OPEC plan's collapse sends oil prices down

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil futures prices plunged today as an attempt by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to limit its production collapsed over the weekend.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, December contracts for West Texas Intermediate had fallen 93 cents to $13.44 at mid-morning. It had closed at $14.37 on Friday.

OPEC members, meeting in Madrid, failed to help Iraq and Iran bridge their political schism as Iran rejected a plan to integrate Iraq into a production quota system.

The aborted OPEC plan would have integrated Iraq into a production quota system, reinstituted a production discipline for the 13 members of the group, and eliminated about 3 million barrels of excess OPEC oil a day from world markets next year, thereby sharply boosting prices.

Under the proposal, the two Persian Gulf countries would each have had an output ceiling of 2.3 million barrels a day.

The plan, submitted by Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, was still alive, a number of ministers insisted. A new attempt is expected to be made to adopt it before the end of the year. OPEC has a regular meeting scheduled for Nov. 21 in Vienna.

Before that meeting of the 13 member countries, the eight ministers who gathered here plan to meet on Nov. 17, also in Vienna, in another attempt to reach an accord between Iran and Iraq.

Many said that what was needed was a compromise formula that Iran could live with but that would also give Iraq parity.

A number of oil industry officials said this might be difficult, noting that OPEC production was at a five-year high, with stockpiles so large that they would continue to push prices down.

They also noted OPEC had other discipline problems that must be addressed, including the rampant output of the United Arab Emirates.

But the executives, who had seemed certain that OPEC would reach an agreement this past weekend, said the failure might spur a new drop in prices of as much as $2 to $3 a barrel.

"There is no question this is going to push prices down," said Oscar S. Wyatt Jr., the chairman of the Houston-based Coastal Corp., who observed the meeting here.

Bahman Karbassioun, an Iranian oil expert in Vienna, said:

"OPEC is loosing time. Even if they reach a solution by the end of the year, oil companies have built so much stocks of cheap oil it will keep oil prices down for a long time. The only thing that will keep prices from collapsing now is the faint hope of an OPEC accord in November."

The talks faltered as Iran rejected the Saudi-Kuwait proposal as politically unacceptable, after leading several ministers to believe that it would accept the plan if it were packaged so that it did not appear to be a victory for Iraq.

The plan outlined production quotas for the 13 OPEC members under an initial ceiling of 17.4 million barrels a day that would have eventually risen to 18.5 million barrels.

Bush denies running racist ads

Associated Press

George Bush declared today "there isn't any racism" in his ads, and he denied Democratic charges of Republican lying. He campaigned in New England and rival Michael Dukakis headed for California as the presidential race moved into its final two weeks.

Reacting to weekend talk of racism, Bush told reporters today, "It's absolutely ridiculous and everybody sees this as some desperation kind of move, basing it on one ad."

Bush was referring to Democratic complaints that the Republicans have been appealing to racial fears in Bush's speeches and ads stressing the case of Willie Horton Jr., a black convicted murderer who raped a white woman after escaping from a Massachusetts prison furlough.

"I mean people see this for what it is — a campaign tactic. I stand 100 percent behind those ads. I think the American people are smart," Bush said.

He added that the Democrats are running an ad about a man from a Bush-supported Houston halfway house who murdered a minister's wife. Bush asked, "What about their ad about the halfway house? Is that racism against Hispanics?"

"He is upset, not because it's false but because he is weak on crime and defense. And that's the inescapable truth," Bush said at a campaign breakfast in Waterbury, Conn.

The Republican candidate also noted new Democratic TV ads accusing Bush and the Republicans of lying and distorting Dukakis' record.

Bush said Dukakis had denied during their second debate that he had "raided" the Massachusetts pension fund. "Well, that is flat-out false and he knows it," Bush said.

In a speech prepared for delivery to a business group in Waterbury, Bush said, "My opponent now wants to turn back — to clog up — the circulatory system of America's economy with exactly the kind of big government schemes the Europeans are discarding."

Dukakis was spending the entire day in California, including stops in Los Angeles and San Francisco, in pursuit of that crucial state's 47 electoral votes.

Republican vice presidential candidate Dan Quayle was going to be accompanied by his mother, Corrine Quayle, during his first stop in Missouri. He was going on to Kentucky.

Democratic vice presidential candidate Lloyd Bentsen was campaigning in Michigan, Missouri and Arkansas.

Dukakis, stopping Sunday night in Eau Claire, Wis., attacked the Republican ticket for what he called its "steady stream of distortion and misrepresentation."

Although Dukakis didn't mention it, campaign vice-chairman John Sasso said the candidate agreed with assertions by Bentsen and black leader Jesse Jackson that there were racist overtones to some Bush tactics.

Bentsen told a television interviewer he thought the Bush campaign was making a racist appeal by focusing on Willie Horton Jr., a black convicted murderer who escaped in 1986 from a Massachusetts prison furlough.

In 1987, Horton stabbed a white Maryland man and raped the man's fiancee. Horton is currently imprisoned in Maryland.

Asked on ABC-TV's "This Week With David Brinkley" if use of the Horton case constituted "an element of Republican racist appeal," Bentsen replied: "When you add it up, I think there is, and that's unfortunate, and I just don't want to see this election won on that kind of packaging and that kind of distortions."

In Boston, Jackson avoided the word "racist" but said the Horton case was one of several "rather ugly race-conscious signals" sent out by the Bush campaign.

Vice President George Bush and Gov. Michael Dukakis shake hands after the Democratic candidate finished speaking at a gathering of the National Italian American Foundation Saturday night in Washington, D.C.

Woman carrying hostage photos to U.S. group, Italians say

MILAN, Italy (AP) — Police said today a U.S. organization was the intended recipient of the photographs of American hostages in Lebanon that were found in a Lebanese woman's luggage at Milan's airport.

The woman was supposed to deliver the pictures and a handwritten letter bearing hostage Alann Steen's name to an Italian arms trader, Aldo Anghessa, police said. The photographs were of Steen, American reporter Terry Anderson and a third man.

"Anghessa acted as a go-between, between the two parties. One party was a Lebanese organization," said Achille Serra, head of Milan's anti-terrorist police.

He said the other group was American, but refused to elaborate on the identity of either organization or say if the U.S. government was involved.

In Washington, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said, "We are cooperating with the investigation by Italian police, but at this point we don't have any conclusions as to what information she has. If she has any information we would like to get it from her."

Asked about the nature of the U.S. cooperation, Fitzwater said, "At this point, we are just speaking with the Italians and making arrangements."

The newspaper Il Giornale of Milan reported without attribution today that Anghessa was to give the photos and letter to U.S. diplomats, but the arrest of the woman spoiled the operation. The U.S. Embassy declined comment on the report.

Serra said police do not know if Anghessa was part of an effort to free the hostages, as Italian media have speculated.

Anghessa, who has been linked to Italian and Swiss secret services and was at the center of an international arms scandal last year, was questioned by police after the woman's arrest Thursday after arriving at Milan's Linate Airport from Beirut. Anghessa was released, but police planned to interrogate him again, Serra said.

The Lebanese woman, identified as Aline Ibrahim Rizkallah, 36, was jailed and charged with carrying $1,000 in counterfeit U.S. bills and 50 grams of heroin, police said.

The woman said Anghessa was not connected to the drug shipment, police said.

The Rome daily La Repubblica reported Sunday that Anghessa had ties to the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration.

A U.S. Embassy spokesman said: "There is no, repeat no, record of Anghessa having ever assisted DEA officers in Italy."

In an interview published in today's edition of the Rome-based newspaper Il Messaggero, Anghessa was quoted as saying he was "willing to cooperate with this investigation but I swear I know absolutely nothing."

Police were examining the photographs to determine whether they were originals or copies of newspaper pictures, Serra said.

Serra said police have ruled out that hostage Thomas Sutherland was the man in the third photo. The man, who police earlier believed to be Sutherland, has not been identified.

Police have asked U.S. authorities for samples of Steen's handwriting to authenticate the letter bearing his name, said Fortunato Finoli, deputy director of the anti-terrorist police.

Anghessa, 44, who has dual Swiss-Italian nationality, was arrested following the 1987 seizure of a Lebanese cargo ship off Bari in southern Italy. Police said the ship was carrying drugs and weapons for use by the Mafia and Middle East terrorists.

Baptists arm themselves for holy war over Baylor

WACO (AP) — When the Baptist General Convention of Texas convenes in Austin Tuesday, it could open a fiery public confrontation between the fundamentalist and liberal elements within the church. And at the center of that fight will be Baylor University.

Baylor University President Herbert H. Reynolds last week took on fundamentalists who recently published a tract critical of what it called the school's growing liberalism and movement away from its original focus of training ministers.

United For A Better Baylor distributed the tract, "The Founder's Review," at a school trustees meeting in San Antonio two weeks ago.

But Reynolds says the group is "acting like a bunch of jackals."

"We haven't strayed from the vision of our founders," Reynolds said Friday. He said Baylor's charter calls for "the encouragement, support, maintenance, and promotion of education in all branches."

Further, he said, the university is mandated to confer "any of the degrees unusually conferred by similar institutions in any of the departments or branches of literature, art, science, theology, law or medicine, and to grant diplomas for the same, and in all other respects to exercise the functions of the most favored of literary institutions.

"So theology was one of the things, but there were others, as well you can see — literature, art, science, law, medicine," Reynolds told the Waco Tribune Herald. "Baylor was chartered to be a very broad-based kind of university."

Fundamentalists, who control the national Southern Baptist Convention, would like to control Baylor and the Baptist General Convention of Texas, Reynolds said.

Soviet flotilla joins effort to save trapped whales

BARROW, Alaska (AP) — Soviet flotillas churned toward Barrow to offer help for two trapped whales as rescuers tried to lure the mammals to freedom, but biologists said they may have to airlift the animals to open water.

"We're having a net built right now" to carry them, David Withrow of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's Marine Mammal Laboratory in Seattle said Sunday.

He emphasized that an airlift was the least preferred alternative, to be used only if rescuers fail to coax the California gray whales to open water though a series of freshly cut air holes in the ice.

A third whale, the smallest and the youngest of the mammals trapped in moving ice more than two weeks ago before they could migrate south, disappeared Friday and was presumed dead.

A pontoon-mounted ice auger known as an Archimedes screw tractor was delivered during the weekend by a huge Air Force C-5A cargo plane and was reassembled Sunday.

The device was to begin work today on the outside edge of an ice pressure ridge that stands between the whales and freedom.

"That's the next big project for us," said NOAA biologist Ron Morris, coordinator of the rescue.

NOAA asked the Soviet Union for help, and America's Arctic neighbor ordered the icebreakers Admiral Makarov and Vladimir Arseniev to Barrow, said NOAA Rear Adm. Sigmund R. Petersen, director of the Pacific Marine Center in Seattle.

The ships were 140 nautical miles from the Barrow area, the Soviet news agency Tass reported today.

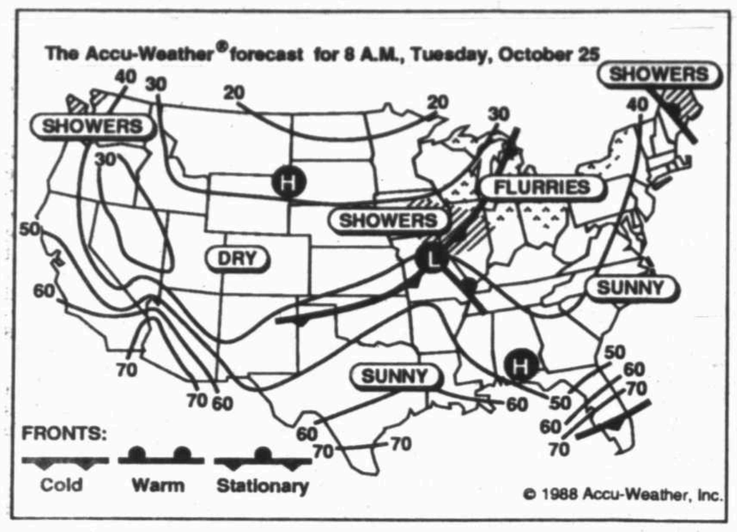
WEATHER SUMMARY



Clear skies in forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

Clear skies are in the forecast for tonight and the low will be in the lower 50s, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. Winds will be southerly 5-10 m.p.h.

Sunny skies with the high near 80 is expected for Tuesday. Winds will be southerly at 5-15 m.p.h.

Sunday's high of 72 was 18 degrees cooler than the record high of 90 set for that date in 1934. The overnight low of 40 was seven degrees warmer than the record low of 33 set for this date in 1980.

STATE

A cold front stationed in southern Texas early Monday stretched from Palacios to near Laredo.

A few isolated thunderstorms developed between San Antonio and Cotulla late Sunday night but dissipated shortly after midnight.

In southeast Texas, three tornadoes were reported Sunday morning. A twister in Hamshire flipped a high school coach's mobile home and set it down on his Jeep. In Port Neches, a funnel cloud damaged an office building. A third tornado was reported near the Jefferson County Airport.

Although clouds lingered over portions of South Texas during the early morning hours, clear skies prevailed over the rest of the state.

With high pressure sitting over the state behind the front, the wind was from the north across most areas, but from the South in extreme South Texas and in the High Plains of West Texas.

Speeds were generally in the 5 to 15 mph range but calm in a few places.

NATION

Chicago got its first snowfall of the season today, thunderstorms hit parts of Texas and fog shrouded the Southern California coast.

Rain mixed with snow also fell in northern and east-central Illinois, and light snow settled on northeast Minnesota and northern Wisconsin. Up to 5 inches of snow were expected in Upper Michigan.

Thunderstorms in south-central Texas ended. The heaviest downpour hit Live Oak, a San Antonio suburb.

As coastal fog developed in Southern California, dense fog formed over parts of Mississippi.

WHALES

Another flotilla unloaded equipment for a Soviet station at the North Pole before heading immediately for Alaska, Tass said. Tass did not saw how many ships were in the second group.

It was unclear what good the icebreakers could do in the shallow water near the whales. The ships need 39 feet of water to operate, Tass said, and the whales were trapped in water 12 to 25 feet deep.

Even if the icebreakers cannot reach the whales, the ships could help clear a path to open water about 200 miles away, Petersen said.

As high-tech heavy equipment poured into this whaling village during the weekend, Eskimos used chain saws and muscle to make the most progress toward freeing the animals.

"We're marching out to the lead with Inupiat (Eskimo) power," said Morris. "The whales are responding to the holes."

The breathing holes extend more than 1⅛ miles from where the whales were first trapped.

The Eskimos connected several holes, converting them into a narrow pool 250 feet long to give the whales more room to rest. They made a similar slot in the ice over a shoal about 5 feet deep. The shoal apparently deterred the whales from moving farther toward open water.

The whales appeared to be in good health, although a patch of skin torn off one animal's snout appeared to be worsening, said Jim Harvey, Withrow's colleague.

Biologists believe a bone infection may have contributed to the death of the smallest whale, which had been named Bone.

The surviving whales were named Crossbeak and Bonnet by biologists. Eskimos have named the survivors Siku, or ice, and Putu, or ice hole. The vanished whale was named Knik, or snowflake.

Whale biologists use a rope to measure one of the two trapped California gray whales Sunday near Barrow, Alaska. The two whales have been trapped in the Arctic Ocean ice for more than two weeks.

Wind continued blowing from a more northerly direction Sunday, threatening to close the lead in the ice that rescuers were trying to move the whales to.

The airlift will have to be considered if the pressure ridge cannot be breached, biologists said.

"It's been done numerous times with killer whales and the like," Harvey said as he and Withrow tried to accurately measure the whales' length.

The whales were estimated at 27 to 35 feet long, the smaller a yearling and the other 2 to 3 years old, Withrow said.

"Getting them in the net will be tricky," Withrow said.

The icebreakers were dispatched under a 1976 cooperative environmental agreement with the Soviets, NOAA spokesman Brian Gorman said in Washington, D.C.

NOAA provided satellite photographs of polar ice to the Soviets to help them map a route to Barrow, the northernmost community in the United States, Gorman said.

Texas State Fair declared success despite shoot-out

DALLAS (AP) — A gun battle sent hundreds of people dashing for cover at the Texas State Fair and ended with one man dead and three wounded, but officials declared the 1988 fair a success and said overall crime was down.

"Despite that isolated incident Friday, the officers on the detail this year worked extremely hard to make this a safe fair," said Dallas police deputy Chief R.L. Schifelbein.

Several fights broke out late Friday and Schifelbein, who oversees fair security, decided to begin closing things down for the night. Police had taken a pistol from a 14-year-old boy who pulled it from a pocket during a scuffle with several youths. Within a few hours officers had seized pistols from three other people.

"Lord only knows what we didn't get," Schifelbein said. "It was obvious there were groups who came out here for the express purpose of creating problems."

Then came the battle in which 18-year-old Bobby Joe Nabors Jr. died of multiple gunshot wounds after he shot three other men, police said.

The first officer on the scene, Sgt. Manuel Vasquez, said he saw Nabors shoot Joey Henry and tried to wrest the gun away. Vasquez was shot in the hand during that struggle. Henry and another man were in serious condition at Parkland Memorial Hospital.

Off-duty police Cpl. James T. Daily, 38, who was working security at the midway, saw Henry lying on the ground and Nabors and Vasquez struggling. Police said Nabors pointed his pistol toward Daily and Daily fired at him. Daily told investigators he believed Nabors fired back, and the officer shot at Nabors again.

However, police said Nabors was shot three times in the chest and once in each arm. Investigators said the five wounds may have been caused by fewer than five bullets, but police were unsure whose gun fired the bullets that killed Nabors and aren't assuming that only one person fired at Nabors.

Eight pregnant women and several bystanders also were injured when surrounding crowds pushed and shoved in a scramble to reach shelter.

In addition to the shooting, at least four people were slightly injured Saturday when a Ferris wheel malfunctioned, jolting back and forth several times and swaying uncontrollably, The Dallas Morning News reported.

27 beluga whales freed from mud near Anchorage

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — While the eyes of the world focused on the effort to free two gray whales stranded in ice near Barrow, rescuers helped save 27 beluga whales that spent more than seven hours trapped in mud near Anchorage.

The whales apparently misjudged the tide and beached itself at about 10 a.m. Sunday on a mud bar about halfway between Girdwood and Portage along the Seward Highway, south of Anchorage.

Dozens of people jammed the roadside to watch the silver-white whales gently flopping on the mud, steam rising from their blowholes. The whales ranged in size from about 6-feet-long to 16-feet-long.

Kayakers Jim Diehl and Riley Cronk braved the treacherous mudflats and swirling currents to spend more than an hour with the whales, pouring water on them and wrapping them in wet tarps and blankets until they could swim free.

"They were all alive. They looked all wrinkly when we first got there and when we left they weren't wrinkly any more," Diehl said.

A helicopter ferried veterinarian Tex Cody and National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration biologists to the stranded animals, and U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service law enforcement agents also visited them.

"We went in and checked all the animals, bathed their eyes and kept them wet," said Roger Mercer, a NOAA biologist. The men threw another dozen wet blankets over the whales and waited for the tide.

The tide came in at about 5:35 p.m. "It was really kind of exciting," Mercer said. "As soon as the tidal water hit them, they started flopping around and then kicking."

The helicopter hovered nearby as the whales swam to freedom.

Apparently most Americans don't keep a close watch on their blood pressure or cholesterol. In a recent survey of 1,000 adults, only 23 percent knew both their blood pressure and cholesterol levels and 46 percent knew neither.

WOMAN

Anghessa was charged with international drug trafficking and organizing groups for illegal export of weapons and terrorist ends. The charges were later dropped.

The Lebanese woman said she was a courier and denied knowledge of the photos, letter or other documents written in Italian that were hidden in her suitcase, police said.

She told police an Italian man was to receive the photographs and documents. Police traced Anghessa through a telephone number in the woman's purse, newspapers said.

Authorities were trying to decipher the coded documents, Finoli said. The letter bearing Steen's name was written in English and "expressed thanks to everyone who was working for his liberation," Finoli said.

Anderson and Sutherland are held by pro-Iranian Islamic Jihad, while Steen's kidnapping was claimed by the Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine.

In Beirut on Sunday, Islamic Jihad distributed a photo of Anderson and repeated its demand for the release of its guerrillas from all foreign jails and the Israeli pullout from south Lebanon in exchange for the hostages' freedom. It threatened reprisal if the demands were not met.

Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, is the longest-held foreign hostage in Lebanon. He was kidnapped March 16, 1985.

Sutherland, acting dean of agriculture at the American University of Beirut, was abducted three months later. He is of Fort Collins, Colo.

Steen, of Boston, was kidnapped Jan. 24, 1987 at Beirut University College, where he taught.

Nine Americans are held by pro-Iranian extremist factions linked to Hezbollah, or Party of God. Others believed held are three Britons, an Irishman and an Italian.

"There have been a number of rather blatantly race-conscious signals that have had the impact of instilling ungrounded fear in whites and alienation from blacks," Jackson said after a 90-minute breakfast he and other black political leaders had with Dukakis.

Dukakis' meeting with the black leaders was the first such gathering since the Democratic convention, said Dukakis spokesman Mark Gearan. A session with Hispanic leaders was planned for Wednesday.

Jackson emerged from the meeting pledging to work harder for Dukakis, and on Sunday night in Atlanta, he delivered a speech calling Bush "one who runs against civil liberties, civil rights, women's rights, the poor and the homeless."

In other developments, a new poll conducted for the Dallas Morning News and the Houston Chronicle showed the Bush-Quayle ticket led the Dukakis-Bentsen ticket among likely Texas voters by 52 percent to 42 percent.

The survey of 776 potential voters conducted between Oct. 17 and Oct. 20 had a margin of error of plus or minus four percentage points.

A poll by the Milwaukee Sentinel showed support for Dukakis slipping in Wisconsin. He was backed by 47 percent of the likely voters, compared with 45 percent for Bush. Dukakis had led 50-39 in August.

The telephone survey Oct. 14-18 of 687 likely voters had a four-point margin of error in either direction.

Nebraska's largest newspaper, The Omaha World-Herald, today endorsed Bush over Dukakis. The editorial cited Bush's experience as well as his stands on the issues.

BAYLOR

Houston Judge Paul Pressler and Paige Patterson, president of Criswell Bible College in Dallas, are among those behind the 10-year fundamentalist takeover movement, Reynolds said.

To gain control of the convention and Baylor, fundamentalists first must capture two of three positions — president, first vice president or second vice president. All three positions have equal votes.

The Rev. Joel Gregory, a Fort Worth pastor, probably will run unopposed for president. Moderates have said they will nominate the Rev. Phil Lineberger of Richardson and the Rev. James W. Hatley of Austin for vice president.

The present slate of nominees for trustee positions would be in harmony with Baylor's current administration, Reynolds said.

"As to what will happen down there, that will depend on whether the fundamentalists feel that they have the strength to maybe offer an alternate slate," Reynolds said.

The convention continues through Wednesday.

Cpl. John McAhon today said patrol units were dispatched to the scene of the incident shortly after 11 p.m. Saturday.

Investigating officers continue trying to find witnesses who may have seen the car that ran down the three south side residents before the driver fled the scene, he said.

As of early today, McAhon said, officers have no description of the car or driver.

OPEC

The limits were based on a formula of percentage distribution that has existed since 1986 but had been abandoned this summer when OPEC members exceeded them.

Iran has consistently refused to yield to requests by the Arab group of gulf producers, led by Saudi Arabia, to increase Iraq's official quota in the formula to 2.3 million barrels a day, from a theoretical 1.6 million barrels, which Iraq has never accepted.

Iran's view has been that the size of its population, three times that of Iraq, means that it should have a much larger share of OPEC output in any negotiated accord.

This has encouraged Iraq to continue pumping oil, reaching a level of 2.7 million barrels a day. That makes it OPEC's second-largest producer, after the Saudis.

The Arab producers have contended that it is better to get Iraq back to a lower quota than to insist on excluding it and leaving it free to produce as much oil as it can.

In an attempt to offer Iraq parity, Iran suggested that the domestic consumption of oil for both countries be exempted, while their exports would be at parity.

But Iraq rejected the proposal because the Iranians say their domestic consumption is 1 million barrels a day, while they would only concede that Iraq's domestic consumption totals 300,000 barrels.

For its part, Iraq has said privately to several of the Arab oil ministers within OPEC that it would not accept "one liter less than Iran" in any new quota system.

Speaking in an interview Saturday night, Iran's oil minister, Gholamreza Agazadeh, said his country could not accept "straight parity with Iraq," suggesting that some face-saving formula must be found to prevent an accord from looking like another clear political setback for the hard-pressed regime of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, the Iranian leader.

But even when OPEC succeeds in resolving the problem with Iraq and Iran, the organization must face an even thornier issue: the the booming production of the United Arab Emirates, which have doubled their output to 1.8 million barrels a day in recent months.

Few of the oil ministers here would voice much confidence in any pledges that the Emirates make about respecting OPEC discipline.

But many take refuge in knowing that the country, which has about 1 million residents, is ill-placed to withstand the political will of neighbors like Saudi Arabia, Iraq, and Iraq — if they should agree.

Ronald G. Kalish, senior executive vice president and chief operating officer of Medco Containment Services, stands in the area where prescriptions are filled at the firm's Fort Worth pharmacy.

Mail-order prescriptions gaining new attention

DALLAS (AP) — Rising U.S. medical costs have prompted the resurgence of a 40-year-old method of filling drug orders — mail order.

Eran Broshy, manager of the Boston Consulting Group in New York, said employers and health-care organization interested in stalling the rising medical costs over the past five years have become reacquainted with the mail-order pharmacies begun after World War II by the Veterans Administration.

In July 1987, a study by Broshy found pharmacy by mail cut costs by aggressive substitution of brand name drugs with generic substitutes, bulk buying power and lower dispensing fees.

Now prescriptions by mail are the fastest-growing segment of the $24 billion prescription drug business. Companies as diverse as Plano-based J.C. Penney Co., Baxter Travenol of Dallas and Medco Containment Services Inc. of Elmwood Park, N.J. are competing for a share of the emerging business.

"The industry was just kind of slow and fragmented until the early to mid-80s," said Ronald G. Kalsh, senior executive vice president and chief operating officer for Medco Containment Services.

The mail order companies dispense maintenance medications — which account for about 70 percent of prescription drugs — to corporations and health maintenance organizations. Accute medication prescriptions, prescribed by physicians to treat short-term illness such as the flu, are still ordered through retail pharmacies.

Richard Hannan, president of Penney's Pittsburgh-based Thrifty Drug says the costs of ordering by mail are less because orders are dispensed in 90-day supplies rather than 30-day supplies.

Mail-order drugs now account for about 4 percent of all prescriptions filled, said Medco Containment's Kalish. The New Jersey Company claims 50 percent to 60 percent of the mail-order pharmacy business followed by J.C. Penney's Thrifty Drug unit.

"It's a small piece of the total prescription business, but its growing faster than the overall industry," Kalish said.

But not everyone agrees that mail order is cheaper. Luther Parker, executive director of the Texas Pharmaceutical Association in Austin, said mail order has hidden costs.

"There's a lot higher expenditure for the drug product in these larger quantities," he said. "This creates waste. If a drug product can't be tolerated by the patient you have a 90-day supply wasted instead of a 30-day supply."

Maintenance troubles B-1 bombers, study says

STATE

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Air Force's B-1 bombers are grounded with maintenance problems far more than the aging planes they are supposed to replace, says a congressional study.

The General Accounting Office study said the time that B-1s weren't available at Dyess Air Force Base in Texas due to maintenance problems ranged from 47 percent to 66 percent.

For systems that have been flying longer, such as the FB-111 and the B-52, the Air Force expects that the total of "not mission capable" rates won't exceed 25 percent of the available hours.

The Air Force responded to the figures by saying it won't have enough experienee with the B-1 until 1994 to consider the plane "mature," as the FB-111 and B-52 are now considered.

Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, disagreed. "When the GAO suggested standards by which to judge the reasonableness of breakdowns, they were told the plane isn't mature yet. But its maturity is being pushed back further by breakdowns," he said.

The GAO study, released Sunday, concludes that "the B-1B has not been mission capable because of maintenance a significant percentage of the time."

In Air Force parlance, "mission capable" means the ability to carry out an assigned job. In the case of the B-1 — which includes the first four prototype B-1As, which are no longer flying, and the next generation of 100 B-1Bs — that would mean a nuclear strike on the Soviet Union.

"The Air Force says the B-1B has been ready to go to war for two years, but when it comes to pinning the service down on some of the plane's problems, the answer is the plane is still just a kid," said Aspin, one of the plane's chief critics.

In response, Capt. Jay DeFrank, a spokesman for the Air Force, said, "This weapon system is not fully mature so it is not valid to compare it to those that are." He added that "all but a few of the B-1Bs could be launched if a wartime crisis were to occur."

DeFrank also said the service wanted to fly the plane more but had been restricted by the Democratic-controlled Congress.

"In fiscal year 1988, Congress specifically cut the B-1 flying hours by 30 percent," DeFrank said. "The Air Force flew all 19,000 flying hours allotted and could have flown more if they had been available."

The B-1 program, killed by President Carter 11 years ago after the first four planes were built, was resurrected in 1981 by President Reagan, who said 100 of the swing-wing planes were needed as replacement for the aging B-52s in America's fleet of atomic bombers. Reagan pledged that all 100 planes would be purchased by 1988 at a cost of $26 billion.

The 100th plane was delivered last spring, but Aspin and other critics have pointed out what they say are serious flaws in the plane's electronic countermeasure system, the complex mix of computers and other weapons designed to outwit Soviet defenses.

The Air Force defends the plane as the world's most sophisticated atomic bomber and says the countermeasure problem can be fixed.

$500 million in bonds proposed for 'colonias'

WESLACO, Texas (AP) — State Comptroller Bob Bullock said his proposal to provide $500 million in bonds for substandard "colonia" subdivisions is similar financially to similar plans that have financed prisons and water projects.

"This project's no different from the building of dams in West Texas, other than the fact that you're dealing with human beings here," Bullock said Sunday after announcing the plan that would bring water and sewerage systems to the colonias concentrated on the Texas-Mexico border.

"It will take all of us working together to turn the faucets on," Bullock said, while presenting the plan to 900 delegates of Valley Interfaith, a coalition of members of 39 Lower Rio Grande Valley churches that have worked to bring attention to the colonias.

Bullock said sponsors of the bill will be State Sen. Hector Uribe, D-Brownsville; State Rep. Juan Hinojosa, D-McAllen and State Rep. Alex Moreno, D-Edinburg.

Hinojosa said colonias have undergone "study after study. It is now time for action."

An estimated 140,000 people live in approximately 31,000 residences in colonias along the border from El Paso to Brownsville, many without wastewater systems and some lacking drinking water. Outdoor toilets, unpaved streets and plywood and cinder-block houses are common sights in the colonia areas, which, often are the product of unscrupulous real estate developers and a lack of county zoning authority.

Bullock said the bonds would pave the way for matching federal funds in any future congressional action addressing the colonias.

Bullock's plan, developed in cooperation with the Texas Water Development Board, and the lieutenant governor's and state treasurer's offices, would issue up to $500 million in general obligation or revenue bonds over a five-year period.

Based on figures from a Texas Water Development Board engineering study, it would cost about $6,700 per residence to provide water and wastewater services, according to the comptroller.

The $500 million in bonds would be enough to serve 74,000 residences, according to the plan, which takes future population growth into consideration.

At an 8 percent interest rate for revenue bonds, total annual debt service would cost about $40 million, according to the comptroller's office.

Colonia residents would pay an estimated $18 million of that debt service if they could afford payments of $30 per month, according to the proposal. That would leave the state to pay the remaining $22 million in principal and interest if only the more expensive revenue bonds were used.

During the first two years, if only revenue bonds were used, the total debt service would be $26.3 million, with the state's portion being $23.6 million, according to the comptroller's plan.

Ad agencies are not for everyone.

Let's face it. It costs to engage the services of a professional advertising agency.

Unless a company is committed to a consistent advertising strategy, it will not benefit from an agency's ability to create advertising for a variety of media. Only with an on-going commitment will a company that is expanding, seeking exposure or introducing a new product/service see its marketing goals achieved.

For some companies, like Susie's Lemonade Stand, on site signage and point-of-purchase displays are sufficient due to a shrewd choice of location. But most businesses need to blow their own horns louder and farther. Competition demands it.

Creating effective advertising involves clearly defined goals, knowledge of the market, imagination, and careful thought. And all of that takes time.

When you're ready to put the squeeze on the competition . . .

Dominey and Etheridge is a team of highly creative specialists who can apply their skills, knowledge and experience to create effective advertising for your business. We can bring imagination and consistency to all your advertising. Perhaps you could benefit from our expertise. Let's talk about it.

Millions of Americans think sun circles earth

CHICAGO (AP) — Nearly 500 years after Copernicus postulated that Earth revolves around the sun, millions of Americans think otherwise, suggests a poll that found vast numbers of the nation's adults "scientifically illiterate."

Many Americans also mistakenly believe that laser beams are focused sound waves and that atoms are smaller than electrons, said Jon Miller, director of the Public Opinion Laboratory at Northern Illinois University, who conducted a nationwide survey for the National Science Foundation.

In a July telephone survey, 2,041 adults 18 or older were asked about 75 questions on basic science, Miller said. The survey had a margin of error of plus or minus 3 percentage points.

Asked whether the Earth goes around the sun or the sun around the Earth, 21 percent replied incorrectly. Seven percent said they didn't know.

In the early 16th century, the Polish astronomer Nicholas Copernicus laid the foundation for modern astronomy with his heliocentric theory of planetary motion in which the planets revolved around a motionless sun.

Forty-five percent correctly said it takes a year for the Earth to orbit the sun, but 17 percent said one day, 2 percent said one month and 9 percent didn't know.

"The results show that on very basic ideas, vast numbers of Americans are scientifically illiterate," Miller said Sunday. "It's a fairly dire situation."

The results of the survey haven't been fully tabulated yet, but it appears that 93 percent to 95 percent would have to be considered scientifically illiterate, lacking fundamental knowledge of scientific vocabulary, methodology and an understanding of science's impact on the world, said Miller. The group's 1985 survey found a 95 percent illiteracy rate.

The results indicate many Americans have little idea of what presidential candidates are talking about when they list key issues such as the Strategic Defense Initiative, acid rain, the greenhouse effect and the space race, he said.

Leon Lederman, who last week was named co-winner of the 1988 Nobel Prize for physics and is director of the Fermi National Accelerator Laboratory in Batavia, called the latest findings "pretty devastating."

"How you can preserve democracy when the world is increasingly more complex scientifically and technologically, and people are increasingly more ignorant of the issues?" he asked.

On other questions, the survey found that 43 percent said correctly that electrons, which are components of atoms, are smaller than atoms; 20 percent thought they were larger and 37 percent had no idea.

Choctaw social worker holds his sacred ground

INDEPENDENCE, Ohio (AP) — A social worker who is a Choctaw Indian has fought for four years to protect eight weedy acres he believes are a desecrated Indian burial ground.

"You want to cry. You just want to cry," Mel Fletcher said recently. "You can feel the spirit when you go there.

"I'll tell you exactly what one of our medicine men felt," said Fletcher. "Mad Bear dropped to the ground with his hands to the sky."

Since 1984, the social worker at Akron's North American Indian Center has fought to protect the plot known as South Park, which has been threatened as a potential source of cover soil for an adjacent landfill pit.

The site has been ravaged over the years, mostly by pothunters hunting artifacts from centuries ago, when Indian tribes lived on the bluff above the Cuyahoga River.

David S. Brose, curator of archaeology at the Cleveland Museum of Natural History, said he was unsure whether the site was a burial ground or an Indian village.

The last museum research in the area was halted in 1981, partly due to "careless looting of what partially disturbed deposits still existed," said a report by Brose.

The area "has been dug up in places by amateurs and professionals," said North American Indian Center Director Clark Hosick. "There are still a number of remains there. It's kind of overgrown now, or you would be able to see remains strewn about on the ground."

Only about 25 percent of the original site remains, Hosick said. The rest was destroyed when the 19-acre, 300-foot-deep landfill pit was excavated.

"It's a site we want to see protected. It's gone far enough, and it doesn't need to be disturbed anymore," said Hosick.

Ohio Environmental Protection Agency Director Richard L. Shank is expected to decide the merits of an application for a landfill permit by landfill owner Boyas Excavation Co.

Fletcher, a 60-year-old member of the Choctaw tribe native to Oklahoma and Mississippi, has lived in northeast Ohio since 1949. He didn't find out about the site until 1984, when he read a newspaper column describing how it had been torn up by amateurs seeking Indian mementos.

With no public announcement, Fletcher and about a dozen other Indians broke through a gate at the site and set up a traditional Indian camp for a weekend.

"When you get a bunch of young folks involved, it's pretty hard to control them," Fletcher recalled. "Especially natives, because they're so moved by this, it makes them angry inside. We wanted to keep the public sentiment with us. We were told we would be arrested, but that really didn't materialize."

Fletcher returns to the site once or twice a week. On one recent visit, he pointed to new shallow pits left by what he called "grave robbers."

But recent events have encouraged him to believe the site will soon belong to Indians again.

State Sen. Grace Drake has introduced legislation that would forbid creation of a landfill in any public park. South Park is adjacent to the Cuyahoga Valley National Recreation Area.

At his home, Fletcher keeps bones he found at the site in 1984 which he believes are those of a young Indian woman. He said he will return the bones to the ground only when Indians again control it.

"You can't separate the bones from the spirit," Fletcher said.

Environmental rules costly, EPA claims

WASHINGTON (AP) — Recent and future environmental regulations could impose significant costs on small towns, farmers and small businesses and mean increases averaging $100 to $170 in municipal fees by 1996, according to a study by the Environmental Protection Agency.

An in-house EPA committee report to Administrator Lee M. Thomas suggests the agency and state governments might have to consider new ways to help those affected by some 85 major rules involving everything from pesticide use to controls on dry cleaning solvents.

The committee made no attempt to assess the benefits of the regulations, but cautioned they must not be ignored.

It suggested federal, state and local governments consider, among other things, "public education" as one helpful tactic.

"Making people aware of the potential net benefits to be gained by investing in environmental protection should provide a better forum for assessing the merits of the project," the committee wrote.

It said the agency may need to encourage other tactics such as more technical assistance, changes in fee structures, grants to particularly poor communities and incentives to cooperate with others, as in regional water systems embracing several communities.

Warning that cost estimates couldn't be derived for several important regulations such as asbestos control in schools, the study said the average household nationwide by 1996 might have to pay $100 a year more in charges, fees and taxes because of regulations on drinking water, waste water treatment and solid waste disposal.

The cost was greater at the extremes — an average of $170 more in communities under 2,500 residents and $160 in communities of at least 250,000.

In 20 percent of the smaller places, current charges could more than double, but nationwide only 2 percent of the households would see an increase that large.

People living in smaller communities generally have lower incomes, and the study estimated current and future costs for these environmental services could total 0.7 percent of household income for towns of fewer than 2,500 people compared with 0.5 percent for larger places.

Based on the finances of a sample of 207 municipalities, the study estimated that 12 percent to 30 percent of communities of fewer than 2,500 people could have trouble financing capital expenditures the regulations are expected to require.

No such sample was possible for farms, so the committee examined the books of typical farms in "average" and "vulnerable" financial conditions for three types of operations — an Illinois corn and soybean operation, of which there are about 31,000; a Mississippi farm growing cotton and soybeans, of which there are about 1,800; and a Kansas farm producing wheat and cattle, of which there are about 20,000.

Assuming that the agency tried to promulgate regulations with minimum costs and that not every farmer in average financial condition had to meet every requirement — a kind of "average impact" scenario — income before depreciation would fall by 3 percent for the Mississippi and Kansas farms and by 0.7 percent for the Illinois farm.

Israelis raid military base in Lebanon

TYRE, Lebanon (AP) — Two Israeli warplanes blasted a military base of a Syrian-backed militia in southeast Lebanon with four rockets today, police said. Israel's military command said the base was destroyed.

There were no immediate word on casulties among militiamen at the Syrian Social Nationalist Party base in Beit Lehia, nine miles north of Israel's self-designated security zone in south Lebanon.

The 1:30 p.m. attack was Israel's 17th air raid in Lebanon this year and the second since Wednesday, when a suicide car bomber of the pro-Iranian Hezbollah militia killed eight Israeli soldiers and wounded seven.

In Jerusalem, Israel's military command issued a statement saying all planes returned safely to base and pilots reported destroying the target, which served the guerrillas as a base for conducting raids.

Lebanese police said ambulances and fire engines were sent to the base, near the town of Mashghara in south-central Lebanon.

On Friday, Israeli jet fighters bombed Palestinian and Shiite guerrilla bases in south Lebanon, killing 21 people and wounding 34.

Earlier today, Israeli troops and allied militiamen of the South Lebanon Army stormed a house in south Lebanon and freed a family held hostage by Shiite Moslem guerrillas, the militia's radio station said.

The 1:30 p.m. attack was Israel's 17th air raid in Lebanon this year and the second since Wednesday, when a suicide car bomber of the pro-Iranian Hezbollah militia killed eight Israeli soldiers and wounded seven.

The Voice of the South said all seven Shiite guerrillas who had broken into the house of an unidentified militiamen and held this family hostage were detained.

The incident occurred in the village of Kfar Kela, site of the car bombing Wednesday.

About 12 miles northeast of Kfar Kela, Israeli troops and SLA militiamen captured two Palestinian guerrilla infiltrators in the foothills of Mount Hermon shortly after daybreak, security sources said.

Israeli troops and SLA militiamen killed four guerrillas of the Marxist Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine on the slopes of Mount Hermon in the south Lebanon security zone on Sunday.

Storm kills at least 50, threatens El Salvador

By MARCOS ALEMAN

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — The government declared a state of emergency and evacuated residents from flood-prone coastal areas in the path of a tropical storm that re-energized in the Pacific today after killing 111 people as an Atlantic hurricane.

In Nicaragua, the storm killed at least 50 people and left 300,000 homeless as it crossed the Central American isthmus, its 125 mph winds weakening to tropical storm status along the way.

But the storm gained strength over the warm waters of the Pacific. Forecasters gave what had been Joan a new name, Miriam, and said it could become the first Atlantic hurricane to gain the same status in the Pacific.

"We are ready for it," declared Interior Minister Edgardo Belloso Funes as rains began falling in southeastern El Salvador. He said a hurricane last struck El Salvador in 1934.

At 2 a.m. EDT, Miriam's center was just off the coast near the El Salvador-Guatemala border with maximum sustained winds near 55 mph over a small area around the center, said the National Weather Service in Miami.

It said the storm was was moving west-northwest at 10 mph and was expected to continue in that direction for another 24 hours.

Tropical storm warnings covered the Pacific coast of El Salvador and Guatemala. Flash flood and mud slide warnings were in effect for El Salvador.

"As soon as it got over the water offshore, it started to strengthen again," said weather service forecaster Randy Lascody in Miami.

Officials closed the international airport in El Salvador on Sunday and ordered all oceangoing vessels to remain in port.

Gen. Carlos Vides Casanova, the defense minister, said residents of flood-prone coastal areas in the eastern provinces of La Union, San Miguel and Usulatan were being moved inland. Armed forces units were on alert to assist the evacuations, he said.

Ninety-nine percent of the buildings in Bluefields, Nicaragua were destroyed by Hurricane Joan on Sunday. The storm, renamed Miriam, is now threatening El Salvador.

Heavy rains fell in southwestern Honduras along the Gulf of Fonseca Sunday morning before tapering off, weather officials there said. The government reported no flooding or evacuations.

The Honduran Red Cross said one fisherman was reported missing in the gulf, which is shared by El Salvador, Honduras and Nicaragua.

Hurricane Joan left 21 dead in Costa Rica, four in Panama, 25 in Colombia, and 11 in Venezuela on its six-day rampage along the Caribbean coast and then across Nicaragua to the Pacific Ocean.

In Nicaragua, authorities labored to restore communications and care for the homeless. The Sandinista government said it would make a full evaluation of the destruction today and appealed for international aid.

Cuban planes carrying doctors and the first shipments of food and medicine arrived in Managua and the devastated Caribbean port of Bluefields on Sunday.

Bluefields' mayor, Henningston Omeir, appealed for urgent aid while in London Sunday, saying the economy was already in trouble before the storm.

Nicaraguan officials said 21 died in and around Bluefields, 180 miles east of Managua. The city of about 38,000 was 90 percent destroyed when Joan struck early Saturday.

The storm felled trees, electrical towers and telephone lines as it ripped into Managua, the Nicaraguan capital. Many people living in riverbeds near Managua lost their homes.

We want to hear from you. We want to hear what your needs are. What your goals and dreams are made of — because more than anything else, we want to help you fulfill them. For only when we help you succeed will we achieve our own success.

You see, NCNB Texas is dedicated to bringing Texas a strong, secure bank. We promise to support you with the strength of a bank that manages over $50 billion in assets. And we'll serve you from more than 121 locations across the state. Plus we'll provide the very best in products and services we know how to create.

Additionally, we offer one more thing: a "can do" attitude on your behalf. An attitude that says when you put us to work for you, we'll try as hard as any bank you've ever seen. Our goal is to be the hardest-working, smartest-working bank in Texas.

Now there may be some doubters out there among you. That's fine. You have every right to be skeptics. So I'd like to give this challenge to you from the 15,000 NCNB Texas employees. Come by and tell us what your needs are, and see just how fast NCNB Texas rolls up its sleeves — and how hard we'll work for you.

In other words, put us to the test. What have you got to lose? The next move is yours.

Nuclear mistakes must be corrected

Recent weeks have brought a disturbing series of disclosures about accidents and deterioration in the government-owned plants producing nuclear weapons and related materials. The situation calls for a multibillion-dollar program of restoration and replacement of worn-down facilities, and the cleanup of dangerous accumulations of toxic and radioactive waste.

The Energy Department, which inherited the nuclear weapons program from the old Atomic Energy Commission, has acknowledged a long list of mistakes and mishaps at dozens of current and former sites. The department's new candor has been spurred by press disclosures and congressional concerns, and by desire to pave the way for a substantial rebuilding of the production network, now at 15 locations. The cost of repairs is put at $13 billion from 1989 to 1995, with construction of some new plants to require further funding. Estimated costs of toxic cleanups from activities going back to the Manhattan Project of World War II range from $50 billion to $175 billion over the next 50 years.

The nation has been spared a major disaster in the design and production of weapons on which the U.S. nuclear deterrent is based. Some of the incidents at the contractor-managed plants, however, are scary enough — they demonstrate a potential for catastrophe in the near future. Confidence in the government's oversight of the work is not helped by news that top officials of the Energy Department and the AEC were unaware of a long series of accidents at the Savannah River plant in South Carolina.

There is no question about the necessity of rehabilitating the nuclear weapons complex and reforming its management at a high level of efficiency. The country's security and health depend on prompt correction of the whole array of horrors, including those that have not happened yet but could if improvement is not forthcoming.

Texas needs Bentsen

Many claims have been made during this campaign, but I am particularly concerned about one piece of misinformation that is being used to incorrectly portray Sen. Lloyd Bentsen's stand concerning the Windfall Profits Tax.

Opponents of the senator have circulated an editorial from the Dec. 18, 1979 Wall Street Journal that suggests the Windfall Profits Tax be named the Bentsen Tax because the senator supposedly supported the tax. These same opponents are careful not to refer to a letter of response from Chester (Chet) Upham, a prominent Texas Republican who at the time was chairman of the Texas Republican Party and president of the Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners association, that appeared in the Dec. 31, 1979 issue of the Journal. In his letter, Upham said, "I strongly disagree that Senator Bentsen should be faulted for his actions concerning the votes of cloture... the practical situation is that a "windfall profit tax" is going to passed in some form and Senator Bentsen, along with Senator Dole, showed dedication and superior leadership in producing the least offensive Senate Finance Committee report."

Mr. Upham went on to say that, "Senator Bentsen used his skill, ability, and parliamentary tools to achieve what he felt was the best compromise available. The bill was going to come out of the Senate one way or another and we cannot afford to second guess the leaders — Democrat or Republican — who have fought the total concept." This bipartisan defense of Texas' senior senator should be enough to correct the misrepresentations that continue today.

Texas needs its elected officials to be able to influence legislation and events to the benefit of the state. Sen. Bentsen did so when he required the repeal of the windfall profits tax in the face of opposition from the House. As chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Sen. Bentsen is better able to help Texas than could a junior senator who would be among the lowest ranking minority members in the Senate.

Texas needs Lloyd Bentsen in the U.S. Senate.

Who's doubled debt?

In 1960 a Catholic ran for president of the United States as a Democrat. The Republicans said a Catholic president would turn the U.S. Government over to the Pope and funnel large sums of money to Catholic schools; he would look to Rome for all his decisions pertaining to government and we would no longer have a representative government. In effect, we were told the president had great power and a Catholic president would misuse it.

In the last eight years the national debt had doubled. Just the interest on the debt amounts to more than $600 per year for every man, woman and child in the country. Who is to blame? Why Congress, of course. The president has no power.

'Tax and spend' party

There seem to be some people who do not understand the platform of the Democratic Party, which is one of "tax and spend," weak on crime and soft on defense. The ones affected by their program are the poor as well as middle class.

The Democratic Party is trying to convince voters that the budget deficit plaguing our nation is the fault of Ronald Reagan and the Republicans when the truth is every budget President Reagan has submitted to reduce the deficit has been killed by the Democratic Congress. We know the mess Ronald Reagan walked into in 1980 — almost a half century of uncontrolled Big Government spending by the Democratic leadership. This has been the real culprit of the budget deficit.

One of the main problems of the Democratic presidential candidate is the fact he is a card-carrying member of ACLU (American Civil Liberties Union).

Voters need to realize the Republican Party is the one party that is sound, reasonable and caring.

Scouting complaint

I am writing to protest the blatant political misuse of Buffalo Trails Council, Boy Scouts of America. This misuse takes the form of an announcement in the most recent council newsletter.

This announcement, laid out in classified display format and outlined in black to attract attention, states that "——" (I withhold the name) is "a strong supporter of Scouting in west Texas." At this time, that same individual is also a candidate for public office on next month's ballot.

As one of our country's finest youth service organizations, the Boy Scouts of America should and must be highly interested in the political process by which our country operates. But that interest must be non-partisan. There is so much that scouting can do to promote the interest of all Americans in the political process. But appearing to pander to the special interests of an individual seeking public office by printing an endorsement of that individual, is not one of the ways.

JACK ANDERSON

Demos likely to control both houses

WASHINGTON — The polls show George Bush headed for victory on Nov. 8, but if he wins, his coattails will be light. The Bush momentum is not strong enough, nor is the Bush persona charismatic enough, to sweep a majority of Republicans into Congress.

Jack Anderson

Look for the Democrats to pick up at least four seats in the Senate and more than 10 in the House, leaving that party solidly in the driver's seat in both houses.

The current mix in the House is 255 Democrats to 177 Republicans and the Democrats have no chance of losing that overwhelming majority.

The split in the Senate is narrower — 54 Democrats to 46 Republicans. The Senate has always operated as the more conservative of the two houses of Congress. But with a few more Democrats on the roles and another Republican in the White House, the Democrats will be able to wield more control over the president — move votes to override veetoes, cut off Republican filibusters, oppose administration foreign policy, block Supreme Court appointments and in general set up a state of impasse between the executive and legislative branches.

The policies most likely to be manipulated by a stronger Democratic majority in the Senate include tax hikes, increased spending on social programs, more regulation of industry and financial institutions, a higher minimum wage and expanded health insurance requirements.

Here is what the experts and pollsters are predicting for the state-by-state Senate races: The Republicans have a lock on Indiana, Missouri, Pennsylvania, Utah and Wyoming. The GOP is not a shoo-in, but still has the advantage in California, Connecticut, Delaware, Rhode Island and Vermont.

Virginia and Nebraska will turn Democratic. The Democrats also have a strong chance of taking Washington, Minnesota and Nevada. Those states showing a tilt toward the Democrats are Ohio, North Dakota, New Jersey and Montana. States that are safely in the hands of Democrats are Arizona, Hawaii, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Mexico, New York, Tennessee, Texas and West Virginia.

Open seats in Florida, Mississippi and Wisconsin are too close to call.

Who will sit at the top of the heap as the first new Senate majority leader in more than a decade? The retiring majority leader Robert Byrd of West Virginia has promised his support to Daniel Inouye of Hawaii. But Inouye has some tough competition from George Mitchell of Maine.

Mitchell is young by Senate standards, 55, and more vigorous than the 64-year-old Inouye. Mitchell won many admirers and is owed many political favors from his term as the Senate Democratic Committee chairman in 1986. Inouye left a bad taste in the mouths of some Senators with his handling of the Iran-contra committee. He may not have the confidence of his peers to lead the Senate against another four years of a conservative agenda from the White House.

Inouye had a better chance when Michael Dukakis was leading in the polls. The Democrats were not as concerned about the leadership of the Senate when they thought they had the leadership of the country locked up.

NO PRIVATE FLEET — If the United States were drawn into a full scale war tomorrow, it wouldn't have the ships to carry troops and supplies to the front. The military traditionally has relied on the merchant marine to pitch in with transport duties during a war. At the end of World War II, America was the largest ship building power in the world and had more than 2,000 ships in the merchant marine fleet. But today, there are less than 400 and by the year 2000, experts project there will be a mere 220 merchant ships.

No privately owned ship has been built in a U.S. yard in the past year and there are no new orders in sight. The only thing keeping the shipbuilding industry afloat in America is Navy contracts.

Transport specialists at the Pentagon say America's sealift capacity is inadequate to supply even a single-theater conflict, let alone a world war.

Last year, a congressional committee recommended a number of incentives to encourage a more viable merchant marine, but Congress has largely ignored the problem.

MORE YEN YET — Moves to deregulate the Japanese financial system may result in even more Japanese investment in the United States. For one thing, Japanese insurance companies are now allowed to put up to 5 percent of their assets in foreign investments. The old limit was 3 percent. The Japanese central bank has been lowering interest rates as American banks raise their rates. That makes it more attractive for Japanese investors to put their money here.

There is also the matter of the $2.4 trillion nest egg. That is the amount Japanese depositors have in a particular type of savings account that their government has recently decided to tax. The interest rate on those accounts has been tax free for a quarter of a century. The expectation is that some of those depositors will shop around for a better return on their savings. Common sense says a portion of that nest egg will wind up in American investments.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Oct. 24, the 298th day of 1988. There are 68 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

In 1945, the United Nations officially came into existence as its charter took effect. The world body began with 51 members in 1945, a figure that has more than tripled since then.

On this date:

In 1537, Jane Seymour, the third wife of England's King Henry VIII, died 12 days after giving birth to Prince Edward, later King Edward VI.

In 1648, the Peace of Westphalia ended the Thirty Years' War and effectively destroyed the Holy Roman Empire.

In 1861, the first transcontinental telegraph message was sent as Justice Stephen J. Field of California transmitted a telegram to President Abraham Lincoln.

CHARLEY REESE

Fall into social disintegration growing closer

Nearly all the problems and the source of much dissatisfaction in our society stems from one basic cause: a sea change in the way a majority of Americans view government.

Charley Reese

In the beginning of the American republic, most Americans saw the function of government as protecting their rights. That is precisely how the Declaration of Independence defines the purpose of government.

Gradually, however, a majority of people have come to view the government as a source of income. This attitude runs the gamut from large corporations to recipients of entitlements, a category which includes not just the poor or the elderly but cities and states and non-profit social service organizations and academics and universities.

The gist of domestic political speech is now almost entirely concerning economic gains and losses. American politicians may speak of freedom in foreign policy debates but in domestic matters, they speak only of economic benefits. The thrust of political organization in America today is economic, as various groups or categories band together to lobby, bribe, cajole or extort government for economic benefits, privileges, and special favors.

This fundamental view of government is like a continental divide — everything else flows from whether you see government as a protector of rights or a provider of economic advantage. Necessarily, for example, those who see government as a protector of rights insist on a small government with narrowly defined powers. That's so because the greatest threat to individual freedom is always government.

Necessarily, those who see government as a provider of economic benefits insist on a large government with broadly defined powers since government can only hand out what it first acquires. To provide enormous benefits requires enormous revenues. A sow with 10,000 teats must necessarily be a large, hungry sow.

Another consequence of supermarket government is the fostering of selfishness. Everyone soon realizes they are paying to stock the shelves so they join the mob fighting for the goods. Egalitarian lip service notwithstanding, inevitably the more intelligent, energetic and ruthless run off with the lion's share of the loot. People who can't afford lobbyists or big buck contributions get the short end of the stick.

Inevitably supermarket governments become over-extended, as ours is. While there is no limit on the power to tax, there is a limit on the amount of wealth in existence to be taxed. Following the laws of economics, the increasingly scarce benefits become more expensive, resulting in an increasingly intense competition to get them.

A nation which is nothing more than a collection of selfish, self-seeking factions eventually self-destructs because there is no one, either in government or out of it, concerned with the common good of the nation as a whole. Like acid, selfishness burns away the connecting tissue of community. People begin to see each other as competitors or enemies, not as neighbors with shared interests.

Even people who claim to be charitable and compassionate are in fact merely using the objects of their alleged charity as an argument for the grant of government favors. The real beneficiaries of the welfare state are the welfare state administrators.

We haven't reach the final stage of social disintegration but we are getting there. You find fewer and fewer subjects which people are not willing to abuse, malign or misrepresent to further their own selfish goals whether it's public health problems or national defense. You find a rising level of social paranoia, callousness, rudeness, vulgarity, cynicism and brutality.

Whenever it's one for one, and none for all, eventually it becomes hell for all.

Tyson clear underdog in bout with Givens

A number of inquiring minds have come to me and asked, "Lewis, with your vast experience in divorce, what do you make of the Mike Tyson-Robin Givens spat?"

Grizzard

It is most certainly true that I am an expert in this area.

Thrice I have gone into the divorce ring myself. I lost once by decision, failed to answer the bell in another, and last time out was kayoed in the first round, and all the cut men on earth couldn't have stitched me back together again.

As far as Tyson-Givens goes, I have sided with him because — likely for the first time in his life — he is a decided underdog.

He's got his wife and his mother-in-law to do battle with and that is a two-on-one fast break of epic proportion.

That thought leads me to the first of several conclusions I've made regarding this situation.

■ Conclusion No. 1: Mike Tyson lost control the day he allowed his mother-in-law to move in. With Momma in the house, he no longer stood a chance.

It is always my advice to young men approaching marriage to move their brides as far away from their mothers as possible.

If mother-in-law lives in Idaho, it is best to move to the East Coast somewhere, or to be really certain there will be no agitation, Europe would be a better bet.

■ Conclusion No. 2: Robin has claimed her husband beat her up. I can't put much faith in that statement because her head appears still to be in the right place.

Mike Tyson is the heavyweight boxing champ of the world. When he punches out somebody, they stay punched out for a long time.

Ask Michael Spinks or that gentleman Tyson beat up on a street corner in Hariem what it's like to have Mike Tyson in your face.

■ Conclusion No. 3: If Tyson were going to punch out somebody, he should have started with his mother-in-law.

■ Conclusion No. 4: Tyson claimed he was drugged prior to the interview he and his wife gave to Barbara Walters on television.

Maybe he was or maybe he wasn't. It really doesn't matter because if Tyson thinks he's been drugged before, wait until he goes into divorce court. He'll be drug (sic) through the courtroom and up one side and down the other.

■ Conclusion No. 5: Because of what I mentioned in Conclusion No. 4, Tyson should settle out of court. He's worth $50 million. Wife and Mama can't be that greedy, can they? They'd probably settle for 5 or 6 of the 50 big ones and that would be that.

Afterwards, Mike could have a little peace and quiet in his life again. And come to appreciate fully the meaning of the national anthem of divorced men, Roy Clark's immortal "Thank God and Greyhound She's Gone."

Statistics don't tell whole story of airline safety, experts say

WASHINGTON (AP) — If accidents are the barometer, there is no doubt that air travel is safer today than a decade ago when Congress deregulated the industry. But aviation safety experts say those statistics don't tell the whole story.

Concerns persist about the government's ability to keep airlines honest when industry executives in a fiercely competitive environment must face the twin challenges of safety and the bottom line.

The number of fatal accidents is down, as are accident rates. But the safety experts say there are frightening signs of an erosion in the safety cushion that air travelers traditionally have come to expect.

Example:

— As Continental Airlines Flight 1713 rolled down a snow-covered Denver runway last November, at the controls was a 26-year-old pilot who had flown only 36 hours in a commercial jet and — it was later found — had a history of control problems with even smaller propeller aircraft.

The McDonnell Douglas DC-9 crashed seconds after takeoff, killing 28 of the 82 people aboard. Investigators blamed ice on the wings and said the young pilot's handling of the plane on takeoff was a contributing factor.

— About the same time, Boeing Co. officials warned Aloha Airlines of dangerous corrosion on the skin of several of the airline's oldest Boeing 737s and questioned their airworthiness. But the planes kept flying and the Federal Aviation Administration was unaware of Boeing's concerns.

Five months later a 20-foot roof section of one of those jetliners peeled away at 24,000 feet, sweeping a flight attendant to her death. Although the plane miraculously landed safely, the incident cast a shadow on Aloha's maintenance and inspection programs and raised questions about the ability of the FAA to adequately monitor aircraft maintenance.

— Last August, a federal report warned that controllers at O'Hare International Airport in Chicago were flirting with catastrophe because of manpower shortages, high volumes of traffic and poor training at the facility that handles traffic in some of the country's most crowded and complex airspace.

The FAA launched another investigation, only to learn last month that controller errors were still increasing. The FAA ordered a reduction in flights in and out of O'Hare after finding the airlines had been exceeding federally imposed traffic curbs.

"One needs to be reminded that it is indeed possible to skate successfully on thin ice," says John Enders, president of the Flight Safety Foundation, a private consulting company specializing in aviation safety matters. "But it is much more desirable to skate on thick ice."

"We only know when the ice is too thin, when someone breaks through," he adds.

The airlines reject suggestions that air travel has become any less safe during the decade of deregulation.

A report earlier this year by a presidential commission agreed.

"Deregulation has not in itself made the industry less safe," declared the President's Aviation Safety Commission. It said accident statistics based on rates before and after deregulation showed accidents involving commercial jet aircraft down 55 percent, fatal accidents down 51 percent and passenger fatalities down 45 percent.

John Lauber, a member of the National Transportation Safety Board, says there is no "hard data" to show that airlines are cutting corners on safety or that air travel has become less safe.

He contends one of the problems is that there is no "safety indicator" that can be relied upon to say one way or the other. Nevertheless, he adds, "to say there is no evidence that deregulation has affected safety doesn't mean we should get complacent about it."

"I think we clearly have a safer aviation system today than we did 10 years ago," says Jim Burnett, another NTSB member and its former chairman.

But both Burnett and Lauber, whose agency investigates aviation accidents, suggest there are areas of concern: The continuing growth in air traffic often concentrated near busy "hub" airports, continuing shortages of fully qualified air traffic controllers, too few pilots to meet the demand, a general reduction in pilot experience even at large airlines, and a shortage of federal inspectors to make sure air safety regulations are followed.

"System safety is risk management and the question is how well are we managing risks in the system," says Lauber.

Nevertheless, flying remains one of the safest ways to travel and the U.S. aviation industry has achieved a safety record that continues to improve, according to a study of air safety under deregulation by Congress' Office of Technology Assessment.

That study also expressed doubt that all airlines always treat safety issues as a top priority. While a successful airline might focus more attention on safety, the same priority might not be evident at a financial strapped airline that must choose between discretionary maintenance spending or buying an additional slot at a busy airport, the report said.

It also raised concern about the dwindling experience level of pilots. Today there are many more pilots with little or no jet flying experience being hired by major airlines and commuter airlines, which last year carried nearly 32 million passengers.

At the heart of the FAA's ability to monitor the airlines is its team of aviation inspectors. But at a time when the airlines were expanding rapidly in the early 1980s, the FAA was cutting its cadre of inspectors.

Fort built to protect stagecoach routes may surrender to military cost-cutters

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A U.S. commission looking to close obsolete military bases may be about to play taps for Fort Douglas, and politicians say they may be ready to surrender the post built in 1862 to protect stagecoach routes.

Members of Utah's congressional delegation consider the picturesque fort and its Civil War-era buildings a likely target in the Pentagon's quest to shut about two dozen bases.

They say they'll have to acquiesce if it can be shown that the move would save money, but some are skeptical that any real savings can be had.

"Our main concern is that they operate from up-to-date, accurate data," said Democratic Rep. Wayne Owens, whose district includes the fort.

"If the data is accurate and there's no indication of unfairness, then I don't know what I can do. You can't be for closing down everybody else's things, and not be willing to look at your own."

Congress this month approved legislation that calls for a Pentagon-appointed panel to recommend by Dec. 31 a list of bases to be closed. Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci would have until Jan. 15, five days before leaving office, to accept or reject the entire list. The law aims to save up to $5 billion a year.

Fort Douglas is among a small group of bases that critics have long contended contributes little to the nation's defense.

Built in 1862 in foothills between Salt Lake City and the Wasatch Mountains, the fort was named at President Lincoln's suggestion after his Illinois rival, Sen. Stephen A. Douglas, who died the year before.

Ostensibly built to protect stagecoach routes from Indian attacks, the fort's first commander, Col. Patrick Conner, acknowledged that he chose the foothills overlooking the city so he could keep an eye on Brigham Young's Mormon pioneers. He said they were too friendly with the Indians.

At one point, Conner sought to have Mormon merchants sign a loyalty oath to the United States before allowing them to sell goods to the fort.

In this century, the post housed prisoner-of-war camps in both world wars.

Politicians may be more willing to accept the closure now because the move probably would cost only a fraction of the 414 civilian jobs at the post. And the University of Utah is eager to absorb 112 buildings should the Army declare them surplus, officials say.

Nevertheless, Owens, who suggested the fort be closed two years ago, later decided after a visit it would be cheaper to maintain.

A 1981 congressional study requested by Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah, after the Army announced plans to close the fort reached the same conclusion. It said that although the Army would save money by closing the post, heavy use by military reserve groups made Fort Douglas cost effective overall.

NATION IN BRIEF

Sole survivor shares talent

RENSSELAER, Ind. (AP) — A teenager demonstrated his talent as a gifted pianist to show how far he has recovered since an automobile accident last May which killed four classmates.

Bernard James "B.J." Sell of Brook, a 17-year-old St. Joseph's College freshman, held the free recital Sunday night in the college chapel.

He was the only person to survive a car accident that killed four other honor students at South Newton High School in the northwest Indiana town of Kentland on May 21.

The music was nearly the exact program Sell had intended to play at his high school graduation recital the next day, said Professor John Egan of St. Joseph's, Sell's piano teacher the past 10 years.

On the day of his commencement, Sell was fighting for his life at a hospital as the 59 remaining seniors struggled through the emotional ceremony.

Months of extensive surgery and rehabilitation followed, with Sell receiving support from family, friends and people he had never met.

Workers forced to move

FAIRFAX, Va. (AP) — Hundreds of migrant workers who spent the summer living in tents near the nation's capital are pulling up stakes as campground closings force them back to the high unemployment of their home states.

Officials, meanwhile, hope to find housing alternatives before next summer's anticipated crush of workers seeking the region's plentiful construction jobs but who can't afford its expensive housing.

"This problem is not going away," said Rep. Bob Wise, D-W.Va., who met this summer with West Virginia constituents living in a northern Virginia park.

The migrants, mostly from West Virginia but also from Ohio, Kentucky and Texas, spent the summer on the move because of a Fairfax County rule that requires campers to vacate a campground for at least four days after a maximum seven-day stay.

Illinois diocese sews seeds of hope for farmers

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — Roman Catholics in central Illinois offer prayers for farmers in trouble, but they're also sending a little cash along with the good thoughts this year.

The Diocese of Springfield, which covers 28 counties, is offering interest-free loans of up to $2,000 to area farmers, regardless of religious affiliation.

"We would like to (give) some generous help which comes from the same heart that our prayers come from," says Bishop Daniel Ryan, who heads the diocese.

Applications will be accepted starting next month for the 1989 loan program, dubbed Project Isidore for the patron saint of farmers. For the 1988 growing season, the program's first, about 40 loans averaging $1,000 were made. "The purpose of the project is to provide funds for farmers who are hurting, funds which would help them not to turn away foreclosure on their properties, I'm sorry to say, but which would give them some money for seed or fertilizer or important things like that," Ryan said.

Diocesan officials say the small loans won't save failing farms but might make a difference for farmers who need help.

"We just don't have the availability of funds to stave off these enormous problems which face our farmers," Ryan said, "but we wanted in a realistic way to help them with some items with which we could be of help."

The loans are intended to help farmers with spring planting needs for fuel, seed, feed, fertilizer and chemicals. Farmers can apply between Nov. 7 and Feb. 1, and loan checks will be mailed by the end of February.

Ryan said the money for the program was not from the collection plate but from donors who have chosen to remain anonymous.

The size of this year's program will depend in part on future donations as well as on the ability of the farmers helped so far to repay their loans.

"We do not demand, but we certainly expect repayment, so that we can help others who are in similar plights," Ryan said.

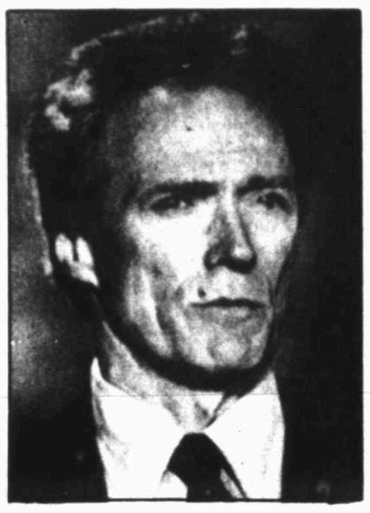
A lifetime jazz fan, Eastwood to produce, direct Parker film

By WILLIAM ARNOLD
Hearst News Service



Clint Eastwood will produce and direct the movie "Bird," which is based on the story of jazz great Charlie "Bird" Parker.

AP Laserphoto

A life-long love of jazz led Clint Eastwood to produce and direct the movie "Bird," the story of jazz great Charlie "Bird" Parker.

Eastwood said he was raised on jazz music — "My mother had a huge collection of Fats Waller records" — he had played piano in jazz bands as a kid, and he remains an avid jazz buff.

"I regard jazz and Westerns as America's only true original art forms," he told journalists at this year's Cannes Film Festival. He came to France to introduce his film, but stayed around just long enough to hold a rare press conference.

The 58-year-old actor-director displayed none of his recent disdain for the press, bantering good-naturedly with mostly European journalists. When asked why he wasn't going to stay in Cannes for at least a full day, he said, "You mean, why don't I go ahead and make your day?"

He said that he would take no "political questions," but would say he was not going to run for president this or any other year, and said he was "relieved" that his term as mayor of Carmel, Calif., was finally over.

"I'm also not interested in a second term — I think I pretty much accomplished what I set out to do."

But he was relaxed when talk turned to "Bird."

"When I was a teen-ager, back in 1947, I was living in Oakland and had gone to a 'Jazz at the Philharmonic' series to see Lester Young, who was my hero in those days," said Eastwood. "There was this alto sax player — Parker — playing with him. I had never heard of him before. But I knew I was seeing something special. That image stayed in my mind for years. So this movie is really the fulfillment of a longstanding ambition."

He said there had been several scripts written about Parker's life over the years.

"This one (by Joel Olianksy) was really good. It was written in about '79 or '80 for Richard Pryor. Columbia owned it but had done nothing with it. It turned out that Warner Bros. (Eastwood's studio base) had something that Columbia wanted, and I told them if they wanted to trade, I'd sure like to have that Charlie Parker script."

Asked how receptive Warner Bros. had been to what seemed an "uncommercial" project, he admitted there was "an executive strata that was concerned about the film's prospects. It is always hard to get studio enthusiasm for a film that is not a comedy or action piece," but the studio "showed good faith throughout the filmmaking process." He pointed out that Warner had financed "'Round Midnight," another jazz movie, for which Eastwood had helped secure financing.

When a reporter pointed out that quite a few liberties were taken with the facts of the musician's life, Eastwood said he "felt good" about the authenticity of the picture, that everything they presented was "true to Parker."

"At one point, Chan Parker (the musician's wife) was looking at a scene and she turned to me and said, 'You know, this did not exactly happen this way, but it certainly could have.' "

Was he worried about the way the film would be received? He shook his head.

"You always hope you're going to be well received, but you can't let yourself think about it too much. If you do, you end up trying to play it safe. And if you really wanted to play it safe, you just wouldn't make the film in the first place."

When asked if it was his intention to make an anti-drug movie, Eastwood said, "No, not exactly. Other movies have done that, and done it well. That was not my main concern. Of course, Bird himself understood what drugs did to him, and he always told his friends to stay away from them — we show all of that. So if someone took this as an anti-drug movie, I would not be terribly disappointed."

Eastwood said he was not concerned about the length of the film — nearly three hours — and had no intention of cutting it down.

Asked about his future plans and whether "Bird" signals a new career as a non-acting director, he said he wasn't sure.

"I never know what I'm going to do next. I enjoy directing very much, but I find I have no problem going back and forth between directing and acting. So I'll probably keep on acting until the public lets me know that it's time to retire."

Seniors Enjoy The Benefits Of Working Out

Whether it's by water, chair or weight, this bunch has fun.

They are Midland's Active Older Adults — the over-50 crowd who are more active during the week than most people who spend their days seated in an office or in front of TV after work.

At the Town West YMCA it's a day of water aerobics — no impact aerobics and weighlifting.

"Different people are here for different reasons...you owe it to yourself to die healthy, " jokes Betty Childs, the Y's senior service director, who this day is conducting a pool aerobics class.

There's no hard push here, just 45 minutes of soothing warmth — a "miracle pond" as Childs' likes to refer to it — which aids arthritis, lowers blood pressure, builds stamina and improves flexibility.

Those attending attest to the benefits of the class, where sometimes, Childs says the biggest challenge is "just getting up the ladder" when it's all over.

You don't have to be Mark Spitz in this pool. In fact, it's easier standing an hour in water than to walk on dry land.

But when they are on dry land, Y seniors are sometimes sitting down. For some, the pool is a warmup to "No Impact" aerobics, which incorporates the use of a chair and elastic.

Midlander Leobelle Martin is 77, a group participant, and loving every minute of it. "It gets me moving around and out of the house...if for no other reason you get to meet a other people."

"People aren't depressed here...they're not complaining and they're not moaning....they're cheerful...I give them all an A for spirit," Martin says as she heads to class.

And no one knows more about spirit then her instructor, Johnnye Montgomery. In fact, her group tires the mindful reporter, who finds himself out breath just watching them.

"We pay a little more attention to warming up and cooling down. We don't want anyone leaving here with a high heart rate," bubbles Montgomery, who leads the session through a barrage of exercises that cover every body group from head to toe — woooo!.

No impact's objective is primarily building the cardio-vascular system. "The second thing is morale," says Montgomery, as she leads the group in a gingerly march around their chairs.

"We encourage them here to socialize...there good friends...they like to tease each other and they have a fun time doing it." Whoops, tape's up. No they don't aerobicize here to beat of Michael Jackson — John Denver does just fine, thankyou.

"We're all over 50, but you'd probably never guess that," says Montgomery as she leads Martin and other group members like 78-year-old Earl Campbell through a series of upper body motions.

All this is even a little much even for YMCA spokeswoman Genie McCartney, who this day is seated on the floor in a corner of the room running a litany of senior programs past a reporter.

"We've had an excellent response from the doctors and the class participants love it," says McCartney. "They tell us they feel better and have more energy...most importantly, it becomes part of their lifestyle."

SENIORS

Just then, Montgomery orders the group to pick up their "green thing," an elastic band that encourages the use of muscles against tension — somewhat like stretching a rubberband.

Following this class, some limbered seniors will be ready for a little weightlifting, which like the other programs is carefully supervised and designed to promote strength, endurance and flexibility through the use of resistance training.

McCartney said similar programs are offered at various other Y facilities around the city, with the exception of its aquatic program, which is held at the Alamo Y for those suffering from arthritis.

Meanwhile, back at the "No Impact" group, the music winds down.

"Alright," chants Montgomery. "We're just about done now ... tuck in those butts ... push out those arms-... see, isn't this nice and relaxing?"

We'll answer that: It certainly beats sitting alone around the house.

High school celebrates 106th birthday

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — R.L. Paschal High School — a school whose graduates have walked on the moon, written best-sellers, quarterbacked National Football League championship teams and founded multi-million dollar companies — has hit the century mark.

Fort Worth's oldest school, located just south of city's downtown, actually is 106 years old this Friday. But hundreds of former Panthers don't care about the numbers — they'll celebrate any time.

"It was just a project to promote school pride," said Jan Hull, a 1962 grad and chairman of Century Celebration. "We feel like there are so many great things going on academically at the school that people don't get to read about. By getting the community involved in their school again through something like this, people find out about Pascal today."

Since June, Ms. Hull and event co-chairmen Jane Gudgen and Suzanne Tucker, 1960 and 1963 graduates, respectively, have been planning an alumni reunion expected to attract Panthers from 37 graduating classes.

Among the more famous grads have been Apollo 12 astronaut Alan Bean, who was the fourth man on the moon and a 1950 grad; the late Fort Worth multi-millionaire Charles Tandy, a business tycoon from the class of 1935; and former Cleveland Browns quarterback Frank Ryan, a 1954 Panther grad, who led his team to the NFL championship in 1964.

Still others were the late Price Daniels, former Texas governor and 1927 Paschal alum; former San Antonio Mayor Lila Cockrell, the first woman to head a major U.S. city and a 1938 grad; and 1948 grad Dan Jenkins, who authored "Semi-Tough" and "Baja Oklahoma," both of which featured Paschal High and its neighboring college, Texas Christian University.

"Dan Jenkins is already here," Ms. Gudgen said. "He is very supportive. Dan Jenkins said Paschal is one of the nation's most-famous high schools."

But in recent years, the school also has been infamous. In 1985, when the school turned 100, newspapers and magazines nationwide reported on Paschal's affluent white gang, who called themselves "The Legion of Doom."

Police reported 10 students and former students — some on the honor roll and football team — were under investigation for at least 30 incidents of violence, including damage to students' cars with a pipe bomb explosion and shotgun blasts.

But Ms. Hull said the school has a new image — one for academic achievement and "multicultural understanding."

Ademically the school has topped the national average on the Scholastic Aptitude Tests, ranking higher than any Fort Worth school with a 927 average. Its math team has consistently led the district in achievement for nine straight years. Paschal recently placed second in Texaco's national Whiz Quiz competition in New Orleans.

Paschal, which began as Fort Worth High School, was a private institution in October 1882. After three years, it grew into a public, sex-segregated school operating in a wooden frame building near downtown and graduating seven students in its first class. In 1891, the frame building was replaced with a stone one a few miles north of the present building.

"It looked like a palace," Ms. Gudgen said. "At the time, it was considered the finest architectural school building in Texas." The classes became co-educational for the first time that year.

After the building burned in 1910, the students had classes in what later became Ernest Parker Junior High. Eight years later, a three-story brick building on West Cannon Street became Fort Worth High School. It was renamed Central in 1923 and later Paschal in 1935, after R.L. Paschal, who had served as principal from 1906 to 1935 when he retired.

Paschal moved to its present location on Fort Worth Southwest side in 1955, when the district added 55 classrooms to what was once McLean Junior High School.

"The building has been added on to numerous times since then," Ms. Gudgen said. "In fact, the new gym built recently will be dedicated at the Century Celebration to former basketball Coach Charlie Turner, who led Paschal to two state championships in 1945 and 1949."

Ms. Hull said current students are using the $5 admission charge to the event to raise money for the latest building improvement — an atrium.

"The atrium will be built to show the original front of the McLain Junior High School," she said. "The teachers are helping, the students are helping and parents are helping. It has been just wonderful to see them all working together on this project. That's what this event is all about — bringing the community and the school together."

Confusing runways blamed for nine near collisions

GRAPEVINE, Texas (AP) — Workers for Delta Air Lines and Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport have painted black and yellow lines and installed strobe lights to separate two taxiways pilots say are so confusing that they have caused nine near collisions of Delta jets in the past year.

"We have two taxiways out there — an inner taxiway and an outer taxiway — and then the runway," said the airport's tower manager Norm Scroggins. "Because there is no grass between the ramp and the inner taxiway, we had several pilots who believed the runway was the outer taxiway."

Federal records show pilot confusion over where the aircraft parking ramp outside Delta's terminal ended and the taxiway began sparked the nine near-collisions in the area — including one on Aug. 31, the same day another Delta plane crashed on takeoff.

But in recent weeks, workers have painted thick black stripes outlined with yellow paint to mark the inner taxiway and have identified the taxiway with 10-foot letters and solar-powered strobe lights.

Officials said procedures for directing Delta flights to the runways also have changed, so planes avoid Taxiway 29, which leads directly from the ramp area to Runway 17L, the first of two parallel runways on the airport's east side.

Delta spokeswoman Jackie Pate told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram the airline has hand-delivered notices to all of its pilots alerting them about the taxiway.

The first problem occurred in October 1987 after the airport covered the grass islands between the parking apron and inner taxiway with concrete.

"A lot of pilots use the grass to guide them," said Richard Petit, the airport's senior director of planning and engineering. "Problem was, there were a bunch more who cut the corners short and their landing gear went into the grass."

The most recent incident occured at 6:30 a.m. Aug. 31, less than three hours before the crash of Delta 1141, when the pilot of Delta Flight 297 mistakenly turned left onto a runway and into the path of a plane that was cleared for takeoff, according to Federal Aviation Administration records.

Airport, Delta and FAA officials stepped up their efforts to correct the problem after the Flight 297 incident, involving a McDonnell Douglas MD-80 bound for Cincinnati, and Delta Flight 638, a McDonnell Douglas DC-9 bound for Houston.

Scroggins said it was the only time two planes reached the runway at the same time.

"It was pretty scary," Scroggins said. "That could have easily been a terrible accident."

A tower controller spotted Flight 297 on the runway just after the plane turned onto it, records indicate.

A recording of conversations between the tower and the two planes indicate that one controller told Flight 297 to halt while another instructed Flight 638 to abort takeoff.

An FAA investigative report indicates Flight 638 came to a stop a few yards from Flight 297.

"It was a relatively low-speed abort, but the pilot decided to let his brakes cool for about 10 minutes before heading back up the runway," Scroggins said.

Hours after the runway incident, Delta Flight 1141, bound for Salt Lake City, crashed just after takeoff on the west side of the airport. Fourteen people died from the crash, which is still under investigation.

Former Texas House speaker accused in real-estate scheme

HOUSTON (AP) — Gus Mutscher, the former Texas House speaker who served four years probation for his role in the Sharpstown Bank scandal, is named in a civil lawsuit accusing him of culling at least $700,000 from investors in a real-estate scheme, the Houston Chronicle reported.

In a copyright story published Sunday, the Chronicle said the money mainly was gathered from former clients of late Houston developer J.R. McConnell, who was charged with bank fraud in connection with real estate deals.

Those clients were recruited by McConnell's one-time top saleswoman, Rohini Divecha. Ms. Divecha later worked for Jarenco Investments of Texas Inc. of Houston, the newspaper said.

Forty-two investors in Jarenco have sued the company, Mutscher, Jarenco President Robert Patrick Renner and Ms. Divecha in state district court, seeking return of their money, plus at least $1 million in punitive damages.

Federal investigators would not discuss the case, but documents obtained by the Chronicle show the FBI is probing Jarenco's and Mutscher's roles in investor losses exceeding $1.2 million.

Mutscher, 55, who has been Washington County Judge since he finished four years probation in 1976, conceded that from January to September 1986 he was paid $733,000 by Jarenco and Renner. Renner also paid him $500,000 for eight acres of land in Brenham in July 1985.

Mutscher, however, said he thought the $733,000 was a loan.

"This is a situation I really don't deserve," Mutscher said. "Mr. Renner came to Brenham to buy my property, but failed to close on the contract."

The investors claim in their lawsuit that Mutscher knew or should have known where the money came from and that they relied on his name and reputation when they invested.

Mutscher said he never knew that a financial statement he gave to Renner was being shown to Jarenco investors with the promise that Mutscher would personally guarantee the return of their money, with interest, if they would buy syndicated shares in the property.

"As to the present allegations, I was never an investor in Jarenco, nor did I ever have any joint interest investments with Mr. Renner, nor was I to retain any interest in the sale of my property," he said.

Renner disappeared from Houston in early 1987 after his finances collapsed.

State corporation records show Jarenco was formed in 1982 by Renner, 39, a recently married transplant from Wichita, Kan., and his bride, Jan Iris. Records on file in Harris County show Renner built and bought strip centers and other properties on money borrowed from banks and individuals.

Renner allegedly would multiply investors' cash by borrowing against it. He would buy certificates of deposit, then pledge them as collateral for a larger bank loan, according to lawsuits by banks that seized those investments after Renner defaulted on notes.

Mutscher and Renner signed a contract in July 1985 for the sale of 146 acres in Brenham for $14.4 million and Mutscher's Coachlight Inn East, a motel, for $3.2 million, Mutscher's attorney, William Ehlert, said.

A purported copy of that contract shows Renner was given until January 1986 to find a buyer for the properties, for which he would earn a 5 percent commission. Renner immediately bought eight acres of the land for $784,000, paying Mutscher $500,000 cash borrowed from the Washington County State Bank in Brenham and signing a promissory note to Mutscher for the balance.

Renner had problems finding a buyer, and was granted extensions until February 1987, Ehlert said. The motel was dropped from the deal, and the price for the remaining acreage was lowered to $11.5 million.

The bank has since repossessed the eight acres after Renner failed to pay back the loan.

Meanwhile, Ms. Divecha left her job at Texas Guaranty Investments in Houston, prompting McConnell to sue her, alleging she followed unwise investment practices and purloined trade secrets and clientele.

McConnell was indicted for bank fraud but committed suicide in July while in the Harris County Jail.

Ms. Divecha, now an economics instructor at San Jacinto Junior College, said recently she was convinced of Renner's credibility. At his instruction, she said, she began selling investments in Mutscher's land, supposed to be guaranteed by first liens on the property — which was already mortgaged — and a personal promissory note from Mutscher. She and her family invested $85,000 in the plan, she said.

The investors now complain they never received the notes or the liens.

Ehlert has filed a motion to remove the lawsuit from Harris County to Washington County, expressing concern over prejudice against Mutscher because of his conviction for conspiracy to accept a bribe during the Sharpstown scandal.

In that controversy, Mutscher and other state leaders were accused of accepting illegal loans in exchange for pushing legislation favorable to Houston developer Frank Sharp.

"We don't expect any favors up here," Ehlert said. "But at least they won't kick him in the teeth and say 'There's old Gus, with his hand in it again.'"

Map aids women in search of love, career

By PATRICIA DIBSIE
Copley News Service

WANTED: RIGHT COMPANY. Creative and productive workplace for woman seeking job advancement. Money not main motivator; this working executive needs company where people make a difference in the office operation. Interested in small, maverick companies as well as huge, well-established ones. Willing to relocate.

WANTED: RIGHT MATE. Bright, successful, female go-getter seeks attentive, committed partner for the most exciting and meaningful merger of a lifetime! Substantial emotional investment pays off in great long-term benefits. Part-timers (and two-timers) need not apply.

Getting that right job and finding that perfect mate is the kind of heaven on earth many women don't expect to find. But why not? Neither seems too complicated if the advice available in most bookstores these days is any indication.

Consider the latest offerings: "Going to Work," by Lisa Birnbach, Villard Books, $15.95, and "Love at Work," by Margaret Kent, Warner Books, $17.95.

Combine the two books, add a pinch of initiative and an ounce of daring and most any woman is assured, if you believe the authors, of a "happily-on-and-off-the-job" lifestyle.

Birnbach is the author of several best sellers — "The Official Preppy Handbook," (a collection of dos and don'ts for the preppy not already in the know) and a college book that taught the finer art of getting along on campus and life as a Greek.

Kent is a practicing lawyer specializing in international law and divorce, a combination that draws more than a few double takes. Three years ago she made the New York Times best-seller list with her book "How to Marry the Man of Your Choice." The $95 book offered a money-back guarantee to any unhappy reader.

KENT SAYS she followed her own advice to catch accountant-husband Robert Feinschreiber.

Both authors are banking on their ability to market their ideas about love and careers. Both are making talk-show rounds, coast to coast.

Birnbach's latest book, "Going to Work," is a busy 743 pages, more than she originally had in mind.

"I had planned a much shorter book," she said in a recent television interview. "I thought it would be a semi-tongue-in-cheek guided tour through the companies around the country, focusing on burning issues like their Muzak and cafeteria fare. But as I spent time talking to various members of the business community, my approach became more serious."

Birnbach has said that she realized her readers wanted less fun and more information. So she got down to business, poking her nose into corporate America — small, maverick companies and larger, well-established ones.

The final product is a unique guided tour through corporate America.

Financial author Tom Peters sums up the book in the foreward: "Birnbach gets down to describing life at work, in big manufacturers and small law firms and consultancies, some 50 enterprises in all. She offers bread-and-butter characteristics of each outfit. Who is hired? How much they are paid? When they can expect a raise? A promotion? What are the benefits, formal and informal?"

Birnbach works for herself these days. Her last company job was as staff writer at The Village Voice, which she left in 1980.

She wanted to find out how and where the identification process began and to know why workers allowed their companies to make major lifestyle decisions for them.

BIRCHBACH SPENT the first couple of months of her research muddling through mounds of business publications, periodicals and books. She trimmed the thousands of listed companies into a top 50 — big to small, east to west, conservative to liberal.

The cities getting the most attention are Atlanta, Boston, Chicago, Dallas, Detroit, Los Angeles, Minneapolis-St. Paul, New York City, San Francisco, Seattle, and Washington, D.C. Not surprisingly, Silicon Valley is mentioned in the book, too.

Following facts and figures on a few companies (Delta Airlines, Polaroid Corp., and The Southland Corp. for examples), Birnbach reverts to her earlier writing style and offers tongue-in-cheek observations city to city on such things as the "best dark bar," "gourmet store guaranteed not to run out of goat cheese or sundried tomatoes," and "place where ladies who lunch are likely to have tea after a hard day of shopping, volunteer work and tennis." You find these listed in her "best" observations.

Birnbach talks about the board room and so does Kent. Only Kent's advice takes a sharp left from board room to bedroom.

"More and more women are telling me that they're finding love at work because they're too busy to look anywhere else," Kent said in a telephone interview. "Women are beginning to take advantage of their jobs to meet men (something mothers could have told them), she says.

"What the '80s woman is learning is that she can have both a husband and a career and that these two goals can reinforce each other."

LOVE? MONEY? Happiness? Success? And all in the same place?

Kent said she thinks working is a top priority with women — and that includes working their way to the altar.

"If a woman is realistic, she's going to realize that between 50 and 70 hours per week is spent in the job place. And that has its advantages:

"A woman shows her best personality at work, she's at her mental best," Kent said. "A male co-worker certainly won't come up with the line 'What's a nice girl like you doing in a place like this?'

"The work place gives the woman the chance to show a man that she's intelligent and articulate, an opportunity rarely found in bars or parties. And, a woman probably looks her best at work — no globs of makeup. The less of a hunter you appear, the less threatening you are to men."

Best of all, Kent says, business hours are active hours enabling the woman to meet a man while she's most alert.

And then, Kent insists, there's this: "At least if you meet someone on the job, they probably don't have a loathsome disease. Employees are pre-screened by the company and you see the person often enough to get some idea of his lifestyle."

Lastly, Kent says marriage and commitment goes along these lines: "I want you, I need you, I love you." In that order.

"The workplace is the perfect place to show a man that he needs you," she said. "Then comes love.

Kent has listened to some objections on the subject of love at work while touring, both from interviewers and from audience members at various talk shows while appearing as a guest. She admitted that problems can develop. She was quick to point them out, but she's equally quick to offer an answer.

Preoccupation: "People are less likely to become preoccupied in the workplace, in the beginning (the 'rush' of love) is hidden because the two probably want to keep the relationship a secret."

COVER-UP: "Buddies do this, too. Sure, some mistakes may be covered up, but others may be corrected by the lover. Four eyes see better than two; two heads think better than one."

Lowered work quality: "It's true that romance sometimes reduces work quality initially because it takes priority over the job. Give it a few weeks."

Power: "Another objection to love at work is that the two people will have more power together than they would have separately. But this problem also arises when two people have formed a bond because of their gender, ethnic background, schooling or neighborhood."

Kent's offerings include a work sheet on how to accurately observe your co-workers (and learn in minutes what might otherwise take hours of talking) should one strike the romantic chord in you. She offers dozens of strategies for "getting out of the typing pool and into the social swim," and tips for turning a departmental brainstorming session "into a first encounter of the closest kind."

Doodles reveal social status

Copley News Service

Doodling isn't mindless drivel.

In fact, a doodle can reveal a person's age, sex and social status, according to a Doodle Data Report compiled by pen and pencil manufacturer, Faber-Castell.

The report shows that young people between the ages of 18 and 24 doodle more than older adults. Women doodle more than men — 81 percent vs. 71 percent.

And, while women typically draw curves and circles, men prefer straight-line designs like triangles or squares.

DEAR ABBY

Sweet sound of 'honey' out of tune for some ears

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am almost 80, and am just as upset at being called "Honey" as that woman who signed herself "Nobody's Honey in Elkhart, Ind." When salespeople call me "Dear," I consider it a slam!

I am a "miler" in the Senior Olympics and walk three and four miles most days, so I neither act nor look decrepit, and I resent people who look down on me with their "Dears" and "Honeys." It's so patronizing.

I know this is worded badly, but this is a sore spot with me and I am so mad right now I can't see straight. I read you daily in The Kansas City Star, and you may use my name. — MRS. WALTER HARVES, LEES SUMMIT, MO.

DEAR ABBY: I just read the letter from "Irritated," complaining because you called a teen-ager "Honey."

I am 15 years old, and not only do I not mind being called "Honey," I welcome it. If someone cared enough about me to call me "Honey" and advise me to listen to my mother, I would take it as a compliment, not a putdown.

"Irritated" is the one who belittles teen-agers. If she feels that teen-agers are too immature to handle receiving affection, she must not have a very high opinion of teen-agers.

So, Abby, the next time you're writing to a teen-ager, please don't refrain from using words like "Honey" or "Dear." It is warm and friendly, and it just may be the way to reach her heart. — JEANINE MORRISON, KINGSBURG, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 16-year-old girl and I'd like to respond to the letter from "Irritated in Fort Collins, Colo." who resented the way you called a 14-year-old girl who wanted to wear a strapless dress "Honey." Whether or not a 14-year-old girl should get a strapless dress is, I'm sure, not as serious as some of the problems you hear from adults, but it was obviously very important to her, if she wrote to you.

In addition, teen-agers are trying to grow up, and when an adult — especially one who many teen-agers look up to — calls a teen-ager a pet name, like "Honey" or "Sweetie," it really seems to reduce the teen-ager's age. Abby, in the future, please don't talk down to teen-agers by calling them "Honey." Treat them like adults.

If you use this, you may use my name, town and state. — LAURA ESHLEMAN, SPRINGS LAKE, MICH.

DEAR ABBY: I can't imagine why a teen-aged girl would feel put down or insulted if someone called her "Honey." I'm a teen-ager, and some of the names I've been called by my mother you couldn't even put in the paper. I never deserved those names, Abby, but they hurt me just the same.

I will never forget how wonderful I felt when my third-grade teacher called me "Honey" in a private conversation we had after school. This same teacher gave me a pair of new shoes because she knew I needed them. I will never forget her.

I would never take offense at anybody who called me "Honey" or "Dear" or any other name that shows affection. I would take it as a compliment. Nobody would use those words with somebody they didn't really like. — CALL ME HONEY ANYTIME

DEAR ABBY: I can't speak for all the teen-agers in the world, but I can speak for myself. When adults call me "Honey" or "Dear," I feel they are trying to put me in my place — like they are talking to some little kid. But I don't mind being called "Honey" or any other pet name when the person is my age. — I'M NOT EVERYBODY'S HONEY

DEAR ABBY: I have had call-waiting service for several years and decided to cancel it because I became irritated by the constant interruption of a second call.

When I called my local telephone company to request discontinuation of the service, I was told: "There is a simple code that you can punch into your phone to deactivate the call-waiting feature. Before you make an outgoing call, punch in the code and your conversation will be uninterrupted. Once you hang up, the call-waiting feature resumes."

This deactivation code prevents being interrupted during phone calls you yourself have initiated.

Your readers should check with their phone representatives to find out if the deactivation feature is available in their area. It probably is. — NO INTERRUPTIONS, PLEASE

DEAR NO INTERRUPTIONS: Thanks for bringing me up-to-date. I checked with the phone company and found that "cancel call waiting" is a brand-new service becoming available in many areas.

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Lady in Waiting," who would like for her child (if he's a boy) to have a middle name, but her husband has none. Abby is right. The child's name must be exactly like his father's, or he can't be a "Junior." But all is not lost. Select a middle name, and have your husband go to court and have HIS name legally changed to include the new middle name.

The baby, if a boy, can then be a bona fide "Junior," and father and son will have given each other a gift that will truly last forever. — J. BAKER, BOTHELL, WASH.

Ventriloquist brings characters in children's books to life

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Ventriloquist Paul Winchell asks, 'How do you spell Tigger?" and slips into a voice fitting for a cartoon tiger: " T-I-double grrrr-E-R."

Winchell, during an interview, frequently demonstrates the range of cartoon voices he does for Disney and Hanna Barbera.

But there are faint echoes across the executive dining room atop the animation building at the Disney Studios. You hear a "Quack, Quack!" here and a "Quack, Quack!" there. Other people at other tables are also doing cartoon voices.

For a moment you feel you've wandered into the Ink and Paint Club in "Who Framed Roger Rabbit?"

For the last 20 years, Winchell has been the voice of Tigger, the zany tiger in the animated versions of A.A. Milne's beloved "Winnie the Pooh." The first effort, "Winnie the Pooh and the Blustery Day," won an Academy Award as best animated movie short in 1968. It has now become a Saturday morning series on ABC as "The New Adventures of Winnie the Pooh."

Winchell, in fact, does voices for two other Saturday morning shows: Disney's "Gummi Bears" and Hanna Barbera's "The Smurfs." He's also done voices for such movies as Disney's "Aristocats" and "The Fox and the Hound."

Until he began working on cartoons, Winchell was better known as a ventriloquist and the man behind dummies Jerry Mahoney and Knucklehead Smith. His dummies are now at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington.

At the age of 13 he was a winner on radio's "Amateur Hour" for doing his imitation of Edgar Bergen and Charlie McCarthy. Ventriloquist Bergen was his childhood hero, and Winchell said one of the greatest thrills of his life was a joint appearance with Bergen on the game show "Masquerade Party."

"We appeared as Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," he said. "After we unmasked, we picked up each other's dummies. I did Charlie McCarthy, and he did Jerry Mahoney. It was a magic moment."

Winchell made his television debut in 1947 and within a year was host of "The Bigelow Show." He was also host of a number of children's shows, including "The Paul Winchell-Jerry Mahoney Show" and "Circus Time."

"I first met Walt Disney 25 or 30 years ago," he recalled. "He said, 'We're both in the same business. I use cartoons and you use dummies and we both entertain children.' That was long before I started working here. Walt gave me a VIP tour of the studio. I remember people doing voices. I said, 'Gee, that must be fun.' And here I am.

"Ventriloquism today is in a slump. Children today haven't been exposed to it. Edgar Bergen was an enormous hit in radio. But I think television defeats ventriloquism. Children are so used to seeing puppets that when they see a real ventriloquist they don't understand it. On television, everyone talks and they don't care about the mechanics."

Winchell, white-haired at 66, suffered a heart attack two years ago. "My cardiologist said I could still do voices," he said, "but to avoid working with the rest of the cast to avoid the stress. The studio's been very nice to me. I can come in, do my voices alone. I was able to do some of them in a recording studio in Miami when I was visiting there."

He said when he does a voice he likes to create an entire character. "Many people do different voices, but the basic rhythm is always the same," he said. "I try to do more than just using a falsetto or pitching my voice. I always look for little distinctions in each voice. Little characteristics or idiosyncrasies.

"Tigger, for instance, has a little lisp and a little laugh. My wife is British and has a lot of sayings that I throw in. She'll say, 'TTFN. Ta-ta for now.' So Tigger will say that and laugh. It gives a character more dimension."

Winchell is writing an autobiographical novel, which he jokingly calls "Dummy Dearest." It's actually called "The Strange Saga of Jimmy Flood."

Smurfs celebrate 30 years

By RAF CASERT

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Smurfs, the lovable blue gnomes with four fingers and a special language, were born in 1958 when a preoccupied cartoonist called Peyo asked a friend to pass the salt but said "schtroumpf" instead.

Three decades after they appeared as minor characters in a Belgian series on knights and kings, they are among the world's favorite cartoon characters.

Their adventures have been told in 13 books translated into 25 languages. They have appeared in 250 Smurf television programs and four feature-length movies.

A Smurf is a Pitufo in Spanish, the original Schtroumpf in French, a Schlumpf in German and Smolf in Danish. Italians call them Puffos and to the Japanese they are Sumafus. A Smurf is a Nam Ching Ling to the Chinese and the Hebrew word is Dardassim.

All this has brought fame and fortune to Peyo, who in real life is Pierre Culliford, a 60-year-old native of Brussels who now lives in Switzerland.

He is grateful and threw a Smurfday party Oct. 16 in the Belgian capital's historic Grand Place square, attended by about 5,000 children and adults.

"I feel a bit groggy," he said, looking out at the crowd.

The party featured a giant cake, drawing contests, puppet shows, a magician and replicas of the Smurfs' toadstool homes, in a setting of some of the finest Gothic and baroque architecture in Europe.

Culliford's slip of the tongue in 1958 created an industry. Smurfs now appear on 2,000 consumer products around the world, from writing gear to mugs, knapsacks to sweatshirts, spaghetti packages and yogurt jars to petroleum products.

Unauthorized uses have included an appearance on the sides of water cannon trucks used by Panamanian security forces.

"We know about that from a Belgian television crew that was filming in Panama, but we have not authorized the Smurfs to be used in that form," said Nadine Peeters of IMPS, the Brussels agency that approves commercial use of the Smurfs.

The cuddly Culliford creations use the word 'smurf' both as verb and noun in a language that can be confusing but at times is rich in poetic harmony.

Educators once scorned the strange tongue, which children usually understand better than adults, but it gradually won acceptance and even appears in an official Dutch dictionary.

"Early on, parents complained because their kids started to talk 'smurfish'," Peyo said at the giant birthday party, but now he is planning a 60-acre Smurf entertainment park near Metz, France, a Smurf monthly magazine and a 14th book, about an ambitious Smurf who wants to open a bank.

Much of the Smurf surge of recent years is attributable to their appearance on television and development of the U.S. market.

Cartoonists concentrate on homeless

WASHINGTON (AP) — The tragedy of homelessness will be featured in graphic style in the nation's newspapers Tuesday, as more than 100 cartoonists dedicate their work to that national problem.

Both comic-strip and editorial cartoonists are joining the effort, including some of the best-known panels and strips, said Barry Zigas of the National Low' Income Housing Coalition.

"The goal of the project is to tug at America's heart strings through its funny bones. Tomorrow's funny pages are not going to be so funny," said Zigas at a news conference announcing the project.

Similar news conferences were scheduled in 22 other cities across the nation in an effort to focus attention on hunger and homelessness, Zigas said.

Cartoonists taking part include Garry Trudeau, author of "Doonesbury;" "Garfield" creator Jim Davis; Mell Lazarus, who draws "Momma", Dik Browne, creator of "Hagar the Horrible;" "Wizard of Id" artist Johnny Hart; Doug Marlette who draws "Kudzu;" Tom Batiuk, developer of "Crankshaft," and many others.

Bengals turn over Oilers, 44-21

CINCINNATI (AP) — James Brooks ran for two of his three touchdowns during Cincinnati's 28-point first quarter — the biggest in club history — and the once-beaten Bengals withstood a late rally to defeat the Houston Oilers 44-21 Sunday.

Turnovers set up three of the four first-quarter touchdowns that put the Bengals in charge of the game and the AFC Central standings. Cincinnati improved to 7-1 at the season's midway point, dropping second-place Houston to 5-3.

The 28 points were the most ever in a first quarter by the Bengals and matched their one-quarter club record. Cincinnati also scored 28 points in the fourth quarter of a season-ending 61-17 victory in Houston in 1972.

Houston cut the lead to 35-21 on a pair of touchdown passes by Warren Moon in a 3:18 span of the third quarter. But erratic Tony Zendejas missed a 35-yard field goal attempt on Houston's next possession, and the Bengals ground out a 72-yard drive in nine rushing plays to put the game out of reach in the fourth quarter. Ickey Woods' second 1-yard touchdown run completed the drive.

Brooks, playing with a brace on his broken left hand, rushed for 102 yards on 16 carries against a defense that had held opponents under 100 yards rushing in five of its seven previous games.

The Bengals scored a pair of touchdowns 28 seconds apart in the first quarter to start the explosion.

Cincinnati took the opening kickoff and drove 77 yards in nine plays, with Woods carrying the final yard with 9:38 left in the quarter.

Leonard Harris then fumbled the kickoff and Jim Riggs recovered at the Oilers' 19. An offside penalty and an unsportsmanlike conduct penalty on Doug Smith moved the ball into position for Brooks' 7-yard touchdown run.

Eric Thomas got the first of his two interceptions three plays later to set up Brooks' 9-yard TD run, giving the Bengals three touchdowns in a 3:17 span.

Linebacker Leo Barker completed the first-quarter spree by stripping Moon of the ball as he tried to pass, popping the ball into the air. Barker caught the loose ball and ran untouched 34 yards for his first NFL touchdown.

The Bengals dominated the first half, holding the Oilers to one first down in the first quarter. Mike Rozier's 5-yard touchdown run with 43 seconds left before intermission ended a first half in which the Oilers had only 80 total yards and the Bengals 224.

Moon, making his second start since recovering from a fractured right shoulder, completed three passes in 10 attempts for 26 yards with an interception in the first half. He finished 13-for-32 for 158 yards with two interceptions and two touchdowns.

Thomas' second interception helped Cincinnati increase its lead to 35-7 midway through the third quarter on Brooks' 18-yard touchdown. Brooks' third rushing touchdown tied the club record for a game, shared by Paul Robinson, Pete Johnson and Larry Kinnebrew.

Moon then rallied the Oilers, completing passes against the Bengals' soft coverage. He threw a 10-yard scoring pass to Willie Drewrey and a 15-yard touchdown strike to Drew Hill late in the third quarter.

The Oilers had a chance to cut the lead to seven points after Cincinnati quarterback Boomer Esiason fumbled on the Bengals' 22.

Houston moved to the 10, where a fumble by Moon set the Oilers back to the 28. Hill had a third-down pass slip off his hands in the end zone, then Zendejas missed a 35-yard field goal try, making him 6-for-15 this season.

Cincinnati got its final two points when a Moon fumble rolled out of the end zone for a safety.

Esiason completed 11 of 20 passes for 154 yards.

Eagles break Cowboys' heart, again

Hogs can make CB reservations

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

The Arkansas Razorbacks can start making their Cotton Bowl hotel reservations.

The only way they can miss being the Southwest Conference's representative on New Year's Day is for the entire team to quit playing football.

Back-to-back victories over Texas and Houston have put Arkansas squarely on the road to Dallas for the first time in 13 years.

"IT WOULD take some bizarre thing to happen for us not to go now," said Arkansas fullback Barry Foster after the Hogs' 26-21 victory over the Houston Cougars before only 21,775 fans in the Astrodome.

"We don't have anything wrapped up yet, but we're one step closer to where we want to be," cautioned Arkansas coach Ken Hatfield.

Unbeaten and 13th ranked, Arkansas is 4-0 in SWC play with games left against Rice in Little Rock on Saturday then on the road at hapless Baylor, and at home against Texas A&M.

Although A&M is 4-0, the Aggies are on NCAA probation and ineligible for postseason play.

TEXAS CHRISTIAN, a 24-14 winner over Baylor on Saturday, is 2-1 but the Frogs have lost to the Razorbacks and head-to-head records determine all ties.

Texas is 1-1 but the Longhorns have lost to Arkansas.

Texas Tech and Houston each have two league losses and Baylor and Rice have four losses apiece.

Hatfield isn't far away from becoming the first person to ever play in the Cotton Bowl then coming back as a head coach.

The Arkansas victory didn't come without controversy. In fact, Houston officials plan to launch a complaint with SWC officials on Monday about the way the game ended.

A Houston onsides kick with 31 seconds left was bobbled by Arkansas' Steve Atwater. The crew headed by referee Joe Thomas first gave the ball to Houston then decided Atwater's knee had hit the ground before the fumble.

"The call came from the Arkansas bench after the official wouldn't make the call," said Houston coach Jack Pardee. "The officials blew it completely. They fumbled to us and we don't get it. There is no doubt in my mind Hatfield intimidated the official into changing the call."

Rudy Davalos, the Houston athletic director, said he will complain to the SWC office although he won't protest the game.

Win with last gasp TD

By RALPH BERNSTEIN

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Philadelphia Eagles did it again, scoring a touchdown in the final seconds against Dallas for the second straight year, to break the Cowboys' heart.

Dallas led at one stage of the game 23-0 before surrendering two fourth period touchowns. The first came on a 99-yard drive and the winning TD came at the end of an 85-yard march.

Randall Cunningham's 2-yard TD pass to Anthony Toney with four seconds left helped lift the Eagles, 4-4, to a 24-23 victory Sunday.

Last year, the Eagles scored on the last play of a 37-20 victory over Dallas, leading the Cowboys to bitterly accuse Eagles coach Buddy Ryan of running up the score.

THIS TIME, the Eagles needed the score to hand the Cowboys their fourth straight defeat, dropping the Cowboys to 2-6, their worst start since 1963.

Philadelphia got the ball with 2:11 left, and Cunningham took the Eagles 85 yards on 16 plays.

The key plays were a fourth-and-8 10-yard completion to Jimmie Giles for a first down at the Eagles' 27, a third-and-10 pass-interference penalty against Dallas' Michael Downs at the Cowboys' 20, and a fourth-and-5 13-yard completion to Gregg Garrity at the Dallas 2.

On the game-winner to Toney, Dallas blitzed the outside linebackers.

"They did it to Washington and the Redskins scored, so we knew it would work great for us," Cunningham said.

Cunningham gave credit to the coaching staff for the last play.

"I wanted to fake and throw to Ron Johnson. They wanted a sprint out and pass to Toney. They got it. It worked."

RYAN said the lingering controversy with Dallas put extra pressure on the Eagles.

"They responded real well," he said. But, he added, "I said a lot of prayers with 2:11 left."

The game lived up to its billing as a "grudge match." There were two fights and three personal foul penalties. The Cowboys were assesed 16 penalties for 138 yards, the Eagles seven for 32.

Dallas coach Tom Landry said, "We had a good chance to win this game. We played well in the first half. Penalties broke up our continuity and killed us."

The Eagles fell behind 20-0 with 9:26 left in the first half.

Cunningham then started the Philadelphia comeback on an eight-play, 83-yard drive, completing five passes and throwing 11 yards for the touchdown to Keith Byars.

In the third period, the Eagles made it 20-10 on a 35-yard field goal by Luis Zendejas.

Dallas increased the lead to 23-10 after recovering a fumble at the Eagles' 33 that led to a 30-yard field goal by Roger Ruzek. That was Dallas' last gasp.

The Eagles then drove 99 yards on 14 plays to pull within 23-17 with 6:23 left to play. Cunningham completed six passes, including a pair of 15-yarders and one for 20. The drive ended with Toney running seven yards for a score.

STEVE Pelluer, recovered from a concussion suffered last week in a loss to Chicago, completed 11 of his first 12 passes as the Cowboys took a

Wyoming cracks AP's Top 10

Associated Press

UCLA, Notre Dame and Southern California, three of the nation's six unbeaten and untied teams, held onto the top three spots today in the Associated Press college football poll, while Wyoming moved into the Top Ten for the first time in 21 years.

The Cowboys are the winningest team in the country at 8-0-0, thanks to Saturday's 61-18 rout of Utah, which lifted them from 12th place last week to No. 10 this week.

They hadn't appeared in the Top Twenty from 1969 until making it late last month. The No. 10 ranking is Wyoming's fifth consecutive week in the Top Twenty and the highest since the Cowboys were No. 6 in the final 1967 poll with a 10-0 record.

UCLA, which became No. 1 last week after Miami lost to Notre Dame, defeated Arizona 24-3 on Saturday and received 35 of 60 first-place votes and 1,171 of a possible 1,200 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters.

Notre Dame, a 41-13 winner over Air Force, is second for the second week in a row with 19 first-place votes and 1,144 points. UCLA and Notre Dame are 7-0-0.

Southern Cal, 6-0-0, was idle over the weekend. The Trojans received five first-place ballots and 1,086 points. UCLA plays Southern Cal on Nov. 19 and Southern Cal meets Notre Dame on Nov. 26.

Miami remained fourth with 1,024 points following a 57-3 rout of Cincinnati and Nebraska held onto fifth place with 893 points by trouncing Kansas State 48-3.

Florida State crushed Division I-AA Louisiana Tech 66-3 and moved up from seventh place to sixth with 889 points. The Seminoles slipped from fifth to seventh a week ago when one voter inadvertently left them off his Top Twenty ballot.

The other first-place vote went to 7-0-0 West Virginia, which dropped from sixth place to seventh despite a 59-19 rout of Boston College. The Mountaineers received 885 points.

Oklahoma edged Colorado 17-14 and remained No. 8 with 762 points. Clemson lost to North Carolina State 10-3 and fell from ninth to 15th, while Auburn's 33-0 victory over Mississippi State enabled the Tigers to jump from ninth to eighth with 706 points.

Someone better talk to Chaps' Reggie Franklin

Battles

I don't plan to bring it up, but someone needs to take Reggie Franklin aside and talk to him.

He's fixing to get himself drummed out of the tight-knit coaching society for cheerfulness and preseason optimism unbecoming members of the profession.

In discussing the 1988-89 prospects for his freshman-loaded Midland College basketball team, the second year Chaparral head coach bubbles over with unseemly enthusiasm.

Coach, with so many freshmen....can any of them possibly help you?

"They're all looking good," he replies, making it sound like his only problem will be to get them all in the lineup at once.

COACH, last year the Chaps really missed the three-point basket, the kind that helped take MC to the NJCAA finals when Mookie Blaylock, Lincoln Minor and Todd Duncan were bombing the basket like they were equipped with Norden bombsights, or whatever they used back in WWII. Do any of these newcomers show any three-point potential?

"All my point guards can hit the three-point goal," replies Reggie, who, if you read him the way it sounds, might be intimating the Chaps will never have to bother going inside.

But then Franklin allays that suspicion. "We will be a lot taller than last year," he says listing heights that suggest this may be the tallest team ever on the oval off Garfield.

You get the idea.

THAT'S simply not the prescribed procedure coaches are expected to use for evaluating their team.

At a press conference following a national championship, and on the eve of what probably turned out to be another undefeated season, Frank Leahy, the Notre Dame legend, grew serious, bowed his head and warned, "We may not make a first down. this season."

Instead of admitting all of his point guards could make three-pointers, Reggie should have cautioned, "We may not make a three-pointer all year. Right now, I'm just hoping we can make a free throw.."

One of journalism's classic headlines was Stagg Fears Purdue. Back in the days when Amos Alonzo Stagg's University of Chicago Maroons were the original Monsters of the Midway, Stagg expressed his apprehension in Leahy-solemnity over an upcoming contest with lowly Purdue.

Franklin must employ the same kind of caution. Franklin Fears Clarendon or Sul Ross JV Terrifies Reggie.

THE PROPER evaluation would be for Reggie to observe, "For every freshman you start, you lose five games."

In football, that's supposed to be every freshman costs you a defeat, but they play more often in basketball and the freshman has more opportunity to err.

"And every sophomore costs you one game," Reggie could add,although it might stretch the credulity of the press. "Come on, Reggie, all you've got is freshmen and sophomores."

"See, we're in deep trouble already," Franklin could retaliate.

IN A preseason interview, coaches routinely dab at the eyes with a towel while detailing the litany of their team's deficiencies for the press.

John Thompson's imaginative use of the towel set a new standard for the traditional coaching tool. He introduced it during Patrick Ewing's freshman season at Georgetown. Most assumed it was for wiping a sweaty brow in a steamy gym.

"No, it's for the traditional reason," Thompson clarified. "Tears."

"Tears? You've got Ewing and he's only a freshman."

"Yes, but what happens when he graduates?"

And, Reggie, when you fret about the probability of losing some players, it's because of injury, maybe grades, not "because of those guys hanging around practice, the ones with the NBA logos on their shirts."

Sure you can use the old saw, "The opposition pulls on its pants just like we do, one leg at a time," but you don't have to tell the press that it takes your team 10 seconds longer to do it.

Unless someone talks to Reggie, and quickly, tomorrow night at the Meet The Chaps session at the Chap Center, Franklin may get carried away, forget all about Larry Johnson at OC, and introduce his team as the "1989 WJCAC champions."

Marino magnificent, but Miami still loses

Giants rally to beat Falcons

Associated Press

Dan Marino and the New York Giants hit the comeback trail. Only Marino didn't make it.

Marino threw for 521 yards, 34 short of the league mark set by Norm Van Brocklin in 1951. And Troy Stradford dropped a long pass in the end zone in the waning moments that would have given Marino the record.

But Marino, who completed 35 of 60 passes, was picked off five times and the Dolphins were beaten 44-30 by the New York Jets. Rookie Erik McMillan had three of the interceptions, including a 55-yard return for a touchdown.

The Giants also had the interceptions at the end of their game with Atlanta, and they turned it around. New York trailed 16-9 when Carl Banks hit Falcons quarterback Chris Miller as he passed and Harry Carson made the theft. That led to Ottis Anderson's 1-yard TD run.

Hugh Millen, who replaced Miller after the starter injured his elbow on Carson's interception, then threw directly to Banks, who ran 15 yards for the winning points in a 23-16 decision.

Tonight, San Francisco is at Chicago.

Colts 16, Chargers 0

Dickerson, the AFC's leading rusher, ran 30 times and pushed his career total to 9,135 yards. It was the 49th time he has gone over 100 yards in a game, and he also had four pass receptions for 30 yards.

Browns 29, Cardinals 21

Bernie Kosar completed 25 of 43 passes, including 20 of 28 for 224 yards in the first half, for three touchdowns and 314 yards. His 25-yarder to Reggie Langhorne provided the winning score.

Cleveland, 5-3 and with the NFL's best pass defense, intercepted backup quarterback Cliff Stoudt twice in a three-minute span late in the fourth quarter, then sacked him for a safety. Stoudt replaced Neil Lomax, whose arthritic hip sidelined him in the third quarter.

Redskins 20, Packers 17

Washington's Doug Williams came back from an appendectomy to complete 25 of 43 passes for 225 yards and Kelvin Bryant has 210 yards total offense.

Max Zendejas, who was criticized by his former teammates when he missed five field goals and five extra points while with the Redskins in 1986, missed a 24-yard field goal with 11 seconds to go.

Steelers 39, Broncos 21

The Steelers responded to recent criticism about their conservatism with a varied attack that included a no-huddle offense, halfback option passes and reverses. They also got a club-record six field goals from Gary Anderson — he connected twice from 30 yards and also from 32, 21, 37 and 22.

Rodney Carter, who had carried only once this season, ran for 105 yards and two touchdowns and the Steelers picked off three Gary Kubiak passes. Kubiak subbed for the injured John Elway.

The victory broke Pittsburgh's six-game slide, its longest since 1969.

Bills 23, Patriots 20

Scott Norwood's third field goal, a 33-yarder with 13 seconds remaining, was decisive for Buffalo, which leads the AFC East by 2½ games at 7-1. Buffalo overcame four turnovers and was helped by New England kicker Teddy Garcia, who missed three field goals and a conversion.

Rams 31, Seahawks 10

Jim Everett continued to sparkle for the Rams, 6-2 and a game behind New Orleans in the NFC West. Everett had his third straight three-touchdown performance, completing 20 of 27 throws for 311 yards.

Vikings 49, Buccaneeers 20

At Tampa, the Vikings picked off Vinny Testaverde six times — he leads the league with 22 interceptions. Brad Edwards returned one of the interceptions 37 yards for a touchdown.

Wade Wilson passed for 335 yards and three touchdowns.

Saints 20, Raiders 6

Craig Heyward, the Saints' 260-pound rookie fullback, ran 73 yards for a touchdown on the first play of the third quarter, igniting a second-half rally for New Orleans' seventh successive win.

"It was a play designed to get you into the secondary, and after that it's up to you," Heyward, a first-round draftee, said after he broke two tackles. "That's what separates the great backs from the average backs."

Bo Jackson started at running back for the Raiders, gained 25 yards on his first carry, 20 on his second, then went to the sidelines with a pulled hamstring muscle.

Lions 7, Chiefs 6

The two weakest offenses in the league did as expected. Rusty Hilger threw a 14-yard touchdown pass to Jeff Chadwick in the second quarter, just enough to offset a pair of field goals by Nick Lowery. Detroit had lost six consecutive games since opening with a win, while the Chiefs fell to 1-6-1.

The first three plays of the second half were typical of the game. Albert Lewis intercepted Hilger's pass on the first play. Then Herman Heard fumbled and Bennie Blades recovered for the Lions.

James Jones fumbled on the next play after a gain of 10 yards and Deron Cherry recovered for the Chiefs.

17-0 lead in the first period. Philadelphia has been outscored 63-0 in first quarters this season.

The Cowboys also took advantage of two personal-foul penalties in the opening quarter of the roughly played game between the NFC rivals, who bitterly charged each other with running up the score as they split two games last year.

Pelluer wound up hitting 32 of 45 passes for 342 yards and one touchdown despite being sacked three times.

Cunningham was sacked five times to boost Philadelphia's league-leading sack yield to 39. Cunningham still managed to connect on 26 of 53 for 298 yards and two touchdowns.

The Cowboys limited the Eagles to 65 yards on the ground.

To open the scoring, the Cowboys drove 71 yards on nine plays. Pelluer completed six passes for 67 yards, the last for 18 and a touchdown to Ray Alexander.

DALLAS increased the lead to 14-0 with 4:39 left in the first period on an eight-play, 80-yard drive capped by Timmy Newsome's 1-yard run.

The Cowboys made it 17-0 with four seconds left in the quarter on the first of three field goals by Ruzek, a 26-yarder. Herschel Walker's 28-yard, first-down run triggered the drive.

Dallas took a 20-0 lead with 9:36 left in the second period on a 34-yard field goal after Ron Francis intercepted a pass and returned 29 yards to the Philadelphia 42.

The Eagles scored with 2:07 left in the half on an eight-play, 83-yard drive. Cunningham completed five passes, including a 33-yarder to Keith Jackson and an 11-yarder to Byars for the touchdown.

More tests for Bradshaw

NEW YORK (AP) — Former NFL star Terry Bradshaw is scheduled to undergo more tests to determine the cause of chest pains that forced him to miss his last two assignments on CBS.

"He had some tests last week, and he's going to have some more this week," network spokeswoman Sandy Genelius said Sunday.

A Pittsburgh television station, KDKA, reported that a tumor was found behind Bradshaw's heart during tests at a Dallas hospital.

Bradshaw, 40, denied the report. The former Steelers quarterback told CBS that he doesn't know the cause of the ailment.

"He emphasized that there has been no diagnosis," Genelius said.

Genelius said Ted Shaker, executive producer of CBS Sports, spoke to Bradshaw on the phone Sunday.

"He (Bradshaw) sounded great," she said. "He was in very good spirits. He was even making jokes."

Bradshaw's wife, Charla, responded to inquiries about his health by leaving a message with their answering service.

"There has been no confirmation of anything," said a woman who fielded calls to the Bradshaw home in suburban Dallas. "Mrs. Bradshaw says he is resting at home and will go in for more tests this week."

Bradshaw's mother, Novis, denied that her son has a tumor.

"He's just been having a little pain," she said in a telephone interview from her home at Shreveport, La. "Nothing wrong with his heart ... There's not anything definite. He's just having tests run."

His mother said she didn't know the origin of the tumor report.

"I don't know how that got started," she said. "We just don't know anything."

Bradshaw, who led the Steelers to four Super Bowl titles, had been scheduled to work as a commentator on Sunday's NFL game between Philadelphia and Dallas. The illness also forced him to skip his NFL assignment last weekend.

Bradshaw retired from football after the 1983 season.

DEL MAR, Calif. (AP) — Martin Brundle of England, driving a Jaguar prototype, overcame an off-course excursion with 20 minutes remaining to charge back from sixth place and win the IMSA Camel Grand Prix of Southern California.

The 1988 world endurance champion gave Tom Walkinshaw's Jaguar team its second victory of the season in the final Camel GTP event of the year. It was Jaguar's first since the Daytona 24 Hours, which opened the season 14 races ago.

ROCKINGHAM, N.C. — Rusty Wallace kept alive his Winston Cup championship chances by winning the $462,950 AC-Delco 500 NASCAR. Wallace, in a Pontiac, beat Ricky Rudd, driving a Ford, by 12.3 seconds for his third straight victory.

Hammerin' Henry dies

Ring great held 3 titles simultaneously

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Henry Armstrong, the tenacious fighter known as Hammerin' Hank who battered opponents in three weight classes to claim three world boxing titles simultaneously, has died of heart failure. He was 75.

Armstrong, who died Saturday after a lengthy illness, was considered by many ring analysts as the best fighter, pound-for-pound, in boxing history.

"They can never forget him," 65-year-old Hall-of-Fame boxer Ike Williams said Sunday while comforting Armstrong's wife, Gussie. "Centuries from now they will talk about how he held three world titles at one time."

Armstrong fell on hard times in recent years.

Although he earned hundreds of thousands of dollars during a 15-year professional career, Armstrong and his wife were reduced to living on an $800 monthly Social Security check.

Age and poverty kept the legendary fighter on the ropes, hitting him with pneumonia, anemia, cataracts, persistent infections and malnutrition, said Dr. Abe Green.

"It was just a matter of time for Henry," Green said. "He had so many things wrong with him."

Armstrong also suffered from dementia, a loss of intellectual capability blamed, at least partly, on his lengthy boxing career.

His health worsened in 1988 when he refused to eat and doctors had to feed him intravenously, Green said.

"He's resting and all his miseries are gone," his wife said. "I did all I could for him and so did everyone else."

Armstrong's prominence in the world of boxing was rewarded in 1953 when he was named an inaugural inductee into the sport's Hall of Fame along with Jack Dempsey and Joe Louis.

He climbed into the ring 181 times as a professional after leaving the amateur ranks in 1931, winning 152 times, 100 by knockout, according to the Ring Record Book.

Armstrong was tagged with numerous ring nicknames before he retired in 1945 at age 32. Fight fans knew him as the Buzzsaw, Homicide Hank, Perpetual Motion, Hurricane Henry and the Punching Preacher.

Armstrong was a tenacious fighter with an aggressive style, swarming opponents with punishing flurries, a fighting tactic that also left him open to repeated counterpunches blamed by some for his failing health late in life.

"He was relentless," said longtime friend and sparring partner Ed Williams. "Tyson does the same thing. Mike Tyson is using Henry Armstrong's style."

ARMSTRONG was the 11th of 15 children born to an Irish-Black father and Black-Cherokee Indian mother in Columbus, Miss. The family moved to St. Louis and he grew up in slum neighborhoods there, working as a shoeshine boy until he graduated from high school.

SWC Superlatives

ON HOLD — Rice's senior center Courtney Hall had gone 39 collegiate games without a holding call until Saturday when he got the first flag in his career.

THIEF INC — TCU's six interceptions on Saturday against Baylor was the Frogs' best day of skyjacking since 1968 when they had seven swipes. The victim? Baylor again.

CENTURY CLUB — Texas A&M's Darren Lewis has had five consecutive games of 100 yards rushing. He got 170 against Rice on Saturday.

BALL HOGS...ERR UH OWLS — Rice set a school record on Saturday for possession of the football without scoring. The Owls kept the ball 10 minutes and 6 seconds after they received the opening kickoff from A&M, yet didn't score, missing a chip shot field goal.

REAL BALL HOGS — Arkansas kept the ball 42:07 to 17:53 against Houston's run-and-shoot offense.

SURE SHOT — Arkansas' senior placekicker Kendall Trainor hit field goals of 29, 46, 23, and 49 yards against Houston. If you're counting that's 15 in a row for Trainor. He hasn't missed this season.

THE STREAK — Rice has lost 13 games in a row, longest streak for collegiate football futility in the nation.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You realize that it is your own opinion that should matter most to you. Reassess your career goals in the light of your spiritual values and you will be able to formulate a better plan. Your happiness increases along with your financial fortunes. A new relationship gets off to a rocky start, but will eventually become everything you hope for. Travel leads you to change certain plans, but good luck accompanies you everywhere.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: basketball star Dave Cowens, artist Pablo Picasso, actor Tony Franciosa, composer Johann Strauss, explorer Richard E. Byrd.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A breakthrough comes in a relationship when you show compassion and understanding. An advisory position could wind up costing you money or business. Strengthen family ties with letters and phone calls.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Members of the opposite sex find you irresistible during the next few days. Business decisions should be based on the facts, not sentiment. Make up a quarrel with a family member.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You feel passionate about an idea and should pursue ways to make it work. You know just how to convince someone with whom you have enjoyed a long relationship. Travel is a source of joy.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A telephone call could be your undoing. Let others initiate things for a change. You feel better now that a load has been lifted from your shoulders. A child profits from a mistake.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): If you are receiving mixed signals, back off from negotiations or a relationship. Make sure of someone's views before signing anything. Fitness programs improve health but are not a cure-all. Consult doctor.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Dress your best today. First impressions count big. Eating lunch at a favorite restaurant will boost your spirits. A prior relationship could have a positive effect on a current one. Follow your conscience.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Do whatever is necessary to safeguard your health. Avoid open conflicts with your business associates and co-workers. You can heal a family rift by making a concession. Do so!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): An excellent time for investments. Unexpected financial gains are featured. Look for ways to make your money grow. Show your support for traditional values. Reassess a business deal after receiving new information.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Get a second opinion before committing yourself. Not a good day for signing legal documents. Follow your own judgment concerning partner's demands.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Listen to that little voice within and you will seldom go wrong. Do not let others stir you up over things that are past. Your spiritual values make it easier for you to succeed.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A financial windfall is possible. Keep your hopes high and the probable outcome could change. A youngster needs emotional support more than advice. An old flame returns. Spend more time outdoors.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Go after a deal or person you have had your eye on. Revealing a different side of your personality will work to your advantage. Expressing your ideas clearly helps cement a business negotiation.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q94 ♡QJ ◇J109 ♣QJ874
Partner opens the bidding with one no trump. What do you respond?
A.—If you only count points, you have a maximum raise to two no trump. However, you have a reasonable five-card suit and excellent intermediates, which make your hand worth more like 11 than 9. Jump to three no trump.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKJ952 ♡Q93 ◇7 ♣A62
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 NT	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Be careful. Partner might have been forced to respond one no trump with a singleton spade. You have a six-loser hand, and unless partner can bid again voluntarily, chances of game are slim. Be content with a two-spade rebid.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠KQ10 ♡K93 ◇865 ♣AQJ6
Partner opens the bidding with one spade. What do you respond?
A.—Whether you play four or five-card majors, you should have four-card support for a jump raise of partner's suit. Thus, under either circumstance, you should make a waiting bid of two clubs, then jump raise spades at your next turn.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K54 ♡KQ95 ◇KJ42 ♣AK
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	2 ◇	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—You have 19 high-card points, a balanced hand and stoppers in every suit. Partner has shown a minimum of 7 for his raise, so you should have enough for game. Jump to three no trump. Don't bid 2 NT and invite partner to do what you should have done yourself.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A5 ♡A87 ◇AQ8 ♣109862
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one heart. What action do you take?
A.—You could have the best hand at the table, but there's nothing you can do. You can't make a takeout double without spades, and your club suit is nowhere near good enough for an overcall.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A5 ♡A87 ◇AQ8 ♣109862
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—Little has changed, except for the fact that you have learned that the enemy probably has the balance of power. A double of two hearts here would be penalty-oriented (you could have doubled one heart for takeout), and any bid could be inviting the enemy to hand your head to you on a silver platter.

Producer of 'Ghostbusters' hopes to make big bucks from junk bonds

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Ghostbusters" producer Bernie Brillstein will bring the world of "junk bond" king Michael Milken to the screen.

The Brillstein Co. has acquired the film rights to "The Predator's Ball" by Connie Bruck, a senior reporter for American Lawyer who wrote about Milken's exploits in the Beverly Hills office of Drexel Burnham Lambert.

"This will not be a movie about Michael Milken, but about the financial-business world he inhabits," said Brillstein.

The company was notified Wednesday it was the target of a criminal federal grand jury probe.

In September, the Securities and Exchange Commission filed a civil complaint against Drexel, Milken and others alleging they schemed with imprisoned insider-trader Ivan F. Boesky to profit on inside information, cheat Drexel clients and commit other frauds.

DETROIT (AP) — Pop star Michael Jackson says his $125,000 donation to the Motown Museum is a token of thanks to the man who gave him his start — Berry Gordy Jr.

Berry Gordy Jr. and Michael Jackson

Jackson also donated three items from his personal collection to the museum — a trademark glove, a hat and a uniform he wore when he was 13 and performing with the Jackson Five, said museum spokesman Lee Solters.

"I'm very happy and proud to be back to the soil from which I came," Jackson said Sunday. "Berry Gordy is the man that made it all possible for me. I want to say thank you, Berry, and I love you."

Gordy, who founded Motown Records in 1959, called Jackson one of the museum's greatest supporters.

"Michael Jackson knows success in life is not merely confined to fame and fortune and material gains, but it's also found in a continual awareness of our roots, his roots," said Gordy.

OSTEND, Belgium (AP) — Mikis Theodorakis, the Greek composer-politician whose works include "Zorba the Greek," has suffered a heart attack, but the attack was not life threatening, organizers of his Belgian tour say.

They said he was taken to a hospital in Antwerp after he was stricken Saturday in Ostend.

Theodorakis, 63, was on a nine-day tour of Belgium and his last concert had been scheduled for Saturday in Ostend but was canceled.

NEW YORK (AP) — Novelist Harold Robbins, whose pulp potboilers have sold more than 500 million copies, was living like one of his own high-rolling protagonists when a bathroom accident left him unable to walk.

Now, 3½ years and more than $1 million in medical bills later, Robbins is doing daily battle with his disability. He also has finished his 19th novel, a loosely autobiographical work called, "The Storyteller," according to this week's People magazine.

Stepping out of the shower, he tripped on a 4-inch-high splash panel and struck his head on a marble counter, sliding across the floor and striking the toilet bowl with such force that he knocked it off its pipes. Doctors told him that his left hip had been shattered and his right fractured.

Robbins is undergoing therapy and has had an electrical device implanted in his spine that helps him fight off the worst of the pain, the magazine says. He has graduated from a wheelchair to a walker to lightweight crutches.

Doctors promise that he will eventually be able to trade his crutches for cane.

"The main thing is I believe I'm going to walk," Robbins said. "I believe I'm going to move. I believe I'm going to get around."

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) — George Burns, who for years urged his wife and partner in comedy Gracie Allen to "Say goodnight, Gracie," still has something to say to her 24 years after her death.

At 92, he has collaborated with ghostwriter David Fisher on the book, "Gracie: A Love Story," due out next week.

"I have to be honest. I was a lousy lover," Burns writes. "But Gracie married me for laughs, not for sex. Of course, she got both of them — when we had sex, she laughed."

In 1964, when the heart disease that had plagued her for years finally took Gracie's life, Burns was inconsolable. For a time, Burns says, "things were very, very bad for me. My life was Gracie."

Things eventually turned around, but he still visits her grave monthly in Glendale, Calif., bringing flowers and conversation.

"I talk to her," Burns says in this week's issue of People magazine. "I tell her what I'm doing."

Burns says death holds no terror, because "I know Gracie's up there. And if they've got vaudeville, we can be headliners."

OTTAWA, Kan. (AP) — About 700 people wearing red and blue shirts gathered on a soybean field to be molded into a piece of art by an artist known for his unusual creations.

Stan Herd Saturday popped the top off his latest land-art creation: a five-acre depiction of two partially crumpled Pepsi and Coca-Cola soda pop cans.

The people provided the color; Herd and his unusual ability to sculpt farm land added the design. The title of the work: "The Ottawa Beanfield Cola War."

"When does a person get a chance to be a part of art?" said Richard Rudzinski, 45, of Wichita, who stood near the bottom of the Pepsi can.

Herd, 38, said one of the messages of the work was a reminder that people need to take better care of the environment — the crumpled cans of pop representing trash thrown on the side of a highway.

"It also was a tongue-in-cheek slap at the way advertising people depict us," he said. "The battle for the consumer dollar...the Pepsi generation-...commercialization."

Before "Cola Wars," Herd's field art included an Indian chief sculpted on a field near Dodge City, and a vase of sunflowers on a checkered tablecloth plowed on a field near Lawrence.

For his latest creation, the field was cut about 10 days ago.

The past week was spent mowing the design of the two cans onto the ground. The bases of the cans were cut soybean, lime was used to highlight the cans, and the red and blue shirts provided the brands' familiar colors.

Three helicopters and several airplanes circled the field as the participants bowed to create the illusion of the cans.

KKR said planning RJR Nabisco bid

By JAMES STERNGOLD
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Kohlberg, Kravis, Roberts & Co. is planning to offer a staggering $90 a share, or about $20.3 billion, for RJR Nabisco Inc., the tobacco and food conglomerate, professionals with knowledge of the plans said on Sunday.

Such a takeover, if it succeeded, would be the largest in history by a wide margin. It would dwarf the $11.5 billion that the Philip Morris Cos. offered last week for Kraft Inc. and the $6.2 billion that Kohlberg, Kravis and Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. paid in 1986 for the Beatrice Cos., another foods concern, in a leveraged buyout.

In addition, the expected offer, which the professionals said would be made Monday morning, would exceed by $13.25 a share Friday's closing price of RJR Nabisco stock on the New York Stock Exchange.

The offer, if it is made, would come on the heels of the announcement on Thursday by RJR Nabisco's top management and Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc. that they planned to offer $75 a share, or $17 billion, to take the company private in a leveraged buyout. A leveraged buyout is the purchase of a company with relatively little in the way of equity money and a large amount of debt secured for the most part by the assets of the company being acquired.

After the announcement last Thursday, RJR Nabisco's share price soared more than $21 a share, to $77.25, indicating that speculators were anticipating a higher offer. On Friday, the stock closed at $76.75.

RJR Nabisco, an Atlanta-based conglomerate that is America's 19th-largest industrial concern, was formed three years ago from the merger of R.J. Reynolds Industries, the giant tobacco company, and Nabisco Brands Inc., the foods and snacks maker. The combined company produces some of the nation's best-known consumer products, including Winston and Camel cigarettes, Oreo and Mallomar cookies, Ritz crackers and Grey Poupon mustard.

There is an element of rough Wall Street hardball in the weekend development. Kohlberg, Kravis, Wall Street's leading buyout specialist, is working with some of the nation's most prestigious and powerful investment banking houses — Drexel Burnham Lambert; Wasserstein, Perella; Morgan Stanley and Merrill Lynch — according to the Wall Street professionals.

Drexel has studied a possible buyout of the giant company for more than a year, together with F. Ross Johnson, RJR Nabisco's chief executive, the sources said. Some at the firm were surprised when they learned that he was planning a buyout with Shearson Lehman.

Kohlberg, Kravis's counteroffer could begin a hard-edged legal battle. It seems doubtful that Johnson, a tenacious executive who has gained the respect of Wall Street, could join the Kohlberg, Kravis group. Investment bankers said that, in the next few days, they expect a new Shearson offer and the possible filing of lawsuits as the two sides position themselves.

The winner would have to assume about $5 billion of existing debt.

Officials expect fewer bank failures in 1989

By GREG STEINMETZ
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — The Texas Department of Banking expects the number of bank failures in the state to fall next year for the first time since the financial crisis began.

Still, the department expects 50 Texas banks to collapse in 1989, compared with 99 that have already toppled this year. The 1988 total includes 40 banks of failed First Republic Bank Corp.

An additional 10 banks are expected to fail before year-end, said Steve Scurlock, deputy state banking commissioner.

While the 1989 forecast is grim, it would represent a turnaround in a crisis that has claimed 196 Texas banks since 1983.

But Scurlock cautioned that the forecast is preliminary, based on data showing the state's economy is improving and that many marginal banks have already failed.

The forecast reflects a new spirit of optimism at the banking department. Earlier this year, Texas Banking Commissioner Kenneth Littlefield disagreed with William Seidman, Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. chairman, who said 1989 would be a better year for Texas banks.

Deep problems remain, however. According to the department, 46 percent of state-chartered banks in Texas are in trouble, compared with 39 percent a year ago. In the Houston area, 53 percent are ailing vs. 49 percent a year ago.

Industry observers warn of ongoing problems.

Robert Clair, a senior economist with the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas, said "The economy is getting better. That's a real plus."

"I think it is safe to say most banks have identified their problems and are dealing with them," said Robert Harris, executive vice president of the Texas Bankers Association. "I don't think there are many surprises left in loan portfolios."

James Sexton, a former state banking commissioner and now an Austin consultant, said Texas could have more than 50 failures next year, depending on the economy. "I don't think it is going to be less than 50," he said.

A problem unique to troubled Texas banks is an inability to raise capital, Sexton said. In other states, a troubled bank can sell stock and extract itself from problems. In Texas, investors lack the confidence to invest in the state's banks.

The high failure rate is fueled by factors other than the depressed economy, said Scott Smith, former president of the Independent Bankers Association of Texas and now a Dallas-area banker.

Prices plunge on meeting discord

Oil prices plummeted this morning as OPEC committees were unable to reach agreement about overproduction by cartel members.

The December contract for West Texas Intermediate fell 89 cents by midmorning to stand at $13.48. On Friday, the contract closed down 9 cents at $14.37 a barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange. Several other contract months fell by similar amounts.

Trading was nervous, although less volatile than in sessions earlier this week. The November contract for WTI, which expired on Thursday, dropped 60 cents on Tuesday, soared 79 cents on Wednesday and then tumbled 80 cents in its final day.

Older consumers dissatisified with image

ATLANTA (AP) — Older consumers, who control about $800 billion of the country's wealth, are unhappy with how they are portrayed by U.S. advertisers and don't mind squawking about it, according to a researcher.

George P. Moschis has categorized the over-55's into "healthy hermits," "ailing outgoers," "frail recluses" and "healthy indulgers."

He surveyed 1,000 people aged 55 and older and found 82 percent of them believe the products they buy don't work as promised and 75 percent of those who are unhappy make it a point to let others know their feelings.

Regulations outlaw 85 percent of polygraphs

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Labor Department issued regulations barring most private employers from using polygraph or lie detector tests to screen job applicants and greatly restricting use of the devices to test present employees.

The regulations issued Friday, which take effect Dec. 27, implement legislation outlawing about 85 percent of the current use of polygraph examinations and voice stress analyzers.

The congressional Office of Technology Assessment estimated 2 million polygraph examinations were conducted last year — 90 percent of them by private employers.

TWA to add 60 planes in upgrading fleet

NEW YORK (AP) — Trans World Airlines Inc. plans to lease or buy around 60 new aircraft to upgrade its aging fleet, the airline's general counsel said.

The new narrow-body planes would cost TWA a total of up to $1.5 billion, Mark A. Buckstein said Friday.

He said TWA's board of directors approved the action in principle in the early summer, and that the airline has started negotiations with three major aircraft manufacturers and a number of leasing companies.

The interiors of the 17 Boeing 727s will be completely redone, safety will be stressed and the shuttle's airport terminals in New York, Boston and Washington will be refurbished, Trump said Friday in a telephone interview.

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — As part of a broad cost reduction effort, Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc. is planning to cut its workforce by about 1,000 people before the end of the year, people close to the securities firm said Sunday.

While the exact number of job cuts has not yet been determined, the dismissals will be across-the-board, according to company officials who spoke on the condition they not be identified. Kraft rejects Philip Morris offer

By ROBERT J. COLE
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Moving swiftly to preserve its independence and head off an $11.5 billion takeover attempt by the Philip Morris Cos., Kraft Inc. announced on Sunday that its directors had rejected the $90-a-share bid and would instead offer stockholders a dividend package it valued at more than $110 a share, or $14 billion.

It would be by far the largest restructuring in corporate history.

Philip Morris had no immediate comment but would now have to raise its offer substantially if it hopes to take over Kraft.

Kraft said it could legally proceed without shareholder approval but because the plan involved "very significant" changes in the company, it would put the plan to a stockholder vote on a date to be decided soon.

Saying that its huge new dividend package was part of a restructuring, Kraft said it would proceed "on an exclusive basis" as if this were the only offer for the company. But it added that "if someone comes forward with a transaction that would be more desirable than the restructuring plan, we will negotiate."

Leaving the door open to Philip Morris as well, John M. Richman, chairman of Kraft, told shareholders in a letter that while Philip Morris had so far demonstrated no willingness to go higher, he had told the bidder that Kraft was "not foreclosing negotiations and that if they were to offer a price that reflects the full value of Kraft, we would negotiate with them."

The dividend plan, approved unanimously by Kraft's 12 remaining directors, followed a five-and-a-half-hour emergency meeting called shortly after noon Sunday at Kraft's headquarters in Glenview, Ill.

Kraft said that one director, William O. Bourke, chairman of the Reynolds Metals Co., resigned before the meeting because he is a big supplier to Philip Morris and wanted to avoid any possible conflict of interest.

In one of the biggest price jumps recorded in so short a span, Kraft shares soared $32.50 last week on the New York Stock Exchange, to $92. Because that surpassed the $90 Philip Morris bid, Wall Street was evidently expecting further developments. Kraft said the increase beyond $90 represented "a clear signal that investors see the bid as low."

Nearly 27 million shares, or 20 percent of those outstanding, changed hands, enriching thousands of financial institutions and individual investors who were apparently satisfied with the enormous runup and were unwilling to wait for further developments.

With sales of $10.5 billion for the year that ended June 30, Kraft is the nation's fourth-largest producer of consumer goods, after Philip Morris, Procter & Gamble and RJR Nabisco.

Its audacious restructuring also became the third multibillion-dollar takeover development to shake up the food business within a single week. Philip Morris startled the industry last Monday with its offer for Kraft. But by Friday that $11.5 billion offer looked a lot smaller when senior executives of RJR Nabisco Inc., the big tobacco and food company, announced that they wanted to buy their company for $17 billion.

All the deals would be heavily financed by banks in this country and abroad.

Philip Morris has been pressing Kraft to come to the bargaining table, but so far Kraft has resisted in the absence of a higher offer. Even so, Philip Morris is believed to be planning an increase soon.

French solicits backing for Mid-America

From Staff Reports

French Petroleum Corp. has begun soliciting support for its proposed reorganization plan for Mid-America Petroleum Inc., GMK Oil Co. Inc. and 20 partnerships in which Mid-America serves as general partner.

French's plan is one of two distributed by the Federal Bankruptcy Court in a joint disclosure statement for approval by creditors and partners.

Under the plan, French Petroleum would infuse cash for common stock in Mid-America Petroleum. Creditors and limited partners may elect to receive cash or freely tradeable common stock in exchange for their claims of interest.

French's plan offers a pool of $800,000 to unsecured creditors of the company, $100,000 more than that offered under the competing plan put forward by Oklahoma City-based Richland Resources Corp.

French Petroleum has Midland and Houston offices in addition to its Oklahoma City headquarters.

The company is primarily active in the Midcontinent region "but will become more active in the Permian Basin if our plan is successful," said Robin French.

French operates 350 wells and holds interest in more than 1,000 others in 14 states.

Chancellor, Gorbachev hold talks

MOSCOW (AP) — West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, seeking improved economic relations with the Soviets, met today with Mikhail S. Gorbachev for their first formal talks since Gorbachev became Soviet leader.

Kohl, who arrived in Moscow today for a four-day official visit, was greeted at Vnukovo airport by Premier Nikolai I. Ryzhkov, Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze, Defense Minister Dmitri T. Yazov, and other top Soviet officials, the official news agency Tass said.

The West German leader and his wife Hannelore were received by Gorbachev and his wife Raisa in St. George's Hall of the Kremlin, Tass said. The two leaders then held talks in the St. Catherine's Hall, the agency said.

Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, Defense Minister Rupert Scholz and other Cabinet members were in the West German delegation that accompanied Kohl from Bonn.

The development of economic ties likely will top the discussions during Kohl's visit, as West German businesses seek to profit from what they say are growing opportunities created by Gorbachev's economic reforms.

Projected joint ventures range from the development of the mineral-rich Kola peninsula in the northwestern part of the Soviet Union to the construction of factories in various parts of the communist nation.

Other items on the agenda include European disarmament, East-West relations, ties between West Germany and Moscow-allied East Germany, and the fate of some 2 million Soviets of German ethnic origin.

On Oct. 14, the West German Embassy in Moscow said Gorbachev and Kohl would sign an accord on "scientific cooperation in space." The embassy gave no details.

The embassy also said Kohl and Gorbachev would sign agreements on agricultural cooperation and environmental protection and that "other agreements will be signed by private firms with Soviet agencies."

A passenger jeep and tricycles ply their usual routes Monday despite flooding of Manila streets spawned by typhoon Ruby. The typhoon killed at least 13 people and left more than 20,000 homeless.

Typhoon kills at least 13 people

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Typhoon Ruby roared across the Philippines today with heavy rain and winds topping 100 mph, causing mud slides and tidal surges that left thousands homeless. Officials said at least 13 people died.

The military reported another 30 people were missing and feared dead in a storm-related bus accident and that an inter-island vessel with 481 passengers and crew was missing in stormy seas.

The coast guard said the missing vessel, the Marilyn, reported engine trouble en route from Manila to Tacloban City and could have taken shelter in an isolated harbor. It was last reported about 200 miles southeast of Manila.

The government warned of more flooding as the storm approached Manila. At 4 p.m., the storm sustained winds of 102 mph and its center was moving northwest at 16 mph toward densely populated central Luzon Island.

"This is one of the worst typhoons this year," said Juanito Lirios, deputy weather service director. "Manila is in great danger. Let us not take chances. If we do not take care then there could be a great loss of lives."

Some flights were canceled and schools were closed in Manila.

The U.S. military's television network reported wind gusts up to 140 mph. All six U.S. military bases in the Philippines were put on maximum storm alert.

States of emergency were declared in some areas of the southern Mindanao Island, and thousands of people were evacuated.

Ruby is the 18th typhoon or tropical storm to hit the Philippines this year and the second in four days. There were conflicting reports on casualties because the storm knocked out communications in the affected areas.

Rodrigo Roldan, civil defense director on Panay Island, said at least five people were killed today when a bus carrying about 90 people careened off a bridge during heavy winds and rain and plunged into a river.

The army said another 30 passengers were missing and presumed dead. The state-run Philippines News Agency said most of the passengers were sleeping when the accident occurred and were unable to escape.

Roldan said at least 19 people were rescued.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Kidnappers repeat threats to hostages

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Shiite Moslem extremists holding U.S. hostages repeated their long-standing demands for the Americans' release in a new statement, threatening reprisal if the demands are not met.

The message Sunday was the second threatening statement in three days from the pro-Iranian Islamic Jihad, which holds American journalist Terry Anderson and educator Thomas Sutherland.

The three-page typewritten Arabic statement was delivered to the independent newspaper An-Nahar. A color photograph of Anderson was delivered later to a Western news agency in Beirut — the kidnappers' normal method of authenticating statements.

The picture showed Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, with a bushy beard and mustache. He wore a T-shirt and looked straight into the camera. It was similar to photographs of Anderson released released April 10, 1987, and on Friday.

"In case of failure to meet these demands and continued support of Israel's aggression against our people the United States will pay the price very soon. This price will reflect adversely on the fate of the hostages we hold," it said.

Pope beatifies scientist

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II on Sunday beatified a 17th century Danish scientist who converted to Catholicism and served as a bishop in predominantly Protestant Germany.

During the solemn ceremony in St. Peter's Basilica, the pope praised Niels Stensen as an example for scientists, missionaries and Christians around the world.

Stensen was born a Lutheran in Copenhagen in 1638. After studying medicine in Holland, he moved to Florence, Italy and converted to Catholicism in 1667. He was appointed bishop in Germany, where he died in Schwerin in 1686. He was buried in Florence's Basilica of St. Lorenzo.

The pope said Stensen should serve as inspiration for Christians living outside their native lands, "in solitude or in places that don't understand them."

Beatification is a step toward possible sainthood in the Roman Catholic Church.

Surfer hits biting shark

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — A surfer who was attacked and badly gashed by a 7-foot shark during a weekend competition said today that he eventually turned the creature away by repeatedly punching it in the snout.

John Wonham's right leg required 31 stitches after Saturday's attack, which the surfer said would not keep him from returning to the ocean.

"They (sharks) won't keep me away from the water," he said. "Surfing can be dangerous, but its very unusual for sharks to attack like that."

Wonham, a surfer for 20 years, was attacked during a veteran's long board competition off Phillip Island in the state of Victoria.

The 38-year-old Wonham said he struck the shark repeatedly with his fists.

"I'm quite lucky. I could have lost an arm or a leg," he said.

Mexican officials charged

NEW YORK (AP) — Plans for a $50 million-a-month heroin pipeline from Mexico were foiled with the arrest of two Mexican police commanders who officials say boasted they could close airports in their home state to help the smuggling.

Pedro Guillen, 39, and Margaritan Villagrana, 42, commanders from the state of Guerrero, which includes Acapulco, were to be arraigned today, authorities said. They were arrested late Saturday in a hotel following a four-month investigation, said Robert Strang, a spokesman for the U.S. Drug Enforcement Adminstration.

"They had the arrogance to travel to the United States to peddle their goods," said Robert M. Stutman, special agent in charge of the DEA in New York.

Hundreds still missing

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — Hundreds of fishermen were missing after a severe storm hit the southern coast, killing at least 35 people, officials said Sunday. A boating group said the government failed to broadcast warnings.

The storm lashed cities along the Bay of Bengal with 75 mph winds and 15-foot waves Wednesday, injuring more than 1,000, authorities said.

Newspapers and district officials estimated as many as 1,500 fishermen were missing.

Mohammad Kamal, district official at the sea resort of Cox's Bazar, said Sunday more than 1,000 had been rescued. He said navy boats continued to search the bay.

Over 1,700 demonstrate

TOKYO (AP) — More than 1,700 people demonstrated peacefully Sunday against the planned expansion of New Tokyo International Airport at Narita.

The demonstrators, carrying banners bearing slogans such as "Don't Expand!" marched about two miles from the airport, said a police official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The official said 9,000 riot police were mobilized to protect the airport, which is 40 miles northeast of Tokyo.

The demonstrators oppose government plans to exproporiate farmland to build an additional runway at the airport, which opened in 1978.

Soviet shuttle ready

MOSCOW (AP) — The copycat Soviet version of the U.S. space shuttle, named the "Buran" (Snowstorm), is now ready for blastoff at the nation's space center in Central Asia, Radio Moscow reported today.

"Preparation is nearing completion for its test launch," the state-run radio's international service said in a news broadcast. It did not say when blastoff would occur.

The Buran and its rocket booster, the 2,000-ton Energia, will take off from the Baikonur Cosmodrome, the Soviet space center on the steppes of Kazakhstan, Radio Moscow said.
