MIDDLETON DRAWS 99-YEAR TERM

Bigger Navy Program Due For Show-Down In Senate Today

OPPOSITION TO CRUISER BILL FACES DEFEAT

Unless Senators Talk Too Long, Measure Will Pass Monday

TUESDAY FINAL DAY

Coolidge Wishes to Spend $12,000,000 at Once For Six Big Ships

By FRASER EDWARDS
Universal Service Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Feb. 3—Driven full steam ahead in the senate by a sturdy American crew, the administration's naval building program, which will enable the United States to approach parity in cruiser strength with Great Britain, neared a show-down today.

With limitation of debate agreed upon, the vote on the cruiser bill probably will be taken Monday. If senators are full of talk, however, it is possible to delay the final roll call until Tuesday.

Passage Assured

There is no question about the passage of the bill by a substantial majority. The only cloud that "Admiral" Hale, chairman of the senate naval affairs committee, can see as he scans the senatorial skies is the opposition to the three-year construction clause, and that is no bigger than a man's hand.

Unless a large bloc of senators do the unexpected and change over night, the provision for the beginning of construction of the 15 cruisers and one airplane carrier will be written into the bill by a substantial majority.

There is a general understanding on Capitol Hill that President Coolidge will recommend an appropriation of $12,000,000 to begin construction of six cruisers at once.

Borah Has Amendment

The only amendment likely to be attached to the bill is the one proposed by Senator Borah of Idaho, chairman of the foreign relations committee. It requests the president to call a conference prior to the arms limitation conference, scheduled for 1931, to recodify the rules for the rights of belligerents and neutrals on the high seas during war.

Although the president has frowned on any such conference, Senator Hale has virtually accepted the Borah proposal, as a sop to the "little navy" group which dwell in the hinterland. But no other vital change in the bill is expected.

Senator Borah would like to see the number of cruisers cut from 15 to 10, but there is slight chance that he will be gratified.

DEATH CLAIMS WAR HEROINE

Countess de Merode Dies At Phoenix, Ariz.

PHOENIX, Ariz., Feb. 3 (AP)—Countess de Merode of Belgium, 43, who received decorations from Belgium, France and England for her war service, and had been active in scientific work in this country, died here yesterday.

It was by a twist of fate that Mrs. Charles E. Waterhouse, as she was known here, died of injuries received last October when she was struck by a youth on a bicycle.

During the war, as a first lieutenant commanding a field hospital near Ypres, she was gassed twice, her back was broken in a shell explosion and one half of her face was torn away, and then restored by plastic surgery. Her husband had been killed the day they entered service.

Mrs. Waterhouse was a direct descendant of the deposed Queen Sofia of Rumania, and had been given the title of Lady Neda by King George of England. She served as a diagnostician and dietician under Dr. Royal Copeland in New York, after the war until 1924, when she went to Los Angeles and became active in medical and other scientific work. She married Charles E. Waterhouse in Los Angeles.

She twice was kidnaped by Rumanian political conspirators in this country in the hope that she would take an active part in the political affairs of her native land.

Fifth Anniversary of Wilson's Death Marked by Single Jonquil Wreath

WASHINGTON, Feb. 3. (UP)—A single wreath of yellow jonquils, unmarked, arrived at Washington Cathedral today to be placed on the tomb of Woodrow Wilson, war time president of the United States, on the fifth anniversary of his death.

That wreath was the only evidence that anyone had remembered the man, whom the world acclaimed a brief, few years before.

Widow Visits Tomb

Earlier in the day, two persons stood with bowed heads for a few minutes before the twisted bronze railing of the tomb. They were Mrs. Wilson and her brother.

According to the attendant in Bethlehem chapel where the Wilson tomb rests opposite to that of Admiral Dewey, no others appeared to pay homage to the memory of the man who guided the destines of this nation through the troublesome world war days.

On Feb. 3, 1924, the news of Woodrow Wilson's death was flashed around the world. Glittering tributes poured in from many foreign lands and from all sections of America.

As twenty-eighth president of the United States, Woodrow Wilson was a popular and important personage. Even during the short months as an invalid, prior to his death, he was cheered and acclaimed where ever he went. Crowds flocked to his house on S street. Tourists in the "rubber neck" wagons gazed with reverence and awe at the house where the invalid ex-president rested.

Today only a few sight-seers read with indifferent eyes the plain inscription of the stone tomb:

"Woodrow Wilson, December 28, 1856, February 3, 1924."

Even the yellow jonquil wreath had not been placed on the tomb. It lay on a table in an ante-room. Attached was a florist's card reading:

"For Woodrow Wilson's tomb, Washington Cathedral."

There was no name and no indication of the identity of the sender.

Above the tomb on bronze shafts floated the first battle flag carried by American troops in France during the world war. Flanking it on both sides were Woodrow Wilson's two personal presidential flags.

A few potted plants formed an evergreen row before the cold stone. Resting on top of the tomb were a half-dozen permanent wreaths that had been there for several years. One of these bore the star and colors of the American legion.

But there were no fresh flowers, no recent tributes to the man, whom many regard as one of the greatest presidents.

NEW SPANISH REBEL THREAT IS CONQUERED

Valencia Garrison Center Of Latest Outbreak To Oust De Reviera

WIDESPREAD SCHEME

Premier and King Confer On Needed Action To Quell Reactionaries

VALENCIA, Spain, Feb. 3 (UP)—The second revolutionary movement within the last week broke out here early today when part of the military garrison revolted and attempted to liberate Sanchez Guerra, former prime minister, who was arrested here last Thursday in connection with the Ciudad Real uprising and a nationwide revolt scheme.

Loyal troops intervened and the revolt was quickly suppressed. General Sanjurjo arrived by airplane from Madrid a few hours later and took charge of the situation. He ordered the arrest of the captain-general of the Valencia region. The captain-general will be taken to Madrid.

Martial Law in Effect

General Sanjurjo was empowered by the government to take over control of all military and civil buildings and to administer all affairs here.

Severe measures will be taken, it is said, with those responsible for the uprising, which strengthened the belief that there was a widespread scheme for revolt throughout the nation. Drastic measures have been inaugurated for preservation of peace.

The government announced that only a small part of the garrison was involved in the outbreak.

PREMIER CONFERS WITH ALFONSO

MADRID, Feb. 3 (UP)—An official communique issued today said General Sanjurjo had restored order at Valencia, where a small part of the garrison revolted early today, and that "severe measures" would be taken against the rebels.

After a lengthy conference with King Alfonso at the royal palace this morning, Primo de Rivera, premier, said the king signed a number of important decrees, involving the revolt leaders and the press.

They included decrees providing for creation of a special tribunal to deal with the leaders of the revolt; for utilization of patriotic organizations as guards of the welfare of the government and to report on any signs of disturbance; and that each newspaper must put one-sixteenth of its space at the disposal of the government.

"ATMOSPHERE" GIVES GREATEST WORRY

MADRID, Feb. 3 (AP)—The situation at Valencia is not causing the Spanish government undue alarm, Premier Primo de Rivera told the Associated Press this afternoon. The premier said he was more concerned with the "atmosphere" there than he was with incidents themselves. He added that by permitting the malcontents to conspire to their heart's content and do all possible damage the situation will be cleared.

Lindy Hinted As Air Chief On Eve Of Panama Hop

Lone Eagle Reported Slated for Aviation Job in Next Cabinet; Lunches With President-Elect

By EDWARD L. RODDAN
Universal Service Correspondent

BELLE ISLE, MIAMI BEACH, Fla., Feb. 3.—The belief that Col. Charles A. Lindbergh may be appointed "air" secretary of commerce by President-elect Hoover gained ground tonight.

The ace of flyers, who hops off tomorrow on a three day flight to Panama was a luncheon guest of Mr. and Mrs. Hoover today following which considerable time was devoted to a discussion of the future of aviation.

After their extended conference, Lindbergh said he had no information to give out on the possibility of his appointment to Mr. Hoover's "air" cabinet.

Would Help Aviation

His selection for that post, however, would prove a tremendous boon to the development of civil aeronautics, and the belief is here that the president-elect would be glad to make use of his talents and ability. It was pointed out also that the flying colonel would be able to accomplish much more for the future of aviation in that post than he would be by continuing in his present connections.

The present secretary of commerce for air is William P. MacCracken Jr., of Chicago. The other members of the "air" cabinet are Assistant Secretary Trubee Davison, of war and Assistant Secretary Edward P. Warner, of the navy.

On his 27th birthday tomorrow the ace of fliers will hop off from Miami on another epoch making flight to chart the proposed 2,000 mile air mail flight to Panama, the longest in the world.

Route Attracts Hoover

Mr. Hoover is especially interested in the development of this line which may be extended eventually to the countries of South America. The president-elect believes that the opening of aerial communications between the two continents will prove a long step forward in his program for promoting better trade relations.

Another of his guests was John Hays Hammond, the noted mining engineer, who took occasion to say following the luncheon that he expected no cabinet appointment and would refuse one if tendered to him.

Colonel Lindbergh took President-elect Hoover's luncheon guests for an air ride today in the giant Sikorsky amphibian he will fly to Panama.

His passengers included John Hays Hammond, the engineer, Mrs. Alvin T. Hert, vice-chairman of the Republican national committee, Mrs. Henry Rae of Pittsburgh, Thomas T. C. Gregory, of Palo Alto, California and C. W. Beeching.

Mr. and Mrs. Hoover were interested spectators as the craft left the waters of Biscayne bay directly in front of their temporary home. Hundreds of sightseers on excursion boats nearby also viewed Lindbergh's perfect take-off.

SISTER FAILS TO SAVE CO-ED

Despairing Student Plunges To Her Death

NEW YORK, Feb. 3 (US)—Two sisters locked themselves in a life-or-death struggle today on the fifteenth floor of the Medical Arts building.

Screams—then the body of a young woman hurtling through the air. It was ended.

Esther Glasser, 27, a student at Hunter college, found the quick death she had sought for several weeks. Her sister, Leah, collapsed after the futile effort to save her.

Miss Glasser lived with her parents. She was studying to become a high school teacher.

Changed Colleges

Until six months ago she attended New York university, but suffered a nervous breakdown from overstudy. She then changed to Hunter college. While there she was sent to Medical Arts sanitarium, on the advice of physicians, but remained only two days.

The family decided on a course of treatment at Stamford Hall sanitarium, Stamford, Conn. There the girl slashed her arm and after the wound had partly healed, opened and poured ink into it, at the same time drinking turpentine.

On Saturday she was brought back to New York and taken again to the Medical Arts sanitarium, where she was placed under the care of Dr. Browning.

Protests Being Left

She protested against being left there and members of the family remained with her until midnight. A nurse was instructed not to leave her alone at any time. She made such objections when her mother and sisters were departing that Leah offered to spend the night with her.

Shortly before 3 o'clock this morning the patient complained of severe pains and the nurse left the room to get medicine, leaving the sister on guard.

Miss Glasser jumped from her bed and started for the window. Leah seized her and screamed for help. She was quickly thrown aside and her sister made the fatal leap.

LOVE TRIUMPHS OVER MONEY

Mrs. Vanderbilt Expected To Wed Prince

By GEORGE W. HINMAN, Jr.
(Copyright, 1929, by Universal Service)

PARIS, Feb. 3 — The ancient adage that love will find a way has again found justification—this time in the international romance of Mrs. Reginald C. Vanderbilt, the former Gloria Morgan, and Prince Hohenlohe of Langenburg, of ancient German family.

In spite of obstacles placed in their path by a material minded modern world which counts romance in dollars—or marks—announcement of the engagement of Mrs. Vanderbilt and Prince Hohenlohe may be expected soon.

A sudden turn in their romance was revealed at a midweek dinner at the fashionable La Poularde, given by Mrs. Vanderbilt with Prince Hohenlohe as the guest of honor. Other guests included Philip M. Plant, Mr. and Mrs. Erskine Gwynne and Count Oppersdorff, an intimate friend of the prince.

While the guests came believing that as a result of financial obstacles the marriage was out of the question, all left convinced that everything is arranged and that the formal announcement of the engagement will soon follow.

This means a victory for the couple over Prince Hohenlohe's family, who have opposed the marriage largely on account of the fact that Mrs. Vanderbilt does not bring a fortune in her own right.

The impression is that Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, who is Gloria's mother-in-law, has effected an arrangement by which her daughter-in-law will be guaranteed an adequate income in her own right after marriage.

This arrangement would eliminate the difficulty arising from the fact that Reginald left the bulk of his property in trust with his widow's share largely contingent.

Meanwhile Gloria's little daughter is making her home with Grandmother Vanderbilt, and it is understood that she will continue to live there after her mother's marriage.

Mother and Daughter Praise Vegetable Compound

Johnson City, N. Y.—"My daughter was only 20 years old, but for two years she worked in misery. She was all run-down, nervous, had aches and pains and no appetite. I was taking Lydia E. I cannot praise your medicine too highly. It is wonderful for mothers and for daughters. It's surely 'a friend in need.'"—Mrs. L. E. Hall, 223 Floral Avenue, Johnson City, N. Y.

Women Would Be Spared a Lot Of Fretting if They Knew Their Plight

"What a Pity That Women Can't Understand That They Can't Have Their Cake and Eat It, Too," Cries Dorothy Dix—"It Would Save Them From Such Awful Mental and Moral Indigestion."

The trouble with women is that they want to eat their cake and have it, too. Sometimes men can accomplish this gastronomic feat, but women—never!

With them it must always be a decision between two things, and whichever one they choose they generally wish they had taken the other. And, anyway, they are not satisfied with one. They crave both.

Take, as an example of this, the matter of men's attitude toward women. For years and years women fought for equal right with men. They demanded the right to run for office against men and beat them if they could. They demanded the right to compete with men in business. The demanded the right to go everywhere that men went, to do everything men did, and to stand on the same platform with men.

Finally, as a result of a 50 years' war, they won the right to be treated as men, but are they content with their victory? I am telling you they are not. They howl to Heaven that chivalry is dead, and that they have to stand in street cars, and fight their own way in crowds, and that when they got the right to earn their own bread and butter their fathers and brothers, and sometimes their husbands, stood back and let them do it.

This wasn't what they meant nor what they wanted. Not by a jug full. What they desired were the privileges of a man annexed to the perquisites of a woman. They wanted a place in the counting room, but it was to be also a drawing room where men would pick up their handkerchiefs and make them flowery speeches, and not expect them to punch the time clock, and deliver a good job of work, and submit to discipline just as if they wore trousers instead of skirts.

Every woman who works wants the pay of a man, but there are mighty few of them who want to be treated as a man anywhere except at the cashier's window. They cannot help feeling that they should not have to work as hard as a man, and that they should not be expected to be as accurate as a man, nor to be bawled out as a man would be if he made mistakes, and that they are entitled to stay at home if they have been out too late at a party the night before. In a word, they want their rights and their privileges, too.

Still another example of women wanting to have their cake and eat it, too, we see illustrated in those hopeful souls who try to hold on to a husband with one hand and a career with the other. The country is full of ambitious and talented young women who have spent years fitting themselves for some particular line of work in which they delight, and in which they are winning success.

But a profession, no matter how interesting and congenial it may be, no more fills every need of a woman's life than it does a man's. She longs for warm, human contacts. She yearns to love and be loved. She desires he rown home, her own man, her own children.

Now a man may have these as an annex to his other blessings. He does not have to decide whether he will go on with his profession or get married. He can do both. More than that, a wife and children are not a handicap to him. They are an inspiration, a help. They incite him to put forth his best efforts and make the most of every power that he possesses.

It is a tragedy of being a woman, however, that she cannot have her wedding cake and eat it, too, as a man can. When she marries she has to decide which one of her two professions she is going to make a success.

No woman can keep the home fires burning properly, no woman can mold the characters of her children, and form their manners and their morals if she is away from home all day practicing medicine, or law, or if she is careering around the country singing, or acting, or lecturing. No woman can toil all day in a store or office and give her interest, her enthusiasm, her energy to her job, and have anything left except nerves, and weariness, and temper for her family when she comes home at night.

Being a wife and mother, and making a home that is a place of comfort, and peace, and rest, is a career in itself. It is a job so big that it takes all of the strength and intelligence that any woman possesses to fill it, and to expect her to do that and to be successful in some outside occupation is as ridiculous as it would be to expect a man to be a judge, or a surgeon, or a banker, and a carpenter, and a bricklayer, and an aviator, and a prize fighter all at the same time.

Yet the great majority of women who are called upon to make the choice between marriage and careers are never satisfied, no matter which way they decide. If they stick to their jobs they are always pining for love, and if they marry they never cease lamenting the professions they gave up.

It is women's desire to have their cake and eat it, too, that makes them fail so often as mothers. They want children, and they want their children to grow up into fine men and women, but they also want to spend their time amusing themselves.

They try to raise a family with one hand and play bridge with the other, so to speak, and it is because this can't be done, because no woman can simultaneously be at home hearing her children's bed-time prayers, and in a night club doing the Charleston, that there are so many peevish, fretful mothers whining over how children tie you down, and so many hoodlum youngsters whose mothers can't do a thing with them.

It is because women want to have their cake and eat it, too, that they do such asinine things about money, and are apparently incapable of distinguishing between capital and interest. They have a horror of being left poor and dependent in their old age, but they can't resist gobbling down almost at a mouthful the whole of the fortune their fathers or husbands leave them.

What a pity that women can't understand that they can't have their cake and eat it, too. It would save them from such awful mental and moral indigestion, and from so many years of spiritual starvation. —DOROTHY DIX.

Mrs. McCormick Loses Plea to Be Conservator

CHICAGO, Feb. 3 (US)—Judge Henry Horner refused to make Mrs. Katherine Dexter McCormick conservator of the body of Stanley McCormick of Santa Barbara, Calif., for want of jurisdiction.

Recently Judge Horner did name a board of conservators for the $35,000,000 estate when McCormick's immediate relatives resented Mrs. McCormick's alleged attempts to control his interests which were closely linked with those of the family. Those named at that time were Mrs. McCormick, Harold McCormick and the Continental Illinois bank.

Piles Now Cured Without Surgery

The old theory that surgery was the only method by which hemorrhoids (piles) could be successfully cured has been wholly disproved. This treacherous affliction which slowly but surely undermines the health of its victims, if taken in time, can be successfully treated without recourse to surgical aid. All this is fully explained in a new book, fully illustrated and copyrighted, just published by the noted rectal specialist, Dr. McCleary, C-541 Elms Blvd., Excelsior Springs, Mo. It describes in detail the mild McCleary treatments by which more than 15,000 persons living in all parts of the United States have been cured. If you or any of your relatives or friends suffer from piles or rectal trouble in any form, write today for this free book and their list of cured patients in your community. They will be sent in plain wrapper, postpaid.—Adv.

remove the Film on teeth

It is the chief source of "off-color" teeth—of decay, pyorrhea.

The Film that turns white teeth "off color"

SCIENCE has made a significant discovery. The cause of dull discolored teeth is found to be the chief cause of serious tooth and gum disorders. That cause is a film that forms on teeth.

You can feel film with your tongue—a slippery, viscous coating. It clings to teeth and gets into crevices and stays. It absorbs stains from food and smoking to turn white teeth "off color" and cloud their brilliance. Germs by the millions breed in it, and they, plus tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea.

To remove film dentists prescribe the special film-removing dentifrice called Pepsodent. It acts to curdle film so that brushing easily removes it.

Start today. Get Pepsodent at any drug counter or write for free 10-day supply to The Pepsodent Co., 1104 S. Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

THE SAFETY OF THE NEW FORD

SAFETY, comfort, reliability, economy, speed, acceleration, beauty—these are the features that make the new Ford such a good value. Of all, there is none more important than SAFETY.

The safety of the new Ford comes not only from its efficient brakes, but from many other factors. Among these are ease of steering and control, the Triplex shatter-proof glass windshield, and the sturdy, balanced construction of the car. This includes the enduring quality of mechanical parts as well as the structural strength of the body.

A particularly interesting feature of the Ford car is the manner in which electric welding has been carried forward to new usefulness through the creation and development of hundreds of special machines.

Electric welding gives simplicity and strength

This very important and increasingly valuable tool of modern manufacturing makes it possible to use one-piece units instead of several parts riveted or bolted together, with resulting gain in strength and simplicity.

Electric welding also permits the use of steel forgings instead of castings or stampings, without increase in weight or greatly increased cost.

Steel forgings are used not only in the front axle, steering gear, transmission, clutch, drive shaft and rear axle housing of the new Ford, but in the shock absorber parts, the emergency brake lever, the torque tube flange and everywhere else where great strength is required. The strength of forgings makes for unusual safety.

Another safety factor worth noting is the manner in which the new Ford holds the road at all speeds. This is due to the low center of gravity, the carefully planned balance or distribution of structural and mechanical weight, and the low ratio of unsprung weight to sprung weight. The coordinated action of the transverse springs and Houdaille hydraulic shock absorbers controls exaggerated bouncing.

Beauty and utility are combined in unusual degree in the new Ford. Shown here is the Ford Coupe—an especially good car for the woman driver because it is so safe and reliable and easy to control.

All six brakes are fully enclosed

One of the outstanding features of the new Ford, of course, is its mechanical, internal-expanding six-brake system. This is unusually reliable and effective because the surfaces of all six brakes are fully enclosed. There is no possibility of water, dirt or oil interfering with brake action under any condition.

The silence of these brakes is another thing you will appreciate. Screeching and groaning have been eliminated by a special self-centering action—an exclusive Ford development which brings the entire surface of the brake shoe in uniform contact with the drum the instant you press your foot on the pedal.

The value of the protection afforded by the Triplex shatter-proof glass windshield of the new Ford is shown by a recent survey indicating that 65% of injuries in automobile accidents are due to flying glass. The windshield in the new Ford is so made that it will not shatter under the hardest impact. Particularly where there are women and children, it is an important safety factor.

Ease of steering and control are additional factors in the safety of the new Ford. The steering gear is what is known technically as three-quarter irreversible. This means that the bumps and jolts of the road are fully absorbed by the wheels and steering mechanism of the car and are not transmitted to the hands of the driver. A slight touch is sufficient to guide the car. Yet you always have that necessary feel-of-the-road.

The ease of shifting gears, quick acceleration, abundant power and speed for every emergency, and full vision front, side and back, are other points to remember in considering the unusual safety of the new Ford.

A $20 ROCK PILE

Daily Editorial

FIFTH AVENUE, between 48th and 51st street, is haunted with ghosts.

Dutch burghers and colonials, in knee breeches and perukes, stroll through the walls of brick and granite, and gather in excited, gossiping knots, examining the sites of the opera center, which John D. Rockefeller proposes to erect.

A century ago, these same three blocks were rentable at $125. Mr. Rockefeller pays Columbia university $3,000,000 annually, or a sum total of $260,000,000 before the lease expires.

Small wonder that Old New York has waked from the grave to verify the news, and shake bewildered heads at its mad descendants.

And yet, considering local realty values at the time, the traders who bought Manhattan island for $20 didn't drive an especially slick deal.

They could hardly have chosen a less propitious location for the world's greatest metropolis, than a rock pile surrounded by marshes.

The very nature of the terrain limited its drinking-water supply.

There was a minimum of arable soil.

The early settlers, with their port flung wide to the plagues and diseases of the universe, were constantly decimated by yellow jack, bubonic and smallpox epidemics.

Appalling conflagrations again and again wiped out business and residental districts. Adjacent larders soon proved insufficient for the expanding population.

But the handicaps which the community was compelled to meet bred imagination, doggedness, enterprise—became whetstones on which wits were edged and initiative sharpened.

NECESSITY seized New York by the scruff of the neck and forced its people to think and dare, or yield place to more favorably situated townships.

Necessity has been Father Knickerbocker's schoolmaster, subway designer, skyscraper builder and efficiency expert.

No city ever had or now faces comparable problems in housing, in transportation, in traffic regulation, in crime and health control, in sanitation, or in self-financing.

Never before was gathered in one spot such a polyglot multitude to be wrought into an effective and harmonious citizen body.

Never before did so many folk insist upon concentrating their wealth and energies in so small an area.

And never before were all these challenges as successfully met.

In 1821, when Columbia's "Upper Estate" was within purchase reach of half the readers of this article, the editor of Niles' Register pontifically declared that no further opportunity existed in America, and warned land investors not to speculate at current inflated prices.

Your grandchildren will live to marvel how Mr. Rockefeller was able to snatch such a bargain under the shrewd eyes of his contemporaries.

The Frontier Spirit

WE LIKE to say that we have left the frontier a long way behind us. Our grandfathers, living in isolated wilderness settlements, used to have to battle mightily every winter with snow, cold and loneliness, but we have a habit of saying that all of that sort of thing is buried in the past. Automobiles, telephones, good roads and a rapidly increasing population—so they tell us—have set us free.

Maybe so. But there are still plenty of places in the United States where a winter blizzard calls for just as much fortitude, endurance and bravery as it did two generations ago. The frontier, at times, is nearer than we think.

A terrific snowstorm struck the northwest recently. In Idaho the drifts were 10 feet deep. Roads were impassable; a high wind and bitter cold added to the difficulties of dwellers in lonely ranches.

At the height of the storm the daughter of a stockman was stricken with acute appendicitis. The nearest surgeon was 30 miles away, at the town of Cottonwood.

The father put his daughter in a covered sleigh and started out. All day they fought the blizzard. By night they had made so little headway that they had to turn back.

Somehow they got word to some neighbors. The next morning a handful of cowboys appeared. Driving their animals ahead of the sleigh, the cowboys plunged to their necks in the drifted snow to break a path for the sleigh. Throughout the day they kept at it. The sleigh moved forward by inches. Men and horses forced themselves to keep at it to the limit of their endurance. Bravely and painfully they made their way over the long 30-mile stretch of blocked roads to the town of Cottonwood.

Finally, late at night, they passed the last of the drifts and reached the town. The girl was operated on and the surgeon said she would recover.

That sort of thing used to be commonplace in America. In the old days every small town in the northern part of the country took such experiences as part of the regular winter routine.

Naturally, such conditions called for physical endurance and courage. No race of weaklings could survive in such circumstances. It is probably true that a good part of what we like to consider our typically American energy, fortitude and daring are the product of the rigorous training school of the old-fashioned winter.

Such things don't happen as often as they used to. They are the exception now, and not the rule. But it is comforting to see that when they do happen, people are still capable of meeting them. The ability to face cold, darkness and storm is one of our most valuable heritages. So long as we continue to possess it we can retain our old pride in our birthright. The dauntless Idaho cowboys have served us all. They have proved that the strain of the hard frontiersman is still strong.

Einstein's Poetry

TRYING to assimilate the ins and outs of Professor Einstein's latest theory is by no means the simplest diversion you could select for a quiet evening.

It starts out very harmlessly. Gravitation, magnetism and electricity are all different manifestations of the same force. This is new, but it isn't hard to grasp. You decide that if this is all there is to it, the intricacy of the whole thing has been vastly over-rated.

But that's only the beginning. There are implications, it seems, that follow; and they are no light mental exercise for anybody.

As a result of the new conception, says Einstein's most prominent disciple, we must revise our conception of the electron. The electron has no reality; it is simply a name for a disembodied force.

This, too, most of us can accept—chiefly because we have only the haziest conception what an electron is supposed to be.

But there is even more to it. What applies to the electron, it is said, applies also to everything in the universe. Sun, stars, moon, the earth—everything is unreal. These things only seem to be. They are shadows, non-existent and without genuine substance. The solid ground under our feet, the blazing sun in the sky overhead, are equally vague and hazy. The entire universe is something between a shadow-shape and a dream.

All of this, it is said, is implied in Einstein's new theory.

To most of us, probably, the whole thing sounds like sheer nonsense. Yet it is accepted by level-headed scientists; furthermore, it is not particularly new. This is the first time it has been put forward as a scientific theory; but, in all ages, poets and artists have voiced it as their greatest creed.

Shakespeare saw eye to eye with Einstein. But he put it more beautifully. In "The Tempest" we find this:

> . . . "the baseless fabric of this vision,
> The cloud-capped towers, the gorgeous palaces,
> The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
> Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve
> And, like this insubstantial pageant faded,
> Leave not a rack behind. We are such stuff
> As dreams are made on, and our little life
> Is rounded with a sleep."

What is that but the transfiguration of Einstein's higher mathematics into music? Poetry and logic, carried to their highest points, meet. The seer and the scientist see the same vision.

And what is that vision, again? Simply this: that the one reality, in a world of moving shadows, is the internal one. Only the soul stands sure. You, yourself, are more enduring and immortal than sun, stars or earth. They dissolve and vanish without trace. Reality lies within your heart.

This was Shakespeare's vision. Apparently Einstein, following science instead of poetry, reaches the same conclusion.

Handing It to Babe Ruth

FOR SOME reason, the tragic death of Mrs. "Babe" Ruth in Boston has given us a new sort of respect for the burly home run king.

This is a day when public figures wear their hearts on their sleeves and do their weeping and wailing in front of cameras and reporters. The Babe, famous and unsophisticated, could easily have been forgiven if he had indulged in a wealth of poses and flowery speeches for the newspapers.

But he didn't. Confronted unexpectedly with a great grief, he issued one simple statement—a dignified summary of the facts in the case—and then fled from the public eye. In a dozen words he defended his dead wife's memory and revealed his own loyalty, but he did not linger over it. His conduct has given us a new liking and admiration for him.

King Amanullah of Afghanistan couldn't make his people shave, but he had rather a close one himself.

Dr. Einstein says electro-magnetism and gravity are identical. He must have been watching people faw down and go boom.

Eight thousand Chicago bell boys have been asked to organize as a union branch to protect their tips. After they're through with that job the organizers might try teaching West Point graduates how to march.

SIDE GLANCES By George Clark

"First pretty day I'm going to run up and see a doctor about my cold."

The Day Book of a New Yorker

Broadway Chatter by Grant Dixon

NEW YORK, Feb. 3.—"All this talk about election frauds in and around New York reminds me of my first experience as a poll clerk," said the Old Timer. "I've served in New York since in the same capacity with less distinction, but with a lot more comfort.

"That first time was down in Texas in the Hancock-Garfield campaign. We were not so much interested in the presidential contest in Eagle Pass as we were in keeping the town under American control. The population was a little more than 50 per cent. Mexican in those days, and the Mexicans wanted the offices of sheriff, county clerk and justice of the peace. They put a ticket in the field that was liberally supported by Mexican storekeepers.

"The Americans, on the other hand, were determined to retain control, and Sheriff Hayes Yarrington had promises of support in keeping order from the ranchmen of Maverick county. He also had the support of the gamblers, who thrived on pickings from Fort Duncan, the government post adjoining the town, and from the 'Wet Horse' crowd, headed by Kingfisher and the Bruden brothers. Incidentally, the 'Wet Horse' traffic consisted of running animals stolen in Texas across the river and selling them in Mexico, and on the return trip stealing horses in Mexico for sale in Texas.

"Kingfisher was hated and feared by the Mexicans because he had found it necessary up to that time to kill about 30 of them. A Mexican sheriff, consequently, would have irritated him considerably. And he didn't like to be irritated by a Mexican.

"I had come into the town some months before from the Pruett & Nichols ranch in Uvalde county—a raw, green youngster—and was pressed into service as a poll clerk with instructions to have all illegal Mexican voters slapped into the calaboose as fast as they appeared. In pottering about the place I had become fairly familiar with the local Mexicans and was supposed to be able to spot all strangers.

"Well, the morning of election day passed off without disturbance. At noon I was excused to go and feed. Our polling place was on the bluff overlooking the river, and as I passed I saw a chalan—that is what the Mexicans called the ferryboat—loaded with Mexicans nearing the Texas shore.

"When I got back to the polling place all those Mexicans were lined up at our booth waiting to vote.

"There was only one thing to do and I did it. As fast as they came up for ballots I had them swear they were bona fide citizens of Texas, and as fast as they did that I had them arrested for perjury. There was a big row and a lot of threats made, but those Mexicans weren't quitters. They stuck to the last man. Only one resisted arrest, and he didn't last long. The calaboose was bulging with them in an hour or so.

"I was feeling pretty cocky over my work when suddenly Kingfisher and Wes and Charley Bruden galloped in.

"'What in hell does this mean?' says Wes, indignant.

"It means that all those greasers just drifted in from Piedras Negras to vote. I saw them coming. Now they're boarding on Maverick county."

"'You ornery fool!' Wes shouted back. 'Don't you know them is our voters?'

"'Bud,' said Charley Bruden, before I could answer, 'you sure done us dirt.' And his big .45 Colt flashed into view.

"Kingfisher saved my life. 'Wait a little,' he said, grabbing Bruden's hand. Then he turned to me. 'Didn't any of those greasers tell you they were sent up by us?'

"'They did not,' I said.

"'That let's him out, then,' said Kingfisher. 'How was he to know if you didn't send him word?'

"Right then and there I quit—resigned as poll clerk—and oozed out of that polling place.

"And as I passed the jail all those Mexicans were being turned out and herded down to the booth to vote American.

"That there were 700 more votes cast than there were people in Eagle Pass didn't make any difference. The American ticket was elected all right.

"Since then I've always thought this fraud in election stuff was a 50-50 game."

New York is so vast and impersonal that strange things can happen. And do. Two men in different branches of the same organization had been carrying on department transactions for several years by telephone, without ever meeting face to face. The occasion arose the other day and they met. Each looked upon the other as rather an old friend, all through the medium of the telephone.

"I had my own mental image of you," said one, "constructed from your telephone voice. I thought you must be fat and wear a mustache."

"And I had my own picture of you," said the other, who was neither fat nor mustached. "I imagined you as about 60 years old and rather skinny."

The man was about 35, and quite plump. They agreed to change the subject right there, and perhaps it was a pity they ever met at all.

"Now, I'm no Ted Shawn when it comes to sliding my puppies, and I realize that. However, I seemed to have gotten along O. K. Anyhow, I asked the baby if she'd give me the fifth dance, and she said she would. I guess she could not think up an excuse.

"Well, when it came time for the fifth dance I looked all over the place for her. Finally I found her hiding in an alcove.

"'Ah, isn't the pleasure of this dance mine?' I asked.

"'Yes,' she replied, sadly, 'all of it'."

The VICARION

The Astounding Story of an Invention Greater Than the Movies

Copyright by Gardner Hunting

By Gardner Hunting

Serialized by Ledger Syndicate

In the year 1935 Radley Brainard has invented the Vicarion, a device with which it is possible to re-create scenes out of the past. The invention is a sensational success, with all the theaters installing it in place of motion pictures. Complete films, Inc., which at that time controls all the improvements on the movies, faces ruin, but when Ferdinand Mortimer and Jerry Ballard, heads of the company, call on him, Brainard refuse to make terms.

Brainard's records of the past are contained in "bombs," which hold liquid air and while he is projecting one of the "bombs," which was unmarked, he sees a beautiful gossamer-clad girl, with whom he falls in love, although he is engaged to Phyllis Norman. During the first demonstration of the Vicarion, with Phyllis and her family looking on, a strange man staggers in the studio. He is unable to tell who he is and Brainard names him Van Winkle, and makes him his aide.

Brainard calls in the operator who made the unmarked record, but gains no information from him. He orders Van Winkle to investigate the making of the bomb. Brainard projects one of the three remaining bombs containing the woodland scene in which the girl with whom he is infatuated appears and decides the records were made by Jeffry Honer, a criminal whom he has employed. Honer dies of fright while listening to the voice of his dead brother which Brainard projects by means of the Vicarion and Honer's secret of the "bomb," which contains the "sunrise nymph" passes into the hands of Mortimer and Ballard.

"What did she do?"

"She met me in the doorway downstairs. I was starting for the airdrome. She shouted out her little sic semple tyrannis and drove a nasty little silver letter-opener about two inches into my arm. But I guess it will get well."

"Probably poisoned!" said Aunt Relief comfortingly. But she did not seem to think so.

Enemies

"Radley," said Phyllis, "I intended to warn you. I discovered that you have enemies heer in your offices."

He turned that look upon her again, and she stopped.

"I'm getting used to enemies," he returned uncuriously. "Do you think I don't know what is going on?"

"Did you know that woman had that knife in her hand?" demanded Miss Brainard.

"No," he admitted. "But I have an antidote for her sort."

"Jail?"

"Oh, no," he answered simply.

Relief Brainard started to say something, and stopped. Then she opened her mouth again—and uttered no sound. Then she shivered. Suddenly she cried out at him.

"You're a fiend!"

A look came slowly into his face at which Phyllis herself recoiled. He looked from one to the other of them.

"I know how to protect myself," he said at last. He smiled slightly again; then his eyes became absent. "I know a man who cannot sleep," he continued; "he tried to poison one of my employes."

He paused and gazed off through the great window at his side as if discussing a sunset.

"I know a woman who—married the wrong man. She's been reliving espisodes with the other—but we don't seem to be able to record them any more." He glanced at Phyllis. "She tampered with some of my plans," he added slowly.

Phyllis studied his eyes. Were they insane?

"You say I have enemies here in my office," he went on. "I will show you something."

He put his finger on a button on his desk. Almost immediately the pretty secretary, Miss Arden, opened the office door. She came across to him at once. She was really a beautiful creature of cream and rose, in the brilliant light from the great window behind the desk, as she faced her employer. On her lips and in her eyes was a smile for him that excluded all the world else. Phyllis saw these things through the haze of terror the moment held for her.

"Oh, Miss Arden," said Brainard, picking up a memorandum. "I want you to take this index down to Rex Welling and have him make half a dozen records from it. Think quite a lot of Southern California people will be interested in it; it solves a mystery that attracted considerable attention at the time. It shows what happened to a young man—you'll remember him—in room 28 at the New Albemarle at Riverside, on the night of July 30, 1932."

The girl before his desk became motionless as he raised his eyes to her. The cream-rose of her lovely skin turned to color of old ashes. The carefully manicured nails of her hand that rested on artificial pink on them as if it were daubed on paper. Her smooth shoulders seemed to shrink within the sheer fabric of her frock. Her lids rose and fell slowly over her eyes—and drooping, seemed as if they would not open again. But she did not move. She made no sound.

Phyllis turned desperately away, and reached out to the chair beside her. The atmosphere of the room seemed to go dead white down to the level of her eyes.

It was not alone that it was a dreadful thing to see any creature caught in the snap of the trap which cut in through tissue to the bone.

It was the far more terrible cruelty of the trapper who had planned and contemplated it and sprung the catch. Beside her, Relief Brainard was making little sounds of protest, addressed to no one, as she also turned away.

But she heard Brainard's cool voice behind her again. "Maybe," he was saying to the Arden girl, "that is a record you'd like to take to Jerry Ballard—when you go."

Phyllis made her away across to the north windows and stood there blindly staring out over the city. Relief Brainard was still beside her. But she did not hear anything now. For a long time she seemed to hear nothing. Then Radley spoke, close behind her.

"Well?" he inquired.

His aunt turned upon him. "Radley Brainard," she said huskily, "is there any way by which you can make a record of yourself—and what you say and do, but what you think and intend—of your aims and motives—out of your brains, or out of your blood—so that you may yourself see what manner of man you are?"

He stared at her an instant; then his eyes grew absent again. "Not a bad idea," he answered slowly.

The room was empty, except for the three.

"You talk about self-defense!" cried Relief Brainard. "And you use your incredible power to strike at a poor girl like that! I don't care what she's done! She may have tried to cut your throat—I'm not sure I would blame her! She may be as guilty as hell—but what right does that give you to cut into the vitals of her life?"

"She has been trying to betray me to my arch enemies," he said, his lip curling.

Blackmail

"To your enemies, eh? To Jerry Ballard and Ferdinand Mortimer! Oh, I know them. They're your enemies, are they? Why? Who are always a man's enemies? Those he hates! Why do you hate them? Because you've tried to ruin them, that's why! You'll be hating all the world soon for the same reason! Oh, Mortimer and Ballard—the monopolists of the picture world! You picked them for your enemies to begin with, didn't you? You picked them—I don't believe they picked you!"

"Why get hysterical about it?" asked Brainard coolly. "You seem to forget that Mortimer and Ballard put everybody else before them out of business!"

"How? By making better public entertainment than was made before. That's business!"

Brainard laughed. "You seem to forget—that that is also my business."

"Your business? Heaven forgive you—it might have been your business! But it's not. Blackmail! Blackmail is your business!"

For an instant he winced at that. Then he shrugged. "I use the weapons I have," he replied. "One of 'em is such entertainment as the world never saw before. Mortimer and Ballard are being ruined, as you say, because they can't compete. That's why they are my enemies.

"And they know they can't compete—with make-believe against life—and so they are trying to—to get at me in other ways."

"They'll get at you in a way you don't suspect! You're not using superior entertainment as your weapon—you're afraid they'll beat you at that—or get it away from you. So you've turned criminal. And it's because, with all your marvelous discoveries, you can't compete with them!"

"Can't compete?"

"No! I've known all along that something was wrong with the Vicarion. Today Phyllis' terror at your Catherine de Medici show made me understand! Nothing you show is true—because it is only a fragment—can never be anything but a fragment. I've heard you talk about unity. There's a greater unity than lies in the dramatic event; it lies in the dramatic whole! Pictures and fiction and drama—at their best—are dramatic wholes! They may be make-believe, as you say, but they are true! That's what people want—truth! In the long, long run that's what they want! And you can't blackmail them out of it! And when they get through with the novelty of looking at—at mere facts—they'll go back to literature again, as they always have, looking for God's truth! You're dealing with something bigger than helpless girls—and pretty soon it's going to turn on you!"

Brainard smiled. "You're right about their wanting the truth—all of them who can stand it!"

"But when the world wants truth it doesn't take the X-ray and go back studying racial pathology! It takes a gun and kills its liars—or a guillotine!"

Miss Brainard broke off abruptly. Then she turned to Phyllis. "Come on, Phyl, let's go home," she ended.

Phyllis looked at Radley. He was looking at her. "I suppose you know by now," she said, "what I did in your studio this afternoon."

"Perfectly," he answered.

She looked straight into his eyes. "I made it momentarily impossible for your enemies to blackmail you. But I tampered with some of your plans, I think. What do you intend to do—to me?"

Color began to rise in his white face. It spread in a rush of crimson that went to his hair. He turned half away from her. Instantly she turned from him and walked swiftly across to the door.

"As you say, Aunt Relief," she said, "let's go home."

Raging, Brainard walked his office floor. Rage, not shame, had filled his face with blood as Phyllis Norman had looked him in the eyes and challenged him—challenged him to revenge himself on her for what she had done! But her challenge was far deeper than that! She challenged the basic standards of his character!

He knew what she had done. In half an hour after she had walked from behind the screen in his studio, where for a dazed moment she had thought she was a ghost come real, he had traced her movements immediately before and after that event. He had seen her release the record from that bomb!

Passion was weakness; he was well aware of that. It had been because of the madness that had filled him that he had crushed his impulse to instant action. In his first realization that the one treasured, priceless transport, which he had denied himself through agonies of desire because it was all he might ever possess, had been snatched from him, and by her hand, he had been the beast robbed of its prey. Red, murderous fury had possessed him, like the demon of fable. What vestige of sanity had kept him there behind his locked door, where no one could see, he could not afterward guess. When the singleness of his enmity, at first turned wholly against the woman he had once believed he loved, had divided at recollection of the others who were plotting and acting against him, his unstable molten madness had hardened into a hatred that could wait.

Once, here in this room, where he now paced the floor, he had fancied a notion of himself as a man against the world, half-amused at the conceit. Now he was not half-amused. He whispered to himself as he walked.

Damn them! Did they not even yet understand his power that they should dare to trifle with it, to thwart him to scheme to wrest it from him?

His mind turned first from the traitors in his own offices to the men who, he believed, were back of them—to Ballard, the only man in the world who held power over him! It was an unbelievable thing to him that he could not put his finger upon anything in Ballard's life through which he could wring the man. Ballard had lightly referred to the frolics of his youth: he had cheerfully admitted intentions of violence toward Brainard. But any discreditable act in Ballard's life was far behind the man of today—and Ballard's whole painted character of himself in that memorable interview had been part of his trick to draw Brainard into self-betrayal. If Brainard and his partner had been shrewd in business, if they had played the game hard and ruthlessly, if business had been to them war, they had still played it as a game within rules.

If Mortimer, under strain of impending ruin, had hinted at means of self-defense outside the rules, there was still no overt act of his on which Brainard could fasten.

Some one had once suggested that Brainard's enemies might attempt to kidnap him and devise means to make him reveal his secrets. Here was a method ready made, if he chose to use it, for dealing with Jerry Ballard. Supposing Jerry Ballard spirited away on a yacht down the Mexican coast, with no authority likely to be active in investigation of his absence when plausibly explained—supposing as Jerry Ballard's companions on board were certain men Brainard knew who were familiar with the methods of the third degree. Was it supposable that Ballard would return from such a cruise still clinging to a secret he could exchange for restoration to his long-accustomed comforts and luxuries of life?

He already knew how to deal with the Arden woman. His dragnet had one night brought him a clue to her shallow little footsteps. And as to Van Winkle—it would be simple to put him away in some institution from which he might easily be proved to have escaped, and where he would appear to be comfortably cared for—to any one on the outside.

Pain grew in his wounded arm as he walked and thought of these things now. Many of them would hardly have occurred to him six months ago even as possibilities; he had traveled far on the road of despotism. But it was as if one feeble movement involved his body and brain. His very thought inflamed his wound, and it in turn reacted to inflame his brain.

Challenge

His mind turned back to Phyllis again. From time immemorial jealous woman had tried to wreck some interest dear to the man whose sole devotion she had craved. She cut the canvas and broke the marble over which he dreamed. She flung a manuscript into a fire or vitrol in a face! She forever knew how to strike a near and deadly wound.

But with the first shock of the thing past, with his mind beginning to take hold of the fact that Phyllis had done nothing irretrievable—in the light of that cruise for Ballard down the Mexican coast—he began to see that her motive had been complex. She had at least known that she was forestalling his enemies. He understood—perfectly, as he had said—that she had not looked at that record she had held in her hand at a moment of opportunity. And she had faced him afterward—faced him and challenged him as to what revenge he meant to take—with implications that reached his depths! There was something arresting in all this—arresting even for a man whose brain was on fire with inflammation that seemed now to associate itself with a physical wound.

Yet she was aligned with the rest against him! He paused and looked from his north windows. There was the crowd, down there—the crowd that swayed daily, hourly now, to and fro at his beck and call. He moved them with the movement of his finger as truly as if they danced on a string. Up street or down, according as he distributed the bait they wanted! Sacrificing everything else to obey him! Forgetting other interests!

Discarding former standards! They were not against him! They were docile as sheep—they were clay in his hands! All over this wide land—far, far off over the stretches of the earth—the mass of men moved to his wish, bowed to his will, ate from his hand. Only the small, small few rebelled—and he held the whip for them. Maybe the mass understood that too. Van Winkle had once laughed at the idea of discomfort in being "the Vicari-ee!" Even men who had not paid specially for special privilege to scan other people's lives were not less docile for having thought of that. Blackmail? Every bargain on earth could be called blackmail!

They were his sheep. Presently he would even have to feed them, perhaps. It might be advisable to curtail their indulgences a bit. He was well aware that already railroads were half manned, industries flagging. It might be amusing, and useful, to rob congresses of quorums, to tie executives' hands; but certain activities must go on. Well, why not? He would direct them. He held the people between his finger and thumb!

Van Winkle came to him. "I wanted to suggest to you, Mr. Brainard," he said, "that you make a few records for your private eye, beginning with this." He handed his employer a memorandum. It recorded the moment and location of his conference with the pretty secretary in the darkness of the service hall. Brainard recognized it; he had himself written a similar one during that stay in his studio after Phyllis had left.

"Well," he said, looking at the other's calm face, "you have discovered, have you, that Miss Arden's gone?"

"Gone?" Van Winkle stared at him; then shrugged. "Well, I warned her that you would be likely to know whom you were trusting."

Brainard watched the other. "You're a smooth devil, Van," he said at last.

"That sounds as if you thought I have something to hide."

"Haven't you?"

"How do I know? And why should I want to know? Can you fancy any ignorance that would be greater bliss than complete ignorance of your past? I have a conscience like a baby's. My slate is clean. I've nothing to be afraid of. Did it ever strike you that men are never afraid of the future?"

"Think not?"

"Of course not. You can do anything you like with your future. You can't do a damned thing with your past. You can't even wag it—like a dog! It sticketh tighter than your shadow. It is you—you are it! The only trouble with not having any is that you wonder what you are without it!"

"Then even you are afraid to have your past revealed."

"Revealed? Yes—to me! Don't you realize, I may be anything from the king of the panhandlers to the lessee of Muscle Shoals; I may be a gay traveling Lothario, with a girl at every semaphore, or I may have a wife and seven small children in Dowagiac, Mich. I may be any wretched thing, from a man with an unspendable fortune to one with an irresistible urge!

THE DIETETIC CRISIS

The majority of people do not make any decided dietetic change unless they are desirous of overcoming some diseased condition of the body, and while the results and recoveries from a change of diet are often spectacular, it must be remembered that most sick people are laden down with disease toxins, and that these toxins must be eliminated before the elements of the food can be properly assimilated and incorporated into the body.

Sometimes these poisons have accumulated in such quantity that a change toward a more wholesome diet produces what has been termed a dietetic crisis. As the blood becomes more alkaline, it dissolves many of the virulent toxins which have been deposited for years in the tissues of the body. As these toxins circulate in the blood before being eliminated, they may cause various aches, pains and headaches until the eliminative organs, such as the kidneys, intestines, lungs, liver and skin have removed them from the blood stream. These disagreeable symptoms are really favorable indications and will disappear as soon as the poisons are eliminated. Breaking a fast in the middle of one of these periods throws the toxins back into the tissues and interferes with the cure. Likewise, certain drugs which are widely used will suppress the elimination of these disease toxins and by stopping the crisis, prevent a cure. A crisis is really a sort of bodily housecleaning, and often as might ordinarily require weeks or months.

If the poisonous materials which are being discharged through the various membranes of the body are especially virulent or in unusually large quantities, a local irritation of the eliminative organ may result. For this reason, a crisis is sometimes accompanied by skin eruptions, showing elimination through the skin; or by a sort of cold, indicating elimination through the mucous membranes; or by a diarrhea, indicating elimination through the bowels; or by a burning, profuse urination, indicating elimination from the kidneys.

These symptoms do not occur except in a small number of cases, and they are not so apt to occur if no food is used except some acid fruit and the bowels are thoroughly cleansed daily with enemas, but I want you to be acquainted with the symptoms of a dietetic crisis so that you will know what is happening if it should occur. Remember that the best policy is to continue on the fruit diet, drink plenty of water, use enemas, and increase the skin elimination until the crisis has passed. If you do this you will feel much better than before the crisis occurred, but if you stop the crisis by eating rich food or by using a suppressive drug, you will probably feel worse.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

White Marks on Fingernails

Question: W. M. M. asks: "Will you please tell me what causes white marks on the fingernails and how they could be prevented?"

Answer: These white marks are minute bubbles in or immediately under the nail. This is usually caused by a slight injury at the nail root by a lack of the proper elements in the diet or by some nervous disorder. They can usually be prevented by building up the general health and avoiding probing the cuticle too deeply.

Some Questions About Nephritis

Question: A Reader asks: "Should a woman over 60 who has albumin use eggs in any form? Should she use cream of tartar in the drinking water and is sugar harmful in this complaint? She has been advised to drink a tea made from the digitalis plant. Is it good for her?"

Answer: The albumin found in eggs, while similar to the albumin found in the urine, is not the same and has no special bearing upon nephritis—the usual cause of albumin in the urine. I do not advice cream of tartar in the drinking water, nor sugar, for this condition. Digitalis is a poison and a tea made from it could not be beneficial in nephritis. The best thing for you to do would be to send me your name and address so I can send you my article on the subject, with complete instructions.

Red Nose

Question: Interested Reader writes: "An article on the causes and cure for red nose will be greatly appreciated by a great many."

Answer: An overly-red nose is always caused from some kind of digestive disorder, principally from putrefaction in the colon.

H. SMITH, MEHLHORN AND CRUICKSHANK TIE AT HOT SPRINGS

PLAYOFF WILL DECIDE VICTOR

Leaders Meet Today After Shooting Low 290's

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., Feb. 3 (AP)—Bobby Cruickshank, wee New Yorker, staged a great finish today to all but win the South Central Open Golf tournament and then faltered on the final green to finish in a 72-hole deadlock with Bill Mehlhorn and Horton Smith, young Joplin, Mo., player. All carded 290, two strokes over par and will enter an 18-hole play-off tomorrow.

Starting the morning round with Smith, Billy Burke, Cruickshank and Mehlhorn bunched for the lead with the former favorite the first 18 found the four separated by one stroke. Burke and Cruickshank went out in the afternoon with 217 each and Mehlhorn and Smith started with 218 apiece.

Then along came enough trouble to deny anyone the crown while Burke slipped back a stroke to tie Armour, former national open champion, for next best showing at 291. Armour wrought a great comeback shooting a 68 in the afternoon, four below par, to place him well up in the money. Cards of leaders:

Cruickshank—Morning:
Out ..... 443 344 344—35
In ..... 343 543 444—36 71
Afternoon—
Out ..... 543 444 344—35
In ..... 444 453 453—36 73 71 146—290
Mehlhorn—Morning:
Out ..... 454 554 344—38
In ..... 534 543 444—34 72
Afternoon—
Out ..... 542 454 234—35
In ..... 445 543 444—37 72 72 145—290
Smith—Morning:
Out ..... 544 454 345—38
In ..... 345 543 455—38 76
Afternoon—
Out ..... 552 445 334—35
In ..... 344 463 445—37 72 76 142—290

Late in the afternoon with Smith and Mehlhorn already in with 290's it looked as if Cruickshank, winner of the event once before would again lift the South Central title. Making the turn in the final 18 with a stroke under par he struggled along in a fair way to bring home a 288 or 290.

In the very start of the home coming journey, however, he lost his advantage to regulation figures dropping one at number 10—a par three short hole. He still was a likely shot with only par or one over needed to win. At 11 and 12 he was even and at 13 he picked up a birdie four. The break that cost him first place came at 17 and 18, however taking one over at 17 he was well up to the side of the green at the finish but his putts went awry and he again dropped one to par, to come in at 290. Scores of 302 or better:

ABILENE, Texas, Feb. 3 (AP)—D. L. Snodgrass of Coleman was elected president of the West Texas league here today at a meeting of the board of directors. W. R. Keeble of Abilene, elected at a previous meeting, resigned, saying he would be unable to give the league affairs enough of this time to serve this season.

Indications were that the league would contain six teams this year, Abilene, San Angelo, Coleman, Midland and Big Spring, all of which were represented today, and Eastland. Eastland is said to be ready to take over Lubbock's franchise. One more directors' meeting, to adopt a schedule, will be held before the season opens.

PORKERS PLAY LONGHORN FIVE

Games This Week to Settle Conference Title

(By the Associated Press)

The Southwest conference basket ball race, which, due to the overwhelming presence of the Arkansas University Razorbacks has proved unexciting so far, is due to reach its climax during the week.

In order to make certain of their fourth consecutive title the Porkers need subdue only one team, the Texas University Longhorns. They invade Austin Friday and Saturday nights for that purpose. Off hand, the Longhorn hope appears forlorn.

Coach Walker's Longhorns, however, left little doubt of their right to represent the Texas delegation against the champions when they won their third and fourth straight victories against Rice and Texas Christian university during the past week. They now have humbled all except the Aggies and Razorbacks at one time or another.

Longhorns Good

If it were not for Arkansas' presence the Texas quintet, led by the luminous Holly Brock, probably would be regarded as a humdinger. As a matter of fact it is. The giant Razorback cagers simply are in a class by themselves.

Brock scored 17 points to lead the Longhorns to victory over T. C. U. Saturday night at Fort Worth. The former Beaumont ace is the spark plug of the Orange. He will demonstrate his prowess here Monday night when the Longhorns tackle the Southern Methodist university quintet in their final game before they try to hold the bridge against the Razorbacks.

Other games scheduled for the coming week pit Southern Methodist against Rice Saturday night at Houston and Texas Christian against Baylor on the same night at Waco.

Porkers Lead Scoring

Pickell and Schoonover, the "Ozark Twins," still are far ahead of the field in the individual scoring joust. Pickell, captain of the Arkansas team, has 91 points and his teammate 87. Eury of Texas Christian and Hess of Rice are deadlocked in third place, each with 54 points. Brock, with 50 points in four games, has climbed [illegible] into fourth position. Other leading conference scorers are:

Smith, Baylor, 40; Brown, S. M. U., 39; Lambert, Arkansas, 38; Webster, Aggies, 38; Caudle, Aggies, 37; Roberson, T. C. U., 36; A. Sale, Arkansas, 32; McDonnell, T. C. U., 32; Johnson, S. M. Dempsey-Carpentier Fight First International Go Staged by Tex

Interest of Women Over Boxing Started With Their Attendance at Bout to See Gorgeous Georges

By JACK LAWRENCE

(Copyright, 1929, by the New York American, Inc., and Universal Service, Inc.)

NEW YORK, Feb. 3.—Any match that had on international flavor was sure to win Tex Rickard's interest. In this respect, it might be said that he died without achieving one of his life's ambitions. He always wanted to bring an Englishman and an American together for the heavyweight championship of the world.

"A fight like that," he said to me only a short time ago, "would draw the biggest gate in the history of the prize ring. England would only produce a heavyweight contender who could really fight he'd be the biggest drawing card this country ever saw. He'd draw because there would be millions here who would want to see an American give him a pasting.

"A battle between an American and an Englishman, assuming they were evenly matched and that the Englishman had a chance, would outdraw either of the two contests between Dempsey and Tunney. A fight like that would do better than $3,000,000. I am assuming, of course, that England could send us a representative that was at least as good as Luis Angel Firpo when the A genuine fighter was at his best."

As things turned out, the best the British empire could do was to produce the New Zealander, Tom Heeney, who proved to be no better than a good second-rater. There are those who believe right now that the headache the Heeney-Tunney fight at the Yankee stadium gave Rickard last summer superinduced the malady that brought about his death. He fell for that match because of its international aspect—an American against a foreigner. When it was all over he faced a loss, conservatively speaking, of something in excess of $150,000.

International Complex

Rickard always kept a watchful eye on the English sock market, hoping against hope that the British heavyweight of his dreams would emerge from the drab mediocrity of Britain's pugilists. He was destined to die without seeing a British heavyweight who could really fight, but it can be truthfully said that any manager who had a foreign fighter of any promise at all could always get Tex Rickard's ear. The international complex was his hobby.

In view of all this it can be readily understood with what zeal he undertook the promotion of the famous battle between Georges Carpentier and Jack Dempsey. Here was an international match with plenty of color behind it. On one hand, the handsome and fascinating war hero, Georges Carpentier, the orchid of France. On the other hand an American who had been branded a slacker—Jack Dempsey of the scowling visage.

Physically the advantage lay with Dempsey, but that advantage was not great enough to make anyone believe that it wouldn't be an even contest. Carpentier was known to have a great right hand, a wicked, flashing punch, and his admirers thought this would more than offset any edge that Dempsey might have in the matter of weight. They weren't far from being correct, as the second round of the fight proved.

When Tex Rickard staged the Benny Leonard-Ritchie Mitchell fight in the old garden for the benefit of devastated France, with Miss Anne Morgan acting as his assistant promoter, he conceived the idea of enlisting the interest of women in professional pugilism. He developed that idea steadily until today you can see almost as many women at a fight in the new garden as men. There are women's clubs in and about New York which hold regular ringside reservations for every fight held at the garden.

Women Idolized Georges

In the development of this notion of Rickard's no fighter was ever so helpful to him as Georges Carpentier. The women idolized the fascinating Frenchman from the very moment he put foot on American soil and it is a matter of record that the fair sex attended the Dempsey-Carpentier fight in Jersey City in greater numbers than had ever been known in the history of the prize ring. They came to see the aesthetic French flower bloom into triumphant victory—and remained to see it withered in defeat. I can remember very distinctly one lovely female who sprawled across my typewriter in a dead faint when that last left hook to the chin spilled the gorgeous Georges into the resin dust for the fatal count.

Unpopular as Dempsey was with the crowd at that time, due to unfair things that had been said about his war record, he had the sports writers with him when it came to picking the winner. If my memory serves me, Jim Corbett and Bernard Shaw were the only fistic experts who picked Carpentier to win.

Locking back at that fight across the years it would seem as though Carpentier might have had a chance if he had elected to fight along different lines. He had been told to keep away from Dempsey, to rely an speed and a long left hand. He had agreed to do that. Possibly it was the roar of 90,000 throats, the amazing and bewildering scene of which he was the center, that upset his battle plans. At any rate, he made the fatal error of wading in, trying to sweep that deadly right hand to Dempsey's jaw. That was his finish. In the very first round he was knocked partly through the ropes, but in the second he came back and staggered Dempsey with a right cross that went squarely to the point of the chin. As Dempsey wavered and rocked 90,000 people arose and gave forth a roar that made the huge pine bowl tremble.

But Dempsey had his head about him. He lurched forward into a clinch and as he did so he hooked both hands into the body so hard that the Frenchman writhed in agony. Those punches were the beginning of the end. From that moment until the fight ended in the fourth with the orchid of France sprawled flat on his face while referee Harry Ertle counted over him, there was nothing to it.

While the religious services will be almost identical with those of Col. Joe Miller's funeral, no arrangements have been made for the Indian ceremonials that accompanied his death.

Ban on Football Heads Advocated

College Prexy Would Bar Mentors From Sidelines

NEW YORK, Feb. 3 (UP)—"Football should be played by teams and not coaches," President William Mather Lewis of LaFayette college told members of the New York Alumni association at their 55th annual dinner.

Attacking the growing tendency of having football captains appointed by coaches, Lewis said he was in favor of letting the captain run the team and keeping the coach off the sidelines if necessary during a game.

"When college games are played by robots whose every mechanical move is dictated from the bench the zest of the sport will disappear," he said.

"If the claim that football develops self-reliance, quick-thinking, and leadership is to stand, the game must be played by two teams and not two coaches. Good coaching consists of inculcating the principles, technique and strategy of the game so that the players can meet the exigencies of the contest without direction from the sideliner."

Greater initiative is developed in football when the team elects the football captain, Lewis said. The LaFayette football captain is elected by the team.

CYCLONE HALL TO FACE TEST

Oklahoman Looms Tough Foe Wednesday

It looks as if Cyclone Hall really is to have the w. k. acid test this week. The Childress K. O. socker is to meet Russell Beckwith of Oklahoma in the 10-round windup of Alex Ross' boxing show Wednesday night at 821 Indiana avenue.

Beckwith is the fellow who boxed Dempse Moore here last winter. The local light heavy won by a knockout but was extended by the Sooner middleweight. Beckwith will have a weight advantage over Hall Wednesday night, instead of conceding poundage as was the case in his mill with Dempse.

Howard Scott, that corking featherweight from Electra, will go to the wars in the eight-round semiwindup. Howard's adversary will be Corporal Barnes, from Fort Sill, Okla. Impresario Ross vouches for Barnes as a lad who will give Howard a strenuous mill.

Virgil Oden of Wichita Falls and Jimmy Wilson of Oklahoma City, who boxed four slashing rounds last week, will meet in a return go Wednesday night over the six-round route.

Three four-round scraps are as follows: Frenchy LeFevre, Grandfield, Okla., vs. Battling Sturdivant, Wichita Falls; Young Sturdivant and Tommy Mounds, Wichita Falls, four rounds; Black Dummy and Sundown Kid, four rounds.

NEW YORK, Feb. 3—The milk war in Chicago proves that a man can fight about anything.

We don't know how it started unless the boys are still striving for the control of everything that comes in bottles.

We do know that the neighbors' children wrecked the morning milk train as it was streaming along on its less than two per cent errand.

Although there was plenty of machine-gunning there was only one casualty.

One of the boys drank some of the milk.

Affairs are now pretty much like the old days when Jesse James used to move his board of trade around from town to town.

When Jesse thought things weren't going just right with the village bank he would stroll in and attend a director's meeting after midnight.

Any new business that came up would be discussed on horseback.

Now the minority stockholders meet in automobiles and vote from ambush.

The lads are for big business with a chain store system of hide-aways.

We cannot understand how they made Mars a milk-maid.

Maybe it's one of those Wall street mergers.

Anyway, the beer-barons and the alkie dukes are struggling for the milk title.

It seems that one gang wants to skim the milk off the top.

The clothes-pin gang are after the paper-clip bunch for infringing on their racket in a small way.

When the milk is on the veranda and there's a bomb under the porch—we guess we will drink our morning coffee black.

Up until yesterday the cows had not joined either mob.

Don't think this is not a real war. When they start wrecking trains they ain't pulling bon-bons at birthday parties.

If the skirmish spreads you will have to wear a bullet-proof vest for a lounging jacket and wheel the baby in a caterpillar tractor.

DAILY DOPE

By LARRY DAILEY

THE ACQUISITION of control of of a club in organized baseball by woman is not setting a precedent in the game. The announcement that Miss Florence Killilea had inherited the Milwaukee team of the American association from her father, the late Henry J. Killilea, makes the young lady the only woman boss in organized baseball now. But there have been other women who were nominal or real heads of baseball clubs.

Several years ago, before the advent of Branch Rickey and the successful chain system, the president of the St. Louis Cardinals was a woman. She was Mrs. Helen Hathaway Britton, who became head of that National league club at the death of her husband. Mrs. Britton sat in at the meetings of the National league magnates and was said to have been a close student of the game and familiar with its policies—and politics.

She only retained her interests in the Cardinals for a year, or so, however.

The same Milwaukee club now having a "petticoat boss," as the saying was when they WORE petticoats, was controlled by a woman. She was Mrs. R. A. Havenor, who like Mrs. Britton became a baseball executive at the death of her husband. And also like Mrs. Britton, Mrs. Havenor disposed of the club after a few months.

THE POLOISTS of Wichita Falls are to seek further honors. Not satisfied with the winning of the low goal tournament for the championship of the southwest in January at San Antonio, the Blue Jackets are to engage in the high goal tourney this month in the city. The southwest championship high goal meet is for teams with a maximum handicap of 12. The Blue Jackets, with a handicap of seven and following their impressive triumph in the low goal affair, will be among the favorites to win the high goal tourney.

The handicap of the Blue Jackets was raised from six to seven after the low goal tourney, when Capt. Boyle, who previously played at scratch, was handicapped one. Horace Robbins, C. H. Featherstone and Lieutenant Borden, other members of the team, all are handicapped at two.

The high goal tourney starts Feb. 10.

SHARK-STRIB. SUCCESS SEEN

Runyon Thinks Fight Will Attract Large Throng

By DAMON RUNYON

NEW YORK, Feb. 3 (US)—Perhaps I am an optimist by nature, but I am inclined to think that the boxing contest between W. L. Stribling Jr., of Macon, Ga., and Josef Paul Cuckochay, otherwise Jack Sharkey, of Boston, Mass., to be held at Miami, Fla., next month has a good chance of achieving considerable success.

I desire to call the reader's attention to the fact that nowhere in the above paragraph have I referred to the said boxing contest as the muss of Miami, the battle of the beaches, the pummeling of the palms, or etcetera. I hereby claim credit for admirable restraint in thus disdaining alliteration's artful aids.

I do not know just when and where I got my impression that the boxing contest between W. L. Stribling Jr. and Josef Paul Cuckochay may be a success. I could not possibly have gathered this impression from perusing the public prints, for they seem to be mainly engrossed in presenting the outlines of one of the grandest busts in the history of the sour science.

Damon Is Optimistic

Some even express doubt that the proposition will ever be blown up large enough to bust. I mean to say that there are doubters and cynics in the land who refuse to believe that William Harrison Dempsey, the justly celebrated Manassa Mauler, and his associates in the Miami enterprise will ever be able to beget a sufficient quantity of the wind of publicity into their balloon to cause it to make more than a gentle "puh-lop" in the event adverse circumstance sticks a hole in it.

I cannot agree with this view. I think the boxing contest between W. L. Stribling Jr. and Joseph P. Cuckochay will go forward to the bitter end, and that at the finish it will have attracted a large crowd, and a reasonable wad of gate receipts. If I am wrong, I have only my trusting nature to blame. You see, I trust in William Harrison Dempsey and the Madison Square Garden corporation, particularly the Hon. W. F. Carey, who is Texrickarding with Dempsey down in the flamingo state.

I certainly see no reason why it should be flatly declared that Miami cannot carry a thing like this through to a notable success before Miami has been given a chance to try. It seems to me the doubters and the cynics have put the old blast on a trifle early.

Tunney Out of This

They hark back too much to the affair that was scheduled some years ago between this same W. L. Stribling Jr. and Mr. James Joseph Tunney, at that time Gene. But Mr. James Joseph Tunney is not connected with the impending boxing contest, so at least the sinister influence of a notable jinx on the box office is removed.

The contest between the Messrs. Stribling Jr. and Cuckochay doesn't have to draw an enormous sum of money to be a complete success. If it gets around $300,000 it is a winner. I am somehow inclined to think that the gate will go beyond that figure.

But even if it turns out the bust that the doubters and the cynics predict—and probably hope—I shall not attribute the busting to any fault of Miami. I may accept it rather as an expression of intelligence on the part of the citizens thereof. And in any event, I deem it unfair to Miami to pronounce any enterprise located there a bust until I hear the actual noise thereof.

Plains Historical Society Aided By North Texas Press

Special to The Record News

CANYON, Texas, Feb. 3.—The newspapers of Texas are doing a valuable work in helping the Panhandle-Plains Historical society to preserve the story of Northwest Texas, according to J. Evetts Haley, field secretary of the society.

Papers are daily recording events which seem commonplace today but which will be of as great interest in another generation as those of 30 or 50 years ago are to the present.

Officers of the society report that 15 newspapers are received regularly. The Pampa News, Ochiltree Herald, Mobeetie News, Canadian Record, Clarendon News, Childress Index, Wellington Leader, Amarillo Globe and News, Canyon News, Crosbyton News and Lynn County News are regularly added to the files. The Lubbock Avalanche is given the society by a Canyon subscriber, and the Dalhart Texan Hereford Brand, Clovis, New Mexico, Journal are frequently received.

The society has an extremely valuable collection of the early newspapers of Northwest Texas which chronicled a life which has now passed away, which was made up of Indian scares, buffalo hunts, cattle rustling, struggles for livelihood and steady building for a better day.

Quanah Power Firm To Beautify Property

Special to The Record News.

QUANAH, Texas, Feb. 3—Two carloads of shrubs and trees have been received by the West Texas Utilities company to be set out at the Lake Pauline super power plant, carrying out the landscape plans for the employes' colony and grounds there. A large park is being planted in trees, and the winding walks, driveways, and parkways are being lined on either side with shrubbery, while all lawns are being sodded, fountains installed and other beautifying landscape plans being carried out.

Several hundred pecan trees will be planted along the banks of the canal leading from one part of Lake Pauline to the huge turbines and flowing on back into the lake. Water in this canal flows several feet deep at all times, and will provide excellent conditions for the rapid growth of pecan trees, according to authorities on their culture.

MUSTANG BAND DRAWS CROWD

Son of Wichita Pastor Leads Sunday Concert

An attendance estimated at 1,500 persons defied weather conditions Sunday afternoon to greet the Southern Methodist University band which presented a varied program at the Memorial auditorium complimentary to the many friends of the institution residing in this city.

The organization is directed by V. Cyrus Barcus, son of Dr. Ed Barcus, pastor of the Floral Heights Methodist church, and on its present tour carries about 30 pieces. Attractively uniformed with blue cadet jackets, red-striped white trousers, and with the flowing crimson-lined blue capes which waved defiance to the Army on West Point field during the last football season, the Mustang band captured the audience here with the verve and spirit of its music.

The program was divided into two sections, the first consisting of almost a dozen separate selections played by the entire band. Three marches by John Phillip Sousa easily featured this portion of the entertainment, although all numbers were generously applauded.

Ed Barcus Jr. contributed one of tributed one of the best received the best received bits of entertainment in the form of a dramatic reading which was turned to burlesque in its last sentence, and effected a hasty recession of the threatened shower of tears.

Artemus Roberts appeared between parts of the program in a group of specialty numbers, including unique uses of the harmonica, a plain steel saw, and the Hawiian guitar, and was heavily encored.

The second part was given by the Mustang Serenaders, consisting of about 12 pieces selected from the band, and comprising a "jazz" orchestra which featured popular numbers. Bob Slaymaker, xylophone soloist, was given a big hand.

The entertainment closed with the Mustang song, and the audience, which had given the entire program a very responsive hearing, stood while the official S. M. U. melody was being played.

Luther Hoffman To Address Kiwanis Club

Luther Hoffman will be the principal speaker on the program to be given at the weekly meeting of the Kiwanis club Monday noon at the Kemp hotel, which will be in charge of Kenneth Bebb and Lawrence Elkins.

Mr. Bebb is chairman of the inter-club relations committee of the club, while Mr. Elkins heads the committee on attendance. A musical program under the direction of Mrs. Lois Parker will also be given.

Mangum Epworth League Play to Be Presented

MANGUM, Okla., Feb. 3—A cast of more than 100 local players will present "Aunt Lucia" at the city auditorium Monday and Tuesday nights, Feb. 4 and 5, under sponsorship of the Senior Epworth league of the First Methodist church. Convicted Nun Ill In Mexican Prison

MEXICO CITY, Feb. 3 (UP)—Mother Superior Maria Concepcion, sentenced to 20 years in prison for complicity in the assassination of President-elect Obregon, is reported seriously ill, although apparently her condition is not critical. She suffers from chronic pleurisy which is made worse by confinement in jail.

Wichita Housewife Tells Experiences

"I Think Orgatone Is the Greatest Medicine I Have Ever Taken and You Can Count Me As a Booster," Says Mrs. Woodliff

"I have suffered for ten long years, and Orgatone has brought me out of it," said Mrs. C. L. Woodliff, residing at 1601 Bluff St., Wichita Falls, Texas. Mrs. Woodliff's husband is employed at the Coca Cola Works, and they both are very well known here in this section of Texas.

"I had a very severe case of stomach trouble, and sometimes when things didn't agree with me, my stomach would become upset, and I would have chills and would be in bed for days at a time. I was bilious and dizzy and was very nervous. I was so restless I couldn't get any rest at night. I was constipated and had to take some kind of laxative all the time. Sometimes I wouldn't hardly eat anything, for I was afraid it would put me in bed, most everything I ate, disagreed with me.

"I read so much about Orgatone, I decided to try it, and it has certainly brought me great relief. I'm not nervous anymore, and haven't had a chill since I began taking Orgatone. I sleep like a healthy child every night, and get up in the morning feeling refreshed and ready for my day's work. I eat anything now, without it hurting me and my food digests properly. I have always been susceptible to colds, but even with all the 'flu' this winter I haven't had a cold. My constipation is relieved and I feel better, all around, than I have in years. I sincerely believe Orgatone is the best medicine I have ever taken, and you can count me as a great booster."

Genuine Orgatone is not a so-called secret or patent remedy but a new scientific treatment containing no alcohol or other false stimulating drugs and is sold in Wichita Falls, exclusively by the Allison's Drug Store, under the personal direction of a special Orgatone representative. Out-of-town customers are being supplied promptly by mail upon receipt of price, one bottle $1.25 or six bottles for $6.25.—Adv.

MAJESTIC: Colleen Moore, Montague Love, Antonio Moreno, and Gertrude Astor in "Synthetic Sin." Aesop's Fables. Topics of the Day. Paramount news. Color classic, "Love Charm."

◆ ◆ ◆

Colleen Moore's "Synthetic Sin" is in the humble estimation of this column the best thing she has ever done. She is attractive to the point where customers at the Majestic are raving about her. For good entertainment it is hard to beat.

◆ ◆ ◆

"The High Cost of Loving" is a name with a moral. Just how high depends on the woman; but the show by that name at the Olympic is all in fun. Tom Lewis and his company please their audiences with their shows because they throw more drama into them than has been the Olympic custom. That makes variety, and variety is the spice of a good show.

◆ ◆ ◆

Charles "Buddy" Rogers and Nancy Carroll have the leads in the Paramount talkie version of Anne Nichols' world famed show "Abie's Irish Rose" which is coming to the Strand theater Sunday. This magnificent show just closed at the palatial new Worth theater in Fort Worth and was acclaimed as one of the most interesting shows ever filmed.

◆ ◆ ◆

Speaking of the Strand brings up "Interference," the present all talkie there. William Powell steals the show, to our way of thinking, and he steals it from such celebrities as Evelyn Brent, Clive Brook and Doris Kenyon, who appear with him.

◆ ◆ ◆

A new baby Wampus star is to be seen for the first time opposite John Barrymore in his newest effort, "Eternal Love," when it is released. She is Mona Rico, a 19-year-old Mexican girl. "Eternal Love" is being anticipated with considerable interest in the film world.

◆ ◆ ◆

And at the end of this week comes a long heralded picture to the Majestic theater. It is Billie Dove in "Adoration," and will open Saturday after the vaudeville.

Saltis Gangster Shot by Officer

CHICAGO, Feb. 3 (US)—Trapped in a south side apartment, Eddie Piech, lieutenant of the "Polack Joe" Saltis gang of booze runners, was shot through the chest by Detective Thomas Casey today.

He reeled against the wall and gasped for a "pass" (permission to go, offering with shocked breath the sum of $100. This was refused. He raised the bribe to $500, but met the same response. Then he smashed the window panes of the ground floor room, and tried to leap through the jagged hole only to be caught by Casey and Detective William Kelly. He was taken to the Bridewell hospital, where he is reported to be dying tonight.

Piech had been wanted, like a number of his fellows of the Saltis gang, for a number of robberies. Charges of murder were also facing him and other Saltis gangsters, authorities stated.

Ever since the doughty "Polack Joe"—one of the last gang chieftains operating since the authorities took matters into their own hands, raiding underworld haunts with unceasing vigilance—was arrested, his followers have had to abandon hijacking and booze running and take to petty thievery for existences.

Sunday School Attendance Drops

Decrease of 1,700 Students Shown by Classes

The elements had all the better of it Sunday in the almost weekly contest with growing Sunday school enrollment reported by 24 local churches, more than 1700 of those who attended classes on Jan. 27 remaining at home Sunday while drizzling rain hastened the thaw of Friday's snow and ice.

Every one of the 24 churches reporting showed material decreases in attendance in comparison with the preceding week, the percentage of loss increasing with those churches located in more remote residence districts. The total number present Sunday was given as 4,911, as compared with 6,618 on Jan. 27.

It was the first time direct communication had been established between Byrd and KDKA.

PRISON BILLS GET ATTENTION

Lawmakers Learn Seriousness of Conditions

AUSTIN, Feb. 3 (AP)—Prison legislation is in the ascendency at the state capitol, with the question of doing something to cure the ills, which penitentiary officials say seem to threaten the penal system, apparently uppermost in the minds of the legislators.

The visit of members of the state prison board, with their report of conditions, before the two houses Thursday, had its effect. Their description of alleged unwholesome and unbusinesslike methods of caring for the prisoners and administering affairs of the properties left an impression which has transcended for the time at least, thoughts of highway financing, control of public utilities, water priority rights and the several other important problems pending.

Governor Moody's recommendations to the fortieth legislature, and renewed to this body, were seconded by the prison board in whole, almost, both in their appearance before the two houses and before joint committees considering prison legislation.

Moody Ideas Involved

The governor's idea of centralising and relocating is to leave the matter to the prison board, the attorney general, speaker of the house and senate president pro tem. His suggestions are incorporated in a bill by Senator Holbrook.

The newest bill on the problem, introduced in the senate by Cousins of Beaumont and sponsored in the house by Young of Wellington and Turner of Madisonville, was designed to win favor of the conservative members although it would give plenary power to the prison board to make whatever changes are necessary in bringing about a cure of the ills which it is claimed, beset the system.

Concentration Planned

King of Throckmorton, chairman of the house penitentiaries committee, is expected to favor the Cousins-Young-Turner bill.

It would effect concentration of the system on the seven farms below Houston and place the "walls" and central plant on the Darrington farm in Brazoria county. It directs the board to sell the Shaw farm in Bowie county, Eastham farm in Houston county, Wynne and Goree farms in Walker county and the Ferguson farm in Madison county. Sale would be made in accordance with the terms, classifications and conditions governing the sale of state public school lands, through the land office.

The land on which the present walls and building are situated at Huntsville would be transferred to the Sam Houston Teachers' college if useful for school purposes.

Conservatism Certain

Legislators realizing relocation and concentration of the prison system is a huge undertaking, all factions agree that the strictest conservatism will be adhered to in any legislation on the subject.

Interest has been arousec to high pitch by the alarming report given by the prison board, which proved astounding to the new members of both houses—and these constitute half of the two bodies—many of whom had no mental picture of the bigness of the conundrum until they were given facts by the prison board.

McFarlane Has Plan

Senator McFarlane has a bill which he claims would bring about re-organization, with a central receiving station on the Darrington farm, and improve conditions without sale of any prison properties other than the Shaw form in North Texas, comprising 4,686 acres, abandoned sometime ago. The Huntsville plant would be retained and the rapidly increasing prison population would be given added facilities by construction of buildings to care for 500 prisoners on the Darrington farm, where the general manager would have headquarters.

The governor and prison board would have the centralization plan embody operation of certain industrial plants, although, they emphasized, not to the exclusion of agricultural pursuits. It was suggested that the prisoners be given equipment with which to manufacture commodities that only the state uses, such as a sheetmetal plant for manufacturing automobile plates, highway signs, pots and vessels; clothing and tailoring plant for making clothes worn by wards of the state; furniture plant for making furnishings used in the institutions; printing plant to do as much of the state's printing as possible; book-binding facilities for rebinding school books, and a cement plant for manufacturing cement for use in building roads.

Organized labor heretofore has objected to the state prison system going into what it has termed "the manufacturing business" to compete with trained men, but the governor believes that the plan of making only articles used excessively by the state will dissipate this protest.

Fire Death Halts Confederate Vet

SPARTANBURG, S. C., Feb. 3 (AP)—A 90-year-old Confederate veteran who had traveled in a mule-drawn wagon for months from his Oklahoma home to attend the Confederate reunion at Charlotte, N. C., next June won't answer its roll call. He died in a hospital here from fatal burns.

The aged man, R. A. Golden, had pitched camp for the night near here beside his wagon and two mules. He was sitting by his fire when he dozed off, and awoke to find his clothing in flames.

Before he died, he told hospital physicians his name and said he lived at Fort Sill, Okla. He also said he had never missed a Confederate reunion and in his wagon was found a tattered Confederate flag and uniform.

Thief Returns Loot to Victim Here

Burglar Keeps Only $10 From "Roll"

One Wichita Falls thief had a change of heart Saturday night when he returned the greater part of $44 which he had stolen from the pockets of M. L. Steed, filling station operator at 1200 North Third street.

Steed said that he had left the money in a pocket of his overalls while he was changing clothes before closing the station when the thief slipped into the building and escaped with the money.

Later Saturday night the pickpocket entered Steed's room and placed the money under the mattress where it was discovered Sunday. Almost $34 of the stolen money was brought back, Steed said.

A grocery store at 502 Broadway was broken into Saturday night but nothing was stolen, while eight German police puppies were stolen from R. L. Phillips, 905 Broad street, according to report received at police headquarters.

A gold baseball with the initials "C. J." engraved upon it was found by G. W. Wright, city traffic officer while he was patroling his beat Sunday afternoon.

Traction Rate and Gas Station Hearing Before Council Tonight

A public hearing on a request for a building permit to the Panhandle Refining company to construct a filling station at Ninth and Denver streets, the second reading of a safety ordinance regulating window washers and others working on the sides of buildings, and a report of the traction rate and ordinance committee are scheduled to come before the Wichita Falls city council at its meeting Monday night.

L. L. Allbritton, W. N. Bonner, Thelbert Martin and George D. Fairtrace were named on a committee a week ago by the city council for the purpose of determining fair and necessary provisions for an amendment to the tramway charter.

The request for the amendment of the charter was brought up for public hearing last week by the company's request for an increase in the street car fares from 6 to 7 cents. The aldermen agreed, informally, that the increase should be granted.

WHISKY IS NO SNAKE REMEDY

Liquor as Cure of Reptile's Bite Denounced

By W. F. SULLIVAN
United Press Staff Correspondent

CHICAGO, Feb. 3—The fellow who once said "the cure is worse than the disease," probably took several swallows of modern whisky to kill the effect of snakebite, curators at the Field Museum agreed today in minimizing existing danger of death from poisonous reptiles.

"Leave the whisky alone," was the warning of Karl P. Schmidt, assistant curator in charge of reptiles, in releasing a leaflet on the subject today.

Causes Many Deaths

"It is no exaggeration," Schmidt points out, "to say that deaths from this 'remedy' when administered for the bite of really poisonous snakes, exceed the total deaths from snake-poisoning in America."

Alfred C. Weed, in charge of the aquarium at the museum, where fish stories of rare imagination are heard daily, came over to the snake room and joined in the discussion with the enthusiasm of a veteran angler who starts out with "let me tell you this one."

Weed says there are comparatively few poisonous snakes wandering the prairies, meadows and swamps and that he always waits until he sees the look in the reptile's eyes before fear seizes him. He has been bitten as many as five times and never has looked around for a drink of liquor.

"It is a mistaken idea that people have about the deadly poison of all snakes," Weed told the United Press. "Take the common water snake that we find in our little streams. You hear them referred to as water moccasins.

"Just look into their eyes and if you see them, the little fellow is harmless. But if you cannot see the eyes and they are covered by heavy brows, leave him alone; he is poisonous. The water moccasins are rarely found in northern waters, in fact, I don't believe above Cairo, Ill. Southern streams, however, have some of them.

The hog-nosed snake and the water snakes are just "big bluffs," Weed said. The former will bump you with his snout and put up a terrific fight but he won't even open his mouth. The water snake will bite and fight but he has no poison in his system.

"I've been bitten hundreds of times but never poisoned," he said. "Once we had a terrific fight with a water snake. He bit me five times and another fellow three times but his bites did no harm."

Weed said there were four species of poisonous snakes in the United States today but in rare numbers. He classified them as follows:

The rattler, of which there are 12 or more classes.

Coral, a cousin of the dangerous cobra of the jungles, and nearly as poisonous.

Copperhead, found frequently in the middle west.

Water moccasin, which resembles the water snake in color, but are found only in the southern part of the United States.

Of the non-poisonous species, Weed said there were many of all sizes and descriptions squirming through the prairies and meadows but their bite has only one sting. Even the rattler will get out of your way ordinarily and he is so rare he doesn't cross your path often.

Warns Against Fear

Schmidt's article warned against the practice of older persons instilling fear of snakes in children.

"It is a widely held belief that the common aversion to snakes which amounts to a violent fear in many persons, is instinctive in the human race," the article states. "The evidence at my disposal leads me to the conclusion that the aversion and fear, when they exist, are wholly due to the example of older persons.

"I have never found any child who exhibited the slightest fear of snakes if he had not previously been frightened about them. On the average, I find the fear much more frequent in older than in younger children."

Electra Pastor And Singers Take Part In KGKO Program

Three sacred programs were given over radio station KGKO Sunday afternoon from 3 to 6 o'clock, Rev. C. C. Klingman of Electra, Harry Hines, and Rev. Patrick D. Moreland being the three speakers on the program.

Rev. Mr. Klingman, pastor of the First Christian church, was accompanied here by a mixed quartet from his church, and musical numbers were used during the course of his sermon as illustrations of his theme.

The laymen's hour, from 4 to 5 o'clock, was given to Harry Hines, who talked on "Prayer," and to R.E. Shepherd. Requests for favorite songs kept Mr. Shepherd constantly before the microphone, following Mr. Hines' sermon. "Face to Face" and "The Holy City," besides a great many gospel songs, were sung in response to calls from radio listeners.

The Bible class hour, from 5 to 6 o'clock, was given to the subject of "The Old Fashioned Home," and was dedicated by Rev. Mr. Moreland to a woman in this city who had requested the talk and the songs which were used. Musical numbers on the program for the hour were sung by a mixed quartet from the Grant Street Methodist Episcopal church, of which Rev. Mr. Moreland is the pastor.

Judge Instructs Verdict in Suit

Judge Allan D. Montgomery Saturday ordered an instructed verdict for the defendants in the $50,000 damage suit of W. P. Thurman against J. W. Culberson and others. Mr. Thurman was attempting to recover for alleged injuries suffered in an automobile accident at the corner of Ninth and Bluff streets in 1927.

Judge Montgomery ruled that as a matter of law J. D. Cutbirth, who was driving the car at the time of the accident, was an independent contractor and not the agent of the defendants in the suit. The court held, therefore, that the defendants named were not liable for the damages.

Mr. Thurman was struck by the car as he attempted to cross the street, and was knocked a distance of 60 feet, according to his petition. He claimed permanent injuries.

COUNTY MAKES AWARDS TODAY

Purchase of $50,000 Worth Of Supplies Scheduled

Bids on all supplies for commissioners and county officials for the year will be opened at the regular meeting of the commissioners court Monday. Materials valued at more than $50,000 will be included in the bids.

The commissioners' supplies make up the heaviest item in the year's supply bill. M. A. Bundy, commissioner from precinct 1, which includes Wichita Falls, thinks his needs will cost between $10,000 and $15,000. His list includes 20,000 gallons of gasoline, 200 sacks of cement for culverts, lumber for bridges, feed for county mules, wire and posts for the fencing of highways, and rock asphalt for old and new roads. Commissioners from the other three precincts have prepared similar lists.

More than a dozen bids are expected at the Monday morning session. The stationery and office supplies to be used by all county officials throughout the year will be purchased through contracts let Monday.

Bids for the county depository will be received at the same time.

Witchcraft Cases May Be Reopened

YORK, Penn., Feb. 3 (UP)—The case of John Curry, 14 year old lad whose curiosity to "see some witch stuff work" ended three weeks ago in a life sentence for murder, may be reopened.

Determined efforts to gain for him a new trial, have resulted from a definite change in sentiment here with regard to the so-called witchcraft murders. If a new trial is obtained, Clarence Darrow, noted criminal lawyer, whose record covers such famous cases at the McNamara trials of 1910-11 in Los Angeles; the Loeb-Leopold case in Chicago; and the Scopes evolution case in Dayton, Tenn., may become associated with young Curry's defense.

Aunt Adopts Child To End Suit Here

Adopted by a wealthy aunt who lives on a farm in Nebraska, a five-year-old girl whose custody was contested between her mother and Wichita county in the 89th district court Saturday, is on her way to her new home in the northwest.

The adoption was made with the full consent of the mother, who had employed a lawyer to combat the effort of the county to declare the child a dependent.

The little girl was taken from her home early last week after city officials had told J. A. McDonald, juvenile officer, that her mother was in jail.
