State agencies asked to submit budget cuts

AUSTIN (AP) — House Speaker Joe Straus and Lt. Gov. David Dewhurst asked state agencies Monday to cut about 2.5 percent from their current spending in an effort to avoid mandatory funding slashes in an increasingly tight state budget.

In a letter dated Friday but sent Monday, Straus and Dewhurst asked all heads of state agencies to submit their recommendations to cut costs in the remainder of the 2009 fiscal year without cutting into essential programs like education and children's health insurance.

FEMA gets fair marks for ice storm response

EDDYVILLE, Ky. (AP) — In the first real test of the Obama administration's ability to respond to a disaster, Kentucky officials are giving the federal government good marks for its response to a deadly ice storm.

Yet more than 300,000 residents remained without power Monday and some areas had yet to see aid workers nearly a week after the storm, a fact not lost on some local authorities.

"We haven't seen FEMA. They haven't been here," said Jaime Green, a spokeswoman for the emergency operations center in Lyon County, about 95 miles northwest of Nashville, Tenn.

NATO: Members may use Iran for Afghan supplies

KABUL (AP) — NATO would not oppose individual member nations making deals with Iran to supply their forces in Afghanistan as an alternative to using increasingly risky routes from Pakistan, the alliance's top military commander said Monday.

Gen. John Craddock's comments came just days after NATO's secretary general, Jaap de Hoop Scheffer, urged the U.S. and other members of the Western military alliance to engage with Iran to combat Taliban militants in Afghanistan.

"Those would be national decisions. Nations should act in a manner that is consistent with their national interest and with their ability to resupply their forces," Craddock, an American who is NATO's supreme allied commander, told The Associated Press. "I think it is purely up to them."

Obama faces stimulus bill revisions

By DAVID ESPO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Republicans circulated a sweeping plan to drive down the cost of mortgages by expanding the federal government's role in the industry, officials said Monday night as debate opened on an economic stimulus bill at the top of President Barack Obama's agenda.

The emerging proposal also relies on a bigger and more widely available tax break for homebuyers than is now available, those officials added as Senate Republicans staked their claim to a different type of economic recovery measure than Democrats and the administration favor.

Democrats already are under pressure from moderates in their own party to scale back spending in the $885 billion bill, and Obama met with party leaders at the White House late in the day to discuss strategy.

"What we can't do is let very modest differences get in the way" of swift enactment of the legislation, Obama said several hours earlier as new layoffs rippled through the economy and the Commerce Department reported an unexpectedly large sixth straight drop in personal spending.

In the Capitol, Republicans said their goal was the change the bill, not to block it. "Nobody that I know of is trying to keep a package from passing," said Sen. Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, the Republican leader.

"We need to fix housing first," he said. Republicans are expected to seek a vote on their proposals this week as part of the debate on the overall stimulus measure.

Officials said the GOP was coalescing behind a proposal designed to give banks an incentive to make loans at rates currently estimated at 4 percent to 4.5 percent. Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, which were seized by the federal government in September, would be required to purchase the mortgages once banks have made them to consumers.

Officials said loans to credit-worthy borrowers on primary residences with a mortgage of up to $625,000 would qualify, including those seeking to refinance their current loans.

Separately, Republican officials said they intended to press for a $15,000 tax credit for homebuyers through the end of the year. Current law permits a $7,500 tax break and limits it to first-time homebuyers.

Probiotics provide natural remedy for improving digestive, immune system health

By CAYLOR BALLINGER
STAFF WRITER

Many dairy products contain a natural ingredient to help regulate the human body: bacteria.

Dr. Michael San Francisco, a biology professor and Honors College associate dean at Texas Tech, said the thought of consuming bacteria may not appeal to everyone, but several strains of microorganisms can be beneficial.

"You have more bacteria on your body than cells," San Francisco said, "and it is just a few bacteria that give bacteria a bad name."

Products such as yogurt, cheese, ice cream and baby formula may contain healthy bacteria called probiotics, which have grown recently in popularity.

In 2008, about 231 new probiotic-containing products became available to consumers, compared to the 34 products available in 2005, according to the market-research firm Datamonitor PLC.

But what are probiotics?

The World Health Organization defines probiotics as "live microorganisms, which, when administered in adequate amounts, confer a health benefit on the host."

Probiotics are one way to keep a regular digestive system and improve the body's immune system, San Francisco said. Many Eastern cultures use natural probiotics in combination with other elements of a balanced diet to improve health.

"People need to eat more whole grain, fresh food, and lots of good bacteria," he said.

As people become more nutritionally aware, they realize "you are what you eat," San Francisco said, but he suggests consumers only buy FDA approved products.

"Please be smart about what you put into your body," San Francisco said.

Mallory Boylan, a nutrition professor at Tech, said probiotic microorganisms can provide several health benefits if consumed properly.

"Most people do not realize that each strain in probiotics is different and usually does something different unless the time is taken to find out about different strains in products," she said.

Manufacturers recently have increased adding probiotics to products to entice consumers with the added health benefits, Boylan said. Labels appear on many shelves promoting benefits of a regular digestive system and more balanced lifestyle.

Americans' spending on probiotic supplements nearly tripled from 1994 to 2003, according to the National Center for Complementary and Alternative Medicine.

While the attractive banners may be true in some cases, she said, most nutritionists warn consumers to read the label carefully.

Boylan said the advertiser's job is to sell a product and consumers need to be smart about what they buy.

"People do not always know how to read a label," Boylan said, "but it is the consumer's responsibility to be informed."

US Senate confirms Holder as first black AG

By LARRY MARGASAK
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Eric Holder won Senate confirmation Monday as the nation's first African-American attorney general, after supporters from both parties touted his dream resume and easily overcame Republican concerns over his commitment to fight terrorism and his willingness to back the right to keep and bear arms.

The vote was 75-21.

Holder's chief supporter, Sen. Patrick Leahy, said the confirmation was a fulfillment of civil rights leader Martin Luther King's dream that everyone would be judged by the content of their character.

"Come on the right side of history," said Leahy, D-Vt., chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

Holder becomes the only black in President Barack Obama's Cabinet. Three other African-Americans were named to top administration positions, but are not Cabinet secretaries.

Holder was a federal prosecutor, judge and the No. 2 Justice Department official in the Clinton administration. Even his critics agreed that Holder was well-qualified, but they questioned his positions and independence.

The debate turned partisan in its first moments, when Leahy, expressed anger that a few Republicans demanded a pledge from Holder that he wouldn't prosecute intelligence agents who participated in harsh interrogations.

Leahy singled out Texas Republican John Cornyn as one who wanted to "turn a blind eye to possible law-breaking before investigating whether it occurred."

"No one should be seeking to trade a vote for such a pledge," Leahy said.

When Cornyn rose to announce his vote against Holder, he did not make such a demand. However, he accused the nominee of changing his once-supportive position — on the need to detain terrorism suspects without all the rights of the Geneva Convention — to one of harshly criticizing Bush administration's counterterrorism policies.

"His contrasting positions from 2002 to 2008 make me wonder if this is the same person," Cornyn said. "It makes me wonder what he truly believes."

Cornyn and Sen. Tom Coburn said Holder was hostile to the right of individuals to own guns, despite a Supreme Court ruling last June affirming the right to have weapons for self-defense in the home.

Holder said at his confirmation hearings: "I understand that the Supreme Court has spoken." But he added that some restrictions on guns could still be legal.

Lubbock Fire Dept. not expecting problems similar to Atlanta dept.

By MIKE GRAHAM
STAFF WRITER

Problems encountered in the Atlanta, Ga., Fire Department staffing Sunday should not occur in Lubbock according to local Fire and Police Department officials.

The City of Atlanta Fire Rescue Department was left understaffed Sunday after 27 firefighters — more than double the normal amount — called in sick, according to a CNN story.

Chris Angerer, deputy chief of the Lubbock Fire Department, said the department is not dealing with job cuts or pay cuts and is hoping to hire 23 new firefighters for new stations.

"We're in the process of hiring through Feb. 6," Angerer said. "Currently, we're eight people down from retirements and we're hiring for our new stations."

The Lubbock Fire Department has 15 fire stations located throughout the city, he said, and a new station is expected to open later this year. There also are plans for a 17th station in the future.

Angerer said the Lubbock Fire Department is required to have a minimum of at least 80 on-duty firefighters during any shift at any given time. The maximum at any given time is 100 firefighters.

He said he has never seen a day when a large proportion of the minimum required staff called in is short of its minimum required on-duty staff, a firefighter might be transferred from a different station so all stations always are at their respective minimum requirements.

To be eligible for employment with the Lubbock Fire Department, he said, those applying must be 19 years old, hold basic firefighter certification and Emergency Medical Technician certification. The training for the certification is available through South Plains College.

The Atlanta department recently cut staff, called a hiring freeze and issued furloughs resulting in an 18 percent pay cut for Atlanta firefighters, according to CNN. Five stations were forced to close Sunday, but as of Monday, all the stations were active.

Officer Jason Cruize with the Lubbock Police Department said the police have a similar strategy if a shift goes below the minimum required staffing.

"We have a minimum of 28 officers per shift," he said. "If we're below that minimum we just call in off-duty officers for the opportunity to earn overtime."

Board of Regents approves selling of bonds to finance construction

By MATT COBB
STAFF WRITER

The Texas Tech Board of Regents Pricing Committee approved the selling of $180 million worth of university bonds to finance construction projects during a teleconference meeting Monday afternoon.

The Revenue Financing System Refunding and Improvement Bonds, Twelfth Series, will finance numerous construction projects throughout the Tech system, said Jim Brunjes, vice chancellor and chief financial officer in the system. Some of the bond money will go toward the construction of the leisure pool and the new Jerry S. Rawls College of Business Administration building.

Tech is selling the bonds at the lowest interest rates in the history of the university, he said, at a 4.25 percent rate. The rate is 0.17 percent lower than its previous record.

"Now, (the lower rate) doesn't sound like much until you start multiplying that by $180 million," Brunjes said. "Then it's a pretty significant savings."

The board passed the original resolution to sell the bonds at a meeting last August, depending on the future market's stability and the interest rate at which they could be sold, he said. The committee officially approved Monday that the market has stabilized, and now is the right time to borrow money.

Six national firms are responsible for underwriting and distributing the bonds, Brunjes said. The bonds are being sold to individual investors, foundations, retailers and other universities.

"When you're selling bonds in this large of an amount, you really do see a lot of institutional investors purchase them in $1 (million) to $10 million chunks," he said.

GRIFFIN

The bonds being sold are tuition-revenue bonds, said Mark Griffin, a regent on the board. Some of the payoff for the bonds will come from students' tuition.

"This is typically how universities finance their construction projects," he said.

Investors consider several factors before purchasing university bonds, Griffin said, and he believes Tech bonds are a safe investment and have a good rate of return.

"(Potential investors) look at the university and their enrollment and decide if it's a good investment," he said.

As of now, all of the bonds have been fully subscribed, Griffin said.

A majority of the $180 million investment should be paid off by 2029.

Mullen: Afghanistan is no Vietnam

WASHINGTON (AP) — The top U.S. military officer cautioned Monday against comparing the Pentagon's renewed focus on Afghanistan to the Vietnam War, citing terrorism and a non-occupation strategy as "dramatic differences" between the two conflicts.

"Afghanistan is much more complex," said Navy Adm. Mike Mullen, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

He added: "I certainly recognize — and having been in Vietnam myself — that there are those who make comparisons. I would be pretty careful about that though, for lots of reasons."

Mullen's comments came as the Pentagon prepares to deploy an additional 15,000 Army and Marine troops to Afghanistan this spring and summer in the Obama administration's military campaign to shut down the Taliban and al-Qaida.

Ultimately, an estimated 60,000 U.S. troops could be in Afghanistan over the next year as Obama starts ordering soldiers from Iraq. There are currently about 32,000 American troops in Afghanistan.

Speaking to a Washington meeting of the Reserve Officers Association, Mullen stopped short of predicting how long U.S. troops would remain in Afghanistan. He said the main difference between Afghanistan and Vietnam is that "we are not an occupying force."

"We have no intention of that," Mullen said. "There isn't any of the 42-plus countries who are there that have, that intention. ... That said, we cannot send a message to the Afghan people that we are."

Lead negotiator in NKorea will be next envoy to Iraq

WASHINGTON (AP) — Christopher Hill, the Bush administration's lead negotiator with North Korea, is the leading candidate to become the next U.S. Ambassador to Iraq, officials said Monday.

Officials familiar with internal Obama administration discussions say that Hill, a career foreign service officer, has emerged as the most likely choice to replace Ryan Crocker as America's top diplomat in Baghdad.

The officials spoke on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to discuss personnel decisions.

It was not immediately clear when the White House might announce Hill's nomination, but President Barack Obama spoke by phone to Iraqi officials earlier Monday, signaling the appointment may be near.

Hill, an expert in European affairs before taking on the North Korea portfolio, has little experience in the Middle East but is highly regarded in the diplomatic community.

Crocker, another career diplomat, is retiring after two years on the job during which he oversaw the civilian component of President George W. Bush's troop build up.

Hill has been the assistant secretary of state for East Asian and Pacific Affairs since April 8, 2005, two months after he was named to lead the U.S. delegation to the so-called six party talks on the North Korean nuclear issue.

Fans remember death of three rock-n-roll legends

MUSICIAN BRIAN MCRAE plays David Box's original Fender Stratocaster at the panel discussion held at the Buddy Holly Center for the 50th anniversary of Buddy Holly's death. David Box went on to replace Buddy Holly in his band The Crickets after his death.

STAFF WRITER

Today marks the 50th anniversary of a single-engine plane crash that instantly killed three rock 'n' roll icons.

But the music of Buddy Holly, J.P. "The Big Bopper" Richardson and Ritchie Valens continue to be remembered by fans and generations of musicians who followed the trio. The Buddy Holly Center in Lubbock began a two-day celebration, "Not Fade Away: Remembering The Day the Music Died," on Monday.

"Keeping the music alive is important because a lot of people around here love music, play music," Curtis Peoples said. "It's a very important part of our Lubbock culture. Keeping dialogue open and remember the past helps propel us into the future."

Peoples, an archivist at the Crossroads of Music Archive at Texas Tech, said Holly became a music icon through his use of drums, bass and electric guitar, which "set the stage for what the '60s became with big rock bands."

Holly was born Charles Hardin

"Buddy" Holley in Lubbock on Sept. 7, 1936, according to the Buddy Holly Center Web site. He was the fourth child and third son and nicknamed Buddy because, as his mother once confided, "Charles Hardin was just too long a name for such a little boy."

Holly, 22, Richardson, 28, and Valens, 17, boarded a plane Feb. 2, 1959 after performing in Clear Lake, Iowa, according to the center's Web site. The 300-mile flight lasted several minutes before crashing into a frozen wheat field where it was found after dawn Feb. 3.

The rock 'n' roll icons' tragic deaths did not diminish their accomplishments, Peoples said. Holly is remembered for his musical arrangement and song writing abilities.

Holly's musical hits include "Peggy Sue," "That'll Be the Day," "Maybe Baby" and "Oh Boy!"

Jacque Bober, curator of Buddy Holly Center in Lubbock, said Holly was an "innovator of rock and roll" and gave inspiration to musicians who followed.

"All of the local talent we have here owe a great deal to him," she said. "He sort of paved the way for them to see they could make it."

Holly also changed the relationship between musicians and record labels.

At the time period Holly began recording music, record companies dictated the terms of agreement to musicians, said Wes Cochran, professor at Tech's School of Law. The terms often included how an artist performed or composed music.

"And that didn't really suit Buddy very well," Cochran said. "He wanted to do his music his way."

Holly left his first record company and sought a different label that would agree to his terms, Cochran said, which paved the way for a number of other artists to do so.

Holly achieved many groundbreaking accomplishments during his lifetime, Peoples said. He took the country and blues sound he grew up with and turned it into a different genre of music.

"For people who are wondering what's all this with Buddy Holly, listen to his music," he said.

Bacteria

When looking for probiotics, she said it is good to know what type of strain you need.

Health habits such as consuming probiotics, fruits and vegetables are usually a lifestyle not easily broken or started, Boylan said, but students may be able to substitute items in their typical diet for items with a higher probiotic concentration.

One of the most common ways to regulate a digestive system is with yogurt, she said, which contains live cultures of bacteria. Commonly found yogurt products such as Dannon and Activia may add extra probiotics for the demands of consumers, while other brands such as Fage can be found at specialty stores.

Lauren Chiziski, Tech alumnus and employee at WellBody, said she deals with probiotics on a daily basis.

WellBody, which is located on 34th Street in Lubbock, supplies locals with more than 40 different types of probiotics, she said. Natural probiotics can be bought in pill, drink and yogurt forms.

"It is really interesting that we rely on bacteria," Chiziski said. "People think bacteria are bad, but actually they can be really good for your body."

New Jersey to Jon Bon Jovi: You give us a good name

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — A note from New Jersey to Jon Bon Jovi: You may have been snubbed by the Rock 'n' Roll Hall of Fame, but you're still wanted in the Garden State.

Bon Jovi and 12 others — including NBA star Shaquille O'Neal and civil rights activist Paul Robeson — were named to the New Jersey Hall of Fame on Monday. The honor is meant to highlight positive contributions made to a state often stereotyped as a land of corrupt politicians, belching refineries and gangsters.

"This group of hall of famers embodies the spirit of New Jersey, a combination of drive, determination and creativity that has led them to greatness," Gov. Jon Corzine said in a statement.

The winners were chosen by New Jersey residents, who had months to pick their favorites online, and by the hall's voting academy, made up of 100 state organizations. All inductees have deep ties to the state.

Other inductees to the hall's second class include funnymen Bud Abbott and Lou Costello; astronomer Carl Sagan; Yankee shortstop Phil Rizzuto; novelist F. Scott Fitzgerald; poet Walt Whitman; comedian Jerry Lewis; tennis star Althea Gibson; inventor Guglielmo Marconi; and writer William Carlos Williams.

Failing to make the cut this year were actor Jack Nicholson, President Woodrow Wilson, musician Count Basie and novelist Philip Roth.

Are we stimulated yet?

By SAMUEL BERKOWITZ

Obama's economic stimulus package has been passed, with the only real bi-partisanship coming from 11 Democrats who sided with all the Republicans in opposing the new administration's attempt to, as Jon Sanders put it "cure dysentery with ExLax."

While Obama's lapdogs in the press seem unable to explain how well-nigh a trillion dollars in new spending is supposed to "fix" the economy when government spending has skyrocketed over the past several years, it would behoove all of us to examine some of the finer points of the Democrat's plan for economic recovery.

According to the San Francisco Chronicle, this "New New Deal" will include "$200 million to rehabilitate the National Mall, $600 million for General Services Administration to replace older vehicles with alternative fuel vehicles and $400 million for NASA scientists to conduct climate change research," among other brazen wastes of money.

The Wall Street Journal Online reported that, "There's $1 billion for Amtrak, the federal railroad that hasn't turned a profit in 40 years; $2 billion for child-care subsidies; $50 million for that great engine of job creation, the National Endowment for the Arts; $400 million for global-warming research and another $2.4 billion for carbon-capture demonstration projects. There's even $650 million on top of the billions already doled out to pay for digital TV conversion coupons."

Further, as one WSJ commentator explains, "As for the promise of accountability, some $54 billion will go to federal programs that the Office of Management and Budget or the Government Accountability Office have already criticized as 'ineffective' or unable to pass basic financial audits. These include the Economic Development Administration, the Small Business Administration, the 10 federal job-training programs and many more.

Oh, and don't forget education, which would get $66 billion more. That's more than the entire Education Department spent a mere 10 years ago and is on top of the doubling under President Bush. Some $6 billion of this will subsidize university building projects. If you think the intention here is to help kids learn, the House declares on page 257 that 'No recipient ... shall use such funds to provide financial assistance to students to attend private elementary or secondary schools.' Horrors: Some money might go to non-union teachers."

Perhaps the most hilarious outlay is that reported in the National Journal, which says, "The Senate bill includes a tax break worth up to $246 million over 11 years for investors in bigger-budget movie projects that don't necessarily qualify for incentives currently."

Put more simply, you are helping to pony up a quarter-billion dollars to help make movies of arguable merit. Hey, you people won't pay money to see my movie in large enough numbers for it to be profitable, so can you just pay for it and not see it? It's win-win.

$4.19 billion is allocated for ACORN, the famous voter fraud syndicate of "community organizers," or, more accurately termed, fiscal vacuum cleaners, for "neighborhood stabilization activities." It's okay; I'm told now that Sarah Palin isn't running for office; it's once again possible to poke fun at the societal irrelevance of "community organizers" without being investigated as a possible Grand Dragon of the KKK.

Opposingviews.com describes the presence of "28 projects with the term 'stadium' in them and 117 projects mentioning landscaping and/or beautification efforts. The taxpayers should be most teed off at the 20 golf courses included in the list."

In actuality, the taxpayers should be teed off at the fact that in spite of overwhelming empirical economic evidence, politicians in Washington still feel that thousands of dollars of debt for every man, woman and child in this country is the solution to the current financial ills.

House.gov, in an article about the 1981 Reagan tax cuts, says that, "The economic benefits of ERTA were summarized by President Clinton's Council of Economic Advisers in 1994: 'It is undeniable that the sharp reduction in taxes in the early 1980s was a strong impetus to economic growth' ... The share of the income tax burden borne by the top 10 percent of taxpayers increased from 48.0 percent in 1981 to 57.2 percent in 1988.

Meanwhile, the share of income taxes paid by the bottom 50 percent of taxpayers dropped from 7.5 percent in 1981 to 5.7 percent in 1988 ... The Reagan tax cuts, like similar measures enacted in the 1920s and 1960s, showed that reducing excessive tax rates stimulates growth, reduces tax avoidance and can increase the amount and share of tax payments generated by the rich. High top tax rates can induce counterproductive behavior and suppress revenues, factors that are usually missed or understated in government static revenue analysis."

Yet, all but 11 House Democrats passed a pork-laden stimulus package 244 to 188. Obama, Pelosi and Reid have made the case that their projects will boost economic growth in spite of evidence cited by servants of their own party to the contrary. They have two years to effectively prove their case to the American people. By then voters will have awoken from repetitive knee-jerk, anti-Bush syndrome and be ready for the next Gingrich or Reagan as a counterbalance to the present publicly-funded Daddy Warbucks with whom we are temporarily stuck.

Don't try these activities at home ... or on your campus

Type in "10 Terrifying Activities for the Cheap Adrenaline Junkie" at Google, select the first link that comes up and you'll see items like "craning" and "elevator surfing."

For someone who thinks of bungee jumping and sky diving as adrenaline activities, I was quite curious about this list. I was also simultaneously pleased that each activity came with its own YouTube video; however, I soon discovered that some activities were more terrifying than others.

For instance, "elevator surfing" sounds awesome. You get inside an elevator shaft and ride on the top of the car. The only problem is: it's too slow. I was thinking that you'd be riding quickly enough to feel a light breeze on you. But from the video, it looks like you're going pretty slow. I guess one could try riding a high-speed elevator in a big city like Miami or NYC, but it might get too dangerous. Nevertheless, I was disappointed.

Contrast this, however, with "craning," and you have a much more adrenaline-inducing activity. To enjoy the act of "craning," you simply need to find a construction crane and climb it with no equipment (yeah, don't try it).

The daredevils in this video pushed it to a level that even made me nervous watching. They were out on the edge of the horizontal bar, way up in the sky, with nothing below them, and they started doing pull-ups on the crane beam. One slip of the hand, and they would have fallen straight down. It's insanely dangerous, but so captivating to watch.

I'd also add "train surfing" to the list of dangerous activities. Apparently, one needs to ride on top of a moving train to experience this. The participant in this video used some sort of pressurized suction handle and locked it on to the window of the last train car. He then tethered his waist to the handle with rope so he wouldn't fall off. Once the train got moving, his adventure started.

The only thing I was left wondering is what he did at the station stops. Clearly, someone would notice if there was a person hanging from the back of a train car like Spiderman. One more thing to note: this particular attempt was done in Europe. I think security around American train stations may be tighter.

"Free running" was another activity I enjoyed watching. It might not be quite as dangerous as craning or train surfing, but it does have its risks. The guys in this video were doing flips in mid air, jumping from one stairwell to another and generally running on all sorts of difficult surfaces. It seems to require a lot of agility and running strength, but it's certainly a cheap way to get some adrenaline.

Another one on the list is called "survivalism adventures." This would be the equivalent of someone starring in their very own episode of Man vs. Wild or Survivorman. While those shows are really cool, especially Man vs. Wild, I honestly don't think going on a survivalism adventure is a good source of adrenaline. Those TV shows are about getting yourself out of tough situations, not about showing you how to put yourself in them. It's one thing to go camping or hiking, but completely different putting your life on the line in the wild.

Having watched these videos, I realized it takes a certain type of person to attempt these activities. Maybe it's the craving for adrenaline that makes them do it; maybe it's an expression of their spirit. Maybe they want to break the law because let's face it, some of these activities like craning and train surfing aren't exactly legal. Perhaps it's the freedom they feel. Whatever it may be, it's shown me that there's an abundant capacity for self-expression in the human experience.

Your arteries really don't believe you

CENTRAL FLORIDA FUTURE
(U. CENTRAL FLORIDA)

While I stood in the snack line at the movies last week, eagerly awaiting my turn to pay way too much money for artery-clogging junk, I overheard the following conversation between the customer in front of me and the employee behind the counter.

"I'll take a large bucket of popcorn, with extra-extra butter," said the customer, an ordinary guy of average height and weight. It was an ordinary request, although the extra "extra" seemed somewhat excessive.

"Anything else?" asked the cashier.

"Oh, yeah," said the man. "I'd like a small Diet Coke."

Maybe that exchange doesn't bother you, but even typing it is enough to make my head hurt. I used to work at a movie theater, and I will tell you with certainty that I have filled that paradoxical order more than any other.

Extra-extra butter and a Diet Coke. I guess he was hoping that the "diet" in his Coke would be enough to cancel out the extra-extra calories he had dumped all over his popcorn.

It's the same logic that applied when the nonprofit Center for Science in the Public Interest sued Burger King in 2007. The lawsuit was one of many that have bubbled up in recent years on the issue of trans fat.

The suit alleged that trans fat made the King's burgers dangerously unhealthy. As if the burgers needed the help.

"It turns out, shockingly, that just because a product has the word 'vitamin' in its name, that does not mean that it's good for you."

I guess the CSPI was looking forward to the glorious day when we could all order our triple bacon cheese burgers, safe in the knowledge that all of the trans fat has been removed, leaving only a big heaping pile of regular fats that are marginally less detrimental.

The issue at hand is this: You can live healthy, or not. I don't, and I won't judge you if you don't either. But please, be honest with yourself, and don't fool yourself by thinking like these people.

Companies are fully aware that they can trick people with the illusion of healthy living. Take vitaminwater, for example — but for the love of God, don't drink it.

It turns out, shockingly, that just because a product has the word "vitamin" in its name, that does not mean that it's good for you. Another lawsuit, this yet again the work of the CPSI, has been filed recently against Coca-Cola Co. for making deceptive claims.

According to the CPSI, vitaminwater is no better for you than sodas or other sugary drinks. It's probably only marginally better for you than drinking the water on campus.

The time has come for each of us to make a choice between extra-extra butter and diet soda, between fat and no fat, and between sugar and water. It's sad but true that when it comes to your health, you can't have your cake and eat it, too.

Organizations attempt to create more literate Lubbock as illiteracy rates rise

By CHRYSTAL GRANT
STAFF WRITER

About 14 percent of U.S. adults will not be able to read this article.

Statistics released by the U.S. Education Department in January reported one in seven Americans — about 32 million U.S. adults — can't read.

"The rates are quite high," said Paige Furgerson, a Texas Tech language literacy professor, "but there are several different reasons for illiteracy."

Illiterate adults lack the skill for different reasons, said Furgerson. Some are taught English as a second language, and others may be able to read, but not on adult level.

Teachers unprepared to teach students is one of the issues, Furgerson said, and increasing the level of education required to teach may correct the problem.

"There are currently three courses a teacher has to complete focusing on literacy, including a content literacy course," she said, "and that is not enough."

The content literacy course is intended to prepare prospective teachers on working with and improving student literacy learning, Furgerson said.

Language is essential to all learning, she said. Many teachers focus on their area of specialization, forgetting the content of reading and writing and how it plays a role in their students' success.

"Schools are focusing too much on assessment instead of instruction," Furgerson said.

With the assessments used in the Texas curriculum, she said, teachers spend more time on the TAKS test and not enough time on basic literacy skill.

"There is a new benchmark students are taking every six weeks," said Furgerson. "This is causing a problem with attention taken off of classroom instruction."

For adults who find themselves illiterate, there is hope. Local volunteers offer several opportunities for adults to improve their skills.

Lubbock's public librarians started a program called "Literacy Lubbock," a non-profit education and human services organization designed to help adults facing illiteracy for reasons such as dyslexia, said Lynda Dutton, executive director for the program.

Free classes and tutoring offered by Literacy Lubbock include learning English as a second language, basic reading, writing and math, and preparation for GED and Accuplacer, she said.

Although the program is intended for adults 18 and older, she said children are welcome, too.

Volunteers consist of trained students and teachers, including Tech students, who devote an hour and half to adults facing illiteracy, she said. Classes and tutoring are offered days and evenings at Patterson, Godeke, Groves and Mahon Libraries.

"Our mission is to promote empowerment of adults and families to change their lives through literacy by developing, conducting and supporting literacy programs for Lubbock-area residents," Dutton said.

Literacy Lubbock is not the only program available, she said. ProLiteracy, an organization designed to challenge illiteracy and improve the lives of adults and their families, communities and societies, started a trend to combat illiteracy.

The new trend is to push families to keep more books in the home, Dutton said. It will bring children to develop a relationship to print early in life, decreasing the rates of illiteracy.

According to ProLiteracy, 65 percent of adults suffer from illiteracy if they grew up with families that are illiterate.

"There are many programs in Lubbock to help those who suffer from illiteracy," Dutton said. "Literacy Lubbock is angled to improve illiteracy and fulfill dreams."

Dope-smoking among teens down in many countries

CHICAGO (AP) — Kids on both sides of the Atlantic are smoking less pot and going out less often with friends at night, a study of 15-year-olds in 30 countries found.

The double declines occurred in the United States, Canada and mostly European countries from 2002 to 2006. The trends are likely related, since other research has found that kids who spend many evenings out are more likely to smoke dope than homebodies.

Since few parents approve of marijuana use, teens are most likely to use the drug secretly away from home, said lead author Emmanuel Kuntsche of the Swiss Institute for the Prevention of Alcohol and Drug Problems.

Reasons for the declines are unclear. But the researchers said drug prevention efforts and technology may have contributed.

Instant messaging, e-mail and cell phones "may have partly replaced face-to-face contacts, leading to fewer social contacts in the evenings," Kuntsche said.

The study appears in February's

Archives of Pediatrics and Adolescent Medicine, released Monday.

The researchers analyzed data on 93,297 15-year-olds from periodic health surveys in dozens of countries conducted in collaboration with the World Health Organization.

Survey questionnaires were distributed to entire classrooms at various schools, asking various health-related questions including about marijuana use and evenings out with friends in the past year. Responses to 2006 surveys were compared with those in 2002.

Lady Raiders have no problem with Savannah St., win 80-39

www.dailytoreador.com

By ADAM COLEMAN
SPORTS EDITOR

Savannah State is no Baylor, no Oklahoma or no Texas, for that matter.

But Texas Tech coach Kristy Curry said she wanted to see her team continue to play the Lady Tigers like it was Big 12 Conference play, while improving on some other facets of its game.

For the most part, Curry saw what she was looking for in an 80-39 blowout against Savannah State Monday in the United Spirit Arena.

It was a break in the middle of Big 12 play before the Lady Raiders travel to Texas Sunday.

Curry said there were a few goals Tech (13-8) accomplished in the break from Big 12 competition. She said she wanted to see energy on the defensive side of the ball, and holding the Lady Tigers (4-18) to under 40 points was a plus in her eyes.

The Lady Raiders continued to focus on what they do well, using Kierra Mallard and Dominic Seals' post play to jump out to a lead.

The two seemed to get all the practice they could hope for with Seals scoring 15 points on seven rebounds and Mallard scoring a career-high 23 points while grabbing 13 rebounds. It was Mallard's fourth double-double of the season.

The duo's play greatly contributed to Tech scoring more than half of its points in the paint, with 42.

Still, Mallard said she wanted to focus on being patient and finding her teammates in this game.

"When the ball is passed to me," she said, "just take my time and look and see if my teammates are open before I go and shoot."

There is still work to be done, however.

While Curry believes a coach never wants to say one area of her team's play is better than another, she said Tech's shooting from beyond the arc is still a work-in-progress.

The Lady Raiders went 5-of-20 from the 3-point line against the Lady Tigers, which is a reason Curry said her players have to make their shots if they are going to take that many shots from the perimeter.

"I was hoping we could shoot the ball a little bit better from the outside, but that's something we're just going to continue to work on every day in practice," she said. "The extra shooting times set up each week. Just keep working at it. Tell them to get their feet set and keep shooting it."

Seals entered this season as one of five seniors on the team and said she wants to act like one.

She said she wants to be more of a voice for this team as the Lady Raiders wrap up the regular season with the final nine games of conference play.

"Just having leadership on the floor," she said. "Basically being more verbal than I was before. Me and coach had a talk, and coach just said she needs more leadership from me. So I just took it to myself today and just try to show leadership."

But now, there will be no more breaks for the Lady Raiders.

If Tech believes its first seven games in Big 12 play were difficult, then the final nine may fall in the same category.

With the new rankings released Monday, five of the Lady Raiders' final nine Big 12 opponents are ranked — with two games against No. 2 Oklahoma, who grabbed an 80-70 win over No. 12 Tennessee Monday. No. 8 Baylor, No. 10 Texas A&M, No. 16 Texas and No. 21 Iowa State all lie ahead for the Lady Raiders.

To make things a little tougher, Texas scored a 58-55 win against Baylor Sunday.

"We're no different than any other team in this league right now," Curry said. "There's not one night where you look and go 'whew.' (We) can't take a deep breath. It's not who we're playing and that was the point (Tuesday). It's how we need to be. We were picked 10th. We don't believe we're the 10th place team in this league."

Big 12 reprimands Pat Knight for actions in Nebraska game

By ALEX YBARRA
MANAGING EDITOR

The Big 12 Conference publicly reprimanded Texas Tech coach Pat Knight on Tuesday for running onto the court twice — once after he was ejected — in the 82-69 loss to the Cornhuskers Saturday, which still allows him to coach against Oklahoma State Wednesday in Stillwater, Okla.

In a conference press release, Big 12 Commissioner Dan Beebe said Knight's actions were in violation of the Big 12's Principles and Standards of Sportsmanship.

"Coach Knight's actions after being ejected violated the Conference Sportsmanship Rules," Beebe said. "Once a coach is ejected from a contest, he or she must immediately depart from the court or field of play, and it is a serious violation not to do so. Coach Knight's actions in this case would have resulted in a more significant penalty if not for his past exemplary behavior, his acknowledgment of his mistake and his commitment to me to conduct his program with sportsmanship."

In addition, Beebe noted that the Big 12 has a program to review an official's performance, which includes the accuracy of judgment calls and the opportunity for coaches to provide their input on the matter.

The season-long evaluation system determines whether an official will referee future Big 12 basketball games.

During the Big 12 teleconference Monday morning, Knight was unavailable for comment, but associate head coach Chris Beard said "we haven't heard anything yet" about developments regarding disciplinary action toward Knight.

Midway through the second half against Nebraska, Tech's Alan Voskuil was called for a defensive foul when he got tangled up with Nebraska's Chris Balham and the two fell to the ground. Knight lightly argued the call before he watched the replay, and then he erupted.

He charged across the floor to the opposite sideline and shouted in one official's face, picking up his first technical foul. Knight then yelled at another official, which got him his second technical

Bob Knight: No contact with Georgia

By ALEX YBARRA
MANAGING EDITOR

Former Texas Tech coach Bob Knight, whose 902 wins are the most in Division I men's basketball, may be on the move again.

According to reports from ESPN and the Atlanta-Journal Constitution on Monday, a source close to Knight said the legendary coach would accept the head coaching position at Georgia (9-12 overall, 0-6 in Southeastern Conference play) if it was offered to him.

"He doesn't want it to look as if he's looking for work," the source told the Journal-Constitution, "but I can assure you that he'd like to have the job. It's the idea of coaching a team in the Southeastern Conference that appeals to him. There are just so many things he could do for Georgia basketball. This would be his last stop, and he likes that."

The speculation comes less than a week after former Bulldogs' coach Dennis Felton was fired Thursday despite a surprising run that culminated with Georgia winning the SEC championship last season.

In an interview Monday during the Tricco and Van Pelt show on ESPN Radio, Knight said no contact has been made between him and athletic officials from Georgia. The Journal-Constitution also reported that Georgia's President Michael Adams and Athletic Director Damon Evans declined to speculate on Knight or any other candidate.

"It has to be a situation that I think is right for me and one where I would be right for the university," Knight told ESPN. "I have never said that I wouldn't coach again. I've simply said in the past, if the right situation came along, I would be interested."

During the Big 12 Conference coaches' teleconference Monday, Tech coach Pat Knight was unavailable for comment on his father's interest with the Georgia program. Substituting for Pat Knight, associate head coach Chris Beard said no discussions surrounding the reports have surfaced within the coaching staff.

"No, we're 100 percent focused on our team here at Texas Tech," Beard said.

Bob Knight, 68, left Tech near the end of the 2007-2008 season — leaving the program in the hands of his son — with an overall record of 138-82 and a conference record of 53-49 in just under seven years as coach of the Red Raiders.

In 42 seasons as a coach at Army, Indiana and Tech, Bob Knight has a 902-371 record and three national championships.

Tennessee Titans co-owner dead at 84, cause not released

HOUSTON (AP) — Nancy Neville Adams, who co-owned the Tennessee Titans with her husband

Bud Adams, has died. She was 84. The Titans announced that she died Sunday night in Houston but did not release the cause.

Nancy Adams was also the vice chair of the Titans board. She continued to live in Houston after the Oilers relocated to Tennessee and became the Titans.

"I am deeply saddened to report that following a brief illness, I have lost my beloved wife of 62 years, Nancy," Bud Adams said. "She was the love of my life and we shared so many great memories together. I will miss her greatly, but know how lucky we were to have each other's company for so long."

Active in charitable efforts, she and her husband established the Titans Foundation in 1999 with an opening gift of $500,000. Recently, the couple donated $500,000 to the Baptist Hospital of Nashville to fund an expansion project.

They've often helped out financially in the wake of natural disasters, contributing $100,000 after Tropical Storm Allison hit Houston in 2001 and teaming with the NFL to donate $200,000 following a 1998 tornado in Nashville.

Flemmons qualifies for nationals at Lobo Invite

By ADAM WADSWORTH
STAFF WRITER

It only took Texas Tech triple jumper Anthony Flemmons one try to get himself an automatic qualifying mark for nationals.

New Mexico's Lobo Invitational was generous to the Red Raiders this weekend, with the team taking one automatic NCAA bid and five provisional marks.

Flemmons highlighted the meet with his jump of 53 feet, .75 inches. Not only is it a personal best for him, but the mark also is the fourth best in the country. The jump would have been impressive enough with a few meets under his belt, but Flemmons did it in his first competition.

"It feels pretty good, I mean we've got so many people here pushing you, and everybody is working so hard," Flemmons said. "I was surprised myself, but that's where I set my (personal record) my freshman year, up there in New Mexico, so I knew I could do it big there. I just needed to relax."

Since he already is qualified for nationals, Flemmons said he would use the remainder of the year to maintain his shape and stay healthy so he would be ready when nationals came around.

Flemmons' teammate Darrell Roddick finished third in the triple jump with a mark of 50'-9.50", which was good enough for a provisional mark.

Freshmen Terra Evans and Jamele Mason both had good days Saturday as well.

Evans set a new personal best and an NCAA provisional mark in the 60-meter dash with a time of 7.39 seconds.

Mason missed the qualifying time in the 60-meter hurdles by a mere .02 seconds, but his time of 7.91 was good enough for second place and a personal best. He said his main area for improvement was staying closer to the tops of the hurdles, but because the hurdles is such a technical event, there is almost always something he could be working on.

He also said he thought this was a better week for him, but he believes he will run faster at home.

"This week was like a much better week, but because of the altitude, if I was like somewhere here in Texas I would've hit it," Mason said. "So I think that now we'll have meets down here I'll get it."

Sophomore sprinter Gil Roberts ran the 200-meter dash this week.

Roberts' time of 21.09 not only set an NCAA provisional time, but also was good enough for the best time in the Big 12 Conference and the third-best time in the country.

He said he just needs some more experience and he will be able to get his time down to the automatic mark.

"I think just stay healthy and keep running," Roberts said. "Each time I run my time drops."

Tech pole-vaulter Amanda Alley, who has spent the past two years injured, also set a provisional mark and placed second overall with her vault of 12'-11.05".

Tech coach Wes Kittley said he was very excited about the starts in all the events.

"I can't be much happier right now," Kittley said. "We're staying healthy."

While the rest of the team is competing in the third round of the Texas Tech Invitational this weekend, eight-time national champion Sally Kipyego and Gilbert Limo have been invited to attend the Reebok Boston Indoor Games this weekend in Massachusetts.

Kipyego will run the 3,000-meter race and Limo will run an 800-meter dash.

The Texas Tech Invitational will kick off with the men's heptathlon and the women's pentathlon at 4 p.m. Thursday and Friday, respectively, in the Athletic Training Center. The majority of the events will begin at 10 a.m. Saturday.

Phelps avoids hot water with sponsors

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Michael Phelps doesn't seem to be in much hot water with his sponsors despite being photographed inhaling from a marijuana pipe.

From apparel company Speedo to luxury Swiss watchmaker Omega, several sponsors are standing by the 23-year-old swimming phenom — at least for now — and have accepted his public apology. Other big companies, like Visa Inc., Subway and Kellogg Co., aren't talking yet.

Experts say if Phelps doesn't stick to the straight and narrow, he could hurt his chances at future endorsements. And there's no guarantee he won't be dropped quietly once the furor dies down.

Phelps, who won a record eight gold medals at this summer's Olympics in Beijing, acknowledged "regrettable" behavior and "bad judgment" after the photo appeared Sunday in the British tabloid News of the World.

The paper said the picture was taken during a November house party while Phelps was visiting the University of South Carolina.

Phelps handled the situation well by apologizing and saying he regretted his actions, said John Sweeney, director of sports communication at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill's School of Journalism and Mass Communication. Phelps went a step further and promised "it will not happen again."

In 2004, after the Athens Games, a then-underage Phelps was arrested for drunken driving. He pleaded guilty, apologized and again said he wouldn't make the same mistake again.

Sweeney said if Phelps is caught transgressing a third time, he could stand to lose many sponsorships — and the public's trust. For now, the public and his sponsors could look past it. After all, he said, President Barack Obama has acknowledged using marijuana and he still got elected.

"My prediction would be that this will pass," he said with caution. "If it does happen again, it'll be twice the story and it will hurt him."

Swiss watchmaker Omega said Phelps' actions were a private matter and "nonissue" while Speedo called Phelps a "valued member of the Speedo team."

Garrido pleads guilty to drunken driving charge

AUSTIN (AP)— Texas baseball coach Augie Garrido has pleaded guilty to a drunken driving charge but won't be sentenced for another three months while he waits to complete an alcohol counseling program.

The winningest coach in Division I made a brief appearance Monday before County Court-At-Law Judge Elisabeth Earle to enter the plea.

"It's important to get that behind us and be responsible and accountable for it," Garrido told reporters outside the courtroom.

The 69-year-old Garrido was arrested Jan. 17 near Austin's downtown entertainment district. He was suspended for the first four games of the season, which starts

Feb. 20. Sentencing was scheduled for April 30.

Garrido has 1,629 victories and five national championships, including two with the Longhorns.

Michael Burnett, one of Garrido's attorneys, told The Associated Press the coach was not getting special treatment by being allowed to wait three months for his sentence.

Burnett said most drunken driving defendants complete their recommended counseling program before they enter a plea and are sentenced. Many cases take up to a year or longer to resolve.

In Garrido's case, he chose to enter the plea two weeks after his arrest and before he could schedule counseling, Burnett said.

Although Garrido's attorneys considered trying to use the University of Texas' counseling program, he will enter one provided by Travis County. It will include a 12-hour class and a two-hour session with Mothers Against Drunk Driving.

"The coach, to his credit, has said, 'If everybody else has to go to county program, I'll do the county program,'" Burnett said.

The sentencing date is the day before the Longhorns start a three-game series with Baylor.

In a statement to reporters Jan. 23, Texas athletic director DeLoss Dodds gave Garrido his support.

"This department is family. We all love Coach Garrido. He's done so much for so many. He's a leader. He's mentor of young people," Dodds said.
