Bush won't yield on hostages

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush said on his first day in the Oval Office Saturday he is prepared to respond in kind to any acts of good will by those holding Americans hostage, but will make no concessions "to free those precious lives."

"People in the past facilitated the release of our citizens, and I'd love to see that happen again, and I won't — and I won't forget it," if it does, Bush declared.

In a free-wheeling exchange with reporters, the new president also said he intends to meet with congressional leaders Tuesday to discuss the government's spending deficit, and has asked to address a joint session of Congress Feb. 9. Bush hinted that would be a more specific call to action than what he termed a "thematic" inaugural address on Friday.

"Stay tuned. Feb. 9th, we'll have something a little different, if that's the date that's settled on," he said.

After a night of celebration at 11 inaugural balls, Bush and his wife Barbara were up early to open the doors of the White House to 4,500 ordinary Americans, many of whom had stood in line for hours in bitter cold for a special tour and a chance to stroll the South Lawn.

It was the first "open house" at the executive mansion since William Howard Taft held a public reception 80 years ago. But it was hardly reminiscent of the most famous such occurrence, when thousands of Tennessee frontiersmen in muddy boots followed Andrew Jackson through the doors in 1829 and virtually trashed the place.

After personally escorting 15 tourists, picked at random, through his new home, Bush took his place at the Oval Office desk occupied by Ronald Reagan for the last year years. There, he found a personal note left behind by his mentor, inscribed on joke-shop stationery which bore the printed heading: "Don't Let the Turkeys Get You Down."

Beneath it was Reagan's handwriting: "Dear George. You'll have moments when you want to use this particular stationery. Well, go to it. George, I treasure the memories we share and wish you all the very best. You'll be in my prayers. God Bless you and Barbara. I'll miss our Thursday lunches. Ron."

Showing the note to reporters, Bush said none of those assembled should take the "turkey" reference personally. "It is a broad, ecumenical statement," he grinned.

With his aging mother, Dorothy Prescott Bush, seated at his side, Bush took his first presidential news conference question:

Q: How does it feel to be president?

A: It feels just fine. It's setting in now after the glamour and excitement of the inauguration. It's a great joy to have my mother here, the leader of our family.

Later, he declared "It's the most exciting day of my life so far. It just is wonderful. Everything's been perfect. Everything's so beautiful."

Bush said, too, he would soon respond to a "generous letter" from Soviet Leader Mikhail Gorbachev. In the letter, Gorbachev told Bush he hoped his term would bring "stable and diverse development of relations between our countries," and that they could work together "to eliminate the threat of war."

Bush's schedule included an intelligence briefing from National Security Adviser Brent Scowcroft and Chief of Staff John Sununu, an appearance at a luncheon for the financial organizers of his $25 million inaugural, and a second night of formal revelry, including a "Black Tie 'n' Boots" ball for his fellow Texans. His official inaugural calendar ends Sunday with a national prayer service at the Washington Cathedral.

Bush acknowledged he couldn't find his way around the White House his first night, after he and the first lady returned from the long round of balls. "I got lost trying to find a couple of kids' rooms, yeah," he chuckled.

Band carries in touch of Texas

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — The Rebel band of Midland's Robert E. Lee High School swept smartly past President Bush and his family during Friday's Inauguration Day parade here.

With flags waving, batons and rifles twirling and horns blaring "Dixie," the band was the only one representing one of Bush's several home towns.

After an exhaustive day of travel from Midland to the nation's capital, band leader Randy Storie was pleased with the band's performance. Storie said that the band "did an outstanding job."

The 211-unit inaugural parade was late in starting, because Bush lingered over lunch with congressional leaders at the U.S. Capitol. The Midland band members grew bored and restless. Temperatures dropped into the low 40's under partly cloudy skies and a brisk wind added to the chill.

Until they got marching, the band's scantily clad twirlers shivered.

"We stood around and visited and watched the other bands," said Storie. "But when it was time to go, we all felt exhilarated. It was worth the trip and the wait. It was a proud moment for us."

It was Storie's second trip to Washington in his nine years as Lee's band director. The Rebel band performed at the Reagan-Bush inaugural festivities in 1985, but not in a parade because it was canceled that year due to subfreezing temperatures.

Storie said that Bush's claim to Midland as one of his home towns probably helped the Rebel band gain the honor of performing in the inaugural parade. He also said that Midland's Bobby Holt, as a co-chairman of the inaugural committee, also may have helped.

Storie was required to include tape recordings of the band's performance and films of its parade routines with an application to participate in Friday's parade.

The 200-member band, along with its sponsors and a number of parents and teachers, held their own inaugural ball Friday night at the Largo Quality Inn. A hired band called "Bristol Sound" provided rock 'n' roll music for the occasion.

Student journalists from Lee accompanied the band to Washington, gaining the opportunity to rub elbows with media stars and Washington correspondents.

Tim Walker, editor of the school's Dixie Dispatch newspaper, received credentials for a spot directly in front of the White House reviewing stand and said he was surprised to find "Lee High School" taped to a seat reserved for him.

Inaugural events 'great for Midland'

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Among the thousands of Texans in the nation's capital to celebrate the coming of their adopted son, George Bush, to the White House are at least 100 from Midland who, according to Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer, "have been having the time of their lives.

"We landed at Baltimore-Washington International Airport at 5 p.m. on Thursday and haven't stopped running since we hit the ground," said Seltzer, a lawyer, in a phone interview Saturday from his room at the Grand Hyatt Hotel.

Seltzer said he and his wife Susan stayed late at the inaugural gala Thursday night and rose early Friday to go to the U.S. Capitol to see Bush take the oath of office. The crowd of 200,000 on the West Front lawn at the Capitol was so packed, Seltzer recalled, "that if you had fainted, you would have been held upright."

After the swearing in, the Seltzers attended a reception at the Capitol hosted by Rep. Lamar Smith, the Republican whose 21st district includes San Antonio and Midland.

When they arrived at their reserved seats in the reviewing stand for the inaugural parade, they discovered they were just two stands down Pennsylvania Avenue from the president's booth.

Of the 300,000 parade watchers, only the Seltzers, the Bushes and a few hundred other intrepid souls can claim that they saw the entire 211-unit porcession, which included Midland's Robert E. Lee High School band.

Council could tie knot on building deal

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

It's tough enough making a decision to buy a home, let alone questioning whether or not to spend $1.2 million to purchase a building.

But that's the task at hand for Midland City Council, which Tuesday will announce its plans for Loraine Center.

In a report forwarded to the council, Deputy City Manager Mike McGregor delivered a batch of cost estimates related to the sale that under the agreement must be completed by Feb. 6.

Midland plans to use the 52,000-square-foot building to house its highly-touted Emergency Operations Center — a combined emergency dispatch network and enhanced 911 system.

Outside consultants were given 90 days by council to inspect the three-story building for structural flaws and other defects. Their report was expected to be in council's hands prior to the regular meeting.

But not all figures are aglitter. While prices for the building and computers came in significantly lower than projected, actual remodeling cost are expected to run about $500,000 more than anticipated.

"The only issue now is to decide whether we should close on the building," said McGregor.

City officials are firmly committed to the idea of buying rather than constructing a new facility, but only if the cost is within budget.

Despite the estimates submitted by Rhotenberry Weldon Architects & Planners, McGregor said he's convinced that savings made in other areas will offset any remodeling costs.

Verdict not yet in on state budget situation

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Area lawmakers are holding off pushing the panic button after a week of hearing what no new revenue will do to state government.

A preliminary budget draft knocked the University of Texas of the Permian Basin for a $679,070 loss in appropriations, or 10.6 percent of its 1989 spending level.

But the Legislature may get more than $1 billion to add to the $43.7 billion spending plan the Legislative Budget Board distributed this past week as a starting point for budget negotiations.

And neither Rep. Gary Watkins, D-Odessa, who is on the budget-writing Appropriations Committee, nor Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, his counterpart on the Senate Finance Committee, see much point in getting excited yet over the budget yet.

"We're just plugging in the numbers now," said Watkins. "We'll know more down the road."

House Speaker Gib Lewis gave the House a head start by making his committee appointments on the second day of the session, rather than waiting a few weeks, and the Appropriations Committee has been using that time to get an overview of the budget.

"I'm very optimistic that we will do well," said Watkins, who is looking after UTPB, the two local community colleges and the Texas Tech regional health center.

Phrasing of questions affects results in polls on abortion

By TAMAR LEWIN
New York Times News Service

RELIGION

On the 16th anniversary of the Supreme Court's landmark decision legalizing abortion, polls show that Americans remain sharply divided about their stands on abortion.

The National Opinion Research Center, a non-profit polling organization affiliated with the University of Chicago, has been asking the same questions about abortion since 1965.

Its polls show that large majorities of Americans have consistently supported legalized abortion when the woman's health is seriously endangered, when the pregnancy is a result of rape or when the baby is likely to be born with a serious birth defect.

That support has ranged from 75 to 90 percent since 1973, when the Supreme Court's decision in Roe vs. Wade legalized abortion.

But if the reason is that the woman is unmarried and does not want to marry the man, does not want more children or is too poor to support them, these surveys have found that generally less than half of all Americans think a legal abortion should be available.

Marcia Lawrence, a spokeswoman for Planned Parenthood of New York City, said, "What people feel about abortion goes back to real bedrock, and that's why it is so difficult to find a happy compromise on this issue."

If anything, the abortion debate heated up earlier this month when the Supreme Court agreed to hear a Missouri case that will allow the justices to reconsider their 1973 ruling.

Public attitudes became substantially more permissive from 1965 until 1972, a period in which many states were liberalizing their laws on abortion. Over the last five years there have been some significant declines in support for legalized abortion.

"We have looked at it to make sure it is reliable and there has been a decrease in support for legal abortion in all seven circumstances we ask about," said Tom W. Smith, director of general social surveys for the Chicago center.

"We haven't yet designed the questions to test why that is happening," he went on, "but we think it is a combination of the government's policy against abortion, which has had a bully pulpit effect, plus the anti-abortion groups becoming better organized and the sense that the pro-choice people are now on the defensive."

Each side in the debate has a different interpretation of the decrease in support.

"Roe vs. Wade changed things a lot faster than anyone anticipated, and it took right-to-life awhile to get organized," said Richard Glasow, education director for the National Right to Life Committee. "It's only recently that you're beginning to feel the effects of our efforts, and I expect the trend to continue in our favor."

Janet Benshoof, director of an American Civil Liberties Union project, Reproductive Freedom, said: "I'm just speculating, but maybe it's about the same hostility toward women that you would see in the polls showing a drop in support for the Equal Rights Amendment. There's obviously something very threatening about the empowerment of women, when you see that the one Supreme Court decision that gives women more power over their lives than anything else in 200 years is the only constitutional right that the government has ever asked to have taken away."

Ms. Benshoof says the battle over the nomination of Robert H. Bork for the Supreme Court and the opinion polls show that most Americans do believe women have the right to make reproductive decisions without governmental intrusion.

"That seems to me to be the question in the abortion debate," she said. "Most Americans don't want the government to take away the right to legal abortion."

Bork has said publicly that Supreme Court decisions, including Roe vs. Wade, that found constitutional protection for a right to privacy in the area of reproductive choice were wrongly decided.

A new Gallup Poll reported that 58 percent of those interviewed did not want the court to overturn the Roe vs. Wade ruling. Because attitudes are so complex and so emotionally charged, experts on polling say that how questions are framed can affect the answers. And social scientists say it is important to ask about the issue several ways.

For example, a New York Times-CBS News Poll of 1,533 adults conducted nationwide Jan. 12-15 asked, "If a woman wants to have an abortion and her doctor agrees to it, should she be allowed to have an abortion or not?" Sixty-one percent of those polled said she should, and that number has remained about the same each time since the question was first asked in 1980. Twenty-five percent said no and 11 percent said it depended on the circumstances. Three percent said they didn't know.

But when asked, "Should abortion be legal as it is now, or legal only in such cases as rape, incest or to save the life of the mother, or should it not be permitted at all?" far fewer respondents chose an absolute yes or no position.

In answer to that question in the poll, 46 percent said it should be as completely legal as it is now, the highest since the question was first asked in 1985. Forty-one percent said it should be legal only in such cases as rape, incest or to save the life of the mother, and 9 percent said it should not be permitted at all.

A bag of fried pork skins, center, waits in a vending machine at the White House press room Saturday. Pork skins, or rinds, are a favorite of President George Bush, despite their high cholesterol content.

Where's the beef? Rinds hog spotlight

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pork rinds? They're loaded with cholesterol, salt and fat. But they crunch pleasingly and explode on the palate with delight before dissolving into a light, bacon-flavored residue. And President Bush loves them.

He was introduced to the crispy tan strips during his days as an oilman in West Texas. After a tough day in the oil fields, pork rinds, washed down with a cold beer, seems like a food of kings — or of presidents.

So when Bush left Texas for the political wars of Washington, he carried with him a continuing yen for them.

But a diet laced with pork rinds, say nutrition experts, is bad news for a guy with a job like George Bush's.

"This is an appropriate snack for somebody who is doing a lot of manual labor — an agricultural worker, a guy working on the chain gang, or building railroads," said Dr. Wayne Callaway, an associate clinical professor of nutrition at George Washington University. "Where they are burning up to 4,000 calories a day and sweating a lot, this would be fine."

How about an executive who spends most of his time at the desk?

"As a general snack, it's not a good idea," he said in a recent interview. "I think once a year would be fine."

According to a U.S. Department of Agriculture analysis, a two-ounce package of pork rinds contains 315 calories; 32.5 grams of protein; 18.9 grams of fat; 58 milligrams of cholesterol, and 1,054 milligrams of sodium.

In effect, a small package of the hog chips has 20 percent more calories, almost twice the fat and double the sodium of a typical fast-food hamburger. But the snack also has almost three times more protein than the burger.

The fat, cholesterol and sodium, says Callaway, make pork rinds an unhealthy addition to a typical American diet that already is high in those elements. He said jelly beans, the treat preferred by former President Reagan, are a much more healthy snack.

"On the other hand," Callaway added, "if Mr. Bush had a cholesterol of 165...and was otherwise healthy and was eating this stuff all day long, then I wouldn't make a big to-do about it."

According to his staff, President Bush's cholesterol count is 192 — well above the pork rind safety limit suggested by Callaway.

Bush is so fond of the fried pig skin that in his primary campaign last April he stopped in Lima, Ohio, and met with the president of Rudolph Foods Co., one of the nation's top pork rind processors.

"He said he learned about (pork rinds) in Texas," said John E. Rudolph, the food company president. "He told me, 'I eat the heck out of these things.' "

But the president is not alone in his craving for fried hog hide.

"Pork rinds are a $200 million part of the $6 billion snack food market," said Rudolph. "They're just a little less popular than pretzels, but they're crawling ahead by 4 to 5 percent a year."

Bushes welcome chilly visitors to White House

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush opened the White House doors Saturday to a band of shivering pilgrims — some in tuxedos and others wrapped in quilts — who had waited outside all night for a chance to greet him in his new home.

"I've been here 11 hours and 30 minutes. It's cold," said Kyle Shadix of Atlanta when the White House east gate was finally unlocked shortly after 7 a.m.

Cheers and occasional shouts of "Where's George?" came from the long line of bundled-up visitors.

Inauguration officials said a new president had not made such a planned, formal gesture since 1909.

The earliest arrivals showed up at 8:30 p.m. Friday, and the long vigil paid off for 15 people chosen to tour the White House with Bush and his wife Barbara.

"The president actually stood beside me and nudged me and said 'what do you think of this room?' " said Dick Nichols, 52, of Baltimore. "I said, 'It's beautiful.' "

He paused and laughed incredulously. "I never thought it would happen. I never thought he'd even be there. It's something I'll never forget. I will never be that close to a president again."

It was barely light in the south courtyard of the White House when the first visitors were allowed in, but the mood was festive. The Truman Balcony was hung with red, white and blue bunting, and a U.S. Marine Band pianist sent cocktail music wafting across the lawn.

College students and senior citizens and parents lugging children in snowsuits shouted "We love you George" as the first couple strode out to make brief remarks.

"I know some of you have been up all night long," Bush told about 1,500 patient fans. "We just wanted to wish you well and welcome you to the people's house."

Those on the personal tour were a mix of students, older people and families, all among the first to arrive Friday night. Also picked was a double amputee in a wheelchair. The Bushes, accompanied by a curator, led the small group through several ceremonial rooms, the same ones shown on normal White House tours.

"It was just great. He was the kindest man. I wasn't expecting him to get up so early," said Adam Slater of Pittsburgh.

Slater, Steven Resnick and Saul Kellner, three George Washington University students, earned their presidential tour by being the very first in line. The president, they said, was as nice as they had expected.

"He treated us like we were real people — not like rabble," Resnick, of Scotch Plains, N.J., said in amazement. What next? "I'm going to call my parents," said Kellner, of Manalapan, N.J.

The decorous tour was a far cry from Andrew Jackson's inaugural open house in 1829. Muddy-booted men stepped on chairs and knocked over furniture and glassware to get at the refreshments, which were later moved onto the lawn in hopes the unruly crowd would follow. Jackson ended up cornered by the mob and had to be spirited out the back door.

William Howard Taft held the most recent open house, shaking visitors' hands for hours the day after his inauguration in 1909. Bush and his wife continued that tradition Saturday after their stint as escorts, greeting hundreds more people with handshakes and chitchat before leaving for other engagements.

"It was well worth not sleeping," said Claudine Fortunato of Westchester, N.Y. "He's got a nice firm handshake, he really does," said Tom St. George of Springfield, Va. "It wasn't an assembly line. He looked me in the eye and said thanks for coming by. It was completely worth waiting for," said John Donnelly of Philadelphia.

Donnelly was among several men attired in tuxedos, telltale evidence that they had come straight from Friday night inaugural balls to camp outside the White House. Commenting on the phenomenon later, Bush said he had shaken hands with people who "had been to one of these balls and...slept out there."

WEATHER SUMMARY

Windy day anticipated

From Staff and Wire Reports

A windy one is on the way for Super Bowl Sunday. Winds gusting at times from 10 to 20 mph and variable high clouds are being forecast. The high should be in the low 60s. Sunday night should be partly cloudy, with lows in the lower 30s.

Monday, partly cloudy skies should persist, with the day's high near 60, according to the National Weather Bureau at Midland International Airport.

The record high Saturday was 76 set in 1986. Today's record low was 5 degrees set in 1966.

STATE

An area of high pressure extending from the Great Lakes to Texas pushed clouds and rain into the Gulf of Mexico and brought generally clear skies to the Lone Star State, the National Weather Service said.

Generally, light southerly winds wafted over Texas, although some winds did reach 15 to 20 miles per hour in the Panhandle and the South Plains.

The weather service reported temperatures mostly in the 50s to low 60s, while the higher elevations of the Trans-Pecos reached the 40s.

Low temperatures ranged from 18 degrees in Dalhart to 45 degrees at McAllen and the Corpus Christi Naval Air Station.

Texas temperature extremes ranged from 46 degrees at the Guadalupe Pass to a high of 64 degrees at McAllen.

The forecast calls for clear to partly cloudy skies over much of the state. Low temperatures are expected to dip into the upper 20s in the Panhandle and fall to the upper 30s in the lower Rio Grande Valley.

High temperatures should reach the 60s over most of the state, while the weather service predicts the upper 50s in the Panhandle and upper elevations of West Texas.

NATION

Bitterly cold air blew across New England on Saturday, threatening wind chill temperatures as low as 50 below zero, while one record high was posted on the northern Plains.

A strong low pressure system east of Nova Scotia pulled gusts of cold air across New England out of the northwest.

Gale warnings were posted over the Atlantic Coast from Maine through Virginia.

The combination of wind and cold raised a threat of wind chill readings of 30 below to 40 below zero over northern New Hampshire and much of Maine, and to 50 below zero over Vermont, the National Weather Service said.

Temperatures below zero during the night combined with 25 mph wind to make it feel like 41 below zero at Albany, N.Y., and 42 below zero at Montpelier, Vt.

But in western South Dakota, on the edge of the Black Hills, Rapid City warmed to a record 63 degrees near noon.

Snow showers extended over northern Maine, and from northeastern Ohio into western Pennsylvania.

Snow also was scattered over northwestern Utah, the Idaho Panhandle and western Montana.

Rain was scattered across central Florida and over northern and western Oregon.

No suspects known in attempted armed robbery of Midland home

From Staff Reports

Midland Police say they have no suspects following an attempted armed robbery at a home on the city's west side near Loop 250 at about 9:17 p.m. Friday.

Police said a 65-year-old man was about to open the door to his house, located in the 4600 block of Wilshire Drive, when a masked gunman approached him from behind and told him to "be quiet and you won't be hurt."

According to Cpl. James White, the two men began to fight, causing the gun to dischage twice.

The suspect then fled east on foot.

Officers later summoned a K-9 Unit to the scene, but were unable to track the assailant.

White said during the scuffle, the victim cut his hand on the gun. He was later transported by private vehicle, where he was treated at Midland Memorial Hospital.

Police said the suspect was wearing a black ski mask. He is described as 5 feet, 8 inches tall, weighing between 180 to 200 pounds.

Three treated after two-car mishap

From Staff Reports

Three people were treated at Midland Memorial Hospital Saturday night following a two-car accident at the intersection of Midkiff Road and Haynes Avenue.

Midland police said Walter Wingo, 84, 426 W. Dormard Ave., was northbound on Midkiff when he brought his pickup to a stop while attempting to make a left turn onto Haynes at about 6:25 p.m.

The truck was then struck by a car driven by Gilley Estes, 25, 5100 N. A St., Apt. 103, who police said was driving her car in the southbound inside lane when the accident occurred.

Wingo and a passenger, Pamela Romano, 37, of Las Vegas, were treated. A third passenger, Ashley Bloss, 1, of 2809 W. Michigan, was not injured.

Beer stolen from Odessa store

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Odessa police say two men — one armed with a small handgun — got away with four 12-packs of beer from a local convenience store early Saturday morning.

According to reports, the men entered the 7-Eleven store at 3025 N. Golder Ave. at about 6:37 a.m.

Police said a clerk, Viola Cruz Sedillo, watched the men take the beer from the cooler and walk up to the front. One of the men, according to reports, then displayed the gun on the way out.

No arrests were made. No descriptions were given.

Bushes greet Texans at 'boots' ball

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — First lady Barbara Bush told about 5,600 laughing, cheering people attending the Texas Black Tie and Boots Ball here Saturday night that George Bush "is going to make a darned good president."

The Bushes were greeting by a deafening cheer from the sardine-packed crowd attending the popular quadrennial ball sponsored by the Texas State Society in Washington.

Earlier, fire marshalls had closed the ballroom doors in the Washington Hilton Hotel and refused to let in anyone else, including hundreds of ticket holders.

George Bush told the gathering that he had invited "240 family members for lunch today" at the White House. Noting that he did not bring them to the ball, he said, "Just Barbara and I are here. It's just as well. You couldn't wedge another person in."

Bush said he was "grateful to the state" of Texas. Referring to his early days in Texas politics, he added: "I'll never forget where it all started."

He said he was also grateful to Rep. Charles W. Stenholm, a Democrat from Stamford, Texas, for saying that Republicans and Democrats should be "working across the aisle." Stenholm is president of the Texas State Society.

The president said that "Texas has strong representation now in both houses (of Congress) and, I hope, in the White House as well. I will be trying to secure peace. I will work hard and not let you down."

His wife told the crowd that "I have worked hard this week to make you proud of me." Then she joked, "Next week I'm going back to being Barbara Bush."

Stenholm presented Bush with a child's boot and said the State Society is having boots specially made for all 10 of the Bushes' grandchildren. He gave Mrs. Bush a check for an undisclosed amount to be used by the Texas State Chapter of the Volunteers for Literacy, one of the charities she has encouraged.

Bush displays boots

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush did some more high-steppin' Saturday night when he showed off his Lone Star boots to an appreciative Texas crowd, while across town young Republicans also kicked up their heels at a rollicking, foot-stomping rock and blues bash.

BAND

He struck up an acquaintance with a CBS-TV camera man and turned at one point to find his new friend shooting the picture that anchorman Dan Rather was describing on a live broadcast. Walker watched the live shot on a miniature TV brought to the stand by a Russian-language correspondent for Voice of America.

Walker also had the honor — along with several other scribes — of being asked to "hold down the noise" by CBS "Sixty Minutes" correspondent Ed Bradley.

The Lee High School students are sightseeing here before flying back to Midland Monday.

They will visit all the memorials, the Smithsonian museums. In addition, they will visit trendy Georgetown, travel on the Metro subway, and visit Arlington Cemetery and George Washington's home in suburban Virginia.

They also have tickets for a dinner theater performance of "Mame."

TEXANS

Friday night, Seltzer recalled, they found an upstairs area "that we nicknamed 'little Midland' at the National Air and Space Museum where the Texans were holding their inaugural ball. There, George W. Bush, the president's oldest son who was an independent oil executive in Midland until mid-1988, and several of his friends had commandeered the president's and vice president's boxes.

"It was a great party," said Seltzer. "If I could capsulize the day, I would say it was great for America, great for Texas and great for Midland."

At another ball that night, the new president applauded the efforts of the Inaugural Committee directors, Bobby Holt of Midland and Penne Korth, formerly of Waco.

Introducing the team, Bush quipped: "The one in the dress is Penne."

Bush poked fun of his own dancing ability. "You can say you saw it first here, a lousy dancer trying to dance his first dance with the first lady of the United States of America."

Then, to the tune of "I Could Have Danced All Night," Bush executed a 10-minute twirl around the dance floor with his wife, Barbara.

Ernie Angelo, Texas' GOP national committeeman and a former Midland mayor, skipped the Friday night balls but attended the gala with his wife, Penny.

Like many other Texans, the Angelos were invited to dozens of private receptions. They elected to go to the parties hosted by the Republican governors and Republicans Abroad.

A few dozen Texans were guests at Wayne and Beth Gibbens' Saturday brunch at their Arlington, Va., home. Gibbens represented Breckenridge in the Texas House of Representatives before becoming president of Mid Continent Oil & Gas Association, a group representing producers of all sizes.

Among the Gibbens' guests were incoming Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher of Houston and his wife, Georgette.

Washington society writers have been on high-alert all week for sightings of the attractive Georgette, who is expected to become one of Washington's major hostesses.

Others at the Gibbens' party included Linda Johnson Robb and her newly installed senator husband, Charles Robb, the former Democraic govenor of Virginia, and Reps. Mike Andrews, a Democrat, and Bill Archer, a Republican, both of Houston.

Former Texas Rep. Frank N. Ikard, a Democrat who represented the 13th District in Congress for five terms in the 1950s and 1960s, and his wife, Jayne, also attended the Gibbens' brunch.

Midland independent oil producer Jack Blake and his wife, Carol Jo "Jody," also attended the Friday night ball for Texans.

And, like many of the Texas visitors, they were looking forward to the Texas State Society in Washington's Black Tie and Boots Ball Saturday night at the Washington Hilton, where 5,500 ticket holders were attempting to fit into a space that usually seats 2,000.

Jody Blake echoed sentiments expressed by many of the Midlanders who were interviewed during the week: "This inauguration is a tremendous beginning to a highly successful administration. We have such high hopes for him (Bush). And we will be proud of him."

Among the other Midland people here for the inaugural festivities were Mr. and Mrs. Martin Allday, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Fowler, Mr. and Mrs. Curt Inman, Mr. and Mrs. Grant Billingsley, Mr. and Mrs. Bill Kennedy, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Byrd, Mr. and Mrs. George Moberly and Mr. and Mrs. Joe Pevehouse.

STATE

"Enrollment is up and with the formula generated by student population, that should help," the sophomore representative said.

The preliminary budget would provide $6,398,761 for UTPB in 1990, a 10.6 percent drop from its 1989 budget. The school would get $6,419,436 in general fund appropriations in 1991.

UTPB probably will get some boost because the budget projected a 7.4 percent increase in semester credit hours but the campus actually saw a 9 percent increase in the fall 1988 headcount.

While the amount depends on a number of variables, David Young, a legislative budget examiner, said the university should get additional money when the budget is revised in March.

UTPB officials had requested nearly $8 million for 1990, but the Legislative Budget Board cut higher education 2.3 percent in a budget draft that fit current revenue in December.

While the state's 34 senior universities were hit with an 8.2 percent average reduction, the state's 49 junior colleges would get an average 11 percent increase due to enrollment gains.

Midland College would get $4,791,352 in 1990, a 0.9 percent increase over 1989 spending levels. Odessa College would get $6,821,139, a 1.7 percent increase over 1989 levels.

The Regional Academic Health Center in Odessa would see a 6.8 percent cut in its budget, to $1,046,371, compared with a 4.7 percent overall cut for medical and health-related institutions in the state.

Even with anticipated state revenue three percent more than 1989 levels, lawmakers are looking for at least $1 billion in new revenue to keep pace with growth in schools, social services, prisons and mental health care in the face of Gov. Bill Clements' pledge to veto new taxes.

Elementary and secondary education was slated for a two percent increase in general revenue funds, to $10.5 billion, with that increase mainly going to cover more students that will be entering public schools next year.

Also hit were health services, scheduled for an eight percent cut, and human services, where a three percent increase would leave welfare workers would be unable to keep up with an expanding caseload. The prison system would get less than one-half the additional prison beds it needs to relieve county jail overcrowding.

In the House, where any tax bill would have to start, speaker Lewis also has ruled out a tax increase, but he thinks money will be found to keep from cutting education and social services.

"We have identified some areas that we think the revenue is there that we can identify and have the comptroller certify. That's the main thing," Lewis said.

The Fort Worth Democrat, in his fourth term leading the House, added that the Legislative Budget Board had no choice but to come up with cuts to make the budget fit available revenue.

"They're doing what the constitution requires them to do, and that is to submit to the Legislature a certifiable budget," he said. "And until we make the changes that will be required (to add revenue) they can do nothing else."

Lewis also said he expects the Legislature to restore funds to education, health and human services. "By the time we do some innovative bookkeeping, you'll see all the funds restored, and possibly some additional funds allocated in those areas," he said.

That leaves prisons. A House Appropriations subcommittee will explore alternatives to issuing $300 million in bonds to build more prison cells for 7,000 felony convicts now crowding county jails.

Sen. Kent Caperton, D-Bryan and Senate Finance Committe chairman, said more money is needed for corrections, education and human services. "This budget does some very harsh things to the people who need it most," he said.

Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, chairman of the Senate Education Committee, is calling for more money to keep the state's commitment to education, which already consumes 59.3 percent of the state general revenue budget.

"I'm just totally frustrated by our situation with the budget right now," Parker said. But he added, "This is just round one."

Sims, chairman of the Administration Committee and the Natural Resources subcommittee on agriculture in addition to serving on Finance and Economic Development committees, said the budget draft offered no surprises. "I haven't heard nothing new," he said. "I think they're telling us, 'If you want this program, this is what you're going to have to do.'"

He believes education is in good shape. "I'm still convinced that we've got a good school system," and he is not convinced it is underfunded.

If more money is made available for education, he said, he would like to help school districts build classrooms that they need to comply with the 22-student limit on elementary classes. "We had to build 54 new rooms just in San Angelo," he said. "It's worth it, but some of these districts just can't afford it."

In higher education, he expects UTPB to get the same treatment as other universities.

While Sims, who has served five years as senator of the West Texas 25th District, is hesitant about issuing more bonds that put the state further into debt, he also believes they are part of the solution to financing prison construction. But he also supports the exploration of alternatives, such as minimum and middle-security prisons, he said.

CITY

Much of what is now at issue is directly related to voter approval of a $4.3 million public safety issue last fall.

City officials expect to spend $1.2 million to purchase the building. They also were given authority by voters to spend up to $2.5 million for a digital trunking communications system; $1.15 million for additional electronic equipment, including a computer-aided dispatch system for the fire department as well as a systems consultant; and $350,000 for the purchase of mobile data terminals.

Some of those figures already have been revised, according to McGregor. For example, the city had planned to spend between $700,000 to $800,000 on new a new hardware/software package. That figure now has been narrowed to $590,000.

The radio system, estimated at $2.5 million, was intially based on retail pricing. City officials are now convinced they hold a bargaining chip for additional savings.

City-paid consultant Ray Kendall said vendors for the software and hardware equipment have been narrowed from six to two — McDonnel-Douglas and Public Research Corp./Digital.

Kendall said a final decision, which is expected Feb. 28, will be based on what company can supply a system that can interface the centralized radio trunkline with computers located at the Midland Munucipal Court.

In the meantime, Fire Chief James Roberts, who has visited a number of cities with established centralized distpach centers, said he's through looking. "We feel very good about these two (companies)."

As for the building, McGregor estimates annual operating costs will run about $160,000, inclusive of utilities, ground maintenance, janitorial, security, mechanical contract, elevator maintenance and property management.

Loraine Center is currently occupied by 17 tenants, most of whom have one to two years left on their lease. Should council vote to purchase the building, annual rent receipts at $175,000 would offset operating costs.

City officials say the only other problem that must be addressed is the location of the new centralized commmuncation center.

Those familiar with the project are leaning toward the basement, which presents a more complicated and costly ($1 million is being set aside) design, according to project architects.

However, McGregor said a ground level site is more preferable to a third floor location. "If the building ever took a direct hit from a tornado, there would be a lot less chance of operations being interrupted."

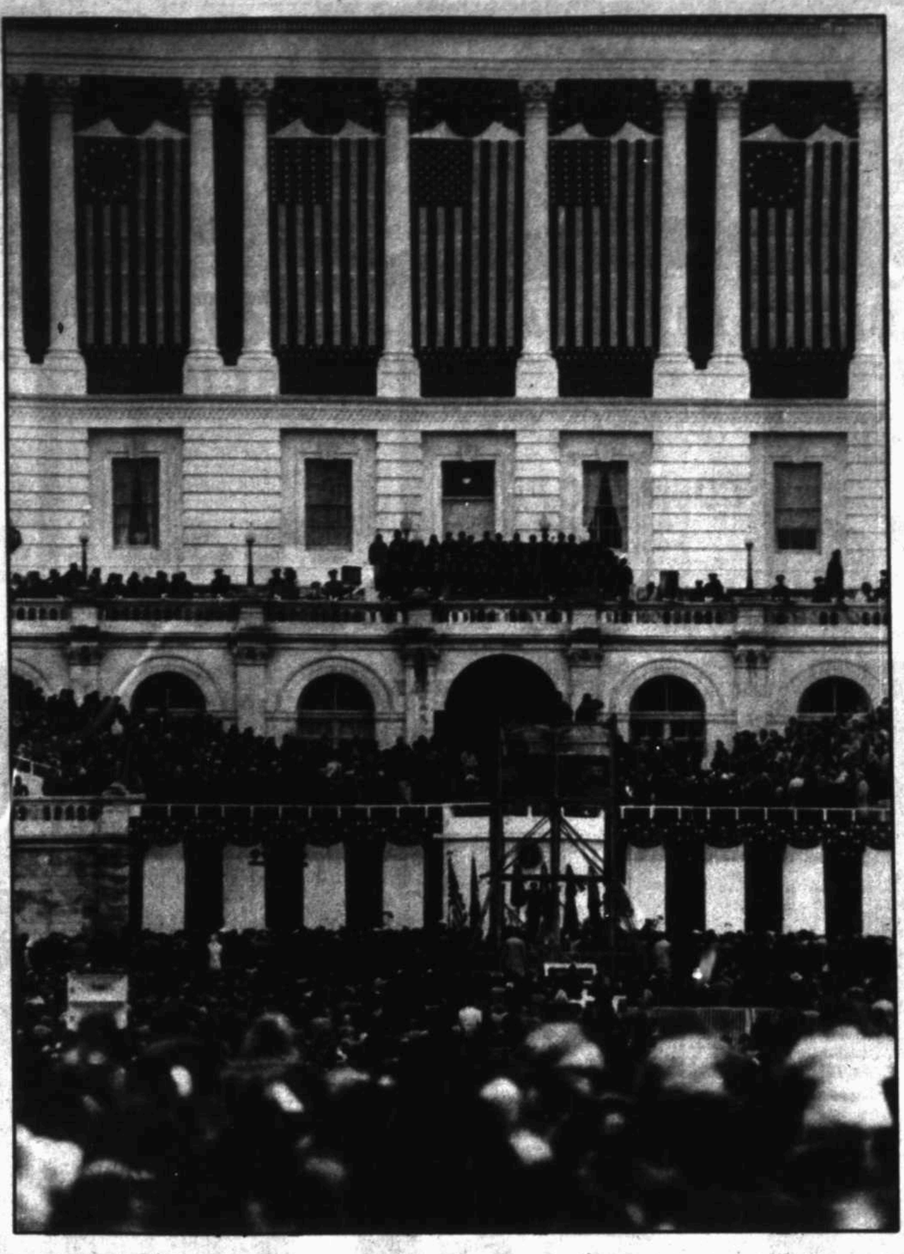
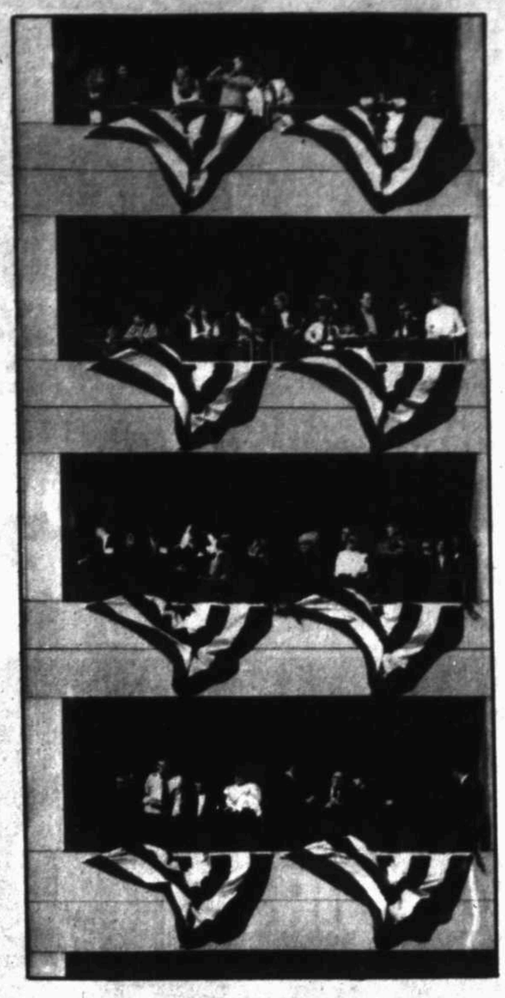
A Bush Salute





Viewers gather around the Capitol, left, for Friday's swearing-in of George Herbert Walker Bush as 41st president of the United States. Along Pennsylvania Avenue, above, parade-goers chose places along the street or above it — like these who watched from this parking garage.

Cristal Garner, center, joins Midland Lee High School flag corps mates in a salute as the school's Rebel band makes its way along the parade route.

Thousands watch as the Lee band — one of five units representing Texas as Bush's home state — as they pass the Old Executive Office Building.

Murderer confesses as execution date nears

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Convicted murderer Ted Bundy confessed to at least nine killings while his lawyers maneuvered to block his execution scheduled for Tuesday, officials from two Western states said Saturday.

Bundy

Bundy confessed to killing at least eight young women in western Washington state in 1974, investigator Robert Keppel of the Washington attorney general's office said.

Bundy also confessed to the 1975 slaying of a 26-year-old Vail, Colo., ski shop employee whose body was never found, Vail Police Chief Ken Hughey said.

Bundy who grew up in Tacoma, Wash., was scared, shaken and tearful as he responded to questions from investigators, Keppel told KIRO-TV of Seattle on Saturday night in a telephone interview from Florida.

"The man is trying to save his life," Keppel said.

Bundy, scheduled to die in the electric chair for the kidnap-murder of 12-year-old Kimberly Leach in 1978, has been linked to as many as 36 killings and disappearances of young women in Washington, Colorado, Utah and other Western states.

The 42-year-old law school dropout was visited Saturday by officials from several Western states, and more interviews were scheduled for Sunday, said Paul Decker, assistant warden at Florida State Prison in Starke.

Bundy's lawyers lost two more bids for a stay of execution Saturday. U.S. District Judge G. Kendall Sharp, who in 1987 called Bundy "a diabolical genius" and "probably the most competent serial killer in the country at this time," denied a request for a stay Saturday morning.

A three-judge panel of the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Atlanta denied Bundy's appeal in a telephone conference Saturday afternoon without addressing any of the legal issues, said court clerk Matt Davidson.

As a last resort, attorneys can appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court, but the nation's high court already refused to hear a separate Bundy appeal Tuesday.

Bundy last week had offered to trade information about other slayings for a delay in his execution, but Gov. Bob Martinez, who signed Bundy's fourth death warrant Jan. 17, refused, saying he would not "negotiate with a killer."

Bundy also has been sentenced to die for the murders of two Florida State University sorority sisters, but he had not previously admitted to any slayings.

Hughey said Bundy acknowledged killing Julie Cunningham, who disappeared in Vail March 15, 1975.

"Detectives believe the confession is indeed valid," he said, noting Bundy's details about the victim, her clothes and the Vail area have been persuasive.

The police chief gave this recounting of what Bundy said: He approached her on crutches asking for help, one of several ruses attributed to the suspected serial killer. She agreed to carry his ski boots to his car, where Bundy knocked her unconscious with a metal bar.

The woman regained consciousness after 20-30 miles west of Glenwood Springs, Colo., but he knocked her unconscious again, strangled her, left her body where she fell and drove to Utah. He returned four or five weeks later and buried her.

Pallbearers carry the body of Allen Blanchard, a passenger on a motorcycle whose unarmed driver was gunned down Monday in Miami's Overtown neighborhood by a Hispanic police officer, into Miami's Cathedral of St. Mary Saturday.

150 attend funeral of man whose death sparked riots

MIAMI (AP) — Blacks gathered on Saturday to bury one of the two men killed in a police shooting that sparked race riots, and police said many of those arrested in the uprising would be kept behind bars until after the Super Bowl.

Elsewhere, Miami erupted in parties and hoopla for Sunday's football extravaganza in stark contrast to the tension and violence of last week, and police arranged for tight security at Joe Robbie Stadium, 15 miles north of the city.

About 150 people entered the Cathedral of St. Mary for the funeral of Allen Blanchard, a passenger on a motorcycle whose unarmed driver was gunned down Monday in the Overtown neighborhood by a Hispanic police officer. Police were chasing the motorcycle for a traffic violation.

Blanchard, 24, died of injuries suffered when the motorcycle crashed. His family made televised appeals for calm in Overtown and Liberty City. Driver Clement Lloyd, 23, who was killed by a shot to the head, will be buried Monday.

Riots touched off by the shooting left one man dead, and 11 others were treated for gunshot wounds. Thirteen buildings were torched and others looted in the two black neighborhoods, and 372 people were arrested, authorities said. There were less serious disturbances in the black section of the Coconut Grove neighborhood.

Blanchard was remembered as a youth who "resented trouble and violence," and worked with both the elderly and schoolchildren in his native Virgin Islands.

Celebrity chefs dish it out for homeless

WASHINGTON (AP) — Crab meat with duxelle sauce and chocolate-covered macadamia nuts isn't the usual bill of fare for the homeless, but that was on the menu Saturday after celebrity chefs ousted from a fund-raising event decided to cook instead for those who can't pay.

"We normally serve a very nice meal, a hot meal with either fresh fruit salad or fresh green salad. But...we don't serve clams or crab. People around here got all perky about that," said Mitch Snyder of the Community for Creative Non-Violence, which runs the homeless shelter.

A commercial event had been scheduled for Saturday night and today, charging $50 per ticket for Saturday night and $15 for today's Super Bowl party. The for-profit organization planning it, A Taste of America, had expected to donate $150,000 to $300,000 in profits to the homeless shelter, said spokeswomen for the sponsoring group.

But the event was canceled because of last-minute contract problems with the DC Armory, they said.

James Dalrymple, general manager of the armory, did not immediately return a phone call to his home Saturday.

"Obviously, we could use the money and we're sorry that didn't work out," Snyder said. "At least people in our shelter are going to get one nice meal."

The dismayed chefs, who had brought some of their food with them, met Friday to decide what to do.

"We had a choice whether we should pick up and go, but we decided we were here to help the hungry and homeless, so why don't we?" said John P. Hughes III, owner and chef of Windows On the Water in Kennebunkport, Maine.

When President and Mrs. Bush stop by his restaurant, he usually serves them lobster-stuffed potatoes, and he had intended to make the same dish for the A Taste of America event. But he managed to stop the shipment of 160 pounds of lobster.

"It would have cost us $2,000," said his wife, Cynthia. "We're a small business. We can't absorb that."

John Weichman of All Seasons restaurant in Mobile, Ala., had brought more than $500 worth of crab meat with him, and Filippo Milone of The Pillars Restaurant, also in Mobile, who had canceled his shipment of crab meat, offered to split the cost.

Referring to the homeless shelter residents, Weichman said, "Hopefully, they'll have a memorable meal and they'll realize they ate as well as some of the fat cats."

There appeared to be no clash of egos as the chefs whirled around the shelter's kitchen, directing college volunteers on the proper way to slice potatoes, chop carrots and open and mix cans of tomato paste with whole tomatoes.

"Broccoli au gratin," Weichman pronounced as crates of broccoli appeared in the kitchen. "You gotta be flexible," he said, explaining the instant addition to the menu.

"We'll make a good pasta with crab sauce, whatever," said Milone.

In addition to the crab meat with a sauce of bell pepper, onions, mushrooms and pimentos; the chefs prepared a dish of roasted garlic potatoes, pasta with a red sauce as well as a lamb dish and salad.

Chef Daniel Thiebaut of the Mauna Kea Beach Resort in Kohala Coast, Hawaii, got his company to donate the lamb, fruit and special colored chocolate-covered macadamia nuts.

Snyder surveyed the busy scene in his kitchen at 2 p.m. and asked warily, "You can get this dinner done by 5 p.m.?"

"No problem," Weichman responded.

NATION IN BRIEF

Abortion ruling recalled

Associated Press

Anti-abortion forces marked the 16th anniversary of the Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion Saturday with demonstrations across the country, prompting more than 400 arrests and a clash with pro-choice activists in Michigan.

Hundreds of demonstrators turned out in Arizona, Texas, Louisiana, Michigan and California to protest the day before the anniversary of the Roe vs. Wade decision. But in Florida, about 200 people gathered to support the legal right to an abortion.

In Arizona, about 500 anti-abortion protesters blocked the entrance of a Phoenix women's clinic, which led to 184 arrests, including three for assault, police said.

"They were just abusive, violent people," said Dr. Brian Finkel, medical director of the Metro Phoenix Women's Clinic, who was assaulted during the protest.

In Michigan, a fight broke out between a group of anti-abortion demonstrators and pro-choice activists outside a Detroit clinic, resulting in 55 arrests, police said.

In Texas, about 3,000 anti-abortion protesters marched through downtown Austin Saturday and held a rally near the state Capitol. Pro-choice activists in Texas held a later rally and candlelight vigil on the Capitol steps.

White supremacists march

ATLANTA (AP) — Six white supremacists marched through downtown Saturday surrounded by National Guard troops in riot gear as hundreds of angry counterdemonstrators hurled bricks, rocks and insults at them.

A half-dozen law enforcement officers were injured as violence broke out along the route and in spots throughout downtown after the march. Police reported 31 arrests.

Two thousand police officers and National Guardsmen surrounded the Capitol and lined the mile-long march route, trying to keep about 1,000 counterdemonstrators away from the white supremacists.

John Bankhead, a spokesman for the Georgia Bureau of Investigation, said the counterdemonstrators overwhelmed the security forces at some points. But the white supremacists completed their march unscathed.

Boy attacks poverty

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — A 7-year-old boy appointed to the city Youth Commission after he worked for the re-election of a councilman attended his first meeting Saturday and proposed some attacks on poverty.

Edward Andrews, who looked bored at times, sat through an hour of plodding discussion by fellow commissioners and school officials on topics such as student motivation and high school assemblies.

But then Teddy, as he's known, rose to tackle an even more serious subject.

"I propose we join together to help the poor and homeless children," he said.

His suggestions included soliciting contributions from the University of California at Berkeley and the city Police Department; helping "children in need" get haircuts; collecting books, toys and clothing for homeless children; and distributing them in ways that will not humiliate the youngsters.

Israeli troops accidentally kill mayor's bodyguard

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli soldiers accidentally killed a Palestinian mayor's bodyguard Saturday as protesters threw stones at the mayor, accusing him of cooperating with Israel, Arab reporters said.

Also in the occupied territories, a teen-ager was killed and four Arabs wounded in confrontations with Israeli troops. The deaths raised to 367 the number of Palestinians killed during the 11-month-old uprising. Fifteen Israelis also have died.

Arab reporters said troops shot Yasser Karaish, 28, a bodyguard for Ismaeel Abu Hemeid, the Israeli-appointed mayor of the West Bank village of Yatta, eight miles south of Jerusalem.

The reporters said Karaish was armed and protecting the mayor from a crowd of young Palestinian nationalists throwing rocks at Hemeid's home and accusing him of collaborating with Israel.

Israeli troops arriving at the scene saw an armed Palestinian in front of Hemeid's home and opened fire, accidentally killing Karaish, Arab reporters said. It was not clear exactly what Karaish was doing at the time he was shot or whether he had fired his gun.

A preliminary army investigation revealed Karaish was carrying an Uzi submachine gun, which he was licensed to carry.

The army could not confirm whether Karaish worked as a bodyguard for Hemeid or whether he was at the stone-throwing incident, but the military routinely gives weapons to pro-Israeli Palestinian figures.

A military official said Karaish saw Israeli troops coming toward him and opened fire at the soldiers.

"He thought he was being attacked," a military official said. "The soldiers reacted and returned fire."

An army spokesman said the military has sealed off the village and is investigating.

Arab reporters said their was no evidence Karaish opened fire first and said the troops may have thought Karaish was a member of a Palestinian strike force.

Papers show British used dirty tactics against Arabs

LONDON (AP) — British officials frequently expressed alarm at their security forces' behavior during an Arab rebellion in Palestine 50 years ago, but they did little to curb the excesses, newly declassified documents show.

The Independent newspaper, which sifted through the government files, said Saturday they showed "ministers refused to curb the atrocities and excesses ... — the very charge now leveled against Israel by the present British government."

A Foreign Office spokesman said he did not expect the department to comment because, "That is history and it's for the historians to decide."

One tactic was to force Arab cabdrivers to ride at the head of British convoys in case the road was mined, the Independent said.

A note from Sir John Shuckburgh, a senior government official at the time, was quoted as likening conditions in Palestine to what the British faced against Irish rebels 20 years earlier.

"We have to deal not with a chivalrous opponent playing the game according to the rules, but with gangsters and murderers," Shuckburgh wrote.

This followed the assassination of a British official in the town of Jenin and the shooting death of the suspected assassin, allegedly as he tried to escape after being arrested.

A heavily armed convoy set out for Jenin, in what is now the Israeli-occupied West Bank, carrying 9,300 pounds of the explosive gelignite and orders that "a large portion of the town should be blown up," according to a commander's report dated Sept. 5, 1938.

Demolishing homes is one of the penalties Israel has used during the 13-month-old Palestinian rebellion in the occupied territories. It inherited this and other tactics from the British, who ruled Palestine from 1917 until Israel won statehood in 1948.

What particularly alarmed London, the Independent said, was security forces' use of "mine-sweeping taxis."

Known troublemakers owned the taxis, which were commandeered with their drivers and put at the heads of convoys, the papers said.

Lord Dufferin of Ava, parliamentary undersecretary at the Colonial Office, wrote: "Much as I dislike the implications of the 'mine-sweeping taxi,' I do not feel that we have the right to interfere. British lives are being lost and I don't think we, from the security of Whitehall, can protest squeamishly about measures taken by the men in the front line."

Let's "close our eyes," he recommended to the government in a letter endorsed by other officials.

A letter to the Colonial Office from the British High Commissioner in Jerusalem, Sir Harold MacMichael, shared a concern that the British were using "Black and Tan tactics" — a reference to atrocities committed by the Black and Tan units of British military police in Ireland in 1920 and 1921.

"One recognizes that when men see their friends and comrades ... blown into pieces by a land mine they are apt to 'see red'" he wrote. "But there are limits which must not be passed."

The Independent said the papers contain "no evidence of firm government action to demand discipline and adherence to publicly stated orders."

West German diplomats desert Afghan capital

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — West Germany's diplomatic staff left Kabul Saturday under orders from the Bonn government, and Tass said the Soviet Union began an airlift of emergency food supplies to this beleaguered capital.

The West German Foreign Ministry said it told its three diplomats in Kabul to leave because of fears of worsening economic conditions and increased violence as Soviet soldiers leave Afghanistan and its civil war.

Juergen Chrobog, chief ministry spokesman, said the diplomats and their families left the city Saturday. He said the embassy would function "on a reduced status" with a small local staff.

Western diplomatic sources in Kabul, however, said the embassy was closed. That would make it the first foreign mission in Kabul to shut down amid concerns about an economic blockade and possible blood bath following the Red Army's departure.

The sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the West Germans left on a flight for New Delhi with no prior announcement.

"We intend to watch developments there carefully before making a decision on when to return," Chrobog said.

Other Western embassies say they are reviewing their positions now that it appears the Soviets will meet a Feb. 15 deadline for removal of their troops from Afghanistan, where they have been helping government troops fight Moslem guerrillas since December 1979.

The British Embassy last week told Britons and nationals of six other countries for which it has diplomatic responsibility to leave. The U.S. Embassy has 11 American staff members in Kabul and says the question of whether to stay is "under constant review."

Kabul has been increasingly tense as the withdrawal date for the remaining 50,000 Soviet soldiers approaches and guerrillas close in. Food prices have doubled in recent weeks. Civilians, including young children, stand in bread lines for hours in 20-degree temperatures.

Guerrilla disruptions of convoys of food and supplies, including ammunition, have increased as Soviet troops hand over escort duties and positions to government units along the key Salang highway from the Soviet border. Bad weather also has held up convoys.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Shiite cleric says British hostages' release likely

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A Shiite Moslem cleric said in an interview published Saturday there are signs British hostages in Lebanon will be freed soon but that U.S. captives won't go free until the United States makes concessions.

President Bush said Saturday in Washington the United States would make no concessions to free the hostages. "We are not going to escalate the currency of holding Americans hostage," he said.

The fundamentalist cleric, Sheik Sadek Mousawi, said the United States should meet Iranian conditions for freeing the American hostages, according to the interview published by the Beirut magazine An-Nahar Arab and International.

The magazine quoted Mousawi as saying, "I would like to assert that there are good indications of an imminent release of the British hostages as a result of the Iranian-British rapprochement."

Britain and Iran agreed Dec. 9 to restore full diplomatic ties, ending a 19-month break that followed the arrest of an Iranian diplomat in England on shoplifting charges.

Three Britons are among the 15 foreign hostages in Lebanon. They are Anglican church envoy Terry Waite, who disappeared Jan. 20, 1987; journalist John McCarthy, kidnapped April 17, 1986; and educator Brian Keenan, a dual British-Irish national abducted April 11, 1986.

Peruvian author targeted

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Two men waiting to throw dynamite at a plane carrying author and activist Mario Vargas Llosa shot and wounded four people when their attempt was foiled, a newspaper reported Saturday.

The daily newspaper Expreso reported the plane belonging to the domestic airline Faucett had just landed Thursday in Pucallpa, 355 miles northeast of Lima, and was taxiing to a halt when the incident occurred.

The incident was confirmed by the Libertad (Freedom) movement led by Vargas LLosa, Peru's most celebrated novelist.

Vargas Llosa has headed the Libertad movement since 1987 and with the political parties Popular Action and Popular Christian Party formed a center-right Democratic Front that supports the candidacy of the writer for the 1990 presidential elections.

Expreso said the foiled attack occurred at 7 p.m. (CST) when the two men waited at the end of the runway where the plane slowed down to turn and park, Expreso said.

Some residents of a nearby shantytown heard about the presence of two gunmen at the airport and went there to investigate, it said. They were greeted by a round of bullets that wounded four of them, it said.

The attackers escaped, leaving behind dynamite that could have been used to severely damage the aircraft.

Salvador Dali near death

FIGUERAS, Spain (AP) — Doctors treating Salvador Dali for a heart ailment and other problems said Saturday the famed surrealist artist appeared to be close to death.

Dr. Carles Ponsati, Dali's chief physician, said the 84-year-old painter has "a great will to live ... and this is what is keeping him alive."

He said Dali was not responding to treatment for heart trouble, which has been aggravated by pneumonia, and that he needs an oxygen mask to breathe.

Ponsati also heads Figueras Hospital, where Dali returned Wednesday after his condition deteriorated.

Dr. Joan Garcia San Miguel, who treated Dali during two previous hospital stays since November, told the Spanish news agency EFE the painter had only "a one-in-a-thousand chance" of surviving his present crisis.

Dali has suffered chronic heart ailments and has been in a wheelchair since August 1984, when he suffered severe burns in a fire in his former home in nearby La Pera.

757 manages safe landing

LONDON (AP) — A British Airways Boeing 757 carrying 82 people made a safe emergency landing today at Heathrow International Airport after one of its two engines developed problems in flight, the airline said.

"It landed perfectly safely," said British Airways spokeswoman Linda John. She said the plane, flying from Edinburgh, Scotland to London, was able to taxi to the boarding ramp under its own power. Fire engines and ambulances stood by on the runway as a precaution during the landing.

British Airways first reported the left-hand engine had been shut off, but later today it said the engine had only been throttled back after developing problems it did not detail.

It was the third emergency landing involving Boeing aircraft since Thursday.

Forty-four people were killed Jan. 8 when a British Midland Boeing 737 crashed while attempting an emergency landing near Kegworth, outside London. The pilot had reported engine trouble before the crash.

Syrian minister claims Israelis blew up plane

KUWAIT (AP) — Syria's defense minister alleged that Israel duped an American soldier into carrying the bomb that blew up a Pan Am jet over Scotland last month. Israel called the charge "ridiculous."

"An agent of Israeli intelligence, Mossad, handed him the bomb-laden bag to carry in return for $300,000, claiming it was diamonds worth $500,000 needed to be smuggled into the United States," Mustafa Tlass said in an interview published Saturday in Kuwait's daily Al-Qabas.

Reached in Damascus, Tlass confirmed the newspaper reported his statements correctly, but he refused to give additional information.

In Israel, Foreign Ministry spokesman Alon Leil said, "It is ridiculous and malicious. This story shows how the Syrian leaders are not serious toward Israel and peace in the region."

Syria is Israel's most vehement enemy in the Middle East. Israel has accused Palestinian terrorists of placing the bomb and has dismissed claims of Israeli involvement as ludicrous.

The Syrian minister did not say where he got his information, but he said it was known to Western investigators.

Britain's Sunday Express newspaper, in an unattributed report Jan. 15, said U.S. government investigators are looking into the theory the bomb went aboard the plane with a soldier involved in a diamond smuggling ring.

All 259 people on board Pan Am Flight 103 were killed and 11 people on the ground in Lockerbie, Scotland, died when the Boeing 747 fell from the sky Dec. 21.

The flight originated in Frankfurt, West Germany and stopped in London en route to New York.

Tlass said "the one who carried the explosives aboard the plane in Frankfurt was one of the American soldiers serving at a base in West Germany and he did it unknowingly." He did not name the soldier.

British investigators determined the plane was destroyed by a bomb placed in the luggage hold, but they have not said who was responsible.

Representatives of the Palestine Liberation Organization have talked of a Mossad connection, suggesting Israel planned the attack to throw blame on the PLO and undermine a new dialogue between the PLO and Washington.

Suspicions also have turned on several Syrian-backed Palestinian factions which might be trying to derail peace overtures of PLO chairman Yasser Arafat.

In addition, a caller claiming to represent an Iranian group called the Guardians of the Islamic Revolution made two calls to The Associated Press in London saying that group planted the bomb.

Black officers, civilian shot to death in Soweto

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Two black policemen and a civilian were shot to death in Soweto by assailants using an automatic rifle, police said Saturday.

A third policeman suffered a bullet wound in the chest and was hospitalized in serious but stable condition after the attack late Friday in the huge township outside Johannesburg, police said.

The civilian was described as a 45-year-old black man who happened to be in the area at the time of the attack. None of the victims' names was released.

Police said the attackers used a Soviet-made AK-47 rifle. No arrests were reported, and the police statement did not suggest a possible motive for the attack.

Black policemen have been frequent targets of attacks by guerrillas and anti-apartheid militants who consider them collaborators with the white-led government.

Beijing residents recall end of Communist siege in '49

By KATHY WILHELM

BEIJING (AP) — Radio stations broadcast the news 40 years ago Sunday to anxious Beijing residents: the city's Nationalist officials had surrendered peacefully and a long Communist siege was over.

She Diqing, now 71, remembers the day well. The announcement meant his imminent release from jail in Beijing for his underground Communist work.

Historian Wang Huilin is less sure of the dates but remembers clearly getting the news. He and friends, then students, ran into the streets and sang songs of celebration.

From a military standpoint, Beijing's surrender Jan. 22, 1949, was anticlimactic. After more than three years of civil war, the rest of northeastern China already was in Communist hands. Communist troops had surrounded the ancient walled city since Dec. 13.

Gen. Fu Zuoyi, Beijing's Nationalist commander, had no line of retreat and no chance of relief from Nationalist leader Chiang Kai-shek's forces in the south.

For Beijing's 2 million residents, the surrender meant the end to waiting and wondering whether the proud Fu, one of the Nationalists' most able generals, would choose to make a stand.

"It was a very dismal, difficult time. We never knew whether there would be violence or not," Derek Bodde, professor emeritus of Oriental studies at the University of Pennsylvania, said in a telephone interview. Bodde was in Beijing during the siege, busy translating a history of Chinese philosophy, and remembers filling his bathtub with water each day because water supplies often were cut.

Wang, who in 1949 was a student at Beijing Normal University and now teaches history there, remembers food supplies also were tight.

"Classes went on as usual. But everyone wanted a peaceful surrender. Aside from the possible loss of life, Beijing held so many ancient relics that would have been destroyed in a battle," he said.

The relics were part of Beijing's mystique as China's capital for centuries. The Nationalists made their capital in Nanking, to the south, but the Communists planned to restore Beijing's status and did not want to destroy the city first.

Beijing city officials have commemorated the fateful weeks in 1949 by issuing three books of photographs, reminiscences and documents.

She, now retired from a top position in Beijing's postwar government and a contributor to the books, recalled his work as an underground Communist organizer.

Even before the siege began, he said, he sent envoys to persuade Fu to surrender, starting with Fu's daughter, a member of the pro-Communist Democratic Youth Alliance that She headed.

"We feared that if we picked someone else to talk to Fu, he might be angry and kill the messenger," She said. "But we figured if we picked his daughter, he might be unhappy but he wouldn't do anything."

Several weeks later, She was arrested by Nationalist forces and spent the last 22 days before the surrender in jail.

W. Allyn Rickett, then a student at Beijing's Qinghua University outside the city wall, watched events from a different perspective.

Nationalist troops had set up an artillery unit on campus, said Rickett, now retired as a professor at the University of Pennsylvania.

"But on the night of the 13th, the Nationalists withdrew and the Communist forces went past the university and set up their lines around Beijing," he recalled in a phone conversation. The two sides dug into defensive positions in the arid winter landscape, trading occasional cannon volleys.

Rickett said he crossed Communist and Nationalist lines twice to enter Beijing and found a city crowded with refugee students whom the Nationalists had evacuated from other cities.

"The place was loaded with troops and trucks rushing around. There were a lot of accidents," he said. Soldiers patrolled the dark streets at night to enforce a curfew.

"You couldn't see them and they couldn't see you," Rickett said. "I'd go along with a flashlight in my face to show I was a foreigner. Sometimes that got me by, sometimes I got yelled at."

Fu, meanwhile, paced the floor of his study in Beijing's former imperial palace and debated what to do, Major Gen. Zhou Beifeng, his former aide, wrote in the latest edition of Outlook Weekly magazine.

Soviets could overtake U.S. on deficit front

MOSCOW (AP) — The ballooning Soviet budget deficit could pass the U.S. deficit in 1990, according to figures published in a Soviet newspaper Saturday.

Driven by the cost of the Chernobyl clean up, a crash program to solve shortages of housing and consumer goods, and reconstruction after the Armenian earthquake, Soviet red ink could nearly double next year to 100 billion rubles, or $162 billion.

That figure, calculated by research economist O.T. Bogomolov and reported in the newspaper Arguments and Facts, is higher than estimates for the U.S. deficit for 1989, which range from $127 billion to $141 billion.

Worse, it looms as a far greater percentage of the Soviet economy — 11 percent of gross national product compared to 3 percent to 4 percent in the United States, Bogomolov said.

The economist blamed the deficit in part on the declining price of oil, the Soviet Union's primary export; and the anti-alcohol campaign, which cost $65 billion in lost tax revenue.

He also cited "urgent social problems," apparently referring to the Soviet government's decision to boost spending on housing and consumer goods this year to appease an unhappy population.

In addition, the cost of reconstructing the area devastated by the Armenian earthquake is estimated at more than $13 billion during the next two years.

Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev said last week that Soviet financial problems were so pressing that even the defense budget would have to be cut.

The Soviet Union first admitted to a budget deficit last autumn, saying it has been running in the red for years while telling Soviet citizens it was producing an annual surplus. Finance Minister Boris Gostev projected a deficit of $55 billion on a 1989 government budget of $795 billion.

However, some Western economists say the severity of a deficit is determined by its proportion to the entire economy, not just the government budget. They say that is a better indicator of how far a nation can afford to go into debt.

Until Saturday, the Soviet Union had not revealed the size of its economy.

But in reporting the 1988 economic statistics, Izvestia said Saturday that the Soviet gross national product grew 5 percent to $1.4 trillion dollars in 1988.

That would be a strong increase if it did not include inflation, but the government newspaper did not say. The Soviet Union first acknowledged that it suffers from inflation last year, but officials said they had not yet calculated the rate.

The Izvestia report said one out of 10 enterprises in the country was losing money.

shi'stər

shyster — (noun) No one wants to be called a "shyster," which is someone who is professionally unscrupulous, especially in the practice of law or politics. The word "shyster" is believed to have originated in about 1840 with an American attorney named "Sheuster" who was frequently reprimanded in a New York court for pettifoggery, disreputable methods of practicing law. Although this origin of "shyster" seems plausible, other references state that the word "shyster" is a variant of "shicer," a meaningless person, or a person of little value or worth. Both words are based on the German or Yiddish word "scheisse," meaning excrement.

'Hearts on Parade' features male models

By JANE MARLER DEES

Midland men in sportswear, Midland men in business suits and still more Midland men in tuxedos will flaunt their runway talent for a good cause next month.

The second annual "Hearts on Parade" fashion show, sponsored by the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce's Women's Department, will be held Feb. 11 at the ClayDesta Atrium.

Money raised at the fashion show will be directed to college scholarships for Midland County students who are presently pursuing higher education, said Elvia Hernandez, the chamber's executive director.

Last year eight students received scholarships valued from $250 to $600, she said.

This year, the chamber hopes to double that figure and award at least 16 scholarships, Mrs. Hernandez added.

"It's expensive to go to college. We felt this was our responsibility to the community," the executive director said.

The fashion show will be divided into three categories — sportswear, suits and tuxedos.

In addition, Miss West Texas, Lori Bloodworth, and Miss League of United Latin American Citizens, Elaine Cortez, will make appearances.

Masters of ceremonies for Hearts on Parade will be radio personality Dave Perkins and Channel 9 TV anchor Janet Storie.

Entertainment will be provided by Len and Pamela Musgrove and "Los Keys" from San Antonio.

Tickets are $25 per person and $50 a couple.

Men who will model at the fashion show include Pete Martinez, John Castro, David Diaz, Larry Carrasco, Bill Davidson, Jack Sherman, Dr. Joe Baressi, Rollie Hyde, Midland City Councilman Gordon Marcum, County Attorney Mark Dettman, George Logan, Clayton Williams Jr., Reggie Franklin, Tony Valadez, Doug Smith, W.C. Wilson, Sandy Torres, John Foster, Richard Abalos, Ricardo Torres, Nick Sanchez, Richard Alvarado and Ernie Barbee.

For more information, call Mrs. Hernandez at the chamber at 682-2960.

Influence of blacks in West emphasized

By ED TODD

A nation that was largely "built on the backs of slaves" would do well to recognize the roles which black cowboys, soldiers and pioneers played in civilizing the American West, said Midland black leader James Fuller.

"We want to complete the American historical story," said Fuller, the 46-year-old Midland educator who is president of the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees. Fuller and other leaders want to "underscore the contributions of black cowboys and pioneers" in American history.

Today, said Fuller, that is coming about through the "persistence and insistence" of blacks, people like himself and his wife, Robbyne Hocker Fuller, as well as black artists and writers.

"We now know that cowboys come in many colors," said Mrs. Fuller, who is founding president of the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs Inc. "That is something we were not aware of until just recently."

The Fullers are at the forefront in promoting a national celebration called "Coming Home to America's Roots" that is intended to promote racial harmony.

The celebration of "shared pride and partnership" recognizes the nation's multi-racial Western heritage and its "forgotten" black cowboys, explorers, soldiers and pioneers. It is to climax in a three-day "Forgotten Wild West Festival" of parades, film festivals, Western fashion shows, music-and-dance recitals and street fairs.

A "Coming Home" video to promote the celebration would include appearances by President George Bush, U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, the Rev. Jesse Jackson, and U.S. Secretary of Education Dr. Lauro Cavazos.

Site of the festival in the Great Southwest has not yet been determined, Fuller said, but likely will be in a Texas town or city, possibly Midland.

The "Coming Home" celebration was initiated in June 1986 with the unveiling of the bronze replica of an Eddie Dixon sculpture that depicts black pioneers, settlers, soldiers, cowboys and other Western heroes.

James Fuller and his wife, Robbyne, are in the forefront in heralding the roles of black cowboys, soldiers, settlers and explorers in settling the American West. They are displaying a Carole Joyce painting of a "Wild West" black American cowboy, Nat Love.

Indians had called the black soldiers "buffalo soldiers" because the natural kinking of the soldiers' hair was similar to the hair of the bison. Black cavalry soldiers in West Texas had been assigned to Fort Concho and Fort Davis in the mid-to-late 1800s.

"FORGOTTEN WEST" themes are being discussed for a Forgotten West Dude Ranch in Midland, a Forgotten West Memorial in Lubbock, a Western Heritage Theme Park in Fort Worth, and Western Heritage Entertainment Ranch in Houston.

GEM pupils digging into archaeology

By ANNTOINETTE MOORE

The excavators peered intently at the dirt as it trickled slowly through the wire screen's fine mesh.

"Here's a seed," said Teddy Stickney, president of the Texas Archaeological Society. "Here's a bug ... all this was going through the big screen."

"There's a rain spider," she continued, pointing to a small, fuzzy, red-orange ball. "They come out right before it rains. He's what we call a velvet spider."

"Ooh, neat!" said a fifth grader from the school district's Gifted Education Midland program. "I can see its tiny legs."

The student was among some 40 Midland Independent School District students braving Thursday's chilly weather. Their mission: to record and perhaps decipher the mysteries of southeast Midland County's past with the help of three MISD teachers and several volunteers from the Midland Archaeological Society.

Most students seemed to be enjoying their brief exposure to field archaeology.

"I'm having a great time here ... and it's kind of cold!" said eleven-year-old Grant Looney enthusiastically.

But there were a few surprises.

"I didn't know there was going to be so many weeds and stickers," he continued. "And I didn't know it would be so easy to dig; it's really soft ground."

Jaycees preparing for anniversary

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

A toast to 50 years of excellence will be among the highlights of the Midland Jaycees 32nd Annual Distinguished Service Award and Boss of the Year Dinner that takes place Feb. 18 on the organization's Golden Anniversary.

Retired U.S. Air Force Gen. Robinson Risner, a former Vietnam prisoner of war, is scheduled to speak at the 50th anniversary dinner at the Midland Petroleum Club.

Risner was appointed U.S. representative to the 40th United Nations General Assembly in 1985 by former President Reagan after becoming America's 20th Jet Ace, shooting down eight Soviet-made MIG fighter jets in the Korean War.

In 1957 he set a transatlantic speed record on the 30th Anniversary of Charles Lindbergh's solo flight to and from Europe.

During the Vietnam War, Risner spent 7½ years in a Vietnamese POW camp after being shot down deep inside enemy territory. In 1979, he became the first man in U.S. history to receive a miliatary trophy in his honor.

He also is the first recipient of the Air Force Cross; and earned some 65 decorations including the Distinguished Service Medal, three Distinguished Flying Crosses, the Bronze Star with "V" for valor, two Silver Stars, eight Air Medals and three Purple Hearts.

In the past two years, the Midland Jaycees — which is open to men and women between the ages of 21 and 40 — has received statewide notoriety as Texas' outstanding Jaycee organization.

Last year, the Jaycees broke with tradition and gave the Boss of the Year and Distinguished Service Award to the same man.

Wayne Merritt, chairman of the board and president of United Bank, won the two awards at the organization's 31st annual banquet.

"It was a very exciting and humbling experience to be recognized by my peers and rendering distinguished service to the community," said Merritt, looking back to a year ago.

Other former recipients of the Boss of the Year Award are: Dale Scarth, Ray O. Howard, Murray Fasken, W.G. Marquardt, C.P. Bristol, Robert M. Turpin, John P. Butler, Robert Pendleton, R.W. Lewis, R.D. Hanley, Martin Allday, W.B. Newkirk, Woody Adams, Stanley Moore, Jack Mogle and Ron Griggs.

Also, C.J. Kelly, Winston Barclay, John M. Grimland Jr., Harry Clark, Wayne Peters, William P. "Bill" Franklin, Parker Humes, Al Metcalfe, Tom Welch, Charles Fraser, Bob Bailey, Rufe S. Bynum, Lynn Hunt, Thomas Wageman, the Rev. Joseph Schley Jr. and Wayne Merritt.

Distinguished Service Award nominees must be older than 21 and younger than 39 years of age, and have a history of outstanding community service in the professional and charitable arenas. The recipient is chosen by a slection committee of civic, business and religious leaders.

Barbara Bush just may steal the show from 'first husband'

Ott

Probably the most interesting aspect of the George Bush inauguration activities this weekend has been that his wife, Barbara, has more or less stolen the show.

Everyone, it seems, is in love with the new first lady.

Why?

Because she is not perfect and has the unique ability to laugh at herself. You probably saw her on TV the other day when she was speaking to a full house at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts. Emerging from behind the lecturn, the white-haired Mrs. Bush grinned at her audience and said, "Speaking of glamour, I want you to look at me very carefully. Please notice the hair, the makeup, the designer clothes — you may never see it again."

The crowd howled and gave her a huge ovation.

I must admit I have been taken by the woman myself. There is something real about her that is terribly appealing, especially after eight years of the always-perfect Nancy Reagan.

America now has a first lady who could be your own mother. You get the feeling she probably wanders out on the front lawn each morning to pick up the newspaper while wearing only her robe. Real mothers do that. Nancy Reagan, I feel safe in assuming, doesn't.

Barbara, like all real mothers I've ever known, can probably throw together a delicious meal on the spur of the moment to feed you and your starving friends without a word of complaint.

And, Barbara Bush in all likelihood keeps a neat house, but one that has that special "lived-in" feeling. You don't get the impression you will be imprisoned if you drop a bread crumb on the living room carpet.

In other words, she's a normal human being who has charmed America by just being herself.

She's won me over.

Actually, I've liked most of our first ladies.

Lady Bird Johnson, for example, seemed like a down-home type, who was probably a lot of fun to be around. Most people I've known who lived in the Texas Hill Country were good, solid individuals who knew how to throw a party and enjoy life. She seemed the type.

And, of course, there was everyone's favorite — Betty Ford. Her honesty was particularly appealing. When she had heart-to-heart talks with her children you couldn't help but feel you had experienced the same conversations at some point with your own mother. No matter how badly you had screwed up, your mother would stand behind you. Mrs. Ford gave me that feeling.

I was also extremely fond of Rosalynn Carter, but for a totally different reason. Simply put, I have a maddening weakness for women with a southern accent. If one of them told me to jump off a building, I would. I would feel incredibly stupid, mind you, but I would jump, nonetheless.

Now we have Barbara Bush.

Once again, I think I'm going to be pleased. We have the makings of a very good first lady here. A person who can laugh at her own shortcomings is OK by me. And Barbara certainly seems to be that type.

You get the feeling it would be enjoyable to sit at the breakfast table with her and drink coffee. She would keep the refills coming and probably wouldn't make you feel like a felon for smoking a cigarette.

There's something to be said for flair and elegance in the White House.

But by the same token one should never diminish the importance of the common touch, either.

Hopefully, Barbara will be that touch.

Council expected to support purchase plan

From Staff Reports

This week, Midland City Council is expected to throw its support behind a $1.2 million building purchase.

The building — Loraine Center (formerly the Xerox building) — was selected late last fall by city officials following voter approval of a $4.2 million public safety bond issue.

City officials say they have until Feb. 6 to close the deal. Council is expected to execute an agreement with The Horne Co. of Houston, which is the acting agent for The Prudential Co. — the owner.

Outside consultants were given 90 days by the city to inspect the three-story building for structual flaws and other defects which would have given the city the option to back out. A report is due Tuesday morning at a council workshop session.

City offiicials plan to use the 52,000-square-foot facility to house its highly-touted Emergency Operations Center, better known to residents as a centralized communications center, which will house ehanced 911 as well as emergency network dispatch.

The computer system is expected to be in place sometime in 1989, with police personnel moving either in 1989 or 1990.

Midland had budgeted as much as $1.5 million for the purchase, but based on an appraisal, received a price of $1.2 million by Prudential — a price officials say they just couldn't pass up.

In other business, council is expected to discuss the possibility of tapping up to $15 million in Texas Capital Access Program Funds.

Better known as Texacap, the $750 million pool was issued on July 15, 1986 through the Texas Small Business Industral Development Corp. for the purpose of supplying public works funds.

Managed now through the Texas Department of Commerce, the pool could supply Midland with low interest mony to fund future construction projects, such as water treatment plant expansion.

City officials are expected to meet with representative of Houston-based Vinson & Elkins, who will explain the program.

BLACKS

In Fort Worth in 1986, a statue of black cowboy Bill Pickett was unveiled in front of the Coliseum in Fort Worth's historic Stockyards district. Pickett, a rodeo bulldogger, was "able to pull a (1,000-pound) bull down just by biting his (upper) lip" early in the 1900s, Mrs. Fuller said.

The Fullers gave impetus to the "Coming Home" celebration in 1986, when they were shocked by the absence of blacks on the Texas Sesquicentennial Wagon Train. That year, the Fullers organized a Sesquicentennial celebration in Midland to honor the forgotten black cowboys and black heroes of Texas.

The celebration included a scale model of Dixon's "Forgotten West" bas-relief memorial.

The "pride-building" celebration would work toward setting history "right," healing many of the nation's wounds borne out of racial prejudice, and building self-esteem among blacks.

Traditionally, American cowboys — vaqueros, buckaroos, broncobusters — have been portrayed as white Anglos.

But, said Fuller, at the height of the cowboy era in the 1800s, about a fourth of cowboys were blacks.

"We want to dispel the negative press that has existed for so long," Fuller said. The press had tended to stereotype blacks in subservient roles and suggested that their role in settling and developing the nation was merely incidental.

"THE BLACKS should know that there were cowboy pioneers who helped settle this country," Fuller said. And, ironically, he said, there was a time in recent history when "blacks didn't want to be associated with the cowboys or with the cowboy mystique or the cowboy image."

And that's because they were unaware of their cowboy heritage.

"There was a time when the mentality said, 'That's not a part of your background. That's not a part of your heritage. You don't have any need or cause to identify with them (the cowboys).'" Blacks were not linked to Stetson felt cowboy hats, Western boots and attire.

Black and white cowboys "worked side by side on the range," Fuller said.

"That's not to say there weren't problems. Obviously, there were. Overall, they got along relatively well."

The cowboys were drawn together by "common elements of the Wild West — the weather, the land, the Indians.

"Those were the things that brought them closer together as opposed to letting petty stuff pull them apart," Fuller said.

Black cowboy Bill Pickett, who lived from 1870 to 1932, "was well respected among his fellow cowpokes," Fuller said. "Because of his ingenuity as a rodeo person, that put him even higher on the ladder of esteem among his fellow cowboys." Pickett, who is credited with inventing bulldogging (steer wrestling), was a star player in a Wild West Show.

The black cowboys' role in shaping the West "unfortunately" had "simply" been ignored by academia, particularly historians. "It was swept under the rug" in part because of the slant that the "conquering the land" was aa Anglo-Saxon European experience.

Even today, Fuller said, "There are black cowboys all over the place."

And black rodeo cowboy Charlie Sampson in 1982 became the first black cowboy to win a world title in bull riding.

The recognition of Sampson and other black cowboys on the rodeo circuit "helps dispel this whole notion that cowboying is strictly an Anglo experience," Fuller said. "It really isn't."

Black soldiers and black cowboys, who came to the fore after the freeing of the slaves in the 1861-65 Civil War or War Between the States, came out of slavery.

And Fuller noted that it was "rather ironic" that black soldiers were "fighting the Indians and really contributing to their (Indians') enslavement." Blacks had just "come out of enslavement."

Another "untold story" is the westward movement of blacks, who, for instance, were in the Gold Rush of 1849.

"Primarily, they went as support individuals for Anglos who were moving West," Fuller said. "They still cooked and cleaned and what have you. But there was a freer spirit there in the sense they weren't shackled by the chains of slavery per se."

Nevertheless, "racial attitudes, unfortunately, went West," Fuller said.

"Above it all, the black soldier, the black pioneer, and, particularly, the black cowboy, rose to the occasion, rose above that bigotry to make a significant contribution to the settlement of the West," Fuller said.

"Slavery was an unfortunate occurrence in the history of this country," said Fuller, a Midland College English instructor whose academic background is in English and history. "One group of individuals exploited another. That's the shame of it."

And at one time, many blacks were "ashamed of the fact that they were descendants of slaves."

But positive aspects came out of slavery.

"THE SLAVE experience precipitated a strong people," Fuller said. "Generations survived the slavery experience. There is a legacy there. Those who were enslaved struggled. Many of them died, suffered, sacrificed. But the race survived."

During the "black revolution" of the 1960s, "black became beautiful" and entered the nation's consciousness, Fuller recalled, and the perception helped free blacks of the black-is-negative "shackles."

That revolution, greatly influenced by civil-rights leader Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., heightened "interest in black art, black music, black politics, black economic process, black education and educators, black cowboys and pioneers and folk heroes," Fuller said. Blacks "contributed to the evolution of America."

Black pioneers, black cowboys, and buffalo soldiers on the American frontier "did a lot to settle this part of the country," Fuller said.

That knowledge, said Mrs. Fuller, "can't generate anything but pride" in blacks. "It's like being proud to be part of America."

Fuller found a parallel between King's civil-rights movement from the 1950s until his assassination in 1968 and the rise of the black cowboy.

"The civil-rights movement precipitated an arousal, an awareness, that can only be defined in terms of ethnic pride," Fuller said. "And Dr. King's whole campaign addressed human pride."

The black cowboy, black pioneer, and black soldier played roles in "liberating the West" by overpowering the Indians and taming the territory — the Wild West. And King, "in his own way, attempted to liberate the world community from some of its shackles."

STUDENTS

"I didn't know anything about archaeology," admitted Ashley Wells, 11. "I just knew you dug and got thingies."

"It (excavating sites) is a hard job to do. But it's fun to find things when you know people have lived there for thousands of years."

Ashley's friends thought digging would be fun. "They said, 'Golly, this is real interesting. Wish we could go too!'"

Marcy McKnight, 11, described excavating a site:

"It's like making a hole in the ground ... kind of like drilling for oil. You're looking for something when you don't always know what you're looking for."

Eleven-year-old Amber Mathison's first encounter with archaeology came last summer, when one of the GEM teachers, Nelda Cranford, taught a short course on archaeology at the Museum of the Southwest.

"She'd hidden something in a sandbox and we got to excavate it," Amber said.

"When I grow up I want to be an archaeologist like Ms. Cranford and a teacher."

On Monday, Tuesday and Friday other groups of GEM fifth graders had their chance to survey a large cotton field and trowel away at meter-square test pits.

However, the 150 or so students were not unleashed upon fragile cultural relics without extensive training and supervision.

They spent last fall learning about archaeology from Ms. Cranford, Jan Fischer and Judia Foreman, who work at Carver Cultural Center.

"I've talked about Old World archaeology ... petroglyphs (rock carvings) and pictographs (rock paintings or drawings)," said Ms. Cranford, who has trained student excavators for the past 5 or 6 years and is secretary of the MAS.

The classes followed the path of prehistoric hunters as they pursued giant mammoth and other now-extinct game animals across Siberia and into North America, Ms. Cranford said. They studied prehistoric sites in the American Southwest, such as those at Chaco Canyon in northwestern New Mexico.

But the students also got "hands-on" training — an opportunity to get their hands dirty.

"We made artifacts, buried them (behind Carver) and excavated them," she continued.

"The landowners have been very kind and gracious in letting the kids" work on a real site, Ms. Stickney said. She didn't want to identify them or the site's location to protect it from curiosity seekers and pothunters.

"We only dig sites which have been disturbed or looted," stressed MISD's Ms. Cranford.

"The purpose is to teach students what archaeological sites look like, so that when they grow up, they'll know how to preserve our national history."

"This (the dig) is fantastic," said teacher Jan Fischer. "The students get so many different things out of it.

"They get history, science, math. They do really sophisticated measurings, using high-school level math. It goes all the way down to eye-hand coordination."

The students bear out Ms. Fischer's observation.

"I learned what a site is and how to dig it and how to string a pit (outline a meter square on the ground with string before digging it)," said Grant Looney.

"There's so many rules that you have to abide by, to make the dig possible," said Phillip Parker, 10.

As an example, he cited "holding the trowel in the correct position" — if you don't "you can damage artifacts seriously."

For the survey, each child was given a piece of graph paper, explained Ms. Stickney. He or she then counted off 10 small walking steps — averaging about 1½ meters (almost 4½ feet) long. One square on the graph paper corresponded to one 10-step-long unit.

Any artifact finds were plotted on the graph paper as the student walked down the row, she said.

By Friday, 165 rows had been surveyed. When the individual "maps" are "laid out all together, that will give a rough pattern of artifacts across the field," Ms. Stickney continued. "We'll have a general location of where hearths (clusters of burnt rock) may have been."

"I enjoyed the survey because we were doing our own individual thing. We could work at our own pace," Marcy McKnight said.

"We found a lot of burned rock, broken pieces of metate (a stone used by the Indians to grind grains) and pieces of flint."

Perhaps the most important thing the students learned is "a sense of preservation; it makes them realize just how fragile our environment is and how we have to take care of it," Ms. Fischer said.

"And for West Texas, they think there is nothing out here. It gives the kids a sense that 'wow, this is a neat place!', that there have been people here for a long time."

Tanner Low appears to have absorbed that particular lesson.

"You get so nervous, you're afraid you're gonna miss something," said the 10-year-old.

"We're helping history; we might find something that they've never found before. Scientists might analyze a bone or something ... find a disease or a cure for something."

JAYCEES

"We hope to get a good number of nominations this year," Committee Chairman Dan McClellan said. "Being selected the DSA recipient during our 50th Anniversary celebration would be quite an honor."

Past Distinguished Service Award winners include: Bill Collyns, Clint Dunagan, L.W. Sandusky, John J. Redfern Jr., Taylor Cole, Dr. Henry Schlichting, Art Cole, Perry Pickett, Emil Rassman, Duke Jimerson, James Velvin Jr., Ed Gardner, Tom King, Robert A. Dean and Robert Milam.

Also, James N. Allison Jr., Charles H. Priddy, Robert M. Taubman, C.H. Brockett, Dale Scarth, Bill Franklin, Bill Malone, Ted Kerr, Arlen Edgar, LaDoyce Lambert, Manuel Carrasco, Larry Melton, James Mashburn, Doc Dodson, Preston F. Bridgewater Jr. and James Kent.

Also, Douglas B. Henson, Tom Craddick, Joseph W. Campbell, Larry J. Bell, the Rev. Steve Edwards, Don Evans, Guy McCrary, Steve Davidson, Grant Billingsley, Alan Hale, Chris Scharbauer, Bill Stovall and Wayne Merritt.

Distinguished Service Award and Boss of the Year Award nomination forms are available from the Midland Chamber of Commerce or at the offices of Wagner & Brown, located in Suite 1100 of the Summit Building.

The completed nomination forms should be returned no later than Feb. 10 to Dan McClellan, c/o Wagner & Brown, P.O. Box 1714, Midland, Texas, 79702.

DEATHS

Lillie Mae Stovall

Funeral services for Lillie Mae Stovall of Midland have been set for 11 a.m. Monday at First United Methodist Church with Associate Pastor J.B. Stewart officiating. Burial will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park with Ellis Funeral Home in charge of arrangements.

Stovall

Mrs. Stovall, 74, died early Friday morning at her residence.

She was born Nov. 8, 1914, in Turnersville, where she was raised. In 1928 her family moved to San Angelo where she graduated from Lake View High School in 1931.

She later moved to Midland in 1940 and became a secretary/bookkeeper for Richmond Drilling Co. Mrs. Stovall worked for several accounting firms prior to becoming a CPA in 1956. In the early 1960s, she became a partner with Connally, Peters & Smith Accounting firm. The firm merged with other businesses and when she retired in 1977 it was known as Elmer Fox, Westheimer & Company. During her retirement she was an active volunteer at the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum.

As a member of First United Methodist Church she was active in her Sunday school class, the Lydia class, as its treasurer. She also was an active volunteer with the Meals-on Wheels program.

Survivors include one brother, A.B. Graham of Purmela; one sister, Mozelle Webb of Midland and several nieces and nephews.

Pallbearers will be Wayne Clayton, Mike Lemond, Jerry Hudgeons, Larry Stapp, Hill Glover, Jim Morris, Ken Arnold, A. Wayne Peters and Edward Johnson. Don Trott will be an honorary pallbearer.

The family requests that memorials be directed to Hospice of Midland, 911 W. Texas, or a favorite charity.

Ernest M. Epley Jr.

STANTON — Ernest Marvin Epley Jr., 50, of Leon, W.Va., died Wednesday in an automobile accident in West Virginia.

Graveside services will be at 11 a.m. Monday in the St. Joseph Cemetery in Stanton with Gilbreath Funeral Home in charge of arrangements.

He was born Aug. 24, 1938, in Big Spring and later was a resident of Pecos, where he attended school. He attended New Mexico Military Institute in Roswell, N.M. before returing to Pecos where he graduated from high school in 1957. He attended the University of Texas at Austin and served in the U.S. Military Corps.

He was a successful gamecock breeder who had developed his own strain and had a worldwide clientele.

Survivors include two sons, Troy Epley Roberts of San Antonio and Ernest Marvin Epley, III, of Coalinga, Calif.; three daughters, Laura Craft of Tuscon, Ariz., Villa Mae Hayter of Odessa, and Melissa Mae Epley of Coalinga, Calif.; his parents, Ernest and Ilamae Epley of Coalinga, Calif.; and three sisters, Sheila Glass and Nikki Richnow, both of Austin, and Diane Beere of San Ramon, Calif.

Exxon president to address UW

From Staff Reports

William D. "Bill" Stevens, president of Exxon Co. U.S.A., will be the featured speaker at the United Way's 1989 annual meeting and campaign awards luncheon to be held 11:30 a.m. Feb. 2 at Midland Center.

Stevens, who took over as president in February 1988, has previously served as a United Way volunteer. He is a member of the United Way of the Texas Gulf Coast Board of Trustees, Baylor College of Medicine board, the National Junior Achievement board and the Greater Houston Chamber of Commerce board.

Stevens started his career with Exxon in 1958 after graduating with a B.S. degree in natural gas engineering from Texas A&I Unviersity.

Reservations for the luncheon can be made by calling the United Way office at 682-4358 by Jan. 31. The cost is $8.50 per person.

Cause of mobile home fire probed

From Staff Reports

Fire officials are still investigating the cause of a Saturday afternoon blaze that completely destroyed a mobile home located just outside the city limits.

Midland Fire Department officials said the home, owned by Jim Hughes, 3311 S. County Road 1208, caught fire shortly after 3 p.m.

Firefighters managed to contain the blaze to the property, but were unable to save the trailer. Officials suspect the fire may have started in a water heater closet.

No injuries were reported at the scene.

"A Special Thanks"

The Citizens of Midland are so fortunate to have such fine personnel at Midland Memorial Hospital. The Emergency doctors and nurses, the nurses in CCU and PCU are the finest that could be found anywhere. No amount of words could express our appreciation for the care and love that were given to our beloved Garland during his illness and death.

The paramedics who came to our assistance were so prompt and efficient and they did everything that could possibly be done.

Thanks to the Police Dept. for the love shown to one of their ex-members, the service was beautiful, and to all our relatives and friends for the flowers, food and prayers. There are too many of you to list individually, but know we love and appreciate you all very much. We are proud to have the relatives, friends, doctors, nurses, firemen, and policemen in Midland that we do. To all of you who touched Garland's life in any way - we thank you.

Noted photographer dies

EL PASO (AP) — Manuel Carrillo, hailed as one of the world's best photographers, has died of emphysema in Mexico City. He was 83.

Carrillo, who died Friday, spent his childhood in El Paso after his family fled Pancho Villa's forces around 1910.

After he retired in the mid-1950s as the Mexico City agent for the Illinois Railroad, Carrillo became more and more fascinated with his new hobby of photography. It was a hobby that would bring him worldwide acclaim.

MISD should review security policies

Shocking violence in the public schools this week is once again calling attention to a problem that begs a solution.

The killing of five children and wounding of 30 others by a man wielding an assault rifle in a Stockton, Calif. schoolyard underscored the message that the public schools are not merely carefree places where children learn reading, writing and arithmetic. But the danger isn't one that only can occur "somewhere else."

That fact was made clear Wednesday when Midland Independent School District officials confirmed that two sixth-graders at Crockett Elementary School were recently suspended for carrying a handgun to the school. Indications at this time are that the gun was loaded. While details concerning the incident are scarce, school officials said no threats were confirmed against either students or faculty members. They also assured parents that the safety of children is a top priority of the district.

Unfortunately ensuring that safety isn't as simple as it once was. Most public school campuses are relatively "open" complexes, which is necessary in order to permit easy movement of students and school personnel. That openness, however, also is inviting to whomever wants to go there for whatever reason.

To make matters worse, school violence — once limited to fistfights and, later, knifefights in metropolitan schools — is spreading to other parts of the nation. In recent years, Dallas, Houston and other schools in Texas have reported knifings, shootings, even rapes on campus. Campus security now is one of a district's major concerns, or should be, and severe precautions are in place in some school districts. In some Houston high schools, for example, police officers reportedly check entering students for guns and other weapons.

While it may not be possible for any school district to formulate a policy that will guarantee the safety of students and faculty members in every event, the recent incidents should give MISD and other districts cause to review policies in order to determine if changes are needed. If they are needed, changes should be made. Schools must not be allowed to become battle zones because in such an environment, education becomes a lost cause.

It certainly is preferable to review security measures and make changes now, if needed, rather than after an incident of deadly violence.

'Zero tolerance' adds more to budget

WASHINGTON — George Bush tossed around some tough words about crime during the presidential campaign. To hear the new president talk, the best way to deal with criminals is to lock them up and throw away the key.

Jack Anderson

What Bush didn't mention was where he would lock them up. It is likely that one of Bush's first presidential decisions — drafting his own budget — will furlough more Willie Hortons than any revolving door the public has seen to date.

The president's ambitious "zero tolerance" drug programs and his anti-furlough rhetoric have one requirement — more prison space.

The space is not now available, and it is not likely to become available even if President Bush increases the recent Reagan budget proposal for prisons by anything but a sizable amount. Our White House sources say that Bush is not likely to increase it even a small amount because of his promises to reduce the federal deficit.

One of the hottest confidential reports ever produced on the prison system tells the dismal story. It was completed by a Cabinet-level committee in late 1987 and was quickly put under wraps because it was embarrassing to the Reagan-Bush administration. We have reviewed a copy of the 45-page report and compared the findings to likely funding levels. There is clearly no way that Bush can keep his promises and make ends meet.

The comprehensive report covered federal prisoners serving time, illegal aliens being held on immigration cases and accused criminals awaiting trial. It was prepared by a subcommittee of the National Drug Policy Board, chaired by then-Attorney General Edwin Meese. At the time, 44,000 inmates were housed in federal prisons which had a "rated capacity" of 27,750 — an overcrowding of 58 percent. Today, there are 44,948 prisoners — pushing prisons more than 60 percent beyond their capacity.

"The current level of federal prison overcrowding coupled with substantial growth in future prison population can create a crisis of major proportions in the criminal justice system," the report says. Attorney General Meese advised Reagan that the lack of prison space constitutes a "material weakness" in the American justice system.

Making life cozy for prisoners is not the priority of most taxpayers, but the report notes that prison overcrowding leads to violence and lawsuits.

The report predicts that the "factors creating the (prison) crisis are not likely to diminish." Manpower behind investigations and prosecutions is steadily increasing, producing a record number of arrests and convictions, particulary in drug cases. In 1986, Congress adopted mandatory minimum prison sentences for various classes of drug offenders, which will land offenders in jail more often and for longer sentences.

Since the Justice Department compiled its projections, another factor has kicked in: The tough anti-drug bill passed in the last session of Congress will produce even more prisoners. Bush looks more and more like a man trying to stuff 10 pounds of flour into a five-pound bag.

The Federal Bureau of Prisons has a prison-expansion program, but it isn't enough. According to the report, the Bureau of Prisons was projecting an increase to 76,000 inmates in 1997. The trouble with even this large figure is that it's too low. "Our population projection historically has been conservative," one top Bureau of Prisons official told us. "We try to keep them conservative because we don't want to overbuild."

Chumley's recalls authors, dreams

NEW YORK — There was no number or name on the barred door. It was shivering cold inside — no heat. I left my hat and coat on. The ceiling fan appeared frozen stiff. The fading orange lights seemed ready to flutter out. I sat down on a shaky wooden chair at the bar but thought better of it and stood. The bartender, wearing a heavy sweater, asked huskily:

"What would you like?"

I squinted in the semi-darkness at the long shelves of bottles behind the bar. A large bottle of ketchup stood between the Jack Daniels and Old Grand Dad. I couldn't see much else in the dim light. So I ordered a glass of white wine.

There was no one in the place except a blonde woman who was walking around with a wad of gum in her cheek blowing bubbles.

A large sign above the bar said: "In memory of those authors who have tried without success to be published."

The yellowed dust jackets of books lined the back walls. At one time, the authors had a drink here — perhaps a meal as well. Edna St. Vincent Millay lived nearby. Other regulars were John Dos Passos, Willa Cather, Edna Ferber, John Steinbeck and Ring Lardner. Also, Upton Sinclair, e.e. cummings, Somerset Maugham, Heywood Broun, and Lillian Hellman. Now, Norman Mailer, Gay Talese and William Styron come to lift a few and talk books.

This was Chumley's on Bedford Street in Greenwich Village. It had just turned 60 years old. The kitchen looked like a truck hit it. The stained mahogany bar reeked of spilled alcohol. The place looked like a tramp with a murderous hangover.

Leland Stanford Chumley — "Lee" to his friends — opened the place. Lee had a history that would make a book — a Wobbly union organizer in Chicago, soldier of fortune, stagecoach driver, wagon tramp, waiter, artist, cartoonist and writer.

He opened it as a hidden drinking spot for leftists and writers to meet and talk. The unmarked door remains from that time and the speakeasy days of Prohibition. Numerous hidden entrances and getaway doors have since been cemented closed.

People now come to Chumley's out of nostalgia for old days and names — like actor Humphrey Bogart who enjoyed drinking with the writers. Actor James Dean was once a waiter here.

Perhaps the most poignant story about Chumley's — whether it be true or not — involves the late poet-writer Dylan Thomas. Customers chipped in to ship his pickled body back to Wales.

Hellman, Thomas and others spent a lot of time drinking here. Some say they got their best ideas out of a bottle.

I got tired of standing at the bar and sat down at a table. The entire wooden surface had been so carved with individual initials that all were undecipherable. It seemed blasphemy since the tables were still straight and strong. But the cuts in the table-top offered an unexplainable atmosphere.

Two young couples entered. It was now about 6 p.m. Chumley's isn't a day place anymore. It really comes to life about 8 p.m. The place is now owned by a business school student who, if he ever writes a book, will probably dissect Wall Street.

I paid my bill, walked over to the juke box, and played one song. It was Glenn Miller's "In the Mood." It seemed like the right music — old and off the beaten track but with a beat.

To New Yorkers, Chumley's is a reminder of wonderful old writers and lasting literature in an age of impermanence and television. It is a refuge in a celluloid world of brief and forgettable fashion.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Jan. 22, the 22nd day of 1989. There are 343 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Jan. 22, 1938, the play "Our Town," Thornton Wilder's Pulitzer Prize-winning evocation of small-town life in Grover's Corners, N.H., was performed publicly for the first time, at the McCarter Theater in Princeton, N.J.

On this date:

In 1788, the English romantic poet Lord Byron was born.

In 1881, an ancient Egyptian obelisk known as Cleopatra's Needle was erected in New York's Central Park.

In 1901, an era ended in England with the death of Queen Victoria at age 82.

In 1905, thousands of demonstrating Russian workers were fired on by Imperial army troops in St. Petersburg in what became known as "Red Sunday" or "Bloody Sunday."

In 1917, President Woodrow Wilson pleaded for an end to the war in Europe, saying there must be "peace without victory." (By April, however, America was also at war.)

In 1944, during World War II, Allied forces began landing at Anzio, Italy.

In 1955, the Pentagon announced a program to develop intercontinental missiles armed with nuclear weapons.

In 1970, the first commercial flight of the Boeing 747 began in New York and ended in London some 6½ hours later.

In 1973, the U.S. Supreme Court legalized abortions nationwide.

In 1973, former President Lyndon B. Johnson died at his Texas ranch at age 64.

RUSSELL BAKER

Those Inaugural Balls can destroy a man!

NEW YORK — I once went to an Inaugural Ball. There were five Inaugural Balls that year. The one I went to was Number Five.

Russell Baker

People who were going to run the government and make a terrible mess of the country during the next four years went to the Number One job. Their deputies went to the Number Two and assistants to the deputies to Number Three.

Number Five was so far down the social line that people with tickets to it were ashamed to admit it.

This was Lyndon Johnson's Inauguration in 1965. Knowing Johnson's talent for making distinctions, paranoids believed that getting a ticket to Number Five was a kiss of death. Many refused to show up for fear they'd be ruined if seen there.

Mine was a press ticket, so I had to show up. Press giants, like publishers and columnists who had said LBJ was the best thing since Thomas Jefferson, all had tickets to Number One or Number Two.

Sure I whined about Number Five. At the previous Inauguration, which was Kennedy's, I had walked 110 miles across Washington in a blizzard to cover a vaudeville show. Yes, walked. The storm had shut down public transportation and made streets impassable for anyone not traveling in a limousine with a snowplow escort.

Having suffered Antarctic agonies in 1961 and been paid with such coin as glimpses of Sammy Davis Jr. and Frank Sinatra are made of, I felt entitled to a Number Three Inaugural Ball. At least a Number Four. No dice.

Going to an Inaugural Ball is not the worst assignment possible on Jan. 20. That distinction goes to the job of covering the inaugural parade.

For this you sit in miserable, cold, hard bleachers on Pennsylvania Avenue and watch every drum-and-bugle corps in America march by. For months afterward you wake up screaming from nightmares starring John Philip Sousa.

Compared with this horror, even the Number Five Ball didn't look too bad. It was in a hotel which, though teetering on the brink of ruin, would at least be heated. And a reporter had only to note the presence of any celebrities and keep an eye on the president when he came in for his ceremonial dance.

The joint was packed, mostly with people very young for an Inaugural Ball. I guessed they'd got their tickets secondhand from uncles who were afraid of being seen at Number Five, but didn't bother to check this hunch, since Number Five was not going to get stop-press news play.

No celebrities showed up, at least so far as I could tell. This was not surprising. What kind of celebrity would show up at the Number Five Ball? You might as well send Johnny Carson a wire saying you never wanted to be on his show again.

Finding an empty space at a table, my wife and I sat. Since I am very weak on celebrities, my wife had agreed to come along and spot them for me.

One of the people at our table looked famous. "Could he be Jack Warner?" I whispered to my wife. Jack Warner then ran the Warner Brothers movie studio. Enjoying her new life as a cheeky journalist, she asked him.

No, he said, very politely. He was not Jack Warner. He was Peter Hurd.

"A famous painter," I whispered to my wife, amazed to find anybody as famous as Peter Hurd at the Number Five Ball. He said he lived somewhere out in one of the desert states and I guessed he came to Number Five because he didn't know Washington well enough to stay away.

Later, though, it turned out he'd been commissioned to paint an oil portrait of President Johnson, so I figured he wanted to study how the president looked when he was drawn with dance fatigue late in the night, which was when he would finally get to the Number Five Ball.

Maybe Hurd saw too well, because afterward when his Johnson portrait was completed the president rejected it, announcing to all humanity that it was "the ugliest thing I ever saw in my life."

When the president finally arrived at Number Five he was accompanied by Gregory Peck. Peck had that glow that all true celebrities have. I needed no spotter to recognize him. As my favorite aunt used to say when looking at coffined persons she had known in life, he looked just like himself.

Johnson later took a lot of abuse about his Vietnam policy, but that night he was a true gentleman. He didn't just put in an appearance at the Number Five Ball; he danced to two numbers before leaving.

I told the majesty of the press that Johnson had come and gone safely and there was nothing else to report. I didn't reveal that Peter Hurd had attended Number Five. No use ruining the guy. Anyhow, Johnson would do that later.

Oil outlook shows different energy future

WASHINGTON — Twelve years ago, a new administration began by declaring a dramatic "moral equivalent of war" on the energy crisis. But ever since 1891, when the U.S. Geological Survey discounted the possibility of discovering oil in Texas, the world has had pleasant surprises.

George F. Will

In 1965, proven world reserves were 353 billion barrels; in 1979, 611 billion; today, 887 billion. Iran's reserves are huge. Iraq's may match Saudi Arabia's. Geological formations in western China suggest vast reserves, as does the fact that Siberia is on the same latitude as Alaska's Prudhoe Bay.

U.S. taxpayers now own 560 million barrels in the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, with a distribution capacity of four million barrels a day. The SPR is a weapon against OPEC's "oil weapon," but OPEC's weapon has been largely disarmed by economic and technological developments.

It has been said that if the Strait of Hormuz was closed, the lights would go out. But that strait is hard to close and harder still to keep closed. Anyway, last year, on one day, five tankers were burning in the Gulf and the price of oil barely moved. Markets know the oil will flow.

Pipelines connect Iraq with the Mediterranean and the Red Sea. In the 1990s, upwards of seven million barrels a day will be able to leave the Persian Gulf by pipeline. Furthermore, three of America's top four suppliers (Mexico; Canada, Venezuela; Saudi Arabia is the fourth) are not insecure sources.

OPEC is not impotent. Absent OPEC, oil might cost $7 rather than $12-$15. But many OPEC nations have development needs that require a high cash flow. Thus they need high production of oil. Furthermore, both Iran and Iraq have war debts exceeding $40 billion, and each needs at least that much for reconstruction.

Cash-hungry OPEC nations are not exactly mendicants begging for markets, but they are, in effect, buying markets by means of "downstream integration." They are buying refineries and service stations. Such producers (e.g., Saudi Arabia, with an interest in 11,500 Texaco gas stations) have a stake in U.S. economic vigor.

The probable persistence of the oil glut for many years means the U.S. oil industry is in twilight. Eighty percent of all the oil wells ever drilled on the planet have been drilled in the lower 48 U.S. states. But today, Saudi Arabia is pumping nearly one-fifth of the world's oil flow from fewer wells than are operating today in the city of Los Angeles.

Conservation has far exceeded 1970s projections. Gasoline costs less today in real terms than at almost any time since 1935, but today's automobile fleet goes 50 percent farther on a gallon than in 1976. However, American demand is growing and American production is dropping. We are importing 42 percent of our needs (we hit a high of 48 percent in 1977) and oil imports account for one-quarter of the trade deficit.

But there are non-economic as well as economic arguments for draining foreign sources first. And there is no compelling argument for rushing exploration in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge or off California's coast.

If the price goes high enough, several centuries' supply of oil can be extracted from sand, shale and other sources in Colorado, Canada and elsewhere in this hemisphere. But even without scarcity, there is a move to alternative forms of energy. Japan's "strategic petroleum reserve" may be plutonium as Japan becomes more reliant, even than France, on nuclear power. Australia may become the Saudi Arabia of uranium.

Fifty-seven percent of America's electricity is generated by coal, of which America has a 300- to 500-year supply. But we do not want to pay the environmental costs of mining and burning it. This is especially so because of the greenhouse effect, which is aggravated by burning hydrocarbons.

Natural gas is a relative benign fuel and U.S. reserves of it may be as large as U.S. oil reserves. Furthermore, vast quantities of natural gas are being found in places like Qatar's North Dome Field, the largest discovery ever. And the Pacific rim is an extremely promising source.

Most of the data in this column comes from John Herrington, who just stepped down as secretary of Energy. The data point toward several hopeful conclusions, and a chastening conclusion:

Cheap oil, although it inhibits the search for alternative energy sources that might be environmentally preferable, is on balance a big blessing. And the pace and direction of change in the energy picture in the last dozen years is a timely reminder to the new administration of just how opaque the future is.

Time for Texas to regain typical optimistic outlook

Modisett

People are pessimists by nature if they look for what is wrong in a situation rather than honestly attempting to find what is not wrong with it. It's only natural to feel a bit pessimistic after two or three occurrences of negative events.

But breaking the cycle of pessimism is important so that one's mind can be conducive to optimism when the chance presents itself. That applies to an individual's personal situation, or a city's or state's or even nation's.

Texas has suffered some bad "breaks" in recent years. Parts of the state, notably the oil-producing Permian Basin, have been hard-hit economically by the oil-price situation. The entire state has been affected by a host of other problems such as crime, increased drug-trafficking, higher tax rates and so forth. In short, there has been ample reason in the past few years to get into a negative mindset.

With the change in the presidency this week, it's a good time to start throwing off the yoke of negativism and get ready for better years ahead.

A number of events recently indicate that Texas stands to benefit tremendously — but not by sitting back waiting for the gravy train to arrive. Success rarely occurs that way. Here are the reasons Texans should feel good about their future:

■ This week Energy Secretary John Herrington signed official documents certifying that Texas will get the superconducting super collider — if Congress funds the particle accelerator.

So, what are Texans waiting for? A few months ago this was a major goal and now that it has come about we're acting like we don't know what to do next. OK, here's the plan. We should all get behind the construction of the super collider, start calling or writing senators and representatives — and, yes, President George Bush — and tell them that it is needed, in more ways than one.

When NASA was only a dream and the Johnson Space Center wasn't even an idea, it took the hard work and courage of thousands of dedicated people to bring it to reality.

The super collider is the next step in Texas' technological evolution and we are all part of bringing that development about. Let's get excited about it.

■ Although Texas did lose some population in recent years, Census Bureau projections are that in coming years Texas will actually pass New York as the nation's second most populous state, behind California.

Some Texans may not view such growth as necessarily beneficial, but there's little doubt that it will bring many new opportunities to the Lone Star State in terms of business, industry, cultural enhancement and other areas.

Of course the continuing growth will present the state's leaders with a number of challenges to overcome, but that's always the case. Nothing of value ever comes without exacting a cost of its own.

■ The state is fortunate to have a number of politicians representing it at the state and national level who are world class leaders and will keep Texas in the political limelight for years to come.

Besides President Bush and Gov. Bill Clements, there are Defense Secretary-designate John Tower, Commerce Secretary-designate Robert A. Mosbacher Sr., Education Secretary Lauro Cavazos, U.S. Senators Lloyd Bentsen and Phil Gramm, House Speaker Jim Wright and a number of others.

With that kind of political clout, Texas will stay in the thick of things for years.

Those are several good reasons to not be pessimistic about the state's future.

Young people who deliver deserve tips

I'd like to put in my two cents for the fast-food delivery in 30 minutes, no extra charge for delivery.

Well, I believe those young people could use an extra buck or two tip. Most get only minimum wage plus a few cents for mileage. They work split shifts — only during busy hours, two to four at a time, and go home and get called back and maybe a few nights a week.

The company advertises 30 minutes for delivery. They go out in all kinds of weather — snow, cold, rain or sleet, and you stay home in your nice warm house because it's too bad for you to get out or you don't have transportation. You bitch if they are a couple of minutes late, so they knock off a couple of bucks and you're still not happy.

But they did their best to get there in the time allowed and you don't even give them credit for trying. Aren't you a little ashamed? Stop and think about it — they still have to maintain their car upkeep and that isn't cheap. But I think you are!

'Xmas' does keep Christ in Christmas

I am writing about the letter last month (Dec.) about "X" not being an appropriate substitution for Christ. As I wrote Mr. Newkumet personally, up until last year I felt exactly the same way about it. However, after our pastor (my husband) mentioned in a sermon that "X" was a symbol for Christ many, many years ago, and after reading an article in our church periodical from our general headquarters, I have felt differently about it. (The article mentioned that "X" is a symbol for Christ or Christian.)

So I sincerely hope that everyone had a true "Xmas" in 1988, for without Christ we would have no Christmas.

Midland loving, caring, responsive community

Rev. Hugh Harrison of Del City, Okla., died following surgery on Jan. 3, 1989. He was the father of Phyllis Reneau, a teacher at Jim Bowie Elementary School. After being in Midland on various occasions, both Rev. Harrison and myself met many people we learned to love and call friends. And while there we began to feel a part of Midland.

Midland is a loving, caring, responsive community. Aren't you proud of it?

Now critics can read paper without fear

Just a note to thank you for the new ink for our daily paper. I have been one of the most vocal critics of the ruboff ink. So I really appreciate being able to read the paper without fear of ruining whatever I am wearing.

So a big thank you. Keep up the good work!

SPEAKING OUT

Reagan first one to break zero curse

By CHARLIE VETTER

Charlie Vetter teaches history full time at Midland Freshman High School and part time at Midland College.

Harrison, Lincoln, Garfield, McKinley, Harding, Roosevelt, Kennedy, Reagan — no, not Reagan. It's over.

Curse or coincidence? Either way it was one of the strangest stories in American history, but it's over now.

When President Reagan headed for California the other day, he became the first to survive his office in 140 years. Believe it or not, that's seven presidents elected in "0" years dying in a row, starting in 1840 with the strange story of President William Henry Harrison.

In 1811, Harrison led an American army against an Indian alliance at the Battle of Tippeecanoe in present-day Indiana. Harrison's opponents in the battle were an amazing pair of Shawnee Indian twins, Tecumseh, the leader of the alliance, and his brother Tenkswatawa, an Indian mystic better known as The Prophet.

The Shawnee brothers met Harrison again two years later when he caught a British Army in Canada at the Battle of the Thames. Tecumseh, then a brigadier general in the British Army, died trying to cover the retreat of the Redcoats. The battle ended Tecumseh's Indian alliance, and catapulted Harrison into the national spotlight.

Was he cursed by an angry Indian mystic, or was William Henry Harrison just the first of an eerie set of coincidences?

In any case, Harrison stressed his Indian fighting in the campaign touting the slogan "Tippeecanoe and Tyler Too." He won the White House in the election of 1840.

It rained the day Harrison took office, and his inaugural speech was a long one, edited by Daniel Webster. Harrison caught cold. It developed into pneumonia, and in less than a month, Harrison was dead.

The rumors started at once. Was Harrison cursed? He was the first president to die in office.

It was 20 years later, in 1860, when the next president was elected in a year ending in a zero. That was Abe Lincoln, and we all know the story of Ford's Theater and a nation fresh from war mourning for its leader.

That takes the story to 1880, and the election of James Garfield. Elected in 1880, he was shot and killed in 1881 by a disgruntled government office-seeker, which brings us to 1900.

At the turn of the century, William McKinley was elected president. He was killed by an anarchist, leaving the White House to his vice-president Teddy Roosevelt.

That brings the story to the election of 1920, the first election women were allowed to take part in. Warren Harding was elected, and he had a heart attack and died three years later.

President Franklin Roosevelt tempted fate by running for a third term in 1940, the next zero year. He became the sixth consecutive victim of the curse (coincidence) when he died as president in 1945.

When John Kennedy won the election of 1960, the world was a much different place from the world of William Henry Harrison. One hundred and twenty years after the hero of Tippeecanoe was elected, another famous war hero president died in Dallas, the seventh consecutive victim of the zero year jinx.

That brings us to 1980 and the election of Ronald Reagan, the man who broke the curse. The oldest president in American history by far, and the only president to survive being shot in office, Reagan has defied the string of deaths.

Skin cancer, and colon cancer hardly slowed down the president often cited for his optimism and good luck. Now we can say it's over, and put the story into the pages of history trivia books.

By the way, if you're thinking that presidents are always dying in office and trends would be easy to put together, think again.

Only one president in our whole history has ever died in office outside of the 20-year cycle. That was Zachary Taylor, "Old Rough and Ready."

Taylor was elected in 1848, so should not have fallen into the 20 year jinx.

What went wrong? Well Taylor became famous fighting in two wars — Indian Wars, specifically the Black Hawk War and the Seminole Wars.

And when did this famous Indian fighting president die?

He wasn't elected in a year that ended with a zero, but he died in a year that ended in a zero, 1850.

Midlanders blessed our residents' holiday

The Christmas spirit was very much alive in 1988.

People giving and caring for our nursing home residents — from the mayor's office, churches, garden centers, home-made gifts, fruits, and carolers, and visits from many wonderful groups and organizations. It was very much alive around here.

Midland is blessed to have folks like these who make life more enjoyable. The residents and staff of Terrace West Nursing Home say thanks for your never-ending love. May God bless each of you in 1989.

Band's gesture shows true spirit of goodwill

The competition between Odessa and Midland is perhaps epitomized by the competition between Permian and Lee High Schools on the football field. That spirit of competition, when it is healthy and whole, provides the citizens of these two cities with excitement and excellence. However, there are moments when the desire to build unity, to bridge our differences, catches our imagination and warms our hearts.

On Monday, Jan. 14, such a moment occurred. Members of the Permian High School Band and Student Council came to Robert E. Lee Band Hall and presented to our band $500 to assist in the fund-raising campaign to send the Rebel Band to the Inaugural Parade to honor President George Bush. What a wonderful example these young people are. The competitive spirit was temporarily laid aside in order that one group of talented musicians could have a tangible role in the honor given to another equally talented group!

As principal of Lee High School, I wanted to express my appreciation and the gratitude of our director, students and parents not only to the Permian students but also to the community of Odessa which supports and has a great deal of pride in their outstanding high schools.

Congress not working for 'we the people'

The time has come again for Congress to either vote against or remain silent for a 50 percent increase in their salaries. Instead of making $80,000-plus per year, each Congressman will be making over $130,000.

What really bothers me is while members of Congress increase their annual income, they decrease education funds. And what about the deficit? Do our representatives and senators care that their pay raise will only further this nation's debt? Do we really think for one moment that Congress will vote against their own pay raise? I think we all know the answers, but have so far done nothing about it. If I had a chance to vote for my own pay raise, I'd definitely vote for it. Who wouldn't? But the point is I don't have that right and neither should members of Congress.

Congress is supposed to be working for "we the people." My boss determines whether I receive a raise or not; citizens such as myself are, in reality, supposed to be Congress' boss. "We the people" should be doing the voting.

I feel Congress does not represent the country's best interest. I also think Congress is a sham. Congress is not representing us! They represent their own greedy and selfish interests. I truly believe they could care less about the United States of America for they are the ones who are pulling this country down.

I propose an end to career politicians. They should be allowed to serve two terms at the most or one five-year term to curb excess and wasteful spending on election campaigns.

I think our forefathers must be turning in their graves to see what has become of this once great nation. We don't need more people in government, but more people in government who really care about the U.S.A and not about the money they can scrape into their pocketbooks.

The most frustrating of all is, as an individual, I feel powerless to change our screwed-up system. What can I do? I'm sure many people feel the same way. Perhaps Midland Reporter-Telegram readers might have suggestions or know of a group of concerned citizens who are already trying to make a difference. Or if no group exists, perhaps there are people who are interested in forming one

Maybe a petition could bring about needed changes. Writing letters to our representatives and senators is one approach. I already wrote Bentsen, Gramm and Smith. We should let them know what we think of them (without defamation, of course). What I do know is this: something has to be done before Congress steals our country blind.

Ship of State gets off to smooth sailing under new skipper

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — America's Ship of State was underway today with a popular, highly experienced new skipper and a competent Cabinet crew. It was sailing under what our 41st President, George Bush, said in his inaugural speech was "a new breeze blowing."

He envisioned the new breeze restoring a more gentle America and refreshing the hope for freedom throughout the world. He said the "day of the dictator is passing, the totalitarian era is passing, great nations are moving toward democracy" and "men and women of the world are moving toward free markets — through the door to prosperity."

In one of the most inspirational speeches of his long government career, our new president said the present time, especially in America, is "rich with promise."

He called on the American people to be less "enthralled with material things" and more "appreciative of the nobility of work and sacrifice."

Referring to the homeless, the drug problem, crime and the "demoralization that rules the slums," he said public money alone will not end these problems; that care, guidance and education is needed.

Calling on the public — including the young and the elderly — to become involved in helping the needy and the drug addicts, he said the "only resource we have in times of need is the goodness and courage of the American people."

He urged "a new engagement in the lives of others, a new activism, hands-on and involved, that gets the job done. We must bring in the generations, harnessing the unused talent of the elderly and the unfocused energy of the young.

For not only leadership is passed from generation to generation, but so is stewardship. And the generation born after the Second World War has come of age."

This is good advice. I hope that in every village, town and city of our country community organizations to help the homeless, the hungry, the sick and the drug addicts will, as President Bush said, "spread like stars throughout the nation, doing good."

As to reducing the $150 billion budget deficit, he hopes to do so with bipartisan support of Congress, including a "flexible freeze" on welfare and defense spending.

Except for the deficit, our new president does not face any serious crisis as he undertakes leadership of the nation and the free world.

Thanks to the great economic recovery and foreign policy achievements of President Ronald Reagan, who left office as one of the most popular presidents in history, President Bush inherits peace and prosperity, with unemployment at its lowest rate since 1974; with 19 million new jobs created under Reagan's recovery program, and an additional $84 billion in federal revenues projected for the 1990 fiscal year starting next October.

President Bush recognized this fortunate political inheritance in the first words of his inaugural address. Thanking the now former president, who stood near him on the Capitol inaugural platform, President Bush said the "wonderful things" he had done for America had earned "a lasting place in our hearts — and in our history."

President Bush has promised to be "The People's President," and his inaugural address made it clear he wants to inspire a kinder, more gentle, less politically partisan America.

It is also clear that he intends to conduct his administration with cool professionalism. Moderate conservative pragmatism rather than ideological extremism will be the political philosophy on which he sets his presidential course.

He will seek compromise instead of confrontation with the Democratically-controlled Congress. He hopes to secure congressional support for development of bipartisan foreign policies so he can negotiate from united political strength arms agreements with the Soviets and trade agreements with Europe and Asia to avert economic warfare.

He intends to be a more activist president than his predecessor in the sense that he wants to be more engaged in details and the process of drafting and executing the policies he decides to pursue.

Bush will not delegate as much authority to Cabinet members and other subordinates as was the practice under Ronald Reagan's more relaxed management style.

According to the latest polls, 70 percent of the American people think President Bush will keep the country out of war and 65 percent think he will keep it prosperous.

Let us hope our people are as right as they usually are in their political judgment.

EDUCATION IN BRIEF

Mary Nabers from the Texas Employment Commission in Austin is the one of the speakers for a seminar on "Preparing for the World of Work" at Midland College Tuesday. Nabers is the TEC Commissioner representing employers.

The seminar is for those who are unemployed, preparing to enter the job market, or seeking different employment. It begins at 8:45 a.m. in the Health Sciences Building lecture hall and concludes at 4 p.m.

Classes are resuming in Midland for persons desiring to improve their basic English language skills. ESL (English as a Second Language) classes are taught through the sponsorship of Midland College at three locations in the city.

All the classes are free and are designed to assist those who need to learn English speaking, reading, and writing skills. The program concentrates on developing an English vocabulary which allows them to function better in daily living.

To assist students, the classes are taught at three levels. Level I provides students with the ability to function in an English-speaking environment; Level II helps students advance from a need-oriented vocabulary to one with greater English speaking, reading and writing fluency; and Level III provides the student with skills needed by each individual to pursue specific vocational or academic goals.

Classes are offered at these locations and times: Midland College, Room 132 Occupational-Technical Building, Monday through Thursday from 9 a.m.-12 noon and Monday and Wednesday from 7-9 p.m.; Casa de Amigos, 1101 E. Garden Lane, Levels I, II and III on Tuesday and Thursday 7-9 p.m., and Levels I and II on Tuesday and Thursday from 12:30-2:30 p.m.; and Boys Club of Midland, 110 E. New Jersey, Level I, Monday and Wednesday 5:30-7:30 p.m.

More information about the ESL program is available by calling 685-4566.

Prospective fulltime students at Midland College must register Monday, while part-time students have until Jan. 31 to enroll.

After one week of classes, enrollment for the spring semester is running slightly ahead of the 1988 spring semester. By Friday, 3,360 students had registered for credit courses, compared with 3,275 at the same time last year. Final enrollment is expected to be near 3,600 by the time late registration ends. The spring enrollment record currently is the 3,664 who registered for the 1988 spring term.

Those wishing to enroll should visit the Student Services Office in the Administration Building. Hours are 8 a.m.-6 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 8 a.m.-5 p.m. on Friday.

• • •

Classes for local residents seeking a high school equivalency diploma are underway now at Midland College and two other locations in the community.

Called "GED" classes for the General Educational Development diplomas which can be earned instead of a regular high school diploma, the classes are free and may be entered at any time.

At the Midland College Adult Learning Center, GED instruction is provided from 8 a.m.-5 p.m. on Mondays and Wednesdays and from 8 a.m.-9 p.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

At Casa de Amigos, 1101 E. Garden Lane, GED class are taught from 7-9 p.m. on Mondays and Wednesdays. The Hollowell Learning Center, 400 S. Marshall, has GED classes from 9-11 a.m. and 7-9 p.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

GED students who attend the college's Adult Learning Center may stay as long as the center is open each day.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

MC's registration deadline near; Seminar on job-hunting offered

By H.A. TUCK

Seven more days remain to register for spring semester credit courses, so don't delay. If you want to take a fulltime class load of five classes, you must register Monday. Those of you just wanting to take one, two, or three classes can sign up until Tuesday, Jan. 31. But it would be better to register this week, so you don't get too far behind.

Tuck

Late registration is being handled in the Student Services Office, Administration Building. Hours are 8 am.-6 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 8 a.m.-5 p.m. on Friday.

The basketball team is in action twice this week, on the road Monday and at home Thursday. On Monday the Chaps will make the long trip to Borger for a game with the Frank Phillips Plainsmen. They host Western Texas at Chap Center on Thursday to start the second half of conference play.

Monday's game has an 8 p.m. start while the game here begins at 7:30 p.m. Both games can be heard on KCRS Radio, 550AM.

If you want to see a team light up the scoreboard, make sure you see Western Texas. When MC played at Snyder in December, the final score was 110-100, with Midland winning.

"Preparing for the World of Work" is a one-day seminar that will be held at the college's Health Sciences Building lecture hall on Tuesday. It's both for those wanting to get their first jobs as well as those seeking to re-enter the work force. Topics include: re-entering the work force, the most efficient way to get a job, unusual ways to look for work, how to get ahead in a job once you get the job, and current career opportunities.

Cost is just $5 for the workshop, which begins at 8:45 a.m. and ends at 4 p.m.

Speakers include Mary Nabers, Texas Employment Commission; Dianne Gillis-Robinson, Job Training Partnership Act; Tom E. Green, Shell Pipeline Corporation; Wanda Phillips, Special Projects Coordinator at Midland College; and several members of the college's business and technical faculty.

Advance enrollment can be made by calling 685-4657. Registration also can be handled at the door.

First action of the spring for the Chaparral tennis teams comes this week in Corpus Christi. It's an indoor event that begins Thursday and serves as a ranking event through the Intercollegiate Tennis Coaches Association.

In pre-season rankings released last week, Midland College is ranked first among the nation's men's team. The women are ranked seventh right now.

But MC coach Joe Williams has added two players to an already powerful men's squad, plus three more women for the team which is the defending national champion. By the time the national tournaments are held in May, you can look for the Chaps to be in the fight for more national titles.

In response to requests, Midland College now is offering Defensive Driving courses on two Saturdays each month, rather than one Saturday as it had been scheduled in the past. The courses will be taught on the second and fourth Saturdays from 8 a.m.-5 p.m.

Persons wanting to take this class can enroll by telephone and then register just prior to the class. Call 685-4518 to enroll or to obtain more information.

For views of two avant-garde artists you should take time to see the current exhibit in the Allison Fine Arts Building's McCormick Gallery. Three-dimensional works by Princess Cook of San Antonio and Greg Elliott of Dallas are being shown through Feb. 10.

Cook and Elliott both present large abstract and/or impressionistic sculptures created from wood, iron, stucco, papier-mache', clay...you name it.

This exhibit may be seen daily. Gallery hours are 1-5 p.m. Sunday, 8 a.m.-10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Friday, and 10 a.m.-5 p.m. on Saturday. There is no admission charge.

If you are 55 or older, you should check out all the neat classes which are being offered through the new "College Classics" short courses. These are interesting, varied, and inexpensive. They'll meet in the afternoons in three different sessions this spring. The best part is that you can sign up for a single fee of $25 and take as many classes as you can fit in for all three sessions. The first session starts Feb. 13 and ends March 10, the second is March 13-April 7, and the third is April 10-May 5.

You can register through the Continuing Education Office in the Administration Building. To find out about specific courses, call 685-4518.

Supporters of San Antonio dome victorious in bid to raise sales tax

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Supporters of a plan to build a $174 million domed stadium scored an easy victory Saturday in their fight to raise the sales tax a half-cent over the next five years to finance construction of the 65,000-seat stadium.

With 99 percent of the 301 boxes tallied, the vote for the dome was leading 53 percent to 47 percent, or 92,694 for the Alamodome and 82,268 against the countywide proposal.

About 31 percent of the county's 566,000 registered voters turned out for the election amid clear skies and warm weather.

The vote culminates an 18-month verbal and propaganda battle among city officials, businessmen and grassroots groups over the referendum.

The pro-dome supporters were claiming victory as early as 8 p.m. while those against the proposal conceded about 8:30 p.m.

Mayor Henry Cisneros, who leaves office in May after eight years as mayor and six as a councilman, had led the pro-dome factions that say the stadium will propel the city into a new dimension of competition with other cities for conventions.

Voters leave a polling place at the Terrell Hills City Hall after voting in Saturday's election, which decided the fate of San Antonio's domed stadium.

AP Laserphoto

"Today is an affirmation by the people of Bexar County of the vision of the future that they want for this area and that is the real victory of what occurred today," Cisneros told about 500 supporters who had gathered at a hotel ballroom Saturday night.

The Rev. Rosendo Urrabazo, a Catholic priest and co-chairman of the grassroots organization Communities Organized for Public Service, was among the leading opponents of the stadium's financing proposal.

City votes to limit gambling action

GALVESTON (AP) — City voters overwhemingly approved an amendment to their charter Saturday, preventing any further voter action on the question of casino gambling without the issue being legalized by the state first.

Proposition 6 was passed 2,989, or 67 percent,to 1,449, or 33 percent.

In the last five years, voters have turned thumbs down three times to casino gambling by wide margins.

Following the most recent attempt in August, members of Galveston's anti-casino movement mounted a petition drive to place on Saturday's ballot Proposition 6, which bans all straw polls on casino gambling until the issue is approved by the state Legislature.

The proposition is one of 32 proposed amendments to the city's charter on the ballot. Most deal with minor changes in the city's election and budgeting process and have stirred little or no controversy.

Pro-gambling legislators claim they need to take straw polls if they are to ever prove to other legislators that Galveston wants casino gambling. They say the proposition is anti-democratic.

"They can't limit the right to vote," said John Saracco, a leader of Galvestonians for Economic Development.

"Freedom of speech was what this country was based on. We know it's unconstitutional."

But Harris "Shrub" Kempner, leader of Galvestonians Against Casino Gambling, disagrees.

"We really don't think it is," he said. "It's targeted only at specifically straw polls on casino gambling."

Amarillo voters reject single-member plan

AMARILLO (AP) — In a light turnout, Amarillo voters rejected a single-member redistricting plan for city government.

It was the second time such a proposal has failed. The first attempt was in 1975.

With only 12.5 percent of registered voters participating, there were 4,957 voting against the measure and 4,383 voting in favor of it.

If approved, Amarillo would have been divided into four voting districts. One commissioner would have been elected from each district and two commissioners and the mayor would have elected at large.

AN ABUNDANT LIFE - PART 4
RELATIONSHIPS

Life is relationships. Whether life is abundant or miserable depends upon relationships. The four basic ones are:

Relationship with SELF - If you are not your best friend, find out why. Correct the problems. It will be the best investment you can make.

Relationship with OTHERS - The best way to have good friends (or neighbors, co-workers, etc.) is to be one yourself. Another great investment.

Relationship with THINGS - The one most likely to dominate us. Things are wonderful servants but cruel masters.

Relationship with GOD - The most important one of all. When our relationship with God is right, the others will fall into place naturally and properly.

Beware of any other than the teaching that a personal relationship with Jesus Christ, the only Begotten Son of the Living God, is needed. There is no other power that provides relief from nor remedy for the guilt we continually incur - both inadvertently and deliberately. There is no other source of comprehensive yet easily understood absolutes for guiding desirable human behavior. Beware also of any claims made for the Scriptures they themselves do not claim.

The Gospel does not need defending. It needs declaring. By Christians. By unmistakable example. On Mondays. Tuesdays. Wednesdays. Thursdays. Fridays. And on Saturdays. As well as on Sundays.

The most abundant lives are those in which all of these relationships are lived daily in harmony.

Texas bankers upset by merged thrifts' tactics

DALLAS (AP) — Texas bankers are miffed that the Southwest Plan to merge insolvent thrifts may have given those troubled institutions an edge in the competition for depositors.

In a letter to the chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank, Jeff Austin, president of the Texas Bankers Association, said bailed out thrifts are unfairly offering above-market interest rates to depositors and representing themselves as banks.

"Texas bankers have every reason to want the Southwest Plan to work and improve the outlook for Texas thrifts," Austin said in the Jan. 11 letter to FHLB Chairman Danny Wall. "However, we do ask that the rules of the game be fair."

The Southwest Plan was devised to rid the industry of ailing thrifts by merging some and closing others. The plan was supposed to reduce the so-called Texas premium, or the inflated prices that Texas thrifts pay for deposits.

"In actual fact, the new resulting institutions in many cases have not lowered rates...in some cases they have actually raised rates paid on deposits," Austin said in his letter.

The TAB's objections are the most recent of a steady onslaught of criticism of the Southwest Plan.

The agency spent $25 billion in 1988 to bail out 88 insolvent Texas thrifts. The cost of a national thrift rescue, once complete, is expected to reach or exceed $100 billion.

The Texas premium is widely viewed as weakening the state's financial system — both healthy and sick institutions — because it forces them to pay above-market rates.

To illustrate the premium, Richard Watts, president of Seminole National Bank, in a Dec. 29 letter to Sen. Phil Gramm, said Consolidated Federal Bank's branch in Seminole had raised certificate of deposit rates as much as 1.15 percentage points, the Dallas Times Herald reported.

Consolidated Federal was formed from 15 Texas thrifts acquired by James Fail, a Phoenix insurance man, for $120 million with $1.85 billion in federal assistance.

Watts said Seminole Bank didn't lose customers to Consolidated, "but we sure got chewed out about matching them."

George Barclay, president of FHLB in Dallas, said that soon after hearing of the high yields, he immediately took action to have Consolidated's rates reduced.

STATE IN BRIEF

Hightower, food banks seek to glean surplus

AUSTIN (AP) — Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower has joined 17 Texas food banks in seeking ways to move surplus food from the fields directly to non-profit agencies serving the needy.

"There is more that we can do. We want to make something happen here," Hightower said in proposing a task force to study directly linking urban food banks with rural producers.

The task force would unite agriculture officials, grocery chains, universities, grower associations and the transportation industry, the Austin American-Statesman reported Saturday.

Kate Fitzgerald, the state agriculture official in charge of food assistance programs, said that by summer a toll-free telephone hotline will connect the food banks with growers who want to donate produce.

Seventeen Texas food banks are affiliated with Second Harvest, a national clearinghouse in Chicago.

Southwest Plan defended

DALLAS (AP) — There is no easy solution to bailing out troubled thrifts and the oft-criticized Southwest Plan needs to be given time to work, the president and chairman of Sunbelt Savings Association says.

Tom Wageman, 54, spoke at the Texas Associated Press Broadcaster's Seminar on Business and Financial Reporting. He came to Sunbelt Savings in November 1976 after serving as president and CEO of Republic-Bank's First National-Midland, formerly the First National Bank-Midland.

Wageman said coverage of the Southwest Plan is oversimplified. He said he has heard more opinions about the Southwest Plan than fact and believes it will be a long time before people can judge how successful it is.

"This is a collapse. It's not easy; it's not going to get solved easily," Wageman said.

He defended the Southwest Plan as a way to bring troubled thrifts under new ownership that is committed to the industry. Even if there was the money available to liquidate the thrifts instead of finding new owners, that wouldn't be good for Texas, he said.

"If you decided to liquidate it, you would liquidate probably 18,000 jobs," Wageman said. He said the state also would lose enormous tax revenues from financial institutions if they were closed.

"It could be an enormous cataclysm in this state to shut it down," he said.

Gays' assaulters get prison

DALLAS (AP) — Three men who pleaded guilty to charges of clubbing and beating two homosexual men in the Oak Lawn area of Dallas have been sentenced to prison terms.

State District Judge Tom Thorpe on Friday sentenced Wayne Scott Foster, 19, who admitted starting the assault by hitting one of the men with a baseball bat, to five years in prison and ordered him to pay a $500 fine.

Robert Alipranti, 21, who admitted taking $3 from one of the victims, was sentenced to four years in prison and fined $250.

Johathan Glen Powell, 18, was sentenced to three years in prison and fined $250.

AP reporter wins Headliner honor

AUSTIN (AP) — Mike Cochran, The Associated Press Fort Worth correspondent, Friday was named Headliners Star Reporter of the Year for the second time by the Headliners Club in Austin.

Cochran

Cochran, 52, who is in his third decade as a journalist, won the top Charles E. Green Journalism Award for his coverage of a range of stories and for demonstrating versatility as a reporter.

Stories Cochran reported and submitted to the Headliners Club included a series on the elusive Walker Railey whose wife remains comatose in a nursing home after being choked nearly to death, an interview with South Texas power broker Clinton Manges, a historical account of Fort Worth's Jacksboro Highway and a story on Abilene's LaJet Classic golf tournament — now known as the Southwest Golf Classic.

Super Duper or Super Blooper?

Coaches sure XXIII will be worthwhile

By THOMAS GEORGE
New York Times News Service

MIAMI — Did you hear that? Promises, promises from Bill Walsh and Sam Wyche, the Super Bowl XXIII coaches, pals offering predictions.

Both guarantee that this will be one of the most exciting Super Bowls ever, a close, high-scoring affair full of twists.

But who's buying it? The margin of victory in each of the last six Super Bowl games was 32 points, 19 points, 36 points, 22 points, 29 points and 10 points. The National Conference has won four in a row, six of seven.

But when the San Francisco 49ers meet the Cincinnati Bengals in a 4:18 p.m. CST kickoff Sunday before a sellout crowd in Joe Robbie Stadium, enough explosives will cover the field to match a fireworks display.

These teams feature the talent and strategy to back their boasts and keep television viewers tuned to NBC, which will televise the game. After all, their last championship tussle, Super Bowl XVI in 1982, was a 26-21 victory by the 49ers, easily one of the closest Super Bowl finishes in history.

After an outbreak of violence in the Overtown area earlier this week, the game has once again moved to center stage.

The National Weather Service is predicting a 70 percent chance of rain early Sunday, tapering off by kickoff. The temperature at the start of the game should be in the low 70s.

What we have here are two teams with their hands in the cookie jar. The young Bengals are yearning for that first nibble. The veteran 49ers have already savored a couple of bites and want another.

San Francisco is favored to win by 7 points.

"We're greenhorns, as you know," Wyche said of his Bengals. "We're walking around looking at all the tall buildings and trying to take it in. We're just the little guys that don't have a chance, playing way over its head.

■ More on Super Bowl, Pages 3, 6C

"Seriously, there is a ballgame to be played Sunday and it's played only on the field. We just might be a little better than people think."

Walsh knows Wyche's game.

"Poor Sam," Walsh said, shaking his head. "Those poor little underdog Bengals with the number one offense in all of football. I don't know if we're the team of the decade, but if we can win this and get a third Super Bowl in the '80s, we would have to be considered."

Wyche said a loss would be "haunting." Walsh said he supposed a loss would be more devestating to Wyche because Walsh has already won two titles.

But for Walsh, Super Bowl XXIII is like that last cookie.

"As long as it's there," said Walsh, "you want it. And want it badly."

Make no mistake, this game will have these two coaches' imprints stamped all over it. They are two of the National Football League's most innovative offensive minds, and the game plan they have devised will certainly be long on creativity.

It is as if Joe Robbie Stadium will be a huge chess board with Walsh and Wyche countering each other's moves.

There are several key pieces to ponder.

Joe Montana could become the first player to win three Super Bowl most valuable player honors. He is playing with precision, and deflated both his opponents on the way to Miami, sparking the 49ers' 34-9 playoff victory over the Minnesota Vikings and the NFC championship 28-3 victory over the Chicago Bears.

His playoff numbers: 33 completions in 54 attempts for 466 passing yards, six touchdowns and one interception with a long pass of 61 yards. He throws right-handed and likes to roll right.

Wichita Falls goalkeeper Richard Sutton and Coyote sweeper Jason Christie (19) thwart a scoring attempt by Midland High center forward Shaun Savas during Saturday action at Hogan Park.

UIL soccer shutout in Midland debut

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Shaun Savas experienced the soccer equivalent of being tackled at the five-yard-line with the score tied on the last play of the game.

The Midland High senior had a chance to win the Bulldogs' first-ever interscholastic soccer match when he got within five yards of the goal in the final seconds of regulation play. But Wichita Falls goalkeeper Richard Sutton made a diving save of Savas' shot to force overtime in a match that ultimately ended in a 0-0 tie Saturday at the Hogan Park Soccer Complex.

Savas took a pass from the wing about 15 yards from the goal, took several steps upfield and fired a low shot to Sutton's right. The Coyote keeper smothered the ball, however, and time then ran out.

"I could have shot it sooner," Savas said. "I could have also tried to put it in the corner, but I think I'd do it the same way again."

The Bulldogs dominated play in the second hald, taking seven shots on goal while fullbacks Mike Savas and Sikes Johnson were keeping the Coyotes far away from MHS keeper Bryant Mueller after the halftime break. MHS continued to challenge Sutton in both five-minute overtime periods, trying four shots on goal while the Coyotes suffered from the ejection of their two top strikers due to unsportsmanlike play.

Mueller saved all three Wichita Falls shots in the first half.

While MHS coach Tom Eskihati stopped short of the term "moral victory," it was clear that the first-year Bulldog mentor was impressed with his team's effort.

Blue Devils duked in second straight loss

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Top-ranked Duke lost for the second straight time Saturday. Derrick McQueen saw it as a victory for Wake Forest, not a Blue Devils' defeat.

McQueen, a freshman, shrugged off foul trouble in the second half and scored a career-high 20 points as Wake Forest upset Duke 75-71 in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

"People were saying 'What was wrong with Duke?'" McQueen said. "I think we were a big part of what was wrong with Duke. I'm glad that it ended like this this time."

Last month, the Deamon Deacons lost to Duke 94-88 in a game they thought they should've won. McQueen made sure this time.

McQueen picked up his fourth foul with nine minutes left, but he scored eight of his points after that, helping to stave off a Duke comeback and sending the Blue Devils to their second straight loss.

Duke, which lost to North Carolina earlier this week, is 13-2 overall and 3-2 in the ACC.

"McQueen was outstanding," Wake Forest coach Bob Staak said. "He did a great job controlling the tempo."

That control was in jeopardy midway through the second half, however.

The Demon Deacons, 9-6 and 2-4 in the ACC, squandered most of a 15-point lead in an eight-minute stretch of the second half as they committed five turnovers and hit just two of eight shots in the span.

Meanwhile, Danny Ferry scored 16 of Duke's first 22 points in the period to lead the Blue Devils' rally. Phil Henderson complimented Ferry's run with a pair of baskets, the last of which came with 6:59 remaining and brought the Blue Devils to 59-57.

"I wouldn't call it a run. I would say that we played real well for 12 minutes," Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said. "You have to put points on the board. We missed a lot of free throws and they hit theirs, to their credit."

"In the late-game situations, we've had our problems," Staak said. "Today, we did a great job and when we needed to make the plays, we did."

Sam Ivy scored 12 points for Wake Forest.

Thompson back, Hoyas win

By WILLIAM C. RHODEN
New York Times News Service

LANDOVER, Md. — John Thompson resumed his duties as the head basketball coach at Georgetown University Saturday, exactly a week after his walkout ignited a national debate on freshman eligibility requirements.

The Hoyas celebrated Thompson's return by overcoming a 10-point deficit and defeating Connecticut, 59-55, in a Big East game before 12,531 at Capital Centre.

Sam Jefferson, a seldom-used reserve, gave Georgetown a 57-55 lead with 12 seconds left with two fouls shots, and Charles Smith added two more free throws with two seconds remaining.

"It felt very good, especially the last two seconds of the game," Thompson said when asked about his reaction to being on the bench again. "I was glad to get back in it because that's what I do. I'm not a protester; I'm a basketball coach."

Thompson walked off the court Jan. 14 before a game with Boston College to protest a recently passed rule that he believed would have an adverse impact on many minority group and economically disadvantaged student-athletes.

He missed two games but the Hoyas beat both Boston College and Providence, overcoming a 14-point deficit to top the Friars last Wednesday night.

Bush emerges as leading Ranger candidate

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — George W. Bush, the oldest son of President George Bush, is leading a group of businessmen emerging as the most likely candidate to buy majority interest in the Texas Rangers, a Dallas newspaper reported.

A letter of intent to purchase the Rangers is expected to be presented Tuesday during the major league ownership committee's meeting in Chicago, The Dallas Morning News reported Saturday.

Among those reportedly involved in Bush's ownership group is Bill DeWitt Jr., a Cincinnati oilman whose father is a former owner of the Cincinnati Reds, the newspaper said.

Bush's group is the outgrowth of the ownership committee's attempts to find an alternate buyer for Eddie Chiles' 58 percent interest of the team.

But contacted Friday, Chiles said he has not been approached "formally or semiformally" by anybody interested in buying the team other than minority owner Edward L. Gaylord. Chiles also said he has not sought an alternate buyer.

Gaylord, owner of a third interest in the American League baseball team, has exercised an option to buy the Rangers. But he has faced strong opposition from major league owners because of his involvment in the television industry.

Gaylord owns KTVT, Channel 11 in Fort Worth, a potential superstation, as well as The Nashville Network. KTVT has television rights to the Rangers.

A former Midland oilman who is now a consultant with Harken Energy Corp. in Bedford, Bush has been mentioned as a possible candidate for the Texas Republican gubernatorial nomination in 1990.

An unidentified source told the Morning News that Bush's family's involvement with the Republican Party could help in an effort to buy the Rangers.

"He knows the right people in all circles," the source told the newspaper.

George Argyros, owner of the Seattle Mariners and one of the strongest opponents to Gaylord, has served as president of and remains active in the Young Presidents, a Republican organization.

Several years ago Argyros and two friends bought former President Richard Nixon's so-called Western White House in San Clemente, Calif.

New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner, a member of the ownership committee, has long been active in Republican activities.

Baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth has ties to the Republican Party as well. It has been speculated since he became commissioner 7½ years ago that he would eventually launch a California senatorial campaign.

Other groups also have expressed interest in buying the Rangers.

Bill Mack, a New Jersey-based building magnate, was involved with Tampa, Fla., auto dealer Frank Morsani in the initial offer Gaylord acted upon and has become involved with Fort Worth car dealer Roger Williams.

Former Ranger executive Larry Schmittou, heading a group of several country and western entertainers, has indicated several times in the last two years he is interested in buying the team.

COM Swimmers clinch winter title

From Staff Reports

There is still a day of competition left in the 22nd annual United Bank/COM Winter Invitational swim meet at the Mabee Memorial swim center, but you can go ahead and place the championship crown on the heads of the City of Midland swim team.

COM amassed 1,026 points through Saturday's second day action and lead the field by an amazing 636 points. El Paso Aqua Posse is a distant second with 390 points while City of Richardson (COR) is third with 265 points. Fourteen swim teams are in the meet.

Action was to continue this morning in the final day of competition.

No less than seven COM tankers had the edge in the age group high point individual standings.

COM has the top two individuals in the senior division with Michaela Hasek and Matthew Houston. Hasek is the top scorer among the girls in the meet with 54 points. Houston has scored

COM also has the top two individuals in the 8-under division. Scott Strauss and Amber Goodwin both have scored 27 points.

Other top COM performers are Craig Kieffer (10-under boys, 26 points), Howard Flowers (11-12 boys, 39) and Carrie Henry (13-14 girls, 49).

Amarillo Aquatic Club's Jay Hayes is the top scorer among boys with 54 points, matching the output by COM's Hasek. Hayes is in 13-14 boys competition. El Paso Aqua Posse's Joanna Borzi leads the 11-12 girls with 40 points. Stephanie Kimble of the West Texas Aquatic Club paces the 10-under girls with 34 points.

SHUTOUT

"IT WAS a very good start for my program," Eskihati said. "This match will give the program a boost going into the Dallas tournament (next weekend)."

Midfielders Jeff Lanning and Kofi Bruce keyed the Bulldogs' second-half surge, Eskihati said. "We felt like our midfielders weren't containing Wichita Falls' offense, so we wanted to control midfield by pushing them outside.

"I felt like we should have had a couple of goals," the coach said. "We tried to give our center forward (S. Savas) the ball and sock in the defenders.

"But he hasn't played center forward much, and he has a long way to go."

Wichita Falls assistant coach Pete Gill said his Coyotes were fortunate to get out with a tie.

"They pretty well controlled us most of the game," he said. "We thought our experience could take the game over from them."

But much of the Coyotes' experience was on the bench at the end, leaving the visitors two men short for the second overtime.

FORWARD KORY Walker was the first to go after picking up his second yellow card in the second minute of the first overtime. Walker had been slapped with a yellow card for dangerous play in the 33rd minute of the second half, so when he was called for dissent, he was gone — courtesy of referee Rick Daughtrey.

That hurt the Coyotes, because Walker was their big scoring threat — having scored two goals in Friday's 4-0 romp over Midland Lee.

Next, Coyote midfielder Chris Phillips was red-carded for violent conduct in the third minute of the first OT. At that point, Coyote coach Dale Marklinger pulled his team off the field and it appeared the Bulldogs would win by forfeit.

But the Coyote players talked their coach into letting them take the field for the second overtime, after Marklinger was red-carded for a variety of offenses — including foul language and dissent. Gill coached the second overtime in his stead.

While Gill stopped short of openly criticizing Daughtrey, he did opine that the red-card on Phillips was questionable. "But we've got to learn how to keep our cool," he added.

Eskihati thought the Coyotes may have just been frustrated.

A look at the Super Bowl matchup between the San Francisco 49ers and the Cincinnati Bengals at Miami's Joe Robbie Stadium (time EST; regular season records in parentheses):

Sunday, Jan. 22
SAN FRANCISCO (10-6) AT CINCINNATI (12-4)
4 p.m., NBC

LINE — San Francisco by 7.

RECORD VS. SPREAD — San Francisco 10-8-0; Cincinnati 13-5-0.

1988 PLAYOFFS — San Francisco defeated Minnesota 34-9 in the conference semifinals and Chicago 28-3 in the NFC Championship. ... Cincinnati stopped Seattle 21-13 in the first round and Buffalo 21-10 for the AFC Championship.

SERIES RECORD — San Francisco has won five of the six meetings between the two teams and five straight. This includes the Super Bowl 16 following the 1981 season, which the 49ers won 26-21 in the Pontiac Silverdome, the only time the teams have played on a neutral site. The Bengals only win came was at San Francisco in 1974, 21-3.

LAST TIME MET — The 49ers won 27-26 in the second week of the 1987 season at Riverfront Stadium. The Bengals were ahead 26-20 with six seconds remaining and faced a fourth and short at their 25-yard line. Cincinnati elected to run the time off the clock by scrambling around the field, but were stopped with two seconds left. Joe Montana then threw a 25-yard pass to Jerry Rice with no time on the clock and Ray Wersching kicked the extra point to give the 49ers their improbable victory.

PREVIOUS SUPER BOWLS — This is San Francisco's third Super Bowl this decade. The 49ers beat Cincinnati after the 1981 season and three years later, defeated Miami 38-16. Joe Montana was named MVP of both games. Against the Bengals, he threw a touchdown and rushed for a score; against the Dolphins, Montana threw three touchdowns — including a pair to Roger Craig — and ran for another. Montana has a chance to be first player ever named MVP in three Super Bowls. ... Cincinnati, losers in its only Super Bowl appearance, fell behind San Francisco 20-0 in the first half. The Bengals, however, scored three second half touchdowns on two Ken Anderson passes and an Anderson 5-yard run. Despite the loss, Cincinnati had outgained San Francisco 356 to 275, the first time the losing team had more yardage than the Super Bowl champion.

LAST GAME — Both teams convincingly defeated respected opponents in championship games. The 49ers beat the Chicago Bears 28-3 in chilly Soldier Field. Joe Montana threw three touchdowns overall, including two first half scores of 61 and 27 yards to Jerry Rice. Tom Rathman iced the victory with a 4-yard fourth-quarter touchdown. San Francisco ammassed 406 yards against the No. 2 defense in football. Roger Craig led the running game with 68 yards on 18 carries. Rice finished with five catches for 133. Safety Jeff Fuller had San Francisco's only interception and the defense held Chicago to one field goal, only the second time the Bears were kept to three points. ... Cincinnati used two scoring shuffles from running back Ickey Woods to beat AFC East champion Buffalo 21-10. Woods danced for 102 yards on 29 carries, including a pair of 1-yard touchdowns. James Brooks had the other Bengals score, a 10-yard pass from Boomer Esiason. The highest rated passer in football, Esiason completed 11 of 20 for 94 yards as Cincinnati ran 50 times for 175 yards. The underrated Bengals' defense shutout Buffalo in the second half and held them to 181 yards. Corner

Mookie has career-best night

AMES, Iowa — Mookie Blaylock scored a career-high 38 points and Tony Martin hit two straight baskets in overtime to put Oklahoma ahead to stay as the No. 5 Sooners pulled out a Big Eight Conference victory over Iowa State.

Oklahoma rallied from an 11-point deficit in the first half and overcame a subpar performance from center Stacey King to improve its conference record to 3-0 and 15-2 overall.

The Sooners scored the final nine points of the game after Iowa State tied it at 100 on Victor Alexander's jump shot in the lane with 3:51 left.

Martin rebounded a missed shot and scored with 3:30 remaining and got another basket inside at the 2:43 mark for a 104-100 lead. Blaylock and Terrence Mullins then hit consecutive jump shots from the left side and King sank a free throw with 44 seconds left.

Wisconsin 71, No. 6 Michigan 68

MADISON, Wis. — Trent Jackson made the go-ahead free throw with 30 seconds left and Tim Locum added two more with four seconds remaining as Wisconsin upset sixth-ranked Michigan.

Locum's clinching free throws came after Michigan's Rumeal Robinson missed two free throws with nine seconds remaining.

The Wolverines' Terry Mills rebounded Robinson's second miss, but Locum ripped the ball away from him, was fouled and hit both free throws as Wisconsin ended a four-game losing streak.

Jackson led the Badgers with 21 points and Danny Jones had 19. Glen Rice led the Wolverines, now 15-3 and 3-2 in the league, with 25 points. Mills added 15.

Wisconsin, 10-5 and 2-4 in the Big Ten, trailed 68-66 when Rice hit a bank shot with 1:57 to go.

No. 7 Iowa 67, Purdue 66

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. — Ed Horton scored the winning basket with four seconds left, rallying No. 7 Iowa over Purdue.

Horton scored 26 points, including 10 in the final four minutes. Iowa trailed 56-45 midway through the second half and was still behind by nine before two foul shots by Horton started the Hawkeyes' surge.

Iowa, playing its fourth straight conference game on the road, outscored Purdue 10-2 in a three-minute span and took the lead 65-64 on a basket by Horton with 1:45 remaining.

Stephen Scheffler gave Purdue its final lead at 66-65 on a goaltending violation by Ray Thompson with 23 seconds to go. After the final basket by Horton, who made 11 of 15 shots, Purdue had one more chance to win, but a shot by Scheffler bounced off the rim at the buzzer.

The victory snapped a two-game losing streak and left Iowa at 2-2 in the Big Ten and 14-3 overall. Purdue dropped to 2-3 and 9-9.

No. 8 Missouri 105, Oklahoma St. 83

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Byron Irvin scored 30 points and led a second-half rally that carried No. 8 Missouri past Oklahoma State.

Missouri trailed 62-54 before Irvin's basket put the Tigers ahead 69-68. Lee Coward scored on a pair of fast breaks, Irvin made a jump shot and Gary Leonard had a dunk as Missouri extended its lead to 79-70, capping a 25-8 surge.

The Tigers are 16-3 overall and 3-0 in the Big Eight. The Cowboys are 10-3 and 1-1.

Oklahoma State stayed close and closed to 81-79 with about five minutes left on Byron Houston's three-point play. Houston, a freshman, scored 27 points.

No. 9 Arizona 75, Villanova 67

TUCSON, Ariz. — Sean Elliott got 31 points and became Arizona's all-time leading scorer as the No. 9 Wildcats beat Villanova.

Arizona, the Pacific-10 Conference leader at 7-1, improved to 13-2 overall by winning the meeting of Wildcats.

Top 20

Villanova, 2-3 in the Big East, fell to 10-8.

Arizona led 63-50 with 4:18 remaining before Villanova's Marc Dowdell made consecutive layups and Doug West had a short jump shot that made it 63-56 with 2:41 left.

But Elliott made six of seven free throws and a slam in the next 1:19 as Arizona went ahead 71-58, and he finished the scoring with another two free throws with seven seconds left.

Elliott, who shot 8-for-12 from the field and 13-for-15 from the foul line, also had eight rebounds and three assists. He now has 2,147 points, breaking the school record of 2,132 by Bob Elliott, who is not related.

No. 11 Syracuse 99, Notre Dame 87

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Sherman Douglas showed no signs of earlier back pain as he scored 26 points, helping Syracuse beat Notre Dame and ending the No. 11 Orangemen's three-game losing streak.

Stephen Thompson added 25 points and Derrick Coleman had 21 for Syracuse, 15-4, while Joe Fredrick led Notre Dame, 8-3, with 24 points.

Syracuse hit 86 percent from the field in the second half and boosted its poor free-throw shooting percentage by hitting 10 of 14 attempts in the half, besting the Irish's 5-for-13 mark from the line after halftime.

Syracuse opened a 15-point lead late in the second half of a see-saw game, which the Orangemen hadn't led by more than nine points.

Notre Dame pulled within two points at 7:21, but Thompson led the Syracuse attack as they outscored the Irish 10-4 for an eight-point lead.

No. 13 North Carolina 84
No. 15 N. Carolina St. 81

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — Steve Bucknall scored 14 points and No. 13 North Carolina held on to beat No. 15 North Carolina State, leaving the teams tied for the Atlantic Coast Conference lead.

The Tar Heels, who beat top-ranked Duke by 20 points on Wednesday, led 82-72 with 46 seconds left. But Brian Howard made two 3-point baskets, Chris Corchiani had a short jumper and Avie Lester added a foul shot to pull the Wolfpack to 84-81 with six seconds left.

No. 14 Florida St. 95, Cincinnati 80

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — George McCloud scored 29 points and Irving Thomas added a career-high 21 as 14th-ranked Florida State captured a Metro Conference victory over foul-plauged Cincinnati.

Florida State, now 14-1 overall and 2-0 in the conference, sank 42 of 52 free throw tries with McCloud making 12 of 15 and Derrick Mitchell 11 of 15 while scoring a career-high 17 points.

Tony Dawson added 14 points and sophomore Aubry Boyd came off the bench to score 10 in the second half for Florida State, which has won six straight games since suffering its lone loss of the season to Villanova last month.

No. 19 Indiana 75, Michigan St. 60

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. — Jay Edwards scored 17 of his 19 points in the second half and No. 19 Indiana beat Michigan State for its 12th straight victory and sole possession of first place in the Big Ten.

The Hoosiers, 15-4 overall and 5-0 in conference play, trailed early by eight points before tying the score at 33 on Brian Sloan's jumper at the halftime buzzer.

Edwards, who made all three of his shots from 3-point range in the second half, put the Hoosiers ahead to stay 40-37 with 16:22 to play.

Kentucky 66, No. 18 Tennessee 65

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Derrick Miller scored 23 points and Deron Feldhaus made two foul shots with 12 seconds left as Kentucky beat No. 18 Tennessee.

Feldhaus' two free throws put Kentucky ahead 66-62, offsetting a 3-point shot by Greg Bell at the buzzer.

Kentucky improved to 9-9 and 4-2 in the conference. Tennessee fell to 12-3 and 5-1 in the SEC.

No. 20 Stanford 84, UCLA 75

STANFORD, Calif. — Todd Lichti scored 18 points and Howard Wright added 17 to lead No. 20 Stanford over UCLA.

The Cardinal, 14-4 and 6-2 in conference play, shut down high-scoring UCLA guard Pooh Richardson, who was held to six points. The senior guard averages 15 points per game.

The Bruins, which are now 10-5 overall and 5-2 in league play, were led by Don MacLean with 20 points.

PROP 42—

Before Saturday's game, Thompson said he had been happy with his team's performance, especially in light of the controversy surrounding his protest.

"I was pleased with their play," he said. "I think they were involved in this emotionally if not physically because of the fact that they knew how much it meant to me, and I felt extremely proud of them. If they'd lost, people would have said this distracted them.

"But that wasn't a concern of mine," Thompson added. "As I said to them, 'You're really not basketball players as people would like you to believe you are. You're human beings who have a responsibility to society to deal with certain things.'

"I find it very offensive when a person thinks a basketball coach can't question an educational institution because it's athletics telling the institution. Athletics is just a part of it."

Thompson decided Thursday to return after receiving a commitment from key officials that they would ask members of their respective bodies to suppport legislation that would table Proposition 42 until a study of the regulation it amended, Proposition 48, is completed in 1991. The propositions deal with the eligiblity standards and scholarship opportunities for incoming freshman.

On Thursday, Thompson flew to Kansas City where he met with Albert Witte, the president of the National Collegiate Athletic Association, Martin Massengale, the chairman of the Presidents' Commission, Harvey Schiller, commissioner of the Southeastern Conference, and Dick Schultz, executive director of the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

The Rev. Timothy S. Healy, Georgetown president, and Frank Rienzo, the athletic director, also attended.

Thompson announced his decision to return during a news conference Friday evening after having informed the team of his decision about three hours earlier.

"I just thanked them for their support and told them that I had had a discussion with the people in Kansas City and I had come to a decision that it was in the interest of everybody that I go back with my team," he said.

Cougars sneak by Mustangs

DALLAS (AP) — Chris Morris' free throw with no time remaining lifted Houston to an 84-83 overtime victory over Southern Methodist in the Southwest Conference Saturday.

Morris missed a 12-footer as time expired but was fouled by J.D. Green. Morris failed on the first shot but swished the second to lift the Cougars to 2-3 in the conference and 9-7 overall. The Mustangs fell to 3-2 in the league and 7-8 overall.

SMU's Tony Patterson converted a layup for an apparent 85-83 Mustang lead with :29 to play in overtime but Patterson was called for an offensive foul.

Morris had tied the game, 83-83 with :42 remaining with a 12-foot jumper.

Arkansas 88, Baylor 58

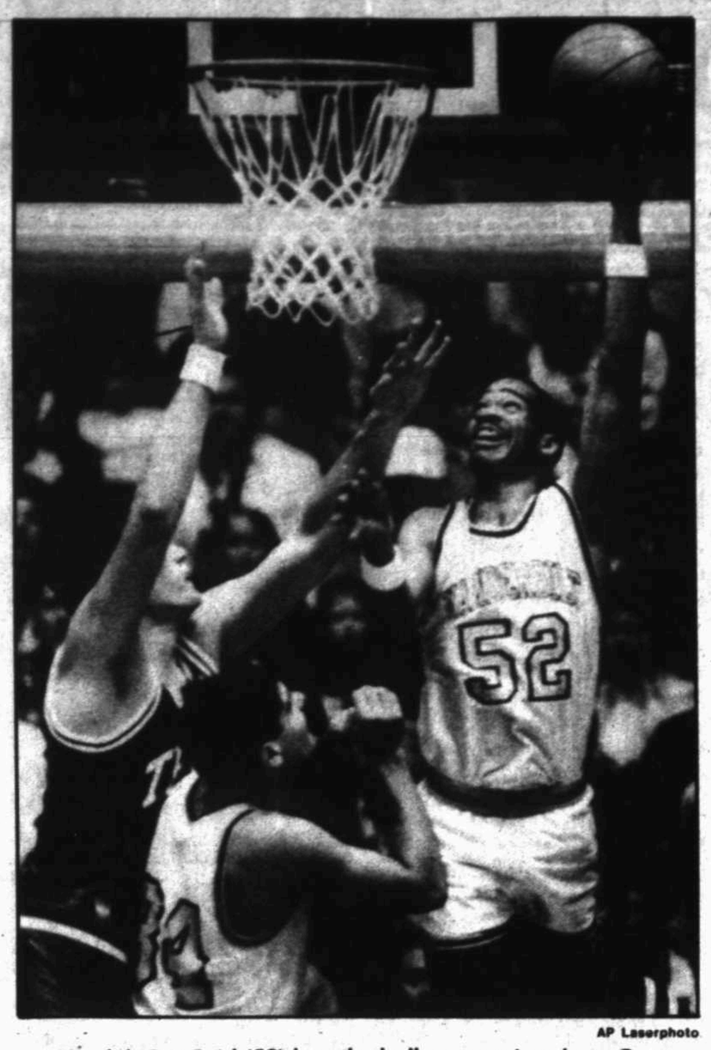
WACO — Reserve center Mario Credit came off the bench to score 18 points and grab eight rebounds as Arkansas powered past Baylor at the Ferrell Center.

Four other players reached double figures for the Razorbacks, who boosted their record to 5-1 in the Southwest Conference and 11-4 overall. Arkansas also snapped a three-year losing streak at Baylor.

From the opening tip-off, Baylor had trouble breaking Arkansas' 1-2-2 zone press. The Razorbacks, taking advantage of numerous turnovers, quickly opened a lead behind the strong play of freshman center Oliver Miller.

Vanderbilt 94, Texas 79

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Frank Kornet scored 25 points and grabbed 16 rebounds, both career highs, as Vanderbilt Coach C.M. Newton received his 500th career victory by downing Texas in a nationally televised game.



AP Laserphoto

Vandy's Eric Reid (52) lays the ball up over Longhorn George Miller.

The Commodores trailed by as many as 13 points in the first half before shutting down Texas' outside shooting and cruising to their 10th victory in 18 games.

The victory gives Newton, a player on the University of Kentucky's 1951 national championship team, a 500-369 record as a coach.

Rice 79, Texas A&M 77

HOUSTON (AP) — David Willey sank a pair of free throws with four seconds left to give the Rice Owls a 79-77 Southwest Conference win over Texas A&M at Autry Court.

With the game tied 73-73, Willey sank a layup to give the Owls a 75-73 lead with 1:18 left.

Calcavecchia leads Phoenix Open

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.
New York Times News Service

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. — Mark Calcavecchia, a husky, free-swinging long hitter, shot 6-under par over the stretch from No. 13 through 17 Saturday to take a three-stroke lead in the $700,000 Phoenix Open.

The 28-year-old Floridian, charging from three shots behind the lead, made the strongest late move on a back nine by any contending golfer on the tour this year.

Calcavecchia, who always goes for broke, birdied the 13th and 14th holes, eagled the par-5 15th with its island green and had birdies at 16 and 17. That spectacular streak enabled him to post a 6-under 65 for a three-round score of 199.

He went into the final round as leader for the second week in a row. Last Sunday, he was a two-shot leader entering the final round of the Bob Hope-Chrysler Classic only to finish tied for fifth after one errant shot went out of bounds. Steve Jones eventually won on the first hole of a playoff with Paul Azinger and Sandy Lyle.

Gary Hallberg and Mark McCumber were tied for second place at 202. McCumber, who was playing with Calcavecchia, led most of the day but finished with 69.

Scott Hoch, who eagled the 389-yard, par-4 sixth hole, was tied with Scott Beck and Steve Elkington of Australia at 10-under-par 203.

Azinger and Jim Gallagher were tied at 204. Lyle, the defending champion, fell out of contention when he shot 76 for 212.

Speaking of Calcavecchia, McCumber said: "Mark's not afraid to make mistakes. I think he's a streak player. I think all physically strong players are streaky players."

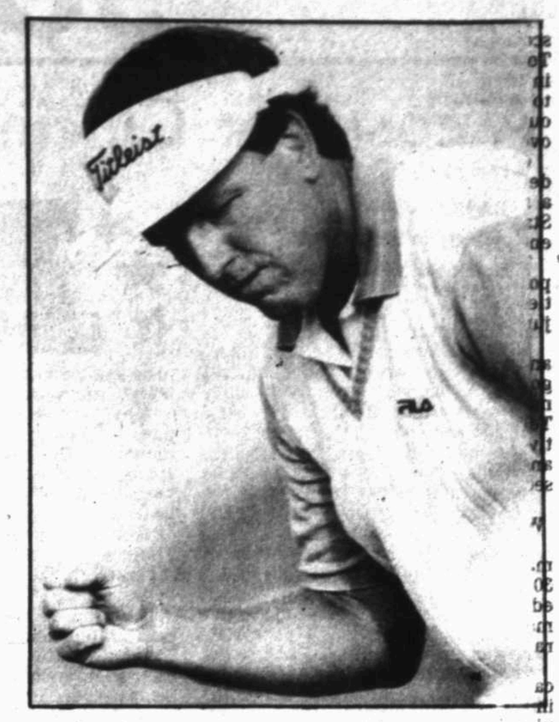
Such play may have cost Calcavecchia the victory a week ago. Playing the par-5 14th with a one-shot lead, Calcavecchia tried to reach the green in two by hitting his driver off the fairway. He pushed the long shot way right and out of bounds.

Saturday, Calcavecchia went for broke and never missed. He hit 13 of the 14 fairways on the par-4 and par-5 holes. He did not hit the fairway at the par-4 17th hole, because he drove the green.

"I think I've learned something from last week," Calcavecchia said. "I expected to win last week. Tomorrow I'm going to go out and play the way I did today to try to win."

Calcavecchia bogeyed the 12th hole after hitting his 5-iron tee shot at the par-3 hole into water.

Then, on the par-5, 576-yard 13th, he got home with a 4-iron and two putted. Then a drive and wedge got him on the green at the par-4 14th and he sank a 20-foot birdie putt.



Mark Calcavecchia

This was followed by a 5-iron shot of 210 yards onto the island green at the par-5, 501-yard 15th. The ball stopped 6 feet, 2 inches from the cup. It was measured because there was a $10,000 prize for closest to the pin in two shots at that green. Calcavecchia won the money, then followed with two birdies.

Steve Jones' uncle, Glen Jones, died Friday in Oklahoma. Jones, who was trying for a third consecutive victory when the Phoenix Open started Thursday, is the defending champion of the AT&T National Pro-Am, which will be played next week at Pebble Beach. Jones, who failed to make the cut here Friday, said he did not know if he would be able to play at the Pebble Beach event.

Jordan scores 53 in Bulls' loss

CHICAGO (AP) — Michael Jordan scored an NBA season-high 53 points but the Phoenix Suns beat the Chicago Bulls 116-107 Saturday night after overcoming a 19-point first-quarter deficit.

Jordan scored 50 or more points for the fourth time this season and the 16th time in his career. Elgin Baylor had 17 50-point games, second to Wilt Chamberlain's 118.

Jordan also had 14 rebounds and eight assists.

Phoenix, 8-11 on the road this season after going 6-35 last year, snapped Chicago's six-game winning streak, its longest since December 1983.

Tom Chambers scored 29 points for the Suns, who trailed 69-57 at halftime and outscored Chicago 32-18 in the third quarter. Eddie Johnson scored nine of his 27 points in the fourth quarter and Kevin Johnson had 18 points, 15 assists and 10 rebounds.

Phoenix led 102-96 with 5:17 left before Jordan hit a jumper and pair of free throws with 3:52 remaining. Eddie Johnson's jumper and Jordan's basket pulled Chicago to 104-102. Hornacek then made a three-point play for a five-point Phoenix lead.

Bullets 107, Sixers 105

LANDOVER, Md. — Steve Colter scored eight of his 10 points in the fourth quarter, and John Williams blocked Charles Barkley's last-second shot Saturday night, preserving the Washington Bullets' victory over the Philadelphia 76ers.

Washington won its second straight and its first in three games against Philadelphia this season. The Sixers have lost two straight, both on the road.

Hawks 137, Hornets 113

ATLANTA — Moses Malone and Dominique Wilkins scored 21 points each, leading eight Hawks in double figures. The Hawks scored their season high, topping a loss to Denver on Dec. 10.

Wilkins had 17 points in the first quarter as Atlanta stayed close despite 70 percent shooting by Charlotte, which led 34-33 after one period. The Hornets were playing without leading scorer Kelly Tripucka, who was home with the flu.

Cavaliers 115, Nets 103

RICHFIELD, Ohio — Larry Nance scored a season-high 33 points and combined with Ron Harper for 28 points in the third quarter as Cleveland overcame a 13-point halftime deficit.

Cleveland, with the NBA's best record at 29-7, has won four straight and 16 of 18.

The Cavaliers trailed 64-51 at halftime but Nance it at 74-74 on a three-point play with 3:30 left in the quarter. Harper made a pair of foul shots with 1:44 remaining in the period, giving Cleveland its first lead, 80-78.

A basket by New Jersey's Walter Berry tied it for the final time before Harper made two more free throws and Nance made a follow shot.

Midland Christian splits with Abilene Christian

From Staff Reports

Abilene Christian got 20 points from Clay Halla and a 61-30 victory over Midland Christian Saturday in a Texas Association of Private Schools District 6 basketball game, but the Lady Mustangs produced a 36-22 victory in the other TAPS contest.

Abilene Christian ran to a 15-5 first quarter lead and led by 33-12 at the half and had little trouble in gaining its fifth district win against two losses. The Mustangs fall to 3-13 for the year and 0-4 in district play.

Drew Akins was the only Mustang in double figures with 12 points while AC had Kevin Cline with 10 points to go with Halla's 20.

MC will host the Midland Lee sophomores at 7 p.m. Monday in a non-conference outing.

The Lady Mustangs got 12 points from Elizabeth Coffman and 10 from Christie Boles in a wire-to-wire victory. MC's girls are now 11-4 on the season and 3-1 in District 6 play.

The MC girls travel to Abilene Thursday for a noon game with Brentwood in the first round of the Christian Schools girls tournament.

Lendl eases into fourth round

By RICK WARNER

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — Ivan Lendl breezed into the fourth round of the Australian Open Sunday with a 6-2, 6-4, 6-3 victory over Nicklas Kulti of Sweden, while Stefan Edberg struggled to beat American Johan Kriek 7-5, 7-5, 7-5 in a battle of two-time champions.

Lendl, who has lost only one set in the tournament, eliminated Kulti in less than two hours.

"He was not reading my serves very well," Lendl said. "I got two or three easy points on my serve each game. I found a weakness and took advantage of it."

Gretzky moves up on all-time scoring list

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Wayne Gretzky of the Los Angeles Kings moved into second place on the all-time NHL scoring list Saturday night, passing Marcel Dionne of the New York Rangers.

Gretzky moved past Dionne with his fourth point of the game, an assist on Luc Robitaille's goal at 14:47 of the second period.

Gretzky, playing in his 743rd NHL game, has 616 goals and an NHL-record 1,155 assists for 1,771 points. Dionne, a part-time player for the Rangers who is not with the team on its current road trip, has 1,770 points in 18 seasons.

Gordie Howe is the all-time NHL leader with 1,850 points.

Gretzky also assisted on Robitaille's first-period goal and Bernie Nicholls' 47th of the season three minutes into the second period before scoring his 33rd of the season at 14:01. The assist on Nicholls' goal gave him 100 points for the season, his NHL-record 10th straight season with 100 or more points.

Carl Furillo dead at 66

STONY CREEK MILLS, Pa. (AP) — Carl Furillo, a member of the Brooklyn Dodgers during their glory years in the late 1940s and 50s, died Saturday at his home. He was 66.

Furillo, who was born and raised in eastern Pennsylvania and moved back there after his baseball career, died of natural causes.

Furillo was the right fielder on the Brooklyn teams of the early 1950s, immortalized as "the Boys of Summer," and a member of the 1955 team that won Brooklyn's only World Series prior to the Dodgers' move to Los Angeles in 1958. Furillo played his entire 15-year career with the Dodgers in Brooklyn and Los Angeles, taking part in six World Series and finishing with a career batting average of .299, 192 home runs and 1,058 RBI. His best season was 1953, when he led the National League in batting with a .344 average despite missing the last few weeks of the season with a broken hand.

Furillo, known as the "Reading Rifle" for his throwing arm and his ability to play the tricky hops off the right-field fence at Ebbets Field, also batted over .300 in four other seasons and drove in 90 or more runs for the power-packed Dodgers five times.

SUPER BOWL XXIII

A case for Cincinnati

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

The Bengals just dance too well to fall flat now.

Did you see Ickey and the guys shuffling on the sidelines in the Jungle after Woods scored his touchdowns? Those were some of the best moves we've seen since, well, since the Bears' Super Bowl Shuffle. And Chicago rode that to the 1985 crown.

Any team that can move collectively like that off the field has to be creative on it, right? The Bengals are as creative as they come in the NFL — and not just as hoofers.

There's the no-huddle offense. Sure, it was limited somewhat in the AFC Championship by a late decision from Pete Rozelle to ensure the Bengals wouldn't go with quick snaps to draw penalties. But the device still is effective in setting tempo for the game and the Bengals might catch San Francisco — the pre-eminent situation substitution team — off-balance.

There's Coach Sam Wyche's penchant for new wrinkles. The fake punt against the Bills was just the latest in a repertoire that has included tackle-eligible passes to Anthony Munoz, end-arounds and reverses to Eddie Brown, even plays that call for quarterback Boomer Esiason to block.

Cincinnati is loaded on offense. Esiason was the league's MVP, Brown averaged 24 yards a catch, Woods and Brooks are superb runners and receivers, and nobody can match the offensive line.

What will be decisive for Cincinnati — and end the NFC's dominance of the Super Bowl in the 1980s, particularly the last four years, when NFC teams have won by the combined total of 165 points to 56 — is its suddenly resurgent defense. Those guys can dance, too, particularly over fallen receivers and ballcarriers.

The Bengals had no trouble shutting down Seattle and Buffalo. Granted, neither has the weapons the San Francisco offense presents. But the 49ers' line is vulnerable, particularly to big, blitzing safeties and Cincinnati has one of the best in David Fulcher.

Cincinnati also has the revenge factor. In 1981, the Bengals won their only previous AFC title. The 49ers beat them in the Super Bowl.

So, it's time for the Bengals to turn that around. They've turned everything else around this season.

"It's amazing what this team has accomplished in one year," Esiason said. "But it won't mean much if we don't finish it off."

They will.

Bengals 28-24

A case for San Francisco

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer

Talk all you want to about NFC dominance; about San Francisco's edge on defense; on the experience of the 49ers in big games (some of which, by the way, they've lost.)

But the reason they will win the Super Bowl comes down to one thing — more 49ers have spent the week enduring the sideshow: 20, compared to seven for the Bengals.

So Roger Craig will smile when the guy with the microphone tells him: "David Fulcher says he'll kick your butt, what do you say to that?" But Ickey Woods, who shuffles better than than he answers questions, may growl when the same guy tells him Jeff Fuller has said that about him.

And what will the Bengals do on picture day — the misnamed media session that also allows pencils and microphones at the players? That was the one at which another microphone spent the session last year telling players: "I talked to the Top Gun pilots and they all say they admire you. What do you think of them?"

So by the time the Bengals get at the 49ers, their brains will be muddled.

The game plan will be confused with visions of people asking, as one did last year: "If you were a tree what kind of tree would you be?" Just as Jerry Rice is making a move on Eric Thomas, Thomas will be thinking of the guy who asks the question asked every year: "What's the dumbest question you've been asked this week?"

"That one," Dan Marino replied in 1985.

In reality, the Bengals probably have as good a chance of beating the 49ers as any AFC team has had in the four years the NFC teams have won by an average score of 41-14. They have a balanced offense, an underrated defense and considerable confidence.

But the 49ers have the experience. They also have, in Michael Carter, the man who can disrupt Woods, James Brooks and Stanley Wilson and force Boomer Esiason to throw first and run second — the Bengals are better off the other way.

Moreover, the Cincinnati secondary is good. But it's also young. And without too much pass rush, it's hard to conceive of anyone there holding Rice to less than 100 yards and a touchdown or two.

The running game? Tim Krumrie is a good nose tackle, but the ends are undersized, the linebackers nothing special and Roger Craig should get enough room to gain 100 yards or so.

But the bottom line is surviving the hype.

The best way to do it might be to emulate silent Mark Bavaro, who two years ago was asked: "what's worse, this or the electric chair?"

A few minutes later, he was gone.

"It was picture day. They took my picture. I left," he said.

49ERS, 27-17.

Rain forecast

MIAMI (AP) — Fans are being advised to carry raincoats and light sweaters to Sunday's Super Bowl.

The National Weather Service forecasts a 70 percent chance of rain early Sunday with the threat tapering off by the 4 p.m. CST kickoff at Joe Robbie Stadium.

Overnight temperatures expected to dip into the lower 60s should rise to the low 70s before dropping to the upper 60s by the end of the game between the San Francisco 49ers and Cincinnati Bengals.

The forecast also calls for winds from southeast at 15-20 mph.

Poll: Fans like 49ers

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Just as they were in 1982, when they defeated the Cincinnati Bengals, 26-21, the San Francisco 49ers are the team the American public wants to see win the Super Bowl.

A New York Times-CBS News Poll of 1,533 adults, conducted Jan. 12 through 15, shows that 39 percent of the public want the 49ers to win, 20 percent prefer the Bengals and 41 percent have no rooting interest. In 1982, 38 percent wanted the 49ers to win and 22 percent wanted a Bengal victory.

In 1985, when the 49ers beat Miami, 31 percent wanted the Dolphins and 29 percent the 49ers. All the telephone polls had a margin of sampling error of plus or minus 3 percentage points.

San Francisco was also strongly backed by the 60 percent of the public who said they would watch today's game. In that group, 53 percent supported San Francisco, 31 percent backed Cincinnati and the rest had no preference.

The 49ers were preferred by all age groups, by men and women, whites and blacks and in all regions of the country. In the Midwest, however, they were only a 33 to 29 percent choice in the public generally.

But Midwesterners who said they would watch the game showed less regional pride; they backed San Francisco by 53 to 32 percent.

The poll also showed continuing support for the use of instant replays to help officials decide close calls. Among those who said they would watch the game, 69 percent wanted the rule kept and only 16 percent wanted the rule eliminated.

Unsung Heroes

By THOMAS GEORGE
New York Times News Service

MIAMI — Nearly all eyes will be on Joe Montana and Boomer Esiason, Ickey Woods and Roger Craig, Jerry Rice and Eddie Brown, the prime players in Super Bowl XXIII.

They are the favorites to win the most valuable player award of the game.

But here are five other candidates for the honor, unsung heroes a step away from the prize, listed with their jersey numbers in parentheses:

(82) JOHN TAYLOR, 49ers receiver and punt returner — "If I don't make a catch and we win, I'd be ecstatic," Taylor said. "If I don't touch the ball and we win, I'd be happy. But when and if I do get that ball, I'm going straight for the gold."

And that spells trouble for the Bengals.

Taylor returned a punt for 95 yards, longest in the league this season. He has all the moves and the acceleration to make big plays. His best athletic quality is his ability to start and stop again to avoid tackles. If the Bengals are too concerned with Rice, Taylor will burn them.

(33) DAVID FULCHER, Bengals safety — He is a former first baseman at Arizona State who wondered if baseball would be his pro career.

"I always liked the game, but football seemed more natural for me," Fulcher said. "I guess I liked hitting people more than hitting a ball." He grinned.

Fulcher attacks.

At 6 feet 3 and 228 pounds, he is huge by safety standards. He is determined and focused as a leader in the Bengals' secondary.

(49) JEFF FULLER, 49ers safety — "I remember back a few years ago when everybody in our starting secondary was All-Pro," Fuller said. "I was young and watching and learning and hoping that one day I'd get the chance to earn that kind of reputation and respect."

He has.

Fuller roams the field with ease and levels blows with passion. Ronnie Lott, the 49ers' veteran safety, said, "He is the type of impact player who can dominate a game."

(24) LEWIS BILLUPS, Bengals cornerback — Ask the Buffalo Bills about Billups. In their first game during the regular season, Billups picked up a fumble and ran for a first-quarter touchdown that set the tone for a Bengals victory. He seemingly is always around the ball — and knows how to get it.

"I've been having these dreams," Billups said. "I've been dreaming I return two interceptions for touchdowns and get two fumbles and we win. It's only a dream."

PROMISES

This has been a season of redemption for Montana, 32, who is in his 10th season, but the same applies to Boomer Esiason, 27, in his fifth season.

Esiason, a left-hander who likes to roll left, was in the eye of the players' strike last season when the Bengals finished 4-11. Esiason considered asking for a trade. In the Bengals' 21-13 playoff victory over the Seattle Seahawks and in their 21-10 AFC championship victory over the Buffalo Bills, Esiason tossed only one touchdown pass. He threw 28, however, during the season.

"If I had gone ahead and asked for a trade, I would have been the biggest chicken and it would have been my biggest mistake," said Esiason. "Now we're one win away from everything."

So much rests on his shoulders. He is the league's most valuable player and realizes how much he can elevate the play of his teammates with a stirring performance. His nickname isn't Boomer for nothing.

The rushing battle is the most crucial fight within the fight.

"Am I in a fight all the time?" asked Tim Krumrie, the Bengal nose tackle. "If there's a fight, I'm usually in it. The best part about it is that you can get down and get dirty. That's what it will take to stop Roger Craig."

That and gang tackling. Craig high-stepped his way to being named the NFC's most valuable player, and he is a big reason the 49ers rush for an average of 159 yards a game.

Watch Tom Rathman, the fullback, on critical short and long third-down plays and notice how the 49ers offensive linemen quickly get out in front of Craig on wide runs and position for blocks.

If anyone can shuffle the 49ers' defense and create havoc, Ickey Woods can. He is the Bengals fullback who runs behind the NFL's largest offensive line, led by Anthony Munoz, a 6-foot-6, 278-pound tackle. Woods has 18 rushing touchdowns. James Brooks provides speed on the outside, but his penchant for running inside and packing a punch will show.

When it comes to defense, the 49ers have an answer. There is Ronnie Lott, the savvy veteran who anchors the secondary, and Charles Haley, a robust 6-5, 230-pound linebacker who provides relentless pursuit. The 49ers have allowed only 17 points a game, only 96.3 rushing yards a game and have 48 sacks.

Tim McKyer, the 49ers' fleet cornerback whose nickname is the Blanket, as in blanket coverage, has done his part to make the game more heated. Among other things, McKyer said the 49ers should win in a blowout and that the 49ers simply have more execptional athletes, that they are a Mercedes and the Bengals are a Chevy.

"Sorry if I offended anyone, but I was only telling the truth," McKyer said.

Nearly everyone frowns at the Bengal defense. It gives up yardage (317.2 points a game) but not many points (19.6). Yet perhaps the most glaring question in this game is whether the Bengals have a championship-caliber defense.

"Our defense just can't get respect," said David Fulcher, the Bengals' husky safety. "A lot of people look at us and think of the past years, like in '87, when we lost to San Francisco on the last play of the game."

N.C. State's Valvano again put on defensive

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Jim Valvano said Saturday that allegations against himself and the North Carolina State basketball program were totally false and categorically denied the charges.

John Simonds Jr., a former Wolfpack basketball manager, said he was offered cars, cash and an apartment and accused the N.C. State program of numerous rules violations.

"There are three major allegations that have come out which are totally false," Valvano said in an interview on NBC.

"No. 1, that money went from the Wolfpack Club, our student aid association, which is a nonprofit organization, to me, to players. Millions, I think the word was. That's impossible, because that organization is audited two times a year, and, you know, it just can't happen.

"Second, that there was grade changing. In any university throughout the country, all students at most schools have that ability to change a grade. It is a proper procedure that one follows. Same is true at N.C. State. Any student can go through that, and it must have a signature by a professor, and by a dean or associate dean. I do not think we are going to discuss or question the integrity or honesty of our professors or our deans."

TRENCHES

But Billups has the ability and knack at his position to make them reality.

(95) MICHAEL CARTER, 49ers nose tackle — All of a sudden, this former Olympic medalist in the shotput is the best nose tackle in football.

Coaches are saying so. His peers agree. Carter, however, would rather remain in the shadows, in the trenches, where he can always be found.

"I'll let everybody else get the glory and I just want to keep working hard," Carter said. "I'm not one of the glamour guys, and I've always been quiet."

And always a player of tremendous impact.

MEETING PEOPLE

ATTRACTIVE grandmother who likes to dance, go to movies, dine out, travel, evenings at home, cooking out, and companionship. Would like to meet attractive male age 50 - 72 to go out with.(MP-101)

NEW to Midland, single, slim, stylishly attractive 49 year old lady with wit, warmth, sense of humor and busy career who enjoys a nice lifestyle, walks, movies, reading, sunset, theatre, dancing, fun people, sight seeing, traveling and would like to meet Mr. Terrific (MP-102)

HEY GUYS: Attractive, vivacious professional female in her early 40's desires to make new acquaintances. I'm fun - loving and have a variety of interests, but my job keeps me socially isolated. Fat pocket book not important, but good sense of humor, sincerity, intelligence, and warmth are. Let's see if we have any common interests. Would love to hear from you! (MP-103)

MALE, mid 30's, professional with graduate degree, loves traveling, music, tennis, and yard work. Too shy to meet women at bars and not extreme enough to meet women at church functions. Would like to meet someone bright, kind, tolerant, opinionated and attractive. Someone who would be comfortable at a ballet. Someone happy enough to be a good friend. (MP-104).

SINGLE white female, 30, no children, master's degree, professional. I drink, smoke, love reading (favorite authors: Larry McMurtry, Stephen King, John Irving), rodeo, C&W music/dancing, snow/water skiing, summer pool lounging, cowboys. Prefer well educated people with no children. I'm blond, 5'8", and 125 l

A Great Room

Every square foot in this week's featured home counts, including the great room which is used for entertaining, as well as day-to-day activities.

Text by JILL HANCOCK

Although this room is sometimes referred to as a great room, the main living area of this week's featured home is used for entertaining, as well as day-to-day activities. The room is attached to all the other areas in the home by a tile flooring where every square foot counts in the home.

As a visitor enters the foyer of this Trinity Estates' home - which also has four bedrooms, three baths and a paneled den - a mirror reflects the great room, as well as the uniquely shaped formal dining room.

A fireplace with a carved mantle is the focal point of this open, airy room. Bookcases and cabinets are situated on both sides. A wall of windows provide an excellent view of the backyard pool.

At the left end of the room, a walk-in wet bar is located.

The square-shaped formal dining room opens onto the entrance and the main living area. One of the reasons the current homeowners chose this home was due to the shape of this room which would accommodate an octagon shaped dining room table. This room is brightened by a large window during the day and a crystal chandelier at night.

Tile flooring, which divides the great room and the dining room, extends to the right of these rooms into the kitchen and breakfast room. This area of the home welcomes visitors and the arrangement of these rooms - along with a small alcove by the breakfast room - invites friends to gather in these rooms for coffee and a visit.

The breakfast room has a built-in server with cabinets above for storage of everyday pottery and glassware.

An alcove off this room could have many purposes, depending on a homeowner's needs. Two windows make the alcove bright enough as a studio for an artist or it could be used as a small office area. Currently, plants fill the room and many phone calls are made relaxing in an oversized rattan chair.

A breakfast bar divides the kitchen from the breakfast room. The appliances include a General Electric self-cleaning oven, a Jenn-air cooktop, a Compactall trash compactor and a GE dishwasher. A floor to ceiling window provides lots of sunshine, as well as neighbors passing by. The utility room is also adjacent to this area and is spacious enough for a sewing cabinet.

The sequestered master bedroom is situated towards the back of the home and to the right end of the great room. A glass door is found in the hall that provides access into the master bedroom and leads onto a covered patio and pool.

The master bedroom has a cathedral ceiling with a wall of windows thatfocus on the well-landscaped backyard. A door leads into the master bedroom which is divided into a "his" and "her" side. The ladies side has a marble vanity with a make-up area and mirrors above the marble tub reflect the delicate Oriental wallcovering. The gentleman's side has a built-in shower and a storage cabinets. The bath also has a walk-in closet.

One feature in the bath that would delight any couple are two doors which lead from each vanity area into a very private courtyard. The addition of a hot tub would be a perfect idea for the courtyard.

From the front entrance, the tile flooring provides a path which leads to a guest bath and two bedrooms. The guest bath has a marble vanity and a navy wallpaper with tan, silver and white highlights adorn the walls of the bath.

These two bedrooms are designed in the front part of the home and are well-suited for children. A bathroom, complete with a bathtub and decorated in a tan and cream wallpaper, connect these two rooms.

A short hall beside the wet bar and situated to the left end of the great room leads to a guest room and a paneled den. A full bath is located between these rooms.

The den has a wall of cabinets and bookshelves. This room includes a sitting area for watching television and space for a game table. An alcove at one end is perfect for a child to practice a piano piece. A door leads from this part of the home into the backyard. The rear entry, two car garage with automatic door openers is also situated off the den.

Just seven years old, this approximately 3,400 square foot home has a very functional floor plan and is being offered by Langston Realtors for $195,000.

The arrangement of the kitchen and breakfast room is very inviting to friends. An alcove filled with greenery is situated by the breakfast room, making it a wonderful place to make daily phone calls.

One reason the floor plan of this week's featured home appealed to the current homeowners was due to the square-shaped dining room, at right. The paneled den is ideal for watching television or playing card games, top. A piano is situated in the adjacent alcove. This attractive home, above, is located in Trinity Estates.

Langston Realtors Talk About...

Price, condition, and marketing "team" for selling your home

Q. I talked to agents from three different companies prior to putting my home on the market. Two showed me lots of statistics and said it should sell between $95,000 and $97,000 but the third believed he could get a contract for $115,000 because of my location and expensive decorating; naturally, I listed with the latter. It has been six months now, I have had few lookers, no contracts, and the listing has expired. What should I do?

Langston

A. Yours is a familiar story of an owner who "sells" his listing to the highest bidder, does not adjust the asking price when an unresponsive market indicates that it is too high or that something is wrong with the property, and ultimately wastes the most valuable marketing time-the first several months! I believe the three most important elements in selling a home are price, condition, and the marketing "team". Some advice on each:

Price: Insist that the Realtors provide you with a comprehensive brokers price opinion, one that includes detailed information on the sales of comparable properties as well as the current competition. Discuss the BPO in detail with the Realtor: has he seen the other properties and how do they compare to yours in amenities, style, saleability, condition, etc.? Listen to everything the Realtor tells you, not just to what you want to hear. Finally, if in doubt, order an appraisal. We always recommend this on homes for which there are few close comparable sales and on unique "one of a kind" properties. The assistance of a disinterested, extremely qualified third party is invaluable in getting the home on the market at the optimum figure, yet one that will not sacrifice saleability. Most important, be prepared to adjust your asking price if response from prospects and other Realtors or if changing market conditions indicate that this may be necessary. Insist on continuing feed back from your agent in each of these areas during the marketing period.

Finally, neither Realtors or appraisers are infallible. The emotions of a particular prospect may influence him to offer more for your home than all of the statistics in the world have indicated. Also, it is your home, your money and your decision. I always tell a seller "In my best, most informed opinion, this is what the statistics indicate your home should sell for.

However, I will aggressively market it at the figure you choose and will do everything I can to obtain that price for you "if" you will be aware that on sale we may face appraisal problems, if you will accept that prospective buyers may not consider or even look at the property because they feel it is overpriced, and if you will be receptive to an immediate reconsideration of listing price if experience and feed back indicate it is necessary."

Condition: This is the most difficult area of communication between Realtor and seller because every individual's standards of housekeeping/maintenance and preferences for decorating differ at least in some degree. However, experienced Realtors do know what appeals to the average buyer: light, bright, fresh smelling, shiny clean, uncluttered, consistently maintain properties.

Therefore, listen to your agent when he recommends closet cleaning, repainting the bright green living room, emptying the cat litter box more frequently, hiring a window cleaner, calling a plumber to replace the corroded kitchen faucet, having the carpets cleaned, bleaching the grout in the shower, etc., then take what he says and double it! Deferred maintenance is particularly detrimental to obtaining a good contract because if the potential purchaser sees obvious repairs that are needed, he usually feels there are many others that cannot be seen.

Marketing "Team": I believe this is made up of you, your Realtor and your Realtor's firm. Each has a weightly responsibility in marketing the home and there must be a great degree of cooperation between all elements. Listen to your Realtor and be sure he listens to you. Insist on frequent and comprehensive communication. Be sure he is getting the support of all other agents in his office (the more the better) is cooperating with the other members of the Multiple Listing Service and is extensively marketing your property to them as well as to prospective buyers, increasing your sales staff from one (your Realtor) to 40 (the size of our firm) to 250 (the approximate number of Realtors active in MLS). Cooperate on showings if possible, even if you've been given short notice, and keep your home in its optimum condition.

Your Realtor is well aware of your time constraints, that you and your family are daily living in the house, and will always try to be considerate of you. Happy selling!!

Beverly Bullen, Dana Chandler, Louise Culver, Joan Ramey and Betty Ford of The Carriage Company, Realtors recently received awards from the Midland Board of Realtors as Million Dollar producers.

Carriage Company associates honored for achievements by Midland board

By JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

The Carriage Company, Realtors was established in 1971 and during these 18 years years. Seven members of their dedicated staff recently received awards from the Midland Board of Realtors for 1988. Louise Culver, owner/broker of The Carriage Company received an award for a Million Dollar in sales and Four Million plus in listings.

A native West Texas, Culver has been professionally engaged in the Midland real estate market since 1964. During that time, she has been an active member of the MBR where she has served as president and was listed Realtor of the year in 1979. She has received multi-million dollar production awards each year.

Beverly Bullen has been a top producer for Carriage Company over the last few years. She was recognized by the MBR for over one million dollars in sales. Bullen is a energetic and professional in her approach to real estate. She began her real estate career nine years ago and is very challenged in assisting first time homebuyers because she likes exploring how a person can afford a home and the best way to finance that home.

Dana Chandler received an ward for over one million dollars in sales and listings. She has been a top producer with Carriage Company since joining the company. Chandler graduated from Sam Houston State University with a degree in business administration. In addition to serving on the membership committee for MBR, she is also a member of the Lee High School PTA board, Green Tree Tennis Association, Alpha Delta Pi Alumnae and First Presbyterian Church.

An associate of Carriage Company since 1976, Betty Ford has been a Million Dollar club member yearly and received an award for even two million dollars in listings. She has an enthusiasm for real estate that has lasted 24 years.

Ford has served on many committees for MBR and is also involved with the Texas Real Estate Political Action Committee which is involved in the promotion and preservation of the real estate profession.

Carol Friedel received her award in absentia. After selling over a million dollars, Friedel moved to El Paso with her husband, who was transferred with Montgomery Ward.

With a long list of honor and to her credit, Joan Ramey has over one million dollars in sales and listings for 1988. She has been president of the MBR for two terms and was named Realtor of the year, as well as being a top producer for many years.

Ramey has been involved in commercial real estate the past few years. Her first commercial transaction was selling the first piece of land in the Crestgate addition. She sold, and is currently managing the Woodhill Building which is a new challenge for her.

Billie Ruppe also received an award for over a million dollars in sales. She has been a winner in years past and is a true professional.

RE/MAX offers versatile corporate listing

By JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

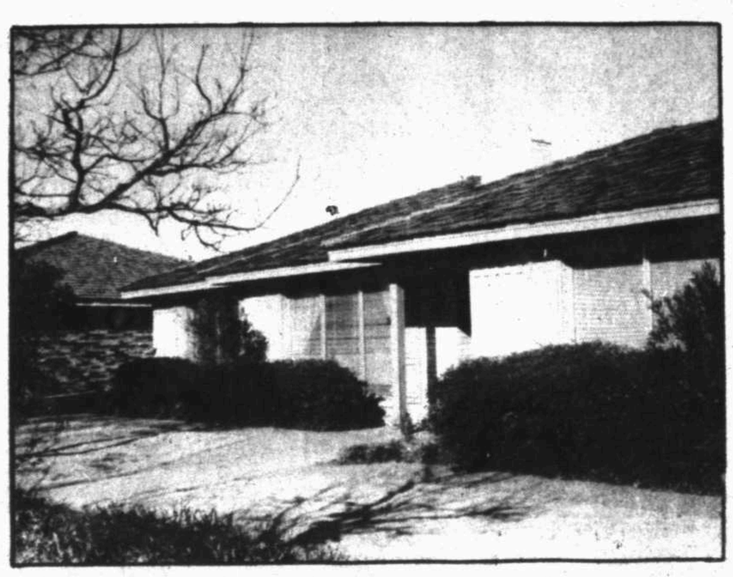
RE/MAX of Midland has a corporate listing in the Crestgate addition that features a very versatile and adaptable floor plan. The four bedroom, three bath home has a terraced yard with live oak trees.

A free standing dual fireplace separates the formal living and family room. The formal living room is situated to the left of the entrance. Although this room was designed as the formal living room, it could easily be used as a formal dining room.

A step from this room leads into an adjacent room that could be used as a formal dining room - it is off the kitchen - or as a home office, garden room or playroom. The arrangement of these two rooms is one of the reasons this home is so versatile.

The tile entry hall leads into the family room which is highlighted by a vaulted ceiling with skylights. Two cedar walls, a walk-in wet bar and a built-in entertainment cabinet are the other amenities of this room. A door leads from this room into the covered patio and the terraced backyard.

The kitchen and breakfast room are situated besides the family room and behind the original formal dining room. The kitchen features General Electric appliances that include a built-in microwave, self-cleaning oven, cooktop and dishwasher. The kitchen also has a Compactall trash compactor. A window seat highlights the breakfast room which adjoins the kitchen.



This home is located in the Crestgate addition and the exterior has a terraced yard.

The utility room has a counter for folding clothes, storage cabinets and a window that provides a view of the backyard. A two car garage with automatic door openers is also situated off the breakfast room.

To the right of the home's entrance, a powder room and four bedrooms are situated. Two of the bedrooms are ideal for children and have spacious closets. These rooms share an extra-wide hall bath that has a separate bathing area.

Another versatile feature of the home is found in the third bedroom. This room could be used as a bedroom, if needed, but doors open onto the master bedroom. A wall of cabinets and bookcases make this room ideal for a study.

The master bedroom has a door which provides a private access to the backyard. It also has a wonderful master bath with separate dressing/vanity areas that include storage cabinets and walk-in closets. A bathing area with a built-in in shower and a bathtub connect the two dressing areas.

The other amenities of this home include ceiling fans, mini-blinds, an alarm system and storage closets.

RE/MAX is offering this corporate listing for $117,250.

Larger homes are usually selected by transferees when moving up the ladder

When a corporation transfers an employee from one city to another, the employee usually interprets that as a step upward on the corporate ladder. "Otherwise," the reasoning might be, "I would have been left where I am, or replaced in the destination area by a local applicant. Relocation is just too costly unless the company has plans for me in the future."

Generally, this has been the attitude of a great many corporate transferees, according to research conducted by PHH Homequity, or Wilton, Connecticut, the nation's oldest and largest relocation management firm.

"Carry that thinking a step further," said Connie Powell, an associate of Don Harvey, Realtors in Midland, "and it logically leads to a feeling of great stature for the employee especially, as is frequently the case, when there is a promotion involved. The employee, now feels more important in the company and, therefore, will be more important in the community then he/she would have been before the promotion."

To herald this increased stature, a more expensive automobile or membership in a country club may be a logical course of action, the research shows. But the one most prevalent trend is to select a larger home.

"The average size of American homes has increased nearly 19 percent since 1972, said Ms. Powell. "The average size of a home in America was approximately 1,600 square feet. This increased to nearly 1,900 square feet last year."

Connie Powell

The number of bedrooms has remained about the same, according to Ms. Powell, a minimum of three, with a preference for four or more.

"Actually," said Ms. Powell, the additional space is going into larger kitchens and bathrooms and for larger family rooms.

"It seems that size, not price, is a more important consideration in the buying decision," Ms. Powell said, "because during that same period the price of single family homes has nearly tripled, and larger h. .ses cost more."

The research shows that in 1972, just over seven percent of new homes were 2,300 square feet or larger. Last year this figure jumped to nearly 19 percent.

"One of the most obvious ways to announce to the world that, I'm on my way up," said Powell, "is to let our homes do the talking for us. That is what we are seeing now.

Don Harvey, Realtors is a member of the Homequity Relocation Centers (HRC), as national network of some 300 independently owned real estate firms comprising more than 300 members whose 30,000 agents serve 325 leading market areas across America.

Industry produces first self-cleaning gas wall oven

Flexibility in kitchen design and planning, which has long been available to those who cook with electricity, is now available to people who prefer gas cooking.

The new gas oven fits the standard 27-inch electric wall oven cutout, and does not require outside venting.

This unit has two 3.3 cubic foot capacity oversized oven cavities and both have self clean features.

With each oven cavity operating independently, it is possible to bake or broil in both at the same time.

Where there's smoke ...

Text by LINDA ANDERSON

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Cigarette smoking may be hazardous to your health.

These words first appeared on cigarette packages in 1964, when a pack of cigarettes cost about 35 cents. Twenty-five years later, the warnings have become stronger and more graphic — listing possible health hazards such as emphysema, lung cancer and heart disease — and cigarettes cost about $1.50 a pack.

Other warnings listed on cigarette packages and in cigarette advertising include: SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Cigarette Smoke Contains Carbon Monoxide. And Smoking By Pregnant Women May Result in Fetal Injury, Premature Birth, And Low Birth Weight. And Smoking Causes Lung Cancer, Heart Disease, Emphysema, And May Complicate Pregnancy. And Quitting Smoking Now Greatly Reduces Serious Risks to Your Health.

But neither possible health hazards nor rising prices have stopped some smokers from lighting up.

In fact, according to information from the American Heart Association, currently, "there are more than 54 million smokers in the nation and, of those, more than 3 million are teenagers."

For those who choose to continue smoking, the cost of their choice is high, and not only to their pocket books. The AHA states, "Each year cigarette smoking contributes to the deaths of over 300,000 people in the United States."

But U.S. Surgeon General C. Everett Koop said the issue is even more deadly than that. Koop was quoted in USA Today as saying, "In 1985, cigarette smoking was responsible for approximately 390,000 deaths, more than one out of six deaths in the United States, or more than 1,000 deaths each day."

Lung cancer follows heart disease as leading smoking-related causes of death. According to Midland oncologist Dr. David A. Snyder, "There are probably 90,000 deaths from lung cancer each year (nationwide); about 90 percent of these deaths are preventable because 90 percent of the patients would not have gotten cancer if they hadn't smoked."

In May 1988, Koop issued a report stating that tobacco — like cocaine and heroin — is addictive. He recommended tobacco products carry warning labels about addiction; that vending machines be banned in order to stop children from using them; and tobacco sales be more tightly regulated through licensing.

According to a report in Time magazine, "The tobacco industry, as expected, blasted the Surgeon General's report. 'The claims that smokers are addicts defy common sense and contradict the fact that people quit smoking every day,' said Brennan Moran, a spokeswoman for the Tobacco Institute. 'The Surgeon General has mistaken the enemy,' declared Democratic Senator Terry Sanford of North Carolina. 'In comparing tobacco — a legitimate and legal substance — to insidious narcotics such as heroin and cocaine, he has directed friendly fire at American farmers and businessmen.'

"Koop's retort was devastating. 'I haven't mistaken the enemy,' he countered. 'My enemy kills 350,000 people a year.' "

WEST TEXANS are not immune to the threat of smoking-related disease. "Probably more people smoke here than in any other part of the country," because the image of the rugged "Marlboro Man" is still strong in this area, Snyder said.

"I think we are not atypical in that the incidents of all malignancies (throughout the country) has stayed (virtually) the same over the last 20 years, except two — cancer of the stomach has decreased ... and cancer of the lung has increased dramatically," he added.

Lung cancer is one of the most deadly forms of this disease. "I think roughly one-third of cancer deaths are related to cancer of the lung," Snyder said. "And of those patients who have cancer of the lung, only 10 percent will be cured."

Smoking can affect the health of non-smokers, too. AHA information states, "Studies have shown that children of smoking parents, especially infants, have more lung illnesses (bronchitis and pneumonia) than children of parents who do not smoke. Parents who smoke have a greater tendency to cough, which is more likely to spread germs and expose children to chest illnesses. ..."

Teenagers who smoke are more likely to have parents who smoke, the AHA said, and-or older brothers or sisters who smoke, and-or friends who smoke.

"It's easier and more acceptable for young people to smoke in their daily lives," Snyder said. "Schools have smoking areas. If a young person never starts smoking, he'll never have to worry about stopping. Most people who smoke began when they were teens."

Other illnesses and conditions linked to smoking include chronic lung disease; cancers of the oral cavity, esophagus, bladder, kidney, stomach, cervix and pancreas; stroke; and low birth weight in babies born to mothers who smoke.

AHA benefit planned

Heartbeat '89, the annual benefit of the American Heart Association and its Midland chapter, will be 7:30 p.m.-midnight Saturday at Midland Center.

Themed "Back to the Future," the event — "Enchantment Under the Sea" — will feature music by XKE of Austin.

Cost will be $75 per couple. For ticket information call Midland Chapter, AHA, 563-2008.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT- HARRISON

One of the prettiest parties of the season was the Victorian tea announcing the engagement of Paige Black to Leo Grumulaitis of Conroe. The party was given recently by Paige's mother, Sarilyn (Mrs. William R.) Black, and her sister, Amy, at their home in Saddle Club North.

The party rooms were decorated in pink, with flowers, balloons and replicas of carousel horses, festively bedecked with ribbon streamers. Harpist Andra Rodden provided the music.

The tea time refreshments included biscuits, crackers and a cheese mold, all heart-shaped; cheese straws, fresh strawberries to be dipped in either white or milk chocolate, fresh fruit skewers, assorted cookies and miniature desserts, along with mint punch and golden pecan coffee.

Assisting with the party were Frances (Mrs. Larry) Stapp and daughter, Brandy; Tammy Morris, Leslie Satterwhite and Moria Bell of Lubbock.

Among those dropping by were Jeannie (Mrs. Tom) Johnson and daughter, Hollen and Hilary; Charlene (Mrs. Douglas) Bunnell and daughters, Alyson and Ashley; Mary Margaret (Mrs. Fred) Byrom, Anita (Mrs. George) Patton, Marilyn (Mrs. Jim) Yates, Wally (Mrs. Jerry) Fullinwider, Sherry (Mrs. Jerry) Hewett, and Sue (Mrs. Jim) Brusenhan.

Paige also was honored recently with a luncheon given by Ann (Mrs. Jerry) Scott and daughters, Stephanie and Shelley, at their home.

The couple will be married May 20 in St. Ann's Catholic Church.

THE SPRING SEMESTER RUSH has resulted in seven new sorority pledges from Midland.

At Baylor University: Laura Weyman, daughter of Diana and Ed Weyman; Kappa Delta: Denise DuBose, daughter of Gloria and Willie DuBose; Kappa Kappa Gamma: Jenni and Shelley Davis, daughters of Polly and Ferrell Davis and Stacy Gould, daughter of Barbara and Carles Gibson.

At Southern Methodist University — Kappa Kappa Gamma: Degen Donnelly, daughter of Linnie and Art Donnelly; Pi Beta Phi: Keira Koziol, daughter of Shari and Bob Koziol.

THE HOME OF MAE and Ken Dawson was the setting last Sunday afternoon for a reception honoring Mae's parents, Rachel and Tommy White, on their 60th anniversary.

Guests included the honored couple's 10 brothers and sisters, their spouses and children; classmates from the Draw and O'Donnell schools, fellow members of Bellview Baptist Church, as well as other friends.

Peach and white were the featured colors in the decorations and included ribbon streamers, bows and balloons over the archways to party rooms. The serving table in the sunroom was adorned with an arrangement of carnations and a beautiful tiered cake.

The party was hosted by the couple's children and their spouses, Doris and Robert Williams of San Angelo, Kathy and Richard White, Trenna and Tommy White, Kay and James White and the Dawsons, all of Midland, and the following grandchildren, Linda and Jim Dawson of Oklahoma City, Kim and Johnny Bunsen, Carla and Max McLane and Lennah and Joe Dawson, all of Midland.

FERN AND HARVEY HOUSE Recently hosted an open house for the Fraternal Order of Eagles.

Honored guests were International Grand Worthy President Shorty Weber and his wife, Banna, of Niagara Falls, N.Y., who were here to tour High Sky Children's Ranch, which is supported by the Eagles, and to visit surrounding Eagle aerie homes in District IV. They were escorted by several state officers and their wives and Grand Worthy Junior Past President Bill Sims of Odessa.

In a candlelight setting, approximately 60 guests enjoyed a lavish buffet of hors d'oeuvres, desserts, punch and eggnog. Music was provided by "The Happy Three." Judy Whitt, daughter of the host couple, assisted with the party.

The evening closed with a dance at the Fraternal Order of Eagles Aerie Home #2982. The Silver Creek Band furnished the music.

COME ON OUT to the Midland Woman's Club this Friday for good country music and lunch or dinner. In lieu of their annual Mexican Fiesta, the members are holding "Country Kitchen Day."

The menu will include baked ham, country fried chicken, chicken fried steak, assorted vegetables, salads and relishes, with apple cobbler and bread pudding for dessert.

Lunch will be served from 11 a.m.-1 p.m., with entertainment by the Midland Senior Center's "Kitchenettes." Dinner hours are 6-7:30 p.m., with fiddlers and square dancers providing down-home entertainment.

The public is invited, and reservations are not necessary. However, ways and means chairman Dorothy Perkins suggests that parties of six or more call the clubhouse at 684-6811 to reserve a table.

Medicare Part B coverage to change

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

Although the existing law places no limit on the amount of costs sharing Medicare beneficiaries are liable for, the new Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act will place an annual limit on beneficiaries' out-of-pocket expenses for covered Part B services beginning Jan. 1, 1990.

Medicare Part B helps pay for necessary doctor services, outpatient hospital services, home health care and various medical services and supplies not covered by the hospital insurance part of Medicare. Enrollment in Part B is voluntary and enrollees pay a monthly premium.

Part B generally pays 80 percent of the reasonable charges for physician care and other medical services, after the deductible has been paid. With the new law, after an individual pays out-of-pocket Part B expenses in a calendar year — in an amount equal to Part B catastrophic limit for that year — Medicare pays 100 percent of the reasonable charges for additional covered Part B services, including physician's services, ambulatory surgical center services and dialysis services.

Under the new law, a beneficiary's share of approved charges for covered services and supplies will be limited to $1,370 a year. A beneficiary will pay the first $75 deductible of charges approved by Medicare and 20 percent of all approved charges after that until these expenses total $1,370.

Once the $1,380 amount is reached, Medicare will pay 100 percent of all other approved charges for the remainder of the calendar year. An approved charge is an amount Medicare has determined to be a reasonable price for physicians and other covered Medical services.

If a doctor or medical supplier charges more than Medicare's approved charge, the beneficiary will pay the difference, but this amount will not count toward the $1,370 limit. The beneficiary will be responsible for any charges over what Medicare allows, even after the $1,370 limit is reached.

Physicians and suppliers who don't charge more than the Medicare-approved amount for services and supplies are called participating physicians and suppliers. Their addresses are available at the Social Security office.

Also included in the 1990 Medicare law changes are:

- Respite Care Benefit: Pays for the temporary services of a home health aide to help an individual who normally helps a Medicare beneficiary requiring assistance with daily personal care (80 hours per year).
- Mammograhy: Pays up to $50 every other year for X-ray screening for the detection of breast cancer.
- New Prescription Drug Benefit: Medicare currently pays for prescription drugs for hospitalized beneficiaries. Beginning Jan. 1, 1990, the benefit will be expanded to help pay for certain antibiotics and other drugs that are injected into the veins and can be safely used at home. Coverage also will include immunosuppressive drugs used in the second year and thereafter following a Medicare-covered organ transplant.

For more information contact the Social Security office.

Steve Edwards is executive director of Community and Senior Services and the Visiting Nurse Service of Midland.

Midland-Odessa area featured in magazine article

From Staff Reports

The February issue of Southern Living magazine will feature the Midland-Odessa area in an article entitled "A Tale of Two Cities."

Midland/Odessa is described as, "almost flat and featureless. It isn't the sort of country that inspires instant love or awe the way a grandiose mountain or a windswept, pristine seashore might. But there is a beauty of open sky, vast spaces, and expansiveness that grows on one."

The article also states that, "Perhaps no other cities in the state epitomize the Texas image of cowboys, cattle, and oil better than these two cities that together have a quarter of a million people."

The two-page article mentions the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library, Museum of the Southwest, The Presidential Museum, the Globe of the Great Southwest and the Odessa Meteor Crater. The article also includes several color photographs of the area.

SMOKE

"Smoking cigarettes is a direct cause of cancer of the head and neck," including cancer of the larynx, throat and mouth, Snyder said. Usually these cancers are "clearly related with alcohol," he added, saying they occur more in smokers who also are drinkers.

Although cigarettes are the Number 1 tobacco health hazard, they are not the only ones. "Other forms of smoked tobacco (cigars, pipes) — if inhaled with the same frequency as cigarettes — have the same risk," Snyder said, although pipe smokers do face an increased risk of cancer of the tongue and lip.

Use of the so-called "smokeless" tobacco has it's own risks of cancer, he added.

Although cancer is a devastating disease, Snyder said, "as far as dollars and cents, the cost of health care is much higher for heart disease or chronic lung disease than it is for cancer."

Stopping the smoking habit is possible, although difficult. Snyder said that there are a number of stop-smoking programs available in the area.

Many smokers are concerned about possible weight gain if they stop, he said. When a smoker becomes a former smoker, food does taste better, Snyder said, but statistically, "weight gain for an adult discontinuing smoking is seven pounds," which is not a great amount and usually easily lost again.

When a smoker "kicks the habit," his body begins to heal itself, but, "the risk for cancer does not return toward normal for seven years," Snyder said. "After that time, his risk will gradually return toward normal, although he will never have the same low (cancer) risk as someone who never smoked. Cancer starts with one cell; it may take up to seven years for a cell to manifest into cancer.

"No one who smokes is going to come away unscathed," Snyder said.

Regular self-examination key to early detection of cancer

Associated Press

Regular self-examination is the key to early detection of testicular cancer, a disease that is usually curable if diagnosed in time, according to a physician at New York University Medical Center.

"Although cancers of the testes are relatively rare — accounting for about 1 percent of all cancers — they are among the most common tumors in men between the ages of 15 and 35," said Dr. Christina Walsh, instructor of medicine. "All men in this age group should perform a self-examination monthly."

Self-examination is particularly important for men who had an undescended or late-descended testicle because they are at greater than average risk for testicular cancer.

Early signs of testicular cancer include a swelling or lump in the testicle, and sometimes pain or a dull ache in the lower abdomen and groin area. If a hard mass is found in either testicle, a physician should be consulted promptly.

Because of individual variations, several examinations may be needed to ascertain what is normal for a particular person.

"More than 90 percent of men with testicular cancer can be cured if it is found in its early stages," the physician maintained, "although there is controversy about the best treatment approach."

In all cases, the diseased testicle is surgically removed. This may be the only treatment required. Chemotherapy is sometimes indicated, and lymph nodes in the pelvis and the back of the abdomen may be removed, since this is where the tumor is likeliest to spread.

"In the past, when these lymph nodes were removed, many men became infertile due to nerve damage," Walsh observed. "A recently developed surgical technique may leave patients fertile despite lymph-node removal."

While recurrence following chemotherapy is unlikely, men who have had cancer in one testicle are at higher risk for developing it in the other, and should have regular evaluations.

DEAR ABBY

Mom writes open letter to expectant daughter

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My 16-year-old daughter attends one of three public high schools in Sacramento specifically designed to serve the needs of expectant or new parents. There are 83 girls and two boys presently enrolled at her school.

Since many of these teen-age moms will continue to live at home, the principal of "Kelly's" school asked me to write something for their newspaper from a grandmother's point of view. I thought you might like to share the enclosed message with the rest of the nation, some of whom may be facing similar circumstaces. — A GRANDMOTHER AT 33

AN OPEN LETTER TO MY DAUGHTER:

Soon, my darling daughter, you are going to become a mother yourself and we will add another family member to our household. Now is the time to discuss some of the drastic changes about to take place in your lifestyle. Since you have chosen to remain at home, it is important that you have a clear understanding of what will be expected of you after the birth of your child.

You will be playing a dual role, and it may be difficult for you. On one hand, you will be my CHILD, my responsibility. You will be expected to honor the same rules and regulations as your brothers and sisters. This includes doing your chores, cleaning your room, honoring your curfew and being respectful to your parents. If you are disobedient or uncooperative, you will be disciplined in the usual manner.

On the other hand, however, you will be a MOTHER, and your child will be your responsibility alone. When he needs tending to, tend to him. This means that if you are gossiping on the phone with a friend and the baby begins to cry, you will have to hang up and take care of his needs. You cannot ignore his wails (it would be too nerve-wracking for the other family members), and you cannot pass the task to one of us (it's not our responsibility). "Get the baby, Mom — I'm on the phone" will not be tolerated. Also, don't expect a built-in baby sitter on a moment's notice.

In exchange, I promise to try not to interfere with your child-rearing decisions unless you are endangering the baby by neglect or abuse. If I slip and give some unsolicited advice, simply lift an eyebrow and give me "The Look," and I will shut up.

Now, don't panic. It's not that I won't help at all. Naturally, I will be thrilled with my new grandchild and will gladly spend countless hours with him (or her), but only when it's convenient for me, or pre-arranged, or an emergency. Also, I will answer any questions you may have, or show you how to do something when you ask for my assistance. And I won't mind baby-sitting if you ask ahead of time and I have made no plans. In other words, I will be there to help you, but from a distance. You are just one step away from adulthood, and now it is my job as your mother to step back and let you test your wings.

I love you, and I'm looking forward to watching you raise your child. I'll bet you will be a terrific mom! — YOUR LOVING MOM

Raging toilet seat battle has its ups and downs

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

About 25 years ago, I saw a Broadway musical about the Army where the hero was in charge of latrines. When his commanding officer visited one day to inspect his work, the private pressed his foot on a lever and every toilet seat popped up in snappy salute.

I remember jumping out of my seat yelling, "Bravo! Bravo!" My husband had to contain me. I was witnessing greatness and I knew it. Before my eyes was a scientific breakthrough whose time had come — a toilet seat that would go up only on command. The rest of the time it would be down where it belonged.

It has taken a full 25 years for a potato farmer in Maine to implement the idea. He and his wife were shopping one day in Quebec when she began playing around with a trash can that had a pedal attached that opened the lid. At that moment, the husband had a vision that would revolutionize marriages throughout the world — a 21st-century shuttle seat that you could launch and land at will. "My wife was real enthused with it," he said, "because there's always the battle about whether the toilet seat stays up or down."

That is the understatement of the century. (Do you realize that the only argument Donna Reed and Dr. Stone ever had was over the seat on the commode. I heard that someplace.) It's one of those little gnats that buzz around in a marriage — not important enough to squash, but important enough to take a swat at three or four times a day.

It's insensitivity in its rawest form. How would men like it if they got up in the middle of the night and groped their way down a dark hallway, only to fall down a dark, bottomless hole like Alice in Wonderland?

How would they like it if every time they stooped to pick a towel off the floor, the seat from the commode knocked them senseless? I remember when the women's movement was at its peak and everyone was screaming for unisex bathrooms. I warned, "You've gone too far, sisters. I've cleaned unisex bathrooms for more than 20 years, and I'm here to tell you it's a bad idea."

From birth, a boy child considers a toilet seat balancing in mid-air a natural position. Through conscientious conditioning, you can teach a male child to eat with a fork, say "Thank you," carry a nose tissue, wipe his feet at the door, button his coat in cold weather, brush his teeth, keep gum in his mouth, his feet on the floor and a civil tongue in his head, but you will never — never — get him to put a toilet seat down.

If our friend from Maine isn't on the cover of Time next December as Man of the Year, I'll be amazed. He built a prototype of his idea in his workshop, installed it on his own commode, and sees a bright future for the attachment.

I like to think it's what President George Bush meant when he asked for a kinder, gentler America. Today, the toilet seat! Tomorrow, the car seat pushed up to where it belongs!

Heart disease rate drops, researchers say

MONTEREY, Calif. (AP) — Heart disease remains the nation's biggest killer, taking a life every 32 seconds, but researchers have made "unbelievable" progress in taming the disease, according to the American Heart Association.

Figures released Sunday show that deaths from heart and blood vessel disease have dropped 24 percent during the past decade. Researchers attribute the improvement to healthier living habits and better treatment.

"The public ought to appreciate the progress that has been made in heart disease over the past 20 years," said Dr. Myron L. Weisfeldt, the association's president-elect.

"It's almost unbelievable. There is almost no form of heart disease that we can't approach without meaningful treatment."

However, Weisfeldt, a heart specialist at Johns Hopkins University, cautioned that much work remains in improving care and encouraging people to take better care of themselves.

"I believe we can prevent at least 50 percent of the ischemic heart disease in the United States by the year 2000 if we stop smoking, get cholesterol treated if it's above 220 and identify and treat hypertension," he said.

Ischemic heart disease is the clogging of blood vessels that feed the heart. It underlies most heart attacks, the single most lethal heart ailment.

The association said that in 1986, the most recent year for which there are statistics, an estimated 978,500 Americans died from heart attacks, strokes and other diseases of the heart and blood vessels. Cancer, the No. 2 killer, took 466,000 lives.

The association's latest figures show that more than one in four Americans suffers some form of cardiovascular disease, and almost half eventually die from it.

However, the figures also bear out the brightening outlook: Between 1976 and 1986, the death rate from all forms of cardiovascular disease fell 24 percent, including 28 percent for heart attacks and 40 percent for strokes.

"The good news is that we continue to see an improvement in the death rate from the biggest killer of our population," said Dr. Bernadine Healy of the Cleveland Clinic Foundation, the association's current president.

"Those trends are dramatic and don't seem to be reversing," she said. "The bad news is that heart disease is still killing almost 1 million Americans a year, and we've got a long way to go."

About 60 percent of the heart-attack deaths occur before the victim reaches the hospital. Studies show that about half of all heart attack victims wait more than two hours before getting to an emergency room.

Weisfeldt said a major goal is getting people to go to the hospital within three or four hours of the first sign of heart attacks. During this period, there is still time to give them drugs to dissolve the blood clots that are causing their heart attacks. This treatment can save lives and reduce disability.

Other major goals, he said, including finding ways to improve the effectiveness of angioplasty, which uses balloons to reopen clogged heart arteries, and finding surgical and medical techniques to identify and protect people at risk of cardiac arrest.

The association estimates that cardiovascular disease will cost $88.2 billion this year in medical expenses and lost wages. In 1986, it estimated the cost at $78.6 billion.

Among other statistics released by the association:

- The most common cardiovascular disease is high blood pressure, which affects 60 million Americans.
- About 200,000 of the deaths from cardiovascular disease each year occur in people under age 65.
- There were 1,418 heart transplants in 1987, almost nine times as many as in 1983.
- About 2.5 million Americans have angina, the chest pain resulting from clogged heart arteries. About 300,000 new cases occur annually.
- Up to 1.5 million Americans will have heart attacks this year.

Progress made in finding heart disease causes, cures

Associated Press

Research into the causes and cures of America's No. 1 killer, heart disease, is turning up some happy, helpful and hopeful news.

Better Homes and Gardens magazine offers the following current examples:

Those heart attack victims who bounce back the quickest seem to have a relatively low risk of suffering another attack. Researchers working at Stanford University studied male patients from the Kaiser Permanente medical centers in San Francisco.

Each of the patients had suffered a so-called "uncomplicated" heart attack. These were people with no signs of angina (pain upon exertion) or congestive heart failure (when the heart pumps poorly) three days after their heart attacks. Half of all heart attack victims at Kaiser Permanente fell into this category.

The patients' own doctors predicted 20 percent of them would have another heart attack within six months. In fact, only 3.5 percent had second heart attacks within that period. The report's author, Dr. Charles Dennis of Stanford, pointed out this risk isn't much greater than the risk for the average man in the same age range, about 1 percent.

A study of "professional walkers" (letter carriers) may hold the key to lowering the risk of heart disease. Dr. Timothy C. Cook of the University of Pittsburgh found positive results in carriers who walked an average of five miles a day.

These carriers had higher levels of the "good" (HDL) cholesterol than nonwalkers. HDL cholesterol helps keep fatty deposits from choking off arteries, and thereby lowers the risk of having a heart attack. Studies have shown that vigorous aerobic exercise, heart-pounding workouts, also raise HDL cholesterol levels. Milder forms of exercise, including walking, can produce similar results.

Millions of Americans are aiming for a blood cholesterol number of less than 200 milligrams per deciliter of blood. According to the American Heart Association, these efforts offer a 2-to-1 payoff.

Smoking poses special health risks for women

Associated Press

The number of women in the United States who smoke continues to increase, despite growing public recognition that smoking is a contributing factor in numerous serious health problems — reflected in an overall decline in the number of smokers. This is particularly disturbing in view of the special health risks smoking poses for women, according to physicians at New York University Medical Center.

"Among the most vulnerable group of women are those who are pregnant," said Dr. Charles Debrovner, associate clinical professor of obstetrics and gynecology.

"Pregnant women who smoke face a greater probability of giving birth to smaller, sicker babies than women who do not smoke and more of their babies will die shortly after birth."

An article in an upcoming issue of the center's Health Letter explains that nicotine constricts blood vessels, and so interferes with the supply of blood to the uterus and placenta. "A pregnant woman who suffers from a condition that already compromises blood flow, such as diabetes and toxemia, increases the risk to the health of her unborn child by smoking," Debrovner stated.

He also observed that studies have tied smoking to a decrease in fertility, although the reasons for this connection are not yet clear.

There is also an apparent correlation between smoking and the development of osteoporosis, noted Dr. Sandra Kammerman, associate professor of medicine. "Smoking lowers blood levels of estrogen, which contributes to reduced bone mass and increased risk of fracture. Smoking also reduces the effectiveness of estrogens prescribed to prevent or treat osteoporosis. While further studies are necessary, the contribution of smoking to osteoporosis is another reason for women not to smoke," Kammerman said.

Although the overall rate of death from heart attack has declined, a larger proportion of those deaths now occur in women. This fact seems to be directly related to the rising incidence of smoking among women over the past two decades.

"It is unquestionable that smoking is an important risk factor for heart disease," said Dr. Robin S. Freedberg, clinical instructor in medicine. "In premenopausal women, smoking appears to curtail sharply the protective effect that is associated with their hormonal makeup. The most important step a woman can take to modify heart attack risk factors is to stop smoking."

"Two types of cancer common in women — that of lung and breast — are causally related to smoking," said Dr. Howard Hochster, instructor of medicine. "There is no question in the mind of anyone in the medical profession that smoking causes lung cancer. There is also no question the incidence of lung cancer in women has increased over the past 15 years and is quickly becoming the major cancer, and major killer, of women in the United States."

KOLODZEY-RUWWE

Mr. and Mrs. Marcellous Kolodzey of Victoria announce the engagement of their daughter Lacy Dee of Austin to John William Ruwwe Jr. of Austin, son of Mr. and Mrs. John William Ruwwe Sr. of Midland. The wedding is planned for 2 p.m. April 1 at St. Mary's Catholic Church in Victoria.

Miss Kolodzey graduated from University of Texas at Austin in 1983, with a bachelor of science degree in advertising. She is a member of Alpha Delta Pi Alumni and is employed with Texas Thoroughbred Breeder's Association. Her fiance earned a bachelor of science degree in geology from Texas Christian University in 1984. He is a member of American Association of Petroleum Geologists, South Texas Geological Society and West Texas Geological Society. He is an independent geologist with Ruwco Oil.

Booklet gives advice about emphysema

Copley News Service

Nature provides us with six times the oxygen needed to survive on this planet, but for some people, emphysema has impaired their ability to utilize this vital element, making each breath a struggle for life.

Understanding Emphysema explains the physiology behind this disease and offers guidelines for preventing and coping with this affliction, which affects nearly 2.5 million Americans and their families.

This free, five-page booklet begins with a straightforward discussion of the respiratory system, identifying the major causes of emphysema, which include smoking, chronic bronchitis and genetics. A section on coping with emphysema offers concrete advice on what to do — and what not to do — if you or a family member is stricken with the disease.

As of today, there is no cure for emphysema. But armed with knowledge and professional help, you can understand and alleviate many symptoms.

For your booklet, send a postcard asking for "Understanding Emphysema" to The National Jewish Center for Immunology and Respiratory Medicine, 1400 Jackson St., Denver, Colo., 80206.

Radon gas may help in preventing cancer

Copley News Service

Radon gas may be getting a bum rap — instead of causing cancer, it may help prevent it.

A preliminary study by University of Pittsburgh physics Professor Bernard Cohen reveals that communities with higher levels of radon gas have fewer incidences of lung cancer.

And Cohen says his findings hold true even when you take into account factors like age, income and heavy smoking.

Cohen says his research certainly doesn't prove that radon gas is some sort of cure-all for cancer, because there could be some other unknown factor coloring his findings.

Smokers Anonymous helps addicts 'kick the habit'

New York Times News Service

ATLANTA — The night after the release of the latest Surgeon General's report on the dangers of smoking, three men sat down at a table in a classroom at Morningside Presbyterian Church. They were trying to regain control of their lives and, in all likelihood considering the Surgeon General's findings, trying to save their lives.

The newest member of the group was the last to arrive for the weekly Thursday night meeting of Smokers Anonymous (SA).

"Hi, I'm Keith," he said. "I'm a nicotine addict."

And still a user; he'd smoked on the drive over and finished a cigarette in the car before heading upstairs.

The others didn't admonish him. David and Pete know how tough it is to quit smoking. Besides, in the week since he'd joined SA, Keith had cut down from smoking four packs a day to two and a half.

And never mind that the previous week 10 people attended, perhaps the residue of New Year's resolutions.

"Like in AA (Alcoholics Anonymous), they say it takes two people to have a meeting," Keith said. "Two people and a coffeepot."

Three men and a coffeepot this time. They were:

David, 40, who started smoking at 19 because his girlfriend did.

"With the taste of her mouth, I thought it was better if I smoked, too."

He quickly graduated from Pall Malls to unfiltered Camels ("I figured if you're gonna smoke, hell, smoke. Be a man. If you're gonna die, die.") and smoked for 20 years. "I didn't ever want to stop smoking."

YET HE'D quit periodically, for 11 months, five months and "hundreds of times for three or four days." This time, it has been 11 months. He was prompted by the death of his mother, who died of a stroke he thinks was probably caused by smoking.

And also by the realization that, "I was beat up on all fronts. Cigarettes were hurting me. I couldn't quit — it's a real addiction. I didn't have much self-esteem. You're hurting yourself and others.

"I smoked till I was 39," said David, "and I hope that's it. But this time, I'm not trying to quit all by myself. And this time, I realize it's a real addiction, and I'm trying to stay centered and not pick up a cigarette."

Pete, 45, who started smoking at 18 as a rite of passage at a series of parties after high school graduation. He switched from Pall Malls to English Ovals and would buy four or five cartons at a time. "I liked 'em — I could smoke 'em and not cough."

Pete thought about quitting smoking for five years, but, "The reality of it is, it's a part of my life. A very big part — like air. And if I take it away, I'll die." Last year, though, he developed a cough. "And the boss sent me home from work. And I hate doctors. In September, I went a whole day without smoking. It was worse smoking than not smoking."

The night he finally quit smoking, Pete was at an AA meeting.

"I saw a guy celebrating 20 years off booze — with an oxygen bottle."

The man needed oxygen because he was a chronic smoker. Pete hasn't had a cigarette since, in 109 days.

Keith, 37, started smoking at 27 because his roommate smoked. Keith would bum cigarettes from him, buy a pack to repay him, then smoke some more. It escalated to four packs of Vantage daily.

KEITH NOW lives with his father, who does not smoke and wishes his son didn't, either. Though his father's feelings were a motivating factor, so was the hacking cough Keith recently developed.

Terrified him so that he is considering undergoing either hypnosis or acupuncture as a means of stopping smoking. "A friend of mine tried acupuncture, and he went from four packs a day to a half."

Last week, on the 25th anniversary of the first government smoking report, Surgeon General C. Everett Koop reported that in 1985, cigarette smoking was responsible for approximately 390,000 deaths — more than one of every six deaths in the United States, or more than 1,000 daily.

Pete hadn't seen the report. When he was handed a newspaper article about it, his eyes widened at the numbers. David, though, wasn't fazed.

"That (the report's findings) is entirely beside the point," said David. "I'm doing this because my reality says this (smoking) is not a sane thing for me, and I'm going for my sanity and spiritual sobriety.

Though Keith has yet to quit, Pete and David admitted they still have cravings for a cigarette. "But a craving is different from a thought," Pete said. "That means I'm still addicted to nicotine, that's all. So I just let 'em run their course."

Said David, "Somebody will walk through where I work with a cigarette, and it smells good or disgusting. I want to have one, or beat 'em over the head with it. I have to remember what it tasted like when I smoked that cigarette. It burned and tasted like hell."

WITH THAT, they passed a thatched basket, each man tossing in a couple of dollars toward the cost of more Smokers Anonymous pamphlets. Clasping hands, heads bowed, they all recited "The Lord's Prayer." And then the meeting adjourned, with David's plea: "Keep coming back."

Smoking is only one of many offensive office behaviors

By DAVID GRIMES
New York News Service

My company instituted a no-smoking policy the first of the year and I, for one, am all for it.

Smokers must now perform their dirty deed outside, rain or shine. No more puffing in the newsroom, the lavatories, the cafeteria or the office supplies locker.

If we catch someone lighting up inside the building, we are authorized to immediately hose the person down with one of our new, high-pressure, Smoke-Free Environment fire extinguishers, while simultaneously whomping the offender over the head with the entire 618-page text of the surgeon general's most recent antismoking report, titled, "I Can't Believe You're Still Smoking, You Disgusting Slimeball."

Up to this point, these scare tactics appear to have worked, which makes me wonder what other kinds of offensive behavior we can outlaw in our work places. I mean, why stop with smoking? Why not do the job right?

For starters, I would like to see a company policy forbidding burned microwave popcorn.

We have a vending machine that dispenses microwave popcorn, and every day, around 3 p.m., employees like to take a break from their job routines by cooking popcorn in the microwave until billowing clouds of semi-toxic scorch fumes have permeated the entire building, or it's time to go home, whichever comes first.

I know it's just the kind of pick-me-up I need to get through the afternoon.

I would also like to see some sort of extremely stern company policy dealing with the issue of overstuffed paper towel dispensers.

Our company has a highly conscientious maintenance staff, the kind of maintenance staff that feels it is not doing its job properly if there is not at least an 80-day supply of paper products in the bathrooms. Sometimes you have difficulty squeezing through the door, what with all the spare paper products lying around.

While this policy has obvious merits, a hydraulically pressurized paper towel dispenser is not one of them.

You can tell when the paper towel dispensers have just been filled: the floor is covered a foot deep with little fingernail-size snips of paper towel. You can dry your hands by snipping off approximately 498 dots of compacted paper towel or you can do what I do, which is grab a fresh roll of toilet paper in both hands and roll it around.

Another problem that deserves to be stomped flat by the jackboot of company policy is the problem of memos.

Memo abuse, which was bad to begin with, has now gotten totally out of hand, thanks to those little yellow pads of sticky paper. Managers love writing memos on these little slips of paper almost as much as they love attending meetings.

It does not matter whether the manager has anything to say. The important thing is that he send out at least one full pad of memos every day. The result is that employees are constantly having to interrupt their personal phone calls in order to figure out the meaning of memos that say things like "Splice Beaner by Tues.," "No sic. fed. acc. period!," or, my personal favorite, "????."

With the help of fresh, right-thinking company policies such as these, America will make a statement to the rest of the world that, when it comes to business, Japan is still No. 1.

'Anti-cancer' diet doesn't exist yet, researchers say

By SHIRLEY BRIGHT BOODY
Copley News Service

Is there a reliable "anti-cancer diet?"

Not yet, according to Maryce M. Jacobs, Ph.D., vice president for research at the American Institute For Cancer Research in Washington, D.C., at the recent 71st annual meeting of the American Dietetic Association in San Francisco.

While research continues to turn up new links between nutrition and cancer, a reliable anti-cancer diet doesn't exist and, in addition, most researchers strongly discourage people from taking diet supplements in the unsubstantiated belief that a vitamin or mineral will help them avoid cancer.

Jacobs emphasized the distance between laboratory results and specific recommendations for people. The limited and specific nature of much "anti-cancer" research is one distinction.

"For the most part," she said, "these are animal studies, not human ones. In a well-constructed animal study, you induce a tumor at one site to see whether, if you treat the animal at the same time with a dietary supplement, you get a reduction or delay in the development of a tumor.

"Now there is a whole body of people who study just how to translate animal results into human terms, but until you do the studies with humans, you don't really know," says Jacobs.

"Calling anything a 'protective' step against cancer is somewhat misleading, too. From evidence in animal and epidemiological studies, 'protection' against cancer really translates as 'reduced risk,'" she said.

The list of established connections continues to grow, however. Nitrosamines and other substances found in pickled and smoked foods have been found to trigger carcinogenesis, (the process where healthy cells become cancerous). High fat diets have repeatedly been associated with the development of prostate, colon and breast cancer.

In research that examined "preventative" properties, the increased consumption of fiber was found to discourage the development of colon cancer in several very specific ways. Vitamins A, C and E are substances that have shown some effect on various kinds of cancer. Selenium, a trace element, seems to fight breast, colon, liver and other cancers. Among the metals, zinc works against prostate cancer and copper against liver cancer.

So with these cause-and-effect relationships already known, why are the researchers so reluctant to encourage people to act on these findings?

"The research world turns very slowly, and certainly we don't want to put the public in jeopardy. Sometimes a report sounds sensational, and too many people follow early findings," says Jacobs.

"Doing so oversimplifies the complexity of modern living. In these studies, we tend to induce, only for a very short time, the need for certain substances.

"We study a single variable — say, the amount of vitamin C in the diet, so if there is an effect, it would have to be from that. This is not the way things work in the real world, where you have many variables," said Jacobs.

Since many people still want to reduce their risk of cancer as much as possible, what are the results of current research really telling us?

"Just what we've heard before," she says. "Eat more fiber including fruit, vegetables and grains, while reducing fat and alcohol in the diet."

The American Dietetic Association is the nation's largest group of nutrition professionals with 57,000 members dedicated to the promotion of optimal health and nutritional status of the population.

If you need diet and nutritional counseling, make sure you get a professionally trained registered dietitian.

Study: Lots of garlic, onions cut risk of stomach cancer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Garlic and onions can put a crimp in your social life, but they also could provide unexpected protection against cancer, according to a study published by the National Cancer Institute.

The study compared foods eaten by stomach cancer victims with the diet of healthy people in Linqu, China. Researchers found that the strong-smelling vegetables "can significantly reduce the risk of stomach cancer."

Published this week in the Journal of the National Cancer Institute, the study says researchers used questionnaires to compare the dietary habits of 685 patients with stomach cancer with those of 1,131 other people, matched by age, gender, occupation and education, who had no diagnosed cancer.

People in the control, or cancer-free, group each year consumed at least 25 and sometimes more than 50 pounds of allium vegetables, a genus which includes onions, garlic, leeks, chives, ramps and scallions.

The cancer patients generally ate less than 25 pounds of the vegetables.

The study also found that the risk of stomach cancer declined as the habitual consumption of such vegetables increased. In other words, the more onions and garlic you eat over a lifetime, the less your chances of stomach cancer.

"Persons in Linqu tended to be exposed to mild doses of allium vegetables over long periods, likely beginning in childhood," the study said. "Our study suggests that all or part of such exposure has resulted in a reduction in stomach cancer risk starting at an early age ... and continuing throughout life."

The anti-cancer effects of onion-like root vegetables have been suggested in studies dating back to the 1950s. A 1979 study, for instance, found a reduced amount of stomach cancer among residents of a Georgia county famous for growing vidalia onions. A study in Greece showed that gastric cancer patients usually ate fewer fresh vegetables, including onions, than those who were cancer-free.

"Several experimental studies have suggested that compounds in allium vegetables can protect against cancer in laboratory animals," the NCI Journal study said.

Lung cancer largely preventable

Associated Press

Lung cancer, the leading cause of cancer deaths, is a largely preventable disease, according to an oncologist at New York University Medical Center.

"The key to prevention is not to smoke and not to expose oneself to other people's smoking," said Dr. Ronald Blum, professor of medicine at the center and associate director of its Kaplan Cancer Center. "Although this has been said many times before, it has to be repeated constantly."

An article in an upcoming issue of the center's Health Letter reports that lung cancer accounts for about 70 deaths per 100,000 men annually in the United States and has recently exceeded breast cancer as the leading cause of cancer deaths in women, with about 45 deaths per 100,000 women annually.

There is a correlation between the number of cigarettes smoked and the probability of contracting lung cancer, Blum noted. "The risk goes up dramatically. Nonsmokers are at little or no risk. A person who smokes a pack a day runs 30 times the risk. And a two-pack-a-day smoker's relative risk is 60 times that of the nonsmoker."

Nonsmokers should also avoid passive smoking. Studies show the involuntary smoker is two to three times likelier to develop lung cancer than a person who is never or rarely exposed to cigarette smoke.

Quitting smoking reduces the chance of developing lung cancer. "It takes from 10 to 15 years for a former smoker to normalize the risk," Blum stated. Exposure to radon, asbestos, and some other natural and industrial substances also increases the risk of lung cancer, Blum added. "The disease is more common among smokers exposed to such substances."

There are two major types of lung cancer — small cell and non-small cell — with non-small cell accounting for 80 percent of cases. "Early detection is especially important in non-small-cell lung cancer, since surgery is the only hope for cure," the physician asserted. He advised smokers to seek evaluation promptly if they have a persistent cough, unexplained weight loss or cough up blood.

"Studies indicate that if the tumor is less than 5 centimeters in diameter and does not involve lymph nodes in the lung, the cure rate may be as high as 80 percent," he said. If a non-small-cell cancer has spread to the lymph nodes around the bronchial tubes or into the the core of the chest, the probability of cure drops to about 15 percent. Although new chemotherapeutic agents show promise, chemotherapy and radiation have as yet met with limited success.

In small-cell cancer, treatment depends on the extent of the disease. If it is limited to the chest, chemotherapy plus radiation is producing cure rates of about 20 percent. "However, the latest techniques and tactics are so new that we do not yet know what the long-term cure rates will be," Blum observed.

Research suggests carrots, pumpkins and sweet potatoes may help lower the risk of lung cancer because they contain beta-carotene, a precursor of vitamin A that may play a role in cancer inhibition. Vitamin E, found in nuts and grains, may also help reduce risk.

"While the concept of chemoprevention and the use of certain vitamins might be of some benefit, not smoking and avoiding passive smoke are so overwhelmingly major that the role of diet and vitamins in preventing lung cancer becomes trivial," Blum emphasized.

Dietary 'cures' hazardous to health

By JANE E. BRODY
New York Times News Service

A New York woman with an early and highly curable breast cancer refused surgery or any other conventional therapy.

Instead, she tried to cure herself with a macrobiotic diet of grains, beans, raw vegetables, seaweed, weak tea, fruits and seeds.

Within six months her tumor had spread and in two years she was dead.

A New Jersey teen-ager with a brain tumor too close to vital structures to be removed surgically is receiving the best, albeit limited, therapy modern medicine can offer.

At the same time, her parents have sought their own weapons in dietary changes.

The child has stopped eating meats and most sources of fats and instead stuffs herself with high-fiber grains, vegetables and fruits and takes daily megadose supplements of vitamins C and E, beta-carotene and selenium.

She is feeling better, has regained lost mobility and is excelling at school, although her parents say they don't know what has helped most: the radiation treatments, her fighting spirit or the dietary manipulation.

These are but two of thousands of cases in which nutrition is being abused or misused in the treatment of cancer.

Most of the widely touted dietary remedies for cancer are highly questionable and a few are potentially dangerous.

It is conceivable that a cancer-preventing diet, rich in fruits and vegetables and fiber and low in fat, could also help as an adjunct in treating the disease.

But there is little evidence at this point on the therapeutic potential of such a diet.

When faced with cancer, most people naturally want to stack the deck in their favor.

Since the mid-1700s, dietary strategies have been the primary weapons of cancer treatments offered by healers outside the medical establishment.

Early advocates used a variety of plant and herbal extracts, raw foods, vegetable and fruit juices and powdered animal organs to fight cancer.

In the 1920s a German-born physician named Max Gerson proposed a diet still popular today that restricted all foods other than fresh fruits and vegetables and oatmeal.

It also forbade the use of aluminum utensils, salt, spices and alcohol.

The Gerson regimen today involves "detoxification" with coffee enemas several times a day, drinking juices every hour, daily supplements of linseed and castor oils, potassium and iodine solutions, digestive enzymes, thyroid extract and injections of vitamin B-12.

Through the years, various dietary regimens have captured the attention of countless cancer patients and their families, many of whom spurned or abandoned scientifically established conventional therapy in favor of unproved remedies.

The two questionable nutritional therapies that have received the widest attention in recent years are laetrile, an extract from the pits of apricots and other fruits, and the macrobiotic diet.

In the last few years, megadoses of various vitamins and minerals have been added to the regimen.

Proponents of questionable dietary treatments often describe them as harmless stimulants of the body's natural ability to conquer cancer, in contrast to the immune-suppressing side-effects of many established treatments.

The diet therapies are supposed to "restore metabolic balance," "detoxify" the patient and defeat cancer the "natural" way.

It is natural to become panicky and feel out of control when faced with a life-threatening disease.

Surgery may be necessary, or the illness may require treatment with potent drugs and radiation that can make patients miserable and may not even produce a cure.

While legitimate physicians speak in terms of chances of success, proponents of cancer quackery promise certain cures, citing anecdotes of miraculous recoveries among those who followed their regimen.

FORECAST '89

Slight upturn seen for 1989

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

If the results of the Reporter-Telegram's annual survey of Permian Basin oil producers hold true, 1989 could be a repeat of 1988 with a slightly upward twist.

In a survey that included more than 45 major and independent oil producers in the Permian Basin, the Business/Oil department found hope for a slight upturn in 1989, because more operators are forecasting higher capital budgets and more wells drilled in 1989.

For instance, 22 producers said they would drill more wells, nine said they would drill less and 14 said they would drill the same amount. At the same time, 22 oil companies plan to increase capital budgets, while only seven will have lower budgets and 13 expect to spend about the same.

While these numbers are cause for optimism, they must be balanced with the fact that many of those cutting capital budgets and drilling programs are major oil companies such as Amoco. Amoco is wrapping up extensive infill drilling for secondary and tertiary projects.

Also few capital-intensive enhanced oil recovery projects are planned for 1989. Mobil expects to begin CO_2 injection at its East Mallet Unit in the Slaughter Field by midyear, but the overall division budget of $134 million is about flat with last year.

On balance, the indication is for an economic outlook with a slight upturn.

It is a condition that pretty much mirrors oil company perceptions of a slight recovery in the industry and assessments of their own financial health.

On the whole, more producers are upbeat about personal and industry fortunes than are downbeat. Also, more firms are feel they are better off today than a year ago, but there is still significant deterioration among the independents.

Only 13 operators thought the health of the domestic oil industry was improving, while 11 thought it was retreating and 18 said it was stagnant. As to the financial condition of their own companies, 16 executives said their companies became healthier in 1988; 16 said conditions remained the same and only nine said things were worse.

Gas resurgence brightens horizon

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

The most nearly unanimous note sounded by operators in the Midland Reporter-Telegram's annual survey is their bullish attitude toward gas prospects.

Almost to a man — or woman — operators agreed that natural gas holds greater "upside price potential" than oil in coming years.

As a result, gas-oriented prospects are demanding a larger share of producers' attention. At Unocal, for instance, gas prospects are expected to account for one-quarter of the company's drilling activity, compared to virtually no gas drilling in the last two to three years, said Central Region vice president Marty Miller.

"Natural gas holds a lot of promise and prices appear to be firming up for the long haul," said Alan McDaniel, Midland Division vice president for Texaco USA.

MAJORS

Most majors see flatness, declines

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

The major oil companies operating in the Permian Basin are taking a cautious approach to recent improvements in oil prices.

While increases in drilling projections could be in the cards if futures prices continue to flirt with the $20 mark, it's still too early for the Basin's biggest players to build their plans on that foundation, according to respondents in the Reporter-Telegram operators' survey.

The shelves of virtually every major in town are lined with potential tertiary recovery projects, put there when oil prices dropped three years ago and kept there by the wild fluctuations since.

Survey responses, Page 5F

Only Unocal, which is completing a CO_2 flood expansion in the Dollarhide Field; Chevron, which will spend $65 million completing phase one of its North Ward Estes Field CO_2 flood; and Mobil, which expects to make initial carbon dioxde injection at its East Mallet Unit in the Slaughter Field by the middle of the year, are planning tangible advances on EOR projects this year.

However, virtually every other company surveyed has completed or is working on front-end engineering studies to proceed with "as soon as higher prices will allow."

Conoco, for example, is continuing front-end studies on "four or five potential floods in the area," said division manager Mark Mosley. With further price improvements in '89 and beyond "we hope to move them to 'go status'."

Majors were active over the past year moving workers in and out of the region. Sun, Texaco, Arco and Unocal were among those adding to their local work forces, while Chevron, Mobil and Amoco all saw employees leave the region as a result of restructuring activities.

Fina, which acquired Tenneco's West Texas properties and employees also registered employment growth.

DRILLING

Drillers' outlook bleaker than in service sector

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

Status quo for producers in the age of fluctuating oil prices is difficult, but for oilfield service and drilling contractors barely able to cover rising cash expenses, another year of the same could prove too much to endure.

Drilling contractors face the prospect of "a really miserable first quarter," according to Dick Zartler, president of the International Association of Drilling Contractors, and president of Dallas-based Grace Drilling Co., the nation's largest land drilling contractor.

However, to reach the annual average of 750 domestic onshore rigs which the IADC has predicted for 1989, contractors are in store for "a much better fall than we think it will be at this point," Zartler told members of the Permian Basin chapter of the IADC at their monthly meeting Thursday.

The outlook is somewhat better for servicing contractors, who have predicted a 410-rig increase in the annual average count of workover rigs at work in the coming year. According to John Copeland, executive vice president of the Association of Oilwell Servicing Contractors, a survey by the AOSC's Business Analysis Committee resulted in a forecast of 3,750 working rigs for 1989, compared to an average of 3,340 rigs working last year.

Oil producers see Bush as asset

Many feel relief will be limited

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

For the first time in history a former oilman, a Texan and a Midlander is in the White House.

What will this mean to the oil industry? Can George Bush bring relief to an ailing industry? Will he? If so, what will Congress let him do?

The question of whether or not President George Bush would be an effective ally to the oil industry was posed to oil producers in the Permian Basin.

Most operators — 63 percent to be exact — are convinced that George Bush will make a positive difference for the oil industry. The remainder are not so sure he can or will make a difference.

Bush

"We were consultants for Zapata during his Zapata days," says Aaron Giebel, president of Giebel Petroleum Corp. "He understands the oil and gas industry. I have confidence he'll do what he can and feel he'll start with getting a higher depletion allowance and other tax relief"

Herb Williamson, senior vice president of Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co., is one who sees only limited relief: "I think he might bring some small relief in taxation with tax credits and a change in preference items, but we may have to take a gasoline tax to politically balance it out."

"I think he's a dang good guy to have there for the oil industry, but I don't think he can do all that much. Hopefully he can do more for independents through tax incentives such as intangible drilling costs and raising the depletion allowance, said Ron Holcomb, vice president of Adobe Resources Corp.

"I think he can help stabilize the industry."

However, some see Bush as an extension of Reagan's do-nothing energy policy and predict little relief for the oil industry.

Eight reasons for hope in the coming year

Pitts

In every act of suicide, experts tell us, there is the invariable element of hopelessness, in which an individual finds himself in an intolerable situation, sees no hope and chooses to die.

One can only hope that the current bout of prolonged hopelessness doesn't drive the domestic oil industry to that point of desperation.

Hope is the pivot on which economies turn. When there is no optimism, there is no upward movement.

When I wrote my column for the 1988 Forecast edition, I pointed out optimism would be the fuel that would pull the oil industry out of a depression and into recovery.

Unfortunately, not much optimism developed in 1988 as evidenced by low rig counts and declining production. But fortunately, there are a number of legitimate reasons to be optimistic in 1989:

First, every barrel of oil produced each month in the United States is purchased, and it is likely that in the foreseeable future every barrel that can be produced will be bought.

Second, the demand for oil continues to grow every year, not only in this country but in the Third World where new industries are emerging. With a solid two percent per year growth in consumption in America, demand for crude oil will be assured for many years.

Third, as demand grows, so do imports. Imports this year will reach 41 percent — a treacherous level that will bring the administration closer to a revision of energy policy for national security reasons. George Bush may not favor import fees or floor prices on petroleum, but what Sen. Lloyd Bentsen called the "peril point" of 50 percent is coming quickly upon us.

The seriousness of foreign dependence could soon dictate that Bush put America's love for cheap gasoline and his own anti-protectionist persuasion in the back seat, and provide a degree of protection for the domestic oil industry in the name of national security.

The simple truth is: America, the leader of the free world, simply cannot be excessively dependent upon its enemies and questionable friends for its prime energy source. That is a fact even the folks from Boston ought to understand.

Fourth, the oil industry has never been better off politically than it is now. A former Midlander and oilman is President of the United States. Midlander Jerry Langdon is FERC commissioner. The Speaker of the House and Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee are Texans, as are the Secretary of Defense, Secretary of Commerce and Secretary of State.

Fifth, the likelihood that new tax incentives for the energy industry will pass the legislature in 1989 is very strong. This year there are not a dozen congressmer from oil-producing states running around with their own bill to save the industry. The industry has finally gotten its head together and will support specific tax incentives as a united front.

While some feel tax incentives will not be enough to repair the domestic oil industry, it is at least a tourniquet, and that alone is reason for hope.

Sixth, the potential for natural gas grows daily, and the surplus bubble could burst even before we write the 1990 column on hope and optimism. Demand is increasing as markets expand and convert and environmental needs point to natural gas.

Texas Railroad Commissioner John Sharp is working diligently to open new markets in the Northeast and California where environmental concerns are strongest. Land Commissioner Garry Mauro is promoting the biggest market of all — natural gas as a transportation fuel.

Seventh, there is generally more positive than negative in this year's survey of operators. More capital budgets will be up than down, more operators will drill a greater number of wells, more operators have improved the financial condition of their company, and more are upbeat about the oil industry.

Eighth, the price of oil is up, and it could stay up for much of the year if members of OPEC refrain from cheating on production quotas. Gone is the Iran-Iraq war that had hampered any accord in the past. But the next few weeks will be the key to whether or not oil prices crash or remain stable for rest of the year.

Basin count plunges 17

From Staff Reports

After two stable weeks, the Permian Basin rig count plunged, while the U.S. tally posted its third sharp drop.

According to Baker Hughes, the U.S. total dropped 32 to stand at 840.

The Permian Basin rig count, after two weeks at 92, dropped 17 to stand at 75 this week.

Eddy County, N.M. was the most active county in the Basin this week with eight rigs. Lea County, N.M. was second with five rigs.

No county lost activity this week, and Runnels and Schleicher counties saw renewed activity.

Among major oil producing states, Oklahoma saw the steepest decline with 13 fewer rigs, followed by Louisiana, 11; Pennsylvania, eight; Ohio, seven; Colorado, six; and Wyoming, one.

California had the biggest gain with six additional rigs, followed by New Mexico, four; Michigan and Texas, two each; and Kansas one. North Dakota remained unchanged from last week.

Seismic count drops

The Society of Exploration Geophysicists reported that the number of seismic land crews and marine vessels searching for oil and gas in the U.S. and U.S. waters continued to fall. In December, the land crew total fell 13 to stand at 114, and the marine crew fell one for a net decrease of 14. The total of 141 represents a decrease of 9 percent from November.

Higher consumption

The American Petroleum Institute reported last week that total U.S. energy use rose to 80 quads, its highest level ever. The quad is a standard measure of energy consumption equal to a quadrillion British termal units. A Btu is the amount of heat required to raise the temperature of one pount of water by one degree Fahrenheit. The above graphic also indicates an upward trend in oil stocks, both the the Strategic Petroleum Reserve and other primary stocks.

TRC grants 14 permits for pipelines

From Staff Reports

AUSTIN — The Texas Railroad Commission approved 14 permits to operate new pipelines in Texas in December, up from the 12 granted in November.

Twelve of the new permits were for gathering pipelines, one was for a trunk transmission line and one for a distribution line.

Gathering lines bring oil and gas from production leases. Trunk lines are larger diameter lines into which smaller lines connect.

No permits were approved for the Midland area, District 8, but one was approved for the San Angelo area, District 7C, and Lubbock area, District 8A.

Pinnacle Natural Gas Co. of Midland was granted a gas gathering line permit for Cottle County.

Rockland Pipeline System, Houston, received a permit for a gas gathering line for Sutton, Schleicher and Crockett counties.

Commission levies $50,500 in well plugging penalties

From Staff Reports

AUSTIN — The Railroad Commission assessed a total of $50,500 in well plugging penalties to four oil and gas operators for problems under commission well plugging and pollution rules.

The largest of the penalties, $38,000, was assessed to Bowles Oil Co. of Corpus Christi for 19 inactive and unplugged wells on eight leases in Webb County.

Arnold Petroleum of Dallas was assessed an $11,000 penalty for several violations on a leae in Atascosa County. According to commission records, four wells on the lease have been inactive and unplugged for more than four years. In addition, commission field inspectors found unpermitted pits and oil and saltwater pollution on the surface of the lease.

Two operators agreed to pay penalties without admitting any violations of commission rules. Goodale, Bertman and Co. Inc. of Liberty paid a $1,000 penalty for two unplugged wells in Chambers County. Lamesa Pump-Jack Sales Co. paid a $500 penalty for one well in Gaines County.

Last year the Commission assessed over $951,000 in pollution and well plugging penalties.

Thor Energy completes acquisition

TYLER (SWN) — Thor Energy Resources, Inc. has consummated the previously announced acquisition of oil and gas properties located in East Texas from its majority shareholder for $3,509,000 payable pursuant to the terms of a seven year promissory note. The acquisition will increase the company's reserves by 360,000 barrels of oil and 2.6 billion cubic feet of gas.

In an unrelated transaction, the company consummated the purchase of 419,600 shares, or 6.6 percent of its outstanding shares, into Treasury Stock in a private transaction. This purchase was not made as part of an organized share repurchase program.

Sears chairman rises to new challenge

By DAVID DISHNEAU
AP Business Writer

CHICAGO — A cold late-afternoon rain whipped the dark surfaces of the looming Sears Tower while, inside, Edward A. Brennan rose to make a crucial sales pitch to a roomful of skeptical stock analysts.

The chairman of Sears, Roebuck and Co. had to be tired. He'd spent nearly two hours that morning outlining a major shift in Sears' retailing strategy to securities analysts in New York. Here he was back in Chicago, doing it again.

If Brennan was beat, he didn't show it. Looking poised and confident in a dark gray suit and red tie, he stood at the podium for 1½ hours and painted a bright, if blurry, picture of the new Sears store.

A "store of superstores." A cluster of "power centers." A lean competitor fit for battle with K mart, Wal-Mart and the electronics specialty chains.

He said Sears' planned switch to "everyday low pricing," a strategy unveiled a week earlier, on Halloween, was "designed to energize our company and move us forward from a position of leadership."

The proposed sale of the Sears Tower, Brennan said, signaled the company's commitment to "a low-cost mentality."

When it was over, many of the analysts remained unconvinced that Sears was on the right track — the one that would reverse a 4-year slide in its retailing market share and signal a return to steady profit growth.

Some were disappointed that Brennan had not offered a more detailed description of the Sears store he sees emerging.

One thing was clear: Sears' 54-year-old chairman had taken hold with both hands of the latest and perhaps the most crucial challenge facing the nation's largest retailer. History has shown that when Brennan tackles a Sears retailing problem, he ususally solves it.

Brennan has been called a retailing genius, and leading 103-year-old Sears into its second century has been called his destiny.

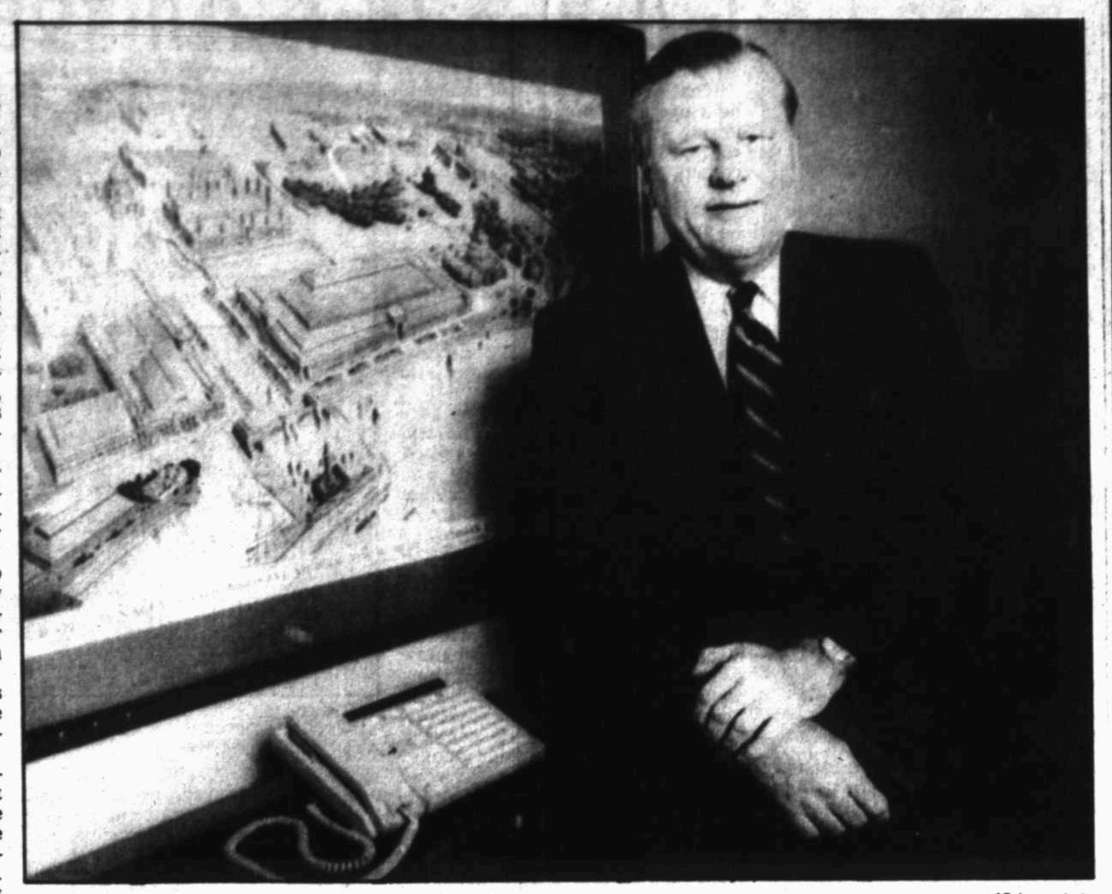
His 29-year climb from men's furnishings at a Sears store in Madison, Wis., to the chairman's office on the 68th floor of the Sears Tower — a rapid ascent by big-business standards — is the stuff of corporate legends.

The fact that he began his working life as a scrappy Irish kid from a broken home on Chicago's West Side makes his a classic, up-by-his-bootstraps American success story as well.

But it is Brennan's ties to Sears' past — his grandfather, father, mother and two uncles labored for the company — and his triumphant turnaround of its fortunes in the early 1980s as head of the merchandise group, that already have reserved for him a place in the Sears pantheon of heroes and saviors.

Such an honor is not easily won.

"Sears is his life," said Gene Harmon, retired head of public affairs for Sears who now lives in Albuquerque, N.M. "More than anyone I know, he's been completely involved in Sears. He pretty much lives his work."



AP Laserphoto

Edward A. Brennan, chairman of Sears Roebuck & Co., has outlined a major shift in the company's retailing strategy that is designed to return the company to steady profit growth.

Others have speculated that Brennan, Sears' chairman since October 1985, will work to death. But in a recent interview in a Sears Tower conference room overlooking Chicago's sprawling West Side, he was relaxed and congenial.

"The Lord has blessed me with pretty good energy and we usually go at it pretty strong," Brennan said with a grin that cracked an eye-level crease across his broad face.

Brennan's amiable air cooled when asked whether Sears — the originator of mail-order sales and one of the first retailers to offer credit to shoppers — had become a follower in its decision to embrace everyday low pricing.

The strategy, pioneered by discount chains, was recently adopted by Montgomery Ward & Co., also based in Chicago and run by Brennan's younger brother, Bernard.

"One could say why not two, three, four years ago," Brennan said. "Obviously, we think this is the time to make the change and we are doing it."

Everday low pricing means carrying many national brands and offering them regularly at low prices, often with few salespeople. The shift marks a sharp turn in direction for Sears, which built its business on store brands such as Kenmore, Craftsman and DieHard, with frequent, heavily advertised sales on selected models.

Brennan acknowledged that the switch, which will be implemented this year, represent "a major change for us." But he said it posed a different challenge than the "Store of the Future" changeover he engineered in the early 1980s.

"It's not as major a change as that because it doesn't involve physical remodeling of stores and it will take place in a more concentrated period of time," he said. "This is much less of a physical challenge than the Store of the Future. It's more of a marketing challenge."

But, Brennan said, "it's important to note that you are never at the point where it's done.

"When we get to the point where everyday low pricing is implemented, we still will be changing and growing. That's one of the things that makes retailing so exciting: you're never there."

Sears is more than a retailer of merchandise. It's financial businesses — Allstate Insurance, Dean Witter Financial Services, and Coldwell Banker Real Estate — brought in 42 percent of the company's $48.44 billion in revenues in 1987.

Brennan is comfortable with the financial-services businesses, but he grew passionate while discussing what he called "the lure, the magic of retailing."

"There's a very specific challenge that you can see, feel touch and smell," he said. "And when you address that challenge, you can see the results very quickly and you get a real feeling of satisfaction from that."

On a larger scale, Brennan hopes to increase job satisfaction among employees of the Sears Merchandise Group by moving the 8,000-person division out of the Sears Tower and into more horizontal surroundings. The company has not yet decided whether to keep the division's headquarters in the Chicago area.

"When you are housed in a vertical structure, you have less people interaction than when you are in a low-rise, campus-type environment," he said. "You have a more cohesive organization when there's more people interaction."

Brennan, a golf and tennis player in his leisure time, called running Sears "a very stimulating, challenging, engrossing experience" but said he occasionally toys with teaching at a graduate business school.

Brennan and his wife Lois, the childhood sweetheart he married in 1955, have raised six children and some work for other retailers. Brennan said he's never pushed them to join Sears.

"I think it puts pressure on members of a family to work in a company where the father is in a high position," he said. Besides, "it's not my decision. I think they're very happy doing what they're doing."

The Camaro, made by General Motors Corp.'s Chevrolet Division, was the most-stolen car last year, according to a list compiled by an automobile valuation service in Chicago.

Thieves picked GM cars as their 22 most-popular targets, according to the list released Wednesday by CCC Information Services Inc., a business used by insurance companies to determine the value of a stolen car.

The 1986 Chevrolet Camaro topped the CCC list of stolen cars for the second consecutive year. This year's list, based on 1988 car thefts, has the '87 Camaro as No. 2; the '84 Camaro following that, and the '85 Camaro as No. 4.

Fiero fires subject of new NHTSA safety probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration says it will investigate reports of fires in the engine compartments of 1985 and 1986 Pontiac Fiero cars.

The preliminary evaluation, the lowest level of investigation by the safety agency, follows the recall in 1987 of 125,000 Fieros from the 1984 model year after similar fire reports.

The latest investigation involves about 147,000 Fieros and was ordered after the agency received 16 unconfirmed complaints of fires. One of the complaints said the fire resulted in an injury, NHTSA said.

General Motors Corp., which makes the Fiero, said it was reviewing the allegations in preparing its response to NHTSA. GM spokesman John Anderson said, as is usual in such cases, that the opening of an inquiry doesn't necessarily mean there is a defect.

NHTSA also opened six other low-level investigations into safety allegations involving cars, vans and light trucks made by major U.S. manufacturers.

The preliminary evaluations focused on unconfirmed reports of:

- Steering-linkage lockup causing a loss of control in 35,000 1988 GM Chevrolet Blazer and Jimmy K5 vehicles. NHTSA reported five complaints with one accident reported.

JOBLESS BENEFITS

From Staff Reports

The U.S. Department of Labor has begun approving petitions from oil and gas-related companies applying for expanded employment benefits under the Trade Adjustment Assistance section of the 1974 Trade Act.

Certification allows all company workers laid off due to a lack of work to apply for enhanced unemployment assistance including: weekly trade adjustment allowances, job placement; employment counseling; vocational training; and financial assistance for retraining, job search and job relocation.

According to the Texas Employment Commission, petitions have been approved for workers separated from the following companies during the specified period:

- Geosource Inc., Houston & Midland locations, petition No. 21184; since Oct. 1, 1985.
- BJ Titan Service, West Texas region locations, pettition No. 21160B; since Oct. 1, 1985.

Affected workers should contact Gay Honneywell at the Midland TEC office, 915/682-9421.

Retail association's new leaders hope to heal rift

By ISADORE BARMASH
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — After a four-day convention marked by opposition between large retail members and small ones, the directors of the National Retail Merchants Association moved to smooth things over last week by appointing a small-store merchant as its new chairman and a big-store chief executive as first vice chairman.

Harwell Proffitt, executive committee chairman of Proffitt's Department Store, Alcoa, Tenn., was elected chairman of the association, and William R. Howell, chairman and chief executive of the J.C. Penney Co., Dallas, was named first vice chairman. Proffitt's operates 10 stores, while Penney's has more than 1,700.

Proffitt succeeds Edward S. Finkelstein, chairman and chief executive of the R.H. Macy Co., who abruptly resigned last week as the association's chairman. The new chairman said he will serve in an interim capacity for one year. Howell would then be in line to be named chairman.

Joseph E. Antonini, chairman and chief executive of the K mart Corp., was named second vice chairman.

The issue that created disagreement between the two groups of retailers was a long-proposed merger between the association and the American Retail Federation, a lobbying organization consisting of various retail trade associations, including the NRMA.

Some smaller retailers oppose the consolidation, fearing that the merger would cause them to have a diminished voice.

Finkelstein said he resigned because the association needed a chairman who could devote more time to the merger question and to finding a successor to James R. Williams, the association's president and top staff executive.

At the association's convention in New York, its directors appointed committees to look into both a possible merger of the two trade groups and a transition in the association's operating management.

TRC commissioners see hope for Texas oil industry in 1989

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Texas Railroad Commissioner KENT HANCE views the month of January and verification of OPEC production quotas as critical to the outlook for the rest of the year.

He said it will all depend on how much the United Arab Emirates are cheating on their production quota of 987,000 barrels per day, noting that members within OPEC are concerned about the violation.

Said Hance: "If the UAE is producing 1.2-1.3 million barrels per day, nothing will probably happen and oil prices will rock along for the rest of the year between $17.50 and $20 per barrel with brief fluctuations out of that range one way or another. But if they are producing 1.4 million or more, the Saudis will probably pull the plug again and oil prices will tumble back to $12 and $13 a barrel."

Hance also thinks we will move closer this year to busting the gas bubble. "Gas prices will go up. We would have already had higher prices this year with a severe winter," said Hance.

JIM NUGENT, chairman of the commission, is optimistic the domestic oil and gas industry will see a gradual recovery during 1989, especially in the natural gas area.

He predicted natural gas prices will continue to rise, with some retreat during the spring. "But they won't fall to the same levels they did last year," he forecast.

As for crude prices, he pointed out that they are still controlled in the Middle East and the U.S. has no control over their levels. He expressed hope prices would stabilize around $18 a barrel, which would let some operators increase drilling activity.

"Stability is more important than price. Price is very important, but stability lets the operator calculate his costs and returns so he can attract investment dollars."

He believes Texas oil and gas operators can expect some relief from the Texas Legislature. "Hopefully there will be some tax relief on stripper wells," he said.

However, he hinted legislation coming out of Congress on Washington D.C. could be another question. Addressing President Bush's effectiveness in helping the domestic industry, he said, "I think if Bush were to take a flat-footed position (to help the industry), I think Congress would act."

This is likely to be the year when we finally see complete decontrol of natural gas at the federal level, said Commissioner JOHN SHARP.

"It is becoming increasingly clear everywhere that regulation of gas prices is a mistake, a total calamity as a result of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978," said Sharp, whose travels in the past year took him from coast to coast preaching the virtues of Texas natural gas and the evils of controlled gas prices.

Even consumer groups in New England, "when they looked at the facts of the situation, quickly admitted, 'You're right!'," Sharp said.

Sharp said one of the most encouraging developments for deregulation backers is that U.S. Rep. Philip Sharp, D-Indiana, ("No relation that I know of, Commissioner Sharp said.) once an adamant opponent of deregulation, has authored his own bill to remove the final vestiges of "old gas" price regulation.

Not only is Rep. Sharp a former adversary of deregulation, he also chairs the Energy & Power Subcommittee of the House Energy & Commerce Committee, which must act on the legislation, if it is to happen.

The TRC's Sharp pins many of his hopes for the future of the industry on gas because "oil is always going to be as uncertain as the Arab nations who produce it," he said.

Another important issue for the Texas industry in the coming year will be the fate of a bill pending before the State Legislature.

The bill, House Bill 428 filed this week by Rep. Rick Perry, D-Haskell, would provide a 50 percent severance tax exemption for oil produced from new enhanced recovery projects for a period of 10 years.

Sharp helped develop the bill aimed at providing the incentives necessary to go after remaining reserves of "harder-to-get" Texas crude.

Although the incentive program could cost the state some tax revenues in the early years, EOR projects are typically long-range, from 20 to 30 years.

"After 10 years, production from these projects would be taxed at the normal rate," Sharp explained. "Over the life of the projects, substantially more will be paid back than is lost thought the 50 percent reduction."

Only oil — not casinghead gas — would be covered by the 50 percent exemption.

More than 75,000 oil reservoirs have been discovered in the state, but only a few thousand have benefited from secondary recovery technology. "Yet experts estimate more than half of the 1.9 million barrels of oil produced in the state daily comes from fields where enhanced recovery is underway," Sharp said.

"Everybody has the opportunity to win with Perry's bill.

"Industry gets a 50 percent tax reduction on this new oil; the state receives taxes on oil that otherwise would not be produced; and the Texas economy receives the benefit of the additional funds."

INDEPENDENTS PLANS

Independents tell 1989 plans

What activity levels will independent operators pursue in 1989? Following is a sampling of operators surveyed and their plans for the coming year:

ADOBE RESOURCES INC: Adobe Resources plans virtually no increase in activity during 1989, Adobe Vice President Ron Holcomb says. Last year, the firm drilled 50 development and 15 exploratory wells, and plans to drill approximately the same number this year. The company will have about the same capital budget this year.

"The majority of our budget goes to activity in South Louisiana and offshore activity," Holcomb pointed out. Four enhanced recovery projects are slated, three in the Permian Basin and one in North Texas.

AMERICAN TRADING & PRODUCTION CO.: For Atapco, 1989 activity will mirror 1988, according to Art Wilson, district manager. Wilson said the company plans to drill 37 development wells — mostly shallow depths — and three exploratory wells. In 1988, the company drilled 39 development wells and one explorer.

No enhanced recovery projects are planned, and the capital budget for 1989 is virtually the same as 1988's.

BHP PETROLEUM (AMERICAS) INC.: Though BHP's drilling plans for 1989 are virtually the same as 1988, the company's capital budget will be substantially higher. Lee McLean, division manager, said his company's capital budget for 1989 is 300 percent higher than last year.

The company plans to drill 14 development wells and four exploratory wells, compared to the 16 development wells and one explorer in 1988. No enhanced recovery projects are planned.

BANNER ENERGY INC.: Banner is taking a "wait-and-see" attitude so far in 1989, according to P.D. Sams, chairman. There are no definite drilling plans as yet, but the capital budget will be higher 1988, Sams said.

CAL-MON OIL CO.: Plans for 1989 will depend on the company's cash flow, says Bob Monaghan, president.

However, current plans are to drill six development wells and one explorer in 1989, down from the 18 developers and two unsuccessful explorers drilled in 1988. A stronger cash flow, however, could result in more wells.

CHISOS OPERATING INC.: Chisos will be a little more active in 1989. President Buddy Sipes says his company will drill three to four exploratory wells this year, compared to no drilling activity last year.

No enhanced recovery projects are currently planned, and Sipes intends to hold the line on his 1989 capital budget.

ESTORIL PRODUCING CORP.: A little more exploration is in store for this company in 1989, according to Freddie Allison, president. Approximately 30 wells are planned for this year, 10 of which should be explorers. This compares to 20 development wells and four exploratory wells drilled last year.

Estoril plans three enhanced recovery projects in Oklahoma, with a possible fourth for Texas. This year's capital budget is approximately 10 percent higher than last year.

GIEBEL PETROLEUM LTD.: No real changes are in store, according to President Aaron Giebel. He hopes to drill six development wells and three explorers, the same as in 1988, on a budget that's about equal to last year's.

BILL J. GRAHAM OIL & GAS: Drilling activity for Graham should double this year. Company president Bill Graham says four development wells are being planned for this year, up from a single development well and one explorer drilled last year.

The company's capital budget for 1989 is about 20 percent higher than last year.

GRAND BANKS ENERGY CO.: Grand Banks has a capital budget five times that for 1988 to operate with this year, according to John Kimberley, Grand Banks' president.

As a result, the company plans a drilling program almost triple last year's. Between 20 and 40 wells are planned for 1989, 15 to 30 of which will be development, and 5 to 10 of which will be explorers. This compares to last year's eight development and two exploratory wells drilled.

No new enhanced recovery projects are planned, though Kimberley says some existing projects will be upgraded.

GREAT WESTERN DRILLING CO.: With a 25 percent hike in its drilling budget this year, Great Western plans to drill six to seven development wells, and as many explorers. Last year the company drilled three or four development wells and as many explorers, according to Curtiss Mahaney, general superintendent.

Great Western doesn't plan to operate any enhanced recovery projects, but Mahaney said the company will pariticipate in two or three this year.

HMH OPERATORS: HMH's plans depend on the investment capital it can attract, says Bob Morris, a partner in the firm. Currently the company is trying to develop a well that is part development, part explorer. Last year HMH drilled one exploratory well.

HANSON CORP.: Bernold Hanson, president, says he is still raising capital for 1989. However, current plans call for six wells, evenly divided between development and exploration. Last year his company drilled only two development wells.

"There's lots of opportunities if we can just raise the capital," he says.

HENRY PETROLEUM CORP.: For Jim Henry, president and owner of Henry Petroleum, activity in 1989 will be close to 1988 levels. He plans to drill 12 development wells and three exploratory wells, comparable to the 12 development and two explorers drilled last year.

No new enhanced recovery projects are planned, though one is ongoing. He added that his capital budget this year is the same as last year's.

HILLIN-SIMON OIL CO.: Hillin-Simon plans more drilling ventures this year than last, according to Kurt Finkbeiner, operations manager. He adds that the number of wells depends on the amount of investment capital the company can attract, and the success of its drilling ventures.

Plans are for 20-25 wells to be drilled, up from the eight development and two exploratory wells drilled in 1988. The company's capital budget is higher than last year; the amount will depend on how firm oil prices remain, Finkbeiner said.

IP PETROLEUM CO. INC.: "The good news is we didn't cut our budget," notes Clay Sullivan, drilling and production manager. This year's capital budget is the same as last year's, allowing the company drill a similar number of wells. Between 50 and 60 are planned, compared to the 59 development and three exploratory wells drilled last year. "Any number of wells above 50 will be exploratory," Sullivan says.

C.F. LAWRENCE & ASSOCIATES: A little more activity is planned this year, says C.F. Lawrence, president of the company. Between 20 and 24 wells are planned for this year, two of which will be explorers. Last year the company drilled 15 development wells and one wildcat.

The capital budget is "cautiously" higher, Lawrence says, estimating it is 15 percent above last year. He added that the company's activity is in secondary recovery areas, primarily in Pecos, Crockett, Irion and Tom Green counties.

MAGNATEX PETROLEUM CORP.: Magnatex plans to drill one well in 1989, which is one more than it drilled in 1988. Capital budgets are predicted to run 10-20 percent higher for the year, and no EOR projects are in the works.

MAYHEW EXPLORATION & DRILLING: Jack Mayhew is a drilling contractor and only participates in wells. He drilled no wells for his own account in 1988 and plans none in 1989.

MARALO INC.: Maralo with offices in Houston and Midland will drill 14 wells this year — the same number they drilled in 1988. About half of the wells drilled in 1989 will be classified as exploratory. "The real activity level will be determined by the price and stability of oil," said Midland Production Manager Dick Lowery. "If prices go above $20, we may get much more active." Lowery says the capital budget will remain about the same.

MARSHALL R. YOUNG OIL CO.: Vice President Art Dinsmoor says the company will drill about 30 wells in 1989, the same as last year. About half will be exploratory, and if oil prices improve another exploratory well or two could be added to the budget. Otherwise spending will remain about the same as 1988. The oil company is also looking at putting two small waterfloods in the near future.

MERIDIAN OIL INC.: Meridian has a strong drilling program planned for 1989 with 40 to 50 development wells to drill. While the drilling program will be about the same as last year, capital budgets are expected to increase about 10 percent. None of the budget is earmarked for EOR projects. "They are hard to justify at today's price," say Jim Buchanan, manager regional operations.

MITCHELL ENERGY & DEVELOPMENT CORP.: While Mitchell Energy will drill 117 wells statewide in 1989, most of them will be drilled in North Texas. Only two development wells are planned for the Permian Basin. Last year, the company drilled one exploratory and one development well in the Basin.

MR OIL CO.: This Monahans company has put drilling on hold for the year. No wells were drilled last year and none are planned for this year. "We look at budgets daily and monthly," says Pete McDaniel, partner.

Over 50 percent of Permian Basin operators say they will spend more money in 1989.

OIL ASSOCIATIONS

Oil groups warn of coming crisis

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

As the oil industry faces 1989, regional, state and national oil and gas associations continue to warn of a future crisis involving national security and energy.

AMERICAN PETROLEUM INSTITUTE (API)

In a white paper released at its annual meeting Nov. 15, the American Petroleum Institute warned that the domestic petroleum industry was deteriorating rapidly and there was a clear danger to ignoring the loss of this valuable asset.

For the coming year, Charles J. DiBona, president of the API, sees politics, energy policy, a federal gas tax, retail divestiture, the Clean Air Act and exploration of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge as key issues facing the petroleum industry:

■ "A new gasoline tax appears to be the most likely threat," said DiBona. "Taxing gasoline appeals to people with all kinds of agendas ... So we can expect a battle on that front.

■ Retail marketing divorcement is an issue the oil industry has been fighting for a decade, and DiBona sees no let up in 1989. "The worst of the bills (on divorcement) has been Sen. Metzenbaum's, and we expect another version next year."

■ Efforts to open ANWR will continue. DiBona says some legislative progress was made in 1988, but a united and doubled effort would be needed in 1989 to explore an area that many suspect is another Prudhoe Bay. He also feels the same effort must be made to offset environmental activists that would prohibit offshore drilling in certain areas.

■ DiBona predicts the "greenhouse effect" and clean air will dominate the environmental agenda in 1989 and will bring new attention to alcohol fuels. "Advocates of alcohol-based fuels are likely to ask for tax preferences and mandated use of their product," says DiBona; the API opposes both. He fears radical environmentalists will use the "greenhouse fear" to promote their agendas.

■ In politics, DiBona sees the Bush administration as more a "transition than a revolution, but he sees less confrontation from Bush and key appointees who understand the oil industry. "However, we should not expect administration support on all issues," said DiBona, citing Bush's strong support of alcohol-based fuels as a concern.

INDEPENDENT PETROLEUM ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA (IPAA)

The Independent Petroleum Association of America sees positive energy tax legislation as one way to help save America's domestic petroleum industry and improve national security.

"National security still remains the prime concern of the industry," said Deborah Rowell, IPAA statistical expert. "We must act now to avoid a new energy famine created by foreign policies and hostile military actions."

IPAA Chairman Danny Conklin has outlined a comprehensive energy tax package the group intends to push in 1989. "Tax policies are urgently needed which will permit generation of unprecedented amounts of capital over the next decade to achieve optimum energy independence," says Conklin, an Amarillo oilman.

The specifics of the energy tax policy for 1989 are:

■ Energy Security Tax Credits, which include credits both for exploration and development of new reserves and a crude oil production credit for marginal wells, heavy oil and secondary and tertiary recovery projects.

■ Credits based on a sliding scale. For example, a 30 percent credit would be given for up to $1 million in expenditures; 20 percent for $1-5 million and 10 percent for over $5 million. Intangibles would be counted as expenditures.

■ Expenditures for exploration and development would not be treated as preference items and applicable to the alternative minimum tax.

■ Increase percentage depletion, while removing transfer penalties.

In the area of natural gas, IPAA plans to push for total decontrol; provisions for non-discriminatory carriage; fair trade with Canada; limited antitrust exemptions for independent producer natural gas marketing cooperatives.

The association will oppose: antibypass legislation; FERC action for generic interstate rate reform; and federal fuel subsidies.

"In the next few weeks as the Bush Administration organizes, we will be knocking on doors and talking to responsible officials at the White House and Department of Energy trying to assure that a person with an understanding of natural gas marketing problems is nominated for the Fossil Energy spot," said Conklin.

PERMIAN BASIN PETROLEUM ASSOCIATION (PBPA)

Harry Spannaus, executive vice president of the PBPA, fears growing control of the U.S. oil industry by foreign countries.

"The biggest issue the oil industry will face in 1989 is the growing influx of foreign oil and refined products and the sale of U.S. refineries to foreign countries," said Spannaus.

"When they own the refineries they can dictate whose oil they will or will not buy. Most likely they will choose to buy their own oil."

Spannaus said he thinks there will be enough growing public awareness of the problem this year to prompt the Bush administration to do something about the foreign influx.

He applauds recent increases in oil prices, and said we might see $18 to $20 oil for most of the year. He predicts, however, that it will take a solid quarter of stable oil prices before investment capital can be attracted back into the high-risk oil business.

Spannaus said a harmonious relationship between Congress and President Bush could help bring drilling incentives to the industry. He thinks Bush will abide by his "seven-point" program for restoring incentives to the industry.

TEXAS INDEPENDENT PRODUCERS & ROYALTY OWNERS ASSOCIATION (TIPRO)

TIPRO is guardedly optimistic about 1989, taking into consideration a former oilman has just moved into the White House.

According to John Watkins, president of the Austin-based association, the new administration's actions on energy policies during its first days will give a strong indication of how the domestic oil industry will fare this year.

"If the president follows through on policy statements made during his campaign on the need for a strong industry and a core supply of crude oil, natural gas and natural gas liquids. And, if he then urges Congress to come up with policies to encourage production of this core supply, then I think we can turn this industry around," he stated.

The group also hopes Bush and Congress can do something to stabilize oil prices and curb the nation's growing dependence on imports. Members are also keeping a concerned eye on the falling rig count

"It's not a very optimistic situation," Watkins notes.

BUSH

"We won't have any better luck under Bush than we did with Reagan," said Freddie Allison, president Estoril

"He showed as vice president he's not going to do anything to help us. Any relief will have to come from Congress, and I dont' think they're inclined to help," lamented Bill Graham, president, Bill J. Graham Oil & Gas.

"I think he could help the industry if he would," said Tom Aylesworth of Reumda Operating Co., "but if he follows the lead of Reagan, he won't be much help."

"George Bush could help the oil industry. Whether he has a mind to or not is a different story. I don't expect anything in the first two years, but I think he should provide incentives for exploration," said Rich Varela, vice president and district manager for TXO Production Corp.

Many do not fault Bush's motivation, but see an imbalance in political power in the Northeast and Congress as the main limiting factor of in his abiltity to assistance the oil industry.

Jeff Gibbs, district engineer for North American Royalty says regional politics will limit his help. "I hope he can help, but I don't think he can. There's just too many northeastern votes that love low-priced oil."

Art Dinsmoor, vice president Marshall R. Young Oil Co., thinks the only relief politically possible is some tax relief. The non-producing states out number us.

"I don't believe any president can provide relief to any industry. Congress has 80 percent control and the other 20 percent is through regulatory agencies. Bush can have an impact on the oil industry by naming regulatory personnel and offering guidelines. All we ask for now is a fair shake," says Art Wilson, district manager, ATAPCO.

Bob Monaghan, president Cal-Mon says he wouldn't want to plan his future around any energy policy Bush may or may not get through Congress. "We just don't know what he'll be able to get passed through Congress."

As for as relief goes few believe Bush will sponsor any form of legislation to stabilize prices and see tax incentives as the best bet for relief. But others see little relief in tax incentives and are holding out for price stabilization.

"I think he will be sympathetic to the oil industry compared to the present administration. I think he will take a beneign approach to incentives, but I don't see him being much more vigorous than that," says Jerry Gahr, executive vice president V-F Petroleum.

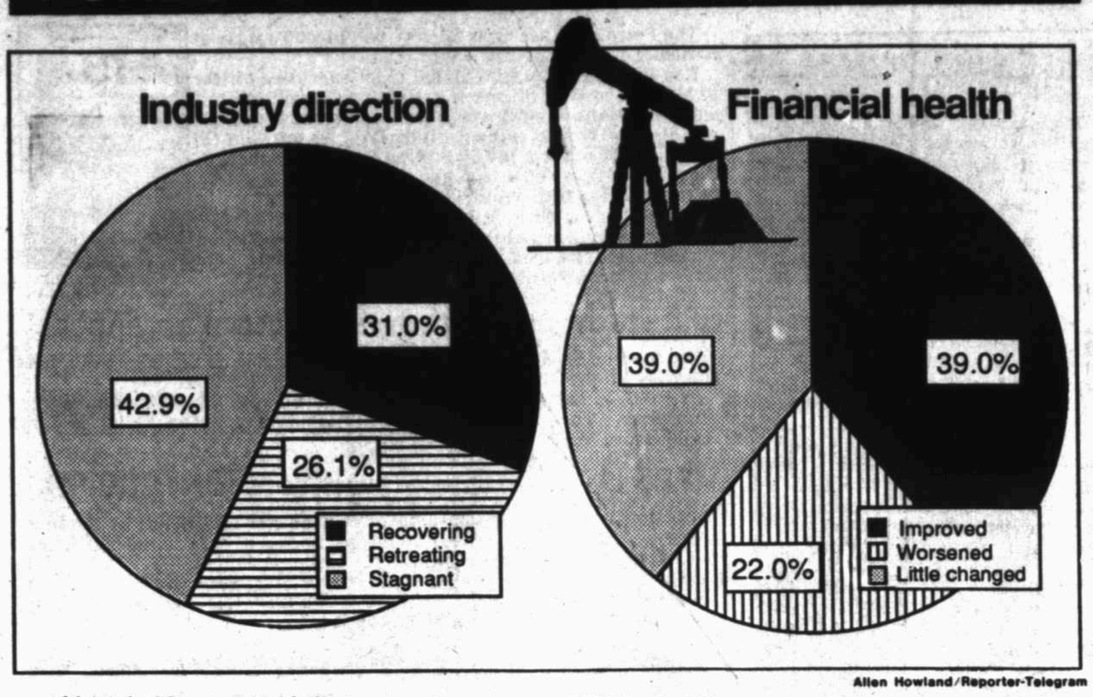
Said Dick Lowery, production manager for Maralo: "Certainly George Bush will be able to appreciate our problems. But tax relief is not what we need. We need an oil import fee or oil import quota to stabilize prices. The government has helped steel, automobile and lumber industries which were injured by imports. Why can't it do the same for the oil industry?"

Kenton Hammonds, vice president Yates Energy Corp. in Roswell agrees. He doesn't see any relief coming from tax legislation and feels an import fee is in order.

"I'd like him to provide a floor price for oil. If we could get a stable floor price of around $18, we'd know what we were doing. It's going to take the government to help us, and I don't think anyone in Congress is willing to," said Bruno Hanson, Hanson Corp.

Others like Davis Payne of Polaris Production Corp. are not so sure they want an import fee. "I don't believe in protectionism. I'm convinced that the only way the domestic oil industry can survive is to learn to live in the competitive and volatile world market. If we get a little relief today, the next administration can take it away."

FORECAST '89



Allen Howland/Reporter-Telegram

Although 39 percent of the companies survey felt their own financial condition improved during 1988, only 32 percent said the industry as a whole is moving ahead.

The increase is predicated primarily on the fact "it is still cheaper to work over an existing well than it is to drill a new well," Copeland said.

So that bit of good news for servicing contractors spells bad tidings for drillers.

Workovers and mechanical repairs to reactivate shut-in wells is one of the first reactions by operators to higher oil prices, Copeland said. Therefore, servicing contractors are often the first to feel the benefits of higher prices.

Drilling contractors, on the other hand, must rely on increasing operator confidence before their business picks up.

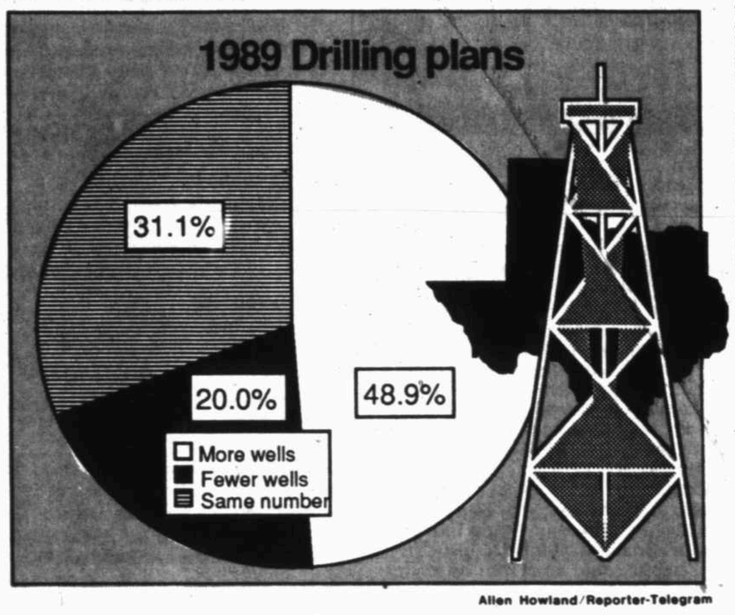
Even with prices at least temporarily above $19 on the futures market, increased drilling plans are not likely to surface before spring, when prices traditionally soften as heating oil demand declines and before peak gasoline demand arrives, Zartler of the IADC said.

If OPEC's current production restraints hold without cheating until spring, production cuts will not be necessary when demand slackens, and prices should avoid their usual spring slippage. If that scenario comes to pass, the rig count could begin improving as early as the second quarter, Zartler said.

As principally an oil province, Permian Basin drilling activity this year may lag behind more gas-prone regions of the country such as Oklahoma, South Louisiana and the Gulf of Mexico, Zartler said in a post-meeting interview.

But, "contractors face challenges besides just surviving," he said.

Two of the biggest issues are problems that drillers and service contractors share — not only with each other, but with most companies inside and outside the oil industry — are rising Workers' Compensation costs and burgeoning regulations on the environmental and transportation fronts.



Allen Howland/Reporter-Telegram

Nearly half of all responding firms said their 1989 drilling plans will exceed their activity last year.

Well servicing contractors bore a 28.7 percent increase in Workers' Compensation premium costs the first of the year, compared to a statewide all-industry average of 19.1 percent higher rates, said Max Emmert, president-elect of the AOSC and president of Midland-based Yale E. Key Well Service.

While the rates contractors charge are at pre-1980 levels, Workers' Comp costs have risen 175 percent over the same period, Emmert said. Since the oil price collapse of 1986, most service contractors "have barely been cash flowing — let alone operating at a profit.

"With comp increases, it will be questionable to even break even on cash flow," Emmert said.

Reform of the Workers' Comp in Texas is a top priority for the Texas Legislature. Zarlter encouraged the drilling contractors at Thursday's meeting to contact their legislators in support of the reforms in House Bill 1.

Other pressing issues which the contractors expect to dominate their interests in the coming year are:

- Federal environmental laws regarding handling of many oilfield substances — including pipe dope, lube oils and diesel — which have been classified as hazardous materials; training of employees on hazards; and reporting and emergency planning.
- Pending state transportation regulations to comply with federal Department of Transportation guidelines. Contractors whose highway travel is incidental to their primary work are working to get an exemption from the length of workday requirements aimed primarily at over-the-road truckers.

GAS

"Studies show that gas prices are strong this winter. Demand is strong and by 1990 supply will probably insufficient to meet demand. I think we will see gas prices escalate to $2.50 per Mcf by 1990," said Roswell operator Charles Read of Read & Stevens.

Herb Williamson, senior vice president of Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co. agrees: "Gas appears to have an immediate upside potential over the next two years. We have done a little more drilling for natural gas, but we have not changed our strategy radically."

Jerry Anderson, producing manager for Mobil Exploration & Producing U.S., said that oil prices are still going to keep a lid on gas prices. "So much of the industrial market is equipped to swith fuels, that prices will be capped at a level equivalent to fuel oil."

On the national scale, there has been a big switch in the past five years as gas provinces like Oklahoma, South Louisiana and portions of the Overthrust in the Rockies have gone from the dog house to the front row in terms of drilling activity.

When all petroleum prices plummeted in 1982 and again in 1986, gas basins were the hardest hit — drilling activity virtually evaporated overnight.

Now, finally it appears those like Tom Brown Inc. president Don Evans, who have long-predicted that gas would lead a resurgence in drilling are being proven out.

Because gas is not as directly effected by OPEC actions as oil, the supply side of the natural gas equation is more stable, leaving demand as the primary variable. That demand has nearly caught up with the supply surplus and signs point toward continued growth in demand.

Environmental concerns — acid rain and the greenhouse effect, among others — are making the clean-burning characteristics of natural gas a key selling point in growing demand.

"It's a superior fuel for most domestic operations because of environmental concerns, so our company is putting greater emphasis on gas," explained Buddy Sipes of Chisos Operating Co.

Use as a transportation fuel, as compressed natural gas; use in steam generation for injection in enhanced oil recovery efforts in the Kern River area of California; and increased use in electrical generation, all bode well as incremental markets for newly discovered gas.

This is not to imply that gas development in the Permian Basin is without detractors. Pipeline capacity limitations — particularly to the Basin's primary historic market, the West Coast — are discouraging to some.

"Natural gas here isn't going to be of great significance in my opinion, because we're having a hard time finding new markets, especially on the West Coast, which Canadian gas has entered strongly. We're limited because our pipelines are limited," said Bruno Hanson of Midland's Hanson Corp.

The bright gas outlook also is having an influence on acquisitions. Art Wilson, district manager for Atapco — American Trading & Production Co. — in Midland, said his company is looking toward acquisitions and development that will give it a 50-50 mix of oil and gas.

Fina Oil & Chemical, traditionally an oil-oriented force in the region, repositioned itself more as a gas producer virtually overnight with acquisition of Tenneco Oil Co.'s West Texas properties, which were primarily gas holding, according to general manager Tom Wadsworth.

Other companies who have boosted gas production and reserves significantly in positioning themselves for the future are:

- Arco Oil & Gas Co., which has doubled its gas production in the Central Region, including significant discoveries in the Michigan and Arkoma basins and work with coal seam gas in the Rockies, according to vice president Marvin Pringle.
- Bill J. Graham Oil & Gas, which has tripled its gas production since 1986. "Natural gas price increases have helped us tremendously in terms of cash flow," Graham said.
- Anadarko Petroleum Co., which is primarily an oil producer in the Permian Basin, but company-wide has 80 percent of its reserve base in gas, said Scotty Alcorn, division manager in Midland.
- Mobil Exploration & Producing U.S. currently has 60 percent of its domestic reserves in gas and its U.S. exploration program is geared for adding to that gas reserve base, according to Midland division producing manager Jerry Anderson.

On the positive side, there could be more upward bending of a slightly bent 1989 projection, if oil prices continue to improve and stabilize in the $18 range for six months or more.

The survey found that almost to a company, operators have based 1989 budgets on $15 oil — only two or three venturing economically above or below that mark.

However, oil company budgets are seldom written in granite. Most in fact have a cushion to do a "little more" if there is a break in oil or gas prices.

Too, many oil operators drill on cash flow, and if oil prices remain high and stable for six months it could trigger an upsurge of drilling in the second half to offset the second half of 1988

In an interview with Texas Railroad Commissioner Kent Hance this week, we were told that the last weeks of January will be critical to oil prices in 1989. Hance says his contacts inside OPEC tell him that if the United Arab Emirates are not exceeding (cheating) their production quota of 987,000 barrels per day by too much it will be dismissed and prices will remain between $17.50 and $19.50 throughout the year.

However, if the UAE is producing over 1.3 million barrels per day, the Saudis will probably pull the plug and prices will tumble to $12-13 per barrel again.

Another positive indicator revealed by the survey is that the firing frenzy has finally been contained. Over 71 percent of the producers interviewed said they had managed to keep employment levels stable or gain employees.

Also most feel that gas prices will improve and that gas will lead the way in recovery of the oil industry. But operators are concerned about the confusion in the natural gas market.

"I almost think it was better when the pipelines were buying all the gas. You knew who was buying and how much you would be paid, and all you had to do was produce gas. Now, getting gas to market is the hardest part. There is too much price instability and the regulations are too complicated," said Ken Freeman, owner Tahoe Oil & Cattle Co.

MAJOR OIL COMPANIES

Majors reveal plans for 1989

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

Here are plans for Permian Basin majors as revealed in interviews.

AMOCO PRODUCTION CO.: This Houston-based company expects to spend much less in the Permian Basin in 1989, perhaps as little as half of the $156 million spent last year.

The lower spending level is attributable to the considerably smaller drilling program anticipated for the coming year in the region, said company spokesman Greg Clock. In 1988, the company completed a pair of ambitious infill drilling programs, in the Cedar Lake Unit in Gaines County and Ector County's North Cowden Unit, which accounted for most of the 228 development wells completed during the year.

Amoco also drilled 16 exploratory wells in 1988.

No new enhanced recovery projects are planned, however an amine regeneration system upgrade at the company's Slaughter Field gas processing plant begun this fall is expected to be complete by Spring 1989.

The company will continue CO_2 injection at its four existing EOR projects: Wasson ODC Unit in Yoakum County; and the Slaughter Estate, Central Mallet and Frazier Units in Hockley County.

Going into 1989, Amoco has roughly 850 employees in the Permian Basin, 300 fewer than a year earlier, one of the largest work force reductions in the region. District office closings in Brownfield and Odessa resulted in transfers of engineering and administrative personnel to Houston, Tulsa, Chicago and some of the company's 19 remaining field offices and operations centers in the basin.

ANADARKO PETROLEUM CORP.: Budgets will be up a "very optimistic" 25 to 30 percent for Anadarko in West Texas and New Mexico, according to division geological engineer Scotty Alcorn.

The company plans a corresponding increase in drilling, with a fairly even mix of exploratory and development project on the agenda. Of the 30 wells planned for 1989, 14 will be wildcats.

The company drilled 24 wells in 1988, Alcorn said.

While EOR projects aren't in Anadarko's immediate future, the company will be evaluating more than 200 Mabee Petroleum wells recently acquired from Shell for improving secondary recovery.

ARCO OIL & GAS CO.: Central Region Vice President Marvin Pringle says the company's 1989 budget will be "slightly, but not substantially, higher" for the 22-state region under his direction.

Drilling activity will also be essentially the same as 1988, when the company participated in a total of 820 development and 30 exploratory well region-wide.

Arco plans to continue its current EOR activities, but Pringle said any plans for expansion would require sustained higher oil prices.

The company added to its work force by nearly 10 percent over the past year in the region and just completed the consolidation of its five local offices under a single roof in the former Paragon Building on North Marienfeld.

CHEVRON CO. USA: The West Texas divisions of Chevron expect some decrease in the level of development drilling accompanied by an increase in workover efforts. The company also has "a couple of wildcats in mind, but drilling them will depend on some final geological data," according to spokesman Neal Miller.

Overall, the company's capital budget in this region is expected to be about 10 percent higher, paced by $65 million in expenditures in completing the first phase of its North Ward Estes CO_2 flood in Crane County.

The company has no other pending tertiary plans but expects to maintain its budget for waterflood projects.

CONOCO INC.: Mark Mosley, division manager, anticipates slightly less West Texas activity for his company in 1989, in line with a minor decline in capital budgets to the $40-50 million range.

Fifty to 60 Conoco-operated development wells and "very limited" exploratory work is expected in '89, compared to more than 70 total wells drilled last year, he said.

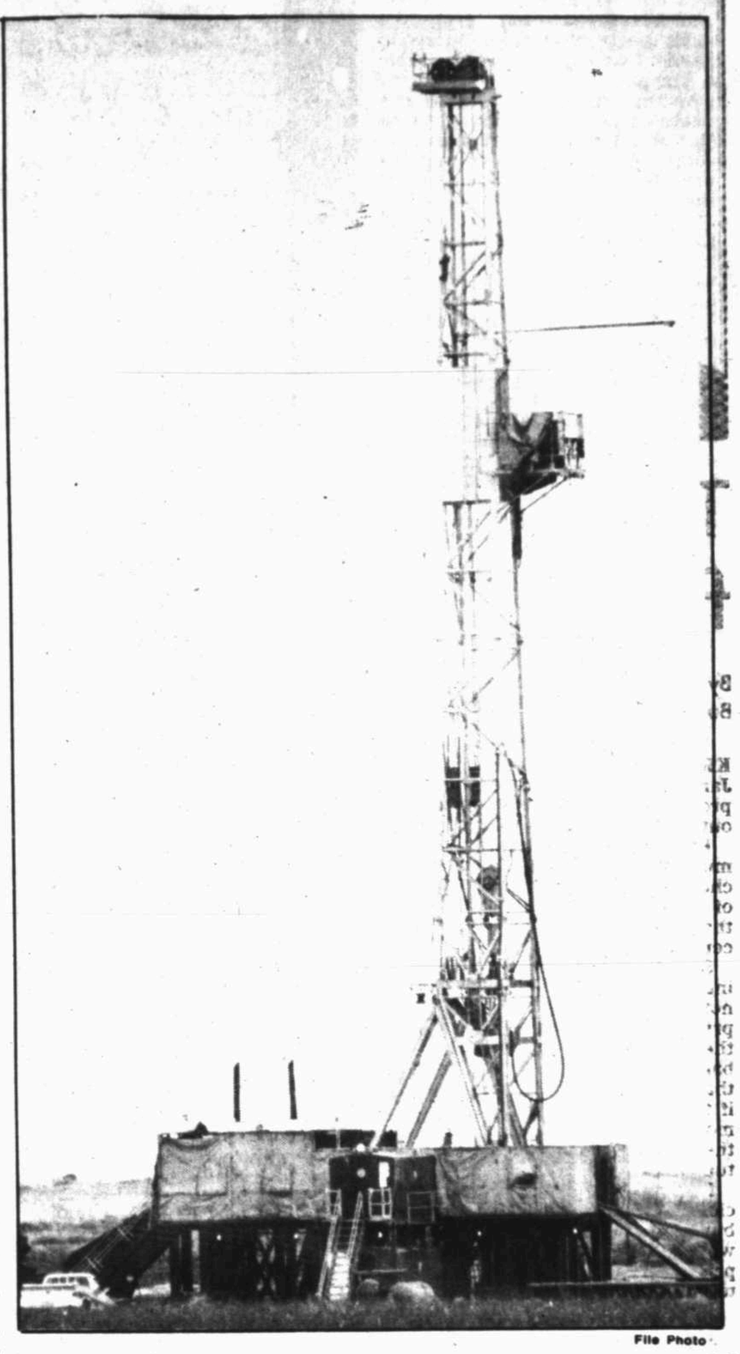
Conoco will continue enhanced recovery using CO_2 in the Ford Geraldine Field in Reeves County. Mosley added that "front-end engineering study" on other possible EOR sites will be done during the year, but none are slated for kick-off under present economics.

EXXON CO. USA: The Southwestern Division of the nation's largest oil company expects to spend about another $180 million in 1989, as it did in 1988 — exclusive of producing property acquisitions, according to division manager Robert Olsen.

Property acquisitions constituted a significant part of Exxon's activity last year, increasing the division's well count by more than 10 percent, to over 6,000.

Olsen expects the company to match its 1988 drilling program of 180 development wells in the coming year. Last year's program had doubled Exxon's 1987 activity level. Olsen anticipates that daily production in the division will increased 5,000 barrels per day to 73,000 barrels daily, primarily attributable to improvements in newly acquired properties.

The company is planning for flat natural gas production levels in the next 12 months at 400 million cubic feet per day.



File Photo

Active rigs are expected to become a more common sight as the year goes by, by most projections.

Exxon participates in 15 company-operated and non-operated tertiary projects in the Permian Basin, and although the company has no new plans "the careful management of them will occupy much of our time."

Local employment by the company grew during year, primarily as a result of acquired properties. Some workers were transferred in to Midland from various locations around Texas as well, Olsen said.

FINA OIL & CHEMICAL CO.: This Dallas-based company's acquisition of Tenneco's West Texas producing properties will have significant impact on 1989, said regional general manager Tom Wadsworth.

The acquisition completed this fall increased Fina's West Texas production base and staff by about 50 percent, he said. As a result, Fina expects to double its drilling activity of about 30 wells — virtually all development — drilled in 1988.

Although the company is still resolving its 1989 budget, Wadsworth said it will be significantly higher.

The company is in the process of moving eight to 10 additional workers into Midland as a result of the acquisition.

MARATHON OIL CO.: 1989 is expected to be virtually unchanged from 1988 in terms of budget and drilling activity for the West Texas region of the Findlay, Ohio-based company, according to operations superintendent Ken Thoma.

A few less than the 80 wells drilled last year are likely this year, he said.

No new EOR activity is expected to be added to Marathon's ongoing CO_2 project in the Yates Field.

MOBIL EXPLORATION & PRODUCING U.S.: The Midland Division of Mobil expects roughly a flat budget year in 1989, spending about $134 million as in '88. However, the funds will be used differently, with more monies going toward facilities — plants, pipelines and equipment — associated with it East Mallet Unit EOR project in the Slaughter Field, said producing manager Jerry Anderson.

Last year, Mobil drilled about 150 wells, including "three or four" wildcats. This year's plans call for about half that drilling level, of both development and exploratory wells.

In addition to beginning injection at the East Mallet project by mid-year, the company hopes to initiate CO_2 floods in its Mallet Unit of the Slaughter Field and in the Salt Creek Field in Kent County during 1990, Anderson said.

PHILLIPS PETROLEUM CO.: The Permian Basin division of this Bartlesville, Okla.-based company plans approximately the same drilling activity for 1989 as was completed last year, about 60 development wells, according to Bill Berry, regional operations manager.

Ten percent of that activity will be in the Katz Field near Knox City in Stonewall County, where the company is initiating a waterflood project.

Although the company doesn't make the prices it uses in arriving at its budgets public, company chairman C.J. Silas has said that he wants the company to be in a posture to be profitable at $15-a-barrel oil.

SHELL WESTERN EXPLORATION & PRODUCTION CO.: A re-evaluation of business will result in a significant decrease in activity for SWEPI in West Texas. Kitty Borah of the company's public relations staff said the company is likely to drill only about one-eighth as many wells this year, compared to 167 Permian Basin wells during a very active 1988, especially the first half of the year.

"We have no new EOR projects scheduled in the Permian Basin at this time," Borah said. "We are optimistic that the success we are experiencing in our existing EOR operations near Denver City and Hobbs will lead to further improvements."

SUN EXPLORATION & PRODUCTION CO.: Region manager Warren Bryan anticipates a year in 1989 that is a mirror image of 1988, reversing the order of the active first- and much slower second-half of the year.

Although its Southwestern Region budget is expected to be down by about 7 percent, Bryan expects to drill as many as a third more development wells and a comparable number of exploratory wells during 1989. Last year, Sun drilled 60 field wells and 17 exploratory projects, he said.

The company's reorganization in 1988 resulted in an increase of about 50 workers at the local office and added about 225 more employees who now report to the Midland regional headquarters.

TEXACO USA CO.: Slightly reduced capital expenditures and drilling activity are on tap for the Midland Division, according to vice president Alan McDaniel.

In 1988, Texaco operated a total of 165 across the region, including 48 exploratory projects. Both numbers are expected to be lower in 1989, unless there are substantial improvements in oil prices which would have "an appreciable effect on drilling," McDaniel said.

Enhanced recovery projects are likewise being held up by low prices. The company has many tertiary projects "on the shelf," on which a lot of preliminary research and prioritizing has been done.

During the past year's restructuring, Texaco has moved workers into the area from Houston, Tulsa and Denver and the trend has continued in early '89. Last week the company announced the relocation of 17 families from Houston, who along with 12 local hires will staff a new lease ownership records department in Midland.

UNION OIL CO. OF CALIFORNIA: Capital budgets in the company's Central Region will be about flat in 1989, according to vice president Marty Miller. Anticipated drilling activity of 100 development and four exploratory wells will be up slightly from 1988.

The company will continue implementation of its CO_2 flood in the Dollarhide Field in Andrews County. Infill drilling will continue in other fields as well, but no other tertiary recovery-related drilling is expected.

The company anticipates doing some "front-end detail engineering work" on some additional tertiary candidate fields.

Small communities fear air subsidy cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Philip Trenary's small airline company had been in business a week when he held up a flight out of Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport to whisk special blood from Chicago to a patient waiting on a hospital table in Temple.

Another time, one of Trenary's planes carried a part needed to restart an idled assembly line in Stillwater, Okla., that was costing the plant $6,000 for every hour out of production.

"The type of service we provide goes beyond people going back and forth for pleasure; only 20 percent of our business is pleasure passengers," said Trenary, president of the Fort Worth-based commuter airline, Exec Express II. The company shuttles executives, blood samples and medicines between small communities and air hubs in Texas, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Tennessee and Missouri.

But now the Department of Transportation is considering cutting subsidies to small cities nationwide, such as Temple, Paris and Brownwood, which have commuter air service financed through the Essential Air Service (EAS) program.

If subsidies to the three Texas cities are cut, Trenary said it would be extremely difficult to continue service between Dallas-Fort Worth and Brownwood, Paris and Temple. Reductions would be likely, if it is possible to keep those shuttles running, he said.

Officials say the DOT could render a decision by the end of the month. The agency argues in the Federal Register that Congress appropriated $25 million for the EAS program's current fiscal year, but that the amount is short $6.6 million needed to support 1988 levels. It is about $19 million less than the full annual subsidy required to support EAS at new levels authorized by Congress, according to DOT.

"They've got a hell of a lot of lives and jobs on the line for the 150 cities here" that could be affected, said Temple airport manager Stew Shirey.

The proposed changes have prompted a flood of mail from officials in small cities. They are urging Congress to forestall the DOT before it severs their air links to major airline hubs and shortens the list of advantages they can tout when recruiting new industry.

"It would have a direct effect on our economic development. It would have a negative, dire effect on our efforts to lower the employment rate and to build the economic base of the community," said Dick Chamberlain, executive vice president of the Lamar County Chamber of Commerce in Paris.

Paris, with a population of about 26,000 in Texas' northeast corner, is home to five Fortune 500 companies' plants and other small industries whose executives rely on Exec Express II to shuttle them to Dallas-Fort Worth, 105 miles and 2½ hours away by car.

Brownwood, too, has several large plants with national headquarters scattered around the country whose executives "fly in and out of here very regularly," said Terry Wilson, executive vice president of the Brownwood Chamber of Commerce. The next nearest airport is 77 miles away in Abilene.

Brownwood flights are subsidized at an annual rate of $189,876, with an average of six daily enplanements in 1987, the DOT said.

The Paris service gets $146,596 and averaged only 2.4 daily enplanements in 1987. Temple, 16 miles from the next nearest airport in Killeen, receives annual subsidies of $425,825, and had average daily enplanements of 14.9 in 1987, according to the DOT.

A DOT official speaking on condition of anonymity said the less traffic at an airport, the greater the risk of losing the subsidy — putting Paris in the riskiest category, Brownwood in a gray area, and Temple with the least risk. The loss of the subsidy, he said, doesn't necessarily mean a city would lose its air service.

Trenary says companies don't want to locate in cities without air service "because it makes no sense to have an asset — in the form of a manager — for three hours on the highway between Brownwood and Dallas."

"Speaking from 27 years' experience in working with industrial prospects, nine out of 10 would ask the question: 'Do you have commercial air service?' " Chamberlain said.

"It is the widely held view on the part of state and local officials that air service is critical to a community's ability to attract and retain industry, but the evidence of whether that is so is not clear," the DOT official said.

Although Temple is relatively close to another airport, Shirey said the inconvenience of flying into Killeen and making the half-hour drive to Temple could hurt the city's industrial recruitment.

Shirey is confident the airport will eventually support air service without subsidies, if the DOT gives it a little longer to get on more solid footing.

PLANS

NORTH AMERICAN ROYALTY INC.: North American Royalty, which participates in wells, has increased its capital budget by about 10 percent this year in anticipation of drilling one well. The company drilled no wells in 1988.

PARKER & PARSLEY PETROLEUM CO.: One of the strongest players in the Permian Basin, the company will drill fewer wells this year, but the capital budget will be about the same. In 1988, P&P drilled 150 development wells, and plan about 120 for this year. The company will also continue working on its Levelland EOR project and will initiate a small EOR project in the Spraberry Trend Area.

POLARIS PRODUCTION CORP.: Davis Payne, president, says his company accumulates production mainly through acquisitions and plans no drilling in 1989, but anticipates increasing capital spending by 100 percent in 1989. The firm has one enhanced oil recovery project programmed — a small pressure maintenance project.

READ & STEVENS INC.: This active Roswell operator will double its capital expenditures and drilling program in 1989. Charles Read, owner, says the firm drilled seven wells in 1988, but will drill 13 development wells and two wildcats this year. The company has one secondary recovery project involving 23 wells that may be started this year and carry over into 1990.

"We are optimistic about oil and gas prices," says Read. The company used $15 oil and $1.50 gas to calculate budgets last year, but has based 1989 economics on $18 oil and $1.85 gas.

REMUDA OPERATING CO.: Tom Aylesworth, president, has reduced Remuda's capital budget and drilling program for 1989. Last year he drilled five development wells, but this year is planning only two.

RENDOVA OIL CO.: Herschel O'Kelley, partner, says his company has increased its capital budget by about 20 percent and will drill about three more wells than last year. On the table for this year are 13 development wells and three exploratory wells.

TAHOE OIL & CATTLE CO.: A 30 percent higher capital budget and eight wells, up from four last year, are planned for Tahoe. Owner Ken Freeman says he has predicated 1989 economics on $15 oil.

TIPPERARY CORP.: Tipperary will look in a number of directions for oil and gas this year. The company plans to recomplete 10 wells in the Austin Chalk with massive fracs; to drill an 11,000-ft. Strawn well in Lea County; and participate in a 25,000 ft. Ellenberger gas test in Pecos County.

The company drilled 13 wells last year, and Chairman Deane Stoltz says capital spending will be about the same for 1989. He says the company has no EOR projects underway, but is investigating the feasibility of a coal gas project in Wyoming where the firm owns coal reserves.

TXO PRODUCTION CORP.: Rich Varela, vice president and district manager, says TXO will drill 25 wells this year — about the same as last year. And, 70 percent of those wells will be development. Capital budget plans are about the same as 1988.

V-F PETROLEUM CO.: V-F has doubled its capital budget for 1989 and will drill 10 wells this year, double the number it drilled in 1988. Four will be development and six will be exploratory, according to Jerry Gahr, vice president.

WESTERN RESERVES OIL CO.: President Dick Beveridge says the company will drill slightly more wells in 1989 with a capital budget about the same as 1988. The company drilled 4-6 wells in 1988 and plans to drill 6-8 in 1989. About 75 percent will be exploratory wells. "A word of encouragement from Washington D.C. could bring some enthusiasm and stability back to the industry," says Beveridge.

YATES ENERGY CORP.: This Roswell company has increased its capital budget 25 percent, but will drill the same number of wells (six) it drilled in 1988.

"These will all be gas wells," says Kent Hammons, vice president. "We are a little cautious on oil at this time."

YATES PETROLEUM CORP.: One of the most active operators in New Mexico, Yates Petroleum Corp. of Artesia has increased its budget and employees and will drill 150 wells this year compared to 100 wells last year.

No current EOR projects are planned, but Land Manager Randy G. Patterson says the company has several secondary and tertiary projects to look at in 1989 and could begin one or more if economics permit.

Trio hopes to revive El Paso wine industry

By HOLDEN LEWIS
Associated Press Writer

Wine makers Vito Liso, left, and Arthur Bieganowski and their Bieganowski Cellars are sparking a renaissance in El Paso's wine industry, quiet since Prohibition.

EL PASO — The history of El Paso's wine industry spanned three centuries before Prohibition shut it down. Now the owners of a new local winery are sparking a renaissance.

Bieganowski Cellars started selling wine two months ago and already has grown to fourth place among Texas' 25 wineries, with a capacity of 85,000 gallons a year.

The quality of the wine — especially the champagne — has excited the owners and surprised some tasters.

Co-owner Arthur Bieganowski — an oenophile who delights in sticking his nose in a glass and inhaling the wine's aroma, then slurping a small mouthful to savor the spectrum of taste — says grape-growing is a natural for the area.

"If you look at the history, El Paso was the first winemaking area of Texas," he said. "People started making wine here in the 1600s and it continued until Prohibition. El Paso was the state's primary winemaking area until then, and it was pretty famous for having some good wines around the early 1900s."

Arthur Bieganowski, his brother, Chip, and consultant Vito Liso are as different as can be from the Franciscan monks who settled in El Paso almost 340 years ago and planted some of the first vineyards in the present-day United States.

Arthur is a neurologist and psychiatrist specializing in stress management. Chip is a Houston-based lawyer interested in lobbying the Legislature to change what he calls antiquated winemaking laws. Liso is a native of Italy and a mechanical engineer who learned about viticulture during years of selling and servicing winemaking equipment in Europe.

The Bieganowskis moved to Texas from New York about five years ago and met Liso two years ago, when he worked at a winery near Deming, N.M. That winery shut down last year and the Bieganowskis hired Liso to buy grapes in West Texas and southern New Mexico and supervise the winemaking.

Liso grew up near Genoa on a small winery where all wine is fermented in barrels, poured rather haphazardly into bottles and quickly sold. He shakes his head now when he talks of how the family business is conducted.

"If I do the wine how my father used to do, I can't sell it," he said. "I use the same system, but different technology."

Technology gleams and sparkles in the Bieganowskis' chilly, 15,000-square-foot winery beside Interstate 10 east of downtown El Paso.

The white-walled rooms are dominated by five 5,000-gallon and 15 3,000-gallon stainless steel fermentation tanks. Each tank stands about 15 feet high and is surrounded by tubes and hoses.

No purple-footed grape-stompers clamber out of wooden vats, though a little of the old way survives. Two grape-pressing machines big enough to hold Herman Munster are parked behind a row of 50-gallon oak barrels where some wines are aged for three to 24 months.

In a frosty back room, hundreds of green champagne bottles sit in racks, their mouths tipped downward at varying angles. The longer the bubbly has been fermenting, the steeper it is tipped, until the bottle is stored almost upside-down.

The champagne has gotten the most attention from buyers.

"The sparkling wine, I thought, was quite well-done — surprisingly well-done," said Pat Frost, director of food and beverages at the Westin Paso del Norte Hotel. "It's very drinkable. Of course, it doesn't compare to the outstanding European or Californian sparkling wines, but at its price ($12 a bottle), it's not meant to. For a first effort, it's extremely good."

Other food and beverage experts have expressed similar enthusiasm over the champagne, though praise for the Bieganowskis' still wines is much more muted.

The winery produces cabernet sauvignon, chardonnay, sauvignon blanc, white zinfandel and sparkling muscat canneli, and expects to introduce a port late this year. The wine sells for $5 to $9 a bottle.

Most of the grapes going into Bieganowski wines are bought from growers in the Mimbres Valley, between Deming and Las Cruces, N.M. With its sunny days and cool nights, the area is fine for growing grapes.

"Maybe another winery will start here," Arthur said. "It's not unthinkable. Competition is good, especially if it leads to a better product."

Arthur declined to reveal how much the winery cost — "Let's just say that we spent a few bucks" — but said the whole thing, including the building, fermenting tanks and a refrigerated truck, is paid for.

The winery, free of loans to pay off, has more time to grow and acquire a reputation, he said.

"We're not in a position to twist arms or bang on doors to force our product on anyone," Arthur said. "We want the wine to speak for itself."

Dillard's founder honored by retailing industry group

NEW YORK (AP) — The founder and chairman of Dillard Department Stores Inc. was honored for his half-century in business with a gold medal from a retailing industry group.

The National Retail Merchants Association gave William Dillard its achievemen award at a luncheon that wound up the group's annual convention Wednesday.

Dillard, 74, who opened his first store in 1938, is known as an innovative retailer, and industry experts consider his stores outstanding among department stores. His chain includes 146 Dillard stores and the 12 Higbee stores he owns in conjunction with shopping mall developer Edward DeBartolo.

The Dillard stores, located primarily in the Midwest and Southwest, had an estimated $2.5 billion in sales last year.

Dillard was born in Mineral Springs, Ark., and received business degrees from the University of Arkansas and Columbia University. After working for Sears, Roebuck and Co. for eight months, he opened his first store in Nashville, Ark.

Dillard Department Stores is headquartered in Little Rock, Ark.

Hwy. 80, 687-1351 between 8:00 and 5:00, Monday thru Friday. Drawing will be held February 14, 1989. Must be 18 years or older. Need not be present to win.

Decrease in GTE rates recommended

AUSTIN (AP) — Telephone rates for GTE Southwest Inc. customers would drop 6.7 percent under a recommendation made by an administrative law judge for the Texas Public Utility Commission.

The decrease would lower GTE rates by $49.2 million. Under the recommendation, basic local telephone service would drop 12.7 percent.

GTE had requested an 11.8 percent rate increase, or an increase of $81.4 million.

But administrative law judge Charles Smaistria recommended the decrease because of changes in federal tax laws, according to PUC spokesman Bill Dunn.

"Since the company is paying less in federal income taxes then that should be reflected in the rate structure," Dunn said.

Dunn also said Smaistria reduced the company's requested profit margin.

The case will be heard by the three-member PUC at 9 a.m. Feb. 14.

GTE is the second largest telephone company in Texas, and serves about 1 million customers statewide.

A spokesman for GTE Southwest said the company was disappointed in the recommendation.

'Up-and-coming' utilize pawnshops to get extra cash

Pawnshops no longer for 'down-and-out'

By PATRICIA DIBSIE
Copley News Service

Pawnshops have long been the last stop for desperate people in a financial bind, hoping for 10 or 20 cents on the dollar for assorted family heirlooms. Today's pawnshop is where the down-and-out sell and the up-and-coming shop — but also where the middle class go to collect a few extra coins for things they no longer want.

"The people who come here to sell are both the down-and-out and the middle class looking to sell an item that's no longer of use to them," said Jeff Bernard, a pawnshop manager. "The customers who come in here regularly to buy are doctors and lawyers looking for great buys below wholesale. The whole idea is to buy low and sell high, and that's what you do here.

"This is the place where the people with cash shop for great buys."

Many Americans have peered into the workings of the pawnshop through cops-and-robbers shows in which the pawnbroker is almost always a shady character working just left of the law.

But that portrayal is about as accurate as the family life of Ward and June Cleaver is as a picture of the typical American home.

Forget the dingy, dust-filled cubbyholes of television. These shops look like a mixture of an antique shop, jewelry store, electronics shop and sporting-goods outlet. Whatever your heart desires, it's probably in a pawnshop.

True, people in need of money do go to pawnshops and trade their goods as collateral for a short-term loan, according to several pawnbrokers interviewed.

"Approximately 80 percent of the items are reclaimed by the owner," said Bernard. "The other 20 percent take the money and run."

The item used for collateral becomes the property of the pawnbroker after four months and 10 days, according to detective Les Merrill.

"After four months, the law requires that a registered letter be sent to the owner," he said. "Ten days later, the merchandise belongs to the pawnbroker."

A lot of people are selling merchandise outright to pawnbrokers — items around the house that are more clutter than treasure. The pawnbroker offers 20 to 40 percent of its value. That leaves room for the pawnbroker to make a profit and still sell an item below wholesale.

And forget the idea that much of the merchandise has been sold under the table. The reality is that crooks pawning stolen goods don't go near these shops, said John Sanders, another pawnshop owner.

Merrill agrees: "Computer technology has made it possible to detect stolen goods within 24 hours of a sale. Pawnshop dealers are required by law to take down name, address and driver's license of anyone pawning merchandise."

That system may still be workable for the crook, until it comes time to leave the mandatory thumb print.

"You'd have to be the dumbest thief in the world to deal with a pawnbroker," said Sanders. When not on the floor buying and selling, Sanders sits behind a one-way mirror in a luxurious office at the back of his shop. A gun is strapped around his waist in a leather holster — a warning to would-be robbers.

"Pawnshops are the place you shop when you want to get great buys at wholesale or below," he said. It's the same thing he says on a radio commercial at least 20 times a day, hoping to convince the uninitiated.

"You don't have to wait for special sales here; the prices are below wholesale every day. The people who have money shop here. I'm just waiting for the average Joe to catch on to this place."

"The pawnshops in this city are pretty honest," said Merrill. "I make my rounds daily and hit every pawnshop at least once a week."

Merrill admits he's been tempted to make a purchase on more than one occasion, but he never has.

"It's a matter of integrity," he said. "I'd rather have my credibility than find a great bargain. I can't help but think that the pawnshop owner would feel pressured into making too good of a deal because I'm a cop. When I see something great, I'll tell a friend. But I won't do their bargaining for them. See, I have access to their records and know just what they paid for a particular item and that puts me in an unfair bargaining position."

And that leads to Merrill's next point: bargaining.

"Never offer to pay the asking price. Barter with the owner, know your merchandise and make a fair offer. It's been my experience that people don't know how to barter. They look at a sticker price and either pay or walk away. Wrong.

"Where I come from (the New York area), you look at the price, ask how much they want and then tell the man he's crazy. Make an offer that's low and the two of you will come to some kind of an agreement in the middle. Everybody's happy. And it's not just the exchange of merchandise for cash — it feels good to play the game when both sides walk away feeling like winners."

"Pawnshops are here as a service. If you're leery or a little afraid of them, come down and see," said Bernard. "We can offer the customer short-term cash or we'll buy something outright if you're in the mood to get rid of some item that's unwanted. And for the buyer, just come down and explore. Pawnshops are fun."

Bernard's shelves are lined with silver tea sets and place settings, fine crystal, a Tiffany vase, and china for 12. In one corner there's a player piano, circa 1900; another corner boasts a white enamel scale (enameled lettering reads "A penny for an honest weight"), circa 1920. An entire wall is lined with musical instruments — an African cowhide drum (handmade), a couple of violins, a tuba, several mandolins and a flute or two, or three.

"Most of the items were brought here and sold for cash. The owners just didn't want them cluttering up their homes," Bernard said. "Sure, make me an offer and we'll negotiate. I expect people to try to strike a bargain. I enjoy the game of bartering."

Bernard has these words for the novice pawnshop browser and would-be buyer: "Anybody who buys from a pawnshop must ask about return policies, exchanges and warranties. I have a guarantee on everything I sell. I have an exchange policy and even offer the customer a layaway plan. I won't give them their money back; but if they're unhappy with something they've purchased, sure, I'll exchange that item for something else in the shop."

Bobby Smith has owned and managed a pawnshop since 1957.

FDIC head protective of his 'baby'

NEW YORK (AP) — L. William Seidman is a lot like a protective parent when it comes to the nation's banking funds.

Nothing gets his guard up more than talk of a proposed matchup between his "baby," the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which insures commercial bank deposits, and the wayward thrift insurer, the Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp.

"People keep telling us they have to get married, and we're looking at the bride very carefully," said Seidman, FDIC chairman for the past three years and one of the most forceful regulators in Washington.

As he tries to help set the banking agenda for the Bush administration, Seidman (pronounced Seed-Mun) is blunt about his feelings on the thrift crisis and opposition to an FDIC-FSLIC merger, which some propose as a step toward solving FSLIC's money problems. Banks, though, worry such a merger will result in skyrocketing insurance premiums.

"There was a time when you could have merged the two. (But) a merger now will bankrupt the funds," Seidman said in an interview.

Unlike the FDIC, FSLIC is technically insolvent due to the large number of problem-thrift bailouts. Last year alone, FSLIC spent $38.6 billion to help merge or sell 222 insolvent S&Ls. Hundreds more remain financially shaky.

Seidman proposes, among other things, that the government bite the bullet by spending another $30 billion in 1989 to close 100 of the sickest thrifts. The other problem S&Ls could be dealt with over a longer period of time.

He also wants the government to consider revamping the entire deposit insurance system to include new broad powers for his agency and splitting FSLIC from its parent, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

"If I were advising the president I think he should do it (resolve the thrift crisis) early on in the honeymoon days ... when it's someone else's problem," he said. "If he waits too long, it becomes his problem. It's not a politically attractive issue."

Seidman's zeal is understandable. He had his own problems after taking the helm of the FDIC in 1985.

For one thing, he inherited the fallout from Continental Illinois Corp.'s near demise a year before. During his tenure, Seidman has contended with more than 600 bank failures, including a post-Depression record 221 in 1988.

The FDIC posted its first operating loss last year, although it remains firmly solvent, with a net worth of around $15 billion at the end of 1988.

Seidman, 67, came to the job with surprising little banking experience.

At the time of his appointment, he was dean of the College of Business at Arizona State University. Before that, he served as vice chairman at copper giant Phelps Dodge Corp. and a managing parter in the accounting firm Seidman & Seidman, started by his father and uncle.

His business acumen and investment savvy also have helped make him a millionaire many times over, and he has several homes around the country, including one in Hawaii. He shares some of his business smarts in a just-published book he co-authored, "Competitiveness: the Executive's Guide to Success."

FDIC Chairman William Seidman

Seidman also is no stranger to Republican politics. From 1974 to 1977 he served as assistant for economic affairs under President Ford, a childhood friend from his hometown Grand Rapids, Mich. From 1983 to 1984 he was co-chairman of the White House Conference on Productivity.

He also ran an unsuccessful campaign to become Michigan auditor general in the 1960s.

All that experience "and my good looks," Seidman said, has helped in tackling the banking world. There have been some big issues to tackle, including: the Latin debt problem, the campaign to expand into investment banking, and lately, the debt-financed takeover craze, which Seidman warns could endanger big lending banks.

"My experience says that credibility is the No. 1 asset you have to have," Seidman said, "and telling it like it is is the best way to deal with things."

A free-market advocate, Seidman has been called a team player by those who know him well. But he's also not afraid to speak his mind.

For instance, at the American Bankers Association annual convention in Honolulu last fall, a red-faced Seidman denounced the comptroller of the currency, Robert L. Clarke, who is on the board of the FDIC, for suggesting that commercial banks prepare for a possible FDIC-FSLIC merger. Just the day before the two men held a friendly, informal news conference.

"He (Seidman) feels very strongly that the resolution (of the thrift crisis) should not come on the backs of commercial banks," said James J. McDermott Jr., a banking analyst with the investment firm Keefe Bruyette & Woods.

"He has been a good steward for the industry at a time when the effects of deregulation (of the 1970s) have caused signficant turmoil as shown by the bank failures over the years.

"He has been a breath of fresh air."

Panasonic settles price-fixing charges

NEW YORK (AP) — Up to 665,000 Panasonic customers victimized by a nationwide price-fixing scheme are due as much as $16 million in refunds from the Japanese consumer electronics giant, officials said.

The settlement Panasonic agreed to last week could be extended to every state except Hawaii, New York State Attorney General Robert Abrams told a news conference.

Abrams said Panasonic cheated customers by illegally pressuring thousands of retailers, including such major chains as K mart and Montgomery Ward, to charge list price.

"There was an elaborate nationwide policing scheme whereby certain retailers acted as stool pigeons, as rats, and they would report that somebody down the street is charging less," said Lloyd Constantine, chief of the attorney general's antitrust bureau.

Abrams said other electronics manufacturers were being investigated, but declined to identify them or say whether there would be any charges.

"We voluntarily resolved the matter in the belief that a quick settlement would help avoid protracted and costly litigation and disruption to our dealers and our business," said Ralph Wolfe, vice president of Panasonic, a division of Matsushita Electric Corp. of America with headquarters in Secaucus, N.J.

Abrams said the scheme involved 16 products sold under the Panasonic and Technics labels, including videocassette recorders, video cameras, cordless phones, answering machines and stereo equipment.

Panasonic agreed in the settlement to make refunds of at least $8.5 million and up to $16 million to customers nationwide who purchased its products between March 1 and Aug. 31 of last year.

Panasonic prices were 5 percent to 10 percent higher on average because of the scheme, Abrams said.

"In a few short months over $15 million was extorted from consumers in the form of higher prices," he said.

Abrams said Panasonic began fixing prices in March, but stopped after six months when it learned of his investigation. The company had planned to extend the scheme to include all its products, he said.

Panasonic coerced retailers into charging full list prices by threatening to stop supplying stores that sold its products for less than the suggested price, he said.

The attorney general could not say how many retailers participated, but said "more retailers went along than opposed it."

Abrams' office learned of the scheme when an unidentified major retailer that does business in New York "bitterly complained" it was being pressured by Panasonic to strictly comply with price guidelines, he said.

Different angle can give new perspective to pet notions

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Since economic thinking periodically succumbs to conventions and fads, it is sometimes revealing and often wise to take an oblique perspective, to look from the side rather than dead on.

If you do, you may see some pet notions assume a different appearance, just as people in profile sometimes appear differently than they do face to face.

Consider the notion, sometimes expressed by the impatient, that the trade deficit be cleaned up once and for all during the next administration. Why piddle around; let's get it over with.

BUSINESS MIRROR

But to do so would mean putting people out of work, lowering real incomes and retarding economic growth. This would severely diminish imports. In theory, it could be done — but not without domestic and probably worldwide recession.

Forced recessions used to be part of economic policy, whether stated or denied, and there are pure economists around who still maintain that a good recession is a wholesome thing for the trade defict. Sort of like a purgative.

Today, however, economics is more heavily dosed with politics than it was in the immediate post-World War II years. Recessions, though they will happen, are less likely to be a consequence of abrupt economic policy changes.

Another issue deserving of a different perspective is that of exporting jobs. It is a contentious one, often used by labor in criticizing Washington's economic policy. By importing, it is said, we're shipping jobs abroad.

To which one economist, Professor William Dunkelberg, responds: "Currently, we employ 62.5 percent of our over-16 population, the highest proportion in history. If we're losing jobs to foreigners, it's hard to figure where."

Dunkelberg, dean of Temple University's business school, suggests that if the thesis had validity the evidence would show up as a decline of manufacturing jobs. But it hasn't. Manufacturing employment is strong again.

True, he says, there's been a job loss in unionized, protected automotive and steel industries where, he claims, wages were kept artificially high. But jobs in some other manufacturing areas have grown, along with productivity.

How about foreign investment in the United States, an issue that irritates and provokes millions of Americans? As they see it, foreigners are buying up the United States. It's economic warfare, they say, and Americans are losing.

This one demands perspective, to wit:

One reason net foreign investment has grown is that Americans, themselves, are investing more in the United States and less abroad. Again, Dunkelberg explains:

"The reason we are doing this is the same reason there is more foreign investment here — the United States is a very good place to invest!"

From a historical perspective, he adds, growth has been the strongest in the United States during periods of strong foreign investment. When foreigners seek a good thing, they sometimes do a good thing: They make the country grow.

Moreover, foreign investment leaves hostages. Plants and buildings they erect in the United States cannot be taken home. "When things sour a bit," says the professor, "We can buy them back at a lower price."

In the meantime, shouldn't some thought be given to foreign investment in terms of jobs provided, wages earned, taxes paid, and products put on the competitively priced marketplace?

It's only a slightly different perspective from the conventional one, but it suggests the possibilities in taking a second look at what might at first seem to be one-faceted situations.

Pacific Gas loses $487.1 million

New York Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — The Pacific Gas and Electric Co. has reported a loss of $487.1 million in the fourth quarter.

The company attributed the loss to previously announced one-time write-offs that stemmed from the settlement of a rate case involving the Diablo Canyon nuclear power plant. In that case, the California Public Utility Commission refused to allow the utility to increase rates to recover about $2 billica of the plant's $5.8 billion cost.

Focus on China

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Since the 1800s, the most popular form of Chinese drama has been Beijing or Peking opera.

Characterized by glorious costumes, stylized acting, and incredible make-up and masks, the Peking opera, often referred to as "action opera," encompasses all aspects of performance from song and dance to juggling, sword throwing, martial arts, mime and Chinese acrobatics.

West Texans will have the opportunity to see this type of opera February 2, when the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum and Library Hall of Fame brings the performing troupe from Chongqing, China, to town for an 8 p.m. performance at Lee High School Auditorium.

The Petroleum Museum, the largest and most complex petroleum-related museum in the world, has been interested for some time in staging a benefit.

"We did not want to duplicate benefits already going on in town," says Ed Rowland, executive vice president and director of the museum.

This form of opera seemed a good beginning benefit because of Midland's connections with its sister city in China — Dongying, a petroleum-based town — and the fact that Nancy Anguish, as president of the museum's board of trustees, was familiar with this type of opera.

"It seemed a natural way to link the museum with China and with a special benefit that no one else would duplicate," Rowland says. "This is the first of what we hope is a series of major special benefits that will be of interest to and service to the community."

Mrs. Anguish recalls her first exposure to this type of opera, which occurred during her trip to China along with her husband, Buddy Anguish, in May 1983.

"We were just entranced by it, amazed by it, never seen anything like it in our lives," she says. "When we first heard it, the music was so different that we weren't quite sure if our ears could take the strains. And then as the story and show progresses, the music becomes so much a part of it you don't notice it anymore."

The next place the Anguishes were to see this type of opera was in Midland, where they were instrumental in bringing the Beijing troupe to perform.

Mrs. Anguish well remembers her apprehension.

"We had sold a full house at the community theater, and we had a waiting list. I was afraid that when I saw it here in Midland, Texas, it wouldn't be as appealing as it had been when I saw it in Beijing, China, and so I had spent some very nervous weeks prior to their arrival with this sold-out house at $25 per ticket not knowing how the audience would receive it.

"The minute the curtain opened and they started acting I realized that it showed just as well in Midland as it did in China."

Peking opera, the most popular form of drama in China, tells stories based on Chinese history and folklore. Pictured here are members of the performing troupe from Chongqing, China, who will perform in Midland Feb. 2. The performance is a benefit for the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum.

OPERA

As for the upcoming performance, Mrs. Anguish says, "I'm expecting the audience to be completely awed by it. And we expect a full house again."

Peking opera is a generic name for this kind of performance, Mrs. Anguish says.

The performers enact excerpts from fables. Those which will be performed in the upcoming Peking opera by the Chongqing troupe are not the ones seen previously in Midland when the troupe from Beijing was here.

Tickets, priced at $15 general admission and $100 for patron seating which includes dinner before the performance, are selling fast. For more information, call 683-4403, or go by the museum, 1500 Interstate 20 West.

The Peking opera performance is the climax of several temporary exhibitions and programs at the Petroleum Museum focusing on the People's Republic of China.

On display at the museum through Feb. 26 is the exhibition, "The People of Dongying: Midland's Sister City."

Dongying is a newly established city organized almost 100 years after Midland was first settled.

"The People of Dongying" was developed by the Petroleum Museum, in cooperation with the Foreign Affairs Department of Dongying, and highlights the work, life, local conditions and customs of Dongying people.

In addition, this month's Brown Bag Lunch Series at the museum has focused on China.

Coming up at noon Wednesday, Allene and Walter Kleweno will take their audience on a tour of China with a personal touch. The programs are free, and the museum supplies drinks.

So far this month, the museum's program has featured Bud Hensley talking about the Midland-Dongying sister city relationship and David Mussett presenting a talk and demonstration of t'ai chi ch'uan.

Mussett, an independent geologist, first learned t'ai chi ch'uan 10 years ago when his father-in-law talked him into joining him in taking a course in Taos, N.M.

"I was interested because I was doing yoga at the time, and it had appeal to me," Mussett says. "It made me a lot more flexible than yoga. It works on the joints; it works on everything, whatever kind of health goal you might have."

T'ai chi ch'uan, an ancient Chinese discipline of meditative movements practiced as a system of exercises, is also a martial arts form.

Mussett, who teaches this process Saturday mornings at the Unitarian Universalist Church, explains how the exercises relate to Chinese philosophy.

"The Chinese say that whatever is hard and brittle and stiff is dead, and whatever is flexible and yielding is alive, and so t'ai chi ch'uan is designed to prevent that hardening and brittling that happens as you get older and make people pliable so they'll live longer and feel youthful."

He likes the ease of this type of exercise once its learned.

"You can go through it in work clothes; it doesn't take any special equipment and not a lot of time. If you were able to exercise 20 minutes a day, you could gain most of benefits, if you knew how to do it right."

Those benefits range from, Mussett says, "healing a bad shoulder all the way to enlightenment — whatever goal you might have physically or mentally."

Rowland recalls Mussett's demonstration.

"During his exercises, everybody was spellbound. There was a real interest in many audience members in learning t'ai chi ch'uan. I noticed one audience member held his uneaten hamburger in his hand for about 10 minutes before he remembered it and sat it down."

The Petroleum Museum's primary purpose is to educate the public about the oil industry.

"In addition to our role as interpreter for the petroleum industry, the museum's fame as a teller of the industry story is really worldwide," Rowland says. "During the last two or three years, we have had visitors from Indonesia, Norway and Malaysia who came to the United States mainly to see the Petroleum Museum in connection with planned petroleum museums in their own nations."

In keeping with that objective, the museum established the Fuqua Lecture Series, weekend camp ins for youth groups and field trips.

The special programs at the museum reflect the effort being made to make, Rowland says, "the museum very much a part of the community and a real asset to Midland."

The museum depicts every aspect of the search for oil and gas from the adventurous times of the early day wildcatter to the scientific techniques of today's highly trained professional. Thus, the museum's existing exhibits are constantly being upgraded.

For example, the museum's new three-screen show, which replaces one which opened in 1981 and is now outdated, will be installed by the end of the month. Funded by the Dodge-Jones Foundation, the show traces man's increasing dependence on petroleum from prehistoric times through the kerosene, gasoline and petrochemical eras.

"It also talks about who has the world's reserves of petroleum, and the fact that American must import oil to meet its needs and concludes that we must be careful not to put ourselves in an over-dependent position on foreign oil and must conserve and keep on developing our own petroleum resources."

The museum has added a "very large mural" behind its pipeline patrol airplane which shows the terrain over which the plane is flying.

"It actually makes the exhibit much more interesting," Rowland says. "We are also redoing the sound track of the exhibit to improve its quality.

"Few people realize the cost of operating the museum and its high tech exhibits. For example, a bulb for the airplane projector costs $1200 to $1400 and must be replaced yearly and replacement film for the projector runs about $700 a year.

"The actual cost to operate the museum is well over $10 per visitor so you can see that the $2 admission fee really covers a fraction of the actual cost."

The museum is open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday and from 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. Tickets are $2 for adults, $1 for children and pre-schoolers are free.

"Bringing the Peking opera to Midland not only will provide an opportunity for the people of the Permian Basin to experience the performing art forms of the Chinese culture dating back thousands of years; it also will benefit the Petroleum Museum's operating fund," Rowland says.

"The net proceeds also will be matched by a Texas foundation; the match will go toward the museum's endowment fund. All this helps the museum interpret the cultural and industrial history of West Texas."

'Shakespeare LIVE' like being transported to playwright's time

Temple

"Theater — man's age old playground for his imagination. Here we dare to think, here we dare to do, here we dare to be anything we can imagine."

These words by Burdette Parks when he opened his one-man show "Shakespeare LIVE," set the stage for me to go with him as Shakespeare on a journey back in time. I felt as if I had been provided with the opportunity to view the Elizabethan audience, stage and this famous playwright in person.

It was a most remarkable trip and a delightful close to a week filled with opportunities to learn about this most famous of English playwrights during Midland Community Theatre's "Shakespeare LIVE and Lively."

I already felt as if I had been lifted out of the reality of Midland, Texas, 1989, after driving to Theatre Midland surrounded by lovely falling snowflakes. And then to have a story teller so effectively weave his illusions that I rarely found myself in the theater chair, was much like experiencing a double banana split and, of course, suffering no ill side effects from such excess.

The evening reminded me of a Midland-Odessa Symphony performance in March of 1987 when guest conductor Kurt Woss led the orchestra through "A Night in Vienna." The evening's program included waltzes such as "On The Beautiful Blue Danube" by "Waltz King" Johann Strauss Jr. Also on the program were works by Joseph Strauss and one selection from Mozart.

This experience occurred in the reverse. Driving to the Lee High School, the overcast sky felt grim.

The program was so uplifting that I was moved out of being out of sorts with potential rain and sleet and transferred to a Vienna which existed in what feels like a quieter more romantic time. The music sparkled under Woss' apt direction; it was easy to see he really loved this music and conducting.

When the concert was over, the first thing I noticed as I stepped outside was the snow glistening through the lights.

Suddenly, the whole experience had that sense of magic. My young companion — John Coldwell, age 14 — and I danced across the parking lot, savoring the sense of another time and place.

More recently, the symphony just completed its third master season concerts of the 1988-89 season. This time the guest artist was French hornist Thomas Bacon of Houston.

The program, which featured the symphony's chamber orchestra, included Bacon performing R. Strauss' Horn Concerto No. 1 in E flat, Opus 11 and Bacon and David Urschel, French hornist with the MOSC, performing Haydn's Concerto in E flat major for Two Horns and Orchestra. The performance flowed from beginning to end.

Before closing, I want to mention a couple who are providing those Midlanders who have discovered them with an opportunity to enjoy acoustic-electric music.

"Joseph and Teresa" are playing through April 15 at Goodnight's in the Midland Hilton. Approximate hours for their show are from 7:30 to 11:30 p.m. Tuesdays through Thursdays and beginning at 8:30 p.m. Fridays and Saturdays.

This duo performs country, blues, folk and pop selections. Teresa sings much of the material, such as "Sumemrtime," from the heart.

They also do numerous pieces which are original. The night I was there, their original selections were well received.

No two sets are exactly alike.

I remember many moons ago when Joseph Brunelle, whose parents are Midlanders, played a solo routine at Cody Cattle Company. Now, he has added Teresa not only to his act but to his life. The two are married and make lovely music together.

Museum in El Paso has art exhibits

EL PASO — During the month of January the El Paso Museum of Art is presenting two exhibitions drawn from its permanent collections: "Selections from the Permanent Collection" and "Works from the Western Collection."

"Selections from the Permanent Collection" will feature a broad range of work indicative of the museum's collecting interests.

The exhibition includes American and Spanish Colonial work of the 18th century; paintings by turn-of-the-century American Impressionists such as Childe Hassam and John Twachtman displayed next to examples of early American modernism by John Marin and Abraham Walkowitz; Hispanic bultos and retablos; and the work of contemporary artists Wayne Thiebaud and Luis Jimenez among others.

"Works from the Western Collection" is a sampling of paintings, drawings and sculpture that reflects the romanticized vision of the American West, its landscape, and its inhabitants. In keeping with work in this genre, there are cowboys, Indians, broad vistas and wild horses on view. Special emphasis has been given to the popular work of El Pasoan Tom Lea. Other artists represented in the exhibition are Charles Russell, Peter Hurd, Fritz Scholder and R.C. Gorman.

For more information, contact Kevin Donovan, curator, 1-541-4040.

Singing telegram debuts

The singing telegram was introduced in New York City by Western Union on July 28, 1933.

Philadelphia violist to perform with quartet

From Staff Reports

Appearing with the Thouvenel String Quartet for its February concerts will be Judy Geist, violist and current member of the renowned Philadelphia Orchestra.

Praised by audiences and reviewers alike for her "Rich, warm tome" and "musical sensitivity," Ms. Geist will join the Thouvenel for a performance of the Mozart Viola Quintet in G Minor.

The Brahms Quartet in A Minor will complete tieh program which will begin at 8 p.m. Saturday, Feb. 4, in the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium, Midland College, and at 3 p.m. Sunday, Feb. 5, in the Founder's Building at the University of texas of the Permian Basin.

The Odessa performance is sponsored by Texaco USA, Inc.

A well-known figure in chamber music, Ms. Geist was a member of the Audubon Quartet, has appeared with leading ensembles and music festuvals throughout the United States and Europe, was principal violist of the Philharmonia Virtuosi and has performed frequently with Orpheus and the American Chamber Ensemble.

Born in Long Island, Ms. Geist attended the Curtis Institute of Music as a student of Joseph de Pasquale and the members of the Guarneri String Quartet.

A prolific artist, she is a painter and published photographer.

In addition to its active schedule in Midland, which includes performing numerous concerts in the public school this month, the Thouvenel has several concerts throughout Texas, including Alpine, San Angelo and Lubbock, where the members have been invited to perform the "Seven Last Words of Christ" by Haydn.

"In November, the Thouvenel's concert in Houston was highly successful, playing to a 'sold-out house' and receiving praise from the Houston Chronicle for their 'strongly defined performances,'" says a release from the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale, Inc. the Thouvenel String Quartet is a resident quartet of the MOSC.

In March, the quartet will travel to Europe for concerts in Holland and Belgium.

Tickets for the Feb. 4 and 5 concerts are $5 general admission and $3 for students and senior citizens. Tickets may be purchased at the door or may be charged by calling 563-5269.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Valentines on display

Valentines with lace and sweet sentiments, funny valentines, valentines with sarcastic intent and valentines with timely inscriptions fill the galleries in the Turner Mansion of the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

"Valentines: The Art of Romance," an exhibition of over 200 valentines representing several eras in Europe and the United States, is on display through Feb. 15.

These valentines illustrate how St. Valentine's Day has changed as social mores and customs changed.

Two extremes of "fashion" include the highly ornately sentimental and the comic ranging from humorous to brashly insulting.

Unusual cards decorated with beads and foldouts which make three dimensional miniature stage settings are featured as well as embossed and pin-prick designs, needlepoint and ribbon decorations.

The comic valentines range from puns and plays on words to those with caricatures in garish colors and offensive verses.

Text panels tell the history of St. Valentine's Day and its observances and such information as how the London Post Office responded to complaints about insulting cards.

The display is from Blair-Murrah Exhibitions of Kansas City, Mo. The organization provides traveling exhibitions for museums and galleries.

The museum is open Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and on Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m. No admission is charged.

Art subject of program

The Museum of the Southwest continues its Brown Bag Lunch program series Wednesday at noon with a slide presentation from the National Gallery of Art.

"The Eye of Thomas Jefferson: Art and Reason and Architecture" presents historical and social influences on Jefferson's many creative ventures including architecture.

This program is held in relation to the museum's photography exhibition, "The Architecture Around Us: Midland/Ector Counties," which opens Tuesday in the south wing.

The museum's Video Tuesday Afternoons during the remainder of January continue the theme of architecture.

Tuesday's video will be "Colonial Williamsburg Sampler" showing architecture and decor of American colonial times and how the style of buildings met the hardships of the seasons.

On Jan. 31, "Le Corbusier," a documentary on the works of one of the most important and controversial architects of the 20th century, will be shown. This video explores Le Corbusier's revolutionary ideas on architecture and urban renewal and includes tours of his most important buildings.

Videos are shown at 12 noon, 2 and 4 p.m. Noon viewers may bring a lunch. Drinks are provided.

Children's art classes set

Two Funday classes for children are scheduled at the Museum of the Southwest on Saturday, Feb. 4. Registration is due by Feb. 1.

"Shapes in Space: The Geometry of Architecture" will be taught by Francine Weaver in the museum's south wing. Games and art projects will teach basic architectural terms and concepts.

The current photography exhibition, The Architecture Around Us: Midland/Ector Counties, will be used to show examples of architectural det... and design. The ability to see what is around us will be heightened with this class experience.

Ms. Weaver recently retired from teaching in the Midland Independent School District. Her experience includes the gifted and talented program at Carver Center.

Children ages 6 to 8 may attend from 1 to 2 p.m., and ages 9 to 12 are scheduled from 2:30 to 4 p.m.

Fee is $3.50 per child, and tickets must be purchased at the museum by Feb. 1. Fees may be mailed to the Museum at 1705 W. Missouri, 79701-6516.

For additional information contact Marilyn Bassinger or Ann Greer at 683-2882.

MCT holds over 'Alice'

Midland Community Theatre's hit show "A...My Name is Alice" has been held over for an additional performance at 8 p.m. Saturday at the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave.

"A...My Name is Alice" opens with a chorus of "All-Girl Band" and races along full-swing with 20 musical songs and sketches performed by six women who play at least 20 characters. Other songs include "Emily, the MBA," "Friends," "Sisters," "Bluer Than You" and "Honeypot."

The ensemble consists of Patsy Allen, Carol Cristiani, Debora Dillard, Barbara Iglehart, Patty Loftis and Dana Ritter.

This special return engagement is not a membership show, but theater members will receive a discount. Tickets are $10 general admission and $8 for MCT members.

MCT's 1989 memberships are available and include a chance to win a trip to Spain compliments of American Airlines. For information or reservations call MCT's box office, 682-4111.

Christian duo to perform

ODESSA — the contemporary Christian duo Harvest will perform at 7:30 p.m. Monday at Bonham Junior High, Odessa.

Averaging over 100 concerts a year, Harvest travels the nations singing songs from its last five albums — "Give Them Back," "Only the Overcomers," "Voices," "Send Us to the World" and "It's Alright Now." Songs Harvest is known for include "The Battle is the Lord's," "Stand," "Army of the Lord," "Blood of the Lamb," "All That is in Me" and "Because I Am."

The two members are Jerry Williams, a graduate of Odessa High School, and Ed Kerr.

The concert is sponsored by Street Level Ministries. For more information call 1-362-8195.

Exhibit focuses on women

ODESSA — Previously tucked away in attics, diaries, museums and libraries, some of the stories of Texas women are told at last in the exhibition "Texas Women: A Celebration of History" on display Wednesday at The Presidential Museum, 622 N. Lee.

Produced by the University of Texas Institute of Texan Cultures in conjunction with the Texas Foundation for Women's resources, the exhibit highlights the impact of women on Texas culture, government, economy, family and community life.

The exhibit will be on display until Feb. 25. The museum is open Tuesday through Saturday. No admission is charged.

'Limelighters' to sing

Midland Community Concerts continues its season with The Fabulous Limeliters at 8 p.m. Saturday at Midland High School Auditorium.

Beginning as a trio in 1959, The Fabulous Limeliters sing and play with an awareness of the past as well as the present.

No single admissions are sold to MCC performances. Admission is by season membership only. For more information call 684-4557.

'Bluebeard's Castle,' 'Erwartung' to be aired

This season's new productions of the double-bill of Bela Bartok's "Bluebeard's Castle" and Arnold Schoenberg's "Erwartung" will be broadcast live from the stage of the Metropolitan Opera house on Saturday afternoon, Jan. 28 at 12:30 Central Time over the Texaco-Metropolitan Opera Radio Network. It will be heard locally over radio station KWMJ FM 103.

In "Bluebeard's Castle" Samuel Ramey is the enigmatic Bluebeard and Jessye Norman will be heard as his new wife Judith. "Bluebeard's Castle" was given its first ever Met staging in June of 1974, and was last heard over the Texaco-Metropolitan Opera Radio Network in February of 1975.

The monodrama "Erwartung" will have its broadcast premiere with Miss Norman as the terrified woman who searches desperately in the darkened woods for her lover only to find him brutally murdered.

Both "Bluebeard's Castle" and "Erwartung" stem from the same period, composed respectively in 1911 and 1909, and show the era's preoccupation with psychological inwardness and symbolism.

"Bluebeard's Castle" is an exploration of a man's soul. A man with power, fame and success, is incapable of giving love. Door by door Judith opens his soul and painfully reveals his darkest inner secrets.

"Erwartung" does not depict literal events, but is an exploration, like a nightmare, of the woman's subconscious — a place where illusory memories of reality fail to withstand her nameless fears of the unknown.

The conductor for both operas will be James Levine and the announcer for the broadcast is Peter Allen.

During the single intermission, pianist Garrick Ohlsson will discuss the art of the piano encore.

Ceramics at Gallery 1114

Gallery 1114 is hosting a one-man show for Jim Romberg, nationally known ceramic artist noted for his skill and creativity in the Raku method, through Feb. 23.

Romberg's extensive background includes a BA in Ancient and Medieval History from Pomona College and studies at the Sorbonne in Paris and the Union Theological Seminary in New York. In 1972 he received an master of fine arts in ceramics from Claremont Graduate School in California.

He has received awards and grants from the Tiffany Foundation and the National Endowment for the Arts.

Having taught and jurored ceramic art around the country and in Europe, Romberg has also served as Director of the Ceramics Department at the Sun Valley Center for the Arts and Humanities in Idaho, and he currently teaches at Southern Oregon State College.

He organized the panel and demonstrated for the recent Raku Invitational at the Kansas City Contemporary Art Museum. This is Romberg's second one-man show at Gallery 1114.

In this exhibit, the artist continues to explore clay as a sculptural medium while still using traditional pottery forms. "Raku," said Romberg, "is both creative attitude and using to advantage the smoking and firing that can't be duplicated in any other art form."

Gallery 1114 is a contemporary artists' cooperative located at 1114 N. Big Spring and is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday through Saturday and 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. on Sunday.

'Beaches' brings tears, laughter

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

Salcedo

Just when you thought it was safe to go to a movie without crying, along comes this year's "Terms of Endearment." "Beaches," the premiere project under Midler's All Girl Productions banner (formed in 1985), is a real get-out-your-handkerchiefs blend of comedy and drama.

The film features Ms. Midler in her first dramatic role since her Oscar-nominated performance in "The Rose." And holding her own against Ms. Midler's virtuoso performance is Barbara Hershey, forming a subtle, but intense contrast to the Divine Miss M.

Ms. Midler and Ms. Hershey are cast as childhood friends, Cecilia Caroiton (C.C.) Bloom and Hillary Whitney, respectively. The film opens in the orange glow of a sunset during C.C.'s concert rehearsal at the Hollywood Bowl. She gets a message that causes her to drop everything, and head off into a rainstorm for a sojourn to Atlantic City.

The scene merges into a soft focus beach setting of C.C. as a brazen 11-year-old performer (played with uncanny panache by Mayim Bialik, recently seen on television's "The Facts of Life" and "Webster"). The young C.C. comes to the aid of the lost Hillary, and the two, who seem to have absolutely nothing in common, form a fast friendship. The dreamy quality surrounding these first two scenes indicate that they will be pivotal moments in a lifelong friendship which will confront the realities of age, rivalry, success and finally mortality.

Director Garry Marshall (Penny's brother) gives the best description of his leading ladies. He said "Barbara is a very fine solo instrument that can play almost any song; she just soars. Bette is an entire orchestra."

Ms. Midler's domineering presence never overshadows Ms. Hershey's freshness as a debutante and loving mother. Lainie Kazan stands out as the ultimate stage mother, described by the young C.C. as "That's no woman: That's my mother."

Spalding Gray also does a nice job as the confused doctor who nearly convinces the spur-of-the-moment C.C. to leave Broadway, but he does have one of the film's most memorable lines. "I don't understand it," he says after the departing C.C. "I mean, just yesterday she was telling me she wanted to be a nurse."

Aside from the humor, Marshall manages to pull out all the dramatic stops, and the direction during the song "Wind Beneath My Wings" is touching without being overly sentimental. The soundtrack alone is worth the price of admission, and Ms. Midler's voice has never been better. Also memorable are the last few words, shouted joyfully by one of the young actresses: "Keep in Touch." The moment works so beautifully it's almost a crime. So chase away your winter blues, head out for a real hearfelt day at the beach, and experience two women's "story of love."

"Beaches" rates four rigs.

MOVIE RIG COUNT

- DRY HOLE — a complete and total loss
- STRIPPER — barely worth the time
- PRODUCER — a good investment
- GUSHER — not to be missed

"Beaches," rated PG-13, includes some off-color language and mild adult situations.

Annual NYAC will be held at Odessa College

The Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale, Inc.'s National Young Artist Competition is being held Friday and Saturday at Odessa College.

The annual competition rotates between Midland and Odessa and is handled by the respective symphony guilds in each community.

This year's 58 competitors are from six countries and represent 51 colleges and seven high schools. Those six countries include in addition to the United states, Canada, Japan, Korea, Taiwan and the Peoples Republic of China.

The two-day competition culminates with a free performance of the finalists Saturday. The finals are expected to begin at 7 p.m. in Jack Rogers Auditorium. The public is invited to attend.

Joseph and Theresa Brunelle will be performing weekends at Goodnight's at the Midland Hilton.

Couple will be performing at Goodnight's

"Joseph and Theresa" are performing their brand of acoustic-electric music at the Midland Hilton.

"We play a variety of different kinds of settings," says Joseph Brunelle. "Our original songs have become as popular as anything we do, which is very encouraging for us.

"We play folk and country and blues and nostalgia. For example, we often close our evening with 'When You Wish Upon a Star.' Probably the closest categories we fit in might be folk rock or new age."

The couple will be on stage in Goodnight's from 7:30 to 11:30 p.m. Tuesdays through Thursdays and beginning at 8:30 p.m. Fridays and Saturdays.

"The atmosphere is comfortable and sophisticated," Brunelle says. "It's a perfect listening room. We have a good sound in there."

Burt Reynolds proud husband, father

By ANN HODGES
Hearst News Service

HOLLYWOOD — Burt Reynolds is home again.

He's digging into his Florida roots, with a new wife, a new baby and a new job on ABC. After 18 years of movies that made him a superstar and then left him stuck in a string of critical flops, Reynolds is back where he started — on television. But this time, he's calling the shots.

An ABC executive ticked off the basic terms: "He has a character he helped create, a show he helped produce, and we're shooting it in his own back yard." There's more. ABC is paying him a bundle, and Reynolds demanded and got Tom Selleck, former Magnum, P.I., as executive producer.

The character is B.L. Stryker, TV private eye. The show is one of three rotating series under the umbrella title of ABC Mystery Movie.

"I have never been happier," Reynolds said. "People tell me I've never looked quite this happy on film. It's because I'm coming home to somebody I want to come home to, and there's a kid there. I feel like I'm home for the first time in 30 years."

Movies no longer tempt him. "I don't care what else is offered me," he said. "I'd just like to do this series for three or four years.

"I'll never be as hot in movies again as I was, and I should not have been as hot as I was for as long as I was. I was No. 1 for five years, which had never been done before, except by Shirley Temple, who had considerably more hair than I did."

Reynolds was speaking from his own back yard in Tequesta, just outside of Jupiter, Fla. He was bigger than life, beamed up via satellite and a movie-size screen to TV writers at Universal City's Registry hotel in California. We'd just seen 25 minutes clipped from B.L. Stryker's two-hour opener, but even in that abbreviated form, there was more promise that happy days are here again for Reynolds. B.L. Stryker struck me as a hit about to happen. Reynolds called it a James Garner-type detective show, and he was right.

He and Stryker are two of a kind, Reynolds said. "He's trying to straighten himself out. He was a slob, he was overweight, he has a drinking problem. I understand this guy. His failings have been my failings. And some of the good things about him, I hope, are some of the good things about me."

Stryker premieres Feb. 13. Peter Falk's further adventures of Columbo, with Anthony Andrews as guest star, is the leadoff for the ABC Mystery Movie debut Feb. 6. Air date for the third man, Louis Gossett as adventurous anthropologist Gideon Oliver, hasn't been set, but each spoke in the wheel will make five or six two-hour movies to fill ABC's post-football season.

It was a fine day in Florida, and Reynolds was in fine form but home alone. His bride, Loni Anderson, was en route to Los Angeles. She has a new CBS series working with Universal, and they'll do it in Orlando. "That's close enough that we can commute back and forth," Reynolds said. "And — I'm going to say this out loud, because it sounds so good to me — she's taking our son to LA with her."

For the first time since he and his wife adopted their baby boy, Reynolds talked about being a first-time father. For years, he's been saying he wanted a son.

"I've refused to talk about it before because it is so special," he said. "There hasn't been a photograph of the baby, and there won't be any, if I can help it. I'm sure there will be one, on a long lens, from one of those nasty people down the street. But we're trying to keep the baby as normal as possible in this crazy world."

The National Enquirer is that down-the-road neighbor, at Lantana, Fla., and inquiring photographers of that sheet are notorious for sneaking their shots.

This new TV series is Reynolds' first since detective Dan August in 1970-71. Before that, he was in Riverboat, Gunsmoke and Hawk.

B.L. Stryker shoots in Palm Beach County, "right next door to this house." It won't be shooting in Miami or Fort Lauderdale. "We want to stay away from the (Miami) Vice look," Reynolds said. "We haven't done any drug-runner stories, either, and we won't. Mostly, this is me out of my element, being thrown up against the people of Palm Beach."

Stryker lives on a houseboat, drives a decrepit fin-tailed Cadillac convertible, has an ex-wife (Rita Moreno) who's had four more husbands since him, and he does most of his detecting for the rich folk of Palm Beach proper.

The local gentry were not thrilled over that. For a while, they refused to issue the company a work permit. But it finally came through, and Stryker became the first show to film in Palm Beach.

"I do think the Palm Beach people I've gotten to know over the last 30 years are going to have fun with us, but once in a while you have that guy who's on City Council and has nothing else to do but make statements in the paper. In one I read, he said, 'We don't want those movie people over here, because Burt Reynolds' fans wear shorts and have beer-can openers strapped to their sides. And they'll do dastardly deeds.' "

That one made him laugh. "It's been a long time since I've heard dastardly,' so we immediately wrote a character into the show to say something to me about 'dastardly deeds.' We can take the dialogue right out of their mouths, and that will be the fun of it," he said. "Hopefully, they'll recognize themselves."

Guillaume develops ABC series about interracial relationship

By RICK Du BROW
Hearst News Service

LOS ANGELES — The producer of a new ABC comedy series about a romance between a black man and white woman said he anticipates no problems with the network's Southern stations.

Executive producer Sy Rosen, star Robert Guillaume and Wendy Phillips, who plays his romantic interest, discussed the show's progress with TV columnists on a recent press tour in Universal City.

The series, "The Robert Guillaume Show," has taped 10 of the 12 episodes to which ABC has committed and may debut in March, said a network spokesman.

Guillaume is the former star of ABC's "Benson" sitcom, and Phillips was featured in the canceled NBC series "A Year in the Life."

Rosen said Guillaume, who had a series commitment with ABC, came up with the interracial theme.

"We hope the audience will quickly get beyond color," said Guillaume.

As for the show's handling of fallout from the romance, "We'll treat all that in a humorous fashion," the actor said.

In the series, Guillaume plays a divorced marriage counselor with two children, ages 13 and 14, who becomes attracted to his secretary, Phillips. She also is divorced and has a child.

Living with Guillaume in the show is his father.

A previous sitcom, "The Jeffersons," featured an interracial married couple — a white husband and black wife — but they were not the stars of the series. Rosen produced "The Jeffersons."

Asked whether the Guillaume show was handling the interracial aspect "gingerly," the star said:

"We're not proceeding gingerly."

While the series may be adding a new dimension to TV, he said, "We are not breaking ground among people."

Said Rosen: "We deal with the problems that would occur."

Asked whether Guillaume and Phillips would marry in the show, Rosen and the two stars said that hasn't been decided yet.

Guillaume downplayed the "enlightening" aspects of the show.

"I really don't think the black-white issue has much to do with it," he said. "Love overcomes all of these problems."

"There'll be a growing attraction" between Guillaume and Phillips, said the star, and they'll finally date in the sixth or seventh episode.

Guillaume said there's been a kiss in the ninth episode, "and the roof didn't fall in."

Phillips said she hoped the flirtatious aspect of the relationship would continue because audiences seem to have liked that kind of give-and-take in shows like "Moonlighting."

Of the characters in the Guillaume series, she said, "I do hope they have a sexual relationship. I think they would have to seek therapy if they don't."

"People are just people," said Guillaume.

"(There's been a kiss in the ninth episode) and the roof didn't fall in."

OPERA

As for the upcoming performance, Mrs. Anguish says, "I'm expecting the audience to be completely awed by it. And we expect a full house again."

Peking opera is a generic name for this kind of performance, Mrs. Anguish says.

The performers enact excerpts from fables. Those which will be performed in the upcoming Peking opera by the Chongqing troupe are not the ones seen previously in Midland when the troupe from Beijing was here.

Tickets, priced at $15 general admission and $100 for patron seating which includes dinner before the performance, are selling fast. For more information, call 683-4403, or go by the museum, 1500 Interstate 20 West.

The Peking opera performance is the climax of several temporary exhibitions and programs at the Petroleum Museum focusing on the People's Republic of China.

On display at the museum through Feb. 26 is the exhibition, "The People of Dongying: Midland's Sister City."

Dongying is a newly established city organized almost 100 years after Midland was first settled.

"The People of Dongying" was developed by the Petroleum Museum, in cooperation with the Foreign Affairs Department of Dongying, and highlights the work, life, local conditions and customs of Dongying people.

In addition, this month's Brown Bag Lunch Series at the museum has focused on China.

Coming up at noon Wednesday, Allene and Walter Kleweno will take their audience on a tour of China with a personal touch. The programs are free, and the museum supplies drinks.

So far this month, the museum's program has featured Bud Hensley talking about the Midland-Dongying sister city relationship and David Mussett presenting a talk and demonstration of t'ai chi ch'uan.

Mussett, an independent geologist, first learned t'ai chi ch'uan 10 years ago when his father-in-law talked him into joining him in taking a course in Taos, N.M.

"I was interested because I was doing yoga at the time, and it had appeal to me," Mussett says. "It made me a lot more flexible than yoga. It works on the joints; it works on everything, whatever kind of health goal you might have."

T'ai chi ch'uan, an ancient Chinese discipline of meditative movements practiced as a system of exercises, is also a martial arts form.

Mussett, who teaches this process Saturday mornings at the Unitarian Universalist Church, explains how the exercises relate to Chinese philosophy.

"The Chinese say that whatever is hard and brittle and stiff is dead, and whatever is flexible and yielding is alive, and so t'ai chi ch'uan is designed to prevent that hardening and brittling that happens as you get older and make people pliable so they'll live longer and feel youthful."

He likes the ease of this type of exercise once its learned.

"You can go through it in work clothes; it doesn't take any special equipment and not a lot of time. If you were able to exercise 20 minutes a day, you could gain most of benefits, if you knew how to do it right."

Those benefits range from, Mussett says, "healing a bad shoulder all the way to enlightenment — whatever goal you might have physically or mentally."

Rowland recalls Mussett's demonstration.

"During his exercises, everybody was spellbound. There was a real interest in many audience members in learning t'ai chi ch'uan. I noticed one audience member held his uneaten hamburger in his hand for about 10 minutes before he remembered it and sat it down."

The Petroleum Museum's primary purpose is to educate the public about the oil industry.

"In addition to our role as interpreter for the petroleum industry, the museum's fame as a teller of the industry story is really worldwide," Rowland says. "During the last two or three years, we have had visitors from Indonesia, Norway and Malaysia who came to the United States mainly to see the Petroleum Museum in connection with planned petroleum museums in their own nations."

In keeping with that objective, the museum established the Fuqua Lecture Series, weekend camp ins for youth groups and field trips.

The special programs at the museum reflect the effort being made to make, Rowland says, "the museum very much a part of the community and a real asset to Midland."

The museum depicts every aspect of the search for oil and gas from the adventurous times of the early day wildcatter to the scientific techniques of today's highly trained professional. Thus, the museum's existing exhibits are constantly being upgraded.

For example, the museum's new three-screen show, which replaces one which opened in 1981 and is now outdated, will be installed by the end of the month. Funded by the Dodge-Jones Foundation, the show traces man's increasing dependence on petroleum from prehistoric times through the kerosene, gasoline and petrochemical eras.

"It also talks about who has the world's reserves of petroleum, and the fact that American must import oil to meet its needs and concludes that we must be careful not to put ourselves in an over-dependent position on foreign oil and must conserve and keep on developing our own petroleum resources."

The museum has added a "very large mural" behind its pipeline patrol airplane which shows the terrain over which the plane is flying.

"It actually makes the exhibit much more interesting," Rowland says. "We are also redoing the sound track of the exhibit to improve its quality.

"Few people realize the cost of operating the museum and its high tech exhibits. For example, a bulb for the airplane projector costs $1200 to $1400 and must be replaced yearly and replacement film for the projector runs about $700 a year.

"The actual cost to operate the museum is well over $10 per visitor so you can see that the $2 admission fee really covers a fraction of the actual cost."

The museum is open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday and from 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. Tickets are $2 for adults, $1 for children and pre-schoolers are free.

"Bringing the Peking opera to Midland not only will provide an opportunity for the people of the Permian Basin to experience the performing art forms of the Chinese culture dating back thousands of years; it also will benefit the Petroleum Museum's operating fund," Rowland says.

"The net proceeds also will be matched by a Texas foundation; the match will go toward the museum's endowment fund. All this helps the museum interpret the cultural and industrial history of West Texas."

GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE

'Shakespeare LIVE' like being transported to playwright's time

Temple

"Theater — man's age old playground for his imagination. Here we dare to think, here we dare to do, here we dare to be anything we can imagine."

These words by Burdette Parks when he opened his one-man show "Shakespeare LIVE," set the stage for me to go with him as Shakespeare on a journey back in time. I felt as if I had been provided with the opportunity to view the Elizabethan audience, stage and this famous playwright in person.

It was a most remarkable trip and a delightful close to a week filled with opportunities to learn about this most famous of English playwrights during Midland Community Theatre's "Shakespeare LIVE and Lively."

I already felt as if I had been lifted out of the reality of Midland, Texas, 1989, after driving to Theatre Midland surrounded by lovely falling snowflakes. And then to have a story teller so effectively weave his illusions that I rarely found myself in the theater chair, was much like experiencing a double banana split and, of course, suffering no ill side effects from such excess.

The evening reminded me of a Midland-Odessa Symphony performance in March of 1987 when guest conductor Kurt Woss led the orchestra through "A Night in Vienna." The evening's program included waltzes such as "On The Beautiful Blue Danube" by "Waltz King" Johann Strauss Jr. Also on the program were works by Joseph Strauss and one selection from Mozart.

This experience occurred in the reverse. Driving to the Lee High School, the overcast sky felt grim.

The program was so uplifting that I was moved out of being out of sorts with potential rain and sleet and transferred to a Vienna which existed in what feels like a quieter more romantic time. The music sparkled under Woss' apt direction; it was easy to see he really loved this music and conducting.

When the concert was over, the first thing I noticed as I stepped outside was the snow glistening through the lights.

Suddenly, the whole experience had that sense of magic. My young companion — John Coldwell, age 14 — and I danced across the parking lot, savoring the sense of another time and place.

More recently, the symphony just completed its third master season concerts of the 1988-89 season. This time the guest artist was French hornist Thomas Bacon of Houston.

The program, which featured the symphony's chamber orchestra, included Bacon performing R. Strauss' Horn Concerto No. 1 in E flat, Opus 11 and Bacon and David Urschel, French hornist with the MOSC, performing Haydn's Concerto in E flat major for Two Horns and Orchestra. The performance flowed from beginning to end.

Before closing, I want to mention a couple who are providing those Midlanders who have discovered them with an opportunity to enjoy acoustic-electric music.

"Joseph and Teresa" are playing through April 15 at Goodnight's in the Midland Hilton. Approximate hours for their show are from 7:30 to 11:30 p.m. Tuesdays through Thursdays and beginning at 8:30 p.m. Fridays and Saturdays.

This duo performs country, blues, folk and pop selections. Teresa sings much of the material, such as "Sumemrtime," from the heart.

They also do numerous pieces which are original. The night I was there, their original selections were well received.

No two sets are exactly alike.

I remember many moons ago when Joseph Brunelle, whose parents are Midlanders, played a solo routine at Cody Cattle Company. Now, he has added Teresa not only to his act but to his life. The two are married and make lovely music together.

Museum in El Paso has art exhibits

EL PASO — During the month of January the El Paso Museum of Art is presenting two exhibitions drawn from its permanent collections: "Selections from the Permanent Collection" and "Works from the Western Collection."

"Selections from the Permanent Collection" will feature a broad range of work indicative of the museum's collecting interests.

The exhibition includes American and Spanish Colonial work of the 18th century; paintings by turn-of-the-century American Impressionists such as Childe Hassam and John Twachtman displayed next to examples of early American modernism by John Marin and Abraham Walkowitz; Hispanic bultos and retablos; and the work of contemporary artists Wayne Thiebaud and Luis Jimenez among others.

"Works from the Western Collection" is a sampling of paintings, drawings and sculpture that reflects the romanticized vision of the American West, its landscape, and its inhabitants. In keeping with work in this genre, there are cowboys, Indians, broad vistas and wild horses on view. Special emphasis has been given to the popular work of El Pasoan Tom Lea. Other artists represented in the exhibition are Charles Russell, Peter Hurd, Fritz Scholder and R.C. Gorman.

For more information, contact Kevin Donovan, curator, 1-541-4040.

Singing telegram debuts

The singing telegram was introduced in New York City by Western Union on July 28, 1933.

Philadelphia violist to perform with quartet

From Staff Reports

Appearing with the Thouvenel String Quartet for its February concerts will be Judy Geist, violist and current member of the renowned Philadelphia Orchestra.

Praised by audiences and reviewers alike for her "Rich, warm tome" and "musical sensitivity," Ms. Geist will join the Thouvenel for a performance of the Mozart Viola Quintet in G Minor.

The Brahms Quartet in A Minor will complete tieh program which will begin at 8 p.m. Saturday, Feb. 4, in the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium, Midland College, and at 3 p.m. Sunday, Feb. 5, in the Founder's Building at the University of texas of the Permian Basin.

The Odessa performance is sponsored by Texaco USA, Inc.

A well-known figure in chamber music, Ms. Geist was a member of the Audubon Quartet, has appeared with leading ensembles and music festuvals throughout the United States and Europe, was principal violist of the Philharmonia Virtuosi and has performed frequently with Orpheus and the American Chamber Ensemble.

Born in Long Island, Ms. Geist attended the Curtis Institute of Music as a student of Joseph de Pasquale and the members of the Guarneri String Quartet.

A prolific artist, she is a painter and published photographer.

In addition to its active schedule in Midland, which includes performing numerous concerts in the public school this month, the Thouvenel has several concerts throughout Texas, including Alpine, San Angelo and Lubbock, where the members have been invited to perform the "Seven Last Words of Christ" by Haydn.

"In November, the Thouvenel's concert in Houston was highly successful, playing to a 'sold-out house' and receiving praise from the Houston Chronicle for their 'strongly defined performances,'" says a release from the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale, Inc. the Thouvenel String Quartet is a resident quartet of the MOSC.

In March, the quartet will travel to Europe for concerts in Holland and Belgium.

Tickets for the Feb. 4 and 5 concerts are $5 general admission and $3 for students and senior citizens. Tickets may be purchased at the door or may be charged by calling 563-5269.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Valentines on display

Valentines with lace and sweet sentiments, funny valentines, valentines with sarcastic intent and valentines with timely inscriptions fill the galleries in the Turner Mansion of the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

"Valentines: The Art of Romance," an exhibition of over 200 valentines representing several eras in Europe and the United States, is on display through Feb. 15.

These valentines illustrate how St. Valentine's Day has changed as social mores and customs changed.

Two extremes of "fashion" include the highly ornately sentimental and the comic ranging from humorous to brashly insulting.

Unusual cards decorated with beads and foldouts which make three dimensional miniature stage settings are featured as well as embossed and pin-prick designs, needlepoint and ribbon decorations.

The comic valentines range from puns and plays on words to those with caricatures in garish colors and offensive verses.

Text panels tell the history of St. Valentine's Day and its observances and such information as how the London Post Office responded to complaints about insulting cards.

The display is from Blair-Murrah Exhibitions of Kansas City, Mo. The organization provides traveling exhibitions for museums and galleries.

The museum is open Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and on Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m. No admission is charged.

Art subject of program

The Museum of the Southwest continues its Brown Bag Lunch program series Wednesday at noon with a slide presentation from the National Gallery of Art.

"The Eye of Thomas Jefferson: Art and Reason and Architecture" presents historical and social influences on Jefferson's many creative ventures including architecture.

This program is held in relation to the museum's photography exhibition, "The Architecture Around Us: Midland/Ector Counties," which opens Tuesday in the south wing.

The museum's Video Tuesday Afternoons during the remainder of January continue the theme of architecture.

Tuesday's video will be "Colonial Williamsburg Sampler" showing architecture and decor of American colonial times and how the style of buildings met the hardships of the seasons.

On Jan. 31, "Le Corbusier," a documentary on the works of one of the most important and controversial architects of the 20th century, will be shown. This video explores Le Corbusier's revolutionary ideas on architecture and urban renewal and includes tours of his most important buildings.

Videos are shown at 12 noon, 2 and 4 p.m. Noon viewers may bring a lunch. Drinks are provided.

Children's art classes set

Two Funday classes for children are scheduled at the Museum of the Southwest on Saturday, Feb. 4. Registration is due by Feb. 1.

"Shapes in Space: The Geometry of Architecture" will be taught by Francine Weaver in the museum's south wing. Games and art projects will teach basic architectural terms and concepts.

The current photography exhibition, The Architecture Around Us: Midland/Ector Counties, will be used to show examples of architectural detail and design. The ability to see what is around us will be heightened with this class experience.

Ms. Weaver recently retired from teaching in the Midland Independent School District. Her experience includes the gifted and talented program at Carver Center.

Children ages 6 to 8 may attend from 1 to 2 p.m., and ages 9 to 12 are scheduled from 2:30 to 4 p.m.

Fee is $3.50 per child, and tickets must be purchased at the museum by Feb. 1. Fees may be mailed to the Museum at 1705 W. Missouri, 79701-6516.

For additional information contact Marilyn Bassinger or Ann Greer at 683-2882.

MCT holds over 'Alice'

Midland Community Theatre's hit show "A...My Name is Alice" has been held over for an additional performance at 8 p.m. Saturday at the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave.

"A...My Name is Alice" opens with a chorus of "All-Girl Band" and races along full-swing with 20 musical songs and sketches performed by six women who play at least 20 characters. Other songs include "Emily, the MBA," "Friends," "Sisters," "Bluer Than You" and "Honeypot."

The ensemble consists of Patsy Allen, Carol Cristiani, Debora Dillard, Barbara Iglehart, Patty Loftis and Dana Ritter.

This special return engagement is not a membership show, but theater members will receive a discount. Tickets are $10 general admission and $8 for MCT members.

MCT's 1989 memberships are available and include a chance to win a trip to Spain compliments of American Airlines. For information or reservations call MCT's box office, 682-4111.

Christian duo to perform

ODESSA — the contemporary Christian duo Harvest will perform at 7:30 p.m. Monday at Bonham Junior High, Odessa.

Averaging over 100 concerts a year, Harvest travels the nations singing songs from its last five albums — "Give Them Back," "Only the Overcomers," "Voices," "Send Us to the World" and "It's Alright Now." Songs Harvest is known for include "The Battle is the Lord's," "Stand," "Army of the Lord," "Blood of the Lamb," "All That is in Me" and "Because I Am."

The two members are Jerry Williams, a graduate of Odessa High School, and Ed Kerr.

The concert is sponsored by Street Level Ministries. For more information call 1-362-8195.

Exhibit focuses on women

ODESSA — Previously tucked away in attics, diaries, museums and libraries, some of the stories of Texas women are told at last in the exhibition "Texas Women: A Celebration of History" on display Wednesday at The Presidential Museum, 622 N. Lee.

Produced by the University of Texas Institute of Texan Cultures in conjunction with the Texas Foundation for Women's resources, the exhibit highlights the impact of women on Texas culture, government, economy, family and community life.

The exhibit will be on display until Feb. 25. The museum is open Tuesday through Saturday. No admission is charged.

'Limelighters' to sing

Midland Community Concerts continues its season with The Fabulous Limeliters at 8 p.m. Saturday at Midland High School Auditorium.

Beginning as a trio in 1959, The Fabulous Limeliters sing and play with an awareness of the past as well as the present.

No single admissions are sold to MCC performances. Admission is by season membership only. For more information call 684-4557.

'Bluebeard's Castle,' 'Erwartung' to be aired

This season's new productions of the double-bill of Bela Bartok's "Bluebeard's Castle" and Arnold Schoenberg's "Erwartung" will be broadcast live from the stage of the Metropolitan Opera house on Saturday afternoon, Jan. 28 at 12:30 Central Time over the Texaco-Metropolitan Opera Radio Network. It will be heard locally over radio station KWMJ FM 103.

In "Bluebeard's Castle" Samuel Ramey is the enigmatic Bluebeard and Jessye Norman will be heard as his new wife Judith. "Bluebeard's Castle" was given its first ever Met staging in June of 1974, and was last heard over the Texaco-Metropolitan Opera Radio Network in February of 1975.

The monodrama "Erwartung" will have its broadcast premiere with Miss Norman as the terrified woman who searches desperately in the darkened woods for her lover only to find him brutally murdered.

Both "Bluebeard's Castle" and "Erwartung" stem from the same period, composed respectively in 1911 and 1909, and show the era's preoccupation with psychological inwardness and symbolism.

"Bluebeard's Castle" is an exploration of a man's soul. A man with power, fame and success, is incapable of giving love. Door by door Judith opens his soul and painfully reveals his darkest inner secrets.

"Erwartung" does not depict literal events, but is an exploration, like a nightmare, of the woman's subconscious — a place where illusory memories of reality fail to withstand her nameless fears of the unknown.

The conductor for both operas will be James Levine and the announcer for the broadcast is Peter Allen.

During the single intermission, pianist Garrick Ohlsson will discuss the art of the piano encore.

Ceramics at Gallery 1114

Gallery 1114 is hosting a one-man show for Jim Romberg, nationally known ceramic artist noted for his skill and creativity in the Raku method, through Feb. 23.

Romberg's extensive background includes a BA in Ancient and Medieval History from Pomona College and studies at the Sorbonne in Paris and the Union Theological Seminary in New York. In 1972 he received an master of fine arts in ceramics from Claremont Graduate School in California.

He has received awards and grants from the Tiffany Foundation and the National Endowment for the Arts.

Having taught and jurored ceramic art around the country and in Europe, Romberg has also served as Director of the Ceramics Department at the Sun Valley Center for the Arts and Humanities in Idaho, and he currently teaches at Southern Oregon State College.

He organized the panel and demonstrated for the recent Raku Invitational at the Kansas City Contemporary Art Museum. This is Romberg's second one-man show at Gallery 1114.

In this exhibit, the artist continues to explore clay as a sculptural medium while still using traditional pottery forms. "Raku," said Romberg, "is both creative attitude and using to advantage the smoking and firing that can't be duplicated in any other art form."

Gallery 1114 is a contemporary artists' cooperative located at 1114 N. Big Spring and is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday through Saturday and 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. on Sunday.

Canyon home to many birds

More than 265 species of birds have been seen at Big Morongo Canyon in California, says National Geographic.

'Beaches' brings tears, laughter

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

Salcedo

Just when you thought it was safe to go to a movie without crying, along comes this year's "Terms of Endearment." "Beaches," the premiere project under Midler's All Girl Productions banner (formed in 1985), is a real get-out-your-handkerchiefs blend of comedy and drama.

The film features Ms. Midler in her first dramatic role since her Oscar-nominated performance in "The Rose." And holding her own against Ms. Midler's virtuoso performance is Barbara Hershey, forming a subtle, but intense contrast to the Divine Miss M.

Ms. Midler and Ms. Hershey are cast as childhood friends, Cecilia Caroiton (C.C.) Bloom and Hillary Whitney, respectively. The film opens in the orange glow of a sunset during C.C.'s concert rehearsal at the Hollywood Bowl. She gets a message that causes her to drop everything, and head off into a rainstorm for a sojourn to Atlantic City.

The scene merges into a soft focus beach setting of C.C. as a brazen 11-year-old performer (played with uncanny panache by Mayim Bialik, recently seen on television's "The Facts of Life" and "Webster"). The young C.C. comes to the aid of the lost Hillary, and the two, who seem to have absolutely nothing in common, form a fast friendship. The dreamy quality surrounding these first two scenes indicate that they will be pivotal moments in a lifelong friendship which will confront the realities of age, rivalry, success and finally mortality.

Director Garry Marshall (Penny's brother) gives the best description of his leading ladies. He said "Barbara is a very fine solo instrument that can play almost any song; she just soars. Bette is an entire orchestra."

Ms. Midler's domineering presence never overshadows Ms. Hershey's freshness as a debutante and loving mother. Lainie Kazan stands out as the ultimate stage mother, described by the young C.C. as "That's no woman: That's my mother."

Spalding Gray also does a nice job as the confused doctor who nearly convinces the spur-of-the-moment C.C. to leave Broadway, but he does have one of the film's most memorable lines. "I don't understand it," he says after the departing C.C. "I mean, just yesterday she was telling me she wanted to be a nurse."

Aside from the humor, Marshall manages to pull out all the dramatic stops, and the direction during the song "Wind Beneath My Wings" is touching without being overly sentimental. The soundtrack alone is worth the price of admission, and Ms. Midler's voice has never been better. Also memorable are the last few words, shouted joyfully by one of the young actresses: "Keep in Touch." The moment works so beautifully it's almost a crime. So chase away your winter blues, head out for a real hearfelt day at the beach, and experience two women's "story of love."

"Beaches" rates four rigs.

MOVIE RIG COUNT

- DRY HOLE — a complete and total loss
- STRIPPER — barely worth the time
- PRODUCER — a good investment
- GUSHER — not to be missed

"Beaches," rated PG-13, includes some off-color language and mild adult situations.

Annual NYAC will be held at Odessa College

The Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale, Inc.'s National Young Artist Competition is being held Friday and Saturday at Odessa College.

The annual competition rotates between Midland and Odessa and is handled by the respective symphony guilds in each community.

This year's 58 competitors are from six countries and represent 51 colleges and seven high schools. Those six countries include in addition to the United states, Canada, Japan, Korea, Taiwan and the Peoples Republic of China.

The two-day competition culminates with a free performance of the finalists Saturday. The finals are expected to begin at 7 p.m. in Jack Rogers Auditorium. The public is invited to attend.

Joseph and Theresa Brunelle will be performing weekends at Goodnight's at the Midland Hilton.

Couple will be performing at Goodnight's

"Joseph and Theresa" are performing their brand of acoustic-electric music at the Midland Hilton.

"We play a variety of different kinds of settings," says Joseph Brunelle. "Our original songs have become as popular as anything we do, which is very encouraging for us.

"We play folk and country and blues and nostalgia. For example, we often close our evening with 'When You Wish Upon a Star.' Probably the closest categories we fit in might be folk rock or new age."

The couple will be on stage in Goodnight's from 7:30 to 11:30 p.m. Tuesdays through Thursdays and beginning at 8:30 p.m. Fridays and Saturdays.

"The atmosphere is comfortable and sophisticated," Brunelle says. "It's a perfect listening room. We have a good sound in there."

Burt Reynolds proud husband, father

By ANN HODGES
Hearst News Service

HOLLYWOOD — Burt Reynolds is home again.

He's digging into his Florida roots, with a new wife, a new baby and a new job on ABC. After 18 years of movies that made him a superstar and then left him stuck in a string of critical flops, Reynolds is back where he started — on television. But this time, he's calling the shots.

An ABC executive ticked off the basic terms: "He has a character he helped create, a show he helped produce, and we're shooting it in his own back yard." There's more. ABC is paying him a bundle, and Reynolds demanded and got Tom Selleck, former Magnum, P.I., as executive producer.

The character is B.L. Stryker, TV private eye. The show is one of three rotating series under the umbrella title of ABC Mystery Movie.

"I have never been happier," Reynolds said. "People tell me I've never looked quite this happy on film. It's because I'm coming home to somebody I want to come home to, and there's a kid there. I feel like I'm home for the first time in 30 years."

Movies no longer tempt him. "I don't care what else is offered me," he said. "I'd just like to do this series for three or four years.

"I'll never be as hot in movies again as I was, and I should not have been as hot as I was for as long as I was. I was No. 1 for five years, which had never been done before, except by Shirley Temple, who had considerably more hair than I did."

Reynolds was speaking from his own back yard in Tequesta, just outside of Jupiter, Fla. He was bigger than life, beamed up via satellite and a movie-size screen to TV writers at Universal City's Registry hotel in California. We'd just seen 25 minutes clipped from B.L. Stryker's two-hour opener, but even in that abbreviated form, there was more promise that happy days are here again for Reynolds. B.L. Stryker struck me as a hit about to happen. Reynolds called it a James Garner-type detective show, and he was right.

He and Stryker are two of a kind, Reynolds said. "He's trying to straighten himself out. He was a slob, he was overweight, he has a drinking problem. I understand this guy. His failings have been my failings. And some of the good things about him, I hope, are some of the good things about me."

Stryker premieres Feb. 13. Peter Falk's further adventures of Columbo, with Anthony Andrews as guest star, is the leadoff for the ABC Mystery Movie debut Feb. 6. Air date for the third man, Louis Gossett as adventurous anthropologist Gideon Oliver, hasn't been set, but each spoke in the wheel will make five or six two-hour movies to fill ABC's post-football season.

It was a fine day in Florida, and Reynolds was in fine form but home alone. His bride, Loni Anderson, was en route to Los Angeles. She has a new CBS series working with Universal, and they'll do it in Orlando. "That's close enough that we can commute back and forth," Reynolds said. "And — I'm going to say this out loud, because it sounds so good to me — she's taking our son to LA with her."

For the first time since he and his wife adopted their baby boy, Reynolds talked about being a first-time father. For years, he's been saying he wanted a son.

"I've refused to talk about it before because it is so special," he said. "There hasn't been a photograph of the baby, and there won't be any, if I can help it. I'm sure there will be one, on a long lens, from one of those nasty people down the street. But we're trying to keep the baby as normal as possible in this crazy world."

The National Enquirer is that down-the-road neighbor, at Lantana, Fla., and inquiring photographers of that sheet are notorious for sneaking their shots.

This new TV series is Reynolds' first since detective Dan August in 1970-71. Before that, he was in Riverboat, Gunsmoke and Hawk.

B.L. Stryker shoots in Palm Beach County, "right next door to this house." It won't be shooting in Miami or Fort Lauderdale. "We want to stay away from the (Miami) Vice look," Reynolds said. "We haven't done any drug-runner stories, either, and we won't. Mostly, this is me out of my element, being thrown up against the people of Palm Beach."

Stryker lives on a houseboat, drives a decrepit fin-tailed Cadillac convertible, has an ex-wife (Rita Moreno) who's had four more husbands since him, and he does most of his detecting for the rich folk of Palm Beach proper.

The local gentry were not thrilled over that. For a while, they refused to issue the company a work permit. But it finally came through, and Stryker became the first show to film in Palm Beach.

"I do think the Palm Beach people I've gotten to know over the last 30 years are going to have fun with us, but once in a while you have that guy who's on City Council and has nothing else to do but make statements in the paper. In one I read, he said, 'We don't want those movie people over here, because Burt Reynolds' fans wear shorts and have beer-can openers strapped to their sides. And they'll do dastardly deeds.'"

That one made him laugh. "It's been a long time since I've heard dastardly,' so we immediately wrote a character into the show to say something to me about 'dastardly deeds.' We can take the dialogue right out of their mouths, and that will be the fun of it," he said. "Hopefully, they'll recognize themselves."

Guillaume develops ABC series about interracial relationship

By RICK Du BROW
Hearst News Service

LOS ANGELES — The producer of a new ABC comedy series about a romance between a black man and white woman said he anticipates no problems with the network's Southern stations.

Executive producer Sy Rosen, star Robert Guillaume and Wendy Phillips, who plays his romantic interest, discussed the show's progress with TV columnists on a recent press tour in Universal City.

The series, "The Robert Guillaume Show," has taped 10 of the 12 episodes to which ABC has committed and may debut in March, said a network spokesman.

Guillaume is the former star of ABC's "Benson" sitcom, and Phillips was featured in the canceled NBC series "A Year in the Life."

Rosen said Guillaume, who had a series commitment with ABC, came up with the interracial theme.

"We hope the audience will quickly get beyond color," said Guillaume.

As for the show's handling of fallout from the romance, "We'll treat all that in a humorous fashion," the actor said.

In the series, Guillaume plays a divorced marriage counselor with two children, ages 13 and 14, who becomes attracted to his secretary, Phillips. She also is divorced and has a child.

Living with Guillaume in the show is his father.

A previous sitcom, "The Jeffersons," featured an interracial married couple — a white husband and black wife — but they were not the stars of the series. Rosen produced "The Jeffersons."

Asked whether the Guillaume show was handling the interracial aspect "gingerly," the star said:

"We're not proceeding gingerly."

While the series may be adding a new dimension to TV, he said, "We are not breaking ground among people."

Said Rosen: "We deal with the problems that would occur."

Asked whether Guillaume and Phillips would marry in the show, Rosen and the two stars said that hasn't been decided yet.

Guillaume downplayed the "enlightening" aspects of the show.

"I really don't think the black-white issue has much to do with it," he said. "Love overcomes all of these problems."

"There'll be a growing attraction" between Guillaume and Phillips, said the star, and they'll finally date in the sixth or seventh episode.

Guillaume said there's been a kiss in the ninth episode, "and the roof didn't fall in."

Phillips said she hoped the flirtatious aspect of the relationship would continue because audiences seem to have liked that kind of give-and-take in shows like "Moonlighting."

Of the characters in the Guillaume series, she said, "I do hope they have a sexual relationship. I think they would have to seek therapy if they don't."

"People are just people," said Guillaume.

"(There's been a kiss in the ninth episode) and the roof didn't fall in."

MCT to stage 'Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat'

From Staff Reports

The major musical of the 1989 season, "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat," will be presented Feb. 3 through March 18 in the Davis Theatre I at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

The musical is based on the Old Testament story of Joseph (played by Bobby Marshall), favorite son of Jacob (David Whitaker), who also has 11 other sons.

The brothers include Brian Schwanitz, Andy Salcedo, John Haupert, Greg Rich, Michael Elkins, Bryan Patterson, Brent Boyd, Fritz Anders, Jim Bartlett, Dode Harvey and Ronnie Williams.

The brothers resent dad's favorite so that when he gives the innocent Joseph a handsome multicolored coat, their anger erupts and they sell him into slavery, sending him off to Egypt and a series of eye-opening experiences. Introducing and commenting on the action is the narrator, Dawn Lester.

Written by Andrew Lloyd Webber and Tim Rice, who also produced "Jesus Christ, Superstar" and "Evita," the work is performed as a story told completely in song and uses many styles of music.

A variety of exuberant production numbers keeps the story rocking along. Included is the country-western, "One More Angel In Heaven," as well as soft shoe, calypso, and a '30s gangster number. A highlight is the Pharoah's explanation of the dream in a '50s rockabilly style.

Ensemble members include Megan Burleson, Alyson Aldridge, Diane Faulkner, Stephanie Dunson, Karen Weidman, Beth Brimer, Tara Meyer, Jennifer Helms, Trisha Absher, Paula Shipp, Susanna Morrow and Rebecca Engelstad.

Directing the show is Don Bachmann, musical director is Bob Fennell and choreographer is Brenda May. Stage manager is Jed Barker, assisted by Gilley Estes and Pat Voss.

Production chairmen include Terry Martin, lights; Don Higgins, sound; props running, Liz Montagna and Frances Mees; stage crew, Chris Faucette; construction, Jim Choate; paint, Liz Pauley and Joanne Robertson.

This is the first membership show of the 1989 season. For reservations call the box office at 682-4111.

Memberships are still available.

Headsets for the Infrared Listening System donated by the Jaycees may be reserved by calling the box office. There will be a fifty cents charge to cover maintenance costs.

Jazz musicians to present clinic at SWTSU for high school bands

SAN MARCOS — Three of the nation's leading jazz clinicians will be on the campus of Southwest Texas State University on Saturday to work with high school bands from across Texas as the SWT Department of Music hosts the first SWT Jazz Festival.

The all-day event will begin in Evans Auditorium at 9:30 a.m. and is free and open to the public.

Clinicians at the festival will be the Rev. George Wiskirchen, director of the Notre Dam University jazz bands, trombonist and arranger Paul McKee and jazz percussionist Joe Pusateri.

Wiskirchen is considered the nation's leading jazz clinician. His Notre Dame bands have received critical acclaim from major newspapers and jazz publications. A renowned educator in the field of jazz and author of "Developing Techniques for the High School Jazz Musician" and "Building a Stage Band," Wiskirchen will present a clinic for directors on jazz education techniques.

McKee holds music degrees from the University of Northern Iowa and the University of Texas and has received awards for outstanding performance from Downbeat Magazine and the International Trombone Association.

From January 1984 through June 1987, McKee was a member of the Woody Herman Thundering Herd and recorded several albums with that band.

Pusateri is a graduate of Quincy College and is a prominent percussionist in Chicago recording studios. He has recorded or played with many bands and performers including Earth, Wind and Fire, Mark Colby, Ramsey Lewis, The Pointer Sisters, Anita Baker, Whitney Houston and Dave Samuels. He has also worked extensively in the writing and recording of commercial jingles.

Sea World has winter schedule

SAN ANTONIO — During the winter months, Sea World of Texas' operating schedule is as follows: 10 a.m.-6 p.m. Wednesday through Sunday and closed Mondays and Tuesdays.

Hours and days of operation at the world's largest marine life park will be expanded as the summer vacation season draws nearer.

For up-to-date schedule information, call 1-512-523-3611.

MONDAY, JANUARY 23, 1989

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: patriot John Hancock, actor Richard Dean Anderson, Princess Caroline of Monaco, Justice Potter Stewart, artist Edouard Manet.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Avoid controversy. Compromise is necessary when differences arise. Both new and old ties thrive. A legal matter will be settled out of court in your favor. Count your blessings!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Do not let a minor health matter go unattended. Concentrate on projects you can handle on your own. Incoming news or mail contributes to increased optimism. Make sure of your facts.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Check out rumors; they could have some truth. Financial matters will demand careful handling. Stay alert. Good luck shines on a college-bound teen-ager. Host a modest celebration with close friends.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Acting on impulse could do you in. Seek conservative ways to save time and money. Stick to what you know best and you will make an excellent impression on potential employers. Romance is relaxed.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do not become involved with a friend or family member who does not live up to his promises. Take a well-intentioned neighbor's suggestions with a grain of salt. Deal only with experts.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Caution is necessary when handling financial matters. Exceptional mental rapport leads to increased profits. You enjoy being in the spotlight. Share it only with the deserving. Cut loose from hangers-on.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Guard your speech, saying exactly what you mean. Go over joint accounts and assessments before revising your budget. Avoid making judgments based on wishful thinking. Romance has its ups and downs.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your predawn inspirations make sense. Act on a creative idea. Late afternoon brings a pleasant surprise. Attractive member of opposite sex makes a fascinating disclosure, affecting your future. Know your own heart.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Do not let morning tensions go unchecked. Serious damage to a relationship can be averted if you show patience. Crucial matters come to a head. Use reason and logic to solve delicate matters.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A clever proposal will be noticed by influential people in high places. Look forward to long work hours but high pay. Romance will be in full swing tonight. Follow your heart.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Move forward with creative pursuits and distant affairs. Domestic problems continue to irritate. Diplomacy and tact are your strongest allies. A surprising development later today will help. Replace bad habits with good ones.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Mate or a close work associate will be in the mood to take more initiative. Offer encouragement. Someone who leaves suddenly may have good reasons. Defer judgment. Avoid distractions at work.

Opening lead: Jack of ♡

There are those who claim it is better to be born lucky than rich. We're not convinced—money can provide considerable balm for an awful lot of bad breaks in life. We are not sure of South's financial standing, but from this hand, we do know that he is blessed with good fortune.

After North took a club preference, South elected to gamble on a small slam. After all, he needed no more than the queen of clubs in partner's hand to be a lock for 12 tricks.

West led the top of his heart sequence, and the hand was over at trick two. Declarer won and, with no entry to dummy to take the trump finesse, banged down the king of clubs. When that fetched the queen, declarer claimed all the tricks except for the ace of clubs.

Now no one can quibble about the fact that declarer was lucky to find a singleton queen of clubs. However, we should give him credit for realizing that that was the only chance he had for his contract.

If the trumps were 2-2, there was no way declarer could have avoided losing two trump tricks, so he had to hope for a 3-1 split. And a singleton ace would not have helped him. That would mean that one of the defenders held the queen guarded twice. A low trump from declarer would bring down the ace, but the queen would still be guarded and would not drop under the king.

Perhaps we should reconsider. There is something to be said for "buona fortuna" at the bridge table.

Jones' artwork at Woman's Club

Watercolors by Joyce Jones are on display weekdays through Feb. 1 from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Midland Woman's Club, Hogan Park.

"At times, Joyce paints with soft muted colors, also with bold deep abstractions," says a release from the Woman's Club.

She paints landscapes, florals and watercolors with a Southwest theme.

Ms. Jones, who is from Lamesa, has studied watercolors with C. Warren Cullar, Robert E. Bear and Mario Cooper, who teaches at the Art Students League of New York and is president of the American Watercolor Society.

Her paintings have been displayed at First National Bank Gallery of Lamesa and she was artist of the month at the Lubbock Art center, November of 1986. She is a member of the West Texas Watercolor society and the Lubbock Art Association.

NBC close to record streak of voctories

NEW YORK (AP) — NBC is creeping up on the all-time streak of weekly victories in the A.C. Nielsen Co. ratings after racking up its 30th in a row.

And today, NBC should have the highest-rated show of the season, the Super Bowl, and seemingly clear sailing after that. It already has won all 17 weeks of the official television season. Of course, CBS and ABC figure the season has an asterisk since they got started late because of the writers strike.

The last time a network won an entire season was CBS in 1963-64. NBC came within a week of that 39-week record last season, but the World Series on ABC broke it.

Thanks to a football playoff, CBS flirted with first place two weeks ago, but NBC managed to eke it out. Things were back to relative normal last week.

NBC won the week with an average prime-time rating of 16.1. ABC was second with 13.0 and CBS had 12.6. That was close to the season-to-date average — NBC has a 15.8, ABC 13.0 and CBS 12.2.

Each rating point represents 904,000 homes with televisions.

The "CBS Evening News" won the news race with a 12.1. "ABC World News Tonight" had 11.4; "NBC Nightly News" 10.9.

Several prime-time NBC shows last week recorded their highest ratings this season: "Cheers," "A Different World," "Midnight Caller" and "In the Heat of the Night."

The week's top-rated show was NBC's "The Cosby Show," whose 29.8 rating was its highest of the season, except for an earlier special one-hour episode.

The rest of the top 10 were: "A Different World," NBC; "Cheers," NBC; "Roseanne," ABC; "Who's the Boss?" ABC; "The Golden Girls," NBC; "Murder, She Wrote," CBS; "60 Minutes," CBS; "L.A. Law," NBC; and "Dear John," NBC.

The lowest-rated shows were: "Mission Impossible," "Incredible Sunday," "Tattinger's," "A Fine Mess," "West 57th," "HeartBeat," "Knightwatch," "TV 101" and "Murphy's Law."

'Dallas' will be filming in Moscow

Hearst News Service

Is glasnost ready for J.R. Ewing? Batten down the Kremlin hatches, Dallas is headed to Moscow.

"It's a little old honeymoon trip for J.R. and his Kally," Larry Hagman said. "We're going over there to check out the oil buisness. Russia is the biggest exporter of oil and gas in the world, and we Ewings want to build a pipeline from Siberia to Vienna. Why not?"

Hagman has been directing his own wedding, the second ceremony for the second Mrs. J.R. Ewing. The first time, J.R. was forced to marry young Kally Hopper (played by Kathy Podewell) at gunpoint. "This time, she wants to do it right."

But Sue Ellen has moved back into South fork, which doesn't hold much hope for J.R. and his Kally to live happily ever after.

Hagman's co-executive producer, Leonard Katzman, is in Moscow now, checking out locations for the March 2 departure date. The plan is to start the trip in Austria, with stopovers at Vienna, Salzburg and several other places, as time allows. Then they're off to Moscow for the big wheel-and deal.

"We've been wanting to go all over the world for some time, and we felt that this was the time to get the show away for a while," Hagman said.

The show will be working with a production company in Austria, and it will pick up the crews over there.

Dallas is one of the top-rated shows in Austria and all over Western Europe.

Hagman would like Dallas to do another season, although the ratings this season have not been impressive (in the 20s). Moscow could be the answer to the slump. It's bound to hit a lot of headlines, and the idea of J.R. inside the Kremlin is enough to entice even defecting viewers to come back and take a look.

'Texas' creator to be indicted in hall of fame

AMARILLO — Margaret Harper, Founder of the musical drama "Texas," will be inducted into the 1988 Texas Womens' Hall of Fame on February 8th in Austin for her contribution in the arts.

A special reception is scheduled to honor Margaret Harper in Amarillo from 6 to 8 p.m. Thursday in the atrium area of the First National Bank of Amarillo.

Sponsored by the Texas Panhandle Heritage Foundation, the reception is catered by The Big Texan Steak Ranch.

Area residents interested in congratulating Ms. Harper need to make reservations for the event by calling the "Texas" office in Canyon, 1-806-655-2181.

The ceremonies of induction into the Texas Women's Hall of Fame, which take place at 7:30 p.m. Feb. 8 at the Four Seasons Hotel, Austin, are open to the public.

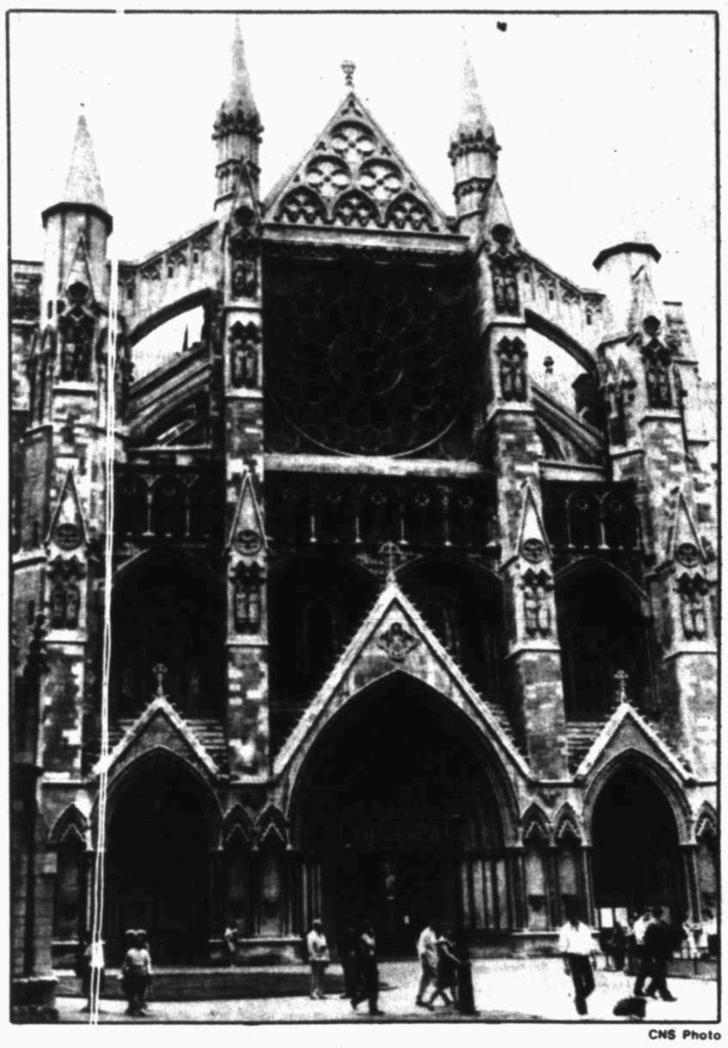
Cathedrals living relics of Britan's past



CNS Photo

Intricate stone carvings on the north face of Westminster Abbey in London attract thousands of visitors annually to the famous British landmark. The most historic of all of Britain's cathedrals, Westminster has been the scene of coronations of kings and queens since the days of Edward the Confessor in 1065.

By JACK BIESTERFELD
Copley News Service

"Oh, no, not another ABC!"

The grumpy American tourist peering out the rain-spattered window of the tour bus caught a glimpse of the spires of a centuries-old cathedral coming up on the right side.

"Another Bloody Cathedral," she murmured under her breath.

The cathedrals and churches of England, as well as those in other parts of Europe, are standard tourist fare for visitors. The travelers dutifully pile on and off tour buses day after day to tromp through these historic structures, some dating back almost 1,000 years.

But after a week of cathedrals — "If this is Thursday, it must be Salisbury Cathedral" — tourists can become overdosed with historic churches.

Nonetheless, these living relics of Britain's past continue to draw hundreds of thousands of visitors every year. And the reason is that they are beautiful and historic structures.

DESPITE THE complaint that all churches begin to look alike after the first six or seven, each is individual and each has its own claim to fame.

For instance, the York Minster in the city of York sits atop the headquarters of a Roman fortress that had occupied the site since the first century. (A minster is a large or important church often having cathedral status.) The remains of the fort were discovered when workmen began excavations to shore up the sagging foundations of the church in 1967.

The headquarters was home to 4,600 heavily armed Roman Legion soldiers of the Northern Command, the most important Roman outpost in northern Britain, given the job of subduing the tribal lands of the Brigantes. The ruins found under the minster once constituted the foundations and walls of the office and basilica areas of the fortress.

Fortunately, the church restorers decided not only to preserve these Roman relics, but also to put them on display in a unique museum.

The Undercroft of the York Minster is an underground maze that winds around the foundations. In one area, several of the Roman foundations can be seen. One of the 25-foot stone columns has been moved outside and displayed in a park across from the minster. In other parts of the Undercroft, the massive concrete slabs held together by huge stainless-steel bolts attest to the latest restoration efforts.

IN BETWEEN are remains of Norman and Saxon construction dating from the 12th century. A small stone church stood on the site since A.D. 670, but the present cathedral buildings began with a Norman minster about A.D. 1070. Since then it has been enlarged and changed many times over the centuries.

Inside the cross-shape cathedral, tall arched ceilings cap the ornate columns, highlighted by beautiful carvings. Stained-glass windows add light to the interior, and the great east window is said to be one of the largest in the world.

Outside, the square, flat-roofed towers are in sharp contrast to the soaring spires of many other churches. The central spire of the Salisbury Cathedral, for instance, soars more than 400 feet into the air, the tallest in England and second tallest in all of Europe.

And unlike the York Minster, in the midst of a bustling city, Salisbury Cathedral is surrounded by an expansive green lawn surrounded by the city wall, putting it in one of the most beautiful settings in all of Britain. The first section of the cathedral, near the banks of the River Avon in the small town of Salisbury, was opened in 1225, and the cathedral was consecrated in 1258. The magnificent spire was completed about 1310.

The nave (the long central section of the interior) stretches for 230 feet and leads into the ornate Trinity Chapel, one of the oldest sections of the church. The total length is some 440 feet, making it one of the larger cathedrals in England. The nave holds the works of the oldest clock in England, built in 1386. It still operates.

ONE OF the most beautiful areas of the building is the hexagonal Chapter House with its unique fan vaulting holding up the roof. The room now holds a copy of the Magna Charta, only one of four in existence.

Salisbury Cathedral lacks a lot of the historical significance of many of England's churches, such as Westminster Abbey in London, perhaps the most historic of all. Westminster has been the scene of coronations of kings and queens since the days of Edward the Confessor in 1065.

The view upon entering by Westminster's west door is breathtaking. The ceiling arches 102 feet overhead and seems to stretch on for blocks. Windows high on the nave walls flood the ornate interior with light. The massive Gothic columns soar upward until they flare out into a sheltering canopy, like branches of giant stone trees in a forest.

Just inside the door, the small St. George's Chapel, the warriors chapel, is dwarfed by the huge interior of the main church. The walls and floors of the building are lined with the graves and memorials of some of the world's famous and powerful, such as Sir Isaac Newton, African explorer David Livingston, Charles Darwin and Winston Churchill.

From its very earliest beginnings in the 11th century, the abbey has been home to kings and queens. In fact, the House of Commons regularly held court in the Chapter House built in 1253.

Equally historic is St. Paul's Cathedral, also found in central London. But the present structure is of much more modern vintage than most. Four other churches have stood on the site, but all were destroyed. The earliest was a wooden church built in A.D. 604. The present building, completed in 1698, is the fifth church on the site.

THE BUILDING is a stark departure from previous cathedrals. Instead of the lofty spires atop ornate towers, the building features a large dome, which has become the model for many other buildings, such as the U.S. Capitol and numerous state capitol buildings as well.

The cathedral is much more ornate than most of the others in Britain, as seen by the beautiful paintings on the inside of the dome and the mosaics above the choir.

Funds sought to save State Fair's roller coaster

DALLAS — Plans are underway to demolish the Comet roller coaster at the State Fair of Texas unless monies can be raised within 90 days to make the necessary repairs to put it back on track.

Wooden coasters are becoming a rare breed. Only 100 of the original 2,000 built in the 1920s and 1930s are still in existence.

The Comet is located in Dallas at Fair Park, the home of the State Fair of Texas. The art deco park was built for the 1936 Texas Centennial Exposition and is a National Historic Landmark. The Comet was built by Charles Paigne in 1947.

This historic, wooden coaster has not run since 1985 when an insurance problem forced its closure.

Today experts say the Comet needs approximately $1.2 million in repairs before reopening.

The State Fair says it put $1.5 million into the Comet between 1974 and 1984 to ring it up to proper safety standards, but it generated only $1.2 million in revenue from riders. Neglect from 1984 has caused the need for further restoration.

Unable to find an operator willing to underwrite the repairs, the State Fair has asked for a demolition permit.

State Fair officials said that operators are interested in running a "restored" Comet and agreed to give Comet supporters 60 days to raise $600,000 and 30 days more to come up with the remaining $600,000 to repair the coaster before the next state fair.

Dallas-based Lovers of Landmarks and Preservation Texas! have agreed to take on this statewide campaign with the help of a national organization, American Coaster Enthusiasts.

"Since the Comet is owned by the State Fair of Texas, it belongs to the citizens of Texas," says a release from Lovers of Landmarks, a not-for-profit organization supporting the Dallas Landmark Commission. "The Comet may not be able to handle as many rides per hour or generate as much income as a new steel coaster, but it represents an endangered fragment of Texas history."

The groups are asking those who have ridden the Comet to send a contribution to: Save The Comet, c/o Preservation Texas!, P.O. Box 12832, Austin, 78711.

If the goal is not met, these organizations cannot return money, but contributions will be used for restoration projects within Fair Park, home of the State Fair.

For further Comet information call Linda Wallace, Lovers of Landmarks, 1-214-248-5910 or Ricky Meyer, Preseration Texas! 1-512-345-1160.

PROCLAMATION

WHEREAS, Volunteers are integral to the positive growth of this nation, this state, and Midland, and represent a truly unique, flexible and adaptable asset in dealing with meaningful community needs; and

WHEREAS, The Junior League of Midland, founded in 1949, is celebrating 40 years of volunteer service to the Midland community; and

WHEREAS, Members of the Junior League of Midland are trained for effective community service and leadership to develop enthusiastic, creative, knowledgeable, participating citizens; and

WHEREAS, Junior League members, helping others without compensation, enhance the quality of life through their work in health, welfare, recreational, educational and cultural fields; and

WHEREAS, Many worthwhile community organizations have been founded and supported by Junior League members and these committed volunteers provide many valuable services that would not otherwise be possible due to financial limitations; and

WHEREAS, Over the past 40 years, Midland's Junior League members have given countless volunteer service hours to this community and over $1,700,000 has been raised and returned to the community through their membership projects;

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Carroll Thomas, Mayor of the City of Midland, Texas, do hereby recognize the contributions of the:

and urge all citizens of our community to give full regard to the past and continuing services of this organization.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Seal of the City of Midland, Texas, to be affixed this 16th day of January, 1989.

Carroll Thomas

Carroll Thomas, Mayor

League members give precious commodity

Volunteers give the most precious commodity of all when they give of themselves. For 40 years the Junior League of Midland has operated with that philosophy foremost in our minds. Our purpose states that we "are an organization of women committed to promoting voluntarism and improving the community through the effective action and leadership of trained volunteers. Its purpose is exclusively educational and charitable."

This lofty phrase means something much more to the Junior League member who wheels the activities cart into a child's hospital room or the member who looks at the sparkle in the eye of an elderly man as he hears an old favorite song. That member knows that the time and energy she gives and the funds she helps raise go much deeper than mere words written in our purpose. The ability to touch someone's life in a positive way becomes a gift returned many times.

The spirit and tradition that started with 28 women in 1949 has developed and multiplied into the successful projects we use to improve lives and train ourselves. The foresight of those charter members has been proven over and over in the past 40 years.

This is a milestone for us, but the opportunity for reflection on our past and the excitement for our future means a chance to give the most heartfelt thanks to this city. Since we began there has been unfailing support from individuals, businesses, and the community of Midland. What ever efforts by Junior League has made have only been magnified by the volunteer spirit evident here.

The quickening pace of society since 1949 has provided the challenge for us to respond to the new and ever changing needs that can be met by volunteers. The willingness of Junior League members matches that pace as we continue to offer leadership and financial assistance where it is needed most. Our commitment through our projects is proof of our determination to enhance the well-being of Midlanders through innovative management of all our resources.

We are proud of 40 years of service and we share this Birthday with everyone who has the privilege of living in a place where people care so much - Thank you Midland, Texas!

The Junior League of Midland, Inc. celebrates 40 years of community service

By JANICE FORD
Advertising Feature Writer

Forty years ago, 28 young women organized a service league for Midland. In short, they believed the growing city needed a push in developing significant welfare improvements and cultural opportunities. These women, and those who have joined them since 1949, have been instrumental in making Midland the dynamic community in which it is today.

As the Junior League of Midland, Inc., begins its 40th year, with an active membership of more than 700, it continues to nurture the dreams of its founders.

Originally known as the Midland Service League and later the Junior Welfare League, this organization became a member of the Association of Junior Leagues, Inc. in 1964.

The League's first decade saw many milestones, many of which still impact Midland today.

"People were coming into Midland from all over the United States" during the late 1940s, said Mrs. Harvey Herd, one of the original members of the Midland League. "On January 13, 1949, 15 members of Junior Leagues from 11 cities met together to organize a volunteer service group. Thirteen local young women who had been born here or resided here for some time were then asked to join, so we were 28 when we started."

The charter members were Mrs. Ben F. Black, Mrs. George J. Byrne, Mrs. W.P. Castleman, Mrs. Walter J. Dueease, Mrs. Lynn S. Durham, Mrs. Lamar Eschberger, Mrs. Frank B. Essex, Jr., Mrs. Archie P. Farr, Mrs. Murray Fasken, Mrs. John Fitzgerald, Mrs. Thornton Hardie, Jr., Mrs. J. Harvey Herd, Mrs. J.M. Hewgley and Mrs. W.A. Hover.

Also, Mrs. Paxton Howard, Mrs. W. Watson LaForce, Mrs. J. Hugh Liedtke, Mrs. E.A. Pettit, Mrs. Norman A. Sax, Mrs. Tom Sealy, Mrs. Lockert Sleeper, Jr., Mrs. James T. Smith, Mrs. J.W. Starr, Mrs. John Thomas, Mrs. Frank L. Thompson, Mrs. Leland Thompson, Mrs. Jack B. Wilkinson and Mrs. W.B. Yarborough.

"It went very slowly at first," continued Mrs. Herd. "Whenever anyone from another Junior League elsewhere moved to town, we were happy to have each one of them as members. Each one of them brought something from their League, and contributed their idea in hopes that it was something we could do here."

Mrs. Paxton Howard, formerly associated with the Tulsa Junior League, organized the Midland group. "She had seen what the League had been able to do to help Tulsa," said Mrs. Herd, "and thought that there was much we could do by getting together to make Midland a community people would want to come to."

The League's original purpose was "to foster among its members interest in social, economic, educational, cultural and civic conditions of the community and to endeavor to make efficient their volunteer service," explained Mrs. Herd.

"The League was very active in starting much of the culture that came to Midland," Mrs. Herd said. "Members focused primarily on welfare, but also in education and giving young people opportunities.

"We tried to find an unmet need, see that it was established and then let the community continue it," she added. "If it was not worthy of community continuation, then it was not needed."

Within two months of the group's founding, the League had elected members, adopted bylaws and started its first project.

"We started off very, very small," said Mrs. Herd. "We sold candy and that kind of thing. One of the first things we did was to make layettes to give to the County Health Nurse."

Some of the early projects developed by the League were Story Hour at the Midland County Library, purchase of the mobile magazine cart at the Western Clinic, organization of the Children's Dental and Diagnostic Clinics, and the Children's Theatre at Midland Community Theatre. "It is interesting how many of these beginning endeavors survive," said Mrs. Herd.

We also worked a lot in the Latin American community, establishing a youth center at the very beginning. The group projects at Juarez Hall turned into Guadelupe Youth Center."

Each member was required to give at least 80 hours of volunteer service each year, according to The History of the Junior League of Midland, Inc. The first year, the members worked 1370 hours.

In the 1950s, many other worthy projects were established, including the Children's Dental Clinic, the Clothing Mart, the Women's Exchange and the Directory of Community Services. The Clothing Mart was the predecessor of the Next-to-New Shop, which is still one of the League's fundraising projects.

"In 1957, the League formed the first Community Advisory Board," Mrs. Herd said. "We brought people in from all parts of the community to help advise us as to what the community's needs were. When we had the Dental and Diagnostic Clinics going, we sought the community out and determined to start the Family Counseling Service, known as Family Services now."

"At that time," Mrs. Herd continued, "mental health was new on the scene. We had never had any sort of mental health organizaiton here and it was a difficult thing to explain to the public just what it oculd accomplish."

"There was a stigma about mental health, and we were able to help large numbers of people through the Family Counseling Service. It was proven to be a need for the community."

The League's second decade continued to serve areas of health and welfare, but perhaps one of the most recognized major milestones was its contribution to the art and culture of Midland.

One of the foremost was the formation of an arts and science museum, known today as the Museum of the Southwest. Initial planning began in 1964, and League members provided financial and administrataive support until 1984.

Please see SERVICE, Page 4H

The Midland Service League began in January of 1949. Mrs. Ben Black, Mrs. Tom Sealy and Mrs. Paxton Howard were all chartered members. Mrs. Howard served as the first president and Mrs. Sealy was vice president.

SERVICE

Other noteworthy League placements during the 1960s included the Student Art Festival, children's puppet shows, the Tape Lending Library, the Advisory Council for Learning Disabilities and the Objectives for Midland.

Health issues were not overlooked, either. Placement opportunities included the Cerebral Palsy Center, the Opportunity Center, the Out Patient Department of Midland Memorial Hospital, the Children's Diagnostic Clinic and the Red Cross.

An extremely important step during the 1960s, said Mrs. Ken Williams, 1969-70 League president, was the group's acceptance into the Association of Junior Leagues.

As the 206th League, it is part of a network of more than 268 Leagues in the United States, Canada, Mexico and England.

A variety of placements, directed at different community issues, were undertaken in the 1970s.

As drug abuse became a community-wide problem, the Junior League stepped in with vigor to fight this growing problem. Anti-drug commercials were purchased for local television stations.

League members were active volunteers for the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, Audiometric Screening, CPR training and the Perinatal Clinic. They also provided the History of Midland Exhibit at the Museum of the Southwest.

While many projects began in the 1970s continued into the next decade, the Junior League sponsored new programs, and experienced some internal changes, as well.

The League made possible the development of Tumbleweed Park, and developed such programs as Stand Tall, Teen Court, Kids on the Block, Council Against Substance Abuse, Junior League Singers and Hearthstone, the emergency shelter for abused and neglected children.

These programs are a reminder that children's needs continue to be an interest of the League. Kids on the Block, for example, utilizes puppets depicting people's handicaps in hopes that children will foster an awareness for the handicapped.

One of the first to be involved with this placement was Mrs. Robert Koziol, current League president. "Kids on the Block was a positive, inventive way to broach the subject to children that all of us have something different about ourselves," she said.

The League has experienced changes in the 1980s, Mrs. Koziol added, becuase of the changing roles of women and the economy.

"Some of our patterns of thinking have changed. We have had to increase the hours that our projects operate, to accommodate the needs of both working parents and working League members."

"The nighttime Children's Dental Clinic serves this purpose by aiding working parents and providing training for our members who work."

Societial changes "have made us look at what we do for the community," she added. "There is less worry in our minds that we offer the community what it needs."

Members from Midland's Junior League have become the first lady, established women's museum, served as first woman president of Chamber of Commerce

By JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

Do you think that a group of women who met informally in January of 1949 to organize a service league in Midland would be able to boast that 40 years later members from this organization would become the first lady of the United States, or would help to establish the National Museum of Women in the Arts in Washington D.C., or serve as the first women president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce?

Barbara Bush, Paula Cahoon, Joanie Holt and Joan Baskin - as well as many others - used the training that they received in the Junior League to make a difference in our community.

The purpose of the Association of Junior Leagues, Inc. is "to promote voluntarism and to improve the community through the effective action and leadership of trained volunteers. Its purpose is exclusively education and charitable."

The training received as a League member has led many of its members into careers and service on many community boards where this training has been invaluable. From learning how to write an agenda to conducting meetings to being president of other organizations, this training has benefited many community boards and has extended far beyond.

For Paula Cahoon and Joanie Holt, both of whom are past presidents, serving on the Texas committee of the National Museum of Women in the Arts has help to establish the first museum of this kind.

"The Junior League taught me how to coordinate a meeting and be an administrator of an organization. I also learned how to function as a good board member, to cut through unnecessary discussion and get to the problem solving," explained Mrs. Cahoon. "I would have never tackled the Women's Museum without my initial League training."

After serving as president of the League, Mrs. Cahoon went on to serve on other volunteer community boards, one of which was being president of the Community Theatre when the new theatre was built.

Both Mrs. Cahoon and Mrs. Holt were very interested when approached to be on the Texas Committee of the Women in the Arts Museum. Mrs. Cahoon had a friend in Washington who wanted to begin a museum that would only feature exhibits by women artists. Mrs. Cahoon has served as president of this committee for four years and Mrs. Holt has served as treasurer.

Being an artist who has always had an interest in the arts, Mrs. Holt also brought years of board experience and expertise to this committee. "We both came from different angles to work on this committee, but it was really a natural evolution that we would both be involved on this Texas committee that has helped to bring about such a wonderful museum," stated Mrs. Cahoon.

Joan Baskin was elected to serve as the first woman president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce. As a League member, Mrs. Baskin felt that her involvement nurtured her interest in the quality of life in the community and enabled her to develop a larger interest in that quality.

"I enjoyed working with people who also cared about Midland and it helped me to identify hard working and creative leaders. I also learned that you have to build a team in order for any committee to work," stated Mrs. Baskin.

Before moving to Midland and becoming a Provisional member in 1964, Joanne Langston already had a strong volunteer experience in Corpus Christi as the disaster coordinator for the Red Cross. Mrs. Langston is currently the president-elect of the Chamber of Commerce and took over the management of Langston Realtors in the early 70's.

"The League provided me with the knowledge of the community and an appreciation of the commitment and support of Midlanders in all phases of the community," Mrs. Langston explained.

The Junior League is one of the strongest volunteer orientated organizations in existance and it gave her a real desire to volunteer in the community. She also didn't have any experience as an executive when she took over the management of Langston Realtors and her League training helped her to know how to approach a problem, as well as get things done.

In 1985, Mrs. Langston was the national president of a 1,200 member firms of a relocation referral firm. She also made this referral organization a national organization by designing and implementing an affiliation with the largest independent group of Realtors in England, Ireland, New Zealand, Australia and Canada.

The League taught Mrs. Langston how to dream the biggest dream for a committee or a business and showed her the way to help make them come true. She is looking forward to the next challenge being represented by the Chamber where she will be involved in strengthening the business community.

As the executive director of Keep Midland Beautiful, Sharla Hotchkiss feels that her League experience, as well as other volunteer experience, helped to give her the exposure to a broad range of community activities and people. It also enabled her to try lots of jobs and then focus on what experience she enjoyed the most.

After serving as League president from 1985-1986, Mrs. Hotchkiss found herself "cross stitching everything." "No one asked me to do anything the following year and I had so much time with very little to do - my house was very clean! I then decided to find myself a job," explained Mrs. Hotchkiss.

Mrs. Hotchkiss called Jane Wolf, a sustainer in the Midland League, who was the administrator of a law firm. "She brought over a book called "What Color Is Your Parachute." This books helps a person to decide what type of area to pursue." she added.

Since that time Mrs. Hotchkiss has done the same for another League member, Jeannette Bryant, who is currently the executive director for the Texas Society to Prevent Blindness - Midland Regional Center.

Mrs. Hotchkiss explained that the skills developed by the Junior League of Midland include organizing, time management, ability to work with people, facilitation and marketing. "I love working with people, doing a positive, results-orientated projects which are very community minded. My job at Keep Midland Beautiful satisfies all of these needs."

These women who have all benefited from their League training are only a small sample of a group of diverse women who are linked by a common bond of voluntarism.

19 projects provide community with volunteers, financial support

By JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

The Junior League of Midland, Inc. is an organization of over 700 women which has provided volunteers, training and financial support to meet their community's continuing needs. Funds raised by the Junior League are channeled back into the community in over 15 placements where members volunteer countless hours every year. The two fund-raising projects are the Next-to-New Shop and the annual Charity Ball. The League's efforts have also been generously supported by local foundations throughout the years. The proceeds support the following community placements.

ARKANSAW BEAR - In cooperation with Hospice of Midland and the Midland Community Theatre, the League presented a play that dealt in a positive manner with in dealing withdeath and grief. A video of the play is available for viewing through Hospice. On January 24, a seminar is scheduled at 10:30 a.m. at First Presbyterian Church and Rabbi Earl Grollman will speak on "Explaining Death To Ourselves And Our Children."

BEDSIDE BUDDIES - Beside Buddies visit pediatric patients in the mornings at Midland Memorial Hospital who are recovering from surgery or are critically ill. Buddies bring craft packets and puzzles for the children. Parents are also given a needed break or support by these volunteers. In the afternoon, Bedside Buddies visit with the terminally ill and see to their needs, as well as being a friend.

Junior League helped to establish culture in Midland by creating lasting community projects in the arts

By JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

As the Junior League of Midland entered its 40th year last week, many of the projects that were begun by the League in those early years are still in existence today. Since 1949, the Junior League has contributed approximately 1.7 million dollars to over 50 community projects.

One of the reasons that members are so proud of the Junior League is because its members were so instrumental in many things - Story Hour at the Library, the Children's Theatre at the Community Theatre and the Museum of the Southwest.

As an example, one League member from New York visited Midland in 1950, with her mother, to see exactly "where" her daughter was moving after she was married. After seeing Midland, she informed her daughter "I don't know how you will live there. It has no culture!" Well, the Junior League would change that image in the years to come.

One of the first projects that the Midland Service League began was Story Telling at the County Library. Provisional members told stories once a week for two hours on Saturday mornings to 15-25 children. These provisional members not only opened the door to many children in the world of literature, they also began a project that is still just as popular today as it was then.

When Ann Page volunteered at Story Hour, the placement had grown into four League members who would each learn two short stories or a song a week and were responsible for their own props. The goal of this placement was the same as it was in 1949, to introduce children to books and the library.

"It was great for the children who attended to see how books can come alive. During this hour, mothers could have an hour to themselves and also enjoy the library," Mrs. Page explained.

This placement was a favorite of Mrs. Pages because she was able to bring her own children when she volunteered. She also enjoyed reviewing the books with her own children before presenting them at Story Hour.

In 1978, this project was turned over to the Junior Women's Association and it is still very popular among 3- to 5-year-olds.

A Quonset hut with an oval ceiling served as the temporary building for the first theatre in Midland. League members were contacted by Art Cole and the first play that members assisted with was "Rip Van Winkle."

In 1950, three League members formed a puppet group and took their performance of "Little Red Riding Hood" into the schools. Also during this year 10 members helped to produce "Tom Sawyer" and "Aladdin and the Lamp." By the next year, the Service League supplied the school system with supplementary study guides for the play "Daniel Boone."

When the new Community Theatre was built in 1955, League members furnished the children's wing of the theatre. The next year, members hired the first director for the Children's Theatre.

For 37 years, League members volunteered thousands of hours and over $165,000 to the Midland Community Theatre.

In the early 1960s, a museum committee was formed out of a study of unmet needs in the community. In 1963, the Junior Welfare League decided to help Midland establish its own art, history and science museum. On September 25, 1965, the museum was incorporated. The Junior League was responsible for selecting the 15 member Board of Trustees. Although some League members served on the Museum board, it was totally separate from the League and had its own set of by-laws. The Junior League also donated $55,000 over the first few years of operation and over the years that total would be over $215,000.

Due to the regional emphasis the museum would have, it was named the Museum of the Southwest and League members volunteered there for almost 20 years. The first museum was located in a "pie-shaped wedge building" on West Wall.

In keeping with the theme of the museum, the first exhibit was called "Echoes of Texas" and Governor John Connally cut the ribbon to open the first exhibit.

Mary Griffith and Alice Tillett set our to find items from other museums and private collectors that would be included in this exhibit. "Because we didn't have any money, we would thieve and steal to get an item we really wanted," stated Mrs. Griffith. "I especially wanted to include a cannon from Goliad. After receiving permission to use the cannon, Rocky Ford transported the cannon to Midland for us."

Other items in the exhibit, which had to be insured for $350,000 included the Velasco treaty, baby clothes that belonged to Stephen F. Austin, weapons, guns and a chuck wagon.

A security guard had to be hired for this exhibit which lasted a month. "I remember loading all these items in a big van the night before Alice and I were going to take off to return everything," said Mrs. Griffith. "Jimmy Mims, our insurance agent, said the van needed to be 'watched' all night and I couldn't park it in my garage. We drove to the downtown fire station and parked it inside so the fireman could 'watch' it and if anything happened the items would be covered by our insurance."

The next year, Mrs. Tillet became president of the League and Mrs. Griffith lost her traveling companion. The second Exhibit was "Lights of Action" and after the museum moved to the Village Shopping Center, they began using traveling exhibits.

Due to the generosity of the daughters of Juliet and Frank Turner, Jr. - Fredda Durham and Dorothy Scharbauer - the museum was moved to its permanent residence in July of 1968.

As more organizations became involved with the museum and with the assistance of Los Manos, the League's responsibility began diminishing in the early 1970s. Members continued docenting there until 1984.

With the opening of the Fredda Turner Children's Museum this spring and through involvement at the Haley Library, League members are continuing to establish "culture" in our community. Mary Griffith's mother would see a different Midland today than the one she visited during the summer of 1950.

Junior League began in 1901

The object of the Junior League is to train its members for effective participation in the community through a program of education and volunteer service.

The first Junior League was founded in 1901 in New York City. Boston established the second Junior League in 1907; and by 1912 when the first Junior League conference was held, there were seven Junior Leagues. In 1921, the 30 Junior Leagues then in existence joined together to form the Association of Junior Leagues, Inc. The Association is an advisory organization and offers service, assistance and guidance through its elected leaders and professional staff. Today there are 268 Junior Leagues in cities in the United States, Canada and Mexico with an excess of 116,000 members.

In order to maintain close contact between the member Leagues and the Association, geographical regions were established, each region electing a regional director to serve on the Association board of directors. Continued growth made this system impractical and in 1972, six areas were established to replace the regions.

The Junior Leagues in each area elect two directors. Beginning in 1980-81, the area council chairman serves the association board as the third director from each area. The directors represent the area on the Association board and serves as liaisons between the Association and the Junior Leagues in the area.

Each area is served by an area council which coordinates area services, assists Leagues in identifying and meeting their needs and in maintaining minimum standards. The Junior Leagues in the area elect members to serve on the area council for a one year term. The council is composed of a chairman and seven other members; the chairman is elected by the retiring council.

The Association is headed by a 25-member board of directors composed of five officers, eighteen directors and two nominating directors. All officers and directors are elected for a two-year term. The board of directors hires and executive director who heads the professional staff of the Association. Association headquarters are maintained at 825 Third Avenue in New York.

Each year representatives meet from all Junior Leagues at annual conference.

WHY BUY A CAR THAT CALLS ITSELF CONTINENTAL WHEN YOU CAN OWN ONE THAT IS.
Giving a car a European-sounding name does not automatically give it entry to the class of European touring sedans.
So before you invest your money in a stylish name, we suggest you take a look at something more substantive: The Volvo 760 GLE.
Built around the philosophy that a European road car should offer as much in the way of comfort as performance, the 760 features orthopedically-designed seats with a special lumbar support. Power features that include everything under the sun...including a power sunroof. And an electronic climate control system sophisticated enough to adjust the temperature inside while monitoring the temperature outside.
So please stop by our showroom and test drive the Volvo 760 GLE. Everything about it is continental. Except, of course, the name.

PROJECTS

CHILDREN'S MUSEUM - One of the League's newest and most popular projects is the docent program at the Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum. Designed to be a place where children can get a "hands on" learning experience, the museum will give many a chance to explore and understand the arts in a new and exciting way. The museum will open in the spring.

CHILDREN'S DENTAL CLINIC - The Children's Dental Clinic gives professional dental care to underprivileged children. The clinic has been in the community for over 30 years. There are 25 dentists who volunteer their time and expertise. From record keeping to scheduling to educating patients in ongoing dental health care, the Junior League joins hands with community volunteers to make dental health care available to all.

DIRECTORY OF COMMUNITY SERVICES - The Junior League compiled the first Director of Community Services in 1955. The directory contains information on human and health service organizations along with community and social organizations. For the past few years, the directory is a combined effort of the Junior League and the United Way of Midland. The directory is used primarily by professionals to refer people in the community to the service they need.

HALEY LIBRARY - Since 1982, League members have been docenting at the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library. The docents give tours to third and seventh graders in the Midland Independent School District. The tour involves the American cowboy and his life on a cattle drive.

HEARTHSTONE - is a home owned and operated by the Texas Baptist Children's Home of Round Rock, Texas. It is licensed by the Texas Department of Human Services to provide short term and emergency care for children, from infants to age 17. Hearthstone serves children who need temporary care outside their own home due to family breakdown, abandonment, abuse, neglect or other family crisis. League members also perform various duties around the home such as coordinating activities for the children.

JUNIOR LEAGUE SINGERS - This project was designed as a communication link between the elderly and the Junior League volunteers through music and fellowship. Members visit five homes for the elderly in Midland. A special treat to the elderly has been the addition of League volunteers' children on occasional visits.

KIDS ON THE BLOCK - The "Kids on the Block" are a troupe of disabled and non-disabled life size puppets designed to help mainstream handicapped children into the public schools system by teaching children what it is like to be different. Scripts help children to better understand and deal with the issues of learning disabilities and the physically handicapped. "Kids on the Block" performs for fourth graders in public and private schools. They also perform for Girl Scouts troops, P.T.A. organizations and church groups.

PARENTS AS PARTNERS - This project, in coalition with the Family Wellness Clinic, is designed to help parents work with the developmental stages of their children from birth to 3-years-old.

PERINATAL CLINIC - The Perinatal Clinic offers educational and supportive classes on Thursday mornings for prenatal patients who are unable to afford conventional prenatal care. Lessons are taught on the physical and emotional changes that occur during pregnancy, fetal development, Lamaze, infant care and family planning. The clinic is in its eleventh year of operation and serves over 250 Midland women each year.

STAND TALL - Stand Tall is a two-part substance abuse prevention program designed for third grade students in MISD and in private schools upon request. A group of 10 volunteers present two fifty-minute programs, each consisting of a film and group discussions. The goal of this placement is to make students aware of their own unique qualities and increase their self esteem. Children are helped to use good decision making skills, to learn how to say "No" and to realize the dangers of drug abuse. Approximately 3,000 students participate in this project each year.

TEEN COURT - This project is jointly funded by the Junior League, the city, county and Midland Independent School District. Teen Court is based on the philosophy that a youthful law violator does not continue to be an offender when a peer jury decides sentence. It is a way for first offenders to keep their records clean. The jury, which is made up of teens, does not decide innocence or guilt; it only assesses sentences. League volunteers assist in many aspects of Teen Court.

WOMAN TO WOMAN - This is a National Association of Junior Leagues' project designed to promote and educate the public on the effects of women and alcohol. It also identifies and promotes local programs that are available for people who need help in this area.

AGENCY PLACEMENTS - The League also has three new Agency Placements where one person is placed without any funding. These agency placements are at MARC, Need to Read and at the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women.
