Three fired for negligence at Chernobyl

By ANDREW ROSENTHAL

MOSCOW (AP) — The Politburo on Saturday blamed the Chernobyl disaster on gross negligence, said three government officials were fired, and increased the official death toll from history's worst civilian nuclear accident to 28.

In a statement distributed by the official Soviet news agency Tass, the Politburo said those who caused the accident would be put on trial.

The Communist Party's ruling body said the Chernobyl reactor exploded on April 26 as workers conducted improperly supervised and badly prepared experiments on a turbine generator without proper safety precautions.

It indicated that safety procedures and technical training also were inadequate at the nation's other nuclear plants, which include 13 graphite-moderated reactors like the one at Chernobyl.

Painting the most graphic picture yet of the scope of the disaster, the Politburo said 28 people were dead, 30 still hospitalized and 173 others stricken by radiation sickness.

The accident caused the equivalent of $2.8 billion in damage, disrupted the nation's power supply, forced closing of local factories, and contaminated 400 square miles of land in the northern Ukraine and southern Byelorussia, the Politburo said.

The area reported contaminated appears to be much smaller than the zone from which residents were evacuated following the accident, which measures at least 1,000 square miles.

The Politburo concluded with a political statement calling for arms control and adding: "The world community is awaiting a positive answer from the American side to the unilateral Soviet moratorium on nuclear testing."

Tass said the Politburo, headed by Mikhail S. Gorbachev, met in special session Saturday to study the results of a government inquiry into the Chernobyl disaster.

The Politburo made a sweeping condemnation of the local, Ukrainian and national officials responsible for operating the Chernobyl reactor.

"It was established that the accident had been caused by a series of gross breaches of the reactor operational regulations by workers of the atomic power station," it said, repeating earlier reports that the disaster occured while the number 4 reactor at the four-reactor complex was nearly shut down.

"Irresponsibility, negligence and indiscipline led to grave consequences," the Politburo said. It singled out the Ministry of Power and Electrification and the State Atomic Power Safety Committee for special blame.

Press reports and government statements have said the reactor surged out of control. The cooling system failed, radioactive steam was vented and combined with the reactor's graphite core to produce hydrogen that exploded in a giant fireball.

SWEETWATER — Bettie Lanning says she still has nightmares about the tornado.

Cleo Hilley says he is just now getting to where he can sleep at night, as his memory of being buried by flying debris fades.

Three months ago the tornado struck the city of about 12,000 residents leaving one dead and 92 injured.

Today construction is still going on with homes being repaired and rebuilt. It may take up to a year before the city is completely rebuilt and cleaned up, says city manager David Maddox.

Hilley, 77, was hospitalized for nine days after being knocked out and trapped for two hours underneath timber and bricks.

It was "fortunate" that Hilley survived due to his weak heart and past open-heart surgery, says his physician, Dr. Jerry Smola.

"It was fortunate in view of the heart problems he has had recently," Smola said.

"People say, 'You sure were lucky.' I say, 'No, I wasn't lucky, the good Lord was just watching over me,'" says Hilley, a former truck driver who has lived off and on in Sweetwater since 1921.

Haunted by memories of being buried alive, Hilley says, "I didn't think I was going to make it for a while. It seemed like I was buried six hours, not two.

"Now I'm getting my strength back.

"I'm just now getting to where I can sleep at night."

Hilley's one-bedroom apartment was among 52 destroyed at Sun Village, a low-income complex for the elderly and handicapped.

Sweetwater awaits word on aid for victims

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Gov. Mark White will travel to Sweetwater Tuesday to announce state aid for tornado victims, said city manager David Maddox.

But the city is pessimistic about getting a $1.2 million request that is needed to help about 65 families with housing, he said.

"We feel fairly certain that the state is not going to fund what we asked for.

"At this point we could have 20 to 25 families that may not have their needs met.

"Out of the 510 that were affected that's a fairly small percentage, but it's still very serious to those families."

The city has requested $1.2 million from a $3 million emergency fund under the Texas Department of Community Affairs, he said.

About 65 families have not met eligibility requirements for other disaster funds, he said.

"One of the weaknesses that we see within all these programs is that there are people that just don't fit into any of them.

"People are going without having their needs met, even though these programs are available," Maddox said.

About $520,000 in aid has been granted to 286 families from the Federal Emergency Management Agency, Maddox said.

Families could only receive a maximum of $5,000 from the federal disaster grant, he said.

However, the average cost of rehabilitating a home is $10,000 and those families relocating and buying new homes are facing average expenses of $27,000, Maddox said.

The Small Business Administration granted about $537,000 to 43 businessmen, he said.

The Sweetwater Emergency Relief Fund, made up of private donations, has distributed $38,000 of its $169,000 so far, said Shelli Carlson, secretary for the fund.

Maddox said, "We recognized that the other programs were not going to meet the housing needs and began to explore funds available for housing assistance."

Budget 'surgeons' unsure of prognosis

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Formal treatment won't begin until Aug. 6, but the patient enters the budgetary hospital today for an extensive diagnostic workup.

The full medical team agrees that the patient could die by December if her severe case of red-ink virus goes untreated. They have reached no consensus, however, on just what prescription to order.

Some, however, maintain that the patient needs major surgery, and still others say only a large-scale transfusion can save her.

The medical team, in this case the House Appropriations Committee, gets first crack at the patient. Right now they know for sure she has $2.3 billion worth of deficit problems. They also know Comptroller Bob Bullock will increase her debt to $3 billion or more later in the week.

Interviews with 10 of the 29 committee members this week indicate they are far from a consensus.

A few outlined specific state programs for cutting but several say they have some ideas in mind but won't make them public until they have a better idea of their consequences.

Most of the rest say only tedious study of the $18.5 billion 1987 state budget will allow them to identify possible areas for savings.

All say they will start with the $650 million state agencies and universities have offered up so far.

When Gov. Mark White called the Aug. 6 special legislative session Thursday night, he said he wants lawmakers to look long and hard at any and all possible cuts.

Only then, White said, will he consider possible tax increases.

Gov. White's economic forum to present program in Odessa

By JANE DEES
Staff Writer

Gov. Mark White's eight-city Economic Development Forum tour arrives in Odessa Monday afternoon bearing state-sponsored strategies to aid economic rejuvenation of the Permian Basin.

Mimi Pernell, director of the State Economic Development Council, said White and several state agency representatives will introduce available, but possibly unknown, resources to attract new business and industry.

"Additional funds are not available. All that we have are funds still in existence after the executive-ordered 13 percent budget cuts made earlier this year.

"In fact, Gov. White told agencies to look into the feasibility of an additional 17 percent reduction to help offset the projected $2.3 billion shortfall," Ms. Pernell said.

Mark Schneider, assistant press secretary to the Governor, said White has not set the agenda for the special legislative session, scheduled to begin Aug. 6.

"But he definitely wants to veer from any drastic budget reductions for agencies helping his economic development crusade," he said.

Ms. Pernell said an example of White's diversification goals is the development of the Sea World Recreation complex in San Antonio.

"Sea World developers were initially attracted because the geophysical qualities of the area suited their building specifications.

"But a highway overpass needed to be built in the vicinity to facilitate travel into the complex for construction equipment and tourists later on.

"We worked with the highway department and got the starting construction date for the overpass moved up so the building could begin," Ms. Pernell said.

She said the complex will create 1,500 new jobs for the area.

Paramount on the minds of smaller town residents Monday will be the hope for state-funded vocational training.

Earthquakes jolt Aleutian Islands

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — A swarm of earthquakes shook the Aleutian Islands, punctuated by a stiff jolt Saturday that caused minor damage but no injuries on Unalaska Island at the tip of the chain, officials said.

The quake measuring 5.8 on the Richter scale struck at 2:33 p.m., knocking items off walls and shelves, shaking cars noticeably and knocking out the runway lights at the Dutch Harbor-Unalaska airport, said geophysicist George Carte.

The shock was centered in the Pacific Ocean about 40 miles southwest of Unalaska, a community of about 1,300 people nearly 800 miles southwest of Anchorage, said Carte, who is with the Alaska Tsunami Warning Center.

The temblor posed no significant danger of a tsunami, or tidal wave, he said.

"There's been pretty much continuous activity since Friday evening," Carte said. He said several of the quakes in the swarm have exceeded 5.0 on the Richter scale.

Carte said there is no accurate means of predicting how long the swarm might continue, but said generally when the quakes don't exceed a magnitude of 5.9, swarms only last a few days.

Swarms of quakes of magnitude 6.0 and stronger sometimes last for weeks, he said.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs. Every increase of one number means a tenfold increase in magnitude. Thus a reading of 7.5 reflects an earthquake 10 times stronger than one of 6.5.

An earthquake of 3.5 on the Richter scale can cause slight damage in the local area, 4 moderate damage, 5 considerable damage, 6 severe damage. A 7 reading is a "major" earthquake, capable of widespread heavy damage; 8 is a "great" quake, capable of tremendous damage.

Gunmen kill four on Beirut hospital bus

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Men with silencer-equipped submachine guns stopped an American University Hospital bus at Beirut's dividing Green Line Saturday, climbed aboard and raked the passengers with fire, killing three doctors and a hospital administrator, police said.

Police said three hospital personnel were wounded in the ambush at the midcity racetrack crossing between Moslem and Christian sectors of the capital. All the victims were Lebanese Christians, police said.

The attackers were presumed to be Moslems.

Police said four men intercepted the white-and-red hospital bus carrying 40 people shortly after noon, got inside, sprayed the interior with bullets, then escaped in a dark blue Peugeot.

A nearby Lebanese army checkpoint fired at the escape car, but missed, and the car raced into the shell-pocked Ras el-Nabaa Moslem residential district near the Green Line, officers reported.

The bus driver, unwounded, but his yellow T-shirt stained with the blood of others, said he did not see the gunmen get aboard.

"We just ran into a hail of gunfire," said the driver, who would not give his name for fear of reprisals.

He said, though, that the gunmen may have boarded through the rear door without his realizing it. "I can't tell," he said. "I held to my wheel and then sped off to Makassed hospital as the bullets whizzed all around us."

Three passengers were killed instantly. They were identified as Dr. George Fares, Dr. Lilian Saba and administrator Wadi Abu Khalil. Dr. Lilly Khairalla died later in the hospital, police said.

The victims' bodies were later taken from Makassed hospital near the ambush site to the American University Hospital

The Lebanese Red Cross and police arranged for the survivors to cross the Green Line into Christian east Beirut an hour after the attack.

They had been heading for that sector of the capital to spend the weekend with their families when the bus was attacked, according to American University Hospital chief of staff Dr. Farid Fleihan.

The American University of Beirut and the affiliated American University Hospital formerly received U.S. government financial aid. But Fleihan told The Associated Press earlier this year that funding was cut off in 1984.

Both institutions have long been plagued by assassinations and kidnappings blamed on Shiite Moslem extremists.

But this was the first terrorist attack on an AUB or American University Hospital target since a Syrian-sponsored security plan was introduced in west Beirut last month in an effort to end 27 months of chaotic reign by Moslem militias.

Slavery case sentences seem light

KERRVILLE (AP) — The full meaning of a jury's verdict in a sensational kidnapping-slavery trial remained shrouded in mystery here Saturday, hours after the panel meted out what prosecutors termed light sentences for three defendants.

The seven-woman, five-man jury deliberated a little more than six hours Friday before returning to the courtroom and assessing a 15-year prison term for Walter Wesley Ellebracht Jr., 33.

The jury ordered seven years probation for Ellebracht's father, Walter Wesley Ellebracht Sr., 54, and a 14-year term for Carlton Robert Caldwell, 21.

The three were convicted Wednesday under Texas' organized crime statute with conspiracy to commit aggravated kidnapping and murder.

They could have received life prison terms for a plot the state claimed led to the cattle prod torture death of Anthony Bates, 27.

Houston still in running for convention

WASHINGTON (AP) — Houston made the cut Saturday and will be one of six cities visited by a committee choosing the site of the 1988 Democratic National Convention.

After two days of hearing presentations from eight cities, the DNC Site Selection Committee decided to further examine Houston, Washington, D.C., Atlanta, New Orleans, Kansas City and New York.

Eliminated were Detroit, and Brook Park, Ohio, a Cleveland suburb. The convention city is to be chosen by the end of the year.

Houston officials told the selection committee Saturday that Houston built its first convention center for the 1928 Democratic Convention and is building its latest convention center with the 1988 party meeting in mind.

"Houston is the right place and the best place to hold a very successful 1988 convention," Mayor Kathy Whitmire told the 27-member panel as she issued an "official" invitation to the Democratic Party to nominate its next presidential candidate in her city.

One panelist asked what the temperature would be in Houston in July 1988.

"I guarantee it won't be any hotter than it is out here today," said Houston Host Committee chairman Joe Russo, referring to Washington's recent temperatures in the high 90s.

Alan Kieper of the Metropolitan Transit Authority said Houston buses, on which many delegates might ride, are tested to make sure they can cool down from 110 degrees to 70 degrees in 30 minutes and stay cool.

BUDGET

Because of the governor's position, and House Speaker Gib Lewis' adamant opposition to any new taxes, Appropriations Committee Chairman Jim Rudd has taken the Band Aid approach.

Without a tax bill, Rudd says, lawmakers would have to cut far too much to eliminate all the red ink.

He favors cutting about $1 billion, which would allow the state to pay its bills until the Legislature returns in regular session next January.

"I don't agree with that," says Rep. Bill Ceverha, an extremely conservative Republican from Richardson. "All we're doing is allowing us to write checks on money that doesn't exist by constantly keeping the deposits one step ahead of the checks.

"It's not curing the problem at all."

Another conservative Republican, Mason Rep. Gerald Geistweidt, says White — a Democrat who faces a tough race in November against former Gov. Bill Clements — can make political points by backing moderate cuts and avoiding taxes.

"If he can just put a Band Aid on things until after the election, he'll go into the election being the governor who's helped reduce spending and did it without a tax bill," Geistweidt says.

"People don't realize that in four more months or five more months we'll be at it again."

Both Ceverha and Geistweidt would like their fellow Appropriations Committee members to cut enough to eliminate the entire deficit.

"I understand their arguments," says Rudd, D-Brownfield. "They have to deal in a political arena."

Rep. Mike Toomey, R-Houston, says cutting $2 billion "is not that big of a deal" and that legislators can make those cuts without endangering key state services.

"Take a little from highways, a little from higher ed, a little from public ed and a little grant money and cut down travel and stuff and we're at $2 billion," Toomey says.

"We've done it and nobody's laid off."

But Rep. Juan Hinojosa, D-McAllen, fears those cuts will hurt those who can least afford it.

"I think they (the cuts) are ridiculous in that some legislators' minds are made up, and they don't want to be confused with the facts," he said.

"The facts are that if we follow through with the proposed cuts, we are going to increase unemployment in this state, we are going to cause to destabilize the state economy and we are going to balance the budget on the backs of the elderly and the poor and the school children."

It's because of concern like Hinojosa's that Rudd has asked the Legislative Budget Board to evaluate the impact of some of the cuts he has in mind.

"What does it do to taxes back home? What does it do to a program?"

In the meantime, Rudd will keep his own plans quiet.

"We don't want the people out there shaking in their boots saying, "Rudd's destroyed public ed by ...' "

Although Rudd uses education just as an example, most lawmakers know the $6.2 billion Foundation School Program accounts for the largest part of the state budget.

The House Public Education Budget Subcommittee last week unanimously asked the Appropriations Committee to keep their hands off of school funds and protect the 1984 education reforms.

Subcommittee Chairman Paul Colbert, D-Houston, knows that will be a difficult task.

The Texas Association of Taxpayers, a business lobby created years ago to fight a state income tax, has offered a laundry list of education cuts that could save more than $500 million in fiscal 1987.

Most of those reducations would come at the expense of urban and poor school districts.

Rep. Tom Uher, D-Bay City, says the state can save about $700 million by delaying the pre-kindergarten program for disadvantaged 4-year-olds, eliminating the career ladder bonus-pay plan for outstanding teachers and putting off smaller class sizes for third and fourth grade.

"Those may be simplistic approaches, but I think that's what you've got to look at," Uher says.

"It's where you find the money."

Some, like Rep. Mark Stiles, D-Beaumont, are concerned that reducing state education funds could force local school districts to raise property taxes.

Stiles says he will check all proposed cuts for their effect on local units of government.

"We can't continue to put things on the cities and counties like the federal government's done to us," Stiles said.

"It's got to stop somewhere."

Rep. Frank Madla, D-San Antonio, has asked the departments of health and mental health-mental retardation to prepare 20-percent cuts in their 1987 budgets, that would save about $180 million.

"There's money," Madla says, "it's a question of whether we want to cut services that much."

Madla says he has another plan in the works, but he won't discuss it publicly until he knows more exactly what effect it could have.

Hinojosa, the McAllen Democrat, believes all the cuts will have a far greater impact than many imagine.

"I think the Appropriations Comittee is closely split," he said when asked whether he could stop some of the cuts and force other lawmakers to consider increasing taxes.

"With maybe a vote or two of difference, it can go either way."

WHITE

In Andrews, unemployment statistics have more than doubled since 1985 and now represent 8.7 percent of the 13,000 residents.

"We are conducting our own economic forums here to address restructuring our debts and cash flow procedures," Norma Phillips, Andrews Chamber of Commerce spokesman said.

"We're afraid to make any long-term decisions because we don't know what the cloudy future holds.

"We would most hope for some sort of job retraining help to aid our displaced workers in finding new jobs," she said.

Former Pecos Mayor Frank Sanchez agrees that teaching workers new skills will be the key to making a dent in the 19.9 percent unemployment rate — a figure which gives the 13,400 residents of Pecos one of the highest rates in the state.

Ms. Pernell said these problems have been addressed by a $450,000 federal grant which provides farmers facing foreclosure and unemployed oil workers in the 17-county area with vocational retraining education.

Willie Taylor, Job Training Partnership Act administrator for the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission, says farmers and jobless oil workers should be able to apply for retraining by the end of July.

"We've got $200,000 available for oil and gas workers and $250,000 for farmers from the Department of Labor," Taylor said.

"A major operating component will be our on-the-job training program.

"We will reimburse businesses 50 percent of all training costs from anywhere from 90 days to six months.

"We're hoping this will entice some of those companies that might not think they have the money to hire trainees to participate," he said.

On a state level, an economic development office spokesman said that since 1983, the Texas Department of Community Affairs has granted $23 million to local governments to assist businesses in creating or retraining 9,200 jobs over the last three years.

White said, "It's lonely out there by yourself, but together we can make things happen. No community should have to rely only on itself to attract new business."

But many small Permian Basin towns might hold to Ms. Phillips' philosophy until the dollars trickle down — "Financially, we're not expecting any state help."

TORNADO

Fifty-two residents relocated from the 112-unit complex, but they may be able to move back by September 1, says housing manager Mildred Pietzsch.

"I'm hopeful I'll get to move back over there," says Hilley, who pays $125 rent now for a one-bedroom house out of his $440 monthly Social Security benefits.

At Sun Village he paid $40 a month, he said.

A $500 check from $520,000 granted to the city by the Federal Emergency Management Agency has helped pay the higher rents, Hilley said.

Richburg, who is living with relatives until he can move back to Sun Village, says he was sucked up by the tornado and deposited on the remains of his living room wall.

When the tornado struck, Richburg says he couldn't move and he thought he was falling.

"I guess I was picked up, but I thought I was falling down," says the 66-year-old former attorney.

Along with losing most of his possessions, Richburg lost two fillings and one tooth.

"I don't know what happened. I was beat up all over."

The tornado has changed Mrs. Lanning's life, she says.

Mrs. Lanning and her husband, Albert, were not injured, but she says she is "mentally shook up."

The Lannings, who both work as custodians at a local elementary school, lost about $75,000 in possessions, including their home and their car.

"We had one plate to eat off of that night," she says.

"They stole my kitchen sink. They took everything they could take.

"If I had to do everything all over again, I'd sit there with a sawed-off shotgun," said the 48-year-old Sweetwater native.

The couple, reimbursed for $71,000 through insurance, are in their 11th week of waiting for a loan approval to buy a new home.

Ms. Lanning says she will never forget the tornado.

"I still have terrible nightmares about it. It was a terrible experience."

Hilley says the tornado has also changed him.

Fountaining ends at Kilauea Volcano

VOLCANO, Hawaii (AP) — Kilauea Volcano's latest activity sputtered to an end Saturday, 22 hours after two kilometer-long fissures opened up with low-level fountaining that caused a brush fire ignited by flowing lava.

The 48th phase of activity since the eruption began Jan. 3, 1983, was different from most. Instead of the usual spectacular fountain reaching some 1,000 feet to the Pu'u O'o vent, the lava spilled from the large cracks to the west and northeast of the vent, fountaining to heights of only 10 to 15 feet.

Senators want budgetary ax out of Supreme Court's hands

By Peggy Roberson

WASHINGTON — Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, said Friday he and co-sponsors of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings budget-balancing law will attempt to cure the U.S. Supreme Court's objections by placing the chopping ax in the hands of the president's Office of Management and Budget.

The Supreme Court, July 7, ruled unconstitutional the automatic spending cut (sequestration) procedure in the law. The justices said the comptroller general could not transmit to the president the reports on reductions proposed by the Congressional Budget Office and OMB to meet the deficit-cutting target. They said he is an arm of Congress and as such may not exercise executive powers.

"Gramm-Rudman-Hollings II," described by Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., as "the stepchild of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings," still would allow Congress to maintain a "hands off" approach to politically painful spending cuts.

Under the new approach, the comptroller general's "sequestration" reports, compiled from economic forecasts, would go to the director of OMB, rather than to the president. OMB would issue binding sequestration reports five days later and the president would issue the sequestration order two days later based on the OMB director's report.

Gramm, joined at a press conference by Rudman and Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., said he is sure that the re-constructed Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law would motivate Congress to meet the $144 billion deficit target spelled out in the law and avoid across-the-board cuts.

Gramm, a former Texas A&M University economics professor, said he is sure the "fall back" trigger written into the original law, calling on Congress to ratify the reports, would work. But, he said, "I want certainty."

Earlier, Gramm said they would try to repair the bill by eliminating congressional authority to fire the comptroller general — the provision that made him subservient to Congress. That proposal ran into a firestorm of opposition in the House, because Congress cherishes its ability to use the GAO's comptroller general to investigate executive branch agencies and functions.

Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Beaumont, chairman of the House Government Operations Committee, was one who served notice he would fight any efforts to take away congressional authority over the GAO.

Brooks said Friday that Gramm called him last week to say he thought he had found a way to avoid tinkering with the GAO. Brooks said he told Gramm, "Well, you'd better because I'm going to whip you."

Reacting to the newly proposed legislation, Brooks said he had not studied it thoroughly.

"It's an 18-page patch job. We would be much better off, as I told Phil Gramm myself, to go with the fall back position, that he wrote and voted for."

The fall back provision follows much the same steps, but the "sequester" order for spending cuts is imposed only if approved by Congress and the president.

Brooks was an opponent of the legislation from the start, saying reductions should come "in the old-fashioned way, by voting for them."

Time is growing short for correcting the flaws found by the Supreme Court if Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is to be employed in the current year.

The court delayed the effect of its decision for 60 days to give Congress time to respond.

Both houses of Congress Thursday affirmed the $11.7 billion, fiscal 1986 automatic spending-cut order of March 1, which was invalidated by the court.

Brooks has scheduled two hearings next week on the effects of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings.

Minorities propose suit settlement

TYLER (AP) — Hispanics and blacks suing the Texas prison system over alleged discrimination in hiring have proposed a settlement that would require almost one-third minority hiring by the Texas Department of Corrections over the next five years.

Larry Daves, attorney for the plaintiffs, explained the terms of the settlement to U.S. Magistrate Judith Guthrie during a two-hour hearing Friday in the courtroom of U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice.

The settlement, if approved, would require that at least 17.5 percent of TDC hirings over the next five years to be black and at least 15 percent to be Hispanic.

The decree, drafted last November by Daves and Assistant Texas Attorney General Larry J. King, outlines provisions of the agreement.

King has since entered private law practice in San Francisco, and the state was represented Friday by Assistant Attorney General Carla Crisford. Also present at the hearing was TDC Personnel Director Jim Bush of Huntsville.

Several people voiced objections about the lack of any provision in the tentative agreement for retroactive salary payments to those who believe they were wrongly denied employment because of their race or ethnic origin.

Class members Richard Henry, who is now a TDC employee, Selby Sanderson and Napoleon Ward all indicated they will drop out of the settlement because of the lack of a back-pay provision.

In addition to the affirmative-action hiring provisions, the settlement calls for TDC to cease alleged discriminatory practices still existing in hiring, promotions and firing of corrections officers.

It also gives preference in future hiring to blacks and Hispanics who applied but were unfairly denied jobs between 1976 and whenever the settlement is finally approved.

In addition, Hispanics who feel they were unfairly terminated because of their national origin may appeal the firing to a three-person panel. If they do not receive a favorable result from that panel, they may refer the complaint to arbitrator Mitchell J. Green.

Guthrie asked Daves how he and TDC attorneys arrived at the selection of Green, an Austin attorney and former assistant attorney general, as the arbitrator. Daves replied that both sides agreed that Green, who has considerable Title VII experience, would be a good choice.

"It was my opinion, based upon my personal knowledge of him, that he was as fair as anyone we could get from the American Arbitration Association," Daves said.

Guthrie will issue a report concerning any objections to the tentative settlement to Justice, who must grant final approval before it can become effective.

The class-action civil rights lawsuit was filed in January 1977 by Daniel Cirilo, a Mexican-American corrections officer from Anderson County who alleged he was denied promotions and subjected to harassment on the job because of his national origin.

On Jan. 4, 1977, Cirilo was fired after filing a discrimination grievance with TDC claiming he had not been promoted to postal clerk because he was Mexican-American, court records show.

Although they perform a wide variety of services, such as cooking, maintenance and construction, nearly all TDC employees fall under the job description of "corrections officer."

One provision of the consent decree calls for TDC to analyze its job descriptions and come up with more specific job titles. Cirilo claimed in the grievance, and in his subsequent lawsuit, that he had been subjected to racial harassment and unfair discipline while employed by TDC.

A black applicant for corrections officer, Cleveland Thomas, joined the suit five years later claiming TDC had refused to hire him in February 1976 because of his race.

Justice also permitted the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC) to join as a plaintiff the same day he certified the suit for class-action, June 11, 1982.

A written objection to the settlement was filed with Guthrie by Houston attorney Carolyn Cormier on behalf of three class members, and another class member from the El Paso area has "opted out" of the settlement.

ABILENE (AP) — A man already convicted of exposing himself to a 5-year-old girl was sentenced to two life prison terms for kidnapping and sexually abusing a 6-year-old Abilene girl.

Heeding the urgings of a prosecutor to give Ray Hightower Jr. "a sentence that'll last every bit as long as the damage he's done," jurors took only 35 minutes Friday to set the maximum punishment.

Hightower had been convicted of four previous felony offenses and was on parole from a 1982 Dallas County conviction for exposing himself to a 5-year-old girl when he abducted the Abilene girl from her home Feb. 1.

In the only ruling favoring the 30-year-old former Tye resident, the jury said he released the girl unharmed and in a place where she would be found safe.

Jaycees name women

AUSTIN (AP) — An international tennis star, a newspaper editor and three others, Friday, were named outstanding young Texans by the Texas Jaycees.

This is the first year that women have been recognized since they became eligible for the award in 1984, and two were selected, according to Jaycees spokesman James Shelton.

Tennis player Martina Navratilova, who won two Wimbledon titles this year, is one of the two women honored. Also cited was Terry Scott Bertling, editor of the Huntsville Item.

Other recipients were:

— Marlin Perryman, Baylor University professor.

State kind to crime victims

AUSTIN (AP) — Victims of violent crime received a record $1.2 million through a state program during June, Attorney General Jim Mattox said Friday.

"What this means is that we're helping more innocent victims of violent crime overcome the financial burdens placed on them by criminals," Mattox said. "What is extremely important to remember about this program is that this money does not come out of the pockets of taxpayers. It's criminals who are paying for their evil deeds."

The Crime Victims Compensation Program paid $7 million to 1,257 victims in fiscal 1985.

It already has paid $6.7 million to 1,587 victims in the first 10 months of this business period, said Mattox, who predicted about $9 million will be paid to more than 1,800 victims by Aug. 31, the end of the fiscal year.

Fuel additive claims false

HOUSTON (AP) — A Houston man arrested in an alleged pyramid scheme involving the sale of a business journal has now been accused of making false claims about a fuel additive he sold.

Assistant Texas Attorney General Richard Tomlinson alleged in a lawsuit filed Friday that Robert Dean Philpot, 50, and his company, Philco International, are misleading consumers with unsubstantiated claims about the fuel additives.

Tomlinson said Philpot had claimed the additives would give consumers better gas mileage, allow vehicles to travel up to 100,000 miles without a tune-up and make for quicker engine starts.

Philpot attempted to persuade consumers to purchase the product by the case and resell it at a profit, the lawsuit states.

Philpot has previously sued the attorney general's office, contending the law upon which the agency is basing its actions against him is unconstitutional.

Philpot was released from jail after being arrested Thursday by investigators from the Harris County district attorney's special crimes division.

When arrested, Philpot was presenting a seminar to about 100 people on how they could sell a business journal for the Philco Money Express. He was charged with the misdemeanor offense of violating the state's "endless chain" laws.

Cessna crashes, kills four

ADDISON (AP) — Four people were killed when a small plane crashed on takeoff Saturday at a suburban Dallas airport, just short of a busy street in a heavily populated area, police said.

Three adults and one infant were killed in the crash of the twin-engine Cessna 421 about noon, said Addison Patrolman John Long.

He said the identities of the four were unknown, but they were headed to Atlanta.

The plane landed at the south end of the airport in a field just off Beltline Road, officials said.

"It was just a miracle there was an open field there," said William Miller, area supervisor at the Addison Airport Traffic Control Tower. "That's the only vacant area."

Addison, a suburb northwest of Dallas, is a dense area of stores, offices, hotels and apartment buildings.

Miller said traffic controllers only saw the ball of fire that followed takeoff and said it happened so fast, there was no time for the pilot to communicate to the tower.

He said other pilots at the airport who witnessed the crash speculated the plane may have lost power.

He said a motorist driving by the airstrip said the plane appeared to stall before it crashed.

Houston schools' upcoming pay freeze may prompt mass exodus of teachers

HOUSTON (AP) — Pay for Houston school district employees will be frozen at current levels for the upcoming school year, a move that prompted critics to warn of a mass exodus of teachers.

"The message they are giving is that teachers should look for jobs in suburban districts," said Gayle Fallon, president of the Houston Federation of Teachers. "They don't have the intestinal fortitude to raise taxes to support this district."

Houston Independent School District trustees voted Friday for the pay freeze to save the district more than $6 million. The budget reduction brings the total in budget cuts made by the trustees over the past several months to about $47 million.

Three trustees voting against the pay freeze say the district will not be able to attract competent teachers without a competitive salary scale. Teachers union leaders agreed.

Signa Segrest, president of the Houston Teachers Association, agreed with Ms. Fallon that teachers will go to other districts.

"Teachers are in great demand," she said. "When they can get jobs in outlying districts for more money, that is where they'll go."

"Nobody's trying to get rich, but when you see an essential public service like education taking a back seat, it's frustrating," she said.

School officials were warned last week that the state's huge revenue shortfall, which Gov. Mark White said Thursday may reach $3 billion, could mean losses of $20 to $60 million in state funds for the district next year.

State Rep. Paul Colbert, D-Houston, told the board that the situation may worsen if state funds to education are cut. A special legislative session has been called for Aug. 6 to give school districts a chance to prepare for state funding cuts before their budgets are due by Aug. 20.

"The implications are that nothing is sacred any longer," Colbert said. "Unless we get real creative we're going to have to make cuts in education."

Bentsen blasts Pentagon for Army services transfer

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, has blasted a top health officer at the Pentagon for ordering the Army and Air Force to immediately begin transferring medical services from Brooke Army Medical Center to Wilford Hall Air Force Medical Center, the San Antonio Light reported Saturday.

Bentsen, who is working to save the proposal for a 450-bed new Brooke Army Medical Center, called the Pentagon order "risky, improper and premature," coming as it did during continuing congressional debate over the size of the new hospital.

The Pentagon instruction was contained in a July 8 memorandum from Assistant Defense Secretary William Mayer to the secretaries of the Air Force and Army.

Bentsen complained of the memo in a Friday letter to Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger.

Because of poor condition of the hospital building itself, Mayer said in his memo it would be "both reasonable and prudent to begin transferring many inpatient services now."

Universities' uniqueness factor of what saved them

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Cartloads of dogs and ponies and what seemed like half the town of Alpine trucked into the Capitol last week. Galveston and Commerce sent a few dedicated citizens, too. Midland-Odessa went through the ordeal last month.

In one sense, the outpouring of unity and support for four embattled state universities is probably good for those schools and the communities that want and need them. But from another angle, it's a shame that these folks feel so compelled to prove their worth.

For the record, the display worked. The Select Committee on Higher Education voted unanimously not to recommend that the Legislature close Sul Ross State University, Texas A&M University at Galveston, East Texas State University and the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

The committee's staff used four criteria to evaluate the schools' future. Three of the four represent the kind of mixed signals that consistently seem to bring us into messes like these. The fourth is a true measure of higher education. Let's look at No. 4 first, then wade into the others.

Each of the four universities, the staff determined, offers unique programs not duplicated by any other state college "in close geographic proximity."

In the case of Sul Ross and UTPB, that's fairly obvious. There are no other state colleges in close geographic proximity. Their special programs — like Sul Ross' desert ecology studies and UTPB's Center for Energy and Economic Diversification — were created to deal with some of West Texas' unique problems.

UTPB and A&M-Galveston came much closer to extinction last year and had to expend all of those resources again to fight for their lives. That battle came when the House Appropriations Committee voted — perhaps more than anything because of a "Texas Monthly" article — to close those schools.

These foolish maneuvers inevitably tarnish the universities' reputations and run counter to a rational evaluation of the higher education needs of this state. But perhaps we're asking too much for state government to take a rational look at anything.

That brings us to the other three criteria the SCOHE staff used in considering closing those schools: enrollment trends, per-student costs and legislative appropriations trends.

At first glance they seem like fairly reasonable measures to employ. Public universities with declining enrollment and legislative support and increasing costs seem to be likely candidates for elimination.

But what this vast state needs — and what several leaders like Gov. Mark White and Higher Education Commissioner Kenneth Ashworth have called for — is a system of public colleges and universities that provides a general education to its students and individual schools that deliver the programs — academic, research or training — their individual students need.

Not every state university, thank the Lord, can or should be a UT-Austin or a Texas A&M.

So let's say Mid-North Texas State University decides to drop its dreams for grandeur. It eliminates its medical school and petrochemical engineering program and concentrates on the major problems of that neck of the woods: agriculture and water. Or it decides to offer a premier liberal arts school and in the process tightens its admissions standards.

Logically, under either of those scenarios, MWTSU enrollment would decline somewhat. Per student costs could very well increase. And watch out, here comes a Texas Legislature 'Catch 22' non-parallel.

Crusty old Rep. I.M. Stingy notices that falling student body count and says, "Why do we need that dang ol' college anyways?" And the cycle starts all over again.

The ironic thing about this most recent round is that the Legislature created SCOHE to put aside those old short-sighted, printout-directed criteria and take a comprehensive look at the whole system. Luckily, at least some members of the committee recognize that.

For the rest of the year — until SCOHE issues its report to the Legislature next January — the panel will take a good hard look at the "role and scope" of those four universities and the rest of the system as well.

Maybe if they do their job right we'll be spared the sight of colleges and universities begging for their lives next time around.

Steve Levine is the Reporter-Telegram's Austin Bureau chief.

Flynn McStay (Mac) turns to a wheel he is lacing. "I guess boys will always be in a hurry to get somewhere. All you can by gosh do is fix their bicycles and hope for the best."

AP Laserphoto

Never mind Libyan terrorists or killer tarantulas.

There is not a more destructive force on the face of earth than a 12-year-old boy on a bicycle, Flynn B. McStay Sr., says.

He should know.

For 25 years McStay, 76, known to two generations of Grayson County bicyclists as Mac, has reaped the fruits of frenzied cyclists.

"Nothing. I hate to even sell a bike to a kid younger than 13 because I know it'll be right back in here the next week."

Mac has seen it all: bikes that have jumped Evel Knivel-style from homemade ramps; bikes that have forded too many creeks and jumped too many curbs and plunged down too many unpaved alleys.

What others destroy in haste, he fixes with patience and persistence and a tool chest of tricks.

Gently, he straightens pretzeled wheels.

Working as slowly and steadily as a president's brain surgeon, he transplants BB-sized ball bearings into old bikes.

Bicycles, he says, have taught him patience.

When he was a young man, Mac dreamed of driving trucks, of roaring fast down endless highways in huge, quick machines.

When he was younger, he drove trucks for different companies.

But driving the fast lane, the thousands of bumps and jars and jolts that a trucker takes, took their toll on Mac.

First he tried sharpening saws in the shop behind his house.

And then a Dallas salesman sold him on the idea of fixing and peddling bicycles.

"As long as there are 12-year-old boys," the salesmen told him, "you'll have business."

Patience, he says. He'll get to them when he can.

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress' sweeping overhaul of the nation's tax code may eliminate writeoffs for car loans and other consumer debts — but mortgage interest would still be deductible, and that could turn into a broad loophole.

The financial community is already planning ways to tailor the home mortgage deduction into home equity loans for almost any other purpose — tuition, boats, cars, or even credit cards.

People who rent or people who have not built up home equity would no longer be allowed to deduct from their taxes the interest on loans for the same things.

"Is it equitable that somebody who rents a home cannot deduct the interest on an education loan, while somebody who owns a home can? What is the logic?" asks Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich. "I am not saying you close it off. I am saying allow it for everyone."

Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., one of the architects of the tax package, concedes the unfairness of the situation, saying it reflects "some of the conflicting results when you do a tax reform bill of this dimension."

And, he pointed out during Senate debate, while most renters do not itemize to take advantage of an interest rate deduction, they would benefit from the lower overall tax rates in the bill.

Eliminating the deduction for consumer loans would bring in $28 billion over five years, helping to keep the Senate bill "revenue neutral" — neither gaining nor losing money over that period.

The House bill, which also promises neither an overall tax cut nor increase, retains the consumer interest deduction with limits of $10,000 for an individual and $20,000 for a couple.

When a House-Senate conference committee drafts a compromise bill, interest deductibility will be high on the list of issues.

Automobile dealers, who entice buyers with one-stop sales and financing, would be directly affected if the Senate provision were adopted.

"Why should someone have the right to deduct a second house before a first car?" asked John J. Ferron, vice president of the National Automobile Dealers Association. "We're going to work hard in conference to see if we can restore" consumer loan deductions, he said.

Ferron said it would be difficult to estimate how much impact the loan-deductibility loss would have on car buyers. More then 9 out of 10 workers use cars to get to their jobs, he said, so people will still be purchasing automobiles.

Media knew of Bolivian drug raids, withheld to not damage operation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Several U.S. news organizations say they knew a week and a half ago, or more, about plans for American participation in Bolivian drug raids but decided not to run the story, largely out of fear of undermining the operation.

First public word of the joint effort, which U.S. and Bolivian officials say was damaged by premature disclosure, came in Bolivian newspapers last Tuesday afternoon, the day after a U.S. C-5A cargo plane landed in the city of Santa Cruz and unloaded six military helicopters.

U.S. television networks and wire services first reported the story Tuesday evening, and U.S. newspapers first reported it in Wednesday morning's editions. The raids were launched late Friday morning.

The Los Angeles Times found out about the planned operation Friday, July 11, with a tip coming to the paper from sources in South America, according to the newspaper's Washington bureau chief, Jack Nelson. The newspaper confirmed the story with government sources in Washington.

Nelson said there was never any official request from U.S. officials to refrain from using the story, but that U.S. sources supplied the newspaper with detailed information on the condition that the newspaper not publish it.

Nelson said the newspaper was prepared to run the story if someone else published it first, but "we didn't want an exclusive badly enough to disrupt the raid."

The Washington Post first was tipped to the story Thursday, July 10, or Friday, July 11, and had gathered enough information to publish it by Monday, two days before a story eventually appeared, said Michael Getler, assistant managing editor for foreign news. Getler said that U.S. sources who confirmed the story said they hoped that the newspaper wouldn't print a story, so that the operation wouldn't be exposed, a request the newspaper decided to honor.

The New York Times found out about the planned U.S. participation Monday night and the newspaper decided not to run a story in Tuesday morning's paper without first doing some further checking, said Bill Kovach, the Times' Washington editor.

He said one consideration was that the newspaper had not had enough time to evaluate whether disclosing the operation would jeopardize lives.

NBC News knew about the raid plans by the week of July 6-12, but a reporter was working on the story as a longer-range piece for the weekly magazine news program "1986," said Christie Basham, the network's deputy bureau chief in Washington.

She said NBC had no agreement with government officials not to run the story, "nor was one asked for by any agency." She said that if the network had been working on the story as spot news, the possibility of disrupting the raids would always be a consideration.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, speaking at a news conference Friday in San Diego, said that news leaks wiped out the element of surprise and increased the dangers for the U.S. troops in Bolivia.

Weinberger was equally critical of the people who leaked information on the operation and those who printed or broadcast it.

Surprise, he said, is "a key tactical element that is lost because people are irresponsible enough to print everything they hear. It would be even better if the people who knew about them (U.S. operations) didn't leak them out."

Steamy cats

With temperatures hovering in the 90s, it has to be difficult to be a snow leopard in Chicago. Despite the heat, Masha, a 9-year-old snow leopard mother, brought her still-to-be named kitten, born May 26, out of their den at Chicago's Brookfield Zoo recently.

Research states 'greenhouse' to cost billions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The predicted "greenhouse effect" of climate warming could require $200 billion in new irrigation investments around the world, according to a report Saturday by an environmental research organization.

The "greenhouse effect" is caused by the burning of fossil fuels, like coal and oil, which are producing a rise in atmospheric carbon dioxide. Almost all scientists agree that it will happen, given present trends, but there are major uncertainties about when. Pessimistic estimates say 40 years or so; other estimates are for much later in the 21st century.

The Environmental Protection Agency has estimated that the increase in average temperature could be 1 degree to 4.5 degrees Centigrade (1.8 to 8.1 degrees Fahrenheit).

This would change rainfall patterns and generally shift the best growing weather toward the poles from the present temperate zones, according to some studies.

The 670 million irrigated acres of irrigated crop land around the world make up 18 percent of total crop land, but account for a third of the global harvest, said a report by the Worldwatch Institute on the potential effects of changes in the earth's atmosphere from pollution of various kinds.

In the western United States, an increase of 2 degrees Centigrade (3.6 degree Fahrenheit) in average temperature in the year 2000, should it occur, could require that 35 percent of the existing irrigrated area be taken out of production, the study said. Worldwatch used a 1983 National Academy of Sciences report as the basis for that estimate.

"A reduction of that magnitude would have high costs, measured either by the capital investments in dams, canals and irrigation systems rendered obsolete, or by the replacement value of that irrigation infrastructure," wrote the study's author, Sandra Postel.

If replacement structures and systems cost $600 to $2,000 per acre, it could cost $7 billion to $23 billion to irrigate new lands in the western United States, the report said.

"Worldwide, maintaining food security under the altered climate would likely require new irrigation systems beyond those that would be added anyway as food needs increased," the report said.

Philadelphia garbage workers start clearing trash

Associated Press

Hundreds of Philadelphia garbage workers threatened with losing their jobs returned to work Saturday to clear mountains of trash that piled up during 18 days of a city employees' strike, and a judge in Detroit ordered the city and a striking union to resume bargaining.

Elsewhere, Pittsburgh's 264 garbage collectors are threatening to strike Tuesday if no agreement is reached. Members of Teamsters Local 609 have been working under a contract extension, which expires at midnight Monday. A negotiating session is scheduled for Monday evening.

Philadelphia sanitation trucks rolled for the first time since the 2,400 workers walked out in a contract dispute July 1 along with the rest of their 12,000-member blue-collar union.

Forty thousand tons of garbage have gone uncollected since the strike began. It will be burned in city incinerators.

On Friday, Common Pleas Judge Edward J. Blake found the sanitation workers in contempt of court for defying a back-to-work order, and Mayor W. Wilson Goode warned they would be fired if they did not report.

More than 2,000 workers reported, said Streets Commissioner Harry Perks.

Police officers stood by at incinerators and other sanitation sites, but there were no pickets as the workers defied their own union president in going back to work.

"The way I see it, I got 15 years here, and no sense letting it go down the drain because of someone I have no power over," said sanitation truck driver Benjamin Ward, referring to the mayor. "I don't feel I'm back to work. I feel like a slave that's been put behind the plow to work without a meal."

Earl Stout, president of District Council 33 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, said he was disppointed by the decision to return.

"I was hoping they would hang in there a little longer so that we could have some leverage," he said.

Talks were held all night and resumed in the morning, said Karen Warrington, a spokeswoman for the mayor.

District 33 issued a statement Saturday saying the all-night talks had been fruitless and that the mayor had "dashed all hopes of a fair settlement" by demanding more control over the union's health and welfare fund.

The mayor would not comment on the talks Saturday. On Friday, he said he would continue to insist on the city's right to audit the fund and to use outside contractors, two of the major issues in negotiations.

Most of the remaining members of District 33 remained on strike. The walkout has closed museums, libraries and some recreational centers, and slowed city paperwork and other services.

The 2,500 white-collar members of AFSCME District 47 went on strike with District 33 but ratified a new contact a week ago. Many District 47 members have returned to work.

In Detroit, a judge ordered negotiators for the city and unions representing 7,000 striking workers to resume bargaining Saturday toward a contract to end a walkout that had cut services for four days in the nation's sixth largest city.

"The court feels it has an obligation to the public to have this matter resolved," Wayne County Circuit Judge Sharon Finch told lawyers at a hearing on the city's request for a back-to-work order.

Talks had been scheduled to resume Sunday afternoon, but Council 25 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees had pressed the city to return to the table sooner.

Clerks, sewer, election and zoo workers, bus mechanics and emergency telephone operators were among the strikers.

Caroline Kennedy weds Schlossberg

HYANNIS PORT, Mass. (AP) — Once the little girl who captured America's heart, Caroline Kennedy was in the public eye again Saturday, this time as a bride.

Watchers of her famous family began staking places at dawn outside the church where Ms. Kennedy was to marry Edwin Schlossberg, 41, a New York businessman and artist.

Gray skies greeted the 28-year-old daughter of Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis and the late John F. Kennedy.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, tapped to give his niece away, joked Friday night about the weather forecast, saying, "They've given me a very important responsibility and that's to make sure that the weather is good."

"It's her day. All the members of the family are delighted with that," the Massachusetts Democrat said after an hour long rehearsal of the Roman Catholic ceremony.

The wedding is "a very lovely birthday present for my mother," Kennedy said. Rose Kennedy, Caroline's grandmother and matriarch of the clan, who is too ill to attend the wedding, turns 96 on Tuesday, and the family also planned to celebrate her birthday.

The Rev. Donald MacMillan, who is officiating at the marriage between Ms. Kennedy and Schlossberg, who is Jewish, said the bride was calm during the rehearsal and Schlossberg "was probably the most excited."

Shortly before the wedding, it was announced that Ms. Kennedy planned to retain her current name after marriage and that she would not be pledging to obey her husband in the vows.

"My understanding is...it's going to be Caroline Kennedy," said family spokesman Brian Delaney.

MacMillan said Ms. Kennedy selected "the vows that are printed in the Catholic ritual for weddings. The word 'obey' is not in the formula."

The Church of Our Lady of Victory, in Centerville, is about five miles from the Kennedy compound. At the compound itself, a white tent big enough to accommodate a small circus covered a reception area for 400 guests.

The tent was decorated by New York florist Robert Isabell with the help of Rachel Lambert Mellon, who designed the White House Rose Garden and is a friend of Mrs. Onassis.

The guest list included Kennedys and old family friends, including Theodore Sorensen, a speech writer for Caroline's father, and McGeorge Bundy, the late president's national security adviser.

In Washington, Assistant White House Press Secretary Mark Weinberg said President and Mrs. Reagan sent a congratulatory telegram to the couple.

Chlorine irritates eyes at Hollywood Boys Club

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Fumes from spilled swimming pool chemicals wafted into a locker room at the Hollywood Boys Club, causing eye irritation and breathing difficulties that sent 49 people to hospitals, authorities said.

"It doesn't appear that they were hurt too badly," fire spokesman Jim Williamson said. "They were complaining of eye, nose and throat irritation."

Among the victims taken to six hospitals were 46 children and three adults, Williamson said.

The incident occurred when workers spilled small amounts of muriatic acid and chlorine they were planning to put in the pool, said Assistant Chief David Sloan.

Woman births while on fire

NEW YORK (AP) — A woman gave premature birth to a son after she was doused with gasoline and set on fire during an argument in a welfare hotel, triggering a blaze that left 25 people homeless, authorities said Saturday.

Dorthia Stevens, who was eight months pregnant, was listed in stable condition at the Cornell Hospital Burn Unit with second- and third-degree burns over 20 percent of her body, said Ricki Glantz, a hospital administrator.

The baby, born Friday at the burn unit and transferred to a pediatrics unit, was listed in critical condition, said Ms. Glantz.

Ms. Stevens' husband, Donald Stevens, was booked for attempted murder and arson, police said, and more than 25 hotel residents, including a 6-month-old child, were treated for minor burns and smoke inhalation.

FBI joins search for girl

ARTESIA (AP) — The FBI will join in the search for a 9-year-old Artesia girl who disappeared while en route to a nearby store, authorities said.

An extensive search began Friday in the southeast New Mexico city for Dena Lynn Gore. The girl was reported missing Thursday night, about two hours after she left her home to go about six blocks to a convenience store.

The mother told officers her daughter had taken her bicycle for a trip to a convenience store at about 6 p.m. Thursday. When she did not return home, the mother notified police.

The girl's bicycle was located Friday about a block from the convenience store and a store employee told police the girl had not been in the store.

Artesia Police Chief James McKenzie said the bicycle was found in an alley behind a large trash bin.

McKenzie said the FBI would join the search today. Artesia police, members of the Eddy County Sheriff's office and reserve officers also were expected to join the search for the girl.

A state police helicopter and an FBI airplane also would be used in the search, McKenzie said.

McKenzie said the FBI had decided to join the search because the girl had been missing for more than 24 hours "and there is the possibility she could have been taken across state lines."

Authorities said an extensive search of the area where the girl's bicycle was found and a roadblock that police set up on U.S. 285 in Artesia on Friday failed to turn up any trace of the girl.

Police said the girl's father, Jeffrey Gore, who lives in El Paso, arrived in Artesia Friday to help in the search.

The girl was described as being 4 foot 9 and weighing 98 pounds. She was last seen wearing a pink tank top and purple shorts. McKenzie said the girl has light brown and blue eyes.

3,000 Ford workers strike

HAPEVILLE, Ga. (AP) — Three thousand Ford Motor Co. employees went on strike today, claiming the automaker had accelerated the assembly line at its ultramodern plant here without hiring more workers.

The suburban Atlanta plant, which reopened in October following a five-month, $250 million retooling, is one of two in the country that makes the sleek and popular Ford Taurus and Mercury Sable automobiles.

ADVERSE POSSESSION

The law has made a public decision that land should be used, and not lie idle. This is the underlying reason for a principle known as "adverse possession." This means that if you use land as your own--even though you don't have a deed or other title document--you will eventually become its owner.

This legal principle does not come into operation in cases where the land is being leased or rented, or if permission in any other way is given by the true owner. Rather, the use of the land by the one claiming adverse possession must meet all of these requirements: the possession must be open, continuous (for the minimum period in each state, usually 15 to 20 years) exclusive, adverse, and notorious. An occasional use of the land is not sufficient to ripen into title by adverse possession.

If you own land which someone else is using without your permission, you could lose title to the land if you wait too long. Don't let this happen to you. If you have any questions, please check with your Attorney.

Nicaragua's Ortega denounces 'American terrorist policies'

By ANDREW SELSKY

ESTELI, Nicaragua (AP) — President Daniel Ortega denounced "American terrorist policies" in a speech Saturday to an estimated 15,000 people at a rally on the seventh anniversary of the Sandinistas' victory.

The area was heavily guarded and troops were reinforced in the region to prevent any attack by U.S.-supported rebels. Ten Soviet-made armored personnel carriers with machine guns lined a side of the dirt plaza outside this northern city where the rally was held.

Ortega, wearing a green uniform, also said he would ask the U.N. Security Council to force the United States to abide by a World Court decision.

"We went to the court and the United States government, acting like a delinquent, ignored the law," Ortega told the crowd.

The World Court in the Hague ruled June 27 that the United States violated international law by supporting the Nicaraguan rebels and said Washington should pay reparations. The United States said it would not abide by the ruling.

Ortega said he would give the United States until July 27 to respond, and then would go to the Security Council.

The court, the legal arm of the United Nations, has no power to enforce its rulings and must rely on voluntary compliance. The Security Council has enforcement power, but the United States, as one of the five permanent members, can veto any council action.

There were reports, which could not be confirmed, at the United Nations Friday that Nicaragua would ask for a council meeting sometime during the last week in July and that Ortega would go to New York to address the council.

Ortega, speaking from a makeshift podium on a hot, breezy day, charged that President Reagan was copying Nero and Hitler "by murdering the Nicaraguan people."

He said 31,290 people had been killed or wounded in the war against the rebels, and called them "victims of the political aggression of the United States." The Reagan administration is following a "strategy of death," he said, and that would mean increased military activity throughout Nicaragua.

"This is their plan of peace for Nicaragua, Central America, Latin America and the world," Ortega said. "By using mercenary forces, they plan to keep killing workers, doctors..."

Referring to U.S. claims that Nicaragua exports Marxist revolution, Ortega said: "We don't want a war in Central America. We don't want direct U.S. intervention in Nicaragua, because that would mean total war in all of Central America."

He also discussed internal problems and shortages, saying food must be supplied first to the combatants.

"In the future there will be more difficulties, but we won't surrender for hunger," he said.

Ortega traveled to Esteli in a four-wheel drive vehicle escorted by two Soviet-made MI-24 helicopter gunships. Thousands of people traveled in a caravan to the tobacco-growing area.

Afghanistan: Young always there to fight

GAGI, Afghanistan (AP) — Commander Mohammad Anwar watched his 14-year-old brother and other boys about the same age clustered around a machine gun, clamoring to fire it. A guerrilla with a graying beard motioned them to be quiet so he could finish teaching them how.

Soon, the commander said, the boys would be in the thick of the war against Afghanistan's Communist government and Soviet aircraft, tanks and troops.

"This is how we will go on fighting," the 33-year-old Anwar said. "Always there are the young."

He and other senior guerrilla commanders in eastern Afghanistan's Paktia Province say the war is not going well and the insurgents face many problems.

Some guerrilla leaders privately say they fear their fighters and the civilians they depend on are becoming exhausted after eight years of war, but the guerrillas cling to a faith in their cause — holy war against communism.

Soviet forces, estimated to number 115,000, have launched several offensives in Paktia in the past year and the guerrillas have reported suffering heavy losses.

"This war will be a long one," said Ahmad Shah, another guerrilla commander. "We don't know how long it will last — 10 years, 15 years."

The fighting is getting harder and more costly and Soviet and government forces are being reinforced by large numbers of jet aircraft, helicopter gunships and artillery, the commanders said. The Soviets have deployed thousands of elite commandos and are using more effective tactics, such as guerrilla-style ambushes, they said.

The guerrillas are short of weapons, ammunition and food; they have few defenses against the fast jets and helicopters that control the sky, and it is becoming more difficult to move men and supplies or to mount attacks, the commanders added.

"The war is harder because the Russians have more and better weapons," Anwar said. "The mujahedeen (holy warriors) have the same old weapons. It does not get better for us."

Western intelligence assessments indicate the guerrillas still control most of the countryside and the war remains roughly a stalemate. But the assessments, obtained from diplomatic sources, cited evidence of growing government firepower, such as recent sightings of formations of up to 60 Soviet jets in single raids.

"There are more people dying in Afghanistan," said Ali Khan, a guerrilla officer. "There is more fighting and it means more people are going to die." While visiting the guerrillas here, this reporter could hear the occasional rattle of machinegun and rifle fire up the valley around government outposts. But the dozens of guerrillas sorting supplies and cleaning weapons here paused only when they heard the roar of a jet followed by the explosion of a bomb.

"Russians," said a young guerrilla wearing a Soviet army fur hat and a belt with the hammer and sickle insignia of the Red Army as he resumed polishing his captured AK-47 Kalashnikov assault rifle.

Despite the gloomy assessments of their commanders, the guerrillas at the Gagi base expressed a seemingly unshakeable faith that they will eventually win because God (Allah) is on their side. An ardent faith in Islam, the guerrillas said, is their greatest strength against jets, tanks and cannons.

"First we fight for Allah, then we fight for freedom," said Yaqub Shah, a top commander at the age of 27 for Jamiat-i-Islami, one of the seven main guerrilla groups.

But some Western military and intelligence observers question how much longer the insurgents can continue.

Anwar, Yaqub Shah and other commanders at Gagi acknowledged that some of their men are weary and dispirited. Whenever possible, they said, tired fighters are sent to see their families in Afghanistan or the refugee camps in neighboring Pakistan where more than three million Afghans live.

"People are getting tired after eight years of war," Yaqub Shah said. "But children born in this time are becoming our new soldiers."

WORLD IN BRIEF

Amnesty International to probe Laotian deaths

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Amnesty International has called on Laos to investigate charges that its troops massacred 35 Laotians living inside Thailand, the London-based human rights organization said today.

Amnesty said in a statement that it also requested more details on the June 14 incident from the Thai government, which has sent an official protest note to the United Nations blaming Laotian government troops for the massacre.

Amnesty said that available information showed that armed elements attacked a Laotian refugee settlement, killing 35 people.

Thailand charges Laos with sending troops to punish the refugees for leaving Communist Laos and for suspected involvement with groups fighting the Laotian government.

The Laotian government has denied the charges.

Amnesty said it has appealed to Laotian Premier Kaysone Phomvihan to initiate an investgation into the allegations and make the results of the probe public.

China moves to ban porno

PEKING (AP) — A state-run company will become the sole distributor of prerecorded Chinese and foreign art videocassettes in a move to eradicate pornography, the official Xinhua News Agency said today.

Xinhua, quoting the Ministry of Radio, Film, and Television, also said no videotapes may be sold, rented or shown in public without ministry approval.

It said the new rules will go into effect Sept. 1, and are aimed at preventing the proliferation of pornography in China.

Chinese authorities have expressed concern about the spread of pornographic tapes and books that has accompanied the government's policy of opening up to the outside world.

The report said the Chinese Film Distribution and Exhibition Corporation will be the sole distributor for tapes. It plans to produce 100 prerecorded films, including some American, japanese and Hong Kong films, it said.

Invalid sets self afire

PEKING (AP) — The Public Security Bureau today confirmed reports that a women in a wheelchair committed suicide by setting herself on fire in front of the official Communist Party newspaper's building in Peking.

"This incident did occur. It is being investigated," said He Jinghui, an official in the bureau's Foreign Affairs department.

He declined to give any details about Friday's suicide.

Witnesses said the woman appeared to be in her 20s, but they had no other details.

A woman who answered the telephone at the newspaper, the People's Daily (Renmin Ribao) said no one there knew anything about the incident.

Iran says U.S. spy arrested

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — An Iranian official said Iranian security forces had arrested a U.S. spy operating in Iran with an Italian passport, Tehran radio reported.

The official, speaker of the parliament Ali Akbar Hashemi Rafsanjani, noted the arrest Friday in an address at Tehran University campus that focused on an alleged Western plot to reduce the price of oil, the radio reported.

"In this connection we have caught a U.S. spy who has been working in Iran under an Italian passport, from whom we have learned a great deal, and these facts will be revealed at the appropriate time by the country's security officials," he was quoted as saying, without further elaboration.

The report neither identified the alleged spy, nor said when the arrest took place.

News agency ends strike

PARIS (AP) — Management and union leaders at Agence France-Presse reached agreement Saturday on a dispute over job cuts, ending a strike that halted the international news agency's transmission for four days.

The accord was reached following 14 hours of non-stop negotiations, according to an AFP dispatch.

AFP employees began the strike Tuesday to protest President Henri Pigeat's plans to eliminate 300 jobs at the agency's Paris headquarters to cut costs.

Thunderstorms possible today

From Staff and Wire Reports

Fair to partly cloudy skies with some afternoon and evening thunderstorms possible for today and Monday, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Today will be fair with less than a 20 percent chance of late afternoon thunderstorms. The high will be in the mid-90s. Winds will be from the east to southeast from five to 15 mph.

Sunday night and Monday will be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of late afternoon and evening thunderstorms. The low Sunday will be in the mid 60s with the high Monday expected in the mid 90s.

Saturday's high of 96 was nine degrees cooler than the high of 105 set in 1981. The overnight low of 66 degrees was four degrees warmer than the record low of 62 set in 1959.

STATE

Thunderstorms and showers coupled with hot afternoon temperatures developed Saturday afternoon in Southeast Texas, the Lower Rio Grande Valley and along the Texas coast.

The rest of the state had fair skies as a result of high pressure, the National Weather Service said.

Winds were generally less than 10 mph and variable.

Temperatures were mostly in the 90s, except for readings in the 80s in the mountains. Afternoon extremes were a low of 80 degrees at the Guadalupe Pass and a high of 101 degrees at Waco and Wichita Falls.

The forecast for North Texas calls for sunny and hot Sunday with isolated thunderstorms. Highs will be in the upper 90s to near 103, and in the mid- to upper 90s Monday. Lows will be in the upper 60s to low 70s. Widely scattered thunderstorms are expected Sunday night and Monday, particularly in the extreme southeast.

NATION

A stagnant high-pressure system over the Southeast continued to produce unusually hot and dry weather Saturday, and heavy thunderstorms struck Pennsylvania.

Temperatures rose above 100 degrees at several locations from the Carolinas to Georgia. The National Weather Service said the heat and lack of widespread rain should continue into this week, although some relief was possible by Tuesday or Wednesday as a cold front pushes slowly across the region.

Columbia, S.C., hit a record 103 degrees by early afternoon Saturday, the 14th consecutive day the city has hit 100 or higher. Augusta, Ga., also hit a record 103 degrees.

Mims recalls his service as lawyer, district judge

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Judge Joseph H. "Joe" Mims is a scholarly jurist who dedicated his career to public service.

"By nature, I have always been public-service oriented," said the judge eight years after he retired from the bench in 1978. "I felt if you were doing something worthwhile, you would reap benefits which you couldn't take to the bank."

From the early 1940s until the late 1970s, he served as the Midland County attorney, district attorney, family-court judge and judge of the 318th Texas District Court.

"It's what you do and not what you say that counts," said Mims of life, although he noted that "what you say and how you say it" is important. "A soft answer turneth away wrath."

Mims, 79, set up law practice in Midland in a hallway above Everybody's Dry Goods Store in June 1936 after he was graduated from The University of Texas Law School. "That month, I made $17 dollars."

His coming to Midland wasn't just chance.

"I was just looking for a place to land," he said. "This was the old stomping grounds of the Mims family. My grandfather ranched here in the early years." His father cowboyed.

PRIOR TO HIS entering law school, Mims, who grew up in Fort Worth, taught school and coached for five years in Northwest Texas. "In 1929, the stock market went busted, ...just crashed. We were in a depression. And you took what you could get."

He took $140 a month as his starting wages as a school teacher when the "going rate" was $125.

"I never lost my temper when I was teaching," Mims recalled. "I was firm, but I was kind, too. They (students) knew how far they could go."

A year into his law practice in Midland, Mims recalled a gentlemanly fellow who couldn't afford to pay his bill for a contract which Mims had drafted.

"I said, 'That's all right,' and I wished him well anyway," Mims said.

Later, the artistic man crafted a copper rose and rosebud and presented them to Mims in payment of the bill.

"I wouldn't take anything for it," he said. "That was an honest man who wanted to do good."

In 1940, Mims ran for county attorney but lost.

"I never did stop running; I kept writing letters on that old beat-up Underwood typewriter. I was writing for the next election. By the time the election came around, one-half of the people I had written letters to had moved away."

Nevertheless, he won the election in 1942, and served as county attorney through 1950.

He returned to the private practice of law and set up shop a room in the old Llano Hotel.

IN 1954, Gov. Allan Shivers appointed Mims district attorney. He served in that post until 1965, when Gov. John Connally named Mims judge of the Midland County Court of Domestic Relations — family court.

Five-year-old girl gets liver transplant

By JANE DEES
Staff Writer

For 5-year-old Cherie Shelburne of Midland, in need of a liver transplant for the past two years, the third time was the charm.

The first two times a liver had been available, Cherie, diagnosed at birth with biliary atresia, a disease of unknown origin that interferes with production and secretion of bile by the liver, had been too sick to undergo the extensive surgery.

After returning home from Cherie's check-up in Dallas one recent morning, her parents finally got the right call at the right time — a suitable donor had been found for Cherie and doctors believed she could withstand the surgery.

They hopped the next plane back to Dallas and Cherie was in surgery at the Children's Medical Center by 9:30 p.m. Thursday night.

"They haven't told us much about who the donor was except that it was a 6-year-old girl," said Richard Shelburne, Cherie's father.

"We just want them to know what they've done for us is a true blessing and that we are thankful to them for saving our daughter's life."

As of Saturday afternoon, Shelburne said Cherie was still in the pediatric intensive care unit at the hospital, but could possibly be moved to a regular pediatric room in two or three days.

Shelburne said that the surgery lasted 22 hours, about four to 12 hours longer than expected, because there was a problem with excessive bleeding.

"When they remove a liver, all of the body's blood clotting abilities are halted because the absence of bile prevents the synthesis and absorption of vitamin K, which is necessary for clotting.

"Until the new liver has been inserted and attached to the surrounding blood vessels, the person is going to lose a lot of blood," Shelburne said.

He said Cherie received 20 pints of blood throughout the surgery, which amounted to replacing all the blood in her body 10 times.

Shelburne said he believed Cherie knew what was going on as they flew back to Dallas for the transplant surgery.

"She had to have an idea about what's going on. She always hears us talking about her illness.

"I tried to explain to her on the plane what was about to take place. I told her she was going to have an operation that would make her well.

"However, you know that can be a tall promise to keep," Shelburne said.

Things should go well as long as her body doesn't reject the liver, he said.

"They're treating her with two anti-rejection drugs, cyclosporine and prednisone which will suppress her immune system to allow acceptance of the new organ while not making her overly suseceptible to infection," Shelburne said.

Shelburne said the doctors in Dallas gave Cherie a 50-50 chance of making it through the surgery.

"But this is the best hope we've had in along time," he said.

Shelburne estimated that expenses have run the family close to $250,000 since she was first diagnosed, not including the the transplant itself.

A spokesman at Children's Medical Center in Dallas, which has the nation's second-largest liver transplant program, said a liver transplant costs about $80,000-$120,000 and that the doctor's fees run another $10,00-$20,000.

Those figures don't include the cost for the probable 30-day hospital stay, the spokesman said.

Shelburne estimated the complete cost for the surgery should end up costing about $150,000.

Davis said he is organizing a fund-draiser to be held Aug. 9 at the D&D Corral, located between Midland and Stanton, to help raise funds for the Shelburnes.

He said he's never met Cherie or her parents, but attends Crestview Baptist Church with Cherie's grandparents and "just wants to help."

Davis said he would like to see the event raise about $10,000.

Shelburne said his insurance from work has been good about covering a large part of Cherie's expenses, but still doesn't cover everything.

A trust fund in Cherie's name has been in existence at Midland's Petroplex Savings for some time and that has helped, too, he said.

Shelburne said that while the Children's Medical Center doesn't turn anyone away, they do at some point request a deposit on the surgery fees of $80,000.

"They just can't eat $100,000 here and there every time they perform a liver transplant. I understand that," Shelburne said.

He estimated that the cost alone for he and his wife to stay in Dallas during Cherie's recuperation time could run $5,000.

"It really doesn't matter though, even if we find ourselves sleeping on the floor of the hospital.

"What's important is that Cherie has a new chance for a normal life."

Sunday shopping draws mixed reviews

By HOLLY LONGABERGER
Staff Writer

It has been almost a year since the repeal of the Texas Blue Law. The September 1985 repeal gave shoppers a chance to purchase goods seven days a week.

Although many people enjoy having an extra shopping day, several Midland store managers have mixed feelings about staying open.

Manager Ron Coughlin of Jerry's Perfect Pet Shop in Midland Park Mall said he disliked opening the store on Sunday.

"We do the same amount of business in seven days that we did in six," he said.

Coughlin went on to say that during the first five weeks the store was open, it did well. "But," he added, "people got bored with Sunday shopping. The law should not have been repealed."

The Blue Law was established 25 years ago. It restricted the sale of 42 types of merchandise on consecutive weekend days.

Items prohibited included kitchenware and utensils, clothing, footwear, toys, hardware, rugs, lawn furniture and bed coverings.

Coughlin added that he would not be open on Sunday but his lease says he must.

Mall Manager Carol Joyce said that mall management can not force businesses to be open on Sunday.

"We are strongly suggesting that they stay open and we have had very good cooperation," Ms. Joyce said.

Most of the stores are opened from 1-6 p.m.

"Some leases state that if two major stores are opened then they must open, etc. Also, most of the stores home office require them to be open," Kramer said.

"I'm kind of old fashioned and liked not working on Sunday, but the public wants to shop on Sunday and they are my boss."

Manager Barbara Dunham of Music Land agreed with Coughlin saying that it has not helped sales.

"We should leave it the way it was," she said. "Sunday is a day when no one should have to worry about their jobs."

Ms. Dunham added that Music Land did not open on Sundays until this January.

Letter summarizes cuts in Ector County jobs

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A letter to Ector County department heads from Judge Jan Fisher late Friday afternoon summarized tentative actions taken by Commissioners Court that include cutting 31 fulltime and four part time jobs in 15 departments.

Noting that "none of the decisions are final," Ms. Fisher said commissioners had also reduced vehicles and heavy equipment by 21, approved a tax rate increase of not more than 1.51 cents, drawn on fund balances currently available, adjusted priorities for expenditure of federal revenue sharing funds, continued a freeze on incentive and longevity pay for law enforcement personnel, and implemented a mandatory five-day-a-year furlough policy without pay for all county employees.

Just before the memorandum was distributed to department heads Friday afternoon, Ms. Fisher said she was "sick" about the proposed layoff of county employees.

Noting the decision on personnel cuts was not final, she said, there's still some time and "I hope I can persuade them to change their minds."

The judge said she fully expected commissioners to bar filling vacancies, but she had no idea they would cut personnel as they did.

According to County Auditor Bill Hicks, preliminary figures indicate the proposed job cuts would save the county about $534,000 a year in salaries.

Noting that commissioners have managed to cut the anticipated deficit by about $3.8 million and that adjustment of the tax rate and withdrawing $250,000 from the county's general fund reserve will make up another million, he said the county will squeeze by this year, but he's not optimistic about next year.

GARY OTT

You've 'come a long way,' but have you arrived?

One of the more popular sayings from a few years ago was, "You've come a long way, baby."

It was part of a cigarette advertising campaign, of course, but in essence it was telling women they had advanced beyond the point of being subservient to their male counterparts.

They were now free to do the same things as men, it seemed to suggest. They had become equals, in other words.

And, to a degree, it was a valid claim.

They can also vote, wear a coat and tie to work and even be the aggressor in a one-on-one relationship.

Still, it seems to me that a double standard of sorts remains in our society and men continue to get the best end of the deal.

I'm not complaining, mind you, just pointing out some basic observations.

For example, let's look at the area of personal appearance. Who can argue that men have the advantage here?

Is that fair?

Indeed not.

But, there's more. Look at individual behavior.

If a man stays out half the night, oversleeps and has to dress in five minutes (and looks it), everyone at the office just laughs and says, "Old Roger sure has become more fun since Diane dumped him."

If the woman pulls the same stunt, the office gossipers come out in full force. In horror, they whisper to one another, "Good grief, have you seen Diane? She looks awful. She obviously couldn't handle the break-up with Roger."

The list goes on. Consider cursing.

I think all of us agree that we would be better human beings if we could learn to control our tongues. Excessive cursing is not appealing.

Still, there are those occasions — rare though they should be — when "oh, darn it" just won't get it done. Even then, however, it takes some getting used to when a woman suddenly blurts out one of the forbidden words.

Somehow, when a man says the same word it doesn't seem quite as shocking.

Why?

Don't ask me. I guess it has something to do with the double standard.

"Of course, it does," replied a female acquaintance when I posed the question to her the other day. "We think we've come a long way, but that's nonsense. We're still treated like second-class citizens. It's a man's world and you know it. Men make the rules and women are expected to follow them."

Then she glared at me.

I smiled back at her.

"Well," she demanded, "what are you going to do about it?"

"Blame it on the Y chromosomes, I guess."

Local man, woman shot

From Staff Reports

A Midland man and a Midland woman were shot late Saturday morning following an argument, according to Midland police Det. Sgt. W.A. Glasscock.

Fred Lewis, 33, 204 South Jefferson, and Melinda Lydia, 28, of Cedar Street, allegedly shot each other around 11:50 a.m. Saturday, Glasscock said.

The pair had been arguing during a barbecue at a vacant lot in the 900 block of East Missouri Avenue, Glasscock said.

"They just both got into a fight and they shot each other," he said.

Glasscock said he did not know what the argument was about. The couple got divorced about two years ago, he said.

Lewis, 34, was shot in in the back of both legs and the right elbow, Glasscock said.

Ms. Lydia, 28, was shot once in the throat and underwent surgery Saturday afternoon. She was listed in critical condition late Saturday, according to the nursing supervisor.

Lewis was admitted to the hospital Saturday afternoon and late Saturday his condition was listed as serious, according to the nursing supervisor.

About 15 people were gathered at the lot, Glasscock said.

Three other people were arrested later Saturday in the vicinity of the shooting. Police said a man and two women were arrested for public intoxication and disorderly conduct.

MIMS

In 1977, Gov. Dolph Briscoe appointed Mims to the judgeship of the newly-created 318th Texas State District Court, which specializes in family matters. He retired the following year.

"Joe Mims was a scholar," recalled retired Judge Perry D. Pickett. Pickett was judge of the 142nd Texas District Court from 1954 until his retirement at the outset of 1981. "Joe Mims was one of the best scholars in researching the law. He was very meticulous in preparing his cases when he was district attorney under me. He was very scholarly, very meticulous, very fair."

Judge Pat Baskin, who succeeded Pickett as judge of the 142nd Texas District Court, said Mims was "very deliberative and patient in his approach to things. I admired him as judge."

"He had a marvelous judicial temperament," Baskin said. "He was slow to be ruffled." As district attorney, Mims "was an eminently fair man."

"He has devoted his life to community service," said Judge Barbara Culver, who replaced Mims as judge of the 318th Texas District Court. "He's has made a magnificent career in succeeding in all different capacities."

"He was a student of the law," Judge Vann Culp said of Mims. Culp presides over the 238th Texas District Court. "He was kind and patient and had all of the attributes of a good judge."

MIMS REVIEWED his roles in public service. "One thing led to another," he said. "When one door closes, another one will open if you don't give up."

"As county attorney, you were hounding hot-check artists, trying to help merchants," Mims said. "And there were a lot of hot checks. When times are bad, they write hot checks. When times are good, they write hot checks."

As district attorney, Mims recalled sending to the penitentiary all sorts of criminals, including young men with "good minds and strong bodies."

"People say, 'I wouldn't have your job for anything in the world.'" He dealt with "the seamy side of life, — didn't seem to have a finished side to it."

And Mims vividly recalled a loving mother who pleaded for mercy for her errant son, who eventually wound up in the penitentiary. "'My son's not a criminal,'" she lamented. Reflected Mims: "Within the sea of humanity, motherhood doesn't seem to have any boundaries." Motherhood is a "beautiful thing," he said.

As judge, Mims noted the emotions — the sadness and trauma — of divorces, property settlements, and child-custody disputes. "It's sad."

"You need somebody who can hold himself aloof — to see right through what everybody is saying. The judge has to be the judge of the credibility of the witnesses" in trials before the court. "I've heard everything you can think of on the bench."

"I was trying to be the arbitrator to call them (situations) like they are and not like what somebody thinks they are."

LAWS

The manager of Butler Shoes, David Wellborn, said he feels that Texans just need more time to adjust to the change.

However, he added, "I hate it, because I have to work every other Sunday and it has not helped the store."

Wellborn said the store was open for two reasons.

"One is because the company says so, and two because our lease says we must."

But Troy Gifford, Midland's financial director, said there is no way to determine whether the repeal has had a good or bad effect on Midland.

He attributes this to the downfall of the oil industry and changes in various laws.

"Sales taxes are collected on a vast range of goods and services. Changes in laws have been made. One example is moving the date of reporting sales from the end of the month to the 20th. People are still getting use to this."

Ms. Joyce said the mall sees "a lot of traffic on Sunday," and that's when people want to shop.

Others agree.

Manager Ralph Edwards of Footlocker said on Sunday he has the best volume of business per hour.

Edwards said one reason people go to the mall Sunday is "there is nothing else to do so they come here."

He added the store's lease requires them to be open.

JC Penney Department Store Manager Alton Stockton said although he can not measure the effect of the repeal because of the economy, he likes the store to open on Sunday.

"It's good for Midland. We see a lot of people that go to church, go out to eat and then go to the mall. It's a convenience for the customers and the people who do not have time to shop on the weekdays," he said.

Of the store managers interviewed, many said their employees do not like working on Sunday.

However, Stockton said, the employees at JC Penney are satisfied.

"Because of the mall hours the employees can still go to church with their families."

Walgreens which was open before the law was repeal has not seen a significant difference in business, said spokesperson Maryellen Kari, adding it remains strong for Sunday.

Jerry Jones, manager of Dillard's Department Store, said the store gets good crowds on Sunday, but he feels people have enough shopping days without Sunday.

"Dillard's stays open because it is require to do what the market dictates, and the trend says we are to stay open.

"The repeal of the Blue Law was inevitable," he said. "Texas is a fast growing area and people are readjusted to shopping on Sundays."

Tools, trailer among items stolen

From Staff Reports

The Midland Police Department Saturday reported a burglary and a theft.

Floyd Hall, owner of Hall's Garage, told police miscellaneous tools valued at $600 were stolen from the business at 210 S. Fort Worth. Reports said the burglary apparently occurred sometime between 1:15 p.m. and 3 p.m. Friday.

The theft of a trailer and metal items valued at almost $2,000 was reported early Saturday in the 1400 block of Cottonflat Rd.

Frederick Haltom, 3807 Faircircle Ct., told police a 16-foot tandem utility trailer valued at $950 and scrap iron, tin, lead sheets and iron pipe valued at $1,000 were stolen. The theft occurred between 6:30 p.m. Friday and 9:40 a.m. Saturday, reports said.

JOBS

"I received a message from the higher authority here a while ago," he said, "I haven't had time to decipher just what they mean. They haven't told me anything as far as I can understand," stated the sheriff.

"I don't know if they're saying six deputies, six what, that we're going to have to cut off the street," Brookshire said.

Losing six deputies, Brookshire said, "is going to hurt real bad in trying to prevent burglaries, thefts, working child abuse, serving warrants and subpoenas civil papers, the many things we're mandated to do by law. The only thing we're not mandated to do is protect the citizens of Ector County, which I think are entitled to be protected," he said

He termed the mandatory annual five-day furlough "another blow to law enforcement."

Brookshire was critical of the manner in which commissioners made personnel cuts.

Saying he was not questioning their integrity, he said, "I have always said that I thought to make an intelligent judgment on things you need to know something about the operation."

The sheriff said he has repeatedly invited everyone, citizens and commissioners, to come see what goes on.

"I think that's the proper way to do it," he said.

The commissioners have never spent any time in the sheriff's office or jail, Brookshire said.

"How do you know where to make the cuts unless you've spent some time with the people?"

Brookshire was still smarting Friday over an exchange he had Tuesday with Precinct 2 Commissioner Bryan Henderson, during which Henderson suggested if three new jailers were hired they might end up in a corner playing cards or dominoes.

The sheriff contends that remark was uncalled for.

Tax Assessor-Collector Lea Taylor, who will lose three fulltime employees, District Clerk Jackie Barnes and County Clerk Lucille Wolz, who will both lose two employees, were somewhat stoic about commissioners' action.

Asked if personnel cuts would cripple her operation, Ms. Taylor said, "No, we'll cope with it. You hate to think about it with the new tax season approaching, but we'll cope with it."

She noted that during the tax rollback she had two positions taken away, her $20,000 part time budget was taken, her entire equipment budget was taken and also $1,000 of her travel allowance.

Observing that her office had to, in effect, handle two tax years at one time, she said, "We coped with that and we'll cope with this."

Mrs. Wolz, asked what impact two less employees would have on the County Clerk's office, said, "I've not been notified of anything. I have no idea."

She said, however, losing two people would force her to "cut down on services that are mandated by law, especially in the court area because that is where I'll take it from because that affects the public less."

As to mandated five-day furloughs, Ms. Wolz said, "Again, I have not been notified of anything, all I've heard are rumors. We haven't had the courtesy of being notified."

District Clerk Barnes, asked about the loss of two people, said, "I have no knowledge of that. I have not heard anything official from anybody."

Asked what having to cut two people and give all of her staff 5-day unpaid days off a year would mean, Ms. Barnes said, "We'll have to cut the hours we're open."

Asked if she's been able to keep up her the office's work load with the people she's had, the district clerk said, "We're doing a real good job, we certainly are. We're not ever without work, but we're not like we were before when work was just stacked."

The tentative cuts made by commissioners have been only from departments with 10 or more employees, with the exception of the Veterans' Service Office.

That office is to be eliminated completely and its director, Dorothy Johnson, who has been with the county some 20 years, probably will be terminated as of the end of September.

In a brief interview late Friday afternoon, Hicks said he is not optimistic about what may happen next year if the price of oil doesn't go back up.

He speculated that if the economy remains depressed commissioners might be forced to consider cutting the sheriff's office and other departments in half and then start rebuilding again when the economy improves.

White, Clements talk to teachers

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White tried to re-forge his alliance with the Texas State Teachers Association Saturday while his GOP opponent acknowledged he could not get the group's endorsement.

White and ex-Gov. Bill Clements each made 40-minute presentations to 700 TSTA leaders from across the state.

TSTA, the state's largest teacher group, endorsed White in his 1982 win over Clements. But the group is in court fighting the teacher literacy test that White pushed as part of the 1984 education reform bill.

He did not mention the test in his speech, but responded to a question about whether teachers would face testing in subject areas.

"There will be no more testing of our teachers," he said, drawing a partial standing ovation.

"Four years ago in this very room you and I formed a partnership," White told the teachers. "Partners may disagree on specifics, but unite on purposes. We've come a long way together and we need to keep going."

Both candidates were interrupted for applause about 20 times, but White drew a more enthusiatic overall response. Clements occasionally drew low-volume boos. White also drew some negative reaction.

TSTA will not decide on an endorsement until later this year.

White promised the teachers that education money would not be cut during the upcoming special legislative session.

"That money belongs to you. We raised it for you. Let's keep it for you," he said.

Clements spent part of his time defending his record and denying statements attributed to him. One questioner asked if he still believed teachers were "a bunch of whimpering malcontents."

"I deny ever having said that. I never said that," Clements said.

Removal of bird sculpture stirs big flap in Bastrop

BASTROP (AP) — The Bastrop City Council plans a Tuesday meeting to decide the future of an oversized bird sculpture ordered removed from a city park by Mayor David Lock.

Helen Freeman, the artist who produced the steel work, is upset that her gift to the city recently turned up in a scrap heap.

"I didn't think it was nice of him to move it without asking me," Ms. Freeman said of the mayor of this Central Texas city.

The 10-foot tall winged figure was created by Ms. Freeman at St. Thomas University in Houston about 10 years ago. It was displayed there until the artist brought it to her property in Red Rock, near here.

In 1982, she offered it to Bastrop as a gift. It was accepted by the city council and placed in a park along the Colorado River.

Lock said he ordered it removed last winter after fielding complaints from a town matriarch who did not like it. The mayor said he instructed the city manager to have the statue taken away.

A friend of Ms. Freeman happened upon the statue in a scrap heap at a Bastrop machine shop. It's now back in Ms. Freeman's possession, stored on a friend's property.

She says she is not sure she will give it back, even if the city wants it.

"They would have to promise to take care of it," she said, adding that she is upset with the mayor.

"He said there were some people that didn't like it. There are always some people that don't like a piece of art. It's your own taste," Ms. Freeman said.

The mayor says he probably erred.

"With a lot of hindsight, this issue should have been taken before the council before the sculpture was taken from the public park. I guess I didn't have the authority to take it down," Lock said.

It's a tough job

Why is it so many people want a job, yet once they get one, spend all their time trying to avoid doing it?

Case in point: The members of Congress trying to sidestep their responsibility of making spending decisions and still face the voters back home.

Texas' own Sen. Phil Gramm helped devise a way to balance the federal budget over a five-year period and, in the process, gave Congressional members an "out" with the voters. They could always blame the cuts in popular programs on the system and disavow complicity.

The "system" became known as the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Balanced Budget Act of 1985. In earlier editorials we commented favorably on the legislation because it seemed to offer a way of getting Congress to do what it, as an entity, had been unwilling to do — reduce federal spending enough to bring under control the rapidly-increasing federal deficit.

It didn't work. What had been expected and predicted came about as the U.S. Supreme Court ruled it would be unconstitutional to allow the Comptroller General to determine federal budget cuts in the event the president and Congress could not agree. In that regard, wrote Chief Justice Warren Burger, the Comptroller General is subservient to Congress and cannot be entrusted with Executive Branch powers.

That's the only portion of the legislation ruled unconstitutional, though. The justices even left intact requirement that the deficit be cleared in five years. Earlier this week, Congress was busy at work reaffirming spending cuts already authorized under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, and Gramm and the other two authors of the bill say they'll introduce an amendment that will make the bill pass constitutional muster. That definitely could prove helpful although not actually necessary.

Looking at the ruling from both sides, it was obviously detrimental to the efforts of those who had sought for so long a way to bring the mushrooming federal deficit under control. As deficit piles onto deficit, there appears justification for taking extreme measures to get control of federal spending.

On the other hand, the ruling left the responsibility for making the nation's spending decisions where it always should belong — with the duly elected members of Congress.

In a larger sense, the high court's ruling literally tossed the budget-balancing ball back in the public's lap with the notation that its decisions at the polls on election day will directly determine whether congressional representatives are elected who fully recognize the desires of the people.

Serving in public office is rarely easy for any congressional representative who takes seriously his responsibility. There are occasions when constituency outrage will result in an honest and good representative or senator being voted out of office. That's part of the cost for doing the job correctly and one of the best arguments in favor of limiting the number of terms a congressional representative can serve. Without a doubt it's that kind of accountability to the voters the framers of the Constitution had in mind.

Of course, the United States could solve its financial woes without Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. The bill merely forces Congress to do something it hasn't shown much courage to do: Balancing the federal budget. Because of the economic importance of achieving a balanced budget, it no doubt will be amended to acceptability. But Gramm-Rudman-Hollings wasn't the only way to gain control of federal deficit spending.

Another way is to elect congressional representatives who want to do the job right and have the courage of their convictions.

Another View:
New discipline tool

Americans will agree with the Greek philosopher who said that only the educated are free. That credo lies behind a U.S. Supreme Court decision a few days ago giving school administrators broad disciplinary powers to protect students from the disruptive behavior of classmates. Critics of the decision claim that it sets up a double standard for freedom-of-speech rights of students compared to adults. After all, it was not as if the central figure in the case had shouted "fire" in a crowded theater. The youth, a former high school senior in suburban Tacoma, Wash., had given an assembly speech that was laced with crude sexual allusions and caused an uproar among students.

But in the opinion by the 7-2 majority, Chief Justice Warren E. Burger wrote, correctly, we believe, the First Amendment's guarantee of free speech did not give "children in a public school" the same latitude as adults and did not protect the young speaker.

"The schools, as instruments of the state, may determine that the essential lessons of civil, mature conduct cannot be conveyed in a school that tolerates lewd, indecent or offensive speech and conduct such as that indulged in by this confused boy," the chief justice wrote.

Some observers feel that the decision was a sharp departure from the high court's 1969 ruling that students do not "shed their constitutional rights to freedom of speech or expression at the schoolhouse gate." That opinion concluded that students had a First Amendment right to wear black armbands as part of a non-disruptive protest to U.S. participation in the Vietnam War.

It was entirely proper that the new decision reaffirmed the 1969 ruling. Chief Justice Burger pointed out that the Washington state youth's case differed because his speech was disruptive, lacked any political viewpoint, had sexual content, was "acutely insulting" to teen-age girls and could be "seriously damaging" to 14-year-olds in the audience.

The new ruling upheld principles promulgated by the Reagan administration, which had urged the court to rule against the young man. Secretary of Education William J. Bennett declared that the ruling "upheld the legitimate, indeed essential, responsibility of schools to maintain an environment and ethos conducive to learning. This decision reminds us that schools must possess the moral authority to prepare our young people for citizenship."

Most school officials will say that one of the biggest obstacles to educating their young charges is maintaining discipline in the classroom. The high court's decision gives them an important tool to achieve that end.

Prosecuting press for leaks too costly

WASHINGTON — In his brazen efforts to intimidate the press over publication of government leaks, CIA Director William Casey has been blowing smoke and hoping the nation's editors cough. His threats of prosecution are as empty as a tin drum, and it's time someone called Casey's bluff. Here goes:

Jack Anderson

Four years ago, a blue-ribbon panel of government legal and security experts spent two months studying the precise problem of leaks to the media. They concluded, reluctantly, that for practical as well as legal reasons the press could not be successfully prosecuted for disclosing classified information passed to it by federal employees.

The deputy general counsel of the CIA was a member of the multi-agency task force, which filed its report on March 31, 1982. Casey has headed the CIA since January 1981. And one of the statutes specifically considered by the panel was the 1950 law regarding disclosure of communications intelligence, which Casey has been brandishing like a billy club in his latest attacks on the Washington Post, New York Times and others.

In short, the CIA director must be aware that the government's best legal and security brains had decided in 1982 that prosecution of the press was virtually impossible. The reasons are every bit as valid today as they were four years ago. "The problems with prosecution are still there," one of the task-force members told Angus McKenzie of the Center for Investigative Reporting, who called the panel's report to our attention.

Casey's attempt at bullying the media is little more than bombast. The press won't be prosecuted and he knows it.

Why? The 1982 panel, known officially as the Interdepartmental Group on Unauthorized Disclosures of Classified Information, summarized the "numerous practical barriers to criminal prosecution" this way:

"First, criminal prosecution serves to confirm the accuracy and sensitivity of the information that has been disclosed. For this reason, many agencies do not want cases prosecuted, in order to maintain doubt as to the accuracy of the disclosed information.

"Second, criminal prosecution generally requires the government to prove that the disclosures in question were damaging to national security, which may require further public disclosures of classified information. Such proof is often required under the espionage statutes and, as a practical matter, is extremely helpful in giving any prosecution jury appeal.

"Third, criminal trials are normally conducted before a jury and open to the public. Defendants can threaten to require disclosures of sensitive information in the course of trial — the so-called 'graymail' problem.

"In summary, the costs of criminal prosecution in terms of harm to national security are likely in many cases to outweigh the benefits of deterrence and respect for the law."

The task force also noted "a number of legal and policy restrictions" that would hamper the FBI from effectively investigating the leaks by going after the reporters involved. "Rarely is there sufficient probable cause to justify use of Fourth Amendment techniques, such as searches or electronic surveillance," the group's report pointed out.

It should be noted that the 1982 task force was hardly a collection of Soviet moles or wild-eyed civil libertarians.

The group was convened by then-Attorney General William French Smith at the request of William Clark, who was President Reagan's national security adviser. The chairman was Richard K. Willard, a deputy assistant attorney general, and the other members represented the departments of State, Treasury, Defense and Energy and the CIA.

Nor were the group members under any illusions about their assignment. "We must seek more effective means to prevent, deter and punish unauthorized disclosures," the report stated firmly.

But after studying the subject for two months, the committee decided that, as far as the press was concerned, prosecution for disclosing leaks would require new legislation by Congress. Lacking this, they hoped for "a fundamental change in attitudes" — with a little nudge from Big Brother. "We must seek to develop a sense of discipline and self-restraint by those who work with or obtain classified information," the report stated.

The task force briefly bewailed the fact that "some officials may believe there is nothing wrong with leaking classified information," and it really wrung its hand over the press, saying: "Similarly, some journalists appear to believe they have a duty to divulge virtually any newsworthy secret information. ... To their way of thinking, leaks are part of a game ... (and) some journalists are unwilling to assume responsibility for damage to the national security in situations where they win this 'game.'"

Conservatives don't find Massachusetts home

BOSTON — Animosity is the oxygen of politics, and many conservatives savor their animosity toward Massachusetts. Today this state's economy is a gaudy spectacle and as lacerating to conservatives as, say, pornography.

George F. Will

Massachusetts' prosperity is, at least in the eyes of, say, Texas (unemployment over 11 percent), obscene. Massachusetts' unemployment is 3.7 percent. That is too low: Labor shortages are inhibiting growth. New workers are on the way, drawn by wages up 29 percent in three years. There are growing pains: The median price of a house in the Boston area, up 70 percent in two years, is $149,000, about $70,000 above the national average. But personal income in Massachusetts is fourth in the nation, behind only Alaska, Connecticut and New Jersey.

Many conservatives loathe "The People's Republic of Taxachusetts," partly because Harvard is here, partly because the state voted for George McGovern, partly because until recently it was a paradigm of the Frost Belt in decline — a high-tax welfare state. Now, in a fresh affront to conservative sensibilities, Massachusetts' boom coincides with the tenure of a highly popular Democratic governor whose defeat in 1978 was an early tremor of the conservative volcano nationally. His return to political prosperity in 1982 was especially insufferable because he had spent part of his exile at ... Harvard.

When asked the reason for Massachusetts' boom, Gov. Michael Dukakis unhesitatingly answers: "A great governor." Then he laughs. Actually, he ranks himself third on the list of Massachusetts' blessings.

First is the fact that Massachusetts is planted thick with colleges and universities — 120 of them, a garden of talents. Second is the state's quality of life — this city, Cape Cod, the Berkshires. People come here to school, acquire skills, and stay. Half the 2,000 Ph.D.s produced here each year stay. Massachusetts Institute of Technology graduates have started more than 1,000 businesses.

The third cause of the boom, says Dukakis, is, well, aw shucks, the governor's aggressive industrial policy, involving state spending on infrastructure (roads, schools, etc.), and loans and other subsidies to encourage new industries to rise on the rubble of the old shoe and textile industries. Hundreds of businesses are in partnership with the state government. But conservatives should mind their manners about reviling this: If this is socialism, socialism works.

Actually (brace yourselves, conservatives), a fourth cause of Massachusetts' prosperity is another government: Ronald Reagan's. According to one estimate, 16 percent of the state's growth in the Reagan years has resulted from defense spending. Massachusetts ranks 11th among the states in population but fourth in defense contracts. Massachusetts' liberalism is not too fastidious to welcome 7.7 billion Pentagon dollars a year.

A fifth cause of the state's prosperity is the conservatives' club for beating Dukakis. It is Proposition 2½.

An indispensable ingredient in political argument is the post hoc, ergo propter hoc fallacy. (The rooster crows, then the sun rises, so the crowing caused the sunrise.) Conservatives say Dukakis is the crowing rooster. Dukakis might say the same of Proposition 2½, if he mentioned it.

In 1979, Massachusetts had one of the nation's highest tax burdens. In 1980, two years after California's Proposition 13, Massachusetts voters passed Proposition 2½, limiting property taxes. Today Massachusetts is economically robust. Ergo....

Clearly Proposition 2½ helped improve Massachusetts' economic climate a lot. Richard Brookheiser, the cutting edge of National Review's conservatism, says that because Dukakis opposed 2½, and Reagan, and the defense buildup, Dukakis can not claim credit for his state's boom: "You might as well give Stanley Baldwin credit for D-Day."

But you might as well admit that it is hard to establish causal connections in complex societies. And in politics, if you are sitting there when good things happen, you get credit. Besides, when it comes to tax-cutting, Dukakis is born again.

RUSSELL BAKER

NEW YORK — My daughter, who loves me, wanted me to dress like an actor named Don Johnson who plays a policeman in the television show "Miami Vice," which I saw once. There was a great deal of gunplay. It reminded me of a Randolph Scott movie I saw in 1938 in which maybe 30 armed horsemen trapped Scott in a narrow canyon and emptied dozens of pistols and rifles in his direction without effect until their leader said, "No use wasting any more lead on him, boys," and everybody galloped off leaving Scott unshot.

Russell Baker

Though still a credulous child, I thought that was silly. When an entire arsenal-load of ammunition is being fired at a man on horseback, even a 1938-style child knew it was a statistical certainty he'd get at least a flesh wound in his horse. Same thing when I saw the "Miami Vice" policemen vainly pumping thousands of bullets toward G. Gordon Liddy, who was making a getaway aboard a neat-looking powerboat.

Silly, I thought. G. Gordon Liddy, in case you were born yesterday, was one of the first people to get caught in the Watergate affair. Much as I admire him, getting away unscathed is not one of his talents.

So when my daughter, out of love, brought me this Don Johnson police suit, I had to exercise terrific self-control so as not to say, "These are silly clothes fit only for a show so silly that the cops can't even catch poor old Gordon Liddy." Dads who recoil from clothes offered in love don't deserve to have their long-gone son come home at last at the end of the show, and turn out to be Montgomery Clift.

"Gosh, I've always wanted a Don Johnson Miami Vice police suit," was what I said, slipping into the white jacket.

Did I mention the outside temperature at this point? It was 98 degrees and the humidity was 165 percent, just like Miami. As we were inside, it was hotter and stickier than outside because my son, the one who is not long lost but lives at home to look after his parents — as Ralph Bellamy doubtless would have done if he'd been our child — believes air-conditioning causes terminal lumbago, croup, quinsy and onsets of blindness such as finished off Bette Davis in "Dark Victory."

I put on the white jacket. Wrongly. "Wearing an oxford-weave shirt with a button-down collar and a British regimental necktie may get you past the security guards at Brooks Brothers," my daughter said, "but wearing them under a white Don Johnson Miami Vice police-suit jacket is simply not done."

What is done is incredibly expensive: First, you remove necktie and shirt with collar. (I did so, noticing as usual that the collar was sweat-drenched, due to the Miami-type environment.) Then you put on sort of an undershirt with no collar, so that the blotting duties formerly performed by the button-down collar can be assumed by the white collar of the Don Johnson police suit.

After I got it right, my daughter remained unhappy. "Somehow you still don't look like Don Johnson," she said.

Big deal. Don Johnson doesn't look like Randolph Scott, either. Don Johnson probably doesn't even know who Randolph Scott is. Did I criticize Don because his jaw was inferior to Randolph Scott's or because he was born too late to have seen the great bulletproof actors in their prime? Don Johnson couldn't help being a kid, I couldn't help looking stooped and perilously close to the Bette Davis "Dark Victory" syndrome despite wearing a Don Johnson suit.

"That's not the problem," said my loving daughter. The problem was that dark, spreading stain ruining the collar of that once magnificently white jacket. "You must stop perspiring at once," she suggested.

I told her even actors perspired in tropical heat and humidity such as one encounters in the drug-infested Miami swamps and my parlor, and cited the fantastic perspiring done by Edward G. Robinson in "Key Largo."

Not Don Johnson, she insisted. Even when its wearer was squeezing off 30 rounds per second in fetid, mosquito-plagued swamps, Don Johnson's white jacket collar, though nestled charmingly against bare sweat glands, never showed the faintest trace of dampness.

The poor child didn't know that the Miami Police Department, being acutely image-conscious, provides each of its cops with a valet always at the ready with a van full of fresh white jackets during the most harrowing gun battles. I estimated that Don Johnson used up 60 or 70 on an average day, but said I could get by with 35 or 40 by avoiding strenuous activity.

My daughter wasn't listening. "Maybe if you let your whiskers grow," she said. "Don Johnson wouldn't dream of wearing his white jacket with a shaved face."

Sweet child. How could I tell her that Don is so busy day and night changing into dry white jackets that he doesn't have strength left to lift his razor?

Modisett

Young people today aren't the same inquisitive, docile, impish kids they were two or even three decades ago. Some of them, in fact, aren't kids at all.

For an example, look to the 14-year-old Houston police had in custody earlier this week. This young person — really no more than a boy — confessed strangling a 60-year-old Houston woman, raping her and then driving away in her car, after eating some ice cream and candy.

When police captured the boy, they said he showed no remorse for the killing and told them, "You can't do anything to me because I'm just 14."

There's no question that this young murderer and rapist is an adult and should be viewed as such in the courts. The seriousness of the crime and the fact that if released back into society this youngster most likely would kill again makes it crucial that he not be released.

But authorities in Houston say they won't even attempt to have him certified as an adult because state law allows that certification only for those youngsters 14 years and older.

The "worst" that can happen is that the Houston murderer and rapist can be committed to the Texas Youth Council. But officials also point out that he can only be held until his 21st birthday and note that it's rare for TYC to keep young criminals that long. In fact, they say he'll probably be out in a couple of years.

In the last several years society has brought pressure on legislators to enact changes in the law that have made a number of types of criminals more readily prosecutable. Yet for a person under 15 years of age, serious crime is a free ride.

That fact becomes particularly distressing when weighed against the manner in which the lifestyle today contributes heavily to violent, lawless acts. Crime and drugs are frequent topics on television and movies. The drug culture reaches into virtually every corner of society and particular types of drugs — such as cocaine — actually are condoned. Sexual mores have fallen dramatically over the past couple of decades. It all adds up to a society in which a young person will "age" rapidly.

Local authorities tell me they really don't foresee any changes coming in the way in which the courts deal with juveniles. They say society probably wouldn't accept the certification of people younger than 15 as adults for regular trial and imprisonment. Maybe not.

But ask the Houston police officers who arrested that 14-year-old only to hear him brag "You can't do anything to me because I'm just 14." They'll tell you the Texas Legislature needs to look at the juvenile law in this state.

When a person is old enough to kill another and recognize that he can't be punished, society has a problem.

Mentally handicapped work for self esteem

By JACK EREIRA

Jack Ereira of Midland is a member of the board of directors of Midland Association for Retarded Citizens and chairman of the MARC Vocational Committee.

Being out of work isn't fun for anybody, but as the economy declines and more people compete for available jobs, pressure is put on other sections of the community, one being people with mental handicaps.

The mentally handicapped have always competed for the simplest domestic chores such as mowing lawns and cleaning houses. Now, the growing number of people who are unemployed has increased competition. To add to the problem, the economic situation has meant people are doing more of their own yardwork to ease difficult financial times.

Nearly every person with a substantial mental handicap is eligible for governmental assistance which provides a sufficient monthly income for the individual to exist. It is generally not essential that they work in order to survive, but to people with mental retardation, a job means more than merely having a way to earn a living. Having a job means self-esteem, "fitting in," being productive and, most importantly, being less "different."

Interestingly, because of some characteristics unique to the condition, very often people who have retardation make better, safer, and more productive workers. If properly oriented and trained to do a specific job, they will do what they have been trained to do no matter that the task may be mundane, dull, repetitious or boring. They will not try to find a way to "build a better mousetrap." Quite the contrary: they will continue to do the job the way an employer wants it done and will receive satisfaction from doing it right because they don't know any other way. That's a valuable asset!

In the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens' vocational program, workers are carefully supervised and assisted, and they are taught the right way to do a job. When employment opportunities are available, MARC sends a trainer on the job with the worker to assure that the employer gets a full measure of work while extended training is being provided. In this way, the risk to the employer is reduced to an absolute minimum.

Midland Independent School District has a program to assist students in special education to learn vocational skills. Early in the student's high school career, he or she can opt to take a vocational course of study which provides "on the job" experience in a variety of local businesses. After graduation, however, the student frequently finds difficulty in making a smooth transition from school to work.

Attitudes toward employing people with retardation are sometimes influenced by myths and misinformation leading employers to believe that retarded workers are incapable, lazy or unable to give a full day of work. That simply isn't true. In Midland, employers such as Texas Instruments, Safeway, Albertsons, Skaggs Alpha Beta, and Wienerschnitzel, to name just a few, are providing employment to individuals with handicaps. Stil, 75% of the adults in Midland with developmental disabilities are jobless. More than 8% of our Gross National Product is spent on disability programs, and most of this money supports dependence, much of it unnecessary dependence. What is needed, clear and simple, is preparation for employment and support in obtaining and maintaining jobs.

With help from the MARC vocational service, people with developmental disabilities are acquiring the skills enabling them to do yardwork, clean houses, sack groceries, and do janitorial work. At Midland Texaco, a highly competent young woman with cerebral palsy and mild retardation, holds a critical filing job; another works at Lones Great Destinations Travel Agency; still others keep Dellwood Lanes clean. And so on it goes. With adequate training, mildly, moderately, and many people with severe retardation can successfully compete for jobs in business and industry.

Vocational success for persons with retardation creates a degree of independence both financially and socially. And with financial success, the amount of dependence is decreased, thereby easing the burden on taxpayers. The skills people with retardation have obtained and the complexity of tasks undertaken, by even severely handicapped people, can come as a pleasant surprise to those of us who are not altogether familiar with the incredible will to be independent and useful that drives many mentally handicapped people.

Many people have asked how they can help MARC. Generally, we tell them that their donations are always welcome and their membership in MARC is actively encouraged (as is their participation as a volunteer worker). One of the most important ways in which people can help now is to provide employment for people with retardation so they can have the opportunity of being independent and successful members of the community.

If you need a break from yardwork or other tasks, then help yourself and a person with retardation by letting the MARC vocational training program do the work for you. If you are an employer, think seriously about employing one of the most reliable workers in the labor market. Work can be carried out at your home, place of employment, or at the vocational training center.

If you have something you think could be done by persons with retardation or if you would like more information, contact the MARC Vocational Coordinator, Luis Mata, at 682-9771 or me at 697-6418.

"Speaking Out" columnists are invited to submit articles on subjects of their choice. They should be limited to 850 words or less.

Just how far apart are Midland, Odessa?

How far is it to Odessa? If you answered 20 miles or even 20 minutes you are wrong!

For the past 16 years I also thought that there was 20 miles between the cities of Midland and Odessa. But that was ignorance on my part. I suppose if you answered my question with 20 miles you, too, are ignorant to the facts. If you ask the Midland and Odessa city officials, they might set your mind right. But that would depend on whom you talk to and which highway you take to Odessa. But after some probing at the fire marshal's in both cities you will find that there is only two miles and 50 or 100 feet between the two cities — regardless what the city limit signs say.

I discovered this fact when I set up a fireworks stand 1.5 miles past a city limits sign on Highway 80 and was closed down for not being out of the city limits. By state law, fireworks stands must be a mile out of the city limits. Therefore, there is only 50 to 100 feet of land on Highway 80 that is legal for a fireworks stand between here and Odessa.

But this one fact entails much more than me losing money spent in advertising for a location which, according to signs was lawful but according to city officials was unlawful. It involves you! If only the city officials know where the city limits are, how do you know you won't get fined for shooting off fireworks in what you thought was out of the city limits. Remember, only the officials know where those boundary lines are.

In order to annex the airport into Midland, it had to be attached to Midland. So, as a result our wonderful city government had the answer...they would annex a foot down the middle of the highway, or 50 feet the other side of the railroad tracks, or 52 feet down the middle of the highway or something. But whatever their solution was they know that Midland city limits includes everything to the airport. Ask around City Hall and see how many different answers you get.

Also, consider the inconvenience of traveling halfway to Odessa for fireworks every year.

Along with this inconvenience add a few questions. If the correct city limit does lie down the middle of Highway 80 who pays for its maintenance — the city or the state? And how do you annex state property?

I am angered at the fact that the city chooses to keep its citizens in the dark about a fact such as this. I also believe that they should at least be able to get their story together when inquiries are made about this fact. Where is that line attaching Midland to the airport?

Will snake story echo snail darter saga?

Will history repeat itself? When the TVA proposed work in the eastern United States, they were delayed with the construction when the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Department placed the "snail darter," a fish, on the endangered species list.

If you recall, that astute agency declared, "the proposed construction will take place in an area where these last remaining fish exist and if the construction is allowed, this species will be eliminated from the earth because man will destroy its last remaining habitat." The stand of this agency, in such a positive manner, resulted in many delays which resulted in cost increases while the snail darter battle took place. The end result was that it was found that the snail darter did exist in other places and in greater numbers than the TVA construction area and, therefore, could be removed from the endangered list in the respective area.

I believe I have seen the Concho water snake in areas other than the proposed Stacy Dam construction site. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife experts admit that this snake formerly existed in and around the Colorado and Concho rivers. The snake that I have seen for the past 10 years was up and down the Colorado River on the Spade Ranch, south of Colorado City, where Beals Creek empties into part of the Colorado. The snake in question has been seen in the Lake Colorado City and Lake Thomas areas. This same species of snake has been seen in the Ballinger area which is in the Stacy area. This same well-known creek, Beals Creek, meanders northwestward, and is present on or adjacent to the large Clayton and Miller Ranches near the town of Gail, in Borden County. Last year, while quail hunting south of the town of Gail, I did run over, with my car, a snake which appeared to be the same species that had been encountered on the Spade Ranch in the Colorado River and the Ballinger area.

Not being a herpetologist, I cannot say that these snakes are the Concho water snakes that are "endangered." However, there is a strong possibility that they could have migrated out of the Concho and Colorado Rivers by way of Beals Creek northwest on the Clayton and Miller ranches. I know that the Clayton and Miller families are very responsible individuals and would possibly allow a survey of their ranches to determine if the Concho Snake is present in that area, in and around Beals Creek and any offshoots thereof.

I would like to suggest that the Reporter-Telegram and other newspapers in the area obtain from the Fish and Wildlife Department detailed descriptions, with drawings and/or photographs, of the Concho Water Snake and publish this information in the paper. This would enable possible sightings of the "endangered species" to be reported by various and sundry individuals who go into the field, such as sportsmen, ranchers, cowboys, oilfield workers, etc. Then we could request that the Fish and Wildlife people confirm the presence which would disallow the "endangered" classification.

This issue is too vital to the population of the Permian Basin. We should do everything possible to assist in the construction of this dam in order to have an adequate water supply. The federal government has never been able to establish priorities. If possible, we should always do it on our own and not depend on Washington.

Congressional critics continue sniping at Contra aid

Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

SAN SIMEON — Like most of us I believed that the case was closed when the House of Representatives voted to support President Reagan's aid package for the freedom fighters in Nicaragua. Now, anti-administration congressional voices demand an investigation into the program.

The president refers to the anti-Sandinista forces, approximately 12,000 strong presently and expected to swell to 20,000, as "freedom fighters," while many call them "Contras."

But congressional critics of the administration still persist in trying to water down or even sabotage the total $100 million program — two-thirds of it for military aid — which is scheduled to begin Sept. 1.

Congressional critics of assistance to the freedom fighters are led by Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif. He has been a persistent critic of the president in almost every sector where President Reagan has scored high economic, social and international achievements.

This time, Sen. Cranston, joined on TV by Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., is trying to force an inquiry into the administration's plan of having the CIA run the military side of the freedom fighters' activities while the State Department conducts day-to-day policy.

Cranston claimed that this arrangement "could be a rerun of Vietnam." Nothing could be further from the truth.

To begin with, Nicaragua is in Central America, close to other embattled nations like El Salvador and Mexico and it has become a complete Soviet satellite in our front yard.

The Sandinista communist regime which usurped the revolution that overthrew the Somoza dictatorship has steadily gone the way of Czechoslovakia. It permitted some opposition and criticism within its borders until now, but replied within the last few weeks with iron fist treatment of all opposition.

This includes the Roman Catholic Church and the press as well as labor unions. The Sandinista regime's leader, Daniel Ortega, closed the opposition newspaper La Prensa and has suppressed outspoken churchmen in the countryside.

He also refused permission for a bishop attending meetings in the United States to return and has constantly menaced Cardinal Miguel Obando Bravo, the spiritual leader of Nicaragua's Catholics.

Ortega, however, has not hesitated to build up his military power by receiving a steady flow of Soviet arms and aircraft. His communist military establishment today has twice the firepower of the combined nations of all Central America.

Additionally, Ortega has several thousand Cuban "advisors" plus a gaggle of specialists from East Germany, Bulgaria, North Korea, Libya and a radical faction of the PLO.

So Sen. Cranston has to review many Soviet-inspired programs virtually at our doorstep and that is hardly comparable with Vietnam.

President Reagan, who is privy to a constant flow of data about the scene in Nicaragua, also realizes fully that if the U.S.S.R. establishes a presence in Nicaragua the next step would be to throttle our sea lanes in the Caribbean.

The Kremlin obviously would try to commit these anti-American maneuvers through clients like Nicaragua, Cuba or any of its satellites without wasting Soviet personnel.

The struggle for Nicaragua is soon to enter a new and difficult phase where both sides are preparing for a big showdown.

The $100 million aid package Congress voted will not have any swift battlefield result. But it does give the freedom fighters real hope that this program and future assistance will help them recruit troops and win ever-widening public support.

The Sandinista communists, backed by firepower supplied to them by the U.S.S.R, are looking to a quick victory over the freedom fighters. Any prolonged war will make them even more unpopular than they are today with the people on short rations and inferior agricultural equipment with which to cultivate fields and harvest crops.

The Sandinista regime, in short, is hurting badly on the economic front with little sign that the Soviets are about to do anything except use Nicaraguans as cannon fodder. The Soviets, after all, are having a tough enough time feeding their own citizens and are buying wheat from other countries. But nothing is designed for the growing hunger pains in Nicaragua.

Guns and beans just don't mix.

From Staff Reports

BALLINGER — The U.S. Corps of Engineers will hold at public hearing at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday in the Ballinger High School Auditorium on the environmental impact study and proposed construction of Stacy Dam by the Colorado River Municipal Water District.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has recommended that the water district be denied a permit to build the dam, which would impound water to be used by Midland and other West Texas cities.

The Fish and Wildlife Service recommendation is based on an opinion that the project would endanger the existence of the Concho water snake, a proposed threatened species, and that alternative water sources are available.

Fight injures three inmates

MIDWAY (AP) — The throat of a Texas Department of Correction inmate was slashed and two other inmates were injured during a fight at the Ferguson Unit, a prison spokesman said.

The fight occurred about 3:15 p.m. Friday in the recreation yard of the unit, TDC spokesman Charles Brown said. He said two inmates left their assigned area, climbed a fence and began assaulting 30-year-old Albert Aguirre with a toothbrush with a razor on the end of it.

Aguirre, serving 20 years for a aggravated robbery with a deadly weapon in Bee County, received a cut to the throat and mulitple abrasions. He was treated at the Huntsville Unit infirmary before being transported to the TDC hospital in Galveston by a Life Flight helicopter.

The inmate was listed in stable condition at the hospital Saturday, Brown said.

The assailants were identified as a 21-year-old serving 10 years for two counts of aggravated assault in Bexar County and a 22-year-old serving 52 years for a Madison County conviction of criminal mischief and a Moore County conviction of aggravated robbery.

The 21-year-old inmate received multiple abrasions and was treated at the unit's infirmary, Brown said.

MC fine-tunes computer registration

By H. A. TUCK

The coming week is one of those rare times in the summer when there's no late registration, no pre-registration, just time for a deep breath before fall pre-registration opens Aug. 4.

But the computer wizards really came up with a neat system this summer to handle returning students. It eliminates returning students having to fill out applications completely for each semester.

The staff simply inserts the ID code, which is each student's Social Security number, and a form prints out all the previous information. The student then makes any necessary changes, such as address, married name, etc., and the pre-registration is virtually complete.

Foreign students who don't have Social Security cards are assigned artificial Social Security numbers.

The system has worked well this summer and should be a big help when the big rush starts for fall pre-registration.

• • •

Speaking of computer wizards, Wiley Lynch has left MC. He came here four years ago to become director of computer services and put into operation all the administrative computer services. He's returning to his home in Memphis, Tenn., to become a programmer for Shelby State Community College. He's being replaced by Ron Hall, who has been Wiley's assistant for several years and has learned most of the wizard's secret potions and incantations.

Dr. Charles A. Stewart also departed last week for his new retirement abode near Taos, N.M., where he and wife, Dr. Nancy Stewart, will paint and sell their popular watercolors. Charlie saw many of his works snatched up by employees when he had an informal "garage sale" of some his work prior to his departure.

But I'd best not forget this week's most important happening...at least it's the most important according to the Public Relations Department secretary Mary Lopez. She's marrying John Ibarra on Saturday, a date she likely will remember because of her wedding rather than because it's the PR director's birthday. She's said that was a coincidence, since the original date was a week later but the church wasn't available.

If you're a newcomer to Texas, a course starting Tuesday is almost mandatory. It's a three-week evening class in Country/Western Dance that meets from 7 to 8:30 p.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays through Aug. 6.

Cost is just $15 and while that amount of money won't make you a Texan, it surely does help to know a bit about the Western two-step and the Cotton-Eyed Joe.

Just come out to the Continuing Education Office in the Administration Building between 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. Monday through Thursday, plunk down your money and, at the very least, you'll be on your way to becoming less a newcomer. You might even learn how to say "Howdy, y'all!"

Council to consider new park ordinance

From Staff Reports

The City Council will consider an ordinance Tuesday to officially prohibit disorderly conduct on Hogan Park, Midland's municipal golf course.

The ordinance is to prevent people from bringing alcoholic beverages on the course, interfering with golfers and driving golf carts off the pathway.

The item is one of 32 on Tuesday's City Council agenda. The meeting begins at 10 a.m. in City Hall.

"It will make certain conduct illegal," said George Logan, the city's director of community services.

"We are really not having problems, we just want to make sure these items are in the ordinance."

Logan said part of the reason for the ordinance is to help the concessionaire at the golf course.

"He has a contract to serve alcoholic beverages at the course," Logan said. "We want to prevent people bringing a beer from home or something like that."

Such rules have been in effect, but not specifically mentioned in the ordinance, Logan said.

The ordinance will also make it illegal for people to interfere with golfers or disturb the normal routine of the golf course, Logan said.

In addition, people using golf carts will be required to stay on the designated pathways, Logan said.

The only exception will be if the golfers have a written medical statement allowing them to drive onto the fairway, Logan said.

Other items include someone stealing golf balls or sneaking on the course and not paying to play, Logan said.

The Council will also consider resolutions on purchasing several sprinkler systems for city parks along with the second readings of ordinances discussed earlier this month.

Provisions for prohibiting fishing at Wadley Barron Park and a ban on smoking in designated areas at Midland Regional Airport also will be considered.

County Commissioners' Court

The Midland County commissioners in a special meeting on Monday will review plans for a long-range study of Midland County courthouse and jail needs into the 21st Century.

The commissioners' will meet with representatives of Henningson, Durham & Richardson Inc. to discuss those plans.

At 1 p.m., county department heads are invited to meet with representatives of the planning firm.

County 4-H'er visits U.S. capital

From Staff Reports

Mark T. Graham, a 17-year-old Midland County 4-H Club member from Greenwood, participated in the recent Citizenship-Washington Focus program at the National 4-H Center in the nation's capital.

The program is designed to help young people understand their rights and responsibilities as citizens and to increase appreciation of their American heritage.

Graham, who is son of Roy and Sharon Graham, will be a senior at Greenwood High School in the 1986-87 school year and is active in 4-H Club projects. He is a member of the National Honor Society and plays varsity football and basketball.

"He excels in 4-H agricultural projects as well as in citizenship and leadership programs," Kiker said. "We are proud that Mark attended the National 4-H Citizenship-Washington Focus. We are glad that he represented Midland County."

In the two-week trip, Graham said he spent six days in Washington, D.C., toured the capital, met with U.S. Congressman Tom Loeffler of Texas, viewed historic sites which reflect America's heritage, and attended 4-H workshop sessions.

"It was really lots of fun," he said.

Citizenship-Washington Focus is arranged by National 4-H Council in support of the 4-H program of the Cooperative-Extension system of state land-grant universities and the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Graham was selected to attend the conference on the basis of his participation in 4-H projects, method demonstrations and leadership roles in 4-H Club and county activities. He was among 47 4-H Club members from Texas to attend the national conference.

Bentsen to introduce legislation cutting foreign oil dependence

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Lloyd Bentsen has proposed legislation that would require the president to take "extraordinary measures" to reduce U.S. dependence on foreign oil if consumption of imports crossed the 50 percent mark.

Bentsen, D-Texas, said the Congressional Budget Office projects a possible 50 percent level of dependence on foreign oil as early as 1988 and the Department of Energy says it could come by 1990.

"I want to draw the line," said Bentsen, in a statement released Saturday. "I want to say that once we reach a point of 50 percent dependence on foreign oil, we've passed the point of no return.

"At that time we would mandate that the president take extraordinary measures to cut back on the dependence on foreign oil," Bentsen said.

Such measures would include imposing an oil import fee, offering incentives to spur domestic production or raising vehicle fuel-efficiency standards, Bentsen said.

He said the United States had been making progress in cutting dependence on foreign oil, which peaked at 47 percent in 1973, when long lines at gasoline pumps resulted from the OPEC oil embargo.

Last year, Bentsen said, foreign oil accounted for 27 percent of the oil consumed in the United States.

Actress Martha Raye sidelined by broken rib

Raye

RAVENNA, Ohio (AP) — Actress Martha Raye, suffering from a broken rib received in a fall earlier in the day, had to be helped offstage from her performance of a new show, her producer said.

Miss Raye, 69, star of "Everybody Loves Opal" at the Carousel Dinner Theater "did three minutes of the show and could not continue because of the pain," producer Scott Griffith said after she left the stage Friday night.

Miss Raye was treated at Robinson Memorial Hospital and discharged, he said, and will probably miss about 10 days of the show's four-week run. "She's in good spirits and she hopes to complete the run," Griffith said.

Friday's show was to be the press opening, Griffith said. Two Saturday shows were canceled but an understudy would take over Sunday, he said.

Meeuwsen

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Saying it's too risky to pursue a career while raising young children, former Miss America Terry Meeuwsen announced she will give up her radio talk show and TV job as of Aug. 8.

"If I make a mistake with my career, I get a second chance; if I make a mistake with my children, I'd be devastated," said Ms. Meeuwsen, 37, Miss America in 1973.

Ms. Meeuwsen and her husband, Andy Friedrich, 39, have two children, Drew, 3, and Tory, 11 months.

"Everyone says a woman can have it all if she's organized. I can't. I've been running around like a chicken with its head cut off."

She has hosted "The Terry Meeuwsen Show" on WTMJ radio since September, while also working on special projects for WTMJ-TV.

LONDON (AP) — Sarah Ferguson's father admits he shed a few tears when he heard his daughter was to marry Prince Andrew, but says he probably won't be nervous and emotional at her wedding.

"I will do my very best not to let Sarah down" when she walks down the aisle at Westminster Abbey on her father's arm Wednesday, Maj. Ronald Ferguson said Friday.

"Watching her on those engagement interviews and one thing and another, I don't mind admitting it, of course I blubbed," Ferguson told BBC radio Friday.

He said he and Sarah plan to say encouraging things to each other as they walk down the aisle. "But I don't think I'm going to be nervous. I have every intention of enjoying every second of it," he said.

LONDON (AP) — World chess champion Garri Kasparov arrived Saturday from Moscow to defend his title against Anatoly Karpov, and said he is prepared for a long match.

The two men are scheduled to play 12 games in London beginning July 28. If the contest remains undecided, it moves to Leningrad in the Soviet Union.

Although the title could be decided in London, "I wouldn't dream of winning that quickly. It's impossible," Kasparov told reporters at London's Heathrow Airport.

Kasparov said he had trained for a long match by swimming and exercising regularly.

FORT WORTH (AP) — The widow and two children of a Florida businessman killed in last year's crash of a Delta jet were awarded $605,000 by a federal jury in the first case brought to trial as a result of the plane crash.

A lawyer representing plaintiffs in more than 50 lawsuits filed against Delta Air Lines said the verdict Friday in the case of the family of Fort Lauderdale businessman Paul Reynolds would have little bearing on future Delta cases.

"No attorney worth his salt would pay any attention to this case, on either side, particularly with the unique facts," said Dallas attorney Windle Turley, chief counsel for the plaintiffs in more than 50 lawsuits filed against Delta.

The jury, which deliberated 90 minutes, awarded $160,000 to Reynolds' wife, Kathy Ann Reynolds; $230,000 to his 11-month-old son, Paul Reynolds II; and $215,000 to his 2-year-old daughter, Jacqueline Reynolds.

After the verdict, Mrs. Reynolds was led weeping from the courtroom. She had asked for at least $3.7 million from Delta. The airline had offered to settle the case for $300,000 before the trial.

Her 32-year-old husband was one of 137 people killed in the Aug. 2 crash of the Delta jet as it approached Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport. There were 27 survivors of the crash.

The week-long trial focused on the private lives of Reynolds and his wife in which the airline contended Reynolds was addicted to cocaine and alcohol and would not have earned as much money as the plaintiffs claimed.

While Bill Hoppe, Mrs. Reynolds' lawyer, tried to portray her as a distraught widow who turned to drugs and alcohol after her husband's death, Delta witnesses said she and her husband relied on drugs during their marriage.

Law enforcement officials testified Reynolds failed to file federal income taxes for five years before his death and was a key figure in several questionable oil and gas syndication businesses that were under investigation for fraud in several states.

Many of those businesses were already shut down by state authorities at the time of Reynolds' death, according to testimony.

After the trial, Hoppe criticized Delta's tactics.

"They tried this family. It's like in a criminal rape case when you try the victim," he said.

He quoted Mrs. Reynolds as saying after the verdict, "He was much more wonderful than that."

Hoppe argued Reynolds was a devoted family man who would have earned $1.7 million for the family had he not been killed. Additional compensation also was sought by Mrs. Reynolds.

But a defense witness testified Reynolds would have contributed only $365,000 to his family over the same 30-year period.

Dallas attorney Frank Finn, who represented Delta during the trial, said he was pleased, but not surprised, with the jury's decision.

"Jurors did what the evidence indicated," Finn said. "The plaintiff failed to meet the burden of proof. They raised issues then didn't prove them."

Juror Charles L. Lee said that while "it was difficult to place a value on Paul Reynolds' life," the panel unanimously concurred with Delta that damages should have been limited because of his business dealings.

Former 'Dog aims at NFL

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Wesley Williams' numbers just keep getting better and better and better.

Four years ago, as a running back for Midland High, Williams rushed for more than 1,000 yards, the last Bulldog to break that magical barrier. He was named All-District.

Last year, he surpassed the 1,500-yard mark for the Angelo State University Rams. He was named All-Lone Star Conference.

This summer, Williams was playing football for the Italian Football League's Bologna Warriors. He rushed for more than 2,500 yards, scored 30 touchdowns and led the Warriors to the IFL Super Bowl Championship with an 18-8 victory over the Pesaro Angels. His 160-yard, two-touchdown effort earned him the game's Most Valuable Player Award.

AT 22, Williams has reached the age where most football players hang up their cleats. High school and college football years have passed them by and the pros aren't interested.

In Williams' case, however, there is a good chance of continued football glory. The 5-foot-10, 180-pound speedster was recently offered a free agent contract with the Washington Redskins of the NFL and was drafted in the fifth round by the Jacksonville Bulls of the USFL.

Because of the instability and unsure future of the USFL, Williams opted for the Redskins and reported to their training camp Saturday in Carlisle, Pa.

"I get a pretty good size bonus and that's one of the reasons I'm going, said Williams. "Plus, I get paid for training camp and I'm guaranteed three weeks. They say they want to take a good long look at me.

"Free agents have had a lot of success with the Redskins. If I don't make it, Jacksonville is still interested in me. I've got a lot of options."

While Williams doesn't have overwhelming size, he has a muscular build — both upper and lower body — and has pro speed.

"I've been timed 4.5 in the pro 40," said Williams. "Pros and colleges time it different. In the pros the timing starts when the hand comes off the ground. In college it's with the first move."

If Williams makes the Redskins, he'll "probably be playing on passing downs, third down plays, punt returns and kickoffs, things like that. A lot of special teams. It's the same position Joe Washington played. He's retired now."

One negative aspect about the NFL for Williams is how soon the training camp gets under way. After all, the IFL didn't end it's 14-game season (including playoffs) until the Super Bowl July 7. Williams hasn't had much time to recover from the bumps and bruises, not to mention jet lag.

"I kind of twisted my ankle in the Super Bowl and have a bruised thigh," said Williams, who also missed two games during the regular season with a shoulder injury and bruised thigh. "It's just a little nagging injury, nothing that will stop me form performing like I can."

While Williams has been working out since his return to Midland, he's also "basically been resting," he said. "All this week I've been doing upper body weights to try and keep my strength up. I'm also trying to keep off my feet as much as possible. I had something like a 26-hour flight from Bologna and I'm trying to get my feet back under me."

IN ITALY, Williams had to overcome the difference in cultures, mainly the language barrier.

"It was pretty nice over there," he said. "I was away from all my friends and kind of lonely at times. There weren't very many people speaking English, but other than that it was okay. A lot of guys on the team spoke English but other than that..."

Williams admits the Italian Football League is far from the calibre of the NFL, but still a challenge despite the impressive numbers he put on the boards.

"Every Sunday, after a game on Saturday, you'd be sore," said Williams. "I was real impressed."

"It was like one against 11 because they felt if they could stop the Americans they could win," said Williams. "The best teams in the league are very good because they have American coaches who know how to play defense. You know you've been in a football game."

While soccer is the king of Europe's athletic playing fields, football is starting to make gains in popularity. In the IFL Super Bowl, 30,000 turned out for the game.

Computer age hits Angels — and it works!

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

You might say it was in the com puter for Rafael Pimentel and th Midland Angels to win Saturda night.

Pimentel took his best to th mound and the result was a 7-1 whip ping of the Jackson Mets, ending a disappointing homestand for the An gels on an upbeat note.

Midland won its last two games with help from a computer lineup card, for a 4-6 mark in the 10-game stand.

Pimentel was nearly untouchable against the Mets, striking out a sea son-high 11 Jackson hitters while scattering five hits. The righthander did not allow a run until the ninth inning in improving his record to 7-4.

"Finally. A normal game dictated by good pitching and a computer," manager Joe Maddon said.

The computer Maddon refers to is the one operated by George Handel an Odessa minister, whose instruc tions Maddon has followed the past two nights when filling out his line up card.

"Don't laugh, he's 2-0," Maddon said. "He came to me with a lineup that he gets by putting data in hi computer. He uses things like date o birth, day you were born, height weight, biorhythms and all this kind of stuff. I don't really know wha he's talking about, but the way we were playing we had nothing to lose."

Maddon is right in that respect The Angels had just completed a stretch of games in which they had scored 50 runs in six games and gone 1-5. Angel pitchers had allowed 60 in that stretch.

"The way he's got it figured, it's 8 percent accurate, depending on how the other team's figures work out, Maddon said.

"The nice thing about it is tha there are only 12 guys we can switch around — there's only so much you can do. But it moves people around and it gives everybody a chance to play."

SATURDAY, THE Angels made a prophet of Handel, and maybe a be liver in Maddon, scoring three times in the second inning on singles by Raul Tovar and Pat Keedy, then an rbi single by John Hotchkiss ("The computer loves Hotchkiss," Maddon says). Jeff Schaefer plated another run with a fielder's choice and Pet Coachman brought home the third with a sacrifice fly.

Norman led before only to lose in final 18

By Bob Green
AP Golf Writer

TURNBERRY, Scotland — It has become a familiar situation for Greg Norman: one shot in front going into the final round of one of the world's great golf championships.

He took a one-shot lead into the final round of the Masters three months ago. He lost by one stroke to Jack Nicklaus.

He led by one shot going into the final round of the U.S. Open one month ago, but "came up flat" he said, and drifted back into the pack.

Now, after surviving blustery winds, driving rain, chilling temperatures and a back-nine 40, he is one shot in front going into Sunday's final round of the 115th British Open.

Does he see any significance in this situation? Is there a trend? Is it a bad omen?

TED BATTLES

Trading not like it was in olden days

When John Cox was in Midland last week scouting the Texas League talent during the Midland-Shreveport series, it wasn't quite what it seemed at first glance.

Unlike the days of yore when minor league talent was scouted for inclusion in a trade involving major league personnel to sweeten the pot or even out the swap in lieu of straight cash, minor league players now are "the trade."

Cox, vice president and assistant to the Chicago Cubs' general manager Dallas Green, was looking at the Captains and Angels strictly on their merits, not as throw-ins.

It used to be that a shrewd appraiser of talent could skin a rival GM by talking him out of a minor league player of "little consequence" while attention was focused on the major leaguers changing hands.

THE MILWAUKEE Braves got Lou Burdette from the Yankees as a throw-in for name player Johnny Sain, whom they needed to bolster their bullpen. The Yankees in those days, the 1950s, never hurt for a pennant, but Burdette, teaming up with Warren Spahn, meant a couple of flags for Milwaukee.

It wasn't too long ago that the Chicago Cubs got Ken Holtzman, an established pitcher who was pining away on the New York Yankee bench, for some kid who couldn't win as a starter with the Midland Cubs.

But as it turned out, Ron Davis developed into a premiere relief pitcher over a five-year period for the Yankees and the Twins, although the Houston product has fallen on hard times in recent seasons. Holtzman, however, never helped Chicago.

WHAT HAPPENED was that when Davis joined the Yankees, he still had as much trouble getting people out as he did in Midland. "The Cubs had me throwing overhand because I could get over 90 mph velocity. After I got with the Yankees and nothing improved, I realized 'The Yankees don't know I'm not supposed to throw sidearm' so I dropped down and everything changed."

Al Rosen, who engineered the trade, had remembered Davis from his Florida State League days, "This kid threw sidearm and I hated sidearmers because I couldn't hit them. So naturally...."

"Nowadays it's difficult to make a trade at the major league level," Cox explains, "because no one wants to assume those long term contracts so you are forced to find the talent in the minors."

The way things have been going for the Chicago Cubs, Dallas Green is searching for help and is willing to take a chance, experiment. As it turned out, it's a good year for it. Even if the Cubs were playing like they did in 1984 when they won the National League East, it wouldn't do much good against this year's Mets, who are in a league somewhere above mere majors.

"We have no regrets over trades we made that year (1984)," says Cox, who winces just a little at what some of the traded young players are doing elsewhere this year. "The club had been without a pennant since 1945 and we were going for it. We had to give up something to get quality players in return."

As far as Cox is concerned, in addition to Rick Sutcliffe from Cleveland, the key players that year were Bob Dernier and Gary Matthews.

"Chicago hadn't had a centerfielder since I'd been with the organization and Dernier gave us a defensive player and someone who could get on base consistently and start things rolling offensively."

MATTHEWS, the aging one-time star, was the missing chemical in the Cub team, the Reggie Jackson in spirit.

"The team had no leader, no take-charge guy. It was dead from the neck up. Ryne Sandberg is a quiet guy and Leon Durham, Keith Moreland, Ron Cey and the rest are just players who go about there business, doing their job. We needed somebody to stir up the rest of the team and the Sarge was the answer. He brought the clubhouse to life."

So this year Dernier has been hurt a lot and hasn't been doing his job of catalyst by getting on base even when he is healthy. Matthews is just now beginning to hit, but struggled the first half of the season, prompting suggestions that he was too old to help and should be turned loose.

The once-prize pitching staff has been a walking sick bay for two years.

"If somebody would only throw at us and start a fight. It's what we need to wake us up," fantasizes Cox. Still, to get a pitcher to throw at you, the hitter has got to be a menace with a bat in his hands. And dangerous is the last thing anyone would accuse a Cub hitter of being this year.

The Midland Reporter-Telegram Men's City Golf tournament will be held at Hogan Park Aug. 2 and 3. Entry fee is $50 per person and the deadline is noon July 31.

This year two divisions will be offered—gross and net. Everyone will compete in both and have a chance of winning one or both. There will be five flights per division, based on a full field.

Play will be by tee off times both days and each participant must play at his assigned tee time, An entry blank must be completed by each entrant and entry fee paid before entry will be accepted. No refunds will be made after noon July 31.

Each player must have a registered handicap to enter, so golfers without an established handicap had better start keeping score and submitting their rounds to establish a handicap.

Tee times and pairings will be posted Aug. 1 and play will begin at 7:30 a.m. Aug. 2 A dinner will follow the opening round at the clubhouse at 7:30 p.m. Play Aug. 3 also will begin 7:30 a.m. and an awards presentation will follow play.

First prize in the gross division will be a remote control VCR for each flight winner. In the net division, first place per flight will win a wall clock, valued at $350, and second place, per flight, will be a Cobra Radar Detector, retail $199.99.

Midland teams shooting for state High-Junior berth

From Staff Reports

Angels Stadium will be the site of the District I High-Junior baseball tournament next week with a pair of Tall City teams hoping to earn a trip to the state tournament.

The three-day tournament will begin Monday and play will continue through Wednesday when the championship game will be played. Both the Midland Mustangs and the Midland Astros have earned a berth in the four team tourney.

The other squads to appear are the San Angelo Bar Association and Odessa American Legion. The draw is not yet set, but there will be games at 3, 5:30 and 8 p.m. on Monday, then at 5:30 and 8 p.m. Tuesday, with the championship and an if necessary game Wednesday beginning at 5:30 p.m.

The winner of the District I tournament earns a trip to Waco where the state title will be determined. High Junior baseball is for boys 15-16 years old.

WILLIAMS

"We had pretty good crowds, more than I expected," said Williams. "Everyone says that Italy isn't into football, but we always had good crowds for our games."

If he wins a position with the Redskins, those crowds will more than double. And, they'll get pretty rabid. Especially when Washington plays Dallas.

Australia's Greg Norman drives off the first tee to begin the third round of the British Open Saturday at Turnberry, Scotland.

BRITISH OPEN

"One shot ahead in all three of the majors this year, eh?" answered Norman, flashing a broad smile from a still-damp face.

"I guess that means I'm playing pretty good," said Norman, who has been first or second in five of his last seven starts in North America.

Despite a struggle in the dreadful weather — conditions so severe many of the 28,184 fans who braved the cold and wet fled Turnberry's Ailsa course before the final putt — Norman was cheerful and optimistic.

"I'm very confident," the Australian said after slashing and thrashing his way to a 4-over-par 74 Saturday and a 211 total for 54 holes. "I'm playing well and very confident of my ability to cope with any conditions that are thrown at us."

HIS CONFIDENCE may have been heightened by his opposition: only three others — none of them American — really have a shot at him, particularly if the weather remains bad.

"There's what, four of us within four? That's really about all that have a chance," Norman said.

They include a Japanese putting magician who has yet to win outside the Pacific area, a journeyman English pro of no particular distinction and a tough little Welshman who has not been in this position before.

Tommy Nakajima is alone in second place at 212. Next, at 214, were England's Gordon Brand and Ian Woosnam of Wales.

They were the principal survivors in weather that wiped the last of the subpar scores from the board Saturday. Only Taiwan's Ho Ming Chung broke par Saturday, shooting 69 for a total of 220.

Records are incomplete, but British Open officials said this appeared to be only the second time in 50 years that the final round will begin without a player at par or below.

"It was survival out there. You just want to get in the clubhouse without hurting yourself," Norman said after ducking from beneath his dripping umbrella long enough to drop a 3-foot bogey putt on the 18th hole that cut his lead to one stroke over Nakajima.

Nakajima, now Japan's leading player, performed a marvelous escape act on the 12th hole — coming from behind a monument, chipping and putting with a magic touch — to shoot 71.

"An unbelievable round," he said.

"Quite an accomplishment," agreed Norman.

The 5-foot-4 Woosnam was able to match par 70 in winds gusting to 35 miles per hour and in rain that ranged from drizzle to downpour. Brand fought his way to a 75.

"Given that weather conditions remain the same, it will be very difficult for anyone to make a move," said Norman.

If he is right, that eliminates the hopes of any Americans, none of whom could make an appreciable move even though Norman played his third round eleven shots higher than the record-matching 63 he achieved Friday.

FROM WOOSNAM and Brand, it was three strokes back to Gary Koch, the leading American, tied for fifth and six shots off the lead. Also at 217 were Spanish veteran Jose-Maria Canizares and Nick Faldo of England.

Koch had a 72, Canizares 73 and Faldo struggled to a 76.

He was tied with Australian David Graham, Sam Torrance of Scotland and Bernhard Langer of West Germany.

Graham got his 70 in the house before the worst of the weather slashed in from the Firth of Clyde. Torrance shot 71. Langer spent most of the day in knee-deep rough and walked away with a 76.

But he had plenty of company in his miseries.

Nicklaus also had a 76 and was at 227. Lee Trevino was 75-226. Tom Watson, who won the second of his five British Open titles here nine years ago, was 77-225. PGA champion Hubert Green shot 81 and was at 231.

Any hopes Sandy Lyle may have had of a successful defense ended on the wet, clinging rough on the 17th hole. He played five shots out of it before stomping away with a 7.

"That was the killer," said Lyle, a Scot who had a 70 and a 221 total.

LPGA's double millionaire tied for lead

Boston Five

DANVERS, Mass. (AP) — Pat Bradley, the only $2 million winner in women's golf history, had mixed feelings Saturday after settling for a tie with rookie Deb Richard, Cindy Hill and Val Skinner after three rounds of the $275,000 LPGA Boston Five Classic.

"The bad news is that I had a 74, the good news is I'm still there," Bradley said.

Bidding for her first victory in seven visits to a hometown course, Bradley struggled to a 2-over par 74 for a 54-hole score of 5-under 211 in windy, overcast weather at Tara Ferncroft's exacting 6,008-yard, par-72 course.

"It was a tough day for 90 per cent of us," said Bradley, who has won three tournaments and finished second five times this year while earning more than $300,000. "The wind played a little havoc and the pin placements were much tougher.

"I'm very thankful that today was not the end. Tomorrow is another day and we'll see what happens."

"It was kind of a rough day," Richard said. "I just couldn't make birdie putts. And if anybody had said 5-under par would be leading the tournament I would have said they were crazy."

Richard, runner-up for the NCAA championship on Cape Cod last year while at the University of Florida, survived what she called "Bradley's Battalion" and took a 73 for 211.

Hill had the best score of the day among the leaders in the 72-hole tournament. However, her 71, built with the help of birdies on the 16th and 17th greens, was good enough for only a tie.

The four grabbed a share of the lead as Ok-Hee Ku, a 29-year rookie from Korea, slumped to a 76 after a pair of 68s enabled her to lead a U.S. tournament for the first time.

Ku, playing with Bradley and Richard, lost sole ownership of the lead when she hit into water and took a double bogey 6 on the first hole of the day. She battled desperately to hang tough and managed to hold a share of the lead until aa bogey 4 on the 16th green dropped her one shot behind at 212 with 18 holes remaining.

Byrum hits 64 to gain two-stroke advantage

Hardee's Classic

COAL VALLEY, Ill. (AP) — Curt Byrum, fighting to regain his PGA Tour status, shot a 6-under-par 64 Saturday for a two-stroke lead at 12-under after three rounds of the Hardee's Golf Classic.

Byrum, 27, making his first Tour appearance since losing his qualifying card last year, birdied his first hole on the 6,514-yard, par-70 Oakwood Country Club course near Moline.

"That kind of got the taste off all right for the day," the Onida, S.D., native said.

Byrum then birdied holes 8, 10, 14, 15 and 16, and shot par the rest of the way for a total 198 going into Sunday's final round of the $400,000 event.

"I really hit it awfully solid today," he said, adding that he has been concentrating hard on playing relaxed while vying for the $72,000 first-place prize.

Two strokes off the pace, with a 10-under 200, was Mark Wiebe, winner of last year's Anheuser-Busch Classic. Wiebe, 28, shot a 4-under 66 Saturday.

Mike Smith, who opened with a 3-over 73 and followed with a sizzling 7-under 63 second round, continued hot play Saturday. He picked up four more strokes and finished 54 holes in third place at 202, 8-under-par and four shots off Byrum's pace.

Five golfers were tied for fourth place at 7-under, including Russ Cochran, the tourney's mid-point leader who shot a par-70 third round, and Bob Lohr, the first-round leader.

Leading a pack of six golfers finishing at 6-under-par 204 was George Archer, 46, who has been playing pro-golf for 22 years and is close to moving into the PGA Seniors' circuit.

Also in the 6-under logjam was David Peoples, who barely made the cut Friday with a 36-hole showing of 1-over-par 141. Those with 142 or higher were cut.

Peoples eagled the par-4 16th hole with a 117-yard sand-wedge shot, hit five birdies and shot par on the rest in his third round.

"I birdied (holes) 16 and 18 yesterday to just make the cut, so I'm lucky to even be here," said Peoples, 26, in his third year on the PGA Tour.

Senior Golf

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — Bruce Crampton and Gene Littler both made loud charges, but Jim Ferree quietly took the lead in the second round of the $251,000 PGA Senior Tour's Greater Grand Rapids Open Saturday.

Ferree, of Export, Pa., shot a 66 for a two-day total of 134 and a one-shot lead over Crampton, Littler and first-round leader Charlie Owens.

Crampton started his round with birdies on four of the first five holes on the par-71, 6,453-yard Elks Country Club course to drop to seven under par for the tournament.

Littler, playing in the same group as Ferree, overcame bogey problems on the front nine with birdies on five of the first six holes on the back to tie Crampton in the clubhouse with a two-day total of 135.

Ferree, using a 48-inch, three-pound Slim Jim putter designed by Owens, fashioned a 5-under-par round of 66 — including birdies on the 16th and 17th hole — to take a one stroke lead going into Sunday's final round.

Owens, who shot a 68 on Saturday, joined Crampton and Littler one stroke ahead of a group including Gardner Dickinson, Gay Brewer and Chi Chi Rodriguez.

"I felt like I was playing well and not paying too much attention to what was going on when Littler started making all those birdies," said Ferree, who last week finished second in the Greenbrier American Express Championship. "That brought me back to reality again.

"I've been playing real well and putting much better than I used to since Charlie gave me the putter."

After Crampton's fast start, the Australian native shot pars on the next 13 holes to finish at 67 for the day. Littler, who bogeyed the fifth and seventh holes on the front nine, birdied holes 10, 11, 12, 13 and 15 to move into the three-way tie for second.

GAP, France (AP) - Jean-Francois Bernard of France won the 16th leg of the Tour de France by a margin of more than three minutes, while his teammate, Bernard Hinault, maintained the yellow jersey of the overall leader.

Bernard and three other cyclists escaped from the pack during the 153-mile course from the ancient Roman arena in Nimes to Gap in the French Alps, often riding in the teeth of the famed "Mistral," the region's ferocious north wind.

Bernard's time was 7:39:54.

On the final major climb, one of Bernard's companions fell back, then both the others were delayed by flat tires, leaving him alone on the descent to Gap.

A group of nine pursuers finished together 3:02, behind Bernard, with Josef Lieckens of Belgium in second place, 3:02 behind, and Dominque Garde of France in third with the same time.

Hinault, who like Bernard rides for the Lie Clair team, was in the main pack more than eight minutes back.

Sunday's mountainous course from Gap to Briancon is one of the most difficult of the 23-day, 2,500-mile tour, and is followed by yet another tough ride through the Alps on Monday before the riders turn toward Paris, where the race ends July 27.

In the overall standings, Hinault is timed in 75:24:20 with American Greg Lemond, second, 34 seconds behind. Andrew Hampsten of the United States is sixth, 8:26 off the pace.

White king of '86 Dallas training camp

An AP Sports Analysis
By DENNE H. FREEMAN

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. — No matter who is in the 1986 Dallas Cowboys' training camp, Danny White is the quarterback king.

Gone is the disruptive Gary Hogeboom, who was given every chance by Coach Tom Landry to prove he had something besides a rocket arm.

Hogeboom, now an Indianapolis Colt, never mastered the art of performing in games as well as he looked in practice.

White is THE leader of this 26th Dallas camp and the fate of the royal blue, metallic silver blue and white colors of the Cowboys rests simply on his ability to recapture the promise he showed in the early 1980s.

"Danny White has the experience to take this team to the Super Bowl," says club executive Gil Brandt. "He's in super condition and has some good seasons left in the NFL. I have a feeling some great things are about to happen to him."

White has the reputation of gagging in the big games. The Cowboys have lost three NFC title confrontations with him at quarterback. They never reached the Super Bowl with White in charge.

"I'll always have THAT reputation I guess even though it's a little unfair," White says. "All I know is I have a lot of confidence and I'm ready for a big year. The quarterback controversy in Dallas is dead."

"I'm going to support Danny White until the cows come home," says Pelluer, who replaced an injured White in the 1985 playoffs and made the big plays in a vital victory over the New York Giants.

Pelluer says he feels it is part of his job to support White.

"We don't have conflicts," Pelluer says.

Hogeboom kept things simmering last year even after he had played poorly each time Landry gave him the ball.

"Gary didn't help out a lot in that regard," White says. "I was a team man when I backed up Roger Staubach."

White had one of the most difficult jobs in sports when he had to replace Staubach five years ago.

"Fans expected me to be Roger," White says. "There was only one Roger."

White played steadily but has seldom produced the miracle magic of Staubach, who won two Super Bowls for the Cowboys.

NEW OFFENSIVE coordinator Paul Hackett has White's confidence level overflowing full.

"He (Hackett) has changed my dropback steps and my throwing delivery," White says. "He's put in a controlled passing game that is more suited to my style. I think we could hve a big year."

White played on a ton of courage in 1985.

"It means I played most of the season with broken ribs I didn't know I had," White said. "It was sort of a hairline fracture that was difficult to X-ray. I know it sure hurt a lot."

White also was knocked out twice and suffered whiplash when his helmet hit the turf as the injured Cowboys' offensive line turned into Swiss cheese.

"It was a tough year and I think we did well to win our division (NFC East)," White says. "That was our main goal."

However, the 20-0 loss to the Los Angeles Rams in the NFC semifinals sent club President Tex Schramm on a search for an offensive coordinator.

So we can all relax. There will be no Great Quarterback Duel III in Thousand Oaks.

ANGELS

In the fourth, a two-run homer by Randall chased Jackson starter Rich Rodriguez, 3-4, and gave Randall the Texas League lead with 19, and a 5-0 lead in the ballgame. Dante Bichette added his fifth homer of the season in the fifth and Al Romero and Tovar combined for Midland's final run in the seventh.

Meanwhile, Pimentel was mowing the Mets down with his assortment of breaking pitches and an overpowering fastball. Though he was a litte tired early in the game ("The computer said Rafael had a lot of lactic acid in his system and he might get tired, he needed to work slowly," Maddon explained), catcher Doug Davis said he hasn't seen Pimentel sharper all season.

"He had full command of all his pitches," Davis said. "He was throwing hard, overpowering in the first inning, and he hadn't lost much by the ninth. He had one of those games that pitchers dream about."

And Davis, who was in the lineup because the computer suggested it, said the players were willing to try anything if it could get the team winning again.

"We're kind of laughing about it," he admitted. "But we hadn't been playing well. Maybe it's an idea that will help turn us around a bit."

The complete game win, however it was accomplished, was just what the Angels needed, especially the over-worked bullpen crew. Maddon and pitching coach Aurelio Monteagudo had dipped into the reliefs corps too often the past week as the starters were unable to go the distance.

Pimentel's route-going performance was the first for an Angel since July 1, and the first complete game win since June 29. Pimentel was also the winner in that one.

"We needed a game like that, especially the bullpen," Monteagudo said.

And for the hitters, it was nice to see a lead stand up for a change.

As to the future of the computer lineup when the Angels are on the road?

"I'm going to call him tomorrow," Maddon said with a straight face.

ANGEL DUST: Midland now takes to the road to begin a 10-day trip to the Eastern half of the league, Shreveport and Jackson, where good pitching is the rule, not the exception.

"We've got a lot of line drive hitters and if we just keep hitting it solid, we'll be all right," said JamesRandall....

Julian Gonzalez, a familiar face for Midlanders, will rejoin the team for the Eastern swing, after coming down from Edmonton. Gonzalez' numbers with the Triple A Trappers were 1-0, 6.75 era in 42⅔ innings. He had no saves....

After a night off, Dante Bichette's hitting streak reached 16 games with his homer....Sherman Corbett, 5-6, 3.94 era, will open the five-game set with Shreveport Monday in a 7:30 p.m. start...

COM owns huge WTC lead

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The city of Midland Swim team is holding up very well this weekend at the West Texas Championships — and it is doing it without the services of several of its best swimmers.

COM was the early leader in the meet, that concludes today at the UTPB pool, and top swimmers Sam Perry, Michaela Hasek and Jane Marker were swimming in the Southwest Circuit Championships in Dallas.

But with Craig Kieffer, Stacy Fennell and Matthew Houston as early leaders in their age group for high point honors, COM's 484 points is far ahead of the Odessa Aquatic Club's 250.

Odessa's Laird claims close 5K win

From Staff Reports

In this case, it was youth before age, as 19-year-old Mary Laird of Odessa outpaced 31-year-old Nancy Martin to capture first place in Saturday's Women's Distance Festival 5K race.

Laird's 20:20 for the 3.1 mile loop was a personal best by nearly two minutes. Martin came in at 20:45 for her runner-up finish.

The Distance Festival race held at the Midland Park Mall, was one in a series of runs throughout the country that promotes women's distance running, an often overlooked sport.

For instance, although there was an Olympic marathon for women in 1984, there still is no 10K or 5K runs.

"This is the third year we've held the Women's Distance Festival and we look at it as an excellent way for women to become involved in running and athletics," said Andra Chamberlain, Texas state representative to the Road Runners Club of America.

For the first time a men's 5K Chase After the Women was held Saturday. In that race, Bob Jones of Midland overcame an early lead by David Moore for a four second victory. Jones covered the distance in 16:21.

Is Rienstra Captain Marvel?

Associated Press

The Pittsburgh Steelers may not have envisioned superhuman feats when they selected Temple guard John Rienstra in the first round of this year's NFL Draft.

But now, with the 6-foot-4, 275-pounder a holdout, offensive line coach Hal Hunter believes Rienstra may have to be Captain Marvel to make up for lost time.

"You draft a guy No. 1 and pay him big money, well, you expect him to step to the plate, take a healthy cut and hit the ball hard," Hunter said Saturday. "The more time he misses, the more time he has to make up. If this goes on too long, he's going to have to be Captain Marvel to catch up."

Hunter said Rienstra injured a foot on the first day of the Steelers' May mini-camp and missed the rest of the week's practice.

"He missed all the technique work there," Hunter said. "He got the blackboard material, but now is the time he should be putting it to use."

Hunter said Reinstra won't get as many repetitions in practice when veterans report next Friday.

"He'd get three times as much work this week," Hunter said. "My big concern is that he'll get into camp late, blow an assignment and cost us (quarterback) Mark Malone" to an injury.

STEELERS TACKLE Mark Behning was admitted to Latrobe Hospital suffering from heat deydration following Saturday's workout in 90-degree weather, a team spokesman said.

Behning, a second-round draft choice in 1985 who sat out the season after breaking his arm in a preseason game, was expected to remain hospitalized overnight, said spokesman Joe Gordon.

The heat on the practice field in Platteville, Wis., isn't botherering William "The Refrigerator" Perry. Despite arriving at camp at 325 poounds —he's down to 318 — Perry insists he's in shape because teammate Dan Hampton helped him get there during the off-season.

"I got him running five to seven miles a day, and doing aerobics at the Chicago Health Club," Hampton explained.

"What about the beer drinking? I heard you quit," a reporter asked Perry.

"Quit drinking beer? Who you talking to? Is there somebody else here?" said Perry, looking around.

"This guy can drink a case of beer in an hour. I saw it," Hampton said.

Perry didn't deny it.

THE NEW England Patriots are fining defensive lineman Kenneth Sims an unidsclosed amoumt of money for his absence from camp. Sims, 26, the top NFL choice from the University of Texas in the 1982 draft, failed to appear for the second straight day.

Sims is on the final, option year of a five-year contract and is negotiating a new contract with General Manager Patrick Sullivan.

"I guess he's not pleased with the numbers in a new contract," Jim Greenidge, director of Patriots publicity, said of Sims, who last Dec. 1 broke his leg for the second time in his four-year professional career.

He missed the rest of the season. He missed 10 games of the 1983 because of a similar break.

Meanwhile, the Patriots announced the acquisition — in exchange for an undisclosed draft choice — of tight end Willie Scott from Kansas City. The 27-year-old Scott was the Chiefs' first pick in 1981.

In five years with Kansas City, Scott caught 75 passes for 682 yards, a 9.1 average. He lost starting job last season to Walt Arnold.

THE CHIEFS also announced the signing of punter Lewis Colbert of Auburn, their eighth-round pick. He was ranked fourth in the nation last year, averaging 45.8 yards per punt.

"We'll be hard-pressed to have two 1,000-yard rushers again," offensive coordinator Lindy Infante said as the Cleveland Browns' prepared for the opening of their camp.

The running game — with both Kevin Mack and Earnest Byner cracking the 1,000-yard mark — was suited to the 1985 Browns because rookie quarterback Bernie Kosar was still learning to survive in the NFL, Infante said. But Kosar is a year wiser now.

"Bernie really should have been in college last year," Infante said, referring to Kosar's early departure from the University of Miami, Fla.

Defensive end Curtis Greer, a former first-round draft pick who started for five seasons for the St. Louis Cardinals, has failed his physical exam because of an injured knee, a spokesman for the club said.

The 28-year-old Greer was placed on the list of players who are physically unable to perform. He was not immediately available for comment.

Cardinals officials said Greer would continue working out at training camp, and the knee would be closely monitored.

Greer was the Cardinals first-round draft pick in 1980 and became a starter his second season. In 1984, he recorded 14 quarterback sacks to rank third in the NFC.

THE DOLPHINS said tests on the slow-healing ankle injury suffered by veteran linebacker Charles Bowser showed cysts have formed on the ankle, preventing it from getting enough blood and slowing the healing process.

Bowser was injured early last season and played in only two games. The injury was thought to be minor, and Bowser's recurring problems had perplexed him and his coaches.

The fifth-year veteran was so despondent after re-injuring the ankle recently that he walked out of camp Thursday night. He returned Friday afternoon, however, and explained his actions to the media Saturday.

"More than anything, (I left because) my leg was sore," Bowser said. "I just wanted to get away to clear my mind."

Dolphins Coach Don Shula said he plans to put Bowser, along with offensive linemen Jeff Toews and Jon Giesler, on the "physically unable to perform" list next week. Players in that category don't count against the NFL roster limits. They can be brought off the list Aug. 19 or left on it until October.

The Bills also announced that defensive end Scott Virkus failed his physical. Virkus played three years in the NFL, one with the Bills and two with the Indianapolis Colts. The 26-year-old was suffering from shin splints, Senko said.

Witherspoon holds WBA title

WEMBLEY, England (AP) — Tim Witherspoon punched Frank Bruno into submission in the 11th round early Sunday morning and kept the World Boxing Association heavyweight title "because I am the great champion I was supposed to be."

But the 28-year-old Witherspoon also looked like an out-of-shape champion who had more bounce to his belly than spring in his legs.

But the Philadelphian was still too much for Bruno, who looked as if he was sculpted out of marble.

Witherspoon took away Bruno's knockout power, then smashed him to the floor with four overhand rights to the head in the 11th round. Referee Isido Rodriguez of Venezuela counted to three and then noticed a towel that had been thrown into the ring by Bruno's corner. The referee stopped the fight. The time was 3 minutes of the round.

A fighter cannot be saved by the bell, and if Rodriguez had continued to count, it is doubtful Bruno could have beaten the 10-count.

Witherspooon, who weighed 234 and looked heavy although he said he thought the scales at the weigh-in had been tampered with, said Bruno was "strong and determined."

"I had to hang in there hard to pull it out. He hurt me," Witherspoon said. "That's because he's a good fighter. He hurt me more than anyone else."

But Bruno, 228, who had scored 27 knockouts in winning 28 fights, never came close to putting Witherspoon down, although he did shake him on a few occasions.

LATE IN the 11th round, Bruno seemed to stun Witherspoon with three punches to the head. Then, Witherspoon crashed home an overhand right and Bruno reeled into a neutral corner. The challenger escaped but he was put down in Witherspoon's corner by three more overhand rights and the fight was over. And so, too, were the hopes of some 40,000 fans who turned out at Wembley Stadium to see if Bruno could do what no other British heavyweight has done this century.

Until the sudden ending, the fight had been on the dull side, although both men did land some hard head punches. But it was mostly a battle of jabs marked by much mauling.

"His chin won't hold up," Witherspoon had said before the fight.

And, finally, in the 11th round, Bruno's chin let him down.

Witherspoon also had said before the fight the British people had been dreaming so long for a heavyweight champion. "The dream's going to end as soon as the bell rings."

Of course, the dream lasted far longer than Witherspoon thought, and the champion might have had himself to blame because of his obvious subpar condition.

BEFORE THE end came, neither man went down. But Witherspoon was badly marked under the left eye and the eye appeared almost closed. Bruno, on the other hand, was cut over the left eye but was never bothered by the cut.

Despite his paunchiness, Witherspoon matched Bruno's strength and actually outjabbed Bruno in many of the rounds even though the Briton had a 5-inch reach advantage.

The fight started about 1 a.m. local time and was televised nationally in the United States on HBO Saturday night.

Bruno, 24, did land some hard right hands to the head while Witherspoon's best punch, until those fight-finishing punches, was a left hook. Both missed more than they landed.

The victory for Witherspoon came in his second defense of the title won Jan. 17 with a decision over Tony Tubbs. After that fight, Witherspoon tested positive for marijuana and was fined $25,000 by the WBA.

Witherspoon's next defense will be a rematch with Tubbs.

WITHERSPOON, WHO got $900,000, now has a record of 25-2 with 17 knockouts. Witherspoon lost a WBC title bid against Larry Holmes in 1983, then won that title only to lose it on a decision to Pinklon Thomas in 1984.

Bruno, the former European champion, lost for only the second time against 28 victories. The defeat snapped a seven-fight winning streak for the Briton who was guaranteed about $1.1 million (750,000 pounds).

It was the first heavyweight title fight in London since Aug. 6, 1966, when Muhammad Ali knocked out Brian London in the third round at Earl's Court. Ali was at ringside for this fight.

The only British fighter to win the heavyweight championship was Bob Fitzsimmons, who knocked out James J. Corbett in the 14th round at Carson City, Nev., on March 17, 1897.

No longer can they just look at their list of new recruits and figure where each fits into the team. Now, they look at the list and figure whether each will even be on the team. Many won't.

Twenty points or 200 yards a game means nothing without 2.0 in the classroom or 700 on the entrance test.

Even before fall practice starts for football, the new NCAA academic standards, known as Proposition 48, are playing havoc with big-time athletics.

Syracuse also lost football running back Mike Owens. Iowa will be without running back Tony Stewart. And Paul Glonek, a defensive lineman who had hoped to play at Notre Dame, was forced to make other plans.

MOST OF the players have decided to attend school anyway, sitting out the freshmen year and hoping to play for three years. Some current and former coaches wonder, however, whether the legislation will have the desired effect.

"I'd like a head coaching job in the Sitout League," says Ronnie Arrow, who has coached San Jacinto Junior College in Texas to national basketball championships in three of the last four seasons. "Some very good ones will sit this year."

"It's idiotic to believe that making a kid sit out and not practice will force him into the library," said basketball analyst Dick Vitale, who coached at the University of Detroit and in the pros before turning to broadcasting with ESPN. "We're kidding ourselves.

"Unless you lock up all the balls in the city, he's going to be shooting somewhere."

THE CONTROVERSIAL legislation, passed by the NCAA in 1983 and amended last January, imposes a sliding minimum scale of academic achievement for entering freshmen.

It permits admission and eligibility to athletes who have a 1.8 grade point average in a core curriculum of academic subjects and a 740 score on the Scholastic Aptitude Test. An athlete whose SAT scores are lower, say 660, could gain admission with a 2.2 average.

Next year, the standards will be tightened, requiring 720 on the SATs to balance a 1.9 grade point average, or 2.1 for a 680 test score.

By 1988, freshmen athletes will be required to have combined minimum standards of 700 on the SAT and a 2.0 grade point.

VITALE questioned the use of standardized test scores as a barometer for admission. "The SAT test is biased against the inner city kid," he said. "The language of the test, is geared against him."

Syracuse Coach Jim Boeheim agreed. "The core curriculum part is a good thing but the board scores are not," he said. "No one has proved yet that how you do on the SATs is a good indication of how you'll do in college. We've admitted kids with less than 700 and they've done well and graduated."

Illinois coach Lou Henson said: "You can't tell me the tests aren't discriminatory when so many big city players are failing to make the grade. I think we have a bad rule that will soon be changed."

Billy Packer, like Vitale a former college coach and now a network broadcaster with CBS, wonders what ? hletes are doing on campus at all if they fail to achieve the minimum entrance standards.

"I have a problem with the system," he said. "The presidents voted the minimum standards. To me, that means athletes who can't meet those standards should not be admitted. An athlete should enter as a student or he shouldn't be there. Forget whether he can play. Student standards shouldn't change because a kid is a ball player.

"If it's 700 on the SATs for a player, then it ought to be 700 for every student. And if it's 1,300 for the other students, then it ought to be 1,300 for the athletes. Otherwise, it's hypocrisy."

THE NCAA can set eligibility standards but it cannot decide who is admitted to an individual school. That is the school's decision. But, Packer said, admitting an athlete with sub-700 SATs to a university where the rest of the student body is required to have higher scores is unfair to all concerned.

"It's like sending a kid who's 5-6 and 150 out to play defensive tackle in the varsity football team. He can't be competitive in that situation."

Packer thought junior college programs would prosper because of the new rules, inheriting players who don't want to spend a year sitting out.

But Arrow wasn't so sure.

"I don't really think it will affect us," he said. "The big names will sit. To kids like that, it's lowering themselves, belittling themselves to go to a junior college. They tell their folks and their girl friends they're going to Michigan or UCLA and then, all of a sudden, they're going to some JC. They think, 'I'm too good for that.' That's a shot to their ego."

Hr does think players a cut below the blue-chippers might filter down to the JC level instead of sitting.

"You're looking at kids who go to school to play," he said. "Take the ball away and it's hard on them. I talked to five kids last year that we had a shot at. All five sat. Three called by Christmas, saying they wanted to come to San Jac.

"I've been waiting for this, for the scores to come out. There's no way we get kids except for insufficient grades. Pass the SATs and I tell them, 'Merry Christmas and I hope I see you on the tube.' Now the scores are slapping kids beside the head and they have to say, 'Do I really want to sit?' Now they've got to make that decision.

"Proposition 48 meant well. It was an attempt to get good students playing major college ball. All they've done, though, is prolonged the process a year by making them sit out. Do you think they will get real smart in that one year? That's what they're saying will happen."

Nevertheless, Arrow thinks most players will accept the penalties of Porposition 48 and bide their time.

"I hope I'm wrong and if I am, I hope I'm like the United Fund and I get my fair share."

Clinkscale's absence worth $1,000 a day

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. — Strong safety Dextor Clinkscale was being fined $1,000 per day Saturday for missing training camp and Dallas Cowboys' President Tex Schramm called his absence "ridiculous."

"Dextor is under contract and is now subject to (Coach) Tom Landry's regular fine," Schramm said.

Schramm said Clinkscale could lose his starting job because of his unexplained failure to show up.

"Dextor Clinkscale is not the person who will disrupt our training camp by not being here," Schramm said. "It's just a negative thing for him. He's got a lot of people shooting at his job. It doesn't make sense."

Clinkscale, who is on the option year of his contract, has spoken to Joe Bailey, who handles the Cowboys' negotiations.

Bernazard, Hall lead Indians to 6-4 win over Royals

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Tony Bernazard led off the game with a home run and former Midland Cub Mel Hall keyed a five-run third inning with a two-run single Saturday night, helping the Cleveland Indians to a 6-4 victory over the Kansas City Royals and Phil Niekro to career win No. 307.

Scattering eight hits, Niekro tied Mickey Welch for 14th on the all-time victory list.

Niekro, 7-6, had two walks and a strikeout before being relieved by Scott Bailes after the Royals scored four unearned runs in the seventh. Ernie Camacho got the last two outs for his 13th save.

Brook Jacoby doubled leading off the third and went to third when Chris Bando singled. Bernazard's grounder scored Jacoby, then Brett Butler and Joe Carter singled, loading the bases for Hall.

Hall's single brought on reliever Mark Gubicza, who gave up an RBI single to Cory Snyder. Hall scored the fifth run of the inning on Julio Franco's groundout.

White Sox 8, Yankees 3

NEW YORK — Joel Skinner and Greg Walker homered and Wayne Tolleson knocked in two runs with three singles as Chicago defeated New York.

Tolleson singled in the first run in Chicago's three-run second inning. Tolleson singled in another run in the sixth and Skinner followed with a two-run homer, breaking open the game.

The White Sox had 14 hits before an Old-Timers Day crowd of 46,530. Skinner had three hits, a career high. John Cangelosi also had three singles.

American League

White Sox starter Joe Cowley, 5-5, broke a personal two-game losing streak, allowing six hits and three runs in five innings. He was relieved by Gene Nelson, who earned his second save.

New York's Scott Nielsen, 2-1, gave up 13 of the hits in his third major-league start.

A's 3, Brewers 2

OAKLAND, Calif. — Carney Lansford hit a two-run triple to center field with two out in the eighth to give Oakland a victory over Milwaukee.

Lansford delivered against reliever Mark Clear, 2-4. The ball got past center fielder Robin Yount, who tried to make a diving catch, and Dwayne Murphy and Bruce Bochte scored on the hit.

Reliever Dan Plesac walked Tony Phillips to open the A's eighth and was relieved by Clear after Phillips was forced at second on Murphy's attempted sacrifice. Jose Canseco popped out to first and Bochte walked before Lansford tripled.

The loss was the Brewers' first of the season in a game which they led after seven innings. Oakland reliever Bill Mooneyham, 3-3, was the winning pitcher. Dave Leiper and Doug Bair finished; Bair got his third save.

The A's chased Brewers starter Danny Darwin in the seventh as they scored their first run. Bochte walked to open the seventh and, with two out, singles by Dusty Baker and Jerry Willard scored him.

Angels 9, Blue Jays 3

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Ruppert Jones hit two homers and drove in four runs and John Candelaria pitched 5⅓ innings for his third straight victory since coming off the disabled list, as California downed Toronto. Candelaria, 3-0, held Toronto to four hits, including George Bell's two-run homer in the fourth. The left-hander walked one and struck out five.

Bell hit his second homer of the game and 19th of the season in the ninth inning.

Jones homered to lead off the first inning and added a three-run shot, his 11th, in the seventh.

After Jones' first homer gave the Angels a 1-0 lead, they benefited from three unearned runs in the second off Dave Stieb, 2-10. Third baseman Garth Iorg and first baseman Willie Upshaw each booted grounders before Wally Joyner's RBI single made it 4-0.

Orioles 1, Twins 0

BALTIMORE — Mike Flanagan and Don Aase combined on a six-hitter and Rick Dempsey hit his first home run since June 16 as Baltimore defeated Minnesota.

Dempsey, who hit eight homers in his first 53 games and then was blanked in the next 17, connected for No. 9 in the second inning off Neal Heaton, 3-9. It was his first RBI in 15 games.

Flanagan, 4-6, allowed five hits in 6 1-3 innings while notching a second consecutive victory for the first time in 38 starts. He struck out six, tying his season high.

Flanagan had base runners in every inning but stranded three in scoring position. He was lifted after issuing a one-out walk to Greg Gagne in the seventh.

Aase walked Kirby Puckett on a 3-2 pitch before getting Gary Gaetti to ground into a double play, and increased his major league-leading save total to 25, one shy of the Baltimore club record.

Four qualifying Midland youth soccer teams traveled to Dallas last week for the Gatorade Invitational, the last major North Texas tournament of the year.

Although competition was rough with entry into the tournament permitted only to winners and second place finishers from a selected few regional tournaments, Midland teams did hold their own.

The boys U-8 Gold Rush won their opening game in a shootout before falling in the second round. Clutch shooting by Justin Glover and solid goalkeeping by John-David Garcia helped the Gold Rush win the shootout.

Strong midfield play by Shawn Soule and Joey Marble kept the U-10 Thunderbolts close in their two games, although the team was eliminated in two games.

Faring even better were the boys U-10 Terrors and the boys U-12 Cheetahs. Both reached the final four before being eliminated.

All girls who will be eligible for the U-14 soccer competition this fall have been invited to try out for the Chaparral tea, Midland's select division team for U-14 girls. The tryout will be held Aug. 5, 7-8 p.m. at Goddard Junior High. Call ken Craft at 697 7170.

Gibson homers Tigers past Rangers, 5-3

DETROIT (AP) — Kirk Gibson hit a three-run homer in the 12th inning to give the Detroit Tigers a 5-3 comeback victory over the Texas Rangers Saturday night.

The Rangers had grabbed a 3-2 lead in the top of the 12th on Don Slaught's eighth home run, a shot into the lower center-field seats off Willie Hernandez, 5-4, the third Tiger pitcher.

With one out in the bottom of the 12th, Lou Whitaker and Alan Trammell singled off Greg Harris, 3-8, the third Texas pitcher.

Harris got two quick strikes past Gibson, who had been held hitless in his first five at-bats. But Gibson hammered the third pitch into the lower deck in right over the 365-foot mark.

The victory was the Tigers' third straight over the Rangers since the All-Star break.

In the Rangers' fourth, Larry Parrish doubled and Ruben Sierra was given an intentional walk with two outs. But the strategy backfired when Steve Buechele broke an 0-for-15 dry spell with an RBI single that scored Parrish for a 2-0 Texas lead.

Randy O'Neal started in place of Frank Tanana, who was scratched at the last minute because of a sore left shoulder. He went the first seven innings for Detroit, allowing two runs on seven hits.

Charlie Hough started for the Rangers and gave up two runs on six hits in 6 1-3 innings. Mitch Williams allowed only one hit over the 3 2-3 innings he worked.

Teams from '61 battle way to 2-2 deadlock

NEW YORK (AP) — A two-run single by former Minnesota Twins outfielder Bobby Allison was the big hit as a team of 1961 All-Star Rivals played to a 2-2 tie with the New York Yankees Saturday in the Yankees' 40th annual Old-Timers game.

Allison got his hit off Ralph Terry in the first inning. The Yankees made it 1-0 when Bobby Richardson scored from third on Bill Skowran's double-play grounder in the first and tied it when Hector Lopez scored from third on Billy Gardner's sacrifice fly in the second inning.

Former Chicago White Sox pitcher Billy Pierce and Yankees left-hander Whitey Ford started. Yankee Hall of Famers Joe DiMaggio and Mickey Mantle were in uniform, but did not play. The game was dedicated to the late Yankee outfielder Roger Maris, who hit a record 61 homers in 1961. Maris died last December at age 51.

The game was stopped with two out in the top of the third to allow the Yankees and Chicago White Sox game to begin.

Four Mets arrested in barroom brawl

By MICHAEL MARTINEZ
N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — Four New York Met players were arrested and booked early Saturday after an altercation with two off-duty police officers outside a Houston bar, the police said. Two of the players, Ron Darling and Tim Teufel, were charged with aggravated assault on a police officer, a felony.

Darling, who had been the Mets' starting and losing pitcher Friday night against the Houston Astros, and Teufel, the second baseman, are scheduled for arraignment Sunday.

Bob Ojeda and Rick Aguilera, two pitchers, were also involved in the altercation, according to the police, and face misdemeanor charges of hindering an arrest. Ojeda and Aguilera are to be arraigned Friday.

Darling and Teufel were released on $2,000 bond each, and Ojeda and Aguilera were freed on $800 bond.

Joe McIlvaine, the Mets' vice president of baseball operations, and Arthur Richman, the traveling secretary and special assistant to General Manager Frank Cashen, went to city jail in Houston Saturday morning to help the players post bond. Club officials refused to comment until they had spoken to all four players.

ACCORDING TO the police, the players were arrested at about 2 a.m. outside Cooter's Executive Games and Burgers, a popular night spot in southwest Houston that is frequented by visiting players. They were detained through the morning in a holding cell at city jail.

The officers who were involved in the fracas, R.G. Gresham and D.L. Bristley, were uniformed officers of the city police department and employees of the bar, the police said. They were working in approved part-time jobs in which officers are permitted to wear their uniforms.

According to Lt. C.J. Lofland of the Houston city police, the incident started around closing time when Teufel began to cause a loud disturbance inside the bar. Lofland said that Teufel, who had joined the team earlier in the day after his wife gave birth to the couple's first child in Greenwich, Conn., Wednesday, was escorted toward the exit and became abusive to one of the officers.

LOFLAND SAID that, when Teufel tried to leave the bar with a drink, which is illegal, the officers attempted to detain him and then put him under arrest for his disorderly manner. Teufel began to throw punches at the officers, according to Lofland, and Darling rushed to his teammate's aid. He was also arrested when he began to punch the officers, Lofland said.

Ojeda and Aguilera were arrested when they attempted to assist the first two players, according to the police.

Sources said there were at least four other Met players at the bar during the evening but all had left by the time the incident unfolded.

Take the Clara Johnson Test.

In Alamance County, North Carolina, Honda lawn mowers are assembled from the wheels up. Then each mower must pass rigid quality control standards before we ship it.

The final test is a critical performance check to ensure easy starting. We call it the Clara Johnson Test. At the end of the assembly line, each mower is started or it doesn't ship.

Come in and give the whole line of Honda mowers the Clara Johnson Test yourself. Each one will start easily, or it wouldn't be a Honda.

Index reveals residential market profiles

Expensive homes are selling faster

NEWPORT BEACH, CA — Higher priced homes enjoyed a higher rate of appreciation and were sold more quickly than lower priced homes, according to the annual Coldwell Banker Home Price Comparison Index.

The price of a typical 2,000-square-foot, single family home, which ranged from $180,000 to $380,000 in the country's more affluent areas, increased in value an average of 9.8 percent from June 1985 to May 1986. These homes were on the market for an average of 48 days, and in some areas for as few as seven days.

During the same one-year period, the average price nationally for that same type of home increased seven percent, from $130,819 to $140,039, and the home was on the market for an average of 80 days.

"The declining interest rate, which leads to increased demand, is the main reason for the higher levels of appreciation in the upper price bracket," said Joe Hanauer, chairman and president of Coldwell Banker Residential Group. "Buying a new home is one of the first things people thinking about to improve the quality of life for themselves and their families. As interest rates fall, expensive homes become more affordable," he added.

However, the Index suggests that the rate of appreciation for homes in the higher price brackets appears to be slowing, while the appreciation value of moderately priced homes is beginning to accelerate. From 1984 to 1985 homes in expensive areas increased in value an average of 12.5 percent, while the 1985-86 average rate of appreciation dropped to 9.8 percent. In contrast, homes in moderately priced areas (Groups 2 and 3) increased in value an average of 4.2 percent and 4.8 percent respectively during the same time periods.

The Coldwell Banker Index, which includes data from all 50 states and represents housing prices in 121 markets, also identified six residential real estate market groups that share some socio-economic characteristics. Although some groups conform to geographic boundaries, others are widely dispersed across the country.

The most robust markets are those in areas with a healthy and diversified economy. These markets, identified in the attached analysis as Expensive/ Growth Areas (Group 1) and Elite California Suburbs (Group 5), are mostly near major metropolitan cities. In May of this year, the homes in these groups, primarily located in the suburbs of Los Angeles, New York and San Francisco, ranged from $180,000 to $380,000 according to the Coldwell Banker Index.

"Cities in these groups are typically those that successfully pursue business expansions. These areas are in strong economic markets that support housing values with good employment opportunities," Hanauer said. " Further, cities experiencing strong home value appreciation during the past few years are in those areas that were originally built as expensive neighborhoods," he added.

A second group of markets, identified as Mid-Priced, where homes prices ranged from $101,000 to $165,000, includes metropolitan cities such as Miami, Dallas and Ft. Worth. The average price of homes in this group, $129,432, was below the national average, and the rate of home price appreciation was generally quite stable. In Dallas, for example, home prices jumped 21.7 percent from 1985 to 1986.

Miami is a good example. "There is still a demand for detached, single family homes in Miami, although the softened condominium market may have lowered the average price of homes in the community. This demand has a positive impact on the steady, upward appreciation rate," Hanauer explained.

The third cluster of markets are metropolitan centers mainly in the Heartland and the Deep South. Homes in this group were as much as $67,500 below the national average for this type of home, ranging from $72,500 to $125,000, with an average rate of appreciation of 3.6 percent. While home sin this group could be on the market for as long as 255 days, homes in Texas cities – Houston and San Antonio – sold in considerably less time.

While less expensive housing did not, in general, appreciate as much as higher priced homes, the markets in many of these areas also suffered economic setbacks from falling oil and farm prices, as well as foreign industrial competition.

The Northwest areas which make up the fourth group, with home prices ranging from $72,000 to $172,000 showed a lower than average rate of appreciation. Although the region has experienced declines in the local economy, the Coldwell Banker data suggest an upswing in the housing market in cities such as Eugene, Oregon.

Elite California Suburban Areas, such as the Newport Beach and Menlo Park communities, are part of a fifth group in which home prices ranged form $280,000 to $380,000 and were as much as 171 percent of $239,961 above the national average.

Finally, the Index revealed on area that emerged unmatched, with a 33.9 percent rate of appreciation in just one year. Greenwich, Connecticut, long known for affluent housing, realized the greatest advantage from the move toward higher priced homes. Homes that sold for $355,000 in 19834, sold for $48,000 in 1985 and $600,000 in 1986.

The Coldwell Banker Home Price Comparison Index analyzes the comparative prices and days on the market for a 2,000-square-foot- home with three bedrooms, two baths, dining area, family room, two-car garage and basement (where applicable). The subject home is typical for that of a young corporate executive family transferring from one city to another. The location is an upscale neighborhood in the community.

Homeowners single out asphalt shingles

Of the millions of homeowners who will reroof their homes this year, 80 percent will use asphalt shingles, says the Asphalt Roofing Manufacturers Association.

Join Home Builders' 1986 Parade of Homes

By GIGI MCKINNEY
Advertising Feature Writer

This weekend includes a very special event for potential homeowners of Midland. The Permian Basin Home Builders Association is sponsoring a Parade of Homes to feature some of the most beautiful and workable living space in this area.

One of the homes along the tour is a "special case." This home (center photo on the cover), located at 4518 Fairbanks, was recently completed by the Home Builders Association. Encompassing approximately 2,300 square feet of living space, this domain features traditional style with a contemporary flair.

Hidden amenities include central heat and air, double pane windows and an intercom system with AM/FM stereo.

From the entrance hall, floored in quarry tile, access can be gained to the formal living and dining areas. In the formal living expanse, a brick fireplace with a handsome wood mantle serves as the focal point beneath a cake ceiling. Windows look onto the covered patio.

A second sitting room, with French doors to the patio and fenced backyard, also features a fireplace and white ceiling fan, exuding a warm, "homey" feeling for more informal family entertainment.

An adjoining breakfast area allows easy service from an oversized table height bar in the large, open kitchen (top photo on the cover). In this all-electric expanse, service with a smile is made easy by using the built-in microwave and conventional ovens, dishwasher, cooktop and disposal. Space for a refrigerator affords plumbing for a water softener and an ice-maker connection. Decorative appointments include peach counters, ash cabinets (with adjustable shelves), fluorescent lighting and quarry tile. A built-in desk with inlayed glass cabinets completes this room's functionability.

Again, for better serving convenience, the formal dining room stands just beyond the cooking area. Front-facing double windows and a brass lamp give luster to two textured walls (Note: These walls are painted with a heavy brush stroke, resulting in a chic, decorative look.).

Just across the hallway is a powder room with a peach floral printed wallcovering and makeup lights above the marble vanity. Two linen closets are located in this hallway for easier access to the three bedrooms. And, the utility room provides a quick exit to the double garage with an electric garage door opener and a built-in vacuum system.

The two guest bedrooms, both with ample closet space share a "Hollywood" bath with a tub/shower, vanity and youthful striped pastel wallpaper.

This lovely home is listed through the Permian Basin Home Builders Association for $108,000. All proceeds on the sale of the home will benefit the Association.

...But the parade only begins here!...The list of lovely homes (some of which have been earlier features in this section) includes: 3401 Woodhaven; 4408 Westminister; 3608 Apollo; 6817 Island Circle; 1308 Terra Court; 5008 Candletree; 5431 Basswood; 1704 Castleford; 700 Meadow Park #4 and #32 Cloverdale Road. Admission is free. So, take your time and see them all. The tour is scheduled through today from noon to 6 pm.

Fascinating Facts

By Bob & Bill Drummond, Licensed Master Plumbers

"Museum" was the name given by the Greeks to a specific temple of the Muses. Today, we use the name for any building devoted to science, learning and fine arts. The first of these was probably the Alexandrian Museum founded about 280 B.C. After the revival of learning in Europe, the word "museum" was also applied to collections of antiquities, sculptures and paintings. Collections illustrative of natural history and other sciences now form a chief part of their treasures. Today, although museums of the United States are of comparatively recent origin, their growth has been rapid and exciting.

Tomato-Mania

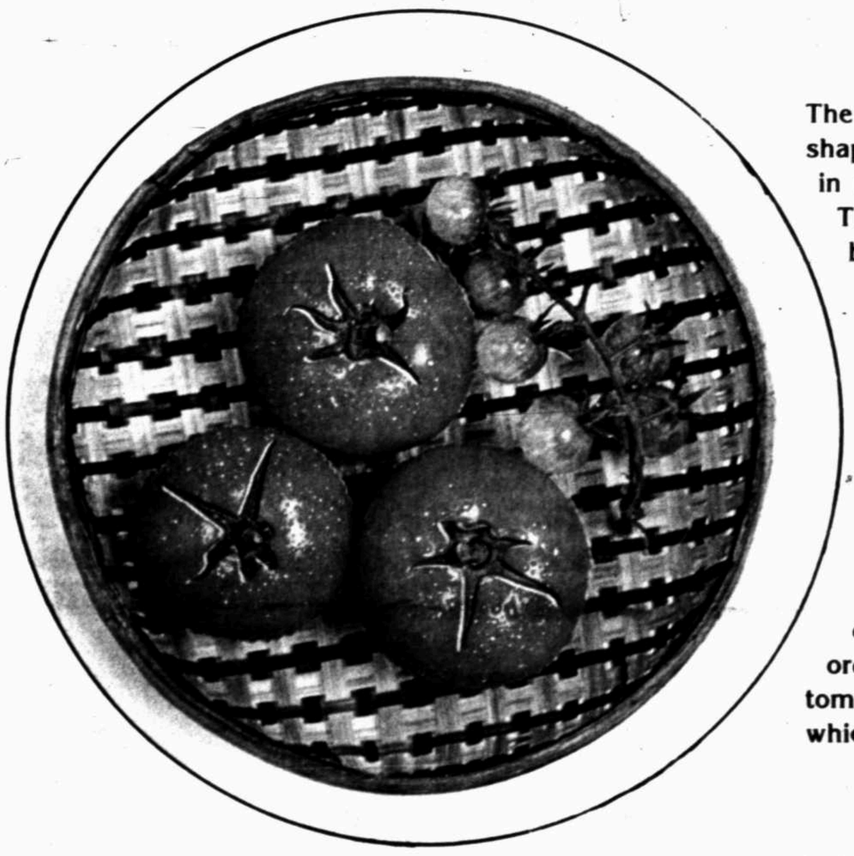
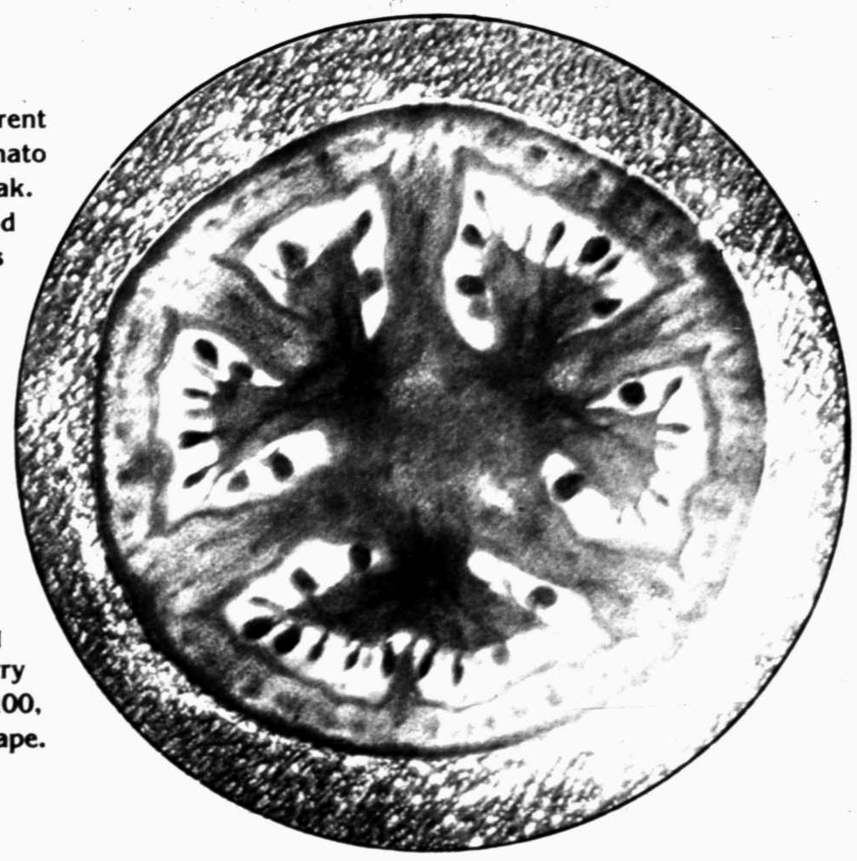
CODY BELL



The tomato can come in many different shapes and sizes. The biggest tomato in the photo above is a Beefsteak. This example, grown in Midland by gardener Joel Adcock, was so large it was nicknamed "Conan the Tomato" for its exceptional size, 15½ inches in circumference and 1 pound, 10 ounces in weight. For comparison purposes, a normal-sized Beefsteak sits directly in front of "Conan." The other tomatoes, in descending order, are a Better Boy, a Cherry tomato and, finally, a tiny Sweet 100, which is only about the size of a grape.



By David Lee Forrest

Tomato-mania reigns in Midland. The tomato is the top local garden vegetable, according to the Midland County Agricultural Extension Service, and it is generally considered the number one garden vegetable in the nation.

The tomato, however, hasn't always been so popular. This humble vegetable — or fruit, the tomato isn't too picky about such fine distinctions — has triumphed over a checkered past following it from the fall of the Aztec Empire to modern Hollywood.

BIRTH OF A VEGETABLE

The tomato originated as a wild plant with berry-sized fruits in the Andes mountains of South America, according to Fred DuBose's book, "The Total Tomato." It spread to Central America where it was cultivated as a food crop by the Mayans and Aztecs, who called it the "tomatl."

Returning to Spain after the conquest of Mexico in the 16th century, Cortes and his conquistadors took tomato seeds along with their other plunder back with them. The tomato gradually spread across Europe, but was commonly considered a decorative plant rather an edible vegetable.

"The English grew it as an ornamental for 200 years before daring to eat it," according to DuBose.

Early English settlers brought tomato seeds to the Virginia colony with them and grew the plants in their flower gardens. Thomas Jefferson, a man often ahead of his time, did grow and eat tomatoes at Monticello in the early 1780s, but the more conservative George Washington apparently only grew them as ornamental plants in his gardens at Mount Vernon.

THE FRUIT OF ALL EVIL

Europeans originally believed tomatoes were poisonous. Here are a few selected comments, quoted in "The Total Tomato," from the early days of the tomato:

- "If I should eat of this fruit, cut in slices in a pan with butter and oil, it would be injurious and harmful to me." — Pietro Antonio Michiel, 16th century, Italy.
- "They offer the body very little nourishment and that unwholesome." — Rembert Dodoens of Antwerp, 1574.
- "This plant is more pleasant to the sight than either to the taste or smell, because the fruit being eaten provoketh loathing and vomiting." — from a French herbal of 1600.
- Tomato "seeds when taken upset the stomach and cause faintness and a sort of apoplexy." — Hermann Boerhaave, 1727.
- "It is found that the use of these fruits, especially when overripe, is sometimes followed by colic or diarrhoea." — from a French herbal of 1856.

Even as late as 1970, according to Robert Hendrickson's "The Great American Tomato Book," a "health food" brochure was printed that warned "Many vegetables are actually toxic and consuming them will pollute the body and taint the brain. Tomatoes are a bigger threat to the health of this country than any other vegetable because they are related to such poisonous plants like (sic) nightshade, belladonna, and tobacco."

There is a grain of truth in that last statement. The tomato plant is a member of Solanaceae family of plants, a family that has such poisonous black sheep as nightshade, belladonna, Jimson weed as well as tobacco. However, the family also includes such lovable members as the potato, eggplant and red pepper.

In fact, the leaves and branches of the tomato plant — but not the fruit — are poisonous, but since cooks don't put sliced tomato plant branches on top of their hamburgers, this isn't normally much of a problem.

Conan the Tomato meets Midland

By Linda Anderson and David Lee Forrest

"There's nothing like a vine-ripe tomato that you pick off the vine and eat today," said longtime Midlander Joel Adcock.

Plenty of Midlanders agree with Adcock. The tomato is "most definitely" the top garden vegetable in Texas, according to Earnest Kiker, Midland County agricultural extension agent, as well as the most popular vegetable in local gardens.

"Probably 90 percent of the gardens in Midland have tomatoes in them," Kiker said. "People just like the quality of fresh-grown tomatoes from their own gardens."

"There are probably a thousand people in Midland who are growing tomatoes," Adcock noted.

In the 46 years he has lived in Midland, and the 15 years — off and on — he has been growing tomatoes here, Adcock has learned gardening tips that work well for him.

"I try to 'steal' all the information I can from everybody. Everybody likes to share their secrets with everybody else. Then they aren't secrets anymore.

"I have my own way of doing it."

In his "own way," Adcock grew the big Beefsteak tomato featured in the photograph at the top of this page. This huge tomato had a circumference of 15½ inches and weighed 1 pound, 10 ounces.

"I weighed it on three different scales. On each one of them it came out 1 pound, 10 ounces, so we're sure that is right," he said.

A HERO AT HIGH NOON

One man, Col. Robert Gibbon Johnson of Salem, N.J., has been said to have singlehandedly polished up the tomato's tarnished image in America. Johnson is described in "The Great American Tomato Book" as "a man of his own mind," which may be an understatement.

Hendrickson wrote that Johnson's pre-tomato exploits included slapping a British officer in the face during the Revolutionary War (not such a big deal except for the fact that Johnson was only 7 years old at the time), marching in the Whisky Rebellion of 1794 and changing from Episcopalian to Presbyterian just because he was annoyed at being accidentally locked out of the Episcopal Church one Sunday.

Johnson was also a tomato fancier. In 1808, according to Hendrickson, the colonel had introduced the tomato to Salem farmers after encountering it on a trip abroad. Most folks at that time, though, still considered the tomato an ornamental unfit for human consumption. To change this, Johnson announced that he would publicly consume a whole basket of tomatoes, then popularly called "wolf peaches."

Hendrickson's book quotes Johnson's physician, a Dr. James Van Meeter, as warning, "The foolish colonel will foam and froth at the mouth and double over with appendicitis. All that oxalic acid! One dose and you're dead. Johnson suffers from high blood pressure, too. That deadly juice will aggravate the condition. If the wolf peach is too ripe and warmed by the sun, he'll be exposing himself to brain fever. Should he survive, by some unlikely chance, I must remind that the skin of the Solanum lycopersicum will stick to the lining of his stomach and cause cancer."

At high noon Sept. 26, 1820 (the date is actually a matter of dispute, with some food historians setting it in 1830 instead), Johnson stood on the steps of the Salem Courthouse and started eating tomatoes. A large crowd is supposed to have gathered to see whether or not Johnson would drop dead.

This is Hendrickson's colorful description of the event: "Colonel Johnson bit and his juicy bite could be heard through the silence, until he bit again, and again, and again — at least one spectator screaming and fainting with each succeeding chomp."

Johnson reportedly survived.

Hendrickson credited this act with having "turned the tide for the tomato." DuBose is considerably more skeptical of "Johnson's celebrated, if dubious, place in tomato lore," writing that "It is farfetched to suppose that three centuries of suspicion could be dispelled in one afternoon, by one man."

VEGGING OUT IN HOLLYWOOD

Perhaps the last vestige of anti-tomato paranoia seen in this country was in a 1978 low-budget comedy-horror-musical movie, "Attack of the Killer Tomatoes!"

In this so-bad-it's-fun film, the friendly garden vegetable joined such great big-screen villains as Frankenstein and Godzilla. Tomatoes became overgrown and violently turned against mankind.

The movie's super-cheap special effects included rolling tomatoes down a staircase and then running the film backwards to make it look like they were bouncing up the stairs in hot pursuit of a victim.

While a worried Army officer looks on, a scientist examines a giant killer tomato which has been captured and is being restrained with heavy metal chains.

Scientist: "It's worst than I thought!"

Officer: "You don't mean ... ?!?"

SEX AND THE SINGLE TOMATO

While most early myths about the tomato focused on the supposed dangers of the vegetable, others espoused it as an aphrodisiac.

One of the earliest English names for the tomato was the "love apple." It was also called the "apple of love" in Italy, "pomum amoris", and in France, "pomme d'amour". In German, the tomato is still sometimes called "die Liebesapfel," "the love apple."

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Wedding bells will ring for Anne de Compiegne and Jim Lutz on Oct. 4. To celebrate the couple's engagement, Anne's parents, Mary and Henri de Compiegne Jr., entertained with a festive party last weekend at their home. A cocktail buffet was served poolside.

The couple also were feted with a Mexican supper the following evening at the home of Margery and Jack Riggs. Co-hosting were Sally and Bill Reeder and Mary and Ted LaCaff.

Among the party guests were Jim's mother, Bette Lutz of Dayton, Ohio, and the bride-elect's attendants, her sister, Elise de Compiegne; Patti O'Neill and Mary Moberly of Midland, Pam Creighton and Linda Phelps of Dallas, and the groom's sister, Pam Lutz of Dayton. Also present were friends of the couple, Charles Meachum and John Redd from Dallas, who were house guests of Anne's brother, Joe de Compiegne.

The couple reside in Dallas, but will return to Midland to be married in St. Ann's Catholic Church. Anne is a graphic artist for The Promotion Network, and her fiance is a senior at Southwestern Medical School at Dallas.

ELEVEN MIDLAND RESIDENTS were among the millions who took part in Liberty Weekend in New York over the Fourth of July holiday.

The tour group included Patsy (Mrs. W. Arthur, Sr.) Yeager, her granddaughters, Elizabeth and Marian Yeager; Susan Huff and daughter, Dedee, Norma (Mrs. J.C.) Gotcher, Juanita Castillo and daughter, Andrea, Alice Gordon, Annie Jones and Ann Andrews.

The Midlanders enjoyed all the hoopla associated with the centennial extravaganza celebrating the restoration of the Statue of Liberty. They had grandstand seats for the magnificent fireworks display over the East River and for the closing ceremonies, at which former Midlander Vice President George Bush spoke. Mrs. Yeager's grandson, Arthur Yeager, and his wife, Lisa, who reside in Manhattan, joined the group for the latter event.

Other highlights of the tour were a boat ride on the East River, dinner at Mamma Leone's and the Broadway hit musical, "Big River: Adventures of Huckleberry Finn."

SUE DILLARD recently celebrated her 80th birthday. The milestone event was observed with a cocktail party hosted by her son and daughter-in-law, Bill and Dee Dillard of Houston, and her nephew and his wife, Al and Jane Dillard, in the latter couple's home.

Guests included longtime Midland friends of the honoree, friends from Trinity Towers, where Mrs. Dillard now makes her home, and family members.

Following the party, the family enjoyed a barbecue dinner and reunion at Al and Jane's. Among those attending were Mrs. Dillard's in-laws, Ina Dillard of Midland, Retha Davis and Genevieve Dillard, both of Mexia; Laura Margaret and Allen Dillard of Fort Worth and Dorothy and Jack Dillard of Austin, as well as numerous nieces and nephews from throughout Texas.

Mrs. Dillard was born July 10, 1906, in Princeton, Ark., but grew up in nearby Fordyce. She and her husband, the late J.D. Dillard, moved to Midland over 40 years ago.

THE PARTY DECOR and refreshments carried out Cheryl Limmer's chosen wedding colors of pink and white at the miscellaneous shower given in her honor Tuesday evening. She and Greg Long plan to be married Aug. 9 in Alamo Heights Baptist Church.

Held in the home of Lou Ann (Mrs. Loie) Badgett, the party was co-hosted by Ruby (Mrs. Len) Killough, Olivia (Mrs. Jimmy) Padgett, Kelli (Mrs. David) Hastings, Tami (Mrs. Clint) Yonts and Ann (Mrs. Dean) Constable.

Special guests were the groom's mother, Colena (Mrs. Paul) Long, and the bride's grandmother, Peggy (Mrs. Carl) Chambers.

Cheryl is the daughter of former Midlanders, Carla and Johnny Limmer, who moved to Houston last month.

RECENTLY MOVING TO DALLAS were Jim Green and his wife, Sue, nee Devine. Jim is now co-owner and vice president of a television and commercial business in Las Colinas.

Sue was curator and acting director at the Museum of the Southwest prior to their move. Jim, son of Jeanne and Paul Green, was part owner of Bond-Coat, Inc., a business his father started in Hobbs, N.M., in 1963.

"LET'S SHOWER Marcia Johnson with recipes" began the invitations to a fun party held Tuesday afternoon in the home of Joan (Mrs. Robert) Southerland.

Guests also were requested to bring a spice, container or ingredient to complement their recipes. The gifts were displayed on baker's racks in the living room of the Southerland home.

Decorating the serving table was the hostess gift, a canister set in slate blue (the color Marcia has chosen to decorate her kitchen), accented with ivy and blue silk flowers.

TOMATOES

When the hefty vegetable was being photographed last week, one wag promptly dubbed it "Conan the Tomato." It isn't in the running for the world's record, though; the largest tomato recorded is a 6-pound, 8-ounce one grown by Clarence Dailey of Mononoa, Wis., in Aug. 1976, according to the "1986 Guinness Book of World Records."

Still, "Conan" was easily the biggest tomato Adcock has ever grown, "by a considerable amount," he said. "The vine that it was on is pretty well loaded even still, and I've already picked at least a dozen off it, but not anything that large."

"Conan" has met his fate, Adcock said, adding, "It was very good."

The biggest challenge to growing prime tomatoes in Midland, the experienced gardener said, is the water supply's high chemical content. He recommends using "at least a cup of gypsum in the bottom of the hole" being prepared for each tomato plant.

ONCE PLANTED, Kiker said, "Proper watering is real important" for tomatoes in this normally arid climate. He stressed that tomatoes should be watered slowly and deeply to reach the entire root system.

"Tomatoes are relatively easy to produce if they're properly watered," he said.

Adcock does not use synthetic fertilizer, preferring to put steer manure in the bottom of each hole and on top of the ground. "I work it in at least twice before planting — once in the wintertime before planting, and once in the early spring before planting season."

Each plant "must be a healthy plant, regardless of what it is," said Adcock. With tomatoes, "I like the plants to be at least 12 inches tall (or taller) when planted. I plant 12 inches deep at least, then trim off the leaves up to the bunch.

"Regardless of the length of the plant, the little cluster of leaves at the top have to be two or three inches above the ground. They are very delicate and have to be handled very carefully or they will break very easily."

INSECTS ARE a problem in any garden and the ones in Midland are no exception. Nematodes, which Adcock said are so minute "you can't see them with your natural eye," attack the roots of tomato plants, causing them to enlarge "10 to 15 times normal size. The leaves turn yellow and the vine will die."

Liquid nematode killer is available, Adcock said, but he prefers to use it in granulated form. "I get it at the farmers' co-op."

Adcock warns against using insecticide, because not only will it kill harmful bugs, it will also kill helpful ones such as ladybugs and preying mantises.

The West Texas heat sometimes causes "bloomset," he said, which means the "bloom doesn't get pollinated; it will shrivel up and drop off." To combat this problem, Adcock recommends using "super triple phosphate. It takes about two tablespoons for each plant. Of course you have to water everything down."

However, don't get carried away, he warned. Gardeners should be careful watering their tomato vines. "After the roots are established, a rule of thumb is, 'Don't water until the leaves wilt just a little bit,' " to prevent overwatering. "Too much water is just as bad as too little."

SO FAR this year, Adcock said, he has harvested about two bushels of tomatoes. "I get the best results with the larger ones, like Big Boy" and Beefsteak. "I also plant Yellow Bell — they are small and are yellow, and are shaped like a bell.

The best larger varieties for Midland gardens are the picturesquely-named Jackpot, Bigset, Bounce and Parks Whopper, according to Kiker. Some good smaller tomatoes are Porter and Smallfry, he said.

Mary Stillwell, manager of Wolfe Nursery in Midland, said "any tomato will do good in Midland," but the ones she recommends most often are Summertime, Super Fantastic, Celebrity, Cherry tomatoes, Porter and Sweet 100s.

"We don't recommend Big Boy or Beefsteak because huge tomatoes don't do well — they don't get that big here."

Russell Johnson, manager of La Casa Verde nursery, said popular tomato plants in Midland include Better Boy, Super Fantastic, Beefsteak — "Beefsteak are still a good seller; they aren't necessarily one of the better varieties," he said, "but they are a best seller" — and Sweet 100s.

FALL IS an excellent time for planting, the gardening professionals said.

"Fall gardens are the best ones to do out here," Ms. Stillwell said. "They are more productive."

Fall tomatoes should be planted "now," Kiker advised, adding that, in fact, "it could be running a little late."

"Most larger tomatoes produce all summer and until the frost," Adcock observed.

He will probably have at least another bushel of tomatoes before the end of growing season, he said, some of which he will keep and many of which he will give away to neighbors and friends.

"They are easy to can, but we don't get into that," Adcock said. "We just eat them and give them away — that's what they were made for."

Sun can scald tomato

Associated Press

Tomatoes require sunshine to ripen, but too much of a good thing can cause sunscald, according to Better Homes and Gardens.

This malady shows up as a white or yellow papery blister on the part of the tomato that is most exposed to the sun. Although natural foliage cover usually provides the necessary protection, plants damaged by disease or insects often have insufficient leaf cover.

To correct this, let plants sprawl on the ground so they'll shade themselves from the full sun.

VEGETABLE

In his book, "Horsefeathers," Dr. Charles Funk wrote that even in turn-of-the-century Ohio his mother avoided eating the tomato because it was "believed to possess aphrodisiac properties, and was therefore feared by virtuous maidens."

There are a number of theories on how the tomato acquired this strange sexy reputation. Probably the simplest and most logical is just that its bright red color and shape reminded people of the human heart.

Associated Press

Vine-ripened tomatoes will reward you this summer with the sweet taste of success.

When problems appear on tomato plants, it might be too late to save fruits already damaged, but a little troubleshooting now will ensure later harvests of blue-ribbon tomatoes.

You can avoid natural disasters in your tomato row by learning to identify and correct all of these common weather-related problems.

■ Blossom-end rot:

A scar or rotted area on the blossom-end of a tomato is the telltale sign of blossom-end rot. This ailment is caused by a dramatic change in soil moisture, and often occurs when the weather turns from a cool rainy period to a dry heat wave.

How to correct: Plant tomatoes in well-drained soil. Mulch plants to keep soil moisture and temperature constant.

■ Blossom drop:

Tomato plants require a nightly temperature range of 55 to 75 degrees Fahrenheit to set fruit. Unseasonably cool or hot weather during the blooming phase can make blossoms fall off. Heavy winds may also damage flowers.

How correct: Keep young plants warm on cool nights by covering them with cloches. Protect plants from wind.

■ Sunscald:

Tomatoes require sunshine to ripen, but too much of a good thing can cause sunscald. This malady shows up as a white or yellow papery blister on the part of the tomato that is most exposed to the sun. Although natural foliage cover usually provides the necessary protection, plants damaged by disease or insects often have insufficient leaf cover.

How to correct: Let plants sprawl on the ground so they'll shade themselves from full sun.

■ Fruit cracks:

Few things are more pleasing to the gardener's eye than an unblemished tomato, but a tomato with cracks is less appetizing. Found on the blossom-end of the fruit, cracks are often caused by a sudden change in weather. A long rainy spring followed by a hot dry spell, for example, makes fruits grow more rapidly than their skins can expand. Full exposure to the sun, due to lack of foliage, also can cause cracking.

How to correct: Mulch plants to keep soil moisture constant.

Many of the disease-resistant tomato hybrids you see in mail-order seed catalogs or seed racks also will stand up to weather-related afflictions. If this year's tomato crop is a letdown, try one of these varieties next spring.

R_x for Flu or Chicken Pox: Kindness

Viral illnesses such as these are usually self-limiting. Time will cure them.

Check with your doctor about using medications to treat flu or chicken pox. For children — including teenagers — medications such as aspirin and aspirin-containing products may not be a good idea. A rare but dangerous condition called Reye syndrome may develop in young people just when they appear to be recovering. Studies strongly suggest a link between the development of Reye and the use of aspirin to treat the flu or chicken pox.

By ED HUTCHISON
Hearst News Service

When flower gardeners get in a rut — every year, the same assortment of marigolds, petunias, zinnias and other annuals — their predicatable answer is understandable: Why change a good thing?

The answer is easy: Don't change a good thing, just grow some different things. Here are some suggestions, with addresses of the seed companies:

■ Hibiscus are not new, but they're unfamiliar to most gardeners. They grow outdoors anywhere in the country and will winter over in the north if protected.

One of the oustanding varieties that came along in 1985 was "Disco Belle White." It's a hybrid, growing just 24 inches, which makes it ideal for a bed or a border. The flower is striking: Nine inches across, pure white, with a vivid red center. The plants bloom freely, often with four or more flowers out at a time. A group of a dozen or more makes a stunning display. "White" has been joined this season by a red variety, "Disco Belle Red." It is a perennial, but will bloom the first season from seed. Buy already-started plants if you can find them to get the most flower return for the season. (Park)

■ Marigold "Toreador" won the coveted All-America Selections award in 1960, but seems to have gotten shuffled aside in the course of new introductions. It's still available in seed packets and that's fortunate because it has a very intense deep orange flower that's five inches across. The flowers are ruffled on the edges. Overall, the plant grows about 30 inches tall.

Hibiscus

Its striking features are color and the nice proportion of the blossom to the plant. It is exceptional for cutting and looks nice in the garden. If seeds are not available locally, try Burpee or Stokes.

■ Marigold "Irish Lace" is a Park introduction of many years ago. Imagine an asparagus fern that grows in a six-inch round ball and you have "Irish Lace." It looks like heather and bears tiny white flowers in the fall. Use it as a border in front of plants 15 inches tall or less; any taller and "Irish Lace" would be hopelessly dwarfed. It is an exceptionally fine border plant. (Park)

■ Nicotiana has been around since our grandmothers were gardening. This valuable annual is being rediscovered and is being grown by the bedding plant industry. Probably the 1979 AAS award to 'Nicki-Red' helped in this rebirth.

There's nothing truly remarkable about nicotiana other than it's a good, all-around, always-in-flower, trouble-free garden plant. The colors are red, rose, white, lime green and pink. Some of the older varieties ("Affinis" and "Sensation") are scented in the evening. Seeds are usually available locally or by mail from Park, Burpee, Stokes and other seed houses.

■ Stock is the name of an annual with snapdragon-like flowering habits, except that it's less fussy than snapdragons. One variety, "Tysomic 7 Week Blend," blooms in seven weeks from seed on 15-inch plants. The color range is impressive, including white, pink, rose, deep crimson, dark blue and purple. They make fine cutting flowers and don't require staking, as do snapdragons. Seeds can usually be found locally and may be found as bedding plants in small greenhouse operations. Otherwise, try Stokes, Park or Burpee.

■ Salpiglossis is also called velvet flower. Chances are, you'll be the only one in a square mile to grow it. It's easy to raise and has beautiful petunia-like flowers with deep, rich veining of the petals. Colors include gold, rose, red, crimsom and blue. An excellent dwarf variety is "Friendship Mixed" (from Park). An equally good standard-height variety from Burpee is "Bolero Mixed."

■ Basil "Spicy Globe" was introduced by Park in 1985. It is an outstanding border or accent plant, growing 15 inches across by 8 inches high. It grows in a globe shape naturally, holding the shape through the heat of the summer and loosing it only when heavy autumn rains break it down. It is a true herb with the flavor of the Italian basil. It is available only from Park.

Where-to-buy: Park Seed Co., Highway 254 N, Greenwood, SC 29647-0001; W. Atlee Burpee Co., 200 Park Ave., Warminster, PA 18974, and Stokes Seeds Inc., Box 548, Buffalo, NY 14240.

Common sense garden tool

By MARIE HAMMOCK
Hearst News Service

When buying any plant, any size, be sure to ask at your nursery what the mawlers like pelargoniums and marguerites that used to overwhelm annuals are now frequently treated with growth retardent chemicals to keep them compact. The particular named variety of any bedding plant should be of help: Don't expect 5-foot dahlias if you're planting something that's tagged "Unwin's Dwarf."

Prepare your soil. This is the least attractive part of gardening, but it pays off better than any slot machine in Reno. Don't just weed the garden — cultivate it. Dig down double the depth of your flat-edged spade and work some organic matter into the compacted soil to keep it loose.

Compost will lighten the soil, and any animal manures will enrich it. Rabbit "berries" can be used immediately, but horse manure is chemically "hot" and should be aged at least a year. If you have an agricultural feed store near by, look for alfalfa meal, which can be worked into the soil or used as a mulch.

"Dig a $10 hole for a $5 plant" is good advice. If you're planting a tree and dig a hole just big enough to get the tree in the ground, you're tempting fate. If there's too much contrast in soil density — between a light porous potting mix and a heavy, clay soil, for instance — plant roots may want to stay in the potting soil, growing 'round and 'round, first girding and then strangling the tree. Or there may be an "interface" between the two kinds of soil that hampers drainage, so plant roots rot. So dig a great big hole, then mix some garden soil with whatever's around your tree roots to make a transition layer around the rootball itself.

With few exceptions, the soil level around your new plant should be the same as it was in the container. This is particularly true of woody ornamentals such as trees and shrubs which will develop bark diseases if soil is piled too high around their trunks.

It's not hard to locate the soil level — the dividing line between the above-ground plant and its root system — if you make an effort to look. An exception to this treatment might be tomato plants, which can be planted much deeper and will grow roots out of the newly-buried section of stem, further anchoring the fast-growing plant.

Don't worry about feeding plants right away; most have been overfed in the greenhouse and don't need fertilizing for about three months, except for fast-growing bedding plants like petunias and marigolds. Some of the pelleted, slow-release fertilizers such as Osmocote are more expensive but avoid soil buildup in container plantings.

Watering: This is the most critical part of garden maintenance. Don't ever let plants dry out during planting or transplanting, and make sure they don't dry out at any time for the first couple of weeks.

Don't be guilty of chemical abuse in your own garden, whether you're dealing with fertilizers, insecticides, fungicides, stump and root killers. Read the label on your gardening product and follow the directions to the letter. Check also for any warnings about combinations of chemicals.

Don't pour chemicals into other containers, such as coke bottles, for storage. Don't leave them in a potting shed or garage where some toddler might reach them. Garden chemicals belong on a 6-foot-high shelf, or better yet, under lock and key.

Gardens' unwelcome insects fought different ways

By ANITA LEWIS
Hearst News Service

With visions of a bountiful harvest, you braved this spring's changeable weather and started planting your backyard garden. Now, unless you're among the favored few, chances are some creepy, crawly wildlife are eyeing your tender shoots.

The first step to ridding your garden of pesky critters is to figure out which of nature's more unwelcome creations is after your veggies. Then take advantage of the following advice from the University of Maryland Cooperative Extension Service for dealing with the varmints.

Remember, all insecticide recipe amounts should be diluted in a gallon of water. Although the Extension Service says that the pesticides recommended are among the safest and least toxic to people and animals, it urges users to follow carefully all label directions and precautions and to pay attention to directions on how long to wait after last application before harvesting.

■ APHIDS: Treat when they appear in clusters on leaves or stems and repeat only if necessary.

For lima and snap beans, cabbage, broccoli and cauliflower, use 2 tsps. Malathion 50 percent EC and wait a day before harvesting, or use 2 tsps. Diazinon (Spectracide) 25 pecent EC and wait seven days. Don't use on brussels sprouts. For peas and tomatoes, use 2 tsps. Malathion 50 percent EC or 2 tsps. Diazinon (Spectracide) 25 percent EC. Wait one day after using Diazinon for peas and tomatoes, wait a day for Malathion with tomatoes and wait three days after using Malathion on peas. For beets and eggplants, use 2 tsps Malathion 57 percent EC. Wait seven days before harvesting beets and three days for eggplants.

For radishes, cucumbers, cantaloupes, watermelon, squash and pumpkins use 2 tsps. Malathion 57 percent EC. Wait seven days before harvesting radishes and a day before cukes, lopes and watermelon; check the label for squash and pumpkins. Or use Diazinon (Spectracide) 25 percent EC 2 tsps. Wait 10 days before harvesting radishes, seven days for cucumbers and three days for cantaloupes, watermelon squash and pumpkins. For peppers, treat with Malathion as for beets and wait three days before harvesting, or use 2 tsps. Diazinon (Spectracide) 25 percent EC and wait seven days to harvest. For Irish potatoes, use Malathion 50 percent EC. You can harvest them immediately.

■ CUTWORMS: If these varmints are attacking your sweetcorn or tomatoes, try cutting off young plants at or below ground surface.

If pesticide is necessary, use 4 tbsps. Sevin 50 percent WP or 2 tsps. Diazinon (Spectracide) 25 percent EC. Wait one day from last application to harvest. Plants may also be protected by placing a stiff 3-inch cardboard collar around stems. Allow the collar to extend about 1 inch into the soil and protrude 2 inches above the soil. Be sure to clear the stem by at least ½ inch.

■ CABBAGE MAGGOT: For cabbage, broccoli and cauliflower, treat when worms are very small and repeat every seven days.

Follow directions on the label for Bacillus thuringiensis (Dipel, Bactur, Bactospeine, Bug-Time and Thuricide are some trade names) or use 2 tsps. Diazinon (Spectracide) 25 percent EC and check the label for waiting time. Don't use on brussels sprouts.

■ COLORADO POTATO BEETLE: There is no effective chemical control for these critters. Just hand-pick the insects from the foliage.

■ CORN EARWORM (also known as tomato fruitworm): Sprays applied for corn earworm should protect the ears from corn borers. Plow under or destroy overwintered stalks which harbor borers. For sweetcorn and tomatoes, use 4 tsps of Sevin 50 percent WP. There is no waiting period for harvest.

■ MEXICAN BEAN BEETLE: Treat when the foliage damage becomes conspicuous and repeat only if necessary. For lima and snap beans, use 2 tbsps Sevin 50 percent WP (no wait to harvest) or 2 tbsps. Methoxychlor 50 percent WP (seven days' wait) or 2 tsps. Malathion 57 percent EC (wait one day).

■ RED SPIDER MITE: Treat when the foliage damage (stippling) appears and repeat in seven to 10 days. Mites are favored by hot, dry weather. For cucumbers and cantaloupes, use 1 tbsp. Kelthane 18.5 percent EC (wait two days to harvest) or 2 tsps. Diazinon (Spectracide) 25 percent EC and wait seven days to harvest cucumbers and three days for loupes. For watermelon, use 2 tsps. of Kelthane 18.5 percent EC and wait two days to harvest or use 2 tsps. Diazinon and wait three days.

■ TOMATO HORNWORM: Treat or hand-pick worms when foliage injury is first noticed. Repeat only if necessary. For tomatoes, use 4 tbsps. Sevin 50 percent WP or use Bacilus thuringiensis and check label for waiting period.

■ FLEA BEETLE: Treat when tiny holes appear in the leaves. Repeat only if necessary. For beets and eggplant, use 2 tbsps. Sevin 50 percent WP and wait three days before harvesting beets. For cabbage, broccoli, cauliflower and sweet corn, use 2 tbsps. Sevin 50 percent WP and wait three days before harvesting or use 2 tsps. Diazinon (Spectracide) 25 percent EC and check the label.

Garden's colors should please eye

By ED HUTCHISON
Hearst News Service

In a few months many flower gardens will look as if they've been stricken by measles, with scattered, telltale blotches of color. The mess will not be the fault of insects, disease or weather, but that of the gardener.

The problem begins when the gardener buys too few of too many varieties and crams them too close together. Too often, it's a case of six yellow marigolds next to six cream petunias next to six red zinnias, with a dozen purple allysum lined up in a row like little tin soldiers.

There's nothing wrong with planting a variety of different types and colors of annuals. The secret is in doing it carefully so shapes and colors flow together, rather than clash. It's the same principle as painting a room. Seldom are the four walls painted four different colors.

Many gardeners like mixing just two colors; the results are usually quite nice. There's nothing wrong with a bed of pink and white petunias. Throw purple or red in and the combination is not so attractive. Here are a few ideas to keep in mind when planning and planting.

■ Colors are splashiest when a dozen or more of the same variety is planted in a clump. Make the clump egg-shaped, tailoring the curve to match the depth of the garden. If it's narrow, make the egg skinnier. If the bed is wide, fatten the egg. Scatter the clumps within the garden area. How close plants are placed depends on the variety and effect wanted.

■ Large annuals, such as certain marigolds and zinnias, might be spaced 12 inches apart since they will reach 24 or more inches high at maturity. Miniature versions might be spaced just 6 inches apart. For specifics, check the label if buying transplants or study the seed packet. The planting instructions are designed to give individual plants a fair amount of growing room. Plant a few inches closer for a denser look.

■ Change colors quietly. For example, a 20-foot long bed has plenty of room to start with pink zinnias at one end and finish at the other with red or white zinnias.

Hollis and the former Letha Chaffin were married July 8, 1936 in Wink. They lived in Crane, where Hollis was employed with Gulf Oil Corp.

In 1942 he formed Crane Well Service, and after selling the business in 1951, the family moved to Midland where Hollis established Southwestern Inc.

The family and the company moved to Lovington, N.M., in 1952, and stayed for 20 years. In 1972 they returned to Midland.

Among those helping the Hollis' celebrate their anniversary was Mrs. Hollis' mother, Prudy, 88, who lives in Crane, and her brother and sister-in-law, Ed and Lou Chaffin of Midland.

Wedding gifts should fit couple's tastes

Copley News Service

Wedding gifts — they can often intimidate well-meaning guests.

No one wants to give the new bride and groom something they already own or join several other guests in giving the same item. Guests want their gifts to be unique, liked and remembered.

Yet, it's difficult to guess whether the new couple will really like that silver pitcher you've admired in the store, or if they're more likely to need a functional gift like a hand mixer.

Enter the wedding gift registry ... a way for guests to be sure they're giving the couple something they want and that the gift is not a duplicate.

Registries have been around for a while, but they're more popular than ever. They work by providing a clearinghouse where a couple can record the items they'd like, and guests can look over the list and choose the gifts that fit their taste and budget, according to Bride's magazine. About 65 percent of brides and grooms register. Many systems are computerized so updates are quick and accurate.

In addition to traditional gift items, couples can register for furniture, housewares, electronic equipment, luggage, sporting goods and specialty foods.

What about bi-coastal marriages where the bride and groom are miles away from family and friends? It's important for the bride to register with a large department store that has good geographical distribution. The stores have a well-organized system that can let someone miles away know what the bride's choice is.

A bride can also make up her own registry by using catalogs. She simply chooses dish patterns, silverware and other gifts and lets friends and relatives know the catalogs and item numbers.

What is the perfect gift for today's brides and grooms? Many people immediately think of the big three — china, crystal and silver. While these are welcome gifts, the possibilities have expanded to anything the couple might enjoy, according to Bride's.

Brides and grooms of the '80s are requesting and receiving everything from his-and-hers exercise equipment and gardening tools to accessories for their personal computer..

"Couples marrying now have more defined ideas of what they need for setting up a home," said Barbara Tober, editor-in-chief of Bride's. They are older than the average bride and groom of the past and many newlyweds have been married before.

"They want the traditional items, of course, but they also appreciate gifts that are individual and creative, a bit out of the ordinary."

If the couple is not registered, it's a safe bet that they can use extra blankets, towels, linens or a variety of tabletop items and housewares. If they have a distinct "personality," one of these ideas might fit:

■ Gourmet: wine glasses, a wine rack, a wine label scrapbook, membership in a wine-of-the month club

■ Exercisers: warm-up suits and leotards, an exercise bike, membership at a health club

■ Travelers: luggage, sunglasses, beach towels, passport wallets, a travel alarm or portable iron

■ Social butterflies: an appointment book, an engraved pen, theater or opera tickets, restaurant gift certificates

■ Sports fans: a stadium blanket and thermos, season football tickets

■ Sailors: floating barware, deck chairs, a compass, an all-weather radio, a picnic basket for snacks

■ The couple setting up a home office: bookends, paperweights, desk sets, a remote telephone, a tape recorder or dictaphone

■ The couple buying a first home: gardening tools, a leaf blower, a lawn mower, a garden sun dial, a wheelbarrow, snow shovels, a welcome mat, a bridge table, folding chairs

■ Clothes horses: Closet organizers, clothing steamer, iron and board

At a wine shower, guests would bring an assortment of vintages and accessories. This way, the happy couple would have drink to last many weeks after the leftover wedding spirits ran dry.

In addition to the traditional bachelor party, a coed "groom's shower" can be thrown for the couple by mutual friends. Guests could bring gifts like barbecue equipment or tools the couple will need for at-home repairs.

Husbands say they would remarry wives

CHICAGO (AP) — Given the chance to do it over, an overwhelming majority of men surveyed said they'd marry their wives again, the Chicago Sun-Times reports.

The results, published in a copyright story in Sunday editions, showed that of 2,301 men who wrote in, 1,788 said they would remarry their wives.

The men's response was much more affirmative than that of women who responded to similar questions asked recently by Woman's Day magazine.

Only half of the women who wrote in to the magazine said they would marry their current husbands if given the chance to do it over again.

David Roadhouse, a Chicago psychotherapist, suggested the reason for the disparity might be that "On the whole, men experience fulfillment more easily than women do. Women are filled with all these romantic yearnings, and romance is finite, limited, difficult to sustain."

Rhyme or Reason

Mother Goose vs. Father Gander

Text and Graphic by Elizabeth Edwin

There is a mystical magic about Mother Goose. No one seems to know her exact origin ... or the time in which she lived ... or if she was ever even a real person. But to many children and adults alike, she and her rhymes and tales have been a part of our formative years.

Over the years, the scene has been the same. Mom or Dad, or even a grandparent, will sit on the child's bedside and recite a Mother Goose tale or lullaby while the child drifts into a dreamland of slumber.

But now Mother Goose is being challenged by Dr. Douglas W. Larche, alias "Father Gander." He contends that Mother Goose rhymes contain hidden or incorporated messages of violence, brutality, sexism, racism, irresponsibility, helplessness and nutritional ignorance, and is claiming to begin a new era for children's literature.

"Our adult perceptions are largely the result of our childhood perceptions, prejudices and stereotypes," says Larche, author of a new book with updated children's rhymes which he has titled "Father Gander Nursery Rhymes: The Equal Rhymes Amendment," published by Advocacy Press, the publishing arm of the Girls Club of Santa Barbara, Calif.

Larche has amended the Mother Goose rhymes, which he considers the "less constructive" traditional nursery rhymes, to present positive, wholesome messages for children to shape their perceptions of the real world by. The Father Gander revisions are said to incorporate or hide messages of kindness, love, equality, cultural plurality, responsibility, personal power and good nutrition.

"Nursery rhymes are among a child's first encounters with language and culture, and as such, may have an indelible impact. I felt it was time to make that impact warmer, safer, kinder, fairer, and above all, more inclusive," Larche said. "My new rhymes are not a rejection of all things traditional. More evolution than revolution, they offer exciting new alternatives to go with the traditional choices."

Larche boasts of being a professor, playwright, songwriter, director, actor and coach, as well as being the father of two. He earned a doctorate in speech communication from Indiana University and is currently professor and chair of the speech and theatre department at Grand View College in Des Moines, Iowa. He also serves as an educational consultant for Iowa State Department of Education.

ALTHOUGH HARVEY Durbin, a Midland psychologist, had not heard of the Father Gander Nursery Rhymes, he believed in the general principal behind Larche's revisions in the name of equality.

"If I were to read over the Mother Goose Rhymes and find that they did seem to promote these negative behaviors, I would be in favor of the revisions. They could help ease the transition for children," Durbin said.

"The whole equality movement came about in midstream so that a group was taught one thing as a child and expected to act another way as an adult," Durbin noted. "These rhymes sound like they could help teach children the basics we live by today. Their idea seems to more accurately portray the way things are now."

Though some of Larche's ideas may be well-founded, this idea is not his own brainstorm.

According to William S. and Ceil Baring-Gould in "The Annotated Mother Goose," as early as 1641, George Wither protested that many the rhymes were unfit for children's ears.

In 1937, Professor Allen Abbott also urged nursery rhyme reform, as did Geoffrey Hall in 1949-50. Geoffrey Handley-Taylor of Manchester, England, published a brief biography of the literature of nursery rhyme reform in 1952 in which he wrote that the average collection of 200 traditional rhymes contained approximately 100 rhymes which portrayed glorious and ideal elements for the child.

The remaining 100 consisted of a list of elements considered not suitable for children, including murder, threats, kidnapping, physical violence, torment and cruelty to human beings and animals, abandonment, racial discrimination, and the list goes on and on.

THAT, HOWEVER, is only one side of the coin. The Baring-Gould's book also quoted poet Walter de la Mare who spoke in defense of Mother Goose. He wrote that her rhymes "free the fancy, charm tongue and ear, delight the inward eye, and many of them are tiny masterpieces of word craftsmanship — of the latest device in the rhythm, indeed — the 'sprung'! Last, but not least, they are not only crammed with vivid little scenes and objects and living creatures, but, however fantastic and nonsensical they may be, they are a direct short cut into poetry itself. How any child who was ever delightedly dandled to their strains can have managed to grow up proof against their enchantment, and steadily and desperately more and more matter-of-fact and prosaic, is a question to which I can find no satisfactory answer."

RHYMES

"Children still need fantasy. So much of the newer literature pushes children to know more intellectually and the media available pushes to kids. I think because of this children can come across more intellectual and sophisticated than they really are," Ms. George said.

"Occasionally we try to make our kids grow up to fast. There is a book called 'The Hurried Child' (by David Elkind) that I recommend to all teachers and parents. It talks about growing up too fast, too soon," Ms. George said.

The works of Mother Goose are not the products of a single mind, but rather the works of a host of authors, comprising songs, tales and rhymes gathered from traditional lore all down the ages.

In many cases, casual reading would not disclose the original source of the reality behind the colorful rhymes. Many of the Mother Goose rhymes and riddles have a political backgrounds, but Mother Goose disguises her historical characters in such literary garb that they often go unrecognized. A child is unaware of these hidden meanings, but the enjoyment of their inner charm and musical appeal is captivating.

THE BRITISH contributed a great deal to the treasury of Mother Goose. One example of this is "Humpty Dumpty." In the days when baron and king fought for supremacy, one evaluation, cited in "The Real Mother Goose" by J.B. MacDougall, sees Humpty Dumpty as the diverting picture of arrogant King John toppled unceremoniously from his seat of power never to rise again.

Larche envisions "Humpty Dumpty" as violent and sexist, and therefore has revised the old Mother Goose favorite. His revision is:

HUMPTY DUMPTY
Humpty Dumpty sat on the wall,
Humpty Dumpty had a great fall;
All of the horses,
the women and men,
Put Humpty Dumpty together again.

The following is the way this favorite Mother Goose Nursery Rhyme first appeared in print, in "Grammer Gurton's Garland," edition of 1810.

Humpty Dumpty sat on the wall,
Humpty Dumpty had a great fall;
Threescore men and threescore more,
Cannot place Humpty Dumpty
as he was before.

But the version we know best today goes:

Humpty Dumpty sat on the Wall,
Humpty Dumpty had a great fall.
All the king's horses,
And all the king's men,
Couldn't put Humpty together again.

In the earliest appearance of this better-known version (as a manuscript addition to a copy of "Mother Goose's Melody," published about 1803) the last line reads:

Could not set Humpty Dumpty together again.

The rhyme is certainly much older than that, however, and some scholars think that its age is "to be measured in thousands of years," according to the Balding-Goulds.

The answer to the "Humpty Dumpty" riddle — for the rhyme is a riddle — is that Humpty Dumpty is an egg; and that explains why, having fallen and broken, he could not be put together again.

The term "Humpty Dumpty" is given in "The Oxford English Dictionary" as the name for an ale-and-brandy drink of the late seventeenth century, and also as "a short clumsy person of either sex."

"Humpty Dumpty" is one of the many nursery rhyme characters immortalized by Lewis Carroll in "Through the Looking-Glass." In that book, the last line of the rhyme is given as "Couldn't put Humpty Dumpty in his place again," which, as Alice observed, "That last line is much too long for poetry."

Another rhyme Larche has worked his Father Gander magic on is "Peter, Peter, Pumpkin Eater." The revised rhyme is:

Mr. and Ms. Pumpkin Eater
Peter, Peter, pumpkin eater,
Had a wife and wished to keep her
Treated her with fair respect,
She stayed with him, and hugged his neck!

The original Mother Goose version is:

Peter, Peter, pumpkin eater,
Had a wife and couldn't keep her;
Put her in a pumpkin shell
And there he kept her very well.

Peter, Peter, pumpkin eater,
Had another, and didn't love her;
Peter learned to read and spell,
And then he loved her very well.

In "The Annotated Mother Goose," it is explained that the pumpkin is perhaps the vegetable most beloved by the creators of juvenile literature. There was the pumpkin coach in "Cinderella." and Jack Pumpkinhead, one of the outstanding citizens of the wonderful land of Oz. And more recently, Charles Schulz has immortalized the pumpkin in his comic-strip "Peanuts" by introducing Linus's "The Great Pumpkin" — a creation that many agree should have a place beside Santa Claus and the Easter Bunny.

It is believed that this fascination for the pumpkin may have evolved from the custom of making a jack-o-lantern that would frighten away the evil creatures that stalked the darkness on Halloween.

Another example of a Mother Goose Rhyme that Father Gander feels is sexist is "Jack be Nimble." He introduces a new character to this rhyme to eliminate that problem:

Jack and Jill be Nimble
Jack be nimble, Jack be quick,
Jack jump over the candle stick!
Jill be nimble, jump it too!
If Jack can do it, so can you.

For centuries, jumping over a candle was both a sport and a way of telling fortunes in England. A candlestick with a lighted candle in it was placed on the floor. The person who could jump over it without putting out the flame was assured of having good luck for a full year. This custom was particularly associated with festivities conducted by the lace-makers of Wendover in Buckinghamshire Nov. 25, St. Catherine's Day. This was also, in medieval times, a day for weddings:

On Catherine's day
But Andrew's day
Takes the feasting away.

St. Andrew's Day was Nov. 30.

"For today's children," Dr. Larche asserts, "it is time to take the delights of old Mother Goose and apply them to the ideals we all want our children to have — equality, love, responsibility and appreciation of life and all living things. It is time to establish a new tradition," Father Gander said.

Of course as Ms. George said, "We all grew up these nursery rhymes and created our fantasies. It's normal for a child to have fantasies to relieve stress. They must have a chance to develop their own personalities."

Troubled pets find help on psychologist's couch

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — "I know how hard it is to pick up the telephone and say, 'I need help,' " the therapist says soothingly, jotting notes in his book, a cup of coffee cooling before him.

The room is quiet, the air still. The patient, with a case of sporadic trauma, scratches his ear and closes his eyes.

"He's just using attention-getting techniques," the therapist continues, explaining the Old English sheep dog's indiscriminate relieving pattern to his nervous owner. "Mommy went away, he acted up, Mommy came back. He figures it worked. That's normal."

They call him the doggie shrink — for good reason.

"When I go into the home for family-counseling, I become the dog," says Lloyd Aguero, director of the Reston Companion Dog Training School and, for the last two years, an animal behaviorist.

Although outrageously spoofed in the movie "Down and Out in Beverly Hills," the profession is regarded with defiant sobriety by its practitioners.

IN A SITUATION that in less enlightened times called for a rolled-up newspaper, Aguero will speak of "desensitizing aggression," "examining the total chemistry of the environment" and "maintaining a profile of consistency."

"When I entered (one owner's) apartment," Aguero relates, "I recognized intuitively that her dog's mind had been compressed into a small cubicle within his behavioral profile, and that he was depressed and morose about his existence. I am able to read this very quickly."

LAT Photo

Animal behavior specialist Lloyd Aguero, who gives dogs therapy at $30-$45 an hour, with patients Little Soir and Gus in McLean, Va.

His knowledge, he says, comes from 20 years of "self-schooling through continuing education." He is also a member of Delta, the National Society of Animal Behaviorists, dedicated to exploring the chemistry of human-animal bonding.

"It is a multi-disciplinary group," he says. "We have psychologists, psychiatrists, doctors of veterinary medicine, registered nurses, animal behaviorists, social workers, medical doctors — people who are interested in how animals relate to people."

Headquartered in Washington state, Delta has been in existence for four years and counts approximately 1,000 members. It will be conducting a symposium on animal behaviorism in Boston in August.

Yet for all their diligence and expertise, it is still impossible to number the animal behaviorists in the country today, as they are not, as yet, licensed.

"I do not carry a degree in animal behavior. No one does," Aguero says. "One might have a DVM, a doctorate of veterinary medicine, and then go on to study animal behavior. Some have a degree in neurobiology or neuroanatomy."

"YOU ARE AN animal behaviorist when you think you're an animal behaviorist," says Leo Bustad, president of Delta and professor and dean emeritus of Washington State University's College of Veterinary Medicine. "Just like how you can call yourself a consultant when you want to be. It is when others recognize you as such."

Aguero is called in for a variety of behavioral problems: shyness, destructive tendencies, house-breaking "accidents." And he, in turn, recommends a variety of solutions: training programs, at-home family counseling sessions, even drug therapy.

"Dogs don't have the brain capacity to be logical," he says. "That's where behaviorists come in. Behaviorists bridge the gap between dogs and humans."

Aguero first experienced a breakthrough in his understanding of dogs in 1965, when he started his training school. "I found that each dog was a separate behavioral entity, and that it is impossible to take dogs at large and screw them all into one training system. The training system has to be shaped to each dog-and-owner team."

Today he charges $30 to $45 an hour for private therapy. A session of behavioral evaluation and family counseling can run from 1½ to 2 hours — how long it takes, he says, to develop "the total chemistry of environment in which the dog and the owner interact."

"Once I understand that profile, then I'm able to develop options for the owner to modify the behavior of the animal."

Surprisingly, it is more complicated and time-consuming to bring out a shy and reticent dog than it is to desensitize an aggressive one.

"The introvert dog has to be brought out of the box into which it has closed itself," Aguero says. "Progressive, systematic, approximation-therapy training would be involved to create a weak signal for the dog to become accustomed to and become more comfortable in the situation that is frightening. The same system is used by mental-health therapists in assisting people to overcome their fear of flying or riding in an elevator."

He strongly suggests his 10-week training program — in which dogs are taught to sit, walk by the side, lie down, accept touch by a stranger, come when called, and socialize through the group — as a supplement to private therapy.

"This training program for dogs is just like group therapy for people," Aguero says. "In the training program a dog learns self-confidence."

HOWEVER, THE PROGRAM is not for everyone. "Many times it is not the answer, because the stress level is too heavy or too intense for the dogs."

Virginia Englund, a staff instructor at the training school, says, "It is definitely a growing business. A lot more people are interested in having behaved dogs instead of wild Indians."

Reading ability of duck may be bit of quackery

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — At Drake University proficiency in reading is considered the norm. But in the case of Sir Lancelot, his reading ability attracts special attention.

Sir Lancelot is a duck.

"Lance," as he's called, is a 9-year-old male mallard duck that's been under the wing of Dr. Kenneth Lloyd, professor of psychology at the university.Training Lance to read was part of an experiment in behavioral psychology. Lloyd simply wanted to find out if an animal could read.

"Similar studies have been done with pigeons," Lloyd said. "But we thought it would be interesting to have a duck for the university. We like to call it 'Drake's drake reading program' of the psychology department."

Lance's reading career began several years ago through a process known as shaping. It's a gradual method of changing behavior by selective, scheduled, positive reinforcement, Lloyd explained.

In Lance's case, Lloyd and his students decided that every time the duck turned his body, they would reward him with food to see if they could shape his behavior.

It worked, so the experimenters moved to the next step, a process called fading. Fading has to do with an animal's response to stimuli in the environment.

"Ducks have excellent eyesight and are very sensitive to color," explained Lloyd, "so we put black letters on colored cards. Lance learned that if he pecked at a red card, we would feed him. So we reasoned that if we slowly took the color away, but left a word such as peck he would respond to our command."

The team gradually faded out color on the cards by layering onion skin everywhere but over the words. Finally Lance was responding just to words, on white paper, not to color.

"He built up discrimination," Lloyd said.

At this point there are seven words in his vocabulary: peck, turn, talk, do peck, no peck, bell and ball.

For instance, when the card for "talk" is shown, he'll stretch up to the experimenter and quack face-to-face. When "do peck" is presented, he pecks madly at the card, but remains unresponsive when "no peck" is shown.

Lance's unusual talent has taken him to schools and libraries to help promote reading. The university's admissions office has brought him along to help recruit students. Sir Lancelot even has his own library cards for the university library and the Des Moines public libraries.

Critics have charged that Lance may only be responding to individual letters. When tested, this seems to be untrue, Lloyd points out. He will not react when shown the "p" of "peck," for example; but will respond when the entire word is uncovered.

So, can ducks read?

"Technically the answer to that is no," Lloyd said. "But Lance can, from a behavioral standpoint," he added. "He's showing appropriate response to words, which is what you and I do when we read."

MISTER ROGERS

Child's imaginary family seems obsessive

By FRED ROGERS
with BARRY HEAD

It's natural to talk a lot about those you love, but Mary's constant chitchat about her husband and her daughter was beginning to get on people's nerves. Sometimes it seemed that was all she talked about ... and she was only 3½ years old.

Her mother tells us that her imaginary family doesn't stop with a husband and one daughter, either: She has imaginary grandparents and, at times, more daughters.

"I don't want to interfere with whatever's going on," her mother wrote, "and maybe all children her age go through this phase. But at the same time, I have to wonder if this much pretend is normal, and often my impulse is to cut Mary short and divert her to other activities. Frankly, I find this whole business of her imaginary family tiring after a while!"

When children's play becomes obsessive, it's often a trial for their parents. A common example is the way babies of a year or so will repeatedly throw things out of their cribs or down from their high chairs and expect their caregivers to retrieve them again and again and again.

Grown-up impatience with this kind of play is the most natural thing in the world — as natural, in fact, as is the kind of play itself. Most often, children play like that because they are working on new feelings inside and new understandings about their world — feelings and understandings that have to be tried out over and over until they can find a comfortable place to rest.

Many parents sense that their children's obsessions express some kind of need, and so, even while feeling impatient and irritated, they (like Mary's mother) feel hesitant or even guilty about cutting obsessive play short.

But parents need to express their feelings, too — whether they're feelings of joy, sadness or anger. That's an important way young children come to learn that it's all right to express feelings. Something else children need to learn, though, is that there are appropriate whens, wheres and hows to giving expression to feeling.

It can often be helpful for parents to set aside particular times for allowing and supporting obsessive play of one kind or another — whether it's throwing and retrieving, smearing and making messes or pretending to have an imaginary family.

There might be times for Mary's mother when she could suggest taking the whole imaginary family on an imaginary picnic, or taking them along on a visit to a real zoo — letting her daughter know, all the while, that she's happy to go along with this pretending right now. There may be other times when she feels able and willing to be part of that imaginary family in situations of Mary's own making.

That kind of cooperation can let Mary know that pretending is fine, and it can help her learn the difference between what is pretend and what is real. And by providing outlets for her daughter's pretending when it's appropriate, Mary's mother may be able to feel more comfortable setting limits on Mary's inappropriate times of pretending and expressing her feelings of irritation when they occur.

That Mary had lots on her mind was suggested by some of what her mother put in her letter to us. The family had moved twice in six months — the first time taking them 600 miles away from relatives and friends. After that kind of dislocation, I can imagine a pretend family you never had to leave could have been reassuring to have around.

What's more, Mary had a new baby sister during that unsettled time. Playing pretend mother to her own imaginary daughters might have been a way for Mary to work on her uncertainties about what this new baby might mean for her real relationship with her real mother.

And on top of all that, Mary was 3½ — an age when a great many children are wondering about the difference between husbands and fathers and who "belongs" to whom in what way.

Through play, Mary was finding a means to express her feelings. Through writing, Mary's mother was finding a way to express hers.

Something tells me that when Mary's mother was little, she had caring grownups who understood the importance of feelings and play, and I like to think of that family finding many ways to go on talking and playing through the new changes their lives will bring.

Would-be dieters beware

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. (UPI) — A few tell-tale clues can help shoppers spot bogus diet books, says a Purdue University nutritionist.

"Just look at the jacket of the book," says Olivia Bennett Wood, who is a member of the Indiana Governor's Council of Physical Fitness and Sports Medicine.

"In five minutes, you can tell if what's inside is likely to be nutritionally valid."

Wood instructs would-be dieters to be leery of books that:

- Exclude one of the four basic food groups: dairy, vegetables and fruit, meat and beans, bread and cereal;
- Call for taking vitamin supplements;
- Promise weight loss greater than one or two pounds a week;
- Claim a single food or food group is a magic key;
- Require you to skip meals;
- Disregard the importance of exercise; or
- Set a limit below 1,000 calories a day without constant medical supervision.

The real key to weight loss, says Wood, is life-long sensible eating.

She points out that the caloric difference between a diet to lose weight and an eating plan to maintain weight usually is only about 500 calories a day.

"You should pick a diet plan that you can follow for the rest of your life," she says. "Unless you change your eating habits, no diet will do any good."

Good health for seniors promoted

Associated Press

Song-and-dance star Alice Faye, who appeared in dozens of Hollywood musicals in the '30s and '40s, has returned to the silver screen in a new film.

This time the 70-year-old "girl next door" with the warm, mellow voice appears in a public service movie promoting good health for mature Americans.

Titled "We Still Are," the 40-minute movie features film clips of Miss Faye in some of her most popular shows, including "Lillian Russell," "George White's Scandals of 1935," and "Hello, Frisco, Hello," interspersed with her advice to elders on staying fit and healthy.

With a figure that has changed little since her movie star days, Miss Faye sets a good example for those who would follow her suggestions. She makes personal appearances across America as a spokeswoman for Pfizer Pharmaceuticals at conferences and before major senior citizen organizations.

At the meetings, she makes several recommendations for good health.

- Stay involved. "Make things happen. Look at what Pablo Picasso and Ronald Reagan have done as seniors."
- Don't smoke.
- Eat a balanced diet. Decrease salt, sugar and fat intake.
- Exercise regularly. Three times a week for 30 minutes a session is suggested.
- Follow your doctor's orders and take your medicine as prescribed.

"And for heaven's sake, have a sense of humor," she adds. "Sure, I have aches and pains — but it's important to take an active interest in life, to live now and to enjoy every minute of it."

Miss Faye visits her doctor regularly for treatment of arthritis and high blood pressure. She recalls that when she went to a health spa 20 years ago, it changed her life.

U.S. bicyclists travel hundreds of miles each month

Associated Press

Bicycle racers and triathletes are not the only pedalers logging high miles. According to a recent survey, recreational bicyclists are covering a lot of ground as well.

Bicycle USA, a national organization of bicyclists, reports that more than half of its members ride over 200 miles a week, and 72 percent ride at least three times a week.

"Over a third of our members regularly log more than 300 bicycling miles a month," notes club leader Don J. Trantow, "and one-fourth ... tell us a typical ride for them is 40 to 60 miles."

New insect control method advocated

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Mankind has tended to poison the insects that become a nuisance, but a better way to fight bugs may be to change their behavior, a University of Arizona researcher says.

"We have a couple of choices," neurobiology professor John G. Hildebrand said Tuesday. "We can either kill insects, using pesticides, or we can try to manipulate insects so they don't die."

The problems with using poisons are, for one, that they kill more types of insects than those that are targeted. Poisons also can kill or sicken other living things, Hildebrand said in a telephone interview.

Insects also are able to adapt to poisons, with a few insects which survive a pesticide spraying likely to spawn entire insect generations that are immune to the pesticide, Hildebrand said.

So Hildebrand said a better way to combat the insects would be to change their behaviors that humans find troublesome. He acknowledged that changing the behavior of insects could upset the natural balance of things, but he said the impact probably would be less harmful to the environment than poisons are.

"It would mess up the system much less," he said.

To provide an example of the types of insect behavior changes that might prove beneficial, Hildebrand discussed the mosquito.

He said that if mosquitoes could be encouraged to go after the blood of, say, rabbits or dogs instead of humans, diseases borne by mosquitoes would be less prevalent, and mosquitoes themselves would be less of a nuisance to people.

But, Hildebrand pointed out, the mosquitoes would still get their diet of blood, and they'd still be out there in the food chain to be eaten by the things that eat mosquitoes.

Similar benefits could be realized by encouraging insects that destroy valuable crops to instead seek out weeds to eat or to lay their eggs in, he said.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: For the 20 years of our marriage, "Ted" avoided showing emotion. He never gave gifts or learned how to accept one. (He said it made him feel uncomfortable.) I was never able to unlock the safe where he hid his feelings.

Last year, a few days before Ted's birthday, I read a letter in your column that described our marriage perfectly. It was from a wife signed, "Loved in Montana." I clipped it out and saved it. I had bought Ted a much-needed bathrobe for his birthday, but I didn't have it gift-wrapped because I knew he'd never open the box, so I hung it in his closet with the letter signed "Loved in Montana" pinned to the robe.

When Ted discovered it, he came to me and hugged me with the clipping in his hand and tears in his eyes.

Eleven days later, with no previous symptoms, Ted suffered a massive heart attack; four hours later he was dead.

I want to thank "Loved in Montana" for writing that letter, and you, Abby, for printing it. Sign me ... LOVED IN NEW MEXICO

DEAR LOVED: For readers who want to know what "Loved in Montana's" letter contained, here's a recap: It was a very touching message from a woman whose husband never remembered her on special occasions. She said she nearly lost her wonderful man by her childish insistence that he give her a gift or send a card. She wrote: "A gift that's begged for is really not a gift." She then went on to enumerate the many loving and thoughtful things he did for her every day, which were more proof of his love than a gift on special occasions. She ended her letter with, "Now, after 24 years, I don't need cards or flowers or 'things' because I have precious memories that are always with me. Only a very insecure person like I once was needs tangible reminders. I am thankful that I am secure in his love. That's the greatest gift of all."

DEAR ABBY: A friend who I hang out with doesn't just "flash" — she wears miniskirts and sits cross-legged. If it's warm outside, she fans herself with her skirt. I don't know if she's trying to be outrageous or trying to attract guys or what, but it really nauses me out.

Abby, it's not like she's 12 years old. She's 22! Is this some form of exhibitionism? I know she's aware she's doing it.

Is it none of my business? Should I just look away when she is spread-eagled in a skirt? I've never thought of myself as old-fashioned, but this is too much. — EMBARRASSED IN MINNEAPOLIS

DEAR EMBARRASSED: For goodness sakes, tell this friend what you have told me. Regardless of whether her exhibitionism is unconscious or not, the view is the same and so is the impression she's making.

DEAR ABBY: Your reply to "Fat and Sassy" was unacceptable. She asked you what to say to a stranger who walks up to an overweight woman and says, "My but you have a pretty face." You replied, "Say, 'Thank you.'"

THANK an insensitive stranger for minding your own business by suggesting that although your face is pretty, the rest of you leaves a lot to be desired? Never!

I can't tell you how many times friends, relatives — and strangers — have come up to me with a comment like this: "You would be beautiful if you'd just lose a little weight." They feel it's their job to startle me with this wonderful revelation. After having told me that they actually think I am ugly, they pause, obviously expecting thanks for the insult.

Well, the day I thank them for making me feel lousy about myself will be the day after never.

You may sign me with the reply I would like to make to such people. — "DROP DEAD"

AT WIT'S END

Wardrobe woes

Editors note: Erma Bombeck is on vacation. She left behind some of her favorite columns.

By ERMA BOMBECK

The ad said if I bought an 11-piece coordinated vacation wardrobe, I could make 135 clothes combinations and exist for three weeks living out of one suitcase.

The coordinated ensemble included a basic dress, reversible skirt, slacks, blouse, jacket, shorts, T-shirt, vest, two scarfs and a cap with a bill.

I will not bore you with all 135 combinations, only the interesting ones.

Three days out, I outgrew my slacks.

Four days out, I ripped the breast pocket on the jacket and could wear it only when my arms were folded or if I used one of the scarves as a sling and pretended I had a broken arm.

Five days out, the blouse did not dry, and the scarf faded over it, forcing me to wear it with the darts facing backwards.

The T-shirt shrunk on the sixth day, and I found that by buying another cap with a bill and joining the two caps with a scarf that I had an interesting bra in which to play tennis.

The skirt was getting on everyone's nerves, and one night as it stood in the corner of my room, I noticed it still had my body molded in it. The next day I turned it around, put my blouse on the outside and told everyone I was expecting in four months.

Mercifully on the 11th day, the hem dropped out of the dress, giving me a new look for evenings.

The ugly oil spot on the reversible skirt penetrated both sides on the 14th day, giving me a choice of wearing my handbag on my left side or my right.

The vest was the only clean thing in my suitcase by the 17th day, but I didn't know what to do with it. When my blouse was ordered off the sightseeing bus by a vote of 43-0, I wore it sleeveless with pins holding it together.

By the 20th day, nothing mattered anymore. I wore the scarf with the oil-stained skirt, the slacks with the broken zipper with the two caps with a bill, the dress with the torn jacket, the T-shirt with the shorts. On the last night, there was a masquerade party. I went as myself and won first prize.

When I arrived home, there was one scarf that had been soaked in perfume that leaked. The fashion coordinator had thought of everything. All I had to do was to light a match, ignite it and, in time, forget all 11 pieces.

Cosmetic surgery not cure for problems

By DR. RUTH WESTHEIMER

Q. My boobs are so big nobody looks at anything else when they come in sight. Certainly not at me as a person. Is cosmetic surgery a good idea, since this really bugs me all the time?

A. I don't like sharp knives. OK? And I hate surgery except as a last resort. I think it is a shame that women develop an enmity for their own breasts! A woman decides that her breasts should be just so, no bigger, no smaller, no deviation from her mental image.

And every distress she has she blames on those breasts. They are why she hasn't got the right man, the right job, has never had an orgasm and her cakes fall.

Think about that, would you? List the changes you would like in your life. If those changes were made, would you get along better with your own breasts? If they were resized and reshaped to your specifications, are you sure your life would improve? Try reshaping your life to your liking, and leave your God-given body as it is.

Q. We have a great thing going, but he says he can't promise anything because his last girl hurt him. My divorce will be final soon. How can I get him to love me more?

A. Let me tell you something: You can't. He has been honest, not pretending just to keep the good time rolling. And he sees that moment coming when you will be free and looking at him and saying, "Well? Let's take out a license." He doesn't want that. But you don't have to give up all hope just because there is no reliable love potion.

The thing that makes him say he isn't promising anything may be that he feels pressure. There is the decree becoming final, there is that look in your loving eyes — and I don't say you can help that.

But avoid saying, "Don't you really love me?" and don't say, "Come on, you know you love me." Give him some elbow room and time. I don't say forever, but at least for a while. If you love him, that's worth trying.

Q. How can I avoid getting a sexually transmitted disease?

A. Good question, like "How do I avoid car accidents?" To which I would say, "For absolute safety, stay out of cars." For positive insurance against any STD, never have sex with anybody else. That may be too extreme for you, so let me say it is reasonable protection to get to know somebody pretty well, to decide you trust him or her, before going to bed for sex. And confine your sexual sharing to that person.

I'm not putting you on — that's the message. If you insist on sex with strangers or suspicious persons, insist on a condom and have a medical checkup for sexually transmitted disease afterward. Again, that may seem cumbersome but it is the right answer. But do consider seriously the advantages of sexual fidelity.

Q. All year my campus girl and I had sex. She said she loved me, but I shouldn't phone her during vacation. Is that love?

A. For some people, love is never inconvenient. I see that you are a romantic. You can't be in love just until the college year ends, or until the road-show tour is over, or until the troopship weighs anchor.

I advise you to get over this strictly September-June love. I won't say she never loved you during the academic year, but it wasn't the kind of relationship you want. Look at this love as something wonderful but past.

Look for another girl when you notice recovery creeping up on you. (Don't wait until you feel completely recovered, around 1999!) As a personal favor to me, don't get to be one of those guys who can't offer commitment because his last girl hurt him.

Traditional values listed most important

NEW YORK (AP) — When asked what they considered "the good things in life," more than a third of the 40,000 people who responded recently to a questionnaire named "friends and family" as the most cherished value.

This category was cited almost twice as often as "health and happiness," more than three times as often as money and more than six times as often as romantic love and sex.

In an open-ended survey sponsored by Dewar's Scotch as part of its yearlong centennial celebration, respondents were asked to name the good things about their lives in 25 words or fewer.

Organization improves lifestyle

NEW YORK (AP) — Is your life being devoured by family, job and household chores?

Get time-smart is the advice of Family Circle magazine. Get organized and get going with time management strategies such as the following:

- Set up an area for yourself where you keep lists, calendars, menus, etc.
- Keep lists of everything that must be done.
- Have a daily calendar.
- Plan ahead and write everything down.

Other strategies include setting priorities, delegating jobs to the children and scheduling time for yourself.

Surgical technique common

Hearst News Service

Breast augmentation is one of the most common operations performed in the United States today. In 1985, 150,000 U.S. women had breast implant surgery, with costs ranging from $1,400 to $3,000.

There are several kinds of implants available and several ways they can be inserted. Some doctors prefer inserting the implant through an incision under the arm. But most seem to use an under-the-breast incision, slipping the implant in behind the breast muscle.

Dr. Robert Wells, a plastic surgeon, says that for the past three years he has used a newer type of implant almost exclusively because the major problem with a silicone implant without a fiber cover is hardening of the breast. This unnatural firmness of the breast occurs, he says, when a layer of scar tissue forms after the operation and sometimes squeezes and contracts, making the breast implant harden.

With the new implant, he says, "as the scar tissue is growing around it, the fibers separate and become part of the scar tissue sac, changing the characteristic of the scar tissue sac so that it does not contract." Wells says the chance of this implant hardening is 1 percent.

Although the silicone implant without the fiber layer continues to be used 80 percent of the time, Wells says the problem is that when it is placed between the breast tissue and the muscle, "about 30 percent of them become unnaturally firm. Even when they are placed behind the muscle, as they are in most cases today, the chance of hardening developing is around 10 percent."

Wells says he has had only one infection and one patient who experienced hardening of the breast in more than 250 cases during the past three years. He places the implant behind the muscle, making a 2- to 2½-inch incision under the breast.

As Wells sees it, the main problem with breast augmentation surgery throughout the years has been hardening of the breasts. He said the newer implant is a boon to women who want to have larger breasts.

But another plastic surgeon, Dr. Joseph H. Fishman, rarely uses the newer implant. He prefers not to use it, he says, because there is a greater chance of infection and the scar is bigger. The implant without the fiber layer is more resilient, and it is possible to slip it under the muscle and leave only a 1½-inch scar, he says. Fishman acknowledges that the newer implant does reduce the frequency of firmness of the breast that can develop after the surgery because of scar tissue.

Space vacations scheduled to be launched in 1992

By JAMES HART
Copley News Service

Barnard Valeska hopes to wave to his alma mater from 80 miles high shortly after the 500th anniversary of Columbus' first voyage to America.

Mark Johnson, who already has traveled to the north pole, China and the Outback in Australia, said space travel will be "the ultimate adventure."

Valeska, 31, a Santa Barbara, Calif., dentist, and Johnson, 39, an Anaheim Hills, Calif., businessman and real estate developer, are two of about 250 people who have signed up for space flights a Seattle-based travel company plans to launch beginning in 1992.

PROJECT SPACE Voyage promises to be the "first opportunity ever offered to the general public" to orbit the Earth, according to a brochure from Society Expeditions Inc., which specializes in travel to exotic locations.

For $50,000, passengers will take off from a yet-to-be-determined launch site on a yet-to-be-built spaceship, orbit the Earth for eight to 12 hours while dining on two meals and return to the launching pad the same day.

"When I was a little kid my dad would wake us up at 4 in the morning to watch Alan Shepard, but it didn't really sink in then," he said. "I always thought I'd be about 60 years old before something like this would be available and that it would cost a million bucks.

"I have six years to save the money. I don't see why more people aren't signing up."

Valeska said he's content to be booked on the second Project Space Voyage trip, scheduled two weeks after the inaugural launch on Oct. 12, 1992.

JOHNSON SAID the anticipation over his flight, although more than six years distant, already has made him "a certifiable basket case."

"I've done adventure travel around the world with my two sons," he said. "I've been across Siberia and to the north pole. I've been to China three times, to the Outback in Australia and to all of Europe.

"There aren't too many frontiers left on Earth."

CNS Graphic

"I have a procedure with my boys," he said. "Every year I take one of them off alone and we go somewhere."

He's going to space by himself, however.

"At that price, if my kids want to go, they can pay for it themselves," he said.

The flight will be aboard a spaceship still in the design stages at a small Redwood City, Calif.-based research and development company, Pacific American Launch Systems Inc.

Each traveler is guaranteed a window seat in the 20-passenger ship, which offers "generous space and the comfort of a jet aircraft," according to the brochure.

"As in all Society Expeditions programs, the traveler becomes an active participant in the daily adventure," the brochure says. "Living not on the sidelines but as an interested explorer."

Because of the newness of commercial space travel, the U.S. Department of Transportation has just begun drawing up regulations.

The department's Office of Commercial Space Transportation, created by executive order in 1984, reviews applications first for national security and foreign policy considerations and second for safety, said Madeline Johnson, the office director.

"WE LOOK at the payload, the trajectory of the flight, the launch site and the destination," she said. "Then we conduct a safety review who is conducting the launch, their credentials and the performance characteristics of the space vehicle."

Johnson said she could not comment on Project Space Voyage's plans because the company, although in contact with her office, has not yet submitted a formal proposal.

Society Expeditions, which started 12 years ago as a society for the preservation of archaeological monuments, has taken tourists to Antarctica, the Galapagos Islands and the Amazon River.

"We have continued to include the educational aspect on all of our travels," said Collette Bevis, director of Project Space Voyage.

ACCORDING TO the project's brochure, "professional experts" will point out prominent landmarks and explain atmospheric conditions from space.

The project's goal is to take "thousands of people into space," Bevis said.

Of the 250 or so who have paid a $5,000 deposit on their reservations, she said, some are planning their trip to commemorate a special celebration.

"Some want to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries," Bevis said. "A lot of people just said they've always wanted to go to space."

Light packing right packing for 20th century travelers

By KIM MARCUM
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Most of us spend weeks planning our vacations, poring over brochures to find just the right destination, the perfect hotels, the best connecting flights. Then we ruin our best-layed plans in mere minutes by packing the wrong clothes.

"It only takes a little extra time to think through your travel wardrobe," says Lucille Klein, fashion director at Sanger Harris stores. "And it saves you the aggravation of not having what you need when you get there."

But even too much of the right stuff can put a damper on your vacation. The days when wealth corresponded with the numbers of bags in one's entourage are over. Today the name of the game is minimalism.

"I take one bag," says Shelle Bagot, who crisscrosses the Atlantic on buying trips for her specialty store, The Gazebo. "If I can't get it in one bag, I don't take it because it's a hassle."

EXTRA SUITCASES aren't just a hassle to carry, but to keep track of, too. "One suitcase is imperative with so many security checks these days," says Susanne Reyto, producer of the audio or visual casette, Packing Made Easy. "It's important to have as little luggage as possible to eliminate a lot of standing around at the check-in lines."

Now that less is more, the pressure to pack right — and light — is really on. Travel experts and those who travel frequently recommend giving your vacation wardrobe more than a passing thought. Like your trip, it too needs to be well-planned.

"It sounds obvious, but knowing what the weather is like at your destination should be the No. 1 priority," says Bagot.

Once you've discovered whether Denver is having record-breaking high temperatures or Hawaii is inundated by rain, you can start the prepacking phase. The first step is deciding on a color concept. Sticking to two or three color families is essential. Consider hot hues for the beach, neutrals for the mountains and sophisticated jewel tones or black-with-bright combos for the city. Build your travel wardrobe around solid separates perked up with printed pieces and a jewelry bag filled with accessories.

"By coordinating the clothes we take we can have a lot of flexibility and interchangeability among our outfits," says Reyto. "That way we make it look as if we have a lot more clothes than we really do."

Also plan on wearing staples such as skirts, shorts, jackets and sweaters more than one time. Pieces can do double-duty, moving from day into evening with a calculated change of accessories.

"One of the common pitfalls travelers make is packing things that don't go with anything else," says Klein. "You don't need to haul along a dress that needs a completely different set of accessories and everything."

DEPENDING ON your trip, you will need to take special things into consideration. Here are suggestions on what to pack for a week at three different types of destinations.

■ The beach: Leave the dressy suits at home. Instead, concentrate on two or three swimsuits and a couple of cover-ups. Fill in your daytime agenda with 10 tops and four bottoms (either pants, shorts or skirts). Sundresses, jumpsuits and halters are versatile options that can move from day into evening. Be prepared for frigid air-conditioning with a cardigan or a beach coverup.

Plan on three changes a day — a swimsuit and coverup, shorts and a top, and then in the evening a dress or evening pants.

■ The mountains: Put more emphasis on pants than shorts, especially if you expect to hike or climb and want protection for your knees. When it comes to tops, think in terms of layers. Weather in the mountains changes more drastically and more unexpectedly.

Take colors — such as khaki, olive, black, gray and beige — that are not too soilable. Work around four bottoms, three long-sleeved tops, two short-sleeved tops, two sweaters, a vest and a jumpsuit.

■ The big city: Here you will want a more dressed-up style. Pack the equivalent of three 3-piece outfits (consisting of a skirt, a pair of pants and a jacket or cardigan) that each work with the other. Include six short-and long-sleeved tops as well as a more casual pullover.

Neutral shades work well in the city, but definitely avoid white. Although it's commonplace in the Southwest, it's generally considered too casual for big-city life. White also shows dirt and pollution much more noticeably.

What happens if after all this planning you still forget something? "Don't worry about it," says Klein. "You're on vacation."

From Home Sweet Home

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Foreclosure, once a rarity that afflicted few, is now threatening to become an epidemic in Texas as more and more familes affected by falling oil prices find they must make the painful decision to walk away from home sweet home.

In Houston last year at least 10,000 families did so, and twice that many may walk this year. The oil-based economy of Midland is not immune from the epidemic even though the record here is more positive than Houston.

To date the Midland forclosure picture is bright, but it could change overnight. According to Karen Offield of Foreclosure Listing Service there have been 536 foreclosure postings to date this year. "If postings continue at this same rate, we could end up with less than last year," she said. Postings for Midland County in 1985 totaled 924, a 20 percent increase over the 775 reported in 1984.

Statewide, Texas suffered a foreclosure rate 1.67 percent higher than the national average during 1985. But according to findings of the Texas Real Estate Research Center, more than 27,000 homes were repossessed by Texas lenders during that time.

Foreclosures in Ector County have historically lagged behind Midland, according to Offield. To date, Ector County has recorded 473 postings. Postings in 1985 totaled 748, up from 682 in 1984. She said the number of sales this year hovered around 50

The foreclosure procedure

Knowing the legal steps crucial

By DEANNA J. NEAL
Business/Oil Writer

Many Midland homeowners are receiving a certified letter they hoped would never come — a letter from the mortgage company telling them that mercy has ended and their home is being repossessed.

For many it will be a time of grief and confusion as they struggle to determine their legal position in a foreclosure.

What happens after a homeowner receives a foreclosure notice? According to Michael T. Morgan, a Midland attorney who practices real estate law, the specific steps to be taken in foreclosure are outlined in the deed of trust signed when the home was purchased.

"As a general rule, a foreclosure is proper as long as it complies with the procedure outlined in the deed of trust. Texas law, as stated in the Texas Property Code, becomes relevant if the deed of trust is silent on an issue, or if the deed conflicts with Texas law," says Morgan.

Morgan added that since there is no mandatory form required by Texas law, deed forms vary from lender to lender.

Copies of the applicable deed of trust signed by the buyer are available from the county clerk's office in the county where the land is located. "It is important to read the actual deed of trust signed by the buyer, as this specifies the procedures required for a valid foreclosure."

Before a foreclosure can be initiated, one of the conditions specified in the deed of trust must have been violated. Says Morgan: "Usually, this means that the homeowner has defaulted on an installment payment on the mortgage." There are, however, other conditions stipulated in the deed which, if not met, could cause a foreclosure proceeding to be initiated.

The Texas statute of limitations on foreclosure is four years, so the default must have occurred within the last four years. Morgan warns that reaffirming the debt may extend the period in which a creditor may institute a foreclosure beyond the four years.

A foreclosure may be triggered by the borrower defaulting on a periodic payment required by the real estate lien note. When this happens the lender has the option of acceler

The house that keeps on haunting

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Is foreclosure a haunting blight against one's good name and credit, forever following and affecting one's ability to own a car, get a charge card or open a checking account?

Credit experts say it may not be the end of the world for one financially, but a foreclosure is a serious, haunting black mark on one's credit rating, and should not be taken lightly.

Perhaps the most haunting consequence is a tarnished credit record that can cloud financial arrangement for years.

Credit reporting services say foreclosures do go on to one's credit package and there is little one can do to escape it. It is not a matter of whether a savings bank reports the foreclosure or not, because credit information is picked up by credit reporters from the court house.

According to Sharron Davis, general manager for Chilton Credit Report in a 70 county area of West Texas, there are five major credit vendors in the U.S. which collect credit information for court and other records and store in in a giant computer. Between Chilton, which covers 36 states and the other four major reporting services, there is little chance of a person who has been foreclosed upon of falling through the "credit cracks."

"There is at least one of these credit services in every state," says Davis, "and not much chance that an individual with a bad credit mark could move to another state to escape his credit."

Capitalizing on others' misfortune

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

Going, going, gone!

The auctioneer's familiar cry as the gavel falls at completion of a sale will echo through the Permian Ballroom of the Midland Hilton Saturday when the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. disposes of a small fraction of the foreclosed real estate it has accumulated in less than three years since opening its Midland operations.

Bidders will have an opportunity to set their own purchase price on more than 150 properties — single family homes, townhomes and duplexes, commercial properties, residential lots and other acreage — which are a representative 30 percent cross-section of the corporation's total holdings, according to FDIC real estate department head John Fell.

"The majority of the properties being auctioned had been foreclosed by the individual banks holding the property liens and were acquired by the FDIC as the banks' inventories were taken over," Fell notes.

Although a common method for liquidating equipment and other FDIC holdings, this week's auction will be the local office's first realty auction. Fell says the method has proven successful for other FDIC regions and expects his office to schedule another sale before year-end.

"Historically, auctions have proven a good marketing tool and open the market to the widest possible audience of buyers," Fell explains. "So far, response from bidders for information packets has been overwhelming — far better than we could have hoped for."

More than 1,000 potential buyers are expected to be on hand when the bidding opens Saturday afternoon at 1 o'clock.

Today is the final day for open house inspection of commercial and residential properties being auctioned. All properties are sold on an "as-is, where-is" basis, so the FDIC recommends advance inspection.

BIDDING PROCEDURES include registration before the sale, beginning at 11 a.m. the day of the auction. Bidders are required to preregister to receive the bidder number needed to complete the sale.

Successful bidders must post certified funds on each property: residential and commercial properties require a $2,500 bid deposit; lots and other acreage, a deposit of $500 per property.

FDIC has arranged for a mortgage company to service the auction, providing financing on residential properties only. Prior loan commitments or other financing arrangements are required for acreage and commercial properties. Mortgage & Trust Inc., Midland, will be on hand during the auction to provide financing.

"But we recommend that buyers, who are considering a bid on the residential properties and wish to use our financing, pre-qualify to determine how much financing they can afford," explains M&T branch manager Bobbye Rose.

Austin-based Von Reece Auctioneers will conduct the sale.

"We're glad to offer the opportunity to the general public to get into the real estate market, at their own price — often below real market value."

Lenders working to reduce losses, cut foreclosures

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

Faltering home values and potential losses for lenders are compelling Midland lending institutions to be as flexible as possible in dealing with borrowers struggling to keep current on their payments.

Lenders are painfully aware of the economic problems in the area and are working with mortgage holders to avoid taking back foreclosed properties which are worth less than the amount of the lien on the property.

"If a foreclosure is pending because of things beyond the borrower's control — such as salary cuts, unemployment, or reemployment forcing a reduction in income — we try to cooperate with the homeowner to work out lower payments and ease the mortgage burden," explains Poppy Piper, vice president of mortgage lending for First Bankers Trust & Savings Association.

"On many conventional loans it is within the terms of the mortgage agreement to modify the documents," she adds.

Standard home refinancing involves many of the same origination fees and other costs associated with the original mortgage closing. Loan modifications in distress cases, on the other hand, generally waive such fees.

Many out-of-area investors who purchase local lenders' mortgages in the "secondary market" are also sympathetic to the widespread economic hardships, Piper notes. Keeping a loan performing even at a slightly lower repayment rate, is preferable to taking back a foreclosed property, so secondary market lenders are willing to work with borrowers as well.

Hot rocks could be good/bad news for oil

It is far enough down the road not o offer an immediate relief or hreat, but from New Mexico comes otentially good news and bad news or the oil industry.

It is a technological break through hat could be very good for the drilling industry, providing untold deep rilling contracts for decades to ome. On the other hand, it could ack much natural gas out of the nergy market forever.

It is "heat mining" and the oil industry, including some Permian Basin firms, has already played a major ole in bringing it about.

The announcement of a breakhrough came, without much fanare, earlier this month, when scientsts at the Los Alamos National aboratory and Department of Enery announced they had succeeded r the first time in producing comercial quantities of electricity from the earth's heat in a well 2.5 miles deep.

Every oil operator who has drilled a deep gas well knows of the tremendous heat build up in deep wells that probe to the granite. Now Los Alamos has capitalized upon that heat by pumping millions of gallons down a well, through fractured basement rock where it was heated to 350 degrees, and back up an adjacent well as steam. Following a month long test, the project was generating enough electrical power for a town of 2,000.

"IT TOOK A LONG TIME, and there were many bugs to work out, but it really works," said John Whetten, Los Alamos associate director of research and energy application, who says the technology of mining hot dry rock for heat will become the clean, economical, widely applicable source of energy and the alternative to fossil fuels science has been seeking since the early 1970s.

Whetten said the Electric Power Research Institute would now begin a year long study to determine the economic parameters of the project, but early calculations seem to reveal that it will be much cheaper than natural gas and would also be competitive with coal.

"Hopefully, we will have this technology in our arsenal before the next energy crisis comes down on us," Whetten told me. Among the expected, immediate customers for the new energy resource is Japan, who helped fund the project and several European countries who plan similar projects.

The beauty of the hot dry rock technology, which took 14 years and $160 million to perfect, is that $160 it can be executed any place. Totally unlike geothermal energy which relies on finding hot underground geysers, heat can be mined any place in the world where the basement rock can be reached economically, but it is generally more economical in the West where the thermal gradient is higher. The Los Alamos project was drilled to approximately 13,000 feet.

THE TECHNOLOGY can also be conducted on any scale. One well might supply a college campus, factory, small town or several farms with electricity, while a number of wells might be needed for a municipality. If the technology takes off as the folks at Los Alamos, and the Department of Energy think it will, it could prove a tremendous windfall for oil field drilling contractors by the end of this decade and a continuing source of income for decades to come. Thousands of wells would be needed and since the rocks eventually cool after 10 or 20 years the wells would eventually have to be relocated.

In fact it would be a windfall for the entire oil field service industry, putting all the idle logging, frac and cement trucks back to work all across America.

I recall, before the boom, DA&S Well Service of Hobbs kept a rig fairly busy on the Los Alamos hot rock project, but Whetten informed me that many oil firms were not only instrumental but critical to the success of the project. One of the biggest hurtles was finding a packer which could sustain the hot hostile downhole environment, be set in open hole, and allow the scientists to fracture formations as they drilled down. Baker, Otis, Lyons and Guiberson were involved in downhole technology. Brinkerhoff, Signal and Big Chief drilling drilled wells on the project, Dowell, Halliburton were involved in fracing and cementing, and Maurer Engineering helped develop the high-speed turbo drill used in the wells.

The big question that remains concerning hot rock technology is what it will do the natural gas industry? How much of the petroleum commodity will be backed out of the market by the new technology, if indeed it does prove a viable economic competitor in the energy market? Oil and gas prices will be a definite determinant in the final answer.

Fewer rigs working in Basin this week

Three fewer rigs were making hole in the Permian Basin this week. The count fell to 70, while the U.S. count also dropped. The national rig count stands at 663, a drop of nine from a week ago.

Locally, Andrews posted a nine rig total, Midland County tallied three, and Ector recorded a total of three working rigs.

Nationally, Texas was the biggest loser, falling thirteen rigs to 211. A year ago there were 659 rigs at work in the state. New Mexico lost two, to post an all time low of eleven. Louisiana and Oklahoma each managed to increase the count, by three and one, respectively.

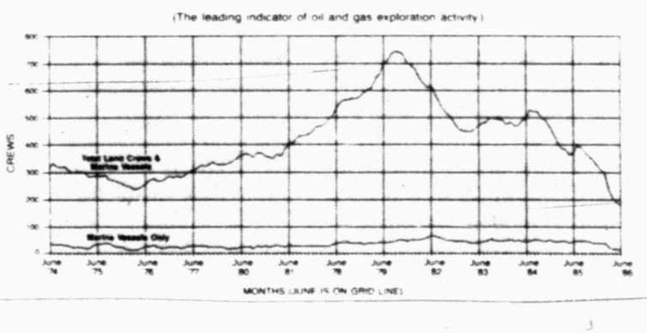
Seismic Crew Count



Seismic crews decrease in June

The number of seismic land crews and marine vessels searching for oil and gas in the U.S. and U.S. waters during June declined by eleven crews from the May total of 191. The land crew total declined by ten, and the marine crew total decreased by one crew for a net decrease of eleven. June was the eleventh consecutive month the total number of crews has decreased.

The June total represents a decrease of 6 percent from last month, a 51 percent decrease from June, 1985, a 64 percent decrese from June, 1984, a 62 percent decrease from June, 1983, a 71 percent decrease from June, 1982, a 74 percent decrease from June, 1981, and a decrease of 66 percent from the same month in 1980.

During June, five contractors were operating nine of the 140 land crews and two of the fourteen vessels on a speculative basis.

This month's 180 crews compares with 191 last month and 371 a year ago. The number of crews was at an all time high of 696.

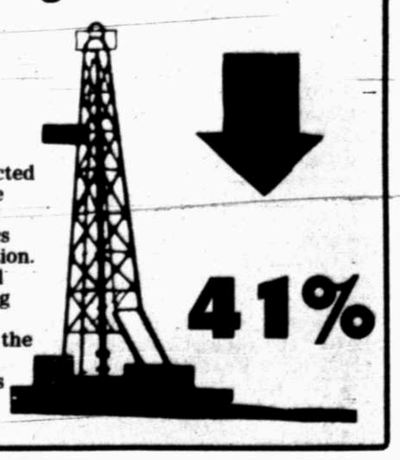
U.S. Drilling Permits

Fewer issued



The full effect of steep price erosion in recent months is reflected graphically in the decrease in the issued number of new permits to drill, according to recent statistics compiled by Petroleum Information.

A total of 25,553 permits to drill had been issued in the U.S. during the first half of 1986. That represents a drop of 41.4 percent from the 1985 mid-year total of 43,583. In 1984, a total of 49,118 new permits had been issued during that year's first half.

U.S. petroleum imports exceed peril point

Past experience provides persuasive evidence that the U.S. risks unacceptable supply disruptions when oil import dependence exceeds the peril point, defined as 30 percent of requirements, according to the Independent Petroleum Association of America (IPAA).

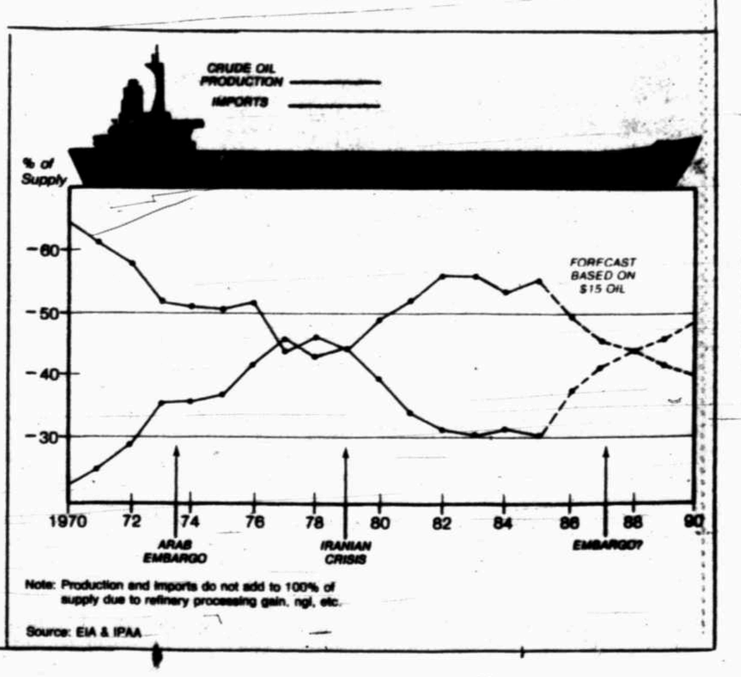
The 1973 Arab embargo occurred when imports represented 35 percent of U.S. consumption. Imports exceeded 44 percent of demand when Iranian supply was disrupted in 1979, and resulting shortages had proportionately greater economic impact than during the previous embargo.

There has been a shift recently in the origin of oil imports. During the past few years, most imports hae come from politically secure Western Hemisphere and North Sea sources. However, Saudi Arabia has gone from the eighth largest supplier of U.S. petroleum needs in 1985 to the fourth largest so far this year. In terms of just crude oil imports, Saudi Arabhia is now the second largest supplier as compared to its ranking of eighth last year.

"The threat of punitive tax legislation being enacted by the U.S. Congress and rapidly declining prices have been a deadly one, two punch to the independent oil industry, which drilled 85 percent of all the wells drilled in the U.S. in 1985," said IPAA officials.

New production projections based on anticipated drilling with crude oil prices at $15 per barrel, indicate that import dependence would rise to about one-half of consumption by 1990.

"This unavoidably would mean a return to dependence on Persian Gulf sources for substantial portion of our import requirements. Clearly, under this outlook, a new foreign supply embargo after 1987 could again stall traffic on our streets and paralyze the U.S. economy."



Note: Production and imports do not add to 100% of supply due to refinery processing gain, ngl, etc.

WALK

percent until March. At the latest foreclosure sale, 67 percent of the property sold in Midland County, and 62 percent sold in Ector County.

"One reason for the foreclosures is the high interest rates people agreed to in 1983 and 1984. People bought in an inflated market at high interest rates, and the homes deflated in value." she said.

Many bought homes at high interest rates believing salary increases would help them keep up, and many also believed the old adage that real estate always appreciates in value. However, the bursting of the oil bubble sent real estate values downward at the same time salaries were being frozen, cut or eliminated.

According to Joe VanArsdall, a vice president at Briercroft Savings, "Real estate values have been declining at least 2 1/2 years. During the boom, demand got going full steam and supply couldn't keep up. Now supply has passed demand about 90 miles an hour. What we have to do is get the two back on the same track at the same speed."

Commented Poppy Pieper, vice president at First Bankers Trust and Savings Association: "Times are hard, but I think most people are managing." She said her company hasn't seen any great change in the number of foreclosures, adding that First Bankers has sold all its foreclosed properties.

Although Christie Ray, vice president at Petroplex Savings said her company hasn't seen a tremendous rise in foreclosures, "I feel like in two or three months, the rate will rise. People can only go so long without income." Still, she thought her company made some good loans, and that the customers "took better care of their money," she said.

Statewide, the average annual foreclosure rate has nearly quadrupled since early 1980, even though it still represents a small percentage of the state's total mortgage loans.

The Center also reported that 7 percent of Texas home mortgages were past due 30 days or more by the end of last year. "While this was only a small percentage of the 3.3 million single-family, owner-occupied Texas residences, it means 119,000 homeowners were experiencing difficulties," according to Dr. Arthur Wright, a research economist with the Center.

According to Pieper, the number of delinquent payements to her thrift have picked up some, but "it's not any different from a year ago. It's not as bad as people think it should be. We're trying to work with those people who are having a hard time so they can keep their home."

LENDERS

Petroplex Savings goes one step further in assisting distressed borrowers slipping closer to foreclosure proceedings. "In April, we established a budget counseling service which helps homeowners cope with all their credit obligations, not simply mortgage payments," notes Christie Ray, vice president of residential mortgage loans for the company.

"We consider changes in mortgage structure on an individual loan basis," Ray says.

Such modifications generally require the approval of the private mortgage insurance (PMI) company holding the policy on the property, which covers the lender's risk of loss if the borrower defaults on the debt. Thus, mortgage insurers stand to lose significant amounts of claim losses as the number of foreclosures rise.

"PMIs have been aggressive in investigating new possibilities in working out problem loans and in establishing new guidelines for pre-foreclosure sales.

Milwaukee-based Mortgage Guaranty Insurance Corp. (MGIC), the largest mortgage insurer in the country, offers its own financial counseling services under its "mortgage default control program".

In cases where the borrower's financial distress is clearly temporary, MGIC may advance — against the insurance coverage value — the difference between the normal monthly mortgage payment and the amount the borrower can currently afford. Payments are made directly to the lender, and the borrower is required to reimburse the insurer within a specified period.

In other cases, mortgage insurers may make up the difference when proceeds from a home sale fall short of the loan balance remaining on the home. The concept behind this type of "pre-sold claim" is to discourage homeowners' from giving up and letting a loan go because proceeds from the sales won't be enough to retire the mortgage.

With support from secondary market lenders and PMIs, local lenders are able to work with borrowers and their budgets to keep the local foreclosure rate from skyrocketing as it has in Houston and other areas of the state.

"Foreclosures, particularly in a deflationary market, are a no-win situation for borrowers and lenders. That's why we're committed to working every way possible with those people who we know would be making timely house payments if not for those factors beyond their control," concludes First Bankers' Piper.

LEGAL

ating the note — that is, demanding payment on the entire unpaid balance.

"Unless waived, two notices must be given to the debtor if the lender chooses to foreclose," stated Morgan.

"One is a notice that the note is in arrears and demands payment. This document usually contains a notice of the lender's intent to accelerate the debt if the note is not brought current."

"If payment is still not received, the creditor must send a second notice telling the debtor that the note has been accelerated and a foreclosure is being initiated."

The right to receive notice, however, may have been waived and any waiver should be interpreted by an attorney. Even if an effective waiver of notice has been signed, the lender's conduct could cause forfeiture of the right to accelerate without notice.

"For example," says Morgan, "if a lender accepts numerous consecutive late payments, then attempts to accelerate the debt without giving notice, the courts may hold that the lender's past conduct precludes acceleration without prior notice of intention."

If the debt is accelerated following a default, the lender may then foreclose on the property by a non-judicial sale — in other words, no lawsuit is required, and if the sale is conducted in accordance with the deed of trust and state law, the title of the property is transferred to the highest bidder.

"There are legal requirements concerning the time, place and method of sale. The sale must be conducted on the first Tuesday of the month between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m., following the 21st day after proper notices were posted, filed and sent. The location of the sale is usually specified as the courthouse door, but Texas law requires only that the sale be within the county."

The trustee is the central character in the foreclosure process and has sole authority to sell the land and convey the title. "The trustee is generally the creditor's attorney, however, the creditor can appoint another trustee if desired."

Generally, the trustee will require cash only sales, although state law makes no restrictions. At the sale, which is open to the general public, all parties may bid, including the lender and even the debtor.

If the sale does not generate enough revenue to cover the trustee's commission, all attorneys' fees and the amount of the unpaid balance due on the note, then the debtor is still personally liable for the balance. The lender can then sue for a judgment against the debtor for the deficit.

To make matters worse, Texas — unlike many other states — does not have a redemptive rights statute. Under such a statute a debtor has a right to gather the money and repay the debt, therefore enabling him to reclaim the foreclosed property.

A borrower may complain that the property did not bring sufficient revenue because of an impropriety in the foreclosure process. "If any irregularities can be proven, there are two possible remedies — either sue to rescind the sale, or sue for damages."

One thing that a debtor in danger of foreclosure can do to stay the foreclosure is to declare bankruptcy. The foreclosure is then stalled pending the outcome of the bankruptcy judgment.

CREDIT

SHE SAID a foreclosure will remain on an individual's record for seven years, before it is legally removed. "A foreclosure is a very serious credit mark," said Davis. "in the credit business we consider it as serious a negative mark as repossessions, judgement and bankruptcy. It could very well affect your chance of getting another mortgage or installment loans in the future."

The only remedy available to someone who has a foreclosure or other negative mark on their credit is to file a dispute which will be placed on their record. The complete dispute is sometimes sent to lenders requesting information if it is sent in written form, but if it is placed on the computer there are restrictions. The dispute can be only 50 to 100 words, depending upon which credit reporting service has your credit record. "That's just enough words to get the basics of your dispute in," said Davis.

A typical dispute might sound like this: "Was making $4,000 a month as a geologist...housepayment was $1,000 a month...lost job, had to go to work for $1,000 a month...unable to make monthly payments."

No matter how brief or what the circumstances, an individual is urged to file a dispute with the credit company, because it may help him or her in re-establishing a good credit rating.

DAVIS SAID that lenders are highly subjective in analyzing a credit report and 10 different lenders may treat a credit report in 10 different ways. That's a statement seconded by Rory Manning, a partner in Credit Data of the Permian Basin: "Some lenders are more lenient than others," said Manning. "One may be understanding and forgiving of a foreclosure if the circumstances appear beyond one's control, but another may not be so understanding."

Manning said lenders are scared of negative credit incidents and rightly so, because of increased foreclosures in the state. Manning said his firm was experiencing slight increases in foreclosures, but Sharron Davis said Chilton had seen a doubling of foreclosures in the past two years.

"There is no way you can have a foreclosure and go on as if it didn't happen," said Manning. "The road back will be slow, and you will need a sympathetic lender who will listen to you." He said credit could be re-established but it would take deliberate and thoughtful effort, starting with a small loan and building back up."

Don Rardin, assistant vice president First Federal Savings, echoed the seriousness of a foreclosure: "When we look at a foreclosure or repossession on a credit report, it pretty much destroys a chance of getting a loan from First Federal." Rardin went on, however, to temper those remarks: "Of course, we're people too. We understand unfortunate events that may not have much bearing on one's real credit worth and we try to look at black marks with a little judgement." He said it was essential that those who have been foreclosed upon find someone who will work with them to re-establish their credit.

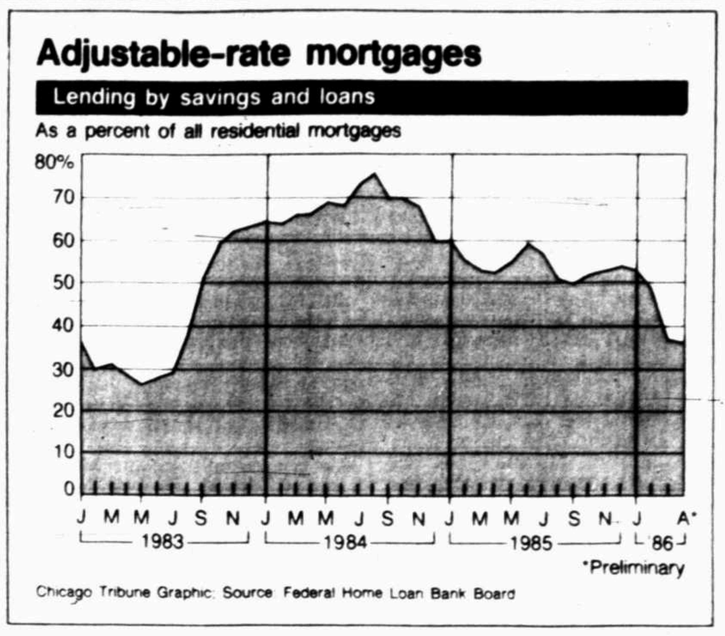
CAN AN INDIVIDUAL wander around for years with a black mark on his record and be refused loans without ever knowing a negative credit rating is reason his loan applications are rejected?

"I don't think so," said Rardin, "we're required to inform an applicant in writing when he has been reject for a loan for credit purposes. We are not allowed to discuss the details of the negative credit with him, but we can refer him to the credit reporting service."

But bad credit is not the only haunting consequence of a foreclosure. Income tax complications is another. "Forgiveness," that is the amount of expenses incurred and "forgiven" by a mortgage lender in forclosing must be reported to the Internal Revenue Service. If it is not it could cause tax problems and penalties down the road. Also, in rare instances, the homeowner being foreclosed will realize an actual gain from a repossession and sale. This, too, must be reported as income.

Perhaps the most severe consequence is a collection suit by a mortgage lender and a resulting judgement. Since lenders have four years in which to pursue legal remedies to recover losses, this threat can jeopardize the acquisition of new assets. While mortgage insurance, purchased by the borrower, at the time of purchase covers part of the losses, it is not always a guarantee that the insurance company will not come looking to collect losses. If the mortgage has been sold to the secondary market, as is generally the case, it will be up to the mortgage investor to pursue collection.

It should be pointed out, however, that mortgage lenders seldom pursue those who walk away from their homes for financial reasons, feeling that the time and expense of going after someone who is unable to pay is not worth it. But, they have four years in which to attempt to collect losses from a foreclosure, and may attempt it when one suspects it the least.



Exxon employee given $10 million settlement

By BRADEN PHILLIPS
The Stamford Advocate

BRIDGEPORT, Conn. — Ian J. Dowie twice refused offers from Exxon Corp. to settle out of court because he wanted to prove he had been treated unfairly.

Dowie rejected $300,000, the largest of Exxon's offers, and instead won both vindication and $10.1 million after a Bridgeport federal jury found Exxon guilty of fraud and breach of contract for promises made seven years ago when Dowie was recruited.

"My prime purpose was justice," Dowie said in a phone interview Thursday. "I said 'no' to the settlements because I wanted the jury to make a decision and show I was wronged.

"I knew I would be getting more if I won the case," he added, "but that was very secondary. You have to believe that."

Dowie said that other than providing for his children, he had given no practical thought to what he would do with the money should he receive it. One of his sons, a 19-year-old, suffers from cerebral palsy and requires special care at a private school in Pennsylvania, he said.

"At the moment, I have nothing," he said, "and until the case is solved, I don't anticipate having anything."

A spokeswoman for New York-based Exxon, Sarah W. Johnson, said in prepared statement on Wednesday that the company will appeal the decision.

Dowie, who was represented by David Golub and Richard Blumenthal of Silver, Golub & Sandak, a Stamford law firm, said he had expected the appeal and would patiently await its outcome.

Dowie was working as national marketing director for International Business Machines Corp.'s Canadian subsidiary in 1979, when he was offered an executive position at Exxon. In his suit, he said that Exxon promised him the opportunity to run a business as president or chief executive officer, and more than $1 million in salary, bonuses and stock. After he went to work for Exxon in 1980 as vice president of marketing for Qyx Inc., a division of Exxon Enterprises, the promises were not met.

Dowie was vice president of Exxon Office Systems Co. when he was fired. Two years later the company collapsed, Golub said.

Whether Dowie should receive damages in the wake of such a loss is irrelevant, Golub said, because the company made the promises before it went under. The jury awarded Dowie $1 million with interest retroactive to Jan. 1. They also found that he was defrauded and gave him $100,000 for financial losses and $25,000 for emotional distress. Punitive damages were $9 million, half to Exxon Enterprises Inc. and half to Exxon Office Systems Co., a division of Exxon Corp.

No-tax-year common for large corporations

WASHINGTON (AP) — Over half the nation's richest corporations paid no federal income tax in at least one of the last five years and many received refunds of taxes paid in previous years, a labor-financed research group reported recently.

A report prepared by Citizens for Tax Justice concluded that 250 giant corporations — all of them profitable — paid an average tax rate of 14.9 percent on earnings of $388 billion during the 1982-85 period. That is about the same tax rate paid by an average family making $45,000 a year.

The study said 130 of those 250 companies paid no federal tax or received refunds during at least one of the years from 1981 through 1985. Forty-two paid zero or less in each of the years 1982 through 1985.

Those 42 corporations included some of the best-known names in American business, including American Telephone & Telegraph, with $24.9 billion in profits over the four years; DuPont, with $3.8 billion in profits; Pepsico, $1.9 billion; Xerox, $670 million; and General Mills, $1.2 billion in profits.

"For the vast majority of American families who pay their federal income taxes year in and year out, the idea of a 'no-tax year' is almost inconceivable," Robert S. McIntyre, director of federal tax policy at Citizens for Tax Justice, said in releasing the report. "But for most of America's largest corporations, no-tax years are now commonplace."

The report was released as a Senate-House conference committee began working on a compromise plan for overhauling the income tax. The separate bills passed by the House and Senate would make it more difficult for corporations to escape the tax collector in years in which they turn a profit.

This is the third annual corporate-tax survey by Citizens for Tax Justice, a Washington-based research organization financed in part by labor unions. Most of the figures are based on reports the companies prepare for stockholders and file with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The study determines a company's effective federal tax rate by dividing profits into the amount of taxes currently payable. That calculation does not consider taxes that are payable but deferred until some future year.

The tax figures cover federal income taxes only; they do not take into account any taxes paid to foreign governments or to state and local governments in this country.

In most cases, profitable companies that pay no federal tax in a given year are able to do so by taking advantage of depreciation deductions and investment credits in the tax law. A company that buys an expensive piece of machinery, for example, can reduce or even wipe out any current liability by using depreciation and the investment credit, which were enacted as incentives for such purchases.

If depreciation, the investment credit and other special provisions exceed current tax liabilities, a company may "carry back" the excess — use it to offset tax paid in a previous year. That results in the government mailing a tax refund to the company.

—If the 250 profitable companies surveyed had been taxed at the full 46 percent maximum corporate rate, their taxes in 1982-85 would have been $178.5 billion, or $120.5 billion more than they actually paid. Because of deductions and credits, few companies pay the full tax rate.

—The six largest defense contractors paid taxes averaging 3.5 percent of their $21.7 billion in profits. The biggest, General Electric, had $10.9 billion profits during the four years and paid 2.4 percent in tax. Boeing Co. had a $2.27 billion profit but instead of paying taxes, received $121 million in refunds. Rockwell International netted $2.77 billion and paid a 24.6 percent rate.

NEW YORK (AP) — Stephen Hassenfeld, the 44-year-old chairman and chief executive officer of Hasbro Inc., achieved a remarkable feat last year: He took his company to the top, making it the nation's No. 1 toy maker.

But the third generation of the Hassenfeld family to lead the company says the real difficulties could lie ahead.

"I can't say you're challenged running a business on the upside. You're challenged when it peaks and it begins to slide away from you," Hassenfeld said.

Hasbro, short for Hassenfeld Brothers, was founded by brothers Henry, Hillel and Herman in 1923 in Providence, R.I. The company at first sold textile remnants, then began manufacturing pencil boxes and school supplies.

Henry's son Merrill, who was named president in 1943, took the company into toys.

Stephen, who is Merrill's son and assumed the chairmanship in 1980, led the company into the big time.

Hasbro entered the 1980s with just under $100 million in yearly revenue; since then it has grown twelvefold. Its 1980 profit of $4.6 million has multiplied by more than 21.

In 1985, the company's profit soared 89 percent to $98.97 million on a revenue jump of 71 percent to $1.23 billion.

His passion, instead, has been to create "balance," a favorite word of his that comes up over and over again in conversation.

"The toy industry has had a reputation, and in some ways deserved, for being a business that you could never quite predict. There wasn't the consistency one year to the next," Hassenfeld said.

"I basically said, I've had a lot of exercise, but if we build something substantial, is it something I want to do for 30 years?

"If only I can bring balance to it.

"Ours is a portfolio of toy ideas. We need to be balanced, to make sure we don't have too much in one segment. That we be balanced in price points; not just ideas that have been proved over time and not just fresh ideas."

To achieve this coveted balance, Hasbro dropped some traditional toys, such as gum-ball banks and doctor and nurse sets. It deliberately did not enter certain areas, such as the video games, which were a huge, but short-lived success. It became more selective about producing licensed toys, which also tend to have short life spans.

The company developed new, highly successful products such as the Transformers, its best seller last year, and My Little Pony. It brought back G.I. Joe, which is hot again.

IT ALSO acquired companies to gain entries into new segments. Its major purchase was Milton Bradley Co., the games and puzzle maker, for $360 million in 1984. Another was Knickerbocker Toy Co., a maker of plush toys, for $6.3 million in 1983.

The overall strategy worked, say toy industry analysts, who are highly enthusiastic about Hasbro, and Hassenfeld.

"Hasbro is where every other toy company in America aspires to be as far as the diversity of its product line," said Paul Valentine, a toy analyst wtih Standard & Poor's Corp.

The company, which is now based in Pawtucket, R.I., sold $280 million worth of Transformers last year. Those sales will fall to $180 million this year, Hassenfeld predicts, with strange, small delight.

"I wanted to prove to everyone you can lose volume on a substantial category and still grow your business," Hassenfeld said. "We can deal with a megabrand."

He uses G.I. Joe as another example.

The company reintroduced the toy in 1982 after a four-year hiatus, and that year it sold $52 million worth, representing 40 percent of the company's volume. Last year it sold a whopping $150 million worth, but the toy represented just 12.5 percent of overall volume, Hassenfeld said.

G.I. Joes and Transformers will press each other for best selling status at Hasbro in 1986, he said.

OVERALL REVENUE will increase 12 percent this year, Hassenfeld predicts. The comany declines to project profit. Thomas Kully, an analyst with William Blair & Co. in Chicago, is forecasting a 15.5 percent profit gain, while Valentine expects a more modest 8.5 percent increase.

This year's major Hasbro toy entries are Jem, a punk Barbie-like doll, and Inhumanoids, boy's action figures that come from the center of the earth. And the company recently unveiled Bingo, an interactive electronic teddy bear, making Hasbro the first major toy maker to jump into a category that analysts consider highly promising.

Hassenfeld says he fosters good ideas at his company this way: "There are no absolutes. I like to think we have more guidelines than policy. If I say no today and they really are keen on it they know they can come back at another time."

But in the future, it will be very hard for Hasbro to match its already attained success.

Paul Rothman, a toy analyst with Advest Group Inc. in Hartford, Conn., notes: "They can't keep up the fantastic growth. They were growing off a small base before."

Still Valentine, citing the company's new electronic toy, said: "They are really aggressively competing in the industry and not resting on their laurels."

Hassenfeld said: "I think what we have learned is how to market to children.

"I THINK THERE are some opportunities that in time will make us a more broadly based children's marketer. Maybe we'll do something that is obvious, maybe we won't do the obvious."

Or: "We could just be in the toy business in three years from now. It wouldn't be the worst thing in the world," Hassenfeld said.

The immediate Hassenfeld family controls about 15 percent of the company's stock, which is listed on the American Stock Exchange.

Hassenfeld joined the company in 1964, and held various posts until he became president in 1974. After his father died in 1979, he became chairman.

Analysts expect gas prices to rebound

NEW YORK (AP) — Consumers will pay more for gasoline by the end of the year because the market will rebound, oil industry analysts say, but they differ on when prices will start rising and by how much.

"The risk to the consumers now is higher prices rather than another windfall of lower prices," said Sanford Margoshes of Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc. in New York.

Dan Lundberg, publisher of the Lundberg Letter, which follows the oil industry, agreed: "I would not look for future tumbling of prices."

Predictions on increases range from a nickel-a-gallon by Labor Day and up to 17 cents later to just a few pennies by year's end.

Lundberg said he expected that recent low crude prices could still result in cheaper gasoline, because the lag between the time refiners acquire crude and the time finished products reach gas stations usually ranges between 45 to 90 days.

Thus, he said, "to some extent, there's about another 1.5 cents to 2 cents in the distribution system from the refineries that has not worked its way through to the pump."

Several analysts said, however, that by mid- to late-August, prices, which average 89.75 cents per gallon according to Lundberg's semiweekly survey, would start rising again.

Though some maintain that crude prices could still stay in the $8-a-barrel range, others predicted they could rise about $2 per barrel by Labor Day.

On July 28, the 13-nation Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries will meet to again try to devise a quota system for apportioning production — and hence propping up prices.

Most analysts said they believed the OPEC ministers would be ready to reach some sort of accord, mainly because, as Lundberg put it, "they are not making revenues."

Diamond Shamrock cuts dividend

DALLAS (AP) — Diamond Shamrock Corp. officials have cut the annual cash dividend from $1 per share to 40 cents and authorized the repurchase of up to 25 million shares of common stock over the next two years to weather the energy slump.

The company's board of directors also voted Thursday to eliminate the portion of the dividend previously paid in units of Diamond Shamrock Offshore Partners Limited Partnership, officials said.

The board declared a third quarter dividend of 10 cents per share payable on Sept. 8.

"Given what appears to be an extended period of lower oil and gas prices, we believe this is a prudent course of action and in the best interests of our shareholders over the long term," chairman William Bricker said.

He said the stock repurchase program is being undertaken because the company believes its stock is currently undervalued. "By reducing the number of outstanding shares we will be increasing the amount of oil and gas reserves underlying each share," he said.

The board declared a dividend of $1 per share on the company's $4 cumulative convertible preferred stock and a dividend of 51¾ cents per share on the $2.07 cumulative convertible preferred stock.

Diamond Shamrock Offshore Partners declared a regular third quarter cash distribution of 70 cents per unit payable on Sept. 8.

Company town determined to diversify

Bartlesville raises taxes to counter low oil prices

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (AP) — When corporate raiders T. Boone Pickens and Carl Icahn made unsuccessful attempts to take over Phillips Petroleum Co., the people of Bartlesville rallied in the streets and mailed "Boone Buster" cookies to Wall Street money managers.

Bartlesville showed the spunky spirit of an underdog featherweight fighter, a town of Davids willing to take on Goliaths to protect its beloved No. 1 employer and benefactor.

Now, with Phillips and the rest of the oil industry reeling from the worldwide decline in prices, David is on the ropes again — and fighting back again.

By a 2-1 margin, residents voted May 6 to raise their sales tax for the sole purpose of financing a $4.2 million economic development campaign to draw new industry to a town thirsting for jobs.

"Economic development" and "diversification" have become the new buzz words throughout the oil patch, from Houston to New Orleans to small towns like Bartlesville. Yet few communities have become aggressive overnight the way Bartlesville has, approving a public war chest that will not only pay for Chamber of Commerce presentations and brochures, but also include incentives such as free land and tax breaks.

"We've got to get out and beat the bush for business, and a lot of cities have been doing that long before Bartlesville," said Mayor Arch Robbins, himself a Phillips employee. "I suppose if we didn't bring in any more business the town won't dry up and blow away. But with only one business, even a slight downturn hurts innocent people."

THE VOTE represents a swift turnaround for Bartlesville on two counts. Last October, Bartlesville voted down a tax increase for a new library, and, Robbins and others said, the town has never before been keen on outsiders.

"Historically, the public in Bartlesville had not wanted a very aggressive economic development program. People came here because of the kind of town it was, and they didn't want to change it," Robbins said.

"But with the economic problems that have come up in oil and farming, which is what Bartlesville is, and the particular problems that have come on Phillips because of the takeovers, the public sentiment has changed."

Through a combination of layoffs and early retirements, Phillips' Bartlesville workforce has shrunk in 18 months from 7,800 to 5,200. At the other major employer in town, TRW Reda Pump Co., employment has crashed from a peak of 1,600 last October to fewer than 750 in June.

Sales tax revenue is off significantly, city officials said, and the $21 million city budget has been cut by $1 million, delaying bridge repairs and fire station construction.

Still, voters felt they needed the five-year development program, financed by an increase of one-quarter of 1 percent to the former 5.25 percent sales tax.

"It's the kind of town that likes to do for itself," said Mike May, owner of May Bros. clothing store, which like most stores has seen its business drop at least 20 percent.

"NO ONE LIKES a tax increase. But when you're fighting for your survival as a business community, the people can see that," May said. "We either gear up and get in the ballgame or we'll see the tumbleweeds blowing down the street."

In Bartlesville, the street means Frank Phillips Boulevard, which leads past the Jane Phillips hospital, near the Phillips Mansion and the Phillips Hotel, past May's store and the Frank Phillips Park to Phillips Petroleum's research center.

Phillips has been good for Bartlesville, investing in civic projects and downtown renovations. The town is now a mixture of small-town Midwest charm and modern, urban architecture. Norman Rockwell meets Frank Lloyd Wright at the O.K. Corral.

It is that mixture on which Bartlesville thinks it can capitalize, even advertising that a new corporation could move right into a 221-foot office spire designed by Wright.

"We have too good a town to let it go down the tubes," druggist Paul Gunter said. "It was time, and people recognize that."

Gunter said merchants weren't worried about losing sales because of the sales tax increase. The increase would add only 25 cents, for example, to the existing $5.25 tax on a $100 radio-tape deck.

"That won't nearly affect me like a dollar of the price of a barrel of oil will," Gunter said.

SOME PEOPLE are even dabbling directly in economic development. A retired dentist has offered 10 acres of land to any company relocating to Bartlesville and hiring local workers, and two residents planned a 950-mile, publicity-seeking river journey on 22-foot pontoon boat covered with banners saying "Business for Bartlesville."

At the Chamber of Commerce, which will orchestrate Bartlesville's official campaign with a slogan "Known By the Company We Keep," director Sam Cartwright said he was setting his sights on small, non-oil-related firms.

"We're not expecting IBM or Ford or a Saturn plant, but we wouldn't turn it down. We're looking for some 50- to 100-employee factories, but we'd take a 10-employee business today, too," Cartwright said.

"We're going to survive. Bartlesville is an extremely tough town. It's an extremely business-oriented town," he said. "It's always been a tough town in competitions. We are survivors."

Electronics firm announces plans for Oklahoma plant

ENID, Okla. (AP) — A Georgia-based electronics firm says it plans to build a manufacturing and assembling plant in Enid, a project officials say will add 100 people to the workforce.

Jim Orton, president of Falcone International Inc. of Marietta, Ga., said Thursday all but six of the 100 new employees will be hired locally.

The firm will have an annual payroll of $2 million, he said.

Plans call for the plant to be in an existing 52,000-square-foot building in the south part of Enid. Enid Chamber of Commerce officials identified the building as the old Farmhand plant, which has been vacant several years.

Orton said projections call for the plant to be in operation by Nov. 1. At that time the plant will hire 35 employees, but Orton said the figure will gradually increase to 100.

Falcone International markets electronic meters and devices worldwide. Two of the products to be made in Enid will be radiation detection devices that can be strapped to the hips of workers in nuclear plants and a device that can detect lead in paint, Orton said.

Bob Davis, acting city manager, said a financial audit of Falcone's holdings after the mergers is needed before the city can seriously start negotiations.

Davis said Falcone will be offered all of the available state and city tax exemptions allowed by law.

PGBC plans varied set of courses

The Permian Basin Graduate Center has scheduled the following courses:

"Tax Planning for Troubled Businesses," will be held Thursday from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Many small businesses are facing financial difficulty due to the drop in the price of oil and farm products. The objective of this course will be to examine the tax factors that should be considered by these businesses as they attempt to develop an agreement with creditors out of court or in a Chapter 7 or 11 bankruptcy petition. Topics covered will include tax impact of debt discharges to both debtor and creditors, preserving the net operating loss tax discharge, tax priorities in bankruptcy cases, responsibilities for filing tax returns, and the tax consequences to indivi-dualt that file a bankruptcy petition. Dr. Grant W. Newton, professor of accounting, Pepperdine University, Malibu, will instruct. The fee is $130 or $15 for those unemployed since January. Participants are eligible for 8 CPE credits.

"Hydrogen Sulfide Safety Training" is set for Thursday from 8 a.m. to 12 noon. The Texas Railroad Commission enacted Rule 36 stating that those working in operations including drilling, working over, producing, injecting, gathering, processing, transporting, and storage of hydrocarbon fluids must attend Hydrogen Sulfide Safety Training. This course meets certification requirements. Greg Bonner, co-owner, Javelina Energy Services, Inc. will instruct. Fee is $50.

"The One Minute Manager" is scheduled for July 25 from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. This course is intended for all managers, supervisors, management trainees, and "bosses," who want to improve their management skills and productivity of their employees. This intensive one-day course emphasizes behavioral principles of how to get other people to work for you in a cooperative, productive manner. Dr. Raymond Bass, Petroleum Educational Services, Lafayette, will instruct. Fee is $130. Eligible for 8 CPE credits.

Ford Motors recalling 80,000 vans

DETROIT (AP) — Ford Motor Co. on Thursday said it was recalling 80,000 vans because of a problem with the steering that could leave the driver without control.

The nation's No. 2 automaker recalled the 1985 and '86-model E-350 Econoline and Club Wagon vans because the steering linkage could separate under certain conditions.

"The company is aware of six incidents of separation of steering linkage at low speeds," said John P. King, Ford service engineering manager. "All of the incidents involved delivery-type vehicles that carry heavy front-axle loads and make frequent low-speed, tight turns on dry surfaces."

There have been no accidents as a result of the steering linkage problems, King said.

Nancy Lopez, Ray Knight...

Their successes attributed to one another's love, support

By LINDA-MARIE SINGER

Golfer Nancy Lopez and New York Mets third baseman Ray Knight stand in front of their home which is located in the shadows of Shea Stadium.

"And I wanted to punch those people in the nose. After all, I was the one struggling and in a slump. No one had the right to ask me, 'What's wrong, Nancy? Why can't you win?' I guess I should have said, 'Hey, I'm not a machine.' Instead, I went back to my hotel room and cried."

Nancy Lopez isn't crying much these days, as she has just given birth to her second daughter. But not far away are dreams of green fairways that gave the New Mexican her hole-in-one in life.

"Over the years it's funny what you remember. The hurt, the good times. Going back to 1978 when I married Tim Melton, a sportscaster with a promising career, I was barely 21. In the beginning my husband acted as if he understood the pressure I was going through, but I guess there was a lot of jealousy — namely, the money factor. (In Ms. Lopez's first season with the LPGA in 1978 she took home over $189,000 in prize money.)

"So for the three years we were together, I could hear myself saying over and over, 'You're important, Tim. You're a big deal.' One day I just got tired and asked myself, 'Do I want to do this the rest of my life?' "

Ms. Lopez calls for the sitter who sweeps the little girl into the TV room.

"How I tried with that marriage. You have no idea. I wanted to be such a good wife, and wanted my husband to be secure. But I was who I was in his mind, and nothing could change that."

Until Ray Knight, All-Star major leaguer. As luck would have it, Knight and Melton were friends, and during a 1978 Japan trip Ms. Lopez met Knight. However, there were no fireworks or even a fading sparkler, as he was married and Ms. Lopez was engaged.

As if on cue, the Mets third baseman walks into the living room, quickens his pace to his wife's side, and embraces her.

"Know what? When I first met her, I had read so much (about her) and I was in awe. Yet she was so outgoing, and the fact that she wasn't caught up in the media hoopla really impressed me. Did I fall in love with her? No way. I was very married. Besides which, she was a little heavy..."

Ms. Lopez blushes and aims a mock look of dismay in his direction.

"My first wife was a real Southern belle who, unfortunately, chose to live her life through mine. Here was your typical baseball wife — breakfast, ballpark, babies, breakfast. But with Nancy, her career is a plus, something that enriches her life."

So much so that when they wed in 1982, Knight insisted that his wife not take his name professionally.

Ms. Lopez smiles over at him. Their eyes meet. "He was that breath of fresh air I needed. Ray made me feel I could tell him anything. What's more, he obviously understood the pressure of being an athlete and realized how much support I needed."

"Let's just say that ours was a friendship that turned to love," Knight adds, his Southern accent lilting on the word "love."

Both stop momentarily as Ashley flies into the room and leaps into her daddy's arms. "How pretty you look today," he tells her. She beams and scampers off.

Ms. Lopez sinks back into the sofa and begins speaking in a quiet voice. "When I separated I went to my father for advice. Should I get a divorce or try to work through it? That's when he told me, 'Whatever you do, you have to be happy in life.' "

But then Domingo Lopez always wanted the best for his daughter. Even back then at age 7 when she insisted on tagging along with her parents on the golf links.

One day the inevitable occurred. Ms. Lopez borrowed her mother's Patty Berg 4-wood to join in. They both urged her on, but her father gave the most lasting advice: "Just hit the ball. Never, ever miss."

She hasn't missed since. "However, my mom was the one who didn't understand the competitive part of the game. If I didn't play well, she was kind of disappointed and let me know. Dad — never.

" 'You won't be the best,' she told me whenever my score wasn't what she expected. My father was different. 'You can't say those things and make her feel bad if she plays poorly. Nancy shouldn't be afraid ever to tell us the score.'

"And he never ridiculed me. Except for one time when I got so mad that I hit the club on the ground. I really slammed it! Dad made me understand that if I got angry, I'd play worse. 'You want to shoot a 39, or 40?' he asked. Suddenly it sank in: One shot could make the championship."

By age 9 she clinched her first Pee Wee event. Three years later she swept the New Mexico Women's Amateur. The USGA Junior Girls and Western Juniors events followed three consecutive times, capped off by the Mexican Amateur in 1975.

From there, the obvious: All-American at Tulsa University, the National Championship, member of the U.S. Curtis Cup and World Amateur teams.

Proving her conquests weren't flukes, at 21 she turned professional and was named Rookie of the Year for racking up nine tournament wins, including a record-setting five in a row.

In 1985, after the birth of her first child, she climbed back to the No. 1 ranking which she last held in 1978 and 1979.

What's her secret? "Being 29 and feeling 19. And naturally, having Ray, someone who was so supportive when I needed a friend...But with baseball season, it's going to be hard not being together full-time. I'll miss waking up in the morning and sharing my day with him."

The Mets star explains that they're never emotionally separated, "as we talk several times a day on the phone, often until 3 in the morning. I'm really so interested in her and what she does. I get tears...Sorry. It's just that we've been together in the off-season for six months, and it's hard to..."

Another hardship is Knight's 6-year-old son by his first wife. "That's a scar that will never heal. And when I think I always dreamed of having a son, and now he's away from me."

On a different level, the ball player suffered his share of physical scars during the last two seasons. His lackluster performance nearly cost him his position on the team, and the fans let him know it.

"They booed me unmercifully and called me unbelievably nasty names. Names you couldn't begin to print. See, my rehabilitation was so slow and I wanted to tell them, 'Golly, give me a chance, people. Back off and I'll produce for you.' It got so bad that one reporter wrote that Nancy Lopez was a better player than Ray Knight."

Ms. Lopez interjects, "It burned me up. I don't know. Golf is such a quiet game.

BETWEEN THE LINES

Q. Could you tell me about Kim Novak? I'd like to know how she got started in movies and what she's doing now.

Donna Mayzlik
Austin, Minn.

Novak

A. Marilyn Pauline Novak is 53, from Chicago, the daughter of Joseph Novak, an employee of the Chicago-Milwaukee Railroad and his wife, Blanche, a history teacher. She was tall, thin, gawky and shy as a child and had few friends, a situation she tried to remedy by joining a social club for teens when she was 11. The club sponsored fashion shows from time to time and since she had the right figure for it, she began to model in them.

She acquired so much poise in the process that she soon won a scholarship to a modeling school and modeled part-time after high school. In 1953, she was hired by an appliance company as one of four models to travel with a washing machine/refrigerator exhibit cross country, ending in San Francisco.

She and her model friends had their tickets home re-routed through Los Angeles, but she never used the return portion. She registered with a modeling agency there and within two weeks was cast as an extra in a movie called "The French Line."

An executive at Columbia Pictures noticed her, had her screen-tested, changed her first name to Kim and cast her in her first featured role, as a gun moll in the 1954 movie "Pushover." Over the next few years, she had the starring or co-starring role in other movies: "Pfft," "The Man with the Golden Arm," "Pal Joey," "Picnic," "The Eddy Duchin Story," "Bell, Book and Candle," "Vertigo" and others.

In the '60's, she made fewer films, among them a remake of "Of Human Bondage," "The Legend of Lylah Clare" and "The Great Train Robbery" before retiring to her ranch in Carmel, Calif., to raise llamas and enjoy a peaceful life.

She later married (and is still married to) Dr. Robert Malloy, a local veterinarian, and assisted him in his practice. In 1980, though, she returned to films in "The Mirror Crack'd" opposite Elizabeth Taylor, then did a few TV projects, such as the TV movie "Malibu."

Currently, she's filming her debut episodes for this season's "Falcon Crest." She's also writing her autobiography, "Through My Eyes."

Q. Please tell me about Nick Mancuso from "Stingray." Where is he from and how old is he?

Mona Graham
Opelika, Al.
Pat Meyers
Borden, Ind.

A. He's 38, was born in Mammola, Italy, but moved with his family to Toronto when he was 7. He began acting in high school, after a drama teacher asked him to read from "Julius Caesar" in class and then praised his delivery. He was soon performing with local experimental theaters. After a year at the University of Toronto and then the University of Guelph (also in Canada), he returned to Toronto to try his luck in professional theater.

After moving to Vancouver and working with the Vancouver Playhouse, he finally made some inroads. While working with the prestigious company at the Stratford Festival in Stratford, Ontario, he got his big break; he was spotted by ABC executives who cast him in a TV movie, "Dr. Scorpion," for the network. He moved to Los Angeles in 1978 and acted in two suspense films, "Nightwing" and "Deathship."

He followed those with a role in the miniseries "Scruples," a TV movie, "Desperate Intruder," Charlton Heston's movie "Mother Lode" and the critically praised movie "Ticket to Heaven."

Now, with "Stingray," he seems to have found steady work — although the show isn't on NBC's fall schedule, it will continue in production as a mid-season replacement. He can also be seen this week in an HBO drama called "Half of a Lifetime." Keith Carradine and Gary Busey co-star.

Q. Please answer a question about Isabella Rossellini: Is she one of a set of twins?

Maui, Hawaii

A. She is, indeed. Her twin sister, Ingrid, "the brain in the family," according to Isabella, is studying Italian literature at Columbia University's graduate school in New York. Isabella is the only one of Ingrid Bergman's four children to follow their mother into acting; her next projects are the movie "Blue Velvet" due out in September and the TV movie "Ingrid Bergman: My Story," in which she's set to portray her mother. Filming starts soon.

Q. Val Kilmer intrigues me. He's so talented and good looking, but he seems to have totally disappeared. What's he doing?

Karen Bauer
Fresno, Calif.

A. He hasn't disappeared at all; he's one of the stars of "Top Gun," which is certainly getting a lot of exposure. He will be disappearing from public view for a while, however, while he shoots a documentary. He's co-producing, directing and narrating a film detailing the efforts of the New Mexico-based "Total Victory" movement, whose purpose it is to reconcile all people, even of differing views, so that they can live peacefully and harmoniously together.

Q. What is the latest on Jim Backus's physical condition? He had been diagnosed as having a basal ganglion, I remember, which mimics Parkinson's disease. Was the cure effective? Is he all right?

Mrs. M.S.
South Bend, Ind.

A. We spoke to his wife, Henny, and she confirmed that he's coming along well and working hard on his next book, "Jim Backus as Told to Henny Backus." "It's part autobiography," she explains, "and part nitty gritty about what goes on in this town, Hollywood." As for his acting career, he hasn't given up on it. "As soon as he's completely well, he'll go back," she says.

Q. I have been a B.J. Thomas fan for some time. Could you tell me what he's doing now?

Roy L. Foster
Baton Rouge, La.

Thomas

A. Touring. "He's going to be on the road the entire summer; it's a real busy time," according to an associate. He's currently in Saskatchewan, Canada; then Memphis; Dracut, Mass.; Bangor, Me.; Boston; Wheeling, W. Va; Denver; Phillipsburg, Kan., and on and on through the Midwest.

Q. Did Ann-Margaret ever have any children?

Raymond E. Greenwood
Cheshire, Conn.

A. No. She's stated several times publicly that she regrets not having had any children. She has acted as stepmother, though, to husband Roger Smith's three children from his previous marriage.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Fleck works on display

The exhibit "Joseph Fleck: An Early Taos Painter" is on display at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., through Aug. 11.

Organized by the Museum of Fine Arts, Museum of New Mexico, this exhibition will travel to seven museums across the Southwest.

Fleck was born in Austria in 1892. He received academic training at the royal Academy of fine Arts, Vienna, and early in his career received recognition for his artistic abilities. Due to the poor economic conditions of post World War I Europe, Fleck left Austria and came to the United States to pursue his artistic ambitions.

Initially settling in Kansas City, Mo., Fleck worked as a chief designer at a Tiffany stained glass workshop, supplementing his income with portrait commissions. He remained in Kansas City for two years until 1924, when he visited an exhibition of the taos Society Artists. As a result of this experience, Fleck moved to Taos and made his permanent residence there.

With the exception of two painting trips to Europe in 1926 and 1931, Taos was Fleck's home and inspiration until 1942, when he decided to accept the position of Artist-in-Residence at the University of Kansas.

Although he benefited intellectually from the university atmosphere, and especially from his friendship witht the well-known regionalist painter, thomas Hart Benton, Fleck longed for Taos and returned there in 1946.

This exhibition provides a comprehensive overview of Fleck's development as an artist and focuses on his interaction with the New Mexico landscape and native inhabitants.

Hours at the museum are Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m. There is no admission charge to view any of the exhibits at the museum.

Lace collection on display

"Lace from the Collection of Carol Sayles" is on display through Aug. 29 at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

This exhibition features exquisite examples of antique European lace fating from the late 16th through 19th centuries. the major pieces of lace which will be on exhibit are ladies' shawls, altar cloths, cuffs, collars, handkerchiefs, borders, trims and other decorative pieces.

"The exhibition is the most comprehensive overview of the history of lace and lacemaking I have seen in many years," said Sue Devine, acting director.

Ms. Sayles is accomplished in the art of needlework and has been an avid collector of textiles most of her life. She began collecting lace during her career as a fight attendant with Pan American World Airways.

"During layovers in Europe, I was able to see examples of lace that are not easily found in the United States, and I became fascinated with the history and beauty of this intricate from of needlework," Ms. Sayles says.

In connection with this exhibition, Ms. Sayles will conduct a lace and lacemaking workshop July 21 from 9 a.m. to noon. Charge is $10. The workshop will include a gallery walk and a talk accompanied by a slide demonstration. There will also be a demonstration of lacemaking and a lace identification period.

For more information on the workshop call Dianna Koeninger at 683-2882.

Lopez

And when I heard jeers from the fans, I felt like going over and saying, 'Excuse me. What gives you the right to do this? He's my husband, and if you knew what he had been through these past years, you'd understand and really like him.'

"Of course, some guys when they're injured sit on the bench. Not Ray. Yet they booed him?"

Knight explains, "If ball players tell you they can't hear all that, they're lying. Let me show you. Know how loud it sounds? (Takes a deep breath and screams) Boooooo! Yeah, makes you want to cry."

He has now proven he has The Knight Stuff, as he's now injury-free and batting over 300.

Ms. Lopez sends an inviting smile as she pads across the room. Knight heads for the kitchen, grabbing a bite before the game.

"Tonight after the game," comes the reply. Then softly she says, "People want to know just who's responsible for my No. 1 ranking last year. Well, you can thank Ray, but here he was injured and put down by everyone. Still, he found those words of encouragement.

" 'You can do it!' he told me repeatedly when I thought I couldn't. 'You can be No. 1.' And I was."

The little girl understands and throws her arms around his comforting shoulders. Heading for the front door, he doesn't have to ask, as his wife approaches with her arms extended.

'About Last Night's' title changes

By DAVID LEE FORREST
Lifestyle Editor

Between the Meese commission's report on pornography and the Supreme Court's decision on sodomy laws, sex has certainly been a hot topic the last couple of weeks.

While you may have been hearing a lot about pornography and sodomy, you many not have heard as much about "Sexual Perversity in Chicago." That's because the movie originally entitled "Sexual Perversity in Chicago" had its title changed to "About Last Night."

"About Last Night" is based on the play "Sexual Perversity in Chicago," written in the early 1970s by David Mamet. The title became controversial after television networks and several publications refused to run advertisements for the film solely because of the words "sexual perversity."

The filmmakers finally rushed to change the title to "About Last Night" after NBC said it would only run ads for anything titled "Sexual Perversity in Chicago" after 11:30 p.m.

The title isn't the only thing that changed during the play's transformation into a film. Mamet's play about the "meat market" singles scene of the late 1970s had a bleak, despairing ending, while the movie has an upbeat, happy one.

The story centers on two single people, Danny and Debbie, played by Rob Lowe and Demi Moore respectively, who fall in love with one another and try to build a serious relationship on the flimsy foundation of a one-night stand.

This effort is made all the more difficult by the fact that Danny's best friend, played by Jim Belushi, and Debbie's roommate, played by Elizabeth Perkins, try to pull the couple apart.

Lowe and Ms. Moore are merely almost-innocent bystanders swept up in the Sexual Revolution, while Belushi is a combat-hardened veteran of the Battle Between the Sexes and Ms. Perkins is one of the walking wounded from meat-market melees.

Belushi is crude and lewd but amusing as he doles out such questionable advice to Lowe as "Never call a broad more than once a week." Ms. Perkins is all prickly edges and sharp wits, but ultimately seems to have a soft, likable core.

Lowe and Ms. Moore are much more conventional love-story characters as the pair of naive young people in search of true love. Lowe is not a very skilled actor, but gives one of his better performances in "About Last Night."

Ms. Moore has some very good moments — among her best is when cleaning up after her first Thanksgiving dinner she notes, "Well, it's official; I've become my mother" — but she's also forced to act irrationally skittish.

The movie occasionally lapses into some of the cliches one associates with teen romance films, including the standard music video segments, but for the most part it is a tart, sharp-edged film.

"About Last Night" could never be confused with an old 1950s Doris Day romantic comedy. Be forewarned: Belushi's opening monologue alone contains more strong language and sexual material than most other entire R-rated movies.

"About Last Night," rated R for strong language, sexual content, nudity and adult themes, is now showing at the UA Cine IV.

'Paradise' not as funny as it could be

Judging from the film's casting, a visit to see "Club Paradise" should be a dream vacation. The movie is stuffed with talented actors, and various other well-known personages.

The movie includes Robin Williams as a Chicago native living on a tiny tropical isle, Peter O'Toole as the elegantly apathetic island governor, Jimmy Cliff as a reggae singer, Adolph Caesar (in his last film role before his death) as a low-rent dictator, Rick Moranis and Eugene Levy as two would-be swinging bachelors, Robin Duke and Mary Gross as two would-be bachelorette swingers, Brian Doyle-Murray as a corrupt businessman, Andrea Martin as a frustrated housewife, Joe Flaherty as an inept pilot and Twiggy as Williams' romantic interest.

Could a movie so stuffed with such talented actors, with so many funny alumni of both "SCTV" and "Saturday Night Live" and with such an interesting assortment of various other well-known personages possibly fail to be hilariously entertaining?

Sadly, yes.

This movie about a tiny Caribbean resort struggling against a luxury hotel chain's atttempt to buy it out is a serious disappointment despite all its cummulative talent and amazing potential.

The movie does have its funny lines. Williams, for example, has a nice bit telling Moranis and Levy that a pair of beautiful models "said you weren't fit to sleep with pigs. I stood up for you, though. I said you were."

Unfortunately, there just aren't as many such hearty laughs as there should be.

For most of the movie, Williams looks like he's standing around waiting for a chance to improvise something terrifically funny — a chance that never arrives. O'Toole is utterly wasted in a small, pointless role. Most of the other comics seem to have each been alloted a small individual joke quota that gets used up all too quickly.

The screenplay, co-written by the usually very funny Harold Ramis (who also directed), just never makes adequate use of its crew of merry pranksters. Instead, it wastes a lot of time wringing its hands about how terrible it is that developers want to make quaint little islands into tourist traps.

'Under the Cherry Moon' often childish

Christopher Tracy is played by the bad boy of rock music, Prince, who made his motion picture in the 1984 hit "Purple Rain." This time, though, Prince wasn't content with merely starring in a movie; he also directed "Cherry Moon."

The movie is intended to be a homage to the great Hollywood romance films of the 1940s. Prince plays a American expatriate gigolo living in Paris by his wits — actually by the witlessness of the ladies he uses.

He finally finds what we are supposed to believe is his one true love, a beautiful young woman — conveniently wealthy — named Mary, played by Kristin Scott-Thomas.

"Punk!" Mary yells.

"Brat!" Christopher yells.

"Gigolo!"

"Cabbagehead!"

It's actually more like some sort of perverse children's book: See Prince. See Mary. See Mary be mean to Prince. Be mean, Mary, be mean. See Prince be mean to Mary. Be mean, Prince, be mean. See Mary's Dad be mean to Prince and Mary. Be mean, Dad, be mean. See audience yawn.

This unimaginative plot is essentially secondary to the film's real main interest — Prince. Prince the director makes sure the camera never strays too far from the pouty face of Prince the actor. He also makes sure we get an extremely close look at the star's outrageously sequin-bespangled wardrobe.

All of this could be stomached much more easily if the one thing that really made "Purple Rain" work — the stunning live musical performances of Prince and the Revolution — was also in "Cherry Moon." However, the one real musical number in the new film is a rather silly bit with Prince dancing to a boom box in a fancy nightclub. Even "Kiss," the big hit single from Prince's already-released soundtrack album, is just used as background music.

Virtually the only thing that works as well as it should in "Cherry Moon" is the light comic banter between Prince and his friend Jerome Benton. Benton was also good in his small role in "Purple Rain" as singer Morris Day's valet.

While it occasionally looks a little washed out, the use of black-and-white photography to make "Cherry Moon" resemble those 1940s romances is also quite clever. "Under the Cherry Moon" is too silly and childish, however, to justify its more ambitious artistic pretensions.

As Joan Rivers might say to Prince, "Oh, grow up!"

McGyver displays Yankee ingenuity

By ANNE EATON
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

"MacGyver's a non-violent character. We're not talking about a guy who's got his shirt unbottoned to his navel; we're talking about a regular guy from Minnesota who happens to have a flair for physics and science."
— Richard Dean Anderson

Did you know that if you're ever locked in a nuclear disposal chamber, with only minutes before radioactive slush turns you into an atomic Dorito, you can use the screwdriver on your Swiss army knife to short-circuit the timer from inside the unit, causing the door to be released? And in case of a nuclear meltdown, you can climb to the roof of the reactor and unblock the works with your wrench. If you don't have a wrench, you can disassemble an automatic pistol and use the frame to loosen the main bolt.

Viewers who watch "MacGyver" are regularly given useful tips on how to extricate themselves from hopeless situations like these. Using simple Yankee ingenuity, they learn how to turn ordinary household junk into deadly weapons. And vice versa. The show, which is produced by among others, Henry Winkler (Fonzie of "Happy Days"), is now being shown on ABC on Wednesday nights. In the fall, it will air on Monday nights.

The notion that we can stop the Russians by using supplies available at any tag sale might prove enlightening if not hilarious to — say — the Defense Department. "OK, OK," says Richard Dean Anderson, who stars as MacGyver. "It's obvious that our tongue is deeply ensconced in our cheek."

According to the actor, the show's writers borrow heavily from the real Richard Dean Anderson in creating their hero. "They have allowed me to bring as much of my personality into it as I can," he says. "We're trying all kinds of parallels now. Not just having MacGyver be from Minnesota. There are elements of irreverance that I bring to MacGyver. He ducks when people are shooting at him. He's no dummy. He'll save somebody, but he'll save his own ass, too. There's none of this here-stand-behind-me stuff. Recently he faced a martial-arts expert and he got the living daylights beat out of him. But at the fatal moment, he looks up at the guy who's about to skewer him and says, 'Give up?' "

The eponymous MacGyver who cooks up these prodigies of seat-of-the-pants derring-do is not your usual TV hero. He's afraid of heights. He hates guns. He ducks when people are shooting at him. The A-Team could lick him easily in a fair fight. But just give MacGyver a rubberband and a bunch of paper clips and he turns into Mr. Invincible. Using a handful of the sort of detritus that people clean out of their desk drawers every six months, he can manufacture a slingshot or an UZI.

"MACGYVER'S A non-violent character," says his living prototype. "We're not talking about a guy who's got his shirt unbottoned to his navel; we're talking about a regular guy from Minnesota who happens to have a flair for physics and science."

For viewers whose main challenge in real life is sorting out rush-hour traffic, the action in adventure films can be difficult to follow. Without a play-by-play color analysis, many are reduced to staring at the flying fists and the swooping rocketships, waiting to see who's standing up once the smoke clears. To help the lay viewer grasp exactly how to turn a wrecked bicycle into a bomb, MacGyver explains the proceedings in a series of voice overs. These scoutmasterish narratives break into the dramatic continuity, and Anderson admits he has a problem with them. "It's a sore point for me having to do the voice-overs," he says. "The feeling is that it's necessary to have them, but it drives me up the wall because they explain what's going on almost too literally. You don't need to do that to an audience."

Viewers might get the idea that if only they'd watch MacGyver long enough they will be ready to join the Foreign Legion or at least Outward Bound. But instructions for deadly weapons, though authentic, are purposely kept incomplete. The tricks are checked out by a panel of experts, which include scientists from Caltech. The producers of "MacGyver" actually ran a contest, asking people to send in so-called "MacGyverisms," those clever Heloise's Hints for soldiers of fortune. "We got enough responses to keep us in scripts until the millenium," says Anderson. "We've already used a couple of them. In one episode, I picked a lock with the inside of a lightbulb filiment. Somebody sent that in."

With "MacGyver" renewed for next season, Anderson is sitting pretty, but it was not always thus. For months, the program teetered on the brink of cancelation. The production staff had to live with the tension of facing sudden death on a day-to-day basis. Anderson dealt with this gruesome possibility with his characteristic stoicism. "I know it's a transient business," he says, "and I've never become extremely attached to anything. My attitude going in was that I was going to have fun at all costs. So far, it's been a ball. In the past, when it's stopped being a ball I left."

Anderson is referring to his five-year stint as Dr. Jeff Webber on "General Hospital." During the last two years, the romance between Luke and Laura held center stage. "I have too much creative energy to be wasting away on a back-burner story," says Anderson, "so I got real antsy, unhappy and nervous, and it became obvious to me that it was time to move on. The character is very popular, so they sent him away to Carson City, Nevada. I don't know what he's doing now. They still keep referring to him. Anytime anybody on the show needs a vacation they 'go visit Jeff.' "

For Anderson, starring in his own TV show is not the fulfillment of a boyhood dream. Acting is strictly a fallback occupation. "My heroes when I was growing up were hockey players," he says. "I always wanted to be a professional hockey player, so I never gave acting a second thought until I broke both arms and found out that I couldn't play hockey anymore."

THESE DAYS, Anderson still shoves a puck around with a group of hockey buddies and sometimes appears in exhibition games for charity. Besides playing hockey, he also skis and scuba dives. Anderson claims he has mellowed. Time was, he used to jump out of planes and race motorcycles, and he still has a Harley Davidson in the garage of his West Hollywood bachelor digs.

Anderson is currently steady dating actress Sela Ward, with whom he costarred in "Emerald Point, N.A.S.," but his roommate is an Australian shepherd dog named Whiskey.

"One of the reasons I love 'MacGyver' so much is that it's outdoors," Anderson says. "We're outside all the time. Growing up, I was given so much freedom that I essentially educated myself on the road. I left home when I was about 15, hopping freights and hitchhiking everywhere. I could have been a great juvenile delinquent. I was kind of one of those kids who had all this energy floating around. When I was 17 years old, I took a three-month bicycle trip up through Canada, Alaska the Yukon and the Northwest Territory, camping out all the way."

Anderson comes from a tradition of hardy outdoorsmen. He was born on the coldest day of 1950 in northern Minnesota. "That's where they make below-zero weather. The brutal winters create a pretty tough stock. People up there know how to weather environmental change and hardship. There is an attitude about survival — the idea that I can get through anything. In Minnesota, I was taught how to drive on an iced lake. Learning how to do all that stuff makes it so much easier to endure more profound things."

That pioneer ethic, he explains, is why he headed west to outdoorsy California, instead of East to indoorsy New York. "Not that Californians are so great at endurance and self-reliance," he chuckles. "Most of the people in Los Angeles come here because of the nice weather and the comforts of home. I mean, if it even so much as rains in Los Angeles, people cancel weddings, dates, everything."

Now that Bobby Ewing in, Mark Graison out

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Did John Beck star in CBS' 'Dallas' last year and marry Bobby Ewing's widow in the season-ending cliffhanger, or did he only dream he was in the hit nighttime soap opera?

Beck returned to "Dallas" last season as Mark Graison to renew his romance with Pam Ewing, played by Victoria Principal. She was widowed when Bobby (Patrick Duffy) was struck and apparently killed by an automobile at the end of the 1984-85 season.

As the 1985-86 season ended in May, Beck's character married Pam. But when she woke the next morning, Bobby was in the shower. Since the finale, Beck has been dropped from the series.

"When I was told I was being let go I had mixed feelings," Beck said. "It also gave me great freedom. I could do theater or a movie or another series. When you're doing a show you can't do anything else. You don't have time. When you enjoy doing a variety of things, it can get frustrating."

One burning question now is how the writers will return Bobby to the show. The speculation is that Pam dreamed his death and all that happened last season.

Bringing back the dead is nothing new for "Dallas." Graison supposedly had died in a plane crash. Dusty Farlow, played by Jared Martin, was also thought dead in another plane crash, but he also turned up again.

"I'm out of 'Dallas' because the storyline is changing, but they won't tell me what direction it's going to take," Beck said.

"My character is now back in limbo. He's either lost or still alive, or he could have perished in the plane crash, if indeed last season was her fantasy. I really don't know how they're going to resolve it, although there's a lot of speculation. It should be interesting. I've heard some talk that people say it's ridiculous to bring Bobby back. But I think most people will accept it."

He doesn't know if he'd ever return to "Dallas." "Something could come down the line. Last season they didn't know Patrick was going to agree to come back until the last show. There was some doubt as to whether he would come back. I suppose if he'd said 'No,' I would have gone on."

Beck said Larry Hagman, who stars as J.R. Ewing, wanted Duffy to return. Hagman had also lobbied for a new executive producer and for the show to return to the way it had been in the past.

"Larry believes in the tightness of the family," he said. "The show last season had pulled away from the family. We went off to Colombia in search of emeralds...

"It was all set up by J.R. to get Pam away from Dallas so he could pull off something shady. Pam was kidnapped by Indians. Those were the kind of things that bothered Larry."

Beck, who has starred in the series, "Nichols" and "Flamingo Road," said he didn't resent being dropped from the show.

"I hope it all works out," he said. "But it was a kind of shock. When I married Pam I thought I'd be back. But it's a yearly thing. If they asked me in the future to come back I'd consider it."

Beck took off on a Mexican vacation with his wife Tina and their four children and hasn't yet accepted a new job. "I let it all slide for a while," he said.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF

© 1986 Tribune Media Services, Inc.

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q.—When my right-hand opponent redoubles after my partner's takeout double, I'm all at sea. When should I bid and when not? And how do I decide what to bid? — K.G., Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

A.—If everybody is being honest, you can have little or nothing in the way of high cards. Even if they are minimum, opener should have about 11 points in high cards, partner has about the same for his takeout double, and the redoubler must be in double figures for his action. So even if no one has much to spare, partner will be lucky to find you with as many as 6 points.

Therefore, it is not your hand, and your concern must be to get out of the auction as painlessly as possible. To see how you should act, let's consider a couple of hands you might have after your left-hand opponent opens the bidding with one diamond, partner doubles and the next hand redoubles:

A. ♠Jxx ♡Qxxx ♢xx ♣Jxxx
B. ♠Jx ♡Qxxx ♢xxx ♣Qxxx

There is no need to take any action with the first example. When the bidding gets back to your partner, he will bid his best suit and you will have reasonable support for him. You will have at least a seven-card combined trump suit in whichever suit partner happens to choose, and you will surely still be at the one-level.

Hand B is different. Should you pass, partner might bid one spade. Now if the opponents start doubling, you will have to go to the two-level in clubs in search of a better fit, and you are a level higher than you want to be.

The solution to this dilemma is to bid one heart. Partner knows you don't have much, so there is no need to worry about his getting over-enthused because you showed some signs of life.

Q.—In a recent column you mentioned Strong Pass systems. What is that all about? — G.N., Miami, Fla.

A.—Don't concern yourself with it. They are highly artificial methods which require an opening bid on hands within the 0-11 point range and a pass on hands which you or I would consider to be a normal opening bid.

These methods are difficult to play against because they disrupt the normal flow of the bidding. For example, in standard methods you can expect your side to get to open the bidding about half the time. Strong passers open three-quarters of the hands, so you are on the defensive right from the start.

Cincinnatian rides The Racer 6,000 times

KINGS MILLS, Ohio (AP) — Don Helbig thought he'd had it all when he hit his 5,000th ride on The Racer, a roller coaster at Kings Island amusement park.

That was two years ago Saturday.

Earlier this week, he hit 6,000, and the 23-year-old Cincinnatian who started his roller coaster epic "just for fun" in 1981 said, "I think I'll quit riding The Racer when Pete Rose stops playing baseball."

The Guiness Book of World Records lists roller coaster records on the basis of endurance rather than the number of rides.

Several factors contribute to why families don't eat meals together

By DoTTIE LAMM
King Features

The gotta-run generation. A study recently published in the Christian Science Monitor reported one common cultural influence in the background of National Merit Scholarship winners: Their families had sat down to dinner together every night.

Yet, if another study of contemporary family eating habits is accurate, National Merit Scholars (and other intellectually precocious offspring) may be an endangered species.

"Dinner? Who has time?" queries the Denver Post. "Mom and Dad have conflicting work schedules. No one wants to clean up afterward and besides, the dining room has been turned into a media room, the antique oak dining-room table has become a desk, a repository for all manner of mail (and other family junk)."

The article points to legions of parents who, from Monday through Thursday, trek with their children to fast food restaurants. Then possibly on Friday night the family sits down to a "home-cooked" meal of soup and sandwiches in front of the TV.

The fact that 60 to 70 percent of mothers — now in the paid work force — are no longer spending a major part of the day preparing a three-course meal to serve graciously on that old oak table has got to be a major factor contributing to this gotta-run phenomenon.

But so do these facts: that 25.7 percent of families are now headed by a single parent; school activities often last through the dinner hour; many kids need to work at the same fast-food outlets that feed their families; many fathers still don't cook; the mind-numbing influence of television.

High achievement aside (only 1,800 National Merit Scholarships are awarded each year in the United States), families also stand to lose other psychological goodies from the gotta-run mentality of their members.

According to psychologist Leonard Haber, "Never eating together creates a lack of appreciation for one another because people don't need one another; their needs are being met by total strangers. It make people more irritable, less cohesive, less conversational and more easily influenced by what on TV."

Some families, however, have found ways to buck the trend. The most common involves doing all the family cooking Saturday or Sunday, freezing the meals and taking them out each weekday night for a fuss-free family spread.

Some families with older children assign a different person responsibility for dinner every night. In others, the kids do the shopping, the parents the cooking, or vice versa. Even though, as one mother reports, "It's hard to keep this going when fast food is so cheap, convenient and available."

Another family has catered meals delivered five days a week. More affordable are the dozens of "take me home" establishments that prepare nutritious meals a parent can pick up on the way home from work.

This may not be authentic "home cooking," but the food is really not the issue. Perhaps even blaming the fast-food industry is a bum rap. Who says it can't be spread around a family dinner table and enjoyed in a traditional manner, with the television turned off?

The feeling of solidarity, the inspiration to achievement and the passing on of family values come from the special interaction anchored by the mutual breaking of bread, not from how long someone slaved over a gourmet meal.

This weekend, let your whole family live like fat cats.

Several factors contribute to why families don't eat meals together

By DoTTIE LAMM
King Features

The gotta-run generation. A study recently published in the Christian Science Monitor reported one common cultural influence in the background of National Merit Scholarship winners: Their families had sat down to dinner together every night.

Yet, if another study of contemporary family eating habits is accurate, National Merit Scholars (and other intellectually precocious offspring) may be an endangered species.

"Dinner? Who has time?" queries the Denver Post. "Mom and Dad have conflicting work schedules. No one wants to clean up afterward and besides, the dining room has been turned into a media room, the antique oak dining-room table has become a desk, a repository for all manner of mail (and other family junk)."

The article points to legions of parents who, from Monday through Thursday, trek with their children to fast food restaurants. Then possibly on Friday night the family sits down to a "home-cooked" meal of soup and sandwiches in front of the TV.

The fact that 60 to 70 percent of mothers — now in the paid work force — are no longer spending a major part of the day preparing a three-course meal to serve graciously on that old oak table has got to be a major factor contributing to this gotta-run phenomenon.

But so do these facts: that 25.7 percent of families are now headed by a single parent; school activities often last through the dinner hour; many kids need to work at the same fast-food outlets that feed their families; many fathers still don't cook; the mind-numbing influence of television.

High achievement aside (only 1,800 National Merit Scholarships are awarded each year in the United States), families also stand to lose other psychological goodies from the gotta-run mentality of their members.

According to psychologist Leonard Haber, "Never eating together creates a lack of appreciation for one another because people don't need one another; their needs are being met by total strangers. It make people more irritable, less cohesive, less conversational and more easily influenced by what on TV."

Some families, however, have found ways to buck the trend. The most common involves doing all the family cooking Saturday or Sunday, freezing the meals and taking them out each weekday night for a fuss-free family spread.

Some families with older children assign a different person responsibility for dinner every night. In others, the kids do the shopping, the parents the cooking, or vice versa. Even though, as one mother reports, "It's hard to keep this going when fast food is so cheap, convenient and available."

Another family has catered meals delivered five days a week. More affordable are the dozens of "take me home" establishments that prepare nutritious meals a parent can pick up on the way home from work.

This may not be authentic "home cooking," but the food is really not the issue. Perhaps even blaming the fast-food industry is a bum rap. Who says it can't be spread around a family dinner table and enjoyed in a traditional manner, with the television turned off?

The feeling of solidarity, the inspiration to achievement and the passing on of family values come from the special interaction anchored by the mutual breaking of bread, not from how long someone slaved over a gourmet meal.
