-nine years ago, President John F. Kennedy arrived at Dallas Love Field in searing sunshine and departed in somber shadow that has never quite left a corner of downtown Dallas.

On Sunday, about 1,200 people visited The Sixth Floor exhibit at the former Texas School Book Depository, marking the 29th anniversary of the assassination of Kennedy.

The Warren Commission determined that Lee Harvey Oswald, acting alone, fired the fatal shots from the depository that killed the 35th president.

The exhibit, on the west side of downtown Dallas, has drawn about 1 million visitors since it opened in February 1989.

Exhibit spokesman Bob Porter said Sunday's turnout was a little above average, and many people who viewed the nearly 400 photographs, documentary films, graphs, charts and other information on the life, death and legacy of Kennedy didn't even realize Sunday was the anniversary.

"We're a little bit embarrassed, but we didn't realize it until yesterday," said Debbey Boles, 43, of Lakeland, Fla., who toured the exhibit with her husband, Rick.

The couple said their 17-year-old son, who did a term paper on Kennedy, informed them of the date's significance before they left Florida.

"Gosh we have good timing," said Ira Fox of Miami, who was in Dallas for a weekend convention. "We had planned on visiting the exhibit, but we had no idea today was the anniversary."

Outside the exhibit, near the so-called "grassy knoll" where some conspiracy theorists allege there was a second gunman, about 250 people tied green and white ribbons on trees and place floral arrangements at the site.

They timed their gathering at 12:30 p.m. CST, the time three shots rang out as Kennedy's motorcade rolled through the streets of downtown Dallas on Nov. 22, 1963.

Porter said the exhibit helps Dallas cope with the black eye the incident brought, and provides information to help people resolve the assassination issue in their own minds.

"We hope that we are helping people come to some sort of resolution," Porter said. "We're trying to supply them with information so that they can leave with understanding."

For Betty Lauman and her stepdaughter, Robyn, the smorgasbord of displays, photos and video footage only sparked more questions.

"You leave here wondering two things: 'What would have happened had it not happened?' and 'Who did it?'"

Each year, hundreds of people flock to Dealey Plaza to reflect on the Kennedy assassination.

On Saturday, about 1,400 toured The Sixth Floor, below the 3,000 on the best Saturdays, Porter said.

Caravan defies embargo

TAMPICO, Mexico (AP) — Aging hippies, yuppies, Vietnam vets and priests from around the world on Sunday loaded a Havana-bound ship with 15 tons of wheelchairs, bicycles and Bibles, defying the U.S. trade embargo on Cuba.

A caravan of 44 trucks with 104 people from 25 U.S. states and nine countries arrived in this busy Mexican port city after crossing the U.S. border in Laredo on Friday.

"This is the first time the U.S. embargo against Cuba has been broken," said David Silk, a businesman from Mystic, Conn. "I've felt for a long time the embargo was not only illegal but immoral and this was a chance to break it."

The caravan of humanitarian aid, organized by the Minneapolis-based Pastors for Peace, crossed into Mexico after a scuffle with U.S. Customs officials, who tried to prevent the group from crossing because members refused to fill out export licenses.

Three people were jailed and $1,500 worth of medicine confiscated before U.S. officials allowed the group into Mexico.

Dallas police officers protest against policies

DALLAS (AP) — Ten off-duty police officers joined with more than 60 other demonstrators to protest racial inequities within the Dallas Police Department.

There were no arrests during the demonstration outside the department's southeast substation, a police lieutenant at the scene said Saturday. The protestors marched in the rain for about two hours.

They say Police Chief Bill Rathburn has not done enough to correct the problems that plague promotion and discipline policies.

The officers who joined Saturday's demonstration are board members of the Texas Peace Officers Association, which picketed downtown police headquarters on Thursday.

The association of black police officers have called for a national boycott of Dallas.

More officers are expected to turn out for daily protests at various police facilities, said Senior Cpl. James Allen, president of the association.

"If we get 50 officers on a daily basis, we'll be OK," Allen said.

Several African-American officers have expressed fear they would lose their jobs if they joined the protest, Allen said.

"A lot of officers are still scared. The fear level still exists for some officers," Allen said. "Some of us are not afraid."

Officials worry of rabies outbreak in South Texas

HOUSTON (AP) — A rabies outbreak has persisted for four years among coyotes in southern Texas and health officials warn that the deadly disease could spread to pets and then to people.

"Before, it was sporadic. We saw one or two cases each year or every other year. Now we're getting cases every month," says Dr. George McKirahan, chief veterinarian for the regional health department in Harlingen.

This year, 102 confirmed cases have been reported compared to 87 in 1991 and 44 in 1990. The last major rabies outbreak in the area was in 1976; 54 cases were confirmed and 58 people were exposed to the disease and treated.

"There are no signs of any slowdown, it's going to keep on like this," said Richard Sanchez, a statistical clerk with McKirahan's office.

The latest outbreak is in a 26-county area extends from Laredo to Victoria southward to Brownsville.

That includes Starr County, where a woman died last year of rabies she may have contracted from a family dog.

In Edinburg several months ago, a rabid coyote staggered onto a golf course and fought with dogs. The owners of the dogs were exposed to the virus when they tended to their injured pets, and had to take a series of rabies shots.

Stoyanovich hits gusher

■ Miami's 52-yard field goal was something Houston couldn't match in the fourth quarter as the Oilers lose again.

By Steven Wine
AP Sports Writer

MIAMI — In a battle of field goals, Pete Stoyanovich outkicked Al Del Greco, and the Miami Dolphins outlasted the Houston Oilers.

Stoyanovich's fourth field goal, a 52-yarder with two seconds left, gave Miami a 19-16 victory Sunday. Del Greco hit three field goals for the Oilers but was wide right on a 41-yard try with 1:54 to go.

"I feel sorry for him, but it happens," Stoyanvovich said.

Houston's Cody Carlson, making his first start in two seasons as a replacement for the injured Warren Moon, threw for 228 yards and one touchdown. Dan Marino pof the Dolphins, harried by a pass rush that sacked him four times, threw for 237 yards and one score.

"The important thing is that we moved the ball when we had to at the end," Miami coach Don Shula said.

The Dolphins took over at their 23-yard line with 1:49 left and moved 42 yards in seven plays for the winning score. Marino completed all five passes in the drive.

After each team called a timeout, Stoyanovich ended his perfect day with a perfect kick. The ball clear the crossbar by at least 10 yards with help from a 15-mph wind.

Cowboys rise over Phoenix

■ The Cardinals had the right idea, but Dallas owns too many weapons.

By Mel Reisner
AP Sports Writer

TEMPE, Ariz. — The Phoenix Cardinals learned enough from their first game against Dallas to pay close attention to Michael Irvin and Emmitt Smith.

But you can't ignore anybody in the Cowboys' arsenal.

With Irvin shut down and Smith limited to 35 yards rushing through three quarters, Troy Aikman went with short passes to Smith and tight end Jay Novacek to control the ball and, ultimately, defeat the Cardinals 16-10 Sunday.

"We didn't get the job done running the ball, and we felt that they would try to take away Irvin, and that Alvin (Harper) could have a big day," said Aikman, who completed 25 of 36 passes for 237 yards and two touchdowns.

Aikman's 7-yard pass to tight end Novacek put the Cowboys up 10-7 at halftime, and his 37-yard TD aerial to Harper provided insurance. Harper had five receptions for 88 yards.

Lin Elliott had a 28-yard field goal for Dallas.

Aggies win, lose ground

Associated Press

Texas A&M keeps winning on the field and losing ground in The Associated Press college football poll.

The undefeated Aggies, who fell behind once-beaten Florida State in the poll last week, remained No. 4 after routing Texas Christian 37-10 Saturday. But A&M fell farther behind the idle No. 3 Seminoles, who increased their lead over the Aggies from three to 18 points.

The ballot-box battle between the Aggies (11-0) and Seminoles (9-1) is significant because they both want a shot at top-ranked Miami (10-0) if No. 2 Alabama (10-0) loses one of its last two games.

If Florida State finishes No. 2, it would play Miami in the Fiesta Bowl. If A&M moves up to second, it would meet the Hurricanes in the Cotton Bowl. If the Aggies or Seminoles could beat Miami, they would probably win the national championship.

Texas A&M coach R.C. Slocum said the Aggies deserve more respect, especially since their Pigskin Classic win over Stanford gives them one more victory than any other team.

"It's disappointing to be one of three

Philadelphia wakes up, finds missing identity

Associated Press

The Philadelphia Eagles, a team in desperate search of an identity, might have found it Sunday — on offense, defense and special teams.

The struggling Eagles woke up with a vengeance and routed the New York Giants 47-34. After falling behind 20-6, Philadelphia scored 34 straight points in virtually every manner.

Seth Joyner returned an interception 43 yards for a touchdown, then Herschel Walker scored on an 11-yard run to tie it. Keith Byars made a shoestring catch of a shot-put pass by Randall Cunningham and rambled 38 yards to score. Ken Rose blocked a punt, picked it up on the 3 and ran it in for another TD.

Sean Landeta got off his next punt, but he shouldn't have bothered. Vai Sikahema sped 87 yards to the end zone.

"The breakdown in special teams was a critical thing," Giants coach Ray Handley said. "There's a lack of discipline in those teams and that's my responsibility. So I'll accept responsibility for the loss here today."

Philadelphia now is 7-4 after a 4-0 start. Perhaps Sunday's successful wildness will put the Eagles' recent troubles — quarterback controversies, defenders complaining about the offense, players sniping at the coaches — deep in the past.

NFL Roundup

49ers 20, Rams 10

Ricky Watters ran for 163 yards and two touchdowns, and Jerry Rice caught the 99th scoring pass of his career, one behind Steve Largent's NFL record. The Niners have won six straight at Anaheim Stadium.

Rice, who also set a team record by catching at least one pass in 106 consecutive games, finished with four catches for 93 yards.

San Francisco held Jim Everett to 13 of 29 for 158 yards and one touchdown.

Patriots 24, Jets 3

New England took charge early and won its second straight following nine consecutive losses.

Jon Vaughn rushed for a career-high 110 yards and one touchdown in place of injured Leonard Russell. John Stephens ran for 51 yards and two touchdowns, helping the Patriots outgain the Jets 164-77 yards on the ground.

New England held the Jets to 166 yards, got four sacks and two interceptions. The Patriots also recovered a fumbled punt.

ing quarterback Chris Chandler in the first quarter.

After Greg Davis' 20-yard field goal tightened the game to 16-10, Phoenix forced Dallas into a third-and-6 at the Cowboys' 44. Robert Massey knocked the ball loose from Irvin, but officials called interference on Massey, giving Dallas a first down with 2:42 left in the game.

"It was a critical call," coach Joe Bugel said. "You have to let the players play in a situation like that. It should be like the NBA, where you let the players play at the end of the game,"

Massey said he was sure he got to the ball before he touched Irvin.

"I stood up and started celebrating before the ... flag came down," Massey said.

He said the officiating was uncertain all day, pointing to the several minutes it took before Aeneas Williams' interception for an apparent TD was nullified by a ruling the Phoenix cornerback was down by contact.

"There was a lot of indecision all day. The ref said I hooked him (Irvin), but there's no way. I had my hands on the ball," Massey said.

The Cardinals could not be blamed for worrying about "home cooking." Although they played before 72,439 — the largest crowd ever to watch a Cardinals home game — more than half the fans were wearing Dallas blue and silver.

It was the sixth loss for the Cardinals (3-8) before a crowd of 50,000 or larger since they moved here five years ago.

Dallas improved to 9-2, its best start since 1983.

The Cardinals lost both starting outside linebackers to knee injuries a week ago and opened with a four-man line to offset the loss of their pass rush. The strategy also seemed to work against the running game.

Smith, the NFC's top rusher with 1,043 yards coming into the game, got 84 for the contest only because he ran for 49 in the final quarter.

"They changed schemes on us, but we've seen enough 4-3 defenses that it shouldn't have bothered us. That wasn't the case, though. I don't know what the problem was," Aikman added.

Irvin, who caught eight passes for 210 yards in a 31-20 Dallas victory over Phoenix in September, functioned as a decoy most of the rematch and never had a reception. He said he had lots of respect for the Cardinals.

NFL: Sanders busts Detroit rush record

(From 1C)

foggy day was the smallest in the NFL this season.

Raiders 24, Broncos 0

No John Elway meant a long day for Denver.

Elway was sidelined with a shoulder injury and rookie Tommy Maddox could not duplicate his fine play of the previous Sunday, when he replaced Elway and led the Broncos past the Giants. Maddox was picked off twice by Terry McDaniel, who returned both interceptions 67 yards.

Eric Dickerson, in his best game with Los Angeles, gained 107 yards. Jay Schroeder threw three touchdown passes.

Chargers 29, Buccaneers 14

The hard-charging Chargers moved to 6-5 after an 0-4 start. It's the first time over .500 for the Chargers since 1987.

Rodney Harmon scored two touchdowns and Marion Butts rushed for 104 yards. The defense was powerful, registering six sacks, three by rookie Chris Mims, one for a safety.

Bills 41, Falcons 14

The game was over before the first quarter ended.

Buffalo scored touchdowns on all four first-quarter possessions, while limiting Atlanta to three-plays-and-out on three of its four drives. The 28 points were the most ever scored in a first quarter against the Falcons, who surrendered 315 rushing yards, also a franchise record.

Ken Davis ran for 181 yards and two touchdowns, including a 64-yarder, in relief of Thurman Thomas, who had 103 yards in less than two quarters.

Deion Sanders took a lateral on a kickoff and returned it 73 yards for the Falcons' first touchdown.

Vikings 17, Browns 13

The defense rescued the Vikings again. Audray McMillian had three interceptions, returning the third 25 yards for a touchdown to win it.

Minnesota, which fell behind 13-0, has seven defensive touchdowns this season, six in the last four weeks.

"I don't know if our defense actually expects to score every game, but we realize it's possible on every play," linebacker Jack Del Rio said. "It's a great feeling to be part of a feeding frenzy like this."

Packers 17, Bears 3

Brett Favre's fake helped score one touchdown and he got another on his own with a 5-yard run off a broken play as the Packers handed Chicago its fourth loss in a row. Edgar Bennett, filling in for injured Vince Workman, rushed for 107 yards; previously he had only 13 carries for 38 yards.

Favre connected on a 49-yard pass to Sterling Sharpe after the fake and the Bears never recovered.

"It's called 'the sucker play' and we couldn't even make it work in practice," Favre said. "But the line did an outstanding job and Sterling made his usual great catch."

Lions 19, Bengals 13

Barry Sanders became the Lions' all-time rushing leader with a 101-yard first half. He finished with 154 yards Sunday, giving him 5,202 career yards, 96 more than Billy Sims' former record.

Sanders scored the clinching fourth-quarter touchdown on a 5-yard run.

"Everybody will pay attention to Barry Sanders, but for the last 3½ years I wasn't the only one out there running the ball," Sanders said. "A lot of credit has got to go to a lot of other guys besides me. I don't think I'm being modest, I think I'm being realistic."

Cincinnati managed just 95 total yards, 52 rushing and 43 passing, the second-lowest mark in club history.

Steelers 30, Colts 14

Barry Foster and the Steelers continued their strong play.

Foster, the NFL's leading rusher, scored two touchdowns and broke Franco Harris' team record with his eighth 100-yard game of the season. He got 168 and needs just 30 yards to break Harris' 1975 single-season team record of 1,246 yards.

The Steelers' 8-3 start is their best since they opened 9-2 in 1984 and they are 5-0 at home for their first time since 1979, when they were 10-0 at home, including the playoffs.

Chiefs 24, Seahawks 14

Rookie Dale Carter ran back a punt 86 yards for a touchdown and Neil Smith returned a pass interception 22 yards for another as Kansas City marked Dave Krieg's return to the Kingdome by beating Seattle.

New Orleans tests Washington

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The New Orleans Saints should have a clear picture of their Monday night opponent. After all, the Saints and the Washington Redskins are alike in many respects.

For different reasons — injuries to the Redskins, lack of execution by the Saints — both teams are struggling on offense. Both also feature stingy defenses and outstanding kicking games.

"We have to concentrate on doing our jobs," Saints running back Dalton Hilliard said. "You can't let your attention slip against the Redskins.

"They have one of the top defenses in the league and never give you anything."

New Orleans (7-3) ranks third overall in the NFL and second in the NFC. The Saints are first in the league against the pass.

Washington (6-4) is third overall in the conference.

For the Redskins, the big problem has been injuries.

Fifteen players from Super Bowl XXVI won't be in uniform Monday night. Ten of them — including six starters — are out with injuries.

"No one is going to slow down and wait for us to catch up," Redskins coach Joe Gibbs said. "You have to play with who is healthy, and we must find a way to make it work."

The Redskins' offense, with just two touchdowns in the last 19 quarters, faces the Saints' sack-happy defense.

In its 35-16 loss to Kansas City last week, Washington was able to rush for only 81 yards — 33 on a fake punt by Brian Mitchell. Quarterback Mark Rypien had 199 yards passing, mostly on short throws to running back Ricky Ervins.

The Redskins' big weapon in recent weeks was kicker Chip Lohmiller, who has converted 11 of his last 13 kicks to lead the league in scoring with 79 points.

New Orleans' injury list is shorter, although the Saints did lose strong safety Brett Maxie for the season. He tore ligaments in his left knee Sunday in a 21-20 loss to San Francisco.

The Saints' offensive struggles stem from their inability to run the ball.

Against the 49ers, the Saints got a season-low 43 yards on 15 carries. Over the last four weeks, they have averaged just 3.2 yards per rush.

Quarterback Bobby Hebert had his second 300-yard passing day this season, collecting 301 yards and two touchdowns.

"It's been very, very frustrating," offensive line coach Paul Boudreaux said. "We have a veteran line.

"It's not like it's a bunch of rookies that we have to teach. We have veteran backs, but we aren't moving the ball."

As with the Redskins, the Saints' most consistent scorer is their kicker. Morten Andersen is fifth in the NFC with 65 points. His 15 field goals are second in the conference.

Love III, Kite win Shark Shootout with late bird

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Davis Love III and Tom Kite teamed up to shoot a 13-under-par 59 in the scramble format to win the $1 million Shark Shootout on Sunday at Sherwood Country Club.

Love birdied the final hole with a 10-footer for the margin of victory over three other twosomes — Fred Couples and Ray Floyd; Hale Irwin and Bruce Lietzke; Nick Price and Billy Ray Brown. Love's 8-foot eagle putt at the par-5 16th hole set up the finish.

Love and Kite finished the three-day event at 25-under, each earning $125,000.

Under the scramble format, each player drives on each hole and the best drive is selected. Each player then played a second shot from the spot where the selected drive lay, and the best second shot is selected. The process is repeated until the hole is completed.

Second-round leaders Chip Beck and Ben Crenshaw took a bogey-5 at the par 4 18th hole to fall into fifth place with a 23-under 193.

"We both felt going into this tournament that we had an excellent chance to win this tournament," said Kite.

Love eagled the par 5, 522-yard 11th hole after knocking his second shot, a 6-iron, to within 12 feet of the hole.

"Tom putted well on the front side and I putted well on the back side," said Love. "We could have made a few more putts but we either lipped them out or just barely missed."

Love and Kite combined for two eagles and nine birdies in their round.

undefeated, untied teams in the country and ranked fourth," Slocum said. "I think a lot of credit has to be given when you ... win every game and not have a slip up."

But Slocum said he doesn't worry about the polls because "we have no control over it."

Miami remained a near-unanimous choice at No. 1 after beating Syracuse 16-10. The Hurricanes, who close their regular season at San Diego State next Saturday, received 61 first-place votes and 1,549 points from a nationwide panel of writers and broadcasters.

The other first-place vote went to Alabama, which had the weekend off. The Crimson Tide plays Auburn on Thursday, then meets Florida in the Southeastern Conference championship game Dec. 5.

Idle Notre Dame (8-1-1) moved up two spots to No. 5, and Florida (8-2) rose three notches to No. 6 after beating Vanderbilt 41-21.

Michigan (8-0-3) dropped one place to No. 7 after tying Ohio State 13-13, Syracuse (9-2) stayed No. 8, idle Georgia (8-2) jumped one spot to No. 9, and Colorado (9-1-1) climbed one notch to No. 10 following a 31-10 victory over Iowa State.

Washington is 11th, followed by Nebraska, North Carolina State, Stanford, Ohio State, Mississippi State, Boston College, Tennessee, Southern Cal, North Carolina, Washington State, Penn State, Arizona, Mississippi and Brigham Young.

Washington (9-2) plunged six spots after losing to Washington State 42-23, and Arizona (6-4-1) fell seven places to No. 23 after falling to Arizona State 7-6.

Washington State (8-3), which fell out of the Top 25 last week, moved back in after upsetting Washington. BYU (8-4) also climbed into the rankings after defeating Utah 31-22.

Kansas (7-4) and Wake Forest (7-4) dropped out of the Top 25. Kansas, No. 22 last week, lost to Missouri 22-17. Wake Forest, 25th a week ago, was beaten by North Carolina State 42-14.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Studying new technologies can improve your ability to communicate. Concentrate on making the grade in a demanding job. Terrific career gains are possible, but there is much to learn. Some surprising business opportunities will surface in 1993. Be choosy. The strategic moves you make next August and September could lead to windfall profits or a special inheritance later on. Let mate know that you want to be a full partner in making decisions.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: singer Ruth Ettig, comedian Harpo Marx, outlaw "Billy the Kid", actor Boris Karloff.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Review your life, your accomplishments and anything else that could provide a guidepost to the future. Take your time when making up your mind about a romantic relationship.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Electrifying but pleasant news could put a bounce in your step this morning. Think positive if trying to find a solution to a ticklish problem. There is a way to get what you need.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You could feel uncomfortable about someone's interest in you. Trust your instincts. Be non-committal until you find out more about a business proposal.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Careful handling of financial transactions is essential. Leave nothing to chance. Be wary of a slick competitor. Your associates must be kept happy to ensure their continued cooperation.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Romance heats up. Hoped-for returns on investments could fall short of the mark. Perhaps you are expecting too much too soon. Wait a little while before deciding whether to cut your losses.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A profitable turn of events should make this a wonderful day. Avoid sarcasm in your conversations with co-workers. Your quirky sense of humor could be misunderstood.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): An excellent period for launching new financial projects. You perform more efficiently, thanks to an older person's helpful hint. Keep detailed records of expenses.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be careful not to let success go to your head. Think twice before pulling up stakes. It is probably wiser to stay put for the next few months. Pursue an artistic hobby.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Do not overlook the interests of your allies when it comes to financial manipulations. Ignoring their priorities could cause a serious rift.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Those in science, journalism or the arts should have an especially rewarding week. Make certain you have a contingency plan in case of an emergency. Double-check any child-care arrangements.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A good day's work should add up to higher financial returns. A philosophical difference of opinion could inflame passions. Reason wins the day.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You have an opportunity to view your life from a totally different perspective. Impending changes could be a source of concern. Eventually they will bring you greater happiness.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K52 ♡A1074 ◇82 ♣K1087
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
2 ♡*	2 ♠	Pass	?

*—Weak
What do you bid now?
A.—Partner must have a fair six-card spade suit and reasonable values to overcall freely at the two-level. It looks as if your hands are going to fit well, and we would not want to put partner under pressure. Bid four spades.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AKQJ5 ♡A8 ◇KJ104 ♣A7
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
2 ♣*	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	3 ♡	Pass
3 NT	Pass	4 ◇	Pass

*—Artificial and forcing
—Negative
What do you bid now?
A.—Although partner could not make a positive response to your demand bid, it is not too much to expect him to hold the king of hearts and queen of diamonds, with 10 or 11 cards in the red suits. You need no more than that to have play for slam, so bid six diamonds.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠7 ♡KQ64 ◇Q75 ♣A10763
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
1 NT	Pass	2 ♡	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—You have a dead minimum and, since you have limited your hand with your one-no-trump rebid, partner's two hearts is not forcing. However, your support for partner's second suit is simply too good to suppress. Raise to three hearts.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KJ109 ♡J1086 ◇J1052 ♣8
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	2 ◇	?

What do you bid now?
A.—With only six high-card points, it might seem that a free raise to two hearts adequately describes your holding. But the point count is deceptive here. It looks as if partner is very short in diamonds and the hands are going to fit well. We would venture four hearts, and expect to make it.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AJ106542 ♡6 ◇A73 ♣72
What is your opening bid?
A.—There are those who might look at the seven-card spade suit and decide to preempt with three spades, but we think the hand is far too strong for any preemptive action. It's worth at least 12 points, counting distribution and, with two defensive tricks, our choice would be one spade.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K8 ♡K7 ◇Q9764 ♣8642
Partner opens the bidding with one no trump. What do you respond?
A.—The textbook bid with eight points is to make an invitational raise to two no trump. However, the issue here is not so much the strength of partner's hand as what North has in diamonds. Therefore, we don't mind if you elected to jump to three no trump, or even if you pass. At last, a question where no matter what you do meets with our approval!

Conductor Solti receives fitting 80th birthday present: concerto

CHICAGO — Legendary conductor Sir Georg Solti received a fitting 80th birthday present, a concerto written just for him.

Solti, music director laureate of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, stepped on stage Saturday night at Orchestra Hall expecting to conduct.

Instead, composer Pierre Boulez seated the maestro and conducted a four-minute piece titled "Derive 3." The orchestra commissioned Boulez to write the piece, which ended with eight chimes, one for every decade of Solti's life.

The celebration actually came a month late. Solti was born in Hungary on Oct. 21, 1912.

Solti was full-time conductor of the orchestra from 1969 to 1991 and has won 29 Grammys.

RADNOR, Pa. — Roseanne Arnold said no pressure was necessary to get her husband's new show, "Jackie Thomas," on the ABC schedule following her own hit series.

Arnold

Bob Iger, president of ABC Entertainment, told TV Guide in the Nov. 28 issue that when Tom Arnold's show wasn't put on the fall schedule, the Arnolds were "passionate" in arguing for it.

Roseanne Arnold gave a different version.

"Hey, I didn't have to hold a gun to anybody's head. I'm too powerful," she said.

DEADWOOD, S.D. — Kevin Costner, who owns a restaurant and casino here with his brother, said he wants to add a hotel and railroad line for tourists.

Costner wants to build a $30 million resort and convention center, but that hinges on increasing betting limits in Deadwood from $5, Costner said Thursday on David Letterman's show.

Costner operates the Midnight Star casino and restaurant in Deadwood, in the Black Hills of western South Dakota. He told Letterman that gambling in the city was "really nickel-and-dime — that's not to put it down."

Deadwood legalized gambling in 1989. Costner became familiar with the town while filming "Dances With Wolves."

"I missed the ground floor on everything, and I thought to myself, 'I want to stay here.' I want to have a gambling thing, have a restaurant, a bordello if I could have one," he said, drawing a laugh from the audience.

NEW YORK — Ray Walston, better known as "My Favorite Martian," has a new movie and a new television series.

Walston, 78, is curmudgeonly Judge Bones on the CBS show "Picket Fences" and an elderly farmhand in the movie "Of Mice and Men."

He said he regrets not having a bigger career.

"I can kick myself now for not having a plan," Walston said in the Nov. 30 issue of People magazine.

He said he's still amazed by the popularity of "My Favorite Martian," the 1960s television series about a reporter, played by Bill Bixby, and his extraterrestrial "Uncle Martin."

Walston said he auditioned and accepted the role for the money. But after just four episodes, he recalled, "I thought, 'What am I doing here? I'm running around with two pieces of wire coming out of my head. I must be crazy.'"

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. — Jay Leno rolled through town in a convertible to help celebrate the Corvette's 40th birthday.

More than 50,000 people participated in the three-day celebration in the Southern California desert, and more than $80,000 was raised for the National Corvette Museum in Bowling Green, Ky.

Corvette enthusiasts from as far away as England, Australia, Hong Kong and Brazil showed up for the festivities.

Leno drove a blue Corvette ZR-1 in Saturday's parade of more than 500 of the Chevrolet Corvettes through the desert community.

MERIDIAN, Miss. — Best-selling author John Grisham took a ribbing from some old friends as guest of honor at a charity roast.

Ron Polk, the baseball coach at Mississippi State, recalled Grisham's days on the diamond as a student there.

"You know, he's been a baseball player, an attorney and a politician, and now he's a writer. He's going backwards," Polk said jokingly.

The $50-a-plate roast on Friday raised money for the Trinity Dyslexia Clinic.

One of Grisham's books, "The Firm," is being made into a movie starring Tom Cruise.

Polk said Grisham wasn't much of a baseball player.

"In his first year of coaching his son's Little League team, they finished just like you would have expected — dead last. I guess some people never learn — not even the hard way."

Prices retreat

West Texas Intermediate for December delivery went off the board at $20.40 a barrel, down 14 cents, on the New York Mercantile Exchange after swinging in a broad range due to volatility associated with its expiration. It traded as high as $20.57 and as low as $20.30.

January crude deliveries finished 1 cent lower at $20.56 a barrel.

Local crude purchasers such as Scurlock Permian lowered their posted price 25 cents to $19 per barrel.

Natural gas for January delivery dropped 0.7 cent to $2.155 per thousand cubic feet.

Gas prices dip

LOS ANGELES — Gas prices dropped at the pump during the past two weeks because oversupplied refineries charged retailers less, an industry analyst said Sunday.

The overall average price of all grades of gasoline, including taxes, was $1.194 per gallon on Nov. 20, a drop of 0.74 cent per gallon from the Nov. 6 figure, according to the Lundberg survey of 12,000 gas stations nationwide.

At self-serve pumps, the average per-gallon price of regular unleaded gasoline was $1.137, middle unleaded was $1.233, premium unleaded was $1.312 and regular leaded was $1.147.

At full-serve pumps, regular unleaded was $1.395, middle unleaded was $1.463, premium unleaded was $1.545 and leaded was $1.469.

Stocks gain

NEW YORK — Stock prices posted a moderate gain Friday as traders reassessed the prospects for a stronger economy.

As Wall Streeters make their plans and forecasts for 1993, the common assumption is that the economy has begun a gradual improvement from the painfully slow progress of recent years.

Some of those expectations suffered a setback Thursday in the form of government reports showing stubborn weakness in the job and housing markets.

Brokers said it was hard to discern any major shifts in sentiment today because of activity prompted by monthly expirations of stock-index options and options on individual stocks.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 17.83 points to 3,227.36, reducing its loss for the week to 5.67 points.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by more than 3 to 2 in the daily tally on the New York Stock Exchange, with 1,088 up, 700 down and 578 unchanged.

The NYSE's composite index gained 1.53 to 234.78.

Oil cartel faces contentious meeting

■ OPEC faces problems of weak prices, political squabbling among members.

By Dirk Beveridge
Associated Press writer

LONDON — OPEC faces the unpleasant task this week of tackling a combination of chronic problems: weak oil prices and political squabbling among its members.

Amid perceptions that a world glut of oil is building, OPEC has seen prices slide in recent weeks to more than $2 per barrel below the oil cartel's elusive target of $21 per barrel.

But members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries — excluding Iraq — are pumping too much oil, and many analysts doubt OPEC has the will power to impose quotas that will prop up the price.

Recent estimates show OPEC pumping about 25.3 million barrels of crude oil daily, well above its official limit of 24.2 million. The combination of plentiful oil supplies, sluggish demand during the recession and a lack of severe weather this autumn left the cartel's average oil price at $18.69 per barrel last week.

The OPEC price is based on several types of crudes and often runs between $1 and $2 less than premium crude prices often quoted in the United States and Western Europe.

Any efforts to cut output at the meeting beginning Wednesday in Vienna could be hampered by political bickering among the 13 OPEC members.

"There is so much ill feeling right now, I think they're going to have a hard time just saying 'good morning' to each other, must less 'What are we going to do?'" said Shahrokh Nikkhah, a London-based executive vice president of Refco Inc., a big commodities brokerage.

Many experts see the coming meeting as a showdown between Saudi Arabia, OPEC's dominant member and by far the largest producer, and No. 2 producer Iran, a traditional price hawk that has stirred concerns among Persian Gulf neighbors with its recent acquisition of a Russian submarine.

Iran's possession of the Kilo-class submarine — and two more that are on order — could be troublesome should hostilities break out again in the gulf. When Iraq and Iran were trying to sink one another's tankers in their drawn-out war of the 1980s, Iran used mines and small ships that were not as threatening as the Russian-built submarine.

Iran has also been involved in a heated dispute with the United Arab Emirates, another OPEC member, over Abu Musa, an island near the mouth of the strategically critical Strait of Hormuz, the gateway to the rich gulf oilfields.

Iran and the UAE have claimed joint jurisdiction over the island, but Iran this year has been attempting to take complete control.

"There is definitely a new tension in the region and it is not Iraq this time. It is Iran," said Thomas P. Blakeslee, an oil consultant with Brody, White and Co. Inc. in New York.

Meantime, Saudi Arabia and Qatar have been embroiled in disputes over their ill-defined border and tiny Ecuador is threatening to give up its full membership in OPEC.

With all these tensions to confront in addition to addressing the falling price of oil, OPEC may get one break if it can again put off the politically sensitive issue of letting Iraq back into the market.

Iraq's crude exports have been embargoed by the United Nations since shortly after Saddam Hussein carried out the invasion of neighboring Kuwait on Aug. 2, 1990.

The other OPEC members are Algeria, Gabon, Indonesia, Libya, Nigeria, and Venezuela.

Skinner: U.S. sky may clear for foreigners

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner said Sunday that Congress will eventually clear the way for foreign control of U.S. airlines if American companies are given greater access to international air routes.

Skinner acknowledged that for defense and security purposes, current U.S. law prohibits such foreign ownership of American airlines.

But "I think we will see a time when that ... statutory bar will disappear," Skinner said on ABC-TV's "This Week with David Brinkley."

"Congress will change that. But they're not going to change it until the markets are open and we're treated fairly," Skinner added.

British Airways wants to buy a major stake in financially troubled USAir.

British Airways would pump $750 million into USAir in exchange for 44 percent ownership and 21 percent of the voting stock.

Transportation Secretary Andrew H. Card Jr. has said he will decide by Dec. 24 whether to approve the deal.

Southwestern Bell's move generates gloom, glee

By Lettice Stuart
N.Y. Times News Service

SAN ANTONIO — Two months ago Southwestern Bell Corp. sent spirits flying in San Antonio, spread dejection in the St. Louis area and demonstrated again Mexico's importance to the economy of the Southwest.

The mixed reaction came on the heels of an announcement by Edward E. Whitacre Jr., its chairman, the $9.3 billion communications giant, which has had a long presence in St. Louis, would move its corporate headquarters and 500 jobs to San Antonio.

The decision to move to this city of 955,000 residents was based in large part on San Antonio's close ties with Mexico, where Southwestern Bell has a major investment in the Mexican telephone company.

Whitacre said the move would also put the company in the midst of its largest customer base. Texas accounts for almost 60 percent of Southwestern Bell's 12 million access lines in a five-state area that embraces Missouri, Oklahoma, Kansas and Arkansas. By the year 2000 the company expects 70 percent of its business to be in Texas.

News of the relocation — the largest corporate move in San Antonio's history — has electrified this city's real estate and business communities. Southwestern Bell already has leased a nearly empty downtown office building and the influx of so many home buyers is expected to jump-start the city's long-depressed residential market.

The Texas Department of Commerce estimates that the move will have an overall economic impact in Texas of more than $140 million a year.

Mayor Nelson W. Wolff called the news of the relocation the most significant economic development for the city since the opening of the University of Texas Health Science Center in 1968.

San Antonio was chosen over three other Texas cities, Dallas, Fort Worth and Austin, primarily because it is 150 miles from the Mexican border — closer than the others — and because of its cultural and historic ties with its southern neighbor.

Quail, deer create S. Texas job boom

By Buddy Gough
Hearst News Service

SAN ANTONIO — South Texas is in the midst of a jobs boom that owes nothing to Washington and everything to a bumper quail crop and a healthy deer herd.

Estimates of the statewide economic impact of hunting range to several billion dollars. The sport easily pumps hundreds of millions of dollars a year into South Texas.

With one of the best deer and quail seasons in years under way (deer season in South Texas began Saturday) more people are working.

No one appreciates that more than Bob Nagel, owner of Nagel Gun & Sports Shop in San Antonio.

He said receipts generated by hunting seasons normally account for 70 percent of his store's annual sales.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Dividend reinvestment means future income

By Bill Doyle

Q: As a military man who has moved quite often, I've always invested in the electric and gas companies to which I've paid monthly bills. The dividends were reinvested and, over the years, I had sort of my own mutual fund. I got the extra satisfaction of feeling a small part of each utility bill I paid went for my future.

Doyle

Now that I am retired, I take the dividends by check and enjoy that supplement to my military retirement pay. Do you agree that dividend reinvestment plans — DRPs, as you call them — are good ways to build income for the future?

A: Absolutely! This column has always favored DRPs for exactly the reasons you cite.

A DRP provides an easy and systematic way to invest for the years ahead. A stockholder in a company with such a plan can have his or her dividends used to purchase more full and fractional shares. As long as the DRP participant does not need the dividends, that money can be reinvested and build wealth.

Then, when retirement time arrives, the dividend reinvestments can be halted and dividend checks start rolling in.

Many wise investors have built up wealth and retirement security by going the DRP route. I take comfort in the thought I started them in that direction.

Q: Do all companies have DRPs?

A: No, but more than 1,000 do. You can get details on DRPs from a number of sources:

- Evergreen Enterprises, P.O. Box 763, Laurel, MD 20725, publishes an excellent DRP directory for $28.95.
- Standard & Poor's Corp., 25 Broadway, New York, NY 10004, sells one for $39.95.
- The National Association of Investors Corp., 1515 E. 11-Mile Road, Royal Oak, MI 48067, has a DRP guide for its members.

DRP details vary among different companies. At most, reinvested dividends are used to buy more whole shares and parts of shares to the third decimal place, but some go to the fourth decimal place.

Costs also differ. Some companies pick up all the DRP expenses. Others levy relatively modest charges, which invariably are lower than an investor would pay by buying an equal amount of stock through a broker. The rationale for the latter is that operating a DRP costs money, which comes out of the corporate treasury, and stockholders who do not participate in the DRP should not share in that expense.

Many DRPs have additional, optional investment features, allowing DRP participants to send in extra money to purchase more shares, above and beyond those bought with reinvested dividends.

In some plans, the reinvested dividends buy shares at a discount — ranging from 1 percent to 10 percent — from the going market price. A smaller number offer discounts on optional additional investments.

Before you sign up for a DRP, take time to study the prospectus the company is required to send to you. You'll find all the details there.

Q: I understand that more than 90 companies allow individual investors to make their initial purchases of stock directly before signing up for the companies' DRPs.

Do you have a list of those companies?

A: Your understanding is far too large. The Evergreen Enterprise DRP directory lists seven such companies: Atmos Energy, Central Vermont Public Service, Exxon, W.R. Grace, Johnson Controls, Proctor & Gamble and Texaco.

Besides those, a number of public utilities have arrangements through which customers can buy company stock by adding money when paying electric and gas bills. At some banks, you can do the same thing when paying your credit card bill. Other banks permit this through automatic deductions from checking and savings accounts.

Mullin rips Nets for 34

Associated Press

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Chris Mullin scored 34 points and Tim Hardaway added 27 and 15 assists Sunday night as the Golden State Warriors beat the New Jersey Nets for the 10th strsight time at the Meadowlands Arena, 114-101.

The Warrios, who had lost six of their previous seven, led 57-53 early in the third period before breaking the game open with a 12-4 spurt that included five points by Billy Owens and four by Mullin, giving them a 69-57 lead.

The Nets, who begin a four-game West Coast trip Tuesday in Seattle, staged a late comeback sparked by Drazen Petrovic and Kenny Anderson.

New Jersey, which has now lost its last three games at home, reeled off eight straight points to pull to 102-97 on Anderson's layup with 3:06 remaining.

Trail Blazers 115, Pistons 90

PORTLAND, Ore. — Cliff Robinson came off the bench to score 20 points and Rod Strickland had a triple-double, lifting Portland over Detroit.

The Trail Blazers (7-0) remained the only unbeaten NBA team. The win also gave coach Rick Adelman his 200th victory in just over three seasons.

Joe Dumars had 19 points to lead the Pistons (2-7), who have lost five in a row and are in last place in the Central Division.

Strickland, also a reserve, came off the bench for 11 points, 13 assists and 10 rebounds. Clyde Drexler added 19 points and Terry Porter 17 for Portland.

NBA Roundup

Bulls 128, Suns 111

PHOENIX — Michael Jordan scored 18 of his 40 points in the first quarter and Chicago made 18 of its first 22 shots as the Bulls beat Phoenix.

B.J. Armstrong added 19 points and Scottie Pippen 18 for the Bulls, who made it five victories in six road games this season. The Bulls were coming off a 120-118 overtime loss to the Los Angeles Lakers on Friday.

Charles Barkley led the Suns with 22 points and Dan Majerle added 20. Point guard Kevin Johnson, who came off the injured list Saturday night and scored 10 points in a loss to the Los Angeles Clippers, had 15.

Jordan, who had the 23rd 50-point game of his career against the Lakers, seemed set for another against the Suns. He had 37 points by the end of the third quarter, but saw little action in the final period.

The game was tied 10 times and the lead changed hands six times before Chicago began a 7-0 run with a pair of Scott Williams baskets in the final four minutes of the opening period.

Jordan capped the run and made it 33-26 with a technical free throw with 2:40 to go.

It was the Suns' first loss in four games in the $89 million, 19,023-seat America West Arena, which opened last spring.

Pistons set meeting with Rodman

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. (AP) — The Detroit Pistons are expected to meet this week with Dennis Rodman's agents to discuss the problems that have cast the defensive star's career into limbo.

Neil Draddy and Bill Pollack, Rodman's agents, asked for the meeting after Rodman was suspended Friday, The Detroit News reported Sunday.

"They want to sit down and try to resolve something," said Billy McKinney, Detroit's director of player personnel. "There was some progress in discussions in him wanting to play.

"Our big concern is, is it fact or is it fiction? At this point it is a little difficult for us to be optimistic or want to believe what he is telling us."

The 6-foot-8 power forward was suspended Friday, retroactive to Thursday night's 99-87 loss at Denver. Based on his $2.35 million salary, the suspension will cost Rodman $28,659 per game.

There has been no word whether Rodman will appeal the suspension.

"If you are under contract you are obligated to render those services," McKinney said. "I mean, what were we supposed to do? This is proper procedure. Will this wake him up? I don't know."

Rodman has not played since the Pistons' victory over Miami on Nov. 12. He has complained of a sore right knee, but team officials say exams have turned up no physical problems.

Rodman, struggling through a bitter divorce, didn't travel with the Pistons on their West Coast road trip, which concluded Sunday night at Portland.

"The club, truthfully, has been about as supportive as they can be," Pistons president Tom Wilson told Detroit television station WDIV on Friday. "But it is a major, major distraction for us and we have to move on."

Fresno St. gets a bowl

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Fresno State has accepted an invitation to play in the Freedom Bowl at Anaheim Stadium on Dec. 29.

The announcement was made Sunday by Don Anderson, executive director of the Orange County Sports Association.

"This is a dream come true for our program," said Bulldogs coach Jim Sweeney, whose team defeated San Diego State 45-41 Saturday.

Fresno State's opponent will be a Pacific-10 Conference school, likely Southern Cal (6-3-1, 5-3 Pac-10).

The Bulldogs, who lead the nation in scoring with an average of 40.3 points per game, can share the Western Athletic Conference title with Hawaii and Brigham Young with a win next week at Texas-El Paso.

Fresno State (7-4, 5-2 WAC) joined the WAC this season after 23 years in the Big West, formerly known as the Pacific Coast Athletic Association.

Sweeney will coach the Bulldogs in their first bowl appearance outside of Fresno since 1971.

The Bulldogs have won their last four bowl appearances at the California Bowl in Fresno.

Becker wins ATP crown

FRANKFURT, Germany (AP) — The day belonged to Boris Becker, and his victory over Jim Courier made the celebration perfect.

On Sunday, Becker beat the world's top-ranked player 6-4, 6-3, 67-5 to win the season-ending ATP Tour World Championship, then observed his 25th birthday.

The 9,000 fans in Frankfurt's Festhalle greeted Becker's entrance by singing "Happy Birthday."

He paid them back by playing nearly flawless tennis, giving them what they had been awaiting for three years. Becker won the select-field tournament in 1988, but this was his first title since the event moved to his native Germany in 1990.

"I am playing better than probably at any other time in my career," Becker said. "It's probably my biggest win in two years."

At the end, as Becker stood in a spot of light in a dimmed hall, a large birthday cake in the shape of a tennis racket was wheeled in while Stevie Wonder's "Happy Birthday" blared from the speakers.

Becker had trouble blowing out all the candles, then cut a piece of the cake and ate it to the cheers of fans.

The victory, his fifth tournament title this season, left him 6-0 in his career against the American.

"He just beat me every time we played ... fair and square," said Courier.

Longhorns win SWC volleyball

AUSTIN (AP) — Top-seeded Texas defeated third-seeded Texas Tech 15-6, 15-12, 15-3 Sunday to win the Southwest Conference women's volleyball championship.

The Lady Longhorns (26-4) advanced to the NCAA tournament with the victory. They close the regular season Saturday against No. 21 Washington State at the Rec. Sports Center in Austin.

Texas was led by senior outsider hitter Errica Hibben's 10 kills in 18 attempts. She also recorded four service aces and three block solos.

Seles easily powers way past Navratilova for Virginia Slims Championship

NEW YORK (AP) — There was only one word for it: awesome.

In one of the most dominant performances in women's tennis, top-seeded Monica Seles swept aside Martina Navratilova on Sunday to capture her third consecutive Virginia Slims Championship.

It was an uncanny display of shot-making as Seles posted a 7-5, 6-3, 6-1 victory in the $3 million, season-ending tournament.

Navratilova, after all, played nearly flawless tennis. Yet, except for a brief moment in the first set, she never was really in the running for the $250,000 winner's purse. Instead, the woman who has won more than $18 million in her career had to be content with $120,000 for being runner-up for the second straight year.

Seles showed the single-session record Madison Square Garden crowd of 18,257 why she is the world's top-ranked woman player. For on this day, the incredible shots were routine; the impossible ones came only every other game.

"She's just too good," Navratilova said. "She didn't make any unforced errors."

After all those years of playing second fiddle to Chris Evert, the 35-year-old Navratilova was the crowd favorite this time. And when she picked up her post-match check, she cried when she received a three-minute standing ovation.

Navratilova was making her 14th appearance in the Virginia Slims Championships.

Seles, who added yet another trophy to go with the ones she collected at the Australian, French and U.S. Opens, said: "It's a great way to end it up.

NIT gets semifinal teams it wanted

NEW YORK (AP) — Christmas came before Thanksgiving for the preseason NIT.

The tournament that starts the college basketball season went through two rounds and came up with the four semifinal teams it wanted.

Fourth-ranked Indiana meets No. 9 Florida State in one game Wednesday night at Madison Square Garden, and No. 6 Seton Hall faces No. 24 UCLA in the other. The winners meet for the title on Friday night.

So the 16-team field was whittled down to the coach everyone loves to watch, whether you're for or against him, Bob Knight of Indiana; a team that has looked impressive despite its point guard still calling signals for Florida State's football team; a program probably as deep in tradition as any, UCLA; and the local favorite Seton Hall, whose campus sits just across the Hudson River in New Jersey.

"The final four in this tournament is always great," Seton Hall coach P.J. Carlesimo said Saturday after his Pirates became the last of the semifinalist. "We must be doing something right. We're looking forward to spending Thanksgiving in New York."

Seton Hall beat Tennessee 72-64 to earn the right for the frequent flier-less road trip. The Pirates again had trouble rebounding with the Volunteers, finishing with a 40-35 advantage, 23-11 on the offensive end. In the 75-54 opening-round victory over Delaware, Seton Hall was on the wrong end of a 48-34 count, 28-10 on the offensive end.

"I'm pleased with our overall defense, but I'm concerned because we've been getting outquicked to the boards," Carlesimo said.

Seven-foot-2 junior Luther Wright made the first start of his career against Tennessee because of an injury to forward Arturas Karnishovas and finished with nine rebounds. But the Volunteers repeatedly had second chances in an overall poor shooting effort.

"Both those teams extended us out to the foul line," said Jerry Walker, Seton Hall's top rebounder, who had nine boards. "They get a running start to the boards when they do that, and we just have to start doing a better job of boxing out."

UCLA, which beat Texas-El Paso 73-72 in the quarterfinals, isn't very big. But the Bruins have some excellent athletes who do a good job on the offensive boards.

Mitchell Butler, a 6-5 guard, had 16 points and a career-high 11 rebounds for the Bruins. UCLA got a career-high 19 points from Ed O'Bannon, the sophomore swingman trying to bounce back from a horrible knee injury that caused him to miss the entire 1990-91 season.

"He crashes the boards hard," O'Bannon said of Butler. "He's very aggressive. Rebounding is just another phase of the great game he plays."

Carlesimo knows UCLA can do what Delaware and Tennessee did, but on a higher level.

"They have a number of great athletes in the 6-5 to 6-8 range and Richard Petruska in a legitmate force in the middle," Carlesimo said of the 6-10 transfer from Loyola Marymount. "We have to work on rebounding, but I'm still pleased by what we've done in two short weeks."

Karnishovas has a partial tear of the medial collateral ligament in his left knee and is questionable for Wednesday night.

Indiana and Florida State won easily in the quarterfinals, although Indiana's victory didn't appear that way on the scoreboard.

The Hoosiers led No. 17 Tulane by 36 points in the second half before the reserves let the lead slip to eight on the way to the 102-92 victory.

"I've always operated under the theory that if we get to a point in a game where everybody should play, then everybody's going to play," Knight said of mass substitutions in the second half. "I would have liked to have had our regulars play more minutes in the second half, but it was just totally out of the question that they do."

Florida State took control early and didn't let it slip away in its 109-86 victory over No. 19 Iowa State.

SMU seniors bring wins to program

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — They arrived at Southern Methodist University in an almost impossible situation. They left winners.

The 30 seniors who entered the SMU program after it had been shut down in 1987 and 1988 for NCAA rules violations completed their four years of eligibility with a 24-19 victory over Arkansas.

It also ended SMU's season at 5-6 after going 2-9, 1-10 and 1-10 the last three years.

"Our players never thought they couldn't win," Coach Tom Rossley said. "The big difference for us this season has been a change in attitude, believing somehow that we can win. That's the biggest thing our seniors have left for others to follow. A great, great attitude."

SMU scored first on a 38-yard field goal by Russell Anderson. Arkansas answered with a 38-yarder by Todd Wright, both in the opening quarter.

A 19-yard scoring pass from Dan Freiburger to Jason Wolf near the end of the first quarter gave SMU a 10-3 lead. Oscar Malone's 11-yard touchdown run in the second quarter made it 10-10 at the half.

Arkansas' only lead came in the third quarter on a 29-yard field goal by Wright. The Mustangs took control in the fourth.

Freiburger connected with Korey Beard for a 6-yard touchdown, then with less than three minutes to play, linebacker Drew Randall picked up a fumbled punt and ran it 20 yards into the end zone to put the Mustangs up 24-13 at the 2:29 mark.

A celebration penalty and a kickoff out of bounds put Arkansas at the 50 to open the next series. On the ninth play from there, quarterback Barry Lunney Jr. hit Tracy Caldwell for a 15-yard touchdown. A two-point conversion attempt failed.

Joe Kines, Arkansas' interim head coach, said he was proud of his team's effort, but had praise for SMU.

"Give SMU and Tom Rossley credit," Kines said. "They never quit. This was a great victory for them. Something good happened to those SMU seniors who hung in there all through their problems."

Kines said Sunday that some of his players may have been trying too hard.

"Their intensity was good, but they weren't as relaxed at key points. They pressed a little more than they had to," Kines said. "I told them to just go out and play. We had our opportunities and chances but couldn't cash in."

"It didn't matter who we were playing today," SMU senior inside receiver Wolf said after the game. "We were determined to win. And it showed."

The four-game improvement over last season's 1-10 record is the best since Hayden Fry led SMU to an 8-3 season in 1968 and a 3-7 mark a year earlier.

"Last night our seniors got together and they talked about their career as a book," Rossley said in a post-game interview. "They were missing one chapter. This is the final chapter in the book. What a way to end it."

"You can't write a better ending than this. It was a great way to end our senior season," Randall said.
