Networks dodge bullet, agree to police TV-program violence

■ Cable industry offers ratings, endorses technology permiting parents to block objectionable broadcasts.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Cable and broadcast networks effectively stopped congressional efforts to restrict violent television programs by agreeing Tuesday to police themselves.

The broadcast television industry announced plans for an independent monitoring system to assess the amount of violence on the tube.

Cable television went a step farther, agreeing to begin rating its programs for violence and endorsing technology that would permit parents to block violent shows from their homes.

The agreement has been endorsed by a large number of cable channels, including Bravo, Disney, HBO, MTV, The Nashville

Attorney Ron Hoevet, top, and Jeff Gillooly, Tonya Harding's ex-husband

PORTLAND, Ore. — Jeff Gillooly pleaded guilty to racketeering Tuesday and struck a deal with prosecutors to testify that his ex-wife, Tonya Harding, approved the assault on Olympic figure skating rival Nancy Kerrigan.

Under the deal, Gillooly will be exempt from any other charges, including those that may grow out of a federal investigation. He agreed to serve 24 months in prison and pay a $100,000 fine.

Gillooly's lawyer, Ron Hoevet, said his client hoped Harding would also admit her involvement in the plot.

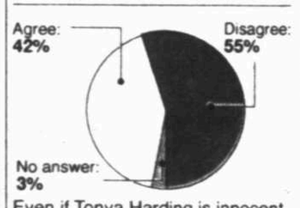

"Jeff has a message for Tonya — he hopes that she will now do what he has done and move quickly to resolve the charges that will surely be brought against her," Hoevet said.

Basin warms to sunnier forecast as storms, snow exit

Staff Report

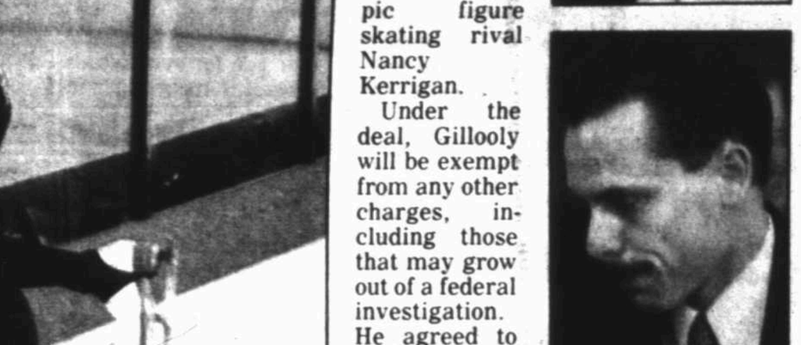

It was fun while it lasted, but the snow has finally gone for good.

The weekend seemed more like winter in Colorado than in Texas, as two cold fronts blasted through the area — the last system carrying clouds, freezing precipiation and icy conditions. The storms finally exited the area Tuesday.

Whatever snow was left from the fall that began Sunday night and continued through late Monday morning slowly melted away in bright sunshine and temperatures that reached into the mid-40s on Tuesday. And forecasters at the National Weather Service in Midland predict a warming trend through the weekend.

After another night of temperatures in the teens, today's high should reach back into the mid-50s.

'Dos, don'ts' of state political campaign code put candidates on straight, narrow

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

There are more details to "dos and don'ts" of political campaigning than are readily apparent.

Many are Texas Election Code violations, such as placing signs in highway rights of way, candidates receiving cash donations of more than $100 and candidates not reporting campaign contributions and expenses.

Some violations could land the candidate in jail or prison. The candidate or contributor could be fined or just warned to rectify a wrong.

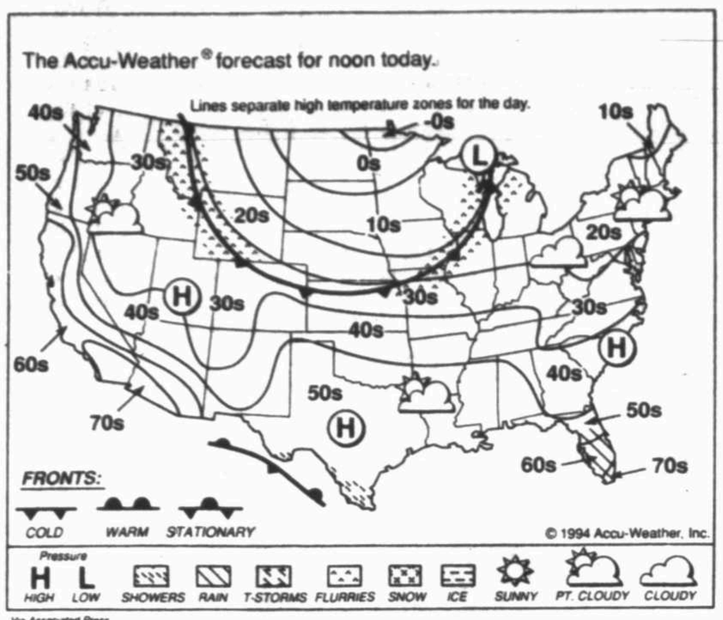

"I've had violations reported to me before," said Midland County Attorney Mark H. Dettman. "And because the Texas Election Code is somewhat complicated, I'll call the candidates to get them to remedy the problem. They have. That's the only fair thing to do. That happens every election year."

The don'ts also suggest dos.

Texas law prohibits the placing of political signs in the right of way of highways. To do so is a misdemeanor offense punishable by a fine of up to $500.

HARDING: Ex-husband says she OK'd attack

(From 1A)

crime has now been revealed."

Harding, who is training for the Winter Olympics that begin next week in Norway, issued a statement Tuesday again denying any role in the attack.

"Jeff Gillooly's accusations appear to evidence a continued practice of abusive conduct intended to disrupt Tonya Harding's life and destroy her career," the statement said.

Her attorney, Robert Weaver Jr., angrily denounced Hoevet's statements.

"It is my hope that charges will not be leveled against Tonya Harding, but bear in mind that there has been no formal accusation at this point," Weaver said.

"If there is, she intends to respond in the court of law, not the arena of public opinion, which as we have seen today, is easily manipulated and frequently uninformed."

Harding has said she didn't learn until days after returning to Portland Jan. 10 that people close to her were involved in the Jan. 6 assault on Kerrigan. Harding has not been charged.

In court, a somber Gillooly spoke quietly and responded to Multnomah County Circuit Judge Donald Londer with short answers.

"What is your plea?" Londer asked.

"Guilty," Gillooly said.

According to court documents released Tuesday, Gillooly attended a Dec. 28 meeting with the three other men charged in the attack to discuss how to prevent Kerrigan from competing in the U.S. Figure Skating Championships in Detroit.

"After the meeting, while driving toward home, Tonya approved the plan that had been discussed and gave the OK for the assault on

Jeff Gillooly's appearance in court became the latest flash point in a story set against blinding Olympic ambition and the millions of dollars available for gold-medal-winning skating stars.

Nancy Kerrigan. The final decisions was hers to make," Hoevet told reporters.

In the court documents, Gillooly told the FBI that Harding gave final approval of the plan by saying, "OK, let's do it."

Gillooly, 26, confessed to seven crimes in the attack, including two counts that he said involved Harding: conspiracy and perjury.

Harding won the national championship after Kerrigan was struck on the right leg, forcing her to withdraw. Both women were named to the Olympic team.

Gillooly said he asked Harding's bodyguard, Shawn Eckardt, to send alleged hit man Shane Stant and alleged getaway driver Derrick Smith to Detroit to club Kerrigan on the knee.

Smith told authorities that at the Dec. 28 meeting, Gillooly promised to pay each of them $1,000 a week if Harding got to the Olympics. Gillooly said Harding would get endorsements and lots of money if she won, but first her chief competitor had to be disabled, according to a statement released Tuesday that Smith made to the FBI.

During the meeting, Eckardt suggested cutting Kerrigan's hamstring or Achilles tendon, but everyone else opposed that plan, the statement said. Smith said he suggested hurting Kerrigan's arm, but Gillooly said she could skate with her arm in a cast. Gillooly insisted that Kerrigan's right leg had to be injured, according to the statement.

The court records show the FBI received an anonymous call implicating Harding, Gillooly, Eckardt and Smith while the skater was still in Detroit.

When she and Gillooly returned to Portland, agents watched as they met with Eckardt to concoct a cover story, called Smith from public telephones and repeatedly drove by Eckardt's house in an attempt to monitor his interview with the FBI, the documents said.

Harding personally obtained Kerrigan's practice schedule, both in Boston and Detroit, and provided a picture of her from a magazine, Gillooly told authorities.

She became irate when the attack had not taken place by New Year's Eve, and demanded her $2,000 back from Eckardt, Gillooly said in his confession.

"I know Jeff deeply regrets his involvement in this crime," Hoevet said.

Prosecutors said Kerrigan and her family supported the plea bargain.

Before Gillooly's hearing, Norm Frink, deputy district attorney in Multnomah County, won an indefinite extension of the deadline for indictments in the case.

"There is a possibility of returning indictments against individuals other than those currently charged," Frink told Londer.

Londer told Frink to return to court Feb. 8 to propose a new date for returning indictments.

Stant and Smith also were in court Tuesday to get new attorneys. They declined to comment on the case.

Meanwhile, a special figure skating panel met Tuesday for the first time in Colorado Springs, Colo., to consider stripping Harding of her U.S. Figure Skating Association membership. That membership is needed for her to compete in the Olympics.

After the four-hour meeting, Bill Hybl, the former U.S. Olympic Committee president who chairs the panel, said the organization should have a recommendation by the end of the week on whether a disciplinary hearing should be held. The five-member panel was scheduled to meet again Friday and Saturday.

Mike Moran, spokesman for the U.S. Olympic Committee, said "it would be inappropriate for the USOC to comment on today's events."

The Games begin Feb. 12, but the roster can be changed as late as Feb. 21. The women's figure skating competition begins Feb. 23.

If Harding is removed from the team, she would have several avenues of appeal, both within the Olympic community and in the courts.

A serious-looking Harding continued to train Tuesday before hundreds of onlookers at the shopping center where she skates.

A large crowd gathered to watch. Someone had put a big sign reading "Portland is Proud of Tonya" on the railing above the rink.

Harding interrupted her practice four times to admonish the crowd for using camera flashes while photographing her skating.

"If you guys keep flashing, I'm going to kill myself like I did yesterday. Now stop it," she said, referring to a particularly nasty fall she took Monday.

SURGES: Warming trend nears

(From 1A)

By Friday, the mercury will be pushing toward the 60-degree mark during the day, said a NWS forecaster.

Temperatures will not begin to drop again until Sunday, when another cold front is expected to hit the area. However, the NWS forecaster said no snow or rain will be associated with the next front.

Sunshine will continue through today and the high will be near 55, with southwest winds at 10-15 mph. Tonight should be partly cloudy with a low between 20-25.

Thursday will see an increase in high clouds with a high in the upper 50s.

After an overnight low of 11, Tuesday's high reached 45, compared to the record high for that date of 80 set in 1963. The record low was minus 11 set in 1985.

STATE

Light snow and sleet fell across Southeast Texas and the middle Texas coast on Tuesday, the same day that temperatures soared in the Panhandle, leading the National Weather Service to issue a tongue-in-cheek report concerning the phenomenon.

"It was a heat wave in the Panhandle this afternoon as ... temperatures surged past the freezing mark. At Dalhart, the 3 p.m. temperature climbed to 37 degrees, compared to its morning and statewide low of 1 degree," the weather service said.

No significant accumulations of snow were reported or expected across Southeast Texas or the middle coast, the weather service said. The wind was blowing from the north at most locations between 5 and 15 mph, with some gusts near 30 mph along the lower coast.

High pressure continued to control the weather across South Texas at the surface on Tuesday afternoon. Skies cleared across the hill country, while the remainder of the area remained under a mostly cloudy to cloudy sky.

Mid-afternoon temperatures at mid-afternoon ranged from 34 degrees at victoria, where some light snow was falling, to 47 degrees at Del Rio and Port Isabel.

Skies are expected to be clear to partly cloudy today.

Late-afternoon temperatures in the Panhandle on Tuesday ranged from 31 degrees at Amarillo to 47 at Sanderson. Winds were west to north at 5 to 15 mph over most areas, but occasionally gusty.

Highs today are expected to reach into the 40s and 50s, except for a few 60s along the Rio Grande Valleys.

An area of high pressure over the Big Bend area worked with a weak cold front nosing into the northwestern sections. West to southwest winds returned to the area late Sunday afternoon, allowing temperature to rise quickly under sunny skies.

The snow in Southeast Texas was reported at Beaumont, Galveston and also in Houston — the first snowfall there since 1989.

"It's beautiful. I can't believe it. A delivery boy came in and said, 'It's snowing!' We didn't believe him, we had to come see for ourselves," said Linda Garza, a copy machine operator at Baker & Botts law firm in Houston.

But with air temperatures above freezing, the snowflakes melted almost as quickly as they landed.

NATION

Stiff winds and heavy snow swept across the northern Plains states on Tuesday, and freezing weather extended south to the coast of the Gulf of Mexico.

A low pressure system and an associated cold front swept southeastward out of Canada during the night, spreading snow across parts of Montana, Nebraska and the Dakotas.

Snowfall was heavy across the Big Horns of northern Wyoming and the Black Hills of western South Dakota, the National Weather Service said.

Six inches of snow was reported in Wyoming at Arrowhead Lodge, while 10 to 12 inches fell in the Black Hills.

Snow was lighter on the Plains, but strong northwesterly winds caused considerable blowing and drifting of snow. Blowing snow advisories were posted across the mountains of southeastern Wyoming, much of South Dakota and south-central North Dakota.

No travel was advised in western and central North Dakota during the morning because of blowing snow and winds up to 50 mph.

"The roads are clear, but you just can't see," said trucker Duane Hedland, who said it took him three hours to drive about 30 miles from Williston.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

Pick 3 Texas

AUSTIN (AP) — The Lotto Texas Pick 3 winning numbers drawn Tuesday by the Texas Lottery, in this order:

5-6-2

DODGE: Cable to rate shows for violence

(From 1A)

Network, Playboy and The Weather Channel.

The two major industry segments held news conferences on Capitol Hill in an effort to derail proposals to legislate limits on violent broadcasts.

And Sen Paul Simon, D-Ill., said he plans to drop current efforts to pass a bill restricting violent shows, though he left the door open to trying again if independent monitoring doesn't result in improvement.

But beyond an independent monitor and being opposed to gratuitous violence, cable operators and broadcasters had trouble finding much common ground.

For example, Winston H. Cox, president of the Showtime network, said the cable industry assumes there would be one independent monitoring program for both cable and broadcasters.

But CBS Vice President Martin D. Franks said the four major broadcast networks are open to the idea of a single monitor but are inclined to have their own system separate from cable.

And while Franks spoke of an annual report on violence, Cox talked about reports two to four times a year.

The biggest difference focused on rating shows and finding ways to limit children's access to them, with cable endorsing ratings and blocking technology, while the broadcasters declined to join in.

"This is the dawning of a new era ... they are to be congratulated," said Rep. Edward J. Markey, D-Mass., chairman of the House telecommunications subcommittee at a news conference where cable companies announced plans to rate their programs.

Cox said the cable industry plans the rating system to give parents more information on the shows that appear.

"There should be no surprises to viewers when they turn on their TV," said Cox, representing the National Cable Television Association.

He also endorsed the so-called V-chip, a technological device that would permit parents to block from their television sets any program that was rated as violent.

Markey explained that computer chips included in all television sets starting last year can be modified to block violent programming at a cost of 10 to 15 cents each. The chips are currently used for closed-captioning for those who can't hear.

"We're sort of updating the on-off switch," Cox said. "We're sort of giving parents the same control today that parents may have had 20 years ago," he said.

The difference, said Cox, is that in years past there were only a few channels to keep track of and there was more likely to be a parent home to monitor what children watched.

"Parents need the technology that enables them to protect their family from the 500-channel revolution," Markey said.

Cox called for discussions to determine what constitutes violence — whether to include cartoons and historical shows or to concentrate on violent dramas such as crime shows. He said sports and news shows are not expected to be rated.

He estimated that a rating system could be set up in six to nine months and blocking technology within a year.

CODE: Campaign don'ts also suggest dos

(From 1A)

Whether or not that sign is in its rightful place, it must have a disclaimer, such as "political advertising" paid for by a specific person, such as the candidate or the treasurer, or a specific committee, and the address of the payer. A violation of that law is punishable by a maximum one-year jail sentence and/or a fine of up to $3,000.

However, disclaimers are not required on campaign whatnots and could-be memorabilia, such as buttons, pins, hats and emery boards.

Another violation would be for a candidate who does not then hold public office to represent that he or she is already in office. A non-office-holding candidate who uses a representation of the state seal in political advertising would be in violation.

The Highway Beautification Act prohibits a candidate from putting a political sign within 500 feet of a state highway that is part of the state primary system without securing a state permit.

In Midland, portions of that highway system would include Big Spring Street and the Rankin Highway, which are part of Texas Highway 349; Andrews Highway and the Garden City Highway, part of Texas Highway 158; and the part of Wall Street that connects Andrews Highway to Big Spring Street.

The application fee is $200. If approved, the permit per sign is $100.

No political signs are allowed within 500 feet of an interstate highway without a permit.

A Midland city code requires that the bottom of a large political sign, one greater than a yard sign, must be at least 4 feet above the ground. The clearance probably is required to prevent obstruction of sight. "You can be in your car and still see" traffic and other movement.

When it comes to money, the Texas Election Code forbids cash political contributions of more than $100.

"If it is more than $100, it has to be by check," Dettman said. To do otherwise is an offense punishable by a maximum one-year jail sentence and/or a $3,000 fine.

By state law, a candidate is prohibited from taking a campaign contribution of any amount from a corporation or a labor union, Dettman said. "You just have to do it (contribute) in your own name."

A violation of that law is a third-degree felony punishable by imprisonment for two to 10 years and/or a maximum fine of $10,000.

Dettman said candidates must report individual contributions of more than $50 and the name and address of those contributors. Candidates must report expenditures of more than $50.

Depending on the severity, failure report a contribution could be punishable by jail time or fine.

In Midland, candidates' files of campaign contributions and expenditures are in the Midland County Elections Administrator's Office.

Candidates who accept campaign contributions in violation of law or who make illegal expenditures are "liable to each opposing candidate for twice that amount," Dettman said. "And you are liable to the state of Texas for three times that amount."

Dettman said that when he was running political office — the county attorney's post, in 1984 — "I was reading the election code every night. The public expects you (as a candidate) to be familiar with it."

The Texas Election Code is in response to "the history of dirty politics," Dettman said, and is an attempt to encourage fairness in political campaigns.

The World in brief

■ Crowds shout racist slogans at Biehls

CAPE TOWN, South Africa — Supporters of three men accused of murdering American student Amy Biehl shouted racist slogans at her mother and sister outside the courthouse Tuesday.

About 20 black youths sitting on the courthouse steps refused to move when the Biehls tried to pass after Tuesday's hearing. They shouted "Kill Americans" and "One Settler, One Bullet" — settler is a derogatory term for whites.

"I can't be hurt any more than I already am," Biehl's mother, Linda, said later.

Linda and Molly Biehl, who had visited Cape Town with the rest of the family in October, returned for the trial after reading reports of witnesses being intimidated by supporters of the accused.

"We were concerned about the intimidation," Mrs. Biehl said. "After all, there has to be respect and dignity at a trial."

Amy Biehl, 26, a Fulbright scholar from Newport Beach, Calif., was beaten and stabbed to death Aug. 25 by a mob of black youths while she was driving friends home to Guguletu, a township near Cape Town.

She was killed two days before she was to return to the United States after working a year at the mainly black University of the Western Cape.

■ Gunman doesn't injure Iranian president

TEHRAN, Iran — President Ali Akbar Hashemi Rafsanjani escaped injury today when a gunman opened fire from a crowd of worshipers gathered for a ceremony at Ayatollah Khomeini's mausoleum, the Iranian press reported.

According to state-run Iranian television, which broadcast a videotape of the incident, without showing the assailant, five shots were "fired into the air." No one was wounded, reports said.

The ceremony was commemorating the 15th anniversary of the Iranian Revolution, and Rafsanjani finished his speech after the incident.

The gunman, who was arrested and later identified as Kourosh or Cyrus, 26, told investigators that he had no intention of assassinating the president. "I wanted to break up the ceremony," he was quoted as saying by the state-run news agency, IRNA.

The 10 Days Of Dawn, an annual period of festivities marking the anniversary of the Iranian Revolution, was begun on Tuesday at Khomeini's mausoleum.

Speaking from a balcony of the ornate mausoleum on Tuesday, the president was shielded by his bodyguards immediately after the first shot.

"I initially thought it was a light bulb blowing out," Rafsanjani said Tuesday night during a televised interview. "Then I realized that it was a bullet. There is no cause for concern. The bullets were fired from a long distance. This was a minor incident when one looks at the thousands of people who were there for the ceremony."

■ Russian leaders clash on Bosnian raids

MOSCOW — Russian leaders clashed Tuesday over the possibility of air strikes against Serbian forces in Bosnia, with the premier ruling out raids and the foreign minister saying Moscow does not oppose the idea.

"Russia's position is rather firm. We do not support air strikes there," said Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin. "These problems are to be resolved politically."

Chernomyrdin's remarks appeared to reflect the view of the government's conservative faction, led by Soviet-era industrial and agricultural managers.

But the Western-oriented foreign minister, Andrei Kozyrev, said Russia would "not rule out" air raids to support international aid efforts or to defend U.N. troops in Bosnia. He spoke after meeting Tuesday in Moscow with international mediators Lord Owen and Thorvald Stoltenberg.

Kozyrev said any party to the conflict that blocks humanitarian aid or attacks U.N. peacekeepers could be justifiably punished.

Somali factions condemn Marines but uphold truce

By Thomas Wagner
Associated Press Writer

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — Mohamed Farrah Aidid's coalition condemned U.S. Marines for a shooting that killed at least eight civilians, but said Tuesday its militiamen would not retaliate and violate their truce with U.N. forces.

"We have told our people to remain calm and uphold the 3-month-old cease-fire, but the Americans must stop killing innocent people," said Abdul Karim Ahmed Ali, secretary-general of the Somali National Alliance, a coalition of three factions in Mogadishu that back Aidid.

"The excuse the Americans are giving for killing our people is nonsense and baseless," he told The Associated Press.

In addition to the deaths, at least 24 Somalis were wounded Monday when Marines escorting two American diplomats opened fire on a street jammed with hundreds of civilians waiting for free food. One of those killed was identified as one of Somalia's many tribal leaders, Sabriye Alale Barise.

U.S. officials said the 22 Marines began shooting machine guns and grenade launchers after two snipers fired at the three Humvees and two passenger cars in the convoy. They said other Somalis pulled out guns and joined the shootout after it began.

No Americans were injured, but they said at least three bullets struck their vehicles.

Foreign correspondents in a nearby hotel heard one or two shots before the Marines' heavy weapons began firing.

But many Somali witnesses said the Marines opened fire after they saw the crowd outside a food distribution center and mistook them for demonstrators trying to block the convoy.

In Washington, a spokeswoman at the Pentagon said the incident was being investigated but early indications were the Marines shot in self-defense. They "didn't fire until fired upon" and they came under fire from "a number of sources," said Kathleen deLaski.

Although Somalis shouted anti-American slogans after the shooting, no serious attacks on U.S. or U.N. forces were reported in Mogadishu on Tuesday.

Aidid has been negotiating with other Somali factions in neighboring Kenya for several weeks, and he was not available for comment Tuesday. But the shooting could prove useful in his effort to villify the U.N. peacekeeping force of 25,000 soldiers.

Aidid became a hero to many Somalis last year by escaping a U.N. manhunt after his militiamen killed dozens of American and Pakistani soldiers. U.N. officials later lifted an arrest warrant for Aidid and began negotiating with him again, but he still wants all U.N. troops to withdraw.

Many people fear Somalia's factions will begin fighting again for control of this war-torn nation once American troops, the backbone of the U.N. force, finish withdrawing next month with their howitzers, helicopters and other heavy weapons.

Violence was reported early Tuesday in Baidoa, a city 150 miles northwest of Mogadishu where many relief agencies work.

Unidentified assailants opened fire on a patrol of U.N. soldiers from India, wounding one of them in the hip, Maj. Chris Budge, a U.N. military spokesman, told reporters.

Arafat accuses Israel of continued abuses despite accord

GENEVA (AP) — PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat accused Israel of abusing Palestinians despite a peace accord, and warned Tuesday the violations threatened Middle East peace talks.

A U.N. special investigator echoed many of Arafat's allegations, made to the U.N. Human Rights Commission.

"Palestinians are still being killed by the occupation forces and by Israeli settlers even after the signing of the (Israel-PLO) accord" on Sept. 13, Arafat told the annual session of the 53-nation commission.

Rene Felber, appointed by the commission last year to research human rights in the occupied territories, said 45 Palestinians were killed by Israeli forces between Sept. 13 and Dec. 31.

They were either victims of summary execution or excessive force, Felber, a former Swiss foreign minister, said in a report to the panel released Tuesday.

Israeli authorities could not be reached for comment.

Arafat said the continuation of abuses was creating a bad climate for talks between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, provoking "a negative reaction" among Palestinians and other Arabs.

Israel and the PLO have yet to reach a final agreement on implementing the accord on limited Palestinian autonomy in the Gaza Strip and West Bank town of Jericho. Success in their talks would help spur agreements between Israel and its other Arab foes, Syria, Jordan and Lebanon.

Felber also expressed concern for the talks, and said Israeli and Palestinian authorities must contain violence from opponents of the September accord. Such opponents include Jewish settlers and the Muslim fundamentalist Hamas group.

The Swiss investigator reported more than 20 Israelis killed by Palestinians and 33 Palestinians killed by other Palestinians during the period.

Arafat said Israelis were holding more than 14,000 Palestinians in prisons and camps under arbitrary detention. Felber put the figure at about 11,700 and said 718 Palestinian detainees had been liberated since the signing of the accord.

"The demolition of houses is still continuing," said Arafat. "The imposition of collective punishment still goes on and curfews are still imposed on large areas. Lands are confiscated and settlements are being established."

Felber said Israeli confiscation of Palestinian land had increased seven times during the last three months of 1993.

Officials: Terrorist attack kills journalist, wounds colleague

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — A French journalist was slain and an Australian colleague wounded Tuesday, the latest foreign victims of the two-year Islamic insurgency against Algeria's army-backed regime.

The two journalists were shooting video footage they hoped to sell on a freelance basis to ABC News in New York.

The attack came a day after the hard-line defense minister, Lamine Zeroual, took office as president. He vowed to keep fighting militant Muslims while also offering talks on ending the rebellion.

The journalists were shot at midday in the Casbah, a crumbling, alley-filled neighborhood that is a stronghold of extremists. Security officers called it a terrorist attack.

Olivier Quemener, 34, died soon after reaching a hospital, officials said. His Australian colleague, Scott Allan White, 35, was reported in serious condition. Further details were not immediately available.

"They had gone in there to get some video and we were going to take a look at that video when they came out," said Arnot Walker, ABC News spokesman in New York.

Algerian security officials had said earlier that the two worked for Australian Broadcasting Co.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for the attack, but it appeared to be part of the civil war that has killed 3,000 people. At least 27 foreigners have been slain since militants declared last year that foreigners would be targets.

Security forces said the two men had been warned by police a day earlier to stay out of "dangerous neighborhoods" and refused an escort proposed by authorities.

The Armed Islamic Group, considered the most radical of a handful of radical groups, warned foreigners in November to leave Algeria or risk death.

A message received by The Associated Press last month, signed by the Supreme Council of the Armed Islamic Forces, warned foreign governments "implicated directly against the Algerian people" that their "diplomatic missions and their interests will soon be the targets of our Mujahedeen (fighters)."

"This ultimatum takes effect as of Feb. 1, 1994," the message said.

The insurgency was touched off by an army coup in January 1992 that blocked an expected victory by Islamic fundamentalists in Algeria's first multiparty parliament elections. Unrest has persisted despite curfews, army sweeps and trials in secretive anti-terrorism courts.

Muslim militants have targeted foreigners partly because their skills and investment are vital to the economy. They also have attacked Algerian intellectuals and journalists, but Quemener was the first foreign journalist killed.

The French Foreign Ministry condemned the slaying and renewed its warnings to French citizens still in Algeria. Thousands have returned to France, Algeria's former colonial ruler.

Europe, if Zhirinovsky had his way

This European map, as boldly redrawn by Russian ultranationalist Vladimir Zhirinovsky, would sweep away Austria, the Czech Republic and all three Baltic nations and sharply shrink Poland and Romania to achieve his dream of a new Russian empire. Zhirinovsky recently gave autographed copies to at least two former diplomats, from France and Sweden, according to French and Dutch news reports. The map was printed in several European newspapers this week. Zhirinovsky's views are considered outlandish, but foreign observers are wary of the power he is amassing among Russia's disillusioned voters.

Mexican rebels agree to government talks

SAN CRISTOBAL DE LAS CASAS, Mexico (AP) — Rebels in southern Mexico have agreed to open face-to-face talks with the government on ending their uprising, a rebel statement said Tuesday.

A communique from the Zapatista National Liberation Army said talks were "imminent." It said a basic agreement had been worked out with the government on holding the talks and "only some details remain to be worked out."

It was the first concrete word from the rebels they are serious about negotiating an end to the uprising that has been simmering since New Year's Day. Previous rebel statements were vague.

The communique was dated Jan. 29, the day that Mexico's peace envoy to the rebels, Manuel Camacho Solis, said he had agreed, through indirect contacts, to an agenda for face-to-face talks with the rebel leaders.

The statement from the rebels, who are based in remote mountain regions, reached this colonial city Tuesday night.

In a written statement of response Tuesday, Camacho called the rebel use of the word imminent "a highly important step towards the meeting and an advance in the process of peace and reconciliation."

Both sides earlier agreed that Roman Catholic Bishop Samuel Ruiz, a longtime Indian rights activist, will act as a mediator in the talks.

A time and a place has not been set for the negotiations.

Earlier Tuesday, the government announced the creation of two zones in the rebel-held region where food and medical help will be given out.

Refugees fleeing the area say impoverished Mayan Indian residents in the region have been short of food and medical care since the rebellion broke out.

In announcing the "free zones," Camacho said the plan was "to create a space of detente" and help civilians in the region of conflict.

Camacho said the villages of San Miguel in the Ocosingo district and Guadalupe Tepeyac outside Las Margaritas would be considered "free zones," effective Wednesday.

The Red Cross will offer medical care to all who need it and food to civilians, although it would not aid armed rebels, he said.

Guadalupe Tepeyac, a rebel stronghold in the first days of the rebellion, was a staging point for the capture of Las Margaritas, a district administrative center that the rebels abandoned within a few days.

Camacho said the army was also remaining outside populated areas under a unilateral cease-fire announced on Jan. 12, and would continue to provide some aid to residents of those areas.

With the army holding back to give peace talks a chance, an estimated 2,000 rebels control the region's rugged tropical forests and scattering of villages.

Government officials estimate that more than 100 people died in the first days of the conflict. There has been no military conflict in more than a week, although the army Monday accused the rebels of attacking civilians in the region and stealing food.

The Zapatistas say they are fighting to end exploitation of Mexico's impoverished Indians and for greater democracy in Mexico. They have not recently mentioned their initial calls for the immediate overthrow of the government.

Computer bulletin board becomes backbone of neo-Nazi network

By Frank Bajak
Associated Press Writer

BERLIN — A year-old computer network has become the communications backbone of Germany's neo-Nazi scene, with users sharing ideas on how to rid Germany of foreigners, coordinate illegal rallies and swap bomb-making recipes.

The "Thule Network," guarded by passwords and loyalty tests, consists of at least a dozen bulletin boards in three western states, according to law enforcement officials and computer experts. It is used by extreme rightists to avoid detection by police unfamiliar with new computer technology.

The network computers call one another nightly and exchange files. Important information — such as contact numbers for transportation on the eve of a big rally — can be disseminated in a few hours and without a paper trail.

The network's name derives from the small, elite 1920s movement considered the Nazi vanguard. Thule movement leaders included Hitler henchman Rudolf Hess, whose Aug. 14 birthday is marked annually by today's neo-Nazis.

With the network's aid, some 500 neo-Nazis formed a convoy that drove into the city of Fulda and rallied there unhindered on last year's anniversary. Demonstration bans and police dragnets had thwarted their plans to meet at Hess's grave in Bavaria.

But the Thule Network is much more than a place to look for rides to rallies.

It is a place where Russian ultranationalist Vladimir Zhirinovsky is commended as a "Robin Hood" who wants to protect the downtrodden and keep both Germany and Russia ethnically pure.

Suppose some young neo-Nazis want to put out a newspaper, for example, but lack the know-how. Just plug into "Resistance," one of the network's bulletin boards.

"A network-connected attorney can check the text, a graphics office can put together the newspaper," the Resistance host says in a digital preamble. The network is also a refuge — where a crowd closely watched by police can disappear into cyberspace. Technologically ahead of most police, network gatekeepers are having considerable success keeping out the law.

Not a single one has been prosecuted.

"German police don't know much about computers and bulletin boards. It's very new for them," said Uwe Kauss, editor of the Munich-based computer magazine Chip, which has penetrated the network through informants.

Chip estimates 1,500 of Germany's more than 40,000 right-wing extremists are active on the network. They also say its operators are seeking links with U.S. comrades such as Nebraska neo-Nazi Gary Lauck, who ships hate literature to Germany.

Along with mobile phones and answering machines, the Thule Network is helping a diverse neo-Nazi scene establish a united front — a phenomenon acknowledged by Germany's government.

"Previously, the scene had many loosely connected splinter groups. Now they are getting in touch more easily," said Matthias Schenk, spokesman for the Baden-Wuerttemburg agency that monitors enemies of the state.

All you need to visit Thule boards is a computer and a modem. But to hook up to the network, you must leave your name, phone number and address. You then receive a phone call and must pass a loyalty test to get full access.

Federal officials and law officers in Baden-Wuerttemburg, Bavaria and North Rhine-Westphalia states, where the Thule boards are located, won't say whether police agents have infiltrated the network.

But they speak with frustration of their inability so far to shut down even a single neo-Nazi bulletin board.

"This is a very difficult realm for gathering solid evidence," said Schenk, especially because members post messages and announcements under pseudonyms.

It's the same with the "infophones," answering machines where rightists leave messages about political foes.

Expanded flights should help area

Continental Airlines' announcement Monday that it is instituting new lower fares and expanded air service to Midland was a welcome one that should be to the advantage of air travelers in this area.

According to the announcement by Don Valentine, senior vice president of marketing for Continental, the airlines will restore its service to Denver Airlines with two daily flights through El Paso as well as reducing fares to St. Louis, Houston, Kansas City and Louisville.

In addition to Continental's new reduced fare schedule for the flights, the airlines also will offer "Peanut Flights" which should please this area's cost-conscious air travelers.

What the expansion means for the Midland market is that it will be easier for Midlanders to reach other areas and less expensive, too. That will make Midland's air service much more valuable to travelers throughout the Permian Basin, and potentially even lead to additional flight service at Midland International.

The Continental expansion is patterned after a similar program instituted on the Eastern Seaboard in October of 1993 that resulted in gate departures nearly doubling. That's impressive, but we believe that the result could even be better in the Permian Basin.

Driving long distances here is a necessity that threatens to become a way of life, but Permian Basin residents have shown that they like to fly when the fares are low enough. Now Continental is offering low fares to some of the cities Midlanders have shown over a period of time that they travel to.

So if this area's residents can obtain the flights they need at a price that makes them competitive with the cost of traveling by automobile, the expanded flight schedule and low fares should find ready acceptance here.

Reformists plan for Russia's future

DAVOS, Switzerland — You can't throw a snowball at the World Economic Forum in this ski resort without hitting a rejected Russian reformer.

Safire

Early last week, Russia's reformist finance minister, Boris Fyodorov, walked into President Boris Yeltsin's office with a him-or-me ultimatum: Either fire the inflationary Central Bank chief, Victor Gerashchenko, who was on a ruble-printing binge to prop up inefficient industry, or I quit.

"If Gerashchenko makes another mistake, he's out," Yeltsin promised, Fyodorov tells me. Unsatisfied with this delaying straddle, the 35-year-old economist followed other free-marketers, abandoned by Yeltsin and spurned by the voters, over the side. "If you take the blame for what you have not done," he says, "that's just stupid."

That leaves Russia's government in the hands of Yeltsin's prime minister, Victor Chernomyrdin, champion of the featherbedding state industrialists. His strategy: let inflation roar up over 20 percent a month — that's a month — then become a popular hero by imposing price controls.

How can Russians who believe in freedom avoid this? Evidently Yeltsin wants power more to preside than to lead; this may prevent dictatorship. But the reformers do not yet have a leader; the democratic way is to fight it out or make a political deal. Their backstage power broker and campaign manager will be Gennadi Burbulis, the image-maker who talked the Russian military into letting Yeltsin speak atop a friendly tank; reformers see him as a combination Michael Deaver and Ray Bliss (go explain that to a Russian).

Several of the candidates for savior of Russia after the coming hyperinflation and freeze were lined up in a seminar at Davos. A tall Swede sitting in the audience next to me was high on Anatoly Chubais, in charge of privatization, as a political comer; he is last of the new capitalists running the rapids on the Yeltsin raft as it heads for the falls. (I asked the Swede what he did and it turns out he prime-ministers; lotsa bigshots here.)

The Russian who clearly dominated the proceedings with both his passion and presence was Grigory Yavlinsky. Known in the West as the man of the "500 days" — the serious capitalist plan that Gorbachev rejected, sealing his doom — the 41-year-old economist heads a bloc of about 8 percent of the seats in the new Duma.

I collared him for a three-hour, late-night talk in an alpine hotel lobby. No wonder the reformers lost the election, Yavlinsky says: all that was offered was quasi-reform.

The promised stabilization of the ruble never happened; what little privatization was done was more like collectivization; since 1989, gross national product declined by half; instead of more democracy, the people saw more crime and corruption. And this was supposed to be "reform"?

What seemed to anger Yavlinsky most was that "payments were never made": last year, after prices were negotiated to buy goods from farmers and producers, the government double-crossed the sellers. (Fyodorov glumly confirmed this, blaming overpromising by Chernomyrdin.) No wonder quasi-reform was rejected at the polls.

Yavlinsky has positioned himself as a constructive critic of Yeltsin's government today, and dissociated himself from its faltering reforms of the past. He volunteered to be prime minister with a new team last week, and thus cannot be blamed for jumping ship as it headed into hyperinflation.

More to the political point, Yavlinsky has stopped trying to prove to intellectuals he has brains and begun talking bluntly to people about organizing a "movement" or nascent party. He wants to pull Russia's 89 states into seven manageable regions; he wants to give Russians "another choice besides paralysis"; he is trying to find the "pro-Russian, not anti-Western" language to connect free-market ideals to people's needs.

CHARLEY REESE

U.S. continues to cover up POWs, MIAs

The U.S. government left living prisoners of war in Indochina, lied about it to cover it up, and continues to lie about it to cover it up.

Here's just one example of how the public is consistently being misled.

Reese

Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., in a speech attempting to discredit former Marine Robert Garwood on the eve of his trip to Vietnam with Sen. Bob Smith, R-N.H., said, "I cannot believe any U.S. Marine under any circumstances would return to this country . . . and he would not tell Americans there are Americans still over there. But Bob Garwood did not do that. No, he did not do that. He did not do that in 1979. He did not do it in 1980. He did not do it in 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984. But in 1985, after some POW activists got ahold of him . . . by God, Bob Garwood came forward and said he had seen Americans in Vietnam."

Now, be clear. The above quote is from the Congressional Record, dated July 1, 1993. Sen. Kerry clearly says that Bob Garwood never mentioned that there were Americans left in Vietnam until 1985 when, Kerry implies, he was put up to it by POW activists.

But what's the truth?

The truth is that Garwood, while still in Vietnam, specifically and explicitly mentioned other living American POWs. Kerry knows that. It's contained in a declassified memorandum from the U.S. Embassy in Sweden to the State Department reporting a conversation a World Bank employee had with Garwood in Vietnam in 1979.

"Garwood told (the name was blanked out when the document was declassified) that he knew of 15 other American POWs staying in his and other camps. He indicated that there are probably yet more POWs." That memorandum is dated February 1979.

From the very beginning of the betrayal, the U.S. government has consistently discounted and attempted to discredit any evidence that POWs were left behind while accepting as gospel the North Vietnamese assertion that none were.

Why did Kerry want to discredit Garwood? Because Garwood was going to find three prison camps that he had spoken about, but that the Defense Intelligence Agency claimed did not exist.

Garwood found them just where he said they were, and they were just as he described them. Apparently the U.S. Government, with its billions of dollars worth of intelligence assets, could not do what two men in a boat were able to do.

Sen. Smith, who, along with Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, were the only members of the Senate Select Committee on POWs-MIAs who addressed the issue honestly, sent a formal letter to Attorney General Janet Reno requesting a Justice Department investigation of certain members of the Defense Department. Sen. Smith listed specific people and specific offenses he believed they were guilty of.

Recently, Smith received a letter brushing off the request for an investigation. Smith said no one from Justice contacted him in regard to the request or the evidence he had said he could provide.

In other words, Janet Reno, who is fast showing herself to be nothing more than a partisan hack, showed no interest in pursuing the truth — just in shoveling the snow over this scandal. How can you determine there is no basis for an investigation when you don't talk to the Senator making the charges or look at the evidence?

Your government intends to "resolve" the MIA issue by declaring them all dead and then proceed, as the big business interests want it to, to lift the embargo against Vietnam.

Your government intends to bury the MIAs along with the evidence of its lies and disinformation since 1973.

You probably don't want to believe that, but it's true. The part of our government that did this is evil — there's no other word for it.

ANOTHER VIEW

Incident will taint Games if Harding skates or not

In the soap-opera debate over whether Tonya Harding should be allowed to go to the Olympics, our vote is a guarded yes.

Americans' emotions tell them that the attack on Nancy Kerrigan was unforgivable and that somebody should pay. Although Ms. Harding says she did not know about the attack beforehand, many suspect she is not being truthful. But there is no sure way to find out before the Olympic Games, unless Ms. Harding herself changes her story. If she sticks to it, she must be considered innocent until she is proved guilty.

If the U.S. Olympic Committee were to deny Ms. Harding a place on the team, and find out subsequently that she was telling the truth, a grave injustice would have been done that could never be corrected. Yes, she would still be guilty of withholding information about the attack from the authorities after she learned that members of her entourage had been involved. But that was a piece of bad judgment — not a crime, and not worth depriving a talented athlete of her only shot at the top.

If, on the other hand, Ms. Harding goes to the Games, wins a medal and is later found guilty of some sort of complicity in Ms. Kerrigan's attack, she can almost certainly be stripped of her honors by the International Olympic Committee.

A head-to-head grudge match between Ms. Harding and Ms. Kerrigan would generate enormous interest in the figure-skating competition. But it could also prove a fizzle. Chauvinistic Americans need to remember that Ms. Kerrigan and Ms. Harding are not the only competitors with a shot at the gold in Norway. It is altogether possible that they could end up vying for silver or bronze, not gold, especially since each would have good reason to fall short of her best.

Women's figure skating is unlike many other Olympic sports; its champions are still expected to conform to ideals of feminine charm. Ms. Harding is no ice princess, which makes it easier for some observers to dislike her. But that is not a basis for judging her innocence or guilt, nor for deciding whether she should compete.

The women's figure skating event will be tainted by this incident whether or not Ms. Harding participates. It should not be further compromised by hasty justice.

ART BUCHWALD

Press remains addicted to Bobbitt story

The Bobbitts Anonymous organization was started by Arthur E. to help reporters who were so addicted to Bobbitt stories that they couldn't write anything else.

We met in the basement of the Second Unitarian Church in Bethesda, Md. There were 30 of us — men and women all addicted to the same story and hoping to find a way to quit the Bobbitt habit.

Buchwald

Buddy B. was the first to tell his tale. "When I first read about the Bobbitts I couldn't believe my eyes. I never thought that a family newspaper would touch their story. But when I arrived at the office I found the entire staff studying Roget's Thesaurus trying to find new words to describe Mr. Bobbitt's loss.

"In the beginning I told a joke about it, but pretty soon I became addicted, and no matter what I tried to tap into the computer, the word 'Bobbitt' kept popping up. I was much more interested in the why than in the how. Now I can't think of anything else except 'why not'?"

Ellen G. stood up and said, "As you know, I cover the United Nations, which is very exciting, but their sessions didn't compare with what happened between the Bobbitts. I kept writing things like 'Cambodia knifed the United States in the back today,' and 'Boris Yeltsin received another unkind cut from President Clinton who sharply criticized his economic program.' I couldn't concentrate on my work. I used all my grocery money to buy the supermarket tabloids that played up the story. I was unable to get enough of the Bobbitts, and my editor warned me that if I wrote one more story stating that U.N. funds had been painfully cut off I would be fired. He advised me to come to BA for treatment."

Herb B. stood up, "I am a cartoonist, but everyone I draw lately looks like John Wayne Bobbitt — even Margaret Thatcher. The strange part is I am not one of John's biggest fans, and there's no reason for me to put him in my cartoons. After all, he's just a private citizen and has never been appointed by President Clinton to public office. He doesn't even have anything against Bill Safire. But as soon as I take my pen in hand, a drawing of Prince Charles ends up looking like John Bobbitt."

George W. spoke, "To me this is the American dream gone awry. The Bobbitts had everything that anyone could want — but there was a void in their lives that Mrs. Bobbitt tried to fill in her unique way. What she said was, 'I am woman. Listen to me and hear my story.' John didn't, and he paid a price. The country is hooked on this story because it deals with the family and a new way of avoiding having one. My problem is that every time I write about them I persist in making the article personal. I should treat the subject like yet another piece of sleaze."

Billy B. had a question: "If we get rid of the Bobbitts, is Olympic ice-skating just behind?"

Finally, it was my turn to speak. I was nervous as I faced the group.

"I was wrong because I believed that there were laughs in the Bobbitt story. I milked it as much as I could, only to discover that there is nothing new to say. I wish that the couple go back to the lives they deserve and leave the press alone. I declare tonight that I will never mention the Bobbitts in my column again."

Obviously I have lied because I've written this.

But when it comes to Bobbitt stories, you can't kick the habit after one lousy meeting.

New study shows no link between hair dye, cancer

By Paul Recer
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON — It's OK to cover the gray. An American Cancer Society study finds almost no connection between hair dye and fatal cancers, a conclusion that is contrary to some earlier studies.

"For more than 99 percent of women who use hair dye, we found no increased risk of fatal cancer, even with long-term use," said Dr. Michael J. Thun, an American Cancer Society physician in Atlanta and lead author of a study appearing today in the Journal of the National Cancer Institute.

Thun said the conclusion is based on an analysis of data from 573,369 women enrolled in a cancer mortality study started in 1982 by the American Cancer Society.

In the study, women reported on their personal habits, such as diet and cosmetic use, before developing any illness. The type of illness and the number of women who develop it can then be compared statistically with life style characteristics.

Thun said the analysis was undertaken after some earlier studies linked the hair coloring with lethal cancers.

"In the last 15 years, there have been a number of studies looking at occupational exposure to hair dyes," said Thun, but he said some of this research may have been flawed because researchers surveyed only women who already had developed a cancer illness.

The only link of hair dye to fatal cancer came in 0.6 percent of the women who used black hair dye for 20 years or more. These women, said Thun, had about a four times greater risk of developing non-Hodgkin's lymphoma or multiple myeloma than women who did not use the dye.

Though this may be statistically significant, said Thun, "it is based on very small numbers."

Both non-Hodgkin's lymphoma and multiple myeloma are uncommon diseases, he said. Women in general have only a 1.1 percent risk of dying of these disorders and the 20-year use of black hair dye increased that risk to 4.8 percent, he said.

Dr. Graham A. Colditz of Brigham and Women's Hospital and Harvard Medical School, said in a statement in the journal that Thun's study results "are a relief to the one third of U.S. women who use these permanent hair dyes."

Colditz said that the link between black hair dye and the uncommon cancers came only after 20 years of use, suggesting that women may be advised not to use the dye for such long periods.

"The public health impact of hair dye use is exceedingly small and does not warrant major new investigations," Colditz said. "The evidence for cancer risk in relation to use of hair dyes is not sufficient to avoid hair dye use."

Clinton speaks to groups about health-care system

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton cautioned against mere tinkering with America's health-care system Tuesday and insisted he would settle for nothing less than guaranteed insurance for all. His chief Republican critic held out new hope for compromise.

After back-and-forth appearances by Clinton and Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole before the nation's governors and the American Hospital Association, the president said he came away encouraged about prospects for reform.

"It's better for the American people if we work together and tone our rhetoric down," Clinton later told reporters.

Dole, speaking to the National Governors Association just before Clinton, told the governors they "may have laid out a framework for the rest of us to rally around and talk about."

He was referring to the governors' newly minted "call to action" on health care. It stops short of some of Clinton's goals, but includes a GOP concession that employers be required to make coverage available to workers.

Dole seemed intent on keeping Republicans involved in the debate, telling his party, "We're going to be up in the bleachers when the parade goes by unless we get our people together," the Kansan said.

As Congress continues hearings on health care, he added, "we may be able to resolve some of these issues that look impossible now because we have just gotten started."

Dole repeated Republican opposition to Clinton's proposal that employers be required to pay at least 80 percent of their workers' health-care premiums. Clinton countered, "I still believe in the requirement for employers to cover their employees."

The president, in two speeches that nearly exhausted his voice, affirmed his State of the Union declaration that universal coverage must be a part of any health-care plan.

"We have to do it now," he told the hospital executives. "And what we have to do includes providing guaranteed private insurance to every single American."

In both speeches, he cautioned against incremental reform.

"What normally happens around here is that everybody gives their speeches and then we have Washington-style reform where we tinker at the edges . . . . That's what we've been doing for years," he told the governors.

Casting the debate in financial terms, he added: "Without full coverage, I don't see any way to avoid the conclusion that states will continue to bear a disproportionate burden of skyrocketing health-care costs."

At both appearances, Clinton criticized competing plans that would make workers' health-care benefits subject to income taxes, saying it makes more sense to tackle waste and inefficiency in the current system.

"Before you tax the benefits of working people whose wages have been stagnant for 20 years, why don't you ask how we can justify spending a dime on the dollar more on paperwork, regulation and insurance premiums than anybody else?" he asked hospital officials.

Answering critics who claim his plan would only add to the government bureaucracy, he insisted: "In his wildest dreams, Rube Goldberg could never have designed a system more complex than the present health-care system."

Clinton and Dole continued their back-and-forth over whether the health care system is in crisis — the president says yes, Dole says no.

Dole in recent days has tried to back away from the dispute, dismissing it Tuesday as "theatrics." But the Clinton administration — sensing that the public is on its side — keeps hitting on the issue.

Although Clinton at one point derided the issue as "a big linguistic battle," he repeatedly referred to the health-care system as in crisis.

"Anybody who thinks there are no serious problems, no crisis in the health-care system, I would say go visit your local hospital," he told the hospital officials to broad applause.

Speaking a day after the president signaled new flexibility on some elements of his health-care plan, Dole later told reporters, "I think the president's done a reality check. . . . Maybe the president's trying to make it easier for us by backing off some of the worst features," including spending limits and mandatory insurance-purchasing alliances.

Clinton's talk of compromise rankled some allies.

Sen. Jay Rockefeller, D-W.Va., suggested Clinton was being collegial to the governors at the expense of his health-care proposal and said his talk of compromise on cost controls was "not particularly useful."

Rockefeller added he would caution Clinton against "making deals up there when the legislation is with us," a reference to members of the Senate Finance Committee.

Clinton sought to play down the rift, saying, "I would caution Sen. Rockefeller to not think that I have left his position. . . . If we change positions, he and I, we're going to try and do it together."

President names Boston lawyer as nation's chief civil rights enforcer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton selected Deval Patrick, who rose from poverty to partner in a prestigious Boston law firm, to be the nation's chief civil rights enforcer Tuesday. Clinton asserted conservative critics of Patrick "don't give a rip about civil rights."

■ More national news/5B

Patrick won immediate praise from rights activists and from members of the Congressional Black Caucus who had been critical of Clinton's failure to fill the Justice Department post during more than a year in office.

Conservatives, however, had opened fire on Patrick as a "stealth Guinier" even before Clinton announced the nomination at the White House.

They tried to link Patrick's views to those of his one-time coworker, Lani Guinier, Clinton's first nominee to the Justice Department post. Clinton withdrew her nomination last June after conservative criticism of her legal writings, some of which Clinton said surprised even him.

But in the Oval Office on Tuesday, Clinton declared that both Patrick and Guinier "have had distinguished careers in trying to enforce the civil rights laws of the country." And he rebuked critics of Patrick.

"A lot of those people are going to be exposed because they never believed in the civil rights laws, they never believed in equal opportunity, they never lifted a finger to give anybody in the minority race a chance in this country," he said. "If they attack his record, it means just exactly what we've all expected all along: They don't give a rip about civil rights."

Patrick, a native of Chicago's rough south side, brought his wife and two daughters to the ceremony. "I am humbled," he said, "because I know that I am standing here on the shoulders of . . . those courageous advocates of every type and kind who had the guts to stand up in some court somewhere and give the Constitution life. I pledge to be true to that legacy."

Civil rights leaders, many upset over Clinton's refusal to fight for Guinier, took a favorable view.

"Patrick has exceptional legal and civil rights credentials," said Ralph Neas, director of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, a coalition of major groups. "I'm confident that a strong bipartisan majority in the Senate will confirm his nomination" as assistant attorney general in charge of the civil rights division.

Jesse Jackson said Patrick "has a background of suffering, sacrifice and achievement against the odds. Now it is the challenge of this administration to take a principled stand and be with him against the reactionary attacks of the forces of injustice."

Elaine Jones, director-counsel of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, where Patrick and Guinier both worked in the mid-1980s, said, "The president has selected well. Deval Patrick is an American success story. . . . He is a very able lawyer who has a healthy dose of commitment to poor people and an overwhelming sense of fairness."

Acquaintances of Patrick have heard him describe arriving as a scholarship student at Milton Academy, a Massachusetts prep school, and hearing other students complain about the lack of privacy they all had in a large dormitory room.

Patrick was secretly delighted just to have his own bed. Growing up, Patrick, his sister and mother shared a bunk bed — each one taking turns on the top bed, the bottom bed and the floor. For a time, he and his sister were supported by welfare.

As a partner in Hill & Barlow, formerly home to Massachusetts governors William Weld and Michael Dukakis, Patrick represented without charge black borrowers scammed into taking high-interest loans for home improvements. He negotiated a settlement for 10,000 borrowers and $11 million in new money for low-income housing.

Members of the Congressional Black Caucus also responded well to Patrick. The caucus dean, Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich., called him "an outstanding choice for this critical position. . . . I expect that he will be a powerful and effective voice for civil rights."

Rep. John Lewis, D-Ga., a veteran of 1960s civil rights struggles, met with Patrick Tuesday afternoon and declared, "He is impressive. . . . There's something about him that tells me he's the right person for the job."

Jury must decide if student is victim or murderer

By Jeff Donn
Associated Press Writer

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. — A jury began weighing whether it should convict a college student as a scheming murderer who gunned down two people or acquit him as an insane victim of a delusion that God commanded his rampage.

Jurors worked through the afternoon and went home for the day without reaching a verdict.

The jury began deliberating Tuesday after Wayne Lo's attorney acknowledged he killed a professor and a student and wounded four people in a 20-minute sweep across the campus of Simon's Rock College of Bard in December 1992.

But attorney Janet Kenton-Walker said Lo should be acquitted by reason of insanity because he believed God ordered him to commit the slayings.

Lo "could no sooner deny God than he could be disobedient to his parents," Kenton-Walker argued.

Defense witnesses testified that Lo, a sophomore at the college, was suffering from schizophrenia and believed that God had told him to cleanse the campus of homosexuality, drug abuse and lying.

Prosecutors, however, depicted Lo as a warped murderer, capable of planning his crimes.

"The crime is revolting, but he is revolting as well," said District Attorney Gerard Downing during his closing argument in the Hampden Superior Court trial.

Downing argued that Lo was "able to formulate and plan and fool" college authorities as he purchased ammunition by mail, lied to the college dean about what was inside the package, and took a taxi to nearby Pittsfield to buy the rifle.

In addition to murder, Lo, 19, of Billings, Mont., was charged with attempted murder and assault.

Babynapping

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A day-care provider accused of abducting a 3-month-old boy in Texas was charged in federal court here Tuesday with kidnapping. Cathy Lynn Henderson, 37, of Pflugerville was arrested earlier Tuesday in suburban Independence, FBI spokesman Max Geiman said. Henderson had rented an apartment under an assumed name, Geiman said. The FBI had not located the infant Henderson was accused of kidnapping, Geiman said. "We're not optimistic about the baby," said Jeff Lanza, special agent in the FBI's Kansas City office. Authorities in Travis County, Texas, filed kidnapping charges against Henderson on Jan. 23, two days after she allegedly disappeared with Brandon Baugh. Henderson was a licensed day-care provider who cared for both Brandon and his 2-year-old sister, Megan, at her house, Geiman said.

Defendant in indecency trial takes stand

Nine-woman, three-man jury was dismissed about 2:30 p.m. Tuesday to wait for an out-of-town defense witness. Testimony will resume at 9 a.m. Defense attorneys said this witness will be the last before they rest their case.

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

Testimony continued Tuesday in a trial accusing Lee Lenderman of two counts of indecency with a child with the defendant taking the stand in his own behalf.

Lenderman, 31, was indicted on two counts of sexual contact with a child alleged to have occurred on May 25, 1992.

The victims, who were 8 and 9 at the time, testified Monday, the first day of the trial.

The girls are children of a couple with whom Lenderman was staying with in May 1992.

The nine-woman, three-man jury was dismissed about 2:30 p.m. Tuesday to wait for an out-of-town defense witness who would not be able to get to Midland before this morning. Testimony will resume at 9 a.m. Defense attorneys said this witness will be the last before they rest their case.

With the jury out of the courtroom, 238th District Court Judge John G. Hyde heard defense arguments regarding the deletion of certain portions of the alleged victims' statements to police regarding another instance of abuse allegations including alleged events on May 25, 1992.

The girls told police Lenderman sexually abused them on May 23 and May 25, 1992. However, the indictment only charges Lenderman for the alleged May 25 incident.

The judge allowed this testimony regarding other offenses to be withheld from the jury. The state rested its case early Tuesday.

Lenderman testified that he had a stable family life and later "got in trouble" including convictions for forgery of a check and delivery of marijuana.

Lenderman said he didn't have a home of his own in 1992 and was staying with friends including Rudy Rodriguez and from March to May 1992 with the alleged victims' family.

The defendant said Rodriguez has a daughter the same age as one of the alleged victims and she never accused him of any improper

Alliance supports local route

■ Representatives from Midland, Odessa sign resolution in favor of promoting extension of Interstate 27.

Officials signing the joint resolution to support the proposal for Interstate 27 to run between Midland and Odessa include, seated from left to right, Odessa Mayor Loraine Bonner, Midland Mayor J.D. Faircloth and Ector County Judge Jim Jordan. Standing behind Ms. Bonner is Charles Perry, chairman of the Midland/Odessa Transportation Alliance.

A joint community pact to push for the extension of Interstate 27 to pass between Midland and Odessa shows unprecedented cooperation between the two cities.

That was the sentiment Tuesday when representatives from the two cities, counties and chambers of commerce signed a resolution to support the Midland/Odessa Transportation Alliance (MOTA) effort to compete, promote and lobby for the local route.

"I have personally lived here since 1945 and do not know of a time these six (entities) have come together," said MOTA chairman Charles Perry.

All six adopted similar individual resolutions at their regular meetings last week. The privately funded MOTA consists of Perry and six representatives, one each appointed from the City Councils, Commissioners Courts and Chambers of Commerce.

Signing the joint resolution were Midland Mayor J.D. Faircloth, Odessa Mayor Loraine Bonner, Midland County Judge Charles "Bro" Seltzer, Ector County Judge Jim Jordan, Midland

Chamber sponsors male benefit fashion show for scholarships

Funds from the benefit will go primarily toward scholarships and possibly toward other educational projects. The scholarships are open to anyone, Ms. Quiroz said.

"New York in Texas" was the name of an all-male benefit fashion show featuring 29 Midland men wearing the latest fashions at an event sponsored by the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce's Women's Department.

Total revenues have not been calculated from the event, but the figure is expected to be larger than last year's $5,000 intake, said Adela Quiroz, who served as show coordinator.

There were more Gold Sponsors, contributing more than $350, than last year's event, she said.

This was the seventh and largest of the annual male fashion shows, Ms. Quiroz said.

The show was part of an all-evening event Saturday at the Midland Center, which drew about 400 people and 29 volunteer models

Businessman renews his bid for Hutchison's Senate seat

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Under increased security because of last year's threats of violence, Stephen Hopkins renewed his bid for the U.S. Senate seat of fellow Republican Kay Bailey Hutchison.

Hopkins aide Christopher Keys said the candidate's location was not widely publicized because of past "bomb threats from our opposition." Hopkins spoke to members of the news media at the Midland Holiday Inn on Tuesday.

Hopkins drew fire in his campaign against Ms. Hutchison because of graphic advertisements depicting aborted fetuses.

The 32-year-old businessman from Burnett is again keeping the abortion issue at the top of his campaign platform, even though his 1993 campaign landed him only a small percentage

Movie buff seeks to restore grandeur of silver screen

By Rick Smith
Associated Press

SAN ANGELO — Time, a leaking roof and sometimes misguided "improvements" by former tenants have dimmed — but not destroyed — the grandeur of the Texas Theater.

A young San Angelo movie buff hopes to restore the 65-year-old movie palace to its former glory — with a little help from his friends.

Alan Salyards, 29, is in the process of purchasing the Texas from Telecommunications Inc. As part of the deal, he also is buying the Rita Theater on South Chadbourne Street. He did not disclose the purchase price for the Rita and the 1,100-seat Texas.

Salyards, a 1982 graduate of San Angelo Central High School and a former manager of the Village Cinema theater, said he began working in local movie theaters when he was in high school. He managed a theater in Alamogordo, N.M., before joining the Air Force and, later, working for an aircraft company.

He said he started thinking about buying the Texas when he moved back to San Angelo two-and-a-half years ago.

"I like movies, especially the classics, and what better place to show them than in a theater like the Texas," Salyards said.

He said he plans to show classic films at the Texas and also produce live theater. He said he is organizing his own local professional theater troupe to perform at the theater.

Salyards said he "fell in love" with the Texas when he was involved in some renovation work at the theater in the early 1980s.

"I just loved the theater," he said. "I love palace theaters."

The theater's huge auditorium resembles the courtyard of a Spanish villa, with elaborate wall decorations and a magnificent arch over the stage.

A church that briefly occupied the theater in the 1980s painted over some of the decorations and covered others with acoustic tile. The church also added rows of bare, fluorescent lights along the walls.

Salyards said he plans to restore the auditorium as nearly as possible to its early grandeur.

"By the end of the year, this will look quite different than it does now. It will be quite ornate," Salyards said, leading a recent tour of the long-closed theater.

Salyards said he plans to use the help of friends and volunteers to restore the theater's faded glory.

Though he plans to operate the theater as a for-profit business, Salyards also plans to hold benefits and accept donations toward restoring the Texas.

"A lot of people are pitching in to help," Salyards said.

Former follower lashes out at Koresh

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Doomsday prophet David Koresh "brainwashed" his disciples before a deadly shootout with federal agents, then led them to the brink of mass suicide early in an armed standoff, a former Koresh follower testified Tuesday.

Victorine Hollingsworth, 59, identified five Branch Davidian defendants as gunmen during or after a Feb. 28, 1993, shootout with the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

Ms. Hollingsworth, previously a Seventh Day Adventist who joined the Branch Davidians in 1967, said after her release from the Davidian compound March 21 she became disillusioned with Koresh.

"I became very, very bitter and very angry with Mr. Koresh for the things that he brought us through . . . I didn't believe anymore that Mr. Koresh was a prophet. I believed that he was a false prophet," Ms. Hollingsworth said.

Ms. Hollingsworth, who lived in the Davidian compound the day of the gun battle, said she later overheard defendant Livingston Fagan saying he "got" an ATF officer in the stomach.

Defendant Brad Branch also shot at agents, defendant Jaime Castillo carried a gun during the shootout and defendants Clive Doyle and Kevin Whitecliff were armed guards in the compound chapel during a 51-day standoff after the firefight, Ms. Hollingsworth testified.

Despite prosecutors' objections, U.S. District Judge Walter Smith permitted Ms. Hollingsworth, a prosecution witness, to describe her feelings about Fagan, whom she said she has known for years and thinks of like a son.

"I love Mr. Fagan. . . . We have worshipped together. We study the Bible together," she said, adding that she became upset at Koresh when she later saw Fagan in chains on television after his release from the compound.

"He (Koresh) brainwashed us all in these type of things. Livingston Fa-

ACCUSE: Testimony continues in indecency trial

(From 1B)

acts.

He said he worked with the man the victims referred to as their father, the common-law husband of their mother, and testified the man asked Lenderman if he wanted to stay with him and his family.

Lenderman disputed the testimony of the older girl who accused him of molesting her. He said he had been to a favorite bar to "hang out" with friends and returned around 7 p.m. and was playing video games with the girl's cousin on the evening of the alleged incident when the girl called him to her bedroom. He said she told him she was hot and asked if he would turn the air conditioner on.

He said he turned the air conditioner on then returned to playing the video game. He said the girl called him again about 30 minutes later asking him to turn the air conditioner off because now she was cold. He said he declined to do it and told her to cover up with a blanket.

Lenderman said he was preparing to leave to go back to the bar to see friends when he checked on the girls and saw them lying in "a fetal position" so he covered them up with a blanket. He said he also turned the thermostat to a warmer setting. He said he was at the bar about four hours before returning.

Monday, both girls testified they were in bed asleep when they awoke to Lenderman undressing them and performing lewd acts on them.

Lenderman then testified he walked the girls home from school the following day. He said the older girl was involved in an argument with a girl when he arrived at the school. He said when the girls got home he told the parents about the incident at school.

He said the girl then began to cry when her father asked her what happened. Lenderman said he suggested to the mother that she take the child in a back room to see if she was more comfortable talking without the whole family around.

According to her testimony Monday, the mother said she then asked the girl what was wrong and the girl told her of the incident the evening before.

Lenderman said the mother then called him to the room and confronted him about the allegations.

The mother testified that before she could say anything to Lenderman he volunteered, "I didn't do it." During his testimony, Lenderman denied saying this until after he was told of the allegations.

Lenderman also disputed the mother's testimony by saying he volunteered to leave. The mother said she ordered him to leave the house.

According to Lenderman, he was called by the mother to pick up his belongings and when he did she told him she couldn't get the same story twice from the girls and wanted him to come back and talk to the girls. He said he declined this offer.

The defense attorney asked Lenderman if he was a child molester or if he had sexual desires about little girls. He replied, "No sir, I am not . . . It is repulsive to me."

Under cross-examination from Midland County Assistant District Attorney Teresa Clingman, Lenderman said he had consumed a number of beers on the day he is accused of molesting the girls.

She also asked him if he had ever had any disagreements with either of the girls before they made these allegations and he responded, "no."

The defense called the alleged victims' teachers from the school year with the date in question and asked if either child appeared to suffer a behavioral change from before to after the date and if the girls appeared to know more than the average child of their age regarding "worldly" things.

Both teachers said they noticed no change in the girls, but said school ended about a week later, and said both girls seemed to lack a "worldly" nature.

The women were also asked if the girls appeared to lie more than most students and they responded that each child had lied to them on one occasion each.

The defense wanted to call the child of Rodriguez to testify that Lenderman had never behaved inappropriately around her, but the state objected indicating if the child's testimony was allowed to show character traits then the other allegations made by the children should also be allowed.

The judge said testimony from the girl could be presented, but then the defense would be open to the other allegations as rebuttal to the character traits of Lenderman.

The defense declined to put the child on the stand.

The trial will resume at 9 a.m. today with the out-of-town witness expected to be the last witness before the jury begins deliberations.

SUPPORT: Representatives sign resolution

Chamber of Commerce chairwoman Nadine Craddick and Odessa Chamber of Commerce chairwoman Betsy Triplett-Hurt.

The alliance's mission is to promote the proposed local route — in the running with two others under consideration by the state — to link Interstate 27 with Interstate 10.

The Midland/Odessa route would run from Lubbock to Farm to Market Road 1788 between Midland and Odessa and connect with Interstate 10 south of McCamey.

"We are working to generate area-wide support for this route," Perry said.

About two weeks ago, MOTA met with other West Texas towns to see about forming a second transportation alliance to push for the local route. Those towns included Alpine, Crane, McCamey, Fort Stockton, Marfa, Presidio, Fort Davis, Balmorhea, Pecos, Monahans, and Big Bend National Park.

The Midland/Odessa route would benefit all of West Texas because of better access for economic development and travelers, Perry said.

The two other proposed routes are: 1) Lubbock to Lamesa to Big Spring to San Angelo to Interstate 10 at Junction; and 2) Lubbock to near Synder to Sweetwater to Abilene to Interstate 10 at Junction or Comfort.

Congress appropriated $2.9 million for a study by the state to determine the most feasible route. That study, being conducted by HDR Engineering Inc. out of Nebraska, is expected to be completed in August.

Perry said MOTA will provide the firm with local economic and demographic information, and support the local route during public hearings expected to be called by the firm.

The Midland/Odessa route, the most westerly, would open an underutilized trade corridor to Mexico — in light of the North American Free Trade Agreement — at Presidio and Ojinaga, Mexico, Perry said.

The other routes would allow access to the border via the over-burdened Highway 35 to Laredo and Nuevo Laredo, Mexico, he said.

"It doesn't makes sense to pour more traffic into a corridor that already is overloaded," Perry said.

Other advantages of the local route include: 1) a connection of the largest statistical area in West Texas (Midland-Odessa) with the second largest (Lubbock), and third largest (Amarillo); 2) access to a large airport, the Midland International Airport; and 3) provide the shortest, and most economical, hook-up to Interstate 10, according to MOTA.

gan had to agree to give Mr. Koresh his wife and even his children. Many times I would see Mr. Fagan cry," Ms. Hollingsworth said.

She was the first Branch Davidian to testify in the federal murder and conspiracy trial of 11 Davidians accused of killing four federal agents. The defendants could face up to life in prison if convicted.

The federal case was moved from Waco to San Antonio because of media coverage of the gun battle and ensuing standoff that ended April 19 in a deadly inferno. Koresh and more than 80 followers died amidst the blaze, at least 13 from gunshots.

A packed courtroom listened intently as Ms. Hollingsworth provided a spellbinding account of life inside Koresh's commune, where men and women lived separately and Koresh followers — calling themselves "Members of the Message" — worshipped for hours in Bible study sessions.

Koresh had his young men and women followers practice with guns and work out in a gym to stay in shape "to stop the American Army," she said.

Koresh considered most of his male followers "mighty men" whose job was "to take care of David," she said.

Citing Bible passages, Ms. Hollingsworth testified that Koresh, formerly known as Vernon Howell, took the biblical name Koresh, meaning "death."

In keeping with his apocalyptic teachings, Ms. Hollingsworth said, four days after the shootout Koresh planned to be carried out of the compound dead on a stretcher and have his followers kill themselves.

"People were planning to commit a mass suicide," Ms. Hollingsworth said. "It would have been the end because David was teaching that we were coming to the end of the world."

"When he went out, the ATF would come in the house and they would be in a shootout and blow the place up (because of grenades inside)," she said.

One by one, Koresh's followers went to say goodbye to their leader, she said. Later, when she was with three other women in a hallway, a female relative of Fagan's came out with a "green thing," presumably a grenade, and said, "This will be a quick death and we will all go home to mother,' " she said.

"I said to her, 'I want to be put to sleep,' " Ms. Hollingsworth said.

Though she was told someone could put her to sleep with an injection, Ms. Hollingsworth said she prayed that the "heavenly father" or "heavenly mother" would put her to sleep because she did not want to commit suicide.

That mass suicide never took place.

"David tells us that he has a vision from God, that God says to him that he has more work for him to do," Ms. Hollingsworth said.

The morning of the failed ATF raid and ensuing gun battle, Ms. Hollingsworth said she realized there was "some kind of problem" and saw Davidian men dressed in black..

Women were ordered to get to their rooms. Ms. Hollingsworth said she spent the gun battle lying on a hallway floor as guns were fired by others, including Branch, from upstairs windows.

from the Midland area, Ms. Quiroz said.

Serving as models for the event were numerous men from companies such as Schlumberger, Adobe Prudential, Mobile Oil, Henry Petroleum, Maverick Horticulture, Jack Sherman Chevrolet, Southwest Coca-Cola, Jorge's Mexican Cafe, Southwestern Bell, Dos Compadres, Midland National Bank, Lonestar Plaza, Dewey Enterprises, Midland Credit Services, Corrales Insurance, Bank One, Permian Distributing, La Mision, Temporary Resources, Nueva Vista, Permian Beverage Co., Standard Sales, KWES-9, as well as several area law enforcement officers, attorneys and judges, Ms. Quiroz said. "With each model comes a sponsor," she said.

Fashions for the event were contributed by Janee's Evening Wear, Luskey's Western Store, Oshmans Sporting Goods, Dillards, Casual Corner and Colores Del Barrio.

Funds from the benefit will go primarily toward scholarships and possibly toward other educational projects, Ms. Quiroz said.

The scholarships are open to anyone, she said. "Even if mom want's to go back to school . . . It's not necessarily just for straight-A students," she said.

Applications for the scholarships should be available by mid-March, Ms. Quiroz said. The applications will be available at the Hispanic Chamber office at 1410 Lamesa Rd., both Lee and Midland high schools and Midland College, she said.

A committee from the Women's Department will review the applications and decide which scholarships will be awarded.

THEATER: Movie buff seeks to restore 65-year-old movie palace

(From 1B)

"My friends and their friends and other volunteers are going to be working on this."

Salyards said he never considered seeking non-profit status for the theater, which he hopes eventually will become the hub of a rural movie theater chain.

"I didn't want to go non-profit and have my hands tied," he said.

"I want to be able to change things as I come up with new ideas."

Salyards said he hopes to have the title to the building within a few weeks and, after that, open the theater's doors within 60 days.

He is organizing a professional theater troupe made up of local writers, directors and performers and he hopes they will produce their first play in the Texas by April.

If everything goes according to Salyards' schedule, the theater will begin showing classic and fine arts films a few weeks after the play opens.

Future live productions — including a planned summer musical — will rehearse in the Rita Theater, so as not to interfere with scheduled movies, and be performed in the Texas, he explained.

Salyards said he also hopes to rent the theater to local groups for various functions.

Because he will be restoring the theater on a limited budget, Salyards said he will take one step at a time.

"First, what we're going to concentrate on is cleaning the building and just getting the place up to code so we can get the doors open," he said.

Salyards said he is "excited" about the prospects for the theater.

"I wake up in the night with ideas about what to do and write them down," he said.

"I think San Angelo will support this theater. It holds a lot of great memories for a lot of people.

"Sure, there are other theaters in town, and you can rent classic movies on videotape.

"But where can you get atmosphere like this?

"This is what a theater is supposed to be."

GOP: Hopkins renews bid for Senate of the vote.

(From 1B)

Hopkins explained that he paid less in campaign expenditures per vote than any other candidate in that campaign. Hopkins spent about $80,000 in the election compared to his competition's $2 million, he said.

Hopkins lambasted efforts of the Texas Association of Republican Women for working to remove the abortion issue from the Republican platform and further berated Ms. Hutchison for working alongside this group. Hopkins said Ms. Hutchison had sided with Senate Democrats to provide federal penalties to those who conspire to block clinics that offer abortion services.

Hopkins said Ms. Hutchison voted for presidentially favored legislation 46 percent of the time. "That puts her in the top five supporters for the Clinton machine in U.S. Senate Republicans," he said.

Hopkins has run four races in the last 2½ years, he said. He cited his children as his impetus for seeking election. "I don't want them growing up in a Bill Clinton kind of world," he said. ". . . Our nation is going straight away to hell in a handbasket," he said.

Citing increased political activity of the gay and lesbian communities as a sign of "the moral decline of this country," Hopkins said, "They call it an alternate lifestyle, I call it an abomination before God."

Hopkins said he was against gun-control legislation and that several veterans had rallied behind this stance. Although Hopkins said he had never served in the armed services, he said each generation has its war and he is fighting his right now.

If Republicans hear his platform of "pro-life, pro-gun and pro-God," Hopkins said, "Kay Bailey Hutchison will go down on March 8, and she will go down hard."

The State in brief

■ Possible murder-suicide leaves two dead

McKINNEY — Just two weeks after moving from a welfare-subsidized apartment into a neat frame house, Ester and Brian Simmons are dead from an apparent murder suicide that their son said started with an argument over $10.

While Mrs. Simmons' 6-year-old daughter slept and her 10-year-old son watched, relatives say, Mr. Simmons threw his wife to the floor, placed his foot on her stomach and aimed the shotgun at her head.

The boy said that as he ran from the house, he heard the first blast.

■ Judge refuses to block tobacco taxes

AUSTIN — A judge has refused to block the transfer of tobacco tax collections from the state Treasury to the Comptroller, a move that has angered Republican opponents of Democratic Treasurer Martha Whitehead.

The ruling Monday by State District Court Judge Paul Davis of Austin lets stand for now the transfer of tobacco tax collections and enforcement from Ms. Whitehead's office to the comptroller's.

However, the Midland tobacco wholesaler, Curtis Witt, who challenged the transfer will seek a trial later to determine whether Whitehead's actions are legal, his attorney said.

■ Officials hold man for decapitating mother

BEAUMONT — A 45-year-old computer programmer with a history of mental illness told his minister that he killed and decapitated his mother early Tuesday, because he became convinced that her body had been taken over by evil spirits.

Millet Harrison, a programmer for Houston's BMC Software Inc. and a soloist in his church choir, telephoned the Rev. Felix Haynes, pastor of Beaumont's Rising Sun Baptist Church, about 7:20 a.m. Tuesday and told him that he had killed his mother, because "she was a source of evil."

Officials said Louise Harrison, 67, was apparently strangled before being repeatedly stabbed in the face and decapitated. Her heart and brains had also been removed in an assault that some officials said might have taken hours.

Judge agrees to grant injunction against Klan

AUSTIN (AP) — A state judge Tuesday agreed to grant a temporary injunction aimed at keeping members of the Ku Klux Klan from intimidating or harassing residents of a desegregated housing project in Vidor.

District Judge John Dietz listened to testimony of a state investigator and a frightened resident of a previously all-white public housing complex in Vidor before making his decision.

Dietz said he wanted attorneys to hammer out details of the injunction before he issued a formal order, possibly Wednesday.

His ruling is the latest court action in an investigation by the Texas Commission on Human Rights into alleged civil violations of the Texas Fair Housing Act by two factions of the Ku Klux Klan. The civil penalties carry fines up to $50,000. No criminal charges have been filed.

Previously, the Commission on Human Rights has attempted to gain the membership lists of the White Camelia Knights and the Texas Knights of the KKK. The commission is attempting to determine if threats against residents and supporters of the desegregated housing project are coming from the two groups.

Dietz's Tuesday ruling related only to the White Camelia Knights of the KKK. He is expected to issue a similar ruling after a hearing today involving the Texas Knights of the KKK.

Vidor has long been a Klan recruiting hotbed and members of the group have held rallies criticizing the desegregation effort by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

In 1993, the Orange County Housing Authority moved four black families into the previously all-white 74-unit apartment complex.

By late summer, all four had left, claiming racial slurs made living in Vidor unbearable. The last to leave, Bill Simpson, was killed Sept. 1 in what police said was a random shooting less than 12 hours after he moved to nearby Beaumont.

On Jan. 13, four other black families moved into the Vidor complex under the protection of Justice Department officials. There are now six black families living in the Vidor complex.

Bill Hale, who heads the investigation by the Commission on Human Rights, testified Tuesday that he sought a temporary injunction against the Klan after threats continued to be made against residents of the housing project.

"There is clear evidence that since last September there continues to be intimidation by threat of force from members of the Klan," Hale told the judge.

Hale said Klan members have driven by the housing project on a bus, prominently displaying a gun. And Linda Bagwell, a white resident of the housing project, said her daughter was offered $50 by a Klan member to beat up black children.

"I am afraid," said Ms. Bagwell, who added that her father-in-law is a former member of the KKK.

Dietz said the injunction will be more relaxed than a temporary restraining order he granted against Klan members on Jan. 18. The injunction will likely prohibit Klan members from coming within 22 feet of the housing project's property line, Dietz said.

Richards' chief of staff apologizes for records confusion

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards' chief of staff apologized Tuesday for "any confusion or misstatements" the governor's office made about the destruction of Richards' telephone records.

The apology followed criticism from Republicans and several days in which the governor's staff gave news reporters changing explanations of the events.

Staff chief John Fainter said the decision to destroy the records in August 1993 was his.

He said state laws were followed and that Richards places great importance on open government and public accountability. He voiced regret about the confusion created when Richards' aides gave three different accounts in as many days.

"There has never been a desire to mislead anyone. The problems arose when we tried to recall — off the tops of our heads — events of the past three years," Fainter said.

"It was a legal decision, not a political decision (to destroy the records). Hindsight is a wonderful thing, and had I considered the impression this would leave with the press, I don't think I would have made that decision," he said.

A spokeswoman for Richards' likely Republican opponent, George W. Bush, criticized the governor's office for not fully explaining what happened from the start.

"They have backtracked, backpedaled and flip-flopped so much on this it is hard to keep up with. It's sad," said Bush spokeswoman Deborah Burstion-Wade. "The voters want not only credible elected officials, but credible staffs for those officials."

The Travis County district attorney's office, which investigates alleged wrongdoing by state officials, said it has asked Richards' office for an explanation.

"We have contacted them and have requested that they give us complete information as to why and how. They have offered to make people available to us. The issue has been raised," said Claire Dawson-Brown, chief of the prosecutor's Public Integrity Unit.

Fainter said Richards' office was cooperating with that inquiry. He also asked Southwestern Bell for help in reconstructing the 1991-1993 phone records.

GOP officials noted that the decision to destroy Richards' phone records came just weeks after a June 10 raid on the state treasurer's office, in which the district attorney seized hundreds of records of Treasurer Kay Bailey Hutchison.

Mrs. Hutchison, a Republican who was elected to the U.S. Senate last year, faces trial next week on ethics charges of having used the treasurer's office for political purposes.

"You don't begin destroying records suddenly after a raid on a state office by a district attorney unless you're very concerned about what might be found in your own phone records," said Karen Hughes, GOP executive director.

"You don't suddenly begin destroying records and then make up three or four different stories ... without raising a lot of suspicions about what you have to hide," Ms. Hughes said. "The credibility or lack thereof of the governor and her staff is the central issue here."

Fainter said there wasn't a connection between the Treasury raid and the decision to destroy Richards' phone records.

"To say that we were not cognizant of that (raid) would be, I think, stretching credibility. But the decision was made based on an internal decision to implement our retention policy," he said.

Fainter said the detailed listings of governor's office calls were saved from January 1991, when she took office, to mid-1993.

But a review last summer found that "this office and many others was drowning in paper," Fainter said. He said Richards' staff decided that the billings, showing the amounts paid, should be retained for three years but that the listings of actual long-distance calls needed to be kept for only a month.

So in August 1993, those listings for the first 33 months of Richards' term were destroyed, Fainter said. After that, the listings routinely were destroyed after a month.

Beginning immediately, Fainter said Tuesday, all phone records will be saved for three years. "As far as I'm or the governor is concerned, we will keep them forever if that is what (the State) Archives suggests," he said.

Group attacks judicial reforms

AUSTIN (AP) — More than two-thirds of appellate court candidates in Texas have promised to limit campaign expenses and contributions, but a group backed by big business said Tuesday the pledge has loopholes.

Eighty-eight of 126 — or 69 percent — of the candidates for Texas Supreme Court, Court of Criminal Appeals and the state's district appeals courts have signed the Fair Campaign Practices Pledge, according to a coalition of government watchdog organizations.

Candidates who sign the pledge promise to limit their total campaign expenses to $2 million, total political action committee contributions to $50,000, single law firm contributions to $25,000 and individual contributions to $5,000.

"Citizens have a right to expect that those holding judicial offices will not be unduly influenced by special interest groups," said Ruthann Geer, president of the League of Women Voters of Texas.

"Under the current system in which huge expenditures can be made without full disclosure, public confidence in the judiciary has eroded dangerously," she said.

Eighty-one percent of Democratic candidates and 53 percent of Republican candidates signed the pledge, according to the coalition, which includes Common Cause, Public Citizen, Texas Consumer Rights Action League and the League of Women Voters.

The pledge arose from a study that showed from 1988 to 1990, Texas Supreme Court election winners received 87 percent of their campaign contributions from sources that most frequently appear before the court, Tom Smith of Public Citizen said.

But a group backed by business associations and chambers of commerce criticized the Fair Campaign Practices Pledge, saying it didn't go far enough in limiting lawyer contributions and allowed political parties to give unlimited amounts of money.

Tom Luce, a former Republican gubernatorial hopeful, said the Fair Campaign Practices Pledge had loopholes as large as "the English Channel tunnel."

Luce, and a number of business and legal representatives, touted the Judicial Reform Campaign Pledge, which limits statewide judicial candidates from accepting more than 60 percent of their contributions from lawyers. It also limits political parties from spending more than $5,000 to aid an individual campaign.

"This pledge is a major reform. It has teeth," Luce said.

But David Bragg, president of the Texas Consumer Rights Action League, said that pledge favors business because it limits the total amount a candidate can raise from lawyers. Candidates who are backed by plaintiff attorneys generally get most of their funding from those sources because they are opposed by business interests, he said.

Suzy Woodford, executive director of Common Cause, said the Fair Campaign Practices Pledge did not limit contributions from political parties because that has yet to be a problem.

She also said that the Democratic and Republican party chairmen opposed a limit because they said it would be difficult to calculate contributions in instances where a telephone bank was used to help a dozen candidates running in different races.

■ Father faces charges in twins' deaths

MONROEVILLE, Ala. — The father of 14-month-old twins has been indicted on murder charges in their carbon-monoxide deaths, allegedly to collect on their life insurance policies.

The Nov. 12 deaths of Kierra Letitia and Tyeshia Sierra Kidd initially were blamed on a faulty heater, but District Attorney Tommy Chapman said an investigation "showed this was a homicide as opposed to an accident."

Stanley Kidd, 27, had picked up the toddlers at their baby sitter's home and brought them to the residence of his ex-wife, Sandra Dale, who was at work at the time.

Each baby had an $8,000 insurance policy, authorities said. Kidd had been paying $800 in monthly child support.

Kidd was indicted Monday and released on $150,000 bond. He faces the death penalty if convicted.

■ Women file lawsuit over radiation study

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Three women who say they were fed a solution containing radioactive iron as part of a nutrition study filed a lawsuit Tuesday on behalf of more than 800 women.

The lawsuit seeks damages from Vanderbilt University, its medical center and others for deaths, illnesses and emotional suffering by women involved in the study from 1945 to 1949.

Emma Craft, Helen Hutchison and her daughter, Barbara Hutchison, are also seeking medical care and access to records from the experiments.

In the 1940s, Vanderbilt researchers studied iron absorption in pregnant women to help establish nutritional guidelines for them. Researchers used radioactive iron so they could track its progress through the body.

Details of the experiments surfaced after recent news reports of widespread government radiation experiments.

Mrs. Craft, 72, said at a U.S. Senate hearing on Jan. 25 that the experiments caused the 1959 cancer death of her daughter, Carolyn, at age 11.

Helen Hutchison said the experiments performed on her when she was pregnant with Barbara in 1946 caused them both emotional distress and "illnesses that are consistent with radiation exposure."

■ Movie stole victim's story, family says

NEW YORK — The family of a lawyer who successfully sued the firm that fired him after he contracted AIDS filed a $10 million lawsuit Tuesday accusing the movie "Philadelphia" of stealing his story.

The family of the late Geoffrey Bowers sued Tri-Star Pictures, director Jonathan Demme, producer Scott Rudin and others associated with the movie.

The suit was filed in U.S. District Court in Manhattan.

"We made the mistake of trusting people," said Dana Bowers, one of Geoffrey's brothers. "They betrayed us."

Lawyer Daniel Felber said Geoffrey's brothers, Dana and Charles, and their mother, Alberta Bowers, all of Medford, Mass., shared their memories with people involved in the film with the understanding that they would be paid and that Geoffrey Bowers would be mentioned in the credits.

They said a dollar figure was never agreed upon, and that they thought negotiations were still in progress until the movie came out.

Tri-Star spokesman Ed Russell denied that "Philadelphia" was the story of Geoffrey Bowers.

"'Philadelphia' is a fictional story which addresses a regrettably recurring theme of AIDS discrimination in this country," Russell said in a statement issued on behalf of himself, Demme and Rudin.

Officials: Clinton likely to lift Vietnam embargo

By Barry Schweid
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON — President Clinton's top advisers are recommending that he lift the longstanding U.S. trade embargo with Vietnam, and the president is likely to take that step, senior administration officials said Tuesday.

A "consensus" memo to lift the embargo was prepared for the president several days ago, representing the views of the State and Defense departments as well as Clinton's senior staff, said one official.

"An administration recommendation to the president is pending at the White House. There's been no final decision," the official said.

White House officials had been scheduled to discuss the embargo at a meeting Tuesday, but the session was put off for a few days, pending consideration of the matter by the president, said another administration official. Both officials insisted on anonymity.

The consensus is the product of meetings going back to December, the second official said.

Clinton advisers weighing in on the issue were Secretary of State Warren Christopher, Defense Secretary Les Aspin and national security adviser Anthony Lake.

Assistant Secretary of State Winston Lord made a mid-December visit to Vietnam, returning with a favorable report on Hanoi's cooperation in determining the fates of 2,200 U.S. servicemen from the Vietnam War.

A majority of Clinton's advisers believe that lifting the embargo would improve chances for getting more cooperation from Hanoi in determining the fate of Americans still unaccounted for in the Vietnam war, said the administration officials, speaking on condition of anonymity.

There were varying views among Clinton's aides on the potential benefits to the United States of lifting the embargo, the officials said.

One of the officials said there had been considerable progress on the POW-MIA issue over the past year, and that improving relations with Vietnam would help that process.

Voting 62 to 38, the Senate approved a non-binding amendment last week urging Clinton to lift the embargo.

However, representatives of POW-MIA families are lobbying the White House against such a move, arguing the embargo should be maintained until Vietnam has done all it can to help resolve the cases of Americans still unaccounted for.

Washington imposed an embargo against North Vietnam in 1964. It extended the embargo to cover the whole country.

Clinton has said he will not lift sanctions until he is satisfied Hanoi has fully cooperated in the accounting of Americans listed as missing from the Vietnam War.

White House officials, congressional delegations and military officers who have visited Vietnam the last two months say Hanoi is not holding anything back in regard to MIAs.

Sinn Fein leader urges president to help peace effort

NEW YORK (AP) — With time winding down on his 48-hour U.S. visit, the head of the political party that backs the Irish Republican Army urged the Clinton administration Tuesday to help the peace effort in Northern Ireland.

"Progressive opinion in the U.S.A. can assist in the development of a peace process in Ireland," Gerry Adams told a peace conference. He is president of the legal Sinn Fein that supports the outlawed IRA.

"The U.S. government can play a significant and positive role in encouraging the peace process by helping to create a climate which moves the situation on."

President Clinton approved a special 48-hour visa for Adams, who had been blocked eight times over the past two decades from entering this country because of his alleged terrorist connections. While endorsing the IRA's military campaign against British rule, Adams has denied ever being an IRA member.

Adams was greeted warmly by a crowd of more than 400 people at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel that included Patricia Kennedy Lawford, Clinton's ambassador to Ireland, and former Boston mayor Ray Flynn, now ambassador to the Vatican.

He handled his whirlwind visit in a typically American way, doing a series of live television spots and news conferences to present his case.

But his interview Monday night on CNN's "Larry King Live" was withheld from the network's European satellite because Britain bans him from speaking on television.

In granting the visa, Clinton administration officials said they hoped Adams' visit will help end 25 years of violence over whether Northern Ireland should remain a British-run province or be allowed to unite with Ireland. The violence has claimed more than 3,100 lives.

In Washington, British Foreign Secretary Douglas Hurd denounced Adams on Tuesday as "a master of ambiguity" and said he had never renounced violence in Northern Ireland.

The afternoon forum was sponsored by the privately funded National Committee on American Foreign Policy Inc. Speeches were prepared and there was no dialogue between the principals.

"I tend to be a little bit cautious about whether a U.S. envoy could solve the problem in Northern Ireland," said John Alderice, leader of the Alliance Party supported by Northern Ireland's Catholics and Protestants.

Some at the conference were disappointed that Adams offered no new, concrete proposals. But he said he said stood by his position that the British government must clarify certain terms of the Joint Declaration on peace it signed with the Dublin government in December.

"This is the first step. What is the second step?" Adams said. "The ball is very firmly in the British court."

Opening lead: Queen of ♠

Should you allow knowledge of your opponents' ability to affect the way you tackle a hand? Should you always follow the probabilities, or should you choose different campaigns depending on who made a specific play? This hand illustrates tactical situations that might arise at the table.

Although the North hand is very powerful in support of spades, it is not good enough for this sequence—North really needed either the queen of hearts or a club void to justify a jump shift followed by a jump raise. With five trumps headed by the two top honors and valuable fillers for partner's second suit, South can hardly be blamed for the inelegant slam that was reached.

West led the queen of clubs and, when it held, shifted to the nine of hearts. How should you play in a vacuum? Would you play any other way if West were a relative neophyte? What if West were an expert?

The fate of the slam hinges on the heart suit. Since there are three holdings with West holding Q J x of hearts and only one where East has Q J bare, the percentage play is to finesse West for both honors. In a vacuum, that's the way to go.

But that's not the way bridge is played against real opponents. No average player would dare lead a heart away from Q J x, so if you know West is no expert, switch lines in favor of dropping Q J bare.

An expert, however, might easily try to talk you out of taking the best line. Ignore West's shenanigans—just go ahead with the percentage line and finesse the ten of hearts.

Actress Sophia Loren receives long-awaited star in Hollywood

LOS ANGELES — Sophia Loren, the Italian-born actress who rose to worldwide fame in American films, was honored Tuesday with the 2,000th star on Hollywood's Walk of Fame.

Sophia Loren is honored with 2,000th star on Walk.

Miss Loren, 59, said she hoped the star would encourage fledgling actresses. "May their dreams come true as my dream came true," she said.

The Walk of Fame, along the bustling Hollywood Boulevard, was started by the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce in 1960.

A separate dedication was held Tuesday for 29 other celebrities given stars, including composer Irving Berlin and singers Stevie Wonder and Pearl Bailey.

Among those who attended Miss Loren's ceremony was Charlton Heston, her co-star in the 1961 film "El Cid."

Discovered at age 14 by her future husband, producer Carlos Ponti, Miss Loren became an established film star in Italy before coming to Hollywood in 1958.

She has made nearly 60 films, including 20 in Italy. Her credits include "Marriage Italian Style," "The Pride and the Passion," "Desire Under the Elms" and "Aida."

Miss Loren won a best actress Oscar in 1961 for the Italian production "Two Women." She is the only performer to win an Oscar for work in a foreign-language film.

Three years ago, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences presented her with an honorary Oscar for lifetime achievement in film.

TULSA, Okla. — A pawnshop owner who likes Reba McEntire's singing but not her gun exchange program is offering his customers a chance to trade in Reba instead.

Bring a McEntire compact disc, cassette or concert ticket to Tulsa Gun and Pawn, and owner Buck Dickinson will give you a 10 percent discount on firearms.

The deal is his response to McEntire's offer to give 100 tickets to her Feb. 19 show to people who turn in their guns.

"She hasn't thought the problem through," Dickinson said Monday. "We don't have a gun problem. We have a criminal problem."

So far, McEntire's exchange program has brought in 49 guns, but only one person has taken advantage of Dickinson's offer, which began Friday. Another person wanted to trade his Twisted Sister albums, but Dickinson turned him down.

Dickinson said he will throw away the McEntire merchandise he receives.

"We wouldn't let this stuff get back out on the streets," he said.

BOULDER, Colo. — Pearl Jam singer Eddie Vedder doesn't think security guards belong in a mosh pit. Police think Vedder belongs in court.

Vedder, who chased security guards from the slam-dance area during a Nov. 27 concert at the University of Colorado, has been issued a summons alleging he obstructed government operations.

The charge is punishable by up to six months in jail and $750 in fines.

Police say security guards were trying to remove a "disruptive individual" from the pit when Vedder stopped singing and told the guards to get out.

The incident prompted the cancellation of the last of the band's three sold-out shows at the university.

Pearl Jam is a Seattle-based alternative rock band whose hits include "Alive" and "Jeremy."

mLOS ANGELES — The way Al Lewis sees it, Officer Leo Schnauser is just like an old flame.

Lewis reprised his role as Schnauser in the newly released film version of the TV series, "Car 54, Where Are You?"

"It's like meeting your first love all over again," the 83-year-old actor said in Tuesday's editions of the Daily News of Los Angeles. "It still brings back certain warm feelings."

Lewis, who also is well-known for his role as Grandpa in the TV series "The Munsters," took time away from running his New York comedy club to make the film.

ASHLAND, Ky. — You can't have Billy Ray Cyrus' achy breaky heart, but his wardrobe is up for grabs.

Cyrus donated a T-shirt, black leather hat, tennis shoes and blue jeans to a benefit auction for a Memphis, Tenn.-based children's hospital. Cyrus wore the outfit during a December concert in Huntington, W.Va. The T-shirt and tennis shoes are autographed.

Cyrus also donated a pair of leather boots that he bought from a fan at the concert for $300. Cyrus autographed the boots, too.

The Feb. 8 auction, sponsored by Catlettsburg radio station WTCR-FM, also will feature merchandise from country music artists Ricky Van Shelton, Clint Black and Randy Travis.

Rebels dodge bullet

Joe D. Williams/Reporter-Telegram

Lee's Sean Low (21) shoots around Odessa's Freddy Vasquez (10) for two of his game-high 30 points during Tuesday night's 69-66 win.

■ Midland Lee avoids district disaster with narrow win over last-place Odessa High.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

Staying in playoff contention in District 4-5A basketball is like walking through a World War II Normandy mine field. And there is a twist and turn between every explosion heard.

Those are facts the 6-3 Midland Lee Rebels discovered Tuesday night at Chaparral Center in a narrow 69-66 win over 0-9 Odessa High.

This mine field was littered with hazards. Lee walked through early building 12 point leads twice only to see the pesky "we're down, but not out" Bronchos forge four fourth quarter ties before a Sean Low bucket with 2:15 left in the game gave the Rebels a 61-59 lead, one they never surrendered. Still, OHS had a chance to pull it out as Aaron Rogers missed a three-point shot with 13 seconds left.

So, Lee had survived the mine field only to hear the explosion behind them. That was the fact that 5-3 Midland High had lost to 4-5 Odessa Permian, giving Lee sole possession of second place by one-half game over MHS and idle 5-3 Abilene High.

The scare of losing to OHS was over with very positive results for the Rebels. In war, funny things happen.

"That's good news," Lee coach Jon House said after learning of the MHS loss. "We went into this game with probably the worst shot at the playoffs of the three teams (Lee, MHS and AHS) involved, but this opens up all kinds of doors."

But the disturbing fact is that Lee has blown double-digit leads in three of its last four games, losing two of them. But House felt he knew the reason for this one.

"I think its obvious that our kids overlooked Odessa High with what could be the biggest game of their high school careers to this point coming Friday," House said. "You have to give credit to Odessa High because they came in here ready to play. You also have to credit our bench with sort of holding the fort when we needed it. The bottom line is that we will take the win and move on."

Sean Low had another sterling night for the Rebels and almost put this game in his hip pocket single-handedly. Low pumped in a game high 30 points and hit four of five shots and six of six free throws in the second half. He hit 11 of Lee's 20 fourth quarter points. He also had six rebounds.

"I had a feel for it tonight," Low said. "We came out and didn't play very well in the second half and I felt like I needed to do something.

"This was a good game for me because I was disappointed with the way I shot the ball in San Angelo, so I worked hard on my fundamentals all week. I was twisting my body when I was shooting."

Lee's Michael Nunn hit 13 points and hauled in a game high seven rebounds. Craig Sawyer and Mark Holly, both up from the junior varsity, got solid playing time for the thin Lee bench. Holly had five first quarter points.

UTEP tops WNM

EL PASO — Western New Mexico missed a free throw and a short field goal attempt in the final seconds, and Jeff Spillar then hit two free throws with less than one second to play, giving Texas-El Paso a 74-71 victory over Western New Mexico Tuesday night.

UTEP's Miners led 72-71, but the Mustangs' Gary Taylor missed a free throw with four seconds remaining that would have tied the game for Western New Mexico, an NAIA Division I opponent. The Mustangs' Sam James rebounded, but his follow shot with two seconds remaining fell short.

Antoine Gillespie led UTEP (13-6) with 28 points, including nine points in the game's last four minutes. Taylor led the upset-minded Mustangs (11-6) with 26 points, and James added 18.

Lady Broncs eliminate Lee

■ Midland Lee's loss eliminates the Lady Rebels from the playoffs.

Odessa High's Terri Butler connected on the the front end of a one-and-one foul shot with 2.8 seconds to play and the Lady Bronchos went on to hold off a Midland Lee rally for a 30-28 District 4-5A girls basketball win Tuesday night at the Chaparral Center.

The win was important for the Lady Bronchos, who improved to 26-4 overall and 9-1 in the district standings, and keeps them in the hunt for a district title showdown with league-leading Midland High. The loss was equally crucial for the Lady Rebels (9-15, 2-8) as it mathematically eliminated them from any chance of a playoff spot.

Midland High remained undefeated in district at 26-3, 10-0 with a 72-44 win over Odessa Permian. Odessa must now win Friday at third-place San Angelo Central. A Midland win at seventh-place Abilene Cooper is also needed for the district title showdown.

Lee came as close as they would to tying the game after reserve guard Caroline Bryant hit the first of two foul shots to pull the Lady Rebels to within 29-26 with 1:14 left. Then on the missed second shot, junior post Krissy Woodard grabbed the rebound and followed to pull Lee within 29-28.

The Lady Rebels had several chances to win the game after Odessa missed seven one-and-one free throw attempts in the fourth quarter that would have slowed the Lee rally. In the last minute, Lee had four chances to score and go ahead, but turnovers — either bad passes or violations — ended them each time.

Down 25-9 and committing 10 turnovers in the second half, the Lady Rebels put on a dramatic comeback to pull within one point. Odessa scored only five points in the second half and the Lee defense took over and grabbed all but two rebounds on Odessa's end of the floor.

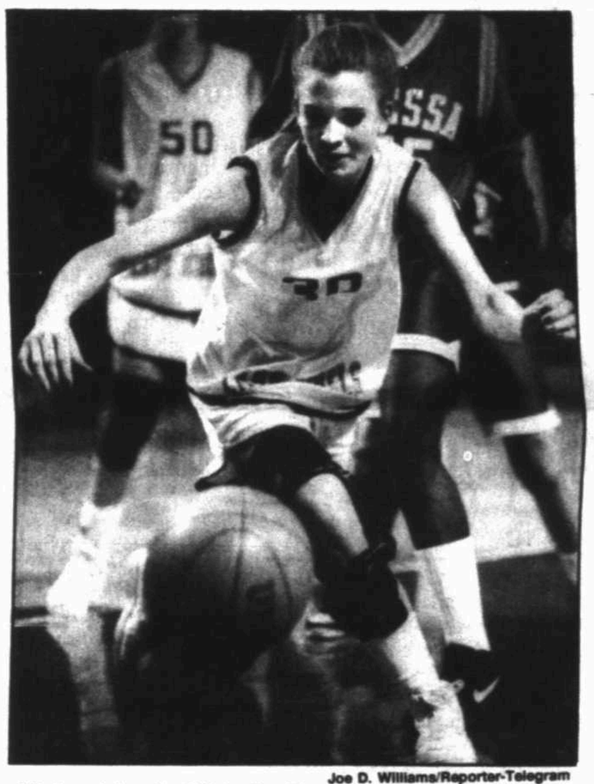

"I don't think we got an offensive rebound all night," Odessa coach Harry Masch said.

That was an exageration, but close to the truth. Lee senior post Deborah York and senior point guard Dee Kendricks each grabbed five defensive rebounds in the second half while Woodard continued to pound the boards and finished with a game-high 12.

But the poor offensive performance by Odessa didn't help them much. The Lady Bronchos shot an unbelievable 0-13 in the third period as Lee outscored them 10-0 in that period to pull to within six points (25-19) going into the fourth period.

The Lee defense held Odessa scoreless in the second half until Christina Rivas drove into the Lady Rebel zone for a layup with 5:37 left in the game to increase

Midland mows over Permian

■ Midland High's defense blanks Permian for the team's third shutout of the season.

Odessa Permian has gained nationwide fame (and infamy) for its football success. With English "football" it's a different story.

Midland High's Bulldog's swamped the Panthers Tuesday in a District 5-5A District soccer game 6-0 as Mojo fell to 3-6. If soccer were as popular as football in West Texas, Bulldog fans might still be singing their school's song in the Tall City streets.

All the same, the win made for a nice move back to a position of power in 5-5A for Midland (2-0 in district, 7-0 overall) after a league-opening close call against Midland Lee Jan. 25. The Bulldogs are now alone in first place in 5-5A thanks to Abilene Cooper's 3-0 loss to San Angelo.

Redskins offer Turner head job

By Matt Yancey
Associated Press Writer

ASHBURN, Va. — The Washington Redskins turned to an old nemesis Tuesday, reaching into the staff of the Dallas Cowboys for offensive coordinator Norv Turner to rescue their free fall from Super Bowl stardom just two years ago.

The Redskins scheduled a news conference for 11 a.m. CST today to announce a new coach after Turner met with team owner Jack Kent Cooke and general manager Charley Casserly for more than five hours Tuesday.

"We'll see you tomorrow," Turner said cheerfully as he left the Redskins' headquarters 35 miles west of the nation's capital. Neither Cooke nor Casserly would comment, but both were all smiles.

Turner arrived just 40 hours after helping guide the Cowboys to their second straight Super Bowl title with a 30-13 victory Sunday night over the Buffalo Bills.

He called his meetings with Cooke and Casserly "interesting," but said little else other than, "Things are going good."

The Redskins have spoken with no one other than Turner since Jan. 4, when Cooke fired Richie Petitbon after his team finished its worst season in three decades with a 4-12 record. Petitbon lasted only 10 months as head coach after being the team's defensive coordinator for more than a decade.

When asked Monday in Dallas if becoming Washington's new coach was a done deal, Turner said, "I guess it might be .... I'm ready to go."

The Redskins and Turner had hoped to wrap up the transition four weeks ago during the Cowboys' break between the regular season and the playoffs. And most of the contract details were negotiated before NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue stepped in and invoked

Realignment shuffles area teams, districts

■ District 4-5A stays intact for next 2 years.

Staff Report

District 4-5A will remain the same under the University Interscholastic League's biennial district realignment released today, but all the area teams, except Class 3A Greenwood, will either be seeing some new faces or losing a rivalry when football begins next fall.

Big Spring and Andrews will lose their rivalry with Sweetwater when the Mustangs move out of District 4-4A to 5-5A with Lamesa, Lubbock Estacado, Snyder, Wolfforth Frenship and Levelland. Andrews and Big Spring will remain with the rest of 4-4A intact with Monahans, San Angelo Lakeview, Fort Stockton and Pecos.

The Rankin-Garden City football rivalry is also a thing of the past as Rankin moves to District 8-A with Christoval, Eden, Menard, Mertzon, Irion County and Miles. The Red Devils will virtually be seeing all new faces in this league. Garden City moved to District 11-A with Bronte, Robert Lee, Roscoe, Sterling City and Water Valley, another new look for the Bearkats. However, Rankin and Garden City will be back in competition in basketball with both teams in District 25.

The Stanton Buffaloes remain in 6-2A, but the teams they will play have changed with Tuscola, Jim Ned, Winters, Wall, Coahoma and Forsan now in the district.

Greenwood is in District 8-3A with Reagan County, Colorado City, Crane, Kermit and Sonora. That league is the same as the last two years.

Class 4A is getting a whole new look. In is Southlake Carroll, winner of the last two 3A football titles and the 1993 boy's basketball crown.

Out are A&M Consolidated, at least a quarterfinalist each season since 1990, and Houston Davis, which snapped a Odessa's lead to 27-21.

Then Rivas hit Odessa's only other field goal of the half with a strong drive to the bucket to give the Lady Bronchos a 29-23 lead with 3:50 left.

"That little layup by Christina was a darn big goal," Masch said. "I hollered at her to take it to the goal and she did."

Reserves did the job for Lee in the second half. Regular starters Woodard and York started the second half but Lee's Bryant, Farrah Fisher and Michelle Benson came off the bench and finally got the Lady Rebel offense going.

Fisher had two assists on two York buckets to open the half while Benson got an assist and Woodard got a basket on the next play. Then Benson grabbed a huge offensive rebound and made the follow shot to pull Lee within 25-17 with 5:12 left in the third.

Fisher capped off the 10-0 by sinking two free throws after pulling down an offensive rebound. Bryant ran the offense and allowed Lee to make only three turnovers in the third.

"Farrah, Michelle and Caroline came in a did a heck of a job," Lee coach Elise Kail said. "I'm real proud of them."

Lee had ample chances to win the game at this point, but turnovers killed them in the first half and the mistakes returned in the fourth quarter. NBA All-Star subs named

NEW YORK (AP) — While Latrell Sprewell wasn't among the 100 players listed on the NBA All-Star ballot, it won't stop him from playing in the game on Feb. 13 at Minneapolis.

The Golden State Warriors' guard was among 14 reserves — seven apiece from the Eastern and Western conferences — chosen Tuesday by the league's head coaches.

Along with Sprewell, selected as substitutes for the Western Conference were forwards Karl Malone of Utah, Danny Manning of the Los Angeles Clippers and Cliff Robinson of Portland, center David Robinson of San Antonio, and guards Kevin Johnson of Phoenix and John Stockton of Utah.

The East's reserves will be forwards Horace Grant of Chicago and Dominique Wilkins of Atlanta, centers Patrick Ewing of New York and Alonzo Mourning of Charlotte, and guards Mookie Blaylock of Atlanta, Mark Price of Cleveland and John Starks of New York.

Starting for the West will be forwards Charles Barkley of Phoenix and Shawn Kemp of Seattle, center Hakeem Olajuwon of Houston, and guards Clyde Drexler of Portland and Mitch Richmond of Sacramento. Opening for the East will be forwards Derrick Coleman of New Jersey and Scottie Pippen of Chicago, center Shaquille O'Neal of Orlando and guards Kenny Anderson of New Jersey and B.J. Armstrong of Chicago.

Sprewell, the NBA leader in minutes played with an average of 44.9, and the Warriors' scoring leader at 21.2, is the ninth player ever and the first since Bill Laimbeer in 1983 to be selected despite not being on the ballot.

Sprewell is one of six first-time All-Stars among the reserves. The others are Mourning, Starks, Blaylock, Grant and Cliff Robinson. Among the starters making their All-Star debuts will be Coleman, Anderson and Armstrong.

In contrast, Ewing and Wilkins are All-Star selections for the eighth time.

Boston inks Berryhill to minor league deal

NEW YORK — The Boston Red Sox, who already had signed free agent catcher Dave Valle, signed Damon Berryhill to a minor-league contract Tuesday.

Berryhill, who became a free agent Dec. 20 when Atlanta failed to offer a 1994 contract, would get $700,000 if he makes the team, and Boston would get a $1.1 million option for 1995. He made $1 million last year with Atlanta, when he hit .245 with eight homers and 43 RBIs in 335 at-bats.

Another player let loose in December, outfielder Dwight Smith, agreed to a one-year contract with the California Angels. Smith hit .300 last season for the Chicago Cubs with 11 homers and 35 RBIs.

Meanwhile, two more players in arbitration settled their cases by agreeing to one-year contracts, and the first two hearings took place in Los Angeles.

Outfielder Eric Anthony and Seattle agreed at $1.1 million, more than triple the $350,000 he made in 1993. Infielder Mike Bordick and Oakland agreed at $1.05 million, more than twice his $400,000 salary last season. Catcher Brent Mayne and Kansas City settled at $500,000, more than double his $225,000 salary last season.

The settlements left 52 players remaining in arbitration, which runs through Feb. 18. The three cases argued Tuesday all involved right-handed pitchers

Mel Rojas and the Montreal Expos appeared before arbitrator Reginald Alleyne. Rojas, who went 5-8 with a 2.95 ERA last season and made $300,000, asked for $1.2 million while Montreal offered $850,000.

Kenny Rogers and Texas settled just before they were to appear before arbitrator Rolf Valtin, with Rogers asking for $2.5 million and the Rangers offering $2 million. Rogers made $1 million last year, when he was 16-10 with a 4.10 ERA.

In other news, reports circulated that Robin Yount will retire rather than return to the Milwaukee Brewers.

Orangemen race past Huskies

Associated Press

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Lawrence Moten had 31 points and John Wallace had several key second-half baskets while adding 25 points as No. 15 Syracuse handed No. 5 Connecticut its first Big East loss, 108-95 Tuesday night.

■ Top 25 Roundup

Syracuse (14-3, 7-3 Big East) moved into a second-place tie with Boston College by ending a 10-game winning streak by the Huskies (18-2, 8-1).

Connecticut played its second game without coach Jim Calhoun, who has been hospitalized with pneumonia.

Connecticut, which won the first regular-season meeting against Syracuse, led 51-48 at halftime after an opening 20 minutes featuring eight ties and 18 lead changes.

No. 6 Arkansas 89, Vanderbilt 76

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — Roger Crawford and Scotty Thurman scored three baskets each during a 19-0 run that helped sixth-ranked Arkansas beat Vanderbilt.

The victory moved the Razorbacks (15-2, 6-2 SEC) into a tie for first in the Western Division of the Southeastern Conference.

Frank Seckar's fourth 3-pointer in six attempts cut the Arkansas lead to 46-43 before the Crawford-Thurman spree. The Commodores (10-7, 3-5) suffered four turnovers during the five-minute period.

Thurman hit a 3-pointer with 15:40 to play and then a one-hander from the baseline. Crawford got a basket inside after a pump fake. Crawford followed with a 3-pointer and then a stuff after a steal by Thurman. That put Arkansas up 58-43.

Purdue's Glenn Robinson (13) denies Michigan's Jalen Rose a basket during the battle between two Top 25 teams Tuesday at West Lafayette, Ind.

No. 13 Michigan 63, No. 8 Purdue 62

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. — Juwan Howard put back an offensive rebound with 21.1 seconds left and Purdue missed three shots in the final seconds as the 13th-ranked Wolverines overcame an 11-point deficit to defeat the Boilermakers.

The Wolverines (14-4, 6-2 Big Ten) overcame a 36-point performance by Glenn Robinson to win a battle for first place in the Big Ten.

Purdue (17-3, 5-3) took its biggest lead of the night at 53-42 on a jumper by Robinson with 8:31 to play. But poor free throw shooting cost Purdue dearly down the stretch as the Boilermakers missed 10 of 15 in the second half. Purdue was only 8-of-20 for the game.

Dugan Fife, who scored eight of his 12 points down the stretch, ignited Michigan's comeback with a 3-pointer.

There were 11 lead changes and three ties in the first half. The Boilermakers then scored the first six points of the second half and weren't caught until Jalen Rose's jumper put Michigan ahead 59-58 after Robinson had missed two free throws with 3:23 to go.

Two baskets by Robinson, sandwiched around a rebound basket by Ray Jackson, gave Purdue its last lead at 62-61 with 1:34 to go. And after Rose missed a jumper, the Boilermakers missed an opportunity to add to the lead when Linc Darner missed a 3-point attempt and Michigan grabbed the rebound to set the stage for Howard's winning shot.

No. 10 Temple 84, Rutgers 45

PHILADELPHIA — Senior Eddie Jones matched a career high by scoring 30 points as 10th-ranked Temple routed Rutgers in the Atlantic 10 for its eighth straight victory.

Rutgers (6-11; 2-6 Atlantic 10) scored the first five points of the game, but Temple (14-2, 7-1) retaliated with 18 straight; 11 by Aaron McKie and seven by Jones. The Owls led 46-13 after a jumper by Jones with 1:07 left in the half.

Jones, Temple's leading scorer and defender who also leads the team in steals and blocked shots, had 25 points in the first half, one short of the homecourt record set last year by McKie against Rutgers.

Jones individually outscored the Scarlet Knights 18-3 over one stretch of the game. McKie, who finished with 22 points, had 11 in the first 20 minutes.

The Owls scored the first seven points of the second half to led 55-19 with 17:41 to play. Rutgers scored eight straight points to make it 55-27, but the Owls went on to lead twice by as many as 41 points.

Charles Jones led Rutgers with 16 points.

Texas beats Rice without Tyler, 85-70

AUSTIN (AP) — Albert Burditt helped make up for the absence of the Southwest Conference's leading scorer by hitting 24 points and grabbing nine rebounds as Texas defeated Rice 85-70 Tuesday night.

With B.J. Tyler and his SWC best 24-points-per-game average sidelined with a broken bone in his left hand, Burditt dominated inside for the Longhorns (13-6 overall, 5-1 SWC).

Rice (11-7, 3-3) whittled a 17-point Texas lead to 61-58 with 6:57 to play. But the Longhorns opened a 17-3 run, featuring crowd-raising monster dunks by Burditt and Tremaine Wingfield, giving Texas a 78-61 lead with 2:01 left.

The Owls, who were led by Torrey Andrews with 23 points and Adam Peakes with 22, never got closer than 15 points down the stretch.

Behind the sturdy rebounding and outlet passing of Burditt, Texas finished the first half with a 23-8 run, highlighted by six straight points from Carl Simpson. Rice went scoreless from the field in the final 12:09 before intermission.

Despite the drought, the Owls trailed at only 39-27 at halftime.

Terrence Rencher and Roderick Anderson each added 16 points for Texas.

Tyler injured his hand in Saturday's victory against Houston and is being diagnosed on a day-to-day basis, said Texas coach Tom Penders.

Prices surge

Energy futures prices rose sharply Tuesday on the New York Mercantile Exchange on recent cold weather in the Northeast and expectations that industry data would show a reduction in heating oil stocks.

West Texas Intermediate for March delivery was 73 cents higher at $15.92 a barrel.

Local crude purchasers raised their posted price 75 cents to $14.25 a barrel.

March natural gas contracts were up 8.5 cents at $2.639 per 1,000 cubic feet.

The energy market had "one of the biggest up days in a while," said Gerald E. Samuels, managing director of ARB Oil Inc. in New York. "There was a lot of buying of the front months of heating oil."

Strong demand due to cold weather was expected to produce a drawdown of heating oil and diesel fuel of 4 million to 5 million barrels last week, following a decline of 13 million barrels in the previous two weeks, Samuels said.

Stocks were down 7.35 million barrels for the week, the American Petroleum Institute said after the close of trading.

"People are realizing there are no surpluses around," said Robert Baker, an energy analyst at Prudential Securities Inc. in New York.

Dollar falls

NEW YORK — The dollar dropped to its lowest closing level against the Japanese yen in two months Tuesday with traders still nervous about the apparent lack of progress in U.S.-Japanese trade talks. The dollar also fell against most other currencies.

Gold prices rose. On the New York Commodity Exchange, gold for current delivery closed at $384.10 a troy ounce, up $2.50 from Monday.

In New York, the dollar finished at 107.70 yen, down from 108.63 yen Monday.

Other late dollar rates as of 4 p.m. in New York, compared with late Monday: 1.7320 German marks, down from 1.7340; 1.4485 Swiss francs, down from 1.4565; 5.8790 French francs, down from 5.8880; 1,687.50 Italian lire, down from 1,689; and 1.3302 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3305.

In New York, the pound ended at $1.4990, cheaper than $1.5060.

On the New York Comex, silver for current delivery closed at $5.279 a troy ounce, up 15.5 cents.

Stocks retreat

NEW YORK — Stocks retreated from their record highs on Tuesday as a spike in interest rates and concern about inflation gave investors an excuse to sell shares that had run up in value.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 14.35 points to 3,964.01 after setting three successive all-time closes and surging 70 points.

Widely eyed index hits 5-year high

■ Monthly survey bolsters other evidence that strong economic expansion in late '93 surged unabated into '94.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — U.S. manufacturing expanded for the fifth straight month in January to the highest level in 5½ years but prices also showed a potentially troublesome rise, the nation's purchasing executives reported Tuesday.

The National Association of Purchasing Management's widely followed monthly survey bolstered other evidence that the strong economic expansion in the final three months of 1993 surged unabated into 1994.

The executives who buy supplies for America's factories reported healthy increases in new and backlogged orders, exports and deliveries; shrinking inventories; and the most stable employment since May 1992.

However, the survey also contained evidence that inflation was heating up, with manufacturers' prices rising at the highest rate since November 1990.

The inflation news helped dampen buying enthusiasm for stocks and bonds early Tuesday, Wall Street traders said. The Dow Jones industrial average, which has been hitting consecutive record highs and flirting with the unprecedented 4,000 level, was off about 15 points to 3,963 by late morning.

The purchasing managers group said its monthly index of manufacturing activity surged to 57.7 percent in January from 57.1 percent in December. It was the highest level since a 58.2 percent reading in July 1988.

The index is based on survey results culled from the group's 35,000 members nationwide. An index that exceeds 50 percent indicates the manufacturing economy is expanding, while a reading below 50 percent indicates the manufacturing economy is shrinking. The index has exceeded 50 percent since September.

Robert Bretz, head of the association's business survey committee, said the survey results demonstrated the economy's stamina but the price surge was mixed news.

"It's obviously a reflection of manufacturers' faith that they can raise prices, an indication that business is strong," Bretz said in a telephone interview. At the same time, he said, such increases can presage a rise in consumer inflation by six to eight months.

Construction spending ends year on gains

WASHINGTON (AP) — Construction spending rose an unexpected 2.6 percent in December to finish the year with a 7.9 percent annual increase, the Commerce Department said Tuesday.

Economists said they expect the advance — which most had predicted would be only 1.5 percent in December — will carry over into 1994. They noted that even the depressed office and industrial building sector appears to be rebounding.

"We have a fairly broad-based increase in construction activity," said Michael Carliner, an economist with the National Association of Home Builders. "We'll probably see some drop-off in January because of the weather. But we're finally seeing some turnaround."

Carliner said he also expects to see increased government spending to help rebuild the Los Angeles area hit by last month's earthquake.

The Commerce Department reported that residential, non-residential and government spending on construction totaled a record $470.3 billion in 1993, up from $436.0 billion in 1992, when spending had increased 8.1 percent.

Construction spending had fallen during the recession, down 8.8 percent in 1991 and 0.3 percent in 1990 after rising 2.6 percent in 1989.

In December, spending totaled a record $513.1 billion at a seasonally adjusted annual rate, up from $500 billion a month earlier.

It was the eighth straight increase, the first such string of advances since November 1983-June 1984.

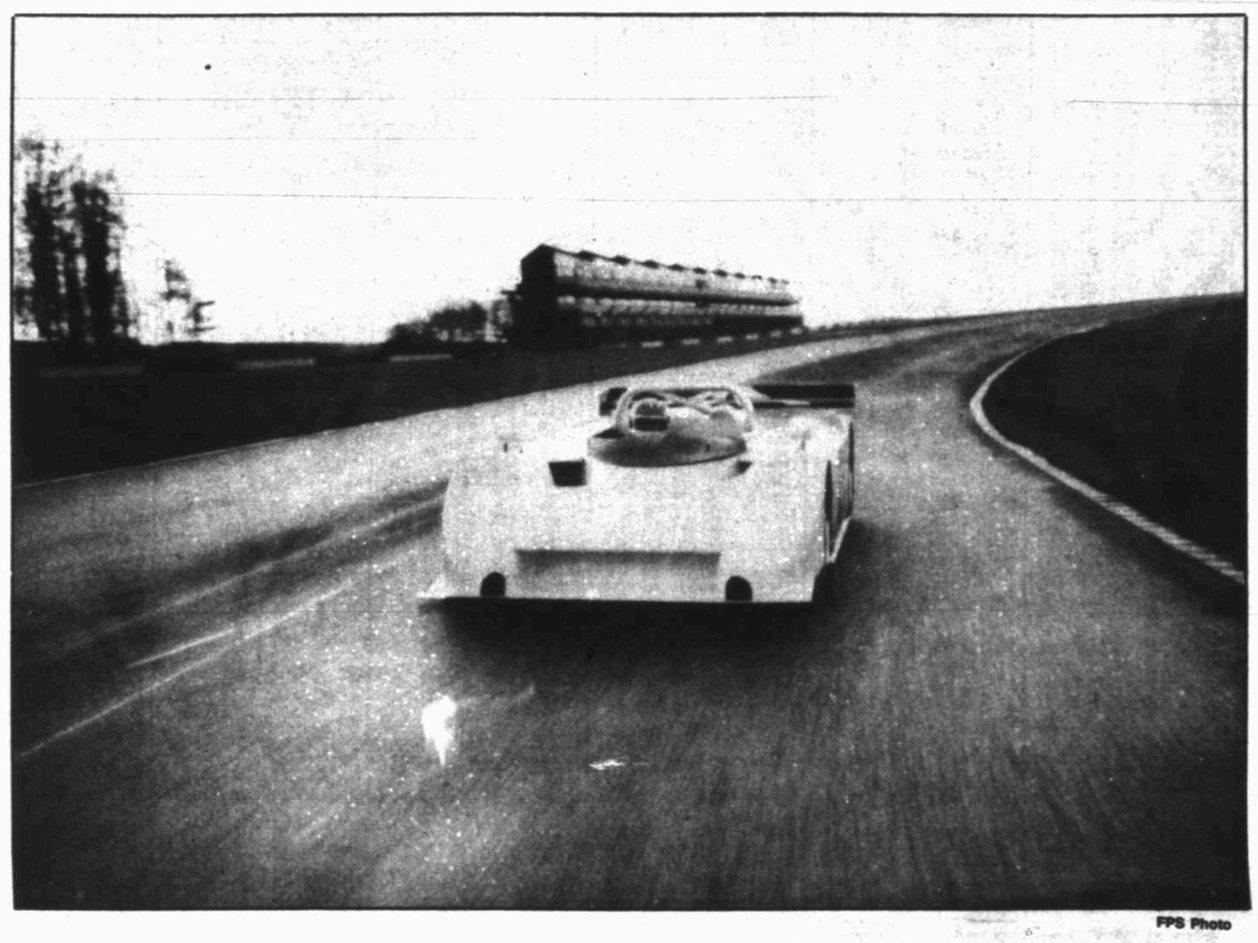

Crayons go high-tech for Hallmark project

DALLAS (AP) — Finally, a Crayola that won't leave marks on the wall.

Micrografx Inc. and Hallmark Cards Inc. said Tuesday they are teaming up to make children's drawing and coloring software under the Crayola brand of Hallmark's Binney & Smith subsidiary.

Gordon Tucker, president and chief executive officer of Micrografx, said the venture will bring a well-known childhood product into the computer age.

The first two software products — one for children ages 3-6, another for those older — should be available by summer and cost less than $50 each, Tucker said.

Poll: Auto dealers find some success in shaking bad image

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The image of the automobile dealer as a fast-talking, sleazy operator dates to the early 20th century, when cars replaced horses in livery stables known as much for gambling and prostitution as horse trading.

It's only been in recent years that car dealers and their salespeople have begun to shake the rap.

A recent survey by the Dohring Co., a Glendale automotive market research firm, found almost 80 percent of 1,246 respondents had a mostly or very favorable impression of new car dealerships.

The seemingly strong endorsement was tempered, however, by three of four respondents who said dealers should change or improve the way they do business. The most-often cited complaint: pushy salespeople.

"Ninety-five percent of dealers treat customers the way they want to be treated themselves," National Automobile Dealers Association President Bill Dodge said recently. "It is always the 5 percent in any business whose actions reflect on the rest of the industry, and that is unfortunate."

> 'It is always the 5 percent in any business whose actions reflect on the rest of the industry, and that is unfortunate.'
> — Bill Dodge, dealers association president

Many dealers interviewed at NADA's annual convention, which concluded Francisco Tuesday, said they know they have a long way to go to make consumers feel better about dealing with them.

Several pointed to training programs offered by manufacturers and the association as raising the standards under which salespeople operate.

In the two years since the association introduced it, 800 salespeople have completed the four-phase Sales Certification Program.

NADA announced Phase II of the certification program Monday. More than 900 salespeople, managers and dealers from 84 dealerships in six cities have enrolled.

"In the not-too-distant future, customers will demand to work with certified sales professionals, as they do in other industries," said Lin Peacock, NADA executive director of dealership operations.

Vitamin C vs. cancer

Are you less likely to develop cancer if you get lots of vitamin C? Probably.

That's the opinion of a panel of experts recently convened by the Food and Drug Administration to study the question. When asked how they would rate vitamin C's potential for reducing the risk of cancer on a scale of one to 10, six of the experts averaged an eight. One panelist disagreed, calling the chances of a vitamin-C anticancer connection zero.

Indisputably, people who eat more vitamin C-rich fruits and vegetables have less cancer - sometimes 30 to 50 percent less -according to nearly 200 studies worldwide, noted Gladys Block, Ph.D., of the University of California at Berkeley.

A few studies tie vitamin C with a lower risk of all types of cancers. But the evidence is much stronger for vitamin C-protection against cancers of the stomach, colon and rectum, pancreas and cervix, said the experts.

Dr. Block also favors taking vitamin C supplements. She takes 2,000 to 3,000 milligrams of C daily, but says the evidence shows that 100 to 200 mg daily may be anticancer. "There's no evidence of any risk and lots of evidence of benefits," she says.

Anti-hay fever pill

Here's a new scientific tidbit to file away for hay fever season. When the pollen allergies with sneezing and runny nose come on, you may want to try a high dose of calcium for some relief.

Yes, calcium has been used in Germany for many years to treat hay fever symptoms. Previous studies showed that injections of calcium helped stifle the allergic response. Now a new study by researchers from Heinrich-Heine-University in Dusseldorf finds that calcium pills also have an anti-allergy effect.

In a double-blind study, researchers had 30 patients with grass pollen allergies take a 1,000-mg calcium pill. Within 90 minutes there was less swelling in the mucus membranes of the nose that is a typical reaction to the pollen. Although the calcium reduced the allergic reaction, it did not lead to less sneezing and secretions in this test.

Nevertheless, Steve Austin, N.D. (naturopathic doctor), writing in The Naturopathic Physician, thinks taking a gram of calcium may reduce the release of symptom-provoking histamine in many people and is worth a try. If the calcium works, you know it very quickly, he says. If not, there is no harm done.

Salt and stones

If you are susceptible to kidney stones, eating a lot of salt is not a good idea. Sodium promotes the formation of the stones, according to Charles Y.C. Pak, M.D., at the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center in Dallas.

Such stones are hard masses of salts and minerals, notably calcium. A high-sodium diet leads to increased concentrations of calcium in the urine, says Dr. Pak. Gradually over time the calcium plus other crystals build up, forming the hard stones.

In a recent study, Dr. Pak and colleagues had 14 healthy volunteers eat either a high-sodium (14.5 grams a day) or low-sodium (2.9 grams) diet for 10 days. During the high-salt diet, urine/calcium concentrations jumped about 40 percent compared with the low-salt regimen.

Further, the high-sodium caused about a 20 percent reduction in beneficial urinary citrate which helps inhibit the formation of stones.

Other research reveals that 10 to 20 percent of stone-formers overindulge in salt. Some prone to stones also have an overreaction to sodium. Best advice: If you are at high risk for kidney stones, restrict sodium intake to no more than 3 grams a day.

Portable laser may treat carpal tunnel syndrome

HOUSTON (AP) — A portable cold laser may be the next new product used for sufferers of carpal tunnel syndrome.

This spring, General Motors is expected to release a study on the results of MicroLight 830, which resembles a small flashlight. The automaker has invested about $300 million into the product made by the Houston area firm of LaserMedics.

Carpal tunnel syndrome usually strikes employees who work long hours with their hands — like computer keyboard users — performing tasks involving repetitive motions. Carpal tunnel sufferers complain of pain and numbness in their wrists and hands.

The MicroLight 830 — a portable, battery-operated, low energy laser — was developed by a team of doctors and engineers in Denmark. The laser uses a wavelength that penetrates the skin up to one inch deep without producing heat or damaging tissues.

The laser thrusts a stream of photons or light energy to the cells, resulting in increased blood flow and oxygen and reduced swelling.

In therapy, a doctor holds the laser against the wrist for a few minutes every other day for five weeks.

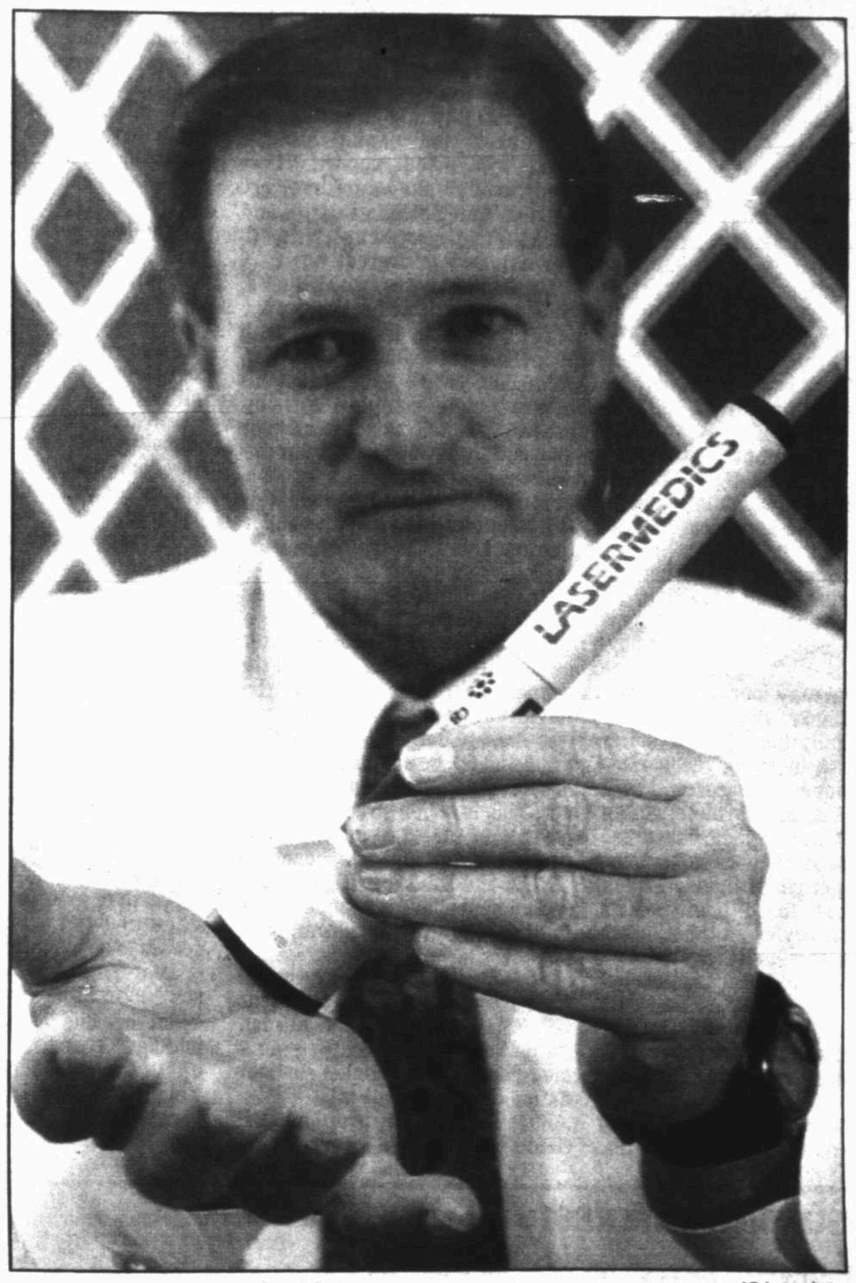

"I think it will be successful, a good treatment option," said Dr. Bernardino Arocha, one of several doctors experimenting with the MicroLight 830.

Arocha has treated about 17 patients with the device with about 14 showing varying degrees of improvement. Three had to proceed to surgery, he said.

General Motors tested the cold laser on workers who suffered from carpal tunnel to see if it would provide a cure. Doctors are now analyzing the data from the double blind study of 200 employees and are expected to announce their conclusions within a few months.

Meanwhile, LaserMedics is seeking approval from the Food and Drug Administration for a variety of medical uses for its laser. Its application is based on 25 clinical scientific papers worldwide on the benefits of cold laser technology on inflammation and other problems.

The cold laser now sells to the veterinarian market for about $7,000.

Exercise can ease stress of menopause

By Ira Dreyfuss

WASHINGTON (AP) — Middle age doesn't have to make a woman feel suddenly old. Exercise can help her to retain strength and vitality.

"Exercise decreases risk factors for coronary artery disease, decreases the risk of osteoporosis, strengthens pelvic structure and improves mood," said the report in The Physician and Sportsmedicine, a medical journal.

Studies find that taking up aerobic exercise can increase endurance, according to the article by Dr. Kathleen M. Hargarten of the Medical College of Wisconsin in Milwaukee.

Diseases of the heart are a special concern to women at menopause because diminished estrogen production robs them of that hormone's apparent protective effect against cholesterol increases, the article said.

But exercise seems to increase production of high-density lipoproteins, which sweep away low-density lipoproteins, the cholesterol component that can lead to artery-clogging buildups of plaque.

"There are indications that even relatively low- to moderate-intensity exercise can produce significant increases in HDL cholesterol," Hargarten wrote.

Her personal prescription leans to the moderate end, calling for a minimum of three vigorous 20-minute aerobic exercise sessions per week. However, some researchers have found that daily walking can improve HDL levels.

Reduction in estrogen can also lead to the brittle-bone disease known as osteoporosis. But exercise puts stress on bones, which stimulates them to become stronger, the article said.

Estrogen replacement is considered the best therapy against bone loss in postmenopausal women. But "recent evidence suggests that exercise also helps prevent and possibly reverse bone loss caused by aging," the article said.

This may be overstating the bene-

Experts debate extra low-fat diets

By Marian Burros
N.Y. Times News Service

The mantra for the 90s is "Eat more, weigh less," but diet experts are starting to ask questions about this latest in a long line of magic bullets intended to take off weight painlessly.

The new dieting wisdom comes with just one caveat: no more than 10 percent of the calories can come from fat. That's a far cry from the normal American diet, which hovers near 40 percent of calories from fat, and a good deal less than the maximum of 30 percent recommended by many health professionals. Not many experts think the latest dieting regimen has any better chance of success than the very low-calorie liquid diets that preceded it or earlier fads like the Scarsdale Diet, the Fit for Life Diet, the grapefruit diet or the rice diet.

But if you believe Dr. Dean Ornish, who has titled his weight-loss book "Eat More, Weigh Less" (HarperCollins, 1993), nothing could be easier than doing just what the title suggests. So easy, in fact, that the idea of losing weight on a very low-fat diet is already being picked up by the newest anti-diet promoters, like Susan Powter in her book, "Stop the Insanity!" (Simon & Schuster, 1993). Ms. Powter, a motivational speaker, promises her readers:

"You can eat whatever you want, whenever you want it, and however much of it you want." Only later in the book does the reader learn the bad news: whatever you eat must be low in fat and high in fiber.

Ornish developed his diet from his work with men with blocked arteries. Through a very low-fat diet, exercise, stress reduction and intensive counseling, the men were able to reverse severe coronary heart disease. On average, they lost 22 pounds and have kept most of the weight off for four to eight years. But as many experts point out, Ornish's success does not necessarily translate into a weight-loss diet for everybody.

Dr. Wayne Calloway, an obesity specialist who teaches at George Washington University, is highly critical of such diets. "Ornish is basically a cult figure who persuaded a bunch of neurotic males who were afraid they were going to die to comply," he said.

It is a charge Ornish resents. "My work is the antithesis of a cult," he said. "It is based on very rigorous scientific research. We didn't take people on the basis of motivation."

But none of the other experts interviewed think there is much likelihood that people will adhere to diets that contain so little fat: the lack of familiar, pleasurable tastes makes it hard to stay with such a diet for long. Dr. Johanna Dwyer, the director of the nutrition clinic at New England Medical Center in Boston, said that in one diet study she worked on, it was very difficult getting the subjects to reduce their fat intake to 22 percent from an average 37 percent. "We found that people needed help in order to do it," she said.

Ornish disagrees: "It is easier to make big changes rather than small ones because the benefits are so much more dramatic, and they occur so much more quickly."

The experts are also divided over whether a 10 percent fat diet is safe for the general population. And some even

Self-examination of your breasts can save your life

N.Y. Times News Service

Learning to examine your breasts can save your life. Teaching someone can save theirs.

Here, according to the Breast Cancer Screening Project in Austin, is how to do a monthly breast self-exam.

■ Standing before a mirror:

Face forward, undressed to the waist with arms relaxed by your sides. Look for visible changes in size, shape, skin texture and color. Note irregularities such as a dimpling, redness, puckering, or a retraction of the skin.

Notice nipple changes, such as scaliness, a pulling to one side or a change in direction.

Place hands on hips and press arms inward. Turn side to side, noting changes.

Place hands behind head and press forward, note changes as you turn from side to side. Large-breasted women should take two fingers from the opposite hand to lift and look.

Place your hands on your waist, and bow toward the mirror, letting breasts fall forward. Note changes in shape.

Using a hand mirror, inspect areas underneath the breast, looking for a flattening which could reveal a lesion.

Nipple discharge can be a sign of a problem. Gently squeeze, vertically and horizontally, the breast tissue surrounding the nipple between thumb and middle finger, checking for discharge.

■ Standing in the shower:

With a soapy hand, rub down firmly from the collar bone down to the nipple, feeling for lymph nodes, lumps or a thickening.

Place right hand on hip, and with the left hand, inspect the armpit for lumps. Check high in the armpit, down the side of the body and to the chest. With thumb in armpit, feel behind it with fingers. Repeat on opposite side.

With left hand, make a shelf for right breast and with right fingers check for lumps in right breast. Repeat on opposite side.

■ Lying down:

Place a pillow under left shoulder, resting left hand behind head. With fingers together and flat and with firm, even pressure move hand in a wide circle around the breast, letting the breast tissue slide under fingertips. Look for cystic changes from previous month. Move hand in increasingly smaller circles from the outer edge of the breast toward the nipple. Don't lift fingers off skin. A little lotion on the fingertips will make them more sensitive. Repeat.

Non-smokers risk lung cancer with high-fat diet, study finds

By Paul Recer

WASHINGTON (AP) — High-fat diets increase the risk of lung cancer, even for nonsmokers, according to a National Cancer Institute study published recently.

An NCI study of nonsmoking women in Missouri found that those whose diets had 15 percent or more saturated fat were about six times more likely to develop lung cancer than those whose diets had 10 percent of less of the fat.

"We found that as you increase the amount of saturated fat, you increase the amount of lung cancer," Michael C.R. Alavanja, an NCI researcher, said Tuesday.

A report on the study was published in the Journal of the National Cancer Institute.

Earlier studies have linked high-fat diets with cancers of the colon, prostate and breast. High-fat diets also are thought to increase the risk of heart disease.

Alavanja said his research compared the diets of 429 nonsmoking women who had lung cancer with the diets of 1,021 nonsmoking women who did not have lung cancer. The women all lived in the same part of the country, Missouri, were of about the same age and represented "a typical American female population."

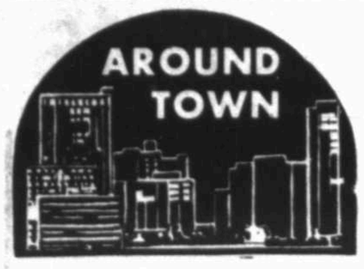

The women filled out forms that asked about their dietary habits. They were then divided into five groups based on the amount of fat and other nutrients they consumed.

Alavanja said the study found that those with diets containing the lowest amount of saturated fat and the highest amount of fruits, vegetables, beans and peas were the least likely to develop lung cancer.

At the other end of the scale, 20 percent of the women in the study with the highest consumption of fat and diets lowest in fruits, vegetables, beans and peas had about six times more lung cancer.

For a specific type of lung cancer, adenocarcinoma, there was an 11-fold

LOW-FAT: Is very 'lite' diet good for your health?

(From 1D)

question its efficacy, assuming that people can stick to the diet over a long period. If the experts can't agree, how is everyone else supposed to figure it out?

Calloway said he opposes very low-fat diets because of the problems he sees in his practice as an endocrinologist. While he approves of the move away from the very low-calorie liquid diets, he is leery of advice to reduce fat intake to 10 percent or less. "Ten percent fat as public health policy would be disastrous," he said. He said the argument that fat was the basis of all ills was an idea that "has not been tested on humans."

Calloway also said that books that tell you that you can eat all you want are guilty of false advertising. If caloric intake is not reduced, he says, the weight won't come off.

Calloway has additional concerns. "Very low-fat diets can result in growth retardation," he said.

Among certain adults, the very low-fat diet, which by its nature means a diet very high in carbohydrates, produces adverse reactions, he said.

About 10 percent of the population is carbohydrate-sensitive, he said, and eating a diet with 75 percent of its calories from carbohydrates can push up triglyceride levels. This may increase the risk of heart attacks, and in people who have a family history of diabetes in adulthood, high triglyceride levels may induce an onset.

In addition, chronic dieters often gain weight on high-carbohydrate diets because they have lost the ability to get rid of fluids.

Aside from the difficulty of adhering to a very low-fat diet, other health professionals agree with Calloway on the hazards of such a diet. But others believe it would benefit everyone, not only for losing weight but also for preventing heart disease and some forms of cancer.

Some of the experts also contend that if the diet is low enough in fat, the calories consumed will almost certainly be reduced. They are assuming that the dieter will follow the advice to eat mostly fruits, vegetables and whole grains. These foods tend to fill up the stomach long before the calorie count gets too high. Fat has more than twice the calories of carbohydrates: a one-and-a-half-ounce bag of potato chips has as many calories as a 12-ounce baked potato.

But these experts have not taken into account the people who practice low-fat eating by consuming what one health professional has called the Entenmann's diet: nonfat cakes and nonfat cookies, along with nonfat yogurt. These foods, though almost fat-free, are still extremely high in calories and because they contain little or no fiber, are easy to overeat.

Dr. Ron Goor, who with his wife, Nancy, has written books advocating high-carbohydrate diets with 20 percent of calories from fat, said some people understand this means eating complex carbohydrates: fruits, vegetables and grains. But he added: "The immediate response of others is, 'Oh, great,' and they head immediately for the inner aisles of the supermarket where Entenmann's, etc., is."

Dr. Jeanne Goldberg, an associate professor of nutrition at Tufts University, reports undereating, not overeating. More of the women in her classes than ever before are living on diets made up of less than 10 percent fat, and they are doing it, she said, by eating every fat-free product on the market. This is not surprising since 29 percent of the 1,000 adult respondents in a national telephone survey for the American Dietetic Association "believe it's important to totally eliminate fat from their diets."

And Vegetarian Times magazine, citing the survey, commented, "Many people have misconstrued experts' caveats against overdoing fat as a blanket condemnation of any and all fat."

Such diets can be hazardous, Dr. Goldberg said. "You worry about iron, about the loss of the menstrual period, and it's bad for the bones," she said. "Women are surfacing who are getting too little protein. The ideal diet is 10 percent fat, but someone has to be extraordinarily knowledgeable about nutrition to follow it. Most people don't approach it like that. They use man-made foods, and we are not sure what kinds of trace nutrients are in the food."

"A competent nutritionist can provide an individual with tools to select the proper diet at 10 percent," she continued, "but that is very different from setting the public loose with a book and having them attempt to select a diet with 10 percent fat. That is asking for trouble.

"The best part of most of these books is that people won't stick with them for long. They probably are not horribly dangerous for most people except young women and also young families who get so caught up in this their little kids fail to thrive."

Ornish replied: "You can eat an unhealthy diet at any level of fat. How complicated is it to eat fruits, vegetables and whole grains?"

Marion Nestle, the chairwoman of the nutrition department at New York University, said the new regimen is "a Third World diet, associated with all kinds of undernutrition."

"You need a diet that is comfortable, convenient, pleasant, easy to maintain," she said. "Ten percent is fine for therapeutic purposes; otherwise, it's just impossible."

Dr. William Connor, a professor of medicine at Oregon Health Sciences University in Portland and the author, with his wife, Sonya, of several nutrition books, doesn't agree that a 10 percent diet is a starvation diet: "I don't think it's necessarily harmful because that is what most of the world is eating now, 10 to 15 percent."

But he said calories do count, adding: "There's no proof that any diet can produce permanent weight change. If you feed a pig corn, which is low in fat, it still gets fat."

DEAR ABBY

Boy spying over fence in hot water with neighbors

By Abigail Van Buren

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: We are having a dispute with our neighbors. Since we can't seem to come to an agreement, we agreed to abide by your advice.

Our home has a swimming pool and a hot tub that are totally secluded. We can swim in the pool and relax in our hot tub in the nude without offending anyone. The problem is our neighbor's 9-year-old son, who occasionally climbs the fence to watch us.

Our neighbors feel that we should wear bathing suits because they can't watch their son 24 hours a day, and in their minds, what we do is immoral. Trust me, Abby, all we do is swim and/or sit around and talk — nothing sexual or kinky.

We are churchgoing Christians, but are not ashamed of our bodies. We are more comfortable in the nude; however, in this instance, I feel that our rights are being violated, and we should neither be forced to wear bathing suits nor made to feel guilty for what we do.

What do you think, Abby? — VICTIMS OF PEEPING TOM, VALENCIA, CALIF.

DEAR VICTIMS: You have a right to swim and use your hot tub in the nude on your property without being spied upon. Your neighbor's son has no business watching you. His parents are responsible for seeing to it that their son does not climb the fence and violate your privacy. Tell the boy — and his parents — you will not tolerate anyone violating your privacy.

DEAR ABBY: I found all those letters from people who had problems with their names very amusing. I think I qualify for that list. My name is Austin Six, and I have had letters addressed to "Austin Sex," "Austin Sicks," "Austin Sticks" and other varieties.

My wife and I often dine out with three other couples, and can you imagine what happens when I make reservations for a party of eight at 7 o'clock in the name of Six?

I once telephoned a man on a business matter. He was not in, so I left my name for him to return my call.

After three days, I had not heard from him, so I called again, and he told me that he had been trying to reach me. He said he had been told to call Operator Six in Austin, Texas.

It goes on and on, but I think I'll keep the name since I am now 76 years old and have learned to grin and bear it. — AUSTIN SIX IN IRVING, TEXAS

DEAR AUSTIN: Cheer up, it would have been more confusing had your first name been Irving and you lived in Austin, Texas — then you'd have been Irving Six in Austin, Texas. This way, you are Austin Six in Irving, Texas ... aw, to heck with it!

DEAR READERS: Your chuckle for today:

Said a calendar model named Gloria,
"So the men can enjoy real euphoria,
"You pose as you are
"In January, Febr. and Mar.
"Then in April they wanna see moria!"
— Bennett Cerf

DEAR ABBY: "Faithful Reader in L.A." was upset about the actors in the movie "100 Rifles" referring to their Army unit as "calvary" instead of "cavalry."

I was a recruit at Fort Riley, Kan., in late 1941. All the echelons indicated that we were in the "horse calvary." (Apparently, "calvary" was easier to pronounce than "cavalry.")

As for knowing the difference between the two terms, my regular Army training sergeant did not appear to understand when I quipped that "while the training was no bed of roses, neither was it a crown of thorns." — DAVID T. BUSCH, SCOTTSDALE, ARIZ.

'Light' ice cream pleases crowd

By Linda Anderson

I recently had the privilege of presenting a program to one of the women's groups in town, and they told me they wanted to participate in a taste-test. Naturally, when that happens, I try to select something to test that is quality and reputable — and one of my favorite things.

Anderson

For this event, I chose ice cream.

But not just any ice cream — we sampled Blue Bell Light Ice Cream. You can't get any better than that.

One thing I've learned over the 10 years or so that I've been doing this sampling of products, is that when you are trying a brand of ice cream, vanilla is the flavor to choose. You get the truest taste and texture with a vanilla of some kind.

Blue Bell Light Ice Cream in a half-gallon size cost $2.99, but Blue Bell isn't known as one of the cheaper brands.

The vanilla ice cream had this information on its label: "Contains 45 percent fewer calories than the average of the top three national brands of ice cream, and 80 percent less fat. Fat reduced from 11 g to 2 g per serving. See side panel for nutrition information." OK, we did. On the side panel, the nutrition information listed for half-cup serving (like most people are going to stick with just a half of a cup) is 100 calories with 20 of those calories from fat (much lower than the 30 percent of calories recommended by the American Heart Association), as well as 10 mg cholesterol and 70 mg sodium.

However, a look at the ingredients label showed the product is just loaded with interesting stuff (keep in mind that ingredients are listed from greatest to least): milk, skim milk, sugar, corn syrup (another kind of sugar), high fructose corn syrup (another sugar), cream, natural and artificial vanilla flavor, cellulose gum, vegetable gums (guar, carrageenan, carob bean), annatto color, vitamin A palmitate. I have no idea what those last few ingredients are, but I suspect they are some kinds of preservatives and maybe smoothing agents.

Notice how many different kinds of sugar are in the product? I know that now fats have replaced sugars as the biggest dietary no-no, but that does seem like a lot of sugars to me.

The taste-test itself was a rousing success. All the ladies agreed that it tasted wonderful — for a "light" ice cream. They thought it was better than the no-fat kind of frozen dairy product, but not as good as the real high-fat kind.

Try it for yourself, if you love ice cream like I do but are at least half-way watching how much fat you consume. It's worth the price. But go slow — you can get carried away...

Price listed is from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.

difference between those on lowest fat diets and those on the highest fat diets. Adenocarcinoma is a form of lung cancer that is less often associated with smoking than other forms of lung cancer.

"The leading contributors of dietary saturated fat were hamburgers, cheeseburgers, and meat loaf ... followed by weekly consumption of cheeses and cheese spreads, hot dogs, ice cream and sausages," the study said.

Alavanja said that these foods, by themselves, cannot be consider good or bad but that they appear to create a lung cancer risk when they represent 15 percent or more of the calories in the diet.

"The point of the study is that if you have a diet that is excessive in these kinds of foods, that is where the problem seems to lie," the researcher said. "The truism we learned as children about eating a balanced diet seems to be well documented here."

fits, said Barbara L. Drinkwater, a researcher on osteoporosis.

Some women think that exercise, combined with adequate calcium, the raw material of bone, will protect them — but there's no evidence to support this, Drinkwater said.

Exercise can, however, prevent a bad thing from getting unnecessarily worse, said Drinkwater, a research physiologist at Pacific Medical Center in Seattle.

"It would prevent the bone loss that would occur from being inactive," Drinkwater said. But the value of exercise alone "is not really very impressive," she said.

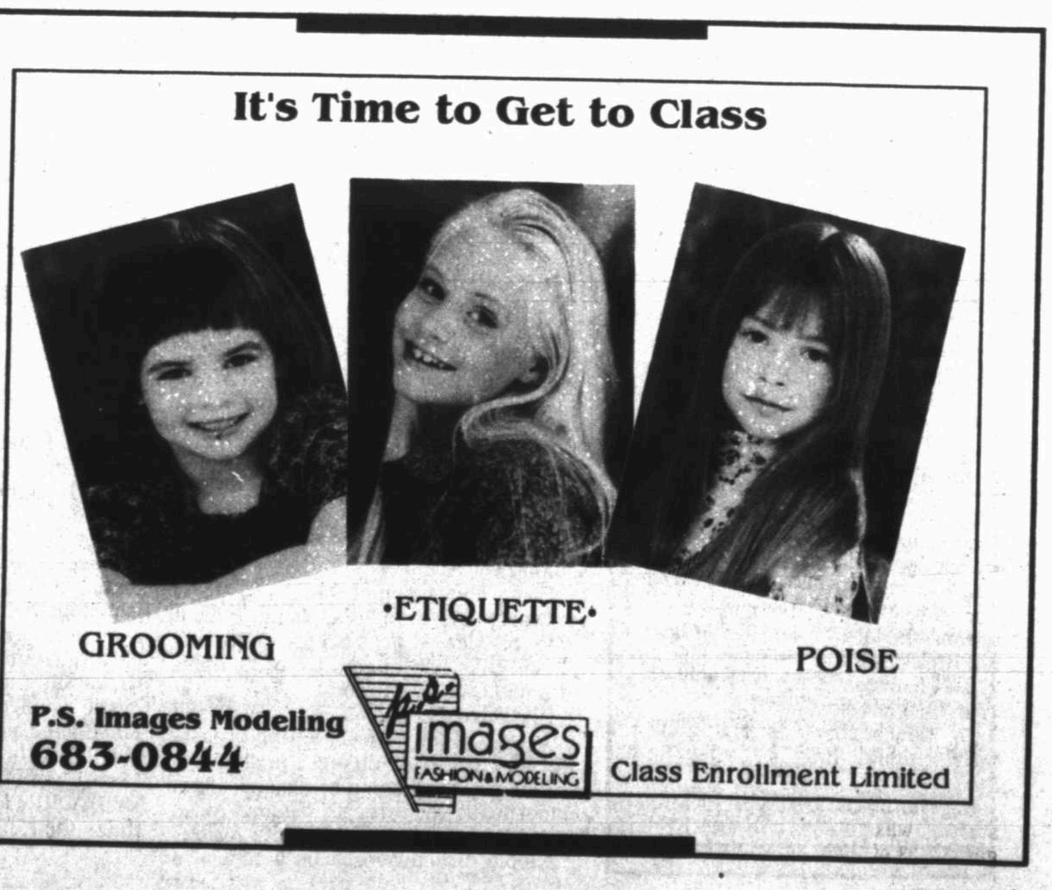

There's no evidence that exercise can help a woman control hot flashes, the article said. However, exercise can fight atrophy of the muscles and ligaments of the pelvis — an important point, because atrophy can increase the risk of prolapse, Hargarten said.

Hargarten praises Kegel exercises — tightening of the pelvic diaphragm muscles — to fight these problems. Women should first learn how the muscles function by stopping urine midstream, she said. She recommends 25 Kegels twice a day, for eight-10 seconds per contraction.

Some studies have found that middle-aged women who exercise regularly showed less anxiety and depression than did women who didn't exercise, the article said. Exercise can give a person a feeling of accomplishment, it said.

"Individuals who are capable of exercise can maintain their independence and sense of well-being, so the basic issue is quality of life," commented Dr. Raul Ortal of the SUNY Upstate Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology in Syracuse, N.Y.

To gain psychological be... women should decide what they want from exercise, what they enjoy, and how exercise would best fit their schedule, Hargarten wrote.

Jazz breaks 6-game loss streak to Rockets

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — Karl Malone scored 29 points and the Utah Jazz held Houston scoreless for nearly the final five minutes and beat the Rockets 104-88 Tuesday night.

■ NBA Roundup

Mario Elie's basket brought the Rockets within 92-88 with 4:56 left, but they did not score again. Utah beat Houston for the first time in three tries this season and broke a six-game losing streak to the Rockets.

John Stockton added 26 points and 13 assists and Jeff Malone chipped in 13 points for Utah. Karl Malone scored 15 points in the fourth quarter.

After Elie's shot, Jeff Malone made a 16-foot jumper and Karl Malone made two free throws. Following a timeout, Stockton hit two consecutive 15-footers and Karl Malone had the last two field goals.

Houston, which has lost four straight road games, shot 8-of-21 in the fourth quarter. Hakeem Olajuwon, who finished with 23 points, did not score in the final eight minutes.

The Jazz trailed 51-50 at halftime, but used a 20-4 burst in the first 8:37 of the third quarter to lead 70-65.

Spurs 112, Lakers 97

SAN ANTONIO — Dale Ellis scored a season-high 32 points and David Robinson had 30 as San Antonio beat Los Angeles.

The Spurs have won four in a row and 15 of their last 18. They have won nine straight at home.

Ellis, the NBA's career 3-point shooting leader, made 4-of-6 3-point tries. He shot 13-for-23 overall, and his 15 points in the third quarter put San Antonio ahead 78-67.

The Spurs, who also got 11 rebounds and five assists from Robinson, led by as many as 25 in the fourth.

Los Angeles, playing without injured starters Anthony Peeler and Doug Christie, was led by Nick Van Exel's 24 points and Vlade Divac's 18.

The Spurs, who have limited 36 of 44 opponents to fewer than 100 points, fashioned a 17-6 run in the final 5:17 of the second period to lead 53-43 at halftime.

Bulls 118, Nuggets 98

DENVER — Scottie Pippen scored 28 points and Horace Grant and B.J. Armstrong had 19 apiece, leading hot-shooting Chicago past Denver and ending the Nuggets' four-game winning streak.

The Bulls, winning for the ninth time in their last 10 games and for the 26th time in the last 31, shot 59 percent to Denver's 49 percent. Chicago had just six turnovers compared to Denver's 18.

Suns 108, Clippers 106

PHOENIX — Cedric Ceballos scored 37 points and Oliver Miller had a career-high 18 rebounds — including a crucial one late in the game Tuesday — as the Phoenix Suns pulled out a 108-106 victory over the Los Angeles Clippers.

The Clippers had a chance to win, but Greg Grant missed a 25-foot shot as time expired. Los Angeles made up a 13-point deficit in the final 2:50 of the third quarter to tie it 87-87, then battled Phoenix evenly throughout the fourth.

Heat 88, Bucks 82

MILWAUKEE — Steve Smith sparked Miami to its franchise-record 11th road victory of the season by scoring 19 points as the Heat defeated Milwaukee.

Glen Rice led Miami with 23 points and the Heat won for the third straight time on the road. Miami is 11-10 on the road and 10-11 at home.

Nets 104, SuperSonics 103

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — New Jersey rookie P.J. Brown hit two free throws with 19.2 seconds left and Seattle botched a final shot in a loss to the Nets.

The suddenly stumbling Sonics, who began the day with an NBA-best 31-9 record, lost for the fifth time in six games.

Pacers 116, Bullets 96

INDIANAPOLIS — Reggie Miller and Rik Smits each scored 25 points, leading Indiana to a victory over Washington.

It was the Pacers' second straight win and second in three meetings this year with the Bullets.

Smits scored 12 of his 15 first-half points in the opening 8:06 and sent the Bullets' Kevin Duckworth to the bench with two quick fouls.

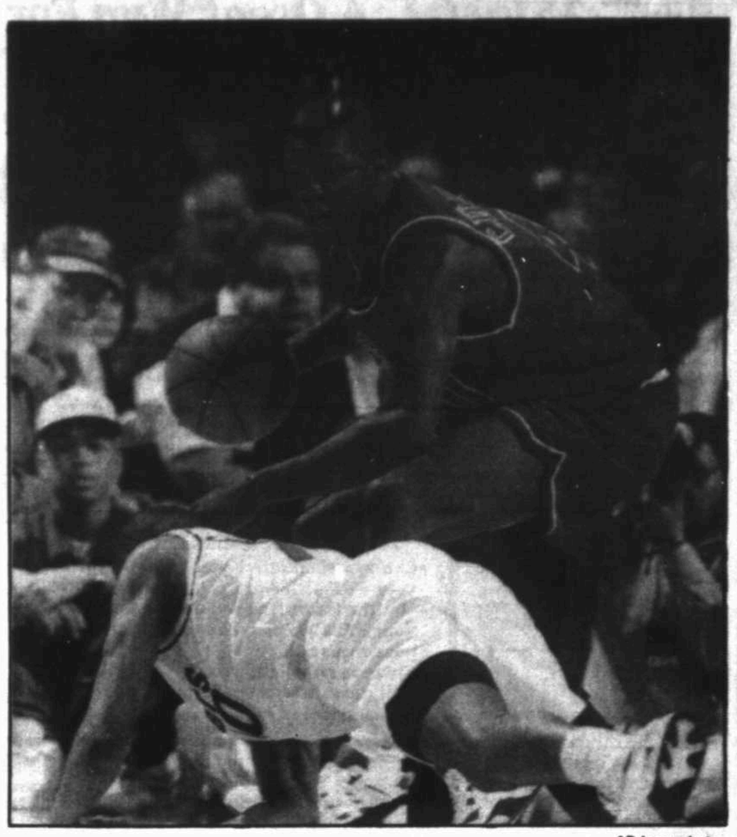

Smits had six points in a 13-4 run that put the Pacers in front to stay 24-15 with 2:58 left in the quarter. Smits also grabbed nine rebounds.

Knicks 114, Celtics 79

NEW YORK — Patrick Ewing had 23 points and six other Knicks scored in double figures as New York beat Boston, ending the Celtics' season-high seven-game winning streak.

New York, which won its fifth straight, held Boston to 20 points in the first quarter, 22 in the second and 14 in the third. The Knicks were ahead 89-56 by the time the fourth quarter began.

Charles Smith scored 14 points, Greg Anthony and Rolando Blackman had 13.

Olajuwon earns No. 1 status

By Michael Lutz
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON — Michael Jordan is gone and Charles Barkley says he's going but Hakeem "The Dream" Olajuwon is soaring.

If Olajuwon hasn't replaced Jordan as the NBA's No. 1 marquee player, he's at least holding up his own star and taking his Houston Rockets along with him on one of the best starts in league history.

"I think it's time he got all the attention he deserves," teammate Kenny Smith said. "I think he's the best in the business. There are a lot of other players that are good at a lot of things, but he's great in a lot of areas."

Olajuwon won't join any comparison of the top players.

"It depends on where you are, who is considered the best," he said. "If you're in San Antonio they think it's David Robinson. If you're in Orlando they think it's Shaq (O'Neal)."

Olajuwon's agent, Leonard Armato, thinks this could be the year Olajuwon bursts forth as a national superstar.

"This will be his year from a marketing standpoint," Armato said. "All the negatives have been eliminated as of two seasons ago and he's finally getting the national recognition that a player needs to become a marketing vehicle."

Olajuwon long has been No. 1 in Houston, where he's played his entire basketball career that started as a gangly teen-ager at the University of Houston.

A native of Lagos, Nigeria, where his family operated a cement business, Olajuwon was known more in his country as a soccer and handball player than for playing the American game of basketball.

His talents were discovered while playing for a Nigerian national team at a tournament, which led to a scholarship at the University of Houston.

He quickly adapted to life in the United States. His college coach, Guy Lewis, recalls Olajuwon as an extremely polite player who bowed when spoken to.

"He got over that bowing real quick because they teased him about it," Lewis said. "He got here and started eating steaks and drinking milk. And he really liked ice cream. He devoured all he could get."

While enjoying American cuisine, Olajuwon led the Cougars to the NCAA Final Four three straight years, although they never won the national title.

He was the Rockets' No. 1 draft pick in 1984 and teamed with Virginia All-American Ralph Sampson to create the Twin Towers. The Rockets reached the NBA championship finals in 1986, losing to Boston in six games.

Olajuwon completed his Americanization last April when he became a U.S. citizen.

He's overcome injury and controversy in his 10 seasons in the NBA. He's been named to the All-NBA first team four times and to the All-NBA Defensive first team four times.

Despite a glittering history, Olajuwon's career with the Rockets was going sour prior to the start of last season as he feuded with former owner Charlie Thomas over his contract.

Olajuwon called Thomas a coward and a fool at an explosive news conference, although he put the squabble behind him and had one of his best pro seasons.

DISTRICTS: Area teams move

From 1C

national-record 80-game losing streak in its season finale. They're both joining Class 5A.

In all, Class 4A grew by 15 schools to 188 and added two districts, leaving it only two short of the UIL's goal of 32 districts.

The growth was achieved by adding two new schools to 4A, getting 14 schools from 5A and taking 11 from 3A. Also, 11 schools from 4A went to 5A and two more went to 3A.

"We just wanted to eliminate some of those byes and I think we've done that," said Peter Contreras, assistant athletic director of the UIL, the state's governing body for high school athletics.

Also being overhauled is six-man football, the forgotten game played in rural towns by schools with fewer students than some 5A teams.

Fearing that some schools were too big at 90-plus students, the attendance cutoff was whacked to 79. Among the schools forced into Class A 11-man football is Fort Hancock, winner of five of the last eight six-man titles.

"That's probably going to be the most traumatic change, but I think those guys have had anywhere from two to three years to prepare for this move," Contreras said. "That doesn't mean they like it any more today than when it was first discussed."

All changes are tentative because schools have until Feb. 14 to submit a written appeal that the State Conference and District Assignment Review Board will hear Feb. 18. Successful appeals also can by challenged by other schools.

Realignment, and the subsequent reshuffling of districts, is an adjustment of the classes based on a range of Average Daily Membership, a number derived by a formula that basically means a school's total attendance.

For example, Class 4A includes all schools with ADMs between 715 and 1,509. In the 1992 realignment, the Class 4A cutoff was 1,599.

Using the new figures, the UIL kept Class 5A at 240 schools and increased Class 3A by four schools to 220. Class 2A decreased by five to 210 and Class A breaks down into 124 11-man schools and 84 playing six-man.

"The thing people have to understand is that we do this every two years to address the issue of equity," Contreras said.

One school likely feeling they got the short end of the equity stick is Houston Davis. The Panthers began their dubious streak in 1985 as a 5A school and continued losing when they went into 4A in 1992.

But the 1993 season ended with a victory and hope the program was on its way up. Coach Chuck Arnold probably didn't think that boost mean joining the more competitive 5A level.

SOCCER: MHS remains unbeaten said Bulldog senior forward Ross Hunter, who spear-headed Midland's offense with two goals and two assists. "This game we played a lot better. We played as a team."

Three Bulldogs scored goals, giving Midland a balanced attack. It was Midland's second league shutout in as many games. The team has now had only three goals scored on it in seven games.

"I talked to the team and told them to get back to their style — start building up the offense from midfield," Midland coach Tom Esikhati said, referring to his squad's improving from no goals in the 1-0 shootout win over Lee to six Tuesday. "The most important thing is to penetrate using our wings."

Hunter agreed.

"We're using the outside much better," he said. "As long as we keep it outside our outside wing midfielders can dominate."

Midland dominated Permian (1-2 in district) from the start. The Bulldogs outshot Mojo 24-4 on goal, taking a 3-0 halftime lead. Midland also had six corner kicks to none for Permian. Tyler Krueger had two goals and Tyler Berry and David Farias each had scores.

Permian coach Greg Reece changed goal keepers at the half, but his team had no more success stopping the Bulldog offense.

"Midland High is the best I've seen," Reece said. "I haven't seen San Angelo but from what I've seen in the district they ought to win."

Krueger started the scoring when he took a perfect center from Hunter and poked it in from the right side of goal against Permian keeper Michael Weddel at the 21 minute mark. Hunter followed four minutes later with a penalty kick after the Panthers' Daniel Valles was called for a handball inside the penalty box.

Berry made it 3-0 just before half on an assist from Hunter. Hunter got his second goal unassisted five minutes into the second half.

"We have a very even offense," Esikhati said. "Anybody, anytime can score, so I'm not surprised we distributed goals like we did today."

Midland's last two goals were by Krueger and Farias with assists from Emmanuel Sannon and Sean Parnell.

In goal for Midland was Brandon Lang. Jared Richardson replaced Lang in the 29th minute of the second half because Lang suffered from cramps. Permian had only one shot on goal in the second half.

"It makes you feel good going in when you know the other team will have a hard time scoring," Hunter said.

The Bulldogs will get a test Saturday when they face Abilene Cooper in Abilene.

Rangers sign starting pitcher to avoid salary arbitration

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Pitcher Kenny Rogers agreed to terms on a one-year contract with the Texas Rangers just before the start of his scheduled salary arbitration Tuesday.

■ Baseball Roundup

The lefthander's agreement leaves Juan Gonzalez and Kevin Brown eligible for arbitration.

It was the third consecutive year that Rogers had moved the club toward arbitration, the latest scheduled in Los Angeles. He lost the last two years but his salary still increased from $287,500 in 1991 to $1 million last season.

The Rangers had offered $2 million this season while Rogers asked for $2.5 million.

Rogers, in his first year as a full-time starter, was 16-10 with a 4.10 ERA in 35 games, 33 of them starts.

Also, pitcher Dan Smith and outfielder Terrell Lowery came to terms on one-year contracts.

Smith, also a left-hander, missed most of 1993 with arm problems, pitching briefly at Charlotte and Oklahoma City, while Lowery split the season between Charlotte and Tulsa.

Relief pitcher Stan Belinda and backup catcher Brent Mayne have agreed to contracts with Kansas City.

Mayne began last year as the starter but became a reserve to Mike Macfarlane when he could not produce enough offense. Macfarlane was expected to hold his job this year and bat cleanup.

Mayne, eligible for arbitration, signed Tuesday for $500,000 after making $225,000 last year. He had asked for $595,000 and the Royals had offered $400,000.

Mayne hit .254 with two home runs and 22 RBIs last year in 71 games.

Belinda was acquired from Pittsburgh last July. He was 1-1 with a 4.28 earned run average in 27 1-3 innings.

Shortstop Mike Bordick agreed to a $1.05 million, one-year contract with Oakland, more than double the $400,000 he earned last year.

Bordick hit .249 in 1993 during his first season as the A's full-time shortstop. His .982 fielding percentage — he made 13 errors — was third in the majors.

Bordick was the only A's player who filed for arbitration. He asked for $1.5 million and the team offered $825,000.

Bordick joined the A's organization as a free agent in 1985 and saw some major league action in 1990 and 1991. He hit .300 in 154 at-bats during his first full season with the A's in 1992.

Outfielder Dave Henderson passed his physical and formally signed a $750,000, one-year contract with Kansas City.

With Oakland last season, Henderson was troubled by hamstring injuries and appeared in only 107 games, hitting .220 with 20 homers and 53 RBIs.

Henderson, 35, can earn earning $200,000 more in performance bonuses, He made $2.2 million in 1993, the final season of a $7.8 million contract, three-year contract.

At Kansas City, he's viewed as the heir apparent to the George Brett as the designated hitter.

In 13 major league seasons, with Seattle, Boston and San Francisco as well as Oakland, Henderson has a .259 average with 192 homers and 677 RBI.

He has had at least 20 homers in four of the last six season.

"Dave Henderson will have a tremendous, winning impact on the ballclub," Royals general manager Herk Robinson said. "He is a veteran, winning ballplayer who will be a valuable addition and the outfield and brings offensive production."

Eric Anthony, scheduled to be Seattle's starting left fielder this season, and the Mariners reached agreement on a one-year, $1.1 million contract.

Anthony, who earned $350,000 last season, had been scheduled for an arbitration hearing next week. He sought $1.35 million and the club offered $850,000.

Anthony, 26, was acquired by the Mariners in a trade with Houston Dec. 10 for pitcher Mike Hampton and outfielder Mike Felder.

Anthony, who hits left-handed, batted .249 with 15 home runs and 66 RBIs in 145 games with the Astros last season.

In his four-year major league career, Anthony has a .224 batting average with 49 home runs and 189 RBIs in 430 games.

The Mariners also announced they have signed right-hander Todd Burns to a Triple-A contract for the 1994 season. Burns, 30, pitched for Texas and St. Louis last season, going 0-4 with a 4.57 earned run average with the Rangers and 0-4 with a 6.16 ERA with the Cardinals.

In 203 major league games, Burns has a 21-23 record, a 3.47 ERA and 13 saves. He was with Oakland from 1988 through 1991 before joining Texas in 1992.
