BODY OF MAN FOR WHOM CALLAHAN COUNTY WAS NAMED REBURIED IN STATE CEMETERY

By RAYMOND BROOKS

AUSTIN, Jan. 24. — Two aged pioneers of Blancho county, who remembered from their boyhood the legends and the traditions of the lost town of Pittsburg, once the county seat, led Lou Kemp to a little mound of rocks in the cedar hills a mile from the town of Blanco.

"This is it," said Joe A. Speer, aged druggist.

"Yes, that's it," agreed Thomas Durham, Blanco septuagenarian.

It was the long-lost grave of of James Hughes Callahan, Indian fighter in the Republic of Texas, captain of a company of Minute Men, defender of the people against the redskins, volunteer and lieutenant in Wells expedition into Mexico.

Under Kemp's dircetion, Thurlow B. Wood of Austin went to Blanco to exhume the body. He went to Speer, but Speer wouldn't go a step toward the grave until Durham was found and accompanied him.

Body Exhumed

Callahan's body was exhumed. That of his wife, and that of his three-year-old son, William Mitford Callahan, also were taken from graves beneath the same pile of weather-beaten rocks. Callahan had been buried there 75 years next April 7, his wife and child 74 years.

Saturday afternoon, the moulded bones of the three, all in a single casket, were reburied in the Arlington of Texas, the state cemetery, under direction of Mr. Kemp, chairman of the state historical and landmark commission. Many members of the legislature attended.

Exercises were in charge of the Daughters of the Republic of Texas. The Rev. Daniel N. Crieder, Austin Presbyterian minister, offered the invocation. Rep. Victor B. Gilbert of Cisco, representative of the county named in honor of the dead Indian fighter, made the memorial address.

Gilbert's Address

"Today we meet with bowed heads and reverent hands," Mr. Gilbert said, "to recommit to the soil he loved so dearly and for which he gave so much. the remains of Capt. James Hughes Callahan, for whom and in whose honor Callahan county, with Baird its county seat, was named. And with him we bury the members of his devoted family.

"May those who pass this way or read the domantic pages of our history, be constantly reminded that ours is a history of freemen who have lived under six flags, who have battled for the cause of liberty against overwhelming odds, and, recalling their offers, whose fruits we enjoy, resolve that the peace, prosperity and happiness of the people of Texas shall never fail."

Standing beside the new grave in the state cemetery as Mr. Gilbert made the funeral eulogy was Mrs. W. E. Ford of Georgetown, descendant relative of the Callahan family.

Mr. Gilbert sketched in the vivid picture of the life of action the high adventures and heroic deeds of Callahan, and the dramatic and tragic death that was his.

TWO HELD IN RECOVERY OF STOLEN CARS

County Has Minor Crime Wave During Past Week

Two new Ford cars, stolen from the Lavielle-Maher Motor company at Ranger when that institution was broken into Friday night, a week ago, have been recovered. One of the cars was found in a garage at a vacant house in Cisco Friday afternoon by Ranger Chief of Police Jim Ingram, Deputy Sheriff Loss Woods of Eastland and Deputy Sheriff John Barnes of Ranger and local officers.

The other car was recovered at Fort Worth by Fort Worth police and two men arrested in connection, according to a telephone call from Chief Jackson of the Fort Worth police to Ranger Chief Ingram. The arrested men, who face charges of car theft and burglary, are Brock Owen and Luther Helms. Helms, according to county officials, is of no relation to Henry Helms, Cisco bank bandit executed at Huntsville. The car recovered at Fort Worth was a town sedan.

In the car recovered at Fort Worth police said, dies, such as are used to change the motor numbers on cars and new files were found. Chief Ingram will go to Fort Worth today to return the two men to Eastland county.

During the past week the county has experienced a minor crime wave of burglaries. Wednesday evening a store at Scranton was robbed. A Ford hub cap was found near the scene and one of the caps belonging to the car recovered here Friday afternoon was missing. Among the loot taken from the Scranton store was a quantity of walnuts and some walnuts were found in the car recovered here, officers said.

Thursday evening the depot at Olden was burlarized and loot consisting in part of canned milk and lard taken.

WORK BEGUN ON NEW ROAD AT LAKE CISCO

Right-of-way for the rebuilding of the road from the south end of Williamson dam to the city zoo and the swimming pool at the lake has been cleared and a large force of men was put to work Saturday afternoon cutting away the hillside for the new route. Instead of curving sharply and dropping directly down to the pool as the present road does the new route will follow the side of the hill straight east to intersect with the zoo road at the northwest corner of the deer park. The grade will be reduced to about 7 per cent.

Several weeks of work will be required. Convict labor is being used but City Engineer J. G. Reagan said that two or three local teams will be employed together with a powder man.

A Big Job Gets a Little Man

The biggest state in the union got the smallest of state officials when Charley Lockhart of Austin was sworn in as treasurer of Texas. Lockhart, who told the voters in the campaign that his "arms were too short to reach very far into the sack," is only 47 inches tall. He is shown here, standing on a chair, as he took the oath of office from Judge F. L. Hawkins.

LITTLE HOPE IS HELD OUT FOR RECOVERY

Eastland Man Injured in Gas Well Blowout Near Here

No hope was held Saturday night for the recovery of M. J. Bourland, 31, welder, who was injured when the control head of a gas well on the Texas Public Utilities company's Martin lease, one mile northeast of here, blew out Saturday morning while crews were changing the master gates. Guy Robinson, who was less seriously injured in the blast, is recovering. He sustained bruises, but no broken bones.

Bourland was brought to Cisco for treatment. He has fractures of the left ankle, left leg, and right elbow, a compound fracture of the right forearm, internal injuries and is suffering from shock. He was hurled a distance of 50 feet by the blowcut. Bourland lives on rural route No. 5 near Eastland. Robinson's home is also at Eastland.

Reports of the accident received by the Daily News said Bourland and a number of others were working to change master gates on the well, a drill stem having become twisted in the gate in use at the time. A valve underneath the gate, used to control the rock pressure had not become completely closed, it was said. Rock pressure in the well registered 1250 pounds and the improperly closed valve allowed a considerable part of this pressure to force itself into the mastergate. All but two of the bolts on one side of the gate had been removed when the pressure forced the gate, breaking off the flange in which the bolts still held and hurling Mr. Bourland northward from the well about 50 feet. Others on the floor were not in the path of the pressure and received no injuries with the exception of Mr. Robinson.

The accident occurred about 9 o'clock Saturday morning.

FIVE KILLED IN WRECK OF FAST FLYER

HELENWOOD, Tenn., Jan. 24. — At least five persons were killed and two score injured today when the "Suwanee Special" crack Cincinnati to Florida flyer of the Chattanooga - New Orleans and Texas Pacific railroad leaped the rails and piled into a jumbled mass of wreckage two miles south of here.

The dead: H. A. Lindle, Somerset, Kentucky, engineer; Charles Sexton, Sunbright, Tenn., fireman; Mrs. L. O. Cowgill, New Paris, Indiana and Tampa, Florida; Mrs. Charles E. Reinhart, San Diego, California, and Mrs. J. O. Markley, Cleveland, O.

One survivor said the first intimation he had of the impending crash was when "our car seemed to fly into the air and we passed the locomotive of our own train." Some of the wrecked cars plowed 400 feet beyond where the engine was buried in the bluff.

A refugee train arrived from Chattanooga shortly after the wreck and carried the extricated dead and the injured to Chattannoga.

Brief reports from survivors indicated the train was travelling at a fast clip down grade but that it rounded a turn shortly before leaving the tracks. Every car of the train left the rails and turned over. Tracks for several hundred feet were torn up.

Cemetery Archway Completed Saturday

The archway at the cemetery was completed Saturday and work is ready to start on the rock fence as soon as funds for this construction can be obtained. Practically all of the money available has been spent and the cemetery committee is making an appeal to public-spirited citizens for contributions with which to carry on the project. Contributions may be mailed to the city secretary.

City Engineer J. G. Reagan invites the public to visit the cemetery and inspect the archway.

LIONESS KILLS BABY; TRAINER IS CHARGED

SAN ANTONIO, Jan. 24.—C. Coley, animal trainer today faced charges of negligent homicide and his circus lioness was dead following the killing of Viola Friesen, 2, last night.

Coley lived with the Friesen family and staked the mountain animal in the yard. Late yesterday the baby followed her brother, Harry, 16, and her sister, Sarah, 13 into the yard when the latter went to bring in clothes.

The lioness struck down the baby, dragged her to its kennel and crushed her head in its jaws despite frantic efforts of the brother and sister to beat the animal away with sticks of stove-wood. They aroused the neighborhood with their screams.

Not until Coley rushed out of the house and killed the lioness with an axe could the child's body be rescued. The baby still showed signs of life and was rushed to a hospital where it was pronounced dead a few minutes later. The claws of the lioness tore the baby's jugular vein. Coley blamed a red sweater worn by the baby for the attack. The lioness was considered tame and had been a winter pet of the Friesen children. The animal originally had come from Mexico.

Coley surrendered to police voluntarily.

Cisco Merchants Birth Calendar.

Cisco merchants are going to give presents to the first baby born on each day of the month during 1931.

A page will be devoted to advertising and listing of merchants who will give presents. Each merchant takes a day of the month and tells what present he will give the baby, or parents of the baby, born on his day. For instance, a baby born on the first day of the month will receive a present from the merchant whose ad appears on that particular day of the calendar page. In case there is more than one baby born on a day, doctor's certificates may be used to establish which was born first. These births must be reported within ten days of their occurrence.

The calendar for January is being published today but hereafter, the page will be published in the first issue of the month. Watch for them so that you will know who is participating and what is being offered.

Farmer Conserving Moistiure in Soil

As a means of conserving moisture H. K. Agnew is contouring about 60 acres of his farm in the Bluff Branch community, laying out rows against the slope of the land in such a way that the rows are kept level and the wash of the soil prevented.

Experiments at the Spur agricultural station have revealed that 20 per cent of the moisture that falls in this section is lost because of the light nature of the rains, and that another 20 per cent drains off. Mr. Agnew is endeavoring to save the latter loss. He is also guarding against the washing of his soil, Spur station experiments proving that cotton land with a two per cent slope, loses about 20 tons of soil per acre annually through washing.

LOCAL PENNEY MANAGER GOES TO CONVENTION

P. B. Glenn, manager of the J. C. Penney Co., store in this city is leaving today to attend the annual spring convention of that organization to be held at Dallas.

Owing to the new conditions in the department store field which have been brought about by drastic reductions in commodity prices, the convention, which is usually held in April, has been moved ahead to give all J. C. Penney company store managers an opportunity to get full advantages of the new merchandising and price policies of the company.

Price reductions running as high as forty percent in many staple lines of merchandise handled by the organization, have already been announced and further announcements regarding new price and quality standards may be expected according to Mr. P. B. Glenn.

Eight Points

Eight general convention points have been selected for the spring meetings, covering all parts of the country, the eastern tour being under the direction of Mr. A. W. Hughes, assistant to Earl C. Sams, president of the Penney organization, and the western tour under the direction of George Mitchell of the Personnel Division of the New York office.

J. C. Penney, founder of the J. C. Penney company, will make the trip on the western schedule, and Lew V. Day, vice president and Director of Personnel will make the eastern trip.

How Niagara Looks Since Rocks Broke Off

The greatest change in the contour of Niagara Falls in the memory of man was caused when thousands of tons of stone, undermined by the constant erosion of the waters, broke off from the parapet in the American falls and tumbled to the gorge below. The breakage left a U-shaped indentation approximately 150 feet wide and 15 to 200 feet deep. This shows how the new contour of the American falls looks from Luna Island. The dotted line shows where the old crest ran.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

THE TEMPTATION OF JESUS

Text: Luke 4:1-13

And Jesus, being full of the Holy Ghost, returned from the Jordan, and was led by the Spirit into the wilderness.

Being 40 days, being tempted of the devil. And in those days he did eat nothing: and when they were ended, he afterward hungered.

And the devil said unto him, If thou be the Son of God, command this stone that it be made bread.

And Jesus answered unto him, saying, It is written, That man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God.

And the devil, taking him up, into an high mountain, shewed unto him all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time.

And the devil said unto him. All this power I give thee, and the glory of them: for that is delivered unto me; and to whomsoever I will give it.

If thou therefore wilt worship before me, all shall be thine.

And Jesus answered and said unto him, Get thee behind me, Satan: for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve.

And he brought him to Jerusalem, and set him on a pinnacle of the temple, and said unto him, If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down from hence:

For it is written, He shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee:

And in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone.

And Jesus answering said unto him, It is said, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God.

And when the devil had ended all the temptation, he departed from him for a season.

The International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for Jan. 25. Jesus Tempted. Luke 4:1-13.

By WM. E. GILROY, D. D.
Editor of The Congregationalist

If Jesus was in all points tempted like as we are, as a later New Testament writer asserts, the temptations of life were not confined to one period. The fact is that much of the keenest temptation would seem to have come near the end of his career when he was apparently tempted to turn from the way of the cross.

The three temptations that are recorded at the beginning of the ministry of Jesus, commonly called "the temptation of Jesus," seem to be recorded because of their symbolic meaning. Whatever may have been the temptation from without, the reality of each temptation was evidently found in that inward prompting that came to Jesus to turn from the way of holiness and supreme devotion to the ministry of salvation to some more worldly career and achievement.

Proved His Humanity

The temptations that assailed the Master were probably all like the temptations that assail even saints and prohpets in their periods of strain or discouragement. Is goodness as real as it seems? the tempter asks. Is the way of sacrifice really worth while? Would not one achieve more by disregarding the goal that is afar off, and the ideal that is so high, and by following the course that is more expedient and that seems to offer such immediate results? Every man knows how such temptations at times assail even the noblest and the truest of men, and the temptations of the Master mark the reality and completeness of his humanity.

The first temptation lies in the realm of the consciousness of Jesus of his relationship to God and his call to the Messiahship. Already it would seem that the consciousness of his high nature and his high destiny was developing, and the temptation came to test this high mission and calling in a miraculous way.

It may have been the voice from without or the voice from within, but it said, "If thou art the Son of God, command that this stone be made bread." It was a temptation to test a spiritual mission by a material circumstance of magic. Jesus rejected it decisively. His mission was a spiritual mission, and the test of his divinity was his capacity for ministry to the world needs. So he said, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

The second temptation appealed to the sense of power and authority. From the mount Jesus surveyed, in actuality or in imagination, the kingdoms of the world and there came the voice assuring him that if he chose he could attain to world supremacy. It was the temptation that assails the strong man to use his strength for his own plans of wealth and power and self-aggrandizement.

The spirit that makes a man a prophet, directed in other ways, may easily make him a material force in the world and, the spirit that makes a man a savior of men, displayed in the realm of selfishness, may make a man equally dominant, and even tyrannous, over his fellows. Jesus attained to the supreme distinction of being the world's supreme spiritual teacher, but evidently he felt within him the power to become a great world figure, and it was the temptation to renounce the high spiritual calling for the immediate material career that assailed him as he looked out over the kingdoms of the world.

The third temptation was not altogether dissimilar from the first It was a temptation to test his special place in God's favor by a risk that he had no right to assume. There came to him the impulse to throw himself down from the cinnacle of the temple in obedience to the voice that said, "God will take care of you; no harm can come to you."

But common sense and sound spiritual faith alike repudiated the wisdom of any such course. It is in taking care of ourselves that God's care is manifested. To assume needless risks in the hope that as favorites of the Almighty he will protect us is not to show our faith but to show our folly.

Had Clear Vision

Thus it was that every temptation Jesus met and conquered. He never made a show or a parade of his religion. He never used his religion for base or unworthy ends. His overcoming of temptation meant the complete cleaving of his life to goodness and truth. The greatest of all lives impresses us with its simplicity and it directness. There was no subterfuge, no sophistication. The Master saw with clear vision and he acted with decision.

Clear vision and decisiveness in will are the things that give men victory in temptation. Oftentimes we are overwhelmed with evil because we allow our minds to be confused and the issues of conscience to become blurred and obscured. We listen to the philosophy of wrong when the way of right, if we would only seek it, is fairly well defined.

From the temptation of Jesus we may learn much concerning the nature of temptation, and we can also apprehend that power that enables man to overcome The temptation of Jesus, as we have said, marks the fullness and the completeness of his humanity, and it is this humanity that brings his life near to ours. "In that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted."

DAILY BIBLE THOUGHT

PRAYER—Thou, Lord, art my refuge and my fortress; my God, in Thee will I trust.

IS THE RURAL BANK DOOMED?

Rural bank failures are attributed by John W. Pole, comptroller of the currency, to economic and social changes which he said to the members of the senate banking committee, "make it difficult if not impossible for a unit bank in a small agricultural community to diversify its business." He advanced a step further, when he emphatically declared that "good management is of little avail in the absence of sufficient volume and diversification of local business." He advocated against establishment of banks in rural communities by large commercial center institutions and also suggested that power be provided to remove bank officials where infractions of banking laws occur.

It is a matter of history that the state banking laws of Texas are enforced to the letter. It is a matter of history that according to high officials Texas is the white spot on the map of America in law enforcement as to state banks and bankers; but the question naturally arises, is rural bank doom on the way as predicted by the federal comptroller of the currency?

EDGAR WITT HAS A SLOGAN.

Lieut. Gov. Edgar Witt, after long service in the senate, received his promotion. He made his inaugural address. He pledged cooperation in giving the people of Texas a constructive, economical and harmonious administration." He announced the slogan: "More business and less politics in government." Now if all concerned, from the governor to the most modest of all legislators, stick to their slogans there should be a constructive session and constructive laws as the fruits of the new administration. Just now harmony is as thick as the London fog and there are times when a London fog makes sidewalk or street travel a very dangerous undertaking. There is only one place where peace can be found—in the graveyard. Too much peace is just as disastrous as too much war.

TEXANS SHOULD KNOW THEIR TEXAS.

Texans should know their Texas. For instance: Texas is producing more than 95 per cent of the world's sulphur supply and 99 per cent of that produced in the United States. Four Texas counties—Brazoria, Matagorda, Wharton and Duval—are contributing to the Texas supply, while Fort Bend and Jefferson counties are known to have sulphur deposits development of which is a matter of time alone—according to a publicity writer. Texas deposits are sufficient to supply the entire world for many years, is the prediction of Melville Chartier, writing in National Geographic magazine. He draws a striking contrast of the difference between methods used in Sicily which a dozen years ago was producing 95 per cent of the world's supply and those used on the Texas coast. In Sicily the mining is done by hand, miners descending on foot into the shafts to extract the ore, which is then set on fire to liquify the mineral—in all a five-day job.

In Texas wells are drilled into the underground deposit and superheated steam forced down through casings to liquify the sulphur, which is then forced by compressed air to the surface, there again the harden into huge piles. These are broken into pieces by charges of explosives, and then steam-shoveled onto box cars for transport to the nearest port for final shipment. Sulphuric acid, to the making of which most of the sulphur mine is devoted, is used in one form or another in hundreds of products in both arts and industries. It is said that the economical production possible in the Texas coastal countries has seriously reduced the output of Sicilian hand operated mines.

A reminder that Texas is the greatest producer of natural gas of all the American states; that Texas is the greatest producer of petroleum; that there are asphalt beds in Texas that would supply the consumptive demand of a dozen states; that there are beds of salt in Texas said to be almost inexhaustible ;that there is a billion tons of lignite under the surface of Texas earth ready for the needs of mankind. Texas should be one of the greatest of manufacturing states of years to come and this is one of the reasons why that the slogan, "BUILD TEXAS," should launch a movement that will sweep the southwest like a prairie fire in the days agone.

There is a new administration in power. There is a new governor and many new lawmakers. Why not lay the mudsills for a manufacturing Texas as well as a great agricultural Texas and a Texas which boasts of its mineral wealth? Manufactural states are the wealthy states. Agricultural states are the poverty-stricken states. They are known to Joseph R. Grundy as "the backward states" and to Senator George H. Moses as the states which send to the American senate "the kicking sons of wild jackasses." Grundy speaks for Pennsylvania, or he did speak for it in the not remote past. Moses speaks for New Hampshire. These two distinguished Americans represent manufacturing states where the makers of things have been protected for decades by the lawmakers of the nation and this very largely at the expense of the growers of things of the so-called backward states. Yes; BUILD TEXAS AND LET 'ER GO.

OTHER OPINIONS

MECHANICAL WORSHIP

A Houston church last week carried on a whole service by means of talking pictures and the audience was said to have been "much impressed." The experiment will be tried out in other Houston churches and later it may spread all over the nation. Soon, the paster of this particular church prophesies the talkies will be generally used in church services. He thinks it will "revolutionize" religious work. It probably will. But that pastor and several thousand others may lose their jobs when one man in Hollywood can be hired to preach for the whole church brotherhood. The preacher may go the way of the orchestra player, if his innovation succeeds.

But we venture that it will not succeed. At least we hope it does not. More and more, the personal element is being taken from our modern life. The church is one of the places where the individual still rules. When they carry on church services solely by mechanical means, the dethronement of the individaul will be complete. We would dislike to see this happen.

We do not believe that a mechanical church service is conductive to worship, and that, after all, is the function of the church and the only excuse for its existence. Preaching by robots will not save souls; prayers by mechanical men will sound hollow; songs sung by screen shadows will fall flat. One may listen to a radio service in reverential attitude, but it is doubtful if many truly worship even then. Simply watching a screen story told, will not have this effect. Worship must be entered into to be enjoyed. The movie savers too much of entertainment. It does not sound the depths of emotion, even though it may evoke a few tears.

The talkie service will attract the curious for a while, but it will never replace the personal element in congregational worship. The church which uses it too much will cheapen itself. Occasionally, it might serve some educational purpose. Regularly used, it would lose all power of appeal.

When people want to see a moving picture they go to a theatre. When they want to worship God, they usually go to church.

It would be pretty hard to combine the two in the conception of the average individual.

PEEPING AT NEW BOOKS

Through The
University of Texas
Literary Knot-Hole
By LORENA DRUMMOND

Sixteenth Century Judaism

In The Last Days Of Shylock, Lewisohn does not overthrow the image of the Jewish usurer that Shakespeare set up for us, but rather elaborates on it, lending it a background of long suffering that excuses, if it does not justify, his harshness toward the Gentiles, and filling out the life of the man to its quiet if not happy end.

Purporting to be a biography of the English poet-dramatist's famous character, The Last Days Of Shylock in reality becomes a medium through which Lewisohn expresses the long pent-up grievances of the Jewish race against the Christians. And yet the propaganda is not obnoxious, for it is solely through the complaints of the aged Shylock, whose declining years are beset with memories, perhaps exaggerated, perhaps clarified, of his mistreatment at the hands of the Gentiles.

Simply told, in a dignified prose admirably suited to the burden of the message, the book presents vividly the Venice of the early sixteenth century, according to the Christian calendar, as that city was seen through eyes of the persecuted Jews. We see them driven from their comfortable homes to the narrow Ghetto, where they raised storey after storey to accommodate the increasing population. We see them scurrying in fear through the Rialto and the Plazza di San Marco in their saffron hats, symbol of perfidity and mark of degradation. We see them humiliated and their sacred books destroyed. We see them sent to the scaffold to be executed or burned. We see the hope that stirs in their hearts as first one and then another leader arises, only to fail in the effort to secure religious toleration or a place where the Jews might worship in peace. We see at last the coming of Joseph Nassi, who asked for and received the city of Tiberias and its surrounding territory as a Jewish refuge. At last, we see Shylock in Cyprus, reunited with his repentent daughter Jessica, who in her youth had deserted her people and her faith to marry the Gentile Lorenzo. There he finds a restfulness, a quietude, a peace he had never known, and there he gives up "his now undisquieted soul to Gan Eden, or to an eternal sleep."

It is interesting to note that each chapter in this biographical novel is prefaced with some quotation from Shakespeare which purports to give the keynote to Lewisohn's version.

"An Interrupted Diary"

After the startlingly frank and emphatic revelations of married life as told by numerous American "diaries," Eva, a translation from the French, is delightfully refreshing in its simplicity and its restrained touch. The book, called by the author, Jacques Chardonne, "an interrupted diary," is the story of a man whose life-work has become the study of his wife— her whims, her moods, her emotions, her desires, her graces, her faults. His love for her and his ambition to gratify her slightest wish carry him from Paris to the provinces, from the provinces to Switzerland. In his subjection to her fancies, he sacrifices everything —home, position and ease.

Written with a fine sense for the exact word, Eva is essentially French. The slight plot is told simply, gracefully. The narrative is smooth, measured.

The book was translated from the French by Viola Gerard Garvin.

The 1930 Short Story

In editing his Best Short Stories of 1930, Edward J. O'Brien has compiled the sixteenth of a series of such volumes published annually. Apparently Mr. O'Brien did so chiefly to maintain the tradition or what income the royalties may bring. If he considers the selections in this book what the title states, then custom has certainly staled Mr. O'Brien's powers of discrimination or American short story writers are a pretty poor lot.

In his introduction, the editor states he has set himself the task of "disengaging the essential human qualities in our contemporary fiction, which, when chronicled conscientiously by our literary artists may fairly be called a criticism of life. The first test of a short story is to report upon how vitally compelling the writer makes his selected incident or facts. This may be conveniently called the test of substance. But a second test is necessary if the story is to take rank above other stories. The true artist will seek to shape this living substance into the most beautiful and satisfying form by skillful selection and arrangement of his materials, and by the most direct and appealing presentation of it in portrayal and characterization."

Some of the stories reproduced seem to fall short of one or both tests, in this reviewer's opinion. Most of them are "of the earth, earthy" and too much of a kind to permit uninterrupted reading without satiety. The majority of the selections are the work of hitherto unknown writers first published in small magazines founded by such writers because the older magazines were not to them on terms they cared to accept. Mr. O'Brien considers that the best stories being published today are in such magazines by the younger writers.

The entire volume comprises two hundred pages of short stories and some hundred and twenty-five additional pages of the yearbook which tabulates an amazing assemblage of more or less pertinent and valuable information including Mr. O'Brien's "Roll of Honor," biographical notices, addresses of magazines publishing short stories, the "Best Books of Short Stories of 1930," a table of magazine averages showing the number of short stories published and their relative distinction according to Mr. O'Brien's classification, and four indexes. These indexes list volumes of short stories published in the United States and Canada, articles on the short story in American periodicals, short stories in books, and short stories published in American magazines, the last two classifiied according to authors by nationalities.

The volume presumably is a contribution of some value to readers, writers, or publishers but is not recommended for perusal on a rainy day or in hope of entertainment.

Did You Ever Stop to Think?

By EDSON R. WAITE
Shawnee, Oklahoma.

Written at Boston, Mass. Yes, this is some city. I am told that it is the eighth in size in the United States and twenty-eighth in the world. It is the heart of the greatest industrial and commercial center of the United States.

It did not take me long to find out that in the New England states they manufacture everything invented—and then some, and it is not all manufactured in this city. I was told of New Britain, Connecticut, the home of Howard Timbrell, editor of the New Britain Record, a live city with its 86 manufacturing establishments; of Willimantic, Connecticut, with its 30; and here in Massachusetts is Lawrence, the city that John P. S. Manoney, publisher of the Telegram, is making famous the world over by telling the world where it is, what it is, its aims and ambitions; Clinton, where they make carpets, wire cloth, silk, yarn towels, clothing and chairs; Gloucester with its 84 manufacturing establishments; Newburyport with 29; Southbridge with 16; Webster, a more than worth while city; Marlboro, where they make paper boxes, tags, soap, wire goods, boots and shoes; and scores of other towns and cities.

Those who have never visited Massachusetts and Connecticut should do so. It's an education in itself to see how the things we use in everyday life are manufactured.

For a summer vacation no better place could be found than along the coast—hotels and beauty spots aglore. Here thousands of city people have summer residences.

As I strolled into the dining room for dinner. I told the waiter to bring me some Boston baked beans, baked potatoes and baked fish. Yes, Boston beans are good!

City's Income Far Exceeds Cost of Operating the Municipal Government

Due to the fact that a number of incorrect statements have been made with reference to the expense of operating the municipal government as compared with the total revenues received by the city the following figures, taken from the city audit covering the period from May 1, 1928 to October 31, 1929, are pertinent in connection with the discussion relative to solving Cisco's financial difficulties through sale of the public utilities to a private concern and refunding such balance of the debt as may be left over in the adjustment.

The expenses of operation are taken first.

Eliminating attorney fees and court costs and including tax suits the average annual administration expense for the period from May 1, 1928 to October 31, 1929, was $11,291.50 in round numbers. Expense of special litigation is deducted.

The average annual expense of operating the street department, including street maintenance, street betterment work and street lights, for the same period was $26,275.45.

The average annual cost of conducting the department of sanitation and public health for the same period was $12,079.15.

The average annual cost of the fire department, including new equipment, for the same period was $3,025.98.

The average annual cost of the police department over the same period was $13,332.40. The average annual cost of the cemetery and parks department over the same period was $7,006.73.

The chamber of commerce operation cost and expense of operating the water department are not included in this summary. Neither are the revenues secured from the water department included because in the event of a sale the city would not be charged with the operation of the water department nor would receive any revenues therefrom.

Total Expenses

The above expenses total $73,010.21, which is the average annual expense of operating the city public service, exclusive of the expense of operating the water department.

The total average annual income of the city over the period from May 1, 1928 to October 31, 1929, not including the income from the water department, was $221,608.79, according to the city audit. This leaves a balance of revenue, outside of operating expenses, of $148,598.58 for one year. Incidentally between $10,000 and $15,000 income from the department of sanitation and public health, whose expenses are included above, is not included in the income total for the reason that it is counted in the water revenues figures. In the event of a sale of the utilities, however, this income from the department of sanitation and public health would continue to be added to the city's revenues.

Millionaire and Wife Reconciled

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 24.—While police and his attorneys were seeking Hugh W. Thomasson, 73-year-old millionaire, whose whereabouts had been a mystery for 48 hours, letters purportedly from the eccentric real estate dealer were received today, indicating he was on a "second honeymoon" with the young wife he had filed suit against.

The letters were received by the circuit clerk at Clayon, Mo., where a hearing was scheduled today on Thomasson's suit to annul his marriage on grounds he was forced into it. The letters were from Kansas City, Mo., and asked the court proceedings be dropped.

Gaynor - Farrell At Palace Today

Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell, the screen's most popular sweethearts, are re-united in Raoul Walsh's Fox Movietone production of "The Man Who Came Back," which opens today at the Palace theatre.

"The Man Who Came Back", one of the most powerful romantic dramas ever written, presents Miss Gaynor and Farrell in the greatest roles of their co-starring caeers.

Farrell, as the ne'er-do-well son of New York's king of finance, falls from grace. Improperly trained to face the world, he sinks step by step until he finally reaches the lowest dive in Shanghai.

There, drawn by natural forces, he is attracted to a girl one rung above himself in degradation. Together, hand in hand, impelled by their new found faith, their courage is re-born in misery. Clinging to each other, they climb to a seventh heaven through love.

The girl, of course, is played by Miss Gaynor, and she and Farrell give an interpretation of these dramatic roles that will astound their many friends. Kenneth MacKenna and William Forbes are also in the cast.

Chile Supper served by the ladies of Circle One of the First Christian Church, from 6 to 7:15 o'clock, Wednesday.

China Pushes New Air Line

SHANGHAI, China, Jan. 24.—Commercial aviation in China is to continue to expand despite the crash of a Shanghai to Hankow airplane with a loss of five lives.

The Ministry of Communications of the central government at Nanking has issued orders to speed preparations for inauguration of the Nanking to Peiping airmail and passenger services.

The airplane from Nanking to Peiping is to follow the Tientsin to Pukow railway.

In nearly two years of operation during which planes flew 350,000 miles over the Shanghai to Hankow route there has been only one crash.

Officials are looking forward to inauguration this year of an airline between Nanking and Berlin. Preliminary negotiations for this service have been completed and plans for its operation are being speeded.

Commercial planes are operated by the China National Aviation corporation, which is owned jointly by the National government and the Curtiss Wright interests.

HOW WOULD YOU LIKE TO BE A PHYSICIAN?

Most men have certain hours that are theirs. They use them as they see fit. Some spend them in various forms of recreation with their families. In these periods, it is seldom that any one feels free to intrude on either business or professional matters.

What about your physicians? Did you ever think of them and wonder when they had their leisure hours? When they spent an evening with their children or had a night with their families? Probably not. Have you ever noticed that at most every public place you go there comes a call for Doctor So and So?

We know of doctors who during all of last winter did not get an evening at home. These same men answered hundreds of calls at all hours of the night. Why? Because of the small fee they would get for their services? No! Emphatically No!

The Physician is no more anxious to get out of a warm bed on a winter's night or to leave a family gathering or a good show simply for a fee than your merchant or grocer would be to be called at the same hour and under the same circumstances to make a small sale.

The physician is just as human as any of us. Yet he is bound by custom, tradition and honor to answer the call of the sick wherever and whenever the call comes.

We repeat --- How would you like to be a physician?

It is impossible to place an accurate estimate on the value of our physician's service. Certainly the relief afforded an anxious father or mother when a sick child is aided in the middle of the night can not be figured in monetary value.

Our physicians are serving us faithfully day and night. Is the value of such services appreciated? We must say no. Because it has been shown that less than 10 per cent of our physicians' calls are paid when the call is made, over 75 per cent of the calls are not paid within thirty days; nearly 50 per cent are not paid for at least sixty days and 25 per cent are not paid for within three to six months.

Considering the anxiety of all concerned when the physician is called; the promptness and faithfulness with which he responds and the character of the service rendered is it fair to your physician to delay payment longer than the first of the month? Much of his work is necessarily of a charitable nature. Certainly those who can, should pay promptly. Think it over!

CONDITIONS GOVERNING FARM LOANS ANNOUNCED BY DABNEY

Conditions governing distribution of loans to farmers out of the $45,000,000 federal relief fund were explained in detail Saturday by Guy Dabney, member of the Eastland county executive committee which had direct charge of the distribution of these loans in this county. Mr. Dabney attended the conference at Abilene Thursday when O. B. Martin, director of the extension service of A. & M. college, in general charge of the federal relief loans in Texas, explained the regulations governing the loans.

"We expect to begin making these loans within a few days and to save time and misunderstanding, we are anxious that the public understand the regulations," said Mr. Dabney.

To date 32 west Texas counties have been certified to Secretary of Agriculture Hyde as eligible to participate in the fund. The allotment for Texas is computed at approximately $3,750,000. Mr. Dabney announced the regulations covering the fund for the state as follows:

Regulations

1. Those elegible for loans are farmers who have exhausted all their collateral. If they have any collateral which banks or others might accept, they are NOT eligible.

2. The state committee has recommended the following per acre loan basis: for cotton seed, $1; for spring oats, $1.50; for garden seed, $15; for grain sorghum seed, 25 cents; for peanuts, $1.50. Certified cotton seed has been offered to the committee for $1.50 per bushel and that will plant one and one-half acres.

3. Feed for a work animal is computed at $1.50 per acre.

4. Application for loan will give the government a crop lien, and when this debt is paid the farmer gets a release.

5. Interest rate shall be five per cent.

6. Limit of loan for one applicant probably will be $600, to be advanced to him in installments as specified in the application.

7. If the applicant shall fail to care for his crop in a business-like way, agents of the government may enter his premises, take charge of the crop and charge the mortgagor with the expense of this action.

8. If the mortgagor fails to pay his promissory note, or breaks the contract in any way, the government shall have the right to take possession of his crop and, without suit, sell all or the necessary part to satisfy the debt in full. The mortgagor will get the balance.

Government First

9. Holders of prior mortgages on any applicant's crop shall waive first lien to the government, the federal debt to be satisfied first.

10. The application blank requires a statement of the amount of loan sought; the number of acres of each crop for which seed is to be purchased; the amount to be desired for feed and the number of work animals to be fed; legal description of the land; statement of acreage of these crops grown by the applicant in the preceding year (1930); and an agreement to use the money for purposes only as set up in the application.

11. Penalty for false representation of any character shall be a fine up to $1,000, imprisonment up to six months, or both.

12. Can a tenant obtain a loan? Yes, if his landlord signs a waiver under the terms of his state law.

13. When is the money advanced? It will be paid to the applicant on receipt of completed documents and approval of his application by designated representatives.

14. When and how is the loan to be repaid? Not yet announced.

15. If applicant is a tenant, or is farming under a so-called crop contract, or has given prior mortgages on his 1931 crop, he must secure waiver of the actual owner of the land, his landlord or all prior mortgage holders.

16. If applicant is owner of land and farms it with tenants or share-croppers, waivers of such tenants or share-croppers must be secured.

17. If applicant leases land from another, and in turn operates it with tenants and share-croppers, waivers of both the actual owners of the leased land (unless rental of said land has been paid), and of said tenants or share-croppers, must be secured.

Consent Necessary

18. No transfer, assignment, hypothecation or sale of mortgage shall be permitted without written consent of the federal representative.

19. An applicant living near a county line will be allowed to put his application up to the local committee living in the community where he does business, even if the committee is in the next county; but the loan will be handled by the county committee of the county in which his land is located.

20. No certified county is being given an arbitrary allotment. This is flexible, the quotas to be fixed generally upon the number of needy families per county, with no fixed minimum or maximum for any county.

21. How shall the amount of the loan finally granted be arrived at? That will be largely up to the community or county committee, but the final decision will be made by the director at St. Louis.

(The regulations here given may be subject to change, as they are based upon the federal fund appropriated to farmers in a group of southeastern states last year. But no substantial changes are looked for.)

Growing Popularity of Professional Hockey Is One of Big Sport Surprises

CHICAGO, Jan. 24.—One of the big surprises in sporting circles here is the amazing growth and success of professional hockey, a comparative newcomer in Chicago sports.

For years, hockey has been to Canada what baseball is to the United States—the "national pastime." But only recently did the hockey craze cross the international boundary.

A little over three years ago, Maj. Frederick McLaughlin, husband of the former Irene Castle, built up a hockey team which was christened the Blackhawks, and introduced the Canadian pastime to Chicago. The team was entered in the International Hockey League, composed of four Canadian and six American teams.

Chicago's home games were scheduled for the Coliseum, which has a seating capacity of 6,500. The opening game was staged before a capacity crowd, consisting mostly of persons who attended the game out of curiosity to see what it was. The Hawks, made up of two or three veteran Canadian players and a group of youngsters, had a disastrous season, finishing in last place in the American group of the league.

Despite the poor showing, however, good crowds were usually on hand with the attendance averaging 3,500 for home games. Encouraged, Maj. McLaughlin continued in his efforts to build up a winning team and the second year his team was in the league they were very much improved, and the attendance grew. In the middle of the season, the management was forced to turn away customers.

Sensing that hockey was gaining in favor, McLaughlin transferred the home games from the Coliseum to the Chicago Stadium, with a seating capacity of 16,000. At no time in this second year was the house packed, but the attendance increased to an average of 7,000.

Then, last season, their third year of league competition, the Blackhawks surprised everyone, even their staunchest supporters, by fighting their way into the play-offs for the Stanley Cup, emblematic of the world championship of hockey. They met Les Canadiens of Montreal in the play-off, the team known as "The Flying Frenchmen," and one of the fastest and most experienced teams in the league. The young Hawks staged a battle with the Frenchmen that went down in hockey history, to lose out.

Several times this season crowds of 15,000 have attended the Blackhawks' home games, although the Hawks now have a rival in the Chicago Shamrocks, new entry in the American association.

Revision of Gin Laws Is Planned

AUSTIN, Jan. 24.—Plans to relieve cotton ginners from the necessity of making bond before obtaining a state license were embodied in a bill to be presented the state legislature rewriting the present gin inspection laws, J. E. McDonald, commissioner of agriculture, announced today.

In lieu of bond the department planned a more thorough inspection of the approximately 4,000 gins in Texas. The license fee was made $2.50 per gin which when the cost of the bond is considered will mean a saving of approximately $1 to the ginner on his annual license fee, according to R. H. Fincher, chief of the division.

PEARY'S POLE EXPLORERS MAY GET MEDALS

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—The explorers who accompanied Commander Peary on his dash for the North Pole nearly 22 years ago would receive government awards under the terms of a bill now before the house.

Should the measure pass the house and senate, President Hoover would be called on to bestow gold medals upon Peary and his officers, while silver medals would be given to the sailors and firemen of the expedition. The bill was introduced by Repesentative Clyde Kelly, Republican, Pennsylvania.

Physician's Statement

In a recent statement by Dr. John Walter Goodsell, Sandy Lake, Pa., physician to the polar party, regarding the Kelly bill, the government is criticized for not asserting its "Arctic rights."

"Can our statesmen explain the unwise inaction which perhaps fearing contention requiring International conference, prevents official recognition of our nation's near-polar rights, though many gallant Americans suffered incredible hardships and some paid the supreme sacrifice?" Goodsell asked.

Valuable Land

The Arctic is valuable to this country, he asserted for aviation landing fields, large coal and other mineral deposits, and probably oil.

State department officials say this government has never claimed Arctic teritory because international right there are "deep and involved." J. Reuben Clark, recently appointed ambassador to Mexico, began a comprehensive study of the Arctic and Antarctic discovery claims while in the state department, but was assigned to the field before he could finish it. It has never been completed.

TEXAS TOPICS

By THE POLITICAL ANALYST

AUSTIN, Jan. 24.—A simple measure that will extend a law now in use to the scope of a practical corporation income tax law, and put something like one billion dollars or more of property on the state rolls, is being planned by Rep. F. C. Weinert of Seguin, former state tax commissioner.

This bill, which he is planning but has not yet written, is one of a bracket of tax reform measures far-reaching in scope but simple in form and application.

It would extend the present intangible tax assessment on railroads to all corporations that show net earnings.

* * *

"Why should the railroads be assessed for intangible, valuations, when the sulphur companies, the life insurance companies, the corporations whose earnings represent huge capitalizations do not!" Mr. Weinert asked.

The intangible law capitalizes railroads on the basis of six per cent returns, and those which show earnings are assessed on the intangible values the same as on other property. The law would levy taxes only on the property of corporations said. A board should have the right to fix varying fair return rates, consideing hazards of various businesses.

* * *

His other measures based on his report as tax commissioner, include: One which he will introduce to fix 33 1-3 per cent as the uniform assessment for taxation valuation. This will tend to make uniform assessments in various sections and on different properties. Now assessments range from 10 per cent to 100 per cent; with much real property escaping rendition at all, he said. With the low rate of one-third, which he pointed out courts have held a customary or normal rate, much more property would be rendeed than when subject to the change of 60 to 100 pe cent valuation assessment.

* * *

Mr. Weinert believes a constitutional amendment to classify property so that some, such as foreign investments or mortgages generaly might be assessed on lower values than other property would encourage investment of capital, and greatly increase the rendition of property now escaping taxation. He cited the Minnesota example of $14,000,000 rendition of notes one year and the next with the classification in effect, $414,000,000.

* * *

The second bill, which he is considering and may likely introduce, would be to "wipe the slate clean" on delinquent taxes of past years. This he recommended in his report as tax commissioner.

Instead of letting a lot of bad claims, mostly worthless to the state but clouding title to property and discouraging to the property owner, Mr. Weinert would set up a board with power to review all the old delinquent claims and to settle them on a fair basis, or the best basis possible for the state, and clear them off the books.

* * *

I'd give the harassed farmer and property owner a new start, and get rid of a lot of bookkeeping claims on which the state can never recover. I'd get some money out of it and I would save to the owner a lot of property otherwise to be sold for tax claims," Mr. Weinert said.

* * *

As to his bill for the intangible valuation plan, Mr. Weinert pointed out insurance companies have a tax up to 2.6 per cent on their business, which is reduced to one-half of one per cent if a certain ratio of the securities of the company are Texas securities. He would favor reducing the other forms of taxes on such companies to the extent that the intangible levy replaced them, he said.

The intangible levy, he insisted would work out evenly for all types of corporate wealth and would take the unfair burden off other types that now exist and the necessity for arbitrary rates like the 55-cent per ton, on sulphur or 2 per cent gross production tax on oil.

Miss Reeser to Read 3-Act Play

A three-act play, "The Miracle Man", will be read by Miss Nellie Reeser, instructor of dramatic art at Randolph college, Tuesday evening, January 27, at the First Christian church.

The play, which first made famous the names of Lon Chaney, Thomas Meighan and Betty Compson who appeared in the moving picture a number of years ago, was written by Frank S. Packard, and is a story of four crooks of the deepest dye who are brought to God through the influence of a deaf, dumb and blind man.

Miss Reeser will be assisted by Miss Ernestine Sorey, voice instructor of Randolph, who will sing, "Shubert's Serenade" and "My Redeemer and My Lord" by Dudley Buck. Mrs. S. E. Hittson will be accompanist.

The program will begin at 8:15.

For GINGER'S SAKE

by ETHEL HUESTON

©1930 THE BOBBS-MERRILL CO

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Life in the little town of Red Thrush, Iowa, was too unexciting to suit Ginger Ella Tolliver, so she conceived the idea of organizing a Junior Country Club and thus saving the younger set from complete boredom. Accordingly she arranged for the purchase of the Mill Rush farm, a 10-acre tract with an old rambling house on it, and she arranged with Jenky Brooks and her husband, blind Benny Brooks, to act as chaperons.

The idea was that the club was to be exclusive. No parents allowed—and no children. The motion was heartily seconded by Ginger's intimates, all of them leading spirits in Red Thrush—Eddy Jackson, Wesley Meeker, and Patty Sears.

Ginger was the daughter of a minister and the stepdaughter of a very wealthy woman, the former Phil Van Doorn.

The farm and farm house bought, Ginger proceeded with a general overhauling in which all the high school kids of Red Thrush enthusiastically assisted. Furnishings were donated. Eddy Jackson even gave an old mare, named Mrs. Jackson.

It was agreed that the purpose was to have a good time. And one day, while the rehabilitation of the old house was going on, Ginger was in the kitchen of her home making cookies, assisted by Gooby the cook, when a shadow fell across the doorway.

It was a stranger, bearded and unprepossessing looking, and he offered to do a sketch of the cook in exchange for a meal. Ginger defied him to do a sketch of her. Thinking he was an elderly man, she began to lecture him for his apparent lack of ambition.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER VIII

"Say," the artist interrupted at last, "are those my grandchildren you're crowing about? How old the devil do you think I am anyhow, Kate?"

"My name's not Kate."

"My error," he said. "I apologize. This IS Iowa, isn't it? I was thinking of Shakespeare."

Ginger decided to accept the apology. He might have been intending a compliment. A reference to Shakespeare was usually complimentary, and just offhand like that she could not place Kate.

She considered his question. He wasn't so old probably as her father, he wasn't gray but that long, black beard was deceptive.

"Oh, about 50, I suppose," she said at last.

"Fifty—good lord—about 50!" He appealed suddenly to Gooby. "Is she in her right mind and all?"

Gooby thought a moment and gave it as her opinion that she was.

"Say, let me tell you something, Miss Defective-Delinquent, or whoever you are, I'm just 27 years old."

"Twenty-seven!" Ginger was amazed. "Why, you're not so old as Eddy Jackson."

"I'm not so old as a lot of people," he said moodily. He dropped the cover on his pad of paper and tossed it upon the table. Then he reached firmly into his portfolio.

"Miss," he said to Gooby, "can I bother you for a little nice hot lather?"

"L-lather?" echoed Ginger. "You mean plain soap and water? I didn't know they used lather in—Gooby, a bowl of soap and hot water, at once."

"I'm going to shave off this damned beard," he said. "Me and grandchildren! Humph!"

* * *

"I—didn't mean to hurt your feelings," said Ginger gently. "You don't look exactly old but—Biblical. That's it—Biblical. You look like all the disciples at the last supper — except Judas, of course," she added politely.

"Thanks," he said grimly.

He accepted the pan of hot water and the cake of soap from Gooby, and then, doggedly, before the limped blue eyes of Ginger Ella, eyes which melted swiftly from boundless amazement to irrepressible laughter, he shaved off the silken black beard.

By the time he had finished she was quite doubled up in her chair with mirth, and Gooby was chuckling largely into the bowl of raisins.

"They all wear them in Paris," he explained, patting his face with a handkerchief. "It's quite the rage."

He wiped his razor and put it back in the portfolio. Then he replaced the pad and pencils.

"Are—aren't you going to finish my portrait?" she queried humbly.

"Not if I've got to hear any more about Defectives and Delinquents," he said stubbornly. "No dinner's worth it."

"I won't," she promised. "Not a word. Do finish it. I'm quite keen to see how you think I look."

So he tipped back the kitchen chair, hoisted his knee and went on with the drawing.

"You're not bald, or anything, are you?" he asked suddenly.

"Bald! Certainly not."

"If you'd just take off that red rag a minute," he said ingratiatingly.

Ginger flushed violently and jerked it off. "I just put it on to be sanitary when I'm cooking."

She shook her head with nervous impatience, and her hair flew into a bright cloudy tangle. He smiled.

* * *

"Nice," he said and went on with his drawing. "Very nice. I'll put the rag on in the picture because it's how I saw you first, but I like you better without it."

Ginger leaned toward him over the table—closer and closer. Her eyes looked not at his work on the pad of paper, but into his face, a thin tanned face, with big gray eyes that seemed swimmingly dark with shadows.

She twisted her hands together on the table and tipped her small face back flower-like in order to gaze more fully into his eyes.

"Gosh," he said, "I can't do you in black and white. You've got to have color for such a face. Ivory and blue and gold—"

He leaned forward suddenly and touched the tip of his chin tilted up toward him. His hands were burned brown by the sun. "And pink," he added, laughing.

Color swept the cream face. She gave a little nervous laugh and drew herself up with prim dignity, smoothing her hair.

The artist went on with his work. "You see, these chaps who make a living writing about us Dependents; Defectives and Delinquents," he said cheerfully, "overlook a few minor considerations. There is talent, for one thing. There is art. And there is beauty.

"Now when you come to these sublime abstractions, no rules hold good. Who, for instance, in estimating love, would hark back to possible dependencies, deliquencies or even defects of character or person? When one loves, one does not say, 'Ah, but he is dependent on his hands for his daily bread. If his hands should be cut off, he would be dependent on me.' Nor does one say, 'I love her, but she has a slight mole beneath her right eye which puts her among the physical defectives.' Now does one?"

* * *

Ginger shook her head. She could find no words to make reply.

"And if one—like myself — a poor but joyous artist—elects to fare through the countryside, worshipping nature with his eyes, and trying with his small abilities to reproduce its beauties for others, perhaps not so observing, should one say that he is a dependent because he does not pay for his dinner with cash instead of with the talent God gave him?"

"I was just dumb," sighed Ginger.

He settled down to his work in good earnest. "No, you were right," he said cheerfully, and a smile shot through the shadows of his gray eyes. "I am a financial flop. I really am hoboing through. When I was a kid I was all for art. I wasn't so bad, since we in our candor may admit our virtures.

"I got prizes, and medals, and scholarships and was sent to Paris—and I'll tell the world I wasn't too bad. I was good, but it isn't enough to be good. You have to be able to sell yourself. I wasn't. I thought when I came back people would come flocking to my door, saying, 'This man who has painted the famous fighting figures of all Europe, must paint my little son on his kiddie car.' Or, 'This man who has painted a golden passion into the pure heart of a lily must see if he can find some unsuspected emotion in my inmost soul'."

He sighed a little. "Nobody came. I had very little money and it was soon gone. I tried to do commercial art work—but they said I was too artistic. They fired me. I was too artistic for commerce, and not commercial enough to sell my art. So I thought I might as well see America before starving and I started out in my beloved old Rattletrap. When she breaks down I work. When I am broke, she goes without gas. It has been fun."

He smiled at her. Then he tossed the paper across the table to her. "If I stick around town a few days will you let me do you in color?"

He served with Capt. Ben McCulloch in Indian fights, helping kill and break up a detachment of Indians at the south of the Llano river in May, 1841, Nov. 9, 1841, Callahan became captain of a company of Minute Men for the republic. In September, 1842 he helped expel Gen. Well from Texas.

He was wounded in October, 1855 , in a fight north of San Antonio with Lipan and Kickapee Indians.

The same year, he moved from Seguin to a place one mile from Pittsburg, which was to be the county seat of Blanco county, later when Blanco was built as the county seat to disappear, its location ascertainable only from the memory of aged residents of the county.

There he became involved in a difficulty with a neighbor, Woodson Blasingame and his son, Calvin. On April 7, 1856, Callahan, in company with W. S. Johnson and S. Clement Hinds, rode up to the Blassingame home. In an encounter, Callahan and Johnson were shot dead, and Hinds was badly wounded. A group from Seguin hurried to the place, and on the night of April 13 they extered the Blassingame home and shot and killed Woodson and Calvin Blassingame.

Callahan widow died Sept. 26, 1856, a few months after his tragic death.

This, Mr. Gilbert sketched, as the life of the man whose body found its last resting place Saturday in the state cemetery at Austin, placed there as a tribute by the state itself.

MOTOR VEHICLE DEATH CURVE CLIMBS UPWARD

CHICAGO, Jan. 24. — The national motor vehicle "death curve" continues upward with a new "high" registered for 1930.

During the past year 32,500 automobile deaths occurred, a four per cent increase over the 1929 record of 31,215 lives. Reports from 33 states and the District of Columbia, representing 75 per cent of the population, form the basis of the National Safety Council's estimate, which has just been announced. This four per cent increase occurred in spite of the fact that there was less than one per cent increase in motor vehicle registrations during the past year.

Motor vehicle deaths increased 48.1 per cent in Iowa during 1930. In decided contrast Rhode Island enjoyed a reduction of 20.1 per cent during the year while Washington, D. C., cut its motor vehicle deaths 23 per cent.

Ten states with strong drivers' license laws showed an average decrease of 1.5 per cent. These states are New Hampshire, Rhode Island, California, Connecticut, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Vermont. In decided contrast the states without standard drivers' license laws included in the list below show an increase of 8.3 per cent.

1,700 Lives

If the entire country had done as well as these ten license law states during 1930, 1700 lives would have been saved last year and the nation would have enjoyed a substantial reduction in its anual motor vehicle death toll.

The new figure of 32,500 deaths is the highest in history and yet the four per cent increase which it represents is really the lowest annual percentage increase since the reckless driver first became a safety problem.

The increase in 1929 was 12 per cent. In 1928 it was 8 per cent over the previous year. Increases since 1906 when the first motor vehicle records were kept, very often ran from 25 to 50 per cent. It is interesting to note that there were only 416 auto casualties in 1906.

In its analysis of the various state records for 1930 the Council finds that the large rural populations had by far the worst experience. Sixteen states, predominantly rural, reported 14 per cent more fatalities last year than in 1929. In another group where city and farm populations were approximately equal, a 7 per cent increase was reported. Practically all of these states as well as those in the predominantly rural group are located in the southern and western sections of the country.

The best reductions were made by states with large city populations, located principally along the North Atlantic Coast and most of them having efective drivers' license laws.

In addition to Washington, D. C., Philadelphia, Cleveland, Baltimore, Los Angeles and New Orleans also enjoyed fine reductions among cities.

Railway grade crossing deaths showed big reductions in 1930. In the first nine months of the year there was an 18 per cent drop from the corresponding period of 1929. The pedestrian also fared a little better in 1930 than during the previcus year when fully 50 per cent of the victims were truck while on foot.

Collisions of two motor vehicles or of motor vehicles with fixed objects continued to exhibit the worst record during 1930.

The improvement in the urban areas may indicate that at last some progress toward ocntrol is being made, in the opinion of W. H. Cameron, managing director of the National Safety Council who said today:

"In spite of the tragic picture there is some control mirrored in the experience of certain cities and states where fine reductions were made during 1930. Especially is this noticeable in states having strong drivers' license laws with examination requirements, and in those cities where traffic regulations are rigidly and impartially enforced."

LEGISLATURE IS DIVIDED OVER ISSUES

AUSTIN, Jan. 24. — The Texas legislature will go into the third week of its 17-week session Monday with the house and senate divided on the two principal topics that have been before them.

The senate has passed the tax halving proposal which carries out Gov. Ross Sterling's view of putting off half of the payments for six months. The house taxation committee has endorsed instead a proposal which amounts to delaying all distressed payments for a year adding merely 10 per cent interest to the amount now due. The Sterling plan requires county commission consent to effect county taxes. The house bill applies to all.

The other point of difference between house and senate is over rules applying to the division of the legislative time. At the weekend it appeared each would legislate under a different procedure.

Confirmation of Editor Protested

ABILENE, Jan. 24.—Formal protests by the west Texas chamber of commerce on the appointment of Frank Baldwin, Waco editor, as a member of the state board of education, was filed here today by Charles E. Coombs, president of the organization, following a referendum among directors of the chamber.

Eleven of 13 members of the executive board present approved plans for the protest.

Fourteen members regularly make up the board of directors but no successor has yet been named for H. L. Birney of El Paso, who resigned... W. B. Hamilton, of Wichita Falls and John Perkins of Alpine, had not responded to the referendum.

Telegrams already have been sent by the chamber to eight west Texas senators urging their opposition to confirmation of the appointment.

In his referendum call Coombes said "the appointment will be intolerable to the people of west Texas."

SCRAP BREWING OVER HIGHWAY FINANCE PLAN

By RAYMOND BROOKS.

County Judge N. H. Hunt of Zavala county is president of the organization, and has set up offices here, supporting the association's legislative program of 25 resolutions. Resolution No. 20 indorses the state financing of highways, relief of property from taxes for roads, and refunds to counties for what they have put into state highways.

County Commissioner W. L. Hillard of Taft, San Patricio county, is secretary-treasurer of the organization, and a member of its legislative committee. He is here vigorously and pointedly opposing the highway bond issue.

LOBOES DEFEAT ALBANY 39-19 FRIDAY NIGHT

The Cisco Lobces won their third game in Oil Belt basketball league Friday night when they defeated the Albany quintet 39 to 19 after a poor start in the first half. Yeager with 13 points was high.

The Loboes made little headway in the first period while Albany fought a game battle to come from behind and tie the locals 14-all at the half. In the second half, however, the Cisco team began to function and quickly forged into the lead which they gradually widened.

The Cisco starting lineup was Yeager and Karkalits, forwards; Van Horn, center; Preston and Purvis, guards. Clemo Ray alternated with Karkalits during the game.
