Altered pigs provide human hemoglobin

■ Achievement is a milestone in effort to find a substitute for blood, experts say.

N.Y. Times News Service

Using genetic engineering techniques, biologists have created pigs that produce human hemoglobin, the essential oxygen-carrying component of blood.

Experts said the achievement was a milestone in the effort to find a substitute for blood that could be used in all types of transfusions and might offer advantages over the donated blood now used.

A blood substitute could be stored for months instead of weeks, would be free of any risk of human infection, and could be transfused into anyone without the need for blood typing and matching.

Officials of a small biotechnology company, DNX Inc. of Princeton, N.J., said they had developed three pigs that produce human hemoglobin, the substance in the red blood cells that transports oxygen throughout the body.

When the pigs were day-old embryos, the scientists injected sets of two genes that make human hemoglobin, and now, about 15 percent of their hemoglobin is human.

It is one of a very few times that scientists have put human genes into large animals and had them function successfully.

The company's officials will outline the work today at a scientific meeting in Anaheim, Calif., and will describe what they regard as equally important: the discovery of a method of purifying the human hemoglobin produced.

The extracted hemoglobin has not been tried in humans, and might not succeed. But DNX has given research data to the Food and Drug Administration and plans to apply this year for approval of human trials.

The company said it would take at least five years to complete research and testing of pig-produced hemoglobin, and there are also serious questions that will have to be overcome about the safety of using hemoglobin extracted from animals for human transfusion.

Thousands flee volcano; fears mount

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — A huge fissure cracked Mount Pinatubo, and scientists said Saturday they expect a catastrophic blast from the volcano. Thousands of people in nearby towns tried desperately to flee.

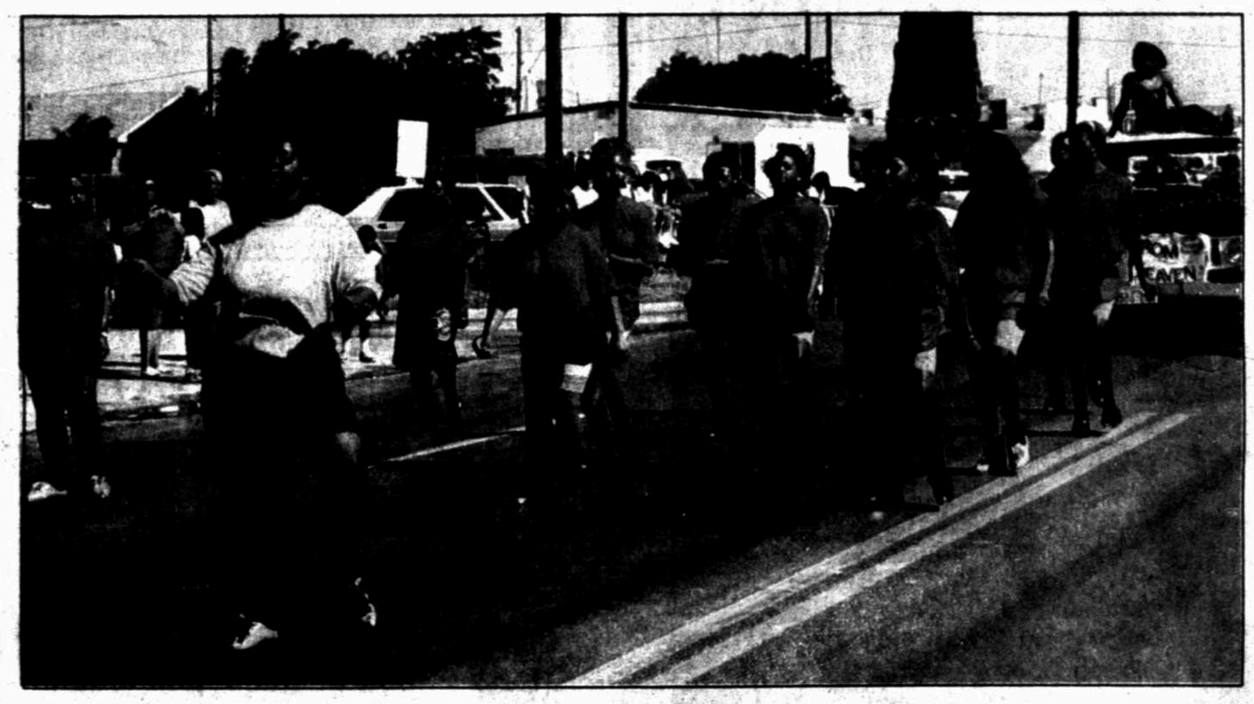

The last 1,500 U.S. troops guarding nearby Clark Air Base left as the volcano thundered in 11 separate explosions Saturday, including one that scientists said spurted volcanic ash and steam 21 miles high.

At the Subic Bay naval base, where 15,000 evacuees from Clark fled Monday, a U.S. dependent and a Filipino were killed by collapsing roofs after 6 to 12 inches of ash fell, officials said today.

The casualties raised to 12 the death toll reported by U.S. and Philippines officials from volcano-related accidents.

The 7,000 relatives of Clark personnel also were ordered to return to the United States. But U.S. officials said the families wouldn't leave until Manila airports

Prodigal sons: More adult men live at parents'

By Jane Gross

N.Y. Times News Service

The rent is low and the utilities are free. There is hot food on the table and clean socks in the drawer. Mom nags a little and Dad scowls a lot, but mostly they don't get in the way. And there's money left at the end of the month for the car payment.

Young single men say these are the reasons they are living with their parents in record numbers, burrowing into the familial nest far more often than women of the same age and circumstance.

AIDS sufferer infected by dentist 'waits to die'

FORT PIERCE, Fla. (AP) — Once a powerful voice in the battle for patients' rights after contracting AIDS from her dentist, Kimberly Bergalis is waiting to die.

She became a celebrity after the government said she was the first patient in the nation to be infected with the AIDS virus by a health-care worker. But now, with her body wracked by AIDS-related tuberculosis, the 23-year-old is too weak to carry on her fight, her family says.

Bergalis' weight is down to about 70 pounds. She is unable to walk. She speaks haltingly through lips pained by blisters, her words slurred.

Swallowing food has become impossible. A vitamin drink and Gatorade are all she can keep down. She spends her days in bed or on the living room couch, watching TV and listening to music.

"Her mind is still clear," her father, George Bergalis, said last week. "That's one of the hardest things. She knows how bad she's gotten and it really bothers her. She keeps asking, 'Why won't God take me? Why won't he let me die?' "

Library-expansion fund drive hits home stretch

■ Max Perry works to collect the $300,000 needed to match a challenge grant from the Abell-Hanger Foundation.

By Ed Tod

One of these days, when new library walls are raised and the old ones come tumbling down, Midland is going to appear even more progressive and literate.

Meanwhile, Max Perry is working to collect the $300,000 needed to match a challenge grant from the Abell-Hanger Foundation for expansion of the Midland County Public Library.

That $600,000, together with Midland County funds, will go toward the $1.75 million expansion and remodeling of the 1957-built Midland County Public Library & Museum.

By late last week, Perry, former president of the Friends of the Library, had raised $286,000 toward the goal and was

SUFFERER: Woman contracted AIDS from dentist

(From 1A)

Miss Bergalis came forward after the federal Centers for Disease Control reported last August that a Florida dentist somehow transmitted the AIDS virus to his patient. The case opened a national debate on whether patients should know whether their doctors have AIDS.

Dr. David Acer, a bisexual who learned he had full-blown AIDS in September 1987, extracted Miss Bergalis' molars that December and regularly treated about 2,000 patients before he died on Sept. 3, 1990.

Last week, the agency confirmed that at least five of those patients were infected by Acer's unique strain of the HIV virus.

"If this man had the courage and the medical dignity to admit he had AIDS, we would've been spared," said Barbara Webb, a retired English teacher who is among the five. "There is morally no reason for Kim to be dying and for me to be feeling terrible."

Mrs. Webb, 65, is fighting an AIDS-related pleurisy that fills her lungs with fluid, but she visited Miss Bergalis last week — and promised to pick up where the young woman left off.

"It was pretty sad. She is so fragile at this point that you hardly dare touch her," Mrs. Webb said. "I said, 'I'm here because I love you and to let you know that I'll carry the torch you gave me.'"

Miss Bergalis was 21 when she first felt sick. It was December 1989. She almost died of pneumonia.

An HIV test came back positive. The family suspected Acer, but wasn't sure until the CDC report came out.

Miss Bergalis decided then to make the most of the time she had left, campaigning for tough restrictions on the practices of infected health-care workers and full disclosure of AIDS status between doctors and patients.

The medical establishment maintains that since at least 6,436 health-care workers have AIDS, and Acer's is the only case where the virus is known to have been transmitted to a patient, mandatory testing and restrictions remain unnecessary.

Miss Bergalis' health took a turn for the worse in February, after she was interviewed on the Oprah Winfrey show and came home exhausted. It was one of her last appearances.

Her family and friends say it's important to describe her condition in graphic detail now to bring home the reality of AIDS.

Meanwhile, the Bergalis family has quit praying for miracles.

"We pray that God will be kind to her and let her die a peaceful death," George Bergalis said.

Texas musicians strut their stuff at Washington's outdoor 'fiesta'

By James R. Owen
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Saturday was a day to be a Texan here, no matter where you came from.

Texas musicians, dancers and artists of all kinds strutted their stuff at a free "fiesta" during the fifth day of the 12-day Texas Festival at the Kennedy Center, the performing arts center's first-ever showcase of a single state's artistic heritage.

At least one T-shirt in the crowd proclaimed: "Life's too short not to live it as a Texan."

Festival organizers estimated that at least 20,000 area residents and visitors spent the day grazing at a delightful smorgasbord of the Texas arts and sampling Tex-Mex food and drink.

And, oh, did they eat. But mainly they drank. Sweltering in mid-90 degree heat, people drank water, soda and lots and lots of Lone Star beer.

For the jazz-minded, there was the Jim Cullum Jazz Band from San Antonio, whose straight-up, solid sound — coming from a stage in front of a 23-foot fiberglass replica of the Alamo — had the place swinging.

Cullum's band, which has been performing regularly on San Antonio's Riverwalk for years, found plenty of fans in the nation's capital.

"They sound terrific, and they've got their stuff all together," said Joe Godfrey, a longtime Washington resident and self-described jazz aficionado who claimed he knew Jim Cullum Sr., the current band leader's father.

Added Bob Bristow, a former Houstonian now living in Washington, "Going to to San Antonio to hear the Jim Cullum Jazz Band, why that was almost a ritual. It's great to hear them up here."

Outside on a stage overlooking the sleepy Potomac River, 14 young Hispanic dancers in flowing skirts dazzled the crowd with the International Ballet Folklorico, run by legendary dance teacher Rosa Guerrero of El Paso.

She described the opportunity to perform in Washington "as the dream of a lifetime" for her young charges, many from El Paso's barrio neighborhoods "and most of whom have never ridden on an airplane before coming here."

"We had all the odds against our being chosen (for the festival)," she said in an interview. "The Hispanic arts are really at the bottom of the ladder."

Pointing to the Texas Boys' Choir, singing the "Battle Hymn of the Republic" in clear, sharp harmony nearby, she asked, "How many Hispanics do you see in that group?"

Food also was on the minds of many festival-goers.

Tom and Brenda Reedy, "temporary" Washington residents from Austin, agreed that the fiesta cuisine "was not Texan."

"It's not nearly spicy enough," said Brenda, while Tom said, "In fact, there's no good Mexican food up here."

Still, the lines were long at each one of nine food stalls set up in the parking lot just outside the Kennedy Center, where sweaty patrons lined up to get their grub.

Michael Hale, a former Dallas resident now living in Alexandria, Va., said "the food's fine, there's just not enough lines for cold beer," as Marge Calhoun and the New Heartaches belted out rousing country-rock tunes and a few hardy souls did the two-step on a blistering-hot asphalt dance floor.

Few parts of the Lone Star State were left out.

From East Texas came the "accordian kings" — Vrazel's Polka Band, Little Willie and the Zyeco Hitch Hikers, and Jackie Caillier and the Cajun Cousins.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Dads: Kick back to low 90s

Staff Report

Today is expected to be partly cloudy with a high in the low 90s and 10 to 15 mph south winds, the National Weather Service in Midland said.

Tonight will be partly cloudy with a low in the mid-60s, NWS said. Monday will be fair with a high in the low 90s.

The record high of 106 for Saturday's date was set in 1960, while the record low for today's date was 48 in 1981. Saturday's high was 93, with a low of 63.

STATE

Mostly sunny skies dominated North and West Texas Saturday as showers and a few thunderstorms made their way along the coast and into southeast Texas.

An upper-level disturbance, the source of rain in South Texas, began to move to the northeast as the rest of the region remained under partly to mostly cloudy skies.

Rain cooled coastal areas to a mild 70-degree range. Elsewhere in the state, temperatures stayed in the 80s and 90s.

Isolated showers and thunderstorms developed over the Panhandle and South Plains by late Saturday.

The South Texas forecast calls for partly to mostly cloudy skies with scattered afternoon and evening showers or thunderstorms through Monday. Highs should remain in the 80s and 90s.

In West Texas, a slight chance of thunderstorms over the South Plains is expected today. Clear skies over far West Texas with fair skies elsewhere through Monday.

Highs should reach the mid-80s in the Panhandle to near 103 in the Big Bend lowlands.

NATION

Portions of Iowa, Nebraska and Missouri had flooding Saturday. Tornadoes raked Texas, Kansas and Indiana.

The mid-Atlantic states baked in warmer than usual temperatures and record highs were set in West Virginia and Philadelphia. In Montana, the mercury dropped to record low temperatures.

A tornado touched down near Eudora, Kan., but no damage was reported. A tornado also hit Warsaw, Ind.

A river swollen to near-record levels by torrential rain washed out bridges in northeast Iowa. Fuel tanks were swept downstream in Elkader and up to 500 people were evacuated in Elgin when floodwaters knocked over ammonia tanks.

Clayton County Civil Defense Director Owen Puahl said 13 inches of rain fell on the Iowa town of Monona overnight. Police and residents said between 7.5 and 10 inches fell in other northeast Iowa communities.

Severe storms brought flooding, hail and high winds to eastern Nebraska and up to 5 inches of rain fell in the northeast community of Wayne.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

LIBRARY: Final results to be announced June 24

wondering where the last $14,000 was coming from.

"It's all been voluntary," he said of the funds to match the challenge grant. "We haven't even approached the merchants in town, which is what happens in most campaigns."

The Friends of the Library and the library's Advisory Board have linked up in working to meet the Abell-Hanger challenge grant.

The 272 donors of challenge-grant gifts, from $5 up, have been eager to contribute to the library's expansion fund, Perry said.

Final results of the fund drive are to be announced at the June 24 County Commissioners' meeting.

Any matching funds raised beyond the $300,000 target will "go to the library expansion fund," Perry said. "We can always use it for library equipment."

Since the late 1970s, the Midland County Commissioners' Court has been thwarted in its effort to build or to share in the building of a new or expanded library.

"We almost got a new library in the boom," County Librarian Sandra Wegner said. "We were sort of victims of circumstances."

The oil boom of the late 1970s and early 1980s showered almost unbridled optimism across the country. The 1983 bust quickly killed off the most ambitious library project: a $5.5-million multi-story library to be built by the First National Bank of Midland.

"This community has tried to do something about this library several times," said Mrs. Wegner, but "a lot of things" have run interference, including the pressing need for jail space.

"I'm sure the commissioners would rather build libraries than jails," Mrs. Wegner said.

The present downtown library is a two-tier building of 27,000 square feet, including the basement, which houses mechanical equipment and the Midland County Museum. Fate of the museum is uncertain, although it is to be preserved, but apparently not as part of the library.

The commissioners have considered relocating the museum to Old Midland's Historic District.

The $1.75 million construction project, to be completed in 1992, is to include a 19,500-square-foot addition on the library's south side, tearing down inside partitions, and an interior and exterior remodeling.

"We will go through some difficult times," Mrs. Wegner said of construction period that is to begin later this year. "It will probably be tough on all — patrons and staff. It will be an interesting experience."

The expansion will come first. After that, library functions will be shifted to the new portion while the old library is remodeled.

All told, the library shelves about 180,000 cataloged items: 140,000 books plus magazines, videos, cassettes, records, tapes, and maps.

"Books are still the main business of all libraries," Mrs. Wegner said, noting that the library is leaning toward computerization. "It's a combination of the new and the old. I don't think we will ever get rid of books."

On the outside, the new library will be covered with a sloped metal roof that will do away with leaks.

The exterior of the two-story library will be a double-shaded stucco finish. The north and west sides are to be in light stucco to reflect the hot sunlight. A minimum of glass will be used.

The library's south and east sides are to be finished in reddish Barstow stone-colored stucco.

Trees are to be planted on the east and north sides of the library for sidewalk shading and building shielding. The trees will make the "sidewalk more friendly," said Midland architect Lawrence Connolly, who is designing the library project.

Brian Adamick/Reporter-Telegram

Library patron Max Perry, left, and Midland architect Lawrence Connolly display a model of the proposed renovated-and-expanded Midland County Public Library.

The main entrance to the library is to be on the east side facing Colorado Street. The current north-side main entrance faces Missouri Avenue.

Fate of the mosaic tile artwork, a stratigraphic-chronological representation of West Texas, along the library's north exterior wall has not been decided.

"We are aware of it," Connolly said of the mosaic artwork. "We would like to be able to incorporate it into the new building, but it has not really been addressed."

Preserving the artwork would be very costly, he said.

And while the exact square-foot cost of the Midland County library project has not yet been determined, the square-foot cost of a standard library "for this part of the country" is about $60," Connolly said.

The new expanded library will be accesible to handicapped patrons including those in wheelchairs.

Connolly said the particularly exciting aspect of designing the library is in "making an existing facility more efficient and productive for its users."

In the new library, "we won't be hemmed in by very many walls," Mrs. Wegner said. The free-flowing interior will allow "maximum moveability.

"Some departments may stretch in certain ways, and others may retreat, but they won't be boxed in by walls."

Connolly said interior partitions will be removed in the library to allow as much flexibility as possible.

"Libraries are changing so quickly and so dramatically with the advent of the electronic media that we do not want to be plugged into a specific sort of solution," she said.

SECRETS: Scientists look for blood substitute

(From 1A)

But experts in the field nevertheless praised the achievement.

"I think this is an exciting development," said Dr. Robert Winslow, chief of the blood research division of the Army's Letterman Institute of Research in San Francisco.

"Military doctors believe a solution to this problem of making a blood substitute that can carry oxygen would have saved the lives of 10,000 soldiers in Vietnam. Soldiers bleed to death on the battlefield where you can't get blood to them, and before you can get them back to where they can be transfused."

Dr. Timothy Estep, vice president for research at Baxter Health Care Corp., which has been working on extracting hemoglobin from human blood, said the DNX work was "an interesting milestone" in the development of hemoglobin through genetic engineering, adding:

"It is one useful step among many that need to be taken to make a blood substitute. We believe that some product like this will be approved in the mid-1990s; things are moving fast."

Estep said the value of hemoglobin as a substitute for blood is generally accepted among experts. "Now the question that must be answered is, how safe are these products?" he said.

Among the safety questions are whether some animal viruses might escape the purification process and cause illness in humans, and whether cellular debris missed in purification could cause kidney damage or allergic reactions.

Dr. S. Gerald Sandler, chief of medicine in the blood division of the American Red Cross, said the blood substitute work is important and welcome.

He said such a product would be especially useful in emergencies when blood was in short supply, or when blood of the particular type was not available.

He said he did not expect that blood substitutes would eliminate the majority of ordinary blood use, partly because of doctors' reluctance, partly because prices may be higher than now expected and partly because safety problems may arise.

In recent years, the effort to make a blood substitute has turned toward genetic engineering techniques in which animals are the hosts for foreign genes.

In such "molecular farming" several chemicals, including a substance that causes blood to clot, have been successfully made.

The DNX experiments began with the two human genes that control the body's production of hemoglobin. Researchers inject copies of the human genes into day-old pig embryos that have been taken from a donor pig. The embroyos are then inserted into the womb of a second pig, grow to term and are born.

Only about 5 in 1,000 of the transfers succeed, but three pigs have been born with the human gene in their bodies in the last few years, the last one in February.

Research into breeding has begun, but DNX officials declined to discuss the program in detail. In theory, all progeny of such breeding would carry the human genes.

The altered pigs produce red blood cells that contain either pig hemoglobin or human hemoglobin. So far, about 15 percent of the cells have the human type, but company officials say they expect to be able raise that to 50 percent.

Blood drawn from the pigs is put through a purification system that separates the human hemoglobin from pig hemoglobin by distinguishing their molecular electric charges.

It is the discovery of this purification technique that company officials believe is as significant as the creation of pigs carrying human hemoglobin.

Other attempts to make blood substitutes have run into difficulties related partly to purfication. One company, Biopure Inc. of Boston, tried using cow hemoglobin, but tests in humans this year were halted after unexpected reactions in the first volunteers.

VOLCANO: Scientists expect top of mountain to blow off

and the Cubi Point naval air station reopened. Area airports were closed because airborne debris can make plane engines stall.

The 1.8-mile-long fissure appeared on the south side of the volcano between two craters, said scientists at the Philippine Institute of Volcanology and Seismology. It was unclear when the crack occurred but it suggested the possibility that the top of the mountain may blow off, they said.

On Saturday, pumice stones the size of marbles showered Olongapo, about 25 miles southwest of Pinatubo, injuring about 30 people. Gobs of mud fell on the Clark base in the city of Angeles and along the western slopes of the volcano.

Under orders from Defense Secretary Fidel Ramos, meanwhile, the government today began evacuating three major cities near the volcano, but washed-out bridges, ash-clogged highways and a lack of transport slowed the effort.

Officials said they only had 250 buses and trucks to move the more than half million people living in Angeles, Olongapo and San Fernando.

But many residents, either unaware of the evacuation or refusing to wait for help, on Saturday started piling into cars, pedicabs, and trucks or trudged on foot through knee-deep ash to escape the rumbling mountain.

Power outages and transport snarls silenced newspapers, radio and television reports. Stores were closed so people could not buy food and other provisions.

The region also has been hit by winds and rains generated from a typhoon, and earthquakes triggered by the volcanic eruptions shook the main island of Luzon, where both the volcano and Manila are located.

Winds and rain from Typhoon Yunya carried ash as far as 100 miles from the volcano. Elsewhere, two bus terminals, schools and homes collapsed under the weight of ash and rain. The storm left Philippine territory late Saturday and entered the South China Sea.

Subic Bay, home to the largest U.S. naval base in the Philippines, was on the edge of the danger zone but officials said there was no plan to evacuate.

Still, base spokesman Lt. Cmdr. Kevin Mukri said that the base had lost all electricity and power, and 50 temporary storage buildings had collapsed because of accumulated ash. He said the names of the two who died were withheld pending notification of kin.

The thick ash cloud also darkened Manila, 60 miles to the south, three hours before sunset and blanketed it with the fine debris. Radio stations in the capital interrupted regular programming to offer prayers.

The volcanic and seismic activity was not confined to the Philippines:

SONS: More young, single men live with parents

(From 1A)

Facing tough economic times and marrying later, young people of both sexes have been living at home in growing numbers in recent years. But it is men, disproportionately, who are nesting with the folks, while women are more likely to live independently, alone or with roommates of either sex.

A recent Census Bureau survey of marital status and living arrangements shows men and women reacting very differently to the soft job market and soft marriage market.

Among 25-to-34-year-olds, 32 percent of single men and 20 percent of single women were living with their parents last year.

There are few hard explanations for the wide disparity between men and women.

Demographers speculate that men find living at home more attractive than women do because they are less skilled at setting up their own households, enjoy the pampering of their mothers and suffer virtually no loss of independence.

Divorce rates are rising among parents, and mothers who would otherwise be living alone may value the protection and companionship of an adult son.

Until 1990, the Census Bureau did not specify marital status when tabulating those who lived at home in its annual survey of living arrangements. But demographers say they have every reason to believe the 1990 figures for single people are the highest ever.

And census figures for the total pool of young adults, married and single, show a dramatic shift in male behavior over the past two decades.

In 1970, 9.5 percent of all men aged 25 to 34 lived with parents. By 1990 that was up to 15 percent. Among women, the two-decade rise was far more gradual, from 6.6 percent in 1970 to 8.1 percent last year.

The variation between men and women "suggests that the nest is a lot better feathered for the boys than the girls," said Frances Goldscheider, a professor of sociology at Brown University.

Men are granted more freedom by their parents, Ms. Goldscheider and demographers say, and often get "a totally free ride" from their mothers on household chores.

The variation also suggests that "men need to be taken care of by women" and turn to their mothers in the absence of a wife, said Richard Hokenson, an economic demographer at the securities company Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette.

"It's a variation on the Peter Pan syndrome," Hokenson said. "You know, the Island of Lost Boys, the song 'I Won't Grow Up.'"

Among those at home with their parents are young men earning a good living, like Ed Mastoloni, a $35,000-a-year financial analyst for a New York City insurance company.

Some are unemployed and others are barely getting by, like Jeff Seaman, who makes $19,000 a year as a deputy sheriff in Cincinnati.

But rich or poor, they seem to enjoy the same comforts.

"I come and go as I please and dinner's always ready when I get home," said Mastoloni, 25, who lives in his family's sprawling home in Greenwich, Conn.

Mastoloni says that he would be earning enough to move out if he had not recently bought an expensive jeep and a jet ski.

Seaman, at 27, also reaps the rewards of tender loving care and low overhead. "Everything's always done — the laundry, the food — and I don't have to worry about the cable getting shut off or the telephone," he said. "Where I used to live, there might be beer cans and pizza boxes stacked up for weeks. And I drive a Corvette, not a rusted-out Ford Escort."

The Seaman household also includes Jeff's 30-year-old brother, Doug, a health-care aide who has custody of his two sons.

Donna Seaman, a nurse, looks after them all, as well as her husband, Willis, who is a welder, and she muses about the ways women spoil men.

"I think us women have got to do something about these boys," Mrs. Seaman said. "It's all our own fault. All we do is wait on them."

The pampering takes many forms.

Betty Sansing of San Rafael, Calif., gets up early to pack a lunch for her 32-year-old son, John, a sheet metal worker.

Louise Specht of Aliquippa, Pa., does laundry for her 31-year-old son, Brian, an unemployed plumber, because she doesn't want him "puttering around with my washer."

Judy Mastoloni, Ed's mother, irons her son's shirts for $1 each and takes his shoes to the shoemaker for free.

Most of the sons rave about how nice it is to live in a clean house.

"Men are, you could say, lazy," Mastoloni said. "They know there's stuff to clean up, but they watch football instead. And how often does a guy get down on his hands and knees to scrub the bathtub?"

Mrs. Sansing, Mrs. Specht and Mrs. Mastoloni do not work outside the home, and demographic experts suggest that nonworking women are most likely to enjoy having their grown sons at home.

"If their career was kids, it's a justification of their choice of role," said Celinda Lake, vice president of Greenberg/Lake, a Washington polling organization.

Many fathers seem to object to the imposition on their wives more than their wives themselves do.

One of them, a San Francisco garbageman, has two sons at home, aged 25 and 28. One was recently laid off as a house painter, and the other has a drug problem. Both take advantage of their mother, the man said.

"All they have to say is 'Mom, I need a six-pack, $20 and the keys to the car,' and she's off and running," he said.

When a son lives with a divorced mother, the divison of labor seems more equitable.

State makes final offer on jails, leaves decisions to Harris County

HOUSTON (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards signed a prison reform bill Saturday as the state made its final offer to Harris County to end a multimillion-dollar lawsuit against the state.

"It's all in Harris County's hands now," said Sen. Jim Turner, D-Crockett, who sponsored the legislation and has been instrumental in setting up last-minute negotiations with the county.

If Harris County doesn't reach agreement with the state by midnight today, the bill dies and any separate settlement agreements die, Turner said. He said the bill could bring Harris County as much as $400 million over the next four years.

"This $1.6 billion legislation and settlement will add up to 28,000 new prison beds to the Texas Department of Corrections system," Richards said. "It will also begin work on the structural reforms necessary to ensure that prison space is reserved for our most violent offenders — and that those violent offenders serve a longer portion of their sentence.

"If the Harris County commissioners kill this bill, the damage to the state will be enormous," she said.

After meeting much of the day Friday with Texas Attorney General Dan Morales, Harris County commissioners demanded thousands more prison beds and millions of dollars as part of a six-point list of conditions under which they would agree to drop a $49 million judgment against the state.

Twelve counties agreed to drop a jail overcrowding lawsuit against the state in return for thousands of prison beds and millions of dollars. Harris and Montgomery counties, have yet to agree. Montgomery County officials said they would sign if Harris County did.

"Everyone is going to have to give a little bit," Morales said Saturday. "But we're not going to give up until the stroke of midnight on Sunday."

Turner said Morales and his staff were "greatly disappointed and somewhat shocked that Harris County would make the proposal that it's made" because the items were different from those discussed in the meetings Friday.

"Harris County knows what the state's willing to do. I've conveyed that clearly to Judge Lindsay and to (County Attorney) Mike Driscoll," Turner said.

Police arrest professor suspected of kidnapping, abusing Dallas woman

SUNNYVALE (AP) — A college professor was arrested on charges he kidnapped a Dallas woman and held her captive for two weeks while sexually abusing her.

The 22-year-old woman escaped when the professor took her to a grocery store on June 1, police said. He had blindfolded her with a mask and duct tape, police said.

Bill Robert Cathey, 49, who taught English last semester at the University of North Texas in Denton, about 35 miles north of Dallas, was charged with aggravated kidnapping Friday. He was being held in a Mesquite jail on $50,000 bail.

Police said they believe Cathey kept the woman in a three-by-four-foot hall closet most of the time. Her hands were handcuffed to the ceiling and her feet were secured to the floor, police said.

The professor allegedly fondled the woman, masturbated in front of her and videotaped her but did not rape her, police said.

She was able to escape from Cathey on June 1 when he took her to a Kroger Food Store in neighboring Garland.

Deputies with the Dallas County Sheriff's Department arrested Cathey about 10 a.m. Friday near his home in suburban Sunnyvale, east of Dallas.

Cathey gave Mesquite police a statement admitting to the kidnapping, Sgt. Gary Westphal told The Dallas Morning News.

The victim told police that Cathey spotted her walking in east Dallas on or near May 18 and offered her a ride. She accepted the ride and directed him to a place where she bought narcotics for the two of them, police said.

Mesquite police Capt. Larry Sprague said several people told police that they saw Cathey with the blindfolded woman, but no one did anything about it.

Bush hopes Iraqi people will overthrow Saddam

LOS ANGELES (AP) — President Bush said Saturday it was never a U.S. objective in the Gulf War to throw Saddam Hussein out of office, but he still hopes the Iraqi people will do the job.

Bush heatedly denied he or President Reagan did anything in the 1980 campaign to delay the release of the American hostages in Iran. He said he welcomes a congressional investigation, but warned against its becoming "a billion-dollar witch-hunt."

He said Vice President Dan Quayle is "absolutely" qualified to be president someday and "he's going to be on the ticket if I run again" in 1992.

And Bush vowed to "go down the line" with the military base closing recommendations that Defense Secretary Dick Cheney and Gen. Colin Powell, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, make. "I will not use politics to counter a decision," said the president.

He made the comments in a wide-ranging 35-minute interview Saturday in his hotel suite with three local television reporters before a golf outing with Reagan.

Bush also defended his opposition to federal funding of abortions, but said he had no quarrel with Gov. Pete Wilson or other Republicans who hold more liberal views. "We've got a big-tent approach in our party" on abortion, said Bush.

Bush, asked what it would take to get the Iraqi dictator out, said, "Our objective was never to throw him out of office. Look at all the U.N. resolutions.

"Our objective was to throw him out of Kuwait, and boy, did our people perform well," said the president.

He said the United States will not have normalized relations with Baghdad or "lighten up on international sanctions as long as he's there."

"I'm still hopeful that recognizing the economy in that country is very sorry, that the Iraqi people will do what they should have done long ago, in my view. This man is unforgivably brutal," said Bush.

Bush was asked if he hoped Quayle would be president some day. He said Quayle was "getting the most unfair rap from his critics of anybody that's been in this job. And you're talking to 'the wimp' ... the guy that had a cover of a national magazine that I'll never forgive that put that label on me."

Pressed further on whether he hopes Quayle will one day occupy the Oval Office, Bush said, "Please don't inject me into 1996 politics before a final decision's been made on 1992. ... If you're asking me, is he qualified, the answer is, absolutely yes."

Bush said he wants the United Nations to "examine every lead" on allegations that Iraq still has nuclear weapons material hidden away, but said he was certain that Saddam's ability to make "an atomic weapon has been set back into the Dark Ages."

Barbara Bush urges tolerance

BOSTON (AP) — Americans have much to learn about their country's legacy of freedom and compassion, first lady Barbara Bush said Saturday at Northeastern University's commencement.

"Real tolerance is an idea that our country has strived for since its beginning," she said. "Certainly we've made progress, but we still have a long, long way to go."

"How may of us have not shunned someone with a handicap because it makes us feel uncomfortable, or made fun of a classmate for some real or imagined difference?" Mrs. Bush asked the audience in Boston Garden.

Mrs. Bush, who received an honorary doctorate for public service, has spent her time as first lady to promote literacy, volunteerism and family values.

"Tolerance is much more than just respecting people of a different race," she said. "It's a constant stream of little acts in our daily lives."

The Anti-Defamation League has reported that anti-Semitic incidents are at an all-time high and such incidents on college campuses have increased 35 percent, Mrs. Bush said.

She mentioned a letter she received during the Persian Gulf War from an Afghan girl whose Muslim family was harassed at their home in a northern Virginia suburb.

"Obscene words were spray painted on their front door, windows were broken, the tires on her father's taxi cab were flattened," Mrs. Bush said. "This little 9-year-old girl was confused why a country who went to the defense of another half way around the world could be so rude in their own back yard?"

Still, the United States is the best place to live and Northeastern students must make it even better, she said.

"Being a parent, a daughter or a son, a husband or a wife, or someone's best friend, are really the most important roles you're ever going to play in your whole life," said Mrs. Bush.

NATION IN BRIEF

■ Candidate wins backing

LAFAYETTE, La. — U.S. Rep. Clyde Holloway won the Louisiana Republican Party's gubernatorial endorsement Saturday, despite efforts to thwart him by two candidates not up for GOP backing, Gov. Buddy Roemer and state Rep. David Duke.

Holloway, who needed a simple majority of 427 votes for the endorsement, received 473½ votes to 374½ votes in favor of the party making no endorsement.

Roemer and Duke, a former Klu Klux Klan leader, refused to sign a pledge to drop out of the race if the party's endorsement went to someone else, so the GOP said they would not be considered.

"This won't send a bad message to the citizens of Louisiana," Holloway said after the vote. "We had three candidates in the race ... and they will each put out their message. I hope they'll accept mine.

"We feel good about where we are and feel confident we'll win," said Holloway, who is serving his second term in Congress.

The GOP meeting was marked by attacks on Roemer, who switched to the Republican Party in March, and was frequently interrupted by Duke supporters.

■ Janitor-speakers deliver

WOLFEBORO, N.H. — Kingswood Regional High School's class of '91 got what it wanted: Two beloved janitors delivered the commencement address Saturday with a little dancing and tears.

The senior class in this summer resort town passed over traditional speakers in favor of Bob Rivera and Peter Yates. The beloved custodians didn't let them down.

Yates, 33, took the stage to implore about 100 graduates to be honest, dependable and trustworthy, then 36-year-old Rivera stepped up to dedicate "one last dance" to the graduating class.

With that, the Beatles classic "Twist and Shout" blared over the microphone and the pair began dancing with the graduates. Parents and administrators appeared taken aback at first, but many joined in, laughing and singing.

Everyone seemed to have enjoyed the unorthodox graduation day.

"This is what the kids wanted. This is their day, it's not the parents' day," school board Chairman Gordon Hunt said. "Hey, in -20 years, they'll all look back on this and smile, and that's great."

■ Sununu trip reported

NEW YORK — White House Chief of Staff John Sununu, rebuked by President Bush last month for using military aircraft for personal trips, made a questionable car trip at taxpayer expense last week, Newsweek reported.

Sununu had a White House driver take him from Washington to New York in a government car so he could attend a rare stamp auction and run errands in Manhattan, the magazine said in the June 24 issue, which goes on sale Monday.

The chauffeur drove back to Washington alone while Sununu attended a Republican fund-raiser in New Jersey. Sununu flew back to Washington in a corporate jet, the magazine said.

The White House defended Sununu's use of the car and driver as appropriate because he did paperwork and made official phone calls on route, Newsweek said.

Government regulations allow for some personal use of White House cars, but Sununu must declare the cost as income.

Sununu consulted his staff before taking the trip but did not consult Bush or White House counsel Boyden Gray, Newsweek said.

■ Sheep mow cemetery

ORWELL, Vt. — The problem was how to mow the steep, rocky hillsides of two cemeteries in this farming town next to Lake Champlain.

Noel Smith, the town manager, was certain he had a solution that was perfect for the 1990s: environmentally safe and at the same time economical. The answer, he thought, was sheep.

That was why he was pleasantly surprised last winter, when Jean Beck, a local sheep farmer, was the low bidder on the job of mowing two of Orwell's four cemeteries.

Ms. Beck said she and her flock of 20 Dorset sheep could do for about $250 what would cost up to $3,000 with mechanized mowers. Most of her cost would be in transporting the sheep and setting up the electric fence to contain them.

"I thought it would be an excellent way to keep the cemeteries open at a cheap price," said Ms. Beck.

But having provided for care of the dead, Orwell's three selectmen soon discovered that they had not reckoned with the wrath of the living.

"These people have some strong concerns, some very real concerns, that we considered but didn't anticipate would be so strong," Smith said.

Tyson Allen registered one of those concerns. At a meeting of the Board of Selectmen on Tuesday, he said he has 11 relatives buried in the two graveyards and is certain they would not like to be tended by sheep.

■ Services held for cildren

PANAMA CITY, Fla. — Four white, flower-covered caskets stood end to end Saturday as family and friends at a funeral service for four young children struggled to make sense of their drownings.

"God is too wise to make a mistake," said church elder Wiley McQueen Jr. "Whatever he does, who can overrule it?"

The youngsters, and a fifth child whose funeral is scheduled Sunday, drowned during a picnic June 9.

Cubia Thornton, mother of three of the victims, collapsed in tears at the end of the service and had to be carried from St. John Missionary Baptist Church.

"I know you and I will meet again," Deana Smith said in a eulogy to her classmate, Tonia Thornton, 15, and Tonia's sister, Keonia Stanley, 7, and brother, Jamal Thornton, 3.

"I love all three of you and I will miss you," she said, breaking into sobs.

The children's uncle, Bonnie Thornton, took them along with his stepdaughter, 9-year-old Monique Fennell, to Gilbert Park, where they met a friend, Zephora Cromartie, 9.

While the children waded into the bay on a sandbar, Thornton said he pulled a sandspur from another child's shoe and tended to his barbecuing. When he returned to the water a few minutes later the children were gone and no one had seen what had happened to them, he said.

End of the road — Interstate system almost finished

By Mitchell Landsberg

BOSTON (AP) — By the end of this decade, the greatest construction project in history — bigger than the Roman aqueducts or the pyramids, greater than the Great Wall of China — will be complete.

A system that soars over mountains, spans rivers and bays and plains, is expected to end within the bowels of Boston sometime around 1998. The most productive partnership ever between the federal and state governments will have accomplished its goal:

Forty-four thousand miles of four-lane-plus, limited access, grade-separated, high-speed, coast-to-coast and border-to-border highway.

The Interstate Highway System.

It will have cost $129 billion — $500 from each and every American. And though it will account for barely 1 percent of the road mileage in the country, the interstate system will carry more than 20 percent of the nation's traffic.

IT IS HARD to imagine another public works project affecting so many people or so imprinting itself on a nation's psyche. What American hasn't experienced the exhilaration of bombing across the wide-open landscape on streamers of asphalt that stretch unfettered to the horizon?

"One of the things I loved hearing years ago was, 'Coast to coast without a stoplight,'" said George Viverette, director of highway transportation for the American Automobile Association.

"Of course," he conceded, "not many people drove coast to coast. But the concept was good."

Ah yes, the concept.

It was intended, quite simply, as a way to get traffic from one place to another and, not incidentally, for the Army to get its equipment from one place to another. It is no accident that the official Department of Transportation history of the interstate system is subtitled, "Roads for National Defense."

But the interstate went much further than that.

Consider this from Kenneth Jackson, professor of history at Columbia University and author of "Crabgrass Frontier: The Suburbanization of the United States":

"I WOULD SAY the Interstate Highway System has probably been the single greatest influence on urban development since the invention of the automobile."

Not all urbanologists go that far. But it is hard to find one who will say the interstate hasn't profoundly influenced the way Americans live, work and drive.

The interstate system didn't create the suburbs, but it nourished them. It didn't invent the truck, but it was as important to the trucking industry as rails to a train. It didn't cause air pollution, but it was a major contributor. It didn't destroy inner cities, but it helped send them on the road to ruin.

"What it did," said Peter Muller, a geography professor at the University of Miami, "was change the situation in which the downtown was the most accessible place in the metropolitan area."

Now, Muller argues, the most accessible place is along the belt of interstate highway that girds most big cities — the three-digit numbers like I-285 in Atlanta, I-435 in Kansas City or I-610 in Houston.

Or I-495 in Washington, better known as the Washington Beltway, which has become a metaphor for the federal government itself. It is the ultimate ring road, clustered with urban developments such as Tyson's Corner, Va., which rings up more retail sales than downtown Washington itself.

The interstate has changed the way American business does business. Companies are no longer tied to rail lines; now their umbilical cord is the interstate.

AP Laserphoto

Two Interstate Highways interloop in metro Nashville, Tenn., with I-440, which runs east-west, bridging in a four-level stack interchange to intersect with I-65. Looking north at the four-lane primary routes, US-31, left, runs parallel to I-65, the ground level highways with broken white lines running north-south. This Nashville interchange of I-440 and I-65 won a U.S. Department of Transportation award for excellence in highway design.

"I WOULD TELL you this," said Robert Ady, president of PHH Fantus Corp., a Chicago-based consulting firm that helps businesses decide where to relocate. "As far as our manufacturing clients are concerned, 70 percent of them have a requirement of (being near) the interstate highway. Interstate highway access is very high on their agenda."

The target date for completion is 1998. There are about 260 miles worth of other interstate projects under construction around the country, but none is expected to take that long. Hence, Boston's distinction as the likely end of the road.

What would the United States be without the interstate? The Soviet Union, one transportation official suggests — a nation unable to get goods from one place to another. Mexico, says another.

Give us a break, say other scholars. If the federal government hadn't built the interstate system, someone else would have. The United States without the interstate system would be ... about the same as the United States with the interstate system. The interstate just wouldn't be called the interstate.

It hardly matters who's right. The interstate is there, from H-1 in Hawaii to I-95 down the Eastern Seaboard; from I-10 across the South to I-90 across the North. It binds the nation, congests the nation and keeps it infernally, internally combustible.

And besides, how else can you get coast to coast without a stoplight?

Why is I-80 called I-80?

Associated Press

Interstate highways have their own system of numerology, which can be deciphered as follows:

Odd-numbered routes such as I-5 or I-57 run north-south; even numbered routes such as I-80 or I-44 run east-west.

Major routes, such as the ones above, have one- or two-digit numbers, and the long, evenly-spaced routes have numbers ending in 0 or 5.

Interstate as seen by a trucker

ON THE NEW YORK STATE THRUWAY (AP) — Norm Kolment is bobbing on an air-cushioned driver's seat like a buoy in calm seas. His truck lurches and roars through orchards and woods and neatly sliced hills.

"Beautiful country," he says. "Beautiful."

This is Interstate 87, 340 miles of green-fringed superhighway from New York City to Canada. It is better known, in this stretch, as the New York State Thruway.

Kolment knows this road, every curve and every hill, every meadow and farm, every rest stop and coffee shop and telephone. He knows toll takers and waitresses, cops and truckers and highway maintenance workers — the full-time residents of this rolling, linear village.

And he has seen it change.

Kolment has been driving a truck for 42 of his 62 years, a career span that has allowed him to watch the Interstate Highway System being born and built, and the trucking industry swell in size and importance.

Progress, he calls it, and at least partially means it.

Driving the interstate now, his thick arms resting on the wheel, Kolment talks about the changes he's seen, the difference between "years ago" and "nowadays."

For the most part, professionally speaking, he prefers nowadays.

—"Years ago, of course, it wasn't like today. You had trucks that were overloaded, half of them didn't have brakes."

—"Years ago, you talked to an old truck driver who didn't have back problems, that was unusual. Nowadays, with these seats and seat-cushions — hey!"

Nowadays, Kolment sees good roads turning bad. He deplores the ascendancy of the independent trucker, whom he blames for accidents and a poor image of his profession. And he believes the government should spend more money on mass transit to keep commuters off increasingly congested roads.

"You take like where I live, in Ringwood, N.J. I moved out there, I think there were a hundred-and-some-odd houses there. Property was very cheap. There was no such thing as (U.S. Highway) 208. As soon as they built 208, property went up, oh my God, a hundred times over."

Years ago, it took him 35 minutes to get to work. Nowadays, "you take 208, it takes an hour and 10 minutes to get to work. But that's progress. You can't stop progress."

Large geomagnetic storm crashes silently to earth

By Matthew L. Wald
N.Y. Times News Service

Scientists call the stream of particles the sun constantly sends toward earth the solar wind, but for the last few days hurricane would have been a better description; in the emptiness of space, a huge storm is silently crashing to earth.

Nobody drowns in a geomagnetic storm, but transformers and generators at power plants can burst into flames; radio communications can fail and satellites stop working or even fall from the sky; airline passengers can pick up significant radiation doses, and the Aurora Borealis, or Northern Lights, can show up as far south as Florida.

The current storm has interfered with radio transmissions and utility operations. Scientists do not know if worse lies ahead.

The sun, like a volcano, responds to cues we cannot hear and on a schedule we cannot fathom.

But generally, solar storms come on an 11-year cycle, and sometime early in the next decade, when more satellites and other fragile technology will probably be in place, the earth is likely to be inundated again.

The origin of geomagnetic storms is an intermittent, unexplained phenomenon called sunspots, cooler patches on the surface of the sun that are followed by flares that throw millions of tons of atomic fragments like protons and electrons into space.

Spit off the sun's rotating surface like water from a rotary garden sprinkler, the burst of particles comes at a much higher energy than the usual solar wind, nearly at the speed of light.

When the particles reach the earth, they are channeled by the planet's magnetic field into the polar regions.

They are slowed by the atmosphere and mostly filtered out before they reach the ground, but in the upper atmosphere, especially where supersonic jets fly, the protons can smash into air or airplanes and shake loose neutrons, creating substantial doses of radiation for people who regularly fly on transpolar routes.

'As we get more point-to-point flights, which is where the aviation market is going, people will get more exposure.

—Dr. R. Curtis Graeber,
Chief, Aviation Systems Research branch,
NASA's Ames Research Center

The biggest particle flow on record was in 1956, which pre-dates high-altitude jet travel.

Now, noted Dr. R. Curtis Graeber, chief of the aviation systems research branch at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Ames Research Center, the new 747-400 aircraft can fly at 42,000 feet for 14 hours, and other new planes, like the MD-11 and the A-340, all have longer cruise ranges.

"As we get more point-to-point flights, which is where the aviation market is going, people will get more exposure," he said, although the extent of the risk is uncertain.

Last year the Federal Aviation Administration published figures showing that in normal solar weather some flight crews get more radiation than the average nuclear power worker.

The FAA held a conference on the subject early this year, but it has been slow in deciding what to do about the threat.

It is not only air travel that some scientists are worried about. The initial burst of high-energy particles in a solar storm is followed by a front of particles that are slower but much more numerous.

These have enough force to bend the magnetosphere, the magnetic field that surrounds the earth. Whenever a magnetic field moves through a conductor, an electric current is generated.

That is how utilities make electricity. But when nature does the same job, it can play havoc with man. The moving field cuts through the earth's crust, and some kinds of rock are conductive enough that a current is created.

It enters power cables and can overheat them, forcing them out of service. In early 1989, the province of Quebec was blacked out for five hours in an event blamed on a geomagnetic storm.

Revolutionary War papers for sale

By Andrew Wisch
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — A treasure trove of 12,000 early American documents, including 65 letters signed by George Washington, is up for sale, and some experts fear it may be dispersed in private collections, rendering it unavailable to historians.

David Wigdor, assistant director of the manuscript division of the Library of Congress, said it would be "unfortunate" if the papers were purchased by a private individual because they could be "divided and no longer available to researchers."

Wigdor called the documents, now owned by the New England Historic Genealogical Society in Boston, "a very important collection."

The society, which is offering the papers for $4 million, received them in 1873 as a donation from the descendants of Henry Knox, a brigadier general in the Revolutionary War and later the first secretary of war in President Washington's cabinet.

The 12,000 documents include letters, accounts, ledgers, maps, and military records and orders.

Besides the 65 letters that Washington signed, the collection has 16 unsigned Washington letters plus documents written by Knox and such founders of the republic as Thomas Jefferson, Alexander Hamilton and John Adams.

Paul Smith, a Library of Congress historian specializing in the Revolutionary War period, called the Knox papers "invaluable" because they show "the behind-the-scenes planning" that preceded major campaigns in the war, which lasted from 1775 to 1783.

For instance, in February 1781 Washington, who was preparing to lay siege to New York, most of which was held by the British, wrote Brig. Gen. Knox, who was then chief of artillery.

Washington wrote that he might win a "decisive victory "if by the aid of our allies, we can have a naval superiority, through the next campaign, and an army of thirty thousand men (or double the force of the enemy and its dependencies) early enough in the season to operate in that quarter."

He also said that "applications have been made to the Court of France" for additional troops and for ships to augment the insignificant U.S. navy.

"The general idea of the plan of operation" Washington explained, "is this (if we are able to produce the force we count upon): to make two attacks, one against the works ⅛that is, fortifications⅜ of York Island ⅛Manhattan⅜ and the other against the works of Brooklyn on Long Island. The latter will probably be conducted by our allies."

As it turned out, Washington's plan was never adopted. He had to shift his strategy because that spring British troops advanced to Virginia from the Carolinas. So Washington dispatched French and American troops to Virginia. In October, the French navy cut off supplies to British Gen. Charles Cornwallis, and he surrendered at Yorktown, Va., on Oct. 19.

Smith said, "So much of our history is studied from generalities, and we don't know how the principle actors really felt." The Knox papers "allow for more precision in our understanding of the past."

Ralph Crandell, director of the New England Historic Genealogical Society, defended the society's decision to sell the papers because they "do not serve the society's genealogical purpose," which is to help people trace their lineage. Crandell said the sale would add to the society's endowment and be "used to serve the society's true purpose."

Lightning strike blamed for fire

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — Witnesses blamed lightning for starting a fire that destroyed an auditorium on the University of Kansas campus Saturday.

No injuries were reported in the blaze at Hoch Auditorium.

Several people saw lightning strike the back of the 64-year-old, domed building.

University police Lt. John Mullens said the building was gutted. The fire, reported about 3:30 p.m., was brought under control in about three hours.

U.S. families to return home

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The last 1,500 American soldiers guarding Clark Air Base fled Saturday amid continued eruptions by a nearby volcano, and the U.S. military decided to send the 7,000 relatives of Clark personnel home.

The last guards joined nearly the 15,000 Clark soldiers and relatives who were evacuated Monday to the Subic Bay naval base, itself threatened Saturday continued volcanic activity from Mount Pinatubo.

Two people died when about 50 temporary storage buildings collapsed at Subic on Saturday from the accumulation of 6 to 12 inches of ash, said Subic Bay spokesman Lt. Cmdr. Kevin Mukri.

The names of the two — a U.S. dependent and a Philippines national — were withheld pending notification of their families, he said.

The volcano is 10 miles west of Clark and 25 miles northeast of Subic, two of the biggest U.S. facilities in the world. The falling ash also forced Subic to shut down power for fear the ash would get into get into electrical generators.

But Subic spokesman Robert Coble said he was unaware of any plan to evacuate the naval base.

The last U.S. troops guarding the 130,000-acre Clark were evacuated on Saturday, the military said.

About 500 Filipino airmen are responsible for guarding the facility, which has already experienced looting since the evacuation Monday. But phone calls to the base went unanswered, and it was unclear whether they were at their posts.

U.S. officials said they would consider sending the 1,500 U.S. guards back to Clark on Sunday. Those soldiers were being temporarily housed at an agricultural college 10 miles east of Clark.

Pentagon spokesman Pete Williams has said last week that "3,300 short tons of munitions" are stored in "earth-covered igloos" at Clark, but he declined to comment on any nuclear weapons that might be there.

There was a very low probability that the eruption "would damage the contents of those igloos," he said.

Explosions from the 4,795-foot volcano have worsened throughout the week and are now described by scientists as phenomenal. Snow-like ash from Saturday's eruptions fell as far as Manila, 60 miles south of the volcano.

"The United States has decided that dependents of U.S. Air Force personnel stationed at Clark Air Base should return to the United States for the time being," the statement said.

U.S. Navy spokesman Lt. Cmdr. Kevin Mukri said there are about 7,000 family members and other dependents of Clark personnel.

They have been jammed into private homes, gyms, schools, chapels and other temporary housing at Subic, which has a permanent population of more than 12,000 sailors and dependents.

Subic already had a housing shortage before the evacuation. Rear Adm. Thomas Mercer, the senior U.S. military officer in the Philippines, said the continued stay of so many additional people would impair Subic support of U.S. naval operations in the western Pacific.

The Subic Bay area also was rocked Saturday by a series of moderate volcano-ralated earthquakes.

Gorbachev agrees to speak at London summit

By Craig R. Whitney
N.Y. Times News Service

MOSCOW — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev on Saturday accelerated his effort to convince the Western world that this time, he really means it when he says the Soviet Union wants to move swiftly to a market economy.

Jacques Attali, president of the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, said after meeting with Gorbachev on Saturday morning that the Soviet leader had accepted an invitation to address the leaders of seven industrial democracies in London next month after their summit meeting.

"I think he is fully committed to a market economy," said Attali, who said he would be happy to have authority to invest more than the $702 million his bank can now apply to projects in the Soviet Union.

Gorbachev also accepted an invitation to talk with officials of the bank while in London.

"They're going in the right direction, but there is a need to clarify a certain number of things: the relationship between the center and the republics, the stabilization of the money supply, taxes, and precise laws on privatization, separating the state from capital," Attali told a news conference. "It can't be done overnight."

Some of the answers might come if Gorbachev and Boris N. Yeltsin, the newly-elected president of the Russian Republic, can agree on elements of a new seven-year plan to integrate the Soviet Union into the world economic system that was worked out by Soviet and American economists in Cambridge, Mass., last week.

The main Soviet architect of the plan, Grigory A. Yavlinsky, an economist with ties to Gorbachev and Yeltsin, will bring it back for Gorbachev to see at the beginning of the week, according to his associates here.

The U.S. version of the still largely secret plan will be presented to President Bush at about the same time, Yavlinsky told the Soviet newspaper Izvestia on Friday.

The election of Yeltsin, who supports radical economic change in the country's largest republic, will increase pressure on Gorbachev and his government to agree to the new plan, Yeltsin's supporters say, but there are still questions here about how the authorities intend to proceed.

Attali seemed to hint after seeing Mr. Gorbachev in the Kremlin on Saturday that a currency revision that would replace or sharply devalue the ruble could be in the offing.

The ruble is now nearly worthless as a means of acquiring goods and services Russians want to buy, and they pay 30 to 35 rubles apiece for United States dollars instead.

Attali, reporting that he and Gorbachev had discussed the importance of achieving "internal convertibility" of the ruble as a first step in getting Soviet inflation under control, was asked what that term meant. Other Soviet officials have used it frequently as well.

"I can't comment," the French banker said. "It is a very sensitive matter."

But Valentin S. Pavlov, the Soviet prime minister,

'They're going in the right direction, but there is a need to clarify a certain number of things: the relationship between the center and the republics, the stabilization of the money supply, taxes, and precise laws on privatization, separating the state from capital. It can't be done overnight.'

— Jacques Attali, President of the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development

said in an interview with the government newspaper Izvestia on Saturday that the withdrawal from circulation of 50- and 100-ruble notes last winter had not achieved its purpose of drastically reducing the stock of illicitly obtained money in circulation.

The run on already scarce consumer goods has continued even after prices on bread and most other household products were raised last spring, leaving store shelves largely empty, he said.

"Instead of tens of billions of rubles," he said, "we got ten."

People and companies that could prove they had acquired the large notes by legal means had been able to exchange them for smaller ones, and the overall money supply, which has been growing as fast as the government could print bills, remains too high, having grown 20 percent a year for the last two years.

"Exchanging the notes was not currency reform," Pavlov said.

What the Soviet Union needs before a market economy can even begin to get going here, even some Soviet Communist Party members agree, are three things: clarity in Soviet and republican law about the nature of private ownership of business or property, goods that people want to buy, and money that has the confidence of buyers and sellers.

"If you could freely buy and sell and acquire property or land or businesses in rubles, then you could say they were 'internally convertible,'" said Alexander Papachristou of the American law firm White & Case, whose office has the now somewhat unenviable job of advising would-be foreign investors in businesses here.

As it is, many Russians here in the capital prefer to use dollars or German marks, and Papachristou, who has studied the regulations that Gorbachev, Pavlov and the Soviet state bank have promulgated, supposedly to undergird the move to a market economy, finds much to be puzzled about.

"By Aug. 1," he said, "regulations promulgated by the state bank will make it necessary for every joint venture here to get a license to sell goods retail for foreign currency.

Over 100 die in train attacks

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW DELHI — More than 100 people were killed Saturday when armed Sikhs seeking independence for Punjab state boarded two trains and opened fire on passengers, police said.

The massacre, the worst since the separatist campaign began in 1983, took place as the bloodiest parliamentary elections in India's history came to an end. The voting began May 20, but was interrupted for about two weeks by the May 21 assassination of former Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi at a campaign rally.

Ballot counting begins Monday, and analysts expect to know by early Tuesday morning if any party has emerged to lead the world's most populous democracy toward the 21st century. Exit polls point to a coalition government.

Elections in Punjab had been postponed until June 22 because of the descent into near civil war across much of the state. The federal government is sending 15,000 army troops to try to maintain order at the polls.

According to police reports, the trains were attacked in two separate indicents after someone pulled emergency cords, bringing them to a halt.

Police officials said men wearing Sikh traditional turbans raked the trains with gunfire. Some press reports said the gunmen boarded the trains before firing.

The Press Trust of India news agency said 62 passengers were killed in the first attack near Badowal, three miles west of the city of Ludhiana. In the second incident 10 minutes later, 48 people were killed near Killaraipur, about 10 miles south of Ludhiana, it said.

The massacre was the latest in a string of violence that has resulted in more than 2,000 deaths and hundreds of kidnappings in Punjab over the past year, as the result of Hindu-Sikh ethnic rivalries and a movement aimed at severing the state from the rest of India.

Apart from the train killings, 10 other people were killed and five kidnapped in Punjab on Saturday.

Elsewhere across the country, killers have gone on an election rampage.

At least 23 people were killed in election-related violence Saturday, bringing to 275 the estimated number of deaths related to the parliamentary campaign. That figure is more than double the number of deaths in parliamentary elections 19 months ago.

The victims include candidates, hired thugs, poll workers, voters and innocent bystanders killed in politically motivated shootings, stabbings, beatings and bombings since campaigning began in earnest nearly two months ago.

Another victim has been the democratic process itself, which has fallen prey to ballot-snatching and booth-rigging in more than 1,000 polling stations around the country.

The violence has also played a role in keeping voters away from the polls. The nation will struggle to reach a 50 percent voter turnout rate this year, an abysmal showing in a country proud of its 64 percent turnout rate over the past decade.

Apart from the violence, voters were fed up with the politics in an election few wanted in the first place.

Normally held every five years, this year's Lok Sabha, or House of the People, elections came only 19 months after elections in 1989. That happened after two successive coalition governments came unglued, the latest after only four months in office.

WORLD IN BRIEF

■ Former guards charged

BERLIN — Four former East German border guards have been charged in the last shootings of would-be escapees at the Berlin Wall in 1989, a government spokeswoman said Saturday.

The guards, who face manslaughter and attempted manslaughter counts, are the first to be charged with shooting would-be escapees, said Berlin Justice Department spokeswoman Jutta Burghart.

Nearly 200 people were killed trying to escape Communism by mounting the Berlin Wall or penetrating other sections of the heavily fortified border with former East Germany.

The charges announced Saturday stem from the Feb. 6, 1989, shooting of 20-year-old Chris Gueffroy, who was trying to escape to West Berlin. His friend, Christian Gaudian, also 20, was shot and injured, and later was sentenced to three years in prison for attempting to escape.

The Berlin Wall, built in 1961, has disappeared along with the rest of the border following the ouster of the Communist government in East Germany in 1989 and German unification in October 1990.

German prosecutors are also investigating former East German leaders who issued shoot-to-kill orders to border guards.

Former Communist Party chief Erich Honecker was spirited away to Moscow by Soviet military authorities in March to escape arrest. Former premier Willi Stoph, former secret police chief Erich Mielke and former defense minister Heinz Kessler have been arrested in connection with the shootings.

■ Divorce law revised

BOGOTA, Colombia — The group rewriting the Colombian constitution has approved an article that will allow civil divorce in Roman Catholic marriages beginning in July.

The constitutional assembly late Friday approved the article allowing the divorces, and it will take effect with the rest of the constitution on July 5.

According to government estimates, 90 percent of the country's 30 million citizens are Catholic.

Yet Colombia has been one of the few countries where a Catholic marriage could not be dissolved by civil means. Maintaining that holy matrimony is unbreakable, the Catholic Church only permits annulment of marriages by its own tribunals.

Jaime Benitez, the Liberal Party constitutional delegate who wrote the divorce article, said it will help about 1 million Colombians who have separated from their spouses but who are still legally married.

Previously, separated Colombians wanting to remarry were forced to do so outside of the country to avoid bigamy charges.

■ China storms kill 270

BEIJING — More than 270 people have been killed and millions of acres of crops damaged in the last month by violent rainstorms, according to an official report issued Saturday.

In addition to the deaths, the Ministry of Civil Affairs said 4,700 people were injured and 34.3 million people were affected by storms that have hit eight provinces along the Yangtze and Huaihe rivers in central China since mid-May. The report was carried by the China Daily.

Each year, summer storms kill thousands of people and cause billions of dollars in damage. Last year, they killed 3,535 people and flooded 33 million acres of farmland — one-seventh of China's total.

In the last month, 70 counties in Sichuan province alone have been declared disaster areas. The counties are home to 9.5 million people.

Nearly 10 million acres of summer crops nationwide were damaged or destroyed, and grain output in those areas could be reduced by as much as one-third, the ministry said.

The storms also caused 127,000 buildings to collapse, damaged 860,000 others and wiped out communication, transportation and water facilities in many areas, the report said.

■ 'The Stranger' sells

PARIS — The handwritten manuscript of Albert Camus' most famous novel, "The Stranger," was sold at auction Saturday for $175,000.

The 104-page manuscript was signed and dated April 1940.

"The Stranger," about a French expatriate in North Africa who is jailed for murder and must deal with his incarceration, brought international acclaim to Camus. The French writer already was known in French intellectual circles as a leader of the existentialist movement.

He won the Nobel prize for literature in 1957, three years before his death.

The manuscript was among a collection at auction belonging to a private collector and containing important texts on surrealism, including some by Andre Breton.

The buyer of the Camus manuscript was not identified.

■ Kuwait sentences media

KUWAIT CITY — A martial-law court on Saturday convicted 16 people of working on an Iraqi-run publication during Baghdad's occupation of Kuwait, sentencing six to be hanged and 10 imprisoned for a decade.

Eight employees of the Al-Nida daily were acquitted. Most of those tried Saturday were Palestinians.

A seventh defendant, not connected to the newspaper, also was condemned to death Saturday. Mohan Majid Khalaf, who is stateless, was sentenced in absentia for being an informant and for forgery.

His sentence brought to nine the number of people sentenced to death by Kuwait's martial-law court since June 8.

Screams broke out in the packed courtroom when the verdicts and sentences were read. Relatives collapsed to the floor crying hysterically.

Human rights groups have condemned the martial-law courts for not producing witnesses in court, and the defense lawyers in this case told the judge that they could not defend their clients against "ghost witnesses."

The United States has repeatedly cautioned Kuwait's ruling al-Sabah family that the world would be watching the trials.

There is no appeal in the martial-law courts. But the martial-law governor, Crown Prince Saad Abdullah al-Sabah, must approve all sentences in consultation with three judges from the court of appeals.

Defense lawyers were shocked with the verdicts, saying it was out of keeping with the laws that prevailed in Kuwait before martial law was declared at liberation, and would ruin the country's reputation abroad.

"It's a very harsh judgement, but it is legal under the state security laws. Sometimes the punishments do not fit the crime committed," said Najeeb Wuquyan, a defense attorney. "There are a lot of crimes that are very light, and the sentence can be death."

After the sentences in the newspaper trial were read, the six women defendants hugged each other. One was condemned to death, one was acquitted and four were given 10-year sentences.

■ AIDS meeting focus set

ROME — Ten years after AIDS was recognized as an insidious killer, researchers say their seventh annual world conference on the disease will focus on efforts to lengthen patients' lives.

Organizers of the six-day gathering in Florence said many of the 4,800 reports to be presented give hope for prolonging lives with drugs. The conference opens Sunday evening and presentations begin Monday.

On the eve of the conference, two of the deans of AIDS research differed on just how optimistic they can be about beating Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome.

Robert Gallo of the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Maryland, appeared on television Friday in Rome along with his French rival, Luc Montagnier of the Pasteur Institute and other leading figures at the conference.

Gallo said the prospect of combining immunizations with chemotherapy "gives us reason to believe the answer will come sooner than anyone thinks."

Angels, Diablos split double bill

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

The El Paso Diablos sweated through a troublesome seventh inning at Angels Stadium Saturday night to preserve a 6-4 win over Midland and a split of a Texas League doubleheader.

The Angels, who clipped the West Division leading Diablos by a 9-5 count in the first game, posted some late dramatics before giving up on the sweep. The loss left Midland with a 5-7 homestand instead of a 6-6 split with San Antonio and El Paso.

El Paso reliever Jim Czajkowski came on in relief of Angel Miranda (4-1) in the seventh and retired Tim Salmon on strikes and Reggie Williams on a fly to left to pick up his fifth save.

Williams was the man Czajkowski wanted because Midland's Mark Howie, who had five hits in seven at-bats and four RBIs in the twinbill, was on deck and the Angels had runners at the corners. Williams fought Czajkowski until he lifted a harmless fly to left to end the game.

The telling blow against Midland came in the El Paso third when Kenny Jackson belted his 10th homer of the year, a three-run shot to left. As Jackson crossed home plate, Midland catcher Larry Gonzales and Jackson exchanged heated words. Both benches emptied, but no punches fell as players and coaches helped to maintain cool heads.

Chaska winds take control at Hazeltine

Associated Press

CHASKA, Minn. — With a stiff wind tightening its once flabby turf, Hazeltine stopped absorbing punishment and began delivering its own blows Saturday in the third round of the United States Open.

The leaders at six-under-par 210 were Scott Simpson and Payne Stewart, who struggled to remain in relative neutral while all around them contenders were falling away. Simpson shot a par 72 and Stewart shot a 73.

The top two's closest pursuers at 214 were Nick Price, who shot one of only two under par rounds with a 71, and Scott Hoch, who finished with a double bogey six on the 18th for a 74.

Grouped at 215 were Fred Couples, Nolan Henke and little known Brian Kamm. Lurking among a group of four golfers at 216 were defending champion Hale Irwin, whose 70 was the low round of the day, and surprising Sandy Lyle, trying to emerge from a two-year slump.

Several of the second-round leaders had horrendous days. Corey Pavin, who began the day a shot behind Stewart, shot an seven-over-par 79 to stand seven back at 217. Henke had a 77, as did Craig Stadler, who was at 217.

When a strong 25-mile-an-hour wind kicked up to dry out Hazeltine's rain softened greens, it put the classic United States Open premium of playing from the fairway and hitting precise iron shots back into the championship.

"The USGA got what they wanted today," said Stewart, who was forced to hit two full driver shots into the northwest wind to reach the uphill 452-yard par-4 18th.

"The golf course is showing all its teeth. It wasn't meant to play soft with no wind. This was kind of championship golf course it was meant to be."

Added Price: "If it stays like this, tomorrow afternoon is going to be so difficult it's going to be anybody's game. Even if a guy has a five shot lead, it's going to be difficult to make pars."

The 34-year-old Stewart, the 1989 PGA champion, will be trying to reverse the results of his fourth round at the 1986 Open at Shinnecock Hills, when he held the lead with six holes to play but faltered badly to finish sixth, four shots behind Raymond Floyd.

"I'm a better player now," Stewart said. "I'm past that stage."

Simpson, a 35-year-old Californian, who recently moved his family to Hawaii, has already proved the U.S. Open is his element.

Since his first round of 71 at Olympic in San Francisco five years ago, Simpson

Challenger collapses after fight

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — Kid Akeem Anifowoshe was hospitalized in critical condition with a blood clot in his head after being beaten by IBF junior bantamweight champion Robert Quiroga on Saturday.

The International Boxing Federation title bout went the full 12 rounds and neither fighter was knocked down, but a badly beaten Anifowoshe collapsed just after the referee announced the unanimous decision at HemisFair Arena.

"You see a fight like this every 10 or 15 years," said Bill Baxter, Anifowoshe's manager. "He was standing when the fight was over. Then he started spitting up blood and he collapsed like he'd been shot. He never regained consciousness."

Doctors worked on Anifowoshe, the challenger, for about 30 minutes in the ring before rushing him to Downtown Baptist Hospital, where he underwent

Baseball fathers pass game on to sons

Associated Press

Herman Pillette probably thought his son would improve the family business one day. It didn't quite work out that way, though.

Herman led the American League in losses with 19 in 1923, and 28 years later his son, Duane, did the same by losing 14 games for the St. Louis Browns. Unlike a new generation of baseball families, the Pillettes never got rich playing baseball.

It's not inconceivable that in a few years, Barry Bonds and Ken Griffey Jr. will be the highest paid players in the major leagues. Like a good family law practice, baseball dads are doing all they can to make sure their sons get into the firm.

Danny Tartabull, Brian McRae, Todd Stottlemyre, Billy and Cal Ripken, Roberto and Sandy Alomar Jr. all followed their father's path into the major leagues. There are many others on the way this Father's Day, too.

Manny Mota, the all-time pinch hit leader, has at least four sons with major league aspirations. Jose Mota was the first to get a shot when he was called up by the San Diego Padres earlier this year.

Eduardo Perez, David Segui, Moises Alou, Todd Hundley, Derrick May and Jamie McAndrew are other baseball sons on their way up. There may even be another Griffey on the scene.

The Seattle Mariners on Monday signed Craig Griffey to a minor league contract. Maybe Griffey, Griffey & Griffey some day?

More and more, players are bringing their sons to the ball park just to get a feeling of things in case they're interested. After all, where else can a guy average $1 million a year with lots of fringe benefits? OK, other than being an agent.

"I think it helped me a lot to be around major leaguers at a young age," Ken Giffey Jr. said. "When my dad was with the Yankees he would take me to the stadium and I would play catch in the outfield with anybody. Sometimes Billy Martin used to even play catch and sometimes he would tell me to get off the field."

'To play on the same team with my son was something I never thought would happen, but hitting consecutive homers is a feeling I'll never forget ... I still get chills. I'm very lucky.'

— Ken Griffey, Sr., on being a teammate of son Ken, Jr., right.

Griffey Jr. didn't like it much when the Yankees traded his dad to Atlanta in June 1986, and takes extra delight whenever he beats New York with a homer or one of his spectacular leaping catches in center field.

The Griffeys made history Aug. 31 when they became the first father and son to play in the same major league game. They also made an impossible dream come true when they hit back-to-back home runs at California off Kirk McCaskill on Sept. 14.

"To play on the same team with my son was something I never thought would happen, but hitting consecutive homers is a feeling I'll never forget ... I still get chills," Griffey Sr. said. "I'm very lucky."

In another dream matchup, Father's Day came early this year for Nolan Ryan when he had a chance to pitch against his son Reid in an exhibition game against Texas.

Ken Griffey Sr., Bobby Bonds, Mel Stottlemyre and other baseball dads told

Costas, Albert highlight NBC's coverage of NBA

Lesson No. 1: How to do it ...

Week in and week out, NBC's coverage of the NBA was exceptional, dwarfing any past efforts by CBS.

Patterson

Bob Costas is a master. Seems anything he touches turns to gold. Costas reportedly will take a couple of months off before returning for NFL coverage in the fall. The St. Louis resident will also be the studio host for next year's Olympics.

The Knicks' gain is America's loss. Pat Riley, while stiff at times, limbered up late in the season and provided some expert studio analysis.

And then there is, of course, Mr. Basketball: Marv Albert. Nowhere does there exist a better play-by-play man. Mike Fratello, too, provided above-average sideline insight.

Costas' and Riley's season-long free throw competition, which Costas won in the last week, was fun. NBC's made sure its coverage of the NBA was equally entertaining as it was informative.

Lesson No. 2: How not to do it:

It's no secret by now that CBS' occasional coverage of major league baseball is a joke. And a bad one at that.

Saturday's game epitomized the ridiculous decision-making that goes on at the network when, at 2 p.m., the Chicago Cubs-San Diego Padres game was beamed into living rooms across the country.

One would think that after spending millions and millions of dollars on the MLB contract, CBS could feature better games than the Cubs (30-29, 4th in NL East) and the Padres (31-30, 4th in NL West).

A memorable battle to see which team would avoid the .500 mark, the game had all the excitement of the recent Summer Grand Sumo Tournament in Tokyo.

Baseball fans see the Cubs on WGN about 100 times a year, thank you. With no originality in its thinking, CBS provided the 101st (at least) viewing.

Three games had more marquee value Saturday: California at Boston featured two teams near the top of their divisions. The Angels' Chuck Finley — the eventual loser — is one of the better pitchers in the league this year. How about Minnesota, on a 13 game winning streak, against Cleveland. (You're right, Cleveland is a problem). St. Louis-Los Angeles was another option.

To make things even worse for insatiable baseball fans, CBS throws at them Dick Stockton, Mr. Catch-All. A nice enough guy, Stockton is not exactly cut from the Marv Albert mold.

Payne Stewart must get paid quite a hefty sum to wear those outfits. Stewart honored the Buffalo Bills with Friday's play, and the Miami Dolphins Saturday. He's plays an excellent round of golf, but its obvious his wife doesn't lay out his clothes for him in the morning.

---

Saddest story in sports these days is the one of Heather Farr. Promising young newcomer on the LPGA tour a few years back, her body is apparently being destroyed by cancer. One encouraging note is that doctors are encouraged following her latest round of skull surgery to remove yet another tumor.

---

From the 'I humbly submit' department ... Incorrectly, it was written here a few days ago that the MC men's tennis team finished second in the national tournament. It was, in fact, a third place team finish for the Chaps in Tyler.

Briton's hopes for 2nd major disappear

Associated Press

CHASKA, Minn. — Ian Woosnam's hopes of a U.S. Open championship to match his Masters title sank Saturday along with a tee shot that drifted wildly in the wind and plopped into a pond.

Breezes blowing off the prairie tossed balls around like tiny kites in the gray sky over Hazeltine National, wrecking Woosnam and more than a dozen other big-name contenders.

They weaved through the front nine, flipping bits of grass above their heads to figure out the direction of the 25 mph gusts, and formed a distinguished 40-and-over club: Woosnam, Craig Stadler, Tom Watson, Lanny Wadkins, Phil Mickelson.

They pushed on through the back nine adding new members: Corey Pavin, Larry Mize, Wayne Grady, Steve Elkington, David Graham, Andy North, Wadkins again.

By the time the debacle ended, 20 players posted at least 40 on the front or back, six players shot rounds of 80 or more, and only two of the 65 players — Hale Irwin at 70 and Nick Price at 71 — broke par.

It was the first Open round since 1986 at Shinnecock Hills in Southampton, N.Y., in which no one scored in the 60s.

Nothing worked for Woosnam, ranked No. 1 in the world, even though the Welshman is more experienced playing in rough weather than most Americans. Four strokes off the lead and three under par at the start of the day, he faded to 10 behind co-leaders Payne Stewart and Scott Simpson with a 79 for 220.

"When you're playing into a wind like this, and you're not playing well, you can say goodbye," Woosnam said. "At the end, I was just trying to break 80."

He had come here thinking about the possibility of moving closer to the elusive Grand Slam — winning the Masters, U.S. Open, British Open and PGA titles in the same year. But that dream faded fast.

"I didn't have much hope for it the way I played," he said.

Woosnam bungled drives, approaches and putts, living dangerously in the rough all day. He bogeyed five of the first 10 holes, including a double on the 166-yard eighth after his ball disappeared in the water.

He tried to exorcise his troubles by giving away a ball to a young boy after bogeying the sixth, but the new ball he plucked from his bag didn't last long.

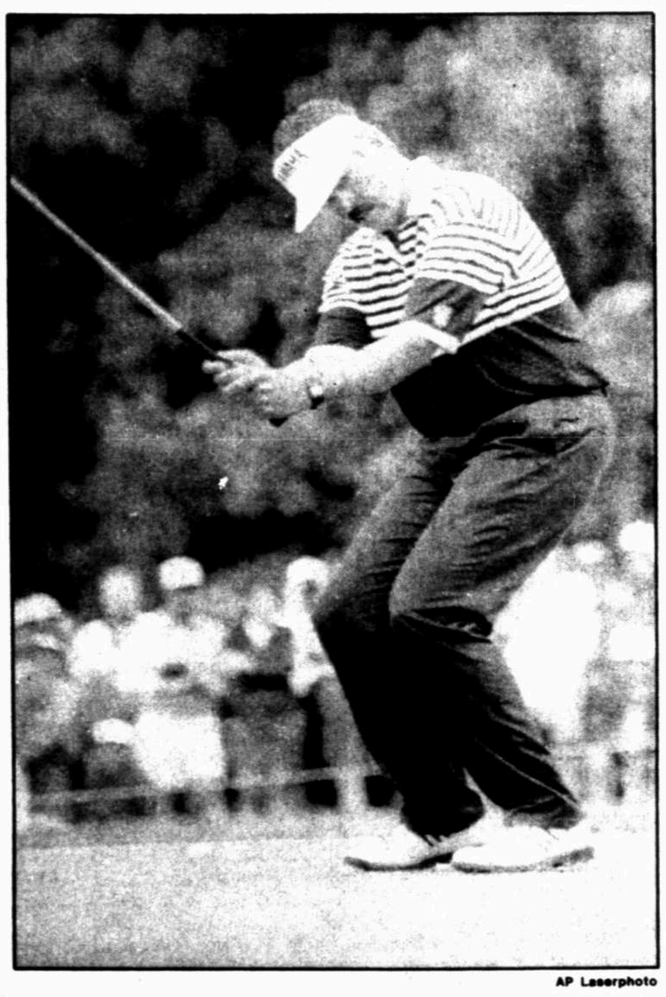

A swirling wind kicked up the moment Woosnam teed off on the eighth, and the ball floated toward the green, veered to the right, then backed up into the pond as if in slow motion.

He tossed another ball into the drop area and hit it to the far left corner of the green, 30 feet uphill from the pin. A good effort to save bogey failed by inches as he fell to five over for the round.

"When I took 5 there, I knew I was in for a long day and a lot of trouble," he said. "I usually play well in the wind, but when you're not striking the ball right, you're going to get punished."

His final embarrassment came on the 16th, a treacherous territory bordered on the right by swollen Hazeltine Lake and marshland, on the left by trees, and divided in the middle by a swamp and little lagoon.

Woosnam muscled a good drive into the ankle-deep rough, then "thrashed with the 7-iron" and couldn't reach the green 105 yards away.

Co-leader Scott Simpson urges a putt in during third round action at the U.S. Open Saturday.

OPEN: Patience a virtue for the few who remain

has never been more than five shots out of the lead in the Open at the end of the day in 18 rounds.

In that time, Simpson has finished first, sixth twice and 14th last year at Medinah, where he was leading in the third round until he took a triple bogey six on the short par-3 17th and couldn't recover.

"I'd like it to play fairly tough tomorrow," said Simpson, who bogeyed the difficult par-4 16th hole and three putted the par-3 17th for another bogey Saturday. "It will make it harder for someone to come from behind. But it really doesn't matter."

Despite the stroke gap between the final two and the rest of the field, neither Stewart or Simpson expect to play Sunday's round as if it were match play.

"It can't ever be match play because this is a medal-play tournament," said Stewart. "Scott and I play two different types of golf. I hit the ball farther than Scott. He is a great thinker, a great manager and a great putter."

Simpson has been overhauling his swing with instructor David Leadbetter since late 1989. He struggled in 1990, finishing 63d on the money list. This year, Simpson has grown more comfortable. Although he hasn't won, he hasn't missed a cut, is fifth in scoring with an average of 69.78 and is 44th on the money list.

"This year I feel I have been playing pretty good and steady, but it seems like I go up a notch at the Open," said Simpson. "I guess it's a combination of things. The courses are my favorites, and I enjoy the way they set them up. You need to hit the ball straight and have an overall game and there is no premuium on distance as opposed to some tournaments.

"The Open rewards someone with patience and one of my strengths is hanging in there."

As well as he has done in the Open, Simpson has learned the hard way the necessity for pushing out any thoughts of winning until the deed is done. Although he finished strongly with a 68 at Olympic, his fourth rounds have been his weakest of the tournament. He closed with a 74 at Brookline in 1988 after being the third round co-leader, he faded to a 75 at Oak Hill in 1989, and he shot a final round 73 last year.

"It's hard not to think of winning, but you try to get it out of your mind as quick as you can," he said.

Reward for resolve

CHASKA, Minn. (AP) — After three stormy days that have resulted in lightning strikes, delays in play and muddy conditions, players, officials, volunteers and fans may finally be rewarded for their patience and perseverance.

The forecast for Sunday's final round calls for sunny skies, lower humidity and temperatures in the low 80s.

The golfers won't be totally pleased, though. The strong winds that made several holes almost impossible to birdie Saturday are expected to be back.

Ex-baseball commissioner dead

Associated Press

VERSAILLES, Ky. — A.B. "Happy" Chandler, the former Kentucky governor and the baseball commissioner who helped end segregation in America's pastime, died Saturday at the age of 92.

Chandler

"Happy was somebody I loved like my own father," said another former commissioner, Bowie Kuhn. "He was as fine and memorable a person as the game ever produced, and that's over 150 years.

"He was a Hall of Famer in baseball and richly belonged there, and a hall of famer in politics, too."

Woodford County coroner Steve Ward said Chandler's death was cardiac-related and that he may have died of a heart attack or a stroke.

Chandler's son, Ben, said his father died in his one-story brick home in this town of 7,500 located about 10 miles west of Lexington.

"He's been in failing health for some time, but he was a pretty tough old bird," Chandler said.

In addition to being elected governor of Kentucky twice, Chandler also was a U.S. senator.

"Happy fought death as he lived his life, with a strong will and a gleam in his eye," Kentucky Gov. Wallace Wilkinson said. "It is difficult to find the words to encompass all Happy has meant to our Commonwealth. No one ever loved Kentucky more. It is hard to say goodbye."

Chandler's wife, Mildred, who was always referred to as "Mama," said he was stricken in the early morning.

Anthony used a 5-iron to sink his tee shot on the 203-yard par-3 hole. His feat was witnessed by Wayne Young, Mike Spradlin, Gary Jones and David Holloway.

ANGELS: Six game set at Wichita begins today

(From 1B)

"It was nothing," said Gonzales. "That was just something between me and him (Jackson), nothing else."

Midland manager Don Long said, "I don't know (what happened) and I don't care. It's no big deal unless you make a big deal out of it and that was no big deal."

Midland took the first game behind the five-inning stint of Don Vidmar, who picked up his sixth victory in seven starts since joining the club from Palm Springs. Vidmar pitched 2⅓ innings of hitless ball Friday night before rain washed away the contest. He came back for another shot at the Diablos Saturday.

"I wasn't as sharp as I was Friday night, but my ball dips more when I'm tired, so the results were about the same," Vidmar said. "It's nice to get another victory. Six wins in seven starts is OK with me."

Vidmar left the game with a 9-1 lead. Marvin Cobb came on in relief and was rolling with two outs in the seventh before El Paso scored four runs, three of which were unearned.

ANGEL DUST: Howie hit another home run in the third inning of the second game, giving him six in the 12-game homestand. He had only two in his previous 48 games. ... Howie raised his average 11 points to .357. ... El Paso catcher Dave Nilsson, the Texas League's leading hitter, went 4-for-6 in the doubleheader to raise his average eight points to .412. ... Gonzales has driven in seven runs in his last five games. ... Bobby Jones, who played only the second game, threw out another runner from left field, giving him 10 assists for the year and the club lead. ... With the split, El Paso earned at least a share of the first half Texas League West title and need only a victory or a Wichita loss to clinch. Wichita lost to San Antonio Saturday by a 7-6 margin. ... The Angels are scheduled to catch a flight to Wichita, Kan., at 6:15 a.m. today to begin a 12-day, 12-game road trip with Wichita and El Paso.

FATHERS: If you can't hit, it doesn't matter who dad is

their sons that they would have to make it on their own, sort of like the boy named Sue.

Doing things on their own is something the sons of major leaguers got used to while growing up. Most of them played catch with mom in the backyard — or a brick wall — while their famous fathers went to work. And often, the most they saw of their dads was on TV or a baseball card.

"I never pressured Barry into baseball," said Bobby Bonds, who hit 332 home runs. "You can't make somebody into a major leaguer in the sense that an individual has to be born with a certain amount of natural talent. A talent to hit a 90 mile-per-hour fastball."

Barry was born with that rare talent and followed his father right into the exclusive 30-30 club. He even exceeded his dad by hitting 33 homers last season while stealing 52 bases.

"My father never talked about baseball with me much," Bonds said. "He didn't want to push it."

Alou, a Montreal prospect, could hardly miss being a baseball player. His father, Felipe Alou, and uncles, Matty and Jesus, once started in the same outfield for the San Francisco Giants.

"I have gotten a lot of advice on the little things," Alou said. "But if you can't hit, field and throw it doesn't matter who your father is."

Some thought Kansas City outfielder Brian McRae might be in a tough spot when his father, Hal, was named manager of the Royals.

"I know some people will always doubt it, but I treat Brian just like any member of the team and not my son," McRae said. "It wouldn't be fair to him if I did it any other way."

Some dads have made suggestions, though.

For 14 years, Randy Hundley was a standout defensive catcher and spent most of his productive years with the Chicago Cubs from 1966-1973. His son, Todd, is considered the New York Mets' top catching prospect.

"My father has helped a lot with the mechanics of being a catcher," said Hundley, who is playing for Class AAA Tidewater. "He told me good catchers can make it faster in the majors and I think I'll be ready soon."Once their sons get into the big leagues, life can be tough for the baseball dads.

"Whenever Todd is pitching I check the scoreboard more than usual," said Mel Stottlemyre, the Mets pitching coach. "I don't get to see him pitch very often but I hear all about it from his mother."

Old-timers game draws 32,000

DENVER (AP) — An old-timers game between former National and American league greats drew more than 32,000 fans Saturday night. The NL won 5-4.

The eight-man ownership committee has unanimously recommended that the National League offer expansion teams to Denver and Miami for 1993.

But the final vote on awarding the teams has been held up by the American League. AL president Bobby Brown said his league wasn't prepared to vote now, but he expected AL owners would be able to approve Denver and Miami within the 30 days from the June 14 announcement by the owner-ship committee.

Baseball commissioner Fay Vincent has said that AL approval of the two cities will likely be sooner than many expect. Vincent does not believe Denver and Miami will have to wait until mid-July to get final approval.

Owners in the AL are concerned about losing up to three players for only $3 million under guidelines now in place for the expansion draft.

Hall of Famer Willie Mays said: "It's a great tribute to Denver to come out and watch guys like us play. This is great for Denver. No doubt they will draw well."

Thompson increases Seniors lead

Associated Press

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Rocky Thompson sank a nine-foot eagle putt on the 16th hole Saturday in building a three-stroke lead over two-time defending champion Jim Dent after two rounds of the Syracuse Senior Classic.

Thompson, in his third season on the over-50 tour and still seeking his first victory, survived an erratic round interrupted twice by lightning, but saw his four-stroke opening-round lead shaved by one.

Thompson built a four-stroke lead in Friday's opening round with a course-record 62 and shot 68 on Saturday. He was 14-under-par 130 with 18 holes to play Sunday.

The long-hitting Dent subdued the Lafayette Country Club's par-5 holes, including an eagle on No. 8, to go to 11-under. He began the day five strokes behind Thompson.

J.C. Snead and Mike Hill were at 134, Dudley Wysong and Babe Hiskey were at 135 and Walt Zembriski and Bruce Devlin were at 136.

For all that went right for Thompson on Friday, Saturday's round was nearly the opposite. Four of his first five drives sprayed off the fairway — the same holes where Thompson had five straight birdies Friday.

Thompson had two birdies and two bogeys on the front nine, and added a third bogey on the back. Two eagles, however, made the difference.

Snead, who began the day five strokes behind Thompson, pulled to within one shot after nine holes but Thompson's approach from 100 yards on the par-4 10th bounced into the hole for an eagle and the lead was back to three.

North Central, Mid City advance two in tourney

Staff Report

Mid City and North Central Little Leagues have two teams in the winners bracket following Saturday's first round of the A league city baseball tournament.

In opening round play, the North Central Astros defeated the Western White Sox 13-0 while the North Central Royals ran away from the Greenwood Rangers, 20-2.

Mid City's Angels shut out the Tower Rangers 5-0, while Northern Red edged past the Tower Astros, 9-7. The No. 2 team from Mid City and the representative from Eastern Little League both drew byes in the first round and will see action in today's play.

All of today's Round 2 games begin at 2 p.m. In winners bracket play, Northern Red takes on Mid City No. 2 at Lancaster Field (3600 Kansas), while Eastern and the Mid City Angels play at Windlands Park.

In losers bracket action, the Tower Rangers play the Western White Sox at Lancaster Field, and the Tower Astros meet the Greenwood Rangers at Windalnds Park.

B League Championship

The Northern Indians cruised to the B league city title Saturday by claiming an 11-1 victory over the North Central Blue Jays.

Indian pitcher Jeff Beard tossed a three-hitter and the Northern offense came alive with nine runs in the third inning to finish the season with an 18-2 record and an unbeaten slate in the double-elimination city tournament.

The Tribe's third inning saw 15 players come to the plate, with a two-out bases-loaded triple by catcher Blake Johnston highlighting the inning.

The Northern Indians are coached by Greg Frazier and Mike Smith.

Valenzuela's heart shows irregularities

Associated Press

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Fernando Valenzuela, who is on the California Angels disabled list because of possible cardiac problems, had tests four years ago that revealed heart irregularities, it was reported Saturday.

The left-handed pitcher had a routine treadmill test in September 1987 that showed irregularity in his heart rate, the Orange County Register reported.

Valenzuela remained on the active list with the Los Angeles Dodgers, and his treadmill tests from 1987 to September 1990 showed a consistent heart rate.

However, before he joined the Angels on June 4, Valenzuela had a routine electrocardiogram that revealed some abnormalities, said team physician Jules Rasinski.

Angels spokesman Tim Mead said the physical found "possible cardiac changes" in Valenzuela.

The 30-year-old left-hander was still signed to a one-year contract with an option for 1992. He started two games but lost both, giving up nine earned runs in less than seven innings.

On Thursday, he went to St. Joseph's Hospital in Orange to have a treadmill-thallium scan.

The radioactive element thallium was injected into the pitcher's circulatory system to detect any blockages in the arteries supplying blood to his heart.

"The exam ... showed an abnormal cardiogram," Mead said, adding further testing was to be done immediately.

The Angels immediately placed Valenzuela on the 15-day disabled list and said further testing would determine why abnormal blood flow was detected in the area of his heart.

"The most important thing right now is Fernando," said club President Richard Brown.

"The main thing is, we're worried about his health first, then we can worry about him pitching."

Valenzuela said he feels in good shape.

"I feel fine; I'm just waiting," Valenzuela said Friday. "I'm not scared."

Valenzuela's contract guarantees him $300,000 but is worth up to $1 million with incentives.

Dallasite wins Permian Roubaix

Staff Report

Chris Hippi of Dallas won the Class I, II and III category Saturday, leading the way in the Permian Roubaix Criterium Bicycle Races at Claydesta.

While Hippi placed first in the category, Robert Dahl of Ames, Iowa, came in second and Sam Montasa of Plano won third place honors.

The races, designed to reproduce an air of French bicycle racing, used five classes designed by the United States Cycling Federation and three public categories.

Conducted in conjunction with the Roubaix competition Saturday was the Texas State Championship Individual time trial.

In the senior I, II, III, IV class of that event, Chris Carlson posted a time of 53:08 over the 40 kilometer course, while Charlie Lachenbruch placed second with a time of 53:24. David Palmer and Chris Ronan tied for third in the division, as both crossed the finish line at 54:11.

Ex-Midland Angel Mike Fetters called up to help Anaheim pen

N.Y. Times News Service

BOSTON — The California Angels, who said that they would not recall a player to fill their 25th roster spot, changed their minds Saturday.

Right-handed pitcher Mike Fetters will be brought up today from Edmonton, the club's Class AAA affiliate, in order to help fortify the bullpen. The move was announced before Saturday's game.

Fetters started 11 games for the Trappers and had a 2-7 record with a 4.87 ERA.

In 26 games with the Angels last season, Fetters was 1-1 with a 4.12 ERA.

The addition of Fetters will force the Angels into a roster move Monday. Center fielder Junior Felix, disabled with a strained right calf, is due to return then.

The Angels, however, need help in the bullpen. Joe Grahe, the club's right-handed middle reliever, has been thrust into at least two starts because of Fernando Valenzuela's disabling.

The rest of the guys aren't getting too many outs, particularly Bob McClure and Jeff Robinson.

Robinson allowed three runs in one-third of an inning Friday and three more in 3 2/3 innings Saturday.

McClure has been worse. Over the course of two appearances and three outs, McClure has allowed six hits and four runs.

If nothing else, Fetters will offer the bullpen some needed relief. Between five pitchers, the pen has divided 16 1/3 innings in the past three games — all Angels losses.

In its past three outings, the bullpen has given up 14 runs. In the 11 chances before that, relievers had allowed eight runs.

Round of 54 wins DARE golf tourney

Staff Report

Jim White, Carl Brininstool and Joe Garrison teamed to shoot a round of 54 and win a scorecard playoff, taking top honors in the first flight of the 2nd Annual D.A.R.E. Golf Tournament Saturday at Hogan Park Golf Course.

Playing a man short in the four-man scramble, which is the top fundraiser for the Midland Police Department/Midland Independent School District Drug Abuse Resistance Education Program, the threesome edged out the four-man team of Tracy Gann, Kelly Eng, Mike Kruse and Craig Bales, who also shot a 53.

In second flight play of the tournament — which allowed players to buy Mulligan shots at $2 a pop — Larry Perkins, Thurman Nolan, Scott Mitchell and Danny Kellum shot a 54 to win by a single stroke over Don Hughes, Grady McGowan, Paul Christiani and Alan Stone.

Here are the results from the 2nd Annual D.A.R.E. Golf Tournamnet, played Saturday at Hogan Park Golf Course:

First Flight: 1. Jim White-Carl Brininstool-Joe Garrison, 53; 2. Tracy Gann-Kelly Eng-Mike Kruse-Craig Bales, 53.

Second Flight: 1. Larry Perkins-Thurman Nolan-Scott Mitchell-Danny Kellum, 54; 2. Don Hughes-Grady McGowan-Paul Christiani-Alan Stone, 55.

Lewis keeps unbeaten mark intact

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Carl Lewis, one jump away from losing his 64-meet winning streak in the men's long jump, came through with a dramatic victory Saturday at the Mobil national championships.

Lewis, unbeaten since losing to Larry Myricks in the 1981 national indoor championships, was in second place going into the sixth and final round, trailing Mike Powell by one inch.

But Lewis, a superb clutch performer, soared 28 feet, 4¼ inches, passing Powell by one-half inch, for his 65th concesutive victory.

When the distance was announced, the relieved Lewis spread his arms out, leaned back and fell to the ground.

The competition was not over, however. Powell, with a best of 28-3¾, still had had one jump remaining.

Urged on the crowd, which was applauding rhythmically, Powell raced down the runway, but could not reach Lewis' distance — and Lewis' streak was safe again.

Myricks was third at 27-10¾ — the same 1-2-3 finish as at the 1988 Olympics.

Lewis' winning jump was his longest since the Seoul Games.

Twins make it 14 straight; Rangers back in groove

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Julio Franco's two-run homer in the sixth produced the go-ahead runs as the Texas Rangers won their fifth straight, 4-3 over the New York Yankees.

Franco went to the opposite field on a 3-2 pitch from Yankees starter Tim Leary (3-6), barely clearing the 380-foot sign in right-center to snap a 2-2 tie. Franco has gone 6-for-11 with seven RBIs in his last three games.

The Yankees, who lost their fifth straight, staked Leary to a 2-0 first-inning lead on Don Mattingly's RBI single and Kevin Maas' sacrifice fly.

Texas came back to tie the game with single runs in the first and fifth. Rafael Palmeiro produced the first-inning run with a double and Jeff Huson evened the score with a run-scoring single.

Rangers starter Kevin Brown (5-5) benefited from Franco's homer. Brown lasted six innings and gave up eight hits, two walks and hit a batter but was charged with only one earned run.

Jeff Russell pitched the ninth for his 14th save, working out of a jam after putting runners on first and third with none out. Russell gave up an RBI single to Kevin Maas before nailing it down.

The crowd of 41,772 was the second-largest at Arlington Stadium this season, the third sellout, and the 12th largest in franchise history.

Twins 11, Indians 7

CLEVELAND — The Minnesota Twins overcame an early four-run deficit and won their 14th straight game, matching the majors' longest winning streak this year, as they beat the Cleveland Indians.

Rookie Scott Leius had a career-high four RBIs, two of them during a six-run third inning that also featured Kirby Puckett's two-run triple. The 11 runs were a season high for the Twins, who had 15 hits.

Minnesota's winning streak, a team record, equaled Texas' 14-game streak in May as the longest of 1991. Six of the Twins' 14 wins have been against the Indians.

Cleveland lost for the ninth time in 10 games but ended its string of three consecutive games without a run. The Indians, blanked for the previous 27 innings, scored five runs in the first two innings off starter Mark Guthrie.

Rookie Paul Abbott (2-0) got his second career win, both of them in relief of Guthrie during the past week and both against the Indians. He pitched 6 1-3 innings, allowing one run and three hits, walking five and striking out three.

Guthrie, who lasted two innings in his previous start, went 1 1-3 innings this time.

Former Midland Angel Jeff Manto doubled home two runs during the Indians' three-run first, and Felix Fermin and Chris James added RBI singles in the second for a 5-1 Cleveland lead.

Red Sox 13, Angels 3

BOSTON — Chuck Finley gave up seven runs on six hits in the first inning and the Boston Red Sox went on to rout the California Angels.

Finley (10-3) entered the game tied for the major-league lead in victories and a 3.12 ERA. But he lasted only two-thirds of an inning.

Jack Clark and Carlos Quintana each drove in three runs and Mike Greenwell and Tony Pena knocked in two apiece.

Mariners 15, Tigers 2

SEATTLE — Seattle received a club-record 14 walks, Dave Cochrane drove in a career-high five runs and Randy Johnson broke a three-game losing streak.

Four Tigers pitchers — Kevin Ritz, John Cerutti, Steve Searcy and Mike Dalton — issued 10 hits, 14 walks, hit two batters and had two wild pitches. In addition, Detroit had an error and a passed ball as the Mariners scored their season-high run total. Their previous top run total was 12.

Orioles 8, Blue Jays 4

TORONTO — Bob Melvin went 5-for-5, including a home run, and Mike Devereaux added a three-run homer as the Baltimore Orioles beat the Toronto Blue Jays to snap a six-game losing streak.

Melvin, who raised his average from .235 to .278, also drove in two runs and scored twice in becoming the 28th Oriole to get five hits in a game. The last Baltimore player to have five hits in a game was Phil Bradley on July 9, 1989 against Milwaukee.

Melvin, whose run-scoring double put the Orioles ahead 2-1 in the second, followed an RBI single by Randy Milligan in the the fourth with a solo homer off Juan Guzman (0-2). Guzman gave up five runs in four innings.

Royals 5, White Sox 3

CHICAGO — Danny Tartabull's two-run homer and solo shots by Kirk Gibson and Mike Macfarlane led Mike Boddicker and the Kansas City Royals over the Chicago White Sox.

It was the third victory in the last four games for the Royals and only their first in five games against the White Sox this season.

Boddicker (6-5) allowed two runs on six hits, walked two and struck out five in seven innings. Three of the hits off Boddicker were in the infield, including a pair of bunt singles. Jeff Montgomery finished for his 14th save. Loser Ramon Garcia (0-2) was unable to get through the second inning.

Brewers 6, A's 4
A's 7, Brewers 3

MILWAUKEE — Rickey Henderson hit a three-run homer to cap a four-run fourth inning and Jose Canseco also homered as Oakland beat Milwaukee for a split of their doubleheader.

Greg Vaughn hit two homers off Oakland ace Dave Stewart as the Brewers won the opener 6-4.

In the nightcap, Oakland took a 2-0 lead in the second off Kevin Brown (2-4) on a two-run double by Vance Law.

The A's drove Brown out in the fourth. Mark McGwire doubled, Law walked and Lance Blankenship singled for one run. Henderson then hit his fourth homer of the season for a 6-0 Oakland lead. Henderson, who stole four bases in the opener, left the game in the sixth inning after complaining of soreness behind his left knee.

Bank provides stadium loan

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Commerce Bancshares is expected to sign a deal providing $50 million in financing for start-up costs on the new Texas Rangers' baseball stadium.

Bank officials said Friday they beat out several other banks to provide the short-term financing to the public agency building the project.

"I think we're beyond the point of no return," said Bill Snider, president of the Arlington Sports Facilities Development Authority. "As you take a step at a time, it sort of dawns on us all that this is really going to happen."

A record number of voters in January supported the half-cent sales tax increase to fund the project.

The Rangers agreed to put up $30 million of the $165 million needed for the new facilities.

The 50,000 seat, open-air stadium will be south of Arlington Stadium on Interstate 30. It will have more high-priced, luxury seating, a shop and restaurant complex, a Sports Hall of Fame and a miniature baseball field.

Become a Foster Parent and bring understanding, trust and love to a child in need.
These children deserve a chance for happiness and a secure future. As a Foster Parent, you will provide food, clothing and shelter. More important, you will be giving a child a temporary home. Your understanding, guidance and love can remove some of the hurt and the worry.
If you can't open your home to a child you can open your heart. Volunteer assistance will help us help the kids
Join Juice the Moose, the Midland Reporter-Telegram, KMID-TV, MAGIC 102 and the Midland Angels in supporing the Foster Parent Plan.

Gooden, rookie toss three-hitters

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Dwight Gooden looked as sharp as ever Saturday night, pitching a three-hitter for his 21st career shutout as the New York Mets beat the Houston Astros 6-0.

Garry Templeton homered for the first time for the Mets and drove in three runs, more than plenty for the on-again, off-again Gooden.

Gooden (6-5) struck out five, walked none and did not permit a runner past second base in his first victory in five starts. It was his first shutout since last June 23, and just his second in 64 starts since 1988.

Gooden had caused concern on the Mets this year, giving up 49 hits and 25 earned runs in his previous five starts, covering just 29 1-3 innings. His break-even record was troubling to the team, although last year he also started at 5-5 before finishing at 19-7.

Templeton, acquired May 31 from San Diego for Tim Teufel, hit a two-run homer in the second inning off Jimmy Jones (4-4). Templeton followed up his second home run of the season with an RBI forceout in the fourth that made it 3-0.

Mackey Sasser, who singled twice to set up the Mets' early runs, drove in a run in the sixth with a pop-fly single that drawn-in shorstop Eric Yelding could not catch over his shoudler. Sasser made his first start at catcher since May 25; he has been bothered all season by problems throwing the ball back to the mound.

Yelding began the sixth inning by letting a grounder go through his legs for his 15th error in 53 games, and Howard Johnson tripled.

Gooden doubled to lead off the seventh inning, finishing Jones, and Daryl Boston doubled off Dwayne Henry. Jones was the third pick in the first round 1982 amateur draft, taken by San Diego, while Gooden was selected fifth by the Mets.

New York snapped a three-game losing streak.

National League

Giants 4, Pirates 0

SAN FRANCISCO — Mike Remlinger pitched a three-hit shutout in his major league debut as the San Francisco Giants beat the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Remlinger, the Giants' No. 1 draft choice in the 1987 amatuer draft, gave up a first-inning double to Jay Bell, a second-inning double to Don Slaught and an eighth-inning single by Bell. He struck out four and walked three.

Matt Williams hit a two-run homer in the Giants' four-run third.

After issuing a walk with one out in the second, Remlinger retired 17 of the next 18 batters through seven innings.

The Giants recalled Remlinger, who was 5-1 at Class AAA Phoenix, to replace injured right-hander Scott Garrelts in the rotation. Despite his winning record in the minors, Remlinger had allowed 25 earned run in his last 28 innings.

Willie McGee singled in the first inning to extend his hitting streak to 19 games, longest in the majors this season, as the Giants defeated the division-leading Pirates for the fourth time in five games.

Reds 3, Phillies 1

PHILADELPHIA — Jose Rijo gave up one run in 8⅔ innings and Barry Larkin hit a two-run homer as the Cincinnati Reds defeated the Philadelphia Phillies.

Cincinnati has won three straight games and six of its last seven, while injury-riddled Philadelphia has lost 11 of 15.

Rijo (6-2) gave up five hits, struck out 10 and walked none before Rob Dibble got the last out for his 18th save in 18 opportunities.

Padres 6, Cubs 2

SAN DIEGO — Jerald Clark's two-run single snapped an eighth-inning tie and the San Diego Padres went on to beat the Chicago Cubs.

Tim Teufel added an RBI double and Scott Coolbaugh drove in a run with a sacrifice fly to cap the four-run inning that started when reliever Mike Bielecki (8-5) gave up a one-out walk to Bip Roberts and a single to Tony Fernandez.

Paul Assenmacher then relieved and got Tony Gwynn to hit a grounder to third, but Luis Salazar threw high for an error on an attempted force at second base, allowing the Padres to load the bases.

Expos 2, Braves 0

MONTREAL — Dennis Martinez pitched an eight-hitter for his third shutout of the season as the Montreal Expos beat the Atlanta Braves.

Martinez (9-4) struck out five and walked two for his fourth complete game of the season and 21st career shutout. The right-hander is tied with Ramon Martinez for the NL lead in shutouts this year.

John Smoltz (2-8) allowed only six hits and struck out eight 5 2-3 innings.

Edberg sweeps Washington

LONDON (AP) — Stefan Edberg overpowered former Michigan player Malivai Washington 6-4, 6-2 Saturday in the semifinals of the Queens Club grass court championship.

Edberg's opponent in Sunday's final will be either American David Wheaton, the No. 6 seed, or fellow Swede Anders Jarryd. Their semifinal was suspended by darkness with Wheaton leading 6-3, 4-4.

The Wheaton-Jarryd semifinal was delayed three hours by rain and officials decided the light was too poor to continue. It will be completed Sunday before the final.

While Edberg, the world's top-ranked player dominated on serve, Washington had problems.

Russian voters call for change

Those voters in Russia are still intent on showing their Communist Party overlords that totalitarianism is out and that free will is the order of the day.

In the first popular balloting for president of the Russian Republic this week 57 percent of the voters gave their nod to Boris Yeltsin, a radical reformer who has lobbied for transferring ownership of state-owned farms and factories to individuals. Although Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev did not endorse any of the six candidates for the newly-created presidency, it's likely that he would oppose Yeltsin's stance since Gorbachev insists on maintaining totalitarian control. Gorbachev still insists communism is the correct way to proceed.

In a related election twist, voters in Leningrad narrowly endorsed restoring their city's name to St. Petersburg. Results showed that nearly 54 percent of the city's voters favored a referendum mandating the change although the referendum is not binding. A city of gold-tipped church spires and marble-banked canals, it was named St. Petersburg in honor of Peter the Great who founded it in 1704. The Russian legislature renamed it Petrograd in 1914 and then changed that to Leningrad in 1924 after the death of Soviet founder Vladimir Lenin.

The mood of voters in Leningrad was epitomized in the words of Yuri Bobrov who said before the vote, "Leningrad is the Communists' sacred cow. Of course if this wins, it will be one more defeat for them. People already have stopped believing them."

That has been clear in recent years as more and more Russians have demanded change.

The Soviet Union has been in the grips of revolution since the early 1980's when Gorbachev came to power and began a program of revolutionary change. Gorbachev has brought the Soviet Union face to face with its shortcomings and the need for major adjustments in Soviet policy. Still, however, Gorbachev has insisted that his approach will not forsake the principles of communism.

He may find the same position difficult to maintain in light of the election results and the words of those who no longer believe in the communist dream of a worker's paradise.

Now the message has been transmitted to the world that the majority of free-will voters in Russia no longer subscribe to the Soviet Communist strategy for the future.

Can Gorbachev continue to maintain that communism with all its warts and skeletons still offers the people of the Soviet Union their best future course?

ANOTHER VIEW

China must change to earn MFN status

President Bush's speech at Yale was devoted, in large part, to a defense of his China policy. . . . Bush described himself as "trying to chart a moral course through a world of lesser evils."

He justified granting the trade preferences that go with the "most favored nation" status he wants to extend to China for another year on the grounds that he seeks "to advance the cause of freedom . . . not just snub nations that aren't yet wholly free."

Bush went on to repeat the fallacious argument that withholding "most favored nation" status would isolate China. It would do nothing of the sort. China would simply suffer by not being able to earn as many billions of dollars from its exports to this country.

Is it moral to favor China but withhold trade preferences from the Soviet Union, despite the fact that Moscow has done much more to earn such a bonus than Beijing?

Today there is freedom of expression in the Soviet Union; there is none in China. Moscow is at least going through the motions of allowing freedom of movement. Beijing still runs the country as if it were one vast jail. The Red army has got out of hand in the Baltics and in Georgia, but it doesn't have the blood of a massacre on its hands, like the misnamed People's Army.

The democratizing Soviet Union is the lesser evil, by far, than communist China. As for isolation, if the cause of freedom is not advanced by snubbing nations, as he argues, why does . . . Bush continue to maintain other communist countries, like Cuba and Vietnam, in quarantine?

Bush should review his charts and steer a more convincing moral course in his policies toward totalitarian states. China must do more to earn "most favored nation" status.

Last year, when Congress balked at renewing the trade preferences, Beijing released about a thousand political prisoners. . . . Bush should try and secure the same lessening of evil this year too, instead of turning a blind eye to his personal, most favored communist nation.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, June 16, the 167th day of 1991. There are 198 days left in the year. This is Father's Day.

On June 16, 1858, in a speech in Springfield, Ill., Senate candidate Abraham Lincoln said the slavery issue had to be resolved, declaring, "A house divided against itself cannot stand."

On this date:

In 1567, Mary, Queen of Scots, was imprisoned in Lochleven Castle in Scotland.

In 1883, baseball's first "Ladies' Day" took place as the New York Gothams offered free admission for women to a game against the Cleveland Spiders (New York won, 5-2).

In 1903, Ford Motor Company was incorporated.

In 1932, President Hoover and Vice President Charles Curtis were renominated by the Republican National Convention in Chicago.

In 1933, the National Industrial Recovery Act became law. (It was later struck down by the U.S. Supreme Court).

In 1940, a pro-Communist government was installed in the Baltic state of Lithuania, following an invasion of Soviet forces.

In 1955, Pope Pius XII excommunicated Argentine President Juan Domingo Peron — a ban lifted eight years later.

In 1963, Valentina Tereshkova became the first female space traveler when Vostok VI was launched from the Soviet Union on a three-day mission.

Hispanic agents fight discrimination

WASHINGTON — Opponents of fresh civil rights legislation would like you to believe that Americans are already protected by plenty of equal employment laws. But the truth is that even the federal government isn't color blind.

Anderson

Hispanic agents in the FBI, in a celebrated lawsuit, blamed the agency for treating them like second-class citizens. Hispanic agents for the U.S. Customs Service are embroiled in a similar suit. They risk their lives in the war on drugs, just like the white agents do, but they say they are passed over for promotions while their Anglo counterparts climb the ladder. And those who protest spend more time fighting retaliation from the good-old-boy network than fighting drug lords.

Special Agent Seve Mercado knows the feeling all too well. The story of what happened to him is making the rounds in Customs and angering those who aren't part of the the good-old-boy network. Mercado scored a major coup in the drug war — one you probably read about. But you didn't read his name in connection with it.

Mercado was in charge of Customs enforcement for the border town of Douglas, Ariz., in November 1989 when he got a tip about a bizarre new drug-smuggling avenue — a tunnel dug from Agua Prieta, Mexico, to Douglas. Mercado reported the tip to his superiors, but they did not move on his report. Mercado then asked for digging equipment, but was ignored. Unwilling to give up, he put his personnel on surveillance duty at a local construction site looking for any sign of a tunnel entrance.

It was not until March 1990, after the head of the Customs office in Phoenix heard rumors about the tunnel, that the agency decided to move in. But for Mercado, that meant moving out.

His superiors in the Customs hierarchy came to Douglas, took over the investigation and stuck with it as it turned into a headline story. The tunnel began right under the estate of Mexican drug lord Francisco Rafael Camarena. In early May 1990, Mercado sat on the sidelines as Customs agents raided the operation. They secretly watched Camarena and other suspects emerge from the Arizona end of the tunnel and followed them to Phoenix where Customs seized 2,258 pounds of cocaine.

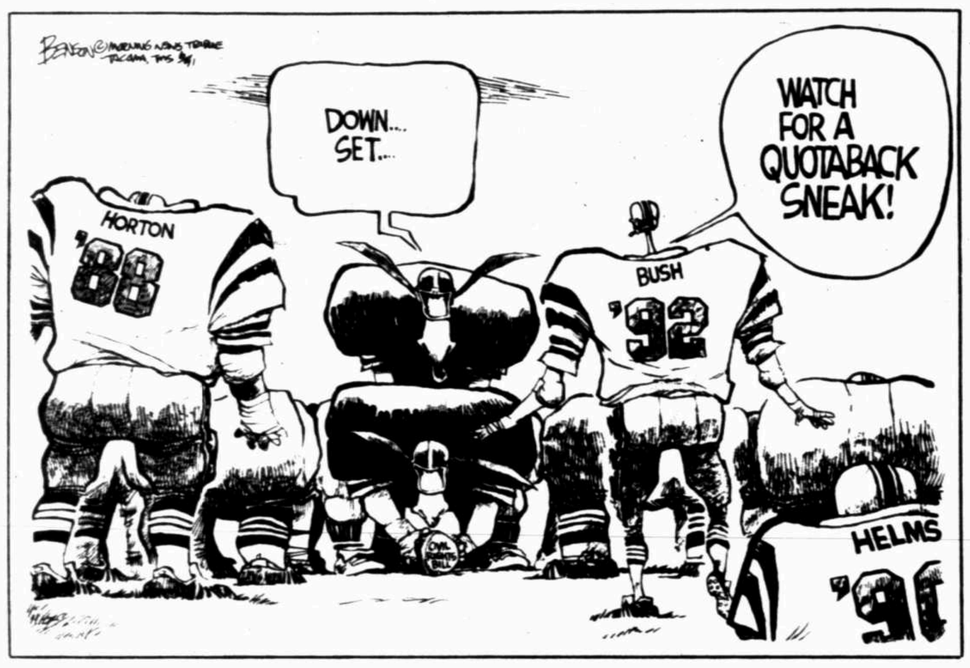

The tunnel was front-page news, obscuring the fact that the drug lord got away. "Tunnel Buster — Operation Catacomb" T-shirts were printed, state and national politicians toured the tunnel, and "America's Most Wanted" geared up to make the incident even more famous.

Meanwhile, Mercado was shipped off to Tucson for the menial task of translating wire taps from Spanish. Fed up, he filed a racial discrimination complaint against the Customs officials who had taken him off the case. Later, because he doesn't like confrontation and because he feared retaliation, Mercado settled the complaint informally. But his troubles were far from over.

Documents show that last August, he was reassigned to the border town of San Luis.

Back in Arizona, the Customs workers in Douglas have asked for the reinstatement of Mercado to his management position there, but to no avail. Mercado was reluctant to elaborate on his case for us, but he did confirm that in April, he decided to join the class-action discrimination suit filed by some 200 Hispanic agents against Customs. Their case was dismissed in May, but is on appeal.

Jay Rockefeller: Ray of light in the darkness

WASHINGTON — Many have noted the oddity of Sen. Jay Rockefeller, member of a rich (and Republican) family representing a poor and Democratic state, but oddity is not new to West Virginia. The state was created in an act of semi-secession to help win the war against secession. It was cobbled together in 1863 from some Virginia counties that had few slaves or Confederate sympathies.

Will

The Civil War ended slave power and unleashed industrialism fueled by a form of power West Virginia has plenty of: coal. Extraction industries are usually dangerous and unrewarding to the people who do the actual extracting. Small wonder health care — its availability and cost — is an old worry in a state where not long ago one-fifth of the families contained miners. Rockefeller is a prime mover behind the Democrats' new plan to contain health-care costs and broaden access.

The plan's most controversial provision is suited to a dry fiscal season: the government would mandate private-sector spending. Employers would be required to provide health-care coverage or pay into a fund that would finance coverage. The plan's radical potential is in its nuances — the formulation of standards, medical and administrative, concerning the proper use and pricing of particular medical procedures.

The subject of health care is a migraine-inducing soup of acronyms, polysyllabic scientific terms and dollar figures containing three commas. Rockefeller is so marinated in the details, he sometimes turns this subject of national anxiety into an anesthetic, numbing the senses with numbers. It is as though he feels the need to prove that he is intelligent enough to have earned the eminence to which he was born.

He is; and no one is born into elective office. Think of him as an upwardly mobile poverty worker.

Before Rockefeller, now 54, was governor and senator, he was a Vista volunteer in a West Virginia village of 256 people where there were teen-agers whose teeth were half gone, so scarce was adequate dental care. The first time he got a pap smear van to come to town, no woman visited it. The second time was the same. After leafletting and other advertisements, a few women came for the van's third appearance.

Why would people not avail themselves of what was made available? Life, Rockefeller says, has been so hard in the hollows of his mountainous state (highest mean altitude in the nation), people are reluctant to risk learning more bad news.

The population is aging, medical technology is becoming more sophisticated and expensive, and malpractice litigation is provoking defensive medicine. (Perhaps 30 percent of health-care costs result from unnecessary or inappropriate procedures, but at least lawyers are confounded and machines are amortized). All of this takes an enormous toll on the competitiveness of American industry, which is paying much of the bill.

The health-care crisis is optional in the sense that it is rooted in foolish, modifiable behavior. Human beings are the only animals that eat, smoke, drink, drive and use drugs recklessly, and don't exercise naturally. And the composition of the medical profession — too many expensive specialists; not enough primary-care physicians practicing preventive medicine — reflects the perverse incentives of a disease-oriented, hospital-centered, high-technology health care system.

Rockefeller's subject these days is health care, but his nascent theme is general negligence.

Rockefeller says, with a refreshing absence of folderol, "I want to be president." Before his family vacation in August, he will decide whether to run in 1992.

RUSSELL BAKER

Kennedy's lifestyle runs afoul of Puritans

A Page One headline in Sunday's Boston Globe had Sen. Edward M. Kennedy saying his "lifestyle will change." This was depressing news. The country is infested these days with a busybody Puritanism determined to inflict wholesome goodness on the entire population. If it can force a "lifestyle" change on a spirit as cavalier as Kennedy's, the future is bleak indeed.

Baker

Combing through the full page of type and pictures that accompanied The Globe's headline, I was relieved to find little evidence that the senator had promised anything approaching a change of "lifestyle." About all he had told the Globe man was that he would "have to be a little more attentive to behavior."

This sounded like the sort of noncommittal pledge with which unfamous people try to pacify embarrassed relatives the morning after they have made fools of themselves at the Elks Ball. Which is basically what Kennedy did in his celebrated visit with son and nephew to a Palm Beach saloon on Good Friday last.

Once rape charges were brought against his nephew, the full force of the new Puritanism descended on Kennedy. The goal seems to be to make him swear off his well-documented liking for alcohol and the pleasure of women. The spirit of tyranny is at work here.

Why a mature man should not have a midnight drink with his adult sons and nephews is unclear. Why, if a bachelor, he should not enjoy the company of compliant women is equally unclear. Such tastes in pleasure have been shared through history by many statesmen more glorious than Kennedy.

Moreover, his pleasures do not seem to impair Kennedy's ability to work very well indeed in the Senate, where he is regarded as one of the best. Why, then, this passion to make him take up the dour and starchy bluenose life?

Part of it, of course, comes from the terrible do-good impulse that has transformed half the population into a self-righteous, hectoring police force determined to make life miserable for all who resist conforming to the code of what's good for you.

This citizen Gestapo is making life a misery at every turn. A pregnant woman ordering a glass of wine gets, instead, a health lecture from a hygiene gauleiter in waiter's clothing.

A smoker lights up in a tight space, is assaulted by a citizen mob and is lucky to escape without being arrested. Dying people in need of comfort are told instead that their terminal condition is their own fault.

Had they exercised properly, eaten differently, eschewed vice, avoided this air, that water, this cooking pan, that soda pop, never touched sugar, watched their cholesterol, checked blood pressure twice a day, death could never have caught up with them.

Puritanism's assault on politics has been particularly hard on our public life, and the resulting hypocrisy has been a macabre delight to see. For instance, there is a nationwide campaign afoot not only to equip American high school youth with condoms, but also to make sure they know how to use them.

This is consistent with the prevailing hygienic Puritanism: high school fornicators must take proper health measures to outwit old Mr. Death. Yet, while hygienic Puritanism acknowledges rampant sexual action among high school children, political Puritanism decrees that sexual action among grown-ups old enough to be president must be limited to monogamy among the wed and abstinence among the unwed.

Thus Gary Hart, once a formidable presidential candidate, can be made to disappear overnight from public life by the same public that is pressing condoms by the gross on the future leaders of America.

Hypocrisy? Not at all, says the fashionable Puritanism. In modern Puritanism's political manifestation, "character" is the sine qua non for the nation's leaders. "Character" in this sense implies that politicians must live by a sexual ethic so out of date that even high school kids think it quaint — and that, if they don't, they must not lead the country.

Efforts to make Kennedy change his "lifestyle" reflect the new Puritanic insistence that public people lead seemly lives even in private. But nowadays there is no private life. Anyone who insists on man's right to the unseemly private life needs courage, for the Puritans will gnaw him down to a pipsqueak.

High Court's ruling will protect babies

Americans who believe that life is precious and ought to be protected rejoice at the Supreme Court decision prohibiting federally funded health clinics from discussing abortion with clients. The only reason they would want to discuss it with them is in order to secure their business.

I refer to a front page article in the Midland Reporter-Telegram where Jan Foust of West Texas Planned Parenthood was interviewed during a picket of the Midland office of U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith. Planned Parenthood was never advertised as an agency to terminate pregnancies, but as a clinic for anyone seeking information for birth control. ABORTION IS NOT BIRTH CONTROL. Contraceptives are used to prevent pregnancies. Abortion is not a contraceptive; it is a termination of a human life however long in existence. Planned Parenthood, funded by taxpayers' dollars, considers abortion merely another from of contraception. The abortion industry is a multi-billion dollar monster, which does not need funding by our tax dollars directly or indirectly.

My husband and I applaud the high court decision because it makes Planned Parenthood and other similar organizations continue to do the work of birth control, of which we all agree is necessary, and stay out of the big business of mass extermination of babies.

Gloria Kirkpatrick
Midland

Abortion ruling won't compromise freedom

What does the Supreme Court decision against federal funding for abortion counseling really mean and should taxpayer money go to the so-called "family planning" programs that promote abortion?

Title X spends approximately $140 million of taxpayers' money on family planning projects. Planned Parenthood, which will lose about $37 million, has called the decision a "gag" ruling. Many have seen this as a publicity ploy, because in reality Planned Parenthood and other pro-abortion organizations fight constantly in the courts for their own "gag" rules. They have consistently fought to stop safeguards that would protect women — such as informed consent — in the unregulated abortion industry.

The fact is, free speech would not be violated by the court's decision. Those groups receiving taxpayer money remain free to say whatever they like on their own time and using their own money.

The doctor-patient relationship would not be infringed on because regulations allow for exceptions in emergency situations; such as if the life of the mother is endangered.

Over the years, millions of dollars have been poured into these "family planning" programs and they have proven not to reduce teen pregnancies, but teen births and that by abortion. Thus there has been an increase of pregnancies, AIDS and venereal disease where many of these clinics are established.

Do these groups really care about the poor? One writer recently called the attitude behind these programs a step towards a slow "genocide" of the poor class of people. For those who know of Planned Parenthood's history, this is no surprise.

Mark T. Mosely

READERS' VIEWS on: Commencement Etiquette 101

You can't wave off improprieties

I am not personally aware of the circumstances that provoked three of your readers to take Mr. Kelly, principal of Midland High School, to task. Kelly apparently had interrupted the salutatorian's speech in order to admonish the graduates for doing the "wave," presumably at the start of her speech. All three writers were incensed that he should do such a dastardly deed, with one calling for "action (to be) taken against Mr. Kelly, he has overstepped his authority one too many times."

I would point out to these three maligned writers that the time for high-jinks is not during this ceremony. This ceremony, boring as it may be, is a recognition of the graduates by the school administration for their having accomplished the minimal education program, which the State of Texas requires. This occasion will be looked upon in later years as a turning point in their lives. Some will throw their brains out of gear and coast through life whole others will use this as a stepping-stone to other challenges.

Both the valedictorian and salutatorian deserved to be heard. They had earned those titles. With the "wave" being performed at the start of the salutatorian's speech, I suspect that Kelly made a judgment call and decided that, if not nipped in the bud, the ceremony would degrade into a "food fight." Kelly was doing his job and should be commended for that. If his remarks were construed as overkill, so be it, but he was doing his job. The friends and families who were in attendance deserved to see their graduate walk across the stage in recognition of an accomplishment. I have been acquainted with Kelly through his membership in the Midland Downtown Lion's Club, where he is a worker. He has also shown innovation in his work as principal by proposing a new school day schedule that may give the taxpayers "more bang for the buck."

One of your writers, who I would suspect to be one of the "brain-out-of-gear" gang, stated "life is too short not to have any fun." I cannot disagree with that statement, but there is a time and a place, and the graduation ceremony is neither. Indeed, for those graduates who are moving into the world of the taxpayer, the fun has only started!

Jess E. Moore
Midland

Kelly helped avoid graduation fiasco

The letters on June 9th and the remarks of some parents I have talked with have prompted me to offer a different perspective of the 1991 Midland High School graduation ceremony.

Mr. Kelly gave a short warning statement to the class and audience only because the ceremony (including some things that the audience did not see) was quickly turning into the type of fiasco seen in 1989. For those who were not in attendance in 1989, the Midland Reporter-Telegram carried many letters that year expressing comments such as "how could the administration of MHS let it go so far," "looked like a three ring circus," et cetera. Because of this travesty, Gene Isaacs worked many hours to improve the problem areas so that this wouldn't happen again. As a result, we had a very beautiful 1990 graduation ceremony.

In response to those who say "sure the '89 graduation was bad, but what makes you think this year would be?" Well, we just couldn't take that chance. We were told by some parents after the ceremony that they had much more planned, but decided not to proceed with it after Kelly made his statement. Once this negative momentum gets going, it is almost impossible to stop.

One thing not taken into consideration by those people wanting "the party atmosphere" is that there are students that are the first ever in their family to graduate from high school. There are also students that don't breeze through high school in four years, and receiving their diploma is so very important to these students and their families. There are families that travel many miles to see their grandchild, niece, nephew, et cetera, graduate, and this carnival atmosphere doesn't give a very good impression of Midland.

I am not saying the students and audience should sit quietly like little soldiers for this one and a half hours out of their 12 years — only to give this short ceremony the respect and dignity that it deserves. The graduation ceremony is to honor the accomplishments of the students and the hours of work that the administration, faculty and staff put into this ceremony that they have earned. There is plenty of time for rowdy celebration later.

Volunteer crossing guards? Get real

You ran an article Friday, May 31st about the city's attempt to turn the school crossing-guard program over to Midland Independent School District (MISD).

The city would have the parents believe that the school district could operate the $90,000 a year crossing-guard program with volunteers. Let's say that the guard on Wadley Avenue near Bush Elementary doesn't feel like showing up at 7 a.m. one morning. Currently Midland Police Department would send a patrol car or metermaid over to cover or hire a temporary replacement. The school district doesn't have anyone to send over so there wouldn't be anyone to help when your child tries to cross those busy streets. Every taxpayer is paying the cost for the crossing guards, whether MISD taxes them or the city does it, so who cares which agency pays? The real question is where can the job be handled best?

The DARE program was sold to MISD as a program to help the kids. The school district didn't ask for it! You can count the number of other school districts in the state that provide money to their DARE programs on three fingers! And yet, the district contributes $30,000 of its annual budget towards the program and has no money for better science equipment or libraries. The DARE program has been around nationwide for some time and yet there is still no real empirical data that the program works. Now it looks like another drug program is coming to town being sold by MPD called D-FY-IT.

Why do we need two programs? Why not save the $87,000 both agencies are paying for DARE and let the schools teach drug education and let MPD put the officers back on the streets where they are needed more?

The city is responsible for the safety of our streets, to include all pedestrians crossing them, not MISD.

Maybe they do make 'em like they used to

There's a father in this town, unknown to me, whom I think deserves public applause.

His son got into the habit of stealing hood ornaments from cars around town.

Now this father found out about it and packed his son and stolen hood ornaments into the car and went down to the police department.

The boy and a detective went around to the various neighborhoods and returned the stolen goods to their owners.

We are one of the fortunate benefactors of this father's concern for the proper upbringing of his son. I wish I knew who he was so I could say thank you.

Questions surround MMH name change

When did we vote to change the name of Midland Memorial Hospital to Memorial Hospital and Medical Center? What became of 'Midland'?

Does changing the name mean the board has found another batch of taxpayers to mine for "indigent care?" I hope so, considering the hefty tax increase they have laid on Midland taxpayers.

I also believe it would be interesting to find out who profited ultimately from the bailout of Glenwood by the hospital's board just before we were advised that the cost of "indigent" care had risen tremendously. Perhaps one of your investigative reporters might locate such information and make it available to us taxpayers who are paying for it.

Lala T. Butler

Permian Basin rises to the occasion again

The outpouring of support for the June 1 and 2 Children's Miracle Network Telethon was not a display of community consciousness.

It was an overwhelming show of community caring and concern for our children and their health, and for the care Medical Center Hospital is able to provide to our children.

The response in phone pledges, throughout the Permian Basin was heartwarming in the very least, and the tremendous number of sponsors, telephone volunteers, support staff, technicians, and everyone else involved shows that when people are needed, the Permian Basin responds. And a warm thank you to the families of the "Miracle Kids" who allowed their stories to be told — they know personally that kids do come first.

West Texas residents, along with the Children's Miracle Network Telethon's national and local sponsors, should be proud to know they were part of the telethon's successful $105,938 tally.

A special thanks to KTPX-Channel 9 for its tremendous efforts, especially those of hosts, Richard Relyea and David Hoefferle; the production crew, Ted Stites, Richard Valdez, Richard Esparza, Ben Hernandez, Lisa Reneau, Chuck Mason, Sally Santos, and Rosemary Carrasco; and General Manager Dan Robbins who made the broadcast possible.

There is no better way to say it: On behalf of the Medical Center Development Corp. and Medical Center Hospital, thank you Permian Basin.

NEW YORK — Lack of adequate federal regulations, incredibly incompetent management of numerous large U.S. banks and savings and loans institutions, outrageous greed and shameful disregard for the American taxpayer have brought about the most costly financial scandal in the history of our country.

Hearst

The crisis and its potential consequences are now coming to a head in Washington. Origins of the crisis are blamed on deregulation of the banks at both federal and state levels between 1980 and 1983.

President Bush is calling on Congress to reform federal banking regulations and increase to $70 billion dollars the amount that the fund insuring bank deposits can borrow from the government. The General Accounting Office estimates the cost to the American taxpayer of cleaning up the banking and S&L scandal could be $500 billion over 40 years. A Stanford University study says the cost, including interest, could be $1.4 trillion over the next 20 years.

Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. Chairman L. William Seidman predicts 340 additional banks will fail this year. A total of 618 S&Ls have failed or are failing. The Federal Resolution Trust Corp., which is managing the S&L failures, has sold or closed down 408 thrifts. The RTC expects the number of failed S&Ls may reach 1,000, one third of all that existed in the 1980s.

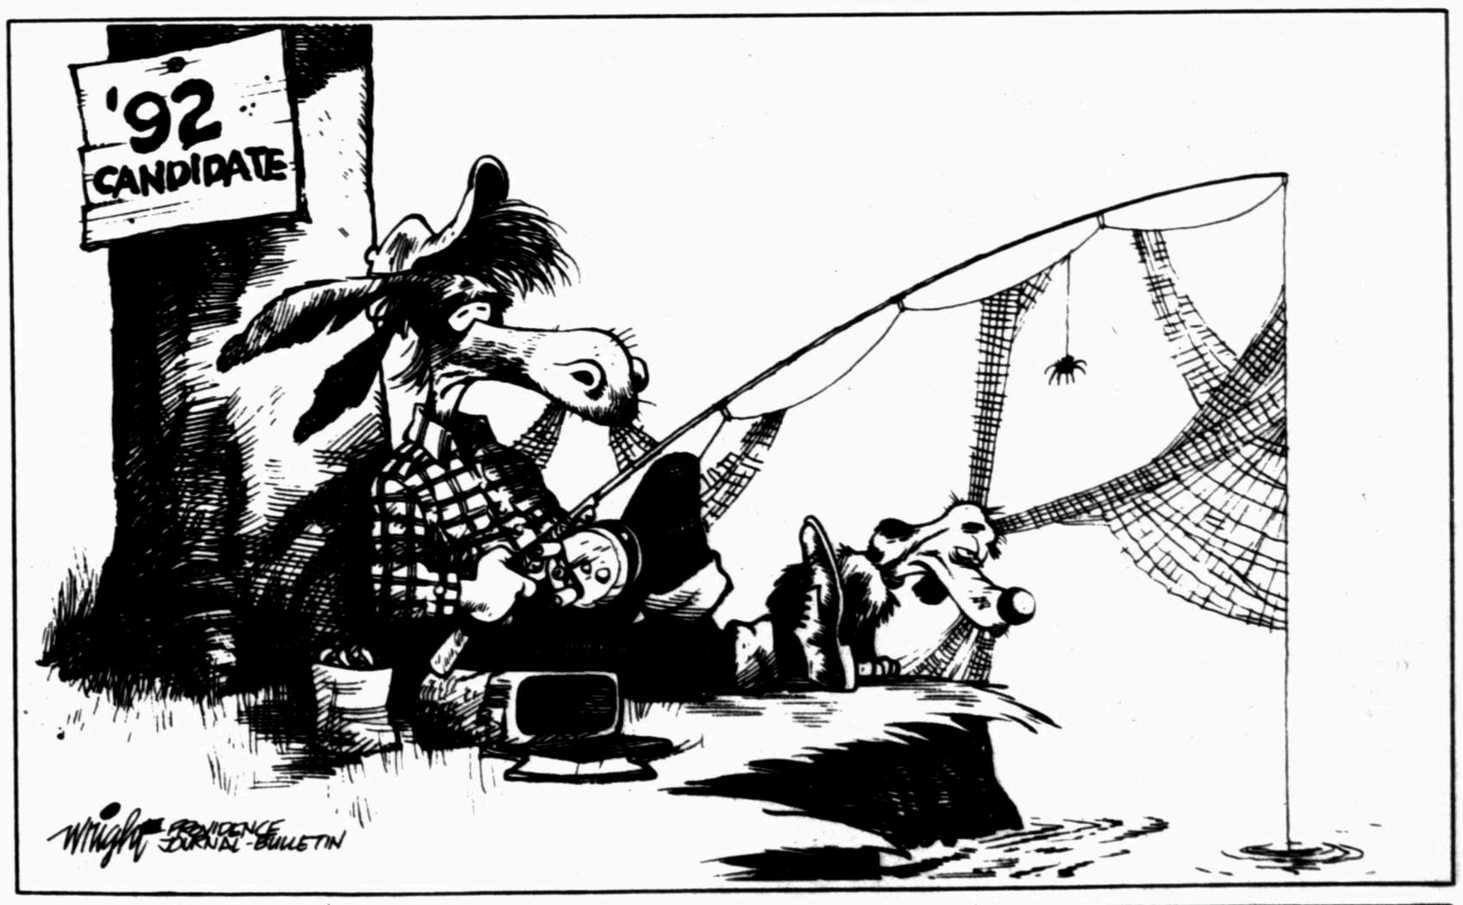

The RTC has paid off 11 million depositors who had money in failed S&Ls. It has already paid out $157 billion of its assets, primarily by selling stocks, bonds and mortgage loans held by the S&Ls. It still has $164 billion of harder-to-sell assets acquired by the takeover of the failed institutions. These so-called assets include 1,300 office buildings, 765 shopping centers, 183 hotels, 28 golf courses, five schools and two churches.

Because of the recession-caused depressed real estate market, speculators who owned these properties defaulted on loan payments — precipitating the S&L failures. The RTC had to sell multi-million-dollar projects for almost pennies. Some buildings went for one fourth of what they cost to build.

Comptroller General Charles A. Bowsher said the General Accounting Office is unable to keep track of the money it is supposed to be recovering for the taxpayers because the RTC doesn't know what it has to sell, what it should charge or what it has already sold.

House Banking Committee chairman, Henry Gonzalez, D-Texas, said the RTC is "an unguided missile headed for certain disaster." Martin Regalia, chief economist for the National Council of Savings Institutions, believes all the still failing banks and S&Ls should be closed down as soon as possible instead of being propped up with taxpayers' money. I agree. The government would have to pay each depositor up to $100,000. Some analysts believe that would cost the taxpayer less in the long run than propping up the bad banks and S&Ls.

It will require powerful public pressure on Congress to enact appropriate legislation with sufficient votes to override a presidential veto. The pressure should start without delay or many more billions of the taxpayers' money will go down the drain.

U.S. lost to Vietnamese in their backyard

The Persian Gulf war evoked many echoes of Vietnam; and the quick and overwhelming victory in the desert awakened many of the old charges — in Vietnam the U.S. sold out a loyal ally, failed to use sufficient force, but still lost the war only for lack of support at home.

Wicker

One of the most important contributions of the memoirs of Clark Clifford, just published by Random House as "Counsel to the President," is to demolish these arguments with the authority of an extraordinary public man who played a vital role in most of the Vietnam era.

"The war was not lost at home," Clifford writes. "It was lost where it was fought, in the jungles and rice paddies of Southeast Asia, and in the offices of a corrupt and incompetent ally."

Clark Clifford served as a member, then chairman, of the president's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board in the Kennedy and Johnson administrations, and in the last year of the latter he was its secretary of Defense.

He argued against President Johnson's deployment of ground troops to Vietnam in 1965, thereafter supported the war policy, then from the Pentagon became a powerful advocate for "winding down" the war, stopping the U.S. bombing of North Vietnam and negotiating peace.

Clifford was more than an officeholder. From his service as counsel to President Truman and architect of the great presidential victory of 1948, as manager of the Eisenhower-to-Kennedy transition in 1960, as a personal counselor to John F. Kennedy and as a leading Washington attorney, he had become by the late 60s one of the most impressive figures in the capital and the Democratic Party — a voice to be listened to with respect.

As secretary of Defense, Clifford had the courage to do what few public officials ever do; he reversed himself and argued against a policy he had previously supported (risking Lyndon Johnson's formidable wrath).

Johnson finishes second

Associated Press

TONSBERG, Norway — Ben Johnson finished second in a 100-meter sprint Saturday and again failed to show the form he displayed before his two-year suspension for using steroids.

Johnson was timed in 10.41 seconds, finishing four hundredths of a second behind Wolfgang Haupt of Germany.

Johnson was slightly faster than his first two outdoor meets this season. He was fifth in 10.54 three weeks ago in Grenada, Spain, which was his first outdoor race after his suspension. Johnson then ran a 10.69 and finished fifth in a 100-meter heat May 30 at Seville, Spain.

The Canadian sprinter was silent and sometimes angry during his hour-long workout at the Tonsberg Greveskogen Sports Park on Friday.

Johnson chased a photographer from the local newspaper, Tonsberg Blad, across the grass and threatened to smash his cameras if he took another picture, according to the Norwegian news agency NTB.

The sprinter did not ask for his customary appearance fee for running at the Norwegian meet, but he refused to answer any questions from the local newspaper unless it paid him $2,000, NTB said.

One of Johnson's conditions for the visit was that he not be interviewed. "We won't answer a single question unless we get paid," Johnson's trainer Clyde Duncan told NTB after organizers asked him to arrange a brief press conference Friday.

Salt lake City fails in bid for Olympics

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — Utah's 25-year effort to land the Winter Olympics for its capital city was frustrated again Saturday, bringing a collective groan from the throats of thousands gathered downtown to cheer better news.

As in 1966, when Salt Lake's first Olympic bid fell to a Japanese city, the International Olympic Committee shrugged off a strong U.S. bid in favor of Nagano. Twenty-five years ago, Salt Lake lost to Sapporo.

An estimated 6,000 people on the city hall square watched 16 large-screen video monitors as IOC President Juan Antonio Samaranch announced that one town famed for its guardian temple had smashed the hopes of another known for its Mormon temple.

"We're fair, and respectful competitors and that's marked the way we've done things," said Jim Jardine of Salt Lake's bid committee as he led the crowd in cheers for the victor.

He vowed to try again in four years for the 2002 Games.

Some cried, many stared at the ground and others just shook their heads in disbelief at the news. A few clapped, while others vented expressions of disgust or spouted profanities. A few declined to be interviewed because they were too upset.

"I knew we wouldn't get it, but I felt disappointed anyway," said Salt Laker Patty Adamson.

"We were perfect, except Atlanta had the '96 Summer Games," said her sister, Joni Jones, who works in Utah's multimillion-dollar ski industry.

The disappointment was acute largely because most conceded Salt Lake City's logistical ability to host the Games was greater than any of the other four contenders.

All but a few facilities and all of the necessary infrastructure already are in place, making the likelihood of a bid for the 2002 Games almost a certainty.

However, observers speculated the IOC would be reluctant to select U.S. cities for consecutive Olympic events. And Olympic steeplechaser Henry Marsh said Salt Lake's chances for 1998 may have been harmed by the U.S. Olympic Committee's guarantee it would also be the American candidate for 2002.

The Salt Lake City Winter Games Organizing Committee collected nearly $5 million in private donations to finance the bid. For its part, the state agreed to commit $56 million in state sales taxes to build the ski jumps, bobsled-luge run and speed-skating oval the IOC required of bidders.

"We're in this for the long haul," Jardine said. "There's no doubt in anyone's mind that in 2002 the Olympics will be here."

Midland marks Juneteenth

Beverly Shilling/Reporter-Telegram

Myrtle Hall, 73, stirred the Washington Park crowd Saturday with a fiery speech on expanding the freedoms represented by the Juneteenth holiday.

■ Midland celebration includes parade and barbecue and socializing at Washington Park.

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

Allee Shaw celebrates Juneteenth for the grandmother she never knew.

On Saturday, Mrs. Shaw sat grinning in a folding chair as a queue of colorful floats, decorated vehicles and marchers passed before her on Lamesa Road.

Although the 126th anniversary of the June 19, 1865, emancipation of Texas blacks is Wednesday, more than 1,000 here took part in Saturday's festivities.

The Emancipation Proclamation went into effect Jan. 1, 1863, but more than two years passed before the U.S. Army arrived in Galveston to enforce the order in Texas.

Mrs. Shaw was a baby when her grandmother, an emancipated slave, died. But the 63-year Midland resident still carries the freedom torch in her honor.

"I celebrate for her," said Mrs. Shaw, 74, who was joined at the event by her husband, Raymond, 86. "I'll always want to celebrate the 19th of June."

She was among hundreds of spectators who lined Lamesa from Nobles Avenue to Indiana Avenue to witness the 16th-annual parade, which included 91 entries.

Tony Borens, parade chairman and member of the Tall City Lions Club, which sponsored the event, said parade participation was down from last year, when there were 107 entries.

"The rain last night destroyed five floats," Borens said. "And some people were under the assumption that it was going to rain some more this morning."

But the previous night's weather did not seem to dampen the fervor of the crowd.

Those along the parade route got 20 minutes of streamer-covered floats and vehicles filled with everyone from waving politicians to beauty queens.

Adults sat in lawn chairs or stood along the curbs as their children frantically scrambled for candy tossed by float riders.

The end of the parade route was Washington Park, where more than 1,000 people gathered in a picnic-like atmosphere and extended the celebration well into the night. They ate barbecue, danced, sang, played games and socialized.

It was a proud moment for Wayne Sims, 36, whose infant grandson got his first taste of Juneteenth.

"This celebration is a history that has been carried on in the Afro-American culture," Sims said.

He was flanked by his younger brother, Victor, 28, who said Midland blacks need to strive for unity.

"Blacks, whites and Hispanics all need to support each other and support independence day for blacks," Victor Sims said. "This day is as important as any other national holiday."

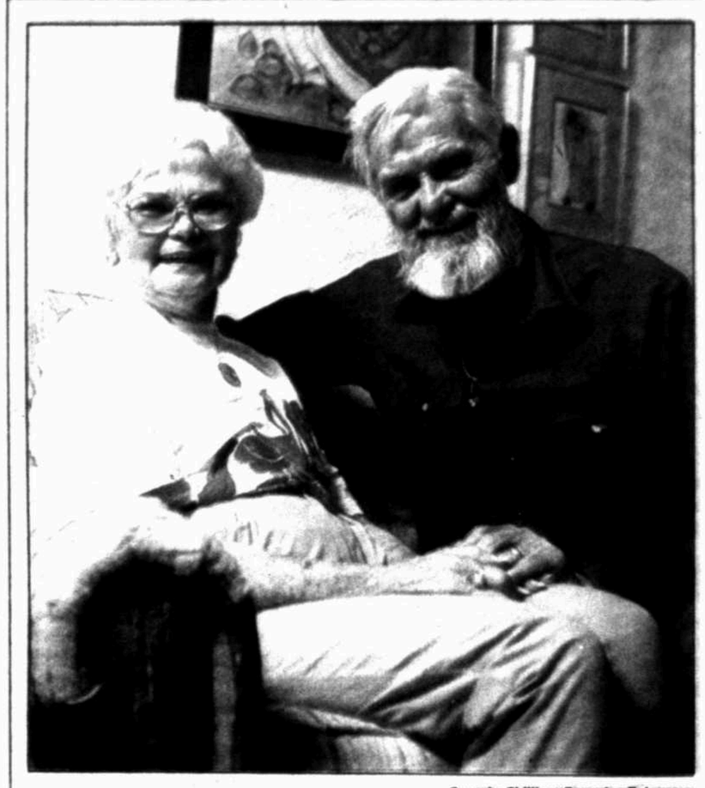

Myrtle Hall, 73, who helped convince the city to build a senior citizens center in southeast Midland, stirred the park crowd with a fiery freedom speech.

"We are showing forth our colors," Ms. Hall told the enthusiastic listeners. "Be a citizen. Be somebody. You deserve more than what you are getting."

She said racial equality in Midland has come far since she came here 35 years ago.

"They didn't give us any paved streets back then or anything," said Ms. Hall, whose grandfather was a slave who came to Texas in 1865. "If you worked as a maid, you had to go in the

Heart transplant recipient thankful for her 'miracle'

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

At age 60, Peggy Adam has the robust heart of a 16-year-old marathoner.

Literally.

For more than a year, Mrs. Adam has been granted a renewed life through the tragic accident that took the life of a 16-year high-school cheerleader and marathoner. Through the medical technology of heart transplants, the effectiveness of anti-rejection drugs and the luck of the draw, she was fortunate enough to be selected as recipient of a youthful heart.

"I was praying to God for a miracle," Mrs. Adam recently said of the time when her own heart was failing her. "But I didn't know how to pray for a miracle or what kind of miracle to pray for."

Early in 1990, Mrs. Adam was certain to die. Her heart had fallen victim to cardiomyopathy — chronic disorder robbing the heart of its resilience.

In the spring of 1990, her death was imminent and, without a heart transplant, was certain. Cardiologists determined that she was a prime candidate for a transplant. She wanted to live. Other than her failing heart, she was in reasonably good health. Through medical insurance and personal funds, she could afford the $500,000 costs of the transplant and attendant expenses.

In May of 1990, she was admitted to Baylor University Medical Center in Dallas in hopes that her prayer would be answered.

About that time, a Dallas-area high-school student was critically injured in a Jeep accident.

"She was a beautiful girl, an outstanding high-school student," said Mrs. Adam's husband, retired engineer Cal Adam. "As a rule, you don't know your donor."

Before her death, the girl and her parents had arranged

MISD teens can call for 'insight'

■ School counselors are manning the phones during the summer to help students with their problems and refer them to support groups.

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Even though school is out for the summer, several school counselors are still just a phone call away.

Adolescent problems like sexual abuse, suicide, pregnancy, grieving the death of a family member, anorexia, drug or alcohol abuse and just a lack of self-esteem require year-round attention.

Because of this, counselors Alex Rose and Trenna Tankersley of the Midland school district's "Insight" program will still take phone calls during the summer from distraught adolescents.

The counselors are on hand to reassure and refer students to support organizations in the months of June through August.

Ms. Rose said students' need for counseling and support groups increased tremendously last year. "I don't think that problems are increasing, it's that students are becoming more aware of problems," she said.

The Insight counselor said more than 1,000 students participated in 108 support groups during the 1990-91 school year.

"We even had a support group for students and family members of persons in Operation Desert Storm," Ms. Rose said.

Ms. Rose said "a strong group" formed when one student experienced the death of a parent. "It was the friends of the student who formed the group to deal with grieving," she said. "Then the friends got the student to join

Culver Youth Home 'all-right place,' resident says

■ Youths age 10 to 16 who break the law will likely spend time at Midland's juvenile detention center.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Matthew spends much of his day lifting weights and watching television.

"There's nothing else to do," said Matthew, whose days have been rather routine the last few months.

The teen-ager gets out of bed about 8 a.m., does his chores, eats breakfast, cleans up, then attends a couple hours of summer school.

Much of the afternoon is recreation time for Matthew, who seldom goes out.

That's because he can't — unless someone from Culver Youth Home, where Matthew currently resides, takes him out.

Nevertheless, Matthew — not his real name — said the juvenile detention center, his home for the next couple of months, is "an all-right place."

Once out though, Matthew said he doesn't plan on coming back.

Matthew was sent to Culver for burglary of a business, discharging firearms within city limits and assaulting a police officer.

He and a friend, armed with 22-caliber guns, were shooting at a sign outside a Midland convenience store late one night.

"We were getting target practice. We were pretty intoxicated at the time," Matthew said.

Some of the shots missed the sign and went into the store — where a Midland police officer happened to be, Matthew said.

Police apprehended Matthew a few days later after a friend turned him in. A judge sentenced him to six months in Culver and a year probation.

"Sometimes I think 'What if one of those bullets were to hit someone, to kill someone.' It's pretty scary," he said.

At the time though, Matthew said his thoughts were just on having fun.

"If people thought what would happen if they got caught, they wouldn't do it to start with," he said.

"I thought it would never happen to me. I thought I would never get caught. I thought I was too slick," Matthew said.

Matthew, who speculated that youngsters get into trouble from trying to "be cool, to fit in," remarked that if he hadn't been placed in Culver he would "probably be out drinking, getting into a fight, being delinquent."

Although Matthew said someone coming out of a juvenile home has about a 50-50 chance of getting into trouble again, his plans are to stay clear of Culver when his time is served — despite peer pressure that may try to steer him otherwise.

"I can't say what will happen then but I hope I make the right choice," said Matthew, who plans to find a job upon his release.

Matthew said his decision to stay out of trouble was reached with the help of twice-a-week counseling at Culver.

But whether Matthew gets into trouble after his release has yet to be seen.

Chuck McDaniel, director of detention services, said various factors play into what direction a ju-

Assertiveness attractive trait to some women

When I saw the headline in a national magazine the other day it didn't exactly blow me away. After all, I'd heard the message a hundred times before.

But there it was one more time.

It said:

"Americans: A need to be more assertive."

Ott

Like always, I read the article. It was predictable. People, at least the ones quoted in this particular story, believe they consistently get taken advantage of because they are reluctant to speak their minds.

One New Jersey man — a guy named Lawrence Filmore — expressed it this way. "A lot of times I want to put my fist through the wall. I want to express anger, but I can't. Instead, I just sit back and say nothing. As a result, no one knows how I really feel."

Surely you can relate to that. We've all been guilty of witnessing a dastardly injustice and saying nothing about it. Either we don't want to step on toes or we figure, what the heck, just ignore the whole thing and maybe it will go away. Why create a scene, we tell ourselves. It won't accomplish anything. It certainly won't right the wrong. In fact, more times than not, we just end up embarrassing ourselves.

"Did you see how childish Norman behaved the other night?" friends ask one another. "Why does he do that, anyway? It's so embarrassing."

And everyone nods in agreement.

So we do nothing.

But is that the correct course of action? Many so-called experts in the field say "no." One such person was quoted in the magazine article. She was a professor of some kind at a fancy New England university and she said, "People must be willing to express their true feelings. It comes with self-confidence. Most of us possess nagging frustrations that have built up over the years. A part of us wants to express those emotions; the other part is afraid to. We worry about how we will be perceived. So, rather than risk being embarrassed, we say nothing. That's unhealthy. If you're angry do something about it."

Like I said, the article was old hat. We've heard it all before and the message is always the same: Express yourself. You'll feel better.

And, like always, my response is the same: Maybe so, but I still don't want to hurt anybody's feelings.

So I keep those feelings bottled up. After all, there's no need to intentionally offend anyone.

However, this particular article had a unique twist. It said, "Women preferred men who are aggressive and willing to take command of a situation."

Say what?

Why can't women get their act together? For years, we were told they wanted someone who was sensitive and supportive of their independence. Sort of an Alan Alda-type. A man who was not threatened by his female companion. A man who was willing to remain in the background and be thrilled at the woman's competence and accomplishments. If another man got out of line with her, she could handle the situation herself. She didn't need "her man" leaping to her defense. If anything, we were expected to remain on the sidelines with our mouths closed.

Frankly, some of us thought that was a rather wimpy way for the man to behave, but, hey, if that's what the woman wanted, so be it.

Now, we find out that was all wrong.

What the woman really wanted was Rambo, a tough guy who could kick a little tail from time to time.

"I don't necessarily want a man who is prone to violence," said Terri Lynn Montgomery, a 31-year-old Florida housewife and mother of three. "But, by the same token, I don't want some wallflower, either. Men should be forceful. If they see an injustice they should do something about it. I find aggressive behavior to be very appealing. That kind of man has raw sex appeal."

Good grief. No wonder professional wrestling is so popular today. Blood and guts have made a comeback.

There's an important message here, men. If someone does something you don't like, beat the you-know-what out of 'em. Be rough. Be tough. Be mean. Women will adore you.

Whoever said, "The meek shall inherit the earth" obviously didn't know today's woman.

Just ask Terri Lynn Montgomery.

CULVER: Most youths there for short time

(From 1C)

venile may go after leaving a youth home.

"Any court-ordered kid will be reluctant for a program like this ... and if he makes it a positive experience, he still has to return to the real world and the real world is going to present a whole lot of challenges," McDaniel said.

When a youngster first arrives at Culver, he comes because he has broken the law. "If adults did the same thing they would be put in jail," McDaniel said.

From January through May, 428 youngsters had been brought to the home — up from 337 during the same period last year.

They are brought in for all types of offenses from public intoxication to family violence to criminal mischief to violation of probation, on misdemeanors and on felonies.

No particular offenses are more common than others, McDaniel said.

Although the home accepts both boys and girls from 10 to 16 years old (and those on probation up to their 17th birthday), the majority are boys between between 13 and 16. Most are white.

Youngsters may be detained at Culver for up to 10 days as well as subsequently sentenced to serve from six months to a year there. But most youths referred to the home are there for less than 24 hours, McDaniel said.

Culver has a capacity to house 20. Last week, seven youths — two detainees and five long-term residents — were there. The number housed can change at any time though, McDaniel said.

"We try to treat these kids as humans. Treat them like criminals and that's the way they will act," McDaniel said.

"I treat them as if they are the person they are capable of becoming," he said.

Although youngsters at Culver receive treatment, it may not be enough, McDaniel said.

"We can't hope to do much in a short time we see them here," he said.

"We try to get them to be responsible ... We try to get them to rationalize. Before this they didn't make decisions, they just did things because it was fun," McDaniel said.

Ultimately, each youth must decide for himself whether he will change, McDaniel said. But for those who want to change, resources need to be available for them, he added.

"And if change comes from within, we are limited," he said.

"You get a kid in a program like this and he is dysfunctional and nothing is changing in his environment except here. What happens when he leaves with some self-worth gained here? He'll be right back where he started from," McDaniel said.

As a result, McDaniel said more affordable community services are needed to provide educational resources and treatment to youngsters as well as their families.

Match made at hamburger stand

By Hollace Weiner

FORT WORTH (AP) — When Leonid Belenki, a Russian tourist, met Tilde Jones at a west Fort Worth hamburger stand about a month ago, it was love at first bite.

Though Leonid spoke little English, and Tilde no Russian, they made eye contact over iced tea and Tilde felt destiny at work — two fortunetellers previously had told her she would fall in love with a traveler from afar.

Within minutes of finishing her cheeseburger, she invited Belenki to her home for an evening in front of the television.

The international relationship flowered.

Recently, the fortysomething couple were married at the home of Leonid's cousins, Victor and Fira Shturman, the owners of C&C Burgers, the hamburger joint where the newlyweds met.

Twenty-six friends and relatives attended the living-room ceremony performed by the Rev. Paul John Roach, minister at Unity Church of Fort Worth.

Roach was the only clergy person they could find to marry them. Roach, a Briton with a crisp Welsh accent, said he generally recommends counseling to gauge a couple's commitment. But if people are in a hurry, he prefers a religious to a civil ceremony.

Newlyweds Tilde and Leonid Belenki met at a Fort Worth hamburger stand and will honeymoon in Leningrad.

"If they can get some spiritual insight there at the beginning of their marriage, it can often be beneficial," he said.

Explaining her matrimonial haste, the new Mrs. Belenki said that until she and Leonid were wed, he could not apply for a green card — which confers legal alien status and permits him to work on American soil.

"We have to put this man to work," Tilde explained. "He was telling me yesterday, 'Time is money.' I guess they have the same idioms in Russia."

Leonid, whose twinkling eyes and accent are reminiscent of Robin Williams' performance in "Moscow on the Hudson," is a civil engineer specializing in water projects. In the Soviet Union, he worked on dams and dikes and patented devices for diverting the courses of rivers and trapping fish while draining reservoirs.

Tilde, a paralegal for attorney Richard Tucker at the firm of Simon Anisman Doby Wilson & Skillern, is using her know-how to speed the paperwork through the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service. She said the process takes two to four months for foreigners who marry Americans.

When Tilde reports for work downtown, she drops Leonid at the public library where he studies English with the help of dictionaries and tapes in the audiovisual room.

"When we met, we used the dictionary a lot," said Tilde, who has three children from two prior marriages. "We very seldom use the dictionary any more."

Leonid says he's also studying the "Texas dialect." He's currently translating the Texas Drivers Handbook, so he can take his test and comprehend what it means to "Drive Friendly."

The couple are postponing their honeymoon until fall, when they plan a trip to Leningrad so Leonid can supplement the belongings in his suitcase, which he initially packed for a six-week trip.

HEART: Midland woman had transplant year ago

for her heart to be transplanted into another upon her death.

"Oh, my God, my miracle is going to be!" an ailing Mrs. Adam had sensed when she learned that a heart had become available for her.

Otherwise, she had but a week to live.

After the transplant in Dallas on the eve of Mother's Day in May 1990, cardiologists said "her heart came out looking like a piece of hamburger," noted her husband.

A year after the transplant, Mrs. Adam is building up her strength. She is taking care of her youthful heart through exercise and healthful eating habits.

It "has kept me alive for over a year," Mrs. Adam said. "And I wouldn't mistreat my heart.

"Anybody so sweet and understanding who would give her heart so another could live has to be in heaven," Mrs. Adam said. "I'm so pleased and happy. It's hard for me to be sad. I prayed for my heart, and I received it."

Mrs. Adam expressed gratitude for her "supportive spouse" of 12 years. They met in Big Spring, got married in 1979 in San Angleo, and moved to Midland.

"I don't know what I would have done without him," she said. "He would bring a smile to my face and make me want to live."

Adam, 66, had been widowed, and she had been divorced.

After they met, "We could see good in each other," he said. "That was intuitive. Somehow or another, we had sensed what the other had gone through, and we drew closer together."

And even as her heart condition worsened, Mrs. Adam said that her husband, whom she calls Adam, "suffered with me."

Today, all seems well.

"My heart is strong and healthy and good," Mrs. Adam said. "Adam has a second chance at marriage and love, and I have a second chance at life."

Rapist convicted with help of flier made by victim

HOUSTON (AP) — A rapist received the maximum 99 years in prison, bringing a sigh of relief from the victim who had distributed thousands of fliers depicting a composite police sketch and the words, "This man is a RAPIST."

"Justice has been done. This is it," the 40-year-old victim said through tears Friday after Damon Lee Wood was sentenced.

His mother, Paula Sue Wood, had turned in her 20-year-old son after she saw one of the fliers distributed in the neighborhood. She testified that her son suffered from mental problems.

Jurors in State District Judge Jay Burnett's convicted Wood after 40 minutes of deliberations Friday. Burnett imposed the sentence that will keep Wood behind bars at least until 2005.

The victim told jurors she awakened on her sofa June 6, 1990, with Wood's hand over her mouth and a knife being waved in front of her face. She said Wood raped her and looted her apartment of jewelry.

Wood, a part-time maintenance man, lived only a block away.

Prosecutor Joe Owmby and police investigator Rusty Gallier said the case might have gone unsolved if Wood had simply left the woman alone.

Instead, the victim said, he came back and, using a grease pencil, wrote a derogatory message on her car's windshield. It concluded, "You snitched me off, but I still love you."

The victim, realizing her attacker probably lived nearby, started her own campaign for his arrest.

Using the same composite sketch she'd helped police make, the victim had 3,000 fliers printed. Reading in one-inch letters, "This man is a RAPIST," the fliers gave a highly detailed description of the assailant.

One of the fliers was put up at the apartments where he lived.

"Damon, that looks like you," the defendant's stepfather, Glenn Underwood, remarked on seeing it.

"It is me, but I didn't rape her," Damon reportedly replied.

them. Dealing with death is a big responsibility, but it is essential."

Both Ms. Rose and Ms. Tankersley also are Rape Crisis volunteers.

"Sexual abuse is a hidden topic," Ms. Tankersley said. "Students feel much freer to talk about the issue in a group of their peers.

"There are so many things teenagers today are dealing with. Many students have to deal with the pressures and adjustments of having a single parent," Ms. Tankersley said.

Ms. Tankersley said the confidentiality of support groups gives students "a safe place" to talk about concerns that they would be afraid to discuss with their friends outside the group.

Ms. Rose said support groups are effective because the students "make a commitment to each other."

"They make a commitment to themselves and to each other to work on their problems and come back the next week. A bond is established," she said. "There is a better chance that they will work on their problems when they have to report back to a group of peers."

The counselor said it's evident a support group is succeeding when "students open up, just start talking and tell everything they need to tell."

Ms. Rose said she would like to see two counselors added to the program next year if school district budget constraints allow.

The counselors said students need to call for help. "They have to realize there is a problem," Ms. Rose said. "If they don't get in touch with their emotions and they can't feel good about themselves, then that is usually when they will turn to drugs or alcohol."

Students or parents may call the counselors at 689-1595 or 689-1081 during the months of June through August.

Fort Worth resident jailed on drug possession charge

Staff Report

A Fort Worth man remained in jail Saturday following his arrest in connection with the seizure of a large amount of a substance believed to be crack cocaine, sheriff's records show.

Jimmy Christopher Sherman, 24, of Fort Worth was charged with possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver following his Friday arrest, reports state.

Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe set the bond at $50,000.

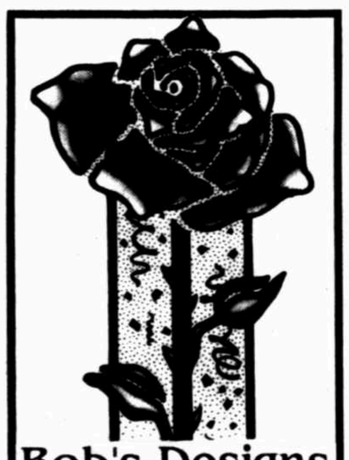

Midland County Sheriff's Office deputies stopped Sherman about 10:10 p.m. as he was driving his 1984 Datsun near the intersection of Tyler Street and Chestnut Avenue, reports show.

After searching the vehicle, reports state that deputies found a substance believed to be crack, valued at $3,000, and $2,000 in cash.

Sherman, who was transported to the Midland County Detention Center, was alone at the time, records show.

Farmers running out of time

By Chip Brown

LUBBOCK (AP) — Cotton farmers on the South Plains don't know what kind of weather to wish for anymore.

Two weeks ago, parched dryland cotton fields across the South Plains were in desperate need of a quenching rain. More than a million of the 3.5 million acres of cotton, normally planted by May 20, had yet to go into the ground due to lack of moisture.

Each passing day without rain crippled the chances of a strong yield in the 25-county area surrounding Lubbock, which produces a quarter of the nation's cotton.

Out of desperation, farmers began planting their crops in dry soil with the hope that a downpour would germinate the seed.

'It's been an absolutely crazy spring. The farmers are...wondering what next.'

— Don Johnson, Plains Cotton Growers

On June 5, rains arrived along with 70 mph winds, hail and a wall of sand that shredded promising young cotton sprouts and drove fresh seeds deep into the ground, well below normal growth levels.

Showers and gusting winds over the past 10 days have also drowned some of the 1.6 million acres of irrigated cotton, causing a breakout of seedling disease, according to the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

"It's been an absolutely crazy spring," said Don Johnson, executive vice president of Plains Cotton Growers, Inc., in Lubbock. "The farmers are standing back right now and wondering what next."

U.S. Rep. Larry Combest told Lubbock civic leaders Friday he hoped a farm disaster bill he is cosponsoring would not have to be used.

"We are under tremendous budget constraints," Combest told the Lubbock Chamber of Commerce. "And for there to be any benefits awarded, there would have to be a natural disaster that affects the rest of the country."

While recent moisture across West Texas will ultimately help dryland farmers who are attempting to replant, time is running out.

"It's a rare situation to see anyone in the area plant cotton after the 25th of June," Johnson said. "The growth period simply becomes too short."

Because extreme weather either destroyed or delayed early plantings, farmers are now replanting with a faster maturing seed which tends to produce a smaller yield.

Government agencies administering crop insurance programs have pushed back planting deadlines to help farmers.

Cotton growers without enough rain to replant their crop, are likely to plant blackeyed peas, milo or feed grains. Those crops tend to hold up better in extreme weather, although their prices are not as good, Johnson said.

Before the rains came, experts predicted the South Plains stood to lose more than a million acres of cotton, which translated into a loss of $500 million.

Experts have retreated from those damage estimates and now say the future is up to nature.

Farmers have only to look back a year ago to know the fate of a crop can swing in a matter of hours.

After three weeks of 100-plus degree temperatures in June with no moisture, the South Plains cotton crop appeared headed for record losses. But a late splash of rain brought the fields to life and helped produce one of the best yields in the last decade.

back door. They wouldn't let you use the front door.

"Midland has come a long way since then. But we're still striving to do better. We need to achieve. We have to fight for more things."

Mark Hall, Tall City Lions Club president, gave the audience a history of black freedom.

"Emancipation is a great time for all the blacks," Hall said. "It's one holiday we get a chance to rejoice."

The freedom message appeared to have permeated to black children, who attended Saturday's celebration by the hundreds.

"There are special feelings about this day. It's almost like church," said Kevin Pittman, 11, a Crockett Elementary School sixth-grader. "It means a lot of people getting together, enjoying their lives and being happy."

Crockett third-grader Lamar Hickey, 8, echoed Kevin's insight into the purpose behind the celebration.

"I came out here to celebrate when we were freed," Lamar said. "Now we don't have to be bossed by no other persons."

Hospital wants to release disabled officer

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Cost-cutting measures at Ben Taub Hospital may cost disabled former Houston policeman Cecil McWhorter the hospital care he's required since 1952.

McWhorter, 66, suffered permanent brain damage, partial paralysis and impaired sight, hearing and speech when his patrol car smashed into a guy wire on a telephone pole 39 years ago en route to investigate a burglary.

He was in a coma for 2½ years and has lived in three hospitals since the accident, most recently at Ben Taub, receiving daily care at taxpayer expense.

Matt Perales, an official with the Houston Police Department's Family Assistance Unit, said he has been told that hospital district officials would like to move McWhorter from Ben Taub as early as this weekend.

"The family, of course, is concerned because his spouse is unable to take care of him," Perales said. "(McWhorter's daughter) sent a letter to the administrator of the hospital district complaining that these people are trying to throw her father out.

"She felt that it was the legal responsibility of the city and county to take care of him for the rest of his life."

McWhorter's pension falls far short of the cost of placing him in a nursing home — as has been suggested by hospital district officials, Perales said. The city at first partially paid McWhorter's bills, but the hospital district assumed the cost after it was formed in 1965.

A county official familiar with the case told the Houston Chronicle that hospital district officials want to eject McWhorter because the district has not been reimbursed by the city or McWhorter's family.

"This is a politically distasteful thing to do — not to mention morally distasteful — but Mr. McWhorter would be better off in a nursing home," said the official.

Hospital district President Lois Moore last month recommended redirecting 15-20 long-term patients into nursing homes. She made the recommendation after the district failed to obtain county commissioners' approval of a 6-cent tax increase.

District spokesman Roger Widmeyer said it costs an average of $844 per day to care for the patients. He insisted, however, that "we are not going to move any patient out of Ben Taub without family and patient agreement."

This is not the first time the hospital district has attempted to remove McWhorter. In 1972, then-district board Chairman Quentin Mease wrote county commissioners that physicians could no longer treat the former officer.

Mease said McWhorter should be removed from Jefferson Davis Hospital, where he was living at the time, "as a simple matter of space."

Texas guard unit handled troop payroll

AUSTIN (AP) — There were no Purple Hearts for paper cuts.

But the 49th Finance Company of the Texas National Guard stood tall in a ceremony marking its return from Fort Sill, Okla., where it handled payroll for military personnel in the Persian Gulf effort.

The 80 men and women of the company, most from the Austin and San Antonio areas, were honored in Friday's ceremony at Camp Mabry.

The company was the last unit of any size from the Texas guard to be demobilized from active duty in connection with the operation, Lt. Col. Ed Komandosky told the Austin American-Statesman.

Parts of units and individuals still are on active duty, but "only a handful," said Komandosky, a guard spokesman.

The 49th Finance Company was mobilized on Jan. 22, part of the 2,200 guardsmen called to active duty for Operation Desert Storm.

The unit was ordered to Fort Sill to replace a regular Army finance company that had been dispatched to Saudi Arabia.

Lt. Col. Harold Flammia said the unit arrived at Fort Sill to find "a tremendous backlog of pay problems." The unit reports to Flammia, who is a San Antonio police officer when he's not overseeing the guard's books.

Flammia said the unit "went in, tackled that backlog, caught them up, and saw that all the troops were paid on time and handled all the problems that had arisen."

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Aviation Technology course likely to start in fall

By H.A. Tuck

An Aviation Technology program is coming very close to fruition now, in anticipation of a fall starting time for the first program's students

Tuck

Administrators have been reviewing applicants for the program director's post and for instructors. Unless there's a massive hitch, the program will begin training students for eventual certification by the Federal Aviation Administration for Airframe and Powerplant maintenance employment.

It's anticipated that the technical instruction will take place at Midland International Air Terminal. Other required classes will be taught on the MC campus.

Prospective students may obtain a brochure about the program at the Student Services office in the Student Center. Registration for fall classes doesn't start for a few weeks.

Early counseling and issuance of time permits for Summer Session II registration begins Monday, June 24. Testing and advising for first-time students is scheduled on July 9, registration is July 10, classes start July 11 and end Aug. 15.

The first of two sessions of Kids' College at Midland College begins Monday. It's fun to see all the youngsters, from first to sixth grade, as they experience being on a college campus for learning situations. The first couple of days it takes lots of helpers to make sure none of them get lost; after that, they become old hands and very self-assured.

While classes for this session are full, there are a few openings for the second session of Kids' College, which is slated July 15-25. The classes meet in the afternoons Monday through Thursday.

You may call 685-4519 for information about class openings for the second session ... but please wait until Tuesday to call. The staff has all it can handle on Monday getting the first session started.

What a spring for Chaparral sports! For the three sports which just concluded their championships, Midland College garnered a national championship in women's tennis, a runner-up in men's golf, and a third place in men's tennis. The golf tournament was hosted by Midland College with great assistance from The Club at Mission Dorado and Green Tree Country Club. A tournament of this size provides substantial economic impact as hundreds of players, plus coaches, parents, and fans spent about six days in the community counting two days of practice.

And once more we must thank the many volunteers from the two clubs, their staffs, their members, the Chap Booster Club, MC golf coach/athletic director Denor Poss, Chap Center Director/volunteer assistant coach Mike Stevens, and athletic secretary Karen Milliken for putting it all together.

Since the three divisions won't be playing in the same locale in 1992, this may have been the end of an era. Division I is holding its championship next spring in Scottsdale, Ariz.

If you don't want to commit much time, one of the three Continuing Education courses starting this week might be for you. Lucy Nye is teaching "Accessorizing Your Home" on Monday from 6:30-9 p.m. for $6.

"Infant and Child CPR" is being taught Monday and Tuesday from 6-10 p.m. by Steve Forbes. The fee is $25. "Time Management", taught by Ray Kendall, is scheduled Monday from 6:30-9 p.m.

You should register for any of these on Monday morning in the Continuing Education Office, Administration Building. You may call 685-4518 for more information.

Scores of other classes start later in the summer. A course bulletin which is available in the Continuing Education Department tells about them. Get a copy and register to assure an intereresting summer.

EDUCATION IN BRIEF

■ Schools close down

Any individuals who attended the now-defunct Professional Career Centers in Houston, Dallas or Austin and were unable to complete their training may be entitled to a tuition refund.

The schools' parent company is involved in bankruptcy proceedings in California, according to information from the Texas Education Agency.

The schools closed September 1990.

Individuals who were prevented from completing their training at the schools must file a proof of claim or interest with the bankruptcy court no later than July 1.

The claims should be sent to the Clerk, U.S. Bankruptcy Court, Room 506, Federal Building, 34 Civic Center Plaza, Santa Ana, Calif., 92701. Reference should be made to bankruptcy case numbers SA 90-04460-JR and SA 90-07009-JR.

An additional copy of the claim should be sent to Joy Fallon, Allied Education Corporation, 4041 MacArthur Blvd., Suite 210, Newport Beach, Calif., 92660.

Persons filing claims may also write to the TEA's Division of Proprietary Schools and Veterans Education, 1701 N. Congress Ave., Austin, 78701-1494, to request that they be included in any claim filed against the schools' bonds.

■ DPS requires proof

Any student wishing to take Driver Education during the summer months will have to have a "proof of enrollment" for attendance. The proof of enrollment is a Department of Public Safety requirement by state law.

Midland and Lee high schools will be able to handle this request during the months of June and August. The proofs of enrollments are good all summer or until Aug. 27, 1991. The schools will be closed during the month of July.

■ Geologist honored

George Gibson, an alumni of the University of Minnesota, received the Outstanding Achievement Award from the UM Board of Regents recently. Gibson was honored as a petroleum geologist who participated in the discovery of some of the world's most productive oil and gas fields.

Midland College student Luis Ceniceros, center, inspects the electronic system on a new pickup truck. The truck was donated to the college's automotive department by General Motors, courtesy of Jack Sherman Chevrolet. MC instructor Jerry Preas, left, — and other students from left, Steve Fiedler, David Perez and Raymundo Rayos — look on.

The award recognizes exceptional achievement in a professional field. Gibson is an honorary member of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists, a fellow of the Geological Society of America and founder and former president of the Society of Independent Professional Earth Scientists.

■ Region 18 sets forum

Region 18 Education Service center will have an open meeting for staff members of private/private nonprofit schools 10 a.m.-noon Monday.

The forum will focus on 11 regional projects. The forum is free of charge and open to any interested persons. It will be presented at the center, 2811 LaForce Blvd., located near Midland International Airport. For more information call 563-2380.

■ Honor roll announced

Trinity School's upper school students named to the high honor roll are senior Peggy Coffey, sophomore Nicki Holloway, freshman Stuart Busby, Premi Singh and Kristyn Stone.

Middle school students who earned high honors are eighth grader Lucia Lea Crump, seventh graders Matthew Dickman, Patrick Durham, Scott Macicek and Stephanie Park; sixth graders Margaret Ann Brown, John Driscoll, Niraj Khandelwal, Sharmi Singh, Astrid Suchy-Dicey, Kim West, Thomas Williams and Cathleen Wright.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

■ Storytelling scheduled

Old-fashioned storytelling for youngsters 4-to-8 years old will be conducted for the next two Wednesdays at 10:30 a.m. by the West Texas Storytellers Guild at Pages and Prints Bookstore, 40 Plaza Center.

The storytellers will be doing a variety of folk tales and almost-forgotten stories in the old-fashioned storytelling tradition — unlike the reading of a story.

"The oral tradition of passing along our history and culture to the young in the form of storytelling is enjoying a real revival and our storytellers are delighted to share this art form with the young readers at Pages and Prints and to have the opportunity to let more people know about our organization," said Annalon Gilbreath, president of the Guild.

Ms. Gilbreath will be the storyteller this Wednesday. On Wednesday, June 26, Debbie Waddell will be the storyteller.

Reservations for the storytelling are $2 and may be made at the bookstore. For additional information, call 687-5172.

■ Shriners' go-carts win

The Suez Ala Kart Patrol, a group of four Midlanders and their go-carts, took first place honors in the recent Texas Shrine Motor Patrol Association (TSMPA) competition in San Antonio.

The men team consisted of Gary Anderson, Jerry Kubicki, Robert O'Donnell and Oran Williams.

A team from Dallas finished second, while teams from Amarillo and San Antonio took third and fourth places, respectively.

The competition consists of inspection of uniform and machines, as well as driving precision and alignment manuevers on a 100-foot square pad.

This is the first TSMPA state championship for the Midland Shrine Club. Previously, the local team had finished as high as second and third in the state competition.

The unit has 20 members and eight carts. Members often participate in local parades.

■ Road work ongoing

Several highways that run through Midland currently are under seal-coat application, according to the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation.

Andrews Highway, from Loop 250 to U.S. Highway 80, is receiving a new surface. One lane in each direction will be open to traffic at all times. The resurfacing is expected to be completed on Tuesday.

Beginning on Wednesday, U.S. 80 will be under construction from the intersection of West Wall Street to the intersection of East Wall. It also will receive a new surface. One lane will be open to traffic at all times. It is expected to be completed on Friday.

Drivers are urged to use caution while driving through these areas. If possible, the two streets should be avoided altogether, highway officials said. However, all lanes will be open to traffic at night.

The resurfacing, or seal coating, project is part of a districtwide contract. Jones Brothers Inc., of Odessa, is the contractor.

■ Ledbetter benefit set

The Brothers in Christ Quartet will have a benefit concert at 7 p.m. June 22 for 3-year-old Dusty Ledbetter, who is in need of a hernia operation.

The benefit concert will be held at Wilshire Park Baptist Church.

Persons wanting to make a donation should mail it to: Dusty Ledbetter Benefit, c/o Brothers in Christ, 3001 N. Big Spring, No. 101, Midland, 79705.

For additional information, call 686-8638.

Soviet film to premiere at Austin theater

AUSTIN (AP) — Austin will be the site of the world premiere of the Soviet film "Hotel Eden" on Wednesday, the Texas Film Commission said Saturday.

The film is the first theatrical release from the recently established Soviet film production entity, Art Man Studio. "Hotel Eden" is the most recent work of the Russian director and Art Man founder, Vladimir Lubomudrov.

"We are honored that he (Lubomudrov) has chosen the world premier of 'Hotel Eden' in our state, providing Texans with this unique cinematic opportunity," said film commissioner director Tom Copeland.

A joint U.S.-Soviet business venture created Art Man-Texas, with partners Craig Calvert and Dr. James R. Brand of Austin.

Crime Stoppers seeking home burglary information

This week Odessa Crime Stoppers is seeking information that could help solve a burglary of a habitation that occurred about a half-mile west of Loop 1936.

On May 10, at about 11:55 p.m., Ector County sheriff's deputies were dispatched to No. 18 West Fork Road in response to a burglary.

On arrival, deputies met with the owner, who said someone had entered the home through a window. An investigation revealed that the perpetrator had gone through all the rooms in the house taking several handguns, a rifle, jewelry and U.S. currency. The burglar then left the house in the victim's vehicle heading in an unknown direction.

If anyone is the first caller with information that leads to the arrest and indictment of those involved in this crime, it could be worth up to $1,000 in cash this week only. Call Crime Stoppers in Odessa at 333-TIPS or in Midland at 694-TIPS.

Hunting, fishing trips bring memories of father

By Paul Fortney Jr.

PORT LAVACA (AP) — Sitting in a duck blind on a cold morning with pintails cupping wings to land, flushing woodcocks in East Texas, grouse bursting across hollows in North Carolina, unwinding in La Cucaracha after an afternoon of shooting whitewings near McAllen, jumping speckled trout under the birds on Trinity Bay, the boudain at Paco's in Rayne, Louisiana, poker games at Smith Point and at the deer lease in Grimes County — these are my fondest memories of my dad.

There are also those memories of working cattle, shearing sheep, cutting fence lines through the thickets under the pine forests of Polk County, hot summers in hay fields and vegetable gardens that made the prospect of going back to school in the fall seem like a vacation.

My father was a physician by profession who practiced medicine for over 50 years in Beaumont minus time out for service in the Army, but his real vocations were shooting birds and catching fish. He considered working on his farm a holiday and thought his kids should feel likewise.

Despite a busy medical practice, he always found time to take his four sons hunting and fishing along with any other boys who wanted to go (one of whom had remained one of my closest friends). He encouraged us to spend weekends camping (without any adults) in the marshes along the lower Neches River and Sabine Lake. But he seldom made a trip involving the outdoors without at least one of his four sons.

He taught us you could have a successful hunting or fishing trip without killing or catching anything. Just being in the woods or fields or on the water was enough. His basic rule of hunting was "if you aren't going to eat it, don't shoot it."

Paul Nowlin Fortney Sr. was born in Bebe, Arkansas in 1910. His family moved to Port Neches when he was still a child. He graduated from Port Neches High School, did his pre-med at Ouachita College in Arkansas and graduated from Baylor Medical School in 1933. He interned at Hotel Dieu Hospital Beaumont, joined the Army where he spent three years providing medical care to the Civilian Conservation Corps in various East Texas camps, returned to Beaumont as company physician with Magnolia Petroleum Company (how many of you remember the Flying Red Horse), was recalled to active duty in 1940 and spent the war at various Army hospitals from Fort Bliss to Carlisle, Pa., to Port Aransas to Galveston.

"Doc" Fortney returned to Beaumont and went into private practice. He bought the first tract of the Polk County farm in 1946, 10 years before the REA brought electricity to Blue Water Settlement.

Over the next 30 years he practiced internal medicine, built a successful timber and cattle operation, helped build a struggling new church, became a managing partner in a millwork plant and two cabinet shops while being a father to four very different sons.

He introduced me to politics in 1948 when he was working hard to send Coke Stevenson to the United States Senate. That campaign provided me with an opinion of Lyndon Johnson and John Connally that I still haven't changed.

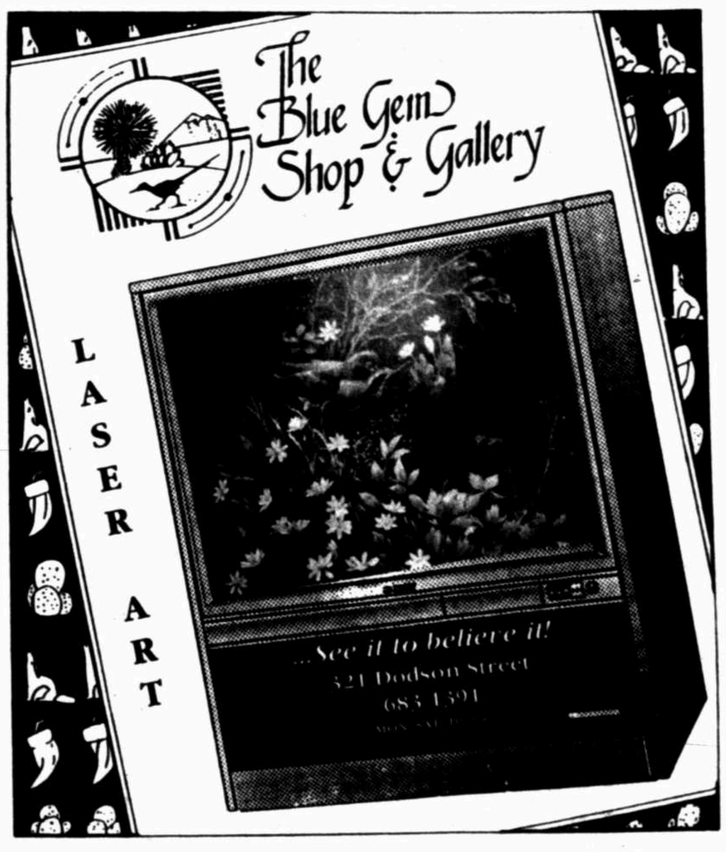

Those early impressions of Gov. Stevenson, Allan Shivers and William Blakely are the source of the political opinions I still hold dear and I still use Coke Stevenson as my standard of ethics for politicians.

Dad closed his clinic in 1976 (he was still making house calls) and became the county health officer for Jefferson County. He retired from his clinic in 1987, planning to spend the rest of his life catching fish and shooting birds. He made his last trip to Port O'Connor in May of 1988 to purchase a house and catch some fish.

Dad had a stroke in June of that year and died in August. I am now living in that house.

He's been gone nearly three years, but every time I wet a hook, set out decoys, draw a bead on a dove, or just watch the sun the dew from a hayfield in the Piney Woods, I remember Dad.

Cuomo has challenge for those who think he's over the hill

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Gov. Mario Cuomo, who turned 59 on Saturday, has a challenge for anyone who suggests he's over the hill.

Cuomo

"Want to play basketball?"

Asked Friday how it felt to be fast approaching 60, Cuomo shot back that he can still run the basketball court.

Cuomo, viewed by many as a potential 1992 Democratic presidential contender, is a regular on courts around Albany and has a reputation for aggressive play.

Aides said the governor planned to celebrate his birthday privately in New York City, his hometown.

WASHINGTON (AP) — It was Dallas on the Potomac as J.R. Ewing took on the politicians at the Texas Festival Ball on Washington Mall.

Hagman

Actor Larry Hagman, who played J.R. Ewing on the long-running television series "Dallas," was decked out in a white 10-gallon hat and black leather vest with a map of Texas on the back for Friday's evening of barbecued beef and chili.

The event was part of the Kennedy Center's tribute to the Lone Star state.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, was attired in jeans, bandanna, leather vest and crumpled cowboy hat.

Georgette Mosbacher, wife of Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher, showed there's more to Texas than cowgirls by arriving in a beaded Indian dress.

Limousines were the preferred mode of transportation, but park police on horseback added another Texas touch to the capital's streets.

DEDHAM, Mass. (AP) — He's officially known as Uncle Sam around here, but Uncle Sam Rounseville isn't stopping there.

After a probate court judge approved his name change, the former LeRoy Lincoln Rounseville said he's going to ask Congress to recognize his status as Uncle Sam.

Rounseville was dressed in the traditional red, white and blue suit and top hat Friday as Norfolk Probate Court Judge B. Joseph Fitzsimmons approved the name change.

"It's like Miracle on 34th Street. You know, Santa Claus," said a thrilled Rounseville.

The 51-year-old fabric salesman said the country needs an Uncle Sam every day of the year.

"That's what I intend to do, promote the spirit of America every day," he said.

FORT PAYNE, Ala. (AP) — The country group Alabama held its 10th annual June Jam charity concert Saturday, calling on some of its big-name friends to dig deep for schools and community organizations in northeast Alabama.

The all-day concert was held behind Fort Payne High School, which band members Randy Owen, Teddy Gentry and Jeff Cook attended.

Proceeds benefit the high school, along with libraries and service groups.

This year's bill included country performers Clint Black, Garth Brooks, Ricky Van Shelton, Vince Gill and Baillie and the Boys. Alabama, honored as country music's "Artist of the Decade" in the '80s, was the headline act.

Personally Speaking

FEMALE PERSONAL ADS
The following ads have been placed by females looking to meet males

I know there is a man out there looking for some fun and companionship. He must be in early to mid 30s, no smokers or drug users. Financially secure and take care of himself. He must like kids and enjoy going to movies, out to eat, or just spending time with someone special. I am a petite, divorced, single parent and tired of the bar and club scene. I own my own home and would like to find someone special to share my life with. Please call and leave phone number. I would really like to get to know you.

WEEKLY & MONTHLY INCOME

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has an opening on one of its few "special allowance" routes. This larger route receives a $50 check each Friday, in addition to the regular monthly route profits. The route is in the Washington Park area.

As with all newspaper distributorships, this opportunity requires a 7 day a week commitment (when you go out of town, you must arrange a substitute for yourself), and is early morning work.

Newspaper distributorships provide great supplemental income for housewives/ mothers, senior citizens, college students, and any adult wanting to "moonlight"!

Apply in person or contact either:

Tonya Burton - 687-8807
David Odom - 688-2700

MOONLIGHTING!

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several distributorships which need to be filled with qualified, responsible individuals.

OFTEN ASKED QUESTIONS:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?

Yes! Our current carrier force is already 90% adult and 10% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:
- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a carrier, you do not need daycare!
- COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends.

How much money can I make as a carrier?

Depending on the size of the distributorship from $300 to $700 monthly! Some make even more!

How long does it take?

The actually delivery takes 1 - 2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2 - 3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many carrier's choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?

6 a.m. Monday - Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, carriers do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!

RESERVE YOUR DISTRIBUTORSHIP NOW!

Upstairs: Master bath features skylight, custom marble tub

the yard and flower beds takes the burden out of maintaining these beautiful surroundings.

Windows and doors are made of energy saving, insulated, Pella wood. Most of the windows have mini-blinds for sun control and energy efficiency. Storm doors and sun reflecting screens and window treatments also have been added. Other energy saving measures include extra insulation as well as polyfoam around doors, windows and electrical plates. In addition, sound insulation has been installed between the first and second floors. Zoned heating and air conditioning units with efficient cut-back thermostats ensure affordable comfort year round.

A beautiful oak spindle staircase leads to the four upstairs bedrooms, two baths and a study or multi-purpose room. A skylight at the top of the stairs brightens the hallway upstairs as well as the entry hall downstairs.

The spacious master bedroom features a private entrance onto a redwood deck above the patio.

In addition, the master bedroom features a huge walk-in closet and a spacious, bright, master bath with a skylight over the custom, marble garden tub.

Marble tops cover the double vanities in the master bath as well as in the other two bathrooms of the home. Matching marble also is used in the shower of the master bath.

Downstairs a large playroom and storage room can be combined into one large game room or other functional purpose by removing the interior wall which has been structurally designed for this flexible use of the space.

An extra large utility room with an abundance of built-in cabinets and a sink is located around the corner from the kitchen.

Every convenience is provided in this spacious, efficient kitchen. Two large pantries provide plenty of room for the cook who really likes to stock up

The three-car garage with large workshop is a handyman's dream come true. A large floored area in the attic above the garage provides extra storage space.

This home, which really does have something for everyone, is offered by ADOBE Realtors for $224,500.

Langston Realtors Talk About...

Education, standards insure professionalism

Langston

Buying a house is the largest single investment that most individuals make. That's why we believe when you come to us for assistance in either buying or selling that investment, you should have the most professional, knowledgeable assistance available. One of my responsibilities at Langston Realtors is to insure that every one of our agents has that high level of professionalism and expertise.

A career in real estate is not for everyone. It is highly demanding profession requiring extensive education, guidance and training both initially and ongoing. "Business hours" include not only normal 8 hour weekdays, but most weekends and many evenings. A high level of commitment, patience, empathy and integrity are essential. Self discipline and good work habits are just as important.

At Langston Realtors we try to identify those persons, whether experienced or newly licensed who have these qualities, then we believe it is our responsibility to provide the training, atmosphere and support necessary to insure their success as a Realtor.

Our company's training programs are among the most extensive 5 day course then weekly follow-up sessions for newly licensed agents; a 21 day back-to-basics program for the the experienced associates who want to enhance their proficiency, develop more disciplined work habits, move off a plateau and become better Realtors; weekly sales meetings with strong emphasis on the Code of Ethics, new developments in the market, current mortgage programs, etc; special topic courses such as "Working in the Commercial Real Estate Field;" and special company sponsored seminars. Education and training are among our company's highest priorities and, as previously stated, one of my main responsibilities; therefore, we are all especially pleased with the spacious new training facilities in our north office.

Our second responsibility to our agents is to provide an atmosphere for success. We feel this is best attained when all of our associates are committed, full time and goal oriented. A busy office, Staffed by energetic, enthusiastic and knowledgeable associates is a tremendous motivational force for all associates. Therefore, last year Langston Realtors made the bold decision to challenge all agents to meet minimum standards of production. We viewed it as a "bold" decision because we did not know what would happen; would agents take advantage of the Back to Basics program especially designed to insure that everyone met the standards? Many did, even top producers! Would standards be supported by the agents as a whole? Overwhelmingly so! The result has been a heightened atmosphere of professionalism, co-operation-operation and respect among staff and agents, and a heightened feeling of pride in our company.

Our third responsibility to our agents-that of support-is extremely important. Four managers and four secretaries comprise one of the largest Realtor support staffs in the city, with a ratio of almost one employee to each five sales associates. Help and/or back up is available to an agent, and co-operation-operation agent's customers and clients, at almost all times. We also believe this "support" also includes development of company image, committment and involvement in the community, expanded work space , effective advertising, and belief that our associates are among the very best!

Pat Orseth is VP/Administrative Director of Langston Realtors. Her responsibilities include education and training for the entire company and management of the newly opened Langston Realtors North office. She is a broker, has been in real estate 17 years, is a graduate of University of North Dakota, and has lived in Midland 18 year years.

Dear Dad:

Today is Father's Day, the day we honor Dear Old Dad for all he has done for us. Fathers influence their children in as many ways as there are fathers — and children. But, good, bad or indifferent, our fathers' lives have affected our own.

For Mary J. Goodwin of Midland, a father's love involved more than just food on the table and a pat on the head.

When Mrs. Goodwin was a child, she and her family had a farm in Terrell County. Near their home was a ditch. "We had been gone (for a while)," said Mrs. Goodwin, "and while we were gone someone had either shot or broke a fruit jar and it was in the ditch."

Coming home to the farm was a happy occasion and Mrs. Goodwin, eager to be outside, ran through the ditch and stepped right on the broken fruit jar, slicing her foot open.

"I must have been about 7 or 8," she said. "My brother ran to my cousin's house" because the cousin owned a car and could help them get her to the doctor. "My other brother held me. My father took a wick from a (kerosene-type) lantern, and he lit it and used that wick to sear that (the deep cut on her foot) to stop it from bleeding."

When her family got her to the doctor, the physician cleaned her cut but "said he was afraid to touch it (more than that), it might start bleeding again.

"My father saved my life," Mrs. Goodwin said. "Every time I think about it I cry because I think, I could have died.

"We went places with him (her father) and did things with him, but that's something I'll never forget."

Sometimes circumstances beyond their control prevent fathers from being with their children. Harry Harrison of Midland spent some of his childhood without his father. "When I was growing up, he was in the service in World War II, so we weren't real close," he said.

But father and son did build their relationship. "Later in life we worked together in the oil and gas business, here in Midland."

Now Harrison has sons of his own, and although he can't put his finger on specifics, "I'm sure his influence on me rubbed off on me in the way I affect them (his children). Luckily, I wasn't called away to war when they were growing up."

Harrison, who has been active in Midland Community Theatre and Summer Mummers for years, has had the opportunity to be involved in activities with his children. "When they are younger you do more with them. When they are older they develop their own lives. We have worked at the theater together, and a couple of years ago they were in the melodrama I directed (at Summer Mummers), 'Buffaloed on the Bayou.'"

Today's fathers are becoming much more active parents than their fathers were in the 1950s and '60s. During those years, the father's main role in the family was that of breadwinner, while the mother was in charge of the children. As a result, many children grew up with fathers they really didn't know very well, even though they lived in the same house.

"To be sure, working — that is, earning a living — is one aspect of fathering," Myron Brenton is quoted in "Fathers" (edited by Alex-

AAUW hosts event to honor students

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

Members of the Midland Branch of the American Association of University Women hosted an awards coffee recently to honor the young women chosen as their Girls of the Month during the past school year.

McKnight-Harrison

The students were chosen from both Lee High School and Midland High School based on their academic achievement, as well as school and community service.

The honorees were Amanda Clausen, Amy Morris, Heather Mitchell, Karin Parsley, Maria Gonzalez, Cynthia Nichols, Anda Adams, Becky Duran, Nichole Craft, Kimberly Smith, Jennifer Kuhn, Susanna Morrow, Michelle Garcia, Alison Wade, Kendra Sorrells, Kerry Hansen, Skylee Perrigo and Carrie Rinehart.

They were presented with letter openers, engraved with the dates of their awards.

Special recognition also was given to Susanna Morrow and Dale Cannedy, winners of the AAUW Creative Writing Award, and Sharon Overton and Monita Pouydal, recipients of the Hulda Driscoll Award.

Parents of the guests of honor were special guests.

Held in the home of Verneta (Mrs. Dedric) Baxter, the event also was hosted by AAUW board members, including Maxine (Mrs. Bob) Hannifin, president; Linda (Mrs. Autry) Stephens, Patti (Mrs. Phil) Eager, Esta (Mrs. Cary) Geron, Harriet Barnes, Nita (Mrs. Bob) Ivy and Colleen (Mrs. Vince) Scury.

THE HIGH SKY CHILDREN'S RANCH will benefit from a recent luncheon held at Midland Country Club. Sponsored by The Canopy, the event also featured informal modeling, including playwear and daywear by Amy Nowlin.

A graduate of Texas Tech University, the young designer recently returned from studying in London.

The Canopy Fashion Council is composed of young women in grades seven through 12, who participate in service projects supported by the shop.

Only seventh and eighth graders participated in this show. They were Marra Bennett, Laura Childress, Caitlin Durham, Marissa Gifford, Amber Hightower, Jennifer Johnson, Angela Jones, Kelly Boldrick, Lucia Lea Crump, Sarah Hughes, Sarah Innerarity, Kristin Kimsey, Laura Locker, Veronica Poage, Mitzi Rowland, Monica Stroman and Laura Walton.

THE "HAT LADY," Claudette Walker of Kansas City, Mo., presented a program on Co Co Chanel for the Green Tree Country Club Ladies Association's final meeting of the current club year.

Members and their guests enjoyed a luncheon of Shrimp Salad, served in Pineapple Boats, Fresh Fruit Salad, Croissants, and for dessert, sherbet and cookies. Mimosas were enjoyed prior to lunch.

The tables were decorated with floral-bedecked hats, which later were awarded as door prizes.

Officers for the coming year were installed by President Eunice (Mrs. John) Dersch. She presented incoming president Heather (Mrs. John) Echols with her jeweled, working boots. The other officers are Jo Ann (Mrs. Jack) Jouette, vice president; Jane (Mrs. Frank) Vitrano, secretary, and Carol (Mrs. Phil) Whitsitt, treasurer.

IT WAS A FIRST for Midland when Virginia (Mrs. Henry E.) Goulet was installed as president of the Northside Lions Club for the 1991-92 club year. She is the first woman to be elected to that office among Midland's eight Lions Clubs.

Ernie Barbee, district governor of Lions District 2-A1, conducted the installation at Salvatore's Restaurant.

Guests included Firt Lady Jo Barbee and past district governors and their wives, including Bob and Jan Noyes of Big Spring, and J.E. and Nell Barrington, Leonard and Shirley Hanson, and C.E. and Marge McCain, all of Midland.

Since the founding of Lions International in 1917, Lions Club members' families and friends have been encouraged to become involved in the programs and activities of the organization.

Begining in 1975, the Lioness Clubs program for women was established. However, today women may choose to become Lions Club members. Delegates to the 1987 international convention approved an amendment removing the word "male" as a criterion for membership.

Lions Clubs worldwide are non-profit community service organizations. Midland Northside Lions Club return 100 per cent of all profits from its fundraising activities to various organizations and charities.

DAD: Father's Day celebrated today

andra Towle) as saying. "It's one means that the father has of extending protection to his family. But it's just one. If he concentrates on this to the exclusion of other aspects, it becomes not a form of fathering, but an escape."

Dr. Benjamin Spock, quoted in the same book, takes the idea of fatherhood as more than being the breadwinner one step further: "Boys and girls need chances to be around their father, to be enjoyed by him and if possible to do things with him. Better to play 15 minutes enjoyably and then say, 'Now I'm going to read my paper' than to spend all day at the zoo crossly."

Mike Casey of Midland, who is raising his two children, remembers a father who spent most of his time working. "On weekends he always worked around the ranch," Casey said. "We (he and his brother Scott) helped him around the ranch. ... He never had anybody build something for him, he always built it himself and it always turned out pretty much like he said it would — barns and hay sheds and stuff like that. We spent a long time building a fence."

When he was growing up, Casey said, his family owned five acres and leased 360 others near Oklahoma City. "He (his father) has 1,600 acres now. He doesn't run cattle any more because of his health."

Because his father worked so much, Casey's memories of play time with his father are few. "I remember one time it snowed real hard, and Casey (his father) didn't go to work. He stayed home and we made a snowman."

Now that he is a father, Casey looks on the parent-child relationship from a different angle. "I always wanted to be a better parent than what my dad was to me, but it doesn't work out that way. I wanted to be more patient, but I don't think I have any more patience than he did."

He is more active in his children's lives than he remembers his father being in his. Grant, 7, was on a T-ball team earlier this summer. Casey attended all the games and served as an "occasional first-base coach." At 5, his daughter Katey is still too young to join many organizations, but this fall when she starts kindergarten, she and her father plan to have her become a member of Campfire.

Still, like most parents, Casey wishes he was better at the job. "I wish I was a better cook," he said. "I wish I had more patience. I wish I had more money, more time..."

For all their wisdom and for all their faults, fathers are people trying to make the best decisions. And for the most part, their children love them and are grateful to them. In the book, "Dear Dad: Famous People's Loving Letters to Their Fathers" (edited by Norma Cox), President George Bush, who is himself a father and a grandfather, summed it up in a letter to his father, Preston: "Dear Dad: It is hard sometimes for a man to say this to another man; but I love you very much — always have, always will. — George."

'New' fathers contradict conventional wisdom

Associated Press

A new and improved father — one who is intimately involved with his children's upbringing — has emerged in America and now makes up as many as 44 percent of today's dads from every economic and social class.

These "new fathers" contradict the conventional wisdom that the most involved fathers are primarily well-off and highly educated.

Sociologist Scott Coltrane of the University of California reviewed more than 10 years of studies on couples who share child-rearing chores. He concluded that blue-collar, lower-middle-class, less educated men were underrepresented.

"The researchers talked to people like themselves," he states in the current issue of American Health. Coltrane, who studies working couples, notes that blue-collar "new fathers" aren't "feminists, but by doing the everyday things that mothers do, they develop a sensitivity and a capacity to anticipate what their children need. They tune in."

Yale Child Study Center psychiatrist Kyle Pruett believes this trend to families with two active parents is worth applauding. It's better than "one and a lump," she says.

Studies show children of involved dads grow up more empathetic and self-confident. Pruett believes "these kids will find it easier to nurture their own children."

The most attached fathers, studies indicate, tend to be those who put off having kids until they're in their late 20s, by which time they're ready and eager to start a family. Many have also had time to get established in their jobs, which minimizes some of the financial time constraints younger fathers face.

Pitching in right from the start is another factor most involved fathers share.

Coltrane found that of 20 deeply involved dads, all but one witnessed their children's births. Half were convinced that the experience — which they termed "incredible" and "magical" — combined with throwing themselves right into infant care, got them hooked on their kids.

"I learned how to walk them at night," says one father. "In some ways I even liked it."

Contrary to expectations, relying on extended, three-generation families for child care works against the father's involvement. When older family members — especially the wife's mother — help with a baby, new parents tend to rely less on each other and are likelier to adopt the sex-typed roles they grew up with.

"When in-laws and aunts pick up the slack, fathers are kind of discouraged from taking part," says Pennsylvania State University sociologist Malcolm Hill. "So they go with tradition."

Coltrane found that while a quarter of families with very involved dads lived near grandparents, none used them as regular baby sitters.

Some mothers have trouble embracing the new fatherhood.

A Boston University study of 23 families in which the mother worked part time or stayed home showed that the older she was, and the higher her educational level and previous job status, the more she monopolized parenting.

Some experts suspect the supermom syndrome at work: A highly competent woman who steps out of the job market may feel she has to justify her choice by handling all the child care herself, shutting out her husband in the process.

"If women were as truthful as possible, they'd admit it's difficult both to ask husbands for help and to give over some of the responsibility," says sociologist Judith Auerbach, former director of the Institute for the Study of Women and Men at the University of Southern Califomia.

"Women feel that they're supposed to want to be involved, and if they're not, then there's something wrong with them."

Home improvement loans available

Associated Press

It's getting easier to get a home improvement loan, even when you have little or no equity in your house. The Federal Housing Administration, which insures no-equity loans for basic improvements, has set up a hotline to help homeowners locate participating lenders (800-733-4663).

The money must go to protect or improve the basic "livability or utility" of the property, according to FHA guidelines. Luxuries such as swimming pools are out, as are sprinkler systems and hot tubs. Almost everything else is allowed.

To qualify, you must have been in your home at least 90 days. If you co-own the property, you must own at least half of it or get the other owners to co-sign the loan. The money is generally lent at fixed rates for two to 15 years. You can often borrow small amounts — roughly $2,500 — on an unsecured basis, but a lien will be placed against your property for larger loans.

SEEDS FOR THOUGHT

Tomato is gardeners' favorite

Deborah A. Benge

Of all the vegetables that can be grown in the home garden, none is more popular than tomatoes. Even people who don't grow vegetables are likely to have a tomato plant or two tucked away in th flower bed. Bu just because it is popular doesn't make it is easy to grow.

Benge

Tomato plants do best when located in full sun, and planted in well-drained sandy loam soil that is rich with organic matter. Tomatoes also need high-quality, salt-free water and a location that is free of leafhoppers, aphids and tomato horm worms. If all of that is not possible, at the very least tomatoes need six hours of direct sunlight with good air circulation, soils improved with organic matter and a nearby water supply.

By now your plants may be large enough for you to decide whether to cage, stake or trellis your tomatoes or let them sprawl. Tomatoes kept off the ground take up less room, are easier to harvest and provide better harvests.

After plants are established, regular fertilizing is important in order to have good crops. Once the plants begin to set fruit, fertilize with a tablespoon of ammonium sulfate (21-0-0) or ⅔ tablespoon of ammonium nitrate (33-0-0). About every two weeks, place fertilizer in a 12- to 15-inch circle around each plant, and work the fertilizer into the soil; water it in well.

Proper watering is extremely important for good tomato growth and fruit quality. One of the biggest problems in raising tomatoes is blossom end rot, a circular, black rotting spot at the blossom end of the tomato. Often this condition is due to a calcium deficiency in the soil; but in West Texas it is usually due to soil moisture levels fluctuating from too wet to too dry, which interferes with the proper use of calcium in the developing fruit.

Deep, thorough watering combined with a 3- to 4-inch layer of mulch can result in healthy plants and good fruit quality. Drip irrigation or soaker hoses can be useful, but are not absolutely necessary. Flood irrigation or row irrigation can be very good too. Overhead sprinkler irrigation can have some negative effects. The salt in local water can accumulate and even burn foliage if used during the heat of the day. Using sprinkle irrigation after tomato plants have become larger can encourage leaf diseases. If you must use sprinkler irrigation, water very early in the morning so the foliage can dry quickly. When in doubt about whether your tomato plants need water, feel for soil moisture near the base of the plants. If the soil is moist, don't water; if dry, water thoroughly.

Tomato fruit cracking, another result of fluctuating too wet-too dry soils, is another problem faced by tomato growers. Cracks can be radial, coming from the stem end, or concentric, going around the fruit. Some varieties of tomatoes are prone to have cracking, which is difficult to control. Improving the soil with organic matter, using a 3- to 4-inch layer of mulch (grass clippings, leaves, bark mulch, etc.), thorough even watering, and planting in raised beds (if necessary) can help produce a better plant and fruit.

Other problems associated with growing tomatoes include root knot nematodes, curly top virus, tomato pin worm, leaf diseases and wilts.

Root knot nematode can be a serious problem for tomatoes, okra, beans and several other vegetables. If you have a sandy soil and have noticed galls or knots on the root systems of tomatoes, you probably have nematodes, which distort root tissue so water and nutrients are not absorbed well, causing a weak stunted plant. Controling nematodes is difficult, but planting a fall cover crop of cereal ryegrass can make a big difference in reducing nematode population.

Curly top virus is spread tomato plants by feeding sugar beet leafhoppers. Symptoms can be subtle at first — a paler, less vigorous plant that appears stiff and leathery. Advanced symptoms are pronounced upward curling of the leaves with purple veins, and warm leaf temperatures (in comparison to healthy leaves). Since curly top virus is incurable, the best treatment is to pull up infected plants so the disease is not spread to healthy plants.

Tomato pin worm is a pesky insect that can plague tomato plants. In its immature stage, this small insect is many times a leaf miner. Look for leaf miner damage (small trails in the leaf). As fruit begins to develop you may see a very small hole usually located at the stem end of the tomato. The adult is a small, brown, nocturnal moth. This pest is difficult to control because there are multiple generations per summer. Use repeated sprays of recommended insecticides, or cut out the damage since it is usually small and not too bad.

During rainy spells and later in the summer, tomatoes are subject to several leaf diseases, usually different fungi and some soil-borne fungus problems, which are worse if you plant in the same location without a good plant rotation or layout plan. The pathogen can to build up, which makes growing tomatoes to become more difficult.

Two common soil-borne diseases that can be a problem are fusarium wilt and verticillium wilt, which also can build up in the soil and complicate raising tomatoes. Crop rotation, sanitation, recommended fungicides and, in severe cases, soil fumigants may be needed to control these conditions.

If you have, or think you have, tomato disease problems, take samples to Texas Agricultural Extension office, or pick up publication L-475, "Tomato Diseases," for more information.

AT WIT'S END

Stepfather advances to 'real' fatherhood

By Erma Bombeck

When I was 9 years old, my father died. It hurt more than the time I got my foot caught in the spoke of my bicycle ... and took twice as long to heal.

Bombeck

When I was 11 years old, my mother remarried. She called him my stepfather. I called him Tom.

If he had been a relief pitcher who had been brought into the game when the team was in trouble, people would have cheered. If he had been an understudy who was filling in for the star who couldn't go on stage, he would have been appreciated and respected. If he had been a substitute teacher who took over in the absence of the regular teacher, he would have been applauded for his efforts.

But none of those things happened. He was a man who dared to move into a house that was mined with memories and charged with animosity. Not a day went by that he did not do battle with the ghost of Daddy past.

For an 11-year-old kid, I must say my memory of my "real" father was astounding. I remembered him as a saint who never shouted at me, never asked me to pick up anything, never insisted I eat everything on my plate or in general adhere to any rules. My "real" father was a cross between Peter Pan and John Wayne.

But throughout the next 50 years, a strange thing happened. Slowly and insidiously, visions of my natural father began to fade and in his place my stepfather emerged. It got to the point where I could no longer conjure up a face — only the ones in photographs — and the same stories I used to tell with such relish seemed pointless and trite.

It was sobering to realize my natural father had not given me away at my wedding, kept vigil while the grandchildren were being born, dropped off hot soup when we all had the flu or shared with us the school plays, graduations and birthdays.

Today, an unprecedented number of stepfathers will celebrate Father's Day. There is a reason they do not have a day of their own. From the day they enter a family, they become fathers in every sense of the word. They may start off as pinch hitters, but when the pitches start coming in, they're a member of the team.

My father died last November ... or was it Tom? I can't remember anymore.

Father's Day cards appropriate

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Some 101 million greeting cards will be given to fathers all across the country today, Father's Day 1991.

Most, but not all, will be traditional cards addressed to "Father" or "Dad," says Hallmark Cards.

But, reflecting the growing number of non-traditional families, other cards are appropriate for stepfathers, divorced fathers or father figures such as uncles, grandfathers and other relatives.

Video releases of old movies slow

N.Y. Times News Service

The release of Peter Bogdanovich's "Last Picture Show" in April, 20 years after its theater run, again raises questions about why some old movies are available on video and some are not. Thousands of films sit unreleased in studio libraries. Movie buffs would like them all to be available on cassette, particularly all the better ones. Fine, say the studios, but it's not that easy.

"We're going as fast as we can," says Martin Weinstein, a vice president of Turner Home Entertainment. "We can't just say the whole library is available all at once."

Video stores, Weinstein says, can absorb only so many titles at a time. Of the 757 feature films in Turner's RKO library, 219 are on video. "We'll add another 60 or so this year," he says.

Turner's titles are gathered into promotions according to genres or stars and released every other month, six to 12 titles at a time.

"If we came out with 100 at one shot you can see the problem," Weinstein says. "It's better when stores have a small number in a group. They have something to focus on."

The world's largest film library, MGM/UA, is distributed by Warner. Of approximately 4,000 MGM/UA titles, 3,000 are not yet on video.

Like Turner, MGM/UA releases movies in groups, usually eight to 10. George Feltenstein, vice president of marketing, says studios are becoming more proficient at using their old movies. Often that simply means knowing what they have in their libraries.

"If an important title isn't out, it could be either a rights problem or ignorance on the part of the studio," Feltenstein says. "Until recently it was rare to have people in video who know film. Video grew out of the record business. Most of us never had to work with a deep film library."

Relocation offers fewer for women

Associated Press

Female employees are not relocated as often as their male counterparts because they get fewer opportunities to move, according to a joint study by Loyola University Chicago and Northwestern University.

Dual-earner women are not turning down job transfers or withdrawing their names from consideration any more frequently than dual-earner men, the study showed. "The only explanation for these results seems to be that dual-earner women simply are not being offered the same number of transfer opportunities as their male counterparts," says researcher Linda K. Stroh, assistant professor at Loyola's Institute of Industrial Relations.

The study, "Impact of Societal Shifts and Corporate Changes on Employee Relocation," also showed that dual-earner women were more concerned with the effect of transfers on their husbands' careers than dual-earner men were about the effect of transfers on their wives' careers.

Learn to look for opportunity in gloom-and-doom situations

Associated Press

Accountants displaced by shakeouts in large accounting firms or corporate departments might be able to downsize profitably on their own.

They can buy accounting franchises and set up on their own, suggests C. Robert Wissler, who heads Comprehensive Business Services, Inc., in Carlsbad, Calif. "While others look at these events and see gloom and doom, we see opportunity," he says.

Current cost of a franchise from the firm is $60,000, which includes franchise fee, training, office and computer equipment and the recommended initial working capital of $20,000. Wissler says that the franchise system helps accountants avoid costly mistakes in setting up a small business but still gives them control over their futures. "We can teach them how to run a business," he says. "A CPA or accountant may have the background but not know how to set up a business and market his services."

The firm gives continuing marketing, tax, legal and software help, covered by a royalty and fee payback.

Some new niches for those square pegs who don't fit into the round holes of regular company staff work come from Kelly Services, the temporary help firm.

These include re-entry help for displaced homemakers, jobs for frequently-transferred military spouses, jobs for older people who want to re-enter the workforce or work for the first time, and summer jobs for college students.

In cooperation with the Displaced Homemakers Network in Washington, D.C., Kelly works with local DHN affiliates to help women who are without financial resources through a husband's death, disability or divorce.

The Encore Program is aimed at mature employees who may want to supplement their Social Security income. The company seeks out potential older workers at job fairs and senior and community groups, offering updated training and referrals.

The Military Spouses Program helps workers frequently on the move with training and flexible employment, and the College Recruitment Program provides temporary jobs for about 100,000 students each year.

Women have ambitions of CEOs

Associated Press

Lots of women would like to be chief executive officers someday, but most of them aren't betting on it.

A survey of 52 senior women executives by Battalia & Associates, a New York search firm, showed that nearly half of them would like to be a CEO. At the same time, 69 percent doubt it is achievable.

Of those who have CEO ambitions, 33 percent feel that senior management discriminates against women; another 29 percent prefer the term, "unwilling," to characterize management attitude about promotion to the top job.

Asked if the Labor Department should investigate, 49 percent said yes, 47 percent said no and 4 percent had no opinion. Many of the women feel discrimination charges would be too hard to prove and that time and performance will eventually remove the glass ceiling.

ANNIVERSARIES

Golden anniversary couple honored

Mr. and Mrs. James H. Caldwell celebrated their golden wedding anniversary with a reception Saturday in the Parlor of Crestview Baptist Church. Hosts were the couple's children and grandchildren, the Rev. and Mrs. Vernon Sivage and their daughters Amy and Keri of Rwanda, East Africa, and Mr. and Mrs. John Stahl and their sons James, John David and Jeremy of Pearland.

The Caldwells were married June 15, 1941, in Amarillo. After serving in the U.S. Air Force during World War II, Caldwell was employed by Magnolia Oil Company (now Mobil Oil Company) in Luling. The family moved to Midland in 1952. Caldwell retired from Mobil in 1981. His wife retired from Texaco Inc. in 1981. The couple are charter members of Crestview Baptist Church and Northwestern Baptist Church, both in Midland.

Washams celebrate 50 years together

Gene and Liz Washam of Midland celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary Thursday. The couple will be honored at a barbecue June 22 at the home of Wes and Farrell Jean Washam. Hosts will be the couple's children and their spouses: Wes and Farrell Washam, and Gene and Anna Washam, all of Midland, and Sue Brewer of Lubbock.

Washam and the former Liz Wolcott were married June 13, 1941, in Midland. In addition to their three children, they also have seven grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

The couple has lived in Midland all of their married life where Washam worked for Schlumberger from 1946-1982.

Quarter-million U.S. dads stay at home, wives work

EDITOR'S NOTE — More and more men are leaving it to their wives to bring home the bacon — and are staying home to cook it for their children. For these men, every day is Father's Day.

By Barbara Goldberg

NEW YORK (AP) — Jeff Sieglen quit his marketing job to stay home and raise two sons while his wife works as a doctor. But try telling that to his old pals at work.

"Even now," he said, "the guys I used to work with ask me, 'So what are you REALLY doing?' I keep telling them I'm staying home with the kids. That's my job. That's what I do.

"They say, 'Uh huh. But what are you REALLY doing?' "

Small wonder his friends are confused. Though Sieglen is one of about 257,000 men aged 25 to 54 raising children while their wives work, stay-at-home dads make up less than 2 percent of married parents of children under 18, according to the U.S. Labor Department.

And though the number of househusbands has increased about 50,000 over the past two decades, most companies still have made little or no provisions for fathers who want to take time off.

Unlike the Mr. Moms of the '80s recession era, it is economic opportunity rather than disaster that has landed many of these latest converts cribside — economic opportunity for their wives, that is.

WHILE WOMEN'S overall earnings still lag behind men, the number of women in $50,000-plus jobs has quadrupled over the last decade, the U.S. Census Bureau says. The fastest-growing segment of the workforce today is married mothers with children under 2 years old, according to 9 to 5, an organization that tracks working women's issues.

"Being the provider is no longer a mandate for a man," said Ronald Levant, a Brookline, Mass., family psychologist who gives parenting seminars and co-wrote "Between Father and Child."

"It is now possible for men to consider themselves a primary care-giving parent and not suffer any loss of their sense of masculinity or worth," he said.

Marcelo Seabra said he hopes his decision to stay home will actually enhance his image in his son's eyes.

"I want Luke to feel proud of his father — and close," said Seabra, a self-employed contractor whose wife went back to her $50,000-a-year job as an architect at a Manhattan firm eight months after giving birth in February 1990.

Sieglen, whose wife earns four times as much as an anesthesiologist as he did marketing pharmaceuticals, said he already can see a strong bond between himself and his two sons, ages 7 and 4.

"As much as they love their mother, when things go bad, they look to me. I'm the one who's here all the time. I'm the steadying influence," he said from the couple's Princeton, N.J., home.

While many mothers would love to stay home themselves, their ample salaries or substantial health insurance packages force them to kiss their babies and husbands goodbye in the morning and head for the office.

FOR THE husbands who watch them drive away, there is sometimes lingering guilt.

"My wife is sacrificing her motherhood so we can do this," said Peter Candela, whose wife, Mary, went back to her $30,000-a-year job testing cosmetics for Avon Products Inc. 13 weeks after the birth of their son last winter.

Candela has put his career as a music composer on hold and is committed to staying home in Wayne, N.J., until their son goes to school.

Economics dictated the couple's choice, but it was much easier to accept before her son was born, Mrs. Candela said.

"You don't want to send them to day care so you think 'We'll have the baby stay home with a parent. Why should it matter which parent?' When the baby is actually here, it's really hard," she said.

David and Sarah Burris of Zanesville, Ohio, wanted their daughter, Alexandra, to be raised by a parent. Determined to keep her health benefits, Sarah returned to her $20,000-a-year job as program director for the Girl Scouts of America three weeks after giving birth last autumn. David, a stage manager, stayed home.

"My wife feels she misses out on the little things, like the first time Alex rolled over and the first time she sat up. But it would upset us even more if it happened at day care," he said.

If Mom at work and Dad at home is an economic equation for some families, for others it is a way to satisfy personal needs.

"MY WIFE wasn't interested in staying at home. She wanted to get back to work as quickly as possible," said Philippe Henri of Berkeley, Calif., whose wife, Carol, returned to work as a computer analyst with IBM eight weeks after giving birth to Natalia in September 1989.

"Her career is very important to her. Very, very important," Henri said.

A high school math teacher whose $30,000-a-year salary is about half what his wife earns, Henri said he needed a break from the working world. He took a 10-month paternity leave and, when it was over, said he felt confident Natalia was "ready" for day care.

"My year was filled with fun," he said. "So few fathers have the chance to spend time with their kids at that stage and get to know them in a way that most men don't."

The Small Business Administration found that most companies offer some kind of maternity leave, but less than 8 percent offer paternity leave. And when it is available, paternity leave often is brief. A 1988 Conference Board survey of 521 large companies found the maximum length of leaves was an average 56 days for mothers and 18 days for fathers.

Even corporations that have lengthy paternity leave policies don't always encourage their employees to take it. In fact, most discourage it, according to a forthcoming study by James Levine, author of "Who Will Raise the Children?" and director of The Fatherhood Project at the Families and Work Institute in Manhattan.

"We've actually encountered instances where a supervisor has recommended a guy use his vacation instead of the official paternity leave because it will 'look bad,' " Levine said.

THIS SUMMER, Congress is expected to vote on a bill that would require companies with 50 or more employees to provide up to 12 weeks of unpaid leaves for men or women for important family developments, such as the birth of a child. A similar bill was passed last year but vetoed by President Bush, who is threatening to shoot it down again.

For many men in the corporate world, the only way to spend more time with their children is to do something drastic — like quit. That's just what Sieglen did.

"My family has always been the most important thing to me. I was making decent money, but not enough to have everybody suffer," he said. "The children were feeling the pains of our two demanding careers. In the morning, they would come to us and say, 'Well, who's going to be home tonight?' It didn't make us feel too good."

His sons, Michael and Andrew, are much happier now that Dad has been home for three years, he said. And he is committed to being there even after the youngest goes to school this fall.

To the boys, their father staying home and their mother going to work is normal.

"Daddy says, 'Good night. I love you, and see you in the morning,' " said 4-year-old Andrew. And every morning, "Mommy goes to work. We see what car she's taking," he said.

"At my son's nursery school, I had one little girl come up to me and tell me she wished I was her daddy because I spent so much time with my son," Sieglen said. "It was a funny feeling."

BUT THE reaction from adults can be much different.

"I called my mother to tell her," he said. "and she cried."

Two-career couples opt for last-minute Lamaze classes

By Constance L. Hays
N.Y. Times News Service

Monique Cavaris is married to an airline pilot who she says is almost never home. When they found out they were going to be parents, they were sure they would not be able to take a standard childbirth-preparation course that runs for six to eight weeks.

So they flew one Saturday from their farm in Dover, N.H., to Dallas, where they spent a weekend at a nearby hotel and were instructed, along with nine other expectant couples, in the details of modern labor and delivery. The course was completed by Sunday afternoon.

"I thought this was ideal, because we could schedule a weekend, but not eight consecutive weeks," said Ms. Cavaris, whose daughter was born last October.

How best to learn about epidurals and episiotomies, to view a movie on Caesareans, to survive contractions and recognize transition — in other words, how to have a baby? Over a weekend, or over a period of weeks?

With busier families and more two-career households than ever, a small corps of instructors has emerged to meet the scheduling needs of working couples by offering an entire course in one weekend.

Some of these weekends are packaged and advertised as special romantic getaways — possibly the last for a long time — for the parents-to-be.

The instructors are acting in reponse to the tired, inattentive students who rushed from work to their traditional classes and especially to working couples who might be tempted to skip the weekly encounters altogether and arrive at the hospital uninformed.

Joy Rittmayer runs a program called "Joyful Beginnings" at the Marriott Mandalay, which is about halfway between Dallas and Fort Worth. Ms. Rittmayer held her first monthly weekend seminar in 1989 with three couples.

Since then, her business has grown to twice-monthly seminars, with 10 couples each, under the rubric of "Last Fling."

The couples, who each pay $199, receive nine hours of instruction on Saturday and wake up Sunday morning to four more.

ANOTHER INSTRUCTOR, Phyllis Noveh, offers a weekend class at an 1859 mansion near New Orleans. For $400 to $475 a couple (the range depends on how luxurious a room each decides to reserve), they learn about childbirth in the antebellum setting of Nottoway Plantation, a sprawling onetime sugar-cane plantation in White Castle, La. The fee includes instruction, four meals and a plantation tour, Mrs. Noveh said.

Paula Swiber, a high school teacher, and her husband, Mike, a purchasing agent for an oil drilling company, were among those who signed up for a weekend last December. Mrs. Swiber, who lives in Morgan City, La., said she didn't think she could endure evening classes as her pregnancy advanced.

"I definitely wanted to take Lamaze," she said, "but I didn't want to have to go on Thursday nights to a class that broke for half an hour of punch and cookies." The Swibers' son was born in January.

Brian and Mary Slazer of Slidell, La., took Mrs. Noveh's class several months before their daughter was born in October 1989. Slazer, an investor, and Mrs. Slazer, then a computer analyst, preferred a shorter course to a series of classes running six weeks or longer.

"We were so busy that it was difficult to commit to all those dates," Slazer said. Once they had completed the weekend seminar, he added, they were dutiful about practicing their breathing and relaxation techniques.

About 75 couples have taken the weekend courses since August 1989 when Mrs. Noveh started them. Mrs. Noveh, who also teaches four-week and six-week courses, said she was initially concerned that her weekend students might not bond or that they would find the amount of material overwhelming. "Neither of those were problems," she said.

MOST CHILDBIRTH EXPERTS agree it is a good idea to offer classes that teach helpful breathing and relaxation techniques, and that make the momentous transition from husband and wife to mother and father a little less traumatic. But they differ on the most effective way to teach them.

The seminar approach has its advantages, especially for working couples, Ms. Rittmayer said. "Because it's all in one weekend, it is possible to take somebody up near their due date," she said.

Because traditional programs end during the "iffy" period, just before the couples' due dates, "you never have a class where everybody finishes," she added.

But Mary Ann Braun, director of practice and legislation for the Nurses Association of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, sees drawbacks in the intensive approach.

"I would tend to say that the mind can absorb only what the seat can endure," Ms. Braun said. "It's extremely difficult to keep pregnant women in one place for a long period of time."

Jeanne Rose, president of the International Childbirth Education Association in Minneapolis, said, "My own view is that if you try to concentrate everything into a single weekend, something gets lost."

She said couples might have less time to practice exercises and to bond with other class members. "But the bottom line is, if somebody says, 'I can't go to six classes,' it's better for them to have something than nothing," she said.

Children can make dessert for Father's Day

Associated Press

These Black Forest Mini Cheesecakes are so easy to prepare, the kids can make them for Father's Day with only a little help from Mom. Kids can line bake cups with vanilla wafers and spoon in the chocolate cream cheese filling. The cheesecakes are topped with a cocoa-sour cream topping and a dollop of cherry pie filling.

BLACK FOREST MINI CHEESECAKES

18 to 24 vanilla wafer cookies
2 8-ounce packages cream cheese, softened
1¼ cups sugar
⅓ cup cocoa
2 tablespoons all-purpose flour
3 eggs
1 cup dairy sour cream
½ teaspoon almond extract
Cocoa Sour Cream Topping (recipe follows)
Canned cherry pie filling, chilled

Line muffin pans with 2½-inch foil-laminated bake cups. Place a vanilla wafer on the bottom of each baking cup.

In a large mixer bowl, beat cream cheese until smooth. Add sugar, cocoa and flour, blend well. Add eggs; beat well. Stir in sour cream and almond extract. Fill each prepared cup almost full with the cheese mixture. Bake in a 325-degree oven 20 to 25 minutes or until set. Remove from oven; cool 5 to 10 minutes.

Spread a heaping teaspoon of the cocoa sour cream topping on each cup. Cool completely in pans; refrigerate. Garnish with dollop of cherry pie filling just before serving. Refrigerate leftovers. Makes 1½ to 2 dozen cheesecakes.

COCOA SOUR CREAM TOPPING: In small bowl, stir together 1 cup dairy sour cream, ¼ cup sugar, 2 tablespoons cocoa and ½ teaspoon vanilla extract; stir until sugar is dissolved.

DEAR ABBY

Three cheers for you, dads

By Abigail Van Buren

Van Buren

DEAR READERS: Today is Father's Day. What? So soon again? Is it just my imagination, or are all the holidays getting closer together? Well, Happy Father's Day to all you fathers out there.

This year, let's pay special tribute to those men who were "just like a father" to a family whose "real" father died, disappeared, or was just not around for one of a thousand reasons.

A garland of orchids to stepfathers — you men who married women with "ready-made" families, and managed to overcome all the obstacles that only men in that situation can know. (How often did you hear, "You're not my REAL father — you can't tell me what to do"?)

A diamond in the crown of the father who, for one reason or another, had to be both father and mother to his children. (He not only brought home the bacon — he cooked it.)

So, a resounding Happy Father's Day! Enjoy your day, Dad. And be sure to wear your necktie immediately so the wife and kids won't ask (around Christmastime), "Say, Dad, how come you never wear that tie we gave you for Father's Day? We paid a fortune for it."

DEAR ABBY: Twenty-seven years ago, when I was 15, I gave birth to a beautiful baby boy. I gave him up for adoption for reasons known to many who had the same experience in the '60s. I gave him up out of love, and wanted him to have a better life than I could have given him at the time.

Two weeks ago, I received a telephone call from an intermediary who said my son was looking for me! After I recovered from the initial shock, I called the number I was given. Abby, I was so choked up I could hardly speak, but my son put me at ease immediately by saying he felt no ill will toward me for having given him up. Then he thanked me for having chosen to give him life instead of having an abortion. He assured me that the parents who raised him were the best, and if I ever had any doubts about whether I did the right thing in giving him up, I should set my mind at ease.

The point of this letter is to thank my son's adoptive parents for having raised such a fine, compassionate young man. The credit belongs to them entirely. I also want to thank them for assuring my son that I did indeed love him, and that giving him up was the best way to prove my love for him.

Abby, I am getting married soon — for the first time. And when I told my son, he said, "You gave me away out of love, now I would like to return the favor and give 'the bride' away — then we will be even."

No signature or city, please. I want every adoptive mother to know that this is meant for her, with love and gratitude for her unselfishness. — A RICHLY REWARDED BIRTHMOTHER

Everything you'll need to know about planning a wedding can be found in Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Scenic highways selected by travel experts

By Robin and Patricia Harris
Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — The Rand McNally Company, the world's biggest map producer, has for the first time in its 67-year history selected America's eight most scenic highways.

They are the Columbia River Gorge Highway in Oregon, the Maine Coastal Road, Arkansas Highway 7, Virginia's Skyline Drive, the Pacific Coast Highway, the Million Dollar Highway in Colorado, the Going-to-the-Sun Road in Montana and the Oak Creek Drive in Arizona.

The choices were made by the firm's chief road authority and atlas contributing editor, Laura Bergheim, after many years of driving in every section of the country. She covered innumerable roads and places, including super highways and mountain passes, ocean beaches, water falls, forests and prairies.

The choices were made by the firm's (Rand McNally Company) chief road authority and atlas contributing editor, Laura Bergheim, after many years of driving in every section of the country. She covered innumerable roads and places, including super highways and mountain passes, ocean beaches, water falls, forests and prairies.

ACCORDING TO Rand McNally, this is the first time such an effort has been made. In future maps and atlases, the winning routes will be easily identified by their orange colors.

Four criteria governed the selection:

- The road must cover at least 50 miles and be at least 80 percent free of all commercial and industrial developments.
- The road must have two lanes of paved surface, and be numbered as an interstate, U.S. or county route.
- The road must have its own natural beauty and no man-made attractions.
- It must be easily approachable via an interstate or other major through road.

Recently we described the Maine Coastal Road; Arkansas Highway No. 7, running through the Ozark Mountains to Hot Springs, Arkansas, the most popular place in America to "take the baths"; and The Blue Ridge Parkway, which runs through Virginia and past many Civil War battlefields.

Today, we'll begin at the far Northwest and turn onto the Pacific Coast Highway, near the renowned Redwood National Park. The gigantic trees will surely put you in an adventurous mood. This is really a marriage of two well-known roads, U.S. 101, and California 1, and south of the Redwood stretch it will head west and follow the stark and rocky Pacific shore lines.

DURING SPRING and early summer you can watch playful gray whales romping in the ocean until the road bends inland near the town of Eureka. Then you will pass through the popular Carmel section and the adjacent Big Sur country.

Soon you will reach the San Simeon neighborhood and the main building of the famous Hearst ranch becomes visible. If you have the time pull off the highway and pay a visit to the publisher's remarkable estate, which he bequeathed to California. Then it is on down to Santa Barbara and Los Angeles.

The next leg should be the Columbia River Gorge Highway, which extends along the beautiful Columbian River for 73 scenic miles from Troutdale, Oregon to the oddly named town The Dallas. Construction of this spectacular road began in 1913 and was not completed until 1922, but it was such a superb job of building that its bridges, tunnels, and viaducts are still functioning today.

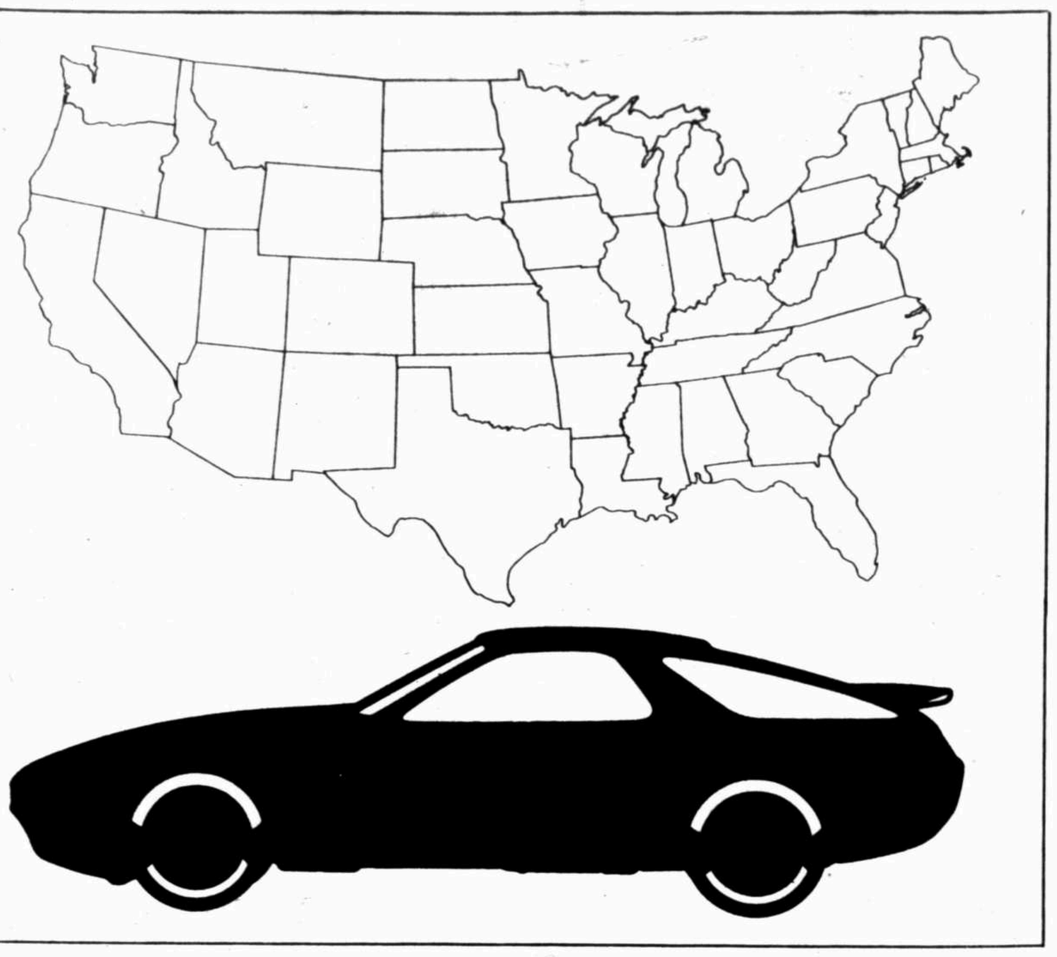

You will encounter 12 exciting water falls in 12 miles of driving. At the Cascade Locks you'll come to the memorial to Columbia River shipping known as the Sternwheeler Museum, which is an exceptional tribute to early river travel. You also will pass the high point in the road from which Mount St. Helens is visible to the far north and Mount Hood to the south. This part of the drive is unusually beautiful.

NEXT COMES U.S. Road 550, known for some reason as the Million Dollar Highway, which winds for 82 miles along the San Juan Skyway, a loop of rugged roads in the southwestern part of Colorado. It is not recommended for the fainthearted.

It rises sharply going over the Rockies and then dives into valleys, going as close as possible to the half mile drops as is possible with reasonable safety. There are chances to stop and catch your breath at recreation areas.

The last stretch is generally considered the most spectacular and most dangerous on the list. This one, which goes straight across Montana's famed Glacier National Park, takes its name from the Indians, who called it Going-to-the-Sun Road.

The road is off U.S. 89 at St. Mary's in the Park and just barely covers 50 miles, stretching over the Continental Divide at Logan Pass. The drive consists of staggering scenery, passing by 50 living glaciers and 200 glacial lakes.

Travel tips termed 'environmentally friendly'

DALLAS (AP) — The Texas Parks and Wildlife Commission, which oversees a park system used by 21 million people a year, offers some suggestions to make your picnic more friendly to the environment.

- Use biodegradable paper plates — not plastic. Even better, take washable plates, cups and silverware which you reuse.
- Pack sandwiches in biodegradable waxed paper, or re-usable containers you take with you.
- If you bring soap, make sure it is low-phosphate and biodegradable.
- Pack a paper sack for your trash and put it all in the garbage can.
- Take empty aluminum cans back home and sell them to a recycling center.
- Use cloth napkins and table covers instead of paper throwaways.
- Use cleaning cloths instead of paper towels.

This is Mount Rushmore, interpreted in 1.5 million plastic play blocks, at Legoland in Denmark. The original at Black Hills, S.D., also has a Danish connection: sculptor Gutzon Borglum was a Danish-American.

Eye-opening sights can be found

Associated Press

Pedal power is one of the best ways of getting around Copenhagen, and as of May, tourists and Danes alike have been able to cycle their way around the city on any of 5,000 bikes made available free (a deposit of about $4 for each bike is refunded when it's returned).

You can take a bike, or a car, along the 2,500-mile "Daisy Route" that winds around the best of Denmark's countryside. Over 300 local attractions are waymarked with the daisy logo that symbolizes the national flower. The route officially opened April 16, celebrating Queen Margrethe II's birthday.

Some of the sights to see might include Legoland — something of a Danish equivalent to Disneyland — with versions of Mount Rushmore, the Statue of Liberty, and other American landmarks constructed out of plastic toy bricks, or the city of Aalborg, just named Europe's cleanest city and planted with thousands of new trees.

Those with literary interests may want to visit the ancestral home of Karen Blixen, known as Isak Dinesen, author of "Out of Africa" and other stories. Being opened to the public for the first time, the house is at the Rungstedlund estate about 20 miles north of Copenhagen, overlooking the Oresund. The home is where the author, a Danish baroness, did much of her writing.

WHERE CAN YOU find a green monkey? In the Barbados Wildlife Reserve, the only one of its type in the Caribbean. The reserve also is home to tortoises, peacocks, hares, guinea birds, South American deer, swans, otters, raccoons, and many kinds of fish and crustaceans. (The monkey, by the way, isn't really green but brownish-gray with yellow and green flecks.)

Another way to enjoy the natural beauty of the island is by hiking through some of Barbados' scenic areas, something that's easy with the daily hikes organized by the Outdoors Club of Barbados. Hikers are picked up at their hotels and taken the starting point, with guides to provide information about history, health and horticulture. Donkeys carry all equipment, so hikers can concentrate on photographing and exploring. The National Trust also sponsors Sunday morning hikes of about five miles each.

Lush, exotic flowers like orchids flourish at Andromeda Gardens, perched on a cliff overlooking Bathsheba on the east coast. The gardens are punctuated with waterfalls and pools. And the Flower Forest on the Richmond Plantation, an old sugar plantation in the heart of Scotland District, has been landscaped to preserve its old fruit trees. There also are breadfruit, nutmeg, guava, soursop, golden apple, cherries, herbs, shrubs, and tropical flowers, with hummingbirds buzzing about.

Or try a submarine. Atlantis II subs dive 150 feet below the surface of the waters around the island, enabling passengers to see fish, coral and a shipwreck. The dives last about 90 minutes. There's also Harrison's Cave, which visitors can tour aboard an electric trolley to look at huge stalactites, stalamites and underground pools and streams.

ARUBA, ANOTHER Caribbean island, also abounds with interesting tropical wildlife and vegetation. Located just off the coast of South America, it's a tropical desert with cactus, divi-divi trees, sea grape, kwihi, aloe and palm trees. There are tropical fish, lizards and colorful birds. And you're unlikely to be rained on; Aruba's rainfall is less than 20 inches a year.

COLUMBUS STARTED it all, nearly 500 years ago, on the tiny Bahamian island of San Salvador. There even is an underwater monument at the spot where the Nina, Pinta and Santa Maria are thought to have anchored.

But since then, there have been few changes in the Family Islands group, of which San Salvador is a member, which makes them appealing getaway spots. There are fishing, diving, almost deserted sandy beaches. Many of the hundreds of islands are uninhabited, but those that are often don't have room telephones, televisions, or other urban intrusions.

Cozumel, Mexico's largest island, has at least 40 major dive sites with visibility of as much as 200 feet in the clear waters. Exploration sites include the three-mile-long Palancar Reef, as well as the Chankanaab and Santa Rosa Reefs.

Besides San Salvador, the best known of the islands are Bimini, made famous by Ernest Hemingway; Abaco, where Hope Town's striped lighthouse is often remembered in photographs; Eleuthera, base for many luxury resorts, including the British royal family's favorite, the Windermere Island Club; the Exumas, an island chain that is home for many little sea villages like George Town, which hosts the Family Island Regatta; and Andros, the largest but least populated island, attractive to divers and naturalists.

JACQUES COUSTEAU has called Cozumel "a diving Mecca," and divers can take advantage of underwater currents as fast as one knot to let them cover more territory and see more. Cozumel, Mexico's largest island, has at least 40 major dive sites with visibility of as much as 200 feet in the clear waters. Exploration sites include the three-mile-long Palancar Reef, as well as the Chankanaab and Santa Rosa Reefs. The area has extensive sponges, underwater caves, and at least 230 species of fish, including the Splendid Toadfish, not found anywhere else in the world.

VISITORS TO CANCUN can inspect deep water marine life the easy way — by submarine. Large viewing windows below deck on the Sub-See Explorer, operating out of the Marina Aqua Ray, give closeup views of corals and fishes, with commentary by a staff marine biologist on board. For more rugged viewing, the marina also has a scuba diving school.

Concierge is slave to travelers' every whim

By Jennifer Merin

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Cynthia Reid, chief concierge, pauses behind her gilded desk in the lobby of the Huntington Hotel for a much deserved quiet moment.

It's barely 9:30 a.m. and she's already found tickets to a show sold out for the next four months, hired a chauffeured Rolls to carry a pair of honeymooners to the theater and located a secretary fluent in English, French and Hindi for an international businessman. She also replaced a stuffed platypus for a tearful child who left one on an airplane on arrival from Sydney.

The highlight of her career, she says, was helping a guest orchestrate an elaborate marriage proposal.

"I arranged a limousine to pick up his girlfriend and chauffeur her across the Golden Gate Bridge," she recalls. "Mid-span, the driver played a video proposal. When the surprised young lady accepted, the driver brought her here. Champagne and a bower of flowers awaited. It was very romantic."

The couple's name?

"The relationship of concierge and guest is confidential," Reid says. "Like that of doctor and patient."

WHAT, EXACTLY, IS a concierge? The French word means caretaker. The origins are obscure, but since the Middle Ages the concierge has been keeper of the keys in castles, palaces and manor houses. He received visitors, supervised protocol, kept records of where important guests were lodged and attended to their personal needs.

In European hotels, the concierge is a long-standing tradition, providing guests with special services ranging from travel arrangements to restaurant reservations, from receiving packages to sending clothes to be laundered.

The service-oriented Four Seasons Hotel chain claims to have introduced the concierge to North America in 1970. At present, most upscale hotels have them, but some guests are intimidated — until they catch on to the benefits.

According to Wolf Hengst, a vice president of operations at Four Seasons, a concierge is a tireless over-achiever who works compulsively to satisfy his guests' every need. They eat stress for lunch, often sharing the repast with a global network of well-placed contacts.

Hengst says the chain's "Private Concierge Network" has taken the service to new levels.

"It enables guests, even those who visit infrequently, to use our concierges as private secretaries, even from a distance," he says. "For example, a guest who lives in London and stayed with us in Houston may call our concierge in Toronto to ask that roses be sent to friends staying at another local hotel, or that prescription eyeglasses be obtained for a homebound relative. The charge is only the cost of the flowers or the eyeglasses."

SERVICE SHOULD be round the clock. At Westin's Century Plaza Hotel in Los Angeles, Hiroko Dreyfus, a Japanese-speaking concierge, wears a beeper and is on 24-hour call. She answers guests' questions about American menus, provides medical contacts, organizes rides to Disneyland and shopping safaris to Rodeo Drive. She also handles luggage repair, locates responsible baby sitters, sends flowers and briefs guests about local events and current affairs.

How can you recognize a fine concierge? The way they say "concierge" can be a key to their professionalism. The correct pronunciation is "kon-si-ayrzh." Those who introduce themselves as the "can-see-air" or "con-she-urge" are probably not members of Les Clefs D'Or (pronounced "lay-clay-door"), otherwise known as Golden Keys Society, the honorary fraternity of conciergedom.

World wide, there are 5,000 members of the Paris-based Les Clefs D'Or, about 160 in the United States. Membership standards are high: five years' minimum in the hotel business with three years as concierge, written test and endorsement from two members.

Do you tip the concierge? It isn't necessary. But if you've received special attention, a note of thanks with tip enclosed is appropriate and appreciated — but never expected.

BRIEFING

Rigs edge up

Workover rigs (above) continue to find plenty of work in the Basin, while the rotary rig count continues to vascillate. Working rigs in the Permian Basin increased by six to 98, while the national rig count took a better upturn.

See RIGS/3F

Electric vs oil

TOKYO — A breakthrough in electric batteries could impact oil demand within this decade says news sources.

Nissan Motor Co. and a battery maker have developed a quickly chargeable battery that could give electric cars the power they need to be commercially viable in two or three years, according to the Ashi News Agency.

Nissan says the new battery, jointly developed with Japan Storage Battery Co., can be charged with electricity in six minutes, one-fifth the time it usually takes to recharge conventional batteries developed for electric cars.

A Nissan spokesman said that shortening the recharging time is an important step in the popularization of electric cars because their mileage is limited, which means they need to be charged more often than conventional cars need gasoline.

According to Masanori Yamaji, general manager of corporate R&D at Japan Storage Battery, the key to cutting charging time comes from the 6-centimeter (2.4 inches) thickness of the newly-developed battery. That is one-third the thickness of conventional batteries for electric cars. He said that due to the thinness of the battery, heat generated at the time the battery is being charged can be easily dissipated, thus reducing the chance the battery will be damaged.

The battery weighs 9.2 kilograms (20.2 pounds), one-third the weight of other batteries for electric cars.

Nissan said it plans to introduce electric cars loaded with the newly-developed batteries within a few years.

Oil prices

A shotgun shack and tank (above) are oilpatch institutions from a time when oil prices were substantially lower.

Oil prices continued to slide this week with the posted price and futures prices dropping in penny increments. Analysts attribute long supplies and the possibility of renewed Iraq and Kuwait production as the reason.

Pipeline to pump up Tom Brown profits

■ A proposed pipeline will substantially improve the cash flow of Midland's Tom Brown Inc.

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

WIND RIVER BASIN, Wy. — A proposed Wyoming pipeline is expected to substantially improve the bottom line of a Midland oil company by providing an outlet for reserves bottled up by high transportation costs.

"The pipeline could increase the net to Tom Brown ten-fold over a five year period," said Don L. Evans, chairman of Tom Brown Inc. of Midland.

Tom Brown Inc. is proposing to join K N Energy Inc. of Lakewood, Colo. in building an 80-mile-long natural gas pipeline that will connect Tom Brown production in the Pavillion fields, Muddy Ridge, and Frenchie Draw fields with K N interstate pipelines in the Frenchie Draw area.

Once completed, the pipeline, which will connect several gas fields in the Wind River Basin, will immediately increase Tom Brown production from .5 million cubic feet daily to 30 million cubic feet.

"There are no wells to drill. All we have to do to get this new production is open the valves," said Evans, who noted that production had been shut in because of high transportation charges.

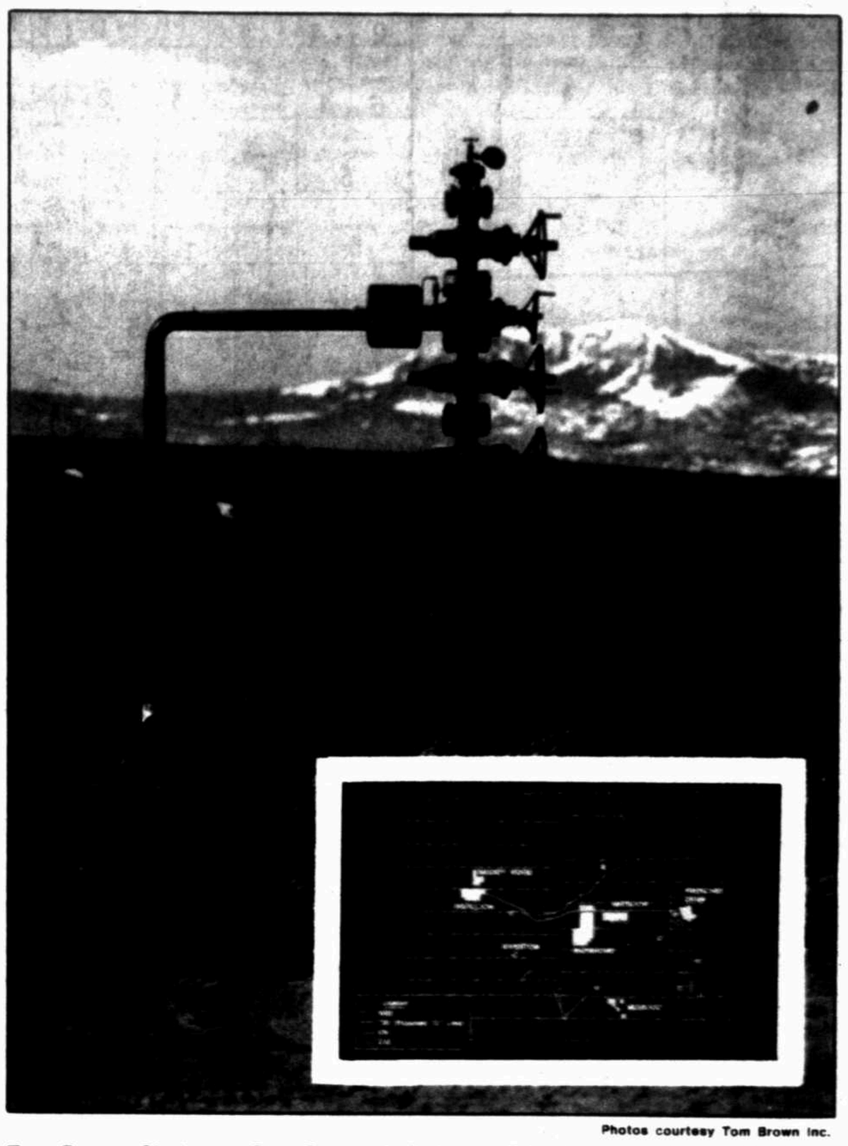

Additionally, Evans says completion of the pipeline will immediately kick-off 18 months of development work which had been put on hold because of the high transportation cost of moving the gas out of the field.

The company has 55,000 acres in the Basin, and 40,000 remain undeveloped. He said reserves in the area of development could increase from 500 million cubic feet to 5 billion cubic feet.

"We were paying $1.12 per mcf for transporatation," said Evans. "It was sort of like paying them (Williston Basin Interstate) to take our gas." He said removing the reserves from "economic captivity" could triple the value of Tom Brown stock (now selling at $4) in less than five years.

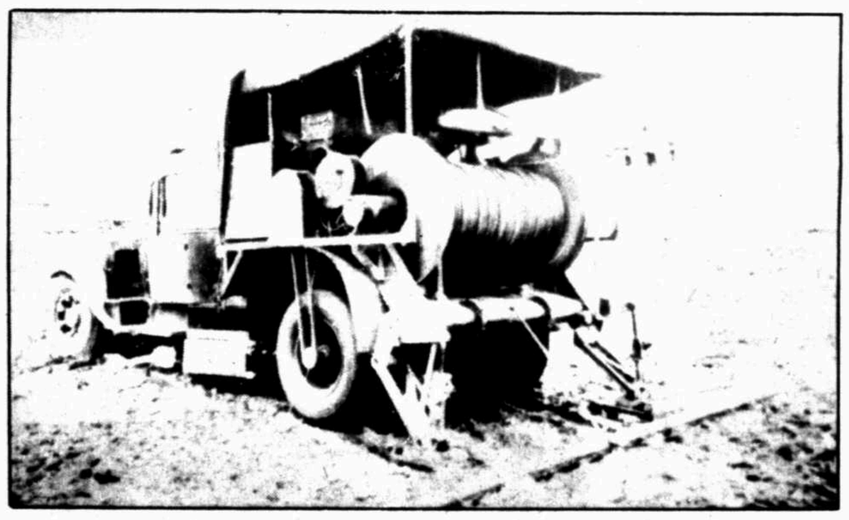

Evans is also elated about the association with K N Energy. "K N is going to

Well log analysts meet

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

The 32nd Annual Logging Symposium of the Society of Professional Well Log Analysts gets underway in Midland today, hosted by the Permian Basin Well Logging Society. The event is expected to attract apprxoimately 1,000 delegates and their guests and exhibitors, including representatives from 15 different countries.

A pre-symposium field trip to the Guadalupe Mountains, sponsored by the SPWLA and the Permian Basin section, Society of Economic Paleontologists and Mineralogists, concludes today. Also on the schedule are a 5K run and a golf tournament, both at Green Tree Country Club. The first day concludes with an Ice Breaker reception.

Two workshops, "Invasion Process" and "Seismic and Log Interpretation" will be held today from 1 to 5 p.m. at the Midland Hilton.

Technical sessions get underway Monday at the Hilton, with over 50 papers expected to be presented over the next three days.

Over 50 technical presentations are to be given at this week's 32nd Annual Logging Symposium of the Society of Professional Well Log Analysts. The symposium is hosted by the Permian Basin Well Logging Society and is expected to draw approximately 1,000 delegates, guests and exhibitors.

The symposium will open Monday at 8:30 a.m. with a keynote address by John A. Masters, chief executive officer of Canadian Hunter Exploration Ltd.

Technical sessions will be held at the Midland Hilton.

Invited papers will be presented by Robert Mills, speaking on "Advances in Nuclear Well Logging, and by Robert N. Sneider, speaking on "Integrated Petrophysics, Geophysics, and Geology in Exploration." Mills is manager of petrophysical research at

Midland firm puts sparkle in the Chalk

■ A Midland exploration firm makes prolific Austin Chalk find, revives Mid-Trend interest.

Business/Oil Editor

GONZALES — Some of the sparkle had gone from the Austin Chalk horizontal drilling play in recent months, as prolific finds and available drilling leases diminished and over-drilling in hot spots brought on production problems in the South Texas trend, but now a big strike by a Midland exploration company has restored some of that lost sparkle.

Moreover it has intensified interest in the Mid-Trend area between the Giddings and Pearsall fields, an area that has never attracted the full attention of wildcatters like the hot-spot fields.

The well that put the Chalk and Mid-Trend back in the news is the No.1 M.J. Borchers. On June 4, as a lateral leg was being drilled at 9,285 feet measured depth, the well encountered strong oil and gas flows calculated to be about 8,000 barrels of oil and 5 million cubic feet of gas daily.

Marvin Gearhart reflects on well logging

Pitts

As the 32nd SPWLA Logging Symposium gets underway this week, participants will listen to high tech talk about such feats as total wellbore imaging, satellite communications and nuclear logging.

Thanks to computers, such things are now taken pretty much for granted, but it was not always so.

Well logging technology has changed immensely since it was first introduced in 1927, and one individual that has seen much of that change is Marvin Gearhart, former chairman of Gearhart Industries, a name that was almost synonymous with well logging. Much of the change Gearhart himself helped to usher in.

When he sold Gearhart Industries to Halliburton in 1988, his well logging division alone had sales of $250 million annually and commanded 15 percent of the industry business pie. Seismic and other services under the Gearhart corporate umbrella made him one of the largest providers of subsurface data in the industry.

Though no longer in the well logging business, Gearhart still likes to reflect from time to time on the nature of the well logging business, its milestones and its future. We called Gearhart this week and asked him to reflect.

"I got started in the business in 1957," says Gearhart, "and our capabilities back then were still limited."

He noted that the first electric log was run in 1927 and that up until 1950 about the only reliable tool the industry had was the resistivity logs.

"We began to get acoustic, sonic and induction logs after 1950," said Gearhart, who now lives in Fort Worth and is involved in the development of MWD (measurement while drilling) technology.

"The biggest breakthrough in the industry came when we were able to move from tubes to solid state technology, because all the tools that went downhole had vacuum tubes and that severely limited us, because of temperatures and pressures."

He lists micro-processors as the second big breakthrough.

Gearhart applauds the trend in the logging industry to become more and more sophisticated and complex, but he also feels there is a definite niche for simple, unsophisticated and inexpensive well logging.

"I think we might be tending toward overkill in some situations," he said. "Certainly there are times when one is drilling in wildcat areas that one wants to call in the sophisticated systems to obtain all the well bore information he can get. By the same token there are development situations where multi-system trucks are not needed.

Even as the industry trends toward a more and more sophisticated systems approach, he thinks there will still be a sizable niche for the "mom and pop" wireline companies who pay attention to sophisticated yet specialized systems. "You don't need the state of the art to do a simple cement bonding log," he noted.

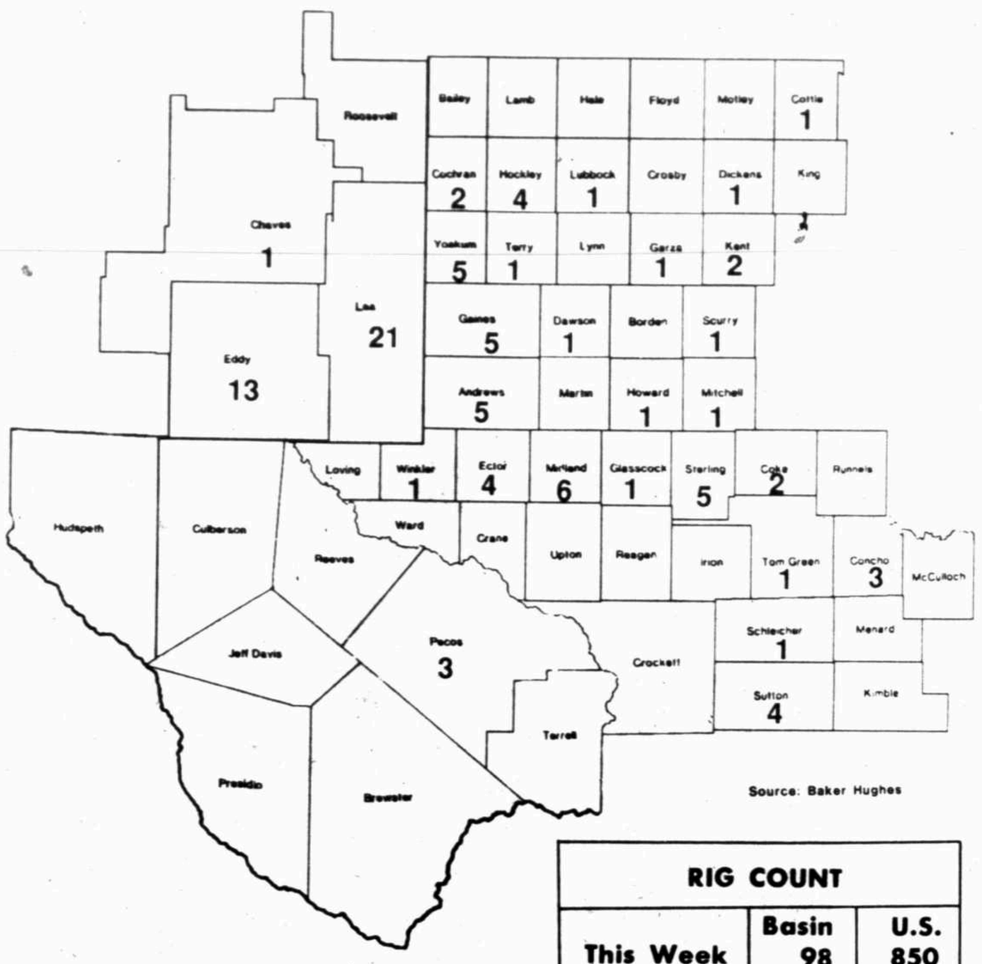

At the same time, he says that one technology most lacking in the industry is the need for new science to accurately detect good cementing jobs. "Be-

Edisto Resources sells 135,000 acres

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — A West Virginia-based company has acquired 135,000 acres of property for natural gas exploration, officials announced Wednesday.

Eastern American Energy Corp. paid Dallas-based Edisto Resources Corp. $34.4 million for the properties in West Virginia, Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, Kentucky and Virginia, President John Mork said.

The properties include 1,022 gas wells that produce 17 million cubic feet of natural gas daily.

Founded in Glenville in 1973, Eastern American is a privately held company.

CHALK: Big strike brings new talk in chalk

(From 1F)

No official test has been done on the well yet, but flows of up to 400 barrels per hour, at 700 psi were encountered with the well being choked back. When news of the strike leaked it became hectic within a matter of hours.

"News travels fast down here when you start calling in the transports," said R.A. "Bob" Manning, whose Midland-based company, Lithic Exploration Co., drilled the well with Barnes Exploration Co. of Nashville.

Within hours TV crews from Austin and San Antonio were on the scene, and the phone was ringing off the wall from lease hounds trying to sell deals and acreage. "It got real crazy," said Manning. "But its a great feeling, we are very proud."

Drilling continued on the well until the horizontal leg reached 2,500 feet in order to secure a reasonable allowable for the well. Allowables are determined by the Texas Railroad Commission based on the length of the horizontal leg.

"We drilled in spurts," Manning said. "We let it flow awhile then drill on."

If the 8-10,000 barrel daily flow becomes official, the Borchers well stands to become one of the most prolific producers in the Austin Chalk trend, eclipsed only by a 12,254 bopd well by Meridian Oil and a 19,000 bopd well drilled by independent Charlie Winn of Eagle Pass.

"We became interested in the play about a year and half ago, and was particulary interested in the Mid-Trend area where leases could still be had at affordable prices. We were able to buy-in in the nick of time, because prices shot up sharply in the Mid-Trend shortly after we bought."

Manning said the partners bought on the edge of the old Peach Creek field, because they thought they had a better chance of finding fractures in that area. It was a hunch that paid off.

Two other wells had been drilled in the area and both encountered fractures loaded with water. An offset well drilled by Dakota Resources of Midland two miles southwest of the Borchers well encountered all water and no oil. Another well drilled by TDC (Texas Drilling Co.) of Abilene, 3000 feet to the east hit one oil fracture with mostly oil. At last report the well was producing approximately 50 barrels of oil and 1,100 barrels of water daily, according to Manning.

"We learned from our lease neighbors and determined that we were probably high enough up the structure to avoid water," said Manning, a native Midlander who owns a ranch at Sterling City and commutes to Midland.

Others have learned too. Union Pacific Resources which had been holding a location a mile and half to the east of the Borchers well, waited and watched and now says it will go forward with the drilling of its No.1 Glenna Nelson.

Manning says Lithic Exploration and Barnes Exploration own an additional 1,000 acres and expect to drill at least two more wells.

Manning said he teamed with Barnes Exploration of Nashville, because both he and Robert Barnes had worked with the Tennessee Geological Survey. "We have been friendly competitors for a long time."

Mobil, Saudis building petrochemical plant

N.Y. Times News Service

Mobil Corp. and a company headed by the son and son-in-law of the oil minister of Saudi Arabia have joined forces there to build one of the largest petrochemical plants of its kind in the world.

The venture is getting under way as middle-class Saudis grow quietly resentful of nepotism and of what many regard as undue influence by prominently placed Saudis.

It is not unusual for royal princes to invest in companies with government contracts, but the involvement in the new project of the family of the oil minister, Hisham M. Nazer, is drawing special attention in Riyadh and in American oil circles.

The oil minister is not a member of the ruling al-Saud family and he has had a reputation for resisting nepotism and other forms of commercial favoritism.

Spokesmen for Mobil and Saudi Chemical Investments Ltd., the Saudi company listed as holding 50 percent of the shares in the project, said that no final decision had been made on whether to build the plant, but that several million dollars were being spent on a feasibility study.

Chemvest, a group consisting of the Saudi firm and an American affiliate, said it was "reasonably optimistic" that the plant would be built.

In a brochure circulated by the investment firm, Loay H. Nazer, the son of the oil minister, is listed as a director of Chemvest and president of Saudi Chemical.

Mohamed M. Attar, the minister's son-in-law, is listed as a co-owner of the Saudi-based company. Both men are described only as "private Saudi Arabian investors."

The new plant would manufacture 800,000 tons a year of methyl tertiary butyl ether, a gasoline blending component that increases octane and reduces carbon monoxide automobile emissions. Analysts say worldwide demand for the component may triple by 1995 as refiners try to meet environmental concerns.

Royal family members frequently do business with the Saudi government or collect commissions as agents for foreign companies.

But many well-educated middle-class Saudis, including many so-called technocrats who hold important government posts or work in business and industry, have grown increasingly resentful of a practice in which control of jobs and contracts and other forms of business and economc influence is wielded by the Saudi ruling family or those highly placed in government. Few citizens will comment publicly, however.

Neither the oil minister, nor his son or son-in-law would comment on the new venture. But Robert L. Cummings, a director and vice president of Chemvest, said: "This is an entirely arm's-length transaction.

be a prime marketer of natural gas in the Rocky Mountains for decades to come and we are delighted to be associated with them. It's a good business match. They control markets, we control reserves." He said the proposed pipeline would intersect with K N pipelines which have access to Midwest markets and CIG pipelines with access to West Coast markets.

K N Energy, which has operations in seven states and supplies natural gas to 300 communities and 221,000 direct customers, will market the gas for Tom Brown said Evans.

Application has been made to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission for a non-jurisdictional pipeline and construction on the project is expected to begin late this year. Actual development of the project will be handled by K N Gas Gathering, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of K N Energy, and Retex Gathering Co. Inc., a subsidiary of Tom Brown.

K N Gas and Gathering will operate the pipeline that will connect several gas fields to K N Energy's interstate pipeline system.

"Our joint venture will help promote further natural gas development and provide additional business opportunities in Wyoming through the gathering of gas, additional transportation alternatives to Wind River Basin producers, and marketing opportunities through the K N interstate pipeline system," K N Energy President Larry D. Hall said in a press release.

MEET: Gets underway

(From 1F)

The speakers are invited to a speakers' breakfast on the morning of their session at 6:30 a.m., in the Hilton. For the convenience of the speakers, they are encouraged to view their slides and have their slide cards checked by the projectioist at the Slide Center, in Room 201 at the Hilton.

Monday concludes with the "Taste of Midland" event at the Midland Center . A cocktail reception and awards banquet are set for Tuesday evening.

In addition to the technical sessions, there will be an exhibit featuring over 70 different companies, large and small, located at the Midland Center. The exhibit hall will be open Monday through Wednesday; for safety reasons, those under the age of 13 will not be allowed in.

Activities have been planned for the delegates' guests as well. They include a walking tour of historical Midland; tours of the Petroleum Museum, Museum of the Southwest and the Yellow Rose Ostrich Ranch; a cooking demonstration with "Chez Vous" and seminars with Merle Norman Cosmetics and cosmetic surgeon Dr. Terry Tubb.

On the schedule for Thursday and Friday is a short course on "Reservoirs and Seals" to be held at the Holiday Inn Country Villa.

Occidental settles natural gas dispute

LOS ANGELES (NYT) — Occidental Petroleum Corp. said that it would receive more than $600 million from 49 utilities and other companies to settle a dispute over expensive natural gas delivery contracts.

The settlement figure, $582.9 million plus interest, represents about half the money Occidental, through its Midcon Corp. subsidiary, was forced to pay natural gas producers to renegotiate or cancel unfavorable supply contracts.

PITTS: Look at logging

cause of environmental concerns and the possibility of communication from formation to formation, this is one of the areas of most critical need," said Gearhart.

He also sees a need to develop new science and technology in the area of permeability. "Our ability to read permeability is not that good." Oddly, he points out, the Russians, who have much cruder instrumentation, have made more progress in reading permeability.

What is the outlook for the industry? Over the short term, he sees a continuation of developing more and more sophisticated modulars and stacking them downhole for more sophisticated results. For the long term, he sees the development of fiber optic cables for the transmission of more and more data.

He says technology will always be expanding in the well logging business, because no matter how advanced it gets, it will never be possible to tell exactly what is down there.

WEEK IN REVIEW

Engineers offer new technique for Kuwait fires

LIVERMORE, Calif. — Carl Henning and a group of fellow engineers at the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory think they've come up with a way to quell the nearly 500 oil well fires that are raging out of control near Kuwait.

The fires, a threatening legacy of the Persian Gulf War, have consumed millions of dollars worth of oil and have Kuwait authorities, as well as officials from surrounding nations, worried about long-lasting health problems caused by the vast toxic black clouds of smoke darkening their skies.

Some 520 wells were set on fire by retreating Iraqi forces and another 80 wells were left spurting out of control, Henning said.

"Workers have been able to extinguish 92 wells so far and another 40 that were spurting have also been capped," he said. Those that continue to burn are consuming enough oil to fill about 10,000 barrels a day at a loss of more than $200,000 for each well.

The engineers' idea, still on the drawing boards but ready to take shape later this month, has attracted the attention of the Kuwait Petroleum Co., which has requested a demonstration as soon as possible.

"We were all sitting around brainstorming early in April," Henning recalled Monday, "when somebody said something, and somebody said something else and we all started to get pretty excited."

What Henning and his colleagues have come up with is an idea to build a gigantic 10-ton metal cylinder, 8 feet in diameter and 24 feet tall with special air vents on the top and a network of a curved fins built into the inside walls.

Midlander edges closer to Texas Railroad seat

Barry Williamson, director of Mineral Management Services for the Department of Interior came one step closer to becoming a candidate for the Texas Railroad Commission today when he announced that he would resign his position at the end of this month and return to Texas and engage in the oil business and a private law practice.

Williamson, a former Midland lawyer and oilman, has been courted by members of the oil industry and Republican party as a possible candidate for the Texas Railroad Commission seat vacated by Kent Hance and now held by Lena Guerrero, said he would announce later this summer his intentions to run or not run for the Commission.

"I said I would come back to Texas and take a look at the situation, but you can't very well take a look unless you are in Texas," said Williamson in an exclusive interview with the Reporter-Telegram.

Williamson said he would continue to tour the state to assess his possibilities in a political campaign as well as talk to political consultants.

He said he will probably maintain homes in Midland and Dallas when he returns to Texas, since his wife Holly plans to attend law school at SMU.

Williamson who manages an agency with 2,100 employees, and has responsibility for federal offshore leasing and production, said he had not discussed his resignation directly with President Bush, but that Secretary of Interior Manuel Lujan had encouraged him in the decision.

IPAA head calls energy policy friendly to oil

AFTON, Okla. (AP) — State petroleum associations must work together to lobby Congress for a national energy policy that is friendlier toward small, independent oil producers, the head of the Independent Petroleum Association of America said Monday.

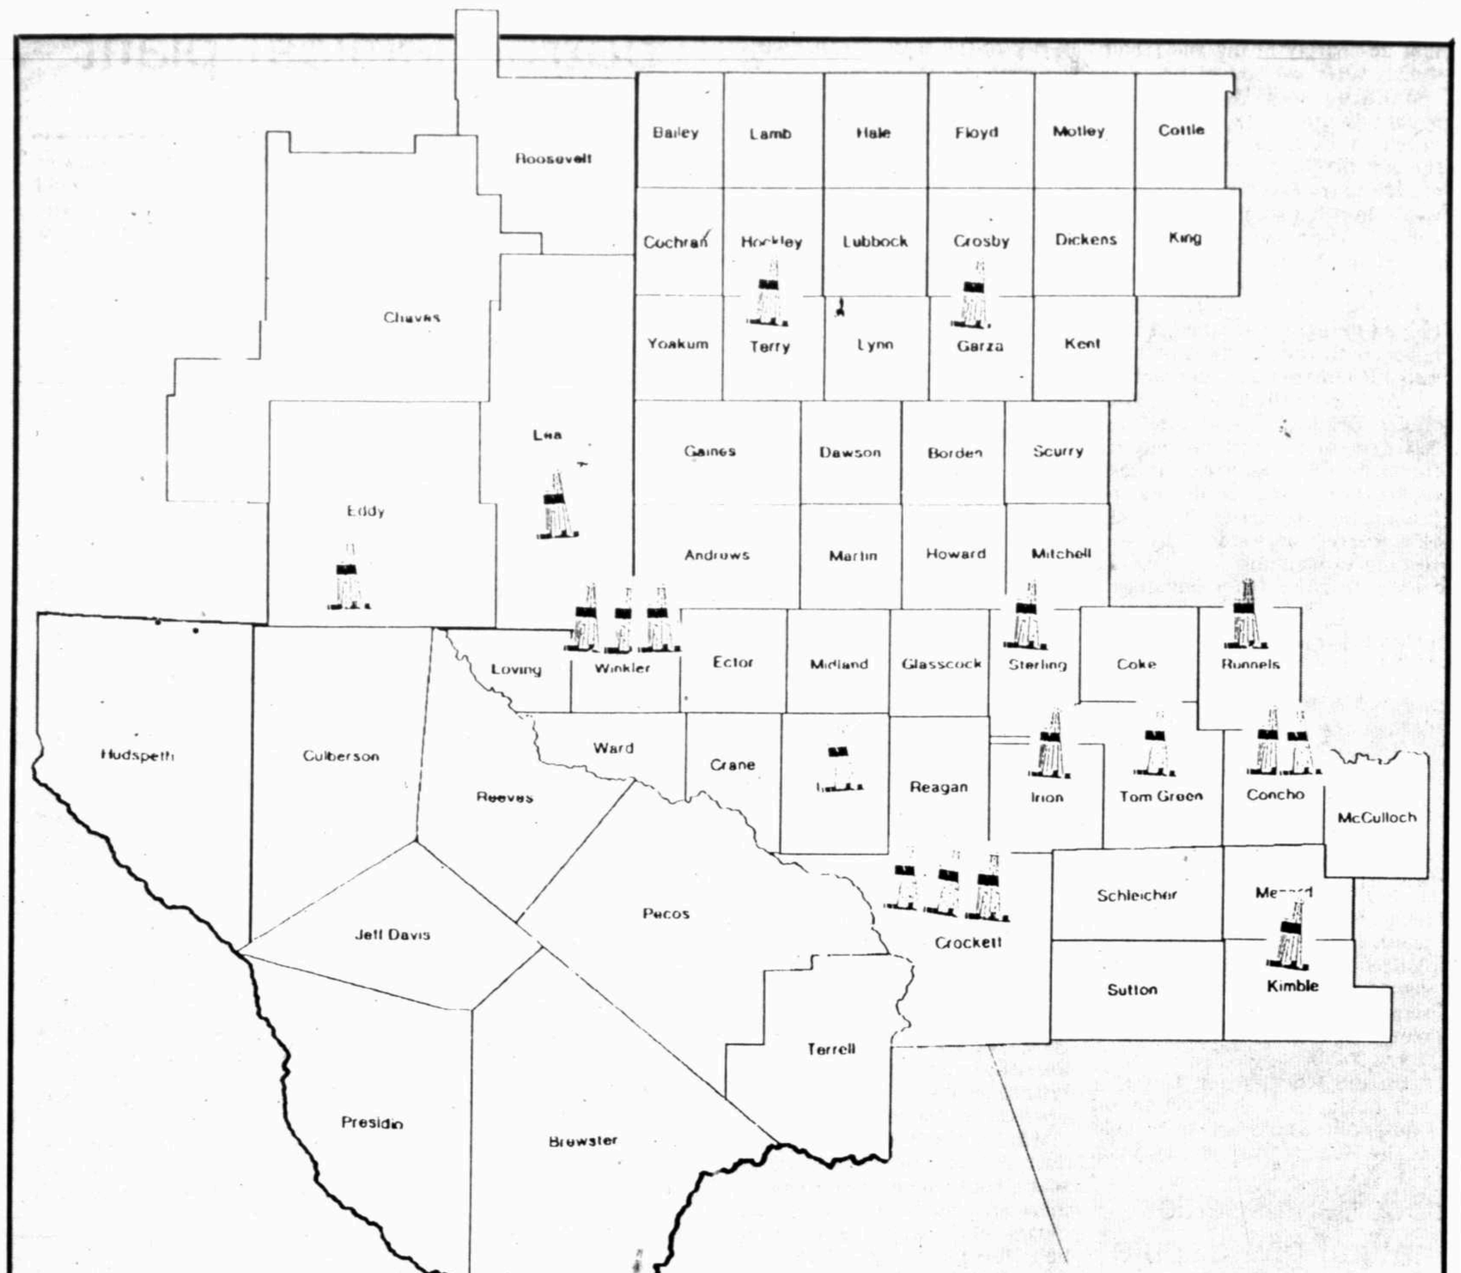

Denise Bode of Bartlesville, a former energy aide to Sen. David Boren, also said at the Oklahoma Independent Petroleum Association annual meeting that small producers need to stop thinking about tax incentives and "start worrying about eliminating tax penalties."

"At a time when you are trying to put together a National Energy Strategy," she said of the Bush administration, "how do you expect me to go out and to attract capital into this industry" without being able to take certain tax deductions, such as intangible drilling costs.

WILDCATS

TRC DISTRICT 8

■ THREE STAKED IN WINKLER. Three 8,100 ft. wildcats have been staked in Winkler County, approximately nine miles northeast of Kermit, by Meridian Oil Inc., Midland. The three will also test the Keystone South and Keystone South (Wichita-Albany) fields.

The No. 426 Keystone Cattle Co. is 2,640 ft. from south and 1,328 ft. from west lines of Section 1, Block B-6, PSL survey.

The No. 421 Keystone Cattle Co. is 1,321 ft. from north and one foot from east lines of Section 3 of the same block.

The No. 424 Keystone Cattle Co. is 1,321 ft. from east and 2,746 ft. from south lines of Section 29, Block B-2, PSL survey.

■ STERLING TEST STAKED. IP Petroleum Co. Inc. will drill an 8,400 ft. test in Sterling County, 17 mile southwest of Sterling City. The well will also test the Sugg Ranch (Canyon) field at 8,200 ft.

The No. 30-5 Ferguson Brothers "30" is 810 ft. from east and 1,980 ft. from south lines of Section 30, Block 7, H&TC survey.

TRC DISTRICT 8A

■ TERRY DRAWS WILDCAT LOCATION. A 10,250 ft. wildcat is set for Terry County, eight miles south of Brownfield.

West Bay Exploration Co., Midland, will drill the No. 1 Larue Tankersley Unit 660 ft. from north and 2,530 ft. from west lines of Section 26, Block C-36, PSL survey.

■ HUBER PLANS GARZA PROJECT. J.M. Huber Corp., Amarillo, plans an 8,700 ft. project in Garza County, 10 miles northeast of Post.

TRC DISTRICT 7C

■ TWO STAKED IN CROCKETT. Two 7,400 ft. tests are planned for Crockett County by Amax Oil & Gas Inc., Houston. Both wells are located in Block OP, GC&SF survey and will test as stepouts to the Ozona (Canyon Sand) field.

The No. 4 Friend "B" is 700 ft. from south and 2,034 ft. from east lines of Section 2, Abst. 4260, a mile southeast of Ozona.

The No. 3 W.E. Friend is 1,986 ft. from south and 2,650 ft. from east lines of Section 3, Abst. 2505, a mile northeast of Ozona.

■ ABILENE FIRM EYES CONCHO PROSPECT. SRG Oil Corp., Abilene, has applied to drill a 4,200 ft. prospect in Concho County, five miles northwest of Eden.

The No. 1 Hawkins is 467 ft. from osuth and 2,400 ft. from west lines of Section 175, Block 72, T&NO survey, Abst. 880.

■ KIMBLE DRAWS WILDCAT LOCATION. A 3,000 ft. wildcat is set for Kimble County, 12 miles northwest of Junction.

Westwood Energy Inc., Abilene, will drill the No. 1-A Mudge 700 ft. from north and 660 ft. from east lines of Section 21, Block 4, TW&NG survey, Abst. 592.

■ CROCKETT TEST STAKED. A 5,000 ft. test, surrounded by Canyon gas production, has been staked in Crockett County, 12.5 miles south-southwest of Ozona.

Amax Oil & Gas Inc., Houston, will drill the No. 1 Amax State No. 2 2,000 ft. from south and 1,000 ft. from east lines of Section 2, Block 401, J.M. Armstrong survey, Abst. 5512.

■ MIDLAND FIRM PLANS IRION EXPLORER. Page Energy, Midland, plans to drill a 6,600 ft. explorer in Irion County, 7.5 miles east of Mertzon.

The No. 1 Doss-Hughes is staked 467 ft. from south and east lines of Section 7, Block 3, H&TC survey, Abst. 295.

■ WILDCAT SET FOR CONCHO. A 3,000 ft. wildcat has been staked in Concho County, seven miles north of Eden.

Janlo Operating, Fort Worth, will drill the No. A-2 Burnam Bros. 500 ft. from north and 2,000 ft. from east lines of Section 15, Texas Trunk RR survey, Abst. 1515.

■ REENTRY SET IN UPTON. A former Cordova (Atoka) producer in Upton County will be reentered and plugged back to 7,820 ft. for wildcat tests by Chevron U.S.A. Inc.

The No. 1 E.H. Shirk is 852 ft. from north and 467 ft. from east lines of Section 35, Block 1, MK&T survey, Abst. 323.

■ ENRICH EYES RUNNELS PROSPECT. Enrich Oil Corp., Abilene, has applied to drill a 4,800 ft. prospect in Runnels County, eight mile southwest of Winters. The well will also test as a northern outpost to the Hubach (Goen) field.

The No. 3-A H.O. Hubach Unit is 600 ft. from north and 200 ft. from west lines of Sectin 56, A.G. Willis survey, Abst. 986.

■ TOM GREEN PROJECT PLANNED. A 5,200 ft. project is set for Tom Green County, four miles northeast of San Angelo. The well will also attempt to reopen '84 Strawn production in the Harriett North field.

Fortune Production Co., San Angelo, will drill the No. 1 McGill "23" 467 ft. from south and 1,610 ft. from west lines of Section 23, WCRR survey, Abst. 4020.

NEW MEXICO

■ EDDY DRAWS WILDCAT LOCATION. An 8,500 ft. wildcat is set for Eddy County, eight miles east of Halfway.

Yates Petroleum Corp. has staked the No. 6 Lost Tank "AIS" State 1,980 ft. from south and east lines of Section 36, T21s, R31e.

■ LEA EXPLORER STAKED. A 13,700 ft. explorer has been staked in Lea County, 8.5 miles northeast of Maljamar.

Yates Petroleum Corp. will drill the No. 1 Eidson Ranch Unit 2,080 ft. from south and 660 ft. from east lines of Section 5, T16s, R33e.

DEVELOPMENT WELLS

■ EIGHT STAKED IN SPRABERRY. Parker & Parsley Development Co., Midland, has staked eight wells in the Midland County portion of the Spraberry (Trend Area). All eight are in the Midkiff Unit. Contract depth ranges from 8,250 ft. to 8,500 ft.

■ IP PETROLEUM PLANS DRILLING PROGRAM. IP Petroleum Co. Inc., Midland, has staked five wells in the Sugg Ranch (Canyon) field, three in the Sterling County portion and two in the Tom Green County portion. Contract depth ranges from 8,200 to 8,400 ft.

Occidental, Algeria sign exploration deal

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Occidental Petroleum Corp. said it signed a joint agreement with the Algerian national oil company to explore the 5.7 million acre Djemma Tougourt area in the Sahara in northeastern Algeria.

The three-year exploration includes seismic tests that will begin immediately and four exploratory wells, the first to be drilled next year. It's the first time a U.S. company has signed a production sharing agreement in the underexplored, productive Melhrir Trough, Oxy chief Ray R. Irani said.

Occidental declined immediate comment on a Wall Street Journal report that China has decided to buy Occidental's 50 percent stake in the Antaibao coal mine and prepay the mine's large foreign debt. The $570 million coal mine is one of the largest joint ventures between China and a foreign company.

Extricating Occidental from the coal venture, along with several other pet projects of the late Occidental Chairman Armand Hammer, has been a top priority for Irani.

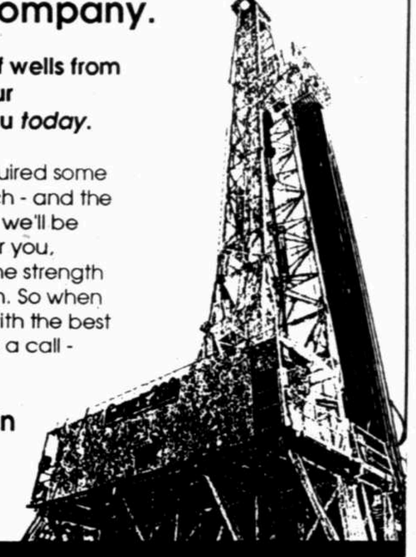

The hardest-working contractor in the nation is the pace-setting contractor in the Permian Basin:

ACTIVITY HIGHLIGHTS

Eddy discovery pumps eight barrels

Staff Report

A Bone Spring discovery has been completed in Eddy County, north and slightly west of the Burton Flat field.

STRATA PRODUCTION CO. tested the No. 1 Aquila Federal to pump eight barrels of 39.7 gravity crude, 15 Mcfd and 115 barrels of water from perforations f6,140 to 6,249 ft. The interval was acidized with 1,400 gallons of 7.5 percent NeFe acid and fractured with 108,000 lbs. 20/40 sand. Gas-oil ratio was 1,875:1.

Drilled to 6,407 ft., the well was plugged back to 6,367 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 6,390 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 3,298 ft., include the Yates at 991, Seven Rivers at 1,284, Queen at 1,830, Penrose at 2,020, Grayburg at 2,204, San Andres at 2,453, Delaware at 2,862, Bone Spring at 4,361, and First Bone Spring at 6,133 ft. Pay was topped at 6,140 ft.

Location is 2,030 ft. from south and 860 ft. from west lines of Sectio 4, T20s, R28e.

Bone Spring discovery
Strata Production completed an eight-barrel Bone Spring discovery in Eddy County, N.M.

Lea County field gains 33-barrel extender

Drilling activity in Lea County has resulted in an eastern extension to the Nadine field.

WESTERN RESERVES OIL CO. INC. tested the No. 1 Nadine "25" to pump 33 barrels of 38.2 gravity crude, 62 Mcfd and 20 barrels of water. The well produced from perforations 7,062 to 7,636 ft., which had been acidized with 20,500 gallons of 15 percent HCL acid. Gas-oil ratio was 1,879:1.

Permitted as a 10,000 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 9,850 ft. and plugged back to 7,671 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 7,707 ft.

On ground elevation of 3,580.8 ft., formation tops include the Anhydrite at 1,645 ft., Salt at 1,758, Base Salt at 2,889, Yates at 2,890, San Andres at 4,358, Glorieta at 5,572, Tubb at 6,566, Drinkard at 6,712, Abo at 7,160, and McKee at 9,800 ft. Pay was topped at 7,062 ft.

Kimble reentry nets Strawn extension

An abandoned well was reentered and completed as a Strawn producer in the Crawford field, extending it south and slightly west into Kimble County.

BRUCE McDONALD, San Angelo, completed the No. 1 Crawford "A" for a calculated absolute open flow of 39 Mcfd from open hole inteval 2,356 to 2,405 ft. Condensate gravity was 29.5 API and gas-liquid ratio was 203,000:1.

Originally drilled to 4,222 ft., it was cleaned out to 2,405 ft. with 4 1/2 inch casing set at 2,356 ft.

Location is 390 ft. from south and 1,980 ft. from east lines of Section 10, W.A. Choice survey, Abst. 1169, 15 miles northwest of Junction.

The well was drilled as the No. 1 Spiller in 1945 by Phillips Petroleum.

Reeves gains strong Fusselman gas well

A strong Fusselman gas producer was completed in the Chapman Deep field of Reeves County by EDISTO RESOURCES CORP.

Edisto finaled the No. 1 TXL "17-39" for a calculated absolute open flow of 3.86 Mmcfd from open hole interval 16,274 to 16,740 ft. No treatment was recorded.

Total depth was 16,470 ft. A 5 1/2 inch liner was hung from 16,274 to 16,740 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,996 ft., include the Mississippian at 15,298 ft., Siluro-Devonian at 15,460, Barnett at 14,162, and Atoka at 13,472 ft. Pay was topped at 16,274 ft.

Location is 1,320 ft. from west and 1,320 ft. from south lines of Section 39, Block 57, T-2, T&P survey, 4.5 miles southwest of Orla.

Marathon stakes horizontal location

MARATHON OIL CO. plans to drill a horizontal drainhole in the Yates field of Pecos County, a mile south of Iraan.

The No. 39D28 Yates Field Unit is 952 ft. from north and 4,600 ft. from west lines of Section 62, Block 1, I&GN survey. Contract depth is 1,281 ft.

Reeves County draws horizontal well site

A directional well is planned for the Chapman Deep (Fusselman) field of Reeves County, 5.5 miles southwest of Orla.

WELL BORE DAMAGE?
ASPHALTINES?
PARAFFIN?

CALL THE ACIDIZING SPECIALIST FOR:
"THE SOLUTION"

• IS YOUR WELL PRODUCTIVITY DECLINING DUE TO FORMATION DAMAGE?
• ARE PARAFFIN AND ASPHALTINES LIMITING THE EFFECTIVENESS OF YOUR ACID STIMULATIONS?
• WOULD YOU LIKE TO REDUCE THE REMEDIAL EXPENSE AND WELL DOWNTIME CAUSED BY THESE TROUBLESOME DEPOSITS?

IF THE ANSWER IS YES TO QUESTIONS LIKE THESE, THEN YOU NEED
"THE SOLUTION...PENTOL"

PENTOL IS A SPECIALLY FORMULATED BLEND OF HYDROCHLORIC ACID, AROMATIC SOLVENT AND SURFACE ACTIVE AGENTS.

PENTOL WILL DISSOLVE AND DISPERSE PARAFFINIC AND ASPHALTIC DEPOSITS, BREAK UP EMULSION BLOCKS, PREVENT SLUDGING, AND AID IN THE REMOVAL OF PROBLEM MATERIALS FROM THE WELL.

PENTOL CAN BE EFFECTIVELY USED AS A PRE-FLUSH FOR DAMAGE REMOVAL, THEN FOLLOWED BY LARGER STIMULATION TREATMENTS.

PENTOL IS FORMULATED TO CREATE A TRUE DISPERSION BETWEEN THE ACID AND SOLVENT PHASES. UNLIKE COMPETITIVE SYSTEMS, PENTOL CAN BE DISPERSED 12-24 HRS. AND LONGER UPON REQUEST.

Lost jobs

The oil and gas extraction industry suffered the steepest drop in employment in Texas during 1980-1990, losing 61,900 jobs. Employment in the industry actually peaked in 1982 with 293,000 workers on the payroll but since has steadily declined to 170,000 workers. Over the decade, the industry lost 62,000 jobs but, measured from the peak, the loss is actually 123,000.

Arkansas firm to help develop Soviet oilfields

EL DORADO, Ark. (AP) — An Arkansas company will join with a Soviet agency to seek and develop mineral resources in the Soviet Union.

The Arkansas company is Fire Bird Inc., owned by petroleum geologist John Gray and Albert Hanna. On the Soviet side, Gray said, will be the Oil and Gas Research Center Branch of the Soviet Union's World Laboratory.

"Hopefully, down the line this will provide many opportunities for El Dorado," Gray said.

The first mission of El Dorado Joint Ventures is exploration and development of oil and gas properties, as well as other minerals in the Soviet Union.

MEETINGS

Downhole video camera topic at SIPES meeting

David Augsburger will be the guest speaker at Wednesday's meeting of the Society of Professional Earth Scientiests. The meeting will be at the Midland Country Club beginning at 11:30 a.m.

Augsburger's topic will be the Otis Downhole Video Camera. The camer is the only fiber-optic service in the oil and gas industry and is used for pipe and casing surveyes, fishing operations and analyzing perforations and open hole fractures.

Augsburger holds a bachelor's degree in economics from Louisiana Tech and has been with Otis Engineering 16 years, the last 10 and a half in Midland as division salesman.

Chevron Chemical to give corrosion seminar

Chevron Chemical Co. will present a free seminar on "Understanding Corrosion Inhibitors" at the Petroleum Club on June 27 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

The company's Trounce oilfield chemicals group will present the seminar, which is designed to take the mystery out of buying, using and measuring the effectiveness of corrosion inhibitors.

Reservations and further information is available by calling 1/800-553-1196.

PETROLEUM PERSPECTIVES

Time is now for oil industry to improve its reputation

By Harry Spannaus

Since my initial association with the PBPA, I have continuously heard about the oil and gas industry's horrible national image. We are a greedy, selfish, belligerent, filthy rich bunch of high rollers who will go to any and all extremes to make a fast buck on the needy and unsuspecting.

Spannaus

My recent visit with one of our nation's lawmakers, representing the state of Pennsylvania, confirmed that this attitude regarding "oil men" still prevails. The press, the public and their elected representatives have engaged in an all-out assault on the industry at large as it confronts such challenges as the Valdez and Mega Borg oil spills, stringent alternative fuel provisions and other restrictions of the Clean Air Act, the Oil Pollution Act, and drastic increases in U.S. oil imports with a correlative decrease in domestic oil production. All producers, large and small, have been lumped together and slapped with a public enemy image — a situation which must be reversed.

Others in the Congress have always charged that the industry is never together in any position, policy or strategy it undertakes for self-enhancement. Therefore, it is impossible to pass legislation for the pleasure and benefit of all because of the many diversities that exist, and until the industry as a whole becomes united, Congress will never enact legislation of significant benefit to oil and gas.

While we must agree that the industry is divided over many issues, such divisions stem from the differences between the majors and the independents and which, most likely, will never be gathered into an agreeable platform. More important is that together we must educate the uninformed on such areas of major and independent diversity as U.S. multinational overseas assets and foreign crude oil production and exports and domestic downstream operations such as refinery and petrochemical plants which allow the majors revenue sources other than at the wellhead, where independents derive their only oil and gas income.

Also, perhaps the timing is now right for a coalition of independent domestic producers to join together with the U.S. Congress in formulating a national energy policy for improved energy self-sufficiency and to erase the stigma of greed and self-interest currently attached to all "oil companies."

Many believe that such goals can be achieved through a "checkoff" program such as used by the beef industry several years ago when a good steak became a near-overnight national health hazard due to its alleged dangerous high fat content. Such farm commodity groups have successfully passed over 300 promotional programs at the state and federal level to fight such adverse publicity. It is estimated that over 90 percent of all U.S. farmers now contribute to such programs.

According to Mike Cantell, chairman of the Liaison Committee of Cooperating Oil and Gas Associations, there is a movement for the "checkoff" concept across the nation's independent oil and gas sector. The basic concept would be to use production dollars to promote energy conservation and decrease dependence on foreign oil — both compatible goals with a sound national energy policy.

The main steps for program initiation would be:

- Legislation would be required at the federal level creating a mandatory checkoff program of one to three cents a barrel on oil and 0.2 to 0.5 cents per Mcf of gas.
- Proceeds would be collected by the first purchaser from independent working interest producers.
- Half the proceeds collected would be used in a national public relations and educational program administered by a board of directors made up of members representing the producing states and regions with the number of directors per state or region being proportional to the represented area's production.
- Half the proceeds would remain in the states or regions to be used by state or regional boards for the same purpose on a more local level.
- Following the passage of federal legislation, a referendum vote must take place among producers who pay the assessment.
- In order to assure Congress of the integrity of the program, the Department of Energy would need to have oversight authority.

The checkoff program appears to have merit. While much remains to be worked out on the idea, the concept is long overdue for the independent sector. The implementation of this strategy would require the creation of a "core group" of the coalition members whose efforts would lay the foundation for passage of the checkoff legislation and the success of checkoff-funded programs.

The core group would establish credibility for the domestic oil industry and the goals of the coalition.

It wasn't too long ago that the National Stripper Well Association attempted to organize a like program termed "A Penny A Barrel."

The concept was valid but a strong foundation was not developed to form an effective coalition in seeking the goals of the movement.

The checkoff program more closely follows like programs that have been successful in restoring images of certain commodities. I believe the working title for this group, "Americans for Energy Independence" is most fitting.

PERMIAN BASIN OIL REPORT

The Permian Basin is an oil and gas producing empire of 100,000 square miles with an oil well for every square mile. Comprised of 54 counties in Southeast New Mexico and West Texas, this far flung industry accounts for roughly 20 percent of the nation's total oil production.

Yet, a long standing problem has been the lack of a single newspaper to serve the thousands of companies and over 40,000 workers involved in exploration, land, production, drilling, oilfield service and supply, pipelines and construction, refining, and transportation.

But now, the Permian Basin Oil Report, published weekly by the Midland Reporter-Telegram, has become the information source for the Permian Basin oil industry.

Packed with information and articles about oil and gas people, products, companies, issues, events, drilling, exploration, and production, the Oil Report appears each Sunday as a section of the Midland Reporter-Telegram. Additionally, it is mailed to every producer, operator and oilfield service company throughout the Permian Basin.

If the Permian Basin is your target market, the Permian Basin Oil Report is the way to reach it.

Freedom to think is on trial

'Inherit the Wind' to open

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

The freedom to think or not to think goes on trial Friday at Theatre Midland.

The trial begins when the lights dim at 8 p.m. for Midland Community Theatre's production of Jerome Lawrence and Robert E. Lee's "Inherit the Wind." The trial is expected to conclude June 30.

"The play is based on the famous 1925 Scopes 'monkey' trial, but the theme is much, much broader than that," said Don Bachmann, MCT executive director and director for the production. "This is not a play that deals with the theory of evolution verses a fundamentalist interpretation of the Bible.

"The play is about the dignity of the individual human mind. The Scopes 'monkey' trial is merely the historical basis. Who is really on trial is humanity itself: that is, anyone who would want to limit a man's right to think.

"That's the major theme of the play. What we try to do is present the issues to the audience and let them make the judgment."

When MCT's play selection committee first chose "Inherit the Wind," Bachmann questioned whether the play held much relevancy for today's audiences.

"At first when we talked about doing 'Inherit the Wind,' I thought everything was a little passe — pretty much the issues had been resolved, there wasn't too much relevancy in the play," Bachmann said. "With all the things that have been going on lately, with the Southern Baptist Convention becoming more fundamentalist in nature, the furor that seems to be going on with Texas school books, I think that the topic is indeed a relevant one."

In the stifling summer heat of 1925 Dayton, Tenn., what began as a simple misdemeanor trial erupted into a world-famous duel between two celebrities — William Jennings Bryan and Clarence Seward Darrow.

Bryan, a noted orator and statesman of the time who for many years was called the Peerless Leader of the Democratic Party and who was a three-time unsuccessful candidate for president of the United States, aided the prosecution.

"He believed in fundamentalism, a movement whose members insist that words of the Bible should be taken literally," states Kevin Tierney in a World Book Encyclopedia article.

At the time of the trial, Bryan was in his mid-60s, having been born in 1860. Considered an authority on the Bible, Bryan accepted Darrow's challenge to become a witness. In the cross-examination, Darrow outsmarted and humiliated Bryan.

"Bryan won the case, but died in Dayton, Tenn., while resting after the trial," states Nelson M. Blake in World Book Encyclopedia.

Darrow, who had earned a worldwide reputation as a brilliant criminal defense attorney, was nearly 70 when he tried his two most spectacular cases, one of whom was the Scopes trial.

The other trial was in 1924, when Darrow, who strongly opposed the death sentence, defended 19-year-old Nathan F. Leopold Jr. and 18-year-old Richard A. Loeb. The two youths admitted kidnapping and murdering 14-year-old Bobby Franks in an attempt to commit a perfect crime.

Darrow's goal was to keep them from receiving the death sentence. Both young men received a sentence of life imprisonment plus 99 years. This story has been recounted in several film versions including the 1959 motion picture release starring Orson Welles titled "Compulsion."

In the Scopes trial, Darrow defended the right of John T. Scopes to teach the theory of evolution in public school. Scopes was being tried for violating a Tennessee law which made it illegal to teach the theory of evolution, which suggests that human beings developed from simpler life forms over millions of years.

In 1925, public school teachers in Tennessee were allowed to teach only the biblical account of creation. The Scopes trial has often been referred to as the "monkey trial" because many scientists accepted the view that monkeys and humans had common ancestors.

"Legally, the Scopes case was unimportant," Tierney said. "Scopes was fined $100, but the conviction was later reversed because of a small legal error. The Tennessee law remained in effect until 1967, when the state Legislature abolished it."

Authors Lawrence and Lee have never denied that the play re-enacts the Scopes trial; however, the drama contains name and location changes as well as a love story.

"It will be interesting how the audiences react and what their verdict will be," Bachmann said. "One of the interesting things that the playwright talks about is that this play really isn't set in Dayton, Tenn.,

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

■ Midlander in 'Cabaret'

Candy Oertling, the former Candy Baimbridge of Midland, stars in "Cabaret" June 23-30 at the Southern Applachian Repertory Theatre, Mars Hill, N.C.

Ms. Oertling is the daughter of Midlander Paula Baimbridge.

Based on the play by John van Druten and stories by Christopher Isherwood with music by John Kander and lyrics by Fred Ebb, "Cabaret" tells the story of Sally Bowles' adventures in Berlin when the Nazis were "breaking the thin crust of a dream world." Ms. Oertling is choreographer for the Southern Applachian Repertory Theatre (SART) production.

She has previously appeared in SART productions, having played Winnifred in "Once Upon a Matress."

Mars Hill, N.C. is north of Asheville. SART receives funding from the Theatre Arts Section of the North Carolina Arts Council, a division of the Department of Cultural Resources.

■ One-woman show set

Gallery 1114 will present a one-woman showing of oil paintings by Monica Burg called "Visions and Patterns of Nature" this month.

The opening reception is set for 7 to 10 p.m. June 22 at the gallery, 1114 N. Big Spring St. The public is invited to attend.

The gallery is hosting its fifth annual open show now through June 20.

The show was open to West Texans. Jurors were Gary Hood of the Museum of the Southwest, Barry Phillips of Odessa College and Monica Burg of Gallery 1114.

The upcoming Burg exhibit, which will be on display through Aug. 2, represents eight years of work by the artist incorporating endangered species, tribal mythologies, dreams and memories of the past.

For more information call 685-9944 or 682-4969. Gallery hours are Wednesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday 1 to 5 p.m.

■ Tickets are available

Tickets are now available for the 43rd annual Summer Mummers, opening June 28 at the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave.

This year's production is the world premiere of "Misled Down the Mississippi" or "Just Say Neaux." The show runs each Thursday through Saturday through Aug. 31.

Reservations may be made by calling the Theatre Midland box office, 682-4111.

The show features an old-fashioned melodrama complete with a black and white silent movieola as well as the traditional olio showcasing dancers, singers, magicians and skits. Curtain time for all performances is 8 p.m.

■ One-man show set

COLORADO CITY — The Colorado City Playhouse will showcase the premiere of "Texas Stories," a one-man stage presentation by Tumbleweed Smith at the historic Opera House, 337 Walnut St.

The production, directed by Tim Haynes, features Tumbleweed Smith commenting on Texas life and playing tape recorded segments of Texans relating humorous first person experiences.

Smith has a vast resource of Texas voices on tape. He has been interviewing residents of the Lone Star State since 1969 when he started his daily syndicated radio show, The Sound of Texas.

"In that period of time, he has gathered the largest private collection of oral history in the United States," said Marian Craddock, publicity chairman for the Opera House.

"Texas Stories" opens a four-performance run June 20 and concludes with a matinee at 2 p.m. June 23. Curtain time June 20-22 is 8 p.m.

For tickets to "Texas Stories" call the Opera House, 1-728-3491. Hours are Monday through Wednesday from 1 to 5 p.m. and on performance nights from 1 p.m. until curtain.

■ Audition dates set

Auditions for the reader's theater production of the 1991 McLaren Memorial Comedy Playwriting Competition, "Flyaway Home," are set for June 24 at 7:30 p.m. in Mabee Theater II at Theater Midland.

The script calls for two men and two women from ages 21-25 and one man and woman in the mid-40's age range. Memorization will begin July 1.

Bryan Williams of New York bested 113 scripts from 26 states to win the annual competition, according to competition chair Mary Lou Cassidy. The reader's theater production will play July 12 and 13 at Theater Midland, 200 W. Wadley. Tickets are $3 and need to be reserved at the MCT box office, 682-4111.

McLaren who died in May 1989, was a writer, actor and radio personality who often appeared onteh Midland Community Theater stage. Memorials for McLaren are utilized int he competitin and may be directed to the McLaren Memorial Fund, Midland Community Theater, 2000 W. Wadley, Midland, Texas 79705.

■ 'Chess' premiere set

FORT WORTH - Casa Manana is presenting the Southwest premiere of "Chess" through June 23.

The production stars Jodi Benson, the voice of Disney's "The Little Mermaid."

For ticket information call, Casa Manana Theater, 3101 W. Lancaster, Fort Worth, (817) 332-6221.

■ Museum sets quilt show

PECOS — The West of the Pecos Museum is hosting a local quilt exhibit June 20 through July 15.

Also, June 26 through July 4, Western week begins and includes "deputies" arresting citizens who are not wearing at least three articles of western apparel.

Then, the Golden Girl Revue is set for Pecos High School at 8 p.m. June 29.

■ Museum school set

Museum of the Southwest's Summer Museum School will offer eight sessions of classes for ages 4 through Grade 4 starting Monday and ending Aug. 16.

Each session is taught from 9 a.m. to 12 noon. Classes are divided into three age groups: Age 4 through K; Grades 1 and 2; Grades 3 and 4.

Session 1 is set for June 17-21, Session 2 is June 24-28, Session 3 is July 8-12, Session 4 is July 15-19, Session 5 is July 22-26, Session 6 is July 29-Aug.2, Session 7 is Aug. 5-9, and Session 8 — Aug 12-16. For more information call 683-2882 or 570-7770.

■ Rodeo, reunion slated

BIG SPRING — The Big Spring Cowboy Reunion and Rodeo will be held June 26-29 in the Rodeo Bowl, located on the city's west side.

Performances start at 8:30 p.m. Ticket prices are $6 for adults, $4 for children 6 to 12 years old. Advance tickets may be purchased for $5 and $3 dollars prior to June 25.

Tickets are available at the First National Bank of Big Spring, Luskey's in Midland, Coahoma State Bank, Big Spring Hardware, Driver Insurance, Spring City Do It Center, and Wards Boots and Western Wear in Big Spring.

Cowboy Poets will be on stage at the fair barns near the rodeo bowl on Saturday the 29th at 3 p.m.

Western Art will be displayed in the barns all day Saturday. For more information call 1-263-8484.

■ Concerts to continue

The Summer Sundays Lawn Concerts at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., continues today at 7:45 p.m. with Joesph and Theresa, contemporary folk artist whose program is "Ballads to Blues."

The concert series is scheduled for every Sunday through August 18 and will end with the Dow Jones Average. In the event of rain the scheduled concert will be canceled.

Regular hours are Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and on Sundays from 2 to 5 p.m. There is no admission fee.

■ Rocker to host show

LUCKANBACH — Country-rocker Jerry Jeff Walker and his band, The Gonzo Compadres, will host a show and dance Saturday at the dance hall in Luckenbach.

Walker will be joined on the bill by his fellow Tried & True Music recording artist, Chris Wall.

Showtime is 9 p.m. Tickets, priced at $15, may be purchased by calling 1-512-288-1695.

In addition, Walker is among the Texas artists performing during the two-week Texas Festival, Kennedy Center, Washington, DC. Midland and Odessa will be represented at the event by the Thouvenel String Quartet, a performing ensemble of the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale.

WIND: Trial gets under way Friday at Theatre Midland

in 1925. It can happen any time. It can be set any time in the immediate past or the immediate future.

"What they are saying (Lawrence and Lee) is that it's happened before, and it's conceivable that it will happen again, and we must always be on guard to guarantee that man has the ability and the freedom to exercise his reason."

In "Inherit the Wind," John T. Scopes becomes Betram Cates, played in MCT's production by Stephen Madrid; H.L. Mencken, the famous editor-critic-journalist, becomes E.K. Hornbeck, played at MCT by Scott Lunsford; and Dayton, Tenn., becomes Hillsboro, Tenn.

The love story concocted by the authors is between the defendant, Cates, and Rachel, played at MCT by Margeaux Harbison, whose allegiance is divided between her liberal sweetheart and her fundamentalist clergyman father.

"The characters that we deal with are Henry Drummond, which is the equivalent of Clarence Darrow, and Matthew Harrison Brady, the counterpart of William Jennings Bryan," Bachmann said.

"We're pretty fortunate that we have a couple of very good, very seasoned veterans in those parts for us. The part of Drummond will be played by Bill Sibley and the part of Brady will be played Stephen Cole.

"Complementing them is a cast of 45 other actors. It's a gigantic cast, and it's made up of children, middle-age adults, older adults — it's a cross section of the town. We have more people in this than we do in a major musical.

"The larger the group, the more complex problems that you have to face," Bachmann said. "At least we're fortunate we don't have a monkey in this show. We are doing the play minus the monkey."

Bachmann described monkeys as difficult animals with which to work.

"The problem is finding one that's really tame and trained. They scratch, they bite and are not friendly with strangers at all. You have to be very fortunate to find one."

The drama has its moments of humor.

"I don't want people to misunderstand," Bachmann said. "It's not just a drama. There's a lot of comedy in the play as well. The attorneys were great thinkers. They knew how to work an audience whether that was in a chautauqua tent or a court of law. You're always there. It's not a slow moving piece at all."

The set for the production also is complex.

"The set of the show is the exterior of the courthouse, and it is one of the largest sets that we have constructed. It will be 54 feet wide, 22 feet tall and 32 feet deep. We have columns that go up 20 feet in the air. There's a lot of hours going into constructing this baby."

The purpose behind the large ensemble, is, Bachmann said, "To create that small town feeling, and, hopefully, to tell the audience that it can happen anywhere, in any small community, really any community, not only in our country but in any country — any place where people's lives are controlled by others.

> "We are doing the play minus the monkey.'
> — Don Bachmann, MCT executive director

"There's a warning in the play that every person must exercise their individual rights, and they put those rights in jeopardy when they forsake their freedom, and that there are always people that are willing to take it away from them if they are given that opportunity.

"And they hide in many different guises. Sometimes they come across as trying to be those people that help you, that care for you, that want to guide you, when, in fact, what they're really trying to do is control what you think.

"That warning, I think, is applicable today and is as relevant as it was 100, 500 or 1,000 years ago. We must constantly fight for our freedoms. It's an ongoing battle."

Songwriters plan business meeting

The fifth meeting of the West Texas Songwriters Association is set for 7:30 p.m. June 24 at the American Legion Hall, 501 Airpark.

Business to be conducted includes choosing a WTSA logo, a name for the newsletter and a song inspired by "Evening Time."

In addition to monthly meetings, the WTSA holds "open mike" nights at local establishments and, in May, parked cars at Twin Cities Speedway during the Memorial Day Concert to benefit 6-year-old leukemia victim Trace Gipson of Rankin. Greg Hall opened the show, followed by Johnny Blaine and the Spur Band, and then Dan Seals. Seals agreed to become an honorary member of WTSA.

The WTSA organizational meeting was held in February. Officers for the WTSA are Roy Barrett, president; Joe Turney, vice president; Ruth Todd, treasurer; and Cyndee Turney, secretary.

The WTSA hopes to enlarge its membership to include people from Lubbock, Abilene and San Angelo.

The purpose of the association is "to create an affiliation of serious minded songwriters, promote the artistic value of the musical composition, the business of music and recognition for the songwriter and his craft."

Dues have been set at $25 annually for members. All dues are payable within 90 days of joining. For more information call 689-8814.

Basketball sends NBC to top of ratings

LOS ANGELES (AP) -- Basketball shot NBC over the top, giving the network a first place finish in the latest ratings battle.

Games two, three and four of the National Basketball Association finals between the Los Angeles Lakers and the Chicago Bulls finished first, second and fourth, respectively, in weekly rankings released Tuesday by the A.C. Nielsen Co.

NBC far outdistanced the competition with an overall average rating of 11.5, a figure that represents a lead of 2.1 million viewers over ABC, which scored a 9.3 average. CBS' average for the week was 8.6.

Each ratings point represents 931,000 homes.

A repeat of ABC's "Roseanne" was the No. 3 show. In fifth place was a rerun of NBC's "Cheers."

Principal conductor to give 6 premieres

NEW YORK (AP) — In his inaugural season as principal conductor of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Orchestra, Dennis Russell Davies will give six premieres in the five-concert series at the Brooklyn Academy of Music Opera House.

Concerts in the 1991-92 season begin Nov. 8, and will mingle traditional orchestral repertoire with contemporary works, offer solo and chamber music with large symphonic pieces and present world-class musicians in unexpected assignments.

One concert will juxtapose the last movement of Mozart's Trio in E Flat for Clarinet, Viola and Piano (K. 498) with the New York premiere of Lukas Foss' Clarinet Concerto (Richard Stoltzman, clarinet).

Band rambles on after almost 60 years

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — They're gone now.

The road houses that once sat at almost every crossroads on the Cajun prairie in southwest Louisiana. The Packards and pickups that filled their parking lots have rusted away. The young couples who danced Friday and Saturday nights away are grandmothers and grandfathers now.

But the Hackberry Ramblers are still playing that same blend of country and Cajun that made them the kings of those hot, Southern nights.

They're still selling Texas-swing and Joli Blond.

"We called it hillbilly music in those days," said Luderin Darbone, the 78-year-old co-founder of the band. "People would dance for hours. There was no air conditioning, not even any screens on the windows. But, they would dance anyway."

The band, which made its fifth appearance at this year's New Orleans Jazz and Heritage Festival, has more than 350 years of musical experience among the six full-time members.

That's an awful lot of notes plucked from the fiddle, guitars and Cajun accordion over the 60 years the Hackberry Ramblers have been performing.

"I have a brick house," Darbone said. "And I tell everyone that each brick in that house was one song we played."

Darbone, the fiddle player, and Edwin Duhon, the guitarist and accordion player, began playing together as teen-agers in the little town of Hackberry — a collection of oil workers' shacks and cane fields 10 miles from the Texas border. In 1933, with the Depression raging and jobs in southwest Louisiana hard to come by, they formed a string band.

"I'd graduated from Vincent's Business College," Darbone said. "There weren't any jobs to be had, though. In those days you worked in the oil fields or trapped or farmed."

Money made with a string band looked mighty good, band members agreed.

"I worked in a government program for $1 a week and room and board," said Crawford Vincent, the 69-year-old guitar player who joined the band 51 years ago. "I could make $3 playing with the Ramblers on a Saturday night. That was big money."

Cajun music was always part of their act, but they considered themselves hillbilly music makers, Darbone and Duhon agreed.

"We were wild for what they call Texas-swing," Darbone said. "We'd play all night and then get into the car and listen to Bob Wills and people like that."

They'd listen as they drove to the next road house or barn dance.

Members came and went over the years, lost to marriage, or day jobs, or death.

"Lots of times, we'd have one of the boys get married and his wife wouldn't want him out nights anymore," Duhon said.

They all eventually got day jobs, Duhon serving as the chief of police in Westlake, Darbone an office worker, Vincent a barber. But they never gave up their rambling ways.

"We liked playing together and the money always came in handy," Duhon said.

Although the 1936 Hackberry Ramblers' recording of "Jole Blond" was the first made of what many consider to be the Cajun national anthem, Darbone considers their 1937 record, "Wondering," to be their big hit.

"That sold everywhere," he said. "They sold out in no time."

Most of their fame was local, however, earned in the roadhouses of Louisiana and Texas in an era when the roadhouse was synonymous with night life there.

"We'd pack them in," Duhon said. "I couldn't tell you how many people fell in love to our music."

There are now six full-time band members.

Glen Croker, 57, plays guitar and has been with the band 32 years. Johnny Faulk, 65, plays the bass fiddle he bought 43 years ago from Sears. He's been with the band about 12 years. Johnny Farque, 71, plays guitar and joined the Ramblers 10 years ago.

All but Croker are now retired from their day jobs.

"We started out with the band being our main thing, now we're back to that," said Darbone.

Ben Sandmel, a music writer and producer who occasionally plays drums with the band, says they haven't changed their style over the years.

"They have an authentic sound and a solid sound," Sandmel said. "It sounds as good now as ever. They are popular because they're not just old men playing. They're good musicians playing."

For 10 years, from the mid-1940's until the mid-1950's the band played at the Silver Star Club, a road house near Lake Charles.

"That was a big place in those days," Darbone said. "We'd pack them in."

The band plays mostly festivals and concerts for nursing homes now. Their roadhouse days are behind them, Darbone said. He promised his wife of 52 years, Mary Lue, that he wouldn't play dances anymore.

"She always waited up for me, over the years," he said. "She doesn't want to have to do that anymore. We still play a lot. People kid us now that we've finally become famous. I just wonder why it took so long."

Student film explores the 'wierd twin thing'

By Laura Myers

STANFORD, Calif. (AP) — Stanford University graduate student Sue Marcoux considered herself the worst kind of twin. Identical. From the same egg as her sister. They look exactly alike for gosh sakes! A genetic spectacle.

So she and twin sister, Michelle — and a six-person camera crew — went to Twinsburg, Ohio, with an "anti-twin attitude" last year to experience the annual Twin Days, an event they considered a hideous Americana sideshow.

Instead of a cynical tale, Marcoux came away with a 22-minute documentary that won the Student Academy Award, the highest U.S. prize for a student film. And her attitude changed, something reflected in the comic but poignant film, "Twinsburg, Oh.: Some Weird Kind of Twin Thing."

"We went in thinking this was a freak show, but when you're there you find out it's really not some kind of weird twin thing after all," Marcoux said in a telephone interview from her San Francisco apartment.

"Some of them are quirky. But it ended up being mostly about how difficult it is, this continual process of separation. The film's about how hard it is to have a close relationship but have separate lives."

Marcoux will be in Hollywood today when the awards ceremony will be held. The winners were announced May 17 by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, the same group that gives out Oscars for feature films.

Marcoux, who hopes to make a career of filmmaking, also is searching for a distributor for the documentary that's scheduled to air nationally June 25 on public television.

"It was when I went up on stage to receive an award for coming the farthest for Twin Days: I came from California and my sister came from New York City," Marcoux recalled. "The emcee asks me, 'Are you coming back?' and I almost gushed, 'Oh yes, every year.' And I meant it. I was completely pulled into the whole thing."

The Twinsburg thing can be weird, but also hard to resist because of most people's fascination with look-alike siblings. The event gets major national media coverage. There are twin Elvis impersonators and prizes awarded for most identical, biggest, smallest, etc.

The 31-year-old Marcoux, a self-described "disaffected Ohioan" and product of Stanford's renown two-year master's degree program in documentary filmmaking, raised $20,000 to make the film in five days of shooting.

Her mother, who raised her identical daughters in Cleveland 20 minutes north of Twinsburg, gave Marcoux the idea of filming Twin Days. The prospect of a homecoming and making up with her sister sold Marcoux on the idea.

"My sister and I just weren't getting along at all," Marcoux explained. "We had just had this big knockdown, drag-out fight. . .. So I said, 'How'd you like to go to Twin Days' and she immediately loved the idea."

Tensions had been building for a while. Sue didn't go to Michelle's recent wedding because she had too much school work. When Michelle visited, Sue asked her to find another place to stay after eight days of sharing Sue's tiny San Francisco apartment.

"We were getting on each other's nerves trying to tell each other, 'Hey, this is my life respect it. Just because I'm your twin doesn't mean I have to drop everything when you call,'" Sue Marcoux said.

With more than 3,000 sets of twins at the event, Marcoux was able to show a wide range of views on growing up the same, but different. She talked to young teenage girls who fight over boyfriends. She interviewed two elderly men — dressed in loud red and orange Hawaiian shirts — who say they still struggle with trying to live separate lives.

Ten page filler turns into $40 million movie

By Paul Geitner

NEW YORK (AP) — Ten years ago, a friend asked Dave Stevens for a favor: He was publishing a comic book but it wasn't quite long enough, so would Stevens whip up a short something to put at the end?

Stevens, a commercial artist, thought it sounded like fun. "I'd never drawn a comic book before," he said.

Stevens, a commercial artist, thought it sounded like fun. "I'd never drawn a comic book before," he said.

The result was "The Rocketeer," 10 pages of filler that shot to cult status and attracted the attention of Hollywood.

Next Friday, the $40 million live-action movie version of his "throwaway idea" — a man who finds a rocketpack that allows him to fly — opens at theaters nationwide. And no one is more surprised than Stevens.

"I just kind of made it up on the spot," he said, modestly. "For me this was just sort of a sideline, a hobby that got a little out of control."

The Walt Disney Co. picture stars newcomer Bill Campbell as the young pilot who finds the rocketpack. He and his mentor, played by Alan Arkin, outwit a gang of mobsters trying to steal the rocketpack for a Hollywood matinee idol, played by Timothy Dalton, who is really a Nazi spy.

The success of "The Rocketeer" is considered nothing short of remarkable in a field dominated by two publishing giants, DC and Marvel, and heavyweight characters such as Batman and Spiderman.

His first appearance — as a backup feature in a "Starslayer" comic book published by the upstart Pacific Comics — was meant as a one-time thing.

Stevens, a 35-year-old Southern California native, said that before he sat down to draw it, he made a list of the things he would like to see in a comic book.

Planes and rockets were the obvious choice for someone who'd been drawing them since he was 5 years old. The story was set in the 1930s because, Stevens said, "I always was enamored of that period."

Since his youth, Stevens has saved photos of old planes, cars, trains and buildings — examples of Art Deco and streamlined design that he calls "the strongest, most compelling visual style I'd ever seen."

The character Stevens created was a young racing pilot, Cliff Secord, who stumbles upon the prototype of a top-secret government project: a rocket backpack.

While the original story wasn't the greatest — "I'm not a writer," he admits — the classic, wonderfully detailed artwork was enough to make people take notice.

The publisher got "a flood of mail from all over the country, asking what it was, who I was, where it came from," Stevens said.

"Dave's art is absolutely gorgeous, particularly when he's drawing pretty women, which he specializes in," said Don Thompson, publisher of the Comic Buyer's Guide.

Pacific Comics made "The Rocketeer" into a separate title, but Stevens, who continued to work full-time for ad agencies and the like, only produced a new chapter once every few months.

After Pacific went out of business, another small California company, Eclipse Books, published the fifth and final chapter of Stevens' series, then collected them in 1985 into a graphic novel that is currently in its third printing.

"The Rocketeer" received rave reviews ("The greatest comic book in the world," opined the Village Voice) and has been translated into a dozen languages, said publisher Dean Mullaney.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, JUNE 16, 1991

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your cheerful persistence and special flair for the dramatic will win you the support of a newcomer who can help your career in the fall. Romance and finance will be closely connected and should enjoy very favorable influences in November. You are more interested in fame than fortune. Do not be too surprised if you get a taste of both early next year! Pay special attention to your health in April of 1992.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Joan Van Ark, author Joyce Carol Oates, The Washington Post's Katharine Graham, boxer Roberto Duran.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You are forming new bonds of love and friendship that will come together later in a beneficial way. Trust your intuition to lead you in the right direction. Your optimism is justified.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Be very careful when driving or using automated equipment. Financial gains are greatest when you convince others that it is in their best interest to cooperate with you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Continue to give top priority to the demands of family life. Your mate or partner shows a new interest in learning about past events. You may enjoy attending church in a different neighborhood.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Avoid engaging in verbal battles that will publicly embarrass the opposition. Otherwise, you could end up sacrificing what you value most. Keep the good will of a close associate.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): People are impressed by your generosity. Concentrate on the needs of an older relative. Someone who rarely goes out would appreciate your dropping in to visit. Just be sure to phone first!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): It is easy to get at things that have been hanging in your consciousness and solve them efficiently. Human relations are filled with wisdom. A drive in the country has great appeal.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Seeking escapist pleasures can be a source of anxiety unless you remain alert to mate's mood. You can do something fun at home without spending money.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Someone whose help you need could balk or get angry. Smooth things over. Your friends are enjoyable even if wrapped up with their own concerns. You begin to feel on top of things.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Too much socializing could leave you exhausted. Give yourself more quiet time. Attend only those events that take place near home or in a restful setting. Problems can be amicably solved!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You and mate may not be on the same wavelength now. Put more emphasis on patient understanding. Romance will be tested. A period of quiet meditation helps you find new solutions.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): People are drawn to you in a magical way. Someone amazingly attractive wants to be your friend. Treat friction produced by different opinions in a light way. Visit with a parent later today.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Someone on the domestic scene may feel emotional or combative now. Show respect for your loved ones' desires. A good evening to socialize with your neighbors.

The bidding:

| South | West | North | East |
|---|---|---|---|
| 2 NT | Pass | 3 NT | Pass |
| Pass | Pass | | |

Opening lead: Ten of ♢

Card combinations can be very tricky. How you play a particular suit can depend on the spot cards you hold and how many tricks you need from that strain.

North's decision to bid three no trump does not meet with this department's approval. With two possible ruffing values in the red suits, North should have probed for a 4-4 spade fit with three clubs. Four spades is unbeatable as the cards lie—declarer need only duck a spade early, then cash the ace of spades and leave the master trump outstanding to score an overtrick.

Three no trump was a different kettle of fish, especially after the ten of hearts lead. Declarer tried the jack from dummy, covered by the queen and taken with the ace. After cashing the ace and queen of clubs, declarer crossed to the king of hearts and cashed the king of clubs. When that suit failed to set up, there was no longer any way to make the contract.

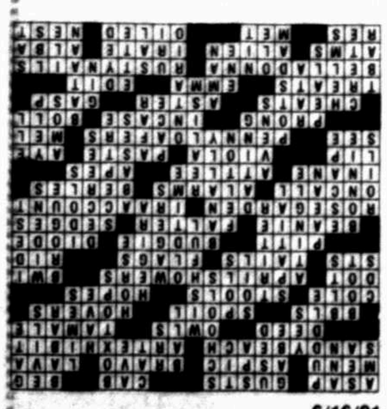

Declarer's play was correct had North-South needed five club tricks for the contract. However, with five fast tricks outside clubs, four tricks from the suit would have been enough to get home. Possession of the eight of clubs was the key to the winning line.

After winning the first trick in hand, declarer should cash the ace of clubs, then overtake the queen of clubs with the king. That would land the game not only if clubs broke 3-3, but also if either defender had started with a doubleton jack OR a doubleton nine. In any one of those cases, declarer simply continues with the ten of clubs to guarantee four tricks in the suit, while the king of hearts is still on the table as an entry.

It took hard work for North-South to lose a vulnerable game on this deal—it had to be misbid and misplayed!

'Star Trek' to end fourth season

By Bruce Westbrook
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — The marathon is two-thirds over.

"Star Trek: The Next Generation" ends its fourth season this month with its 100th episode. And like other members of its cast, Brent Spiner is bound by contract for two more years.

At this point, he and the other TNG actors are phaser-hot. The syndicated show upped its audience by 17 percent this season. Among hour-long shows it's in the top 10, and for men 18-49 it follows only "60 Minutes." With such a viewership, Spiner is perturbed that the idealized show about space explorers doesn't explore with more of an edge.

Creator Gene Roddenberry envisions a future free of prejudice and jealousies, so the crew of the Star ship Enterprise lacks the conflict so vital to drama.

"Frankly, I think we're playing it a little safe," Spiner said last week while in Houston to visit his mother, Sylvia Mintzer, other family members and friends.

Many critics and fans consider the show's third and fourth seasons the best. But the cast prefers the first two years.

The focus shifts between different cast members, "and I have the most fun obviously in episodes written for me," Spiner said. "I have the most trouble with ones where I'm on the bridge doing 'technobabble.' I think I've lost about 50,000 brain cells memorizing that stuff."

Production ended in early May and resumes in early July. "It's brutal," Spiner said.

It still takes him an hour just to get into makeup as Data, an android who longs to be human. But though Spiner complains about his work, "it's only with the right side of my brain. The left side is saying, 'This is the best gig I've ever had.'"

It's certainly the biggest he's had since leaving Houston to act in the New York theater, followed by a move to LA. Since his casting in "Trek" in 1987, Spiner, 42, has become a national figure.

Even so, he's usually not recognized in public without his android makeup of pale skin and yellow eyes.

Those eyes are looking to a new venture this summer – an album called "Ol' Yellow Eyes Is Back." The title plays off both his Data character and Frank Sinatra, whose music Spiner heard while growing up.

On his album Spiner sings old standards such as "Embraceable You." He figures die-hard "Trek" fans will be interested, "as well as women in their 40s, 50s and 60s." Due in stores Tuesday, it's on CD and cassette from the Bay Cities label.

"I don't want to be taking myself too seriously and saying I'm Roy Orbison here," said Spiner, who's sung in Broadway shows such as "Big River."

Since starting "Star Trek," Spiner rarely has done interviews, has appeared on just one TV talk show and has attended only one "Trek" convention, even though the conventions pay as much as $10,000.

But he does read fan mail, and he replies with autographed photos.

"It makes me feel good," Spiner said, "especially when I'm down and get a stack of 100 letters from people who say they love me.

Spiner, who owns a house in the Hollywood Hills, has little social life outside of his fellow cast members. But they've become like a family to him.

He's happy that Patrick Stewart, who plays Captain Jean-Luc Picard, got his first chance to direct a "Trek" episode — "In Theory," airing Saturday night. In it, Data has a romance with an ensign and learns more about human emotions.

The season finale is June 22. It is a cliff-hanger involving Lt. Worf, the Klingon played by Michael Dorn.

"That will resolve the story of Worf and his heritage," Spiner said.

Currently, Dorn is appearing in "Star Trek VI: The Undiscovered Country," which began filming at Paramount the day after TNG wrapped. He's playing Worf's grandfather in the story, which stitches the "Trek" sagas together. (TNG begins 85 years after the first series.) "That will be the last movie, so they're trying to link the two," Spiner said. "Shatner has a speech at the end saying it's time to pass this on to the next generation, or something subtle like that."

He's unsure about next season's story lines, "but I know we're gonna see Lore again" (Data's evil twin brother).

Wil Wheaton, who left the show, may return on occasion, and Whoopi Goldberg also will be back. Though her Oscar win for "Ghost" puts her in more demand, she works only one day per episode, eight episodes per year.

The ship's "holodeck" fantasies also should continue, giving Spiner a chance to play other characters "as Data tries on different clothes of humanity."
