Special legislative session turns deeply partisan

After conciliatory regular session, agenda goes conservative

By Chris Tomlinson
Associated Press

■ ANALYSIS

AUSTIN — If there is one thing more divisive among Texas politicians than drawing political maps, it's abortion, and Gov. Rick Perry has added both to the special legislative session under way in Austin.

The governor's decision comes on the heels of one of the most productive and conciliatory regular sessions in recent memory, and there is little doubt that by fanning the partisan flames, Perry is staking out his conservative credentials in order to impress national conservative and evangelical groups.

He's also embarked on a job-poaching tour of New York and Connecticut, supported by television and radio ads that tout Perry's job creating record as much as the Texas economy's. These latest political maneuvers feed speculation in Austin that Perry is making a move onto the national stage in anticipation of another presidential bid in 2016. Of course, these moves also won't hurt him with Texas primary voters should he run for governor again next year.

Perry has been mum about his plans, saying only that he'll announce his intentions soon. But the special session also gives Lt. Gov. David Dewhurst and conservative lawmakers the chance to boost their own political records, too. If the regular session was about coming together for the people's business, the special is all about partisanship for re-election.

Every 10 years, politicians get to choose their voters when they redraw the state's political maps based on census data. This map drawing exercise is critical to determining who will control the Legislature and Congress. Since Texas lawmakers draw the maps, the majority party always draws them to benefit their colleagues, which is perfectly legal as long as they don't diminish the ability of minorities to elect their candidate.

A federal court in Washington determined that the Republican-majority in 2011 did just that after they heard arguments from minority groups.

Open gun range day provides education on unique weapons

By Tyler White

CRANE — Crane-based firearms distributor S&K Arms Company LLC invited West Texans to the gun range on Father's Day for an opportunity to learn about and fire fully automatic, semi-automatic and suppressed firearms.

Scott Lucas said he and his business partner, Kane Colisek, set up the event as a way to familiarize the general public with a variety of firearms.

Lucas said the event offered a friendly, safe environment for patrons to ask questions about firearm handling, safety and ownership.

Patrons had the opportunity to fire suppressed fully automatic and semi-automatic AR-15 rifles, bolt-action precision rifles and pistols, paying per ammunition magazine.

Odessan Joe Olivarez brought his son, 11-year-old Seth Olivarez, to the range for Father's Day bonding and a chance to educate his son on gun safety and self-protection.

Ben Herrera, of Crane, said the event is an opportune time to enjoy firing weapons and learn more about gun laws.

"A lot of people don't know the legalities of suppressors and fully automatics," he said.

Instructors and gun experts, including Gary Hughes, vice president of sales for Silencerco, a suppressor manufacturer, placed a strong emphasis on firearm suppressors during Sunday's event due to misconceptions regarding the firearm piece.

"Everyone thinks they're illegal," said Hughes. He offered much information regarding suppressor laws and regulations during the event.

Gun suppression

In order to own a firearm suppressor, gun owners:

Cannot:
- Legally make their own suppressor in a state where suppressors are illegal.
- Travel to a suppressor-friendly state and purchase one to take to their state.
- Have someone who lives in a suppressor friendly state buy you one.
- Be a felon.

Must be:
- A resident of the state where the suppressor is purchased.
- A citizen of the United States.
- At least 21 years of age to purchase a suppressor from a dealer.
- At least 18 years of age to purchase a suppressor from an individual on a Form 4 to Form 4 transfer (contingent on state laws).
- At least 18 years of age to possess a suppressor as a beneficiary of a trust or as a member of a corporation (contingent on state laws).

Smitherman charts his potential future with eyes to the right

By Kate Galbraith
Texas Tribune

Amid great fanfare two years ago, Barry Smitherman, then the Public Utility Commission chairman, bought a hybrid electric Chevrolet Volt. Now the chairman of the Railroad Commission of Texas, Smitherman drives a Chevy Suburban.

Smitherman

"I became very disappointed with the technology," Smitherman said of the Volt, which he traded in after several months. The mileage was not what he had hoped, he said.

The switch from an electric car to a gas guzzler mirrors Smitherman's change of jobs, from a regulator of electricity to a regulator of the oil and gas industry. It could also have a beneficial political side effect; Republican primary voters in Texas do not seem fond of green initiatives these days.

First appointed to the Railroad Commission in 2011 and elected to a full term in 2012, Smitherman could soon return to the ballot. Widely described as ambitious, he has been linked to a 2014 run for attorney general or another statewide office. And recent moves suggest Smitherman, 55, is positioning himself to appeal to voters farther to the right.

Smitherman, who calls himself an "accidental politician," said he planned to make an announcement as early as this week about his political future but offered no details. He said his interests lay in "taking on assignments where I can continue to improve the process and make the agency or the state more efficient, use less taxpayer dollars."

He and his two fellow railroad commissioners have won praise from both green groups and oil companies for efforts to modernize the agency. Smitherman is "one of the smartest regulators I've run into in the 30 years I have been doing this business," said Tom Smith, the Texas director of Public Citizen, an environmental and consumer advocacy group.

But some moves by Smitherman have been seen by some political observers as efforts to appeal to the far-right voters who are often crucial in Republican primaries.

Arriving at the Railroad Commission, Smitherman worked to allow agency employees to carry concealed handguns on commission premises. Last year, he worked on an effort to provide training for employees who want concealed handgun licenses.

His enthusiasm has occasionally tripped him up. This spring he retweeted an image of a noose, along with the names of Republican United States senators whose votes had helped break a filibuster during a gun-control debate. He soon apologized, saying he had hit "retweet" too hastily.

However, "I won't apologize for my support of the second amendment," he said recently at his office.

Smitherman, who grew up east of Houston, worked for 16 years as an investment banker and was briefly a prosecutor in the Harris County District Attorney's Of-

City has significant drop-off in rainfall totals

Former Midland City Manager Mike McGregor worked closely on a number of water projects during his time here. Since leaving the city in 2001, he has served with water districts in Seminole and Lubbock and as a project coordinator with the High Plains Underwater Conservation District, also in Lubbock. He recently returned to the Midland-Odessa area where he works as a financial officer and conducts regulatory water surveys for an oilfield chemical company.

McGregor observed the development and completion of the T-Bar pipeline project, which was brought online last month. Though not involved in the T-Bar's completion, McGregor and Fred Poe, another former city manager, worked on a contract with the Colorado River Municipal Water District.

Midland, he said, was correct to utilize the CRMWD supply because, "It was better to pump surface water at the time" — something he and Poe believe would be the case.

"We knew the T-Bar water was not evaporating and not disappearing and that it was secure," McGregor said. "We elected to participate in a tie-in with Lake Ivie at the time and the city has received 20 years out of that."

McGregor said if a generous rainfall not come to the water sheds east of Midland in September of last year, the lake that provides much of Midland's water likely would have dropped to 5 percent capacity before the T-Bar project was completed. Though water still would have been available, McGregor said city officials might have been forced to examine more stringent water restrictions than the ones in place last year.

McGregor calls the T-Bar project a "life insurance policy" for Midland. He said "right now we're fine for the next few years" and is certain that work is under way to secure the next long-term water source when the T-Bar water supply is exhausted.

His words were confirmed as

Texas tortoise dealing with drought, other dangers

Associated Press

BROWNSVILLE — The only tortoise species native to Texas is facing various challenges, including drought conditions, disease and speeding motorists.

The aptly named Texas tortoise — which is a state-listed threatened species — has struggled because of the three years of extreme drought in South Texas, its home, The Brownsville Herald reported Sunday.

"Everything's going to suffer in the drought," said Pat Burchfield, director of the Gladys Porter Zoo in Brownville. "In turtle eggs, temperature determines sex. If extreme heat continues for a long period of time, the bias is going to produce female Texas tortoises.

The drought might also make the Texas tortoise more susceptible to fungal lung infection. Under most circumstances, the tortoises can survive the disease. The drought might impose stress that makes it harder for them to endure the illness, but Burchfield said he just doesn't know.

"It has been found in wild tortoises, but they seem to live with it unless they're stressed, and extreme heat and drought could be a stressor," he said.

However, the biggest danger to Texas tortoises seems to be people speeding along highways. State Highway 48, which goes to the popular getaway of South Padre Island, runs through the tortoise's native land.

Burchfield said some of the turtle deaths on the highway aren't accidental as he has seen people deliberately drive out of their way to run over the creatures.

Rolando Garza, chief of resource management at Palo Alto Battlefield National Historic Park, said while Palo Alto has a healthy population of roughly 160 tortoises, those that stray out of the park face deadly barriers.

Sam Patten, a biologist with the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department, has seen the numbers of Texas tortoises in areas he is responsible for — two plots of the Las Palomas Wildlife Refuge — drop drastically.

"Ten years ago on a normal day in either unit, I would tag and collect data on 20 or 30 tortoises that were everywhere," he said. "It wasn't unusual after a rainfall or sprinkle to see 25 drinking from a rain puddle at one time."

But this year he has found one live tortoise on each unit this year.

"They're probably not going to become extinct because of large tracts of private land that people can't get onto that is far enough away from the highway," Burchfield said.

Nuclear weapons plant to improve fire safety

Associated Press

AMARILLO — Pantex, the country's only nuclear weapons assembly and disassembly plant, has completed main construction on a $35 million project that is designed to improve fire protection at the facility.

The new construction comes after the Defense Nuclear Facilities Safety Board raised safety concerns earlier this year about more than a decade of delays in completing improvements to an aging fire protection system at the West Texas facility, the Amarillo Globe-News reported Sunday.

"Continued failures, if not addressed, could lead to non-availability of the fire protection systems during normal operations and accident conditions involving special nuclear material," the congressional nuclear watchdog agency said in a special report. "Thus failures of the fire protection system pose a risk to worker and public health and safety."

Officials with B&W Pantex, the plant contractor, said the new construction project included replacing 16,000 feet of main pipes and pumps and having workers build more water holding tanks.

"B&W Pantex is working diligently to maintain and upgrade aging facilities and infrastructure to ensure we continue to accomplish our mission," B&W Pantex General Manager John Woolery said. "We are absolutely committed to maintaining the safety of our employees, our facilities and the critical work we do at Pantex."

Neile Miller, former acting administrator at the National Nuclear Security Administration, said in a May 30 letter to the board that designs for an upgraded flame detection system are 90 percent complete and installation should begin in September.

"Protection of the public, workers and the environment is paramount in everything we do at Pantex," Miller wrote in the letter.

In recent years, B&W Pantex has replaced 17,850 feet of iron piping with high-density polyethylene pipes and poured millions of dollars into the fire system.

When activated, the plant's deluge systems are designed to pump thousands of gallons of water into assembly cells or other weapons facilities, putting out the threat of fire or explosion.

A Feb. 13 electrical fire at the Pantex plant shut down all classified and unclassified computer systems at the site, temporarily halting nuclear weapons work. Officials determined the fire began in a new breaker box that had been installed last year.

Pantex, located about 17 miles northeast of Amarillo, dismantles retired nuclear bombs and modifies weapons for the U.S. atomic arsenal.

Ticketed misdemeanor suspects no-shows in court

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Efforts to ease the strain on a Central Texas criminal justice system through a program in which offenders of relatively minor crimes are ticketed and not arrested have left thousands of cases pending, according to a newspaper report.

The Legislature in 2007 changed misdemeanor laws, allowing officers to give tickets for such crimes as shoplifting and low-quantity drug possession and have offenders show up later to court.

Such "cite and release" programs were designed to ease crowding at county jails and free officers from spending hours arresting and booking suspects.

But the Austin American-Statesman reported Sunday that a "cite and release" program being run by some law enforcement agencies in Travis County has resulted in more than 40 percent of defendants never returning for their assigned court dates.

Instead, county workers are processing arrest warrants for suspects who fled.

"Like any program, it could use improvement," said Travis County Attorney David Escamilla, whose office prosecutes misdemeanor crimes. "We still have some more work to do."

According to county statistics obtained by the newspaper, 15,211 suspects were ticketed and released instead of being arrested between 2009 and 2012. Of those, 6,174 failed to return to court. The Austin Police Department, by far the largest law enforcement agency in the county, issued most of the tickets — 12,739.

By comparison, county officials produced a report at the newspaper's request that showed an average of 15.3 percent of the 95,249 suspects booked into jail and later released for all other Class A or Class B misdemeanors failed to return for their court dates.

Austin Police Chief Art Acevedo said that despite the high rate of no-shows, he won't have officers resume arresting people for such misdemeanors. He said suspects still face arrest for their pending cases if they happen to be stopped for a routine traffic violation, for example.

"They are playing Russian roulette, and if you play long enough, it will catch up with you," Acevedo said.

The 2007 cite and release law was supported by civil libertarians and some in law enforcement, including Travis County Sheriff Greg Hamilton. They argued officers should be able to ticket more offenders for nonviolent crimes that have no victims. They also said counties across the state could save millions in the cost of booking and housing such suspects.

Since the 2007 law was passed, few Texas counties have put such programs in place, and prosecutors have often persuaded law enforcement from doing so.

Martha Louise Wood Wilmeth Lyle

Martha Louise Wood Wilmeth Lyle went to be with our Lord and Savior on Saturday, June 15, 2013 at the precious age of 94. Surrounded by her family, Lyle passed away peacefully at her home in Midland, Texas. Martha Louise was born on February 26, 1919 in Warren, Indiana to Amy Bailey Wood and Harvey Britton Wood. She was the third of seven children. After the 1929 stock market crash, her family moved to Seminole, Oklahoma to find work in the oilfield. Martha graduated from Bowlegs High School in 1937 and married Tom T. Wilmeth on June 3, 1939. The couple had three children, Karolyn, Tom and Donna, before Tom T. was tragically killed in World War II. Times were not easy for the young widow with the three children but she persevered the only way she knew how. Martha later met and married Clifford Thomas Lyle. They had two children, Roger and Terry. The couple moved to Midland in 1972 to live for the remainder of their lives. Martha was a dedicated wife and mother, cherishing family above all. She was an artist and a homemaker. She led a life of quiet faith. Martha was a true survivor of the greatest generation.

Martha is survived by her four children: Karolyn Rogers and son-in-law Jerry, Tom Wilmeth and daughter-in-law Mary Jane, Donna McLaren and son-in-law Craig, Roger Lyle and daughter-in-law Candy, all of Midland. She is also survived by her fourteen grandchildren: Leslie Wood, Kristen Hayes, Karmen Bryant, Fawn Duval, Connie Barnes, Leslie Moore, Christi Sockwell, Steven Feris and Anna Busick, Paige McLaren, Brian McLaren, David Lyle, Stephen Lyle and John Thomas Lyle; her twenty-six great grandchildren and one great-great grandson, Cameron Freeman. She deeply loved all of her many, many nieces, nephews and cousins. Martha is predeceased by Amy and Harvey Wood, Tom T. Wilmeth and Clifford Lyle, her son Terry Lyle, and siblings Leslie Wood, Delmar Wood, Mary Ellen Janiszewski, Dorothy Asher and Jimmy Wood.

Martha's family will receive visitors on Tuesday, June 18, 2013 from 5-6pm at Nalley-Pickle & Welch Funeral Home. Services for Martha will take place at the funeral home on Wednesday, June 19, 2013 at 2p.m. Pallbearers will be David Lyle, Stephen Lyle, John Thomas Lyle, Steven Feris, Charlie Grissom and Charlie Mcgaff.

Miss Connecticut wins Miss USA contest in Vegas

Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — A 25-year-old accountant from Connecticut with a secret glamorous side is the new Miss USA.

Erin Brady of South Glastonbury, Conn., won the beauty pageant at the Planet Hollywood hotel-casino Sunday night after strutting in a white sparkly gown and answering a question about the U.S. Supreme Court's decision upholding widespread DNA tests. Asked if she agreed with the decision to swab the cheeks of arrestees, Brady said she did, since they had committed crimes after all.

Brady, who started competing in beauty pageants two year ago, gets the crown and a New York apartment for one year. She is expected to spend her title reign on a nationwide speaking tour and raising breast and ovarian cancer awareness, the organization's official cause.

As the stage emptied, Brady spoke about her commitment to fighting drug and alcohol abuse, which have marked her family, and her excitement at the prospect of telling her bosses at Prudential Financial she wasn't coming in tomorrow. Or ever again.

"They're going to be very upset to learn that I'm not coming," she said.

Asked what she was looking forward to, now that the competition is over, she described a routine that sounded not very different from her training regime: getting in her beauty sleep and hitting the gym.

Her father Francis said he always knew his math-oriented daughter was a glamour girl. She and her sisters used to strut around and pretend they were beauty queens.

"My grandmother used to have a video camera and she's tell us to walk around the pool like Miss America," Brady's sister Lauren said.

Unlike the rival Miss America pageant, Miss USA doesn't ask its queens to perform a talent or choose a charity mission.

The pageant aired live on NBC, hosted by Nick Jonas of the Jonas Brothers pop act and Giuliana Rancic, co-anchor of "E! News." The Jonas Brothers and DJ Pauly D were expected to perform.

The winner will represent the United States at the Miss Universe pageant in the winter.

Last year's Miss USA, Olivia Culpo, won that international crown, becoming the first Miss USA to ascend to Miss Universe in 16 years.

Fracturing fuels water fights in nation's dry spots

Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — The latest domestic energy boom is sweeping through some of the nation's driest pockets, drawing millions of gallons of water to unlock oil and gas reserves from beneath the Earth's surface.

Hydraulic fracturing has been used for decades to blast huge volumes of water, fine sand and chemicals into the ground to crack open valuable shale formations.

But now, as energy companies vie to exploit vast reserves west of the Mississippi, fracturing's new frontier is expanding to the same lands where crops have shriveled and waterways have dried up because of severe drought.

In Arkansas, Colorado, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Texas, Utah and Wyoming, the vast majority of the counties where fracking is occurring are also suffering from drought, according to an Associated Press analysis of industry-compiled fracking data and the U.S. Department of Agriculture's official drought designations.

While fracturing typically consumes less water than farming or residential uses, the exploration method is increasing competition for the precious resource, driving up the price of water and burdening already depleted aquifers and rivers in certain drought-stricken stretches.

Some farmers and city leaders worry that the fracturing boom is consuming too much of a scarce resource, while others see the push for production as an opportunity to make money by selling water while furthering the nation's goal of energy independence.

Along Colorado's Front Range, fourth-generation farmer Kent Peppler said he is fallowing some of his corn fields this year because he can't afford to irrigate the land for the full growing season, in part because deep-pocketed energy companies have driven up the price of water.

"There is a new player for water, which is oil and gas," said Peppler, of Mead, Colo. "And certainly they are in a position to pay a whole lot more than we are."

In a normal year, Peppler said he would pay anywhere from $9 to $100 for an acre-foot of water in auctions held by cities with excess supplies. But these days, energy companies are paying some cities $1,200 to $2,900 per acre-foot. The Denver suburb of Aurora made a $9.5 million, five-year deal last summer to provide the oil company Anadarko 2.4 billion gallons of excess treated sewer water.

In South Texas, where drought has forced cotton farmers to scale back, local water officials said drillers are contributing to a drop in the water table in several areas.

For example, as much as 15,000 acre-feet of water are drawn each year from the Carrizo-Wilcox Aquifer to wells in the southern half of the Eagle Ford Shale, one of the nation's most profitable oil and gas fields.

That's equal to about half of the water recharged annually into the southern portion of the aquifer, which spans five counties that are home to about 330,000 people, said Ron Green, a scientist with the nonprofit Southwest Research Institute in San Antonio.

In this photo taken June 3, farmer David Schwabauer, a partner/manager of Leavens Ranches, fourth-generation avocado and lemon grower checks an irrigation sprinkler in Moorpark, Calif. The Schwabauer family has been considering allowing energy companies to drill new exploratory wells in their orchards in Moorpark, but the trees in Moorpark rely on irrigation supplies drawn from a depleted aquifer, and the county is already in drought. Drilling for oil, especially using hydraulic fracturing techniques, requires a lot of water, as well, so the family has been divided on whether to go ahead with the offer.

The Eagle Ford, extending from the Mexican border into East Texas, began to boom in 2011, just as Texas struggled with the worst one-year drought in its history. While conditions have improved, most of the state is still dealing with some level of drought, and many reservoirs and aquifers have not been fully replenished.

"The oil industry is doing the big fracks and pumping a substantial amount of water around here," said Ed Walker, general manager of the Wintergarden Groundwater Conservation District, which manages an aquifer that serves as the main water source for farmers and about 29,000 people in three counties.

"When you have a big problem like the drought and you add other smaller problems to it like all the fracking, then it only makes things worse," Walker said.

West Texas cotton farmer Charlie Smith is trying to make the best of the situation. He plans to sell some of the groundwater coursing beneath his fields to drillers, because it isn't enough to irrigate his lands in Glasscock County. Smith's fields, like the rest of the county, were declared to be in a drought disaster area this year by the USDA.

"I was going to bed every night and praying to the good Lord that we would get just one rain on the crop," said Smith, who hopes to earn several thousand dollars for each acre-foot of water he can sell. "I realized we're not making any money farming, so why not sell the water to the oil companies? Every little bit helps."

The amount of water needed to hydraulically fracture a well varies greatly, depending on how hard it is to extract oil and gas from each geological formation. In Texas, the average well requires up to 6 million gallons of water, while in California each well requires 80,000 to 300,000 gallons, according to estimates by government and trade associations.

Depending on state and local water laws, drillers may draw their water for free from underground aquifers or rivers, or may buy and lease supplies belonging to water districts, cities and farmers. Some of the industry's largest players are also investing in high-tech water recycling systems to drill with gray or brackish water.

Halliburton, for instance, recently started marketing a new technology that allows customers to use recycled wastewater, calling it an "investment to further the sustainable development of the oil and gas industry." The American Petroleum Institute, the principal lobbying group for the industry, said its members are working to become less dependent on fresh water, and instead draw on other sources.

"Recycling wastewater helps conserve water use and provide cost-saving opportunities," said Reid Porter, a spokesman for the group.

In northwest Louisiana, as the production rush began in the Haynesville Shale in 2009, the state water agency ordered oil and gas companies to stop pulling groundwater from the local aquifer that also supplied homes and businesses, and use surface water instead. That order is still in effect and has helped groundwater levels to recover, said Patrick Courreges, a spokesman for the Louisiana Department of Natural Resources.

In Colorado's Weld County, home to Peppler's farm and more than 19,000 active oil and gas wells, some officials see selling unneeded portions of their allotments from the Colorado River as a way to shore up city budgets.

The county seat of Greeley sold 1,575 acre-feet of water last year to contractors that supply fracking companies, and made about $4.1 million. It sold farmers nearly 100 times more water but netted just $396,000.

Today in history

Today is Monday, June 17, the 168th day of 2013. There are 197 days left in the year.

Today's highlight:

On June 17, 1963, the U.S. Supreme Court, in Abington (Pa.) School District v. Schempp, struck down, 8-1, rules requiring the recitation of the Lord's Prayer or reading of biblical verses in public schools.

On this date:

In 1885, the Statue of Liberty arrived in New York Harbor aboard the French ship Isere.

In 1940, France asked Germany for terms of surrender in World War II.

In 1972, President Richard M. Nixon's eventual downfall began with the arrest of five burglars inside Democratic national headquarters in Washington, D.C.'s Watergate complex.

Today's birthdays: Singer Barry Manilow is 70. Former House Speaker Newt Gingrich is 70. Comedian Joe Piscopo is 62.

Affirmative action ruling contest: race vs. class

By Justin Pope
Associated Press

In post-Great Recession America, which is the bigger barrier to opportunity — race or class?

A decade ago, the U.S. Supreme Court kept the focus on race as a barrier, upholding the right of colleges to make limited use of racial preferences to ensure a diverse student body. But in a ruling due this month, the court is widely expected to roll back that decision. Such an outcome would shift attention more toward a less constitutionally controversial practice: giving a boost to socio-economically disadvantaged students, regardless of race.

If that happens, it would reflect more than just a more conservative makeup of the justices. Over the last decade, clogged social mobility and rising economic inequality have shifted the conversation on campuses and in the country as a whole.

As a barrier to opportunity, class is getting more attention, while race is fading.

"The cultural zeitgeist has changed," said Peter Sacks, author of the book "Tearing Down the Gates: Confronting the Class Divide in American Education."

"The Great Recession really exacerbated the vast and growing inequalities between rich and poor in America," he said. "Talking openly about class has been taboo," he added, but in recent years the evidence of widening inequality has mounted and it's become "OK for the so-called 99 percent to talk about the 99 percent."

The shift is perceptible in a range of ways:

■ You can see it in polling, like surveys from the Pew Research Center, which shows the percentage of Americans who feel racial discrimination is the chief impediment to black progress is falling, from 37 percent in 1995 to 23 percent in 2012.

Polling on affirmative action varies widely depending on how questions are phrased, but an ABC News/Washington Post poll released Wednesday showed strong feelings about using race in college admissions: Just 22 percent of Americans support letting universities consider applicants' race as a factor, and 76 percent oppose the practice. The proportions supporting racial preferences were similar for blacks (19 percent) and Hispanics (29 percent) as for whites (20 percent).

■ You can read it in the tone of recent opinion pieces penned even by left-leaning academics and columnists, whose support for racial preferences has eroded under a mountain of evidence that quality higher education is tilting further toward the already-wealthy.

■ You can hear it, too — in conversations on elite college campuses, where the dearth of low-income students is replacing race as a topic of debate. And in the words of the first black president, who has said there's no good reason his own daughters should benefit from racial preferences when they apply to college.

The shifting debate has painted supporters of race-based affirmative action into a difficult corner. Most agree the barriers to low-income students are a serious problem that should be addressed, and of course, many minority students are also low-income.

But they acknowledge widening income inequality has made it harder to make their case that special attention to race remains justified.

"This is the first time you have whites thinking they face more discrimination than blacks do," said Camille Charles, a sociologist at the University of Pennsylvania who studies class and race. "You have people who have come to believe the system is set up to benefit black people at the expense of white people." Such beliefs, she said, reflect ignorance about the persistence of discrimination, about how much harder minorities were hit by the Great Recession, and about how affirmative action actually works (many incorrectly conflate "affirmative action" with "racial quotas," which the Supreme Court long ago ruled unconstitutional).

In his 2010 book "The Moral Consequences of Economic Growth," Harvard economic historian Benjamin Friedman charted how during periods of prosperity, societies throughout history have expanded opportunities to disadvantaged groups and become more open and inclusive. During economic struggle, by contrast, they typically close ranks.

The Great Recession was no exception, he said, persuading more Americans that efforts to ensure minorities are represented among the scarce slots at top universities are "a luxury they cannot afford," Friedman said by telephone.

A report released Thursday by the Lumina Foundation underscored the large and persistent achievement gaps between races in the United States: Nearly 60 percent of Asian adults have a college degree, compared to 43 percent of whites but just 27 percent of blacks and 19 percent of Hispanics.

More alarming are the numbers for those between 25 and 29 — an indicator of recent trends. Whites and Asians are doing better than their parents. Blacks, Hispanics and Native Americans are doing worse. That's a problem for everyone, said Lumina president and CEO Jamie Merisotis.

"Narrowing these gaps is a matter of economic and social collective self-interest," he said.

But other numbers in the same report revealed how profoundly family income determines how far you go in school: Four-fifths of 24-year-olds from families in the top quarter of income have college degrees, compared to just one in 10 in the bottom quartile.

Other research, while calling the black-white degree gap worrisome, concludes the gap measured by class alone is far broader. Students of all races from educated affluent families are seven times more likely to complete a bachelor's degree than students from low-income families with less education (68 percent compared to 9 percent).

One study of the freshmen entering the 193 most selective colleges in 2010 found two-thirds came from the top income quartile. Only 15 percent came from the bottom half of the country, income-wise.

At the top 20 law schools, another study found, more than three-quarters of students came from the richest income quartile.

"We continue to struggle with racial discrimination in this country, but class has become a far larger impediment to a person's life chances than race," said Richard Kahlenberg, a senior fellow at The Century Foundation, and a prominent advocate for replacing race-based affirmative action with class-conscious measures.

On college campuses, arguments over race and gender have predominated for decades, but the lack of socio-economic diversity is getting more attention. One sign of the trend is the emergence of a student group called "U/FUSED" (United for Undergraduate Socio-Economic Diversity), with chapters on about 20 prominent campuses. Chapters at campuses like Wesleyan University and Washington University in St. Louis have undertaken a range of efforts, from developing a financial literacy curriculum to lobbying for more financial aid.

But mostly, said Chase Sackett, who helped found the organization while an undergraduate at Washington University and is now a law student at Yale, the groups are getting people to talk about the previously taboo subjects of class, money and inequality.

College students are actually fairly accustomed to talking about race, he said, but class "was something that was under the rug." He said minority groups have been eager to join the conversation, seeing it as complementary to the issues they care about.

Kahlenberg, who informally advises the group, said such an organization would have been unthinkable in his own college days during the 1980s. But "the facts on the ground have changed." The test-score gap between blacks and whites, he noted, was once twice as big as the gap between rich and poor students. Now that's flipped and the income gap is twice as big as the racial one.

Sackett said he and the group don't necessarily oppose race-based affirmative action; they just want more efforts to deal with socio-economic diversity.

Indeed, many people ask, why not do both? Kahlenberg says he's all for that, but "universities never get around to the class part of the equation. They would rather have a class of fairly wealthy students of all races." A big obstacle is cost: By definition low-income students need more financial aid, while race-based preferences don't necessarily go to the neediest students. In fact, research has confirmed large proportions of minority students at selective colleges come from middle- and upper-income families.

criminatory intent than we have space, or need, to address here," the three judges wrote in the decision to throw out the Legislature's 2011 maps. That decision cleared the way for a court in San Antonio to update its interim maps used for the 2012 election.

Democrats hope the court will give minorities at least one additional congressional seat and five-to-seven new seats in the Texas House, which based on past voting patterns would give Democrats more seats. To forestall that, Texas Attorney General Greg Abbott advised to Republicans in the Legislature to adopt the 2012 interim maps and make them permanent.

While Democrats are happy to accept the map for the state Senate, they are fighting the congressional and state House maps by building a public record of the redistricting process that they will use to file a lawsuit when the special session is over.

Dewhurst, who Ted Cruz painted as a moderate in the U.S. Senate race, called for a special session before the regular one was even over to get ready for his re-election campaign. While Perry ignored the lieutenant governor's request for more gun freedoms, he has given Dewhurst a chance to pass abortion legislation that would restrict where, when and how a woman may get an abortion.

If the Legislature approves them, as expected, he will claim credit for passing some of the toughest abortion laws in the country, a useful talking about as he defends his seat against two challengers next year.

Democrats also hope to make political hay from the special session, taking full advantage of the opportunity to portray the Republican majority as anti-minority and anti-women's rights. They constantly quote the Washington court's finding and portray the abortion laws as assaults on women's rights. After the 2012 election, Democrats know they can defeat Republicans by rallying women and minorities.

As governor, Perry stands to benefit the most on the national stage. On Saturday, he spoke at the Faith & Freedom Coalition's annual conference in Washington to present himself as a social conservative and evangelical standard bearer. At the end of the month, the National Right to Life Convention meets in Dallas.

After what many lawmakers called a "kumbaya" regular session, the special legislative session will give everyone something to talk about when election season begins this fall.

it was announced the city locked in another water source in Winkler County. The Smith Field, it was reported, increases the city's potential groundwater volume above T-Bar Ranch capacity by 20 percent.

As project coordinator at High Plains, McGregor was tasked with conducting a study for a producer in the region who asked about a decade-by-decade rain total that compared 100-year rainfall totals. McGregor's study showed that during the decade of 2001-11, the Lubbock area received 41 inches less rainfall than the average in the previous nine decades combined.

From 2000-09, Midland received a total precipitation of 138.2 inches. McGregor said some climatology experts believe 2001 is thought of as the year the current drought began, and it was in that year that Midland recorded 9.85 inches of rain. The three years before 2001 also saw fewer than 10 inches (9.65 inches in 2000, 7.60 in 1999 and 5.14 in 1998).

Midland rainfall

Decade by decade totals for Midland rainfall are:
- 1931-39 - 153 inches
- 1940-49 - 153 inches
- 1950-59 - 120 inches
- 1960-69 - 140 inches
- 1970-79 - 142 inches
- 1980-89 - 165 inches
- 1990-99 - 135 inches
- 2000-09 - 138 inches

There has been a drop in rainfall during the 20-year period from 1990-2009, when a total of 34 fewer inches of rain was recorded compared to the 20-year period from 1970-89.

Not surprisingly, Midland's driest decade on record since weather officials began keeping totals in 1931, was 1950-59, when 120.6 inches fell.

The single driest year on record was 1951, when 4.24 inches of rain was recorded. During the drought of the 1950s, a total of 64.34 inches of rainfall from 1950-56 — an average of 9.19 a year.

Longtimers who survived the drought of the 1950s are hesitant to compare the current dry spell to the one in the '50s, and it is easy to see why, despite the seemingly longer duration of the current drought. From 2001-12, Midland has record a total of 162.9 inches of rain, an average of 13.57 inches a year in that 12-year period.

The number, however, show that from 2010-12, Midland has recorded a total of 34.34 inches of rain, an average of 11.44 inches per year. Factored out for the entire decade, Midland is on pace to record just 114 inches of rain from 2010-19, which, if the numbers held, would mean the 2010s would go down as the driest decade ever since officials began to keep records.

"Climatologists say these droughts can last as long as 20-30 years," McGregor noted. "No one wants to speculate when it will end, but I have heard some experts say we have at least another two years of it."

Patterson's book, "A History of Character: The Story of Midland, Texas," will be completed this year.

states — including Texas — allow citizens to own firearm suppressors. In order. to legally own a suppressor, citizens must pay a one-time $200 tax for each suppressor and each one must be registered through the National Firearms Act branch of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives. Registration applicants must submit a Form 4 to the BATFE, which also must be signed by a chief law enforcement officer in the applicant's home jurisdiction. Applicants can process a Form 4 without that officer by means of a Firearms Trust, which can be set up through an attorney.

Suppressors are commonly referred to as "silencers," but Colisek said that term is misleading since a suppressor reduces gunfire sound and does not fully cancel sound.

Hughes said gun owners greatly benefit from a suppressor by removing "everything about shooting (a gun) that sucks."

For starters, he said a suppressor decreases the risk of gunfire-related hearing loss. Any exposure to noise more than 140 decibels can cause irreparable hearing loss, according to the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health.

Silencerco's website states that unsuppressed handguns and rifles generally create a muzzle report well above that threshold. Hughes said a suppressor can lower that muzzle report by about 30 decibels, generally falling under 140 decibels.

"You're doing long-term hearing damage with every shot (of an unsuppressed firearm)," Hughes said.

Apart from hearing protection, Hughes said suppressors reduce gun recoil — or kickback — experienced after expelling ammunition from a firearm's barrel, increasing the gun user's comfort. The recoil reduction also reduces a tone of intimidation surrounding the firearm, boosting gun owner confidence in handling, he said.

Hughes said the U.S. does not need more gun control, and he expects half a million citizens to legally own suppressors by the end of the year.

Colisek and Lucas shared the same belief regarding gun legislation.

"You can't judge gun owners based on the actions of a crazy individual," fice. In 2004, Gov. Rick Perry appointed him to the utilities commission, which oversees the electric and telephone industries.

SMITHERMAN

Smitherman said his most significant PUC work involved electricity deregulation. But potential Republican primary rivals could use a couple of commission initiatives against him. One project he worked on, which has since lost political allure, was the effort to lay giant transmission lines to aid wind power. The project's estimated costs ballooned from $4.9 billion to $6.8 billion. Smitherman said the lines will bring needed power to West Texas drilling regions.

The PUC rollout of smart electric meters also has opponents citing health and safety concerns. Smitherman said the Legislature had wanted both the power lines and the smart meters, leaving the commission to "implement that in the most cost-effective way."

One potential speed bump for Smitherman was eliminated Friday. Perry vetoed a measure that would have required railroad commissioners to resign before running for another office. That frustrated environmentalists like Smith, who issued a statement decrying the use of the commission as a "springboard to run for another office." Smitherman is not the only one thought to be looking at succeeding Attorney General Greg Abbott, who appears to be setting up a run for the governor's office. Other rumored Republican candidates include Sen. Ken Paxton, of McKinney; Representative Dan Branch, of Dallas; and Harriet O'Neill, the former Texas Supreme Court justice.

Boston hospital to offer hand transplants for kids

Associated Press

A Boston hospital is starting the world's first hand transplant program for children, and doctors say it won't be long until face transplants and other radical operations to improve appearance and quality of life are offered to kids, too.

The move shows the growing willingness to do transplants to enhance a patient's life rather than to save it as donated hearts, livers and other organs have done in the past. More than 70 hands and at least 20 faces have been transplanted in adults, and doctors say it's clear these operations are safe enough to offer to children in certain cases, too.

"We feel that this is justifiable," Dr. Amir Taghinia said of the pediatric hand program he will lead at Boston Children's Hospital.

"Children will potentially benefit even more from this procedure than adults" because they regrow nerves more quickly and have more problems from prosthetic hands, he said.

Only one hand transplant is known to have been done in a child — a baby in Malaysia in 2000. Because the donor was a twin who died at birth, her sister did not need to take drugs to prevent rejection.

That's the main risk in offering children hand transplants — the immune-suppressing drugs carry side effects and may raise the risk of cancer over the long term.

However, one independent expert thinks the gains may be worth it in certain cases.

"We understand so much more about immune suppression" that it's less of a risk to put children on it, said Dr. Simon Horslen, medical director of the liver and intestine transplant program at Seattle Children's Hospital. "This is never going to be done as an emergency procedure, so the families will have plenty of opportunity to weigh the options."

Also, a hand can be removed if rejection occurs, and that would not leave the child worse off than before the transplant, Horslen said.

Several types of kids might be candidates — those born without hands, children who lose them in accidents and children with infections that wind up requiring damaged hands to be amputated.

Quality of life is a key concern for people missing arms and hands — prosthetics for those limbs are not as advanced as those for feet and legs. In December, doctors at Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore did a double-arm transplant for former soldier Brendan Marrocco, who lost all four limbs while serving in Iraq. It was the seventh double-hand or double-arm transplant performed in the U.S.

For a child missing two hands, "the quality-of-life issues are a big deal," said Dr. Douglas Diekema of the Center for Pediatric Bioethics at Seattle Children's Hospital and a member of the American Board of Pediatrics' ethics committee.

"In terms of how we interact with the social world, it's mostly our face and our hands," so a transplant "is a reasonable thing to offer a family," he said.

Boston Children's Hospital plans to make its first cases healthy children 10 or older who are missing both hands.

"Some of them can't feed themselves, they can't go to the bathroom, someone needs to assist them with almost every activity," Taghinia said.

The hospital also will consider children missing one hand who already are taking immune-suppressing drugs because of transplanted organs, or those with only one hand that doesn't work well.

The hospital will cover the cost of the operation and care for three months afterward, then ask insurers to pay for immune suppression and follow-up.

3,500 could be summoned for Holmes jury

Associated Press

DENVER — As many as 3,500 prospective jurors will be summoned when Colorado theater shooting suspect James Holmes goes on trial, another measure of the complexity and sensitivity of the case.

Associated Press

Aurora theater shooting suspect James Holmes is shown in court in Centennial, Colo., on June 4. Holmes was allowed to change his plea to not guilty by reason of insanity.

Judge Carlos A. Samour Jr. included the estimate in a ruling dated Friday. The ruling granted a defense request to have all prospective jurors fill out questionnaires before they are questioned by lawyers.

Holmes is charged with more than 160 counts of murder and attempted murder. He is accused of planning and executing an assault on a packed movie theater in a Denver suburb in July, killing 12 people and injuring 70.

Among the dead were a 51-year-old father who had gone to the theater with his two teenage children. They escaped with no physical injuries.

Holmes has pleaded not guilty by reason of insanity and will undergo a mental evaluation at the state hospital before the trial.

Prosecutors are seeking the death penalty.

The trial is scheduled to begin Feb. 3, and since jurors will wield life-and-death power over Holmes, jury selection is likely to be slow, painstaking and contentious.

Once they are chosen, the jurors will be asked to weigh a staggering amount of evidence.

Prosecutors needed 2 1/2 days to present a rough outline of their case at a preliminary hearing in January, calling witnesses and showing photos and documents that pointed toward an intricately planned assault.

For its part, the defense has filed more than 130 motions to date.

Defense lawyers have said they plan to seek a change of venue because of pretrial publicity.

Obama's Massive $100M Brain Research Initiative Targets Memory Loss

Drug-free memory discovery yields 'shocking' results in clinical trial; restores brainpower equal to those up to 15 years younger, all within 30 days!

PHOENIX, ARIZONA —

For readers who fret about their less-than-perfect memory, or worry about steadily worsening mental powers, your life is about to change.

Thanks to President Obama's massive $100 million B.R.A.I.N. initiative, millions of frustrated Americans who not only lose their car keys, but also forget where they have parked may soon have real, lasting relief.

Science Attacks Memory Loss

The multi-year program called Brain Research through Advancing Innovative Neurotechnologies, or BRAIN, will as part of its initiative, target the symptoms premature mental decline, including poor memory, the inability to maintain focus and concentration, mental fatigue, and brain fog.

It has been called the "next great American project," drawing comparisons to the wildly successful 1990 scientific discovery initiative, the Human Genome Project.

Over an estimated ten-year period, Brain Research scientists will 'map' the human brain in an unprecedented quest to unravel its mysteries.

What's the Catch?

What President Obama and administration officials failed to tell Americans is that, for many, they don't have to spend $100 million or wait ten-plus years for a fix for their foggy, forgetful mind.

In fact, evidence of a genuine, clinically tested, real, memory pill is here, now.

Real Memory Pill Exists!

A US-based research firm, Brain Research Labs, has developed and conducted successful human testing on a genuine memory pill.

Over a period of a few weeks in a landmark, randomized, double-blind, placebo-controlled clinical trial, published in a peer-reviewed journal, scientists observed the formula helping older brains function more youthfully.

In many cases, the formula allowed users to match the memory recall speed and brainpower of those up to 15 years younger, all within a 30-day time period.

It's no secret either. The US Patent and Trademark Office has granted the drug-free natural formula a United States patent.

'Pharmacist of the Year,' Dr. Gene Steiner, recommends a patented, natural memory compound

Over the years, the sophisticated three-part formulation has gained the trust of medical doctors, a top clinical pharmacist, and is even a recommended component in an updated version of a legendary Medicare-reimbursed brain health protocol.

Preventive Gerontologist, Dr. Arnold Bresky, the man responsible for the Medicare-reimbursed brain tune-up protocol recommends this prescription-free memory compound as an integral part of his new Four Pillars of Brain Health program.

With more than 45 years behind a pharmacist's counter, and 25 years in a radio show booth, if Dr. Gene Steiner had a nickel for every time someone asked, "Do you have anything that can improve my memory," he would be a rich man today.

A Crystal-Clear Memory

It's a question he's heard many times. "This natural memory pill is to an aging, sluggish brain, what a breath of fresh air is to your lungs," he says.

Before prescribing the pill to patients, Dr. Steiner decided to first try it himself.

"Within a few days, I can tell you without reservation that my memory became crystal clear," he says.

"I had such marvelous results that I not only started recommending it to my customers, I even shared it with other physicians!"

A Pharmacy Best-Seller

"It became the best-selling brain health product in my pharmacy and customers were returning to thank me for introducing them to it."

"It felt great to see so many people whose lives were enriched by taking a simple, natural formula."

"With this simple, drug-free formula, we finally have something that we can recommend that is safe and effective. And you don't need a prescription either!"

Recently, Dr. Steiner relocated to another state and was apprehensive about taking the state board of pharmacy jurisprudence examination, a daunting examination that tests a candidate's mastery of pharmacy law.

"I began taking the natural memory compound for two weeks prior to the test, and I passed with flying colors!" "The recall I personally experienced was fantastic," says Steiner.

"It's a unique process," he adds, "that pumps the brain full of energizing oxygen, helping improve blood circulation to the brain, while helping to boost key neurotransmitters in the brain responsible for cognitive functioning."

Alternative medicine pioneer, and retired medical school professor, Dr. Robert Heller, personally uses and recommends the formula.

Perks Up Tired, Sluggish Brains

"It's not a drug," smiles Dr. Heller, "it's a nutritional supplement that can help a foggy, sluggish brain become sharper, quicker, and healthier."

Head and neck surgeon and psychologist, Paul Nemiroff, PhD, MD, FACS, agrees, adding, "It is truly an amazing breakthrough for memory!"

Kasey L.* from Olathe, Kansas says, "I was having trouble finding words in my brain and remembering things. Now I am as sharp as a tack and I have a memory like an elephant. I will never stop taking it."

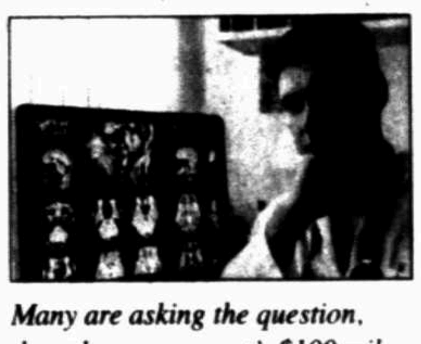
Grace K.* of Alabama was in the same boat.

"I was having concentration problems and difficulty remembering things. After only one week, I felt mentally energized and more confident in myself! Now, I enjoy reading again. I've regained confidence in myself!"

Crossword puzzle fanatic, Bobby D.* from western Nevada can't say enough about his super-fast mental abilities.

"Working four crossword puzzles in the morning paper, quicker, has amazed me with the answers just popping into my head! I stand outside myself and wonder where those answers come from!"

Anyone who has ever stood in front of a crowd and then, forgot what they were about to say, knows the horror of "drawing a blank." Professional speaker Sylvia. P.* from California found Brain Research Labs' memory discovery just in time.

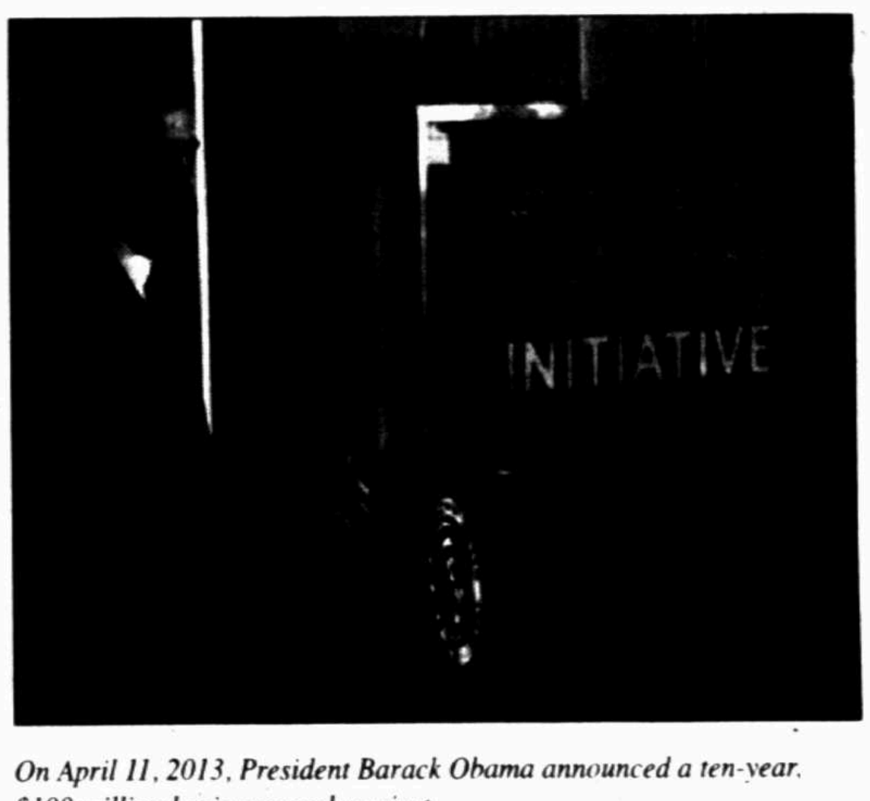


Many are asking the question, does the government's $100 million scientific discovery initiative ignore the existence of a patented memory restorer?

"I started having a hard time staying focused and remembering important information."

"As a professional speaker in front of hundreds of people, I found these senior moments very embarrassing. Plus, it was threatening my career. Since taking this, I can now conduct a whole seminar without relying on my notes. I feel like my old self again!"

You don't have to spend millions of dollars or wait ten years to do what Brain Research Labs has already done for you. If you are ready to do something about your mind and memory, here's your risk-free chance.



On April 11, 2013, President Barack Obama announced a ten-year, $100 million brain research project.

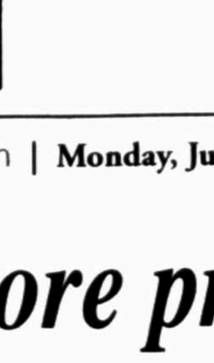
OPINION

Don't expect any more privacy on Google's Earth

■ We don't need Edward Snowden to know privacy is keyboard stroke away from extinction.



KATHLEEN PARKER
Washington Post Writers Group

At a party a few years ago, a young reporter bounded over to my cluster of social nodders and, with the breathlessness of a born tweeter, chirped: "What's the new hot thing?!"

Without disturbing my mascara, I replied: "Anonymity."

She looked befuddled.

I continued: "To be Googled and to have nothing turn up. That's hot."

Too late, alas, even then.

In these post-Snowden days, the notion of anonymity is ludicrous. But so it has been for some time, though recent disclosures bring pause even to the habitually inured. It is one thing for Mrs. McQueen and Mrs. Harry G. Brown, my elderly dowager neighbors from childhood, to spy on each other through their porch screen doors. It is another for the National Security Agency to compile records of one's phone calls.

Oh, for the days when Mrs. McQueen trumpeted gleefully: "I saw you eating that apple pie!"

While Americans bemoan their loss of privacy — and allow me to ululate right along with you — it is helpful to recall our own role in this gradual process of, shall we say, regurgitative knowingness.

That is, our apparent willingness to show-and-tell every little thing in the quest to be known. Fame and celebrity are by comparison higher callings than whatever compels strangers to display, say, their tongues (or other points of anatomical interest) in the public forum of social media. These acts of baboonery, not so feigned after all, are unsubtly reminiscent of chimpanzees who, unconsciously aware of the camera's hostile intrusion, try to offend it with grimaces, grins and lingual extrusions.

Now, suddenly we're offended that national security operatives are following our behavior patterns? Cue Cheetah's laugh track.

Whether Edward Snowden, the self-admiring 29-year-old who decided to save us from ourselves if not our enemies, is hero or villain will keep us amused until time tells. Most likely he's a hybrid of the two, the heroic concentrated mostly in his having spawned an urgent and overdue debate about the costs of privacy in the service of security.

Meanwhile, Americans are scrambling to read Aldous Huxley's "Brave New World," the subject of my high school thesis. One of my more ironic literary friends called to recite Joseph Heller's "Catch-22" scene wherein another famous Snowden, mortally wounded, literally spills his guts.

Early infatuation with Huxley and other prescient writers — George Orwell's Big Brother seems suddenly cuddly — made me rationally paranoid, yes, but mostly aware of the tyranny of caring. It comes gently at first — we only want to protect you -- but soon-ish becomes oppressive.

Distracted by our gadgets, we hardly notice until a Snowden materializes. We love Google Earth because we can see our very own houses on our very own laptop screens. Wow. But who else is watching?

When I visited then-Health and Human Services Secretary Tommy Thompson at his post-9/11 "Command Center" — a vast room filled with gigantic plasma screens and computer arsenals manned by military personnel -- he pointed to my South Carolina office building on one of the screens.

I asked Thompson if he could tell me whether my assistant was there. "Not yet, but soon," he said.

Fast forward to the set of CNN's "Parker Spitzer" a couple of years ago when I asked Google CEO Eric Schmidt what options were available to people (like me) who might find his "Street View" a little creepy.

"You can just move," he said.

Well, no, you can't.

There's no habitable place left on the planet where one can move to escape the data stalkers. Speaking of which, a peeve more personally concerning than whether Edward Snowden discovers where I get my tasteful highlights — or, as the Obama campaign mastered, which candidate I might support given my proclivity for same. Online shopping.

Take one little tiny peek at an item of even remote interest and you are owned by The Thing. Once I Googled a purse that, turned out, cost $1,200. I moved along.

Not so fast, hissed the serpent.

A full year later, I'm reading about immigration reform and suddenly the $1,200 purse slithers into view, imprinting my brain with temptation I didn't invite.

OUR VIEW

It's up to local Scout leaders, programs to instill West Texas values

The Boy Scouts of America have created a firestorm over its recent decision to allow openly gay Scouts into its organization. It remains to be seen where the future of the Scouting program will end up.

Until now, the BSA has had some sort of "Don't ask, don't tell" policy regarding homosexual Scouts, reminiscent of what the U.S. military employed under the Carter and Bush administrations.

While allowing homosexual Scouts, BSA still prohibits participation by openly homosexual adults. It is a stance that has drawn criticism from just about every front.

We've seen two reactions to the new BSA policy and these decisions carry with them different impacts.

First, the Southern Baptist Convention approved a resolution last week expressing its opposition to and disappointment in the BSA's new policy allowing gay Scouts.

However, the resolution does not recommend that Southern Baptists drop ties with the BSA. Instead, it expressed support for those churches and families that decide to do so. It also encourages churches and families who choose to remain with the BSA to work toward reversing the new policy.

Many expected the SBC to come forth with a stronger stance against BSA, and it remains unclear how many Scout troops will be lost under the large umbrella of the SBC churches, which sponsor hundreds of troops.

Meanwhile, Caterpillar Inc. announced it will no longer give money to the BSA because the company believes the BSA's policy barring homosexual adults from serving as Scout leaders is discriminatory.

Other companies such as United Parcel Service and Intel Corp. stopped supporting the Scouts well before the recent decision.

It appears the BSA is having a hard time finding full support on either side of the issue, and that's the rub.

We have long been a huge supporter of the BSA and its goals and aspirations as an organization. Its Eagle Scout program is one of the finest growth programs for boys in the entire nation.

But we think the BSA decision has done irreparable damage to the organization. We aren't sure yet how much damage has been done, but we do expect a lessened impact of the BSA nationally. Locally, we hope West Texas values are what drives our Boy Scout leaders, and our community molds the type of programs that have produced the next generation of leaders.

On civil liberties, the left is silent

■ Since when did Democrats turn compliant on violating civil liberties? It appears when their man is in the White House.

DANA MILBANK
Washington Post Writers Group

Where have all the liberals gone?

President Obama, who as a Democratic senator accused the Bush administration of violating civil liberties in the name of security, now vigorously defends his own administration's collection of Americans' phone records and Internet activities.

Senate Democratic leader Harry Reid said he thinks Congress has done sufficient intelligence oversight. His evidence? Opinion polls.

House Democratic leader Nancy Pelosi defended the programs' legality and said she wants Edward Snowden prosecuted for leaking details of the secret operations.

Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., chairwoman of the Senate intelligence committee, accused Snowden of treason and defended false testimony given to her committee by the director of national intelligence, who in March had denied the programs' existence.

With some exceptions, progressive lawmakers and the liberal commentariat have been passive and acquiescent toward the secret spying programs.

When libertarian Sen. Rand Paul, R-Ky., introduced legislation two weeks ago to curb the surveillance powers, he didn't have any co-sponsors. When he held a news conference last week to unveil a lawsuit claiming the surveillance is unconstitutional, five members of Congress joined him — all Republicans.

I kept looking for liberal dissent — and then, on Wednesday morning, the news wires reported that a group called Voice of Resistance was meeting outside the Capitol, where demonstrators would proclaim Snowden a hero and flog an effigy of Republican Rep. Peter King of New York, one of the first to brand Snowden a traitor. I arrived at the appointed place and time but didn't find a protest. Instead, there were six journalists and a lone demonstrator, who was wearing an anti-abortion baseball cap. He told me the group was a right-wing outfit. "The others are parking the car," he explained, before turning the topic to Rush Limbaugh.

Polling last week by The Washington Post and the Pew Research Center produced discouraging evidence that Democrats have shed their suspicion of government overreach now that one of their own is in charge. Sixty-nine percent of Democrats say that terrorism investigations should trump privacy as the government's main concern, compared with 51 percent in 2006, when the Bush administration's warrantless wiretapping program had come to light. Then, 37 percent of Democrats found the NSA's actions acceptable, compared with 64 percent now. (Republicans went in the other direction, suddenly becoming more privacy-conscious.)

Certainly, there are differences between now and then. Today, the program operates under court supervision and has at least the veneer of congressional approval (the administration circumvents the law's requirement that only "relevant" records can be collected by claiming that all phone records of all Americans are relevant). And it remains to be seen whether Snowden is a true whistleblower or somebody who means his country harm.

Yet it is jarring to see the left so compliant now that the surveillance has been sanctioned by a Democratic president. Even if the programs ultimately prove defensible, isn't it worth finding out what they really are, before liberals accept a suspension of civil liberties they may come to regret?

The weakness of the liberals' argument for standing down was displayed by Reid, who assured reporters last week that Senate intelligence committee members "have done their very utmost, in my opinion, to conduct oversight. And that's why the American people, in polls — two polls that I saw today — support what is happening with trying to stop terrorists from doing bad things to us."

While Reid tests the political winds to determine which constitutional rights Americans should have, those who should be overseeing the program are instead defending it with a just-trust-me logic. Feinstein declared that "these programs are within the law." The top Democrat on the House intelligence committee, C.A. Dutch Ruppersberger of Maryland promised that "we're not violating any constitutional rights." Both said they'd like to see more about the program declassified, but their past efforts to produce more disclosure have been weak.

There are a few Democrats who have upheld the party's tradition of championing civil liberties — such as Rep. John Conyers, of Michigan, who has devised a bill with conservative Rep. Justin Amash, R-Mich., to curtail the program, and Sen. Jeff Merkley, D-Ore., who with Sen. Mike Lee, R-Utah, introduced legislation backed by 11 other senators requiring more disclosure of secret court rulings.

But the Conyers bill is likely to go nowhere in the House, and Reid was cool to the Merkley proposal, saying only that "I'll be happy to take a look."

If he does look, he'll find that they're doing what progressives should do: Protecting the people from a too-secretive government.

Iraq no-fly zone viewed as symbol for one in Syria

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Obama administration, trying to avoid getting drawn deeper into Syria's civil war, has pointed to the U.S.-led invasion of Iraq in 2003 as a symbol of what can go wrong when America's military wades into Middle East conflicts.

But experts say the White House is looking at the wrong Iraq war, especially as the U.S. reluctantly considers a no-fly zone over Syria to stop President Bashar Assad from continuing to use his air power to crush rebel forces or kill civilians.

A no-fly zone is a territory over which warring aircraft are not allowed to fly. The U.S. and international allies have enforced them in several military conflicts over the past two decades.

When he took office in 2009, President Barack Obama promised to end the U.S. war in Iraq as an example of refocusing on issues that had direct impact on Americans. By the time the U.S military withdrew from Iraq in 2011, almost 4,500 American soldiers and more than 100,000 Iraqis had died. The war toppled Saddam Hussein but also sparked widespread sectarian fighting and tensions that still simmer.

But when considering a no-fly zone, experts point to 1992, a year after the Gulf War. That's when the U.S. imposed a weakly-enforced no-fly zone over southern Iraq and could not prevent Saddam, a Sunni Muslim, from persecuting and killing hundreds of thousands of Shiites whom he viewed as a political threat.

That failure is now being used as a case in point of why the U.S. should or shouldn't police the Syrian sky to prevent Assad from accelerating a two-year death toll that last week reached 93,000.

The White House is undecided on whether it will impose a no-fly zone over Syria, as some have demanded. Egypt's president, Mohammed Morsi, on Saturday called for a U.N. endorsed no-fly zone.

"We've rushed to war in this region in the past. We're not going to do it here," Obama's chief of staff, Denis McDonough, said Sunday on CBS' "Face the Nation."

Vali Nasr, a Middle East expert and dean of the John Hopkins' School of Advanced International Studies, argued for a no-fly zone "to prevent Assad from completely dominating this war for all practical purposes. And we need to create a no-fly zone to create a safe zone for refugees that Assad can't reach."

Nasr, who held a senior State Department job during the first two years of the Obama administration, said in an interview Friday that there are risks, "but perhaps the risks are exaggerated. And what it showed in Iraq is that it does not have to be a slippery slope into a larger war."

On the flip side, said retired Navy Adm. William Fallon, "there's no way to do this in a standoff — 'We're just here to help, not going to get our hands dirty.'"

Fallon, the former head of U.S. Central Command who helped draw up and carry out the 1992 no-fly-zone in Iraq, said the challenge "is that you'd better be prepared for escalation and expansion of mission."

"The likely expansion will be providing air support for guys on the ground," said Fallon, now on the board of directors at the American Security Project, a nonpartisan think tank started by Secretary of State John Kerry when Kerry was a senator.

Last Thursday, the White House deputy national security adviser Ben Rhodes announced the Obama administration has agreed, after months of hesitation, to start supplying the rebels with upgraded military aid. That decision came as a result of stronger intelligence indicating that Assad has used chemical weapons against his people multiple times this year.

That would mark the White House's first lethal shipment to Syria. Until now, the administration has mostly supplied the rebels with military equipment, such as body armor and communications devices, and humanitarian aid to the Syrian people.

Obama has not ruled out imposing a no-fly zone in Syria, Rhodes said.

But, Rhodes said, "people need to understand that not only are there huge costs associated with the no-fly zone, not only would it be difficult to implement, but the notion that you can solve the very deeply rooted challenges on the ground in Syria from the air are not immediately apparent."

Supporters of a no-fly zone in Syria point to the one that was established by NATO over Libya in 2011. It overwhelmed Moammar Gadhafi's air defenses and attacked tanks and military vehicles that threatened civilians.

But European nations have shown little appetite for getting directly involved in Syria, where Assad's forces possess an air defense system made far more robust with Russian-bought weapons than what Gadhafi had.

Last month, Russia acknowledged it has agreed to sell Syria advanced S-300 air-defense missiles, which are considered to be the cutting edge in aircraft interception technology and could make a no-fly zone very costly.

Republican Sens. John McCain, of Arizona, and Lindsey Graham, of South Carolina, have been pushing for a no-fly zone in Syria, and last week said supplying arms and ammunition to rebels is not enough to curb Assad's air power. They raised the option of using cruise missiles, which can be launched from outside of Syria, as one way of securing Syria's air space.

On Sunday, Sen. Saxby Chambliss, of Georgia, the top Republican on the Senate Intelligence Committee, agreed. "A no-fly zone may be the, ultimately, tactic that has to be taken," he told NBC's "Meet the Press."

Responded Sen. Mark Udall, D-Colo.: "You know, though, a no-fly zone and other involvement may lead to this slippery slope that others talked about."

Twenty years ago, the U.S. mission in Iraq showed that no-fly zones must be aggressively enforced if they are to work.

Military air units generally need to be working closely with ground forces to make sure that airstrikes and missile attacks hit their intended targets and don't kill civilians.

Fallon said that's how no-fly zones often prompt a mission creep, as deploying air forces can easily turn into a need to send in ground troops. U.S. and European officials vehemently maintain there are no plans to launch a ground war in Syria.

BRANNON HONORED

Sue Brannon, longtime supporter of the Republican Party in Midland County and Texas, was honored this legislative session for her service to residents of Midland and the state of Texas. She was honored on both the House and Senate floors.

The following ran in an earlier Reporter-Telegram editorial.

"For nearly 50 years Sue Brannon has been attending and then leading Republican conventions in Midland County. She has served on the board of the Midland County Republican Women since 1990, been a president of the board of the Texas Federation of Republican Women and of course, served as the chair of the Midland County Republican Party. Whether it is unapologetically Republican stances or a distinctive look, Brannon has embodied civic engagement, and it was right that the Texas Legislature honored her with a resolution for her decades of distinguished work."

MUSEUM RECEPTION

The opening night reception at the Museum of the Southwest on June 7 was unique in that it honored not only the featured artist, Andrew Hancock, in its 2013 Contemporary Artist Series, but also artist Danville Chadbourne, whose works will be on display this summer at five West Texas museums, a collaboration known as the West Texas Triangle.

Chadbourne's exhibit was sponsored in conjunction with the Ellen Noel Art Museum in Odessa.

Hancock is a commercial and editorial photographer based out of Indianapolis and is a regular contributing photographer for Sports Illustrated. He is a graduate of Midland High School and Texas A&M University, where he received a degree in journalism. His exhibition is "Chasing Greatness."

Chadbourne's exhibition includes sculpture, ceramics and paintings. The San Antonio artist works with such diverse materials as ceramic, stone, wood, bone and found objects. A native of Bryan, he received an undergraduate degree from Sam Houston State University and his master's from Texas Tech University. After teaching at the college level for 17 years, he left the profession in 1989 to devote himself full time to his art.

Besides the Museum of the Southwest, his works will be on exhibit this summer at the Ellen Noel Art Museum, Grace Museum in Abilene, the Old Jail Art Center in Albany and San Angelo Museum of Fine Arts.

Among those turning out for the opening night event were Hancock's wife, Maria, with their 8-month-old daughter, Madeleine; his parents, Jill and Barry Russell, and Jerry and Melinda Hancock; his aunt and uncle, Chuck and Paula Howbert; and his cousins, Chas Howbert, Sarah Varner and Nancy Long.

Others seen in the crowd were Linda George, Marion Kimberly, Marianne and Will Green, Linda and Michael Melson, Connie DeMasi and Norman Gould, Eileen Dey, Suzanne and Ed Rathbun and Barbara Culver Clack.

Following the event, Toni and Scott Louderback, who hosted the reception for Hancock, entertained the Hancock family and Wendy Earle, the museum's curator of collections and exhibitions, at dinner at the Racquet Club.

Meanwhile, the museum's executive director, Brian Whisenhunt, entertained Chadbourne and his wife, Diana, and key staff from the Ellen Noel Art Museum at dinner at Basin Burger House.

HAWAII VACATION

Cecelia and Bob Davis enjoyed an incredible 12-day Hawaiian vacation earlier this spring. In Honolulu on the island of Oahu, they stayed at the Royal Hawaiian, which was built in 1927 and is known for its historic charm. It graces Waikiki's beautiful beaches.

Their tour began with a visit to Pearl Harbor, which was one of the highlights for Bob. He served in the Navy from 1945 to 1946 on the USS West Virginia and made three trips to Pearl Harbor to transport returning troops to Bremerton, Wash. This was his first time back in 67 years.

The couple toured the southeast coast and enjoyed an outrigger canoe ride before flying to Kauai, the oldest and most lush of the islands and which has been the location for more than 60 movie projects.

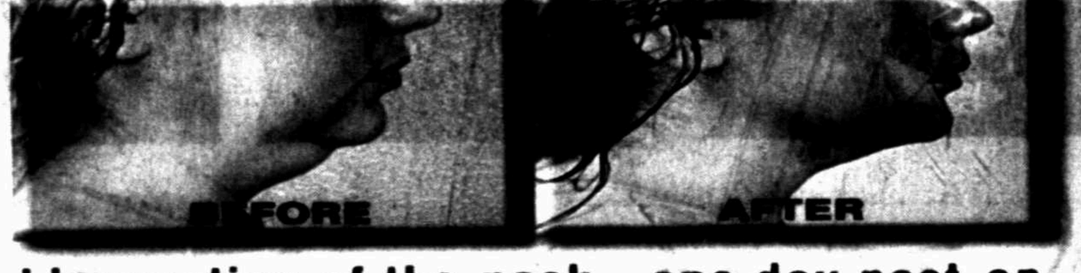
Advantages of Dr. Sylvan Bartlett's Methods of Liposuction

Dr. Bartlett's Methods Compared to Laser Lipo:

A. Much Shorter Recovery Time (You look good the next day)
B. No Risk of Thermal Injury
C. No Risk of Wound Creating Fluid
D. The Number of Canula Entry Points (Scars) are only a Fraction of the Number Needed for Laser Lipo
E. In Most Cases, Long Term Skin Retraction is Equal to Laser Lipo



Liposuction of the neck - one day post-op

No Lipo Procedure will give the same results as a Tummy Tuck. Lipo does not tighten the abdominal wall.

Do not be misled by photos that are the result of a Tummy Tuck and are represented as the results of Laser Liposuction.

Dr. Bartlett brings his patients more than 30 years of Liposuction Experience.

DONATED MINI MUSTANG

visited was Maui, known as the Valley Island. On arrival, they drove past sugar cane fields, hiked in the Iao Valley and visited Lahaina, an old whaling port. Highlights included a cooking class with Chef James McDonald, traveling to Mount Haleakala's 10,023-foot summit and a traditional luau. "It was a fine way to celebrate my birthday," Cecelia said.

The Big Island of Hawaii was their final destination. On the way to the hotel, they made several stops in the Hawaii Volcanoes National Park, drove along the Hamakua Coast and through the Parker Ranch. They enjoyed a catamaran cruise along the Kohala Coast and touring the Kona coffee growing region and Puuhonuao Honaunau National Historical Park, a place of sanctuary and refuge of ancient Hawaiians.

RETIREMENT PARTIES

Longtime educator Linda Hall was honored at two celebrations before her retirement as principal of Jane Long Elementary School.

There was a reception May 21 at Grace Lutheran Church, with Christi Walls, Kendra Menchaca, Crista Nickell, Margie Norton, Patrice Jones, Gale Holcomb, Cindy Marshall, Cheryl Zachery and Kathy Lee as the hostesses. About 150 friends and colleagues attended.

Then Hall was honored with a surprise appreciation celebration May 21 at the school. The program was under the direction of fine arts teacher, Kathy Dowell, assisted by teachers Walls, Menchaca and Nickell and other staff members. Entertainment was conducted by Debbie Stephens, administrative assistant.

Decorations were prepared by Nickell, Diana Arroyos, Rachel Villa, Kathy Dowell, Sheila Pruitt, Rocio Alvarado and Lynette Witherspoon, as well as several fifth- and sixth-grade students. Floral decorations were provided by La Casa Verde Plant Nursery.

Midland ISD Superintendent Ryder Warren and Mayor Wes Perry spoke and Perry read a proclamation, proclaiming "Principal Linda Hall Day." Corbette Padilla from U.S. Rep. Mike Conaway's office read a letter on his behalf and presented a certificate stating that a flag was flown over the U.S. Capitol building in Hall's honor. It will be presented to her at a later date. A PowerPoint slide show was prepared by Walls and Nickell and shown at both the retirement party and surprise celebration. The event ended with a song by Dowell, Pruitt and Alaina Harris.

In attendance at both events were Hall's husband, Bob Hall; their children, Chris and Tricia Hall of Boulder, Colo.; Kevin and Jill Hall of Des Moines, Iowa; and Michelle and Dr. Terry Beck, and grandson, Tristan Beck, all of Midland; Warren and a number of Central Office administrators, including Lisa Neighbors, Jodie Baugh, Linda Jolly, Karen Johnson; current and former assistant principals Sheila Pruitt, Ja'Laun Wacker and Terri Rimer; and former principals Romeo Canales and wife, Arlene; Bill Maurer and Kathy Robinson.

Also attending were former teacher Sandra Newsom, of Tyler, and friend Loretta Foster of Austin, and Kimberly Harless-Smith, an advocate for the school.

Of Hall's 30 years in education, 25 have been with Midland ISD. Besides serving as principal at Jane Long, she was an assistant principal and teacher at Crockett Elementary, as well as a teacher at Travis Elementary.

MUMMERS MADNESS

More than 400 patrons and nearly 100 volunteers were present when the Summer Mummers opened its 65th season on June 7 at the historic Yucca Theatre. The event is a fundraiser for Midland Community Theatre.

The crowd enjoyed the classically inspired melodrama, "Magical Malevolence in Midland," as well as the olio, a collection of skits and dance numbers that followed.

By the end of the night, an enthusiastic crowd had filled the main floor with nearly 1,000 bags of popcorn.

The fun continues Friday and Saturday nights through Aug. 31.

J.C. Penney, Haggar raising funds for BBBS

From staff reports

J.C. Penney at Midland Park Mall and clothing manufacturer Haggar are teaming up to help raise funds for Big Brothers Big Sisters of Midland.

Until the end of the month, J.C. Penney customers will have the opportunity to round up their purchases to the nearest dollar and donate the difference to BBBS through the retailer's charitable giving program, jcp cares. In addition, J.C. Penney will donate $1 for every $50 gift card and pair of Haggar pants that are purchased.

Protect children from accidental drug poisoning

By Lyden Odukwu, M.D.

A recent study tied the increase in adult prescriptions for a number of medications to an increase in the number of reported poisonings of children by those same medications. From cholesterol and diabetes medications all the way to pain killing opioids were among the drugs linked.

Children up to age five were at the greatest risk, with 13-19-year-olds next in line. Opioids and diabetes medications were most often associated with serious injuries and hospitalizations.

So what should a parent or guardian do to reduce the risk?

Never leave any medication for anyone—yourself, your child, a guest—out in easy reach. Placing medications in a locked container is the best protection for children of any age. This is even true for non prescription items like mouthwash or aspirin.

LYDEN ODUKWU, M.D.

Remember that, while child-resistant lids are a great idea, they are only child resistant. Children may surprise you with their persistence and creativity when it comes to beating that system.

Avoid telling your younger children that medicine is or tastes like candy. While even too much candy can make them sick, any unneeded dosage of medicine can cause great harm.

Always keep medicine in its original package so that, should an accident happen in spite of your best efforts, you will at least know what to tell the poison control person when you call.

With a few preventive measures, you should be able to keep your children safe from prescription drug accidents.

COM overcomes fatigue to win WNB team title

By Len Hayward
Lhayward@mrt.com

It was noticeable Sunday that most swimmers at the Western National Bank West Texas Invitational were feeling the fatigue of a four-day, outdoor meet.

But fighting through that fatigue is what swim coaches like to see in invitational meets during the long course season, and when the final day of the event wrapped up Sunday, City of Midland Aquatics swim team coach Bob Kizer was more than happy.

And to top things off for Kizer and his squad, the COM Aquatics team won its first team title in nine years this weekend. The squad scored 1,225.5 points, which was more than 225 points ahead of second place finisher Katy Aquatics.

COM Aquatics swimmers won a total of 31 events in the different age groups over the weekend, but for Kizer what pleased him most was the improvement he saw in execution the team had been working on leading up to the annual meet.

"(The team win) is fun and it's fun for the kids and it gets them excited about it," said Kizer, who is in his first year as COM Aquatics swim coach. "But more importantly, I think we took a step forward as a team and executed some of the things we've been working on for a long time in practice. It's always good to see them do that."

Kizer said COM swimmers were coming off a tough three-week stretch of practices, and did not have a chance to rest, and likely won't get much time off over the next few weeks either.

So, being able to continue to improve on the technical aspects was something that had Kizer smiling about Sunday afternoon.

"It's far less about time right now, especially for the older kids," Kizer said. "The young kids, their times are going to be dropping throughout the season, but for the older kids it's really about how we are executing the things we are working on."

Among the nine events COM swimmers won on Sunday was the 400 freestyle relay in the girls 13-14 and 15-and-over age divisions. Not

Edge goes to Spurs

San Antonio leads series, 3-2

SAN ANTONIO — Manu Ginobili had 24 points and 10 assists in a surprise start to spark the San Antonio Spurs to a 114-104 victory over the Miami Heat in Game 5 of the NBA Finals on Sunday night, pushing the Spurs one victory away from their fifth championship.

Danny Green scored 24 points and broke Ray Allen's finals record for 3s in a series with 25. Tony Parker had 26 points for San Antonio.

LeBron James scored 25 points on 8-for-22 shooting for the Heat and Dwyane Wade had 25 points and 10 assists. But the Heat missed 21 of their first 29 shots to fall behind by 17 points in the second quarter of another uninspired performance.

Game 6 of the best-of-seven series is Tuesday night in Miami.

Whirling through the defense like the Manu of old, Ginobili shrugged off a postseason full of disappointment to deliver a performance that the Spurs have never needed more desperately. He hit 8 of 14 shots and had his highest points total since June 4, 2012.

Tim Duncan had 13 points and 11 rebounds, Green was 6 for 10 from 3-point range, and Parker gutted through 36 minutes on that tender right hamstring. Kawhi

RockHounds rough up RoughRiders

From staff reports

FRISCO — The Midland RockHounds raced out to an early lead and never looked back as they launched five home runs as a team in a 16-4 win against the Frisco RoughRiders at Dr Pepper Ballpark on Sunday.

Midland went up 8-0 after the first two innings and, following the first two Frisco runs of the game in the fourth, responded with six runs in the fifth for good measure.

The RockHounds opened the game with a five-run first as Dusty Coleman busted open a 2-0 game with a two-out, three-run home run to right.

Coleman

Midland starter Sean Murphy retired the side in order in the bottom of the first before Midland went on the offensive again.

After back-to-back singles to start the second, the RockHounds scored three runs in two at-bats on a wild pitch, a Jake Goebbert sacrifice fly and a solo home run by Vinnie Catricala for an 8-0 lead.

Yet following a two-run double by Chih-Hsien Chiang to put Frisco on the board in the bottom of the fourth, Midland put on its most impressive scoring display in the fifth.

The RockHounds got back-to-back-to-back home runs off releiver Arlett Mavare, who replaced starter Kevin Pucetas to start the inning, including a three-run shot by Darwin Perez and solo shots by Anthony Aliotti and Goebbert, all of which came with two outs.

Beau Taylor added an RBI single off reliever Phil Klein, who replaced Mavare, to put Midland up 14-2.

Midland coasted to victory from there as Murphy improved to 4-2 on the season with the win.

Rose breaks 43-year England drought, wins US Open

ARDMORE, Pa. — A steady hand gave Justin Rose the shiny U.S. Open Trophy. A wild ride gave Phil Mickelson yet another silver medal.

Rose captured his first major championship on Sunday with remarkable calm and three pure shots on the punishing closing holes at Merion. A par on the 18th hole gave him an even-par 70, and that was good enough to become the first Englishman in 43 years to win America's national championship.

Rose hit 5-iron to the first cut of rough, pin-high on the 17th for an easy par. He smashed the most important tee shot of his career down the middle on the final hole, about 10 yards short of the famous Ben Hogan plaque. And his approach rolled near the pin and settled against the collar of the green.

"When I came over the hill and saw my ball laying in the fairway, I thought, 'This is my moment.' It was me hitting from the middle of the fairway," Rose said.

As usual, someone's big moment in the U.S. Open came at Mickelson's expense.

Rose was in the scoring area a half-mile from the grandstands behind the 18th green where the fans began to chant, "Let's go Phil!" as Mickelson paced off a last-ditch effort to force a playoff. It was a long shot — the 18th hole didn't yield a single birdie all weekend. From about 40 yards away, Mickelson's chip for birdie raced by the cup,

My exploits as a professional wrestler

Note: Jonathan Hull is spending his summer training to be a professional wrestler with Old School Wrestling in Odessa. He has been chronicling his experiences in his blog online. Here is his latest offering, which recounts his fifth practice session that took place Thursday. Jonathan's blog can be found at www.mywesttexas.com/sports/blogs/jonathan

JONATHAN HULL
jhull@mrt.com

I can now say I have body slammed a pro wrestling champion — even if he wasn't quite ready for me to do so.

I mentioned in my last blog I began delivering and receiving a variety of classic wrestling moves during my training sessions with Old School Wrestling in Odessa this week, including body slams, suplexes and hip tosses.

However, at my final training session of the week on Thursday, I found myself put in the ring with OSW Heavyweight Champion "The Living Proof" Jastin Taylor. I knew this day would come, but I didn't know it would come so quite so quickly.

Crossing paths with Taylor in the ring is inevitable considering he is OSW's co-owner and head trainer. Taylor has wrestled matches against some established names in this industry, including former WWE superstars Charlie Haas, Shelton Benjamin, Billy Gunn and will take on Matt Hardy in the main event of an OSW card scheduled to take place in Andrews on July 20. (If you want more details about that event you can find it on OSW's Facebook page.)

The practice session started off the way most have with Taylor leading myself and several other newer trainees through a variety of skills, trying to gauge where each of us currently were in our training. But eventually it moved back into delivering body slams.

I was the only trainee in the ring to have both given and received a body slam, so I got to be the guinea pig a bit. With a couple of the other trainees struggling with the technique of the move, Taylor had me lift him up into the position. I think that's as far as he intended for it to go, though.

I, however, was in the zone. After I had successfully lifted Taylor, I showed the guys in the ring how to finish the move. I cupped the back of Taylor's head in order to protect it and slammed him onto the mat. He looked up at me half in shock and half in disbelief.

Fortunately for me, this muscular man didn't seek retribution. I nervously laughed off my mistake and practice moved on.

However, now that I think about it, Taylor might have slyly paid me back shortly after that occurrence. It did only seem natural to pair the two largest trainees in the ring together, but it was also quite the challenge for me.

For the record, I am currently the second largest new trainee at OSW at around 6-feet and 275 pounds. Curtis Hubert, who graduated from Andrews in 2011 and was a nose guard on the Mustangs football team, is bigger than I am at around 6 feet, 2 inches and 290 pounds.

Hubert and I joked a bit about us graduating from rival schools on Thursday, talking about the different stigmas our respective coaching staffs placed on our rivals. In Big Spring, we're told at an early age that people from Andrews believe they're better than us because they have so much money in their school district. Andrews athletes are told the Steers like to play dirty and are made up of thugs — not that I come close to fitting a thuggish image — and the Mustangs just hope to escape a game against Big Spring with all of their limbs still attached. And for the record, Hubert doesn't act like he's better than me. It's just funny how those stigmas take hold.

But, I digress. Hubert is a load of a human being and even the more veteran wrestlers at OSW have been impressed with how hard he hits the mat when he's taking a bump. The man makes the entire ring shake beneath your feet. And now it was suddenly my duty to lift this man, who reminds me of a tank.

I was able to get Hubert up, but we never seemed to get the form down correctly to execute the slam. As I mentioned Tuesday, a body slam is a two-person act and chemistry is important. Hubert struggled a bit with getting his legs in the right form, and frankly, I struggled with holding him up for an extended period of time.

After three failed attempts, Taylor stepped in, muscled Hubert up and dropped him with a thundering thud onto the mat. And while I didn't successfully slam Hubert, he didn't seem to struggle with manhandling me.

Call that Jastin's revenge, although he did later find himself on the receiving end of multiple body splashes, and I didn't take it easy on him.

Not that he noticed.

I did cut my Thursday practice session about 30 minutes shorter than I normally do as I tried to beat the thunderstorm back to Midland, which, much like when trying to body slam Hubert, I failed to do.

We always desperately want rain in Midland until we get a torrential downpour and realize we'd be better off trying to get around town on a jet ski than in a car.

But even with an early departure, I left the ring Thursday night feeling like I had taken more steps in becoming a better performer, and Jastin's last words to me as I exited are going to stick with me.

"It's all about performing to a level where everything you do looks real. That doesn't mean it is real. My biggest deal is to get you guys to a point where you can make everything you do look like it hurts, even if it doesn't. There are moves in wrestling that are going to be real. There's just no getting around that sometimes. But as long as you are selling everything you do as much as you can, then you're going to be a good performer."

San Antonio's Danny Green (4) reacts after scoring against the Miami Heat during the second half at Game 5 of the NBA Finals on Sunday in San Antonio.

Spurs

From 1C

Leonard had 16 points and eight rebounds, and the San Antonio shot 60 percent to overcome 19 turnovers.

Allen scored 21 points and Chris Bosh had 16 points and six rebounds for the Heat, who were stunned by a vintage Ginobili performance early and never really recovered.

Miami missed 21 of its first 29 shots and Green hit three straight 3s in the middle of the second quarter to tie Allen's record of 22. The Spurs led 47-30 on Duncan's two free throws before the Heat finally showed some fight.

A 12-0 run got them back within striking distance at 47-42 and the Heat surged out of the halftime gates to cut San Antonio's lead to 61-59 in the first 1:17 of the third.

San Antonio pushed right back, getting a jumper from Parker, a 3-pointer from Green that broke Allen's record and a lefty layup from Ginobili to get a little breathing room.

Ginobili closed the third with a twisting, off-balance, left-handed runner and a right-handed drive to the bucket to bring cheers of "Manu! Manu!" from the delirious crowd.

Nowhere to be found in the first four games, and for most of these playoffs, Ginobili had his fingerprints all over the opening of Game 5. He hit a step-back jumper, had two pretty assists on a backdoor cut from Green and a thunderous dunk from Duncan and knocked down two free throws for an early 9-4 lead.

Ginobili's 3-pointer from the wing made it 15-10, bringing the nervous crowd to its feet. The awakening was a welcome sign for the Spurs, who desperately missed their playmaking daredevil.

The Heat reclaimed momentum in Game 4 thanks to a shuffle of the starting lineup by coach Erik Spoelstra, who moved sharp-shooter Mike Miller into the starting lineup in Udonis Haslem's place, giving Miami a smaller lineup that spaced the floor better and gave James and Wade room to operate.

Spurs coach Gregg Popovich made a move to match that on Sunday night, putting the struggling Ginobili in for center Tiago Splitter. Ginobili was averaging 7.5 points in the first four games and shooting 34 percent. In the final year of his deal, the soon-to-be 36-year-old was asked about retirement on Saturday.

The crowd roared for Ginobili when he was introduced last, with one banner reading "We still Gino-believe!"

Wade had endured a similarly quiet start to these finals before erupting for 32 points and six steals in Miami's Game 4 victory that evened the series. That carried over to the opening quarter of Game 5, when Wade's assertive play helped Miami withstand Ginobili's initial haymaker.

Wade's trademark euro-step on the break and two free throws kept the game tight and James hit a 3-pointer to tie it at 17 with under 5 minutes to play in the period.

The two teams entered Game 5 riding a pendulum of momentum that was swinging wildly back and forth over the previous three games. A classic, air-tight Game 1 victory by the Spurs gave way to three blowouts — Miami by 19 in Game 1, San Antonio by 36 in Game 3 and the Heat by 16 in Game 4.

COM divers earn spots in USA Diving Zone meet

From staff reports

All three City of Midland Aquatics divers earned spots in next month's USA Diving Zone meet in Georgia this past weekend at the USA Diving Summer Junior Region 8 Championships at Mabee Aquatic Center.

Both Garrett Martin and Charlye Campbell earned zone meet spots Sunday.

Martin finished fourth in the 14-15-year-old boys 1-meter springboard as he had a score of 295.00 points. GC Diving's Nathaniel Hernandez won his third event of the weekend with a score of 410.60.

Martin also qualified for the zone meet in the 3-meter springboard Saturday.

Campbell completed her weekend by qualifying for her third event Sunday. Campbell finished sixth in the 3-meter springboard with a score of 309.35. San Antonio Divers' Sine Scribbick won the event with a total of 377.50.

Campbell also earned spots in the zone meet in the platform competition and the 1-meter springboard.

Haley Allen, who competed in the girls 16-18 division, did not compete Sunday but earned spots at the zone meet in the 3-meter and 1-meter springboard competitions earlier in the weekend.

GC Diving competitors won seven of the eight events contested Sunday.

Wright, Hale, Parker and Carriger clocked in at 4 minutes, 27.25 seconds, while the Drennan sisters, Helferich and Lary timed in at 4:30.03.

Other COM winners on Sunday were the boys 10 and under 400 freestyle relay team of Connor Carriger, Jakob Vines, Zakary Alvarado and Rizky Jofansa, Kile Carriger (girls 13-14 200 breastroke and 200 individual medley), Braden Vines (boys 13-14 200 breastroke and 200 freestyle), Kyle Marshall (boys 15 and over 200 breastroke), Connor Carriger (boys 10 and under 50 breastroke), Jocelin Drennan (girls 15 and over 100 butterfly),

"I was particularly proud today, the last day, and it's been four long days and we were as good or better than we've been throughout the meet," Kizer said. "I'm really proud of them today."

Rangers drop 6th straight, fall to Blue Jays

Blue Jays	7
Rangers	2

ARLINGTON, Texas — Texas manager Ron Washington rarely addresses his team after games.

Yet after another disappointing performance, he thought the club needed to hear from him.

Chien-Ming Wang won for the first time in more than a year and the Toronto Blue Jays completed a four-game sweep of the Rangers with a 7-2 victory Sunday, handing Texas its sixth straight loss.

Washington didn't divulge the message he delivered after Texas lost its sixth in a row for the first time since April 2010.

"We're not the first team to lose six in a row and we probably won't be the last," Washington said. "We're tough enough to make it through this challenge."

The Rangers fell to 1-6 on a season-high, 11-game homestand. This is Texas' first six-game slide at home since July 20-Aug. 3, 2005.

"I didn't sense any frustration," Texas outfielder David Murphy said. "We're past that point. Things didn't happen. With the amount of talent we have here, we're very close to turning this thing around."

Texas rookie Jurickson Profar started at third base for the first time in his career. All-Star Adrian Beltre had a scheduled day off in the field and was the designated hitter.

Before the game, Profar spent time on the field working with infield coach Dave Anderson.

Ian Kinsler batted third for the first time since May 22, 2011. He batted in that spot 60 times in 2010.

The changes didn't make a much of a difference as the Rangers finished the series 2 for 24 with runners in scoring position. They've scored only eight runs during their losing streak.

Texas will complete its homestand with a four-game series starting Monday against the AL West-leading Oakland Athletics.

"They're leading the division," Washington said. "If we're ever going to get back on track, this is the series to get back on track with."

The last-place Blue Jays extended their winning streak to five games.

In his second start with the Blue Jays, Wang (1-0) allowed seven hits in seven shutout innings to win for the first time since last June 12 with Washington. Toronto signed Wang last Tuesday to bolster a rotation with three starters on the disabled list.

The 33-year-old Wang twice won 19 games for the New York Yankees before injuries derailed his career. He hurt his right foot in 2008 and injured his right shoulder in 2009.

Wang was 4-4 with a 2.33 ERA in nine starts this year for the Yankees' Triple-A team at Scranton-Wilkes-Barre. New York released him last week at his request and Wang signed with the Blue Jays.

Colby Rasmus homered in his third straight game, and Adam Lind and J.P. Arencibia also chipped in with homers for Toronto. The Blue Jays outscored the Rangers 24-4 to sweep a four-game series at Texas for the first time.

Derek Holland (5-4) allowed four runs and 10 hits in six innings for the Rangers.

Elvis Andrus had an RBI single, and Kinsler walked with the bases loaded to break up the shutout in the ninth.

"We're struggling right now, but I still believe in them," Washington said. "We're going to move forward."

Arencibia, who entered the series in a 3-for-41 rut, hit his second homer in three games. He lined an 0-1 pitch just over the 14-foot fence in left, a two-run shot that gave the Blue Jays a 2-0 lead.

Confederations Cup: Italy defeats Mexico

By Andrew Dampf
Associated Press

RIO DE JANEIRO — Mario Balotelli showed off his strength — and muscular physique — by scoring in the 78th minute Sunday to lead Italy past Mexico 2-1 in the Confederations Cup.

Balotelli took a perfectly placed acrobatic pass from Emanuele Giaccherini and muscled between two defenders. His goal broke a 1-1 tie in the Group A game, the first official match at renovated Maracana Stadium.

Celebrating his 100th appearance with the national team, Andrea Pirlo gave Italy the lead with one of his trademark free kicks in the 27th minute.

"I was dreaming of a free-kick goal," Pirlo said. "It was important to win the first match and now we have three days to recuperate. It's nice to be applauded in a legendary stadium like this."

Mexico replied in the 34th when Javier "Chicharito" Hernandez converted a penalty kick after Andrea Barzagli tripped Giovani Dos Santos. Mexico's Andres Guardado hit the crossbar in the 11th minute.

Italy moved even with Brazil with three points in the group after the hosts beat Japan 3-0 in the tournament opener Saturday.

The Azzurri had not impressed in their last two matches, drawing with both the Czech Republic in a World Cup qualifier and with Haiti upon arriving in Brazil earlier this week, but Pirlo and Balotelli made the difference this time.

For his 13th goal with Italy, Pirlo curled a spinning shot over Mexico's wall into the top left corner after Balotelli earned the foul that set up the dead-ball shot from 30 yards.

As usual, Balotelli was his temperamental self. Midway through the second half, he kicked his boot across the penalty area after being thwarted by Mexico's stubborn defense.

But the AC Milan striker finally broke through as the match appeared headed for a draw, holding off Mexico captain Francisco Rodriguez then powering past another defender, Hiram Mier, to score as he skidded across the grass.

Much like at last year's European Championship, when he scored both goals in a 2-1 semifinal win over Germany and pulled off his shirt after one of them, Balotelli stripped off his jersey, earning a yellow card.

Perhaps worried he might pick up a second yellow card, as in the match against the Czech Republic, Italy coach Cesare Prandelli replaced Balotelli in the 85th with Alberto Gilardino. Balotelli walked off to a warm reception from the sold-out crowd on a comfortable afternoon.

Spain dominates Uruguay to win Confed opener

By Stephen Wade
Associated Press

RECIFE, Brazil — Andres Iniesta repeated several times that Spain deserved the 2-1 victory over Uruguay in their Confederations Cup opener.

The midfielder had only one quibble with the result Sunday. The game wasn't as close as the score made it look, and he said Spain should have had at least one more goal.

"I think it was clear Spain was the undeniable winner, a deserved victory," Iniesta said. "It left a very good taste in our mouth. But we probably deserved another goal."

Spain had 77 percent of the possession in the first half, and 71 in the match — and that tells plenty.

Cesc Fabregas hit the post in the 10th minute, which is the near-goal Iniesta was probably talking about.

The World Cup champions did get two first-half goals just after Fabregas' miss — one in the 20th from Pedro and another 12 minutes later by striker Roberto Soldado.

Spain had a little luck with the first goal, which may have been heading wide when it took a huge deflection off Uruguay defender Diego Lugano to beat goalkeeper Fernando Muslera.

The second was perfect finishing by Soldado after a cute reverse pass from Cesc Fabregas.

Luis Suarez scored a consolation goal with a delicately curling free kick for Uruguay in the 88th.

Spain is trying to win the only major trophy it lacks to go with a 2010 World Cup and two consecutive European championships.

Coach Vicente del Bosque talked about the importance of a damp, quick pitch so that Spain could put on a show. It rained just before the match, and Spain did just that.

"I think we took advantage in the first half, but dropped off a bit in the second," Del Bosque said.

Uruguay barely touched the ball in the first 15 minutes as Spain linked dozens of touches together, eventually setting up Pedro's goal. He scored from just outside the area as Lugano lunged trying to stop the shot — and pushed it into the goal, instead.

Houston's' Matt Dominguez swings during the fourth inning at Minute Maid Park on Sunday in Houston.

ASTROS 5
WHITE SOX 4

HOUSTON — Jason Castro homered for the second straight game and Matt Dominguez hit a three-run double to help Houston top the Chicago White Sox for its fourth straight win.

Dominguez put Houston on top 3-0 with a double in the second inning, and Castro hit a two-run shot to make it 5-2 in the seventh.

YANKEES 6
ANGELS 5

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Mariano Rivera struck out Albert Pujols with the bases loaded to end the Angels' five-run rally in the ninth inning, and the New York Yankees snapped their five-game losing streak with a wild victory over Los Angeles.

CC Sabathia pitched five-hit ball into the ninth, and Travis Hafner hit a three-run homer off Jered Weaver, but the Yankees barely survived when Rivera fanned the Angels' star slugger. New York's famed closer gave up three hits and a walk, but still got his 24th save.

TIGERS 5
TWINS 2

MINNEAPOLIS — Doug Fister held Minnesota hitless until the sixth inning and Torii Hunter connected for his 300th career home run, leading Detroit over the Twins.

Fister (6-4) didn't allow a baserunner until walking Ryan Doumit with two outs in the fourth inning, then lost his no-hit bid when Brian Dozier led off the sixth with a homer.

ROYALS 5
RAYS 3

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Wade Davis stopped his five-game winless streak, Jeff Francoeur homered, and Kansas City beat Tampa Bay.

Davis (4-5) gave up two runs and five hits in six innings for his first win since he beat the Los Angeles Angels on May 15. It was the right-hander's first game against the Rays, who traded him to the Royals during the offseason.

ATHLETICS 10
MARINERS 2

OAKLAND, Calif. — Bartolo Colon worked seven strong innings to win his sixth straight decision, Josh Reddick homered and matched a career high with four hits, and Oakland avoided a sweep with a victory over Seattle.

Sean Smith and Brandon Moss each homered and drove in two runs for the Athletics, who moved three games ahead of Texas in the AL West — their largest lead since ending the 2006 season four games up. Josh Donaldson also went deep, and Yoenis Céspedes, Coco Crisp and John Jaso drove in runs for Oakland.

National League

METS 4
CUBS 3

NEW YORK — Kirk Nieuwenhuis hit a three-run homer that capped a four-run rally in the bottom of the ninth inning, and the New York Mets salvaged what had been shaping up as another sorry afternoon, startling the Chicago Cubs 4-3 on Sunday.

Matt Garza pitched seven scoreless innings, and the Cubs scored twice on a madcap play that featured three bad throws by Mets infielders, giving Chicago a 3-0 lead.

BRAVES 3
GIANTS 0

ATLANTA — Freddie Freeman singled three times and drove in one run, and Julio Teheran pitched six innings to lead Atlanta over San Francisco.

Teheran (5-3) allowed seven hits and one walk. The 22-year-old struck out eight and got a few stellar plays from outfielders Jason Heyward and Justin Upton in the fourth, and by Andrelton Simmons at shortstop in the sixth that kept a run from scoring with the Braves holding a two-run lead.

REDS 5
BREWERS 1

CINCINNATI — Johnny Cueto pitched six solid innings in his return to Cincinnati's rotation and Jay Bruce homered in a win over Milwaukee.

Donald Lutz drove in two runs with a pinch-hit single, and Zack Cozart and Joey Votto each had two hits as Cincinnati rebounded after losing 6-0 on Saturday.

MARLINS
CARDINALS 2

MIAMI — Ricky Nolasco allowed one run and three hits in seven innings to help Miami take the rubber game of its three-game series against St. Louis.

The NL Central-leading Cardinals lost a series for the first time since April 26-28 against Pittsburgh.

PIRATES 6
DODGERS 3

PITTSBURGH — Rookie Gerrit Cole won again, getting home run help from Pedro Alvarez and pitching Pittsburgh past Los Angeles.

Cole (2-0) allowed three runs on seven hits and no walks in 5 2-3 innings. The top pick from the 2011 draft won in his big league debut last week.

ROCKIES 5
PHILLIES 2

DENVER — Jhoulys Chacin came within an out of his second career shutout, and Colorado topped Philadelphia.

Chacin gave up six hits, struck out three and didn't walk a batter. His 8 2-3 innings marked the longest outing by a Rockies starter this season.

PADRES 4
DIAMONDBACKS 1

SAN DIEGO — Kyle Blanks hit a three-run homer with two outs in the bottom of the eighth inning to a snap a tie and lift San Diego to its season-high sixth straight victory.

Blanks' eighth home run of the season came off Arizona reliever David Hernandez (2-4) and made a winner of Clayton Richard (2-5), giving the Padres a three-game sweep.

Interleague

INDIANS 2
NATIONALS 0

CLEVELAND — Corey Kluber pitched eight shutout innings, and Cleveland spoiled Stephen Strasburg's return with a win over Washington.

Kluber (5-4) escaped three big jams to win for the first time in 11 career starts at Progressive Field. He gave up seven hits, struck out eight and didn't walk a batter. He wiggled out of trouble in the seventh after the Nationals loaded the bases with no outs.

LSU's Mason Katz, left, picks off UCLA's Eric Filia (4) at first base to end the top of the first inning in game four of the College World Series in Omaha, Neb. on Sunday

UCLA 2
LSU 1

OMAHA, Neb. — Adam Plutko and two relievers limited LSU to five hits, and UCLA turned both of the Tigers' errors into runs in a tense 2-1 victory at the College World Series on Sunday night.

The Bruins (45-17) will play North Carolina State on Tuesday. The No. 4 national seed Tigers (57-10) will meet North Carolina in an elimination game.

LSU scored its only run on Mason Katz's fourth-inning homer. The Tigers had defensive breakdowns that allowed the Bruins to tie it in the sixth and take the lead in the eighth.

Plutko (9-3) allowed four hits in seven innings for the win. David Berg worked out of trouble in the ninth to earn his 22nd save.

Aaron Nola (12-1) gave up five singles in eight innings, and both runs against him were unearned.

NORTH CAROLINA STATE 8,
NORTH CAROLINA 1

OMAHA, Neb. — North Carolina State's Carlos Rodon pitched eight shutout innings and the Wolfpack knocked ACC pitcher of the year Kent Emanuel out of the game early in an 8-1 victory in their College World Series opener Sunday.

Rodon (10-2) held the No. 1 national seed Tar Heels hitless into the fifth inning. He allowed five hits and struck out eight.

It was the sophomore left-hander's second straight dominating performance against the Tar Heels. Three weeks ago he allowed one hit and struck out 14 in 10 innings in a 2-1, 18-inning loss in the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament.

Putin says Super Bowl ring was gift

By Vladmimir Isachenkov
Associated Press

LONDON — Russian President Vladimir Putin is denying insinuations that he stole New England Patriots owner Robert Kraft's Super Bowl ring that's now on display in the Kremlin, but says he's ready to buy him another ring as a gift.

Putin was reacting Sunday through a spokesman to a New York Post story quoting remarks made by Kraft at an awards gala at the Waldorf-Astoria hotel last Thursday.

"I took out the ring and showed it to (Putin). And he put it on and he goes, 'I can kill someone with this ring,'" Kraft said, as quoted by the Post. "I put my hand out and he put it in his pocket, and three KGB guys got around him and walked out."

The diamond-encrusted Super Bowl ring worth about $25,000 changed hands while Kraft was visiting St. Petersburg, Russia, in 2005 with an American business delegation that met Putin. At the time, Kraft had said he gave the ring to Putin as a gift.

But the Post story quoted Kraft as saying at Carnegie Hall's Medal of Excellence gala that he had an "emotional tie to the ring" and wanted it back, but the White House intervened and said it would be in the interest of U.S.-Russian relations to claim it was a gift.

Putin arrived in London on Sunday to meet with British Prime Minister David Cameron, and Putin's spokesman, Dmitry Peskov, was asked about the Post story.

"Back in 2005 I stood behind the president's back and I saw how that ring was presented to him. All that talk about some kind of pressure that was exerted on him (Kraft) should be the subject of a detailed talk with psychoanalysts, I think," Peskov told The Associated Press.

securing Rose's victory.

Mickelson, already in the U.S. Open record book with five second-place finishes, added another that will hurt as much any of them.

Sunday was his 43rd birthday. It was the first time he was equipped with the outright lead going into the last day. His week began with a cross-country trip home to San Diego to watch his oldest daughter graduate from the eighth grade, returning just three hours before his tee time on Thursday. This was the same daughter born the day after his first runner-up finish in 1999.

All the stars were aligned. None of the putts fell in.

What hurt Mickelson even more was a wedge from about 121 yards on the 15th hole. It should have given him a good look at birdie, but it came up so short that Mickelson's best chance was to use one of his five wedges to chip from the front of the green. He hit that one too far, 25 feet by the hole, and the bogey wound up costing him a chance at the major he covets.

Mickelson wound up with a bogey on the 18th for a 74 and tied for second with Jason Day, who closed with a 71.

"Heartbreak," Mickelson said. "This is tough to swallow after coming so close. This was my best chance of all of them. I had a golf course I really liked. I felt this was as good an opportunity as you could ask for. It really hurts."

Glance and Scores

U.S. OPEN GLANCE

ARDMORE, Pa. (AP) — A quick look at the final round of the U.S. Open at the 6,996-yard, par-70 Merion Golf Club:

Winner: Justin Rose of England, who finished with an even-par 70 to win by two shots.

Just behind: Jason Day and Phil Mickelson, who finished second for the sixth time in the Open.

Where's Tiger?: Woods shot a 4-over 74, finishing at 13-over 293, his worst 72-hole score as a pro in the U.S. Open and it tied his high score in any major.

Notable: Rose became the first Englishman in 43 years to win the Open. The last was Tony Jacklin at Hazeltine in 1970.

Next up: Next year's U.S. Open will be June 12-15 at Pinehurst in North Carolina.

Quotable: "I've holed a putt to win a major championship hundred of thousands of times on the putting green at home." — Rose after winning.

NAJETI HOTELS OPEN: At Saint-Omer, France, Ireland's Simon Thornton won the beat South Africa's Tjaart Van der Walt with a par on the first hole of a playoff in the Najeti Hotels Open for his first European Tour title.

Thornton and Van der Walt each shot 1-under 70 to finish at 5-under 279.

England's Seve Benson closed with a 70 to finish a stroke back.

Web.com

AIR CAPITAL CLASSIC: At Wichita, Kan., Scott Parel won the Air Capital Classic on Sunday to become the fourth-oldest winner in Web.com Tour history, closing with a 7-under 64 for a three-stroke victory.

The 48-year-old Parel finished at 18-under 266 at Crestview Country Club after opening with rounds of 69, 66 and 67. He earned $117,000 to jump from 153rd to 14th on the money list with $124,808.

Parel won for the first time in 161 starts on the tour. He eagled the par-4 14th for the second straight day and had six birdies and a bogey.

Kirk Triplett is the oldest Web.com Tour champion, winning the 2011 News Sentinel Open at 49.

Blackhawks try to regain momentum in Boston

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

BOSTON — A dominant first period gave the Chicago Blackhawks plenty of momentum. Then it disappeared.

They've come to Boston to find it and get the upper hand over the Bruins in a very tight Stanley Cup final series.

"I guess the main thing is to always keep it simple," Chicago's Patrick Kane said Sunday soon after arriving at the arena where he hopes to do that. "If you can do that, usually you can take away some of their momentum. I think right now they do have it, especially after the last overtime period where it seemed like they had a lot of chances compared to ours."

Chicago outshot Boston 19-4 in the first period and led 1-0 in Game 2 on Saturday night. But the Bruins held a 24-15 lead the rest of the way and won 2-1 in overtime to even the series at one game apiece.

The team that scored first also lost the opener. Boston led 2-0 and 3-1 then allowed two goals in the last 12 minutes of regulation. Chicago went on to win 4-3 in three overtimes.

"Might be an unusual stat," Blackhawks coach Joel Quenneville said, "but there's nothing wrong with scoring first."

The Bruins physical play might have taken its toll. They outhit the Blackhawks 50-34 and dominated overtime.

"I'm used to getting hit back there quite a lot," Chicago defenseman Niklas Hjalmarsson said. "I know how to take a hit or two. I think for the most (part) we might not be the most physical D corps in the league, but we're trying to move the puck quick. Sometimes you have to take a good hit to deliver a pass."

Any momentum Chicago gained by winning Game 1 carried over into Game 2 despite two days between games. The Blackhawks started aggressively, pressuring goalie Tuukka Rask and stifling the Bruins offense with tight checking.

"We played a perfect first period there," Quenneville said. "In the second, we were going along fine, too, but I thought we slowed down a little bit in that period."

The Blackhawks have struggled on the power play throughout the playoffs, and their inability to score after Boston's Johnny Boychuk was penalized for holding at 8:15 of the second period may have turned the momentum in the Bruins' favor.

Less than seven minutes later, Chris Kelly tied the game with his first goal of the postseason.

"On the power play, if you're not going to score, you always want to at least build momentum somehow by getting chances," Kane said. "You see with special teams in this playoffs, you can either get a lot of momentum off a big (penalty) kill or some momentum off a good power play or scoring a goal on the power play.

Biffle holds on to win again at Michigan

By Noah Tristar
Associated Press

BROOKLYN, Mich. — Greg Biffle gave Ford a milestone victory — right down the road from company headquarters.

Biffle raced to his second straight Sprint Cup win at Michigan International Speedway, easily holding off Kevin Harvick after points leader Jimmie Johnson smacked the wall in the final laps Sunday. It was the 1,000th victory for Ford Motor Company across NASCAR's three national series — Cup, Nationwide and Truck.

"What a great moment this is," said Jamie Allison, director of Ford Racing. "We couldn't be prouder to have this moment come here today at Michigan in front of so many of our Ford friends. What a great race and a great day for Ford."

It was Biffle's first win since he overtook Johnson to win at MIS in August. Johnson's engine faltered with six laps left in that race. This time, he was about a second behind Biffle with three laps to go — but a tire give way, and he dropped all the way to 28th.

John Force wins Thunder Valley Nationals

Associated Press

BRISTOL, Tenn. — John Force ended a 31-event winless streak Sunday in the NHRA Thunder Valley Nationals, beating Cruz Pedregon in the final round.

The 64-year-old Force raced to his record 135th career victory and fourth at Bristol Dragway. He powered his Ford Mustang to 4.148-second run at 305.29 mph, while Pedregon's Toyota Camry shut off approaching the finish.

Steve Torrence won the Top Fuel event, and Rodger Brogdon topped the Pro Stock field.

Torrence raced to his first win of the season and fourth overall, beating top qualifier Spencer Massey with a 3.871 at 320.13. Brogdon claimed his first Pro Stock victory, outrunning Erica Enders-Stevens with a 6.745 at 205.38 in a Chevy Camaro.

Mom up to her ears in kids wants time to be left alone

DEAR ABBY

Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069. Her column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I have five kids, all under 6 years of age. The youngest are 7-month-old twins. A family in our church has offered to watch them so my husband and I can go out on a date. We haven't been alone together in a year. We have no family or friends nearby to offer respite.

I would like to accept their kind offer, but two things are holding me back. First, I don't think they realize the enormity of the task, and it feels like we might be imposing.

Second, I don't have anything to say to my husband. A date would be awkward and most likely consist of "relations." I like my husband, but I'd rather be left alone. What would you do? — FRAZZLED MOM WITH NO SUPPORT

DEAR FRAZZLED: Before placing your small children in the care of others, invite the family over to see exactly how much work would be involved in watching them. Then discuss with your husband what date night will entail and see if you can agree on what would be a fun night out.

You definitely need a break, and some alone time should be something to look forward to. That it isn't is of concern to me. It's possible you could benefit from marriage counseling to help re-establish a line of verbal communication. And equally important, because you suspect the evening "might" result in relations, make sure you have birth control to prevent an accidental pregnancy.

DEAR ABBY: In this season of graduations and weddings, I would like to urge the honorees to send proper thank-you notes to friends and family who give them gifts and money. Time, money and preparation are put into these events, and the effect is spoiled when guests have to contact stores or scrutinize their bank statements to learn if their gifts were, indeed, received but simply not acknowledged.

Thank-yous aren't difficult. Some "rules": Rather than text or email, write a note on paper and mail it with a stamp via the U.S. mail. If you do, you will be forever known as "that polite young couple" or "the young man/woman who sent the nice note."

Three lines are all that are needed: "Thank you for the ——. I look forward to using/enjoying it when we entertain/grill/vacation/walk the dog, etc. Again, I appreciate your thoughtfulness." That's it!

If showing good manners isn't incentive enough, remember this: These are the people you will be inviting to weddings, baby showers, and your own children's graduations and weddings in the not-so-distant future. A little courtesy goes a long way. — APPRECIATIVE IN HITCHCOCK

DEAR APPRECIATIVE: While letter-writing may always seem like a chore to some people, there are occasions when a written message is the proper means of communication. Acknowledging the generosity of others is one of those times. Failure to do so indicates that the person's gesture was of so little importance that it was not noticed by the recipient. And frankly, it also indicates a distinct lack of manners.

DEAR ABBY: How do you politely tell friends and relatives who are guests in your home that your computer and TV are off-limits? Once they take control of the remote or the computer, they seem to go crazy and change all the settings to their preferences and never put the settings back when they leave! What can I do, Abby? — FRUSTRATED IN LEWIS RUN, PA.

DEAR FRUSTRATED: "Remind" any guest who uses your electronic equipment that it must be returned to your original settings before the person leaves your house. If you have already done that and it hasn't worked, then you must find the courage to say, "I'm not letting ANYONE use my computer or remote control because I have a hard time getting the settings back to where I put them after you leave."

The bidding:

EAST	SOUTH	WEST	NORTH

Dbl	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of Bridge can be a humbling game. On this deal from an international championship West, a many-time world champion, made a misjudgment on the very first deal.

East-West were playing negative doubles, hence West's first-round pass of one heart. East's double was for takeout, and West elected to convert it to penalties by passing. West should have realized that, since East's takeout double marked him with length in diamonds, his diamonds were unlikely to be much of a defensive asset.

That proved to be the case in the play. Dummy's red doubletons produced a trick since the defenders could not play two rounds of trumps without sacrificing a trick, so declarer was able scramble five tricks for down two — 300 points for East-West.

At the other table East-West bid to six diamonds. South led the king of hearts, taken with the ace. When diamonds split 3-2 the contract depended solely on the 10 of clubs being guarded no more than twice, so declarer simply drew trumps and started on clubs. When the 10 dropped, the nine of clubs became the fulfilling trick.

The moral of this deal: Do not elect to defend doubled contracts when you have enough for game your way, regardless of the vulnerability. The pain is rarely offset by the game!

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS

The stars show the kind of day you'll have: 5-dynamic; 4-positive; 3-average; 2-so-so; 1-difficult

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Monday, June 17, 2013:

This year you are strong-willed, and once more you reap the benefits of that quality. You will resist power plays and say "no" to distractions that cause you to lose focus of your greater desires. A theme of unexpected happenings involving friends and loved ones keeps your life exciting. If you are single, a new bond with someone could be unstable yet enduring. Give this interaction a full year before committing. If you are attached, you and your partner work well together. LIBRA knows how to get your interest.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) ★★★★ You'll defer to others with unusual ease. There is a volatile quality to the people around you, and you might not want to deal with them. You are likely to buck the status quo and head in a new direction. Avoid getting involved in a power play. Tonight: Go along with a suggestion.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) ★★★ You will jump through hoops in order to get what you want. Someone might become very stubborn. You could win this power struggle, but is it really worth it? A dear friend could pull you into a theoretical discussion. Think before you speak. Tonight: Go as late as you need to.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) ★★★★ You might become snappy or sarcastic with a loved one. A money agreement might be bothering you more than you realize. Besides getting into a heated conversation, you might consider finding some middle ground. Tonight: Make sure you do something physical.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) ★★ You might feel the emotional temperature rising around you and opt to keep your head down. Whether it will work with a controlling spouse, loved one or boss is hard to tell. You know better than most signs about the danger of suppressing your feelings. Tonight: A vanishing act.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) ★★★★ Everyone loves sharing news with you, as you offer insight that helps them move forward. Realize what is happening behind the scenes with a co-worker. If this persons seems tightly wound, make his or her path a little easier if possible. Tonight: Follow a friend's lead.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) ★★★ Be aware of how much you have to offer, as far as your talent and creativity are concerned. Your assets go way beyond finances. Know that sometimes you are too practical for your own good. A risk could frighten you, but it very well could be worth taking. Tonight: Your treat.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) ★★★★ Sometimes you don't know how to respond to a friend's unpredictability. Right now, you can incorporate this person's energy with ease. A family member continues to be defiant. Do not try to subdue this person — let him or her be. Tonight: Whatever knocks your socks off.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) ★★ It seems as if you are withholding some information and loving every moment of it. A partner might attempt to coerce this secret out of you. This person's action or statement could have you unexpectedly revealing it. Make time for a loved one. Tonight: Dinner for two.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) ★★★★ Fortunately you are goal-oriented, which allows you to stay focused while key friends and loved ones are intent on creating uproar. If they have beef with you, you will know it. Stay centered, despite someone's ploy to get a rise out of you. Tonight: Happiest where people are.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) ★★★★ Keep conversations moving, especially with higher-ups. Avoid getting stuck on your differences; instead, learn to appreciate your similarities. You might feel confused about what you want from a loved one. Tonight: Realize that you come across as a very strong individual.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) ★★★★★ Listen to your sixth sense when dealing with a loved one at a distance. Note that any negativity you feel might come off much stronger than you think. Others often have a difficult time with your bluntness. Tonight: Head in the direction that your imagination takes you.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) ★★★★ You might want to let go and try enjoying yourself. Consider working from home or taking the day off. Someone close to you is on a different track, and is trying to control, organize and push his or her agenda through. Keep your eyes wide open. Tonight: Say "yes" to an offer.
