Congress tentatively OKs deficit-reduction measure

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress struggled to break a year-end legislative logjam on Friday, producing tentative agreement on a historic measure designed to wipe out federal deficits, and approving $117.7 billion in spending bills for a vast array of domestic programs.

Congressional negotiators announced agreement on the long-stalled deficit-reduction measure at a news conference, and said they hoped to have the bill passed by the full Congress and on the president's desk by next week.

A White House statement called the agreement "a step in the right direction."

The plan envisions a balanced budget by 1991, and mandates automatic spending cuts divided equally between defense and domestic programs if Congress fails to meet interim deficit-reduction targets in the intervening years. Last year's deficit was $212 billion. In the first cuts required before next Sept. 30, up to $12 billion would have to be cut to meet the initial target.

"We have reached agreement in principle on the major differences that separated us," House Democratic Whip Tom Foley of Washington said at the news conference held by lawmakers who fashioned the agreement.

The agreement was announced as the Senate gave voice vote approval to two money bills, sending them to the White House.

The first, a $105.8 billion measure for the departments of Labor, Education and Health and Human Services, includes a doubling of funding for research and other programs related to AIDS. The $234 million includes $16 million to establish four experimental treatment centers for victims of acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

The second spending bill provides $11.9 billion bill for the departments of State, Commerce and Justice. It retains funding for the Economic Development Administration, the Legal Services Corp., and the Small Business Administration, three agencies the president originally sought to eliminate.

Reagan is expected to sign both spending bills, even though they both provide far more funding than he originally sought, because they meet budget guidelines negotiated between Congress and the administration last summer.

Reagan endorsed an earlier version of the deficit-reduction measure, but since then, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and other administration officials have voiced concern that the president's military buildup would be cut deeply by the bill.

The tentative agreement exempts Social Security from automatic cuts. At the insistence of Democrats, Medicaid, food stamps, welfare and certain veterans' programs also are shielded. The impact of automatic cuts on Medicare and certain other health programs would be cushioned, also at the demands of Democrats.

"We think this is certainly a step in the right direction," the White House said in a statement released Friday night by Deputy Press Secretary Albert R. Brashear. "There are still technical questions to be answered, some which cannot be answered until the conference resumes Monday. But again, this is a positive step."

Shultz: Further steps may be taken to counter Nicaragua involvement

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz said Friday the United States may undertake "further steps" to counter what he described as growing Soviet and Cuban military involvement in Nicaragua.

At a news conference, Shultz offered no specifics but left open the possibility that the Reagan administration may ask Congress for military aid to supplement the $27 million in nonlethal assistance now being sent to Contra rebels fighting the leftist Nicaraguan government.

No weapons aid has been given the Contras in more than a year and a half because of congressional opposition. Until the spring of 1984, the United Stated had sent an estimated $80 million to the rebels, much of it military equipment.

Shultz also disclosed that a Cuban pilot and co-pilot were aboard a helicopter that was shot down by the insurgents earlier this week.

He said the rebels were right to shoot it down and "if if I were them I'd certainly want to...Thank heavens they got hold of these kinds of weapons that could knock these choppers down."

While declining to spell out what steps the administration is contemplating on behalf of the rebels, Shultz's answers made it clear he has been studying legislative options.

He noted that the measure that provided the rebels with nonlethal assistance also contains a provision requiring an early congressional vote on any administration request for additional aid.

The legislation also authorizes an early vote on an aid request if the Central American peace process has failed to produce an agreement or if trade or other economic measures fail to resolve the conflict.

The peace process, in which Venezuela, Colombia, Mexico and Panama have served as mediators, has been stalled for an extended period with little hope for a breakthrough.

Asked what he was going to do about the outside presence in Nicaragua, Shultz said the first step is to be sure "that people see it and understand it and believe it."

"The administration has been pointing this up for some time and we have gotten very skeptical responses, but at this point I think there are pieces of evidence that are undeniable, and it does pose a serious problem," he said.

"And as the problem is genuinely taken on board, there may be further steps that will be possible."

Wife convicted in man's death

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

Dorothy Sue Inskeep was convicted Friday of voluntary manslaughter in the shooting death of her husband, and given the maximum sentence of 20 years in state prison.

"It's not much to pay for a young man's life," said her tearful father-in-law, J.D. Inskeep, whose 28-year-old son was shot to death June 6 in his mobile home southeast of Midland.

Ms. Inskeep had been charged with Jerry Dale Inskeep's murder, but the eight-man, four-woman jury settled on the lesser-included charge of voluntary manslaughter after deliberating more than five hours. The 23-year-old defendant then took the stand to ask for probation.

"Saying I'm sorry would never help. I don't know what I can do or say except that I grieve for you," she said, looking past the jury to where her late husband's parents were seated in the gallery. J.D. Inskeep averted his eyes, his jaw clenched; his wife shook her head firmly from side to side.

During closing arguments, First Assistant District Attorney David Rosado asked for the maximum 20-year sentence, noting that one witness testified Ms. Inskeep slept with him several days before the murder and again the day after her husband's funeral.

Doctor: Arms race waste of resources

By GARY RASP
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The metronome carried its steady beat, back and forth, while the speaker continued his speech.

Every two seconds, he said, somewhere in the world, a child dies. The tragedy is that the child could have lived.

Dr. Victor Sidel, who helped found Physicians for Social Responsibility 25 years ago, delivered a searing indictment of the world arms race Friday at the University of Texas. His remarks came on the second day of a three-day conference entitled "Forty Years of the Nuclear Age."

Recent increases in military spending, Sidel charged, have caused unnecessary suffering throughout the world. He cited increases in poverty, hunger and unemployment as examples, and pointed to the United States and the Soviet Union as the primary culprits.

"It doesn't matter whether they're doing it because they're afraid of us or we're doing it because we're afraid of them — it's immaterial," Sidel said. "My point is that both societies are destroying the very values that they are pretending to want to protect by wasting their resources."

Sidel is a professor of social medicine at Montefiore Medical Center of the Albert Einstein College of Medicine in the Bronx, New York. The center recently concluded a study which indicates that 40 to 50 percent of Bronx residents do not have enough to eat. He said studies in Texas have produced "very similar kinds of findings."

"All of this in an affluent society, all of this in a society which had discovered how to deal with these problems under the administrations of Lyndon Baines Johnson, Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford, and with the bi-partisan support of Congress," Sidel bemoaned. "Now, as the result of cutbacks of programs...we're getting more and more hungry people."

Through 1981, the federal government financed a program in the Bronx that helped residents fight disease by learning how to prevent it. Cuts in social spending ended that program, Sidel said, "in large mea-

Settlement may mean reduction in gas bills

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

Energas and its member cities — including Midland — have negotiated a settlement with the gas supplier Westar that should result in a reduction of up to 15 percent on bills starting in January.

"It's not going to make anyone rich, but it was going to make them (Westar) rich by collecting a few dollars more on each customer's bill," said Deputy City Manager Fred Poe. He had noticed the overcharge which began in October 1984 and after consulting with Energas, a suit had been filed against Westar.

The case would have gone to a hearing before the Railroad Commission in February, according to Poe, if Westar had not decided to negotiate. "We saved a lot of expenses...of people spending two to three weeks in Austin arguing over it."

The settlement involves a cash payment of $6 million which will be distributed to the 180,000 customers after Jan. 1, according to Poe. This rebate probably will be a reduction in that month's bill, he said.

The cost of gas, which now is $2.95 per million cubic feet, will be dropped by 15 cents to $2.80. In addition, Energas now is allowed to purchase up to 20 percent of its gas on the spot market, rather than all of it from Westar. Poe said the spot market can be as much as 75 cents per mcf cheaper than Westar's price.

Contracts for gas usually are made for a higher price than what it is selling for on the spot market, Poe said. When the contracts are made, people expect the price to go up and that would protect the buyer. But gas can be purchased cheaper on the spot market when there is an oversupply, he explained.

With as much as 20 percent coming from the spot market, the price could drop by another 10 to 15 cents per mcf, said Poe.

"All of this right now amounts to a 7 percent reduction in the gas bill, if they use the same amount of gas as last year," he said. "And if you compare the January 1986 bill (using the same amount of gas) with the January 1985 bill, you may come up with a 15 to 16 percent reduction."

Pope possibly to visit Texas

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston and San Antonio are under consideration as a possible stop by Pope John Paul II during an American tour in 1987, according to reports.

The Houston Chronicle reported Friday in a story from Vatican City that the Astrodome was being considered because it could hold a large number of people with no concerns about the weather.

"There is a chance for Houston," Archbishop John May of St. Louis said. May is vice president of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops.

May said, however, that the trip remained in the planning stage and no firm decisions have been made.

The Vatican has indicated that the pope will visit the southern part of the United States in 1987 with a stop in Texas a certainty. May said a San Antonio visit is "without a doubt," the newspaper said.

Education panel still learning about job

By GARY RASP
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — After its fourth day-long meeting, the state's latest blue-ribbon panel concedes it is still learning about the subject it is studying.

Members of the the Select Committee on Higher Education earlier this week decided to ask a few questions before they decide anything else.

"I think the committee still has not learned all the facets of higher education," said committee chairman Larry Temple, adding that the panel "is moving at a pretty good pace."

"I think this meeting is starting to pull it together," said Port Arthur Sen. Carl Parker, member of the select committee and chairman of the Senate Education Committee.

Pulling it together, in this case, means soliciting input from those who have something to say. The committee wants to know what Texans think the state's higher education needs are going to be for the next century before it begins to develop ways to meet those needs.

That information shouldn't be too difficult to gather, Parker said, because special interest groups have a good idea of what they think is important. "Anybody with vested interests in higher education knows we're meeting," he said. "I think they probably have their agenda written up already."

By mid-January, the committee wants college administrators, professors and just about anyone else connected with higher education to submit their ideas. By March 1, the panel plans to form its own conclusions about those reports.

The select committee's charge is not to "repair a broken-down car," Temple said, quoting Gov. Mark White, "but to fine-tune a fine automobile for world-class competition."

The committee's staff will simultaneously begin asking a series of questions its executive director, Dr. Vic Arnold, has suggested as broad topics for investigation. Those questions cover areas such as finance, research and development, students and faculties.

The committee spent a large portion of its morning session discussing the prospect of hiring an outside firm to audit the state's colleges and universities. Temple said he expects the panel to reach a decision regarding the management audit at its next meeting, tentatively scheduled for Dec. 19.

Any comprehensive audit of the state's colleges and universities should include a review of the Legislature's financing of higher education, Parker said.

"When you're talking about state institutions, I don't see how you can avoid the evaluation of the body that provides the resources that makes the engine go," Parker said. "And that has to be the legislative process, to some extent."

The Port Arthur Democrat said he doubts that an audit of state colleges and universities would lead directly to the closing of any schools, but added "it may furnish some fodder for some folks who would advocate such a move."

Parker, noting the state's current method of reviewing institutions of higher education, said an outside firm might provide "a more uninhibited look" at the overall system.

Several state-sponsored audits are conducted every two years. The state auditor reviews each college and university, but that activity tends to focus on whether or not schools are in compliance with what the Legislature has ordered, Parker said.

The Legislative Budget Board also conducts hearings in advance of each legislative session. "Generally they look at the formulas, then look at other areas of appropriation that are not driven by formulas," Parker said.

The Texas College and University System Coordinating Board develops formulas for each institution, based on the schools' size and complexity. The Legislature uses those formulas to determine how much money to appropriate to the colleges and universities every two years.

An audit of state colleges and universities, Parker added, cannot provide committee members with adequate information to determine the quality of those schools. "People are obviously not robots or automobiles," he said.

Police recall duty after Pearl Harbor attack

HONOLULU (AP) — As officials prepared to mark the 44th anniversary today of the bombing of Pearl Harbor, police officers who were on duty at the time remembered dodging machine-gun fire, searching for Japanese radio transmitters and trying to restore calm.

The anniversary of the Dec. 7, 1941, air raid will be marked by the National Park Service and the U.S. Navy with ceremonies aboard the USS Arizona Memorial. The memorial was built to honor those killed in the raid, including more than 1,700 aboard the battleship.

The ceremonies will recall the day when Japanese bombers pierced the early morning clouds and dropped explosives on Pearl Harbor, other military bases and scattered portions of Honolulu, killing 2,341 American servicemen and 68 civilians and bringing the United States into World War II.

All of Honolulu's 300-member police force and its 125 reservists were called out after the attack, and several of the officers, in recent interviews, recalled their duty.

Ronald D. Sagum, 71, was sent from house to house to destroy amateur radio transmitters owned by a Japanese or an American of Japanese ancestry. The FBI had provided police with the names and addresses of those who owned transmitters.

Sagum said he destroyed them "smashing each transmitter onto the nearest sidewalk or driveway. I didn't know any other way to do it," he said.

Thomas M. Pedro's first day as a Honolulu policeman was Sunday, Dec. 7, 1941.

"Anyone who was here Dec. 7 and tells you they weren't afraid...they're lying," said the 67-year-old Pedro.

Arnold Capellas, 69, said his car was machine-gunned by a Japanese plane as he neared the navy base. "I jumped out and ran," he said. "I didn't get home for six days."

Chester Dods, 75, a police sergeant at the time, said his most vivid memory was of "people gathering very quietly that evening in the streets around police headquarters. They were very frightened. They went home after our lieutenant told them there was nothing they could do."

CONGRESS

Enactment of two spending bills and tentative agreement on the deficit-reduction legislation — coming at a time in the week when the Capitol normally is long-since deserted by lawmakers — were signs of a gathering sense of urgency. Both houses originally had hoped to quit for the year by Dec. 13, but in recent days, many legislative leaders have talked of a Dec. 20 date instead.

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas said adjournment by the end of next week is still possible. "But if not, I would hope it would come in the early days of the following week....The logjam is starting to break," he said.

The deficit-reduction proposal is attached to a bill to raise the nation's debt limit — a provision that Congress must pass before going home for the year. The House and Senate both passed bills mandating automatic cuts in defense and domestic programs if Congress fails to reach specified deficit-cutting targets, but leaders have argued for months over the details.

Meanwhile, debate began in the Senate on a second must-pass bill, a $498 billion measure to finance most of the federal government through the end of the fiscal year. The measure is needed to replace an existing stopgap spending bill that expires on Dec. 12.

Final passage of the measure in the Senate is not expected for several days. But on a vote of 43-40, senators rejected a bid to strip the Synthetic Fuels Corp. of the remaining funds it has to develop alternative energy sources. The vote upheld a provision that would instead rescind $3 billion.

In other developments

—The House debated the $10 billion "Superfund" toxic waste bill but took no votes. That delayed until next week a vote on whether petroleum and chemical industries should bear the major share of cleanup costs or whether other industries should be taxed, as well.

—A separate group trying to agree on spending cuts for the current fiscal year met briefly, but broke up without agreeing on any issues. The Senate has approved legislation to save $86 billion over the next three years, while the House-passed measure would cut the deficit by about $70 billion.

—The Senate began work on a catchall $498 billion funding bill to take the place of several regular money bills that have not yet been passed by Congress or signed by the president.

The heightened concern over the situation in Nicaragua stems, in part, from indications of increasing Cuban military involvement in support of the Sandinistas.

Elliott Abrams, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, said Thursday that Cuban military personnel in Nicaragua appear to be engaging in actual combat and that some have been killed.

The Sandinista government claimed Thursday that a surface-to-air missile supplied to rebels by the United States brought down the Nicaraguan helicopter. Nicaraguan Ambassador Carlos Tunnermann was recalled from Washington for consultations.

Victor Hugo Tinoco, the acting Nicaraguan foreign minister, said the government sent protest notes to the United States and Honduras and asked for an urgent meeting of the U.N. Security Council. The helicopter crashed near the Honduran border Monday.

Shultz embarks Monday on a six-nation European trip that will include visits to Romania, Yugoslavia and Hungary — communist countries whose policies diverge in varying degrees from the line established by the Soviet Union.

The secretary said these governments "have each shown that the countries of the eastern part of the continent have their own identities and aspirations. My visits there will show that we acknowledge this and support it."

Western European governments with whom he will consult in Britain and West Germany, and at a NATO meeting in Belgium, must maintain their unity, especially in the wake of the U.S.-Soviet summit meeting and while new agreements are being negotiated, Shultz added.

"Our hopes for a more constructive East-West relationship depend on the democracies standing firm on basic principles," he said.

On the Middle East, Shultz said there has been "some very considerable progress" toward arranging Arab-Israeli peace talks.

sure, because of a shift of resources" from housing, legal aid and preventive care, to "the most unbelievable throwing away of money" into military development.

"Programs for low-income families and children simply have not kept pace with the rise of poverty," he added, "and as a result, we are in desparate trouble." The same results can be seen in the U.S.S.R., Sidel said.

Infant mortality rates in the Soviet Union decreased steadily throughout the 1960s and 1970s, he said, but a recent rise on military spending has caused the mortality rate to increase. Cuts in social services are "having the same impact, perhaps even a worse impact, on their human services and health as they are having on our society," he said.

Federal funds for all types of research and development have increased 17 percent during the Reagan administration, Sidel said, but that number is misleading. Funds for military research have increased 65 percent, while all other forms of research — including medical — have decreased 30 percent.

Since 1981, the two superpowers have spent a total of $3.1 trillion on military budgets, Sidel said. The budget for the U.S. Navy is larger than the total governmental budgets for all 12 South American countries, and the U.S. Air Force's budget is larger than the aggregate sum of all 46 African nations' budgets combined.

"We have the power to make this the best generation of mankind in the history of the world," Sidel said, quoting former President John F. Kennedy, "or to make it the last."

GAS

When Poe noticed the higher prices in October 1984, Westar was charging $3.28 per mcf. After the cities and Energas began complaining, the price has since dropped to $2.80 per mcf.

In the settlement, "Westar didn't specifically admit they were overcharging, but they knew they were going to lose if they got before the Railroad Commission," Poe said. "We think we got out of the settlement what we would have gotten from the Railroad Commission. Plus, we get started earlier on the refunds. We start it in January when the bills are high."

Poe said Westar had called him last week about working out a settlement but it wasn't until Wednesday that the company agreed with what Poe and Energas had proposed, he said.

"I'm concerned that if we hadn't called their hand, they would still be charging those high prices. They've reduced their price by 48 cents per mcf in the last 12 months. That's a 15 percent decrease."

Poe said the overcharge had caught his eye immediately because he had negotiated a rate case with Energas for Midland and other cities in the system and "we had discussed the price in the field coming down so the price of our gas should have been coming down."

Cabot Corp., however, bought Westar in October 1984 and that month's bills reflected an increase. In December 1984, the cities and Energas filed the complaint of overcharging against Westar. The case, said Poe, took about three to six months longer to settle than was necessary.

WIFE

"Is that the act of a grieving widow?" asked Rosado, who earlier had told the jury that finding Ms. Inskeep guilty of voluntary manslaughter instead of murder would be a victory for the defense.

After another 45 minutes of deliberations, the jury returned with the maximum sentence of 20 years. Ms. Inskeep, who has been free on a $30,000 bond since the incident, sat quietly while 238th District Court Judge Vann Culp read the sentence. When Culp said she would be incarcerated immediately, Ms. Inskeep began to cry quietly, but she didn't break down until she joined her family in the jury room for a private goodbye.

"Oh, Mama!" she was heard to sob as the door closed behind them.

She had been arrested the night Dale Inskeep, an oilfield worker, was shot once in the head at close range with a high-powered rifle. Ms. Inskeep testified she was frightened of her husband because he frequently beat her, and that she had planned to divorce him.

The night of June 6, she came home to an empty house, packed some suitcases and called her brother to come get her. Then she loaded a rifle, turned off the lights and waited in the bedroom, according to her testimony.

When her brother, Greg Shaw, arrived, he saw Dale Inskeep sitting in a chair in the living room and his sister yelling at him and walking toward him with the rifle. According to the testimony of Shaw and his then-girlfriend, Courtney Broughton, Inskeep reached for the rifle and it went off.

"If she wanted to shoot him, why didn't she shoot him in the bedroom?" said defense attorney David Lashford, who asked the jury why Ms. Inskeep would shoot the man when she was all set to leave him. Lashford suggested Inskeep grabbed the gun, his wife pulled it back and it went off.

But District Attorney Al Schorre pointed out Inskeep had no powder burns on his sleeve, and photographs of his body showed a baseball cap in his hands.

"He was sitting in the chair with his baseball cap in his hands, and that's the way the man died," Schorre said.

The district attorney scoffed at testimony by Ms. Inskeep's psychologist that she was an insecure, battered wife who was too afraid of her husband to ever leave him.

"I would hate to think that this homicide was caused by an inferiority complex," he said. "She started this little drama so it would look better in divorce court. When she got herself up into a fever pitch, she did it."

Pennzoil head: Texaco's claims 'baloney'

STATE

HOUSTON (AP) — Claims by Texaco Inc. that a $10.53 billion jury award threatens its existence are "pure baloney," Pennzoil Co. Chairman J. Hugh Liedtke said Friday after a judge took the award under advisement.

A jury ruled last month that Texaco used unethical tactics to entice Getty Oil Co. to break a 1984 merger agreement with Pennzoil. Texaco then purchased Getty for $10.1 billion.

Jurors recommended Texaco pay Pennzoil $7.53 billion in actual damages and another $3 billion as punishment.

Visiting State District Judge Solomon Casseb Jr. must decide whether to accept, set aside or reduce the judgment, the largest civil damage award in U.S. history.

After listening to arguments from both sides, Casseb recessed the hearing until Tuesday afternoon.

Texaco contends the company is being punished for taking advantage of a "good business opportunity."

"There was no theft of any kind by Texaco. It was open competitive bidding," said Texaco lawyer David Boies.

The judgment would damage the free-enterprise system, leave 55,000 Texaco employees worldwide without jobs and destroy the "life and blood" of the nation's third-largest oil company, Boies said.

But Liedtke said, "Texaco's pleadings about filing for Chapter 11 are pure baloney.

"Texaco has $37 billion in assets. After they pay off their debts they still have $26 billion, and that's adequate to cover what they owe us," Liedtke said. "We're entitled to the judgment."

If it fails to overturn the award, Texaco can appeal the verdict but would have to post a bond in cash or liquid assets equal to the award, plus attorneys' fees and interest.

Texaco's appeal bond would total almost $12 billion, while the White Plains, N.Y.-based company says its stock market value is $8.6 billion.

Pennzoil based its claims on the 1 billion barrels of Getty oil and gas reserves it would have gained for $2.7 billion in the merger that otherwise would cost more than $10 billion to find.

Texaco, arguing for "zero damages," insisted the maximum award should be no more than about $500 million, the difference between the $112.50 a share price Pennzoil offered for Getty stock and the $128 a share Texaco paid.

"What do they want? One billion barrels of oil for free?" asked Richard Keeton, another Texaco lawyer.

But Pennzoil claims there is more at stake than stock.

"When you're talking about the loss of 1 billion barrels of oil, about the opportunity to be transformed, with one transaction, into a major company with reserves that will carry you into the next century, you are talking about a multibillion-dollar injury," said lawyer John Jeffers.

Texaco bought Getty Oil in January 1984. It was the second-largest merger in U.S. corporate history behind Chevron Corp.'s $13.3 billion purchase of Gulf Corp.

Two days earlier, Pennzoil announced it had reached an agreement under which Pennzoil and Getty's major stockholders would form a partnership to take over Getty Oil.

Although no contract had been signed, the agreement "constituted a legally binding contract," Pennzoil said.

Wanted oil executive commits suicide

"The indictment alleges...they purchased a Palm Springs (Calif.) vacation home, a Texas ranch, two Rolls-Royces, a Cadillac, a Lincoln, a Chrysler Imperial, a jet aircraft from Israeli Industries, a helicopter, a helicopter hangar, fur coats and jewelry. They were living a lavish lifestyle, that's an understatement. Their Rolls-Royce Silver Shadow, which they had in Palm Springs, had license plates 1-OIL-1."

— Bruce Reppert, assistant U.S. attorney

FLOUR BLUFF (AP) — Authorities say oil executive Elenora Duse Mason lived a life of luxury complete with a Rolls-Royce, a jet plane, a Palm Springs vacation home, a helicoper, a Texas ranch, fur coats and jewels.

But it all ended when she shot herself in the head as she was about to be sent to Illinois, where she and her husband faced a 115-page, 722-count federal indictment alleging fraud.

Authorities said Mrs. Mason, 56, was in the custody of a deputy federal marshal and and FBI agent when she killed herself.

The medical examiner pronounced her dead, a probable suicide, at about 6 p.m. Thursday — an hour after U.S. Magistrate Eduardo de Ases had set her bail at $50,000 and ordered her taken to the Nueces County Jail to await transfer to East St. Louis, Ill.

Mrs. Mason was arrested by the FBI about three hours before she died.

She and her huband, who ran the financially troubled Mason Oil Co., Duse Corp. and Terensella Petroleum Inc. in Illinois, were indicted by a federal grand jury on Nov. 22. Authorities say they had been living as fugitives in this Corpus Christi suburb, hiding from charges of $6.5 million in securities frauds, mail fraud, wire fraud and sale of unregistered securites that bilked about 300 investors worldwide.

According to Bruce Reppert, assistant U.S. attorney for the Southern District of Illinois, the indictment alleges they drained the companies and cheated investors to finance their lavish lifestyle.

The indictment alleges they purchased a Palm Springs (Calif.) vacation home, a Texas ranch, two Rolls-Royces, a Cadillac, a Lincoln, a Chrysler Imperial, a jet aircraft from Israeli Industries, a helicopter, a helicopter hangar, fur coats and jewelry," Reppert said.

"They were living a lavish lifestyle, that's an understatement. Their Rolls-Royce Silver Shadow, which they had in Palm Springs, had license plates 1-OIL-1," he told the Corpus Christi Caller-Times.

William Richard Bill Mason, 55, is still at large, authorities said.

Mrs. Mason was taken home by federal officers Thursday to pick up medicine and make arrangements for her dogs and cat before she was sent to Illinois.

Police said she shot herself while the officers waited outside the house. A pistol was found near the body on the bathroom floor, they said.

Steve Boyle, a spokesman for the U.S. Marshals Service in Washington, said the judge told the marshals and the FBI to take Mrs. Mason home to get her high blood pressure medication and take care of her two dogs and cat.

"When they arrived at the house the woman told the officers that her dogs would attack and bite, and that she needed to step in and collar the dogs before they came into the house," Boyle said.

Deputy special FBI agent J.P. Weis and Deputy U.S. Marshal C.J. Villarreal waited outside a few seconds.

When they called out and she didn't answer, they searched the house and found her on the bathroom floor, Boyle said. The officers did not hear the gun go off, he said.

Bonner's relatives preparing for her visit to U.S.

NATION

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) — Relatives of Yelena Bonner on Friday prepared for her long-sought visit, cleaning the cluttered, smoke-filled rooms where her family directed an international campaign for her release from internal exile in the Soviet Union.

Mrs. Bonner, wife of Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov, was to arrive this evening in this Boston suburb and then to finalize plans for diagnosis and treatment of her heart problems.

She will stay at the white frame house of her 35-year-old daughter, Tatiana Yankelevich, who has directed media coverage of her mother's trip to the West from the living room of her comfortable home on tree-lined Maplewood Avenue since late October.

To obtain permission for the trip, Mrs. Bonner signed an agreement with Soviet authorities not to talk to reporters while she is in the West.

A State Department official in Washington said Friday that in light of that the government won't invite her to the White House.

"We're very mindful of the delicacy of her trip and we don't want to be perceived as encumbering her visit," said the official, who would not be identified further. "If she wants to see someone, we will defer to her wishes."

On Friday, Mrs. Yankelevich would not talk to reporters and spent the day washing windows, grocery shopping, cleaning the basement and setting up clothing racks and a trundle bed.

"They usually don't pay too much attention to their house, so it's easy to see the change in activity," said Judith Frampton, who lives across the street. "I saw them washing windows, pulling out old carpet and there are all those (furniture) crates out front now.

"It's like anybody's relatives coming that they haven't seen in a long time," added Ms. Frampton.

It has been six years since Mrs. Yankelevich saw her mother. Mrs. Bonner, 62, was in internal exile in the Soviet city of Gorky until last week, when the government allowed her to travel to Italy and the United States for medical treatment.

Mrs. Yankelevich's husband, Efrem, who handles Sakharov's affairs, has been in Italy with Mrs. Bonner, along with Mrs. Bonner's son, Alexi Semyonov, 29.

Mrs. Bonner, who saw an eye doctor in Siena for her glaucoma and cataracts, received a visa at the U.S. Embassy in Rome early Friday. She spoke with U.S. Ambassador Maxwell Rabb and accepted a letter of welcome from Secretary of State George P. Shultz.

Mrs. Bonner also met with Italian Premier Bettino Craxi and told reporters the meeting was a tribute to her husband, a physicist who won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1975.

Pope John Paul II also received Mrs. Bonner, but the Vatican gave no details of the meeting.

Efrem Yankelevich has been a full-time crusader for the freedom of Mrs. Bonner and Sakharov, who staged several hunger strikes to win his wife's release.

The Yankeleviches, chain-smoking and sometimes flanked by their young son and daughter, have held countless news conferences in their home, coordinating an international effort to draw attention to the case.

Newton police said they were preparing for the onslaught of reporters expected to follow Mrs. Bonner to this middle-class neighborhood just west of Boston.

Firefighters battle the remaining flames atop the rubble that was once the River Restaurant in downtown Derby, Conn. The restaurant blew up Friday afternoon, apparently as a result of work on a nearby gas line. There were no deaths in the incident, but at least 17 people were injured.

Explosion levels restaurant; Seventeen people injured

DERBY, Conn. (AP) — An explosion leveled a downtown restaurant Friday, injuring 17 people and sparking a fire that hindered the rescue of three people trapped in the rubble, authorities said.

About a dozen people had been inside the River Restaurant when the 4 p.m. explosion occurred, said Fire Chief James Butler.

Firefighters from seven communities battled the fire in the burning rubble of the three-story building that had housed the popular Italian restaurant and some apartments. A three-block area was evacuated as authorities feared more explosions.

"The building is a total shambles. The front of the building is lying down on the street," said police Lt. Donald Germaine.

One firefighter was injured when a wall collapsed on him.

A construction crew had been digging near natural gas lines in the area, and Germaine said the smell of natural gas was very heavy, but authorities weren't sure what caused the explosion.

All gas lines in the vicinity were closed off after the blast, said Georgeanne Grant, a spokeswoman for Northeast Utilities.

Al Ippolito Jr., a son of the restaurant's owner, said his 30-year-old brother, Michael, who had been working in the kitchen, was trapped in the building, and that he talked to him.

"All I know is that my brother is still in there with one worker in the back," he said, adding that rescue workers were in contact with Michael Ippolito.

The restaurant occupied the bottom two floors of the brick building, while the top floor was used for apartments. The roof and front of the building were ripped off by the explosion.

"It sounded like a bomb," said Alex Dugatto, who was around the corner from the building when he heard the explosion.

He said that when he arrived on the scene, the building was dead (quiet) and stuff was still coming down from the air, like rubbish, stuff from the roof. It was like raining."

Dugatto said he saw at least three people lying on the ground outside the building, one across the street and two in front.

Six of the injured were taken to Griffin Hospital, where three were admitted, two were held for observation, and one was discharged, said spokesman John Carlton. Two of the injured were taken to Yale-New Haven Hospital, and eight others were en route to the facilities, he said.

Derby is an aging industrial town on the Housatonic River in south central Connecticut.

Teen charged in fire that killed girlfriend

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — A 17-year-old boy, allegedly upset over his girlfriend's other relationships, was arrested Friday and accused of setting a fire that killed her and four relatives.

Clarence Carter of Springfield pleaded innocent at his arraignment before District Judge Salvatore Polito to charges of arson and five counts of murder. He was ordered held without bail for psychiatric examination.

District Attorney Matthew J. Ryan said neighbors of Carter's girlfriend said they saw him at the fire Monday earlier than he claimed and he had "an odor of gasoline about him."

Fire investigators found a partially melted gasoline container on the first floor of the home following the 2 a.m. Monday blaze. Ryan said investigators believed the fire had been set inside the house with entrance gained through a window.

Carter had been "having problems" with Renee McKoy, 16, his girlfriend, Ryan said.

"The difficulties were ongoing," he said. "It was a matter of who she was keeping company with."

Renee and her 2-year-old daughter, Cassandra, died in the fire.

Carter considered himself Cassandra's father and neighbors said he was very close to her, but police said they could not confirm his paternity.

Also killed in the blaze were Renee's mother, Barbara Ann McKoy, 39, Mrs. McKoy's son, Gerald, 19, and Joseph A. Blanks, 3. The only survivor was Renee's sister, Barbara Annette Blanks, 20, Joseph's mother, who escaped by diving from a second-floor window.

Koch pens primer for budding politicos

NEW YORK (AP) — Mayor Edward I. Koch has followed up his controversial best-selling first book with a sequel, dispensing blunt anecdotes, political advice and musings on subjects ranging from racism to body language.

The new memoir, "Politics," is meant as "a primer for those who might be considering an entrance into the fray by running for public office," the 61-year-old mayor wrote in the introduction.

By way of such advice, the Democratic mayor pooh-poohed the political handshake — "the touching of flesh is vastly overrated and it slows you down" — in favor of the bellow: "Hi."

But the 255-page volume, although somewhat softer in tone than his first book "Mayor," is more anecdotal than advisory, offering a string of recollections dating to Koch's early days as a Democratic reformer, a city councilman and member of Congress.

As in his first book, Koch wrote frankly in "Politics" about his past and current dealings with political figures and portrays himself as independent and principled. "If anything I am more the anti-hero," he wrote.

The book, peppered with expletives, is dedicated to media adviser David Garth and Rep. Ron Dellums, D-Calif. — the black congressman he once reportedly called a "Zulu warrior."

In explaining his relationship with Dellums, Koch wrote that Dellums cursed him when both men were in the House in 1975. But because Dellums did not complain about the "Zulu" report earlier this year, Koch said he had forgiven him.

In a section on political philosophy, Koch, himself a liberal reformer in the 1950s and '60s, said he liked conservatives better than liberals "as human beings."

China's population may reach 1.046 billion by end of '85

PEKING (AP) — China's population is expected to reach 1.046 billion by the end of this year and the government has decided to ease its policy limiting families to one child.

Chairman Wang Wei of the state Family Planning Commission said in an interview published Friday that the one-child policy, started in 1979, will continue for most couples as the world's most populous country tries to limit annual population growth to about 1.2 percent.

But the government will gradually relax the rule so certain parents can have two children, Wang told the official English-language China Daily.

He said local governments have already begun to relax the policy. Wang said people in parts of Shandong, Guangdong, Zhejiang and Guangxi provinces can now have one more child if their first-born is a girl.

Couples living in remote or mountainous areas or on islands, and those in hazardous occupations, are also allowed two children.

The one-child rule has been most stringently applied in the cities, where families face economic and social sanctions for any violations.

Abortion is used as a means of birth control, along with contraceptives and sterilization. The government acknowledges a persistent problem with female infanticides in rural areas where parents traditionally favor sons.

The government hopes to limit the population to 1.2 billion by the end of the century, although a team of planners said last month that the figure is more likely to be 1.25 billion.

China had 1.034 billion people at the end of 1984, up from 987 million in 1980 and nearly double the 1950 figure of 552 million.

U.S. prelates: Synod allays fears Vatican II changes will be undone

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Four leading U.S. prelates on Friday called the special synod of bishops a great success and said it allayed fears the church might dismantle some of the far-reaching changes produced by the Second Vatican Council 20 years ago.

"The church is now into a new era. ...The church is moving in a new, strong direction," Archbishop John L. May of St. Louis, vice president of the U.S. bishops conference, told a news conference.

"The statement coming from the synod is that Vatican II is wholly reaffirmed, that basically we are on the right track," May said.

The bishops attending the two-week synod voted nearly unanimously Friday in support of "a message to all Catholics," said the Rev. Diarmuid Martin, a synod spokesman. He said 155 of the 165 bishops at the synod took part in the voting.

Martin said the message, described as a general statement on the "meaning and sense" of the synod, will be published today, the synod's final working day. Pope John Paul II is to celebrate a closing Mass Sunday in St. Peter's Basilica.

Also today, the bishops are to vote on a longer document containing their recommendations to the pontiff, who then is scheduled to address the synod. Martin said the bishops also will decide whether to publish the second document or hand it over to the pope for possible action.

The synod was convened by the pope to assess the state of the 840-million-member church since the Second Vatican Council, which instituted reforms in liturgy, ecumenism, church government, religious education and the church's relations with the outside world.

Bishop James W. Malone of Youngstown, Ohio, president of the U.S. bishops, said the meeting gave him "more confidence."

"I would say to the people of my diocese: Continue on the road that you are doing and be more confident because after this worldwide extraordinary synod your efforts have been affirmed," he said. "The synod was a success — a great success."

Also at the news conference were Cardinals Bernard Law of Boston and John Francis Dearden of Detroit.

The U.S. prelates acknowledged that various bishops presented opposing views during their discussions. "With equal candor, and no less fraternal a spirit, we have sought to assess current needs and have put forward our proposals for dealing with them," Malone said.

He said the synod "laid to rest certain rather fevered speculations during the past year, to the effect that the synod might somehow repudiate or undo the work of the (Second Vatican) council."

"That was never in the cards, because it was never in anyone's mind — and least of all the Holy Father's," Malone said.

Malone was asked what message he was taking home for those who "find difficulty" in accepting the church teachings on family issues and sexual morality.

"They continue in the broad sense to be members of the family of the faithful," he said. "We welcome them to our liturgy, we welcome them to the social family which is the Catholic parish membership, to those who are divorced and remarried and who are not able to receive the Eucharist, we welcome them to the fullest extent that we can into the community of faith, to try to give them support.

"To those who find it difficult or impossible to live up to the teaching of the church, we try to present as attractively as possible the teaching, to do it gently, to do it persuasively, to do it in Christian love, and hope and pray for the day when more will be able to see the fullness of the church teaching as the best expression and the clearest road to salvation," Malone said.

Among the subjects discussed at the synod were secularism, the need for a universal catechism, power-sharing between the pope and bishops, the role of women in the church, seminary education, liturgy and the church's stand on peace and social justice.

Jewish mother becomes a computer personality

By THOMAS L. FRIEDMAN
New York Times News Service

JERUSALEM — Some people think it was bound to happen sooner or later.

An Israeli computer programmer, using some standard artificial-intelligence programming techniques, along with his skills as a cartoonist and humorist, has built computer personalities of a Jewish mother and a Jewish uncle, called "Mom" and "Murray."

The programmer, Yakov Kirschen, labeled his creations "Biotoons" — living computer cartoons that will interact with any computer user who has time to kibbitz with an artificial friend.

"Murray doesn't solve problems," said Gary Yost, director of marketing for the Antic software and publishing company, which will be bringing Murray and Mom disks onto the market around Christmastime. "The reason you buy him doesn't really have to do with computers as we now think of them. You will buy Murray to have a friend. When you start talking to him you feel good. Usually, software doesn't make you feel good."

"Murray" is a cartoon computer friend who sits on the screen in his slippers, cracking jokes and conversing for hours with whomever is at the keyboard. "Mom" is a Jewish mother computer personality; she sits in an overstuffed chair knitting, making you feel guilty and dispensing advice.

How long one can converse with Murray or Mom without getting bored is not clear, since Kirschen has added so much material to their personality files in the last two years of development that even he no longer knows exactly how they will respond.

"The other day I was checking Murray's program out, and he wanted to tell me a joke," said Kirschen, in an interview in the Jerusalem workshop where he and four other programmers built the computer characters.

"Murray said to me, 'Do you want to hear a joke?'

"I said, 'Yes.'

"He said, 'Do you know the joke about such and such? Have you heard it?'

"I said, 'Yes.'

"He said, 'I told it to you before?'

"And I said, 'Yes.'

"And then out of his memory bank he said to me, 'A friend is somebody who when he tells you a joke a second time, you not only listen but you laugh.'

"It was one of a million things piled in there that form his personality," Kirschen said, chuckling, "but when he comes up with them it still floors me — and I wrote them."

For now, Murray and Mom disks are built to work only on the new Atari 520ST. After a Murray or Mom disk is inserted into the computer it will begin by asking the user, or "human friend," for personal data so that the disk will be able to talk to him or her directly. After that Murray and Mom will always ask if they are talking to their human friend or a stranger. If it is a stranger, they are programmed to deal with him in a standoffish manner. Mom will even brag about her "son" — the human friend — to the stranger.

Whoever is at the keyboard "speaks" to Murray or Mom by answering various "yes" and "no" questions that they pose. The responses are activated by an electronic switch, so no knowledge of computers is required. Murray and Mom respond with words written in cartoon bubbles above their heads.

A conversation with Murray might go like this.

MURRAY: Do you know how I got in here?

USER: No.

MURRAY: I was sitting in a deli having a munch — Hey, did I tell you about this before?

USER: No.

MURRAY: So I take a bite out of this sandwich and pow, you know what happened?

USER: No.

MURRAY: One minute I am taking a bite, the next minute I'm a byte. Har, har, har.

From 1961 to 1968, Kirschen worked as a freelance computer programmer for IBM, the NCR Corp. and the Singer Corp., while at the same time working as a cartoonist for Playboy magazine. In 1971, he moved to Israel.

"I came here to help out with computers, but I discovered what this country really needed was cartoons," said Kirschen, 47.

For the last decade, Kirschen has produced the satiric cartoon strip "Dry Bones," which appears daily in The Jerusalem Post and is Israel's equivalent of Gary Trudeau's "Doonesbury."

In his spare time, Kirschen continued to tinker with computer programming. For a lark, he decided last year to develop a program, with accompanying cartoon characters, that would pray to whomever was at the keyboard. He called it "Computology." It was a computer universe with little beings who chanted the name of the computer user and even "doubted" his existence. The user could perform various miracles on this cartoon universe or even send down floods.

"When I showed it to people the reaction was incredible," he said, "particularly the Orthodox Jews. I mean, how many people have ever had the experience of being prayed to?"

Observing the response of people to "Computology," particularly the way people responded to the interaction, Kirschen said he began to think about developing a more sophisticated and entertaining program.

Thus were Murray and Mom born.

The programs, which for the moment are only in English, will be marketed in the United States. Antic will be marketing Mom under the advertisement: "Does your computer make you feel guilty? No? If you have $34.95 to spend, who am I to say you're wrong?"

MOM: Are you getting enough exercise, Tom?

USER: Yes, Ma.

MOM: By sitting in front of a computer all day?

USER: No comment.

MOM: He's sulking again! Why don't you go out to a social function? Meet a nice girl.

USER: I'm married, remember?

MOM: He's married, sorry. I keep forgetting. So how is what's-her-name?

USER: Change the subject, Ma.

MOM: Mom was only trying to be polite, Tom.

USER: I know Ma, I know.

MOM: Mom is not waiting for an apology.

USER: What are you talking about?

MOM: Insult me as much as you want, Tom. Mom loves you.

USER: When did I insult you?

MOM: I'm knitting a nice warm sweater for you, Tom.

USER: You're changing the subject.

STATE IN BRIEF

Judge reverses verdict in lawyer's burglary trial

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A state district judge ordered a verdict of innocent Friday after a jury had returned a guilty verdict against Margaret Covington, who had been accused of arranging the shooting of a former lover.

The jury had deliberated about 17 hours over two days before returning its verdict shortly before 6 p.m.

However, Judge Mike Westergren overturned the jury's verdict and dismissed charges of burglary with intent to commit assault against Ms. Covington.

Ms. Covington, a psychologist and lawyer now living in Sweetwater, was accused of hiring Terry Michael Noah to injure Wavell, who was shot four days after he refused to sign an affidavit that would have acknowledged he was the father of her child.

Wavell was shot three times on Nov. 2, 1981, by two men who entered his Corpus Christi law office under the guise of seeking legal advice.

Authorities charged Noah with attempted murder in connection with the shooting. He testified in the case in a plea-bargain arrangement with the state.

Tax questions expected

AUSTIN (AP) — There's no state tax on your holiday turkey, unless you buy it hot.

Gift wrap paper is taxable, as is gift wrapping service, but there's no tax on gift wrapping if it's done by someone other than the retailer who sold the gift.

There's no tax on gift certificates, but a customer must pay sales tax when converting the certificate into a gift.

Christmas trees are taxable, even if purchased from a charity group or tax-exempt civic group.

It's the holiday season, and Comptroller Bob Bullock said Friday that means tax confusion.

Bullock's staff is available to answer holiday tax questions at 800 252-5555.

Man held for murder

ANAHUAC (AP) — A Winnie man was being held on $100,000 bond after pleading innocent to capital murder and other charges stemming from the Oct. 22 holdup of a convenience store and the shootings of two women, one of whom died.

Johnny James, 31, a former truck driver, entered the pleas Thursday before State District Judge Carroll Wilborn Jr.

James pleaded innocent to a charge of capital murder in the death of Barbara Harrington Mayfield, a High Island tavern owner, and to attempted capital murder in the shooting of convenience store clerk Agnes Marie Harmon.

A grand jury indicted James Nov. 21 in the holdup of the convenience store near Winnie where Ms. Harmon, 23, worked.

The store clerk was abducted from work and was found lying near a roadside about seven miles southeast of Winnie. She had been shot twice in the head and once in the shoulder, but survived.

The body of Ms. Mayfield, 47, who also was shot, was found dead by the roadside.

Refinery fire burns worker

PHILLIPS (AP) — A 23-year-old construction worker was in critical condition Friday after he was burned in a fire at the Phillips Petroleum Co. refinery Thursday night, said Phillips spokesman Dan Harrison.

Lewis P. Spooner of Katy received second- and third-degree burns over 65 percent of his body, said Lubbock General Hospital spokeswoman Jackie Hastings said Friday.

Spooner was listed in critical but stable condition at the hospital's burn unit. He was taken there by helicopter following the accident.

Spooner, an employee of GEOCON Inc. of Denton, was hurt when a sudden fire broke out in a waste oil separator on the north side of the plant at 10:15 p.m., Harrison said.

Harrison said an investigation is underway in the cause of the fire, which took 45 minute to extinguish. He said it did not affect plant operations.

Court blocks execution

HOUSTON (AP) — The U.S. Supreme Court on Friday blocked the scheduled execution early next week of convicted killer Jose Guzman, a Salvadoran who speaks little English.

The high court, acting in Washington on a request filed by Houston attorney Will Gray, set aside Guzman's lethal injection, set for early Monday in Huntsville.

The court gave attorneys until Jan. 6 to present arguments on Guzman's behalf.

Guzman, 24, was convicted of the Feb. 4, 1984 shooting death of a Fort Worth man at a service station near Corsicana.

Henry Finch, 62, was killed as Guzman and two other men attempted to steal his car, according to trial testimony.

Guzman has contended he did not fire the shots and is innocent.

Theft of benefits charged

HOUSTON (AP) — Federal authorities are accusing 55 people of stealing $146,043 from the government by collecting unemployment benefits even though they held jobs.

Assistant U.S.Attorney Linda Lattimore said summonses would be issued for each of the 55, who were charged Thursday with up to 17 counts of theft of government property. Each of the misdemeanor charges carries a maximum fine of a year in prison and a $1,000 fine.

The names surfaced through U.S. Labor Department computer checks of unemployment rolls and lists of wages reported by employer, authorities said.

Ms. Lattimore and U.S. Attorney Henry Oncken said most of the cases involved thefts of from $2,000 to $5,000.

Alleged robber indicted

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal grand jury on Friday indicted a Florida man on charges he robbed five banks this year, including one institution three times.

Anthony Braxton, 24, formerly of Pasadena and now a resident of Panama City, Fla., was accused of stealing $35,700 in the five robberies.

According to the indictment, a University Savings Association branch in Houston was victimized three times.

Five of the counts involve theft and the other five are for using a gun in the commission of a felony.

Man gets death sentence

GALVESTON (AP) — A Galveston jury gave the death sentence to an Alabama man convicted of the 1982 slaying of a Galveston pharmacist.

James Roy Knox, 34, of Birmingham, Ala., was convicted Wednesday of the shooting death of Joseph Sanchez, 39. The jury returned the death sentence Thursday after deliberating about two hours.

Knox, formerly of Galveston, demanded drugs from the pharmacist during a Nov. 10, 1982 robbery and shot him through the heart as the druggist hesitated, according to testimony.

Welch's loss expensive

HOUSTON (AP) — Mayor Kathy Whitmire spent $6.60 per vote to win a third term in office, while her opponent, former Mayor Louie Welch, spent $12.09, according to campaign finance reports.

Mrs. Whitmire, 39, spent about $1.3 million and got 220,788 votes in the November election. Welch, 66, spent $1.675 million to get 138,522 votes.

The reports were filed Thursday in the city secretary's office.

Bomb planter charged

AUSTIN (AP) — Federal authorities issued an arrest warrant Friday accusing a man of putting a bomb on an Oct. 30 American Airlines flight that carried his wife and three daughters.

Albert Thielman, 34, of San Marcos might have wanted to kill his family in order to collect life insurance benefits, said John Dalseg, the FBI special agent in charge of the San Antonio office.

The homemade bomb was found in Thielman's wife's baggage. It exploded as baggage handlers prepared to unload the plane after an Austin to Dallas-Fort Worth flight. There were 147 passengers and seven crew members on board, but no one was hurt.

Thielman was questioned after the explosion, but has not been seen since Nov. 21, according to Dalseg.

The warrant charges Thielman with placing a destructive device on an aircraft, a federal crime punishable by up to 20 years in prison and a $250,000 fine.

Not yet known if transplant of marrow success

HOUSTON (AP) — Doctors say it will be at least another month before definitive results are known about the success of an experimental bone marrow transplant given a 2-year-old Missouri boy with a rare immune disorder.

Dr. William T. Shearer, chief of allergy and immunology at Texas Children's Hospital, said Thursday that Joshua Smith of Carrollton, Mo., was "much improved from what he was in Missouri" after receiving an unmatched transplant from his mother. The child was doing very well, Shearer said, and the physician was optimistic about the treatment.

The boy is suffering from severe combined immune deficiency, meaning his body cannot produce cells that fight off infections. The same disorder claimed the life of David, Houston's so-called Bubble Boy who spent virtually all of his life in a plastic bubble before dying last year after an unsuccessful marrow transplant.

Doctors hope the transplant of his mother's bone marrow will enable Joshua's body to produce the disease-fighting ability

The child has been free of infection since Nov. 8, when he underwent the transplant, and so far has shown no side effects, Shearer said.

The boy is being kept in an isolation room and will remain there for at least another six weeks, doctors said.

Mayors' eclectic reading tastes reveal love of literature

CHICAGO (AP) — The nation's mayors generally do not write books, as did New York City's Edward Koch. But they do read books, and their tastes run from adventure and business to history and politics, a survey by the American Library Association reveals.

The ALA, with headquarters in Chicago, recently asked mayors across the country what books they were reading and which ones had made the greatest impact on their lives.

"Although their choices varied and included both fiction and nonfiction, it is clear that our mayors are interested in doing a good job while in office," says Beverly Lynch, president of the ALA. "Most of them were reading books on management, political history and biographies of politicians."

"It is clear that our mayors are interested in doing a good job while in office. Most of them were reading books on management, political history and biographies of politicians."

— Beverly Lynch, president of the ALA.

Several mayors reported having read books about their fellow office holders. Thirman L. Milner, mayor of Hartford, Conn., recently finished reading "Mayor," by Koch and William Rauch. Portland, Ore., Mayor J.E. "Bud" Clark listed "LaGuardia: a Fighter Against His Times," by Arthur Mann, about another colorful mayor of the Big Apple.

Mayor William H. Hudnut III of Indianapolis mentioned "The Kennedys: An American Drama" by David Horowitz and Peter Collier. Denver's Frederico Pena recently finished "Municipal Bonds" by Stephen P. Rappaport, and his favorite book is Theodore H. White's "The Making of the President: 1960."

In Baltimore, William D. Schaefer said he had reread "In Search of Excellence: Lessons From America's Best Run Companies" by Thomas J. Peters, noting that "it gave me a new perspective on management of a major 'corporation.' "

San Antonio Mayor Henry G. Cisneros cited "M-Form Society" by William Ouchi, which discusses American teamwork as a means to recapture the country's competitive edge. His favorite book is "Roosevelt: The Lion & The Fox" by James McGregor Burns. Cisneros added, "The book that left a lasting impression and helped change my life was 'Leadership' by the same author."

The city leaders' favorite books and those which influenced their lives involve a broad view of society, civilization and morality, Lynch points out.

Minneapolis Mayor Donald M. Fraser explained that "Democracy in America" by Alexis de Tocqueville "made a lasting impression on me because of its profound and useful perceptions on the nature of American society — perceptions which continue to ring true today."

Portland's Clark cited "The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire" by Edward Gibbon as his favorite book. The most important book for him was Karl R. Popper's "The Open Society and Its Enemies."

Baltimore's Schaefer enjoys reading Louis L'Amour's novels of the Old West, and has read "just about every one" of them. But the book that has influenced him the most throughout his life is the Bible. Says Schaefer, "I read it daily and can always find something inspirational or thought provoking."

Historical fiction is a popular subject for the mayors. Both Milner of Hartford and Hudnut of Indianapolis reported Charles Dickens' drama of the French Revolution,"A Tale of Two Cities," as their favorite book. And Milner listed Alex Haley's "Roots" as a work that helped change his way of thinking "by giving me a greater perspective and respect for my own roots."

Gifted children find an outlet in creative magazine

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — "Frightening, horrifying, neckbiting, blood sucking, threatening, terrorizing, non-fearful, formidable, eerie, gruesome."

So goes the poem, "Dracula," by 11-year-old Greg Niebur of Whitaker School in Cincinnati, Ohio.

It appears with other poems, songs, stories and games in "Chart Your Course!," a magazine written by and for creative students and published in Mobile by a couple specializing in the needs of the gifted youngsters, their parents and teachers.

Marvin Gold, who holds a doctorate in gifted education, and his wife, Fay, a former teacher of the gifted for 30 years, began publishing another magazine, GCT, about six years ago.

GCT, which preceded the student-written magazine, is aimed at parents and teachers of the gifted. The Golds claim it's "the world's most popular magazine" for parents and teachers of children who are gifted, creative, and talented — the three adjectives that give the publication its name.

"We started it at the kitchen table and it grew into the garage," Mrs. Gold said. She said they moved into a business location and expanded it to include a catalog warehouse.

Gold, a former professor at the University of South Alabama, said the parents and teachers magazine grew out of conversations with other professors.

"I started contacting people I knew and we built up a nucleus of contributors. We're now getting unsolicited manuscripts and have a backlog of 18 months to two years," said Gold.

Gold said he gave up his tenured university position because he couldn't manage both jobs.

Gold said interest in the behavior of creative children began to increase in the 1950s. It opened a new educational market for teaching aids and publications geared toward gifted students.

Gold said he receives calls from parents who think they have gifted children.

"Too often it's simply an ego trip. I got a call from a woman in California who wanted to have her 2-year-old child tested. She said she reads to the child and plays with him and she'd really like to know if the child is gifted," Gold said.

The Golds and their son and daughter worked together on the magazines until the task required more employees. They now employ about nine people, including managing editor Carol Flack, a former school principal.

Gold said his daughter, Marji Vukson, now is the mother of "two gifted children" and his son, Jonathan, is a medical student in Israel, but he still works in the publishing office during summer breaks.

Gold said the magazines, printed in Birmingham, are distributed worldwide and through the Department of Defense and State Department for use in government schools overseas. He estimated the magazines probably reach about 50,000 people.

Although Mrs. Gold edits the magazines, the student contributors can also share in that duty sometimes. Andrew Winkel of Overland Park, Kan., writes in a letter to the editor that two of his favorite verses in a poem he submitted had been left out.

"I know you have the right to edit, but I also feel a great need to have a retraction made immediately," the 10-year-old wrote.

The omitted lines were printed in the editor's response.

Stories on other races spark student interest

BRYAN, Texas (AP) — A program developed by a Texas A&M University associate professor has improved children's reading skills as much as four times in one year through using materials that tell stories about racial cultures, officials say.

In its fourth year at public schools, the program provides American Indian, black, hispanic and white students, using stories and books, about the cultures and values of American Indians, blacks, hispanics and Europeans.

The study materials were developed by Donna Norton, a Texas A&M University associate professor of education and curriculum instruction.

Ms. Norton said students in the program during the past school year, using the materials that exposed them to different cultures, improved and increased their reading levels by two and a half years.

"Prior to enrolling in the program, students only achieved one-half year of reading skills for each year in school," she said.

The homemade bomb was found in Thielman's wife's baggage. It exploded as baggage handlers prepared to unload the plane after an Austin to Dallas-Fort Worth flight. There were 147 passengers and seven crew members on board, but no one was hurt.

Thielman was questioned after the explosion, but has not been seen since Nov. 21, according to Dalseg.

The warrant charges Thielman with placing a destructive device on an aircraft, a federal crime punishable by up to 20 years in prison and a $250,000 fine.

Not yet known if transplant of marrow success

HOUSTON (AP) — Doctors say it will be at least another month before definitive results are known about the success of an experimental bone marrow transplant given a 2-year-old Missouri boy with a rare immune disorder.

Dr. William T. Shearer, chief of allergy and immunology at Texas Children's Hospital, said Thursday that Joshua Smith of Carrollton, Mo., was "much improved from what he was in Missouri" after receiving an unmatched transplant from his mother. The child was doing very well, Shearer said, and the physician was optimistic about the treatment.

The boy is suffering from severe combined immune deficiency, meaning his body cannot produce cells that fight off infections. The same disorder claimed the life of David, Houston's so-called Bubble Boy who spent virtually all of his life in a plastic bubble before dying last year after an unsuccessful marrow transplant.

Doctors hope the transplant of his mother's bone marrow will enable Joshua's body to produce the disease-fighting ability

The child has been free of infection since Nov. 8, when he underwent the transplant, and so far has shown no side effects, Shearer said.

The boy is being kept in an isolation room and will remain there for at least another six weeks, doctors said.

Mayors' eclectic reading tastes reveal love of literature

CHICAGO (AP) — The nation's mayors generally do not write books, as did New York City's Edward Koch. But they do read books, and their tastes run from adventure and business to history and politics, a survey by the American Library Association reveals.

The ALA, with headquarters in Chicago, recently asked mayors across the country what books they were reading and which ones had made the greatest impact on their lives.

"Although their choices varied and included both fiction and nonfiction, it is clear that our mayors are interested in doing a good job while in office," says Beverly Lynch, president of the ALA. "Most of them were reading books on management, political history and biographies of politicians."

"It is clear that our mayors are interested in doing a good job while in office. Most of them were reading books on management, political history and biographies of politicians."

— Beverly Lynch, president of the ALA.

Several mayors reported having read books about their fellow office holders. Thirman L. Milner, mayor of Hartford, Conn., recently finished reading "Mayor," by Koch and William Rauch. Portland, Ore., Mayor J.E. "Bud" Clark listed "LaGuardia: a Fighter Against His Times," by Arthur Mann, about another colorful mayor of the Big Apple.

Mayor William H. Hudnut III of Indianapolis mentioned "The Kennedys: An American Drama" by David Horowitz and Peter Collier. Denver's Frederico Pena recently finished "Municipal Bonds" by Stephen P. Rappaport, and his favorite book is Theodore H. White's "The Making of the President: 1960."

In Baltimore, William D. Schaefer said he had reread "In Search of Excellence: Lessons From America's Best Run Companies" by Thomas J. Peters, noting that "it gave me a new perspective on management of a major 'corporation.' "

San Antonio Mayor Henry G. Cisneros cited "M-Form Society" by William Ouchi, which discusses American teamwork as a means to recapture the country's competitive edge. His favorite book is "Roosevelt: The Lion & The Fox" by James McGregor Burns. Cisneros added, "The book that left a lasting impression and helped change my life was 'Leadership' by the same author."

The city leaders' favorite books and those which influenced their lives involve a broad view of society, civilization and morality, Lynch points out.

Minneapolis Mayor Donald M. Fraser explained that "Democracy in America" by Alexis de Tocqueville "made a lasting impression on me because of its profound and useful perceptions on the nature of American society — perceptions which continue to ring true today."

Portland's Clark cited "The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire" by Edward Gibbon as his favorite book. The most important book for him was Karl R. Popper's "The Open Society and Its Enemies."

Baltimore's Schaefer enjoys reading Louis L'Amour's novels of the Old West, and has read "just about every one" of them. But the book that has influenced him the most throughout his life is the Bible. Says Schaefer, "I read it daily and can always find something inspirational or thought provoking."

Historical fiction is a popular subject for the mayors. Both Milner of Hartford and Hudnut of Indianapolis reported Charles Dickens' drama of the French Revolution,"A Tale of Two Cities," as their favorite book. And Milner listed Alex Haley's "Roots" as a work that helped change his way of thinking "by giving me a greater perspective and respect for my own roots."

Gifted children find an outlet in creative magazine

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — "Frightening, horrifying, neckbiting, blood-sucking, threatening, terrorizing, non-fearful, formidable, eerie, gruesome."

So goes the poem, "Dracula," by 11-year-old Greg Niebur of Whitaker School in Cincinnati, Ohio.

It appears with other poems, songs, stories and games in "Chart Your Course!," a magazine written by and for creative students and published in Mobile by a couple specializing in the needs of the gifted youngsters, their parents and teachers.

Marvin Gold, who holds a doctorate in gifted education, and his wife, Fay, a former teacher of the gifted for 30 years, began publishing another magazine, GCT, about six years ago.

GCT, which preceded the student-written magazine, is aimed at parents and teachers of the gifted. The Golds claim it's "the world's most popular magazine" for parents and teachers of children who are gifted, creative, and talented — the three adjectives that give the publication its name.

"We started it at the kitchen table and it grew into the garage," Mrs. Gold said. She said they moved into a business location and expanded it to include a catalog warehouse.

Gold, a former professor at the University of South Alabama, said the parents and teachers magazine grew out of conversations with other professors.

"I started contacting people I knew and we built up a nucleus of contributors. We're now getting unsolicited manuscripts and have a backlog of 18 months to two years," said Gold.

Gold said he gave up his tenured university position because he couldn't manage both jobs.

Gold said interest in the behavior of creative children began to increase in the 1950s. It opened a new educational market for teaching aids and publications geared toward gifted students.

Gold said he receives calls from parents who think they have gifted children.

"Too often it's simply an ego trip. I got a call from a woman in California who wanted to have her 2-year-old child tested. She said she reads to the child and plays with him and she'd really like to know if the child is gifted," Gold said.

The Golds and their son and daughter worked together on the magazines until the task required more employees. They now employ about nine people, including managing editor Carol Flack, a former school principal.

Gold said his daughter, Marji Vukson, now is the mother of "two gifted children" and his son, Jonathan, is a medical student in Israel, but he still works in the publishing office during summer breaks.

Gold said the magazines, printed in Birmingham, are distributed worldwide and through the Department of Defense and State Department for use in government schools overseas. He estimated the magazines probably reach about 50,000 people.

Although Mrs. Gold edits the magazines, the student contributors can also share in that duty sometimes. Andrew Winkel of Overland Park, Kan., writes in a letter to the editor that two of his favorite verses in a poem he submitted had been left out.

"I know you have the right to edit, but I also feel a great need to have a retraction made immediately," the 10-year-old wrote.

The omitted lines were printed in the editor's response.

Stories on other races spark student interest

BRYAN, Texas (AP) — A program developed by a Texas A&M University associate professor has improved children's reading skills as much as four times in one year through using materials that tell stories about racial cultures, officials say.

In its fourth year at public schools, the program provides American Indian, black, hispanic and white students, using stories and books, about the cultures and values of American Indians, blacks, hispanics and Europeans.

The study materials were developed by Donna Norton, a Texas A&M University associate professor of education and curriculum instruction.

Ms. Norton said students in the program during the past school year, using the materials that exposed them to different cultures, improved and increased their reading levels by two and a half years.

"Prior to enrolling in the program, students only achieved one-half year of reading skills for each year in school," she said.

American hostage's wife finds solace in Rockies

By TAD BARTIMUS

ESTES PARK, Colo. (AP) — Jean Sutherland spent the summer analyzing Latin and Shakespearean tragedies, striving all the while not to become engulfed in her own.

Her husband, Thomas Sutherland, is a prisoner of kidnappers in Lebanon. Five carloads of armed men seized him June 9 as he traveled in a three-car caravan from the Beirut airport to the American University campus in west Beirut, where the Sutherlands have an apartment.

"There was quite a bit of shooting, and bullets, and so on," said Mrs. Sutherland, her voice a soft monotone. "They went right for Tom as the one American. We have had no word from him since. We don't know anything except rumors and people's opinions.

"There has been nothing but a wall of silence."

Sutherland, 54, formerly dean of agriculture at Colorado State University, was in the second year of a three-year contract with American University, which remains open despite the constant disruption of shellings and student deaths.

"As a woman, I never really feared for my own kidnapping because women weren't targets," said Mrs. Sutherland. "I did all the shopping and went about the town. Of course, I picked my times and I was cautious, but despite the war, our daily functioning went OK.

"But kidnapping was part of the risk we had to accept before we even went to Beirut," Mrs. Sutherland, 51, said in a telephone interview from the family's cabin just outside Estes Park.

"We felt we could deal with it. Now that it has happened, it's as bad as you imagined it, and then worse.

"I'm doing the very best I can to carry on with dignity. I talk to Tom in my head; there's always constant thought of him, I feel a closeness to him. But I can't wait to get back to

Thomas Sutherland

Beirut to be physically near him, to know that he's out there, close to me."

Mrs. Sutherland left Colorado in October to return to Beirut, where she began teaching English at the university. En route, she visited her husband's family in Scotland. Her three daughters — Ann, 27, Kit, 25, and Joan, 21 — "aren't thrilled that I'm going but they are supportive, and I've promised to be careful."

Mrs. Sutherland last saw her husband June 8, the day before his abduction, when she drove him to the Denver airport for the flight to Lebanon.

He'd planned to teach in Beirut for three weeks of summer session, then come back to Colorado while his wife, who had returned to the couple's mountain retreat in March to study, finished her doctoral thesis and got her degree at the University of Colorado's August commencement.

"I was sitting at my typewriter, translating the Latin works of the author Seneca into English, when the call came about Tom. That was a Sunday. That same week brought the hijacking of the Jordanian plane, and then the TWA hostages.

"Suddenly Tom was in the middle of an international incident," said Mrs. Sutherland. "We had already made a plan — when you live in the middle of a war you make long-range plans, then change them day-by-day if necessary — so I just carried on."

That meant finishing her thesis, graduating, helping her three daughters move and settle into new jobs and schools, close up the Colorado cabin and return to Beirut.

There were lots of loose ends and new wrinkles to deal with as she stuck to her schedule.

She kept the press at bay as best she could by limiting contact mainly to the telephone. She refused to be interviewed at the cabin or to be photographed anywhere.

The rustic house, surrounded by trees 9,000 feet up in the Rockies, became her sanctuary, the mountains her solace.

"My family and friends were wonderful, but sometimes I just had to get away and walk in the woods to be reminded by the wilderness that we are all simply transient. The mountains and animals were wonderful comfort.

"In July, I made a quick trip back to Beirut to touch bases with everybody I could think of to try and find out about Tom," said Mrs. Sutherland. "I didn't go with grandiose schemes for getting Tom out, because that would have just been setting myself up to fail.

"I went with a simple agenda, and did everything I planned to do. I also had to clean the apartment, wash the car, visit with friends. There is daily living to cope with, too."

Insisting that she isn't a political person, Mrs. Sutherland declined to comment on the U.S. government's efforts to free her husband and other Americans kidnapped in Lebanon.

Also believed held hostage are Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press; Peter Kilburn, an American University librarian; David Jacobsen, director of the American University Hospital; the Rev. Lawrence Jenco, director of Catholic Relief Services in Lebanon, and William Buckley, a political officer at the U.S. Embassy in Beirut. A seventh hostage, the Rev. Benjamin Weir, a Presbyterian missionary, was recently released unharmed.

Lebanon's war generation faces bleak years ahead

By HALA JABER

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — They may not know Grimm's fairy tales, but Beirut's children can tell the difference between the sound of a 106mm recoilless rifle and a 120mm mortar. Toddlers can tell an incoming shell from an outgoing.

They are Lebanon's war generation, raised during a decade of civil war and facing bleak years ahead in a country in ruins.

"If we continue this way, our future is a very sad one with the kind of children we're raising," said Iman Khalife, a Beirut nursery teacher.

"One wonders what these children will be like when they are older, what with all the ugliness surrounding them."

Amid daily fighting, a generation of children has lost direction.

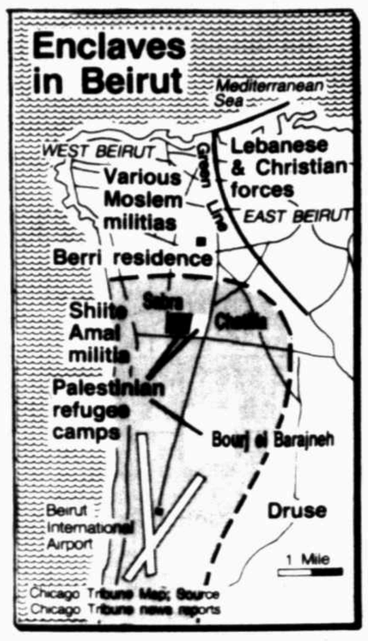
"A child is no longer a child," said Miss Khalife.

She said the 3- and 4-year-olds she works with "don't talk about the kind of things that children normally talk about. Their conversations revolve around shelters, explosions, battles and fighting, electricity cuts and water shortages."

Their favorite game is "war," she said in an interview.

"They pretend a shell has exploded nearby and then they all start to scream, some hitting the ground while others huddle in hideouts like they do in their shelters at home.

"Life is distorted for them. They don't know what the reality around them is anymore."



With as many as 130 distinct religious, ideological and social groups, many with widely differing visions of the Lebanon they are fighting for, the young generation has grown up with a sharp sense of alienation.

"How do you expect to reintegrate youth into a society they can't identify with, a society they can't understand; more importantly a society they don't know?"

Like everything else in Lebanon, the young generation is divided.

The Green Line that separates Beirut into mutually hostile Christian and Moslem camps separates the young as well. Before the war people on both sides mingled all the time.

Now the young go to separate schools. The history books they read give different versions of the past and the centuries-old feuding that has kept their communities apart.

According to Khalaf, the war has forced people increasingly into what he calls "bubbles," to the extent that families, rather than communities, have become the key social grouping.

This, he argues, limits youngsters' outlooks and comprehensions of the world as they are squeezed into ever-diminishing social contact, even among people of their own religion, class or sect.

"What do you say to a 3-year-old child who asks you why Christians and Moslems can't live together?" Miss Khalife lamented.

"Their childhood has been hijacked," said Professor Laila Farhood, a mental health specialist at American University.

Lebanon's teen-agers and young people in their 20s have spent the past 10 years "witnessing a catalog of horror," Khalaf observed.

He said most Lebanese have gone into a chronic state of mourning, "be it for losing friends, family, property, opportunities or wasted years."

"But the most painful of all," he said, "are those grieving the loss of a way of life that may never be restored."

Unlike young girls elsewhere, where main preoccupations are the latest hairstyles or fashions, Hala Tawil, 22, an English-language student at the university, is more concerned with survival.

She has learned which corner of her house provides the best protection during shellings, how to study by candlelight during the frequent power cuts, how to get through the often bewildering jigsaw puzzle of militia checkpoints, how to get by without the things that girls in other countries take for granted, like going dancing or to the movies, going out on a date.

"We've lost a lot of things because of this war," she said. "We've lost our youth because what has gone will never come back. There is no purpose anymore, nothing to aim for."

"I can't sleep unless I hear the sounds of shells," said Moslem Ghazi Sabbagh, 20, another university student.

On quiet nights he plays a tape he made of the shellfire, the mortars, the rocket-propelled grenades, the AK-47s, what Beirutis call "the symphony."

Michel Ayyoub, 21, was 11 years old when the war started. His family was shelled out of three homes between 1975 and 1983 and he now lives in Christian East Beirut.

He attended the university, which is in Moslem West Beirut, until 1983 but had to give up his business studies when it became too dangerous to cross the Green Line. Now he's an artilleryman with the Lebanese Force militia.

"I had some sense in my mind when I was a kid," he said. "Now I'm a crazy man. Half my life's been spent in war.

"In other countries young men like me play tennis and chase girls."

McAuliffe to teach from space

WASHINGTON (AP) — The first teacher in space will guide school children through a live tour of the space shuttle Challenger in what U.S. space program officials are billing as "The Ultimate Field Trip."

This week, teacher-astronaut Christa McAuliffe filed lesson plans that call for her to teach live from space. If all goes according to plan, Ms. McAuliffe will make her debut from space Jan. 27 while millions of students watch on public television.

In the first lesson via satellite, she will take students on a tour of the space shuttle, introduce crew members and explain what they do, point out shuttle equipment and describe experiments being conducted on the mission.

Later that day, she will teach a second lesson telling students how space shuttle research has made everyday life better, and showing them why it is easier to do some things in the weightlessness of space rather than in Earth's gravity.

"It isn't often that teachers tell students to close their textbooks and turn on the television set," Mary Hatwood Futrell, president of the National Education Association, said as she accepted the lesson plans, which are an integral part of any teacher's preparation.

Ms. McAuliffe, an NEA member, was not on hand to present the lesson plans. The 37-year-old social studies teacher from Concord, N.H., is in training at the Johnson Space Center in Houston for the shuttle mission scheduled to begin Jan. 22. Ms. McAuliffe was chosen to become the first teacher in space from 11,000 applicants nationwide.

Christa McAuliffe

In addition to the two lessons broadcast Jan. 27, schools with access to a satellite dish or the NASA-Select network will be able to monitor the flight from start to finish in a program called "Mission Watch."

"It will be possible for students to observe every day of the mission from launch to landing," said William Nixon, National Aeronautics and Space Administration project manager for the teacher in space program.

At Wednesday's news conference, NASA officials showed reporters a videotape of Ms. McAuliffe rehearsing experiments she will conduct in space. One sequence showed her playing a weightless version of leapfrog with her alternate, elementary teacher Barbara Morgan of McCall, Idaho.

Ms. McAuliffe is also practicing experiments to test the Earth's magnetism, using a compass and a bar magnet; demonstrate Newton's laws of gravity and motion, using a billiard ball; and to show the effect of weightlessness on the growth of plants.

The rehearsals are being conducted aboard a specially designed jet, which is put through a series of dives and climbs to provide 30-second periods of weightlessness similar to that in space.

NASA is preparing 16-page guides to help schools use the lessons from space. Those guides are expected to be available by Dec. 15.

Scouts have hit with 'Hambo' police piggy banks

LOUISVILLE, Colo. (AP) — Orders from policemen across the country have deluged a post of Explorer Scouts selling ceramic statuettes of police "pigs."

Explorer Post 403 has sold about 200 of the 15-inch-tall pig statues or piggy banks for $25 apiece, and about 75 percent of the sales have been to police.

The pigs are customized with the officer's name, badge number and shoulder patch, and curls are painted on the female version. The Explorers also offer Hambo T-shirts and caps, and Hambo coffee cups are next.

Ban on cigarette ads considered by AMA

CHICAGO (AP) — The American Medical Association, committed to a "smoke-free" society by the year 2000, probably will take the "bold" step of seeking a total ban on cigarette advertising, its lawyer says.

"This is the next logical step, and we are quite serious about it," Kirk E. Johnson, the AMA's general counsel, said this week.

A resolution calling for the ban is to be voted upon by the approximately 1,000 members of the AMA's governing body, the House of Delegates, meeting in Washington next week, he said.

"If you're going to try to be effective and really try to limit smoking, you've got to go at all forms of advertising," he said.

Johnson said the measure has the backing of the AMA board of trustees.

Should the doctors endorse a ban on all cigarette advertising as he expects, the AMA would immediately ask Congress for legislation enforcing the prohibition, Johnson said in a telephone interview from Washington.

Such a ban would affect mostly print media. Cigarette advertising already is prohibited on television and radio, he said.

Johnson described the move as "a major event" and said that it is "as bold a step as we have taken."

The AMA, which represents about 250,000 physicians, also has urged Congress to double the tobacco tax and eliminate subsidies for tobacco farmers.

The physicians' organization is committed to taking steps to realize its goal of having a smoke-free society by the year 2000, Johnson said.

He said the call for a ban on cigarette advertising is "just one part of a legislative and educational campaign by the largest organization of physicians in this country, who have a large stake in health in this country."

Johnson said the resolution was drafted by the AMA's council on legislation for presentation at the annual meeting, which convenes Sunday. He said the vote by delegates could come Monday or Tuesday.

He said he did not know how much is spent annually on cigarette advertising, and that AMA staff members who could provide the information were unavailable Wednesday night.

The New York Times in its Thursday editions quoted Tobacco Institute spokesman Walker Merryman as saying, "If they do that, it would seem to me that they have conveniently overlooked a little thing called the First Amendment to the Constitution."

Asked to comment on the argument that an advertising ban would lead to reduced smoking, Merryman said: "You can look at any number of studies in European countries where advertising has been banned and you will find that cigarette sales increases outpace population increases."

Temperatures to reach '60s

From Staff and Wire Reports

Warm temperatures may dampen the holiday spirit this weekend as the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal calls for a high today to reach the mid 60s.

Forecasters say skies will be mostly cloudy this morning becoming partly cloudy by this afternoon. Winds will be from the south at 5 to 15 mph.

Tonight will be partly cloudy with a low in the mid 30s. Sunday will be partly cloudy with a high in the mid 60s.

Friday's high of 63 was 15 degrees below the record set in 1966. The morning low of 29 was nine degrees above the record set in 1976.

STATE

Cloudy to partly cloudy skies were forecast for most of Texas this weekend, following a veil of clouds that spread across much of the state on Friday.

Clear skies were reported in extreme south sections of the state as low pressure developed over the southern Rocky Mountains and a weak high pressure system was reported over deep South Texas, according to the National Weather Service.

Late afternoon temperatures had reached the upper 50s in the northern Panhandle, while readings in the 60s were common elsewhere. A few 70 degree readings were noted in the lower Rio Grande Valley.

Highs ranged from 56 at Dalhart and 71 at McAllen, the weather service said.

North Texas should be partly cloudy through Sunday with highs in the 60s and lows from the 30s to 50 degress.

West Texas should be mostly cloudy this morning, becoming partly cloudy in the afternoon and continuing through Sunday. Highs both days should be in the upper 40s to the lower 70s, with lows ranging from the mid 20s to upper 30s.

South Texas should be partly cloudy through Sunday with a slight chance of rain tonight. The highs both days should be in the mid 60s to upper 70s, and the lows Saturday night should range from 40 degrees to the upper 50s.

NATION

Snow stretched from Maine to West Virginia on Friday, with up to 7 inches reported in the mountains of West Virginia, as rain dampened the Carolinas and Virginia.

Skies were mostly sunny Friday afternoon across the mid Mississippi Valley and Southeast, with cool temperatures across the North. Iowa and Minnesota recorded temperatures in the teens.

Bear claws leave mark on Cowboys

CINCINNATI (AP) — Excuse the Dallas Cowboys if they're talking more about Chicago Bear black than Cincinnati Bengal tiger stripes as they prepare for their first visit to Riverfront Stadium.

The pain is still fresh.

Even though the Cowboys have run off a pair of impressive victories in their last two games, they're still haunted by what came before — a 44-0 pounding at home from the Bears.

The Cowboys, 9-4, make their first-ever visit to Cincinnati Sunday with a one-game lead in the NFC East and an opportunity to solidify their playoff chances. That's just fine with them because it would take them one step closer to a rematch with the Bears.

"We will be thinking about the Bears. There's no way around that," quarterback Danny White said.

The Cowboys are so preoccupied with the team from Chicago that they're viewing their trip to Ohio in December as a chance to get acclimated. Parts of Cincinnati got their first light coating of snow Friday.

"That kind of weather may be a valuable conditioner," linebacker Eugene Lockhart said. "In the playoffs, the road to the Super Bowl will go through Chicago."

It fell to Coach Tom Landry to make sure his players weren't looking down that playoff road yet as they prepared for the Bengals, a 6-7 team coming off its most impressive victory of the season.

"If we can go to Cincinnati and play the way we did the last couple of weeks, it will be a plus for us."

Paterno wants playoff

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Coach Joe Paterno of top-ranked Penn State thinks the best way to settle college football's annual national championship debate is with a post-bowl playoff, involving four teams.

"Absolutely," Paterno said, "we ought to be doing in our sport what we do in every other sport under NCAA auspices. The 1,500-meter swimming championship is decided head to head. Wrestling, lacrosse, soccer, volleyball gymnastics ... you wouldn't have people looking at gymnasts in different parts of the country and then voting on who's the best."

Undefeated Penn State's Jan. 1 Orange Bowl date against No. 4 Oklahoma, to be televised by NBC, is being touted by some as a showdown for the national championship, even though second-ranked Miami will be playing Tennessee, No. 8, in the Sugar Bowl and No. 3 Iowa will be at the Rose Bowl, playing 14th-ranked UCLA.

Paterno is flattered but also aware of his team's bittersweet bowl history in Miami.

Three times before, in 1969, 1970 and 1974, Penn State has taken perfect records into the Orange Bowl. Each time, the Nittany Lions won the game and then sat back and saw other teams crowned national champions.

"I hate to see anybody voted out of a national championship," Paterno said. "It's happened to me three times. I felt if we had played (the teams that finished No. 1) on the field, we'd have won."

Paterno's plan would not eliminate the bowls. "They must be included. They've been too good to college football," he said.

"What I would do is take four teams after the bowls based on computer ratings, power indexes or maybe selected by a media panel, and on the first Saturday after New Year's, have them play semifinals and a week later the finals.

"That would give two teams 14 games and two teams 13 games. They're doing it in Division IAA, Division II and Division III, playing 14 games. We could do the same."

Curry KOs McCrory in 2nd round

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Donald Curry knocked Milton McCrory cold with a smashing right to the jaw in the second round Friday night and won the undisputed welterweight championship of the world.

It was a devastating performance by Curry, known as the Lone Star Cobra, who struck with lightning suddeness in thawing the Detroit Ice Man in less than five minutes.

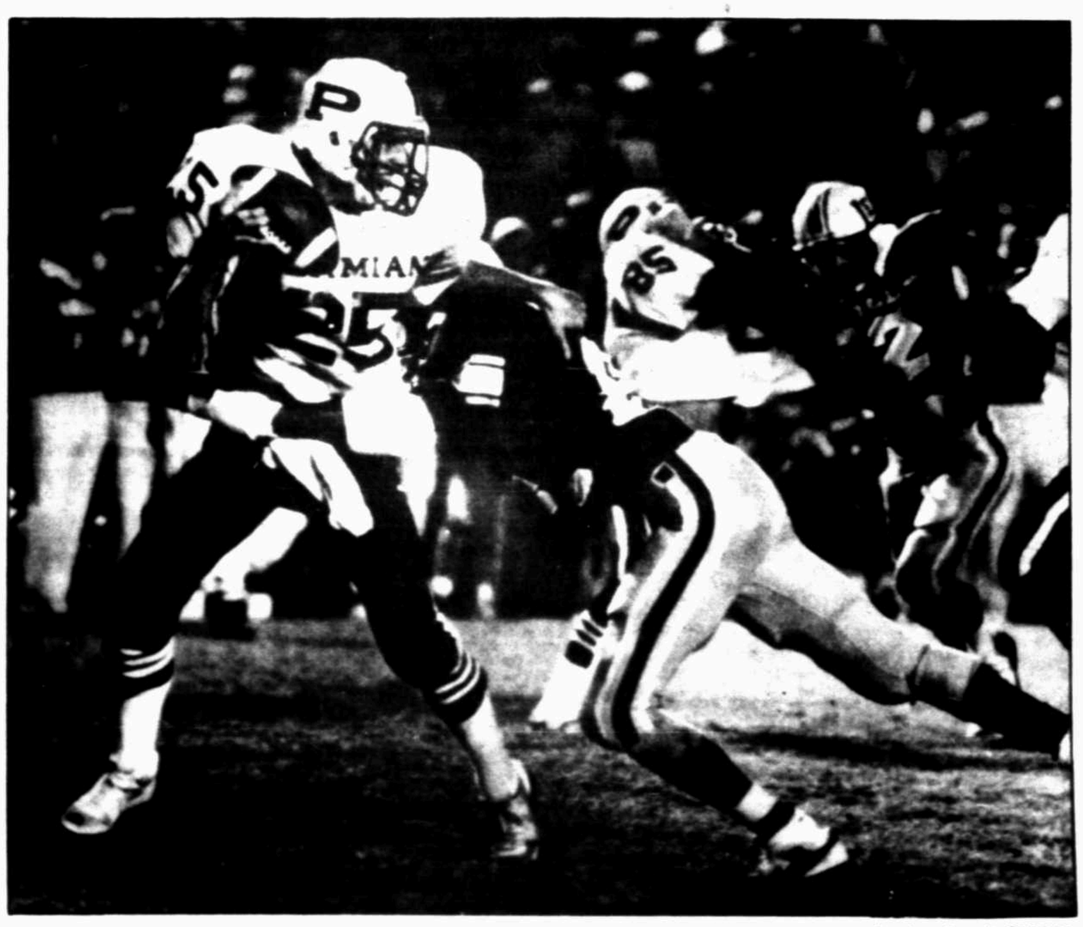
Curry, the World Boxing Association and International Boxing Federation champ, knocked McCrory down with a left hook before finishing the World Boxing Council champion off at 1:53 of the second round.

Curry, who now is 24-0 with 19 knockouts, took charge from the opening bell and hurt McCrory, 163¾, with two left hooks in the first round.

"I'll definitely take your heart and knock you out in the seventh or eighth round," the 24-year-old Curry had told McCrory at a prefight press conference.

It did not take Curry nearly as long as he predicted.

"This fight is definitely for recognition," said McCrory, a Kronk Gym stablemate of Thomas Hearns who was knocked out by Marvelous Marvin Hagler in the third round in a bid for the undisputed middleweight title last April 15.



Ron Jeap/Reporter-Telegram

The time hasn't always been there, but when it has, Odessa Permian quarterback Jason Harrington has done the job, guiding the Panthers into the Quarterfinal game today with Irving MacArthur.

Playoff trail gets rougher

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

ODESSA — The Permian Basin isn't getting "Rematch III," the hoped for and even expected great migration to the north of the past two years. Midland Lee is no longer in the playoffs. The trip is no longer necessary.

Odessa Permian is the sole District 4-5A survivor in the playoffs and is in today's 2 p.m. quarterfinal game at Ratliff Stadium. The Panthers are meeting the team that eliminated arch-rival Lee: Irving MacArthur's Cardinals.

In gaining the quarterfinal meeting, Permian has had an easier road than MacArthur. Since beating Amarillo Palo Duro 31-15, the Panthers haven't allowed a score, cashing in a pair of lopsided victories.

The Panthers defeated El Paso Austin 33-0 and were even more destructive against Denton, posting a 41-0 score.

For MacArthur, the playoff trail has been one close game after another. The Cardinals defeated Trinity by a 16-7 count and have edged out Wichita Falls, 28-24, and Lee, 24-21.

Cardinal coach Ray Overton isn't expecting things to get any easier today.

"Odessa is a real sound football team, just like always," said Overton. "We'll have to win in the kicking game and we'll have to do an awful good job on (split end Greg) Anderson because he's such a threat. We'll also have to do a good job keeping possession of the football, keep it away from them."

The kicking game was the big difference for the Cardinals last week against Lee. Deep man Bryan Love busted a 102-yard kickoff return against the Rebels for one touchdown and the Cards came up with a fumble from Dexter Traylor's ensuing kickoff return and turned it into three more points.

"I think we'll have to score at least as much as we did last week against Lee if we're to beat Permian," said Overton. "At least that much."

BOTH COACHES are seeing the game as potentially tough on defense and both look at Anderson as a key to victory.

"He has quickness, hands and jumping ability," said Overton. "We watched, in the films, balls that should be incomplete, he'll go up and get them. He also has very good moves and that is trouble for the defense. If you're too close up on him, he'll burn you deep with his speed. He's got all the tools."

Permian coach John Wilkins is expecting "a man-to-man defense with very little zone," from the Cardinals. Normally, man-to-man on Anderson would be ideal.

"They'll probably put (cornerback) Love, and he's All-World, out there, man him up with Greg," said Wilkins, who feels both are potential All-State candidates. "He's 6-3, 180 pounds and runs the 40 in 4.5.

"I think we'll have to be able to throw and catch the football," continued Wilkins. "They play up so close. We'll have to get them off of us some how. Picking up their blitzes is another key.

"They're awfully tough defensively, that's what we feel like," said Wilkins. "They are solid enough offensively to take advantage of breaks the defense makes for them. They can put it in the end zone."

ACCORDING TO Overton, his Cardinals have been fighting adversity all year long and have overcome their problems with "great effort. We have some good athletes but our kids have just played so hard. We had a lot of adversity, lost some key players, but the kids keep coming back."

It's the effort his kids keep giving that makes Overton optimistic about playing a team with Permian's playoff tradition.

Sooners need win today

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — As far as the fourth-ranked Oklahoma football team is concerned, it's one down, one to go.

After beating Nebraska two weeks ago, Oklahoma earned a trip to the Orange Bowl to play top-ranked Penn State. In order to stay in contention for a national title, however, the Sooners needed to beat Oklahoma State and Southern Methodist.

Oklahoma got past its in-state rival last week, 13-0, and now only SMU stands in the way. The Mustangs were highly regarded in the preseason, but an NCAA probation and 6-4 record have clouded their season.

"They can put it all together at any time," said Oklahoma defensive back Tony Rayburn. "We just have to go in and not let anyone spoil the goals we've set for ourselves."

TODAY's kickoff is scheduled for 2:30 p.m., with the game televised nationally by ABC.

"This is their bowl game," said Sonny Brown, one of Rayburn's running backs in the defensive backfield. "If they could come in here and beat us it would make their season."

SMU Coach Bobby Collins said the Mustangs normally finish their season each year against Arkansas. But they played the Razorbacks two weeks ago and have had an open date to prepare for Oklahoma.

"This is a little different type situation," he said. "Really, it's the 11th game on our season, but certainly playing an outstanding football team on national television adds to it."

The Mustangs have not scored a touchdown in the past two games and are on the verge of losing five games for the first time since 1979.

"ONE THING in our favor, if there is one thing, is that we had a week to prepare for Arkansas, plus [illegible] to prepare for Oklahoma."

[illegible] Arkansas loss, SMU allowed a season-high 271 yards rushing and 381 total yards. Oklahoma is averaging 428 yards per game, 331 on the ground.

"How [illegible] do you stop the Sooners?"

"That's a difficult chore," Collins said. "What you've got to do is not only have an aggressive defense, but also an alert one. If you make mental errors, you're going to be in trouble.

"We only hope to slow them down some and find some way to stay on the field offensively."

Oklahoma Coach Barry Switzer called the Mustang offense "a sleeping giant" and said SMU is "probably the most dangerous team we've got on our schedule."

THE NUMBERS seem to back him up. Tailback Reggie Dupard has gained 1,161 yards this year on an average of 6.2 yards per carry, and backup tailback Jeff Atkins has another 773 yards. Though quarterback Don King has struggled of late, he has still completed 51 percent of his passes for 1,310 yards.

Flanker Ron Morris, a world-class sprinter, has 23 receptions for 383 yards and tight end Albert Reese has 22 catches for 294 yards. Five Mustang receivers average more than 13 yards per catch.

"Their offensive line is huge, their I-backs are great and their receivers are great," Switzer said.

The scoring punch, however, has not been. In the past two games, SMU has driven inside the 20-yard line four times and has not been able to score a touchdown.

"We've moved the ball on the field, but haven't been able to convert six-pointers," Collins said. "It's been a concern and something we have stressed and worked hard on."

Enough guessing as to who's No. 1, let's get scientific

The weekly news service polls are a reflection of last week's results, influenced by individual prejudices and weighted by performance of past years and the personality of the coach.

There is nothing scientific about them and they should be dismissed as irrelevant, immaterial, especially when the assemblage of opinion is contrary to that of the author.

Penn State No. 1...a figament of the eastern writing bloc's fertile imagination. The Lions play a schedule without substance.

Oklahoma and Nebraska playing in the effete Big Eight, a league that is a legitimate power in wrestling, but a paper giant in football, whose reputation is based on the performance of two teams.

Iowa and Michigan both belong way up there, although each has had its record besmirched.

Air Force, if the Falcons had beaten BYU, it would have been unpatriotic if they were anything but No. 1.

Florida...any program this dishonest should be banned from consideration. The only thing in their favor is that tie with Rutgers.

The personal choice for No. 1 is Miami, conqueror of Oklahoma, one of the strong pretenders for the honor.

USA Today's computer rankings list Miami No. 1, but that's about the only pick that is palatable. Following are Michigan, Florida, Oklahoma, Nebraska, Auburn, Iowa, Alabama, Air Force and Tennessee.

But enough of this personalized rankings. It's time to trot out the Azi-Ratem System, a scientific computerized evaluation of the teams, their wins, their losses and the caliber of their opponents.

Admittedly, this didn't come out as expected, but I guess there are disappointments in every system.

The Azi-Ratem-System decrees:

1. Florida 71.909.
2. Oklahoma 65.000.
3. Michigan 64.181.
4. Miami 61,181.
5. Texas A&M 60,181.
6. Iowa 60.000.
7. Alabama 56,636.
8. Penn State 55.454.
9. Florida State 55.181.
10. Air Force and BYU 55,000.

With SMU today and Penn State New Year's Day, Oklahoma can vault past Florida, which because of its outlaw status, is finished for the year.

The ratings of Miami, Iowa and Penn State are all lower than expected. A&M edged out the Lions because the Aggies lost to stronger teams than Penn State beat, still the No. 5 ranking is stunning.

Despite the impersonal nature of the rankings, it's still difficult to accept a team, Miami, as lower than the team it beat, but the Sooners have played a formidable schedule overall, despite the presence of Missouri, Kansas, Iowa State and Kansas State.

Like Oklahoma, Penn State can add immeasureably to its stature with an Orange Bowl win. In fact, the final rankings will be determined by the bowls and those drawing the strongest opposition figure to make the biggest gains.

This week against the spread...

The colleges...

Navy plus seven over Army- Army has the better record, but Navy has Napoleon...is that legal?

Oklahoma minus 15 over SMU- Six weeks ago, who would have believed this. Mustangs have been erratic and about the only thing that has been able to slow down the Sooners in recent weeks is the weather.

The pros...

Bears minus 18 over the Colts- Indianapolis pays for Miami.

Dallas minus 2 1/2 over Cincinnati- Cowboys are in first and can stay there by winning.

Raiders plus 2 1/2 over Denver- It's at Denver, but Los Angeles has been playing more like Oakland of late. Raiders have been one of the toughest picks all season.

Giants minus seven over Oilers- Must win for Jersey.

Redskins minus one over Eagles- Washington still has hope, but only if it wins this one.

Patriots minus eight over Lions- I don't like this pick, but it is at Foxboro.

Jets minus nine at Buffalo- Check the weather report for snow, if affirmative, jump the other way.

Blazers stun Celtics; 76ers bite the dust

BOSTON (AP) — Reserves Jerome Kersey and Steve Colter each scored 22 points Friday night as the Portland Trail Blazers became the first visiting team to win in Boston this season, snapping the Celtics' nine-game winning streak with a 121-103 National Basketball Association victory.

Clyde Drexler scored 19 points, Sam Bowie 18, Jim Paxson 16, and Mychal Thompson 13 as the Trail Blazers became only the third team to defeat Boston in 20 games this season.

The Celtics threw up a tight defense and controlled the boards in the third period, finally going ahead for the first time, 75-74, on a three-point play by Larry Bird.

Kersey, a second-year pro who had only two points in the first half, then came off the bench and scored four baskets as Portland went on an 11-2 surge for an 85-77 lead at the three-quarter mark.

Portland continued to pour it on at the outset of the fourth period, building its advantage to 99-83 in the first four minutes.

Bird led Boston scorers with 20 points, although he sat out most of the fourth period once the game was out of hand. Kevin McHale had 19 points, and Danny Ainge 14.

Nuggets 123, 76ers 121

PHILADELPHIA — Alex English scored 34 points and Calvin Natt added 25 as the Denver Nuggets held on for a victory over the 76ers.

Leon Wood's three-point shot with five seconds left cut Denver's lead to 122-121. With three seconds remaining, Lafayette Lever made one of two free throws for Denver, and Sixer Paul Thompson's desperation shot at the buzzer was no good.

Denver had taken a 120-112 lead on a layup by English with 1:08 to play, but the Sixers scored six straight points to narrow the lead to 120-118 with 10 seconds remaining.

It was the first victory for Denver in Philadelphia since joining the league in the 1976-1977 season, a span covering 12 games.

Hawks 94, Bucks 93

ATLANTA — Scott Hastings tipped in a missed shot by Dominique Wilkins with three seconds left as Atlanta beat Milwaukee.

The Hawks, who squandered a 75-64 lead after three quarters and fell behind 91-85 with 2:13 to play, trailed 93-90 before Kevin Willis stole a Milwaukee pass and scored on a layup to get within a point with 11 seconds left.

Wilkins, who led Atlanta with 29 points, then stole an inbound pass. Following a timeout, in which Hastings was inserted for the first time in the game, Wilkins, who led Atlanta with 29 points and 15 rebounds, missed a 22-foot jumper that was knocked back in by Hastings for the game-winner.

Bullets 115, Supersonics 109

LANDOVER, Md. — Gus Williams scored 10 of his 26 points in the fourth quarter as the Washington Bullets held Seattle to one field goal over the final 8:21.

Williams rebounded a second missed free throw by Jeff Ruland and scored to put Washington ahead 101-100 with 4:31 remaining.

Seattle regained the lead on two foul shots by Gerald Henderson, but Jeff Malone scored the last of his 37 points, Williams converted a three-point play and Ruland made a free throw to put the Bullets in front 107-102.

The Supersonics, who have lost of 11 of 13 road games, pulled to within 111-109 with one minute remaining on a three-point play by Henderson. But Tom McMilllen rebounded a missed shot by Williams to clinch the victory with 15 seconds remaining.

Chambers led Seattle with 26 points and Xavier McDaniel had 19 before he and Washington's Cliff Robinson were ejected for fighting with 7:02 remaining.

Pacers 107, Knicks 83

INDIANAPOLIS — Herb Williams scored a career-high 37 points, including 23 in the first half, as the Indiana Pacers grabbed a 32-point lead in the second quarter and held on to beat the Knicks.

Indiana led 21-13 with 3:47 left in the first period before reeling off 12 straight points to take a 33-13 lead at the end of the period. Williams scored seven of his 16 first-quarter points during the rally.

Wayman Tisdale, who finished with 18 points, gave Indiana its biggest lead at 62-28 with 10:31 left in the third quarter.

The Knicks got no closer than 20 points the rest of the way, cutting the deficit to 72-52 on Gerald Wilkins' basket late in the third quarter.

Steve Stipanovich added 12 points for Indiana, which won for the second time in three outings to improve to 5-15.

Chicago 131, San Antonio 123

SAN ANTONIO — Reserve guard Quintin Dailey scored 27 points as the Chicago Bulls, starting four former San Antonio players, dealt the Spurs a defeat.

The Bulls, coached by former Spurs mentor Stan Albeck, put together a strong offensive surge midway in the final period to forge an eight-point lead.

Chicago, which ended a five-game losing streak, downed San Antonio behind the scoring of former Spurs George Gervin, John Paxson and Gene Banks. The threesome tallied 21, 16 and 12 respectively. San Antonio is 11-10. Chicago is 8-15.

San Antonio forward Mike Mitchell poured in 21 points, including seven in the nip-and-tuck fourth quarter. Mitchell provided the Spurs with their last gasp when he intercepted a Bulls pass with 20 seconds left and San Antonio down 126-123.

That breath was taken away when center Artis Gilmore missed the front end of a two-shot foul. Mitchell's one man offensive performance couldn't overtake the Bulls late rally.

Dailey, who threw in 12 points in the last quarter, and forward Sidney Green, who scored all but six of his 20 points in the final stanza, led the Chicago streak.

Guard Alvin Robertson, who scored 21 first half points, scored only a field goal in the second half to lead the Spurs with 23. Gilmore scored 22 for San Antonio.

Fittingly, five of the Bulls last seven points were scored by former Spurs Dave Corzine and Banks.

Navratilova defeats Chris again

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — Martina Navratilova powered past defending champion Chris Evert Lloyd 6-2, 4-6, 6-2 Saturday to win the women's singles title at the $1.5 million Australian Open tennis championship.

Navratilova took 1 hour, 44 minutes to win the 13th Grand Slam singles title of her career.

In men's singles, defending champion Mats Wilander of Sweden moved into his third consecutive championship final.

Wilander, 21, aiming to become only the third man to win the open three years in succession, completed a 7-5, 6-1, 6-3 semifinal victory over Slobodan Zivojinovic of Yugoslavia. The match had been suspended because of rain Friday.

More rain fell during the other men's semifinal between Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia and Stefan Edberg of Sweden. The match was suspended 10 minutes after it started, with Edberg leading 2-1.

Navratilova, a 26-year-old Czech-born left-hander, based in Fort Worth, Texas, collected $100,000 for her win.

She also confirmed her No. 1 ranking for the year ahead of Lloyd, with whom she has dueled for supremacy for more than a decade.

Lloyd, 30, from Fort Lauderdale, Fla., had been bidding for her third Australian Open title.

Navratilova won it for the third time. She also has won six Wimbledons, two French Opens and two U.S. opens.

The second seed beat Lloyd for the 17th time in their last 19 meetings and for the seventh time in eight matches on grass.

Navratilova was simply too strong and quick for Lloyd, who rarely ventured from the baseline.

"Martina must be considered No. 1 now," conceded Lloyd.

"That was tough on the nerves," said Navratilova. "It seems Chris and I always play great matches."

Lamesa trips Rebs, 79-66

From Staff Reports

LAMESA — The Midland Lee Rebels ran into Lamesa'a one-two-three punch here Friday night and the result was a 79-66 loss to the Golden Tornadoes.

Mason brothers Jerry and Cedric netted 47 of the team's 79 points with Jerry hitting a game-high 27 and Cedric 20. Also, Carl Pennington added another 19.

For the Rebels, Lee Dixon had a hot hand with 23 points while Eddie Riley added 14 and Anthony Dickens, fresh from the football field, hit for 12

"I thought it was a well played game," said Lamesa coach Wayne Roberts. "Two good defensive teams that played a good tough basketball game that was real close until the fourth quarter.

"We got some breaks there, some turnovers that led to easy buckets. Probably the overall game was won at the free throw line where we were 19-of-26 and Lee was 8-of-13. We shot twice as many free throws as they did."

And the Rebels did indeed keep the game close most of the night. Lamesa jumped out to a 19-16 first quarter lead but couldn't increase the margin as the Tors went into the lockerroom with a 39-36 margin at the half.

Lamesa added three points to its advantage in the third quarter, outscoring Lee, 13-10, and beat the Rebels 27-20 in the final frame for the 13-point difference.

The Golden Tornadoes improved their season record to 5-2 with the victory while Lee fell to 6-3.

Next on the schedule for Lamesa is a Tuesday road date with San Angelo Central. Also on Tuesday, the Rebels travel to Levelland for 6:15 and 8 p.m. encounters with the Loboes.

After 48 years, Wheaties arrive

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Grover "Truck" Holtzclaw eats Wheaties occasionally, but the "Breakfast of Champions" will soon become the main staple at the morning meal, all because of a home run he hit in an American Legion baseball game in 1937.

Anyone who hit one back then was promised a case of Wheaties. It has taken 48 years, but Holtzclaw is finally claiming his reward for the homer he hit in the Aug. 11, 1937, game between the Little Hornets of Charlotte and the American Legion team from Augusta, Ga.

The 6-foot, 220-pound, 15-year-old catcher's home run broke a tie in the ninth inning and gave the Little Hornets a 5-4 victory.

Holtzclaw, now 64, said he first wrote General Mills in 1983 after reading a newspaper story about a man who got 40 pies from a former restaurant owner who, 40 years earlier, had promised a free pie to customers on their birthdays.

"I said if they wanted to wait until 1987, that would make it 50 years and they'd have to send me 50 cases," said the semi-retired construction manager. "I said if they did that, I'd have a storage problem but that I was from a big family and I could handle it."

This year, Holtzclaw wrote to the president of the company.

"I had forgotten about it for years while everybody else was getting their Wheaties. I finally got to the right person. I got a call from Mary Tickle in advertising up there. I didn't know if it was a prank or not."

Holtzclaw said he couldn't remember the exact ad promising a case to hitters of home runs. But he was sure that Wheaties' well-known promise to major-league players had been extended to the American Legion tournament.

"Forty-eight cases — that's a bunch of Wheaties," said Holtzclaw, 64. "Maybe I can give some to Mary Lou Retton and Pete Rose, but they're probably getting their share."

"If I get 'em, I'm going to distribute it to the ballplayers still living," he said. "I counted about 10 or 11. They're gonna have to eat some Wheaties."

Spokesmen for Minneapolis-based General Mills confirmed that Holtzclaw would be getting his truckload of cereal within a week.

"We honor our promises," said Bill Shaffer. "We didn't have a record of the original ad promising the Wheaties), but most consumer ads of that time were local stores' promotions."

"We feel pretty confident that it's above board and everything," said Tickle, who works in the company's communications department. "We do know that during that era, Wheaties frequently ran ads of that nature."

She said the offers of free cases to hitters of home runs began in 1933, when the cereal started sponsoring play-by-play radio broadcasts of baseball games. Wheaties even sponsored one Ronald "Dutch" Reagan of station WHO in Des Moines, Iowa, who was voted best Wheaties announcer, she said.

"After that, he talked his station manager and General Mills into sending him to California to cover the Chicago Cubs in their training camp," Tickle said. While he was there he also took his screen test at Warner Bros., and the rest is history."

Holtzclaw, who said he has "lost some baby fat" since he hit the home run, still eats Wheaties occasionally as well as other cereals.

"I switch around. I couldn't take a steady diet of any of 'em."

New TT coach stays at Texas

AUSTIN (AP) — David McWilliams, the Texas defensive coordinator who became head coach at Texas Tech earlier this week, has agreed to stay on with the Longhorns until after the Bluebonnet Bowl on Dec. 31.

Texas, 8-3, plays No. 10 Air Force, 11-1, in that game at Houston.

Texas assistant coach John Mize, who will join McWilliams' staff at Tech, also said he would stay on until after the bowl game.

Mize said he would do some limited recruiting for Tech while helping prepare Texas defensive tackles for Air Force.

"There's no question we need to be out recruiting for Tech, but there's no question we also have an obligation" to Texas Coach Fred Akers and the Texas football team, Mize said.

Raiders on prowl for playoff berth

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer

If the Rocky Mountains crumble this week, it will be an afterthought in Denver.

The Los Angeles Raiders are coming to town with the lead in the AFC West and maybe a National Football League playoff berth at stake.

The Raiders and Broncos are among the five 9-4 teams in the AFC. One of those five won't make the playoffs — one spot is reserved for the Central Division winner, where Cleveland leads with a 7-6 record.

...BRONCOS.

Los Angeles Rams (plus 10) at San Francisco (Monday night)

When was the last time a 9-4 first-place team was a 10-point underdog?

Probably the last time a first-place team lost to a 4-8 team by 26 points, which is what happened to the Rams in New Orleans last week.

Now we know why the Rams were so apologetic when they were 7-0.

...49ERS.

Indianapolis (plus 18) at Chicago

Now that the Bears have finally lost one, do they care if they lose two?

"We're going to play the best we can," says Coach Mike Ditka. Even just tuning up, Chicago's at least 18 points better at Soldier Field.

...BEARS.

Detroit (plus 8) at New England

At least the Lions are easy to figure. They've beaten the 49ers, Cowboys, Dolphins and Jets in the Silverdome; lost to the Bucs and Colts on the road. Note where the "at" is placed.

...PATRIOTS

Miami (minus 4½) at Green Bay

Subtract 80 degrees and you get an idea what the Dolphins may be facing. "I don't know how you get used to the cold," says Coach Don Shula. Somehow, you get the feeling he'll find a way.

...DOLPHINS.

Washington (minus 1) at Philadelphia

Philadelphia's tent folded in the fourth quarter against Minnesota. Washington's tent poles are wobbling, but at least the tent's still standing.

...REDSKINS.

Dallas (minus 2½) at Cincinnati

Sam Wyche is telling his players that these Cowboys are just another team. He's right, but not that right.

...COWBOYS

Cleveland (plus 4½) at Seattle.

Bernie Kosar will be at quarterback for Gary Danielson.

...SEAHAWKS.

Other games (HOME TEAM in caps)

SAN DIEGO (minus 3½) over Pittsburgh.
N.Y. Jets (minus 9) over BUFFALO.
New York Giants (minus 6½) over HOUSTON.
Tampa Bay (plus 6½) over MINNESOTA.
KANSAS CITY (minus 3½) over Atlanta.
New Orleans (plus 3) over ST. LOUIS.
Straight up: Broncos, 49ers, Bears, Patriots, Dolphins, Redskins, Cowboys, Seahawks, Chargers Jets, Giants, Vikings, Chiefs, Saints.
Last Week: 10-2 spread, 9-3 straight up.
Season: 84-91-6 (spread), 115-66 (straight up)

Boxer returns to ring for ring

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. (AP) — Lightweight boxer Pernell Whitaker, an Olympic gold medalist who broke his left foot two weeks ago, says he plans to enter the boxing ring anyway Dec. 21 — to get married.

Whitaker had been scheduled to fight at the Virginia Beach Pavilion on a nationally televised card that day with four other former Olympians — Mark Breland, Tyrell Biggs, Meldrick Taylor and Evander Holyfield.

"I'm going to get married in there," Whitaker said Thursday. Whitaker, 21, said his wedding to Rovanda Anthony of Norfolk will take place following the five eight-round bouts that Saturday.

"I always wanted a church wedding," said his finacee, "but since we can't seem to keep Pete out of the boxing ring, I guess this is the best place."

Trevino leads by one

SUN CITY, South Africa (AP) — American Lee Trevino fired his second successive 3-under-par 69 Friday for a 138 and a one-stroke lead over Lanny Wadkins and Bernhard Langer of West Germany halfway through the Sun City Million-Dollar Golf Challenge.

Wadkins, the U.S. Player of the Year, shot a 69 and Langer, the 1985 Masters champion, 70 to end the second round at 139 in the elite 10-man competition, with a first prize of $300,000 at the Sun City resort complex in the black homeland of Bohputhatswana.

British Open champion Sandy Lyle, who fired a second-round 70, and American Mark O'Meara, 71, were two strokes back at 141,while Taiwan's T.C. Chen improved eight shots to a 67 and was alone at 142.

Seve Ballesteros of Spain, the winner in each of the past two years here, again struggled to manage a par 72 and was at 145 with South Africa's Denis Watson, who shot a 70.

Good place for burial

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — Between them, Wyoming and Texas-El Paso have only three victories this season. It is fitting that they should be playing their final game some 15,000 miles from home, where few people know how the game should be played — or how well it can be played.

What's more, the Western Athletic Conference game, dubbed the Australia Bowl, is the final game for both head coaches and has been dogged by financial problems.

The game, at VFL Park, home of Australian Rules Football (sort of a cross between rugby and soccer) originally was conceived as a festival of all things American.

But the dropping value of the Australian dollar and other problems forced the promoters, Sydney-based Frontline Communications, to scrub plans to bring over the Southern California Trojans Marching Band. They also have cut back on other American razzmatazz and have had problems meeting other commitments.

American Don McLean, who is to sing the National Anthem and do a post-game performance, also had been a doubtful starter — but on Friday he agreed to perform and waived his fee.

The Wyoming Cowboys enter the game with a 2-8 record. The Miners from UTEP are 1-9.

Evansville, UCLA clash in soccer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The semifinals of the NCAA Division 1 soccer tournament will be held this weekend with the nation's top two teams battling in Evansville, Ind., while unheralded American University, hoping to continue its improbable march to the title, tackles Hartwick in the nation's capital.

Top-ranked and undefeated Evansville, 21-0-2, will meet No. 2-ranked UCLA, 18-1-4, Sunday. The winner advances to the championship game in the Seattle Kingdome Dec. 14.

The second half of the semifinal round will take place Saturday when Hartwick, making its seventh appearance in the Final Four and bidding for its second NCAA championship, will visit American.

American, an unlikely participant in the semifinal group, offers just two full-time scholarships for soccer. In reaching the Final Four for the first time ever, the Eagles have posted an 18-2-2 record including playoff upsets of both George Mason and South Carolina.

"Before this season we set goals for ourselves and we have certainly surpassed everything we set forth," American Coach Peter Mehlert said. "But that doesn't mean I don't believe we shouldn't be in the Final Four. What we have to do now is convince the others we belong."

The key to American's success is two-time All-America Michael Brady. He was born in Chicago to English parents and was raised in England. He came to the United States four years ago to attend college.

Despite being double-teamed and sometimes triple-teamed for much of the season, the 5-foot-9, 165-pound senior has 24 goals and seven assists. "It's been tough this year," he said. "Opponents know who you are and mark you every step."

In his career at American, Brady has scored 65 goals, 11 of them game-winners.

"He has the killer instinct. Just get him the ball and let him do what has to be done," Mehlert said.

MIDLAND Berg TEXAS

Oddly enough, the record for the biggest crowd ever to attend a football game was NOT set at a college or pro football game as you'd expect, but at a high school game. The all-time football attendance record was at Soldier Field, Chicago, Nov. 27, 1937, when 125,000 people came to see a high school playoff game.

• • •

Incredibly, there was once a National Football League game when one team got behind 21-0 BEFORE THEY EVEN HAD THEIR FIRST PLAY FROM SCRIMMAGE! It happened in 1975. San Diego kicked off to Cincinnati, and Cincinnati marched down the field for a touchdown. San Diego then fumbled the next 2 kickoffs and both were turned into touchdowns by Cincinnati. Thus, the score was 21-0 before San Diego ran their first scrimmage play. They were virtually out of the game before they could get started. Final score was 47-17.

• • •

Here's an unbelievable football record that may never be broken. Placekicker Tommy Davis kicked extra points for the San Francisco 49ers for 7 CONSECUTIVE YEARS WITHOUT EVER MISSING ONE. Davis booted 234 extra points in a row from 1959 through 1965--and never missed during that time. Nobody topped that record, before or since.

Middies wish to snap Army's awesome Wishbone

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Navy's biggest wish heading into Saturday's Army-Navy game is to somehow break the Cadets' wishbone offense, which marched through the Middies last year and is averaging more than 350 rushing yards a game this season.

Navy is 3-7 and hoping to take some of the sting out of a hard-luck season with a victory over arch-rival Army in the 86th meeting of the two service academies.

Army is 8-2 and making plans to be in Atlanta for the Dec. 31 Peach Bowl against Illinois.

Their traditional battle helps bring down the curtain on a college football season that began with the Kickoff Classic last August 30.

In other games on Saturday, No. 4 Oklahoma, bound for an Orange Bowl meeting with top-ranked Penn State, will host Southern Methodist; defending national champion Brigham Young plays at Hawaii and East Carolina is at LSU in a night game.

Texas El-Paso and Wyoming closed out disappointing seasons with a game in Melbourne, Australia.

Last December, Army ended six years of frustration with a convincing 28-11 victory over Navy.

"We've got something to pay back," said Navy linebacker and co-captain Eric Fudge as he and his teammates posed for snapshots on the Veterans Stadium field Friday afternoon.

"That was a pretty good beating they put on us, and we don't want that to happen again."

Army moved the ball almost at will in last year's game, and this year the Cadets are averaging 35.8 points and 350.8 yards on the ground per game. They've rushed the ball 647 times and passed it just 71 times.

"It's a deceptive offense," said free safety Marc Firlie. "The only advantage is knowing that they run the ball so much. But then, they could come out and throw it 15-20 times."

Firlie and others admitted that Navy may not have approached last year's game as seriously as they should have. After all, the Middies had lost just once in the past 11 years in the year-ending classic.

"They did a good job of overpowering us last year," said Firlie, who has a younger brother in the West Point Preparatory School and an older brother who is a second lieutenant in the Army.

"Last year, they hadn't won since 1977, and we were thinking it was just another Army game. But now we know they're for real."

Linebacker Vince McBeth said he remembered Army's three 16-play scoring drives in last year's game.

"The problem was we didn't execute, we missed assignments, missed tackles," he said. "And I don't think the excitement level was as high as it should have been last year. It's higher this time. We have a lot to prove to a lot of people. We know we're not a 3-and-7 team."

Navy lost five of its games by a total of 15 points.

Middies Coach Gary Tranquill said his team has benefitted from three weeks of preparation for Saturday's game, as well as an extra week of practice before facing Air Force's high-powered wishbone. Navy lost to Air Force 24-7.

"They just handled us physically last year, just hammered us," Tranquill said.

Tranquill, who has denied speculation that he would resign if the Middies lose, said he thought his team was emotionally prepared for last year's game, but in retrospect wonders if they had been spoiled by the years of success.

"We may have played it that way," he said. "For whatever reason, I thought we were flat. Hopefully it will be a different case on Saturday."

A back could win trophy

NEW YORK (AP) — In 1971, Pat Sullivan of Auburn won the Heisman Trophy. Last year, Doug Flutie of Boston College captured the honor. In between, it was nothing but running backs.

The leading contenders for the 1985 Heisman, which will be awarded Saturday by the Downtown Athletic Club, are — you guessed it — running backs and quarterbacks. Receivers, linemen and defenders of any kind need not apply.

The nation's leading rusher, Lorenzo White of Michigan State, is among the most touted candidates. So is Thurman Thomas of Oklahoma State, who was fourth among runners. But neither is expected to get the support that Bo Jackson of Auburn will attract.

Jackson, who probably will be the top pick in the National Football League draft next spring, is the favorite to win the trophy, which is given by the DAC to "the nation's outstanding college football player." Had the season ended after six games, it would have been no contest — the senior tailback rushed for 1,233 yards and 11 touchdowns by then.

He was slowed by leg injuries, removing himself from games against Tennessee and Florida which the Tigers lost. But his big finale — 142 yards against Alabama despite playing with broken ribs — might have clinched the trophy for Jackson. He wound up with 1,786 yards on 278 carries (6.4 average) and scored 17 touchdowns.

Jackson might have challenged Flutie last year had he not missed six games with a separated shoulder as a junior.

White and Jackson both had 17 touchdowns and 102 points, second in the nation.

"My goal is to be successful in whatever I do," Jackson has said. "If I turn out to be a bum, I want to be the best bum on the streets."

Ironically, the only player from a school where John Heisman coached to have won the trophy is Sullivan. Jackson could become the second Heisman coached at Oberlin, Akron, Auburn, Georgia Tech, Pennsylvania, Washington and Jefferson and Rice, and compiled a 184-67-18 record in 36 years. He also was athletic director at the DAC.

The quarterbacking corps is led by Chuck Long of Iowa, followed by Robbie Bosco of Brigham Young and Vinnie Testaverde of Miami, Fla.

Long, who had been redshirted and could have turned pro after the 1984 season, guided the third ranked Hawkeyes to the Big Ten crown and into the Rose Bowl. He hit on 231 of 351 passes for 2,978 yards and 26 touchdowns, placing him third in the complex NCAA passing efficiency ratings.

"Unflappable," is how Iowa Coach Hayden Fry describes Long.

"There's not a better quarterback in America than Chuck Long at avoiding the bad play. He's the best quarterback at the line of scrimmage — calling audibles and making adjustments," the coach said.

Testaverde and Bosco were sixth and seventh in the ratings, but Bosco threw for 28 touchdowns, seven more than Testaverde. However, Testaverde has guided the Hurricanes to No. 2 in the rankings.

When the season began, Jackson, Long, Keith Byars of Ohio State, Napoleon McCallum of Navy and Bosco were considered the frontrunners. Only Jackson and Long improved on their previous seasons and nobody else wrenched the spotlight from them. All of which seems to point to either of them as winners.

The DAC, which strives to build suspense for the announcement, invited five players to the ceremony. Jackson, White, Long, Bosco and Testaverde. Bosco won't attend because his team will be playing in Hawaii on Saturday.

The proceedings will be televised by NBC beginning at 5 p.m. EST. It will feature a series of taped interviews with previous Heisman winners and clips of them in action.

Sweetwater looks to 'minister'

SWEETWATER (AP) — Sweetwater Mustang fans call emotional 5-11, 180-pound senior middle linebacker Bruce Carrington their minister of defense.

As he goes, they note, so go the Mustangs, who journey to Lubbock for their Class 4A quarterfinal battle Saturday afternoon against Lubbock Estacado.

"It seems like when I'm down, the rest of the team is down. If we're both fired up, really our defense is fired up," Carrington said.

When Carrington is really fired up, like after he sacks the opposing quarterback, he will stand defiant, then exchange high fives with teammates.

The Estacado-Sweetwater winner will play whoever emerges from a 7:30 p.m. Saturday game in Waco between Austin Westlake and defending state champion Denison, which hasn't lost a game since 1983. In the other 4A quarterfinal games, Bay City battles Tomball at 7:30 p.m. Friday in Katy and Corpus Christi Calallen clashes with New Braunfels in a 7:30 p.m. contest in San Antonio.

Fans say Carrington on the sidelines is always bouncing on his toes, slapping his teammates on the helmet and doing some sideline cheering, working himself up for when he returns to the action.

"I think I got to be mentally fired up and physically ready before our defense can perform the way it should. If I'm fired up, it will ricochet onto my teammates. We play with the same emotion," he told the Sweetwater Reporter.

"It's really mostly mental anyway," he added. "If you get your mind mentally ready, you can do just about anything you want to. Your body does really what your mind tells you."

As a sophomore, Carrington was second team all-district. Last year, he won first-team honors but were knocked out of the state playoffs by eventual state champion Denison.

"We believe that we could have went further and we made up our minds last year, on our way home (after losing to Denison), that we were going to be state champs this year. You know, before the season started, we were ready to be in the playoffs."

He leads Sweetwater with 96 tackles this year, and says he has never had a problem getting along with his teammates.

"We have no problem with togetherness because our class especially, coming up, we have always been close. It's better when you can be close and work as a team and see each other's problems and try to work it out with each other," Carrington said.

"And when one is down, you know, you don't get on to him. Pick his head up. Show him the right direction. We've been pretty blessed with that," he added.

In a victory over Andrews, Carrington chased a backup quarterback across the field, and when the quarterback stopped, Carrington nailed him, forcing a fumble that a teammate recovered.

Nothing is more important to him, he says, than beating Estacado's Matadors on Saturday, and then two more games to capture the state championship, Carrington says.

"Football plays a bigger role in my life than anything. Football has always been my dream. I got two older brothers that, back when they were in the seventh grade, used to bring their equipment home and I would put the pads in my blue jeans and run around and fall. I got the feel of it. It was something I wanted to do."

UCA, Henderson set for playoff

By DAVID SPEER
Associated Press Writer

The University of Central Arkansas begins trying to defend its national championship and Henderson State begins trying to build toward one as the NAIA football playoffs start Saturday.

"Being in the playoffs for the third straight year is a reward for our kids," said UCA Coach Harold Horton. UCA shared the NAIA crown last year with Carson-Newman of Tennessee after the teams tied at 19 in the championship game at Conway.

The Bears, 8-2 and co-champions of the Arkansas Intercollegiate Conference with Henderson, play Pittsburg State Saturday at 2 p.m. in Pittsburg, Kan.

Henderson, 8-2, is at home in Arkadelphia against Central State of Oklahoma, which is ranked first in the NAIA Division I poll, in a 1 p.m. game.

Pittsburg is 8-1 and was ranked third in the final NAIA Division I poll. UCA was sixth. Pittsburg boasts the second-best rushing record in the NAIA, rolling up an average of 307 yards per game. Halfback Bruce Stancell rushed for more than 1,000 yards and quarterback Gene Stegeman is the NAIA's second-leading scorer, averaging 10.86 points per game.

"They don't do a lot offensively," Horton said. "But what they do, they do extremely well. The are a running team. They have tough, intelligent football players who execute their offense."

Pittsburg, winner of the Central States Conference, hasn't played since Nov. 9.

"We'll come out loose and ready to play football Saturday," Horton said. "We're still the defending national champions and our objective is to win it all again."

Henderson Coach Ralph "Sporty" Carpenter said the Reddies are getting a break in playing Central State in Arkadelphia. "We thought it was of vital importance for us to play this game at home," Carpenter said. "We think this is a big plus for us. Throughout the history of the playoffs, those teams that have been successful have played at home."

Central State has piled up a 67-23-3 record in nine seasons under head coach Gary Howard, including a 7-1-1 mark in 1985. Central State defeated Henderson 41-18 last year and the teams are even in past meetings, each winning three. Central State has won the past three meetings; the last Henderson victory was in 1981 by a score of 38-18.

"What we've done up to now doesn't make any difference," Howard said. "You can throw that out the window. Both teams will play with a lot of emotion. It comes down to what they do that day."

Henderson led the NAIA in rushing, averaging 316 yards a game. Tailback Kenny Fells tied for the NAIA rushing lead, averaging 138

Orange tops LaSalle; TCU, SMU post wins

College Basketball

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Rafael Addison, with 17 of his game-high 23 points after intermission, fueled a second-half Syracuse spurt Friday night as the fourth-ranked Orangemen whipped LaSalle 97-72 in college basketball.

The victory in the opening game of the ninth Carrier Classic was the fourth straight for the undefeated Orangemen, who dropped LaSalle to 3-2.

Navy met Ohio University in the second game.

Syracuse starters Wendell Alexis, Dwayne Washington and Rony Seikaly joined Addison in double figures with 14, 13 and 12 points, respectively, as the high-scoring team pulled away steadily most of the game.

Koretz, a 6-foot-7 junior, scored 19 points and hauled down eight rebounds — matching the 6-foot-9 Alexis for game honors in that category. Chip Greenberg added 11 points, and Tim Legler scored 10 for the Explorers.

TCU 63, BYU 50

TEMPE, Ariz. — Carl Lott and Jamie Dixon scored 19 points each Friday night to lead Texas Christian University over Brigham Young in first-round action at the Kactus Klassic tournament at Arizona State University.

TCU ran off 16 unanswered points late in the first half to break open a tight contest and forge a 36-17 halftime lead. The cold-shooting Cougars hit only 14 percent of their first half field-goal attempts. TCU shot 43 percent.

BYU narrowed the TCU lead to nine points at 42-33 midway through the second half before the Horned Frogs put the game out of reach with eight unanswered points.

Bob Capener scored 15 points and Jeff Chatman 13 in a losing cause for BYU, which fell to 0-3 on the season with the loss.

Texas Christian remained unbeaten at 4-0 with the win.

Williams also had a career high 15 rebounds to lead the Mustangs to their fourth straight victory. The Chippewas fell to 1-4.

The Mustangs held a slim 29-26 halftime lead and led only by two points in the second half, 33-31, when Williams started SMU off to a streak of nine unanswered points with a layup on a fast break.

Dan Majerele led Central Michigan with 19 points.

Illinois 79, Eastern Kentucky 56

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — Anthony Welch scored 11 points Friday night as No. 12 Illinois used a balanced attack to beat Eastern Kentucky in the first round of the Illini Classic Tournament.

Efrem Winters and Tony Wysinger added 10 points each, while Scott Meents, Bruce Douglas and Ken Norman each chipped in nine points. Ten Illinois players scored as the Illini took an early lead and cleared the bench.

Eastern Kentucky's Antonio Parris scored 24 points for the Colonels, 2-2, providing most of the second half scoring for his squad.

Illinois, 4-1, moved into Saturday's championship game. They have won all seven previous Illini tournaments.

The win was Ccoach Lou Henson's 200th in 11 years at Illinois, against 110 defeats. He has won 440 games in his 23 years as a college basketball coach. It was also Illinois' 27th straight home court win.

Auburn 80, Ky Wesleyan 71

BOWLING GREEN, Ky. — Chuck Person scored 30 points to lead No. 19 Auburn to an 80-71 victory over Kentucky Wesleyan in the Wendy's Classic basketball tournment Friday night.

Auburn, 4-1, led throughout with advantages of 12 points on 10 different occasions. Kentucky Wesleyan, 4-1, narrowed the lead to 50-44 with 16:01 left in the game on a three-point play when Sam Smith hit a layup and was fouled by Michael Jones.

With 1:45 to play, Kentucky Wesleyan pulled to within eight points at 75-67 as Dave Bennett hit a 20-footer, but the Panthers could get no closer.

Kentucky Wesleyan was led by 6-foot-8 senior forward Dave Bennett with 26 points on 13-of-24 from the field. Sam Smith, a 6-5 junior forward, added 13 and James Johnson, a 6-5 junior guard, added 10.

Person, a 6-8 senior forward, was 14-of-20 from the field and 2-of-2 from the free-throw line. Person and Jeff Moore each grabbed eight rebounds for Auburn. Frank Ford added 14 points for the Tigers and Moore had 10.

UAB 71, Lehigh 61

IOWA CITY, Iowa — Jerome Mincy scored 10 of his 14 points in the second half to lead 17th-ranked Alabama-Birmingham in the opening round of the Amana-Hawkeye Classic tournament.

No. 18 Iowa, the host team, played Arkansas State in the other first-round game later Friday.

Lehigh gave the taller, more experienced Blazers all they could handle in the first half and the early moments of the second half before Alabama-Birmingham, 4-1, took control of the game behind Mincy, Steve Mitchell and Michael Charles.

Mitchell hit an 18-footer at the buzzer to give Alabama-Birmingham a 30-29 halftime lead, but Lehigh went up 39-35 on Vernon Doswell's jump shot early in the second half.

Mitchell finished with 13 points and nine assists, while Charles scored 12 points. Lehigh's Daren Queenan led all scorers with 23 points. Mike Androlewicz added 13 points for the Engineers, 2-3.

UTEP 88, Texas Southern 54

The Miners led 36-27 at halftime and blew the game open early in the second half with 11 unanswered points. Forward Mike Richmond scored 11 points for UTEP and guard Hernell "Jeep" Jackson and Terry Stallworth had nine each for the Miners.

The Tigers could manage only 35 percent on field goal shooting despite forward Gary Robinson's team-high 19 points. Tiger guard Edward Jackson had eight points early in the second half but lost his shooting hand later in the half.

The win brings the Miners to 4-1 on the season, and drops Texas Southern to 1-4.

49ers, Dolphins over first shocks

NFL Report

Analysis
AP Sports Writer

Thirteen weeks ago, the San Francisco 49ers and Miami Dolphins were shocked in their season openers by Minnesota and Houston, respectively. The football world wondered what had become of last season's Super Bowl participants.

Since their opening losses, the 49ers and Dolphins have combined to lose only seven games and both appear assured of spots in the National Football League playoffs. While they haven't achieved their combined 34-4 record of a year ago, both teams are playing their best football of 1985 when it counts most.

"We're playing our best football in the 13th, 14th and 15th weeks," said Randy Cross, San Francisco's all-pro guard. "You hope all season that's when you'll peak."

On Sunday, the 49ers improved to 8-5 with a 35-8 victory over the Washington Redskins, three-time defending champion in the NFC East. On Monday night, the Dolphins, now 9-4, beat Chicago 38-24, the Bears' first defeat in 13 games.

"The Super Bowl is always in your mind, but it's in the back of our minds right now," Miami defensive end Doug Betters said. "First we have to make the playoffs and then do it step by step to get to New Orleans."

THE VICTORY over the Bears came by scoring more points (31) in the first half than Chicago had allowed in its previous six games. The win was Miami's fourth straight and lifted it into a three-way tie in the AFC East with New England and the New York Jets.

Although its record doesn't quite match that of Miami, San Francisco may have an easier task in making the playoffs. The Dolphins are one of five 9-4 teams in the AFC East and West, only four of which will make the playoffs because the Central division winner must be represented. Cleveland currently leads there with a 7-6 mark.

The 49ers can take over first place in the NFC West with a victory over the fading Los Angeles Rams at home next Monday night. It was a 28-14 loss to the 49ers five weeks ago that started the then unbeaten Rams slide. LA suffered an embarrassing 29-3 loss to New Orleans on Sunday, the Rams' fourth defeat in six games, prompting Coach John Robinson to talk of replacing quarterback Dieter Brock.

The Dolphins' winning streak coincides with the return of wide receiver Mark Duper, who missed nine games with a broken leg.

"We're getting healthy at just the right time," said Coach Don Shula, whose team at one point was down to just five offensive linemen.

"Potentially, this team is as good as last year's," said Betters, who returned to the lineup Monday night after missing four weeks with a knee injury. "We've always had good older players and we've got some good young ones, too."

Duper's return has also helped Dan Marino become Dan Marino once again.

m

MONDAY night, Marino's surprisingly nimble rollouts and his always quick release neutralized the Chicago pass rush that had terrorized such teams as Dallas and Washington.

His stats weren't overwhelming — 14 of 27 for 270 yards and three touchdowns. But his timing reminded of last year, when he had the best year any quarterback has ever had. Against Chicago, he converted third-down situations with 19, 18 and 13 yards to go to keep alive drives that led to three Miami touchdowns.

The 49ers, 18-1 in the Super Bowl-winning season a year ago, have been doing it with a defense anchored by Michael Carter, the Olympic shot-putter whom Coach Bill Walsh describes as "by far the best nose tackle in football."

San Francisco has recovered from a 3-4 start to win five of six, but the offense has been coming around slowly. Against Washington, it accumulated just 59 yards in the first half but left the field ahead 21-8 because of Carl Monroe's 95-yard kickoff return, Keena Turner's 65-yard touchdown run with a fumble and a Dwight Hicks interception that set up a score.

"I've never given up," said Cross, who moved from guard to center Sunday in place of the injured Fred Quillan. "It's a long, long road and you just have to keep plugging. Sometimes you can be the 49ers of '84 or Chicago Bears some years you have to scratch and bite for everything.

The scratching and biting seems to have paid off, with considerable help from the Rams. Walsh even let slip after Sunday's game that he's no longer very worried about a playoff berth by suggesting that "we have three games for the offense to come around.

Players want their own drug program

KAANAPALI, Hawaii (AP) — Major league baseball players, as a group unhappy with the approach of the commissioner and club owners toward a drug program, will come up with their own.

"We think it's going to be a very good program," Bruce Benedict, player representative for the Atlanta Braves said Friday following this week's executive board meetings of the players' union, the Major League Baseball Players Association.

Benedict said baseball's recent approach to the problem has cast a cloud over the players, but said of the union's soon-to-be-announced program, "I think it will shine a different light on the whole thing."

However, Don Fehr, executive director of the players' union, said that the program will not deal with the issue of drug testing.

That would seem to be the thorniest of the drug issues facing the players now.

Fehr said that the players had to come up with something because the owners, after unilaterally terminating the drug agreement negotiated with the players in 1984, have shown no intention to negotiate a new one.

Following the windup of the executive board sessions late Thursday, Fehr had said, "There were a number of decisions made about some things we are going to do essentially on our own, since the clubs are not interested in negotiating the issue."

He would not, however, divulge the specifics of the approach decided upon at the union meetings, nor would any player representatives reached by The Associated Press following the sessions on the Island of Maui.

Benedict said the player representatives were very unhappy that the owners had ended the drug agreement negotiated in 1984.

"We felt the drug agreement was negotiated in good faith and was working, and we as a group do not understand its termination," Benedict said.

"I guess what happened is maybe the burden was placed on us, since there have been no suggestions forthcoming from the owners or Mr. Ueberroth.

"We recognize that there's a percentage of the (drug) problems in baseball, as there is in any large group — doctors, lawyers and so on — and we want to do something about it," he said.

"We think this (the players' new program) will put us on the right track and we'll see some very good results. We want baseball to be the great game it always has been," said Benedict.

Ueberroth earlier had asked all major leaguers to submit to voluntary tests for drugs, but met with negative response from the players, and the union claimed the commissioner was circumventing it.

Also, a number of clubs recently began including mandatory drug test clauses in certain types of contracts, which the players union said was an unacceptable "presumed-guilty-until-proven-innocent"

San Diego in-fighting finally ends

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A front-office dispute ended with a show of unanimity Friday, with the San Diego Padres announcing that Manager Dick Williams would be back for his fifth season in 1986.

There had been reports that Williams, upset over what he perceived as an attempt to oust him, would quit the team and accept a buyout of the final year of his contract. But after a meeting with Padres owner Joan Kroc, club President Ballard Smith and General Manager Jack McKeon, it was announced that Williams would be back and Padres officials blamed the weeklong upheaval on a series of what Smith described as "unfortunate miscommunications."

"The bottom line is that Dick Williams is going to be back and whether Dick Williams said he wasn't going to come back or whatever, he is going to be back," Smith said. "We had a misunderstanding and I am sorry about it. It probably won't be the last misunderstanding I will have in my life but hopefully the last public misunderstanding."

Smith, who appeared alone at a news conference, also read a brief statement from Kroc, his mother-in-law. In the statement, Kroc reaffirmed her confidence in Smith three days after publicly rebuking him and McKeon for what she saw as attempts to make Williams quit.

Smith also announced that third base coach Ozzie Virgil, a trusted Williams associated fired last month without Williams' consent or knowledge, would be rehired. The disclosure of Virgil's firing last week triggered reports that Williams was ready to quit because of his perception that Padres executives were trying to undermine his authority.

Smith said he did not offer to buy out Williams' contract but said that Williams may have thought he had due to a misunderstanding in a meeting in early November. Smith said that Williams, at that time, had indicated he may not want to return.

"There are some things about his management style that I don't like," said Smith. "There's probably some things about my management style that he doesn't like. There are times when Dick is not a good communicator. There are also times when I am not a good coomunicator, like in this situation.

"So we will both work on our communication skills."

Smith admitted he was concerned that Williams' gruff managing style had alienated players. However, he said that he didn't think the players' alienation with Williams was irreversible.

"I don't happen to believe that it is to the point that he can't manage the club," Smith said.

"To be perfectly honest, I have heard grumblings ever since Dick has been here. I think Dick has some adjustments to make in his style and he seems to be prepared to make them and I assume the players will meet him halfway."

Smith said Williams did not ask for a contract extension, nor was he offered one.

Arkansas St. 66, Iowa 62

IOWA CITY, Iowa — John Tate scored 23 points and Brad Goshien added 21 as Arkansas State upset 18th-ranked Iowa, handing the host team its first loss in the four-year history of the Amana-Hawkeye Classic basketball tournament.

Arkansas State, 4-0, took a 32-30 halftime lead, then held off repeated Iowa threats in the second half to move into Saturday's championship game with No. 17 Alabama-Birmingham, 4-1. Jerome Mincy scored 10 of his team-high 14 points in the second half to lead Alabama-Birmingham to a 71-61 victory over Lehigh in the opening game Friday.

Iowa, 5-1, will play Lehigh, 2-3, in the consolation game Saturday night.

Iowa and Arkansas State swapped leads throughout the first half before Tim Norman's short jumper with 46 seconds left in the period gave the Indians their two-point halftime lead.

Rinkers' 68 good for first in Penney

LARGO, Fla. (AP) — The brother-sister team of Larry and Laurie Rinker fired a 4-under-par 68 Friday to vault into first place at the halfway point of the J.C. Penney Mixed Team Golf Classic at Bardmoor Country Club.

The Rinkers stood at 10-under-par 134 after two rounds. The teams of Mark McCumber and Chris Johnson, and Al Geiberger and Patty Sheehan were one shot back at 135 after both shooting 69s on Friday.

Four more teams, including two sets of former champions, are another stroke back at 136. Tom Kite and Beth Daniel, who carded a 70 in the second round, won the event in 1981, and Curtis Strange and Nancy Lopez, the 1980 winners, shot a second straight 68 Friday.

The others at 136 are Andy Bean and Amy Benz, and Larry Mize and Martha Nause. Both of those teams shot 67s in the second round.

First-round leaders Ken Green and Sally Quinlan slipped back to a tie for eighth at 137 after turning in a 72 on Friday. Jim Thorpe and Jane Geddes also stood at 137 after a 70.

The Rinkers got off to a fast start with three birdies in the first four holes, but then added only one more birdie the rest of the way.

Gregg defends field

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — While Green Bay Coach Forrest Gregg makes no guarantees about the condition of Lambeau Field for Sunday's game against the Miami Dolphins, he declared Friday the Packers weren't trying to mess up the playing surface on purpose.

"The field probably will be soft. It might even be muddy ... or it could be frozen. It depends on the weather," Gregg said. "I'm not trying to get the field muddy. I'm not trying to get an advantage with the field."

A muddy field would benefit neither side, Gregg said.

Lambeau Field was snow-covered last Sunday as the Packers trounced the Tampa Bay Buccaneers in a near-blizzard to improve their National Football League record to 6-7. Underneath the snow, the field, which had been covered, was in fairly good shape, players said.

But this week, left over ice had to be removed by turning on heating coils in the turf. The field could be soft, unless fair weather allows grounds crews to lift the tarpaulin Saturday night, which would firm up the turf, team officials say.

The 9-4 Dolphins say they'll be ready no matter what the condition of the field, no matter what the weather.

Bosox hope to sign Boggs

BOSTON (AP) — Boston Red Sox General Manager Lou Gorman said Friday a published report of Wade Boggs' contract demands is incorrect and he was optimistic that the third baseman would be re-signed.

"Wade wants to stay in Boston for the rest of his career," Gorman said in an interview on WEEI, a Boston radio station. "Even if we end up in arbitration, we'll get it done one way or another so it's really much ado about nothing."

The Boston Herald reported Boggs, who won his second American League batting title last season, is seeking $2 million a year for the next five years plus $200,000 a year for life after he retires from baseball.

Orange tops LaSalle; TCU, SMU post wins

College Basketball

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Rafael Addison, with 17 of his game-high 23 points after intermission, fueled a second-half Syracuse spurt Friday night as the fourth-ranked Orangemen whipped LaSalle 97-72 in college basketball.

The victory in the opening game of the ninth Carrier Classic was the fourth straight for the undefeated Orangemen, who dropped LaSalle to 3-2.

Navy met Ohio University in the second game.

Syracuse starters Wendell Alexis, Dwayne Washington and Rony Seikaly joined Addison in double figures with 14, 13 and 12 points, respectively, as the high-scoring team pulled away steadily most of the game.

Koretz, a 6-foot-7 junior, scored 19 points and hauled down eight rebounds — matching the 6-foot-9 Alexis for game honors in that category. Chip Greenberg added 11 points, and Tim Legler scored 10 for the Explorers.

TCU 63, BYU 50

TEMPE, Ariz. — Carl Lott and Jamie Dixon scored 19 points each Friday night to lead Texas Christian University over Brigham Young in first-round action at the Kactus Klassic tournament at Arizona State University.

TCU ran off 16 unanswered points late in the first half to break open a tight contest and forge a 36-17 halftime lead. The cold-shooting Cougars hit only 14 percent of their first half field-goal attempts. TCU shot 43 percent.

BYU narrowed the TCU lead to nine points at 42-33 midway through the second half before the Horned Frogs put the game out of reach with eight unanswered points.

Bob Capener scored 15 points and Jeff Chatman 13 in a losing cause for BYU, which fell to 0-3 on the season with the loss.

Texas Christian remained unbeaten at 4-0 with the win.

Southern Meth. 68, Central Michigan 45

DALLAS — Kevin Lewis and Terry Williams scored 16 points each Friday night to lead Southern Methodist University to a 68-45 non-conference college basketball victory over Central Michigan.

Williams also had a career high 15 rebounds to lead the Mustangs to their fourth straight victory. The Chippewas fell to 1-4.

The Mustangs held a slim 29-26 halftime lead and led only by two points in the second half, 33-31, when Williams started SMU off to a streak of nine unanswered points with a layup on a fast break.

Dan Majerele led Central Michigan with 19 points.

Illinois 79, Eastern Kentucky 56

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — Anthony Welch scored 11 points Friday night as No. 12 Illinois used a balanced attack to beat Eastern Kentucky in the first round of the Illini Classic Tournament.

Efrem Winters and Tony Wysinger added 10 points each, while Scott Meents, Bruce Douglas and Ken Norman each chipped in nine points. Ten Illinois players scored as the Illini took an early lead and cleared the bench.

Eastern Kentucky's Antonio Parris scored 24 points for the Colonels, 2-2, providing most of the second half scoring for his squad.

Illinois, 4-1, moved into Saturday's championship game. They have won all seven previous Illini tournaments.

The win was Ccoach Lou Henson's 200th in 11 years at Illinois, against 110 defeats. He has won 440 games in his 23 years as a college basketball coach. It was also Illinois' 27th straight home court win.

Auburn 80, Ky Wesleyan 71

BOWLING GREEN, Ky. — Chuck Person scored 30 points to lead No. 19 Auburn to an 80-71 victory over Kentucky Wesleyan in the Wendy's Classic basketball tournment Friday night.

Auburn, 4-1, led throughout with advantages of 12 points on 10 different occasions. Kentucky Wesleyan, 4-1, narrowed the lead to 50-44 with 16:01 left in the game on a three-point play when Sam Smith hit a layup and was fouled by Michael Jones.

With 1:45 to play, Kentucky Wesleyan pulled to within eight points at 75-67 as Dave Bennett hit a 20-footer, but the Panthers could get no closer.

Kentucky Wesleyan was led by 6-foot-8 senior forward Dave Bennett with 26 points on 13-of-24 from the field. Sam Smith, a 6-5 junior forward, added 13 and James Johnson, a 6-5 junior guard, added 10.

Person, a 6-8 senior forward, was 14-of-20 from the field and 2-of-2 from the free-throw line. Person and Jeff Moore each grabbed eight rebounds for Auburn. Frank Ford added 14 points for the Tigers and Moore had 10.

UAB 71, Lehigh 61

IOWA CITY, Iowa — Jerome Mincy scored 10 of his 14 points in the second half to lead 17th-ranked Alabama-Birmingham in the opening round of the Amana-Hawkeye Classic tournament.

No. 18 Iowa, the host team, played Arkansas State in the other first-round game later Friday.

Lehigh gave the taller, more experienced Blazers all they could handle in the first half and the early moments of the second half before Alabama-Birmingham, 4-1, took control of the game behind Mincy, Steve Mitchell and Michael Charles.

Mitchell hit an 18-footer at the buzzer to give Alabama-Birmingham a 30-29 halftime lead, but Lehigh went up 39-35 on Vernon Doswell's jump shot early in the second half.

Mitchell finished with 13 points and nine assists, while Charles scored 12 points. Lehigh's Daren Queenan led all scorers with 23 points. Mike Androlewicz added 13 points for the Engineers, 2-3.

UTEP 88, Texas Southern 54

EL PASO — Center Dave Feitl scored 21 points and forward Quentin Gates had a career-high 18 to lead Texas-El Paso in the first game of the Tip-Off Tournament.

The Miners led 36-27 at halftime and blew the game open early in the second half with 11 unanswered points. Forward Mike Richmond scored 11 points for UTEP and guard Hernell "Jeep" Jackson and Terry Stallworth had nine each for the Miners.

The Tigers could manage only 35 percent on field goal shooting despite forward Gary Robinson's team-high 19 points. Tiger guard Edward Jackson had eight points early in the second half but lost his shooting hand later in the half.

The win brings the Miners to 4-1 on the season, and drops Texas Southern to 1-4.

TCU 63, BYU 50

TEMPE, Ariz. — Carl Lott and Jamie Dixon scored 19 points each Friday night to lead Texas Christian University over Brigham Young in first-round action at the Kactus Klassic tournament at Arizona State University.

TCU ran off 16 unanswered points late in the first half to break open a tight contest and forge a 36-17 halftime lead. The cold-shooting Cougars hit only 14 percent of their first half field-goal attempts. TCU shot 43 percent.

BYU narrowed the TCU lead to nine points at 42-33 midway through the second half before the Horned Frogs put the game out of reach with eight unanswered points.

Bob Capener scored 15 points and Jeff Chatman 13 in a losing cause for BYU, which fell to 0-3 on the season with the loss.

Texas Christian remained unbeaten at 4-0 with the win.

49ers, Dolphins over first shocks

NFL Report

Analysis
AP Sports Writer

Thirteen weeks ago, the San Francisco 49ers and Miami Dolphins were shocked in their season openers by Minnesota and Houston, respectively. The football world wondered what had become of last season's Super Bowl participants.

Since their opening losses, the 49ers and Dolphins have combined to lose only seven games and both appear assured of spots in the National Football League playoffs. While they haven't achieved their combined 34-4 record of a year ago, both teams are playing their best football of 1985 when it counts most.

"We're playing our best football in the 13th, 14th and 15th weeks," said Randy Cross, San Francisco's all-pro guard. "You hope all season that's when you'll peak."

On Sunday, the 49ers improved to 8-5 with a 35-8 victory over the Washington Redskins, three-time defending champion in the NFC East. On Monday night, the Dolphins, now 9-4, beat Chicago 38-24, the Bears' first defeat in 13 games.

"The Super Bowl is always in your mind, but it's in the back of our minds right now," Miami defensive end Doug Betters said. "First we have to make the playoffs and then do it step by step to get to New Orleans."

THE VICTORY over the Bears came by scoring more points (31) in the first half than Chicago had allowed in its previous six games. The win was Miami's fourth straight and lifted it into a three-way tie in the AFC East with New England and the New York Jets.

Although its record doesn't quite match that of Miami, San Francisco may have an easier task in making the playoffs. The Dolphins are one of five 9-4 teams in the AFC East and West, only four of which will make the playoffs because the Central division winner must be represented. Cleveland currently leads there with a 7-6 mark.

The 49ers can take over first place in the NFC West with a victory over the fading Los Angeles Rams at home next Monday night. It was a 28-14 loss to the 49ers five weeks ago that started the then-unbeaten Rams slide. LA suffered an embarrassing 29-3 loss to New Orleans on Sunday, the Rams' fourth defeat in six games, prompting Coach John Robinson to talk of replacing quarterback Dieter Brock.

The Dolphins' winning streak coincides with the return of wide receiver Mark Duper, who missed nine games with a broken leg.

"We're getting healthy at just the right time," said Coach Don Shula, whose team at one point was down to just five offensive linemen.

"Potentially, this team is as good as last year's," said Betters, who returned to the lineup Monday night after missing four weeks with a knee injury. "We've always had good older players and we've got some good young ones, too."

Duper's return has also helped Dan Marino become Dan Marino once again.

m

MONDAY night, Marino's surprisingly nimble rollouts and his always quick release neutralized the Chicago pass rush that had terrorized such teams as Dallas and Washington.

His stats weren't overwhelming — 14 of 27 for 270 yards and three touchdowns. But his timing reminded of last year, when he had the best year any quarterback has ever had. Against Chicago, he converted third-down situations with 19, 18 and 13 yards to go to keep alive drives that led to three Miami touchdowns.

The 49ers, 18-1 in the Super Bowl-winning season a year ago, have been doing it with a defense anchored by Michael Carter, the Olympic shot-putter whom Coach Bill Walsh describes as "by far the best nose tackle in football."

San Francisco has recovered from a 3-4 start to win five of six, but the offense has been coming around slowly. Against Washington, it accumulated just 59 yards in the first half but left the field ahead 21-8 because of Carl Monroe's 95-yard kickoff return, Keena Turner's 65-yard touchdown run with a fumble and a Dwight Hicks interception that set up a score.

"I've never given up," said Cross who moved from guard to center Sunday in place of the injured Fred Quillan. "It's a long, long road and you just have to keep plugging. Sometimes you can be the 49ers of '84 or Chicago Bears some years you have to scratch and bite for everything."

The scratching and biting seems to have paid off, with considerable help from the Rams. Walsh even let slip after Sunday's game that he's no longer very worried about a playoff berth by suggesting that "we have three games for the offense to come around."

Players want their own drug program

KAANAPALI, Hawaii (AP) — Major league baseball players, as a group unhappy with the approach of the commissioner and club owners toward a drug program, will come up with their own.

"We think it's going to be a very good program," Bruce Benedict, player representative for the Atlanta Braves said Friday following this week's executive board meetings of the players' union, the Major League Baseball Players Association.

Benedict said baseball's recent approach to the problem has cast a cloud over the players, but said of the union's soon-to-be-announced program, "I think it will shine a different light on the whole thing."

However, Don Fehr, executive director of the players' union, said that the program will not deal with the issue of drug testing.

That would seem to be the thorniest of the drug issues facing the players now.

Fehr said that the players had to come up with something because the owners, after unilaterally terminating the drug agreement negotiated with the players in 1984, have shown no intention to negotiate a new one.

Following the windup of the executive board sessions late Thursday, Fehr had said, "There were a number of decisions made about some things we are going to do essentially on our own, since the clubs are not interested in negotiating the issue."

He would not, however, divulge the specifics of the approach decided upon at the union meetings, nor would any player representatives reached by The Associated Press following the sessions on the Island of Maui.

Benedict said the player representatives were very unhappy that the owners had ended the drug agreement negotiated in 1984.

"We felt the drug agreement was negotiated in good faith and was working, and we as a group do not understand its termination," Benedict said.

"I guess what happened is maybe the burden was placed on us, since there have been no suggestions forthcoming from the owners or Mr. Ueberroth.

"We recognize that there's a percentage of the (drug) problems in baseball, as there is in any large group — doctors, lawyers and so on — and we want to do something about it," he said.

"We think this (the players' new progrqm) will put us on the right track and we'll see some very good results. We want baseball to be the great game it always has been," said Benedict.

Ueberroth earlier had asked all major leaguers to submit to voluntary tests for drugs, but met with negative response from the players, and the union claimed the commissioner was circumventing it.

Also, a number of clubs recently began including mandatory drug test clauses in certain types of contracts, which the players union said was an unacceptable "presumed-guilty-until-proven-innocent"

San Diego in-fighting finally ends

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A front-office dispute ended with a show of unanimity Friday, with the San Diego Padres announcing that Manager Dick Williams would be back for his fifth season in 1986.

There had been reports that Williams, upset over what he perceived as an attempt to oust him, would quit the team and accept a buyout of the final year of his contract. But after a meeting with Padres owner Joan Kroc, club President Ballard Smith and General Manager Jack McKeon, it was announced that Williams would be back and Padres officials blamed the weeklong upheaval on a series of what Smith described as "unfortunate miscommunications."

"The bottom line is that Dick Williams is going to be back and whether Dick Williams said he wasn't going to come back or whatever, he is going to be back," Smith said. "We had a misunderstanding and I am sorry about it. It probably won't be the last misunderstanding I will have in my life but hopefully the last public misunderstanding."

Smith, who appeared alone at a news conference, also read a brief statement from Kroc, his mother-in-law. In the statement, Kroc reaffirmed her confidence in Smith three days after publicly rebuking him and McKeon for what she saw as attempts to make Williams quit.

Smith also announced that third base coach Ozzie Virgil, a trusted Williams associated fired last month without Williams' consent or knowledge, would be rehired. The disclosure of Virgil's firing last week triggered reports that Williams was ready to quit because of his perception that Padres executives were trying to undermine his authority.

Smith said he did not offer to buy out Williams' contract but said that Williams may have thought he had due to a misunderstanding in a meeting in early November. Smith said that Williams, at that time, had indicated he may not want to return.

"There are some things about his management style that I don't like," said Smith. "There's probably some things about my management style that he doesn't like. There are times when Dick is not a good communicator. There are also times when I am not a good coomunicator, like in this situation.

"So we will both work on our communication skills."

Smith admitted he was concerned that Williams' gruff managing style had alienated players. However, he said that he didn't think the players' alienation with Williams was irreversible.

"I don't happen to believe that it is to the point that he can't manage the club," Smith said.

"To be perfectly honest, I have heard grumblings ever since Dick has been here. I think Dick has some adjustments to make in his style and he seems to be prepared to make them and I assume the players will meet him halfway."

Smith said Williams did not ask for a contract extension, nor was he offered one.

Arkansas St. 66, Iowa 62

IOWA CITY, Iowa — John Tate scored 23 points and Brad Goshien added 21 as Arkansas State upset 18th-ranked Iowa, handing the host team its first loss in the four-year history of the Amana-Hawkeye Classic basketball tournament.

Arkansas State, 4-0, took a 32-30 halftime lead, then held off repeated Iowa threats in the second half to move into Saturday's championship game with No. 17 Alabama-Birmingham, 4-1. Jerome Mincy scored 10 of his team-high 14 points in the second half to lead Alabama-Birmingham to a 71-61 victory over Lehigh in the opening game Friday.

Iowa, 5-1, will play Lehigh, 2-3, in the consolation game Saturday night.

Iowa and Arkansas State swapped leads throughout the first half before Tim Norman's short jumper with 46 seconds left in the period gave the Indians their two-point halftime lead.

Rinkers' 68 good for first in Penney

LARGO, Fla. (AP) — The brother-sister team of Larry and Laurie Rinker fired a 4-under-par 68 Friday to vault into first place at the halfway point of the J.C. Penney Mixed Team Golf Classic at Bardmoor Country Club.

The Rinkers stood at 10-under par 134 after two rounds. The teams of Mark McCumber and Chris Johnson, and Al Geiberger and Patty Sheehan were one shot back at 135 after both shooting 69s on Friday.

Four more teams, including two sets of former champions, are another stroke back at 136. Tom Kite and Beth Daniel, who carded a 70 in the second round, won the event in 1981, and Curtis Strange and Nancy Lopez, the 1980 winners, shot a second straight 68 Friday.

The others at 136 are Andy Bean and Amy Benz, and Larry Mize and Martha Nause. Both of those teams shot 67s in the second round.

First-round leaders Ken Green and Sally Quinlan slipped back to a tie for eighth at 137 after turning in a 72 on Friday. Jim Thorpe and Jane Geddes also stood at 137 after a 70.

The Rinkers got off to a fast start with three birdies in the first four holes, but then added only one more birdie the rest of the way.

Gregg defends field

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — While Green Bay Coach Forrest Gregg makes no guarantees about the condition of Lambeau Field for Sunday's game against the Miami Dolphins, he declared Friday the Packers weren't trying to mess up the playing surface on purpose.

"The field probably will be soft. It might even be muddy ... or it could be frozen. It depends on the weather," Gregg said. "I'm not trying to get the field muddy. I'm not trying to get an advantage with the field."

A muddy field would benefit neither side, Gregg said.

Lambeau Field was snow-covered last Sunday as the Packers trounced the Tampa Bay Buccaneers in a near-blizzard to improve their National Football League record to 6-7. Underneath the snow, the field, which had been covered, was in fairly good shape, players said.

But this week, left over ice had to be removed by turning on heating coils in the turf. The field could be soft, unless fair weather allows grounds crews to lift the tarpaulin Saturday night, which would firm up the turf, team officials say.

The 9-4 Dolphins say they'll be ready no matter what the condition of the field, no matter what the weather.

Bosox hope to sign Boggs

BOSTON (AP) — Boston Red Sox General Manager Lou Gorman said Friday a published report of Wade Boggs' contract demands is incorrect and he was optimistic that the third baseman would be re-signed.

"Wade wants to stay in Boston for the rest of his career," Gorman said in an interview on WEEI, a Boston radio station. "Even if we end up in arbitration, we'll get it done one way or another so it's really much ado about nothing."

The Boston Herald reported Boggs, who won his second American League batting title last season, is seeking $2 million a year for the next five years plus $200,000 a year for life after he retires from baseball.

'In-demand' Douglas dashes through a repertoire of roles

ENTERTAINMENT

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — He's a dashing soldier of fortune in "Jewel of the Nile" and a hard-driving stage director in "A Chorus Line."

The Christmas movie season once again demonstrates the versatility of actor-producer Michael Douglas, who dislikes being categorized.

Douglas obviously learned from his father, Kirk, that versatility is the key to a long career. He has been a stage actor, TV series star ("The Streets of San Francisco"), film star ("Summertree," "Coma"), producer ("One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest") and producer-actor ("The China Syndrome").

"Romancing the Stone," which he produced as well as starred in, cost $12 million and grossed $125 million. It made Douglas a hot ticket in films and resulted in the $20 million sequel, "Jewel of the Nile."

Richard Attenborough's "A Chorus Line," in which he worked at a reduced salary and was billed alphabetically, was a different project for him.

"It was...far removed from the 'sensitive young men' I had been accustomed to playing," he said in an interview. "Here was a character who lived for art and for life, so obsessed with his own creative vision that he was not sensitive to others who shared the creative process."

He was the only name actor in the cast. "But you pays for what you gets," he said, smilingly. "I enjoyed doing the movie, but I told them, 'Don't come to me for promotion.'

"It's like what happened to my father years ago. A friend asked him to do a one-day cameo in a movie, and Kirk said, 'Sure, I'll do it for nothing.' But when the friend wanted to bill Kirk along with the other stars, he said, 'That'll cost $100,000.' The man said, '$100,000 for one day's work?' Kirk reasoned that was what his name was worth."

So Douglas was in Los Angeles to talk mostly about "Jewel of the Nile," which he made in Morocco and the French Riviera with co-stars Kathleen Turner and Danny DeVito. Lewis Teague directed.

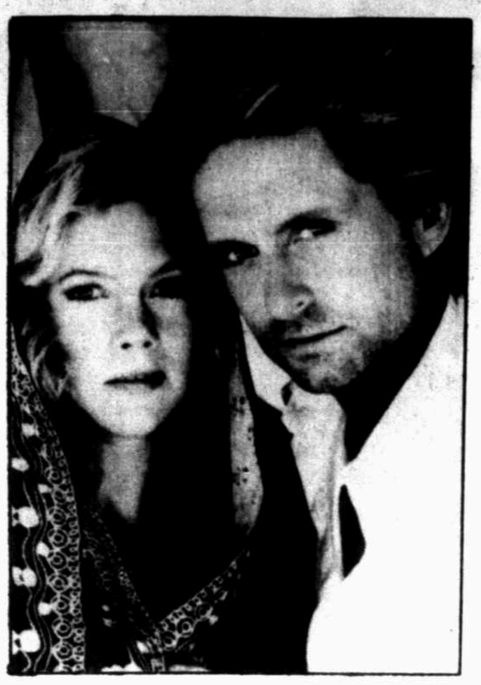
He had just flown from London with a print that was virtually still wet.

"Usually my films take four or five years to get made," he remarked. "Last year in August, Fox decided they wanted a sequel. I found the writers (Lawrence Konner, Mark Rosenthal), worked up an idea, got a first draft. In September, I moved my family to New York and started 'A Chorus Line' in October.

"Fortunately, I had an office upstairs in the Mark Hellinger Theater, where we were shooting, and I was able to prepare 'Jewel' there. At the end of January, I worked all night to finish 'Chorus Line,' then took a morning flight to Morocco. We started filming in April and finished in July for a Christmas release. Right now I'm on automatic."

"I owe everything to the series ("Streets of San Francisco" with Karl Malden) I learned about producing, and I learned a lot about acting. Karl was really supportive. Usually the second lead in a series is the guy who is two steps behind the star and slightly out of focus. Karl made me a real partner.

— Michael Douglas



Actor-producer Michael Douglas appears with Kathleen Turner in "Jewel of the Nile," a sequel to "Romancing the Stone," in which he again portrays Jack Colton, dashing soldier of fortune. He also stars in "A Chorus Line," playing the role of Zach, the hard-driving director.

AP Laserphoto

The Mexico shooting of "Romancing the Stone" was beset with problems. "But compared to Morocco, Mexico was a womb, a warm, comfortable womb," said the producer-star. Heat, bureaucracy and logistics made "Jewel of the Nile" extremely troublesome.

He was born Sept. 25, 1945, the first son of Kirk Douglas and English actress Diana Dill. The couple divorced six years later. Michael grew up in New York with his mother, often spending summers on his father's film locations. At the University of California in Santa Barbara, he was a part of the radicalism of the 1960s. Then he settled down to his father's profession.

After a few "sensitive young man" roles in failed movies, Douglas found himself drifting into guest roles in "The FBI," "Medical Center" and other episodic series. That's when he took the role of second banana to Karl Malden in "The Streets of San Francisco."

"I owe everything to the series," Douglas said. "I learned about producing, and I learned a lot about acting. Karl was really supportive. Usually the second lead in a series is the guy who is two steps behind the star and slightly out of focus. Karl made me a real partner.

"Karl and (producer) Quinn Martin gave me shows of my own and also let me direct a couple. When you're making a 52-minute movie in six days, you learn fast."

Douglas remains close to his father, whom he affectionately calls "the crazy Ukrainian."

"I learned a lot from Kirk," he said, "but the biggest advice he gave me was how to live a normal life in a crazy world. He has been able to do that, and I'm trying, too."

Will there be a sequel to "Jewel in the Nile"?

"I don't really know. When we were making 'Romancing the Stone,' we had no idea that it would lead to another movie. If 'Jewel of the Nile' makes a lot of money, well..."

Author sinks teeth into provocative vampire books

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The problem with most books about vampires, says author Anne Rice, is they have the wrong outlook.

"Everything I had ever seen focused on the victim, not the vampire, and he was the interesting one," said the author whose latest book is "The Vampire Lestat" (Alfred A. Knopf, $17.95).

"I had never read a vampire book or seen a vampire movie that satisfied me," she said. "The surface hadn't been scratched."

In "The Vampire Lestat" and her 1976 best seller "Interview With the Vampire," Rice lets the reader look through the vampire's glowing eyes at a world populated with tasty humans and his fellow creatures of the night. The tales explore the personalities of vampires, depicting them as immortals with a good deal of mortal emotion.

Rice discards much of the old vampire myth in her books. A stake through the heart won't kill a sleeping bloodsucker and crosses or garlic draw scorn, not fear, from her protagonists.

"I wanted to write a new mythology," Rice said. "Bram Stoker wrote his own when he wrote 'Dracula.' He researched the old legends in Eastern Europe and then chose what portions of that he would use in his book. I did the same thing."

In her books, Rice said, she tries "to really envision an immortal mind." In other works, "the concept of the immortal is really boring....They're usually looking for a lost love. I think that if these creatures really could live forever, or even for a couple of centuries, they would have to have something on their minds other than a lost love."

For Rice's vampires, the search is for a meaning to existence. "If a person was immortal, then sooner or later that person would have to meet those questions," she said.

The vampires' search will continue. Rice already is planning a third book in what she calls "The Chronicles of the Vampires." Some characters, such as the mournful master vampire Armand and the boy who conducted the interview in her first book, will reappear.

Her first vampire book grew from a short story she had written one night. The attraction to that subject was the idea of writing from the viewpoint of someone who was immortal. Once she began writing about vampires, the subject kept presenting new avenues for her.

"I want to take it as far as I can go with it," she said. "I'm very excited about it."

First, however, she has completed her research and is writing a book on witchcraft.

Rice said she no longer fears being stereotyped as a horror writer because readers understand the deeper messages in her books.

"There's no reason why a horror novel can't be as interesting and as deep and as unlimited as any other kind of novel," she said. "I feel that the whole genre has a great deal of potential."

"Interview With the Vampire" sold particularly well in paperback and threw Rice into the spotlight. "The Vampire Lestat" recently appeared on The New York Times' hardcover best-seller list and soon will be made into a movie. Rice wrote "The Feast of All Saints" and "Cry to Heaven" under her own name and other works under two pseudonyms — Anne Rampling and A.N. Roquelare. The Roquelare books are a trilogy of erotica Rice calls "very strong stuff" and the Rampling name recently appeared on a contemporary novel entitled "Exit to Eden."

Using the pseudonyms is like writing with different voices. "They're like other personalities of mine," she said.

Sixties hits move to video on 'Deja View'

NEW YORK (AP) — Music video mania meets nostalgia this month in "Deja View," a syndicated one-hour special with John Sebastian, the former Lovin' Spoonful lead singer, as host.

The program will be broadcast by 100 stations within a three-week period starting Saturday. A similar show is planned for March. Sebastian, now 41, was with the Lovin' Spoonful from 1965 to 1969, and in the Mugwumps and the Even Dozen Jug Band before that.

In the show, new music videos are created to follow the stories, moods and emotions of 1960s hits, utilizing some oldie-but-goodie faces whose careers recently have been dormant.

For example, Sly Stone will be featured in a music video for the 1960s hit "Everyday People" by Sly and the Family Stone. In another, Brian Wilson of the Beach Boys has a starring role reprising the group's "Don't Worry Baby."

Producers of "Deja View" went to directors who usually had a song choice on the tips of their tongues. David Hogan, director of more than 50 videos, said he'd always wanted to do Procol Harum's "Whiter Shade of Pale."

Eric Laneuville, actor-director from NBC's "St. Elsewhere," chose "Good Lovin'" the Rascals' blockbuster single, with its "Doctor, help me please" lyric. He shot the music video on the "St. Elsewhere" set and it starred one-time Rascal Felix Cavaliere, along with Ed Begley Jr. and Stephen Furst of you know what show.

Graham Nash, who went from the Hollies to Crosby, Stills, Nash & Young, is featured in the video of the Hollies' "Bus Stop." He also sings one of his group's hits, "Our House," on the "live" part of the show, performed and taped at the Pasadena Playhouse in California.

Later, Sebastian and Nash join for a Lovin' Spoonful hit, "Rain on the Roof." Ronnie Spector also sings a medley of the Ronettes' hits at the Pasadena show.

"I feel like 'Deja View' is catching us at the right time," Sebastian said. "It doesn't have to be captured with a lot of false smiles for a TV thing." If the December and March shows do well, there may be more "Deja View" next season, he added.

Sebastian, who has a 14-year-old son, said teen-agers may be interested in "Deja View," as well as their parents. "My son quizzed me on a Four Tops tune I knew pre-dated him," Sebastian said. "He heard it on the 'Big Chill' soundtrack. Another song he asked about he'd heard when a friend played his father's tapes. Modern children tire of their own music — I know I did — and begin to search for whatever else appeals to them."

Sebastian, who hasn't put out a record since 1977, still writes songs and performs at about 100 concerts a year. Sometimes he appears with the rock group NRBQ. He has written music for the films "You're a Big Boy Now," "What's Up Tiger Lily?" and "The Care Bears Movie" and for a "Doonesbury" TV special and the 1970s TV series "Welcome Back, Kotter."

In 1975, he left California for rural New York. "I sensed a severe shift in the wind, with Alice Cooper being the most fascinating thing to the record company I was with at the time. I said, 'You may not be in the studio for a while, better put yourself where your concert audience is.' I put myself in upstate New York. That has been the case, but I recently did a Western tour swing and every room sold out. That was a pleasant surprise, gave me a feeling I might have a wider sphere of fandom."

"Deja View" comes at a time when cable's MTV is popular with young viewers and is credited with helping stimulate the music business.

"The passage of time is so interesting," said Sebastian. "It can be frustrating and devastating. But there are points at which you say, 'I've suddenly become more popular because of the passage of time.' If you're willing to sit there and be wildly unfashionable for long enough, you suddenly find yourself back in the swim."

Country singers ring in folksy holiday mood

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — More than a dozen country performers have albums out with traditional Christmas songs and some new Yule tunes featuring an occasional country lick for folksy flavor.

At no other time of the year do differences between country and rock seem greater than during the holiday season.

"It's a little incongruous to think about a Christmas album by Twisted Sister," says Ed Benson, associate executive director of the Country Music Association. "It's more likely to come from someone like Barbara Mandrell or the Statlers."

Record promoter Lee Stoller of Nashville says country artists have a wider appeal. "Country artists are more family oriented. They relate more to family and values of Christmas. The young rock scene is not quite in to family," he said.

Mike Hyland, an 18-year veteran of the music business, says there is a radio market for Christmas music by country singers but not for their rock 'n' roll counterparts. "Christmas music doesn't fit the formats of rock stations," said Hyland, a publicist who worked for four record companies.

Rock formats are too structured, he said. "But a country music station will go on play a song by a country artist in early December. Country stations look forward to a Christmas song."

Back on the shelves for the second season is "Once Upon a Christmas" by Dolly Parton and Kenny Rogers. The album, which sold more than 1 million copies last year, includes five original compositions by Miss Parton plus such standards as "White Christmas," "Silent Night" and "Winter Wonderland/Sleigh Ride."

The duo also starred in 1984 in a TV special, "Kenny and Dolly: A Christmas to Remember."

The record was their first album together and their first collaboration since their hit duet in 1983, "Islands in the Stream."

"I was raised in a Baptist family and I've always thought of Christmas as a special time, a time when families who might be apart the rest of the year can come close together again," said Rogers.

Brenda Lee's "Rockin' Around the Christmas Tree," although not a country song, has been a traditional holiday favorite and has sold 7 million copies since becoming popular in the early 1960s.

"I get requests for it year round," says Miss Lee, whose current singing style is country-flavored.

Alabama's "Alabama Christmas" is the seventh album for the four-piece band that has racked up 18 straight No. 1 singles.

"It's some of the best work they've done," says producer Harold Shedd.

The album is designed as a Christmas card from the group. The front is red with gold embossed "Alabama Christmas." It opens to a gatefold center displaying the lyrics plus candid Christmas shots of the four. A new single to be released from the album is "Joseph and Mary's Boy."

Veteran country star Conway Twitty, who has had 50 No. 1 hits over a career that has stretched almost 30 years, said his 1983 album, "Merry Twistmas," ranks as the best project he has ever done.

"It took us nine months with technical ventures you can't imagine," he said. "Its 54 minutes long but it's like a 54-minute single."

The record is a storybook album. The jacket opens and includes a drawing of a Christmas village with a snowman, sleigh, reindeer and other holiday items.

"For kids, it's like watching for an hour as well as listening," Twitty said. "I'm prouder of that project than anything."

He has been negotiating to make an animated TV special based on the album.

His entertainment complex north of Nashville, Twitty City, is elaborately decorated every December in Christmas motif. Last year 100,000 people visited the complex during the year-end holidays.

Cristy Lane also has a Christmas album out. Called "Christmas Is the Man From Galilee," it contains 21 songs, most of them standard holiday tunes.

All of the holiday albums preserve the country sound.

The Statlers used a steel guitar on their album this year, "Christmas Present." So did B.J. Thomas on his "All Is Calm, All Is Bright."

Some other Christmas albums by country stars include: "Christmas," by the Oak Ridge Boys; "A Gatlin Family Christmas," by Larry Gatlin and the Gatlin Brothers.

Can world's desert populations be fed on algae, duckweed?

By DAVID NORDELL

SDE BOKER, Israel (AP) — Slimy green algae and duckweed growing on brackish ponds in the northern Negev Desert may help solve the increasing hunger of the world's desert populations, Israeli researchers say.

The algae ponds are among several hundred projects at the Desert Research Institute here, where scientists are trying to make arid lands more livable. In addition to their algae and duckweed projects, they are developing mud houses, advanced greenhouses and animal hybrids to provide meat and milk more efficiently.

The United Nations estimates that as many as 35 million people are severely short of food in African desert areas alone.

Another pond crop being tested for desert agriculture is duckweed, which plant physiologist Reuven Kopel says is perfect for deserts because it needs very little water. It grows at a rate of about 10 percent a day, and can be harvested easily.

Algae is green scum that people scrape off swimming pools and boat bottoms. But to algae specialist Avigad Vonschak, the world's 20,000 species of algae have huge potential for the desert people.

Algae can yield up to 70 percent protein, in contrast to 25 percent in soya beans, Vonschak said, and many can be grown in man-made desert ponds or even seawater.

"Algae also reproduce very fast, with one cell able to reproduce every three hours, and you can reap them all year round," he said.

Some African and South American villagers collect algae straight out of ponds for food. But to get the best use of vitamin or protein content, the algae should be farmed, dried and processed, the researchers say.

Spirulina algae, for example, is sold as a green powder or in pill form in health food shops as a protein additive for vegetarian diets.

With Sde Boker's know-how, Vonschak said, several nearby kibbutzim, or collective farms, are supplying a growing part of the world spirulina market of about 1,000 tons a year.

Not all algae are suitable for food. Other species, some grown in the nearby Dead Sea, produce raw materials for dyes and pharmaceuticals.

Another pond crop being tested for desert agriculture is duckweed, which plant physiologist Reuven Kopel says is perfect for deserts because it needs very little water. It grows at a rate of about 10 percent a day, and can be harvested easily.

Duckweed, which looks like clover leaves and is tasteless, can be cooked or used in salads. It is nutritious and about 30 percent of its dry weight is protein, more than most plants.

Next to the ponds, Kopel and his colleagues are developing high-technology methods to take advantage of the desert's abundant sunlight to produce high-value crops like house plants and pistachio trees.

Crops growing in fields can't grow to their optimum because the carbon dioxide is at what Kopel calls "starvation levels for many plants."

By boosting carbon dioxide levels in a greenhouse to about four times higher than normal, he has succeeded in increasing by half the yield of vegetables, fruit trees and house plants, while using about 1 percent of the water needed in open fields.

Ethiopian state on front line of two wars

By DAVID CRARY

KEREN, Ethiopia (AP) — From the air, Keren looks like a peaceful oasis in the desolate mountains of northern Ethiopia's Eritrea region. But it is on the front lines of two wars.

In one conflict, the government has massed thousands of troops in Keren, supported by scores of trucks and tanks. It is a main base for what is believed to be one of the most intense and successful offensives against secessionist Eritrean guerrillas since the rebellion began 23 years ago.

In the other war, fought with bags of grain and cans of milk, a few relief agencies are cautiously trying to extend their fight against famine into contested areas of Eritrea where the government earlier balked at letting food in.

Hundreds of thousands of people in famine-hit areas of northern and western Eritrea are believed to have been unable to receive substantive food aid in the past year, and there is no firm guess as to how many of them will be reached by the new program.

To the combatants, a Roman Catholic priest here said, "the area is more important than the people."

The priest, the Rev. Kiflemarian Fadega, told visiting relief officials that the land had been parched by years of drought, badly eroded by infrequent rains and turned into near desert.

AS HE SPOKE, wind swirled dust around his listeners sitting in the half-open colonnade of a school in this central Eritrean town of 50,000 people.

"Our people became helpless, hopeless and forgotten," he said. "Every frontier should be opened for the fair and just distribution of food."

Some of those frontiers are starting to open a bit under a program called the Northern Initiative. The U.S.-based World Vision and the Catholic Relief Services are trying to distribute food donated by the United States in areas at the fringe of Ethiopian army control in Eritrea and in neighboring Tigre region, where a separate group has been fighting for autonomy for 10 years.

Also, the International Committee of the Red Cross and Ethiopia's Relief and Rehabilitation Commission have begun distributing food in Barentu, 125 miles southwest of Keren, which the Eritrean People's Liberation Front guerrillas had captured in early July and held against several army assaults until late August.

Relief officials say the battle for Barentu delayed implementation of the Northern Initiative and they are resurveying the region to determine where the needy people are and what operations are feasible.

They do not expect to take their food beyond army lines, but they say the government will allow people from rebel-controlled areas to travel to front-line feeding centers without interference.

"YOU GO as far as you can, you get the word out and people come in," said Frank Carlin, director of Catholic Relief Services in Ethiopia.

According to Western sources who spoke only on condition of anonymity, the army has followed its recapture of Barentu with a vigorous pursuit of the rebels toward Sudan's border and then up and down the frontier.

The rebels, who espouse a Marxist ideology as does the government, lost the border town of Tesani during this push, the Western sources said.

On Sept. 24, Mengistu Haile Mariam, leader of the Ethiopian government, visited Barentu, Tefani and other towns in the area of the army sweep, according to the official Ethiopian news agency. It said he was told that the army "after crushing the anti-unity and anti-revolutionary bands is now engaged in rebuilding the local economy."

A Relief and Rehabilitation Commission representative, Getaneh Argau, described the offensive as the army's biggest success in 20 years and said the rebellion could be largely suppressed in three or four months.

But a quick end to the war seems unlikely because of Eritrea's rugged terrain.

The signs of war are abundant even in Asmara, the Mediterranean-style capital of Eritrea and, with 275,000 people, Ethiopia's second biggest city.

A ROMAN Catholic priest in Asmara who goes only by the name Father Paulos said the combined effects of war and drought have broken up many Eritrean families and left many children abandoned.

"The psychological effect on children is horrendous," he said. "For many of them the future is very bleak."

Oregon man wants driftwood museum

BANDON, Or. (AP) — Bill Magness stepped carefully around the gnarled and weathered pieces of redwood burl, bubbly maple and quilted fir that crowded the dimly lit shed.

"If I kick the bucket, this wood will be scattered around, and there isn't any more," he said.

"They grow new people all the time," he said, "but they don't grow any more good driftwood" — at least not since the area timber industry has diminished.

"I have to consider the fact of who is going to do this if I don't get it done," he added. "I don't have any family interested in it or who knows anything about it or cares about it. I've just turned 74 and I've had four heart attacks."

Before he dies, Magness wants to see his driftwood collection preserved in a museum.

He started collecting 25 years ago when he left the timber business around Roseburg and moved to the southern Oregon coast to cross rhododendrons with the native azalea. The hybrids didn't pan out, but the beachcombing did.

Now, he's having trouble coming up with a place for his museum.

"There's a good building downtown, but the guy wants $350,000 for it," Magness said. "It's just not available to me. But I buy a lottery ticket every now and then."

"I was the only one collecting it," he said of the driftwood that fills his house, yard and a shed where cabinetmaker Mike Smith turns some of it into finely crafted furniture. "The beachcombers collected it just to sell to me. I never bargained with the beachcombers. That way I'd get first crack at the good pieces."

Bandon is located in a natural scoop formed by Cape Arago that grabs things out of the Pacific Ocean as storms drive through from the south and west. But the good pieces just aren't washing up on the beach the way they used to, says Magness.

Hard times hit the timber economy that built Oregon's south coast, forcing many of the mills to shut and drying up the sources of much of the driftwood.

Magness learned to value things others threw away while growing up poor in Dayton, a Willamette Valley farming town.

"When we picked potatoes, they always left the little ones for us to take home," he said. "They made better eating than the big ones anyway."

Some of his collection is stored with friends, including a piece he turned down $3,500 for about 10 years ago.

The driftwood is inside his house, too. A star-shaped pattern of white cedar root leans against a wall, near a pile of redwood planks with a quilted grain drying on the living room floor.

Magness divides people into two kinds. The upper 10 percent, who appreciate really fine wood, and the lower 90 percent, who don't.

"You can tell someone who really loves wood," he said. "They'll move their hand right up to it like they're going to touch it, then stop just short."

I must think it over!

That's what my parents said when I asked if I could go to Eddie's Sunday School.

You see, there are lots of churches in town. And my parents haven't decided which one we ought to attend. These are important decisions. They take time!

But that doesn't make Sunday mornings much fun. With all my friends at church, there's nobody to play with except that bully up the street. And Dad and Mother say I shouldn't play with him.

That's funny! How come parents can decide what kind of boys we should play with, but they can't decide what church we should attend?

Seems to me that going to church next Sunday might help us all decide.

The Choristers of Holy Trinity Episcopal Church, Illinois Avenue and H Street, will present the third annual Candlelight Carol Service at 7:30 p.m. Sunday.

The Ritual of Light, symbolizing Christ's birth and spreading his light to all mankind, will conclude the Candlelight Carol Service.

The instrumental prelude will begin 30 minutes before the service begins. Familiar hymns and carols will also be sing by the choirs and congregation during the service.

The public is invited to attend.

Missionary blasts Baptists

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A Southern Baptist medical missionary says the denomination's "million dollar fad" in America is to build big buildings — "Christian country clubs" — while giving "crumbs from the table" to work among the needy.

Sam Cannata, assigned to Africa and temporarily a missionary-in-residence at Baylor University, told a convention of Texas Baptist men that Southern Baptists are middle- to upper-middle-class Americans who have isolated themselves from the poor.

Although churches need buildings, he said, "we've gone overboard," providing all sorts of facilities — family life centers, bowling alleys, saunas and gymasiums.

Baptists still in ferment after convention

RELIGION

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

That vast midsummer collision among Southern Baptists still is reverberating, the fallout including a threatened lawsuit, charges of "heresy" and proposed bylaw changes.

All the while, a peace committee has pleaded for quiet restraint, and to a degree, has obtained it, except for signs of the underlying ferment that keep cropping up.

The banked tensions stem from last June's convention in Dallas at which the president, the Rev. Charles Stanley, overruled a majority vote of the record-size convention of 45,000.

He ruled the result out-of-order and void, even though he himself earlier had ordered the ballot to clarify an uncertain standing vote.

In a denomination that prides itself on democracy, the one-man squelching of the majority has fueled a running controversy, with a Georgia couple threatening a lawsuit unless the procedure is nullified.

But the denomination's executive committee refused to do that, deciding to affirm the challenged proceedings despite, it said, "whatever mistakes may have occurred."

Robert S. Crowder of Birmingham, who with his wife had retained an attorney to press the matter, said he was "heartbroken" that the committee failed its "duty and responsibility" in the matter.

His attorney, Emmit J. Bondurant of Atlanta, contended that convention "messengers" clearly had the "power to amend" any report, but "were thwarted in their effort to do so" by chair rulings.

Southern Baptist bylaws were "run roughshod over" by the "arbitrary and...fundamentally illegal and unfair rulings" by Stanley, the attorney contended in presenting Crowder's plea to the executive committee.

Bondurant said the denomination's "representative form of government...depends upon the integrity of the procedures guaranteeing" majority rule, but it "was denied the messengers of the Dallas convention."

The partisan conflict in the 14 million-member denomination, the largest in American Protestantism, involves a drive by a resurgent fundamentalist wing, charging liberalism in denominational institutions, to achieve control.

In the controversial vote, a majority held that the convention could substitute an entire slate for a committee, chosen through presidential appointive powers, that picks trustees overseeing agencies and institutions.

Stanley, earlier re-elected as the fundamentalist incumbent, had submitted the issue to to a ballot, but when the result was announced, ruled it out-of-order, backed by his parliamentarian, refusing to recognize floor objections.

However, the denomination's executive committee rebuffed Crowder's protest to the procedures, affirming them and declaring its own decision "makes all procedural defects moot, if any occurred."

At the same time, a proposal to revise a key bylaw 16 to specify that alternate nominations can be made from the floor was expected to be presented at the next executive committee meeting in February.

Meanwhile, the Rev. Robison B. James, a religion professor at the University of Richmond, affiliated with Virginia Southern Baptists, accused the increasingly dominant fundamentalists of heresy.

By their insistence on belief that the Bible is scientifically and historically without error, he says they consider their "inerrantist view of the Bible as supreme over the Bible," rather than submitting directly to it.

This is "the Baptist heresy," James says, violating the historic, noncreedal freedom of Baptists "to respond in trustful submission directly to the Bible, and directly to Christ," without institutional regulations of it.

James, a one-time pastor and four-term Virginia legislator, says the fundamentalists replace the authority of the Bible with the authority of the "inerrancy creed," and force the Bible to conform to that creed.

Writing in the November issue of SBC Today, a national, independent Southern Baptist journal, he says fundamentalist forces want to purge denominational personnel of those not submitting to the "inerrantist view."

They are targets of "intimidation, suspicion or removal," he says.

While Baptists shun the word "heresy," he said he uses it because it has been dragged in "by the back door" by a fundamentalist drive that presents a "clear and present danger" to the non-creedal Baptist heritage.

He distinguishes between efforts to require the "inerrantist view" of others, and the fully acceptable "spontaneous" view that the Bible is without error, as freely held by many devout Baptists.

However, he says the "militant type" of inerrantist won't "allow the Bible, as God has given it, to challenge or call into question his inerrancy belief" since the Bible itself is not his "operative authority."

"Rather, his creedal belief in inerrancy is the final arbiter of what the biblical message shall be," James says. "He is not about to let God have any alternative in the matter."

James says that to impose such a "rigid scheme" of viewpoint on the Bible turns it into a "a kind of frozen gridlock" of set limits and preconceptions, a "human creation, not the Word of God."

Macedonia Baptist presents 'M' night Sunday

Macedonia Baptist Church, 201 S. Carver St., will present its annual "M" Night Service at 6 p.m. Sunday. "M" Night is a special service set aside yearly on the church calendar for motivating church members to become more actively involved in church training.

Special guests for this year's program are Caprice Scott and Carolyn Gilbert. Ms. Scott is a missionary in Kenya, Africa. She is affiliated with Trinity Fellowship, a non-denominational missionary outreach based in Kenya. Along with Ms. Scott's missionary work, she also serves as a teacher in special education for handicapped children in Niarobi, Africa.

Ms. Scott, a native of Ranger, is a graduate of West Texas State University, where she received her bachelor of science degree in special education. She also holds a master's degree from Texas Women's University, Denton.

Ms. Gilbert, a native Midlander, is a member of Greater St. Luke AME Church. She will be speaking on "Exercising Our Spiritual Gifts through Serving." She is the youth supervisor and pianist for the Cherub Choir at her church.

Ms. Gilbert attended Texas Tech University where she received a bachelor of business administration degree and the University of Texas of the Permian Basin where she received a master of business administration. She is employed by Conoco, Inc.

The church's pastor, the Rev. Otis Archie, invites the public to attend this special service, being presented by the church's Training Union Department. Buster Bell is director of the TUD and Myrtle C. Hall is program director.

LDS apostle for 42 years new head of church

SALT LAKE CITY — Ezra Taft Benson, who served as an apostle for 42 years, is the new president of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the 13th in its 155-year history.

Benson, 86, succeeds Spencer W. Kimball, who died Nov. 5, at the age of 90. Named as Benson's counselors were Gordon B. Hinckley, 75, first counselor, and Thomas S. Monson, 58, second counselor.

The three members of the First Presidency have long years of service in the church. Benson, who was ordained an apostle on Oct. 7, 1943, previously was president of the Council of the Twelve. Hinckley served more than four years as a counselor to Kimball, responsible for directing the day-to-day administration of the church after Kimball's health failed. Monson, who became a member of the Twelve at age 36, has had top leadership positions in many areas of church administration.

At a press conference, Benson expressed his feelings concerning his new call.

"This is a day I have not anticipated. Now that the Lord has spoken we will do our best, under His guiding direction, to move the work forward in the earth. My heart has been filled with an overwhelming love and compassion for all of our Heavenly Father's children everywhere. I love all our Father's children of every color, creed, and political persuasion."

Benson said the church "shall continue to stress the importance of strong Christian homes and family life. We feel the increasing necessity for parents to teach their children to live the principles of the gospel as revealed in the Bible, the Book of Mormon and other sacred scriptures."

Rashad sets wedding dateon TV

NEW YORK (AP) — Ahmad Rashad, the football broadcaster who proposed to actress Phylicia Ayers-Allen on one television network, announced the wedding date Friday on another.

Rashad had proposed to Miss Ayers-Allen during a pre-game program on NBC on Thanksgiving Day from Pontiac, Mich., where the New York Jets were playing the Detrit Lions.

Miss Ayers-Allen, who plays the wife of Bill Cosby in "The Cosby Show" on NBC, had appeared in the network's coverage of the Thanksgiving Day parade in New York earlier in the day. She said yes from an NBC studio in New York at halftime.

On Friday, the couple appeared on ABC's "Good Morning America" program. Urged by an interviewer to use television again to announce when they will wed, Miss Ayers-Allen demurred, but Rashad, a former wide receiver with the Minnesota Vikings, grabbed the ball and ran with it. "Jan. 18," he said.

Soul

PITTSBURGH (AP) — No sentencing date has been set for actor David Soul and three others convicted of disorderly conduct and failure to disperse in connection with a protest at a church.

Soul, best known for his role in the old "Starsky and Hutch" television show, defrocked minister D. Douglas Roth; and union leaders Darrell Becker and Mike Bonn were found guilty Thursday. No sentencing date has been set.

They face up to a year in prison on the disorderly conduct charge and two years on the other charge.

The four were among 20 demonstrators who tried to enter Shadyside Presbyterian Church on April 7, Easter Sunday, to put scrap iron on the alter in a demonstration meant to symbolize the plight of unemployed steelworkers.

Allegheny County Common Pleas Judge Robert E. Dauer acquitted the group of defiant trespass.

Soul's brother, the Rev. Daniel Solberg, is a minister and activist in the depressed steel-mill area. Roth was defrocked by the Lutheran church for protests against steel companies and major financial institutions in the area.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — "Miami Vice" star Phillip Michael Thomas, Miami Dolphin Coach Don Shula, pop singer Jimmy Buffett and even TV puppet Howdy Doody are calling northern snowbirds to the Sunshine State for a vacation.

They're all part of the State of Florida's new $4.3 million advertising campaign to boost the state with tourists in the rest of the United States, Canada, Europe and Latin America.

The campaign is the first to use the state's new slogan, "We Got It. Florida."

Officials said the new slogan may be bad grammar but it's good business.

"We're confident we're doing the most effective job," said Commerce Department spokesman Warren Henderson. "Grammar is not a top priority."

Pavarotti

MILAN, Italy (AP) — After a two-year absence from Italy's leading opera house, Luciano Pavarotti returns to La Scala today to sing in the opening night production of Giuseppe Verdi's "Aida."

The tenor last appeared at La Scala in 1983 when he drew scattered boos from the gallery when he had difficulty with an aria in "Lucia di Lammermoor."

A full house of 2,200 will attend the opening night of the season, held by tradition on Dec. 7, the feast day of Milan's patron St. Ambrose.

The best seats were priced at the equivalent of $300 each. Gallery seats were sold out in a few hours after hundreds of fans lined up all night outside the theater in downtown Milan.

Krist

ATLANTA (AP) — Gary Steven Krist was never accepted into a Mexican medical school, as the convicted kidnapper whose crime spawned a book and television movie had claimed, a school spokesman says.

Krist wrote to a Georgia parole board member last month saying he had been accepted at the Autonomous University of Guadalajara, adding, "There are still some people who have faith in me."

But Richard Christensen, the school's director of university relations in the United States, said Thursday that Krist had never applied, and would never have been accepted if he had.

Krist was convicted of abducting Barbara Jane Mackle and burying her in a ventilated box for 3½ days in 1968. He had expressed interest in becoming a doctor after being paroled from a Georgia prison in 1979.

A book, "83 Hours Till Dawn," and a television movie were produced about the kidnapping.

"A person who has had a felony record, especially when it involves a crime of moral turpitude, would absolutely never be accepted at this university," Christensen said.

Portrait's $4.07 million price breaks record for American art

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Gallery of Art is "euphoric" over its record $4,070,000 purchase of "Rubens Peale with a Geranium," a masterpiece of early American portraiture.

The painting, by Rembrandt Peale, set a record auction price for a painting by an American artist when it sold Thursday in New York City.

"We're euphoric. As great paintings go, this was worth every bit we paid for it," said John Wilmerding, deputy director of the National Gallery, which has been interested in the work for many years.

Peale, a 19th century painter who lived in Philadelphia, portrayed his bespectacled younger brother with his right hand on a large potted geranium. According to a Peale family story, the plant was the first of its kind brought to America.

The previous auction record for an American painting was Frederic Edwin Church's "Icebergs," which was sold for $2,750,000 at a New York auction in 1979.

"It is a painting that brings together art and science. You really have an image that strikes an American chord that you find in American art after that."

— John Wilmerding, National Gallery of Art

Rembrandt Peale, who also painted portraits of George Washington and Thomas Jefferson, was the son of Charles Willson Peale, a founder of early American art galleries and museums and one of the most influential American painters of his time. The father named many of his children after famous artists.

"Rubens Peale with a Geranium," painted in 1801 when the artist was 23 and the subject 17, was considered "one of most important American paintings in private hands today," according to Sotheby's, the auction house.

The painting is "a sensitive and sympathetic portrait...and is considered a masterpiece among the coveted informal works," said John L. Marjon, president of Sotheby's.

Wilmerding said the painting's casual informality made it arguably the first really American portrait. Before 1801, most portraits were formal and English-derived, he said.

"It is a painting that brings together art and science. You really have an image that strikes an American chord that you find in American art after that," Wilmerding said. "It is one of those pictures we'd always hoped would come into a public collection."

Wilmerding said the familial nature of the painting also made it an endearing and quintessential American work.

"Here is Rembrandt painting his brother Rubens, bearing names of European artists the father thought would express ambition and inspiration. There's something touching about that that seems to strike the very chord of the young republic. That's the spirit of America at that very date," he said.

The oil on canvas painting was sold by Mrs. Norman B. Woolworth of New York.

Kennedy Galleries, acting on behalf of the National Gallery, bid $3,700,000 for the picture. Sotheby's charged a 10 percent "buyer's premium," raising the price $370,000.

Money for the purchase came from the Patrons' Permanent Fund, an endowment begun five years ago to acquire art for the Gallery. The fund is now at $53 million. Wilmerding said the Peale painting was the first bought with those funds.

"The first purchase was meant to be a flagship one," he said. "We think this is it."

Microscopes' power magnified with mirror tricks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Using mirrors, spinning disks and other tricks, scientists have found a way to push conventional, light-reflecting microscopes to their limit to see three-dimensional magnifications of objects.

Researchers said the developments allow optical microscopes to look deep into many objects and produce clear images even at the physical limit of resolution of the devices.

Reports published this week in the journal Science said inventions by Czechoslovakian and British scientists have pushed the limits of microscopes that use conventional light to unheard-of power.

An account in the journal called the developments "one of the most important advances in light microscopy for a century."

Alan Boyde of University College, London, said he developed a way of getting stereo images of transparent or translucent materials by using an optical microscope that allows focusing on different layers of a specimen while excluding others.

If adopted more widely, such devices could be used to get high-resolution pictures of living tissue or to look for details in priceless museum specimens or fossils that cannot be cut up for closer examination, Boyde said.

The method is limited mainly by the light-passing properties of the objects being examined, which influence how deeply light can penetrate their surfaces or pass through them entirely, he said.

Electron microscopes and other devices allow higher magnification of objects than optical devices. But using these methods requires special specimen preparation that kills living things or requires that the object of interest be sliced up for below-surface examination.

Boyde said his method is optimized by using a so-called tandem scanning reflected-light microscope invented by Mojmir Petran and Milan Hadravsky of the Charles University of Prague. The device, patented 20 years ago but largely ignored, is ideal for the stereo imaging method, Boyde said.

The microscope allows focusing light into distinct layers of a specimen and having it reflected back into the eyepiece, while filtering out obscuring light from other parts of the specimen.

At the limit of optical resolution using a conventional reflected-light microscope, the image gets blurred out by scattered light and reflections at high magnification.

By selectively excluding light from parts of the specimen under the scope, Boyde said, the new device can record high-resolution sequences of images at different layers of the object.

These layer pictures can be recorded and reconstructed in a series to produce a three-dimensional image of the specimen, he said in his report.

Homes battered as Great Lakes swell to 100-year high

AP Laserphoto

Donna Powell stands in debris from a 25 by 40-foot room of her house in Cedar Grove, Wis., swept away by Lake Michigan.

CEDAR GROVE, Wis. (AP) — Only three years ago, Donna Powell's lawn and beach stretched 150 feet from her house to Lake Michigan. Last month, the lake stole her living room.

The thick, concrete slab where the room stood lies broken and tilted. A wall where the 25- by 40-foot room was torn away has been patched so Ms. Powell, 49, can continue to live in the rented house with the lake lapping a few feet from her door.

"If something isn't done drastically, there will be no homes along here," Ms. Powell said.

Water levels in Lakes Michigan and Huron have swelled to a 100-year high this year and are expected to continue breaking monthly records through April, according to the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

The trouble stems from record rainfalls in the region, up to 50 percent above normal in September and October, coming on top of already high waters in the lakes.

Ms. Powell has attended one meeting at the nearby Town of Holland hall where homeowners, the Corps, the state Department of Natural Resources and the Sheboygan County emergency government office were represented.

She said nothing was resolved.

Ms. Powell, her neighbors and her landlord want a federal declaration of disaster to permit low-interest repair or replacement loans. They also want seawalls to keep the waves back, but better still, they would like the government to lower the lake.

James Smyth, director of emergency government for Sheboygan County, says there can be no disaster declaration under the law until 25 homes in the county are damaged by the high water. He also said at least 40 percent of the damage must be uninsured.

So far, he said, only five or six homes qualify, even though he estimates that high water had caused more than $1 million damage to lakefront homes in the county. He figured at least 300 homes had been damaged.

Dave Roellig of the coastal engineering branch of the Corps of Engineers said the problem is common throughout the Great Lakes.

His office has reports of damaged homes on the western shore of Lake Michigan, in the Ogden Dunes area of Indiana, in the fashionable suburbs north of Chicago and on Lake Superior, as well as the entire Wisconsin shore of the lake, Roellig said.

Lake Michigan's high water caused $35 million in property damage between 1972 and 1976, while the lake rose to 580.2 feet, said Malcolm Todd, chief of the Corps of Engineers' Great Lakes regulation section. Damage throughout the region was $171 million for that period.

Lake Michigan now is at 580.6 feet, but the Corps has no current estimate of high-water damages for the region, Todd said.

"If something isn't done within a year, or at least within the next 10 years, there will be no homes along here," said Ms. Powell, sitting in the kitchen of her two-story frame home, which has been reduced to five rooms.

"I'm very sympathetic to Donna Powell," Smyth said. "but if you spend $5,000 to rip-rap your property, the lake is going to go around and chew up your neighbor's property." Rip-rap is a concrete or boulder barrier to prevent waves from eroding the shoreline.

Rep. James Sensenbrenner, R-Ill., said the Corps had diverted more water through the Chicago sanitary canal at his request. However, lake levels are set by international agreement and lowering the water could require expensive harbor dredging, he said.

"I informed the residents not too much could be done because the lake level is cyclical," he said of meetings he attended with county residents.

The International Joint Commission, a U.S.-Canadian body, sought to ease the problem during the summer by reducing the flow out of Lake Superior. That raised the water level in that lake, but allowed water to fall in lakes Michigan, Huron and St. Clair.

AIDS victim Buck Stuart, 21, sits on a mattress chained in protest to the Old Federal Building in San Francisco.

AIDS victims in vigil begging for federal help

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Three men eased a shivering and gasping Wesley North onto a mattress outside the Old Federal Building as North, a 31-year-old AIDS victim, winced in pain.

Despite doctors' advice, North returned to United Nations Plaza on Thursday on the 37th day of a protest designed to spur the federal government to improve services for victims of acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

North, formerly of Henderson, Texas, wept and held hands with Buck Stuart, 21, an AIDS victim from Mobile, Ala., who has joined North in a fast to dramatize the vigil at the United Nations Plaza by people suffering from AIDS and related illnesses.

"I don't know if it's doing any good, but I thought we would just take it (the vigil) one step farther," North said in a faltering voice in an interview near the building that houses the regional office of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

"I want to be here because that's my wish...I want the government to do something before I die," said North, as nearby church bells muffled the sounds of his crying.

Vigil participants want the federal government and President Reagan to boost annual AIDS research funds from $324 million to $500 million; pass laws forbidding discrmination against AIDS victims; legalize use of drugs outlawed or listed as experimental in the U.S. but used for AIDS victims in other countries; and allow people suffering from AIDS-related diseases to receive federal and state medical benefits.

AIDS is a fatal illness which attacks the body's immune system. Most AIDS victims are male homosexuals.

One day during this week's vigil, three men were chained to the federal building. They rested on mattresses heaped with pillows, stuffed toys, blankets and plastic sheets to keep them warm and dry. Eight tents were pitched on a nearby strip of grass decorated with a Christmas tree, bright balloons and potted flowers.

The protesters said they had endured rain, physical assaults and sexual slurs from passers-by.

Dennis Collins, a gay activist and consultant to San Francisco Board of Supervisors' President John Molinari, said Molinari is sympathetic with the vigil and has asked police to guard the protesters.

Many of the homeless people in the area that borders the seedy Tenderloin District confuse the encampment with a soup kitchen, said David Castagna, 41, one of the men who had chained themselves to doors of the federal building.

Castagna said he cannot receive state or federal aid for medical care because he has AIDS-related ailments, but not AIDS. He said he has no money to pay a $3,600 bill for a seven-day hospital stay.

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services' director of intergovernmental affairs in San Francisco, Bill Adams, said the protesters' requests have been relayed to Washington and that they require Congressional action. "Nothing comes out of here," he said.

U.S. Navy Seabees come to rescue of projects in West African ports

BY ROBERT WELLER

FREETOWN, Sierra Leone (AP) — Vultures peered down from the slaughterhouse roof as a dozen U.S. Navy Seabees broke rocks and mixed concrete with shovels to build a new market for 240 traders in the congested downtown of this West African city.

It's the second year in a row Seabees have worked on a market project here. Others are at work on schools in Togo and Cameroon, clinics and hospital wards in Zaire and Mauritania, and a water system in Equatorial Guinea.

The projects are part of a program called Small Project Assistance, funded by the U.S. Agency for International Development and administered by the U.S. Peace Corps.

The Seabee projects are timed to coincide with the annual training visit of U.S. Navy ships to West African ports.

In this seaside capital, traders, mostly women, line the narrow downtown streets, slowing traffic to a crawl. The new market will put them under one roof and out of the sun.

"We suffer, sir, in the heat," said Fatnata Kargbo, shooing flies as she sold vegetables from the curb nearby. "When the sun is hot it is very difficult for me to sell out in the open."

Mrs. Kargbo added, "The trucks drive on top of us and our wares."

Peace Corps volunteer Michele Boecker, who is supervising the market project, said, "The idea is to clear as many people as possible from the streets, where it will be cleaner."

Boecker, from Norfolk, Va., normally teaches primary school teachers how to teach. She volunteered to oversee the Seabees — her father is a Navy captain.

She greeted Seabee Chief Alberto Garza in Krio, the local pidgin English, with "Ow die bodie?" He replied: "Die bodie fine."

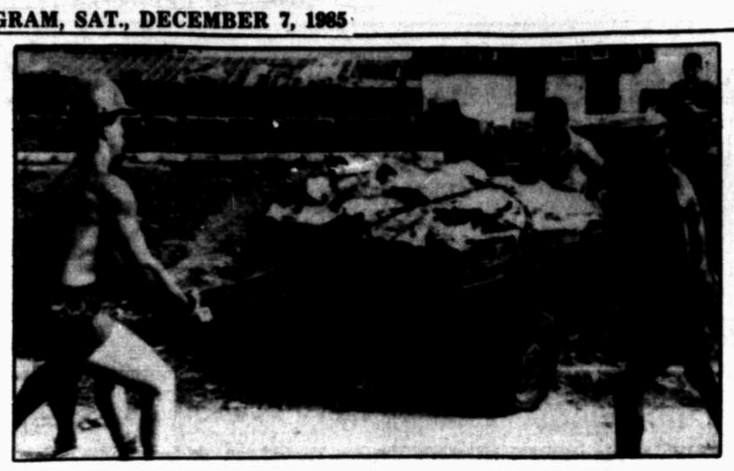
Garza said of the assignment: "We got picked and we volunteered." The men are based in Port Hueneme, Calif.

Here they were put up in a U.S. Embassy house, but they were eating military rations and after 10 hours in the blazing sun "they'll have a couple of beers and go to bed," Garza said.

Before starting, the Seabees toured the market built last year on the outskirts of town. It had a cathedral-like quiet compared to the bustle of the city center.

"I took pictures of them breaking rocks just like on an old chain gang," said Garza. He added his men were used to more technical work.

Workers carrying freshly cut beef from the slaughterhouse kept moving through the construction area, and off to one side other workers burned the skin off slaughtered cows to make a popular food called, conga, whose aroma attracted even more vultures.



An American Seabee, left, helps pull a cart loaded with meat from a slaughterhouse, in the background, in Freetown, Sierra Leone, recently. U.S. Navy Seabees are helping to build a market in Freetown.

Archaeologists bury old theories about Bahrain's city of the dead

By EILEEN ALT POWELL

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Archaeologists are taking a fresh look at the 100,000 earthen burial mounds here that make up the world's largest prehistoric cemetery.

The primitive tombs, some soaring to 30 feet in height, have been slow to yield the secret of who were buried in them starting more than 4,000 years ago.

The prevailing theory until recently was that the island of Bahrain had been a massive "necropolis" for the peoples who lived around the Arabian Gulf. Others had hypothesized that the seafaring Phoenicians built them.

"These old theories are falling," Abdel-Aziz Sowaileh, superintendent of archaeology in Bahrain's Directorate of Archaeology and Museums, said in an interview.

"We have found several ancient settlements in Bahrain, and we now think the tombs were not built by outsiders but by and for Bahrainis," he added.

Corethia Qualls, 33, an archaeology professor from West Chester, Pa., who is working in Bahrain under a Fulbright grant, agrees.

"I suspect that with further exploration we'll find there were enough settlements here to supply all the graves over the period of years they were in use."

Unearthing the secrets of the tombs has proved harder than might be expected, given their vast number.

"The fact is that most of the burial mounds — maybe as many as 90 percent — were already robbed in ancient times," explained Sowaileh. "So we must make our evaluations on fragmentary evidence."

The researchers are analyzing finds from a recent excavation of hundreds of burial mounds southwest of Manama. Two ancient villages in the northwest of the island have undergone further probing.

"We now know that Bahrain in ancient times was a busy trading center, much like it is today," Soweileh said.

The early Bahrainis are believed to have been part of the ancient Dilmun civilization that also may have extended to the Arabian Peninsula.

Burial mounds similar to those here have been found in Oman, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates. While some of these burial fields may predate Bahrain's, none match the quantity.

European and Arab teams have, so far, found enough skeletons, pottery and other artifacts in their excavations in Bahrain to begin piecing together their history.

The tombs appear to have been built over a 2,500-year period from 2300 B.C. to about A.D. 200. Many have yielded more than one skeleton, suggesting that they may have been reused over the years.

Zimbabwe's trash becomes furniture-maker's treasure

By MICHELLE FAUL

HARARE, Zimbabwe (AP) — Bevill Packer jumps up and down on his paper tables and dashes his paper chairs to the floor. They're often stronger than wood, he declares, and they help save trees and energy.

Packer, 70, a retired college lecturer, is a proponent of a craft he developed in the late 1970s and dubbed "appropriate paper-based technology" (APT) — making things out of waste paper.

Today, Packer's products, ranging from tables to toys to bowls to baskets, furnish schools and homes in rural Zimbabwe. His latest product, a paper wheelchair, is being tried out at a home for disabled children. Packer has even used scrap paper to make solar ovens with fronts made of glass collected from junk dealers.

"The beauty of it all is that all APT articles contain at least 99 percent waste paper," Packer said in an interview. Materials to make the items cost virtually nothing, their manufacture provides employment and they promote conservation.

Saving trees is of benefit in Africa, where about 80 percent of the energy is derived from wood. In Zimbabwe, many rural women spend half the day gathering firewood for cooking and deplete the forests in the process.

Three of Packer's wheelchairs, requiring only paper and paste and 12 to 20 hours of labor, have been on trial for a month at Harare's Jairos Jiri Home for Disabled Children.

One is being used by Darlington Zambe, who has spent most of his 6 years lying on beds and floor mats. When he wanted to move, his mother had to carry him.

"The joy that little boy gets from his chair is too wonderful to see," said Packer, who was born in England and has lived in Africa for 45 years, the past 22 in Zimbabwe.

Wilson Ruvhere, manager of the home, said scores of parents with disabled children are eager to acquire a Packer wheelchair since a conventional one made locally costs 400 Zimbabwe dollars ($240) and an imported one around 800 Zimbabwe dollars ($480).

Packer has put no cost on his wheelchairs. He has donated the ones made so far, but he is the only person making them and hopes to train high school students to make them for charity.

Like all APT articles, the wheelchairs are made by pasting together layer upon layer of scrap cardboard and paper. Old shoe boxes, potato bags, cereal cartons and other scraps can be pressed into flat surfaces or rolled to make such items as table legs or wheels.

The only cost is for flour to make the paste and varnish for the finishing. But Packer said craftsmen could make paste from leftovers of Zimbabwe's staple food, a thick porridge made from ground corn.

"We don't buy paint to decorate — that costs money," Packer said. "We use pictures from old magazines, or the colors from the pictures, to make mosaics."

Children's tables are decorated with racing cars, coffee tables are adorned with wildlife scenes and children's chairs are labeled "comrade" or "commander." Other APT items include children's building blocks, hats and baskets.

"The possibilities are endless," said Packer, who with his wife, Joan, runs courses at minimal cost for domestic workers and peasants. The aim is to teach them to make items for their own use and for sale.

Mrs. Packer said one of her domestic workers who took the course earns about $54 a month in her spare time making APT furniture. That's a tidy sum in a country where the minimum monthly wage is $45.

Packer is lobbying to have his craft taught in schools along with woodworking. It's cheaper, argued Mrs. Packer, to take up APT as a vocation than woodworking because it isn't necessary to buy a set of expensive tools.

Twisting route links Russia to Georgia

By ALISON SMALE

ALONG THE GEORGIAN MILITARY HIGHWAY (AP) — Once, this twisting route through the Caucasus Mountains was Russia's only link with the proud and warlike nations beyond that it sought to dominate.

It was a military road traveled by czarist soldiers battling Turkish and Persian invaders or rebellious Georgians. Russian poets like Alexander Pushkin ventured here, enthralled by the towering beauty of the mountains.

As late as 1920 Red Army troops marched through the mountains to crush revolt in then independent Georgia and to secure Bolshevik rule. The Nazis tried and failed to capture the strategic road, gateway to fertile Georgia and Armenia and oil-rich Azerbaijan.

Today, most visitors are like Pushkin, lured by the thrill of soaring some 8,000 feet into the Soviet equivalent of the Alps.

The road, widened and beautified for tourists, harbors none of the dangers of its legends. Mountain men no longer attack the traveler, but merely hinder the progress of cars by herding flocks of sheep along the asphalt. Yet reminders of the past abound.

The Caucasus region is known as the "mountain of languages" for the dozens of dialects and languages still spoken here. In the city of Ordzhonokidze, where the highway ends its 130-mile route from the Georgian capital of Tbilisi, the native North Ossetians speak two distinctly different dialects.

The neighboring Chechens and Ingushes have other tongues and reputedly still bend more to the influence of their Moslem elders than Soviet officials — a reminder that only just over a century ago, a Moslem tribesman known as Imam Shamyl terrorized Russians trying to subdue the Caucasus.

Modernity has impinged since, reducing the importance of the highway, first mentioned as a geographical route in the first century B.C. In 1883, a railway skirting the mountains first linked Tbilisi, Baku and Ordzhonokidze. By the early 1990s, a direct rail link blasted through the mountains will link Georgia and Russia.

The mountain men are tamer now and the ever-adept Georgians, whose penchant for trading dates back centuries, have learned both to preserve their past and flourish under Soviet power.

Half an hour out of Tbilisi, the road comes to Mtskheta, the Georgian capital until the sixth century, and home of the 15th-century Cathedral of the Life-giving Pillar, center of the Georgian Orthodox church. The Church of the Cross, 14 centuries old, is perched on a hill nearby.

Further up the Aragvi River valley, modern Georgia is on show in the fruit orchards and solid two-story stone houses of villages with names like Misaktsieli and Khandos Khevi.

Residents have profited conspicuously from selling fruit at state markets and renting rooms to city dwellers in summer.

'Dangerous instruments' once adorned women's heads

By BOBBIE GRANT

SHERMAN (AP) — As early as 1908, these "dangerous instruments" were being denounced by some segments of the population.

Letters to editors — demanding their removal from streetcars and other public places — poured into newspapers.

Newspaper headlines carried horrifying accounts of blindings and other injuries caused by these "weapons."

And in 1913, laws were passed which forced fashionable women to "reduce the length of, or sheath the points of" these formidable "conceits."

Doris Hayes' eyes sparkled as she lifed one of the "weapons" from her collection — a 16-inch long Victorian hatpin.

"These really were dangerous," she explained. "The huge hats women wore between 1890 and 1914 needed two of the very long hatpins — not only to secure the hat to the elaborate hairdo, but, since they are very heavy, one had to go on each side of the hat to balance the weight. The points stuck out so far, the wearer's head movements endangered everyone around her."

The Sherman collector has more than 500 hatpins in various sizes, colors and practically every material know to man — garnered from "flea markets and antique shops" in Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Missouri, Tennessee, Georgia, Mississippi and Alabama.

"Some people specialize in a certain period but I love them all — so my collection is a mishmash, a confetti collection, really."

Mrs. Hayes said that, according to "The Encyclopedia of Hatpins and Hatpin Holders," researched and published by Lillian Baker of Chanera, Calif., the invention of the pin-making machine made hatpins popular and available. The periods include: Victorian, 1850-1901, marked by Gothic designs in many fabrics; Art Nouveau, 1892-1910, which introduced undulating curves, spirals and flowing lines; Art Deco, 1910-1925, which featured stilted, stylized designs. Hat ornaments, in vogue from 1925-1945 and hatpins used from 1936-1940, called the "Absurd Age," featured animal and insect designs.

The lights in her living room sparkle on hundreds of "brilliants" studding the hatpin heads, soften the mother-of-pearl translucence on others, gild the initialed brass hatpins, glitter from the sequins, fake jewels and dainty filigrees, highlight the ceramics, tortoise shell and bakelight, and shimmer on the faceted crystal heads. Other hatpins boast cameos, beads, straw, metallic ribbons, wood, glass and sea shells.

AP Laserphoto

Doris Hayes shows off her collection of hatpins. The Sherman woman has more than 500 hatpins in various shapes and sizes from across the South.

The pair that launched her collection were found 18 years ago at an estate sale in Sherman. "It was an estate sale for an elderly lady named Hayes, no relation to me. I believe her father had been an undertaker here at one time. These have her initials scrolled on the flat head and are from the late 1800s."

One of her favorites, she said, is a Gibson Girl hatpin, circa 1890. The girl's head is two inches long and is carefully finished and detailed on all sides. "It was a copy from the Gibson Girl illustrations by Charles Dana Gibson — this is taken from the Evelyn Nesbit portrait that was known as 'Girl on a Red Velvet Swing.' These were very popular but are hard to find."

Another favorite, she said, is the "Hiawatha Wooing" set from "probably 1932 — it's a commemorative set." The tall metal hatpin holder originally held two hatpins — one decorated with the head of an Indian man, the other showing the Indian maiden's head. "I found the holder and the man. I'm still looking for the Indian girl."

After buying her first pair of hatpins at the estate sale, she found a few others. "They intrigued me. I had never paid any attention to hatpins but I began reading about them. I love history and do enjoy finding out about them."

Her enthusiasm has infected her mother, two sisters and a sister-in-law, she said.

"Some years ago my mother, sisters and I made a trip to Little Rock to see an aunt of mine. I stopped at every antique store, flea market and junk sale along the way, looking for hatpins. By the time we got home, they were helping me look."

Since then, the four women spend a few days each year on a "girl's trip," ferreting out hatpins.

Mrs. Hayes, her mother, Velma Johnson of Cleburne, and her sisters, Denise Petty of Cleburne and Mary Peacock of Joshua, "just keep adding an extra day on every trip."

"It's a joke in our families that the car spends more time in reverse than going forward because we're always backing up to stop at some place we've missed," Mrs. Hayes laughed.

"Half the fun is haggling over prices or finding a hatpin tucked away and forgotten in a pile of unrelated objects."

Mrs. Hayes' collection — to her knowledge, the only one in Sherman — features hatpins from every era of fashion as well as hatpin holders

Heart transplant patients find temporary home

By CARLA McCLAIN

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — The hardships of making Tucson a temporary home are now over for out-of-town University Medical Center heart transplant patients, who must stay near the hospital, in a strange city, for up to six months during their recovery.

The patients are now assured of a fully stocked and furnished apartment — at no cost if they face financial hardship — under a program just launched by UMC and PF West, a Tucson apartment-building company.

Called "Lease-on-Life," the program offers a free apartment in one of PF West's 14 Tucson apartment complexes to patients who cannot afford to set up a second, temporary home here for several months.

"This helps solve one of our biggest non-medical problems as far as our heart-transplant work is concerned," said Dr. Jack G. Copeland, UMC's chief transplant surgeon. "Our patients are probably at the most traumatic period of their lives, and we believe the more we can reduce anxieties of any kind...the more we increase the opportunity for a successful recovery."

Before the PF West offer, financially strapped transplant patients were given minimal financial help from a small fund set up by UMC, and were often forced to stage fund-raising drives here or in their home towns to pay for their Tucson housing.

Usually, there are five to eight people in Tucson from out of town, either waiting for a donor heart to be found or recovering from the transplant surgery, said Janice A. Copeland, heart transplant coordinator for UMC.

The hospital estimates that, during the next year, about 25 patients will be accepted for UMC organ tranplants and about one-third will need financial help for medical and living expenses.

During the recovery period, which can last from three to six months, patients return to the center five days a week for physical therapy, medications and frequent heart biopsies to detect organ rejection, she explained.

The first heart transplant patient to use the new housing arrangement is Patsy Tatum, a 49-year-old mother and secretary from Muskogee, Okla., who received her donor heart Aug. 29, the same day Michael Drummond was given a Jarvik-7 artificial heart at UMC.

After Mrs. Tatum suffered a massive heart attack in early August, her Oklahoma physician told her she had a choice — a heart transplant or death. She spent a week at UMC waiting for the heart, then was discharged to her new apartment three weeks after the transplant surgery.

Leak scene

A horse-drawn cart moves past the guarded gate of the Shiram Foods and Fertilizer Industries factory Friday in New Delhi where a second gas leak occurred two days after the first. Friday's leakage of five tons is reportedly due to a corroded valve in the cooling system. It was controlled in 25 minutes and did not cause any injuries.

Bomb explosion in Belgian court building kills one man, injures two

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — A bomb explosion at a Belgian court building killed a man and injured two other people on Friday, and officials reported other bombings at NATO fuel network facilities in Belgium and France.

The Fighting Communist Cells organization said it and a left-wing French group carried out the NATO bombings.

Officials said they are not excluding that the Fighting Communist Cells might also have been involved in the courthouse blast at Liege, 15 miles east of Brussels. No one claimed responsibility for the explosion inside the 16th century building.

Justice Minister Jean Gol said the man who died in the Liege bombing may have handled the explosive. The blast occurred 80 minutes before about 800 young lawyers and Gol were to attend a meeting there. One person died, Gol said of the Liege explosion, "and he has not yet been identified."

He told reporters, "The investigation does not allow me to say this is the work of the CCC, but it is not excluded." CCC is the acronym of the Fighting Communist Cells' name in French.

About 10 hours earlier, a bomb exploded inside a valve pit of NATO's emergency fuel pipeline network near Oudenaarde. Another bomb damaged the Versailles, France, office of the civilian agency that operates the pipeline system.

The Versailles blast blew out windows and doors at the office of the Central Europe Operating Agency.

The Fighting Communist Cells has claimed responsibility for 20 previous bombings in 14 months, including attacks last December that damaged the same NATO pipeline in five rural Belgian locations.

Police said they found a letter in Brussels signed by the Fighting Communist Cells and the "Internationalist Communist Group in France," claiming responsibility for the fuel network explosions. There was no further identification of the French group.

The Fighting Communist Cells have been previously linked by Belgian authorities to the French Action Directe terrorist organization.

Officials said the letter had been taped to a mail box near the center of the Belgian capital and made no mention of the Liege blast.

The Liege blast severely damaged the downtown justice building. Police said the bomb was placed behind a steel cabinet on the second floor.

To date, police have made no arrests in their investigation of the Fighting Communist Cells.

The NATO pipeline is part of a 3,540-mile network of fuel lines through Belgium, France, West Germany, Luxembourg and the Netherlands.

Eight American tourists embark on two-week visit of Vietnam

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Eight American tourists, including seven Vietnam War veterans, left for Hanoi Friday on a two-week tour of Vietnam.

Although U.S. officials and reporters have been allowed to visit Vietnam with increasing frequency, the Communist nation has been virtually off limits to American tourists.

Greg Kane of Westbury, N.Y., who heads his own business called the Indochina Consulting Group Ltd., said it took him about a year to arrange the trip for seven fellow Americans. The tour, which will include stops at old battlefields, cost $2,953 apiece, including airfare to and from the United States, he said.

He said Vietnamese officials will allow him to bring in groups of 20 American tourists if the initial tour goes well.

"I think the demand is significant among Vietnam war veterans," Kane said. "Some of them are very hostile and don't want to go back, but a very large percentage I talked to are interested."

Kane, the only member of the group who did not serve in Vietnam, was in the U.S. military, but he was stationed on Okinawa during the war.

About 2.7 million Americans fought in Vietnam.

Kane said he also expected interest in Vietnam tours from students and American civilians who spent time in the Southeast Asian country during the war years.

"The potential is enormous but things will go slowly. The main problem is lack of accommodations," Kane said.

WORLD IN BRIEF

U.S.S.R. again refuses to free Hess from prison

BONN, West Germany (AP) — The Soviet Union has again refused to release Nazi Rudolf Hess from Spandau Prison in Berlin, a West German official said Friday.

Hess, 91, one-time deputy of Nazi dictator Adolf Hitler, has been imprisoned since 1947 and is Spandau's last remaining inmate. Sentenced to a life term for war crimes, he is held under a four-power arrangement among the Soviets, Americans, British and French.

Hess reportedly suffers from chronic heart problems. The allied powers say they are willing to free Hess, but the Soviets have insisted he cannot be released.

Theo Waigel, an official of the Christian Socialist Union of Bavaria, told reporters in Bonn on Friday that Vladimir Terebilov, president of the Soviet Union's highest court, rejected any idea of freeing Hess.

Hess was captured after parachuting into Scotland on the night of May 10, 1941. He said he was on a mission to end World War II. He was returned to Germany after the war and sentenced to life imprisonment at the Nuremberg war crimes trials.

Indian men to be hung

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — The Supreme Court on Friday endorsed a state court's decision to publicly hang two people convicted of burning women to death because their marriage dowries were inadequate.

The court, which said the execution should be conducted with "human dignity," made its ruling in reply to a petition by Attorney General J.K. Parasaran, who urged that the execution should not involve "torture, cruelty and indignity" and that the two convicted people should be treated with the "basic human dignity" guaranteed by the constitution.

Those sentenced to death in separate bride killings, Lichma Devi and Jagdish Khatik, were the first people given death sentences in dowry-related crimes.

Each year, hundreds of women are burned to death by their in-laws for not bringing enough dowry in marriage. At least 307 cases of bride burning were reported in New Delhi last year, according to official figures.

Lawmaker's tooth falls out

LONDON (AP) — Business in the House of Commons came to an abrupt halt Friday when a lawmaker's tooth fell out and rolled out of sight under a bench.

Edward Leigh, a member of Parliament from Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative Party, had just begun speaking in a debate on violent crime when the tooth, or part of a tooth, dropped out.

Other lawmakers tried to hide their smiles as a fellow member of Parliament, Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith, joined Leigh in searching for the tooth on the chamber's green carpet. It could not be seen whether the missing tooth was found.

Leigh then apologized: "I am afraid I am having some trouble with my tooth that I visited the dentist with earlier this week. You will have to excuse my speaking style. It might not be as brisk as it normally is."

Separatists kill officer

SAN SEBASTIAN, Spain (AP) — Suspected Basque separatists shot and killed an off-duty paramilitary Civil Guard officer early Friday in a town near this Basque city, police said.

Police said the officer was shot in the town of Mondragon by two men who fired automatic weapons from a passing car. The victim was sitting in his car outside a hospital.

Air Force major believes in his mission

ABILENE (AP) — As a pilot of the B-1 bomber, Air Force Maj. Larry Jordan understands that duty may one day force him to drop nuclear weapons on an enemy of the United States.

And the 39-year-old Kermit native harbors no doubts about his ability to complete the mission.

"Yeah, I'm going to push that button," Jordan said recently as he sat in the snug, instrument-packed confines of the bomber's cockpit at Dyess Air Force Base in Abilene.

"But I'm also going to think about why I'm pushing that button," he said.

Speaking in a soft, slightly drawling voice, Jordan offered a short lesson in the theory of nuclear deterrence, a cornerstone in American foreign policy.

The B-1 bombers — and the B-52 that the B-1 will replace — are a third of the "triad" of land, sea and air-based weapons that comprise the U.S. nuclear strike capability, he said.

The B-1 and the B-52 have strategic positions as the only "air-breathing" part of the triad, he said. "It's the only part that's controlled by a man," after the initial decision to launch.

"If the president wanted to show the national will by launching a B-1, he could pull it back later," Jordan explained. "If they change their minds, they can say, 'C'mon home.'"

But if political necessity calls for the bomb to drop, "That's what I'm supposed to do," Jordan said. "It's my fate or destiny or something."

Since his transfer to Dyess from Edwards Air Force Base in California, the 1969 Texas A&M University graduate has taken advantage of his close proximity to his hometown of Kermit, 45 miles northwest of Odessa.

"Now, I'm getting a chance to go back and re-establish those ties," he said, recalling in particular his 20-year high school class reunion last year.

Diana Hampton, Jordan's accounting teacher while he was a student at the school, remembered Jordan as "someone kind of special."

"At first he thought he didn't have to work," she said, "but then he found that he did and he buckled down for me. He learned some discipline and some facts and that you have to follow instructions."

Despite the accolades, Jordan said the folks back home may have a hard time relating to his job.

"They're too busy fighting the battles of their own little budgets," he said.

A veteran of nearly 100 bombing missions over Southeast Asia, including North Vietnam, Jordan acknowledged his role as a "tool" of politicians.

"The military is the scalpel of the politician," he said. "And if he sees a cancer he can't remove by political means, then he'll take his scalpel and go in and cut it out."

Jordan said the B-52 is "1960 technology. It was designed to do a different mission. It's a high altitude bomber."

A major advantage the B-1 has over the B-52, he said, is that it can fly at high speeds at altitudes of 500 to 1,000 feet, which helps the plane to elude enemy radar scopes.

"We're sitting in 1975 technology now," he said, surveying the cockpit and referring to the plane's original design during the administration of President Jimmy Carter.

Carter killed the B-1 program, deciding the country could save money by concentrating research on a new generation of airplane — the Stealth Bomber, Jordan said.

But designers of the current B-1, called the B-1B after President Reagan revived the program, incorporated much of the Stealth's advanced technology.

"The smooth design — no square corners — that's all a part of what they call Stealth technology," Jordan said.

The plane also features wing sections that mechanically change position and sweep backward, thereby removing the plane's "signature" from enemy radar, he said.

The effect produces an image "like the head of a pin" on a radar screen, he said.

Inside, the plane carries a crew of four: pilot, copilot and offensive and defensive "systems coordinators," he said.

Jordan compared the offensive coordinator to the bombardier on older World War II-model airplanes. "He operates the computer that can release weapons or launch missiles," he said.

"The defense coordinator primarily is charged with keeping us from getting shot down," he said. "He has jammers or electronic transmitters that will send signals to confuse a radar screen. We don't have any guns or what you might call an active defense.

"We just try to hide, and we use electronics to do that."

Jordan called his work on the B-1 project, "the highlight of my career."

He is the plane's only designated flight instructor in the Strategic Air Command — the military command center in Omaha, Neb., that coordinates U.S. air and missile operations.

Maj. Larry Jordan kneels in front of a B-1 bomber at Dyess Air Force Base in Abilene. Jordan, a Kermit native, is the only designated flight instructor for the B-1.

Chicago City Council blames mayor for Bears' loss to Miami

CHICAGO (AP) — It had to be a first in the stormy relationship between Mayor Harold Washington and the city council — an alderman is blaming the mayor for the Chicago Bears' first loss of the season.

The Bears were beaten 38-24 Monday night by the Miami Dolphins in a nationally televised football game, and Alderman Edward R. Vrdolyak introduced a resolution saying that Washington, who attended the Bears' 23-0 loss last year in the National Conference championship game against San Francisco, jinxed the team by attending Monday's game in Miami.

"Give the Bears a break and stay home," the resolution urged Washington. The resolution was sent to the city council's rules committee for debate. The 12-1 Bears, with three games remaining in their regular season, are likely Super Bowl contenders and have clinched the Central Division championship.

Influenza virus infiltrates Alaska

ATLANTA (AP) — The first outbreaks of the U.S. flu season have been reported across Alaska.

The national Centers for Disease Control reported late this week that outbreaks of influenza-like illness developed "in most areas" of Alaska in the last two weeks of November. Six isolates of influenza type A-H3N2, sometimes known as the Philippines flu, were identified in preliminary lab work, the CDC said.

Absence rates of greater than 20 percent have been reported in schools in the Anchorage, Fairbanks and Juneau areas, the Atlanta-based agency said in its weekly report.

Martyred Polish priest's legacy lives on in countrymen's hearts

By CHARLES J. GANS

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — During an all-night prayer vigil at St. Stanislaw Kostka church, Warsaw steelworkers carrying their mill's Solidarity banner led hundreds of worshipers in a procession to the grave of their murdered chaplain.

As dozens of candles flickered in the cool night air, the worshipers prayed before a temporary, cross-shaped Plexiglass tombstone bearing the inscription: "Father Jerzy Popieluszko: Martyr for the faith and fatherland — Oct. 19, 1984."

A year after Popieluszko was kidnapped and brutally murdered by three secret police officers, the legacy of the pro-Solidarity priest remains strong among both supporters of the outlawed free trade union and the country's Roman Catholic clergy.

"For me, Father Jerzy is still alive," said Marek Miechnikowski, a Solidarity activist who was imprisoned during martial law and fired from his job as a bus driver.

"This place means a lot to me...because here freedom flowed and is still flowing," he said, standing amid the crowd gathered in the courtyard of St. Stanislaw's, Popieluszko's twin-spired church in northern Warsaw.

Artists, workers, farmers, students and health service employees have been taking turns in prayer vigils at the church as the anniversary of his death approached.

The 37-year-old priest's grave in the church courtyard is a new national shrine, rivaled only by the Jasna Gora Monastery in the southern city of Czestochowa in terms of the number of pilgrims.

"All that has been happening here in this sanctuary is an unquestioned proof that a religious cult of a martyr began, continues and develops," said the Rev. Antoni Lewek, a professor at Warsaw's Catholic Academy of Theology. "More and more people are convinced that he will be beatified sooner or later."

More than two million people have visited Popielszko's grave, according to church volunteers who register the daily pilgrimages made by parish, factory and school groups from all over Poland.

There have been visitors from 60 countries, including the foreign ministers of Italy and Britain, curious Russians and other Eastern Europeans.

"We saw this church and are very impressed for the rest of our life," an anonymous group of Romanians wrote in broken English in the church's memorial book. "A good man disappeared but we will never forget who Jerzy Popieluszko was and the Polish people."

Last February, a court sentenced four secret police officers — including an Interior Ministry colonel charged with instigating the crime — to prison terms ranging from 14 to 25 years for Popieluszko's murder.

Capt. Grzegorz Piotrowski, now serving a 25-year sentence, testified that he led two lieutenants in the plot because of his frustration at the inability of Communist authorities to silence the bold priest.

"They were attempting to silence him, but it seems that the result was just the opposite," observed Waldemar Chrostowski, Popieluszko's driver, who narrowly escaped death by jumping out of the kidnappers' speeding car near the northern city of Torun.

The priest's murder led to a shakeup in the Interior Ministry and caused strains in church-state relations that continue today. Perhaps the deepest and most long-ranging impact has been on the clergy.

"This martyr's death of a young priest mobilizes them (other priests) for a brave and reasonable attitude in the evangelization of the nation," Lewek said. "He (Popieluszko) used to speak in St. Stanislaw's and those places to which he was invited...but now he is somehow spiritually present and speaks in all of the 10,000 Polish churches."

Every month in more than 900 churches around the country there are special Masses for the Fatherland modeled after the pro-Solidarity masses devised by Popieluszko at St. Stanislaw's in January 1982, a month after the martial law crackdown.

More than 10,000 worshipers pack St. Stanislaw's on the last Sunday of each month for the Mass, which has been continued by Lewek and other priests close to Popieluszko. The service has also spread to Polish Catholic congregations in the United States.

The Polish episcopate and the Solidarity underground press have distributed copies of Popieluszko's sermons about truth, social justice, freedom and the need to defend basic workers' rights.

The church leadership also has created a special pastoral mission for workers headed by Cardinal Henryk Gulbinowicz of Wroclaw, which has led to the establishment of workers' pastoral communities in most Polish dioceses.

"Father Jerzy was the biggest and the best spokesman for the ideals of Solidarity until the day of his death," said a young worker from the steel mill, who asked not to be identified.

Rather than join the thousands expected at an anniversary mass for Popieluszko at St. Stanislaw's Saturday, he said he would light candles on the priest's last route from the highway near Torun where he was kidnapped to the dam on the Vistula River where his bound and gagged body was thrown.

Rand McNally won't add point to map

HAMILTON, Ohio (AP) — Rand McNally & Co. says it will not use an exclamation point at the end of Hamilton, as officials of this city of 63,500 want.

"We couldn't just turn around and say, 'Jolly good, fine, we'll change all our maps,' " said Conroy Erickson, a spokesman at Rand McNally headquarters in Skokie, Ill.

This year's version of Rand McNally's "Places Rated Almanac" ranked Hamilton 202nd on a list of 329 U.S. cities rated for their desirability as places to live.

The designation irked Hamilton officials.

To help boost the city's image, the city and business leaders combined to publish advertisements last month praising "Hamilton!" in out-of-town newspapers and business publications in the hometowns of major corporations that have substantial employment and operations here.

But Erickson said his company would not go along with Hamilton's added exclamation point unless it is officially approved by the Board of Geographic Means.

Poland launches new offensive in information war

By CHARLES J. GANS

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Polish television recently shocked viewers by showing Solidarity supporters outside Poland's U.N. mission in New York shouting "down with Jaruzelski" and carrying placards urging the visiting leader to "go back to Moscow."

The report did not translate the more caustic references to Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski as a "butcher." Viewers, however, did not need to know English to understand the shouts of "Gestapo" or a placard equating a Communist hammer-and-sickle with a Nazi swastika as Jaruzelski's motorcade arrived at the mission.

Although the 15-minute broadcast was intended to discredit the protesters as extremists ignored by New Yorkers during Jaruzelski's September visit, the TV report would have been unimaginable in any other Soviet bloc country.

The broadcast was a striking example of the Communist government's new offensive in an information war with the Solidarity underground press and Polish-language services of Radio Free Europe, the Voice of America and the British Broadcasting Corp.

Unable to enforce a monopoly on information, the government has changed its propaganda tactics. No longer ignoring opposition, the authorities regularly publicize and ridicule Solidarity protest calls and anti-government commentaries on Western radio.

They also have been more forthcoming about economic, environmental and health problems which were often covered up under past governments.

The result approaches, in a limited way, the pluralistic journalism advocated by the Solidarity labor movement during its 16 months of legal existence in 1980-81.

"In the information war it is important who is quicker," government spokesman Jerzy Urban wrote in a foreword to a new book on his weekly news conferences with foreign journalists. "We are the target of a propaganda war in which aggressive methods are employed. Whatever helps to ward off this aggression is a good thing."

Urban, whose news conferences offer a mixture of pure information and sharp attacks on Western press reports, has been a main shaper of the new information policy since Jaruzelski appointed him to his post in August 1981.

In an interview, Urban said several unusual television programs this fall reflected the authorities' growing confidence following October's parliamentary elections in which the government said voters overwhelmingly ignored the Solidarity underground's call for a boycott.

"As our sense of growing support gets higher after the elections this creates certain political premises for conducting a more open cultural and information policy," Urban said.

Recently, state television broadcast excerpts from the film "Shoah," directed by Claude Lanzmann, a French Jew.

The broadcast irked Communist party hardliners, but Urban told the official news agency PAP that Poles should be able to judge for themselves how "unfriendly attitudes" are stirred up in the West, instead of being treated like children who need protection from harmful influences.

Retired justice suffers stroke

WASHINGTON (AP) — Retired Supreme Court Justice Potter Stewart has been hospitalized after apparently suffering a stroke, a Supreme Court spokeswoman said Friday.

Stewart, 70, is at a Dartmouth College hospital in Hanover, N.H., court spokeswoman Toni House said.

Stewart retired from the nation's highest court in 1981, saying he wanted to spend more time with his grandchildren. The Stewarts maintain a home in Sugar Hill, N.H.

Ms. House told reporters that Stewart apparently suffered a stroke "a couple of days ago," but a written statement released by her office made no mention of exactly when Stewart was hospitalized.

The statement also did not mention the word "stroke."

"At this time we are not certain of the specific medical diagnosis, but we are advised his condition is critical," the statement said.

Court officials said Stewart fell ill while at his daughter's home in Putney, Vt.

Upon his retirement, he was succeeded on the high court bench on Sept. 25, 1981 by Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, the first woman to sit on the court.

Stewart was appointed to the Supreme Court by President Dwight D. Eisenhower in 1958. He served for 23 years as a member of the court's center, a "swing vote" known for his keen wit on the bench and his facile writing style.

That style yielded, in a ruling on obscenity, a line that became Stewart's most famous.

Reagan presents Nancy with new spanielnamed Rex

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new presidential pooch, not as large as former top dog Lucky but just as frisky, began roaming the White House halls Friday, a surprise early Christmas gift from President Reagan to his wife Nancy.

Showing no fear of loud noises or strange settings, the year-old, brown and white spaniel, dubbed Rex, strained at the leash held by Mrs. Reagan to board Air Force One for a trip from New York to his new home.

At the top of the airplane's steps, Mrs. Reagan, dressed in a full-length, brown mink coat, cradled the dog in her arms, posing for pictures.

"Haven't named it yet," the president called to reporters as he returned to the White House from an overnight stay in New York, where he had addressed a 30th anniversary dinner for The National Review magazine.

Later, however, the first lady's press secretary, Elaine Crispen, said Mrs. Reagan had named the dog Rex in honor of White House head usher Rex Scouten, who is leaving the White House staff.

"Since Mrs. Reagan is going to be losing a Rex of whom she is very, very fond, this way she will be keeping a Rex in her life," Ms. Crispen said.

The dog replaces Lucky, the 65-pound Bouvier sheep dog that had grown too large for the White House and was taken to the president's ranch in California over Thanksgiving.

Key statistics about the new top dog: male, 16 pounds and probably will not grow much larger, born last Dec. 16, and, most importantly, housebroken and "extremely well-mannered." Lucky sometimes had accidents.

And the dog has good breeding. Known as a King Charles spaniel, it is the brother of a pooch owned by William F. Buckley Jr., editor of The National Review.

The dog got the same guarantee as Reagan's new national security adviser, Vice Adm. John Poindexter: total access to the Oval Office, said presidential spokesman Larry Speakes.

Speakes said Mrs. Reagan visited the Buckleys during the fall and immediately fell in love with their dog. It jumped up in her lap and then stayed at her feet during dinner.

When she returned to the White House "she couldn't stop talking about the dog," Speakes said.

Reagan, knowing that Lucky was soon headed for the ranch, secretly called the Buckleys and discovered that their dog had a brother that could be acquired from a family that breeds the spaniels.

President and Mrs. Reagan are led down the steps of Air Force One at Andrews Air Force Base, Md., Friday by their new dog, a 1-year-old cocker spaniel. The president presented the dog to the first lady during a visit to New York City.

NATION IN BRIEF

Prisoner wins $1,000

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A prison inmate whose hand-drawn entry blank won him a trip to the Sugar Bowl in New Orleans in a contest with 210,000 entries has received $1,000 instead of the excursion.

Larry Correll, a prisoner at the Morgan County Regional Correctional Facility, accepted the cash equivalent of the prize after his entry was plucked from thousands stuffed into the bed of a pickup truck, contest officials said Thursday.

Correll turned the money over to his wife, Naomi Correll, said Russ Bebb, sports editor at The Knoxville Journal who drew Correll's entry.

The Pick 'n' Win contest, sponsored by the Journal, WIVK radio station and WBIR-TV, has offered a $1,000 prize each week for the selected entry that correctly chooses the winners of 15 college football games across the country.

This week's was the final drawing, with a prize of bowl tickets, air fare, and hotel accommodations for two, plus $200 spending money.

Correll is serving a 30-year term at the Wartburg prison for second-degree murder.

Men confronted by guards

PLACERVILLE, Calif. (AP) — Two brothers out riding with a couple of friends on their family's ranch were surprised at gunpoint by airmen guarding a downed military helicopter that the Air Force had not notified the family about.

An Air Force spokesman said Friday the incident was being investigated.

Michael D'Agostini, 17, said he, his brother and two friends went joyriding on the 800-acre ranch in two four-wheel-drive vehicles shortly before midnight on Nov. 23.

More than a half-dozen soldiers with rifles stopped them as they inadvertently neared the helicopter, he said. One airman confronted the group.

"I said, 'Is that gun loaded?' He said, 'You're damned right it is. It's a fully automatic M-16,'" D'Agostini said.

He said he was ordered to turn off his headlights and spotlights and leave the area, despite protests that it was private property.

The helicopter had crashed on the property the day before during a training mission from McClellan Air Force Base in Sacramento, Air Force authorities said.

McClellan spokesman Lt. Col William Shimkus said the Air Force should have alerted the family to the airmen's presence. The Air Force is sending the D'Agostinis a letter of apology and is investigating the incident, he said.

Turtles to fly to Florida

BRIGANTINE, N.J. (AP) — Four subtropical sea turtles, members of an endangered species, will be strapped into reserved seats on a DC-9 aircraft this weekend for a getaway flight to Florida.

The turtles, which washed up on New York's Long Island several weeks ago, were nursed back to health by the Marine Mammal Stranding Center here and are ready for release south of Miami, said center director Bob Schoelkopf.

Most airlines would only give the 10-inch, 4-pound turtles passage in chilly cargo holds that wouldn't have been healthy for the animals, he said.

But Florida Flights Sterling Public Charter had a few open seats on a Sunday flight from Atlantic City International Airport in Pomona, and offered them to the turtles, said Millie Totoro, the airline's director of reservations.

"They are going to travel in the cabin and they are going to be on the seats," she said, adding that the turtles would be in boxes and share a row of seats with a marine center employee. Only the employee will pay for a seat.

Anonymous Santa's gift gives Christmas trees to poor families

SHREVEPORT, La. (AP) — Three-hundred poor families have Christmas trees and tinsel this year, thanks to an anonymous Santa Claus who gave $3,000 to a Shreveport church.

"He knew toy and food projects exist all over the area at Christmas but said he felt like doing something 'frivolous and special' to lift the soul," said Susan Colvin.

Ms. Colvin, director of the Human Resource Center at First United Methodist Church, said she was told that the money was to be spent only on trees and Christmas decorations.

"If the money had been given to us, my first reaction would have been to buy food," she said.

But, said Ms. Colvin, the donor said he had noticed last Christmas that there were no outward signs of the season in the Ledbetter Heights community, a poor, black neighborhood behind the church.

"There's an old proverb that says when a hungry man has two loaves of bread, he should eat one and sell the other to buy hyacinths to feed the soul," she said. "That's what this man has done — he's fed beauty to hungry souls."

"There's an old proverb that says when a hungry man has two loaves of bread, he should eat one and sell the other to buy hyacinths to feed the soul. That's what this man has done — he's fed beauty to hungry souls."

— Susan Colvin,

The $3,000 came in cash, Ed Boyd, the church's minister of outreach, evangelism and mission programs, said Friday. He said he knew the donor but was bound by his promise not to say even if the man was a church member or not.

"This was to be done absolutely anonymously. And I respect that," he said.

Boyd estimated that more than 1,000 families live in Ledbetter Heights.

"Of course, with 300 Christmas trees we didn't go very far. But it was a very expensive endeavor," he said.

Ms. Colvin said a nursery owner who belongs to the church ordered the trees and stands and sold them to the church at his own cost. The store where the ornaments were bought did not give a discount, and those cost $600, she said.

The give-away was announced by word of mouth, by distributing fliers throughout Ledbetter Heights and by sending notes home with children involved in First Methodist's Lighthouse Latchkey Program.

The trees were delivered and given away Thursday.

With each tree went a card bearing instructions on how to make popcorn and cranberry strings, paper snowflakes, construction paper chains and other ornaments, and encouraging family activities.

The only payment requested was a homemade ornament with the family's name on it. Those are to be hung on the tree at First United Methodist.

A class at the church's Lighthouse preschool delivered 20 trees to elderly shut-ins in the area, and stayed to decorate some of the trees.

"Many of the people were getting Christmas trees for the first time ever," Ms. Colvin said. "Some people asked how much they cost and their eyes just lit up when we told them they were free."

Boyd said the church was thinking about repeating the give-away next year.

Sprayberry to go on trial Jan. 13

From Staff Reports

Midland County Justice of the Peace Charley Sprayberry tentatively will go to trial Jan. 13 on charges of harrassment, attempted sexual assault and false imprisonment of his former secretary.

District Judge James Clack of Andrews will preside over the case, while special prosecutor Andy Shuval of Austin will present the state's case, according to Midland County Attorney Mark Dettman.

A Midland County grand jury indicted Sprayberry on Nov. 21 charging him with the alleged attempted sexual assault and false imprisonment of his former secretary.

The indictment also charges Sprayberry with two counts of telephone harassment of the secretary and three counts of barratry — soliciting business for Odessa attorney Phillip Godwin with the intent to benefit himself.

Police also were searching for a black male in connection with a aggravated sexual assault of a Midland woman that occurred about 7 p.m. in the 5300 block of Sage.

The victim, whose name and age were not released, told police that the suspect wore tennis shoes and possibly a stocking cap.
