Police free Dozier from Red Brigades

PADUA, Italy (AP) — Police commandos burst into an apartment in this northern Italian city today and freed U.S. Brig. Gen. James L. Dozier as terrorists from the Red Brigades held a pistol to his head, Italian and U.S. officials said.

The rescue ended his 42-day ordeal in a "people's prison."

Ten policemen broke into the apartment and pounced on one of the terrorists who was holding a pistol with a silencer pointed at Dozier, Padua police chief Gianfranco Corrias told a news conference.

Corrias said five suspects were arrested and no shots were fired. Earlier, National Security Adviser William Clark told reporters in Washington that police fired one shot as they stormed the apartment.

The general, who was wearing a track suit, was tied up and being held in a tent in the apartment, Corrias said. One of the police who raided the apartment told the Italian news agency ANSA "we found Dozier barefoot but in good condition."

"HE'S A BIT tired and a bit shaken by events but in good health," said a U.S. Embassy official in Rome.

Dozier, 50, was taken to a hospital at the NATO base in nearby Vicenza for evaluation, spokewoman Staff Sgt. Nancy Bouchard said.

A special commando unit of the Italian security police had located the apartment Wednesday night but held off the raid until daytime for fear a night attack might endanger the 50-year-old general's life.

Five terrorists holding Dozier gave up without resistance, police said. All were Italians.

According to U.S. officials, Italian police in recent days cracked the Red Brigades terrorist "column" which operated in the area of Verona, where Dozier was kidnapped Dec. 17.

"It was a textbook operation. They cracked the column, the people talked and they followed up every single lead. They did it right and it worked," said a U.S. official, who asked not to be identified.

Shortly after being taken to police headquarters, Dozier telephoned his wife, Judith, who left their apartment in Verona and went to West Germany about 10 days ago, U.S. officials said.

The terrorists, several of whom were dressed as plumbers when they kidnapped the NATO general, transported Dozier 40 miles east, in the direction to Venice, to this city.

Dozier is the highest-ranking U.S. military official at the NATO base in Verona.

THE WHITE HOUSE said President Reagan was awakened at 6:50 a.m. EST, by William Clark, director of the National Security Council and the president's national security adviser.

"A lot of prayers have been answered. It's difficult to express gratitude to all those who assisted in his release," deputy press secretary Peter Roussel quoted Reagan as saying.

> "It was a textbook operation. They cracked the column, the people talked and they followed up every single lead. They did it right and it worked."

Dozier's sisiter, Joan Townsend, of Alvin, Texas, told a Houston radio station that she had clung to the hope he would be rescued. "We got used to the hopes. I did have a sense of calm all along that this would turn out positive," said Mrs. Townsend.

A Vatican spokesman expressed "relief and satisfaction" at the release of Dozier.

ANSA said word of Dozier's release was relayed to the head of Rome police by the prefect of Verona, the local representative of the national government, who has directed the probe of Dozier's abduction.

INTERIOR MINISTER Virgilio Rognoni immediately informed President Sandro Pertini, Premier Giovanni Spadolini and U.S. Ambassador Maxwell M. Rabb.

Spadolini, who was in Palermo, Sicily, addressing a national mayor's association meeting, interrupted his speech to tell the officials, "The fight against terrorism has recorded a new success. The soldier of a friendly nation has been returned to his loved ones, to his family."

The Italian Parliament was in session at the time and the deputies burst into applause when the session was interrupted by the news.

Ambassador Rabb said he had expressed "enormous graditude" to Italian officials for the way the investigation was conducted.

Word of Dozier's release was greeted with cheers at the U.S. Embassy in Rome where a round-the-clock crisis desk kept track of developments and coordinated U.S. Defense, State Department and NATO efforts to help the Italians find the general.

An undisclosed number of U.S. Defense and State Department specialists, using electronic monitoring equipment, assisted Italian police during the long manhunt. However, a U.S. official said there had been no specific U.S. assistance in the final operation that led to Dozier's release.

During the long captivity, Italian and U.S. officials emphasized they wouldn't negotiate with the Red Brigades because of their hard-line policy against dealing with terrorists.

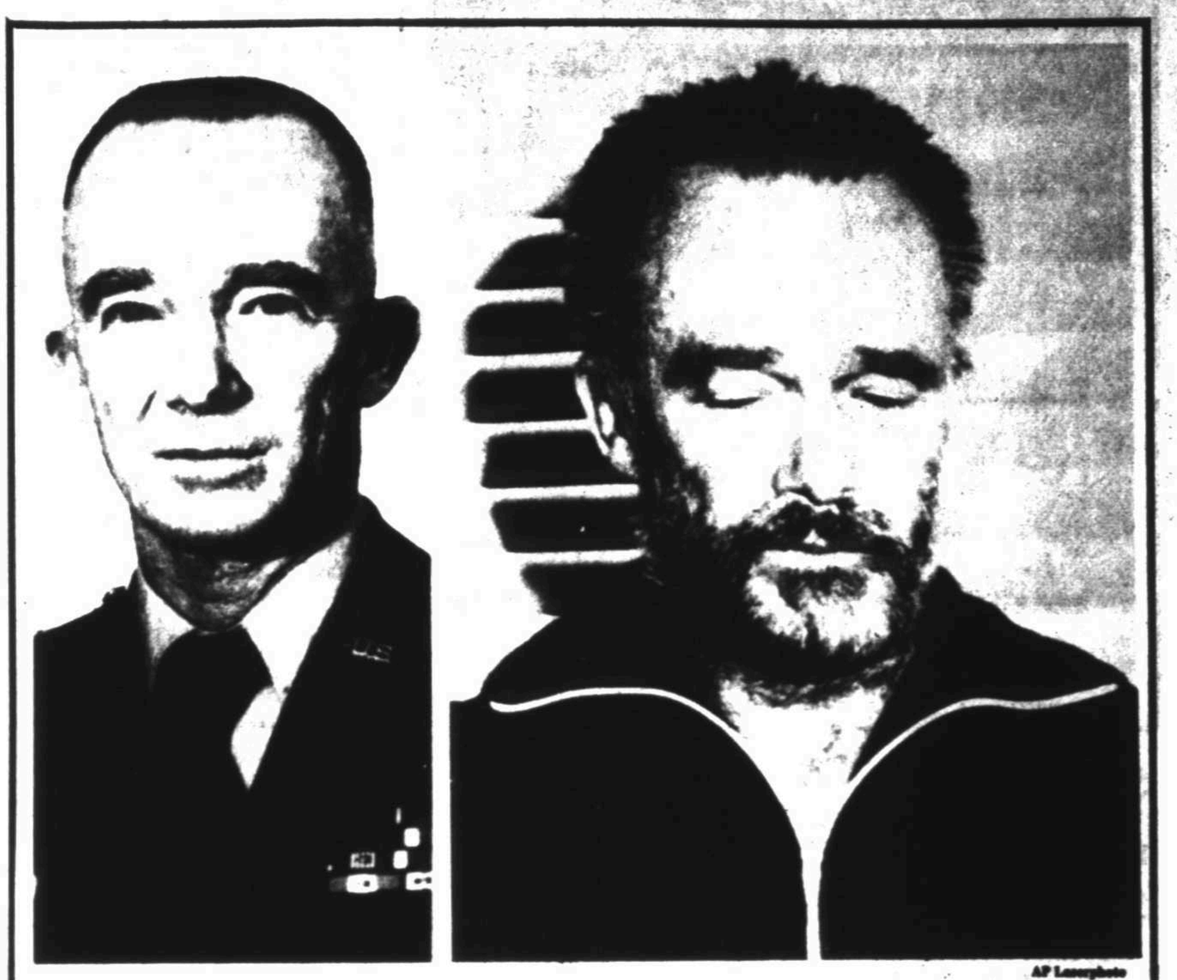

However, NATO officials confirmed earlier this month that unidentified "friends" of Dozier were offering a $2 million reward for information leading to the general's release.

On Monday, a Rome newspaper retrieved a Polaroid photo of the general, and authorities said it was "the most hopeful sign" since his disappearance that Dozier was alive.

THE PHOTO SHOWED the general, with a thick beard, in front of a flag with a five pointed star, symbol of the Red Brigades, and holding a propaganda statement. A communique that accompanied the photo neither set demands for Dozier's release nor gave any information about him.

During the 42-day hunt, police were plagued by a series of false leads and hoaxes. Investigators speculated some of the red herrings might have been arranged by terrorist sympathizers to slow down the search.

At least twice Dozier was reported to have been killed, and once authorities partially drained a lake looking for his body.

Dozier's sister elated with rescue news

ALVIN, Texas (AP) — Joan Townsend, sister of rescued Air Force Brig. Gen. James L. Dozier, said today she felt all along her brother would survive his ordeal with Italian terrorists.

"I was surprised when I got the call this morning — I was sound asleep — but I felt it was going to work out all right," said Mrs. Townsend, who said she was awakened by a radio station about 5:15 a.m.

"A local reporter called and read the communique to me and that certainly got me awake," she said from her apartment in this small town just south of Houston.

She was worried at times during her brother's six-week ordeal — "Was he warm, was he being taken care of physically."

"I figured he would be able to handle the emotional and psychological part," said Mrs. Townsend, 48.

Midland fails to gain TIC approval for parking garage

Not paying filing fee contributed to application being sent back for further study

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Midland failed to gain approval of the Texas Industrial Commission on its application for an 11-story parking garage, according to a member of that commission, Midlander Joe Kloesel.

Kloesel explained to the Midland Chamber of Commerce board of directors during its monthly meeting Wednesday afternoon that late last week the TIC had sent the application back to the staff for study.

Also reviewed at the meeting in the chamber's conference room was a restructuring plan involving the committees.

Despite some reports late last week that the garage, to be built with low-interest bonds, had been approved, Kloesel said the commission decided it wouldn't place itself in the position "of being the soul and conscience of any community in Texas."

INSTEAD OF TRYING to determine if the projects outlined in the applications will be located within or adjacent to a blighted area, Kloesel said the applications will be reviewed on the basis of whether or not they follow the TIC rules as stated in the law. He noted that Midland also had failed to pay the filing fees and that contributed to its being sent back to the staff.

"The staff is reviewing all the applications. If Midland's application fits the rules as written, then it will be approved," Kloesel added.

He noted that no application had been approved at the meeting.

Larry Bell, new chamber president, noted the organization is "embarking on a new era with a new executive director and a new general manager."

CHANGES IN COMMITTEES include combining the highway and aviation committees into a transportation committee; changing the petroleum committee into the oil and gas committee; and turning the Midland Area Sales Team's direction inward.

Grant Billingsley, new general manager, said MAST will try to "maintain a relationship with the existing industries and keep them on track."

In the past, MAST had tried to entice outside businesses to locate in Midland.

Representing the Board of Realtors, Dene Kelly noted that $185 million in housing was sold last year, with most of the sales in the single family category.

"We don't have a housing shortage," she said. "It's here if you can afford it."

County Commissioner Durward Wright added, "I heard that only 3 percent of the population here can afford to buy an average-priced home." The average price he tossed out was $90,000.

Earlier, he had reported that the county commissioners have been reviewing from one to three plats for new developments — mostly mobile home — at each of their twice-a-month meetings. One study he saw reported the county contains 1,800 to 2,400 single family units, Wright added.

BILLINGSLEY ALSO reported on Midland's growth, noting that building permits for 1981 broke a new record with $311 million in valuations. The previous year, which also had set a new record, was $138 million. "That's a 124 percent increase in permits," he said.

That figure in building permits "has been creating some of the stir we've been getting in national publications," Billingsley said, pointing to recent stories about the Tall City in U.S. News & World Report and Forbes magazines.

Midland also almost tripled its permits for new housing with 3,650 being issued compared to 1,300 in 1980. That figure includes single family residences and apartments.

Employment in Midland, he continued, rose by 10.5 percent in 1981.

Steve Davidson with the Midland City Council reviewed the proposals for a $47 million bond issue and noted these items "are due mostly to the growth that we're all familiar with and we see everyday. He said the "list isn't in the final stage, but I don't think you'll see much change in the items."

Those items include a sewage disposal system, additions to Midland Regional Airport, renovations and additions to three city buildings, building of two fire substations, upgrading streets and putting in new water and sewer lines.

Doug Henson, a chamber board member, said he felt the items "are a must list. It's do or die."

Council decides to step up study on effluent discharge

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Midland City Council decided to proceed with studies on J. "Timber" Floyd's land southeast of the city and to help pay for the cost of stepping up the timetable during a continuation of its regular meeting Wednesday.

The council had recessed that item during its Tuesday meeting and held off on a decision until the next afternoon in City Hall Council Chambers.

In addition, the council discussed attending a hearing Monday in Austin before the Texas Water Commission, which is an agency of the Texas Department of Water Resources.

Mayor G. Thane Akins said Floyd has employed a specialist to evaluate how his land could be used for agricultural purposes. To speed up the timetable will involve more money and the city agreed to pay part of that cost.

FLOYD'S ACREAGE is being eyed as the location where effluent from the sewage treatment plant will be disposed. The project is the object of $18 million allocated on a preliminary list of items for a spring bond issue.

The hearing in Austin will allow the city to submit data on irrigating additional land in the vicinity of the sewage treatment plant with effluent, according to John Lowe, director of public utilities. This data will explain what kind of crops will be grown.

The commission already temporarily granted a permit for this additional irrigation but the hearing will determine if the act continues. Lowe said the permit, if granted, will be issued only for 24 months. By the end of that period, he hopes to see the new disposal system in place because the city will have to cease using the farmers' land for irrigation.

The additional land amounts to 1,603 acres which are owned by several farmers. Currently, the city is irrigating 1,350 acres with effluent.

IN EARLIER MEETINGS, the council had noted that because of the cooler temperatures during winter, less water is needed for irrigation. For that reason, less effluent is used by the farmers and the effluent has "stacked up" in the holding ponds and threatened to break the dikes. If this happened, Midland Draw would be flooded.

The disposal plan to pump the effluent to Floyd's land should eliminate that problem for at least 30 years, the council was told Tuesday.

Glen Doty with Black & Veatch engineering firm suggested his company proceed with setting up a construction schedule in connection with the Floyd disposal project. This schedule would be presented to the water commission at its Monday hearing if requested, he noted.

Akins pointed out that the disposal project "is up to the people of Midland. The commission should be aware of this."

TALK OF THE schedule prompted City Attorney Joe Nuessle to comment: "They (water board) don't have any business trying to legislate in the permit what's going to happen in Midland. They're trying to tie that permit into staying on that schedule."

The Floyd plan, according to Councilman Steve Davidson, "is the most practical and economical way to dispose of water that will benefit everyone involved."

Police nap robbery suspects after off-duty officer spots car

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Two men wanted in connection with a westside robbery Wednesday afternoon were in custody this morning after being spotted by an off-duty police officer who gave chase in her personal squad car — the second such arrest in less than two weeks.

Being held at the city jail today were two Fort Worth men, ages 21 and 17, who are charged with the robbery of 17-year-old Jeffery Wood in the driveway of his home at 4701 Brookdale about 2:20 p.m. Wednesday.

Wood told officers he was working on his car when two men in a beige Monte Carlo pulled into the driveway and asked directions to a particular street. As Wood leaned over to talk to the men, one of them grabbed him by the shirt and threatened to beat him up if he didn't turn over his money.

Wood said he gave them $140 and the men drove off. A friend of Wood's witnessed the robbery and took down the license number of their car.

Officers Kay Therwhanger and Dale Lester had just gotten off duty at Air Terminal and were heading into Midland in Ms. Therwhanger's patrol car when they heard a police broadcast of the robbery and saw the wanted car westbound on U.S. Highway 80 near the Schaler Rolls Royce dealership.

Ms. Therwhanger turned and started pursuing the car after the driver

Emerald Airlines terminates service to Midland airport

After less than two months of serving Midland Regional Airport, Emerald Airlines has pulled out, according to Col. Wilson Banks, director of aviation for the city.

Although Emerald's termination notice specified Jan. 29 as the last day of service, Banks believes it stopped last Friday. "Someone had tried to get reservations on Saturday and couldn't get them," he said.

Emerald Airlines, an Austin-based commuter line, initiated Midland service Dec. 1.

In the letter notifying Banks of its termination, Emerald stated that Southwest Airlines provides five flights a day between Midland and Austin and adequately serves the market for San Antonio and Austin.

Banks said he checked with Southwest and the flights daily to Austin number three. And San Antonio service goes through Dallas.

One of the major reasons he believes Emerald pulled out is due to low passenger load at Midland. The commuter line carried 340 passengers during December.

On its two daily flights out of Midland, Emerald utilized F-27s, which carried 44 passengers. And then it switched to the 85-passenger DC-9s, said Banks. "It just wasn't economical for that airplane."

Another problem facing Emerald, he added, is that it couldn't obtain the landing and take-off time slots it wanted at Dallas-Fort Worth Airport.

Alan Whanger, a Duke University professor, tells of his research which suggests that the Shroud of Turin might be much older than many scientists previously thought.

Duke professor traces shroud to 6th century

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — A Duke University professor on Wednesday presented photos as evidence that the Shroud of Turin existed as long ago as the 6th century, which would make the cloth 800 years older than previously thought.

Dr. Alan D. Whanger said he made the findings by accident, after he compared the image of the face of Jesus on the shroud with an image of Jesus on a Byzantine coin from the 7th century and another on an icon from the 6th century.

"My evidence indicates that the icon and the coin were copied from the facial imprint on the shroud more than 800 years before the shroud turned up in France," Whanger said, noting that there is documentation of the shroud since that time.

Debate has centered over whether the shroud was the burial cloth of Jesus Christ. The cloth, which is preserved in a cathedral in Turin, Italy, is a piece of linen 14 feet, 3 inches long and 3 feet, 7 inches wide. It bears the imprint of a man who was crucified.

Whanger, a professor of psychiatry who studies shrouds as a hobby, said he used polarized light and other photographic techniques to match the image from the shroud with the face on the objects.

He said separate historical evidence refers to a shroud called the Mandylion, which was believed to be a life image on cloth rather than a death image on a shroud. He said the shroud was folded and mounted on a frame at that time so that only the face showed.

HE SAID THAT SOME time between 525 A.D. and 545 A.D. the Mandylion was found in the wall in the ancient city of Edessa in Turkey. After the shroud's discovery, Whanger said artistic depictions of Christ changed drastically.

Whanger used polarized filters to blend photos of the coin and the icon with an enlarged image of the head on the shroud. Through the process, he said he established more than 60 matching points between the shroud and the coin and more than 45 matching points with the icon.

He said he believed the similarities are as reliable in identifying the shroud as are fingerprints for identifying a person.

The coin, which is about the size of a nickel, was issued about 690 A.D. during the reign of Justinian II. The icon, located in St. Catherine's Monastery on Mount Sinai, is believed to have been painted about 590 A.D.

Among the similarities, Whanger said, are a swelling of the right eye he believes was caused by a blow to the face of the crucified man, configuration of the eyebrows, disproportionately large eyes and markings on the pupil of the eyes believed to have been made by coins placed over the dead man's eyes before he was buried.

The shroud's history is well documented from about 1357 A.D., when it was in the possession of Geoffrey de Charney of France.

At a news conference Wednesday, Whanger showed a series of slides depicting Christ through the ages and focusing on changes after the Mandylion was discovered.

"APPARENTLY THE people who saw this (Mandylion) were convinced that's what it was," Whanger said, referring to the fact the image was presented as that of Christ.

"It profoundly affected the artistic depictions of Christ."

St. Mary's receives $7.5 million

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — St. Mary's University has received its largest gift since it was founded in 1852, a $7.5 million donation from the Kenedy Foundation.

The Kenedy grant will be used to build and furnish a new 62,000 square-foot, two-story law library, enabling it to increase its holdings to 250,000 volumes, university officials said.

The foundation was established more than 20 years ago by the late Sarita Kenedy East, wife of South Texas rancher Arthur East, in memory of her parents John G. and Maria Stella Turcotte Kenedy.

Ironically, the donation was the foundation's first charitable contribution because of 20 years of litigation over membership in the foundation that was ended last summer by the U.S. Supreme Court.

"This gift represents a significant endorsement of the academic merit of St. Mary's University, and especially our law school's long tradition of serving South Texas," said the Rev. David Paul, president, at a Wednesday ceremony at La Mansion Hotel on the banks of the San Antonio River, location of the original St. Mary's Law School.

"The Kenedy Foundation's deep and geunine commitment to the highest standards of legal training will be a major thrust for our future growth as a university," Paul said.

Foundation trustees Kenneth Oden Sr. and Judge Lee H. Lytton Jr., jointly announced the gift at the ceremony.

Dallas firm files against kidnappers

DALLAS (AP) — Two Britons who sought to charter a yacht to Barbados have been accused by a development company of causing almost $40,000 damage to the vessel during the kidnapping of one of England's most infamous robbers last year.

A Dallas company, National Development Co. Inc., is seeking restitution for repairing the schooner's hull and interior and $100,000 in damages in a lawsuit filed Tuesday.

Company officials say the 50-foot boat was used in the kidnapping of Ronald Biggs, who was sentenced to 30 years in prison for masterminding the $7 million "Great Train Robbery" in 1963. He escaped to Brazil two years later, but avoided deportation because of a legal technicality.

United Way elects new board of directors

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

United Way of Midland Inc., elected its 1982-83 board of directors and officers and made campaign award presentations at its annual meeting and awards luncheon Wednesday at the Midland Hilton.

Awards were presented to W.P. Franklin, United Way president, and George W. Bush, United Way campaign chairman, for the time and effort they contributed to the 1982 campaign.

"This has been an outstanding year for United Way," Bush said. "Probably this year has meant more to me than any other. The best part of this job is giving the recognition to the people who went out to achieve our goal."

The 1982 goal was $1.35 million; however, $1,407,845.16 has been raised to date, approximately $57,895 over the goal.

"Midlanders have assured our city's human needs will be met for another year," Bush said, referring to money raised.

IN THE president's message, Franklin thanked all the volunteers who "surpassed an ambitious goal."

"Once again you have demonstrated the United Way does work in Midland, and I am proud, as all of us should be, to have been part of that effort.

Recognition was given to all companies and employees that contributed to the campaign with special thanks to Sara E. Smith, executive director.

All awards are given to employee groups in recognition of employee contributions to the 1982 campaign.

The Gold Award was given to organizations achieving 90 percent or better fair share contributions. They are Casa de Amigos, IBM Corporation, Salvation Army, Frank See Chevrolet Inc., and United Way of Midland Inc.

The Silver Award, for 80 percent or better fair share contributions, went to Lone Star Abstract & Title Company.

For fair share contributions of 70 percent or better, awards went to American Red Cross, Permian Basin Girl Scouts, Lario Oil & Gas and Texas Instruments.

OTHER presentations included the achievement awards presented to employee groups for contributions of 30 percent or better.

The business meeting included the nominating committee report and the election of directors and officers.

The new directors for the three-year term ending in 1985 are Daryl Faris, Linda Isbell, Dan Mendell III, Rodney Robinson, Norma Short, Jeff Smith, Robert Thomas and Ricardo Torres. Re-elected were Carol Orem, Jim Servatius, Schatzie Tighe and James Tom.

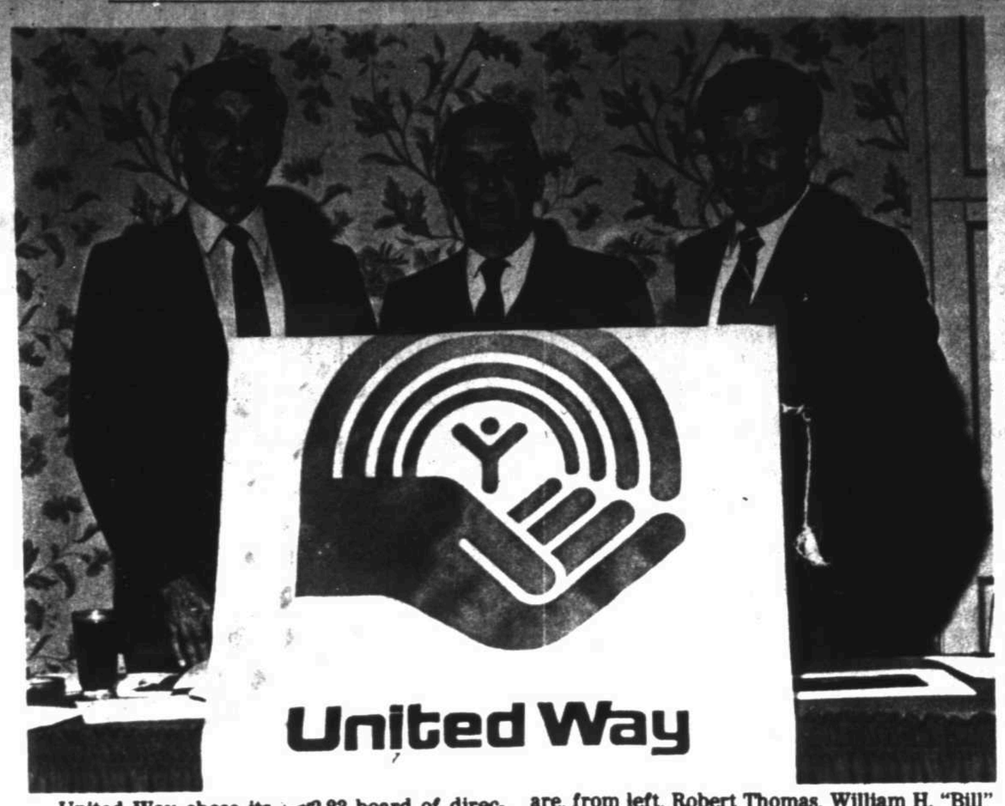

William H. "Bill" Collyns was elected to the board for a one-year term.

Officers elected for a one-year term included Jack Steele, president; Harrell Feldt, president-elect; the Rev. Joseph Schley, vice president; Jane Wolf, vice president; Leon Jeffcoat, treasurer; and Ruth Bell, secretary.

United Way highlights in 1981 included meeting with Big Brother/Big Sister representatives to explore possible funding. United Way provided $15,000 to the organization as a start-up grant and applied for additional grants from foundations.

ALSO, AS a result of the transient problem, United Way approved a $2,000 grant for Midland Association of Churches' emergency assistance program.

In addition, United Way worked with the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and their Children to help the group prepare its application for agency status.

Illinois dragon slayer faces prison term

CHICAGO (AP) — He was the dragon slayer who battled industrial polluters and corporate giants, a fair-haired boy with enduring ballot-box appeal. For years, William J. Scott seemed nearly invincible in his public duels.

Scott, Illinois' attorney general for a dozen years, is a dapper, handsome politician who mowed down almost every challenger who got in his way. He seemed destined for bigger roles in Republican Party politics.

As the state's top legal officer, Scott also was an innovator. With the power of government behind him, he took on the big companies — General Motors, Commonwealth Edison and U.S. Steel

But in 1980 he was convicted by a federal court jury of underreporting his income for 1972. Last week, the U.S. Supreme Court, without comment, refused to consider Scott's appeal.

IT WAS probably the last stop on the appeals path and increases the likelihood that Scott, now 55, will soon head for a federal penitentiary to serve a year-and-a-day sentence.

Following the high court's ruling, Jeremy Margolis, an assistant U.S. attorney on the prosecution team, said, "A corrupt public official has been judged by his peers, convicted and properly removed from office."

Margolis has said he would ask U.S. District Judge Marvin Aspen on Friday to set a surrender date for Scott.

Scott always denied any guilt. But the high court's refusal to hear the case was a clear response to Scott's protestations that the tax indictment was nothing more than "incredible harassment" and that the trial was engineered to ruin his future.

> "Throughout this ordeal I have attempted to conduct myself with dignity and respect for the law. I shall continue to do so."

Scott's image as attorney general was of a crusader for the interests of the people; a consumer-protector who filed a $34 million suit against General Motors and who sued U.S. Steel and the city of Milwaukee to clean up Lake Michigan. The Milwaukee suit is still pending but in June, a federal jury ruled GM must pay $550 to each of more than 10,000 purchasers of 1977 Oldsmobiles whose cars contained Chevrolet engines.

DURING his 10-week trial, prosecutors stressed what they called Scott's "secret life." He allegedly hopscotched from one exotic spot to another using campaign cash he didn't report as income.

Prosecutors said Scott traveled from the Caribbean to the Mediterranean to the Riveria and spent about 400 days out of state from 1970 to 1976, including travels with a young woman after he remarried. Margolis said at the time that Scott "traveled around the world like a sheik."

To show Scott had nontaxable sources of income, the defense produced witnesses who said they gave him thousands of dollars in cash gifts, sometimes handing him hundred-dollar bills on the street.

On March 18, 1980, Scott lost the Republican primary for the U.S. Senate.

The next day, a federal court jury found Scott guilty of deliberately understating his federal income tax returns for 1972.

The pursuit ended just inside the Odessa city limits at U.S. 80 and Loop 338 when the suspects stopped for a Department of Public Safety trooper who was in the process of setting up a roadblock. Ms. Therwhanger and Lester assisted in the arrest. Police said they recovered a wad of money found during a search of the men, who had been ordered to lie face down on the side of the road.

Formal robbery and attempting to elude charges are expected to be filed against the pair today.

On Jan. 16, an off-duty officer in his squad car happened on the scene of a robbery attempt at a South Midkiff Street convenience store and arrested a suspect in that case after a brief chase.

Two convicted of conspiracy

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A San Antonio man convicted four years ago of selling pre-Columbian artifacts smuggled from Mexico and a former Eagle Pass millionaire have been indicted by a federal grand jury on drug trafficking conspiracy charges.

Charged in a five-count federal indictment unsealed Wednesday were William C. Simpson, 50, of San Antonio, and Richmond Harper Sr., 58, now living in Mexico City.

Both men were charged with conspiracy to import P2P, the chemical used to manufacture methamphetamine, from Mexico, conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute the substance, and conspiracy to make methamphetamine, also known as "speed."

The conspiracies lasted from November 1980 until this month, the indictment charged.

In addition, Harper was charged in two other counts with possession and distribution of P2P.

Both were arraigned before U.S. Magistrate Robert O'Connor and jailed in lieu of $50,000 bond each.

Simpson and his wife, Ada, were convicted in 1977 with another man and woman of conspiracy to transport pre-Columbian artififacts interstate and selling stolen goods. The four had been arrested in 1974 by FBI agents with Mexican art treasures valued at $115,000.

Haig reports 'slight progress' in talks

By ARTHUR MAX
Associated Press Writer

JERUSALEM (AP) — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. met today with Prime Minister Menachem Begin, apparently to hear Israel's response to his proposals for breaking the stalemate in Egyptian-Israeli talks on Palestinian autonomy.

Haig reported "some slight progress" after the first round of talks Wednesday with Begin and other Israeli leaders.

Asked if the Haig proposals were acceptable, Yosef Burg, Israel's interior minister and chief autonomy negotiator, said, "There are parts yes, parts no." He did not elaborate.

The secretary flies to Egypt later today to present his ideas to Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak. The U.S. proposals were drafted after Haig visited Cairo and Jerusalem two weeks ago to learn the positions of the two neighbors.

The nearly three-year-old U.S. sponsored negotiations are aimed at bringing autonomy to the 1.3 million Palestinians living on the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and in the Gaza Strip.

THEY HAVE been stalemated almost since the outset by divergent Israeli and Egyptian definitions of autonomy. Egypt sees it as a stepping stone toward ultimate Palestinian independence, while Israel says it will never allow an independent Palestinian state and wants only limited self-rule for the Palestinians.

While apparently skirting this major stumbling block in his talks Wednesday, Haig said he offered "some general formulas in certain narrow areas." He did not elaborate.

However, Israeli officials today revealed some details of the gaps separating Israel and Egypt and Haig's proposals to bridge them.

While Egypt wants the planned Palestinian self-governing council to have 80 members, Israel wants no more than 20 and Haig proposed a compromise of 40, the officials said.

On the thorny issue of Jewish settlements in occupied territory, Haig proposed that each side have a veto on the use of state land, thus imposing a limit on the growth of settlements, the officials said.

"There is a great deal more to be done and there are many differences, but there's also some slight progress," Haig told reporters Wednesday.

The secretary bounced the autonomy talks to the top of his priorities list earlier this month in an effort to reach a solution or at least a major breakthrough before April 25 when Israel is scheduled to return the final third of the occupied Sinai desert to Egypt.

Both the United States and Israel fear Egypt will have little incentive to make concessions on autonomy once it regains the Sinai, lost in the 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

In Cairo, meanwhile, Egyptian officials welcomed Haig's return visit, but wondered why he was coming back so soon and said they didn't expect his trip to have an decisive impact on the negotiations.

"HAIG SHOULD be thanked for showing interest in actively playing the role of the third partner in the autonomy negotiations although this interest came a bit late on the part of the new administration of (President) Reagan," said an editorial that appeared today on the front page of the semi-official newspaper Al-Akhbar.

"Haig's Visit...Why?" read the headline atop the editorial written by the paper's chairman, Musa Sabry. It said sarcastically that Haig might have decided to come "perhaps because he found himself nearby in Geneva," where he met Tuesday with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko.

Egypt's president, in an interview published in Cairo last week said he welcomed Haig's return. But Mubarak questioned "what new could he (Haig) bring us" in such a short time.

McKee named nuclear Navy replacement for Rickover

By FRED S. HOFFMAN
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice Adm. Kinnaird R. McKee, a longtime nuclear specialist and submariner, has been chosen to succeed Adm. Hyman G. Rickover as boss of the nuclear Navy, Pentagon sources said today.

Rickover is due to step down Jan. 31 after supervising the development of U.S. nuclear-powered submarines and surface ships for more than 30 years. Rickover turned 82 this month.

Navy Secretary John Lehman, announcing Nov. 13 that Rickover would be replaced, said, "We need to put a younger man who can be available, perhaps, for the next decade in that job to give the stability that is so necessary to those very functions."

Sources said McKee, currently holding a key post as director of naval warfare, was chosen to fill that bill and become only the second officer to oversee the construction and operation of nuclear-powered subs and warships and the selection and training of their crews.

Lehman has said that he hopes Rickover will remain available to help in the transition.

McKee, 52, was born in Louisville, Ky., and has spent much of his career in submarines and Navy nuclear assignments.

Study says community colleges 'dead ends'

NEW YORK (AP) — Community colleges meet the needs of many Americans but can lead to a "dead end" for students who want to go on to four-year colleges, a new study on minority education says.

The problem is particularly acute for minority students because they attend such schools in disproportionate numbers, according to the "Final Report of the Commission on the Higher Education of Minorities," released Wednesday.

While praising community colleges for their vocational and adult training efforts, the study recommended that students who aspire to bachelor's degrees be encouraged to enroll in four-year institutions at the beginning of their college careers.

The report also said that after more than a decade of gains, growth in minority representation at the nation's colleges has stalled in the past several years.

Proportionately, far fewer minority students graduate from high school, get into four-year colleges and receive bachelor's degrees than white students, said the report, financed with a $700,000 grant from the Ford Foundation.

AMONG REASONS the report cited were misuse of standardized admissions tests, financial problems of minority students, and failure of community colleges to transfer students to higher levels.

"Community colleges have succeeded in providing vocational training and adult education for many Americans," the report said, adding the schools can be particularly effective in meeting local career needs with their associate degree programs.

But it said these schools have not been successful starting points for seeking a bachelor's degree. "Our data indicate that whereas three in four community college freshmen intend to get the baccalaureate, only one in four actually does so."

Roger Yarrington, vice president for research and development for the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges, said the finding did not take into account the kind of student who enrolls in two-year colleges.

More than half of the students are employed and attend classes part-time, and their average age is 29-30, Yarrington said. Sixty-three percent enroll in occupational programs, he added.

"They're not traditional students, but a lot of people try to impose traditional expectations on them," he said.

The study said the problem for minorities is particularly acute in states such as Texas and California, which have three-tier systems of public higher education, because those who don't meet the admissions requirements of senior institutions are forced to enroll in community colleges.

"For some of these students, the community college's open door leads to a dead end," the report said.

Yarrington said another way to look at it is "if you don't qualify for admission to the university, there is a way for you to get into the system."

The report recommended that four-year schools make a better effort to bring two-year students into their programs and that community colleges improve academic counseling and remedial programs.

ACCORDING TO a recent Brookings Institution study, 315 public two-year colleges enrolled 392,000 students in 1960. By 1979, the report said, the number of schools had grown to 926, with enrollment of more than 4 million.

The new report said an obstacle for minorities was that schools use tests to compare pupils with each other, rather than diagnose a student's problems.

At a news conference Tuesday, Alexander Astin, a professor of higher education at UCLA who directed the study, said examinations such as the Scholastic Aptitude Test are being widely misused to predict a student's probable success in college.

That may help boost a college's reputation as a selective institution, but doesn't do much to help the student, he said.

Midlander among speakers at 1982 Chamber workshop

ABILENE — Joe A. Kloesel, vice president of Canyon Pipeline Company of Midland and West Texas Chamber of Commerce president-elect, is among the slate of speakers at the 1982 WTCC Leaders and Personnel Workshops to be held in Abilene Feb. 4.

Kloesel's topic will be "The Role of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce."

Kloesel

The workshop is designed to assist chamber volunteer leaders and office personnel in learning firsthand about effectiveness of local chamber operations.

The syllabus designed for volunteer and professional chamber leaders includes: What is a Chamber of Commerce? Staff and Volunteer Relationships, The Challenge and Responsibility of a Chamber, Financing the Chamber, Telephone Techniques for Secretaries and Problem Solving for the Executive. Each session will allow time for questions and discussion of daily problems faced in chamber work.

Art Roberts, chairman of the WTCC Local Action Committee and executive vice president of the Odessa Chamber of Commerce, stressed the importance of local chamber of commerce boards making arrangements for their staffs to attend even if it means obtaining volunteers to operate the offices during their absence.

The workshop is sponsored by the Local Action Commitee of the WTCC.

West Virginia apiarist has honey of a job

By STRAT DOUTHAT
Associated Press Writer

POCATALICO, W.Va. (AP) — Brad Montgomery has a honey of a job. Not only can he plunder with impunity, but the rewards are, oh, so sweet.

Of course, there are some risks involved.

"On an average day I'll get stung six or seven times, if I'm taking honey for several hours," he says, talking through his veil as he lifts a honey-covered panel from a hive full of yellow-backed bees. "But, you tend to build up an immunity to stings over the years."

Montgomery is the state's official apiarist — beekeeper. He can't count how many times he's been stung over the past few years; he just shrugs them off and goes on with his job.

"Essentially, my job is to control honey bee disease in West Virginia," he says, brushing several dozen bees from the panel with his bare hand.

Bears have a reputation for stealing honey, but Montgomery, who works for the state Agriculture Department, says the lumbering beasts usually destroy no more than four to five hives over the course of an average year. Men, not bears, are the big problem, he says.

"The main cause of honey bee losses is due to starvation. We lose between 10,000 and 20,000 colonies of bees in West Virginia each winter and spring simply because the beekeepers neglect to leave enough food in the hive to sustain the bees."

As for disease, the main problem is foul brood.

"American foul brood is a bacterial infestation that literally rots the hive," he says, flooding a hive with a stream of smoke from a smoldering piece of burlap. "It's by far the most serious problem."

Foul brood is so feared that Montgomery, or his two assistants, must inspect each and every hive that leaves the state, to make certain that no infected colonies carry the disease beyond West Virginia's borders.

By the same token, he says, every hive that is imported into West Virginia also must first be checked.

He gives the hive another puff of smoke, in advance of checking the honey content, then continues.

"The smoke tends to cause the bees to engorge themselves on nectar, thus making them more docile," he says. "These bees are an Italian variety. They're really very gentle."

Montgomery says a healthy hive has about 40,000 bees during the busy summer season, including one queen, some 4,000 male drones and 36,000 female workers.

The queen lays the eggs for new bees, the stingerless drones fertilize them and the female workers take care of the emerging young, in addition to gathering the nectar and making the honey — the hive's wintertime food supply.

"The average life of a worker bee is about six weeks," says Montgomery. "That means during the peak season the queen must lay about 1,000 eggs a day to keep the hive up to strength.

"The honey is kept in the top chamber of the hive and the brood is in the bottom," he says, illustrating his point by pulling out a section of the hive's nursery. "As for honey production, the hive's field force usually consists of between 15,000 and 20,000 fully adult bees. The young females, those less than 3 weeks old, stay in the hive and receive the nectar.

"The field bees bring the nectar back to the hive in special compartments in their stomachs. After the younger bees receive it, they shape the nectar into balls and literally play catch, exposing it to a draft that they've created with their wings.

"Most of the worker bees that die after six weeks do so because they've literally worn out their wings, and wing muscles. They'll get continuously weaker until the day comes when they fill up with nectar and then aren't able to lift off. They eventually starve or die of chill."

Those that die in the hive are swept unceremoniously out the front door and dropped off the edge of the hive.

Reagan asks for additional farmers' support loans

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has asked Congress to authorize an additional $5 billion for price support loans to farmers.

The request is for the Agriculture Department's Commodity Credit Corp., a wholly-owned government corporation which finances price support programs, including those for grain, cotton and dairy products.

Department officials said earlier this month that Congress would be asked to raise CCC's lending authority to $25 billion. It now cannot have more than $20 billion in loans outstanding at any one time.

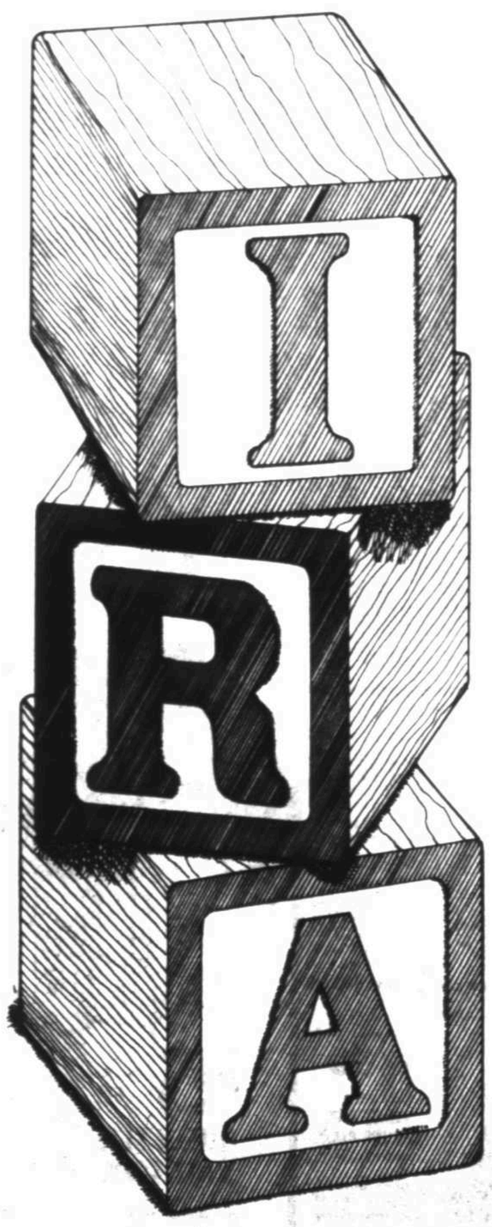

Officials said the increase is necessary to prevent suspension of farm price support loan operations.

Huge crops last year have helped boost loan operations, which have been increasingly heavy since the first of the year.

Farmers can borrow money by using their crops as collateral. Normally, when prices rise significantly above the loan levels — which are different for each commodity — farmers repay the loans and then sell or use their crops as they choose.

North Dakota hits (black)jackpot

FARGO, N.D. (AP) — Swearing is discouraged, the music is likely to be a local band, and the drinking is controlled, but on most nights, the blackjack tables are crowded in North Dakota bars and motels.

The betting limit is $2 a hand. If you lose, the money goes to charity.

Since the state put blackjack on its charitable gambling list in July, more than 300 playing sites have been opened across the state by service groups ranging from a community theater to the state's public television network to the Multiple Sclerosis Society.

Fargo, a city of 62,000 on the Minnesota border, is suddenly seeing tourists from neighboring Minneapolis and Winnipeg, Manitoba come to play blackjack. "It's cheaper than Las Vegas," said one customer.

Bar sales are climbing and at least one motel has built a new addition just for blackjack tables.

North Dakota lawmakers are surprised at its success.

"WE WERE looking for a way to allow people to do legally what they will do anyway — gamble — and for a way to help out the charities," said state Rep. Pat Conmy, a co-sponsor of the blackjack law. "We didn't think blackjack would be so popular. We were awfully naive."

The bars and motels lease sections of their establishments to the service groups. Larger motels have from six to 15 tables in the bar area, where players trade names and make small talk as the cards fall. Profanity is frowned upon, and pit bosses firmly escort those who have had too much to drink away from the table.

"You can maybe win $100 or $200, but with a $2 betting limit you have to play quite awhile," said Duane Hoppe, who drops into a local tavern three or four times a week to play blackjack.

"I just play for the heck of it, not to win a bunch of money," said the tall bar manager from Moorhead, Minn.

He says bars in Moorhead, across the Red River from Fargo, have lost business because of blackjack, although they still get the college crowd because Minnesota's drinking age is 19 and North Dakota's is 21.

"It's still too early to tell how much it's increased our business. But we are seeing a number of people staying longer," one Fargo motel manager said.

BOB MYERS, general manager of the Fargo-Moorhead Community Theater, said the theater's decision to sponsor gambling at a motel was based on economics.

"We realized federal cutbacks were on the way and that our public sources were drying up," he said. "We felt our ability to deliver services would be severely hampered — especially our children's theater — and that we might be forced to raise ticket prices to the point where they would not be affordable."

With only a month's experience, the theater can't say yet how successful its gambling operation has been, Myers said, but "the trend is good."

Dave Drenth, who manages the theater's tables at the Doublewood Inn, said even casino operators from Las Vegas were curious.

"I think they expected wooden floors and spittoons," Drenth said. "They said it looked nice, but they didn't seem worried about too much competition from us."

ROXANNA Clower, who runs a dealers school in Fargo, estimates 350 people have taken the 32-hour course since it started in May. She's taught many college students, a few lawyers and several grandmothers.

"People need jobs and the hours are flexible," she said.

Fargo Chamber of Commerce Director Ken Larsen said he has no direct figures, but "I suppose when you consider the number of tables and the people needed for each table, it does add up to quite a few part-time jobs."

Charitable gambling brought in $3.5 million in gross receipts last year between July and September. That compares with $4.9 million during the first half of 1981, before blackjack was legal. Bingo, raffles, and sports pools were allowed earlier.

BLACKJACK managers say it costs $12,000 to $20,000 to set up a blackjack operation. The state allows the groups 35 percent for operating costs and collects a 5 percent tax which goes into the general revenue fund.

Some operators say 35 percent is not enough and others would like to see the $2 limit increased. Meanwhile, Conmy said he's received calls and letters from people who wonder whether the state has gone too far.

Brady gives thumbs up sign in first real public appearance

WASHINGTON (AP) — White House press secretary James Brady gave a thumbs up sign at a Washington Press Club "Salute to Congress" dinner, his first real public appearance since he was shot in the head during an assassination attempt on President Reagan.

Brady

Brady and his wife, Sarah, received the good wishes of the president Wednesday via closed-circuit television. Brady received a standing ovation from the crowd of more than 1,200 Washington journalists, members of Congress and political figures.

Reagan, who appeared at the club's annual dinner last year, made a few jokes during the short closed-circuit TV presentation.

He said he wasn't telling age jokes any more and then added, "They called me as an eyewitness at that creationism trial."

He said his staff equates congressional sessions to some of their budget meetings. "Someone gets up to speak and nobody listens, nobody says anything and then everybody disagrees," he said.

Brady is undergoing what is expected to be a long period of therapy and recovery from the head wound he received March 30. He appeared earlier at the re-opening of the White House press room after repairs.

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Arnold Palmer reportedly will build the first golf course on mainland China later this year.

Palmer

Palmer's company will hire about 4,000 Chinese to help build the course in Canton, the Orlando Sentinal Star reported Wednesday.

The golf pro said he's hoping the course will be finished by October. Details of the course are still being worked out, the newspaper said.

Palmer said he met with Chinese officials at Bay Hill Club near Orlando this week and agreed on a contract.

Palmer visited Canton for a tour of the proposed site, part of a $50 million resort complex.

"I think this is great," Palmer said. "Very shortly, we will see a lot of action (in China)."

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The United Nations' new secretary-general, Javier Perez de Cuellar of Peru, has presented a gold U.N. peace medal to his predecessor, Kurt Waldheim of Austria.

After the ceremony Wednesday, both men went down to a basement coffee shop where Perez de Cuellar was presented gifts from Waldheim's native country to the United Nations: tables and chairs for the coffee shop and a box of Sacher tortes for himself.

The 16 tables, with marble tops and cast iron legs, and the 64 chairs, replaced less-exotic furnishings in use since the shop opened more than a year ago.

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — A divorce suit filed by Jaren Lewis, the estranged wife of entertainer Jerry Lee Lewis, has been dismissed in Shelby County Circuit Court.

Divorce proceedings will continue between the couple, however, in Chancery Court in Hernando, Miss., where Lewis has filed against his wife.

Judge Charles McPherson dismissed Mrs. Lewis' complaint after reviewing the divorce proceedings in Mississippi.

"He got word that the chancellor had ruled that Lewis was a resident of Mississippi at time of filing the divorce, so he dismissed the divorce proceeding here without prejudice so it could be heard by the Heranando chancellor," David Caywood, Mrs. Lewis' lawyer, said Wednesday.

Caywood said he would file a cross-complaint on behalf of Mrs. Lewis against Lewis in Hernando this week.

Lewis filed for divorce in 1979 in Hernando and his wife filed for divorce in Memphis in 1980. They were married in 1971 and have a 10-year-old daughter.

Journal says Laetrile fails as cure for cancer

BOSTON (AP) — A new study proves Laetrile "doesn't work" against cancer, and it's time to focus on other treatments for the disease, the editor of the New England Journal of Medicine says.

The report, which appears in today's edition of the medical journal, described efforts to cure 178 cancer patients with the substance. When the study was over, 85 percent of the patients were dead, and none had improved.

"There was not the slightest suggestion of any beneficial effect," Dr. Arnold S. Relman, the journal's editor, wrote in an accompanying editorial.

"Some, undoubtedly, will remain unconvinced, but no sensible person will want to advocate its further use, and no state legislature should sanction it any longer," he said. "The time has come to close the books on Laetrile and get on with our efforts to understand the riddle of cancer and improve its prevention and treatment."

The National Cancer Institute, which sponsored the study, estimates that 70,000 American cancer victims take Laetrile.

A preliminary version of the study, directed by Dr. Charles G. Moertel of the Mayo Clinic, was made public last April at the annual meeting of the American Society of Clinical Oncology in Washington.

The doctors tried to match the procedures of Laetrile enthusiasts. They put the cancer victims on special diets including enzymes and vitamins. But the patients survived an average of less than five months.

"It must be concluded that amygdalin (Laetrile) in combination with high doses of vitamins, pancreatic enzymes and a diet of the type commonly employed by 'metabolic therapists' is of no substantive value in the treatment of cancer," the doctors wrote. "Further investigation or clinical use of such therapy is not justified."

In Scottsdale, Ariz., William J. Libby, president of Arizona Laetrile Co., said he would continue to produce the substance.

He challenged the study, asking, "What did the 85 percent of the patients die of? Heart failure? Cancer?"

"We're not out of business and we don't intend to be," he added.

Laetrile is a brand name for amygdalin, a substance derived from apricot pitts and bitter almonds. The substance has been legalized in 27 states, and also is legal for use nationwide under a federal court order.

Not only is Laetrile useless, but it also is dangerous, the doctors concluded. The substance is converted to cyanide in the body. And in several patients, they found that blood levels of cyanide "reached levels that have been reported in fatal cases in poisoning in human beings."

The patients received Laetrile at least until there was definite evidence that the disease had spread or until they deteriorated to the point that the therapy could not go on.

Rescue team reports 500 dead after river floods Peru valley

TINGO MARIA, Peru (AP) — The first rescue team to reach a remote valley flooded by a jungle river in Central Peru said today that at least 500 people drowned or disappeared.

"Many people died or were swept away when they were sleeping," said Capt. Luis Ramos Tejada, who led 25 civil guards to the disaster zone Saturday morning, only six hours after the Chontayacu River carried an avalanche of mud, rocks and trees down the valley.

"Cruzpampa, the first settlement we reached, was gone," he said. "Nothing was left of the 40 houses that used to be there. I thought it was a supernatural punishment or something."

Ramos Tejada said two other settlements, Aji and Chalon, also disappeared completely, and at least 17 others were hit by the flood.

He estimated at least 500 people drowned or disappeared. But a policeman in Tingo Maria added:

"Many affected settlements have not been visited by the rescue squads and we cannot yet evaluate the full extent of the damage and loss of life."

Uchiza, the largest town in the area with a population of some 2,500 people, was hardly touched, he said. It is 102 miles north of Tingo Maria and 390 miles northeast of Lima.

Because of heavy rains and swollen rivers, Uchiza was accessible today only by airplane and helicopter.

The policeman said survivors moved into rural schools for shelter and medical teams were establishing emergency clinics to treat the injured and vaccinate the population against contagious diseases.

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Detroit-born actor Tom Selleck, TV's "Magnum P.I." and one-time USC basketball star, celebrates this birthday with you. Also born in this date: "Dynasty" star John Forsythe and actress Kathryn Ross. You will be greatly encouraged by what you can accomplish on your own this year. The financial picture improves and romance takes on a new meaning. Friends play an even greater role in your leisure-time activities. Do not be surprised if some of them also influence the direction of your career. Recognize the importance of obtaining the best available professional advice and be willing to pay top dollar to get it.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Work goes well and job situation takes a turn for the better. You could be lucky when it comes to finance today. Shed any worries and enjoy yourself this evening.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Financial rewards are a certainty if you are willing to put in extra hours. Close friends burden you with unwanted responsibilities. Do what you can to help if it is an emergency.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your friendship with someone from another country gives you the advantage in a business deal. Procrastinating will only magnify a personal problem. Tackle situation head on.

One of the handsomest bridge books that we have seen is Play Better Bridge, by Rixi Markus (Octopus Books, hard cover, 156 pp., $7 plus $1 postage; available from Bridge World Magazine, 39 W. 94th St., New York, N.Y. 10025.) It is done in a large format (8½ x 11½) and will grace any coffee table in a bridge player's home. But the book is not for show only. It contains many interesting hands, some sage advice gleaned from Mrs. Markus's many years of experience in bridge at the highest levels, and all of the Bols Bridge Tips. It is the best book value we have seen in many a day.

This hand was played by the famous surgeon, Sir Rodney Smith — now Lord Smith of Marlow. His partner was the actor Karel Stepanek, who was known for his adventurous bidding. An explanation of the action is not given, so we don't know what the actor had in mind when he jumped to four diamonds. In effect, he bid six spades over his partner's two spade response to Stayman. There was only one minor flaw to this contract — both the ace and king of trumps were missing!

West led his top club, and Sir Rodney was not fazed at the prospect of bringing in twelve tricks. He won the ace of clubs in dummy, cashed the ace of diamonds and overtook the queen of diamonds with the king. He then led the jack of diamonds as if he were trying to get a club discard from dummy.

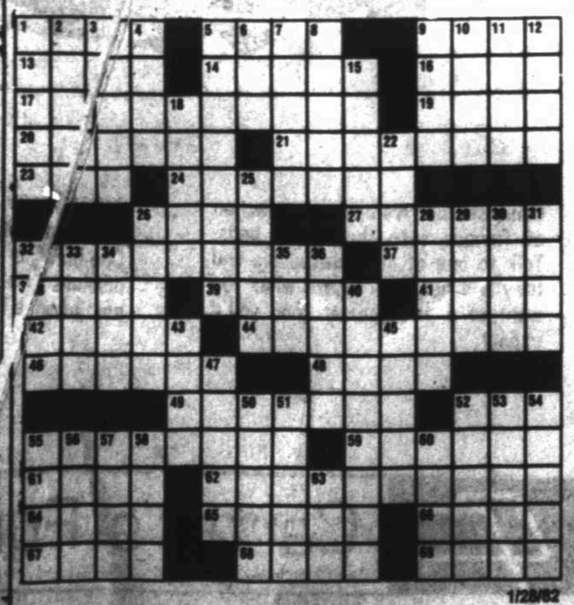

West was having none of that. He ruffed the jack of diamonds with the spade deuce and dummy overruffed with the five. Declarer came back to his hand with the king of hearts and led the ten of diamonds. West was still not going to let declarer sluff a club, so he ruffed with the three. Declarer overruffed again, then led a trump from dummy. When the ace and king crashed on this trick, a delighted South was able to claim the rest of the tricks. He had cleverly maneuvered to hold his trump losers to one.

Americans may pave Begin's demise

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
Hearst Feature Service

PARIS — American Jews are writing in such large numbers to Israeli newspapers or to their relatives in Israel to warn of the damage Prime Minister Menachem Begin is doing to U.S.-Israeli relations that it could have a significant bearing on Begin's fortunes.

Israeli diplomats acknowledge that a flood of essentially anti-Begin letters from ordinary American Jews is becoming a new factor in Israeli politics.

"For the first time," said an admittedly worried Israeli diplomat here, "Israelis are discovering that a substantial, growing number of American Jews don't support Israeli policy. It has come as a big shock because it never happened before."

Hardly a day passes that letters do not appear in the Israeli press from Jews in the United States deploring Begin's impact both on relations between the two countries and on the goodwill toward Israel among Americans at large.

The diplomat explained that Israeli newspapers correspondents in Washington and New York have been telling their readers for months that U.S. public opinion was cooling towards Israel, largely as a result of Begin's actions and style. But, he added, "that isn't the same thing as having Americans themselves, and Jews to boot, saying the same thing."

The letters' effect appears to be all the greater since most of them do not come from leaders of U.S. Jewish groups, but from writers without organizational affiliations or official axes to grind.

"Israelis tend to have a jaundiced eye about the spokesmen for Jewish organizations in the Diaspora, especially the U.S.," according to Israeli journalist Tamara Golen. "Many American Jews tell them they're right to, that the so-called spokesmen often represent few but themselves."

Judging by recent letters appearing in Israeli newspapers, American Jews have been most concerned to impress their Israeli co-religionists with two points.

Watching train-dodgers

The Texas Safety Association is disseminating information through its "Operation Lifesaver" program designed to increase awareness on the part of Texas motorists of the danger that exists at each of the state's 14,500 railroad crossings and to encourage extraordinary care when approaching or crossing these grades.

Statistics verify the need for such a program: Between 70 and 100 people are killed each year at Texas railroad grade crossings. Virtually all of these fatal accidents are preventable and most occur, TSA says, "because someone is in a hurry or simply ignores the warning signs."

While there's always danger present where cars and trains meet, we've observed a particular practice by some motorists along Front Avenue (which runs alongside the Missouri Pacific Railroad tracks) that is making travel on that thoroughfare extra dangerous when a train passes through.

In hopes of avoiding getting "tied up" for a few moments, waiting for the train to pass, some motorists are resorting to speeding across the grade crossings ahead of the train or taking other evasive actions that put not only their lives but also the lives of others on the streets in jeopardy. And, for the most part it seems, a collision with a train isn't the real danger. Rather, the real danger might be colliding with another car or a pedestrian on an adjacent street as they speed over the grade crossing and turn onto another thoroughfare. We have witnessed near-accidents on several occasions along Front Avenue under such circumstances — near accidents that would have been avoided completely had motorists simply exerted ordinary care and prudence.

Just the hustle and bustle of daily life in a growing, thriving city like Midland is enough to make automobile collision all too likely. Midland motorists should not add to that likelihood by exhibiting reckless driving practices trying to avoid getting "tied up" by a train. All motorists should always exercise utmost caution at grade crossings, regardless of whether a train is seen. It is the train that isn't seen that will kill you.

But it will actually take little effort to help remedy Midland's "other" problem in respect to train crossings along Front Avenue. Responsible driving on the part of all motorists — with a little less emphasis on beating the train to the crossing and a little more on safety — will make that thoroughfare safer for us all.

Ten best presidents?

Who were the 10 best presidents of the United States?

Asking this question, especially in a year we are celebrating the 100th anniversary on Jan. 30 of President Franklin Roosevelt's birth, can raise as much of a conversational ruckus as asking your friends to name the 10 most livable cities in the nation, or the 10 best newspapers.

Most of the scholars, journalists and closet historians who have participated in the pastime of picking presidential preferences this winter have put FDR up there with the top 10, as well as his cousin Theodore. Presidents Washington, Jefferson and Lincoln also are consistent winners.

After these names are mentioned the arguments can get more heated. It is interesting to note that Harry Truman and Dwight D. Eisenhower, who were not always universally acclaimed as great leaders during their White House residency, have been climbing steadily higher on the most-admired lists. Both deserve the recognition.

What can really cause turbulence among players of this parlor game is the question about the 10 worst presidents. Objectivity can give way to subjectivity when the debate turns in this direction. It is hard to tell how fair history is to presidents like Franklin Pierce and Calvin Coolidge, who presided during periods of relative calm. For that reason neither comes out well in these latter-day listings.

Actually it is not such an idle pastime, this examination of presidents. It is teaching us some of the history we have forgotten, and reminding Americans of the high quality of leadership we expect from the White House.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Antarctic scientists studying life in cold

WASHINGTON — The future of mankind may depend more on the world's climatic changes than on all the nuclear missiles the superpowers build in the next 100 years.

Jack Anderson

That's one reason why the U.S. government spends about $70 million a year on scientific exploration in Antarctica. The frozen continent is the coldest, windiest, most hostile environment on earth. But its unique conditions may give our scientists the key to unlock vital mysteries of the world's past — and clues to its future.

I sent my associate Dale Van Atta to the South Pole — "on the ice," as they put it — to report just what the National Science Foundation is doing down there. He flew in planes and helicopters, mushed by dog sled over the frozen wastes and clambered into ice cayes to talk with the top people at the bottom of the world.

There are 1,000 American scientists and support personnel stationed in Antarctica during the so-called summer from November to January. It's a summer that most of us simply wouldn't believe. Temperatures of 40 and 50 degrees below zero at the Pole are considered downright balmy. Each person is issued 35 pounds of clothing to offset the numbing cold, and there are strict safety rules that must be obeyed to prevent frostbite and sickness.

Here are some of the things our scientists have learned or concluded from their icy sojurns at the South Pole:

— It is theoretically possible for man to manipulate the weather for military advantage — like causing a localized ice age or other devastating climatic changes on an enemy country. But for those who might like to blame the Russians for the worst winter weather in recent U.S. history, the scientists assured my associate that the technology "is a long way away."

— Driven by necessity, the Americans in Antarctica invented a promising preventive for the spread of influenza and the common cold. They call it "killer Kleenex" — a facial tissue impregnated with iodine. It was credited with cutting into a flu epidemic that threatened the personnel at one of the four U.S. bases. The only drawback was a cosmetic one: The tissue left a telltale stain on the nose of the user.

— Arthur L. DeVries, who has been to Antarctica so many times he has a glacier named after him, succeeded in isolating a unique glycoprotein found in the region's fish — a built-in antifreeze that allows them to survive in the icy Antarctica waters. It could be invaluable if it can be reproduced and somehow assimilated by humans. The substance might also be used against cancer.

— Man's "improvements" are remorselessly swallowed up by Antarctica's ice, wind and snow. A landing field at McMurdo Station lasts only a couple of months, before it breaks up and floats out to sea. A more stable facility, Williams Field, is built on the permanent ice shelf nearby. It never breaks up, but it has to be rebuilt every four years anyway, as the ice engulfs it.

At the South Pole station, plumber Rick Healy explained a unique problem: The base was sinking on its own warm sewage, which had been pumped far below in the permanent ice.

— Dr. George Denton, a top glacial geologist known from his years in the Antarctic as "the ice man," drew the big picture — literally. Kneeling on the frozen ground, he took an icepick and sketched a chart of the earth's glacial periods.

The world is now in a fairly warm period between glaciers, he explained. "There have been predictions by some scientists that our present interglacial has passed its period of warmth," he said. "We are trying to use clues from Antarctica to solve this fundamental problem of why there were ice ages in the past, with the hope that we can understand them and predict them in the future."

One method of tracing the glacial periods is to drill for ice cores. Layers of ice are like tree rings, allowing scientists to compute the frequency and duration of the various ice ages.

There have been studies recently suggesting that an asteroid hit the earth 65 million years ago, forming a dust cloud that enveloped the earth and brought on a sudden ice age. One result was that the plants dinosaurs fed on were killed, and the great beasts perished.

Other scientific Henny Pennies have detected a flickering in the sun's energy lately, and warn of a possible new ice age. To rewrite T.S. Eliot, this may be the way the world ends, not with a bang but a shiver.

ROLE MODEL?: The General Services Administration has acquired an unenviable record of waste, fraud and general mismanagement in recent years, but its new boss, Gerald Carmen, is determined to change all that. He has reportedly told associates he wants the GSA to be run more like private industry.

Unfortunately, Carmen seems to be using the hard-hit automotive industry for inspiration — or at least for expertise. Himself a former auto parts distributor in New Hampshire, Carmen has appointed Steven Hammer, formerly with a Goodyear subsidiary, as GSA's associate administrator for operations. And his choice for associate administrator for policy and management systems was Charles Davis, a former executive of the Ford Motor Co.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, Jan. 28, the 28th day of 1982. There are 337 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Jan. 28, 1871, France surrendered to Germany in the Franco-Prussian War.

On this date:

In 1547, 9-year-old Edward the Sixth succeeded as King of England on the death of Henry VIII.

In 1909, the United States ended its direct control of Cuba.

In 1932, Japanese troops occupied the city of Shanghai in China.

In 1976, the U.S. Senate approved a 200-mile fishing limit off the nation's coasts.

Ten years ago, Israeli Prime Minister Golda Meir said her nation was willing to resume Mideast peace talks sponsored by the United Nations.

Five years ago, blizzards continued to sweep across the eastern and central United States, deepening the two-week-old natural gas crisis.

One year ago, pledging to end what he viewed as counterproductive regulations on the oil industry, President Reagan abolished the remaining price and allocation controls on domestic oil and gasoline production.

Today's birthday: Actor Alan Alda is 46.

Debate over 'social issues' is increasingly peculiar

WASHINGTON — A peculiarity of our increasingly peculiar political vocabulary is that the phrase "social issues" is used to distinguish certain controversies from, of all things, economic issues. The latter concern who shall have how much food, shelter, clothing, security and fun, and it is odd to talk in a way that distinguishes such matters from "social" issues.

George F. Will

But what are called social issues — abortion, busing, prayer in schools, capital punishment — are coming to Congress. So here is a small suggestion, illustrated by a small example.

The suggestion is that we can usefully nibble at the edges of large controversies, finding bite-sized matters about which people otherwise at odds can agree. For example, at the edge of the capital punishment controversy there is a new controversy concerning a method of execution: killing by injection of a drug.

Oklahoma, the first state to adopt the injection method, did so in 1977, in part because the old electric chair needed $62,000 in repairs, whereas executions by injection would cost $15 apiece. But the four states — Oklahoma, Texas, Idaho, New Mexico — that have adopted this method have emphasized that it is more humane than alternative means of execution.

The guillotine was devised by a reform-minded physician who opposed capital punishment. The first electric chair (New York, 1890, encouraged by Thomas Edison) and the first gas chamber (Nevada, 1924) also were justified on the grounds that they minimized prisoners' sufferings.

In Idaho, the injection law was sponsored by an opponent of capital punishment. In New Mexico the sponsor was a proponent of capital punishment who said: "It should make the death penalty easier for everyone to swallow. You just take and stick it to 'em until they're dead."

In all four states the medical associations received assurances that no doctor would have to "stick it to 'em." That would violate the Hippocratic Oath, by which physicians pledge to do no harm with their skills.

But there is something troubling about even the use of physicians' skills and tools. (The injections would include large doses of drugs routinely used for healing purposes.) The involvement of physicians would be required in obtaining the drugs, and probably in making sure that the intravenous tube is properly inserted to deliver the drug to a vein.

Granted, a function of medicine is to minimize suffering even when death is certain. But the primary agony of execution is psychological. It is not in the execution, which by any means is quick, but in the prisoner's apprehension about death, which the injection method would not alter.

If one begins with the premise that health is the proper goal of the physician's art, then many uses of a physician's skills — cosmetic surgery for trivial reasons, non-therapeutic abortions, the use of pharmacology to induce agreeable mental states, to cite three examples — are, whether justified or not, certainly not the practice of medicine. Such uses of physicians' skills can not be considered medical uses — aiming at health — unless you accept the dubious idea that health is contingent upon, or necessarily enhanced by, the granting of a person's wish for a physician's services. Certainly if the proper goal of medicine is health, there is at least moral ambiguity in any involvement of medical skills in the act of inflicting the ultimate harm, capital punishment.

One rarely stressed but significant reason for disquiet about the epidemic of abortions (1.6 million in America last year) concerns the increasingly compromised position of physicians. The serious controversy about abortion is not about whether a fetus is alive, or whether the life is human life. The controversy concerns the appropriate moral and, hence, legal status of that human life at various stages. But two things are indisputable:

Because of developments in pre-natal medicine — treating, pharmocologically and surgically, a variety of problems afflicting fetuses — physicians can treat as patients fetuses that physicians can legally use their skills to abort. And as neo-natal medical technologies improve, there will be steady lowering of the age of "viability" (the stage at which babies can live outside the womb) and a steady increase in the number of babies aborted after that stage has been reached.

Sometimes you can see to the heart of a controversy while standing at the edge of it. Concerns about medical ethics intersect the edges of controversies about taking lives by abortion and capital punishment. Certainly questions of medical ethics are social issues. But, then, almost every issue is.

Local calls are cheaper than you think

No one knows what is going to happen when the AT&T breaks up, according to the recent settlement they made with the government.

Art Buchwald

"Ma Bell" will be permitted to keep its long-distance service, its laboratories, and go into all sorts of new electronic communications. But it has agreed to sell off the local telephone companies it owned, which service communities.

According to the people who should know, this could increase the cost of local telephone calls tremendously because AT&T subsidized this service, while it profited from long-distance.

This means a whole new advertising campaign for local telephone companies, to encourage people to use the phone.

The TV commercials might go something like this:

Camera showing taxi driver. Voiceover.

"Do you realize that you can now call your local delicatessen after 11 o'clock at night for only $3.95?"

Taxi driver, "You got to be kidding. Only $3.95?"

"That's right. For $3.95 you can call anywhere in the city after 11 o'clock, and all day Sunday."

Shot of woman in supermarket. "When was the last time you spoke to your child when she was sleeping over at a friend's house?"

"I never call her because it's too expensive."

"What would you say if I told you that if you dial direct you could talk to her for three minutes for $2.75 after midnight?"

"I'd say you were pulling my leg."

"I'm not pulling your leg. The B&S Telephone Co. will now let you call anyone within a 10-mile radius after midnight for $2.75 for three minutes, and only $1.20 for every added minute. Surely there is someone in your town who would love to hear from you."

Shot of conference room in office. Stocky banker-type man walks in and says to people sitting around the table:

"Where's Slocum?"

"He went over to see Ronstetter on K Street about the merger deal."

"K Street, that's three blocks away."

Slocum walks in and everyone looks at him sternly.

Banker-type says, "Slocum, haven't you heard of a local telephone call? For just $6.95 you could have spoken to Ronstetter on the phone."

"Gosh, sir, I never thought of it."

Banker smiles, "That's why you're not going anywhere in the firm. A local telephone call is the only way to do business. Isn't that right, gang?"

Everyone at the table all together, "RIGHT CHIEF."

Shot of grandmotherly type talking into the phone. Grandfatherly type comes into room. "Who are you talking to, mother?"

"Hilda, next door. She seemed so happy to hear my voice."

Voiceover, "You don't need a good reason to call someone locally any more. Just pick up the phone and surprise them. You'd be amazed at how little it costs compared to hiring a Cadillac limousine. Make someone in your neighborhood happy today by saying, 'Hello.'"

Shot of attractive mother in kitchen baking pies. Phone rings and mother answers. Operator's voice can be heard, "We have a collect call from the Giant Food Market for anyone from Connie Marks."

Mother says, "I'll take it. Connie, is there anything wrong?"

"Mom, they're out of heavy sweet cream. Do you want me to buy light cream instead?"

"I'll make do. But it was very smart of you to call collect. By the way, don't forget the cottage cheese."

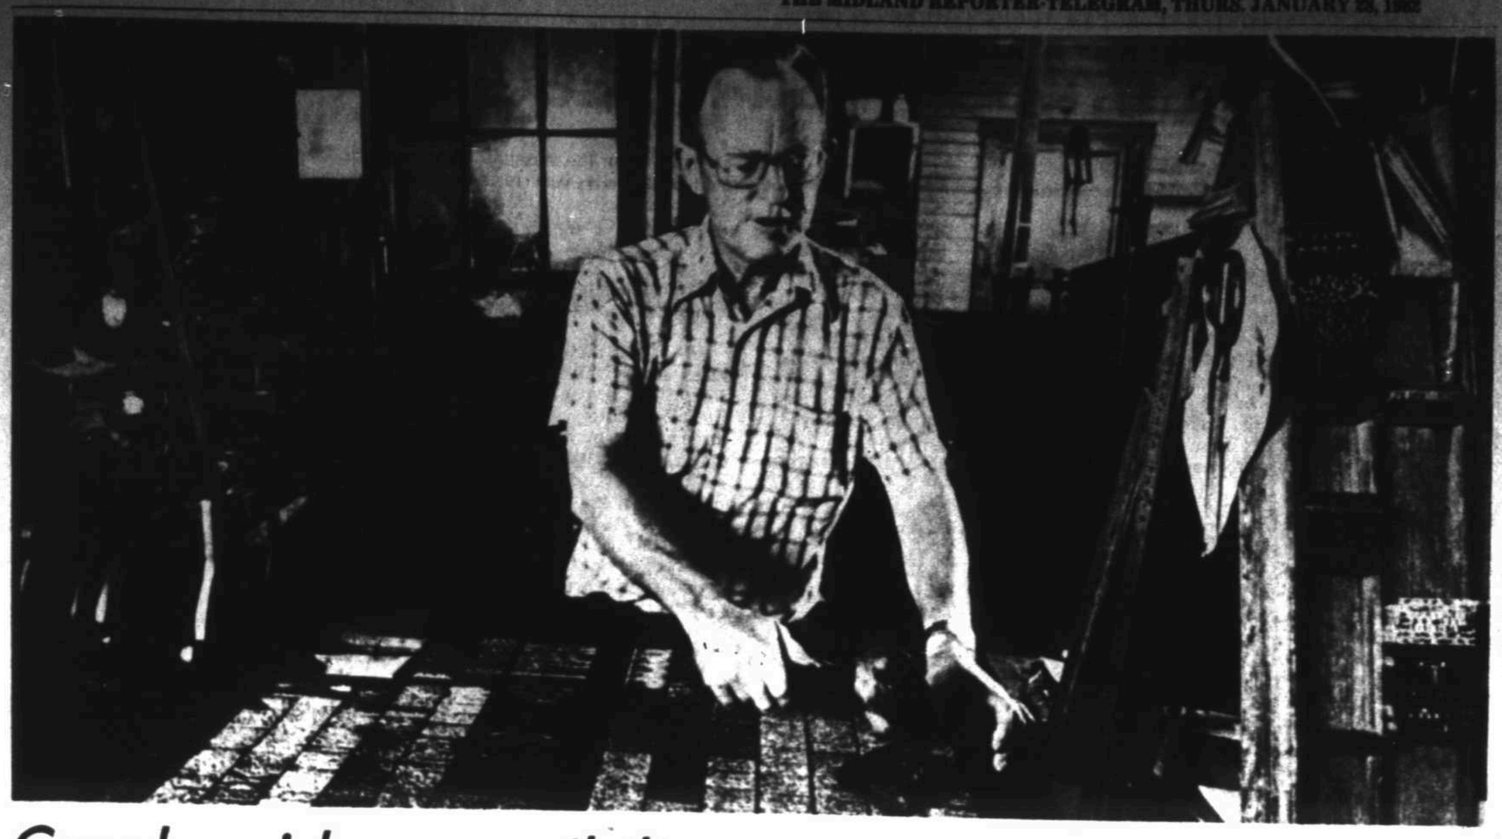

"Sure, mom. It's on my list."

Voiceover, "When you have a problem and you don't have the money to make a local call, B&S has the answer. Call collect, or charge it to your home or business number. Local calls are cheaper than you think."

Casals said responsibility to welfare of mankind

By ISAAC STERN
Special from Reader's Digest

"I give you my heart, my fingers, and my fiddle," I told Pablo Casals the first time I met him. I never had cause to take them back, least of all my heart. All my life I had revered Casals, who was two tremendous persons in one — the finest cellist in history and a supreme humanitarian.

An outspoken foe of totalitarianism, he traveled thousands of miles crusading for peace. Despite personal tragedy and loss, he always maintained, "Life is wonderful." I first met Casals in the small French village of Prades, just across the Pyrenees from his native Spain, where he had exiled himself in 1939 following Franco's victory. There Casals organized aid for Spanish refugees and vowed never again to play his cello in a world of war and dictatorship. Later, however, he took heart and played a few times for the refugees.

Casals felt that his first responsibility was not to his music but to the welfare of mankind. "To live is not enough," he used to say. "We have to take part in what is good and do our best."

Pablo was born in 1876, near Barcelona, in the village of Vendrell. The boy was fascinated by musical instruments, especially the cello. His father made him one out of a gourd and a strip of wood. At 11, Pablo received his first real cello.

His mother took him to Barcelona, started him on music lessons, and left him with relatives. Pablo took a job playing at a local cafe. Isaac Albeniz, a leading Catalan composer, heard him and was so impressed that he brought him to Count de Morphy, adviser to the Queen Regent, who granted Pablo a small pension. He studied for nearly three years in Madrid, until de Morphy advised him to move on to the prestigious Conservatory of Music in Brussels.

When Pablo auditioned in Brussels, he was told to sit in the back of the room while members of the cello class played. Finally, the professor said to him sarcastically, "Well, little Spaniard, will you play something for us?"

The professor reeled off a list of compositions, and Casals nodded to all of them. "This boy must know everything!" the professor said, and the class hooted with laughter. Told to play "Souvenir de Spa," a flashy and difficult piece, there was stunned silence when Pablo concluded. The professor said softly, "You will get first prize if you will consent to be in my class."

"No," Pablo told him. "You ridiculed me in front of your pupils."

Pablo, his mother, and two young brothers promptly went to Paris. Annoyed, Count de Morphy had the queen cut off Pablo's pension. The only job Pablo could find in Paris was as second cellist at a music hall that specialized in the can-can.

Destitute, they returned to Barcelona. Suddenly, things started looking up. Pablo was offered a teaching post, and he found a job playing cello in the opera orchestra. Pablo quickly became an international figure, commanding very high fees.

Although he loved the whole human race, children were his special favorites. Casals worried about children growing up in a totally materialistic world. "They know nothing of the wonder of life," he said sadly to me. "To realize that one is unique in all creation — what a privilege!"

In the summer of 1973, Casals and I went to Israel. He looked every one of his 96 years. We carried him, faint and ill, from the plane to his hotel in Jerusalem. Immediately, he demanded a piano. The only one I could find was in the hotel bar, so I had it brought up to his suite. The frail, weary old man sat down, loosened his tie, dropped his braces and started playing a Bach prelude. Color returned to his cheeks. He smiled and everything was all right again.

Maryland legislators put their money where their foul mouths used to be

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — Heck no, Maryland's lawmakers aren't fussin' about cussin' for nuthin' — they're putting their money where their foul mouths used to be.

The Senate Budget and Taxation Committee has agreed on what it unofficially calls the Undeleted Expletive Revenue Enhancement Act of 1982. It's better known as "the cussin' tax."

The bill provides fines for committee members each time one of them utters a no-no word.

Fines range from 25 cents for milder obscenities — such as the use of Satan's address — to 50 cents for tasteless words and a whole dollar for ... well, you get the picture.

A top-dollar word would be a rarity but Sen. Julian Lapides, D-Baltimore, says that, like art, he'll know one when he comes across one.

Lapides, in fact, is busy listening for a "100-center," since he currently leads the expletive sweepstakes and would like to give up the position to someone else on the committee.

Chrysler repays debt weeks early

DETROIT (AP) — Chrysler Corp. Chairman Lee Iacocca says that for all practical purposes, the automaker will have no U.S. bank debt after it makes a $47 million payment to a consortium of banks next week.

Chrysler is making the $47 million payment six weeks early to remove the final $1.3 billion in bank debts from its books. The company said Wednesday that the payment will be made Monday to complete a debt-restructuring agreement that enabled Chrysler to borrow an additional $400 million in federally guaranteed loans.

Iacocca said sales are improving when compared to levels of year-ago levels, and the company's financial position has improved from the dire situation of a year ago.

Largest number visit museum in 1981

By DAVID C. SODAMANN
Energy and Business Editor

More people visited the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum in 1981 than in any previous year, Ed Rowland, assistant director of the museum, told museum boards Wednesday afternoon. Rowland presented the figures during the annual meeting of the museum's board of executors and board of trustees.

A "Financial Highlights" summary distributed to board members by Homer Fort, museum director, showed a 1982 operating budget of $537,271. In 1981 operating expenses were $472,379. Completion of the museum's new north wing last year required $701,430, according to the summary.

Self-generated income, contributions and other revenue sources should permit the museum to operate in the black during 1982. Self-generated income is derived from gift shop sales and admission fees.

Rowland said 55,256 people visited the museum in 1981. That's 22 percent more than in 1980.

IN PAST YEARS, Rowland said, the museum has seen a steady 6 percent increase in numbers of visitors.

Gift shop sales for 1981 were up 26.5 percent, Rowland said, to $92,786.

Rowland reported the Santa Rita Club, the museum's "auxiliary," has 233 members, 169 of which are active in museum affairs. There are 46 trained docents — volunteer tour guides — on the museum staff.

"For Service" awards were presented to Eloise Elgin and Tom Fowler. The awards are given to those who donate unusually large amounts of time to the museum, or who render unusually valuable service to the museum.

Maurice R. Bullock, chairman of the board of executors, presented the awards. He said that Elgin has been extraordinarily generous with her time and talent.

As she received the award Elgin said of the museum, "This is the most personal and rewarding place to work anywhere."

FOWLER WAS among the museum's earliest volunteers. He served on the board of trustees for several years. Citing Fowler's many contributions to the museum, Bullock said, "He assuredly deserves our highest award for volunteer service."

Fowler remarked that the museum "is one of the things in Midland in the last 30 years that I've been pleased to be associated with that has been a success."

The board of executors elected new members during the meeting. The executors elect trustees, who are responsible for conducting museum affairs. They are responsible for the museum's hall of fame and serve on ad hoc committees.

Elected to five-year terms as executors were: Ben Alexander, Hobbs, N.M.; Thomas E. Rodman, Odessa; and Midlanders Mrs. Carlton Beal, Jack E. Brown, Tom Brown, George W. Bush, Rudy W. Kuzmich, R.O. "Jack" Major, Dan Mendell III and W.F. Roden.

Elected to four-year terms were J. Cleo Thompson Jr., Dallas, and Allen K. Trobaugh, Midland.

Murphy H. Baxter, Houston, was elected for a two-year term on the board.

SEVERAL EXECUTORS were re-elected. They are W.H. Aikman, Robert A. Estes, James D. McGlaughlin, and Charles Priddy. All are from Midland and all will serve five-year terms.

The executors re-elected several members of the board of trustees whose three-year terms were expiring. They were Mrs. George T. Abell, Martin L. Allday, Ford Chapman, Joe H. Dominey, Richard Donnelly, John H. Hendrix, W. Watson LaForce Jr., Sid Lindley, Charles R. Perry, Rodney M. Robinson and Tom Welch. Perry is an Odessa resident; the others live in Midland.

Bullock was re-elected chairman of the board of executors. W.H. "Bill" Collyns was re-elected vice chairman and Theodore M. Kerr was re-elected secretary.

Russell J. Ramsland was re-elected president of the board of trustees and the museum corporation. Others re-elected were Ford Chapman, first vice president; Richard Donnelly, second vice president; Kenneth M. Jastrow, treasurer; Robert B. Holt, assistant treasurer; John F. Younger, secretary; and Tom Welch, assistant secreatary.

Fort was re-elected executive vice president of the museum corporation.

BULLOCK ANNOUNCED Kenneth M. Jastrow would chair the museum's hall of fame committee for 1982-83. Other members, chosen from both boards, will be named later. The committee will nominate persons for the hall of fame this fall. Both boards must approve the nominations.

As the meeting came to an end Ramsland commented on the museum's operations in 1981. He concentrated his remarks on the museum's new north wing.

Ramsland said he was disappointed with the airplane exhibit, which has been a disappointment to museum visitors and the museum's boards. "It's not as we anticipated or as we were told it would be," he said.

"That particular exhibit is the only disappointment I've had. Otherwise the exhibits do as intended. It does have our attention and it will be corrected," Ramsland said.

The pro forma meeting was obviously intended to legitimize decisions previously reached outside the meeting.

Officials say federalism OK in principle; Use unclear

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — President Reagan's "new federalism" — a plan to turn over federal programs to the states, announced in his State of the Union address — has drawn philosophical support cut with practical caution from Texas officials.

"I was pleased with the speech and I am certainly philosophically in agreement," Gov. Bill Clements told reporters Wednesday. "I have no objection in principle to the proposal at all, but I want to see the details.

"There is a vast difference between making a state of the state speech and the finished legislation on his desk," he added. "This thing is going to take many a zig and a zag in the House and Senate."

Reagan proposed that control of many social service, transportation and education programs revert to the states.

Passenger says he was ignored

BOSTON (AP) — A passenger on the DC-10 jetliner that slid into Boston Harbor said Wednesday he was ignored when he tried to tell officials that he saw someone disappear under the icy water.

And the Coast Guard reported that one of its men spotted a body in the wreckage, but no search was conducted because World Airways announced that everyone was safe.

"They kept on saying everyone was all right, but I couldn't get it out of my mind what I saw," Donald Welsh said, a day after airline officials confirmed that two men were missing and feared drowned in the aftermath of the accident Saturday night.

Cauble says cattle, not pot, sold

By LEIGH SHIRLEY
Associated Press Writer

TYLER, Texas (AP) — Millionaire Rex Cauble says he sold cattle, not marijuana, to raise the huge cash bank deposits that prosecutors contend links the wealthy rancher to an elaborate drug smuggling scheme.

Prosecutors have introduced thousands of documents in an attempt to bolster their claim Cauble financed and profited from a scheme to smuggle 106 tons of marijuana into Texas during 1977 and 1978.

Cauble, whose attorneys rested their case Wednesday, says the documents only show his employees kept poor records.

U.S. District Judge William Steger, who told attorneys to present final arguments this morning, said he hopes the jury in Cauble's racketeering, conspiracy and embezzlement trial can begin deliberating by noon.

Cauble testified Wednesday that he and his ranch foreman, Charles "Muscles" Foster, decided to sell a large number of cattle in 1977 and 1978 because the market was good.

Cauble, 68, said Foster sold the cattle and brought him the proceeds in cash. He said the only documentation of the cash cattle sales were in the form of deposit slips and a list of buyers' names provided by Foster.

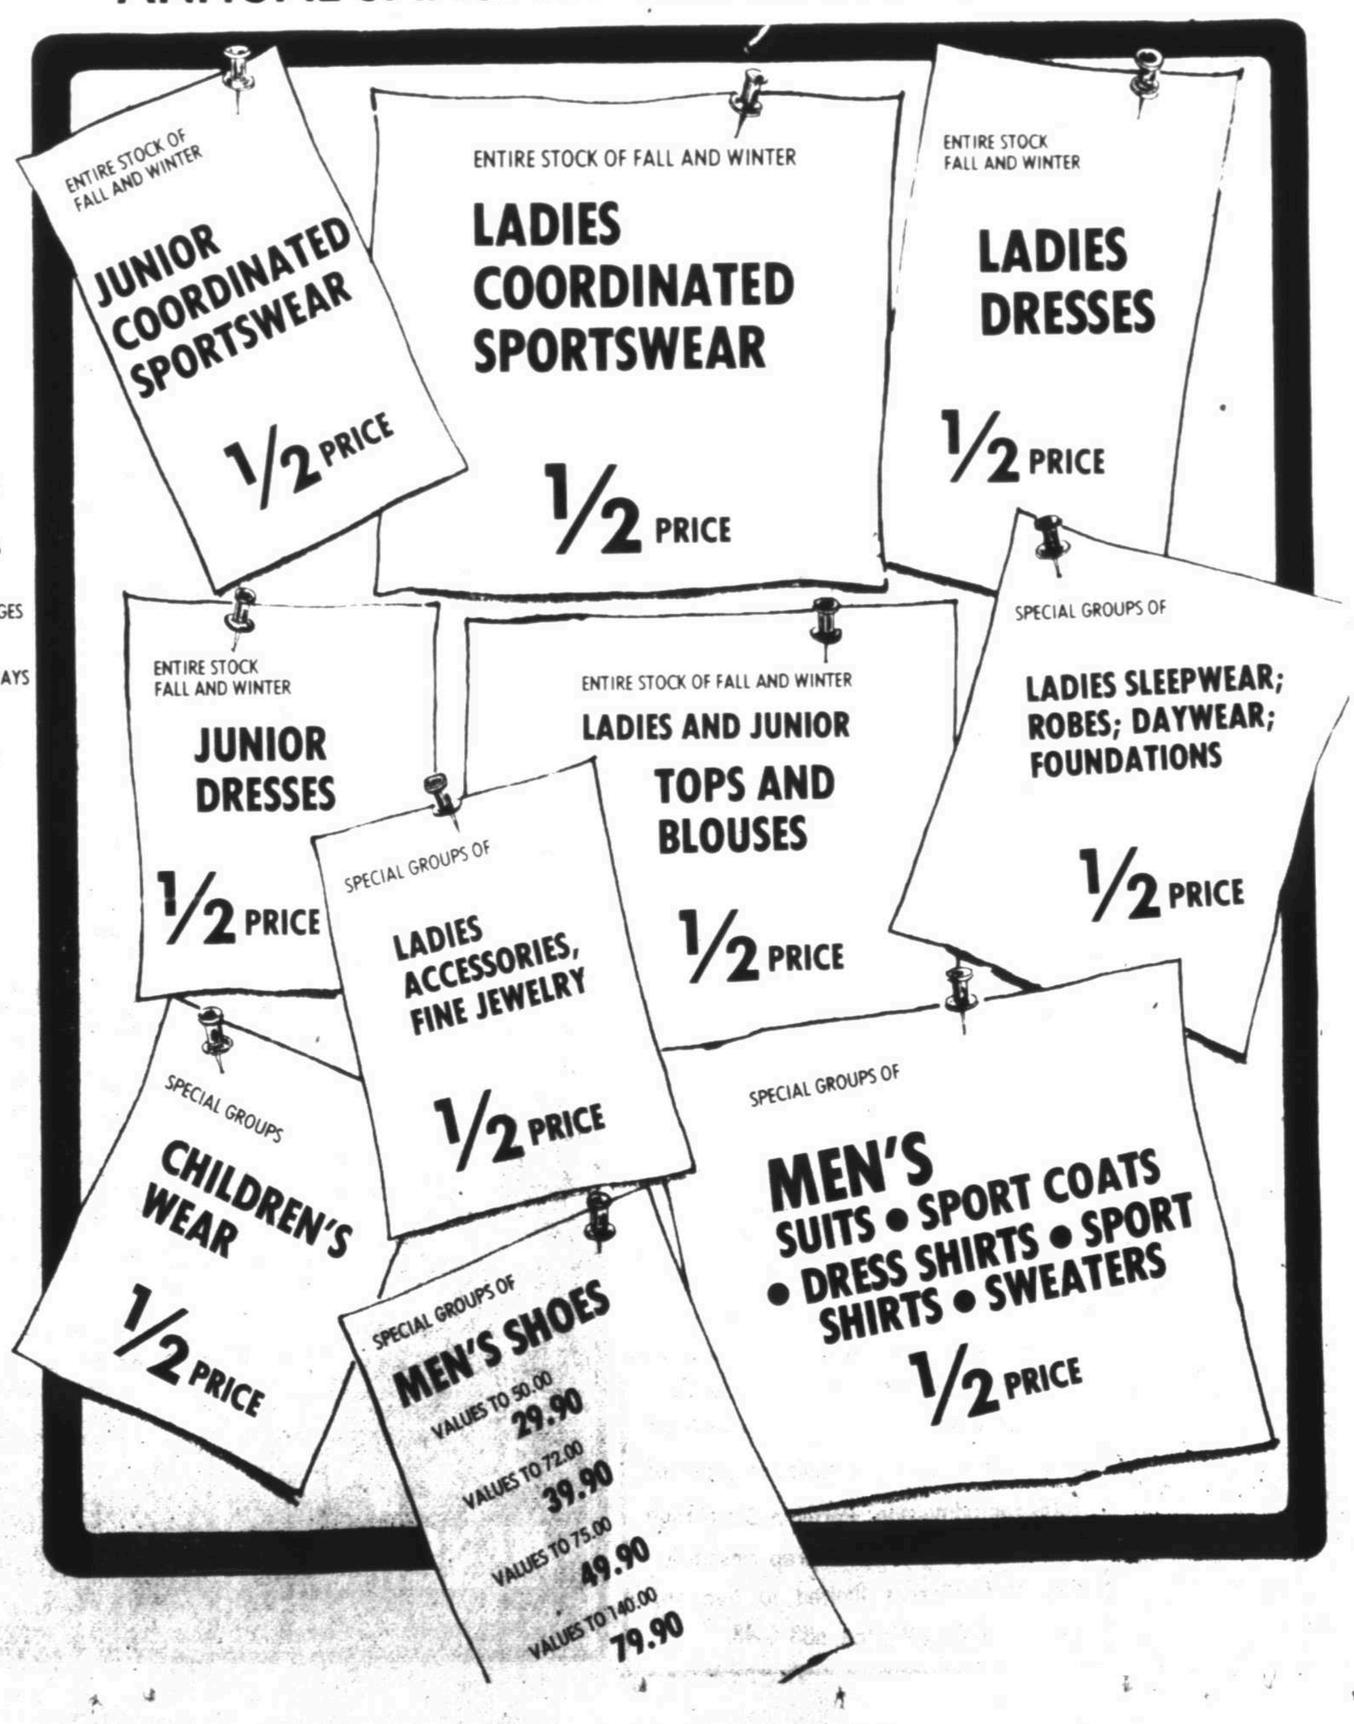

"Muscles wasn't the best record keeper in the world," Cauble said. "He knew what he was doing but he didn't keep good records."

LIVING TODAY

Presenting your own clear image

By SHARON HILLIS
County Extension Agent
Home Economics

Your image — does it say what you think it should about you? Clothing and grooming fashions have recently gained new importance in our society. Fashion is one of the few areas of life that the individual still controls. Because this is so, fashion has become a primary surce of self-expression. Why is this important to your image, you ask. Because your image is the appearance you present to the world.

A truly self-satisfying image is not something you put on in public. It is who you are — really are.

Your image — the mental picture others form of you — can be a clear picture of you, or it can be confusing. If you feel your image isn't as clear as it could be, you can "clear it up." Two steps are essential.

First, train your eye to really look at others, to see what sends good and poor messages. Analyze things that make others attractive to you.

Second, learn to look at yourself realistically. It's easy to feel good about your image as you leave home dressed for a special activity, for example. But, are you as pleased with your image when you catch a glimpse of yourself in the grocery story window on Saturday afternoon! If not, be truthful with yourself and decide to improve. You improve your image by improving yourself. Decide who you want to be. Start with your appearance. Choose clothing, hair styles and other appearance traits that project the image you want. As you practice looking like the person you want to be, you'll find yourself becoming that person.

Why is image important? It helps us get what we want from life. Image affects the responses we get from strangers, it helps determine who our friends are, and it can affect even the kinds of jobs we get.

Knowing you are presenting a clear image of yourself will give you a feeling of self-confidence and pleasure.

They don't bite this dentist

By ANN JOB WOOLLEY
Associated Press Writer

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Ben H. Colmery III doesn't get complaints about his bills from his dental patients. But he hears an occasional yelp and knocks his patients out cold so they don't nip at his fingers.

Colmery is an animal dentist, working on dogs, cats and even filing down an ocasional bird beak that gets too long.

"It just happened that my interest was in that area," the 36-year-old veterinarian said. "Nobody else was doing it so I thought, 'Why not?'"

A specialist in the field who is known nationwide, Colmery does everything from cleaning, straightening and pulling teeth to elongating jaws.

The tools he uses are the same ones used on humans, but his patients range from specially bred Doberman Pinschers to family cats. Animal owners from as far away as Iowa have come to his eight-room veterinary hospital on Ann Arbor's rural west side with their pets.

The patients don't sit in chairs, but are laid out on an operating table after being knocked out cold.

"For what I do, they have to be anesthetized," said Colmery. "I wouldn't put my hand in some dog's mouth when he's awake!"

A typical bill ranges from $50 for a root canal up to $300 for orthodontic procedures, he said.

Colmery has been taking his message — "Let's not forget the mouth ... an animal's gotta eat!" — all over the country, in seminars for animal technicians, other veterinarians, breeders and students he teaches at Michigan State University's veterinary school. He jokingly calls himself "the motor mouth" of the field.

A veterinarian for 13 years, Colmery said acceptance from the public has surprised him: People are interested in their pets' dental health and are eager to have work done.

"The first thing I was doing was root canals, and one thing led to another," he said. "The veterinary science is really coming out of the dark ages."

He said he had no college training in dentistry when he started — in his years at MSU in the mid-1960s, no animal dentistry classes were offered. Now, he teaches an animal dentistry course at the East Lansing campus.

"Everything that is being done on humans was first done on beagles, so I read a lot of books," Colmery said. "Veterinarians can do innovative things and fuss (over their patients). They don't have to worry about people who complain."

Smaller dogs have the most dental problems because their mouths are crowded with teeth, Colmery said. And, he said, small dogs are much more likely to be pampered.

"They eat soft mush and yuck," he said. "The dogs on dry food tend to have a lot fewer hassles than those on mush, for sure."

Cavities that go unnoticed can lead to ailments later on, he said.

"Eventually the animal can't chew on that side (of the mouth) and pretty so on the other side gets bad, too," he said. "I've seen people bring in animals with vague sets of symptoms (usually the animals have not been eating). You do all the tests, and nothing. Then you poke around in the mouths and find hurting teeth.

"For example, field dogs and retrievers — a lot of handlers will say they notice the dog is apprehensive about picking up a bird. Sure he'll do it, but he's not very eager."

Colmery said most of his work is done on family pets, although a lot of the orthodontic work is done on exotic show dogs.

But he said he draws the line when show dog owners ask him to camoflauge a genetic defect.

DEAR ABBY

Gay marriage is not legal

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Two weeks ago I received a telephone call from my youngest son (29) who has been living in San Francisco for the last three years.

He told me that a priest had just married him to his friend, Jerry — another guy. He said he has never been happier in his life, and he asked me to tell everyone in the family about it.

So far I haven't told anybody because I'm not sure how some of our relatives will take it. For my part, I love my son, and all I want is for him to be happy.

Abby, is marriage between two men legal in California? This is a new one for me. And I would like to know what kind of a "priest" would perform this kind of ceremony. — PENNSYLVANIA MOM

DEAR MOM: Congratulations. You haven't lost a son, you've gained another son. Same-sex marriages are not legal anywhere, but there are members of the clergy (Metropolitan Community Churches) who perform such ceremonies.

DEAR ABBY: I'm 18, the oldest of three children in our family. Our father died a year ago. We all felt terrible for a long time, but gradually the hurt subsided — except for Mom. She was always so active and cheerful, but since Dad died she has changed so much. She quit her part-time job and rarely leaves the house, except for church. She sleeps a lot, and when she isn't sleeping she just stays in her pajamas or housecoat, lying around the house. She's gained a lot of weight and doesn't seem to care about herself anymore.

She's still a great mother. She cooks and keeps house for us, but she doesn't want to go to the movies or even for a walk. She says nothing is any fun anymore without Dad.

We have tried to get her to see a counselor or someone to help her deal with her grief, but she keeps saying she'll be all right, it just takes time. She hardly sees any of her old friends, and we have no close relatives.

She's only 42, but she acts like her life is over. Is there anything we can do to help her? — HER CHILDREN

DEAR CHILDREN: Yes. Enlist the help of your clergyman. He will know what help is available in your community. There are counselors who specialize in teaching people to learn to handle their grief. There are also support groups, comprised of others who have experienced grief and learned how to cope with it. Your mother can be helped. Please don't take no for an answer.

Today's hair sprays separate hairs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Today's aerosol hair sprays contain very fine solutions which actually hold hairs apart from each other but help them stay in place.

"This gives your hair more body, but doesn't make it stiff," says Patrik Moreton, a hair stylist for Broadway theater personalities.

AT WIT'S END

The ultimate challenge

By ERMA BOMBECK

A group of us were sitting around the other night talking about will power when Phyllis said, "You have to admit it takes more will power to quit smoking than anything you can think of."

A voice shouted, "No! No! You've got incentive going for you. Dieting has to be the most demanding sacrifice a person will ever have to make. After all," said Ellen, "you're surrounded by food all the time that follows you around and begs, 'Eat me! Eat me!'"

Just then Marilyn interrupted by saying, "Wait a minute. You all don't know what you're talking about. You want to talk will power? Stop drinking. Now that takes real hard-core, gut-defying tenacity."

I let them ramble on for awhile before I reminded them that there was one thing that took more will power than not smoking, drinking and eating all rolled into one . . . letting your hair grow long.

They all sat there for a full five minutes in silence, no one saying a word, each one recalling the agonizing journey down the yellow brick road to long hair.

"How many times have I tried?" said Phyllis softly. "Five hundred? A thousand? Five thousand times? Then my bangs grow into the twilight zone where they won't go back and they won't go sideways. They just keep growing over your eyes."

"And what about that awful stage where the sides of your hair reach Neanderthal length," said Marilyn, "and stop? I was going for Grace Kelly once where you pulled your hair back from your face and secured it in a bun and during the entire year the sides of my hair never grew past my earlobe."

"I can't stand having hair grow until it reaches your coat collar," said Ellen. "It's like being followed by a whisk broom. It won't go in your collar and it won't go out."

"I was a woman obsessed," I said. "Once when I had let my hair grow for six weeks, a hairdresser wanted to 'even it up.' They tell me I pinned him against the wall with the scissors over his throat and threatened to make a topiary tree out of his mustache if he touched my hair. Believe me, Jaclyn Smith and Brooke Shields deserve everything they get. Let's hear it for fat hair."

THE ART OF LIVING

Heaven helps the father of the bride

By JOHN G. HUBBELL
(Special from Families, a publication of The Reader's Digest Assn., Inc.)

"What would you say if I asked to marry your daughter?"

I had the evening paper in hand and was on my way to a comfortable chair in the living room. As the father of nine, I was used to crazy questions and knew how to deal with them. One simply smiled and went about one's business.

The young man followed me into the living room. "Well?" he inquired, smiling.

"Well, what?" I said, smiling back.

"Sir, I love your daughter."

Good Lord, he was serious! This bright, handsome, personable young man wanted to take away my beloved little girl.

"Does SHE want to marry YOU?"

"Yes, sir. We agreed I should talk to you and...."

At that moment, the delightful young woman who had been my daughter for 21 years entered the room. She sat beside the interloper and smiled. It occurred to me how fortunate I was. This outstanding lad had grown up in our neighborhood. I knew him and his family well. Moreover, the two of them were old enough to do as they pleased; yet, they sought my blessing. Suddenly, I was very glad to give it.

"Love her," I said, shaking his hand. "Take care of her."

Wedding plans were drawn up. Following a church ceremony, my daughter wanted a reception at home. "It will save a ton of money," I gloated to a friend.

"Good thing," he agreed, "because you'll need a ton and a half for the rest of it — the wedding gown, the dresses for the bridesmaids, the...." "I have to pay for all that?"

"Of course. The dresses will run you $2500 to $3000."

"Big deal! How often does a man get to throw a wedding for his daughter?"

He continued, oblivious to my words. "Then there's all that interior decorating and landscaping. Why, your wife was telling my wife...."

I rushed home. "Interior decorating?" I shrilled. "Landscaping?"

My wife seemed surprised. "You don't expect to have a reception here with the place in this condition, do you?"

From then on, life deteriorated. My favorite living-room chair disappeared to be refitted. Furniture was piled up all over the place and covered with sheets.

"What we really need is a new sewing machine," my wife said. "I found one for $695. It'll save you $200."

I gave up, and the place began to change before my dazed eyes. Then my wife suggested that I move the tool shed. "I want our guests to see green grass," she said brightly.

"Can't move it," I proclaimed. "That thing is anchored."

My 19-year-old son proceeded to detach all the anchors and, in a few minutes, we were "walking" the shed to a far corner of the yard.

The wedding day loomed close and, suddenly, I couldn't wait to be rid of the witch the bride-to-be had become. Always a sweet-tempered, helpful child, she now became Dracula's other daughter. Did her mother need help cleaning? She would take a long walk.

On wedding day minus one, she reverted to form. I found her with her arms around her mother, telling her how much she appreciated all that had been done for her.

In the afternoon, it was my turn — then the turns of any of her sisters and brothers who could tolerate the sudden sweetness and light.

We endured the wettest spring in memory, and a new storm lashed us with the festivities just 36 hours away. Were we crazy to invite crowds of people to a lawn reception in so unsettled a season? What I finally remembered is that when my wife sets her mind on a plan of action, everything will turn out all right.

And it was. The weather, everything, was perfect. I decided it had been worth all my efforts. After all, how often does a man get to throw a wedding?

Coconut high in calories

By MINNIE BERNARDINO
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Q: I love coconut and I do wonders with it in various recipes from entrees to desserts. Can you please tell me the caloric content of coconut milk, coconut cream and shredded fresh and dried coconut? I've always wondered about this and all the important nutrients that coconuts contribute, if any.

A: If you're watching calories, coconuts can ruin your dietary regimen. A pound of fresh coconut (edible portion) provides approximately 865 calories. One cup of coconut milk provides 615 calories (whole milk contains 150 calories); 1 tablespoon coconut cream provides 48 calories (heavy whipping cream provides 52); 1 cup shredded fresh coconut provides 349 calories and 1 cup shredded dried coconut provides 344 calories. The coconut is considered to be a good source of phosphorus and iron but a poor source of Vitamin C.

Q: When substituting cornstarch for flour in gravy making, should the starch be added in the beginning with the drippings or should it be dissolved in water and added almost at the end of cooking? Since I'm allergic to wheat I can't use flour so I've turned to cornstarch in cooking. Do you have a good basic recipe for white sauce using cornstarch?

A: There are two techniques for thickening gravy with cornstarch. You may add the starch, as you would flour, to the hot drippings then stir and cook just until smooth before adding the liquid or broth. Or, combine the cornstarch with the liquid to dissolve, then stir into the gravy. In both cases, the gravy does not need prolonged boiling after it has thickened, as you will not get a "floury" taste. Longer cooking tends to thin out cornstarch mixtures.

Here's a good recipe for medium white sauce using cornstarch.

CORNSTARCH WHITE SAUCE

1 cup cold milk
1 tablespoon cornstarch
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
1-4 teaspoon salt
1-8 teaspoon black pepper

Gradually stir milk into cornstarch in small saucepan. Add butter, salt and pepper. Bring to boil over medium heat, stirring constantly. Boil 1 minute. Makes 1 cup.

Note: For thin white sauce, decrease cornstarch to 1-2 tablespoon and butter to 1 tablespoon.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Handy family schedule

DEAR HELOISE:

With four teen-agers, it seemed like we were all going in four different directions at once.

I finally came up with the idea of making out a schedule sheet which I had mimeographed, one for each member of the family.

Each schedule is for one week's activities. All the things the children as well as my husband and I are involved in are copied off onto the calendar we keep for that purpose.

We then copy everyone's schedule onto our individual copies. This way, the children know when we are having something that involves the entire family and can plan their schedules accordingly, unless their plans take priority.

School activities, church functions, meetings and work still prevent us from having meals together, but at least I know when certain family members will be late for a meal, not home at all, or late coming home.

I know where they are and they know when Mom and Dad have something planned. This sure ended the complaint, "Nobody told me!" — Mae Endow

Anyone who can come up with a plan for keeping up with teen-agers is tops in my book. — Heloise

PAINT MATCHUP

Dear Heloise: Dip a popsicle stick in your paint bucket and take the stick along to the store with you when it's time to match up more paint. Helps insure the right color.

That little stick might help when you go shopping for draperies, bedspreads, and other accessories too. — Faye Ann Nelson

INVALID'S SIGNAL

Dear Heloise: When my mother was ill and confined to bed, it was difficult for her to talk.

To make it easy for her to call me when she needed something, I hung a string of bells across her headboard.

All she had to do was shake the bells and I could hear them from anywhere in the house. It sure saved me time and many extra steps, as well as assuring me she could reach me when needed. — Dorotha M.

GARMENT BAGS

Dear Heloise: The wire hanger on most garment bags that one takes on trips can get very heavy and make the hand sore from carrying.

So take a piece of rubber tubing that can be purchased in a hardware store and push the hanger's handle through the hose, cutting off the excess.

You'll find this gives you a better grip on the handle as well as carrying ease — especially across those long terminals at the airport. — Rita Pierce

PICTURE DISPLAY

Dear Heloise: My grandchildren love to color pictures for me (more than I can keep displayed on the refrigerator).

I purchased an inexpensive photo album with adhesive pages, and we put the best pictures in it.

This makes them try harder to make a good picture, and they also learn to print their names on them so we can see who did the work.

Their progress can also be seen as they grow older. They look at it almost every time they come over to see me, and it gives them a good feeling to see their work so grandly displayed. — Clever Grandma

GIANT RUBBERBAND

Dear Heloise: Before discarding your pantyhose, cut off the elastic band top to use as a giant rubberband for large packages and bundles. — Vivian Mosey

Hearty meals for winter

By SARAH FRITSCHNER
The Los Angeles Times
The Washington Post
News Service

Cold, rainy days promise harsher weather in the months ahead and never fail to provoke enthusiasm for hot, hearty meals.

Out come stockpots and dutch ovens for soups and stews that freeze well in addition to being wholesome entrees. Some of these favorite dishes are very simple to make.

Beef stew made with beer may seem an unlikely combination, but in this case, it makes a famous Flemish or Belgian meal when served with boiled potatoes — a perfect candidate for the meat-and-potatoes fan.

The flour used to dredge the meat thickens the beer to make the gravy. If the stew needs to be thinned, use beer, beef broth or water.

Serve stew with boiled new potatoes (don't worry about peelin them) and cooked carrots. Cut the carrots into small, thin sticks, add them to a small amount of oil in a heavy saucepan, cover with a tight-fitting lid and allow them to steam in their own moisture over medium heat until al dente.

If you're feeling adventurous, turn up the heat under the carrots and let them get very brown. A tablespoon of water stirred into the pan at that point will cause the carrots to be covered in an interesting "sauce."

It is assumed that even the barest kitchen is equipped with flour, sugar, salt, pepper and vegetable oil or butter.

SHOPPING LIST: stew meat (or use chuck or round from which you can cut chunks), onions, garlic, bay leaf, thyme, beer, carrots, potatoes.

FLEMISH BEEF STEW
(5 servings)

1-2 cup flour
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon freshly ground pepper
2 pounds beef chunks, about 1 1-2 inch cubes (cut from chuck or round)
3 tablespoons vegetable oil, or more as needed
1 1-4 cups sliced, peeled onions
1 clove garlic, peeled and minced
1 bay leaf
1-4 teaspoon thyme
12 ounces beer

Combine flour, salt and pepper. Turn meat cubes in flour, shaking off excess. Set aside. Heat half the oil in a skillet and add onions and garlic. Stir over medium heat until onions are translucent. Remove to a bowl. Add remaining oil to skillet and brown meat in small batches. When all the meat is browned, return onions and garlic to skillet with bay leaf, thyme and beer. Bring to simmer, scraping brown bits from skillet. Cover tightly and reduce heat to low. Continue to simmer until meat is tender, approximately 1 to 1 1-4 hours. Serve the gravy over potatoes.

Traditional French dessert cake is regal perfection

Baba au Coconut Amaretto is a regal version of the French classic. Its velvety liqueur taste proves the perfect evolution of a cake created by a relative of Louis XV.

Nothing beats a time-tested dessert which has been modified to perfection. One example is the Baba au Rhum, a traditional French dessert cake which has undergone several centuries of flavor enhancement.

The latest recipe improvement, a new liqueur taste, produces perhaps the most delectable heir to the "baba" lineage yet — Baba au Coconut Amaretto.

The baba originated in Poland, and according to its connoisseurs, was first made with rye flour and Hungarian wine. It then "migrated" to France during the reign of Louis XV, whose father-in-law, exiled at Nancy, amused himself by pouring liqueur on a cake and setting it afire. Having been an avid reader of "The Arabian Nights," he called his specialite "Ali Baba."

King Louis and his in-law would have been delighted to taste the most recent version made with coconut almond liqueur. The velvety Coconut Amaretto seeps into a rich sponge cake that's zesty with citrus. Whipped cream made with the cordial crowns it all. This dessert, perfect for drop-in company, last awhile; in fact, the longer the baba soaks in the liqueur the better it tastes. Raisins may be substituted for currants in the recipe.

Another scrumptious classic fit for a king is Amaretto Cheese Pie. The scent and taste of DeKuyper Amaretto make it the most elegant of cheesecakes. Easily prepared a day in advance and chilled, this delicious dessert features a graham cracker crust and a cream cheese filling decked with glistening, golden apricot halves.

Desserts of royalty-pleasing ancestry like the baba ad the cheese pie become more notable with the addition of such liqueurs as Amaretto and Coconut Amaretto. Serve one of these variations on dessert classics — and carry on the regal tradition.

BABA AU COCONUT AMARETTO

¼ cup dried currants
3 tbisp. Coconut Amaretto
½ cup milk
½ cup butter or margarine
1 package (¼ oz.) dry yeast
2 tbisp. sugar
½ tsp. salt
½ tsp. grated lemon peel
3 eggs, lightly beaten
2 cups flour

In small bowl combine currants and Coconut Amaretto; let stand 30 minutes. In small saucepan, scald milk; add butter, and stir until melted. Pour into large bowl; cool to lukewarm (150 to 115 degrees F.). Sprinkle yeast over milk mixture; stir until dissolved. Stir in sugar, salt, lemon peel, eggs, currants and Coconut Amaretto in which currants were soaked.

Add flour; beat until smooth. Cover, let rise in warm place until doubled in bulk, about 1 hour. Beat down with a wooden spoon; turn into a greased and floured 9-cup Bundt pan. Cover; let rise in a warm place until doubled, about 50 minutes. Bake in a 350 degree F. oven 35 minutes or until cake tester inserted in center comes out clean. Cool on wire rack 5 minutes. Turn out of pan; cool 15 minutes.

Meanwhile, prepared Coconut Amaretto Syrup. Return baba to pan. Poke many holes in baba with a skewer or long-tined fork. Gradually pour syrup over baba until syrup is completely absorbed. Let stand 2 hours. Invert onto serving plate; wrap with plastic wrap and allow to stand overnight. Serve with Coconut Amaretto Whipped Cream.

COCONUT AMARETTO SYRUP

1 cup water
¾ cup sugar
1 medium orange, unpeeled, sliced
½ lemon, unpeeled, sliced
½ cup Coconut Amaretto

In medium saucepan combine water and sugar. Bring to boiling over high heat; stir until sugar is dissolved. Add orange and lemon slices. Reduce heat. Simmer until syrup is reduced to about 1¼ cups; cool. Remove citrus slices. Stir in Coconut Amaretto. Pour over warm baba. Yield: About 1¾ cups.

COCONUT AMARETTO WHIPPED CREAM

1 cup heavy cream
2 tbisp. Coconut Amaretto

In small bowl of electric mixer combine heavy cream and Coconut Amaretto; beat until soft peaks form. Yield: 2 cups.

AMARETTO CHEESE PIE

1 baked 9-inch crumb crust
1 can (1 pound) apricots
1 envelope unflavored gelatin
2 8-ounce packages cream cheese, at room temperature
⅓ cup DeKuyper Amaretto

Pour syrup from apricots into a measuring cup; add enough water to measure 1 cup. In small saucepan mix gelatine with ⅓ cup syrup mixture; let stand 1 minute. Cook over low heat, stirring constantly, until gelatine is dissolved. In small bowl of electric mixer beat cream cheese until smooth. Gradually beat in Amaretto, gelatine mixture and remaining ⅓ cup apricot syrup. Pour into prepared pie shell. Chill until firm. Arrange apricot halves over top of pie before serving. Yield: One 9-inch pie.

Poll gives Reagan low job rating

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has a lower job rating than any of the past five presidents at the end of their first year in office and his personal popularity isn't as high as often assumed, according to a public opinion survey commissioned by the Democratic Party.

"The Republican tide has stopped and their fortunes appear to be ebbing," said the poll report, made public today.

But the report went on to caution that "while the movement now occurring in the electorate favors the Democrats, the resolution of this movement in a Democratic victory is by no means assured."

The pollsters said:

"The Republicans and Reagan continue to be perceived as the fiscally unsound party, and there is a lingering hope for the president's program to succeed — although many are not sure it can. Voters are concerned, skeptical, and frustrated, but they have not given up hope."

The Democratic survey was conducted by four pollsters: Peter D. Hart, Patrick Caddell, William R. Hamilton and Hugh Schwartz.

At a briefing, Hart, Caddell and Hamilton said their findings were based on interviews between Nov. 20 and Dec. 4, with 1,265 registered voters. Pollsters say the margin of error on a sampling of that size is 3 percent.

Each person was interviewed in his or her home. The average length of the sessions was 55 minutes.

Hart called the results "pretty good news for the Democratic Party." He said that rather than indicate that Democrats or Republicans are likely winners in the 1982 elections, the survey showed the campaign will be "highly competitive."

The pollsters said the most dramatic finding in their survey was the response to the statement, "Ronald Reagan really cares about people like me."

On that issue, 48 percent of the respondents disagreed, while 4.3 percent agreed and nine percent had no opinion.

The report called the statement "a standard polling item utilized to measure the empathetic link between the voter and politician, a link that is essential to political popularity — basically, does the politician understand, care or feel my problems?"

The report added that "most pollsters agree that a negative response on this dimension is dangerous."

On Reagan's job performance, the Democratic poll found 57 percent approving and 37 percent disapproving, a rating the report said was lower than any of his five predecessors at the end of their first year. The report did not list figures for other presidents, but said it based the comparison on Gallup Poll findings for the past 20 years.

Hart said the findings on voter attitudes toward the Republican president were a signal to congressional Democrats to "take on Ronald Reagan's policies front and center."

That would require a sharp shift in strategy by the Democratic leadership in Congress, which has acted on the assumption that Reagan's personal popularity remains so high that direct confrontations should be avoided.

Caddell said he did not believe Republicans would have any success trying to blame current economic problems on past Democratic policies.

Caddell said he learned as pollster to Jimmy Carter that "the president is the man in charge. If things are not going well, he gets the blame."

Other findings of the survey included:

— Voters have become more concerned with issues like unemployment and protecting social security than with spending issues such as balancing the budget or controlling inflation.

— On the three issues at the top of voters' concerns — reducing unemployment and stimulating new jobs, protecting social security and keeping world peace — the Democrats were rated by a wide margin as the party which would do the best job.

— On the administration's budget cuts, 43 percent thought they went too far, 27 called them just right, and 19 said they didn't go far enough.

— By a margin of 64 to 25, respondents agreed with the statement: "If additional budget cuts have to be made, a large part of the reason will be that the Republicans went too far in giving tax breaks to the wealthy and large corporations."

Funds raised to bring running water to 80 homes

BORDERSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Half of the homes in this low-income neighborhood lying on the northeast edge of Houston are to have running water by summer.

City trucks have been carrying water in drums to supplement the water drawn from the shallow wells. But more than $104,000 has been raised to bring running water to about 80 of the sawmill shacks, said Jeff Betlewski, executive director of the Bordersville Community Center.

Some of the residents will have water inside their homes; others will have faucets in their front yards, Betlewski said.

Later this year, the city's water main will be extended to supply running water to another 70 homes, Betlewski said.

Last year, the Houston City Council approved spending $412,000 in federal and city funds to lay water lines in this community of 500. But many residents — many senior citizens relying on welfare and Social Security payments — could not afford to pay the $800 fee to hook the waterline to the property boundary.

In November the neighborhood council set out to raise $64,000 to put faucets in the front yards of 80 homes. The council got more than $37,000 in contributions by Jan. 19. The Lutheran Church of American donated another $25,000 and Amoco Foundation added $10,000, Betlewski said.

Bordersville, which was annexed by the city of Houston in 1965, is one of several neighborhoods which do not receive basic city services.

A similar effort to provide running water is under way in Riceville, a neighborhood on the city's southwest side of about 200 people. Like Bordersville, water mains have been laid along major streets but most residents cannot afford to connect them.

Reagan seeks backing for his economic program

By JAMES GERSTENZANG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — His 1982 debut before Congress behind him, President Reagan is taking his show on the road.

Reagan, who opened his all-new, 1982 economic drama before Congress on Tuesday evening, will try out his script for transferring social programs to the states on the Republican Party faithful and state legislatures in the coming months.

With Congress less than certain to rush to the president's side, his aides are charting a late winter and early spring schedule that will send Reagan around the country drumming up support for the program he outlined in his State of the Union address.

They hope that a campaign from outside the nation's capital will help win approval of the program back in Washington. It was just such a series of trips that was planned for Reagan a year ago to build support for his 1981 plan of tax and spending cuts. The attempt on his life forced cancellation of the travel.

In addition to state legislatures, mayors and governors will be among Reagan's targets as he seeks to build pressure on Congress.

And scattered throughout will be appearances at party fund-raisers.

It is on the legislatures and governors that most of the burden of Reaganomics '82 will fall, as the states take over responsibility for welfare and food stamp programs.

The plan, said Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., "has extraordinary implications for the...improvement of federal, state, and local government relationships."

In drawing up the plan, Reagan listened to his White House advisers, said to be unanimous in advocating increases in excise taxes, and heard an opposing view, according to a White House source, from "the wise men" — private economic advisers — and "the money managers" from Wall Street.

Having wound up that round of consultations with the script writers, the president will see how the show plays, if not in Peoria, well, then, in other towns around the Midwest and other sections of the nation.

Over the next two months, said deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes, "a very thorough process of consultations" will be undertaken, while the "nuts and bolts" of the program are developed.

Under the guidance of Rich Williamson, the president's assistant for intergovernmental relations, the White House has been contacting governors — and will have reached all very soon, Speakes said — to go over the program.

In addition, said Speakes, "the president will go all out to present his program to the people and the Congress."

David R. Gergen, the White House director of communications, acknowledged, "We do think this is going to be a tough year, particularly in the early months."

"There will be cross-currents of support and opposition," said Baker.

Indeed, they began even as the president was just finishing his speech. From the states and cities, reaction followed partisan lines.

The trips will begin within a few weeks. By the end of the spring, the president, if he holds to the current plan, will have visited every section of the nation with the exception of New England.

"There'll be an opportunity to educate the people," said Speakes. "It will be a fairly extensive effort in order to educate business and specialized groups on the content of the president's program."

Blacks must be brought into mainstream

By JOHN E. JACOB

The 1980s are a potentially disastrous decade for blacks. With the rug of federal piand individuals will have to directly confront the internal problems of the community to a greaiand individuals will have to directly confront the internal problems of the community to a greater degree than in the past.

Until blacks are aggressively brought into the mainstream of American life, we will continue to suffer gross disadvantage and our communities will continue to be plagued by problems that drive us deeper into despair.

But because we don't have the luxury of waiting for a more favorable national climate, we now have to redouble our own efforts despite our limited resources.

One problem that must be tackled is the near-suicidal withdrawal from political activism as measured by the depressingly low voter registration figures in black communities.

Part of the reason anti-black policies have prevailed is the absence of political risk attached to them. Politicians look at low black voter turnouts and swiftly conclude black interests can be ignored. They can't, as witness elections in Virginia and elsewhere in 1981. But it is a general truism that as the black vote decreases, black vulnerability increases.

Election year get-out-the-vote campaigns, as in the past, simply will not effectively deal with this problem. There has to be a permanent citizenship education campaign mounted in black communities by community organizations and concerned individuals. That's a responsibility that cannot be shirked.

Another responsibility that must be shared by all of us is to deal with the crime problem that drains the black economy, disrupts neighborhood life, and wastes the lives of so many young people. We cannot tolerate or excuse anti-social elements that prey on the community, nor can we tolerate the terrible waste of lives shattered by drugs and crime.

That does not mean joining those who applaud the conditions that breed crime and then agitate for longer sentences and more prisons to warehouse society's victims. But it does mean implementing neighborhood anti-crime measures and helping to keep our young people on the straight and narrow.

Problems facing young people cannot be solved without caring adults, whether it is parents keeping strict curfews and monitoring homework assignments, or community volunteers taking an interest in the neighborhood's youngsters.

And the entire community will have to marshall its resources to help the mounting numbers of young mothers and their babies. Teen-age pregnancy is a continuing problem; for young mothers, for their children and for the community at large.

Stockman enjoys success of more famous brother

By ROGER LANGLEY
Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — Steve Stockman looks like a slightly inflated version of his famous brother, budget director David Stockman. Thirty pounds heavier and a half-inch taller, Steve says he doesn't mind operating in the shadow of his older brother's reputation.

"It's a plus being David Stockman's brother," he says, displaying an identical smile. "I'm proud of him."

The brothers Stockman are two philosophical peas in a conservative pod. It wasn't always so. Once they were both left-wing radicals. But with Dave leading the way, the two farm boys from western Michigan made the long trip across the political spectrum from left to right.

An attorney, Steve does not practice law. He works for Bernard Haldane and Associates, the country's largest career counseling agency.

He gets ribbed about how his brother's budget policies are creating lots of unemployed clients for his services, but he takes it all good-naturedly.

"HE'S THE MOST generous person you'll ever meet," Steve says without hesitation. He reports that while his brother served in Congress, he donated about $20,000 a year in speaking fees to various charities.

The perception that many people have that Dave Stockman is a skinflint with no feelings for the people he hurts wielding his budgetary ax is grossly inaccurate, according to Steve.

"Dave is courageous. He always does what he believes is right," Steve insists. "He voted against farm subsidies when he was a congressman representing a farm district."

Like his clients, Steve went through a career switch which he explains this way:

"I found out I didn't like legal work with all the research and writing, and discovered that I did like working with people. I don't regret it. It's important work, helping a person find the right job where he can build a future."

He's a lot less intense than Dave, but still a confirmed workaholic. "I don't keep track of my hours," he says, "but I know it's more than 60 a week — probably more than anyone else here."

He also concedes that he makes a lot more money now than he could as a junior member of a Washington law firm.

Steve and Dave grew up steeped in the traditional values of family, hard work and patriotism. It was a classic American upbringing complete with a one-room elementary schoolhouse.

As boys, they were not particularly close. David, now 35, was the eldest child. He was followed by his sister Linda, now 34; Steve, 32; Dan, 31; and Gary, 30.

In high school, David was a goof-off and got so-so grades. He managed to get into Michigan State on the strength of his SAT scores and immediately set out to become a campus radical.

STEVE, MORE LEVEL-HEADED in high school, got better grades. When it came time for him to pick a college, Dave recommended the University of Michigan because he thought it was a better school and because the radicals were more radical at Ann Arbor there. Steve took his advice.

Dave graduated with honors and took a stab at Harvard Divinity School. In 1970, he went to Washington. A year later, Steve arrived, a peach-fuzz liberal with a brand new degree. His ambition was to become a government anti-trust lawyer and slay big business dragons.

Steve moved in with Dave, who was working on Capitol Hill, first as an aide to Congressman John Anderson, the Illinois Republican who later ran for president; then as the youngest executive director of the House Republican Conference, and finally as an elected member of Congress.

It was during the five years that they shared a bachelor pad on Capitol Hill that Dave and Steve really got to know and like each other. They would talk for hours, arguing economic philosophies with the ardor most young men usually reserve for sports or young women. They challenged each other and exchanged books with titles like, "In Defense of Industrial Concentration," and "The Congressional Budget Process."

Dave first began the shift to the right.

Steve relates, "When Dave went to work for Anderson, he thought (Anderson) was too conservative. When he left he thought he was too liberal."

Steve also worked for Anderson for awhile and then for Congressman George O'Brien (R-Ill.), while attending to Georgetown University Law School.

> "Dave is courageous. He always does what he believes is right.He voted against farm subsidies when he was a congressman representing a farm district."

"I didn't like working on Capitol Hill," Steve recalls. "It was the turning point for me. I went in believing that the government could solve problems and truly help people. I left seeing that government is more of a hindrance. I saw that it is the private sector that is really helping people."

DAVE DECIDED TO make his own run for Congress while Steve took a flyer in real estate. Steve also decided that it was time to put his bachelor days behind him and get married. He and his wife Robin and their two sons, Jeff and Josh, now live in suburban Virginia. Dave is still single.

About that celebrated article quoting David criticizing the Reagan economic plans that was published in the Atlantic Monthly magazine, Steve feels his brother was sandbagged by someone he thought of as a friend. Steve doesn't believe that it will damage Dave's effectiveness as director of the Office of Management and Budget.

"He's like a cat," Steve says. "He always lands on his feet. He's too sharp for his critics. He's willing to do more work than they are. They'll have to listen to him because he'll have more facts."

There is one other public misconception surrounding his brother that Steve would like to clear up. "There's no woodshed on our farm," he says. "When dad wanted to discipline us, he took us out to the milk shed."

Reagan's federalism has roots two campaigns ago

WASHINGTON (AP) — That "single bold stroke" with which President Reagan wants to change the billing address for the nation's major social programs is an idea that bought him a lot of trouble two campaigns ago.

Reagan proposed Tuesday night that Congress approve the gradual transfer of social programs that now cost $47 billion a year from federal to state and local governments, along with the tax sources to finance them.

It is a refined, scaled-down version of a proposal he first advanced more than six years ago, just before his first major run at the presidency.

In those days it was to be a $90 billion transfer and — as Reagan the inflation fighter often points out — a dollar bought more then than now.

The plan Reagan outlined in his State of the Union address would change drastically the way governments at all levels do business on social programs. But it is not nearly so drastic as the one he recommended in 1975.

REAGAN'S POLITICAL adversaries made that proposition into an issue that hounded him all through his 1976 campaign against former President Gerald R. Ford.

He never renounced it, but he spent a lot of valuable campaign time trying to explain it.

The lesson was heeded in his winning 1980 campaign. He did not make the transfer plan a major point then and what he did say was in general terms. Without specifics, Reagan said he would seek to transfer to state and local governments "programs which do not belong at the federal level."

What he is suggesting now is an eight-year plan that ultimately would shift responsibility for more than 40 programs from Washington to state and local governments.

Three gigantic programs are at the heart of the proposal. The federal government would take over financing of Medicaid, a state-run program that provides medical care for the needy, and the states would become responsible for welfare and food stamps.

THE MONEY WOULD come initially from a fund financed by federal excise taxes on alcohol, tobacco, telephone service and gasoline. By 1991, those federal taxes would be eliminated and it would be up to the states to impose their own levies to get the money to replace them.

The original $90 billion transfer plan also was to have been gradual, with accompanying shifts in the tax system to enable the states to raise the revenue themselves.

But it wasn't spelled out that way and Reagan's campaign explanations never caught up with the charges of the Ford camp that he simply wanted to dump the whole burden on the states.

At least part of what Reagan is proposing now — to swap Medicaid for welfare and food stamps — may have a certain attraction to the states because it would relieve them of a medical care program that has defied cost controls and was becoming their most rapidly spiraling cost.

THE NATIONAL GOVERNORS Association calls Medicaid a program of sound purpose but poor administration "which is bankrupting the states and their localities."

To get rid of that cost they have to pick up welfare, which they had wanted Washington to finance, too. But welfare costs can be controlled more easily than can the price of Medicaid.

There will be intense debate on the swap, and there also will be complaints in Congress and the state capitols that the programs may not be handled fairly or funded adequately in every state and community.

Those concerns are addressed in an explanatory paper issued by the White House. It says the states will come out even financially, that there will be rules to make sure local governments get their share of the money, that civil rights will be guaranteed, and that welfare payments will be adequate.

There was no fact sheet or explanation when the transfer idea emerged in a speech Reagan gave in Chicago on Sept. 25, 1975. What he proposed then was that about $90 billion worth of federal programs be shifted to the states because Washington management had failed.

"Indeed," Reagan said in that address, "it has created more problems in welfare, education, housing, food stamps, Medicaid, community and regional development and revenue sharing, to name a few."

Many of the same programs are involved in what he now proposes — among them education, community development, transportation and social services.

The 1975 speech backfired politically. Ford campaigners seized upon the proposal six months later and started distributing lists of what it would cost the states, emphasizing the those that happened to be holding presidential primaries.

THEY DIDN'T MENTION the accompanying revenue shift Reagan had suggested, and the issue kept him on the defensive through much of the campaign for the Republican presidential nomination. While the $90 billion plan was not decisive in his narrow loss to Ford, it didn't help.

But that proposition was the work of a politician warming up to run for president. Today's version is the work of a president, with the resources of the White House and the whole administration to put together the numbers, draft the legislation, lobby for its passage.

The idea is the same but the situation is not.

Stone Mother has wounded knee

And Stone Lake is slowly going dry

PYRAMID LAKE, Nev. (AP) — On the eastern shore of this stark desert lake stands a Buddha-like stone statue carved by wind and rain. The Indians call it the "Stone Mother."

In ancient times, according to legend, the Stone Mother lost her two sons, who were banished because of their incessant fighting. The Stone Mother wept big rivers of tears, creating a lake out of the barren desert floor.

She sits there now, crouched on her haunches, her alkali face bowed over her thick white chest. But she has no more tears, and the water has fallen away around her.

For half-a-century, Pyramid Lake has been dying.

Its demise is not obvious to the casual observer, who, driving across the desert northeast of Reno, suddenly comes upon a broad expanse of turquoise water set gem-like in a ring of treeless mountains.

BUT IT IS a daily fact of life for the Paiute Indian tribe which has occupied the rim of the lake for an estimated 500 years, and whose ancestors, archeologists believe, settled its shores more than 3,000 years ago.

In 1905, the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation built a dam on the Truckee River — Pyramid's sole source of replenishment.

Derby Dam diverted about half the river's water into a canal, carrying the vital supply to farms in the sagebrush-covered valleys to the southeast of the lake. The valleys flourished, growing alfalfa and cantaloupes. But Pyramid began its long decline.

Roy Garcia, born in 1915 on the Pyramid Lake Indian Reservation, is chairman of the Pyramid Lake Paiute tribe. A stocky man with leathery skin, trim gray hair, and a peppered white moustache, he speaks with a slight accent unfamiliar to most ears.

"As far back as I can remember — we're talking about 1920 — I could say water was not really much of a problem," Garcia says, sitting behind a wide desk at the tribal office in Nixon, on the south end of the lake.

"IN THOSE YEARS, the fish were plentiful. I don't know what year the fish started disappearing. We still had good fishing in the '30s, but in the '40s it started getting more noticeable."

For centuries, the Paiutes at the lake relied on two unique species of fish for their food: the Cui-ui, a prehistoric sucker fish found only in Pyramid, and the Lahontan cutthroat trout, the largest species of cutthroat in the world.

"The fish just came up by the hundreds during the spawning run," Garcia says. "A man could be picky — you could choose which ones you wanted. My people dried them for winter."

That was before the lake began to drop. In 1867, the U.S. Geological Survey measured the level of Pyramid Lake at 3,876 feet above sea level. A century later, the surface of the lake had dropped 87 feet.

The fish were left stranded and refused to spawn in the lake. By the late 1940s, both species had nearly vanished. Since then, fish spawning programs have helped replenish their numbers somewhat, but the Lahontan cutthroat is on the federal "threatened" species list and the Cui-ui is considered an endangered species.

IN HIS youth, Garcia says, the Paiutes fished and hunted for their food, and sold surplus fish to nearby farmers and city dwellers in Reno. Now, he says, few Paiutes fish at all, the ducks they hunted have gone elsewhere, and unemployment on the reservation is high.

The Indians, who surprised and overwhelmed a white attack party in the 1860 Battle of Pyramid Lake, now fight the settlers in court. Nine lawsuits in U.S. District Court pit the Paiutes against the Truckee River farmers, the city of Reno, the states of Nevada and California, and other interest groups.

Their principal rival is the Truckee Carson Irrigation District, the agency responsible for getting water from Derby Dam to some 2,200 farmers along the Truckee Canal.

In 1926, the Bureau of Reclamation turned over the federal Newlands Project — consisting of Derby Dam, Lahontan Reservoir and the irrigation network southeast of Pyramid — to the TCID. The farmers, then and now, have contended that they bought the Truckee River water rights fair and square: if there is a villain, they say, it is the federal government.

Dick Lattin, project manager for the TCID, says, "The government is responsible for having sold us the water rights, the land and the irrigation project."

Oystermen argue best method

EDITOR'S NOTE — "I think," wrote Saki, "oysters are more beautiful than any religion. They not only forgive our unkindness to them, they justify it...." And, for at least 1,000 years, oystermen have probed the depths to bring the silky catch up from Chesapeake Bay.

By CHRISTOPHER SULLIVAN
Associated Press Writer

TILGHMAN ISLAND, Md. (AP) — Off Tilghman, where the Chesapeake Bay stretches ocean-wide from the deck of his skipjack, Wadie Murphy Jr. hollers, "Heave leeward!" and a chain-mesh dredge splashes overboard.

In the same dawn light, up placid Broad Creek, Bobby Haddaway works his scissor-like 16-foot tongs silently, methodically.

In murky darkness under the bay, a diver roams encrusted bars while Mark Radcliffe monitors an air compressor and culls the catch in his bobbing boat.

It's deep winter, high season for oysters, and there's more than one way to bring in the harvest.

Dredgers tow a scoop-like device, scraping oyster beds and hoisting their catch. They have a 150-bushel per day limit and are restricted to certain waters.

TONGERS tweeze their shallow-water catch with tools that resemble steel baskets at the ends of pivoting wooden shafts. Divers harvest oysters by hand, filling their submerged boxes. Tongers and divers have a 25-bushel-per-man daily limit.

The three types of oystermen share the bay, a trade, and a chauvinism — that his method is best.

They have their differences, but they agree that the oyster crop must be protected, even if they prefer different regulatory approaches.

Murphy, at the helm of the 1901-vintage Sigsbee, is part of the last working fleet under sail in the country.

"Twenty-four years ago, when I started," he says, "it was 80-some boats working. I've seen 50 boats die since I've been dredging."

The 40-year-old Murphy, in turtleneck and oilskins, peers through binoculars to where other low-draft skipjacks with their yellowish sails drag the bottom for oysters.

"HEAVE!" Murphy commands from the wheel as the skipjack passes over a spot where he senses an oyster bar. The crewmen teeter two dredges on the edges of the deck and shove them overboard.

The dredge line pays out, then tenses, grabbing bottom 20 feet below as the skipjack lurches, its full sails straining. Ninety seconds later, Murphy cranks up the snorting winch motor, and the bulging dredges rise and spill onto the deck.

As four crewmen cull the few live oysters, Murphy shakes his head and jokes, "If I was dredging stones, I'd be doing all right." He steers the Sigsbee toward another spot.

Dragging the unseen bottom from dawn until afternoon, Murphy and his crew brought up more stones, broken shells, blue crabs and about 20 bushels of oysters. With intermittent calms and an occasional "big hang" on a boulder, it was not much of a dredging day.

In steady wind, the sailing dredgers often pull up their 150-bushel limit, earning $10 a bushel, but this year's been a lean one.

"It seems like when it's scarce oysters, it's bad weather, too... It ain't no way to get rich," Murphy says. Still, he says he wouldn't trade the life of a year-'round waterman — oystering all winter, then hauling seed oysters for the state to replenish beds, crabbing in the summer.

ABOUT A DECADE ago, as the oyster crop declined, Murphy and other skipjack captains worried that the sailing dredge might disappear. They allied politically with historical society supporters and the wealthy of the Chesapeake sailboat fraternity. Laws were changed to allow the skipjacks to dredge two days a week under power.

"Some people are hollerin' for three days a week," Murphy says. "I'd be dead against that... It's much more efficient. You'd deplete the beds. I don't think the bottom would take three days."

As the Sigsbee's crew languished, patent tongers — power boats equipped with hydraulic jaws to bite the bay floor and raise oysters — worked on the horizon.

Murphy says he worries about possible damage to the oyster beds from this method. He huffs at the patent tongers' reciprocal complaints about power dredging, even if it is allowed only on Mondays and Tuesdays.

A dispute rages over other oystering techniques — hand tonging versus diving.

Fifty-two-year-old Bobby Haddaway balances like a kind of brawny aerialist on a rim along the side of his boat, holding his long-shafted tongs at times like a balancing pole.

"WE'RE NOT depleting — we're cultivating," he says, squeezing closed the tongs' jaws around a half dozen oysters embedded in the oozing bottom mud along Broad Creek, an inlet of the bay.

Divers, Haddaway asserts, are the tongers' toughest competition. "They aren't interested in the oyster business. They're interested in a fast buck."

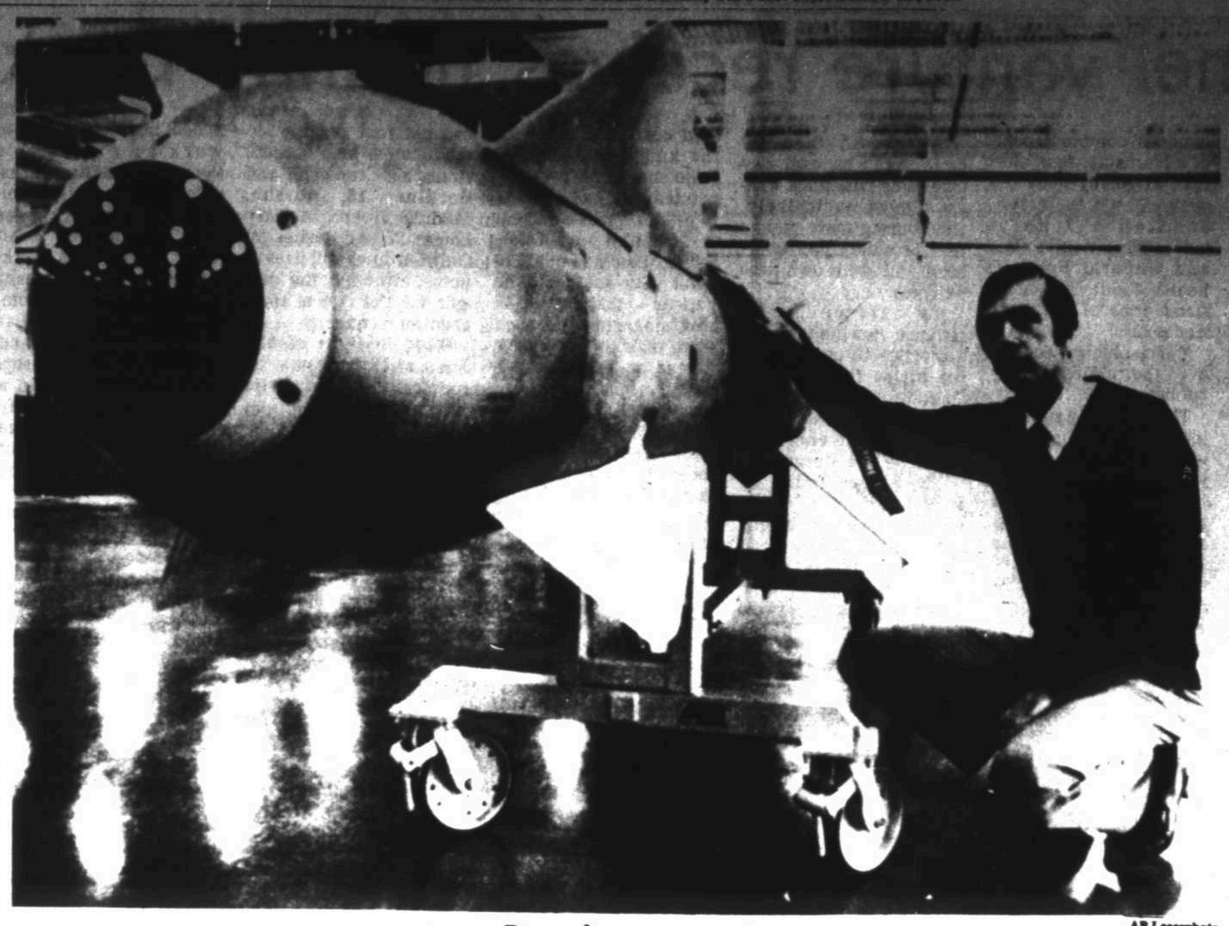

Much of the new generation of watermen is made up of the divers Haddaway criticizes. About 100 mostly young oystermen do their work by plunging under the bay's surface, sometimes through ice, according to Mark Radcliffe, one of the original divers in the Eastern Bay.

The diver-versus-tonger dispute is a clash of generations, too, he says.

"You've got a whole bunch of old-timers. You're going to get that from old folks. It's a new method," says Radcliffe, 29, who used to help his father and grandfather hand tong.

"MAYBE WHEN I'm 40, there'll be some new, off-the-wall method, and I'll be up in arms about it," he says, laughing.

Insulated in neoprene "dry suits" and weighted with belts or steel boots, the divers spend about six hours a day under water, gliding over beds, grabbing up fatter oysters that bring a dollar more per bushel than the tongers' catch.

Argentines disagree on Evita Peron

By DOUGLAS GRANT MINE
Associated Press Writer

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Thirty years after her death, the image of Eva (Evita) Peron is confounding the passage of time almost as well as her meticulously embalmed body lying lifelike in a Buenos Aires mausoleum.

Most Argentines, even those born after she died of cancer at the age of 33 and at the peak of her power as the wife of President Juan D. Peron, regard her with emotions ranging from respect to reverence.

The woman who vowed to obliterate the oligarchy is still deprecated by those of the elite who recall her harangues to hundreds of thousands in the Plaza de Mayo in Buenos Aires. But even the young rich — those who never felt the sting of her tongue — recoginze the force of her personality and to a certain extent admire her will.

The women's branch of the Justicialist (Peronist) Party, the largest political force in this nation of 28 million, has deemed 1982 "The International Year of Eva Peron" and has launched a campaign to counter what it calls the "injury" done her image by, principally, the hugely successful musical "Evita" — the name of endearment by which she was popularly known.

A dozen women Peronists, some wearing their hair pulled back in the tight bun favored by Evita, spoke of her at a recent news conference.

"Evita lives, and continues being the standard-bearer of the Peronist revolution," said Alicia de Lopez, who was seated beneath a portrait of her idol larger than those of the late President Peron and his last wife Isabel adorning other walls. Mrs. Lopez said she saw the Tim Rice and Andrew Lloyd Webber musical in Denmark last year and was disgusted by it.

"We are offended by its presentation of Eva as immoral and mediocre and by its negation of history," she said.

The musical, which shows the poor, illegitimate young Eva sleeping her way to show business success and political power, is banned in Argentina. Mrs. Lopez said the military government is considering relaxing the ban and allowing at least some of the musical's hit songs to be distributed here.

"If they let any of that pseudo-artistic absurdity into the country, I assure you we will take to the streets with more than they bargained for," she said.

Peron died in 1974 and Isabel succeeded him as president, only to be ousted by the military two years later. The military government is for the most part anti-Peronist and as such no big fan of Eva.

These days, a student could complete secondary school and, unless his teacher chose to supplement the recommended curriculum, would never read the name Eva Peron in a text.

Julio Gonzalez Rivero, national director of intermediate and secondary instruction, said teachers are free to discuss the subject and assign readings on it.

"It is another period of history and we treat it objectively," he said. "But she is treated in a social rather than a political context."

His personal opinion of Eva?

"You have to recognize she brought about some social advances. But you also have to admit that ... there were censurable episodes, like the burning of churches."

During the 1950s, the Roman Catholic establishment became increasingly critical of Peron's restriction of civil liberties and persecution of non-Peronists, and the strongman's followers sacked and burned a number of churches.

"It was really bad luck for the country that Evita died. We need her now," said Cristobal Alvarez, a 50-year-old truck driver. "She lifted up the country from nothing. In that time, people had jobs and money."

New magazine venture receives healthy backing

Copley News Service

By the time his new national magazine, American Health, makes its $4.95 million debut in March, editor T George Harris will be hard-pressed to honor some of his own publication's sage advice on staying fit.

These are long, anxious days for Harris who edited Psychology Today during its halcyon days in Del Mar, Calif. — raising the magazine's circulation from 200,000 in 1968, when he arrived at the publication, to 1,150,000 in 1976, when he left it after its move eastward.

Harris, 57, hardly a health addict, but rather a man who enjoys an occasional jog or tennis game to keep his 5-foot-9-inch, 168-pound frame trim, is all reporter — and all business. Especially these days.

He is ensconced with a meager staff of six full-time editors in a New York office at 60 Fifth Ave. — a place where vintage doors serve as section dividers, and butcher-block desks are the norm. Harris is hellbenton cranking out a slick, popular bimonthly magazine that will tell laymen how to get the most out of their minds and bodies.

The magazine will cover such topics as nutrition, fitness and exercise, disease prevention and psychology. Shorter items will discuss stress, new medical technologies, body image, sports medicine and the economics of health services, including the evaluation of doctors, new drugs and patent medicines, and insurance plans.

ADVERTISING rates are $5,100 for a full-color page and $3,600 for a black-and-white page (charter advertisers were offered three pages for the price of two). The first issue will contain 20 pages of advertising, four more than originally budgeted, with clients to include Johnson & Johnson (advertising dental floss) and General Foods (a health food). The newsstand price of the magazine is $2.

Harris seems ecstatic over the progress of the publication.

Though he is speeding in and out of meetings with the magazine's 28-year-old publisher, Owen Lipstein (former general manager of Science 81), art director Will Hopkins and various advertising clients, he is willing to sit for interviews. If he can be caught.

"Sure, I can do a phone interview at noon our time — I eat at my desk," he said long-distance. From his desk. His speech is an alloy of Hickory Hill and Madison Avenue, with a little West Coast and Ivy League mixed in.

HARRIS SAYS he will do things in his own way (like using free-lance writers almost exclusively, and pouring more money into product than overhead) and at his own pace (full out).

He allowed, for instance, how he makes it a practice to put beds in the office for his staff, "because I don't believe a writer should sit at a desk after the last energy is gone." When Harris was at Psychology Today, he would, he said, often recline on a couch during conferences. "They made more sense that way," he recalled wryly.

But there is no laying down on the job for Harris and his minuscule staff right now.

Not with the $4.95 million backing of venture capital and brokerage house Oppenheimer and Co. (That's reportedly the largest sum of venture capital ever raised for a new magazine project). And certainly not with the knowledge that, as Folio magazine recently pointed out, only two of 10 new magazines make it to their third year of publishing (Harris is quick to rebut with another Folio statistic — that eight of 10 new magazines succeed when their founders have started at least one successful magazine before).

HARRIS' workdays have been made longer recently since he often carries business over to the central Manhattan apartment he shares with his second wife, Ann Roberts, daughter of the late Nelson Rockefeller. Harris is not averse to having reporters or other business contacts reach him at home after hours.

He and Roberts married three years ago. Harris' first wife, Sheila, succumbed to cancer in 1977; Roberts was divorced from an Episcopal priest years before. Each brought four children to the union — he, Amos, 23, Anne, 22, Crane, 19, and Gardiner, 18; and she, Clare, 25, Joseph, 24, Mary Louise, 22, and Rachel, 21. Only Gardiner still lives at home, although the parents see the rest of their children frequently.

Why, in light of the accomplishments of Harris' long journalistic career, has he become involved in such a weighty project? Why, at a stage when many might be contemplating early retirement, would he need new headaches?

THE ANSWER, simply put, is that it has never been in Harris' nature to play it safe.

A descendant of both Daniel Boone and Sam Brady, who fought in the Revolutionary War and later became a legendary scout on the Ohio frontier, Harris was born on a Kentucky farm. After his graduation from Trenton (Ky.) Independent High School in 1942, he went to work as a printer's apprentice at the Parksville (Tenn.) Leaf-Chronicle newspaper. A year later, he enlisted as an Army infantryman, working his way up to sergeant and winning a field commission. He also served as an artillery forward observer, flying 104 surveillance missions in a Piper Cub over enemy territory. "I figured," he said, "you'd learn a lot more about war that way."

He later studied at the University of Kentucky, then enrolled at Yale, where he majored in social psychology, a subject he saw as the linchpin of the reporter's life he craved.

Between his junior and senior years, he won a scholarship to study at Oxford, and quickly seized his stay in England as an opportunity to write for the BBC, and also for the Louisville (Ky.) Courier-Journal back home.

Upon his graduation from Yale in 1948, he was one of five students chosen from among 2,200 students across the United States for a reporter's spot at Time magazine.

He stayed at the magazine from 1949 to 1962, covering most strata of U.S. life.

Mediated divorce can be easier than court battle

By CYNTHIA ROBINS
Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — For a middle-class family on the rocks, the conventional, contested divorce can cost each spouse from $3,000 to $10,000. And that's only the money.

Emotionally, divorce can be laced with acrimony, mistrust, hatred, revenge and retribution — the shattering of any intimacy achieved during the marriage. For the children of such a divorce and for the divorcing spouses themselves, it may take years to recover.

There is an easier way: the mediated divorce.

Families in Transition is a three-month-old program run by Dr. Matthew McKay and Dr. Peter Rogers, clinical psychologists.

Says McKay, 34, "Our job is to try to teach people how to fight it out without leaving a scar and how to resolve their conflict in a way that both parties get most of what they want."

In general, when divorcing spouses go to their respective attorneys, his tells the husband to cut off the credit cards; hers says to clean out the joint checking account. The husband tries to write a check and it bounces; the wife can't go to the store and charge.

WITH THE MEDIATED divorce, Families in Transition uses the services of two psychologists and a team of female attorneys, including Cathleen Moran, a partner in a Palo Alto legal firm. The ground rules for working with McKay, Rogers and their attorney associates are specific.

The divorce has to be a mutual decision. The couple must be equal partners in the decision-making process. There must be a full financial disclosure (and if finances are complicated, the couple must agree to pay for an independent auditor to sort things out). Finally, both must agree not to beat each other up emotionally.

Families in Transition charges a flat fee of $1,500 for 12 sessions, which can take place as often as once a week, but usually are not prescribed by any given time period. If the couple can come to some agreement by the eighth session, there is a refund of $400. If more than 12 meetings are needed, there is no additional fee. The legal papers are prepared and all the filing fees are paid as part of the $1,500 cost.

The product of the mediation is a legal agreement, which a judge will affirm if both parties have agreed to it. McKay says that he and his colleagues recommend that each spouse take the agreement back to his or her attorney to fine-tune it, but often, many divorce settlements can be handled in the mediation process.

"We teach the Fair Fight," says McKay. "The number one rule is that you learn to make 'I' statements instead of 'you' statements, and not be accusatory. People talk about how they feel and not how terrible the other person is. The last thing we insist upon is that people agree to common goals — things they share and both want. It's easier when they have children because they are a major concern. And when it gets emotional and the going gets tough, we can always return to the goal."

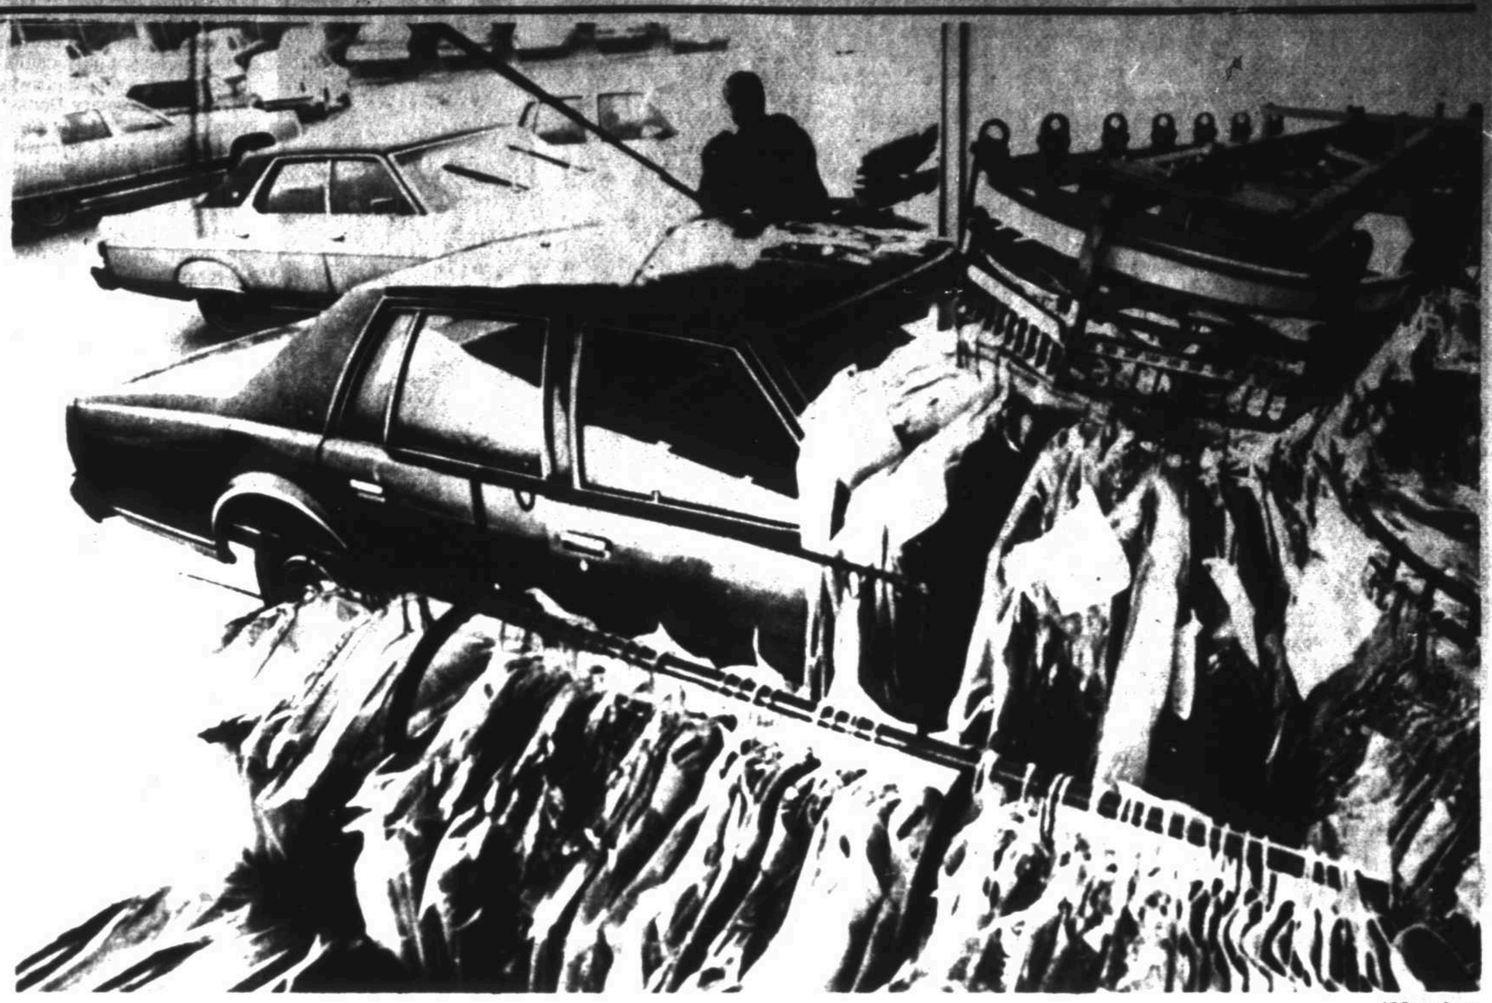

In the first session, the couple meets with the two psychologists. "One therapist can support a person," McKay explains, "while the other therapist is confronting him. There is always a balance"

THE LAWYER, usually present from the second session on, explains to the divorcing parties about such things as tax ramifications of child and-or spousal support, property settlement or distribution of future income.

Attorney Moran, 32, explains that in mediation, "I am free to credit emotional issues as being possibly as important as the financial issues, free to weigh the cost to the parties of fighting — to point out that fighting is extraordinarily expensive.

"Law is extremely labor-intensive, and the going rate can be from $75 to $150 per hour. There is no way to try a case without putting a lot of time into it. Very few middle-class people can afford the cash drain during a drawn-out court trial over marital issues."

McKay says that the usual course for mediation is from eight to 10 meetings but, in some cases, the divorce settlement can take as few as six sessions or as many as 12.

HOUSTON (AP) — Parishoners at Christ the King Lutheran Church are being asked to give to God the way modern Americans give to Caesar — by plastic.

Parishners can put their pledge on the credit card and pay later, the Rev. Ed Peterman said.

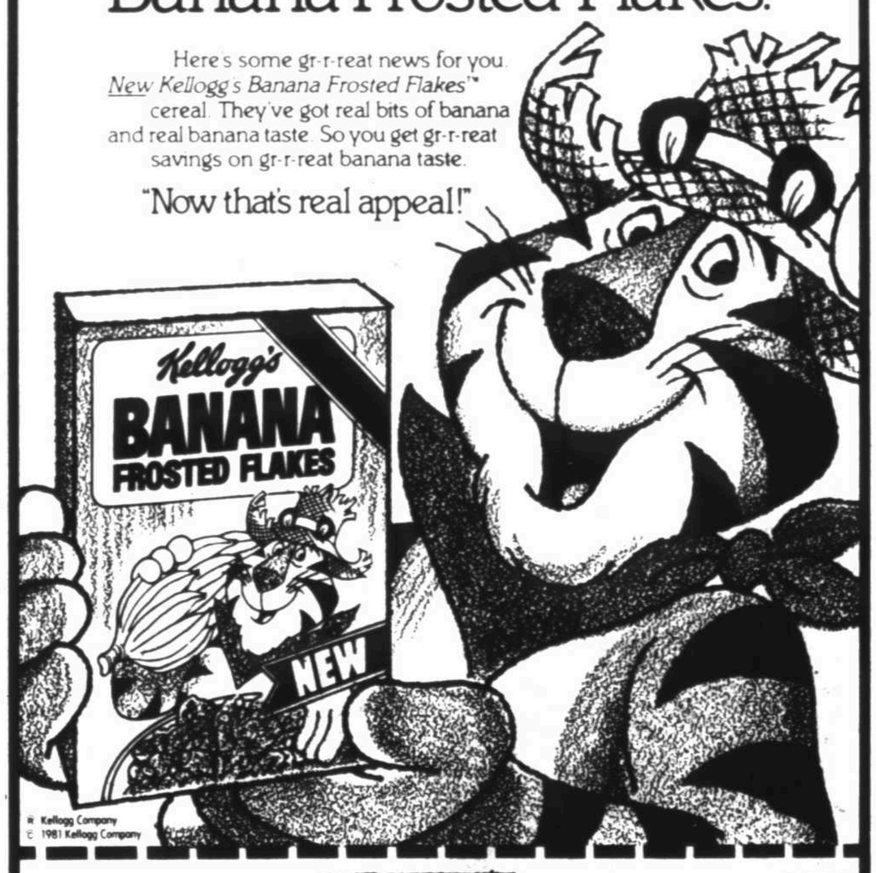

It began earlier this month, when Texas Commerce Medical Bank, which handles the church account, designed special forms that can be dropped into the collection plate, said bank officer Richard Ramirez.

Dr. and Mrs. Lara Hoggard reminisce over their years with the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale in a recent Midland interview. Hoggard will be one of the five judges for the 20th annual National Young Artist Competition being held Friday and Saturday at the Allison Fine Arts building at Midland College. The competition, sponsored by the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale, Inc., was first started when Hoggard was the organization's conductor. This is his first time to judge. As he said jokingly, "I thought they'd never ask."

Former conductor becomes judge

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Staff Writer

He didn't want to come. His statement to Lanham Deal of Southwest Concerts was "I want to cancel." Deal called the pianist's manager, Sol Hurok, the world-renowned entrepreneur. Hurok told him not to worry.

Next Lanham called the then conductor of the Midland-Odessa Symphony, Dr. Lara Hoggard. After explaining the situation, Lanham said, "Don't worry, he'll be on the plane."

When Hoggard went to meet the Dallas flight, the guest artist, pianist Byron Janis, was on it.

Following the West Texas performance, for which Janis received a standing ovation, a letter Janis wrote Hurok found its way to Hoggard.

"Dear Sol,

"Just finished the Los Angeles concert. In two days we perform in Seattle, then I'll be back in New York.

"By the way, the much feared debacle in West Texas turned out to be a very rewarding experience. A fine orchestra."

Yours,
Byron Janis"

This was just one of many stories Hoggard told Wednesday following his arrival in Midland. Hoggard will be one of the five judges for the 20th annual National Young Artist Competition, sponsored by the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale, Inc., being held at the Allison Fine Arts building at Midland College Friday and Saturday. Hoggard was the conductor of the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale during its formative years, from 1962 to 1967.

His eyes sparkled as he recalled the symphony's early days in an onrushing account which bounded from one story to the next.

The year was 1962. Hoggard was asked to conduct the Midland Symphony. His reply was, "If these two towns (Midland and Odessa) will go together, I think you could do something. I could see then that the destiny of the two towns (in terms of an orchestra) could be as one."

THE RESPONSE to his suggestion was "a lot of shaking of heads." But he was called back.

"We want you to come and talk with us," Hoggard said he was told. Laughing, as he did frequently throughout the interview, Hoggard said, "The meeting was almost like facing Texas and A&M forces lined up on opposing sides of the room."

The idea was accepted.

"It is an unusual situation to have two different boards for the same orchestra," Hoggard said, adding that he doesn't know of any other orchestra that has the same structure.

Hoggard had been told "this area is a sleeping giant and it was."

The first audition for the chorale was one such example. Over 400 auditioned and the auditions took Hoggard and his wife, Mildred, over two months to complete.

The Midland-Odessa Symphony owes much of its success in the beginning to the musicians from the area as far north as Lubbock who would drive to rehearsals and performances.

At one point, the orchestra would not have made it had it not been for the 19 people who came from Lubbock three times a week for rehearsals, Hoggard said. Bill and Ellen Noel of Odessa made that possible by paying the expenses and renting a bus for the trips.

Hoggard traveled 36,000 miles making 76 speeches, recruiting and auditioning throughout West Texas in the first year alone. He spoke to civic clubs, high schools, music clubs — in short, to anyone who would listen.

"I began to use the word 'our' saying 'We'll call it our orchestra, too.'

"I was building support for the orchestra," said Hoggard, who has always been very interested in music education. It was his feeling at the time that if he could get the young people involved, their parents would follow.

THE SCHOOLS he visited wanted to give him an honorarium, a fee for having worked all day with their choirs and bands, which he accepted in the symphony's name. He would then have the money listed as a contribution and the school or group listed in the program as a contributing member.

Hoggard made many suggestions during those years and the open-minded response he received never ceased to amaze him.

"I'd suggest tentatively to the boards, 'Let's do it.' They'd say, 'Yes.'

"Now that's West Texas. You see, there's no place on earth like it," Hoggard said.

His interest in music education led him to suggest a yearly competition.

That was 20 years ago and today "the vision has become a reality."

"Everything that I wanted Midland to have they now have except a civic auditorium," Hoggard said, remembering when one was voted down because the location was too far outside of town. Today Midland College sits on that site.

His reminiscing carried him to Jerome Hines' Evening of Opera Concert.

Following the performance, Hines said, "It must be wonderful to work with something as vital and growing as this effort is out here. I've sung 'Boris Godunov' all over the world and there were times last night when I thought I had not heard it performed better. You have a wonderful chorale and the orchestra is splendid."

Hoggard had no intention of leaving West Texas until Mildred found him passed out on the dressing room floor one night following a performance.

"I'd determined this was the place I wanted to spend the rest of my life, but I think I had worked a little too hard," Hoggard said. The symphony boards were in the process of drawing up a 10-year contract and Hoggard was told by his doctor, "If you sign that contract, you won't fill two years of it."

He had to resign.

One of their most touching moments came following his resignation.

They were driving downtown and noticed a bumper sticker on the car in front of them. It read, "Don't leave us, Dr. Hoggard." Then Mildred looked at the other cars and said, "Look, they are on every car."

"We pulled to the side and burst into tears," Hoggard said. "It was a tender and wonderful moment, one we will treasure forever."

Cauble says he sold cattle, not pot

By LEIGH SHIRLEY
Associated Press Writer

TYLER, Texas (AP) — Millionaire Rex Cauble says he sold cattle, not marijuana, to raise the huge cash bank deposits that prosecutors contend links the wealthy rancher to an elaborate drug smuggling scheme.

Prosecutors have introduced thousands of documents in an attempt to bolster their claim Cauble financed and profited from a scheme to smuggle 106 tons of marijuana into Texas during 1977 and 1978.

Cauble, whose attorneys rested their case Wednesday, says the documents only show his employees kept poor records.

U.S. District Judge William Steger, who told attorneys to present final arguments this morning, said he hopes the jury in Cauble's racketeering, conspiracy and embezzlement trial can begin deliberating by noon.

Cauble testified Wednesday that he and his ranch foreman, Charles "Muscles" Foster, decided to sell a large number of cattle in 1977 and 1978 because the market was good.

Cauble, 68, said Foster sold the cattle and brought him the proceeds in cash. He said the only documentation of the cash cattle sales were in the form of deposit slips and a list of buyers' names provided by Foster.

"Muscles wasn't the best record keeper in the world," Cauble said. "He knew what he was doing but he didn't keep good records."

Foster, who was targeted as a ringleader in the scheme, pleaded innocent by reason of insanity and acquitted of all charges in 1980.

Cauble testified that, when his cattle records were subpoenaed by federal authorities, he hired a private investigator to check out the sales.

He said the investigator told him that one of the names given Foster was that of the foreman's deceased father-in-law and another was an alias used by a drug smuggler Foster knew.

Regan faults Fed control policies

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is faulting the Federal Reserve for abetting the recession and warning that the central bank's "erratic control" of the money supply could damage the president's plans for an economic upswing.

Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan also told Congress' Joint Economic Committee Wednesday that instead of raising personal taxes, President Reagan will ask Congress to withhold tax on interest and dividend income to help trim the 1983 budget deficit.

Regan took the administration's views on the economy to Capitol Hill one day after the president announced in his State of the Union message he will not reverse his tax-cutting course despite the prospect of record deficits over the next three years.

In the sharpest critique of the Federal Reserve's policies yet voiced by an administration official, Regan said, "The erratic pattern of money growth that occurred in 1980 and 1981...contributed to the onset of the economic downturn.

"Steady monetary policy is absolutely essential if we are to steady the financial markets and reduce interest rates. Stability of policy is the key requirement for any permanent recovery in output and employment," Regan said of the independent bank.

He said, however, that the president was not going to call for the resignation of bank chairman Paul C. Volcker.

"The man is trying and he's trying to do that job. We hope he succeeds," Regan told reporters later. Volcker's term runs until August 1983.

The bank is answerable to Congress and Volcker does not serve at the pleasure of the president. He apparently could ignore a presidential resignation request.

On Tuesday, Volcker told another committee of Congress that if large federal budget deficits remain, interest rates will stay high and endanger the economic recovery the administration is predicting for later this year.

Testimony places Williams with another Atlanta victim

By DAVID PACE
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — A prosecution witness has testified that Wayne B. Williams went "stargazing" among young blacks at an entertainment complex that was a hangout for several of the youths whose deaths prosecutors say they can link to Williams.

Kent Hindsman, a 24-year-old waiter and aspiring lyricist, testified Wednesday he went with Williams to the Omni entertainment complex in downtown Atlanta so the 23-year-old black man could pass out handbills seeking youths for talent auditions.

"He called it stargazing, said he was looking for potential stars," Hindsman said. "He said he hadn't really found the right person he was looking for."

Hindsman testified he watched Williams audition 15-year-old Joseph "JoJo" Bell as a singer in December 1980, four months before Bell's body was found in the South River in suburban DeKalb County.

The testimony marked the third time prosecution witnesses have placed Williams with one of the 28 young blacks whose deaths during a 22-month period have been investigated by a police task force.

Williams, who has denied knowing any of the victims, is charged with murder in the slayings of Nathaniel Cater, 27, and Jimmy Ray Payne, 21, two of those on the task force list.

No arrests have been made in the 26 other deaths, but prosecutors claim they can link Williams to 10 more slayings — including nine from the task force list.

Judge Clarence Cooper has allowed prosecutors to present evidence of crimes in which Williams faces no charges in an effort to show those crimes formed a pattern that included the deaths of Cater and Payne.

Williams also was linked to Bell in testimony Wednesday by Lugene Laster, who said he saw Bell get into a car with Williams at a basketball court in 1981.

Laster said he could not remember the month it happened, but said Bell's brother came to his house later the same day and told him he had been unable to find Bell.

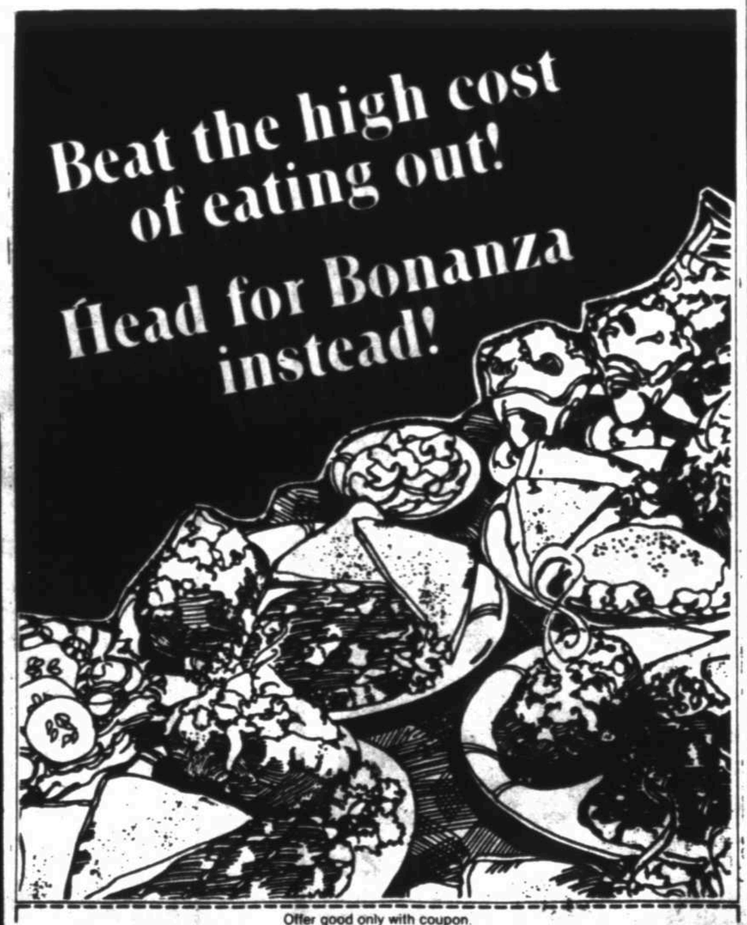

Under questioning by defense lawyer Alvin Binder, however, Laster said FBI agents had "refreshed my memory about what I had seen."

Prosecutors used Hindsman's testimony to show Williams did visit the Omni, where witnesses had said Payne was heading when last seen.

Other witnesses have testified the Omni was a favorite hangout for Patrick Baltazar, 11, Lubie Geter, 14, and Terry Pue, 15, three of the blacks whose deaths prosecutors say can be linked to Williams.

Hindsman said he remembered Bell at the talent audition because "he could sing pretty good, and I asked Wayne about him. He said he was signing him to a contract and I couldn't possibly use him in my production."

Assistant District Attorney Jack Mallard asked Hindsman if he ever had any conversations with Williams that "seemed strange."

1. COST-FREE MAINTENANCE.

For the life of your warranty Ford will provide free scheduled maintenance. That means you won't have to pay for things like oil changes, fan belts, filters – even wiper blades. You won't have to pay a cent – parts or labor. It's an offer without equal on any small car in the country.

2. WORKMANSHIP COVERAGE.

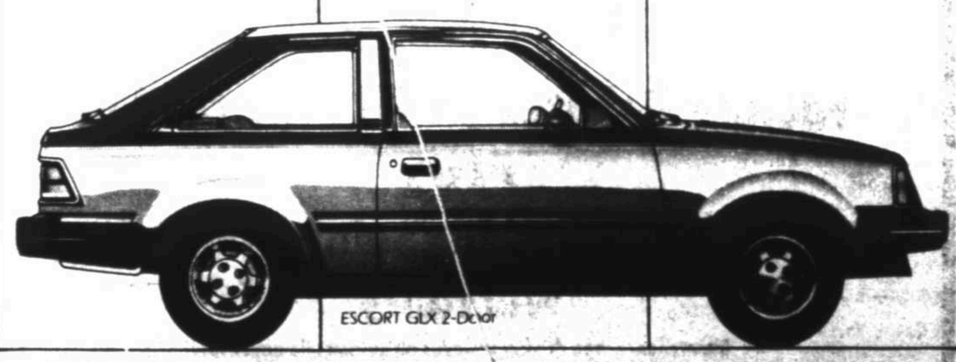

Now! Two years or 24,000 miles – whichever comes first. Protection from virtually any problem that might come up. The only things not covered are fluids, tires, abuse and accidents. Legally, we have to call it a limited warranty. But compare it to any other small car warranty.

District 5-5A basketball proven to cause phone headaches

TERRY WILLIAMSON

When the phone rings, the questions that come forth are sometimes hard to answer.

Ringgggggggg

Sports Desk: "Sports, may I help you."

Caller: "Yes. I used to live in Midland and I was a big fan of high school basketball. Could you tell me how the 5-5A basketball race is going so far?"

Sports Desk: "Well, Midland High, Midland Lee and Abilene High all share the first half title with 5-2 records. The second half begins Friday."

Caller: "You mean to tell me that all eight teams in the league played seven games and there is still a three-way tie for first?"

Sports Desk: "That's right. Lee beat Midland High Tuesday to force a three-way tie. Midland High could have had an outright first half title with a victory, but Lee won the thing. Lee outscored MHS by a 12-1 margin in the last 1:47 of play to turn the trick."

Caller: "How can a team score 12 points in that short of a time?"

Sports Desk: "Well, I saw the game. Let me look over my notes." A pause while flipping pages. "I thought I had it all down here in my notes, but to tell you the truth, I don't know how it happened. I was one of those people who said it was over with two minutes left to play. I think I must have dropped my pencil or something somewhere in there. Alvin Dunson scored 18 points in the fourth quarter and eight in the last 1:15 of play. Kenneth Brown and Barry Blackwell also got some points in there somewhere. I think I was looking for my pencil."

Caller: "I thought you writers were supposed to be trained in handling that sort of thing."

Sports Desk: "Well, uh, yea. I saw it, but it was one of those things you can't believe unless you saw it. Well, I saw it, but...but, well, it was strange. Hey, why don't you call someone else who saw it. There were around 4,000 people there and about 10,000 claim they saw it. I'm still looking around to find someone who admits that they weren't at the game. I know a lot of Lee fans left before it was over, but I can't find anyone who says they left early except Ernie Johnson, Lee's baseball coach."

Caller: "It still sounds like you left early too. You are a real help. Anyway, who beat Midland High in the first half besides Lee?"

Sports Desk: "Abilene High beat Midland in overtime and it looked for a time that the Eagles might run away with the first half."

Caller: "Well, who beat Abilene High?"

Sports Desk: "Well, Lee beat them and Odessa High beat them."

Caller: "Wait a minute. That sounds a little strange to me. You mean Lee beat both Abilene High and Midland High and still lost two games? And Odessa High? Where did that name come from?"

Sports Desk: "You see, Lee lost to San Angelo and Odessa Permian. And Odessa High, well, they had a good night against Abilene High. OHS also beat Big Spring in the first half."

Caller: "You keep throwing names at me. San Angelo, Permian? Were they in the race too?"

Sports Desk: "Lee led San Angelo by a 14-2 count at one point, but ended up losing. And you know how Permian plays on its home court. San Angelo was supposed to be up there with Midland High, Lee and Abilene High, but they finished with a 2-5 first half record. They even lost to Big Spring and that was Big Spring's only first half win. There's really not much difference from the bottom to the top in this league. San Angelo took MHS into overtime before losing."

Caller: "I'm more confused now than when I called. But please tell me, what happens with a three-way tie for first place?"

Sports Desk: "I've got that in my notes somewhere. I think we wait to see how the second half comes out and then we decide what to do about the first half. If Lee, Midland High or Abilene High wins the second half outright, then we don't have to worry. If the same thing happens in the second half, then we have a mess and I'll have to go talk to Athletic Director Gil Bartosh and find out what they will do. If a team other than those three win or tie for the second half, the district playoff won't be over before the state tournament the way I see it."

Caller: Buzzzzzzzz.

Sports Desk: "He didn't have to hang up mad, did he?"

Marquette and Memphis State basketball players are caught in an unexpected shower of glass Wednesday night in Memphis. Marquette's Michael Wilson (10) was the culprit when he held onto the rim while trying to dunk a rebound. It took 35 minutes to replace the backboard amd Memphis State went on to win, 77-70.

SPC ambush awaits Chaps

South Plains shows signs of shaking doldrums

Midland College embarks on the second round of the Western Junior College Conference basketball race at 8 p.m. today against South Plains College in Levelland.

The Chaparrals won the first game with the Texans, 84-77, in what was considered as an upset at the time. However, subsequent developments indicate it was not what it seemed.

While the Chaps have won eight out of nine WJCC tilts, for South Plains, the preseason favorite to claim the title this year, the season has been a struggle. As matters now stand, SPC will be lucky to make the regional playoffs.

HOWEVER, there have been signs of life on the South Plains. After opening with a 2-5 record, the Texans have come back, winning two of their last four, including an 87-82 win over Western Texas Monday and an 86-75 win over Clarendon, two teams which have proven troublesome for the Chaparrals in the last week.

Last Thursday, MC had to go overtime to fend off the Westerners and Monday MC didn't nail down victory until 14 seconds remained in a 90-88 win over Clarendon. And since this will be at the Texas Dome, Chap fans can look for another emotionally disturbing experience.

COACH JERRY Stone's Chaps have won eight in a row and are undefeated in 1982, but first hand observers wonder how they've done it at times. All five victories in conference since the new year began have come in games in which MC has led big in the final half only to have the opposition threaten to overtake them at the wire.

Some blame the Chaps' lack of staying power to the loss of four players during the Christmas holidays. It left MC with only nine players and since there were only two sophomores to start with, Stone has no experienced depth on the bench. But out of necessity, the "kids" are gaining experience.

Stone says he doesn't know what to do about the Chaps finishes...and somehow you get the feeling that he doesn't mind a little mental anguish as long as the games keep coming out this way.

ALMOST lost in the anxiety of the narrow escapes is the fact that is MC team has come a long way from the one that staggered to a 4-4 start back in November.

MC is 18-5 and hanging tough behind Amarillo College, 20-0, and ranked fifth nationally, which isn't bad company.

The last time MC-SPC met, the Texans had four players in double figures led by 6-5 Jeff Cicon's 17 points. Keith Gilbert and Dick Winter each had 13 and David Morgan 10. Key to the win, however, may have been the Chaps' ability to hold play-making guard Scott Ferrell to seven points.

CHESTER Smith and Puntus Wilson each had 20 for Midland and Spud Webb had 17.

In winning over Clarendon Monday, Wilson, who has been under the scrutiny of visiting four-year college coaches all season, scored 22 points and put on a 7-for-7 from the field show for SMU coaches in the first half.

After tonight's game, MC returns home for games against NMJC and NMMI next week.

Tonight's game will be carried on Quad-K, 99 FM.

Are Lady Bulldogs really contenders?

Midland High's Lady Bulldogs played the role of spoiler in the first half District 5-5A girls basketball race, and now in the second half, they seem to want to be more than that.

The MHS girls upset powerful San Angelo in the first half, but had a mere 3-4 first half record as Midland Lee and San Angelo tied for the first half crown. With one game down in the second half, Midland High owns a 61-55 victory over Lee's Rebels.

That leaves a major question about the Pack's efforts this season. Are they serious contenders for the second half title, or are they just playing the spoiler role to the hilt?

Some of those questions could be put to rest today at 8 p.m. when the Bulldogs host Odessa Permian at Chaparral Center. Permian, a serious first half contender with a 5-2 mark, belted Midland High by a 66-57 margin in Odessa in the first half. If MHS can pull off a win here tonight, the league will begin to take serious the Bulldogs' desire for a second half title run. With San Angelo and Lee sharing the first half title, MHS can't afford a slip along the maze that awaits them.

Janice Littlefield, Midland High's returning All-District performer, is leading the Pack in 5-5A play with a 13.4 per game scoring average. She has a high of 26 points and scored 19 against Lee Monday. Shelia Christian has a 12.1 league average with a high of 29 points. Shelly Parker (7.5), Virgie Cooks (5.8), Missy Larremore (5.9) and Penny Griffin (5.1) show a balanced attack.

Meanwhile, Midland Lee has to keep an eye on San Angelo while taking care of its own business. The Rebels have to make sure that San Angelo doesn't win the second half outright or tie with another team besides Lee. San Angelo already has a step on Lee in that regard since the Bobcats defeated Abilene Cooper to open the second half.

At best, it's a precarious life in District 5-5A this year whether you're playing in the girls league or the boys league.

Lee travels to Odessa High tonight in a rebound effort and the Rebels are favored to rebound nicely. Lee pelted OHS by a 71-55 margin in the first half race.

Shun Harris paces the Rebel attack with a 16.9 per game scoring average in 5-5A play, twice hitting for 21 and another for 20. She had 21 against Midland High Monday to lead all scorers. Yshun King is hitting at a 14.8 clip with a high game of 23 points. That duo gives Lee the best one-two punch in the league this year. Maudie Akins (7.8) and Suzanne McGaha (7.3) give added power and the Rebels have a deep bench.

Weekend to produce water invasion

By MIKE CRUVER
Sports Writer

City of Midland Swim Team coach Hank O'Neill expects a "full house" this weekend when his club hosts the COM ABC Swim Meet at Mabee Memorial Swim Center. The annual event is expected to attract over 300 swimmers from 16 swim clubs throughout West Texas. El Paso "Water Ranch" is bringing the largest contingent (61) while the smallest is two swimmers from Lubbock YMCA. COM has 40 swimmers entered while the Midland YMCA is represented by three tanksters.

Other teams and number of swimmers are: Lubbock Red Raider Aquatic (6); Big Spring YMCA (8); Pampa Dolphin Swim Club (7); Monahans Swim Club (22); Swim Club of Abilene (42); Amarillo Aquatic Club (34); Amarillo Maveric Aquatic (4); Lubbock YMCA 2 (4); Odessa Aquatic Club (36); Hobbs, N.M. Swim Eagles (25); San Angelo Swim Club (4); Carlsbab, N.M. Aquanauts (17).

O'Neill said, "One of the reasons this meet attracts such a large number of swimmers is the pool. It is considered one the fastest pools in West Texas. I really expect a new state record or two to be set over the weekend and definitely some new pool records."

WITH SUCH a large field, O'Neill is cautiously optimistic about COM winning the meet, "El Paso is bringing a large group and Odessa is alway tough and you can't overlook the Abilene Swim Team. Of course, COM will be ranked among the favorites."

He added, "I would like to win this meet, but what I am really looking for is to see our swimmers knock time off their personnal bests. This is a middle of the season meet and this is the peak of short course training. We start tapering off for training as we get ready for the Texas Age Group meet in April."

Andrea Freeman is expected to be one the the top point getters for COM in the girls senior competiton while Mike Seay, Patrick Rhamey and Billy Worley are expected to do well in the senior boys events.

In an ABC meet O'Neill stated, "You will often find younger kids swimming against older ones. For example, our 200 medley relay consists of Becky Simpson (who just turned 13 Wednesday), Michaela Hasek (11), Laura Morse (12) and Tracey Delany (12). These four young girls will be swimming in the senior division against girls that are 16 and older. I don't know if they will win, but I expect they can do every well."

OTHER SWIMMERS that O'Neill says to keep your eye on are Caroline Reed in the 13-14 500 free; Jana Housman in the 50 free (which O'Neill says is her best event) and Kelly Delany and Matthew Seay in the 8 and under division. Delany will also be swimming 10 and under competition because of his time in some events.

O'Neill was quick to add, "By no means are these the only swimmers for COM. We have 40 swimmers entered and I am expecting great things from all of them."

In a departure from normal routine, the meet will feature the relay races in the middle of the meet instead of at the end. Saturday's relays are expected to start at 11 a.m. with the Sunday relays slated for about the same time.

O'Neill said, "The relays should feature some of the most exciting races in the meet. I think that putting the relays in the middle of the program keeps the interest up and allows a few more fans to get out and see them."

The meet splashes off Friday with four events scheduled. The headlining race Friday should be the senior girls 1650 free. COM's Freeman is an early choice in this event for a title. Other races on tap Friday are the 13-14 500 free; 10 and under 200 free and 11-12 500 free. On Friday, warmups start at 5 p.m. with the time finals slated for 6 p.m.

IN A time finals meet, a swimmer places according to the time they turn in in one race. There is no qualifying round and the final places are determined on one swim through the course.

Saturdy and Sunday warmups are scheduled for 8 a.m. with the time finals to start at 9 a.m. There are 51 races scheduled for Saturday with 54 more to be swam on Sunday.

O'Neill also said, "Some of the best races could be in the 8 and under competition. In that division the youngsters swim 25 yards (one length of the pool) but they often produce some of the most exciting races."

Lowly Bulldogs nip Kentucky

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

When he was coaching at Southern Cal in the Pac-10 Conference, Bob Boyd's teams played in the shadow of UCLA and generally played second fiddle.

Now that he's with Mississippi State in the Southeastern Conference, Boyd has another college basketball giant to contend with in Kentucky. But he got off on the right foot against the Wildcats Wednesday night.

"I certainly don't want to negate this fine victory, but I think we caught Kentucky a little flat," said Boyd after a shocking 56-51 upset of the nation's No. 7 team.

To make the game even more significant in Boyd's first year, it was the first victory for Mississippi State in the SEC after 16 losses.

"It was a great win for us, and it was nice to end the conference losing streak," said Boyd. "Our Kalpatrick Wells was by far the best defender on the court. I don't think there is a post man in the league that can play defense better."

Wells blocked three Kentucky shots and made two critical steals late in the game, while Butch Pierre sank key free throws for Mississippi State.

Mississippi State was leading 52-49 with 33 seconds to play when Jeff Malone hit two free throws. Kentucky's Jim Master responded with two of his own, but his team couldn't score in its last four possessions.

Mississippi State last beat a Top Ten team in 1976 when it edged Kentucky 83-76.

Kentucky Coach Joe B. Hall credited Mississippi State with "an exceptionally fine game. The tempo was such that it messed up our game. They broke us down offensively and defensively. Their defense intimidated us. They did what they had to do to win, and they deserve it."

In other games involving the nation's ranked teams, No. 1 Missouri whipped Iowa State 86-73, No. 2 North Carolina defeated Clemson 77-72, No. 3 Virginia downed Wake Forest 69-66, No. 4 DePaul outclassed St. Louis 99-80, No. 13 Alabama beat Auburn 67-65, Oklahoma upset No. 14 Kansas State 56-53, No. 15 Tennessee nipped Georgia 66-64 and No. 20 Villanova walloped LaSalle 117-82.

The Top Ten

Ricky Frazier collected 21 points and four other Missouri players scored in double figures as the Tigers defeated Iowa State. The Tigers, playing their first game since taking over the No. 1 spot, improved their record to 17-0 for the season and 6-0 in the Big Eight. Iowa State was led Ron Harris' 20 points.

Jimmy Black and Matt Doherty each scored a career-high 21 points as North Carolina overcame a nine-point deficit in the second half to defeat Clemson.

The scoring honors were especially welcome because Doherty did not score in the last game against Georgia Tech and Black scored only three points. Doherty, who averages 8.2 points, was 8 of 16 from the floor. Black, averaging 7.1, was 8 of 11.

Tim Mullen scored a career-high 21 points as Virginia held off Wake Forest. Mullen, a 6-foot-5 forward, got 12 of his points in the first half when Virginia twice spurted to 11-point leads. The Cavaliers made those leads stand up, although the Demon Deacons trimmed the margin to two on several occasions, including a 68-66 score with six seconds left.

Virginia guard Othell Wilson then provided the final margin with the first of two free throws and 7-foot-4 Ralph Sampson blocked Scott Davis' shot at the buzzer.

Texas' Mike Wacker to miss rest of season

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Sophomore Mike Wacker, a 6-foot-9 shooting and rebounding force in the best Texas Longhorn basketball start in nearly half a century, will miss the remainder of the season with a knee injury.

Wacker, the second-leading scorer and rebounder on Texas' fifth-ranked team, underwent knee surgery Wednesday after hurting a knee in Texas' first loss — to Baylor — Tuesday night.

Wacker's injury is so severe that team doctors estimate rehabilitation could take as long as 10 months, which would jeopardize his return even next season.

Wacker sustained a fractured and dislocated left kneecap and torn ligament when he hit the floor after missing a tip-in in Texas' 69-59 loss to unranked Baylor at Waco.

Spectators said Wacker clutched his knee and screamed in pain.

Texas had won 14 straight games, tying a school record, before going down to defeat. The 1935 team also won its first 14 games before losing. The Longhorns were leading Baylor 17-16 when Wacker got hurt.

"Of course his loss hurt Texas, defensively more than offensively," said Baylor coach Jim Haller.

Longhorn fans considered Wacker and 6-10 junior LaSalle Thompson the keys to Texas' impressive start, which had carried the Longhorns to the highest national ranking in their history.

Wacker had averaged 16.3 points and 9.9 rebounds a game prior to the Baylor contest but was scoreless and had only one rebound when he was hurt with 8 minutes 12 seconds left in the first half.

Globetrotters visit Midland Saturday

The Harlem Globetrotters will make their annual appearance at Chaparral Center Saturday at 7:30 p.m. with three former Southwest Conference basketball players in the lineup.

Hallie Bryant, a former player of 11 years with the Trotters, was in Midland this week to sing the praises of Harlem Globetrotters. "Our show is geared for the entire family and laughter is what we provoke and it's infectious," he said.

"This should be a good show for this area since Jimmy Blacklock, our dribbling specialist, played at Texas, and Sweet Lou Dunbar, one of our great showmen, played with Houston. Ovie Dotson also played at Texas."

Twiggy Sanders, however, is best known among Midlanders as the Trotter clown and the 6-8 showman is one of the best at what he does.

"The Harlem Globetrotters is a lot like Christmas. We come to your town only once a year and I think that is a key to why the Trotters are so popular."

Bryant said that this version of the Globetrotters just completed a South America tour, which included Mexico, and will be headed for Australia and New Zealand in three weeks. "These guys average a game a night from October through April, so you can see that they stay busy."

Tickets for Saturday's performance may be purchased at Chaparral Center. Prices range from $8 to $6 with $2 off for kids under 12.

The Globetrotters who will be here Saturday are known as the International team. They also have a National team which features players like Geese Ausbie and Curly Neal. Midland misses that team again.

Other players who will be here Saturday include Clyde "The Glide" Austin of North Carolina State fame, Gary Hooker (Murray State), Harold Hubbard (Savannah State College), Osborne Lockhart (Minnesota) and Tiny

Cardinals stuck with Templeton

ST. LOUIS (AP) — In view of Ozzie Smith's objections to a trade, Garry Templeton may wind up as the St. Louis Cardinals' shortstop for 1982.

"I could live with that — if he'll play," St. Louis Manager Whitey Herzog said Wednesday. "If Garry could go out and play the way he can play, he'll be better than Ozzie Smith."

Herzog's words reflected his uncertainty over what to expect next from Smith, the 27-year-old all-star shortstop of the San Diego Padres.

On Tuesday, at a news conference, Smith announced he was rejecting a move to St. Louis under a no-trade provision of his 1981 contract. Instead, he said, he is willing to accept a pay cut — possibly as much as 20 percent of his $300,000 salary for last year.

Smith's agent, Ed Gottlieb, said his client still has another option open if San Diego, as anticipated, renews his contract March 1.

If that happens, Smith will have another seven days to file for arbitration, Gottlieb said. And by doing so, the fancy-fielding player may be able to get at least close to the $450,000 offered to him by theCards.

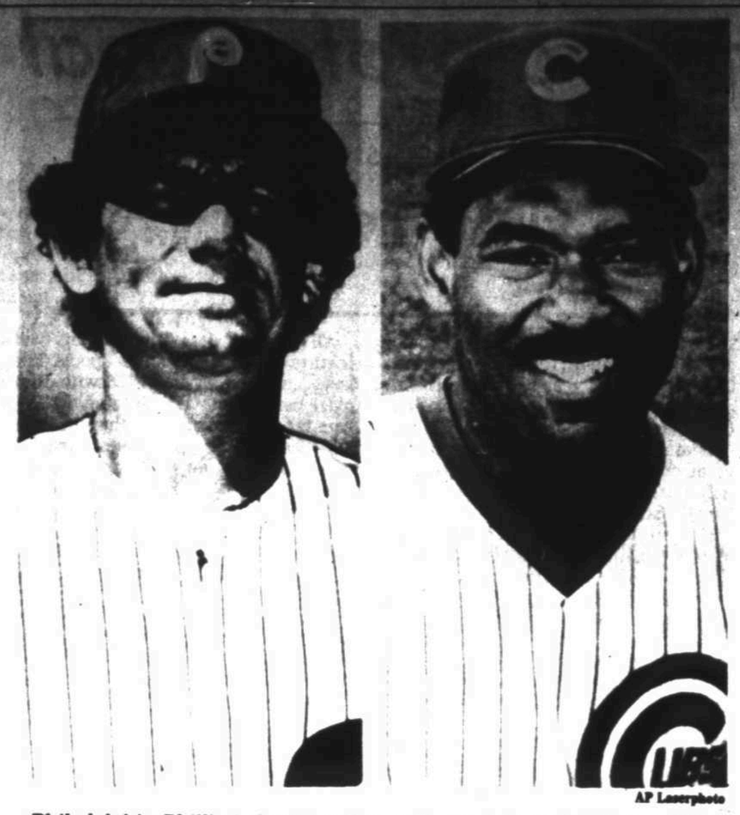

Padres General Manager Jack McKeon on Tuesday accused Smith of lacking the courage to take his salary battle to an arbitrator. And Smith, perhaps still hoping for a trade breakthrough, said, "I'd be a fool not to go (to St. Louis) if they come up with $750,000."

Herzog, however, emphasized that the Cards would not budge from their $450,000 offer to obtain Smith, pointing out that "if we start doing that we'll start setting a bad precedent."

Smith and Templeton were part of a four-player trade worked out between St. Louis and San Diego during last month's winter baseball meetings. The other part of the deal sent Cards outfielder Sixto Lezcano to the Padres in exchange for right-hander Steve Mura.

Baffled by Smith's unshifting stance, Herzog said, "We gave him a chance to earn some more money but we'd be crazy to go overboard.

"Really, Ozzie did say he wanted to play in St. Louis. I'd like to have him, I really would," said Herzog. "Who knows? Templeton might be our shortstop next year."

Perry still wants crack at No. 300

ATLANTA (AP) — Gaylord Perry is 43 and holding at 297, but he isn't giving up hope of reaching 300.

The former Atlanta Braves pitcher is only three victories shy of reaching a baseball milestone, a goal he set for himself nearly three years ago.

When Braves owner Ted Turner brought Perry to Atlanta on a one-year, $200,000 contract at the start of last season, the crafty right-handed veteran of 19 major league years needed 11 victories to become one of 15 pitchers to win 300 or more games in the majors.

Perry seemed a good bet to reach his goal last season, but the seven-week players strike wiped out any hope of his achieving the mark while in a Braves uniform.

He still managed an 8-9 record with a 3.94 earned run average in a team-leading 150 and two-thirds innings. But when the season was over, the Braves indicated Perry would not be back.

"It was unfortunate, something that never should have been," Perry said of the strike in an interview in today's editions of The Atlanta Constitution. "It's happened and is something I've had to live with.

"After the season, all we asked of the Braves was that they give us the courtesy of letting us know early what their plans were for us, and they did," Perry said. "They said they would be going with their younger pitchers."

But Perry, the only pitcher to win Cy Young awards in both leagues, said he's not giving up on his goal.

"You consider yourself lucky to get that far," he said of his 297 victories, "but hopefully I'll get a chance to go farther."

Perry noted, however, that he is not just shooting for three more career victories. He said he still can be productive beyond that point if given a chance.

"I'm not just interested in reaching 300," he said. "I think I can still help somebody."

"I've been talking to some clubs," Perry said in the telephone interview from his home in Williamston, N.C. "Right now it's about four." He declined to identify the teams.

MJTA to hold tennis tourney

The Midland Junior Tennis Association will hold a tournament for boys and girls 16-and-under and boys and girls 13-and-under at Lee High School, starting at 9 a.m. Feb. 6. It will conclude Feb. 7.

Weather conditions may prompt altering of starting time.

Entry deadline is Feb. 3. Call Yvonne Garton 683-1529 to enter. The tournament is made possible by the Midland Mixed Doubles Benefit, which is sponsored by the Midland National Bank.

Chicago Cubs deal DeJesus for Bowa

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Bill Giles didn't want to trade Larry Bowa, but the Philadelphia Phillies' president said the shortstop's contract demands were too high over the long range.

The Phillies dealt the 36-year-old Bowa to the Chicago Cubs Wednesday for 29-year-old shortstop Ivan DeJesus. The Cubs also received utility infielder Ryne Sandberg, 22.

"Initially I wanted to wait until the end of the (1982) season," before deciding on Bowa," Giles said. "I didn't feel a three-year contract was justified."

Bowa, who wanted a reported $400,000 per season in a three-year contract from the National League baseball team, is believed to have gotten a four-year deal with the Cubs — with three seasons guaranteed — at $500,000 a year.

The Phillies have a young minor league shortstop, Julio Franco, whom they feel will be ready for the major leagues in one or two years.

"Bowa can play a year or two, but DeJesus is better," Giles insisted at a news conference Wednesday announcing the deal.

Giles said he felt DeJesus might make more errors than Bowa, but said DeJesus had better range. DeJesus was second in the National League to San Diego's Ozzie Smith in total chances the last two seasons.

"And he (DeJesus) is seven years younger," Giles observed.

Bowa led shortstops in fielding five times and won two Gold Gloves during his 12 years with the Phillies while compiling a .982 fielding average, the best in baseball history for a shortstop.

The trade was stalemated for some time beccause the Phillies insisted the Cubs throw in a pitcher such as Lee Smith or Bill Caudill. But Chicago Vice President Dallas Green — the Phillies manager the last two years — said no.

DeJesus is coming off a .194 season at the plate. He has a lifetime batting average of .257 and has been the Cubs' regular shortstop since 1977.

New Phillies Manager Pat Corrales says he sees DeJesus as a leadoff hitter, if his average stays up.

"If he gets off to a bad start, we'll drop him down," Corrales said.

Bowa has a lifetime average of .264, and hit .283 last season. Sandberg hit .293 at Oklahoma City in the American Association.

"I'm not going to lie to you, I would have liked to have finished my career in Philadelphia," Bowa said from his winter home in Clearwater, Fla. "But I don't want to play where you know the front office people don't want you," he added.

Bowa said it didn't take long to work out a contract with Green.

"Dallas said, 'We can do this in two minutes.' He gave me a $100,000 signing bonus and a salary of $500,000 a year."

Turner Broadcasting lands NCAA grid pact

MISSION, Kan. (AP) — The NCAA and Turner Broadcasting System, Inc., have reached agreement for the first live cable coverage of college football games.

The NCAA announced from its headquarters Wednesday that Turner Broadcasting had been awarded rights to 19 games in each of the 1982 and 1983 seasons. The price of the package was not announced, but a source close to the negotiations said it was around $50 million.

The NCAA signed four-year contracts last year with ABC and CBS totaling $263.5 million for live network football coverage.

"The NCAA looks forward to this series, which coupled with the ABC and CBS packages, will constitute the highest level of intercollegiate television exposure and income to NCAA-member institutions in history," said Wiles Hallock, commissioner of the Pac-10 and chairman of the NCAA Football Television Committee.

Ted Turner, chairman of Turner Broadcasting, called the contract "a great milestone for cable television."

The cable contract includes rights to games on Saturday evenings, plus games on some weekday evenings and on Thanksgiving. ABC and CBS will have first pick of games, and no team that appears on a national network telecast will be allowed to appear on the supplementary cable telecast.

Former Texas Tech star turns 27 assists, 24 points

By The Associated Press

When Geoff Huston heads home to Brooklyn this summer, he'll have something to brag about down at the schoolyard where he learned to play basketball.

In previous years, World Free of the Golden State Warriors was the local hero in the Canarsie section of New York's largest borough. But Huston certainly matched any of Free's finest National Basketball Association efforts when he handed out 27 assists and scored 24 points Wednesday night in leading the Cleveland Cavaliers to a 110-106 triumph over the Warriors.

"Now we have something to talk about in the summer," said Huston, who was personally responsible for 78 of Cleveland's points. "He (Free) has had his spectacular games and now we have something to toss back and forth."

Huston was tossing the ball all over the court as he fell two shy of the NBA record for assists in a game, set by Kevin Porter of New Jersey in 1978. Bob Cousy and Guy Rodgers each had 28 assists in an NBA game during their careers.

"I had a couple of games in college (Texas Tech) where I put together a combination of high-point and assist totals," said Huston, who did shatter the team record of 20 assists. "I guess tomorrow when I wake up I'll feel a whole lot better about it but I feel best about winning a game right now."

Cleveland has won only five of its last 36 games.

Huston had broken a 103-103 tie with an 18-foot jump shot before Free, who had 22 points for the Warriors, pumped in a three-point field goal to give Golden State a 106-105 lead. But Huston fed James Edwards for a 10-foot jumper for the winning points.

"I told him congratulations at halftime when I saw he had 15 assists," said Free. "I didn't know he was going to get 12 more.

"Well, left-handers are kind of a little crazy anyway."

Bernard King paced the Warriors with 29 points.

Pistons 108, Hawks 107

John Long scored 35 points to pace the Detroit offense and the Pistons' defense held Atlanta scoreless in the final minute after Kent Benson's layup put them on top.

Tom McMillen led the Hawks with 24 points.

Celtics 131, Knicks 99

Boston spurted from a 70-65 halftime margin to a 17-point lead by scoring the first 12 points of the second half, then cruised to victory. The Celtics, who were led by Larry Bird's 31 points, eight rebounds and 11 assists, outscored New York 35-10 in the third period. The Knicks had only two field goals and turned the ball over 13 times in that quarter.

Mike Newlin was New York's top scorer with 21.

SuperSonics 110, Kings 103

Seattle, winning for the 11th time in the last 13 games, handed Kansas City its fifth straight loss as Gus Williams scored 31 points. The Sonics went on an 11-4 tear to break a 91-91 tie and put the game away. Larry Drew and Steve Johnson each had 20 points for KC.

"The defense is where we start things," said Williams. "We stopped them a couple of times late in the game, and that was the difference."

76ers 99, Mavericks 86

A four-game winning streak, the longest in Dallas' 124-game history, ended as Philadelphia subs Andrew Toney and Mike Bantom combined for 40 points. Toney had 22, including the field goal that put the Sixers on top to stay going into the fourth quarter.

Rookie Jay Vincent continued his hot scoring streak for Dallas, pouring in 29 points.

Texas anglers now have a professional bass tournament

Tournament bass anglers, the time has come in Texas where you will be able to enter a truly organized, first-class professional bass tournament. Coming to Texas, which incidentally will cater to Texas anglers, is Western Bass.

Western Bass Fishing Association will make its national tournament debut in Texas on March 12-13 at Toledo Bend Reservoir, announced Rich Schultz, president of Western Bass.

THE TOLEDO Bend tourney is the first of five events scheduled in 1982 for the Texas Region. Other dates and lakes include: April 9-10, Lake Palestine; May 14-15, Lake Conroe; June 4-5, Possum Kingdom Reservoir; July 9-10, Lake Livingston.

"We've received such a strong response from the fishermen back East who competed in our big Lake Mead Tournament last August that we figured now seemed to be the right time for Western Bass to start a circuit in this area," Schultz said. "Because of the great cooperation we've had with some of these top-name pros in the Texas area, we were able to put together what we believe will be a highly competitive tournament schedule in 1982."

Nearly 49 of the biggest names in bass fishing, including such superstars from the East as Tom Mann, Ricky Green, Bofby Murray, Larry Nixon, Roland Martin, Cobrin Dyer, Neal Parker, Bo Dowden, Basil Bacon, Jerry Rhyne and Ricky Clunn, competed in the Western Bass/Del Webb National Bass Tournament at Lake Mead. First place in the tournament was a record-breaking $50,000 in cash, the largest payout to a winner in bass fishing history.

"Most all of the pros from the East who fished at Lake Mead have told us they would back us in this new venture," Schultz said. "At the end of the year, the pros back East will be going against our best in the West at our Grand National. By this time next year, we should really have a national champion of bass fishing in the truest sense of the word."

ANGLERS COMPETING in the Texas Region will be using a best four-of-five tournament format, similar to the one used this year by the Northern and Southern Divisions of Western Bass' Western Region. After five tournaments, the top five anglers in the point standings in the Texas Region will automatically qualify for the Grand National Fly-Away.

The top 50 anglers in the point standings will qualify for the Texas Regional Championships at a date and site to be announced. The top five at the Regional Championship will also advance to the Grand National where they'll be joined by the top 20 anglers from the Western Region circuit plus the winner of the Affiliate Club championship.

All Western Bass Tournaments will feature the popular "option" pools. The basic entry fee is only $125 with first place being a fully-rigged Ranger 330-V bass boat, valued at more than P13,000, and cash prizes for second through 30th place. Option pools are $25, $50 and $100. The Big Fish Option is $20 with the winner receiving a Ranger 320-V bass boat. A third boat, Ranger 1600-V, will be awarded in a drawing at the Saturday night awards banquet at each tournament.

Tournaments will be staged on Fridays and Saturdays with all tourneys featuring a two-day practice period on Wednesday and Thursday preceding the contest. The lake will be off-limits to all tournament anglers for nine days preceding the start of practice fishing for each tournament.

BOAT OWNERS who enter the Western Bass tournaments can be assured of using their own boats for both days of the tournament if they sign up and bring a non-boater entrant to the tournament. Both boater and non-boater entrants must be designated at the time of tournament entry.

According to the option pools, they are progressive in entry (you must enter the first to enter the second, etc.) Payoffs are based as follows: One place paid for each 10 entries exceeding 50 entries, will pay top five places.

Payoffs in the options are made only to those in the options, based on how they finished in the tournament standings. For instance, if the first three anglers in the standings are not in the option pools, and the fourth place angler is in the first two pools, that fourth place angler would be first in the first option and first in the second option. The fifth place angler, if he is in all three pools, would be second in the first option and first in the third option.

WELL, YOU might be thinking here's another big tournament circuit trying to outcast another suspecting bass angler. Well, Western Bass Association doesn't operate that way. I've followed Western Bass from the beginning and they truly run one of the finest and most honest professional bass tournament circuits in the country.

We're glad they're coming to Texas. It's about time we had a circuit like this. There're just too many top anglers in this big Lone Star State and it's now time to show what we've got. And, the best thing about Western Bass coming to Texas is that it will allow the average bass angler an opportunity to enter a professional bass tournament and learn from the experience without having to pay a dear price for the event.

For more information about the tournaments and entry blanks you may contact Western Bass Fishing Association, 2090 South Grand Avenue, Santa Ana, Calif., 92705 or write me: Kenny Redin, P.O. Box 10539, San Antonio, Texas, 78210.

Jack Whitaker moves to ABC

An AP Sports Analysis
By LARRY SIDDONS
AP Sports Writer

Does television, with its instant replays, isolated cameras, reverse angles and other visual gimmicks, short-change sports fans when it comes to what they hear from the announcers?

Roone Arledge thinks that's often the case.

As president of ABC News and Sports, Arledge has helped develop much of the technology which has drastically changed TV coverage of athletics.

But now that the split screens, hand-held cameras and graphics generators are available even to the smallest local station or cablecaster, Arledge believes TV must pay more attention to what it says as well as what it shows.

"Viewers don't want to listen to people who don't know what they're talking about," he said. "And what you have to say becomes that much more important, when everybody has freeze-frames and other technology."

In recent years, ABC has been assembling a stable of announcers more known for commentary than play-by-play, such as Jim McKay and Howard Cosell.

This week, it added one of the most respected names in sports broadcasting, Jack Whitaker.

In more than 30 years on the air, Whitaker has done play-by-play and color commentary on a wide range of events. But he is best known for his essays — signed pieces of commentary, similar to the work of a newspaper's sports columnists — which became a part of CBS' coverage of major events.

His last piece for CBS was aired last Sunday, as part of the coverage of an ice-skating competition leading up to the Super Bowl. This Sunday, he does his first work for ABC, anchoring coverage of the United States vs. the Soviet Union in boxing from Moscow.

Whitaker's contract runs through 1984 and will enable him to help cover the Olympics on ABC, one of the few major events he has never done. Financial terms were not disclosed.

"The job is important beyond the cost," Arledge said, but there are indications ABC plans to get its money's worth out of Whitaker.

Besides hosting the "USA vs. the World in Olympic Sports" series, Whitaker is scheduled to work on "Wide World of Sports" and network coverage of golf and horse racing, as well as the Summer and Winter Olympics.

But Whitaker's contract is with the network's news department as well, and that appears to be the key to Arledge's plans for using his latest acquisition.

Whitaker will be reporting sports regularly on ABC's "World News Tonight," "20-20" weekly news magazine and the late-night "Nightline."

"I have felt for some time that, if you had the right person with the right combination of style and literacy, you should have more sports on network TV news," Arledge said. "The variety of things Jack can do lends itself to this thought, and obviously you'll be seeing a lot of Jack on the Olympics. He's among a small group of TV sportscasters who transcend play-by-play."

With ABC scheduling a total of 210 hours of coverage just from the Summer Games in Los Angeles in 1984, plans call for Whitaker to split the anchor chores with McKay.

Jerry Pate turns to color

SAN DIEGO (AP) — It will be easy to spot Jerry Pate's golf ball this week in the $300,000 Wickes-Andy Williams-San Diego Open tournament.

It's bright orange.

Pate, a two-time winner last season and runnerup last week in Phoenix, is one of a handful of players using something other than the traditional white ball in pro golf tour events this season. He predicts it's just the start of a trend.

"Maybe the purists, the traditionalists, don't like it, but that's just because of tradition," Pate said before starting out in the first round today with a dozen of the orange-colored balls, the product of a major manufacturer.

It is a break with tradition, but Pate isn't exactly a traditionalist. In fact, he shocked some of the game's more staid observers when he took a running leap into a lake after winning the Memphis Classic last summer.

"The golf ball isn't white. It's just painted white," he said. "So why can't you paint it any color you want?

"The orange ball is easier to see. It's easier to spot in the rough. It's easy to identify. You know you're not going to be playing somebody else's ball. It's easier to see in the air.

"And often, on television, you can't see the guy hitting the shot, but when it comes into the green, if it's a bright orange, the spectator can sure tell whose ball it is. And if it can be orange, it can be green or blue or pink or any color you want.

"I wouldn't be surprised so see, in a few years, each guy in a threesome using a different color ball. That'd make it easier for the players to identify their ball and it would sure help the spectator pick out which ball belongs to which player."

Off his performance last week, when the former U.S. Open champ chased Lanny Wadkins to the title, Pate has to be ranked high among those most likely to succeed in this week's pursuit of a $54,000 first prize.

"I feel like I'm playing pretty well, putting pretty well," he said.

But Pate faces probably the strongest field this event has ever assembled.

Chief among the challengers are Jack Nicklaus, defending title-holder Bruce Lietzke and the winners of the four major titles from 1981 — Tom Watson (Masters), David Graham, (U.S. Open), Bill Rogers (British Open) and Larry Nelson (PGA).

Also included in the 156-man field are Johnny Miller, 1981 leading money-winner Tom Kite, Ray Floyd and Hale Irwin.

Portions of the final two rounds Saturday and Sunday will be televised nationally by NBC.

Scientists learn money makes world go 'round

By BOB CORBETT
Copley News Service

Modern science seems to be caught in a bind.

Never have prospects for exciting science seemed so great, and never in recent memory have the prospects for funding seemed so dismal.

It's as though scientists who should be singing, Fly me to the moon and let me play among the stars, are learning that the increasingly familiar tune is "Money Makes the World Go Round."

They have seen the planets up close. They are getting a handle on the quasars, those tiny bits of light that exist almost out to the beginning of the universe. They seem on the verge of uncovering the true nature of all matter and defining the forces that keep it all together. They have glimpsed the secrets of the genetic code that controls all life.

They are eager. They can taste the wine.

But they are also anxious. For the past few years, funding for basic research and development has been declining in real dollars. The researchers have already seen some of their best hopes go gurgling down the budgetary drain, victims of an inflationary economy and the high costs of out-sized and sophisticated machinery.

Money for science comes primarily from the government through the National Science Foundation and the National Institutes of Health. The Department of Defense, the National Aeronautics and Space Agency, and other government agencies are also heavy contributors.

And now the scientists have been told by the president's scientific adviser himself — Dr. George A. Keyworth — that the government's budgetary belt is going to be drawn even tighter.

KEYWORTH LAID IT out in no uncertain terms at the recent meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science in Washington, D.C. Even while recognizing the importance of science to the nation's highly technological society, his words were harsh.

Dr. Margaret Burbidge, an astronomer at the University of California at San Diego and the new president of the AAAS, was one of the first to react to Keyworth's statements.

She noted the marvelous achievements of the nation's Apollo missions to the Moon, the Viking landings on Mars, the spectacular photographs of Saturn and Jupiter sent back by the Voyager satellites and the recent successes of the space shuttle program.

"To fall back from that leadership," she said, "to me is very sad."

However, Burbidge is more worried about the future of science, what the cutbacks in funding will do to basic science and the education of young scientists who will be conducting that research in future.

"The basic science of today is the applied science of 10 to 20 years hence," she said.

The prospects did not seem inviting to many other scientists attending the AAAS meeting.

Nowhere are the budget cuts being felt so severely as in the area of space sciences. The funds for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration have been drastically curtailed and most of what is left is devoted to the space shuttle program.

IT'S A DISTURBING situation for space scientists. They have already seen several of their most important projects either eliminated or delayed. These include the proposed probe of Halley's Comet in 1985-86 and the U.S. solar-polar project designed to send a satellite around the poles of the sun. The Venus orbiting imaging radar mission to map the surface of the planet has been killed, and the Gamma Ray Observatory (in which the University of California has a large stake) has been put on hold.

Other future space missions may never leave the drawing boards, according to Dr. Andrew P. Ingersoll of the California Institute of Technology. These include a Mercury orbiter, a lunar polar orbiter, a Mars sample return mission, a Saturn orbiter and a probe of the outer planets.

Ingersoll was disturbed. "The first studies of Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter and Saturn have been essentially reconnaissance missions," he said. "Now we must begin the work of exploration."

Dr. D. Allan Bromley, president of Yale University and out-going president of the AAAS, is equally concerned. "If we find ourselves falling back from the frontier (of science), then we are in trouble," he said.

William D. Carey, executive officer of the AAAS, was even more emphatic. Science, he said, can stand a few years of dry budgets, but if it is a situation that is going to continue then "science and research is very, very vulnerable."

It's not a casual matter, Carey said, it's very serious. Continued budget cuts will blunt the leading edge of science. It could bring on what he called a "recession in research."

"If this trend continues," he said, "it would be catastrophic."

Keyworth, however, was adamant in his stand even while recognizing the importance of science to modern society.

"TO THOSE WHO MAY still hope for constantly growing budgets across the board, let me say this," he said. "That time has passed and we need the scientific community's best and most thoughtful judgment and advice to maintain the health of our science and technological base."

Then he added what seemed to be a warning to many scientists. "To those who object to such undertakings (budget constraints) and all my scientific colleagues, I say that if we scientists do not make such choices, others will and with less acuity.

"Science and technology policy is not made in a vacuum," he said. "It is an exercise in priority-setting and decision-making that must be carried out in the context of other national policies such as those concerning national security, international relations, energy, social services and the economy."

Science must take its proper place among these concerns, he indicated.

"The reasons for this are clear and the needs urgent," he said. "This country has been plagued for years by an unacceptable level of inflation, high interest rates and a runaway federal budget.

"In this time of economic restraint we need to make tough decisions — tougher than were necessary during eras of rapid growth," he said. "There is an inevitable tendency when budgets are increasing to add resources to the best research areas, but not to take money away from less productive research areas, even if they have passed the days of their most important and exciting work."

"We can no longer afford that luxury," Keyworth said.

Walking accomplishes as much as running

By JOANN RODGERS
Hearst Feature Service

If you are launching a first or new assault after a long hiatus of inertia, the first step is a checkup, not only of the heart and lungs, but also of the hips, knees, and feet.

Pick your leg exercises carefully for safety's sake. Many sports offer good muscular conditioning, but in general it's a good idea to leave behind football, basketball and hockey after age 40 because bones, tendons and ligaments are more likely to be injured and take longer to heal. Handball, tennis, squash, racketball and skiing can be part of your regimen but only if you are fit.

Brisk walking is the safest and best of all leg-strengthening exercises. It also offers aerobic benefits to the heart and lungs. "Anything you can accomplish running you can accomplish walking. It just takes a little longer," says Dr. Saul Haskell, surgeon and sport's medicine specialist at Michael Reese Hospital and Medical Center in Chicago.

Avoid running if safety is your concern. "Running is the most dangerous sport known where legs are concerned," says Dr. Mirkin. "Some 80 percent of the patients I see in the sports clinic are runners. When both feet are off the ground and hit it at the same time, the force is enormous and punishing. (A 150 pound jogger imposes an impact load of 240 tons per mile on his lower body structures) In addition, running is like an addictive drug: you build tolerance and need more distance to get the high it produces for many. This mileage mania almost guarantees overtraining and injury."

If you do run, start with a 20 minute jog-walk routine with an equal number of running and walking steps. Over 10 weeks, progress to mostly running. Jog only three days a week.

A hard workout ALWAYS damages muscles, which take 48 hours to heal even in the very fit. Never, therefore, use the same muscles hard every day.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Despite medical advances, babies still die at birth

Dear Dr. Solomon: A friend of mine recently lost her first child at birth. People have been having babies for millions of years. With all the new medicines and technology, how is it possible that children still die at birth? — Carlotte, Montgomery, Alabama.

Dear Carlotte: I venture to say that some children — hopefully, fewer and fewer in number — will continue to die at childbirth despite advances in the field of medicine. Although medical science has been successful in curing disease and prolonging life, it can never be successful in all cases all of the time.

The main causes of death at childbirth are premature births and low birth weight. One or both of these factors may have been present in your friend's case.

Nevertheless, progress is being made. Today, many infants weighing less than two pounds at birth are able to survive, with a good chance of growing into healthy adults. The vast majority of infants weighing three pounds or more can also be expected to survive. Moreover, those that do live are less likely to have any of the disorders that are often associated with premature birth and low weight.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Everytime I pick up a newspaper or magazine, I get a different story about whether the Pill causes breast cancer. Can you give me a yes-or-no answer on this? — Peggy, Washington, D.C.

Dear Peggy: A definite yes-or-no answer is not possible since the relationship between oral contraceptives and breast cancer has not been studied over a long enough period of time. Some doctors suggest it will not be possible to arrive at a conclusion until a woman has been on the Pill for some 20 or 30 years.

To date, such a relationship has not been shown. A total of more than 40,000 women were followed in two separate studies without any evidence that those taking oral contraceptives had a higher incidence of breast cancer. However, most of these women had been on the Pill for less than 10 years.

It is difficult to generalize about the long-term effects of oral contraceptives because of the limited information available. What may be true of a woman who started using the Pill in her 30s after having had at least one child may not be true of a teenager who begins using it before ever being pregnant.

Dear Dr. Solomon: A friend of mine keeps pushing Vitamin E on me. I have never been one to take more than a multivitamin, but he says I am hurting myself by not taking ample doses of it. What is it? Is it possible this vitamin will keep me younger, make my heart stronger, and increase my sex life? — B.R., Austin, Texas

Dear B.R.: No, Vitamin E couldn't possibly perform all of the functions for which it is advertised. Vitamin E is a fat soluble vitamin that is stored in the body. It is not necessary to replace it in the diet each day, and deficiencies in people are rare. It is found in vegetable oils, fruits, vegetables, cereals, wholegrain products, and egg yolks. By eating a healthy diet, you will furnish your system with all of the Vitamin E it needs.

Navy plans to cancel 'crippled' research programs

By L. EDGAR PRINA
Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — The Navy has canceled 42 research and development programs in the past 12 months and plans to dump many more in the next few years.

"That's only the beginning," Navy Secretary John F. Lehman, Jr., said in disclosing the 1981 cancellations.

"We are not going to finance cripples," he asserted. "We are going to get rid of the 'nice to haves' and keep only the 'must haves.'"

According to Lehman, the Navy had roughly 250 development programs a decade ago and now has twice as many with approximately the same amount of money to spend on them, after adjusting for inflation.

Other Pentagon sources report that the Navy is planning to reduce its research and development budget by 10-12 percent in the fiscal 1983 budget that President Reagan will send to Congress Feb. 8.

Lehman and Adm. Thomas B. Hayward, chief of naval operations, have decided that vertical cuts made more sense than doing what the Navy had been doing for many years — nickeling and diming each program to death and never getting on with it. By eliminating some programs, the other, higher priority and more promising ones can be put on a more efficient schedule, they believe.

Lehman is having more success with R&D program actions than with procurement.

He tried to halt the purchase of P-3C Orion maritime reconnaissance planes for the new five-year (fiscal years 1983-87) program, but political pressures, domestic and foreign, apparently have thwarted him. As it stands today, the Navy will continue to order the Lockheed California Co.-built aircraft in fiscal 1983 and beyond.

In an address at a National Security Industrial Association luncheon here, Lehman reported "incredible results" on the naval personnel front.

Crediting the "major order of magnitude" increases in military pay and benefits in the last year, he said retention of careerists was now running "the highest ever in peacetime and the quality is superb."

The chief of naval personnel office reports that first-term re-enlistments hit 41.7 percent, second-term, 56.9 percent and careerists, 94.1 percent in fiscal 1981 and that for the first quarter of fiscal 1982, which ended last Dec. 31, the rates were up to 52.8 percent, 69.0 percent and 95.9 percent, respectively. Officer retention generally was also up last year, although the rate for nuclear submarine officers dipped from 36 to 33 percent.

Lehman said even the "re-accession" rate, covering former active duty personnel who left the Navy and have now re-enlisted, has been soaring.

"Skilled petty officers and chiefs are coming back in at the rate of about 1,000 a month," he said. "This is double any previous peacetime reaccession rate."

The secretary said the bright personnel picture, significantly, comes at a time when there is a steadily decreasing population base of military age young Americans to draw upon. He conceded, however, that the current economic recession has probably helped recruitment and retention in all the armed services.

Harlequin author says writers are just ordinary people

By JANE ESTES
Hearst Feature Service

SEATTLE — She was a lively, pretty girl working in the J. Arthur Rank studios in London back in 1958. He was a good-looking master sergeant, a flight engineer in the U.S. Air Force, on temporary duty in England. They met at a birthday party for one of her girlfriends when he asked her to dance because she was the only girl there with a suntan.

It was all very romantic, Margaret "Meg" Chittenden says in her soft English accent.

Chittenden, who is writing these days for Harlequin, one of the kingpins of the romance novel field, should know.

With a decided twinkle in her eye, she adds: "I caught him on the way through. I guess he wasn't moving fast enough." Jim Carter and Chittenden were married, and along came son Steve and daughter Sharon.

Up to 12 years ago, when an electric typewriter came into her life, Meg Chittenden enjoyed making clothes, knitting, fishing and, always, reading. Then she started writing articles for newspapers' Sunday magazines and short stories for children's magazines. The short fiction stories sold well.

"I guess it's an old cliche," she says, "but I have always wanted to write. I thought writers lived on Mt. Olympus with the other gods. Now I know they are just ordinary people."

Her children's books were mainly about animals and birds. The third one, "The Mystery of the Missing Pony," went out to 19 publishers and resulted in that many rejection slips before it was bought on the 20th try. "I guess we all go through rejection slips for a long time," she says, "but I was absolutely astonished at first."

Her first adult novel, "Findlay's Landing," was set in Washington state and was a romantic suspense novel. The second was "Song of Dark Water." Her favorite book was an occult suspense novel called "The Other Child."

"It was different and dealt with voodoo. I had fun with that," she says. The book sold 94,000 copies.

Chittenden was given a contract with Harlequin on the basis of an outline and sample chapters. Her first book with them, "This Dark Enchantment," will be out in March, written under the name Rosalind Carter — her own middle name and her married name. It was condensed in last November's issue of Good Housekeeping magazine, an issue that broke all sales records for the magazine, though she modestly disclaims responsibility.

Her second, "The Singing Trees," she calls "thicker, deeper and sexier than the usual Harlequin romances. But you have to know how far you can go with the sex scenes. Formerly they didn't get beyond a kiss but now they get into the bedroom. You tend to run out of words for these scenes, although tumult, passion and electric are frequently used. I try to think myself into my heroine's skin and I fall in love with every hero I ever create.

"Heroes used to be very macho and never kind to the heroine. They are still macho, but are more gentle now. All of mine have a sense of humor and are very rich and successful."

She follows a disciplined schedule of writing from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. five days a week. She takes great pleasure in writing. "It's a good excuse for not doing anything else," she grins.

Young producers establish organization

A new petroleum industry association was inaugurated with a "kick off party" at the Petroleum Club Wednesday evening. Known as Midland Producers Forum, the new group is loosely connected with the Permian Basin Petroleum Association.

No officers have been elected to head the new group. It has been guided by a steering committe of young oil men from the community.

Members of the committee are Cadell Liedtke, Lawrie Daniel, Russell Ramsland Jr., Robert Schumacher and Bruce Blakemore.

Speaking for the committee Liedtke told the gathering the organization will have three functions:

— It will be a social group giving young men and women in the industry an opportunity to meet with their peers.

— It will be an educational group bringing in speakers who can teach the ways of the petroleum business.

— And, it will be a political group, which will attempt to match the PBPA's lobbying effort.

"We'd like to put together a group of young producers in the industry to convey our message to our young counterparts in Washington," said Liedtke.

Arden Grover, president of the PBPA, welcomed the new group into the PBPA fold. "We've been waiting to see this organization get off the ground ...and we look forward to working with you."

Grover warned of the many political battles ahead for the petroleum industry and encouraged everyone to take an active role in the new orgainzation.

Well known Houston oilman Robert Mossbacher addressed the group.

The growth of the petroleum industry in the past ten years has been "just phenomenal," he said.

"It's been a boom time, and it's been an exciting time ... but we would be foolish not to realize that all good things come to and end."

Mossbacher predicted the level of industry activity will decline and then flatten out over the next three to four years.

The national rig count will drop from its recent record high level of nearly 4,600 to somewhere between 4,000 and 4,500, where it will likely remain stable for sometime to come.

The major single problem, Mossbacher said, is the price of oil is actually down while drilling and production costs are going up.

"We need to realize we are now netting closer to $30 a barrel where we netted close to $40 a barrel a couple of years ago."

Mossbacher urged the group to fight for decontrol of natural gas prices.

"It's going to take some Herculian lobbying efforts to see this gets though," he said.

It is likely, despite the industry's efforts, a "windfall profits tax" will be tacked on to any decontrol legislation passed by congress. Congressmen realize that for every natural gas producer there are many more consumers and the representatives will probably vote for the tax to placate user groups.

"Therefore, to be very realistic," Mossbacher said, "there's a strong chance there may well be a 'windfall profits tax.'"

The oilman predicted though that with a maximum effort there is a chance a decontrol bill could be passed without the taxing provisions.

Looking back over his own experience in the oil business, Mossbacher concluded his remarks saying, "The '80s have the potential of being a time of opportunity for the discerning oil man."

Commenting on the meeting, PBPA executive vice president Ed Thompson concluded, "I thought it was a pretty good first effort." Thompson predicted that as the organiztion grows and becomes more self-assured it will play an important role in the future of the oil and gas industry.

Pressure increased on Texas oil theives

By JACK KEEVER
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas independent oil and gas operators say often their own employees are the culprits in thefts totaling $100 million a year in crude oil and equipment.

"Dopers" seeking money to feed drug habits also are among the thieves that "will take anything left above ground in isolated" fields, says Tom Haywood of the North Texas Oil and Gas Association.

Haywood on Wednesday attributed part of the theft problem to industry growth that is so rapid employers do not have time to screen prospective employees.

Some employees are "in collusion," Haywood said, while others "turn their back at the right time, presumably for a price."

He and other independents told a news conference they would hire armed guards and special prosecutors to stop oil field losses that cost them $40 million last year, with losses by major companies accounting for at least another $60 million.

Spokesmen for more than 10,000 independents also said they would try to develop group theft insurance to protect operators they described as "risk-takers" that have "no way of covering their losses."

They announced the formation of Petroleum Industry Security Council, Inc., a statewide, non-profit organization, to direct the anti-theft effort.

Haywood said the council was considering hiring special rangers who could carry weapons, similar to agents employed by railroads and cattle raisers.

President L. Frank Pitts of the Texas Independent Producers & Royalty Owners Association and Gene Wright, chairman of TIPRO's task force on theft, pledged a "vigorous special prosecution program" to secure theft indictments and convictions.

Wright stressed that the security council would act in support of — not in place of — law enforcement agencies.

Among the council's first efforts will be a state hotline to receive tips on thefts — with rewards for tips leading to convictions, training seminars to reduce "in-house theft" and a standard marking system for oil field equipment.

The statewide program is an outgrowth of a hotline set up last August in Wichita Falls. Haywood said in six months tips from the hotline led to the recovery of $200,000 in oil field equipment. Also, he said, one person received a 10-year prison sentence for theft, eight people are under indictment and five parolees have had their paroles revoked for theft.

Involved in the organization of the security council are TIPRO, North Texas Oil and Gas, Permian Basin Petroleum Association, Panhandle Producers and Royalty Owners Association, West Central Texas Oil and Gas Association, Texas Mid-Continent Oil and Gas Association and the Association of Oilwell Serving Contractors.

"The more (thieves) we put behind bars," said Pitts, the more money will be saved for independents "to use for drilling for oil and gas."

Haywood said, however, despite huge industry losses, it is not a tax problem because stolen oil is usually transferred to tanks on other leases and those operators pay the state and federal tax.

Coke, Pecos get two wildcats

Operators in West Texas have planned two wildcats in Coke and Pecos counties.

COKE VENTURE

Mark IV Energy, San Antonio, will drill the No. 1 Cumbie Ivey, a 5,400-foot wildcat, three miles east-northeast of Robert Lee.

It is 467 feet from the north, and 2,173 feet from the east line of section 438, block 1-A, H&TC survey.

The site is approximately 3,000 feet northwest of Smith's No. 1 Smalley, a 4,738-foot project, dry and abandoned Dec. 23, 1955.

PECOS WILDCAT

The No. 1 Maud S "24" will be drilled 13 miles southeast of Fort Stockton by Arco Oil & Gas Co., Midland.

The scheduled 6,600-foot wildcat is 2,080 feet from the north, and 760 feet from the east line of section 24, block 135, T&STL survey.

It will be drilled in a relatively untested area.

Pickwick Players present 'Tar-Heel Tales'

A high energy zone will be created in Theatre II Saturday, as the Pickwick Players of Midland Community Theatre present their latest play — "The Tar-Heel Tales." Performance times are slated for 3 and 7:30 p.m.

The cast of seven features Ken Barragen, John Dennet, Ingrid Font, Dee Ann Jones, Paul Kowert, Beth Stanley and Laura Wolf. The production is directed by Elizabeth and Michael Spicer, theater school directors.

These productions are being done prior to the Pickwick's performance of the play for the Texas Non-profit Theatre Association Conference in February at Temple. They could be called sneak previews.

The play deals with the folk tales of North Carolina, presented in story and song by the Pickwicks. It features four tales, two about Jack, one about "Old Dry Fry," plus "The Wicked John and the Devil."

Tuesday's run-through went smoothly with few lines dropped. As was true during the previous run-throughs, the play takes 51 minutes. The time is important because the production must fit into an hour.

There are still some rough spots that need to be worked out.

The play's action runs, almost literally, from start to finish, leaving the viewer, at times, with the feeling that he has to catch his breath. In most cases, this is the way it's meant to be, but in some it's not.

The individual thespians don't quite have their timing down to not walk on another's line and to take full value of each laugh. Of course, until the production is presented before a live audience it is impossible to really know which lines will get a laugh and which won't.

These are not unusual problems to be having at this point in a production.

One of the nice features of the show is that the participants play people for the most part and not animals. However, the play does not seem to involve much character development, or at least not any in depth. It does contain humor. Several of the tales have a moral which is plainly visible without explanation. One seems to be just for fun with another having a possible lesson or two thrown into it. Maybe.

There is no set. The play was originally designed to be presented on tour in junior high and high school classrooms. The production thus requires a certain amount of pantomime because, for the most part, the props are imaginary.

Millions more can file shorter tax Form 1040A

EDITOR'S NOTE — This is the second in a series of articles written to help taxpayers prepare their 1981 income tax returns. This article deals with the question of which forms to use.

By JIM LUTHER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — About 40 percent of all couples and individuals take the relatively easy approach to taxpaying by filing the shorter, simpler Form 1040A. This year the option is available to millions more.

A taxpayer with income less than $50,000 after exemptions and deductions are subtracted may now file 1040A if certain conditions are met. In the past, only single people with total income under $20,000 and couples under $40,000 could use the shorter form.

If you choose 1040A you won't be able to itemize deductions, claim such adjustments as moving expenses or take such benefits as the energy conservation credit.

You'll have to fill out the more-complicated Form 1040 if, for example, in 1981 you had capital gains from the sale of property or paid or received alimony or income from bartering or self-employment.

In addition, several special circumstances require those with lower incomes to use the longer form. In most cases, you must use 1040 if your spouse files a separate return and itemizes deductions, or if you can be claimed as a dependent on your parents' return and had taxable interest, dividends or other "unearned" income of $1,000 or more.

Use 1040A if you can do it without losing money. It is two short pages and you fill in only the first unless you had 1981 income from interest or dividends. Except for your W-2 form (which your employer provides) there are no other papers to attach unless you received unemployment compensation during the year.

By contrast, Form 1040 is two lengthy pages totaling 66 numbered lines. If you itemize deductions, you must attach Schedule A. Interest or dividends above $400 require Schedule B. Claiming an adjustment for moving expenses calls for Form 3903; employee business expenses, Form 2106; child-care expenses, Form 2441.

Nevertheless, don't be scared away from the long form if you need it to take advantage of all the tax breaks you're due. The Internal Revenue Service mails to all taxpayers thorough instructions for completing the form, and the IRS has one or more toll-free telephone numbers in each state to handle your questions.

Even if you owe no tax, you must file a return if:

—You were single, legally separated, divorced or married with a dependent child and living apart from your spouse for all the year and had income of at least $3,300, if you're under 65, or at least $4,300, if you're 65 or over.

—You were living with your spouse at the end of the year, file a joint return and both spouses were under 65 and had income of at least $5,400; if one spouse was 65 or older and the couple had income of $6,400 or more, or if both were 65 or over and income totaled at least $7,400.

—You were married and file a separate return or were not living with your spouse at year's end and you had income of $1,000 or more.

—You could be claimed as a dependent by your parents and had taxable "unearned" income such as interest or dividends of at least $1,000.

—Your spouse died in 1979 or 1980, you did not remarry before the end of 1981, you have a dependent child, you meet certain tests and your income was at least $4,400, for those under 65, or $5,400, for those 65 or older.

War in El Salvador has turned city into ghost town

By SOLL SUSSMAN
Associated Press Writer

SUCHITOTO, El Salvador (AP) — War has torn at the heart of Suchitoto, once a throbbing and flourishing little city, but it hasn't killed it.

A group of determined citizens is struggling to keep it alive amid gunfire, sabotage, an influx of impoverished refugees and great odds.

Most of Suchitoto's permanent residents are gone. So are the tourists who use to come to view the quaint buildings and homes erected around the time this was El Salvador's capital for a brief period around 1821. Its chief economic lifeline — farm produce — is severed.

At the lake, where the residents and tourists swam and picnicked before, only the wind ripples the water. The lake is a war zone now and no one dares go there.

The Guazapo volcano that looks down on Suchitoto belongs to the leftist guerrillas fighting to unseat the military-civilian junta in San Salvador, the current capital 20 miles to the south.

THE CITY belongs to the junta's army, or so the army claims.

The war came to Suchitoto in January 1981.

"It was impossible to stop the exodus," said Alejandro Coto, a civic booster who is among those trying to keep the place from dying.

Only about 3,000 of the estimated 15,000 permanent residents are still here. The houses of those who left have been occupied by renters or squatters from the surrounding rural areas, turning the city into a silent and ghostly refugee camp.

Coto decided to stay here in his house with extensive gardens on a bluff at the edge of the city. Some say Coto's decision was the key that prevented a complete migration — and perhaps Suchitoto's death.

"The guerrillas behaved sadistically, but the others (rightists) did so too," Coto told a visitor recently in his gardens. Scores were killed here in the turmoil.

The exodus reached 30 families a day a year ago after the guerrillas launched a nationwide offensive, Coto said, and an average of one family still leaves each day.

BECAUSE "THIS place had class," Coto calls Suchitoto the most dramatic example of the upheaval that has prompted hundreds of thousands of Salvadorans to relocate or leave the country since the leftist-rightist strife began in 1979.

The first signs of abandonment and isolation appear long before you reach Suchitoto. You can see them along the winding, rutted, dirt-road detour that has been the only access to Suchitoto from the capital since Oct. 27, when guerrillas blew up the bridge three miles from town.

When the detour rejoins the main highway, the only rural houses visible from the road are empty, their inhabitants gone to fight on the side of the guerrillas or to seek safety in the city.

UTPB offers certified water safety courses

ODESSA — Two certified water safety courses will be offered this spring at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin through the Office of Continuing Education.

"Advanced Lifesaving" and "Water Safety Instructor" will be taught by Don Davis, UTPB physical education instructor. One or both courses can be taken.

Registration for the offerings will be from 6 to 7:30 p.m. Monday in the UTPB gym, room 301. Fee for each course is $15, plus cost of books.

"The lifesaving course will cover techniques of saving lives in water situations, reacting to the environment and variables involved and familiarizing students with various lifesaving instruments," Davis said. Students will be certified lifeguards after successfully passing written and practical exams, Davis said.

The water safety instructor course is designed to prepare swimming instructors through Red Cross training, using techniques such as CPR and adaptive aquatics (teaching swimming to the handicapped). "Although one or both classes can be taken, the lifesaving course is a prerequisite to the water safety instructor course," Davis said.

The classes will meet at 6 to 9 p.m. Mondays and Wednesdays. The advanced lifesaving course will be taught for the first month, to be followed immediately by the water safety instructor course.

McNicol to perform recital

Midland Music Teachers Association will present Patricia Burke McNicol in a benefit recital for the Wallace Wimberly Scholarship Fund at 2:30 p.m. Sunday in the Allison Fine Arts auditorium at Midland College.

Mrs. McNicol, a native Midlander, began her piano studies with Elizabeth Roweck. She graduated from Midland High School with honors and received the first Wallace Wimberley scholarship from the MMTA. She received her education at Texas Tech University and The University of Texas at Austin, studying piano with Thomas Mastroianni and David Renner. Mrs. McNicol is a member of Austin Music Teachers Association and American College of Musicians.

Each year MMTA offers a scholarship to a student of a member teacher who plans to major in music with a keyboard instrument emphasis. The scholarship was established in 1967 as a memorial to the late Wallace Wimberley, a charter member of MMTA.

Those interested in contributing to this fund may write Mrs. Wayne Matthews, 2513 Harvard St., Midland, 79701.

MC to show two art exhibits

Opening Sunday at Midland College are two art exhibits, both being shown in the McCormick Gallery at the Allison Fine Arts Building.

One is the national touring exhibit from the Texas Fine Arts Council show and the other is a special showing of works by former Midlander Candace Burnside.

Ms. Burnside will be honored at a reception in the McCormick Gallery Sunday from 2 to 4 p.m. The public is invited to attend at no charge.

A 1972 graduate of Midland High School, Ms. Burnside is currently assistant professor of art at Wayland Baptist University in Plainview. Her exhibit at MC will include about 25 works in acrylics, watercolors, conte pencil and pen and ink.

The Texas Fine Arts show includes 20 works from the competition juried by Henry Hopkins of the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art. There were more than 2,100 entries for the judging, with just 90 works chosen for the show.
