Veterans win long-awaited honor

By FRED S. HOFFMAN

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three decades after its six month blitz across Europe's battlefields to link up with Soviet troops in Austria, America's first all-black tank battalion is being awarded the presidential citation its survivors have fought for ever since.

The 761st "Black Panther" Battalion battled its way from France across Belgium and Germany for a record six straight months spearheading the allied drive and inflicting thousands of casualties on the Nazi army.

The battalion joined the First Ukrainian Army at Steyer, Austria, on May 6, 1945. The German high command surrendered a day later.

In its record 183 straight days in combat, including a key action in the Battle of the Bulge, the unit suffered a nearly 50 percent casualty rate, with a total of 36 officers and enlisted men killed and 260 wounded. The battalion lost 71 tanks.

Its members collected eight silver stars and 62 bronze stars.

"The response by the unit has been amazing," said David Williams, the battalion's white commander who now is a Miami stockbroker.

"It means a lot to these guys. It's a once-in-a-lifetime thing."

About 150 members of the battalion were set to attend the Presidential Unit Citation award ceremonies today at nearby Fort Myer, Va.

Army Secretary Clifford Alexander Jr., the first black to serve in that post, arranged to present the citation. President Carter approved it in January.

The citation credits the battalion, which had both black and white officers, with "extraordinary gallantry, courage, professionalism and high esprit de corp" at the end of World War II.

In a summary of the unit's history, the Army says the battalion had tried unsuccessfully since 1945 "to gain recognition for its accomplishments." The Army was desegregated in the late 1940s by President Harry S. Truman but the battalion's members still met repeated rebuffs when seeking recognition for their actions.

"There are clear indications that racial discrimination and inadvertent neglect on the part of those in authority ... may have been a factor in the disapprovals," the Army summary said.

The case was reopened last year and this time veterans of the 761st won their citation.

Mine ending recovery try

FARMINGTON, W.Va. (AP) — The bodies of 19 men will lie entombed forever in the No. 9 mine here.

Against the wishes of the dead men's widows, the Consolidation Coal Co. has decided to cease recovery efforts, 10 years and $11 million after explosions ripped through the shafts and killed 78 miners.

And millions of tons of coal will remain unmined because of federal and state closure orders and a miners' taboo against taking coal when the bodies of their brethren remain inside.

R. E. Samples, Consol's chairman and chief executive officer, announced Wednesday the company would halt recovery efforts because deteriorating working conditions made it unlikely that the remaining 19 bodies would ever be recovered or the cause of the blasts found.

"This brings to a close over nine years of treacherous recovery work during which 59 bodies were recovered," Samples said.

He noted that a 1974 agreement with the families of the victims called for recovery efforts to go on only so long as it was "safe, reasonable, feasible and practical to do so."

"We have long since gone well beyond that point," Samples said.

But 19 widows disagree.

"It was their negligence that killed them, and I think it's their job to recover them so we can have a proper burial," said Sarah Kaznoski, widow of Pete Kaznoski Sr.

"If they'd had their way they would never have found number one. They started the battle to seal the mine and leave them entombed from the day of the explosion."

She added, "It just seems so inhuman to me. We know the men are dead, but they still deserve a proper burial."

Group asks grand jury study of Lozano death

CORPUS CHRISTI — Representatives of Mexican-Americans in Texas have requested a federal grand jury to investigate the death of Larry Lozano in Ector County Jail Jan. 22, and expressed fear of possible violence if the grand jury is not granted.

Ruben Bonilla, head of the League of United Latin American Citizens, said he had been in touch with John Huerta, deputy assistant attorney general with the civil rights division of the Justice Department in Washington, and with Jamie Boyd, U.S. attorney of the Western District.

"We have been trying to get a recommendation for a grand jury. We have been a little disappointed with the lack of direction from the U.S. Attorney's Office in the Western District because of the lack of forceful action in earlier killings, such as (Juan) Galaviz in Big Spring," Bonilla said.

A Big Spring grand jury recently declined to return an indictment against a police officer who reportedly shot Galaviz following a high-speed chase through residential areas.

"We have no faith in John Green, the Ector County district attorney," Bonilla said. "There are some segments (of Mexican-Americans) that are discouraged by the lackadaisical attitude of some of our state offices.

"We have more faith in our federal justice system, since they have indicated a willingness to investigate."

Bonilla said he was fearful of any consequences should the Justice Department refuse to hold the grand jury.

"The situation in West Texas is a powder keg," he said.

Ruben Sandoval, attorney for the Lozano family, said that although he had been too busy lately to "touch bases with the necessary people" to request a federal grand jury, he could promise the Lozano case would be settled within a month and a half.

Larry Lozano died in Ector County Jail under controversial circumstances. A jury in a recent inquest returned a verdict of accidental death.

Ector County Sheriff Elton Faught said earlier that Lozano had "gone berserk" in his cell.

Crane reveals class leaders

CRANE — The valedictorian and salutatorian of the 1978 senior class at Crane High School recently were chosen, D. L. Anderegg, school principal, announced.

David Bizzak, 17-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bizzak, was selected as valedictorian. A National Honor Society member, the youth was awarded a $2,000 National Merit Scholarship. He has been participating in the industrial arts program four years and has been a Student Council member one year.

Seventeen-year-old Mary Witt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Witt of Crane and formerly of Midland, was named salutatorian. Miss Witt has been a member of the National Honor Society, Student Council and Spanish team one year. She has been a Pep Squad member two years. Her name is included in the edition of "Who's Who in Foreign Languages in Texas and Oklahoma High Schools."

Weatherman sees no change

Warm days and cool nights seem to be Midland's weather pattern for April, and it's not likely to change Thursday.

The weatherman predicts partly cloudy weather through Thursday, with a high in the lower 80s expected Thursday and a low tonight in the mid-50s.

Winds should be from the south, decreasing to 10 to 20 mph tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal.

Area towns this morning reported clear and cool weather.

Mostly clear skies and mild temperatures continued to dominate the Texas weather scene today.

Forecasters said the fair and mild weather pattern would continue over most of the state through Friday.

Highs today were expected to range from the 60s in the Panhandle to the 80s and possibly the lower 90s in South Texas.

Early morning temperatures ranged from the 30s in the mountains of Southwest Texas to the 50s and 60s in South Texas.

Rattlesnake Bomber Base getting new life

Group. The group had been a part of the action in the Pacific Theater since the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor on that "day of infamy" – Dec. 7, 1941.

The group landed at Pyote on New Year's Day of 1943, and soon began training crews in the reliable B-17s.

"They were kind of a cocky bunch," museum booster Jim Marks said of the 19th Bombardment Group, which was "fresh from overseas."

The pilots, bombadiers, navigators, gunners, ground crews and most all at the base developed much rapport, historian Marks said.

"And they (fliers, gunners, navigators) all came together and were molded at Pyote," Marks said. "They became very close units and some life-time friendships were made.... They knew they were going to war.

"Many of them never came back. Pyote was their last home," he said.

After the war, the base was turned into a storage field for mothballed B-29s. And in 1947, the Army turned the base over to the U.S. Air Force, which set up an early-warning air defense radar station there.

With the outbreak of the Korean War in 1950, many of those B-29s were taken out of wraps and were outfitted for dropping bombs over Korea.

Three years later, after the Korean War was over, World War II's most notable – or notorious – warplane was put on display at the Pyote base. It was the Enola Gay, the B-29 which dropped the atomic bomb over Hiroshima, Japan, on Aug. 6, 1945.

At Pyote for awhile, too, was The Swoose, a B-17 which survived the bombing and strafing of Clark Field at Pearl Harbor.

Currently, the Enola Gay and The Swoose are in the Smithsonian Institution.

In the early 1960s, the aging and obsolete B-29s were cut up by the hundreds and were smelted by an aluminum company.

Today, about all that remains at Pyote are the landing fields, a "giant" hangar, the red-brick boiler building for providing the heat for the hangars, and the native rock gateway, which was built in 1945 by German prisoners of war assigned to Pyote.

That restored gateway also will be dedicated Saturday.

University Lands, which now owns the old base, has leased that entrance to Ward County, which is maintaining both the museum and the wing-shaped rock gate.

The public is invited to the dedication and to the tour of the base, Mrs. Price and Marks said. She is a Ward County commissioner, and Marks is assistant principal of Monahans High School.

The featured speaker at the dedication will be U.S. Congressman Richard C. White of El Paso. Singing a melody of patriotic songs will be Tammi Jo Whitmire of Odessa.

The colors will be presented by a color guard from Goodfellow Air Force Base at San Angelo. And the Monahans "Mean Green" High School Band will play Sousa marches and other tunes, such as "Off We Go into the Wild Blue Yonder."

"What this will be is a fun day," said Marks. "We just want to have a good time and to honor the people who served in the war."

Injuries minor

Only minor injuries resulted Wednesday from two traffic accidents.

Dennis Daryl Wood of 403-J W. Estes St. was treated for injuries and released from Midland Memorial Hospital. Wood told police his motorcycle skidded and hit a curb while he was trying to avoid a car that pulled out in front of him in the 400 block of N. Big Spring Street shortly before 4 p.m.

Connie McCurry Saunders and eight children riding in a car with her were taken to a physician for treatment after the car she was driving and a flat-bed truck collided about 10:30 a.m. Wednesday at the intersection of Midland Drive and Thomason Drive.

Police said William Wade Blocker of 3917 Anetta St. had stopped the truck, loaded with pipe, at a stop light when the car struck the bed of the trailer. The pipe went through the car's windshield.

NEW YORK (AP) — The Pulitzer Prize for spot photography awarded earlier this week to a United Press International photographer was given to the wrong man, the administrator of the prize says.

The photograph showed a hostage being held at gunpoint in Indianapolis.

"We're going to have to take the prize away and give the $1,000 to the man who took the picture," Pulitzer administrator Richard T. Baker said Wednesday.

He said that "it was an honest mistake, resulting from the large number of pictures that were taken that day."

The mistake was discovered when Blair claimed the picture was his. Schweiker and William Lyon, UPI vice president for news pictures, inspected the negatives and agreed with Blair.

Robert E. Page, vice president and general manager of UPI, notified the advisory board of the Pulitzer committee.

"An honest error occurred during the handling of the large number of negatives and the crediting of the winning photograph to Schweiker," Lyon told the Evansville (Ind.) Courier.

Page said 15 prints were prepared out of 24 rolls of film taken during the Feb. 10 ordeal. The mixup was made as the pictures were identified prior to transmission.

When Schweiker learned Monday that he had won an award, he told reporters, "I'd forgotten I'd been entered and didn't even know what picture won the prize until it came back over the wire."

Blair, who has submitted photos to UPI since 1971, said Wednesday night that at the time the hostage photograph was originally published in newspapers he did not press his claim to it because the issue "was of no particular importance."

Blair, reached by telephone in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., credited Schweiker with teaching him "everything I know" about photography and characterized the dispute over who had taken the photo as "an honest disagreement."

Cleveland schools employees to be paid, finally

CLEVELAND (AP) — For the first time in a month, Cleveland's 11,000 full-time school employees were scheduled to be paid today, apparently heading off a threatened strike.

A check for $18 million, the first installment on an advance in state aid to the debt-ridden public school system, was dispatched from Columbus to Cleveland late Wednesday after a Franklin County Common Pleas judge refused to block the payment.

School clerk-treasurer Michael J. Hoffmann said the Cuyahoga County auditor and treasurer would process the check this morning, and that he had pay checks ready to be delivered to employees as soon as the technicalities were completed.

He told the school board Wednesday that 5,400 teachers and all other school workers would be paid today, barring any unforseen difficulties.

In Columbus, Franklin County Common Pleas Judge William T. Gillie denied a request by state Sen. Paul Pfeifer to halt the subsidy payment to Cleveland. Pfeifer contended the state Controlling Board lacked authority to make the advance.

The district has been on the brink of financial collapse since voters rejected a $30 million emergency school tax increase in a special election April 6. Employees have not been paid since March 23, when the last state advance was received.

Banks have refused to loan any more funds to the school system.

Responsibilities of board outlined by commissioner

When making decisions, school board members should keep in mind that the schools belong to the people, A. O. Bowen, deputy commissioner for the Texas Education Agency, said Wednesday.

Bowen was the guest speaker at a luncheon during the school board workshop at the West Texas Education Service Center at Midland Regional Air Terminal.

In his speech, Bowen advised board members attending the workshop to select well-qualified personnel; to be informed on all areas of educational instruction, and to pay close attention to school finance.

He said he has no sympathy for board members who come to him, saying $10,000 is missing from their school budgets. "I have never seen a good school without a good leader," said Bowen.

The day-to-day operations of the shools should be left up to superintendents, he maintained. If school board members get involved in these operations, he said, then they should be fair to their taxpayers and not bother to hire a superintendent.

When persons approach board members with a problem or complaint, Bowen said, these members should "listen to them in a patient and friendly manner" and then do one of the following:

(1) Refer that person to the proper adminstrator.

(2) Call the superintendent and ask him to investigate the matter and report his findings.

(3) Tell that person he will discuss the matter with the superintendent and other board members at his earliest convenience.

(4) Invite the person to appear before the board with the matter.

A. O. Bowen

At all times Bowen cautioned, board members should remember that they are part of a unit and shouldn't make decisions unilaterally.

On the other hand, he said board members shouldn't be afraid to disagree with the rest. "Going along to get along is the easy way out," he said.

The United States, Bowen said, is the only country he knows of that guarantees education for students in kindergarten through the 12th grade, regardless of their families' wealth or where they live.

This education is meant to be under local control, he said, not under the "thumbs of persons in Austin or Washington, D.C."

House offered new tuition plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new plan to help students meet college expenses, developed by a congressman and a university president, was offered to the House today.

The plan would provide government advances of up to $5,000 a year for students in all but the first year of college-level work.

The advance would be repaid during the student's lifetime, said Rep. Michael J. Harrington, D-Mass., by a special 2 percent charge on his income. The Internal Revenue Service would collect the debt.

Harrington worked out the plan in collaboration with John R. Silber, president of Boston University.

Congress is under heavy pressure to provide some aid for middle income families facing heavy education bills. The House Ways and Means Committee has approved a plan for tax credits up to $250 a year against college tuition costs. President Carter is recommending instead expansion of existing loan and grant programs.

Harrington said, however, such plans would not "provide more than a few hundred dollars of annual relief for families facing obligations in the thousands of dollars."

Scholarship offered to doctoral students

LUBBOCK — The Elo J. and Olga Urbanovsky Fellowship Endowment will provide $12,000 worth of scholarships per year for students working toward doctoral degrees in land use planning, management and design, Texas Tech University Board of Regents recently announced.

Urbanovsky, a professor emeritus at Texas Tech, came to the university in 1949 and established what is now known as the Department of Park Administration and Landscape Architecture.

Recipients of the scholarship can receive up to $12,000 a year for three years. They must have a bachelor's and master's degrees plus at least three years' experience in land use planning, management and design or in closely allied fields.

Group names new publisher

BIG SPRING — Thomas Watson has been named president and publisher of the Big Spring Herald, and Harold Canning, business manager, has been named vice president and general manager.

Making the announcement was Larry D. Franklin, president of newspaper operations, Harte-Hanks Communications, Inc., and Arthur J. Kenney, president of the Southwest Group of Harte-Hanks.

Watson has been editor of the San Francisco Progress, a Harte-Hanks newspaper, for the past four years. A native of Carrollton, Mo., Watson is a graduate of the University of Missouri School of Journalism. He has held editorial, general manager and publisher positions in weekly and daily newspapers during his 17-year career.

The Big Spring Herald is an 11,000 circulation daily and Sunday newspaper serving Big Spring, Howard and surrounding counties.

Watson formally will assume his duties at the Herald on May 1.

Energy, economic ills topic of Lions program

Steve Montgomery, a professor at North Texas State University and a consultant on energy matters, was the speaker Wednesday noon at the meeting of the Downtown Lions Club in the Midland Hilton.

"Energy Today and Tomorrow" was the subject of his talk, in which he injected considerable humor in demonstrating and emphasizing some of his remarks on energy conservation.

"We do not have an energy crisis," Montgomery said. "Rather, we have an economic crisis."

He explained the nation has oil, gas, coal and other natural resources, but in many instances it is not economically feasible to locate and produce them at today's prices.

"It's all a matter of how much we are willing to pay for energy," he said. "It all comes down to the economic situation.

"If we don't do something about our economic crisis, we are in bad shape —and it doesn't look too promising from here."

He offered several suggestions for conserving energy and discussed the use of solar energy.

It was announced the returns to date in the club's recent Pancake Jamboree total $19,300.

Free enterprise study

A special summer program which will deal with the free enterprise system will be conducted at West Texas State University at Canyon, beginning July 11 and continuing through August 4.

This is great news and it is hoped that the program will be well attended and most successful from every standpoint. This is something which cannot be overdone.

The course is sponsored by the school's Political Science Department, which has received a grant for same from the Texas Bureau of Economic Understanding.

The six-hour, graduate level program is designed mainly for junior high and senior high school social studies teachers. The school has approximately 30 scholarships to award, providing free tuition, fees, books and, in some cases, free university housing.

The lack of trained teachers to conduct free enterprise courses in the public schools has been a major problem and this program at Canyon will be a help in this regard.

"Political Systems and Capitalism" and "American Government and the Free Enterprise System" constitute the two courses making up the program. A seminar atmosphere will prevail in the program.

Dr. Roy E. Thoman, WTSU's professor of Political Science and director of the Free Enterprise Institute, said in announcing the program that he believes the courses will be stimulating and beneficial. They most certainly should be.

Applications may be had by addressing Dr. Thoman at Canyon. It is hoped that several teachers from Midland and vicinity will enroll for the courses.

The West Texas Chamber of Commerce long has advocated the training of teachers in such programs, along with the selection of proper textbooks for use by students at the junior high and high school levels.

Results of the program undoubtedly will be watched with interest by other institutions of higher learning, with the idea of possibly following suit.

Congratulations and all best wishes are directed to all those involved in the program.

For 'mental sweat'

Plain-talking Adm. H. G. Rickover has never been intimidated by the government for which he works.

And his criticism of American educational policies before a recent meeting of the Anaheim, Calif., school board was a valid contradiction of federal policies which, in Rickover's words, "make no sense."

The admiral takes a dim view of practices in the nation's schools designed to make learning "easy," insisting that "mental sweat is required of students who would master a subject."

He would initiate a national testing program to establish acceptable education standards for students in the public elementary and secondary schools. He dismisses as "nonsense" the arguments that nationwide testing would undermine local control or be unfair to minorities.

Rather, he said, the testing program would give able students the opportunity to demonstrate their ability and would be a measure of the fairness of the educational system.

The admiral is contemptuous of those who raise the fear of federal control while eagerly seeking federal dollars.

Adm. Rickover is as right as can be on this particular point. Federal funds placed federal control in effect a long time ago.

Public outrage over evidence that the schools turn out graduates who can't read or write or work mathematical problems has resulted in testing programs in 14 states to insure minimum competency.

The admiral is of the opinion that a federal system would establish goals and provide a workable measure of progress in striving for them.

ART BUCHWALD

'Big guy flips, starts buying; market soars

Art Buchwald

WASHINGTON — There is a certain insanity going on in the country at this moment which cannot be diagnosed by any doctor. If you don't believe me, take a look at what happened on Wall Street last Friday. All week long we saw and heard nothing but bad news about the economy, inflation, the national deficit, the fall of the dollar etc., etc.

Then on Friday, Wall Street went ape, traded 52 million share of stock in one day, and the market went through the roof. It was hard to believe that the men and women who drove up the Dow Jones by 20 points were watching the same economic news as the rest of the country.

As soon as I heard about it I called a friend on Wall Street to find out what was going on.

He sounded very giddy on the phone. "They're buying," he cried. "They're buying everything. Zip a dee dooda!"

"I know that," I said. "But why are they buying?"

"You know Thompson, who manages all of Glutton Insurance Co.'s investment portfolio?"

"No, I don't know him," I said.

"He started it. He'd been sitting on $2 billion worth of cash, and not doing a damn thing with it. Well, he went to the health club on Friday morning and suddenly started screaming, 'I can't take it any longer. I've got to buy something.' Then he went running down Wall Street in the nude yelling, 'Buy! Buy! Buy! I'm going to buy everything.'"

"Did they lock him up?"

"Lock him up? I should say not. Everybody started taking off their clothes, too. They figured Thompson knew something they didn't.

"Pretty soon we were all dancing in the street. The big guys from the mutual funds, the pension trusts and the banks were running around naked screaming at their brokers to buy any stock they could get their hands on. Panic broke out, and money managers, who were playing gin rummy for a penny a point, were throwing orders for millions of dollars out their windows. The brokers got on their phones to the little guys and told them the big guys were buying. That's all the little guys had to hear, and they started buying, too. I've never seen anything like it."

"You mean to say because one person went nuts in a steam room the entire financial community went berserk?"

"Right. We always knew that's all it would take. If we could just get one of the big guys to go off his wagon, everyone else would follow suit. Nobody likes to be left behind on Wall Street when someone takes his clothes off and starts buying stocks. When the word got out that Thompson of Glutton Insurance had lost his marbles it started an avalanche of business the likes of which none of us has ever seen."

"Where is Thompson now?" I said.

"Someone threw a blanket around him so he wouldn't catch a cold."

"But doesn't anyone up there know what's going on in Washington now?"

"We don't care what's going on in Washingon. We were desperate for action. An investor can't sit on billions of dollars forever — something has to give. If it hadn't been Thompson, it would have been somebody else. Everyone was cracking up from the boredom, but Thompson was the first one to completely flip."

"What's all that noise I hear in the background?"

"Merrill Lynch has just unleashed a thundering herd of cattle on Wall Street, and they're goring everyone in sight."

"Why did they do that?"

"Because Merrill Lynch is bullish on America again."

"It all seems too good to be true," I said. "What happens when Thompson sobers up and decides he wants Glutton Insurance out of the stock market again?"

"Don't ask."

Auto fuel from corn alcohol

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTGN — While the nation's big brains fuddle over the energy crisis, a reformed Alabama moonshiner and a former civil rights worker have teamed up to build a different kind of still that is beginning to provide their neighbors with a cheap and efficient substitute for gasoline.

Albert Turner, a black man once close to Martin Luther King Jr., end Albert Hubbard, a white man formerly in the bootleg business, have demonstrated on a minor scale the feasibility of producing auto fuel from corn alcohol — an idea that has been opposed by the oil tycoons and shrugged off by federal energy czar James Schlesinger.

The product from this, jerrybuilt still in the Alabama piney woods country has been tested with excellent results. And the backwoods entrepreneurs intend to market their alcohol-fuel soon for 65 cents a gallon.

This will confound the ivory tower experts in Washington who have insisted that such fuel couldn't be produced for less than $1 a gallon and was, therefore, economically impractical.

Furthermore, in these days of multimillion dollar government boondoggles, Turner and Hubbard built their pilot plant and began production for less than $12,000 out of a federal grant of $82,000 from the Office of Minority Business.

We sent our investigative reporter Hal Bernton to work on the still and to report back how it's doing. It was constructed primarily of junkyard materials not far from Selma, Ala.

Turner heads a small black cooperative that will operate the backwoods distillery. He evolved the idea in consultation with a Minnesota scientist named Alan Zithamer.

A private firm offered to build the still for Turner for $60,000. Instead, Turner and his associates constructed it for one-fifth that cost. A piece of old steel pipe was used as a column; an old garbage container was converted into a giant boiling pot for the corn mash; and a large gas storage tank became the fermenting vat.

Treasury agents, who monitor the project to make sure it doesn't produce cheap rotqut for people, were skeptical that it would ever produce the high-proof alcohol necessary for auto fuel.

But last November, Hubbard happened on the scene. The 47-year-old ex-moonshiner from the piney woods hadn't practiced his illegal craft for 20 years, but he hadn't forgotten it. Intrigued with the idea of providing inexpensive fuel for small farmers, he suggested several major design changes. He was hired on as a consultant.

Our reporter found the experimental plant off a main highway leading out of Selma. Hubbard was hard at work, testing a batch of fermenting mash that would be run through the still.

He inspected the thick mixture of corn, yeast, enzymes and water, and, perhaps out of past habit, pronounced it unpalatable for drinking purposes. But his moonshine was intended for car engines.

Using large slabs of discarded cuttings from the local saw mill as firewood, Hubbard heated up the still. The alcohol in the corn brew began steaming off through a series of pipes to an old car radiator salvaged from the junk yard. Then the water-cooled alcohol condensed back into liquid and ran down to a storage tank.

The tank is securely locked and can be opened only by Treasury agents and a security guard. Samples of the final brew are tested daily for strength; it tests out about 180 proof.

For the moment, Turner dispenses his experimental fuel in informal, country-store fashion. A local minister drove up to the still in his green Impala Chevy. Turner cried out in mock alarm: "Preacher, you caught me in the act. Come on up and try some."

The visitor agreed to test the product, and a gallon was blended with the regular gasoline in his tank. As the car engine purred away, Turner grinned at our reporter and predicted: "Once the preacher gets hooked on this stuff, the whole congregation will go for it."

Other curious Selma residents have dropped by to gawk at the homemade still. Among the visitors were a Selma deputy sheriff and a former Alabama revenue agent. The latter, an expert in spotting illegal moonshine stills, inspected the maze of pipe, valves and vats admiringly.

Those who have tested the brew in their cars insist it increases the engine power noticeably and makes the motor "sound like it just had a tune-up." Barring hitches, Turner intends to erect a one-pump filling station on the property and to begin selling the alcohol fuel on a limited scale. Eventually, he hopes to expand the distillery.

ROTTING MARIJUANA — Our report about contaminated Mexican marijuana apparently has done more to curb pot smoking in this country than all the law enforcement agencies put together.

Earlier this year, we reported that the Mexican authorities had been spraying marijuana fields with a toxic herbicide called paraquat. This kills marijuana plants within two days. But the greedy Mexican farmers hastily harvested the sprayed crop and smuggled the contaminated marijuana into the United States.

We warned that the health of millions of pot smokers in this country could be endangered. Now a secret intelligence dispatch from Mexico reports that the "demand for Mexican marijuana has waned and tons of marijuana are reported rotting in warehouses."

Technocrats increasingly dominate today's CIA

WASHINGTON — Outside, the pleasant campus around Central Intelligence Agency's headquarters looks like it does every spring — resplendent with the blooming lavender of lilac trees and bright, transient dogwood blossoms. The main building retains its strong, bureaucratic appearance. The friendly guards take away any ominous edge suggested by the wire fence.

Inside, there are few visible changes. New TRW machines efficiently screen employees on entry. The recent "openness" is advertised on bulletin boards featuring clips of what the outside world is saying about the CIA these days.

This information would have brought scowls to the faces of great intelligence figures of World War II, the Cold War and the Vietnam tragedy.

But they are ghostly names now, as technocrats increasingly dominate the CIA.

In recent years the once monolithic CIA has taken typhoon-force blows from super-liberals, hawkish jingoists and demented revolutionaries. Vietnam, Watergate, congressional investigations — sap the strength of this respected powerhouse.

The U.S. remains strong, so there has been a natural recovery of the CIA, but the degree is debatable.

Critics claim that President Carter's order of reorganization, the resulting shift of 820 positions, the severance of 200 employees and an unimaginative, spiritless leadership by Adm. Stansfield Turner, whom Carter made Director, have kept the agency in turmoil.

Dutiful defenders say that: CIA operations have been improved by the changes; the quality of the intelligence product has never been better; Turner, a Navy classmate of Carter's, has no plans to leave.

Whatever, there is no question that the CIA, like a crustacean, has shed its old shell. The men who tracked the Soviets in the Cold War, counter revoutionaries in the Third World, and tried to make the Vietnam war work are gone — men like Richard Helms, James Angelton (the counter-espionage star), Cort Meyer, William Colby, Ray S. Cline and the legendary Vernon Walters, raconteur and linguist.

The new order is younger, more specialized and would never risk wearing a trench coat. They are far less likely to pound fists on tables or utter oaths when confronted with, say, the great scrambling of organizational boxes the CIA undertook under Turner.

The new order is more inclined toward technocratic performance. This means increased reliance on electronic detection, computerized data, research and development and studies in economics, geography, medicine, physics and other sciences.

Altogether, this means a huge jump in the volume of information collected. There are those who argue that the volume involves even more clandestine work by the CIA, because only by learning intent can the agency evaluate the enormous accumulation of intelligence.

Moreover, the CIA now lives in a world far different from the more swashbuckling days of the Cold War. Instead of largly focusing on the Soviets and Communist China, the agency must contend with 150 nations, and their growing economic interdependence. The Soviets remain the prime target of CIA study, and the Chinese aren't neglected, but it's obvious the rest of the world is growing up fast.

The CIA increasingly, and it claims successfully, tracks terrorists, drug traffickers, oil discoveries and production, crop estimates and shifts of wealth, just to name some for purposes of illustrating variety. These studies, usually performed with more precision than drama, become reasonable estimates as to what nations are capable of doing or might be compelled to do.

While the CIA increasingly benefits from technology, certain former advantages to overseas operative aren't available any more. Since the murder of CIA agent Richard Welch in Greece, the agency has not equipped non-CIA travelers, such as newsmen, with the names of agents to contact overseas. The terrorist threat to CIA operatives is significant.

Contact between the CIA and journalists specializing in foreign reportage have also been discouraged. And many nations are now reluctant to cooperate with the CIA out of fear of having the relationship suddenly burst into print in the American press.

Back at headquarters, the CIA still wrestles with the matter of how to handle the question of requiring employees to live up to the contract they signed when hired, namely, to clear anything written, spoken or disseminated about the agency with the Inspector's Office — whether they are still employed or have left the agency.

There has been a rash of books and articles by former CIA people, some embarrassing, some merely illuminating. Agee and Marchetti and Marks wrote books which the agency didn't like. The content of Frank Snepp's book didn't bother the agency as much as Snepp's publishing it without clearnce. Colby's "Honorable Men" and Walter's "Silent Mission" cleared the inspector, but might make some people smirk a bit.

No reasonable American disagrees with the notion that the most powerful nation in the world needs a set of eyes and ears out there, not only to protect itself, but also to get along. We can only hope that we are getting our money's worth from the $4 to $8 billion the CIA spends every year.

China's Yangtse River approaching industrial age

By GEORGES BIANNIC
Agence France-Presse

PEKING — The Yangtse River, a vital route still for millions of Chinese, is making a delayed entry into the industrial age.

This reporter was one of a group of foreign correspondents who with about 500 Chinese have just completed a three-day steamer trip down the 860 miles of the Upper Yangtse from Chungking to Wuhan.

The China we saw was a sometimes surprisingly traditional one where riverside workers lead a hard life. In none of the ports, not even Chungking, did we see any cranes to unload the boats, junks, sampans and steamers which ply the river.

Cargoes are loaded and unloaded manually by dockers who in prerevolutonary times would have been called coolies. Their comrades are the Yangtse towmen, who chant rhythmically as they haul junks along the river.

These are workers overlooked for the moment by the industrial revolution, but not the political one. A big-character slogan emerges from a cliff face: "Tow the boats for the Revolution."

The fact is that as long some of the Yangtse traffic is made up of boats propelled by nature rather than engineering, Towmen will be needed to help them counter the strong Yangtse currents and its rapids. At least, unlike in the past, there seem to be only a limited number of towmen, and no one cracks a whip over them or makes them risk their lives along the dangerous pathway cut through the Chu-Tanhsia gorge in the old days by a Chinese warlord.

Nowadays, the pathway is used only by foot-travelers, shepherds, and boats.

Another image of a bygone age is that of the boatmen who stand on the bridges of their sampans and with rhythmic gestures propel their craft with a pole.

The Upper Yangtse no longer kills. The rocks and reefs which hindered navigation and provoked murderous, junk-wrecking rapids have been dynamited, especially since 1949.

Over stretches of hundrds of miles one sees bare-torsoed riverside quarrymen hacking the granite-like rock into one yard long bricks, which are carried by two-men teams to waiting vessels. The workers are lodged near the quarries in rudimentary cottages and cabins.

Civilization, however, is never very far away. Modern steamers ply the river and there are increasing signs of industrialization.

An East European journalist who had made the Upper Yangtse trip 15 years ago as a student comment: "The changes from that viewpoint have been enormous."

Chungking itself has 2,600 industrial units, and as the journey down river continues other factories appear. For instance: in Chan Shu, a small but developing town, about 50 French personnel are building with Chinese engineers an ultramodern petrochemical complex to produce synthetic fiber.

Wan Shien, which has 300,000 inhabitants, hundreds of whom came down to the river to see the steamer with its foreign passengers, is in the center of a major orange-growing region and is also undergoing industrialization. Likewise Chiang, at the mouth of the Gorges, 400 miles from Chungking.

A by-product of the new industry is pollution of the river, although this does not seem to bother the fishermen, who cast their lines and net only yards away from scummy foam. The pollution gets worse down river from Wuhan, particularly around Shanghai.

Yet this "blue river," which never deserved its name, and is about to be supplanted by a railroad, has lost none of its ancient charm. In the three gorges in the 125 miles between Wan Hsien an Yi Chang there is a succession of breathtaking sights — steep cliffs rising hundreds of yards above the river, canyons, picturesque temples suspended over the void, hamlets of cottages perched like eagles' nests, and natural marvels to delight the heart of any geologist.

Burned-out Apollo spacecraft real NASA problem

By THOMAS O'TOOLE
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — When a museum in Hutchinson, Kan., asked a month ago if it could display the burned-out Apollo spacecraft in which three astronauts died in 1967, it put the space agency on the horns of a dilemma it had managed to avoid for 11 years.

"We haven't turned down the request," said Mark Fontaine, chief of the supply branch at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, "but there is a real concern here that the spacecraft involved should not be put on public display."

There's a good reason why the space agency is against displaying the Apollo 1 spacecraft, which never flew because of the electrical fire that raged through it on the launch pad at Cape Canaveral in a routine test.

The spacecraft is still charred inside and out, a grim reminder of the deaths inside of Virgil "Gus" Grissom, Roger Chaffee and Edward White. Outside of airplane crashes, it was the only time American astronauts lost their lives on duty.

The alternatives to public display that the space agency has under consideration are burying the spacecraft, and the suits the dead astronauts wore, cutting the spacecraft into pieces and selling them for scrap, or crushing it like a junked car and dropping it into the ocean.

At the end of its investigation of the fire, NASA ordered the 12,000-pound spacecraft preserved in nitrogen gas and encased for 10 years.

The reason was a hope that some method could be devised to pinpoint what caused the fire. Space sleuths have cities countless things that fanned the flames, but no one ever found the cause.

The 10 years have passed and the space agency must decide what to do with the spacecraft. It has stopped paying the $800 a month in caretaker fees to replenish the nitrogen gas that leaks out of its container. The spacecraft and its thousands of parts soon will begin to corrode.

Selling it for scrap is still a possibility, except the space agency fears scrap dealers would get wind of what they're buying and then sell mementos of a space tragedy. Burial on land just seems pointless.

There's a good chance NASA Administrator Robert G. Frosch will order another 10 years' entombment in nitrogen, even though that would cost the taxpayers at least $100,000.

Carter joins ranks of presidents asking civil service reform

The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — U.S. Civil Service Commission Chairman Alan K. Campbell does not think much of the fact that practically every government employee gets an annual efficiency rating of "satisfactory" from the boss.

Since an "unsatisfactory" rating must be defended at an administrative hearing, Campbell said, most supervisors simply save themselves a lot of trouble by giving 99 percent of the 2.8 million civilian workers "satisfactory" ratings.

The result is an automatic process of pay raises that have nothing to do with real performance, and a negligible number of dismissals.

Reforming the way civil servants are hired, fired and supervised has become a high priority issue in the Carter administration's effort to bring better government to Washington.

The Senate Government Operations Committee and the House Committee on Post Office and Civil Service are studying administration proposals to overhaul management of the federal work force, the most sweeping renovation of its kind in modern times.

The legislation that the administration wants enacted this year would have a major impact on California, which has more federal workers (295,000) than any other state.

Simplifying dismissal procedures and revising the annual rating methods are part of a reform package with these other major provisions:

—Creation of a senior executive service of 9,200 officials, who would be assigned wherever needed and would be eligible for annual bonuses for superior performance.

—Authorization of incentive pay for 72,000 lower level federal managers and supervisors.

—Division of the present Civil Service Commission into two separate entities. A Merit Systems Protection Board would serve as a quasi-judicial body to hear employee complaints and appeals. An office of Personnel Management would act as the president's agent in developing government-wide personnel policies.

The reform would apply to 2 million members of the federal civilian work force, since the 800,000 U.S. Postal Service Employees are under a separate system.

In choosing to overhaul the Civil Service system, President Carter tapped a traditional theme in American politics. Through the years, just about every presidential candidate has promised to make the federal bureaucracy perform more efficiently.

Narcotics fight said hampered by federal officials

WASHINGTON (AP) — State and local law enforcement officers are suffering in their fight against drug smugglers because of interference from federal officials, says the head of the Colorado Organized Crime Strike Force's narcotics division.

Ron Pietrafeso joined three other state officials — including Floyd Hacker, the head of the Texas Department of Public Safety narcotics division — in asking a Senate Judiciary subcommittee Wednesday for more cooperation from federal officers.

Afterwards, Pietrafeso outlined an incident he says supports his claims.

Last fall, Pietrafeso sent 16 men into the Big Bend area of Texas to follow a group of heroin traffickers and watch the group as they transported their illegal cargo from the Texas-Mexican border back to Colorado.

Pietrafeso said he wanted to seize the shipment in Colorado, thereby snaring not only the traffickers but also those financing the operation.

"We had notified the Texas DPS and seven DPS men worked with us for about a week," said Pietrafeso. "The DPS, in turn, notified Customs."

An informant told Pietrafeso's men the group was not able to make a heroin purchase when originally planned. "He said the buy would take place a week later than we thought and we were in a position to wait for them."

Customs, however, did not, he said.

As the would-be traffickers traveled from Presidio toward Marfa, Customs moved in and made arrests.

"Of course, we had given them the identity of all the persons and the type of vehicle they were driving," added Pietrafeso. "They searched for drugs and, of course, didn't find any."

Customs also overlooked $13,000 in cash hidden under a floorboard of one of the cars, Pietrafeso said. "And $13,000 in cash would have been a lot easier to find than dope," he added.

Customs did find two guns, however, and made a firearms arrest.

Pietrafeso said Colorado had invested more than eight months and thousands of dollars in the ill-fated case. "I had eight men in Texas the week Customs picked everybody up. We also had eight vehicles and two airplanes involved in surveillance...all for nothing."

Pietrafeso said he and DPS officials "raised hell with Customs" and a meeting with state and federal officers was arranged by the DPS.

"And when I stood up in the meeting and told what happened," Pietrafeso began, "a DEA (Drug Enforcement Administration) man said by us following narcotics from Texas to Colorado, we would have been in violation of federal narcotic conspiracy statutes and if he caught us doing it again, he'd have us thrown in jail. Can you believe that?"

Boyd confirmed that the statement was made and said later, "I can't keep him (the DEA agent) from arresting someone, but as far as I'm concerned, there would be no prosecution as long as the agents are operating in a legitimate fashion."

The ten men arrested by Customs were convicted on drug trafficking charges, based on the information compiled by the Coloradoans and DPS. "But, naturally, we would have had a much stronger case and more arrests if we had completed what we set out to do," noted Pietrafeso.

"But before the trial, we asked Customs for a report on the arrest and for them to return some scales (used in weighing heroin) and cutting material (to dilute the heroin before steet sale) so we could use them during the trial," he added. "After about a week, they said we couldn't have the reports. They said it would be a violation of the Privacy Act."

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN—The Texas Department of Community Affairs has announced that 53 community agencies, including the Midland Community Action Agency, will receive federal Community Services Administration grants for emergency energy assistance.

Those grants, approved this week by the Governor's Office, are being made available to ongoing CSA-funded energy programs to enable them to respond to crisis situations which "endanger the halth and survival of eligible low-income households," the state community affairs agency noted.

The CSA requires that the funds must be obligated by May 1, 1978, and expended no later than May 31, 1978. The grants are cover expenditures incurred by the recipients within the first four months of 1978.

Grants include:

—$8,000 to the Midland Community Action Agency.

—$7,250 to the Big Bend Community Action Committee Inc., Marfa.

—$7,500 to West Texas Opportunities Inc., Lamesa.

—$6,500 to Community Council of Reeves County, Pecos.

—$5,750 to Pecos County Community Action Agency, Fort Stockton.

...otulism cause sought; ...lues may be gone

CLOVIS, N.M. (AP) — New Mexi...'s chief health officer, Dr. Jonathan ...nn, was planning today to return ...me to Santa Fe, confident that the ...tulism outbreak here has run its ...urse.

"The epidemic in Clovis appears to ... over," Mann said Wednesday.

He said most of the 33 botulism ...ctims remained hospitalized, but ...here is encouraging news of stabili...tion in most cases and full reco...eries in others."

He added, however, that full recov...y for the majority of victims may ...ké weeks.

The 33rd victim was admitted to ...lovis Memorial Hospital Tuesday ...fternoon, and one person was re...ased from the hospital, becoming ...e first of those stricken to recover.

Meanwhile, a search of the Clovis ...ump was under way in an effort to ...nd food cans that Mann said may ...elp explain how the botulism out...reak began.

The cans hadn't been found ...ednesday night, but Mann said ...orkers would continue sifting ...hrough the refuse today.

If the cans are not found, he said, "Then it may not be possible to completely determine the cause of this outbreak."

Mann said the cans were used in a Sunday meal at which five persons became ill.

The 33 persons stricken with botulism were among 800 who ate at the Colonial Park Country Club in Clovis between April 9 and April 13. Mann said the re-opening of the restaurant would be discussed "in the near future."

He said, "We would like to re-emphasize that the restaurant's sanitary quality and professional management has never been in doubt during this entire investigation."

The cans, which contained a food Mann declined to identify, were taken to the Clovis dump during a normal garbage haul last Tuesday.

He said if certain information can be obtained from the cans, it could "make all the pieces of the puzzle fit into place."

If they are found, the cans will be turned over to the federal Food and Drug Administration for testing for botulism toxin, he said.

Rare disease threatens family

By ROBERT MACY

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A rare blood vessel disease called hereditary hemorrhagic telangiectasis is more than Diane Crall can pronounce. But it is not more than she can comprehend.

It threatens the lives of her husband, Robert, 26, their children, Stephanie, 5, and Robert Jr., 3, and possibly month-old Scott as well.

One of the family's doctors at the University of Kansas Medical Center says he had seen only one previous case of the disease during his career. Yet Crall, his youngsters and a niece apparently are afflicted with it.

Crall's sister, Teresa, died three years ago at the age of 19, a month after giving birth to a daughter, Tracy. Doctors say Teresa's death may have been caused by the disease, and Tracy may have it.

The disease surfaced last summer when Crall, an active, healthy man, began having problems with bleeding. Tests at the medical center diagnosed the rare disease.

Splotches have appeared on the two Crall children's skin, and doctors say it may be a sign that they have the disease.

Crall cannot work, exert himself physically or tolerate heat. He has frequent broken blood vessels and the pain of massive headaches. Neighbors in the Kansas City suburb of Oak Grove have started fund-raising activities to assist the family, which has been on welfare the past several months.

A routine day of non-strenuous activity leaves Crall "almost incapacitated by evening," according to his wife.

The disease, said Dr. James Couch of the medical center's neurology department, "is like having the sword of Damocles hanging over your head."

He said the disease is a formation of small blood vessels that bleed easily, located up and down the digestive tract and also on the surface of the brain and around the spinal cord. Victims can bleed to death internally if the vessels rupture.

"The chances of having something catastrophic happen are pretty high," he said.

Couch said because the rarity of the disease, little research is under way to find a cure.

Reasoner pushed off news slot

NEW YORK (AP) — ABC News President Roone Arledge says Harry Reasoner will lose his anchor position on the "ABC Evening News" this summer. Barbara Walters, reportedly receiving $1 million a year for her services, also will give up anchor chores but will remain in a featured role as an interviewer.

Announcing reorganization of the poorly-rated news show, Arledge said Wednesday that Reasoner "did not fit into the plan."

"I don't think he's made any secret of that and I agree with him," Arledge said. But the news chief, who came to the job last summer, declined to say whether Reasoner would be kept on in any capacity.

There was no immediate response from Reasoner, who has asked ABC to release him from his $500,000-a-year contract two years early to return to CBS and "CBS Reports."

Under the reorganization, Frank Reynolds will function as a sort of first among equals as the network's "primary" anchor. He will be in charge of the news desk in Washington.

'Holocaust' brings home war horrors

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The tragic story of Jewish genocide by Nazi Germany reached an estimated 120 million American TV viewers this week. It was the same story that Nazi-hunter Simon Wiesenthal has told to thousands for 30 years.

NBC's four-part docu-drama, "Holocaust," told in terms of one fictitious family named Weiss, reached more people in four nights than Wiesenthal has spoken to in his 69 years. The network made the estimate of how many people watched "Holocaust."

"I cannot say I am happy, because to say you are happy in connection with the Holocaust is wrong," said Wiesenthal, who saw much of the series. "But I say it is good that they made it."

Wiesenthal said he did not think the TV story overstated the brutality that occurred in the death camps of World War II.

"The human language is inadequate to express the terror; you cannot present all the cruel situations," he said.

The Nazi hunter spoke in an interview Tuesday at the Simon Wiesenthal Center for Holocaust Studies, now under construction in West Los Angeles.

The only one of its kind in the country, the center is dedicated to keeping alive the memory of the Holocaust, the name given to the systematic elimination of 11 million people by the Nazis in World War II. Six million of the victims were Jews like Wiesenthal.

Wiesenthal, through his Vienna-based Documentation Center, has labored to track down and secure the extradition and conviction of about 1,000 former Nazis responsible for genocide, including SS official Adolf Eichmann, who was hanged in Israel in 1962.

"I don't agree with a number of details (in the show)... but these are little things," said Wiesenthal, who spent 4½ years in Nazi prison camps. He referred specifically to the portrayal of SS officers as having military-like ranks.

"These were not soldiers. Soldiers fight with a risk, but these people fight with no risk... The German Army veterans didn't even want the SS included in their ranks. The SS was a criminal organization.

"Look, there were 10 million Nazi party members in Germany, but only 150,000 committed crimes... This 30 years I'm not fighting against Nazi party members, only against these people who commit crimes... We are not anti-German."

He said that portraying one family heightened the show's impact.

"The big impact of the diary of Anne Frank was not the story of a million children, it was the story of a young girl," he noted.

It was Wiesenthal who tracked down the Gestapo agent who arrested Anne Frank, a Dutch teen-ager who kept a journal while hiding from the Nazis, and sent her to the concentration camp where she died.

"I think this was good that they took a family, very good... Eichmann himself said that 100 killed people is a catastrophe, but a million killed people is a statistic."

Wiesenthal is touring the United States to explain the atrocities and raise funds for his Nazi hunt.

Wiesenthal believes the United States should deport what he estimates are 100 former members of the SS — members and volunteers in units that helped kill civilians.

Agency dedicates new area training facility

"Serving people is what it's all about," said Marlin Johnston of the Texas Department of Human Resources as he spoke at the dedication of TDHR's West Texas Training Center Wednesday morning.

The agency serves some 700,000 needy Texans every year, he said, and has a budget of $1.2 billion. Seventy percent of that comes from the federal government, the rest from the state, Johnston told The Reporter-Telegram in an interview prior to the dedication.

Among its services, TDHR provides financial aid to needy families with dependent children, and administers the food stamp and Medicaid programs in Texas, Johnston said.

The new 10,388 sq. ft. structure, which adjoins TDHR offices at 2301 N. Big Spring St., serves as a comprehensive training center for TDHR staff in Midland, Odessa, El Paso, Lubbock, Amarillo, Abilene, Wichita Falls and San Angelo.

Midland was selected as the site for the training facility because of its central location and accessibility to these major cities.

Johnston, associate commissioner for administration in TDHR, was substituting for Commissioner Jerome Chapman, who had to be in Washington Wednesday.

Johnston said the typical entrant into TDHR employment was a young woman of 26, just out of college, and from a middle-class family. She knows nothing of such things as poverty and abused children.

"We teach her how these things come about and how to overcome them," he said.

One of the purposes of the new building, he said, is the continuing education of staff at every level, including management.

Without that continuing education, he said, the agency would be faced with an unacceptably high level of staff turnover.

The new facility has five classrooms, a library, two study rooms, and office space for a librarian and seven personnel trainers.

Offices to observe holiday

Friday is San Jacinto Day in Texas and all state offices will be observing the holiday by closing. This includes states offices located in Midland.

City, county and federal offices, schools and banks will remain open.

The holiday observes the day Texas forces attacked Santa Anna's troops from Mexico at San Jacinto and won. The battle led to the independence of Texas and its annexation later to the United States.

New canal vote demanded

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Leaders of Panama's four political parties say the canal treaties are unacceptable and demand that Gen. Omar Torrijos submit the pacts to a new referendum.

They spoke out a day after Torrijos said he planned to allow them to resume an active role for the first time in 10 years and let political exiles return "without any strings or conditions."

Torrijos, the head of government, based his pledges on what he saw as new national unity behind the canal treaties.

Only a few hundred students demonstrated against the pacts before the Senate approved the second one Tuesday, and there has been no public opposition to Torrijos or support for the oligarchy he overthrew in 1968.

But representatives of the Independent Democratic Movement, the Panamanista Party, Liberal Party and Christian Democrats gathered publicly for the first time in nine years Wednesday and called for a new canal referendum.

They said a reservation to the treaty guaranteeing the canal's neutrality was the main issue because it "leaves the door open for U.S. intervention in the internal affairs of Panama."

They also said they wanted more guarantees for political exiles before they return home. Arnulfo Arias, the president Torrijos overthrew, lives in Miami, Fla. and has not decided yet whether to return.

Panamanian voters approved the original versions of the canal treaties by a 2-1 margin in an Oct. 23 plebiscite.

The U.S. Senate approved the second pact Tuesday and Torrijos told his nation shortly afterward it was acceptable and that no new plebiscite would be held.

The first treaty guarantees neutrality of the Canal Zone and the second turns the canal over to Panama by the year 2000.

Kissinger denies getting early 'Koreagate' tip

WASHINGTON (AP) — House investigators say J. Edgar Hoover's 1971 warning of possible South Korean payments to congressmen got only as far as Henry A. Kissinger's office. Kissinger denies ever getting the tip.

Kissinger, who was former President Richard M. Nixon's security affairs adviser in 1971, was set to testify today before a House international relations subcommittee about the Hoover message.

The subcommittee also wants to learn what Kissinger did when he finally did find out about South Korean lobbying efforts. Kissinger says that happen in 1975.

The investigators disclosed last month that the late FBI director warned Kissinger and former Attorney General John N. Mitchell that millionaire rice dealer Tongsun Park and aides to South Korean President Park Chung Hee were making political payments in Congress.

A summary of the Nov. 24, 1971, memo said U.S. intelligence had learned the South Korean president's aides were directly involved in a contribution "of several hundred thousand dollars to the Democratic Party."

It also said Tongsun Park was making payments to at least one congressman and was acting under the South Korean Central Intelligence Agency's direction.

Air fares may drop with 'deregulation'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Air travelers could look forward to cheaper fares and more vigorous airline competition if the House approves legislation that passed the Senate by an overwhelming margin.

The airline deregulation bill, first proposed by the Ford administration and embraced by President Carter as an anti-inflation measure, faces an uphill House battle.

Gray pleads not guilty

WASHINGTON (AP) — L. Patrick Gray III and two other former executives of the FBI pleaded innocent today to charges that they unlawfully ordered break-ins during the bureau's anti-radical campaign in the early 1970s.

About 500 agents and former agents massed in a vigil for the three men outside the courthouse doors.

The balding, craggy-faced Gray stood stolidly with W. Mark Felt and Edward S. Miller as they loudly declared their innocence before U.S. District Court Judge Charles R. Richey.

Otherwise, the former FBI officials remained silent as their attorneys argued over pretrial issues. The three men were sent to the U.S. marhsal's office for fingerprinting and then released on their own recognizance.

Gray was acting director of the FBI in the early 1970s when the break-ins allegedly occured. Felt was former acting associate director and Miller assistant director for the FBI's domestic intelligence division.

Each is charged with one count of conspiring to violate citizen rights in connection with the break-ins of private homes in the New York City Area while FBI agents were trying to track down fugitives of the radical Weather Underground.

Richey filled in for Chief Judge William Bryant, who was delayed on his return from a trip to the west coast. Richey set May 12 as the next court appearance for the defendants. At that time Bryant would open arguments on pretrial motions and possibly set a trial date.

The agents and former agents outside broke into applause as Gray, Felt and Miller arrived.

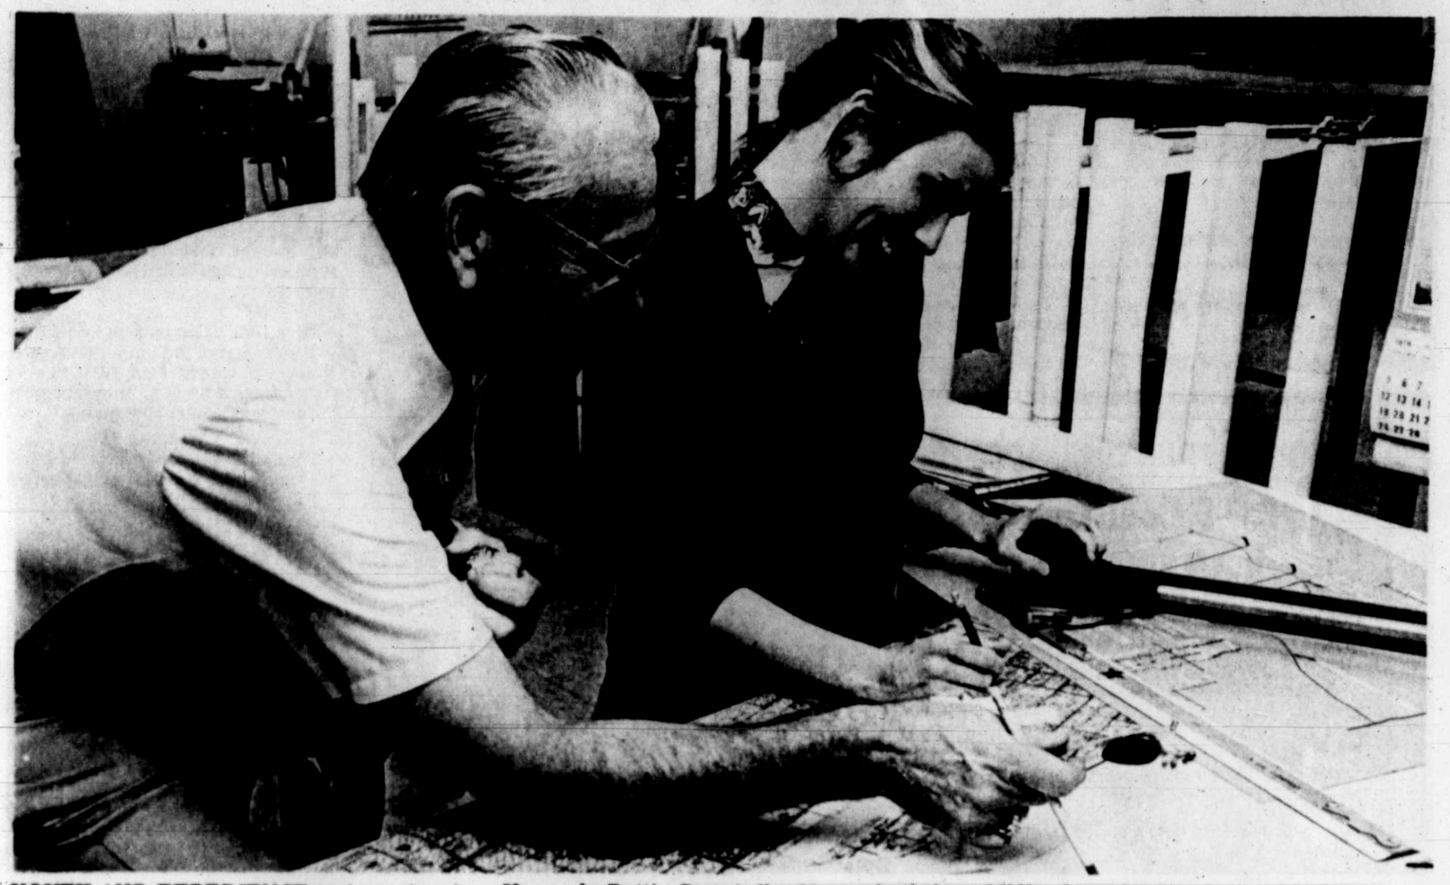

Broken line now secure

He also said that none of the 19 people evacuated from his motel after the fumes were discovered had reported any serious effects as of today.

Eual R. Bryan, partner in Permian Ice Co., was unavailable for comment this morning.

Les Carmen, the motel manager, said he smelled the fumes Tuesday night, telephoned a representative for Permian Ice Co. and alerted occupants of his motel. Ten units containing 19 people were evacuated.

Service prepares info for newlyweds

Cooking, shopping hints for two

COLLEGE STATION—Shopping and cooking for two can create tasty, thrifty and nutritious meals when newlyweds use imagination and planning, says Mrs. Gwendolyne Clyatt. In planning, keep menus simple. Focus on quality and nutritional balance.

For example, don't leave out roasts, fresh fruits or vegetables because of leftover problems. Make plans for everything, and nothing will go to waste, says the consumer marketing information specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System.

RECIPE CUTTING KEEPS PLAN VERSATILE

Most recipes can be cut in half or thirds, so almost all are available to planner of menus for two, and that keeps any plan versatile.

If ingredients don't divide easily, use your best judgement to decide the correct amount—and don't worry. Few recipes are ruined by just a little more or less of most ingredients.

FRUIT-VEGETABLE BUYING

In buying canned fruits and vegetables, avoid small cans. Large ones are far more economical—with a plan.

For example, buy a large can of green beans. Butter and serve them as a hot vegetable on Monday. Marinate the rest in a bottle of Italian-style dressing. Refrigerate them, and serve them as a salad on Wednesday.

Buy a large can of fruit. Serve part of it with cookies for dessert one night. Later in the week, serve the rest sprinkled with cinnamon and cloves as a meat accompaniment.

Also fruit-flavored gelatin can turn leftover fruits or vegetables into a special menu item.

For expample, fold fruit into half the mixture and create a dessert. Use odds and ends of fresh leftover vegetables in the other half to make a salad.

For added economy, read labels to learn quality, size and weight. Fancy grades are not necessary to stews, soups, fruit puddings or pies, for instance. Lower grades offer the same nutrition and often just-as-good-flavor for less money.

In buying fresh produce buy seasonal items when they are most plentiful. They usually cost less, and their quality is usually better at that time.

FREEZER KEEPS MEAT PLAN FLEXIBLE

Divide uncooked ground beef into meal-size portions and freeze. Cook a roast and freeze the leftover portion for a curried dish, casserole or sandwiches.

Also, most meat casseroles freeze successfully, so make the full recipes of favorites, and freeze the leftover portions. Do the same with spaghetti sauce and stew.

TODAY'S SPECIAL PACKAGING, PROCESSING ADDS CONVENIENCE

Nonfat dried milk keeps indefinitely on the pantry shelf, and it offers a constant supply of milk in just the amounts needed. Other dried food products, such as soup mixes, hamburger mixes and potato flakes, do the same.

Variety packages of cereal allow a larger selection without sacrificing freshness, but these generally cost more than other cereal products.

Also, canned hams of two pounds or less have a long shelf life, but once they are opened, plan to use the leftovers within a few days.

How to choose flatware

COLLEGE STATION—Both partners should make the choice of flatware when marriage plans are in the making, says a family resource management specialist.

Following several steps will mean a satisfying choice for both, according to Mrs. Linda McCormack.

She suggests, first, identify individual needs by considering lifestyle.

Examine possible alternatives and study each one.

Consider money available to spend for flatware and other tableware perhaps already chosen. Then make a choice using the guidelines below on type and pattern.

Mrs. McCormack is with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System.

GENERAL BUYING GUIDELINES

No matter what type of flatware a couple chooses, the pattern will probably "catch their eye" first.

Pattern is simply a matter of personal taste.

Once a pattern seems like a possible choice, ask these questions:

—Does it feel comfortable to hold? Pick up several pieces to get the feel of the weight, size, and balance of each piece. Some pieces are so narrow, they cut into the finger.

—Are the edges smooth and even? Is the design free of imperfection?

—What serving pieces are available? Different manufacturers incude different serving pieces. Be sure the serving pieces fit your needs.

Is the pattern open stock?

This mean that the patterns will be available indefinitely, since the manufacturers retain the original dies from all their patterns and then make old patterns available periodically.

—For dishwasher cleaning, is the pattern suitable?

The base of pieces should be broad enough to keep from falling through the cutlery basket and interfering with dishwasher operations.

—Does the effect of the total place setting enhance the dinnerware and glassware it will appear with?

WHAT TO LOOK FOR IN DIFFERENT TYPES

Once a pattern answers "yes" to all the above questions, it needs a careful study to ensure quality, that will last a lifetime.

Different factors mean quality for different types, which include stainless steel, sterling, silverplate, gold electroplate and bronzeware.

Below are some quality factors for each.

STAINLESS STEEL

—Look for stainless steel called 18-8. It contains 18 percent Chromium, eight percent nickel—a good grade of stainless.

—Balance of the knives is important. A solid-handled knife may be so heavy that it cannot be balanced on a plate. Consider the hollow-handled type if you prefer a large handle.

—Be sure it does not tarnish when used with foods that contain sulphur, such as eggs and mayonnaise.

—Remember, choices include a bright polished finish, a dull satin finish or a combination of the two.

STERLING

—The word "Sterling" stamped on the back of a piece is assurance that it meets the government standard for solid silver.

—Sterling II is a name given to flatware that has sterling handles, but stainless fork tines, spoon bowls, and knife blades.

Since it is combination of two metals, each must be cared for differently. Ask about care.

—Look for H.H. (hollow handle) knives.

—Real sterling will last a lifetime, and will never need replacing.

—Temporary discoloration caused by eggs, mayonnaise and salt can be removed with silver polish.

SILVERPLATE

—The quality depends on how the base metal (inside) is finished before it is plated (coated), the amount of silver in the plating and how well the plating is reinforced.

—The amount of silver used in plating varies from "A-1 plate"—which is standard measure—to "Quad-plate" which is the best quality and will last a lifetime with normal use.

—Better quality silver plate has extra silver at the points of greatest wear—the bottom of the spoon bowls and fork tines and perhaps the tips of the handles.

GOLD ELECTROPLATE

—The more gold that is added the better the grade. It is dishwasher safe, and does not require polishing and will not tarnish.

BRONZEWARE

—It is an alloy made chiefly of copper and tin, a brown, yellowish-red-yellow in color.

—It may be treated with a tarnish retardant finish, otherwise it will tarnish.

—The handles may be made of rosewood or bone, which require special care, and usually cannot be put in the dishwasher.

Eating from Food Groups ensures healthy life

COLLEGE STATION — Eating habits based on variety and the Four Food Groups ensure newlyweds a healthy start that will last throughout life, says a foods and nutrition specialist.

"Newlyweds alone now are responsible for the household food supply. Menus they plan and food choices they make will influence the way they look, feel and work or play," says Mrs. Mary K. Sweeten.

"Choosing a good variety of foods in appropriate amounts will more likely mean a more desirable level of health and energy," she adds.

Mrs. Sweeten is with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System.

According to Mrs. Sweeten, the Four Food Groups are these: Milk, fruits-vegetables, breads-cereals and meat.

Daily Milk Needs

Many Americans are shorting themselves on milk and its products, such as cheese, ice cream, buttermilk and yogurt, the specialist reports.

Since these are the main source of the important nutrient calcium, most adults need two or more servings of milk daily, she explains.

Whole milk, buttermilk or flavored milk—or other milk products—will supply needed calcium.

For calorie cutters, skim milk or buttermilk is recommended.

Daily Fruit-Vegetable Needs

Skipping fruits and vegetables results in lower-than-normal amounts of Vitamins A and C—two other important nutrients, the specialist says.

Everyday include four or more servings of fruits and vegetables.

Of these servings, make sure at least one is a serving of a Vitamin C item, such as citrus, cabbage, tomatoes or green peppers.

Also make sure one is a Vitamin A source, such as dark leafy greens or deep yellow vegetables.

For weight watching leave out extra sugar and fats.

For added interest to meals, many frozen vegetables are available, but remember those in rich sauces also add calories.

Daily Bread-Cereal Needs

Four or more bread-cereal foods are needed each day to give adults needed B vitamins, iron and carbohydrates.

Servings should include enriched or whole wheat selections.

Daily Meat Needs

Two servings of meat are needed each day. A serving's size ½-3 ounces.

Meat provides protein, iron and fat.

Fats, Sweets in Menus Add Zest, Calories

Fats and sweets are the miscellaneous food group.

While they add zest to menus, they also add calories.

One teaspoon of fat or sugar adds about 50 calories, so try not to add too much zest to meals, the specialist advises.

County Extension Office Can Provide Food Guides

In planning nutritious meals throughout life, remember that all persons need the same nutrients but in varying amounts, Mrs. Sweeten says.

Ask the local county extension office for a copy of the Daily Food Guide and other meal-planning and nutrition-related fact sheets, she adds.

Coping with conflicts in marriage

COLLEGE STATION—One key to keeping the "newlywed feeling" is the ability to recognize and handle conflict, bad feelings, or guilt, says Dorothy Taylor, a family life education specialist.

"Even when there are differences, open conflict does not have to result, if couples try to really listen, try to reason and then give each other the benefit of a doubt when decoding messages they think they heard," she says.

"Couples must realize that each partner brings to the marriage a different set of complicated communication codes, hopes and two individual personalities," she explains.

The specialist is with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M System.

Exchanges between new couples carry both information and feelings, she continues. "Newlyweds may feel guilty when they experience feelings of both love and hate so early in a marriage and fail to recognize these as normal feelings for all human beings.

"Newlyweds need not lose feelings of deep love even if hate is present at times. No one loves totally, and couples naturally will feel good and bad about each other at different times," Miss Taylor says.

Even in the best marriages there will be conflict, the specialist stresses.

"No matter how hard couples try, communication sometimes fails.

"Major causes of conflict are money, household management, personality differences, personal goals and sexual adjustments.

Recognizing the cause of a conflict as the real "villian," rather than making each other the villian will help keep communication lines open and lead to more mutually satisfying solutions, the specialist says.

Attacking the issue and not the person will help avoid such situations as open conflict. A conflict may start over who carries out the garbage and end up with, "If you loved me, I wouldn't have to ask you to help me," she explains.

There is merit in the sayings, "Kiss and make up," "Never go to sleep on a fight," and "Don't let the sun set on your anger," the specialist says.

"All three sayings indicate that couples do want help, that they want to face the real solution and that they do not want hostile feelings to prevail over their marriage relationship," she adds.

Plan wardrobes for future

COLLEGE STATION—Wedding wardrobes add a special touch when they fit the occasion and the future, says one clothing specialist.

A wedding wardrobe and honeymoon attire, except for the bridal grown, can enhance the overall wardrobe when it is planned with a careful eye toward career, storage and upkeep, advises Beverly Rhoades.

Miss Rhoades is with the Texas Aqricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System.

Her guidelines for the wedding itself starts with considering the financial resources of both the bride and groom and their families, the type of wedding they want, community customs and social status of the families.

All of these must balance with future needs, she cautions.

Sentimentality, momentary whims and childhood dreams should not overpower practical considerations if it will mean regrets later when money ie needed for other purchases, she says.

While clothing accounts for only about 17-25 percent of wedding costs, careful planning can cut the total cost, even though the wedding gown is still a major expense, averaging about $200, Miss Rhoades adds.

Honeymoon attire depends partly on the place, season, travel and honeymoon duration, but also consider the current wardrobe and newly married lifestyle, the specialist suggests. Her guidelines include:

—Plan attire to coordinate with the current wardrobe and to serve as part of the basic wardrobe during the first years of marriage.

—Avoid items that can be worn only once due to such factors as the honeymoon location.

Notify these if changing name

COLLEGE STATION—Although some women are choosing to keep their own name after marriage, the great majority are following tradition and adopting their husband's name.

If you decide to change your name, remember to notify those listed below, recommends Claudia Kerbel, consumer information specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System.

—Employer. Notify employers a month in advance, if possible.

—Driver's license. Have the name changed on this within 10 days at a cost of one dollar. To find the office look in the Yellow Pages under Government-State for Department of Public Safety.

—Credit cards. Contact all companies by making a note on the monthly statement for each one, or write a letter to each.

—Charge accounts. Contact all stores with whom you have credit accounts.

—Bank. Sign a new signature card for each savings and checking account.

—Social security. Call the social security administration and ask them to send a form for change of name. To find the number of the nearest office look in the Yellow Pages under Government-U.S. Health, Education and Welfare Department-Social Security Administration.

—Voter registration certificate. Call or visit the office of the Tax-Assessor-Collector.

—Doctor and dentist.

—Insurance company. Policies should be written in the new name. You may also want to change the benefactor.

—Organizations you belong to.

—Wills and legal contracts. Be sure the new name appears in your will and those in which you are mentioned.

Home furnishing plan outlined

COLLEGE STATION—A newlyweds home-furnishing plan should have ample "room" for each partner's ideas and for new and old pieces of furniture, advises a housing and home furnishings specialist.

When couples focus on comfort, convenience, attractive decorating and wise spending, their home-furnishing plans are the most effective, says Mrs. Sue Young with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System.

Their plan should include two parts—ways to use furniture they already own and ideas for acquiring new pieces—so all furnishings will serve the couple to best advantage for the money spent, she adds.

In deciding how to use existing furniture, remember that the careful use of color is the most economical decorating tool.

Quality older pieces of furniture or "hand-me-downs" will merit the time and effort it takes to refinish them. A coat or two of paint will make other older pieces usable quickly and easily.

In planning for new pieces of furniture, remember each one should have enought personality and style to help accomplish the desired look, and each should blend with pieces already in the home.

In deciding on new furniture, couples can choose from faddish or "fun" pieces, better-quality contemporaryor traditional items or antiques.

A list of possibilities will help in the decision. It can point to a final plan for buying several pieces of faddish furniture or fewer pieces of better quality, the specialist says.

Faddish or "fun" furniture—such as those with the "Egyptian" look—probably will be out of style in a short period of time, while quality items will remain in style and blend with other new peices throughout the years.

In considering contemporary furnishings, remember that many are made for houses and apartments being built now.

These pieces add a spacious feeling to a room, and some actually allow for more living space, since they are smaller and lighter in weight. They offer portability without loss of strength, Mrs. Young says.

Traditional furniture, on the other hand, can be accurate copies of real antiques or carefully scaled-down versions of antiques. This furniture will continue to be a favorite with lasting value, the specialist says.

For couples who like antiques, buying authentic ones has two advantages. They offer a way to furnish a home, and they are a financial investment.

Regardless of the choices, also remember that each piece should be easy-care and versatile enough to blend with several architectural styles, textures and colors, so they can move with today's mobile families, Mrs. Young adds.

Surprise is expressed by Ann Graham, when presented a birthday cake by residents of Leisure Lodge. Mrs. Graham has been the Bible instructor for weekly sessions at the home since 1964. (Staff Photo)

Bible teacher honored

Residents of Leisure Lodge Nursing Home honored their weekly Bible study teacher, Ann Graham, with a surprise birthday party recently in the home. Sixty guests were in attendance.

Mrs. Graham, who has been the "permanent" Bible instructor since 1964, is a longtime member of the Alathean Class of the First Baptist Church. When the home opened as Parkview Nursing Home, the class selected it as a mission project, providing entertainment and devotional periods each week. The late Mrs. J. E. "Bob" Hill provided the leadership for the project, Mrs. Graham said. The group made weekly visits to entertain, present Bible studies and serve refreshments.

Residents of the home always enjoy singing, Mrs. Graham stated, and this posed a problem in the beginning because of the lack of a piano or any musical instrument. Mrs. Graham said Mrs. Hill enlisted the aid of the Alathean Class, a class at the First United Methodist Church and other groups and individuals, and a piano was obtained. Mrs. Yates Brown has been playing the piano accompaniment for the singing sessions since that time.

When the sponsoring class decided to provide a continuity to the Bible studies, the First Baptist Church provided residents with religious quarterlies and large print Bibles.

Asparagus supply up, prices drop

By BETSY BALSLEY
The Los Angeles Times

One of the most looked-forward-to seasons of the year is here. At long last asparagus has begun to drop in price a smidgin as supplies increase. Granted it still isn't cheap, but then not much is in the food field these days. About all one can do is wince a bit and then go on and pay the price or virtuously pass it by.

Things are looking up at the moment, however, for the Fresh Produce Council says that asparagus prices and quality "should remain constant or even improve" in the next week or so. California's shipping districts of Lodi and Stockton should begin harvesting their asparagus crops this week, weather permitting, so the next couple of weeks should show some improvement in the price of this wonderful spring vegetable.

During the early part of the asparagus season there's no better way to serve it than perfectly plain with just a bit of butter and maybe a squirt or two of lemon juice. But even the most devoted asparagus lover likes a change now and then. And that's just what we have to offer today.

Asparagus has a wonderful affinity for cheese. Combine it with fresh mushroom caps, cover the two with a mustard and sherry-laced sauce, then top the whole thing with some shredded cheese and slivered almonds for a side dish that will complement any plain cut of meat. Or, if calories are absolutely of no concern, combine asparagus with artichoke hearts in a simple casserole that calls for the two vegetables to be baked in a creamy Swiss cheese sauce. Don't plan on any leftovers here.

If you'd like a good meatless main dish that features asparagus, Pasta With Asparagus-Tomato Sauce is your answer.

Although the recipe calls for penne, a long tubular pasta, almost any type of large macaroni can be used. This is a good recipe for asparagus that may not be perfect in size and shape as it is cut into short pieces before cooking. Decidedly Italian in its flavorings, the recipe calls for plenty of garlic and tomatoes as seasonings. But probably its greatest attribute is that it goes together in a jiffy. Serve it with a green salad and some fresh fruit, plus a bottle of good red Italian wine, and no one will leave the table hungry.

Served cold in salads or hot in side dishes, fresh asparagus deserves to appear frequently on dining tables during the season which, unfortunately, is always too brief. Here is a suggestion that will help you vary your use of this spring treat.

CHEESE-ASPARAGUS SOUFFLE

2 envelopes unflavored gelatin
1 cup chicken broth
8 eggs, separated
2 cups milk
2 cups shredded Gruyere or Swiss cheese
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
1 teaspoon salt
Dash hot pepper sauce
2 tablespoons minced onion
2 cups whipping cream, whipped
3 cups drained cooked asparagus pieces
12 drained cooked asparagus spears

Soften gelatin in broth in top of double boiler. Add egg yolks, milk, cheese, Worchestershire, salt and pepper sauce. Place over boiling water and cook, stirring constantly, until gelatin and cheese are melted and sauce is smooth. Remove from heat and chill, stirring now and then, until mixture mounds on a spoon. Beat egg whites until stiff but not dry. Fold into gelatin mixture along with onion and whipped cream. Add asparagus pieces and fold in lightly.

Meanwhile, grease a 2 1-2 quart souffle dish and fold a strip of wax paper long enough to go around outside of dish. Tie strip around dish so it extends 2 or 3 inches above top. Stand asparagus spears upright around inside of souffle dish and spoon souffle mixture into dish. Chill until firm. Just before serving, remove collar. Makes 8 to 12 servings.

EGGS ASPARAGUS

6 tablespoons butter or margarine
1/4 cup flour
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 1-3 cups milk
2 tablespoons lemon juice
4 beaten egg yolks
1/4 cup toasted, slivered almonds
24 cooked asparagus spears, heated
12 slices buttered toast, or 6 split and buttered English muffins
12 sliced, hard-cooked eggs, or 12 poached eggs

Melt butter in top of double boiler over boiling water. Blend in flour and salt and then stir in milk. Cook sauce, stirring, until thickened. Remove from heat and stir in lemon juice and egg yolks with wire whisk. Stir over boiling water again 4 minutes or until sauce is thickened and smooth. Fold in almonds. Keep sauce warm. Place 4 asparagus spears on each serving of 2 slices of toast or English muffins. Top each with 2 sliced, hard-cooked eggs or 2 poached eggs. Spoon on sauce and garnish with additional almonds if desired. Makes 6 servings.

Boxing, tiling bathtub can be fun

By VIVIAN BROWN
AP Newsfeatures

An old bathroom, especially a nice roomy one, may become a fun decorating project that includes boxing and tiling the bathtub.

Even a small room can be beautiful. In one instance, a well-known interior designer had two walls glass-paneled from tub to ceiling, and had the tub boxed in with white tile. It was a lovely effect and made the room look much larger.

If you build a strong frame you can have a successful project, says "The Complete Home Carpenter," edited by George Daniels.

The frame should be strong enough to resist warping in a steamy atmosphere. It must be properly fastened to all of the surfaces it touches so that it will be able to withstand knocks from mops or other floor cleaning equipment. The outer surface should be watertight with the pipework under the tub accessible for maintenance, the book recommends.

This excellent book has complete directions for building the tub enclosure. Other projects it offers include a storage box on wheels, built-in alcoves, room dividers, an English-style flat roof, Dutch doors, and even garden fences.

One-half-inch exterior plywood is preferable to less durable surfaces if one plans to tile, paint or laminate the surface of the enclosure.

Before you buy anything, the space into which each frame should fit must be measured at several points where the floor might not be even and "the walls slightly out of true," as usually happens in an old house, the book advises.

After measuring, using plumb lines and following directions to the letter, scale drawings are made and the quantity of wood and other materials is determined. A reasonable amount must be allowed for waste as tiles might break when you try to cut them.

An old-fashioned bathtub with round corners can be put into a square box by bridging the gap at the corners with a double round-edged corner tile.

The author feels that the frames are simple to make even though the directions may seem complicated.

An experienced do-it-yourselfer may make his enclosure something special. He might put a wide border of tiles around the top of the tub, an effect that was observed in a newly decorated apartment. The bathroom must be fairly large if the tub size is increased. For that kind of project a good tile man might be needed to do the project. A do-it-yourselfer who knows his own limitations can be an accurate judge of how much outside help he will need in completing his project.

City Altrusans celebrate

The Altrusa Club of Midland, Inc., observed the 61st anniversary of the organization of Altrusa International, at a luncheon and business session in the Midland Hilton.

Mrs. E. E. Cunningham, chairman of the Altrusa information committee, was in charge of the program and special decorations, which included daisies and blue and white balloons centering each table, plus a birthday cake. A special plaque in blue and white "Happy 61st," designed by Horace Busby, centered the head table.

Ann Hicks, a new member, and Loleta B. Guffey, a member since 1959 and past president, spoke on what being an Altrusan meant to her. Each emphasized the philanthropic work done by the club, the quality and character of the women in Altrusa, the importance of friendships made and continued through the years, and especially the interest club members have in each other and in helping others.

Mrs. Cunningham traced the history of Altrusa, the first classified club for women, from its beginning in Nashville, Tenn., in April 1919, its becoming national at a convention in Chicago, Ill., four years later and international in 1939. She noted that the membership in 13 countries is more than 20,000. The current president is Mrs. Letha H. Brown of San Diego, Calif.

Concluding the program was a song about Altrusa membership written and sung by Mrs. Larry Grimm. The candles on the cake were blown out by the club's newest member, Ann Kendall.

Mrs. J. P. H. McMullan, chairman of community service, reported, and members voted to assist the senior citizens' bazaar to be held in Dellwood Plaza Mall in May.

Marilyn VanPetten, chairman of vocational services, reported the proposed booklets for guidance in the business world for widows, divorcees and others newly forced to head the family, were well received, and final plans to publish these would be completed in the near future.

The membership chairman, Myrtlene Bearden, reported on Altrusa's representation at the Chamber of Commerce. Mrs. Robert Cain Jr. was named to represent the club.

It also was announced the club will furnish approximately 50 complete lunches for workers in the "Christmas in April" project.

DEAR ABBY

Meals seem anything but 'kosher'

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My husband is a clergyman, but I'm not disclosing the denomination because this is a small town. A few months ago, he started counseling a young woman in an effort to save her marriage. (I'll call her "Mrs. J.")

Last week he phoned to say he wouldn't be home for lunch as usual because Mrs. J. was coming in for counseling and it might take his entire lunch hour.

I didn't think anything of it until a few days ago when he told me not to bother preparing lunch for the next few weeks because Mrs. J. needs a lot of counseling, and she always brings a nice lunch for both of them when she comes in. (She started with one session a week, now it's five!)

Yesterday when my husband came home, I noticed liquor on his breath. I was shocked because he seldom drinks, and I asked him if he had been drinking. He didn't try to hide it. He said Mrs. J. had brought along a small bottle of wine to have with their lunch.

Abby, I'm not the typical jealous wife, but I'm beginning to wonder what's going on at those sessions.

What do you think?—HIS WIFE

DEAR WIFE: I hope he's not a rabbi, because those lunches sound anything but "kosher" to me.

DEAR ABBY: Our daughter called us last month and announced that it was official—she and her boyfriend are living together.

We, her parents, are very unhappy about this arrangement. We like the young man very much. He is a college graduate (as is our daughter), attractive, successful and from a good family. (We are friendly with his parents.)

Our daughter and her boyfriend are both 28, and there is no reason why they should not get married, but she made it plain that they have no such plans for the present.

The boy's parents don't like this setup any more than we do, but they are also helpless. People are asking us questions, and it is very embarrassing. What should we tell them?—EMBARRASSED

DEAR EMBARRASSED: Don't be embarrassed. Parents are not responsible for the actions of their 28-year-old children, which is what you should tell people.

DEAR ABBY: In response to the family with "a darling little 88-year-old Granny" who reads their mail, may I add a thought:

At her age, this dear woman probably doesn't receive much mail of her own. By now, most of her friends and probably many of her relatives have already passed on. And since she lives with her daughter, she probably doesn't even get bills of her own.

Reading the rest of the family's mail might be her way of feeling in the mainstream of life. Perhaps if the family saw to it that there was something at "mail call" each day for Granny, she wouldn't need to read someone else's mail to feel important.

Think about it. At 88, receiving a personally addressed card just might be the highlight of your day.—B. IN MEDFORD, N.J.

DEAR B.: Bless you for your empathetic attitude.

Mushrooms make a beautiful soup

This savory Russian Mushroom and Potato Soup is custom-made, with fresh mushrooms and potatoes but requires less than 30 minutes cooking time.

Mushrooms are the most accomodating of vegetables. You can eat them raw, as in appetizers and salads. Or saute them for a few minutes and enjoy their world-famous flavor. Or, as in soups, cook them either briefly or for a half hour or longer, depending on the recipe. In brief cooking, you get mushroom flavor from the slice you spoon out of the soup. After long cooking, the mushroom flavor has mingled with the brothy liquid.

So, if you want it both ways, cook part of the mushrooms along with other long cookers and save a few to be sauteed in butter and spooned into the almost finished soup.

Russian Mushroom and Potato Soup will remind you how delicious soups can be when made "from scratch" and with mushrooms. Here, again, you can add some of the mushrooms early in the soup-making, when carrots and leeks are put on the heat.

The Quick Mushroom and Tomato Soup shows how quickly and easily you can doll up canned soups, whether tomato or pea, vegetable, onion, or what-have-you. So, when you buy a supply of canned soups, why not invest in a couple of cans of sliced or chopped muchrooms with which to glamourize soups when you are in the mood for this treatment?

RUSSIAN MUSHROOM AND POTATO SOUP

5 tablespoons butter or margarine, divided
2 leeks, chopped (makes about 2 cups)
2 large carrots, sliced (makes about 1½ cups)
6 cups boiling water or chicken broth
1 tablespoon chopped fresh dill or 2 teaspoons dill weed
2 teaspoons salt
⅛ teaspoon ground black pepper
1 bay leaf
2 pounds potatoes, peeled and diced (makes about 5 cups)
1 pound fresh mushrooms or 2 can (6 to 8 oz. each) sliced mushrooms
1 cup half and half or light cream
¼ cup flour

In a kettle melt 3 tablespoons of the butter. Add leeks and carrots; saute for 5 minutes. Stir in water, dill, salt, black pepper and bay leaf. Add potatoes. Simmer, covered, until potatoes are just tender, about 20 minutes. Remove bay leaf. Meanwhile, rinse, pat dry and slice fresh mushrooms (makes about 5 cups) or drain canned mushrooms. In a large skillet melt remaining 2 tablespoons butter. Add mushroms; saute until golden, about 5 minutes. Combine half and half with flour. Stir in to soup along with mushrooms. Cook and stir until lightly thickened. Serve garnished with fresh dill, if desired. Yields about 14 cups.

QUICK MUSHROOM-TOMATO SOUP

1 can (6 to 8 oz.) sliced mushrooms
Water
2 cans (10¾ oz. each) condensed tomato soup
1 envelope (1.37 oz.) dehydrated onion soup mix
2/3 cup packaged pre-cooked rice

Drain mushrooms, reserving mushrooms and liquid separately. Combine mushroom liquid and water to make 3 cups liquid. In a medium saucepan thoroughly boil. Stir in onion soup mix. Reduce heat and simmer, covered, for 8 minutes. Stir in reserved mushrooms. Simmer, covered, for 2 minutes longer. Stir in rice. Remove from heat, and let stand, covered, for 5 minutes. Yields 7 cups.

California strawberries are here in profusion

Fresh California strawberries are back in profusion, a sunny gift from the golden state.

California produces over 70% of the nation's strawberries, and now is the time to take advantage of the bounty. California strawberries will be available into the late fall months, but now until mid-May is the peak of the fresh strawberry season.

To make sure every berry is enjoyed to the fullest, the California Strawberry Advisory Board has some suggestions for selection and storage. Choose shiny, rich-red berries with bright green, fresh looking caps. They do not ripen after being picked, so think "red" when you buy. Never wash strawberries or remove their caps until you are ready to use them. The natural protective outer layer and the caps help to preserve their flavor, texture and nutrients. Speaking of nutrients, did you know that one cup of fresh strawberries contains more than the day's requirement for Vitamin C and has only 60 calories?

After bringing four strawberries home, remove them from their baskets and arrange them in a single layer on a cookie sheet or other shallow container. Store in the refrigerator and the cool temperature will keep them fresh and bright for several days.

Now comes the difficult decision. Which way to serve them? If you can't decide on one way, how about enjoying them in a variety of different flavored dips. Fill a large bowl full of chilled, bright red strawberries, leaving the caps on for an eye-catching centerpiece. Have smaller bowls handy, filled with a variety of dips, such as snowy powdered sugar, chocolate fondue, or dairy sour cream with a dish of brown sugar close by. All simple, all delicious.

Here are three more dreamy dip suggestions. Have a crowd over, arm them with fondue forks or skewers, and invite them to indulge in a fresh strawberry frenzy, California style.

STRAWBERRY SPEARS

2 pints California strawberries
½ cup heavy cream
½ cup dairy sour cream
¼ cup powdered sugar
½ teaspoon vanilla
1 teaspoon finely grated lemon peel
1 teaspoon lemon juice

Wash and stem berries. Spread on paper towel-lined tray to dry. Refrigerate. Beat cream stiff. On low speed, beat in remaining ingredients. Turn into serving bowl. Chill. At serving time, arrange berries on tray, around bowl of dip. Let guest spear berries with fondue forks and swirl in cream dip. Makes about 2 cups dip. Serves 6 to 8.

OTHER DIPS

(1) Blend equal parts stiffly whipped cream and fruit flavored yogurt.

(2) Into 1 cup stiffly whipped cream stir 2 to 3 tablespoons of any one of the following: sweet marsala, cream de cassis, orange flavored liquer, hot cocoa mix, light, mild flavored molasses. Add powdered sugar to taste.

Beans make Saturday supper easy

Enjoy Saturday night in true New England style with a supper of Maple Sweet Fruited Baked Beans.

Saturday night and the cooking is easy. Or should be. After a full day of frenetic activity—running errands, catching up on household chores, or just plain having fun—you deserve a meal that's simple and quick to make.

Take a tip from the Puritans, those doughty New Englanders, who never cooked on Saturday night. Strict religious laws forbade labor of any kind from sundown Saturday until sundown Sunday. The relied on a great pot of flavorful baked beans topped with pork for sustenance, beginning at Saturday night supper.

Today, convenient, canned brick oven baked beans make light work of a hearty but relaxed Saturday evening meal. And just by varying some of the added ingredients, you can come up with a new dish every time you serve them.

Try Tangy Sweet Baked Beans for your first venture. Saute slices of knockwurst, chopped onion and green pepper in butter or margarine. Add them, along with brown sugar and catsup, to the beans for a pleasing contrast of flavors and textures. Round the meal out with hearty brown bread and cole slaw, and you'll relish a wickedly delicious supper, while feeling shamelessly smug about how little effort it involved.

Some characteristic ingenuity gives a dish of Yankee Baked Beans its appeal. Sweet pepper relish, chopped onion, green pepper and chili sauce, to be specific. And since each 8-ounce serving or brick oven baked beans supplies 16 grams of protein, you can serve them as the main dish at a meatless meal. They'll provide healthy amounts of vitamin C, iron and other vital nutrients as well.

Add a family-pleaser like Sausage 'N Apple Beans to your repertoire of Saturday night easies. Just as the name implies, the dish starts with baked beans and takes off from there with a little help from brown 'n serve sausage links, sliced apples and maple flavored syrup.

TANGY SWEET BAKED BEANS

4 knockwurst, sliced
¼ cup chopped onion
2 tablespoons chopped green pepper
1 can (28 ounces) brick oven baked beans

SATURDAY NITE DATES 'N BEANS

1/3 cup chopped dates
¼ cup catsup
½ teaspoon ground cinnamon
¼ teaspoon dry mustard

In a medium bowl mix together baked beans, dates, catsup, cinnamon, and mustard. Place in a medium baking dish or bean pot and bake, covered, at 325 degrees for 30 minutes. Makes 4 servings.

Tuna wholesome as wholesome does

Current nutrition know-how emphasizes the importance of complete protein at every meal, that is, protein complete in all 22 amoni acids. Particulary recommended for dieters and senior citizens are complete protein foods which are relatively low in calories, as well as cholesterol. Tuna meets this criterion as though specifically created for it.

The swing to more wholesome cookery with natural foods is no longer a fad. It's a trend. No need to tell shoppers that whole grain cereals and seeds are now a part of the supermarket shelf establishment. For the most part, they're not expensive and serve to stretch protein foods in interesting ways.

By the same token, the cost of canned tuna in vegetable oil—unlike many beef and meat cuts—is still reasonable. And tuna is comparable in complete protelen to lean red meat—which makes it even more of a bargain.

In the following recipe, a variety of vegetables are steamed for a short time in a colander set over hot water in a saucepan. Then they're added to the other ingredients: tuna, cooked brown rice, pumpernickel bread crumbs, wheat germ sesame seeds, greated Cheddar cheese and eggs. The casserole is baked for only half an hour—and during this time you can prepare the easy Herb Cream Sauce with which it's served.

As you can see, this dish isn't called "Good Health" Tuna Casserole for nothing!

"GOOD HEALTH" TUNA CASSEROLE

2½ cups shredded pared carrots (about 4 large carrots)
1 cup finely chopped onion
1½ cups chopped celery
1 green pepper, chopped
2½ cups chopped raw escarole or spinach
2 cans (6¼ or 7 ounces each) tuna in vegetable oil
2 cups cooked brown rice
1 cup pumpernickel bread crumbs
¼ cup wheat germ
3 eggs, beaten
2 tablespoons toasted sesame seeds
2 tablespoons grated Cheddar cheese

Place carrots, onion, celery and green pepper in a colander over boiling water. Cover and steam until barely tender. Add escarole and steam 3 minutes longer. Place in a bowl and add other ingredients; mix well. Turn mixture into greased 3-quart baking dish. Cover and bake in 350 degree oven for 30 minutes. Serve with Herb Cream Sauce*. Yield: 8 to 10 servings.

HERB CREAM SAUCE

¼ cup butter or margarine
¼ cup flour
2 cups milk
½ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon white pepper
½ teaspoon dried leaf basil
2 tablespoons lemon juice
2 tablespoons chopped parsley
3 tablespoons grated Cheddar cheese

In a saucepan melt butter. Remove from heat; blend in flour. Stir in milk and return to heat; cook, stirring constantly, until sauce thickens and comes to a boil. Add salt, pepper, basil, lemon juice and parsley. Cook 1 minute more. Remove from heat and stir in cheese. Yield: 2 1/3 cups.

Olives, shrimp make meatless dish festive

When the occasion calls for a meatless main dish, "Olive-Shrimp Pancake" will turn it into a real occasion.

The pancake baked in a skillet might be described as half pancake, half souffle. It puffs while in the oven, then "settles" to form a delicious shelll for piquantly seasoned creamed shrimp and ripe olive wedges. The combination of flavors is one to treasure.

While eggs are so plentiful these days—and ripe olives, too—no time could be better than right now to savor "Olive-Shrimp Pancake." A good accompaniment would be marinated green beans.

Whole ripe olives in relish assortments are an American tradition. Here's a good tip to keep in mind when serving them to be eaten out-of-hand: Drain the olives until dry or pat them dry with paper towels; roll them in a bowl with a few drops of olive or salad oil. This way the olives will keep their shiny, appetizing appearance—and disappear even faster than usual!

OLIVE-SHRIMP PANCAKE

1 cup canned pitted ripe olives
4 eggs
3½ cups milk
1¼ cups flour
½ teaspoon salt
2 (4½ ounce) cans deveined shrimp
¼ cup butter or margarine
½ teaspoon paprika
½ teaspoon dry mustard
2 tablespoons chopped parsley

Preheat oven to 375 degree F. Beat eggs. Stir in 2 cups milk. Gradually add 1 cup flour and salt. Beat with rotary beater until smooth. Pour into greased casserole dish. Bake for 45 minutes. Meanwhile, cut olives into wedges. Rinse and drain shrimp. Melt butter in saucepan. Add remaining ¼ cup flour, mustard and paprika. Gradually stir in milk, cooking and and stirring until mixture is thickened. Add oilives, shrimp and parsley. Pour warm filling into completed pancake. Cut into pieces. Serve at once. Makes 6 servings.

This Olive-Shrimp Pancake is baked in a skillet to be described as half pancake, half souffle. It puffs while in the oven, then "settles" to form a shell for creamed shrimp and ripe olive wedges.

It's back to fresh basics in space age microwave

Looking to get "back to basics" in your daily diet, but afraid you don't have time to prepare them? Well, hand in hand with the renewed interest in good nutrition has come an advance in kitchen technology, the microwave oven, that make convenience items out of many healthful foods.

In the case of basic fresh vegetables, the microwave oven not only reduces cooking time dramatically, it also conserves fresh flavor, bright color and, most important, their abundance of vital nutrients. Speed, plus the fact that little or no water is used in microwave vegetable cookery, means that the vitamins and minerals stay inside the fresh commodities instead of being lost in the cooking water, says the United Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Association.

All the fresh ingredients of Spring Vegetable Medley take readily to preparation in the microwave oven. Plump spring asparagus, sliced fresh mushrooms and juicy tomato wedges cook to colorful, just-tender goodness—that is, if you bear in mind a few rules for successful results.

To be sure all the vegetables cook evenly, cut them into pieces of uniform size. Cover the dish tightly with a glass lid, waxed paper or plastic wrap to insure the fastest cooking. And salt the vegetables after removal from the oven; otherwise they may lose some of their moisture.

Precise timing is essential to avoid overcooking. Follow the oven manufacturer's directions carefully, remembering that all foods continue to cook for a few minutes after removal from the microwave, an interval known as "standing time."

In a matter of minutes you'll have a delicious vegetable side dish, one that's brimming with fresh flavor and still full of the wholesome vitamins and minerals nature provided.

Use the same microwave cookery guidelines to prepare Glazed Carrots And Potatoes, fresh family favorites enhanced by a tangy-sweet coating of butter, honey and fresh lemon juice. And be sure to stir the vegetables halfway through cooking time to distribute moisture and maintain the same degree of doneness throughout.

With fresh in your microwave, you'll be back to healthful basics in no time at all!

SPRING VEGETABLE MEDLEY

2 tablespoons butter or margarine
½ pound fresh asparagus spears, cut into 2-inch pieces
½ teaspoon dried leaf basil, crumbled
⅛ teaspoon pepper
½ pound fresh mushrooms, sliced
1 medium tomato, cut in wedges

Add mushrooms; mix well, cover, cook 3 minutes. Add tomato; mix well, cover, cook 1½ minutes. Stir in salt. Cover, let stand 3 minutes before serving. Makes 4 servings.

Note: Follow microwave oven manufacturer's directions for proper settings for melting butter and cooking vegetables.

GLAZED CARROTS AND POTATOES

2 tablespoons butter or margarine
2 tablespoons honey
1 tablespoon fresh lemon juice
1½ cups carrots (6 medium), cut in 1-inch pieces
1½ cups new potatoes (about 6) pared, cut in chunks

Note: Follow microwave oven manufacturer's directions for proper settings for melting butter and cooking vegetables.

Persistent newsman breaks down secrecy veil around unsafe dams

By ROBERT BARKDOLL
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — On the morning of June 7, 1976, after 37 persons had been killed in the collapse of Idaho's Teton Dam, reporter Gaylord Shaw played a hunch. He began calling the Washington headquarters of the Bureau of Reclamation seeking "any reports you might have received from the field during the Teton Dam's construction."

Rebuffed time and again, he persisted and finally struck pay dirt.

"Oh, you mean our L-29s," an engineer told him. "Sure, we got them every month."

Shaw had never heard of L-29s, but the engineer's spontaneous response launched the 35-year-old newsman on a tenacious but often-frustrating odyssey that eventually carried him into the deepest recesses of the federal bureaucray — an odyssey that is now certain to save lives, homes and property.

For the next 18 months, in Washington and in North Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Missouri, Texas, Colorado, Utah and California, Shaw peeled away layer after layer of government red tape and bestirred lethargic officials with an investigation that disclosed the dangerous state of the nation's dams.

In the end the government, from the White House down, was prompted to launch a massive program under which thousands of dams are now being inspected by professional engineers.

It all began when Shaw got his hands on the obscure L-29s. And that wasn't as easy as it seemed.

The Bureau of Reclamation's chief civil engineer at first agreed to grant Shaw access to the monthly construction reports but then checked with his boss and said: "Sorry, it's been decided you can't see the L-29s....They are internal documents prepared by the project engineer; they're not for public inspection."

Shaw countered by saying he had no choice but to write a story saying the bureau was sitting on documents that might shed light on the cause of the Teton catastrophe. He pledged to invoke the Freedom of Information Act, if necessary, and returned to his office.

Within 10 minutes, the chief engineer was on the phone advising Shaw that bureau officials had decided he could see the L-29s after all.

After studying these documents, plus hundreds of others and after trips to the field, Shaw wrote his Teton Dam stories, then plunged into a research project: How many more Teton catastrophes lurk among the 49,000 large dams in the United States?

This research resulted in a 2,000-word memo that Shaw submitted to his editors on Feb. 1, 1977. After citing a few of the unsafe dams he had uncovered, the memo concluded:

"We are flirting with disaster as far as dams are concerned. One of these days a catastrophe far greater than Teton will rivet attention on the problem. It may happen tomorrow, or it may not happen for 20 years. But it will happen. I propose that we undertake a major project on dam safety."

Given the go-ahead, Shaw once again ran afoul of the bureaucracy. "The problems encountered here were much the same as with the Teton project," he says now. "The bureaucrats were reluctant to acknowledge that safety problems existed, and evn more reluctant to produce documents dealing with those problems.

"I spent hours in the office of a middle-level Reclamation Bureau official in Denver trying to convince him that I had a right to examine his reports on the need for updating ancient dams. Finally he relented but would only allow me to look at the reports, not make copies. So that took days, but it paid off in providing a list of inadequate bureau dams.

"Much the same pattern prevailed with oher bureau officials in Washington, in Denver and elsewhere; so I found myself haranguing, cajoling, sweet-talking and, where necessary, invoking the Freedom of Information Act to get reports and other documents from the Reclamation Bureau.

"Then it was on to the Corps of Engineers, the Federal Power Commission, the Tennessee Valley Authority and other dam building agencies. Each agency had its own record-keeping and reporting formats, so in each case I had to master the bureaucratic routing systems before I could find what I needed."

The trail led Shaw into such arcane sub-departments as the structural section of the Engineering Division of the Corps of Engineers and the Office of Operation and Minantenace in the Reclamation Bureau's Center for Design and Construction.

When Shaw turned to the problem of private dams, there was little on paper; state and federal governments had ignored dam safety problems for years.

"So I turned to the proceedings of engineering conferences and seminars and was able to find a few nongovernment experts who could help trace the scope of he situation," Shaw says. "On my own, I developed case studies of private dam disasters and used them to report on the need for government regulation of private dams."

Out of the investigation came Shaw's startling disclosure that although Congress had passed an inspection law five years ago, not a single private dam had been inspected.

Finally, after the Toccoa Falls dam burst in Georgia on Nov. 6, 1977 and 39 persons were killed, President Carter freed funds that are now financing the inspection of private dams.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Miscarriages call for expert advice

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have had two miscarriages. They tell me that surgery can correct conditions that make pregnancy difficult. Do you have any special advice you could give me about this?—Wendy V.

Dear Wendy: The first thing to bear in mind is that miscarriages, or spontaneous abortions, are very frequent. According to some figures, one woman out of every three has at least one miscarriage—and this does not include the spontaneous abortions that often occur during the first few weeks of pregnancy and go unnoticed.

The second thing to be clear about is that spontaneous abortion generally means that the fetus was defective. It is a sort of natural reaction. I think a woman who has been through all this distress should say to herself, "It was very probably for the best."

If a woman has three miscarriages, these are considered "habitual," and an extremely thorough medical examination is called for. There are any number of abnormalities which may be causing the trouble, and some of them can be corrected by surgery. This does however, require careful preliminary evaluation. One technique is an X-ray of the uterus after a dye has been injected to outline its structure clearly.

I think you should talk this over with your doctor very carefully and thoroughly. He may wish to refer you to a specialist for a complete study.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I would like to know if drinking is apt to harm your baby when you are pregnant.—Marilyn G.

Dear Marilyn: You are certainly wise to double-check on this, because alcohol can damage the fetus. In fact, there is a condition called fetal alcohol syndrome which is found in babies of mothers who drink a lot. A small head, tremors, and small openings between the eyelids are some of the characteristics.

One recent study by Dr. Eileen Oulette of Harvard Medical School found such abnormalities in three out of four infants delivered by mothers who drank a great deal.

Dr. James Hanson of the University of Washington in Seattle has also studies the offspring of women who drank various amounts during their pregnancy. He estimates that chances of birth defects are low if less than two ounces of, say, 100-proof bourbon are consumed in a day. If the mother drinks between two and four ounces, the risks are around 10 percent. And they go up as the alcoholic intake increases—if she drinks 10 or more ounces a day, the danger could be 50 percent or even higher, according to Dr. Hanson.

(If you have a medical problem, see your doctor. If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot giver personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Home insulation available in safe, unsafe types

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

The importance of insulation in private homes has moved to the forefront in the past two years because of the emphasis on energy-saving measures.

Along with this recognition has come a flood of stories relating to the safety and nonsafety of various types of insulation. In some cases, insulation has acted as a barrier to the spread of fire. In others, it has created a hazard that didn't exist before the insulation was installed.

One example of its value as a fire safety factor occurred in Brandon, Fla., where a woman on the second floor of a house heard a loud noise, went downstairs and noticed smoke seeping under the door leading to the attached garage. She ran to a neighbor's house to call the fire department. What had happened, according to the National Fire Protection Association, was that fire in the attic of the house had caused the ceiling of the garage to collapse, making the noise that had alerted the woman to danger. The association added, "Fire investigating officials theorized that 6 inches of blown fiber glass insulation installed in the attic over the living room had retarded the fire's downward penetration into the living area. Since the area over the garage was not insulated, the ceiling in the garage failed first. Fire in an advanced stage rapidly spread from the garage and attic through the living area shortly after the house was evacuated."

The most widely used insulation is mineral wool, either fiber glass or rock wool. It won't burn because of the nature of the raw materials from which it is made. As a federal government specification explains, mineral wool is made "from mineral substances such as rock, slag or glass, processed from a molten state into an incombustible fibrous form."

When mineral wool fills the cavity of a house wall, it acts as a fire stop, says the Research Foundation of the National Association of Home Builders. It keeps fire from spreading vertically through the spaces between wall studs, like smoke and hot fumes rising up a chimney. However, vapor barriers on some mineral wool batts and blankets are flammable. Normally, there is no problem because the vapor barrier side of the insulation is covered by a construction material, but it's a good idea never to leave vapor barriers of this kind exposed, even in a situation — such as the walls of a storage room — where the appearance of the finished job is not important.

Cellulose insulation, which is made of paper, must be chemically treated to be fire retardant. Some brands bear the Underwriters Laboratories' label. A UL label indicating a flame spread rating of 25, for example, means that the tested material burned one-fourth as much as untreated red oak lumber. Federal Trade Commission chairman Michael Pertschuk has testified to a Congressional subcommittee that there is nothing inherently unsafe about cellulose-produced under standards that insure nonflammability. He said consumers must be careful about the material they install because many of the 750 known manufacturers of cellulose, many of them new to the business, don't know if their products are flammable or corrosive.

Urea formaldehyde foam, another home insulation, is combustible but presents no excessive risk of fire, according to the National Bureau of Standards. Foam is intended for use only in walls. Foam manufacturers and the bureau agree that it should not be installed in ceiling or attic floors.

Some answers

Q. — I have ordered some paneling I am going to install in an extra room of our house. I recall reading somewhere about the necessity of keeping the paneling a few days in the room where it is to be installed. Do I have this correct? And, if so, why is this necessary, since it means I will not be able to start work for a few days after delivery of the panels?

A. — Your recollection is correct. The panels must be exposed to the room's normal humidity before being installed so that they can adjust to the moisture. Follow the manufacturer's instructions on how the panels should be stacked during this adjustment period. If you put up the paneling as soon as the delivery has been made, the material may contract or expand after it has been attached to the studs or wall, resulting in some misalignment.

Q. — We are senior citizens and thinking about buying a mobile home where we would like to stay for the rest of our lives. However, we are a bit scared of taking such a step because we read from time to time about the owners of mobile home sites forcing tenants to leave for one reason or another. Is this legal?

A. — It is assumed that you are planning to live in a mobile home retirement community. Yes, such things as you mention have occurred, but they are becoming less frequent as the standards for such communities, especially those catering to the elderly, are raised. Also, lawmakers are passing more stringent regulations to protect the tenants. Of course, the ideal way to own a mobile home is to have it placed on your own land.

Q. — I have obtained some wooden discs cut from the trunk of a large tree that had been downed by a storm. I intend to use them to make a patio floor of the kind that I saw several years ago. Can you tell me how they should be laid into the soil?

A. — First, soak them in a wood preservative for a few hours. Prepare a gravel pit or bed, at least 4 inches in depth, for drainage. The discs won't rock or slide as you lay them if you cover the entire patio area with sand, then hose down gently. The sand settles in the gravel or grit in the spaces between the discs.

Ex-printer practices, teaches craft of marquetry

By CHRISTOPHER WEBER
Newsday

Marquetry — Decorative work in which elaborate patterns are formed by the insertion of pieces of material (as wood, shell, or ivory) into a wood veneer that is then applied to a surface (as a piece of furniture). — Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary

NEW YORK — Allan Fitchett tackled his first marquetry project when he was 8 years old. It was a footstool with the initial "A" inset.

The footstool wasn't something he'd be proud to produce today, Fitchett said, but he added, "My father still has it."

Since he crafted that footstool 51 years ago, Fitchett's taste for woodworking has turned first to avocation and now to profession. Fitchett was a printer and then superintendent of a printing plant in New York City until it moved to Connecticut. All the while, he worked with wood. When his firm moved, he decided to stay in Flushing.

He turned first to a private business as a restorer of antique furniture even tackling fire-damaged veneered pieces successfully. He was active in the founding of the Marquetry Society of America in 1972 and was president two years running. Now he's the education department for Albert Constantine and Son Inc. in New York city. The firm is a major purveyor of fine woods, veneers, tools and the like for everyone from woodcarvers and cabinetmakers to practitioners of marquetry whether professionals or Saturday artisans. Fitchett teaches marquetry and some other courses, such as furniture repair, and arranges for other educational efforts by the firm. But marquetry remains a major love.

"One of the beauties about this is that no matter what you do or how hard you try, what you make can never be made the same again," he said. "No two woods are the same."

What's also beautiful about it is that you no longer need to start at age 8 with the aid of an old-country neighbor to enjoy this combination of art and craft. To help you, there are the Marquetry Society of America (about 1,000 members) kits, and the classes at Constantine's, in the form of mail-order coures. Sometimes there are one-shot chances to learn, too. Fitchett has taught marquetry at Cooper-Hewitt Museum of Design, and the Marquetry Society mounted an exhibit and demonstrations for the Metropolitan Museum of Art in 1975.

Former printer Allan Fitchett has developed his marquetry — working with wood veneers — from avocation to profession. (Newsday Photo by Walter del Toro)

Marquetry, as it's usually practiced, today involves working with wood veneers only, rather than the precious gems and metals used on behalf of the rich in some previous societies or rather than using other materials such as ivory. That's to keep both the cost and the skill needed at a reasonable level.

The major attraction of marquetry is the chance to work with exotic woods to create something beautiful. The woods are in the form of a veneer, a thin sheet peeled from a tree in such a way as to show and enhance the color and the grain pattern. The thinness, only 1-42nd to 1-28th of an inch, keeps the cost down, yet doesn't affect durability once the veneer is properly mounted. There are about 50,000 identifable types of wood, Fitchett said, and about 200 of those are more or less commonly used.

In marquetry, small pieces of different types of veneer are cut according to a pattern and put together, much like assembling a jigsaw puzzle, to make a picture or a decorative border or inset on furniture. The types of wood used are chosen both for their intrinsic beauty and for how well their grain pattern and natural colors will contribute to the design or picture being made. Dyed veneers, usually sycamore, are also used to provide colors that naturally colored wood can't, particularly in pictorial marquetry. Pictorial marquetry is usually what beginners start with, and many stay with it. A beginner would usualy work from a kit that provides a pattern already worked out by someone leFitchett, plus the appropriate veneers. During the Bicentennial, a Great Sea of the United States that he designed and executed was one of the gifts sent to President Gerald R. Ford. The design is now sold as a kit.

Getting started doesn't cost much, and the skill needed for simpler forms using kits is within the grasp of almost any beginner. The basic tools are an Exacto knife or its equivalent, a roller such as that used for rolling wallpaper seams and a steel straightedge. You'd also need rubber cement, veneer tape and veneer glue. For a particular project, you'd need two line drawings of the pattern and the appropriate veneers.

Assuming you had the tools and other supplies, here's what you'd be doing as a beginner using a pictorial kit and the simplest form of marquetry, according to Fitchett:

Glue one of the two copies of the pattern to the waster, which is a base veneer into which the design is set. Use rubber cement applied to the back of the pattern, not the veneer, then roller the pattern onto the veneer. Using rubber cement allows you to pull the paper off easily without damaging the veneers once you're done; any glue that stays behind is easy to get off, too. Keep the second line drawing of the pattern in front of you for reference.

Holding the knife as you would a pencil, cut out one part of the pattern, such as a petal on a flower. You'll be cutting through the base veneer at the same time, to make a window. If you try to cut through all at once, you're guaranteed to splinter the wood, so scribe the lines several times with light to moderate pressure — many fine cuts — until the knife goes through all the way around.

Pick up the appropriate veneer piece for that window, such as a red-dyed piece for a rose petal. Position it underneath until you get the grain running in the right direction, such as from base to tip on a rose petal. Using veneer tape, tape the veneer underneath and set the work down, face up. The tape not only will keep the veneer from slipping while you're cutting through the window, but also will help to keep the wood from tearing apart or splintering. Veneer tape is thin with a gummed backing that won't stay subbornly on the veneer or pull apart the wood once you remove it. Fitchett said a substitute for veneer tape would be 3M Magic Transparent Tape.

Using the edges of the window as a guide, scribe a line on the veneer with relatively light pressure, then cut repeatedly until you go through and have your flower petal or whatever. Remove the veneer piece it was cut from. Turn over the piece you've just cut, so that what was the back (down) side is now the front. Place it in the window, roller it down, and fasten it there with veneer tape across the front of the work. You turn over the piece you've just cut out because you've been cutting at a slight angle and turning it over will mve you a tighter fit. You repeat that process for every part of the line drawing. (If you like jigsaw puzzles, this may be another reason for you to love marquetry.) Once you've filled in the entire pattern with appropriate piecs of veneer, you peel the paper from the waster. Any cracks between piecesare filled from the back with a mixture of sawdust and wood glue.

Using veneer glue, you cement the work to its base, rollering it down as you would wallpaper. Veneer glue is nothing more than a contact cement, so you can se any contact cement that isn't water soluble (and therefore likely to curl your work, not to mention your hair). Using contact cement rather than a conventional wood glue eliminates the need for pressing or clamping the veneer to its base until the glue sets. Once the veneer is mounted, you peel the veneer tape that's been holding things in place off the front. And that's it except for putting on the finish. Fitchett normally uses a polyurethane finish for durability.

Conflicts reported in eastern Turkey

Agence France-Presse

Ankara — Widespread clashes were reported Wednesday in Malatya, eastern Turkey, after Mayor Hamid Fendoglu and three members of his family were killed in an explosion at the mayor's home.

Legal sources in Ankara said Fendoglu, 59, a former Justice Party member of Parliament, was killed when a parcel bomb exploded. His daughter-in-law and two grandsons, aged 5 and 1, were said to have died later in a hospital.

Turkish Air Force jets and helicopters were circling the town, located 375 miles east of Ankara, and constant gunfire and explosions could be heard, local journalists reported. The Anatolia News Agency said a curfew was clamped on Malatya at about midday.

East took the king of hearts and returned a heart. South cashed the ace and king of diamonds, hoping the queen would drop. When it didn't, he led the king of clubs.

West took the ace of clubs, three more heart tricks and the queen of diamonds. Down two.

You've spotted the criminal of course. But before you read on be sure you know exactly what crime he committed.

FATAL UNBLOCK

It usually pays to refuse the first trick or two at a notrump contract, but in this case the hold-up at the first trick allowed the defenders to unblock the hearts.

South is in no danger if the hearts are 4-3, so he need consider only the 5-2 break. If East has two hearts, one of them must be an honor, since West would have led the king if he had five hearts headed by K-Q-10.

South should therefore play dummy's ace of hearts at the first trick. If East plays low, the hearts are blocked when West gets his ace of clubs. If East drops the king of hearts at the first trick, South's nine becomes a second stopper.

Hayakawa makes 'em all call for ulcer remedies

By ELLEN HUME
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Sen. S.I. Hayakawa, R-Calif., drove the White House and Senate leaders to their favorite ulcer remedies with his last-minute threat to vote against the Panama Canal treaty, but he almost missed the vote Tuesday night.

When the first roll was called at 6:05 p.m., Hayakawa was nowhere in sight. Minutes later he strolled into the Senate chamber and whispered in the ear of Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kans., a leader of the anti-treaty forces.

Spectators jumped to the conclusion that Hayakawa might, indeed vote against the treaty because, as he had put it Friday, he feared the United States was "caving in to Communism" around the world.

But it turned out that Hayakawa was only asking Dole what the senators were voting on. He had thought the Panama Canal vote was set for 6:30 p.m. "And there it was, only 6:10," he said afterwards.

Hayakawa then sought to be recognized, and cast his "yes" vote for the treaty. As it turned out, the treaty would have passed without him.

Hayakawa was asked afterward if his sudden "indecision" Friday had been a "political tactic" to gain influence at the White House. "Perhaps you can call it that," Hayakawa replied.

He said he was convinced Tuesday morning that "you can have greater influence in the long run by voting for the treaties" when he met with Senate leaders Sens. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., and Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn.

Hayakawa said he made up his mind to vote "yes" before he called President Carter at 5 p.m. Tuesday to ask for monthly meetings at the White House to discuss foreign policy. The president not only agreed to the meetings, Hayakawa said, but he told him he had been reading Hayakawa's book, "Language in Thought and Action," that afternoon.

Women center of humor study

FOREST GROVE, Ore. (AP) — Comedy is a reflection of culture and a study of it can be a real insight into the culture of a group of people, says a Pacific University sociology professor who has taught a class on Sociology of Humor.

Through their study of humor his students have learned about sociology, psychology, literature and history, says Dr. Byron Steiger. Two of the 34 class members undertook a study of jokes about women as a project.

Nora Elmore of Toledo, Ore., studied "Playboy" cartoons and concluded that women are treated more favorably in the magazine now than in the 1950s. Female characters are being portrayed more often as partners and less often as objects, she said.

Dorothea Olson of Silverton, Ore., found that in the daily comic strips female characters are portrayed negatively, but that male characters are not given any better treatment.

"The two students concluded that people laugh at cartoon characters because they make the readers feel superior," Steiger said. "Also, they say that people think jokes and cartoons are funny because they show life and life's experiences as they really are."

Now 6 Dress Sizes Smaller, I Can Tell It All.

Ms. Evelyn Hudgins of Columbus, Georgia tells her own story.

Dear Mirror:

After our conversation in the department store dressingroom a few months ago, I walked right out empty handed. I took no time in calling Pat Walker-I was determined to never buy a larger size dress again. You know it's funny but until you told me all the sizes that I'd picked out were too small, I really had not thought of myself as fat.

I came back in the store the other day just to let you see how I looked since I lost from a size 16 to a size 10. You just wouldn't believe how I have toned and firmed.

Do you remember that I could hardly get my arm over my head while trying on dresses? I explained to you about my bursitis shoulder - well, now I can reach high with no pain. I have also seen much improvement in all my joints, my posture and my general well being. The compliments I have been receiving have been very nice, too. The passive treatments at Pat Walkers are just wonderful.

I'm sorry you were so busy and could not watch me try on all those beautiful size 10 clothes. It was such a joy and pleasure this time to shop for clothes that I knew would look good on me. The next time you have a friend come to see you with the same problems just have them call Pat Walker and see what they can do for them.

Your Friend

Pat Walker's can work for you too!

The entire process is so pleasant, so easy, and so inexpensive, you'll wish you had found the Pat Walker's method years ago.

Smith misses shutout, but who's particular?

BY TED BATTLES

It was almost worth Tuesday night's bases-on-balls charade. The only thing wrong with Lee Smith's four-hit pitching job was that he let the shutout slip through his fingers in the eighth inning.

The Midland Cubs bounced back from Tueday's 9-4 loss to El Paso's Diablos to back Smith's splendid pitching with a 15-hit attack for a 10-1 victory, easily the club's most productive night of the young Texas League season.

Maybe it was just coincidence but former National League batting champion Billy Williams, the Chicago Cubs' minor league hitting coach, arrived in the Tall City from Sacramento to see what was wrong. Little wonder, Midland went into the El Paso series with a .177 team average after the six-game stand in San Antonio.

Outfielder Jimmy Buckner led the way with four hits, two runs batted in and three stolen bases, giving him seven hits and five stolen bases for his last two games. Kevin Drury a last minute starter for Kurt Seibert at second, collected three hits while Aaron Randall had two safeties, for a total of five in the last two nights.

STILL, THE big story was the 6-5 Smith, a rookie from Jamestown, La., who went the distance to level his record at 1-1. Smith had given up one scratch hit until Scott Moffitt singled to left in the seventh. An inning later he lost his shutout as a result of his own bad pickoff throw to first base.

Orlando Ramirez worked Smith for one of the six walks he issued to open the eighth, but Don Lyons hit into a force and moved to second on Bob Slater's single up the middle. That's when Smith tried to catch Slater off first. The ball got by Aaron Randall as the runners moved up and Lyons scored the Diablos' lone run on Floyd Rayford's grounder to third.

Last year Midland didn't get a shutout until July 22 when Andy Muhlstock turned the trick against Shreveport. But Smith, 10-4 at Pompano Beach last season, did get a complete game, the first by a Cubs pitcher this year.

Although a fast ball pitcher by reputation, Smith said, "My change up and my slider were my most effective pitches tonight. I was beginning to get tired in the eighth, I threw 143 pitches, but I got my second wind in the ninth."

Smith, who attended Northwestern La. State, said, "I was more relaxed tonight than I was for my first start at San Antonio last week. I think the home field and crowd makes a difference."

MIDLAND SCORED three runs in the first, which was all it needed with Smith mowing down the Diablos. A one-out walk to Steve Macko started it. Buckner forced Macko with a grounder to short and then Greg Keatley walked. That set up Brian Rosinski's run-scoring single and Randall's two-run double into left.

Javier Fierro's infield hit, stolen base, a walk to Eric Grandy and successive singles by Drury, Macko and Buckner made it 5-0 in the sixth and sent starter Mark Wulfemeyer, now 1-1, to the showers.

The Cubs struck for four runs off Luis Quintana in the eighth with El Paso helping things along with a couple of errors while Randall and Tony Pepper had singles while Drury hit a run scoring double and Buckner a run-scoring banjo single to short left.

CUBS QUICKIES: Lefthander Ralph Botting will go for Manager Moose Stubing's Diablos tonight at 7:30 p.m. against Midland's Ron Davis...Tonight is Chamber of Commerce Pack-the-Park night at Cubs Stadium...Seibert suffered a lumbar strain during infield and was sent to the hospital for a checkup. Trainer Bob Clark said Seibert could be out for a couple of days. "Or it might just go away over night." ...In addition to his offensive exploits, Buckner came up with the catch of the night with a sliding one hander on Scott Moffitt's dying swan to left in the fifth.

Vasicek favored in net regionals

By PAUL DOMOWITCH

LUBBOCK -- Vicki Vasicek will make a run for her second straight regional tennis crown here this weekend when the Region I Girls Tennis Tournament opens Friday morning on the Texas Tech University campus.

A total of 36 youngsters from the six Region I districts will be competing in the two-day tourney, which will determine the regional qualifiers for the state tourney in Austin in two weeks.

Vasicek made it all the way to the state semifinals a year ago after winning the regional title in a walk, and the talented junior from Midland High is the odds-on favorite to repeat again. She earned a berth in this event by winning the District 5-4A girls singles crown last weekend. Karen Broe of Lee, who lost to Vasicek in the district final, is also up here shooting for one of the two qualifying spots to Austin.

IN DOUBLES, the district is represented by Odessa Permian's Carmen Lewis and Leslie Miller and Midland's tandem of Cary Garton and Dinah Boyd. Lewis and Miller defeated the two Pack netwomen in a thrilling three-set match Saturday in the district final at Lee.

The tournament doesn't even begin until tomorrow, but already some controversy has arisen. Many area coaches, including Midland's Larry Burgin and Lee's Bobby Connell, had understood that the tournament organizers would abandon the blind draw they had been using in previous years to make the pairings, and switch instead to a seeding system. But the memorandum that was sent to all coaches earlier this week indicated that they will stay with the blind draw.

"It's not fair to the kids using a blind draw," said an obviously displeased Burgin. "Just look at what happened last year. That kid was cheated out of a chance to go to state because of this ridiculous draw."

"That kid" was El Paso Irvin's Karen Winstead, who was the class of the tournament with the one exception of Vasicek. But because they used a blind draw, she was pitted against Vicki in the semifinals, lost a three-set hearbreaker, and saw her last chance to go to state wiped out.

WHILE VASICEK is a decisive favorite in the girls singles event once again, the battle for the second state qualifying spot could turn into a real dogfight between Lee's Broe and Cheryl Rosen of Lubbock Monterey -- that is, if they ever get a chance to face each other. Rosen beat Broe the first two times they met on the winter tournament circuit this year, but Broe turned the tables three weeks ago in the semifinals of the Abilene Invitational, when the 17-year-old Rebel staged a remarkable comeback to win a three-set marathon. Broe later upset Vasicek in the finals to win the tournament title.

Two other girls who have the ability to reach the finals are Kathy Lawson of El Paso Eastwood and Nancy Garner of El Paso Coronado.

The class of the doubles event are the two 5-4A entries. Miller and Lewis were runnersup in both the district and regional tourney last year to Julie Jones and Karen Berg of Abilene Cooper, and with Jones and Berg since graduated, the Permian pair are now the favorites. They have supposedly won 10 straight tournaments and 75 consecutive matches, but their 75th didn't come easy.

IN SATURDAY'S district final against Garton and Boyd, they came within a tie-breaker of getting dumped, before winning, 6-7, 7-6, 6-4."

Burgin was extemely pleased with the play of his doubles team, and thinks things will be different if there's a rematch this weekend. "They played extremely well and they had them on the ropes," he said.

"The important thing now is that Cary (Garton) and Dinah (Boyd) know they can beat them now. Before that match last Saturday they didn't really know that. They didn't have the confidence. But now they do."

NET NOTES: The University Interscholastic League, the ruling body of Texas high school sports, realigned the regions this year, and as a result, a district from the Waco area has been added to Region I and will have representatives up here. . . All of the matches in the two-day event will be played on the Tech men's and women's varsity courts and the recently-constructed recreation courts. . . The Tall City congregation is staying at the Civic Center Inn here during the tourney.

Knicks could be in for long night

NEW YORK (AP) — Is it the finesse of Caldwell Jones? The muscle of Steve Mix? The wear and tear of a season that started six months ago?

Whatever the reason, unless New York center Bob McAdoo ends his shooting slump tonight, the Knicks will likely be in for a long evening against the Philadelphia 76ers in the third game of their best-of-seven National Basketball Association quarter-final playoff series.

"They had better show something different from what they showed in the first two games," said the 76ers' Julius Erving, refering to his team's easy 130-90 and 119-100 victories in the series' first two games.

The biggest difference must come from McAdoo, the NBA's No. 3 scorer with a 26.5 average who has shot 11 for 34 and scored just 22 points in the first two games.

"I'm in a scoring slump," said McAdoo, stating the obvious. But why?

"It's a combination of two factors," he said. "First there is the tough defense of Caldwell Jones. The other is that I've been taking shots from out of position."

Jones, a lean 7-foot-1 leaper, starts the game at center for Philadelphia and plays McAdoo head to head.

"Everywhere he goes on the court, I'm following," Jones said. "You just can't let him take those uncontested shots, or he'll score 100 on you."

When Jones leaves the game and muscular Darryl Dawkins takes over at center, the job of guarding McAdoo goes to 6-8 forward Steve Mix.

"He doesn't like the physical type of defense on him, so I'll bump him and shove him and crowd him," said Mix.

All of which means McAdoo is drawing constant attention, as he has all season. He is the key to the Knicks' offense and every opponent knows it — contain McAdoo and you'll beat the Knicks.

McAdoo thinks part of the problem lies with his teammates.

"I'm not getting the ball enough, but there's nothing I can do about it," he said. "When I run to get it, I'm out of position."

Whatever the cause of McAdoo's current problems, Jones knows that he and his teammates can't expect to stop New York's scoring ace forever.

"I expect him to explode like dynamite at any time," said Jones. "He's a great offensive player. He could score 40 and 50 and still you could be playing good defense."

The Knicks would like nothing better than such a "Big Mac Attack' tonight, or in Sunday afternoon's fourth game of the series. If it doesn't happen, chances of the series returning to Philadelphia are remote — and the Knicks know it.

"Bobby got us here," said Reed. "He's a pro. He's just got to weather this storm."

Philadelphia's game at New York is the only one on the NBA calendar tonight. The other series resume Friday night, with Seattle, leading 1-0, at defending champion Portland; Milwaukee, trailing 1-0, at Denver, and San Antonio at Washington in a series tied 1-1.

Cubs, Diablos set futility record

TED BATTLES
BATTLE SCENE

One of the rewards of suffering through an ordeal such as El Paso's long-winded 9-4 win over Midland Tuesday night is that the tenacious fan who sticks it out is quite frequently the witness to a piece of his as reward for his anguish.

Such was the case at Cubs Stadium Tuesday, at least as far as can be determined. Ordinarily, a 9-4 score isn't that unusual, but considering that 33 runners were left on base, it's strange the score wasn't something like 19-14.

The 33 bridesmaids constitutes a Texas League record for futility by two teams in one game. It breaks the previous best of 32 set by Oklahoma City and Shreveport Aug. 22, 1949.

Whereas, OC left 20 runners and Shreveport left 12, El Paso and Midland shared their frustrations almost equally, Midland leaving 17 and El Paso 16.

THE GAME also put the lie to the ancient adage that walks will kill you.

Tuesday night six Midland and El Paso pitchers combined for 24 walks. Early in the spring these things can happen. The pitchers are young, many of them making the jump from a lower league, and even after spring training haven't really thrown enough innings to find the plate with a white cane and police dog.

Yet with all the walks Tuesday, only four came home to haunt the pitcher and only one forced in a run. While 24 walks may not be a Texas League record, the end result may be some kind of standard for wasted opportunities.

WE FIRST became aware of the spoils that sometimes go with an outrageous contest, the kind that would prompt more demanding fans to walk out in disgust, back in the 1950s.

Cincinnati and Brooklyn were playing in old Ebbets Field and what had been a close game unexpectedly fell apart in the eighth inning after the first two batters had been retired routinely.

The Dodgers started to hit and it looked like they might never stop.

Despite the Mrs. tugging on our elbow, we stuck it out, more out of morbid curiosity than cussedness. With two out in the eighth, the Dodgers scored 13 runs.

It's a mark that still is in the record book. You can look it up. The reason we didn't heed the Mrs.' persistent arm-tugging was because of a game at Ebbets Field several years before.

It was late September and the pennant-bound Dodgers were drubbing the hapless Phillies 9-4 with two out in the ninth. The Mrs., who wasn't the Mrs. then, suggested we leave. We did. There was never any sound from the ball park to give away the disaster. The Brooklyn fans apparently sat and watched in stunned silence. After all, these were the last place Phillies.

The Phillies not only won, but it proved a pivotal defeat in the race. The Dodgers didn't win that year. The Cardinals did.

Several years later while thumbing threw a magazine, we came across a story listing the 10 greatest rallies in baseball history. The enormity of our blunder stared back at us in black and white. We've been reluctant to be one of the early birds out of the ball park ever since.

Bobby Adams, the Chicago Cubs minor league infield instructor, played for the Reds the day of the 13-run seige. When we mentioned the debacle to him a few years ago, he said he didn't remember it. "But I do remember the year before when the Dodgers scored 15 runs against us in the first inning."

MC netmen take WJCC title

ODESSA — Midland College and Odessa College each took a conference tennis championships here Wednesday afternoon with MC nabbing the men's Western Junior College Athletic Conference crown and OC winning the women's title.

The Wranglers had little trouble in overpowering the MC women behind the shot-making of sophomore Sandy Collins, who last year, won both singles and doubles titles in the NJCAA national tournament. Miss Collins has not lost a singles match in junior college competition during the past two years.

Midland College came from behind to take the men's championship. It was 2-2 after the singles matches. Tony Luttrell and Mike Burch battled back to win a first set tie-breaker over Gren Ketterman and Craig Richardson, 7-6, and ran out the match in the second set, 7-5.

That left the title hanging in the balance in the doubles match between Reg Luttrell and Jose Rivera of MC against Carlos Mora and Paul Mooney. They split the first two sets, 6-4, 4-6. Both held serve through the first six games to make it 3-3. Odessa broke serve and Midland broke back. Both teams held serve until the match went 6-6.

THE WRANGLERS took a 4-2 lead in the tie-breaker, but Rivera had the last three serves. His serve to Mooney forced a weak return which Luttrell put away. Mora returned strongly, but Rivera's volley won the point and the dual meet and the conference title hung on the last point. Rivera served, Mooney returned, Rivera volleyed backhand wide to Mora's and Mora was wide down the line on his shot.

That left Midland College with five losses in conference men's play. New Mexico Military, which had split 3-3 with both Midland and Odessa, got second with six losses, and Odessa was third with seven losses.

All the conference teams go at it again April 28-29 in Roswell, N.M. for individual conference titles.

Helmet saved Unser's life

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Al Unser, one of six former winners entered in the May 28 Indy 500, owes his life to a new triple-layer helmet, says Frank Del Roy, technical chairman of the U.S. Auto Club.

Unser, who 11 days ago set an unofficial record of 202.2 mph in tire testing at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, slammed sideways into the wall during practice at the Texas World Speedway last Friday. The right side of his helmet struck the outer concrete retainer, splitting the helmet slightly.

"If he didn't have that helmet, his skull never would have been able to take that blow," said Del Roy, who was a riding mechanic in the days of cloth helmets.

Other than a severe headache, Unser escaped without injury. The helmet will be sent by USAC to the Snell Foundation in Sacramento, Calif., for examination.

Del Roy said helmets didn't "start saving lives" until Snell began examining them for impact reaction in the 1960s.

The Speedway announced Wednesday the official entries for this year's race, listing a record 92 cars which may compete for the 33 starting berths. The former record was 90 set in 1967.

Also among the 38 drivers named so far were Tom Sneva, the official recordholder at the Speedway and the defending national champion, and Danny Ongais, who last year turned in the fastest lap ever recorded in the race itself.

The list of former winners, who have accounted for 10 victories in the past 11 years, includes Al Unser and his older brother Bobby, defending Indy champ A.J. Foyt, Mario Andretti, Johnny Rutherford and Gordon Johncock.

Ongais, who turned in one lap at 192.678 mph during the race last year, has won two of the first three USAC races this season and is leading in the national championship standings.

Low budget Oakland A's off to surprising start

By The Associated Press

Oakland Manager Bobby Winkles will settle for all the gray hairs his young, low-salaried A's will give him this season ... if they keep winning.

New York Yankees Manager Billy Martin, on the other hand, probably is ready to tear out his hair over the performance of his veteran, highly paid world champions ... especially relief specialist Rich Gossage.

The A's, who under penurious owner Charles O. Finley have unloaded virtually all their players from the 1972, 1973 and 1974 World Series winners, were not expected to be contenders this year.

But so far they have been the early-season surprises of the major leagues.

Wednesday, they raised their record to 8-3 and moved within one game of first-place Kansas City in the American League West, beating the Minnesota Twins 6-5 in 11 innings.

"These guys promised they'd give me gray hairs before the season was over," said Winkles. "With games like this, they appear to be right on schedule."

The Yankees, AL champions the past two years, fell to 5-6, three games behind frontrunning Detroit in the East Division, losing to the Toronto Blue Jays 4-3. The winning run scoring on Gossage's second throwing error in the ninth inning.

"I'm sick, I'm almost ready to cry," said the downtrodden, dejected Gossage, loser of his third straight game since signing a reported $2.75 million, six-year free agent contract with the Yankees after the 1977 season.

In the only other AL game Wednesday, Ron Jackson drove in six runs with two doubles and a single, powering the California Angels to an 11-2 rout of the Seattle Mariners. Two games were rained out — Detroit at Cleveland and Milwaukee at Boston.

Oakland's brash A's blew a 5-3 lead in the ninth when pinch hitter Rich Chiles singled in two runs, but they won the game in the 11th on a walk, a single by Jim Essian and a run-producing single by Tony Armas.

Mario Guerrero and Essian, two of Finley's bargain basement pickups, each had four hits and drove in two runs for the upstart A's. Dan Ford and Butch Wynegar homered for the Twins.

Blue Jays 4, Yankees 3

Toronto scored the winning run in the ninth inning when John Mayberry led off with a single, pinch runner Garth Iorg was safe at second on Gossage's low throw to the bag on Rick Cerone's bunt and Iorg scored when Gossage fired Dave McKay's attempted sacrifice over the head of first baseman Chris Chambliss.

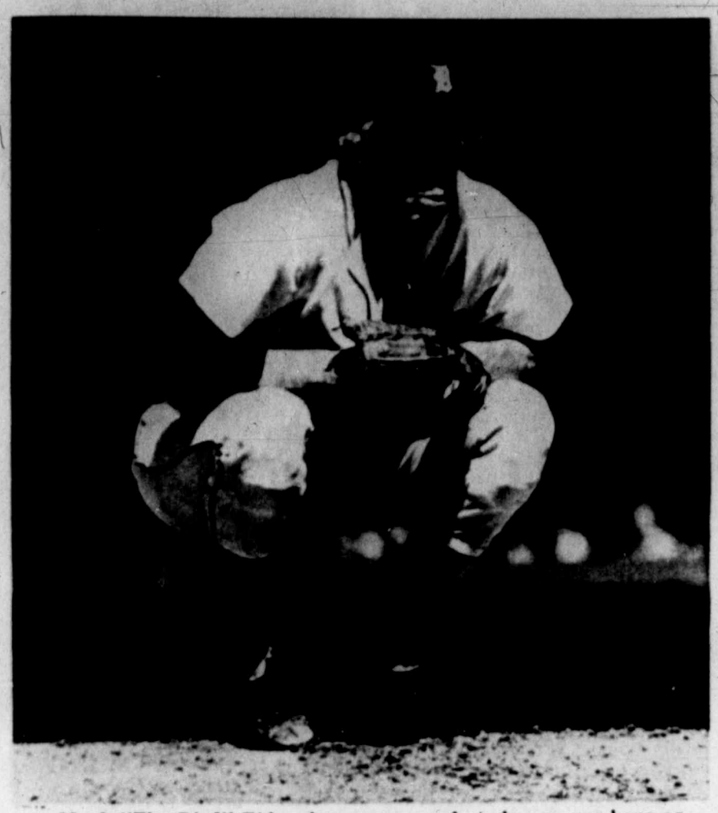

He admitted, however, to "hurrying on the play to second, but it never entered my mind the next time."

"I've seen the ball thrown away on similar plays," said Toronto Manager Roy Hartsfield. "It happens to everybody. I'm sure Rich feels bad about it."

Angels 11, Mariners 2

Jackson delivered a two-run, two-out single in the third inning, a run-scoring double in the seventh and a three-run double in the eighth after Enrique Romo walked the bases loaded. Chris Knapp allowed one run over the first five innings and picked up the victory while Jim Todd, who replaced Seattle starter Glenn Abbott in the second inning, was the loser. Abbott reinjured a hamstring muscle.

Lyman Bostock, California's expensive free agent center fielder who said Tuesday that he would consider taking a pay cut if he did not begin to hit, had two singles, a double, scored a run, drove in two and made several running catches.

Mark "The Bird" Fidrych appears ready to lay an egg here as he takes a breather between pitches. The Detroit Tiger righthander was out much of last season with injuries after a spectacular rookie season in 1976, but the exciting young hurler is back better than ever. (AP Laserphoto)

Morgan equals record

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Joe Morgan of Cincinnati tied a major league record for consecutive errorless games by a second baseman, 89, during the Los Angeles Dodgers' 5-4 victory over the Reds Wednesday night.

Some Dodgers, if allowed, would put an asterisk beside the record, to say Morgan should have been stopped at 88. They referred to an official scorer's ruling in the fifth inning of game 89.

"The big one is breaking it (the record)," Morgan said. The Reds were off today before opening a four-game series Friday night in San Francisco. Until then he is co-holder of the record, set by Jerry Adair of the Boston Red Sox in 1964-65.

"I want it to be a clear cut error," he said of the time when his streak does comes to an end. "I don't want any favors."

The Dodger team captain, second baseman Dave Lopes, felt Morgan got a favor when Reggie Smith hit a high hopper into shallow right field in the fifth inning.

Morgan made a good play getting to the ball, but threw off balance to first. The throw appeared to pull Dan Driessen off the bag and Driessen did not hold onto the ball. The official scorer said it was a base hit.

"There's no doubt that should have been ruled an error," Lopes said. "You cannot justify giving him a hit on that."

Smith agreed: "It was an error."

Asked about Lopes' comment, Cincinnati Manager Sparky Anderson said: "After the way he played tonight, he should be the last to say something."

He referred to a Lopes' error with two out in the ninth that launched Cincinnati's near comeback, when the Reds were down 5-2. Lopes also cost Los Angeles a run in the first inning when he singled and then was doubled off first on Bill Russell's routine fly ball to center. Smith followed Lopes' baserunning blunder with a home run.

'Frisco is home sweet home for Ruthven

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

It's not clear whether Dick Ruthven left his heart in San Francisco, but the San Francisco Giants probably wish he had left his arm in Atlanta.

The 27-year-old right-hander went to high school in the East Bay town of Irvington, a few miles from San Francisco, and you can't blame him for calling Candlestick Park home sweet home.

Especially after he hurled the Atlanta Braves to a two-hit 2-0 victory Wednesday and raised his career record to 8-2 against San Francisco.

"I guess the Giants run into me when I'm going good," said Ruthven, who is only 31-54 against the rest of the National League. "But I don't get especially jacked up for the Giants. I wasn't a fan when I was going to school. In fact, I only went to a couple of games at Candlestick Park."

Ruthven, who had a no-hitter for six innings until Larry Herndon beat out a high hopper to shortstop leading off the seventh, pitched his masterpiece one night after teammates Preston Hanna and Adrian Devine blanked the Giants on one hit. Before the shutouts, Atlanta pitchers had allowed 54 runs in eight games.

"I was disappointed over losing the no-hitter," Ruthven said. "But I made up my mind to retain my composure and go for the shutout. I didn't want to fall apart and blow the game."

The Braves scored the only run Ruthven needed in the fourth inning on singles by Brian Asselstine, Jeff Burroughs and Biff Pocoroba and Dale Murphy's sacrifice fly. In the seventh, Murphy doubled, advanced on a grounder and scored on Pat Rockett's sacrifice fly.

In his last appearance against the Giants, Ruthven pitched a three-hit 4-0 victory last Sept. 5.

Elsewhere, the New York Mets and St. Louis Cardinals traded two-hitters, with the Mets winning 2-0 behind Pat Zachry; the Los Angeles Dodgers edged the Cincinnati Reds 5-4, the Houston Astros nipped the San Diego Padres 2-1 and the Montreal Expos scored four times in the ninth inning to beat the Chicago Cubs 8-6.

Mets 2, Cards 0

While Zachry was limiting St. Louis to second-inning singles by Keith Hernandez and Jerry Morales, Bruce Boisclair drove in both runs, with a sacrifice fly in the first inning and a single in the third as the Mets completed a sweep of a three-game series. Zachry called it "my best game in the majors."

Dodgers 5, Reds 4

Rick Monday drove in four runs with a pair of homers and unbeaten Tommy John scattered nine hits for his third victory as Los Angeles salvaged the finale of an important early-season three-game series. The Reds' Joe Morgan tied a major league record for consecutive errorless games by a second baseman, completing his 89th flawless game. Morgan, who committed only five errors last season, matched the mark set by Baltimore's Jerry Adair in 1964-65.

The Dodgers, humiliated the two previous nights by Cincinnati, broke on top against Tom Hume when Reggie Smith homered in the first inning. An inning later, Steve Garvey and Dusty Baker singled and Monday followed with a three-run homer. He connected again in the sixth for what turned out to be the winning run.

Astros 2, Padres 1

Joaquin Andujar singled home a run and held San Diego to six hits in eight innings. The triumph was the Astros' fourth in a row and sixth in their last seven games after an 0-5 start. The Padres dropped their fourth straight, all at home, where they have not won yet this season. Andujar singled in the second inning following Roger Metzger's triple and Houston got its other run in the fourth when Art Howe doubled, went to third an infield out and scored on Metzger's sacrifice fly. Andujar blanked the Padres until Dave Winfield homered in the eighth

Expos 8, Cubs 6

Ellis Valentine and Larry Parrish delivered two-run singles in the top of the ninth inning as Montreal rallied for four unearned runs against Chicago relief ace Bruce Sutter. The Expos loaded the bases with one out on two walks and an error. After a force at home, Valentine singled and reached second when left fielder Gene Clines overran the ball. Parrish followed with another two-run single.

"I felt good," said Sutter, 0-2, who has walked seven men in five innings this season. "I think I'm throwing harder than last year, but I'm not getting the pitches where I want them right now."

Trial date set in Heidenreich case

BEDFORD, Ind. (AP) — An Aug. 14 trial date has been set in Lawrence Circuit Court for the $500,000 civil damage suit brought by former Indiana University track star Steve Heidenreich.

Heidenreich, who had qualified for the 1976 U.S. Olympic trials, was stuck by a vehicle as he was jogging along a Bloomington, Ind., street on March 16, 1976.

Michael Tabereaux of Bloomington is the defendant in the suit, which was moved here on a change of venue motion.

Detroit signs Texan

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — The University of Detroit has signed West Oso's Jerry Davis, a 6-5, three-time all-state forward who is considered one of Texas' top high school basketball players.

Davis chose the Titans on Wednesday over New Mexico, Texas A&M and Houston. He had been contacted by about 200 schools, considered about 30 of them and visited only four.

Davis was one of 10 blue chip basketball players named by the Dallas Times-Herald after a poll of coaches of the nine Southwest Conference schools and North Texas State. He was named on nine of the 10 ballots.

He averaged 34.8 points and 18.3 rebounds game this season and became the leading scorer in South Texas history, finishing with a career scoring average of 28 points per game. He hit 60 percent from the field his senior year.

Davis scored 29 points last weekend in a national all-star game in Dayton, Ohio, and won the slam-dunk contest. In West Oso's bi-district victory over Rio Grande City, Davis scored 58 points.

Harvey gets his bite fixed

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Harvey Martin didn't want to be eating soup through a straw when he's 50-years-old, so he decided to do it for six weeks while he was 26.

The Dallas Cowboy All-Pro defensive end quietly submitted to dental surgery after the Super Bowl in which he and teammate Randy White were named the Most Valuable Players after the victory over Denver.

"The orthodonist told me I had a bite that was not hitting right," said Martin Wednesday. "He said it could be corrected, but if I waited until I was 50 years old then I would not be able to eat."

What had to be done to Martin was described by the four-year National Football League veteran as strictly "gross."

For one, they broke his jaw.

For two, they put it back together again.

For three, they wired it shut.

"I went six weeks eating soup and chocolate malts through a straw," said Martin. "I remember I got a real craving one night for lasagna and spaghetti. So my friends whipped it up in a blender — but I couldn't choke it down."

Martin and Baltimore's George Kunz were honored Wednesday as the NFL's defensive and offensive linemen, respectively, by Seagram's Seven Crowns of Sports. They each got a trophy and $5,000.

Martin was some 25 pounds lighter than his playing weight of 245. He looked like a slim fashion model.

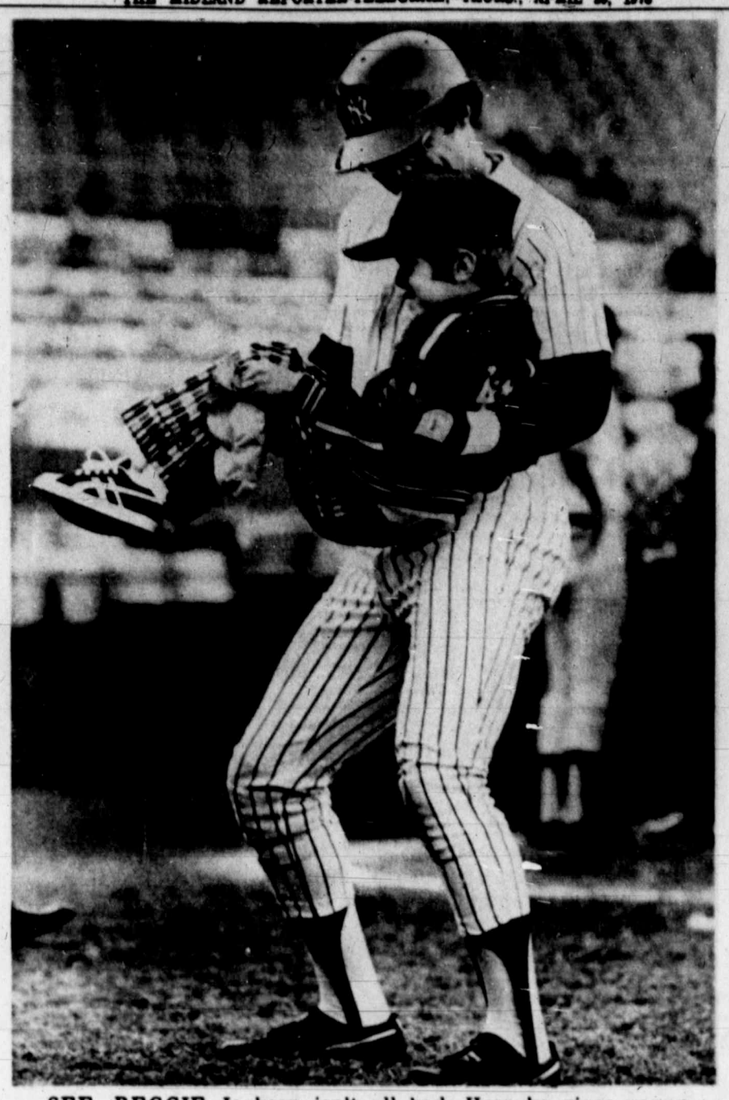

Some suggested Martin looked like a tight end, and Cowboy defensive coordinator Ernie Stautner said quickly, "Harvey likes to hit. He doesn't like five guys hitting him."

Martin led the NFL in quarterback sacks with 23 for the 1977 season.

Martin said he was on a crash eating craze spiced with lots of lasagna.

"It's great right now, being able to eat all you want," said Martin. "I'm getting fired up for the season. I'm starting to think Super Bowl again."

And Martin's happy he's not sipping soup out of a bowl.

Player does it his way

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — It was 20 years ago, at about this time of the season, that Gary Player won his first American pro golf tour title, the Kentucky Derby Open.

That tournament has long since disappeared from the PGA schedule.

Player has not.

For two decades the little South African has flitted about the world, busily building a reputation as golf's greatest internationalist. He annually competes on five continents and cashes checks in yen and pounds, francs and pesos, rand and cruzieros.

And dollars. Lots of dollars. About 1½ million of them.

It could have been much more.

"I play in about 15 American tournaments a year," Player noted before teeing off today in the first round of the $200,000 Houston Open.

"If I lived in this country, I'd probably play in 30 to 35. So it stands to reason that I'd have doubled my money winnings in this country and doubled the number of tournaments I have won if I'd played here on a full-time basis."

But he hasn't. He's competed world-wide which, he insists, is the only measure of a true champion.

"I'd like to see Jack Nicklaus make five round trips a year to South Africa and see how he does," Player said. Player has followed that sort of schedule and has won 113 international events, an unmatched accomplishment.

That schedule has, of course, limited his play in this country. But he's made the most of it. He's collected 20 American titles, including the U.S. Open, two PGA championships and three Masters.

And, despite a four-year victory drought — which he insists was not a slump — he's as much, or more, in evidence now than ever before.

"I'm playing very, very well," he said. "But I've played very well before and not won. In this country such a great emphasis is placed on winning. Many people do not realize that a man who finishes in the top 10 in a tournament probably played as well, maybe even better, than the man who won.

"Over the last four years, I've played this well many times. Last year I won $112,000 and finished second twice. That's pretty well. But I didn't win in this country. I won three in a row in South Africa, including the South African Open for the 11th time. I won all over the world. But I didn't win in this country and so, in Greensboro, I pick up the paper and see myself referred to as a fading star."

He buried any such references with his amazing comebacks from seven-shot deficits that brought him the titles in the last two American events, the Masters and Tournament of Champions, and made him a prime favorite for the $40,000 first prize here.

Opposing him on the 6,997-yard Woodlands Country Club course are Lee Trevino, a runnerup last week, PGA champion Lanny Wadkins, defending champion Gene Littler, Ben Crenshaw, Jerry Pate, Bill Rogers, Bruce Lietzke, Bill Kratzert, Johnny Miller, Australian David Graham and Arnold Palmer.

Portions of the final two rounds Saturday and Sunday will be televised nationally by NBC-TV.

Gottfried breezes to win

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ

HOUSTON (AP) — Brian Gottfried, top seeded in the $175,000 World Championship Tennis Tournament at River Oaks Country Club, likes to play lights-out tennis and remain in the dark as to the importance of his victories.

"It's easier for me to play without knowing the points I need or what the standings are," Gottfried said Wednesday after his 6-4, 6-2 second-round victory over Terry Moor.

"As long as I keep winning, I'm okay. I'd prefer to live in a vacuum, not knowing who I play. I sleep better that way."

Reminded he is tied for 10th in a bid to make the top eight that will compete in the WCT championship finals, Gottfried said, "Yes, I know, and that's all I want to know about it."

Gottfried fell behind 4-1 in the opening set until he got accustomed to the tricky spins that Moor kept bouncing off the hard River Oaks clay.

"Guys with a lot of spin on clay like that can really make you look silly," Gottfried said.

Gottfried then won eight straight games to take control of the match.

Fourth-seeded Harold Solomon, the next highest seeded player still in the tournament, had an easy victory with a 6-3, 6-1 trouncing of Dick Saviano, trying for his second big upset.

Saviano upset defending championship Adriano Panatta of Italy in the first round but was no match for Solomon's baseline salvos.

Solomon broke Saviano in the second and sixth games of the first set and after Saviano held in the opening game of the second set Solomon won six straight games to win the match.

"He never really pressured me," Solomon said. "I just kept the ball in play and let him make the mistakes."

Ilie Nastase of Rumania easily beat Paul Kronk 6-2, 6-2, still using the specially strung racket he says gives him better spin. The racket is strung with the four middle strings unwoven.

In other matches Wednesday, Jeff Borowiak beat Dick Stockton 7-5, 6-4; Hans Gildemeister beat Peter Fleming 5-7, 6-3, 6-4; and Corrado Barazzutti of Italy beat Holland's Tom Okker, 6-3, 6-3.

Zeljko Franulovic of Italy defeated Australian Ken Rosewall 6-3, 7-5, and Jaime Fillol of Chile defeated Ove Bengston of Sweden 6-2, 6-2.

Key quarter-finals matchups pit Solomon against Franulovic and Nastase against his doubles partner, Fillol.

Gottfried will play Borowiak, but he probably doesn't want to know that.

Arkansas trips Tulsa

By The Associated Press

Arkansas' Jim Lentine stroked doubles in the first and seventh innings to help the Travelers to an 8-7 victory over Tulsa in Texas League play Wednesday night.

In other action, San Antonio defeated Amarillo, 3-1, Jackson remained in first place in the Texas League East with a 5-2 victory over Shreveport and Midland-trounced El Paso, 10-1.

Lentine's hits helped Arkansas build an 8-5 lead by the end of the seventh inning, as the Travelers got off to a fast start with four runs in the first inning and three in the second.

The winning run was scored by Lentine in the seventh inning when he connected for a double, advanced to third on an infield out and then stole home after a wild pitch.

Both Keith Bodie and Juan Monasteriuo punched two singles a piece as Jackson downed Shreveport 5-2 in a game that saw no extra base hits.

The winner was Scott Holeman, who now is 2-0. Doug Nelson, the loser, is 0-2.

Pitchers Ted Power and Dave Patterson combined for a three hitter as San Antonio downed Amarillo, 3-1.

Power was the winning pitcher and Patterson, who came on in the ninth, got his second save.

Amarillo's only score came on a run-scoring single by Tim Derryberry.

Williams uncertain

HOUSTON (AP) — Linda Williams, who successfully challenged the University Interscholastic League for the right to play on a boy's high school baseball team, can't seem to make up her mind whether she will remain on the team.

Williams told Houston Wheatley High School baseball coach Lugene Jones Wednesday in a letter that she had decided to quit the team because her play would conflict with tryouts for an athletic scholarship at Sam Houston State University.

However, she said later in the day she plans to try to regain her spot on the Wheatley team.

Her decision to try to rejoin the team came after a three-hour conference with Artice Vaughn, a family friend.

"Linda was just confused and unsure of herself," Vaughn said. "She was worried that she would be overlooked by the colleges in the area. I have assured her that if she just takes care of the business on the playing field, we'll take care of getting her a scholarship."

Williams said if Vaughn could talk the coach into letting her come back and can help hr get a scholarship, "then I'm willing to go back."

"I only wanted to do what was best for me, without hurting the team," she said. "I had been told that my going out for for the (college) team could get Wheatley put on probation."

Jones said he would allow her to come back.

Williams challenged the University Interscholastic League for the right to play on the boy's team and on March 27, U.S. District Judge Woodrow Seals ruled she was being denied her rights under the eaual protection clause of the 14th Amendment.

Roth on top

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Mark Roth of Staten Island, N.Y., held a slim two-pin lead over Nelson Burton Jr. of St. Louis going into today's final qualifying round of professional bowling's $150,000 Tournament of Champions.

Roth had the high eight-game score of 1,791 Wednesday night to move into the lead with a 3,506 total. Burton rolled 1,709 for 3,504.

In third place in the tightly bunched field was 1974 T of C titlist Earl Anthony of Tacoma, Wash., at 3,500.

George Pappas of Charlotte, N.C., rode a perfect 300 in his final game of the night into fourth place at 3,491, while Dave Davis of Hackensack, N.J., the 1975 winner here, was fifth with 3,408.

Following eight more games today, the 52-man field will be cut to the top 24 scorers, who will move on to three eight-game sessions of match play through Friday night.

The top five will advance to the nationally televised (ABC) finals Saturday afternoon, with the winner taking home $30,000.

The tournament is sponsored by the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co.

Georgia favored

STATESBORO, Ga. (AP) — Georgia is a slight favorite to capture the eighth annual Chris Schenkel Intercollegiate Golf Invitational tournament that begins Friday.

Coach Dick Copas' Bulldogs have won two of the five tournaments they entered this year and finished second in the others.

The 54-hole Schenkel tournament will be held on the 6,850-yard, par 72 Forest Heights Country Club. Each of the 21 teams will play five men, with the combined totals of the low four determining the winner.

Ohio State is second-seeded, followed by Wake Forest, Georgia Southern, North Carolina, Florida, Florida State, North Carolina State, Auburn and Louisiana State.

Other schools competing include Alabama, Maryland, South Carolina, East Tennessee, Memphis State, Marshall, Kentucky, Tennessee, Indiana, Georgia Tech and Mississippi State.

A different kind of talent

The Los Angeles Times Syndicate

The Los Angeles Rams need a good running back, a tight end or a strong defensive tackle, but the front office is not swayed by this trivia. They went right to the heart of the matter. They deployed their scouts, collected film, took photographs and employed all the paraphernalia of top modern scouting recently to shore up the leaks in the program.

The Blue-Gray game? The Senior Bowl? Hula Bowl?

Hardly. They assembled at the taping of the finals of the National cheerleading Championships at the Los Angeles Sports Arena, where every self-respecting NFL team had a delegation of ivory hunters. Everyone knows what any red-blooded American team needs is not a 6-6, 250-pound linebacker to pull the customers in, but a 5-2, 110-pound, 38-22-36 with moves Lynn Swann could never approximate.

THE CHEERLEADING finals were taped for showing on CBS network next Monday but the NFL covered it like the Rose Bowl. The finalists were cheerleading teams from the universities of North Carolina, Kansas, Florida, Pittsburgh and Southern California, with individual baton twirlers and trampoline artists, but the kids were competing for more than the $25,000 in scholarships. They were competing for a career in show biz, beginning, probably, at halftime in the Super Bowl and ending — who knows? — in the Oscar presentations.

Cheerleading is as venerable in football as the flying wedge. Nobody knows when the first guy leaped out of the stands to shout "Gimme an 'A'" but, legend has it, it was some drunk in Iowa before the turn of the century who first wanted the Hawkeyes to "Hold that line!" or "Hit 'em again, harder!"

It proliferated into card tricks, simuated riverboats puffing up and down the field at the half, homecoming queens, salutes to yesterday, and finally, the Dallas Cowgirls, probably the most awesome aggregation to take a football field since the 1940 Chicago Bears. You talk about Front Fours and this bunch can match anybody.

FOOTBALL HAS always lent itself to sidelines exhortation and the best, and worst, aspects of musical comedy. Cole Porter, no less, wrote one of the early fight songs for Yale, "Boola Boola." Oregon State University pioneered animated card tricks, with a beaver slapping its tail on an Oregon duck.

Precision marching hit the game early. Millions went to the Army-Navy game annually, not to see the clumsy athletes, but the cadet corps or the midshipmen march in.

Yale, naturally, turned to the ancient Greeks for its public cheering with the frog chorus from Aristophanes "Break-ek-ek-ex — Co-ax Co-Ax!" Princeton contributed the first "Sis, Boom, Bah!" and Harvard weighed in with "Hold That Tiger!"

The cheers got commoner and more vulgar as they moved West. For one thing, "Brek-ek-ek-ex" became "Give 'em the ax!" "Fight on for old SC!" was sedate enough, but Arkansas' "Sooey, Pig!" was hardly what Aristophanes had in mind. Neither was "Hook 'em, Horns!" at Texas, or "Boomer Sooner" at Oklahoma.

BUT, WITHOUT the cheers, what do you have left? A lot of lousy first downs, or two-yard gains over left tackle. A field goal by some Cretan. And the Minnesota Vikings.

Every magazine editor, every pub owner, every movie magnate, and every party host knows what you need to dress up an event is a whole bunch of pretty girls and energetic men. Sammy Baugh is ok if you're a completed-pass freak, and there's probably nothing wrong with three-yard losses. But, any football coach can tell you, it's what's up front that counts. And the Dallas Cowboys won the double on that score last year — the Super Bowl and the Super Babes.

In the land of Cheryl Tiegs, Farrah Fawcett and Cheryll Ladd, the Rams have fielded a lineup of quarterback sacks and blocked punts. Even George Allen knows the act for the Floradora Sextette on the basis of experience.

A football team without a bunch of chorines wearing boots, and not much else, on the sidelines might as well not have a center. The day will come when a scout stumbles triumphantly into the general manager's office to announce "Boss! Have I got a draft choice for you! Another Jim Brown!" And the boss will scream and roar "Another Jim Brown!" Idiot! What his franchise needs is another Phyllis George! Now, go back out there and check drum majorettes, and if I catch you near a sideline or a locker room again, you're fired!"

NFLPA signs one-year pact

WASHINGTON (AP) — Professional football players will be helping to double the size of the Job Corps, an antipoverty program designed to prepare youngsters for the working world.

The NFL Players Association and the Labor Department signed a one-year $191,000 contract Wednesday under which the athletes will aid in recruiting, develop community acceptance—and boost morale for the centers.

The Job Corps, an arm of the Labor Department, provides residential services to educate and train poor youngsters between the ages of 16 and 21. There were 61 centers in 1977 but the Carter Administration hopes to expand that number to 110 within the next year.

Labor Secretary Ray Marshall signed the contract for the government. Bobby Moore, traded from Tampa Bay to Chicago, and Ed Garvey, executive director of the players union, represented the union.

NORCROSS, Ga. — Billie Jean King salvaged some American pride by ripping Yelena Granaturova 6-4, but the Soviet Union took three of five matches to edge the U.S. squad 26-24 in a five-match round of the American-Soviet Tennis Series.

The Americans held an 80-72 lead after the first half of the series, played in the Soviet Union in September. Their lead was narrowed to 104-98 after Wednesday's play.

The Soviets captured the first three one-set matches as Vadim Borisov and Teimuraz Kakulia defeated Stan Smith and John Whitlinger 6-2 in the opening doubles match. Borisov then had little trouble with Smith in the men's singles, crushing the former Wimbledon champion 6-2.

King and Julie Anthony then dropped a 7-6 decision to Granaturova and Irina Chevchenko, losing in a tiebreaker 3-4 after leading 3-0. King then tore Granaturova apart before the mixed doubles team of 16-year-old Ben Testerman and Anthony edged Kakulia and Chevchenko 8-7.

Jackson going after 5th title

BILOXI, Miss. (AP) — Four-time AAU welterweight champion Clint Jackson has begun his try for a fifth Senior National boxing title with a flourish.

Jackson, one of three battling sheriff's deputies from Nashville in the tournament, pounded Gary Cerlock of Rochester, N.Y., to the canvas twice Wednesday before the referee stopped the fight.

Jackson, a member of the 1976 Olympic team and the director of the sheriff's fight program in Nashville, floored Cerlock once with a left cross in the first round and another time with a barrage of overhand rights in the second round.

Jerome Coffee, another fighting deputy, beat Darrell Thigpen of St. Louis in an unpopular decision with the crowd at the Mississippi Gulf Coast Coliseum. Coffee, the defending flyweight champ, was a careful boxer while Thigpen's slugging style delighted the fans.

In another welterweight fight, Roger Leonard of Kelly Air Force Base, Texas, advanced by posting an unanimous decision over David McCall of St. Paul, Minn.

Larry Strogen of Haughton, La., and Jerry Bennett of the Air Force team advanced in the light heavyweight class, with both taking close decisions. Strogen is the defending class champion and Bennett is the defending middleweight champ.

Greg Page of Louisville continued to romp through the heavyweight ranks, knocking out Rick Aiello of New York with a crushing right to the head, late in the first round.

It was Page's second straight first round knockout in the tournament.

Lightheavyweight Charles Singleton of Philadelphia whipped Milton Jarrels of Houston for more than two rounds before the bout was stopped.

Elimination bouts will continue through Friday with the finals scheduled for Saturday night.

Facts don't favor Kuhn

NEW YORK (AP) — Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn says the free agent system is dangerous because the strong are getting stronger. Only the facts don't seem to support his contention.

—Fact: Of the 14 top players signed as free agents for the 1978 season, seven went to clubs with records above .500, six went to clubs with records below .500 and one went to a club with a .500 average.

—Fact: Of those 14 top players, only two — Doc Medich and Bruce Bochte — left teams with sub-.500 records, meaning most of the weak teams weren't getting any weaker.

"In the past year, (free agency) has been used by the strongest teams to make themselves even stronger," Kuhn said Tuesday in Atlanta.

On Wednesday, through spokesman Art Berke, Kuhn attempted to elaborate on that position. He cited the recent improvements made by the Yankees, Texas, Boston and California as the best examples for his concern. He also pointed out that in the last two years, 28 of the 50 free agents chosen by more than two teams signed with the Yankees, California, Boston, Texas and the Chicago White Sox.

The Yankees picked up relievers Rich Gossage and Rawly Eastwick and Boston grabbed ex-Yankee Mike Torrez for 1978. These teams were strong before free agency began last year, but California, Texas and the White Sox only gained stature during the free-agency period of 1977 and 1978. Wasn't that one of the goals of free agency, to give clubs like Texas, California and Chicago a chance to build winners?

Of the 1977 division winners beside the Yankees, Kansas City picked up one free agent in two years, back-up infielder Jerry Terrell; Los Angeles took one, reliever Terry Forster, and Philadelphia has taken one, first baseman Richie Hebner. Cincinnati, the best team in baseball in recent years, has stood pat.

"I do not know why he chooses to ignore the fact that the record shows that, if anything, there is a better balance as a result of the free-agent system than existed before," Marvin Miller, executive director of the Players Association, said Wednesday.

Association backs players

NEW YORK (AP) — The Major League Baseball Players Association planned to file a grievance Wednesday on behalf of four New York Yankees fined $500 apiece last week for failing to attend a luncheon.

Marvin Miller, executive director of the Players Association, confirmed the action but would not say whether the players or the union initiated the grievance procedure. Any grievance filed in a discipline case requires the players' approval. But when asked who approached whom to get the grievance in motion, Miller replied: "I'm not going to get into that."

Thurman Munson, Graig Nettles, Mickey Rivers and Sparky Lyle were each fined $500 for failing to attend Friday's "Welcome Home" luncheon, the proceeds of which went to the Archdiocese of New York.

Roy White showed up for the luncheon but left early to keep an appointment with his tax lawyer. His $500 fine was rescinded.

A section of the uniform players contract, 3(b), provides that the players agree to "cooperate with the Club and participate in any and all reasonable promotional activities of the Club and its League.

Like old times for aging QB

By BOB OATES
The Los Angeles Times

Roman Gabriel, 38, lives in Palm Springs, Calif., the year around now except when he's off playing football. His cars — a Plymouth Duster for him and a 924 Porsche for her (his wife Tedra) — stand in front of their small ranch house summer and winter because Gabriel, being Gabriel, has converted the two-car garage into a gym.

A health nut, he's always been the strongest man on the block. And this week his lifelong commitment to good physical condition made him a born-again Ram. Looking trimmer than ever, the old quarterback rejoined the local varsity as the first member of George Allen's Over The Hill Gang West.

"I can't remember when I've felt this good," Gabriel said. "The other day at Blair Field (the Ram practice field in Long Beach, Calif.). I was throwing the ball 65 yards to some of those free agents they had out there. This time of year I've never thrown it over 60 in my life. I could start the season right now."

Q. What's the best Gabriel playing weight at this age?

A. I weigh 210 to 212 now.

Q. Did you run into George Allen and Carroll Rosenbloom at Long Beach?

A. Sure, we had a good time talking over old times.

Q. You didn't hit Allen with a football?

A. That stuff is all forgotten now. I learned a long time ago that only immature persons keep living in the past. One-on-one, George and I have always gotten along well.

Q. But you had words with Rosenbloom the last time. How can you come back and play for those guys?

A. The things Carroll and I said didn't mean much at the time and they mean nothing now. I'm a more mature person now. If you grow old gracefully you learn from your mistakes.

Q. When did you first decide you wanted to come back to the Rams?

A. I first decided I wanted to come back to George Allen. That was on my 35th birthday. If you last 'til 35, there isn't a player in the league who doesn't think about George. But he was in Washington then and I was with Philadelphia, and it didn't work out. Then I read where Carroll had got him to Los Angeles, and I said: 'Gee, wouldn't that be fantastic?' and it is.

Q. As a football team, the Rams are much tougher than the Eagles. They have the better all-around team and the better quarterbacks. Yet the Eagles let you go. If you couldn't play for Philadelphia, what makes you think you can play for the Rams?

A. What you have to understand is that there's a difference in philosophy between the Eagles and Rams. At Philadelphia, (coach) Dick Vermeil is committed to a youth movement. Except for (linebacker) Bill Bergey that's a very young team and Vermeil wants it that way. He thinks when they mature together they'll be a winner, and it's a good philisophy, for him. But the Rams are already a winner.

Q. So what's the Rams' philosophy?

A. They want to keep winning. So they pay more attention to performance than age. That's always been George's philosophy, anyhow. He doesn't care what your age is if you can perform. He was way ahead of his time on this, you know.

Q. What do you mean?

A. Since George started playing guys in their middle 30s, a lot of smart teams in every league are doing it. In baseball Willie McCovey and several others are 39 or 40. There's a 50-year-old hockey player out there someplace. Pro football players today go on and on. It used to be that-way when the cutoff age was around 30. Just when a lot of guys were just hitting their stride their coaches thought they ought to retire. George has proved that life begins at 30 in sports.

Q. What did he tell you about your role with the Rams when he brought you back to the club? A. I'm coming in as the backup quarterback. Whether that means number 2 or number 3 I don't know, and at this time I don't care that much. I intend to be very competitive for the (No. 1) job. I'm going to do exactly what's asked of me but I'm going to make a fight for that job.

Q. Are you ready for it physically? You've had some injuries and operations. How's the arm? How's the knee? A. The knee's as good as new. It's been nearly three years since they opened it up and found a needle inside. That's what made it keep swelling up. It took me a year and a half to get it back, but it's all right now. I haven't had an arm problem since I left Los Angeles. I fixed that with my Chinese-type drills on the tendons and ligaments.

Q. Chinese-type?

A. Martial arts.

Q. What else do you do in that gymnasium of yours? A. I do a wide range of drills and exercises six days a week. My flexibility work takes me 45 minutes to an hour. I work with the weights for an hour, using different weights every day. I ride the bike 30 minutes to an hour depending on whether I use the stationary wheel or the street bike. Then I spend some time hitting the speed bag and heavy bag. In the winter from January to April I taper off to two or three hours of work a day, six days a week, but I'm back up to four hours now.

Germans angry

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Following Sweden's 3-1 soccer victory over West Germany, a Bavarian parliamentary deputy requested Thursday that the Bonn government help bring Franz Beckenbauer of the Cosmos soccer club back from the United States.

In a statement to the press, the conservative Christian Social Union said that Dionys Jobst, 50, a jurist and former railroad employee, asked, "Is the federal government prepared to engage itself for the release of record national team player Franz Beckenbauer from the American soccer club Cosmos for the matches at the World Cup in Argentina without causing further damage to German-American friendship?"

Christian Social Union party leader Franz Josef Strauss, a former defense and finance minister, had recently charged that the government of Chancellor Helmut Schmidt had hurt U.S.-German relations over his alleged foot-dragging on the neutron bomb issue.

Cleamons frustrated with cage season

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — "I won't lie," said Jim Cleamons, "it's been a trying year."

The Columbus native and former Ohio State University star was looking back on his first National Basketball Association season with the New York Knicks.

Cleamons went to the Knicks from the Cleveland Cavaliers in an October trade for Walt Frazier.

Cleamons played about 25 minutes a game, averaging 6.5 points and five shots.

"It wasn't the kind of year I expected," said the slender guard. "But then, I didn't really know what to expect. It wasn't until the season almost started that I knew I was going."

He's had two hip pointers, a bruised shoulder and injured left wrist in his first season in New York, saying, "Injuries have taken something away from me."

But he likes the idea of being more involved in offense.

"Now I can do something else besides bring the ball up the court, pass it to someone else and never see it again. But getting back into the offense has been difficult. It's taken a whole year to get out of that former shell I was in," he said.

Duren beats the booze and comes back to life

The Washington Post

NEW YORK — The year, he recalls, was 1959. Ryne Duren, the relief pitcher with the thick glasses and the menacing fastball, was throwing in the Yankees' bullpen at Washington's Griffith Stadium. A can of beer, about two-thirds full he later discovered, whizzed by his ear. Duren complained to his manager, Casey Stengel, who lodged a protest with the office of the commissioner of baseball.

Later that season a similar incident occurred in Boston's Fenway Park. This time the can, unopened, almost succeeded in parting his cap from his head. A second protest prompted the commissioner to action and the sale of beer at major-league parks soon was limited to paper containers and other software.

Duren told that story over lunch the other day. He smiled when he had finished, pausing for effect. "How ironic," he said, finally, "that it should be me."

Ironic because at the time Duren was the last man imaginable to complain about someone's drinking habits. Ironic because at the time it was almost unthinkable anyone could slip a beer by Duren, no matter at what speed it was served. Ironic because at the time Ryne Duren was a lush.

He doesn't care for the word Alcoholic, not because it is too harsh but because it doesn't address what he considers the issue. More apropos, he says, is "alcohol abuser" or "alcohol addict." If that last phrase suggests a certain affinity with drugs, it's purely intentional.

"It's important to recognize alcohol as a drug, something which can lead to a chemical dependency, and anyone who abuses its use is an addict in every sense of the word," Duren said at his midtown hotel. "Other drugs require a prescription. This one is available to everyone. The least that should be required is a warning, that you can only handle a certain amount per body weight without being adversely affected."

Duren discovered the terrible consequences of addition the hard way. His baseball career dissipated. He lost his family. On at least two occasions he can remember, perhaps more of which even he is unaware, he attempted to take his life. He spent 82 days in a mental hospital, a lot longer than that on skid row. His is a dramatic story, one which he nevertheless has recounted with a good deal of unforced humor in "The Comeback" (Lorenz Press, 169 pp., $7.95).

This, of course, is not your standard, garden-variety ballplayer comback. Ryne Duren did not come back from a sore arm or a wrecked knee or a slipped disc. "It's coming back to life, at age 38," he said. "I had to take a crash course in adolescence. It's finding out what life is all about before you're ready to live. And I think life is fantastic."

He smiled as he said it, smiled from behind those wire-rimmed glasses which no longer appear so ominous now that Duren has laid to rest the round, white weapon with the red stitching. He has a job which is much more than a job ("It's my life and my daily environment"), a position as director of the alcoholic rehabilitation program of the Stoughton (Wis.) Community Hospital. And he has a full-time partner in his work, a registered nurse and research director at Stoughton who became Duren's second wife. Diane Duren is a vivacious woman who learned across the table during dessert and said, conspiratorially, "If you'd like to hear my story, I'm a strawberry addict."

There was a time when Ryne Duren was the most feared pitcher in baseball. Not necessarily the best, but the most feared. In his salad days with the Yankees, especally in 1958 when he won six games and saved 20 and helped the team to a world championship, he would walk to the mound, take a windup and toss the first practice pitch onto the screen behind home plate. It was more than just an act, Duren says. The batters had a right to be afraid because as often as not Duren was hung over.

He started drinking early, in imitation of his family. It was a pefectly acceptable practice for young males growing up in Cazenovia, Wis. The habit grew during the minor-league years where drinking, with its connotation of competition, was almost an auxiliary sport. And it reached the danger level in the majors where the availability and the camaraderie was even greater.

Duren played for some excellent teams. He also played for some teams which were almost as renowned for their alcoholic consumption as for their baseball. The Yankees of Mickey Mantle were celebrated in watering holes around the league. Then there was a stay with the Angels of Bo Belinsky and Dean Chance, followed by a term with the Phillies whose "Dalton Gang" had created a legend of merriment.

From Philadelpia he was traded to the Reds, where teammate Deron Johnson interrupted a party to dangle Duren by the heels from a hotel room window 16 stories above the street. And then there was that sad end with the Senators where, in a drunken stupor, Duren threatened to jump from a bridge before his last manager, Gil Hodges, intervened.

"Alcohol kept me from arriving in the big leagues until I was 29," he said. "It undermined any chance I had for greatness. And I had awesome talent, I felt, comparable to Koufax. He had trouble with control, also, as a young pitcher but he was able to master it. I perpetuated the immaturity. I never could resolve the conflicts. I was constantly trying to cover up yesterday's mistakes."

And the case of Ryne Duren is not an isolated incidence in baseball. "At least eight former teammates of mine who were heavy alcohol abusers are dead now," he said. Duren has estimated that 35 percent of the big leaguers in his time were addicted to the stuff. "And drinking is worse today in society," he said. "There is a greater increase in the amount of liquor being sold today than there has been in the population. Somebody's drinking. I don't think ballplayers are any smarter about it than doctors, lawyers and indian chiefs."

Duren doesn't expect the world or the country to suddenly go dry. Nor does he expect big-league teams to sever their lucrative affiliations with beer companies, which promote the macho image athletes lend to their product. What he hopes to do is educate the public to the fact that alsohol is a drug, that care must be taken with its use, that certain ground rules must be understood.

The book, he realizes, is a tool of education. "This was not meant to be an expose," Duren said. It comes across as a strong affirmation of life, intensified by a harrowing glimpse at a slow and lingering death.

Boe still loves his prodigal son

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — There was an ironic twist to a couple of stories that hit the newspapers this week from different directions.

Out of Piscataway, N.J., came a report that two paychecks made out to members of the New Jersey Nets had bounced because of insufficient funds. Prodded, the Nets made them good on Monday.

Just another in the miseries of the National Basketball Association's orphaned franchise.

Across the river, in Uniondale, N.Y., fans crammed the Nassau Coliseum to watch the Islanders, rated the second best team in the National Hockey League, pursue their bid for the Stanley Cup.

The Nets and Islanders: blood brothers, both owned by sports entrepreneur Roy Boe, yet as much alike as the brothers in the Biblical parable — the one who took his stake and squandered it on riotous living, the other who stayed home and faithfully performed his duties.

Does Boe have trouble reconciling himself with his "Prodical Son?"

"Not in the least," says the lean, 47-year-old Ivy Leaguer who sacrificed his own all-around athletic talents to pursue a business career. "The Nets gave us a lot of thrills as champions of the American Basketball Association. Now, in the NBA, we are undergoing some heartaches.

"We have lost money every year since 1969 (a reported $7 million). We have been beleaguered with law suits. We don't have a permanent home. Twice we have built a team from virtual scratch and we are in the process of doing so again.

"But I have no favortism, although the Islanders are making money and the Nets are losing it. During the season I think I saw as many Nets games as Islanders games."

While the Islanders have remained firm at their Nassau Coliseum base, playing almost every game before a sellout crowd of 15,317 for a season total of close to 700,000, the Nets have been roving, unloved and unappreciated gypsies.

They have moved from the ABA to the NBA, from Commack to Hempstead to Uniondale on Long Island to Picataway, where they have been playing in Rutgers University's cramped gym pending construction of a permanent home in the Meadowlands Complex in New Jersey.

They finished last in their NBA division with a 24-58 record, once losing 16 games in a row. Their average attendance for the 1977-78 campaign was 5,647 a game.

With pro basketball salaries averaging $100,000 a year, such an operation looks like a ticket to the poor house.

BOE'S BUSINESS practices have come under attack from players, associates and rival owners. "I am impulsive — I make snap decisions," he says, "but I've paid off every contract. I've kept my word."

After building the Nets into a team that won ABA championships in 1974 and 1976, he became involved in salary disputes with Julius (Dr. J) Erving. He traded his star to the Philadelphia 76ers for $2.5 million and proceeded to discard other members of the successful team. Law suits resulted from a decision to desert Long Island for New Jersey.

Boe, a graduate of Yale University, joined his father in the food business, then branched out to promote a basement fabric shop into a dress enterprise which he sold for several million dollars.

In 1968, he paid $50,000 for the Westchester Bulls of the now defunct Atlantic Coast Football League, and moved the team to Long Island. In 1969, he and eight friends paid $1 million for the floundering Nets of the ABA. Three years later he headed a syndicate that bought the expansion Islander franchise of the NHL, paying $6 million to the league and $4 million to the Rangers for territorial rights.

"I am now a sports franchiser," he said. "It's a business, not a hobby with me. I get great satisfaction out of winning, out of artistic success. From a financial standpoint, with escalating salaries and problems, it is tough. I wouldn't recommend it."

Soviets edge U. S. netters

NORCROSS, Ga. (AP) — Billie Jean King salvaged some American pride Wednesday night by ripping Yelena Granaturova 6-0, but the Soviet Union took three of five matches to edge the U.S. squad 26-24 in a five-match round of the American-Soviet Tennis Series.

The Americans held an 80-72 lead after the first half of the series, played in the Soviet Union in September. Their lead was narrowed to 104-98 after Wednesday's play.

A point is awarded for each game won.

Matches will continue Friday, Saturday and Sunday at the Peachtree World of Tennis.

The teams are made up of three men and three women on each squad.

Tracy Austin, the 15-year-old American sensation, will arrive Friday from California where she is attending school.

The Soviets' top young woman, Natasha Borodina, did not play Wednesday but will see action Friday.

The Soviets captured the first three one-set matches Wednesday as Vadim Borisov and Teimuraz Kakulia defeated America's Stan Smith and John Whitlinger 6-2 in the opening doubles match.

Borisov then had little trouble with Smith in the men's singles, crushing the former Wimbledon champion 6-2.

King and Julie Anthony then dropped a 7-6 decision to Granaturova and Irina Chevchenko, losing in a tiebreaker 5-4 after leading 5-0.

King then tore Granaturova apart before the mixed doubles team of 16-year-old Ben Testerman and Anthony edged Kakulia and Chevchenko 8-7.

Petty resigns Cooper position

ABILENE—Glenn Petty has resigned as head track coach at Abilene Cooper to become head track coach and football assistant at Howard Payne University, according to Abilene athletic director Shorty Lawson.

Petty's resignation is effective at the end of the current school year.

Petty took a weak track program and won the District 5-4A title last spring. His team also qualified five individuals for the regionals in the recent 5-4A meet held in Midland.

Petty will replace Wayne Rathke at Howard Payne. Rathke resigned recently as head track coach.

Did 'Skins miscalculate?

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The St. Louis Cardinals say the Washington Redskins apparently fumbled during the off-season in offering fullback Jim Otis a five-year National Football League contract.

While tailoring a pay package of nearly $300,000 to avoid forfeiting a draft choice under compensation terms of the NFL's basic agreement, the Cards contended Wednesday, the Redskins were guilty of a miscalculation.

A source in Washington told The Associated Press that Otis was offered a five-year pact for $299,000, a figure under which his yearly pay would average $59,000.

But while the Redskins got under a $60,000 amount under which St. Louis would be entitled to a third-round draft choice Washington does not have, a Cards spokesman said, they trimmed too much off the package's final two years.

The Washington source told the AP that Otis, under terms of the offer, would receive $80,000 both this year and next, a salary of $79,000 in 1980 and pay figures of $30,000 in both 1981 and 1982.

The basic agreement's provisions dictate minimum pay for Otis in 1981 as a nine-year player at $32,000, St. Louis contends.

"There is a mistake," said Kevin Byrne, the Cards' public relations director. "It's surprising that the Redskins didn't catch it."

Byrne said that St. Louis, even if Otis signs such a contract, has the right of first refusal under the agreement. The Cards could match the offer by midnight next Monday and retain the player's services.

Additional Cards players who have presented the team offers they received as free agents prior to last Monday's deadline are Jerry Latin, a fourth-year running back, and Charlie Davis, a fifth-season defensive tackle.

St. Louis has until midnight Friday to match the Denver Broncos' contract offer to Latin and the Minnesota Vikings' contract offer to Davis.

"I'll be very surprised if by Friday night Latin and Davis are not here," predicted Byrne. "With Otis, there is a problem with that contract. It does involve the final two years."

Tony Greene inks pact

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Former All-Pro safety Tony Greene signed a new, multi-year contract Wednesday with the Buffalo Bills, ending the possibility he might become a free agent following the 1979 football season.

Memphis gets their revenge

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — "This is no joke, folks," said a broadcaster trying to convince his listeners they were tuned to a baseball game in the sixth inning. "It's Memphis State 35, Delta State 1."

It got worse — for Delta State.

Vengeful Memphis State clobbered the visiting Statesmen 39-3 in a game Wednesday that fell only two runs short of a national collegiate record set in 1975.

The Tigers, miffed at a 19-5 loss to the Statesmen on Monday in Cleveland, Miss., drilled 41 hits off four Delta State pitchers, including center fielder Bubba McBrain, who took the mound in the sixth. The Statesmen collected seven hits from three Tiger hurlers.

"I've been in baseball since 1942 and I don't remember anybody ever scoring 39 runs on me," said Coach Dave "Boo" Ferriss, a former Boston Red Sox pitcher, whose team is 28-13. "It was their day."

The Tigers, 29-4 and ranked ninth in collegiate baseball, scored 11 runs in the first and five in each of the next three innings to take a 26-0 lead after four frames.

Third baseman Doug Granger led the assault, scoring seven runs on seven hits. Designated hitter David Parks drove in eight runs and first baseman Allen Robinson, 4-for-6, drilled a three-run homer. Parks also had a three-run homer and was 5-for-7.

The national collegiate record for runs scored in a single game by one team was set by Georgia Tech with a 41-0 victory over Olivet in 1975.

Home plate umpire Jim Goodwin, a 20-year umpiring veteran, said Wednesday's game was the most lopsided he's ever been in.

"My legs gave out in the fifth inning," Goodwin said. "I'm so tired I can hardly walk."

Sounders acquire Wallace

SEATTLE (AP) — The Seattle Sounders have obtained midfielder Gordon Wallace, the North American Soccer League team's leading scorer in 1977, from the Scottish first division Raith Rovers, a team spokesman says.

Wallace, 34, tallied 12 goals and contributed four assists for a total of 28 points in his only year with the Sounders.

SANTA FE ARTIST THEDA RHEA has brought a collection of her newest paintings to Midland for a solo show at the Hanging Tree Gallery, 3201 N. Big Spring St. The exhibition will open with a preview between 6 and 9 p.m. today, to which the public is invited. The artist will be present at the preview and again during gallery hours Friday and Saturday, said gallery owner Carol Swain.

Suspected 'coziness' problem now reversed

By JAY SHARBUTT

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Not long ago, federal agencies such as the Federal Communications Commission often were accused by consumer activists of being a bit too cozy with the industries they regulate.

Is it fair to say the broadcast industry now worries that the federal regulators may get too cozy with consumer activists?

"That certainly is the fear we have, yes," says Vincent T. Wasilewski, president of the National Association of Broadcasters.

Last week, in a speech to NAB members, he voiced concern that "informal alliances appear to be forming among supposedly independent regulatory agencies and branches of government."

Public-interest lawyers who previously "were fomenting petitions to deny" broadcast licences in many cities now hold top and mid-level posts in government and regulatory agencies, he said.

Wasilewski described them as "informally bonded together by the cement of philosophical agreement." He said all this in a speech at the annual NAB convention in Las Vegas, Nev.

After the talk, he was asked what sort of climate he feels this "informal alliance" of former public-interest barristers may create in official Washington.

It's "a climate of change," he said, and "the worry on the part of the broadcast industry concerns what this change is going to be."

He cited something the NAB opposes: a Federal Trade Commission proposal to limit TV commercials aimed at kids and ban the ads that tout highly sugared food products.

"It's a wonderment," said Wasilewski, "about what'll happen if the FTC succeeds in removing certain ads for children.

"Will the FCC then step in and say, 'Although those ads are precluded, you're still obligated to carry childrens' programs even though you lack the financial support you had before.'?"

He meant the revenue from the sugar-food ads that now appear on Saturday morning shows for children on television.

"It's this type of thing, a Tinkers-to-Evers-to-Chance kind of situation" that worries broadcasters, the NAB chief said.

His organization represents CBS, NBC, ABC and 4,500 radio and 550 TV stations. He was asked if, should the Federal Trade Commission's proposals be adopted, the NAB will go to court to battle them.

"Yes, we'll be involved" in any legal action, he said.

By TOM ZITO
The Washington Post

When is this folly to stop? Just how long do you think you can fool people with this garbage you laughingly call satire? When will you cease to pollute the minds of the innocent? How can you sleep at night when you think of all the people you've duped? If you were to cease printing tomorrow, the damage you already wrought would still be irreparable. You should be investigated as subversive.

Enclosed please find $7 to renew subscription.

Such is the stuff that comes hurtling over the transom at Mad magazine, the monthly purveyor of wacko humor appropriately located at 485 MADison Ave. (the masthead says it) in New York.

Once thught of as an adolescent, sophomoric, downright idiotic (the masthead almost says that) publication, Mad, as its very name might imply, has become something of an American institution. Twenty-five years old now, Mad has a monthly circulation of over two million and almost 100 Mad paperback books are steady sellers. All this is done with a staff of 10.

"We don't know what we're going to write next," says associate editor Jerry De Fuccio, "so who could use a secretary?"

The magazine began as Mad Comics, an offshoot of E. C. Comics, once perpetrators of bizarre titles like "Tales From the Crypt" that a congressional committee headed by Estes Kefauver found to contribute to juvenile delinquency. Soon after that, E. C. Comics went the way of much mid-'50s flesh, and Mad became a monthly magazine. In issue No. 30, 1956, Mad unveiled its patron saint, Alfred E. Neuman, that familiar freckle-faced cretin with red hair and a missing tooth. Although he's now a registered trademark, Neuman actually comes from a 1907 newspaper ad for a Kansas City dentist named Painless Romine. There was a bandage tied around his head, as if his infamous missing tooth had just been yanked, and those immortal words were spelled out for all to see: "What, me worry?" Below that was another line now thoughfully excised: "It didn't hurt a bit."

"There is something magic about that face," says Mad writer Lou Silverstone, one of the "usual gang of idiots" not listed on the masthead who are all free-lance contributors to the magazine. "I remember when I was 10 buying a postcard of it at an arcade, long before Mad ever started up."

If Mad is unorthodox in its operation — no staff writers or artists, no advertising, a solitary notice to warn of lapsing subscriptions — so, too, is the way publisher Bill Gaines deals with his contributors and subscribers. Writers and artists are treated to an annual 17-day overseas jaunt, and Gaines sometimes personally helps out in the ritual destruction with hammer and screwdriver, of non-renewing subscribers' address-stencils so they won't fall into the hands of junk-mail distributors. Once when the crew trekked off to Haiti for its annual trip, Gaines had in tow the name of the solitary Haitian subscriber and the entourage showed up in a caravan of nine jeeps — the lead car flying an Alfred E. Neuman pennant — to deliver his renewal form personally.

Even as publisher of the original E. C. Comics group, Gaines had displayed a voracious hunger for absolute detail — as well as food (a portly fellow, he has been known on a whim to fly to Paris for dinner). When De Fuccio first went to work for E. C.'s Two Fisted Tales and Front Line Combat 27 years ago, he suggested a combat strip on submarines. Gaines said, "The guys in the Navy will know if it's not real," so he sent the young writer off to New London for a week below on the U.S.S. Guardfisher. After surfacing, De Fuccio fired off a telegram:

"Many brave hearts are asleep in the deep. Glub, glub."

Mad also has had its jollies in court, before the same judge, no less, who heard the Rosenberg case. Irving Berlin sued the magazine when a "Sing Along with Mad' article had Dr. Neuman in a Mitch Miller pose, leading readers through songs "sung to the tune of" a number of Berlin-penned items. Judge Irving R. Kaufman noted that the songwriter did not have "prior rights to iambic pentameter," and further observed that "If I sing 'Blue Skies' in the shower, I do not have to send you a 2-cent royalty when I get out." Time called editor De Fuccio after the victory, and asked him how he felt. His response was straightforward: "God bless America."

INSTRUMENTALISTS of the U. S. Army Field Band, joined by members of the Soldiers' Chorus, will be featured in a public concert at 8 p.m. April 28 in Midland's Alamo Junior High School auditorium. Free tickets for the event are available to the public between 8:30 a.m. and 5 p.m. Monday through Friday at the Midland Chamber of Commerce offices, 211 N. Colorado St.

Even 'old' roles suit Betsy Palmer

By CONNIE GRZELKA

NEW YORK (AP) — Ever since Betsy Palmer went in as a substitute for Faye Emerson on the popular "I've Got a Secret" television show back in the 1950s, stepping in as a replacement has become almost second nature to the actress.

"I'm always the big old replacement," Miss Palmer said after a matinee performance of "Same Time, Next Year." Since the show opened four years ago, five actresses have appeared in the starring role.

The actress first appeared in a Broadway starring role in "Cactus Flower" and in 1965 had the leading role in a revival of "South Pacific."

"I used to think, why do I want to do a role that somebody else has done. Then I realized that just because someone else got the original glory, that doesn't mean I can't recreate the role the way I want to do it."

"Then you think of the classics and how many times they've been redone — so big deal! You just don't have the original glory, that's all."

Miss Palmer, who has starred in regional theater productions of "A Doll's House" and "As You Like It," and created the role of Alma in the Broadway run of "The Eccentricities of a Nightingale," says she "hated" "Same Time, Next Year" when she first saw it.

"I only saw the first act and I thought it was a very minor piece of theater. After I read it, I saw its potential and I find something new in every performance."

Although Miss Palmer, who received a bachelor's degree in dramatic arts from DePaul University in 1949, began her career with summer stock theater in Chicago the same year and started working on the stage here in 1951, she is still best known as a television personality:

"TV was a kind of doubleedged sword for me in a way. I became known through the game and talk shows — but the audience knew me as a personality, not as an actress.

"I don't try to shake the image — I've just accepted it as a part of the way my life is supposed to be. A lot of people think I'm still the television game show girl. You can't negate it — there are 360 degrees in a circle and that's only one wedge."

A lot of college students have the same impression, she finds when she speaks on campus. "They've got a chip on their shoulder — I can feel it. But by the end of the lecture, they warm up. Maybe it's nicer not to be known the other way and let it be a surprise for them.

PLANNING A FINE ARTS FESTIVAL to be held Saturday night at the Midland Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints are Mrs. Stephen Brinkman, seated left, chairman, and Mrs. Guy Hammer and Mrs. Blaine Bushman. The festival will begin at 7:30 p.m. Saturday at the church, 2101 Tarleton St., open to all interested residents of the community and surrounding area.

Music club members win superior rating at fest

Members of junior music clubs in the city which are affiliated with Texas Federation of Music Clubs won superior ratings at a recent spring festival here.

There were 87 superior ratings given students in the festival. A total of 140 piano students participated in the festival.

Sherri Boyd and Mark McKenna, both members of Harmony Club, received third-year superiors for gold certificate, as did Alicia Thompson of Sibelius Club, Chris Sullivan of Chopin Club, and Diane Newman, Blake Davenport and Deborah Newman, all of Grand Staff Club.

Receiving superior ratings for sixth successive year were Lori Westbrook of Chopin Club and Carol Scott of Harmony. A fourth year successive superior went to Paige Humes of Harmony Club. Seventh successive superior went to John Heard of Chopin Club, and Kimberly Culvahouse of Bach Club received a ninth successive superior.

Appearance made

LOS ANGELES (AP) — James "Jimmy the Weasel" Fratianno, held in protective custody for three months, has made a surprise appearance in U.S. District Court to plead innocent to charges that he aided in the slaying of a reputed San Diego mobster.

Fratianno, accompanied by four U.S. marshals during his court appearance Thursday, had been named in one count growing out of the slaying of Frank "The Bomp' Bompensiero, a reputed mobsterturned-FBI-informant. Fratianno, 64, is the key prosecution witness in an extortion, conspiracy, racketeering and murder case.

'Project UFO' finds basis in actual files

By BILL KAUFMAN
Newsday

During the 1950s new terms like flying saucer and unidentified flying object entered the language. The science-fiction world they described excited the public's imagination, prompting the entertainment industry to exploit otherworldly themes.

The level of public consciousness about the possibility of extraterrestrial visitors has recently been raised by virtue of a pair of hugely successful movies, "Star Wars," and "Close Encounters of the Third Kind."

These box-office behemoths, which followed by a few years the enormously popular science fiction film "2001, A Space Odyssey", are responsible, to a large extent, for perpetuating our interest in the vast infinity above and beyond.

Since the movies have achieved great success in the area of exploring the unknowns of space, television can't be far behind. "Star Trek" has become a cult item (it was recently announced that a big-budget motion picture will be based on the series), as have several other programs that pose tantalizing questions about who — or what — may be out there peeking at us here on earth.

Hard on the heels of "Close Encounters of the Third Kind," a new television series, "Project UFO," which in little more than a month has racked up very substantial ratings — proving, apparently, that viewers have a keen interest in strange happenings and the world of the beyond.

The NBC show, which is telecast Sunday nights, is turned out by Jack Webb, and, with the traditional Webb imprimatur, boasts a semi-official style in which stentorian tones and cryptic dialogue, mixed with fast cutting, provide viewers with a sense of urgency.

According to NBC, "Project UFO" is a true-to-life dramatization of the Air Force's investigations based on its "Blue Book" files of mysterious sightings of more than 12,000 unidentified flying objects (which leads one to assume that there are a potential 12,000 scripts here).

The program belongs to the genre that claims authenticity, because its material is taken from actual files. However, a key element to keep in mind is that the "Project UFO" stories are admitted dramatizations, and not documentaries. In other words, have fun, but take it all with the proverbial grain of salt.

The series stars two comparatively unknown actors, William Jordan and Caskey Swaim, as the main characters. Jordan, who recently appeared in NBC's "The Disappearance of Sister Aimee," plays Maj. Jake Gatlin, an officer in charge of Project Blue Book. Swaim is his aide, Staff Sgt. Harry Fitz.

Of the two, Swaim is by far the lesser known; although he appeared in Henry Winkler's movie "Heroes," he was a starstruck bellhop working at the Continental Hyatt House on Sunset Strip in Los Angeles only six months ago.

The show's co-producer, William Coleman, a retired Air Force colonel, is the man whom Jordan plays. Coleman headed the real Project Blue Book for nine years and is the person who scoured the now-public files, which are stored in the National Archives in Washington.

It all began in 1954, Coleman recalled recently, when he sighted an unidentified object while flying an attack bomber. He pursued it and, although he maintains that he closed in to one-eighth of a mile, the disc-shaped object zipped off.

To this day, Coleman's UFO contact is among the unexplained. His interest aroused, Coleman became the boss of Project Blue Book six years later.

Coleman's recollection of the incident: "Visibiity was between 40 and 50 miles that day. We were just south of Montgomery, Ala., and I was leaning back to relax for a few minutes while the copilot flew the plane. That's when I first saw the object, up to 10,000 above me, traveling in the same direction we were, at about the 2 o'clock position.

"I asked the copilot if he saw the shiny white object, and he said he did — that it must be a craze in the windshield. So I took the airplane and started to turn. The craze should have either disappeared or fallen off to the side. But it didn't clear up. The object began to descend and it crossed our altitude.

"It was an odd-looking thing. There was no sign of any wings or a vertical stabilizer. We started to close in on it — within a mile now, and coming up on the tops of trees pretty fast. When we came within three-fourths of a mile, I could see it was definitely a circular object.

"At one-eighth of a mile, I told the crew: 'Keep your heads cool. We are going to overtake it and I want you to capture every detail that you can.' Naturally, no one had a camera."

After a few more maneuvers the object suddenly disappeared. Coleman said that he later asked his crew not to discuss the sighting with anyone until they had written individual reports and filed them.

The next morning all five reports matched in every detail.

Peruvian sex study wins 'Golden Fleece'

By WARD SINCLAIR
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — When Dr. Pierre van den Berghe, a sociologist, gave his research partner the, ahem, green light to spend some evenings in a Peruvian brothel with U.S. tax money, he knew there could be repercussions.

But Van den Berghe and his partner, Dr. George Primov, decided their lust for knowledge would have to go ahead of the risk.

So the social sciences marched forward, with an assist from their federal research grant, as Van den Berghe and Primov focused on brothel life in the Andean village of San Tuti, a broad spot in the road outside of Cuzco.

One of the results of their work was an article, written by Primov, called "The Peruvian Brothel, a Sexual Dispensary and Social Arena." It was published in the Archives of Sexual Behavior last year.

As part of a larger study of ethnic and class relationships in Peruvian mountain society, the research concentrated on the non-sexual functions of the bordello as a male gathering place for drinking and storytelling and, yes, as an attraction for "gringo tourists," as Van den Berghe put it.

Well, the repercussions came raining down Monday on Van den Berghe and Primov and their benefactor, the National Institute for Mental Health.

Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., laid his monthly Golden Fleece award — a recognition of "the biggest, most ridiculous or most ironic waste of taxpayers' money" — on NIMH for the $97,000 grant it gave Van den Berghe.

"I do not object if academic researchers, especially of Dr. Van den Berghe's or De. Primov's generally high reputation, want to study Peruvian brothels or even ancient Inca vestal non-virgins," Proxmire said.

"What I object to is the federal government paying for it. With federal reserach budgets so tight and the needs for mental health research here at home so great, it is unbelievable that NIMH would give this project such priority and fund the field trip to Peru," he added.

Primov, who handled the primary research at San Tuti, is an assistant professor of sociology at the University of Missouri in Columbia.

Van den Berghe is a full professor in the department of sociology and anthropology at the University of Washington in Seattle.

He happens also to be the author of one of the most explicit how-to books of our time: a tome entitled "Academic Gamesmanship," which tells the scholarly how to tap the federal treasury for grant money.

That little irony was not lost on Proxmire, who railed at NIMH for "a record of mismanagement and lack of control of taxpayer funds once the grant was issued."

NIMH grant managers could not be reached for comment last evening, but Van den Berghe was in his office in Seattle, actually loving every minute of his new notoriety.

"I'm flattered by all the attention...I'm amazed at how fair Sen. Proxmire is — this is above his usual standard for fairness," he said.

"I'm sure the senator gets some electoral advantage from this, but my reputation in the academic community will be enhanced. Six colleagues already have come in spontaneously to congratulate me for the Golden Fleece."

Actually, he continued, the brothel study was only a tiny part of the larger, 18-month project in Peru.

"My associate (Primov) proposed this to me and it was done with complete propriety. I was aware of potential repercussions, but I gave him the green light to do it on his own time," Van den Berghe said.

He said that Primov spent "about three weeks of evening work" on the study, making 20 visits to San Tuti and spending grant money only for gasoline.

"Fifty dollars would be a high estimate of what it cost the American taxpayers. Dr. Primov has made a significant contribution to scholarly knowledge. In terms of dollar return, it is damned cheap research," he said.

Primov's article reported that 21 prostitutes were "formally" interviewed and that "many more were interviewed informally . . . Prostitutes were also observed outside the brothel. By visiting the brothel at various times, it was possible to obtain a good idea of its everyday functioning."

As for the overall project, Van den Berghe said he and his associates actually returned about $1,500 to NIMH, with receipts and vouchers for everything.

"We accounted for every last dollar. I'm clean on the money and I have a clear conscience."

He said, however, that he had one regret. His book, Academic Gamesmanship, is unfortunately" no longer available at the moment his name is making the papers.

MacArthur's former car restored

By WILLIAM C. MANN

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — There's nothing Dan Irish likes better than taking a worn-out old car and making a classic of it. But he thought he'd met his match when he saw the junker that Gen. Douglas MacArthur used to own.

"It was a complete, pure piece of junk. The engine was frozen, there was no body, no interior, nothing else," Irish said.

"Almost everything that you see on the car now has been replaced."

What you see is a sleek, black Cadillac roadster, one of two cars like it built in 1937 and the only one with a liquor cabinet and a dictaphone. Dangling from a steel flagstaff above the bright chromium grillwork is MacArthur's personal flag of five gold stars circled on a field of blue.

Five months of toil by 41 different craftsmen working 12,000 man-hours went into the restoration. Irish said he used 416 square feet of sheet metal, 100 square feet more than in a new compact.

The only original parts are the V-16 engine, the chassis, the wheels and some of the underpinning braces, he said.

"I doubt if anybody has ever restored a car requiring more ingenuity than this one," said Irish, a Californian retired to the Philippines. The job if performed in the United States would have cost more than the finished product would be worth, he said.

Yet Irish said the car would be priceless at an antique-car auction in the United States. "It might go for $45,000$-50,000 by itself, but because it belonged to a president, then belonged to General MacArthur, there's no telling what it would sell for," he said.

Irish has the original purchase order for the car from the Capital Agency in Washington, D.C. Manuel L. Quezon, first president of the Philippine Commonwealth, commissioned the car, then gave it to MacArthur, at the time his military adviser and later commander of U.S. forces in Asia.

MacArthur rode in the car until the Japanese Imperial army drove him from the Philippines in 1942, then reclaimed it briefly after World War II.

Irish, 57, has been restoring cars as a hobby since he and his father worked over a Model T when he was 7. He said the Cadillac was his most demanding restoration subject yet, since it had been ruined by three unprotected decades on display in the Philippines' salty climate.

White House jam session recalls Carter campaign

By JOSEPH McLELLAN and NANCY COLLINS
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — "This is not my regular line of work," said master of ceremonies Jimmy Carter. Like a real pro, however, he paused just the right length of time to let the laughter run down before adding his second punch line: "Some people might think I do this better."

Few things are done better in Washington than Monday night's entertainment at the White House. The music was country — the kind of music Carter said he had heard "as a farm boy in deep-South Georgia."

When the regularly scheduled musical program was finished, and all the guests had been fed, and everyone who wanted a picture taken with the president and his wife had been satisfied, the party moved back into the East Room for an impromptu country jam session where Carter's skills as a master of ceremonies emerged spontaneously.

The evening, a reception for members of the Country Music Association, had a down-home feeling that seldom is observed in the chaste white rooms of the presidential residence, with Carter and his wife acting like kissin' cousins to their 200 guests.

The scheduled concert featured big-name stars Loretta Lynn, who campaigned vigorously for Carter, Conway Twitty and Tom T. Hall. After dinner — a cold buffet which featured no hominy grits or black-eyed peas but roast beef, shrimp and crab, pata maison, poached cold salmon with green sauce, brie with almonds, strawberry tarts and cream puffs — some of the lesser known but excellent singers associated with Carter's campaign gave rousing performances.

They included James Talley, Larry Gatlin, Gary and Teri Morris, and Charlie Daniels, and the atmosphere was like that of the political rallies during Carter's campaign.

The night was heavy with nostalgia; many of the performers were old friends who had worked with Carter during his presidential campaign, and he obviously felt at ease. Early in the performance Jody Powell and the president slipped out of the East Room, where the concert was held to make a call to the Senate. Powell explained later. The row of seats reserved for members of the Senate was empty during most of the concert. Senator Alan Cranston, D-Calif., explained that the cause of the delay was nothing important — "just trying to mop up on Panama."

The night became a replay of the Carter campaign at the end of this second concert when Gary Morris began a spoken voice-over in the "American Trilogy" while his wife Teri, hummed "Glory, Glory, Hallelujah" in the background. In a solemn but folksy voice, Morris intoned a sort of campaign pep-talk: "he has stood up and faced the issues, and he has been brave enough to do it in his own way and I'm damn proud to have worked for the President of the United States, Mr. Jimmy Carter."

The Carters ate together in the front row, calling out requests and exchanging remarks with the performers during the informal concert. They ran upon the stage between numbers, hugging and kissing the musicians and giving every sign of sheer delight.

In his introduction to the earlier concert, Carter recalled how he grew up with this music "that you and I and my wife love."

"It's good to see something from the South that's so popular," he added. "As a matter of fact, some people have called my campaign a crossover hit." (This is a term of the trade, referring to a country tune that becomes a hit on the standard pop charts. The people in the audience, more than half of whom were from Nashville or nearby, needed no explanation, they broke out into instant, enthusiastic laughter.)

Israel's land redefinition draws low poll results

By H.D.S. GREENWAY
The Washington Post

JERUSALEM — Israel's subtle redefinition of its position on withdrawal in the occupied West Bank, by all appearances, is an attempt to accentuate the positive and eliminate the negative, in terms of how the government is perceived abroad.

Rather than reflecting a substantive shift in negotiating policy, it is a kind of international window dressing designed to sell a product that clearly is not moving — particularly in the United States. But it did contain a nugget of change, at least in nuance.

The persistent contention that U.N. Resolution 242, which calls for Israeli withdrawal from territories captured during the 1967 war, does not apply to the West Bank has caused severe damage to Israel's image in America, where even U.S. Jewish leaders have expressed dismay.

A recent poll by the New York Times and CBS News showed that public support for the Israelis dropped from 54 percent in October to 43 percent now, while support for the Arabs remained almost stationary.

Although the new wording on Israel's Resolution 242 policy may solve some problems with the United States, it is not likely to satisfy the demands of the Egyptians that a solid commitment to withdrawal on the West Bank is necessary to get negotiations moving.

On Sunday, the Cabinet seemingly softened its stand by confirming that "Security Council Resolution 242 will serve as a basis for negotiations between Israel and all the neighboring states — Egypt, Jordan, Syria and Lebanon." The specific mention of Jordan as a negotiating partner was the softener, carrying with it the implication that Israel would discuss the West Bank with Jordan.

"I don't have to spell it out," said Zalman Shoval, Israel's new chairman of the Advisory Committee on Information to the Foreign Ministry, in a press briefing. "We are not discussing Amman with Jordan."

Israel's position under Begin all along has been that Resolution 242 does not apply to all territories occupied in 1967, and specifically does not encompass territorial compromises on the West Bank.

But what is Israel actually willing to discuss with Jordan? Everything is negotiable, the Israelis have long claimed, but the new wording does not commit Israel to the principle to which Washington and Cairo would like Israel to commit itself: namely that Resolution 242 means that Israel would physically withdraw at least partially from the West Bank. Nor has Israel committed itself to the principle that Resolution 242 requires withdrawal from "all fronts."

Rather, Israel believes its own limited "self rule" proposal and its theory of "functional withdrawal" rather than actual territorial concession, meet the requirements of the U.N. resolution. The Begin peace plan calls for an end to the military occupation of the West Bank and Gaza and a large measure of local autonomy for the inhabitants, but security would remain in the hands of the Israelis.

Thus it is Israel's stated intention to negotiate with Jordan the possible forms of this functional partition, rather than an actual partition. "We want them (the West Bank Arabs) to have Jordanian citizenship," Shoval said, and perhaps to vote in Jordanian elections.

It would not be fair to say that Sunday's Cabinet announcement was simply a matter of semantics without any substance. The cabinet reconfirmed what Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan has said many times: that if the Jordanians want to suggest an actual territorial division of the West Bank, Israel will not dismiss it out of hand. The matter is at least negotiable, but the West Bank is not necessarily returnable.

Sometimes, however, semantics can influence police by leaving doors and options open for the future.

The change in wording was the work of Dayan, who has consistantly and quietly tried to persuade his prime minister to adopt more positive wording and out of the diplomatic corners into which Beginis prone to paint himself.

British metal exchange like exclusive club

The Washington Post

LONDON — The ring is 30 feet in diameter with a great copper ashtray in the middle. Around the rim, men sit and shout at each other every weekday.

They could be bookmakers at a race track or a big fight. In fact, they are the dealers of the century-old London Metal Exchange. And, although their methods seem strange, their buying and selling of millions of dollars worth of non-ferrous metals each day sets the most widely influential free market price for copper, tin, lead, zinc and silver.

"One hundred at eight," shouts a dealer — all bidding must be by "open outcry" across the ring. And 100 metric tons of copper at 708 pounds sterling a ton ($1,324) are on the move.

A clerk records the deal, others communicate how the market is going to colleagues on open telephone lines and on to brokers everywhere. The closing prices are flashed around the world.

The London Metal Exchange has survived despite attempts by Third World producers and large mining companies to bypass it, despite competition from other markets such as the New York Commodities Exchange and the fact that London has waned in world importance since the exchange was first set up.

"The (London) price is the most important in the world. That is what our friends say and I'm sure it is too," said Ivor Foster, chairman of the exchange. He sees it as an extremely sensitive price barometer — responding daily to hundreds of influences in many parts of the world — that comes up with a realistic expression of supply and demand.

Increased speculation, particularly by large offshore trusts buying metal and holding onto it as a hedge against inflation, is one of the clouds over the exchange.

Cartels and price stabilizatoin schemes from the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) are the other clouds on the horizon.

Members smile sardonically when the word cartel is mentioned. They talk of the time producers kept buying copper at 234 pounds sterling a ton between 1962-63. The fixed price, they say, was disguising economic forces that caused even greater instability when the price finally moved.

The international tin agreement "ceiling" has not held in times of scarcity and attempts to set an hold a European zinc price have had only limited success. And UNCTAD will never work, they say.

"If you throw bureaucrats and politicians into it suddenly, you have a vested interest, the market will be thrown out of gear and you will not have a realistic price. I have great faith in politicians to bugger up everything they touch," said Foster.

The London metals exchange is often accused of causing unnecessary price fluctuations and that brokers get their living from movements and therefore have a vested interest in them. Members say the daily fluctuations make for greater underlying stability.

The London price can make front-page headlines in countries like Chile, Peru and Bolivia and be of major economic and even political significance.

Copper is the most important metal here and its price is used as the basis for direct supply contracts all over the world, apart from North America. But even there its influence is felt.

To the 29 companies who are members of the ring, it is a very exclusive club with rigid standards of membership and behavior.

Suits and ties must be worn and fines are imposed for swearing, smoking during the main dealing session.

Old grad comes back with gifts to Beirut school

By JOE ALEX MORRIS JR.
The Los Angeles Times

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Tiny Lebanon, wracked by a civil war, occupied by foreign powers, and invaded by Israel, is not a happy place these days.

But, once in a while, something good happens, too.

Tuesday was such a day. The scene was the lovely, tree-shaded campus of the American University of Beirut.

A Palestinian refugee named Talal Abu Ghazaleh, who went through the university on scholarships and graduated 18 years ago, came back. He brought with him a satchel full of money — $10 million, according to some sources.

Surrounded by top university officials, he helped university President Dr. Harold Hoelscher pull a rough canvas off a plaque, formally inaugurating a new faculty of business administration and management.

"I have a great debt to pay to this university, without whose favors I wouldn't be what I am today," he said.

The Israeli occupation of south Lebanon, the battered ruins of Christian Ain Rumaneh, shelled into submission by the Syrian army last week, even the thousands of new refugees squatting in squalor around the city seemed a long way off. So did Palestinian guerrilla leaders such as Dr. George Habbash and the late Wadieh Haddad, better known Palestinian graduates of the American University and men who helped confirm the suspicions of the late King Faisal of Saudi Arabia that the university was nothing but a hotbed of communism.

Talal Abu Ghazaleh is the other side of the coin, a Palestinian who made good thanks to the university, perhaps the most renowned American educational institution in the Middle East and a haven for free thinking in a restrictive part of the world.

He is a cigar-smoking, 40-year-old capitalist who was born in Jaffa in what is now Israel. His family fled to a refugee life in Lebanon. "I had no financial resources," he recalled. "I was lucky to get help from the university."

In the past six years, he has built his auditing and consulting firm into the biggest in the Arab world. It is based in Kuwait and has 23 branches.

The new faculty, described by Dean Elie Salem as an "act of faith," is designed to bring American University the same eminence in the field of business management as it has already achieved in medicine, engineering and other fields. The boost to the university's morale could not have come at a better time.

The American University survived the civil war, although it took an occasional pounding from Christian artillery. Its student body, once 5,500, shrank to less than half that, and has only built back up to 3,700 today. It has trouble recruiting the best professors because of the unsettled situation in the country.

The new school is being put into the original medical school building, which was built in 1873 and later used by other faculties as the university expanded. It has fallen into disrepair, with holes in the old stonework, broken drains, and painted over and boarded up windows.

It has a special significance for Abu Ghazaleh as well. It was here that he met and courted his wife while a student.

At the ceremony, held outdoors in bright sunshine, everyone was careful not to refer to the destitute state of Lebanon. Come what may, the theme was, the university will remain a center of learning and enlightenment in the Middle East.

'Staggering' energy cut seen in nation

By MARTIN MERZER

NEW YORK (AP) — The United States appears to have made a "staggering" cut in its growth of energy consumption and has pared its reliance on foreign oil, the oil industry said Wednesday.

The trend developed despite the failure by Congress to yet pass President Carter's energy plan and is likely to bolster the dollar.

Imports of crude oil and oil products, which jumped 18 percent in 1977 and 20 percent in 1976, are down a surprising 14 percent for the first three months of 1978, according to statistics released by the American Petroleum Institute.

In addition, preliminary data indicates that the United States last year significantly reduced its growth of energy use, according to the Petroleum Industry Research Foundation, an independent study group.

"In previous years, every 1 percent jump in the gross national product was matched by a 1 percent jump in energy consumption," said Lawrence Goldstein, a foundation economist.

"Last year, each 1 percent increase in the gross national product was matched by a 0.5 percent increase in energy use," he said. "That is absolutely staggering."

The developments are likely to help strengthen the U.S. dollar overseas, might help reduce the balance of payments deficit and should blunt some political criticism of the United States.

The dollar has been losing value during the past year, and analysts have attributed much of the problem to the United States' $26.7 billion trade deficit last year. For foreign oil alone last year, the U.S. spent $44.3 billion.

In addition, foreign business and political leaders have criticized the United States for not slacking its thirst for energy.

Although the level of oil imports is expected to rise slightly during the second half of the year, most analysts expect total imports at year-end to be below the 1977 level — perhaps as much as 5 percent lower. They expect imports to rise again in 1979 or 1980, but at a much slower rate than in recent years.

They cite several factors for this turnaround:

— Each barrel of oil produced in Alaska replaces a barrel that would have been imported. About 1.1 million barrels of Alaskan oil are being produced each day, with 1.5 million barrels a day expected by 1985. Alaskan oil production began last summer.

— In 1977, to combat natural gas shortages and severe winter weather, huge quantities of crude oil and heating fuel were imported. "We had a couple of weeks when distillate (heating oil) imports went over a million barrels a day, which was outrageous," Goldstein said.

When that crisis ended, U.S. refiners — who also were facing a glut of crude oil — kept refineries going full blast. That resulted in large inventories going into last winter, which also reduced imports.

Stepout slated

Depco, Inc., of Midland No. 1 O'Brien will be drilled as a 9,400-foot Strawn project in Chaves County, 12 miles southeast of Elkins.

It is 3/4 mile southeast of the Many Gates (Strawn gas) field and 660 feet from north and 1,980 feet from west lines of section 13-9s-29e.

Year-old Carter plan still mired in talks

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — It was a year ago Thursday that Jimmy Carter sent his energy plan to Congress. "The moral equivalent of war," he called it.

The president proposed the enactment of new taxes and other devices to drive up the price of oil and natural gas and discourage their consumption.

The objectives were diplomatic as well as economic: to reverse the country's increasing and costly dependency on Arab and other foreign oil. Carter said the program was a test of both the national will and his own administration's effectiveness.

Today, however, the energy legislation remains in a House-Senate conference committee, where it has been stuck since Thanksgiving.

The president says the country should feel shame at this. His critics feel relief.

There are a number of reasons — or rationalizations — for the failure of the bill.

One is glut. Partly thanks to Alaskan oil which started flowing into the lower 48 states last year, partly for other reasons, the energy problem in the United States right now is surfeit rather than shortage. The Department of Energy has had to consider a plan to export U.S. oil to Japan. The Texas Railroad Commission has quietly acted to restrict production of natural gas, to keep prices from falling. The experts say it is only temporary, but it is hard to persuade people of the need for national sacrifice in times like these.

In the upside-down world of energy, where good things are bad for us and vice versa, this basic problem of glut has been compounded by the problem of peace. We are learning to live with OPEC, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries whose membrs now supply us with nearly half our daily oil. For various reasons the Saudis and other Arab oil producers no longer seem as menacing as they did some years ago, nor do the Israelis seem as blameless. Perhaps because of oil, U.S. political perceptions have shifted; so at least say the polls.

Nor do the economic implications of energy dependency seem as fearsome as they once did. The dollars we spend for oil have created unfavorable balances of trade and payments; there is a dollar glut abroad, and the value of the dollar has fallen. Some experts are alarmed at that. For one thing, it has added to inflation; imported goods cost more. But the falling value of the dollar has also added to the attractiveness of U.S. goods in foreign markets; measured in foreign currencies, U.S. goods cost less. So as a nation we may be gaining in production for export and jobs what we are losing in inflation.

The Carter energy recommendations have also run into problems in domestic terms. His proposals perhaps could help on the inflation front by stabilizing the value of the dollar. In a more direcct sense, however, they would add to inflation. Their basic intent is to increase prices. The crude oil tax that Carter has proposed would lift the price of that product more than 50 percent at the refinery gate, and he would also relax significantly the present federal price controls on natural gas.

Congress voted for one big tax increase just a few months ago. That was in Social Security taxes, and members are already having second thoughts. It is hard to ask them to vote for another big tax-price increase now, in an election year and time of plentiful supply.

That is especially true because there are also doubts about how much good the tax and price increases would do.

The administration claims that with its plan in place, oil imports would be 4.5 million barrels less per day by 1985 than if no action is taken. But outside groups, including the Congressional Budget Office and General Accounting Office, have disputed these estimates as optimistic. Among many other things, the estimates assume a huge increase in coal production and consumption which the outside experts doubt is possible.

It is fashionable to argue that, on top of all these factors, the administration has also botched the tactical problems involved in moving its bill through Congress. Some critics blame Energy Secretary James Schlesinger for this. Some blame Carter. Som also blame assorted members of Congress, either skillful opponents of the plan or clumsy supporters.

But who knows? One of these days some version of the plan may pass, and then these same people will be hailed for their legislative genius.

Exxon now Number 2

NEW YORK (AP) — General Motors Corp., which makes nearly half the new cars sold in the United States, has edged out Exxon Corp. to recapture the top spot on the Fortune magazine list of America's 500 largest corporations.

For the previous three years, the giant oil company has topped the list that ranks companies in terms of sales. But Fortune said Wednesday that in 1977, GM overtook Exxon by about $835 million, rolling up sales of $54.96 billion compared to the oil company's $54.13 billion.

The biggest change among the top 20 was Atlantic Richfield's move up two steps from 15th in 1976 to 13th last year because of revenues from Alaska oil and its purchase of Anaconda Co. Atlantic Richfield had sales last year of $10.97 billion.

A newcomer to the top 500, DPF Inc., increased its sales 2,122 percent from 1976 to 1977, the largest jump by any of the corporations. DPF, a $21 million computer leasing company that was too small in 1976 to make the top 1,000 companies, jumped into 418th place by purchasing a $400 million commercial bakery, Interstate Brands.

Size did not guarantee success in 1977, however. Twenty-two of the 500 largest corporations lost money last year, compared to 12 the year before. The biggest loser was Bethlehem Steel, ranked 35th, which lost $488 million.

Swedish fathers taking advantage of 'daddy leave'

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — "Hoa" Dahlgren, the weightlifter, Janne Carlsson, the popular singer, and Per-Olf Edin, a labor economist, have one thing in common: they are among the new fathers taking advantage of one of Sweden's more unusual social welfare programs, paternity leave.

Sweden's first non-socialist government in 44 years, despite an economic recession and a pledge to reduce swollen public spending, has expanded the pioneering program that gives fathers an equal claim to stay home with their children as the mothers have had.

In recent weeks, the government has mounted a promotion campaign to get more fathers to take advantage of the role-switching program.

Billboards and movie shorts featuring Dahlren and Carlsson, both popular personalities, have been used to publicize the idea of "daddys on childbirth leave."

But Edin, a 37-year-old economist for the big Metal Workers Union, is more typical of the men who support the IEA.

"I think it is a very good reform, good on a personal basis, good for the father, good for the wife, and good for the child," he said during an interview in his apartment near central Stockholm.

"It is also good for my work for I get a better idea of household problems from actual experience — this is the real world. Most men in Sweden are too tied to their work. This gives us a chance to separate ourselves from the job a little bit."

Katharina, now one year old, is the first child for Edin and his wife, Sonya, an editor.

Between them, the Edins took a total of seven months of leave. Then Mrs. Edin left her job to spend more time with the girl.

"We decided to give the baby all our attention for her first year. Diapers and shopping are not problems — I've really enjoyed it," Edin said.

But despite Sweden's general acceptance of liberal social reforms and deep democratic traditions, many men reject the idea that they should stay home to change diapers and mix formulas while their wives are working.

A lot depends on the mothers job, Soeren Kindlund, chairman of the Family Welfare Commission, said.

"It is her position in the labor market that is very important. If it is a good job or one that is especially interesting she wants to get back to it right away. If it is a bad job or boring, the women want to stay home as long as possible and do not let the men take advantage of the program."

The original paternity leave plan went into effect in 1974 and was basically an amendment to a standard maternity leave system. Instead of mothers getting six months leave at 90 percent pay to deliver and care for a baby, the time could be shared with the father.

In 1976, parliament expanded the total leave available to nine months with eight of them at 90 percent of salary and the other month at a minimum of about $6 a day, effective last Jan. 1.

The reform also enabled parents to save as much s three months of the available time for use at any later time during the child's first eigh years.

"The publicity campaign is connected to the reforms which went into effect in January," Kindlund said. "We get resistance from some employers who feel the entire program is too complicated."

In 1974, under the original program, the commission found that 2.4 percent of the estimated eligible fathers took part. This figure rose to 5.2 percent in 1975, 7.5 percent in 1976 and went over 10 percent last year.

The first year, fathers stayed home an average of 26 days. In 1977, that number had risen to 42 days.

Edin said that most fathers he knew who had used the program were professionals, highly educated and young. Kindlund said statistics confirmed that trend.

"These people believe in this social program and believe you should use it," he said. "For the blue collar workers, this concept is new but I think in a few years this will be the normal situation. It is a question of tradition...Many men feel they have such an important job they can't be away from it."

Man's children bused to have black playmates

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — They bused Eddie Brown's children.

It's inconvenient, and it takes their children far out of the neighborhood, but, unlike most black parents, the Browns don't mind.

The reason is that Eddie Brown's children are not bused to school. They are bused to find someone to play with.

Not that there aren't children aplenty in Brown's suburban Baltimore neighborhood. There are. But there is one thing the neighborhood kids can't do for Tonya and Jennifer Brown, a thing that causes Eddie Brown constant worry.

The neighborhood kids aren't black.

Brown is a financial analyst with a Baltimore invesment firm. With a quick smile, precise diction and a substantial salary, Brown has lived with his family in white neighborhoods for most of the past 10 years.

His choice of where to live, he said, has been dictated more by a concern for buildings than for neighbors. "We knew what kind of house and schools we wanted, so we looked for them, and never gave much thought to the neighbors."

But the choice has left Brown with a dilemma for his children. "With the schools basically all white, the neighborhood all white, naturally their playmates are going to be all white," he said. "How do you keep that black identity?"

Brown found a solution a few years ago: "We bused them. We'd take them across town to play with other blacks, and vice versa, so we developed a network to transport them."

To add a few black playmates to the whites with whom his daughters have quickly and easily become friends in their community, Brown or his wife, Sylvia, makes a 30-mile round "bus" trip each week to the homes of other suburban blacks.

"It's probably something selfish on our parts," he said, trying to define why he makes the effort. "I think its important tht they know they are black, and have some idea of what's gone on before, and an ability to relate to that.

"They've never had any (race-related) problems, you know, they don't know what it means. I keep tryng to tell them what it means, what it's been about all these years."

This is a story about blacks like Eddie Brown, blacks who are "making it" up the ladders of success in government, corporations and the professions. They differ in age, occupation, location and in most other aspects, but they share a common problem: how to stay black in a white world.

It is a problem that confronts a great many people. There were 912,000 blacks holding white-collar jobs in 1976, according to the Census Bureau, up from about 400,000 in similar jobs 15 years ago.

The percentages of blacks across the spectrum of white-collar jobs from clerk to manager has risen from 11 percent in 1960 to 17 percent in 1970 to 21 percent in 1976.

Fr the most part, this is not the "black bourgeoisie." The group of middle-class blacks intent on proving their worth by imitating whites and jettisoning the African elements of their heritage, who were so unflatteringly portrayed in black historian E. Franklin Frazier's 1957 work.

Frazier's black elite had its roots in the antebellum era, when the "class" line among blacks was drawn between "house slaves," who worked in the master's house, and "field slaves," who were generally less favored, less well-ducated and darker-skinned. Many of the black bourgeoisie are descended from house slaves and free blacks of the slave era.

The new black profesisonals are a larger group of people, from families whose middle-class origins are only a generation or two old, usually dating from between 1900 and 1930.

The lines between the two groups are not rigid: there are individuals who span the gap. Most blacks in white-collar jobs arUfrom the second group, though, and the distinction is an important one within the black community.

The score of black professionals interviewed for this article said they take it for granted that there are concessions that must be made by blacks working in traditionally — and still overwhelmingly — white environments: insults that must be ignored, habits that must be suppressed, a comfortable, white view of the world to try to understand.

The concessions can never, of course, make you white; but the danger is that they can make you seem different to other blacks. So, say black professionals and executives, they go to great lengths to prevent their professional success, and the concessions that go with it, from building barriers between them and their blackness.

Most blacks understand what that struggle is all about; whites often don't. Dr. James Comer, a black psychiatrist at Yale, describes the process this way:

"The stable black community, though poor, has a quality of life, a style. There is a lot of banter — they are very bright guys very often — a lot of verbal sparring. The quality of relationships is very, very important, the warmth is very, very important...

"The security and sense of belonging and worth come not from your title, or your job, or your ability to pick up the phone and call the mayor or the president of the school board," he said, "but from your relationships with other people. That's what they go back to tag up with — the quality, the securiy, of those relationships." And go back, they do.

Robert Peterkin, one of four community school superintendents in Boston, said he makes a point of seeing those of his childhood friends he can still find when he goes home to New York City.

"Many people I grew up with are dead," he said. "Some are in prison, some are doing well. I still see them on the block, but it gets more infrequent."

James Woodward, second in command of Rep. Joe Moakly's constituent service office in Boston, said he goes home to Miami about twice a year.

"I feel comfortable with folk who are my peers, who went on to school and are professionals now, as well as with folk who are on the blocks. It's close to a 50-50 ratio between the folk who are making it, and the folk who are still there, deaing with life on a daily weekly, and monthly basis. Wecan still identify and relate on a social basis."

His biggest shock on going home to Detroit, said Robert Fisher, editor of the Bureau of Labor Statistics' Monthly Labor Review, is how dirty the city is. "The reason I don't have personal shock is that I think I'm essentially the same person. At least I hope I am.

"Obviously, I'm not," Fisher said after a moment. "But I feel that way. So when I go back, and encounter one of my old friends, I don't féel I'm crossing any kind of threshold."

When you buy a used car, what else do you get besides the car?

In a good restaurant, when you buy a dinner, you get more than just food. You get service, a pleasant atmosphere, and a feeling that the owners would like you to come back.

It's the very same way that we like to sell used cars. Since our reputation is more "on the line" when we sell a used car, you can be sure we'll do everything we can to make our used car customer a satisfied customer.

Sadat's new peace drive may carry him to U.S.

By LYON A. SCHANCHE
The Los Angeles Times

CAIRO — President Anwar Sadat, facing growing domestic problems and parliamentary criticism of his stalled peace initiative, is gearing up for an intensified peace drive that may take him to the United States for another meeting with President Carter next month, according to reports here this week.

Presidential aides would not comment on the possible trip. But Sadat noted during talks with visiting American Protestant clergymen last week that he had an open schedule and that "it is not excluded that whenever I find it convenient I may visit my friend President Carter again."

Whether such a trip would be timed to coincide with the private United States tour of Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin in early May was not known. There was speculation, however, that if the Egyptian President goes to Washington it will be after May 15, the anniversary of his corrective revolution of 1971, when Sadat consolidated power after the death of President Gamal Abdel Nasser. Sadat traditionally uses the occasion for nation-wide celebrations and demonstrations of political supporters of his government.

There were other developments indicating that a stepped-up peace drive is in the offing.

Sadat's party newspaper reported Tuesday that he has called a meeting later this week of his National Security Council — usually convened only when major decisions are required. The paper said the meeting would give new impetus to the peace process in the light of international developments concerning the Middle East.

The meeting will coincide with the visit here of American roving Ambassador Alfred Roy Atherton, who is expected Friday.

Sources said the Atherton mission — four or five days in Cairo followed by a visit to Jerusalem before returning to Washington — is not expected to achieve any dramatic change in the impasse that has deadlocked Egyptian-Israeli talks since Jan. 18, when political negotiations were broken off.

Atherton had attempted during shuttle missions after the breakdown to bring Egypt and Israel closer on a statement of principles to guide future peace talks.

Another major stumbling block has further complicated relations between the two sides, according to a senior diplomatic source. The stumbling block is mainly a procedural misunderstanding, the source said, but it has come to overshadow the declaration of principles as a barrier. It will be the focus of the Atherton mission.

The source explained that Begin and Sadat each believes that he has made a clear proposal to the other but has not yet received a formal counter-proposal, and any attempt to negotiate will be stuck until this frustrating impasse between the two leaders is broken.

Begin has complained that Sadat never formally offered a counter-proposal to his plan to grant limited autonomy to Arabs on the West Bank and to acknowledge Egyptian sovereignty over the Sinai yet keep Jewish settlements there.

Sadat, who has publicly rejected the Begin proposals and called repeatedly for Palestinian self-determination on the West Bank and total Israeli withdrawal from all occupied Arab territories, also believes that his original peace plan has sparked no formal, flexible counter-offer from Begin.

What Sadat wants is a gallant gesture from Begin, not just complaints about Egyptian counter-proposals to the Begin plan, which Sadat felt was discredited from the start, the source said.

Small investors lured to market

and ROBERT E. DALLOS
The Los Angeles Times

NEW YORK — In a novel effort to lure small investors back to the stock market, the American Stock Exchange plans to hire its own security analysts to provide more extensive research reports about companies listed on the exchange to brokers and individuals.

During an interview in his Wall Street office Tuesday, Arthur Levitt Jr., new chairman of the Amex, said the exchange would hire "one or two" analysts within 30 days to cover broad industry groups — such as transportation or energy — of Amex-listed companies.

He said the exchange doesn't expect to charge individuals or brokers for the research and he said more analysts might be hired in the future if the experiment works out.

"It's one of a number of programs we intend to implement to make listing on the American Stock Exchange more attractive and to project the image of the Amex as being the "people's market," said Levitt.

The Amex's hiring of its own analysts is thought to be unprecedented. Analysts have traditionally been employed by private, usually large brokerage houses to provide in depth research to help their clients make investment decisions. The New York Stock Exchange, the nation's largest exchange, does not now have its own analysts.

Companies listed on the Amex are usually much smaller in size than those on the NYSE, and usually attract much less attention from research departments of major brokerage houses.

Since taking his position about three months ago, Levitt has begun an expanded marketing effort for the Amex which is designed to entice more companies to list their stock on the exchange and to woo back the many small investors who have stopped buying shares in recent years.

"I want to indicate to companies that might want to list on the Amex that they will receive service they can't get elsewhere," Levitt said.

The analysts hired by the exchange won't make buy or sell recommendations, as their counterparts at private brokerage houses frequently do, he said.

But they will help set up a series of seminars around the country to provide investor information for regional brokers and individuals.

The first such seminar is expected to be held in houston during June, he said. That even will concentrate on Amex listed airline companies, which Levitt said had helped pioneer the discount air fares now prevalent in the industry.
