'Kid' Dave Miller A real stand-up kind of person

By ANGELA LEGGETT
Staff Writer

This mobile comedian is from Pampa — no kidding!

"Kid" Dave Miller has traveled to the Bahamas, the Gulf of Mexico, and throughout the United States, but recently he spent a week at home.

Miller, 32, is the son of Tom who is employed with Texaco and JoAnn who is a housewife. He is the oldest of four children, Charlie, Pam, and Jay. Miller graduated from Pampa High School in 1978.

"I lived in Pampa until five years ago," he said. "I haven't really lived anywhere since."

Miller said he still has lots of buddies in town and he tries to make it back to Pampa twice a year. "I'm sort of based out of Atlanta," he said.

Miller received an agriculture economics degree from Texas Tech. He went to Dallas to attend graduate school and planned to get a degree in finance.

His credits had not transferred when he got to Dallas, so he ended up at amateur night for $1 watching comedians.

"They were terrible," he said. "I talked to the manager and eventually ended up working at a Funny Bone club in Arlington."

After working there for about a year, he was doing 15-minute openers.

He had a 14-week schedule arranged traveling between Funny Bone clubs in the area.

"When I got another night off, I'd do an audition," he said. "Sometimes it's just who knows who."

Miller said he has performed at college campuses all over the United States.

"Sometimes it is in the college cafeteria on a lunch table with horrible sound equipment," he said.

"Sometimes the crowd is great, sometimes they're terrible."

On college campuses you have to worry about being politically correct, he said. They are still trying to form their ideas and they worry about stuff like being racist, sexist, or an idealist.

"You can't do any gay bashing," he said. "It has to be generic stuff, so as not to offend anyone."

In night clubs the range usually in attendance is between the ages of 25 and 40, he said. Usually by the age of 30, people are mellow, he said.

"I don't want to be doing stand-up on the road for more than 10 years," he said.

Topics he uses in his show include news, family and traveling.

He said the bulk of his show includes relationships because that is what most people relate to easily.

A typical day for Miller begins around 9 a.m.

"My work day doesn't really begin until 8 p.m.," he said. "When I start I get this adrenaline thing, and I can't go home and go to bed, so I'm often still up until 2 a.m. most nights."

He said if he is in the same place and he doesn't have to travel anywhere then he'll read two papers when he gets up in the morning.

"I read a local paper and try to find something to open with," he said. "I try to hit a few golf balls, watch television, movies, see local landmarks, or work on my word processor."

His hobbies include playing golf, but his favorite pastime is watching movies and writing screen plays.

"I see millions that are bad," he said. "I often see three a week."

Currently he has written a comedy he is trying to market.

"It is about a comedian team of two who are on the road," he said. "It is like Jerry Lewis and Dean Martin. One is wild and one is straight."

He compared the two to himself and his brother in Atlanta who is a preacher.

For voters it's change vs. four more years

Bill Clinton and George Bush crisscrossed the country today in a frenzied campaign finale, the president predicting a historic comeback and the Democrat sounding more confident by the minute. "Put the parade on hold," Bush warned Clinton. "We've had enough neglect," Clinton countered.

Ross Perot stirred things to the very end, predicting a 50-state landslide that would defy poll after poll showing him a distant third and Clinton with a daunting edge in state-by-state electoral math.

"We are going to pull off one of the biggest surprises in political history," Bush told a rain-soaked rally in suburban Philadelphia on the final day of his final campaign. "Bill Clinton wants to expand American government. I want to expand the American dream."

Democrat Clinton saw it differently, telling a Cleveland airport rally his was a campaign to "drown out the negative voices that have held us back too long."

His voice almost gone, Clinton pushed on with a marathon day — 10 stops in eight states. His confidence was reflected in his introduction of his wife, Hillary, as "the next first lady."

Democratic National Committee Chairman Ronald H. Brown was on hand for Clinton's final day. "I feel victory in the air," said Brown, whose party last won the White House in 1976.

"Press on and bring us victory," Clinton said earlier as he, like Bush, addressed a crowd waiting in the rain. Clinton's outside the Mayfair Diner in Philadelphia.

On the final day, Clinton framed the race as "a fight between the comfort of the status quo and the courage to embrace new ideas." Bush saw it this way: "I have been tested. ... Let's keep a president in the Oval Office who is strong and knows how to stand up for America."

The 1992 campaign was played out before an involved, sometimes angry electorate, the presidential race a spirited generational battle from beginning to end, the banner contest in a year that also had 35 Senate seats, all 435 House seats and a dozen governorships up for grabs.

So interested was Pennsylvania's Ruth Ferguson that she brought her Democrats were in no danger of losing their House and Senate majorities, yet there was plenty of drama in the individual contests. Retirements and redistricting assured more than 100 fresh faces in the House.

A big question was whether Democrats could win enough Senate races to increase their majority from 57 seats to 60 — the magic number for ending filibusters.

Female candidates battled in some of the closest races. Democrat Barbara Boxer was in a dead heat in the California polls, opposed by conservative Bruce Herschensohn. Lynn Yeakel was with striking distance of GOP Sen. Arlen Specter, hoping a Clinton win in Pennsylvania might come with coattails.

In Illinois, Carol Moseley Braun led into the final day, on the verge of becoming the first black woman ever to serve in the Senate.

Easier to predict: outcomes in favor of term-limit measures in 14 states in this year of a restive electorate.

With the end finally in sight, neither Clinton nor Bush worried about failing voices and exhaustion. But neither could ignore the final flurry of state-by-state polls that showed a substantial Clinton edge on the electoral map.

National surveys echoed Bush's dilemma. A CNN-USA Today tracking poll of 1,562 voters Saturday and Sunday showed Clinton with an eight-point lead, while a Harris poll of 1,975 voters over the same period gave Clinton a six-point edge.

Trying to make Bush's task even tougher, Clinton increased the pace for the final leg, scheduling 10 stops in eight states today on what he hoped was a 30-hour, 4,100-mile victory lap. Clinton's targets: Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Missouri, Kentucky, Texas, New Mexico and finally a sunrise rally Tuesday in Colorado before heading home to Little Rock.

Running mate Al Gore had seven states to visit: North Carolina, Georgia, Ohio, Wisconsin, Iowa, Missouri and Tennessee before arriving home early on Election Day. In one of a series of satellite interviews today, Gore said the Bush campaign's relentless character attacks were "a good sign that they don't have anything good to say about their own plans for the future of this country."

Government forces appear in control in Luanda, Angola

LUANDA, Angola (AP) — The government today was establishing control in Luanda hours after a U.N.-brokered cease-fire took effect to end intense clashes with rebels that threatened to renew civil war.

Angolan state radio said up to 1,000 people died in the weekend fighting, the worst since a 1991 peace accord that ended the 16-year war between the U.S.-backed rebels and the pro-Soviet government.

Witnesses said today the battles between government forces and UNITA rebels had diminished, and police vehicles with loudspeakers cruised the streets calling for people to respect the cease-fire.

Groups of armed civilians were reportedly hunting down UNITA supporters and looting buildings they had used. A government statement head on Angolan state radio appealed for "humanitarian treatment" toward UNITA supporters.

UNITA spokesman Jardo Muekalia, in Washington, said the government had armed the civilians.

"It is basically a house-to-house hunt for UNITA sympathizers and supporters," including women and children, Muekalia said in a telephone interview. "They need not die because they supported a particular party."

Muekalia added that practically the entire rebel leadership was in Luanda for talks on a second round of presidential elections and was trapped when the fighting began. He said UNITA has appealed to the U.N. to help locate them.

A spokesman for Amnesty International said in London that it had several reports of summary executions, but it had no further details.

A UNITA spokesman in Lisbon, Carlos Fontoura, said he could not confirm news reports that UNITA Vice President Jeremias Chitunda and other top officials were slain in the weekend battles. Both he and Muekalia said contact had been lost with UNITA leaders in Luanda.

A machine-gun battle raged for about an hour after a police armored car shelled UNITA positions in Luanda's diplomatic quarter before dawn. Explosions and gunfire were also heard to the east of the capital, but witnesses said that firing died down at around 8 a.m.

The fighting was the worst since tensions began escalating after UNITA lost national elections in late September to the government with which it fought a 16-year civil war.

UNITA leader Jonas Savimbi contends the elections were rigged, although the United Nations says the balloting was generally free and fair.

UNITA, the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola, ran second to the governing Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola in voting for the national legislature. Savimbi trailed incumbent Eduardo dos Santos in the presidential race, although dos Santos did not get the 50 percent needed for a first-round victory.

The elections were held under a 1991 peace accord to end a civil war that killed 350,000 people. The war, which broke out shortly before independence from Portugal in 1975, turned into one of the Cold War's fiercest proxy battles.

UNITA got support from the United States and South Africa while the MPLA was backed by Cuban troops and Soviet aid. But as European communism collapsed, dos Santos began leading the MPLA away from orthodox Marxism.

Unconfirmed reports on Portuguese radio today said a number of leading UNITA officials in Luanda had been killed, wounded or captured over the weekend. One said Abel Chivukuvuku, UNITA's foreign affairs spokesman, was seriously wounded and being treated at a military hospital.

Savimbi left the capital three weeks ago and was last reported in the central highland city of Huambo. He has been rumored to be in Morocco, but the rumors could not be confirmed.

The speed with which the cease-fire was worked out Sunday with U.N., U.S. and Portuguese mediation — suggested that both sides wanted to step back from the brink of another nationwide conflict. But Edmund de Jarnette, head of the U.S. mission, described the situation as "still confused."

The weekend fighting left the capital in chaos.

A nurse at Luanda's Prenda Hospital told Lisbon's TSF radio today: "There's no medicine, no doctors, nothing, just bodies and wounded lying on the floor."

The situation outside Luanda was unclear today.

Supreme Court lets woman pursue sex discrimination case

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today let an upstate New York school cleaner pursue her claim that she is being paid less than male custodians because of her sex.

The court, by a 6-3 vote, rejected the school district's argument that the pay difference is legal because the custodians had to pass a state civil service exam and she did not.

Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Byron R. White and Sandra Day O'Connor voted to hear arguments in the case. But four votes are needed to grant such review, so the school district's appeal fell one vote short.

In an opinion for the three, White said the court should use the case to resolve conflicting rulings among federal appeals courts over how to interpret the Equal Pay Act.

Cora Aldrich has worked as a cleaner for the Randolph Central School District in Cattaraugus County since 1982. She took the civil service exam for the higher-paid custodian's job several times, but never ranked among the top three applicants from whom custodians are hired.

Both jobs are open to both sexes, but all the cleaners at Ms. Aldrich's school were women and all the custodians were men.

After losing administrative sex-

A federal judge dismissed her lawsuit, but the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reinstated the Equal Pay Act claim.

Use of a job-classification system that results in different pay must be "rooted in legitimate business-related differences in work responsibilities and qualifications for the particular positions at issue," the appeals court said.

In its appeal, the school district said that ruling would create problems for any school district whose hiring practices are governed by state civil service laws. The obligation to follow state law is "a necessary and essential business reason," the school district's lawyers said.

Ms. Aldrich replied that the district was using the civil service exam to justify different pay for essentially equal work, adding that aside from the exam there were no minimum qualifications to become either a cleaner or a custodian. The school district at one time provided equal pay for the two jobs and it could do so again, she said.

Jewish group leads nation in net donations

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United Jewish Appeal attracted more private donations than any other non-profit group during the past 12 months, according to a survey of philanthropic fund raising.

The survey by the Chronicle of Philanthropy, released Sunday, also found that donations to major charities increased 5.8 percent, well ahead of the inflation rate, during the past year.

The Chronicle, a trade paper that reports on philanthropic organizations, said the national United Jewish Appeal posted a 57 percent increase in donations in 1991, raising $668.1 million.

Much of the increase was attributed to the organization's Operation Exodus campaign to raise money to help Soviet Jews emigrate to Israel. The organization finished in third place in 1990.

The Salvation Army raised $649 million, down 1.5 percent from 1990, putting it in second place overall and in first place among organizations that the Chronicle classified in the human services category.

Second Harvest of Chicago, which receives most of its private donations in food, placed third overall with collections valued at $404.5 million.

The American Red Cross dropped 26 percent, from $520.2 million to $386.1 million, and finished fourth. It was second in the 1990 survey.

The organization's vice president for finance, John D. Campbell, told the Chronicle that disaster relief collections were down because no one disaster drew national attention in 1991.

He said the Red Cross has begun a new disaster relief campaign and expects to see an increase this year because of Hurricane Andrew.

Next in order were the 1,400 groups comprising Catholic Charities USA, up 15 percent to $368.3 million; the American Cancer Society, up 22.9 percent at $346.3 million; and the American Heart Association at $235.7 million.

The United Jewish Appeal of New York City, which is in the midst of a $1.2 billion fund-raising campaign for construction and improvements, placed 8th at $235.5 million.

Rounding out the top 10 were the YMCA of the USA at $214.5 million and the Boy Scouts of America at $209.6 million.

Harvard led among colleges and universities, raising $195.6 million. Stanford was next at $180.9 million, followed by Cornell at $177.1 million. Brigham Young University, which the Chronicle said had not previously provided figures to allow it to be ranked, was fourth among colleges and universities and 17th overall at $160.4 million.

The rankings are according to private donations, not total income, and do not reflect government grants and other sources.

Police catch man who reportedly fled from custody

An escapee was picked up approximately 2 1/2 hours after he fled the Pampa city jail on Sunday, according to police officials.

Johnny Todd Preston, 20, 821 W. Kingsmill Ave., was taken into custody at approximately 8:30 p.m. by officers of the Pampa Police Department patrol division along with detectives of the criminal investigation division in the 500 block of North Russell, according to a new release by Detective Morse Burroughs.

"The escape occurred after Preston, escorted by officer Jesus Garcia, was removing trash from the jail area and had taken the trash to a dumpster on the south side of City Hall," stated Burroughs. "Preston had been in custody since Friday after he was arrested on outstanding warrants from the municipal court."

Burroughs said a felony complaint of escape will be represented to the district attorney's office today. Additional charges were pending against Preston at the time of his escape and were scheduled to be reviewed by the district attorney today.

There were no injuries in the escape or arrest to either Preston or police officers, officials said.

AUSTIN (AP) — The Lone Star State moves into the lottery big leagues this week by launching a game that could produce some Texas-size jackpots.

The Lotto Texas jackpot will be at least $2 million, and more if a lot of tickets are sold. And still more if no one wins the grand prize and the money is rolled over into the next drawing.

Given the size of Texas, watchers of the nation's 34 other state lotteries say it won't take long for the jackpots to reach into the tens of millions.

"Everybody is expecting Texas to get off with a big bang," said Terri La Fleur, senior editor of Gaming and Wagering Business magazine. "They could be getting into pretty big jackpots early."

Texas, one of the few states without an income tax, started a lottery in May to raise revenue, selling scratch-off tickets good for a grand prize of $500. By Oct. 15, $737 million in tickets had been sold and $333 million paid out in prizes.

Tickets for the lotto game go on sale Saturday, with the first drawing a week later. From then on, there will be two drawings a week.

Each $1 ticket entitles a player to pick six numbers from one to 50. Matching all six wins the grand prize — if more than one person matches all six, the jackpot is shared — and lesser sums are awarded to players matching five, four or three numbers.

The odds of picking all six winning numbers are 1 in 15,890,700.

In other states, carried-over jackpots have mounted into prizes of astounding size. A California jackpot hit $118 million in 1991.

Critics say higher jackpots will lure more problem gamblers and more poor people who can't afford to spend their money on lottery tickets.

"It is specifically with that kind of prizes that the poor, the less educated, the people with less opportunities in our society, are coaxed and manipulated into purchasing lotto tickets in order to win the big one," said Weston Ware, associate director of the Texas Baptist Christian Life Commission.

Brother of Charles Stuart pleads guilty in slaying of sister-in-law

By JON MARCUS
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Matthew Stuart today entered a guilty plea today to charges connected with the 1989 murder of his brother Charles' wife.

Stuart's plea, part of an agreement whose details were not immediately released, came as jury selection was scheduled to begin on fraud and obstruction of justice charges. Matthew Stuart admitted disposing of the gun allegedly used to kill Carol DiMaiti Stuart three years ago.

The judge did not immediately rule on whether he would accept the plea, but first asked that prosecutors outline details of the case, which drew nationwide outrage.

Charles Stuart, a white man, had claimed a black mugger killed his pregnant wife and wounded him in a dramatic attack.

Stuart called for help on his car phone in Oct. 23, 1989, telling police he and his 30-year-old wife had been shot as they were returning to the suburbs from a childbirth class in the city. Mrs. Stuart died that night, and her son, Christopher, was delivered prematurely and died weeks later.

In January 1990, Charles Stuart apparently jumped from a bridge and was found dead a day after his brother implicated him in the crime. The revelation brought severe criticism on the Boston police and media from blacks who said they were all-too-willing to believe that a black man had fired the shots.

Matthew Stuart, now 26, had maintained all along that he did not know there was a plot to kill Mrs. Stuart and that he only pieced it together after disposing of a gun and some of Mrs. Stuart's possessions. Police said he told officers he thought his older brother wanted him to help stage a phony theft for the insurance money.

Earlier this year, he was charged with conspiracy to commit insurance fraud and to obstruct justice, compounding a felony, concealing stolen property and unlawful carrying of a handgun.

Matthew Stuart's lawyer, Nancy Gertner, and her colleagues had said in papers filed with the court that the indictments "typify the commonwealth's frustration after Charles Stuart committed suicide and thereby avoided prosecution."

Attorneys had planned to select jurors in Northampton, about 100 miles west of Boston, who were unbiased by the publicity surrounding the case. The jurors would have been bused to Boston and sequestered for the trial.

The case against Matthew Stuart hinged on a tape-recorded statement he made the night of Jan. 3, 1990, and the interpretation of a single word in a sentence indicating whether Matthew Stuart conspired with his brother to do more than hide the gun.

The defense argued Matthew Stuart said his brother asked him to help with "something he wants to get rid of," and that the statement wasn't voluntary anyway since Matthew Stuart didn't know he might face charges.

The prosecution claimed that Matthew Stuart knew his brother had "someone he wants to get rid of." Prosecutors say Matthew Stuart's comment was voluntary, since he had sought advice by that time from another lawyer.

Garcia looks happy, healthy in first concert since illness

By ELISABETH DUNHAM
Associated Press Writer

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — The Grateful Dead's Jerry Garcia used a Halloween concert to prove he remains a living legend — not the dearly departed kind — returning in good health after his rumored imminent demise.

Garcia fell seriously ill in August and the busy band was forced to cancel a fall tour. There were reports that his condition was much worse than the band was saying publicly. Rumors brewed among Grateful Dead fans that the king of psychedelic rock was dying.

But after a lengthy convalescence, a slimmed-down Garcia played Saturday with his other group, The Jerry Garcia Band, in a sold-out show at the Oakland Coliseum. A banner in the crowd read: "Welcome back Jerry!"

Garcia had lost 50 pounds, according to Grateful Dead spokesman Dennis McNally. Fans agreed that regarding their idol's physique, less was more.

"He's a lean, mean guitar-pickin' machine," said Grier McCurdy, 27, who staked out a front row spot. "He's slim and that means he's healthy and hopefully that means he'll be around for a long time."

One fan dubbed him the "Slim-fast Jerry." "He looks svelte, comparatively speaking," said Bryan Hillebrand, 24, of San Francisco. "He sounds like he is more on top of his playing."

The portly, 50-year-old rock star had been adhering to a strict nutrition and exercise program since his bout with exhaustion and other health problems.

The often-deadpan Garcia smiled frequently during the show. At one point, he even spoke to the crowd, asking: "Hey, how y'all doin'?"

The audience roared back with wild cheering and applause. "He never talks!" said one young man.

On Friday, the Grateful Dead announced plans to play nine shows in December. The veteran band was the most popular concert act in the United States last year, earning $30 million in ticket sales.

Garcia has a history of health problems that have caused breaks in the Grateful Dead's grueling concert schedules. In 1986, he was hospitalized in a diabetic coma. He also has admitted past drug use.

Teen curfew to face legal challenge

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — City officials are looking northward to determine whether their teen-age curfew law needs fine tuning.

A federal appeals case involving Dallas' teen ban is under scrutiny by San Antonio leaders, who think their own law will hold up under fire.

"We think our ordinance is a better safeguarding of constitutional rights," San Antonio Mayor Nelson Wolff said.

The Dallas curfew was recently declared unconstitutional. The U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans is now reviewing it.

But San Antonio's ordinance, unlike the Dallas curfew, has a list of 10 defenses for a minor or parent who is cited for a violation.

While the Dallas case is on appeal, the San Antonio City Council will not suspend enforcement of the midnight-to-6 a.m. curfew for youths under the age of 17.

But the San Antonio Express-News reported Sunday that the American Civil Liberties Union, drawing from legal opinions faulting the Dallas ordinance, could take action to halt the Alamo City curfew as early as this week.

"The Dallas opinion was written by a (former President) Reagan appointee, not some wild-eyed liberal," Michael Bernard, San Antonio ACLU president, said. "He says it's unconstitutional, and if he says it's unconstitutional, it's got to be pretty blatant."

San Antonio council members say their ordinance is more of a social tool, while the Dallas curfew is used by law enforcement.

Second-time violators of the San Antonio curfew must report for counseling with their parents, and judges can consider community service in lieu of assessing a fine on the third infraction.

In the San Antonio ordinance, business owners cannot be held liable, as they are in Dallas, and youths are not required to be taken into police custody.

"We've got all the exceptions the Circuit Court of Appeals said it would take to make it legal," Councilman Lyle Larson said. "The same court is now reviewing the appeal, and they'll either have to rule in favor of Dallas or overturn the previous ruling 11 years ago."

Exceptions were based on the New Orleans appeals court's ruling several years ago in a similar case. It said a curfew could exist if certain defenses were included.

"The thing about the exceptions is that you have to prove them later," Bernard said. "They still don't prevent you from being stopped and cited."

Teens freed after victim recants story

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The mother of one of two teen-agers arrested in a rape investigation says she's angered by what she called authorities' delay in releasing the youths.

Authorities said Sunday that Rodolfo Chapa Astorga, 17, was still being held at Bexar County Jail after the 12-year-old girl recanted her story.

An unidentified 15-year-old boy was freed from the county Juvenile Detention Center late Friday, said Joe Castillo, chief probation officer for the county Juvenile Probation Department.

The girl first told police she was abducted in front of Poe Middle School and taken in a car by five gang members to Herrera Park, where she was gang-raped.

But Thursday afternoon, she admitted to homicide detectives that no abduction took place and that she was only hiding from her parents, police said.

Astorga's mother contended the teens were treated unjustly by keeping them in jail more than two days after the girl recanted her story.

"They're a bunch of liars," Oralia Astorga said of her son's accusers.

Authorities said they would drop charges of aggravated sexual assault of a child and aggravated kidnapping against the teen.

The 15-year-old suspect was released about 4:30 p.m. Friday, said Castillo.

"The police gave additional information to the district attorney's office, letting them know that they were going to drop the case," he said. "Obviously, we had to release the person we had in custody."

The youth had been charged with delinquent conduct, stemming from aggravated sexual assault and aggravated kidnapping allegations.

However, Castillo denied that the juvenile was unduly detained.

"We had not gotten word from the police department and we were concerned," he said, "because if they were going to drop it (the charge), there is no reason for a kid to stay in custody through the weekend."

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Nationalism dying

Figure one is out. The auto engines were made in Ohio, then shipped to Canada. Autos then were assembled in the Great White North using the engines. Was the auto Canadian or American?

It was Japanese. Or so ruled apparatchiks at the U.S. Customs Service, fining Honda $17 million for, in effect, building cars in North America and giving jobs to Americans and Canadians. Fortunately, under the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement (FTA), Honda appealed, leading to the cancellation of the fine.

Somebody should give the Customs apparatchiks a map of the world. Just because the cars had "Honda" nameplates on them did not make them Japanese, despite what the Customs flunkies said. Even though Honda is a Japanese company, the cars clearly were manufactured in North America. Moreover, Americans, Canadians and other investors from around the world held stock in Honda.

This whole episode is not just one more example of the folly of government bureaucrats. It indicates something more: how the world's economy is becoming increasingly interconnected, making those artificial modern entities, nation-states, less relevant.

We will always have countries, of course, but perhaps more as cultural entities, not economic ones. Any country that wraps its industries in red tape will suffer economic decline. That's why the FTA and its successor treaty, the North American Free Trade Agreement, (NAFTA), which includes Mexico in the mix, promise to bring more prosperity to our nations and to act as a model for free-trade agreements with the rest of the world.

Worldwide stock exchanges, currency exchanges, information networks and personal computers now instantaneously evaluate any economic or political action. Fobish actions, such as branding an American or Canadian car "Japanese," are punished with a loss of capital. Wise actions, such as canceling the fine, are rewarded with the attraction of capital.

Someone should tell that to Sen. Donald W. Riegle of Michigan, who has complained, "I'm concerned that, in effect, by changing this basis of calculation (i.e., canceling the unjust fine), we've in a sense taken Honda off the hook." Not really. What Riegle is trying to do is to take himself off the hook. Riegle's re-election campaign this year operates under the cloud of his being one of the major players in the "Keating Five" savings-and-loan scandal. A little "Japan-bashing" might do the trick to win the votes of discontented Michigan-ders. One hopes that voters are not that stupid.

Whether or not NAFTA can be pushed through next year, either under George Bush or Bill Clinton, such pacts are the wave of the future. Without NAFTA, America's economy will not perform as well. And a stalled economy is something Americans will not tolerate, no matter how many presidents and shifty senators have to be replaced.

THE YELLOW KID — 1992

Ross Perot, sleaze artist supreme

Talk about sleaze artists! Let us give first prize in this sleazy competition to Ross Perot, the hit-and-run driver from the Lone Star State. Step forward, partner, and accept this paper-wrapped pound of maggots meat. It's as rotten as you are.

In one dirty weekend, Perot has managed to smear the president, the president's associates, and the entire Republican leadership in Texas. He has offered not one paragraph, not one sentence, not one line of hard evidence to support his charges. There is every reason to believe the story is fabricated claptrap, and no reason to believe the wild tale is true.

Prior to the evening's edition of "60 Minutes," Perot delivered a statement in Pittsburgh. His purpose was to explain why he dropped out of the presidential campaign in July. He said he had received a report of a Republican meeting at which someone had asked, "Isn't this guy sensitive to anything?"

Pause. Who brought the "report"? When was this meeting? Where? Who was there? What positions, if any, in the Republican Party did these conspirators hold? Perot does not say. The report may have come from one Scott Barnes, identified by The New York Times as a former California police officer "who for years has been accused of fabricating stories about undercover plots and dirty tricks."

Carry on. Perot continued: "And one person in the meeting — I'm thinking they said — he adores his family."

Let us pause for dissection. No one at this Republican meeting has a name or a face. Perot cannot quote what anyone actually said, only what he thinks one person may have said.

James J. Kilpatrick

Continue: "A couple of weeks later I got a report that there was a plan to smear my daughter Carolyn, who was about to get married on Aug. 23, and, believe it or not, disrupt the church service at her wedding."

Notice the disarming "believe it or not." What a master's touch is here! Because we do not know when the first "report" was made of the "Republican meeting," we cannot fix a time frame on this second "report" of the plot to defame daughter Carolyn.

Who brought this second "report" to Perot? He says it came "from a source away from government." May we please have a name?

The first report, if it ever existed, must have come in mid-June. The second came "about a week or 10 days later." Then came a third report "from a person very close to the Republican process." This person made the "identical" charge, that is, that a plan was afoot to smear Carolyn and disrupt her wedding. On July 16 Perot quit the race.

The wedding went off without a hitch. The plan, if there ever was a plan, was aborted by Perot's withdrawal. The archconspirators, if there ever were conspirators, have vanished into the mists. Barnes' telephone have been disconnected. We have not seen such melodrama since Rudolph Rassendale tied the beautiful Belinda to the railway tracks.

Let us continue. In his Pittsburgh statement, Perot said that he does indeed adore his children. He could not allow the happiest day of his daughter's life to be ruined. (Violins tremolo, professor.) Therefore he dropped out, and he wanted to add this:

"I don't want to sink to the level the rest of these people may or may not have sunk. I cannot prove any of that happened. I just got these reports."

Perot concluded by predicting that the Republicans would deny his story. "Leave it right there in your minds," he said. "Forget it. It has nothing to do with rebuilding our country ... Don't spend five minutes fretting about it. That's history. It's done." Then he sped away.

On "60 Minutes," Perot sharpened his slander. He laid the extortionate plot at the feet of persons "representing the president of the United States." These republican opponents planned to fabricate a scandalous composite photograph by putting Carolyn's head on another body. The photo then would be peddled to supermarket tabloids.

Perot waited until days before the election to tell his incredible tale. Too little time remains for the press to check it out. Perot washes his hands. "Forget it," he says.

No way. Great works of art must be rewarded. As a sleaze artist, Perot is Rembrandt born again. Give the guy the maggots meat! It's a prize he richly deserves.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Monday, Nov. 2, the 307th day of 1992. There are 59 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History: Seventy-five years ago, on Nov. 2, 1917, British Foreign Secretary Arthur Balfour expressed support for a "national home" for the Jews of Palestine in a statement that came to be known as "The Balfour Declaration."

On this date: In 1783, Gen. George Washington issued his farewell address to the Army near Princeton, N.J.

In 1795, the 11th president of the United States, James Knox Polk, was born in Mecklenburg County, N.C.

In 1865, the 29th president of the United States, Warren Gamaliel Harding, was born near Corsica, Ohio.

In 1889, North Dakota and South Dakota became the 39th and 40th states admitted to the union.

In 1920, radio station KDKA in Pittsburgh broadcast returns from the Harding-Cox presidential election (Harding won with just over 60 percent of the popular vote).

Halloween economics

Politicians, as the campaign nears its climax, get increasingly careless with "numbers," assuming there is little time left for correction and rebuttal.

On the unemphasized sunshine side of our nation's ledger, our industrial production has risen 2.1 percent since May.

If some corporations are streamlining, it may be for the same reason that you and I try to get rid of undesirable fat.

Our nation's manufacturing is up 2.8 percent (while in Germany it's down 2.5 percent and in Japan it's down 7.6 percent).

Over the past year the U.S. economy has grown faster than the economies of Japan and Germany and Canada and Britain. Our exports, in real terms, have doubled in six years, now exceed $620 million a year.

The United States has enjoyed a growth rate of 1.6 percent over the past five quarters. And were it not for military cutbacks, our growth rate would be 2.3 percent.

Paul Harvey

Our nation's percentage of jobless has declined in three months in a row, from 7.8 percent to a present 7.5 percent.

Our nation's total economy is in its sixth consecutive quarter of positive growth.

It is "slow growth," to be sure, but history says slow growth is preferable to boom-and-bust cycles. Slow growth can be sustained indefinitely.

Yet Americans, recent months, have allowed themselves to be frightened by false-face Halloween economics.

When the campaigning is behind us and the masks come off, the next President will be boasting about these numbers and claiming credit for them.

President Bush could have but didn't. Enamored with foreign affairs, President Bush always has had difficulty attaching importance to domestic economics.

He has admitted that he finds numbers boring. And thus his opposition has been able to focus an entire campaign on such scary-sounding words as "recession" and "unemployment."

The more cruel irony is that the next President, as most of his predecessors, will all too soon become enamored with international negotiations and Air Force One travel and 21-gun salutes.

And soon he, too, though elected President of the United States, will begin to imagine himself President of the world.

And we'll have this whole silly cycle to repeat all over again.

A look at the Clinton presidency

As this writer predicted three columns ago, Arkansas governor Bill Clinton will be the first Rhodes scholar to be elected president.

After coming back from a severe pummeling by the press last spring and a 10-point deficit in the public-opinion polls in May, he will enjoy a political advantage denied both Reagan and Bush: his own political party in power in both the Senate and the House of Representatives.

That's heady stuff for a candidate for whom "truth crushed to earth shall rise again" doesn't seem to apply.

In the end, this election, made more exciting by the little man with big ears, a big ego and, probably, the biggest vision of all three candidates, turns on credibility as much as it does on credibility.

Voters just don't believe Ross Perot can win. Equally distracting is his petulant style: "If we can't play my way, I'll take my ball and bat and go home."

But I do want to join him and George Bush, each of whom confessed in the last debate that he had made a mistake. I did, too.

I chided this fascinating political maverick, dismissing his candidacy as "worthless." I was wrong, and I apologize. In the debates, Perot electrified the voters with his creative solutions to the budget deficit and his buck-stops-here concept of the presidency.

The voters who have been registering in record numbers across the country (two-thirds of them Democrats) probably have been stimulated by the Perot factor.

Chuck Stone

Looking at this quadrennial exercise in logorrhea and tergiversation, we have a mnemonic device that capsulizes the three candidacies.

Perot: "For all sad words of tongue and pen, the saddest are these: 'It might have been.'" If only Perot had not withdrawn....if only he could have developed a working relationship with some professionals....

Bush: "Men and Women in Conversation: You Just Don't Understand" (the title of Deborah Tannen's best seller).

George Bush and Dan Quayle never did. They ran a race based on the most narrow-minded parochialism conceivable. After 12 Republican years of trying to shove America's middle class onto welfare, the Bush-Quayle ticket neither heard nor understood the anguished cries of suffering ordinary Americans.

For Clinton: "Change everything, except your loves." Few candidates in electoral history have followed Voltaire's advice more faithfully than Slick Willie. He not only offered the country a new vision and a new covenant based on change; his own positions and explanations changed more often than a model in a fashion show.

America desperately needs change — a change in administration, a change in direction, a change in stewardship, a change that will sweep in a breath of fresh political air.

For women, struggling suburbanites, blacks, Hispanics and liberals — who, like Alcibiades, have longed for our country so much that we'll go to any length to recover it (such as electing Bill Clinton) — this election is a great leap of faith.

The rise of a favorable attitude toward Clinton is the direct result of a declining favorable attitude toward Bush. In fact, voters who troop to the polls to vote for Clinton will be warily looking over their shoulders at a man whom few will be surprised to see double-cross them during his presidency.

Bush rendered a public service in exposing Clinton's congenital duplicity. Unfortunately for Bush, it was all too obviously a case of the pot calling the kettle black.

Yet, given all of Clinton's frailties ("he walks on water because he can't swim"), he will still inaugurate a new era in the American presidency. I'm looking for a dramatic Rooseveltian "100 days," especially given his embrace of Keynesian economics (as FDR).

Beginning in January, 1993, we — the Clinton presidency and the American people — have a rare opportunity to achieve greatness of purpose with a largeness of heart. To quote a soon-to-be defeated president: "Let's get it on."

32 Texans will cast state's presidential votes

AUSTIN (AP) — Texans won't actually elect a president Tuesday. Instead, they'll choose 32 people who will help do the job.

They are the Texans who will cast votes in the nation's Electoral College.

On Election Day, voters choose electors by casting ballots for president and vice president. Electors are apportioned one for every U.S. House member and senator in each state, plus three for the District of Columbia, 538 in all.

If a majority of the electoral votes — 270 — go for one candidate, he's elected president. If no one gets a majority, the election is given to the U.S. House.

With the Texas House delegation growing from 27 to 30, the state's electoral votes rose from 29 to 32 this year.

On Dec. 14, electors will meet in Austin and cast their votes for president and vice president.

The votes are sealed and sent to the U.S. Senate president, who opens and reads them with those of the other states before both houses of Congress on Jan. 6.

Electors are chosen from lists of individuals submitted by the political parties or independent candidates. These people were nominated at state party conventions or are designated by independent candidates.

The Texas Democratic and Republican parties designated their 32 electors at state conventions held last June.

Independent Ross Perot, who got onto the ballot by submitting more than 54,000 petition signatures, designated his own slate of electors then, said Mark Bell, spokesman for Secretary of State John Hannah, Texas' chief elections officer.

"The list of electors for Ross Perot was filed at the same time as his petitions," Bell said.

Bell said every presidential candidate, including the Libertarian Party nominee and seven write-in candidates certified for the ballot, also were required to file elector lists.

LBJ's hometown not wild about Democratic ticket

JOHNSON CITY (AP) — This is the hometown of the late President Lyndon B. Johnson. And lots of folks in this Hill Country community describe themselves as Democrats.

But Bill Clinton, beware.

Blanco County voters have gone Republican the last five presidential elections, and if you listen to some townspeople talk, it's clear they're not sold on the Democrats this time, either.

"I'm ready for a change, but I'm not sure enough to vote for Clinton," said Joyce Ellis, 68, who runs a store, selling canned peaches, peppers and other produce. Mrs. Ellis said she is leaning toward President Bush.

Of 18 people informally interviewed, six were for Bush or probably for Bush; two for Clinton; four for independent Ross Perot; two undecided; and one planned to write in a candidate. Three had no comment.

Chester Goehmann, 66, a goat and sheep rancher who has lived in the area all his life, said he has no choice but to vote for Bush.

"I don't know what Mr. Clinton is up to," Goehmann said. "I don't like his running mate at all. I don't like his environmental policies."

But Goehmann's friend Nelson Withers, 68, who runs the Blanco County Supply Co. Inc., a hardware and agriculture store, said he's trying to decide between Bush and Clinton.

"You've got three black-eyed peas in a pod," Withers said. "I'm pretty much a Democrat, but I'm not a die-

ELECTORAL VOTES FOR PRESIDENT (based on 1990 Census)

With 100 senators and 435 representatives (plus three electors from the District of Columbia) there are 538 members of the Electoral College. A majority of 270 electoral votes is needed to elect the president.

The final slate of the state's electors depends on which candidate wins the popular vote. But there is no legal requirement that electors cast ballots for their designated candidate.

Mindful of the upstart candidacy of Perot, state Democratic Chairman Bob Slagle this year asked his party's electors to sign loyalty oaths pledging their votes for the Democratic nominee.

"I don't need to tell you how important it is that our presidential electors be 100 percent party loyalists this year ... It is not just an honorary appointment," Slagle said at the time.

"This is not fun and games. We intend to win the presidency of the United States ... and I expect Texas electors — from the Democratic Party side at least — will do the right thing in the right way," he said.

Karen Hughes, executive director of the Texas Republican Party, said Republican electors also have pledged to vote for President Bush.

"It's in our party rules," Ms. Hughes said. "It's not something we do as an exception. It's something we always do. They have to sign an affidavit."

She's not worried, either, whether the GOP electors will vote for President Bush if he carries the state. "There's no doubt," she laughed.

Each day counts for unit prisoners

By ANGELA LEGGETT
Staff Writer

Inmates at the Rufe Jordan Unit follow a strict, 24-hour schedule beginning at midnight, said Major Fernando De La Rosa.

The major explained a roster of the tentative schedule for the inmates.

There are certain things, like a count, that happen repetitively throughout the inmate's day, said De La Rosa.

A count is when every inmate is accounted for, he said. They are either all in their house (cell) or they are all counted where they are in the prison — at work, education or health care.

"There is a count after a large movement of activity," he said. Following meals there is always a count.

"If the inmates are in the workplace, the count is taken and turned into a centralized area," De La Rosa said. "All movement stops. We usually give them 30 minutes to clear a count."

He said medical emergencies take precedent over a count.

"Medical emergencies are dealt with above all else," he said.

Officers are assigned to each wing. There are four buildings which house inmates at the Pampa prison site. Each building has three wings with a center control panel to oversee the inmates.

There are also shift supervisors, De La Rosa said.

"The schedule will change as activities are added to it," he said. "Now it (the schedule) is a page and a half, but by the time everything is added in it will be four or five pages long."

The schedule begins at midnight.

There is a count at 1 a.m. and at 2:30 a.m., De La Rosa said. "Inmates are awakened at 3 a.m. to get ready for breakfast," he said. "They eat breakfast from 3:15 until 5:15."

He said not all inmates eat at the same time.

"Their schedule adheres to what is going on in a particular building and wing," he said.

The recreation area is open for inmates when they are not assigned to work, attending educational classes or when they do not have medical appointments, De La Rosa said.

"We train them to do work in many different areas," De La Rosa said. "We want to help them to make use of their potential."

He said the prison system makes an effort to educate them.

"We see what their capabilities are. The biggest thing is to keep their minds occupied."

Breakfast ends for inmates at 5:15 a.m.

"After breakfast, those who have kitchen or maintenance (duties) begin working at 5:30 a.m.," he said.

"Then there is a count."

At 6 a.m. the officers sit through a briefing, he said. Then at 6:15 a.m. one shift relieves the other shift.

At 7:30 a.m., inmates can take part in recreation and their dayrooms are open.

Each wing is made up of a dayroom with tables and televisions. The cells are off of the dayroom.

They also have recreational activities they can take part in at certain times outside in the courtyard between all of the buildings. The courtyard has handball, basketball and a pavilion.

There is also a gymnasium with weights and a craft area.

"There is a craft shop, but they have to meet certain requirements before they can take part in that," De La Rosa said.

The two-inmate cell is complete with two beds, a desk, sink and urinal.

"There is a commissary and the inmates have a certain amount of their money they are able to spend," De La Rosa said. "There is a window off the yard they can buy things from, they never go into the building."

At 8 a.m. the showers are open.

Lunch is served beginning at 10 a.m. At the same time, showers and the recreation area is closed. Lunch is over at 12:30 p.m. and there is a count.

After the count, the dayroom and recreation yard again are opened.

At 2 p.m. there is a briefing for the next shift and a 2:15 p.m. the shift is relieved.

The showers are open again at 3 p.m.

Dinner begins at 4 p.m. and at 6:30 p.m. the count clears and everything opens, he said. The inmates return to the workplace and the count is turned into a centralized area.

"Some inmates aren't working but are attending educational classes and other are having health care appointments," he said. "I still need to check with various department heads and make sure my time does not contradict with their schedules, like health services."

At 10 p.m. there is a shift briefing and shifts change at 10:15 p.m.

"At 10:30 p.m., everyone is in their house," he said. "As soon as everyone is in their house there is a count. There is another count at 11:30 p.m."

He said this is a basic routine except for holidays and weekends.

Some are granted more time for recreation, he said.

The inmates are allowed visitations from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturdays and Sundays. De La Rosa said they are not allowed visitors on holidays.

"There is a lot that goes into consideration before they are allowed visitors," he said.

De La Rosa is top uniformed officer

By ANGELA LEGGETT
Staff Writer

Third in command at the Rufe Jordan Prison Unit is Fernando De La Rosa, major and highest ranking uniformed officer.

De La Rosa has worked with the prison system for nearly 16 years, he said.

He graduated from high school in Los Angeles and received an associate degree in law enforcement for police management from Alvin Community College in 1987. He received a bachelor's degree in science from the University of Houston in 1991.

De La Rosa transferred from the Ramsey I Prison Unit south of Houston.

"It is an older building, a little bit bigger," he said.

De La Rosa anticipated working in a new prison building with prison system advancements.

He said he went directly into the prison system in 1977 after he got out of the U.S. Marine Corps.

"I had been working in military police when I was in the Marine Corps," he said.

"Working in the prison system was similar to the work I had been doing."

De La Rosa recently was promoted to building major and that is how he and his family came to live in Pampa.

He said he has worked his way up in the system.

The major is assisted by the building supervisor. He deals with everything inside the prison fence, hope said.

"I don't believe in sitting down," he said. "I try to work 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., five days a week. We rotate shifts to cover weekends."

De La Rosa and his family come from Rosharon, a city 30 miles outside of Houston.

Before working near Houston, the De La Rosa family originally resided in the Rio Grande Valley, he said.

"My wife and I come from an area way down south," De La Rosa said.

He and his wife, Hilda, have two children, a son Fernando, 15, at Pampa High School and a daughter, Lizet, 13, who is attending Pampa Middle School.

"My son is a sophomore and likes to play football," De La Rosa said. "My daughter is a seventh-grader and she likes music."

"The people have been very good to us here in Pampa," he said.

Education aims at reducing recidivism

By CHERYL BERZANSKIS
Lifestyles Editor

A staff of educators led by principal Sharon Holmes is charged with meeting the educational needs of prison inmates at the Rufe Jordan Unit.

Holmes, and other employees of the Windham School System, work at prison units throughout Texas offering education at least through the sixth-grade level and prepare other inmates for earning a general equivalency diploma.

Transferring from the Clements

Unit in Amarillo, she has 20 years experience in education and leads a staff of more than 30, including teachers, vocational counselors, secretaries, reintegration of offender (RIO) counselors, a test examiner, a librarian, an instructional aid, and correctional officers.

Offenders who test below the sixth-grade level are required by Texas Department of Criminal Justice to take classes to bring them to that level. Further educational training is voluntary.

Staff teachers are certified in English, math, science or history.

Windham provides training to meet the particular needs of the inmate population, she said.

Inmates enrolled in school attend classes three hours daily. When arriving at the unit, an inmate is assessed and placed in the spot where he is lacking. He is re-tested after every 100 hours of instruction to evaluate progress. English as a second language and special education classes are available also.

"When you work with adults, the teacher acts as facilitator for that adult to learn," she explained.

"They have been failures in public schools," Holmes said. Gaps in learning made it difficult to progress, so the Windham-developed curriculum is self-paced and competency-based.

Besides the three R's, inmates receive instruction in drug and alcohol abuse, and life skills. RIO counselors coach near-release inmates about job hunting and getting along on the job.

"The men we are dealing with have limited skills in this area," Holmes said. "Our whole total premise is that if we can educate them, then they will be able to get a job and won't be coming back to prison."

Vocational training, Holmes said, is very popular among inmates. The Rufe Jordan Unit plans to offer major appliance repair, electrical trades and controls technology. An inmate may study vocational training six hours a day, either alone or in conjunction with academic studies.

Holmes said about 80 percent of entering inmates lack a high school diploma. Within TDCJ, 4,000 GEDs are awarded yearly. Windham serves about 39,000 Texas inmates.

Correctional officers are assigned to the schoolroom. Holmes said she was never afraid in the Clements Unit.

"I'm aware of where I am and I want teachers to be conscious of that," she said. "You'd be surprised if you'd come to a unit. The men are courteous, respectful, they'll speak to you."

Her incarcerated pupils are motivated by many reasons to learn — some are required by TDCJ to enroll, another is required to have a GED or a vocational course to be eligible for parole, while some just want a chance to start over in a controlled environment.

Many of her charges have drug and/or alcohol problems. Focusing on that are substance abuse counselors and Alcoholics Anonymous groups. Citing drug and alcohol abuse as societal problems, Holmes said that counselors focus on where each inmate is in terms of his recovery.

Her job is rewarding, Holmes said, because of the progress of the adult students.

"Men are grateful you're there. They're grateful you've provided them an education. I've seen old men — 50 or 60 — get their GED. They're so proud they'll tell you, they'll tell everyone."

Win or lose, Bush hits end of campaign trail

SHORT HILLS, N.J. (AP) — George Bush made his first campaign speech when he unsuccessfully ran for the U.S. Senate in 1964 and today he was making his last. Win or lose Tuesday, this ends his final campaign.

"I have no political horizon," he said Sunday.

For the president, the trail finishes where it began — in Houston, where he ran for the House of Representatives in 1966 and won.

He's convinced Tuesday will bring another victory with the help of voters in the six states where he was speaking today: New Jersey with 15 electoral votes; Pennsylvania with 23; Ohio with 21; Kentucky with eight; Louisiana with nine; and Texas with 32.

Why those particular states? "Because we think we're close and we'd like to carry them," Bush campaign chairman Robert Teeter said as the president arrived in New Jersey.

He added: "I think they will help us get to (the) 270 electoral votes needed to win."

By Teeter's reckoning, Bush had sewn up states with a total of 140 electoral votes and was a possible winner in states with 60 more.

Torie Clarke, spokeswoman for the campaign, said the Bush-Quayle organization had quit its own polling and was relying instead on reports from the states.

Despite Bush's upsurge in the polls as the race neared the last full-on, the president's strategists agreed that Bush could forego only one of the four industrial states he was visiting today.

Bush has made no secret that he dislikes this year's campaigning — but he soldiered on with gusto in the final campaign blitz even while the polls had it going away from him.

At the last stop of a 279-mile, Harry Truman-style, whistlestop campaign in Wisconsin on Saturday, Bush was greeted by a patient crowd that was chilled to the bone by a damp drizzle.

"It is great for the morale," he said. "It convinces me we'll win Wisconsin. It convinces me we will win the election."

But a Milwaukee Journal poll Sunday was as gloomy for Bush as the weather. It showed him narrowing the gap but still trailing Bill Clinton 38 percent to 35 percent, with Ross Perot drawing 20 percent.

The president exhorted his audiences not to be discouraged by the polls.

"It is the people who choose the leaders, not the pollsters," he said at stop after stop.

Bush also took a cue throughout the campaign from Truman, who made fun of the journalists who branded him a loser before a single vote had been tallied.

"I love that bumper sticker, 'Annoy the Media, Re-elect Bush,'" he said repeatedly. "If you want to join me in taking out your wrath on the media, I suggest we look at the faceless talking heads on those Sunday morning talk shows — those Republicans and Democrats who have written me off long ago, and we're going to show them next Tuesday."

His message had effect: Reporters and photographers flying into Stratford, Conn., with him Sunday were greeted with boos.

Bush, who grew up in Connecticut, lost his 1964 Senate bid but successfully ran for Congress in 1966 in Texas where he had a flourishing oil business. He has maintained Houston as his legal residence, even though he only has a suite in a hotel there, while running unsuccessfully for the Senate in 1970 and in his victorious 1980 and 1984 campaigns for vice president and the 1988 effort for president.

While Bush spoke confidently of victory, his body language often showed how acutely he felt the battering he took in the polls. At times, he seemed subdued, even resigned.

Asked Sunday on CNN about overnight polls showing that Clinton's lead was increasing slightly again after narrowing over the past week, Bush said:

"You don't live or die by an overnight poll. Trick or Treat. You know what I mean? Last night. So, just take your message to the people, emphasize leadership and emphasize character and trust. And I believe I'm going to win."

Clinton hopes last-day sprint will wrap up election

By STEVEN KOMAROW
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A worn but determined Bill Clinton is capping his marathon campaign by rallying supporters for what he calls a historic election that will determine the course of the nation well into the next century.

"In this last year and a month, I have done everything I could to reach the heart and the mind of America," he told 20,000 supporters at a New Jersey sports arena Sunday night. "I ask you now to remember that all the long walk is still to be consummated by election day."

The Arkansas governor focused on the decision he'd like Americans to see as they enter the voting booths.

It was a choice he was driving home with all his energy, running on adrenaline, in a final campaign swing stretching from this morning through Tuesday morning.

"This is a great contest between hope and fear. This is a contest between unity and division, and contest between responsibility and blame, a contest between the courage to change and the comfort of the status quo."

"I think I know what your answer will be," he said.

For Clinton, the end of his campaign was a 4,000 mile around-the-clock journey, chasing the sun and the moon from the Liberty

Bell to the Rocky Mountains before returning to his Little Rock, Ark., home Tuesday morning to vote.

The eight states on the agenda — Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Missouri, Kentucky, Texas, New Mexico and Colorado — plus Arkansas total 132 of the 270 electoral votes needed to win.

Before bedding down in Philadelphia this morning to rest for the final push, he visited a Cherry Hill, N.J., racetrack, welcomed with a fireworks display. He played his saxophone for thousands of screaming supporters and met and a horse named "Bubba Clinton." The horse overcame 17-1 odds to win its race last week.

"I have almost lost my voice trying to win American back for you," he rasped to the crowd, which waited until 12:30 a.m. for his arrival.

After delivering his brief speech, and patiently nodding and gesturing to the crowd as wife

Hillary spoke, he grabbed a tenor sax and played a couple choruses with the band as the crowd screamed. An electronic scoreboard in the background carried the television picture on one side and flashed "Clinton" on the other.

The last candidate to campaign all night for the White House was Michael Dukakis, who went for three days straight at the end of 1988. Clinton's people said they weren't worried about the comparison.

"I don't think any voter could fault a candidate for going to make an appearance in his state," said campaign director Bruce Lindsey.

Indeed, the campaign seemed little worried about anything. Cheered by weekend polls showing the erosion in his lead had ended, aides smiled and hugged each other frequently.

The campaign added a third jet for the last trip, in part to handle the large press corps but also to allow more aides to go along for the ride.

The campaign staged events so Clinton, instead of waiting clumsily on stage for the other speakers, stood offstage for his introduction and then entered the scene from afar, like a heavyweight champion, as the crowd cheered him on.

The only fly in the ointment was Clinton's voice. Laryngitis that first struck him a month ago just before the presidential debates reoccurred as he pushed himself through cold, rainy weather over the weekend. He fortified himself with tea and honey.

At the Sunday night rally in northern New Jersey, Clinton, running mate Al Gore and their wives reunited in a symbolic reenactment of the bus trips they began on the day after the Democratic National Convention last July.

"It's been like a double date with the future of America at the end of the line," said Tipper Gore.

Gangs blamed for surge of drug use in Russia

By ALEXANDER IVANKO
National Geographic

Drug gangs based in the politically volatile Caucasus Mountains region and the newly independent nations of Central Asia are spreading their tentacles across the former Soviet Union and into Scandinavia, according to Russian and United Nations narcotics officials.

Spurred by last year's breakup of the Soviet empire, these gangs are blamed for a surge in heroin addiction and marijuana use in Russia and for a dramatic change in the way drugs move into Western Europe from traditional growing areas in Pakistan and Afghanistan.

Russia is hardest hit by the surge in drugs, according to a recent report by an investigation team from the Vienna, Austria-based United Nations International Drug Control Program.

More than 1 million Russians are now drug abusers, and there may be as many as 100,000 opium-poppo fields and more than 2.5 million acres of marijuana in Russia alone, the report estimates.

Russian officials believe there are now between 5.5 million and 7.5 million drug addicts in all the former Soviet Union — an astonishing increase from the 1.5 million reported in early 1991.

"Drug abuse is dramatically on the rise in Russia," says Arkady Kuznetsov, chief of the Russian Federation Drug Enforcement Department. "The disintegration of the police as a force only broadens the sweep of the epidemic."

Russia's drug-related crime climbed 15 percent last year, and 23 tons of drugs were confiscated inside the country, says Kuznetsov.

"Russia has no effective protection against the pending disaster, with merely 800 poorly equipped police officers directly involved in countering this crime," he says.

Rival gangs of Azerbaijanis make up at least 80 percent of the drug dealers arrested in Moscow, Russian officials say.

Other mobs are controlled by Chechens, natives of a tiny, rebellious Moslem enclave in the Caucasus. A recent shootout in Moscow between rival gangs left more than 10 dead.

Proceeds from illicit drug trafficking in Russia amounted to about $25 million last year, according to the U.N. report.

This figure is tiny compared with the $500 billion-a-year narcotics industry in the United States. But U.N. officials point out that Russian and Central Asian drugs are sold well below world market prices and are considered cheap in Western Europe and Scandinavia.

A kilogram of hashish in Russia costs between $15 and $20, compared with $200 in France or Germany, according to the U.N. report.

Over the past year, police in Moscow and St. Petersburg, Russia, have raided several huge underground drug laboratories, arresting skilled chemists and confiscating sophisticated chemical-manufacturing equipment.

Finnish law-enforcement officials say ethnic gangs are responsible for a rise in cheap heroin moving across the well-traveled border between St. Petersburg and Helsinki, Finland.

"Drug users and suppliers were not a big problem in Finland before the breakup of the Soviet Union," Yrjo Lansipuro, a Finnish Embassy spokesman in Washington, tells National Geographic. "Now, Russian-produced drugs are cheaper and things are on a bigger scale."

Swedish officials say they are bracing for their own flood of drugs from the former Soviet Union.

While drug abuse in Russia and the other 14 states of the former Soviet Union is still within "reasonable" limits, it is expected to worsen as a result of social and economic pressures, according to the U.N.

The report says another cause of increased drug trafficking is across-the-border cooperation among Mafia-like conglomerates and the laundering of drug money through hundreds of new banks and businesses with foreign partners. Weakened border controls contribute to the problem.

Some Russian drug traffickers, law-enforcement officials say, have strong ties to emigre groups in New York. But a U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration spokesman in Washington said the agency had not seen the U.N. report and refused to comment on a possible "Russian connection."

The report cites vast opium-poppo fields and marijuana plantations in southern Russia, western Ukraine and Azerbaijan and in the Central Asian states of Uzbekistan, Kazakhstan and Kyrgyzstan.

The Uzbek capital of Tashkent, the U.N. investigators say, has become a major international drug capital and a transit stop for drugs moving between the Golden Crescent — the rich poppy-growing region of Pakistan, Afghanistan and Iran — and Europe and the United States.

Investigators also found that drug gangs are bypassing the Balkan countries, once a favorite way station but now racked by war and civil unrest, in favor of places in the Caucasus.

Another new drug-trafficking route runs from Afghanistan through Tajikistan to Moscow, St. Petersburg and the Baltic Sea.

Dear Abby

Join Operation Abby

DEAR ABBY: For the last several years, I have written to the addresses you have printed and corresponded with American servicemen and women at holiday time. I sent a humorous card off to "Any Servicemember," and soon received my first letter of many from a guy in the Army. We wrote back and forth often.

I want to thank you for giving your readers the opportunity to show our servicemen and women how much we all care about them.

Please continue to print the addresses so that we may send cheer and appreciation to our fellow Americans in the military. When will you have this year's addresses printed? Thanks!

A PROUD AMERICAN,

KATHLEEN

DEAR KATHLEEN: Is it right now soon enough? Then let's get with it, because it's time for the Eighth Annual Operation Dear Abby.

Thanks to the efforts of Don Grimes of the America Remembers campaign and the U.S. Military Postal System, special ZIP codes have been assigned to Operation Dear Abby for the period of Nov. 1, 1992, to Jan. 15, 1993. On behalf of those military people whose morale was boosted during past holiday seasons by your generous outpouring of cards, letters and goodies, I thank you and invite you to join once again in this patriotic effort to spread good cheer to our troops, both men and women, who are far from home and lonely.

A new base has been included in this year's effort: sailors on an isolated base in the middle of the Aleutian Island chain. McDonald's has graciously agreed to distribute your mail, which can be addressed to "Dear Sailor" or "Dear Friend":

Cowboys give Eagles that rundown feeling

By PETE IACOBELLI
Associated Press Writer

Ever get that rundown feeling? Just talk to the Philadelphia Eagles or San Francisco 49ers.

You might also ask the Houston Oilers, the Indianapolis Colts, the Miami Dolphins or any of the other seemingly endless list of NFL teams that allowed big chunks of yardage on the ground Sunday.

The largest pieces, though, came from Emmitt Smith, Dallas' star runner who gained 163 yards in the Cowboys' 20-10 victory over the Eagles.

Entering the game, Philadelphia hadn't allowed a 100-yard rusher in 54 games, and Smith hadn't come close to that many in five previous games against the fierce Eagles' defense.

What would possibly make the Cowboys think this time they could run on Philadelphia?

"Because we got Emmitt Smith," Dallas coach Jimmy Johnson said.

The Phoenix Cardinals might be thinking the same thing about Johnny Johnson, their top rusher the last two seasons who had only five carries in 1992.

He got back just in time, though, to gain 102 yards against San Francisco Phoenix's surprising 24-14 victory.

Barry Foster has been around all season for Pittsburgh, producing rushing numbers not seen since Franco Harris was leading the Steelers to all those Super Bowls in the '70s. Foster's 118 yards on the ground helped Pittsburgh to a 21-20 victory over Houston and first place in the AFC Central.

It was the same almost everywhere: gain 100 yards and gain a victory.

Marion Butts had 120 yards rushing as San Diego got its first shutout in six years, 26-0 against Indianapolis; Brad Baxter picked up 103 yards for the New York Jets in a 26-14 victory over Miami; Green Bay's Vince Workman got 101 yards rushing as the Packers topped Detroit 27-13; and Rodney Hampton gained 138 yards in the New York Giants' 24-7 win at Washington.

Only Cleveland Gary, who rushed for 144 yards, didn't convert as his Los Angeles Rams lost to Atlanta 30-28.

Elsewhere, it was Buffalo 16, New England 7; New Orleans 23, Tampa Bay 21; and Cincinnati 30, Cleveland 10.

Minnesota is at Chicago tonight. Denver, Kansas City, the Los Angeles Raiders and Seattle were off in the NFL's final bye week of the season.

Cowboys 20, Eagles 10
Smith became the first Dallas runner with 100 yards against Philadelphia since current Eagles back Herschel Walker did it in 1986.

The Cowboys (7-1) have the NFL's best record and a two-game lead in the NFC East over Philadelphia (5-3) and Washington.

Smith's 51-yard run set up a go-ahead 48-yard field goal by Lin

Elliott. Smith had five carries for 45 yards in a drive that ended with Troy Aikman's 14-yard TD pass to Daryl Johnston in the fourth quarter to seal the victory.

"This is it, this is the best," said Smith, the defending NFL rushing champion. "Something like this is seldom done against the Eagles. To achieve it is a big feeling."

Dallas' defense had the Eagles so confounded that Randall Cunningham was replaced at quarterback in the second half by Jim McMahon. Neither got anything going.

"To use a baseball analogy, we had an ace reliever and I decided to go to him," Philadelphia coach Rich Kotite said. "It was a decision I made at halftime. Randall took it well. He said 'Good luck, Jimmy.' We just can't win when you have 30 yards offense like we did in the first half."

NFL roundup

Cardinals 24, 49ers 14
Phoenix knows how to win big, even if it doesn't win a lot.

Johnson's first start of the season revitalized the Cardinals (2-6), who posted only their second victory of the season — the other coming against the Super Bowl champion Washington Redskins.

Johnson became the team's first 100-yard rusher in 29 games since Nov. 25, 1990.

"He's had a tough time, and he got the opportunity today and made the most of it. He deserves a big pat on the back," tackle Luis Sharpe said of Johnson, who refused to speak with reporters.

The Cardinals were also helped when Steve Young, the NFL's top-rated quarterback, left the game with the flu in the second quarter. Steve Bono replaced him, but could not rally San Francisco (6-2).

Chris Chandler threw touchdown passes of 4 and 23 yards to Randall Hill and 22 yards to Ricky Proehl.

Steelers 21, Oilers 20
Foster gained over 100 yards for the sixth straight game and Neil O'Donnell connected on fourth-quarter touchdown passes with Adrian Cooper and Eric Green as Pittsburgh (6-2) got off to its best start since 1983.

With a 100-yard rushing game next week at Buffalo, Foster will break the team record he shares with Harris.

Houston (5-3) took a 20-7 lead on an 11-yard touchdown pass from Cody Carlson to Webster Slaughter — the first TD given up by Pittsburgh in 11 quarters — and the first fumble recovery TD by defensive end Ray Childress.

"We gave them an easy one, but the offense couldn't wait to get back on the field," said O'Donnell, 10 for 10 combined passing on the two TD drives. "We never had a doubt we could do it. We got a break at the end, but we thought all along we would win."

Even after the comeback, Oilers kicker Al Del Greco missed a 39-yard field goal try for the win with six seconds remaining.

Chris Helms placed sixth in the Houston quarterback Warren Moon sustained a concussion and his status for next Sunday against Cleveland is uncertain.

Chargers 26, Colts 0
San Diego (4-4) put together a four-game winning streak for the first time since the strike replacement games in 1987, and Butts had his first 100-yard game since December 1990.

The Chargers got to Indianapolis quarterback Jeff George for six sacks and limited the Colts (4-4) to 99 total yards and eight first downs.

"It was ridiculous. ... When they put pressure in your face every play, what can you do?" George said. "You pick a play out of the hat and hopefully it works."

After leading 5-0 at the half, Stan Humphries finally got San Diego moving, hooking up with Nate Lewis on TD plays of 17 and 9 yards. Butts also ran in a 3-yard score.

Jets 26, Dolphins 14
Baxter and Ken O'Brien took on expanded roles as New York won for just the second time this season.

Playing for the injured Blair Thomas, Baxter's yardage helped the Jets to double Miami's possession time (40:26 to 19:34). O'Brien, subbing for the injured Browning Nangle, threw touchdown passes of 36 yards to Johnny Mitchell, 4 yards to Al Toon and 20 yards to Rob Moore as the Jets led 23-0 in the first half.

After Miami got two TDs in a span of 69 seconds in the second half at the Meadowlands to cut the lead to nine points, New York went on a 13-play drive that ate up eight minutes of the fourth quarter. It ended with Cary Blanchard's 47-yard field goal.

Toon, who ended with five receptions, has a catch in 100 straight games.

Packers 27, Lions 13
At Pontiac, Mich., Workman looked a lot like Barry Sanders, while Sanders didn't look like anything against Green Bay (3-5). The Lions' star was held to 38 yards and Detroit could only gain 190 total yards.

"This was just a terrible, terrible game," Detroit coach Wayne Fontes said. "This is the worst game I've ever been associated with since I've been here."

Brett Favre led a Packers attack that rolled up 347 yards. He completed 22 of 37 for 212 yards and touchdown passes of 14 yards to Jackie Harris 30 yards to Sterling Sharpe, the NFC's leading receiver.

Detroit (2-6), last year's NFC Central champions, are last in the division.

Giants 24, Redskins 7
At RFK Stadium, Hampton's yardage came against the vaunted Washington defense, which continued to struggle to find the form which took the Redskins to the Super Bowl last season.

Things looked normal as Washington (5-3) went ahead 7-0 on an 84-yard punt return TD by Brian Mitchell. But the Giants (4-4) did not relinquish possession very often — controlling the ball for more than 20 minutes in the first half — and got an 8-yard touchdown run from Jerrod Bunch and a 17-yard scoring catch by Ed McCaffrey.

Mark Rypien was also troubled, constantly hounded by the Giants defense and completing only 3 of 12 passes for 49 yards in the first half.

Falcons 30, Rams 28
It looked like Gary's power running and Jim Everett's passing would get LA its first road victory in 12 games. However, replacement Billy Joe Tolliver, subbing for injured Chris Miller, finished off a 75-yard scoring drive with a 13-yard pass to Michael Haynes for Atlanta in the fourth quarter.

Everett threw for 253 yards and four touchdown passes, two to Gary, after Atlanta led 17-0.

"We put ourselves in a position to win the game," Rams coach Chuck Knox said. "We came off the floor to take the lead. All we needed at the end was a field goal. We just didn't get it done."

Bills 16, Patriots 7
Buffalo (6-2) overcame a sluggish performance by Jim Kelly and an injury to Thurman Thomas to defeat New England (0-8), the NFL's only winless team.

With the Patriots ahead 7-0, the Bills got a 3-yard TD pass from Kelly to Pete Metzelaars, a safety by Chris Hale and a 13-yard scoring catch by James Lofton.

It was the second time in six days Buffalo had to come from behind to win against a much weaker opponent. The Bills beat the New York Jets 24-20 last Monday night on their final drive.

"We've had two close ones, and close ones build character," offensive tackle Will Wolford said. "That's going to help us down the season."

Saints 23, Buccaneers 21
New Orleans, which led 20-7, trailed 21-20 before getting some stellar defense and three field goals by Morten Andersen, including a game-winning 50-yarder with 5:46 remaining.

Dalton Hilliard had two touchdowns for the Saints (6-2), who moved into a first-place tie with San Francisco in the NFC West.

"I really, in my heart, think we played the best team in the National Football League today," Tampa Bay coach Sam Wyche said. "I think they've got all the parts. They've got a great kicking game, they've got a devastating defense. We were powerless. There were times in there that we just could not hold our own, much less move the ball."

New Orleans was particularly stifling in the first half, permitting Tampa Bay just one first down, 15 offensive plays and 15 yards.

Bengals 30, Browns 10
Cincinnati finally took a lead and Boomer Esiason finally had a good game.

The Bengals (3-5) ended a five-game losing streak, taking a lead in a game for the first time since Sept. 20 and beating Cleveland (4-4) for the sixth time in the last seven meetings.

Pampa qualifies two for regional cross country meet

Luis Resendiz and Paige Bass will represent Pampa High School in the Class 4A regional cross country meet next weekend in Lubbock.

Resendiz finished third in the boys' division and Bass also placed third in the girls' division at the District 1-4A meet Saturday at Amarillo's Thompson Park. The top five in each division qualified for regionals.

In the team standings, Pampa was third in the girls' division and fourth in the boys' division.

Other placings for Pampa in the girls' division were Marci Leal, ninth; Kate Fields, 18th; Misty Adams, 25th; Lisa Jones, 26th and Kim Sparkman, 32nd.

Other placings for Pampa in the boys' division were Trey McCavit, 18th; Corey Alfonsi, 21st; Jason Soukup, 23rd; Matt Caswell, 27th; Jason Huckins, 28th and Jeremy Tracy, 34th.

Placing in the girls' junior varsity division were Lillie Ramirez, 11th and Leanne Dyson, 18th.

Chris Helms placed sixth in the junior varsity boys' division.

The top 10 in each division at regionals advance to the state meet.

"They worked hard and had a good year," said Pampa coach Mark Elms about the boys' and girls' teams. Most of the people on the team were young and we're looking forward to next year. Of course, we're hoping Paige and Bass do as well as they did in district we can go onto state."

Caprock won the boys' district championship while Borger finished first in the girls' division.

Aggies, Longhorns head for Thanksgiving showdown

By ARNIE STAPLETON
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS (AP) - Six opponents, 15 teams and 24 days separate the Texas A&M Aggies and the Texas Longhorns.

And all eyes are on Thanksgiving, when the fifth-ranked Aggies and the 20th-ranked Longhorns, the only unbeaten teams in the Southwest Conference, end their regular seasons with a matchup in Austin.

Texas Tech has lost to both teams, and Red Raiders coach Spike Dykes said the game will be a classic matchup of potent offense and stingy defense.

"They're two good football teams, drastically different in style," Dykes said. "A&M's got a great defense and a good, solid kicking game. Offensively, they've struggled. Texas' forte is offense, a great, balanced offense. They used seven running backs against us. Before long, it takes its toll."

Dykes said A&M's inconsistency at quarterback is offset by its strong running game, led by Rodney Thomas and Greg Hill.

"They don't have a prolific passer, but I don't know if you need a prolific passer when you've got two great backs in Thomas and Hill," Dykes said. "When you play defense like they do, you don't have to score too many points."

At the Cotton Bowl, Thomas rushed for 78 yards and three touchdowns and Hill ran for 138 yards and two scores as reigning SWC champion Texas A&M rolled to a 41-7 victory over Southern Methodist Saturday.

At Lubbock, Adrian Walker rushed for 155 yards and Peter Gardere and Phil Brown each scored two touchdowns as the Longhorns, who went to the Cotton Bowl in 1991, outran Texas Tech 44-33. On Sunday, the Horns moved up to No. 20 in The AP Poll.

And at Houston, the Cougars downed Texas Christian 49-46 in a wild shootout at the Astrodome.

Next Saturday, Baylor is host to Georgia Tech; Houston visits Southern Methodist; and Texas Tech is at Rice. The Longhorns visit TCU and the Aggies are at home against Louisville.

Before the Aggies-Longhorns matchup on ESPN Thanksgiving night, Texas also faces SMU at home and Baylor in Waco. Texas A&M also has to travel to Houston and play host to TCU.

Texas A&M improved to 8-0 overall and 4-0 in the SWC with its 17th consecutive regular season victory and 12th straight league triumph.

"Texas A&M is a different level than the rest of the conference," said SMU coach Tom Rossley. "They have great talent and a great defense. Even their backup players are tremendous."

Aggies quarterback Jeff Granger sustained a slight concussion and was replaced by freshman quarterback Corey Pullig, who directed the Aggies to four touchdown drives against the Mustangs (3-5, 1-4).

Pass action

Pampa receiver Chris Poole is tackled from behind by Borger's Gene Kemp as a pass falls incomplete in last week's District 1-4A game. The Harvesters won, 34-0, and can clinch a playoff spot Friday night with a win over Randall if Hereford defeats Dumas. There is the possibility of a three-way tie for first between Pampa, Hereford and Dumas, and for second between Pampa, Randall and Dumas. A positive points tie-breaker format is used in District 1-4A with a maximum of 15 in head-to-head games.

A.P. Indy captures Breeders' Cup Classic by commanding two lengths

By ED SCHUYLER JR.
AP Racing Writer

HALLANDALE, Fla. (AP) - A.P. Indy would go out a champion should he not race again.

While the 3-year-old colt was dazzling in winning the Breeders' Cup Classic on Saturday, another 3-year-old, Arazi, was again a disappointment in what was his last race.

"He will go back to Europe and go to stud," co-owner Allen Paulson said Sunday of the France-based Arazi.

The beaten favorite in the Kentucky Derby became a beaten favorite in the Breeders' Cup Mile on the turf, finishing 11th. The race was won by Lure in only his third start on the grass.

"I still think he's a great horse," Paulson said of the colt who was brilliant as a 2-year-old in Europe and in winning the 1991 Breeders' Cup Juvenile. "I don't know why he didn't fire."

A.P. Indy, on the other hand, closed the ninth Breeders' Cup show at Gulfstream Park with a commanding two-length win over Pleasant Tap in the 1 1/4-mile Classic.

"I thought that was a pretty impressive performance today," trainer Neil Drysdale said after the race.

"It confirms that he's the best 3-year-old this year and it opens up the chance for Horse of the Year."

The victory achieved against top competition in 2:00 1-5 probably will make A.P. Indy Horse of the Year.

Owner Tomonori Tsurumaki of Japan said Sunday that no decision has been made on whether to start A.P. Indy in the Japan Cup later this month or on whether to race him next year.

A.P. Indy won five of seven starts this year. One of the triumphs was in the Belmont Stakes after the colt missed the Kentucky Derby and the Preakness because of an injured left front foot.

"I think you might have seen a Triple Crown winner," said Eddie

Unbeaten Boston College moves up two notches in AP rankings

By The Associated Press

Boston College, one of six undefeated teams in The Associated Press Top 25, has a date this weekend with Notre Dame at South Bend.

The Eagles (7-0-1) routed Temple 45-6 on Saturday and moved up from 11th to No. 9 in the rankings. No. 8 Notre Dame defeated Navy 38-7.

Washington beat Stanford 41-15 to regain the No. 1 ranking from Miami, a 35-23 winner against West Virginia.

Ohio State got back into the AP rankings at No. 22, while Virginia dropped out by losing to Florida State. Alabama, idle this week, moved up to No. 3.

Washington, Miami, Alabama, Michigan and Texas A&M are also undefeated among the ranked teams.

Temple coach Jerry Berndt, whose team gained just eight yards on 26 carries and gave up 346 rushing yards to the Eagles, said the Boston College offensive line and running back Chuckie Dukes were too tough for his Owls.

With officials from the Fiesta, Peach, Hancock and Hall of Fame bowls watching, Boston College manhandled the Owls in a game that had several fights late in the second quarter.

No. 1 Washington 41, No. 21 Stanford 7

Stanford (6-3, 3-2) entered the game with one of the top defenses in the nation, yielding only 15 points and 245 yards per game. That changed dramatically at Husky Stadium as Washington (8-0, 5-0) gained 467 yards and had its highest-scoring output of the season.

No. 2 Miami 35, West Virginia 23

The Hurricanes (8-0) extended the nation's longest winning streak to 26 games. Gino Torretta improved his Heisman Trophy hopes by completing 28 of 40 passes for 363 yards and three touchdowns. Miami led 35-3 before Darren Studstill threw three touchdown passes in the final 3:40 for the visiting Mountaineers (3-3-2).

No. 4 Michigan 24, Purdue 17

The Wolverines trailed 17-7 at halftime and lost leading rusher Tyrone Wheatley on the second-half kickoff. But Michigan (7-0-1, 5-0) rebounded with 17 third-quarter points and held off Purdue (3-5, 2-3).

No. 5 Texas A&M 41, SMU 7

Rodney Thomas rushed for three touchdowns and Greg Hill added two as the Aggies (8-0, 4-0) won their 17th straight regular-season game.

No. 6 Florida State 13, Virginia 3

The Seminoles (7-1, 7-0) clinched the Atlantic Coast Conference title as Charlie Ward scored two touchdowns.

No. 7 Nebraska 52, No. 16 Colorado 7

Nebraska (6-1, 3-0) snapped a seven-game losing streak against Top 10 teams with the victory at Lincoln. Calvin Jones ran for three first-half TDs and freshman quarterback Tommie Frazier threw two second-half TD passes against the Buffaloes (6-1-1, 2-1-1). The loss snapped Colorado's 25-game Big Eight unbeaten streak.

No. 8 Notre Dame 38, Navy 7

Notre Dame (6-1-1) scored on five of its first six possessions, converted 10 of 12 third-down plays and piled up 315 yards in offense — all in the first half.

No. 9 Boston College 45, Temple 6

Boston College (7-0-1, 2-0-1) got 184 yards rushing and three touchdowns from Chuckie Dukes. Dukes has 1,024 yards.

No. 10 Syracuse 41, Pittsburgh 10

Returns by Qadry Ismail and Shelby Hill set up two early scores and the Syracuse (7-1, 4-0) defense held the nation's second-most productive offense in check.

Pac-10 wants Colorado, Texas

DALLAS (AP) - The Pacific-10 Conference plans to expand to 12 teams with the University of Colorado to become its 11th member and the University of Texas the second expansion target. The Dallas Morning News reported today.

In a copyright story, the newspaper quoted two officials within the league as saying the chief executive officers of the league discussed the plans at an Oct. 20 meeting in Seattle, the officials said.

"They're approaching Colorado first because they think it's ready to go and Texas is not," said one official, who spoke on the condition of anonymity. "Texas is the more important one."

Pac-10 commissioner Tom Hansen said he has been instructed not to comment on expansion.

"I won't confirm or deny anything," Hansen said. "Once you start down that path, you never stop."

Texas Athletic Director DeLoss

Dodds said, "I was not aware of the meeting. I've heard conversations for several years. Our position hasn't changed."

The university's position, taken in August 1990, is that the university is committed to the survival of a viable Southwest Conference.

Colorado athletic director Bill Marolt said he had no knowledge of the Pac-10's discussion.

"Well, there are all sorts of rumors about all sorts of schools," Marolt said. "I really don't have anything to say."

An official within the Pac-10 told the newspaper "in the next few weeks and months, there will be movement at the presidential level" regarding Colorado.

Pampa eighth-graders down Dumas

Pampa defeated Dumas, 36-6, last week in eighth-grade football action.

Derahian Evans and J.J. Mathis each scored two touchdowns. Evans scored on a 35-yard run and a 94-yard run. Mathis scored on a 95-yard punt return and a 58-yard run.

Damian Nickelberry caught a 52-yard TD pass from Nick Shock to round out the scoring.

Pampa also won the B team game, 12-6. Marcus Long scored on a three-yard run and Aaron Wiseman scored on a 38-yard run for Pampa.

In the seventh-grade games, both the A and B teams lost by identical 14-0 scores.

Tuesday, the middle school teams close out the season against Borger. The seventh-grade games will be played in Pampa while the eighth-graders will be at Borger. Starting time is 5 p.m. at both places

Harvesters place sixth in regional tennis tourney

Pampa finished sixth out of twelve teams in the Class 4A regional tennis tournament last weekend at Wichita Falls.

The Harvesters received a bye in the first round, but lost to eventual runnerup

Andrews, 11-7, in Friday's quarterfinals.

On Saturday, Pampa defeated Granbury, 14-4, in the consolation match before losing to Levelland, 9-5, in the fifth-place match.

The loss to Levelland prevented the Harvesters from possibly receiving a wild card entry into the Class 4A Little State Tournament in San Antonio this coming weekend.

Wichita Falls won the regional championship.

San Diego State still has obstacles

By The Associated Press

Al Luginbill never expected a cakewalk.

His San Diego State team may have the most talent in the Western Athletic Conference, but there are too many obstacles, too many challengers plotting ambushes, for the Aztecs to be banking on a Holiday Bowl berth just yet.

San Diego State, with Marshall Faulk on the sideline for about half the game, struggled to defeat Colorado State 20-13 Saturday in Fort Collins and remain tied with Hawaii for first place in the WAC with 4-1 conference records. Hawaii whipped Texas-El Paso 41-21 in El Paso.

"I've said before that this conference is becoming very, very competitive," Luginbill said. "I've observed this conference since the early 1970s, and I've never seen it like this. It is one battle after another, and if you think for a second you have an advantage you're going to get spanked."

The Aztecs will hope to avoid a spanking this week when they visit Wyoming.

Marathon produces dramatic moments

By BERT ROSENTHAL
AP Track Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - Allan Steinfeld, technical director of the 23rd New York City Marathon, succinctly put the race into perspective.

"It wasn't a perfect start," he said. "It was a perfect finish."

Probably never in the race's storied history have there been so many dramatic elements as there were Sunday.

First, there was the victory by Willie Mtolo, a 28-year-old black South African who had been denied the opportunity to compete internationally because of his country's apartheid policies.

Then there was Lisa Ondieki, a 32-year-old Australian who had flopped miserably at the Barcelona Olympics, winning the women's competition in course record time.

And then there was Fred Lebow, the originator of the race in 1970, completing the gruelling 26 miles, 385 yards less than three years after being diagnosed with brain cancer.

For Lebow, winning did not require finishing first; it only required finishing. In a most courageous performance, the 60-year-old Lebow, buoyed by enthusiastic crowds in the city's five boroughs, came across the finish line after 5 hours, 32 minutes, 34 seconds.

"I'm disappointed in my time, but I finished," the gratified but exhausted Lebow said with tears in his eyes.

Sitting alongside him, also crying, was Norway's Grete Waitz, a nine-time winner of the women's division of the New York City Marathon. Earlier, she and about a dozen runners had accompanied Lebow on his memorable journey.

Following prerace plans, Lebow and Waitz walked for about two minutes every three miles and walked up the inclines. Lebow also sat down once, near the 21-mile mark.

There was no doubt in Lebow's mind, however, that he was going to finish.

"The marathon is the most consuming thing in my life," said Lebow, who was diagnosed with brain cancer in March 1990 and was treated for thyroid cancer last year. "I want to give myself a gift ... to finish the marathon."

"I want to be able to kiss the finish line."

That's exactly what he did.

He did it to the rousing cheers of a large group of fans who had collected at the finish line just to greet him, and to the strains of "New York, New York" being played over the loudspeakers in Central Park.

"I almost got goose bumps," Waitz said as Lebow kissed her hand and they cried some more.

Actually, their tears began flowing much earlier.

"Both Fred and I started to cry when we reached the park and knew we were going to make it," Waitz, 39, said.

Lebow's time might have been a little faster had he started on schedule. But he was so concerned about the start of the race that he began running about five minutes late.

His concern was not unfounded. Shortly before the scheduled start, the "semi-elite" runners were marched in front of the Naval officers at the front of the huge pack of approximately 25,000.

When they reached their position, they began to move forward on the Verrazano Bridge. Due to their momentum, security was unable to stop them.

The cannon was not shot to start the race because it was pointed in a direction that could have injured someone.

Azinger wins Tour title

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

PINEHURST, N.C. (AP) - Fred Couples was embarrassed. Paul Azinger was nervous.

Both found remedies with their own versions of victory in the Tour Championship.

"I was more nervous than I've ever been in my life," Azinger said. "I was so nervous I couldn't sleep much the night before, and when I did I dreamed I missed my starting time."

But he made his starting time just fine, conquered his quivering nerves and held on for a three-shot victory Sunday in the rich, season-ending tournament that salvaged his season.

"I think it's tougher playing for prestige than for money," he said, "and this is now a prestige event. Before, this tournament was just 30 guys playing for a lot of money."

But it means a lot more now. And for me, it meant getting into the World Series (of Golf next year) and the Tournament of Champions (opening the 1993 season) and (the unofficial Johnnie Walker World Championship in) Jamaica next month.

"There was a lot riding on this tournament."

And there was a lot riding on it for Couples, too. He came into this tournament, the final official event of the season, holding precarious leads in all the major, season-long races: the PGA Player of the Year standings, the Vardon Trophy (for low scoring average) and the money-winning title.

"After two rounds, I was dead last," Couples recalled. "I felt terrible. I was demoralized."

But he pulled himself together, played the last two rounds in 66-66—132 on one of golf's great courses, and won all three titles.

Couples, who scored his third victory of the season in the Masters and then didn't win again, took the Arnold Palmer Trophy as the year's leading money-winner with $1,344,188 and was followed by Davis Love III, $1,191,630; John Cook, $1,165,606, and PGA titleholder Nick Price at $1,135,173.

The computer generated scoring averages, which determine both the Vardon Trophy and influence Player of the Year, will not be available until later. But, since Couples led both categories coming into this tournament and had a better score than all his would-be competitors, he cannot be overtaken.

Perot ends campaign blasting Bush, Clinton

By EVAN RAMSTAD
Associated Press Writer

SANTA CLARA, Calif. (AP) — At the end of the presidential campaign, the businessman became a politician.

Ross Perot went negative on a four-city tour that ended Sunday in Silicon Valley. He blasted Democrat Bill Clinton's qualifications to lead the country and President Bush's record on both domestic and foreign policy matters.

"I tried to keep it balanced," Perot told reporters after a rally Sunday night.

On Saturday he shot at Bush; on Sunday it was Clinton.

"If you look at every single factor in his 12 years in Arkansas, you'll realize that when you're at the bottom of everything, there's no place to go but up," Perot said of the Arkansas governor.

He also jibed at Clinton's confession that he once smoked marijuana as a college student, saying, "Do you believe that it's appropriate to have senior government officials who have used drugs?"

Asked later if he was specifically targeting Clinton, Perot told reporters, "I'll let you all figure that out."

Perot said the nation had "paid a tremendous price for George Bush's mistakes."

Perot's escalating attacks on the campaign trail over the weekend was matched in his TV campaign.

"You've got the chicken man and the potato chip man, and you've got me," Perot told voters in a half-hour TV commercial Sunday night, "Deep Voodoo, Chicken Feathers and the American Dream."

In weekend polls, Perot's standing ranged from 14 percent in a Gallup poll taken for CNN and USA Today, to 18 percent in an ABC poll. The New York Times had the independent at 15 percent, CBS put Perot at 17 percent and the Harris poll said he was at 16 percent.

He was faring better in California, where The Field Poll taken Oct. 25-28 showed Perot with 23 percent. Clinton led the state with 45 percent and Bush had 29. The poll had a margin of error of 3.1 percentage points.

The campaign swing, which also included stops in Tampa, Fla., Kansas City, Mo., and Long Beach, Calif., was the most ambitious of Perot's candidacy.

He planned one final rally today in his hometown of Dallas.

Perot has spent more than $1 million a day since officially becoming a candidate Oct. 1, mostly on TV commercials. He bought time tonight on each of the three major networks for an election eve message.

Construction workers sue nuke plants over respiratory ailments

PALACIOS (AP) — At least 2,000 workers who helped build the state's two nuclear power plants have filed lawsuits in recent years, contending they have suffered a number of debilitating health problems because of employer negligence, according to published reports.

In its Sunday editions, the Houston Chronicle reported that workers employed at the South Texas Nuclear Project near Bay City and the Comanche Peak Nuclear Power Plant near Glen Rose complained for respiratory problems, cancers and neurological disorders.

The contract painters, laborers, electricians, welders, insulators and heavy-equipment operators have named a host of companies, including Houston and Dallas utilities and manufacturers of radiation-resistant coatings used in the plants, in their lawsuits.

The Chronicle said court documents and seven former workers they contacted described their positions as high-pressure jobs where respiratory protection was poor or non-existent, where people who complained or asked too many questions were intimidated or laid off, and where federal hazard-communication laws were ignored.

"You've got leukemia, you've got throat growths that are the equivalent of tumors, you've got lung problems, you've got neurological problems — I use the expression that their brains have been fried," said David Leibowitz, the San Antonio attorney who represents most of the ex-workers.

Although many of his clients became ill years ago, Leibowitz said, they did not learn until recently that their illnesses were work-related. "Even the company doctors they'd go to would tell them, 'You're fine,'" he said.

At the heart of the allegations are two huge contractors: Houston-based Brown & Root, which has been building Comanche Peak since 1974, and New Jersey-based Ebasco Constructors Inc., which took over construction of South Texas in 1982 after Brown & Root was fired by the plant's managing owner, Houston Lighting & Power. Brown & Root had begun work there in 1974.

Other key defendants are manufacturers of coatings that were applied and then ground and sanded to the required thickness and smoothness inside the plants.

Leibowitz maintains that the manufacturers didn't emphasize their products' hazardous ingredients to the contractors and that workers inhaled noxious dust as a result.

All defendants have denied in court filings that their actions, as the lawsuits allege, caused former plant construction workers to suffer debilitating respiratory and neurological ailments, cancer and recurring rash.

At the same time, Ebasco is contesting workers' compensation claims filed by nearly 500 people who worked at the South Texas plant. Sam Keeling, who is among those who have filed personal injury lawsuits, and other former Ebasco employees say the company's hard line is depriving them of badly needed benefits.

"The fact that they refused to tell you anything (about the hazards) — it makes you feel like you've been used completely," Keeling said. "And now they won't do anything about it."

Officials with Dallas-based Texas Utilities (which owns Comanche Peak), Houston Lighting & Power, Ebasco and Brown & Root declined to comment on the allegations because of the pending litigation.

HL&P spokeswoman Cindy West said that the utility "would expect OSHA guidelines to be met on all of our projects."

But the Chronicle said the Occupational Safety and Health Administration and a company that is fighting hundreds of workers' compensation claims rarely admitted any wrongdoing at the plants.

And Joe Stevens, a Brown & Root vice president, said: "We're very concerned about the safety and health of all the people who work for Brown & Root. We're very proud of the record we have."

Nonetheless, Brown & Root was cited by OSHA in 1988 for improperly training workers who were exposed to lung-damaging silica dust released by the grinding of a coating.

Gil Saulter, the OSHA regional administrator in Dallas, said in a 1989 letter and confirmed in a recent interview that conditions at Comanche Peak warranted more than the two citations — one to Brown & Root and the other to Texas Utilities — that were issued. The citations were downgraded by OSHA after negotiations with the companies.

Space Shuttle Columbia back home, NASA still defending issue

By MARCIA DUNN
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Space shuttle Columbia is back home after putting a small, laser-reflecting satellite into orbit during a 10-day mission that encountered few problems in flight but lots of flak back on Earth.

Critics complained that NASA risked six lives to launch a satellite that could have been lofted far more cheaply by an unmanned rocket. Some also charged that the astronauts weren't given much to do.

"We took some hits from some people who think they're experts on manifesting and that perhaps we didn't do something on this flight that we should have done," Kennedy Space Center director Robert Crippen said after the shuttle glided to an on-time landing Sunday at the site where it took off Oct. 22.

"This flight was chock-full of work," said Crippen, a former shuttle commander. "It was a superb mission as far as I'm concerned."

The five U.S. Americans and one Canadian completed their main goal — releasing the 900-pound Laser Geodynamics Satellite, or Lageos, on Oct. 23.

The 2-foot, golf ball-like satellite is covered with 426 prisms to reflect laser beams fired from Earth. Geologists hope to gauge the inches-a-year drift of the continents by measuring the time it takes for the pulses to travel back and forth. That, in turn, should provide a better understanding of earthquakes.

Critics such as John Pike of the American Federation of Scientists had blasted NASA for risking lives and spending nearly a half-billion dollars on the mission. A rocket launch would have cost tens of millions. The only other Lageos in orbit was launched in 1976 on an unmanned rocket.

Crippen said NASA had an agreement with Italy long before the 1986 Challenger disaster. Italy's space agency built the $4 million satellite and the $120 million booster that lifted the craft into a 3,632-mile-high orbit.

And although the experiments that were conducted during the flight might be considered small by some, they are important, Crippen said.

The astronauts also tested a robotic vision system designed to give them more precise control over the shuttle arm, took atmospheric measurements, performed medical experiments, grew semiconductor crystals and kept tabs on 12 rats.

The rats were flown to test an experimental drug for treating osteoporosis. Researchers planned to kill the rats and dissect them to examine bone loss.

The crew used the Canadian-made robotic vision system of computers and TV cameras to wave a dotted aluminum panel outside the shuttle and release it into space. Researchers said the vision system successfully tracked the panel and showed promise for use in building a U.S. space station later this decade.

NASA's 51st shuttle mission ended when Columbia glided through a clear sky and landed on the concrete runway. A red, white and blue drag chute slowed the shuttle as it rolled to a stop.

A quick inspection showed Columbia to be in good shape after traveling 4.1 million miles and circling Earth 159 times.

Ground controllers had to scramble when shuttle commander James Wetherbee reported during descent the failure of a mechanical gauge that displays the positions of the rudder, body flaps and other flight control surfaces.

Mission Control had him turn the power off and on, which got the gauge working, but only for a few minutes.

NASA spokesman Jeff Carr said that it appeared to be a power problem and that the crew was able to monitor the information on computer screens.

Wetherbee was delighted with the performance of NASA's oldest shuttle.

"I guess we had maybe, what, one or two minor things that didn't matter at all," he said. "That enabled us to really work the science, and we really worked hard."

Former day-care operator shot to death

TACOMA, Wash. (AP) — A former day-care operator who was harassed for years after being found innocent of child molesting, was shot to death in his back yard, police said.

Police said Sunday that Kaare Sortland apparently knew his killer, but he died before giving them specifics. No immediate arrests were made.

The 49-year-old was shot in the chest Saturday as he went outside to investigate suspicious sounds.

His wife, Judy, told police she heard him "yell something to the effect of 'I didn't do it!' and then she heard what she thought was about four gunshots," Sgt. Stanley Moore said.

Six empty shells were found on the back porch, and neighbors saw a man running between houses, Sgt. Jim Walker said.

The Sortlands were accused of molesting three boys who attended the Hugs and Kisses Day Center in the 1980s.

Mrs. Sortland told investigators the couple had been harassed since their acquittal in a trial involving one of the boys in 1990. The nature of the harassment was not immediately known.

A judge threw out charges involving the two other youngsters, saying their testimony was unreliable because they initially denied they had been abused and then changed their story following therapy and interviews with investigators.

After he was shot with a large-caliber handgun Saturday, Sortland stumbled through his house and police found him lying in the front yard, Officer Larry Smith said. He died at a hospital.

"He made some brief, one-line statements," Sgt. Mike Miller said. "I have a hunch he knew who it was. Unfortunately, he didn't give us anything that specific."

Miller said the killer may have been someone upset over the acquittals, an angry business acquaintance — Sortland was a supervisor at a construction company — or a surprised vandal. He said the home had been vandalized some time before the shooting.

"They had went through a lot," said Ozzie Velez, a friend. "The harassment went on for some time and was just beginning to subside and they were just getting themselves organized back to living and all of a sudden this comes up."
