Cui gets promised trip to U.S.

CLEVELAND (AP) — A Chinese farmer tearfully reunited with former U.S. Marines who informally adopted him more than 30 years ago said he "prayed every night" to rejoin the men who once promised to bring him to America.

"Some nights I cried," said Cui Zhiki, now 49, nicknamed "Charlie Two Shoes" by the Marines who befriended him in 1945 in northeastern China.

"All these years, I prayed every night," he said, hoping to see again the men he met while peddling peanuts and fresh eggs as a 12-year-old boy.

When he walked into the terminal of Cleveland's Hopkins International Airport on Tuesday night, Cui was greeted by a throng that included the family of Roy Sibit of Tallmadge, Ohio.

Sibit had slept in a bunk next to Cui's in 1947 and 1948.

"Charlie was one of us Marines," said Sibit, 54, who now works for the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.

"He fixed his bunk, he went through inspections, he went to chow, then he went to school," said Sibit. He said Cui's family was very poor and lived in a mountain village, and that his father left him with the Marines when he no longer could pay for schooling.

"My family is their family and their family is my family," said Cui, who can still speak English, after arriving at the airport.

Sibit took Cui to his home near Akron in northeastern Ohio, where the family had a reception for him. "He's like a part of our family," said Sibit's wife, Jean.

Cui will stay with the Sibits as his six-month visa begins. He may also visit other men he had known as Marines. Cui acquired the nickname "Charlie Two Shoes" because the Marines couldn't pronounce his name and "Everybody calls everybody 'Charlie,'" Cui said.

"We just loved him," said William Bullard of Autryville, N.C., who traveled to Cleveland. "We cut down uniforms and shoes to fit him. We all worked for him and we all loved him."

Parks director asked to quit

City Manager James Brown announced Tuesday that he has asked for the resignation of Midland's parks and recreation director, Wayne Kohout.

Brown informed the City Council Tuesday that he asked for Kohout's resignation Friday. When contacted this morning, Kohout said he was drafting a letter of resignation to submit today. He said he will remain with the city until a new director is hired, or until Aug. 1.

The announcement marks the second time in three months that a city department head has either resigned or been asked to resign. Midland's former finance director, Grant Walton, submitted his resignation March 2.

Although Brown was in Houston this morning and could not be reached for comment, Kohout said the resignation request stems from "an internal management problem that we've had that's been lingering."

Kohout, who's worked for the city for eight years, declined to specify the "problem" except to say that it was within one division of his department.

"It's been somewhat of an ongoing problem," said Mayor G. Thane Akins, who said Brown announced his decision to the council Tuesday.

Bill Spruill, chairman of the parks and recreation commission, said Brown had not informed him of the impending resignation request.

Akins said he could not elaborate extensively on the resignation, because the decision was Brown's.

Wayne Kohout

He said, however, that while "Wayne is an excellent park planner and he really does well in that area, our job as parks and recreation director covers a pretty wide spectrum of areas that the person has to be involved in."

Akins said Kohout's abilities as a park planner were not equalled by his efforts in park maintenance. He cited deficiencies in the "nitty gritty of park maintenance and working with the crews" as part of the reason behind the resignation request. Akins said the city has "worked with" Kohout for about two years on the "problem."

Brandon dies; Amy gets liver transplant

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — An 11-month-old girl with liver disease, once near death after a potential donor family changed its mind, was recovering today after getting a new organ from a Florida boy allegedly killed by his baby sitter, doctors said.

But in Memphis, Tenn., Brandon Hall, the youngest person to undergo two liver transplant operations, died early today of cardiac arrest at the age of 13 months, doctors said.

Amy Hardin of Cahokia, Ill., received her new liver Tuesday morning at the University of Minnesota Hospitals, and her surgeon immediately termed the operation a success.

The liver came from 7½-month-old Daniel Sakellarios, of Monticello, Fla., who died Friday after he developed breathing problems while in the care of a baby sitter.

Leon County sheriff's spokesman Dick Simpson identified the sitter as Donna Marie Catillier, 24, who was being held without bond on a charge of murder. She was to appear before a judge today.

Simpson said the death was "apparently due to a blow to the head." He said autopsy results were not back yet.

The organ was removed from Daniel's body Monday night and flown to Minneapolis, where a team of surgeons worked for nearly four hours Tuesday to complete the transplant.

Brandon's mother, Billie Hall of Walnut, Miss., was with her son when his struggle for life ended at 3:30 a.m. CST at Le Bonheur Children's Medical Center, said hospital spokesman John Donica.

Mrs. Hall said afterward she wanted "to thank the news media and the America people for their support and prayers," Donica said. "She knew Brandon would not have received two livers without their help."

The boy, who appeared April 13 with his mother before a congressional committee to plead for federal financial aid to those needing transplants, had been critically ill and doctors had been saying since May 2 that he was unlikely to survive.

Born without bile ducts and his liver unable to filter poisons from his body, Brandon underwent one liver transplant April 13-14. A clogged artery caused the first organ to fail and surgeons performed a second transplant on him April 22.

After the second operation, Brandon experienced lung problems that required him to breathe with a respirator. Doctors announced he took a turn for the worse Tuesday.

Mrs. Hall has donated her son's cornea to an eye bank in Memphis, Donica said. Plans for funeral services were pending, and Mrs. Hall asked that in lieu of flowers, memorial donations be made to the Children's Liver Research Fund at LeBonheur.

Amy's condition had been steadily deteriorating before her transplant operation, said Dr. John Najarian. "She was quite close to the end of the line. We were getting a little bit desperate," Najarian said.

Amy was in stable condition early today, a hospital nurse said. Her transplant came off "without a hitch," but she will remain in the pediatric intensive care unit until at least Friday, Najarian said.

"I think she's going to make it," said Amy's mother, Robin. "She's really strong."

Amy is tied as the youngest liver transplant patient. Both she and Jamie Fiske of Massachusetts were 344 days old at the time of their operations.

Two nurses will keep a round-the-clock watch on Amy during the next few days, considered the most critical period for possible organ rejection.

Amy was born with biliary atresia, an incurable disease which hardens the liver. She underwent surgery when she was 6 weeks old and again at 3 months, but the operations were unsuccessful. Doctors said she would not survive without a liver transplant.

Najarian said Amy began getting worse last week and was hospitalized Thursday. "Fortunately we were able to come up with a donor in time," he said.

Amy's father, David, announced with disappointment Friday that members of one family had agreed to donate the liver of their dead child, then suddenly changed their mind.

At the time, Hardin pleaded for parents to be more aware of the critical need for donor organs. "If you can save a child, then why not do it?" he asked.

Last December, doctors at the Minneapolis hospital said Amy was too small for a transplant. She then was 6 months old and weighed 11 pounds. She now weighs just over 16 pounds.

Former Midlanders saddened by loss of patient

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Two former Midland women are in Memphis, Tenn., today feeling saddened after the death of a 13-month-old boy.

Vicki Green and Susan Daw are two of the pediatric intensive care nurses who cared for Brandon Hall.

Brandon, the world's youngest double liver transplant recipient, died today of cardiac arrest. He would have been 14 months old Thursday.

Ms. Green, a 1977 Lee High School graduate, and Ms. Daw, a 1975 Midland High School graduate, were at their Memphis homes this morning — remembering.

In a telephone interview with the Reporter-Telegram today, Ms. Green and Ms. Daw both expressed their sadness and emptiness.

Both women said Brandon had become "part of the family."

"It was very, very hard to take care of him — physically and emotionally," Ms. Green said. "Physically, because he required a lot of care. Emotionally, because he became family. Now to see him die, it's like losing a part of your family. I learned a lot and grew in taking care of him."

Ms. Green said that everybody at Le Bonheur Children's Medical Center thought of Brandon as family.

"The people who took care of him before his surgeries and those who were with him through the two liver transplants would call — almost every day," Ms. Daw said. "He was another child here that pulled people together.

"This morning I heard," she added, falling silent for a few seconds. "His ordeal is over. I couldn't cry right away, but now...."

Ms. Daw excused herself for a moment. She talked about the toddler's tiny hands. She remembered his brown eyes searching the hospital room for his mother, Billie Hall.

Ms. Daw, who nursed Brandon after his first transplant, said the 13-month-old woke up after his first surgery with widened-eyes scanning the room for his mother.

"She was always at his bedside," Ms. Daw said. "Those were special moments — he'd look up at her and squeeze her hand. Now, the hard part will be going to his room and finding it empty."

The last time Ms. Green looked in on Brandon was Monday. Today she's questioning the reasons for his death.

"It's hard to understand why he had to die after all he went through," she said. "It's something I'll never understand."

Ms. Green said Brandon's mother never gave up hope. Ms. Daw said Mrs. Hall was remarkable.

"I was talking to her yesterday morning," Ms. Green said. "She just kept thinking he was going to get better. A lot of parents become angry; she never did.

"She kept saying she wished Brandon would open his eyes and look at her like he did after the first surgery. I saw her cry a lot, but through it all she was cooperative with the media and made herself available — to help others. With this publicity, I'm sure other liver transplant recipients will be helped."

Firms want to 'keep on trucking'

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

One local beer distributor told the Midland City Council Tuesday that he sees red — or more accurately, Communist crimson — in a proposed ordinance which would prohibit unnecessary truck travel on sections of seven city streets.

Two councilmen and two local distributors exchanged verbal broadsides over the ordinance before agreeing that representatives from the city and local truck delivery operations should form a committee to study possible revisions.

The proposed regulations would provide additional truck routes for through-city traffic while prohibiting trucks — except for those making pickups and deliveries — from traveling on sections of Lamesa Road, Clark Street, and Cuthbert, Louisiana, Michigan, Missouri and Neely avenues.

Some councilmen said the ordinance, spearheaded by Councilman Tom Sloan, would help eliminate undue wear and maintenance costs on some of the city's less durable streets.

DURING THE afternoon session of a council meeting in City Hall, Woody Woodman, owner of Woodman Distributing Inc., said by restricting the right of truck drivers to freely traverse city streets, "I think we're heading a little bit toward Communist-type methods. Any of us in any of these businesses need total flexibility."

Mayor G. Thane Akins, taking unconcealed umbrage at the comments, told Woodman that he personally resented the "Communist" comment.

"What we're trying to do is for the public good," Akins said. "Nobody has, in this society, total flexibility. What we do as a council affects people's lives. We may lower your flexibility to protect certain streets."

Woodman, who suggested the committee approach for revising the ordinance, warned the council that many vendors would oppose the route restrictions as presented in the ordinance.

"You've got a tiger by the tail when you take that many million dollar businesses and say: 'You've got to drive here,'" Woodman said.

ADDRESSING WOODMAN, Sloan said: "You're not prohibited from going on those streets if you're going to make a delivery on them. If you don't have business on those streets, then don't get on them."

Buddy Kniffen, terminal manager for Merchants Freight Lines, told the council: "I don't think enough time has gone into this. We really feel like we're being singled out.

"What we're talking about is good, old pork barrel politics," said Kniffen. "All it does is put 'Band-aids' on a couple of streets so that Missouri will not stick out like a sore thumb, which is what this is all about."

Sloan, who lives at 1801 W. Missouri, replied: "Let me tell you something. If you're going to attack me and call this a 'Band-aid solution' because I live on Missouri, then I'm going to call you a liar."

Kniffen contended Sloan's personal interest in Missouri prompted him to seek enforcement and expansion of a 1960 ordinance that prohibits truck traffic on Missouri and Louisiana.

CIA denies year-old charges about war involvement

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — More than a year after they were made, the CIA is denying allegations by a former CIA officer that the agency fabricated evidence in the early 1960s to help prove that the war in South Vietnam was being fueled by North Vietnam, and to help set the stage for heavy U.S. involvement.

The allegations were made by Philip Liechty, a former case officer in the agency's top-secret Directorate for Operations who spent 15 years with the CIA. The charges were reported in The Washington Post on March 20, 1982.

At that time a CIA spokesman was asked for comment on Liechty's claims and said only that "it is not our policy to comment on such allegations."

Liechty said that early in his CIA career he inadvertently came upon agency documents of proposed operating plans to fabricate evidence of outside support for the Vietcong guerrillas of South Vietnam.

One such plan, he said, involved an elaborate operation to print anti-American Vietnamese postage stamps and have them placed on letters that would find their way into the European and Western press.

Another plan involved loading captured communist-bloc arms collected by the CIA onto a coastal boat in Vietnam and then staging a firefight in which the arms-carrying boat would be sunk and displayed to the press.

At the time of the interview last year, Liechty said that he was obviously unable to produce the documents he said had been in the files about 17 years earlier or several sheets of postage stamps that he said he had seen in the file and held in his hands.

CIA spokesman Dale Peterson now says that the agency has made a thorough search of its documents and interviewed other officials and that there "is no evidence that CIA ever fabricated that stamp. I say this with 99 percent confidence because there is no trace of this being done."

The CIA, he added, also "did not fabricate that stamp for domestic U.S. consumption." A copy of the Vietnamese stamp that Liechty described appeared on the cover of Life magazine on Feb. 26, 1965, two days before the Johnson administration published its "white paper" on the war called "Aggression from the North." Peterson says the CIA had nothing to do with that magazine cover.

Asked if the CIA used the postasge stamps and distributed mail with them, even if the agency did not print the stamps, Peterson said:

"We are not saying we never used that...When talking about use of the stamps and other things, right or wrong, we are not commenting. That is just a matter of policy. We can't comment if we got them in Vietnam and used them for something."

Peterson said that agency policy not to comment on allegations about operations should not be construed as confirmation or denial.

Peterson also said there is "no evidence" to support Liechty's claim about the arms-laden boat. "We are talking about 1965," he said, "and that was a long time ago. But we interviewed people who should have known and came up with zero on that."

Asked about the CIA denials, Liechty said he sticks to his original claims.

"It is possible," he said, "that they could have used either forgeries or the original Vietnamese stamps. You just really couldn't prove which stamps actually went on the envelopes.

"But they did have the stamps; they were there, and they were using them in the way I said. There is no question whatsoever that they did it. They had huge quantities in sealed, cellophane envelopes. My recollection was that they were printing them and that the documents that I read discussed the options of printing them," he said.

On the boat incident, Liechty said that while he cannot be sure that the CIA staged the specific incident pictured in the "white paper," "it matched and fit with what I knew they were trying to do and had approved. I was describing a series of similar operations that the agency was conducting, and I stand by that firmly."

Senate tries to halt redfish rustlers

AUSTIN (AP) — Several proposals to stop redfish outlaws have been approved by the Senate, which sent two measures to the governor and three to the House.

The measures were designed to plug holes in the "Redfish Bill" passed by the 1981 Legislature after a 4½-month debate matching sport and commercial fishermen.

That bill prohibited the commercial taking and sale of redfish and speckled sea trout unless those fish were caught in waters outside of Texas and imported into the state.

After Aug. 31, the Texas Parks and Wildlife Commission would have the authority to regulate, by proclamation, future commercial catches — if any — of redfish and trout.

During a two-year moratorium since the redfish bill was passed, according to a printed bill analysis, "outlaw activity...in conjunction with the taking of redfish and speckled sea trout has proliferated."

Sen. Ted Lyon, D-Mesquite, said Tuesday there have been 300 to 400 cases in which shrimpers were caught with redfish and trout aboard their boats. A bill passed by the Senate would prohibit anyone on board a commercial fishing boat from keeping redfish or trout if there is a trawl on board. The bill was sent to the House on a 29-1 vote.

A proposal by Lyon would prohibit the catching of redfish and trout by people on commercial fishing boats with the exception of non-commercial charters. The bill would not apply to the owner and operator of the boat if the owner and operator was a licensed fishing guide.

"We're trying to stop the sale of an endangered species," Lyon said.

"You know better than that, senator," said Sen. Lindon Williams, D-Houston. "The kids at home need a meal."

"You can feed the little children catfish and other fish," said Lyon.

"My understanding is that illegal sales are going on by both commercial and sports fishermen," said Sen. Bob Vale, D-San Antonio.

Under Lyon's bill, fines would be levied for the first two convictions but three convictions in five years could result in confiscation of the boat. The bill was sent to the House on voice vote.

Another measure would require proper identification for vehicles commercially transporting redfish and trout. It was passed to the House on voice vote.

Yet another bill would authorize the commission to adopt regulations requiring certain people in possession of redfish and trout to have documents showing where they got the fish. That bill was sent to the governor on voice vote.

Texas congressman escapes mugger by jogging away

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Texas congressman was accosted by a knife-wielding mugger in Washington's fashionable Foggy Bottom area, but said Tuesday that he escaped by shoving a shopping bag at the man and fleeing, in his jogging shoes, into the street.

"I just thought I had a pretty good chance of getting away from there," said Democratic Rep. Bill Patman, 56, an ex-Marine who keeps fit by jogging several times a week.

Patman became the latest in a series of congressmen who have been threatened, assaulted or robbed over the years, in a city where the crime rate is a source of constant concern.

"I just thought really (that) those things were exaggerated," said Patman, who is from Ganado, a community of about 1,600 in southeast Texas. "But you get a different perspective when even one individual pulls a knife on you."

Patman said the incident occurred shortly before midnight on Saturday, April 30, as he returned home after working late at his office on Capitol Hill.

He took a subway to Foggy Bottom and began walking the several blocks to his apartment, when he noticed a man following about five feet behind.

The man wore a white knit shirt and by every appearance was "a clean-cut, nice-looking kid," Patman said. Patman let him pass, then crossed the street. Suddenly, at the end of the block, "he was there again," Patman said.

"Then he was at my side, or was right behind me, and said, 'Mister, I've got a blade,'" Patman said. Patman turned and saw the knife.

"He had it with the blade down, as I recall," Patman said. "I could see the blade very clearly. It looked like it was pretty sharp."

Patman recalled the man saying, "Now mister, I don't want to kill you, but it's your life. And it might mean a life sentence to me, but it's your life and I want you to calm down."

Patman, who had been jogging that afternoon and still wore his jogging shoes, carried a plastic shopping bag filled with newspapers and papers from the office. He pulled the bag up between them as they continued to talk.

"And so I just pushed the newspapers and things I had toward him, turned and sprinted between two of these parked cars and got into the street," Patman said. There Patman encountered a motorist who had stopped to investigate, and the mugger fled into the subway station.

Patman said police were still looking for his assailant. Meanwhile, Patman said he's making some changes in his lifestyle as a result of the incident — changes that he deeply resents.

"I'm not really going to feel good about staying down here (at the office) late at night," Patman said. "I'm going to change to different hours, come down earlier instead, and won't feel good about walking around at night. I certainly won't jog at night...

"It's really disturbing, deeply disturbing to me, that we've got this situation in our nation's capital, as well as in other parts of the United States."

Illegal aliens from earlier era inspire Border Patrol sculptor

COTULLA (AP) — The old vaquero, his body arched and sitting a bit off-balance, clings to the young horse that probably was spooked by a rattlesnake.

The bronze vaquero has no name and he's only the figment of sculptor Charles W. Warden's abundant artistic imagination.

But the old man is as real as you or I to Warden, by profession a senior journeyman at the U.S. Border Patrol station in this small community some 65 miles north of Laredo.

Holding the bronze sculpture in his hands, Warden points to the old saddle, the leggings and sombrero and the heavy-footed cross-bred horse typical of Texas.

Long fascinated with the history of the King Ranch and the hardy vaqueros, the majority of whom came from Mexico, Warden's current work in progress is a tribute to that legend.

"He is gentler and almost courtly, very different from the younger men who came through here now," he remarks.

Warden, 47, began working on "El Vaquero" in November. He admits it's been slow going, but expects to complete the sculpture by mid-April so that he can send it to the Mesa Art Foundry in Center Point for casting.

Warden has had no formal training and he admits with a grin that his first sculpture nine years ago was fashioned from playdough he purchased at the five-and-dime.

Some of his methods are as unorthodox as he is. He's been known to use anything he finds around the house, like a yellow golf tee and piece of screen, as sculpting tools.

The 17-year veteran of the Border Patrol might never have taken up sculpture had he not grown allergic to the turpentine used to clean his art brushes.

Last year, he decided to "stop goofing off" and try to become a "real sculptor," he said.

A keen observer, he does extensive research into what will eventually become a sculpture.

Research on the Northern Plains Indians led to "The Buffalo Dancers." Other pieces depict a Crow warrior, a coyote and even a steer entitled "Corriente."

His bronzes, limited to editions of 20 each, have fetched prices ranging from $380 to $3,500. He hasn't sold many in Texas and finds Oklahomans appreciate his works more.

"Friends will tell someone and that person will tell someone else. I'm very grateful to them," Warden says.

"It takes time to build a reputation in art circles. Sometimes you have to create to suit a particular audience, but I never think about future sales — only what appeals to me."

He's still annoyed at a conversation he had with a New Mexico gallery owner he was trying to convince to sell his works.

The gallery owner admitted Warden's bronzes were first-rate, but said he still was an unknown.

Warden said he has not yet developed a style that will allow people to say "that's a Warden" like they can about a Russell or Remington.

"The quality of my work may change," he says. "After all, I'm still in the learning process."

Dallas police end investigation into killing of young patrolman

DALLAS (AP) — Police have closed the book on the slaying of a young Dallas patrolman after determining that two suspects killed in Arkansas acted alone, investigators said.

Officer Ronald Baker was shot five times with his own revolver and run over twice in the parking lot of a Pleasant Grove apartment complex on May 2.

Two suspects in the case, Vernon Morales, 44, and Rosemary Concilio, 38, died Saturday in a murder-suicide after law officers surrounded a farmhouse near Little Rock, Ark., where they were hiding.

Investigators said Tuesday that evidence points to Morales and Ms. Concilio as being the only assailants involved in Baker's killing.

"Information we got from Arkansas, put together with information here and physical evidence, indicates to our satisfaction that only Rosemary Concilio and Vernon Morales were directly responsible for the death of Baker," said Capt. Grant Lappin.

Police also released additional details Tuesday about what transpired between the officer and two suspects seconds before Baker's death.

Investigators said the information was based upon interviews with informants, witnesses and Morales' daughter, Lana, who owned the Arkansas farmhouse where her father died.

Baker was returning a driver's license to a resident at the apartment complex when he intervened in an argument between Morales and Ms. Concilio near a van, Lappin said.

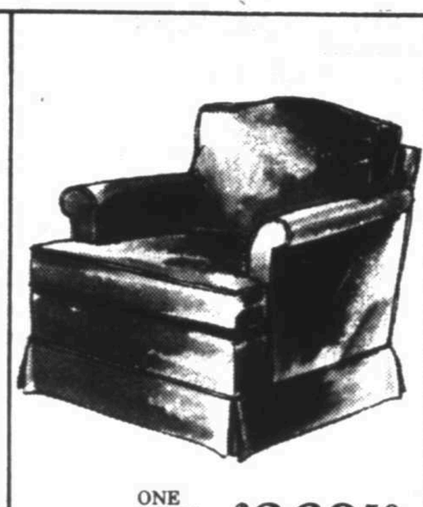

"He was apparently attempting to obtain identification of both of the parties," Lappin said. "At some point after he obtained Rosemary Concilio's driver's license, he was confronted by Morales, who was holding a gun on him."

Police said Morales exited the van through the driver's side, walked around the van and pulled an automatic pistol from his waistband.

"For some unknown reason, the clip fell from the weapon...Morales was pointing at the officer," Lappin said.

A "violent struggle" broke out between the officer and the two suspects and Baker was struck "several times in the head with the butt of the pistol," Lappin said.

The grounds of Montana's capitol are buried by about four feet of snow Tuesday as a snowstorms sweeps across the Continental Divide and into the central Plains, closing roads and snapping power lines.

Rockies resting under new snow

By The Associated Press

A new stormstorm swept through the Rockies today in the path of a blizzard that buried much of Montana with up to 4 feet of snow, bocking dozens of highways and forcing many schools to close.

Up to 6 inches of rain fell in Texas, just north of San Antonio, and southwestern and central Nebraska got up to 5 inches of rain and golfball-size hail as thunderstorms crackled across the Plains.

Nine inches of snow fell in 6 hours this morning in Lander, Wyo., as the new storm built strength in the central Rockies. Visibility was reduced to zero in Evanston. Snow also was falling in parts of Idaho and Montana.

The sheriff's office in Lincoln County, Neb., reported heavy rains and hail with winds estimated at 50 mph. Flooding was reported on the streets of Sutherland, Kan.

In Southern California, powerful winds late Tuesday knocked out power to about 1,500 homes and businesses in the Los Angeles area. A rockslide Tuesday partially closed the Pacific Coast Highway in the Malibu area which had been completely blocked on Saturday.'

Snow also fell in parts of New York and New England on Tuesday as temperatures dropped below freezing in the Great Lakes states, the upper Ohio Valley, and the central and northern Rockies.

At least one person died, apparently of exposure.

In Texas, the problem was rain causing local floods. Four to 6 inches fell Tuesday night and early today in the region around San Antonio. Lake Travis, Texas, was drenched by 1½ inches of rain in just 15 minutes, Duke said.

Lights dimmed in at least eight Montana towns Tuesday as power lines broke under the weight of the heavy, wet snow. Repair crews were hampered later in the day because of deep snow and ice.

Some residents fired up wood stoves to keep warm. Ranchers herded newborn calves and lambs into sheds.

The National Weather Service called the storm in the Rockies "dangerous" and predicted another foot would fall on central Montana before it was all over. After a mild winter, the spring storm dumped more snow on Montana than any other single storm this past season.

Schools were closed Tuesday in many areas of Montana, including Great Falls, the state's second largest city, and Helena, the state capital. In Great Falls, where a foot of snow fell during the night, the airport was shut down for a time, but was reopened at midday.

Many highways were plugged by drifts up to 5 feet deep. Interstate 15 was closed between Helena and Great Falls, but reopened later in the day along with scores of other roads closed by the snow.

Near blizzard conditions were reported from Great Falls to Lewistown and across the mountains and foothills of the northern part of the state.

Up to 4 feet of snow fell along the Continental Divide, in a 250-mile line from Helena north through Glacier National Park, and up to 2 feet fell at lower elevations to the east.

Cascade County Deputy Coroner Dick Donovan said the body of Bertha E. Irish, 57, was found in a street early Tuesday and said she may have died of exposure. He added that an autopsy performed Tuesday was inconclusive about a cause of death.

Soviets critical of Mideast plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The American-sponsored agreement between Lebanon and Israel is opening up a new area of superpower conflict, with the Soviet Union trying to undercut Secretary of State George P. Shultz's first major foreign policy achievement.

The State Department reacted sharply Tuesday to a commentary by the official Soviet news agency Tass that called the plan unacceptable because it leaves Israel with a measure of control over southern Lebanon, thus rewarding "Israeli aggression."

Deputy State Department spokesman Alan Romberg said it "ill-behooves" the Soviet Union to criticize the withdrawal agreement when Moscow itself has 100,000 occupation troops in Afghanistan and is supporting the Vietnamese occupation of Cambodia.

"While others search for peace for which peoples of the region yearn and which they so richly deserve, Moscow has irresponsibly chosen to play to historical fears and animosities," Romberg said.

Shultz, attending an international economics meeting in Paris, said he believes Moscow should take a second look at the withdrawal agreement and "get on the side of peace in Lebanon."

He told a news conference the best way for the Soviets to do this is to join other countries in calling on Syria to withdraw its troops from Lebanon.

"I can speak for the United States as a country dedicated to peace," he said, "and I call on the Soviet Union and other countries to show equal dedication."

Shultz was returning to Washington today and will meet with President Reagan to report on his 17-day trip, his longest since taking office 10 months ago.

The Tass critique centered on provisions in the agreement that permit a continued Israeli military presence in southern Lebanon. It accused the United States of exerting "massive pressure" on the Lebanese to win their acquiescence and said the agreement represented a "gross violation" of Lebanese sovereignty.

A U.S. official, who asked not to be identified, said the Tass commentary reflected Soviet determination to undercut American peace efforts so that Moscow itself could have a larger say in Middle East diplomacy.

He said the Soviets have placed high priority on retaining their influence with both the Palestine Liberation Organization and Syria. Another source of concern to the Soviets is the continuing presence in Lebanon of 1,200 U.S. Marines as part of the multinational peacekeeping force, he said.

Withdrawal depends on PLO, Syrian actions

JERUSALEM (AP) — Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir warned today that Israel will disregard its troop-withdrawal agreement with Lebanon and "act as it sees fit" if Syria and the PLO refuse to pull their soldiers out of Lebanon.

Meanwhile, 21 more dependents of Soviet diplomats in Beirut left Lebanon today for Moscow, airport officials said, fueling speculation new fighting may be imminent. As many as 142 were reported to have left Monday.

The Soviets have said the dependents were leaving so the children could go to summer camp, but a source close to the Soviet community in Lebanon added, "Nobody can guarantee there will be no shelling in Beirut this summer."

Shamir told Parliament the agreement would be signed "in the coming days" by both Israel and Lebanon. But if Syria and the Palestine Liberation Organization refuse to withdraw their forces, he said, "the agreement will be considered suspended. Israel will be free to act as it sees fit and according to its interests."

Shamir spoke to Parliament to blunt criticism of the accord, worked out by Secretary of State George P. Shultz in two weeks of shuttle diplomacy. A vote on the pact is expected in Parliament next week.

Opposition Labor Party leader Shimon Peres charged that the government had bungled both last year's invasion of Lebanon and the troop-withdrawal negotiations. Peres said his party would not support an agreement that "perpetuates illusions and ignores reality."

Although the clauses of the pact have been widely publicized, Shamir's speech contained the first official version of them.

He said the agreement began by declaring "the end of the state of war" and recognition by each country of the other's territorial integrity.It bans hostile propaganda and exploitation of either country's territory for terrorist actions, he said.

Tax assessor 'doesn't understand' indictment

ODESSA (AP) — Ector County Tax Assessor-Collector Curtis Winn says he doesn't understand why he has been indicted in the alleged embezzlement of thousands of dollars in automobile license fees from his office.

One of three sealed indictments handed down by an Ector County grand jury Tuesday charges the long-time county official with one count of misapplication of more than $10,000 in fiduciary funds.

District Attorney Mike Holmes, who has estimated that as much as $50,000 in fees may have been taken from the tax office, said the grand jury had been investigating Winn's office for than two months.

"I do not understand the indictment," Winn said in a telephone interview Tuesday night. "The charges against me are not true. I've got nothing more to say at this point except that I will defend myself."

Winn said March 31 that he discovered one of his employees was embezzling state fees for motor vehicle registration renewal stickers issued in his office, and predicted Tuesday that the other indictments would name two of his workers.

Those indictments had not yet been unsealed Tuesday night, Holmes said.

Winn, who has been tax collector since 1961, surrendered at the Ector County Jail Tuesday afternoon and was released on a $5,000 personal recognizance bond.

The second-degree felony he faces carries a maximum penalty of 20 years in prison and a $10,000 fine. Holmes also filed a civil lawsuit asking for Winn's temporary suspension. A hearing is set for Friday on the action.

"During the past 22 years and five months in office, I have tried to serve the people to the best of my abiliy and have been privileged to make many friends," Winn said. "And now I ask for their support and prayers."

The grand jury had been meeting to investigate the embezzlement charges "off and on for about 70 days," Holmes said. He declined to discuss the case further.

The state comptroller's office, which has audited the tax office's motor vehicle division books, also began a routine audit last week of property tax records in Winn's office, a spokesman for the agency said.

Bob Bain, a special assistant at the comptroller's office in Austin, said investigators "were already there," and that Winn's office was picked for an audit "more or less at random."

Local distributors oppose city trucking ordinance

SLOAN HAS BEEN subpoenaed to appear at a hearing next month during which Kniffen will contest a traffic ticket handed out under the 1960 law.

Responding to Kniffen, Sloan said, "If I live on Wall Avenue, I'd still be supporting the ordinance." He added that his backing for the regulations stems from the potential savings in street maintenance.

After the heated words subsided, Sloan agreed to organize a meeting between city officials and delivery business representatives at 3 p.m. Friday in City Hall.

In its present form, the ordinance restricts vehicles rated two tons or more and those carrying hazardous materials to the following "truck routes:" Loop 250 from Interstate 20 to Fairgrounds Road, I-20 from the west city limits to the east city limits, Fairgrounds Road from the south city limits to Loop 250, Texas 349 from I-20 to the south city limits, Texas 349 from Loop 250 to the north city limits, and Texas 158 from I-20 to the east city limits.

VEHICLES MAKING pick-ups and deliveries are permitted to leave the "truck routes" and travel on the following "local truck routes:" Wadley from Loop 250 to Texas 349, Texas 158 from Loop 250 to West Wall, U.S. Highway 80 from Loop 250 to Fairgrounds Road, West Wall from U.S. 80 to Texas 349, Texas 158 from Texas 349 to Fairground Road, Midland Drive from Texas 158 to Loop 250, Midkiff Road from I-20 to Loop 250, Cotton Flat Road from I-20 to U.S. 80, and Texas 349 from I-20 to Loop 250.

The ordinance provides for a $200 maximum fine and prohibits vans and trucks rated one ton or more from traveling the following street sections: Neely from A Street to Texas 349 and from Midland Drive to Midkiff, Cuthbert from Ward Street to Texas 349, Louisiana from Texas 158 to Lamesa, Michigan from Texas 158 to A, Missouri from Garfield Street to A, Clark from U.S. 80 to Wall, and Lamesa from Golf Course Road to Wadley.

The proposed regulations permit residents to travel to and from their homes on the restricted streets and permits vendors to use the streets provided they are making a pick-up or delivery and enter and leave the restricted street at the nearest intersection.

Parks director asked to resign

He cited Hogan Park Golf Course as a facility in need of better maintenance. "We've got to get somebody on that who can bring it back as it ought to be," Akins said.

"It's not all his (Kohout's) fault by any means," Akins said. "When Jim (Brown) announced it to us yesterday, there was mixed reaction. I think Wayne deserves a good recommendation wherever he goes."

Kohout, who directs about 58 full-time employees and handled a budget of about $2.6 million before recent budget cuts, said it was Brown's decision the resignation would be the best alternative for both himself and the city.

"I don't really feel bitter, just disappointed," Kohout said. He said the disappointment stems both from his inability to cope satisfactorily with the lingering problem and from the delay or cancellation of some projects, including lighting at Midland College's tennis courts and improvements at the golf course.

When asked if he felt the parks and recreation department was treated fairly by city officials, Kohout said, "By tradition, parks and recreation has taken a subordinate role to other departments. Here in Midland, parks and recreation — especially recreation — is just not taken with that high a priority.

"I hate to say the panacea is money," said Kohout, whose department sustained a 12 percent budget cut when city sales tax revenues fell short of projections earlier this year. "But let's face it. Eighty percent of your ills can be solved with a little more money."

Kohout, who worked three years as park superintendent before becoming director on May 1, 1981, said he'll likely have to leave Midland to continue working in the parks and recreation field.

A native Chicagoan who moved to Midland after eight years in Lubbock, Kohout said he would like to remain in Texas with his wife and three children.

state in brief

Senate approves bill to retain same House district boundaries

AUSTIN (AP) — The Senate approved without debate Tuesday a bill that retains the same state House district boundaries used for the 1982 elections. The measure was sent to the governor on voice vote.

After the 1980 census, lawmakers drew up new districts for themselves, but the Texas Supreme Court rejected the House plan for needlessly crossing too many county lines, which is a violation of the Texas Constitution.

The Legislative Redistricting Board, made up of five elected officeholders — all Democrats — redrew the plan, but portions of it were challenged by Republicans and Mexican-Americans as unfair. The U.S. Department of Justice refused to approve the plan and it went to federal court.

In order to go ahead with the 1982 elections, a panel of federal judges sitting in Dallas wrote an interim plan, adjusting the Bexar County and El Paso areas contested by the Mexican-American Legal Defense and Education Fund. The court left the rest of the districts, including the Dallas area protested by Republicans, as the redistricting board drew them.

The House-passed bill approved by the Senate on Tuesday is the same as the plan adopted by the federal judges.

Senate OKs Capitol views bill

AUSTIN (AP) — The Senate approved another bill Tuesday to preserve Capitol views. Houston Sen. Craig Washington's measure was sent to the House on a 29-0 vote.

Last week Gov. Mark White signed into law a bill to preserve Capitol views from the University of Texas Main Building and the Lyndon B. Johnson Library, but that law covers only state construction.

House approves lower rate ceiling

AUSTIN (AP) — The House gave final approval Tuesday to lower the maximum interest rate allowed on bank credit cards such as Visa and Mastercard to float between 22 and 14 percent.

The bill would allow retail store credit cards to charge 18 to 21 percent.

Present credit card rates are as high as 24 percent.

The Senate-passed measure was approved 142-1 and sent back to the Senate with an amendment.

House passes ethics commission bill

AUSTIN (AP) — A bill creating an 11-member state ethics commission was approved by the House in a non-record vote Tuesday and sent to the Senate.

The measure would establish a panel to issue opinions on ethics laws and to investigate the conduct of state officials and employees, candidates and their workers and lobbyists.

Members would serve staggered, six-year terms. The governor, lieutenant governor and speaker each would select three members. The secretary of state and attorney general would serve as non-voting members.

Inmate pleads guilty to tax fraud

HOUSTON (AP) — A 26-year-old former Texas Department of Corrections inmate has pleaded guilty to charges of participating in a scheme with 14 other prisoners to file false income tax refunds while behind bars.

Bobby Joe Justice pleaded guilty Tuesday before U.S. District Judge Ross Sterling to one count of converting a stolen check to his own use. Sentencing was set for June 14.

Justice, who faces up to 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine, had served a 15-year burglary sentence at TDC's Eastham unit and is now in federal custody, said Assistant U.S. Attorney Constance Myers.

Justice allegedly received and used a refund check from the U.S. government for $873, Ms. Myers said. Fourteen other inmates have been charged with similar offenses, involving false refund claims totaling $35,888.

Former air traffic controller goes to prison

FORT WORTH (AP) — A former air traffic controller says his union's decision to strike the federal government "was just and right," even though he is beginning a 90-day prison sentence for his illegal walkout.

Gary Greene surrendered to federal marshals Tuesday, gave his wife an emotional farewell and was taken in handcuffs to a minimum security prison to begin serving the sentence.

Greene, 39, was president of the local representing controllers at Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport when he joined the August 1981 strike by 11,000 members of the Professional Air Traffic Controller Organization.

The striking controllers complained of adverse working conditions and insensitivity by the Federal Aviation Administration.

"It was a just and right decision. It was necessary and we did it," Greene said to reporters and a crowd of supporters and former PATCO members gathered at the federal courthouse here Tuesday.

His wife, Chris, however, said she felt "kind of empty now."

"I don't appreciate the thought of losing my husband for 90 days," she said.

Controllers who did not immediately return to work were fired by President Reagan, but only a few were prosecuted.

The AFL-CIO issued a scathing statement Tuesday, saying it was "appalled at the vindictiveness displayed by the jailing of air controller Gary Greene in Fort Worth today. Greene's only crime was being a leader of the workers he represented."

Greene and former controllers Ron May and Lee Grant were convicted on felony charges in 1982 and sentenced to a maximum prison term of a year and a day.

But U.S. District Judge Eldon Mahon suspended all but 90 days of the sentences and fined each man $750.

The three appealed to the 5th Ciruit Court of Appeals, but the court upheld their convictions in April.

May said he will surrender when authorities decide where he will serve his sentence. Grant has asked to remain free until the U.S. Supreme Court acts on his appeal.

Judge ends probation for grass-smoking grandma

HOUSTON (AP) — A judge said Tuesday he ended probation for an 83-year-old great-grandmother convicted of growing marijuana in her backyard, saying he "just wanted to get it off her mind."

Laura Ethel Clark claimed she used the illegal weed in an ointment for her arthritis.

Judge Michael McSpadden said Mrs. Clark had completed one third of her sentence without any violations and was eligible to have her probation terminated.

McSpadden called Mrs. Clark on Monday and told her that she was no longer on probation.

"Back when the trial was in my court, I told the probation officer to let me know just as soon as we could let her off," he said. "I just wanted to get it off her mind."

Accidents kill almost 8,000 in Texas in 1981, study says

AUSTIN (AP) — Accidents killed almost 8,000 people and cost over $6 billion in Texas in 1981, according to a study released Tuesday by the Texas Safety Association.

The year-long study by the association revealed that accidents are the leading cause of death for people ages one to 44.

Operation 'Dipscam' uncovers diploma mills in eight states

CHARLOTTE, N.C (AP) — Seizing records from Arizona to Florida, FBI agents said they capped a three-year undercover probe of diploma mills in eight states that sold phony sheepskins to "hundreds of people in every profession."

Operation "Dipscam" could lead to indictments against 36 mail-order colleges that provided fake degrees for people now practicing in fields ranging from psychotherapy to cancer treatment, agents said at a news conference here Tuesday.

"We have people with Ph.D.s in psychotherapy who are treating patients and don't have the slightest qualifications," said Robert L. Pence, the FBI agent in charge in North Carolina.

"This is a problem that seems to be affecting the nation's educational system and is turning out phony graduates in every profession imaginable," he said.

In one instance, Agent Otho A. Ezell Jr. sent $1,595 to American National University in Phoenix, Ariz., and explained he was too "backlogged" due to a vacation to do research for a degree, according to an affidavit in federal court in Phoenix.

THE SCHOOL awarded Ezell a master's degree in business administration and a transcript showing he had taken 10 courses for 30 credits, receiving all Bs, the affidavit said.

A call to the school Tuesday reached an answering service, where a woman said school officials would be unavailable for comment until later today.

Pence said graduates of phony colleges include a high-ranking Washington official, a National Football League player, employees of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, and state, local and federal employees.

None of the bogus degree-holders was identified.

Pence said one person has already been convicted in the three-year investigation, and evidence is being presented to grand juries in Arizona, Arkansas, Ohio, New York, Florida, California, South Carolina, and North Carolina.

"Hundreds of people in every profession" received the phony certificates, Pence said. The FBI has notified some employers who had given jobs to mail-order graduates and many employees have already lost their jobs, he added.

THE INVESTIGATION uncovered people with degrees as doctors, psychologists and chiropractors who were set up in clinics in every state, Ezell said.

In one California case, he said, a mail-order graduate was conducting cancer clinics and took one patient, who did not have cancer, to Mexico to purchase Laetrile for $30,000 as a treatment.

"In the early 70s, people found out they needed degrees to get jobs and it wasn't too important whether they got them by studying for them or paying for them," he said.

Five FBI agents received a total of 23 degrees and paid more than $25,000 for the phony certificates, Pence said. They included degrees for medical doctors, psychiatrists, masters of business administration and masters of criminal justice.

Prices ranged from $1,000 for a bachelor's degree to $5,000 for a Ph.D., he said.

SOME "UNIVERSITIES" under investigation had only post office boxes or answering services. None had classroom space, Pence said.

"We're talking about so-called colleges that held their graduation ceremonies in the back of motels," he said. The FBI exhibited some of the degrees, along with T-shirts, college hats and rings that were sold along with the degrees.

The investigation began at Southeastern University Inc. in Greenville, S.C., in 1980, said Pence.

The officials said Larry Weinberg of New York City was convicted of mail fraud earlier this year and is serving a three-year prison sentence. Pence did not name the school Weinberg operated.

Complaints force official's resignation

WASHINGTON (AP) — A top Commerce Department official has resigned in the face of a congressional complaint that he supervised the proposed sale of the government's weather satellites while seeking a job from a firm that stood to profit by buying them.

Deputy Commerce Secretary Guy W. Fiske denied any impropriety, saying he had only a "limited role" in the sale proposal and had been contacted about a possible job with the Communications Satellite Corp. even before he went to work at the Commerce Department.

But Rep. James H. Scheuer, D-N.Y., said Tuesday night that Fiske's involvement with the sale proposal while in contact with Comsat about a job gave "the very strong appearance of impropriety...

"For a period of more than eight months, Mr. Fiske was simultaneously supervising an effort at the Commerce Department to push through Comsat's proposal to take over ownership of the satellites while simultaneously, aggressively and actively pursuing a high-level job with Comsat."

In a statement made through his lawyer early today, Fiske said he "resigned so the debate can be focused on the merits of the commercialization issue and not involve political overstatements of my involvement" in the decision-making process.

In March, President Reagan proposed selling the government's four weather satellites and one earth-sensing satellite, provoking a storm of protest in Congress. While the administration contends the sale would save the government money, some critics say it might end up costing more because weather information would have to be purchased from the new satellite owners.

The House has passed a bill barring the sale until hearings have been held and the Senate is considering similar legislation. The administration has indicated it will wait for congressional approval before proceeding with the proposed sale.

Last month, Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said Fiske and his assistant Michael Bayer had withdrawn from additional involvement in the proposed sale after Fiske disclosed that he had talked with Comsat about a job. Scheuer then asked for copies of Fiske's desk calendars and telephone logs, which were delivered last week.

Scheuer said that despite Fiske's resignation, the subcommittee will continue its investigation of the sale proposal.

He said the sale "involved tens of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money and a proposal which if it had been carried out would have amounted to a lucrative guaranteed subsidy for a single corporation.

College Board spells out skills

WASHINGTON (AP) — The College Board today spelled out in detail the skills and knowledge it considers essential for high school students to possess before entering college.

The 5,000-word document, called "Academic Preparation for College: What Students Need to Know and Be Able to Do," comes on the heels of several recent blue-ribbon panel reports castigating the quality of the nation's schools and urging stiffer standards.

The College Board is an association of 2,500 schools, colleges and other groups that sponsors the most widely used college entrance exam, the Scholastic Aptitude Test.

In its remarks about English instruction, the board stressed that reading, writing, speaking and listening skills pertain to all academic disciplines, not just to learning literature.

It also said students should "understand and appreciate the unique qualities" of the visual arts, theater, music and dance, and should possess some ability to sing, paint, dance or act.

The board urged that in learning mathematics, students acquire familiarity with computers and knowledge of statistics. In science, it recommends that all college-bound students have "a quantitative understanding" of at least one field, such as chemistry, physics, biology or earth science.

In social studies, it urges an emphasis on social and cultural as well as political history of the United States and other countries. It says students should have an in-depth understanding of one social science — such as economics, geography or sociology.

States' attorneys ordered to return to set date in Hughes' estate trial

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — A University of Michigan law professor who will hear a case deciding the division of Howard Hughes' estate has ordered attorneys to return in September for another attempt to reach agreement on a trial date.

Attorneys for the states of California and Texas failed to set a trial date Tuesday before court master Wade McCree. Both states claim Hughes' estate based on the tycoon's residence in each during part of his life.

California would impose an inheritance tax of 24 percent on the estate if it wins, while Texas would levy a 16 percent tax. The reclusive billionaire died in 1976.

Paralyzed student gets $1 million

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — A college student paralyzed from the neck down when a platform collapsed at Disney World's Epcot Center has already received $1 million for hospital expenses and could get $42 million more under an out-of-court settlement.

Victor R. Powell, 21, a trombonist, was rehearsing with other musicians for Epcot's opening Oct. 22 when a platform collapsed, breaking Powell's neck and leaving him a quadriplegic.

Under the settlement announced Monday, Powell will receive $90,000 a year, increasing by 7 percent a year. If he lives a normal lifespan of 72 years, his payments will total $39.2 million.

Rescuers reach coal miners' bodies

HOLDEN, W.Va. (AP) — Rescuers took almost five hours to recover the bodies of two coal miners who were killed when a roof collapsed at Kara Coal Co.'s No. 1 mine, officials said.

Tons of rock fell on the miners at 11:30 a.m. Tuesday, some 2,600 feet into a Logan County mountainside, said Bart Lay, deputy state mines director. For a time, officials thought one man had survived.

The first body was recovered after 2 p.m. but the other was not unearthed for another two hours, Lay said.

MGM lawsuits soon to be settled

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — A federal judge overseeing settlements of lawsuits stemming from a 1980 fire at the MGM Grand Hotel that killed 85 people says proceedings should be completed later this month.

The announcement was made jointly on May 1 by MGM Grand Hotels Inc. and the Plaintiff's Legal Committee, a group representing most of the fire victims and their relatives.

A settlement fund of $140 million has been committed by the hotel and other defendants.

The Nov. 21, 1980, fire killed 85 people and injured about 700 others.

U.S. District Judge Louis C. Bechtle of Philadelphia, who is overseeing the MGM case, announced that certain documents had been received by the court and the settlement closing was expected in late May.

TV critic gets own show

CHICAGO (AP) — Gary Deeb, the headhunter among American television critics, is brashly stepping before the camera's eye and joining the medium he loves to hate.

After blistering, blustery commentary for the Chicago Tribune from 1973 to 1980 and the Chicago Sun-Times from 1980 until last month, Deeb is preparing his own weekly television program. He hopes to reach as wide an audience as did his syndication in 180 newspapers nationwide.

The 37-year-old Deeb, whose salary was about $250,000 before he resigned from the Sun-Times on April 24, said he's joining the camp of his former enemies to satisfy "ham instincts" — the ego trip of being on the air.

The half-hour show, scheduled to begin in September, will consist of "interviews, profiles and news stories," with the stars, directors and other players making up the television galaxy, Deeb said in a recent interview.

The program, tentatively called "On Television," will be produced and syndicated by Tribune Entertainment.

Entering a medium whose mediocrity Deeb's columns often highlighted, is he ready to swallow some of his own medicine?

"I expect criticism," Deeb said. "If it's harsh, half of it will be honest and fair and a lot of it will be the product of petty jealousy and resentment."

Deeb is noted for his derisive columns on what he considers infantile network programming, idiotic pro sports commentary and politically motivated TV news staff shakeups.

He even had discouraging words about the last episode of M-A-S-H, a program which melted some of the iciest hearts in America.

"Everybody watched — but nearly everybody was disappointed," Deeb wrote, saying the finale "unwittingly demonstrated just how badly the program had degenerated during the last four seasons."

Deeb has taken shots at such television celebrities as ABC News anchorman Frank Reynolds, whom he called "our great national nanny" for his emotional performances during the shootings of Pope John Paul II, President Reagan and Egyptian President Anwar Sadat.

And he said ABC's Barbara Walters is "as useful as a railroad featherbedder," while describing teen-age actress Brooke Shields as a "jailbait cheesecake queen."

He has turned out exposes on the alleged censorship of Phil Donahue shows on abortion, the firing of a local TV weatherman because a polygraph-type test on viewers showed he was not "turning them on," and ABC's alleged use — denied by the network — of canned crowd noise at professional sports games.

He also incensed fellow TV critics with a 1974 Variety magazine piece on the state of their craft.

"I said that most TV critics just review what's on tonight, or they'll just grab handouts and rewrite them. Or, in some cases, not even rewrite them, shake it out of an envelope, slap a headline on it and that's your column for the day," he said.

Networks aren't among Deeb's biggest fans.

Deeb "is to accuracy what wrong-way Corrigan was to flying," said Bud Rukeyser, NBC's executive vice president for public information. "One wishes that his passion for accuracy was as good as his writing."

Rukeyser cited a column that accused parent RCA Corp. of banning Jane Fonda films from NBC for her alleged anti-business stance, and another claiming that the networks and major league baseball were conspiring to keep the "loutish" behavior of New York Yankee fans off the screen.

"On the TV beat in any given month, there are a half-dozen interesting stories, but Gary will write 20 interesting stories by embellishing the facts. Some of his very best stories have been fiction," said Rukeyser.

Can collector may have saved life of baby boy

ST. LOUIS (AP) — A newborn boy abandoned in a garbage receptacle after his premature birth may owe his life to an elderly man rummaging for aluminum cans, police say.

"He saw this brown plastic bag in the dumpster, picked it up and dumped it out ... and the baby fell out," detective Sgt. Wardell Massey said after the infant was found early Monday. "I'm surprised, as cool as it was ... he didn't die."

The 3-pound, 14-ounce boy, his umbilical cord still attached and wrapped around his neck, was reported in critical condition at Children's Hospital on a respirator.

Police Lt. Everett E. Page, who went to the scene after the 77-year-old man who found the boy notified authorities, said the baby was first believed dead.

"When we started to retrieve it, we noticed the little feet began to move," Page said.

'Spirits' alive, well in Burma

RANGOON, Burma (AP) — Eight centuries ago Burma's great King Anawratha tried to suppress them. Today's strongman Ne Win frowns on them. But nobody in this Southeast Asian nation has yet been able to take on the nats and win.

"Nats are alive and well in Burma. No government really wants to fight them. It would be too dangerous," says one Western diplomat, only half in jest.

Nats are spirits which inhabit Burma's rich psychic and spiritual world, hardy survivors from its animist era who are said to bring both good and evil to the populace.

Anawratha found them in conflict with the teachings of Buddhism to which he converted his kingdom in the 11th century.

Ne Win's military-dominated regime believes nats and modernization don't mix, in part because a lot of time, energy and money is spent trying to keep these spirits on one's side.

The nats, of whom 37 are considered especially important, coexist with numerous other supernatural beings of Burma, a highly traditional, isolationist nation.

Witches, ghosts and demons are widely feared, keeping a mini-army of shamans and exorcists busy. "Po naka," or poltergeists, are reported to hurl stones or even kitchen knives when angry with earthlings. Soothsayers do a good business on Rangoon's streets, their magic charts spread out on the pavement.

While nats may be in official disfavor, no such attitude exists against palmistry and astrology.

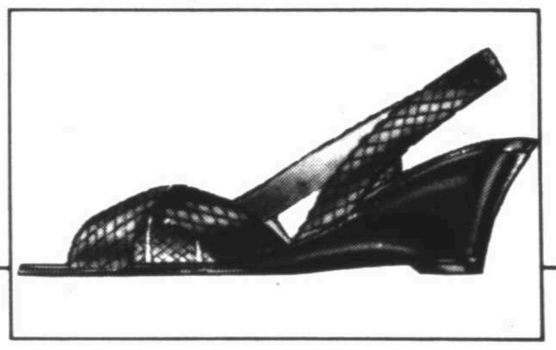

"Every person in power resorts to astrologers," says one well-informed Burmese political observer.

NEW YORK (AP) — Flameproof longjohns and pinstriped suits are both part of the working wardrobe of Frank Ferrara, a stockbroker who does stunts for kicks and money — and for the great stories he can tell his Wall Street colleagues.

"Both businesses require quick thinking and good reflexes," said Ferrara. "If I make a mistake as a stockbroker, I lose money. If I make a mistake as a stuntman, I could be dead."

Ferrara now divides his time equally between stunts and stocks, taking unpaid leaves of absence from the brokerage firm when he needs to spend a week or a month on a movie location, where he may jump out of sixth-story windows, crash cars or set himself ablaze.

"At the beginning, I thought it would be just for kicks. But it's gotten to be a full-time profession," he said. "People find it intriguing. The other brokers bring their wives to meet me and ask to hear stories about the actors I've met."

Ferrara, 36, of Staten Island, has worked in finance for 17 years, starting as a page at the New York Stock Exchange and now working as a broker for Troster Singer Stevens Rothchild, based in Jersey City, N.J.

Six years ago, a friend in the movie business took the brawny, 6-foot-2, 215-pound broker to a party, where he was hired as a bodyguard for actress Farrah Fawcett. He soon began hanging around with stuntmen, learning the skills of their profession, and eventually began doing stunts himself.

Ferrara's first stunt, for the movie "King of the Gypsies," involved jumping onto the hood of a moving car and throwing two people off of it.

He since has learned to leap from a sixth-story window — "only four stories if I'm on fire" — and to crash a car doing 50 mph.

"I think stunt driving is hereditary. My father was a New York City cab driver," Ferrara said with a smile.

A stunt for the movie "Fort Apache, the Bronx" was the scariest of his career.

"I had to hold a 160-pound man over my head and then throw him six stories off the roof," he said. "If I overthrew, he'd hit the concrete. If I underthrew, he'd hit the building."

He threw just right. The man landed safely on an airbag.

He has played the bodyguard of guest actress Morgan Fairchild on "Simon & Simon," and appeared as "a regular bad guy" in about four other episodes of the television show.

"I've even signed autographs. It's embarrassing at times, but it's great for business," he said.

His stockbroker friends especially like to hear about the famous people he meets: like the time he was a stunt double for actor Burt Lancaster in the movie "Atlantic City."

Ferrara successfully leaped between levels of an eight-story structure for that film, but injured himself on his lunch break, tearing cartilage in his knee when he jumped four feet to the ground.

New comet should whiz by tonight

WASHINGTON (AP) — Looking up at the sky tonight, you may be able to see the ghost of an astronomical ancestor floating by.

Moving through the heavens is the ethereal image of a newly discovered comet, faintly visible as a ball of diffuse light as it passes close to Earth.

Astronomers say the comet, called IRAS-Araki-Alcock, will be visible to the naked eye tonight , weather permitting.

The small, relatively faint comet was discovered April 25 by the Infrared Astronomical Satellite (IRAS), a U.S.-European orbiting observatory.

It was simultaneously discovered and photographed by two amateur astronomers, Genichi Araki in Japan and George Alcock in England.

Normally, the dozen or so comets spotted each year on their voyages around the sun are picked up far away from Earth by powerful telescopes. But scientists say this one went undetected until it was very close, an indication of its small size and faintness.

The unexpected arrival has professional and amateur astronomers scrambling to make observations because the comet will pass closer to Earth than all but one other comet in recorded history.

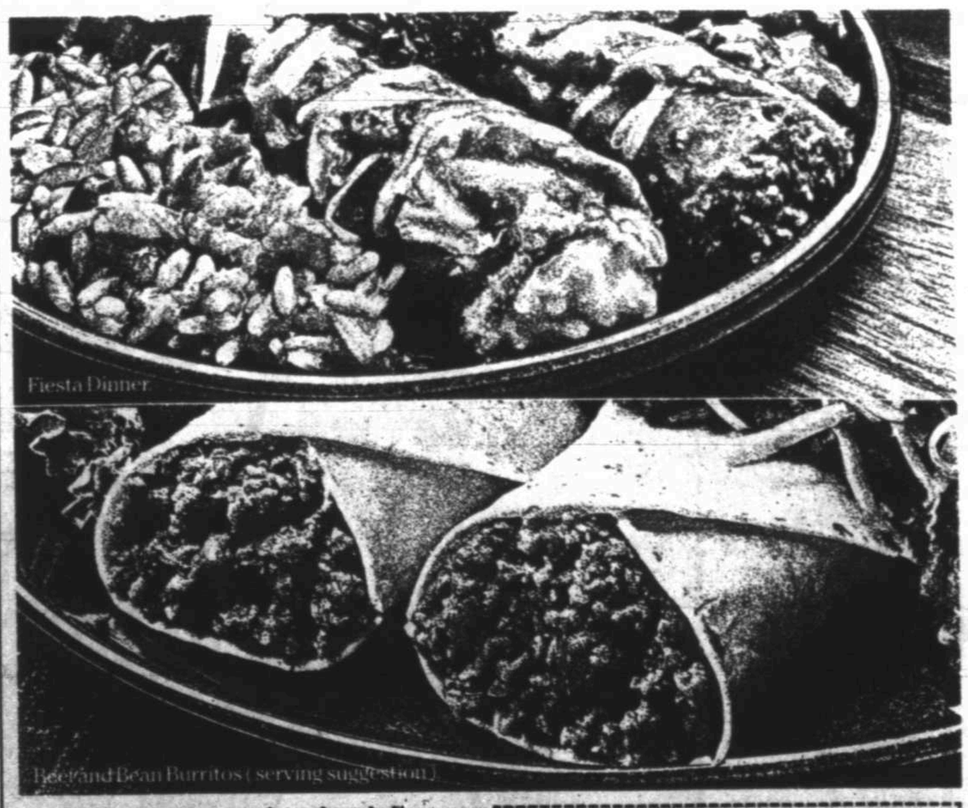

IRAS-Araki-Alcock will be within 2.9 million today.

Comets are thought to represent the most primitive matter in the solar system, a relic of the stuff that long ago formed the sun and its planets. According to the most popular theory, comets are "dirty snowballs" composed of ice, frozen gases and dust that move in long orbits around the sun.

Daniel Green, an astronomer with the Harvard-Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory in Cambridge, Mass., said the comet should appear as a wispy body high in the sky.

Doctors not optimistic about male pill

SHREWSBURY, Mass. (AP) — The lab that discovered the birth control pill is hard at work on the nation's biggest research effort to understand the other half of the sexual equation — how men reproduce.

Through the microscopes at the Worcester Foundation for Experimental Biology, seven scientists and their assistants are unraveling the sexual workings of sea urchins, rats, sheep and a mini-zoo of other creatures.

They sleuth out such esoterica as the makeup of the proteins in a ram's sperm. When all goes well, their research turns up clues about the intricacies of human reproduction. And, the scientists believe, it could be the basis for solving a puzzle as tough as the birth control pill: an oral contraceptive for men.

Even though two possible male pills are being tested elsewhere, they have drawbacks. And experts concede that the quest for sexual equality in contraceptives is complicated.

"The prospects are not terribly bright," says Dr. Sheldon J. Segal, director of the population division of the Rockefeller Foundation.

Dr. Mahlon Hoagland, president of the Worcester Foundation, says he knows why. "The biggest obstacle is ignorance. We just don't know enough about the points at which we might attack the problem."

This is why the work of researchers at places like the Worcester Foundation is important. They are not looking for a magic pill; they are simply trying to understand how reproduction works.

If they can figure out the complex life cycle of a sperm — even a sea urchin's sperm — they believe it should be possible to find a safe and effective way to interrupt the process.

"We have to make fundamental new discoveries about male and female reproduction if we are going to get anywhere," says Hoagland.

This, along with neurobiology and cancer, is the major goal of his foundation, a private research institute where 40 scientists and 150 support staffers work on a 100-acre campus outside Worcester. The foundation is supported principally by federal grants.

"In my knowledge," he says, "it is definitely the largest group working anywhere on problems related to the male."

Each time a couple has intercourse, millions of sperm are discharged. Each sperm is propelled on its journey to the female's egg by a hair-like whip of a tail. Scientist George B. Witman is trying to find out how the tail works.

Like other scientists at the foundation, Witman does not experiment with human sperm, because it is available in relatively small quantities. Instead, he works with Chlamydomonas, a one-cell alga that paddles along with two sperm-like tails.

Already, one tantalizing discovery has emerged. If calcium levels fall, the tails stop beating altogether or just move in one direction, so the cells swim around in aimless circles, getting nowhere.

However, a major problem in developing a birth control chemical is confining its effects to reproduction. Even if a substance paralyzes sperm, it might have disastrous results elsewhere in the body.

For instance, human sperm may also be susceptible to calcium changes. But calcium is used throughout the body, and finding a way to keep it away from sperm alone would be difficult.

GOP-led Senate to decide soon between budget plans

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Republican-led Senate is nearing a showdown on budget plans settling whether taxes should rise significantly next year and curbing the pace of President Reagan's proposed defense buildup.

After nearly two weeks of intensive maneuvering, the budget fight was close to a resolution today.

Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., was reportedly set to test rival Republican budget plans, one reluctantly supported by Reagan and another which would permit a $300 cap on this year's 10 percent income tax cut.

At issue in the budget fight is whether the sharply-rising federal deficits must be met with increased taxes, or whether the economic recovery should be allowed to continue without any additional federal revenues, despite the deficits expected to approach $200 billion for the next four or five years.

There are also fundamental disagreements over how fast U.S. strategic weapons programs must rise to offset a continuing Soviet buildup.

Sources who spoke on condition they not be identified said Baker would gamble that the partial repeal of the tax cut would fail.

Under that proposal, drafted by five Republican holdouts, an additional $14 billion in new taxes would be raised next year, and defense spending would increase below what the president insists is necessary for national security.

Specifically, the five moderates would allow defense spending to go up 6 percent next year, compared with 7.5 percent urged by Republican leaders and tacitly accepted by Reagan, whose original Pentagon budget called for a 10 percent increase.

Baker hopes the defeat of the moderates' plan will force all or most of the 54 Senate Republicans to loyally fall in line behind a high-deficit, nominal taxes alternative plan proposed by Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., chairman of the Senate Budget Committee.

It was not known how the 46 Senate Democrats would vote for the GOP moderates' plan, which has many elements they have supported.

"I think it could be the starting point," said Sen. Lawton Chiles of Florida, the senior Democrat on the budget committee.

Similarly, Senate Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., said a majority of Democrats would support a cap limiting the amount that upper and middle income taxpayers could receive from the tax cut.

Without the support of some Democrats, there can be no budget resolution, Byrd said.

"I think there's room for a compromise," he said. "'I think there will be, because I don't think Baker can produce the votes without one."

But Chiles also said no decision had been made on possible Democratic support for the plan by the five Republican rebels.

Court upholds radio deregulation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The landmark Federal Communications Commission decision dropping limits on radio commercials and easing public service requirements has been upheld by a federal appeals court.

The commission's Jan. 14, 1981 action was challenged by the United Church of Christ and a host of other groups, but on Tuesday all but one of their objections were turned back.

The court ordered the commission to reconsider its decision to drop the requirement that radio stations keep a log of their programs.

But it otherwise upheld the agency action in ending guidelines which included minimums on air time for public service programs and limits on the number of commercials that could be broadcast. Radio deregulation took effect April 3, 1981.

The appeals court decision, written by Judge J. Skelly Wright, said such sweeping regulatory reform would probably have been better if done by Congress, but "we cannot say that the commission has overstepped its statutory authority or its administrative discretion."

Earle K. Moore, counsel for the church, described his reaction as "mixed." He said the keeping of program logs was considered one of the most important parts of the suit.

Asked if an appeal was being considered on the parts of the decision upholding the commission, Moore said it is too soon to decide, but added that he considered it "unlikely."

The commission had dropped the program log requirement as a cost-saving measure for stations. But the court concluded that the FCC failed to give enough consideration to the benefits of the logs, particularly to the public when a challenge to a station license is being pursued.

The FCC still requires public interest programs, but it does not set specific categories for them, the court noted. Instead, the commission now merely requires that public issues be addressed.

Before deregulation, the commission had required AM stations to devote 8 percent of their time to public service, and FM stations 6 percent.

Since 1973 there had been a guideline limit of 18 minutes per hour for commercials, which was dropped on the theory that market forces would affect the amount of commercials.

Falcons nesting in New York

NEW YORK (AP) — After an absence of more than two decades, two pairs of peregrine falcons have set up nests in New York City bridges, state officials say.

The falcons — an endangered species — laid six eggs in nests at the Throgs Neck and Verrazano Narrows Bridge. It is believed the eggs will hatch in several weeks, state Environmental Conservation Commissioner Henry G. Williams said Tuesday.

"It is extremely gratifying to witness the return of this beautiful and fascinating bird to New York," said Williams.

The birds once nested throughout the United States, with 75 nest sites in New York alone. But the pesticide DDT interfered with the birds' reproduction, thinning the shells of their eggs so they would crack before the chicks could hatch.

DDT was banned in New York in 1970, and state officials believe the residues have diminished, allowing the falcons to make a comeback.

Any disturbance or harassment of the peregrines is punishable by a year in jail and a $20,000 fine, officials said.

Three of the four birds seen at the bridges carried bands and apparently were bred by the Peregrine Fund, a Cornell University program that is devoted to saving the species.

THE BETTER HALF

"This is your conscience. How come you never take your wife out dancing?"

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Thursday, May 12, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: English nurse and philanthropist Florence Nightingale, First Lady Dolley Madison and politician Henry Cabot Lodge Sr. were born on this date. Also sharing your birthday: New York newscaster Tom Snyder, commentator Howard K. Smith, composer Burt Bachrach, baseball's Felipe Alou and comedian George Carlin. New awards and opportunities are coming your way. Some are overdue, but the most of them will be real surprises. A temporary financial sacrifice will bring future benefits. A loved one is impressed and shows more affection. Tackle big problems and let the small ones solve themselves. You get strong support from someone who works behind the scenes.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Some plans you have wanted to put into motion are finally approved. Put your best foot forward when going out. Those who count put great store in how you look.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Someone's jealousy influences a business decision that is made today. Do not let your resentment affect your work. Eventually you will rise way above the opposition. Romance needs time to grow.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your place of work may be in a state of turmoil during the next few days. Maintain a low profile. The less you are involved in other people's arguments, the better.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A wonderful surprise leaves you feeling on top of the world. Your own actions take on greater importance. Those with special artistic talents would be foolish not to display them.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Focus on your top priorities. An overbearing person could be making your life miserable. Fast responses bring maximum success in business and finance. A gift opens your eyes.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Quit blaming others when things do not go right. A critical attitude will only close off communication. Your personal relationships improve when you learn to be a better listener.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Avoid shying away from those who seem superior in some way. There is a lot you can teach them. Your visions and schemes have great potential. Do not be afraid to think big!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Even if you see injustice in high places, moderate your opinions. Consult only those you can trust. Group pressure proves hard to take. Work by yourself whenever you can.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Do not get hung up on false pride. When you need help, ask for it. You can accomplish more at work by staying in the background.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Accept restrictions in a mature manner and keep your nose clean. Gradually things begin to improve. Greater work satisfaction is possible. Quietly gravitate towards those who can help your career.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You enjoy doing community work. Do not conceal your delight at the beautiful possibilities of a social event. An attractive co-worker helps you find greater fulfillment. Join in a group celebration tonight.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Shopping expeditions go well early today. Later, let yourself explore new territory. Avoid quarreling with an older person who can be difficult. Encourage romantic partner to be more demonstrative.

New romance to air

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — In the pilot for "A Fine Romance," the two lovable losers decide that it's better to spend Saturday night together than alone.

If this were a 23-horse field, "A Fine Romance," to seen Thursday, would be a respectable longshot. It's a classy sitcom with genuine warm and funny moments, flowing from the identifiable situation of two wallflowers looking for happiness.

But it doesn't demand to be in the lineup, as do two programs that CBS guaranteed would go to series before a line was written: "Aftermash," starring three members of the war-liberated "M-A-S-H" troupe, and "The Four Seasons," the continuation of Alan Alda's film about friendship.

Nor does it have big-name appeal, as did programs, without pilots, that NBC placed on its schedule two years ago just because the network had contracts with Rock Hudson and James Arness.

But, besides a quality first episode and the promise of more to come, "A Fine Romance" also has in its favor enthusiastic New York programmers. "We have to be internal advocates for the show," says Josh Kane, vice president of CBS' New York program development office.

Of the 74 projects commissioned by the three networks, only "A Fine Romance" was produced in New York.

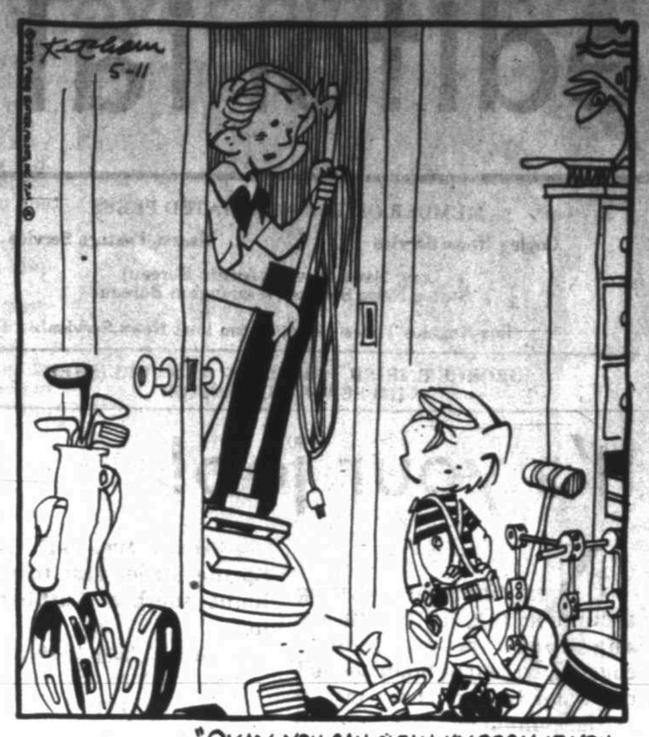

This week, CBS' programming executives from Los Angeles and New York have been here hammering out next season's lineup. It's the same high-stakes game ABC and NBC played out with their earlier schedule announcements.

A big board, reminiscent of the stock market, is at the center of everything. Two lines list the other networks' probable schedules. The third line is reserved for CBS' mock schedule, with cards, representing new and old programs, being discarded or juggled in different series slots.

If "A Fine Romance" is still on the board this week, CBS executives might ask Kane about the show's future development, where the story lines might go, how much play the secondary roles might get, whether there's room for more characters.

"The pilot is where you learn," said Kane. "It's just the beginning of their relationship."

Opening lead: Ace of ◇.

It is hard to believe that it is almost 30 years since Sammy Kehela, long a resident of Toronto, burst upon the British bridge scene. Over the years, he has achieved a reputation as one of the world's great technicians. South Africans had the opportunity to admire his skill during the recent tour of that country by a Canadian team. As this hand proves, he did not disappoint them.

At both tables the contract was four spades, and both Wests got off to the lead of the ace of diamonds. The Canadian defender continued with a diamond to the queen and king. Declarer led a trump to the king, and it was all over — he could no longer avoid losing three trump tricks for down one.

Against Kehela, West shifted to a heart at trick two, won in dummy. Kehela realized that he could afford to lose two trump tricks, so he kept his options open by leading a trump to the queen. West won the ace and shifted to a club.

For an expert technician, the hand was plain sailing. Kehela won the club in hand and led a low spade. West followed with the four and declarer called for dummy's six! When that held, he simply started running dummy's clubs from the top. West could ruff whenever he wished, but declarer would win any return and simply draw the last trump, ending on the table. Dummy's remaining high clubs took care of declarer's diamond losers. The defenders came to only two trump tricks and a diamond.

What if the six of trumps had lost to the nine? Declarer would then have won any return and drawn the jack of trumps with the king, holding his losers to the same three tricks.

It's your job!

Next time you're driving around in the city you'll see abandoned refrigerators, couches, large tree branches and old water heaters cluttering up areas. Somebody ought to do something about that debris!

Clean Midland Inc., Midland Chamber of Commerce and the city all agree with you and they're giving everyone in town the opportunity to clean up their act.

For a two-week period beginning next Monday, Midlanders can dispose of old appliances and other large trash items and not be charged. The city will be donating workers and equipment to the major cleanup project which is expected to result in more than 500 truckloads of large refuse being hauled out of Midland.

According to Nancy Sharp, Clean Midland executive coordinator, a similar program last year removed about 400 truckloads of debris. This year, she said, Clean Midland officials are asking that anyone wanting old appliances or other large debris (not including junk cars) hauled away to call Clean Midland's office at 68C-LEAN about a week in advance of the pickup date for their area. On the date the cleanup is taking place in their part of town, the items will be collected.

Pickup dates and locations include:

— Area 1: May 16-17, from Big Spring Street east to the city limits, south of Cuthbert Avenue.

— Area 2: May 18-19, from Big Spring east to the city limits, north of Cuthbert.

— Area 3: May 20, between Garfield Street and Big Spring, north of Cuthbert.

— Area 4: May 23-24, between Garfield and Big Spring, south of Cuthbert.

— Area 5: May 24-25, between Midkiff Road and Garfield, south of Cuthbert.

— Area 6: May 25, between Midkiff Road and Garfield, north of Cuthbert.

— Area 7: May 26, between Holiday Hill Road and Midkiff, north of Cuthbert.

— Area 8: May 27, between Holiday Hill and Midkiff, south of Cuthbert.

Every Midlander will benefit from the cleanup project in a number of ways. A cleaner community is a healthier and safer community. It's more attractive both to those who visit and to those who live here day after day.

But making this year's cleanup a success hinges on the interest and involvement of each Midlander. Complaining about unsightly debris won't make Midland a cleaner, better looking community.

You're right, of course. Somebody should do something about all that unsightly debris. That "somebody" is you!

Genocide in Iran

Will the world stand by once again while religious or racial fanatics destroy an ethnic minority in their midst? Probably.

For many years members of the Baha'i faith have been persecuted in Iran, Iraq and Turkey. Iranians recently have indicated that they will intensify their repression and try to wipe out the Baha'is.

The Baha'i religion believes all religions are divine, and that there is no absolute religious truth.

Recently, 22 Baha'is in Iran were tried on a charge of having links to Israel. The Baha'is world headquarters is located in Israel. In its decision, the court said, "the day will soon come" when Iran will deal with the Baha'is "as it has dealt with other hypocrites who have religious and satanic gatherings."

The government of Ayatollah Khomeini has banned thousands of Baha'i children from attending schools. There also have been reports of frequent beating and hangings in the last few months.

Khomeini has not responded to requests from other governments in the past. But if world religious leaders demanded protection for the Baha'is, perhaps the gentle minority could be allowed to remain there without harassment.

Grain for Moscow

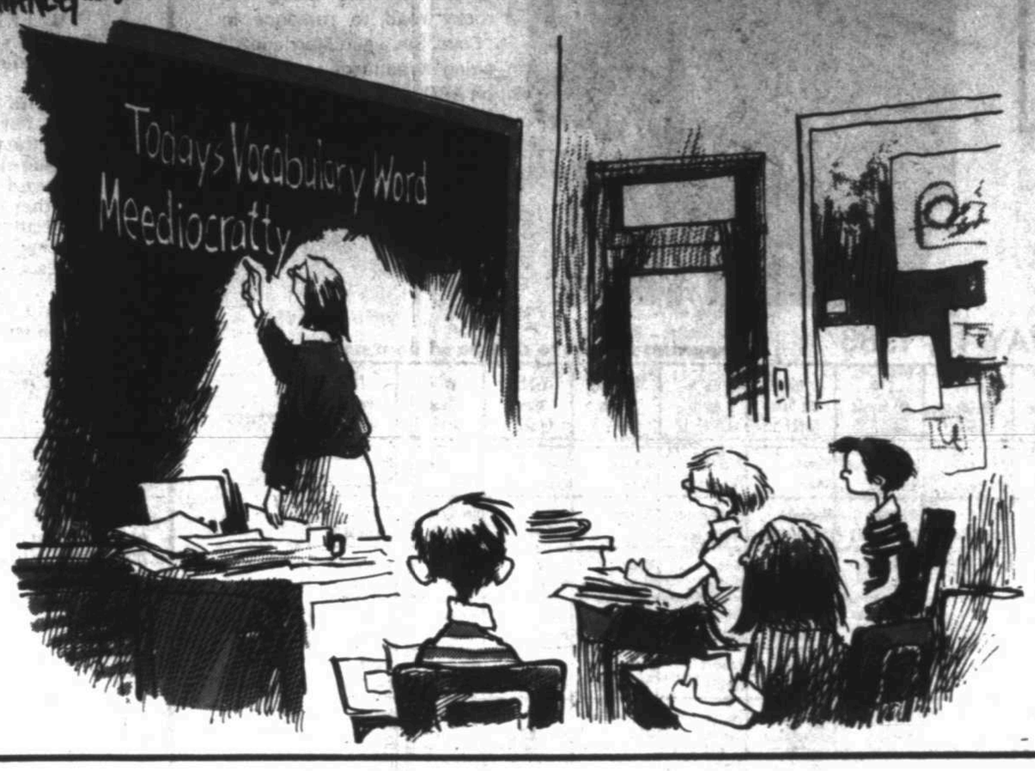

President Reagan's announcement, under pressure from the nation's farmers, that he is willing to negotiate a new long-term contract to sell grain to the Soviet Union reflects a policy change that makes sense, both economically and politically. Economically, it holds out the hope — assuming Moscow can be persuaded to increase massively its purchase of American corn and wheat — that American farmers can count on a steady high level of foreign grain sales in good times or bad. Diplomatically, it serves as a conciliatory gesture, albeit a minor one in light of Mr. Reagan's drumbeat of anti-Soviet rhetoric and strained Soviet-American relations.

That being said, it would be wrong to conclude that an end can now be written to a stormy chapter in U.S. relations both with the Kremlin and with more friendly trading partners. The Soviets, having found suitable alternative sources of grain, may now be disposed to drive a very hard bargain and may not be willing nearly to quadruple their imports of American grain, as the Reagan administration hopes. After all, the leaders in Moscow may reason, if the Americans imposed an embargo over Afghanistan and refused to negotiate a new long-term agreement because of Poland, what might they do the next time a Soviet action displeased them?

Nor will this American willingness to return to business-as-usual necessarily restore altogether this country's credibility among its European allies, who were infuriated when President Reagan imposed an ill-advised and short-lived embargo on the export of American technology to help build the Soviet-West European natural gas pipeline. It will take time to shed the image the United States has acquired as an "unreliable" supplier.

Despite those caveats, Mr. Reagan's decision is a welcome one. It will be all the more welcome if, when it comes to sitting down at the negotiating table with the Soviets, the administration resists the temptation to link a successful grain accord to Soviet concessions in the arms-control talks going on in Geneva. If that is the result, so much the better, but to force the issue, as some in Washington have suggested, could dash the hopes for the first positive development in Soviet-American relations since Ronald Reagan became president.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Kennedy's defenders ignore facts

WASHINGTON — A few days ago, I reported that nine members and former members of Congress, including Sen. Ted Kennedy, D-Mass., had been identified in testimony before a federal grand jury and the House Ethics Committee as persons who "may be using controlled substances purchased" through a Capitol Hill cocaine ring.

Jack Anderson

The story produced a mad rush to defend Kennedy. Joe Califano, who is running the House investigation, broke his customary silence about his closed-door findings. Nowhere in his files, he said, could he find any evidence against the senator.

I am happy to tell Califano, since he may have been too busy to check the volumnious files personally, where he can find the testimony against Kennedy. Look up Detective Michael Hubbard's sworn statements before an Ethics Committee session on Nov. 30, 1982.

As the undercover cop who broke the Capitol Hill narcotics ring, Hubbard was asked to report the results of his investigation. He named nine members of Congress who had been implicated in the cocaine scandal by three or more informants. Kennedy was one of the nine.

The Justice Department, picking up the cue from Califano, announced that its files also contained nothing that would implicate Kennedy. I can assist the Justice Department, too, since its file clerks seem to have overlooked the relevant grand jury transcripts. Check Hubbard's secret testimony before the grand jury on Jan. 12, 1983.

He repeated under oath the same information he had given the House Ethics Committee. If Justice has been unable to get the sworn corroboration it would like, it's because the reluctant prosecutors turned the suspected ringleaders loose and they skipped the country. They have been extradited at last from Australia, but it's uncertain whether they'll ever testify.

Meanwhile, Califano and his cohorts at the Justice Department, in their haste to defend Kennedy, singled him out from the eight other accused members of Congress. This might leave the impression that a stronger case can be made against them.

So allow me to defend all nine. All have denied any guilt; none have even been indicted; all are innocent until a jury convicts them. Some of them, particularly Rep. Charles Wilson, D-Tex., and ex-Rep. Lionel Van Deerlin, D-Calif., have made convincing statements of their innocence. Sources close to Kennedy also swear to me that this is a bum rap.

Then why did I publish the names of the accused? Actually, I withheld the names for more than a year. But some of the names began to appear in the public prints. I decided, perhaps unwisely, that selective leaks were unfair and that the time had come to publish all the names. I cited the grand jury testimony and printed the denials.

I was also the first to publish grand jury testimony in the Watergate case, and I came under withering fire for doing so. In retrospect, I think it helped to break the case and was a public service.

I was also the first to publish excerpts from the sealed transcripts in the ABSCAM case. But the deeper I dug into the details, the more convinced I became that the government had used shameful tactics. So I moved from praising to criticizing the ABSCAM investigation.

The Washington Post, which had published the cocaine allegations against some of the accused congressmen, killed my column naming Kennedy. The newspaper's ombudsman, Robert J. McCloskey, invited me to defend what I had written. Then he produced a full column, justifying the Post's action and ignoring my detailed defense.

McCloskey's article misstated the case, beginning with the headline "The Anderson Allegations." I carefully explained to McCloskey that the allegations came not from me but from a law enforcement officer who had infiltrated the drug ring and had a better knowledge of the facts that anyone else; that he named the possible cocaine users under oath before both the grand jury and the Ethics Committee; that he based his testimony on his 18-month investigation and the statements of three or more informants.

McCloskey also committed an egregious sin by misquoting the article he was criticizing. He said I "admitted" that "there is no supporting evidence against these congressman so far as I know." He neglected to tell the Post's readers that the column they hadn't been allowed to see prefaced this statement with the phrase, "Except for the statements of the informants" — and that the partial disclaimer applied to only three of the accused congressmen.

McCloskey gave the impression that my column was based solely on the testimony of former Congressman Robert Dornan, who, in fact, did back up Hubbard's testimony and divulged the same names to the Ethics Committee. McCloskey was so inattentive to my explanations that he got Dornan's name wrong and called him Michael. Finally, if the Post insists on attributing the allegations to me, it might also attribute the denials to me. For the disputed column carried both.

Footnote: Apparently Califano has pulled back into his shell of silence. I tried to reach him to describe where he can find the testimony he implied did not exist. He failed to return my calls.

HEMISPHERE REPORT

Latin 'debt bomb' being defused

WASHINGTON — Were Mexico and Brazil to default on their foreign debts, 24 of the United States' largest banks would be grievously affected, the senior economist of the Joint Economic Committee of Congress says.

William Glandoni

But that is not likely to happen, Robert E. Weintraub writes in a recently released study entitled "International Debt: Crisis and Challenge."

"Events are defusing the debt bomb," Weintraub declares.

"Economic recovery is under way in the United States and other developed countries. That will increase developing countries' capacities to service their debts.

"Interest rates are down. That will reduce the burden of their debts," he says.

That doesn't mean that Mexico, Brazil and the other Latin American countries on the list of those where there is "a non-trivial chance of default" are home free.

However, Weintraub, formerly a professor at the University of California at Santa Barbara, says that changed economic conditions in recent months indicate "that it will be easier for all of the nations (on the non-trivial list), excepting possibly Mexico and Venezuela, to service their debts in 1983 than it was in 1981 and 1982."

In addition to Mexico and Brazil, which top the list, Argentina, Chile, Venezuela, South Korea, the Philippines, Taiwan and Spain appear, in that order.

Lower oil prices, which "we are likely to see" in 1983, will cut into the export earnings of both Mexico and Venezuela, "decreasing their ability to service their debts," according to Weintraub.

But the other seven nations on the non-trivial list will benefit from the drop in the cost of their fuel, and their ability to pay will be enhanced.

What will benefit all the countries, including Mexico and Venezuela, will be much lower interest rates this year than the last two. Mexico looms as the chief beneficiary of that. Weintraub points out that "a 1 percentage point decrease in LIBOR decreases Mexico's annual debt service payments by $593 million yearly, Brazil's by $455 million and Argentina's by $205 million."

(LIBOR is the acronym for London Inter Bank Offered Rates, the average of the rates at five major banks in London offered for dollar deposits.)

Of the $520 billion in medium- and long-term foreign debts of developing nations not members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries at the end of 1982, $108 billion was owed to U.S. banks, according to Weintraub. Seven countries — Mexico, Brazil, Argentina, Chile, South Korea, the Philippines and Taiwan — owed $79.5 billion of that amount to banks in the United States, Venezuela, another $10.7 billion and Spain, $6.7 billion.

Defaults by Mexico, which he estimates owed U.S. banks $25.2 billion last year, and Brazil, which owed $20.5 billion, would virtually wipe out the capital of large U.S. banks, "if banks are required to write down the defaulted loans to zero immediately," he calculates.

"If they are given time to recover, however, many of them could absorb the losses involved."

Weintraub refuses to be pessimistic. He says it is "reasonably assumed" that debtor nations would rather not default.

"Conditions in 1983 are different from what they were in 1981 and 1982. Interest rates have fallen. Oil prices are falling. A strong recovery from the recession that afflicted the United States and other countries appears to be under way. The fall in interest rates and resumption of growth in the United States and other developed countries will make it easier for all nine countries where U.S. bank loans are concentrated and there is a non-trivial chance of default to service their debts in 1983," he says.

"The only worrisome effect of recent trends is that falling oil prices will increase the strain on Venezuela and Mexico."

However, Weintraub notes that Mexico, along with Brazil and Argentina, already have taken painful, difficult steps to avoid defaulting on their debts.

"Under analysis, the threat of widespread bank failures, of the collapse of our banking system, is found to be imaginary," Weintraub affirms.

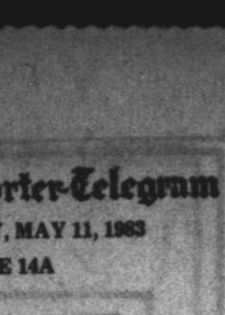

"Another great depression can be ruled out," he writes in the study published by the Department of Economics of George Mason University, Fairfax, Va.

Moonlight revealing teachers!

When educational scores plummet in the United States everyone tends to blame the school teachers. But this is too easy. The average salary for a teacher, after four years of college and taking special courses, is $17,000 a year. Because many school teachers have to moonlight at another job to stay alive, they're not getting enough sleep to be sharp in the classroom.

Art Buchwald

I became aware of this when I took my nephew to dinner the other night.

"Look," he said. "There's my English teacher."

"Where?" I asked

"The man coming over in the waiter's uniform."

"He's your English teacher?"

"Sure. Hi, Mr. Peterson."

"Hello, Michael," Peterson said to my nephew. "What brings you here on a school night?"

"My uncle is taking me out for my birthday. How did I do on my English test today?" Michael asked.

"I haven't been able to mark it yet. We had a big party of lobbyists from the American Banker's Association and they've kept me running. What would you like to order?"

Michael studied the menu and said, "What gives with the Oysters Rockefeller?"

"Nothing gives with the Oysters Rockefeller, Michael. Oysters Rockefeller cannot give. You must ask, 'How are the Oysters Rockefeller?'"

"Well, how are they?"

"I would recommend them."

"Okay, I'll take a shot at them."

"Come on, Mr. Peterson. Don't ruin my birthday."

"I'm sorry, Michael, I forgot my place. As a waiter I shouldn't correct you."

"Hey, Mr. Peterson. Is that Mr. Alfredo, our science teacher, in the white jacket carrying all those dirty dishes?"

"That's correct. He's a busboy here, but as soon as he gets his master's degree in biophysics, I'm sure he'll become a waiter. The manager of this restaurant has had very good luck with the teaching staff of Warren Harding High School. As an alumnus, he tries to hire as many of us as he can. Miss Bellows, your math teacher, is the hat check girl, and Mr. Fallows, of the Phys. Ed. department, is the bouncer in the bar."

"Is it degrading to work as a waiter at night and a school teacher in the daytime?" I asked Peterson.

"Oh, I don't ever tell anyone I moonlight in the daytime as a school teacher. If you let people know you're a teacher they tend to think you're wasting the taxpayer's money. But if you tell them you're a waiter they feel you're doing something worthwhile."

"You teachers have a tough life," I said.

"It could be worse. Most of the staff at Herbert Hoover High School work the night shift at National Airport for Federal Express. They never get any tips."

We gave our order, and after Peterson left I said to Michael, "Is he a good teacher?"

"Better than most. You know John Hanrahan, the kid I play football with? Well, he and his parents discovered his French teacher, Mr. Dubois, was working in a gas station. Dubois forgot to put the gas cap back on their tank, and John's parents were so angry when they got home, they called the principal of the school and demanded Dubois be fired, because they said they didn't want their son to be taught French by someone who didn't even know how to pump gas."

"Was Dubois fired?"

"No, because fortunately the principal had done the same thing at the gas station he was working at the night before."

We finished our dinner and asked Peterson if he could call us a cab.

He told us it would be no problem. "I'll call Mrs. Thompson, Michael's homeroom teacher. She hasn't had a fare all night long."

First British public opinion poll places Thatcher's party in lead

By GRAHAM HEATHCOTE
Associated Press Writer

LONDON — The first public opinion poll issued since Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's call for a June 9 election gave her Conservative Party a 15 point lead today — more than twice the margin by which it ousted Labor in 1979.

But despite the lead in the polls, Conservative legislator Norman St. John-Stevas said the election is "not going to be the cakewalk some people imagine."

That view was reflected on the London Stock Exchange, where share values dropped $4.7 million Tuesday. The drop was attributed in part to fears the socialist Labor Party, which lost the overall voting in 1979 by 7 percentage points, could be voted back in power.

Labor has frightened Britain's business community by pledging to boost taxes and state spending, increase government ownership and impose exchange controls.

By early afternoon, the Financial Times index had plunged 22.2 points, nearing the record 24-point drop in February of 1974 when the last Labor Party government took power. Before the end of trading, however, the index recovered nearly 9 points to close at 676.7, down 13.5 for the day.

Brokers said buyers apparently were mindful that Mrs. Thatcher's poll lead does not take into account the more than one-third of the electorate who remain undecided.

Many commentators see the June election as a stark choice between a Labor Party that has shifted left since losing power and Mrs. Thatcher, the Conservatives' most right-wing leader since World War II.

The new survey by Market Opinion and Research International (MORI) reported 46 percent backing for the Conservatives, 31 percent for Labor, 21 percent for the centrist Social Democrat-Liberal alliance and 2 percent for others.

The poll, published in the Daily Star newspaper, was conducted Tuesday, 24 hours after Mrs. Thatcher announced the election date. It covered 1,047 adults in 53 of the country's 650 electoral districts, MORI said.

The survey said 71 percent of those interviewed believed Mrs. Thatcher was right to call an election now instead of waiting until later in her five-year term, which ends in May 1984.

Conservative leaders held their first strategy meetings Tuesday and Mrs. Thatcher canceled talks with President Reagan scheduled for May 26-27 in Washington.

The prime minister's office said she has not yet decided whether to forgo the seven-nation economic summit in Williamsburg, Va., on May 28-30, and the European Common Market summit in Stuttgart, West Germany, on June 6-7.

France, U.S. discover differences

PARIS (AP) — The United States won support for several of its positions at an economic conference of Western industrialized nations but failed to win over the French hosts on some disputed issues.

The French-U.S. differences were underscored Tuesday night when French officials boycotted a dinner given by U.S. Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan for finance and trade ministers who will be participating later this month in the economic summit at Williamsburg, Va..

The French said they stayed away from the dinner because they felt it would not contribute to preparations for the summit.

The dinner came at the close of a two-day ministerial meeting of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development.

During the conference, trade and finance ministers from 24 of the richest industrialized nations agreed on an approach to sustain and broaden the economic recovery now getting started in the United States and, to a certain extent, West Germany.

French Finance Minister Jacques Delors, author of an austerity program that is facing difficulties because of a strong dollar, renewed his appeal for more accommodating fiscal and monetary policies while Regan emphasized the need to fight inflation.

The OECD meeting, in which some 40 ministers took part, was designed to lay the groundwork for the industrialized nations' summit in Williamsburg, but also will influence the European Community summit in Stuttgart, Germany June 3-4 and the U.N. Conference on Trade and Development opening June 6 in Belgrade, Yugoslavia.

U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz told a news conference there was a healthy atmosphere at the meeting in contrast to last November,s ministerial sessions on trade, where strong U.S.-French differences surfaced.

The United States and other free-trade proponents obtained a strong commitment to rolling back protectionist measures in order to strengthen the international trading system and promote economic growth.

Member countries should reverse protectionist trends and relax and dismantle trade restrictions, a communique approved by the ministers said.

The participants also agreed that the industrialized nations should work to sustain loans to financially pressed developing countries.

Wife killed shielding British soldier

LONDONDERRY, Northern Ireland (AP) — Two masked gunmen burst into a home where a British soldier was visiting and fatally shot his wife in the back as she tried to shield him, police said today.

The soldier and his sister-in-law were wounded in the attack late Tuesday night. Both were reported in stable condition after emergency surgery.

"There is no doubt they opened fire knowing they would hit the two women who were shielding the man," said a police spokesman, who refused further identification in accordance with state regulations.

No group claimed responsibility for the attack, which occurred in a Roman Catholic area of Londonderry, Northern Ireland's second-largest city.

Asked if it appeared to be the work of the outlawed Irish Republican Army, the police spokesman said: "I don't think there is very much doubt about it ... Nobody else would try to shoot a soldier."

Sgt. Brian Purvis and his wife, Alice, 47, were watching television with her sister, Nancy Wasson, 51, and other relatives when the gunmen came into the living room, police said.

"They had a gun each and they pointed at Brian and said, 'Out, out,' " said Lucy Clifford, another of Mrs. Purvis' sisters.

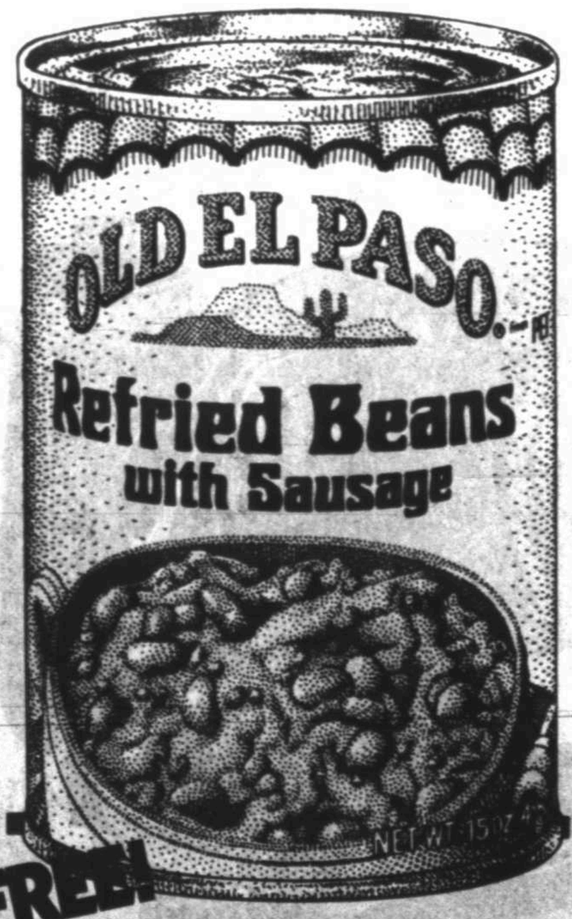

"My older sister, Nancy, jumped up and pushed one of the gunmen away and Alice got in front of Brian," Mrs. Clifford said in an a television interview with the British Broadcasting Corp.

"One shot was fired and Nancy got in front of Alice and Brian," she said. "Another shot was fired and Alice fell, shot in the back. She fell on the floor beside my mother and was dead before they got her to the hospital."

Mrs. Clifford said her 78-year-old mother witnessed the killing.

Nicaragua seeks border talks

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Nicaragua is again urging talks with Honduras to stop increasingly frequent border clashes, warning that skirmishes with Nicaraguan exiles could flare into a full-scale war.

The talks were proposed in a note the Foreign Ministry sent to Honduras on Tuesday, protesting what it claimed was an attack by Honduran-based rebels against a border post inside Nicaragua.

It said 60 anti-government rebels attacked Siuce, a border crossing point 188 miles north of Managua, on Monday, killing one soldier and wounding another. Troops of Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government claimed to have killed 60 rebels trying to sneak into Nicaragua there last week.

China bars non-official flights

PEKING, China (AP) — The Communist government is so worried by the first successful international hijack of a Chinese jetliner that it has barred most citizens from flying, informed Chinese sources said.

An internal memo circulated this week announced that from now on only army commanders and government officials at the county level and higher will be allowed to fly, the sources said.

According to official reports, three of the six hijackers who forced an airliner with 95 people aboard to land in South Korea last week had been engaged in fraud and illegal business as they shuttled by air between Chinese provinces.

Sweden's sub search curtailed

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — The Swedish military has scaled down a 12-day search for suspected Soviet submarines in northern Sweden, but a defense spokesman said today another foreign submarine has been sighted in waters near Stockholm.

The sighting occurred near Malsten in Stockholm's southern archipelago, the same area where naval forces exploded four mines last October in an effort to force up a Soviet submarine.

Palestinians executed in Libya

TUNIS, Tunisia (AP) — A Palestine Liberation Organization spokesman said today five Palestinians were executed in Libya recently after being accused of belonging to a fundamentalist Islamic group.

The spokesman, who requested anonymity, said the five Palestinians were "treacherously liquidated by hanging by the Libyan security services who accused them of being members of the Islamic Liberation Party."

The spokesman said the men were hanged without trial. He did not indicate their names or the date and place of the reported execution.

Soviets to choose new chairman

TOKYO (AP) — The Soviet Union in June will choose a new chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, a post unfilled since the death last November of Leonid I. Brezhnev, the editor of Pravda said in an interview published here today.

The chairmanship is equivalent to the Soviet Union's head of state, a largely ceremonial but prestigious post. Brezhnev served both as head of state and as the more powerful chief of the Communist Party.

Nuclear war would kill 1.15 billion

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — A report issued by the World Health Organization estimates that about half of world's 4.5 billion people would be "immediate victims" of a full-scale nuclear war.

The report, prepared by an international committee of 10 scientists, forecast a potential toll of 1.15 billion dead and 1.1 billion injured in the worst of three war scenarios it considered.

WWII fighters protest nomination

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — A group of World War II resistance fighters has joined a growing movement protesting the nomination of a former member of the Nazi SS to Austria's three-member parliamentary leadership.

A statement Tuesday by the Documentation Archive of Austrian Resistance objected to the candidacy of Freedom Party member Friedrich Peter for the office of third president. The third president is one of three legislators who take turns chairing parliamentary sessions.

Peter "was a decorated member of the first SS infantry brigade, which has been proven to have committed mass murders in the Soviet Union," the veterans' statement said.

Yugoslavian editor dismissed

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — The chief editor of Yugoslavia's most influential daily newspaper has been dismissed, apparently because of his liberal editorial views.

The "withdrawal" of Politika chief editor Dragoljub Trailovic was an effort to bring the editorial board "more resolutely and consistently" in line with "the policy and stands" of the Communist Party, the state-run Tanjug news agency said Tuesday.

Informed sources said the paper's city and culture editors submitted their resignations in a gesture of solidarity with their fired superior.

City in Mideast divided by peace

EDITOR'S NOTE: Associated Press writer Marcus Eliason from Tel Aviv visited the Israeli half of Rafah while Dalia Baligh from the AP's Cairo bureau visited the Egyptian side for this report on a city divided by peace.

By MARCUS ELIASON

RAFAH, Israeli-Egyptian Border — The scar still hurts, but the people of Rafah are getting used to it. Women even hang their washing on the barbed wire of the border.

The Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty is no blessing for the dusty town of 80,000. A quarter of it belongs to Egypt, the rest to the Gaza Strip, occupied by Israel. The border is a 40-yard-wide strip of tarmac, sand and barbed-wire fences.

Except for about 50 people with special passes, nobody crosses the line. Silence hangs over the naked border strip, punctuated occasionally by shouted conversations between townspeople on opposite sides of the fences. Pick a day without a wind, residents say, otherwise you'll hear nothing.

"Life is not good," sighed Ahmed Sha'ar, a grocer. "Everything has closed down. The Egyptians did not do a good thing by closing the border. They wanted the land, but is this peace when they divide us?"

Sha'ar's grocery stands on what used to be a main street, and served Israeli settlers from the Yamit area to the southwest, Arabs from the Sinai capital of El Arish and Bedouin nomads. The settlers and travelers are gone and the main street ends at the border, a few yards from Sha'ar's empty shop.

Roughly two-thirds of the stores near the border have closed.

Israeli authorities say the city need not have been divided — that they were willing to give it entirely to Egypt. But Egypt insisted on getting back what it lost in the 1967 war, not an inch more or less.

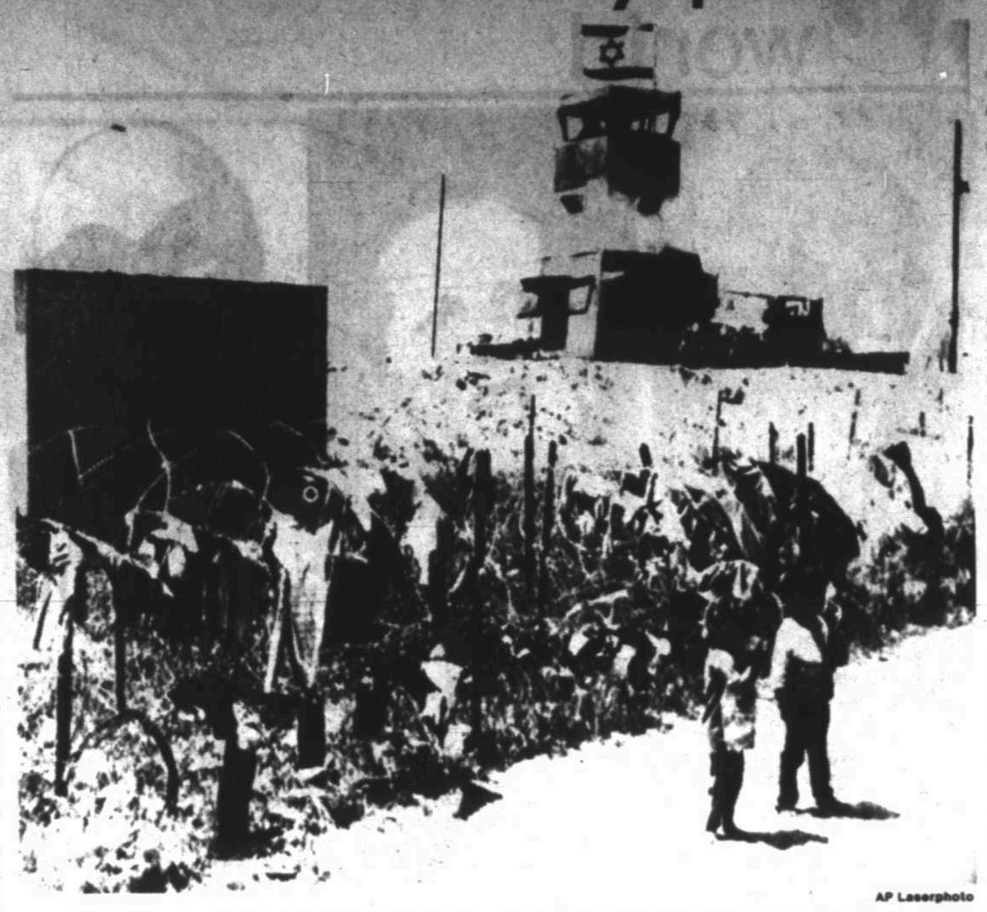

So bulldozers flattened houses and shops to create a security strip. A water pumping station was left intact but divided through the middle, leaving the water on one side and the pump on the other.

The Israelis gave land and financial aid to the 330 families vacated from the strip, and they built themselves spacious new homes in Rafah, with modern utilities and a new school.

But families were divided and farmers cut off from their crops. Business partnerships collapsed. Marriages between people from opposite sides of town were delayed or even canceled because neither Israel nor Egypt would accept new residents.

The municipality's ambitious expansion program was frozen. The land earmarked for an industrial park was split by the border.

Rafah, for centuries a hub of travel and trade, became a dead end.

Arab children guard their mother's laundry, hung to dry on the barbed wire fence that divides the city of Rafah between Egypt and Israeli-occupied Gaza Strip.

The 700 Palestinian families of Camp Canada found themselves in a peculiar predicament. Refugees who had been moved out of their crowded camps by the Israelis, they built better homes in Camp Canada. But that camp is on the Egyptian side, and the Egyptians demanded that Israel take them back. Israel refused, but now says it will accept them. Meanwhile, the people of Camp Canada are restricted to their quarters and cannot work.

"All the Palestinians in Camp Canada want to go over there, but Israel refuses," said Gamal Hamed, a young Palestinian on the Egyptian side, who was engaged in a shouted conversation with his relatives on the Israeli side.

"My family is not happy, but at least they are making money. Here I sleep in peace. I am not afraid an Israeli soldier will enter my house at night. But I am going to Iraq to make money. There is no future here," he said.

Israeli soldiers came and pushed away the people Hamed was shouting to. The residents say that generally the soldiers of both sides discourage cross-border chats. Those with permits to cross can carry messages, but a family reunion requires crossing the border at an official checkpoint, a formality that takes anywhere from one to four hours, and costs approximately $8 from Israel and $4 from Egypt.

Just south of Rafah stands the international border terminal where brightly colored buses carry tourists back and forth between the two countries that once were enemies. But in Rafah, the border has a dour military tone, softened only by the Egyptian and Israeli flags flapping along the barbed wire.

South African parties divide key elections

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The ruling National Party and far-right Conservative Party split two parliamentary elections seen as a test of support for the government's plan to admit Asians and people of mixed race to the whites-only legislature.

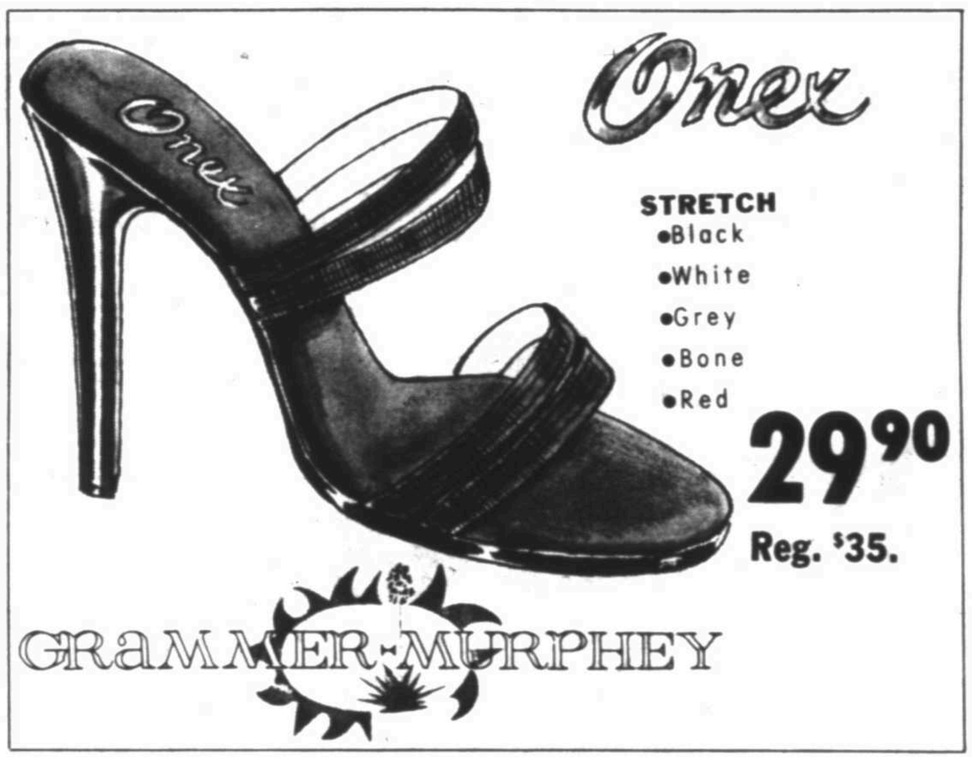

Counting of votes was delayed today in a third election, where Manpower Minister Fanie Botha was fighting a close battle against Conservative Tom Langley in the rural Soutpansberg district.

A defeat for Botha, second only to the Prime Minister P.W. Botha in seniority in the Cabinet, would be the worst electoral setback suffered by the National Party since it came to power in 1948. The two men are not related.

Only whites were allowed to vote Tuesday in the three contests. The results from the first two districts meant the National Party holds 115 of the 166 seats in Parliament and the Conservatives 17.

The Conservative victory came in the rural Waterberg district, where the party's leader, Andries Treurnicht, captured 47 percent of the vote to whip Nationalist Eban Cuyler and Jaap Marais, head of the extreme-rightist Herstigte (Reformed) Nasionale Party.

It was Treurnicht's first time out as a candidate for the party he formed last year with 17 other Nationalists who bolted the ruling party because they opposed proposals to share power with non-whites.

Red Cross denounces Gulf war

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — The International Committee of the Red Cross today said Iran and Iraq, during their 2½-year-old war, have committed "grave and repeated violations of international humanitarian law."

The Red Cross, in a memorandum addressed to both countries and to other signatories of the Geneva conventions, cited summary executions of captured prisoners of war, failure to provide medical assistance to wounded enemies and indiscriminate bombardment of civilian settlements.

The all-Swiss committee, which monitors compliance with the Geneva conventions, said its staff had witnessed these violations or had "verifiable" evidence they occurred.

It said it took the unusual step of making its appeal public after confidential communications "failed to put an end to the violations" of the conventions, which provide humanitarian guidelines for countries engaged in war.

Rebels fail to solve Monterey's Riddle

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

LUBBOCK — When Lubbock Monterey third baseman Danny Riddle stroked a single off Midland Lee reliever Kerry Robertson in the bottom of the eighth inning, he casually jogged down the base path with his arms in the air.

The hit, just beyond the reach of Rebel short stop Barry Blackwell, scored Alan Hernandez from third to give the Plainsmen a 2-1 victory here Tuesday at Lowery Field. The win also gives Monterey a 1-0 lead in the three-game bi-district playoffs.

Riddle came close to missing his moment of glory. Scott Smith led off the inning with a walk and went to second on Kevin Short's sacrifice bunt. Lee coach Ernie Johnson opted to intentionally walk Hernandez bringing Riddle to the plate.

On the first pitch to Riddle, Lee catcher Sergio Ochoa tried for the pickoff at first and threw the ball into right field where Dennis Matta fielded it and returned a line shot home. With Ochoa blocking the plate, Smith tried to slide in from behind. Ochoa missed the tag. Smith missed the plate.

Realizing he was still fair game, Smith lunged back to the plate and Ochoa applied the tag. Umpire Charlie Meechum, who had originally signaled safe, called Smith out and the winning run was averted.

"The catcher missed him and he missed the plate," said Meechum. "The batter knew he missed the plate too. He was heading back to the plate but the catcher beat him there."

Meanwhile, Hernandez was taking advantage of the play by moving to third base where he remained until Riddle stroked his single on Robertson's next pitch.

"It was a perfect pitch for a right-hander," said Robertson who relieved John Denton in the eighth inning. "I probably should have put it a little more inside though."

DENTON STARTED the game for Lee and pitched "probably the best I've ever thrown," he said.

In seven innings of duty, Denton allowed only five base runners — two by hits and three by walks. It was the first walk he gave up that cost the Rebels a run.

In the bottom of the third inning, Denton was working on a no-hit shutout. He got the first out before walking Monterey's Jimmy Simpson and came up with out No. 2 before giving up his first run.

Plainsmen pitcher Kevin Short brought Simpson home from second with a single to left-center field. A stolen base had put Simpson in scoring position.

"That first run was my fault," said Denton. "It was my first walk of the game."

Except for a few shakey moments in the seventh inning, Denton didn't have many problems with the Plainsmen after the third. He gave up his second hit in the fourth and, after two one-two-three innings, gave up two walks in the seventh. All three runners died on base.

"I thought John Denton pitched a great ball game," said Johnson who had been concerned about his pitching staff before the game. "It's too bad we couldn't get the win for him. But, this game shows these kids (Rebels) that we can play this team (Monterey)."

Midland Lee catcher Sergio Ochoa, with the ball in glove, races Lubbock Monterey's Scott Smith back to the plate in the eighth inning during the opening game of the bi-district playoffs. Smith, who had avoided Ochoa's original tag, missed the plate with his slide and was put out by Ochoa before he could scramble back. The out delayed defeat as Monterey went on to win, 2-1.

WHAT KEPT Lee from beating Monterey, despite Denton's superb performance, was an inability to hit Short who went the distance, allowing only two hits and three walks. He faced the minimum number of batters — 14 up and 14 down — before Dennis Matta stroke a double in the fifth.

"Short did a great job on us," said Johnson. "He stayed ahead of us and was getting his curve to break. He did a great job and we couldn't handle it."

Giving up the walk proved as costly for Short as it did for Denton. In the top of the seventh, with his shutout still intact, Short got the first out before walking Steve Woodlee and Darrell Holmes.

Keith McDonald, who went in to run for Woodlee, scored the tying run when Rob Walker doubled to left field. Holmes stopped at third on the play and stayed there.

In the eighth inning, centerfielder Billy Lance came up with the "play of the game," according to Johnson. Pinch hitter Darren Webb led off the inning with a apparent hit to in the gap between left and center. Lance, charging the ball at top speed, covered a distance of around 50 feet then made a tremendous diving catch.

"If that ball had fallen in it was a double," said Johnson.

Short retired the side to pick up his ninth win of the season against two losses. Robertson suffered the loss to even his record at 2-2.

The victory gives Monterey a 26-5 season record while Lee falls to 16-12.

On Friday, the two teams will meet again for the second game of the best-of-three series at Lee Field at 2 p.m. If Lee wins the game, a second game will immediately follow.

"If we win the first game Friday, I'll miss my son's graduation in Alpine (Sul Ross State University)," said Johnson. "I sure hope I miss it."

Midland High honors top athletes

BY CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

With a giant purple and gold Bulldog poster as a backdrop, Midland High honored its student-athletes during their annual Spring Sports Banquet at Midland Center Tuesday night.

Sheila Christian and Chuck St. Germain received the elitist awards as the outstanding female and male athletes for 1982-83.

Christian is Midland's first female athlete to letter in three sports for three consecutive years, a feat Master of Ceremonies Jack Stephenson understatedly called, "some kind of accomplishment."

In the past year, the senior garnered two District 4-5A Most Valuable Player Awards in basketball and volleyball and was All South Plains in basketball.

St. Germain's greatest accomplishment as a Bulldog may still lie ahead.

Despite setting a personal best time of 1:55.90 at regionals, which rates him amoung the top 10 in the state, St. Germain was edged out by Permian's Bruce Bennett, who he defeated for the district title.

Four major scholarships were awarded, including the Teddy Terrazas Memorial Scholarship which went to Earl Phillips, a member of the Bulldog track squad.

The three $1,000 Booster Club scholarships went to Penny Griffin (volleyball, basketball and track), Valton Acree (basketball) and John Rhamey.

AS THE coaches introduced their respective teams, they reminded everyone that it wasn't just a time to honor the best and brightest, but it was a time to reflect on the successes each team had.

For some that meant past season play.

Linda Jolly coached the Bulldog volleyball team to a 27-8 season that included the district, regional and area championships.

Leading the volleyball team were all-district performers Christian, Griffin, and Denise Lanz, who was chosen as the district's sophomore of the year. Griffin was chosen as the team MVP, a title she also won for her contribution to the track team.

Joining Christian, Griffin and Lanz as all-district players was "shoot-from-the-hip" Rebecca Caton.

Mary Baird probably had her biggest task as girls' golf coach when she began the year with a team composed of three sophomores, a junior and only one returning letterman, Kelle Mobley.

"But," as Baird said, "What a returner."

Mobley led the lady linksters to a district title, the fifth straight for the Baird coached Bulldogs, and was the district and Region I medalist. At state last week Mobley finished eighth.

FOR OTHERS, the memory of the past year revolves around a single, isolated moment.

"Beating Hobbs was the hightlight of my life," boys' basketball Coach Stephenson said. "And as long as I'm basketball coach at Midland High, we'll never play them again."

All-district selection Doug Hixon, who shot 54 percent from the field and 84 percent at the line, was named the team's MVP. Midland finished with a 16-14 record that included two victories over district champion, Odessa High.

Baseball Coach Tim Whalen, whose Bulldogs were decimated by injuries, drew the biggest cheer when he reminded everyone, "We beat some team that's in the playoffs, three times," referring to cross-town rival Lee.

Later Whalen, who entertained the crowd with a "how rough was it (the season) routine?" had to return to the microphone. He forgot to introduce his MVP, Jose Carrasco.

SUZI SIMPSON won the Doug Russell Award as the best female swimmer while sophomore sensation Andrew Young was picked as the best male among a bevy of state qualifiers.

Another sophomore, Terry McFadden, was named outstanding boy tennis player, an honor Kathy Bowles won for the girls.

Gymnast Loren Frost and Lennis Landry were cited for their state qualifying efforts while Reece Boudreaux and Grant Word shared MVP honors for boys' golf.

MC off to fast start

OCALA, Fla. — The Midland College women's tennis team got through the first day of the National Junior College tennis tournament with six points and no casualties here Tuesday, moving into firm contention for another national championship.

There is a field of 28 full teams competing here for the national title and seven others with one or two players. Midland College, Cooke County, Tyler (all of Texas) and Broward, Fla., appear to be the top teams left in the running for the team title.

MC's Liz Alvarado, seeded No. 3 in the No. 1 singles, drew a first round bye Tuesday and then defeated Julie Norton of Abraham Baldwin, Ga., 6-0, 6-2, in the second round for two points.

Kym Somerville, seeded No. 5 in the No. 2 singles, demolished Marsha Whitaker of Gainesville, Ga., 6-0, 6-1, in a first round match. Jodi Wertenberger, seeded No. 4 in the No. 3 singles, got past Cindy Cutler of Bucks County, Pa., 6-2, 6-0, in another first round match.

MC ended first round action in the No. 4 singles when Therese Devine, seeded No. 3, defeated Barbara Sang of Illinois Valley, 6-1, 6-1.

St. Germain-Bennett to have one more battle fling

TERRY WILLIAMSON

The score is tied at 2-2 and heading into the bottom of the ninth inning for Midland High's Chuck St. Germain and Odessa Permian's Bruce Bennett.

The ninth inning will be held Saturday in Austin's Memorial Stadium when eight runners run for state glory in the 800-meter run. However, for those who have been watching the St. Germain-Bennett battle the past two years, you would think no one else will be on the track Saturday.

THERE IS absolutely no rivalry in District 4-5A track to match this one. The way these two have been going at each other for two years you would think Saturday's race is a final battle in a long war.

In a way, that's true. The two probably won't run against each other again after Saturday. But to call it a "war" is stretching the point a bit. The whole thing is a lighthearted affair at best.

"It's really been fun running against Bruce," St. Germain said this weekend after finishing second to Bennett in the Region I 800 finals. "I guess now we will do it again. Bruce is a good runner and I like competing against him."

This year the score is 2-2 — Bennett winning twice and St. Germain twice. Revenge could be the motive for some people, but personal pride probably has more to do with it.

In 1982, Bennett won the 4-5A 800 championship. St. Germain took that honor from him this year by winning in Bennett's backyard — Odessa's Ratliff Stadium. Bennett gained back his edge by winning the Region I title with a bigger chest at the tape.

"I told Chuck after the district meet that he had won the district championship, but there was no way he was going to beat me in the regionals," Bennett said. "But it was close. I didn't know if I was going to have enough to pull it off there at the end. Man, we've had our battles."

BOTH TURNED in personal bests at the Vegion I battle. Bennett produced a 1:55.85 and St. Germain posted a 1:55.90. Close as usual.

There may be more powerful enimies lurking around the state come Saturday in Austin, but the 4-5A matchup still carries with it the intrigue of something special.

There was a time this year when many thought St. Germain may not get out of district, much less be entered in the state championship run this week.

One of St. Germain's losses to Bennett this year came in the Tall City Relays, his only opportunity to run before the home folks. It was really a non-race. Bennett won the race and St. Germain was fifth. This was only two weeks prior to the district meet.

Since St. Germain didn't run the following week, due to an open date on the Midland High track schedule, many thought Chuck had lost his stuff.

"Chuck got sick in the middle of the season and he was real slow in coming back," noted MHS coach Johnny Williams. "To tell you the truth, we were all a little concerned about him, but he has done a fantastic job. He works hard for what he gets and he's running smarter all the time."

IT'S REALLY ironic that Williams has produced a state qualifying prospect in the 800. In 1981, MHS sophomore James Beverley won state entry in the 800 and was touted as the state's top prospect for the next two years.

St. Germain transfered into Midland from New Mexico and ran with Beverley on MHS' cross country team under Coach John Ford in the fall of 1981. Beverley then transfered to Lovington, N.M., leaving Williams with only a gun to the head.

"I can tell you that losing James was real blow. Talent like that doesn't come along very often and we lost two years of it," Williams said at the time.

But for two years he has been watching the St. Germain-Bennett battles go on and the Beverley loss must be less painful now.

Less painful that is until Saturday when he has to sit through another one with the rest of us.

NBA Playoffs

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — The San Antonio Spurs went quickly, and quietly, in last year's National Basketball Association Western Conference championship series. That won't be the case this year.

George Gervin scored 22 of his game-high 32 points in the second half and Artis Gilmore and Mike Mitchell came through with powerful performances Tuesday night as the Spurs whipped the defending NBA champion Los Angeles Lakers 122-113.

THE SPURS, who were beaten by the Lakers in four straight games in the Western Conference final a year ago, are even with Los Angeles 1-1 in the current best-of-seven series.

And what's more, the Spurs have taken the home-court advantage away from the Lakers. Three of the remaining five games of the series, if that many are required, will be played in San Antonio.

"They came in here and accomplished what they wanted to do," said Los Angeles Coach Pat Riley, referring to the fact that the Spurs got a split in the two games at the Forum. "Now we have to go to San Antonio and accomplish what we want to do, which is to win one or both of the games.

"Nobody said that this was going to be easy. This is going to be a tough series, it's going to go six or seven games."

The third and fourth games of the series will be played Friday night and Sunday afternoon, respectively, in San Antonio.

Gervin was sensational in the second half despite picking up his fourth foul after just 3:27 of the third quarter. It seemed to inspire him as he scored 16 points in the period, making all seven of his field goal attempts and adding a pair of free throws.

Gervin also had to contend with foul problems throughout the series opener on Sunday, which the Lakers won 119-107.

"The ball felt like a baseball tonight when I got it going," said Gervin. "The key was the overall effort of the team, not my scoring.

"We have to go home and play. We are in a position to take control."

Gilmore, limited to seven points and six rebounds while playing only 32 minutes in the opener, was a different player in the second game.

Free of the foul difficulties that plagued him throughout the first game, the 7-foot-2 San Antonio center scored 27 points, grabbed 20 rebounds and blocked five shots Tuesday night.

"Obviously, I thought the most important thing was to stay out of trouble," said Gilmore, who fouled out with 5:18 left in the first game. "I was able to get position tonight. That was the big difference."

"Artis was more committed than on Sunday," said Riley. "He wasn't inhibited by fouls. He got the ball down low and he had his game tonight."

Mitchell also had 27 points and pulled down 16 rebounds as the Spurs outrebounded the Lakers 53-47. Another key player for San Antonio was guard Johnny Moore, who had 16 points and 15 assists.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, who had 30 points and eight rebounds in the opener, was limited to 19 points and four rebounds Tuesday night. The 7-2 Los Angeles center had just six points and one rebound in the second half.

THE LAKERS were led by Earvin "Magic" Johnson and Norm Nixon, who scored 28 points apiece. Johnson had a team-leading 12 rebounds while Nixon had 11 assists.

The Spurs led all the way after scoring 10 straight points to go ahead 12-2. However, the Lakers got as close as one point on three occasions in the second half.

The final time was at 103-102 when Bob McAdoo of Los Angeles scored on a dunk with 6:12 remaining. The Spurs then outscored the Lakers 12-4 over a span of 4:20 to go ahead 115-106 with 1:52 remaining. They led by at least six points the rest of the way.

Hochman, Saikin win Allison title

Donations were contributed to the American Cancer Society in memory Jimmy Allison, the late publisher-owner of the Midland Reporter-Telegram. Thirty two-man teams competed in the one-day, 36-hole event.

Bill Hightower and Jim Chase beat out Randy Mathews-David Barton for second place in the A Division of the handicap tourney after both had finished with 61s.

Bucks go to mush

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Maybe the Milwaukee Bucks are trying to lull the Philadelphia 76ers into a false sense of security. From Coach Don Nelson on down, they take every opportunity to portray the 76ers as the superior team.

"We know the Sixers are a better team than we are," Nelson said Tuesday.

"They're a better rebounding team," Marques Johnson added. "Maybe it's trite, but we have to play as good as we can play and they don't."

"They have greater speed and open floor ability," Bob Lanier said. "We don't have the same savvy."

Nelson laments the fact that the Bucks have been slow starters in the playoffs, falling behind in the early periods even in their four-game sweep of the Boston Celtics, which moved them into the National Basketball Association Eastern final against the 76ers.

It happened again in Sunday's opener of this best-of-seven series, when the Bucks fell 16 back in the first half, then rallied before losing 111-109 in overtime.

"We can't do that against this team," said Nelson as he prepared his Bucks for tonight's second game of the series.

The 76ers need the second game to maintain their homecourt advantage. The scene shifts to Milwaukee for games three and four Saturday and Sunday.

The series winner advances to the championship round against the survivor of the Western Conference final between the defending champion Los Angeles Lakers and San Antonio Spurs. That series is tied 1-1.

Nelson tried to play down reports that the referees were allowing the players to get away with excessive bumping, holding and pushing.

Philadelphia Coach Billy Cunningham had said more banging was allowed in the opener than he had ever seen.

Coronado rally stops San Angelo in seventh

LUBBOCK — The San Angelo Bobcats gave up a 2-0 lead in the bottom of the fourth inning Tuesday when Lubbock Coronado erased the advantage with three runs in bi-district playoff action here.

Coronado brought home three runs in the fourth to take a 3-2 lead which held until San Angelo tied the game in the top of the seventh.

Coronado untied it in the bottom of the inning when Brock Marshall doubled down the right field line off pitcher Jim Osborn. He scored when Dave Johnson went for the sacrifice bunt in front of the plate and Henry Klepac's throw to first was dropped by Ray Valdez.

The victory gives Coronado a 20-7 record and a 1-0 advantage in the three-game series. San Angelo fell to 17-11 with the loss.

The Bobcats will have the home field advantage for Friday's first game of a possible doubleheader at 2 p.m. If San Angelo wins the opener, a second game will immediately follow.

Texas' Tanana is alive and well

By The Associated Press

Frank Tanana and Bill Travers are still alive and kicking. Even better, the two veteran lefthanders are still pitching.

Tanana, trying to overcome three consecutive losing records, including 4-10 with Boston in 1981 and 7-18 with Texas last year, stifled New York on one hit in 4⅓ innings of scoreless relief and was credited with the victory as the Rangers defeated the Yankees 4-2 Tuesday night.

"I'm not embarrassed by the fact people call me a junkballer, a finesse pitcher, as long as they call me a pitcher," said Tanana, a one-time fireballer who has pitched 11⅓ innings this season in four relief appearances without allowing a run, while yielding only five hits. "I would think that if I didn't have a guaranteed contract, I would not be with the Texas Rangers."

Meanwhile, Travers, who had pitched a total of 9⅓ innings for California since he signed a free agent contract following his 1980 season with Milwaukee, took the mound for the first time since May 5, 1981, following two shoulder operations. He went five innings, allowing seven hits and five runs — only three earned — as the Angels nipped the Boston Red Sox 6-5.

"I was nervous until I threw that first pitch," Travers said. "I feel like a rookie again. I'm pleased with the results of all the hard work I've done. No decision here is like a win to me. Getting them out 1-2-3 in the first inning was a big lift for me. I have to work on my breaking ball and forkball, but that will come with time. I thought I threw my fastball well. My shoulder is stronger now from working with the weights. I just felt good."

Elsewhere in the American League, Baltimore walloped Seattle 13-2, Cleveland downed Kansas City 4-1, Milwaukee defeated Minnesota 4-1 and Detroit edged Oakland 4-3. Chicago and Toronto were not scheduled.

Texas managed only four hits but took advantage of two errors on plays at the plate by New York catcher Butch Wynegar to score three unearned runs. George Wright had an RBI single and Wayne Tolleson hit a sacrifice fly, but Tanana was the hero of the night for Texas.

"The toughest thing is getting the adrenaline going when the stupid phone rings," said Tanana, who had relieved only 12 times in 283 appearances before this season. I haven't had a bad outing yet. If you don't give up a run, that's the name of the game, no matter if you're rolling the ball or throwing it 90 miles an hour."

"He threw everything at us," said Don Zimmer, who managed the Yankees as Billy Martin began a three-game suspension. "So much garbage. But I'll tell you one thing, he knows how to pitch."

American League Roundup

Angels 6, Red Sox 5

Sore-legged Rod Carew led off California's ninth inning with a pinch double and scored on a single by Juan Beniquez to give the Angels their triumph over the Red Sox. Carew, the AL batting leader at .476, did not start for the third game in a row because of knee and ankle problems. But he doubled for his 2,721th career hit, moving him into a tie with Lou Gehrig for 34th place among baseball's all-time leaders.

Beniquez, who had triggered a four-run California first inning with a single, ran the count to 3-2 against reliever Luis Aponte before singling to score Carew.

"My knee hurts, but I'll do what I can to help the ballclub," said Carew. "I'm coming close to 3,000 hits, and that's a tremendous feat."

Carew also helped himself in a bid for another little-known record. The double was his 49th hit in 103 at-bats. Jimmie Foxx collected his 50th hit in his 107th time at bat in 1932, a record tied by Stan Musial in 1958.

Orioles 13, Mariners 2

Al Bumbry tripled with the bases loaded in the fourth inning and Dan Ford followed with a home run, giving Baltimore a 7-0 lead. The Orioles also scored five times in the eighth as Ford collected his third RBI with a single and Gary Roenicke had a two-run single to go with an earlier sacrifice fly. Winner Dennis Martinez scattered 13 hits.

Indians 4, Royals 1

Julio Franco collected three hits, including a three-run double, to support the five-hit pitching of Len Barker and Neal Heaton. Barker allowed four hits in eight innings. Cleveland stranded seven runners in the first four innings before Franco laced a two-out, bases-loaded double in the fifth against Vida Blue. Franco also singled twice, stole three bases and walked in the eighth and scored the Indians' fourth run on Alan Bannister's single.

Brewers 4, Twins 1

Jim Gantner slammed a two-run triple to cap a tie-breaking three-run seventh inning. Loser Brad Havens allowed only two hits through 6⅔ innings but gave up a two-out single in the seventh to Ben Oglivie. Don Money, whose batting average had dipped to .152, doubled to score Oglivie and, after an intentional walk to Charlie Moore, Gantner rapped his two-run triple. Milwaukee starter Moose Haas allowed four hits in seven innings.

Tigers 4, A's 3

Alan Trammell and Lou Whitaker hit RBI doubles in the second inning to back the combined six-hit pitching of Dave Rucker and Aurelio Lopez. Rucker, making his first appearance since being recalled from the minors last week, allowed five hits in six innings. Enos Cabell singled in the Detroit second and scored on Trammell's double. Whitaker doubled Trammell home to give the Tigers a 4-0 lead and chase A's starter Rick Langford, who was making his second start since coming off the disabled list.

McMurtry loses no-hitter in seventh

By The Associated Press

Atlanta's Craig McMurtry went 6⅔ innings without being tagged for a hit. Montreal's Scott Sanderson wasn't so lucky.

McMurtry, a rookie right-hander, had Atlanta fans thinking no-hitter before yielding Gary Carter's two-out double in the seventh inning as the Braves beat the Expos 4-2 in a fight-interrupted game Tuesday night.

"The hit was no big deal," said McMurtry, now 4-1. "I made a bad pitch to Carter. I made a mistake pitch and he hit it."

Carter's double off the center-field wall barely eluded Brett Butler's grasp. McMurtry, who pitched out of first-inning trouble caused by a walk and an error and then retired 20 straight batters before Carter's hit, left the game in the eighth after surrendering two runs on three more hits.

Atlanta's ballpark, known as a paradise for slugfests, was the scene of a real brawl in the sixth inning when Claudell Washington charged to the mound after a brushback pitch from Sanderson. Television replays appeared to indicate Washington inaded a punch before being pulled away as both benches emptied.

Washington, who had homered in the first inning, was ejected while Sanderson stayed in the game.

"I got him, I just didn't get him enough," Washington said. "The ball was behind my head. I delayed slightly because I didn't want (catcher) Carter to cut me off before I could get to him."

"I wanted to get to him," Washington said.

Last week, in a game in Montreal, Washington spiked Sanderson during a play at first base. Sanderson received six stitches and missed his next start.

"Maybe Claudell thought that had something to do with this," Sanderson siad, "but I realized that was an accident."

"I'm never surprised when someone charges the mound," the pitcher said. "It's over, and no damage is done. It was just baseball."

National League Roundup

Phillies 3, Reds 1

Tony Perez and Steve Carlton of the Philadelphia Phillies were the ones that got standing ovations in Cincinnati's Riverfront Stadium.

Perez, who helped lead the Reds to consecutive World Series triumphs in the 1970s, tripled in two first-inning runs after getting a warm greeting from the Cincinnati fans.

Carlton, meanwhile, became only the third pitcher in history to reach the 3,500-strikeout plateau. He fanned seven, running his major league-leading total to 70 this season and his lifetime count to 3,504. Only Houston's Nolan Ryan (3,521) and Walter Johnson (3,508) have fanned more.

Astros 5, Mets 4

Denny Walling's bases-loaded single with one out in the bottom of the 11th inning was the difference. Mets reliever Neil Allen, struggling with problems on the field and off, took the loss and fell to 0-4.

Phil Garner tripled in two runs during Houston's four-run eighth as the Astros overcame a 4-0 New York lead for the second straight night.

Padres 4, Pirates 1

Andy Hawkins threw a three-hitter to cool off the hot-hitting Pirates, who had banged out 18 hits in a 14-inning victory over San Diego the night before.

Cubs 3, Dodgers 2

Reliever Mike Proly, summoned when starter Paul Moskau ran into first-inning trouble, pitched 5⅔ strong innings and Lee Smith finished up with three perfect innings as Chicago broke the Dodgers' six-game winning streak.

Los Angeles scored twice in the first on run-scoring singles by Dusty Baker and Greg Brock before Proly came in. He allowed two hits in his stint and then Smith came on for his fourth save.

Cardinals 8, Giants 4

Darrell Porter drilled a three-run homer in the first inning and added a two-run blast in the sixth as St. Louis ended the Giants' six-game victory string.

Tommy Herr, playing his 337th game in the majors, smacked a two-run shot for his first career homer as the Cardinals snapped their four-game losing streak. Reliever John Stuper escaped from bases-loaded jams in the fifth and seventh innings to get the win.

Johnnie LeMaster and Jeff Leonard homered for San Francisco.

Islanders win, 2-0

EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — Injuries have been a constant companion of the New York Islanders during this year's Stanley Cup playoffs. Yet it is a mark of the tenacity, skill and depth of the three-time National Hockey League titlists that no matter who is sidelined, they perform like champions.

Tuesday night, in the first game of the Cup finals, the Islanders shrugged off Mike Bossy's absence due to severe tonsillitis and blanked the Edmonton Oilers 2-0. In a similar situation during the quarterfinals, New York was without star center Bryan Trottier and didn't miss a beat in shutting out the Rangers 5-0.

"We all sort of said, 'Let's give him a little something because he has given us so much,'" Isles defenseman Denis Potvin said of how the team treated the loss of Bossy, their leading goal-scorer and the hero of six-game elimination of Boston in the previous round. "It turned out perfect for us."

Potvin, fellow defensemen Tomas Jonsson, Stefan Persson, Ken Morrow and Dave Langevin — who played for the first time since hurting his knee against the Rangers — were perfect, as was goalie Billy Smith. The defensemen blocked shots, deflected passes and generally frustrated the highest scoring team in NHL history.

"I think it was a good performance by me, but a great performance by my defensemen," said Smith, who stopped 35 shots in registering his fourth career Stanley Cup shutout. "We know we have to play tight against Edmonton or they will blow us out of the rink."

Chaparral women roll toward national title

The MC sister duo of Jill and Jody Wertenberger skipped through the No. 2 doubles first round with a perfect 6-0, 6-0 win over Fisher and Lyons of Catonsville, Md. The Wertenbergers are seeded No. 3.

MC coach Leon Dulin made a switch in the No. 1 doubles by putting Devine with Alvarado. The sixth seeded pair drew a first round bye and did not play Tuesday.

"We got very good seedings and we have a chance to do very well," Dulin said after Tuesday's play. "Those players who came down here to get a suntan are going home. Just the good ones are left."

Good weather greeted first day action. Defending champion Indian River didn't qualify for this tournament since they failed to get out of their Region tournament. So, a new champion will be named this year and Midland College could be the one.

The Chaparrals finished fifth last year, but won NJCAA titles in 1975, 1976 and 1981. They won runnerup honors in 1977 and 1978.

Alvarado is the Region V singles champion. Jodi Wertenberger won the No. 3 Region V crown while Devine is the No. 4 Region champion.

MC won the overall team championship in Region V play at Midland College two weeks ago. Cooke County, one of the teams with a good shot at the national title, was the runnerup in Region V play.

Akers given new 1-year extension

The University of Texas administration has approved a one-year extension on Longhorn football coach Fred Akers' contract, increasing it to five years, says athletic director DeLoss Dodds. Dodds reported Monday to the men's athletic council, which has recommended a combined merit-cost-of-living pay raise of 8 percent, which would increase Akers' salary to $82,372 a year. "He's doing a great job, has represented the university well and handles his operations in a way that brings dignity and pride to the university," Dodds said. "When people are under as much pressure as the football coach at the University of Texas, we should stay current with what's going on around the country."

Baseball

Coach Guy Sharp of the Paw Paw High School Pirates in West Virginia feels like a winner. It took five miserable years, he says, but his baseball players finally won a game. "It may not mean much to win one game, but in our situation, well, for the juniors and seniors this may have been the biggest game of their lives," said Sharp, whose first game as Pirates' coach in 1978 also was the first of the team's 72-game losing streak.

Roger Kahn, who wrote "The Boys of Summer" about the old Brooklyn Dodgers, announced Tuesday that he is giving up his ownership in the Columbia Mets' farm team less than two months after he became president. Kahn, who suffered a fainting spell recently that he attributed to high blood pressure, did not say why he was dropping out of the ownership group in his three-paragraph announcement. General Manager Bill Blackwell said he also did not know why Kahn was departing and didn't know how the action would affect Kahn's plans for a book on the Class A South Atlantic League team.

Basketball

Coach Paul Westhead was fired Tuesday after leading the Chicago Bulls to their second-worst NBA finish in his first season with the club. General Manager Rod Thorn said. "We felt it was time for a change. Things just didn't work themselves out," said Thorn. "I'm not saying that Paul Westhead was the reason we lost 54 games. The reason for that is the management, the coach and the players." Thorn declined comment on a possible successor, but said the search would be part of a larger effort to revamp the club.

Texaco moving to HBF's Heritage

By JIM PRESNELL
Business-Energy Writer

The Midland Division and Midland District offices of Texaco Inc. are showing their commitment to long-term Midland activity by leasing 118,000 square feet of office space for ten years.

The lease space, in HBF Corp.'s new downtown Heritage Center, will cost Texaco $21.9 million over its ten year lease. A renewal-option arrangement provides for four five-year renewals.

Cushman & Wakefield, a national real estate service firm, completed the transaction for client Texaco at their Manhattan office last week. "Current properties were not adequate for Texaco's needs, even though now is not an opportune time to have a large expense," said C&W's Bill Leahy in a telephone interview.

"With the economy in the doldrums, most oil companies are reluctant to make commitments," he said. "Through many difficult weeks of negotiations, Larry Bell and Kelly Cooke (of HBF) did a superb job.

"They restructured the deal so that it was satisfactory. They persevered, and in the end we had excellent cooperation between HBF and Texaco."

Why did Texaco go to Cushman & Wakefield instead of directly dealing with HBF? Some sources felt it was a byproduct of Texaco's aborted land buy on FM 868 at Midland Drive. They intended to build on it — but today, that land has been sold.

Broker Bill Leahy said "No other product a corporation buys costs as much as real estate. Texaco has retained us for other leasing projects (for two other headquarters) and felt the need for brokerage services on a lease that amounts to more than $20 million in investment."

HBF's Kelly Cooke said "Texaco needed someone who knows the ins and outs — trends in the leasing business. They chose a pro broker because they are in business to find oil, not negotiate leases."

As a major step in leasing Heritage — only 40,000 square feet remain — Cooke said "We are extremely excited," to have Texaco as a tenant. "We think Texaco is too."

The approval process was harrowing for Cooke, who had been working this deal with Texaco's agent since June of last year. "It had to go straight to the top," and be approved by Texaco's chairman and its executive committee, he said.

The leasing was no different than working with any major broker, Cooke said, and the parties involved were "a joy" to work with, throughout the rough times. Speculation that HBF could not find a major tenant for Heritage had been going on since last fall, when negotiations with the "mystery tenant" were going on.

Current Texaco offices are in the Midland Savings and Mid-America Petroleum buildings.

All Texaco's Midland offices will move to Heritage Center — the company will take half of the ground floor, floors two through six, and half of the seventh floor. They will use 60 percent of the building's total 200,000 square feet of space.

Also provided are 350 parking spaces for Texaco employees.

Texaco's Midland Division includes the Midland District and Hobbs District, and Texaco employs roughly 1,100 people in this division. Headquartered in Midland are 360 of them.

The Midland Division covers 149 counties in Texas — three-fourths of the state. It also has all 25 New Mexico counties.

"The Midland Division, relatively, is larger — operates more wells and has more production — than Texaco's other domestic divisions. We produce more oil and condensates (liquids) than any of the other divisions in the U.S., although they produce more gas," said R.D. Tomberlin, operations manager here.

Texaco has had a Midland Division in the Savings Building since 1959, Tomberlin said. Its Ft. Worth division was closed in that year. Texaco bought a Dallas oil company, Seaboard, and created a divisional office in that city — and the Midland and Dallas offices took over the work once accomplished in Ft. Worth.

HBF's recently completed Heritage Center will house about 360 people from Texaco Inc.'s Midland Division. The Texaco move is a major lease with an aggregate value over $20 million.

Superior goes international

HOUSTON (SWN) — Superior Oil, through a wholly owned subsidiary, has expanded its international exploration effort by signing an agreement with Gulf Italia Production Company SpA to conduct exploration drilling off the southeastern coast of Sicily.

According to the agreement, which has been submitted to the Italian Government for approval, Superior Oil Di Italia, Inc., will be the operator and earn 57 percent interest in Permit CR-15-FG. The permit, which covers 39,520 acres, is located about six miles north of Montedison's recent Vega oil discovery offshore Sicily.

Seismic data has been examined and drilling should begin in July, depending on Italian Government approval, which is expected to be forthcoming.

Geologist says imagination is key

By JIM PRESNELL
Business-Energy Writer

Demanding better data, and making better interpretations of it, will find more oil. That is the core of Jack Parker's philosophy: Geological Imagination.

Parker, who is president of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists, spoke to the West Texas Geological Society at lunch Tuesday.

AAPG is growing in membership, with younger geologists and students leading the growth. About 40 percent of its members, today, are under 30. Although membership growth has slowed, AAPG made $166,000 on a recent month's publications sales. Sales of publications, educational activities, and other sources of money have far outstripped dues in making money for the AAPG's geologic studies.

The existing slowdown in oil exploration calls for more selective, scientific spending of scarce dollars, Parker told the meeting. "Cross sections should be looked at from the basement up: Each deposition should be noted, as should each fold, fault, erosion," etc.

In relation to geological problem-solving, "Better seismic data helps find better-producing wells," Parker told the geology experts. "The better data has to be asked for and obtained by someone with imagination — someone with experience in mapping form seismic data.

"You must imagine what may be present, then imagine how you will get the data," Parker said.

He bemoaned the spurious content of many subsurface maps and seismic data banks that give curved arcs — "smiles" — where no data is actually available. Parker showed slides of several fields where conventional geologic reasoning had been proved wrong.

In these fields, drilling had to be shifted to new directions because of updated data and well testing. One Colorado field went from three to 59 gas wells during a five-year period of development that completely restructured the field's position from veritcal to horizontal.

"Interpreting and reinterpreting stratigraphy," will eventually find oil, Parker said.

"How do you think a major oil company designs, plans, and executes an exploration plan?" Parker asked, as he showed slides of sheep following their herd. Dry holes are drilled, 95 percent of the time, solely on seismic data, he said.

Parker said he tries to promote scientific excellence as president of AAPG, and he said in-the-field study for students and practicing geologists is the best teaching tool available. He stressed the need, again, for maps based on real data and not made with built-in holes in the data.

Senators look at lifting gas ceiling

WASHINGTON (AP) — Now that it has found a way to let utilities and industry shop around for cheaper natural gas, the Senate Energy Committee is again turning its attention to lifting the fuel's federal price ceiling.

Sens. Wendell Ford, D-Ky., and Henry Jackson, D-Wash., planned to introduce an amendment today that would kill the key feature of President Reagan's bill — the decontrol of "old" gas discovered before April 1977.

Following three weeks of debate, the committee on Tuesday approved a 16-page amendment by Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., to permit local utilities to bypass their pipeline companies and purchase gas directly from producers. Only Sen. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark., dissented on the 17-1 vote.

Under Bradley's amendment, purchasers could require pipelines to become transporters, instead of wholesalers who buy the gas from producers and then resell it to local distributors. The pipelines would be allowed to make as much as a nickel profit on each 1,000 cubic feet of gas transported.

Factories served by local distributors or pipelines could also use so-called "contract carriage" but would first have to go through elaborate legal proceedings before state utility commissions or the Federal Energy Regulatory Administration.

That provision was added to Bradley's measure after local distributors complained that factories might leave them, sticking residential consumers with the tab for facilities that were purchased to serve industrial customers.

The administration contends that lifting all wellhead controls on natural gas will create a free market and remove distortions under the existing partial controls that have sent retail rates spiraling upwards despite a glut in supplies and falling oil prices.

Opponents of decontrol, led by Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, have said the administration's proposal will give the nation's largest oil companies, which own most of the old gas, a windfall profit while raising consumer bills by billions of dollars.

That old gas, now about half the nation's supply, is selling at an average price of $1.25 per 1,000 cubic feet under federal price ceilings. New gas discovered since 1977 is now selling at prices ranging from $2.75 to $9.

Metzenbaum failed on a 10-8 "straw vote" three weeks ago to strike the decontrol of old gas from the legislation package that the committee is considering.

But Sen. James McClure, R-Idaho, the committee's chairman and chief Senate sponsor of the White House bill, said the closeness of that vote mandates some sort of compromise on decontrolling old gas.

Administration officials, meanwhile, expressed confidence Tuesday that the amendment by Ford and Jackson will suffer the same fate as Metzenbaum's attempt to scuttle the decontrol of old gas.

"I don't think the Ford amendment will succeed," said Assistant Energy Secretary Robert Odle. "I think we have the votes to defeat it."

Brooklyn Bridge's centennial to be celebrated in style

NEW YORK (AP) — On May 24, 1883, when the Brooklyn Bridge first linked Brooklyn and Manhattan, the president came to New York, magnificent watercraft paraded around the harbor and spectacular fireworks lit up the sky.

This May 24, if all goes according to plan, it will all happen again.

Of course, this time the president will be Ronald Reagan, not Chester A. Arthur. The watercraft will use electric navigational aids 19th-century sailors never imagined. And the fireworks will be reflected by windows a thousand feet off the ground.

"We pretty much attempted to replicate what happened 100 years ago," said Richard Perry, a vice president of Citibank and chairman of the Brooklyn Bridge Centennial Commission Inc., organizer of the celebration.

But after two years of work, the commission — 38 politicians and leaders of business and culture — has come up with much more: a five-month celebration, plus a new museum that is expected to draw tourists for years.

"THE BROOKLYN Bridge is a symbol — not only a symbol of New York, it's a symbol of the nation," Perry said. It is "something that has been part of New York City for 100 years, and it has never been shown off."

On May 24 — "Rededication Day" — the bridge will be closed to traffic.

The festivities will kick off with a parade of dignitaries, antique vehicles and marching bands, starting at Brooklyn Borough Hall, crossing the bridge and winding down Broadway to Battery Park.

The U.S Postal Service will release its new Brooklyn Bridge stamp with first day of issue ceremonies at Borough Hall. "We would like to sell you the Brooklyn Bridge STAMP," says one Postal Service handbill.

A permanent museum will open in the anchorage of the bridge's Brooklyn side, including an exhibit in which artists depict the cathedral-like spaces of the anchorage, which has never been open to the public.

"If you think the bridge is beautiful standing there, you ought to see what's under it," Perry said.

THE EVENING WILL start with a waterborne tribute — a flotilla of military vessels, fishing boats, fireboats, tugs, freighters and private craft that will gather at Liberty Island, round the southern end of Governor's Island and sail through Buttermilk Channel and under the Brooklyn Bridge.

Reagan is expected to attend formal re-dedication ceremonies at 8 p.m., which will feature the premiere of "Keys to the City," a work for piano and symphony dedicated to the bridge's anniversary by Tobias Picker. The composer will perform the piece with the Brooklyn Philharmonic.

Picker said he was inspired by "the bridge itself, the undeniable elegance and importance of the bridge. I spent quite a bit of time looking at the bridge and walking across it, and it is magnificent."

A sound-and-light show, "The Eighth Wonder," will follow. Audiences on both river banks will watch as lights play on the span and taped voices re-enact the story of how the Roebling family built the bridge.

Perry said 225 members of that family would be in New York for a reunion. One of them — Paul Roebling — co-stars with Glenda Jackson and Farley Granger in the audio drama, which will be shown twice each night through the summer.

WEATHER PERMITTING, the sound-and-light show will end with an extraordinary bang — a 20-minute, 6,150-shell fireworks exhibition choreographed to popular music of the 1880s.

The fireworks will come from the bridge itself and from two barges to the south of the bridge and another to the north. A state law bans fireworks within 200 feet of a highway, and the state Legislature had to approve a special exemption for this spectacle.

Bonnie Brook, a spokeswoman for the Grucci fireworks family, said the show would start with a blue aerial starburst, the same way the show began in 1883. But it will end with a 3,600-shell finale, in which a cascade of white fireworks will pour from the bridge to the water, from tower to tower.

The bridge's anniversary has spawned plenty of souvenirs, including an Andy Warhol commemorative poster as well as the more conventional tote bags, caps, pins, shirts, plaques, coasters, beach towels, cups, spoons and key chains.

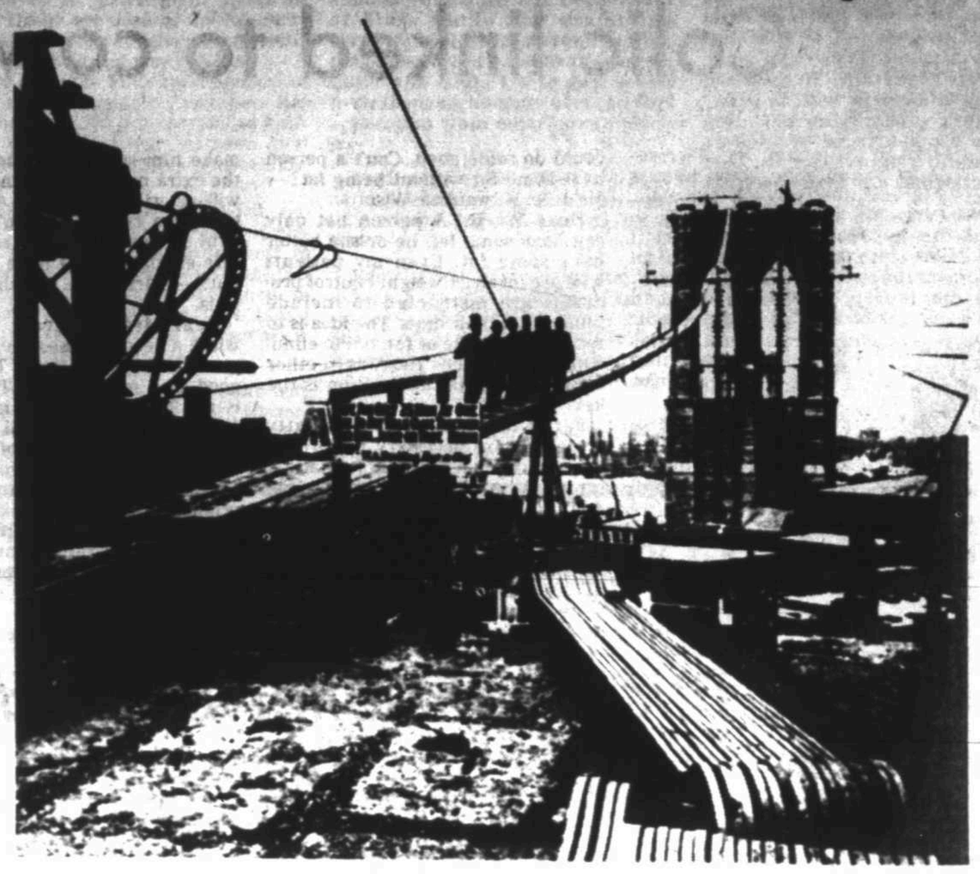

Two of the keepsakes give the public an opportunity to buy the Brooklyn Bridge, or at least part of it. A paperweight is made of wood from the bridge's pedestrian walkway, coupled with a commemorative medallion.

And the Green Duck Corp. of Hernando, Miss., has minted medals in bronze, silver and gold at prices ranging from $5 to $600. For $10, bridge enthusiasts can buy a medal in which a sliver of Brooklyn Bridge cable has been inserted.

The medal was the idea of Martin Stewart, vice president of the mint, but he admits it wasn't easy. He bought 30 feet of bridge cable that had snapped then found the cable was harder than the mint's dies.

So the cable was rolled flat and cut, inserted in an indentation in the face of the medal and sealed with clear epoxy. Stewart thinks he can sell 250,000, and he says he's loving every minute of it.

"I go up to people and I say, 'How would you like to buy the Brooklyn Bridge?'" he says. "There's always a grin on my face."

A group of frock-coated men pose on a walkway of the Brooklyn Bridge, prior to the bridge's completion. On May 24, 1883, when the Brooklyn Bridge first linked Brooklyn and Manhattan, the president came to New York, magnificent watercraft paraded up the harbor, and spectacular fireworks lit up the sky. And this May 24, if all goes according to plan, it will happen again.

Bulwer-Lytton Fiction Contest brings out best of bad

NEW YORK (AP) — Relentlessly, they perused sentences — awful sentences, disgraceful sentences, sentences that deserved prison sentences — until the faculty of San Jose State University could take no more, and crowned Gail Cain the best bad writer in the world.

"I never thought I would win. I was all prepared to look depressed when they said I was runner-up," said Ms. Cain, 38, a technical writer from San Francisco and winner of the Bulwer-Lytton Fiction Contest.

Ms. Cain is no garden variety bad writer; she is the best bad writer of 6,000 entrants in the contest, which challenged writers to imagine the worst novel conceivable — and then devise its first sentence.

Ms. Cain said she wrote several drafts before she settled on her entry:

"The camel died quite suddenly on the second day, and Selina fretted sulkily and, buffing her already impeccable nails — not for the first time since the journey began — pondered snidely if this would dissolve into a vignette of minor inconveniences like all the other holidays spent with Basil."

"That's really awful," agreed Diane Sawyer, host of "CBS Morning News," where the winner was announced.

If there are 8 million stories in the naked city, the contest runner-up — Barbara Kroll, 57 — certainly has written the opening to one of the worst.

Mrs. Kroll, of Kennett Square, Pa., known as the mushroom capital of the world — "It was famous for that, before this," she said — wrote her sentence in "three minutes. No, it was five minutes. I had to type it over because I misspelled 'sodden'."

Her entry:

"The sun oozed over the horizon, shoved aside darkness, crept along the greensward, and, with sickly fingers, pushed through the castle window, revealing the pillaged princess, hand at throat, crown asunder, gaping in frenzied horror at the sated, sodden amphibian beside her, disbelieving the magnitude of the toad's deception, screaming madly, 'You lied!'"

Mrs. Kroll, an accounting teacher who insisted that she does "a lot of nutty things," said she may parlay her prize into a career writing romantic novels. "First, I have to finish this novel," she said.

The contest is the brainchild of Scott Rice, an English professor at San Jose State. Rice knew that Edward Bulwer-Lytton, a lightly regarded 19th century novelist, wrote the epic novel that began, "It was a dark and stormy night...," and he suggested a contest in Bulwer-Lytton's honor.

Rice said the result was 10,000 entries from 6,000 people from more than 50 countries. He stressed that few, if any, of the contestants were talentless.

"I was pleasantly surprised by the considerable knowledge of literature that was evident," he said.

No comment on Soviet missiles

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department is refusing to comment on reports that new missile base construction is under way in Soviet Asia.

Over the weekend, American newspapers reported that 10 SS-20 bases capable of accommodating 10 three-warhead missiles each were being constructed in the Lake Baikal region.

Honk farewell to federal motor pool

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Say goodbye to the motor pool.

Beginning Oct. 1, the General Services Administration plans to eliminate its fleet of 4,000 vehicles that federal officials can call on when they need a car.

Instead workers will have to turn to one of the commercial car-rental companies that have signed contracts with GSA.

The so-called "dispatch" vehicles, primarily sedans and station wagons, are now available for short-term use from 140 motor pools around the country. Under the new procedure, employees will have make their own arrangements to rent a vehicle from one of the contractors for rates averaging $11 a day.

William F. Marshall, director of GSA's interagency motor pool, said the change "is part of a new program designed to manage the government's automotive needs."

Marshall said the agency expects to save $2.9 million by eliminating the service. It now costs GSA about $24 million a year to keep the bulk of the 82,115 cars in its control repaired and in service. About 57,000 are now assigned to government agencies on a permanent basis and will continue to be.

Currently, the motor pool cars are checked out about 150,000 times a year. Since a car is not always available, GSA has been forced to spend about $8 million a year to rent 180,000 cars on a spot basis.

Department 'unfairly accused'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department's civil rights chief is defending his division's record, arguing that critics "unfairly accused us of doing nothing" to enforce anti-discrimination laws.

Assistant Attorney General William Bradford Reynolds called the criticism "patently absurd," saying the Reagan administration was prosecuting racists and fighting discrimination in voting, education, housing and employment.

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Colic linked to cow's milk

Dear Dr. Solomon: My older sister's baby had colic when he was young and now my son has colic. Does ths run in families or is colic so common? Also, what causes it? It seems to me that I hear an awful lot about it lately. — Dee, Dallas, Texas

Dear Dee: Colic is reported to occur in from 12 to 30 percent of infants under three months of age. The causes vary and include too much or too little food and food intolerance.

Colic in infants has been associated with cow's milk protein intolerance. This appears to be an important factor in infants who are fed formula, as well as in breast-fed infants whose mothers drink cow's milk.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Fat has become a dirty word but it seems to me that if there is so much of it around, nature must have felt it could do some good. Can't a person have some fat without being fat? — Ms. L.R., Milwaukee, Wisc.

Dear Ms. R.: A person not only can have some fat, he or she better have some fat. Even my patients who are on strict weight control programs are instructed to include some fat in their diets. The idea is to reduce the intake of fat, not to eliminate it completely. Here, as in other aspects of health, moderation is the key.

Fat is the source of some fatty acids that are necessary for proper growth and healthy skin. It is also a carrier for some vitamins, including A, D, E, and K. And fat, of course, provides energy in the form of calories.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Would there be any harm in giving a baby a little more protein than what the pediatrician recommends? I think it would make him stronger. If he can't use the extra protein, I assume the body will get rid of it, and I don't mind the extra cost. I wouldn't give the baby sweets but protein seems to be safe enough. May I have your opinion? — Mrs. H.R., Oklahoma City, Okla.

Dear Mrs. R.: Every once in a while a reader raises the issue that you do in your letter: If some is good, isn't more better? The answer is no. The assumption is not only false, it is not even logical.

An adequate amount of protein is essential for a child's growth. However, excessive protein can cause problems such as azotemia (the presence of certain products in the blood) because the infant's kidneys are still not fully developed. This in turn may cause the baby's growth to be retarded.

I wonder why you are concerned that your baby be stronger. Is there some problem? If this is a troublesome area for you, I suggest you discuss it with your pediatrician.

For Roslyn, Long Beach, Long Island, N.Y.: Animal studies have suggested the possibility of birth defects if a pregnant woman has a large intake of caffeine. However, these findings have not been confirmed in humans. Given the uncertainties, it might be advisable for pregnant women to practice moderation in the amount of caffeine they consume. It may not make any difference in the health of the fetus, but it certainly won't hurt.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column).

Democratic steamroller bogs down in House

By CLIFF HAAS

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Democrats were euphoric after making gains in last fall's congressional elections, confidently looking forward to muscling through their own agenda at the expense of the Republican minority.

Democrats had picked up a net total of 26 seats. House Republican Leader Robert H. Michel of Illinois barely won re-election and Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass. — having lost two years worth of legislative battles to President Reagan — was portrayed as a man who would not get mad just even.

The once-glum Republicans, though, are finding themselves holding their own — no longer winning battles as they did for the past two years, but still having success in pushing Democrats into altering their plans.

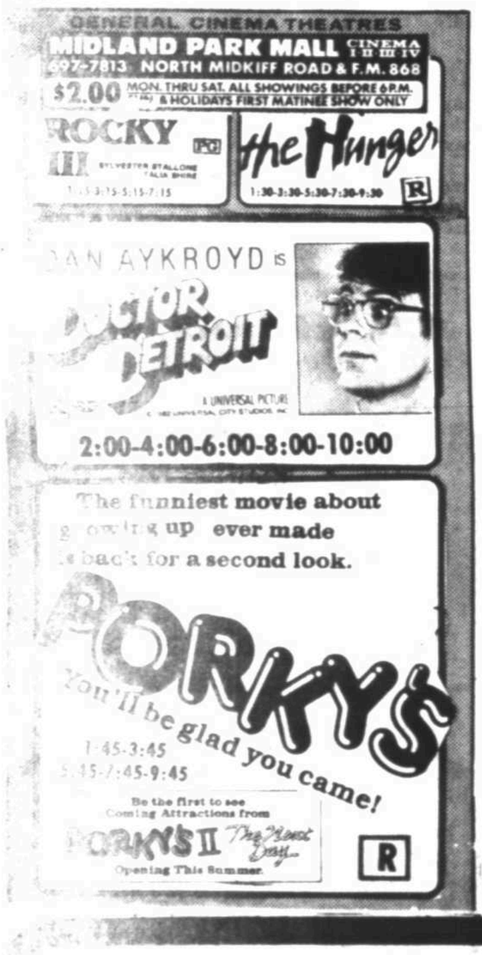

House GOP Whip Trent Lott, R-Miss., says outnumbered Republicans have been able to "nudge toward a compromise" with Democrats on most issues.

However, Democrats, like Majority Leader Jim Wright of Texas, say they are becoming the victims of "guerrilla warfare" on the House floor.

Lott said that by the beginning of the 98th Congress, Democrats had "become a little arrogant, which tends to backfire."

The only strong signs of Democratic dominance in the House this year have come on several procedural battles at the beginning of the session and in the quick action on a budget resolution that passed on a virtual party-line vote in March.

A $165 billion landmark package to rescue the faltering Social Security system had bipartisan support before the House even began work on it and party differences were not a factor.

Medical review reveals lethal nature of paraquat

A new review of medical literature and interview with physicians and scientists around the world reveal an unforeseen fatality rate associated with the herbicide paraquat.

The June issue of Science Digest magazine reports that this potent weed-killer also kills people, even if only small amounts are inhaled, swallowed or spilled on the skin. Nonetheless, Britain's Imperial Chemical Industries (ICI), manufacturer of the chemical, confidently told the magazine that soon paraquat will be used "on every hectare of agricultrural land in the world."

"Paraquat is probably the most effective herbicide that exists right now on Earth," says Dr. Edward Block, a University of Florida lung specialist. "But it is also one of the world's worst poisons."

Much of what the U.S. government thought it knew about paraquat has recently been cast in doubt. Last year, the EPA published a review of research on its health effects and in nearly every category, the data was deemed "inadequate."

Indeed, Industrial Bio-Test Laboratories (IBT) of Northbrook, Illinois, is now in federal court on charges it misrepresented data used by manufacturers to obtain government approval for various herbicides. IBT performed several long-term studies of paraquat for ICI in the 1960s.

Consider the case of Scott Wilson, a 25-year-old gardener at a Florida condominium, who last August accidentaly sprayed paraquat on his face and clothing. Experienced with herbicides, Wilson washed and resumed work, even though his shirt remained wet with the chemical. He apparently got some in his mouth during the spill.

Five days later Wilson could hardly breathe. At the hospital he underwent extensive testing. "A nurse brought me a Valium and a glass of water, and they told me he was going to die," Wilson's wife Lucille told Science Digest.

Bolivians reject coca substitutes

COCHABAMBA, Bolivia (AP) — With shouts of "viva la coca," Bolivian peasants rejected a $45-million U.S. offer to help them substitute other crops for the coca leaves that account for about half the cocaine used in the United States.

Instead, unions representing about 23,000 coca growers announced plans earlier this week to withhold their product from the illicit drug market and channel it within two months into a union-financed cooperative to produce and market coca-based crackers, liquor and pharmaceutical products.

"It was the unanimous judgment of all delegates that the coca leaf should be put to good use, against narcotics trafficking," said a written statement issued by Eudoro Barrientos after the first congress of coca producers elected him president of the new cooperative.

The 700 union leaders from the Chapare and Yungas lowlands of eastern Bolivia, who met here for three days, vowed to maintain current levels of coca production — a resolution that will make it hard for Bolivia's civilian government, which courts peasant support, to carry out the U.S. aid proposal.

Bolivian officials accepted the plan last month during a visit by U.S. Attorney General William French Smith. It called for developing the Champare region, where most of the coca grows, on the condition that production there be cut to traditional levels.

Until what Bolivians call "narcotrafico" started booming in 1980, the coca leaf was a cheap food chewed by peasants and miners in the highlands to numb the effects of cold, hunger and depression. Growers now get the equivalent of nearly $100 for each 50-pound sack of leaves — more than 10 times what they earned a few years ago.

FBI believes high technology conferences may used for espionage

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES – What will the National Computer Conference, which opens next week in Anaheim, have in common with a John Le Carre novel? Answer: plenty of international espionage, according to the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Though no arrests of foreign agents have ever been made at high tech trade shows like the NCC, the FBI believes spies have been using such American conferences to make critical contacts with specialists for later transfers.

"If you find someone making contacts at these shows, that's not grounds for arrest," said John Hoos, a spokesman in the FBI's Los Angeles office. "We're after the big fish down the line actually handing over or receiving information. And we know that hostile governments utilize these conferences to develop sources for future high technology espionage. Hoos confirmed that the FBI would have agents at the NCC show due to take place at the Anaheim and Disneyland Hotel convention centers May 16-19.

Some 100,000 people are expected to attend the show, which will include 80 in-depth technical seminars and more than 635 exhibits of the latest products and processes of the entire high tech field, from personal micros to computer technology with potential military applications.

"We're not going to be sitting on top of this conference with video cameras," said Lane Bonner, an official in the FBI's Washington headquarters. "But we know that foreign agents regularly attend these shows. They have been observed there – that's a fact."

Bonner noted that Marian Zacharski, the Polish spy, was sentenced to life imprisonment in 1981 for conspiring to steal Hughes Aircraft Co. documents detailing secret anti-tank missile and radar and defense technology. Zacharski, he said, was known to attend trade shows make contacts for future espionage.

Intelligence sources indicate about 3,000 Soviet bloc representatives are currently stationed in the U.S. About 30 percent are believed to have some intelligence-gathering responsibilites. Investigations have sho, sai Bne elra ows re "high on the shopping list of the Soviets." He said contacts sought at such shows are usually employees of U.S. companies involved in government classified work who are used in the future to obtain top secret information badly needed by Soviet bloc nations.

To date, the FBI's Development of Counterintelligence Awareness has identified 1,200 U.S. companies holding defense related contracts that could become possible espionage targets.

"DECA talks to the identified contractors to make them aware of hostile intelligence agents' interest in high technology and the manufacturing process and to assist them in recognizing when they are being contacted and how to protect their technology," said Bonner.

In a separate development last week, William Schneider Jr., Undersecretary of State for Security Assistance, Science and Technology, announced that the U.S. Department of State would be "examining closely" applications from foreign nationals with a view to preventing those who might try to gain access to strategic technology with military application from entering the country.

John Gilbert, director of communications for the American Federation of Information Processing Societies, Inc., one of NCC's five sponsors, is neither shocked nor worried about foreign spooks infiltrating the conference.

"I would think anyone representing a company exhibiting at the show that has a sensitive govern ment contract would be sensitiv and alert to the problem of espi nage, and would, as at any othe meeting of this kind, keep we aware of their responsibilities." Gi bert believes company represent tives would be tight-lipped whethe they are unknowingly dealing wit a foreign agent or a competing firm

"If I were an FBI agent and kne someone was coming into the cou try representing a hostile foreig government to see our show, I woul certainly have their movemen monitored," he said.

"As far as the FBI is concerne I'm sure the fewer things said, th better chance they'll have of catc ing foreign agents," said Gilber "I'm surprised they've said as muc as they have."

Housing becomes intergrated

DALLAS (AP) — Thirteen years ago, Dallas and Houston had the most racially segregated housing of the 28 U.S. cities with a black population of 100,000, surveys taken then indicated.

Ten years later, the two Texas cities moved past nine other cities, leaving Chicago as the most segregated of the nation's largest cities, a recent study indicates.

The report, conducted by University of Wisconsin demographer Karl Taeuber and published by a national civil rights group, found that only Gary, Ind., made more progress from 1970 to 1980 in reducing racially segregated housing.

The report was published by the Citizens Committee for Civil Rights, a Washington group dedicated to civil rights issues.

The study, according to a story Monday by the Dallas Times Herald, said Oakland is the least segregated of the nation's big cities.

Among the cities passed by Dallas and Houston in the decade were Chicago, Philadelphia, St. Louis and Cleveland, the report said.

Taeuber's study used 1970 and 1980 census data to determine how many of a city's blocks were racially mixed, and in what proportion.

A rating of 0 indicated complete integration, with 100 indicating complete segregation. In 1970, Dallas had an index of 96, leading the list. Houston was next at 93, tied with Chicago.

By 1980, Dallas' index had dropped to 83 and Houston's to 81. The index for Gary dropped from 84 to 68. In all, the average index for the 28 cities declined from 87 to 81.

However, there was no unanimity on what the figures meant.

"This is new data, and it's going to have to be carefully studied before we can explain it," said Glenda Sloan, a staff aide to the Citizens Committee for Civil Rights.

Bob Crain, a sociologist at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, said Taeuber's figures might be skewed because Hispanics are counted as whites in U.S. census data.

Thus, a block that appears integrated with whites and blacks may actually be integrated with blacks and Hispanics, Crain said. That could especially be true in Dallas, where the Hispanic population increased by 65 percent between 1970 and 1980, Crain added.

Dallas leaders in fair-housing activities said, however, that the decline in segregation is no illusion. They credited pressure from civil rights groups for the change.

Roosevelt Johnson, executive director of the Dallas Urban League, said economic pressures also played a part in the decision in the 1970s by the city's community leaders to enforce open housing policies.

"New industries wanted to make sure there was open housing here before they came," Johnson said. "Their black workers were reluctant to come here because they thought it was segregated. City leaders realized there had to be open housing."

Club favors return to innocence

And members are depending on Andy Taylor

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — One woman missed the innocence of days gone by, so she named her dog Opie Taylor, her parrot Barney Fife and her farm after the sleepy and fictional town of Mayberry, on the Andy Griffith show.

Debbie Vanover, of Ridgeville, Ohio, and her husband also paid $1 to join the swelling ranks of the Andy Griffith Show Rerun Watcher's Club. Mrs. Vanover said she misses the "wholesome and innocent way of life in Mayberry and hope we can capture it in our lifetime."

A group of preachers in Concord, N.C., founded the "Kerosene Cucumber" branch, and the club's Otis Campbell Chapter in Jackson, Miss., claims about 300 members.

In fact, the club has 15 chapters nationwide — with about 1,000 members. And if founder Jim Clark has his way, the show will remain on the rerun circuit for his kids to watch, and their kids and their kids and....

"The acting is superb, the casting, the scripts. They were witty. They were more than just jokes — one-liners. There was almost always a moral," said Clark, 23, a Nashville waiter who graduated from Vanderbilt University last year.

Clark's childhood addiction to the show turned into a college fraternity tradition. He founded the watcher's club in 1979, amid friendly viewer battles at the Phi Kappa Sigma house between Griffith fans and resident M*A*S*H maniacs.

"It started out tongue in cheek but it really caught on. I was surprised at how many people were fanatics about it like I am," said the lanky, clean-cut Clark, who looks a bit like one of Opie's school chums grown up.

The Griffith show, set in Clark's native North Carolina, was in the top 10 on CBS for its entire run from 1960 to 1968. After 249 episodes, the show was so popular that "Mayberry RFD" was created after the departure of Griffith, the sheriff without a gun, and Don Knotts, who played his lily-livered deputy, Barney.

The simple purpose of the club is "to just watch the show," Clark said. "When a station takes it off the air, we write them."

The flagship Andy Chapter in Nashville mails out a newsletter three times a year called "The Bullet," for the single shot Barney was allowed to keep in his breast pocket.

Clark touts some notable club members: Atlanta Braves and superstation WTBS owner Ted Turner, country music's Oak Ridge Boys, North Carolina Gov. James Hunt, Griffith, Knotts, and Jack Dodson, who portrayed the over-mothered county clerk, Howard Sprague.

To understand the show's attraction, Clark said, a look back at the 1960s is important. The Vietnam War raged and cities were battlegrounds for the feud between police and the nation's youth.

Meanwhile, life in Mayberry moved slowly on. Andy and Helen Crump went on countless picnics at Meyer's Lake, Aunt Bea churned out homemade pickles that tasted like kerosene, Barney never ceased in his struggle to implement modern police techniques and Opie learned lesson after valuable lesson about life.

"It's amazing that a show with no sex or violence is still a success today in reruns. It's just good ol' down-home entertainment," said Clark, whose family — grandmother included — comprise the Barney Chapter in his hometown of Greensboro, N.C.

The show is aired at least once a day in about 100 television markets, he says. Clarks said he received an average 20 letters a week last year for membership, most of which included the voluntary $1 fee.

Technology edges out sentiment

SOUTHFIELD, Mich. (AP) — High-tech trouble got in the way of sentiment when Mother's Day — or at least Mother's Day flowers — arrived a day late for hundreds of moms because of an overloaded computer system.

Computers in the system used by about 8,000 of the 20,000 members of the Florist Transworld Delivery Association were backed up, the Southfield-based company said Tuesday.

FTD spokesman Ron Odgers, in New York, said he did not know exactly how many orders were delayed, but reported a peak of 21,000 orders per hour for the Sunday holiday were placed about midday Thursday. The old hourly record was 17,000 orders.

Relatives of entertainers protest exploitive products

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — At the urging of Ginger Rogers and relatives of other entertainers, a legislative committee has voted to ban exploitation of deceased celebrities without the heirs' consent.

Priscilla Presley, former wife of the late Elvis Presley, told the Senate Judiciary Committee on Tuesday that money from products bearing a deceased celebrity's name or likeness "should go to his loved ones and not to some unrelated ripoff artist."

Attorney Everett Fields sat beside a poster depicting his late grandfather, comedian W.C. Fields, in the nude and said, "None of these salacious products would have been perpetrated on the public while he was alive."

With no one speaking against it, the bill went to the Senate floor on an 8-0 vote. It was given a "consent" classification, reserved for non-controversial bills that get floor votes without debate.

The bill would require consent from heirs for 100 years after a celebrity's death for any advertising that used the celebrity's name, picture, voice or signature. Damages would include all profits from the unauthorized use.

Under current California law, the right to forbid commercial use of one's name ends at death. That was decided by the state Supreme Court in a 1979 case rejecting a claim by heirs of actor Bela Lugosi to an interest in Universal Pictures' continued exploitation of Dracula, as portrayed by Lugosi.

Chris Costello, daughter of the late comedian Lou Costello, noted that if her father had written a book, his estate would have the copyright for 50 years — but would have no right under current law to control any commercial use of his name.

Several cases in other states gave Presley's heirs little or no rights in a booming industry of Elvis memorabilia — described by his ex-wife as "fly-by-night artists selling overpriced and tasteless junk."

Miss Rogers, speaking for the Screen Actors Guild, said the bill wouldn't generally give heirs any rights to fictional characters portrayed on screen.

But in her case, she said, "the characters I have played have been essentially myself," and the same is true of actors like Cary Grant and Fred Astaire. Thus, the heirs should have rights to those characters, she said.

Under current law, "once I'm gone, there's nothing to prevent my good name from being used for products I might have found unacceptable," she said.

Two women, topless dancers who say they were among about 20 who stripped to the waist during a performance of "Macbeth," leave Memphis' Dixon-Myers Hall.

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Protesting an ordinance banning topless dancing, about 20 men and women stripped to the waist and sat quietly during a nude scene in the Metropolitan Opera's production of "Macbeth."

No one was arrested and the Tuesday night demonstration caused little disturbance among other opera-goers.

Protester Paul Savarin said he organized the demonstration when he learned that one of the witches in Macbeth would dance nude but not be arrested.

The dancer performed for five minutes wearing only a G-string.

The City Council passed an anti-nudity ordinance in March making it illegal for a woman to bare her breasts in public. The ordinance is aimed at the city's topless nightclubs, but critics said it should apply to everyone, including opera performers, or be repealed.

Savarin said he thought the protest was a success.

"They passed the ordinance knowing they wouldn't do anything if pushed to the wall," he said. "We have defied a law that was known to be unconstitutional when passed."

Savarin's group, Memphians Against Social Harassment, has filed a federal court suit challenging the ordinance as unconstitutional.

Although few people in the darkened opera auditorium could be seen reacting to the protest, one participant said she drew comments from people in nearby seats.

"I had one gentleman say, 'Stand up. Stand up,'" said a young woman who identified herself as a topless dancer. She wore a black low-cut gown.

Most of the protesters were women but several men participated, and one young woman who took her shirt off was pregnant.

Beatty, Redford advocate self-regulation of press

DENVER (AP) — Actor Warren Beatty broke a long silence toward the press Tuesday and spoke to hundreds of newspaper editors about the right to privacy.

Beatty and fellow actor Robert Redford told the American Society of Newspaper Editors in separate sessions that the press has the responsibility to police itself.

Beatty said he has shunned the news media because they seem to have an appetite for personal troubles and habits, particularly sexual ones, "all to the exclusion of what might be the theme of one's work."

He said he was torn between the importance of the right to privacy and the First Amendment guarantee of freedom of speech.

But he said that as a filmmaker, "I've always come down on the side that what has to be protected is freedom of speech."

Beatty advocated more self-criticism — "more disagreement between newspapers, reporters and television" — and more openness about mistakes, adding, "I don't feel that you should be so kind to each other."

Later Tuesday, Redford also said the press has the responsibility to carefully weigh the right to privacy and the right to free speech.

MMH officials: Suit not obstacle

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Although a lawsuit filed by Parkview Hospital is just around the corner, Midland Memorial Hospital officials say it's not an obstacle for their $15.1 million expansion.

Despite Parkview's proposed appeal to Travis County Court, Midland County Hospital District's board of directors approved Tuesday advertising for bids for revenue bonds which will fund a 77-bed expansion.

According to MMH's legal counsel, Davis & Davis of Austin, the pending litigation should not affect the revenue bond sale.

"Such an appeal should not hinder in any way your proceeding with the project authorized by the (THFC) commission. While the appeal is pending, the Midland County Hospital District does have a valid and final certificate of need order and may proceed with the project by that order," the attorneys wrote in the "Notice of Sale and Bidding Instructions" for the revenue bond sale.

MMH officials expect to open and read the bids for the $19.875 million revenue bond sale May 24. Part of the additional money will be used as a cushion to cover the first year's interest and principal payment.

As required by law, MMH and Parkview both sought approval last year from the Texas Health Facilities Commission to upgrade or expand their facilities. In March, the THFC approved MMH's $15.1 million 77-bed expansion, but rejected Parkview's new $17.5 million 110-bed hospital.

Now, American Medical Centers (AMC), which owns Parkview, plans to appeal the THFC's decision for Doctors Hospital of the Permian Basin — the name of Parkview's replacement facility.

In a telephone interview Tuesday, Ace Pickens, Austin attorney for Parkview, said if a suit was to be filed it had to be done 30 days from April 25.

"I plan to file it tomorrow (Wednesday) or by the end of this week," Pickens said.

But MMH director Tevis Herd said, "We don't anticipate it will affect the bond sale."

In another statement by MMH's legal firm, they advised:

"It is our opinion that such an appeal in regard to this case will not be successful. There is sufficient evidence in the (THFC) record to support the (THFC) commission's decision and it is further our opinion that no legal error was committed during this proceeding which is of such magnitude as to require reversal of the commission's order."

However, Pickens said AMC is not asking for a reversal of the THFC's decision.

"Our suit is not against MMH," he said. "We are not contesting their actions. We are appealing the THFC's decision on our (certificate of need) application."

Board delays decision on Midland High renovation

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Picking up a price tag three times higher than what they had expected, Midland Independent School District trustees dropped it Tuesday, delaying a decision on the final stage of a 50-year renovation and expansion project for Midland High School.

Renovation of the old Midland High School library into additional office space was approved by voters in the April 1981 school bond election at an estimated cost of $66,000. Although the low bid submitted Tuesday placed the cost at $198,000 and additional funds are available to cover the project, trustees explored other ways to legally use the funds.

In other action, trustees heard a report on a student survey on drug and alcohol use, voted to trade land for the future site of a school, named two new elementary school principals and approved salary supplements for 26 teachers.

According to architect Preston Geren, of Geren Associates/CRS, the two items which ran over were mechanical and electrical installation. Cost estimates made by Geren May 5 were placed at $38,000 for mechanical and $22,500 for electrical for a total of $70,500.

THAT TOTAL falls well below the cost submitted by low bidders Area Builders of $99,300, Geren said.

If trustees approved a contract with Area Builders, additional money from contingency funds would be available to cover the project, said Dr. James H. Mailey, consultant for school planning and construction. Contingency funds may be used for site acquisition or renovation of secondary school facilities, he later explained.

"Personally, I'd like to see that renovation come from bond money rather than reserves," said Superintendent Dr. Joseph P. Baressi Jr., adding more money may be available if site work at the new elementary schools comes in lower than estimated.

According to Wilson Heidelberg, director of school plant maintenance and grounds, total cost of site work at the three schools could be $25,000 "at least" under original estimates.

About $120,000 would remain in the contingency fund if $2,000 were removed for the MHS renovation project, business manager Don Furgeson said.

"I REALLY HAVE a problem being responsible to the voters," Trustee Ann Page said. "Just because we've managed money well and have a little extra that we can say, 'go ahead and spend another $120,000' — I have a real problem with that."

Trustee Ron Britton, who serves on the architectural committee, expressed concern that while voters approved a $66,000 project, the architectural committee was not forewarned about the cost increase.

"We started off at $66,000 and then we get out the packet and it's $198,000," Britton said. "I'm concerned that we, as the architectural committee, did not have a chance to (review current prices)."

While Geren said cutting out a new air conditioning system could reduce prices as much as $35,000 to $40,000, the total estimate, priced at $20 per square foot, is "probably not unreasonable."

Mailey explained that a series of renovation stages at the former junior high began when it became a high school in 1928. The expanded office space, which would cover 180,000 square feet, or about the same area as the Lee High School office renovation, is the last step in the renovation project.

Alternate bids were submitted on renovating windows "so those areas are brought into harmony with the rest of the building," he said.

If trustees decided to wait on the project, bond money could be used for improvement projects at other campuses or for expanding the LHS band hall, Baressi said.

Trustee Parker Humes pointed out the office expansion was the only item uncompleted in the 1981 bond election. Other projects included in that bond issue were construction of Parker Elementary, the new De Zavala Elementary and the new MHS library; expanding the MHS band hall and the LHS office area; and purchasing more portable buildings.

Trustees voted to table the item until further studies could be made on reducing prices.

RESULTS OF A student survey on drug and alcohol use, taken by 883 juniors at both high schools, were given to trustees.

Wanda Mohr, a student at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin, patterned the survey after similar studies conducted by the University of Michigan. The survey, using a control group, proved to be 95 percent reliable, give or take three points, Mrs. Mohr said.

While fewer Midland students use drugs and alcohol than the national average of students, those that use either on a daily basis use them more heavily than others do nationally, the survey indicated.

The survey also indicated students who use drugs and alcohol do not use them at school as much as they do in cars, and children from families with combined incomes of more than $64,000 tend to drink more than others.

"I CAN'T SAY that's a casualty," Mrs. Mohr said, "but I probably can say they have more cars and can get away and drink more."

Other trends indicated in the results included students who work outside the home on a daily or near-daily basis tend to use marijuana and alcohol more, probably due to more peer contact, she said.

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

After swearing in three councilmen and seeing off another, Midland City Council Tuesday revised the maximum cable television fees, approved a lease arrangement with American Airlines and voted to allow gasoline sales by special permit in Neighborhood Service Districts.

Departing Councilman Carroll Thomas, after serving eight years on the council, watched as his replacement, Councilman David Godfrey, and re-elected Councilmen Gordon Marcum II and Jesse Hatfield were sworn in.

Mayor G. Thane Akins commended Thomas for the "excellent, consistent, honest and fair service you've done for the city."

Thomas traded parting jibes with the council, warning the panel that, "I'm turning this Baptist chair over to another good Baptist. Now you behave yourselves. I'll try not to be thinking of you all."

With picture taking and handshaking complete, the council proceeded to approve a lease arrangement with American Airlines for ticket counter, office and cargo space at Midland Regional Airport.

VICTOR WHITE, Midland aviation director, said American has been subleasing from Continental for ticket counter space and baggage handling. White said a recent contract agreement between American and its employees prohibits such contracting, forcing American to seek its own space and baggage service.

White said American wants to lease the southernmost ticket counter space in the terminal, but the lease has been complicated by a conveyor belt installed by a former tenant — Braniff.

Midland loaned Braniff about $94,000 to purchase and install the baggage conveyor in September 1980, according to White. Braniff went bankrupt in May 1982, leaving the loan arrangement with Midland tied up in bankruptcy court. White estimated Braniff owes about 12 $3,000 monthly payments to the city.

White said Braniff is looking to sell the conveyor but American refused to buy the equipment, or have it included in its rental agreement. He recommended the city buy the belt, but the council chose only to approve a lease with American which excludes the conveyor.

The council voted to revise Midland's maximum monthly rate for basic cable television service from $9.95 to $9.50. The action comes after Times-Mirror Cable TV announced a basic fee increase from $9 to $9.50. The council's actions requires the company to seek council approval for any future increase in the basic rate.

NEWTON YOUNGBLOOD, Times-Mirror general manager, announced the company will be offering remote control channel changers for sale or rent.

Councilman Tom Sloan had questioned Times-Mirror officials because with cable rewiring underway in some sections of the city, the converters necessary for receiving extra channels are disabling television owners' remote controls.

Sloan asked if the company couldn't offer to sell special remote controls — which overcome the converter's disabling affects — instead of renting them for $3 a month as has been done previously.

Youngblood said the company has agreed to rent the controls for $3 a month, sell them for $54 or include the price in some programming packages.

Switching a vote made at its meeting two weeks ago, the council voted to allow specific use permits for gasoline sales in Neighborhood Service Districts, which tend to attract convenience stores and other neighborhood shops.

The council had debated the merits of NS developments against the traffic generated by gas sales before rejecting the proposal April 26. Gas sales, a staple of convenience stores, now are prohibited in NS districts.

Councilman Steve Davidson said that after reconsidering the matter, he decided the traffic generated by gas sales would be negligible. Three councilmen agreed and the measure passed.

AT THE SAME TIME, the council voted to retain the specific use permit requirements for alcohol sales in NS districts and decided not to create a special use classification for private elementary and secondary schools.

After much debate over re-zoning an area in north Midland that is largely zoned Agriculture Estate, the council voted to grant a zone change request by Harris & Walton for a Planned District for housing, Townhouse and Local Retail District on a 40-acre tract about 1¾ miles north of Loop 250, west of Garfield Street.

The council set June 1 as a meeting date for announcing the sale of $7 million in Certificates of Obligation to finance airport improvements.

IN OTHER action, the council:

—Approved the naming of three neighborhood parks: Trinity Park, adjacent to Quanah Elementary School; Sage Park, near the Crestgate subdivision; and Santa Rita Park, next to Santa Rita Elementary.

—Designated a large section of the city, including downtown, as blighted for purposes of industrial development bond financing.

—Voted to extend the Trinity School "no parking" zone about 450 feet north of Wadley Avenue on Godfrey.

—Approved specific use permits for day nurseries at Elm Grove Mobile Park, on Fairgrounds Road, and at 604 Brooks Drive.

—Granted a specific use permit request from Phillips and Coston for the sale of alcoholic beverages in a restaurant on the west side of Colorado Street, between Texas and Wall Avenues.

The council meeting was recessed until 9 a.m. Tuesday.

Traffic fatalities in Midland, Midland County up in 1982

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Despite a drop in highway death figures statewide, traffic fatalities in Midland and Midland County for 1982 were up over the 1981 toll.

City police recorded 13 traffic deaths in 1982, according to Lt. Herman Wicker of the Midland Police Department. The figure for 1981 was 10.

Injury accidents and the total number of accidents were down for the same period, however. Last year, 1,168 persons were injured in 3,948 city accidents, compared to 1,273 injuries recorded in 4,117 accidents during 1981.

In rural Midland, according to Sgt. Andy Eubanks of the Department of Public Safety, 20 fatalities were recorded during 1982, a 25 percent increase over the 1981 toll of 16.

Injury accidents in the county during 1982 were up 67 percent over the 1981 figure of 116. Total county accidents in 1982 stood at 691, an 88 percent increase over the 1981 figure of 367.

DPS Director Col. Jim Adams said a total of 4,271 persons lost their lives on Texas roads in 1982, down 9.1 percent from the previous year. The death rate statewide during 1982 stood at 3.4 fatalities per 100 million miles, compared to 3.9 in 1981.

"Stepped-up enforcement by DPS and local officers brought about a 25 percent increase in DWI arrests last year," said Adams, accounting in part for the reduction in statewide traffic deaths.

"The (DPS) has also been concentrating on speed enforcement, and this has helped bring the top speeds down on our highways."

On increased news media and public awareness of the DWI problem, Adams said: "Motorists who drink now have a greater fear of the consequences of driving under the influence of alcohol, and consequently are being more careful.

"Our challenge now is to sustain this public concern to help turn this temporary reduction into a lasting accomplishment. Pending DWI legislation will assist greatly in this respect."

Adams noted that 25 percent of the statewide fatalities last year were DWI-related. "We still maintain that this statistic would be in the 50 percent range if state law required blood alcohol measurements from all drivers involved in fatal accidents," he said.

DPS auto specialist testifies in former deputy sheriff's trial

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

A former deputy sheriff charged with stealing a pickup truck heard a Department of Public Safety auto theft specialist tell jurors Tuesday he knew "something had to be wrong" when a special identification number on the vehicle didn't match its registration papers.

In opening testimony, Sgt. Arvin Kilpatrick of the DPS motor vehicle theft division said papers showed the 1978 Ford pickup was registered to former Midland County Deputy Joe Brownlee. But they depicted the truck as having a regular cab.

Assistant District Attorney Janet Copeland earlier had told jurors the state would prove that Brownlee altered visible ID numbers on the truck so they would correspond to those on a 1978 regular cab pickup he owned at one time. The hidden number, however, had not been changed.

The stolen pickup belonged to Rittenhouse Oil Co. and had been removed from the firm's yard on Industrial Avenue, according to testimony by company owner Dale Rittenhouse. He said he owns about 30 pickups and the stolen one was not missed immediately.

He testified, however, that he and his son spotted the truck on the parking lot of an Andrews Highway restaurant last October. Although a tool box, headache rack and a gooseneck hitch had been removed, he said he recognized the vehicle from certain dents and scratches on it.

Brownlee was fired from the sheriff's department last November for "providing erroneous information" during an internal investigation of the matter, according to Sheriff Dallas Smith.

Smith's investigation, along with those conducted by the DPS and Texas Rangers, later led to Brownlee's indictment on felony auto theft charges.

Brownlee, who is also a former DPS trooper and former officer with the Midland Police Department, faces up to 10 years in prison and a $5,000 fine if convicted.

Testimony resumed this morning in State District Judge Pat Baskin's court. The trial is expected to last through Thursday.

Mrs. Ator married Thad Ator who died in 1957. She and her husband were residents of Odessa from 1948 through 1957. She was a retired school teacher.

Other survivors include four stepsons, a stepdaughter, a nephew, two nieces, 20 grandchildren and 23 great-grandchildren.

Odessa woman ruled victim of homicide

ODESSA — Homicide has been ruled in the death of an elderly Odessa woman whose body was found on the floor of her bedroom shortly before 5 p.m. Tuesday.

Police said they were called to the residence at 1807 W. 13th St. in connection with a possible suicide. Instead, they found that 69-year-old Alice Odessa Blackwell had been shot several times with a small caliber weapon and Justice of the Peace Jimmy Harris ruled her death a homicide.

The woman, who recently went to work for Western Manor nursing home, lived alone and was last seen alive about 6 p.m. Monday. Police said there were no signs of a struggle or of forced entry.

Police believe Ms. Blackwell was shot sometime early Tuesday and an autopsy has been ordered. No motive has been established in the case.

Midland men jailed on heroin charges

Two men were jailed on heroin charges following a police search of their eastside home Tuesday afternoon.

The suspects, ages 18 and 21, were arrested after officers acting on a tip said a third party was used to purchase heroin at the house. In addition to an undisclosed amount of heroin, police said they seized a small quantity of marijuana.

Formal charges were to be filed and bond set sometime today. The house was searched on the basis of a warrant issued by Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry.

Budget writers try to reach compromise

AUSTIN (AP) — House and Senate budget writers trying to reach a compromise between the two chambers on a 1984-85 state spending bill met again today.

The Appropriations conference committee held its first session Tuesday afternoon and quickly agreed their money differences were small.

The Big Spring man was expected to be transported to City Jail in Big Spring sometime today.

MISD trustees delay action on Midland High renovation

Students who participate in extracurricular athletics tend to use marijuana and alcohol more while students who are involved in band or choir, creative writing, art shows, plays and other "cultural things" tend to use alcohol and marijuana less, she said.

Midland students who use alcohol on the average are introduced to it in ninth grade, while marijuana users are introduced to the drug in 10th grade, she said.

Students who maintain consistently high averages, such as A's and B's, tend not to use marijuana, while no correlation was established between drinking and grade averages, she said.

When asked why there is a higher percentage of students who have never used drugs or alcohol, Mrs. Mohr said Midland students are "significantly more religious" than the national average.

She also said that children who don't drink or smoke marijuana tend to participate in more activities with their parents.

"MIDLAND IS A bastion of traditional values," she said.

Following an executive session, trustees approved the purchase of a 10-acre tract of land from Home Savings for the possible site of a future school. Whether it will be another elementary school or a junior high was not discussed.

The land, located north of Mockingbird Lane and west of A Street, was exchanged for two pieces of property owned by the school district plus $20,000. The properties exchanged included a 15-acre tract located west of Henderson Elementary School and a 6-acre tract west of Alamo Junior High School.

In other action, trustees approved the appointment of two elementary school principals. Larry Wilkinson, Crockett elementary principal, was appointed to the position at Bowie Elementary while Clyde Hobbs, third grade teacher at Travis, was appointed to the principal's post at Emerson Elementary.

Performance-Based Salary Supplements of $1,000 for 17 teachers and $2,000 for nine teachers were approved.

PBSS applications and data submitted by teachers are reviewed by an advisory board which then makes the recommendations.

Jail inmate tries to arrange brother's murder

HOUSTON (AP) — A jail inmate offered to pay $2,000 for the nitroglycerin poisoning of his brother, a fellow inmate in the Harris County Jail, authorities allege.

Edward LeBlanc, 28, was indicted Tuesday on charges that he tried to buy the killing of his 35-year-old brother, Gary LeBlanc, The killing allegedly was to have been carried out Thursday, prosecutor Kay Burkhalter said.

No bond was set on the murder solicitation charge, which carries a sentence of up to 99 years or life in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Both brothers are jailed on capital murder charges stemming from the November 1980 slaying of Robert Howard, a Brown & Root Inc. employee, Ms. Burkhalter said.

Gary LeBlanc, a Channelview electrician, cooperated with investigators in that slaying, she said. He was allegedly hired by Edward, a transmission repairman, to carry out that killing. The brothers were arrested in March.

Ms. Burkhalter said Gary allowed prosecutors to wire him for sound and tape a conversation with his brother about the killing.

Authorities learned of the murder-for-hire scheme by the inmate who was recruited to carry out the slaying, Ms. Burkhalter said. The LeBlanc brothers and the other inmate have since been separated in the jail, she said.

Edward LeBlanc allegedly obtained nitroglycerin pills from another inmate, who was using them to treat a heart condition, Ms. Burkhalter said.

AT WORK

Employees steal business

By DR. ADELE M. SCHEELE

"What drives me to despair is my employees stealing from me," says a successful foodchain businessman. "I hire them, train them, and promote from within. I have them to my own home, treat them as extended family. Then at work they steal from me — not money, but goods and supplies. It is killing me."

"Our worst loss isn't customer shoplifting, but it is our own employees stealing from the store," says a department store executive. "They are biting the hand that feeds them and it sure hurts, both financially and psychologically."

Money, food, clothes, tools — all stolen by employees. Why? Is it need, resentment or spite? So far there has been little to explain this seemingly unreasonable act.

To concerned employers, employees stealing is equivalent to treason and they are ill-equipped to deal with it. They claim they cannot even determine who among their employees is actually stealing. And they are not about to set traps or make all employees accountable as bank tellers are, because it is impractical.

If only they could explain it, employers often say, they might have a clue about coping with the problem. Let me suggest some reasons.

First, both employers quoted above are successful. They are rooted in capitalism, risk-taking and entrepreneurialism. They have built their businesses with their own hands. But their employees never took these initial risks with them. Instead, they are used to being developed, rather than doing the developing themselves. Protected by parent-like employers, they feel at home. Therefore, they act proprietarily about goods, services, even money. It may feel like theirs in the first place. "If it's my desk, aren't they my paper clips?" Who owns what?

Another reason employees steal is that the disparity between salaries at the bottom and at the top is monumental. The lowest paid clerk, gas attendant, stockboy or janitor all physically work harder than any of the management team. It looks unfair. And taking only what's due may be one way to even up. Maybe.

What happens in those few companies where the employees all own stock in the company and share in its profits? Stealing, absenteeism and apathy tend to disappear. Maybe accountability counts after all. If it isn't in recognition alone, then perhaps sharing the pie is the answer. It could be an alternative to having the pie nibbled away unseen.

This decade has as its challenge great experimentation — not only in high technology, but also in social engineering. We need to make work work better for us all.

DEAR ABBY

Pregnancy not family issue

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: "Kathy," my son's 18-year-old girlfriend, has informed him that she is pregnant. Her parents, who are devout Catholics, have told her that if she has an abortion she can never set foot in their house again. They insist that she have the child, keep it and raise it. Marriage is out of the question.

Can you rush some advice we can show Kathy to convince her that it would be best for all concerned if she gave up the child for adoption? Since she is a high school drop-out, now studying for her high school equivalency certificate and hoping to go on to some future career, we feel that she should not be saddled with a baby. Kathy's family will not even let her consider adoption.

Perhaps outside advice from you would broaden her outlook.– NO NAMES OR CITIES, PLEASE

DEAR NO NAMES: "Kathy" did not ask for my advice, so I shall not offer her any. However, I have some advice for you:

Don't presume to know what's best for Kathy. She must do what she thinks is best for her and her unborn child.

What about your son? As the baby's father, he should have something to say about it.

Free counseling is available at a Planned Parenthood facility for teen-agers who find themselves facing an unplanned pregnancy. Contrary to what many believe, they will not be talked into an abortion. They will receive expert professional counseling in order to help them make a decision they can live with.

DEAR ABBY: This concerns the lady who was diagnosed as having herpes, then later learned that she did not have herpes – she was allergic to the colored, scented toilet paper she had been using for years!

I am a 53-year-old male. Twelve years ago my wife brought home a new brand of toilet paper that "smelled pretty." Soon, I began experiencing great irritation in the rectal area. At the same time our young daughter also developed an inflammation in the genital area. Luckily we put two and two together and threw out all the "pretty smelling" toilet paper, and we've had no problems since.

I suspect there are hundreds, maybe thousands, of readers who will benefit from the warning in your column. Thank you. -- ALLERGIC BUT AWARE

DEAR ALLERGIC: Thanks for some valuable input.

DEAR ABBY: Something has been bugging me for a long time, and I don't know where to go for the answer, so I'm asking you. You've heard the expression, "Mind your p's and q's." What I want to know is, what do the "p" and "q" stand for?

I've asked several people, and nobody seems to know. – SUE

DEAR SUE: There are three theories, according to "The Morris Dictionary of Word and Phrase Origins" by William and Mary Morris:

1) In the old days, when British sailors wore pigtails and pea jackets, they were warned to mind their "p's and q's," meaning pea jackets and queues.

2) In English pubs, the bartender kept track of the drinks consumed by the customers by writing the number of pints and quarts on the blackboard. "P's" stood for pints; "q's" stood for quarts. So customers were told to mind their "p's and q's."

3) When writing the letters "p" and "q" in lowercase together, i.e. "pg," one is the reverse of the other, hence penmanship teachers admonished their students to "mind their p's and q's."

Hearst Feature Service

Custards and timbales are sweet or savory combinations of eggs and milk baked with other ingredients. Their virtue is that they are inexpensive, easily obtainable and can be either showy or simple.

Some can be done in the morning and cooked at night. And when they're done, unlike the temperamental souffle, timbales and custards will wait in their water baths to come to the table at the diners' convenience.

In general, custards are made of sweetened and flavored eggs and milk, while timbales are savory. Learning to make either dish doubles your repertoire, because timbales and custards are culinary twins.

Just remember that if you want a custard or timbale to come out of a mold in one piece, it must contain at least six whole eggs for every quart of milk. To serve a timbale or custard in individual cups, figure an egg for each cup of milk as the proportion. Use one-half to two-thirds of a cup of sugar, depending on your sweetness factor, and add extra egg yolks for a richer concoction.

It's a good idea to scald the milk (to 150 degrees on a thermometer or until a film forms on top) and add it gradually to the eggs to prepare them for the heat of the oven. Don't beat the egg and milk so much that it forms a froth – you want a smooth surface. Butter the baking dishes and sprinkle with bread crumbs or cheese if you're making a timbale; use sugar for a custard. To ensure smoothness, strain the milk-egg mixture into its baking dish, and to ensure a soft smooth top, cover the pan in which the custard or timbales cook with a lid.

Don't overcook; the custard will separate and become watery. Custards and timbales are done when a knife inserted near the side of the dish comes out clean.

Let custards cool in their bath and refrigerate only when cold. Molded custards must not be turned out until they have chilled in their molds for several hours.

Timbale once meant a cup, then the casing or crust inside the cup in which good things were baked, and now it means a savory custard or crustless quiche. Versatile, inexpensive and easy to make, timbales dress leftovers for another trip to the table. Basically, this is how they go:

BASIC TIMBALES

Use broccoli, cauliflower, spinach, sauteed chopped mushrooms, turkey, chicken, ham, shrimp, crabmeat, tuna or salmon.

1 cup any cooked, chopped vegetable, meat or fish
1/2 cup shredded Swiss or Cheddar cheese, 4 eggs
1 tablespoon minced onion
1/2 teaspoon salt, dash paprika
1 cup hot milk
1 tablespoon grated Parmesan cheese
cheese or cream sauce

In bottom of four 6-9-ounce buttered custard cups or ramekins, sprinkle 1/4 cup chopped vegetables, meat or fish and 2 tablespoons Swiss or Cheddar cheese.

Combine eggs, onion, salt and paprika. Gradually beat in hot milk. Pour into prepared cups, dividing equally and sprinkle with Parmesan cheese. Set cups in a shallow baking pan and pour hot water into pan to within 1/2 inch of top of custard mixture. Bake in preheated 350-degree oven for 25 to 30 minutes or until knife inserted near center comes out clean. Remove cups from hot water. Gently loosen edges with knife or spatula and invert onto serving plates. Serve with sauce. Makes four servings.

VANILLA POTS DE CREME

2 cups heavy or thick cream
3 tablespoons sugar
6 egg yolks
2 teaspoons vanilla

Heat cream and sugar until it simmers, stirring until sugar is dissolved. Beat egg yolks lightly and gradually pour the hot cream over them, stirring vigorously. Stir in vanilla and strain mixture into small pottery pots or ramekins. Set containers in a shallow pan containiung 1 inch of hot water and bake in a preheated 325-degree oven for about 20 minutes, or until a knife inserted in the side of the cream comes out dry. Do not overbake. It's better to have the cream a little runny in the center than overbaked. Chill before serving. Makes eight little pots.

BUTTERSCOTCH CUSTARD

1/2 cup dark brown sugar
2 tablespoons sweet butter
2 cups medium or light cream
pinch of salt
8 egg yolks
2 teaspoons vanilla
chopped, toasted almonds

Mix brown sugar and butter and melt over medium heat to make butterscotch. Scald cream, and gradually blend with butterscotch. Add salt, blend with egg yolks; add vanilla. Strain into 3-ounce custard cups or ramekins. Bake in a 300-degree oven for 20 to 25 minutes. Serve sprinkled with toasted almonds.

CHINESE SAVORY CUSTARD

4 eggs
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon pepper
2 teaspoons soy sauce
2 cups hot chicken stock
4 chopped scallions

Beat the eggs, and add the salt, pepper and soy sauce. Gradually stir the mixture into the stock; blend. Pour into a heat-proof dish; sprinkle with scallions; cover and cook on a trivet in a bain-marie until the custard sets. Serve with rice.

ALMOND OR PISTACHIO UPSIDE-DOWN CUSTARD

Almond:
2 1/2 cups milk
3/4 cup blanched almonds
1/3 cup sugar
pinch of salt
1 1/2 teaspoons almond extract (bitter almond, if possible)
3 whole eggs
2 extra eggs yolks
1/2 cup heavy cream, whipped Kirsch or almond liqueur for flavoring cream

Pistachio:
2 cups milk
3/4 cup blanched pistachios
1/3 cup sugar
pinch salt
1/4 cup Kirsch
3 whole eggs
2 extra egg yolks
1/2 cup heavy cream, whipped Kirsch for flavoring cream

Scald milk. Put nuts in blender or food processor and pour the hot milk over them while blending until nuts are ground. Let steep for two hours. Add sugar and salt; reheat until sugar has melted. Add almond extract or Kirsch (depending on which custard you are making).

Beat whole eggs and egg yolks lightly and blend with milk. Strain the custard into a buttered 1-quart charlotte mold. Bake in a 300-degree oven for 35 to 40 minutes. Unmold on a serving platter. Serve with whipped cream flavored with liqueur.

1983 banner year for family vegetable gardens

By PATRICK DENTON
Copley News Service

I'd be willing to bet a bale of peat moss that more seeds are being bunged into the soil in home gardens across the country this spring than at any time in our history.

It's partly the economy thing and partly a rising desire in many hearts to return to more earthly values.

Family vegetable patches are springing up where before grass reigned supreme in many back yards. Whether this is your situation or you are working an established plot, there's preparatory work to be done.

First, the soil will benefit from some preparation. If you prefer organic soil enricheners, spread any combination of compost, peat, old or dried manure, bone and blood meal over the garden site. If you use chemical fertilizer, spread a complete one like 6-8-6 or 10-10-10 at a rate of a quart for every 100 square feet of garden area. Peat moistened with fish emulsion can be dug into the planting sites of heavy feeders like tomatoes and cucumbers.

I don't rake or dig the fertilizer in all at once because I dig over each row before planting. As each row is planted, the site for the next gets trodden down anyway, so I long ago gave up any digging prior to planting.

You'll need at the planting site a digging fork (long-handled ones are easiest on the back), a rake, a hoe, two straight sticks and string. I plan my rows to go east-west, so the sun will follow the lines of my plantings and not be blocked by the taller ones.

To plant seeds in a single row, first dig over the line where the row will be, then rake it smooth and mark the row with string stretched between the two sticks. Make the seed furrow with either the sharp corner of your hoe, or the handle of your rake, following the line of your string.

Small seeds like lettuce and carrot need just a very shallow indentation, so just pressing the rake handle into the ground under the string is fine for them. Larger seeds like corn need greater planting depth. Calculate the amount of soil to cover the seed to be about four times the diameter of the seed itself.

When the furrow is made, and before the seed is placed in it, I like to dampen down the furrow with a fertilizer solution. Again, if you like the natural fertilizers use a fish (or seaweed if you can get it) emulsion. Otherwise, use a water-soluble balanced chemical fertilizer like 20-20-20 mixed according to label directions.

My sowing routine involves pouring a bit of seed into the dry palm of my hand and picking some out to dispense between my fingers into the furrow. This is for the small seeds — larger seeds like peas and corn are best placed individually in the row.

The hoe can be used to cover the seed, the flat part of the hoe employed to lightly tamp down the soil to ensure firm contact of the seed with the soil. At this point I use a fine line of lime for a temporary marker, and I mark the row with the variety, seed company and date.

While larger vegetables are best planted in single rows because they take up a lot of space, most root crops and salad vegetables can be planted in wide bands, a method of planting which uses your garden space much more efficiently and cuts down on weeding and watering.

To plant in a wide band, dig over the site in the same way and place the string marker. Use an iron rake to smooth the soil beside the string.

Easiness makes microwave popular

STRAWBERRY CITRUS PUNCH

1 (6 oz.) can frozen limeade
1 (6 oz.) can frozen orange juice concentrate
1 (6 oz.) can frozen lemonade concentrate
3 cups cold water
2 (10 oz.) pkgs. frozen strawberries in syrup, thawed
1 (1 pt., 12 oz.) bottle ginger ale, chilled

CITRUS SPRITZERS

1 (6 oz.) can frozen orange juice concentrate
1 (6 oz.) can frozen grapefruit concentrate
1 qt. club soda, chilled

CHICKEN BROCCOLI CASSEROLE

2 (10 oz.) pkgs. frozen broccoli spears
2 (10¾ oz.) cans condensed cream of chicken soup
½ tsp. curry powder
2 tbsps. lemon juice
12 slices cooked chicken
1 cup buttered bread cubes
Salt and pepper to taste

Cook broccoli in microwave until thawed (about 8 minutes). Combine soup, cury powder and lemon juice. Spread half of the mixture in a 2-quart glass baking dish. Arrange broccoli and chicken slices over soup mixture. Top with remaining soup. Wrap tightly with plastic wrap and freeze. When ready to cook, remove plastic wrap and replace with wax paper. Microwave casserole 10 minutes. Then cook on low or defrost cycle for 20 minutes. Remove wax paper, sprinkle with salt and pepper to taste, and top with buttered bread cubes. Cook a final 15 minutes or until heated through. Serves 6.

HOMEMADE TV DINNER FOR ONE

4 oz. cooked meat
Two-thirds cup cooked rice, pasta or potatoes
½ cup cooked vegetable

This is a wonderfu way to turn leftovers into a convenient frozen dinner. Smply arrange foods on a paper plate, with larger items near the edges. Wrap tightly in aluminum foil and freeze. To heat, remove foil and replace with wax paper. Microwave for 5 minutes, rotating plate twice during cooking time, until food is steaming hot. Serves one.

Recipes in this column are tested in 625- to 700-watt microwave ovens. Foods are cooked on HIGH (100 percent power) and uncovered unless otherwise specified.

Southern ham loaf

By The Associated Press

It slices well, has great flavor and any left over is good cold.

2¼-to 2¾-pound lean smoked pork butt, cooked and coarsely ground (about 4 cups firmly packed)
½ pound fairly lean finely ground pork
1 large egg
2-3rds cup milk
6 small scallions, thinly sliced
½ cup stemmed parsley sprigs, minced
Pepper to taste
Sauce (see recipe)

In a large bowl, thoroughly mix together pork butt, pork, egg, milk, scallions, parsley and pepper. Rinse a loaf pan (8 by 4 by 3 inches) with cold water; tightly pack pork mixture into it; turn out into a foil-lined baking pan (11 by 7 by 1½ inches). Brush loaf lightly with sauce; bake in a preheated 350-degree oven for 45 minutes, basting several times with sauce. Syphon off fat. Cup foil around loaf and pour remaining sauce over top; bake 15 minutes more. Let stand 10 minutes before serving. Makes 8 to 10 servings.

SAUCE: Stir together until blended ¾ cup firmly packed dark brown sugar, 2 teaspoons dry mustard, ¼ cup cider vinegar and 2 tablespoons dry sherry.

Goat's, cow's milk similar

SEATTLE – What's the nutritional difference between goat's milk and cow's milk?

Nutritionally, goat's milk and cow's milk are similar, say the experts. One standard nutritional text lists the following nutritional components in a cup of milk. Goat's milk is shown first, with cow's milk following in parentheses:

Calories: 163 (159); protein: 7.8 grams (8.5); fat: 9.8 grams (8.6); carbohydrates: 11.2 grams (12); calcium: 315 milligrams (288); thiamin: 100 micrograms (70); riboflavin: 270 micrograms (420); Vitamin A: 390 international units (320).

For people who are allergic to cow's milk — as many are — goat's milk makes a good alternative, says Norma McCrae, a registered dietician. Even so, she says she often recommends soy milk, another alternative, because it is less expensive and more widely available than goat's milk.

Found in many health stores, but rarely in supermarkets, goat's milk also usually costs more than cow's milk.

For the same reasons, Dr. David Stempel, a Seattle pediatrician and allergist, says he usually recommends soy products over goat's milk for infants who are allergic to cow's milk, although he adds that mother's milk is best. Stempel says cow's milk is not necessarily more allergenic for humans than goat's milk, but that different people simply are able to tolerate different things.

Both McCrae and Stempel say they know of no evidence that goat's milk is more digestible for humans than cow's milk, although some goat's milk fans insist that it is.

Goat's milk often is sold raw rather than pasteurized, which makes it popular with some natural food advocates. Some say certain properties of cow's milk make its nutrients more difficult to assimilate than the nutrients in goat's milk, and that pasteurization — a bacteria-killing heat process — makes it worse. Raw-milk advocates say pasteurization destroys part of milk's nutrients, but McCrae says that the kind of nutrients which could be destroyed by pasteurization, such as Vitamin C, are nearly non-existent in milk anyway.

Irene Clouse, left, director of the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children, and an unidentified battered woman discuss plans and goals for her future of freedom.

Since October 1982, the four-bedroom, two-bath house in Midland has sheltered an average of 25 women a month. After holiday seasons, the shelter reports an increase in victims who seek their help. In January, 43 people were living in the home, 11 women and 32 children.

By DIANE BOOTH
Lifestyle Writer

Mary's (a fictitious name) life the past six years is a painful story, but she is grateful she is alive to tell it.

Beaten and abused by her ex-husband who continues to harass her, Mary said her "only hope" is to leave the state.

She has found the courage to start a new life on her own following a month-long stay at Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children in Midland.

"He degrades me and abuses me mentally and physically," she said. "It has about cracked me up."

During their violent five-year marriage, Mary tried to help her husband, an "acute alcoholic," but he refused to recognize his problem.

"He says there is nothing wrong with him, but he is mentally sick and alcoholic. He has a violent temper and he would try to hit and bite me wherever he could."

A nurse by trade, she said he once tried to break her hand to keep her from working.

The woman in her early 40s left another Texas town to escape her ex-husband but he followed her to Midland. "He harassed my employer and he went into one of my patient's rooms. He would do anything to get me thrown out of my job because I would not go back with him."

Before Mary moved here, her ex-husband said he would drive her to job interviews. "He stopped the car and beat me up on the freeway and tore off my clothes so I could not get out of the car." She said that was his way of keeping her from job hunting.

Even after they were divorced, she said she would check on him periodically. "He would be drinking for a week and there would be no food in the house and his clothes would be dirty. I washed his clothes and bought him groceries. I treated him like a patient."

The man would follow her, she said, "because I am everything to him."

Counseling sessions at the center helped Mary to regain her self-esteem and decide to break free of the man who torments her. "My ex-husband told me I have no place to go so I had to do what he told me to do. Thank God they have these places so you have some place to go instead of ending up dead or something else."

During their marriage, Mary said, she did not want to face her situation. Instead she endured the physical and mental abuse."I would wear long sleeved shirts to hide my bruises. I would tell people at work I fell down or bumped into something. Later on I found out what I knew all along. The situation wouldn't get any better.

"I have made up my mind finally to break away from that situation and to help myself and go on with my career."

Strawberry tapioca light, simple dessert

10-ounce package frozen strawberries in syrup, thawed but undrained
Orange juice
2 tablespoons quick-cooking tapioca
1 tablespoon sugar

Into a 2-cup glass measure, drain the juice from the strawberries; reserve berries. Add enough orange juice to strawberry juice to make 1⅛ cups liquid; turn into a 1½-quart saucepan with tapioca and sugar; let stand 5 minutes. Over medium heat, stirring occasionally, bring to a boil. Off heat, stir in reserved strawberries. Makes 2 cups. Turn into glass dessert dishes; chill overnight. (For non-carlorie-watchers, this is delicious topped with sweetened whipped cream.) Makes 4 servings.

Citrus fruits put the squeeze on flavor

By PATRICIA DIBSIE
Copley News Service

There's fruit aplenty on the market shelves these days — and at reasonable prices. Maybe it's time to "can" the sodas and treat yourself to a glass of freshly squeezed orange juice for flavor, vitality and nutrition. A-peeling fresh citrus fruits are one of the best sources of natural vitamin C, as well as minerals and B vitamins. And unlike most vitamins, C is not retained by the body and must be replenished daily.

Citrus fruits also offer another boost to the health-conscious — they can be used to enhance the flavor of a dish in place of sodium. Or try citrus variations: Instead of lemon on filet of sole, how about grapefruit? Squeeze a little on some scallops. The flavor is different, less sour than lemon, but sharper than orange.

Oranges, lemons, limes, grapefruit, tangerines, tangelos and kumquats all fall from the citrus family tree. You can put the squeeze on these foods and still have uses for the rind and seeds. Seeds can be planted in terrariums and window boxes. Stripped or grated, the peels (rich in oils and pectin) can be used for jams and jellies, potables, food garnishes, and sweet candied peel, which can be made with the skins of any citrus.

Keep the citrus rind leftovers in the freezer and use as needed for recipes. You can also dry the peel (over a pilot light or even a radiator) and use it to flavor stews, compotes and freshly-brewed tea.

And, of course, the peel of an orange, lemon or lime can be separated from the fruit in one piece and used as a container for a favorite cold dessert. (Orange Alaska is a handsome, impressive treat that uses very little sugar and is low in cholesterol. The recipe appears below.)

ORANGE ALASKA

3 juicy oranges
1 pint orange sherbet or other flavor sherbet or ice cream
3 egg whites
6 tbsps. sugar

To prepare orange shells, trace a line around center of orange. Insert parig knife in line at angle to make one side of a point; cut through to center. Remove knife; cut opposite side of point. Continue cutting in this manner around orange; pull halves apart. Juice oranges and remove membrane. Fill each orange shell with scoop of sherbet. Keep in freezer until ready to add meringue.

To prepare meringue, beat egg whites until stiff, but not dry; gradually add sugar, continuing to beat until very stiff. Remove sherbet-filled shells from freezer, one by one. Divide meringue and spread over sherbet shell being careful to cover completely. Return to freezer until ready to serve.

To serve: Place prepared shells under broiler pan 5 to 6 inches from source of heat. Broil 1 to 2 minutes until meringue is a delicate brown. Serve at once. Serves 6.

Chef's pasta pancake

Jacques Pepin is a man to watch. And you can, because he has a new cooking program on Public Television.

Now Jacques has extended his province. His "Everyday Cooking" is a rich yield of recipes learned in his family's French kitchen, simple enough to be of use in kitchens everywhere.

We tried Jacques' crisp and crunchy pasta pancake from "Everyday Cooking." At our tasting, my chief tester said, "It's like peanuts, you can't stop eating it."

JACQUES PEPIN'S PASTA PANCAKE

1 tablespoon butter
3 cups leftover cooked pasta, drained well
2 tablespoons chopped parsley
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
1 egg, lightly beaten

Place the oil and butter into a 7- to 8-inch diameter skillet and when the mixture is hot, add the drained pasta. Saute the pasta for about 1 minute, stirring to coat it well with the fat. Cook on medium to high heat without stirring for about 7 to 8 minutes so that a crust forms underneath.

Mix together the parsley, salt, pepper and egg and pour the mixture on top of the pasta. Do not stir. Let the egg fill in the spaces between the pieces of pasta and set.

Flip the pancake over to cook the other side. Cook for 5 to 6 minutes so it is browned on both sides. Serve immediately.

Oven-cooked Swiss steak

SWISS STEAK

2½-3lb. bone-in chuck beef steak
3 tablespoons flour
2 teaspoons salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
1 or 2 tablespoons oil
1 large onion, thinly sliced
1 large green pepper sliced
1 large rib celery, sliced
1-pound can tomatoes
1 teaspoon sugar

Trim most fat from around beef and pound a mixture of the flour, salt and pepper into both surfaces. In a 4-5 quart Dutch oven in the hot oil, brown meat on both sides. Add onion, green pepper, celery, tomatoes and sugar; bake in a 300 degree oven.

Since October, 25 women have lived in the house every month

By DIANE BOOTH
Lifestyle Writer

The old house may be rundown and short on space and privacy, but each month an average of 25 women and children seek shelter at the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children.

"By the time they come here," said Director Irene Clouse, "they are on their last ditch effort to save themselves. Many are beaten up pretty badly. It is finally to the point where she will be killed or really hurt."

Women abused by their husbands, boyfriends, fathers or perhaps their brothers, call the 24-hour hotline phone at the Midland shelter, Clouse said, when they realize their situation is not going to change.

The bottle is behind battering in most cases, Clouse said. The majority of mental and physical abusers of women are dependent on drugs or alcohol.

From August 1982 to March, 175 women who sought assistance at the shelter claimed alcohol abuse or alcoholism was the reason they were battered, Clouse said.

One of 35 shelters in Texas funded by the state Department of Human Resources, the Midland center has had no fewer than 25 women and children living there every month since October, Clouse said. In January, were 11 women and 32 children stayed in the four bedroom-two bath house.

"RIGHT AFTER THE holidays we always get a big influx of women and children," Clouse explained. "There is a lot of emotional tension during the holidays," she said which seems to erupt once December ends.

The center's purpose is to provide an atmosphere for change for women and their children who want to regain their self-esteem, set goals and be non-victimized, Clouse said.

"It is a place to come when you do not feel safe any more — it is an emergency shelter."

Most women who seek help have been battered repeatedly, she said and have been married an average of four years. The idea that women who come to the center are all young is incorrect, she said.

THE AVERAGE AGE of battered women at the center is 29 years, Clouse said. Most have at least two or three children. "We get young, old and middle-aged women of all races and from all socio-economic levels.

"We have had women here who did not need financial assistance or our referral services, but needed a safe house until they could get on their feet," Clouse said.

People who have money, a car, resources and support systems can probably afford to hire a lawyer, Clouse said. "Many of our women do not have those things."

Battered women may contact the center by calling one of two hotline numbers, 683-1300 or 563-0800. Once the center is called, one of three paid staff members or volunteers will determine if the woman's situation fits the criteria for coming to the shelter, Clouse said.

"Some woman have not actually been physically abused, but have had guns stuck to their heads or knives held at their throats. We consider that abuse."

Irene Clouse, director
Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children

"SOME WOMEN HAVE not actually been physically abused but have had guns stuck to their heads or knives held at their throats. We consider that abuse."

The woman is told to call the police and an officer calls the center if she follows through. "Then we know the call is legitimate," Clouse said. Someone from the center goes to the police station to pick up the woman. On several occasions the center picks up a victim at a hospital emergency room.

Since many women and children leave their homes with only the clothes on their backs, she said, they are given clothing at the shelter, personal items, a bed in one of the bedrooms converted to dormitories and a nursery.

"We let them cry and carry on for a few days," Clouse said. "A lot of them have been badly beaten up." In a couple of days, the director said she suggests to the women "it is time to get with the program."

THE PROGRAM IS to share household chores such as cooking, cleaning and laundry, begin counseling sessions and set goals.

The director, her assistant and counselors suggest the women set daily goals for themselves such as interviewing for a job. "We do not make anybody do anything," Clouse said. "All we do is offer the right atmosphere."

A psychologist from the Permian Basin Center for Mental Health discusses parenting skills, self goals, non-victimization and self-esteem, Clouse said.

Children do not only find a bed to sleep in but are included in programs to help them deal with their situation. Youngsters from 1 to 5 years old have a program designed for them and "Helping Kids Cope," is for children from 5 to 18 years.

CHILDREN DISCUSS THEIR feelings, decision making, family and friends, education and chemical dependency. The program was developed for children of alcoholics, Clouse said, but is available to all children.

Funded by a $20,422 grant from the Texas Commission on Alcoholism, there is no charge to participate in the program which began May 1. Children are divided into classes according to age. The program is designed to assist children in decision-making and developing a strong self-concept, Clouse said.

The state commission on alcoholism believes intensive primary prevention programs for children from alcoholic or alcohol-abusing families can help reduce the incidence of addiction or abuse among Texas youth.

"I DO NOT THINK there is any kid in this house who does not need these things," Clouse said.

Once a woman and her children leave the shelter after an average stay of two weeks, Clouse said the center encourages ex-residents to keep in touch. Non-residents are invited to sit in on counseling sessions. "When you walk out the door, that does not mean you get rid of your problem."

For example, one woman came to the center with her three kids a few months ago and is now living in an apartment in back of the shelter. "Now she has a job and a car and she still comes to the counseling sessions. I would consider her a success story."

Only one woman out of 50-60 women who have returned to their husbands was successful at making needed changes, Clouse said. But, she added, "We can't predict she will be successful next year."

About 45 percent of the women who come to the center return to their husbands, boyfriends or fathers, Clouse said.

It is difficult to measure the center's success rate, the director said. "If you have one person out of 20 who leaves this center this month and makes it, that would not be considered successful in the business world, but in the world of social service that is a bit more than can be expected."

MANY MEN DO NOT WANT to face the troubles which bring on battering, Clouse said. "They do not want to realize it exists. We face the problems and deal with them. That is really the only way to get rid of the problems."

Since nine out of 10 women who have come to the center say they, their partner or both of them saw abuse in their homes, Clouse wants to defuse the "repeat syndrome" of abuse in the couple's children.

Norway plans to bring women-beaters to justice, expose problem

OSLO, Norway (AP) — The Justice Ministry soon will be offering free legal help to battered women in a new project aimed at exposing the problem and bringing woman-beaters to justice.

Effective May 1, the program applies to all female victims of men, whether housewives mistreated by husbands, unmarried women victimized by live-in boyfriends or prostitutes abused by clients or procurers.

"We hope the new arrangement will help bring these problems into the open," said Sveinung O. Flaaten, the ministry's state secretary.

While there are no statistics to show how many Norwegian women are mistreated by men, health authorities investigate thousands of cases annually. Few are reported to police, however, and officials say more than half the reported cases later are withdrawn.

Flaaten said the new free legal aid system may encourage more women to press their cases once they file charges. Nevertheless, he said, women will qualify for free legal advice even if they don't report their mistreatment to the police.

The new system will give an abused women free advice from a lawyer before she reports the abuser, then during the process of reporting the case and at the subsequent police hearing.

The plan does not cover legal costs of actual court trials, but public funds still will pay for the victim to consult the state lawyer.

Other programs by the ministries of justice and social affairs demonstrate that, despite the lack of statistics, the government considers mistreatment of women a problem in Norway, as in many other countries.

At least 22 "crisis centers for mistreated women," financed partly by the state, operate around the clock in several cities. Staffed by women, the centers advise battered women on legal and medical matters, help them find emergency accommodations and arrange escorts to the police if a victim wants to report the case.

Radiology Associates of Midland

Dr. Bill Trotter has a large, active medical practice in his specialty of radiology. The needs of his patients leave him little time to serve as an employee benefits administrator for Radiology Associates of Midland.

That's where Tom Bruner, Executive Vice President & Trust Officer, helped out. He showed the advantages of having Texas American Bank professionally manage the association's employee benefit plan.

McNamara: Developing nations need trade

By WILLIAM GIANDONI
Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — Noting that he does "not blame the Reagan administration for something that has been happening for over a decade and a half," Robert S. McNamara earlier this week called on the major industrialized powers to encourage trade, credit and growth, with, for and in the developing nations of the world.

McNamara, former secretary of defense and president of the World Bank, spoke out in anticipation of the two-day Williamsburg summit conference later this month. Then President Reagan will host the heads of state of Japan, Britain, France, West Germany, Italy and Canada.

McNamara, now chairman of the Overseas Development Council (ODC), indicated that he does not expect much out of the May 28-30 meeting to be held in the colonial Virginia city.

In fact, no new action to restrict trade with developing nations was first on the list of recommendations McNamara voiced in the name of the ODC, an independent research organization that is working to increase American understanding of U.S. relations with the poorer countries.

McNamara said that ODC also called for an increase in the resources of the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank and regional development banks; increased commercial bank lending to non-oil developing countries; and "concessional assistance," long-term, low-interest financing, for low-income countries such as those in sub-Sahara Africa.

He cited facts and figures to buttress his thesis that "the developing countries, which will not be represented at the summit, are not only part of the problem, but must also be part of the solution" of the continuing global economic stagnation.

"The prospects for recovery in the United States have improved," ODC's statement said. But "near-term growth is not likely to be strong in Western Europe, Japan, or the developing nations."

"The dim prospects now facing many low-income countries can only improve if there is a significant increase in concessional assistance," and that is the responsibility of the United States and other industrialized powers.

ODC argued that "developing countries must expand their exports" to service their debts, "but they cannot do so if other countries raise restrictive trade barriers.

He disagreed with those who contend that U.S. and other foreign banks that lent heavily to the developing countries were mistaken, or that the borrowing countries were in error.

McNamara insisted that the banks and the developing countries were confronted with "major factors" that were not recognized as considerations "reasonable men would have based their decisions on."

Many would rather not retire, study shows

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

What are you going to do after you retire?

For many Americans, the answer is: Keep on working.

Whether you stay in your existing job or look for a new one, however, you probably will have to make some changes and it helps to plan in advance.

A survey conducted by the American Association of Retired Persons indicates that a lot of older people want to keep on working. More than one-third of those questioned who were already retired said they would rather be working. Almost three-fourths of those over 55 who were still on the job said they would prefer to continue working, even if they could afford to retire.

The Institute of Lifetime Learning, a division of the association, has published a guide, "Second Career Opportunities for Older Persons." It is available at no charge from the institute at 1909 K St. N.W., Washington, D.C., 20049.

The institute guide says that older people often have advantages in the workplace, including regular and punctual work habits; good writing, spelling and mathematical skills; and a mature attitude.

Most post-retirement workers, the guide says, get jobs in the same field they have always worked in. If you have already retired, "you might want to approach your former employer or similar company for a full or part-time position as consultant or trainer or a temporary assignment for staff who are ill or on vacation," the guide says.

Again, the older worker has an edge. "Your familiarity with the company or a similar job will provide you with an advantage over most temporary help."

If you have not retired — but are getting close to the day — consider retiring gradually. You may be able to work out a plan with your employer where you reduce your work time without reducing your pension benefits.

Before you decide what you want to do, ask yourself some questions.

—What is your background and what sort of resources do you have? What kind of special talents, hobbies or skills do you have which can be transferred to a career?

—How many years do you hope to work?

—Do you want a full-time job or a part-time one?

—What is your main reason for wanting to work? Is it financial or do you simply want to keep busy?

—Are your talents in demand by local companies? If not, what sort of training do you need?

The institute guide suggests several places where you can get help finding a job or learning about a new career. Among them:

—State departments of employment which offer free services including consultations with a counselor and workshops to improve job-hunting skills. Check the telephone book under state government listings.

—The Senior Community Service Program which provides part-time employment and training for low-income older persons. For further information, check your local agency on aging or write to: Office of National Programs for Older Workers, Employment Training Administration, Department of Labor, 601 D St. N.W., Room 6122, Washington, D.C., 20213.

—The Foster Grandparent Program and the Senior Companion Program which offer work opportunities to low-income people 60 and over. Participants work in institutions and private settings with children and adults. You can find out more by writing: ACTION, 806 Connecticut Ave. N.W., Washington, D.C., 20525.

The final responsibility for getting a job, of course, rests with you. "The more you do to promote yourself to prospective employers," the guide says, "the more likely you are to find a job."

Prepare a basic resume of your work experience to send to employers. The resume should be no more than two pages long, should be easy to read and should include your name, address, telephone number, employment objective, education or special training, experience in paid and unpaid work and special skills. When you mail a resume, include a cover letter explaining who you are and why you are interested in a particular job.

New hurricane warning system may not give sufficient time

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Weather Service will decide by the end of the month whether to adopt a new hurricane warning system it is considering because of single, unpleasant fact:

Weather officials cannot say with any certainty that a hurricane can be detected in enough time for a city to be evacuated.

A good example is Galveston, on the hurricane-vulnerable Texas Gulf Coast. Galveston is the site of the deadliest natural disaster in U.S history, a hurricane in 1900 that took 6,000 lives.

Currently, most hurricane warnings come between 12 and 16 hours before a storm actually hits land, according to Congress' General Accounting Office, which recently studied the problems of reacting to hurricanes.

But evacuation studies show it would take 26 hours to evacuate Galveston Island, according to Neil L. Frank, director of the National Hurricane Center in Miami.

Similar studies in five other areas of Florida and South Carolina, all vulnerable to hurricane damage, show evacuation times of from 20 to 30 hours, according to Frank.

"The numbers don't add up," Frank recently told a House Government Operations Subcommittee. "We now know it is going to take much more lead time for evacuation in six localities than the technology of hurricane forecasting can provide..."

Frank also said that "we have no reason to believe the problem will be less severe in other highly populated coastal areas."

The new warning system being considered by the Weather Service would, for the first time, provide "probability forecasts" to 44 communities in coastal states from Texas to Maine.

Other Texas communities on the list are Port Arthur, Port O'Connor, Corpus Christi and Brownsville.

The forecasts would tell residents of a community, in percentage terms, the probability that the center of an approaching hurricane or tropical storm would strike with 65 miles of their community.

For example, Galveston residents might be told that there was a 15 percent chance that the center of an approaching hurricane would hit within 65 miles of Galveston. The figure would be updated four times daily as the hurricane approached the coast.

To assess the threat to their community, residents would compare their probability figure with that for neighboring communities. They would also note changes in their probability figure as the storm moved closer.

"If you have the highest probability compared to your neighbor, and it's increasing in time, you are at the greatest risk," Jim Campbell, a Weather Service meteorologist, said in an interview.

Weather officials hope the new forecasts could be used as a tool by local officials and industrial leaders in making timely decisions on whether to evacuate.

The emphasis on improved evacuation planning comes, in part, because officials see no early improvements in the technology of predicting hurricane behavior.

And, according to such officials, the nation has become more vulnerable than ever to hurricane damage because of rapid population growth in coastal areas.

In Galveston, for example, where a 17-foot protective seawall was constructed following the 1900 disaster, major developments are being built out beyond the seawall, according to Frank.

Since 1960, the coastal population of the country has risen 34 percent, that of Texas 55 percent and that of Florida 85 percent, Elbert W. Friday Jr., a top Weather Service official, told the subcommittee.

To help counter the hurricane threat, the federal government has been stepping up its assistance to hurricane-vulnerable areas.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency has identified 22 high-risk areas nationwide. In 1981, the agency began providing money to help states and localities pay for hurricane preparedness studies for these areas, including analyses of the threat and evacuation plans.

The $6.7 million program is expected to be completed by 1988, according to the GAO.

Reagan administration to 'fine-tune' Freedom of Information Act

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Freedom of Information Act is going to be worked over again this week in Congress, this time with the Reagan administration apparently willing to settle for fine-tuning the law instead of pushing for wholesale changes.

Two bills to amend the 17-year-old law are before a subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

One, drafted by Chairman Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, is a 1982 retread of a compromise bill that did far less than the administration wanted. It passed the committee 17-0 but never made it to the Senate floor.

The other is being offered by Sen. Patrick J. Leahy, D-Vt., who said he wants to counter a Reagan administration policy "that promotes secrecy as the norm dominating transactions with the government."

The Freedom of Information Act, a law since 1966, gives anyone access to all records of federal agencies unless those records fall within nine categories of exempt information.

Reagan railed against the law as a candidate and he's been trying to change it as a president, in some instances doing through administrative action what he couldn't do legislatively.

In January, for example, the Justice Department issued new guidelines designed to force more people to pay fees for documents obtained under the law. In a memo six weeks earlier, Joseph Wright of the Office of Management and Budget said "we anticipate ... a policy that strictly and narrowly interprets the provision" on fee waivers.

The new guidelines say government documents are to be provided free of charge or at a reduced charge only when release of the information "can be considered as primarily benefiting the general public."

Last year, Reagan signed an executive order making it easier to classify documents. It allowed use of the secrecy stamp even if possible damage to national security was not "identifiable," and deleted President Carter's mandate that officials must weigh the public interest in disclosure against possible damage to national security.

The administration has complained that the act helps organized crime to discover what the government knows about it, allows a firm's commercial secrets to be passed on to competitors, discloses government investigative techniques to potential lawbreakers, permits invasion of privacy and costs too much to fill requests — $57 million in 1980 alone.

When he introduced his "FOIA Improvement Act of 1983" last month, Leahy said the act has become so important that "it is difficult for me to remember that FOIA is only a statute and not part of the Constitution."

But, he said, "the act is only another statute on the books and the current administration has given ample warning that it is one statute it would like to see weakened or even crippled."

Last year, the administration wanted amendments to restrict access to law enforcement, intelligence and business records held by the government. CIA Director William Casey called the act a "self-inflicted wound ... that now gives foreign intelligence agencies and anyone else a license to poke in our files."

The Senate Judiciary Committee, however, wasn't in the mood for such drastic changes and Hatch accepted amendments that helped protect sensitive information without greatly eroding the public's right to know. Allan Adler, counsel for the American Civil Liberties Union said the committee handed "a pretty strong setback" to the Reagan forces.

This time around, the administration asked for no changes. In fact, Assistant Attorney General Jonathan C. Rose praised the proposed amendments in a hearing as being "among the most carefully drafted examples of remedial legislation I have seen."

Adler says the administration "has apparently abandoned its position ... urging highly restrictive rewriting of the act. They developed a pragmatic political sense of what is possible to do in Congress, what they can justify to Congress."

Even if the bill passes the Judiciary Committee and the Senate, it is likely to face a cool reception in the House. Rep. Glenn English, D-Okla., chairman of the House subcommittee that would receive the legislation, says "I haven't noticed much enthusiasm on the House side for any significant changes this year."

Leahy's proposal would permit businesses that submit confidential information to the government to receive notice of its impending disclosure, allow the government to recoup more of the costs of processing many information requests and stretch the time limits for the government to respond to those requests.

Opposing major changes in the law are the ACLU, major press associations, various consumer groups, historians, and others concerned about efforts to make it tougher to get information.

Adler says two provisions in the Hatch version of the bill are unacceptable — one that would create new exemptions for technological information, the other would eliminate use of FOIA by foreigners and felons.

Leahy says he fully supports the Hatch bill "and will lend my voice in its support when it comes up for debate in its current language." He says his bill focuses on helping requesters of information.

Leahy says the bill would strengthen the standards that allow fees to be waived for news media and non-profit groups who intend to make information available to the public, and would make time limits for the government to respond to requests "more realistic and enforced more vigorously."

Former policeman turned writer wants to shed old 'cop' image

NEW YORK (AP) — The Bad Czech was drinking enough booze to kill a water buffalo, and Rumpled Ronald was counting down the hours, minutes and seconds to his retirement from the police force.

It was Mother's Day at the House of Misery.

Where else, author Joseph Wambaugh tells us, would the misfit cops of his latest novel, "The Delta Star," be on a holiday but in the local bar where they spend most of their time destroying their livers and dashing their dreams?

Though they are the very soul of Wambaugh's books, these law enforcement characters have mired the writer in an image he says he'd like to shed. Wambaugh, a 14-year veteran of the Los Angeles Police Department, is tired of the tag, "former cop who became a writer," and wants to be known simply as a writer.

"It seems to me that that world has built-in drama and that appeals to me," he says. "I'm interested in guilt and in the concept of guilt. I'm interested in stress and who has it. I can deal with these things in that genre."

Wambaugh has discovered in his last few works that he doesn't have to draw only on his police experience. He can go beyond that now and do research in other areas.

"I started out with 'Delta Star' to write a book about Cal Tech (the California Institute of Technology)," he said.

Dallas newspaper's study says risk misrepresented

DALLAS (AP) — An Environmental Protection Agency report understated by two-thirds the public health problems in lead-contaminated neighborhoods, according to a study by the Dallas Times Herald.

The newspaper reported Monday that its study found 18.8 percent of the preschool children in the area of greatest contamination suffered from lead toxicity.

The EPA, in conjunction with the city and the federal Centers for Disease Control, announced Feb. 1 that a 10-month study of children living within half a mile of the RSR Corp. lead smelter found 5.6 percent suffering from lead toxicity.

The newspaper said its study of soil-lead and blood-lead data supplied by the city and the EPA supports criticism by some EPA officials that the results of the government analysis were diluted by including samples taken from children living outside the area of greatest contamination.

Dr. Norman Dyer, the chief of the EPA's regional toxic substances office, and Dr. Bill McAnalley, a former EPA toxicologist, have said the EPA study should have concentrated on children who lived downwind from the smelter.

The newspaper said when the blood tests of only those children in the area of greatest concern — where soil tests found what the EPA defines as "potentially hazardous" levels of 1,000 parts of lead per million — are considered, the percentage suffering from lead toxicity is 18.8 percent.

The newspaper's study also found that 34.4 percent of the preschoolers living in the most contaminated area had elevated blood lead levels. The EPA study said 10.5 percent of the children in its testing area had elevated blood lead levels.

"That's a very significant extent of contamination," said Dyer about the newspaper's findings. "It points out a problem much more serious and extensive than what our initial release indicated."

The Times Herald said its analysis is not scientificaly valid because of limited information provided by the city's Department of Health and Human Services. But it said neither city nor federal officials took issue with the general conclusions of the study.

City health officials provided the Times Herald with blood lead data gathered last summer for 270 children living within a half mile of the smelter. The data were listed by street and by the block on chich the child lived.

The EPA considers 1,000 parts per million of lead in soil as potentially hazardous. Some lead experts consider 300 ppm of lead in soil harmful.

The newspaper study found six of the 32 children in an area where soil lead averaged 1,000 ppm suffered from led toxicity and 11 had elevated blood lead levels.

"That is about what I would have predicted," said Dyer. "When you focus on the contaminated areas you see dramatic increases in blood lead levels."

Lead toxicity indicates chronic exposure to lead, and elevated blood lead leavals indicate recent exposure. Exposure to lead can cause learning disabilities, anemia, headaches, cramps and other physical problems in children, according to CDC officials.

Allyn Davis, director of the EPA's air and hazardous materials section, said it was a "moot question" whether the agency's study minimized the health problem, because the city is moving forward on EPA and CDC recommendations to clean up the area and reduce the danger of exposure to lead.

The newspaper study also found 7.7 percent of the 197 children living in areas contaminated with 300 ppm of lead were suffering from lead toxicity and 13.2 percent had elevated blood lead levels.

The EPA study of 49 percent of the children living within half a mile of the smelter found 5.6 percent suffered from lead toxicity and 10.5 percent had elevated blood levels.

The newspaper, using city records, also identified one more case of lead toxicity and three more cases of elevated blood lead levels than reported by the EPA.

Joseph Carra, an EPA statistician in Washington, said the discrepancies were due to different handling of the data by the city and EPA, such as how figures were rounded off.

He also questioned the precision of the newspaper study because of the small sample size of the population in the 1,000 ppm contamination area.

Smokers 'chew' habit with nicotine-laced gum

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Today there are an estimated 55 million smokers in the United States — that is the equivalent of the entire U.S. population during Twain's heyday in the 1880s — and most find it no easier to quit than the cigar-smoking humorist.

In a paradoxical twist, however, smokers may soon find that the same nicotine that reinforces and strengthens their desire to smoke may help them kick their habit.

The Food and Drug Administration appears to be nearing the completion of its study of Nicorette, a nicotine-laced chewing gum that has been shown in British studies to be about twice as effective as other stop-smoking methods. Pending FDA approval, the gum would be available by prescription only.

The gum, which was developed in Sweden and is available in Britain, Canada and parts of Europe, is intended to be used only temporarily as a weaning device: It is designed to minimize nicotine withdrawal symptoms while a person overcomes the psychological habit of smoking.

"No other program separates the two," said Dr. Michael Fox, a member of Pulmonary Consultants of Orange County, Calif., and one of the gum's boosters.

"Whenever you have an urge to smoke, that's when you use the gum," explained Fox. "It tastes terrible — it's bitter — and they tell you that. It won't give you pleasure, but it will maintain your nicotine level and will take care of your craving."

A spokesman for the FDA, which has been studying Nicorette for two years, refused to speculate on when it might reach a decision on the gum. But about 20 separate domestic studies of the gum have been completed or are near completion, according to a spokesman for Cincinnati-based Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, which would market the gum.

Fox, who is on the staff of Anaheim (Calif.) Memorial Hospital, first heard about the nicotine gum last fall at an American College of Chest Physicians convention in Toronto, Canada.

'Rubber capital' becoming high-technology capital

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Once known as the "Rubber Capital of the World," Akron is undergoing a sometimes painful struggle to trade its sooty, blue-collar past for a high-tech "Polymer Valley" image.

Car and truck tire manufacturing, once the city's trademark, has moved to the Sunbelt. But the technology-conscious corporate headquarters of Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., B.F. Goodrich Co., Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. and General Tire Co. remain.

"If we wanted things to be the way they were, we wouldn't survive," says Don Stephens, president of the Akron Regional Development Board. "We're going from the industrial age, as we knew it, into a high-technology age. We either move into that new age or die as a force in the world market."

Longtime Akron residents recall a feeling of well-being in the city's once pungent air. Air pollution was a sign of jobs.

In the late 1950s, Akron had 275,000 residents and 65 percent of its workers held blue-collar jobs. At their peak, tire factories employed more than 50,000 workers, many of whom came from rural poverty areas.

Now the air is clean, but tire production has ceased. The population is down to 235,000, as unskilled laborers look for work or leave to find it elsewhere.

"...Everybody can't be a researcher, a developer, a lawyer or a doctor. You have to have some people who work. Back when you could smell the rubber, you knew people were working."

By contrast, young engineers and chemists are finding growing employment opportunities in Akron.

"If I had to identify a single major capital improvement in Akron, this probably is the most significant," says Robert Edwards, Akron's deputy mayor for economic development.

Edwars says 65 percent ofAkron's workforce is made up of white-collar workers in service or research jobs. Tire and rubber companies develop test tires and do research in tire engineering, while diversifying into other fields.

"I hope that by the 1990s, we will have shed the national image as a smokestack center, because, actually, we are not that now," Edwards says. "I expect we will be recognized as a research area and as a community that has been able to make a transition and position itself for the 21st century."

When Joseph Daniele got a job at a Firestone tire factory in 1951, he joined United Rubber Workers Local 7, which had about 11,000 members. Now he is in his sixth year as president of the local, and says he has 220 members working and another 200 awaiting recall.

"We've been hearing for years that this is going to be a high-tech, service town," Daniele says. "Everybody can't be a researcher, a developer, a lawyer or a doctor. You have to have some people who work. Back when you could smell the rubber, you knew people were working."

He says the changes have tragically affected many lives.

"Many people have cracked under the strain," he says.

"They say Akron is better for the changes. I say Akron is no different than any other city that loses thousands of jobs."

GIANT STEP 10

If you are an adult who did not finish high school, here's your chance to receive a High School Equivalency Certificate by preparing for the GED test right in your own home by completing the twelve lessons which are appearing in The Midland Reporter-Telegram Sundays and Wednesdays for six weeks. Take a GIANT STEP!

SCIENCE

The GED Science Test will contain eight to ten reading passages dealing with biology, earth science, chemistry, and physics. Most of the questions on the test are on these passages. Other questions, called discrete items, are based on a general understanding of science and do not follow a reading passage. Some of the science questions, will be based on interpreting graphic selections (diagrams, charts, tables, and graphs.) The same basic skills required for reading comprehension that were used in Reading Skills will apply to Science and its discrete items.

DISCRETE ITEMS

The discrete selections on the GED Science Test will not ask you for specific facts or details but rather measure your understanding of basic concepts of science.

EXAMPLE

Which of the following pairs of substances has the same chemical composition?
(A) kerosene and diesel fuel
(B) ice and steam
(C) steel and bronze
(D) butter and lard
(E) perfume and cologne

The key words in the previous question were "the same chemical compositon." You probably know that both ice and steam are made up of water. Don't be misled by the fact that one is in solid form and the other is in gaseous form.

PROBLEM 1.
Any appliance that converts electricity to heat uses large amounts of electrical power. Therefore, the greatest amount of electrical power is used by a
(A) television.
(B) lamp.
(C) stereo.
(D) toaster.
(E) clock.

PROBLEM 2
Doctors are not sure what causes aplastic anemia, but for most persons who get well, their recovery is due to
(A) unknown reasons.
(B) sterile conditions.
(C) blood transfusions.
(D) chemotherapy.
(E) shock treatments.

PROBLEM 3.
A relationship that is of mutual benefit to both animals exists between the
(A) cat and mouse.
(B) lion and zebra.
(C) rabbit and wolf.
(D) termite and microscopic animals in its digestive tract.
(E) tent caterpillar and wasp.

THE HUMAN PUMPING SYSTEM

The human heart is a very efficient fluid pump. It is located between the lungs in a compartment called the mediastinum.

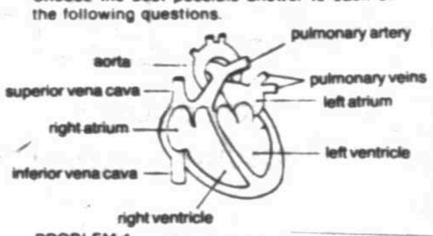

The chambers of the heart are composed of two atria and two ventricles. The atrium and ventricle of the left side are separated from the atrium and ventricle of the right side by partitions.

Blood leaves the lungs after exchanging respiratory gases and enters the left atrium through the pulmonary veins. From the left atrium, blood then goes to the left ventricle through another valve system. From the left ventricle, blood is moved to the body through the aorta.

Heart muscle is very active and requires a large volume of blood. This blood is supplied by special vessels called coronary arteries. If the coronary arteries become blocked by a clot or plug, the blood does not reach the heart muscles. This condition, called a coronary occlusion, may lead to the death of some of the heart tissue. A coronary occlusion may be fatal if it occurs in a major artery.

The basic pattern of blood circulation is from the heart to the arteries, to the capillaries, to the veins, and back to the heart. Choose the best possible answer to each of the following questions.

PROBLEM 1.
The heart is located in the
(A) aorta.
(B) mediastinum.
(C) superior vena cava.
(D) atrium.

PROBLEM 2.
The chambers of the heart are composed of
(A) one atrium and two ventricles.
(B) two ventricles and two atria.
(C) two atria and one ventricle.
(D) none of the above.

PROBLEM 3.
Most of the blood from the body flows into the right atrium through the
(A) aorta.
(B) liver.
(C) ventricle.
(D) superior and inferior vena cava.

PROBLEM 4.
The blood in the right atrium moves into the right ventricle through
(A) a valve.
(B) a partition.
(C) the vena cava.
(D) none of the above.

PROBLEM 5.
A coronary occlusion may result in
(A) death.
(B) the death of heart tissue.
(C) blood not reaching a portion of the heart tissue.
(D) all of the above.

PROBLEM 6.
The basic pattern of blood circulation is
(A) heart—arteries—veins—capillaries
(B) heart—veins—capillaries—arteries
(C) heart—arteries—capillaries—veins
(D) heart—lungs—veins—arteries

READING PASSAGES

Read the following selection. Then choose the best possible answer to each of the questions which follow.

Ocean water rises twice a day along most shores to produce high tides. It is said to be flooding as it pushes over low-lying rocks and sloping beaches.

In most places, the ocean drops back or ebbs twice a day, leaving standing water in tidal pools. These pools of standing water are rich in a variety of organisms.

Under loose stones or debris, mollusks, crabs, and other animals seek shelter. Tiny fish dart back and forth across the bottom. Many of these fish appear to be clinging to stones. On the lower part of their bodies, they have fins which are joined together to form a sucker. These little fish are called gobies or mudskippers.

Another tidal pool fish is called a Blenny. Blennies look like gobies, but they do not have a well-developed sucker on the underside. They creep about in shallow water, using their fins as legs.

PROBLEM 1.
If the water is flooding, the water is
(A) going out to make high tide
(B) coming in to make low tide
(C) coming in to make high tide
(D) going out to make low tide

PROBLEM 2.
If the ocean water is ebbing, the water is
(A) going out to make low tide
(B) going out to make high tide
(C) coming in to make low tide
(D) coming in to make high tide

PROBLEM 3.
Gobies have
(A) their mouths formed into a sucker
(B) to use their fins as legs
(C) their fins on their lower underside formed into a sucker
(D) no well-developed sucker on the underside

PROBLEM 4.
Blennies are common tidal pool animals that
(A) have no sucker mouths
(B) have no well-developed sucker on the underside, but creep about using their fins as legs
(C) have their fins on the lower underside formed into a sucker.
(D) are called mud skippers

PASSAGE 2.

Glass is manufactured from the following materials: sand, soda, limestone, or chalk. Chemically, glass consists of silicates with alkaline and alkaline-earth oxides. When the materials in their correct proportions are melted, care must be taken that they do not crystallize or solidify while cooling.

Many, many formulas for the manufacture of glass exist. One such is the following: 59 parts quartz sand, 17 parts soda, 15 parts dolomite (calcium-magnesium carbonate), 4½ parts limestone, 3 parts sodium sulphate and carbon and 1½ parts feldspar. These materials are mixed together. About 20 to 30 percent of waste glass or cullet is added, and this is melted in huge furnaces sometimes containing as much as two tons of material.

First, the soda and cullet added to the mixture melt. Melting soda forms low-melting alkali silicates with the sand. These further react with the high-melting ingredients and form the final glass melt. Carbon dioxide is expelled during melting and at the end of the melting process when the temperature is raised slightly.

The melting process is carried at temperatures of 1400 to 1500 degrees centigrade. Elements in the glass that are undesirable, such as discoloration, are removed by the addition of manganese dioxide, antimony oxide and arsenic.

To produce colored glass, metallic oxides such as iron, copper, manganese or chromium are added. Thick, liquid melted glass is formed to the desired shapes by casting, drawing, rolling, molding, blowing, spinning, or pressing. The process, once done by hand, is now done mainly by machines. However, special kinds of glass such as those used for expensive tableware or for technical or scientific purposes, are still hand manufactured and in small quantities.

1. All but one of the following are added during the manufacture of glass to produce color: a) copper b) feldspar c) chromium d) manganese.

2. During the melting process a) cullet is formed b) alkali silicates with sand are formed c) carbon dioxide is expelled d) the glass crystalizes.

3. Glass consists of a) copper, manganese and chromium b) silicates with alkaline and alkaline-earth oxides c) cullet and low-melting alkali d) metallic oxides.

4. At the end of the melting process a) thick, liquid melted glass is formed b) discoloration takes place c) oxygen is given off d) the temperature is raised slightly.

5. The melting process takes place at a) 500 degrees-600 degrees centigrade b) 300 degrees-400 degrees Farenheit c) 1400 degrees-1500 degrees centigrade d) 600 degrees-700 degrees Farenheit.

MIAMI (AP) — A tanned Prince Charles and Princess Diana waved to onlookers as they stepped off a private jet at Miami International Airport after a 10-day holiday in the Bahamas.

The royal couple shook hands with bystanders briefly Tuesday night before boarding a British Airways flight back to London.

About 30 reporters and onlookers crowded the edge of an airport sun roof to take pictures or catch a glimpse of Charles, in a gray pinstripe suit, and Diana, in a bright yellow dress with a ruffled neckline and ruffled sleeves.

The rest of the passengers on Flight 295, many of whom didn't know the heir to the British throne would be flying with them, had boarded the airplane earlier from a door on the other side of the plane.

Solzhenitsyn

LONDON (AP) — Exiled Soviet writer Alexander Solzhenitsyn has received the $170,000 Templeton Prize for Progress in Religion and promptly condemned last year's winner, the Rev. Billy Graham.

Prince Philip, husband of Queen Elizabeth II, presented the prize to Solzhenitsyn at Buckingham Palace on Tuesday.

Then the 64-year-old Nobel Prize-winning author made a rare public appearance, speaking in Russian before an international audience of 500 at London's 15th century Guildhall.

Soltzhenitsyn accused Graham of lending "public support to Communist lies by his deplorable statement that he had not noticed the persecution of religion in the USSR."

"Before the multitude of those who have perished and who are oppressed today, may God be his judge," said Solzhenitsyn, who has lived in the United States since his exile from the Soviet Union in 1974.

The American evangelist said in Moscow that "at the churches which are open, of which there are thousands, they seem to have the liberty to have worship services ...

"There are differences, of course, between religion as it is practiced here and, let's say, in the United States. But that doesn't mean there is no religious freedom."

LONDON (AP) — Despite two miscarriages, actress Liza Minelli says she is perfectly healthy and still hoping to have a child.

At a news conference in London, where she's about to open in a salute to her film director father, Vincente Minelli, Miss Minelli, 37, said she and husband Mark Gero, a sculptor and producer, want to try again soon.

"Last year, the doctors found out what was wrong with me and told me there was no reason why I should not have children," said Miss Minelli, daughter of the late singer Judy Garland. "But I will have to get on with it.

"I love children and first I would like one of my own. Then I would like to adopt."

Miss Minelli is giving 19 performances at London's Apollo Victoria theater before taking it to Broadway. She performs hit songs from her father's most famous films, including "Gigi" and "An American in Paris."

Farr, 46, has a bachelor's degree in film from Columbia College in Los Angeles.

WAILUKU, Hawaii (AP) — Jazz guitarist George Benson and a New York lawyer have found themselves out of harmony over the refurbishing of a boat.

Benson, 40, a resident of the island of Maui, will testify in a suit filed by attorney Philip Cole Jr. and his son, Philip Cole III.

They contend the musician broke a charter boat contract after promising to pay for putting their 42-foot commercial fishing boat into dry dock for extensive renovations in 1979.

Benson had signed a contract to charter the boat, the Hood, for two years and to pay maintenance costs plus $1,000 a month to the younger Cole to operate the boat.

The suit centers on whether Benson and the Coles later agreed to cancel the charter contract and the outstanding drydock costs.

MOSCOW (AP) — Joseph P. Kennedy II, son of the late Robert Kennedy, is on a three-day business trip to the Soviet capital, but his first priority was getting something to eat.

A hotel administrator said the 30-year-old Kennedy put his bags in his room Tuesday night, asked where a restaurant and Red Square were, and left immediately.

Kennedy is visting on behalf of Citizens Energy Corp., which he founded. He is president of the non-profit company established in 1979 to provide low-cost heating oil to poor and elderly Massachusetts residents.

'60 Minutes' slander suit opens with 'Rather' strong statement

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A doctor's attorney launched a $90 million slander case against Dan Rather, CBS and "60 Minutes" by describing the newsman as "an actor who misrepresents the truth," but an attorney for the network questioned the plaintiff's facts.

The suit, filed by Dr. Carl Galloway, charges a Dec. 9, 1979, report on the popular weekly TV newsmagazine program implied the physician participated in schemes to collect insurance claims for trumped-up accidents by signing false medical reports.

"Dan Rather is not a reporter but an actor who misrepresents the truth and presents it to the public," attorney Bruce Friedman said Tuesday in opening arguments for the lawsuit.

Rather, who is now anchorman and managing editor for CBS' nightly network newscast, was the reporter for the 18-minute segment.

CBS attorney William Vaughn said in his opening arguments he would introduce evidence "that will place Dr. Galloway's version of the facts in question." Rather is to take the stand in his own defense.

The segment, entitled "It's No Accident," showed an allegedly bogus medical report with what was purported to be Galloway's signature. But the doctor says the signature was a forgery and that he had left the clinic where the report was issued more than a month before he is alleged to have signed the document.
