Jury rules Chevron wrongly fired man, awards $975,000

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

A 52-year-old Midland man, Stanley E. Reed, former supervisor for Chevron Pipeline Company's Odessa Division, won $975,000 in an age-discrimination lawsuit against Chevron in federal court Wednesday.

The two-woman, five-man jury deliberated a little more than an hour in the two-day trial in Judge Lucius D. Bunton's Midland court.

Reed, a 21-year employee of Chevron and Gulf Oil Corp., which Chevron acquired in 1984, was fired in November 1993 after management accused him of sexual harassment and workplace misconduct after complaints by women in Chevron's Odessa office, according to Reed's Midland attorney, John Gunter.

But Gunter said the accusations were a "cover-up for age discrimination'' and that

Fugitive slips intense West Odessa hunt

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

ODESSA - Shots fired on an Odessan's property Wednesday led to a manhunt for a West Texan wanted an several warrants, including a federal charge.

Law enforcements officials had called off a search for Claude Chadwick about 11:15 p.m. Thursday, after about nine hours of searching property off of University in West Odessa.

Ector County Sheriff Bob Brookshire said the department received a call about 2 p.m. Wednesday concerning shots being fired on property owned by Victor White of Odessa.

Brookshire said White told deputies that Chadwick had fired shots in his direction while on White's property.

"After talking to White, we found out that Chadwick apparently didn't mean to hit him or hurt him," he said. "He left at White's request."

Chadwick was gone from the property when officials arrived.

"I heard no gunshots after I arrived," Brookshire said. "Reports that there was some sort of shootout were totally wrong."

The manhunt began after it was learned that Chadwick had several warrants for his arrest, including a federal felony warrant for a firearms violation; a state felony warrant for going off bond on a charge of aggravated assault on a peace officer; and a warrant out of Ector County for resisting arrest.

Brookshire said Ector County sheriff's deputies, the Border patrol, Department of Public Safety officials, the Texas Rangers and Texas Department of Criminal Justice officials from Lamesa all assisted in the search.

> —Bob Brookshire, Ector County sheriff

Brookshire said officials found Chadwick's bicycle and a 12-gauge shotgun, but were unable to locate Chadwick, who was believed to still be armed.

"Several people believe he's dangerous," he said.

The search was called off after officials determined that Chadwick was not in the area they were searching, Brookshire said.

Although it was reported that Chadwick was under investigation by the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, Brookshire said he did not see an ATF officials during the search.

Earlier reports also had Chadwick possibly connected to a militia group, which Brookshire said was wrong.

"He had an association with the Sovereign Citizens, but that's it," he said. "He's not a member of a militia. That's not why we were out there."

Energy Department to pare its work force by 27 percent

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary said Wednesday that her agency will cut its work force by 27 percent over the next five years and close 24 offices, including the Dallas regional office.

The Dallas closing would affect 21 employees: 18 in the energy efficiency support office and three in the general counsel's office.

The Clinton administration said in December it would pare $14.1 billion from the Energy Department by the end of the decade. The plan announced Wednesday aims to save $1.7 billion.

O'Leary said she would send Congress legislation to save another $5.3 billion by privatizing three federal power agencies in the west, selling the Naval Petroleum Reserve, and separating the Federal Energy Regulatory

Southwest denies paid political ad was meant as endorsement

A paid political advertisement in the Reporter-Telegram was never intended to appear as a political endorsement by Southwest Airlines for a City Council candidate, company officials said Wednesday afternoon.

A letter from Herbert D. Kelleher, president and chief executive officer of Southwest Airlines, was reproduced in the political ad for City Council candidate Tom Dollahite.

The letter was included to show that Southwest Airlines was firmly in agreement with Dollahite's position against building a new Midland airport terminal, but was never intended to appear as any kind of political endorsement from the airline, Dollahite said.

Dollahite is strongly opposed to the new terminal and he said Kelleher's letter was reprinted in

Is film a history lesson or 'poetic lies'?

By Ellen Knickmeyer
Associated Press

■ 'Panthers,' directed by Mario Van Peebles

OAKLAND, Calif. — The most polite words Black Panther co-founder Bobby Seale can find for the movie "Panther" are "poetic lies."

Young Oakland residents wouldn't know about that. They hope the movie offers them their first look back at their hometown's radical past.

"People copycat the violence of it but probably don't know the positive things," said Marcia Lozano, a 23-year-old student at Merritt College, Seale's old school.

"People know the slogans like 'cop killers,' but that's not what they were. That's all why I want to see it," Lozano said. "I don't know too much about the Black Panthers."

Now, as then, Oakland is in large part a community of minorities. It has been hit hard in recent years by a crushing earthquake, one of the nation's worst urban fires and a serious unemployment problem.

The movie, which opened Wednesday, focuses on the Panthers' early days after Seale and Huey Newton founded the move-

Clinton, GOP swap challenges on Medicare cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Maneuvering for political high ground, President Clinton went before thousands of senior citizens Wednesday and challenged Republicans to explain how they hope to wring upwards of $250 billion out of Medicare.

Republicans, eager to draw out Clinton's own ideas on the sensitive matter of Medicare cuts, accused the president of shirking leadership by refusing to go first.

"You shouldn't run for re-election if you are not prepared to do the job," said House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga.

Neither side seemed inclined to budge in the increasingly testy political impasse.

"I think the hope is diminishing that we can quietly lower the rhetoric," said Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., chairman of the Budget Committee.

It is a sign of older Americans' political power that each side wants the other to make the first move to rein in spiraling Medicare costs. The popular health-insurance system for the elderly is expected to go broke by 2002 without corrective action.

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., joined Gingrich in renewing an invitation for Clinton to come to Capitol Hill to work toward a solution.

Instead, Clinton chose a friendly audience at the White House Conference on Aging to suggest that Republicans want to raid Medicare to finance tax cuts rather than improve the program's financial standing.

> 'I believe it is wrong simply to slash Medicare and Medicaid to pay for tax cuts for people who are well off.'
> —President Clinton

"I believe it is wrong simply to slash Medicare and Medicaid to pay for tax cuts for people who are well off," the president declared to loud applause. "We must have a sense of what our obligations are."

Clinton is challenging Republicans to put out their fiscal 1996 budget proposal and specify how they would achieve their stated goal of saving $250 billion to $300 billion in projected Medicare spending over seven years.

Some of the GOP changes would be designed to persuade people to move into forms of care other than the traditional fee-for-service program on which most Medicare recipients now rely.

At a White House briefing, Donna Shalala, the secretary of health and human services, said the GOP reductions could result in a seven-year increase of $3,100 to $3,700 in out-of-pocket costs for beneficiaries.

Without directly pointing at Republicans, Clinton told the seniors he would fight any effort to "trade the long-term welfare and health of the American people for anybody's short-term gain."

Gingrich called the president's address "enormously disappointing," and accused him of "exploiting senior citizens for the narrowest of political purposes."

The sparring between Capitol Hill and the White House continued unabated as House Republicans embarked on a three-day private retreat in nearby Leesburg, Va., with Medicare high on the agenda.

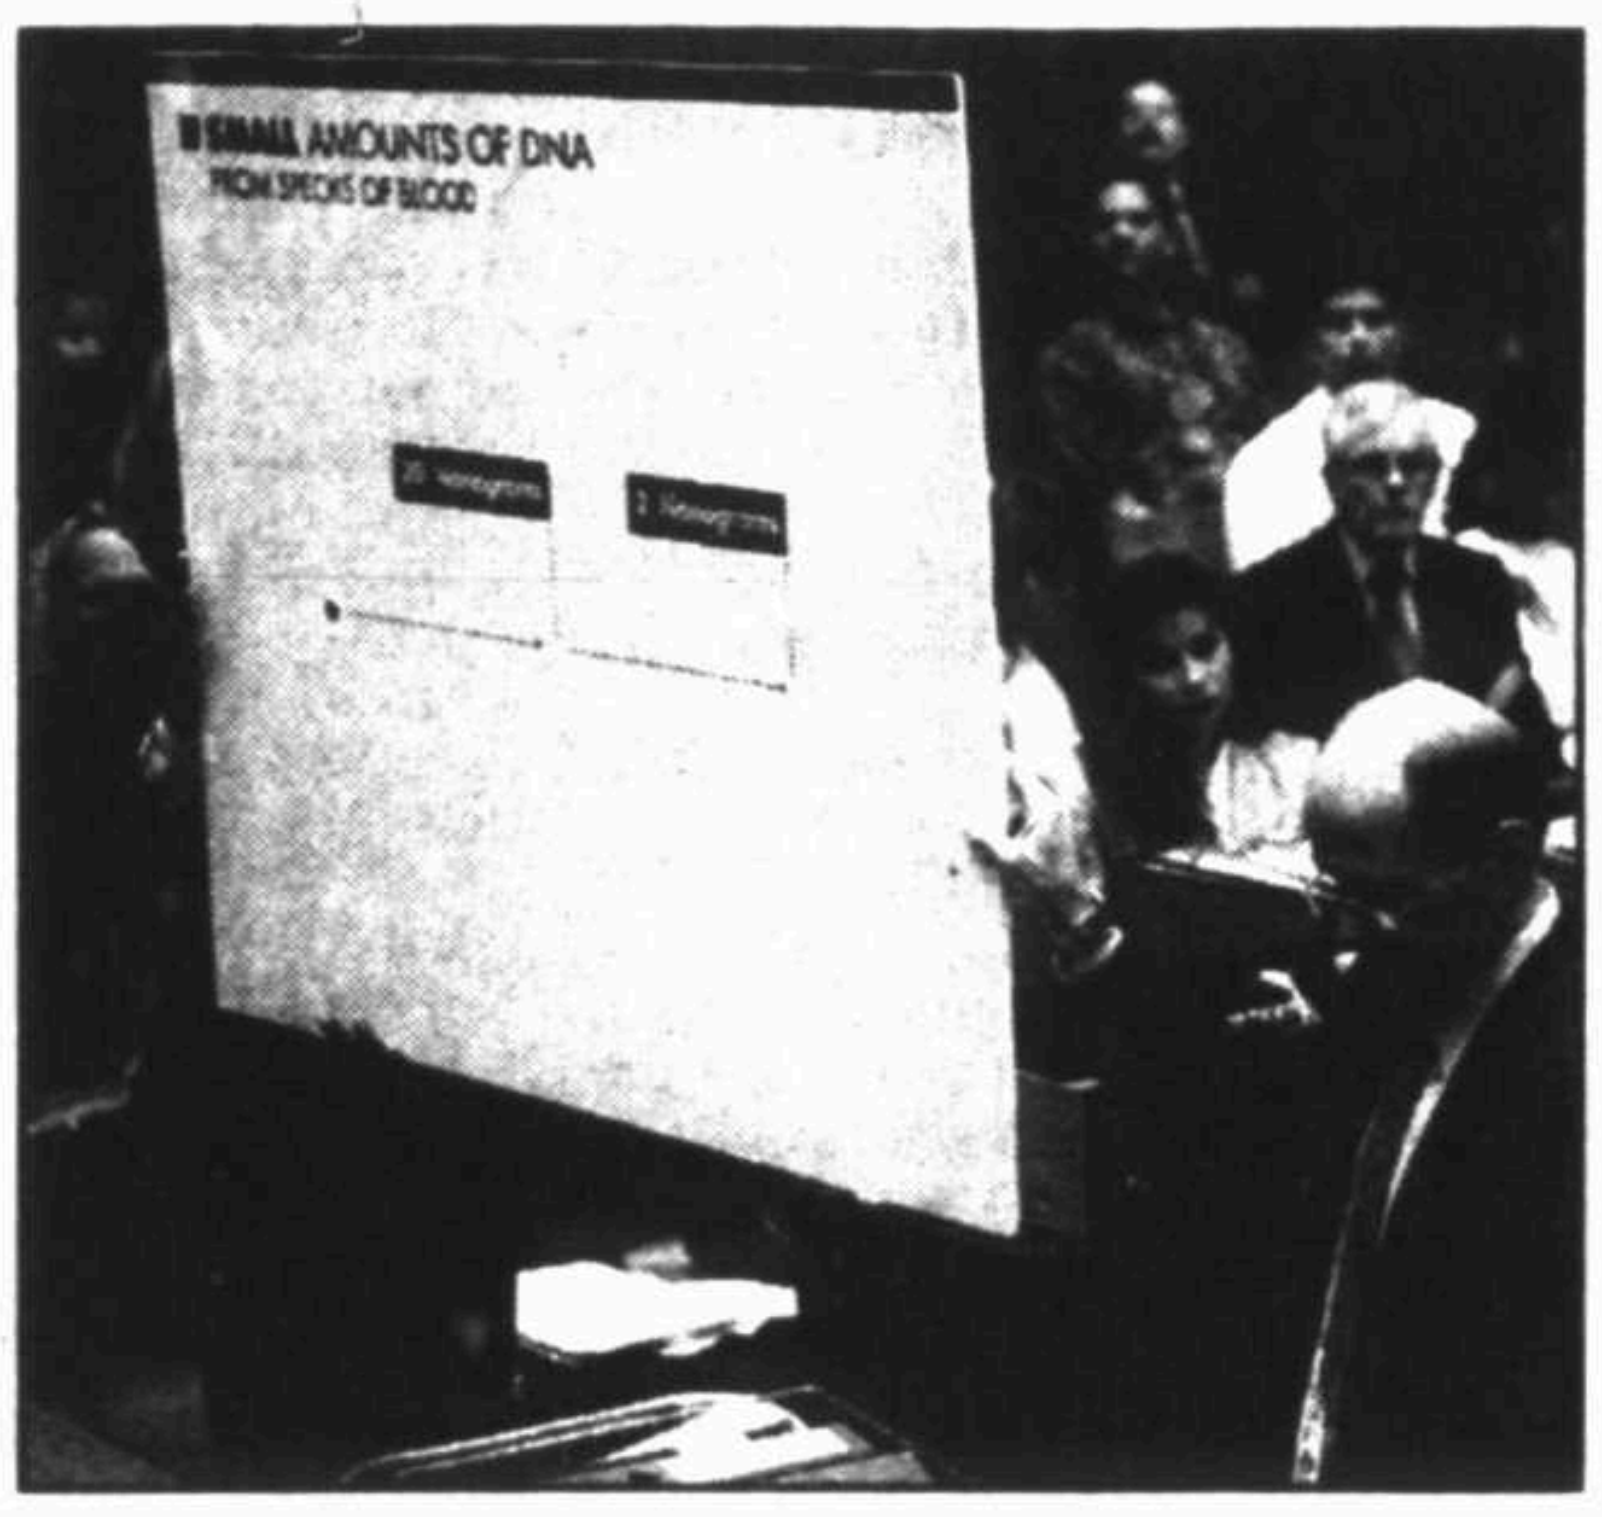
Clinton, for his part, sought to project an activist image in announcing a program to crack down on Medicaid and Medicare fraud, particularly in the areas of home health agencies, nursing homes and suppliers of durable medical equipment.

"These initiatives are the right way to control health-care costs and protect Medicare for our senior citizens," Clinton said.

The project initially will focus on New York, Florida, Illinois, Texas, and California, which account for nearly 40 percent of all Medicare and Medicaid beneficiaries.

It includes a voluntary disclosure program borrowed from the Pentagon under which companies can come forward with evidence of fraud or errors within their own organizations, in hopes of incurring reduced penalties.

Defense escalates attack on evidence



Defense attorneys Robert Blasier, right, and Carl Douglas hold a nanogram chart showing amounts of DNA from blood specks to the jury, Wednesday.

AP Laserphoto

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Ronald Goldman's bloody shirt grew a moldy, "offensive odor" because it was improperly stored, a police chemist testified Wednesday as O.J. Simpson's defense escalated its attack on sloppy evidence handling.

Taking a detour around blood test results linking Simpson to the murder of his ex-wife and Goldman, defense attorney Robert Blasier suggested security was lax at the laboratory where the blood of Simpson and the victims was stored, and he implied that sloppy technicians may have altered evidence.

The attorney also showed jurors slides of a test tube of Nicole Brown Simpson's blood, with crusted blood that had leaked or spilled on the outside.

Gregory Matheson, assistant director of the crime lab, acknowledged there were some problems with the way his criminalists collected evidence, a point the defense hammered away at. He said criminalist Andrea Mazzola erred when she used a single swab to collect three blood stains from the pedals in Simpson's Bronco.

"That's not how I would do it," Matheson said.

"That's unacceptable?" Blasier asked.

"That's right," Matheson said. "I try to limit the use of a swab to one piece of evidence."

He also agreed with the defense that it was a mistake for detectives to bring out a blanket from Ms. Simpson's home and throw it over her body because it could have contaminated the crime scene with trace evidence.

At times, however, Blasier's cross-examination was so plodding and repetitive that Judge Lance Ito interrupted with comments such as: "This is the third witness who has testified to this" and "Let's proceed."

On Tuesday, Matheson unveiled scientific evidence suggesting that Simpson's blood type matches a drop found on a "trail of blood" near the body of his ex-wife, and that her blood type was on a sock at the foot of Simpson's bed. Matheson will be back on the stand today for his fourth day of testimony.

A key defense theory has been that the blood evidence was sloppily collected and perhaps tampered with, making results unreliable.

With Simpson and jurors appearing attentive but taking few notes, Matheson acknowledged many flaws in the crime lab system and handling of Simpson evidence in particular. Among them:

- Goldman's bloody shirt was improperly packaged while it was still wet. When he opened it in July, he said, "There was definitely an offensive odor. ... It was not stored properly."
- Criminalists used pencil to fill in some crime reports and erasures were evident, suggesting possible tampering.
- Official field notes were placed in looseleaf binders rather than bound books, making it possible to switch or remove pages.
- Blood swatches collected by Mazzola and criminalist Dennis Fung were never counted. Matheson said he never advocated counting swatches in the past but has now instituted that procedure because "it became an issue in this case."
- Blood samples were not officially booked into evidence until three days after they were collected. Matheson said it would have been preferable to book the items earlier.
- A proposed police field manual setting out standards for evidence collection has never been completed because of budget constraints and there is little continuity in procedures used by individual officers because, "we want them to have some independence."
- The socks that have become key to the prosecution case were not examined for blood until weeks after they were found at the foot of Simpson's bed. Matheson said he didn't even know the socks existed until he did an inventory of evidence on June 29, 17 days after the slayings.

Viewing a sophisticated slide show of security measures in the crime lab, Matheson acknowledged that a cabinet in the evidence processing room where blood swatches were stored wasn't locked, that chemicals were kept in the same cabinet and that anyone with a card key could enter with as many guests as they wanted without special clearance.

There is no guard on duty at the laboratory at night, Matheson said, and neither photo nor fingerprint identification is required for someone with a card key to gain entry.

He said 75 to 90 staff members hold entry cards.

Matheson, an expert witness who often turns to talk to jurors as he testifies, acknowledged it is better for criminalists to collect too much evidence than too little. He said tests shouldn't be performed in the field on extremely small blood samples because it might leave nothing for later DNA testing. Blasier cited a tiny spot on the door of Simpson's Bronco that was tested in the field.

In defense of his criminalists, Matheson said lapses in their recordkeeping were minor. "It's information that would be nice to know — whether vital or not — I don't know," he said about what was left out.

Study: GED barely raises earnings

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Dropouts who take the high school equivalency test earn barely 4 percent more than those who don't — and only if they use their substitute diploma to go on to further education, according to a study.

The average recipient of a general equivalency diploma earns $7.43 an hour nine years after getting the certificate. High school dropouts who do not receive a GED make $7.02. The difference is about 6 percent, but since GED recipients work slightly fewer hours while participating in training programs or looking for work, their total income is just 4 percent more than other dropouts'.

"Is it worth paying $30 and sitting for this exam? The answer is yes," said Richard Murnane, an economics professor at the Harvard Graduate School of Education and the study's co-author. "But is this a useful strategy for getting low-income people out of poverty? The answer is no."

A million young Americans a year drop out of high school without receiving a diploma. An increasing number of them take the test called the General Educational Development exam.

Nearly 800,000 people took the GED in 1993, the last year for which the figures are available. That's up from 734,000 in 1988.

"Out in the world you need either a high school diploma or some further education," said 18-year-old Hector Hernandez, who dropped out of school when he was a junior but wants to get a degree in computer programming.

"I need to at least have a GED," said Hernandez, who works in a warehouse while he prepares to take the test this month.

The GED tests writing skills, social studies, science, interpretation of literature and the arts, and math, and includes a written essay.

Surgeon-general nominee tries to shed abortion stigma

WASHINGTON (AP) — Blending poignant details of a life in medicine with a firm defense of his integrity, Henry W. Foster tried Tuesday to salvage his nomination as surgeon general. "I am a doctor who delivers babies," he told a Senate committee eager to question him about abortions.

After two months of controversy, Foster slid into the witness chair with a pledge to "set the record straight." He conceded earlier understating the number of abortions he performed in four decades as an obstetrician, but said it was an "honest mistake" made without a complete review of the records.

"There was never any intent to deceive," he said. "I had no reason to do so."

With all seven Democrats on the Labor and Human Resources Committee expected to support the nomination, Clinton administration officials pinned their hope for approval on three uncommitted Republicans, including the chairwoman, Sen. Nancy Kassebaum of Kansas. That would only move the 61-year-old former medical school dean over the first hurdle, though.

In a nomination caught up in presidential politics, Sen. Phil Gramm has threatened a filibuster, and Majority Leader Bob Dole — a rival for the GOP nomination for the White House — has said he might keep the nomination off the floor altogether, citing questions about Foster's credibility rather than abortion.

Win or lose, some Democrats believe they will benefit politically if the Republican-controlled Senate can be depicted as rejecting a nominee for performing abortions only sparingly, and always legally.

Foster strode into the committee room accompanied by his wife, St. Clair, and White House aides working to salvage his nomination. The audience included several members of the "I Have a Future" program he founded in Nashville, Tenn., to reduce teen pregnancy.

Outside in the rain, about a dozen anti-abortion demonstrators carried signs objecting to the nomination.

Kassebaum and Sen. Edward Kennedy, senior Democrat, stepped off the dais to greet him, and Foster bowed lightly as he shook hands with Kassebaum, a supporter of abortion rights.

More sun, low 80s — sail on

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for mostly sunny skies with a high in the lower 80s and northeast to east winds at 10-15 mph. Tonight should be fair with a low in the lower 60s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Friday should be mostly sunny with a high in the mid-80s.

After an overnight low of 54, Wednesday's high reached 90, compared to the record high for that date of 98 set in 1947. The record low was 37 set in 1970.

STATE

Thunderstorms developed on Wednesday along a line that separated moist air over the eastern two-thirds of Texas from dry air over the western part of the state.

Skies were mostly fair over much of the state Wednesday, but storms developed along the dry line late Wednesday afternoon and began moving easterly, across Central Texas and into East Texas.

A severe thunderstorm warning was in effect for most of West Texas during the evening.

Temperatures at 4 p.m. ranged from 88 at Abilene under clear skies to 61 at Lufkin. Winds varied from southeast to south at 10 to 20 mph, with west winds around 15 mph in the Abilene area.

In South Texas, readings ranged from 87 at Alice, Del Rio and McAllen to 78 at College Station. Winds were mostly at 10 to 15 mph.

Across West Texas, readings were more varied because of the clear skies in the west and the cooler air in the Panhandle. The mercury rose to 94 at San Angelo, but it was only 66 at Dalhart.

The National Weather Service said more rain could be expected today with highs mostly in the 70s and 80s, rising into the upper 80s on Friday.

NATION

Rain and snow fell on parts of the West on Wednesday, while the Southeast tried to shake a cold snap.

Macon, Georgia, had a record low temperature of 42, erasing the old mark of 43 that was set in 1918.

In the West, rain and snow was scattered throughout central and eastern Wyoming, with up to 6 inches of snow near Rawlins, Wyo., and Riner, Wyo. Some power outages were reported.

In 24 hours, nearly an inch of water — as rain or snow — fell in parts of Idaho, Wyoming, Montana and Utah.

Northern Utah got showers and thunderstorms, soaking the Layton area with three-quarters of an inch of rain in about two hours.

Strong thunderstorms moved through north-central Texas, producing small hail and some heavy rain, before shifting across northern Louisiana and weakening.

Elsewhere, a cold front extended across the Florida Peninsula.

A low pressure system was expected to move from the Rockies onto the Plains, carrying rain and thunderstorms into the nation's midsection.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

AWARDS: Jury rules against Chevron in lawsuit

(From 1A)

Chevron was "trying to get rid of mid-management personnel" in downsizing its payroll.

Reed was earning $65,000 a year.

The jury also found Chevron guilty of malice and defamation against Reed, whom Chevron in 1993 sent to psychologists and then to Glenwood Psychiatric Hospital following the accusations. "Basically, they (doctors) couldn't really find anything wrong with him," Gunter said.

Reed said he was relieved by the jury's verdict.

"The main thing, it is clearing my name," he said. "The money part of it will give me a chance to get my life started again; my life has been on hold for a while now. I'll be happy to get back to work and get back in a normal lifestyle."

Reed said the accusations were "extremely humiliating.

"I had never had a disciplinary action," he said. "My (pay) raises had all been very steady. I hadn't been docked as far as money goes. Then, all of a sudden, I couldn't tell the truth about anything."

Chevron, however, is appealing the verdict.

"We think, as a manner of law, the jury verdict was incorrect," said Neal Miller, Austin-based public affairs director for The Chevron Companies.

"We think that everything we did was lawful and legal and was in the letter and the spirit of the law," he said. "Our position is that the jury erred as a matter of law — no reflection on the jury."

Miller said that, in this instance, Chevron is "certainly innocent of those allegations" and that the company will stand firm in its position and in asking the court for relief.

"We plan to make a motion to the court either for a directed verdict (in favor of Chevron) or a new trial," Miller said. "We plan to appeal it."

Following the trial, Gunter said "the jury saw through all of that subterfuge ... (and) smoke and fire" that Chevron was "throwing out and decided that this guy has been wronged. He's been defamed." Gunter said Reed had "no chance to confront" his alleged accusers before the trial.

Gunter said the age-discrimination case was bolstered by testimony of witnesses in the same age category as Reed.

"Chevron won't admit it (age-discrimination)," Gunter said. "You can't get a company to admit any wrong. These companies are dumping these employees and giving all sorts of reasons. They say they are downsizing. What it boils down to is that they are putting the screws to these folks."

AD: Intention was not to endorse, Southwest says the ad solely to show that the largest user of the airport agreed with his sentiment.

Melanie Jones, a public relations specialist with Southwest, said Kelleher was unaware that the letter would be used in a political ad. "He is not endorsing Mr. Dollahite," Ms. Jones said.

"I don't think we, as a company, endorse any political campaigns ... I know Mr. Kelleher sometimes does on his own," she said.

Ms. Jones said a similar letter is available to anyone wishing to know Southwest's position on a new Midland airport and, while the letter was not intended for use as political literature, it can be distributed.

Kelleher is strongly opposed to the building of a new terminal and is not troubled by the letter being reproduced in the ad, she said.

"It (the use of the letter) is not something we are upset about or anything," Ms. Jones said.

"On numerous occasions, we have taken the opportunity to voice our opposition to the project with city leaders, Midland Airport executives and the Federal Aviation Administration. Our objections have been completely ignored by everyone at all levels," Kelleher says in the letter.

Midland should keep the existing terminal and charge lower rates to the airlines than do competing airports, Kelleher maintains.

Midland Mayor Bobby Burns, a proponent of the new airport terminal, said he was somewhat surprised to see Southwest's letterhead in a political advertisement.

"But I guess he can run what he chooses," Burns said.

Burns said he has requests from other airlines for a terminal building with more counter space and that Kelleher is denouncing plans for new construction out of fears that landing fees will increase.

"His job is to protect Southwest Airlines — not to look after the people of Midland," Burns said of Kelleher. "This (local politics) is not his area to be dealing in."

Burns said the airport terminal building has been studied and debated for years and the majority of city officials and citizens are in favor of the move.

"This decision has already been made... We've done our homework," he said.

Dollahite maintains that the project would be wasting federal tax dollars and vows to work to halt the project if elected.

He is running against incumbent Jose Cuevas and challengers Dale Brown, David G. Roberts and Gary Franklin for the two at-large positions. Bill Morrow, who holds the other at-large position, is not running for reelection

PARE: Energy Department to reduce work force

(From 1A)

Commission from the Energy Department.

The measures "will enable us to do our work better and at lower cost," O'Leary said.

The department has frequently been cited by members of Congress — including Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas, a GOP presidential candidate — as one that should be eliminated.

Deputy Secretary Bill White, a former Texas energy lawyer, said the administration's goal was to cut the department's work force by more than 50 percent from current levels by the year 2000. The cuts announced Wednesday would eliminate 3,788 jobs, and the proposed legislation would remove 6,700 employees from the department's rolls.

"Our mission has changed," White told several reporters.

He said that the support work done by the Dallas regional office on such projects as weatherization for low-income housing would be taken over by the state and that the oversight of contract work would be done by the department's Washington office.

The three lawyers in the general counsel's office in Dallas are working on cases dating back to 1970s energy price controls. White said he has "really tried to get rid of this litigation."

As for the effect of the cutbacks, White said, "If we are able to work smarter, I don't expect this to have an impact on the quality of service."

The plan does not make cuts in the network of nine major federal research facilities known as the national labs, or in the 15 nuclear weapons manufacturing sites, including Pantex, the Amarillo-based disarmament center that is the storehouse for plutonium.

LIES: Van Peebles draws heat for blurring lines

ment in October 1966, taking advantage of a local law allowing them to carry firearms.

Mario Van Peebles directed the movie using a script based on a book written by his father, Melvin.

As with Oliver Stone's "JFK" and Spike Lee's "Malcolm X," Van Peebles is being criticized for blurring the lines of art and history. He insists the movie is drama, not documentary. The point is meaningless to Seale.

"I know they say it's fiction but it's tantamount to a bunch of poetic lies," said Seale, who wore a disguise to get into a sneak preview so he could avoid the appearance of endorsing the film.

The Panthers began prowling the streets of Oakland in response to police violence against blacks. Carrying shotguns, law books and tape recorders, Panthers shadowed police officers with the mission of protecting citizens' rights.

Initially, the Panthers were nonviolent, running health clinics and free lunch programs for schoolchildren and actively protecting blacks from police brutality. Eventually, police and Panther patrols began to clash, fighting and shooting it out.

The Black Panther movement peaked with about 5,000 members during the angry months after the assassination of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., and petered out in the 1970s.

"The average person (watching the movie) is going to think these guys were street gang types. But we were part of a young black intelligentsia," Seale said. "We were avid readers. We studied the whole history of African-Americans."

Seale is pushing his own movie on the Panthers, based on a book he wrote. He said the movie would be a "high confrontation drama adventure right in the middle of the ongoing civil rights protest."

Van Peebles doesn't make clear what brought down the party, nor does he discuss Newton's later slide into crime and drug use. Newton was killed in a crack-related shooting in Oakland in 1989 after he served time in prison for shooting a police officer.

"It's a false ripoff of the story of the Black Panthers Party and he twisted it and turned it and chronologically screwed it up," said Seale, now a 58-year-old community activist in Philadelphia.

Eldridge Cleaver, the former Black Panther minister of information, called the movie "a travesty" in USA Today. David Horowitz, a former Panther fundraiser, said the film was a "two-hour lie."

Part of Seale's frustration with the movie is over who gets the credit for the movement.

Counter to the impression Seale said he felt the movie gave, Newton was in jail and Seale was at the helm when the party reached its peak.

Douglas Crain, an Oakland traffic officer-turned-desk cop, remembers first hearing about the Panthers from a call on the police radio about a ring of shotgun-carrying Panthers surrounding an officer parked at a curb.

He remembers 12-hour shifts, seven days a week when Newton was on trial in the Oakland officer's shooting, and recalls members of the Black Panthers singling his black partner out for abuse whenever they were booked into jail.

"My curiosity would be more or less to see how it's depicted," Crain said. "Whether they actually show it like it really was, or they try to immortalize him (Newton) and make him look like a good guy doing good deeds for the city of Oakland."

PROBE: Initial successes give way to dead ends

trations in the past few days, those knowledgeable about major investigations say the public shouldn't conclude the case has bogged down.

"The time that has passed since this incident is merely days. There's no reason the government shouldn't take another couple of weeks to gather all the evidence before making a final charging decision," said a former federal prosecutor who insisted on anonymity because of current involvement in a government case.

There have been initial successes: the arrest of Timothy McVeigh, a rich harvest of evidence linking him to the bombing, and connections to James and Terry Nichols, two Michigan brothers in custody who shared McVeigh's penchant for bomb-making and anti-government rhetoric.

There have also been high-profile failures. Most notable: the dramatic arrest and subsequent midnight release of Gary Alan Land and Robert Jacks, two drifters whose travels seemed to connect them to McVeigh.

Although the two were released, the FBI is still checking their movements.

At the El Travotore Motel in Kingman, Ariz., where they lived for five months, owners June and Bill Terranova said the FBI searched until Wednesday afternoon.

Also Wednesday, two agents interviewed the manager of Gene's Motel in Marshall, Mo., where Land and Jacks reportedly stayed last month.

"Their names came up," said the motel manager, Louise Henricks. "I'm not commenting on what they asked about."

Saline County Sheriff Wally George said the FBI was tying up loose ends: "They are simply following any and all leads to make sure there are no surprises in the shadows somewhere."

ABC reported that Land and Jacks have been subpoenaed to testify before a federal grand jury in Oklahoma City.

Federal officials say such interviews are part of the process of sorting through 14,000 tips received on a special hot line since the government posted a $2 million reward.

"Sometimes they turn out to be hot, sometimes they turn out to be cold, and that was the problem yesterday," White House Chief of Staff Leon Panetta said on CBS. "But, frankly, the investigation continues at an aggressive pace and we're confident that ultimately we'll catch the culprits."

Even Jacks approves.

"The FBI is doing their job the way they should," he said. "Anybody connected with this bombing, they're questioning them, they're checking them out."

The zeal to find those responsible, particularly the suspect known as "John Doe 2," has caused temporary frights for at least a dozen men from California to Canada who resemble the FBI sketch of the swarthy, square-faced man.

People have been stopped at gunpoint, interrogated, even given lie detector tests before being released.

"You're always going to have look-alikes," said FBI spokesman Dan Vogel. "But in a case like this, we'd be criticized if we didn't check them out ... We have an obligation to."

Among the many unanswered questions in the case: What role, if any, did the Nichols brothers have in the bombing? And who is John Doe 2?

The initial break in the case came early with the arrest of McVeigh.

A suspect with well-known anti-government views and a long-standing interest in weapons, McVeigh has been identified as one of two men who rented the Ryder truck that carried an estimated 4,800 pounds of homemade explosives.

Chemical residue found on his clothing is consistent with materials used in the bomb. His fingerprint was reportedly found on a receipt for 1,000 pounds of ammonium nitrate — a key ingredient to the bomb.

A string of witnesses tie him to key locations in the days and hours before the bombing.

A motel owner registered him in Junction City, Kan., and saw him with a Ryder truck; the clerk who rented the truck identified him as a customer; neighbors of Terry Nichols say McVeigh is among several men seen in Herington, Kan., the weekend of the bombing. Others saw McVeigh near the federal building shortly before the explosion.

But the 27-year-old former Army sergeant and Gulf War veteran has declared himself a prisoner of war and refused to talk other than give his name, rank and serial number.

McVeigh has also filed a statement with the court disavowing two Houston lawyers who say they have been hired by his family to review the case and possibly defend him. One of the attorneys, Brent Liedtke, suggested McVeigh had been influenced by his court-appointed defense attorneys, who have asked to be taken off the case.

As for the Nichols brothers, James has admitted that his farm near Decker, Mich., was the site of experiments with explosives conducted by him, his brother Terry and McVeigh. He is in jail in Michigan on federal bomb-making charges.

Terry Nichols has told the FBI he traveled with McVeigh from Oklahoma City a few days before the bombing. After the bombing he cleaned out a storage shed rented by McVeigh.

A search of his Herington home turned up bags of ammonium nitrate, blasting caps, a firearms arsenal and anti-government literature. He is being held in Wichita, Kan., as a material witness to the bombing. He also has been charged in the Michigan case.

Despite the strong links, federal investigators are in no rush to bring charges.

"They've got these guys locked up. They can't do any damage."

An Alabama chain gang walks along I-65 at the Elkmont exit, Wednesday as the state becomes the first to reinstitute chain gangs.

Shackles snap, inmates grumble as Alabama unveils chain gangs

ELKMONT, Ala. (AP) — Grumbling prisoners shackled together by clinking leg chains shuffled along a busy highway Wednesday, chopping weeds and picking up trash, as Alabama became the first state to bring back chain gangs.

Passing motorists blew horns and students on school buses shouted at the inmates. Several accidents nearly happened as drivers slowed down to gawk.

The 12-hour workday started with shotgun-toting corrections officers standing watch while about 320 prisoners were made to kneel in the cold, dew-covered grass to have shiny steel chains clamped to their legs.

"It shows how Alabama is going back to slavery," said inmate Larry Clinton, serving 15 years for theft.

"Keep them hands outta them pockets and pick up those chains!" one guard shouted over the roar of traffic along Interstate 65.

The day remained cool as the men shuffled along hacking at tall grass with two-foot blades attached to wooden handles.

Each gang was made up of five inmates linked together by 8-foot lengths of chain. They worked in squads of about 40 men each, with an armed officer watching each squad.

White prison coats and billed caps were emblazoned with the words "CHAIN GANG" — a sight unseen in most states for decades.

Motorists who stopped at a Tennessee state welcome station a few miles north of the work site seemed largely unaware of what was going on along the highway.

"I thought it was a religious group or something out doing a good deed with all the white on," said one woman who wouldn't give her name.

Kim Davis of Birmingham said she had no problem with seeing chain gangs: "They're not hurting me. They were just out there working."

One chain gang member, James Sears, a convicted robber who violated parole by fighting with his girlfriend, called the experience degrading.

"You can't even chain five dogs up on the side of the road without the Humane Society doing something," Sears said.

"I hope and pray I don't never come back. I don't like the idea of being used as a political chess piece," said Dwayne Rowe, serving seven years for selling cocaine.

Flight attendants: Infants should fly in restraint seats

WASHINGTON (AP) — Airline flight attendants say allowing parents to hold infants on their laps during airplane trips isn't safe and should be banned.

But government regulators respond that making people buy a ticket so the tots can be placed in a safety seat would raise prices so much people would switch to cars, a more dangerous way to travel.

Using child restraint seats "is the only safe way for our youngest passengers to fly," Patricia Friend, president of the Association of Flight Attendants, said Wednesday.

"Quite frankly, it does not make sense to selectively put infants at risk by not requiring them to be restrained," said Chris Witkowski, director of air safety and health for the association.

Currently children under age 2 do not require an plane ticket if they are carried by an adult. But in a crash the children are in danger because parents are unable to hold on to them, she said.

"Each time I see parents holding children on their laps I shudder," said Jan Brown Lohr, a flight attendant who survived a 1989 crash in Sioux City, Iowa. "It is a tragic mistake to allow children to travel by air unrestrained."

The National Transportation Safety Board has recommended that restraints be required for infants aboard airplanes.

Rep. Jim Lightfoot, R-Iowa, who has introduced a bill to require safety seats for the youngsters, said the Federal Aviation Administration is using "misguided premises" in opposing the idea.

The FAA has opposed the requirement on both safety and cost grounds.

Having to buy an extra ticket so the child could be placed in a safety seat would make air travel less affordable for families and force many of them to turn to automobiles — a form of transportation that places children at a much greater risk than airplanes, Deputy Administrator Linda Hall Daschle said.

She estimated that parents would pay up to $200 more per flight, a total of $1 billion annually.

Daschle said the agency is encouraging airlines to consider ways to reduce the cost for parents who want to buy a ticket for youngsters, such as allowing discounts for infants.

Remembering tragedy

Kent State University marks 25th anniversary of shootings that killed four

KENT, Ohio (AP) — The Kent State University campus looked back at tragedy Wednesday, 25 years after National Guardsmen opened fire and killed four students, and Mary Ann Vecchio's moment of agony was frozen in a Pulitzer Prize-winning photograph.

Vecchio, then a 14-year-old runaway, was pictured kneeling with arms upraised in horror over the body of Jeffrey Miller. She returned to campus for a cameo appearance as herself in a play about the May 4, 1970, shootings.

She had one line to speak to actors portraying the slain students: "You don't have to be dead to be in purgatory."

At the Wednesday afternoon close of a two-day symposium, veterans of campus protest tried to put the Kent State shootings into a larger context.

Charlayne Hunter-Gault, a "MacNeil-Lehrer News Hour" correspondent who was one of the first two black students admitted to the University of Georgia, said student activists of the 1960s and '70s were not heroes. They were simply "doing what they were born to do."

"We were walking the freedom trail," she said.

Three days of unrest on the campus began with student protests against the Vietnam War and the U.S. invasion of Cambodia. Then-Gov. James A. Rhodes ordered the National Guard to restore order.

At 12:24 p.m. on May 4, as demonstrations raged around them, guardsmen opened fire.

In 13 seconds, 13 students were killed or wounded, stunning the nation and galvanizing the anti-war movement.

Vecchio's appearance was for a play by Emerson College Professor J. Gregory Payne. In "Kent State: A Requiem," the four dead students examine the events that led to the shootings.

Vecchio said she received hate mail for years after the shootings. Her line in the play refers to that unwanted notoriety.

At 12:24 p.m. today, a bell will ring 15 times, once for each Kent State student killed or wounded, and once each for two Jackson State University students killed in a protest 10 days later.

Student interest in this year's commemoration seemed lukewarm. Few of today's undergraduates were even alive when Miller, Allison Krause, Sandy Scheur and Bill Schroeder were killed and nine others wounded.

"People of my generation have a hard time associating with it," said Dave Schelhorn, a 24-year-old graduate student from Hershey, Pa. "I really didn't know about it at all. Then I came here and started learning about it."

At outdoor desks, vendors offering tarot readings and books on Che Guevera and Marxism competed with pitches for VISA and MasterCard.

A Portage County special grand jury found that the guardsmen acted in self-defense and exonerated them of criminal charges. Eight were later indicted on federal charges of violating the students' civil rights, but those charges were dropped.

The wounded students and the families of the dead settled a $40 million civil suit out of court in January 1979 for $675,000.

Mobil's restructuring won't affect Basin

Mobil Corp.'s major worldwide restructuring, announced earlier this week, fortunately will not affect the Permian Basin as severely as did the restructuring four years ago. That is a blessing for Mobil's employees in the basin.

What the change signals for the oil industry as a whole was addressed by Mobil Chairman Lucio A. Noto who noted, "We are in a fiercely competitive business environment and changes are essential to our future. Failure to change means failure to compete in the long term...."

The oil business has been fiercely competitive, as Noto said, for almost as long as there has been an oil business, and every few years there have been restructurings such as the one Mobil announced simply to keep companies competitive. Numerous independent oil companies had already scaled back their operations in the Permian Basin.

In effect, the announced change means that Mobil will attempt to turn its operation into one that is leaner and more effective. That is necessary to stay afloat in the oil industry today. The fact that Mobil essentially is reducing its present staff support employee force by one-third indicates that the corporation has been "top heavy" in that part of its operation for some time.

Of course, the restructuring hits hardest at individual families that may be displaced because of loss of jobs. In fact, companywide Mobil expects to reduce its workforce by about 4,700 employees. That never is good news for the individuals affected, but the positive side of it is that the job losses are not expected to occur in the Permian Basin.

GEORGE WILL

Voters don't see Clinton as Trumanesque

Will

WASHINGTON — "I," said the president, who believes that the first person singular pronoun needs regular vigorous exercise, "am the only president who knew something about agriculture when I got there."

Oh. So, among the presidents who today's president thinks knew nothing about agriculture was the first president, whose large farm produced tobacco and other commodities. And a recent Democratic president who was a peanut farmer. And Jefferson, a sophisticated agronomist. And Jackson, who raised not only the food consumed at the Hermitage, his Tennessee home, but cotton, too, there and on his properties in Mississippi. And U.S. Grant, who failed at farming as he did at everything he tried, other than waging war and writing memoirs about waging war, but at least he knew a thing or two about farming.

And then there was the man Clinton says is his hero, Harry Truman. When Truman was the age Clinton was when Clinton was tilling the fields of Georgetown, Oxford, the Yale law school and the Arkansas electorate, Truman was behind a team of horses many a dawn, plowing those straight furrows of which he boasted for the rest of his life.

Clinton's praise of his unprecedented understanding of things agricultural recalls Mark Twain's description of the poet "who believed that the sun merely rose to admire his poetry, and was so reluctant to set at the end of the day and lose sight of it, that it lingered and lingered and lost many minutes diurnally and was never able to keep correct time during his stay on earth." But by way of extenuation, note that Clinton did his boasting in Iowa, where he was, as usual, in full campaign mode.

Clinton, who famously feels other people's pain, assured Iowans he would not cause pain for them by supporting serious cuts in agricultural subsidies. In fact, throwing caution to the winds, he called for more spending on pork research at Iowa State University, where he was speaking. He was trying to be Trumanesque, as he understands that attribute.

During the 1992 campaign, when David McCullough's biography of Truman was published, Clinton aides said their man was reading it. He evidently skipped the part about Truman behind the plow, but concentrated on the part about Truman's come-from-behind victory in 1948. On election night 1948 Truman clung to a lead but commentators confidently predicted Dewey would win when the rural vote came in. It came in for Truman. As McCullough wrote, "the drop in the price of corn played a part. ... Of the eight largest corn-producing states, he carried all but two."

But there are a lot fewer farmers now than in 1948. In fact, there are 50 percent fewer than in 1970. Fewer than 3 percent of all workers are in farm-related jobs. However, the portion of U.S. land employed in farming — about 50 percent — is almost exactly what it was in 1920. So although Clinton says he wants to defend subsidies in order to support the agricultural middle class by discouraging further concentration of agricultural production, the farm constituency he is courting is not large in numbers and consists largely of large-scale farmers.

Truman's key urban constituency was in five smokestack cities — Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago. In 1994 four of these five metropolitan areas — all but Pittsburgh, which nearly did — voted for Republican governors. That fact, and the fact that the two Republican senators elected from Tennessee last year won majorities among voters with incomes under $15,000, must mystify Democrats who persist in believing that Americans vote according to the Democrats' traditional understanding of economic interests.

Voters are more complicated than that, particularly when voting for president. Then they seek a sense of shared values, which is why character counts, and why Clinton continues to injure himself with optional nonsense like his bragging about his agricultural knowledge. Voters know nonsense when they hear it. And they may be concluding that although Clinton is not consciously mendacious when he says things such as he said in Iowa, he thinks that whatever makes him feel good when he blurts it out must be true.

Clinton, who is now warning the country about the consequences about reckless speech, does not understand the consequences of his own words. He should be reminded that in 1970, when Arthur Goldberg, the Democratic nominee for governor of New York, was running a spectacularly awful race against the Republican incumbent, Nelson Rockefeller, a wit said that if Goldberg gave one more speech he would lose Canada.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, May 4, the 124th day of 1995. There are 241 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

Twenty-five years ago, on May 4, 1970, Ohio National Guardsmen opened fire on a crowd of anti-war protesters at Kent State University, killing four students and wounding nine others.

On this date:

In 1626, Dutch explorer Peter Minuit landed on present-day Manhattan Island.

In 1776, Rhode Island declared its freedom from England, two months before the Declaration of Independence was adopted.

In 1886, at Haymarket Square in Chicago, a labor demonstration for an eight-hour work day turned into a riot when a bomb exploded.

In 1916, responding to a demand from President Wilson, Germany agreed to limit its submarine warfare, thereby averting a diplomatic break with Washington.

In 1927, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences was founded.

In 1932, mobster Al Capone, convicted of income-tax evasion, entered the federal penitentiary in Atlanta.

In 1942, the Battle of the Coral Sea, the first naval clash fought entirely with carrier aircraft, began during World War II.

In 1945, 50 years ago, during World War II, German forces in the Netherlands, Denmark and northwest Germany agreed to surrender.

In 1946, a two-day riot at Alcatraz prison in San Francisco Bay ended, the violence having claimed the lives of five people.

In 1961, a group of "Freedom Riders" left Washington for New Orleans to challenge racial segregation in interstate buses and bus terminals.

In 1980, Marshal Josip Broz Tito, president of Yugoslavia, died three days before his 88th birthday.

In 1989, fired White House aide Oliver North was convicted of shredding documents and two other crimes and acquitted of nine other charges stemming from the Iran-Contra affair. (However, the three convictions were overturned on appeal.)

Ten years ago: Western leaders wrapped up a summit in Bonn by urging a "substantial reduction" in barriers to free trade. Spend a Buck won the 115th Kentucky Derby at Churchill Downs.

Five years ago: The South African government and the African National Congress concluded historic talks in Cape Town with a joint statement agreeing on a "common commitment toward the resolution of the existing climate of violence."

One year ago: Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and PLO leader Yasser Arafat signed a historic accord on Palestinian autonomy that granted self-rule in the Gaza Strip and Jericho.

ART BUCHWALD

Life in prison creates star of radio talk shows

Buchwald

Unlike most of the civilized people in this country I am not down on G. Gordon Liddy. As a matter of fact, as an ex-con who committed a crime, was charged as a felon, served four years in the slammer and is now trying to go straight as a radio talk commentator, he is, I think, a Watergate role model.

What makes this a great story is that Liddy could have easily continued his life of crime, breaking into one Watergate office after another and stealing political files.

But he had a change of heart. One day in the recreation yard of the penitentiary he started talking to another inmate named John.

John asked, "What are you going to do when you get out, Gordon?"

"I have no idea. Breaking and entering is all I know. I can hold my hand over a flame for five minutes, but that doesn't pay well."

"Have you ever thought of going into talk radio?"

"I never considered it. Does it pay as much as breaking into Watergate?"

"Sometimes it's better if you're real nasty and people identify you with the lunatic fringe."

"And it's legal?"

"Guaranteed by the First Amendment. You can even tell people how to kill an ATF officer by aiming at his head if he's wearing a bulletproof vest."

"I love it," Liddy said. "I like to offer antigovernment advice."

John said, "That's why I'm suggesting it. You've got the loudest mouth in the prison, but you've never used it to make a buck. Gordon, talk radio is bigger than stealing hubcaps. The sicker you are, the more sponsors you get. They pay really big money for looney-tune people who spew poison."

Liddy said, "Does the prison hold any courses in radio broadcasting?"

John replied, "No, but you can listen to some of the right-wing announcers, and you'll see that it's a piece of cake. The best ones are the call-in shows because the kooks do your work for you and all you have to do is sit there and say yeh, yeh, yeh."

"I've made up my mind. I'm going to give up my life of crime and talk into a microphone instead," Liddy said. "I can't wait to tell my parole board."

"Good for you. Someday the guys in this place will be able to boast to their families, 'I was locked up with G. Gordon Liddy, and if I had gotten my own talk show, I'd be as rich as he is right now.' "

The word got out that Liddy was considering talk radio as a career, and many station owners were visiting the prison trying to persuade him to go on the air.

Liddy treated them all with contempt. This made him even more desirable since a truly contemptible announcer was hard to come by.

The rest is history. He finally landed a syndicated show and started taking calls from all over the country.

On his first program, the moment he began to tell listeners how to shoot a federal agent with a semiautomatic — a star was born.

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

■ Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification. Letters not including this information will not be considered for publication.

■ They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations. The briefer the letter, the better its chance of publication.

■ Only one letter per month per writer can be published.

■ Letters will be edited for length, taste and legal reasons and are accepted only on that basis. Letters which are difficult to reduce in length will be returned to the writer to be edited before being re-submitted.

■ We do not publish "open" letters, copies of letters sent to others or multiple signatures.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

Letters should be sent to: The Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland 79702, or you may fax to 682-3793.

Cuevas is one of best councilmen in Midland

I would like to share my opinion of Jose Cuevas with your readers. In have lived in Midland for five years and have had the pleasure of knowing Jose for a year and a half. I immediately liked the guy because of his big smile, his abundant energy, an uplifting friendliness, and his laugh. I also commented on how I felt I knew him from all the times I've seen him on TV at all the council meetings. I asked him if he had ever missed a meeting since I had never seen his seat empty. Jose told me he has about a 90 percent attendance and that he felt that was expected when he was elected. He loves what he is doing and has a concern for Midland and its improvement from a community leader, family, and business point of view. I feel that Jose is not only a good friend, but also one of the best city councilmen I've ever known.

Dollahite looks out for our interests

I would like to echo M.B. McMurry's words in Tuesday's Reporter-Telegram concerning the consideration of Tom Dollahite for Midland City Council. I concur that there are only a handful of people that wish to see a new terminal built at Midland International Airport. Most of the people that I have discussed this situation with are of the opinion that we don't use the one we have enough as it is; why do we need to spend $30 million on a new one? Tom Dollahite is looking out for our interests in other areas as well. The bottom line here is taxes. Oh sure, the supporters of this white elephant say the federal government will fund this project with funds that are allocated for just such facilities. But, does it matter to whom the taxes are paid: the federal government or our city government? Taxes are taxes and they will go up no matter who funds this project!

All one has to do is take a good look at the new multibillion-dollar airport that Denver now has, and the solution is as plain as the nose on your face. We don't need a new airport terminal! Think about it good people of Midland. Elect a City Council member who you know where he stands on important issues that affect the bottom line in your checkbook. Tom Dollahite is a Christian man that proudly served his country in the U.S. Army and retired as a full colonel. He has the background and experience to do the job that will be required of him as your city of Midland council member. He is concerned about Midland and Midlanders. Please give him your consideration for Midland City Council on May 6.

Roberts is interested in taxpayers of city

Do you want to elect a city councilman who understands not only the importance of a fiscally responsible city government, but also the proper role and function of that government? Then cast your vote for David Roberts on Election Day.

I have known Dave for several years and know that he is first and foremost interested in the taxpayers of our city, and he is not beholden to any Republican establishment group.

Please join with me and others who care about personal freedoms in voting for David Roberts as we strive for more individual responsibility, less government and, with God's help, a better world.

So long George? Congress considers replacing dollar bill with coins that last WASHINGTON (AP) — Dollars would jangle in Americans' pockets rather than pad their wallets if Republican budget-cutters get their way.

They're eyeing millions in savings that could result from replacing $1 bills that wear out in 17 months with $1 dollar coins lasting 30 years.

A diverse coalition of special interests, ranging from blind operators of concession stands to public transit companies to copper-mining corporations, is backing the effort.

The opposition — paper and ink companies and the unions involved in printing the bills — has over the years succeeded in blocking the coin forces. But the coin proponents' cause has been given new life this year by the Republican Congress' struggle to balance the budget.

"Significant government savings are no further away than our wallets or purses," Rep. Jim Kolbe, R-Ariz., told the House Banking subcommittee on monetary policy Wednesday.

Although it costs twice as much to mint a coin as print a bill — 8 cents vs. 4 cents — the coins last 21 times longer, said Kolbe, who has introduced legislation to replace the dollar bill with a coin.

The Congressional Budget Office estimates the savings at $120 million to $180 million a year.

And switching to coins will save millions for private industry while offering added convenience for the public, proponents argue.

No longer would commuters riding express buses from Staten Island to Manhattan have to pay with 16 quarters — twice a day — because New York City buses don't accept dollar bills. No longer would shoppers in downtown Washington have to feed meters with 16 quarters to park for two hours. No longer would the Chicago Transit Authority have to pay 20 full-time employees to straighten out and stack the dollar bills its receives.

Nearly every other major industrial nation already has switched to high-denomination coins. Canada, for instance, has a one-dollar coin, nicknamed the "Loonie" after the picture of a loon that it carries, and plans to introduce a $2 coin next year.

Coin opponents answer proponents' argument with a single phrase: "Susan B. Anthony."

In 1979, the government introduced dollar coins with the picture of the famous feminist. The public hated them. Sixteen years later, nearly 300 million of them still sit in government vaults.

Coin backers counter that Susie Bs failed because they looked too much like a quarter. Any new dollar coin would be the same size as the Susie B but should be gold-colored and have a smooth edge like a nickel as opposed to a notched edge like a quarter, according to The Coin Coalition, the group lobbying.

Another problem with the Anthony dollar was that the government continued printing dollar bills, which kept the coins from receiving the mass circulation they needed to gain acceptance.

U.S. returns 27 Haitian refugees

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — One day after President Clinton agreed to allow 20,000 Cubans detained at Guantanamo Bay into the United States, the Coast Guard returned 27 Haitian refugees to their homeland Wednesday.

The move dramatically illustrated the wide divergence in treatment of Haitian and Cuban refugees at the U.S. naval base in southeastern Cuba.

Upon arrival at the capital port, the refugees were transferred to the care of the Red Cross, which generally gives refugees money for bus fare home.

There are 449 Haitians remaining at Guantanamo Bay, including 251 unaccompanied minors, U.S. authorities said.

U.S. officials say the restoration of democracy in Haiti with the return of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide last fall has left Haitian refugees without valid grounds for requesting asylum in the United States. However, even during the former army regime thousands of refugees were forcibly returned to Haiti.

Cubans are considered to have a more legitimate claim to asylum because of their country's Communist government.

Clinton's decision Tuesday to admit Cuban refugees from Guantanamo Bay stemmed largely from fears of disturbances by Cubans frustrated by their captivity and angry about a policy that had excluded them from the United States. U.S. officials say 20,916 Cubans are now being held at Guantanamo.

However, Clinton also said that any more Cubans who flee their country will be forcibly returned home.

Last summer, about 35,000 Cuban boat people tried to reach Florida on homemade rafts. To halt the exodus, the Clinton administration shipped all the rafters to Guantanamo Bay and announced they would never be allowed into the United States.

Judgment hearing to be July 1

■ Court can refer to law, precedence, make ruling on constitutionality of 385th District Court of Midland without trial.

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

A summary judgment hearing on the constitutionality of the 385th District Court of Midland has been postponed and rescheduled for July 1, according to Midland County Attorney Mark Dettman

A hearing on whether or not the 385th District Court in Midland will become effective and ready to hear cases had been originally set for April 28 by a three-U.S. District Judge panel in Washington, D.C.

The court, which was created by the state legislature in its last session to help ease an overburdened court docket in Midland County, was not cleared for operation by the U.S. Department of Justice.

The Justice Department has ruled the at-large system of electing judges in Texas is unconstitutional despite a Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals ruling upholding the election system.

The Justice Department wants to see judges elected through precincts allowing minorities more voice in electing judges.

The state filed a lawsuit in U.S. District Court against the Justice Department for holding up the court. The state had asked for a summary judgment in favor of the state.

Dettman said the court can make a ruling without a trial through a summary judgment.

"In that kind of hearing, the court doesn't have to consider evidence or testimony, but can refer to law and precedence such as the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals decision a few years ago in which it ruled in favor of the state," Dettman said.

Dettman said he believes the Justice Department wants to "relitigate" previous court cases to mandate the way the state elects judges.

However, the county attorney said case precedence is on the state's side making the end results look favorable.

Two previous panels of three U.S. district judges had heard similar cases from New York and Georgia, and in both cases found in favor of the state.

"The panel said it felt bound by the New York and Georgia cases which were exactly like ours and they were both pre-cleared in addition to precedence set by the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in the Lulac vs. Clements case in which it ruled the at-large system doesn't discriminate," Dettman said.

So the summary judgment hearing has been slated for July 1. In the time before then the Justice Department can continue a limited investigation of historical research and take a few depositions from state legislators opposed to the way judges are elected, Dettman said.

"I anticipate this being the end of it with a favorable result for Midland County and the other counties involved - that is my expectation," Dettman said.

He said all the effected counties in the lawsuit - Fort Bend, Harris, Tarrant and Midland counties - are

A similar team selected from cities across the Panhandle and the Permian Basin will be touring northwestern India when this group finishes touring Texas.

Throughout the month of May, the Indian Rotary team will begin in Big Spring and will spend time in Midland, Odessa, Lubbock, Plainview, Pampa and Amarillo.

While in Midland, the group will tour the Confederate Air Force Museum, the Petroleum Museum and will meet with Mayor Bobby Burns to receive a proclamation acknowledging the five-member team as honorary Midland citizens.

The group will be meeting with the Midland West Rotary Club at Furr's Cafeteria for lunch Tuesday.

Victim of park shooting dies

From Staff Reports

A Midland man died Wednesday after remaining in critical condition all week due to a gunshot wound to the head.

Police are still investigating the events that led to Marcus Pertile, 21, being shot in Hogan Park late Sunday, Sgt. David Garcia said.

Due to conflicting witness' reports, a motive, the shooter and clear details about what happened at the park remain unknown, he said.

The case has been reclassified as a homicide, making it the city's third homicide of the year.

A fund has been set up at Bank One, 2301 W. Wall Street, to help offset the medical bills incurred by the Pertile family, said Bobby Alexander, Pertile's uncle. The account number is 1885384055.

Teachers thank volunteers with plants, desserts

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Potted geraniums, elegant silver tea services, jam cookies and cream-cheese spread on gingerbread set the scene for Greathouse Elementary School's afternoon "spring garden tea" Wednesday.

Dozens of parents sampled various desserts, filled out tickets for a drawing on geraniums, and chatted with Greathouse staff in the school library. Teachers and staff hosted the tea to thank parents and Volunteers in Public Schools (VIPS) for their efforts during the 1994-95 school year.

"Parents laminate things for us, cut things out, run off papers, make games and read to students in classrooms," said Greathouse fifth grade teacher Cindy Simpson, who helped organize the event.

"I even had parents come help construct a loft in my class," Ms. Simpson said. "There are so many things to do and teachers have so much responsibility, the volunteers really make our lives easier."

Teachers provided refreshments, certificates, vincas and gifts of perfume samples for the volunteers.

Volunteer Tina Blake, who organized a classroom party in the past, said she worked as do many of the school volunteers. Several volunteers allowed that they had full-time jobs, but still found time to make classroom decorations or bake treats for parties.

Lee senior takes stand in print, heads to state journalism contest

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

For his ability to write persuasively, Lee High School senior Joe Cole is Austin-bound for the state University Interscholastic League journalism competition.

The editor of the LHS newspaper, the "Dixie Dispatch," recently took third place in the regional editorial writing competition at Texas Tech University in Lubbock. He wrote an editorial on whether or not students should be permitted to have beepers in school. "They gave us a fictional scenario," Cole said. "I took a stand, but I also kind of road the line. It wasn't a real strong 'yes' or 'no.' A student was suspended for bringing a beeper, but his dad was in surgery for cancer."

While Cole believes beepers don't belong in school, he thought medical emergencies would be the exception. "I proposed the idea that students could get permission and the rules might be amended a little."

Even though Cole thought his opinion wasn't real strong in one direction or another, UIL judges were impressed with his ability to support his opinion and judges usually take note when sound solutions are offered in editorials.

"Joe was one of 12 students from four regions in the state, to qualify for the UIL competition," said LHS journalism teacher Paula Huckabay. "Only three people in each region qualified, and Joe was the only student from Midland,

Minister protests discrimination against gays with hunger strike

AUSTIN (AP) — A Methodist minister began the 13th day of a hunger strike Wednesday in protest of a policy that he says discriminates against homosexuals.

The fast by the Rev. Charles Moore, 60, coincides with a gathering here of the United Methodist Council of Bishops. Moore wants the council to issue a public statement "expressing their concern about the mistreatment of gay people, especially by church officials."

"If they do that, I will consider it enough of a victory to call off the fast," he said.

Moore, pastor of Grace United Methodist Church in Austin, said he began his water-only fast because "I'm very concerned about the mistreatment of homosexual persons in the church."

kids," Ms. Blake said. "But it's nice to get a treat like this. It's nice to be thanked even if you would do the work anyway."

Several other public schools also hosted events to thank volunteers during National Volunteer Week last week.

During the past school year (beginning August of 1994 through April 15, 1995) more than 105,393 hours were logged from VIPS and Partners in Education, according to information from VIPS coordinator Pat Garcia.

"Midland Independent School District is very fortunate to have a wealth of volunteers from throughout the community," Ms. Garcia said. She noted that recent statistics reflect the national volunteer average is 51 percent of the total population. "Midland's commitment to volunteerism far exceeds the national average," she said. "Statistics show 98 percent of community leaders, 88 percent of agency executives and 64 percent of people from local households volunteer on a regular basis."

so we are really proud of him."

Cole, who has spent three years working on the "Dixie Dispatch," said he has set his sights on a job as a columnist, or to write for or edit a magazine. He admires the writing in "Rolling Stone" magazine and plans to study journalism (specializing in magazine writing) at the University of Texas at Austin.

His short term goal, however, is to do well at Friday's state competition in Austin. "I'm pretty nervous because I'm the only person from Lee to attend the competition. Our math and science students got beat out in regionals by schools in Fort Worth and magnet schools," Cole said, noting that taking a stand in print requires a tough skin. "It's an ego thing," he said.

involved in sharing expenses for retaining the Bickerstaff firm from Austin to assist the state in the lawsuit. This law firm specializes in this type of litigation, Dettman said.

"We need to get that court filled because the docket is getting more and more bogged down," Dettman said.

A new courtroom has already been constructed on the fourth floor of the courthouse.

Midland attorney Willie DuBose was elected to the office in the Nov. 8 election, but cannot assume the judgeship until the State of Texas vs. the United States lawsuit has been resolved and the new court approved.

Education bill highlights...

AUSTIN (AP) — Here, at a glance, are some highlights of the education reform bill pending before the Texas House. Differences from the measure earlier passed by the Senate are in parentheses:

COST

Pricetag estimated at $275 million over the next two-year budget period, although backers say that's high because it includes more money than is likely to be spent on school construction. Total does not include funds for a teacher pay raise.

(Senate: Estimated at $538 million.)

SCHOOL YEAR

The instructional year remains at 180 days. The teacher contract is expanded to 190 days, up from 183, to give additional days for training and planning.

(Senate: Reduces instructional year to 175 days. Teacher contract expanded to 185 days.)

NO-PASS, NO-PLAY

The suspension from extracurricular activities is cut from six to three weeks. Students can practice or rehearse during the suspension period.

(Senate: Allows school districts to cut the suspension period to three weeks the first time a student fails a class in junior high school and in high school. Students can practice or rehearse during the suspension period.)

STATE VS LOCAL CONTROL

- Texas Education Agency authority is limited to specific activities.
- Home-rule charters can be obtained with local voter approval, freeing school districts from all areas of state regulation except accountability, school finance, and the no-pass, no-play rule. Home-rule school districts also are subject to federal regulations.
- Campus charters can be obtained to allow teachers and parents to design their own programs, such as magnet schools for math or science.
- Other charters can be obtained to allow for off-campus programs to serve, for example, children of a particular company's employees.

(Senate: Also specifies limits to TEA authority. Includes home-rule school districts, but they are free from fewer regulations. Also creates up to 20 open-enrollment charter schools can be created at parents' request. They are free from numerous state regulations and can draw students from all over).

TEACHERS

- Current salary scale. The bill sponsor, Rep. Paul Sadler, plans to offer an amendment that would spend $350 million to raise the minimum scale.

(Senate: The minimum pay scale would be increased and tied to growth in per-pupil spending at a cost of about $92 million.)

- Allows school districts to hire people to teach a particular class who are not certified as teachers — for example, a doctor to teach a health class. The education commissioner could veto the selection.

(Senate: No similar provision).

SCHOOL DISCIPLINE

- Authorizes teachers to remove disruptive students from class.
- Requires alternative education programs for students who are removed.

(Senate: Similar).

FAST: Minister enters 14th day of hunger strike

(From 1B)

He points to a statement adopted by the denomination's 1972 general conference that says, "We do not condone the practice of homosexuality and consider this practice incompatible with Christian teaching."

Delegates to the last general conference, held in 1992, voted to retain that language, and the statement is again expected to be an issue at the 1996 convention in Denver.

"The issue is wracking every major denomination," Moore said. "It is not an issue that can be ignored. The churches are not going to be able to hide from this."

Moore said he had written an appeal to the Council of Bishops asking it to denounce discrimination of homosexuals.

Bishop Melvin G. Talbert, secretary of the council, said the council's executive committee accepted Moore's appeal with "a kind of pastoral concern, with a kind of pastoral sensitivity."

Talbert said Moore's request for a statement "could serve to inspire, but it also could serve to become a wedge issue."

Moore, who said he is a heterosexual who for too long ignored the pain of discrimination felt by gays and lesbians, has shed 15 pounds from his 5-foot-10-inch frame since beginning the fast.

Dallas prepares for transition in municipal politics

DALLAS (AP) — The three top contenders for the Dallas mayor's office look very different: one is black, one is Hispanic and one is white.

Beyond that, their similarities are more apparent.

Ron Kirk, Domingo Garcia and Darrell Jordan want to bolster the police department, improve transportation, control taxes, attract and retain business and turn the Trinity River into a model for urban waterways.

The three will compete in Saturday's election to replace Steve Bartlett, who chose not to run for a second four-year term.

Either Kirk, who is black, or Garcia, who is Hispanic, would be a first for Dallas, which has never had a minority mayor.

Kirk and Garcia are Democrats and Jordan is an independent, all running in a Republican stronghold in recent history.

The city's politics appear to have come full circle since Ku Klux Klan-backed candidates swept the City Council in 1923.

Southern Methodist University journalism professor Darwin Payne, author of "Big D," a history of Dallas politics this century, says the emergence of potent minority candidates is expected.

"It's a natural evolution," he said. "It is surprising that Kirk has gotten so much widespread support. Never before did we have (a minority) so anointed by so many establishment-type figures."

According to statistics provided by the city, Dallas is 48 percent white, 30 percent black and 20 percent Hispanic.

Some racial epithets painted on Kirk campaign material early in the race marred what has otherwise been a clean, issues-oriented campaign.

Kirk, 40, served as secretary of state under former Gov. Ann Richards before becoming a partner of one of Dallas' top law firms, Gardere & Wynne. He said his motivation is not to become the city's first black mayor.

"The reality is that there is no dominant ethnic population," said Kirk, who holds a sizable polling lead in the black community and a comfortable margin overall, including white voters. Reports from early voting sites indicate turnout in black neighborhoods is higher while that in predominantly white and Hispanic areas is down.

Kirk said that Dallas must first learn to compete with places like Plano and Arlington to become a world-class city.

"We've lost 21 percent of our property tax base, but it seems to have bottomed out," Kirk said. "Dallas must have the tools to build libraries and grow the economy, and the only way to do that is to relieve taxpayers."

Garcia, 37, is the only one of the three who has held elected office. His early polling strength has declined in recent weeks after a few embarrassing campaign gaffes. Most notably, after claiming he was a Harris County prosecutor it was discovered he was an intern in that office during law school at Texas Southern University.

"I'm a fiscal conservative but a social progressive," said Garcia, who counts himself among a new breed of populist politicians.

A centerpiece of Garcia's campaign is harsh criticism of the Dallas Authority of Rapid Transit. Garcia has targeted the agency as a prime example of government waste.

Calling the authority a "financial disaster" and a "fraud," he proposes a re-evaluation of the city's rail system, which is under construction, and the election of DART members.

"We need mass transit, not mass waste," he said.

Jordan, 56, is more reminiscent the Dallas mayoral prototype of the past. A successful attorney who spent much of his professional life living in the affluent Park Cities area, Jordan says he can apply a common-sense business approach.

"I'm tired of hearing it's easier to do business in other cities than Dallas," said Jordan. "I will be tenacious about bringing business to Dallas and keeping it here."

Jordan is a former prosecutor and president of the State Bar of Texas. His politics are generally conservative — he wants to revise affirmative action policies — but he supports strong city enforcement of zoning regulations.

Jordan entered the fray relatively unknown, but he has picked up polling steam as the election has drawn near.

Kirk is the fund-raising champion of the election, garnering more than $650,000 in contributions. Garcia and Jordan are in the $300,000 range.

House committee approves payment to whistleblower

AUSTIN (AP) — A former state employee who was fired after reporting alleged wrongdoing at his agency would receive a $5 million settlement under legislation approved Wednesday by a House committee.

But George Green, who has been battling since 1991 to collect a $13.5 million court judgment awarded to him, condemned the offer and said he would not accept.

"I'm not going to give up. I'm not going to accept this injustice," Green said. "I ask nothing more than what everybody else deserves, which is fair and equitable treatment under the law."

The Texas Department of Human Services fired Green, 47, in December 1989 from his $36,000-a-year safety officer job overseeing renovation projects.

His dismissal came after he told supervisors about alleged kickbacks and other violations involving agency contracts, then threatened to report the problems to outside authorities.

Green sued the agency under the Texas Whistleblower Act, which prohibits a state agency from terminating an employee for reporting violations to law enforcement agencies.

In 1991, a Travis County jury ordered the state to pay Green $13.5 million in damages. The Texas Supreme Court upheld the award in 1994, but the state has yet to pay.

Green contends he is now owed $19 million, due to interest.

Under the bill approved by the House Appropriations Committee, Green would get about $5 million.

Committee Chairman Rob Junell, D-San Angelo, said the amount includes the $3.6 million Green was awarded in actual damages, plus interest.

"I think this is more than fair," Junell said. "The Supreme Court decided that it is up to the Legislature to appropriate whatever sum it finds is applicable, and that's what we're doing."

Some lawmakers say Green should receive the full $19 million he's seeking.

In an impassioned speech, Rep. Ron Wilson, D-Houston, said legislators would be skirting the very laws they pass by not paying Green the full amount.

"It's dishonorable for us not to pay Mr. Green what he is owed," Wilson said. "We owe it to this man to live up to our word and the laws of this state.

"Mr. Green did exactly as the law required him to do. He saw the evidence of corruption, he reported it. He is suffering for it. We're asking everybody else in this state to be responsible — except for ourselves," Wilson said.

When the bill is debated in the full House later this month, Rep. Susan Combs, R-Austin, said she would offer an amendment requiring the state to pay Green the $19 million.

Green declined to discuss the possibility of further legal action, saying he would wait to see what the final bill includes. But he hinted that taking the case to the U.S. Supreme Court would not be out of the question.

"The U.S. Supreme Court has clearly said that the Texas Legislature or any other legislature's not beyond the law, and so there are remedies," Green said.

"I'm not going to back off the final judgment. I'm not going to sacrifice the courage and the heartache that has come my way."

Green was fired after the DHS uncovered one questionable telephone call totaling 13 cents and accused him of missing a physical therapy session when he was on sick leave, according to court documents. He was later indicted on those allegations, but the charges were dismissed.

Callers claim UT student's death was result of hazing

BASTROP (AP) — The Bastrop County Sheriff's Department is investigating several anonymous phone tips alleging that a 19-year-old University of Texas student's drowning was related to hazing.

Gabriel Benjamin "Gabe" Higgins died Saturday during a party on the Colorado River about three miles south of Bastrop.

Since the incident, the sheriff's department has received anonymous calls saying Higgins was a victim of hazing.

"We've had calls from numerous people — anonymously — who have made reference to that," said Lt. David Campos.

He added that the department had received 15 to 20 calls on the case on Monday alone.

Higgins, who was pledging a UT spirit club called the Texas Cowboys, reportedly went swimming during Saturday's party with about 30 Cowboys around 2:30 a.m.

Higgins was reported missing about 11:40 a.m.

His body was recovered from the river in about 12 feet to 15 feet of water about 4:45 p.m., some 60 feet to 80 feet from where he had been seen.

Jim Vick, UT vice president for student affairs, said preliminary interviews done by university officials revealed that the party was a common Cowboy function called a "picnic."

Picnics historically include drinking games and the paddling of pledges, the Austin American-Statesman reported. The Cowboys are on probation through August for a 1994 hazing incident that involved paddling at an initiation ceremony.

Authorities are investigating whether paddling or forced drinking, both of which are considered hazing under state law, occurred at Saturday's party, Campos said.

The Texas law was passed in 1987 after the alcohol poisoning death a year earlier of Mark Seeberger, a Phi Kappa Psi fraternity pledge at UT.

The Texas Cowboys referred questions to attorney Randy Leavitt, who told the American-Statesman that Higgins' death was "a terrible tragedy."

An autopsy showed that Higgins had a blood alcohol level of 0.21, twice the legal driving limit of 0.10.

Travis County Medical Examiner Robert Bayardo, who ruled Higgins' death a drowning, said someone Higgins size — about 165 pounds — would have to consume about 10 beers or 10 shots of whiskey in about four hours to reach that level of intoxication.

Higgins, of Pocatello, Idaho, was a sophomore mechanical engineering major and a member of the Kappa Sigma fraternity.

Report: Decline in mortality rates snaps 'Stroke Belt'

■ American Heart Association journal contains research that shows Alabama, Georgia, Carolinas, the "Stroke Belt" has disintegrated.

Associated Press

DALLAS — The "Stroke Belt" has snapped, new research suggests.

For decades, Alabama, Georgia and the Carolinas showed the densest concentration of areas reporting the most fatal strokes. But the May issue of the American Heart Association journal Stroke contains research that shows the Stroke Belt has disintegrated as stroke mortality rates have declined nationwide.

The reason why is anybody's guess, the top researcher said.

"There are no clear and easy answers to that," said Michele Casper, an epidemiologist with the national Centers for Disease Control.

"They (high-risk individuals) may be moving out the area. Lower stroke risk people may be moving into the area. The findings kind of come together in a whole constellation of issues," she said Wednesday.

Since the 1950s, researchers had found high stroke-related death rates to be most densely concentrated in the Southeast, between the Appalachians and the Atlantic.

Theories had varied on the reasons, from the inadequate levels of the trace element selenium in the soil to soft water and the muggy climate.

But since the trends were similar for black and white men and women in the Southeast, no dietary or socioeconomic conclusions have ever been drawn for the Stroke Belt's existence, Ms. Casper said.

There still haven't been conclusions made — at least not yet. But the study raises new questions, she said.

The most compelling is: What happened to the Stroke Belt? Researchers suggest the economic development of the South during the 1970s and '80s helped.

"Historically, the South has been an underdeveloped region," the report said. "... During the past several decades, however, economic centers have developed within the South."

Previous studies have shown lower cardiovascular disease death rates in prosperous areas than impoverished ones, the report said.

The new study was based on two years of computer analysis of all death certificates filed nationwide from 1962 to 1988. Comparisons were drawn from year to year, region to region and people to people.

For example, for black women, 72 percent of the Stroke Belt regions were among the riskiest 20 percent nationwide in 1962. By 1988, 48 percent of the regions ranked among the riskiest 20 percent, according to the study.

The patterns were similar for other ethnic and gender groups.

"Now, we know that some things can be done (to reduce the stroke death rate)," he said. "The next thing we need to do is conduct more research to identify the factors."

Ms. Casper theorized that the environmental theories of the past did not influence stroke death risks so much as such community factors as:

- Social and economic conditions.
- Availability and quality of medical care, especially for the diagnosis, treatment and reporting of strokes.
- Prevalence of risk factors and availability of education and activities for preventing strokes.
- Direction of population migration.

Leading neurologists said they are not surprised by the news.

But Dr. Michael Moskowitz and Dr. Lewis Caplan said they were encouraged that the group intends to search for factors behind the geographical trends.

"The cluster may have disappeared, but stroke is still the No. 3 cause of death in the nation," said Moskowitz, neurology professor at the Harvard School of Medicine. "The problem is a major one, just no more major (in the Southeast) than anywhere else."

Caplan speculated that better education, health care and economic development in the South contributed to the death of the Stroke Belt.

"People are becoming far more aware of those factors that can lead to stroke," said Caplan, neurology chairman at the Tufts University New England Medical Center.

$450 million buys taxpayers 2 rusting, unfinished vessels

By Jim Drinkard
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A decade ago, the Navy awarded a Pennsylvania shipyard a contract to build two oilers — floating gas stations that fuel ships at sea — despite worries about the yard's ability to do the work.

Today, the unfinished vessels lie anchored in the James River off Newport News, Va., unwanted by the Navy after costing taxpayers nearly half a billion dollars, more than double their original price.

What happened inbetween is a saga of political intervention, financial failures, misjudgments and plain bad luck that will become the focus of congressional hearings this week.

"The Navy spent nearly $450 million and the American taxpayer has nothing but two rusting hulks to show for it," said Sen. William Roth, R-Del., whose Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations will examine the failures in two days of hearings Tuesday and today.

The tale began in 1984, when the Navy asked for bids to build two fleet oilers, 680-foot vessels that carry 180,000 barrels of fuel oil to replenish ships at sea. Four others were already being built by Avondale Shipyards in New Orleans, but Penn Ship in Philadelphia submitted a lower bid.

The Navy had immediate concerns. Penn Ship was a new company, formed by two real estate developers who had bought the former Sun Ship yard and renamed it. The company had not started a new shipbuilding project in several years, and was seen by Navy analysts as financially weak.

But at an April 16, 1985, hearing of the Senate Appropriations defense subcommittee, Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., went to bat for the home-state contractor. His state needed the jobs the contract would bring, said Specter, now a candidate for the GOP presidential nomination.

"I have worked closely with Penn Ship, been there on a number of occasions, seen their facilities, talked to their management, gone through their financial status and tested their ability to deliver," he assured Everett Pyatt, assistant Navy secretary for shipbuilding.

In addition, Penn Ship offered to provide some financial security to the Navy by putting all its assets in a trust that the government could take over in the event of a default on the contracts.

Three weeks later, the Navy awarded a contract to Penn Ship to build the two oilers for $222.4 million. Contacted Friday, Specter's office had no comment on his advocacy for the company.

When the Pentagon inspector general's office investigated the contract award last year, it found that key documents evaluating Penn Ship's technical capabilities and financial soundness — required as part of the contract award process — were missing.

And it discovered that the Navy allowed Penn Ship's own lawyers to draw up the security trust and use the company's own bank as trustee. The trust documents never were filed, robbing the Navy of one potential way to recover its losses.

Then the Navy's fears began to come true.

Penn Ship's unfamiliarity with the techniques required to build the oilers meant much welding was wrong and had to be redone. The shipbuilder's finances steadily worsened until late 1987, when Penn Ship notified the Navy that cost overruns would put the company out of business by Dec. 10.

The Navy responded by pouring in more money. In June 1988 it raised the price of the two oilers to $331.4 million. In January 1989, the government coughed up another $17 million.

It wasn't enough. Seven months later, Penn Ship defaulted with the ships far behind schedule and still unfinished. Trying to recover some of its losses, the Navy was able only to take over a floating drydock owned by the company, worth $19 million. A Navy lien on a floating derrick the company owned, worth $2.5 million, had been misfiled. The derrick was later sold without the government's recovering a dime.

While the Pentagon decided what to do next, it agreed to pay the now-defunct company $45,000 a day — double that for holidays — to "guard" the two vessels. Because of another error, the payments continued for six weeks after the ships were towed away in December 1989, the Senate subcommittee found.

While being towed, one of the ships broke loose and ran aground.

The next stop was Tampa, Fla., home of Tampa Shipyards, whose owner was George Steinbrenner, also owner of the New York Yankees baseball team. Even though Steinbrenner's $49 million bid was not the lowest, he had won the contract by arguing that the work would keep his shipyard in business, preserving a vital piece of America's defense industrial base.

Soon Steinbrenner began to have problems of his own, and applied for $24 million in new payments to cover cost overruns. When the Navy refused, he hired a pair of lobbyists who helped get Congress to slip $45 million in new payments into a Pentagon money bill.

Finally the Tampa shipyard defaulted without finishing the two ships, and last July they were towed to the James River and mothballed. To settle accounts with Tampa Shipyards and avoid lawsuits the company had filed against the government, the Navy agreed this month to a final payment of $18 million.

Serb rebels strike vital highway; cease fire may not calm anger

ZAGREB, Croatia (AP) — Serb missiles struck at the heart of Croatia's capital for the second day Wednesday, killing one person and wounding 64 as Serb rebels avenged their loss of territory to the Croatian army this week.

U.N. special envoy Yasushi Akashi announced a cease-fire in the Serb-controlled chunk of central Croatia where the Croats attacked Monday and Tuesday, seizing control of a section of the vital Zagreb-Belgrade highway.

But the truce may not calm the anger and animosity between Serbs and Croats, whose bitter 1991 war killed 10,000 people and left the Serbs in control of one-third of Croatia before spreading to neighboring Bosnia.

Akashi made no mention of Croatian army withdrawal from the estimated 200 square miles of territory taken. A senior rebel Serb official, Ilija Prijic, insisted the agreement gave the Croats 24 hours to withdraw.

Some 5,000 Serb civilians fled from the Croatian offensive into Serb-held parts of Bosnia. The International Committee of the Red Cross said Croatian missiles then hit a hospital in Bosanska Gradiska, a Serb-held Bosnian town.

Access for international organizations to the conflict zone has been extremely limited. The Serbs have not released casualty figures, but wild claims in their media — which largely determine popular sentiments — talked of hundreds of dead and wounded.

On Wednesday, one policeman died and 64 people, including 21 foreign and Croat ballet dancers rehearsing for a performance, were injured when four blasts rocked Zagreb city center and seven hit the outskirts near the airport.

Most of the blasts appeared caused by surface-to-surface missiles, said U.N. sources, insisting on anonymity.

Ambulances and fire engines raced downtown, and people abandoned cars and trams to scurry for cover in shelters and doorways. A general alert was sounded, and radio urged people off the streets.

U.S. Ambassador Peter Galbraith condemned the attack as "barbaric."

Rocketing the city during lunch-break "was intended with one sole, single purpose: to kill as many people as possible," Galbraith said, visiting injured in Zagreb children's hospital.

His embassy is just yards from where one of 11 cluster bombs hit Tuesday, killing five people and wounding 121.

Dr. Andrija Djordjevic, head of surgery at the Hospital of the Sisters of Mercy, said a Romanian, an ethnic Russian from Moldova, and a Pole were among 21 dancers injured when the Academy of Dramatic Arts was hit. A British dancer, Mark Bolden, had surgery to remove shrapnel from his abdomen.

"I was so surprised when it happened," said Andrei Barbanov, 24, of Moldova, who was wounded in the foot. "I didn't know what to think. I just hope I can dance again."

Croatian President Franjo Tudjman warned of retaliation if Zagreb was attacked again.

"If such a criminal attack is conducted only once again, Croatia will undertake most decisive steps," he said on national television, trumpeting this week's offensive as "a victory of extraordinary importance."

Announcing the ceasefire in U.N. Sector West, the Serb-held area the Croats attacked Monday, Akashi said he hoped any of the thousands of Serbs still there who wished to leave could do so peacefully starting Thursday morning.

Croatian authorities declared their offensive over with the capture of a Serb stronghold, Okucani, on Tuesday afternoon.

But the United Nations and the International Committee of the Red Cross said they had not toured the captured territory nor the slice of northern Bosnia where most refugees fled.

Serb refugees in Nova Topola, in Serb-held northern Bosnia, said Serb fighters fled without resisting the Croatian offensive.

The Croatian offensive began Monday, the same day a four-month truce in Bosnia expired.

Cutting off U.S. aid could cause disasters

By Mort Rosenblum
Associated Press

PARIS — Drastic cuts in U.S. government foreign aid could set off a chain reaction that would cripple the world's ability to avert calamities that kill by the millions, aid officials say.

With hard times at home, the officials say, parliaments in major donor countries may seize upon proposed cutbacks by the U.S. Congress to justify their own reluctance to give government aid.

Rather than take up the slack, "others will say that if we don't think aid is important, why should they?" Carol Lancaster, deputy head of the U.S. Agency for International Development, said in an interview.

Some critics of government aid, however, claim the future of foreign aid may be largely in private rather than government-funded programs. They say cutbacks in government aid are unavoidable because of economic problems, and that private agencies are already increasing their operations as governments cut back.

Lancaster is in Paris for what she expects to be a stormy session with delegates from other donor governments, who argue that Washington must not cut back on helping fragile nations.

Like her, many of the delegates face growing popular sentiment that foreign aid is extravagant, ineffective and better spent on domestic problems.

The aid professionals counter that foreign assistance spent at the right time is essential to head off violent upheaval, famine, epidemics and worsening poverty.

"Rwanda has shown the enormous cost of dealing with crises if we cannot prevent them," Lancaster said. "When these disaster erupt, we will have to respond." The United States alone had to spend $1 billion in relief in Rwanda last year.

Without enough funds, she added, Washington would be less able to influence world events, depending upon the goodwill on other donors to influence priorities.

"We would be reduced to the role of observer, if not mendicant," she said, stopping short of the synonym, beggar.

Aid critics in the United States, however, argue that the impact of U.S. assistance is exaggerated, and note contributions of non-governmental aid organizations.

"We're already seeing the private sector providing much more economic aid than the government," said Brian Johnson, a policy analyst for international economics at the Heritage Foundation.

Johnson said private U.S. charities spend about $12 billion in foreign aid each year.

Djibril Diallo, spokesman for the U.N. Development Program in New York and a veteran of African crisis relief, argued any reduction in foreign aid by Congress would influence other government donors.

"The American people have always been known to be generous, and any shift would have serious repercussions," he said. "Without U.S. leadership, we will see loss of life and multiplied poverty."

With the Marshall Plan after World War II, the United States defined the concept of foreign aid and for decades was the principal donor.

Some governments calculate their payments to international agencies as a percentage of the U.S. contribution.

Now Japan gives more, its official aid totalling $11 billion, compared to $9.7 billion from Washington. Congress is debating cuts of up to 30 percent, mostly in aid to Africa, Asia and Latin America.

In a recent blunt letter, Japanese Foreign Minister Yohei Kono expressed "grave concern" to Secretary of State Warren Christopher that U.S. leadership in foreign aid might be waning.

Most developed countries face difficulties, he wrote, but foreign aid was "one of the most vitally important items ... affecting the lives of all the world's peoples."

But although Japan and some Nordic countries are maintaining their aid levels, most European donors, including the European Union nations, are considering severe cuts.

Total foreign aid reached $59.5 billion in 1993. Despite growing populations and lingering conflict, it was cut by 8 percent in 1994. Donors governments are now fixing this year's levels.

Even as aid totals drop, some focus is shifting away from the poorest nations that survive on technical assistance — food aid and, in several cases, outright budgetary support.

Western European governments assist eastern neighbors, formerly in the Soviet bloc, which gives their own entrepreneurs an edge over American investors and exporters.

About $2 billion of U.S. aid goes to Israel and Egypt, partly because of the Camp David accords negotiated by President Carter.

TUCSON, Ariz. — Reynaldo Romo, 65, retired last year after working 37 years as a cable operator for Magma Copper in Arizona.

But the easy life isn't bringing him much peace of mind.

"To be here so many years and to have them take away your benefits," said Romo, without finishing his sentence.

"Before, the government wasn't talking like this. Now they're talking about immigrants and how they want to take away their benefits."

Alarmed by congressional plans to eliminate aid to legal immigrants, Romo and thousands of other foreign-born residents are swamping immigration offices throughout the United States.

Their goal: U.S. citizenship.

"They're applying in droves," said Greg Gagne, of the Immigration and Naturalization Service in Washington. "We weren't expecting anything of this magnitude."

Take Tucson, for example. Applications are coming in at 10 times last year's numbers, said Bill Johnston, of the INS.

"A little over a year ago, we were probably getting 45 to 60 applications a month," he said. "Last month we got 600."

Overall, Arizona's applicant numbers have nearly doubled since last year. Nationally, applications are up 37 percent over last year's 555,000, INS officials said. Officials project that total applications this year will number 760,000.

INS officials link the increases to two factors: Old-style "green cards" issued before 1978 must be replaced by next year. Most of those renewing are eligible to become citizens, and many are "taking the plunge," officials said.

"Over 40 percent of those coming in to change their green card apply for citizenship," Johnston said.

Millions of immigrants who were allowed into the country under a 1986 amnesty program have lived here long enough to be eligible for citizenship. "They're all now coming due," Johnston said.

Local INS officials refute the idea that alarm over benefits and California's Proposition 187, which denies some state aid to illegal immigrants, is behind the citizenship stampede.

Last month, the U.S. House approved a bill which would bar most legal immigrants from receiving food stamps, non-emergency medical care, public housing and other services. Social Security payments for retired legal immigrants would not be affected, however.

"In my casual conversations, I haven't heard about it," said Johnston, referring to concern about cuts. "That does not seem to be an issue."

But many immigrants see the issue in decidedly threatening terms.

"I'm afraid about my Social Security," said Maria Jesus de la Ossa, 74, as she waited to find out about citizenship at the Tucson INS office.

"My friend told me, 'Ooh, they're going to take away Social Security.'"

De la Ossa is married to an American and receives $623 a month from Social Security.

"If I lost it, it's all I have," she said.

Although she has lived here legally for 46 years, de la Ossa said she always resisted becoming a citizen before.

"My father said, 'Never, never do that,'" said de la Ossa, who is originally from Sonora. "I think he was very, very Mexican.

"But if I need it, I'm going to become an American citizen."

A few seats away, Ruth Romo voiced similar worries about her husband, a resident alien.

"We were a little bit concerned, even though he's earned his pension," said Romo, a U.S. citizen. She and her husband live in San Manuel, about 30 miles northeast of Tucson.

"I've been bugging him to become a citizen," she said.

"Who knows what might happen tomorrow?" added Reynaldo Romo, a 40-year U.S. resident. "We're here so we don't lose our rights and so I can vote."

Francisco Urrea, 46, was also sweating it out at the INS office. After getting help from his U.S.-born children, Urrea showed up to take his citizenship exam.

"The laws are becoming really difficult," said Urrea, a legal resident of Naco who entered the United States illegally 25 years ago. "They want to take things away from immigrants."

Citizenship has double meaning for Urrea, who owns a cabinet shop in Naco. Passing the test means greater security for him and his Mexican daughter, who still lives in Sonora, he said.

Urrea is worried about Mexico's economic crisis and said he hopes to bring his daughter to the United States.

Citizenship is "to help my daughter and to have more rights in the U.S.," said Urrea, who pays taxes but receives no government aid. "She wants to migrate to the United States and it's easier if I'm a citizen."

As his father took the test, Baltazar Urrea nervously waited outside.

"We kind of encouraged (him) to do this," said Baltazar Urrea, a U.S. citizen who helped grill his father on U.S. government and politics for the exam. "They're talking about taking (benefits) away. If they take (them) away, then what's going to happen?

"He's been paying taxes all his life and now it's time to be part of the country."

Francisco Urrea will have to wait a little longer, however. After spending 15 minutes with an examiner, he emerged and said he must retake the exam in two months.

"Well, Pops," offered his son, "it just means we've got to study harder."

WWII-era bombers revive memories on flying tour

WBy Don Driver
San Antonio Express-News

SAN ANTONIO — Jets are for kids.

That was the message on a small sign stuck on the World War II-era B-24 Liberator bomber "All American" when it landed at San Antonio International Airport.

"It brings back a lot of memories I guarantee you," said onlooker Jim Frederick, a 72-year-old former B-24 pilot who chalked up 40 bombing missions. "You have a warm spot in your heart for a machine that takes you out there 40 times and brings you back."

Frederick and other onlookers craned their necks Monday when the bomber, the only fully restored and operational B-24 in the world, touched down for a two-day stopover as the 50th anniversary of V-E Day nears.

"I had some friends who didn't come back," recalled Frederick, who is volunteering to assist in the aircraft's visit. "But I was lucky. I only had a couple of holes from flak in my aircraft."

The All American was to be joined by a restored B-17 Flying Fortress bomber as part of a "Salute to Veterans '95 Tour."

"It's great it's a piece of history," said pilot John Rising, 31, after he climbed out of the Liberator's cockpit. "Since it's the only flying and restored B-24, every time we fly it we know we're the only ones in the country doing what we do."

The All American and the B-17 were recovered and restored by the non-profit Collings Foundation. The eight-month, 100-city tour is being sponsored by Schlitz beer.

More than 18,000 Liberators, in various versions, were flown during World War II. The aircraft was considered a workhorse, although the B-17 got most of the publicity.

The Liberator could carry a load of 8,800 pounds of bombs up to 3,000 miles at a speed of more than 200 mph and an altitude of 28,000 feet.

> 'I got up there and flew it a little bit. It flies just like it used to but this time, nobody was shooting at me...'

> — John Carrigan
> former B-24 pilot

John Carrigan, 74, a Houston lawyer and former B-24 pilot who flew 39 missions in the Pacific, came along for the ride.

"I got up there and flew it a little bit," he said. "It flies just like it used to but this time, nobody was shooting at me and there was no flak."

Darryl Johnson, one of the crew members traveling with the aircraft around the nation, said it's pure joy to fly in the bomber.

"We love it," he said. "People are surprised by the size of it."

The bomber has a wingspan of 110 feet, a length of more than 67 feet and a height of 18 feet. It's maximum weight is 65,000 pounds and it carried a crew of 10.

The aircraft on display was named "All American" after a B-24 that participated in a July 25, 1944, raid on tank works at Linz, Austria.

The 19-plane squadron was attacked by more than 100 German fighters. The crew of the "All American" shot down 14 enemy planes and was one of only two B-24s to return to base.

The specific B-24 on display served for the United States until October 1944, when it was transferred to the British, who used it for patrol and bombing missions in the Pacific.

After the war, the aircraft was abandoned by the Royal Air Force in a bomber graveyard in Khanpur, India, until it was restored to active duty in 1948 by the Indian Air Force.

It enjoyed another 20 years in the air until it finally was retired in 1968. It was bought in 1981 by a British aircraft collector and resold three years later to the Collings Foundation.

Host pulls public access show due to a 'conservative' Corpus Christi

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Declaring that Corpus Christi is too conservative, a man has pulled his public-access TV program that featured topless women dancers and a segment called "Cooking with Dahmer."

"It's not because anybody is making me do anything," said J.R. Munoz, insisting that public pressure did not force him to yank the show, called "DogPhude," from TCI Cablevision's public-access channel.

"It's something that I want to do," he said Tuesday.

The 30-minute show drew criticism last week from about 20 viewers who called TCI offices.

Included in a Thursday episode was a videotape of a wet T-shirt contest in which three women ultimately danced topless. The show's "Cooking With Dahmer" segment referred to Milwaukee serial killer Jeffrey Dahmer.

Munoz called the show "trash and funny stuff." City Councilwoman Melody Cooper called it "vile garbage."

"I'm totally disgusted by it," Cooper said.

Munoz said he hopes to keep his time slot for a different program featuring interviews with rock 'n' roll bands — with their clothes on.

> 'I realize now that Corpus Christi is super-duper conservative. Many Corpus Christi people still have their heads in the sand. They are living in the Dark Ages.'

> public access TV show's host

"I don't have the resources to hire an attorney," he explained.

As for "DogPhude," Munoz wants to air it on the public-access channel in San Antonio, where "everything is more liberal."

"I realize now that Corpus Christi is super-duper conservative," Munoz said. "Many Corpus Christi people still have their head in the sand. They are living in the Dark Ages."

Congress mandated in 1984 that cable operators set aside a percentage of TV channels for public access to encourage independent programmers and bring diversity to the monopoly-driven cable industry. Cable operators cannot exert editorial control.

Museum head leaves in wake critics' protests

WASHINGTON (AP) — The director of the Smithsonian Institution's Air and Space Museum resigned Tuesday, a casualty of protests by World War II veterans over the way the museum had planned to depict the atomic bombing of Japan 50 years ago.

"I believe that nothing less than my stepping down from the directorship will satisfy the museum's critics and allow the museum to move forward with important new projects," said Martin Harwit, noting that the controversy over the Enola Gay exhibit had not ended with its cancellation.

The Enola Gay was the B-29 that dropped the atom bomb over Hiroshima on Aug. 6, 1945. Following a second atomic attack, over Nagasaki, Japan surrendered on Aug. 14, ending the war.

Harwit's critics said the exhibit, as planned, would have depicted the United States as the aggressor and Japan as the victim of World War II.

Following Harwit's resignation, one of his critics, Rep. Sam Johnson, R-Texas, who was named in January to the Smithsonian's board of regents, suggested he was still not satisfied.

"I feel confident that we will continue to make sure that all of the museums are on the right track," Johnson said. "This resignation is the first in a long line of management changes that I expect to see."

Another congressional critic, Rep. Peter Blute, R-Mass., said Harwit had backed an exhibit "dedicated to political correctness and revisionist history rather than truth and balance."

"Martin Harwit was primarily responsible for the broadly acknowledged bias of this exhibit and was a willing participant in the effort to prevent changes at all costs," Blute said.

In January, the American Legion demanded the cancellation, citing "highly debatable information which calls into question the morality and motives of President Truman's decision to end World War II quickly and decisively by using the atomic bomb."

Eighty-one members of the House of Representatives then called for Harwit's removal.

Singled out as an example of the exhibit's tone was one of the original wall legends, which read, "For most Americans, it was a war of vengeance. For most Japanese, it was a war to defend their unique culture against Western imperialism."

Bowing to the criticism, the regents scrubbed the entire exhibit and decided instead to display only the partial fuselage of the Enola Gay without commentary.

"There is no choice but to resign: The museum's welfare and future are too important," Harwit said in a letter Tuesday to Smithsonian Secretary I. Michael Heyman.

Acting Smithsonian provost Robert S. Hoffmann was named temporary director of what has become the world's most popular museum, with more than 8 million visitors a year.

Harwit had been chairman of the Department of Astronomy at Cornell University. Heyman said that when he was appointed it was anticipated he would remain as a senior Smithsonian scientist after serving as museum director. But he decided not to take that position, the Smithsonian said.

Prices retreat

NEW YORK — Energy futures fell Wednesday, spurred by a late-day sell-off as traders reassessed the impact of a U.S. trade embargo on Iran, a major oil producer.

"The market has been overdone and prices have just been much higher than they should be," said Dennis Miles, an energy trader at Cargill Investor Services in New York. "We finally ran into a big sell-off."

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in June settled at $19.89 per barrel, down 20 cents on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Natural gas prices were unchanged, with contracts for delivery in June settling at $1.666 per 1,000 cubic feet.

Miles said the market has set aside any fears that the U.S. embargo on Iran would hurt the supply and demand of crude oil.

"The embargo probably won't hurt this market at all," he said.

In London, North Sea Brent Blend crude oil for delivery in June settled at $18.57 per barrel, down 10 cents at the International Petroleum Exchange.

Liebrock honored

Midland oilman, Robert M. Liebrock has been named a distinguished graduate of the University of Texas. He will be honored Saturday, May 20 at a Distinguished Graduate cememony. Liebrock who was instrumental in the organization of several successful independent oil companies and the discovery of millions of barrels of oil reserves, was honored in 1994 with the Permian Basin Petroleum Association's Top Hand award. Liebrock graduated from the University of Texas in 1943 with a bachelor's degree in petroleum engineering.

Private Sallie Mae

WASHINGTON — The Student Loan Marketing Association, the government sponsored company that buys and services student loans, asked Congress Wednesday for permission to privatize.

"The time is right to develop an orderly, workable program to privatize Sallie Mae," said Lawrence A. Hough, president and chief executive officer, referring to the company's nickname.

Sallie Mae, which was created by Congress in 1972 to help broaden the private market for student loans by providing cash to lenders, is owned by stockholders.

It has been in a quandary since the Clinton administration proposed a switch from the current guaranteed student loan system to a direct student loan system.

Under the direct system, the federal government loans students money itself, eliminating the role now played by private banks, guaranty agencies and secondary markets.

Sallie Mae also also has sought to go private so it can move into areas of business not currently covered by its congressional charter.

"We remain committed to supporting the financing needs of students, parents, schools and lenders," said Hough. "We do not, however, need federal sponsorship to do this successfully."

Karen Barnes, a spokeswoman for the subcommittee on postsecondary education, said the panel's chairman, Rep. David M. McIntosh, R-Ind., joined Democrats on the panel in supporting the idea.

Dow climbs to new high

■ Broad-based market indexes rally to record highs, creating enthusiasm on Wall Street.

By Patricia Lamiell
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — Stocks shot to record highs on Wednesday for the second consecutive session, bolstered by investor enthusiasm about corporate earnings and fresh evidence that economic growth isn't producing inflation.

The Dow Jones industrial average gained more than 44.27 points at 4,373.15, well above its closing high record of 4,328.88 set on Tuesday.

Advancing issues outnumbered decliners by nearly 2 to 1 on the New York Stock Exchange. Big-Board volume was heavy at 392.3 million shares as of 4 p.m., up from 300.66 million on Tuesday.

Some broad-market indexes also rallied to record levels set on Tuesday. The NYSE's composite index rose 2.51 to 279.94, above Tuesday's record close of 277.43. The Standard & Poor's 500-stock index rose 5.62 to 520.48, topping its

Norwest to buy bank in Big Spring

Staff Reports

Norwest Corp. said Wednesday that it had signed a definite agreement to acquire First National Bank of Big Spring.

Terms of the agreement, which must be approved by federal regulatory agencies, was not disclosed. If approved the acquisition is expected to be complete before year end.

First National Bank of Big Spring is the largest bank in Howard County, with assets of $215 million and 43 employees.

Jimmy Taylor, president of First National, said the acquisition would allow the bank to offer even more products and services to Big Spring and surrounding counties.

"Norwest's policy is that we are a community bank and not just a bank in the community," said John Stumpf, regional president for Norwest Banks in Texas. "That means, Big Spring, decisions on lending and product pricing and com-

Fashion line promotes peace

■ Native Midlander, Dallas Cowboys team up to create clothing line, foundation to promote non-violence efforts.

Promoting peace through contemporary fashions is the goal for Masterpeace Ragz, according to the company's owner, former Midlander and businessman Blake Davenport.

Davenport

Davenport, 27, is partners in the new Dallas-based company with Dallas Cowboy players Michael Irvin and Alfredo Roberts and the line's designer Ricky Talkington.

"Ricky had the idea seven years ago. He had the artwork which he had never done anything with. So when I ran into him I thought it was a great opportunity," Davenport said.

Knowing Irvin and Roberts support a move toward peace, Davenport said he asked them to come on board.

The sportswear line was launched March 31 at the International Apparel Mart in Dallas.

The line's logo consists of paintbrush strokes in a contemporary peace sign. Davenport called it a 90s version of the 60s peace sign.

"Masterpeace Ragz represents a contemporary view of peace, peace within, peace at home, peace at work and peace with friends and family. A reemergence of the 1960s peace symbol is embodied in 1990s fashion," according to product information.

Locally, the fashion line is carried by Trendy T's at Midland Park Mall.

The product line consists of T-shirts, caps, hockey jerseys, posters, sweatshirts, dog tags and women's workout wear. Each item will show the Masterpeace Rags logo. Wholesale prices range from $3 -70. Trendy T's manager Polly Vargas said she currently carries T-shirts and hopes to have caps soon.

Talkington, the designer, is a Corsicana native who wanted to speak his opinions about unnecessary violence in the world today through his artwork which has become the logo for the collection.

Davenport said having just gotten married and considering starting a family he is concerned about the safety on the streets. He said he remembers when he grew up in Midland and saw little violence.

"I was allowed to play outside at night," he recalls.

Indicators continue to show economy's growth slowing

By James H. Rubin
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The government's main economic forecasting index took its biggest tumble in two years in March, prompting some talk of recession as financial markets rallied in hope inflation will remain at bay.

The Commerce Department said Wednesday that its Index of Leading Economic Indicators dipped 0.5 percent in March and recorded its first back-to-back declines in nearly three years. The gauge was flat in January and has not moved upward since the end of last year.

The Clinton administration and many private analysts said the decline and a new report that factory orders fell for the second month in a row are signs of a welcome cooling-off that will help sustain the economic recovery into a fifth year.

"This is all pretty gentle settling down. It's pointing away from a recession," said David Munro of High Frequency Economics, a forecasting firm in New York City. "It's something in between a boom and a bust, and that's a soft landing."

"What we can say from this number is it does show a moderation of growth," said Laura Tyson, director of President Clinton's National Economic Council. "Everything so far suggests we are on track for the annual forecast we gave."

But some analysts said the risk of a recession could increase, particularly since the full impact of interest rate increases by the Federal Reserve are yet to be felt.

"I'm not surprised you're seeing talk of a recession," said Daniel Seto of Nikko Securities Co. International in New York. "But we think it's premature. We're coming off extremely strong growth."

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

No one fund group has top performers in all fields

By Bill Doyle

Doyle

Q: To protect against fluctuating market prices, I know it is wise to diversify. I am interested in doing that by investing for long-term growth in shares of no-load mutual funds holding stocks of both U.S. and foreign companies — large companies, small companies, emerging growth companies, technology companies and companies in the health field.

I realize this will require investing in at least five mutual funds.

Is it best to do this by investing in funds in the same management group or by investing in funds in different groups that have good track records in each area?

A: You probably would do better picking funds from different management groups — if you are willing and able to put in the necessary time and effort to spot top performers in each investment area.

No one management group, which mutual fund people like to call a "family," has top performers in all fields.

Also, although past performance is no guarantee of future results, the results to date are about the only yardstick investors have to measure funds and choose those in which to invest.

Tracking mutual-fund performance can be time-consuming but is not all that difficult. A number of publications print those results annually and quarterly. The April 10 edition of Barron's magazine, which you can find in the reference section of most public libraries, does an excellent job on 6,448 funds.

Just don't fall into the trap of switching funds frequently, based on short-term recent performance. Last quarter's top gun often shoots blanks in the future. Stay with your stated long-term objective, and switch only when a fund you have chosen trails the pack badly.

You're to be commended for narrowing your choices to no-load funds. Pick only true no-load funds — those with no commission charge when you buy shares of reinvest dividends, no redemption fee or contingent deferred sales charge when you redeem and no 12b-1 fee constantly eating into the value of your shares.

Q: My broker claims no-load funds are a farce. He says that without front-load commissions, commissions on reinvested dividends, back-end charges and 12b-1 fees, there would be no profits in the mutual fund business.

How do you answer that?

A: Your broker is right, in that without those charges, there would be no profit for HIM or other share peddlers.

Those charges go to the sales people and others involved in the distribution of fund shares. There's no profit for brokers in true no-load funds.

But the people who run true no-load funds are well-compensated — not from those charges — but from the funds' management fees, also call "advisory" fees.

All mutual funds — load and no-load — have those fees. The management fee is the biggest part of the typical fund's annual operating expenses.

Q: How can I learn the total expenses of a mutual fund in which I am considering investing?

A: Those expenses are listed in the fund's annual and semiannual report and are listed in tabular form in the fund's prospectus.

As always, READ THE PROSPECTUS.

Q: The mutual fund I am being solicited to purchase does not have a commission charge at the time of investment. Instead, it has a contingent deferred sales charge of 6 percent if I redeem my shares within one year. The charge declines by one percentage point annually and disappears after six years.

Why is the salesman pushing this fund, if he might have to wait years to collect his commission?

A: He wouldn't have that long to wait. His commissions are "fronted" and paid to him in short order by the fund's "underwriter" — the outfit handling the distribution of the fund's shares.

SLOW: Recession fears begin to surface rates, from 3 percent to 6 percent, in a 12-month period that ended Feb. 1.

While business spending on plant and equipment has remained strong, analysts said higher interest rates are contributing to a marked slowing in consumer spending. That has been particularly true for home buying and for big-ticket items such as cars that normally are purchased on credit.

The Index of Leading Economic Indicators is designed to signal the direction of activity six to nine months down the road. Three straight moves by the index in the same direction are considered a good gauge of where the economy is headed.

The Commerce Department said components of the gauge aimed at measuring consumer demand made the biggest negative contributions as only three of 11 components had an upward impact.

In another report suggesting a softer economy, the Commerce Department said orders to U.S. factories fell 0.1 percent in March, the second straight decline. Analysts had expected orders to rebound in March from a drop of 0.3 percent in February.

Stock and bond markets welcomed the signs of slower growth. The Dow Jones industrial average soared to another record. The price of the Treasury Department's main 30-year bond rose $2.19 per $1,000 in face value, lowering its yield, which moves in the opposite direction, to 7.30 percent.

Norwest Corp. has 137 financial service stores throughout Texas, including 27 banking locations in 18 communities with total assets of $2.1 billion.

Norwest Corp. is a $61.8 billion company providing banking, insurance, mortgage, investments and other financial services from 2,878 stores in all 50 states and 10 Canadian provinces and internationally.

record of 514.86. The Nasdaq composite index advanced 8.47 to 850.26, passing its record of 843.98 set last Friday.

The American Stock Exchange's market value index climbed 2.68 to 483.37.

Stocks got a big boost from the bond market, where the 30-year Treasury was up 7-16 point late in the day and yielding 7.23 percent. The dollar was mixed.

Bonds rallied after the Commerce Department said its chief forecasting gauge of future economic activity fell 0.5 percent in March, reinforcing recent evidence that economic growth is slowing from its rapid pace of expansion last year.

"I think what it's saying is that inflation is not as much of a problem," John Church, chief investment officer, Glenmede Trust Co. in Philadephia, said of the report. "It gives more credibility to the soft-landing approach, which has been our fondest hope."

The leading indicators index, which is aimed at predicting activity six to nine months down the road, slipped 0.2 percent in February and was unchanged in January.

The bond market has been responding favorably to indications of a slowing economy, pushing stocks higher with it. Bond investors like a slower economy because it minimizes inflation, which diminishes the value of fixed-income securities.

Joseph Battipaglia, market strategist at the Sterling Advisers money-management firm in New York, said a number of other factors are pushing stocks higher.

He pointed to "day after day of good earnings reports across a wide swathe of American business. Interest rates are beneficially low and the fear of the Fed's raising them is dissipating. Investors are lifting their heads from the trenches to see the dollar improve a little bit, and...there's very little new supply" of stocks, he said.

PEACE: New clothing line targets world peace efforts

(From 1C)

"Now, when I talk to my parents they tell me there are gangs in Midland."

Living in Dallas, he said he sees a lot of violence.

"The nucleus of the family is where it all starts and it is disintegrating. People don't respect the freedom of others and they take away that freedom when they pull out a gun and shoot someone.

"It's time to say 'peace is cool' and there is a group of professional athletes who say 'peace is cool.' Michael Irvin thinks 'peace is cool' and I think kids are tired of violence," Davenport said.

"Just look north of Texas in Oklahoma City. We've got a war in our streets. The 60s movement was about a war overseas, now its at home," he added.

The Masterpeace Ragz Foundation has been organized to help charities who promote peace, Davenport said. One of the line's shirts will be selected and a portion of the profits will go toward the Oklahoma City bombing relief fund.

Davenport said Masterpeace Ragz has a goal behind it.

"Not a personal goal, a temporary goal, a team goal or even a national goal, but a goal for every living being to share and know in their hearts. If you strive for peace in every aspect of your life, you will achieve 'masterpeace' and I can't think of a better way of life," he said.

The Midland native and son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Davenport owns several companies and partnerships in addition to the clothing line. He is president of the investment company, Davenport Interests, Inc., managing partner of a real estate investment partnership, Permian Properties, an owner of D magazine, and a partner of Masterpeace Ragz.

Davenport said the clothing line has several verbal commitments from major retain chains, but nothing in concrete yet. The product line will be marketed toward young people from 12- to 25-years-old.

Michigan coach

SOUTHFIELD, Mich. — Michigan football coach Gary Moeller was so intoxicated after his arrest last weekend that jail officials refused to admit him, suggesting he be taken to a hospital to check for alcohol poisoning, police reports indicate. Moeller was arrested Friday night outside the Excalibur restaurant after punching an officer in the chest. Earlier, he had harassed a waitress, bothered other restaurant patrons and challenged the manager to a fight. At Providence Hospital, Moeller screamed profanities at patients and officers until nurses asked police to isolate him in a room, reports indicate./6D

Erickson plea

EVERETT, Wash. — A jury trial has been scheduled June 26 for Seattle Seahawks coach Dennis Erickson on a drunken-driving charge. A pretrial conference is scheduled for June 16.

Erickson's lawyer, Frank Willson of Everett, entered in innocent plea April 25 on his client's behalf in Everett District Court, without Erickson present. That was the same day Erickson told a news conference he had made "an awful mistake."

Erickson can change his plea any time rather than go to trial. Erickson was arrested April 15 near Marysville after other drivers reported his erratic driving to police. A breath test measured his blood-alcohol level at .23 percent. The legal limit in Washington is .10 percent. If convicted, Erickson faces one to two days' mandatory jail time, $350 to $1,000 in fines, and a driver's-license suspension of up to 120 days.

Rowdy fans show anger to players

By Rick Warner
AP Sports Writer

In Pittsburgh, fans littered the field with wooden pennant sticks and delayed the game for 17 minutes. In New York, three people wearing "Greed" T-shirts ran onto the field at Shea Stadium and threw dollar bills at the players.

■ Baseball Roundups/4D

And in Detroit, the Tigers almost had to forfeit their home opener after fans tossed whiskey bottles, cigarette lighters and a metal napkin dispenser at players, and at least 20 people were taken off the field by security guards.

Clearly, fans are in a foul mood following the longest strike in baseball history.

"They feel they've been screwed," said Thomas Tutko, a psychology professor at San Jose State. "This is their way of showing their anger at the players and the owners."

Many fans are protesting by not showing up. Through Tuesday night's games, the average attendance of 27,481 was down 13 percent from last year's average of 31,611. But the most powerful signs of discontent have been the rowdy outbursts in Pittsburgh, New York, Detroit and Milwaukee, where a fan dumped beer on Chicago White Sox outfielder Mike Devereaux.

The most vivid example of fan frustration occurred Tuesday in Detroit, where the scene got so scary that Cleveland general manager John Hart called the American League office during the game to demand protection for his players.

"I've never played in worse conditions," said Indians outfielder Kenny Lofton, who was nearly hit by a baseball thrown from the stands. "I've never seen anything like this. I wasn't focused on the game today. I was just worried about what was going on. When you're trying to injure somebody, that's ridiculous."

Although no players were injured by the debris, the AL and Tigers officials promised to tighten security for Wednesday night's game at Detroit. Major league security director Kevin Hallinan traveled there to coordinate the efforts.

"I think everyone was appalled by what happened there," AL spokeswoman Phyllis Merhige said, "and we want to make sure nothing like that happens again."

■ Utah's Karl Malone comes through with best playoff game so far to lead the Jazz over the Rockets in Game 3 of a Western Conference playoff series.

By Michael A. Lutz
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON — Karl Malone played the best when he was needed most, and the Utah Jazz are one game away from the second round.

He scored 32 points, 21 in the second half, and grabbed 19 rebounds Wednesday night, leading Utah past the Houston Rockets 95-82 for a 2-1 lead in their first-round NBA playoff series.

"I can't say enough about the heart of this team," Malone said.

The Jazz can wrap it up with a victory in Game 4 in The Summit on Friday night. Game 5 would be at Salt Lake City on Sunday.

John Stockton had 13 assists for Utah and Jeff Hornacek and David Benoit added 14 points each, with Benoit pulling down 10 rebounds.

Hakeem Olajuwon led the Rockets with 30 points and 10 rebounds and Kenny Smith, after a slow start, scored 20 points and was a key figure in a second-half charge.

"They played good defense," Houston's Clyde Drexler said. "They got all the right calls and did what they had to do."

The Jazz, among the best road teams in the NBA with a 27-14 record in the regular season, wouldn't be intimidated by Houston's crowd or its fourth-quarter push.

"Sometimes when you're on the road it takes all the distractions away," Malone said. "It makes you

Spurs glad to be back in River City after ruckus in Denver

By Kelley Shannon
Associated Press Writer

SAN ANTONIO — The San Antonio Spurs escaped from Denver content with their first-round playoff sweep and unscathed by the pelting they took from Nuggets fans.

Coach Bob Hill felt like he'd been at an unruly basketball game in Europe. Point guard Avery Johnson was glad he didn't get any more knots on his head. David Robinson simply chalked it up as a new experience.

"It was different," Robinson shrugged Wednesday when the Spurs arrived in San Antonio to await the start of the Western Conference semifinals.

The Spurs withstood a fourth-quarter Denver comeback and a second-quarter barrage by spectators to beat the Nuggets 99-95 Tuesday night and win their best-of-5 playoff series 3-0.

"What that game boiled down to was composure. The city of Denver, the players and the coach — everybody lost theirs

San Antonio must have come into Wednesday night's 9-6 Texas League win over Midland thinking things couldn't get any worse. The Missions had dropped three games in a row for the first time this year and piled up 15 errors in two nights, breaking the team mark for miscues two contests in a row.

But the Missions (16-10) kept their poise enough to hold off the Angels and gain a game on El Paso to move to 1 1/2 games up on the Diablos and stay in first place in the Western Division.

The Christensen Stadium contest was Midland's second loss in it's last seven home games and dropped it to 13-14.

"It looked like everybody was still aggressive and still loose tonight," Mission manager John Shelby said. "Sometimes when you make errors you get less aggressive and you don't want the ball to come to you. But you have to stay aggressive."

San Antonio made only two errors Wednesday, both by starter Jesus Martinez. But Martinez got help from three Mission relievers who held the Angels to one run in the last 3 2/3 innings for the win. Midland's relievers, in contrast, allowed five runs in 2 1/3 frames.

"We couldn't believe we made so many errors (Tuesday)," said Mission outfielder Tito Landrum, who had two bobbles in the earlier 10-8 Mission win. "We just said we can't kick ourselves in the butt and we have to play like we can."

Lady Rebel trio offers talent and leadership skills

By Stewart Doreen

Senior Leadership.

These days, this sometimes overused sports expression is given to many elder athletes no matter the sport. Too often, our upper classmen pass for a ton of touchdowns, hit .400 or score 50 points in a game and are then labeled as a "senior leader."

With this in mind, it is such a relief to find a set of players like Midland Lee's Christian Lance, Amee Pullen and April Rice, who not only bring the physical tools but also the other aspects that makes them a true group of senior leaders.

"The reason we win is the seniors give great leadership," Midland Lee softball coach J.C. Gotcher said. "Every once in a while you have to get on some of the others, but you never have to get on a senior. They are right on base all the time."

When watching the 26-0 Midland Lee team in a practice or game, the first thing you notice about the three players is their attitudes. They work hard to motivate their teammates and do so in a variety of ways.

Rice and Lance do their thing as two-thirds of the Lee outfield, but even being so far away from the action they make their presence felt. Rice considers herself loud and outspoken on and off the field while Lance, who is sometimes referred to as "chicken," considers her alter ego off the field nothing like the aggressive personality you see on the field. Gotcher thinks that the duo's ruthless temperaments give Lee an advantage.

"April and Christian are cold-blooded," Gotcher said. "They play very well under pressure and will come through for you."

Joe D. Williams/Reporter-Telegram

"It's important to be vocal," said Pullen. "Whenever we all get quiet and don't say a word, that's when we are shaking in our boots. As long as we have the voice to yell at each other and keep each other up, we're loose enough to play."

Gotcher also thinks that undersized Pullen leads by example.

"She's the glue that sticks us together," Gotcher said. "If she thinks another player is goofing off she'll tell them. They (the team) know for someone that little to catch and work so hard, her heart is in it."

Of course, all three girls do know how to put the bat on the ball. Lance hit .335 for the season and tied for second on the team with 32 RBIs. Rice came on at the end of the season to deliver some big hits for the Lady Rebels. Rice batted .338 and drove in 28 RBIs. Pullen, the teams' leadoff hitter did her job, batting .333 and drawing 13 walks. She also drove in 25 RBIs.

LEE: Seniors hope to build softball tradition

(From 1D)

Another eye-popping feature of this group of seniors is what they have done off the field. It should be noted that every senior on the Lee softball team was named as Texas Scholars, but between these three, the list of accomplishments makes you wonder when they would have time for softball.

Lance, who wants to major in pre-med in college, is a National Merit Commended Student, honor graduate (4.5 grade point average or above), Presidential Academic award winner (given to seniors with at least a 4.7 GPA and 1280 SAT or 28 ACT) and UIL Award winner (ranks in top 10 percent of her class and participated in a UIL activity).

Rice, who was also a varsity cheerleader, is an honor graduate, a senior award winner (two semesters with 4.5 GPA), Texas scholar and ranks in the top 15 percent of her class.

Pullen, who also served as a trainer for the Midland Lee football team, was named an All-American Scholar and United States Student Council award winner.

Lance feels that participating in softball benefits an athlete's performance in the classroom and vice versa.

"In sports you have to be disciplined," Lance said. "You might have talent, but you still have to work hard to develop it."

Now, this threesome and Lee's other seniors, Shannon Middleton, Barbara Thompson, Nicki Phillips and Emily Hayes, feel a little more motivated than your usual group of graduating athletes. Midland Lee is in their first season of UIL competition and making the most of the opportunity. After an undefeated regular season, the Lady Rebels defeated Richland High school, a top 10 program from the Metroplex, and are looking to keep rolling this weekend in the regional semifinal when they face El Paso Hanks, 5 p.m. Friday in Fort Stockton.

"This is our one and only chance for softball at Lee," said Rice. "I just can't see us losing. We just want it so bad. Every game is a state game."

The thought of starting something at Lee appeals to this group. To start a new tradition in a school heavy in athletic accomplishments is impressive.

"We want to set a good precedent for the future softball teams at Lee," Lance said. "They'll have pretty big expectations."

"Lee's so full of tradition, any way, it is neat to be the ones to start one," said Pullen.

Global brotherhood theme for Atlanta Olympics

ATLANTA (AP) — Global brotherhood will be the theme at the opening ceremonies of the 1996 Atlanta Olympics.

Billy Payne, president of the Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games, said Wednesday the ceremonies will be a departure from past Olympics, which have highlighted the culture of the host nation. Providing a small glimpse into the top-secret planning for the ceremonies, Payne told a gathering of CNN World Report contributors he wants to emphasize the broad ideals of the Olympic movement.

"I think it is a bold step, it is a much needed step," Payne said. "On too many occasions, despite the wonderful, and in many cases magnificent theatrical displays of opening ceremonies, they have done little, if anything, to promote the purposes of the Olympic movement.

"They have been attempts to show the world all that is great and wonderful about the country or the city that is hosting the Games. And while that's certainly appropriate and while we ourselves will brag ... the Olympic movement cannot be so narrowly defined."

Payne said the Atlanta Olympics, the centennial of the modern Games, will try to communicate "the power and the potential" of the Olympics.

"We'll do that by using the metaphor of the assembled athletes of the world on the field ... with all their innocence and all their youth, celebrating themselves on the occasion of these Games in a spirit of friendliness, friendship and cooperation," Payne said.

ors for his play on the conference's second place team.

The women's basketball team, who also finished second in conference play, ended its inaugural year under head caoch Ron Jones by giving its top award to its most dominant player. Joanna Kailahi, an All-WJCAC, All-Region V player and the team's lone sophomore, was named the most outstanding player. Roslynn Dunn took home Outstanding Freshman honors.

Each team also gave Fighting Chap honors to the outstanding player on and off the playing surface. The Fighting Chap award was given to freshman Derrick Pursley in golf, sopomore Ben Radford in men's basketball and freshman Shannon Jordan in women's basketball. Jordan also was given a special award for her outstanding work in all areas of life at Midland College.

The evening was also a platform for the future of Midland College athletics. Athletic Director Joe Williams told the packed Road Runner room that he wants Midland College to be a representation of the Tall City whether in the class room or in the athletic arena.

"Midland College is here for Midland, Texas and to represent Midland, Texas," Williams said. "We want to send the message that we're the only college in this town and although we will have local athletes on our teams, we are still supported by the people of this community. We are looking for their standards to be up held."

ANGELS: San Antonio wins for first time in four games, increases lead after Landrum and centerfielder Dwight Maness each had two errors Tuesday night. But the San Antonio manager said his playing Wilfredo Romero in center was not due to Tuesday's play.

"There's no need to go all off the wall and make major changes," Shelby said. "I rotate my outfield. I have four outfielders and one guy is a swing guy. Everybody makes errors and I'm not going to take anybody out because they make errors."

After a scoreless first three innings, the Missions scored three runs in the seventh inning, two on a James Martin home run, to take a 6-5 lead. Both teams got satisfactory pitching from their starters. But Midland relievers support Angel starter Ryan Hancock and the right-hander failed to get a win for the first time in three starts.

The Angels got only one hit in the first four innings off Martinez, a 6-foot-2, 145-pound left-hander. But in the fifth Midland took a 3-1 lead after Martinez committed two throwing errors and Orlando's Munoz's triple drove in two runs.

The Missions took the lead off Angel Mike Butler, the game's loser, on Martin's home run. They then scored insurance runs in the eighth and ninth innings.

"When we make mistakes we beat ourselves," Shelby said. "There haven't been too many times where we have been beat in the field."

After Butler relieved Hancock in the seventh, Ron Watson came in to give up a run in the eighth on a walk and three wild pitches. Anthony Chavez allowed two runs in the ninth on three hits and one error.

"We're going to have winning streaks and we're going to have losing streaks," Landrum said. "Teams have to go through losing streaks to see what they're made of."

For now the Missions losing streak and error streak is over.

ANGEL DUST: Midland has picked up infielder Rene Gonzalez from extended spring training. He replaces Alfredo Diaz, sent to Single A Lake Elsinore ... The Angels' Jovino Carvajal led the Texas League before Wednesday's game with 36 hits and 12 stolen bases. He is the only Midland player to start every game.

Astros blast Cubs for third-straight

The Associated Press

■ NL Roundup

CHICAGO — Darryl Kile allowed three hits in six shutout innings and doubled in two runs as the Houston Astros routed the Chicago Cubs 11-2 Wednesday for their third consecutive win.

Kile (1-1) struck out four and walked none. Dean Hartgraves, making his major league debut, walked three and allowed a run and one hit in one-plus inning.

Jim Dougherty relieved with the bases loaded in the eighth and completed the six-hitter. He gave up a run-scoring, double-play grounder to Kevin Roberson in the eighth and an RBI single to Jose Hernandez in the ninth.

Steve Trachsel (0-1) allowed four runs and six hits in 4 2-3 innings as the Cubs lost their third straight.

Houston, which had 14 hits, took a 1-0 lead in the second on Luis Gonzalez's second homer of the season.

Cardinals 8, Pirates 6

ST. LOUIS — Pitcher Allen Watson drove in a pair of runs and got his first win of the season as St. Louis took an early seven-run lead and beat Pittsburgh.

Watson (1-0), making his second start this year, allowed four runs and nine hits in 5 1-3 innings. Tom Henke pitched the ninth for his second save.

Pirates rookie Esteban Loaiza (1-1) allowed eight runs and 11 hits in 3 1-3 innings. His ERA rose to 8.64.

St. Louis, which won two of three from Pittsburgh, said it sold 20,472 tickets but there were 4,876 no-shows at Busch Stadium.

Expos 3, Mets 1

MONTREAL — Pedro Martinez matched his career-high with 10 strikeouts and continued his dominance over New York as Montreal beat the Mets.

Martinez (2-0) improved to 5-0 lifetime against the Mets, allowing four hits over seven innings before leaving for a pinch hitter.

He surrendered Jeff Kent's first home run in the second inning — that cut Montreal's lead to 2-1 — and little else. He retired nine straight through the middle innings and fanned four in a row, including the side in the seventh.

Martinez struck out 10 batters twice last season: against San Francisco and Coloardo.

Mel Rojas pitched the ninth for his fourth save of the season, one less than the Expos' victory total.

Rockies 12, Padres 7

DENVER — Joe Girardi had a career-high six RBIs to tie a club record as Colorado rallied to beat San Diego.

With 37,193 fans looking on and regular umpires back on the job, the Rockies recorded their second series sweep of the season and ran their record to an unprecedented 7-1 in their third year of existence.

Colorado rallied from a 5-0 deficit with a five-run fourth inning off Joey Hamilton (0-1), then went ahead in the fifth on Girardi's first homer of the season, a three-run shot which chased Hamilton.

Houston's Orlando Miller safely reaches second for a double while Chicago second baseman Rey Sanchez drops the throw from center field.

While Hamilton was breezing through his first three innings, allowing just one bloop hit, the Padres built a lead against Kevin Ritz and reliever A.J. Sager.

In the first, Ken Caminiti had the first of his three RBIs with a groundout, and Roberto Petagine followed with an RBI single. Caminiti drove in another run in the third with a single.

In the fourth, Bip Roberts singled, took second on a groundout and scored on Tony Gwynn's two-out single. Caminiti then doubled for a 5-0 lead.

Reds 7, Phillies 2

CINCINNATI — Ron Gant singled with the bases loaded and homered as the Reds won their first game of the season. They had lost their first six games to equal the worst start this century by a Cincinnati team. The 1950 club also opened 0-6.

The Reds snapped a 1-1 tie in the seventh against former Norm Charlton (0-2). Deion Sanders bunted for a single with two strikes and two out, and Charlton walked Bret Boone and Barry Larkin. Gant singled off Ricky Bottalico for a 3-1 lead.

Gant homered in the fourth to tie it 1-1 and the Reds blew it open with a four-run eighth.

Reliever Xavier Hernandez (1-0) escaped a threat in the seventh to get the win.

Braves 6, Marlins 4

MIAMI — Fred McGriff drove in two runs and Tom Glavine gave up two runs in the first but settled down and pitched 5 2-3 innings for the victory.

Glavine (1-0) allowed six hits and three walks. Rookie Brad Clontz pitched 1 1-3 innings for his third save.

Though out-hit 12-8, Atlanta improved to 6-1. The Marlins have lost six of seven, the worst start in their three-year history.

Regular umpires make return, visit Coors Field

DENVER (AP) — Regular umpires made their return to baseball — and their first visit to new Coors Field — a successful one on Wednesday.

"The reaction from the players was very gratifying," home plate umpire Bruce Froemming said after the Colorado Rockies beat the San Diego Padres 12-7. "The first time around (the batting order), when everybody came up, they said, 'Nice seeing you guys back.'"

Then Froemming added with a laugh, "A couple of days from now they may not be thinking that."

The game had no disputed calls. Noting the absence of booing directed at the umps, Froemming said, "There's plenty of time for that."

Managers and players were unanimous in appreciating the return of the umpires after nearly a nine-month absence.

"I feel baseball is all the way back," Padres manager Bruce Bochy said. "We have the best umpires in the world back. You could see the difference. It adds credibility to the game."

Padres pitcher Andy Benes said the umps "are right 98 percent of the time, and you could see that in slow motion today."

Right fielder Tony Gwynn said the major problem with replacement umpires was inconsistency in calling balls and strikes.

"It was difficult to assume anything," Gwynn said. "There were borderline pitches you didn't know what would be the call. The regular umpires know the zone, and you're comfortable with it."

Rockies catcher Joe Girardi hailed Froemming for "doing a tremendous job after not working for nine months. These umps know what the strike zone is. You'll see more consistency now. You'll see a lot less arguing and the game should speed up."

"It was nice being on the field doing the job you're trained to do," Froemming said. "I'm happy with the deal we got."

Some bitterness remains, however, on the part of the umpires who were locked out by owners even after the players' strike ended.

"I'm not sugar-coating it," Froemming said. "It (replacement umpiring) was a pathetic display of officiating throughout the country. It made the people we work for appreciate us a little more.

"Bad umpiring by scabs was a trump card for our union. If the replacements had been decent, the lockout would have stretched out longer. You can't do somebody else's job."

Rangers fall 5-1 as Seattle ties second-best start in club history

The Associated Press

■ AL Roundup

ARLINGTON— Chris Bosio scattered four hits and Edgar Martinez delivered a two-run double Wednesday night as the Seattle Mariners tied their fastest start in history with a 5-1 victory over the Texas Rangers.

Seattle is 6-1, matching the franchise's best record after seven games by the 1984 and 1985 teams. The Mariners swept the three-game series against Texas, now 1-12 in its last 13 games against Seattle.

A crowd of 17,375 fans, smallest in the two-year history of The Ballpark at Arlington, watched the game.

Bosio (2-0) lasted 5 1-3 innings, giving up only four hits and walking two. The Rangers only run off Bosio came on a 408-foot homer by rookie Benji Gil in the third inning.

Reliever Jeff Nelson got two outs in the sixth, Bill Risley pitched 1 2-3 innings and Bobby Ayala got the final four outs.

Brewers 7, Orioles 4

BALTIMORE — Milwaukee scored six runs in the ninth inning off Doug Jones and defeated Baltimore before 33,837, the second-smallest crowd in the four-year history of Camden Yards.

The Orioles sold out 46 of their previous 47 home games, including their home opener Monday. The smallest previous crowd at the stadium was 22,564 at an April 1993 makeup game.

Down 4-1, the Brewers began the decisive rally with singles by Greg Vaughn and B.J. Surhoff. After a groundout, Turner Ward singled in a run and Jose Valentin walked, loading the bases.

Joe Oliver then hit a two-run single to make it 4-4, and Pat Listach followed with a run-scoring grounder that was fumbled by second baseman Bret Barberie.

That chased Jones (0-1). Brad Pennington then issued a walk to load the bases, and Mike Oquist forced in a run by walking Kevin Seitzer. Vaughn followed with a sacrifice fly to make it 7-4.

Indians 14, Tigers 7

DETROIT — The crowd at Tiger Stadium calmed down but Cleveland's bats didn't.

Paul Sorrento had a three-run homer and a career-best six RBIs as the Indians routed Detroit for the second straight day, 14-7.

In winning four of six games, the Indians have scored 57 runs, including an 11-1 victory over Detroit on Tuesday. The Tigers have been outscored 53-26 in their seven games.

The Tigers' home opener was spoiled Tuesday by fans who threw objects at players and also ran onto the field. With beefed up security and a smaller crowd, there were no incidents Wednesday night.

Yankees 4, Red Sox 3, 13 innings

NEW YORK — Bernie Williams' sacrifice fly with the bases loaded and no outs in the 13th inning gave New York a victory over Boston.

Williams' fly ball to left field was dropped by Mike Greenwell, but it was deep enough to have scored pinch-runner Gerald Williams anyway.

The Yankees had 16 hits and had the bases loaded twice in extra innings before capitalizing.

Randy Velarde started the 13th with a double, Don Mattingly was walked intentionally and Mike Stanley walked on four pitches.

Mike Hartley, the sixth Boston pitcher, then relieved Jeff Pierce (0-1), and Williams hit his game-winning fly ball.

Blue Jays 8, White Sox 7, 10 innings

TORONTO — Tomas Perez singled home the winning run in his first major league at bat as Toronto defeated Chicago.

Toronto swept the two-game series, sending the White Sox to their sixth loss in seven games.

Perez lined a 2-2 pitch from Roberto Hernandez (0-1) into left field with two outs in the 10th, scoring Ed Sprague from second base. Sprague led off with a single and moved to second on Lance Parrish's sacrifice. Rookie Paul Menhart (1-1) pitched a scoreless 10th for his first major-league victory.

Twins 10, Royals 9

MINNEAPOLIS — Playing before another Metrodome crowd of fewer than 10,000, Alex Cole hit an RBI double in the eighth inning as Minnesota ended a four-game losing streak with a win over Kansas City.

Chuck Knoblauch led off the eighth with a triple off Rusty Meacham (0-1) and scored when Cole hit the next pitch into the right-field corner.

Dave Stevens (2-0) pitched 1 1-3 scoreless innings of relief for the Twins, who rallied from a 7-1 deficit. Rick Aguilera pitched the ninth for his third save.

Rookie Marty Cordova, who came into the game hitting .150, was 3-for-4 with his first homer and double, driving in three runs for the Twins.

FANS: Situation at some ballparks becomes volatile

(From 1D)

Tutko, who specializes in sports psychology, said it's a volatile situation.

"If you're not careful, these kinds of things can escalate and get out of hand very quickly," he said. "I think we're just a hair-and-a-half away from a real disaster."

Unruly fans are nothing new in baseball.

In 1934, St. Louis outfielder Ducky Medwick was forced to leave the seventh game of the World Series after Detroit fans, angry over his hard slide into Tigers third baseman Marv Owen, pelted him with garbage. In 1974, Cleveland forfeited a game to Texas when fans drinking 10-cent beers at Municipal Stadium got out of control. And in 1979, White Sox fans rioted at old Comiskey Park during an anti-disco demonstration, causing so much damage that the second game of a doubleheader couldn't be played.

But the recent rebellions are unusual because they appear to have a common cause — anger over the 232-day strike that wiped out last year's World Series and delayed the start of the 1995 season.

"When they canceled the World Series, it became absolutely clear to fans that they don't matter to the players or the owners," Tutko said. "They're just fed up with the narcissism and greed on both sides."

St. Louis shortstop Ozzie Smith said he understands why fans are upset, but isn't concerned about his safety.

"I expected the fans to be unhappy," Smith said before Wednesday's home game against Pittsburgh. "We have to try to win them back by playing at our best. ... I think things will settle down once the season gets in full swing."

Players who were outspoken during the strike have been a special target of the boo-birds. Union activists Tom Glavine of Atlanta, Cecil Fielder of Detroit and Jay Bell of Pittsburgh have received rude receptions in their home ballparks.

"If I've offended people, I'm sorry," Glavine said, "but my job is to represent my players."

Magic 'kids' get by determined Celtics

■ Shaquille O'Neal leads Orlando with 20 points and a season-high 21 rebounds as the Magic beat Boston 82-77 to claim a 2-1 series lead.

The Associated Press

■ Eastern Conference

BOSTON — The Orlando Magic overcame the determined Boston Celtics, a raucous crowd and their reputation for losing big games.

The young Magic came through down the stretch Wednesday night, scoring the last eight points to beat Boston 82-77. Leading 2-1, they can close out the best-of-5 series and slam the doors on the old Boston Garden with a Game 4 victory Friday night.

Shaquille O'Neal had 20 points and a season-high 21 rebounds in front of a full house in the building that the Celtics will leave for the new FleetCenter next season.

Orlando was swept in the first round of the playoffs last season. It had the best record in the Eastern Conference this season, but split the first two games at home with Boston.

On Wednesday it trailed 77-74 with less than two minutes remaining. Then it rallied to break a seven-game road losing streak and win with its lowest point total of the season.

Nick Anderson, who led the Magic with 24 points, tied the game 77-77 with a 3-pointer with 1:10 left. It was the Magic's first basket since a dunk by O'Neal with 7:13 to go.

Anfernee Hardaway, who had 16 points, then soared to swat away a layup attempt by Dominique Wilkins and the Magic retrieved the ball. Dennis Scott missed from the left corner on the next possession, but O'Neal rammed home the rebound for a 79-77 lead with 28 seconds remaining.

Pervis Ellison missed a short baseline jumper and O'Neal pulled down his last rebound of the game.

Anderson made a free throw with 15 seconds to play. In their final chance to come back, the Celtics missed three consecutive shots — a 3-pointer by Dee Brown, a layup by Wilkins after an offensive rebound and a desperation 3-point heave by Brown with six seconds remaining.

Anderson finished the scoring with two foul shots with 1.4 seconds to go.

Boston was led by Wilkins and Brown with 16 points each and Dino Radja had 15.

The Celtics had rebounded from the worst loss in their 49-year history, 124-77 in Game 1, to win 99-92 Sunday in Orlando, where the Magic had lost two games all season.

They headed back home knowing an energized crowd would be waiting to cheer them on and try to unnerve Orlando.

Whenever O'Neal went to the foul line, fans behind the basket would twirl white towels to distract him. A 58 percent foul shooter in the regular season, he was 6-for-14 Wednesday. But his brilliance off the boards made up for that.

Wilkins' two free throws with 4:31 left had given Boston a 74-73 lead, its first since 24-23 one minute into the second quarter.

Led by an unusually aggressive Wilkins, the Celtics led 24-19 after the first period despite hitting just 28 percent of their shots. Boston continually went inside and O'Neal picked up his third foul with 31 seconds left in the period.

He sat out the rest of the first half and the Magic did just fine without him. They hit their first five shots of the second quarter, all on layups or from just in front of the foul line.

They built their biggest lead of the half, 42-33 with 3:31 left. At that point, Orlando was 11-for-15 from the field in the second quarter, while Boston was 3-for-16.

Orlando led 45-41 at halftime and opened the second half with a 14-8 run, with O'Neal scoring only two points. Then the Celtics charged back with an 11-2 spurt that cut the lead to 61-60.

Daly's game comes together

■ BellSouth Classic

MARIETTA, Ga. (AP) — John Daly feels his game is finally coming together.

"I don't know if it's a win or not, but it's not far from being there," Daly said before beginning defense Thursday of the BellSouth Classic title he won a year ago.

He hasn't won since that victory, which he clinched with a 5-foot birdie putt on the 72nd hole.

"It gives me a good feeling to think about it," he said. "It was one of the biggest moments of my life — not quite what the PGA was, but very big, very important."

Daly's only other career victories were at the 1991 PGA and the 1992 BC Open.

Just as last year, Daly has done little this year to indicate a successful four-day journey over the hills and tight fairways of the 7,018-yard Atlanta Country Club course in suburban Marietta.

His best finish so far this season has been a tie for 13th last month in the MCI Classic. He has made six cuts in succession, but is far down the earnings list at 99th with $62,287.

His one-shot victory in Atlanta last year came just after Brian Henninger had moved into a tie for the lead with an eagle-3 on the final hole. Daly followed with his winning birdie, dropping Henninger into a tie for second with Nolan Henke.

Both Henninger and Henke are back this week along with four players among the top 10 money winners this year, including No. 2 Davis Love III at $772,750.

Love could move to the top of the list if he win the first prize of $234,000 in the $1.3 million event. The money leader, Peter Jacobsen ($873,317) isn't in the field.

Former Georgia Tech star David Duval, Jim Gallagher and Corey Pavin, ranking 8th through 10th on the money list, will be here.

The 29-year-old Daly, a recovering alcoholic who says the Atlanta victory was his first since sobriety, leads the PGA Tour in driving distance at 284 yards, one yard better than Love.

"Everyone said there was no way I could win Atlanta, but I did," Daly said. "It was a week when everything just worked."

University of Tennessee athletes, students questioned about fraudulently-billed long distance telephone calls

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — University of Tennessee athletes and other students are being questioned about thousands of dollars in fraudulently billed long-distance phone calls.

"So far we have had interviews with about 60 students and we expect that more than twice that many will be questioned during the next several weeks," Phil Scheurer, vice chancellor for student affairs, said Wednesday.

The university is investigating 17,000 long-distance calls made from campus dormitories over the past year that were charged to an internal access code assigned to an unidentified employee.

Some $25,000 in calls were charged and routinely paid by the university. The security breach was discovered about five weeks ago when phone system officials couldn't determine which department was responsible for the charges.

Scheurer refused to say how many athletes are involved, saying he was taking the approach that "a student is a student and athletes will not be accorded any special considerations."

But The Knoxville News-Sentinel reported Wednesday as many as 100 athletes are under questioned, including those on the football, men's basketball and baseball teams.

The Southeastern Conference and the NCAA have been notified, athletic director Doug Dickey said.

However, Dickey said in an interview that he doesn't believe NCAA rules have been violated. "It is being treated as a student disciplinary matter. We have no NCAA charges that we are in effect self-reporting out of it," he said of UT's internal probe.

The NCAA has a specific rule that says: "It is not permissible to allow a student-athlete to use a telephone or credit card for personal reasons without charge or at a reduced cost."

But Dickey said, 'We have investigated it enough that we do not believe that's the issue."

"Nobody gave free access to a telephone to be used in any manner," he said. "We have no current athlete who we believe was given that number by any employee."

Scheurer said it hasn't been determined if students were given the access code or stole it. "That is part of the investigation," he said.

ROCKETS: Utah survives dreary first quarter

concentrate on basketball."

After a dreary first half in which the Jazz emerged with a 46-41 lead, Malone enlivened things in the third quarter.

Utah made the first run, going up 69-54 with 3:28 to go in the period, its biggest lead to that point. Malone had 11 points in the quarter.

Then it was the Rockets' turn. They used a 10-1 spurt, led by Smith, and trailed 70-65 going into the final quarter. But they could never take the lead again.

The Rockets pulled to 79-74 with 7:56 to play, but that was the end of its challenge. Houston scored only two free throws over the final 5:52 while the Jazz made 14.

The Rockets shot 60 percent from the field in their Game 2 blowout victory but they started Game 3 with turnovers on their first two possessions, missed four of their first five free throws and Smith, the hero of Game 2 with 32 points, drew two quick fouls.

Houston hit 41 percent from the field for the game and the Jazz made 48 percent.

After sinking 19 3-point baskets in Game 2, the Rockets managed 7 of 17 while the Jazz hit 5 of 8 from 3-point range led by Benoit, who was 3 of 4. The Jazz were limited to 58 percent shooting from the line.

The Rockets played without guard Vernon Maxwell who was given an indefinite leave of absence Tuesday after injuring his hamstring in Utah.

SPURS: Lakers-Sonics winner next and we kept ours," said Hill, whose team holds the NBA's best regular-season record.

San Antonio next will play the winner of the series between Seattle and the Los Angeles Lakers. The Lakers lead 2-1.

After Denver coach Bernie Bickerstaff and Nuggets Brian Williams and Dale Ellis drew technical fouls Tuesday night, the Spurs' Sean Elliott made four consecutive free throws, the last one as cups, coins and other objects were thrown onto the court.

Bickerstaff, who had been ejected from the game, came back to urge fans via the loudspeaker not to throw anything.

Hill was beaned in the head with a coin but wasn't injured.

"It was like being in Italy. That's how Italians react," said Hill, who coached an Italian team during the 1988-89 season. "I didn't know the Italian population was that big in Denver."

"I saw a guy in Italy get hit in the temple with a coin, and it knocked him out. It's really not something the league should ever allow. That franchise should be fined for that, in my opinion."

Johnson, who scored 24 points, was laughing Wednesday while recounting the incident, but said he's glad he didn't get hit.

"I've got too many knots on my head already, boy. I was just ducking," said Johnson in his distinct Louisiana drawl.

Elliott said he just concentrated on the free throws.

"I've been through far worse distractions. When you've got guys at practice putting pressure on you and joking with you, there's more pressure on shooting those free throws," he said.

Despite three straight victories over Denver, the Spurs said there won't be much celebrating of the series sweep.

"The second round is a bigger concern to us than the first round," said forward Terry Cummings. "We haven't gotten beyond that in the last six years that I've been here — beyond the second round. It may be a little call for rejoicing when we get to that point."

The Spurs insist they don't care who they face in the next round.

"We can win either series, I'm confident," Hill said.

A couple of players said they have no preference, but hinted that Los Angeles would be their choice, for timing if nothing else.

"We want to play on Saturday," said Johnson.

That would mean playing the Lakers, because a Seattle victory in that series couldn't happen until the weekend.

Fear of alcohol poisoning sent Michigan's Moeller to hospital after arrest, report says

SOUTHFIELD, Mich. (AP) — Michigan football coach Gary Moeller was so intoxicated after his arrest last weekend that jail officials refused to admit him, suggesting he be taken to a hospital to check for alcohol poisoning, police reports indicate.

Moeller was arrested Friday night outside the Excalibur restaurant after punching an officer in the chest. Earlier, he had harassed a waitress, bothered other restaurant patrons and challenged the manager to a fight.

At Providence Hospital, Moeller screamed profanities at patients and officers until nurses asked police to isolate him in a room, reports indicate.

Officers said Moeller told them at the hospital: "Take these handcuffs off," then threatened them.

The university on Tuesday named athletic department aide Keith Molin to head its internal investigation of Moeller's conduct. Moeller has been suspended with pay from his $130,000-a-year job while defensive coordinator Lloyd Carr takes over his duties.

Athletic director Joe Roberson said he and university president James Duderstadt will make a final decision after reading the report.

Moeller, 54, has been unavailable for comment. But his lawyer, David DuMouchel, says he regrets the incident.

"His behavior was completely out of character and is a source of personal embarrassment to him," DuMouchel said. "The entire incident is regrettable."

He said specific allegations would be addressed at Moeller's pretrial hearing May 12. Moeller has been charged with misdemeanor disorderly conduct and assault and battery.

His wife Ann told police she argued with Moeller when he would not stop drinking, and she went to sit in their car. While she was there, Moeller sat inside and drank coffee and Grand Marnier until the bar cut him off.

His waitress told police: "As I walked past his table during the evening, he was making comments to me, such as: 'Hey, did you know you're beautiful? ... He was singing very loud and obnoxious to the customers around him."

Moeller smashed two glasses, cutting himself, the reports said. The waitress removed the salt and pepper shakers and coffee cups from his table. A band cut its set short because of Moeller.

"He tried to dance, came up to people he was not with and tried to dance with them but kept almost falling down," a singer with the band told police.

Moeller reportedly used profane language.

"Some of the women commented on how upset they were to hear the language being used," the report said.

Moeller latched onto the sports jacket of one patron upset over his behavior. The manager managed to break it up before it escalated.

The manager told Moeller he would not be served any more drinks and tried to get him to sign his check and leave. Moeller responded by throwing a lamp shade at the manager's head and challenging him to a fight.

Escorted outside, Moeller began jabbing his finger in the chest of the manager as police arrived. Holding Moeller up, police tried several times to get him to quietly go home in a cab, but Moeller refused and headed for his car.

When officer Vincent Maviglia stopped him, Moeller punched the officer in the chest.

"The officers gave the man countless opportunities to save himself the embarrassment of going to jail," a restaurant employee told police. "But he would not give up."

Moeller continued to resist and swear at police and had to be pulled into a patrol car, the reports said. After Oakland County Jail officers decided he was too drunk to be admitted, police took him to Providence Hospital. Moeller spent Friday night in jail and was released the next day on a $200 bond.

By Ed Schuyler Jr.
AP Racing Writer

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Trainer Nick Zito will run a Kentucky Derby winner for sure Saturday at Churchill Downs. He'd like to run two.

Go for Gin, who won the race last year, will run in the Churchill Downs Handicap about three hours before Suave Prospect tries to give Zito his third Derby victory in five years, something only Ben Jones accomplished when he trained for Calumet Farm.

"He never runs a bad race, and we might be able to make history," Zito said of Suave Prospect, runner-up in each of his last three races. "And we've got a great jockey in Julie Krone."

Suave Prospect certainly would be a history-maker because Krone would be the first woman jockey to win the Derby. She became only the fourth woman to ride in the race when she finished 12th on Ecstatic Ride in 1992.

The colt, however, is considered one of the outsiders in a field of 19 3-year-olds. The favorite will be the D. Wayne Lukas-trained entry of the filly Serena's Song and Timber Country, champion 2-year-old of 1994. Two other contenders figure to be Canadian-bred Talkin Man, the Wood Memorial winner, and Afternoon Deelites, unbeaten in five starts before being nipped at the wire in the Santa Anita Derby.

Suave Prospect should go off at about 10-1.

Strike the Gold was the 9-2 third choice when he won the Derby for Zito in 1991, but he went into the race after a victory in the Blue Grass. Go for Gin was 9-1 when he gave the trainer his Derby victory last year. Zito's only other Derby starter, Thirty Six Red, finished ninth in 1990.

"He's hanging in there, and miracles do happen," Zito said of Suave Prospect. "He's a consistent horse. He never runs a bad race, and I think he's better now than he was in Florda.

"I'm getting a very good feeling," added Zito, a 47-year-old New Yorker who sometimes sounds like a Chamber of Commerce spokesman for Louisville. "I just have a good time over here. It's like a love affair, but most love affairs don't last. This has been going on for five years."

"I guess Nick knows how to get a horse ready for the Derby," Krone said earlier in the week. "He gives me real confidence."

"I was happy with his last race," Zito said of Suave Prospect's second-place finish in the Blue Grass. "It wasn't a true race."

Suave Prospect finished 2 1/2 lengths behind Derby contender Wild Syn, who led all the way and set leisurely fractions of 49 seconds for the half, 1:13 1-5 for three-quarters and 1:37 2-5 for the mile in winning in 1:49 1-5.

Suave Prospect, who posted three wins, three seconds and one third in 10 starts last year, opened his 3-year-old campaign with an eight-length victory in the Preview on Jan. 21 at Gulfstream. He then finished second twice to Thunder Gulch at Gulfstream — by a neck in the Fountain of Youth and by a nose in the Florida Derby, before his runner-up finish in the Blue Grass.

Thunder Gulch, fourth in the Blue Grass, also will represent Lukas in the Derby. He will run as a separate betting interest.

Ski Captain, based in Japan, arrived at Churchill Downs was put into quarantine at 2 a.m. EDT. Because a blood sample was taken when the Kentucky-bred colt landed in Chicago, he will get out of quarantine Thursday.

Ski Captain will be making his U.S. debut, and only his second start of the year. He won a 1 1/8-mile stakes on Feb. 5 at Kyoto.

Eltish and Citadeed, two Kentucky-breds based in England, arrived at Churchill Downs at 5:30 a.m. Monday and were released from quarantine Tuesday. Citadeed will be making his U.S. debut, but Eltish finished second, two lengths behind Timber Country, in the Breeders' Cup Juvenile last Nov. 5 at Churchill Downs.

The only one of the 19 prospective Derby starters not at Churchill Downs was Tejano Run, who is scheduled to make the 80-mile trip from Keeneland on Saturday morning. Tejano Run finished second to Serena's Song in the Jim Beam at Turfway and was third in the Blue Grass at Keeneland.

Jockey agents go cellular to find riders for horses

By Harry King
AP Sports Writer

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Armed with cellular telephones, notebooks and pens, jockey agents roam the backstretch barns, making dozens of deals a week without ever signing a contract.

In horse racing, a promise between an agent and trainer is the contract. Most of the time, few people care about their business. But this is Kentucky Derby week and everything is magnified.

On Wednesday, the front page of the Daily Racing Form screamed: "Jockey Squabble Erupts."

The headline was prompted because trainer Bruce Jackson thought Corey Nakatani was going to ride In Character in the Derby. Nakatani's agent Bob Meldahl, says he told Jackson that his rider would be aboard unless D. Wayne Lukas decided to run Serena's Song, a filly, in the Derby. In that case, Nakatani would ride Serena's Song.

Jackson, who had Craig Perret and Chris McCarron waiting in the wings, thought Nakatani was committed to him. So, he released Parret and McCarron. On Saturday, Lukas said Serena's Song would face the boys.

Perret wound up on Jambalaya Jazz, McCarron landed on Knockadoon and Jackson grabbed Chris Antley.

Jackson was angry. Meldahl called the stewards at Churchill Downs to see if there was anything in writing. There wasn't.

Almost all communications between owners-trainers and jockey agents is verbal, said Bernard Hettel, chief steward at Churchill.

"There's no problem until there's a problem," he said.

"An agent selling anything — horses, cars, jockeys — you've got to spread your product out and have as many opportunities as you can," Hettel said. "In terms of a salesman hustling up business, I can see the mind set to do that. If I contact 20 trainers, my ability to have my jockey ride increases by 20."

Generally, he said, the approach is: "Your word's OK with me until you screw me. Then, I'll never trust you again."

That is suicide. An agent usually gets 25-30 percent of a rider's check.

Jockeys have done little jumping around on 3-years-old this year. Jerry Bailey, based in Florida during the winter, rode Pyramid Peak twice and Suave Prospect three times.

On April 15, Bailey choose Cigar in the Oaklawn Handicap over Suave Prospect in the Bluegrass even though Nick Zito made it clear that the Bluegrass jockey would be aboard in the Derby. Saturday, that will be Julie Krone. Bailey will ride Tejano Run, but he'll also be in line to ride Cigar, the top ranked handicap horse in the country later in the year.

"About once a month we'll have a really good screaming match in our office," Hettel said. "That's going to be one of those situations where everybody is right and everybody is wrong."

At Churchill Downs, conflicts often involved much-in-demand Pat Day. They will ride two or three horses in their maiden victory and then those horses will meet in an allowance race. At that point, Fred Aime, Day's agent, plays traffic cop.

"You're supposed to leave a crack in the door," Aime said.

He said that if there is a problem between Meldahl and Jackson, there shouldn't be. "You just try to keep your business straight because in these kinds of deals, you can make people mad and that's not what you're looking to do," he said. "It's my job to put Pat on the best horse and try to keep people happy in the process so I can do business with them next week."

"I'm sure people get upset with me but it's never anything personal," Aime said.

Tyson answers sexual assault questions under oath

SOMERVILLE, N.J. (AP) — Former heavyweight champion Mike Tyson answered questions under oath Wednesday about accusations that he sexually assaulted his ex-wife's former publicist in 1988.

Tyson gave a deposition at attorney Richard Schachter's office. Schachter and his colleague John Trombadore are handling Tyson's case in New Jersey. Tyson spent about 4 1/2 hours in Schachter's office and made no public comments.

The woman who filed the lawsuit, Phyliss Polaner of West Orange, gave her deposition earlier this week, Trombadore said.

Polaner filed the lawsuit on Aug. 17, 1990, in Newark, but before any action could be taken on the case, Tyson was convicted in 1992 of sexually assaulting Desiree Washington and sentenced to three years in prison.

The case was reactivated after Tyson was released from an Indiana prison March 25, said Howard Brechner, Polaner's attorney.

A tentative trial date of June 12 has been set to hear the lawsuit in Superior Court in Newark.

Polaner, a former publicist for Tyson's ex-wife, Robin Givens, says in her lawsuit that Tyson sexually assaulted her, beat her and threatened to kill her at different times during 1988. Polaner was working for Givens at the time.

Hollywood Retro-Style Makes A Big 'Splash' in Swimwear

AP Laserphoto
Take a splash back to the past in this '40s-style black swimsuit with white piping. The halter-style top and skirt are a design from Calvin Klein.

By Francine Parnes
Associated Press

Ah, the golden age of Hollywood, when the poolside was the scene of one fabulous cocktail party and bathing beauties dressed the part.

Teetering on high-heel mules or wedgie sandals, movie queens preened in pin-up girl swimsuits, terrycloth turbans and dark glasses.

Swimwear was shirred, draped and boned to push up the bosom and pull in the waist. Coverage was generous, with boy-cut legs, tap pants and ruffled skirts.

Now, fast-forward to 1995.

Starlet suits are back, which stands to reason since glamour is everywhere, and designers have created the most star-worthy swimwear since Esther Williams, Lana Turner and Rita Hayworth.

That's good news for many, particularly aging baby boomers, who yearn for support and extra coverage.

AP Laserphoto
Two-piece red and white gingham check swimsuit with boy legs is among retro looks available this season.

This generation of swimwear is new and improved, with fast-drying lightweight fabrics, spandex panels to flatten the tummy and bras engineered to flatter the bosom.

"The whole Betty Grable look has been so prevalent in ready-to-wear that, of course, it's going to cross over into swimwear," Colette Wong, an instructor at New York's Fashion Institute of Technology, says. Besides, she says, "we've seen so much skin with string bikinis and thongs that now women would like to go back to a more classic bathing suit."

At Everything But Water, a swimwear boutique in Orlando, Fla., boy-cut shorts are selling well.

"The boxer short is very popular, not just among women who want to cover their hips, but among all our customers," Melinda Iosua, district manager, says. "It's sporty and it goes back to the sophistication of the '40s."

Other retro looks making a splash are picnic checks with boy legs, vampy one-shoulder suits and flirty lingerie styles with lace details and narrow straps. Lace-up corset suits are popular, too.

Still other suits get their glamour from space-age metallics and old-fashioned sequins. At Neiman Marcus in Denver, a turquoise two-piece suit with sequined bustier and padded bra, $520 from Gottex, has sold out. At Neiman stores nationwide, it's 40 percent sold, as is a similar style in pink.

"It's swimming right out of here," Neiman's fashion director, Nancy Husted, says, aware that it'll never be wet.

"Sometimes we wear swimwear to actually swim in, but this season it's just for posing," she says.

With current fashion focus on the bosom, the push-up bra is a basic foundation for swimwear '95, starting with the Wonderbra and its plentiful progeny that offer extra lift and contour.

This season the Wonderbra is built int swimwear from Christina, while Jantzen suits have Shape Insurance, Rebel Beach has Mighty Bra and Target has added the Sensational Bra to many of its swimwear styles.

At Calvin Klein, underwire and removable push-up pads accompany halter tops with '40s-style skirted suits and boy legs. In black with white piping along the waist and the straps, the one- and two-piece styles sell for about $80 at Barneys,

Accessories shine for spring

By Francine Parnes
Associated Press

"When you think about it," Bill Blass once told Life magazine, "what a woman wears between her neck and her hem hasn't changed all that much in the last 10 years. It's her accessories that have changed, and changed constantly."

Today, a quarter of a century after Blass' pronouncement, it's still the little things that count.

Like everything else in ready-to-wear this season, accessories ride the trend of glamour. Among the ladylike items you might want to include: A streamlined ankle-strap stiletto or high-heel mule, pastel scarf, white gloves, a floral straw hat, a retro rhinestone barrette and a structured top-handle handbag or clutch.

AP Laserphoto
Spring is the time for patent leather to shine. And this season white joins the more traditional black for accessories including handbags such as these from Paloma Picasso.

Then again, for kicks, try a schoolgirlish mini backpack, preferably in pink, perhaps in gingham. Or penny loafers with a chunky heel.

Or blast back to the Jetson-age 1960s with clear vinyl shoes and handbags.

Details, details, details.

With one stroke, a well-chosen accessory, from your hat to your shoe, is the quickest route to finishing an outfit without finishing off your wallet.

Whatever you pick, chances are, it's paved in patent, be it the real thing in patent leather or a fab fake in shiny vinyl.

Calvin Klein launched the look by showing white patent leather shoes in his CK collection for fall '94.

Now, white patent is in full swing, along with red, black, berry and other fruity hues.

"If you talk about one direction, it has to be patent, because shine is the most important thing that is happening in accessories," says LaVelle Olexa, senior vice president for fashion merchandising at Lord & Taylor in New York. "We saw it all over Europe, too, in shoes, whether it's a low-heeled lace-up oxford or the newest shoe of the season, which is a high-heeled Mary Jane."

Spring Blush

By Amy Holman Edelman
Associated Press

As a woman's life gets busier and more complicated, it's nice to know that her makeup doesn't have to.

Today, the look is pretty, natural and fresh — and in sharp contrast to last fall's femme fatale. The choices are bountiful and require a minimum investment of time and money.

The season's soft clothing such as shimmery silks and velvety cottons demand focused makeup, but a heavy hand would overwhelm fashion's softer silhouette. In its place is a face that's natural, but better.

For starters, put away powder and foundation until September. In summer heat and humidity, both can clog pores. The perfect base for warm weather is a little color from sunless tanning lotion. It evens out the skin tone and produces a glow to which you can add blush — or not.

For the eyes, shadows are nearly neutral but with a subtle shimmer. Estee Lauder has an array of just-picked shades from barely-there pink to rose. Maybelline offers pearlized shades of pink ranging from mushroom to seashell; Max Factor from honey to haze; Prescriptives in peach, yellow, white and taupe.

Next, outline the eye in brown or black. The liner, in addition to well-groomed brows and lots of black mascara, will bring focus to the nearly nude lid.

Finish with a tinted lipshade heightened with a touch of sheen. Lorraine Amadeo at Shisheido says it's the must-have item for spring.

"The new semi-sheer lip glosses add shine and luster to lips, along with subtle color in a texture between a lipstick and a gloss," she says.

If this new look devitates too much from your usual pallette, go for increased intensity from some brighter shades of pale. Even though they are more concentrated, they are still nearly translucent.

Marianne Diorio, a vice president for Prescriptives, says that after years of smoky lids women are getting comfortable with color. And Kat James, makeup expert for Maybelline, says "A broad range of colors have become this season's neutrals."

Eye makeup makes an important play

Hearst News Service

This spring, eyes have replaced lips as the facial feature of the moment.

In a break with recent tradition, Stacey Okun wrote in an article in the current issue of Town & Country, models in the spring '95 fashion collections walked the runways wearing shadow and makeup. Artists have used it in shoots for recent issues of top fashion magazines.

Colored shadows are back, much more wearable than those Windex blue shades of the '60s. Reformulated mascaras produce longer, thicker, more enduring lashes. Liners are sleeker than ever.

"We've entered an age in which women are so much more comfortable with their femininity and sensuality," said Anne Carullo, Prescriptives' vice president of product development.

"The neutral look, so popular in the '80s, seems passe. The androgynous look is definitely gone. And feminine — but not girlie — eye makeup is making an important play. In the last 10 years, we've seen eye makeup only in the evening. Now I see eyebrows played up and light shadows wiped across women's lids. It brings about a beautiful widening of the eyes."

Eye makeup goes back to Egypt's Queen Nefertiti and Cleopatra, who painted on kohl as eyeliner. They crushed flowers and used them to shadow. Ancient Roman women tinted their lashes with a quill dipped in a mixture of powered lead and water.

"They used everything they could get their hands on, producing a very stained look," makeup artist Bobbi Brown said.

In the reign of Elizabeth I, many women shaved off part of the mid-forehead hairline and eyebrows to produce an illusion of larger, more beautiful eyes. By the mid-18th century, Parliament passed a law specifically prohibiting cosmetics.

In this century, women went to the movies for makeup tips. Max Factor, the Hollywood makeup man of early films, designed looks that became the foundation of modern makeup.

Plucking has long been popular. In the mid-1800s, some women shaved off their entire brows and pasted on replacements of mouse fur. A century later, the shapely brow, plucked into an arch and filled in with eyebrow pencil, became the fashion — until Brooke Shields changed eyebrow fashion.

Despite the popularity of the natural look, many new products have been introduced.

"The industry has continually found exceptional ways to make makeup more wearable," said Alan Farer, L'Oreal's director of research and development.

Eye shadows have come out in matte and high-shine styles as well as powder, cream and crayon formulations. Eyeliner pencils have led to eyeliner liquids and automatic eye-lining pens. Mascaras not only lengthen lashes but also condition them.

All this eye makeup has to be taken off with removal products, and there are eye creams to smooth wrinkles.

"Eyes are the first part of the face to show the signs of aging," said Victoria Connell, Elizabeth Arden's vice president of marketing development, treatment and color.

Current fashions include brows that are defined so they have shape and length (think Sophia Loren, not Bette Davis). Lashes are long and delicate (Audrey Hepburn, not Cher). Black liner is very up-to-date (Coco Chanel, not Cleopatra). Lids should be enhanced by shadows, not overtaken by them (Christy Turlington, not Norma Desmond).

The colors of spring '95 range from gold-glimmering shadows to lilac, pink and powder blue to pastels to a wide range to subtle colors.

"The color is back, but not in a way that scares people," Dominique Szabo, Estee Lauder's senior vice president of product development said. "We're approaching it, in the cosmetics industry, on tiptoe."

Hawkeye state plants fashion seed

Saddle shoe mania hasn't gripped remainder of nation, at least not yet

By John Marchese
N.Y. Times News Service

Iowans, resolutely stable people situated in the midst of what big-city fashion types would call fly-over country, have long had to be content with being on the cutting edge of corn harvests, or perhaps of a presidential election now and then.

But this season, the Hawkeye state has planted the seeds of its own fashion trendlet.

In this case it's black-and-white saddle shoes. They're back.

While it is possible that the distinctive lace-up oxfords would have returned without Chuck Offenburger, a 47-year-old columnist for The Des Moines Register, one shoe manufacturing executive said last week, "If it weren't for his efforts, I really don't know."

It started last summer. Offenburger, a saddle-shoe fan since the age of 12, said he realized one day that the pair of saddle shoes he had worn for years were not only down at the heels but also virtually disintegrating. His toe stuck through the uppers.

OFFENBURGER shopped around for another pair. He even called the manufacturer, G.H. Bass & Co. of Maine, but found that it hadn't produced black-and-white saddles for men since 1978. In fact, company officials said, the only stable market for the shoes was parochial school girls.

Offenburger did what newspaper columnists do when something sad befalls them — he wrote about it in his Sunday "Iowa Boy" column. In it, he asked his readers (The Register's statewide Sunday circulation is about 300,000) if they shared his passion for what he called "these B&W beauties" and whether they would order a pair to support his "Back in the Saddle" campaign, to persuade Bass to bring the saddle shoe out of mothballs.

"So, guys," Offenburger wrote, "can we create a trend?"

Offenburger is a horn-rimmed glasses sort, partial to button-down shirts and V-neck sweaters.

"I think I'm probably about the least likely person to start a fashion trend who has ever walked the earth," he said. But he had somehow picked up the faint emanations from the zeitgeist of shoe fashion.

WHILE WAITING for his readers to respond, he became a trend of one, pestering executives at Bass.

"He called every day for about 10 days," said Mitchell Massey, a senior vice president with the company.

"About the time I was having these conversations with Chuck, all of a sudden from about three fashion publications I got requests for saddle shoes. I thought, 'Isn't that weird.'"

It could be that two nebulous fashions are about to collide and the result may be the critical mass necessary for a trend. Women's designers have been showing outfits reminiscent of parochial school uniforms, creating a new demand for saddle shoes, among women, at least.

Meanwhile, the wild popularity of the film "Forrest Gump" has helped crystallize a men's fashion movement that GQ magazine's fashion writer, Scott Omelianuk, calls "geek chic." In that context, the B&W beauties were the right look again.

Soon, Offenburger found himself swimming in letters from readers, more than 700 of whom eventually ordered a pair of black-and-white saddles through his column, which appears four days a week. In one of seven follow-up columns specifically on saddle shoes, he wrote: "I told Bass I just knew this would spread beyond Iowa. It's going to be in black-and-white saddle shoes like it is in corn production and politics. Iowa leads the nation."

In December, as Bass was scrambling to produce nearly $49,000 worth of shoes ($70 a pair, retail) in what was called in-house "The Iowa Buy," executives traveled to a big trade show in New York and kept telling the story of the insistent Iowans.

Retailers saw the shoes and ordered some. As Ken Thrall, Bass's senior vice president for sales, put it: "I think that what it did was to make us aware of a trend that we probably wouldn't have believed. It was there waiting to happen."

SADDLE SHOE mania hasn't gripped the rest of the nation, yet. Late in February, at another shoe industry market show in Las Vegas, 23 Bass salespeople and 3 top executives wore black-and-white saddle shoes every day of the show, and the orders kept coming. And Bass realized there was new competition: in its latest catalogue, Cole-Haan has a pair of men's saddles in blue and vanilla.

As for Bass, Thrall said the company was committed to shipping 14,000 pairs of saddles this spring to retailers in New York (Bloomingdale's, Harry's and the Village Cobbler), Minneapolis, Dallas and, of course, Des Moines.

THE BLACK-and-white saddle shoe got a celebrity endorsement of sorts when George Clooney, a star of the television series E.R. and a recent magazine coverboy, appeared on "The Late Show with David Letterman" wearing a pair. Letterman was so intrigued with the shoes that he asked Clooney to lift then for a close-up.

Recently, at the Knapp Center on the campus of Drake University in Des Moines, almost 500 saddle shoes walked through the door for a women's basketball game between the Drake Bulldogs and the Redbirds of Illinois State. Once again, Iowa Boy had rounded up the faithful through his column, and they paraded on court at half-time.

"It was wonderful," Offenburger said.

"It was the most saddle shoes I've ever seen in one place in my 35 years wearing them. And it's the first time in my life I've ever felt more with-it than out of it."

AT WIT'S END

Some spend a lifetime in pursuit of jeans that fit

By Erma Bombeck

Bombeck

I blame jeans commercials for the discontent in the world today. You get up in the morning and you don't feel too bad about yourself. Then you see a model on television, flat on her back, wriggling into a pair of jeans inch by inch. Don't ask how she stands up. We see her looking in the mirror at her reflection. The jeans fit her like a fungus and she says immodestly, "Yes!"

I know people who have dedicated their entire lives to finding a pair of jeans that fit their bodies. If the garment fits the hips, there's a gap in the waistband. If the waistband fits, you can't get them zipped. If the waist and hips fit, you can't get your legs in them.

You say to yourself, "What's wrong with me when I live in a country that is paved with jeans, and there isn't one single pair that fits my body?"

I've seen country-western male singers so skinny, if their hats fell over their ears you couldn't tell if they were coming or going. Their jeans fit.

There are women with pants that fit like sausage casings — and they still have room to pull boots over the jeans up to their knees.

What I am seeing on television commercials is that tight is better. As the Spandex skirts creep toward the crotch and the cat suits are tight enough to discourage any kidney function, dressing is becoming a challenge.

The trap we all fall into is choosing clothes that we see on models. A body that comes to mind is Fran Drescher, who plays the title role on the TV sitcom "The Nanny." I've had pets larger than she is — living under my sink. She appears wearing a little skirt the size of a friendship picture and a bolero jacket, and I think, "I could wear that."

I never stop to consider that Fran does not have varicose veins on the backs of her knees, dimples in her thighs and did not carry her babies low.

I tell myself these are not real people. They live in pods somewhere and list another planet on their driver's licenses.

I was finishing up dishes the other night when I heard a voice on the TV set yelling, "Help! I've fallen and I can't get up."

I rushed to the set. Sure enough, it was that woman in tight jeans.

SWIM: Retro Hollywood-style swimsuits call for accessories

(From 1E)

Bloomingdale's, Saks Fifth Avenue, Bergdorf Goodman and Neiman Marcus.

Accompanying all of this glam swimwear is the urge to accessorize.

"When you're wearing that kind of suit, it calls for a higher heel and some kind of accessories," says Husted of Neiman Marcus.

To do it up right, you'll need full maquillage, an armload of bracelets, a chain for waist or ankle, movie star shades, a terry turban and some mules.

While Husted doesn't think the accessorized look will catch on everywhere, there's no shortage of hot spots where high heels will leave their mark in the sand.

"In certain European and Caribbean resorts and some California towns like Beverly Hills," Husted says, "women will follow through with the heels and sunglasses and towel wrapped around the head."

So will the young, according to Lucille Klein, fashion director at J.C. Penney headquarters outside Dallas.

"There's a small percentage of young, cutting-edge women in the big cities who will do that whole look," she says. "They're the ones who never did the tap-dancing bottom or the skirted suit with high heels before.

"And they don't know stilettos hurt."

BLUSH: Lipstick, mascara are 'musts' for total fashion look

(From 1E)

The eyeshadow choices are particularly bewitching. Chanel offers tints of lavender, pink, lemon and turquoise, while the creative people at YSL like bright but sheer shadows in violet and orange or blue and green pastels.

To balance these eyes, lips should be bright but not overpowering. Pink — a favorite last spring — returns. If you have one, use it. If you want something new, Chanel's color of the moment is a frosty, lilac-tinted pink. Max Factor also has a range of pink, from mauve to rose. Shiseido's new semi-sheer lip gloss produces shine and subtle color in ocher, brown and pink.

Dominique Szabo, Estee Lauder's senior vice president of product development, says of their new range of colors: "These warmed, neutral pink shades are almost like blush for lips."

For those who aren't ready to give up the glamour look, go for it. But cut back on the number of products and ease up on the application. If you still love your red lipstick, makeup artist Mary Greenwell suggests softening it with a bit of sheer gloss. Or update it with a little glimmer. Orange also looks fresh this spring. YSL has the citrusy shade in pastel or mixed with red. Add a couple coats of seriously bright nail color and some black eyeliner, and — voila! — summer-proof glamour is yours.

"Fashion goes in so many directions and changes so quickly," Greenwell says. "The plus side is that almost anything passes these days. The important thing is to find what looks, and works, best for you."

That said, her top-of-the-list suggestions are a stained glossy lip, a faux tan, dark eyeliner and a few applications of black mascara.

"But," she adds, "all you really need is the lipstick and mascara to look totally in fashion."

Petticoats slip into spring fashion

N.Y. Times News Service

"Your slip is showing" is no longer a cause for embarrassment, but a nod to fashion savvy. For several months now, models and young fashion editors have been seen at parties wearing satin slips from a chic little Paris boutique called Sabbia Rosa.

Now, Bloomingdale's is importing a dozen or more slip styles for a shop of their own on the fourth floor of the Lexington Avenue store. The most dresslike style has broad shoulder straps and a self-tie in back.

"We see women wearing the slips under blazers and the half slips with cashmere sweaters," said Kalman Ruttenstein, the store's vice president for fashion direction. That is the way designers showed slip styles in their spring collections

The Sabbia Rosa slips and petticoats, all in silk satin with ecru or black lace trimming, will be available in early April in 21 luscious colors including mango, peach, lilac, raspberry, jade green, sky blue, black and cream. Prices range from $275 to $600.

SHINE: Accent spring with fun fashion accessories

(From 1E)

Lucille Klein, fashion director for J.C. Penney in Dallas, says it's all about cheap and chic.

"One of the biggest trends in accessories is patent, since it's a novelty," says Klein. "You clean it just by wiping it off, and it's fun for spring and summer. You haven't had a mini backpack that looked like that before, so it looks new. It looks 'with it' for this season, and it's not a major investment."

Penney's mini backpack in black, red or white shiny vinyl is $22.

The whole point is fun fashion, says Ed Miccinati, president of Perry Ellis handbags and accessories in New York.

"In the past, when you bought a patent leather bag, it was a serious-looking clutch or very structured bag," he says. "Nowadays it's a nontraditional shape. Patent happens to look good in nontraditional silhouettes like little backpacks, top-handle totes, belt bags. It's not just a clutch anymore."

From Perry Ellis come patent leather backpacks, in black, about $48 at Macy's, Dillard's, The Broadway and Foley's.

"They look hip, they look right, and we've sold out of everything that we have," Miccinati says.

Patent is also important for the skinny belt. Now here's the skinny on that belt. It helps if the belt isn't the only thing that's skinny.

"The most important accessory for spring, along with a sexy shoe, is a thin belt," says Adrienne Vittadini, "because it defines the waist. It does give an edge to dresses and sweaters, and your eyes immediately gravitate to the waist."

Typically no more than three-quarters of an inch wide, the skinny belt comes in a variety of colors and styles, from funky red patent to classic snakeskin. It can be cinched over a suit jacket or a sweater with slim pants.

"Our best-selling belt is a narrow belt, in black calf with a gold metal buckle," says Sonja Caproni, president of Donna Karan's accessories division in New York. It's $170 in black, red or white at Nordstrom, Neiman Marcus and Saks Fifth Avenue.

"It's suitable on trousers and dresses, and it's selling so well because it complements the jackets and dresses that are close to the body," Caproni says.

The skinny belt goes best with the new, more ladylike, delicate footwear, light years from Doc Martens.

How about Adrienne Vittadini's T-strap sandals in lime or fuchsia patent leather, with 2-inch heel? About $100 at Neiman Marcus, Saks Fifth Avenue and Bloomingdale's.

Finally, don't forget one of summer's essential tools — sunglasses.

"We must have 12 variations of the big Jackie O. glasses," says Vittadini, who sells them for about $70 at Neiman Marcus and Saks Fifth Avenue. "They're much bigger, they evoke a retro feeling, and they're strong.

"Nothing in fashion is wishy-washy at this moment. Accessories are making a statement. And that statement is glamour."

DEAR ABBY

Slow, steady dating is best basis for committed, lasting relationship

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: It has been said that you don't really know people until you've lived with them, but that's like putting the cart before the horse.

Van Buren

The process of dating is for the purpose of getting to know a person. It is a time for sharing likes and dislikes, beliefs, habits and faults, as well as good characteristics.

Each situation, whether a dinner date, movie date, sporting event, picnic, church service, a game of cards, a day at the beach or amusement park, cooking together, presents a different "atmosphere."

The longer the relationship endures, the more opportunities to detect characteristics of honesty (or dishonesty), jealousy, possessiveness, tenderness, cruelty, etc.

All of this can be done without a sexual relationship.

When and if both parties arrive at the conclusion that this is a lasting love — not lust or infatuation — then a marriage commitment can be made.

I do not want someone's rejected lover after they have lived together — and then discovered it was no good. — WE'RE WAITING IN FLORIDA

DEAR WAITING: Congratulations. Obviously, the more exposure, the better the opportunity to observe the potential mate. I am reminded of the old saying, "If you want to know how a man will treat his wife, take careful notice of how he treats his mother and his sister." And the same can be said about women and how they treat the men in their lives.

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to the person who received an invitation to a wedding, and later learned that the bridal couple had sent out two sets of invitations — one for a church ceremony followed by a dinner, the other for a dance with cake, punch and a cash bar. You agreed with the writer in assuming that the newlyweds wanted as many gifts as possible.

I disagree. I am being married next year, and I come from a very religious family. They'd be upset attending an affair where alcohol is served.

However, my fiance and his family enjoy alcohol, and they would be very disappointed if alcohol was NOT served. Most of our friends also drink alcohol, so I can understand why a couple might have two receptions.

Here's my solution: I will have two receptions, and I'll leave it to my guests to decide which one they want to attend — and if I end up with a lot of gifts, all the better for me! — PROBLEM SOLVED IN YORK, PA.

DEAR ABBY: After seeing the items in your column about names that fit occupations, I took a quick glance through the directory of the Veterinary Medical Association. I found veterinarians with these last names: Batz, Beaver, Bird, Catt, Hogg, Lamb and Wolf, to name a few.

As for my own last name, I just tell people it's a good thing I don't work with pigs. — LYNDA BACON, D.V.M., LAWRENCEVILLE, GA.

DEAR ABBY: My husband read an engagement announcement in our local newspaper. The bride was the daughter of a former business associate.

The announcement gave the date and location of the wedding. We did not receive an invitation to the wedding, but my husband thinks it would be all right to attend the wedding anyway.

I would feel uncomfortable attending a wedding to which I had not been invited. Or is a newspaper announcement an invitation?

I would appreciate your comments on this situation. --LONGTIME NEBRASKA READER

DEAR READER: An announcement is, you rightly assumed, only an announcement. Only those who receive an invitation should attend the wedding.

'Showcase' store closes its doors after 1½ years

By Amy M. Spindler

N.Y. Times News Service

Yati, the SoHo store that burst on the scene in October 1993 as a showcase for high-priced fashion, has closed.

Isaac Mizrahi, Manolo and Robert Danes were among the designers who sold to the store, which was shuttered four weeks ago without explanation.

Manolo said he was not paid for spring deliveries.

The shop was named for its owner, 27-year-old Yati Zainudin, who displayed both deep pockets and sublime taste in her store's decor and merchandise but had no track record in fashion or retailing.

It is not too late to make a new start. A financial windfall or unexpected opportunity to travel gets 1996 off on the right foot. Join forces with someone whose basic values are the same as your own.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: country music star Randy Travis, singer Jackie Jackson, newspaper columnist George F. Will, golfer Betsy Rawls.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Things may not go as planned today. Ride with the tide. Make the most of swiftly-changing circumstances. New monetary gains are featured. Stick with your regular job as the surest way to long-term security.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Do not act hastily; you need to sift the false from the true before making a romantic choice. Do not let the challenges of family life get on your nerves. Build bridges of tolerance and love.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Use your skills as a mediator to create an atmosphere of harmony. Champion a good-neighbor policy. An affectionate, nurturing attitude wins you new admirers. Research will help solve a financial riddle.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Too much pressure on your part could incur the wrath of authority figures. Perform your duties to the best of your ability. Scattered thinking will produce chaos.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Refuse to let any one event or person use up all your resources. Changing jobs on an impulse could lead to big regrets. Give mate or business partner greater say in the management of joint funds.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Sticking to tasks that you can complete today will let you make the most of your many talents. Avoid any assignment that poses a threat to your physical well-being or peace of mind.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Someone may try to convince you to abandon your current position for a pie-in-the-sky scheme. Your well-known abilities are your job insurance. Look for misplaced papers in your desk and files.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): It is time to change your outlook and tactics. Career progress will come faster once you adopt a more constructive attitude. Stay close to your family and old friends. A wonderful transformation is possible.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Gullibility or overgenerosity could cost you plenty. Avoid situations that strain your nerves or cause emotional upset. Delay signing a key agreement until more facts and figures are available. Better terms can be negotiated.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): New business developments put you in a better negotiating position. Go after an assignment that could mean better pay. Your life takes a turn for the better when you stop to smell the flowers.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Seize an opportunity to promote a venture that will help you provide for your family. Extra money comes your way. An unconventional approach will help you win loved one's heart. Show your tender side.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Higher-ups are impressed by your performance. Do not allow friction to arise at place of employment. Curb an urge to gamble. Wait until evening before doing anything on the strength of unconfirmed reports.

The bidding:

WEST	NORTH	EAST	SOUTH
1◇	1♡	Pass	1♠
2◇	2♠	Pass	4♠
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ◇

To ruff when you know you are going to be overruffed is, more often than not, an exercise in masochism. Your cause might be better served if you looked for an alternative way to recover lost ground.

Since South's one-spade bid was not forcing, North needed a fair hand to raise to two spades. Since all of North's high cards had to be outside the spade suit, South was certainly worth another bid. The jump to four spades was a little aggressive, but an invitational raise to three spades would have been too conservative for our blood. Fortunately, declarer had the technique to bring home the game.

West cashed the ace and king of diamonds, then continued with the queen. Since West was known to have six diamonds, it was more than likely the defender was short in spades. Should South ruff in dummy, East would surely overruff and return a trump, and declarer would eventually have to surrender a club for down one.

Instead, declarer elected to concede the third trick to West by discarding a heart from the table, and East was caught in a peculiar situation. A club discard would enable South to set up the suit with just one ruff, so East, too, discarded a heart.

That left declarer in control. The club shift was won on the table, the remaining high club was cashed and declarer came to hand with a trump. Leaving two trumps outstanding, declarer ruffed a club, returned to hand with a heart ruff and ruffed the remaining club as West discarded. A heart ruff was the entry to hand to draw the outstanding trumps and claim the rest of the tricks.

Is Princess Stephanie, reformed bad girl of Monoco, primed for marriage?

PARIS — Is the reformed bad girl of Monaco ready for marriage?

Reformed bad girl of Monaco might be ready for marriage.

Princess Stephanie had her two children baptized last month, paving the way for her to wed their father, live-in boyfriend Daniel Ducruet, according to French press reports.

The principality's press office confirmed Wednesday that Louis, 2 1/2, and 11-month-old Pauline were baptized April 17 in a private ceremony at Monaco's Church of St. Devote.

Reports of impending marriage were "more rumors, just rumors," the press office said.

The event was a reconciliation of sorts between Stephanie, a rock star-turned-bathing suit designer, and her father, Prince Rainier, who reportedly never approved of his daughter's relationship with Ducruet.

Ducruet met the princess while he was her bodyguard.

LONDON — Child B got a kind word and a trip to "a paradise of positive energy" from the Duchess of York.

The former Sarah Ferguson offered a rural Polish clinic to the 10-year-old leukemia victim who was denied state-funded treatment because she's likely to die anyway.

An anonymous donor is now paying for the girl, identified only as Child B in court documents, to receive chemotherapy at a private London clinic.

The duchess said in a television interview Wednesday that she will find the youngster a place at the clinic built by Children in Crisis, a charity she founded.

"We can help her just by offering her support that she might need and offering her some holiday time in the mountain haven which is a paradise of positive energy. And just by saying if you need us we are there," she said.

National Health Service doctors refused the girl further treatment in January. In March, appeals judges agreed that the child should be refused state-financed treatment because of the cost and the likelihood she will die.

SAN FRANCISCO — John Fogerty, accused of stealing from one of his own songs, was awarded $1.3 million to cover his legal fees in a lawsuit that he won.

Fantasy Inc. has the copyright on the Creedence Clearwater Revival hit "Run Through the Jungle." The record company accused the disbanded band's former leader of borrowing from "Jungle" when he wrote "The Old Man Down the Road," for his 1985 solo Warner Bros. album "Centerfield."

A federal jury ruled in Fogerty's favor in 1988, deciding the singer and guitarist didn't violate the law.

U.S. District Judge Samuel Conti ruled Tuesday that Fantasy should pay Fogerty's legal fees because his defense required "extensive time and labor" and "involved novel and difficult questions."

Fogerty was pleased, said his lawyer, Kenneth Sidle.

"I would say we are reasonably happy with the award. John went through a lot of agony on this case," Sidle said.

Fantasy hadn't decided whether to appeal.

LOS ANGELES — Rodney Dangerfield gets no respect in the real world, so he's taking his act to cyberspace.

Rodney Dangerfield is taking his act to cyberspace.

People who log onto the World Wide Web can access Rodney's joke of the day, video clips and photographs.

"I wanted to bring a little humor to the computer world," Dangerfield said Tuesday. "Until now, I never had any luck with computers. One time, I bought an Apple computer. It had a worm in it."

CHICAGO — Clarence Thomas is "an Uncle Tom," Jesse Helms a "typical white, Southern, male bigot" and Newt Gingrich might be among a minority of people who don't masturbate, says Dr. Joycelyn Elders.

"Studies have shown, I think, that 90 percent of the people know masturbation happens, and they do it," the former U.S. surgeon general said in an interview in Playboy magazine.

Elders, who was fired in December after suggesting to a United Nations AIDS conference that masturbation "perhaps should be taught," made the comments to the magazine for its June issue, on sale next week.

Credit applications are also required for business accounts. Yearly contract agreements are available.
