OLD FAITHFUL — City workers try to head off a water main break Wednesday at Foster and Hobart that spewed water more than 10 feet into the air, and flooded the immediate area. The break occurred after Southwest Public Service diggers accidentally drill-led into the line. Water Department Supervisor Glen Moon said the city is not entirely finished repairing the line as a larger clamp had to be ordered. (Staff photo by Paul Pinkham.)

Commission delays approval of outdoor sculpture project

By LARRY HOLLIS

The city commission has deferred action on approving the installation of visual and tactile art displays to be constructed on the north bank in Coronado Park immediately south of M. K. Brown Auditorium, citing a need to obtain estimated costs.

The outdoor sculpture project is supported by the Pampa Garden Club and the Foundation for Outdoor Art Sculptures. The Parks and Recreation Advisory Board has recommended approval of the project.

At the commission's regular meeting Tuesday evening, foundation member Jerry Richards explained the concepts for the project, which will feature a series of 6 by 9 foot concrete walls in V-shaped panels. He said the foundation has the money to construct the walls, which will feature works by local artists and art students.

Richards said the foundation is asking the city to provide help in constructing steps down to the art area, concrete support pads for the panels and lighting so the panels can be viewed at night.

In response to a question by Mayor Sherman Cowan, Richards said he had no general estimate available at present for what expense the city would have to put out for the requested assistance. He said the panels could be installed now without the support pads and other requested materials. But he said that as an artist, he would like to "see it done right" to aid the overall aesthetic appearance.

Garden club representative Thelma Bray, who has been one of the main supporters of the project, said the steps, pads and lights "are not absolutely necessary now" and could be added later, either with foundation money to be raised or with city expenditures of funds.

Bray suggested the steps could be constructed of railroad ties now. But Parks and Recreation Department Director Reed Kirkpatrick said "if this quality of art work" is going to be put in, he would prefer concrete steps since

Senate set to defy Reagan on sanctions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate is moving ahead with plans to impose sanctions on South Africa, despite warnings by the Reagan administration that such steps would hurt U.S. chances of nudging the white-ruled government toward sharing power with the black majority.

Secretary of State George Shultz carried the administration's case to Capitol Hill on Wednesday, repeating President Reagan's televised plea of a day earlier that Congress shouldn't order sanctions.

But Shultz, appearing before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, was told by Democrats and Republicans that the GOP-controlled Senate will likely pass some type of sanctions.

Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., chairman of the panel, told reporters after the four-hour meeting that he thinks most of the 100 senators support some kind of sanctions, but there is no agreement yet on what action to take. The panel is likely to decide within the next several days, Lugar told Shultz.

Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., said "some senators are so angered" by Reagan's defense of his current policy that they wanted to attach sanctions amendments to unrelated legislation required to raise the nation's debt ceiling.

Whatever passes the Senate will have to be reconciled with the action of the Democratic-controlled House, which last month approved a stiff package of sanctions.

The House bill was introduced in the Senate on Wednesday by Cranston and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

The measure called for bans on new U.S. investment in South Africa, U.S. bank loans to the South African private sector, the importation of South African uranium, coal and steel, and the import of South African food and agricultural products.

Other steps are the ending of landing rights in the United States for South African aircraft, stopping U.S. consulates from offering services to South African citizens, terminating all U.S. assistance to investment in South Africa and trade there and banning U.S. government contact with South African companies, U.S. aid to the South African energy industry and the promotion of U.S. tourism to South Africa.

Most of the new sanctions could be lifted if South Africa frees black nationalist leader Nelson Mandela.

Legislators have been particularly angered by the state of emergency declared by the government of P. W. Botha in support of the national policy of apartheid, the system of rigid segregation which helps the 5 million whites rule 24 million blacks.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes, speaking aboard Air Force One as Reagan made a political swing through the South on Wednesday, said the president was not surprised by the criticism of his speech.

"No, the president anticipated there would be some reaction against his speech," said Speakes, asking legislators to "keep an open mind until the issue is decided."

Speakes refused to confirm reports Reagan would veto a sanctions bill, nor would he say if the president might approve milder sanctions than those in the House package.

"Obviously, we're opposed to sanctions and we will continue to do so," he said.

One possibility under discussion on Capitol Hill to win approval for sanctions would be to tie them to the package of $100 million in aid for U.S.-backed guerrillas fighting Nicaragua's leftist government, congressional sources said.

Reagan has said the Central American aid package is badly needed. If the two issues were tied together in a single bill, he would have to accept South African sanctions if he wanted the Contra money, said the sources, speaking only on condition of anonymity.

Shultz, Biden swap shouts on sanctions

WASHINGTON (AP)—A heated angry and often shouted exchange over U.S. policies toward South Africa took place Wednesday between Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., and Secretary of State George P. Shultz before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Biden began by referring to the vitriolic criticism of President Reagan's speech on Tuesday by South African Anglican bishop Desmond Tutu who said the Reagan policy is "nauseating."

From the committee transcript, here is a portion of what followed:

Biden: Mr. Secretary, I'm amazed Bishop Tutu was as restrained as he was. People are being mugged and shot, imprisoned, killed, smothered. I admire his restraint.

Shultz (interrupting): I'd have to disagree with you. I think to say that President Reagan's statement yesterday was nauseating is nuts and not anything I could agree with under any circumstances.

Biden: I'm referring, not whether you agree with it or not, to the frustration he (Bishop Tutu) must feel. I'm surprised that he hasn't said more.

Shultz: Of course he feels frustration. We all feel frustration.

Biden: But these people are

SEN. BIDEN

dying. His people are dying. You feel frustration, they're dying. They are being shot. Children are ... They are lining up and shooting children.

Shultz: It's a terrible situation and what we need to be thinking about is what to do about it.

Later in the exchange, Biden said, "These people are being crushed. And we're sitting here with the same kind of rhetoric. The same thing we heard (in the American civil rights movement). We heard 'Go Slow.' We heard, 'We have to take care of the problem afterwards...'"

Shultz (interrupting): You are totally misconstruing the testimony that I gave. And I hate to hear a senator of the United States calling for violence.

Biden: I'm not calling for violence.

Shultz: That's what you're doing. That's exactly what you're doing.

Biden: I hate to hear an administration and a secretary of State refusing to act on a morally abhorrent point. ... I'm ashamed of this country that puts out a policy like this that says nothing, nothing. ... We put no timetable on, we make no specific demands. I'm ashamed of our policy. That's what I'm ashamed of. I'm ashamed of the lack of moral backbone to this policy.

Shultz (interrupting): I resent that. I resent that deeply because there is tremendous moral backbone in that policy on a bipartisan basis.

Sound of bluegrass to ring out in Old Mobeetie again

By PAUL PINKHAM
Staff Writer

OLD MOBEETIE — With the "hoedown" finished, now the real fun begins.

The happy sounds of bluegrass pickin' and toe-tappin' will ring throughout the Old Mobeetie Jail Museum beginning at 8 p.m. Friday and continuing all the way until noon Sunday.

Members of the Panhandle Bluegrass and Old Tyme Music Association and the Mobeetie community have been busy in recent weeks, readying the grounds for the seventh annual festival with the annual Clean-Up Hoedown. The hoedown, part of an ongoing mutual project between the community and the association, was begun three years ago...with real hoes.

The six-member Hyde Town Sheriff's Posse will open the festival at 8 p.m. Friday, with music continuing non-stop until midnight. Other groups to perform Friday night include The Vinings (of Pampa), Border Line, The Plainsmen and the Elliott String Band. Each group will play sets of 45 minutes.

Saturday's music gets underway at noon with West Texas Grass, featuring Pampa's own Joe Grubb on the banjo. Other groups performing Saturday afternoon include The Missfits, Flatland Bluegrass and Native Land. Each will perform a 40-minute set.

After a 50-minute break, the Saturday evening set is scheduled to begin at 4:30 and run until well after midnight. The Vinings will perform again at about 7 p.m., as will the Tri-State Bluegrass Express, featuring Eudell Gifford of Lefors on guitar, at 9. Also featured Saturday evening will be the Top O' Texas Cloggers.

Other Saturday night performers are Jack Selby, John Blackburn, Kelly Gazzaway, Jesse White, Rick Branigan, Buddy Squyres, Willie Lewis, The Mayfields, Bob Suggs (The Big Sandy), Fireside Convention. Also featured will be repeat performances by the Hyde Town Sheriff's Posse and The Plainsmen.

Sunday Morning Gospel will begin at 10 a.m. and run through noon.

Throughout the festival, shade tree pickin' will be goin' on and campsites in the rough are available. All visiting bands are welcome.

Concessions such as grilled burgers, corn-on-the-cob, soft drinks and home-made ice cream will be on hand, courtesy of the Old Mobeetie Volunteer Fire Department.

Organizers anticipate close to 5,000 bluegrass lovers to converge on the community, a far cry from the first festival which had four bands and less than 200 spectators. The Panhandle Bluegrass and Old Tyme Music Association has grown from an idea in the minds of two Amarillo bluegrass buffs in 1979 to its present level of 327 families.

City meeting

the railroad ties are sometimes hard to walk on and require more maintenance.

Kirkpatrick also said he would prefer to see good lighting installed which would highlight the displays without causing distracting shadows at night.

Mayor Cowan said he appreciates the concept but he would like more study on possible city expenses before approving the construction. Commissioner Clyde Carruth said he also liked the concept, noting the artworks would probably "work in well" with later greenery landscaping.

The commission deferred action to allow for a study of the costs.

In other business, the commission gave final approval to an ordinance establishing fire lanes at the Pampa Mall, Wal-Mart and Coronado Shopping Center. The ordinance prohibits parking in the lanes except for emergency vehicles and sets fines and penalties for vehicles parking improperly in the lanes.

Vehicles parking in the fire lanes will be subject to impoundment and removal from the lanes, with the driver or owner required to pay wrecker service fees and expenses.

Commissioners also approved an ordinance which will prohibit parking of vehicles in the 100 block of South Frost by the Central Fire Station and the former Schneider Hotel. The ordinance prohibits parking on the west side of the block and on the east side from its intersection with Atchison Avenue and extending 266 feet north.

In other traffic matters, commissioners approved on first reading an ordinance providing for a stop sign at the intersection of Charles Street and Decatur Avenue and for installation of an automatic traffic control signal device at the intersection of 23rd Avenue and Duncan Street.

The commission also approved on first reading an ordinance establishing a school zone on Hobart Street by Horace Mann Elementary School. The zone will be located between a point 30 feet south of Montagu Street to a point 340 feet south of the center line of Buckler Street.

The school zone will be subject to the maximum speed limit of 20 miles an hour during regular school zone hours as at other schools.

In other action Tuesday, the city commission approved:

- appointment of Rick Nix to fill a vacancy on the Parks and Recreation Advisory Board created by the moving of Garland Nichols from Pampa;

- payments of $4,005.03 to Wagner and Klein, Inc., for architectural services on the City Hall renovation; $172,777.50 to Wiley Hicks, Inc., for City Hall rehabilitation work; $92,640.40 to Lewis Construction Co. for street and drainage improvements; and $6,747.69 to Kelley Engineering for engineering services;

- acceptance of the Hereford Breeders Association Livestock Building at the rodeo grounds to maintain the show barn for use in conjunction with stock shows, the annual rodeo and other community uses; and

- two accounts payable.

The commission rejected two bids for a three-wheeled vehicle for use by the Pampa Police Department in traffic control. Police Chief J. J. Ryzman said a study indicated the traffic control could be handled by a walking route. He has suggested the money could be better spent on purchasing a motorcycle for police use.

Mayor Cowan presented the Employee of the Month Award to Robert Young, a Pampa fireman. Young was out of town and the award was accepted by his daughter.

Houston council okays sanctions

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston will divest from companies that do business in South Africa after city officials voted to pass an ordinance hailed as milestone legislation by groups pushing for economic sanctions.

"This is one of the strongest divestment ordinances anywhere in the United States," said Councilman Ernest McGowan, who for more than a year has spearheaded the Houston move to take sanctions against South Africa.

"It sends out the message that this city is against slavery anywhere in the world," he said. "It's something Houston should be proud of."

Sarpalius to seek ruling on separating gas, liquid

AMARILLO - State Sen. Bill Sarpalius has announced he will ask for an Attorney General's opinion on the Texas Railroad Commission's Statewide Rule 26 regarding white oil matters.

Holding a press conference earlier this week at his Amarillo office, the Canyon Democrat claimed major oil companies are avoiding paying millions of dollars in state taxes because the RRC is not enforcing the statewide rule in the Panhandle oil and gas fields.

In a letter to Atty. Gen. Jim Mattox, Sen. Sarpalius asks for an opinion on Rule 26, which requires gas well operators to separate natural gas liquids from natural gas so taxing entities and royalty owners can be paid for both.

Sarpalius claims RRC interpretation of the rule has favored major oil companies with their gas wells, keeping taxing entities and royalty owners from receiving payments due to them. He said the RRC does not enforce the rule in the Panhandle fields against the majors.

RRC staff members have claimed there is not enough significant amounts of liquids produced by the gas wells to justify requiring the separators to be installed on leases.

"I don't think the state can be completely accurate without separating the liquids from the gas," Sarpalius contended at his Tuesday press conference.

In his letter, the state senator also asks for an opinion on whether the RRC can change the manner in which liquids are reported to the state with only a letter and not a full rule-making hearing. He has suggested the order against independents be set aside to allow them to resume production.

Royalty owners and other interested parties have complained about the production of natural gas liquids by the majors after a number of Panhandle area independent oilmen were shut down by the commission last year in rulings during the white oil controversy.

Many of the independents, so-called "white oil operators," were separating natural gas liquids (the white oil) from casing-head gas with low temperature extraction units (LTX units).

In May of last year the RRC ordered tests for all wells in the field with LTX units, leading to the shut down of many wells not meeting the required oil to gas ratios for well classification purposes. Many of the independents had been using their white oil production to meet the ratio standards.

The independents and others have claimed the majors also should be held accountable for their liquids obtained from the natural gas.

But the majors have contended they do not need to separate the liquids from gas, claiming they pay royalties based on the heat value (basic thermal units) of gas, which is supposedly greater when there are still liquids in the gas.

Staff members in the State Comptroller's office also have said the majors do not need to install the separators since they pay according to the BTU value of the gas.

Sarpalius said the ruling by the RRC needs further clarification and has asked the Attorney General's office to investigate whether the majors are receiving preferential treatment under the statewide rule.

Hobby, Lewis differ on increasing taxes

AUSTIN (AP) — Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby is taking his tax talk on the road, but Speaker Gib Lewis says Hobby is wasting his time.

Tax bills must start in the House, and Lewis said Wednesday there is no chance of that happening during the August special legislative session. Spending cuts, not tax hikes, will be used to attack the deficit, Lewis said.

Hobby's office has announced he will go to seven cities to talk about his plan.

"He's really definitely concluded the only way to deal with the problem is a combination of spending cuts and revenue increases," said Saralee Tiede, Hobby's press secretary.

Lewis said the special session, scheduled to start Aug. 6, is no place to offer a tax bill. Gov. Mark White, who has said spending cuts are the top priority, called the special session to deal with a state deficit that is expected to grow to at least $3 billion by Aug. 31, 1987.

"I just don't think with the economy of the state we can afford a tax increase," Lewis said.

Appropriations Committee Chairman Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, said the Hobby trip is a "great thing."

"The other side needs to be heard from," Rudd said, branding as "the other side" anyone who wants a tax hike.

The chance of getting a tax bill through the House is "minus 1 percent," he said.

The appropriations panel on Wednesday continued looking at possible spending cuts. No action will be taken until the special session begins, Rudd said.

Ms. Tiede said Hobby will begin his tour Tuesday in Dallas and make stops in Lubbock, Amarillo, El Paso, Midland and San Antonio before winding it up Aug. 4 in Houston.

"He is going to name some of his recommendations for spending cuts and for where you can raise revenue," Ms. Tiede said.

Hobby also will tell his audiences why he believes it would be irresponsible to make all the spending cuts needed to balance the budget, she said.

Among the plans Hobby will push is an expansion of the sales tax to cover many services now exempt.

During the tour, Hobby will talk about his plan with business, civic and local government leaders.

"You know, persuasion really is not what is needed at this point," he said. "People understand what the budgetary problem is. It needs to be solved by a combination of cuts and tax increases to replace the revenue lost by the collapse of oil and gas."

Ms. Tiede said Hobby knows he faces a possible roadblock on the House side.

"We've talked to the speaker, and the speaker made it very clear he sees no way he is going to pass a tax bill," she said. "But Lt. Gov. Hobby feels it is important to try and explain what the situation is."

While several House members have said they are waiting to see White's plan, the governor has asked for help from local government leaders.

In a July 11 letter sent to 14,000 local election officials, White said, "Most of you are facing a similar budget situation with even fewer revenue options. I invite you to share your experience, give me your ideas and actively participate with me and members of the Legislature as we embark on this important mission."

Postage for the mailing cost more than $3,000 and was paid for with state money.

Property insurance increases recommended to state board

AUSTIN (AP) — Damage caused by too much bad weather the past three years is the primary reason a personal property insurance rate increase is needed, according to two recommendations to the State Board of Insurance.

The Texas Insurance Advisory Association, representing the industry, recommended an statewide increase of 16.9 percent.

The board's staff recommended a statewide average increase for all classes of 5.3 percent, including the widely sold homeowners policy.

The board was to consider today the recommendations from both its staff and the industry that Texas homeowners pay more for personal property insurance the next year.

However, the staff recommendations would give apartment dwellers a reduction on personal property insurance.

In 1985, the statewide average was increased 2.2 percent, while the 1984 average, which did not become effective until March 15, 1985, was a 5.3 percent increase.

The staff recommendation called for a statewide increase in homeowners insurance of 8.6 percent. The standard homeowners policy covers insurance for fire and lightning, windstorm, hurricane and hail, explosion, vandalism and malicious mischief, freezing and y6t;s25neurance for accidents that happen on the property.

The staff recommended a 10.8 percent decrease in tenant homeowners insurance.

The industry proposed an increase of 19.9 percent in homeowners rates, and a 1.1 percent increase for tenant homeowners.

The association said the difference between the two recommendations was "attributable to the industry's traditional inclusion of a 5 percent provision for profit and contingencies and differences over the trending of losses and other technical matters."

The industry statement said the primary factor in the rate increase was the catastrophe losses in Texas the last three years.

"Specifically, the effect of Hurricane Alicia in August 1983, the severe winter weather of December in 1983 and the record number of weather-related catastrophes that Texas suffered in 1985.

The largest 1985 weather loss in Texas was at Lubbock where wind, hail and tornadoes caused $57.3 million in damages on May 6-8.

Lighten up some, will you?

Pampa had a Krazy Daze this past Saturday. For personal reasons, I didn't get to make it down there, but it seemed like it must have been fun at times — a water heater race, a bed race, Dolly Parton look-alike contest, a drag fashion show, bouncing ping pong balls.

With the economic woes many of us are experiencing, it offered a chance to just have some fun. It's something we ought to do more often.

But I suggest the city not just be limited to a Krazy Daze and other similar events aimed as much at encouraging shopping as at offering fun for customers, with more spectators than participants. (And I'm not criticizing that; shopping ought to be more fun, especially at the hurried times surrounding Christmas, Mother's and Father's Days, graduation and other commercial-type holidays.)

Such events can be fun, as can the Christmas holiday events and the activities surrounding the Top o' Texas Rodeo.

But what this town really needs is a Mardi Gras kind of activity: a chance for everyone to lay back, relax, come out of our shells, get crazy and just cast aside our worries and cares for one day a year.

I've never had the pleasure of attending the New Orleans Mardi Gras, but I have seen the motion picture Black Orpheus several times. Using a retelling of the Orpheus myth from the Greeks, the film uses the backdrop of Mardi Gras time in Brazil, with the parades, costumes and parties providing the entrancing backdrop for the story.

I'm not saying we need to dip into Greek and Roman mythology to come up with ideas, but the idea of just letting go and having a good time at a citywide party is appealing.

This is a fine town, with a lot of fine people. But too many of us are too uptight at times, I have to admit, especially when discussion turns to white oil, farm prices, Nicaragua, South Africa, indigent health care, our city streets, a public golf course, AIDS or even, heaven forbid, the possibility of there actually being — pardon the word — liberals who dare to live in this area of a free nation.

Since no one has yet taken seriously my former proposal to have a Mr. Top o' Texas Scholarship Pageant, I now propose that we set aside one day a year, say in late spring or early fall, where we just have a series of parties and parades throughout the city in which everyone can give in to general silliness with no one having the right or gall to criticize or judge others.

We could wear whatever costume or dress we wish, from Victorian overdressed elegance to skimpy beach attire, from exaggerated yuppiness to deluxe scrunginess, from smelly cowboy outfits to punk rocker no-style. Anyone daring to lambast another's choice of wear would be tossed into a cell on a downtown street to sit out the rest of the party.

The parties could last all day, from sunrise one day to sunrise the next, with the parties held in public places open to all, no one turned away as long as they behave reasonably well, avoid any fights or arguments and refrain from any patently overt acts of grossness.

Anyone making a definite political or economic statement would be celled away under the Duncan Street bridge until he or she apologizes on the knees, and then be let out only on probation.

In short, we could all just have a good time, be silly, dress crazily and put aside all judgments against anyone's appearance, personal taste, beliefs or area of residence (even against transplanted danyankes). And no commercialism would be allowed except for the sale of food, drink and party favors.

Those too embarrassed to participate or still too uptight to let themselves go or to let others enjoy themselves could just stay home and watch CNN around the clock while the rest of us let it all hang out.

And we all could make a pact that after the day is over, no one will remind anyone else of how stupid or silly he or she had been.

While it's not exactly a Mardi Gras occasion, Saturday will offer a chance for fun when Radio Station KGRO holds its "Summer Splash" beach party at the M. K. Brown Swimming Pool from noon to 4 p.m. Program Director Mike Kneisl assures me there will be prizes galore and fun for all at the pool, with the station DJs broadcasting live from the site during the party.

And you can wear your swimsuits, get wet and bask in the sun for the fun. And get a chance to see what a Kneisl looks like.

Reagan says Texas needs Republican governor to help economic recovery

DALLAS (AP) — Electing a Republican as Texas governor this fall is crucial to the GOP's fortunes across the nation, according to the country's top Republican, President Reagan.

"I hope the people of Texas know that by electing Bill Clements they won't only be putting Texas back on the road to economic good times, they'll also be sending a message to the rest of the country, especially to the Democratic Party leaders," Reagan said during a stop in Dallas to campaign for Clements.

Ousting Democratic Gov.

Mark White in the fall will send the Democratic Party to stop policies of "tax and tax and spend and spend," Reagan said.

Reagan spoke at a GOP rally held at Dallas' Apparel Mart and later was guest of honor at a private luncheon at the Loew's Anatole Hotel.

He credited Republican policies for bringing lower taxes, lower inflation and interest rates and creating new jobs. But, he said, Texas is experiencing financial difficulties because of Democratic leadership in Austin.

"I think it's a tragedy that hard times have hit Texas and that unemployment is as high as it is in this great state. I want you all to know that this administration in Washington is aware of Texas problems," he said.

"So let's say something else flat out: One of the most important steps Texans can take towards full economic recovery is to say no to any more years of tax and tax and spend and spend in Austin," he said.

Reagan said his memories of Dallas include the 1976 and 1980 primaries and his nomination here at the National Republican Convention in 1984.

"Flying over the convention center this morning I started asking myself, I wonder how folks feel about giving it one more try," he said, winning a burst of applause. "Thank you for that, but I'm kidding of course," he said.

Reagan said Texas voters can influence national policy makers by their vote this November. "Believe me, the liberals in Washington know what's at stake in this election," he said.

At the rally, a group of Dallas-based protesters against South Africa's apartheid policy raised signs spelling out the words, "Sanctions Now," and some heckled Reagan during the speech.

Chamber seeks more helpful role

CRANE, Texas (AP) — With unemployment figures climbing into double digits as energy industry fortunes plummet, civic cheerleading must try harder than ever.

The effect on Crane has not differed from that on any other small town with an economy based primarily on oilfield service and production.

Several small businesses have closed in the town of 3,500. Dozens of jobless residents are moving out. What little oilfield service business is left goes to Midland-Odessa companies.

"Everywhere you go — at coffee shops, on street corners, in offices — all you hear is how bad things are and how much worse they're going to get," said Gene Clack, president of the Crane County Chamber of Commerce board of directors.

To fight back, the chamber has hung a new shingle on its door. No longer just cheerleaders, chamber leaders are using psychology to turn the town around.

It's called the United for Crane campaign. A letter to the editor in the Crane newspaper described it as an effort to organize businesses and individuals to help one another during difficult economic times.

"I hope there will be several things accomplished, the main one being to make some sort of mental adjustment in people's attitude about where Crane is headed," Clack told the San Angelo Standard-Times.

Thus far, the most specific plans are to host a countywide rally on Aug. 21, to print weekly,

"What's so good about Crane" columns in the newspaper, and to encourage major oil companies to hire Crane oilfield service companies.

Major business operators tend to use Midland-Odessa companies because they underbid small town companies, said Jincy Burks, chamber secretary-manager.

Burks said city and county governments will be asked to pass resolutions to support Crane businesses.

"It's mostly to build up morale and remind people that the town is not dying and remind them of why we're living in Crane," Burks said.

More money not the answer

BY THOMAS SOWELL

One of the pious things that gets said over and over again in newspaper and television editorials is that we should pay our public school teachers higher salaries. Sometimes the claim is that they are doing an important job. Sometimes the claim is that they are paid less than some other occupation that requires less education.

Both claims sound good the first time around, but neither will stand up under scrutiny. We ought to start paying attention to the facts before we start paying out more of the taxpayers' money.

There is no denying that teaching the next generation is an important responsibility. But that also means that a rotten job of teaching is even more disastrous than a rotten job in some other areas. Moreover, those who do a rotten job of running a store or a restaurant are likely to find themselves going bankrupt, while those who do a rotten job of teaching are likely to find themselves with tenure for life, and maybe moving up to become rotten principals, when they get enough seniority. At the very least, they can expect regular pay raises the longer they keep messing up our children's education.

A California teacher officially certified as incompetent was recently offered an extra $40,000 to take early retirement (complete with pension, of course), because the cost of trying to fire her could have been even greater. When incompetent teachers are too young to try this approach, it is not uncommon for them to be transferred somewhere else. When the parents at the new school finally realize how terrible the teacher is and set up a howl, a new transfer is arranged. This musical chairs scenario is so common that it has a name: "The Dance of the Lemons."

The schools that are most likely to get rid of bad teachers are those where the parents are affluent, well-educated, articulate and influential. The schools that are most likely to get stuck with real losers teaching their kids are schools in neighborhoods where the people are less fortunate, where the parents can be ignored — and where a decent education is the child's only hope for a better life.

But while the very worst teachers are likely to end up where they can do the most damage, the whole public school system has been deteriorating across the board. Falling test scores for two decades have been accompanied by rising grades — and rising propaganda about how this was "the best and the brightest" generation of students. It was only after the public became outraged that some few changes were made to stop the decline. But we are still not back where we were.

The first responses of the education establishment to the criticism of falling test scores was denial and lying. Teachers' unions and educational administrators dismissed the tests as "irrelevant." Then they claimed that the Scholastic Aptitude Test scores were going down because so many disadvantaged students were now going to college that they lowered the average. This was a lie. It was not just the average that was going down. The absolute numbers of students scoring in the top brackets was also falling. The average SAT scores at many of the top colleges and universities are still lower than they were 20 years ago.

Even those who acknowledged that the schools have failed seem to think that paying more money to teachers will attract better people into the public schools. Ordinarily this would make sense, if we were talking about an occupation where people were recruited from an open and competitive labor market. But the teachers' unions, educational codes, and teachers' colleges have done their best to prevent this from being an open and competitive market for talent.

The cold fact is that anyone wanting to become a permanent, tenured teacher in most public schools has to have taken so-called "education" courses. These Mickey Mouse courses have been a bad joke on campuses across the country for many years. Serious, intelligent students avoid them like the plague. The late James B. Conant's classic survey of schools of education called them the "intellectual slums" of the university. Students majoring in education have long had the worst test scores of students majoring in any field. Yet this is the pool from which we are supposed to draw better teachers by paying higher salaries.

Many private schools get better teachers while paying lower salaries than the public schools. Private schools are not required to limit their selection to people who come from the "intellectual slum" of education courses. They can hire people with degrees in mathematics to teach mathematics, people with degrees in chemistry to teach chemistry, and people with other degrees in real subjects to teach those subjects.

You can throw all the money you want at a poorly qualified pool of people and still not get a good teaching profession out of it. Before trying to wring more money out of the taxpayers, perhaps it is time to start looking at the barriers that keep good people out of teaching — and the rules that keep rotten teachers in the classroom long after they have demonstrated their incompetence.

Cleaning up magazines

I walked into my favorite book and magazine store and said to Ernie, the manager, "The usual, Ernie."

I've been going to see Ernie for years. Each month, I go to the store and he lets me thumb through the latest copy of Penthouse.

When my heart rate reaches 190, I give the magazine back to Ernie. It's my alternative to jogging.

But there was something terribly wrong this time.

"I'm sorry," said Ernie, "but I'm afraid I can't give you the usual anymore."

"What do you mean?" I asked, astonished.

"It's that Meese study on pornography," he explained. "I'm not allowed to carry Penthouse anymore."

"Why on earth not?" I went on.

"The Meese study showed a direct link between pornography and crime. A guy came in here last week, picked up a Penthouse and went right outside the store and jaywalked."

"He was arrested and goes on trial next week. Two guys from the State Department showed up here at the store a couple of hours later and said if I didn't take Penthouse off my shelves I would be subject to arrest myself. They mentioned something about a firing squad."

I couldn't believe what I was hearing, but, OK, so Ernie didn't have Penthouse anymore. I could settle for Playboy.

"Sorry," said Ernie.

"We don't have Playboy anymore either. A Stillwater, Okla., man bought a copy of Playboy and later that afternoon was seen leering at the new school marm. I can't sell Playboy anymore."

"Hustler?"

"Nope. A man in Fargo, N.D., read a copy of Hustler and was caught trying to make an early withdrawal on his Certificate of Deposit at the bank. He had to pay a substantial penalty which was being the subject of a Jerry Falwell sermon. Hustler is a goner too."

I asked Ernie what other materials had been ordered off the shelves as a result of the Meese study.

"Sports Illustrated," said Ernie. "It was learned that the annual swimsuit edition was causing a high percentage of the male population to buy their wives skimpy bikinis and insist they lose weight. That, of course, could lead to the use of so-called marital aids, and the Supreme Court recently ruled anything kinky was against the law."

"National Geographic is out. Too many pictures of topless natives in third world countries. And we can't carry Better Homes and Gardens anymore, either. There was simply too many articles about bedrooms."

"We also lost Field and Stream. The Meese study said it couldn't find anything specifically lurid about the magazine, but that it looked fishy."

Before Ernie went any further, I asked, "What CAN you sell now?"

"I still got the Bible," he said. "But there's been a few changes."

"For instance?"

"Remember Mary Magdalene?" Ernie asked.

I said I did.

"She's no longer a prostitute."

"What is she?"

"The Avon Lady."

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Our opinion

Sorry Mr. Bullock, we can't help you

State Comptroller Bob Bullock has appealed to newspapers across Texas to editorially endorse a proposed federal law he's pushing that would require mail-order firms to collect and remit sales taxes on merchandise they sell in other states. He even mailed out a suggested editorial for newspapers to use in case they don't want write their own.

Our response?
Sorry Bob. You've asked the wrong folks. We can't help you. We've never seen a tax we like — and the arguments you advance in favor of this one doesn't compel us to change our minds.

"Mail-order firms have had a free ride for the last 19 years since a court decision handed them special privileges to legally avoid collecting taxes," Bullock wrote.

If you read that real fast, you get the impression that out-of-state firms are escaping payment of taxes that should go to the state of Texas. But that's an incorrect impression. The mail-order firms are not escaping anything except the inconvenience of collecting the taxes. The Texas consumer is who's getting a break under current laws, and is who will have to send more money to Austin if the new proposal is approved.

"Out of state firms shouldn't get special treatment that results in unfair competition to Texas business," Bullock also wrote. But Bob, what about the mail-order firms in Texas? They're treated the same as out-of-state firms. So where's the unfairness?

He also says it's not fair to force local merchants to collect sales taxes, while mail-order firms don't have to. We agree. It's not fair to force any merchant to be an unpaid tax collector for the state. But adding mail-order businesses to the list of those treated unfairly won't lift the burden on local merchants. It'll simply mean that more businessmen are treated unfairly. One wrong would become two wrongs.

"Considering these tough economic times, Texas government would do well to snap shut loopholes and other special tax advantages," Bullock wrote. That's a refrain we're going to hear often in the coming weeks as legislators search for ways to increase state revenues without calling them taxes so they can avoid the unpleasant chore of cutting their precious state "services" to balance the budget. But thoughtful Texans should remember that any time the state finds new ways of raising revenues, it is the consumer, the ordinary working person, who will ultimately have to shell out by paying higher prices, regardless of whether the methods used are called "closing loopholes," "increasing fees" or "taxing business."

The job of the state comptroller is to collect taxes. It is not to pass laws, either at the state or federal level. Despite this, Bullock has utilized material from the comptroller's office, labor by his employees, and state funds for postal expenses, in lobbying for this legislation.

If he's really interested in getting the state budget in balance, he might start by refraining from spending taxpayers' money on legislative activities that legally are none of the comptroller's business.

"Sorry sir, dollar bills simply don't get things done in Washington anymore."

Bush looks strong in spite of perils

By William A. Rusher

After Harry Truman's astonishing defeat of Thomas E. Dewey in 1948, political reporters besieged that famous wise man of American politics, Jim Farley, begging for an explanation.

"It's very simple, boys," Genial Jim replied. "The American people had been thinking of Tom Dewey as the next president for so long they decided it was time for a change."

Something similar is one of the perils confronting George Bush. He has been the front-runner for the 1988 Republican presidential nomination so long that terminal boredom has set in among political observers. Surely, they tell each other, something will happen in the next two years to derail that express. Things can't just go on like this, can they?

Perhaps not, but Bush's basic assets are pretty imposing. Nobody questions his experience: As congressman, Republican national chairman, ambassador to the United Nations, liaison to Communist China, CIA director and vice president, he has held almost every kind of governmental job there is except a judgeship. Politically, he has identified himself closely on every major issue with the position of the most popular president in modern American history. If, as seems likely, the voters in 1988 are looking for "more of the same," no one is in a better position to pledge it.

To be sure, Bush's close identification with Reagan and his policies has one major disadvantage: It makes it virtually impossible for Bush to stake out different positions of his own, and thereby to seem to be "his own man."

Still, when you analyze Bush's 1988 game plan, it is undeniably impressive. Somebody has got to become the Other Major Contender for the Republican nomination, and who that is probably will hinge on the party's Iowa caucus and the New Hampshire primary, which will start the ritual war dance as usual. Robert Dole plans to make his big effort in Iowa; Jack Kemp apparently is counting on New Hampshire. Bush, of course, will try to do the very best he can in both.

Next comes Super Tuesday: March 8, 1988, on which at least 13 Southern and border states will pick their delegates — one quarter of all the delegates to the convention. Of course nobody has to, or is likely to, win them all. Bush certainly believes he can corral a lot of them. But note one interesting thing: The Southern states will almost surely be the area of Pat Robertson's greatest strength, and he will be competing primarily for the votes of possible challengers perceived as standing to the right of Bush: Kemp and Paul Laxalt (if he runs).

Opposition push for election nullification

CHIHUAHUA, Mexico (AP) — Widespread protests continued Wednesday against allegations of vote fraud as diverse sectors of society in the northern border state of Chihuahua united against the country's longtime ruling party.

The ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI, won the governor's race, all 14 state legislative elections and 65 of 67 mayoral races in the July 6 elections. The PRI never has lost a major election in its 57-year history.

Cries of vote rigging, however, have united diverse sectors of Chihuahua society, including the traditionally silent Roman Catholic Church and the business community.

"Fraud is never the way to a legitimate triumph," said Archbishop Adalberto Almeida of the Chihuahua archdiocese, who canceled Mass for last Sunday to protest the "magnitude of this social sin."

He called off the protest at the last minute on orders from Pope John Paul II.

Archdiocese Vicar General Raul Trevizo said Tuesday, however, the church "will continue to denounce human rights violations" in the elections.

The city Chamber of Commerce, the Chamber of Industry and the Business Council called two, half-day work stoppages to protest and on Monday urged people to withdraw all their cash from banks for two days.

Andres Jimenez Sierra, director of the Chihuahua Banking Institution, said he had seen no panic withdrawals at the banks which are controlled by the government.

In its resounding election triumph, the PRI regained seven key mayoralities lost three years ago to the conservative National Action Party, or PAN, including the one in this state capital of 600,000 people and the border city of Juarez with 750,000 residents.

Protesters contend government representatives running the elections stuffed ballot boxes, removed known PAN supporters from voting lists, refused to admit PAN pollwatchers into voting places and delayed the voting process for up to 10 hours in PAN strongholds.

Gov.-elect Fernando Baeza, who met with President Miguel de la Madrid in Mexico City on Tuesday, said all doubts about the fairness of the elections would be clarified by the state legislature.

PAN congressional representatives met with Interior Secretary Manuel Bartlett on Tuesday to present their evidence of fraud

Pardon urged for innocent prison inmate

HOUSTON (AP) — A 26-year-old Minnesota man is awaiting a decision by Gov. Mark White that could release him from prison and clear him for a rape prosecution now say he didn't commit.

The state Board of Pardons and Paroles voted unanimously Tuesday to recommend a full pardon for Steven Lynn Fossum of Mabel, Minn.

"We hope to have a decision in the next 24 hours or so. We're hoping he (White) will go ahead and act on the recommendation," Mike Roach, spokesman for the parole board, said Wednesday.

For the victim's mother, the board's decision is an answer to her prayers.

"I never thought that he was guilty at all," Delone Fossum said. "He is a well-mannered young man, quiet and shy and would never do the things they say he did."

Ms. Fossum, who arrived in Houston Wednesday evening with her oldest son, Roger, said

Steven Fossum had moved to Texas from Minnesota six years ago to get a job. He worked for a water well drilling company before he was convicted, she said.

The two are anxious to take Fossum home, she said. Neither, however, knew when the younger Fossum will be released from the Texas Department of Corrections Coffield Unit in Tennessee Colony.

"If we get the call, there's a car load of us ready to go get him," she said. Ms. Fossum has not seen her son since July 1, 1985, and he does not know she is in Texas, she said.

The parole board's action Wednesday came after Minnesota television station WCCO of Minneapolis uncovered new evidence that raised questions about Fossum's conviction.

Harris County District Attorney John B. Holmes last week wrote the parole board and recommended that Fossum be freed. The board's recommendation was sent to the governor's general counsel on Wednesday.

Teri Greenwood, who works in the counsel's office, said lawyers were studying the case and preparing a memo on it for White.

"There's no definite time frame for a decision by the governor," she said.

Ann Arnold, the governor's press secretary, said White had made no decision.

According to Holmes, part of the new evidence included a detailed analysis of semen samples that concluded Fossum couldn't have raped the victim.

Semen tests done at the time of the trial were "inconclusive," trial defense attorney Xavier Grenas said. Attorneys said testing at the time wasn't sophisticated enough to yield the results now found.

John Ackerman, Fossum's lawyer, said the new tests "provided sufficient information that there were two different people involved, contrary to her (the victim's) testimony. And secondly, neither could have been Fossum."

Ackerman blamed the state for not questioning the story of the 23-year-old complainant.

"They relied too heavily on the word of (the woman) without doing any checking on the things she told them," Ackerman said.

Ms. Fossum says he doesn't have much faith in the Texas justice system.

"I feel that they don't have much justice to do this," she said. "We feel like they called us liars and the lying part was on the other end."

Authorities said that if Fossum is released from prison, he would still be on probation for a 1982 rape, which he was convicted of in November 1983. But Ackerman said he believes tests also may prove Fossum innocent of that crime as well.

Ms. Fossum said she hopes to clear it with a probation officer to take her son home to Minnesota.

WATER RIDE — Kenneth Barber, 9, totes his cousin Brandon Barber, 5, through a sprinkler recently on the White Oak High School football stadium in Longview. Extended weather forecast for East Texas calls for seasonable weather with highs in the mid-90s and low in the mid-70s.

Tenneco says oil recession responsible for earnings drop

HOUSTON (AP) — Depressed oil prices are being blamed for Tenneco Inc.'s 47 percent drop in second-quarter earnings.

Net income for three months ending June 30 totaled $80 million, compared with earnings of $152 million for the same quarter a year ago. Earnings per share were 43 cents, compared with 95 cents for the similar period in 1985, the company said Wednesday.

"As long as oil and gas prices continue at current depressed levels, Tenneco's earnings will remain under pressure," said James L. Ketelson, Tenneco chairman and chief executive officer.

Sales and operating revenues for the quarter were recorded at $3.7 billion, equal to the second quarter of 1985.

"Although most of the company's other major divisions had increased operating income compared with the second quarter of 1985, these improvements were not sizeable enough to offset the adverse effects of significantly lower oil and gas prices on exploration and production operations," Ketelson said.

Tenneco's other energy businesses — natural gas pipelines and oil processing and marketing — both reported somewhat higher earnings compared to the same quarter last year.

Among Tenneco's non-energy divisions, construction and farm equipment, automotive, packaging and chemicals had improved operating results for the quarter.

Tenneco's insurance businesses also had improved results for the quarter. The company recently announced reaching an agreement in principle to sell those businesses to I.C.H. Corp. of Louisville, Ky.

The transaction is expected to be completed this year, the company said.

Two lobbyists to serve in special session

AUSTIN (AP) — The August special legislative session could include two lawmakers who now are registered lobbyists.

The session also will catch the House one member short, leaving Abilene unrepresented.

Because the special session was unforeseen earlier this year, Sen. Ed Howard, D-Texas, and Rep. Bill Messer, D-Belton, went about their plans to resign and become lobbyists. Howard thought he quit in April to go to work for a law firm that lobbies for several clients.

But, because of a constitutional provision, Howard will be in office when the special session convenes Aug. 6. A legislator remains in office until a replacement is sworn in.

Messer, a registered lobbyist for several major groups, plans to resign his House seat soon, but he has not announced a date.

Messer also will be in office for the special session.

Abilene will be unrepresented when the special session convenes because Gary Thompson resigned. Unlike Howard, Thompson's resignation sticks. The Texas Constitution makes him ineligible for office because he went to work for a state agency, the Teacher Retirement System.

Aug. 9 special elections are set to replace Howard and Thompson. If either race goes to a runoff, it might not be decided until the session is over.

"If I had the gift of prophecy, I might have done it differently," Thompson said of his move that leaves Abilene temporarily unrepresented. "I just have to hope there is no runoff and the winner can assume the position within four or five days."

Howard works for a law firm that lobbies for amusement parks, telecommunications companies and local governments. He was unavailable for comment Wednesday at his Austin office. Last week, he told a reporter he would temporarily withdraw his lobby registration when the session begins.

Messer has resigned as chairman of the powerful House committee that sets the daily floor agenda but has not given up his seat. He has said since February that he would resign so that the special election to replace him could be held in conjunction with the November general election.

Messer is registered as a lobbyist for several major groups, including the Texas Chemical Council, Texas Association of Bank Holding Companies and the Texas Hospital Association.

He said he is uncertain what he will do about the special session, but will avoid voting on anything that presents a conflict of interests. He also said he might avoid voting at all.

"Howard and I will probably do the same thing. We will either come and tell everybody this is who we had registered (as lobbyists) for and we won't vote if there is a conflict. Or we could come in and say, 'Here we are, now excuse us,'" he said.

"I'm probably leaning toward just not voting," Messer added. "I wish this wasn't happening."

John Hildreth, Texas director of Common Cause, echoed Messer's sentiments.

"Sure there's a problem. You should not have registered lobbyists actually voting in the legislative process. But it's difficult to suggest that any pocket of the state should be without representation," he said.

Former Lone Star employees obtain court order on pensions

MARSHALL, Texas (AP) — Former employees of Lone Star Steel Co. and its subsidiaries obtained a federal court order that temporarily bars their former employers from obtaining control of pension funds.

The order, which was issued Wednesday by U.S. District Judge Robert Parker in federal court in Marshall, resulted from two class action lawsuits initiated earlier this month.

The suits were filed July 11 against the companies by more than 2,000 terminated salaried employees of the Lone Star-affiliated companies. The workers seek company retirement benefits they say they never received.

Parker's order is effective until a Sept. 22 hearing to examine the workers' claims for retirement benefits from Lone Star, T&N Industries and other subsidiaries.

As a result of the order, the companies cannot proceed with a reported plan to liquidate the pension programs, which have an estimated value of $12 million. The companies also cannot appropriate the funds for other uses.

Franklin Jones of Marshall, an attorney for the workers, said no disruption of pension benefits being paid to retirees of Lone Star companies will occur.

Parker indicated Wednesday that he issued the order to give attorneys for both sides more time to prepare their arguments.

David Noteware of Dallas, an attorney representing Lone Star companies, said the company feels the workers are in error.

The first suit was filed by E.B. Goolsby and Coy L. Payne, both former Lone Star Steel workers, on behalf of more than 1,500 former Lone Star Steel employees.

The defendants named in that lawsuit include Lone Star Steel; the pension committee which administers the Lone Star Steel pension plan; and the Northern Trust Co. of Illinois — a trustee of the Lone Star Steel Master Retirement Trust which funds the Lone Star Steel pension plan for salaried personnel.

The second lawsuit was filed by Jerry L. Hatten and Nathan L. Pilcher, both former employees of T&N-affiliated companies on behalf of more than 650 former employees of T&N Industries or its subsidiaries.

Among the defendants named in that suit are T&N Industries; Texas & Northern Railway Co.; LESCO Transportation Co.; LESCO Trucking Co.; T&N Fabricators; the pension committee which administers the pension plan for employees of T&N and its subsidiaries; and Northern Trust.

Both lawsuits allege former employees of the companies who were terminated in early 1986 during major layoffs were denied termination benefits which were approved by the companies' directors last year.

The companies' directors and pension committees failed to comply with the terms of the pension plans as well as the Employment Retirement Security Act of 1974, the suits allege.

The suits also claim the boards terminated the pension plans in November 1985 without providing many terminated employees their rightful share of remaining pension funds.

Hughes Tool posts record loss for second quarter

HOUSTON (AP) — Hughes Tool Co. posted the company's largest quarterly loss in its 77-year history with a $445.8 million deficit, which the company blamed on the current oil recession.

The Houston-based oil drilling equipment maker announced Wednesday the loss of $7.97 per share for the quarter ending June 30, compared with net income of $1 million, or 2 cents a share, during the same period last year.

Spokesman Wayne Bryant said the loss was the largest since the company began operating in 1909, the year the father of the late billionaire Howard Hughes Jr. developed the rotary drill bit. Hughes Tool operated until 1985 without reporting a loss, but the depressed oil industry has since created havoc, he said.

Writedowns during the period, included in the report, consisted of about $250 million for plant and equipment, $169 million for inventories and $77 million for other charges.

For the first six months, the company had a loss of $466.1 million, or $8.33 per share, compared with net income of $1.6 million, or 3 cents per share, for the same period last year, according to a company statement.

Net sales for the three months were posted at $184.6 million, down 46 percent from 1985, officials said.

The steep decline was prompted by a sharp drop in sales of oil equipment as energy companies cut back operations in response to falling oil prices, spokesman Don King said.

"During the second quarter, U.S. drilling activity has dropped to the lowest level ever recorded by the company," said W.A. Kistler Jr., president and chief executive officer.

The average oil and gas rig count in the nation during the second quarter was 790, down 58 percent from the average of 1,876 a year ago, officials said. Foreign rig activity averaged 1,124, a 24 percent drop from 1,477 in the same period last year.

As of Monday, 692 rigs were operating in the nation, the company reported

More rain for south, experts say it's too little, too late

By The Associated Press

Storms poured more precious rain on the parched South, but too late to quench dusty cornfields or help farmers ease more than $1.5 billion in losses from a drought that has sparked emergency donations of hay and even ice.

Shipments of hay for starving livestock continued pouring in today from across the North and Midwest, where farmers already have donated tons. Services have been offered free by train, trucking, telephone and ice companies.

"My cows are eating Illinois hay for breakfast, Iowa hay for lunch, and they'll be having Indiana hay for Sunday dinner," Tom Trantham, a South Carolina dairy farmer, told officials in Indianapolis on Wednesday.

The drought has been compounded by a 2½-week heat wave, which eased this week after killing 42 people.

Storms dumped 3 inches of rain on Richmond, Va., within two hours Wednesday, about 2½ inches on Mobile, Ala., and Berea, S.C., and 1.3 inches on Atlanta in less than an hour. The rain generally dissipated by early this morning, the National Weather Service said.

Scattered thunderstorms stretched Maryland to Florida on Tuesday, keeping temperatures below 100 degrees.

"The few bands of thunderstorms, of course — where they hit certainly didn't hurt. But basically it's still a bad situation," said Homer Rowley, assistant statistician in Virginia's Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services. "A lot of fields are beyond help."

In addition to the drought, the heat is killing poultry. About 610,000 broilers have died in Georgia in the last 13 days, said Abit Massey, executive director of the Georgia Poultry Federation. Georgia's $6 billion-a-year poultry industry is losing about $5 million a week, he said.

"It's horrible," Val Johnson, an Ohio woman traveling in South Carolina, said about the heat. "You see these skinny cattle standing in pastures that are all brown instead of green. The creeks are all dry and even weeds are brown."

The effects of the drought and heat already are being felt outside the region, according to Massachusetts Agriculture Department spokesman Christopher Phillips. New England produce prices have jumped 15 percent to 25 percent since mid-June, he said, while beef and pork prices have fallen 5 percent since last year, partly because farmers are selling starving animals as hay supplies drop.

A 100-car train was being loaded in Indianapolis today with 1,800 tons of hay donated by more than 120 Indiana farms. CSX Transportation Inc. donated use of the train, and it should be ready for the trip to South Carolina on Monday.

Indiana Bell and American Telephone & Telegraph Co. are donating services to coordinators of the program, said AT&T spokesman Greg Allen.

Lee Webster of Webster Trucking Co. in Donovan, Ill. said he would offer the services of some of his drivers to deliver donated hay.

A 43-truck Ohio National Guard convoy loaded with donated hay will set out Aug. 2 for Fort Bragg, N.C., Gov. Richard Celeste said.

Ohio farmers have donated more than 4,000 tons; Wisconsin farmers about 45,000 bales, or about 1,125 tons; New York farmers have donated some 13,000 bales, and Kentucky organized a shipment of 50,000 bales, officials said.

THEIR WELL RAN DRY — Jim Beam gets a drink of water Wednesday as his wife Faye fills a container from a spigot at the Piedmont, S.C., Fire Department. Their well ran dry six or seven weeks ago. There was a line of others waiting to fill up after the Beams. (AP Laserphoto)

Ice headed for heat, drought-stricken town

PIEDMONT, S.C. (AP) — Residents of this parched South Carolina town are awaiting a mountain of ice from Indiana, a gift that at least temporarily will turn Piedmont into the coolest haven in dehydrated Dixie.

Kit Kowski, owner of the 4K Ice Co. of South Bend, Ind., promised that 3,200 eight-pound bags of ice would arrive by refrigerated truck today.

Kowski said he decided to send the ice to this town of 600 people just southwest of Greenville in South Carolina's northwest corner after seeing an Associated Press photograph in the South Bend Tribune.

"It showed a group of thirsty people filling up their water jugs at the Piedmont Fire Department and I thought how terrible it must be to be caught in a drought and not have a cold drink of water," he said from South Bend. Kowski refused to say how much operation was costing him. "That doesn't matter. What does matter is that people are suffering and need help."

Fire Chief Doug Cowart said the ice would be transferred to another refrigerated truck and distributed on a first-come, first-serve basis.

Piedmont, which is in one of the most severely drought-stricken areas in the South, finally got some rain Tuesday.

"Boy, did we need this," Cowart shouted as he held out his hands and let himself be pelted by huge rain drops.

"This is the first good rain we've had in more than two months," Faye Beam said as the thunderstorm sent cascades of water down. "I thank God for every drop of it."

Mrs. Beam and her husband, Jim, have been without water since their well went dry more than six weeks ago. They and about 19 other families lined up at the fire station's outdoor spigot Wednesday to fill five-gallon jugs donated by a local chemical company.

"You can't imagine what it's like not to have water in this heat," said Mrs. Beam, whose husband is in ill health. A woman behind her nodded knowingly.

"My well has been bone dry for a month," said 60-year-old Margaret Simpson. "Until now I've been filling milk jugs at my daughter's house and hauling as many home as my car trunk will hold. It's terrible; there's no water for washing or cooking and I've got my 85-year-old mother living with me."

Administration is ready to help farmers as drought reaches tragic proportions

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — President Reagan, wrapping up a Southern campaign swing in drought-parched South Carolina, says his administration "stands ready to help" farmers suffering from the Southeast's devastating heat wave.

Reagan, in a speech prepared for delivery at a campaign rally for the gubernatorial campaign of Rep. Carroll Campbell, observed that the drought "is reaching tragic proportions."

The president made no mention of any specific action, except to say that he had sent an Agriculture Department team to South Carolina earlier this week "to assess the situation."

"Even when times are tough, you show your mettle," Reagan told his listeners in a state where agricultural experts estimate a $100 million crop and cattle loss.

"I want you to know that our administration stands ready to help," Reagan said.

Thousands of bales of hay have been unloaded from Air Force cargo jets to aid the state's beleaguered farmers. Last week, Reagan directed the Air Force to help speed hay donated by Midwestern farmers to the starving cattle in the South. As of Wednesday, 250 tons of hay had been airlifted to the state.

Estimates of the cost to states throughout the Southeast from the drought have put damage approach $1 billion. Some state agriculture officials in the South are calling for increased federal loans to help financially strapped farmers repackage existing loans to lighten their debt burden.

In his speech for Campbell, Reagan kept up the attacks on Washington and liberal Democrats that have helped him raise nearly $2 million for GOP campaigns in his two-day swing through Texas, Florida and South Carolina.

"These last couple of days we have been doing the kind of thing that I like best — getting away from Washington and out among the American people," Reagan said.

In contrast to his call for a strong domestic energy market in Texas on Wednesday, Reagan noted tumbling energy prices and asked his listeners, "Isn't it good to pull into the station today and watch the gallons on the pump add up faster than the dollars?"

Reagan barely referred to one of the touchiest political issues in the South, textile import quotas. He noted only that "certain sectors of our economy have lagged behind — for instance, farming and industries that are sensitive to imports."

Appearing to relish his return to the political stump, Reagan has revived his familiar themes of past election battles to lure conservative Southern Democrats into the GOP fold.

Thirty-four seats are being contested in the Republican-controlled Senate, now split 53-47 in the GOP's favor. A net change of only four could put the Democrats in control.

Andrew, Sarah set off on honeymoon cruise

TERCEIRA, Azores Islands (AP) — Complete with videotapes of their wedding, Prince Andrew and his princess boarded the royal yacht Britannia to embark on a five-day honeymoon cruise through this verdant mid-Atlantic island chain.

Breaking free of the strict prenuptial timetable that culminated with their marriage Wednesday at London's Westminster Abbey, the 26-year-old newlyweds apparently decided to forgo any schedule during their tour of the nine-island Portuguese archipelago.

"They're going to decide what they're going to do," said the Britannia's Surgeon Cmdr. Timothy Douglas-Riley. "We've got no fixed plans at all."

The world watched Andrew and Sarah Ferguson marry on Wednesday morning in London's Westminster Abbey, that venerable symbol of England, and grant the wish of a cheering throng by kissing tenderly on the balcony of Buckingham Palace.

Andrew's mother, Queen Elizabeth II, gave them a good-luck dusting of confetti as they left the palace in an open carriage to be brought to the Azores by a jet of the Queen's Flight.

Two videotapes of the wedding were rushed to Heathrow Airport just before the royal jetliner took off so Andrew and Sarah could enjoy them on their cruise.

As the four-engine red, white and blue aircraft taxied out to the runway, the two large air brake flaps opened to reveal two black and red signs that read "Just Married."

The queen and 500 guests, including other royals and first lady Nancy Reagan, then retired to London's fashionable Claridge's hotel for a gala wedding party thrown by the queen's cousin, Lady Elizabeth Anson.

Guests at the party, which continued into the earlier hours today, said afterward that they had rarely seen such a relaxed royal gathering. "The queen danced constantly and except for curt-sying, there was no royal protocol at all," said one.

Sarah's father, Maj. Ronald Ferguson, did not attend, opting instead to return to his home village of Dummer southwest of London, where he donned a sweater and corduroy pants and celebrated with villagers at a party held inside a barn.

"If they are going to have a party to celebrate my daughter's wedding, this is the place to be," the retired army officer said.

Britain's newest royal couple landed Wednesday evening at the joint Portuguese-U.S. Lajes air base two hours after the blue-hulled Britannia dropped anchor at the nearby port of Praia da Vitoria.

After a brief welcoming ceremony at Lajes by regional and base officials, Andrew and Sarah, made the Duke and Duchess of York by the queen, were sped by motorcade the three miles down to Praia da Vitoria's dock, where they boarded a launch for the sleek royal yacht.

Hundreds of local residents lined the small bay and the route leading up to the port's gates to catch a glimpse of the couple just hours after their lavish wedding.

Forty minutes after touching down in the Azores, Andrew and his bride were aboard the Britannia, preparing to weigh anchor for a five-day meander through the Atlantic island chain 740 miles off Portugal.

Experiments with turbines led to Chernobyl accident

MOSCOW (AP) — Badly prepared experiments conducted to see if a turbine generator could provide enough electricity to run an atomic power plant in case of an accident caused the Chernobyl nuclear disaster, a Soviet official said today.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennadiy I. Gerasimov, responding to questions at a news conference, said he could not provide full technical details of the experiments.

He said specifics would be published in a report "hundreds of pages" long, to be presented to the Vienna-based International Atomic Energy Agency by September.

"When you shut the station, the generator is still working," Gerasimov said. "The experiment (was) ... if there is an accident, could the generator provide energy for the station for 40 to 45 minutes."

"The capabilities of the generators were studied, the generators that generate kinetic energy," he said, in an apparent reference to electrical generators.

Gerasimov said the experiment was "a purely technical experiment, nothing special about it." He denied what he said were suggestions in the Western media that it had military significance.

Woodworker making coffins for pets

By MIKE ELSWICK
Longview Morning Journal

LONGVIEW, Texas (AP) — Jerry Dodson says he has done a lot of things in his lifetime. But recently he branched his wood-working skills into a new area. He makes pet caskets.

Several months ago he read about detailed plans for a plywood pet casket and an Oregon man had made for made for a pet-loving friend.

After Dodson contemplated the idea and worked out details for himself, he made his first pet casket this spring.

"People really become attached to their pets," Dodson said.

And while it may seem a little far-fetched or even eccentric to some folks, Dodson points out that cemeteries just for pets are becoming more and more popular, especially in metropolitan areas as pet owners want to do more than simply dispose of the bodies of pets that may have provided them companionship for years.

"I really don't know how this is going to work out," he said. But Dodson already has sold several of the small, unique coffins with minimal advertising and from word-of-mouth.

While the man in Oregon made a plain pet casket out of plywood, Dodson has been busy enhancing the design to something that more closely resembles miniature coffins used for humans, complete with lining inside and handles outside.

Dodson already has several variations he can offer customers. He has several pet coffins on hand, but for pet owners with uniquely sized pets he can come up with a casket customized to just the right size.

He said the woodworking portion of casket construction, which is almost second nature to him, does not take as long as doing the work of installing the lining. Dodson is already planning on offering velvet and satin linings and is working on providing ruffles and fancier work.

"There is a demand for it," Dodson said.

Depending on demand, Dodson said he may sell his caskets on a consignment basis through pet cemeteries and in pet magazines.

Dodson admits that emotional feelings people have for their pet come into play in what they decide to do when their pets die.

As an example, he said one of his recent customers was a youngster from White Oak who wanted his pet to be buried with dignity rather than wrapped up and covered with dirt.

Dodson said the boy wanted the casket badly but did not have enough money to buy it. To help the youngster out, Dodson accepted a down payment and is taking regular payments from the boy until the casket is paid off.

While handcrafting pet caskets is one of Dodson's latest ventures, he said the mainstay of his business still consists of custom work on such things as gun cabinets and repair to antiques or other damaged pieces of wood furniture.

He also makes a variety of wall plaques and interior decor items such as clocks.

Wooden rocking horses, grandfather clocks, hutches, desks and bookcases are among the types of projects that keep Dodson busy when he is not making pet caskets.

Dodson's love of working with wood was spurred on early in life after farming and the need to make and repair tools and machinery.

He said he had built a number of wood items in his farm shop and, after also working as a machinist and in real estate most of his life, decided to get into woodworking on a full-time basis.

One of Dodson's favorite challenges is to have prospective customers come into his McCann Road wood shop with a photo or sketch of something they would like made for themselves. Being the creative type, he also said he frequently scans magazines and other sources for ideas.

Candy provides 'ears' and new self-esteem for her deaf owner

By NANCY PERDUE
San Antonio Light

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Candy is not your average pooch, not by a long shot. The Australian Shepherd puppy is a "hearing dog" whose job it is to expand Elke Gonzalez's quiet world.

Although the 45-year-old woman and Candy only recently met, the dog already has made a difference in Mrs. Gonzalez's life.

"She makes me much more confident with her around," Mrs. Gonzalez says of the 10-month-old puppy.

And, Mrs. Gonzalez added, Candy has eased the shame she has felt because of her handicap. Things other people take for granted — the ringing of an alarm clock, telephone or doorbell or the blaring of a smoke alarm — have represented major problems or even dangers for Mrs. Gonzalez, who has been deaf since the age of 7 due to meningitis — but not with Candy at her side.

The dog also will help the Gonzalez family avoid frustration the next time Mrs. Gonzalez's husband, Richard, or their son, Sean, 15, loses his keys and finds himself locked out of their home. Such ordinary chores have been difficult for Mrs. Gonzalez because of the need to communicate with people who did not know she could not hear them.

Mrs. Gonzalez, an expert lip-reader, doesn't want others to know of her deafness for fear she will be pitied. But things changed drastically when Candy became Mrs. Gonzalez's companion.

Mrs. Gonzalez learned that when Candy comes to her and then turns and runs, it is a cue to follow the dog to the sounds Mrs. Gonzalez cannot hear.

"I was ashamed," Mrs. Gonzalez said. "But now when I take Candy to the store, I'm proud to take her, and I'm not ashamed of being deaf anymore."

Candy, who wears an orange collar to identify her as a "hearing dog," was provided through Dogs for the Deaf, an organization in Jacksonville, Ore., which trains dogs to lead hearing-impaired people to sounds.

Mrs. Gonzalez learned about the agency, which charges $3,000 for the dog and its training, through an article in a magazine.

Candy was in training for four months in Oregon. Her trainer, Doreen James, brought her to San Antonio and spent a week working with both Candy and Mrs. Gonzalez. Candy notifies Mrs. Gonzalez when the phone rings, when there is a knock on the door and when the oven buzzer sounds.

Candy also responds to the alarm clock, voices calling her mistress and the smoke alarm. Ms. James said most breeds of dogs make good candidates to serve as "ears" for deaf people. But animals with mild temperaments and puppies that have not developed behavioral patterns are most easily trained.

"She makes a perfect match for me," Mrs. Gonzalez said.

July 25, 1986

In the year ahead, you will be involved in a broad range of successful interests. Although each will be different, they will be related in a unique way.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Assign tasks today to those you are absolutely sure can handle them. Once you do, let go and let them do things their way. Get a jump on life by understanding the influences that are governing you in the year ahead. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions today. Mail $1 to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 1846, Cincinnati, OH 45201. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Collective ventures have excellent chances of success today, but everyone must do exactly what is expected of him or her. Hold up your end.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Friends who normally support you will do so again today. However, be wary of someone who has never been your ally.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 22) If you do your best today, the results will be exceptionally rewarding. But don't feel guilty if you can't build Rome in a day.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) If you're competing with friends today, it's best to leave betting out of the picture. Do it just for fun.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) A matter that affects you and your family should work out very well today. This is likely to be through the efforts of others, not yours.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Your popularity is at a high today, yet you may have a hard time believing it. This could be because you're misreading the intentions of your pals.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Material advantages you weren't expecting could suddenly develop for you today. Don't broadcast these events to someone who is a bit jealous.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Your commercial affairs look rather favorable today, provided you deal from your strengths, rather than your weaknesses.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) A confidential matter should be discussed today only with those directly involved with it. Try to keep this in mind if an associate starts giving you the third degree.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Be careful today not to let your material desires override your innate generosity. If you treat others fairly, you'll have nothing to fear.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Your possibilities for personal gain are extremely strong today, provided you're not unduly influenced by a weak cohort.

Amphitheatre opened for play

By ECK SPAHICH

FRITCH — Magic Plains Art Council has received permission from the National Park Service here to use the Lake Meredith Amphitheatre for a summer play.

Dr. Roger Brown of Borger, art council president said the play, "The Death and Life of Sneaky Fitch," a comedy set in the 1880s in the old West, is to be presented from 7 p.m. to 9:15 p.m., July 25-27 in the amphitheatre at Fritch Fortress.

A special use permit has been issued to the art council so the clean-up operations can get underway at the site, Brown said. Earlier, National Park Service officials expressed concern over possible safety problems at the amphitheatre, noting the deterioration of the stage area and other parts of the facility.

Renewed activity at the amphitheatre marks the first time the facility will open in six years, say NPS officials. Work on the facility began in 1977, lasting until 1980, with the majority of the construction work being done by the Youth Conservation Corps and the Young Adult Conservation Corps, said George Hamilton of Fritch, project coordinator.

"We are excited about our agreement ironed out with the National Park Service," Brown said. "We are planning our production of the melodrama that will be directed by Sam Cornelius and produced by our community thespians."

Thirteen actors are to participate in the play, Brown said. In addition, Adobe Walls Indian dancers and members of the Lone Star Shootists of Amarillo are to take part for added effect, he said.

Once the NPS issued a permit, the land was assigned to the art council through the remainder of 1986. John Higgins, superintendent for Lake Meredith Recreation Area, said there is a possibility of a long time frame lease, pending removal of several safety problems.

Higgins said volunteers will be given applications to join Volunteers for Parks, a nationwide alliance of volunteers who assist the government agency in clean-up and other work at national parks. Signups will give volunteers the protection of workman's compensation while assisting with the rehabilitation of the facility.

Galen Warren of Santa Fe, N.M., the regional safety manager for NPS, made a safety inspection this week and offered advice concerning what needs to be done to insure the facility will be safe to use. Warren listed six items that needed attention, Higgins said.

Dr. Brown, professor of music at Frank Phillips College, said the clean-up work has begun this week around the facility and the melodrama participants have had several rehearsals.

Area residents have volunteered to help with cleaning-up detail and to help to place signs at area businesses, he said.

The agreement reached this week between the Borger-based art council and Higgins concluded a year of negotiations between the two parties.

"Should this production prove successful, we hope to do a couple of different plays next summer," Brown said.

Former NPS Superintendent

Bill Dyer had planned to complete the amphitheatre, however he was reassigned to Santa Fe, N.M., said Hamilton. Dyer had the necessary material and the design plans to complete the facility that would have had the required lighting, sound and restrooms, Hamilton added.

"It would have been a beautiful place had it been finished," the Fritch builder said. He estimated the amphitheatre, by 1980, was about half completed.

Play participants will include Blain Smith, who will portray Sneaky; Vance Jones, singer-narrator; Ed Benz, Rackham; Clint Williams, Mervyn Vale, the undertaker; Renee Stanford, Mrs. Vale; Baxton Farbro, Sheriff Oglesby; Russell Parker, Doc Burch; Dennis Doerr, the Rev. Stanley Blackwood; Yvonne Benz, Mrs. Blackwood; Jill Knowlton, Maroon; and Chris Phillips, Dana Harn, Shelly Toler and Lois Scott as town's people.

Tickets for the production are $4 for adults and $3 for students, available by mail from the Magic Plains Art Council, P.O. Box 12, Borger, 79008, or from Fritch and Borger banks.

SUMMER PLAY — "The Death and Life of Sneaky Fitch," a comedy of the old West is to be presented at 7 p.m., Friday, Saturday and Sunday, July 25-27, in the Lake Meredith amphitheatre at Fritch Fortress. Assisting community thespians are Amarillo-based Lone Star Shootists including Cecil Borth, left, and Ed Nunn, who will provide color and action for the play. (Photo by Eck Spahich)

Kids' knits get A-plus

By Florence De Santis

Family budgets being what they are these days, children's-wear designers are looking to classic clothes with lots of bright color to give their fashions wide appeal and usefulness. That means a swing toward knits for back-to-school clothes. As with adult fashions, tops carry the fashion message.

At Health-Tex, they're doing a three-print sweater for small girls in soft pink, muted turquoise and yellow, with a turquoise corduroy skirt. Royal, green or yellow are their color choices for a classic fisherman's sweater. A heraldic panel in red, green and yellow is centered on a white knit top with ribbed trim in green at the neck, red at the sleeves and royal at the hem band.

For older girls, Health-Tex steps up the color and the strength of prints. Psychedelic florals, graphics in wide bands of four colors and multiple prints come in both fleece and sweater tops, while pants often get the print treatment as well. At Lillytogs, fleece tops get couched satin-appliques and coordinate with corduroy pants pocketed in canvas.

The big-top look, so popular in adult fashions, translates to children's wear with Knitwaves ample tunic sweater featuring many-sized dots of several colors over leggings pants. Both are in soft Orion knit. Ruth Scarf, however, cuts checked pants wide down to ankle ribbing, adds suspenders, then knits a soft cardigan in red, with the trim in the check of the pants.

Denim, of course, remains a favorite with kids. Young Fleet Street uses it as bold trim and patches on a hooded zip-front fleece jacket. Polo by Ralph Lauren makes an all-denim jacket with tan corduroy trim to match pants. Jeanjer follows the new trend for preteens with easy jeans and vest trimmed in beading and sequins.

The rise of knits has brought their soft, casual look even to dresses. Dropped waistlines, sometimes bloused, are favorites, as in Sylvia White's black and red box-check cotton knit with buttoned shoulder. Florence Eiseman has always liked this silhouette for youngsters, and she has done it in a new version of the classic middy look, with a large lace-edged collar accented by a red bow to contrast with the navy and white striped

Eiseman has created knit collections for a long time, but she shies away from the faddish and prefers classics that fit into her past collections. However, for older girls this fall there is her layered look, which features a white saddle-shoulder, turtleneck bodysuit in knit-cotton blend to wear under a red skirt and red cardigan with shoulder and hemline circle appliques.

Like overalls, jumpers always make sense for back to school, and designers aren't neglecting them. Some are doing the low-cut jumper, such as the floral-trimmed Tyrolean look at Alyss in black cotton sateen with not just a blouse but a mini-stripe dress beneath. At Phase I, the jumper is a button-down with a deep V-front and classic white blouse. Happy Kids applies an overall jumper in navy corduroy with fat colored crayons. Florence Eiseman uses appliques on her pleat-front flannel plaid jumper with buttoned shoulders.

When it comes to outerwear for students, most stores will already have jackets and coats when school opens. Look for classics such as the toggle duffel coat — done at Christian Dior in plaid-lined bright red wool — or bomber jackets in all-weather fabrics and linings — such as the check and black nylon at Arctic Racer.

SOFT KNIT in cotton-poly blend for back to school comes from Florence Eiseman in a pullover and skirt of green with white, navy and red stripes. Price: about $48.

BACK TO SCHOOL in Health-Tex's three print sweater mixing pink, turquoise and yellow, with turquoise corduroy skirt. Prices: about $18 for sweater; $12.50, skirt.

SCHOOL LOOK from Florence Eiseman combines a red sweater with emblem patch and gray poly-wool skirt with white shirt. Prices: about $26 for sweater; $38, skirt; $30, shirt.

Dear Abby

Neighbor can't turn back to back-to-nature family

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1986 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: We live in a highly desirable section of town. A few years ago when our neighbor's little boy was 3, I observed his father teaching him to relieve himself off the side of their house! He's 7 now, and he's still urinating outside whenever he feels like it. (In the winter it's freezing cold here, but that doesn't seem to matter.)

We have a daughter (now 8) who has been taught to come into the house to use the bathroom. She knows that urinating outside in public is nasty, unsanitary and ill-mannered.

These same neighbors have a 4-year-old girl who is following in her big brother's footsteps. Our son, just turned 3, sees these kids pottying in the yard, and now he's doing it.

I realize that the neighbors have a right to do whatever they want on their own property, but it's setting a terrible example for our children. The neighbors across the street are also upset about this because their children play over here. What can we do? Please don't mention our town or name, as this family is pretty good at throwing eggs, too.

APPALLED IN THE MIDWEST

DEAR APPALLED: First, speak to the offending neighbors and explain the unhygienic aspects of using the yard as a toilet. Advise them that the department of public health disapproves of this practice, and you will report them to the authorities if they do not clean up their act. Then have no hesitation to make an official complaint if necessary.

DEAR ABBY: Remember me? I'm "Katherine in Georgetown, Texas." I wrote to you last September saying that I wanted to donate my organs after death but couldn't get any witnesses to sign the consent form. Members of my family refused to sign it, fearing some doctor might get "scalpel happy" and remove the organs they need before I'm dead. I took the form to church five Sundays in a row but couldn't get anybody to sign it. (They said I might need all my parts at the Resurrection.) Even my own husband wouldn't sign it!

Well, Abby, you printed my letter, explaining that my husband needed to understand that willing one's organs after death in order to improve the quality of life for the living is one of the most generous acts a person can perform. And the possibility that some "scalpel-happy" surgeon might remove one of my organs before I was dead was before a death certificate is signed. And as for "needing" all my organs for the Resurrection, should a person return to live again in the body of his previous life, the good Lord could be trusted to miraculously replace the missing parts.

To make a long story short, when my family saw your explanation in the paper, they not only offered to witness my donor form, they became donors themselves!

And listen to this, Abby. Last week I had major surgery, and when I gave my doctor my donor card to clip to my chart, he asked me what it was. He said he had never seen one before! So please print this, and tell everybody who has a donor card to inform their doctors now, in case one day they'll need emergency surgery and are in no condition to let the doctor know. Thank you.

CARSON, Calif. (AP) — After years of familiarity between spouses, the embers of love may start burning low, but in order to keep the flame lit, long-term couples must continue courtship behaviors for life, says a clinical psychologist.

The reason a relationship is so alive at the beginning is that the two people involved are working very hard to keep it vibrant, says Dr. Susan Regas, a lecturer in marriage and family counseling at California State University, Dominguez Hills, in Carson.

"They tell each other how attractive they are and what they like about each other," she explains. "When people are just getting to know each other, they do a lot of things to get it going. They do romantic things such as sending love letters, sending a rose. People, as soon as they get married, stop doing this."

The early fire won't be kept alive without hard work, she says, noting that it was hard work at the beginning but a little easier because the relationship was new.

"You did a lot of thinking about how to keep the other person happy. That has to be done even in the 15th year of marriage, or else it will die," says Regas, who offers some suggestions on keeping a

Classmates sought for Borger reunion

BORGER — Borger High School's class of 1936 continues to seek addresses for the following students: Charles Gallentine, Yvonne Garland, Norene Haywood, Pearl Hibler, Quiller Ridgeway, E.H. Robinson, Frances Roatcap, Robert Shepard, Lewis Smith, Charlene Stewart (Allen) Hindman, Oletia Walker, Mary Ruth Wendenberg Lightfoot and Rolla West.

The class's 50th reunion is set for Sept. 13 and 14. For more information about the reunion or to report addresses for classmates listed here, call Eileen Crosby Coyne of Borger, 274-3892 or Aldine Thompson Marshall of Amarillo, 359-0735.

marriage fresh:

—Learn to love yourself first, something you must do before you can love anyone else. People who don't feel good about themselves don't give to the relationships — they pull things from other people.

—Really identify what you want in the marriage. A lot of people don't think about what they want in a relationship. They just feel unhappy, so they nag. Recognize what you want and communicate that to your partner in a way that doesn't blame him or her. Don't say, for instance, "You're a crummy husband, you're never home." Say, "I feel sad when I'm left alone every night at home."

—Always keep the relationship alive sexually and romantically. Keep up or start doing the candle-light dinners, romantic walks and handholding. Set aside time to be devoted to affection and sex.

—Have friendships outside the marriage. There's no way one person can meet all your needs. Each spouse needs his or her own friends and the pair also need joint couple friends. These need to be good couples, not troubled couples. The basis of the friendship should be strength, not trying to rescue the couple. However, outside friendships can't be more important than time spent alone as a couple.

—Beware of becoming over involved with each other. A couple can get enmeshed, too involved. So when one spouse is in a bad mood, the other takes it as a personal offense because every need is being met by the spouse. Unless there are other people in your life, you can't stop that over involvement.

—Be able to enjoy being alone, and have outside activities or interests. As long as you're having fun together regularly as a couple, the activities you do without your spouse, such as sports, reading, photography or other hobbies, will add excitement and interest to your marriage.

Broyles fires 69 to take Tri-State lead

By L.D. STRATE
Sports Editor

In what seemed like an orderly, machine-like manner, Lamesa's Jake Broyles shot a two-under 69 Wednesday to take a two-stroke lead after 36 holes in the Tri-State Seniors Golf Tournament.

Broyles, 61-years-old, sliced into the rough only once in the 18-hole second round at the Pampa Country Club Course. Broyles, the 1983 Tri-State champion, had four birdies, including three in row on No. 13, 14 and 15, and wound up with only three bogies.

Broyles has 143 after two rounds, leaving him two strokes ahead of Plainview's Jack Williams, who won the tournament in 1982.

"I was keeping the ball in the fairway and I was hitting the greens," Broyles said. "I never got into trouble."

Broyles has been on a hot streak lately. He won the Midland Seniors Tournament last weekend for the fifth time in the past six years. He finished second the other time. He and his partner won a senior men's partnership tournament at Del Rio earlier this summer. He came in third at the West Texas Seniors Invitational held recently at Lubbock.

However, Broyles felt like his play was too lackadaisical the first dozen holes in yesterday's round, so he decided to become more aggressive down the stretch.

"I was leaving a lot of putts short, but when I missed a three-foot putt on No. 12 and had a bogey, it kind of snapped me out of my doldrums," he added.

Broyles said the 6,010-yard course is in terrific shape, especially the greens.

"I love the greens. They're fast, smooth and in super shape," he said.

Williams, who was medalist last year and runnerup in 1984, had putting problems, but still played a solid round. He didn't have a birdie, but he had only one bogey. His one-over par 72 gave up a 145 after two rounds.

Medalist Harvey Eshleman of Kemp slipped to a 76 yesterday after a first-round 71, but he's still in third place four shots back of the leader. Completing this foursome is Henry Richards of Jacksboro, who is in a three-way tie for fourth with Don Riffe of Stratford and Harold DeLong of Shawnee, Okla., at 152.

DeLong, a three-time winner and three-time runnerup, was pleased and a little surprised with his second-round 75.

"These guys are a little too good and a little too young for me to be competing with, but I shot great for me," DeLong said. "I had an eight on No. 18, but other than that, I played pretty good."

DeLong won in 1977, 1973 and 1971.

One of the happiest golfers on the course was Ray Hayes of Enid, Okla., who made the cut (155 and above) after missing it last year.

"I'm just tickled to death I made the cut," Hayes said. "I played pretty good, but I just wish I a couple of my shots over again."

Hayes is in a three-way tie with Kyle Riddle of Denton and Bill Soyars of San Marcos for eleventh place at 154.

"I've been coming here 15 years and this is about the best I've ever done," Hayes added.

Hayes is among 16 golfers making up the championship flight, which continues play today and Friday. The remainder of the original 32-man championship flight goes into the president's flight.

Play also continues today in the second round of match play for eight flights.

The annual Senior Banquet will be held at 7:30 p.m. tonight at the Pampa Country Club. Besides the presentation of awards, a memorial service will be held for Bob Giese, who died Saturday of a heart attack. Giese was the defending Tri-State champion and had also won the tournament in 1978 and 1979.

Results after Wednesday's second round of play are listed below:

Bias' parents waiting to testify

UPPER MARLBORO, Md. (AP) — The parents of Len Bias are among those waiting to testify before the grand jury investigating the circumstances surrounding the cocaine intoxication death of the Maryland basketball star.

As the Prince George's County grand jury probe moved into its fourth day, there was no word when James and Lonise Bias would testify and what they might tell the grand jury, Wayne Curry, their lawyer, told The Associated Press.

Curry said the Biases, who were not subpoenaed by the panel, decided to take up an offer made about two weeks ago by county prosecutor Arthur A. Marshall Jr.

"They want to be able to assist in the exploration for the truth," Curry told the Baltimore Sun. "They may be able to answer some questions that may be able to shed some light."

The Biases have been critical of statements by Marshall and the publicity surrounding their son's death.

Bias' father spent time with his son the evening before he died and would probably be able to set the stage for the chronology of events leading up to his son's death, Curry told the paper.

Witnesses called on Wednesday by Marshall included most of the people known to have been with Bias the day he died, as well as the emergency crew called to the dormitory after he collapsed June 19.

The grand jury heard from two of Bias' roommates and a woman who saw the All-American that morning.

Jurors also listened to testimony from Johnnie Walker, a District of Columbia police officer and a friend of Bias who retrieved articles from the player's room at the request of the parents.

Most witnesses refused to talk to reporters when they left the grand jury room, and those who did had little to say.

Asked what he had told the grand jury, Jeff Baxter, a teammate who also shared a dormitory suite with Bias, replied: "Do you really think I can talk about that?"

Keith Gatlin, who also shared the suite in the dorm, eluded reporters when he left the Prince George's County courthouse.

Christina Johnson, who said earlier that she spent some time with Bias before he collapsed in his dormitory room about 6 a.m. June 19, would not comment when she left. Her lawyer, Victor Hulon, said she had testified and that he did not expect her to be called back before the grand jury.

While Hulon would not discuss her testimony before the grand jury, he said Ms. Johnson talked about the information that had already been reported in the news media. Earlier news reports said she met Bias at a convenience store and turned down his request to go to his dorm room.

Other witnesses included Bernadette Holton, who said she loaned Bias $310 the night he died.

Marshall has not said whether he will subpoena Maryland basketball Coach Lefty Driesell and Robert Wagner, who coached Bias in high school. The prosecutor has said he wants to know whether either man improperly cautioned players not to talk to the police or to destroy evidence in Bias' room.

Physicals scheduled

Pampa ninth-grade male and female athletes who are planning to play football or volleyball this coming school year are required to take a physical exam before going out for their particular sport.

Physicals will be taken at 1 p.m. July 31 in the high school football fieldhouse, said PHS Athletic Director John Kendall. Seventh-grade male athletes will have their physicals at the same time, he added.

"Athletes in other sports will have their exams taken at a later date," Kendall said.

Dawkins signs with Spurs

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Duke University star Johnny Dawkins donned a San Antonio Spurs' cap and called his new home a "great town" as the team announced its first-round draft pick had signed a four-year contract.

Dawkins was introduced by Head Coach Bobby Weiss at a news conference Wednesday night.

"This is a great town and the fans seem to be very enthusiastic," Dawkins said. "So far, I've found that it's a lot more competitive," he said of workouts at the NBA team's rookie camp.

"I am playing against top of the line college players and some NBA veterans. It's more difficult, but I can play."

Donald Dell, chairman of the board of ProServ, Dawkins' agents, and Spurs President Angelo Drossos came to formal agreement Wednesday afternoon, but terms of the contract were not disclosed.

"Angelo and Donald Dell spent a lot of hours talking and we finally made it official this afternoon," General Manager Bob Bass said at the news conference at Blossom Athletic Center, where Dawkins has been working out at rookie free-agent camp.

"They did a lot of negotiating in New York last week and finished it off here," Bass said.

The 6-foot-2 guard led Duke to the NCAA championship game and averaged 25.2 points during the tournament. He finished his college career with a 19.2 average and was Duke's all-time leading scorer and a two-time All-America player.

Dawkins said he, his agents and parents discussed the matter and all decided it would be best for him to come to the rookie free-agent camp.

"This signing is a big load off our minds," Weiss said. "It's always a problem worrying about whether an important rookie is going to come to the regular, pre-season camp. The fact that he's here this early means that we can teach him a few of the basic plays that he can work on over the summer."

Pampa teams eliminated in tournament activity

Pampa fell to Abilene, 11-5, Tuesday night to be eliminated from the Little League Girls' Softball Sectional Tournament at Weatherford.

Winning pitcher was Kim Duke while Kasey Bowers took the loss.

Top hitters for Pampa were Katrina Thompson with two singles, Christian Baker, Tabitha King and Laura Williams, one single apiece.

A. Ashley led Abilene with two singles and a double.

Defensive standouts for Pampa were Laura Williams, Joy Cambern and Keri Barr.

Pampa scored all five of its runs in the fifth inning.

Paris plays the Weatherford-Abilene winner for the championship.

Pampa was eliminated by Dumas Thursday night in the loser's bracket of the District Little League Tournament at Panhandle. No score was available.

Erin Frye hit a bases-loaded homer for Pampa.

Indians win; move up on AL East leaders

By DICK BRINSTER
AP Sports Writer

The Cleveland Indians, 10 games over .500 for the first time since 1974, are beginning to consider their chances in the American League East — a rarity at this point of the season for a team that last won a pennant in 1954.

"I looked at the paper this morning and then when I saw on the scoreboard that Boston had gotten beat, everybody was saying, hey let's go," said Ken Schrom, whose complete-game five-hitter in a 7-2 win over Chicago pulled the third-place Indians within five games of the struggling Red Sox.

"I really can't put my finger on it," Schrom, 9-12 last season with Minnesota, said when asked about his own eight-game winning streak. "I feel like I'm throwing the same as I did last year. I've got the same pitches and I got my breaking ball over just as much last year, but last year my fast-ball just got hit more."

Schrom, 11-2, hasn't lost a game since May 25, the longest streak by a Cleveland pitcher since Fritz Peterson won 10 in a row in 1975.

Elsewhere, it was New York 3,

Texas 2 in 10 innings; Oakland 9, Boston 2; Toronto 6, Seattle 2; Kansas City 7, Baltimore 3; Detroit 12, Minnesota 2, and California 3, Milwaukee 2 in 10 innings.

Tigers 12, Twins 2

Detroit's Jack Morris saw his scoreless streak snapped at 32 innings and his shutout streak ended at three. But he was more upset because Manager Sparky Anderson removed him after eight innings when he was shooting for his seventh straight complete game.

"As much as I wanted to finish, he was looking out for me, said Morris, 11-6 after allowing four hits in eight innings. "Sometimes, I think he looks out for me more than I do for myself."

Johnny Grubb backed Morris with a grand slam, his third homer in two games.

Yankees 3, Rangers 2

New York's Ron Hassey did the unorthodox thing, sliding into first base, but it gave him a game-winning infield single on ball hit to Texas first baseman Pete O'Brien. Ranger pitcher Mitch Williams was slow getting over.

"I figured it was going to be close," Hassey said.

The Yankees won for the ninth time in 12 games to move within three games of Boston in the East.

The Rangers' Scott Fletcher extended his hitting streak to 19 games, the longest in the league.

A's 9, Red Sox 2

Oakland's Carney Lansford is living proof that winning is fun.

"This was a job a few weeks ago. Now it's starting to be fun," said Lansford, who hit two two-run homers for Oakland, which has won eight of its last nine games to climb from 16½ games behind in the West to 11½.

Boston, losing its fourth straight, was held to six runs and 15 hits in the three-game series.

Blue Jays 6, Mariners 2

Toronto's Dave Stieb recorded the first save of his career by pitching the final 1-3 innings in relief of Jim Clancy. He struck out Seattle's Jim Presley with the bases loaded in the eighth inning, but wasn't happy about working out of the bullpen.

"I am not a reliever," stated Stieb, pressed into action because the Toronto bullpen had been extended in a 12-inning loss Tuesday night.

Jesse Barfield hit a two-run homer in the eighth, his major-league-leading 25th of the season and fourth in three games.

Football time almost here

August is a busy, frantic time for high school football prospects. Younger players struggle for a spot on the team while veterans wonder if they can hold onto their starting positions against talented newcomers.

The endeavor begins Aug. 11 when sophomore through senior players report to Pampa High Head Coach John Kendall for the first day of practice. Freshmen practice begins Aug. 18.

Shoes will be issued to all prospective players Aug. 6. Then a meeting of all parents of football players is scheduled for 7 p.m. Aug. 7 in the high school football fieldhouse.

Workouts begin in earnest Aug. 15 when full pads are issued. Scrimmages are scheduled at Harvest Stadium Aug. 21 against Boys Ranch and Aug. 29 against Tascosa.

Physical examinations for ninth-grade and seventh-grade boys planning to play football are set for 1 p.m. July 31 at the high school football fieldhouse.

Seventh-grade girls interested in playing football will also undergo physical exams at the same time July 31 in the fieldhouse.

Nancy's trip to the royal wedding quite low-profile

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
AP White House
Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nancy Reagan's trip to London for the wedding of Prince Andrew and Sarah Ferguson was planned as a low-profile affair compared to her visit five years ago to attend Charles' and Diana's nuptials.

Some critics complained the royal extravaganza in 1981 was nearly upstaged by all the attention paid to the American first lady's comings and goings in one new designer dress after another on her first official trip abroad without her husband.

The hoopla contributed to the "Queen Nancy" image Mrs. Reagan acquired that first year in Washington, and it took her a long time to live it down.

This time, Mrs. Reagan was on what was described by her office as a private visit, inasmuch as she was the guest of Queen Elizabeth II for a family celebration of the marriage of the queen's younger son, rather than a state ceremony for the crown prince, as the event was billed five years ago.

That doesn't mean, however, that Mrs.

disclosed number of Secret Service agents.

Mrs. Koons said only Mrs. Reagan — and her obligatory bodyguards — would attend the wedding ceremony itself.

The only public event on the first lady's schedule was tea on Tuesday with Prime Minister said, "I don't know." He said he would try to find out but warned getting even an estimate could take some time.

The government also paid for the Reagans' wedding gift to the royal couple, which was presented by the first lady on behalf of the people of the United States. But Chief of Protocol Selwa Roosevelt refused to disclose its price tag, saying: "We don't discuss that — ever. It wouldn't be polite."

Dancer turns his skin problem into business

By BOB DARDEN
Waco Tribune-Herald

WACO, Texas (AP) — Jerry MacLauchlin is a Waco dancer-choreographer with a list of credits as long as the stage in Radio City Music Hall. He's danced and produced shows from Los Angeles to New York and had the same problem everywhere: his skin. Stage makeup just brutalized it.

The difference between MacLauchlin and all of the hoofers and gypsies before him is that he did something about it.

MacLauchlin left Waco in 1982 after establishing a summer dinner theater and working on what would become the Waco Hippodrome. He continued dancing and producing, but took a job with an Austin chemical company where he met a number of chemists.

"Over the years of touring, I'd been trying everything to repair what makeup does to our skin," he said. "Little bottles of lanolin, rose oil, whatever. Anyway, I met this semi-retired chemist who had perfected this new process. He'd tried to take it to some of the big chemical companies but found that most chemists there just can't afford to rock the boat."

"Well, I tried this stuff out, and it worked! First time ever. So I turned into an investigative cosmetic reporter."

In 1983, MacLauchlin said it looked like there was a market for men's skin treatments, so he began talking to other chemists, dermatologists, physicians, the FDA and various "maverick entrepreneurs."

"I've filled an entire filing cabinet full of various claims and counter-claims about skin treatments," he said. "The whole process just intrigued me to no end, and I ended up bugging all of those people with questions for years. When a new product would come out, I turned into some kind of cosmetic reporter, comparing what they say to what they actually did and what they were composed of."

"Finally, I was convinced that this guy's formula was something special. He made up small batches for doctors and dermatologists in Dallas and California in the past, and they all swore by it. But it was packaged weird and the chemist wasn't really interested in doing anything with it. That's when I thought marketing!"

All of MacLauchlin's research led him to believe that his fledgling company would have to have more than just one application of the product, so he continued working with various chemists.

"We'd work something up, send it off to various friends with different problems and check the results," he said. "Whether it was repairing skin damage or just maintenance, they all agreed: It worked."

"It was just trial and error after that. The buyers of the big department stores convinced me we need creams and shaving creams and sprays and aloe and the works, so I had to adapt the product for all of those applications and the whole thing took four years of my life going back and forth to laboratories, checking out batches, checking things with the FDA. I feel like I ought to be given a doctorate in cosmetic chemistry now."

Border patrols meeting topic

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — An organization known as Civilian Materiel Assistance has been unfairly depicted as a pack of trigger-happy, would-be soldiers of fortune, a group spokesman says.

"That's what the media says we are," Jim Kent, a retired Marine first sergeant, said Wednesday. "That's not the way we are."

About 100 of the organization's estimated 3,000 members are expected in Memphis this weekend for the group's first national convention.

Among the topics on the program are briefings on anti-Communist campaigns in Angola and Africa, "Communist misinformation" and CMA refugee operations.

Kent, the group's chief public relations man, said the CMA will also announce plans to patrol the Mexican border to intercept drug shipments and illegal aliens.

The organization won't pay any attention to Texas state officials who say the CMA is not welcome, he said.

"We've had several people tell us to stay out of their state," Kent said. "Should we decide to continue, the desires of the governor and the attorney general of Texas won't make any difference."

"We have had a favorable response from the people," Kent said. "Politicians are one thing, the people are another."

The state and federal governments should welcome the CMA's assistance, he said.

"We've got a major problem," Kent said. "Most of the drugs come across the Mexican border. There were 1.2 million illegal aliens apprehended last year. They say they catch one in three."

The organization recently changed its name from Civilian Military Assistance to more accurately reflect its activities, which involve collecting non-military supplies and shipping them to anti-Communist forces in Central America, he said.

The group was founded in Decatur, Ala., three years ago by military veterans concerned about Communist influence in Central America.

CMA members collected several tons of clothing, food and medical supplies and delivered them to guerrilla forces fighting the Sandinista regime in Nicaragua in 1984. Several CMA members also went to Central America to help train the guerrilla troops.

Kent said CMA members are doing nothing illegal when they patrol the nation's borders or send food and clothing to anti-Communist guerrillas.

"Talk to the refugees ... we've been supporting, the people we affect the most will tell you a whole different story than what you read in the media," he said

Congressional deficit-cutters may make smokers cough up more taxes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Smokers could be asked to cough up 50 percent more in federal cigarette taxes as Congress searches for ways to fulfill its deficit-reduction promises.

In an unexpected vote, the Senate Finance Committee on Wednesday approved 11-8 an amendment to raise the tax by 8 cents, to 24 cents a pack. Tobacco supporters marshalled their forces and later won a strong rejection of the plan in a House committee, but the measure could still work its way through Congress and become law.

"It's Gramm-Rudman, and they're looking for money," said Rep. Charles Rose, D-N.C., referring to the budget-balancing law. Congress must meet a deficit target of $144 billion in fiscal 1987, and the more than $1.5 billion a year from the added tobacco tax would help.

The Senate panel was considering an increase in the telephone excise tax when Sen. John H. Chafee, R-R.I., suggested doing a cigarette tax increase instead.

"Telephones are a true necessity," said Sen. John C. Danforth, R-Mo. "Cigarette smoking is not."

Sen. Bob Packwood of Oregon, the Republican committee chairman, opposed the amendment as coming too soon after final passage of a law earlier this year to keep the tax at 16 cents, instead of letting it fall back to 8 cents.

Packwood also said he "was wondering if the poor disproportionately smoked more than they talked."

Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., responded: "They do both, but only one is bad for your health."

The amendment was passed as part of the Senate panel's version of a tax and entitlement bill designed to help meet deficit targets over the next three years. The House Ways and Means Committee later approved legislation with similar goals, but strongly rejected the tobacco levy.

Rep. Beryl Anthony, D-Ark., said Congress "should not penalize tobacco for deficit reduction." He and others said farmers would be hurt.

Rep. Andrew Jacobs, D-Ind., proposed the tax and argued that the higher tax might keep some teen-agers from starting to smoke, although, "It's too late for the people who are hooked."

Jacobs said he couldn't understand "the addiction of this government to the tobacco industry."

Jacobs' amendment failed by a 28-4 vote.

The House committee voted to extend for two years the current 3 percent telephone excise tax. The levy was due to expire at the end of next year.

The action came as the Senate opened debate on a plan to replace a key provision of the Gramm-Rudman law that was ruled unconstitutional by the Supreme Court.

The court ruling said the automatic cutback provision of Gramm-Rudman violated the Constitution's separation of powers doctrine because an officer of Congress — the comptroller general — ordered the executive branch to make the cuts.
